Sprayberry opts for 'leave of absence'

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A distraught Charlie Sprayberry, indicted on one felony and five misdemeanor charges, on Monday opted to "take a leave of absence" from the justice-of-the-peace post he has held since January 1981 and began clearing his office of plaques, game trophies, pelts and other personal effects.

Over the weekend, he had removed his case of hunting rifles and ammunition from his office in the basement of the Midland County Courthouse in anticipation of a Midland County Commissioners' Court's resolution barring firearms, except those carried by certified peace officers, from the courthouse.

"I want to be totally fair about this whole thing and not to have any questions," Sprayberry, 44, said late Monday afternoon, as he was stripping his office of trophies and plaques and carrying them to an awaiting Jeep.

Sprayberry, a licensed real-estate broker and former vacuum-cleaner salesman, said he would forego his JP authority and salary, pegged at $33,780 in 1986, until the cases against him are resolved.

"...I feel my effectiveness as a judge would be impaired," Sprayberry wrote in letter to Midland County Judge Bill Ahders as presiding officer of the Midland County Commissioners' Court.

"I FULLY INTEND to defend myself against these charges and expect to be fully exonerated," Sprayberry wrote. The justice said he requested the "voluntary leave of absence until these charges are finally resolved" and then would request reinstatement "as judge of the court to which I was elected by the people of Midland County." He and his attorney, John Smith of Odessa, marked a copy of the letter to Bob Flowers, executive director of the Texas State Commission on Judicial Conduct in Austin.

Flowers today said in "every case" in which a judge, from a Texas Supreme Court justice to a justice of the peace, has been indicted for a felony or for official misconduct, the judge has either been suspended without pay by the Commission on Judicial Conduct or has voluntarily suspended himself before the Commission could take action. He said that the procedure is provided for by the Texas Constitution.

Flowers said Sprayberry's use of the term "leave of absence" is "exactly the same thing" as suspension from office.

Earlier Monday, Sprayberry had decided to stay in office and not to resign his post but later opted to take the leave of absence reportedly due to the "ramifications" of his staying in office.

"He felt he couldn't be as effective as he would like to be with this (the charges) hanging in the horizon," his attorney, Smith, said.

Peace justice wants to 'clear his name'

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

After clearing out his office Monday, Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry said he expected to return to his duties after clearing his name in a Midland courtroom.

"This is strictly a temporary leave of absence," he told the Reporter-Telegram Monday night. "My attorney and I felt it best to take a leave of absence and take care of the business at hand."

Sprayberry, indicted Thursday on one felony and five misdemeanor charges, said he won't ask for a change of venue because he wants to clear his name in the community he as served as JP since 1981.

"This is my home," he said. "These are my friends."

The 44-year-old official wouldn't comment on the charges against him, but said he expects to be vindicated in court.

"I have good reason (to feel that way)," he said.

A Midland grand jury indicted Sprayberry Thursday after a three-month investigation led by Special Prosecutor Andy Shuvall of Austin. Sprayberry said he had known about the investigation but had thought it was over.

"I had been led to believe that the investigation had been dropped," he said. He added he "regretted" that he wasn't informed and allowed to present his version of events to the grand jury.

Sprayberry said he was hunting in Lincoln County, N.M., when the indictments were handed down.

"I got a six-point buck," he noted proudly.

The hunting trip had been planned months before, Sprayberry said, and he didn't find out about the charges against him until he returned to Midland about 3:30 a.m. Saturday.

U.S. planes prepared to protect commandos

WASHINGTON (AP) — Navy jets stood ready to protect a planeload of Egyptian commandos who were being flown to Malta to try to rescue the passengers of a hijacked Egyptair Boeing 737, U.S. sources say.

Fighters from the U.S. aircraft carrier Coral Sea were ordered to the Sigonella Air Base on Sicily, where they were prepared to intervene if any attempt was made by Libya or any other Mideast country to prevent the Egyptian forces from reaching Malta, the sources said Monday.

No effort was made to interfere with the commandos' flight Sunday, and the U.S. planes played no role in the affair.

Both ABC News and CBS News on Monday night reported the movement of American planes. A Pentagon official who demanded anonymity confirmed the move, saying it had been part of an effort by the United States to ensure that no one would interfere with Egypt's efforts to resolve the crisis.

According to another source who also spoke only on condition of anonymity, the carrier dispatched several F-A-18 fighters and E-2 Hawkeye radar planes westward to Sicily, which is south of Italy and just north of Malta.

The hijacking of the Athens-to-Cairo flight with 98 people aboard began Saturday and ended Sunday night when the Egyptian commandos stormed the aircraft on Malta, where the hijackers had forced the plane down for refueling.

Youngsters excavate campsite

By ANNTOINETTE MOORE
Staff Writer

The workers toiled away at their 1½-meter-square pits, scraping the fine dirt with their trowels, uncovering burned rock, splinters of animal bone, an occasional piece of broken pottery and waste flakes from the production of flint tools.

A scene from the excavation of an ancient European capital?

Not exactly.

These workers were Midland Independent School District fifth graders, who last week got their hands dirty excavating an Indian campsite in southeastern Midland County.

The 99 students from MISD's Gifted Education Midland program were divided into two groups; each group worked at the site for two days.

But these were not pint-sized pothunters out to destroy the archaeological record in their hunt for buried treasure.

Before the students began their excavations, they had an intensive 12-week preparation for the dig, according to Nelda Cranford, one of two teachers in charge of the project.

First, the students studied different types of archaeology, Ms. Cranford said. Next they learned about cultures and the components which make up culture.

"The students do research on a specific culture — they get to select their culture," Ms. Cranford continued. "They design and construct an artifact" typical of that culture.

Then they bury the artifact in the schoolyard at Carver Cultural Center, where Ms. Cranford team teaches the class with Francine Weaver.

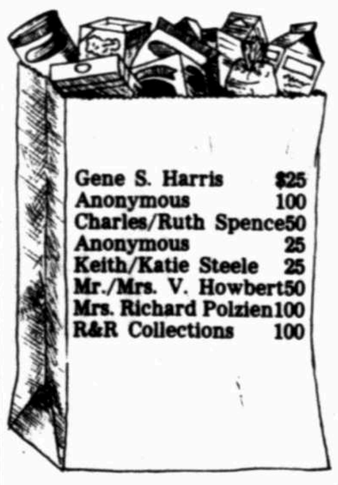

Such artifacts have included tools, clay figurines of gods worshiped by a particular culture and examples of hieroglyphic writing, according to Ms. Cranford.

"All artifacts from European cultures are buried in one group; American cultures in another," she said. Artifacts from the oldest culture are buried on the bottom, with the ones from the most recent cultures on the top. One class digs up the artifacts which the other class has buried.

Timing of fourth spy arrest 'just coincidence'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department's chief criminal lawyer says the arrest of four Americans on spying charges in five days is "just coincidence," and federal sources say no additional arrests are planned at this time.

Between midday Thursday and early Monday morning, a Navy counterterrorism expert and his wife; a retired CIA translator, and a former National Security Agency communications expert were arrested in cases involving alleged spying for Israel, China and the Soviet Union, respectively. And later Monday, the United States swapped convicted and suspected spies with Ghana.

"The three cases are not related," Assistant Attorney General Stephen Trott, head of the department's criminal division, said Monday of the arrests. "The timing is just coincidence, but it all stems from the FBI being really sharp out there."

He attributed the spate of arrests to a high FBI priority on catching spies coupled with increased counterintelligence budgets, new legislative tools to keep some information secret during public trials and a determination to deter others through prosecution. "The message is...there is a price to pay if you mishandle information," Trott said.

He said he personally believed there were more spies, but added he could not prove that. He noted that all three weekend cases involved spying for money, but others have said ideology also may have played a role in the Chinese case.

One federal source, who asked not to be identified by name, said investigators have no plans to extend their virtual spy-a-day pace, but warned that events can spur unexpected arrests in spy cases, particularly when a suspect attempts to flee.

Monday, the FBI arrested the second former U.S. intelligence officer originally implicated by turnabout defector Vitaly Yurchenko, the KGB general-designate who fled to the West on Aug. 1 and then stunned this city by publicly returning to the Soviet Union three months later.

Begin adviser may have recruited spy

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Newspapers and Israel radio reported today that a former adviser to then-Prime Minister Menachem Begin recruited a U.S. Navy analyst now accused of spying for Israel.

The radio and two Israeli newspapers, Haaretz and Yediot Ahronot, identified the Israeli contact as Rafael Eytan, who advised Begin's government on terrorism. They said their reports were based on a story published today in the Washington Post.

However, the Post did not report Eytan's name, saying only that unofficial Israeli sources have named a man who once worked for Begin as the intermediary who received secret U.S. documents from the man accused of spying.

"The Washington Post has decided not to use the man's name, because no reliable source has tied him directly to Pollard," the Post article said.

It continued, "U.S. officials involved in the investigation into the case said yesterday that the name of the Israeli allegedly involved was not familiar to them and indicated that an Israeli official whom Pollard reportedly telephoned last week was someone other than the man being named by Israeli sources."

Eytan, 59, was not available for comment. His wife answered several telephone calls to their home and said Eytan was not there and could not be reached.

Jonathan Pollard, 31, an American Jew and civilian intelligence analyst, was arrested Thursday in Washington and accused of selling secret documents to Israel. His wife was arrested Friday and accused of illegal possession of secret documents.

Supreme Court stays Pinkerton execution

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — The U.S. Supreme Court for the second time in three months spared convicted murderer Jay Kelly Pinkerton from execution by injection.

The high court on Monday issued an indefinite stay for Pinkerton, 23, who was scheduled to die early today for the grisly slayings of two Amarillo women.

"All right!" prison spokesman Phil Guthrie quoted Pinkerton as saying at 9:54 a.m. Monday when he learned of the order from Justice Byron White.

"After that, he talked in philosophical and religious terms" to Assistant Warden Robert Ott, said Guthrie. "In essence, he talked about how optimistic he was about the future of his case."

Pinkerton had been transferred from his death row cell at the Texas Department of Corrections Ellis Unit to a small holding cell outside the execution chamber at the Walls Unit when prison officials received word of the order. The inmate was returned to his cell later Monday.

Monday's stay was the second the Supreme Court granted Pinkerton, who would have been the youngest inmate to be executed since the death penalty was reinstated in 1976.

In August, the high court voted 6-2 to halt Pinkerton's execution, issuing the order just 26 minutes before TDC officials were to begin strapping him to a gurney in the death chamber. But the court later refused to consider his case and a Texas judge set another execution date, Pinkerton's third.

The baby-faced Pinkerton, an apprentice meat cutter, faced execution for the October 1979 mutilation death of Sarah Donn Lawrence. He also was convicted of the similar slaying five months later of Sherry Welch. Pinkerton was 17 at the time of Mrs. Lawrence's killing.

The parents of the victims said they were not surprised by the latest stay.

"I'm sure he's relieved," Mrs. Lawrence's mother, Virginia Royer, said. "I really halfway expected the stay for some reason or other."

"Disappointed? You bet," Joe Hales, Mrs. Welch's father, said. "It's really going to hurt me. I just can't understand, but yet I'm not a bit surprised either. They say he is in a death sentence. But it may be put off for years."

Pinkerton's attorney, Dean Roper of Amarillo, filed an appeal with the high court Monday challenging the jury selection process, saying it was unconstitutional for jurors opposed to the death penalty to be excluded.

Within the past month, the Supreme Court has stayed two other executions on similar grounds while it considers the matter in an Arkansas case.

"The systematic exclusion of jurors that have scruples against the death penalty denies a defendant of a right to a trial by a cross representation of the community in which he resides, which is guaranteed by the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution," Roper said.

Pinkerton's mother, Marjorie, was en route to Huntsville to visit her son when she received word of the stay, Roper said.

"She's elated, obviously," he said.

Mrs. Lawrence was raped, stabbed more than 30 times, had her throat slashed and body mutilated during the burglary of her home. A bite mark on Mrs. Welch's breast linked Pinkerton to her similar slaying, Randall County District Attorney Randy Sherrod said.

Pinkerton would have been the 11th Texas inmate to be put to death since the state resumed the death penalty in 1982. Six of those have occurred this year. Nationwide, he would have been the 50th prisoner executed since 1976.

Infant aches for company of now-dead Siamese twin

BEAUMONT (AP) — Ashleigh Petry is much like other 1-year-olds, but her mother says she will fight being left alone.

Wanda Petry says her infant daughter aches so much for company probably because for the nine months before her birth, she was joined to her Siamese twin.

"I think she remembers that," Mrs. Petry says. "They were together for nine months, face to face."

Ashleigh and her sister, Alma, were born last Nov. 26 joined at the abdomen. Surgeons at Galveston's University of Texas Medical Branch separated the twins, who shared a larger-than-normal liver, in an 18-hour operation.

Both babies did well for a while, but Alma — whose incision was more severe than her sister's — never was able to breathe well on her own.

Doctors operated on Alma when she was eight months old to tighten her incision, but the baby had more breathing problems after the surgery. Doctors operated again on the scar, hoping lessen the strain.

But Alma died shortly after the operation.

Mrs. Petry said the Siamese twin birth — a rare occurrence — made headlines as far away as Saudi Arabia. But she and her husband, Jerry, at first asked hospital officials not to divulge their names.

"I didn't want all the hoopla," Mrs. Petry told the Beaumont Enterprise. "I wanted Ashleigh and Alma to grow up normally."

Mrs. Petry said at first she did not want to get too close emotionally to the babies because losing one or both would then be devastating.

But she felt guilty between visits to the babies at the hospital, she said.

Arkansas Moral Majority leader may move to Texas

VILONIA, Ark. (AP) — The head of the Moral Majority in Arkansas says he's decided to accept a call to be pastor of a church at Red Oak, Texas, but has been asked to reconsider by his current congregation.

The Rev. Roy L. McLaughlin, 34, pastor of Vilonia's First Baptist Church, said Monday he submitted his resignation to that church after services Sunday night, but church members asked that he give it further thought.

"It was a highly emotional experience," said McLaughlin, who has been pastor at the church for 10½ years.

Under a motion approved by the congregation, McLaughlin has until Dec. 22 to tell church members his final decision. But, he said, church members at Red Oak believe he is coming there.

McLaughlin said he hadn't yet resigned as head of Moral Majority in the state. As Arkansas spokesman for the group, he has often expressed its members' conservative moral and political concerns.

"The national vice president is aware of it," he said. "He and I have conversed about it, and he understands."

He said he plans to resign from the group's Arkansas chapter next month, and hold a news conference to announce who will take his place in the leadership role.

"I will always be involved on moral issues regardless of whether or not I work under the umbrella of the Moral Majority," he said.

Nursing home patient on deadly diet, doctor says

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — An 87-year-old nursing home patient was on a deadly diet of 600 calories a day while at an Autumn Hills convalescent home, a physician has testified in a murder-by-neglect trial.

Elnora Breed needed at least 2,000 calories a day to fight off infections and to maintain her weight, said Dr. William Steffee, a specialist in internal medicine at St. Vincent Charity Hospital in Cleveland.

But Steffee told the court a doctor had ordered the 600 calorie daily diet before Mrs. Breed entered an Autumn Hills nursing home in Texas City in October 1978. She died Nov. 20.

"The meaning of this diet is that it's deadly. It's guaranteed to kill. If this diet is never altered, it'll kill Elnora Breed. It'll kill me. It'll kill you," he said.

Steffee's testimony Monday came in the murder trial of Autumn Hills Convalescent Centers Inc. and five of its current and former employees.

They are charged in the death of Mrs. Breed, who died 47 days after she entered the home.

The defense claims the elderly woman had a long history of cancer and that she died of the disease.

Earlier witnesses testified the nursing home staff should have called Mrs. Breed's doctor and questioned the 600-calorie daily order.

Steffee said the order eventually was questioned and after 41 days Mrs. Breed's daily intake was increased to 1,500 calories.

Steffee, an expert hired to testify for the state, said he based his findings on a review of the nursing home's records of Mrs. Breed's stay at the facility.

He said the records showed she had been hospitalized in September 1978 for a urinary tract infection.

Her nutritional status when she was discharged into the nursing home, he said, "was stable with very few reserves."

To battle the infection, he said, her body had to "consume itself."

He said bedsores Mrs. Breed developed at Autumn Hills required even more calories to fight off infection.

"From your review of the record of Mrs. Breed's 47 days at Autumn Hills nursing home, did you reach a conclusion as to what caused her death?" prosecutor David Marks asked.

"My conclusion is that Elnora Breed died of overwhelming infection and starvation," Steffee said.

The nursing home records, he said, reflected Mrs. Breed showed all the classic signs of starvation.

She had severe fluid retention, loss of weight and diarrhea, he said.

Under cross-examination, Steffee refused to agree with defense attorney Tom Sartwelle that Mrs. Breed suffered from cancer.

"There is a possibility that she had recurring cancer, but based on my review of the record, it was an unreasonable possibility," Steffee said.

Toxic algae blamed for Pecos fish kill

AUSTIN (AP) — A toxic algae combined with high salinity to kill 108,000 fish in the Pecos River in October and November, the Texas Water Commission reported Monday.

The commission also said similar kills can be expected in the future.

Dead fish were first noticed in the Pecos near Sheffield during the final week of October. The kill spread about 50 miles down river to an area near the confluence with Independence Creek.

An algae tentatively identified as Gymnodinium combined with high salinity and temperature and sunlight conditions to kill the fish, according to commission investigators.

Turtles, waterfowl, birds and nearby land mammals were unaffected.

Water Commission tests ruled out chemical spills or man-made pollution as possible causes of the kill.

"Future algal blooms resulting in fish kills can be expected to occur in the Pecos because of its relatively high salt content," said a commission release.

Salinity in the Pecos ranges from three to 13 parts per thousand. Most Texas rivers have less than one part per thousand.

The algal bloom posed no public health threat, and live fish taken from the Pecos were safe to eat, according to the commission.

Special master may not be needed in no-pass, no-play rule challenge

HOUSTON (AP) — A special master may not be needed to gather data on the state's controversial no pass, no play rule if new information provided by the state is sufficient, a plantiffs' attorney says.

State District Judge Marsha Anthony said Monday that it's up to attorney Anthony Sheppard to decide if the data are sufficient for him to prove the law discriminates against minority and handicapped students.

If he thinks it isn't, he can ask next week for the special master, Ms. Anthony said.

Sheppard, who wants to repeal the law that bars students failing a class from participating in extracurricular activities, got the data from about 300 school districts Monday.

"This may mean, and I emphasize may, that we may not need a special master," Sheppard said of the data. "It will definitely aid us."

Last week, Sheppard had data from only 19 rural school districts. He said Monday he had not reviewed the new information.

Assistant Attorney General Kevin O'Hanlon, who is handling the state's case in the class-action suit, said the state had not produced the data earlier because Sheppard had never asked for it.

Ms. Anthony halted the trial Wednesday so a special master could gather information from Texas' 1,100 school districts.

Attorneys met for about 45 minutes Monday to choose a special master should one be needed. If one is, Ms. Anthony said she will make the appointment next Monday.

Attorneys chose Houston attorney Scott Ramsey and former U.S. District Judge Robert O'Conor as possible candidates. Neither has been notified of that, O'Hanlon said.

O'Conor, who served on the bench for 10 years, said he would probably not accept the postion if offered because "I left the bench to avoid problems like that."

Ramsey said he would accept if he could fit it into his schedule.

O'Hanlon also filed motions Monday to dismiss the lawsuit or have it decertified as a class-action suit and to determine who will pay for the special master.

"All three branches of government have said this rule is OK. Our objection is that taxpayers should no longer have to bear the expense of litigation," O'Hanlon said.

Teachers' council names 'centers of excellence' in nation's schools

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The National Council of Teachers in English has cited 158 elementary and secondary English programs as "centers of excellence" in an effort to counter criticism about the nation's schools.

"Few of these are new programs," said Skip Nicholson, chairman of the council's task force that chose the centers, and a teacher at South Pasadena, Calif., High School.

"But they went unnoticed because so few people were asking the right questions of the right people. Too few investigators have tried to find out what does work in the teaching of English."

Programs in drama, journalism, film, reading and writing cited by the group were primarily in U.S. elementary and secondary schools in 36 states, but an Allentown, Pa., newspaper and four Canadian programs also were noted.

Nicholson said Monday the council, which met in Philadelphia during the weekend, looked for programs that fit their communities, used sound theory and research as a basis and could be used by teachers elsewhere.

"Critics of the schools have contended that education today is bad, and then demanded, paradoxically, that students get more of it. NCTE wants to identify what is good in the teaching of English and help all schools to share that knowledge," Nicholson said.

Nicholson said the English programs were chosen from more than 700 responding to the council's request for descriptions of programs the schools considered worthy of national recognition. Council evaluators visited finalists this fall before naming the winners.

Texas schools with excellent programs listed

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Here is a list of Texas schools cited Monday by the National Council of Teachers of English for their English language arts programs:

Abilene Independent School District, Abilene; Westlake High School, Austin; Solomon Schechter Academy, Dallas; Ysleta Independent School District, El Paso, three programs; Cummings Elementary School, Houston; Douglas MacArthur High School, San Antonio; Temple High School, Temple.

Inventor of Worm Juice toils away in relative obscurity in Arlington

By MICHELLE STEIN

ARLINGTON (AP) — Roy Wilkins has a non-toxic fire ant killer that gets revenge.

It stings them to death.

He has another product called Worm Juice that comes in 100 assorted colors. With it, fishermen can make their own custom worms — right on the boat, he says.

Then there's Wilkrete, a "super concrete" that Wilkins guarantees will plug potholes permanently.

All together, the Arlington resident has invented nearly 100 devices or products, everything from perfumes to flexible dentures, arthritis lotion to fire retardant.

Wilkins, owner and sole employee of Wilkins Technical Laboratories in Arlington, said his inventions are real money makers. Too bad, he adds, they haven't made him big bucks.

"I haven't sold any of it," said Wilkins, 60. "If I could just sell one invention, I'd be rich."

His lack of wealth isn't because his inventions stink. It's because he's a lousy salesman, Wilkins said.

Gwen Wilkins, his wife of 35 years, agrees.

"I have an uncle that calls him Roy Edison," said Mrs. Wilkins, principal at C.B Berry Elementary School in Arlington. "I think most great inventors never made money off their inventions. They were too busy inventing."

So the inventions sit in Roy Wilkins' laboratory, a miniwarehouse off Division Street. It looks like a laboratory should, with lots of test tubes and chemicals.

And it is almost like play for Wilkins. Next to his family, fun for this scientist is a few hours in the lab — just him and his flasks, and a chemical mystery to unravel.

Lots of his discoveries, like his non-toxic fire ant killer, happen by accident, he said.

"One day, I was playing around and I poured the chemicals out on a fire ant hill," Wilkins says. "The liquid stung them to death. It's been months and those ants haven't been back."

His pothole patcher, Wilkrete, was discovered in similar fashion.

"In 1952, I was working at this company in Baton Rouge, and I had some excess material," Wilkins said. "So I mixed some sand in it and threw it out back.

"Next day, the stuff looked harder than concrete."

Wilkins says he thought about marketing his amazing cement then, but never really got around to it until a year ago. Then, he convinced the city of Arlington to give it a try.

Jon Jones, Arlington's street and landfill superintendent, thinks Wilkrete might have a future.

"We're experimenting with it right now over on North Oak Street," Jones said. "It was put there a year ago last summer and the potholes are doing fine. It (Wilkrete) appears to be a vast improvement over any other similar product."

Some inventions Wilkins makes on purpose. Like his perfume.

"Roy bought me a big bottle of Chanel 5 perfume one year, and he couldn't believe how expensive it was, especially knowing what chemicals were inside the perfume," Mrs. Wilkins said.

Roy now makes his own version of Chanel No. 5 — just like he makes his own versions of Shalimar, Opium, Giorgio, Halston, White Shoulders, Paris, Oscar De La Renta and Youth Dew.

Texan wheels, deals for guru's fleet

RAJNEESHPURAM, Ore. (AP) — Negotiations over the sale of the 79 Rolls-Royces owned by disciples of Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh continued into the night at the guru's cash-poor central Oregon commune.

Texas car collector and dealer Bob Roethlisberger flew to Rajneeshpuram on Monday afternoon to buy the cars for an estimated $6 million.

Roethlisberger, owner of European Auto Group of Carrollton, Texas, spent several hours in negotiations with executives of the Rajneesh Investment Corp. An announcement of any agreement probably would be made today, commune spokeswoman Ma Dhyan Puja said late Monday.

Randy Campbell, an associate at Roethlisberger's car dealership, told The Associated Press in a telephone interview that his boss expected to pay about $6 million for the luxury automobiles, bought by disciples for the guru's use.

"That's a ballpark figure," he said. "We don't have any idea for sure what everything's going to be."

Rajneesh fled the country Nov. 15 after pleading guilty to immigration-fraud charges a day earlier, and disciples have announced they are closing the commune and selling its assets.

Odessa lawyer leaves $15 million to Cherokees

TAHLEQUAH, Okla. (AP) — A bachelor attorney from Texas with a reputation as a loner, who believed he was part-Cherokee, has left $1.5 million to the Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma.

John K. Ford, a one-time Texas state legislator, died May 14, 1984, at age 71.

Cherokee Nation officials learned in January 1985 the Tahlequah-based tribe was included in the Odessa attorney's will. But only recently did the tribe learn the value of its inheritance, said spokesman Greg Shaw.

Ford also left $20,000 for his French poodle, Angel Fire, said Rae Nell Nimmo of Paris, Texas, a co-executor of Ford's estate. The 9-year-old poodle is cared for by a former Ford secretary in Midland, she said.

His will also included a total of $20,000 for his six surviving brothers and sisters and $5,000 each for 13 first cousins, she said.

"Mr. Ford was a loner," Ms. Nimmo said Monday. "Nobody knows all of Mr. Ford's business. It took a while to piece it all together."

Ford visited the Cherokee Nation only in October 1982, and spoke briefly with business director Larry Wise, tribal officials said.

Ford visited as a tourist, without telling Wise that he was considering leaving the tribe the bulk of his estate, Ms. Nimmo said. He came to Paris and asked his longtime friend, Paris attorney Hardy Moore, to draft a will including the inheritance for the tribe. Later that year, he learned he had terminal cancer.

"I do not know how long John had it in mind to include the Cherokee Nation in his will, but he did not do it on the spur of the moment," Moore wrote in a letter to the tribe.

"Before I wrote the will dated Nov. 18, 1982, John mentioned to me the possibility of leaving a major portion of his estate to the Cherokee Nation."

The will left the tribe with several producing oil wells, land in Dallas County, a $65,000 home in Odessa and another home and lot in Bogata, Texas, $10,000 in common stock in various Texas firms and 2,000 shares of stock in Shelby-Panola Savings Associates in Carthage, Texas.

Ford served as county attorney in Lamar County from 1943 to 1946 and was a member of the Texas House of Representatives in 1947 and 1948. He was an attorney in private practice in Snyder, Midland and Odessa until his retirement 10 to 15 years ago, Ms. Nimmo said.

The will left the (Cherokee) tribe with several producing oil wells, land in Dallas County, a $65,000 home in Odessa and another home and lot in Bogata, Texas, $10,000 in common stock in various Texas firms and 2,000 shares of stock in Shelby-Panola Savings Associates in Carthage, Texas.

Wise said he does not know why Ford would leave the bulk of his estate to the Cherokee Nation after visiting headquarters only once.

Ford claimed to be of Cherokee ancestry, but a Cherokee Nation genealogical specialist was unable to find records of Ford's family on Cherokee rolls.

"That doesn't necessarily mean anything," said Ms. Nimmo, Moore's longtime secretary. She said family members were convinced a great-grandmother was of Cherokee lineage.

"He believed that if in his old age he needed to be cared for, he could count on the Cherokees for doing so," Moore wrote in the letter about Ford. "John mentioned to me as being of the opinion Cherokees had been mistreated."

Cherokee Nation Principal Chief Ross Swimmer said revenues from the estate will be placed in the tribe's general fund.

Malta's prime minister explains decision to allow raid

VALLETTA, Malta (AP) — The prime minister of Malta said he allowed an Egyptian raid on a hijacked plane to show "we would not give in" to terrorism. Dozens of trapped passengers were killed when commandos stormed the Egyptian jetliner.

The Maltese government said Monday all but one of the 60 people killed during the hijacking died after Egyptian commandos raided the Boeing 737 and the terrorists threw fire grenades into the cabin. The storming of the plane Sunday night ended the 24-hour ordeal.

The only death before the raid occurred when hijackers shot an American and tossed her body off the jetliner, Maltese officials said. But some survivors said an Egyptian security guard and one of the hijackers were killed before the raid in a mid-air shoot-out soon after the plane was commandeered.

