Unless U.S. acts, U.N. will debate in Geneva

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Unless the United States reverses its decision to deny Yasser Arafat an entry visa, the U.N. debate on Palestine will shift to Geneva so the PLO chairman can address the General Assembly, diplomats said.

Arab representatives agreed today to introduce a resolution in the United Nations that deplores the U.S. action, postpones the debate on Palestine scheduled for Thursday and urges Washington to grant the visa, said M. Nasser Kidwa, second in charge at the PLO's observer mission.

The resolution will be introduced today before a U.N. committee and may go to the General Assembly later today or Wednesday, he said.

Saturday's decision by Secretary of State George P. Shultz to bar Arafat from the country on grounds he was an "accessory" to acts of terrorism against Americans has been widely criticized by dozens of countries, including the Arab world and such staunch U.S. allies as Britain, Canada and Australia.

Only Israel backed the U.S. decision.

In Washington, the State Department said Monday the U.S. decision to deny the visa was "firm and final."

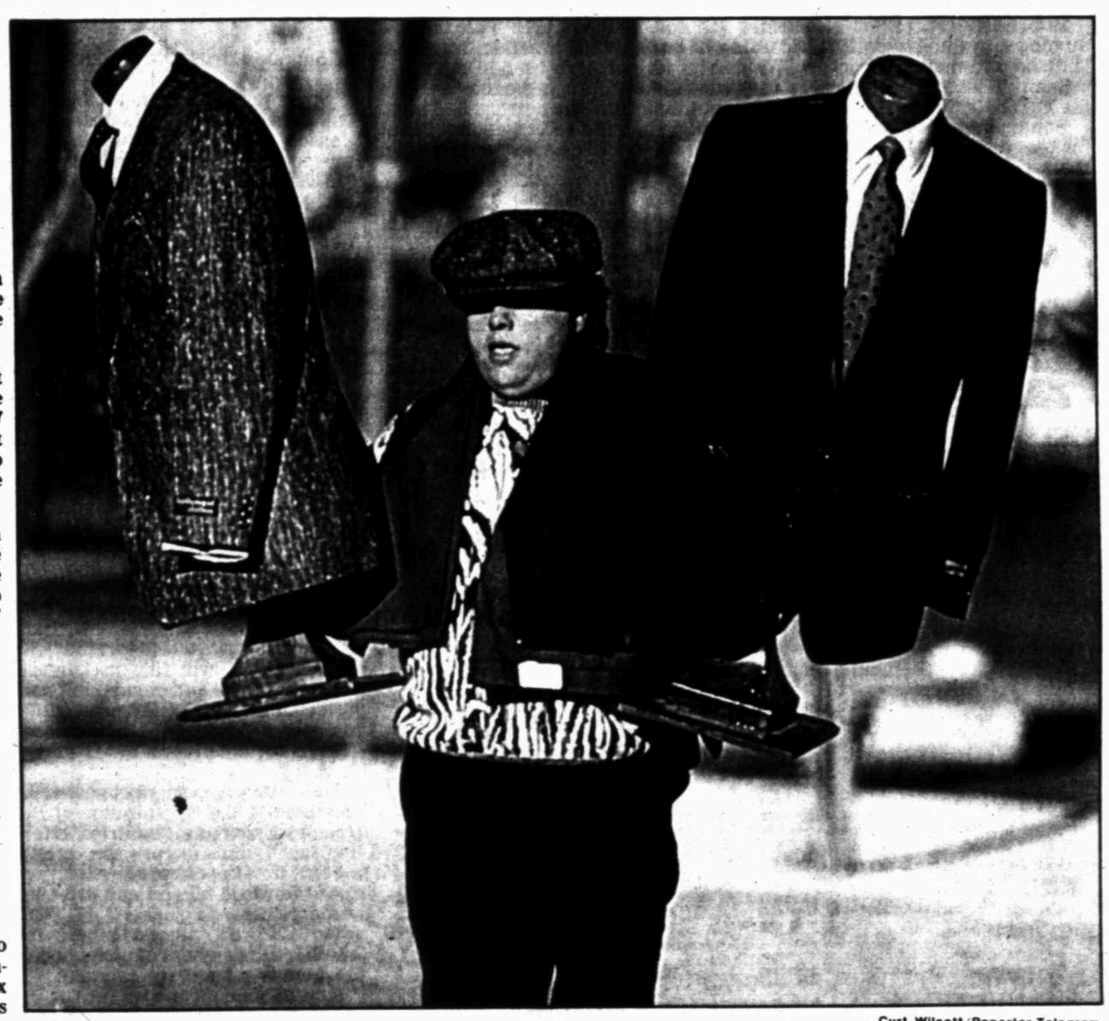

A senior U.N. official said on condition of anonymity that if the United States still refuses to grant Arafat a visa, another resolution probably will called this week for moving the assembly to Geneva.

Arab diplomats say they have enough votes, a simple majority in the 159-member body, to shift the assembly to where Arafat would be able to speak.

U.N. legal counsel Carl-August Fleischhauer told a U.N. committee the U.S. decision violates the 1947 U.S.-U.N. Headquarters Agreement that requires the host country to grant visas to people invited by the United Nations.

"The agreement does not contain a reservation of the right to bar the entry of those who represent, in the view of the host country, a threat to its sovereignty and security," Fleischhauer said.

South Texas firefighters wait as pipeline blaze burns out

FRIENDSWOOD, Texas (AP) — Firefighters let a blaze spurred by a propane pipeline explosion burn itself out as authorities tried to cut off the gas flow several miles away.

Officials said the pipeline exploded about 2 p.m. Monday when two tractors pulling grass movers cut into the eight-inch Phillips Petroleum pipeline near Farm-to-Market Road 528. The pipe began to leak and a spark triggered an explosion.

Tractor driver Eddie Martinez, 25, of Alvin, was burned over 90 percent of his body and listed in critical but stable condition at John Sealy Hospital in Galveston. The other driver wasn't hurt.

"The mower hit the pipeline and as soon as he hit it, it ruptured it opened. When it opened, it made like a big ball of fire," witness Johnny Blissitt said.

"All of a sudden, it was kaboom," said witness Peter Boesel, who was driving on a nearby road.

The pipeline was cut off seven miles down the flow on one end and three to four miles on the other end while firefighters let the fire burn itself out. Since there are about seven pipelines in the corridor, heat on other pipes caused four other explosions, officials said.

Kansas City explosions kill six firemen

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Two explosions rocked a highway construction site early today, killing six firefighters battling suspicious fires at the scene, officials said. The force of the blasts shattered windows 10 miles away.

A seventh firefighter, who was near the site with a department car, was injured and taken to the hospital, said Fire Department spokesman Harold Knabe.

The first blast, shortly after 4 a.m., involved an estimated 30,000 pounds of ammonium nitrate, Knabe said. About 20 minutes later there was a second explosion that involved about 15,000 pounds of ammonium nitrate.

A firetruck was destroyed by the powerful explosions, Knabe said. "There is absolutely nothing to indicate it was even there."

Knabe said a first fire was spotted in a pickup truck while two guards looked for someone they thought they had seen in the area. A second fire broke out in a trailer that contained explosives, and it spread to a second trailer.

"We're assuming that someone did set both fires because both of them did occur when both security people were away from the area," Knabe said. The guards were not hurt, he said.

The blasts left two large craters, 30 to 40 feet wide and six or seven feet deep.

Firefighters and a bomb squad moved into the area of the blast around daybreak to look for the missing firefighters and other explosives.

The explosions occurred at a construction site on the southern edge of Kansas City, about 1½ miles northwest of Bannister Mall, one of the area's busiest shopping malls. A number of quarries are located adjacent to the highway construction site.

Will OPEC be bound by quotas?

From Staff and Wire Reports

The ink was barely dry on OPEC's new production-limiting agreement when indications arose that the quota-cheating that plagued the cartel in recent years might continue.

Mana Saeed Otaiba, oil minister of the United Arab Emirates, indicated Monday that the daily production ceiling the pact sets for his nation "does not represent its official quota."

Otaiba's broad hint that the Emirates might not feel bound by Monday's agreement sparked a selloff that sharply reduced the big gains crude prices posted on earlier news that the pact was reached.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the January contract for West Texas Intermediate was flat this morning, trading at Monday's close of $15.03 nearly halfway through today's session.

On Monday, prices climbed as high as $15.80 a barrel before settling at $15.03, up $1.06 from Wednesday's close.

As NYMEX prices jumped, several Permian Basin purchasers responded by raising their posted prices by 75 cents to $2.00 a barrel.

Permian Corp., which moved to $14 early Monday, added another 75 cents to its posting by the end of the day, to stand at $14.75. Other buyers at $14.75 include Phillips Petroleum and Marathon Oil.

Senate names Mitchell majority leader

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Democrats today elected George Mitchell of Maine as their majority leader and the man who will guide the chamber through its coming skirmishes with George Bush's White House, sources said.

Mitchell was elected in the closed meeting by a unanimous voice vote after first narrowly missing a majority in his race against Sens. Daniel Inouye of Hawaii and Bennett Johnston of Louisiana, said the sources, who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

Mitchell, who was appointed to the Senate in 1980, was elected in 1982 and re-elected earlier this month, will succeed Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., who decided to step down as majority leader to become chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Although the least senior of the three candidates, Mitchell is considered a strong spokesman for the party. A New England liberal, the former federal prosecutor and judge has a reputation as a skilled, thoughtful legislator.

Mitchell garnered 27 votes on the first ballot, one short of a majority among the 55 Democrats in the new Senate. When it became apparent he would eventually win a majority, the sources said, his colleagues approved his nomination unanimously.

Mitchell, 55, is a liberal like Inouye but less tradition-bound.

Lawmen understand DEA's need for 'fake busts'

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Top Midland lawmen reacted with surprise to news that the Drug Enforcement Admininstration has staged phony busts — but they defended the tactic in special cases.

The Houston Chronicle reported Sunday that in at least two cases the DEA "enlisted local police agencies to find" stashes of drugs, then summoned the media and announced the discovery. But reporters were not told the seizures were setups.

A DEA spokesman has confirmed that the practice occurs nationwide, and allows undercover agents to infiltrate higher levels of drug networks.

The newspaper clippings generated by the bogus busts provide cover stories for agents who have posed as cocaine or marijuana smugglers, then need a way to dispose of the drugs before they reach street users.

"I have not had to do that, since I have been here or in my career," Police Chief Richard Czech said. "But if it meant saving an undercover police agent, I would certainly consider it. It would have to be an important operation."

■ Related story — 4A

Czech — a member of the board that oversees the Permian Basin Drug Task Force, which operates almost exclusively undercover — called the tactic of lying to the press "extreme."

Czech said when he was still with the Tucson Police Department, he did participate in a decision to ask the local newspaper to "leave out certain things" in a news story that helped solve an important case.

"But it wasn't a phony story we asked them to print," he said.

The task force commander, a former Beaumont police narcotics officer, was surprised by news of the fake busts.

"I've not heard of it before," Art Van Dorn said. "It doesn't sound like something we would be involved with."

But he added: "I know at times it could actually help police agencies in many cases. It is probably a legitimate help to them, as they could be protecting confidential informants."

Another top officer said he was aware the tactic is practiced.

"We know that it goes on, but we have never been asked to participate nor have we participated," Sheriff Gary Painter said. "Anytime you have an undercover agent working, your first priority is always to protect that agent. You do whatever is necessary to do that."

Big Bend downplaying dangers

By MACK SISK
Hearst News Service

BIG BEND NATIONAL PARK — While investigations continue in Texas and Mexico into a sniper attack on three Americans on the Rio Grande, tourism officials are downplaying any continuing danger to people white-water rafting down the international river.

Local officials Sunday termed the Nov. 19 shooting — in which snipers on the Mexico side of the river killed a man and wounded his wife and a tour guide — "an isolated incident" not likely to happen again.

Michael Heffley, 41, was killed in a fusillade of bullets sprayed from a cliff overlooking the Rio Grande, while his wife, Jamie, and tour guide Jim Burr, were wounded.

Mexican trackers said they followed the attackers' trail into the small village of El Mulato, Chihuahua, but Presidio County Chief Deputy Sheriff Steve Bailey declined Sunday to discuss whether arrests were near.

Bailey said law-enforcement officials were withholding any information "that might be detrimental to the case."

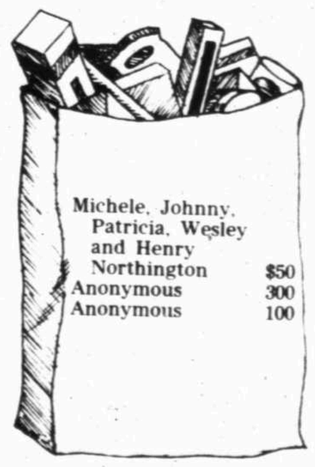

Bailey downplayed reports that tourists and residents might be arming themselves. He also said he did not expect angry area residents to take vigilante action like they did when Terlingua's postmistress was raped two years ago.

Bailey said his department was "strongly advising against" any vigilante-type intrusions.

The ploy is therefore understandable, according to the sheriff.

"They (dealers) understand getting busted," Painter said. "You show one a newspaper article about a big bust, and he will understand it. You do that instead of giving him a million dollars, or whatever he wants for the stuff."

Van Dorn said it is sometimes attractive to add to the scope of an arrest or seizure that is publicized.

"It is at times very tempting to arrest people who are actually not under arrest," he explained. "If you do that, you are usually protecting informants."

Van Dorn said he could understand the practice under certain circumstances.

"I see what they (DEA) are trying to do," he said. "They are trying to get to the big guys, which is what we often are criticized for not doing. Getting to the bosses is what everyone wants us to be doing."

Painter agreed.

"If we were ever confronted with a situation like that, we might feel it necessary to do it," he said. "But I wouldn't want to mislead, so to speak, the media."

The sheriff said if necessary, broadcast and newspaper executives could be requested to participate in a bogus bust if it was necessary to protect the life of an informant. Czech agreed, but said it would have to be an extraordinary situation.

"We've got a good enough rapport with most of the newspapers and TV stations that we could explain to them just what was going on," Painter said.

"I would have to get clearance from a higher authority before I lied to the news media," Van Dorn added.

Meanwhile, high-ranking DEA officials issued a statement Monday saying it is not the policy of DEA "to lie or mislead the media," but they did not deny staging fake busts.

"We need the cooperation and the trust of the public and the media," said Associate Attorney General Francis Keating, who coordinates DEA activities and reports to Attorney General Richard Thornburgh. "If something like this jeopardizes that trust, it concerns us. There may be a situation where the creation of a fictionalized stop and arrest is essential for the safety of the informant."

Keating says he will call for an explanation of DEA policy regarding disclosure to the press. A U.S. House committee may also investigate the charges, according to a committee spokesman.

"Any wind of that and we'd shut it down before it got started," he said.

In the Terlingua rape incident, a group of armed Texans went to the jail in Ojinaga, Chihuahua, across from Presidio, brought a suspect back and left him tied to a tree in a roadside park near Alpine. Brewster County law-enforcement officials found the man dressed only in his underwear.

An official of Big Bend National Park said the Nov. 19 shooting incident did not decrease visitations over the Thanksgiving Day weekend, generally one of the busiest times of the year.

Charlie Peterson, Rio District Ranger, said the park's Cottonwood and Rio Grande Village campgrounds, situated on the bank of the river, both were full during the weekend.

The Big Bend area is sparsely populated on both sides of the Rio Grande, especially on the Mexican side where it is 100 miles from the river to the nearest paved road. Only 8,000 people occupy Brewster County, which is the size of Connecticut.

"There are very few people, very little law enforcement, very little regulation," Peterson said.

Bailey said officials on both sides of the border traditionally cooperate and there was no suspicion the sniper attack may have been an expression of anti-American sentiment.

Things, however, were not always as friendly along the Rio Grande.

The Big Bend area has seen its share of border violence over the years, especially during the Mexican Revolution.

Though one Rio Grande float trip worker said some rafters are taking guns with them, a spokeswoman for Outback Expeditions at Study Butte snapped, "That's a ludicrous question" when asked about it Sunday.

"You can say there is concern. Some people have canceled, but there are still some people we take down the river," she said.

At Big Bend River Tours at Lajitas, Beth Garcia said business "has recovered amazingly well" since the sniper attack.

"I think the news coverage has played it amazingly well. Most portrayed it as what it was, an isolated incident, that we are not under attack here," Garcia said.

She said river tour guides, though, "cannot help but to check the ridges" as they float down the Rio Grande. "It happened to one of their fellows. Hopefully it will never happen again. I realize what a terrible thing this is because of how defenseless you are in the canyon. It is the same kind of horror story as 'Deliverance' in a way."

"It's the strangest thing. We're just dying to know the real story. Why? It just doesn't make any sense. On this particular tour you could have taken a gun. But it's just never been a place where you feared anybody. You never think about protecting yourself, but we have had some private boaters taking guns. Some yahoos came down here last spring and shot up everything in sight."

Garcia said Big Bend residents on both sides of the border "cross back and forth and we don't even think of it as being two different countries. We don't think of things as international incidents. It's like a backdoor neighbor shooting at you when you hang out your laundry."

OPEC

Other purchasers, including Koch Oil, Sun Refining & Marketing and Texaco Trading & Transportation, mpved to $14. Still others remain at $13.25, waiting to see where the market goes.

The Emirates' behavior has baffled fellow OPEC members in recent months.

Despite repeated promises to adhere to discipline, the nation has consistently broken every commitment it has made by overproducing — up to twice its quota.

Oil minister Otaiba signed the OPEC accord, which gives his country a quota of 988,000 barrels a day, and pledged to respect it. A few hours later, he wavered again, saying the new quota did not represent the 1.5 million barrels a day his nation deserved.

Many ministers at the Vienna meeting are convinced, however, that the tiny Emirates cannot stand against the political pressure of its giant neighbors, Saudi Arabia, Iran, and Iraq.

"The U.A.E. will find itself alone not only in the gulf region, but also inside OPEC," said one senior OPEC minister who asked not to be named. "This is too much for a little country to bear."

The new agreement by the 13 members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, effective Jan. 1, aims to curb the cartel's recent breakneck production, reduce the world oil glut and drive up crude prices.

The accord's success hinges on whether all member countries honor the quotas set out for them.

Paul Miotok, an analyst for the investment firm Salomon Brothers Inc. in New York, said the new agreement was likely to hold, even with cheating by the Emirates.

"As long as that is all, they (OPEC) won't fare too badly," Miotok said.

Michael Rothman, analyst at Merrill Lynch Capital Markets in New York, said the accord "will prevent a sharp slide in prices. ... It's a good agreement."

The production agreement was fashioned in nearly two weeks of meetings by OPEC ministers.

Under the pact, the cartel would limit production in the first six months of next year to 18.5 million barrels a day, up from its current official ceiling of 16.6 million barrels but down sharply from its actual production, estimated at 22.5 million barrels a day. It also retains OPEC's benchmark price of $18 a barrel.

The last stumbling block to the agreement was removed on Monday when Saudi Arabia withdrew its proposal for a floor price of $15 a barrel.

Several OPEC members telephoned King Fahd of Saudi Arabia to object, and the Saudis then agreed simply to retain OPEC's target price of $18 a barrel.

The agreement specifies that OPEC will "take the necessary measures" to push oil prices toward $18 a barrel "as soon as possible." Oil prices have slipped by a third in the last year.

Saudi Arabia's oil minister, Hisham Nazer, predicted the accord "will have a very positive effect on the oil market."

"It's a victory for OPEC," said Issam Abdul Raheem al-Chalabi, Iraq's oil minister.

Explaining the significance of the accord, Algeria's energy minister, Sadek Boussena, said: "If everyone plays along, my impression is that we can create the conditions for OPEC to play a role in the 1990s that will bring our influence to bear on the stability of world oil markets."

Such stability would help oil producers outside OPEC as well, allowing them to invest more in research and development and enabling debtor nations dependent on oil revenue to make their payments more easily.

OPEC President Rilwanu Lukman of Nigeria predicted prices could reach $18 a barrel "maybe by June."

"I wouldn't mind it tomorrow, but it's not possible," Lukman said.

The new deal also brings Iraq back into the quota system. That nation refused to join the current accord, arranged in 1986, because it wanted the same, larger production ceiling as its war rival Iran.

The ministers stepped up efforts to set a new quota for Iraq after Iran and Iraq agreed in August to a cease-fire in their 8-year-old war. The two countries now badly need additional oil revenue to rebuild their damaged economies.

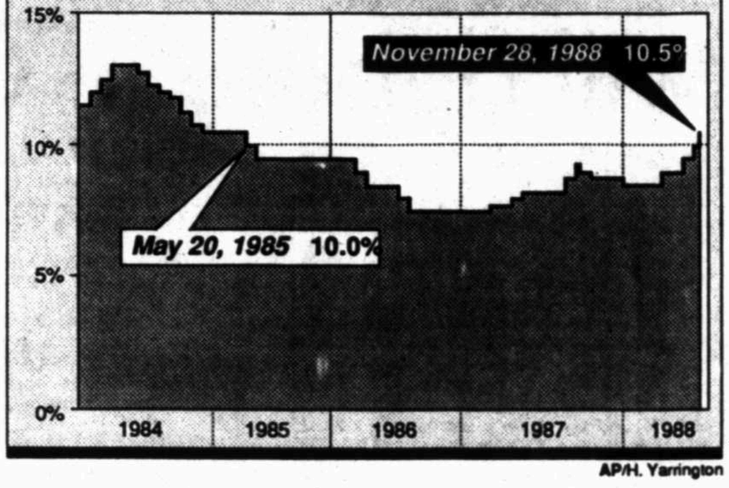

The dispute between Iraq and Iran was resolved through the activities of Lukman and three other oil ministers, known within OPEC as the "four wise men." They devised a complicated formula in which every OPEC member gave up a few percentage points of its quota to add percentage points to Iraq's, so that Iraq could match Iran's total of 14.26 percent of OPEC's production.

Iran had a cap of 2.4 million barrels under the old agreement and Iraq 1.5 million.

Saudi Arabia, the world's largest exporter, was given a 24.5 percent share of total output, compared with the current 26.2 percent. Its daily quota will be 4.52 million barrels.

Prime rate at 10.5 percent

NEW YORK (AP) — Consumers may cut back on big-tag Christmas presents now that the nation's biggest banks boosted their prime lending rates to 10.5 percent, the highest level in 3½ years, some analysts said.

The increases in the key lending rate by a half percentage point were announced Monday and were the fourth this year.

Many economists have been predicting a prime rate hike in recent weeks because interest rates in the bond markets have been rising due to inflation speculation and the dollar's weakness in foreign exchange.

"It comes as no surprise. In fact, they (banks) seem to have held back longer than I expected," said Edward Yardeni, chief economist for Prudential-Bache Securities Inc.

The prime rate reflects a bank's costs of borrowing money, including interest it pays on savings accounts or certificates of deposit, and trails more subtle increases in other interest rates.

The rate is watched closely because bankers use it as a basis for calculating interest on corporate loans and for determining many types of fixed and adjustable-rate consumer loans, such as home equity loans.

"It's clear that consumers will be absorbing higher borrowing costs in December or early next year," said William V. Sullivan, an economist for the investment firm Dean Witter Reynolds Inc.

But some economists said it was unclear whether the rate-hike would adversely affect the economy, specifically consumer buying habits during the holiday season.

"I think the direct effect is pretty small because generally consumers aren't affected by modest increases in interest rates," said James L. Kochan, chief fixed-income strategist for Merrill Lynch Capital Markets Inc.

But Yardeni said some consumers might cut back on spending and "buy only things that they can afford."

"There's an underlying sense of uneasiness because so many people have been through rough times even when the economy was strong. The prime rate hike coming into the Christmas season may make people more cautious," he said.

The financial markets had no major reaction to Monday's announcement. Stock and bond prices rose modestly, while the dollar held firm against other major currencies.

Sullivan said the markets also are prepared for further increases in interest rates.

Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan has warned of higher short-term rates unless lawmakers work to trim the huge federal budget deficit, a key factor in the recent weakening of the dollar.

Patricia Byrne, alternate U.S. representative, said the U.S. government disagreed with Fleischhauer's interpretation, but she did not elaborate.

Many nations in the world body said the U.S. action countered what they described as the Palestine Liberation Organization's move toward modernization with its declaration of Palestinian independence Nov. 15 that also implicitely recognized Israel.

The U.N. Committee on Relations with the Host Country heard numerous speakers assail the U.S. decision to ban Arafat.

Iraqi Ambassdador Ismat Kittani told the committee: "The decision by Washington is a slap in the face, of equal measure, to every member of this organization."

The Soviet Union and China, and U.S. allies France, Spain, Sweden and Norway, among others, said Arafat should be allowed to speak.

Arafat called the U.S. move "a sheer violation of the international law and the U.N. charter" and said Washington was ignoring international backing for the independent state of Palestine, proclaimed this month by the Palestine National Council, the PLO's parliament-in-exile.

State Department spokesman Charles Redman said the shift to Geneva was unnecessary because other PLO spokesmen in New York could speak instead of Arafat.