One of five terrorists survived the hijacking, which began Saturday night shortly after the Athens-to-Cairo flight took off, and underwent surgery at a hospital, Maltese government spokesman Paul Misfud said.

Some passengers put the number of hijackers at three.

Egypt's foreign minister, while in Paris Monday, said the hijackers were four Palestinians and a Syrian "interested in creating problems for Egypt."

A commentary broadcast late Monday by the official Cairo Radio said the hijackers belonged to a Libyan-backed Palestinian group that had broken away from the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The broadcast was the first time Egypt accused Libya by name of planning the hijacking. A government statement Monday blamed the hijacking on renegade Palestinians working for an Arab country, but did not name the country.

In Moscow, the official Soviet news agency, Tass, said Libya denied involvement.

Egypt's defense minister, Field Marshal Abdel-Halim Abu-Ghazala, today said the government had "some" evidence Libya was behind the hijacking, but did not elaborate.

JANA, Libya's official news agency, said in a commentary today that Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak "bears full responsibility" for the "frightening massacre," and said the purpose of the raid was to "stop the hijackers and not allow them to voice their demands."

Egypt rushed extra troops to the border Sunday and security sources in Cairo said the troops remained on alert today.

Malta's Prime Minister Carmelo Mifsud Bonnici, speaking to Parliament Monday evening, said he told the terrorists he would not meet their one demand — which was to refuel the plane — because the aircraft might be intercepted "by other forces" and forced down from its flight.

Mifsud, the government spokesman, later said the prime minister was "bluffing" when he talked to the hijackers from Valleta's Luqa airport control tower in an effort to get them to surrender.

"There was definitely no plan or any indication" of such an intervention, Misfud said.

Mifsud Bonnici told Parliament he had hoped the Egyptian commandos could "rescue the greatest number of passengers possible."

The prime minister spoke in Maltese and his remarks were simultaneously translated into English.

"The Egyptian forces assured us that this would be a quick operation ... and that the assault would come to a good ending," he said. "In no way should the impression of weakness be given on our part in the face of the cruelty and the inhumanity of the hijackers."

Malta, he said, "regretted that these deaths have taken place on Maltese soil."

Among those who died in the 10-minute raid were eight Palestinian children and a Canadian woman and her baby, Maltese officials said.

By late Monday afternoon, 26 people remained in hospitals, Mifsud said.

The commandos, whom officials said numbered about 25, were flown to Valletta aboard an Egyptian C-130 transport plane. The transport plane sat parked on the tarmac during the standoff all day Sunday.

Egypt said none of the passengers were injured by the commandos. The Egyptian government said in a statement Monday that the terrorists threw three phosphorus hand grenades into the plane's cabin, setting off "large fires" and killing the passengers.

The plane carried 92 passengers and a crew of six. Witin an hour of landing, seven Filipino and four Egyptian women were allowed to leave the plane.

Two Israelis and the three American passengers were shot execution-style while the plane was parked on the airport tarmac during nearly two hours of terror Sunday morning. They were ordered to the door's plane, shot and tossed off the plane.

Scarlett Marie Rogenkamp, 38, of Oceanside, Calif., was fatally wounded. Jackie Nink Pflug, 30, of Pasadena, Texas, suffered a serious head wound and Patrick Scott Baker, 28, of White Salmon, Wash., was grazed by a bullet.

PLANES

Fifty-nine people died during the rescue attempt when the terrorists set off grenades, and an American woman was killed prior to the attack, officials said.

The incident, which follows the hijacking of a TWA flight with mostly Americans aboard from Athens airport last June, called into question again the effectiveness of the Greek airport's security.

American officials will reinspect the airport to see if the Egyptair hijackers circumvented security systems that were rated satisfactory by Federal Aviation Administration experts just 10 days before the hijacking.

The Greek government suggests the hijackers' weapons were put on the flight at an earlier stop in Cairo. Greece claims passengers who boarded the aircraft went through five inspections.

Charles E. Redman, a State Department spokesman, said Monday, "We don't know how or when the weapons were placed aboard the Egyptair flight."

Following last summer's TWA hijacking, the State Department warned Americans to avoid the airport. But the advisory was lifted after improvements were made, and Redman said periodic inspections indicated security was satisfactory at the airport. The last visit by FAA experts was Nov. 13.

"We will certainly want the full facts regarding how the hijackers were able to get their weapons aboard the aircraft and what is being done to prevent a recurrence before we consider any new steps," Redman said of plans by U.S. officials to inspect the airport again.

Asked about reports the hijacking was supported by Libya, Redman said, "We can't confirm the affiliation or the exact identification of the hijackers. I can only note that Libya has been implicated in terrorist incidents against Egypt which have been reported in the press."

The Reagan administration, though it lamented the death toll, endorsed the decision by Malta and Egypt to storm the hijackers.

Private experts on terrorism called it a no-win situation.

"In retrospect it's all very easy to say, 'Oh, my God, three-quarters of the people lost their life,'" said Christine Helms, a Brookings Institution specialist on the Middle East and terrorism. "But in reality, it isn't clear-cut for people who were on the scene. ... What was unique about the situation on Malta was simply the action of the hijackers was much more threatening and lethal" than in other recent hijackings.

The hijackers, according to the plane's pilot, had threatened to kill a passenger every 15 minutes until their demands for jet fuel were met. The hijackers apparently wounded a number of passengers during abortive execution attempts.

The decision to attack the plane in the face of such a high cost "sends a message of determination" to future terrorists, said Robert Kupperman of Georgetown University.

Students learn "the techniques of excavation — stratigraphy, tools that they use to excavate, stringing the pit using line levels," Ms. Cranford said. With excavation skills under their belts, the students are ready for a real site.

This is the third year of the GEM-sponsored excavations, according to Eunice Barkes, the archaeologist in charge of the site. The first two years were spent at the Greenwood Site. This year's site was chosen because of logistics.

"From the artifacts on the surface, we knew that there would be enough to teach the kids mapping techniques and that we would find enough material to teach them excavation techniques," said Ms. Barkes, archaeologist for the Museum of the Southwest.

"We try and rotate each task so that each kid gets to do a little bit of everything," she continued.

"Everything" includes mapping each artifact as it is found, measuring it and noting its elevation, according to Ms. Cranford.

"This is a way of taking math the students learned in school and applying it to real situations," she said.

Several members of the Midland Archaeological Society and a former student of Ms. Barkes, John Dockall, were on hand to supervise the students' work. Several parents also have assisted in supervising the students.

"After the children are through with it, MAS members will come back and map the site and fill in the test pits," Ms. Barkes said.

For Justin Merritt, one of the GEM students, this is his first time on a dig.

"I knew about Indians and some of the things that they made, but I've mostly learned from this," he said. "You can kind of get a picture from all the artifacts" of how the Indians lived.

"In our pit, we found scattered rock from a hearth. We think a man was sharpening a tool because we've found lots of flint flakes. With the wind at his back," he was sitting near the hearth making tools from a piece of flint, he said.

Justin has also learned part of the etiquette of archaeology.

"When we're digging we can't always see everything. We've found a lot (of artifacts) while sifting. When you fill your own bucket it's better to sift your own bucket, because otherwise the person sifting gets all the credit for finding stuff.

"You really get to know everyone that you're digging with, even your mother, better," he said.

Nina Olien, another fifth grader, found archaeology to be different from what she had expected.

"I thought, 'Oh, no! I'm going to get so dirty' and it turned out to be fun.

"I was expecting that we'd find animal bones and maybe a few arrowheads. Instead we found more hearths." The Indians were apparently burying their food in the pits and cooking it for about 48 hours, she said.

The experience "has really gotten me curious about archaeology. I've been curious about it before and it's gotten me in deeper."

"I'm really curious to find out what the ages of our artifacts are," she said.

There may be enough charcoal taken from one pit to date the excavations, according to Teddy Stickney, MAS president. The site itself covers about 25 acres, she continued, and artifacts recovered from it date from the Middle Archaic period (from 6,000 to 3,000 years ago) to historic times. Indians were drawn to the area because of a nearby fresh-water seep.

Dockall, who plans to enter graduate school in archaeology in January, enjoyed supervising the fifth-grade excavators.

"At first it was kind of hard explaining what to look for, but after a couple of hours they caught on pretty quick. It was fun to work with them. I wish they'd had something like this when I was little."

The students' experience of archaeology doesn't end when the pits are filled in, Ms. Cranford said. They will also catalogue and classify all the artifacts recovered from the excavation. This information will be recorded on forms provided by the state and the artifacts will be housed at the Museum of the Southwest.

"The kids are involved in the whole process," she continued. "The most important thing that I stress is not the find, but the relationship between the artifacts and the whole site. What were the tools used for...what was the lifestyle" of the people who made them.

Ms. Barkes stressed the importance of projects like this.

"I think that it will teach the students the importance of protecting the archaeological record. These students may be on the boards of museums someday and they will have some understanding of the archaeological record," she said.

And what do the students and their parents think about the experience?

"This year every child has had something good to say about it," Ms. Weaver said. "Parents have been elated that the kids are studying the past and how we do archaeology.

"When children are able to get outside and experience a real relationship between what they learn and real life it becomes more a part of them."

SPRAYBERRY

A Midland County grand jury last week had indicted Sprayberry for the felony offense of attempted sexual assault on a 36-year-old former clerk in Justice Court on April 26, 1984, and false imprisonment by restraining her; on two misdemeanor counts of harassing the woman, Wanda Niblett, and on three counts of barratry — improperly soliciting cases for a lawyer, Phillip Godwin of Odessa. Ms. Niblett, who was 34 when the Sprayberry incident allegedly took place in April 1984, resigned from her job the following August. "We're going to push it as hard as we can" to quickly resolve the cases, Smith said.

SPRAYBERRY WILL BE prosecuted by Andy Shuval, former executive director of the Texas Prosecutor Council, said Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre. Shuval, who last August was sworn in by 238th Texas State District Court Judge Vann Culp as an assistant to Schorre, will test the cases against Sprayberry in district court. If convicted, Sprayberry could receive probation or could be sentenced up to 10 years in prison on the felony indictment.

Schorre noted that allegations of misconduct by public officials are handled at the district-court level.

In his absence from Justice Court, Sprayberry said he was "going to spend a great deal of time with the counsel (Smith) to have this thing resolved. I feel this is best."

County Attorney Mark H. Dettman said he "agreed with Judge Sprayberry that the public is best served by this action (temporary leave of absence) until this matter is resolved."

However, County Judge Bill Ahders said he was concerned about the Justice Court workload doubling on Midland County's other peace justice, 70-year-old Robert H. "Bob" Pine, and said that it would be up to the Commissioners' Court to accept or reject Sprayberry's request.

"The difficult part will be to put the 'heat' on Bob Pine," who has been in office since 1964. "He'll have to double his work."

COMMISSIONER Durward Wright said that "there's got to be some kind of provision" to compensate the void left by Sprayberry's absence. "I doubt that the Commissioners' Court could appoint a temporary judge."

Wright said he would "decline to make a judgment whatsoever" in the Sprayberry case "because I have no first-hand knowledge of anything."

However, Commissioner Win Brown said the Commissioners' Court "can't do anything until he resigns" and the court appoints a successor.

"I don't think we can do anything else except sit here and look at it. We need a JP," Brown said. "It puts the public in a bind, and it definitely will increase his (Pine's) workload. We can't do a thing until the office is vacant. We're sitting here and looking."

Brown said that the Commissioners' Court has been "at arm's length" on the Sprayberry incident.

"I don't have any decision on this," Pine said of Sprayberry's requested leave, "except I'll try to do my job."

Dettman, who was searching for a solution to the void created in Sprayberry's stepping aside, noted that "There's not a vacancy."

"And it's not an office where you can add a deputy," he said. "There are no deputy judges."

Dettman indicated he would consult with Midland Municipal Court Judges Robin Smith and James Zane Brazell to determine if they or their part-time assistant lawyer-judges could handle some of the Justice Court's arraignments and bond settings should Pine feel the need for assistance. Dettman said Pine indicated that he for now didn't need help.

HOURS BEFORE Sprayberry had announced his intent to take a leave of absence, the Midland County Commissioners' Court had passed a resolution barring firearms, except those carried by or stored by law-enforcement officers.

Schorre told the commissioners that the action was a "timely resolution," as he didn't see "any reason" why rifles, shotguns and pistols should be in courthouse offices.

"I don't see any reason for anyone to have personal guns in their office," Schorre said. "It doesn't look professional." Schorre said the courthouse was well protected and secure, as armed peace officers, including sheriff's deputies, investigators or court bailiffs, are assigned to every floor of the courthouse but the first floor — offices of County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry.

"And I don't pack a pistol," quipped Mrs. Cherry.

The commissioners asked Sheriff Gary Painter to enforce the resolution.

"The sheriff is responsible for security within the courthouse," said Dettman.

Afterward, Painter said he didn't "know what the primary reason was" for the resolution.

However, Painter said, "Judge Sprayberry is the only one that I personally know of" outside peace officers who kept firearms in the courthouse. The sheriff said he would n't be searching offices in looking for firearms. "I think that would be very unreasonable."

Sprayberry, who had displayed hunting trophies, such an Alaskan moose head, ram head, antelope head, mountain goat head, black bear head and pelt, rattlesnakes skins and other trophies in his office, also stored his hunting firearms and ammunition. He said he kept the arms and munitions there for convenience were he to go hunting.

Sprayberry last Friday had just returned from a hunting-vacation trip to the Lincoln National Forest in New Mexico when he was served with the indictments.

Even as he freely admitted having kept firearms in his office, Sprayberry said Pine kept pistols in his office. Their offices are side-by-side but in separate cubicles.

Pine said he did have two pistols in his office safe.

"I carried them out and put them in my car a while ago (Monday morning)."

He said one was commemorate pistol. The other was one which he had won at a justices-of-the-peace convention.

"I've never carried one (pistol) regularly," Pine said. "I've been told both ways (about the legality of a peace justice carrying a pistol on the job)."

"I feel when I do out on a call, there are going to be peace officers there, and they are there to take care of me if anything arises."

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

Midland County Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry, 44, leaves his office late Monday afternoon after he took a "leave of absence" without pay before the Texas State Commission on Judicial Conduct could suspend him while he is under indictment.

Sprayberry surrended to Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter Saturday and was released after signing a $10,000 surety bond. His attorney, John W. Smith of Odessa, said Sprayberry was hesitant to surrender in Midland because of concerns about vindictiveness by Midland officials, but the JP declined to comment on his lawyer's remarks.

"I'd better not comment," he replied when asked if he felt betrayed by other Midland County officials.

Sprayberry seemed bewildered by the recent turn of events.

"I feel very drained," he said. "It's hard to accept what they've instigated here."

The JP said he appreciated the "courtesy" of the news media — "They haven't been pushy" — but hopes to keep a low profile while the legal process "sort of grinds along. The sooner this can be laid to rest, the better."

Sprayberry is a licensed real-estate agent, but he wasn't sure if he would return to that business or concentrate full time on his defense.

Economic adviser predicts 1986 growth

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States will enjoy robust economic growth in 1986 despite the fact the nation's already disastrous trading performance will worsen further, President Reagan's chief economic adviser says.

Beryl Sprinkel, chairman of the president's Council of Economic Advisers, said Monday the rebound in economic activity that began this summer will strengthen in the months ahead, causing a slight rise in interest rates and inflation.

With the country entering the fourth year of an economic recovery, many private analysts have begun to express fears that a recession could begin sometime in 1986.

Sprinkel, however, said in an interview with The Associated Press that another recession is not on the horizon.

"My philosophy is that we get business recessions not because (recoveries) get old and tired," he said. "We get them by adverse economic policies, and we are going to do our best to avoid that."

Among the policy dangers, Sprinkel listed the current drive in Congress to erect trade barriers to fight the U.S. trade deficit, which has been blamed for a loss of 270,000 manufacturing jobs this year.

Sprinkel said the administration was convinced its fight for free trade was right for both producers and American consumers. The trade deficit, expected to hit a record $150 billion this year, will go even higher in 1986, Sprinkel predicted, despite recent declines in the dollar.

He said faster growth at home will push up demand for imports before the falling dollar makes the price of those goods rise to levels at which consumers begin cutting back on purchases.

Sprinkel said the declining dollar heat up inflation slightly next year and the faster economic growth will cause interest rates, including the prime rate, to rise as well.

The prime rate, the benchmark business lending rate, is at 9.5 percent, its lowest level since 1978, with various other rates, including mortgage rates, at similarly low levels.

"Rates will not go up so much that they will choke off economic activity, but you are betting against the odds if you think that continued acceleration of economic activity can occur with continued declines in interest rates," he said.

The administration is forecasting the economy will grow next year at a rate of 4 percent, up significantly from the 2.5 percent rate many analysts expect for all of 1985.

While predicting growth next year will exceed the 1985 rate, Sprinkel refused to give a specific number, saying the administration has not finished the projections it will use when it submits its new budget request in January.

Many private forecasters believe the economy, weighed down by the huge trade deficit, will turn in lackluster growth next year — much like the anemic 1.1 percent pace in the first half of 1985.

Sprinkel has kept a low profile since taking over as chairman of the economic council in April. His performance has been in sharp contrast to his predecessor, Martin Feldstein, who returned to his Harvard teaching job after incurring the wrath of President Reagan for going public with views that soaring budget deficits should be cut by raising taxes.

There have been reports that Sprinkel has lobbied privately for more administration pressure on the Federal Reserve Board to slow the growth of the money supply in order to avert sharply higher inflation levels next year.

Study finds tax returns trashed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Discarded tax returns and checks, overworked employees and computer glitches played a role in the massive problems the Internal Revenue Service has suffered in its Philadelphia office, a congressional report has concluded.

The study, to be released today, noted that in one instance last April, more than 100 envelopes containing checks worth more than $300,000 were found in trash baskets. In July 1984, nearly 100 tax returns were found in two women's rest rooms at the IRS' busy Philadelphia Service Center.

Earlier this year, IRS officials blamed a new computer system for their problems in processing returns.

The report, written by the General Accounting Office, said that a unit that fixes tax return errors lost 45 tax examiners from mid-February through April 1985 due to resignations, firings, reassignments or voluntary furloughs.

It said the unit was plagued by 367 hours of computer "downtime" between February and July, and by "unacceptably long" computer response times.

The 66-page report by the congressional oversight agency was requested in April by Senate Finance Committee Chairman Bob Packwood, R-Ore., and committee members John Heinz, R-Pa., and William V. Roth Jr., R-Del. The GAO, which said it would refrain from drawing conclusions or making recommendations, got its information largely from IRS records and interviews.

The senators sought the investigation following reports of overworked IRS employees and destruction of tax returns, plus a faulty computer tape the agency said caused thousands of improper tax delinquency notices to be mailed to businesses in the mid-Atlantic region.

IRS Commissioner Roscoe L. Egger Jr. told a Senate panel last week the government has paid $47 million in interest this year on tax returns not processed by the agency within the required 45 days after the April 15 filing deadline. For the same period last year, the figure was $27 million.

As of Oct. 18, the Philadelphia center was responsible for more than one-third of the total even though there are nine similar regional offices around the nation, the GAO report said.

A major section of the document focused on nine alleged incidents of "lost" tax documents in Philadelphia from July 1980 to June 1985. According to the report, seven of these incidents were substantiated by the IRS, including:

— Last April, 109 envelopes containing checks for $333,440 as well as 60 tax forms and returns were found in trash barrels. An internal audit said workers may not have ripped the envelopes open to make sure they were empty. Of the 12 employees in the unit, three worked 19, 17 and 14 consecutive days, respectively, while two supervisors worked consecutive 80-hour weeks.

— Ninety-two tax returns were found in two women's restrooms at the center in July 1984. An audit said the returns had already been processed.

— A mail clerk was fired last June for "continually disposing of taxpayers' forms and checks in the wastepaper basket." The report did not specify how many forms were discarded.

The report said the IRS had been unable to substantiate a rumor that as many as 50,000 tax returns were destroyed a few years ago.

The report also said the IRS had found no evidence to support allegations the agency back-dated refund checks to May 30 or before to avoid interest payments after the 45-day limit. Taxpayers had reported big gaps between when their checks arrived and the date on the check.

The report said 9,062 refund checks dated May 30 were delivered to the post office late. Of those, it said 4,191 were mutilated by the Philadelphia Financial Center during processing and had to be redone, while the rest were delayed by a bureaucratic snafu.

To try and expedite processing and alleviate taxpayer headaches, the center began a program in May under which people could file duplicate returns. If searches revealed no record of the original return, the center processed the duplicate.

But the program was a flop, proving more costly than if the agency had continued its normal procedures, the report said. It said the failure was attributed to "the unexpected volume of duplicate returns, the complexity associated with estabishing processing and control procedures, and the number of persons needed to staff the program."

Reagan family retreats for holiday

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is leaving behind most of his senior staff and his chief spokesman as he travels to his mountaintop ranch for a weeklong Thanksgiving holiday.

Only five days after returning from his Geneva summit round with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, Reagan was to fly to California today for a respite at his 688-acre Rancho del Cielo near Santa Barbara, Calif.

It is Reagan's fifth California vacation this year.

The president's chief of staff, Donald Regan, had no plans to accompany Reagan westward. White House deputy press secretary Larry Speakes also was not scheduled to travel with the president, virtually the first time he has stayed behind when Reagan has made an extended vacation journey.

Of Reagan's top advisers, only National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane was set to spend the holiday week near the president.

Reagan is in virtual seclusion at the ranch high in the Santa Ynez Mountains, as his aides stay in Santa Barbara, some 30 miles away. Only Secret Service personnel and personal aides stay near the president's five-room adobe house, and he remains in contact with aides by telephone.

Mrs. Reagan, who has been in California since Sunday, was to join the president at the ranch on Wednesday. The first lady traveled West to visit her elderly mother, Edith, in Phoenix, Ariz., and to be honored at a dinner in San Francisco for her work against drug abuse among the young.

On Thanskgiving Day, the president and his wife will be joined by three of Reagan's four children and his brother Neil, the White House announced on Monday.

The Reagans are hosting Neil and his wife, Bess; Reagan's son Michael and his wife, Colleen, and their children Cameron and Ashley; son Ron and his wife, Doria; and daughter Patti and her husband, Paul Grilley.

The only missing family members are Reagan's daughter Maureen and her husband, Dennis Revell.

The Thanksgiving menu calls for turkey with cornbread dressing, cranberries, stringbeans with almonds, mashed potatoes, salad, monkey bread (a pull-apart bread) and pumpkin pie with whipped cream.

The Reagans will remain at the ranch until Sunday, when they go to Los Angeles for the taping of an "All Star Tribute for Dutch Reagan," which will include more than 100 entertainers, movie industry stars and their spouses.

Proceeds of the event will be donated to a hospital in the president's name, Speakes said.

Blacks leave white neighborhood in fear

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Despite a city offer of protection and support from civic and church leaders, a black couple said Monday they have decided to leave a predominantly white neighborhood after hundreds of protesters demanded that they "beat it."

"It's just to be safer," Charles Williams, 23, told the Philadelphia Inquirer in an article published in today's editions. "There's no way around it. Even though this may die down, we'll never be sure. We'd still be watching our backs every day."

On Wednesday, about 400 white demonstrators chanting "We want them out!" and "Beat it!" gathered outside the southwest Philadelphia row house where the couple and their 7-year-old daughter moved in early in November.

Marietta Bloxom, 24, said her daughter, Leikeisha, 7, was frightened.

"I like the house, but I can't live in any neighborhood where my child is afraid," she said.

The couple dropped by the house Monday to check its condition.

"In the long run, we have to look at our safety here," Williams said. "Even with the cops, civil affairs, there aren't any guarantees."

Williams said the family had received support from some neighbors and said he did not want to make it appear the demonstrators had forced them out, "but I see no other alternative."

Ms. Bloxom admitted it "could be called a defeat."

Veterans Administration loan guaranty officer Ron Veltman said Monday that Williams told him Friday "that they wanted to move out."

O.G. Christian, a local official of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said Williams told Mayor W. Wilson Goode on Friday of his intention to move. Christian said Goode encouraged Williams to stay, and offered around-the-clock police protection.

Repeated attempts to contact Williams and his family by telephone Monday weere unsuccessful because their phone apparently had been taken off the hook.

Karen Warrington, a spokeswoman for Goode, said the mayor and Managing Director James White, after learning of Williams' plans to leave, had tried to assure Williams that his safety would be ensured if he stayed."

U.S. Attorney Edward Dennis Jr. said city and federal authorities "will bring the full weight of their offices to bear against any action intended to intimidate or frighten residents into abandoning their homes because of their color."

Dennis said he asked the FBI, working with the Civil Rights Division of the Justice Department, to open an investigation of possible criminal violations of the 1964 Fair Housing Act, which prohibits the use of force or threats to deny people the right to housing of their choice. Violators can be imprisoned for up to 10 years and fined as much as $10,000.

Meanwhile, an interracial couple whose house was the scene of a demonstration Thursday night by about 200 angry whites vowed to remain in their home.

Veltman said Williams gave no indication when his family would move. However, he said, "I assumed it would be very soon."

New golden torch hoisted into Miss Liberty's grasp

NEW YORK (AP) — Miss Liberty's new light has been hoisted high above New York harbor, but the beacon won't shine until next summer when the statue turns 100 years old.

Workers raised the glimmering, 2½-ton gilded torch onto the statue's massive, upraised hand on Monday.

Unlike the old torch, which contained glass panes and was lit from within, the new light is in keeping with the original design of Frederick Auguste Bartholdi, who created the 305-foot landmark as a gift to the American people from France 100 years ago.

The flame, covered with several pounds of 24-karat gold leaf, will be illuminated from the outside by spotlights, which was Bartholdi's original concept.

The old torch, which allowed water to leak inside the statue, was removed on July 4, 1984 as part of the renovation of the Statue of Liberty by the Liberty-Ellis Island Foundation. The new torch will not be lighted again until July 3, during centennial celebrations for the statue.

Foundation officials intend to raise $230 million for the joint project to restore the statue and Ellis Island, which was the port of entry for millions of immigrants. About $185.6 million has been raised to date.

The new lamp was hammered out of copper sheeting, three 32nds of an inch thick, by French artisans from the Les Metalliers Champenois of Reims, who have been working side-by-side with American workers restoring the statue.

While the copper joints were smoothed and polished, other French workers replicated the copper balcony, flooring, balustrade and a drum to hold the flame, all specially treated to match the green patina on the rest of the weathered statue.

The torch was put together and gilded using labor and materials donated by the Paris firm of Robert Gohard Etablissements. Gohard and his son Fabrice did the gilding.

The raising originally was scheduled for Friday, then was rescheduled for today because of bad weather. Officials hastily decided to hold it a day early after the forecast for today called for rain, sleet or snow.

William F. May, president of the foundation, said the wind had to be under 20 mph and it could not be raining or snowing when the torch was lifted.

About two dozen hardhats worked for two hours to bolt a hoist to the torch and its surrounding balcony and raise it into place.

Scores of reporters, camera crews, Parks Department officials and ground supervisors with walkie-talkies were on hand, too chilled to applaud as the torch was set into place.

Wise decision

The best interests of Midland County residents are being served with the decision of Midland County Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry to step aside from the official duties of his office until the six indictments returned against him last week are resolved.

That decision should remove until after the charges against him are resolved any potential question of impropriety regarding cases coming before him in Justice Court. That's important, of course, in the interest of justice being served and the integrity of the office being maintained. It's virtually essential in a political office wherein the officeholder is expected to adhere to standards even exceeding those of the public in general.

The six indictments against Sprayberry, including one on a charge of attempted sexual assault and five on misdemeanor complaints, should be resolved by local judicial officials as quickly as possible. Any time a public official is indicted on a criminal charge, public confidence in that official's actions is necessarily shaken. It's extremely important in such cases to restore public confidence in the office as quickly as possible.

That's particularly crucial in the current situation since the grand jury returned indictments against Sprayberry on barratry, which is improperly soliciting cases for a lawyer, and harrassment, in addition to the third-degree felony charge of sexual assault and false imprisonment.

Of course an indictment should never be construed by the public as an indication of guilt. It is not, but is merely the official charge by which a person is brought to trial.

Since he has wisely chosen to step aside during the time the charges against him are pending, Sprayberry now has the time to prepare a proper defense to the charges against him. That removes the cloud of uncertainty that earlier was hanging over his official actions because of the charges against him.

LETTERS

Too many 'little houses'

Local neighborhood schools provide safe and easy access for young children, as well as freeing parents from the necessity of taking the children to and from school.

These schools also provide other services to their communities (e.g. — polling places, and parks for play after school and during the summer.

The sociological need for clustering might be brought up at this point, however, this is an entirely different subject from the theme of this letter.

I am a resident of the Wydewood area in northwest Midland, however, I'm sure there are other developing neighborhoods with the same problems. It seems that we tend to be treated like a "stepchild" by the city in every respect except taxes.

Our neighborhood, being relatively new, is one of the growth areas of Midland, and therefore has a large number of young couples with children. Despite the relatively large number of children, little or no facilities exist for these kids (except the streets). The school to which they are assigned requires they cross Midland Drive, which is difficult enough for an adult.

It was therefore quite a shock to see that the newest school was not placed in an existing developing neighborhood, but in the middle of nowhere west of Loop 250. "The school is already full," you'll be told if you inquire about it, but that's no problem. The school district merely has to assign students to the school, and that's where they go.

Does this mean that the neighborhood school concept is dead? Not by a long shot. Already signs are up for a new subdivision surrounding the new school, although there's not yet a house in it.

It will be interesting to see where the kids living in this new subdivision are assigned, since the local school is already full. Who was this school built for? Those of us who pay the taxes or the subdivision developers?

I'm told that Midland will need even more schools in the near future to keep up with projected growth, thus new school bonds. How many more needy developers are there? I'm not against growth, but the existing communities that pay the bills should be provided for first before building any more little schoolhouses on the prairie.

Think about the animals

My congratulations to Linda Newkumet for her fine letter on animal rights. Another aspect of animal rights, which is not often written about, concerns the ridiculous and unnecessary slaughtering of animals in the making of fur coats.

One hundred years ago there was a true practical purpose for the wearing of fur coats — warmth. Nowadays, the reasons most often given for buying fur are first warmth and secondly beauty, which gives one a luxurious feeling of femininity. However, today there are in existence fake furs which have the exact same qualities of real furs. These new "fakes" look and feel exactly the same with regard to warmth and beauty. Only the most expert furrier would be able to tell the difference. Still, many of us would rather have "the real thing."

It is understandable that a woman would want a "real" diamond just because it is real; however, there is a difference between a "real" diamond which comes from a rock and a "real" fur which comes from an animal or, rather, from many animals. It takes an average of 50 animals to make one mink coat. A coat made from other types of fur which require matching of stripes, spots, and special shades of color may require the skins of hundreds of animals. So it is not just one or two animals (as some think) which have "given their lives" to make us feel warm and beautiful. Perhaps those of us wanting "the real thing" would consider a coat made from beautiful woolen cloth, which would not require the killing of animals.

Research has shown again and again that fur-bearing animals do feel pain and fear. They exhibit many of the same qualities seen in humans: learned behavior, dedication to each other, courage, peace, and terror. Most of these animals are raised on farms, often inhumanely; some are hunted in the wild and are threatened species.

Before buying our fur coat this season, perhaps we should consider the alternatives. Perhaps we should also ask ourselves if we are buying it for mere vanity and/or a status symbol.

Congressman fights to park free

WASHINGTON — The fuel that runs the Washington merry-go-round is a high-octane mixture of power and perquisites. The more perks that Washington officials can bestow on themselves, the more power they have; and the more power they have, the more perks they accumulate.

Jack Anderson

But the merry-go-round broke down recently, when Rep. Phil Crane, R-Ill., made a grab for the brass ring and overreached himself. Upset because the free VIP parking lot at National Airport was getting too crowded, Crane suggested that the Federal Aviation Administration ban diplomats and Supreme Court justices, leaving the lot for Congress' exclusive use.

To widespread astonishment, the FAA dared to reject Crane's suggestion, and declined to be bullied — even though the congressman threatened not so subtly to remember the agency's impudence at budget time. The FAA expressed its confidence that Crane surely would not endanger air travelers' lives by cutting the safety agency's budget over a mere matter of wounded pride.

There the matter stands, with both sides muttering darkly about the other's highhanded behavior. And into the midst of the muddle dove Rep. Mel Levine, D-Calif., and his wife, Jan.

During a recent recess, the Levines and their children flew home to California, leaving their leased station wagon in a congressional parking space at Washington's Dulles Airport. A month later, when they returned, the car had racked up a $600 parking bill.

No problem, Levine thought; congressmen park free. But he made one critical error: He had called his secretary to meet them in the Levines' other car, and he drove that one out just ahead of the station wagon with its $600 parking tab.

The parking lot attendant let the congressman out without charging for the few minutes the second car had been there. But she balked at the station wagon being driven by Mrs. Levine, demanding payment of the $600.

The attendant "was extremely abusive to my wife," Levine told our associates Corky Johnson and Donald Goldberg.

Not so, according to the parking lot attendant's report filed with the FAA. Levine "said he writes the budget for the FAA and that he was going to raise hell," the report alleged.

Levine does not sit on any committee with jurisdiction over the aviation agency. Anyhow, the reported threat is "simply not true," he said, explaining: "It is not my style to operate in the way this lady claims."

Levine said he asked to have a supervisor summoned. The lot attendant and her colleague wrote that they were the ones who requested the supervisor's presence and claimed Levine lost his temper at the suggestion. "He made several more statements and threats about what he could do," they wrote.

Levine insisted he was "very polite," but did acknowledge that he grew a little irritated when "they started giving my wife a hard time."

The lot employees reported that neither the station wagon nor its driver, Mrs. Levine, had proper identification that would allow for the free parking. The congressman said this is not true.

The lot supervisor, Sue Twitchell, said the attendants were on solid legal ground, because the free parking perk is for members of Congress only, not spouses. An FAA official agreed.

House Sergeant-at-arms Jack Russ did not. "Spouses are allowed because of the nature of the job," he said. "They are intertwined in a member's work."

Russ said he thought he had ironed out parking perk problems at a recent meeting with aviation agency officials. Evidently not.

BUCOLIC BLUES: The farm crisis will get worse before it gets better, administration insiders warn privately. Record or near-record grain harvests this year, combined with rising foreign production, will create a worldwide glut and keep prices for agricultural products depressed. The experts foresee a wave of farm foreclosures not seen since the Great Depression. Reflecting the situation are the farm banks, which are collapsing at an alarming rate. In the past 14 months, more than half of the 100-plus banks that failed across the country were agricultural banks.

TERRORISM WATCH — Americans and U.S. installations in Western Europe, particularly West Germany, are once again the target of terrorist attacks. But other countries in the region, which were mercifully free of such incidents in recent years, have seen an upsurge in terrorist violence aimed at U.S. interests. Spain, for example, suffered five anti-American terrorist attacks in 1984 and the first two months of this year — more than it had experienced in the previous 10 years. Terrorists also struck U.S. targets in Belgium and Portugal, which had gone 11 years without such attacks. The State Department's Bureau of Intelligence and Research warns that Western Europe can expect more terrorist incidents.

Gorbachev killed 'pan Ron' plot

WASHINGTON — A Soviet undercover campaign in Geneva portraying Ronald Reagan as a sick old man was called off only after Mikhail Gorbachev signalled his intention not to the let the summit end in obvious disagreement.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Soviet television trumpeted that Reagan's early arrival in Geneva was ordered by his doctors, fearful that the 74-year-old president could not arrive Monday and promptly start talks with Gorbachev Tuesday. Simultaneously, Soviet propaganda specialists dropped hints in Geneva that Reagan never would recover from last July's cancer operation. Such disinformation abruptly stopped Wednesday.

In fact, Reagan looked in the pink in the cold, snowy Swiss city. Although he had trouble sleeping on his first night there, that was strictly a result of jet lag.

A PERLE IN GENEVA

Richard Perle, the hard-line assistant secretary of defense who was barred by George Shultz from his trip to Moscow earlier this month, suddenly emerged in Geneva as the secretary of state's strong right arm and part of the inner circle of nuclear-arms advisers.

Shultz personally approved Pentagon arms-control specialist Perle as a key U.S. negotiator drafting language that led to the Reagan-Gorbachev joint statement ending the summit. Shultz also seated Perle in the prestigious front row at the signing ceremony capping the summit.

A footnote: Speculation about ex-senator John Tower as a possible successor to Caspar Weinberger as secretary of defense was heightened by his backstage summit role, briefing the international press corps on arms control. Tower is a key U.S. negotiator in the recessed U.S.-Soviet arms talks.

DON REGAN'S WOMEN

White House chief of staff Donald T. Regan, under fire for comments about women, vetoed ex-aide and close friend Ann McLaughlin to be secretary of health and human services (HHS) because he felt she was not ready for the government's worst administrative headache.

All other prospects except McLaughlin, under secretary of the interior (and wife of television commentator John McLaughlin), was the last candidate for HHS. Regan then reopened the search and found ex-governor Otis Bowen of Indiana. However, he confides that he'll press McLaughlin for the next open Cabinet seat, perhaps secretary of housing and urban development.

Regan's comments in Geneva that women do not understand and are not interested in arms control was the first recent setback in a campaign by aides to lower his profile and keep him out of trouble. Regan lieutenant Dennis Thomas, an old hand on Capitol Hill, has mended important fences there for the chief of staff.

FED FUSSING

The White House is furious that Wayne Angell, a Kansas economist-banker nominated to the Federal Reserve Board at the urging of Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, has not yet sold his bank stocks as required by law.

According to presidential aides, Angell is negotiating for the best price possible before he sells. But that means President Reagan has not yet been able to formally submit Angell's name to the Senate to begin the confirmation process for the board seat that has been open since Sept. 1.

What irritates the president's men so much is that they want Angell to help the two Reagan-appointed Federal Reserve governors, Vice Chairman Preston Martin and Martha Seeger, pressure Chairman Paul Volcker to loosen economic restraints. The White House would like a vote by the eight-member board to lower the discount rate.

GERALDINE RUNS

Even before Brooklyn District Attorney Elizabeth Holtzman bowed out of the Senate race in New York, Geraldine Ferraro was signalling that she was set to make a run against Republican Sen. Alfonse D'Amato next year that political operatives of both parties consider close to hopeless.

Ferraro was telling friends that the decision of State Attorney General Robert Abrams not to run for the Senate left her as the only viable Democratic candidate. Those statements came at a time when Holtzman was considered the front-runner for the nomination and not likely to pull out.

Private polls show Ferraro's statewide negative ratings in the astronomically high 40s. But Holtzman's were nearly as bad, partly because many voters confused her with Carol Bellamy, president of the New York City Council. Bellamy made a disastrous challenge against New York City Mayor Ed Koch's re-election in which her ratings steadily declined.

CHARLEY REESE

Constitution not written in a code

Suppose you and I are about to sign a contract. We agree on the terms. Then I tell you that next year or the year after, the terms may not mean the same thing that we both agree they mean now. Would you sign? Not if you were smart. Such a contract would be no contract at all.

Charley Reese

Oddly enough that's exactly what judicial activists ask us to accept when they say the Constitution should be interpreted in 20th Century terms and that little attention should be paid to its original intent. Well, a constitution which can mean anything a judge wants it to mean is no constitution at all.

Justice William Brennan happens to be the most prominent public spokesman for this viewpoint currently, but you should keep in mind that judicial activists may be either liberal or conservative. What's at issue is not their political philosophy but their judicial philosophy.

The issue frequently gets confused and sometimes deliberately so. The issue is not whether Supreme Court justices should interpret the Constitution. Of course they should. If they don't, they can't measure laws against it to see if they are constitutional.

John Marshall, an early chief justice, established the principle that the Supreme Court would decide the constitutionality of laws and few Americans have any problem with that. It is a practice that has served us well.

Nor is the issue one of a flexible or inflexible constitution. The framers of the Constitution were a lot brighter than most of us today. They recognized that change would be necessary and they provided a process for amending the Constitution.

The issue is simply whether judges may amend it on their own under the pretext of interpretation. They do sometimes, but they certainly should not.

The U.S. Constitution is a contract between the people and their government. It dictates the structure of our government, which is a republic, and it clearly defines the duties and powers of the three branches. The first 10 amendments which we call the Bill of Rights explicitly state some of the people's rights by explicitly prohibiting the government from doing some things and by specifically requiring it to do some things.

This is no piece of parchment of mild historical interest. The Constitution — not the buildings and people in Washington — governs us. It is the fundamental law of the land, enacted by the people, and no one — neither president nor supreme court justice — is above it. All public officials and military people take an oath to obey, defend and protect the Constitution. Our loyalty as citizens is to the Constitution rather than to any man who happens to be occupying an office created by the Constitution.

Since it is the people's law, it can only be changed by the people acting either in convention or through their elected representatives. If judges may change this basic law, then we do not have self-government but rule by oligarchy.

The Constitution, not the Supreme Court, is the supreme law of the land. The Constitution makes that clear by explicitly giving to Congress the power to remove questions from its jurisdiction. Modern congresses have been too gutless to exercise it, but it was done in the 1800s.

Fortunately, Attorney General Edwin Meese is raising the standard of original intent and the Reagan administration is seeking judicial candidates who will recognize the Constitution's supremacy and not abuse it.

Meese is in good company. Great former justices like Learned Hand and Benjamin Cardozo argued that it must be interpreted according to original intent. And, of course, John Marshall said it most plainly:

"As men whose intentions require no concealment generally employ the words which most directly and aptly express the ideas they intend to convey, the enlightened patriots who framed our Constitution, and the people who adopted it, must be understood to have employed words in their natural sense, and to have intended what they have said."

If Justice Brennan cannot comprehend the meaning of the plain words in the Constitution, then he should get off the bench.

Smith will stand trial for Belushi's murder

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Singer Cathy Evelyn Smith, ordered to stand trial on a murder charge, was "nothing more than a lackey, a go-fer" for John Belushi and shouldn't have been charged with fatally overdosing the comedian, her attorney says.

Belushi or someone else provided and administered the fatal drug dose in March 1982 that Miss Smith is accused of giving him, Howard Weitzman said.

Miss Smith, 38, a former backup singer to such recording artists as Gordon Lightfoot and Hoyt Axton, was ordered Monday at the end of a lengthy preliminary hearing to stand trial on the murder charge and 13 counts of furnishing and administering cocaine and heroin to Belushi, 33.

She was indicted by a Los Angeles County grand jury a year after Belushi's death but fought extradition from her native Canada for more than two years.

Weitzman contended after the hearing that she should never have been charged and was "nothing more than a lackey, a go-fer...someone Mr. Belushi managed to manipulate.

Cathy Evelyn Smith leaves municipal court in Los Angeles Monday with lawyer Scott Furstman.

"There's something inherently wrong with the system when a woman is charged with second-degree murder when she simply acted on the wishes of another person."

But Municipal Court Judge James Nelson said in court, "Surely Mr. Belushi issued the invitation in this dance, but it is an inherently dangerous dance....The Legislature has provided that the price for the piper in these instances is high."

Miss Smith wept as Nelson ordered her to stand trial.

Belushi, star of television's "Saturday Night Live" and such films as "Animal House" and "The Blues Brothers," died March 5, 1982, at the Chateau Marmont hotel from acute heroin and cocaine intoxication.

For the last days of his life, he repeatedly injected drugs allegedly furnished and administered by Miss Smith. She has acknowledged injecting Belushi with "speedballs" of cocaine and heroin during the three-day binge.

Under California law, anyone who furnishes and administers an inherently dangerous substance to another person can be prosecuted for second-degree murder if the person dies.

Miss Smith, ordered to appear for arraignment Dec. 10 in Superior Court, could face 15 years to life in prison if convicted of the murder charge and 10 years on the drug charges. She is free on $50,000 bond.

She did not comment as she left court with Weitzman, who successfully defended former automaker John Z. De Lorean in his cocaine trafficking trial in 1984.

During three days of partying, Belushi at times was joined by comedian Robin Williams and Academy Award-winning actor Robert DeNiro, although there has been no testimony to indicate they injected drugs.

Miss Smith contends she last injected Belushi at 3:30 a.m. on March 5, 1982, in the bungalow where his body was found. She left the bungalow before 8 a.m., Weitzman said.

Belushi's body was found between 11:30 a.m. and noon, and Deputy District Attorney Michael Montagna, citing expert testimony, said Belushi died sometime after 9:30 a.m.

In the months after Belushi's death, Miss Smith spoke with two National Enquirer reporters and a Los Angeles free-lance writer about the case.

After-dark liftoff to light sky

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A forecast of clear skies promised a brilliant show tonight when space shuttle Atlantis with its 700-foot tail of fire dashes into the darkness on a flight to test space station construction concepts.

"Weatherwise, we're setting up for a really spectacular launch; we should have a clear beautiful sky with almost a full moon," said Lt. Scott Funk, the shuttle weather officer.

Atlantis and its crew of six men and one woman are to lift off at 7:29 p.m. EST, and NASA said if conditions are right, the blazing exhaust should be visible from South Carolina to Cuba.

It is only the second scheduled after-dark launch in 23 shuttle missions. The first, in 1983, was seen from Tampa and Miami, both more than 150 miles away. But heavy clouds blocked the view to the north and southwest.

NATION in brief

Parties should sponsor Presidential debates

WASHINGTON (AP) — A commission that spent the last nine months studying the presidential election process recommended today that campaign debates become a regular part of the contest and that the Republican and Democratic parties take over their sponsorship.

"The American people have come to expect joint appearances by the major party nominees for the presidency," the Commission on National Elections said in its report. "These joint appearances should be made a permanent part of the electoral process."

Dorothy Ridings, chairwoman of the League of Women Voters, which has sponsored the debates in previous elections, dissented: "Because political parties are by definition partisan, they are hardly suitable sponsors of nonpartisan presidential forums."

Waite: Progress made

NEW YORK (AP) — Anglican church envoy Terry Waite, who has been negotiating for the release of kidnapped Americans in Lebanon, says he wants to speak with Kuwaiti officials regarding prisoners whose release the kidnappers demand.

Waite arrived in New York to speak with U.S. officials and relatives of the hostages before heading back to resume talks with the captors.

"All I can say with absolute certainty is that progress has been made in the last 10 days," a red-eyed Waite told a news conference two hours after landing at Kennedy International Airport.

Angolan aid opposed

WASHINGTON (NYT) — A group of 101 congressmen Monday urged President Reagan not to provide covert aid to the rebels fighting against the Soviet-backed government in Angola.

The congressmen made the request in a letter to the president. A copy of the letter was made public by Rep. Howard Wolpe, D-Mich., chairman of the Foreign Affairs subcommittee on Africa.

County forecasts

Midland, Ector, Glasscock, Upton, Reagan, Crane, Gaines, Andrews, Dawson, Borden, Martin and Howard counties: Tonight, a 40 percent chance of showers or thundershowers, low upper 40s and wind shifting to north to northwest 10 to 15 mph. Wednesday, partly cloudy, high mid 60s with wind west 5 to 15 mph. Thanksgiving, cloudy with high in lower 70s.

Sterling, Coke, Irion and Tom Green counties: Tonight, a 40 percent chance of thundershowers with low mid 50s. Wind south 10 to 15 mph shifting to north 10 to 20 mph late tonight.

Rain chances to diminish

From Staff and Wire Reports

Thundershowers are forecast for the Midland area tonight but the chance for rain is expected to disappear by Wednesday, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Cloudy skies will bring a 40 percent chance of thundershowers and a low in the upper 40s tonight, becoming partly cloudy with a high in the mid-60s Wednesday, forecasters said. Tonight's winds will be from the north to northwest at 10 to 15 mph, shifting to the west at five to 15 mph Wednesday.

Warm temperatures are expected to continue Thanksgiving Day as cloudy skies and a high in the middle 70s are forecast.

Monday's high of 77 was 8 degrees below the record set in 1965. This morning's low was 39 degrees above the 1938 record of 18 degrees.

STATE

Pounding rain, gusty winds and spectacular lightning bolts accompanied a line of heavy thunderstorms that lumbered across western North Texas this morning.

A weak upper-air disturbance moving across tropical air sparked the storms that pelted the low Rolling Plains from Gainesville south through Mineral Wells, Stephenville and Brownwood, the National Weather Service said.

The weather service posted severe thunderstorm warnings in Palo Pinto and Comanche counties, but authorities there reported no damage or injuries from the slow-moving storms.

The heaviest storms were southwest of Stephenville, while elsewhere, patches of light rain were falling over parts of East and Northeast Texas. Skies were mostly cloudy throughout the eastern two-thirds of the state and fair in the west.

NATION

Snow, freezing rain and sleet belted the nation from the Pacific Northwest to New York today, bitter cold settled in the Plains and Rockies and rain spread from the heartland to the Atlantic Coast.

Snow was falling across most of the northern and central Rockies and parts of the Pacific Northwest and stretched from the northern Plains across the upper Great Lakes to most of New York and northeast Pennsylvania.

Freezing rain, sleet and snow extended from southeast Nebraska across southern Minnesota to western Pennsylvania.

Bitter cold prevailed across the northwest Plains and northern Rockies, with early-morning readings below zero over most of the region and readings of 15 degrees below zero or lower in central and eastern Montana.

49ers' victory best left in dark

By Chris Jenkins
Copley News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Half the lights went out Monday night in the third quarter at a stadium called, appropriately enough, Candlestick Park. The San Francisco 49ers and Seattle Seahawks played on. No problem.

By that point, they'd gotten used to playing in the dark.

The partial power outage, coming 3½ minutes into the second half, was the only "lights out" happenstance in San Francisco's 19-6 victory. Two teams that some felt would meet in the next Super Bowl and now are struggling just to reach the playoffs, seemingly could play each other until next week and not get it right.

At 7-5, the 49ers are two games behind the NFC West-leading Los Angeles Rams with four weeks to go. Suffering their fourth loss in six games, the Seahawks (6-6) have sunk so far in the AFC West that even a wild-card berth is doubtful.

MOREOVER, they finished Monday night's contestwithout quarterback Dave Krieg, who left with shoulder problems early in the fourth quarter. He was injured when sacked by Niners linebacker Todd Shell, a play that essentially finished the Seahawks' for the evening.

Down 12-0, the Seahawks were at the San Francisco 20 when Shell chased down Krieg on third down and tripped him up by the ankles for a 16-yard loss. Seattle punted back to the 49ers, who went 80 yards in six plays for a score, Dwight Clark making a soaring catch of Joe Montana's 22-yard pass.

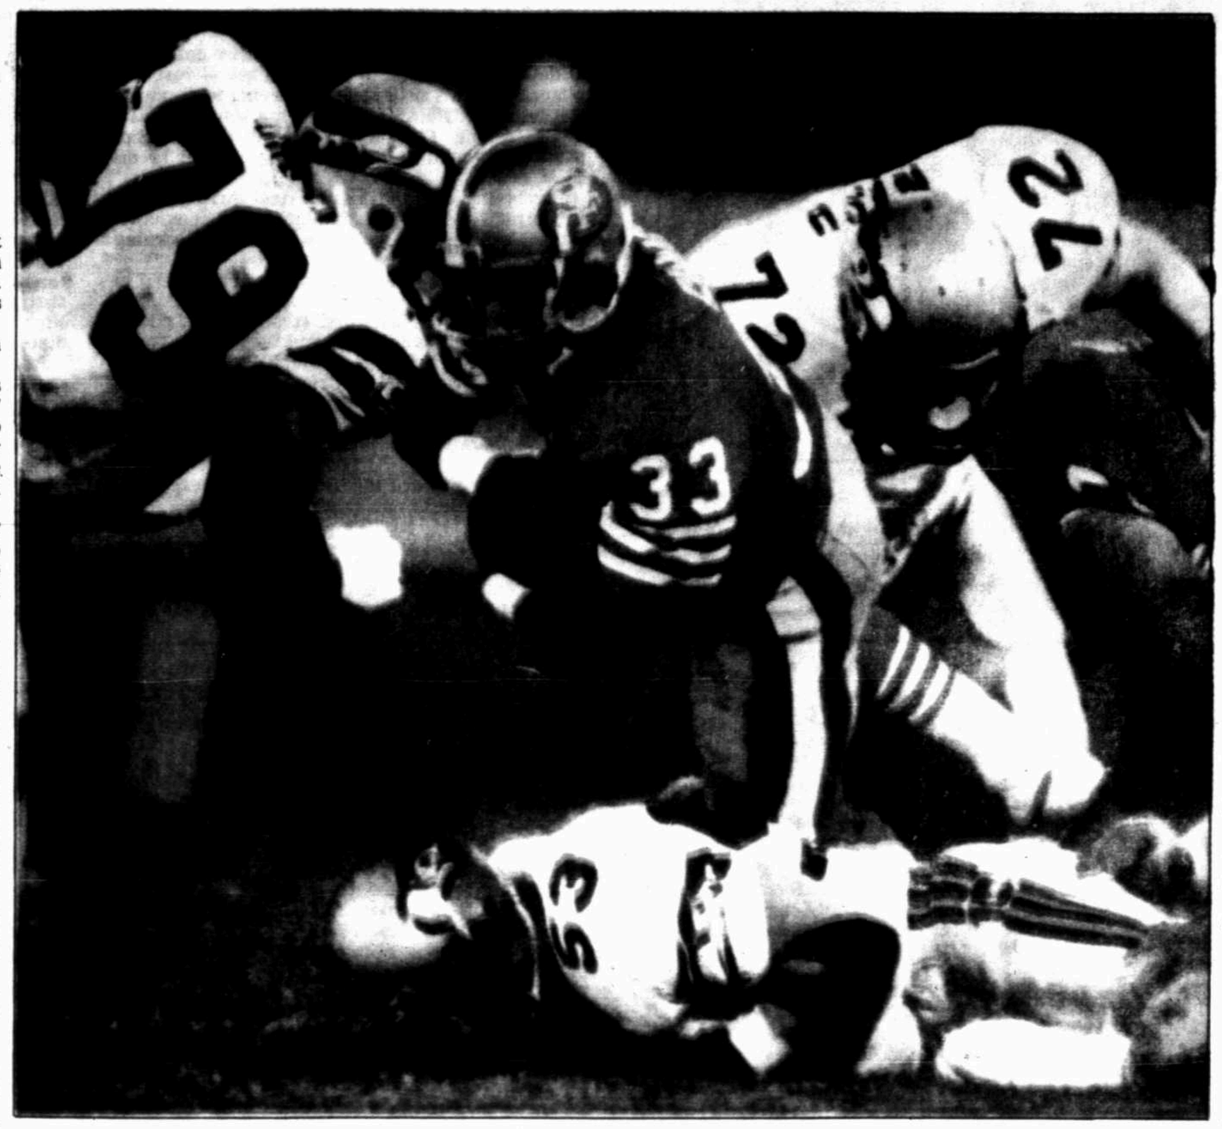

The reception was Clark's 408th career catch, a 49ers record. The flair with which he caught ball also gave the game a much-needed injection of dignity.

By interception or by bobble, the 49ers had given up the ball four times, and still they led by 12 points at halftime.

THOSE FIRST 30 minutes can only be explained by the full moon above Candlestick. Points were even disappearing off the scoreboard.

Consider the first period alone — then do the NFL a favor and pretend it never happened. Combined, quarterbacks Joe Montana and Dave Krieg completed two of 16 passes for 12 yards. Two of Montana's passes were caught by Seahawks, one of Krieg's by a Seahawk. And these two played quarterback in the Pro Bowl last year.

Seattle cornerback Dave Brown claimed the first interception, but Krieg's next pass overshot receiver Charle Young by yards and hit Carlton Williamson of the 49ers in the chest. Returning the easy theft 82 yards, Williamson set up the San Francisco offense at the Seattle 6, but then Montana fired one right to Seahawks safety John Harris in the end zone.

AP Laserphoto

San Francisco's Roger Craig (33) dives for a short gain in a sloppy Monday night football game.

Dana McLemore joined the comedy of errors, failing to chase down a Seattle punt that had skimmed through his legs, and the Seahawks recovered at the Niners' 29. After three futile plays, Norm Johnson kicked a 44-yard field goal, but he was flattened by Tory Nixon, and Seattle took the roughing penalty. They regretted it, though, when three plays netted minus yardage and Johnson missed the ensuing 49-yarder.

JUST WHEN it seemed Montana was snapping out of it — he hit Freddie Solomon for a 27-yard touchdown in the early second quarter — he threw another interception to Terry Taylor at the Seattle 1. But that benefited the 49ers, who trapped Curt Warner for a safety to make it 9-0.

Ray Wersching, whose 30-yard field-goal attempt with 1:05 left in the half was blocked, got another chance with six seconds remaining and connected from 32 yards. The only time either team came close to scoring the entire third period was when Johnson tried another field goal from 45 yards out — and missed.

SEATTLE AVERTED its first shutout loss since 1982 when Sam Merriman blocked Max Runager's punt and crawled for the recovery in the end zone.

Petition seeks Jones' apology, Moore's return

LUBBOCK (AP) — A petition bearing more than 1,000 names of people calling for reinstatement of fired Texas Tech football Coach Jerry Moore was presented to university President Lauro Cavazos on Monday.

Similar petitions are being circulated in Dallas and Houston to be mailed directly to Cavazos, spokesmen for a pro-Moore citizens group told the University Daily.