"Probably no other country in the world has worked as hard at the peace process as the United States has," Redman said.

Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said, "We were making no kind of statement about the United Nations, but about Yasser Arafat and terrorism."

BLASTS

"We have a very serious situation. Windows are busted out all over the area. Kansas City police asked us to help cordon off the area," said Tom Taylor of suburban Raytown, a member of an emergency rescue squad.

The ammonium nitrate was stored at the site and was used to blast the quarry and clear rock for the highway construction, officials said.

Authorities said windows were blown out of homes and businesses over at least a 10-mile area around the site.

Roger Ware, manager of a service station in the neighborhood, said the first blast "lifted my cash register about 3 inches off the counter. It knocked a lot of merchandise over or off my shelves."

Power was knocked out in the area for about one hour.

Several residents said the explosions almost lifted them out of their beds.

Knabe said the first two fire crews at the scene called for a battalion chief. Firefighters were battling the blaze in the first trailer when the battalion chief arrived and the first explosion occurred.

"As his driver got out of the car, the explosion knocked him several feet, blew out the window in the chief's car and threw it back on the chief. The chief managed to get the radio and call for additional help," Knabe said.

He said the explosion spread fire to the second trailer, which exploded more than 30 minutes later.

Delta pilot testifies crew had prepared sufficiently

IRVING (AP) — The pilot of Delta Flight 1141 told a federal panel investigating the crash that he felt he and his crew had prepared sufficiently for the flight, even though he may have technically bent some of the airline's rules.

Delta Captain Larry Lon Davis, 48, was among the first witnesses to testify in the four-day public hearing that began today at the Marriott Hotel in Irving, where about 200 people, including National Transportation Safety Board investigators, are listening to the witnesses recount their versions of the Aug. 31 crash that killed 14. Ninety-four people survived.

The plane had stopped in Dallas en route from Jackson, Miss., to Salt Lake City, and crashed upon takeoff from the Dallas-Fort Worth airport.

During his opening testimony, Davis was told he would be asked to recount what he had done the previous day, how he had slept the night before the crash, and details of events up to the time of the crash.

Davis said the plane had no apparent problems, although a fuel gauge didn't work. But Davis said he and his crew followed written procedures to compensate for the faulty gauge.

"The flight was normal. No problem at all to Dallas-Fort Worth Airport," Davis said.

But NTSB board of inquiry technical panelist Jeff Gorney, an aerospace engineer, questioned Davis' handling of pre-flight preparations, including the Delta captain's failure to initiate required checklists and failure to call out the completion of every checklist.

Gorney also said a flight attendant was allowed into the cockpit when the plane was waiting to take off.

Davis admitted the seeming deviations from written regulations, but he still stressed that he thought he and the crew had complied.

For instance, the Delta veteran of 23 years said he had used hand signals instead of calling out completion of each checklist, and made a required takeoff briefing at the gate instead of doing it as the plane was on the runway.

"I like to get as much done as possible before we get into the position of getting rushed," said Davis, who bit his lips occasionally and often paused three or four seconds before continuing.

Davis admitted that allowing a flight attendant into the cockpit was against a policy declaring that the cockpit be a "sterile area" once it has left the gate.

But he noted quickly that the plane was "waiting in a line of traffic, moving up a space at a time."

"I don't believe it was a critical phase of flight, but technically it was (in violation)," Davis said, responding to Gorney's questioning.

Jim Burnett, chairman of the board of inquiry, stressed in his opening statements that no conclusions are to be made by the panel during its hearing, but that officials were only gathering officials for a final report to be released in six months.

Air Line Pilots Association representatives have claimed the federal investigators already have decided to blame the flight crew.

"No analysis has been made at this point," NTSB spokesman Mike Benson said. "It's just a part of our investigation. We are still a long way off from a conclusion on the facts of the case."

The investigation into the cause of the crash has centered around the position of the plane's wing flaps.

Although the lever controlling the Boeing 727's flaps was found in the wrong position after the crash, Benson said it is possible the handle was jarred into that retracted position as the flight crew was removed from the plane.

"It's fortunate the crew is alive," Benson said. "That's not always the case. We're very hopeful the crew will be able to provide assistance, where in other crashes there's no crew."

But officials of the pilots union said they believe NTSB investigators may have decided on the first day of their investigation that the crew was to blame.

"If you do a quick and dirty investigation, the verdict is going to be quick and dirty — pilot error," Capt. Jim Gray, Delta spokesman for the Air Line Pilots Association, said at a Monday news conference.

He and other officials of the 41,000-member union outlined their theory that a "split-flap configuration" may have led to the crash.

Gray said it is possible a "mechanical failure" of a valve affecting the flaps may have set off the chain of events leading to the accident.

Family has pet tiger put to sleep

ANGLETON (AP) — A family whose 800-pound pet Siberian tiger created a controversy when he broke through a fence to freedom has had the tiger put to death by a veterinarian.

"Tony" had created a controversy last week when he broke through a chain link fence behind the home of John and Cindy Bush and remained free for a brief time. The tiger killed a chicken during his brief freedom.

Some area residents complained to Brazoria County officials about the tiger, asking that it be banned from the area. Commissioners said Monday they would consider the matter, but the issue became moot later in the day when the family had the tiger put to death.

John Bush said Monday that Dr. L.W. Venhaus, an Angleton veterinarian, gave the tiger a fatal injection Monday.

"He would have had to spend the rest of his life in a cage," said John Bush, choking back tears. "Tony couldn't live like that. I couldn't give him away. I loved him too much. He brought joy to thousands of children."

The Bush family had owned the 2-year-old tiger, one of the largest of its kind in the country since it was 3 months old. They said they had invested more than $20,000 in the animal and it was tame and wouldn't intentionally hurt anything.

Cindy Bush said the family decided to put Tony to sleep because there didn't seem to be any other alternative.

"There was no place to put him. He was declawed, and zoos don't take animals that have been declawed," she said.

The family received telephone calls threatening to poison or shoot the tiger, which would have been a horrible death, she said.

Cindy Michalk, one of the residents who complained about the animal, said she was shocked when she learned of the tiger's death.

"We tried to call the vet to stop it," she said. "It's terrible. We didn't want this to happen."

"I didn't want any harm to come to him. He was such a beautiful animal," she said.

The veterinarian said he tried to talk the Bushes out of putting the tiger to sleep, but they felt they didn't have any other choice.

"That animal would not have hurt anyone. Their feeling was after talking with officials that they had no choice," he said. "They chose the lesser of two evils. John (Bush) cried his eyes out."

There were other options that could have been pursued to spare Tony's life, Houston Zoo Director John Werler said.

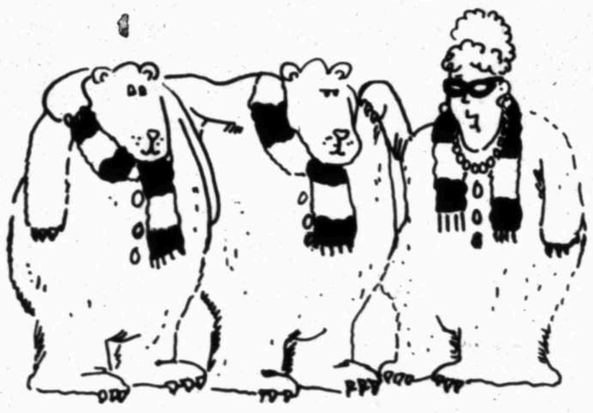

The Houston Zoo wouldn't have taken the tiger because it had been declawed, but Werler said there are other zoos where it might have been accepted.

Werler said there are several private groups in the state committed to taking exotic animals rather than seeing them destroyed.

"They will place them, and I am sure they would have taken the tiger," Werler said.

STATE IN BRIEF

Bush acknowledges Richards' foot humor

AUSTIN (AP) — President-elect George Bush, responding to a best-wishes telegram from State Treasurer Ann Richards, sent her a handwritten "peace offering" and a tiny silver pin shaped like a foot.

Ms. Richards, keynote speaker at the Democratic National Convention, suggested then that Republican Bush had been "born with a silver foot in his mouth."

After Bush's election on Nov. 8, however, Ms. Richards wished him "the very best" in his new administratrion.

Bush wrote her a note dated Nov. 21, saying, "You've probably received a hundred of these 'feet' but I want you to have this one from me — a peace offering; and as our daughter said, 'It's real' — just ask the Hunt Brothers."

"Really, that was a nice telegram. Many thanks, George."

Ms. Richards said Monday: "I think it was a kind and generous gesture on his part. I was delighted that he saw and enjoyed the humor in the keynote address."

Fans' cars vandalized

HARLINGEN (AP) — Rivalry got out of control when fans who traveled from Corpus Christi to Harlingen to see a regional semifinal football game found tires slashed, windshields smashed and antennas ripped from more than 20 cars, police and fans said.

Five cars belonging to backers of Corpus Christi's Carroll High School also were reported stolen, said a police officer who was on duty Saturday night, when Carroll defeated Harlingen High 21-10.

Vandals attacked cars decorated with the Carroll Tigers' blue and white and with paw imprints, said Harlingen Police officer Ramon Vela, adding the investigation will continue.

Carroll student Cynthia Gutierrez, who attended the game in Harlingen with a group of friends, said they returned to their van and found deep cuts in their tires.

"It was so sad that you can't just have good, clean fun," she said. "People need to be aware of this because once we win this game this coming weekend, we'll need to go out of town again."

T. Carl McMillan, superintendent of the Harlingen Independent School District, said the cars damaged were parked in an unlighted field because the stadium parking lot was full.

Bus station clerk killed

GRANBURY (AP) — Police have no apparent motive in the bludgeoning death of a bus station clerk during an early-morning attack.

Holly Palmer, 23, was found about 1:45 a.m. Monday at the Granbury Bus Station, police Lt. Elton Cochrum said. Ms. Palmer had been struck and killed with a blunt instrument, he said.

Cochrum said the Granbury woman had stayed late at the station to help with some remodeling, in preparation for opening a T-shirt shop at the location.

The attack had no apparent motive, said Cochrum. No suspects were in custody, said police detective Don Jowers.

Emeritus attorneys named

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Supreme Court has certified the first two emeritus attorneys under a new program to make additional "pro bono" legal services available to the poor.

Neil Williams of Austin and Seward Snell of Houston were certified Monday to represent low-income clients on a volunteer basis.

The emeritus program started May 15, and is designed to authorize retired and inactive attorneys to provide pro bono legal services to the poor.

Pilot forced to land plane

CALERA, Okla. (AP) — A Garland, Texas, couple escaped injury when their single-engine airplane was forced to land in a pasture near Calera, the Oklahoma Highway Patrol said Monday.

The patrol said the pilot, Gary L. Rima, 34, of Garland said he tried to land in the pasture Sunday when his airplane began losing power. The plane's propeller and front wheel were damaged.

Phony drug busts to be investigated

HOUSTON (AP) — The Drug Enforcement Administration's apparent use of the news media as an unwitting partner in undercover operations will be investigated by a U.S. House committee and the Justice Department, government officials say.

High-ranking DEA officials issued a statement Monday, saying it is not the policy of DEA "to lie or mislead the media," but stopped short of saying the agency has never staged drug seizures and issued false information about them.

The Houston Chronicle Sunday reported that two drug seizures in which the DEA "enlisted local police agencies to find" caches of drugs, then summon the media to announce the discoveries — without disclosing that the seizures were setups.

Last week, a DEA spokesman in Washington confirmed that the practice occurs nationwide, allowing agents to infiltrate higher levels of drug networks.

Sources said newspaper clippings generated by the tactic provide cover stories for agents who have posed as drug smugglers, then need a way to dispose of drugs before they reach the street.

The Texas Department of Public Safety said in a 1984 news conference that 952 pounds of cocaine were found abandoned at a "random" roadblock, which court records reveal was; in fact, a prearranged checkpoint requested by the DEA.

A Harris County sheriff's investigator announced Sept. 29 the "discovery" of 60 kilograms of cocaine in an abandoned car, based on an "anonymous" tip. But the newspaper reported that the DEA arranged for the officers to find the drugs.

"The question is not whether there was a mistruth, the question is whether a mistruth was justified," Associate Attorney General Francis A. Keating II, who coordinates DEA activities and reports to Attorney General Dick Thornburgh, said. Thornburgh was out of the country.

Keating said he will call for an explanation of DEA policy regarding disclosure to the press. The study will include a catalog of the frequency of and justification for planting misleading reports, he said.

"We need the cooperation and the trust of the public and the media," Keating said. "If something like this jeopardizes that trust, it concerns us. There may a situation where the creation of a fictionalized stop and arrest is essential for the safety of the informant."

Spokesman Bob Wiener said the House Special Committee on Narcotics is also examining the reports.

"We are concerned," he said, adding that committee Chairman Charles Rangel, D-N.Y., would probably issue a statement today.

DEA officials said in the prepared statement Monday that they sometimes withhold information to preserve investigations, but that lying is not the aim.

Houston DEA Agent-in-Charge Marion Hambrick declined comment on the cases.

Man killed attempting to break in home

DUNCANVILLE (AP) — A college student who stayed home from classes because he was ill shot a man to death during a burglary attempt, police say.

Officers said John Andrew Baird, 25, a dental student at the Baylor University Medical School in Dallas, was home Monday when he heard someone kicking in a door.

Baird, who had been the victim of a burglary a year ago, told officers he went upstairs, got a .357 Magnum pistol and fired three shots through a window toward the door.

Officers found the body of a man wearing heavy latex gloves lying on his back outside Baird's fenced yard.

The man, who was later identified as John Gomez, 18, of Dallas, had been shot once in the middle of his chest and suffered more than one wound to the left part of his chest, investigator S.D. Crawford said.

The shooting, which was being investigated today by the Dallas County medical examiner's office, will be referred to a Dallas County grand jury, Crawford said.

Several homes in the area where Baird lives have been burglarized recently, Crawford said.

"If someone pulls enough burglaries long enough, they're bound to hit a house where someone's at home," Crawford added.

Railey hounded by 'indisputable evidence'

EDITOR'S NOTE: After the brutal attack on his wife Peggy, the shocked congregation of Walker Railey's First Methodist Church in Dallas rallied to support their senior pastor in the midst of the tragedy. And they prayed things were not what they appeared to be when next Railey attempted suicide and police focused on inconsistencies in his account of his whereabouts on April 21, 1987. Here, in the second part of the Railey saga, the embattled preacher attempts to demonstrate his innocence against "indisputable evidence."

By MIKE COCHRAN

AP Laserphoto

This is a portion of the suicide note written by Walker Railey, a week after his wife, Peggy, was attacked April, 21, 1987 in the garage of their Dallas home. The note was revealed to the media March 10, 1988 by Norman Kinne, Dallas County's first assistant district attorney.

DALLAS (AP) — During Walker Railey's early stay at Timberlawn Psychiatric Hospital, his new attorney, Doug Mulder, arranged a private polygraph test for his client. The test was administered May 14 by Bill Parker, a former Dallas homicide detective.

Railey was understandably nervous but was cooperative and agreeable and eager to exonerate himself. "I'm told some people are suspecting me and I hope this can clear me of any suspicion," he said.

"Well, Rev, it may or it may not." Parker replied.

The two men talked for three hours but only a handful of questions dealt specifically with the attack on Peggy Railey.

"Were you the person who strangled Peggy Railey on or about April 21, 1987?" Parker asked.

No, Railey replied.

"Before Peggy Railey was injured on or about April 21, 1987, did you conspire with anyone to harm or attack her?"

No.

The test indicated Railey did not attempt to kill his wife. And presumably because of those results, Mulder approved a police-administered examination the next day. That exercise was described as "inconclusive."

"THE RESULTS showed that he didn't have anything to do with the attack, nor did he conspire with anyone," said Mulder. "We had some technical problems with the second test that, I think, can be straightened out."

Polygraph results are inadmissible as evidence in Texas courts, but their publicity value was not lost on Mulder.

"Lawyer Says Railey Passed Lie Detector," the Dallas Times Herald reported on May 22.

"Railey Passes Lie Test on Attack, Lawyer Says," the Dallas Morning News announced.

Though Railey's followers took new heart, investigators seemed unimpressed.

All but ignoring the lie detector issue, Deputy Police Chief Marlin Price restated the ongoing request to interview Railey about the mysterious "inconsistencies" of late April.

Mulder denied the request, telling reporters that "You will find inconsistencies any time you have an alibi that is not premeditated. Everything would fit perfectly if it was orchestrated. Walker is a bright man."

Besides, he maintained that "the only issue that we see as needing to be resolved is whether he had anything to do with the attack. That can be settled with a polygraph."

Snapped Price:

"We are not accustomed to allowing defense attorneys to run our investigations."

AFTER MULDER revealed the polygraph results, Capt. John Holt, the supervisor of crimes against persons, accused the attorney of misrepresenting the outcome of the police-administered examination.

Holt suggested that some of Railey's responses were "untruthful."

"We don't want to investigate this case through the media," Holt said. "It was not our choice to publicize the facts that came out today, but when that happened, we felt an obligation to respond."

Holt refused to specifify precisely what he considered untruthful, but published reports indicated it was Railey's response to questions about the threatening letters. It was the more serious questions about the attack on Mrs. Railey that were labled "inconclusive."

All but overlooked in the flap over the polygraphs was an unattributed police statement that Railey's account of his activities the night of April 21 was "in direct conflict with indisputable evidence."

The key word: "indisputable."

In late May, Mrs. Railey's hospital routine was interrupted by a bout with pneumonia. While her body resisted that infection, her condition remained serious and her future in doubt. She was, in fact, not comatose as such but in what doctors described as a "vegetative state."

WHILE SOMEONE in a coma appears asleep, a person in a vegetative state has sleep-and-wake cycles, responds to sound and pain and does not require artificial life support.

Such patients appear to be awake, and even might stare at visitors. They have eye opening but they do not speak or respond to commands or requests. In fact, they are oblivious to their surroundings.

While Mrs. Railey lay immobolized at Presbyterian Hospital, Railey spent his days at Timberlawn pacing the floor, weeping, praying, occasionally phoning friends and writing letters.

On June 10, he interrupted his self-imposed exile to accompany his lawyer on a flight to Salt Lake City for a third polygraph test, this time given by David C. Raskin, a psychology professor at the University of Utah and a nationally recognized expert in his field.

Mulder and Railey never revealed the results, which some found puzzling and others bewildering and suspicious. In any case, Holt and his detectives showed little concern.

"A polygraph exam is an investigative tool," said Holt. "Regardless of who gives it or the outcome, there are still discrepancies that need to be cleared up."

Unknown to all but a few, Ralph Shannon, the chairman of First Methodist's pastor relations committee, met with Railey at Timberlawn on June 5. For four hours, the two men discussed the appointment of a new minister to replace Railey.

THERE WERE anger and tears on both sides.

While his departure from the church was perhaps inevitable, Railey was profoundly disappointed. But he said he understood the need for the church to move forward.

Shannon's committee praised Railey for his "dynamic leadership" and expressed its love and support for him and his family. It was a nice, neat, and maybe even compassionate dismissal but the removal of Railey from the pulpit at First Methodist would not be that simple.

Within hours, a group of angry church members vowed to fight to keep the pulpit open for Railey's return. The issue threatened to split the already embattled church.

"There are a lot of people unhappy about this," said Ken Menges, a First Methodist member. He said that Railey had been "forced" to agree with Shannon's committee.

Menges said Railey wrote him a letter "full of baseball motif. He said he was looking forward to getting back on the mound and hoped he would not be sent to the minor leagues."

City Councilman Craig Holcomb, a First Methodist member and longtime friend and ally of Railey, told the Dallas Morning News the committee action appeared to be part of a continuing effort by the church bureaucracy to distance itself from a "potentially embarrassing situation."

MENGES DID not find fault with Railey's cat-and-mouse maneuvers with police. "If they don't have evidence, they should remove the cloud," he said. "I don't blame his attorney for doing his best to defend his client against a one-track rabid police department."

Replied Capt. Holt:

"We are not one-track and rabid, but we are relentless. We'll do everything in our power to find the person who attacked Peggy Railey and bring that person to justice.

"We do not have a closed mind as to any possibilities in this case. The lack of cooperation by Walker Railey has proved to be a serious impediment to the progress of our investigation."

At the very least, Holt said, Railey "is a key witness in this case. Without his help, it makes it very difficult to find the person who attacked his wife."

The next Sunday evening, about 100 members met to question staff and committee members about the prospect of Railey's dismissal. Menges vowed to pursue a petition drive, then something totally unexpected happened to defuse the issue.

In an appearance on a nationally syndicated television program, Shannon alluded to a letter from Railey in which he asked in mid-May to be reassigned from First Methodist because he was "more of a liability than an asset."

No one was more surprised than Menges, who questioned why Shannon waited so long to disclose the letter. Nevertheless, the campaign for Railey's return was dropped in short order and Holcomb said his group changed its focus.

"WE WANT...a public show of support for Walker Railey. We want to make certain that Peggy Railey's medical expenses are covered for the rest of her life and we want there to be a living wage for Walker for the next two years so that he has ample opportunity to get his life back in order," they said.

Church officials said they had no idea how much money would be needed to care for the Railey family. But sources indicated Mrs. Railey's medical bills already had exceeded $200,000.

On June 20, Railey left Timberlawn and once again found an attentive listener in Helen Parmley of the Dallas News. "I am deeply grieving," he said. "A tragedy that occurred seems to be forgotten. The tragedy is Peggy, lying in a coma at Presbyterian Hospital.

"...There is some deranged mind out there that did something to Peggy. That worries me."

He spoke at least twice of "so many unanswered questions" but said he did not want to discuss the tragedy.

And yet, in the next few days, he did just that in a series of remarkable interviews with print and broadcast reporters, including those from the Associated Press.

"I didn't attack my wife," he said. "I didn't plan to have someone attack my wife. I didn't orchestrate a plan to attack my wife. And if I had written the letters, I wouldn't have written them on a typewriter in the church.

"But I didn't write them."

HE CALLED such speculation "ridiculous and absurb" and said while he was innocent and unafraid, he was not unoffended by the innuendo.

"There are people who are playing 'Murder She Wrote' with my life and the lives of my family," he said.

He could not rationalize his suicide attempt, which he knew was construed by some as an admission of guilt.

"My theology does not hold open the option of suicide," he said. "My understanding of life is that it is a gift from God. Suicide is like murder. When I take my life, I am taking a part of God's life."

He said in the week after the attack on Mrs. Railey his burden simply became too heavy to bear and his despair led in turn to the suicide attempt.

"Somehow I grew oblivious to the fact that I didn't have to bear it by myself. Had it not been for some act of grace, we would not be sitting here today. I think I let God down, but God picked me back up."

He said he was writing a journal about his turmoil when it suddenly turned into a suicide note at the hospital.

"I WAS putting my feelings on paper when I looked around and saw nothing but despair." Concluding that everything seemed hopeless, he took the overdose of tranquilizers.

"I don't understand why I did it, any more than I understand why I lived beyond it. I don't think I lost control. I think I gained control."

During his hospitalization, he said, he turned to the scriptures of Romans and Psalms and "found a holy presence in my life."

Railey said his refusal to talk with police was a decision made by his lawyer, but that personally he was "more than desirous" to tell his story to investigators. And he saw no paradox in his freewheeling interviews with the media.

"I'm not trying to take my case to the public," he said. "I've never refused to talk to reporters, and this is the first time I've been out of the hospital and able to do so. If this interview or others clears up some misconceptions, that will be good."

He said he had no iron-clad alibi to cover all his activities and whereabouts the night Mrs. Railey was attacked but that should not be held against him.

Railey shrugged off reports that police had "indisputible evidence" of inconsistencies in his account of the events of April 21 and 22. Almost cavalierly, he said his lawyer was in "constant contact" with authorities and would explain any misunderstandings.

HE WAS wrong on both counts.

Homicide investigator Rick Silva had tried for weeks to talk with Mulder, but the lawyer was inaccessible and not returning phone calls.

More importantly, no one, including Mulder, could explain away the mysterious "indisputable evidence."

As June gave way to July and the fierce midsummer Texas heat, it was decided to transfer Mrs. Railey from Presbyterian Hospital to a nursing home in East Texas where she could be near her parents, Bill and Billie Nicolai.

The Nicolais lived in Tyler, but they had spent almost all day every day in Dallas attending to Peggy's needs. Though a full-service hospital was no longer required, she remained in a vegetative state from which she might never awaken.

As much as a $1 million for Mrs. Railey's care reportedly would be paid by an insurance policy provided by the North Texas Methodist Conference of the United Methodist Church, and church leaders thought would be adequate for quite some time.

Railey Saga Part 2

And while no sign was posted, the Raileys' Lake Highlands home was quietly put on the market for $289,000.

There was, however, an ominous rumbling from within the district attorney's office about convening a grand jury to pursue the investigation.

THE RESTIVENESS could be traced largely to Railey's penchant for discussing the case with reporters while spurning invitations to talk with authorities.

And the rumbling could be traced directly to Norm Kinne, the district attorney's first assistant, who was talking with homicide detectives about launching a grand jury probe.