The petition also called for Athletic Director T. Jones, who fired Moore last week, to apologize to the Tech team for purportedly lying to them by telling them earlier that no change would be made in the head coaching position before the end of the season, the student newspaper reported in a copyright story.

A THIRD stipulation of the petition was that Jones make a public apology for saying that Tech recruiting was substandard.

Members of the Red Raiders squad recruited by Moore were deeply insulted by the statement, said Georgeann Kattner, one of the petitioners.

"Tech blood is very red. Our colors are not orange and white like UT's (University of Texas,)" said another protester, Jann Brewer.

Cavazos could not be reached immediately for comment. An assistant, Sharon Nelson, confirmed the petition had been received.

Moore said he was grateful to the petitioners, but said the chances of officials changing their mind and rehiring him were doubtful.

"I doubt they are going to do that but I appreciate their efforts and thoughtfullness," Moore said.

Red Raiders post cage comeback

LUBBOCK (AP) — Junior Mike Nelson had four key second-half field goals to spark Southwest Conference champion Texas Tech in a comeback rally to defeat Montana 65-58 in Tech's season opener Monday night.

Tech used a three-guard attack to hound the Grizzlies into numerous errors as the Raiders rallied from a 54-49 deficit with 7:54 to play.

Junior Mike Nelson gave Tech its first lead since the first half, 58-56, with a jumper with 3:03 left.

Senior guard Tony Benford paced the Red Raiders with 17 points and freshman guard Sean Gay added 11.

Montana guard John Boyd and forward Larry Krystkowiak paced the Grizzlies, now 1-1, with 12 points apiece.

Faust throws in the towel, resigns

CHICAGO (AP) — Embattled Notre Dame football Coach Gerry Faust resigned today after taking over the Irish program for the 1981 season and failing to produce the results that made him one of the nation's most-respected and successful high school coaches.

"It's best for the unversity, best for me and my family," Faust, the losingest coach in Notre Dame history, said in announcing his surprise decision during a weekly telephonic news conference from South Bend, Ind.

Faust, 50, said he informed Notre Dame President The Rev. Theodore Hesburgh of his decision Monday night.

"It's best for me to resign now to give the university an opportunity to get another coach before recruiting starts next week," Faust said.

The Irish are 5-5 this year — the final of Faust's five-year contract — with a game remaining Saturday at Miami.

IN FOUR previous seasons at Notre Dame, Faust compiled a 25-20-1 mark and took his 1983 Irish squad to the Liberty Bowl and the 1984 team to the Aloha Bowl.

But, his record at Notre Dame was a marked contrast to his remarkable 18-year career at Cincinnati's Moeller High School, where he won 174 games, lost 17 and tied two for a .907 winning percentage.

That success led to his hiring Nov. 24, 1980, as the 24th head coach in Notre Dame history, succeeding Dan Devine.

"I just made the decision last night," said Faust. "I haven't said anything to my players yet."

FAUST SAID he hasn't given any thought to the future.

"I want to sit back a couple of weeks and think about a new start, maybe as a head coach somewhere," said Faust.

Faust said he first thought about resigning after a 10-7 loss to Louisiana State last Saturday.

"It was a tough game. We had a chance. LSU had a chance," said Faust. "I thought about it after the game. I didn't want to make a decision then. I wanted to sit on it. You're always high when you win and low when you lose, and I didn't want to make a decision then."

Faust said he decided to wait until Monday to make up his mind.

"I talked with my family and talked with a personal friend," said Faust. "I wanted his insight. I also talked to my dad. I wanted to talk it over because coaching is such a lonely job."

FAUST SAID he would not have any input on the choice of his successor.

Lee's Mark Van Cott (50) goes up for two against Lubbock Coronado last week. The Rebels host Crane tonight at Lee Gym while Midland High will have its hands full with Hobbs, N.M., at Chaparral Center.

Tall City turns over to hoops for a night

From Staff Reports

The football mecca of the Tall City will turn into a basketball haven tonight as the Midland High and Midland Lee boys and the Midland High girls will all host local cage action.

The undefeated Bulldogs, after wins over Brownfield and Lamesa, will face their toughest test to date when perennial power Hobbs, N.M., comes to town for an 8 p.m. tipoff at Chaparral Center.

The Rebels, 0-2, will be going for their first win of the season when they host the Crane Golden Cranes, 1-1, at 8 p.m. in the Lee Gym and the MHS girls will put their unblemished 2-0 mark on the line with another 8 p.m. tipoff with Andrews at the Midland High Gym.

Lee's girls, also 2-0, are on the road at Hobbs.

THE BULLDOGS have found there is life after Darrell Davis and have posted a pair of wins over highly-regarded teams from lower classifications. Saturday, it was a nail-biting 81-79 win over Lamesa, one of Class 4A's top teams. In going undefeated, thave gotten some balanced play from a trio of seniors.

Forward Matt Sears heads the list with back-to-back 24 point performances while post Elvin Mackey is scoring at a 15 points per game clip. Anthony Deande has chipped in an average of 10 per game from the other forward spot.

The Rebels have been led in the early season by the brothers Dixon. Lee, who plays the point guard, poured in 24 points in a losing cause to Plainview to jump into the scoring lead with a 13.0 average, while brother Lonnie is averaging 11.0 a game. Post Eddie Riley chips in at a 10.5 clip.

THE MHS girls are sitting at 2-0 with relatively easy wins over Del Rio and San Antonio Southwest. Tonight against Hobbs, coach Jane Young and company will make their home debut against Andrews. The Mustangs are 1-0 after beating Greenwood 58-40 on Friday.

Sebrena Finch, a junior transfer from Stanton, leads the Bulldogs in scoring after the first two games with a 14.0 average while another junior, Amy Cumings, comes in right behind with a 10.5 average. Nadine Hill, Brenda Rodriguez, Amy Hubbard and Laura Martin are all over the 5.0 per game mark.

The Lee girls have been the epitome of a balanced attack in both their victories, also over Del Rio and SA Southwest. The Rebs have no one averaging in double figures after their two wins, but six players are above the five point per game mark, and 10 have hit the scoring column.

JUNIOR LAVETTE Wallace is the early leader in the scoring race at 9.0 per game. But after a zero point opening night effort, senior Becky White, last season's leading scorer, hit for 12 points in the win over San Antonio Southwest. Roz Eaden, Louise Brown, Tina Swinney and Candace Morney are all averaging more than 5.0 per game.

After tonight's contests, both MHS and Lee boys will be idle until the first round of the Tall City Tournament Friday. Lee will open with Del Rio at the Lee Gym at 1 p.m. Friday and MHS will start against Morton at 1 p.m. at the MHS Gym.

The girls teams travel to Amarillo over the Thanksgiving weekend for the Amarillo Tournament, a two-day affair with the finals on Saturday.

Day for 'Duplicate Numbers'

It seemed so insignificant at the time. Midland Lee quarterback Tuey Rankin throws an incomplete pass against El Paso Andress during Saturday's Area football war at Memorial Stadium. No one seemed to think much about it.

But it should have been a signal of things to come. That should have been the sign to predict 45-7. After all, this pass came on the first offensive play of the game.

Lee doesn't throw on first down. This was the omen — the telegraphed message — that the Rebels intended to open the flood gates on offense. Enough of these defensive gems where the offense doesn't get but mere mention in agate type.

THE ANDRESS coaches watched Lee's offense struggle, but win against Amarillo High. They also saw offensive guard Jake Young and called him the best offensive guard they had ever seen.

The Eagles' answer to Jake Young was 288-pound Jesse Branon. Put Branon against Young and neutralize the Lee game plan. Young's answer came on the third play of the game — 150-pound fullback Tommy Wood for 11 yards over Branon. Where's Branon? Seeing stars.

Designated hero Terry Baxter even got to throw another pass on "The Play." He has created his niche in Rebel history. Baxter has thrown twice this year for 117 yards and two touchdowns. You know the play — trips right, screen left for 40 yards to Rodney Sims. Andress must have felt like a San Angelo secondary back — weak in the knees.

And when you add in a defensive show featuring Terry Young in the role of Chuck Norris, you know Andress is in trouble. Young's by now legendary meetings with highly touted Andress tailback William Doctor are memories worth keeping.

"The Doctor" came to Midland with 1,515 yards rushing, and according to Lee assistant coach Van Tom Whatley, left "with under 1,600 yards and a sore sternum."

OF COURSE, some people don't get the message until the last minute, but there was another clue. In the Memorial Stadium program, there was a list of players listed under "Duplicate Numbers." These are junior varsity and sophomore players who pose as the El Paso Andress', Amarillo High's and Odessa Permian's during the week and then don "Duplicate Numbers" for the games. They don't usually get to play. Most of them did against Andress.

One of the "Duplicate Numbers" was sophomore quarterback Danny Elliott. He got his picture in the paper on Sunday and was called Dennis Sterling. Both wore No. 11 and both played. "Duplicate Numbers" cause problems for those of us who never got down to the "Duplicate Numbers" column.

ELLIOTT HAD a standout year for Lee's JV and Lee fans will know his name and number before he leaves high school. Father, Charlie, will get to see his son's picture in the paper with the right name under it at some point in the future. After all, you don't want to make a Baptist mad.

But it sure is fun when "Duplicate Numbers" get to play in a playoff game. As Snoopy would say, "Thanksgiving is 'Duplicate Numbers.'"

Cross country meet ends in Iowa tragedy

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — A twin-engine plane carrying members of the Iowa State University women's cross-country team crashed and burst into flames in a residential neighborhood Monday evening, killing all seven people aboard, authorities said.

The Aero Commander, one of three planes carrying members of the men's and women's teams and coaching staff from Milwaukee to Ames, crashed in a freezing drizzle shortly before 6 p.m., and missed a house by 70 feet, said Sgt. Bill Mullins.

Seven bodies were found in the charred wreckage, which lay crumpled at the base of an oak tree on a sloping street, Mullins said.

The victims included four members of the women's team, two male coaches and the pilot, said Polk County Medical Examiner R.C. Wooters. No identities were released.

All the members of the men's cross-country team were accounted for, Mullins said.

Bum Phillips resigned as head coach of the New Orleans Saints Monday. Phillips was a long time high school coach in Texas and later head man of the Houston Oilers before going to the Saints.

Bum abdicates; son takes reins

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Wade Phillips was in a strange situation as stop-gap successor to his father, Bum Phillips, as head coach of the New Orleans Saints.

"I guess the best thing to say is, 'Congratulations and condolences,' " he said.

The elder Phillips — a 62-year-old, crew-cut, tobacco-chewing throwback to a bygone era — resigned on Monday in his fifth season of trying to duplicate what he did at Houston by bringing New Orleans a winning season. The Saints are 4-8 in what Phillips guaranteed would be either a winning year or his last as coach.

In resigning, he canceled the final three years of his contract, giving up $1.3 million in the conviction that he isn't entitled to wages if he isn't earning them.

He was the sixth full-time head coach since 1967 to try and fail at New Orleans, and he lasted longer than any of his predecessors: Tom Fears, J.D. Roberts, John North, Hank Stram and Dick Nolan. The 8-8 records under Nolan in 1979 and Phillips in 1983 are the best ever in New Orleans.

Wade Phillips, 38, is the third interim head coach, and owner Tom Benson Jr. said he will be given the same consideration for the full-time job as any other applicant.

"We're going to win the next four," Benson said. "That's Wade's assignment, the next four."

ALSO ON Monday, Benson fired team president Eddie Jones, director of football operations Pat Peppler and public relations director Greg Suit. "We're not going to have anyone here who was ever associated with the old club," Benson said.

Bum Phillips was also general manager, and Benson said he would handle those duties on an interim basis.

He said he hoped to have a general manager hired before the end of December and a full-time head coach by the end of January.

As his first move as interim head coach, the younger Phillips accepted the resignation of offensive coordinator King Hill. "We discussed it, and it was a mutual decision," Wade Phillips said.

He said he asked his father to stay on and fight it out. "But he's a guy who makes decisions, and he decided it was best for the team, the city and Mr. Benson to go ahead and do it," he said.

Since 1976, Wade Phillips has been on his father's coaching staffs as defensive coordinator, first with the Houston Oilers and then at New Orleans. Prior to that, the younger Phillips coached at Orange, Texas, High School, the University of Houston, Oklahoma State and Kansas.

As a conversationalist, the younger Phillips is soft-spoken and quietly assertive, given more to logical argument and specific example, rather than the pithy, down-home witticisms and anecdotes that his father uses to entertain, enlighten and illustrate.

HE SAID he considered resigning with his father. "One of the reasons I took the job was that I felt I was the one who could do the job," he said.

The Saints play next at home on Sunday against the Los Angeles Rams. Then New Orleans visits St. Louis before closing out at home against San Francisco and Atlanta.

Sherrill: 'Horns have edge in experience

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Aggie head coach Jackie Sherill says he is not surprised that the University of Texas has made such a good showing this season despite predictions the Longhorns would finish fourth or fifth

"I thought Texas would be much better than that. You get to know them a lot better when you recruit against them every year," Sherrill said at a press conference Monday.

The Aggies face the Longhorns Thursday to see which team will go to the Cotton Bowl. Texas and A&M both are tied 8-2 overall and 6-1 for the Southwest Conference season.

"Texas always will have the athletes," Sherrill said. "They lose people — like in the interior this past year — but they still have athletes to take their place.

"TEXAS HAS a big edge in experience. Eight-three percent of the people they'll play are juniors or seniors. They've all been around four or five seasons," he said. "On the other hand, only 44 percent of our top people are juniors and seniors."

Sherrill credits Texas sophomore quarterback Bret Stafford with helping the Longhorns boost their offensive output to 24.4 points and 372.1 yards per game.

Stafford, a sophomore who has developed into one of the conference's best quarterbacks, is credited by many with helping the Longhorns to emerge as a title contender. He has completed 53 of 95 passes for 834 yards and three touchdowns and rushed 83 times for 313 yards and scores.

"The biggest difference for them has been Stafford," said Sherrill. "He turns bad plays into outstanding plays."

AGGIE OUTSIDE linebacker Todd Howard agreed with Sherrill. "We're going to have to control Stafford. We're going to have to put a hat on him and hold on. He's fast and elusive," Howard said.

But the Aggies will have to worry about more than Stafford to clinch a victory Thursday.

"The keys to this game are how the lines play each other and who controls the kicking game. Texas has an outstanding kicking game," he said. "Last year, we won the kicking game, but I'm worried about our inconsistent field goal kicking."

Aggie place kicker Eric Franklin has been erratic, missing 11 of his 26 attempts.

But Texas place kicker Jeff Ward has made 18 of 23 attempts, including five field goals in the Longhorns' 15-13 victory over Arkansas at Fayetteville.

Longhorn punter John Teltschik is averaging 44.6 yards a kick, while A&M punter Todd Tschantz is producing at a 43.2 average.

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Coach Fred Akers says the 25-point loss to Texas A&M last year left him with "a big ol' sick feeling," because his Longhorns were not at their best.

Texas and Texas A&M play Thanksgiving in a football rivalry that began in 1894, but this is the first time since 1943 that the two teams have squared off for the Southwest Conference title and Cotton Bowl bid.

A crowd of 76,000, nearly 4,000 over capacity, is expected for the 7:18 p.m., CST, kickoff. The game will be televised nationally by ESPN. Both teams are 8-2, and have won four in a row.

The loser will get a bid to the Bluebonnet Bowl.

Akers at his weekly news conference Monday was told that what Texas linebacker Chris Duliban remembered most from last year was A&M Coach Jackie Sherrill getting carried off the field on the shoulders of his players. Longhorn defensive end James McKinney had a "sick spot" in his stomach, Akers was told, and he was asked how he felt after the 37-12 loss.

"I THINK any time that you lose and you don't feel that that you did your best, you're going to have a big ol' sick feeling in the pit of your stomach for a long time, and I'm no different than anyone else. That happened to me. We didn't do as well as we could, and that was the disappointing thing about it," Akers said.

Aker agreed with observers who say that A&M has more talent throughout the team but added: "They usually have a lot of talent."

Akers said the A&M defense is as good as any since he became Texas coach in 1977. He said the difference between this year's Aggie team and last year's "probably ... is the consistency they've had in playing defense. They've really been strong. And (quarterback Kevin) Murray has been healthy."

A&M has basically the same team that walloped Texas last year, except Murray was hurt. But Akers said the Longhorns are stronger in 1985, also.

"I think we're playing with a lot more effort," he said. "I think we're healthier among our running backs. I know we're a lot different there. We're more experienced in the secondary ... we're really playing with great effort, making fewer mistakes as we go along."

THE SWC championship game was set up when A&M whipped Texas Christian, 53-6, and Texas defeated Baylor, 17-10, last Saturday, and Akers was asked if the Baylor victory was as big as any for him.

"I don't think I can think of a bigger one," he said.

"How far back?"

"As far as you want," Akers said. "That thing was just vital, absolutely necessary."

Texas had such an all-out team effort against Baylor, Akers said, that eight Longhorn players tied for most valuable player on defense and six on offense.

Asked if the A&M game was bigger, Akers replied, "Yeah, sure. They get bigger."

He said he couldn't be sure if compared with the "Big Shootout" between Arkansas and Texas for the national football championship in 1969.

"It could. There's a lot riding on it. It is the first time in most people's memory that both teams have a chance to get in the Cotton Bowl with a win. It's about as big as you can get them."

Yellow Jackets want to set record straight

Associated Press

Georgia Tech had gone from No. 1 in the national preseason rankings to No. 2 without playing a game, but Coach Bobby Cremins was not giving ground to anyone.

The Yellow Jackets fell to No. 2 in the first regular-season poll after North Carolina opened its season with a 37-point victory over UCLA to take over the top spot.

Monday night, Georgia Tech opened its season with a 59-point victory over South Carolina-Aiken, 119-60, as the Yellow Jackets set school records for points and victory margin. John Salley scored 21 points to lead six players in double figures.

"That was a great game for us. We needed that," Cremins said. "I feel like we have a great nucleus. I think we have as good a nucleus as anyone in the country."

Only two other ranked teams were in action Monday night. No. 15 North Carolina State defeated Western Carolina 80-57, and No. 16 Nevada-Las Vegas routed South Carolina 73-56.

Top Twenty

North Carolina State also opened its season with an easy victory over Western Carolina. Guard Nate McMillan led four players in double figures with a career-high 19 points.

The Wolfpack took a 35-24 halftime lead, then held a lead of between 12-17 points throughout the second half. Forward Leroy Gasque paced Western Carolina with 19 points and 11 rebounds.

UNLV 73, South Carolina 56

At Las Vegas, Armon Gilliam scored 14 points and grabbed 16 rebounds to lead Nevada-Las Vegas to its second victory without a loss.

The Rebels led 38-30 at halftime before racing to a 25-point bulge midway through the second half before Coach Jerry Tarkanian began clearing his bench.

Unranked

Texas opened its season with a 94-68 victory over Baptist College of Charleston, S.C., getting 18 points from junior college transfer Patrick Fairs. The Longhorns led by 11 when they went on a 20-point run to take an 81-56 lead.

Dan Gingehmeimer scored 19 points to lead Missouri over California, 61-46. Derrick Chievous scored five of his 15 points in a 9-2 run that gave the Tigers a 23-16 lead with six minutes left in the first half.

Stephen F. Austin defeated Louisiana Tech 67-58, handing Tech its fisrt home defeat in 39 games.

Mavs deal Nimphius

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas Mavericks of the National Basketball Association landed the tallest player in their brief history today by trading center Kubt Nimphius for 7-foot-2 James Donaldson of the Los Angeles Clippers.

Donaldson, a four-year veteran, has a career average of 9.2 points, 6.6 rebounds and 1.4 blocked shots per game. He led the NBA in shooting percentage last year with 63 percent from the field.

"I've always heard the Mavericks were a first-class organization and I'm happy to be playing for them," said Donaldson, who could be in a Maverick uniform as early as Tuesday.

Norm Sonju, general manager of the Mavericks, said, "The coaches have been intrigued by Donaldson. He gives us a dimension we've never had in the past."

Nimphius averaged seven points and four rebounds per game in his career with the Mavericks.

Slick fielding Guillen, AL's top rookie

CHICAGO (AP) — Ozzie Guillen, the exuberant rookie who cost the Chicago White Sox a Cy Young winner but paid unexpected hitting and fielding dividends, is the American League Rookie of the Year.

"It can only happen to you one time in baseball," Guillen (pronounced Geeh-JEN) said Monday after learning of the outcome of voting by the Baseball Writers' Association of America. "It is the greatest thing to happen to me in a long time.

"I'm excited and I'm happy that I was able to help the White Sox and do enough to be voted this award," the 21-year-old shortstop said in a telephone interview from his native Venezuela.

Guillen committed just 12 errors in 150 games last season, the fewest of any regular American League shortstop, while hitting .273.

He came to the White Sox Dec. 10 in a seven-player deal that sent right-handed pitcher LaMarr Hoyt, the 1983 Cy Young award winner, to San Diego along with two minor leaguers for Guillen, pitcher Tim Lollar, infielder Luis Salazar and a minor leaguer.

GUILLEN RECEIVED 16 of a possible 28 first-place votes — alloted two apiece among BBWAA members in each of the 14 American League cities — for 101 total points. Ted Higuera, a left-handed pitcher from the Milwaukee Brewers, was second with nine first-place votes and 67 points.

Higuera had a 15-8 record and 3.90 ERA for the Brewers, allowing 186 hits in 212 1-3 innings while striking out 127 and walking 63.

Third in the balloting was another Brewer, infielder Earnest Riles, who got 29 points, followed by outfielder Oddibe McDowell, Texas, 25; pitcher Stu Cliburn, California, 16; pitcher Brian Fisher, New York, 7; pitcher Tom Henke, Toronto, 5, and catcher Mark Salas, Minnesota, 2.

McDowell, Cliburn and Henke got the other first-place votes. A first-place vote counted five points, with three awarded for second and one for third.

"Of course, I thought about the rookie of the year award. But the most important thing to me was what I was able to do for the team," Guillen said. "My biggest thrill was getting the game-winning RBI in Tom Seaver's 300th win."

"HE DID not play like a 21-year-old rookie," said Chicago Manager Tony LaRussa. "He played like a seasoned veteran. He far exceeded our expectations. We expected him to hit about .240 and provide us with some solid defense."

Guillen is the third Venezuelan, after Chico Carrasquel and Luis Aparicio, to play shortstop for the White Sox and is the club's fifth Rookie of the Year winner.

The other rookie winners were Ron Kittle in 1983, Tommie Agee in 1966, Gary Peters in 1963 and Aparicio in 1956. Alvin Davis of the Seattle Mariners won the 1984 AL rookie award.

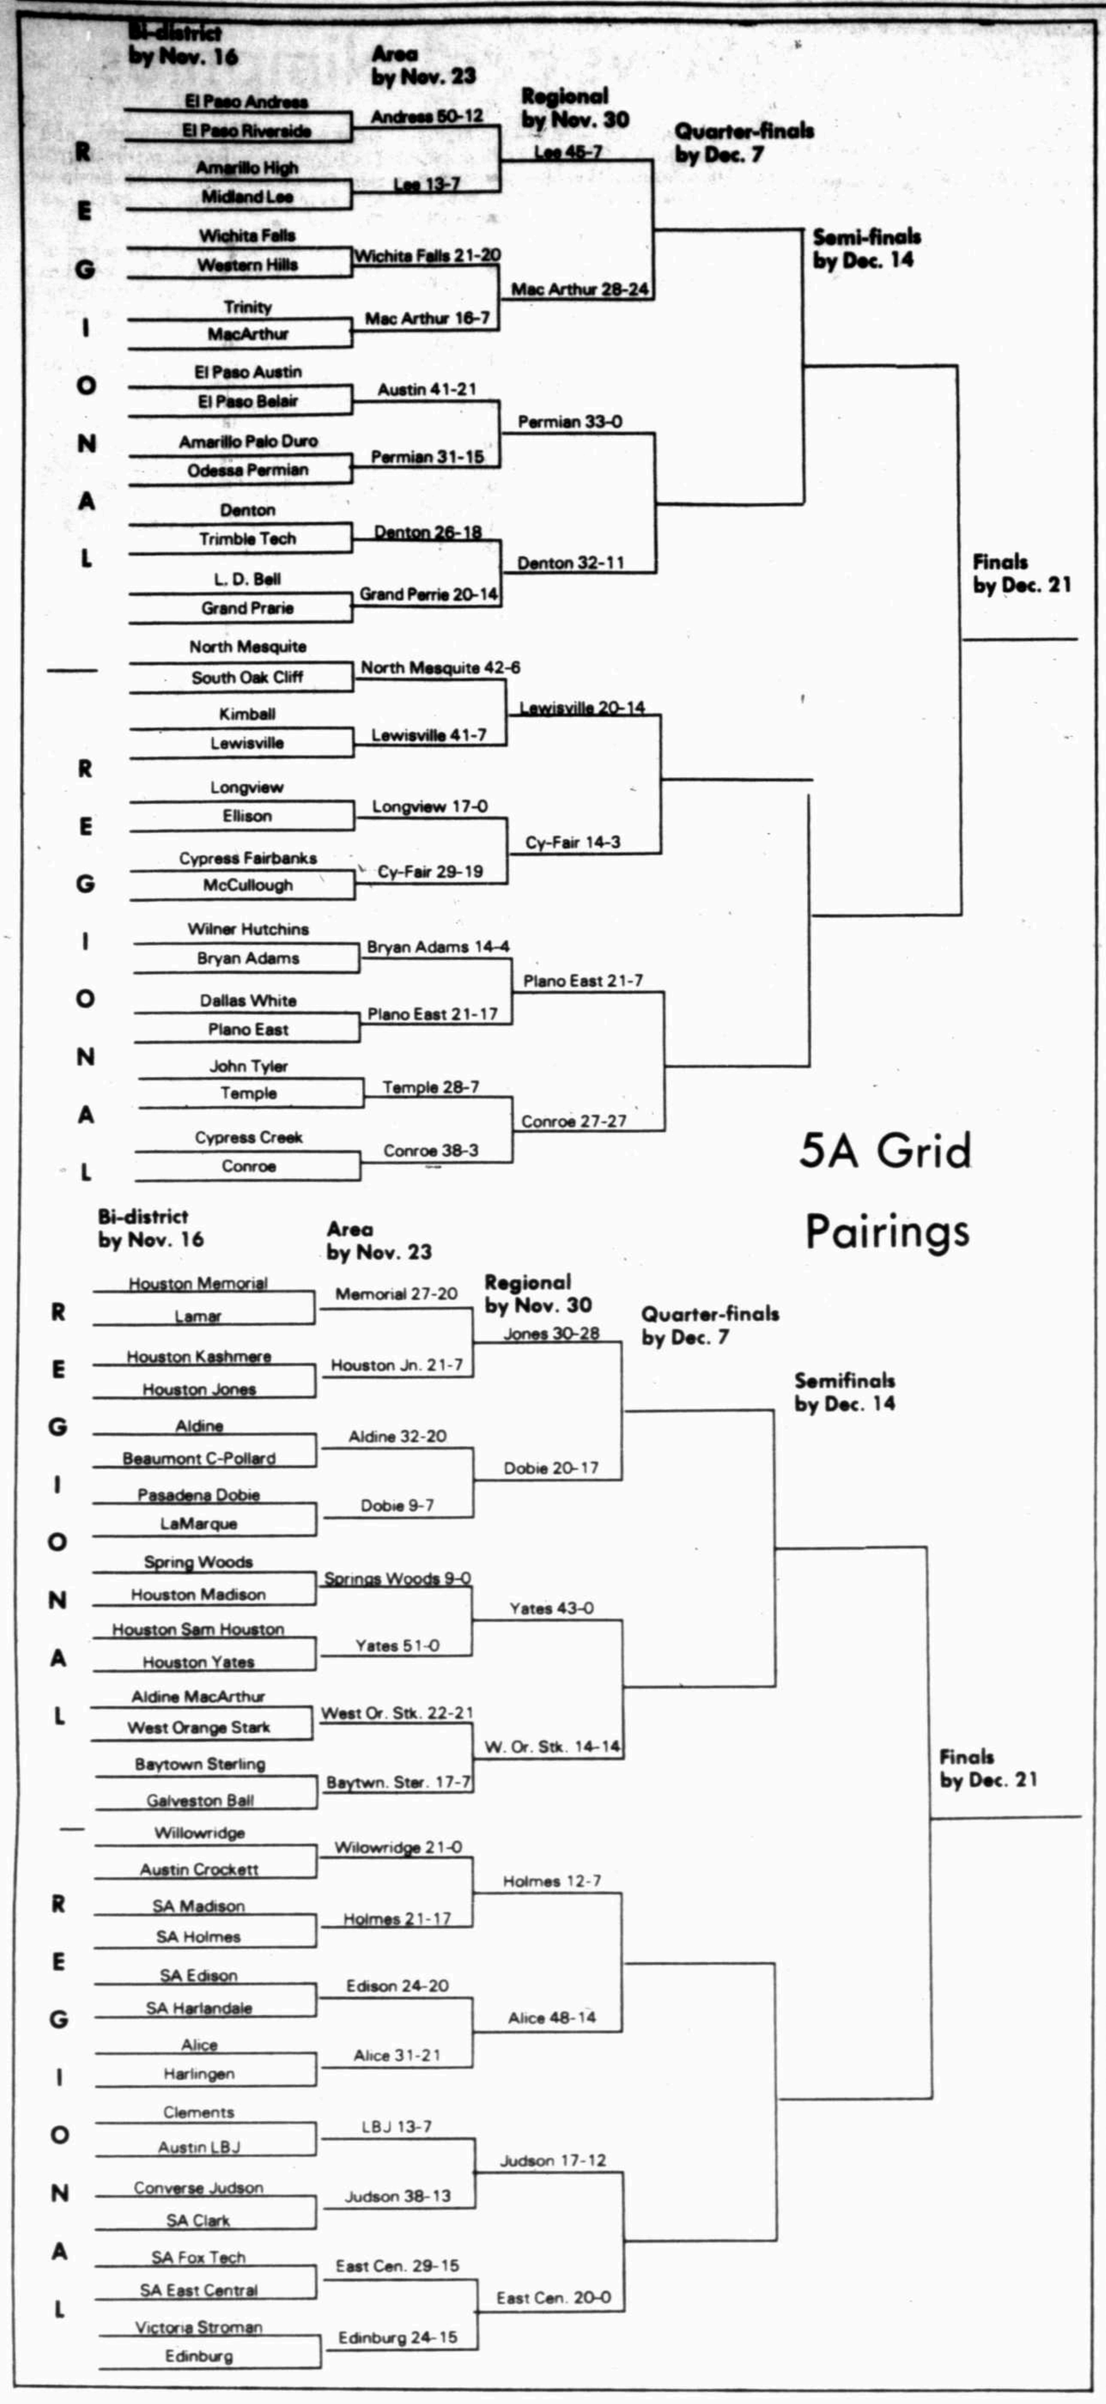

Guillen was a .308 hitter in four minor-league seasons, but he began the 1985 season slowly. The left-handed hitter batted just .210 through June 10, but he hit .302 the rest of the way. He walked only 12 times and stole seven bases, struck out only 36 times and scored 71 runs in 491 at-bats.

San Diego had many offers for Guillen before trading him during the 1984 winter meetings. In 1984 with Las Vegas of the AAA Pacific Coast League, Guillen hit .296 with 81 runs scored, while committing only 17 errors.

Area Football

After a pair of knee-knocking, heart-thumping playoff wins, it sure isn't going to get any easier for Rankin and Reagan County in the state football playoffs. And for Iraan, things couldn't get any easier.

The three are the area's last hopes for state playoff glory and each will be stretched to the limits in games this weekend. Reagan County came back from a 24-13 halftime deficit to record a 27-24 win over Shallowater; Rankin held off Fort Davis in the closing minutes for a 21-14 win; and Iraan easily polished off the playoff hopes of Dell City in a 77-6 laugher.

In Class A, the Red Devils of Rankin (8-3), with their first Bi-district championship since 1980, will get a chance to play undefeated Goldthwaite, ranked No. 2 in the state poll, Friday at 7:30 in Robert Lee.

The Class 2A Owls (9-3) take their Area championship up the road to Lamesa for a Regional contest with Abernathy, No. 8 in Class 2A, in a 7:30 p.m. Friday. And finally, Iraan (11-0), ranked fifth in Class A, tackles Roscoe at 7:30 Friday in Odessa's Ratliff Stadium.

EACH OPPONENT represents a significant step up the playoff ladder for the area teams.

"Anybody still left in this thing at this point has got to be considered a good team," Reagan County coach Ronnie Reeger points out.

At 11-1 and in the rankings all season, Abernathy certainly fits Reeger's "good team" description. The Antelopes boast both speed and size — and an impressive 24-0 shellacking of previously unbeaten Sanford-Fritch last week in Area play. This is their second straight playoff appearance.

"They're a big team size-wise and they have good team quickness. They run a lot of power plays, they just like to run the football and hang on to it," Reeger said. "We don't see any glaring mistakes or weaknesses on the film. Right now they are living off all the things tradition and several years of hard work will give you."

REEGER SEEMED to get his team's offense in high-gear in the second half against Shallowater after a mistake-filled opening two quarters. The Owls put all three members of the backfield over the century mark in rushing. Fullback Tim Tatum led the charge with 115 yards. Tailback James West was next with 111 and quarterback Scott Lipsey edged over with 102 on the night.

"We've been trying to do that for a while now, it just turned out that we had the right combination of things going for us against Shallowater that we could do it," said Reeger.

The Owls chances against Abernathy will certainly improve with another 300-plus rushing performance.

THE DEVILS are also running into a buzz-saw in 12-0 Goldthwaite, district champions of 8A and 16-0 conquerers of unbeaten Forsan. Forsan nosed out Rankin 21-20 in a game way back in late September, but Rankin has made large strides since the early season.

Although the Devils were big favorites over Fort Davis, coach Dwayne Turner didn't expect the blowout some pollsters were predicting.

"I know a lot of people thought we would run over them, but I didn't," Turner said. "We didn't play real good, but Fort Davis really got after us. We played good enough to win and that's good enough right now."

In the Eagles, Rankin faces a team that lives by the big play almost as much as they do. To beat Forsan, Goldthwaite scored on a 65-yard pass and a 45-yard run.

"That's what speed will do for you," said Turner. "But I feel like if we play a good game and get our kicking game going, we can win. We put ourselves in a hole three times in our punting game against Fort Davis."

IRAAN MUST be feeling like they can win against everyone. The Braves have steamrolled nearly everyone they've played this season, the closest game was a 13-12 squeaker over Rankin.

"I think the easy ones are all over now," Iraan coach Steve Maurer said looking at Roscoe. "They're a real good club — and big. In Matt Denman they have one of the finest quarterbacks in West Texas."

Roscoe, the District 7A champs, is 10-2 this season.

The Braves have some impressive athletes of their own, however. Directing the potent offense, 496 points in 11 games, is senior quarterback Kirby Godfrey. But the big runners are senior Mike Volanti, 870 yards and 18 touchdowns, and junior Chewy Ulate, 831 yards and 14 scores.

"What makes us tough to defense is our speed and we make them defense the whole field, from sideline to sideline," Maurer said.

Oil prices expected to drop $1 to $2 per barrel

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

As flat demand for petroleum products continues, crude oil prices will drop by another $1 to $2 a barrel by next spring, major oil industry executives now believe.

The continued slump is likely to hold oil industry earnings at 1985 levels and, "if it varies, 1986 will be worse," said George M. Keller, chairman and chief executive of Chevron.

The executives made their comments last week while attending the annual meeting of the American Petroleum Institute in San Francisco. Although most expect oil prices eventually to recover, the executives predicted that the industry faces another year of too much oil and too little demand for refined petroleum products, especially gasoline.

The industry executives' forecast that the price of crude oil will range between $25 and $26 per barrel is less severe than some Wall Street estimates, which generally range from $20 to $25 a barrel. The lowest estimate of next year's prices has been offered by Saudi Arabia's oil minister, Ahmed Zaki Yamani, who said that oil prices would fall to $18 a barrel unless oil-producing countries, including fellow Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries members, reduce production.

Since Yamani made that forecast in October, however, Saudi Arabia has increased its production to 3.8 million to 4 million barrels daily this month from 2.2 million barrels a day in June. Saudi Arabia's quota under current OPEC rules is 4.3 million barrels daily.

Despite the expectations of price drops, however, prices have been higher recently for oil sold on the "spot," or non-contract, market. But analysts say those increases are due solely to seasonal demand, which is greater in the fall as refineries build stocks for the winter heating season. This year, stocks of crude oil are at their lowest levels since 1979, analysts say, heightening the seasonal demand for crude oil. Saudi Light, the OPEC benchmark crude oil, is trading at $27.90 a barrel on the spot market, compared to $27.05 in July.

Keller acknowledged that, "if OPEC decided to sell more barrels" beyond the winter season, "there probably isn't a bottom to prices." But few executives now expect OPEC to exceed its self-imposed production limit of 16 million barrels a day. For one thing, Keller said, there isn't a market for any more oil.

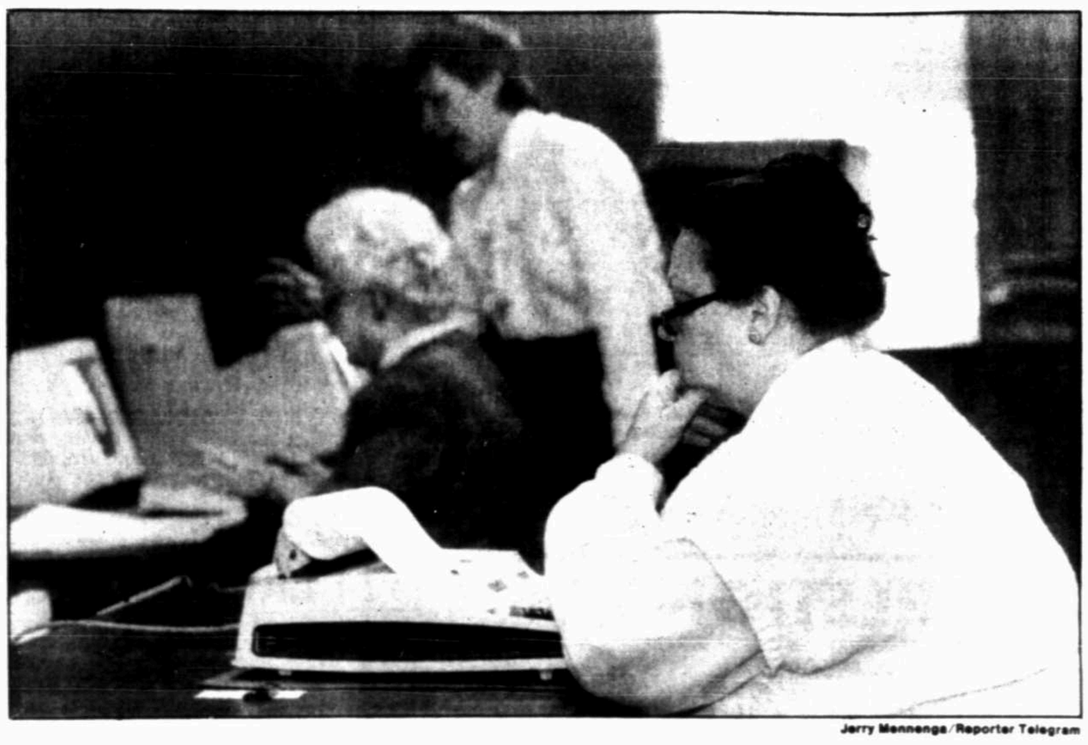

"What we've learned is that demand responds very slowly to price. The industry will start to substitute oil for coal at around $10 to $15 a barrel, and only if they think those prices will last," he said.

Ralph E. Bailey, chairman and chief executive of Conoco, said that the real question is "who is going to lead prices down? I don't think producing countries are going to shoot themselves in the foot." Bailey, who said that he isn't among those who are "super-pessimistic," said that he expects some "resistance" once prices reach $25 per barrel.

Bailey said "one large question mark" is the continued improvement in the refining and marketing side of the business, which consists primarily of gasoline production and sales. The industry was able to keep stocks fairly low this year, resulting in fairly stable gasoline prices in most of the nation.

Keller said that, if the national economy remains healthy, "there's a possibility of a slight uptick" in refining and marketing income as a result of massive cutbacks that the industry has made in the number of gas stations and refineries. Chevron recently sold a network of 4,000 Northeastern stations. That uptick, he said, might compensate for further "softness" in crude oil prices.

Flat prices mean a flat year for exploration since "there is almost a direct relationship between the price of oil and the amount of holes drilled," Bailey said. The API reported that oil and gas exploration was down 5.6 percent for the third quarter of 1985 from the same period a year ago. "Spending for exploration industrywide is now $32 billion, compared to $55 billion only a few years ago," said John F. Bookout, president and chief executive of Shell Oil.

Economist says Texas housing recession over

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Home prices in Texas aren't likely to drop much more because the state may be rebounding from the housing recession, a Texas A&M University researcher says.

The number of new homes that sold this year in Texas rose from 19 percent in the first quarter to 26 percent during the third quarter, said Dr. Arthur Wright, a research economist with the university's Texas Real Estate Research Center.

"This suggests that houses are starting to sell better," Wright said Monday, also citing figures that show the price of houses sold has increased after a decline last year.

Cities with diversified economic bases such as Dallas-Fort Worth, Austin and San Antonio avoided the housing recessions, he said.

But the housing market in Houston and other cities dependent on the energy industry, such as Beaumont, Port Arthur, Corpus Christi, Midland and Odessa were hardest hit by the recession, he said.

Thousands of Texans — especially Houstonians — sold their houses for less than what they paid for them last year, he said. Cities in the Rio Grande Valley were hurt because of the devaluation of the peso and a hard freeze last winter that destroyed the citrus crop, he said.

However, Wright was optimistic about the future of the housing market.

"I don't think prices will go much lower. We're still having a lot of foreclosures, but I believe the worst of it is behind us," he said. "Now, it's just a matter of how quickly the market will pick up again."

The average price for homes statewide in the third quarter of 1984 was $92,900, dropping to $86,600 in the fourth quarter and climbing up to $97,900 during the third quarter of 1985.

"You usually get the fluctuations, but overall the figures suggest that we are coming out of the housing slump," Wright said. "There are other things, such as the percentage of new listings relative to houses sold, which suggest things are looking up, even for Houston."

New multiple listing service steps up board's efficiency

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil, Writer

A new, inexpensive computerized multiple listing service is expected to dramatically increase realtor participation and improve efficiency for members of the Midland Multiple Listing Service.

The Midland Board of Realtors Multiple Listing Service has been computerized for six years, according to Penny Willhite, public relations representative for the board, but only 15 members were using the system. "Most of the members didn't want to pay the $250 monthly access fee," she said. "And most really couldn't afford that kind of fee."

That's expected to change after today, when the board goes on-line with a new multiple listing service, the new RCSMLS-Microvax II VMS computer system. Access to the computerized listing system will now be free to all 400 board members and a seven-fold increase in realtor computer offices is expected before the end of the year.

Willhite said this was the first realtor application of the Microvax hardware in the nation. The installation of the $100,000 system ends a three year research project by the Board, trying to find the right system for the Midland Board. "As soon as we heard about it," Willhite stated, "We knew immediately the Microvax was for us." The Microvax II is listed as one of the top 100 scientific innovations of 1985 in the December issue of Science Digest.

Joan Noel, president Midland Board of Realtors, predicted that virtually each of the 100 member-offices will have at least one terminal by the end of the first year of operation. Willhite said she also expects more people to use the system "because it's easy, fast and cheaper. The MLS will be stronger, more current, and offer more information. I expect there'll be more input and more data retrieval, and I think it'll give each property more exposure."

"Now you can call any listing by its address, selling price, the number of garages, bedrooms, bathrooms."

Willhite and Noel traveled to Washington D.C., where they were trained to use the system and also to train others. They have since trained 10 others, and the board will offer a couple of classes a week for Board members, Willhite said. "This is done on a voluntary basis, so it doesn't cost anything. It'll be an ongoing thing, because we'll be getting new members, others might need re-training, and we'll offer advanced training."

Although the Microvax II is classified as a mini computer, it is smaller than a two-drawer file cabinet and performs complex functions with the speed of a much larger unit. It will be using the Realtor Computer Services Multiple Listing System software, (RCSMLS), which is endorsed and marketed by the National Association of Realtors. Joan Noel and Anita Noles, co-chairmen of the Board's computer committee, were responsible for choosing the system.

Bright Banc loses $1 million judgement

DALLAS (AP) — A Dallas County judge and jury have ordered Bright Banc Savings Association to pay nearly $1 million to a former thrift vice president who claimed he had been wrongfully fired.

Glenn Sealock of Plano, former vice president for Texas Federal Savings and Loan Association, now Bright Banc, claimed his employers violated his contract when they ousted him in November 1983.

Sealock claimed he would have made more than $270,000 from his stock options had he not been terminated.

Texas Federal was taken over in December 1984 by Dallas Cowboys general partner H.R. "Bum" Bright and renamed Bright Banc Savings Association.

Dallas County District Court Judge Leonard Hoffman on Monday ordered Bright Banc to pay the award.

Sealock was forced to sign a contract that specified his term of employment with Texas Federal when he joined the organization as vice president in charge of data processing in 1979, said his attorney, William Reed.

He said the contract stipulated that Sealock should receive double his salary and benefits if he was wrongfully dismissed. Under the agreement's terms, Sealock could be fired only for cause or if the thrift felt he had not performed to its satisfaction, Reed said.

Bright Banc lawyers argued that the company had been dissatisfied with Sealock's performance. But the jury disagreed and awarded him $790,000 in damages and $117,000 in legal fees.

Bum Bright

In addition, Hoffman set prejudgment interest on the money at 10 percent, bringing the award to nearly $1 million, Reed said.

Bright Banc officials could not be reached for comment this morning, but Reed said he expected the firm to appeal.

After he was fired, Sealock formed his own company, Sota Information Services of Plano, which writes software for savings and loans.

Domestic car sales continue to drop

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

DETROIT — Domestic car sales, still hurting as a result of the incentive-induced sales boom of late summer, fell 27.2 percent in mid-November, the seven U.S. auto makers reported Monday.

The companies said they sold 184,327 new cars in the Nov. 11-20 period, down from 225,196 in the comparable 1984 period. It was the fifth consecutive period of declining sales for the domestic manufacturers.

Auto analysts said the recent sales drought is the result of record-setting sales in late August and September, when most companies offered cut-rate financing and other incentives to sell leftover 1985 models.

"The hang-over continues," commented David Healy, an auto analyst with Drexel Burnham Lambert. "The rebate programs in August and September brought in everybody ready to buy a car in the near future."

He added, however, that since incentive programs traditionally take away sales from future periods, an elongated "payback" period following a round of extensive incentives is not indicative of a drop in demand for cars.

"It's too early to say the overall sales rate is declining," Healy said.

Analysts expect the sales rate to continue to fall below year-ago levels through the end of the year unless another round of broad incentives is introduced.

According to industry observers, General Motors is the most likely candidate to spark another incentive war.

The Nov. 11-20 period was the first in which Chrysler Corp. felt the effects of the 12-day United Auto Workers strike of October, with sales falling 29.7 percent from a year ago.

Scott Merlis, an automotive industry analyst at the investment firm Morgan Stanley & Co., said the slump in sales followed a tremendous boom in late August and September caused by discount financing and rebates.

Incentives have not returned to the market in a big way since the 1986 model year began in early October, as the seven major U.S. carmakers try to rebuild their inventories.

But after reviewing the latest sales reports, analyst Gary Glaser of the investment firm First Boston Corp. in New York said, "I think we'll see aggressive incentives back in place shortly."

Survey says economy won't dampen consumer spending

Associated Press

Consumers have lost some confidence in the economy but will continue to spend if they think they can get a good buy, a new survey says.

The University of Michigan survey of consumer attitudes released Monday said 25 percent of all families expected economic improvement, down from 33 percent a year earlier and the all-time high of 52 percent in the second quarter of 1983.

But at the same time, consumers are willing to buy if the price is right, it said.

Beryl Sprinkel, President Reagan's chief economic adviser, also predicted that consumer spending will continue to stimulate the economy in coming months, even though interest rates and inflation may move higher.

In an interview with The Associated Press on Monday, Sprinkel said that Americans will keep buying — this Christmas season and into next year — despite record levels of personal indebtedness.

Meanwhile, analysts said reports from U.S. automakers that showed domestic car sales plunging 27.2 percent in mid-November suggest Americans are shying away from taking on the burden of monthly car payments.

Lower mortgage interest rates put the housing market on a solid foundation last month.

The National Association of Realtors said sales of existing homes rose 1.2 percent in October to the second highest level in the past six years. Resales of single-family houses ran at an annual rate of 3.49 million units.

Existing sales had reached 3.5 million units in August, which was the highest annual rate since October 1979 when previously owned homes were sold at an annual rate of 3.77 million units.

Mortgage rates have been falling almost steadily since reaching a peak of 15.2 percent in the summer of 1984. In the week ended last Friday, interest on fixed-rate mortgages stood at 11.64 percent, according to a survey of rates released by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp.

Details of the University of Michigan survey, which is conducted quarterly by the university's Institute for Social Research, said recent interest rate reductions, special financing and discounts have encouraged spending.

Although some analysts have voiced concern about the high levels of consumer debt, Sprinkel, the chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, said, "The record of consumers' ability to handle debt is extremely high."

He said recent economic reports support his optimism, adding that another recession is not even "on the horizon" at this point. He forecast that the recovery, now more than three years old, would continue well into 1986.

"My philosophy is that we get business recessions not because (recoveries) get old and tired or that their length is pre-ordained, but that we get them by adverse economic policies. We're going to do our best to avoid that," he said

Included among the automakers' reports, covering the Nov. 11-20 period, was a drop of 27.3 percent in General Motors Corp. sales. No. 2 Ford Motor Co.'s sales fell 30.7 percent.

DEVELOPMENTS

Development slated in Ector field

From Staff Reports

Eleven infield wells are being planned for the Harper field of Ector County, two by Atkins Petroleum Corp. and nine by Shell Western Exploration & Production, Inc.

Atkins plans two wells on the Cowden "B" lease, nine miles west of Odessa. The No. 3 Cowden "B" and No. 4 Cowden "B" are staked in Section 31 of Block 43, T-2-S, T&P survey, and have a proposed depth of 4,500 ft.

Shell's nine wells are staked in the East Harper Unit, four miles west of Odessa, and all nine have a proposed depth of 4,500 ft. All are located in Block 44, T-2-S, T&P survey.

Two are in Section 24, two are in Section 25, three are in Section 26, one in Section 27, and one in Section 23.

Tax reform could cut growth in IRA contributions by $8 billion

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Growth in Individual Retirement Account contributions could be cut by $7 billion to $8 billion next year if the House Ways and Means Committee's version of tax reform becomes law, according to pension consultants.

Savings institutions and mutual funds, which hold a significant number of IRA dollars, are lobbying to change the bill while planning campaigns to maintain their share of the market.

The situation arises because the committee's bill would require anyone with a tax-deferred savings plan run by his employer — known as a 401(k) plan — to deduct from his IRA any contributions to his 401(k).

The effect would be to make most employees better off putting their money into a 401(k) than an IRA. New limits would result in increased revenue of $4.9 billion over five years.

These so-called "K-plans" are employer-sponsored programs under which employees can set aside a portion of their pay in an investment account, deferring taxes on it until retirement. In addition, employers may make matching contributions, which are also tax-deferred.

Under current law, total contributions by both employee and employer are limited to $30,000, or 25 percent of compensation, whichever is less. The committee would restrict the total amount employer and employe can put in to $25,000. This includes a ceiling of $7,000 on employee contributions.

Because of the linkage with IRAs, the employee faces the choice of being able to put a maximum of $2,000 into an IRA (or $2,250 for a spousal IRA) or up to $7,000 for a 401(k). He or she could not contribute $2,000 to an IRA and $5,000 to 401(k). Similarly, the K-plan participant, who now has the choice of contributing $2,000 or $1,125 or $250 to a spousal IRA will be limited to a $250 contribution.

The employee can fund an IRA if the K-plan contribution is less than $2,000, but the total of the two cannot exceed $2,000. For example, an individual who put $1,500 in a K-plan would be permitted an IRA deduction of $500.

One of the reasons for this approach, pension consultants said, is to prevent people from borrowing from a 401(k) plan to fund an IRA and getting triple tax advantages from the two retirement plans and the interest deduction.

The number of companies that permit employees to borrow from their K-plans and thus have the use of the money without having to pay withdrawal taxes is estimated by Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company at 63 percent. In addition, 89 percent of those surveyed permit hardship withdrawals before age 59 1-2 for reasons such as college education, medical catastrophe or home purchase.

The bill would prohibit deduction of interest on loans from K plans. It also lowers the maximum loan amount by substituting a complex formula for the current ceiling of $50,000. And it would require interest and principal on all loans — except for those for first-time home buyers — to be paid on a regular schedule over five years.

The bill also slaps a 15 percent penalty on premature withdrawals, in addition to regular income taxes. Premature IRA withdrawals would also incur a 15 percent penalty, up from 10 percent.

If a worker is able to save the maximum allowed, it would make more sense to put the entire amount, up to $7,000, into a 401(k) because 84 percent to 90 percent of companies match their workers' contributions, according to the Employee Benefit Research Institute. The most common match is 50 cents for every employee dollar up to 6 percent of wages.

If all 3.6 million persons who currently fund both IRA and 401(k) were to switch entirely to K-plans, IRA contributions for the year would be $7 billion less than would be expected if the law remained unchanged, said EBRI's president, Dallas Salisbury. He estimates annual IRA contributions this year at $32 billion. The $7,000 cap on the amount an individual can sock away in a 401(k) plan would also result in a $300 million drop in expected contributions, which Salisbury expects to reach $13 billion this year.

Wes Howard, editor of I.R.A. Reporter in Cleveland, estimates that new IRA contributions could be cut back by $8 billion or 20 percent from expected levels if all those who are eligible switch. Last year, total IRA assets grew 23 percent to $39.5 billion by his calculation.

Stock brokerages would also be hit because self-directed accounts — the fastest growing type of IRA — are rare under 401(k) plans. So would mutual funds, which have $25 billion in IRA funds, or 16.1 percent of the market, according to I.R.A. Reporter.

Louisiana group moves to head off presidential veto

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Louisiana's congressional delegation moved Monday to head off a presidential veto of an offshore oil and gas settlement that could net the state an estimated $1 billion.

The state's ten U.S. representatives and senators signed a letter to President Reagan, urging him to pass the budget reconciliation bill, of which the oil settlement is a part.

"The revenues come at an absolutely crucial time for our state," the letter said. "We are second in the nation in unemployment, having lost tens of thousands of jobs in the oil and gas industry alone."

Reagan has little choice but to sign the measure that would immediately pour $714 million into the state treasury and more in coming years, U.S. Sen. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., told a news conference.

A veto of the oil settlement would require a veto of the entire budget reconciliation bill, and that would be very costly, Johnston said.

"He would thoroughly be showing his disdain for Louisiana," Johnston said. "He would alienate some Republican candidates."

In addition to the $714 million, the settlement provides that the state will have a share in future royalties, a figure that would provide at least $300 million more in the next 30 years, Johnston said.

The measure has been approved by both the Senate and the House and next week will be considered by a conference committee. Then it will head for the president's desk to await his signature.

The Reagan Administration has opposed the proposed settlement every step of the way because of a difference of opinion about how oil royalties from offshore leases should be divided between seven states and the federal government.

The settlement provides that the states will share 27 percent of the royalties. The money, tied up in an escrow acount, now totals $6.7 billion.

Johnston said Reagan feels the measure is "overly generous" to Louisiana, which stands to gain more from the measure than any of the other states.

Under the proposed settlement, Texas would immediatley receive $424 million, California $375 million, Alabama $73 million, Alaska $46 million, Mississippi $15 million and Florida $30,000.

Johnston said he hopes all of the money would be used for improving the state's ailing educational system.

"I would hope that we would not only use the money for education, but use it intelligently for education," he said.

"We know that oil and gas is a rapidly depleting asset. So I think this is our one last chance to provide for education in Louisiana," he said.

The offshore settlement measure is virtually guaranteed to remain untouched by the conference committee, since the measure passed by each chamber was nearly identical, he said.

Turner reported on brink of selling half of MGM

CULVER CITY, Calif. (AP) — Turner Broadcasting System apparently is on the verge of selling half of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to Viacom International Inc. to help pay for Turner's $1.5 billion acquisition of MGM-UA Entertainment Co., a source close to the negotiations said Monday.

The source, who agreed to discuss the matter only if not he was not identified, confirmed that Turner Broadcasting's previously reported talks with Viacom were expected to be concluded soon.

Earlier in the day, Atlanta-based Turner Broadcasting asked the Securities and Exchange Commission to defer processing of certain documents on the MGM-UA deal "to reflect a transaction with Viacom ... when and if the negotiaitoins are successfully concluded."

Turner Broadcasting has agreed to pay about $1.5 billion in cash and notes for Culver City, Calif.-based MGM-UA, then immediately sell its United Artists subsidiary to Nevada financier Kirk Kerkorian for $470 million in cash.

Kerkorian, who owns 50.1 percent of MGM-UA, plans to remain majority shareholder in UA but will sell some stock publicly.