"If they have witnesses who are reluctant, who they're having difficulty talking to, including Mr. Railey, we can call them before the grand jury and question them under oath," Kinne told reporters.

"Unless you have some kind of Fifth Amendment claim against self-incrimination, you can be compelled to testify."

With a dedication that would match Kinne's, the Dallas Morning News and the Dallas Times Herald, the city's combative dailies, also had made a commitment to the Railey case, and the decision by the editors was bearing fruit.

A reporter for the Morning News named Olive Talley was looking into rumors about an attractive blonde psycholgist named Lucy Papillon, the mysteriously intriguing daughter of a former Methodist bishop.

And now, on July 8, the News published a story that for the first time mentioned Ms. Papillon and identified her as a potential "reluctant witness" in the Railey case.

THE ARTICLE by Ms. Talley said mobile telephone records obtained by the News revealed that Railey called Ms. Papillon twice the night of April 21, first at her office and later at her home near the SMU campus. The initial call was at 5:58 p.m. and the second at 7:32 p.m.

Railey had neglected to mention those calls during his lengthy interview with police the morning after his wife was attacked.

Phone records also showed that Railey placed two calls to his own home between midnight and 12:30 a.m., the last one about 10 minutes before he reported finding Mrs. Railey near death on the garage floor.

Investigators refused to discuss the significance of the mobile phone records but it seemed safe to assume they somehow represented the "indisputable evidence" of inconsistencies in the story Railey told police on April 22.

But for the moment at least, the most obvious questions raised by the Dallas News story centered on Ms. Papillon and her relationship with the senior minister of the First United Methodist Church of Dallas.

U.S. relationship with allies changing

America's relationship with its post-war Asian allies — Japan and South Korea — is inexorably changing and now often strained.

The two Asian nations long ago declared their economic independence of the United States. And now, they are placing greater emphasis not only on their new economic roles in the alliance but their own national and political interests. The latest interpretation of America's weakness is seen in the recent fall of the dollar against the Japanese yen to its lowest ratio in 40 years.

The two nations' new posture reflects to a significant degree America's twin deficits — debt at home and trade shortfalls abroad — as well as their own economic and political progress.

Much of these advances were made possible by the United States, but that is now often forgotten as the two nations try to carve out their own destiny.

There are increasing protests here against both Japanese and South Korean trade protectionism. Such blockage does exist, but it is clearly not the reason for the big trade imbalance. Americans are buying foreign products at record rates while U.S. firms, at times, are not competing well abroad.

Congress rightly wants Japan to spend more for its own defense. The Japanese now pay out only 1 percent of their gross national product on defense. The South Koreans spend 6 percent, but Congress also rightly wants them to spend more of the costs for keeping 42,000 American troops there.

For years, the two countries have had the best of both worlds. The United States has carried their defense burdens and opened its doors to their products. Both have restricted imports to their country, while limiting their defense burdens. The Asian nations have offered some aid to poor countries, but nowhere near what America has offered over time.

Washington's relationship with Tokyo and Seoul needs a total reassessment — from trade policy to their new nationalism and political roles in the world. In essence, this country should lessen its military burdens in Asia while giving more protection to its economic interests.

Both Japan and South Korea are demanding a greater voice in the world. Let them have it — with more economic responsibility.

'No risk' insurance

Ralph Nader's insurance proposition in California's general election, that insurance companies spent over $60 million to defeat but failed, has been and continues to be of considerable interest to most people who suffer the burden of increased insurance rates in all forms of insurance.

Liability insurance has increased 109 percent the past year and compensation insurance will receive a 19 percent increase beginning the year of 1989. Many small contractors are forced out of business with these increased rates setting a chain reaction through the economic community of our state due to the result of unemployment through business failure. If my facts are correct 70 percent of our work force is employed by the small contractor who employs four or less people.

Some larger companies with reasonable risk exposure have gone to self-insurance on liability and some other forms of insurance. This is done in spite of the low return on the underwriting dollar. What makes this self-insurance attractive is when the new cash flow created by self-insurance is properly invested the rate of return is sufficient to offset the risk exposure. With this in mind I suppose it would be fair to say, if insurance companies were required to include investment profits made with money collected in advance of any risk exposure to the insuring company by the insured party as a part of their profit and loss profile it would change completely and probably rates could and should be reduced.

To cite an example of my position on this matter, consider this point: How an insurance company can collect premiums in January for an insured risk that may occur in the month of December of that same year, when no risk factor exists until December arrives? Would you pay for groceries, automobile payments, credit card or any other operating expenditure 12 months in advance? Certainly not without discounts or other incentives! Why should we favor insurance companies without holding them accountable for such a financial blessing of advance collections on "no risk" premiums?

Let's give our small businesses a chance to survive so Texas may be "revived" through immediate legislation ear-marked for prosperity through fair and reasonable business practices concerning insurance and pyramiding premium costs.

If we don't act soon I believe Ralph Nader will be in Texas with another proposition for insurance rate changes. Possibly small business will recognize the benefit of self insurance and collectively organize for their survival.

Charity starts at home

In the Reporter-Telegram on Wednesday, Nov. 16, was an article from U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm of Texas telling us that Texas may need Japan's help to secure funding for the federal Superconducting Super Collider project.

What is wrong with him? Hasn't he been watching the series "War and Remembrance"? Does he want to have something like that happen all over again? It very easily could.

I believe too many foreign countries own too much property in the U.S. now.

No wonder so many people are homeless, hungry, and without jobs. Our own people can't afford a home on the minimum wage scale. It is very sad. I think charity should begin at home (the good old USA).

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, Nov. 29, the 334th day of 1988. There are 32 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

In 1963, President Lyndon B. Johnson named a commission headed by Earl Warren to investigate the assassination of President John F. Kennedy.

On this date:

In 1530, Cardinal Thomas Wolsey, one-time adviser to England's King Henry VIII, died.

In 1864, a Colorado militia killed at least 150 peaceful Cheyenne Indians in what became known as the Sand Creek Massacre.

In 1890, the first Army-Navy football game was played, at West Point, N.Y. Navy sank Army, 24-0.

In 1924, Italian composer Giacomo Puccini died in Brussels before he could complete his final opera, "Turandot." (It was finished by Franco Alfano.)

In 1929, Navy Lt. Cmdr. Richard E. Byrd radioed that he'd made the first airplane flight over the South Pole.

In 1945, the monarchy was abolished in Yugoslavia and a republic proclaimed.

In 1947, the U.N. General Assembly passed a resolution calling for the partitioning of Palestine between Arabs and Jews.

In 1952, President-elect Dwight D. Eisenhower kept his campaign promise to visit Korea to assess the war.

Bush's stands cloaked with softness

WASHINGTON — We can't read lips, so we took George Bush's second bit of advice and read his book — the 347-page collection of his campaign speeches gleaned from two years on the stump.

Jack Anderson

Surprise. Bush did talk about the issues beyond prison furloughs and American flags and the Pledge of Allegiance.

Had someone followed him around long enough, it was all there — the contras, drugs, NATO, Palestine, insider trading, Angola, gang wars, homeless shelters, offshore drilling, global warming, even tort reform.

Someone did follow him around — thousands of reporters looking for the quote, the gesture, the gaff. The networks, news magazines, wire services and major newspapers will argue that they wrote enough and said enough on the issues to fill a fleet of dumpsters. That's true.

But the complaint on the lips of nearly every voter was this: "The candidates didn't talk about the issues." Translation: I didn't hear the issues when I turned to my primary source of information — television.

Ask the most intelligent and articulate of your friends why they voted the way they did. The answer is not likely to be: "Because Bush favors a two-year budget cycle for major weapons systems and an operational space station by 1996."

More often than not, the answer has something to do with gut feelings. The next president is the man who didn't give the majority a stomach ache. It's no wonder that Wall Street woke up on Nov. 9 and went into a tailspin.

Bush is not entirely blameless. He took positions, but they were cushioned in the language of cotton balls, so soft and warm that no one on either side of the issue could be alarmed. Bush promises to "encourage," "reduce," "make it easier," "evolve," "pursue" and "generate complimentary support." An English teacher waiting for a real action verb from candidate Bush would wait a long time. (Note: "No new taxes" has no verb at all.)

Push the cotton aside, and the essential George Bush comes through as a man who is not as far to the right as his predecessor except on issues that were winners for Ronald Reagan — abortion, Star Wars, gun rights, the contras and, defense.

When Bush ventures to be his own man, he occasionally hedges or offers solutions which are already in the works. He makes some firm promises and charts a few undeviating and innovative courses. But, on two crucial issues — drugs and the economy — we read page after page of Bush verbiage and came up empty.

He promised to make Dan Quayle his captain in the war on drugs, but Congress may ace Quayle out of that assignment by refusing to confirm anyone other than a Cabinet-level drug czar. Bush's solutions for the drug crisis look like so much posturing. He wants drug summit meetings with world leaders and drug conferences with the states. But his nitty-gritty law enforcement options are variations on old themes that did not work when he was Reagan's drug czar. Bush throws in some "read-my-lips" rhetoric about zero tolerance, but drug kingpins are going to have to see more than rhetoric before they believe Bush.

Ditto for the Wall Street investors. Their current jitters can be blamed directly on Bush's unwillingness to be specific during the campaign. His speeches are long on predictability and short on solutions. He favors "stability in exchange rates" and "free markets" and "great prosperity." The days following the election show that Wall Street isn't in the market for apple pie. Economists have pooh-poohed his attempt at specifics — the amorphous "flexible freeze." And Congress is likely to stand in the way of the two solutions Bush states with fervor — a balanced budget amendment and a line-item veto.

There has been much talk of a "mandate" for President-elect Bush, the kind of mandate that usually comes from a respectable margin of victory after a clear debate on the issues. Americans didn't give Bush a mandate. They merely gave him a chance.

NUNN WARNING — Senator San Nunn, D-Ga., is already playing hardball with President-elect George Bush. Nunn has sent Bush a letter warning him not to appoint an amateur to be secretary of defense. Nunn chairs the Senate Armed Services Committee which can hold up Bush's selection in the confirmation process. Sources tell us that Nunn's blunt letter included a suggestion that Bush find a skilled manager, not a slick political operator. Nunn's letter is one more indicator that Congress won't give Bush any honeymoon.

MINI-EDITORIAL — A lump of coal would be more palatable than some of the toys offered for kids this Christmas. The toy makers have stooped to new lows in teaching children to entertain themselves with mindless aggression. There are guns that squirt liquid dye and gelatin, missile launchers, guns that shoot hard plastic discs and even guns that shoot "soft bullets." Whatever happened to Teddy bears, electric trains and roller skates?

TV talk shows tumble into titillation trap

It all began with Phil Donahue, didn't it?

He burst onto our television screens with hot guests, hot topics and live audiences of mostly women who apparently didn't have anything else to do but spend their mornings watching Phil interview everybody from red-headed, left-handed lesbians, to a panel of experts discussing the fine art of toe sucking.

Grizzard

Then, things began to get out of hand. Suddenly there was big ol' plump Oprah Winfrey trying to out-Donahue Donahue.

Next came Geraldo Rivera — the guy with the busted nose — and then Sally Jessy Raphael, Morton Downey Jr., etc., and any day I expect a new show featuring host Charlie Manson and guests who have committed heinous crimes giving us the inside scoop on how they chopped their victims heads off.

What has happened here is television has figured out what the National Enquirer learned years ago. That is, if it titillates, print it. Or, in this case, televise it.

So, a look at next week's schedule for the television tabloids:

■ DONAHUE: Monday, homosexual goats. Tuesday, Jim and Tammy Bakker in the nude. Wednesday, female mud-wrestlers, bull riders, snake handlers, bounty hunters and hog callers. Thursday, some hookers. Friday, the rock group Excessive Stomach Gas defend the controversial lyrics from their new hit "I Want to Make It with Tipper Gore."

■ OPRAH WINFREY: Monday, children who won't stop eating mud. Tuesday, how to stop picking your nose. Wednesday, black chimney sweeps. Thursday, the New Hockey Puck Diet. Friday, God.

■ GERALDO RIVERA: Monday, prostitution. Tuesday, bestiality. Wednesday, necrophilia. Thursday, sodomy. Friday, Gomorrah.

■ MORTON DOWNEY JR.: Monday, Roy Innis, the Rev. Al Sharpton, Joe Frazier, Mr. T, three Ku Klux Klan grand dragons, a bunch of skinheads, a guy named Marty, who drives a tow truck, and Sean Penn.

Tuesday, any of Monday's guests who didn't wind up in the hospital. Wednesday, Mort beats up his entire audience. Thursday, Pat Buchanan and some whinny, bed-wetting liberals. Friday, various scum of the earth.

■ SALLY JESSY RAPHAEL: Monday, Jack the Ripper. Tuesday, Alexander the Great. Wednesday, Ivan the Terrible. Thursday, Bozo the clown. Friday, Francis, the talking mule.

■ A CURRENT AFFAIR: Monday, unsolved mystery of the man who ate his cocker spaniel. Tuesday, unsolved sex crimes of the last days of the Roman Empire. Wednesday, unsolved crossword puzzles. Thursday, unsolved chainsaw massacres. Friday, Jimmy Hoffa.

Stay tuned.

TOM WICKER

Saving environment should be Bush priority

NEW YORK — In Brazil's great undeveloped Amazon basin, the national government spent $600 million in tax credits to subsidize the development — between 1965 and 1983 — of 469 cattle ranches averaging 23,000 hectares each (about 57,500 acres).

Wicker

At first, the land reclaimed from tropical rainforest supported one animal per hectare.

But neither the ranchers nor the government invested in weed control or soil fertility so that within five years the stocking rate fell to one animal on four hectares.

With tax incentives available for clearing the land, but not for maintaining its productivity, the ranchers soon abandoned their holdings.

As the soil wore out, they moved on to clear the forest for other subsidized ranch developments.

The cost was far more than $600 million (of which the Brazilian government recovered only a fraction). Indiscriminate depletion of forests meant the loss of watershed protection and species habitat as well as potentially valuable forest products; and it vastly increased net emissions into the atmosphere of carbon dioxide — a major contributor to the so-called greenhouse effect that's heating up the earth's climate.

Thus, Brazil's "development" efforts not only worsened that nation's economic plight and hindered its ability to repay its huge international debt — both matters of concern to the developed world.

They also endangered the environment of other nations, including the United States.

For many such reasons, some detailed in earlier columns, global environmental problems are a major — perhaps the major — threat to U.S. security, and to the security of mankind.

Yet, amid all the talk of President-elect George Bush's staff and Cabinet choices and his budget policies, scarcely a word has been heard about the ozone layer, acid rain, deforestation, soil depletion, population control, and other disasters happening or waiting to happen.

The world's resources now support 5 to 6 billion people.

The United Nations projects, however, that world population will exceed 8 billion by 2025. That means rising demand for food, firewood and timber, hence more deforestation, soil depletion and erosion.

More and more land will become desert and the atmosphere less breathable; millions will move to unmanageably crowded urban areas; poverty and starvation will inexorably stalk their miserable streets.

On this vital matter, Bush's campaign positions are not encouraging; but the growth of the world's population is a crisis he cannot responsibly evade: every two seconds, five people are added to it.

Everywhere he looks, if he bothers to see, he will find such questions intruding upon, even overriding, the usual concerns of government.

In Central America, for example, 38 percent of forest cover has been lost since 1950, with far more trees still being cut than replanted.

An ecological deterioration of that magnitude works against societal stability — and can't be remedied by any amount of aid to the contras in Nicaragua.

International environmental problems deserve to be among the Bush administration's highest priorities for at least three hardly disputable reasons:

First, ozone depletion, acid rain, ocean pollution and the like are clear and present threats to all nations, respecting no national boundaries.

Second, these problems demand international cooperation and promise the kind of joint international efforts that can promote understanding and peace among nations.

Finally, a better life for the millions in the undeveloped world is in the interests of U.S. security — and obviously is a target for professed U.S. idealism.

Since global problems requiring global solutions will have to be addressed at the presidential and Cabinet level, the appointment of James Baker as secretary of state could be crucial.

As treasury secretary, he sometimes mitigated the international banks' tendencies to support environmentally destructive Third World projects, such as Amazonian cattle ranches.

If he will, he can use his new role to save natural resources, as he once worked to lower the value of the dollar.

But only George Bush can set the necessary overall policy — that all international relations, including trade, debt payment and development assistance, be conducted in explicit recognition of environmental issues, and attuned to their resolution.

If the planet's rush to self-destruction is to be slowed in time, Bush may be the last president to have that opportunity.

President Mikhail S. Gorbachev

Gorbachev offers parliament possible veto power

WORLD

MOSCOW (AP) — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev told the Soviet parliament today it would gain the right to veto his decisions if it adopts his revised proposals to overhaul the Soviet political system.

In a speech opening a three-day special session of the Supreme Soviet, or parliament, Gorbachev said the Kremlin leadership made the veto proposal among 88 changes it recommended in response to 250,000 public comments on the new election law and constitutional amendments put before the body today.

Two high republic officials from the Baltics, however, registered dissatisfaction with elements of the reform program when addressing the plenum, signaling the start of a genuine debate in the chamber where ritual ascent is the norm.

The original drafts, published just five weeks ago, sparked widespread criticism that the changes would concentrate too much power in the presidency in a nation with a history of dictatorship.

In a reference to the outcry, Gorbachev acknowledged, "It is obvious that some of the provisions of the bills were not formulated precisely enough and caused quite a few critical remarks in the course of the discussions."

Reading today from a new draft, Gorbachev said the Supreme Soviet "has the right to veto decrees of the presidium, instructions of the president of the Supreme Soviet," and the leadership would be required to account to the Legislature "at least once a year."

Currently, directives from the president are made in the name of the Presidium and are subject to confirmation at the next full session of the Supreme Soviet. But practically, there are no challenges. The Supreme Soviet had its first non-unanimous vote in memory last month.

Gorbachev promised other changes also would preserve the Soviet Union's traditional collective style of leadership. Under that style, the highest government body — the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet — and the highest party body — the Politburo — are collective bodies. The head of the Presidium is the president, traditionally a ceremonial role.

It was not immediately clear whether Gorbachev was giving up his original proposal to strengthen the president's role by giving him chairmanship of the Defense Council and responsibility for overseeing foreign policy.

The latest draft of the proposed changes also responded to complaints from small republics, including Estonia, Latvia and Georgia, by increasing the republics' representation in one of the houses of the bicameral parliament.

Latvian President Anatoly Gorbunov asked that the reform package be postponed to consider objections by his parliament, including one to the possibility of an individual occupying several seats in the new Congress of People's Deputies.

Another Baltic president, Vitautas Astrauskas of Lithuania, called for a convention to write a new constitution.

Troops allegedly wound at least 12 Palestinians

BETHLEHEM, Occupied West Bank (AP) — Israeli troops reportedly shot and wounded at least a dozen Palestinians today as stone-throwing demonstrations erupted in four towns or cities in the occupied territories.

The violence broke out as some Palestinians went on strike in response to a call by Hamas, a Moslem fundamentalist group at odds with the PLO-backed United Leadership of the Uprising.

To try to block anti-Israeli violence during the strike, the army imposed curfews on 14 refugee camps and villages in the Gaza Strip as well as seven West Bank cities and towns, confining 370,000 residents to their homes.

The army also strengthened patrols and made preventive arrests to reduce the likelihood of clashes.

Troops clashed with demonstrators in the Gaza village of Jabaliya, wounding three Palestinians, including a 33-year-old woman who was shot in the stomach and a 14-year-old boy who was hit in the chest, officials at the Ahli Arab hospital said.

Nine Palestinians also were reported wounded by army gunfire in the West Bank city of Nablus and the nearby villages of Tamoun and Beit Leid. One of the wounded was a 10-year-old boy shot in the left leg, hospital officials said.

At least 316 Palestinians and 11 Israelis have been killed in the nearly year-long revolt against Israeli occupation.

About 1.5 million Palestinians live in the West Bank and Gaza, occupied by Israel from Jordan and Egypt in the 1967 Middle East war.

In the biblical town of Bethlehem today, youths from rival Palestinian factions, some brandishing knives and clubs, shouted threats at each other today in a dispute over the strike called by Hamas, Arabic for zeal.

The dispute stems from a Nov. 17 declaration by the Palestine National Congress, the PLO's parliament-in-exile, accepting U.N. resolutions that implicitly recognize Israel.

The strike was to mark the anniversary of one of those resolutions, a 1947 recommendation that Palestine be partitioned into Jewish and Arab states.

Members of Hamas marched through the city forcing stores shut. Slogans scribbled in green paint on city walls warned merchants, "Today is a strike day, be sure you observe it." Green is the traditional color of Islam.

Leaders of the United Leadership of the Uprising, who ordered their own strike a day earlier, demanded shopkeepers open their stores in defiance of the fundamentalists. They kicked closed shop doors, shouting to owners that they would protect them from the Islamic extremists if the shops opened.

The strike was widely observed in the occupied Gaza Strip and West Bank and Arab east Jerusalem. The city of Hebron, where Hamas is a dominant Palestinian faction, was totally shuttered.

Palestinian officials have canceled Christmas celebrations in Bethlehem, where Christ was born, in solidarity with the Palestinian revolt.

"We don't see any reason to celebrate Christmas," Bethlehem Deputy Mayor Hanna Nasser said Monday. "We have to show concern for our dead and for our detainees."

Nasser said the town government called off all official celebrations, such as the Christmas Eve reception for Israeli and Palestinian dignitaries and the annual Boy Scout parade.

Manger Square, usually decorated with bright strings of colored lights, will remain dark and its 40-foot Christmas tree will be left bare, he said.

Iran will work to free hostages, minister says

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Iran's deputy foreign minister said today his country will "work as much as we can" to gain freedom for all foreign hostages in Lebanon, including Iranians he maintains are held by a Christian militia.