Separately, UA said it had postponed some deadlines pertaining to that stock sale for one week until Dec. 3.

Asked if the one-week period reflected the time that Turner Broadcasting expected it to take to complete negotiations with Viacom, the source said, "It's fair to assume that the dates have been cleared by all parties."

Turner Broadcasting has said it is considering selling some assets so it will be able to finance the costly MGM-UA deal.

The Atlanta company had been negotiating to sell half of its Cable News Network to National Broadcasting Co., a unit of RCA Corp. But those talks collapsed last week because NBC wanted complete editorial control over CNN and Turner Broadcasting refused.

Viacom, in an SEC filing early this month, disclosed it was talking with Turner about buying half of MGM. At the same time, Viacom said it had expressed interest in purchasing the cable systems of Westinghouse Electric Corp. in Pittsburgh.

Viacom, which was spun off by CBS Inc. in 1970, operates cable TV systems, owns four TV stations and distributes television programs. About a month ago, it lined up a $1.03 billion line of credit from nine banks led by Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. of New York.

A large chunk of that money is expected to be used to finance Viacom's previously reported purchase of half of the Showtime-The Movie Channel and the MTV Networks Inc.

Home loan bank board switches assets of Hi-Plains

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Home Loan Bank Board said Monday it has transferred assets of the state-chartered Hi-Plains Savings and Loan Association of Hereford, Texas, to a newly chartered federal mutual association with the same name.

The new association, with assets of $112 million, has acquired the property, facilities, investments, deposits and loans of the stock association, including the branch office in Dimmitt, said Doug Green, a spokesman for the Home Loan Bank Board.

The bank board acted to protect depositors of the institution, which was found to be insolvent, Green said in an agency statement.

Hi-Plains will continue to conduct business as usual and the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation (FSLIC) will continue to insure depositors, Green said.

A management contract has been negotiated with University Savings Association of Houston, which has assets of more than $3.6 billion, to facilitate operation of the new association, he said.

Factors that led to the institution's condition included poorly underwritten and under collaterized high-risk timeshare and acquisition, development and construction loans, the statement said.

Brokered bonds, which comprise as much as 35 percent of total deposits in mid-1984, fueled the institution's excessive growth in assets from $36 million at the end of 1982 to $112 million today. The association has maintained a high concentration of high cost jumbo certificates of deposits since 1982, Green said.

Hi-Plains Savings has been under state supervisory control since April.

Hi-Plains will be operated under a new five-member board of directors approved by the Federal Home Loan Bank board. The chairman of the new board of directors is John Kipp, senior corporate partner of Gardere and Winne law firm of Dallas.

Other board members are: Bruce Shepard, chairman of the board of the Swan Company, Colorado Springs, Co., appointed Federal Housing Administration director for the state of Colorado by President Reagan; Dr. Paul Horvitz, Jr., who holds the Judge James A. Elkins Chair of Banking and Finance at the University of Houston and a director of the Federal Home Loan Bank of Dallas; Jim Richards, president of National Precision Products Co. of Dallas.

Hitachi plans $9 million plant in Oklahoma

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Oklahoma got its first big payoff from industrial recruitment efforts in the Far East when Hitachi Ltd. announced Monday that it would build a $9 million computer parts plant in Norman, home of the University of Oklahoma.

The 65,000-square-foot plant of a new Hitachi subsidiary, Hitachi Computer Products Inc., is scheduled to open in 1987. It will make disk storage units for mainframe computers.

The plant will open with 100 locally hired employees and expand its workforce to more than 500 by 1991, officials said.

"We selected Oklahoma because of its excellent workforce and because we were extremely encouraged by the enthusiastic invitation from the Oklahoma state government," Katsushige Mita, president of Hitachi Ltd., said at a news conference at the state Capitol.

Democratic Gov. George Nigh said the announcement is good news to a state that has been in an economic downturn because of the sagging oil market. He called it a breakthrough for the state's efforts to encourage foreign investment in the state.

Hitachi Ltd., one of the largest companies in Japan, has annual sales of $20 billion and 165,000 employees.

Houston Oil, Tenneco enters settlement pact

HOUSTON (SWN) — Houston Oil Trust announced today that it has entered into a settlement agreement with Houston Oil & Minerals Corporation, Tenneco Oil Company and Tenneco Inc. providing for the settlement of various claims made by the Trustee on behalf of the Trust.

HO&M is the owner of the working interests burdened by the Trust's royalty interests, and HO&M and Tenneco Oil Company are wholly-owned subsidiaries of Tenneco Inc. The principal claims settled relate to the implementation by Tennessee Gas Pipeline Company, a division of Tenneco Inc., of its Emergency Gas Purchase Policy. The claims settled also included various accounting issues relating to the proper calculation of royalty amounts payable by HO&M to the Trust.

Under the terms of the settlement agreement HO&M will make a cash payment of approximately $4.5 million (approximately $0.139 per Unit), which will be distributed to Unit holders of the Trust as a part of the Trust's December distribution. The December distribution will be made on or about December 26, 1985 to Unit holders of record on December 16, 1985. As part of the settlement HO&M will also release certain amounts from special cost escrow accounts resulting in an increase in the December distribution, estimated to be approximately $500,000 (approximately $0.015 per Unit).

Clean Midland Executive Director Sherre Parker scans the design for a new downtown park at the corner of Marienfeld and North Big Spring.

Park will offer 'alternative landscape'

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Less than one acre of vacant downtown land may soon help distinguish Midland from other cities, according to representatives of local organizations helping plan a new city park.

The park, along Big Spring and Marienfeld streets, will present an alternative landscape to downtown's usual concrete and cement harshness, said George Logan, director of the city's community services.

"It's impact landscaping. It's supposed to make an impact...to show that there are actually areas of West Texas that can be made to look pretty with just a little greenery," Logan said.

The two small triangular lots making up the park will become "a visual landmark for vehicular traffic," said Steve Patton, the park's designer.

"It's going to be a statement for someone driving toward the downtown area," he added.

"I want it to represent our area. To say, 'This is Midland.' "

"It seems that each town has got its own look. We're trying to make something unique to Midland," he said.

Patton's design is one of the first donations to the park, which will be dependent upon volunteer work, said Sherre Parker, executive director for Clean Midland.

Clean Midland is coordinating volunteers for the park. Money, plants, trees and labor are needed, Ms. Parker said.

The city donated the land for the park site, which amounts to three-fourths of an acre.

"It's an area that's really not usable for anything else," Ms. Parker said of the tract, which is intersected by Marienfeld Street.

When completed, it will be Midland's 33rd park, Logan said.

Honey locust, evergreens and grass will cover half the park. The remaining area of the park will consist of two large circular designs, simulating wagon wheels, paved in red brick or cobblestones.

The $175,000 park should be completed by the end of 1986 and will be dedicated to Midland volunteers and the Sesquicentennial, Ms. Parker said.

"The objective of the park will be to beautify the north entrance to downtown and help construct a landmark to commemorate the Sesquicentennial year for Texas," Ms. Parker said.

Michener will close city's Centennial at Dec. 10 dinner

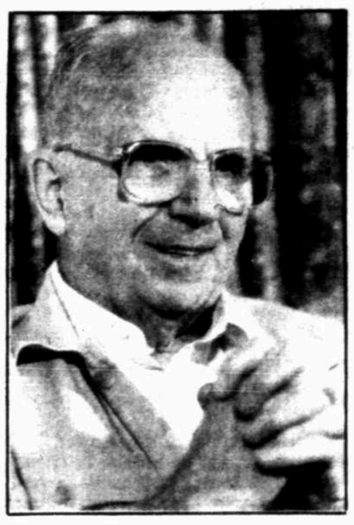

From Staff Reports

Pulitzer Prize-winning author James Michener will be in Midland Dec. 10 to officially close Midland's Centennial year. Michener, whose book "Texas" is currently number one on the bestseller list will be at a dinner hosted by the Midland Centennial Commission. The dinner will be the last event of the Centennial year, with the Sesquicentennial year kicking off in January.

With 35 books in print in 16 languages, the 78-year-old Michener is one of the best-selling authors of all time. He is considered not only a novelist, but also a historian. Beginning with "Tales of the South Pacific," (1947 — the first book of short stories to win a Pulitzer Prize for fiction and the basis of the ever-popular musical "South Pacific), and continuing with other books such as "Hawaii," "The Source," "Centennial," "Chesapeake," "The Covenant," "Space," "Poland" and "Texas," Michener has become everyman's guide to the world.

The Centennial dinner will start at 7 p.m. and will be held in the Midland Center. The evening program will consist of a question and answer format where Michener will answer questions from the audience. Due to time restrictions, Michener will not be able to autograph books.

Tickets to the dinner are $12.50 each. The public is invited to purchase tickets by either sending a stamped self-addressed envelope to Midland Centennial, P.O. Box 1985, Midland, Texas, 79702, with your name, address, daytime phone number and number of tickets needed (limit two), or by purchasing them at the Centennial office, in the Chamber of Commerce Building, 109 N. Main St. Tickets may be purchased at the Centennial office beginning Monday and ending Dec. 9 from noon to 4:30 p.m. each day.

Chamber, city, county officials go before state highway board

From Staff Reports

Representatives of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, city of Midland and Midland County Commissioners will appear before members of the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation today to request state participation in widening and improving State Highway 158 for four miles southeast of Interstate 20.

In August, meetings between the city, county and chamber Highway Committee resulted in the Highway 158 project being identified as the community's top priority requiring state participation and assistance. The proposed project calls for reconstruction and widening of the existing two-lane roadway for four miles southeast from the intersection of State Highway 158 and Interstate 20. The project would provide for four traffic lanes, a two-way left turn lane, and parking lanes within an 85-foot curb and gutter section. It is also proposed that the project would alleviate serious flooding and drainage problems that exist at the intersection.

With increased business development in recent years along the four-mile stretch of road, and with the new city landfill location increasing daily traffic, community leaders are seeking the help of the state in the project, which is expected to cost nearly $5.4 million.

In addition to traffic and drainage problems along the route, safety is another major factor in the presentation. In the past three years, 57 accidents have occurred over this stretch of State Highway 158, including three accidents resulting in four fatalities, according to a spokesman with the chamber.

As part of the presentation, the Midland delegation also will be presenting a resolution by the Greater Odessa Chamber of Commerce endorsing the Midland project and request.

Ector County board tables EMS contracts

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Ector County Commissioners Monday tabled action on contracts with the City of Odessa for emergency services pending rewording and clarification of certain sections that would further define terms and limit the county's liability for ambulance, fire and dispatching services.

The total contract amount of $525,000 represents an increase of about $200,000 from previous years.

A "Joint Finance Plan" presented commissioners by county fiscal services director Tom Pace outlined how the county's liability for emergency services ($525,000) would be offset by the City of Odessa's payments ($195,000) for the city's remaining obligation for Grandview road construction and payment for animal control services.

According to Pace, under the plan the county would wind up paying the city $330,000 for EMS, fire and dispatching service in the current fiscal year.

Odessa City Council members meeting in regular session this morning are expected to consider the revised contract.

Under the contract, the city would provide primary fire services in three designated areas, with secondary services provided on a backup basis to county volunteer fire departments.

Emergency medical services would be provided county residents by the city "on a nonexclusive basis," with ambulances dispatched on a first call-first serve basis from existing facilities.

Pace noted that county volunteer fire department radios are being converted to allow them to call in Odessa fire units on an as-needed-basis.

Under the proposed contract, Odessa fire dispatchers will serve as the dispatching center linking volunteer fire departments with the city and the Ector County Sheriff's Department.

County commissioners Monday also approved contracts with Pecos, Reeves, Ward and Winkler counties to house juveniles at a cost of $50 per day on a space available basis.

Danny Vanderberg, the county's chief juvenile probation officer, explained new state family code provisions require juvenile offenders be housed in juvenile facilities rather than county or city jail facilities.

Vanderberg explained the arrangement is of a temporary nature because Pecos County is in the process of building a juvenile detention facility that will be used by all four counties.

Science fiction authors subject of book by Odessans

By JOHN WATKINS

ODESSA (AP) — Their characters walk on strange and distant planets and sometimes live in a world of magic and great deeds.

But the authors of fantasy and science fiction are real, and they are the subjects of a book of interviews compiled by three Odessans.

Daryl Lane, chairman of Odessa College's literature and language department; David Carson, director of audio-visual services at OC, and William Vernon, an analytical chemist at El Paso Products, interviewed science fiction and fantasy authors for 2½ years while producing a nationally syndicated radio show at the college.

"We had miles of taped interviews, and we thought we should do something besides let them languish in the vaults," said Vernon.

Since 1983, when the show went off the air, they have been compiling some of the program's interviews for a book. The final product was so big, it had to be published as a two-volume set, Lane explained.

"The Sound of Wonder" was introduced at the World Fantasy Convention in Tucson, Ariz., earlier this month, Lane said.

"We tried to strike a balance across a wide spectrum of fantasy and science fiction" in selecting the interviews for the book, Vernon said. He said those included range from writers of pure fantasy to those whose work is carefully based on science fact.

Carson reported the show never put any money in the pockets of the authors. Money from the show's syndication barely covered the $15-a-week production costs, even though Carson estimated about 200,000 people heard the program daily.

"The Science Fiction Radio Show" was heard in about 35 cities, including New York, Chicago and Los Angeles, he said.

Carson noted the interviews gave him a chance to meet some of his literary heroes such as Ray Bradbury, whose books he had been reading since he was a boy.

"The characters all pretty much derive from the author...it's like meeting the characters," he said.

Carson said he also learned "what it is like to have all these characters running around their heads, arguing for the best position in the story."

During the radio show, interviews were edited into five-minute segments played five times a week. Allowing time for introductions, about 20 minutes of a three- or four-hour interview were aired in a week, Carson said.

"We had literally hundreds of miles of tape," Carson said.

Lane added that for the first year of work on the book, the three men did nothing but transcribe interviews.

They also had to secure a contract with each of the authors included in the book and write introductions to each interview and the book, Lane said.

The book includes what may be the last interview with the late science fiction writer Theodore Sturgeon and an interview with Stephen R. Donaldson. Author of "The Chronicles of Thomas Covenant," Donaldson was second only to J.R.R. Tolkien in fantasy sales, Carson said.

MARK LEWIS

Alumnus still fighting Trojan War on gridiron

For some reason, the terrible cataclysms which periodically convulse the world don't affect me very much. Natural disasters, sectarian violence, totalitarian repression...these things disturb me, but from a distance. The world's armies conduct their bloody business on far-off battlefields, and I remain emotionally detached.

But each year on the third Saturday of November, I'm seized with an uncontrollable frenzy, excited to the point of raving paranoia...by a football game.

It's absurd, I know. But I can't help it. The only battlefield I really care about is that green patch of Astroturf on the floor of the Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum.

Each November on that fateful day, my alma mater, UCLA, concludes its season with a game against the much-scorned Trojans of Southern Cal. Each year, the fever overtakes me about five days before the kickoff. I try to banish all thoughts of football from my mind, but they re-emerge in the pit of my stomach, to fester until game day. It doesn't help if we're favored, as we were this year. I just fret all the more, figuring God is setting me up for a fall.

As kickoff-time approaches, the tension becomes unbearable. I don't enjoy the game; I endure it. When my heroes stumble, I froth at the mouth. I rant and rave, I pound my head against the wall and heap foul invective on those innocent 20-year-old behemoths, who, I'm convinced, are deliberately screwing up in order to drive me insane. When a call goes against them, my brain is clouded with psychotic fantasies of stringing up the referee from the nearest goalpost.

When we win, I feel a rush of joy surpassing all human experience. Well, I feel pretty good, anyway.

When we lose, as we did Saturday, it just tears my heart out.

It's ridiculous. The world is filled with injustice, with wrongs to be righted, and all I really care about is beating SC. As with most emotional fixations, the roots of this problem go back to my childhood.

You see, the Trojans have traditionally dominated the Bruins, and since my parents were also UCLA grads, I was exposed at an early age to the annual humiliation of the good guys by the bad guys. An impressionable young lad, I watched helplessly as a succession of Heisman Trophy winners ran roughshod over my hapless Bruins.

Year after year, our Rose Bowl hopes would be ruthlessly demolished by the likes of O.J. Simpson, Anthony Davis, Ricky Bell, Charles White and Marcus Allen. They cut though our line like Hitler's panzer divisions cut through Belgium, and I took the analogy to heart.

I grew up bitter and twisted, my values warped by this annual rite of failure. As a result, I root fiercely for all underdogs (except, of course, when Oregon State plays UCLA). I favor Midland over Lee, Lee over Permian, Rice over everybody, and everybody over Texas.

I favor Avis over Hertz, Pepsi over Coke and Mondale over Reagan. I used to favor Iran over Iraq, but then the Iranians started winning; now I favor Iraq. I favor Rodney Dangerfield on general principles.

But most of all, I favor the Bruins over the Trojans. I thought I was over it after we won three in a row, but Saturday's defeat brought it all back...the sweaty brow, the clammy hands, the glazed eyes...the feeling that life has no meaning.

I don't bet, so it has nothing to do with losing money. It has some connection with morality, I think — with the difference between right and wrong, between hope and despair. I'm kind of a football Calvinist, knowing I'm predestined to lose but railing against my fate anyway.

That's not as far out as it sounds. Calvinists founded the Ivy League schools, which later invented football. And there are those who trace the decline of American morality to the decline of Ivy League football.

Not me. I trace the decline of American morality to the rise of USC football. May God smite their program with probation unto the seventh generation, and deliver me from the annual torment which strikes every third Saturday of November. Then, on the fourth Thursday, I would truly give Thanksgiving, and be at peace.

Amen.

Policeman acquitted in sexual assault

FORT WORTH (AP) — After hearing televised testimony from a 5-year-old girl, jurors acquitted a city police lieutenant on charges that he sexually assaulted the child in his apartment last year.

The jury deliberated just over an hour Monday before reaching its verdict on Charles C. Holland, 46, the former head of the Fort Worth police tactical division.

One juror said Holland was acquitted because jurors didn't believe the testimony of the girl, who is now 6.

The girl testified last week on closed-circuit television that Holland and Karen King, another police department employee, molested her at Holland's apartment sometime between Aug. 25 and Sept. 9, 1984.

"She (the girl) is the guilty one. When you give a girl candy and money like that, she is liable to say anything."

— Juror Roger Lee Freeman

But the girl also testified that her mother promised her candy and $20 if she "told the truth" in court, and the juror told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram that that statement is what convinced him the girl was lying.

"She (the girl) is the guilty one," said juror Roger Lee Freeman. "When you give a girl candy and money like that, she is liable to say anything."

Holland was indicted last year on eight counts of aggravated sexual assault and three counts of indecency with a child. Ms. King was also indicted on sexual assault charges, but she will be tried separately.

By the time the jury got the Holland case Monday, prosecutors had pared the charges down to one count of aggravated sexual assault and two counts of indecency with a child.

The jury acquitted him on all three counts.

Originally, prosecutors wanted a videotaped interview with the child to take the place of her testimony. But State District Judge Tom Cave ruled that use of the tape would violate Holland's right to face his accuser in court.

Churches try to reach 'tip of the iceberg'

By DAVID SEDENO
Associated Press Writer

SAN JUAN, Texas (AP) — Thanksgiving Day will be a paradox for thousands of poor families across the state, just another day without enough food.

But in the Rio Grande Valley, where the unemployment rate hovers around 20 percent, students, business and church leaders will provide food for about 200 of the most needy families.

"We know it's just the tip of the iceberg, but it's something," said Chris Villareal of the Catholic Charities Program.

Students at McAllen High School and the Pharr-San Juan-Alamo Consolidated High School have been collecting non-perishable canned products the last several weeks. Residents have been urged to take canned goods to local convenience stores.

Other merchants will provide loaves of bread. A grocer will provide chickens for the main course and a packing shed will donate boxes of tangerines, Ms. Villareal said.

The collecting of canned goods and helping the needy during the holidays is nothing new. Churches, the Salvation Army and other relief agencies across the state provide meals during Thanksgiving and Christmas.

But in the Valley, area churches and agencies provide assistance throughout the year and some church workers say it takes a holiday to reinforce the fact that many families will not have enough too eat.

Thousands of farmworkers and employees of packing sheds lost their jobs after a December 1983 freeze caused more than $100 million damage to the citrus industry.

Devaluations of the Mexican peso also have caused many businesses, dependent on Mexican shoppers, to lay off employees or close their shops.

The latest unemployment figures showed that the McAllen-Edinburg-Mission area had the highest jobless rate in the state at 21.8 percent. Behind that area was the Harlingen-Brownsville area at 14.9 percent. The state average is about 7 percent.

The average income is about $7,000, below the national average and the family sometimes includes up to eight children.

Ms. Villareal said that volunteers at the Catholic-sponsored program will pick up the food and distribute it to the families Wednesday. She said that in the past many families who are in dire financial straits do not wish to take donations because of pride.

Although the Rio Grande Valley is predominantly Mexican-American and Catholic, Ms. Villareal said poverty has cut through those lines.

"We're not only concentrating on migrant workers, but others in other types of jobs, assisting those families who have had a pretty hard time," she said.

"And it's not just for Catholics. We provide food whether they're Catholic or not," she said.

Ms. Villareal said that chickens, instead of the traditional turkey, will be provided because many families sometimes have a difficult time preparing the larger fowl. Some don't have cooking utensils or large-enough ovens to bake the turkeys.

"We've had a pretty good response," Ms. Villareal said. "I think we'll be OK."

Commissioners' Court honors Janeice Builta

From Staff Reports

The Midland County Commissioners' Court on Monday expressed "condolences" to the family of Janeice S. Builta, the Midland County elections administrator who died Saturday at age 72, and passed a resolution in her honor.

Mrs. Builta had been the county's deputy voter registrar from 1966 until late 1981, when the Midland County Elections Commission appointed her elections administrator.

The resolution cited Mrs. Builta as a "trusted and loyal" county employee and as a "highly respected" county official.

"Janeice S. Builta had always been enthusiastic and cooperative with all citizens of the city of Midland and Midland County," the resolution said, and was a "trusted, friendly, cooperative and loyal employee, mother and wife." The resolution, signed by County Judge Bill Ahders and Commissioners Durward Wright, C. Wallace "Wally" Craig, Scott Welch and Winfree Brown, honored Mrs. Builta "for being an outstanding human being and county official."

Judge Ahders noted that the five-member Elections Commission would be taking applications for the elections administrator's position. Mrs. Builta's 1986 salary would have been $31,284. Ahders said that the office's chief deputy, Maxine Morris, would continue in her present position and would "not be acting" elections administrator.

Serving on the Elections Commission are Ahders as county judge; Rosenelle Cherry, county clerk; Frances Shuffield, county tax assessor-collector; Janet Massey, chairman of the Midland County Democratic Party, and Kelly Fish, chairman of the Midland County Republican Party.

Permian Basin COAC aids children's relief overseas

From Staff Reports

Members of the Permian Basin Council on Adoptable Children are reaching out during this Christmas season to help a children's relief organization overseas.

The organization they will be helping, the International Mission of Hope, has a history that spans two continents and involves hundreds of people who have made a commitment to assist abandoned children. Incorporated in the U.S. in 1977, IMH's original founders had worked with needy children in Vietnam in the early 1970s. Out of their experiences in Vietnam came a profound awareness of the needs of orphaned and abandoned children around the world.

Melvin and Mary B. Dunn of Midland adopted their baby daughter, Shanti, from the IMH organization in July. Since then, Mrs. Dunn has worked actively to coordinate aid projects in the Permian Basin area for IMH. "If so many good people were not involved in its work, Shanti would not exist. She would have died at birth or shortly thereafter," said Mrs. Dunn. "Of course, I'm committed...I have Shanti here to remind me daily of the months she spent in the IMH nursery."

There are 45 older children in the IMH facility at this time, and the staff will be making up special packets to each child for Christmas. Permian Basin COAC families will contribute items to help make these Christmas packets special. The public is welcome to donate items also. For a list of possible donations, contact Mrs. Dunn at 694-9902.

Some of the objectives that IMH has accomplished thus far include: aid in finding homes for over a thousand abandoned or orphaned children in the United States, the establishment of the IMH nursery for infants coming to the center as high-risk premature infants struggling to survive, a dispensary for medical treatment for children whose parents are too poor to seek traditional medical treatment, and a soon-to-open school to educate children during the day and their parents at night as a way to create educational and vocational opportunities for the poor.

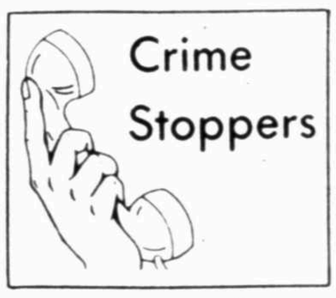

The Permian Basin Council on Adoptable Children is a non-profit support group composed of over 60 member families in the Midland/-Odessa area and surrounding communities. It works to support adoption efforts locally, nationally, and internationally. During the last 10 years, it has become one of the country's most active adoption support groups, and is the largest such group in Texas. Its funding is provided by the Texas Department of Human Service.

Crime Stoppers seeks information on rapist

Last month, Crime Stoppers asked for help in identifying a man who had raped two Midland women. The man was not identified, and investigators now believe he has struck again.

On Nov. 12, shortly after 9 p.m., a 74-year-old southside Midland woman had just sat down for an evening of watching television when she was grabbed from behind by an unknown man wearing a mask. He held a knife to her throat and dragged her to a bedroom where she was bound, gagged and assaulted.

The suspect was described as a black male in his early to mid-30s, between five feet eight inches and six feet in height, and weighing about 160 pounds. He was wearing a dark-colored ski mask.

Crime Stoppers will pay a $1,000 cash reward for information leading to the arrest and indictment of the rapist. Call 694-TIPS in Midland or 333-TIPS in Odessa. Callers need not reveal their identities to collect the reward.

Injured Odessa student's condition upgraded to fair

From Staff Reports

An 18-year-old Odessa student seriously injured Sunday in a Midland traffic accident has been upgraded to fair condition, according to a hospital spokeswoman.

In other reports, a $500 homemade one-axle trailer was reported stolen by Rig Service Inc. The trailer was taken sometime between Saturday and Sunday from a facility on County Road 1300 just north of the north service road of Interstate 20, according to Sheriff's Office reports.

About $384 in currency and change was reported taken from the Warfield Truck Shop at County Road 1788 and Interstate 20. Ray Fraser told sheriff's officers the money was taken from a file cabinet sometime between Sunday and Monday, reports said.

Federal agents close phone solicitation service in Dallas

DALLAS (AP) — Federal agents have closed a telephone solicitation service that allegedly bilked about 1,000 people out of $250,000 by offering bogus discount travel arrangements to credit card holders, officials say.

Three Dallas-area residents named in a criminal complaint were arrested and arraigned before a federal magistrate Monday. Those allegedly cheated were from Texas and other states.

The affidavit also said that during surveillance of one of the company's telephone solicitation centers, an agent saw a chalkboard message that read: "Make my day; give me your credit card number."

The U.S. Secret Service agent's affidavit said six people operated a business known as Initial Idea-DAD, also called Cindy's Initial Idea-Dallas Advertising Development.

Since September, about $250,000 was deposited in the company's Arlington bank account, and only $7,000 remains, the document said.

Those arrested were Billy A. Morgan and Cynthia Morgan of Grand Prairie and Ronald E. Lawrence of Dallas. All three were arrested on warrants charging them with conspiracy, bank larceny, bank fraud, credit card fraud and wire fraud.

U.S. Magistrate John Tolle ordered Lawrence jailed pending a Dec. 4 preliminary hearing. The Morgans, who appeared in court with a baby, were released without having to post bail.

The three made several cash withdrawals and wrote checks to themselves from the accounts, the affidavit charged.

The complaint said the company obtained credit card numbers from their owners by telephone and presented fraudulent charge receipts to Texas Commerce Bank in Arlington.

V.I.P. temps and staff provide Thanksgiving feast for two families

V.I.P. is commited to giving back to Midland

V.I.P. Limited, located at 4305 N. Garfield in suite 204, is a top quality, community-oriented firm, which is neither a branch nor franchise of any national company. Liz Proctor, owner of V.I.P. Limited and 13-year Midland resident, says her company is built on the principle of giving back to community where it is located.

Giving first class professional service, giving business to other Midland businesses, giving to community needs - this is important to V.I.P.

During this Thanksgiving season, V.I.P.'s staff and temporaries have joined together to provide food for two Midland families. Pastor Russ Austin of Word of Life Church, who is responsible for distributing the food, says both families have experienced extreme economic trouble this year. In one family of seven, the head of the household has been going through a drug rehabilitation program during the last few months. The husband and father of another family of four has experienced repeated oil field lay offs this year. Through their joint effort, V.I.P. staff and temporaries hope to make Thanksgiving Day a little happier for these Midland families.

Thanksgiving comes but once a year, yet V.I.P. is commited to Midland all year long. This company, whose trademark is professionalism, does all its banking and payrolling through a local bank. Their office supplies are purchased in Midland and no percentage of profit is sent off to a headquarters office. The company and its temporaries shop Midland, contributing to the community's sales tax revenue. "We want to put back into the community what we get out of it," Ms. Proctor says.

"Let's put Midland back to work," challenges Ms. Proctor. V.I.P. is busy about accomplishing this task. With eight years of experience in the employment field, this conscientious expert is proud to say that her company lives up to its name - V.I.P.

This company gives first class candidates and service. Jane Vaughan, Manager of Temporary Services, and Janie Dar, Public Relations Director, feel that each customer, candidate and temporary is a Very Important Person.

V.I.P. proudly offers temporaries for just about every job description, including geologists, landmen, engineers, accountants, file clerks, typists and secretaries.

V.I.P.'s special Temp-To-Perm Agreement has been working really well for many companies, giving the company and the temporary an opportunity to try out working together before making permanent arrangements.

V.I.P. also offers an efficient payrolling service that takes care of all the payrolling work. "We'll payroll your temporary or your complete office staff," Ms. Proctor says.

When you need top-quality, professional service and want to do business with a local company that gives back to Midland, call V.I.P. at 686-9717. "We eoncourage you to call for a bid. Since we are locally-owned we feel that our rates are competitive and not locked-in. Most importantly, you are a Very Important Person to us," Ms. Proctor says.

V.I.P. Temporary Judy Mitchell (left to right), Temporary Services Manager Jane Vaughan and Public Relations Director Janie Dar present Pastor Russ Austin of Word of Life Church with food for two families, during this holiday season. Joint effort of the temporaries and staff will make Thanksgiving a brighter day for some Midland families.

The Porcelain Shop offers many creative decorating and gift ideas

Cleta McHam (left) and Janice Glenn of The Porcelain Shop show "Evelyn" and a special tree called "Peaches and Cream." "Evelyn," a beautiful porcelain doll, was hand-made in the shop at 1108 N. Big Spring. The nativity scene in the the case is carefully hand-painted.

One step into The Porcelain Shop at 1108 N. Big Spring and you will know that you've found a very special store with some exceptional artists. Porcelain dolls adorn the homey shop and beautiful hand-made ornaments are nestled in Christmas trees.

Evelyn Sherman, owner of The Porcelain Shop, says, "I like to see the dolls in the atmosphere they belong in - that's why I built this shop."

Dolls, she explains, date back to prehistoric times. Dolls with porcelain heads, arms and feet were first used to display the latest fashions in Europe. Germany and France are well-known for their children's dolls. Evelyn makes beautiful portrait dolls and look alike dolls of porcelain.

"Porcelain is the Cadillac of clays. It is the ultimate of clays." Many hours go into the preparation of a porcelain doll. Starting with a picture of someone, perhaps at the time of a significant event in their life, Evelyn can make a porcelain doll to resemble that person. Facial structures are taken into account when the mold is selected. Hair color and eyes are carefully matched. The porcelain is fired a number of times and carefully smoothed. Finally, the portrait doll is ready of clothes, which are hand-made by Janice Glenn.

Hours of pain-staking care are taken with each doll, so don't wait any longer to order a look-alike doll for that very special person on your Christmas list.

The Porcelain Shop also has beautiful Nativity Scenes of porcelain. A variety of these are hand-painted by Evelyn.

A serene Lladro Village sets the mood for the season. A lighted church, homes, people and other village structures are carefully painted in subdued colors. Likewise the Lladro cat and Father Christmas are beautifully detailed.

There are many different "Santa's" at The Porcelain Shop, but Evelyn says they are most excited about an original one which is to be unveiled on Thanksgiving Day. This special Santa was sculpted by local artist Richard Robertson.

This is only the beginning of the Christmas decorations at The Porcelain Shop. Trees from three feet to 8 feet tall are carefully adorned with unusual ornaments. Some trees have all brass ornaments, others exhibit china painted ornaments, German candy mold ornaments, teddy bears, porcelain ornaments or other unusual decorations. The porcelain ornaments are made in the shop and many decorations come from other craftsmen. Ornaments are carefully wired to the small trees to make putting the tree up easy year after year. The experts at The Porcelain Shop will gladly give you a bid on putting up the larger poly silk trees and boxing them after the Christmas season.

After Christmas classes will be starting. Even a working women's class is scheduled for Tuesday nights. Evelyn explains that they supply some of the finest brushes and paints for the classes.

Once an individual has taken a class they are free to use the work room in the afternoons for just $30/month. Paints are supplied. A gift certificate for a class can make a really nice gift.

After Thanksgiving, The Porcelain Shop will be open Monday-Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Saturday 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. Go by 1108 N. Big Spring, where there is plenty of parking space in the back, and you will discover many real works of art.

Harris Acoustics offers experience and quality

Harris Acoustics is now in a beautiful facility at 2011 Trade Drive. President J.E. "Slim" Mason announces that since January they have added a dry wall division. Bill Shonkwiler is the head of this new division and chief estimator.

David Stickney, manager, heads up the acoustical and flooring division of Harris Acoustics. David has eight years experience in the construction industry.

Harris Acoustics has been a sub-contractor for commercial acoustical ceiling and floor covering for 18 years in Midland. Slim feels that the reason for their success is quality materials and workmanship combined with a thorough knowledge of the construction industry.

With that experience, Harris Acoustics has added a new dimension to their company. They are a supply warehouse and sell a complete line of sheetrock, metal studs and acoustical ceiling materials along with all the necessary accessories. All of their materials are available to contractors and do-it-yourselfers.

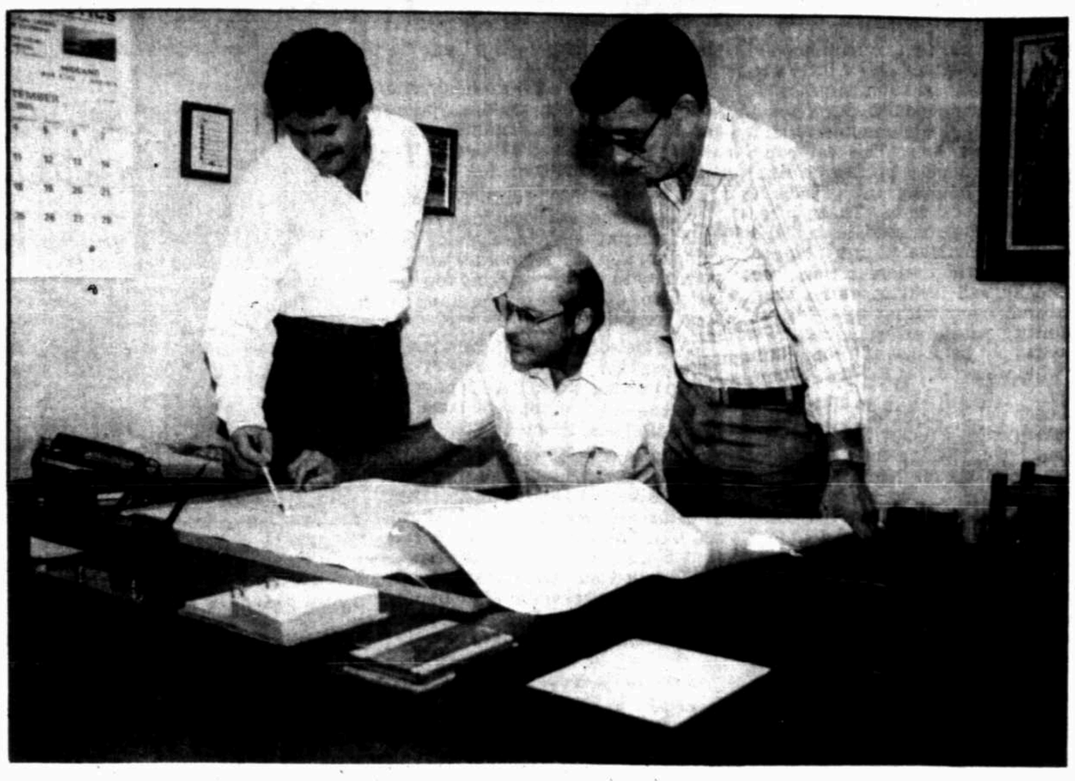

Harris Acoustics and Supply is proud of the fact that they have the largest inventory in the Permian Basin. This is a major benefit to the contractor because it eliminates time lost on the job waiting for materials to arrive.

Whether you purchase supplies for commercial or residential use, quality products are essential. As a newly named distributor for Gold Bond Building Products, Harris Acoustics and Supply carries a wide range of sheetrock and metal studs in various sizes. Harris Acoustics also carries installation accessories such as adhesives and screws. They have a complete selection of tile such as Armstrong, Owens-Corning and Conwed. They carry a wide range of ceiling grid in a number of finishes, plus fiberglass insulation for both ceilings and walls.

In addition to their drywall and ceiling materials, they also carry vinyl base and commercial vinyl floor covering. Harris Acoustics and Supply is the dealer for Azrock and Armstrong floor coverings.

Just as you would expect, the prices at Harris Acoustics and Supply are very competitive. Truckload pricing is available upon request.

If you would like more information call Slim Mason, David Stickney or Bill Shonkwiler at 699-7018 or stop by their new facility at 2011 Trade Drive.

All siding companies are not the same, Lewellen stands for quality

There are lots of siding companies, but few that match the qualifications and standards of Lewellen Construction in Midland.

Competition is good in any industry, but many people tend to think only of price. A few hundred dollars difference on a product that is guaranteed to last your lifetime is not nearly as significant as the proper installation of that product. Bill Lewellen began as an installer and knows the importance of proper installation of high quality siding. That's why he personally supervises every job and carefully seeks out employees that will be equally dedicated to top quality work.

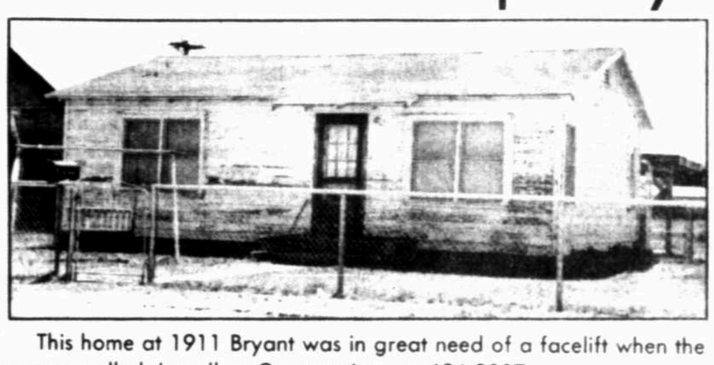

Lewellen Construction's dedication to increasing their knowledge and abilities in order to better serve their customers is evidenced by their involvement in professional organizations. They recently joined the National Association fo the Remodeling Industry as a member-at-large. Like all N.A.R.I. members, they are pledged to observe high standards of honesty, integrity and responsibility in the conduct of business. At this time Bill and Joan Lewellen have plans to attend the national convention in Orlando, Florida in April, 1986.

Maintenance-free siding, soffit and fascia can really change the appearance of your home and rental property. Moreover, any insulation which is applied under the new siding is eligible for an Energy Tax Credit.

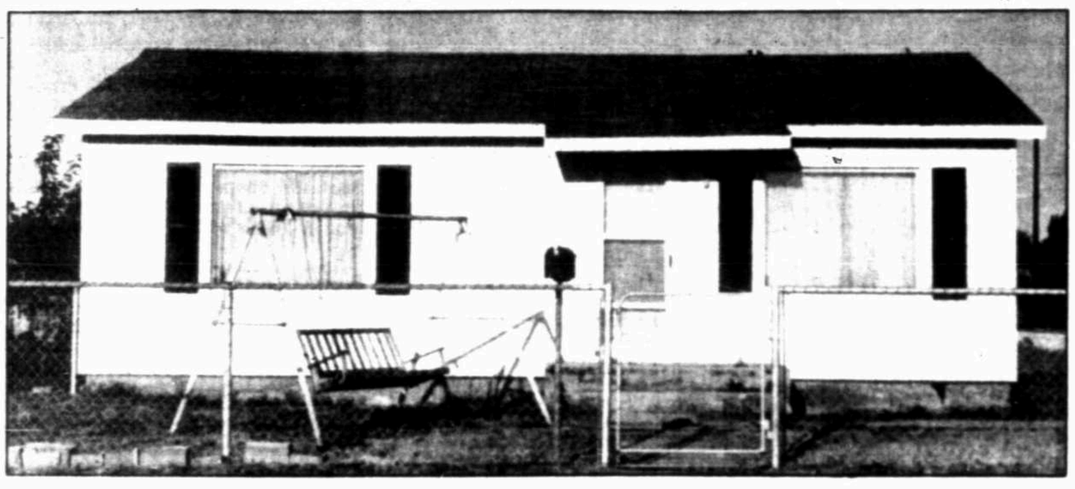

Bill reminds home owners that the law which allows a tax credit for this, as well as installation of storm windows and doors, is only scheduled to be in effect through the end of 1985.

The deadline of December 31, 1985 is nearing. To allow for an approximate 4 week lead time from order to installation you can't afford to wait another minute. Call 686-8007 and take advantage of the energy tax credit, eliminate constant repainting and improve the appearance of your home.

Lewellen's storm windows and doors by Diamond and Peerless are installed with the same special care they give to siding installation. Bill and Joan's motto "Quality First!" is well deserved.

This home at 1911 Bryant was in great need of a facelift when the owner called Lewellen Construction at 686-8007.

Lewellen Construction installed siding, soffit, fascia, replacement windows and doors. Now the owner says, "I am really enjoying everything. It's a job well done - just perfect."

Bill Woodruff Construction offers high quality custom homes

Bill Woodruff Construction proudly offers high quality custom homes in areas such as Crestgate IX and Polo Park. Bill is a native Midlander with 12 years of construction experience so he understands the exacting standards that Midlanders set for their homes.

Each home Bill Woodruff Construction builds is personalized for the new owner. Though a home may already be under construction, Bill explains that once a family decides to purchase it, they can give special input concerning coloring and styling during the remainder of the construction process. This company is proud to offer something other than "tract housing" which leaves a row of nearly identical houses.

Some special features that Bill does offer include living areas with an 11 foot ceiling, large laundry rooms, closets designed to efficiently utilize space, pan ceilings, master baths with two dressing areas.

All his homes are designed with energy efficiency in mind. Double pane insulated windows and quality insulation are standard.

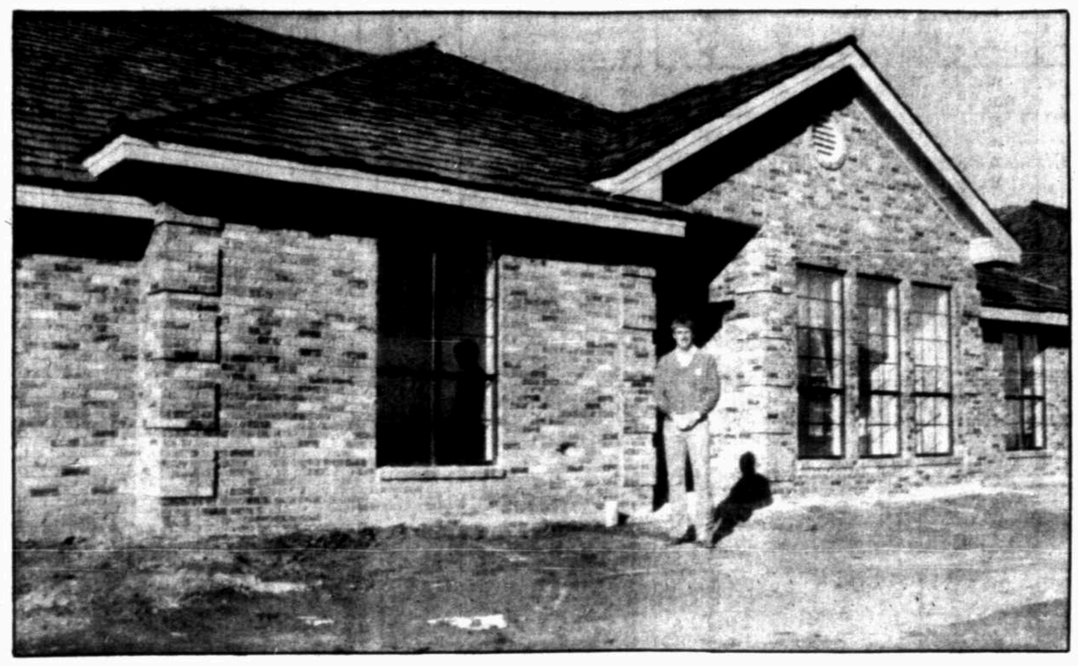

In addition, raised panel ash cabinets and built-in appliances are standard in the kitchens.

Once construction starts, Bill says , "We always have someone working on our jobs." So there are no unneccessary delays. Even in the winter there are few days that weather stops construction.

Bill explains that he feels the most satisfaction in his work when he and the new homeowner do the final walk through of the home. What was at once just a plot of land has become a home where a family can gather around the fireplace and talk or sit down in a nicely furnished kitchen and enjoy dinner. Bill's construction expertise in conjunction with the family's input makes this whole process possible.

Bill has two homes under construction right now. One is at 4815 Timber Lane in Crestgate IX and the other one is in Polo Park at 1706 Castleford. Bill Woodruff Construction Inc.'s office is in Crestgate at 4811 Timber Lane. To see some of Bill's work, turn West off of Midkiff onto Caldera (right across from Skaggs Alpha Beta), then turn right on Timber Lane. Follow the road around to 4811 where the office is located. At 4813 is a home that Bill recently completed and sold, and at 4815 Bill has a home under construction. Or to see other homes already under-construction by Bill Woodruff Construction, you can call Century 21 Midtex, 689-0021.

With interest rates reaching the lowest point that they have in a number of years, now is a tremendous time to have a home custom built for your family. Bill points out that there are still many lots available in Crestgate IX and Polo Park. Wherever you would like to have a quality custom-built home, call Bill at 699-4204 (office) or 699-1707 (home). You can count on this native Midlander to do quality work.

Bill Woodruff, a native of Midland, takes pride in offering high quality homes in Crestgate IX, Polo Park and other areas of town. His homes, such as this one at 4815 Timber Lane, exhibit exceptional quality and exquisite design.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ◇.

On occasion, a high card can prove to be an embarrassment. When that happens, get rid of it at the first opportunity.

Because of tenaces in the major suits, South elected to open with a slightly off-shape one no trump. North had an easy raise to three no trump, and that ended the auction.

West made her natural lead of the jack of diamonds, and had South succumbed to the lure of the diamond finesse, this column would never have been written. East would have won the king of diamonds and returned the suit and, since declarer cannot come to nine tricks without using the club suit, West would have got in and run enough diamond tricks to defeat the contract.

However, South made the fine play of winning the ace of diamonds—if West held the king, the queen of diamonds would still be a stopper. Had East played low routinely, the contract would have been safe. Declarer would knock out one club stopper, West would win any return and force out the remaining high club while the queen of diamonds was still on the table as a stopper.

East, Sharyn Kokish of Montreal, was up to the situation—she jettisoned her king of diamonds under the ace. Declarer had no counter. West could not be prevented from gaining the lead twice in clubs, and that was just enough to establish and run the diamonds for a one-trick set.

At the other table in this team match, North became declarer at three no trump. Here, East had the opportunity to tie the board had she found the opening lead of the king of diamonds! Not surprisingly, she made the normal lead of the jack of hearts, and now three no trump was unbeatable.

McEnroe gives reporter a 'spit bath'

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — Two journalists say "superbrat" John McEnroe shoved team and spat at one when asked about his marriage plans, but the tennis star says they "came there with the intention of starting something."

McEnroe, 26, of New York, in Melbourne for the Australian Open championship, this morning pushed Melbourne Herald reporter Geoff Easdown and insulted and spat at photographer Mike Porter of News Ltd., the two men said.

The journalists said the incident in the lobby of the plush Regency Hotel occurred after McEnroe was asked about rumors that he married his girlfriend, actress Tatum O'Neal, last week in New York.

Easdown said he asked the tennis star if he would pose for a picture with Miss O'Neal, who is rumored to be in Australia. Easdown said McEnroe ordered him out of the hotel. Easdown said: "I told him I wasn't going to be ordered around by him. He then went off the deep end."

Easdown said he did not propose to take any action against McEnroe.

NEW YORK (AP) — Renowned producer David Attenborough and ABC Board Chairman Leonard Goldenson received special awards, while programs from the United Kingdom swept four of the five categories Monday night at the 13th Annual International Emmy Awards.

Only "Das Boot," the German program which was nominated for six Oscars when released as a feature film in the United States, broke the British domination of the awards. "Das Boot" was cited in the drama category.

Attenborough, who produced the film "Gandhi," was presented the Founder's Award "for enriching worldwide viewers with an enlightened view of the world we inhabit." The award has been presented only five times in 13 years.

Goldenson received the Directorate Award "for a lifetime of dedication to the pursuit of excellence in broadcasting."

In addition to "Das Boot," the winners were:

— Documentary category, "28 Up," a British show about the achievements of 28-year-olds in living up to their ambitions as 7-year-olds.

— Performing Arts category, "Omnibus: The Treble," a BBC production tracing the story of a successful boy singer and his problems when his voice begins to change.

— Popular Arts category, "Spitting Image," a topical comedy satire from the United Kingdom.

— Children's category, "Supergran," the tale of a frail senior citizen who becomes a superwoman able to overcome the forces of evil.

The awards were presented by the International Council of the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences.

PARIS (AP) — Elizabeth Taylor and Audrey Hepburn rubbed shoulders with Paris Mayor Jacques Chirac and other French celebrities Monday night at a gala soiree in a swanky cabaret to benefit AIDS research.

Miss Taylor, chairwoman of the American foundation for AIDS research and the guest of honor, swept into the posh Paradis Latin nightclub as gypsy music began playing.

Miss Taylor, wrapped in white fur over a low-cut royal blue evening gown, and Miss Hepburn, who wore a black dress with puffed red sleeves, flanked Chirac at the center table.

Miss Taylor accepted an award from Chirac for her efforts on behalf of research to find a cure for acquired immune deficiency syndrome, or AIDS. She she accepted the award in the name of all AIDS victims, cited a national effort in the United States, and expressed the hope that the same phenomena would take place in France.

"I think she's wonderful," said Michael Heysinger, 32, a resident of Miami who waited outside with a bouquet of flowers for Miss Taylor.

Guests entering the nightclub on the Left Bank passed by two rows of Republican Guards of the First Infantry Regiment, the military unit that guards President Francois Mitterrand's Palais Elysee presidential mansion.

Some 600 guests packed the cabaret's main floor and balconies for the $250-per-person dinner, which was followed by entertainment by many of the brightest French stars and some American celebrities.

Singer Eartha Kitt pleased the crowd with her scat-singing during a duet with French performer Line Renaud of the classic "C'est Si Bon."

Renaud is president of the Association of Artists Against AIDS, the group that sponsored the evening to benefit AIDS research at the Pasteur Institute in Paris, recognized as a leader in research on the disease.

PARIS (AP) — American novelist Joseph Heller and South Africa's J.M. Coetzee were honored Monday as the best foreign novelists of the year by France's Interrallie book awards.

Heller won for his most recent novel, "God Knows," and Coetzee for "Michael K., His Life, His Time."

The respected Femina prize, worth $620 and generally awarded to "new, young talent," went to Argentinian Hector Bianciotti for "Sans la Misericorde du Christ," (Without the Mercy of Christ) — his first novel written in French.

The Medicis Prize, which crowns a "new style or tone" and earns the winning author $550, was awarded to Michel Braudeau, 39, for "Naissance d'une Passion," (Birth of a Passion), a story of three adolescents whose lives and loves reflect the changing mores of a generation.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Jew stabbed in Old City

JERUSALEM (AP) — An Israeli Jew was stabbed in the head and hand Monday as he walked down Via Dolorosa in the Old City of Jerusalem, a police spokesman said.

Spokesman Rafi Levy said Baruch Jihan, 33, was slightly wounded in the attack and hospitalized for treatment. Jihan was the third Israeli to be stabbed in the Arab sector of Jerusalem this month.

Levy told The Associated Press that Jihan struggled and fired a pistol at his attacker. He apparently missed the assailant, who fled through the ancient, winding street along which Jesus carried his cross to Calvary.

Jihan collapsed outside the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, the traditional burial site of Jesus, Levy said.

Israel radio said Jihan was a guide planning a walking tour of Jerusalem.

Bonner back in Moscow

MOSCOW (AP) — Dissident Andrei Sakharov's wife, Yelena Bonner, returned to her Moscow home today from internal exile in the closed city of Gorky in preparation for her planned visit to Italy for medical treatment.

Guards barred foreign reporters from her apartment but confirmed that she was inside.

Soviet friends of Mrs. Bonner who were leaving her apartment as two American reporters arrived said she had come to the capital this morning and was "fine."

Earlier this month, Mrs. Bonner, 62, told relatives in the United States that she was being allowed to travel to Italy for treatment of eye and heart ailments. Her husband, the 1975 Nobel Peace Prize winner, has gone on hunger strike at least three times, most recently in August, in his battle to win permission for his wife to leave the country.

Cardinals explain synod

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Two leading cardinals have seemed eager to distance the leadership of a special synod assessing the Second Vatican Council reforms from both liberal and conservative wings of the Roman Catholic Church.

The two-week synod was called by Pope John Paul II and opened Sunday with 165 participants.

Vatican II, held in four sessions between 1962 and 1965, recast the church's image from unchangeable monolith to an institution ready to modernize. Changes were made in Catholic liturgy, ecumenism, seminary education, religious life and church government.

Cardinal Godfried Danneels of Brussels and Cardinal John Krol of Philadelphia spoke at a news conference Tuesday and said the synod will not go back on the council's reform.

Asked if a fight was emerging between conservative and progressive bishops, Krol replied, "It's not a boxing match we are conducting. It is not a conflict."

Krol is one of three co-presidents of the synod. Danneels gave the keynote speech.

Kadinsky work stolen

COLOGNE, West Germany (AP) — A painting by Russian abstract artist Wassily Kandinsky was stolen from the storage room of a Cologne moving company, police said.

Police spokesman Alfons Selt said the 1930 painting, "High-Low," is valued at the equivalent of $258,000.

He said the painting disappeared between Sept. 13-15, but police announced the theft only Monday. Selt refused to give the reason for the delay.

Mexican bonuses due

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The head of a national consumer group says that Mexicans will spend nearly one-fourth of their traditional Christmas bonuses on alcoholic beverages this year, the daily newspaper Excelsior reported Monday.

Mexicans have raised their alcohol consumption steadily for the past two years in reaction to the country's economic crisis, Arturo Lomeli, director of the Mexican Association of Studies for the Defense of Consumers, told the newspaper.

Lomeli said employers this year will distribute $1 billion in Christmas bonuses, known as "aguinaldos," which traditionally equal one month's pay.

Lomeli predicted the public would spend about $600 million to pay off debts, $240 million for alcoholic beverages and $160 million for durable goods. The liquor is a means of escape from the problems created by the economic crisis, he said.

Trade talks criticized

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Labor and opposition parties Monday criticized President Miguel de la Madrid's decision to begin negotiations on membership in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

But prominent businessmen and private analysts hailed the decision as important to open up the nation's economy which is highly protected from foreign goods.

"It is the only long-term option for the economy," said Ignacio Trigueros, director of economic research at the Mexican Autonomous Institute of Technology.

The government late Sunday announced that de la Madrid had issued instructions to Commerce Secretary Hector Hernandez Cervantes to start talks that would lead to entry in the 90-member trading organization, known by its initials as GATT.

Canadian tourism down

TORONTO (AP) — Despite visits by the Pope, the Queen and the tall ships, the total number of tourists coming to Canada increased by a meagre 1.8 per cent to 34.9 million in 1984, a survey by Statistics Canada has revealed.

The survey, which compiles figures from sample checks at border crossings, also concludes 94 per cent of those visitors were from the United States. That translates into 33 million Americans, up only 1.5 per cent from the year before.

"It's going to be worse in 1985," says Robert DeGrace, president of the Canadian Restaurant and Foodservices Association. "The first six months will show our (travel) deficit still running well above $2 billion.

"If we did a survey of Americans leaving Canada after a visit, I am sure one of the first things they would mention is the high cost of gas, food and alcohol — and that is primarily because of the taxes imposed by the various governments."

Bomb suspects sought

BONN, West Germany (NYT) — The West German federal criminal police announced Monday night that they were seeking two men believed to be Arabs in connection with a car bombing Sunday at an American military shopping center in northern Frankfurt. The attack wounded 35 people.