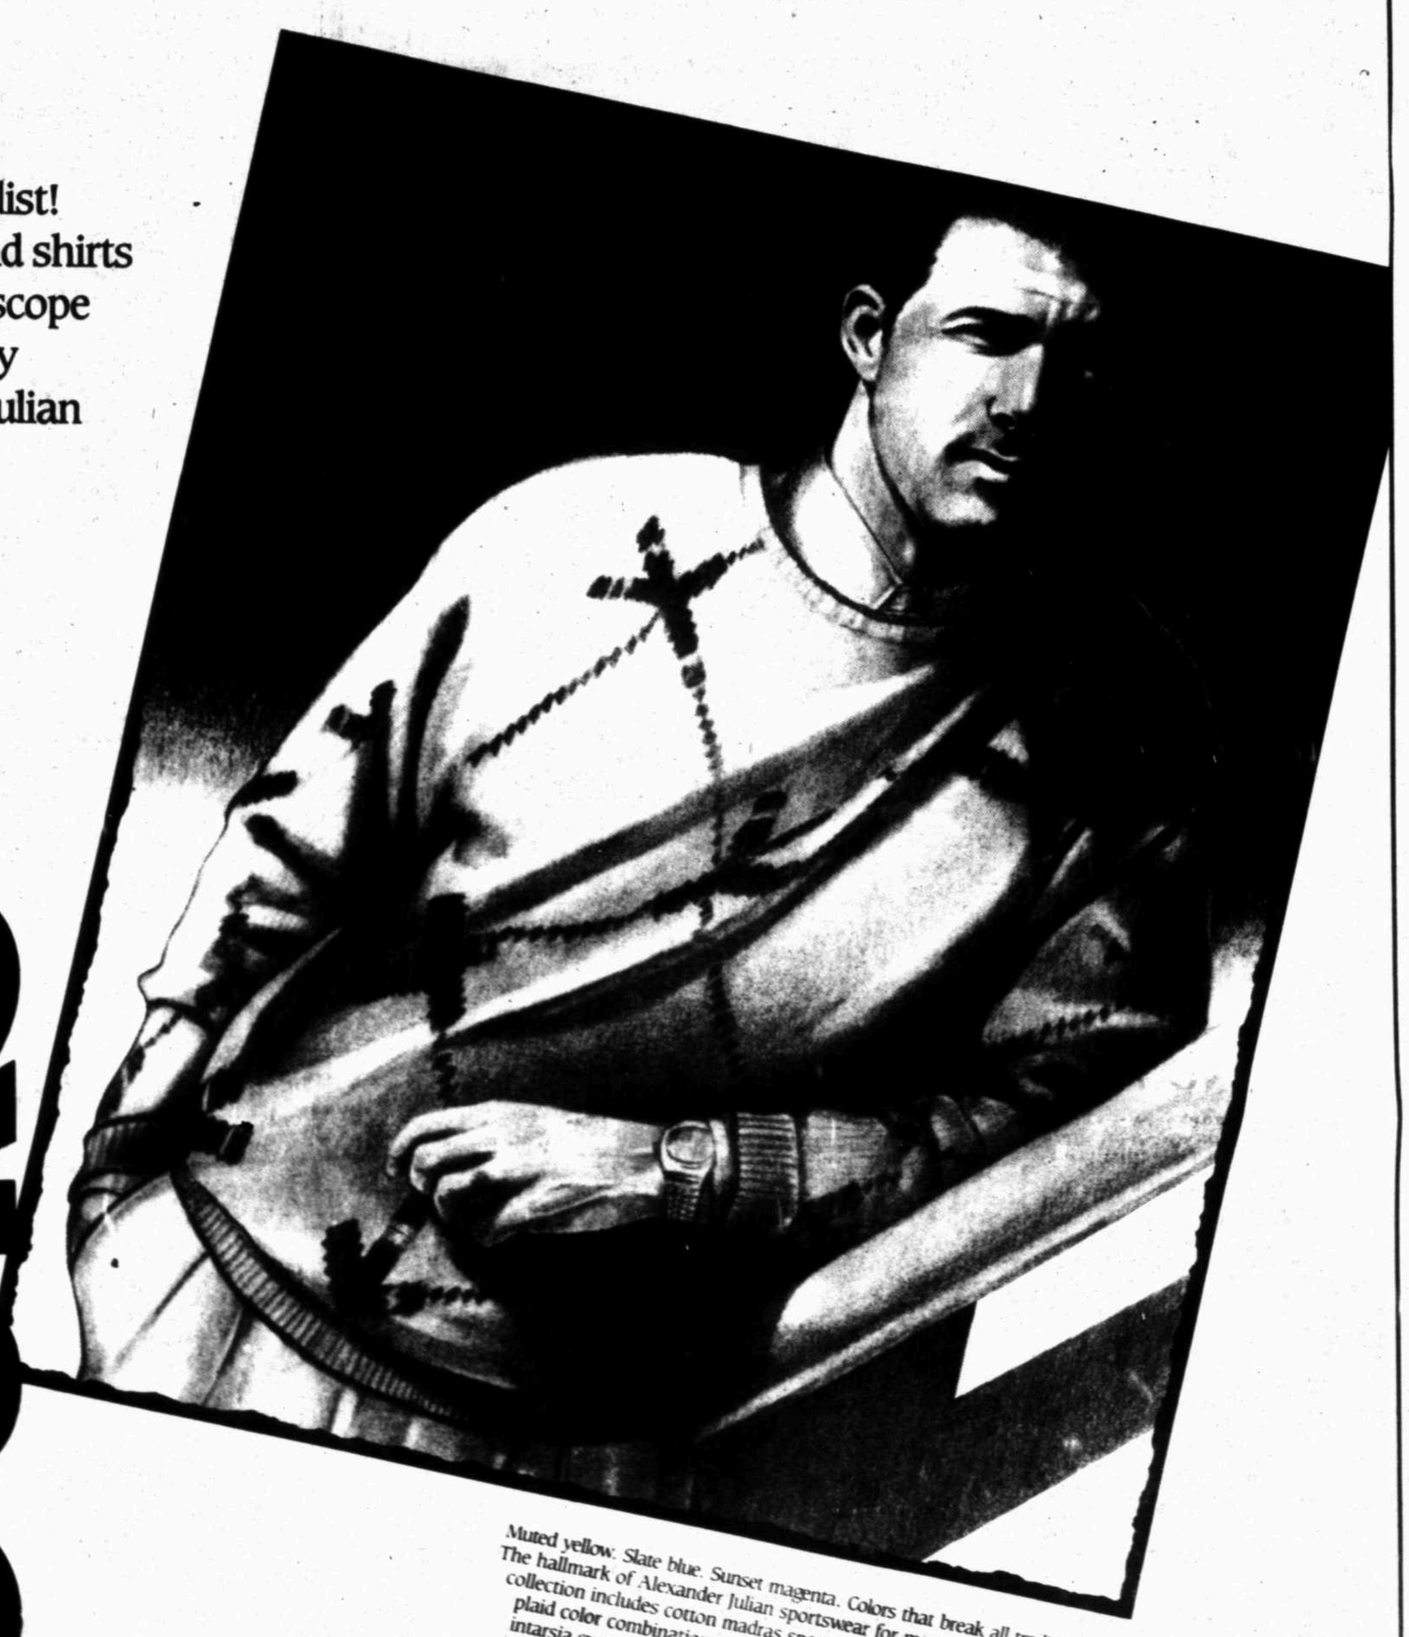

The hostage issue has dominated the state visit of German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, who arrived Sunday.

Genscher has offered to act as a mediator in gaining the release of Western hostages, including nine Americans, believed held by pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem extremists, West German government sources in Bonn said.

Genscher met for four hours Monday with Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati and held separate discussions with President Ali Khamenei and Velayati's deputy, Mohammad Javad Larijani.

Tasaday tribe sues over claims it's just a hoax

Hearst News Service

MANILA — As the television screen illuminated their temporary home in a Manila mansion, 15 members of the Tasaday tribe laughed and hugged each other every time Tarzan swung through the trees in the movie "Greystoke."

"They like that part; they understand it. They used to swing through trees in the forest," explained Manuel Elizalde, the controversial benefactor of the primitive Tasaday tribe.

Elizalde had financed their visit to Manila — the first trip out of the jungle for most — and was giving them shelter at his home as he and tribe representatives defended charges their existence is an elaborate hoax.

The Tasaday watching Elizalde's video screen had just affixed their thumbprints to a legal document suing two local professors who say the tribe's presentation of itself as an authentic stone-age people was staged by Elizalde.

The tiny Filipino tribe, described as the most primitive people on earth at the time of their discovery in 1971, has come a long way since Elizalde, then an official of Ferdinand Marcos' government, was led to a forest clearing by a hunter and shown the Tasaday. In those days, they were said to be pre-agricultural food gatherers, isolated from all contact with other human beings for hundreds or thousands of years.

Initially, the news was greeted as an indication that it was possible for man to rise above his baser instincts. Here was a people, with no word for war, no sign of aggression, living in harmony with its environment. Anthropologists were excited over the prospect of a living laboratory of mankind's social origins.

Elizalde, then head of the Presidential Office for National Minorities, became the Tasaday's godfather. He arranged for their 55,000-acre home on Mindanao to be protected from logging companies and miners. He allowed a limited number of journalists and scientists to meet the 21 members of the group.

But in 1986, Swiss journalist Oswald Iten briefly visited the Tasaday and pronounced them a sham. Iten claimed in a Zurich newspaper that local tribesmen had been paid by Elizalde to pretend to be stone age. He quoted various Tasaday to back up his charges.

He was supported in his claims by Zeus Salazar, a University of the Philippines anthropologist, who said talk of a stone-age people in Mindanao was nonsense.

Then Elizalde — a 51-year-old Harvard graduate — and the scholars involved in the original research decided to counterattack. The Tasaday who supposedly talked to Iten and Salazar recanted their testimony. The Philippine Congress held hearings on the matter recently and determined the tribe was real.

Even some of those who most dislike Elizalde are now conceding that the Tasaday are real. Gerry Hingco, who works with a religious mission long opposed to Elizalde's work in Mindanao, is one who has changed his mind.

Disfigured soldier seeks compassion

JERUSALEM (AP) — A young reserve soldier whose face was burned and mutilated by a firebomb went on television to ask fellow Israelis to show some understanding and stop staring at him.

Shimon Navon, a 25-year-old university student, was doing his required duty in the occupied West Bank last June when Palestinians hurled a firebomb at his jeep. His face was disfigured and all his fingers had to be amputated.

He decided to appear on an Israeli TV talk show Monday night, he said, because his countrymen react so cruelly when they encounter victims like himself in public.

"All the stares lock on you," he said. "Sometimes it's helplessness, or even fear...People just have no tact and they shout things, like, 'Look at this weirdo, look at this creature!'

"As though we are not living in a country where people should know about this phenomenon. It happens a lot and I'm not the only one; there are a lot like me."

Navon's entire face is covered with burns and scar tissue. His ears were burned off. His fingerless hands are still wrapped in bandages.

He appeared on TV with his girlfriend, Miri Amiel. They began dating about six months before he was hurt, and Ms. Amiel said they were closer now than ever.

"Before, we were like any couple, going out together, studying together, having fun...Now we have to deal with all these things together," she said. "Of course, Shimon has to deal with it more than I, but I am a partner in everything."

They met at college, where he was taking a preparatory course before studying for a degree.

Amiel said she, too, is pained by the public's reaction.

"It's very sad for me...to see all the stares, and hope that Shimon doesn't notice," she said.

Tragedy struck Navon at 11 p.m. on June 14, the last day of his unit's 24-day tour of duty in the occupied areas. His jeep entered Beit Umar village for one last patrol before returning to base for a farewell party.

"I didn't want to do the extra round because it was late," he said. "I felt a...strange feeling...After a moment or two I felt the Molotov cocktail. All of me was burning...I couldn't open the door to get out of the jeep."

Since then, Navon has undergone more than a dozen operations and skin transplants.

At least 10 people have suffered serious burns in firebomb attacks in the past year.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Victims tortured, army says

GUATEMALA CITY, Guatemala (AP) — Twenty peasants and a civilian liaison officer were tortured and burned before they were strangled by leftist guerrillas last week, an army spokesman said.

The guerrillas' coalition denied rebels were responsible and blamed the army for the massacre.

The victims, found Saturday night in common graves near Chimaltenango, about 50 miles west of Guatemala City, were tortured before they were killed, army spokesman Col. Luis Arturo Isaacs Rodriguez said Monday.

He denied a report that the victims were members of a death squad and repeated government claims that guerrillas were responsible.

The government said Sunday guerrillas killed Carlos Humberto Guerra Callejas, a civilian who worked with the military in El Aguacate town and who disappeared last Wednesday. It said the guerrillas then massacred 20 friends and relatives who organized a search party Friday and went looking for him.

In a statement distributed in Mexico City, the National Revolutionary Union of Guatemala, a guerrilla umbrella organization, called the government charges "totally and absolutely false" and said the army was trying to cover up involvement in the killings.

Former hostage testifies

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — A former hostage in the 1985 hijacking of a TWA jetliner testified today the hijackers threatened to kill an American passenger every five minutes unless their demands for fuel were met.

Debra Toga, a 30-year-old nurse who was seven months pregnant at the time of the incident, also said that at one point one of the hijackers held a gun to her head.

Mrs. Toga testified at the trial of confessed TWA hijacker Mohammed Ali Hamadi, a Lebanese Shiite Moslem charged with murder and air piracy in the June 1985 hijacking. Navy diver Robert Stethem was killed in the ordeal and 39 Americans were hostage for 17 days.

Mrs. Toga, who was returning from a three-week vacation with her husband Arthur when the Athens-to-Rome flight was seized, said she was not mistreated by the hijackers, but heard other passengers being beaten.

Demjanjuk attorney dies

JERUSALEM (AP) — The attorney of convicted Nazi war criminal John Demjanjuk died today after jumping from the 15th floor of an office building in an apparent suicide, a police spokesman said.

Dov Eitan, a former district court judge who recently joined Demjanjuk's defense team, died at 8:30 a.m. after hurling himself from an upper floor of the City Towers office complex in downtown Jerusalem.

The death came before Israel's Supreme Court was scheduled to hear Demjanjuk's appeal of his conviction and death sentence for Nazi war crimes. The appeal is set to begin Monday.

The Ukrainian-born Demjanjuk was convicted in April of being "Ivan the Terrible," a brutal guard who operated gas chambers that killed 850,000 Jews at the Treblinka death camp in Nazi-occupied Poland.

Legislature facing more problems than solutions

Rep. Tom Craddick

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

State. Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, has more lists to check these days than Santa. But unlike Mr. Claus, there are no guarantees deliveries will be made.

Craddick and the 71st Texas Legislature, which is set to commence in January, have more problems than solutions and more business than time may alot in session.

At stake is Texas' future — a future that, at best, is murky with several federal mandates now coming down the pike as well as an urgency to keep the Lone Star's maverick status intact.

Topping the list of chores is the highly controversial House Bill 1 on workers compensation reform.

For the past 1½ years now, Texas businessmen have given people like Craddick more than an earful. "A lot of small businesses just can't afford it anymore and that's why we've had an interim study done."

Craddick, who expects to recieve a copy of that study in the next two weeks, says there is no question that workers' compensation is going to receive the undivided attention of the Legislature.

And that's not so surprising, considering the fact that attorneys are involved in 50 percent of all compensation cases involving lost-time accidents in Texas, compared to a 16-state average of 7.8 percent, according to the National Compensation Committee on Insurance.

"I heard of a deal at a General Motors plant in Arlington which was paying a compensation rate three times above what it was paying in other states," said Craddick.

"We know we're not coming in looking at $2 billion to $3 billion (deficit) like the last one, but I think it's going to be tough session."

— Rep. Tom Craddick

One of the strongest backers for reform here in West Texas is the Permian Basin Petroleum Association, whose executive vice president forsees a number of reform variations being argued in Austin.

"This thing has to be totally revamped," said PBPA's Harry Spannaus. "If we don't have the experience to do it on our own, maybe we should look to see what some other states are doing."

Spannaus said PBPA won't support an increase in premiums and a decrease in benefits and has no reason to believe that will be the case.

But like others, Spannaus says there is a certain urgency to take immediate action given the current state of the economy.

Craddick is full aware of that and of other areas that suggest possible shortfalls given federal mandates to build new prisons and public schools which will require more income.

"Education will be a major issue," said Craddick, who is currently monitoring the results of one test case being fought on education fronts that will require Texas to provide even more funding for local school districts.

While the state representative doesn't forsee a push for a personal income or corporate tax, he concedes the Legislature may have to consider "heavier" cuts across the board to address any shortfalls.

"We know we're not coming in looking at $2 billion to $3 billion (deficit) like the last one, but I think it's going to be tough session," said Craddick."

Spannaus agreed, adding he is aware of the task at hand. Which is why the PBPA and four other oil and gas associations will be meeting with Gov. Bill Clements on Dec. 20.

"This is probably the most drastic industry depression we've ever faced...there's no light at the end of the tunnel that we can see at this point...it's pitch black."

Girl presented with electric artificial arm

By RICK SMITH

WHITESBORO (AP) — Toni Clark received the best present of all for her second birthday: a left arm.

Toni, the daughter of Chris and Jamie Clark of Whitesboro, was born with a left arm that stops inches below her elbow.

Almost since birth she has been fitted with "passive arms," clumsy, artificial limbs that do not move.

When doctors fitted her with a cable-operated, claw-like arm recently, the Clarks grudgingly agreed.

But Toni hated the ugly, cumbersome thing.

"She didn't go for it at all. You can probably understand why," Chris said.

"We knew there had to be something better."

They wanted an arm with an electrically operated hand that would allow Toni to pick up and hold objects.

Children 14 and older can be fitted with such electric arms, Toni's doctors said. But not infants. Not Toni.

The Clarks disagreed.

"We thought that the younger she started off with one, the better off she would be. That she would have an easier time getting used to it," Chris said.

Then they saw a short story at the end of a television newscast about a clinic in Houston that fits children with myoelectric limbs.

"That's what we were waiting for," said Chris, who left the construction business to study accounting at the University of North Texas. "We knew there was something out there, but we just didn't know where to go."

They traveled to Medical Center Prosthetics in Houston, in August. In 1½ years, the center's Limbs for Love program has fitted about 70 children with motorized, battery-powered arms.

The family spent three weeks at the center as Toni was fitted with a myoelectric arm. The arms are handcrafted with a socket that fits over the existing arm. Lightweight and graceful, the "mylos" are almost identical in appearance to human arms.

At the center, therapists taught Toni how to use her new arm.

Medical insurance paid most of the arm's $10,000 cost, Chris said. As Toni grows, the family will return to Houston annually to "trade in" her old arm for new, larger arms, which will cost $5,000 apiece, said Jamie, a nurse at Wilson N. Jones Hospital in Sherman.

The center also helps families without insurance find funding for the arms, Chris said.

Toni has had little trouble adapting to the arm, which is covered with soft, flesh-colored plastic, Chris said.

Flexing muscles in her upper arm activates sensors that make the device's life-like hand open and close.

Using the hand, she can pick up and hold objects as tiny as plastic bracelets and as large as her Miss Piggy doll.

And, for the first time, she can use both two hands to grab the chains on her backyard swing.

After an initial surprise, Toni's playmates have accepted the arm, which makes a soft, whirring noise when the hand operates, Chris said.

"Her teacher at the daycare center said that Toni was reading a book when, all of a sudden, she said, 'I'm tired of this arm!' and pulled it off," Jamie said, smiling.

"The teacher said that was a wonderful way to get 22 kids to be suddenly very quiet."

"We've been surprised at how well the other kids have responded," Chris said. "Of course, we know that as she gets older, the things kids say will be crueler. But, now, they just ask one time and that's it."

The Clarks said that they try not to be overly protective of their blonde, blue-eyed daughter.

"We make her do things on her own," Jamie said, watching as tiny Toni raced around the living room on a plastic tricycle.

"We don't push her," Chris added, "but we don't hold her back, either. She climbs the ladder up the slide at the park by herself. We don't hold her down. We let her go."

The Clarks said that they are willing to talk to families interested in the Limbs for Love program.

"We are fortunate that Toni was born in this day and time," Chris said, watching his daughter use the myoelectric arm to stack plastic blocks.

"Not that she couldn't get around without it. But we live in a two-handed world. And this arm is a blessing."

Information about the Limbs for Love program can obtained by contacting Medical Center Prosthetics (1-800-344-LIMB or (713) 797-0207).

City of Midland lighting engineer Oscar Vallin attempts to straighten out a hook for hanging a municipal Christmas decoration on Wall Avenue. The decorations made their annual appearance Monday morning, as city crews worked the city's main downtown thoroughfares.

Tree will be lighted Friday

From Staff Reports

The 21st year of an annual city tradition will commence 6:30 p.m. Friday as the city of Midland lights a 55-foot tall Christmas tree at Centennial Plaza downtown.

On hand will be Mayor Carroll Thomas and what the city Parks and Recreation Department calls "a very special guest from the North Pole."

The event, planned in conjunction with the Midland Jaycees, will feature free hot chocolate and horse-drawn wagon rides for children, according to Chuck Swallow, parks department administrative assistent.

A musical program offered by Intersong, a local deaf signing group, also will be featured.

The 55-foot-tree actually is made up of an eight-inch drill pipe sunk 10 feet in the ground, Swallow said. About 400 branches ranging from 5 to 14 feet in length fill out the tree.

Midland's Jaycees started the tree tradition in the early 1950s, when Jaycee members would travel to New Mexico to cut a 35-foot-tall tree, Swallow said. The city started it's sponsorship in 1968, he said.

Commissioners send message to road sign thieves

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

It's a sign of the times.

A rash of road sign thefts this fall prompted Midland County Commissioners to issue a stern warning Monday to teen-agers, whom they believe are responsible for the sudden disappearance.

Approximately 30 signs have vanished from county roads since Oct. 1, Road and Bridge Superintendent Albert Stewart surmised.

"It's happening all over," said Stewart, who added that the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation also is experiencing a rash of similar thefts.

Stewart told County Commissioners Monday that teen-agers are probably to blame for the stolen signs.

County Attorney Mark Dettman, who has prosecuted only one sign theft case this year, promised to file charges against persons caught stealing road signs or anyone found to have a sign in their possession.

If convicted of the Class B misdemeanor, a person could face 180 days in jail and a $1,000 fine, Dettman said.

County Commissioner Durward Wright applauded Dettman's remarks.

"It might get the parents to thinking a little bit if they find one of the signs in their child's bedroom," he said.

In other action Monday, Commissioners decided to refuse an offer to participate in the Texas County and District Retirement System's 10-year vesting program.

Commissioners cited economics in their decision to pass on the offer, which would have committed the county to contributing $87,000 per year for a 30-year period to acquire 10-year vesting.

"I just don't think there would be a benefit to it," said Wright.

The county currently requires its employees to complete 12 years of continuous service to become vested in the retirement program.

Commissioners also relinquished control of $98,000 in school bond funds to the Midland and Greenwood school districts.

In doing so, the county received $4,000 from the MISD, which acquired a $92,000 share of the funds. The GISD is due to receive about $6,000.

Midland County had managed the funds, which derived from the sale of 1,944 acres of land in Cochran and Coke counties, since 1910.

Saragosa suit settled out of court

From Staff Reports

A class-action lawsuit brought by the citizens of a re-built Saragosa that alleged mis-appropriation of relief funds by Reeves County has been settled out-of-court.

Reeves County commissioners voted 3-2 Monday in favor of a $15,256.50 settlement of the case which alleged funds collected by the Sheriff's Department were used to re-build a Head Start center on county land in Saragosa.

A May 22, 1987, killer tornado raced through Saragosa, a town of about 300 located 28 miles south of Pecos. Thirty people lost their lives in the tragedy, and at least half the town's structures were damaged or destroyed.

County Attorney Scott Johnson said this morning that money totaling $30,513 allegedly was used for rebuilding the Head Start structure and for "unauthorized" payments to persons helping in the relief effort.

The $15,000 settlement approved by commissioners Monday had already been accepted by Saragosans, Johnson said.

The money will be turned over to a finance committee made up of county officials and town residents, said Johnson.

In a separate vote Monday, commissioners unanimously requested that the settlement money be used to reimburse Reeves Memorial Hospital for expenses incurred in treating Saragosa residents, Johnson said.

While the Head Start building constructed with the funds was intended to replace a community center destroyed in the tornado, Saragosans have built a separate structure for use as a center, Johnson said.

The new building is intended for use in conducting Head Start classes. "There's also discussion for using it as a volunteer fire department for Saragosa," Johnson said.

Italian attache receives 'trophy of war' from Texas WWII veteran

By CARROLL WILSON

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — The flag had been bunched up in the bottom of an old trunk along with long-ignored baseball uniforms and other stuff from 40 and more years ago.

And John Binnion of Crowell just hadn't thought about it in at least that long.

But one day early this year he was watching the skiing competition in the Winter Olympics, a competition that an Italian athlete won in two events. After the second win, as the athlete stood for his nation's national anthem, the young man, smiling broadly, raised two small Italian flags and waved them.

And at that moment, Binnion remembered the flag — an Italian flag — that he had taken from its pole and brought home as a souvenir from World War II campaigns in Italy. After a search, he found it, dirty and wrinkled, in the bottom of the trunk, and then he thought about what to do with it.

Last week, he returned it to what he called its rightful owners, the Italian armed forces during a brief ceremony highlighting the Italian Air Force's annual Armed Forces Dinner at the Wichita Club.

The flag, which had been cleaned but still bore reddish stains, was presented by Binnion to Col. Mauro Ghiacci, air attache in the Italian Embassy in Washington, D.C.

In brief remarks, Binnion, now a retired educator and past national commander of the Military Order of the Purple Heart, said he found and took the flag from its pole over "facilities that had been bombed and shelled and passed over. Coming along behind that particular fighting, I decided to 'capture' the flag and send it home as a souvenir."

In an interview, he said he cannot remember where he found the flag, and has corresponded with other soldiers in his unit who could not remember, either.

"You must remember that at the time I 'captured' the flag, Italy was no longer an enemy nation," Binnion said. "Italy had surrendered at the close of the campaign in Sicily and was making every effort to aid the Allies in the war against Germany."

Binnion, who was a member of Gen. George Patton's staff for the Sicily invasion and who later participated in the Anzio invasion, crossed only part of Italy as American troops made their way north. He was seriously wounded at Anzio and spent 10 months on hospital ships and in Army hospitals.

After seeing the young Italian athlete, and recalling the circumstances of his acquiring the flag, Binnion decided to try to return it. "If that young Italian athlete was as proud of his country and his flag as I am of my country and my flag, then my 'trophy of war' should be returned," he said.

"There was no reason for me to keep that flag. Italy and the United States are friends. We are allies in NATO. We are allies in peace."

Binnion was put in touch with Col. Bruno Stoppoloni, commander of the Italian Air Force contingent in the Euro-NATO Joint Jet Pilot Training Program at Sheppard Air Force Base.

And it was arranged for him to present the flag to Ghiacci. "The flag is yours," Binnion told Ghiacci. "You are proud of it, as well you should be. And I return it to you with an apology on the one hand, but with sincere best wishes on the other hand."

Hispanic voters oppose English as official language, poll indicates

Brischetto

AUSTIN (AP) — Hispanic voters in Texas, regardless of political party, oppose efforts to designate English as the "official" language, according to newly released poll results.

The Election Day survey of 2,654 voters in Texas also found that the drift of Hispanics to Republican presidential candidates was halted this year, said the San Antonio-based Southwest Voter Research Institute.

Robert Brischetto, institute executive director, said at a Monday news conference that the Nov. 8 poll found 70 percent of Hispanic voters opposed to the official English idea, a sharp increase from the 53 percent opposed just two years ago.

Among backers of Democrat Michael Dukakis, 72 percent were opposed, while 58 percent of Republican George Bush's supporters opposed it.

"This was a position that has increasingly crystalized among Hispanic voters in the past several years," said Andrew Hernandez, institute president.

The Texas poll also found less evidence of a Hispanic drift toward GOP presidential candidates, Brischetto said.

"This realignment that seems to be taking place among the white voters in Texas in presidential elections...is not occurring among Hispanic voters," he said.

Hernandez said Hispanic voters in the state aren't tied to a single political philosophy but shift from one issue to the next.

"This Hispanic vote is not a monolithic liberal or conservative vote. It's conservative in some areas and progressive or liberal in other areas," Hernandez said.

For example, while the poll showed 76 percent support for a national health insurance program, an issue advocated by Dukakis, it also found 64 percent favoring the death penalty for murderers, something Dukakis opposed.

"There's been much discussion about whether or not Hispanics are going to be voting less Democratic and more Republican," Hernandez said. "There was some evidence to indicate that was the case going back to 1980 and '84.

MC plans caroling, lighting ceremony

From Staff Reports

The second annual "Midland College Merry Christmas" is scheduled at Midland College at 6:15 p.m. Thursday.

The holiday celebration will include refreshments, lighting ceremony, music, and caroling.

Taking place just west of the Hodge Carillon Tower, the festivities will begin with hot wassail punch and gingerbread cookies.

Dr. Betty Morris, keyboard instructor, will play Christmas music for the Hodge Carillon Tower, followed at 6:45 p.m. with lights being turned on to light the Carillon Tower and five buildings.

Lights also have been installed on 16 oak trees in the Beal Plaza.

After a presentation of special music by the Midland College Jazz Singers, those attending can join in group carol singing. The event concludes at 7:15 p.m., in time for the 7:30 p.m. start of the Midland College-Howard College basketball game in Chaparral Center.

Members of the Student Senate and Abell-Hanger Club are providing hundreds of luminarias to line sidewalks, with the Faculty Senate members serving refreshments.

Dr. Michael Jordan, coordinator of vocal music at MC, directs the Jazz Singers. This is a group organized this fall, which performs in costume with choreography to accompany the music.

"We hope everyone in the community can join us to celebrate the beginning of the holiday season," said Dr. Jess Parrish, college president. "This event was so popular last year we wanted to continue it, and have expanded the lighting to include several more buildings and many of the trees in the plaza."

The special lighting will be on each evening through Jan. 2 for the enjoyment of area residents and their out-of-town visitors.

The schedule was designed to accommodate the evening classes which are meeting Thursday. The 5:30 p.m. classes may be dismissed 15 minutes early and the 7 p.m. classes may start 15 minutes late that night.

Jerry Tubb serves as chairman of the MC Merry Christmas committee.

As a bonus for those wishing to come out and have dinner, the Abell-Hanger Club is sponsoring an enchilada dinner in the Student Center from 5:30-7:30 p.m. as a fund-raising project.

The club, comprised of students attending MC through the Abell-Hanger Foundation, will use proceeds for one of their community-improvement projects. The enchiladas are being prepared by Tampico Restaurant. Persons wishing to make reservations can call 685-4641.

Mattox: Phone device illegal

HOUSTON (AP) — A telephone device installed nearly eight years ago to monitor whether Harris County employees made personal long-distance calls at taxpayer expense is illegal, according to an opinion by state Attorney General Jim Mattox.

The "pen register" device was allowed under state law when it was installed in December 1980, but the Legislature in 1985 prohibited its except by phone companies and law enforcement officials with a court order to use them, officials said.

The equipment was installed to dissuade employees from using county long-distance lines for personal calls, said Allen Dieter, head of the county's department of communications.

It records which county employees make calls, the numbers they call and the length of the conversations.

Dieter, who requested the opinion earlier this year when he planned to add similar equipment to monitor local calls, learned of Mattox's opinion Monday. The attorney general also informed Dieter that he could be prosecuted for committing a third-degree felony should anyone file a charge against him.

Harvard physicist likely to be chosen SSC project director

HOUSTON (AP) — Harvard physicist Roy Schwitters is likely to be chosen as first director of the massive super collider project near Waxahachie, the Houston Post reported today.

Schwitters, who also is affiliated with the Fermi National Accelerator Laboratory in Illinois, would oversee the design and construction of the 53-mile atom smasher proposed by the federal government and recently awarded to the Texas site, according to the newspaper report.

Schwitters, however, would first be busy mending fences in the political arenas where funding for the projected $4.4 billion project must be approved.

At a Monday gathering in Houston billed as a "town meeting" of top Texas physicists, those who would use the giant particle accelerator complained of the project's poor relations with industry, foreigners, politicians and the public.

"The next few months are crucial," said Rice University scientist Billy E. Bonner.

Five Michigan congressmen directed the General Accounting Office Monday to investigate the fairness of the Energy Department's choice of Texas as the site for the project. The selection followed months of intense competition from states vying for the expensive project and the jobs it would create.

Some of the three-dozen physicists attending the Houston gathering said misunderstanding of the project is also threatening the future of the super collider.

Schwitters, who had planned to attend the Texas meeting, instead traveled to Washington to discuss the project with DOE officials. He did not immediately return a telephone call today by The Associated Press.

Whale believed to be female

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Baby Shamu, the sixth killer whale calf born in Sea World parks across the nation, has turned the Texas facility into a nursery of sorts, trainers said.

Sea World officials were "99 percent sure" the 300-pound whale calf born Saturday is female, Fran Kenneley, assistant public relations manager at the park, said Monday.

Meanwhile, trainers continued to monitor the infant killer whale around the clock.

"We're seeing continued nursing ability, which is an encouraging sign," said Ms. Kenneley.

She said Baby Shamu continued nursing, but had a degree of privacy Monday, when Sea World was closed to the public in the off-season.

Four of the killer whale calves born in Sea World parks have lived, Ms. Kenneley said. All six were females.

The youngest baby, 6½ feet long, was delivered by Namu and spent most of Sunday and Monday swimming near her mother.

Baby Shamu is the first killer whale calf born in Texas and the third delivered this year in Sea World parks.

"The whole stadium will turn into a nursery," said Ms. Kenneley.

Namu, a 14-year-old whale, was impregnated at Sea World of California and officials said she was assumed to have carried the calf for a normal 17-month gestation period.

It was the second calf Namu has delivered in captivity, said Sea World officials. The first died of a congenital heart defect several months after birth.

Imitation less costly form of fashion

By BARBARA DeWITT
Copley News Service

Armani, Chanel and Yves Saint Laurent. They're three haute couture designers whose designs have made a powerful impact in fashion. But few can afford them.

So, you want the allure of couture but not the big ticket? It's merely a matter of details, those little tricks of the trade that become a designer's trademark. Study them, and you can create a fashion forgery that may catapult you to fame and fortune — or at least garner you a reputation for impeccable taste.

In order to buy a haute copy, you've got to know who and what's worthy of counterfeiting, so we turned to a trio of fashion experts, LeeAnn Roskelley, the fashion coordinator of Los Angeles-based Nordstrom stores; Patricia Fox, fashion director of Saks Fifth Avenue in Beverly Hills; and Betty Leonard, vice president and general manager of I. Magnin in Beverly Hills. Here's their advice for stealing designer looks:

Love the looks of the Italian designer Giorgio Armani? To pull off this "L.A. Law" style, choose flat shoes, take off your jewelry and start thinking about texture instead of color, says Leonard. She adds that key wardrobe pieces are a tweed jacket, crinkled wool crepe skirt, luxurious wool fabrics and neutral colors. To complete the look, sleek your hair into a French braid or straight-but-shapely bob.

Chanel is a timeless classic, and it's instantly recognizable. Designed by Karl Lagerfeld, the trademarks are a navy blue suit with gold coin buttons, says Roskelley, and it's always accented with ropes of pearls and gold chains, as well as a bracelet with large gold charms, some in the shape of purses. Other accessories are hoop earrings and the Chanel quilted handbag with chain shoulder strap. Shoes are usually sling-backed pumps with spectator-style toe in black.

CNS Photo

The allure of couture, but not the big price, is available in fashion forgery.

To capture the essence of the trend-setting Yves Saint Laurent, Roskelley suggests a suit with a cropped, curved silhouette, perhaps with rounded shoulders and dolman sleeves. The skirt should be slim, and the fabric could be a YSL favorite, black-and-white houndstooth. This designer also loves to pop the look off with bright colors, she continues, and suggests a purple hat with matching gloves. Jewelry is minimal, but earrings are big and jeweled.

Hubert de Givenchy is a French designer known for a bright palette and youthful designs. Currently the look to copy is his beautifully tailored suit and extravagant evening gown, says Leonard. Think of Audrey Hepburn, she says, and pick a black gown with regal-looking jeweled earrings, bracelets and necklaces.

The Italian name in knitwear is Missoni, and it's a really difficult look to achieve, continues Leonard. It's such a distinctive pattern of knits that you'd probably have to knit it yourself to create a copy.

Another high-profile Italian designer is Valentino, whose style is characterized by its tailored but feminine fashions. Polka dots, velvet collars and cuffs, structured jackets and hats and jet earrings that help move his suits from day into night are Valentino trademarks. He's also fond of simple details, such as the use of a scarf instead of a blouse with a suit jacket.

Emanuel Ungaro, the designer with a penchant for sexy dresses that caress the body, is one of the most-copied in the world. His draping and layering of fluid fabrics is a trademark, as well as his use of hot colors. In suits, look for feminine lines, nipped waists and ruffled peplums. Add a chiffon scarf and gold sculpted jewelry.

Christian Lacroix, the darling of Paris who gave us saucy poufs and fichu collars, is now designing ready-to-wear, making his label slightly more tangible. According to Fox, the Lacroix signature this year is witty accessories, such as small horn-trimmed spectacles, doll-size hats perched over one eyebrow and lunchbox purses.

But you can't just add one item or it will look like a mistake, says Fox, who adds that the trademark silhouette is shaped at the waist and round and full at the hips. It's a '60s influence and his familiar fichu collars have evolved into cape collars. More details include heavy use of shocking pink, baroque patterns such as damask, lace stockings and shoes with a square toe and chunky heel.

More charm is found in the designs of Zandra Rhodes, whose trademark is fantasy, says Fox. To capture the spirit of Rhodes, Fox says to shop for a flouncy, draped chiffon dress that's hand-painted and trimmed with crystal beads. Add Elizabethan shoes in satin, one long earring, a purple hair stripe and Egyptian makeup.

Silk lends elegance to fall casual wear

By CLARICE MAKEMSON
New York Times News Service

ATLANTA — If polyester pantsuits, faded jeans or huge, knit running suits come to mind when thinking "leisure wear," then the latest collection of fall casuals may come as a shock.

This season's weekend clothes are elegant yet comfortable, tailored yet relaxed, and anything but polyester. They call to mind long, lithe ladies stretched out on Napoleon-style chaises, sipping tall martinis and allowing one perfectly manicured hand to absently pet the head of an all-white dog.

They are the ultimate in style and comfort.

Atlantans in particular are prime targets for this kind of studied casualness, says Sally White, spokeswoman for Neiman Marcus department stores.

"A lot of people who are 25 to 45 in the work force are single. And single people like to have fun on the weekend. They aren't necessarily going to dinner parties or balls.

"They're athletic; they're active; they're sports-minded. They love casual dinners on the weekends, and they like to dress casually, differently from the workplace."

Yet most of these upwardly mobile types won't be caught dead at one of the trendier restaurants in a warm-up suit. They want something that suits their style, yet doesn't look office-ready, Ms. White says. They want to be chic without looking cheap.

And one of the newest ways to achieve this is through silk.

Silk for casual clothes is a dream-come-true for the style-conscious, Ms. White says. It can be hand-washed and still manage to hold its shape. It is elegant and comfortable.

"It's luxurious and casual," Ms. White says. "I can wear it and feel dressed up."

The new silks are also bright. Color is the optimum word here, and many of the pieces are shown with contrasting hues. Fuschia with purple. Lime green with neon orange. And everything with black.

Easy tips lead to prettier neck

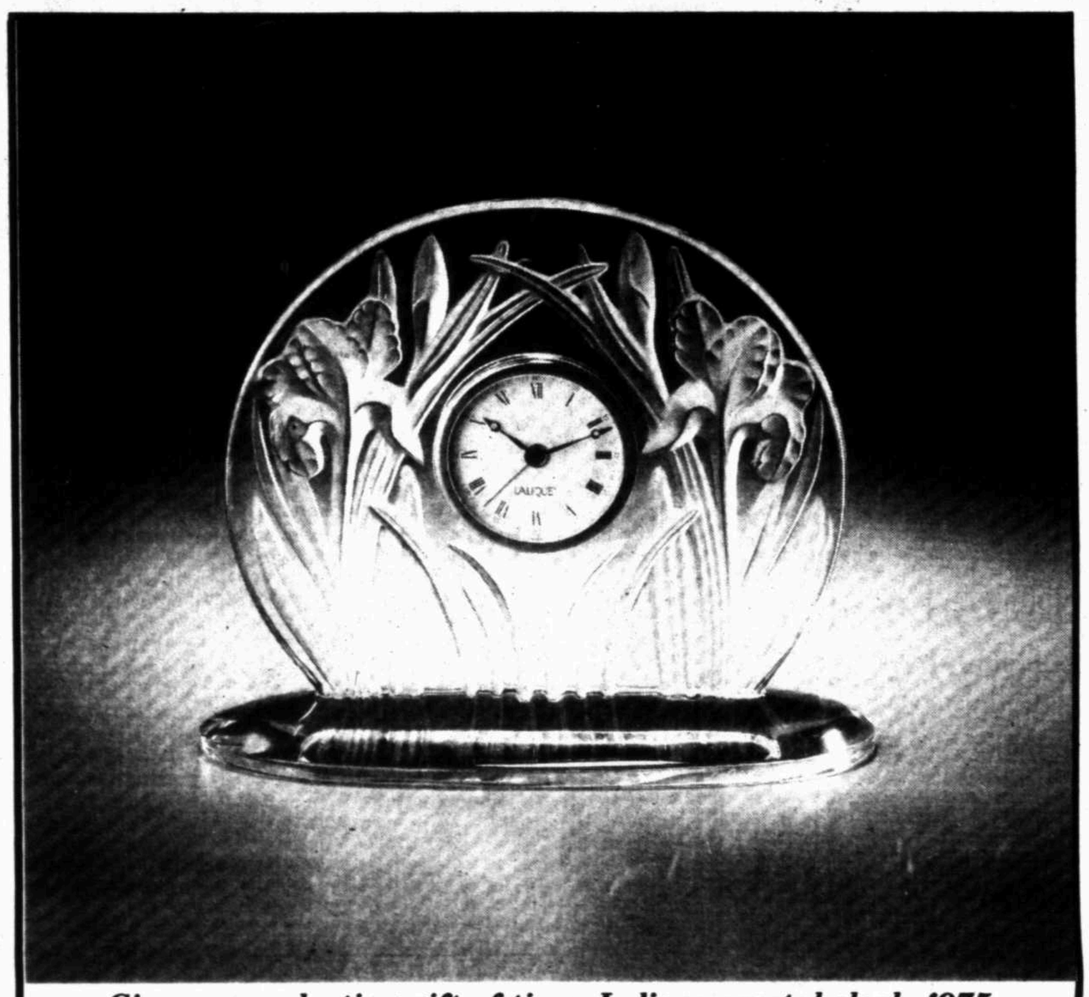

Associated Press

As double chins or crepey, saggy skin can detract from a pretty neckline, Ladies' Home Journal offers tips for proper care of the skin and muscle in the neck.

The neck is an extension of the face and it should be treated as gently. According to a leading dermatologist, body soaps are too harsh for sensitive neck skin, which needs a facial cleanser. After gentle cleaning, use a moisturizer and skin toner. Apply a sunscreen with a high SPF whenever exposure to the sun is anticipated.

Three neck-firming exercises can be done while sitting at a desk. First, without clenching the teeth, smile wide and tense muscles in the neck and jaw. Relax and repeat five times. Next, sit with elbows on a table, resting the chin on folded, interlaced fingers. Press down with the chin while pressing up with the fists. Hold for 20 seconds and relax. Finally, place one thumb directly under the chin, and curl the tongue back in the mouth until the muscle under the chin protrudes. Stretch neck as far left as possible with chin pointing upward and slowly rotate to the right, chin up. Return to center and repeat five times.

Sagging of neck skin is often hereditary, but can also be the result of yo-yo dieting and a tendency to slump. Stay away from crash weight-loss programs and practice good posture. Stand straight, holding the head high, as if it were being pulled up by an invisible string attached to the top of the head. Keep shoulders down and relaxed.

Shoulder pads: The fad that refused to die

New York Times News Service

SANTA ROSA, Calif. — When Deborah Blackwell suggested stocking "Stay-Put" shoulder pads, foam pads sold separately from clothes and designed to be worn with any garment, her partner at the Boog and Fox boutique, Carol McGinnis, couldn't imagine why they should consider such a thing.

"Everything we sell comes with shoulder pads in it," said McGinnis. "I didn't think people would pay extra for these. But the first dozen pairs sold in two hours. Now we sell four dozen a week."

"They keep saying shoulder pads are going out, but you wouldn't know it by our store," said Blackwell.

"Once you're used to the silhouette, you feel like a bag-lady without them," said one fan, apparently expressing the sentiments of many. The silhouette she referred to features squared shoulders that make the wearer appear to possess a smaller waist and hips than actual measurements might reveal.

Yet a recent poll by Levi-Strauss asked 156 of the nation's fashion editors to list their top 10 fashion gripes. "Padded shoulders" ranked ninth.

It's unclear why the fashion press deplores so vociferously something the consuming public so obviously adores, but every season since 1980, when designer Norma Komali put shoulder pads in casual daywear, fashion prognosticators have predicted their demise.

Women's shoulder pads looked best in suits of the 1940s, which had square, military-style shoulders, but were creatively cut and for the most part, resembled men's suits very little.

In their current incarnation, shoulder pads had their heydey in 1985-86, during the height of the "menswear for women" craze that was supposed to carry career women from the steno pool to the boardroom.

In an odd reversal, some blouses are cut for pads, but sold without them. In these, the sleeve seam hangs to your elbow, the cuff to your knees. Insert shoulder pads, and watch the seams and sleeves jump into place.

The best arrangement for shoulder pads is tailored into, and covered by the lining of, a jacket or coat that will always be dry cleaned. In sweaters and blouses, where pads covered with shiny material are simply tacked into the shoulder, they tend to slip, slide, and slither, eventually ending up somewhere beside your shoulder.

As she does with whatever subject she addresses, Erma Bombeck best expressed the downside of shoulder pads in her column of May 24, 1987:

"Has it only been two years since shoulder pads came upon the American scene to prove that all female linebackers are created equal? When the style first came in, it was cool running around like a no-neck, spreading little wings and creating a breeze whenever I moved. Then designers got crazy and I couldn't control the pads anymore. They slid into strange places on my body, causing people to stare..."

It is all well and good for the rank-and-file shoulder pad wearer to stand unmoved by all the rhetoric, demonstrating once again that she will no longer be dictated to by every Ralph, Yves, and Geoffrey who comes down the runway.

But if she wants to carry this to its logical extension, she will recognize the variety of silhouettes shoulder pads can provide, and wear those that are best for her.

Spring fashions for '89 displayed in recent Paris shows

By LINDA GILLIAN
Hearst News Service

PARIS — French fashion in any season nearly always runs the gamut from wonderful to wacky. But contrasts were never more obvious than on the first day of the spring and summer '89 ready-to-wear showings.

American Patrick Kelly pitted his girls-just-wanna-have-fun fashions against traditional styles by Marc Bohan for Christian Dior in a strange back-to-back coupling of shows.

Even the ushers for the two shows were like night and day — the Dior girls in chic red and black suits, while the Kelly boys sported oversized striped overalls, the designer's signature attire.

There was no question that Kelly came out smelling like a rose.

Anticipation ran high for his show as the standing-room-only crowd sensed an historic event was at hand. Kelly, a black designer from Mississippi, has shown in Paris for years. But this season marks the first time an American has ever been permitted to show his fashions in the tents at the Louvre museum.

Kelly's theme was the Mona Lisa. As usual, most of his clothes showcased the mysteries of the female form. The favored shapes were tight knit dresses, with tiny straps or no straps, scooped necklines or off-the-shoulder necklines with tiny sleeves. Kelly decked them with a variety of sewn-on or pinned-on regalia — pinwheels, gardenias, tiny straw hats, crayon-colored buttons and scarves and guilt-framed playing-card-sized portraits of Mona Lisa.

Leopard cotton prints were mixed with Khakai and bra tops, camisoles, laced-up jackets, skirts, coulottes and trousers for the jungle — Muscle Lisas. There were black and white dice prints, full skirts and loose pants, dice buttons adorning black or white knits and gamblers wide-track stripes on gray cotton skirts, trousers, or shorts suits for the Las Vegas Lisas.

Graduation tassels of various lengths hung from black, white or yellow ottoman spencer jackets. A print of polka dot and long stemmed roses on black or white looked fresh when worked into tiny bloomers. Black and white musical note prints were teamed with black straw clef symbols. Loose island linens in white and tans — tops, skirts, coulottes and coats — had real seashells pinned all around square necklines.

Astro Lisas and Moona Lisas sported suits with stars woven into jacquard cotton and adorned with sewn-on metallic stars. Knits were coverd with dozens, maybe hundreds, of shiny stars, moons, planets and buttons.

There wasn't a dull design among Kelly's gumbo of fun, nor a dull moment in the presentation that included sev .al runway appearances by his longtime friend, recording artist and actress Grace Jones. At the end, a beaming Kelly was presented with four huge bouquets instead of the traditional one.

The Christian Dior Boutique collection was a return to prim and proper Paris. Shantung in citron, lilac, turquoise and taupe were fashioned into lady-like jackets shaped at the waists with multi-pleated peplums at their backs. Separates of bright chiffons and turquoise, orange and lilac were loose and flowing with artists' smock tops and billowy pants.

Monogramed pockets on navy blazers and white shirts were crisp spring looks with white linen slacks and rep-striped silk tied belts. White linen cape-backed trench coats were worn over coulottes or short dresses, once again with belts that looked like men's ties.

Taupe was Bohan's favorite color, and he spiced it with brights or white throughout the collection. Glittering Lurex pullovers and cardigans in black or gold were rich counterparts to taupe, taupe printed or white separates for day or evening.

Computer virus makes news; Human germs too common

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

I got a virus the same week the nation's computers did. The computers got theirs from a 23-year-old kid from Arnold, Md. I got mine from shaking hands in church and saying, "Peace be with you."

The computer virus made the national news. My virus got a yawn from my husband, who said, "Get dressed and you'll feel better."

Frankly, I don't like computers taking on human airs. If they want to get a fungus when someone spills coffee on their keys, OK, but a virus belongs to people who can feel and throw up.

In a few short years, the computer has gotten more respect than people have in the last two centuries. I don't know why. As my husband pressed a brown grocery bag into a waste can and mechanically shoved it near my bed, he said, "This is terrible. Have you any idea the damage a computer virus could do to this country? It could bring it to its knees."

I crawled to the bathroom.

"Listen to this," he yelled. "The virus spread to more than 6,000 computers in top universities, research centers and military installations. We're just lucky our computer wasn't affected."

I grabbed a nose tissue and pulled myself into bed. "The only thing you've stored on it are our appliance serial numbers."

"Can you imagine," he said, "what would happen if they were floating around out there for the world to see? Or worse, if they were erased?"

Computers always act like they're sick to me. They're always making those whining sounds as though they're not going to show up for the next printout. And no one ever wants to admit that a computer made a mistake.

I remember a letter I got a while back from a woman who wrote that more than two years ago, her daughter went to the bank to close her account and wrote out a withdrawal slip for $99. The teller gave her $999. Her daughter said she'd love to take it, but she had only $99 in her account. The teller said someone must have deposited it for her. The computer never makes a mistake, she said. The girl spent six months trying to give the money back to the bank. They refused to take it. Her daughter had her teeth fixed and the teeth of her two boys because "computers don't make mistakes."

Frankly, I never took computers too seriously. I figured they were a fad, like the Hula Hoop and the Pet Rock, until one day in Filene's basement in Boston. The lights dimmed and there was silence. All the computers had gone out. Have you any idea what it's like to be in a store full of crazed shoppers with money and bargains, and the computers won't permit you to buy anything? It was an ugly sight.

The point is, the computers are well again. I'm still tired and have a cough that is hanging on. They'll find a cure for the common cold — when a computer catches one.

In making good impressions, it's the little things that count

Associated Press

Making a good first impression is very important and Ladies' Home Journal offers advice on what to check each morning before dashing out the door.

Be sure every button is buttoned and they are all sewed on securely. Also check for any loose threads.

Wear a neatly ironed and tucked blouse. Completely zip skirt or trousers.

Look to see whether a slip is dipping past the hem of a dress and avoid wearing tops that reveal the lacy details of a bra or camisole. See-through blouses are not appropriate.

Remove any carpet lint stuck to the heels of shoes. Be wary of dandruff or lint that might dot a dark suit.

When putting on earrings, rings or a watch, be sure to fasten them securely. And be sure to wear both earrings.

Clean eyeglasses so they are smudge-free and only wear hose that are free of runs, snags and ankle bags.

DEAR ABBY

Clenched fists might be response to open mouths

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: If someone could compile an accurate statistic of all reported and unreported incidents of men beating up women — say, "Last year, 3,450,785 females were physically abused by their husbands, lovers or boyfriends" — another statistic would say, "In 1987, 3,450,785 males were verbally abused by their wives, lovers or girlfriends"!

While men pound with violent fists, women slash with vicious tongues!

I work in a casino where thousands of people pass by every day. To hear women insult, humiliate and denigrate their men in public is commonplace. (Imagine what they say at home?)

All in nature must balance, so for every man who takes it in the ear, another gives it on the chin. For every woman who whips out her tongue, her sister somewhere gets it in the mouth.

Solution: There are national drives against drugs, alcohol and smoking; one is needed against "anger." How about "No Anger Group" — we could call it NAG. — MR. SORE EARS

DEAR MR. SORE EARS: Anger is a human emotion, and there is nothing wrong with appropriate anger. (To become angry about injustice, prejudice and inequality is appropriate, and, therefore, good.) But if one acts out his anger with violence — that's bad.

Unfortunately, there can be no official statistics of unreported incidents of physical and/or verbal abuse perpetrated by men or women. While neither is desirable, verbal abuse is the lesser of the evils. Ask any victim of physical abuse — male or female.

CONFIDENTIAL TO RUTH IN EL PASO: Thanks for the day brightener: "Life is uncertain. Eat the dessert first."

White blouse is stylish, practical

NEW YORK (AP) — The ubiquitous white blouse, always dependable but seldom fashionable, is making news for fall and winter.

"We've been talking about the bright, white shirt for a couple of years, and now it is making a strong fashion statement that's just beginning to roll," says Marjorie S. Deane, chairman and publisher of Tobe Associates Inc., which publishes the Tobe Report for fashion retailers.

"There are so many ways," she says, "to wear the white shirt — with a short skirt, the new long skirt, or with pants — and so many ways to accessorize a white shirt, that it's a natural to stretch the clothing budget."

The white shirt showed up in nearly every designer collection on both sides of the Atlantic during trade shows last April. From Yves St. Laurent to Calvin Klein and Ralph Lauren, it was shown with a jacket for day and with dressy pants or a skirt for evening.

"The bright, white shirt will now come out from under the jacket," says Deane. "The new shirts are better looking than ever and can stand on their own for career or after-five dressing."

In addition to the well-tailored, crisp shirt, this season offers white blouses with innovative detailing: lace, embroidery, scrolls, tucks and pleats and soutache, a flat decorative braid. More lavish touches include hand-finished flowers and faux pearl and ribbon appliques.

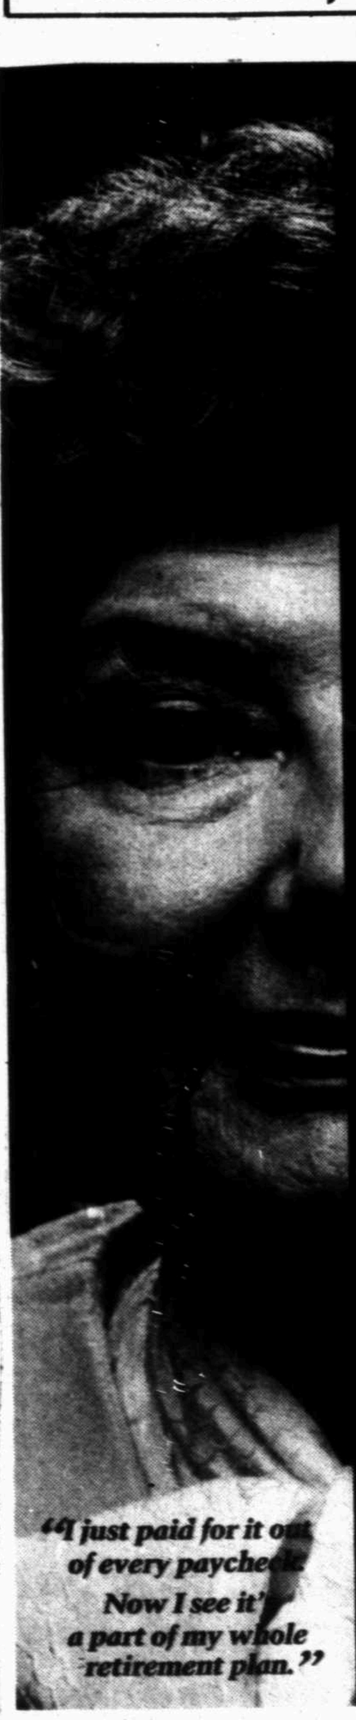

Fabrics are soft, necklines variable. There are high, crushed collars; soft bows; portrait collars; ruffles.

Lucille Klein, fashion director of J.C. Penney, with stores nationwide, says the white shirt will not fade rapidly from the fashion scene.

"I am currently working on fall, 1989," she says, "and soft shirting ... will be a key fashion item. Also, with ... the emergence of the vest as a fashion piece, the white shirt becomes an integral part of dressing."

Midland Lee's Mary Ann Isom (25) battles with Carlsbad's Caryn Craddock for the ball during Monday basketball action.

Ramirez' 24 paces Lee girls past Cavers

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Monica Ramirez scored 16 of her 24 points in the first half to lead Midland Lee to a 54-40 win over Carlsbad, N.M., in non-district girls basketball action Monday at Chaparral Center.

Sound familiar?

After all, Ramirez kept her scoring average at around 25 points per game despite sitting out much of the final three quarters in Coach Shirley Stephenson's revolving-door lineup.

No other Lady Rebel cager has averaged more than eight points a game through the first seven games, but that could change if Monday's game is any indication.

Though Ramirez canned 11 of Lee's 17 field goals, senior forward Leslie Swann hit eight of 10 from the free throw line and senior point guard Gina Navarrette added seven of nine free shots. The Rebs made 20 of 34 from the line as a team.

Stephenson said the Rebels showed signs of shedding their one-dimensional offense. "They can all score.

"Our threats were passing up some shots and throwing it away," she added. "We just weren't doing things on offense."

Ramirez staked Lee to a 10-2 lead by scoring eight points in the first five minutes of the game. Carlsbad ran off six unanswered points to pull within two, but Kim Davis hit a shot at the buzzer to put Lee up by four after the first eight minutes.

The Rebels led by as much as 17 points in the second quarter, but Carlsbad came alive in the third period of their first game this season. The Cavegirls, 0-1, pulled to within four points of the hostesses early in the fourth quarter, but Swann and Navarrette keyed an 8-0 Lee run at the end of the game with two free throws each.

The game was marred by repeated traveling violations by Carlsbad and a third-quarter spell in which Lee could not hang onto the ball.

"There were an awful lot of turnovers," Stephenson said.

Carlsbad coach Kim Merchant said the Cavegirls did all they could to stop Ramirez, who was hitting from up to 10 feet away from the hoop.

Chaparrals gun down Westerners

From Staff Reports

SNYDER — Midland College stunned Western Texas College with a 24-8 opening of their Western Junior College Athletic Conference game here Monday night, but in another of the long shootout traditions between MC and WTC, the game wasn't decided until the final minute.

Midland College came away from the Scurry County Coliseum with a 110-100 victory, but it wasn't easy and it wasn't always pretty. Starting five freshmen, MC coach Reggie Franklin used speed, a frantic defense, and quick hands to stun the Westerners.

Eric Golightly and Fred Campbell eached tossed in early three-point baskets to rock the Westerners back on their heels. With a neat 8-2 record going into the game, WTC backers and second year coach Tony Mauldin thought they had a contending team...and they might.

Franklin decided to hold sophomore point guard Charles "Smokey" McCovery in reserve on the bench. That paid off, since McCovery often gets in early foul trouble as a starter. He responded by leading five Chaps in double figures with 21 after he came in with more than eight minutes gone.

Midland looked to be cruising easily with a 39-20 margin with 5:30 left in the first half. But the Westerners, led by Vladimir McCrary, came back to close the margin to 10 at the half, 51-41.

Hardly had the crowd settled down again before the Chaps were leading 67-45 and seemingly the game was in the bag. And MC fans thought it was assured with Midland ahead by 25 points with 7:20 left, 91-66. But the Westerners kept coming back. And with 1:44 left, WTC had used a couple of turnovers and three-pointers by McCrary and Bernard Williams to cut the lead to seven, 101-94.

McCovery and Kethus Hanks each hit a couple of free throws and Hanks soloed in for a lay-up off a bad pass. Campbell dropped in three free throws and Tim Owens got a lay-up for the Chaps to end the suspense.

For McCovery, it was a super game as he pulled up and hit short jumpers after penetrating the lane. He was 6-of-9 on field goals, not counting one missed three-point attempt. His 9-of-13 from the line also helped.

Owens, who had been pacing the Chaparral scoring, got 18 for the night, while Hanks and Darryl King added 16 each, and Golightly had 11. King gathered in 11 rebounds and Campbell got 10 as the Chaps controlled the boards early.

Krieg air bombs destroy Raiders

SEATTLE (AP) — Steve Largent, pass catcher extraordinaire, says he has never seen Seattle Seahawks quarterback Dave Krieg throw any better.

"I told Dave that during the fourth quarter," Largent said Monday night after Krieg passed for five touchdowns in a 35-27 victory over the Los Angeles Raiders.

"I told him I'd never seen him throw the ball with more confidence and accuracy," said the NFL's multiple record-holding wide receiver.

So how did Krieg respond to Largent?

"I think I could have thrown the ball better sometimes, especially on the interceptions," Krieg said. "The two interceptions stick out in my mind more than the five touchdowns."

Krieg did throw two interceptions in the third quarter as the Raiders took a 27-21 lead, but he threw five touchdown passes in a game for the third time in his nine-year career with the Seahawks, a club record.

Krieg completed touchdown passes of 15 yards to Largent, 6 yards to rookie Brian Blades, 11 yards to Paul Skansi, 7 yards to Curt Warner and 20 yards to Louis Clark. It was Largent's first touchdown catch of the season and Clark's first NFL reception.

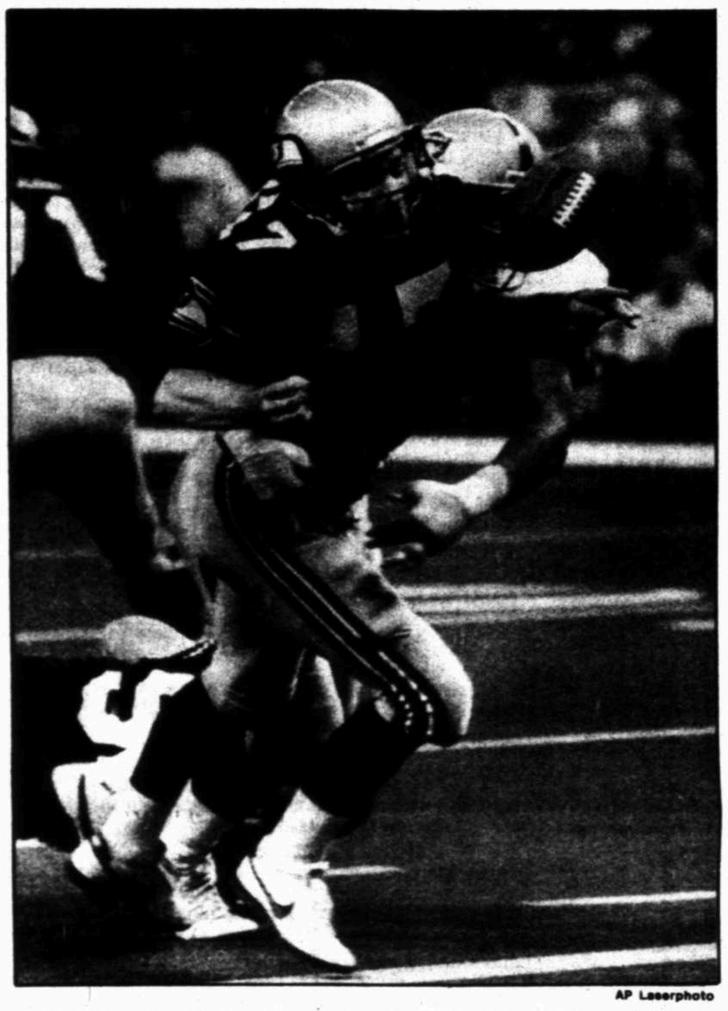

For the first time in the Seahawks' history, they had two men rush for more than 100 yards in a game. Warner gained 130 yards on 27 carries and John L. Williams rushed for 105 yards on 17 carries.

"You've got to give all the credit to our offensive line," said Williams, the Seahawks' fullback. "They created the holes for us to run through."

Bo Jackson, who shredded the Seahawks for 221 yards in a 37-14 Raiders' win in the Kingdome in a Monday night game last November, was held to 31 yards on 13 carries.

"We tackled him," replied Darren Comeaux, who replaced $11-million linebacker Brian Bosworth in Seattle's defense Monday night. Bosworth missed the game because of a sore shoulder.

"Bo likes to go wide on you," added Seahawks' strong safety Paul Moyer. "He's a very tough guy because he's so fast and he's so big (230 pounds). He's as big as some of the linebackers in this league. I think the secret for us tonight was to string him out and gang-tackle him."

AP Laserphoto

Plays like this by Los Angeles Raider Bill Pickel didn't keep Seattle quarterback Dave Krieg (17) from throwing five touchdown passes.

In his third game back after missing seven games because of a separated right shoulder suffered in Week 3 in San Diego, Krieg completed 16 of 28 passes for 220 yards.

"That's what makes it really impressive," Largent said. "Dave Krieg misses all those games and comes back and has this kind of game for us. He was really on the money. He was really outstanding."

The victory allowed the Seahawks, 7-6, to move into a first-place tie with Denver in the AFC West. The Raiders, who started the weekend tied for first place in the division, dropped to 6-7.

"The people who think this is a ho-hum division should have seen this game tonight," Seattle Coach Chuck Knox said.

"We're still in it, but we have to win the next three," said first-year Raiders Coach Mike Shanahan.

The Seahawks, Broncos and the Raiders play each other once in the final three weeks. The Raiders will be at home against Denver next Sunday and the Seahawks will be in New England.

Seattle won on a night when it made five turnovers, had a bunch of dropped passes and couldn't seem to win a decision from instant replay official George Sladky.

West Virginia settles for No. 3 — for now

Associated Press

West Virginia coach Don Nehlen has no quarrel with being ranked No. 3 — for now.

But if the Mountaineers beat No. 1 Notre Dame in the Fiesta Bowl and don't win the national championship, Nehlen will hit the roof.

The Fiesta Bowl may have lined up Notre Dame and West Virginia, the nation's only unbeaten teams (both are 11-0), but a war of words between West Virginia and second-ranked Miami is under way.

"If West Virginia was to move above us, as long as we continue to win, that would be the last time you'd hear me talk about the credibility of the polls," Miami coach Jimmy Johnson said Monday. "I would become a strong proponent for the playoff system, because I would say the polls are ridiculous if that happened."

"I love Jimmy Johnson," Nehlen replied, "but he's just trying to plant some seeds, that crafty little turkey. If I were coaching Miami I'd be doing the same thing. But he's got to understand that the winner of the Fiesta Bowl should be the national champion."

The argument will become academic if Notre Dame beats West Virginia. And the Irish, fresh from a 27-10 victory over Southern California in Saturday's 1-2 shootout, were a near-unanimous choice as the nation's top college football team Monday in the Associated Press' next-to-last regular-season poll.

The setback dropped Southern Cal from second place to fifth and cost the Trojans their shot at the national championship.

Defending national champion Miami, an 18-16 winner over previously unbeaten Arkansas, moved up from third place to second and West Virginia jumped from fourth to third. It was the Mountaineers' highest ranking ever in the AP poll's 53-year history.

Notre Dame, No. 1 for the fifth consecutive week, received 57 of 60 first-place votes and 1,197 of a possible 1,200 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters.

Miami, whose only loss was 31-30 at Notre Dame when the Hurricanes disdained a tie with 45 seconds left and tried a two-point conversion pass that failed, received one first-place vote and 1,124 points. The Hurricanes, 9-1, conclude their regular season Saturday night against Brigham Young.

The other two first-place votes went to West Virginia, which totaled 1,069 points.

"I hope West Virginia beats Notre Dame," Johnson said. "If West Virginia beats Notre Dame, it means they've beaten two teams ranked in the Top Twenty (West Virginia beat Syracuse 31-9 on Nov. 19).

"Now, let's compare schedules. We beat the preseason number one (Florida State 31-0), we lost by a point to the current No. 1 — and we lost control of our destiny when we didn't kick the extra point — we beat the Big Ten champions (Michigan 31-30), the co-champions of the Southeastern Conference (LSU 44-3) and the champions of the Southwest Conference (Arkansas) and we're playing the champions of the Big Eight (Nebraska) in the Orange Bowl.

"If that's the case (West Virginia winding up No. 1), then everybody should have a weak schedule and play one big game at the end for the national championship. We're going to play five teams in the Top Ten. Let somebody else play five teams in the Top Ten (actually, this week's top 11) and see what their record is.

Rankin's Devils still undefeated

Grimes

And then there was one...

While we were going on and on about Purple Packs, Maroon Platoons and Greenwood Rangers, the Rankin Red Devils lay in wait.

With little fanfare, the Red Devils rolled up an undefeated regular season record. Two playoff wins later, Coach Troy Kennedy's team is the only MRT area team left in the playoffs.

(Yeah, I know Mojo's still in the hunt, but everybody knows we just sort of adopt them at playoff time.)

The Red Devils face White Deer at 7:30 p.m. Saturday in Levelland. While Rankin was beating Follett 28-7, White Deer edged past Garden City 21-20. Rankin beat Garden City by 20 points several weeks ago.

Does that mean that the Devils are a lock to play the Lindsay-Rotan winner in state semifinal action next week? I think not.

In all likelihood, Rankin has to play very, very well to beat White Deer. The Bucks are big, strong and moderately fast.

We'll get this pick out of the way early. I may be picking with my heart, but I think two things will be apparent in Levelland Saturday.

One, Rankin will get a big play or two against the Bucks. Two, you can bet the farm that White Deer quarterback Bart Thomas won't be able to get around end like he did against Garden City.

Of course, there's always the remote possibility that some Class A player can keep up with Rankin receiver James Watson. Or maybe Red Devil QB Doug Braden won't get the ball to him — another dim chance.

White Deer has a good team. Very, very good. But here's saying Rankin will be a shade better, at least on this day. Rankin 13, White Deer 13. (Rankin wins on penetrations.)

It looked sort of grim at halftime of the Garden City-White Deer game when Bearkat wide receiver Jodie Scott was carried off the field on a stretcher at halftime.

He was on the basketball court Monday morning, though. Turned out that Jodie had internal bruises and contusions which caused his stomach to swell, and in turn created excruciating pain.

Okay, enough of this serious stuff. What I really want to know is why Rankin and White Deer agreed to ruin another weekend night for me by making me drive to Levelland Saturday night.

I realize that there may have been a field conflict. Didn't South Plains College have a junior college playoff game against the University of New Jersey JV?

Still, I think all would have been better served by playing Saturday afternoon. What's going to happen if a front blows through and it's five degrees on the field at the end of the game?

A lot of people are going to get cold. And there won't be any sun to warm them up.

Former Chaparral Pookey Wigington
...wins one for the Pirates

Wigington key to victory

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — Kansas Coach Roy Williams said it best:

"The smallest player on the court had the biggest impact on the game."

Former Midland College player Pookey Wigington, Seton Hall's 5-foot-4 reserve guard, ignited a second-half surge that lifted the Pirates to a 92-81 victory over Kansas Monday night in the championship game of the Great Alaska Shootout.

"Pookey won the game. There's no question about that," Seton Hall coach P.J. Carlesimo said. "We were struggling. He got us going."

The Big East Conference team, 3-0, trailed 54-53 with 15:08 remaining but went on a 12-4 run to take command 65-58 when Wigington stole the ball from Kansas' Kevin Pritchard, was fouled and made both free throws.

Wigington, who has had two operations on his right knee and has to have it drained before and after every game, said his team has something to prove.

"They picked us for seventh in the Big East," he said. "We think we're better than that."

Wigington, playing because starter Gerald Greene was in early foul trouble, finished with nine points, including 7 of 7 free throws, seven sssists and three steals.

Kansas, the 1988 national champion, banned from post-season play for recruiting violations, was within 70-64 with 8:29 to play.

But the Pirates scored seven straight points, including a three-point play by Wigington, to make it 77-64 with 6:22 to go. The Jayhawks, 2-1, never threatened again.

"Until tonight, I thought we'd executed well down the stretch," Williams said. "We didn't do that tonight as well as we have been."

Rice comeback fails; Aggies win

Associated Press

Rice Coach Scott Thompson says the Owls did a good job of fighting back after they fell behind Mississippi State, but Rice fell short of completing the comeback.

In the other non-conference game involving a Southwest Conference team Monday night, Texas A&M rolled to an easy 117-88 victory over Stephen F. Austin at Nacogdoches.

The Rice comeback bid ended when Robert Woodard hit a 10-foot jumper with 20 seconds left to give Mississippi State a 63-61 victory.

Cameron Burns scored 13 for the Bulldogs and Woodard finished with 11.

SWC Basketball

"I felt we did a good job fighting back," Thompson said. "The guys got themselves down and we fought back."

MSU shot 45.5 percent from the field in the game to 50.9 for Rice, but MSU outrebounded Rice, 35-27, and got ten more free throw attempts, 15-5.

The Bulldogs are 1-0, while Rice falls to 0-2 with a second straight road loss.

Tony Milton scored 29 points and teammate Donald Thompson added 28 to lead Texas A&M to a record-breaking victory over the Lumberjacks.

The 117 point performance was also the most scored by the Aggies since 1985 when they scored a 102-78 win over Baylor.

The Aggies rallied back from a 9-point deficit to lead 47-45 at the half. Thompson's 18 first half points helped pace the Aggies in their comeback.

The Lumberjacks jumped out to a 7-0 lead before Milton hit a free throw with 16:06 on the clock in the first half.

The Lumberjacks' lead widened to nine with just over three minutes to play when the Aggies went on a 15-4 scoring spree.

Scott Dimak finished with 28 points to lead Stephen F. Austin.

Texas A&M is 3-1 while SFA is 0-1.

Loyola sets record with 164 points

Associated Press

Loyola Marymount led the NCAA in scoring last season.

This season, it didn't take long for the Lions' offense to enter the NCAA record book.

Loyola, which led NCAA Division I in scoring last season with a 110.3 average, beat Azusa Pacific 164-138 Monday night, tying the NCAA record for points scored by a Division I team against a non-Division I opponent.

Nevada-Las Vegas set the record in a 164-111 victory over Hawaii-Hilo on Feb. 19, 1976.

"It was a first game," Loyola coach Paul Westhead said after the Lions' opener. "You're just trying to get a feel of where you are, who's healthy and who's fit.

The 302 points set an NCAA record for a game involving a Division I team. The previous record for a non-overtime game was 275 in Nevada-Las Vegas' victory over Hawaii-Hilo. The record including overtime was 282 in Nevada-Las Vegas' 142-140 triple-overtime victory over Utah State on Jan. 2, 1985.

Hank Gathers scored 33 points and grabbed 12 rebounds for Loyola and Jeff Fryer scored 27. Enoch Simmons had 21 points and six assists for the Lions, who had six players in double figures.

"It was clear that Simmons, Gathers and Fryer were fit, though they had had some injury problems," Westhead said. "We need three or four more games before we're tuned up."

Loyola took a 8-0 lead in the opening 38 seconds. The Lions led 32-8 after 4:07 of play and 82-58 at halftime, four short of the record for points in a half.

College Top 20

The Lions made 16 of 35 3-point attempts. Mark Moses scored 37 points for Azusa Pacific, 2-1, an NAIA school.

No. 4 Syracuse 91, Cornell 66

Stephen Thompson scored 18 points and Derrick Coleman 17 as Syracuse, 5-0, beat Cornell for the 20th consecutive time since 1968.

The Orangemen made their first six shots and shot 68 percent in the first half, taking a 45-31 lead. Syracuse opened the second half with a 12-4 spurt.

Josh Wexler and Shawn Maharaj scored 12 points each for Cornell, 1-1.

No. 8 Missouri 97, Tenn.-Martin 55

Byron Irvin scored 18 points and Tennessee-Martin scored 21 points in the second half.

Paul Huff's 3-pointer pulled the Pacers to 21-20 with 9:22 remaining in first half. Gary Leonard made two free throws to start a 12-0 run and Missouri, 4-1, led 46-35 at halftime.

Kevin Thomas scored 16 points for Tennessee-Martin, 2-2.

No. 10 North Carolina 87, Stanford 76

Jeff Lebo scored 24 points and Kevin Madden scored six points in a 13-2 go-ahead run in the second half.

Lebo made a 3-point jumper that started the run and gave the Tar Heels a 51-49 lead with 15:33 left. Madden, who finished with 16 points, then made the next three baskets.

North Carolina, 4-1, led as much as 76-62. Stanford, 1-2, closed within eight points several times but got no closer. Todd Lichti scored 20 points for Stanford.

No. 12 Georgia Tech 95, Coastal Carolina 65

Dennis Scott made six 3-pointers in the first half as the Yellow Jackets, 2-0, took a 10-0 lead and built a 42-26 halftime margin. Scott finished with 25 points, including seven 3-pointers.

In the second half, Georgia Tech pulled away with runs of 10-0 and 15-0 and led by as many as 37 points.

No. 16 N. Carolina St. 87, Akron 67

Rodney Monroe scored 26 points and Avie Lester 22 for North Carolina State, 2-0, which struggled in the first half.

The Wolfpack led 41-39 at halftime. Monroe scored seven points during a 12-2 run early in the second half, including a 3-pointer that put the Wolfpack ahead 50-47.

Eric McLaughlin scored 22 points for Akron, 1-1.

No. 20 Tennessee 84, Mississippi 76

Dyron Nix and Mark Griffin scored 24 points each for Tennessee, which enterted the Top Twenty this week. Griffin was 6-for-7 on 3-pointers.

Tennessee, 2-0, led 39-27 at halftime and opened the second half with a 13-4 run. After Mississippi closed, the Volunteers converted both ends of one-and-one free-throws situations four times in the final 30 seconds.

Gerald Glass scored 38 points for Mississppi, 1-2.

Arkansas St. rips ACU, 110-45

JONESBORO, Ark. (AP) — Greg Williams and Barry Mayberry scored 23 points each and three other Arkansas State University players scored in double figures as the Indians rolled over Abilene Christian, 110-45, on Monday.

Arkansas State, now 1-1, jumped to a 16-2 advantage and was never in any trouble against the youthful Wildcats, who fell to 0-5. The Wildcats have lost four games in four days.

Williams, 6-foot-9, 260 pounds, hit 10 of 15 shots from the floor and also led all rebounders with 12.

TV stations says Sherrill will resign

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — A Lubbock television station reported Monday night that Coach Sherrill plans to resign after the Alabama game. KAMC-TV cited an anonymous source in the Texas A&M athletic department who said Sherrill told his assistant coaches of his decision in a meeting this week.

But a Texas A&M spokesman denied the station's report.

"We heard about this report," said spokesman Lane Stephenson. "I talked to President (William) Mobley and told him of (it). He has no knowledge of that. Coach Sherrill has not submitted his resignation to him."

The NCAA says it will watch closely what Texas A&M, preparing for Thursday's game against Alabama, uncovers in an investigation into allegations about possible football rules violations.

But the National Collegiate Athletic Association is not yet conducting an investigation of its own, instead reserving the right to do so in the future, David Berst, NCAA enforcement director, told The Associated Press Monday night.

Texas A&M already is on probation following an NCAA investigation that resulted in the Aggies being declared ineligible for the 1988 Southwest Conference football championship and any post-season bowl. A&M also lost five scholarships for the upcoming recruiting year.

"At this point, we will monitor the information as it develops with the institution and communicate directly with them," Berst said from his home in Mission, Kan.

"We have confidence that they (Texas A&M) will vigorously investigate the matter. We retain the authority to conduct our own investigation."

The Dallas Morning News earlier this month quoted former player George Smith as saying he had accepted $4,400 in "hush money" from Sherrill during an NCAA inquiry.

Later, Smith said at a news conference that he had lied to make money off a book.

"I want to work with the institution and bring this to a resolution," Berst said. "We won't be down there (at College Station). We will certainly have access to what the institution gets, though. But we will not be conducting inquiries at this point."

Los Angeles Laker Kareem Abdul-Jabbar ...a sendoff from former Sixer Julius Erving

Goodbye show turns to Magic

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A sellout crowd came to honor Kareem Abdul-Jabbar when the Los Angeles Lakers played the Philadelphia 76ers, but they came away talking about Magic Johnson.

Johnson scored 32 points, gave out 20 assists and grabbed 11 rebounds to lead the Lakers to a 109-104 victory over the Sixers in the only NBA game Monday night.

The triple-double was only the second in the NBA this season. Johnson also accomplished one Nov. 22 against New York.

NBA

Johnson took over the game after the Sixers had taken their first lead of the night, 95-94, with 4:14 to play.

"I go into my offensive game at that time," said Johnson, who first tossed in a 3-point shot and scored 10 of the Lakers' last 13 points, while Philadelphia was scoring only five.

"I look for myself late in the game in addition to the other guys," he said. "I become much more aggressive. It's myself first, and the other guys second."

That strategy is fine with Lakers coach Pat Riley.

"I just tell him, 'Win. Be as great as you are. You don't want to be miserable after the game, so just win,'" Riley said.

The Lakers led by as many as 15 points in the first quarter and had a 93-83 lead with 8:23 to go. Charles Barkely and Hersey Hawkins then led a 10-0 Philadelphia spurt to tie the score at 93-93 with 4:41 remaining.

"They will be a tough team all year long," Johnson said of the 76ers. "They are not just walking the ball up the floor anymore. They are not a one-dimensional team, just looking for Charles Barkley."

The loss broke a four-game winning streak by the Sixers and dropped them into a first-place tie in the Atlantic Division with the New York Knicks.

Barkley had 31 points and 23 rebounds, but he missed nine of 14 free throws and blamed himself for the loss.

"The big difference was the missed free throws," he said. "It's so frustrating for me to miss so many foul shots. Any time I feel like I didn't do my best, it hurts. I played hard, but not well enough."

Philadelphia made only 19 of 34 free throws.

"I felt we hurt ourselves badly at the foul line," 76ers coach Jim Lynam said.

The Sixers went into the game without forward Cliff Robinson, who aggravated soreness in his left knee during warmups and didn't suit up. Guard Gerald Henderson, who has a sprained ankle, dressed but did not play.

Philadelphia also lost Maurice Cheeks, who reinjured a pulled groin muscle with just under six minutes to play, taking him out of action during the stretch run.

Tech leaves two home

LUBBOCK (AP) — Two Texas Tech football starters will not go to Japan this weekend to participate in a contest against Oklahoma State, school officials said Monday in what they called a disciplinary move.

Sexual assault charges were filed last week against Merv Scurlark and Eddy Anderson, authorities said.

Anderson, a senior split end from Dallas, and Scurlark, a senior free safety from Monahans, had been scheduled to travel to Tokyo Tuesday to play in the Coca-Cola Bowl on Dec. 4.

"The Texas Tech Athletics Department will not travel Eddy Anderson and Merv Scurlark to Tokyo, Japan, to play in this weekend's Coca-Cola Bowl against Oklahoma State," Tech spokesman Joe Hornaday said

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Establish a home base you can settle into and nothing will stand between you and success. Once you begin to handle investments in a realistic way, you will have the cash you need for a pet project. Travel will replenish you emotionally. Studying a favorite subject inspires you to make some important decisions. You find you could do quite nicely in sales. A promotion is likely.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: entrepreneur Dick Clark, British statesman Winston Churchill, actor Richard Crenna, former congresswoman Shirley Chisholm, security expert G. Gordon Liddy, actress Virginia Mayo, author Samuel Clemens (Mark Twain).

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Avoid acting impulsively in your personal and financial dealings. Postpone signing contracts. A social affair may prove more interesting than you anticipated. Romance begins a new chapter.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Postpone starting a new project while you catch up on routine tasks. Bring any creative ideas to the attention of those at the top. Check travel arrangements for a holiday vacation.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Legal documents and important correspondence are in the spotlight. Seek variety and growth. A quick trip could prove successful. A new phase in your domestic life requires compromises. Be flexible.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Unusual mental rapport could lead to a new business or romantic alliance. An old grievance is finally settled to your satisfaction. Try not to gloat. Listen to the concerns of your offspring.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not neglect your creative talents. Guard both your reputation and your valuables today. Attempts to make "easy money" will be thwarted. A trusted ally has the answer to a recurring problem.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A good day to drum up new financial support for difficult projects. Tact and diplomacy are your strongest allies. Certain family traditions could hinder personal growth. Compromise is possible.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Others may not be as punctual or practical as you. Confidential information reaches you by a strange route. Doubt its validity until you have a chance to check it out.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Discard outdated ideas and methods, and start something new today. Homemakers discover how to make money from their artistic projects. You need not prove yourself to a current love. Be yourself.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A friend you help get a job will return the favor. Begin a self-improvement program. Meeting challenges enhances your status at work. An apology could convince a former flame to return.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your inventive mind hits on a plan to get out of a rut. Night school courses could increase your earning power. Go that extra mile in romance, business or friendship! Loved ones applaud.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) A "crisis" is not as bad as it seems. Last-ditch efforts can succeed. You assume control in a relationship, but there are pitfalls. A major purchase will ease housekeeping shores. Avoid wasting time.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Press for that raise or bonus. Those who do not speak up will be forgotten. Follow up a financial hunch — it could lead to new business.

All those wise saws and scholarly rubrics you learned at your mother's knee cover general situations. Any specific deal could call for one of them to be broken.

We are not sure we like a jump shift on the North hand despite its point count. Not that it made any difference to the final contract, which was reasonable.

West led the king of hearts and, in response to his partner's encouraging signal, continued with a low heart. East took his ace and returned the nine of hearts to his partner's ten. West shifted to a club.

Declarer won, cashed the king of spades and returned to dummy with a diamond. When the queen of trumps appeared on the next lead of the suit, declarer could claim the rest of the tricks.

West's defense was, to say the least, lackluster. One look at dummy was all he should have needed to convince himself that the defenders were not going to collect any tricks in the minor suits. Therefore, the setting trick, if there was one, would have to come from trumps.

A secondary trump honor in the East hand, on its own, would not be enough—it would be ripe for decapitation via a successful finesse. But combined with West's ten, it would pose a powerful threat.

We were all taught not to give declarer a ruff-and-discard, but here it could not harm, only help. West should have continued with his last heart. The fact that his partner was giving declarer a ruff-sluff should be a clear signal to East that he must ruff as high as he possibly can—in this case, with the queen. Declarer can overruff, but West's ten would then be promoted to the setting trick. Borrowing a term from pugilism, this play is known as an uppercut.

Carradine had completed 502nd film

MILAN, Italy (AP) — John Carradine, the American actor known for his roles in horror films, whispered "Milan, what a beautiful place to die" moments before succumbing to heart and kidney failure, a son said Monday.

The 82-year-old actor with a Mephistophelean face and a deep voice died Sunday at a Milan hospital. He had been hospitalized since Thursday.

Carradine

Actor David Carradine said his father was stricken Thursday, hours after climbing the 328 steps to the top of the Duomo, Milan's gothic cathedral.

David and his brother, fellow actor Keith Carradine, flew to Milan from Los Angeles on Sunday after learning their father had been hospitalized. David Carradine said his father already was in serious condition when they arrived, but that he was happy to have been with him during the last hours of his life.

Doctors at Milan's Fatebenefratelli hospital said John Carradine, who appeared in more than 500 films, died of natural causes.

John Carradine had traveled to Italy to begin a European tour after completing shooting of his latest movie — his 502nd — in South Africa.

A family friend said the body possibly would be flown to Los Angeles, via New York, on Wednesday.

"We plan a strictly private funeral service in L.A. and a public memorial service in St. Thomas Episcopal Church ... then we will drink, cry and dance and his ashes will be cast into the sea. All his sons will be there," said David Carradine.

He said the date of the funeral has not been set.

David Carradine, best known for playing a half-Chinese priest in the television show "Kung Fu," is one of the acting sons of John Carradine. The others are Robert, who arrived in Milan Monday night, Keith and Bruce. Only Christopher Carradine, an architect, is not an actor.

LONDON (AP) — A Japanese department store bought Pablo Picasso's "Acrobat and Young Harlequin" for $38.46 million Monday night at Christie's, the highest price ever paid at auction for a 20th century work of art.

The painting was purchased by the Mitsukoshi Department Store, store spokesman Yasuhiro Tanaka said in Tokyo.

"We bought the painting expecting to sell it to a private buyer here in Tokyo," Tanaka said. Mitsukoshi, a major importer of art, has not yet decided on specific plans for the display or sale of the painting, Tanaka said.

WASHINGTON (HNS) — Lee Belser, veteran news reporter and former Hollywood correspondent with the Hearst Newspapers and wire services, died Saturday at the National Cancer Institute following a long illness. She was 73.

Belser, a native of Martinsburg, W. Va., became well known in the 1950s and 1960s for her offbeat daily columns from Hollywood.

She knew and wrote about such legendary stars as Humphrey Bogart, Clark Gable, Marilyn Monroe, Rock Hudson, Gary Cooper and Joan Crawford. Her columns and news stories were distributed worldwide by Hearst's International News Service.

A crime buff, Belser also was noted for her tireless coverage of famous murder cases including the three trials of Dr. Bernard Finch and his companion, Carole Tregoff, both convicted in 1961 for slaying the doctor's wife, and the trial of Jack Ruby, who killed John Kennedy's assassin, Lee Harvey Oswald.

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor Tom Cruise says working with veteran actors such as Paul Newman and Dustin Hoffman is a learning experience.

"What you get from great actors like Newman and Hoffman is where to focus your energies and what to worry about and what not to worry about," Cruise said. "Because as a young actor, you're worried about everything."

Cruise

Cruise, 26, starred with Newman in "The Color of Money," and with Hoffman in the to-be-released "Rain Man."

In "Rain Man," the 51-year-old Hoffman plays an autistic man with remarkable powers of memory and a $3 million inheritance. Cruise plays his brother, who wants the money.

Hoffman, known as a hard-working perfectionist on a movie set, says Cruise is equally driven.

"He's a demon. He gets up early, he works out, he goes home early, he studies, he works out again at night. ... And he always wanted to rehearse," Hoffman said in December's Gentlemen's Quarterly.

NEW YORK (AP) — Tahnee Welch says it was difficult growing up as the child of a sex symbol, but she doesn't fault her mother, Raquel.

"She's a hard worker. She's always taken care of herself. My mother has never, never, never been supported by anyone," the 26-year-old Welch said. "So I had it in my mind that I had to do it myself. I have this pride."

Welch

The younger Welch insists she won her part in the 1985 film, "Cocoon," on merit, not because of her mother. Welch also appears in the recently released "Cocoon: The Return."

LONDON (AP) — The Duke and Duchess of York picked the historic Chapel Royal in London's St. James Palace for the Dec. 20 christening of their infant daughter, Princess Beatrice.

The chapel was the site of the wedding of Queen Victoria and Prince Albert in 1840 and where royal christenings occasionally have taken place.

Princess Beatrice Elizabeth Mary, fifth in line to the throne and the fifth grandchild of Queen Elizabeth II, will wear the royal family's christening robe of Honiton lace and will be baptized at the silver gilt Lily Font, Buckingham Palace said Monday.

Princess Beatrice, born Aug. 8, is the first child of Prince Andrew, the queen's second son, and the former Sarah Ferguson.

NEW YORK (AP) — Doubleday has acquired the English publishing rights to 14 books by Naguib Mahfouz, the Egyptian writer who won the 1988 Nobel Prize in literature, and to a book on architecture by Britain's Prince Charles.

Jacqueline Onassis, a Doubleday editor, and Alberto Vitale, president and chief executive officer of the Bantam Doubleday Dell Publishing Group, who lived in Egypt for many years, acquired the rights to Mahfouz's works from The American University in Cairo Press, the publishing house said.

Economic growth slowest since 1986

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. economy, held back by the summer drought, expanded at a moderate 2.6 percent annual rate in the July-September quarter, the government said today.

The Commerce Department said the performance of the gross national product, the broadest measure of economic health, slowed in the third quarter after growing at an annual rate of 3.2 percent during the first six months of the year.

It was the slowest pace since the fourth quarter of 1986, when the economy grew at a sluggish 1.4 percent rate.

The report, however, represents an upward revision from a preliminary estimate last month, which pegged growth at 2.2 percent.

The department attributed the revision to a higher-than-expected rise in personal consumption expenditures, which account for nearly two-thirds of economic activity. They rose at an annual rate of 4 percent in the third quarter, compared with an earlier estimate of 3.5 percent.

Also, non-farm business inventories grew faster than originally thought. However, this could be a source of weakness in the future if consumer demand slackens and manufacturers have to cut production as the inventories are sold off.

A price index tied to the GNP also proved more brisk than was first estimated. The index, which reflects changing consumption patterns as well as prices, rose at an annual rate of 4.7 percent, up from the first estimate of 4.4 percent. The second quarter soared at an even faster 5.5 percent, the highest in nearly six years.

The revisions to the GNP were about in line with economists' expectations and fit in with anticipation in the market that the Federal Reserve Board will soon move to curb inflation by dampening growth with higher interest rates.

Major banks on Monday raised their prime lending rate to 10.5 percent, the highest level since mid-1985. Economists expect a new round of increases as the Fed tries to restrain growth to a non-inflationary pace of 2 percent to 2.5 percent.

The Fed pushed up interest rates steadily from late March through early August. For a time, it appeared the medicine was taking hold. A number of statistical reports showed slower growth in August and September.

Government numbers released over the last three weeks, however, portray robust growth in October, the first month of the fourth quarter.

Regulators rewriting thrift rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal regulators are writing new rules designed to make savings and loan failures less likely and let the government step in before losses get out of hand when an institution does go under.

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board, which oversees the nation's 3,028 federally insured S&Ls, on Monday proposed an "early intervention" plan that would permit it to install new management before an institution actually becomes insolvent.

It is also considering regulations requiring institutions with riskier real estate and commercial investments to hold more capital, or reserve funds, than institutions investing mostly in residential mortgages, the traditional mainstay of the thrift industry.

The proposals "seek to prevent problems before they arise and to resolve those that arise before they cost ... significant sums," bank board Chairman M. Danny Wall said in a statement.

A draft of the new rules will be formally issued in about two weeks by the board, which will allow 90 days for public comment before taking final action.

Capital is the difference between an institution's loans and other assets and its deposits and other liabilities. An institution's losses come out of its capital. Thus, S&Ls with more capital are less likely to fail and require rescue by the government deposit insurance fund.

The industry's capital level has fallen dramatically during the 1980s. Early in the decade, high interest rates ate into profits. Later, the collapse of oil prices and Southwestern real estate pushed many S&Ls into the red. Critics say lax capital standards made the problem worse.

Bank board officials say capital at the typical, or median, institution was 5.6 percent in 1980, fell to a low of 3.5 percent in 1984 and has since rebounded to 5.2 percent.

The new risk-based rule would require capital of 8 percent by January 1993. The current goal is 6 percent, with no fixed date set for reaching that.

Railroad Commissioner Kent Hance

Hance: OPEC accord staves off tax increase

AUSTIN (AP) — The new OPEC oil accord just may have staved off legislative consideration of a state tax increase next year, says Texas Railroad Commissioner Kent Hance.

"This is certainly good news, not only for the goveror's office but other state officials in ... Texas, including the representatives and senators. It takes a lot of the heat off of them in the next legislative session," Hance said Monday.

Hance, who spent a week at the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries meeting in Vienna, Austria, said the agreement by OPEC oil ministers to cut production would be a "big plus" in helping to turn around the Texas economy.

Hance told a news conference his third OPEC meeting included visits with oil ministers from eight of the 13 countries. All members of the cartel signed the accord, which sets a target price of $18 a barrel, although crude has been selling at $14 a barrel and less.

"This is not going to be a boon for the energy industry in Texas. But it's certainly not going to be a bust," Hance said. "I think it will allow drilling activity to pick up again. I think we should see prices in the $16-$18 range in the next six to eight weeks."

Without an agreement, he said, prices could fall to $8 to $10 a barrel, "and that would have devastated our economy."

Another railroad commissioner, John Sharp, said, "The recent see-saw deliberations of OPEC only show how powerless this country is to control its own energy future."

"The American economy as well as the Texas energy economy are held hostage to a handful of foreign oil ministers unless and until we take control of our own destiny either through an oil import fee, a floor price for imported oil, or we displace foreign oil with America's fuel, natural gas," Sharp said in a statement.

Forbes ranks Texas second in large firms

DALLAS (AP) — A ranking by Forbes Magazine of headquarters for the 400 largest private companies lists Texas as second in number among all 50 states, reports the magazine in an upcoming issue.

Forbes' list this year includes 40 companies based in Texas. The magazine said Dallas has 23, the most in the state.

Another six companies are in Houston, while three are based in San Antonio and two are headquartered in Fort Worth.

The magazine says Austin, Coppell, Lubbock, Sulphur Springs, Temple and Tyler each are the headquarters for one of the top-400 private companies.

The rankings were listed by Forbes in its Dec. 12 issue.

New York state, which has 68 company headquarters, was ranked above Texas. California placed third, with 34 of the firms' headquarters.

Individual cities were also ranked in the magazine. Leading the list was New York City, followed by Chicago in second place and Dallas in third.

Houston, the other Texas city in the top 10, shared sixth place with Detroit and Minneapolis.

Texas-based companies making the Forbes list this year that were not on it in 1987 are Tracor in Austin; Southland, Cullum Co., Epic Healthcare Group, MorningStar Foods, Placid Oil, Dr Pepper-Seven Up and Hallmark Electronics in Dallas; White Swan and AFG Industries in Fort Worth and Safeway Texas Division in Houston.

Total revenues of the 400 largest private companies in the nation increased about 17 percent, from $449 billion to $523 billion in the past year, the magazine reported.

The following are companies by Texas cities and rank by sales:

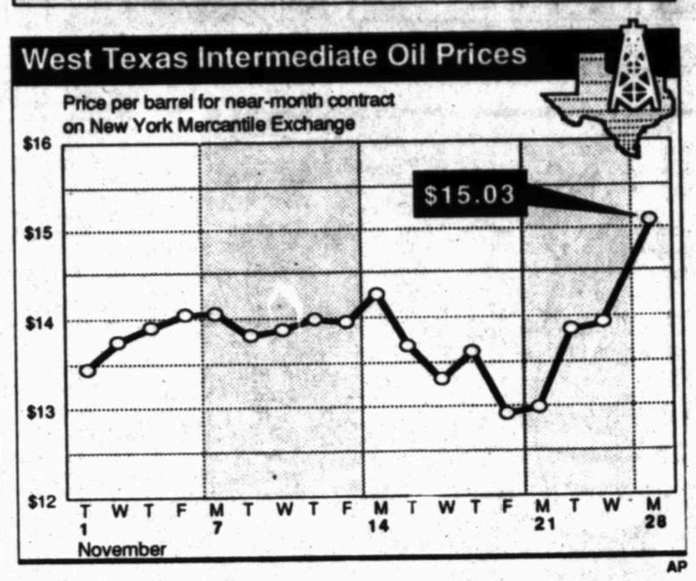

Dallas: Southland (6), Trammell Crow (90), Sammons Enterprises (98), LaSalle Energy (115), Lincoln Property (118), Cullum Co. (126), Epic Healthcare Group (165), MorningStar Foods (167) and GLI Holding (173).

Other Dallas firms are Hunt Consolidated (178), Paragon Group (202), Lennox International (205), First Texas Financial (224), Placid Oil (230), JM Petroleum (269), HCB Contractors

Futures price quiet after wild day

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil futures were quiet this morning in sharp contrast to Monday when they jumped nearly $2 a barrel before losing about half their gains after OPEC members announced an agreement to limit crude production and drive up sagging worldwide prices.

Oil futures contracts traded on the New York Mercantile Exchange fell off their highs for the session after the oil minister of the United Arab Emirates said the output level set in the accord was not his official ceiling.

At 11 a.m. (EST) on the New York Mercantile Exchange, the January contract for West Texas Intermediate was trading at $15.02, off a penny from Monday's settlement price of $15.03 a barrel, which was up $1.06 from Wednesday's close. The contract traded as high as $15.80 a barrel during Monday's session.

Dollar mixed in narrow range

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was mixed and trading in a narrow range in Europe today. Gold prices fell.

Foreign currency dealers said trading was light because of expectations the U.S. Federal Reserve will raise interest rates. Dealers said the market was also waiting for Friday's scheduled release of U.S. unemployment statistics for November.

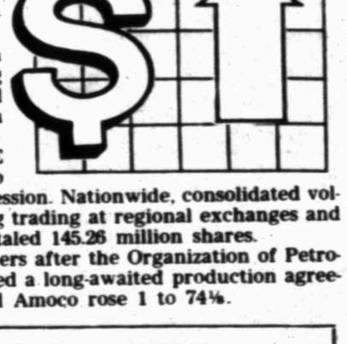

In Tokyo, the dollar rose 0.15 yen to a closing 122.15 following reported Bank of Japan intervention. Later, in London, it was quoted at 121.83 yen.

In London, one British pound cost $1.8430, more expensive for buyers than late Monday's $1.8385.

Gold prices were lower in quiet trading. Bullion dealers said the market was seeking new direction following the price and production agreement by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries on Monday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $422.50 a troy ounce, down from $423.85 bid late Monday. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $422.10.

Dow posts marginal gain after hike

NEW YORK (AP) — Prices were little changed in quiet trading on Wall Street Monday after major banks raised their prime lending rates.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 6.76 to 2,081.44.

Advancing issues were about even with decliners in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 710 issues up, 726 down and 521 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the NYSE came to 123.48 million shares, up from 72.09 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trading at regional exchanges and on the over-the-counter market, totaled 145.26 million shares.

Oil prices were among other gainers after the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries announced a long-awaited production agreement. Mobil was up ½ to 44⅛ and Amoco rose 1 to 74⅛.

Judge stalls Popeyes bid for Church's

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A federal judge Monday temporarily halted an attempt by Popeyes Famous Fried Chicken to take over Church's Fried Chicken.

U.S. District Judge Chrles Schwartz said New Orleans-based Popeyes would have to turn over certain information regarding its takeover attempt before the transaction could be allowed to continue.

Popeyes attorney Peter Butler said he was delighted with the ruling, even though it granted an injunction sought by Church's, which is fighting the $8-a-share, $290 million offer Popeyes has made to Church's shareholders.

"These are very minor items the court is asking for disclosure on. We hope to have answered every point within a day or two and proceed with the offer," he said.

El Paso insurer put into receivership

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — The State Board of Insurance will place First Service Life Insurance Co. of El Paso into receivership, the board said Monday.

About 150 investors had placed $83 million into the company, and they are expected to get about 8 cents on the dollar. The company, which was operated by El Paso car dealer Maury Kemp before he handed the reins to the insurance board, was not licensed or insured in Texas.

The state said the action, which is virtually a liquidation, was necessary because of the "hopeless insolvency of First Service and the inability to implement a successful rehabilitation plan."

Midland retailers expecting merry Christmas

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

The ringing of cash registers mixed with Salvation Army bells, Christmas carols and Santa's ho-hohos as the Christmas shopping season got underway over the weekend.

The day after Thanksgiving traditionally is the busiest shopping day of the year as shoppers begin searching for that perfect Christmas gift. A survey of local retailers by the Reporter-Telegram indicated this year was no exception as Midlanders flocked to the stores.

"I was really surprised," said John Haupert, manager of the two Dillard's stores in Midland Park Mall. "Friday was really busy and we had a big increase (over 1987). Saturday was a little less busy but still an increase over last year. If those two days are any indicator, we're going to have a good season."

He estimated that traffic last weekend was up 8 percent over last year, and the new store, located in the former Sakowitz location, was a definite benefit.

The mall's Sears store saw a 6 percent sales increase over 1987, according to Don Byerly, store manager. "There was as much traffic in the mall as I've seen in a long time," he said. "It was elbow to elbow."

Dave Rushing, manager of Midland's Wal Mart, said his store recorded an increase over the past weekend, as anticipated.

Joel Lipsky, manager of Hastings Books, Music and Video, noted that Friday at his store was "wall-to-wall people. Saturday started strong then died in the evening, and Sunday was slow, which was about what we expected."

He noted that, as a rule, retailers see a surge right after Thanksgiving, then sales return to normal until two weeks before Christmas, when they jump again.

Van Folger, owner of Folger's Superstore and chairman of the Midland Chamber of Commerce's Retail Committee, estimated that traffic at his store was up 25 percent over last year. "We've very pleased with our business, and most of the retailers we've talked to are very pleased," he said.

Also showing a large increase was the local Kmart, which posted a 38 percent sales increase over last year, according to Denny Denton, store manager. "We anticipated good sales, just not as good as they have been," he said, adding that the day after Thanksgiving generated the most sales in the Midland store's history.

Like the other retailers, Ken Plotner, manager of Dunlaps in Dellwood Mall, also anticipates a successful Christmas season, though he feels it has gotten off to a slow start at his store. "People are shopping, and we're doing a lot of gift wrapping. I think people don't realize how close Christmas is."

Midland Park Mall attracted 75,100 shoppers during the three-day Thanksgiving weekend, according to manager Shawna Gardner, an increase of 2 percent over 1987. She said that a spot check of mall tenants revealed the major department stores had gains of at least 5 percent while the smaller specialty stores had mixed results.

"The consensus is there's a lot of lookers who haven't made up their minds yet," she commented. "With two-income households and the lack of time, many people will wait until the two weeks before Christmas to do their buying. That's when we expect the crunch," she continued.

The mall will begin extended hours on Dec. 9, and also expects a very busy day on Dec. 26, with school and most businesses closed that day.

The shoppers that were buying were buying apparel, cosmetics and accessories, according to Dillard's Haupert. Folger said camcorders, audio equipment, big screen televisions and ranges were selling well at his store.

Byerly of Sears noted that cordless tools and clothing such as apparel tied in with "Oliver and Company" were excellent sellers. Lipsky expressed surprise at how book sales at his store jumped, saying they increased more than sales of music and videos, though those two categories remained strongest.

Midlanders should have no trouble finding what they want for Christmas, according to most of the retailers surveyed. Dillard's and Dunlaps both said they had increased inventory. Kmart's Denton said the only problem his store had encountered was due to the corporation's changing to a centralized ordering system.

Folger, however, cautioned that those wishing to give an electronic gift for Christmas had better shop early, because he finds it difficult to replace inventory. "We have a good inventory," he said, "but as we sell out of items, replacing them will be impossible."

Byerly agreed that inventory may be tight on such popular items as Nintendo game systems, camcorders and big screen televisions.

Still, he, like the others, anticipates a good season, especially with oil prices on the upswing.

"We're very pleased. Oil prices are going up, and everything looks lovely. Believe it or not, retail sales tend to follow oil prices, especially in this area," Byerly said.

GROWTH

"It's amazing how strong the momentum is now," said David Jones, an economist with Aubrey G. Lanston & Co., a government securities dealer in New York. "... We'll be starting the seventh year of an economic expansion and the normal peacetime expansion lasts only three years."

He predicts growth will accelerate to an annual rate of about 3.5 percent in the final three months of 1988, even with the aftershocks from the drought.

Find quality home care needs at Major Medical Supply

Major Medical Supply provides a vital service to the Permian Basin by combining quality medical equipment, supplies and service for complete home care service. Located across from Midland Memorial Hospital and next to Driscoll's Gifts at 309 Andrews Highway, Major Medical Supply offers convenience and service-oriented patient care to its customers.

Major Medical Supply demonstrates to both its customers and to its referral sources a genuine patient care attitude through excellent service, laced with heavy doses of compassion and caring. With the potential to provide a complete in-home patient care program, Major Medical Supply offers a wide variety of products which can enhance mobility and independence, as well as comfort.

With three Texas stores owned and operated by Kenneth and Diane Benson, Odessa residents since 1952, Major Medical Supply is a leader in its field. In order to facilitate its operations, Major Medical Supply recently moved its entire management, accounting and Medicare/insurance filing staff to an office adjacent to the Andrews Highway location.

Published prices for the rental and sales of medical equipment are, across the board, the lowest in West Texas, according to Leslie Benson, marketing director. All equipment prices are below Medicare allowables. Medicare and insurance assignments are welcome, and Major Medical always charges the same price regardless of reimbursement methods.

Everything a person could need for life to death medical care is available, from "preemie" diapers to First aid supplies to complex oxygen machines. Equipment and supplies also include walking aids by Lumex and Guardian, wheelchairs by Everest and Jennings and Invacare, moist heat pads, home blood pressure kits, exercise equipment, wedge pillows, cervical pillows, traction equipment and whirlpools.

Also, bedside commodes, hospital beds, support hose, surgical garments, decubitis cushions, incontinence aids, aids to daily living, bandages and gauze.

China Acupuncture Clinic offers relief

Are you ready to shed those extra pounds, quit smoking or eliminate those bothersome aches and pains? The China Acupuncture Clinic, recently relocated to 1017 N. Midkiff, offers a solution with massage and the ancient Chinese art of acupuncture.

Acupuncture, an important part of Chinese traditional medicine, has been used to treat medical problems for more than 2000 years.

Because of its wonderful therapeutic effects, its simple operation and its minor side effects, acupuncture is practiced extensively in China and now in many foreign countries.

Dr. Stephen Jon, director, was graduated from the Shanghai First Medical College, and brings more than 30 years of experience to the clinic. He also researched acupuncture for six years at the Shanghai Acupuncture Institute. He brings his skills to the first Chinese acupuncture clinic in Midland.

The clinic offers traditional Chinese acupuncture for a variety of problems, including arthritis, asthma, muscle aches and tooth aches. This is the insertion of special fine, sterile needles into defined acupuncture points to restore the balance of the body's energy and to promote healing.

Dr. Jon pointed out that disease results from the body's imbalances of ying and yang. The back of the body is known as ying. Another way of understanding this, he said, is to correlate ying and yang to night and day, respectively. The science of acupuncture cures diseases because the balance of the body is restored.

In addition to ying and yang, Dr. Jon explained that disease results from obstructed meridians. The human body contains 14 meridians, 7 in the front and 7 in the back. Meridians are like streets or roads, with points in between, or bus stops along the way. If some of the body's points or meridians are obstructed, then acupuncture can pass through the open obstruction and cure the disease.

Mrs. Marjorie Lindley is a patient of Dr. Jon's who turned to acupuncture two years ago. Plagued with excruciating pain after a fall, Mrs. Lindley received no relief from traditional medicine, but found lasting relief with acupuncture. "I don't have the words to explain my gratitude to Dr. Jon," she said. Treatments have also aided Mrs. Lindley's problems with osteoarthritis and osteoporosis. "We are forever grateful," added Mrs. Lindley's husband, Bob.

Dr. Jon's treatments also include obesity, which can be cured with ear acupuncture. The doctor inserts a small needle in the ear, and patients can expect to lose three to five pounds per week. Some patients have reported losing eight to ten pounds a week.

Ear acupuncture is also used to help Dr. Jon's patients to quit smoking. Applying a needle to a different area of the ear, patients can expect to quit smoking after three or four visits.

Pain control through massage and acupuncture has proven very effective for the clinic's patients. Treatments for chronic pain, headaches, backaches, foot, hand and leg problems are available.

Dr. Stephen Jon, director of the China Acupuncture Clinic, treats Virginia Daniel for sinusitiis.

Call the China Acupuncture Clinic at 694-2293 for information or to schedule an appointment. Office hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

Eliot's Interiors to host antique, art, estate jewelry sale this week only

Nationally known dealers Ann Hubbard Gaddis of San Antonio and Charles R. Blocker of Austin will be bringing a selection of antique, art, estate and Oriental jewelry to Eliot's of Midland December 1-3, for a special limited showing and sale. Eliot's Interiors is located at 2305 W. Michigan.

Mrs. Gaddis is formerly the supervisor of vocational education for a San Antonio-area school district. She took over the management of the Janiye Atelier jewelry firm in Boston on the death of her brother and the firm's founder, James Hubbard, in the early 1980's.

Hubbard had worked in partnership with world-renowned art goldsmith Miye Matsukata, whose many works were, at the time of her death in 1980, on permanent display in museums throughout the world. Other works were displayed in the Smithsonian Institute's permanent collection.

Mrs. Gaddis has moved Janiye to San Antonio and merged it with her own jewelry manufacturing enterprise, By Hand, Ltd. The business produces a line of fine and accessory jewelry displayed five times a year at the Dallas Apparel Market. However, the one-of-a-kind Matsukata pieces which she will be bringing to Midland are seldom shown to the general public.

In addition, Mrs. Gaddis will be offering her antique linen collection, a selection of 18th and 19th century English sterling flatware, rare Hiroshige prints from Japan, Mayan gold objets d'art, African jade beads, Lalique and Satrima buttons and amber pieces.

Blocker, a dealer in fine and accessory jewelry since 1968, will be offering a selection of Victorian-inspired sterling silver and marcasite pins and rings, as well as a selection of antique and estate jewelry items.

A native of Dallas, Blocker lived in Thailand in the early-to-mid-1960's, a period which is reflected in his collection of Oriental jewelry works. In addition, he will be showing a number of ruby, sapphire and diamond pieces, as well as some seasonal items such as Christmas brooches, pins and other gift ideas.

Although Mrs. Gaddis and Blocker maintain their primary showrooms in San Antonio and Austin, respectively, both have shown their wares across the country. They maintain longstanding clients in virtually every state in the union.

Although normally open only on Monday through Friday, Eliot's will be open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday, December 3rd, for this jewelry show. Owner Montgomery Cottier noted that, in addition to the jewelry show and sale, Eliot's will be showing a large selection of Turkish and other Middle Eastern rugs. A number of Central Texas antiques and vintage furniture pieces will also be shown.

Dealer says lawyer hit sleeping girl

NEW YORK (AP) — An alleged drug dealer Monday became the first witness in the Joel Steinberg murder trial to claim to have witnessed Steinberg hit his illegally adopted 6-year-old girl.

Charles Scannapieco said Steinberg whacked the girl for no apparent reason while she was asleep in Scannapieco's arms on Oct. 23, 1987, while they were driving in a car.

Demonstrating the blow, Scannapieco slammed the back of his hand against the bench of the trial judge, state Supreme Court Justice Harold Rothwax. The judge, Steinberg and the jurors seemed startled.

Steinberg, a 47-year-old disbarred lawyer, is on trial for murder in the beating of Lisa Steinberg, whom he illegally obtained from a Long Island teen-ager. He smiled and shook his head as if in disbelief at Scannapieco's dramatic gesture.

Steinberg denies he hit the child. He says she fell unconscious after choking on food she had thrown up the night of Nov. 1, 1987, and that he caused bruises on her chest and back while trying to revive her.

His former live-in lover, Hedda Nussbaum, who was dropped as a defendant and is scheduled to testify against Steinberg, also filed a $3 million civil lawsuit that was served Monday on Steinberg.

The lawsuit alleges that Steinberg used humiliation, brainwashing, drugs, and the withholding of food to teach Nussbaum that "she was a worthless person who could only be saved through his wisdom and special powers."

Scannapieco, indicted on federal narcotics charges, said he and Steinberg were driving together because he had hired Steinberg to represent him at his arraignment in Albany the following morning, Oct. 24, 1987.

The witness said the child was cold in the car and he allowed her to snuggle against his chest for warmth. After 10 to 15 minutes she fell asleep.

"Right after she fell asleep," Scannapieco said, "right out of the clear blue sky, Mr. Steinberg took his hand and went...(demonstrating the blow) SMASH!"

Scannapieco said the slap was "enough to bring tears to your eyes," but "she didn't show any reaction whatsoever" except to open her eyes and look at Steinberg.

Scannapieco said Steinberg told him he hit the child because she sometimes slowed her heart and her breathing, putting herself into a near coma.

Bush takes up deficit with GOP senators

WASHINGTON (AP) — President-elect George Bush huddled with top Senate GOP leaders today to map strategy for paring the federal budget deficit, saying "I'm getting the message" rather than carrying advice to the Capitol Hill meeting.

Former rival Bob Dole, the Senate minority leader, declared "we're ready to go to work" as he and Bush began a breakfast session also attended by Vice President-elect Dan Quayle and seven senior GOP senators.

On another subject, Bush was asked by reporters if he supported moves to hold a special meeting of the U.N. General Assembly in Geneva.

"There should be a U.N. meeting and there will be a U.N. meeting on that subject," Bush said.

He did not elaborate on his remarks. The Reagan administration has said it is neutral on the subject of whether such a meeting should be held in Geneva to give Yasser Arafat, the chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, a forum to plead the Palestinian cause.

The United States has refused to give Arafat a visa to address the United Nations at its New York headquarters. Bush aides said he was not consulted on the State Department decision to bar Arafat's entry.

Bush had a private lunch Monday with Dole and promised to work with him on forging an early budget accord. But he said "we're not naive" about the ease of reaching accommodation with majority-party Democrats in the Senate.

Today, Bush brought his choices for chief of staff and budget director, New Hampshire Gov. John Sununu and Richard Darman, with him.

Asked if he had a message for the Senate GOP leadership, Bush said, "Message? I'm getting the message."

One subject was whether Bush would submit his own rewrite of the budget President Reagan will submit in January, or work with Congress from the outset to reach a consensus as some advisers — including Darman — have suggested.

Asked which approach he favors, Bush said, "We're going to get some good advice on that."

Also attending the meetings were Republican Sens. William Armstrong of Colorado, Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, Rudy Boschwitz of Minnesota, John H. Chafee of Rhode Island, Alan K. Simpson of Wyoming and Thad Cochran of Mississippi.

Monday, Bush said he's getting ready to bring some new faces onto his White House team after making a string of holdover appointments, including Marlin Fitzwater as chief White House spokesman.

After Monday's lunch with Dole the vice president told reporters: "We're going to address the budget deficit early on."

"We both agree that working towards getting this deficit down is priority, and the timing of whatever actions I take will be shaped, largely shaped, by a lot of input from Capitol Hill."

Tornado sends couple on mattress ride

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Tornado-shocked victims tried to put their shattered lives and homes back in order today from a series of twisters that killed four people, including a couple found with their arms wrapped around each other.

At least 17 tornadoes were reported early Monday, covering 200 miles of eastern North Carolina, injuring 151 people and causing more than $50 million in damage.

One tornado sent one couple on a flying-mattress ride. Mark and Vera Cimerro landed on their mattress against a tree across the street.

"I held onto her as tight as I could, and the next thing I know, we are flying," said Cimerro. "It was like a ride at the fair."

Their home was destroyed but they were not seriously injured.

A neighbor, 8-year-old Janet Barnes, died when a chimney collapsed on her bed.

Further north in Raleigh, 12-year-old Edwin "Pete" Fulghum died of head and chest injuries.

In rural Nash County, Lee Roy Alston died with his arms wrapped around his fatally injured wife, Mary, apparently in an effort to shield her from the tornado that destroyed their mobile home, authorities said. They had been thrown from the mobile home. Their two children, ages 14 and 8, survived.

Authorities had put the death toll at six, but later corrected it to four.

The tornadoes struck in nine counties, from Wake in the center of the state, to Dare on the Atlantic Coast, authorities said. Most of the damage was in Raleigh, where tornadoes cut a 10-mile swath.

A Raleigh, N.C., apartment complex was reduced to rubble after it was hit by a tornado Monday. Two children were killed in the city.

City Manager Dempsey Benton said the storm caused about $50 million in damage in Raleigh, the state capital.

Overall, at least 761 houses were damaged in nine counties, said Tom Ditt, spokesman for the State Emergency Response Team, and 490 were destroyed. In addition, 65 businesses were destroyed.

The storms left 843 people homeless, 830 of them in Wake County, which includes Raleigh, and injured 154 people, Ditt said.

The storms brought reminders of the 24 twisters that ripped a 250-mile path through the state in 1984, killing 44 people, injuring more than 800 and leaving 2,300 homeless.

Gov. Jim Martin asked the federal Small Business Administration to declare Wake County a disaster area.

The American Red Cross in Wake County got so many offers of assistance that the agency ended up turning away some would-be volunteers. Organizations rallied to supply everything from free legal advice to tips about home repairs.

The twisters destroyed mobile homes, damaged churches, toppled several houses onto their sides and threw power lines onto houses and streets.

A K mart store was flattened by the twister, and six Raleigh residents, including four juveniles, were charged Monday with looting the store.

More than 6,500 homes were left without power, but by Monday night electricity had been restored to all but 1,100 customers of Carolina Power & Light, said spokesman Kyle Hampton said.

By nightfall Monday, most of those whose homes were damaged had found somewhere to spend the night, either checking into hotels and motels or staying with friends and relatives, authorities said.

Only 17 people from five families spent the night at a Raleigh middle school, the only shelter in Wake County, said Gloria Brown of the county Department of Social Services.

More than 300 families opened their homes to those affected by the storm, said Helen Sibley, nurse coordinator for the local Red Cross chapter.

Harvard psychiatrist resigns over plagiarism

Frazier

BOSTON (AP) — One of the nation's top psychiatrists resigned from Harvard Medical School's faculty after a student at another school recognized plagiarized passages in the professor's writings dating back 22 years.

Dr. Shervert Frazier, 67, former director of the National Institute of Mental Health and a former commissioner of mental health and mental retardation in Texas, resigned last week as a Harvard professor and head of McLean Hospital, a psychiatric hospital affiliated with the university.

Frazier did not dispute the findings of a faculty committee that investigated the allegations, but said the plagiarism was inadvertent, according to Dr. S. James Adelstein, dean of academic programs at the medical school.

"He has accepted the evidence of the committee," Adelstein said. "But he has ascribed the events to his method of note-taking and composing papers."

Harvard officials said Monday the plagiarism was spotted by Paul Scatena, a graduate student in cognitive sciences at the University of Rochester.

Scatena said in a telephone interview he read several of Frazier's papers while researching phantom pain, a burning sensation that patients sometimes feel from a limb that has been amputated.

Scatena said he found many incorrect citations in the papers and recognized paragraphs that had been lifted from articles by other researchers. He said he sent the passages to Dr. Daniel C. Tosteson, dean of the Harvard Medical School, in August.

Tosteson announced Frazier's resignation in a Nov. 23 letter to the faculty. The letter, made public by the university Monday, says a faculty committee investigated the allegations and concluded that plagiarism occurred in four papers written by Frazier between 1966 and 1975.

Frazier could not be reached for comment Monday. Spokesmen at Harvard and McLean Hospital said he was out of town and unreachable. He did not return messages left at the hospital, and the phone at his home went unanswered.

Three of the discredited papers are about phantom pain. The fourth is on "psychiatric emergency management."

The papers, which were published in medical journals and textbooks, were intended as "teaching instruments" and did not purport to present new research data, Adelstein said.

"It's not as if he stole a great idea from someone or published someone else's research as if it was his own," said Dr. Seymour Kety, professor emeritus of psychiatry and senior scientist at the National Institute of Health.

But Dr. Miles Shore, director of the Massachusetts Mental Health Center, said: "Academic institutions have a very important obligation to guarantee the scientific integrity of what goes on within their walls and I think Harvard took the appropriate action."

And Harvard spokesman Peter Costa said: "The university takes very seriously any charges of plagiarism because that's what we're about — the search for truth and knowledge."

The university has been hit by other allegations of scientific misconduct in recent years. In 1981, John R. Darsee was stripped of his position as a heart researcher for allegedly falsifying data. This year, Scheffer C.G. Tseng left his post at Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary after he was accused of changing his test methods and violating Harvard's conflict-of-interest rules in promoting an experimental eye drug.

Moderate Baptists to go national

ATLANTA (AP) — In a move to give the group representing moderate Baptists more national impact, leaders of the Southern Baptist Alliance voted Monday to move its offices to Washington and to appoint an executive director.

Leaders said they plan to transform the alliance from a part-time, regional body to an organization that will try to have a nationwide impact.

Formed in 1986, the alliance was founded to give moderates a voice within the Southern Baptist Convention, whose national offices have been dominated by fundamentalists since 1979. It has grown from fewer than 1,000 members to almost 40,000 as of Nov. 15.

In a two-day meeting that began Monday at Providence Baptist Church in Charlotte, N.C., the alliance's board of directors appointed Stan Hastey as the organization's first permanent executive director.

Hastey, 44, has served for the past 10 years as Washington bureau chief for Baptist Press, the denomination's news agency.

NATION IN BRIEF

Secret countdown continues

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A hush-hush countdown continued today with the space shuttle Atlantis and its five-man crew facing an unfavorable weather forecast for Thursday's scheduled liftoff on a secret military mission.

Air Force weather officials said there was a 70 percent probability the weather Thursday would violate launch criteria. Heavy clouds, winds up to 28 mph and possible rain showers were predicted.

Capt. Ken Warren, an Air Force spokesman, reported these conditions would be unacceptable, and he said the outlook for Friday was about the same.

The weather was high on the agenda as a 21-member team of managers and engineers met today to evaluate all aspects of launch preparations.

The group was expected to issue a brief statement late in the day on the readiness of Atlantis and its military crew for a mission that reportedly will deploy the $500 million Lacrosse satellite to spy on Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

The decision-making team is headed by astronaut Robert Crippen, NASA's deputy director for shuttle operations, who has sole authority to approve or stop a launch.

GOP senators pick Dole

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Republicans today re-elected Bob Dole as their leader as the Democratic majority gathered to choose a leader to guide the chamber through its coming skirmishes with a Republican White House.

Dole, the Kansas senator who recently has been meeting with President-elect George Bush to settle their differences, was re-elected in a voice vote that re-installed three Republican officers who faced no opposition, said Walt Riker, Dole's spokesman.

Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., was re-elected minority whip; Bill Armstrong, R-Colo., was returned as chairman of the Republican Policy Committee, and Thad Cochran, R-Miss., was kept on as GOP secretary, Riker said.

The GOP conference chairman, Sen. John Chafee, R-R.I., defeated challenger Frank Murkowski, R-Alaska, by 28-17 to retain his post, Riker said. Sen. Don Nickels, R-Okla., defeated Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., on a vote of 28-17 to head the National Republican Senatorial Committee.

Dormitory rules relaxed

BOSTON (AP) — Boston University's slightly relaxed rules for dormitory guests don't go far enough, said a student who helped organize vigorous protests of a ban on overnight visitors of the opposite sex.

University President John Silber Monday announced he had accepted the recommendations of a task force that decided to allow some overnight guests. The task force of parents, students, faculty and school officials was commissioned after thousands of students demonstrated against the ban.

Silber limited overnight guests of the opposite sex to family members. Visits between 11 p.m. and 1 a.m. would have to be approved in writing by all roommates 24 hours in advance.