A police statement issued in Wiesbaden said that the two men had purchased the car used in the bombing at noon on Saturday at a used-car lot in Gravenbruch outside of Frankfurt. The federal agency said that in concluding the purchase of the silver-colored BMW, one of the two men showed what appeared to be a Moroccan passport bearing the name "Azuz Mohsein"— most likely, Mohsein Aziz.

West German police launched a nationwide search Monday for the bombers but reported that no group had taken credit for the terrorist attack on the low-slung American PX complex. Last August, the self-styled Red Army Faction staged a terrorist attack on the giant American Rhein-Main airbase outside Frankfurt, killing two Americans and wounding 20.

Israeli, Moroccan leaders to meet

By NICOLAS B. TATRO

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Prime Minister Shimon Peres said he is ready to meet Morocco's King Hassan II for talks on Middle East peace following an announcement by Hassan that he would receive Peres "with great pleasure."

Such a meeting would represent a breakthrough in efforts to expand Arab-Israeli peacemaking, which has made little headway since the 1979 peace treaty between Egypt and Israel.

The only Arab leader to meet publicly with Israeli leaders was the late Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, who was assassinated in 1981 by Islamic fundamentalists opposed to his peacemaking with Israel.

Hassan, 56, acted as intermediary for the secret talks that led to those Egyptian-Israeli negotiations.

Hassan said Monday on television in Morocco's capital of Rabat, "If he (Peres) has some serious proposal to make, he should come to see me.... But there must be a real basis for discussion. The day Mr. Peres says to me, 'I have a serious proposal to put to you,' then why not?"

In reply, Peres' office in Jerusalem issued a terse statement shortly before midnight Monday, quoting the Israeli leader as saying: "There were exchanges of messages between the king and myself, and I will be happy to meet with him."

The reference to an exchange of messages between the two leaders indicated that behind-the-scenes diplomacy had prepared the ground for such a meeting.

A meeting would come with Hassan acting in his capacity as head of the 21-nation Arab League because Morocco and Israel do not have diplomatic relations.

The promptness of Israel's reply indicated Peres was eager for such talks, which would help Israel's long-standing efforts to achieve Arab recognition of the Jewish state.

An official in Peres' Labor party who spoke on condition of anonymity said: "It is no secret that Mr. Peres had good personal contacts including meetings with King Hassan when he was an opposition leader and would welcome further contacts."

Officials indicated it was significant that Hassan met publicly with an Israeli delegation last year and held secret meetings with Peres and other Israeli leaders in recent years.

There was no indication in the Israeli statement that Peres had fulfilled Morocco's condition for a "serious proposal." Peres' aide, Baruch Askerov, declined to elaborate on the statement.

Hassan did not specify what type of Israeli proposal he would consider sufficent for a meeting to be held. He said the only Arab conditions would be that discussions should aim at peace and at giving a homeland to the Palestinians.

"Everyone will agree that there will be no more war because everyone will have recognized everyone else," he said, using the language of the "no more war" pledge made by Sadat and then-Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin, who started their peacemaking when Sadat visited Jerusalem in November 1977.

Observers speculated that any meeting between Hassan and Peres would likely focus on questions of procedure — how to arrange a broader peace process involving Jordan and the Palestinians — rather than on detailed substantive questions.

The extent of the Moroccan king's mandate from the Arab League for such talks also was unclear.

Popular-vote winner loses Honduran race

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras — Opposition National Party candidate Rafael Leonardo Callejas won the most votes in Honduras' presidential election but lost the presidency, according to returns released Monday.

Jose Azcona Hoyo, the leading candidate from the ruling Liberal Party, came in second in the popular vote, but is expected to be declared the winner of Sunday's election because his party earned more votes than the National Party.

Azcona, 58, a white-haired engineer, declined to make a statement before all the votes were counted. Workers at his campaign headquarters, however, answered the telephone "office of the President of the Republic."

Both sides held victory caravans Monday night, honking and cheering through the streets of the capital.

With more than half of the ballots counted, Callejas had 41.3 percent of the popular vote, compared to 24.4 percent for second-place Azcona.

But Azcona's Liberal Party, which had four candidates on the ballot, won 51 percent of the vote. Callejas's National Party, with three candidates on the ballot, won only 45 percent of the vote. Two other parties had a candidate each on the ballot.

Although the Constitution dictates that the president is elected by a simple majority, a new election law says that the winner is the candidate with the most votes in the party with the most votes.

There has been much controversy over which rule would prevail. After the military and the U.S. Embassy pushed for a decision, the National Election Tribunal finally voted late Saturday night to follow the new election law.

The tribunal voted 4-1 on the issue, with the National Party dissenting. The stage is set for a National Party challenge in the Supreme Court that could drag on for months.

Callejas, a 42-year-old banker, has said that he would respect the decision of the tribunal, but now his party is considering lodging a protest.

"There seems to be a lot of pressures that the decision should be challenged," said Ricardo Maduro, vice chairman of the Callejas campaign.

The new president is scheduled to be inaugurated for a four-year term on Jan. 27. If the winner still is in question then, a council of ministers from the government of President Roberto Suazo Cordova would take power until a new president is named.

Honduras, a key U.S. ally, has a history of miltiary coups and fraudulent elections. If a president is inaugurated in January, it would be the first transfer of power from one elected civilian to another since 1924.

Honduras is a staging area for U.S.-backed contras fighting to overthrow the Sandinista government of neighboring Nicaragua and is also a base for U.S. troops.

Neither Azcona nor Callejas would be expected to change Honduras policy on issues of interest to the United States. Nor would they challenge the powers the military traditionally wields from behind the scenes.

Much of the controversy over the vote counting stems from the maneuvering of outgoing President Suazo Cordova, who made several attempts to extend his four-year term.

Last spring, Suazo Cordova tried to name the candidate of both major parties, which led to a political battle with Congress, the Supreme Court and military-backed labor unions. An agreement finally was reached to open up the election to more than one candidate from each party, and Congress wrote the law that the president would come from the party with the most votes.

Suazo Cordova, a political rival of Azcona, named Ostar Mejia Arellano as the official candidate of the Liberal Party, and campaigned against Azcona as much as he did against Callejas.

Azcona's supporters said that he would have won both a popular and a party majority if it had not been for Suazo Cordova's machinations.

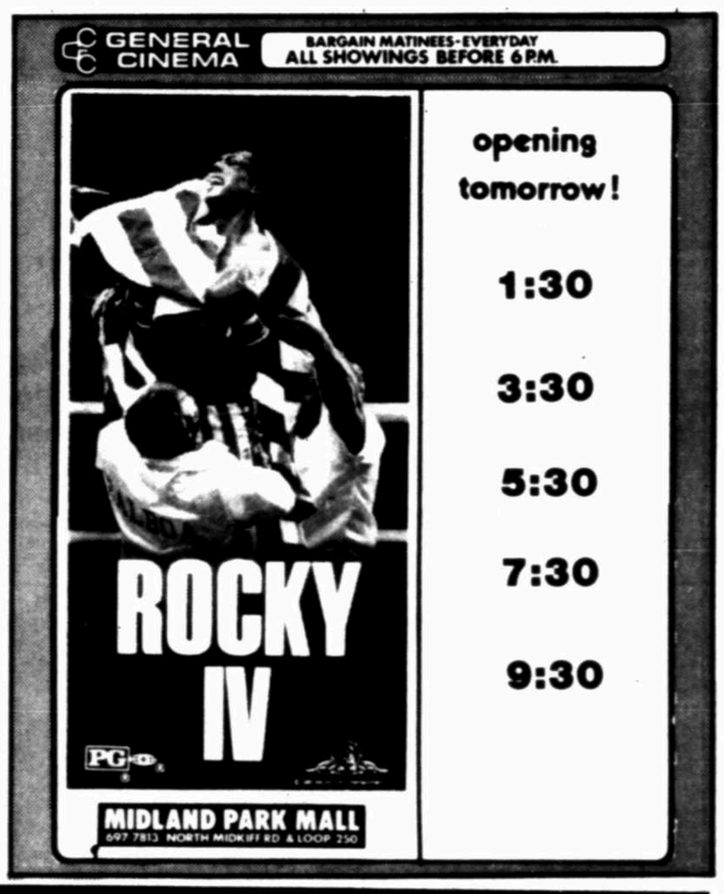

As of late Monday, Azcona had 173,751 votes to Mejia Arellano's 144,784. Together, they had more votes than Callejas, who collected 293,686.

In addition to voting for president, Honduras elected 132 congressmen and 284 mayors.

DEAR ABBY

Tax break among charity donations

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I have a sister-in-law I'll call Daisy. Her father died eight years ago, at which time she set up a memorial fund foundation in his name to benefit her favorite charity. Now eights years later, whenever my husband and I have a birthday, anniversary and even at Christmastime, we receive a card from Daisy stating that a gift to her father's memorial has been made in our "honor."

We never were very close to Daisy's father, and while we appreciate the fact that she wanted to set up this foundation in memory of her father, we cannot understand why, instead of giving us a gift, she makes a contribution to her favorite charity. We are also irked because we suspect that Daisy is probably deriving tax benefits by these contributions.

How do you see this? Or should we ask Daisy? — NOT HONORED IN NEW YORK

DEAR NOT HONORED: If Daisy really wanted to give you a gift, it would be more appropriate for her to make a contribution to your favorite charity — not hers. But don't ask whether she's deriving tax benefits. Daisies don't tell.

DEAR ABBY: My mother-in-law and I disagree on something that will probably seem petty to you, but I really need to know who is right. Into which shaker should the salt and pepper go? Doesn't the salt belong in the shaker with the greater number (but smaller in size) holes in it? My mother-in-law says the pepper should go into that one. I think she's wrong.

She's coming here for Thanksgiving dinner, and I just know she's going to bring it up again. So how should I handle her when she tells me I'm wrong? — ALL SHOOK UP IN PHILLY

DEAR SHOOK: In our house, the shaker with the larger (and fewer) holes contains the pepper because the pepper we use is coarser than the salt and requires larger holes.

If your mother-in-law brings it up again, don't put her down. Just ask her to pass the cranberry sauce.

DEAR READERS: "Trenton Times Reader" wrote to point out that the words imply and infer are frequently interchanged because most people do not know the correct meaning of either.

Briefly, to "imply" means to suggest or insinuate. To "infer" means to draw a conclusion from something that was either said or implied.

That item inspired the following:

DEAR ABBY:
Inferred Implications or Implied Inferences?
He: I merely implied
That you were inferring,
Some things never meant
And, thus, you were erring.
Now, I cannot help
Any blow to your pride,
If you have inferred
Things I never implied.
She: You DID imply
All the facts you are blurring.
You sure were implying
I was not inferring!
It's you who inferred
When you heard my reply,
Some very wrong things
I would never imply.
We: Each says, "You inferred."
Each says, "You implied."
We don't know who's right
And just can't decide.
One thing tho' seems certain
There'll be no concurring
On who was implying
Or who was inferring.

Under hot photographic lights and four plus layers of wool knit, Jan Strimple projects cool sophistication.

Top international model says 'glamourous' job hard work

Copley News Service

Another wolf whistle. Jan Strimple is used to it. For three years she's been a top international model, busy circling the globe as one of the world's highest-paid runway models. Jan knows that when she walks down a street, men's heads turn and women grow green with envy.

This statuesque beauty takes it all in with a cool pragmatism befitting the small-town Ohio native she really is.

"I'm a clothes hanger with heels," she laughs. "Most people think my job is pure glamour. In truth, I work 330 days a year — that's a lot of weekends. I fly so frequently to assignments, hundreds of stewardesses know me."

Aside from the demand for her services, part of the reason for Jan's extensive travel schedule is that she and her husband, Dan, a professional golfer, live on the outskirts of Dallas.

"Here, the air is clean. We have room to stretch out and be ourselves. We need the nurturing of a non-city environment."

Jan obviously cuts across the grain. Though she is a striking woman, she is not a Miss America, not a Christie Brinkley cutie. She is tall, nearly 6 feet, and thin to the point of making most models Reubenesque by comparison. Her face is strong, reminiscent of Jean Harlow. Cameras love recording every angle, curve and hollow.

Her photographic debut was inauspicious, and probably best forgotten. As a teenager she was hired by an industrial magazine to pose holding a box of rat poison while smiling broadly. Poison never looked better.

She also worked, as thousands of teenagers have, on the local Montgomery Ward's Pacesette Board — this one in Cuyahaga Falls, Ohio. That paid her way through the University of Akron, where she earned a degree in fashion sales and merchandising.

Incredibly, she quit fashion and modeling entirely. Jan and her new husband left Ohio and "honeymooned" from one end of the country to the other for two years. During their travels, they stumbled across Texas and settled in.

Lana Turner was discovered at a Hollywood soda counter; Jan Strimple was rediscovered, first by Bob Mackie, then by Carolina Herrera, modeling in a Dallas department store. At their urging, she went to New York and was promptly signed by Gary White of the Legends Agency. During her first runway season in New York, Jan, the unknown newcomer, appeared in 14 major fashion shows.

Her success was repeated in Europe, where she was hired for the couture showings of Yves St. Laurent, Pierre Cardin, Givenchy, Chloe and other greats. Still, she knows the sting of rejection. Thierry Mugler and Claude Montana won't look at her modeling portfolio. "And my look is perfect for them," she sighs. Still, there's always tomorrow.

80's foot fashion inspired by past

NEW YORK (AP) — There's old news and there's new news in footwear fashion for the spring and summer: the shapes are familiar from the '40s and '60s but the patterns are definitedly '80s-inspired.

Metallic and vinyl are making headlines, while leather, a fashion mainstay, comes in a multitude of psychedelic colors.

Wedges and platforms and thicker heels like the kind worn by Betty Grable are coming back, but in an awesome range of prints. Even the standard pump is disguised in pop-art graphics, tropical florals and primitive tribal patterns.

The sandal is also making a comeback, only this year it will sport a '60s low block heel adorned in gaudy jewels, wide ankle straps or sphagetti-thin strings that wrap high around the ankle.

Sneakers and espadrilles are shaped as before but are being shown in paisley and lace-adorned metallics.

These were a few of the looks previewed by the Footwear Council, an industry group representing both domestic and international markets.

The group says there will be three basic categories for spring and summer: The Fabulous Forties, Cross-Culture and The Sixties — Transitional Years.

The most wearable and sensible shoes are those taking their cue from the 1940s.

AT WIT'S END

Women's independence moves on

By ERMA BOMBECK

It's been a long time since we've talked about what a long way baby has come in the fight for equality. Have women blazed no new trails? Have there been no significant breakthroughs in attitudes? Have women given up the dream of ever dancing forward?

Actually, one of the greatest advancements in women's behavior has come and gone without so much as a mention. WOMEN ARE NO LONGER GOING TO THE RESTROOM IN TWOS. The nun influence is gone! In its place are confident, independent women who push away from the table and leave quietly. No more do they catch the eye of another woman at the table and mouth, "Margaret, I'm going to the restroom. Do you have to go?" And no more does Margaret say, "I don't have to go, but I'll come with you."

No one could ever explain the mystique of why women feared going to the restroom alone, but it's not too hard to figure out why it was targeted as an area that had to change.

Half of every woman's life is spent in a restroom line. It is one of life's inequities. No one, regardless of stature, would dream of bucking that line. Mother Teresa waits in a line. The Pope does not. Queen Elizabeth waits in a line. President Reagan does not. Carol Burnett waits in a line. Bill Cosby does not. It's a wonder women have had the time to achieve greatness at all.

It would shock most people to know that thanks to restroom lines, most women have never seen the first act of anything. They never hear the Star-Spangled Banner at the ballgame, never see a kick-off, never see the appetizer at a banquet.

It is the most time-consuming thing they do. In an impartial study, it was determined that women who went skiing for a weekend actually spent an entire day of it waiting in restroom lines, shortening their time on the slopes, considerably more than men.

Paul Harvey in his column noted another disparity in the system by observing that women's restrooms were situated an "olympic distance" beyond men's rooms."

He writes, "Whole cities have been constructed by men smart enough to span the sky with a bowstring truss, yet too dumb to know that women have to stop and go more often."

I made my stand on field trips to the restroom a few years ago. I took a deep breath, pushed myself away from the table, and made my way to the little door with the cut-out of a woman wearing a hooped skirt. It was the bravest thing I have ever done. I didn't know anyone to talk with. I had no friends. But I knew if women were ever to make their mark in the world, they had to do it alone.

It's a move that has made us tough. It has nourished our spirit. It has challenged our resources. It has given us a place in history.

Dressing for success not always expensive

Hearst News Service

Is it possible to dress for success without spending a fortune? The answer is a resounding yes.

Although it doesn't take an MBA to learn how to build a smart and economical wardrobe, it is a challenge. The reason is that the rules for business dressing are relaxing. But even though women no longer have to adhere to a "uniform" look, they still most conform to their particular industry's dress code.

This was among the findings to emerge in a recent nationwide poll of 500 personnel consultants and executive recruiters. The study, conducted for the Celanese Co. by Michael Solomon of the New York University School of Business Administration, found that headhunters agree on the following:

- The first thing a job applicant is judged on is neatness.
- Style is less important than cut and fit of a garment.
- A sexy image is inappropriate for women on the job.
- Women should not dress like men to get ahead.

Leigh Charlton and Annette Swanberg, fashion consultants and authors of the book "Chic on a Shoestring," offer this advice for building a successful wardrobe for less than $500:

- Research the dress code for the field you're entering. Keep in mind the style of dress for the position you aspire to.
- Don't shop until you have a game plan, a list of the items you want to buy. That way you won't make costly errors.
- Look at fashion magazines and catalogs for ideas. Cut out items that you like. Mix and match them to get an idea of what works.
- Start a wardrobe from a base of two neutral colors, such as black and white, navy and gray, black and gray, beige and brown.

A trunk showing of spring-/summer fashions by Escada will be presented from 10 a.m.-5:30 p.m. Dec. 2-3 at Julian Gold, 4610 N. Garfield.

A Soviet tank crew takes up position in one of the main streets in Kabul, Afghanistan, in 1980. Soviet awareness of the almost 6-year-old war is increasing as thousands of veterans return and family and friends become more aware of the wounded.

Veterans make Soviets aware of Afghanistan

By CAROL J. WILLIAMS
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW — The painful reality of the nearly 6-year-old war in Afghanistan is being brought home to Soviet citizens through the media and the return of hundreds of thousands of veterans.

After President Leonid I. Brezhnev sent troops into Afghanistan in December 1979 to replace the one Marxist government with another more sympathetic to Moscow, public discussion of Soviet battles against Moslem insurgents was all but forbidden.

But as more dead and injured soldiers return from distant battlefields, awareness of the war's costs and complexities grows among the victims' families, friends and neighbors.

The bodies are returned without ceremony and without television coverage. Soviet casualty figures from Afghanistan are never disclosed.

However, obituaries published in the fallen soldiers' local newspapers note they died fighting in Afghanistan and more and more soldiers' gravestones are appearing in cemeteries.

Lately, the official press has been issuing regular reports on Afghanistan, but gives few details on actual fighting, never reports defeats and says nothing about territorial gains or losses.

Instead, there are stories about individual acts of heroism, efforts to help the Afghans "build the revolution" with schools, hospitals, industry and roads, or atrocities by rebels who, the Soviets say, are supported by Pakistan and the United States.

The national TV news program "Vremya" has broadcast film from the front showing combat-ready Soviet soldiers digging in to defend settlements against "dushmani" — rebels fighting the regime of Babrak Karmal, who was installed by the Soviets.

Some of the shots are dramatic, with roads erupting into explosions as Afghan military convoys rumble along and Soviet soldiers fire from entrenchments into the rebel-controlled hills.

TV reports have never shown Soviets troops actually being fired on or taking any casualties, however.

There are stories of personal tragedy, including a recent article in the Communist Party daily Pravda immortalizing two soldiers who sacrificed their lives to save others in battle.

Stressing that they were party members, the paper said, "both men, officer and soldier, took their last steps consciously, as friends of the Afghan people, as internationalists."

More typical of the Soviet coverage was a series of features in the weekly Literary Gazette this fall on the day-to-day lives of Soviet sappers and tank crews.

The lengthy articles focused on the soldiers' political activity and their cordial relations with local people. They stressed that Soviet soldiers are supporting a neighboring government and defended the Soviet presence as "fulfillment of our international and allied mission and defense of our southern borders."

Reports of wartime suffering and death usually focus on Afghans, not Soviets. The defense ministry newspaper Krasnaya Zvezda published a story in November called "mercenaries of the dollar," in which it detailed the schools, hospitals and mosques destroyed over the past seven years by "CIA-backed rebels."

The newspaper said tens of thousands of Afghans have died in the war, but didn't say how many Soviets have died — a toll estimated by foreign sources at 10,000.

Public awareness of the war is occasionally acknowledged by the media. Pravda, replying to a reader's letter in July, explained the Kremlin's view that Afghan refugees in Pakistan are coerced into becoming guerrilla fighters or are enticed with large sums of money. Pravda also accused Pakistani border guards of murdering Afghans who wanted to cross back over the border.

Air security practices questioned

By MICHAEL DOBBS
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

ATHENS, Greece — Greek and Egyptian aviation officials blamed each other Monday for the lax security arrangements that have le to two highly publicized and violent airplane hijackings o er the last five months.

The sudden upsurge of suspicion between the two countries reflected a common element in the hijacking of a TWA plane last June and of an Egyptair Boeing 737 last weekend. In each case, the plane was commandeered shortly after it left Athens — but its point of origin was Cairo.

In Geneva, the International Air Transport Association (IATA), which includes most of the world's scheduled airlines, said it planned to send security experts to both Cairo and Athens over the next week to investigate how the hijacking occurred.

A spokesman for IATA, David Kyd, said in a statement that the organization was "increasingly wondering if Cairo is being used to put arms on aircraft." He did not indicate what evidence IATA had to support this suspicion.

Greece and Egypt have a clear interest in absolving themselves of responsibility for the incidents, both of which resulted in the deaths of innocent passengers and heightened concern about airport security.

An official Greek statement Monday implicitly criticized the Maltese government's action in allowing Egyptian commandos to storm the plane, saying Greece was not informed of the operation in advance. Of 17 Greek passengers on the plane, there were only five survivors.

After the June hijacking, the Socialist government complained of losing millions of dollars of tourist revenue when the Reagan administration advised U.S. citizens against traveling through Athens airport. Monday, Foreign Minister Ioannis Kapsis categorically ruled out a security lapse at the airport Saturday night.

Only sparse details have emerged so far about the background to the takeover of the Egyptian plane, which occurred over the Greek island of Minos after takeoff from Athens for Cairo.

The hijackers are believed to have boarded the plane here after spending at least two days in the Greek capital but, according to both Greek and Egyptian sources here, it seems likely that their arms were smuggled aboard separately.

According to one hypothesis, by Greek airport officials Monday, the arms were already on the plane when it arrived from Cairo. The same theory was advanced after the hijacking by Shiite extremists of the TWA plane while it was on a flight from Cairo to Rome via Athens.

A second hypothesis, by Egyptian airline officials here, is that the hijackers were helped by accomplices at Athens airport. The Egyptian officials conceded Monday that it was difficult to imagine how the hijackers had managed to smuggle their guns and hand grenades through three different airport security checks, including two operated by Egyptair rather than Greek authorities, without outside help.

Security at Athens airport has been tightened since the TWA hijacking and it was declared to have reached acceptable international standards by IATA.

Kapsis said Monday that the security lapse must have taken place "somewhereelse." Although he refrained from naming the Cairo airport, Greek officials who asked not to be named said this was the only alternative.

The idea that the arms already could have been on the Boeing 737 was dismissed by the Athens station manager for Egyptair, Kamal Fakharani, who described Cairo airport as one of the world's safest.

"We had four security men on that plane. They searched the whole plane thoroughly both before taking off from Cairo and when it arrived in Athens," he said.

Malta had improved Libyan relations

VALLETTA, Malta (AP) — This strategic Mediterranean island where the hijacking of an Egyptian airliner ended tragically recently improved relations with Libya, the north African country that Egypt's official radio has alleged was behind the incident.

Malta and Libya, 200 miles to the south, have a treaty dating from November 1984 that calls for Libya to help the island nation if it is "threatened" and train Maltese military personnel.

During a visit to Malta three weeks ago, Libyan Premier Mohammed Zaruk Rajab announced the two countries had signed agreements giving each country's citizens the rights to travel, work, set up residence and own property in the other country.

Late Monday, Egypt's official Cairo Radio charged Libya with "funding and instigating" the hijacking. Maltese officials say 60 people died, including an American woman shot by the gunmen and 59 people killed when Egyptian commandoes stormed and recaptured the plane.

The radio said in a commentary that the hijackers belonged to a Libyan-backed Palestinian group that had broken away from the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Libya has not responded directly to the charge, but the official Soviet news agency Tass said in Moscow that Libya denied involvement.

Malta, a former British colony, has pursued a policy of neutrality but is friendly to Arab nations.

Socialist Prime Minister Carmelo Mifsud Bonnici said in a speech to Parliament Monday night that Malta "regards the Arab question with great sympathy. But at the same time Malta was regarding their (the hijackers) action as a great shame for the Arab cause."

Malta and Libya signed their 1984 treaty while they were disputing sea floor boundaries before the International Court of Justice. Both countries expressed satisfaction last June at the court's decision giving about three-quarters of the disputed area to Libya and one-quarter to Malta.

Last fall, Egyptian authorities arrested two Maltese in connection with an alleged Libyan murder plot and held them for six months before expelling them.

Last year Malta disagreed with Italian plans to station 112 U.S.-built nuclear-tipped missiles on Sicily, 55 miles to the north, as part of a NATO expansion. Malta closed the NATO base on its territory in 1971.

Malta also wants to renegotiate its 1980 neutrality pact with Italy. The island contends the agreement was invalidated when Italy failed to honor part of its obligations under a financial accord.

Malta has improved its relations with the Soviets since 1977, when it accused Moscow of failing to aid the island's attempts to remove foreign bases from its soil. Malta allowed the construction of a Soviet embassy only in 1981, 14 years after diplomatic relations were established.

In March 1983, Malta and the Soviet Union signed trade agreements in which, among other things, the Soviets agreed to buy more than $200 million worth of Maltese goods by 1986.

Some observers have said Malta made the moves in an effort to bolster its recession-plagued economy, which has some light industry, agriculture and shipbuilding. Malta's main trading partner is Britain.

The 95-square-mile nation is made up of three islands, Malta, Gozo and Comino. It has a population of 330,000 people, most of whom are Roman Catholic. Malta became independent in 1964 after 150 years of British rule. The official languages are Maltese and English, and Italian is widely spoken.

On April 20, 1984, the Plaintiffs, and certain affiliates, filed petitions for reorganization under Title 11, Chapter 11 of the United States Bankruptcy Code, in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Middle District of Florida in Case Nos. 84-289-BK-J-GP through 84-332-BK-J-GP, inclusive. Adversary proceedings and contested motions were commenced by and against those persons, firms, corporations, partnerships or other entities (the "Defendants"), who asserted claims as secured creditors against the Plaintiffs, pursuant to Section 9.319, for crude oil sold to Plaintiffs but not paid for, produced from oil, gas and mineral leases located in the State of Texas. The adversary proceedings and contested motions referred to herein were initiated in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Middle District of Florida, Jacksonville Division, and subsequently were consolidated and transferred to the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Texas, San Antonio Division, in Adversary Proceeding No. 5-84-0827E (the "Adversary Proceeding").

By this Adversary Proceeding, Plaintiffs seek a declaratory judgment that the Defendants, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, have no lien rights under Section 9.319 in any of the Plaintiffs' property or, in the alternative, for a judgment pursuant to Section 552 of the Bankruptcy Code.

As a result of an order of this Court of November 6, 1985, which designates this action as a class action, any judgment, whether for or against those against whom the subject action is directed, will apply to the following class:

(a) All persons, firms, corporations, partnerships or other entities who, as interest owners, (as defined in Section 9.319) have not been paid for crude oil sold to the plaintiffs, or their affiliates as first purchasers (as defined in Section 9.319), produced from oil, gas and mineral leases located in the State of Texas; specifically excluding, however, Gulf Oil Corp., Exxon Co. U.S.A., Texaco, Inc., Getty Oil Co., Mobil Oil Corp., American Oil Co. ("Amoco"), Atlantic Richfield Co. ("ARCO"), Phillips Petroleum Co. (except insofar as they may have acquired a claim through their acquisition of Aminoil Inc.), Conoco, Inc., Chevron, Tenneco and each of their respective affiliates and subsidiaries.

This notice has been directed to you in the belief that you or your organization may be a member of the class defined above. This notice is not to be understood as an expression of any opinion of this Court as to the merits of any of the claims or defenses asserted by either side in the subject action.

If you have any questions concerning the matter dealt with in this notice, you may address them to:
