NO EASY SOLUTIONS

Grayson Sees Trouble In Monitoring Program

WASHINGTON (UPI) — As President Ford planned an economic summit, a key member of the Nixon administration's efforts to fight inflation said Ford's new wage and price monitoring program might increase, not decrease, some prices.

C. Jackson Grayson, former chairman of the Nixon administration's Price Commission, said unless inflation was eased, the nation might "be back into some form of mandatory wage and price controls by early next year."

Housing and Urban Development Secretary James T. Lynn said the nation's housing situation was of "great concern" to the President, but said there were no quick and easy solutions.

Ford scheduled back-to-back meetings today with Kenneth Rush, chairman of the steering committee setting up the economic summit, and a Cabinet meeting on the summit in which he was expected to outline his goals and Cabinet roles.

Grayson speculated "if the inflation does not cool somewhat, we may be back into some form of mandatory wage and price controls by early next year despite the desire of many people not to do it."

"Having had to run a program myself, I think mandatory is certainly out and obviously I don't think the present sort of monitoring and jawboning activity is desirable," he said.

Grayson, now dean of the School of Business Administration at Southern Methodist University, was interviewed on NBC's "Meet the Press."

He said the Advisory Council on Wage and Price Stability, created Saturday by Ford, might have some influence but "will actually in some cases increase prices rather than decrease them."

Grayson conceded that Ford had talked General Motors into reducing planned price increases for 1975 models from 9.5 to 8.5 per cent but added "whether this was a desirable cutback in terms of the act to control inflation and GM's profits, that is something else."

Lynn, who was interviewed on the CBS "Face the Nation," said he was "quite leery" of any system that would allow the federal government to allocate credit to the housing market.

Law Officers Search For Escaped Convicts

STEPHENVILLE, Tex. (UPI) — Highway patrolmen today found evidence of a burglary and soiled clothes in a farmhouse, proof that three violent escaped convicts remained inside a tightening circle of law officers.

Police said the clothes were in a small house northwest of the city. It appeared the three convicts—suspected of killing two persons, wounding five and raping two women—had changed clothes in the house before dawn.

The farmhouse, apparently one of many abandoned by frightened residents, was within the five-mile circle where the convicts were stopped in a 1,000-mile, four-day dash from the Colorado State Penitentiary to seek revenge against Texans who had helped send them to prison.

"They've cut a swath all the way across New Mexico and most of Texas," murdering, raping and robbing and these people would not hesitate a damn minute to kill you," Texas Department of Public Safety Lt. Nelson Higginbotham warned a new group of officers that joined roadblocks and search crews today.

"I think they'd rather kill an officer than anybody, but they'd just as soon kill anybody that gives them any trouble whatever. What they have now, I don't know. They could have 40 guns."

The convicts shot their way across north Texas, beginning with the murder of a rancher in Rotan, where they dropped a list of people they planned to kill and boasted of their revenge plans in the Colorado prison.

Their rampage was halted early Sunday in rolling farmland and mesquite forests in northern Erath County. Police found the renegades' last abandoned vehicle there, and sealed off the area with 200 police, helicopters and bloodhounds. The circle has been slowly tightening, but—until the discovery of the farmhouse—burglary police were not certain the men had not slipped away.

Texas Department of Public Safety spokesman Jim Robinson said 15 homes located in the sealed-off area had been abandoned by their residents.

"They've come together for protection in churches and other buildings," Robinson said. "Some places have armed guards."

Pledging revenge and carrying a death list of those who helped send them to jail, the three convicts shot their way across North Texas over the weekend, leaving behind two dead, five wounded, two kidnap and rape victims and several wrecked and abandoned cars.

The three-day, 150-mile journey of murder and random violence was halted early Sunday 70 miles southwest of Fort Worth along a seldom traveled dirt road. Their stolen car smashed into an embankment near a farm windmill and the three escaped on foot into thick underbrush familiar to at least one of the convicts.

State and local police, including a half dozen Texas Rangers, patrolled the perimeter of the five-mile-wide thickets throughout the night, but there were no reported sightings of the escaped convicts.

The trio, who escaped from the Colorado State Penitentiary at Canon City, Colo., Thursday, were identified as Dalton Williams, 29, Snyder, Tex.; Jerry Ulmer, 22, Garland, Tex.; and Richard Magnum, 22, Denver.

The area where they were believed hiding is sparsely populated, rugged and well known to Ulmer.

"He once lived down here," Erath County District Attorney Bob Glasgow said. "His brother said he had deer hunted every inch of it."

Williams' mother said her son needed psychiatric help and she hoped he could be captured without bloodshed.

"I don't want him to get out and hurt other people," Mary Jane Collum said. "I'd like for him to have help. He's mixed up."

Glasgow said the three might be prepared to hide for days. He said they had stolen pots, pans and food from a home at Rotan, Tex., before heading toward Stephenville.

The three placed stuffed dummies in their bunks Thursday and then breached the wall. The violence began after they stole a car in Colorado and worked their way to Lovington, N.M. There they kidnaped two 23-year-old women and forced them to ride to Rotan, 175 miles east into Texas.

It was there they crossed the first name off the death list. T. L. Baker, 64, a widower who lived alone on a farm, was killed with a shotgun blast. The list was then dropped by Williams, apparently for police to find.

"This list had Mr. Baker's name and address, and also the names and addresses of the district attorney and the district judge out there," Glasgow said.

Officials Still Studying Local Shooting Case

Ronnie Melton, 27, of 324 S. Tignor, was reported to be in satisfactory condition this morning at St. Anthony's Hospital in Amarillo, where he was taken following a shooting incident here Friday night.

Melton reportedly suffered a gunshot wound in the chest during an altercation at the Catalina Club, 600 S. Cuyler.

Another Pampa man, Wiley Butch Reynolds Jr., 37, who lives north of the city, was also involved in the incident.

He was first taken to Highland General Hospital Friday night, treated and released, then was admitted to Worley Hospital Saturday.

His condition this morning was described as good. Reynolds reportedly was struck in the head by a handgun.

Many details of the incident are still under investigation. Police Chief Jim Conner said today. He also said that as of mid-morning no charges had been filed, pending interviews with several persons involved.

There is still no official information on who had fired the shots inside the lounge, nor on who had struck the blow with the handgun.

According to local police reports, when patrolmen arrived at the club there were two inspectors from the State Alcohol Beverage Commission (formerly Liquor Control Board) standing outside the building.

Just what part the two officers, Elvis E. Davis and Eugene L. McNeely, both of Amarillo, had played in the incident could not be determined today.

A call was made to the Amarillo office of the Alcohol Beverage Commission where a spokesman said the only person authorized to make a statement was not available.

CONTINUING DIALOGUE

Turkish, Greek Cypriot Leaders Meeting Today

United Press International Turkish and Greek Cypriot community leaders met today for the first time since fighting began on Cyprus six weeks ago and agreed to meet once a week to continue their dialogue.

U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim said. "They have agreed to meet once a week on Mondays," Waldheim told newsmen after a 35-minute meeting between Cypriot President Glafkos Clerides, leader of the Greek community, and Rauf Denkash, the nominal vice president of Cyprus and leader of the Turks.

Waldheim emerged from the meeting in a tin-corrugated U.N. army hut with Denkash on the left and Clerides on the right. They shook hands with each other and Waldheim before leaving in opposite directions.

"We had a very fruitful meeting. We discussed humanitarian problems," Waldheim told newsmen. He said the talks showed the "good intentions of both leaders."

"I feel this good beginning in this field will help contribute to a political solution to the Cyprus problem," he said.

Earlier, Waldheim met separately with Clerides and Denkash. The two leaders approached the talks hesitantly in view of rival peace plans backed by Greece and Turkey to solve the Cyprus crisis.

The island has a population of about 560,000 ethnic Greeks and 140,000 persons of Turkish origin.

Kim Higgins, named Miss Wheatheart, Perryton, was chosen Saturday night in this city's Wheatheart Celebration which drew 28 contestants from Texas, Oklahoma, Colorado and Kansas.

She receives a $1,000 scholarship for any college of her choice. Runners-up also were awarded cash scholarships of their own choice.

They are Renee Colvert, Miss Shattuck, first runnerup, $500; Terri Wilkerson, Miss Buffalo, second, $250; Susie Hickman, Miss Hereford, third; and Sabrina McElroy, Miss Perryton, fourth.

Chosen Miss Congeniality was Kim Laffoon, Miss Irran, Tex.

The new Miss Wheatheart will represent the state of Texas at the National Wheat Growers' convention scheduled for January, 1975 in Amarillo.

The two communities have clashed frequently since independence from Britain in 1960.

Denkash canceled an earlier meeting with Clerides to protest a threat by the president to start a guerrilla war to regain sections of the island occupied by Turkish invasion troops.

He said he would discuss only "day to day" problems with Clerides, leaving the island's future to be decided at talks between Greece and Turkey.

A Turkish Cypriot spokesman said Sunday the two rival leaders would discuss the "humanitarian problems" of an estimated 200,000 refugees on the island.

Prince Sadruddin Aga Khan, the U.N. high commissioner for refugees, was expected to attend the Greek and Turkish Cypriot talks.

Israel Puts Forces On Alert For Drill

United Press International Israel's chief of staff said today he put frontline forces on a precautionary alert against attack during a 22-hour practice mobilization of reservists condemned by the country's Arab neighbors. He pronounced the drill successful.

Lt. Gen. Mordechai Gur said the Israeli callup created tension both in the Egyptian forces on the Sinai front and the Syrians in the Golan Heights. He refused to say whether Israel had detected Arab troop movements.

"There was a certain increase in tension, and you could detect it by listening to their communications systems," Gur said. "The tension was not as high as some people thought it would be, and I think the fact that we announced the exercise before at least gave place for doubt" that Israel might be planning an attack on the Arabs.

He said Israel frontline forces were put on a "certain" alert—"always you have to take some measures of precaution."

The mobilization was completed two hours ahead of the 24 hours scheduled for it. It cost Israel $240,000, Gur said.

"The exercise was quite a success and, in some respects, much better than we'd hoped for," he said. "Most of the lessons we wanted to learn, we learned."

He said nearly 100 per cent of the reservists called had reported to their units, ensuring that within several hours after the mobilization at noon Sunday there were full units that "could fight if they had to."

He said the reservists spent an average of 45 minutes to an hour with their units. The only difficulty, he said, arose at collection points where buses were delayed while waiting for reservists who had reported to their units in their own automobiles.

Public Budget Hearing Scheduled

A public hearing on the proposed budget and tax rate for fiscal 1974-75, will be conducted Tuesday when Pampa City Commission convenes at 9:30 a.m. at city hall.

Pampa's proposed budget for the operation of city government was filed with a cent added to the tax rate over the $1.92 per $100 assessed valuation agreed upon at the final budget session of city commissioners.

The rate following that meeting, was announced at $1.92, up 20 cents for fiscal 1974-75.

The commissioners had considered, until the final session, an 18 cent hike, to $1.90. An appeal came from the Pampa Industrial Foundation for financial assistance in the form of reactivation of the old Board of City Development, out of working existence since 1962. It was then decided to increase the tax rate three cents to cover allocations for the proposed board.

The proposed financial statement on the cost of city operations, as filed by the city solon, indicates total expenditures of $2,734,786, exclusive of $382,006 that will be spent in capital outlay in the coming year, chiefly on replacements for outmoded heavy equipment and other needed items. This figure will be met by federal revenue sharing funds.

Revenue sharing will also provide $75,000 for the fiscal year's sealcoating program for street maintenance and $80,000 for the continuing replacement of two-inch water distribution system.

Commissioners will also vote following consideration of a contract with the firm of Parkhill, Smith and Cooper, Lubbock, to provide engineering services in regard to the Wastewater Treatment Plant work.

Members of the city government are scheduled to study a September date for receiving bids to remove buildings on city property located at the corner of Cuyler and Browning Streets, Sept. 23 has been set as a prospective date for receiving bids for the removal of the buildings for salvage material.

A $50,000 transfer from the Water and Sewer Fund to the General Fund will complete the agenda to be considered by the commissioners during the Tuesday session.

ONLY A HULK — A gasoline transport truck was nearly demolished by flames which engulfed it when the storage tank on it exploded Friday evening at Mobeetie, causing a nearby diesel storage tank also to explode. The driver, Virgil

Brazil Wants To Increase Its Population

BUCHAREST, Romania (UPI) — Brazil said today it would press on with efforts to boost its population and rejected claims that explosive growth would exhaust the earth's resources.

There is no recorded history of mankind running out of the supply of any one single raw material, Brazilian delegation chief Miguel Alvaro de Almeida said in a plenary session of the world population conference.

There is no shortage of minerals in the world today... and there is no indication of shortages in the foreseeable future.

He rejected any proposal that would limit Brazil's population growth. Brazil now has an estimated 100,000,000 inhabitants in an area larger than the United States without Alaska, but wants more people to populate its vast interior.

Brazil will be able to absorb the foreseeable demographic increments and, further, this growth is even to be considered as a necessary element for economic development, Almeida said.

His statement underlined a position taken by many third world countries on the world plan of action being drawn up by the conference. They want want all suggestions of population control targets removed.

8 Persons Die In Hotel Fire, 5 Others Missing

BERKELEY SPRINGS, W. Va. (UPI) — Eight persons were killed and five others missing and feared dead in a fire that destroyed an old hotel and seven business establishments Sunday.

All of the victims were staying at the Washington House Hotel, a 150-year-old four-story brick and wood structure in this Eastern Panhandle town. Eight bodies, burned beyond recognition, were recovered from the rubble. Searchers probed the ruins of the

CJC Plans Police Class

CLARENDON — Courses in juvenile procedures and the police role in crime and delinquency will be offered this fall in Clarendon Junior College by the Amarillo College Public Safety Education Department.

Juvenile procedure sessions to meet Tuesday, and crime delinquency training classes on Thursday.

Classes will be conducted from 7 to 9:45 p.m. with Clarendon Chief of Police Gary Gerdes acting as instructor.

Preregistration will begin today, continuing through Friday. Registration will be conducted Sept. 3 and 5.

The classes, offered in cooperation with Clarendon Junior College with Walter Eubanks, AC director of public safety education, instrumental in arranging the courses.

structure for the bodies of five other persons.

Authorities said there were 23 guests in the hotel when the fire broke out. Ten escaped and the remainder were missing or dead. Five of the guests came to the hotel to bathe in the famed mineral waters and the remainder were local residents.

A state police spokesman said no one would be identified until all of the missing persons were located.

Authorities said the fire broke out next to the elevator in the basement of the hotel and shot up through the elevator shaft, consuming everything in its path. The fire spread to several adjacent buildings. About 150 firemen fought the blaze for more than four hours before bringing it under control.

Refining Industry Unsure Of Demands On Gasoline

TULSA, Okla. (UPI) — The refining industry is unsure of the demands for leaded and unleaded gasoline and may have to wait on the car buying public to find out, today's issue of the Oil and Gas Journal said.

The 1975 model cars are specifically equipped for unleaded gasoline and their sales will largely dictate gasoline production. But the Journal said refiners and automakers cannot predict what cars Americans

The blaze destroyed the hotel, a coffee shop, a jewelry store, a barber shop, a hardware store, an appliance store, a carpet shop and a second hand clothing store. Eight persons who lived in apartments over three of the stores escaped injury. Damage was estimated at $750,000.

"It was burning like a tinderbox," said Ken Robertson of radio station WCST.

R. R. Hall, an assistant state fire marshal, said "from what I have heard the hotel was not a fire trap. The owner was concerned about fire safety." Hall said there was no evidence of arson.

The Rev. Cyril S. Fowler, owner of the hotel in this community of 1,000, said he could not explain how the fire started.

Truck Driver Still Listed In Critical Shape

A truck driver injured in an explosion of a gasoline transport truck Friday evening at Mobeetie was still listed in critical condition today at High Plains Baptist Hospital in Amarillo.

Virgil Simpson of Borger, driver of a Groendike Transport, Inc., truck, suffered severe burns when the truck's gas tank exploded while he was unloading his cargo.

Simpson was unloading the gasoline for the Lester Leonard Conoco station at Mobeetie about 5:30 p.m. Friday when the explosion occurred.

A diesel storage tank also exploded near the service station warehouse, but two gasoline storage tanks nearby escaped the flames.

Earlier reports indicated the service station had been burned, but the station is two blocks away from the site of the explosion. It is still open for business.

The fire engulfed the truck and storage tank at the station's warehouse facilities, demolishing the truck and tank.

Firemen at the scene, coming from Wheeler, Pampa, Allison, McLean and other area towns, prevented the spread of the fire.

The exact cause of the fire and the extent of damage were still under investigation.

Officials Still Studying How Men Escaped

CANON CITY, Colo. (UPI) — Officials at the Colorado State Prison are investigating how three men escaped and fled to Texas where they are accused of killing two persons.

Dalton Williams, 29, Jerry Ulmer, 22, and Richard Magnus, 22, left crude dummies fashioned from sheets in their cells and escaped Thursday. Associate Warden Bill Wilson said guards are under orders to actually see a prisoner in his cell on their rounds but overlooked the three convicts.

"It's an extensive investigation and it will continue until we are completely satisfied," Wilson said. "So far, there has been no action taken against any of the guards."

The men left the dummies in their cells and reported to the recreation yard. They apparently hid in some shops near the outside wall until after dark.

They apparently climbed over a part of the wall where an obsolete tower blocks the view from the guard towers," Wilson said. "Then they went in to Canon City and stole a car which later was recovered in Trinidad, Colo."

Williams, his wife and another couple were convicted of robbing a Fort Collins, Colo., surplus store earlier this year. Guns used in the robbery were stolen from T. L. Baker of Roman, Tex., and he testified against Williams. The escaped convicts drove to Baker's home and killed him, Texas authorities said.

The problem will begin to be resolved this fall when new model cars are available. Motorists will begin to buy, signalling the number and size of cars, and indirectly, the mileage, they want.

Judge To Rule On Gas Case

HOUSTON (UPI) — A federal judge has been asked to rule on the contract liabilities of a utility company that fails to meet agreements for natural gas supplies.

Lo-Vaca Gathering Co. has been sued by South Texas customers because it failed to provide enough natural gas to run electric generators. The Cities of San Antonio and Austin and the Lower Colorado River Authority and other utility customers purchased expensive fuel oil to run the generators and sued for the higher costs.

"We are simply asking the court to resolve the contract liability issue so that we can go about our business of acquiring the maximum amount of gas supply possible for our 400 customers," Lo-Vaca president William E. Greehey said in a counter suit. It asked for a ruling that the utility is not liable for damages for the rationing of gas on a fair basis during a period of shortages.

National Health Insurance Dead For This Session?

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Despite President Ford's appeal for quick action, national health insurance is dead for this session of Congress.

The House Ways and Means Committee staff is going through the motions of drafting yet another compromise bill, but with Congress driving for election-year adjournment by mid-October, time has just about run out.

The legislation really never had a chance in the 93rd Congress, not even when the shove Ford gave it when he took office and asked for enactment this year.

But it is sure to have top priority when the new Congress convenes in January.

The need was evident, for 25 million Americans are without any kind of health insurance and millions more have woefully inadequate coverage, especially for the catastrophic costs of long-term illness.

The struggle for a solution involved two presidents; Sens. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and Russell Long, D-La.; Rep. Wilbur Mills, D-Ark., the Ways and Means chairman; the American Medical Association; the American Hospital Association; the health insurance industry, and organized labor.

What finally killed national health insurance last week was the Mills committee's inability to agree on two crucial issues:

—Whether to use a payroll tax, similar to Social Security withholding, to finance coverage for catastrophic illnesses.

—Whether to make mandatory or optional the basic proposed plan under which employers would buy private insurance policies for 170 million employees and their families, who would pay 25 per cent of the cost.

Even before Ford's appeal, impeachment proceedings in the House seriously had delayed the bill.

Long's Senate Finance Committee made a stab at drafting a bill, then backed off to await House action. Mills' committee, which must originate all such legislation, held nearly three months of public hearings and decided to scrap every proposal and start from scratch.

When Ford urged quick passage of health insurance in his address to Congress two weeks ago, the apparent became obvious as the Ways and Means Committee tried to meet the impossible deadline of drafting a bill in less than two weeks.

Mills' effort to forge a consensus among his panel's 24 members resulted in razor-thin votes on key elements of his staff's latest draft. Half the committee, most of them Republicans, were sticking to the AMA's insurance plan.

Boys in the girls' dorm—another vote

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1974 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd., Inc.

DEAR ABBY: Indeed the letter from the girls in the coed dorm who protested the presence of men in their bathing and toilet facilities was no put on.

I am a psychotherapist who has counseled college students since 1942, and the bizarre situation they describe is common.

Coed living is creating severe emotional problems for college men and women. Impotence in college men is now a common symptom—the result of a culture that pushes sexual performance. Some girls panic because of sexual pressure; others become overly aggressive.

It is totally unfair to pay for a double room in a girls' dorm and then end up sharing it with a girl and her boyfriend. The only way to escape being an observer to the roommate's sexual activities is to find some other place to sleep.

I have had this same picture from male and female students from every coeducational residential college or university that has been represented in my patient load.

The schools are doing harm and injustice not only to the minority, but also to the students whose vote is regarded as an order by the administration. This is one reason psychiatric treatment of college students has increased in volume. The universities need to hear a voice of sanity. Abby, please take a serious look at this widespread problem.

CONCERNED COUNSELOR

DEAR CONCERNED: I am looking, but it's sometimes hard to believe what I see. For example, this letter from a Washington (D.C.) STAR-NEWS reader:

DEAR ABBY: I am surprised by the amazing stupidity you exhibit in some of your answers. The most recent deals with those two modest girls in Scripps Women's college, who are offended by the sight of men sharing their sleeping and bathing facilities.

As I understand it, the male 24-hour visitation policy was established three years ago by a majority vote, and is upheld by the college authorities. Any girl who wishes to make other living arrangements can do so, therefore the ladies who are offended have no legitimate complaint.

Your comments were an even greater surprise when you suggest that 98% of the dorm find another place to live! Someone in your profession should be able to offer more practical advice rather than convert the entire dorm into a nursery of two.

I would like to commend that college for having the integrity and maturity to provide its students with their needs—whatever they may be.

Will you publish my letter? Or don't you believe in free speech?

DEAR DEFENDER: It is my view that if college students want to play house, it's not the business of the college to provide them with bedrooms for that purpose. Let them make their own arrangements—off campus.

I believe that in a WOMEN'S residential college, girls who wish to sleep and shower with men should suffer the inconvenience of applying for a living situation compatible with THEIR lifestyle, even if they are in the majority.

Miss Congeniality

Pampa Dancer Wins Title At Florida Dance Pageant

Sheryl Ann Whiteley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T.M. Whiteley of Pampa, was awarded the title of Miss Congeniality at the Miss Dance of America Pageant held at Miami Beach, Fla., Aug. 15.

Miss Whiteley has been a student of Madeline Graves for the past eight years, studying ballet, modern and jazz. She has been awarded summer scholarships to San Francisco Ballet, and Southern Methodist University.

Sheryl earned the opportunity to appear in The Miss Dance of America Pageant by winning a preliminary pageant and the title of Miss Dance of Chapter No. 27, which covers the four state area of Texas, Oklahoma, Missouri, and Kansas.

This fall she will attend Texas Tech University where she will major in dance.

KARPIN ON BRIDGE

By FRED KARPIN

How would you feel if declarer made game and rubber by first taking a successful finesse through you for the queen of clubs, and two tricks later taking a successful finesse through your partner for the same queen of clubs?

Such a thing couldn't happen, you would say? Well, you'd be wrong. It did happen some years ago to the late David Bruce, who, incidentally, was known during the 1930s as David Burnstine. When the rank of "Life Master" was established in 1936, Burnstine, who had won 28 national titles in seven years, became Life Master No. 1—and there were no objections to his ranking. He was considered to be the best.

Burnstine's contributions to bridge theory were of major importance. In 1935, he co-authored the "Four Aces System of Contract Bridge," which revolutionized notrump bidding; and he also invented the game—forcing opening bid of two clubs, with two diamonds, two hearts, and two spades opening bids not being forcing.

Both sides vulnerable. North—South has a part-score of 40. North deals.

Opening lead: Two of ♠.

Burnstine, sitting West, elected to open the two of spades, and East's nine was taken by declarer's singleton ace. To trick two, declarer led his deuce of clubs and put up dummy's jack when West followed with the nine.

For some unknown reason, East chose not to take the nine with the queen. Dummy's ace of clubs was cashed next. West discarding a diamond. The board's five of clubs was then led. East played the seven, and declarer successfully finessed his eight. The king of clubs now felled East's queen, and eight tricks were there for the taking: five clubs and three side aces.

Had East taken his queen of clubs: when given the opportunity to have done so, and returned either of the red suits, there would have been no way for declarer to have made more than seven tricks.

After Burnstine moved to the West Coast in 1939, he seldom played in major tournaments. Possibly the memory of what happened to him in today's deal was instrumental in bringing about his retirement.

Your Horoscope

By Jeane Dixon

TUESDAY, AUGUST 27

Your birthday today: Finds you discarding the unwanted, conservatively speculating, expanding and beginning a search for fresh tools, resources, ventures. Relationships broaden to include many diverse types of people, but are at times difficult to find time for. Today's natives develop intense, perfection-seeking efforts, special vocations.

Aries [March 21-April 19]: Tie up yesterday's loose ends quickly; prepare for day at peak energy. Quickly strike a bargain and go on to another transaction. Evening's social climate is clear and happy.

Taurus [April 20-May 20]: Help, encouragement, good news, perhaps a meaningful new contact all come from distant source. Business prospects brighten, but sentimental interests attract more of your attention.

Gemini [May 21-June 20]: Make a deal while possible. Adopt new budgets; settle things with partners or add to associates. Keep pushing, even though morning activity slows down by afternoon.

Cancer [June 21-July 22]: Pursue plans with verve and enthusiasm. Many are aware of your progress and methods although they say nothing. Exploit the evening's situation, keep your sense of humor.

Leo [July 23-Aug. 22]: Work with present resources rather than projected ones. Be alert and energetic. Overtime is justified.

Virgo [Aug. 23-Sept. 22]: What you've been doing for pleasure becomes important enough to aid vocation. Many sidelines suggest further development.

Libra [Sept. 23-Oct. 22]: Provided you're willing, close associates may meet you halfway and form sound basis for future ventures. Make it a good family evening.

Scorpio [Oct. 23-Nov. 21]: Be prompt and diligent in normal routine. Install new procedures, based on recent experience before experimenting further. Celebrations are appropriate tonight.

Sagittarius [Nov. 22-Dec. 21]: Financial moves are favored, especially where you've researched the details for some time. Gather what belongs to you; collect what you've earned.

Capricorn [Dec. 22-Jan. 19]: Revisions of long-term arrangements are feasible. Don't dawdle or use partial solutions for speculation. Dealing with close relatives suits your purposes.

Aquarius [Jan. 20-Feb. 18]: You may find minding your own affairs quietly difficult today, but productive in the long run. Silent partners stimulate change.

Pisces [Feb. 19-March 20]: Seek cooperation for your own program on this relatively calm day. Work hard; be consistent, particularly where others are negligent.

A HOLIDAY OF SORTS

Women Not Excited About Day

United Press International
By C.W. ORR

Today is a holiday of sorts — Women's Equality Day, commemorating the 54th anniversary of women's suffrage.

Although one man thought the idea was a "good one" and wanted to take the day off to celebrate, many women surveyed by United Press International greeted the day with a so-what attitude.

"I hardly think that President Ford's making it a holiday is going to make a difference," said Julie Kresen, 27, a health and legal researcher for the Chicago Women's Liberation Army. "I think that Ford is so into establishing a new image. He's trying to be everybody's buddy."

"If it's sincere, that's great. But it probably is a PR (public relations) effort. I think we have to wait and see."

"I think it's kind of important, but it's tokenism," said Nancy Dawson, 23, a clerk in the Blue Shield office in San Francisco. "It's additional recognition of the women's movement, but I don't think it means there is really any sort of equality in any field." Kathy Gasque of Atlanta said, "I think they (men and women) should be equal, if they can do the job. But I don't think women should bitch about it if they can't."

Kim Watson, an employee of the Baptist Home Mission Board in Atlanta, said she had heard about the day "on TV or something."

She said, "I think it's pretentious of the government, or whoever it is — it's probably the government — to say 'Oh, we're going to have a national women's day,' and think that's going to help the rest of the year. And all the male chauvinists can stand up and say, 'Oh, we give you one day a year of freedom.'"

Eva Felton, 26, a key punch operator from Countryside, Ill., said, "It's all right to celebrate getting the vote, but all this liberation stuff... Now they want to take over men's jobs. I was quite satisfied. I don't want to be a bus driver, or any of that."

"I think it's a good idea," Michael Boyle, 27, a Chicago electrician said. "Most of the guys my age agree. I'd like to take the day off from work. It's a good reason to take the day off. Lots of them (holidays) are ridiculous."

Chapters of the National Organization for Women around the country planned various observances today — ranging from a mock inauguration of the first woman president of the United States in Seattle to a male pig roast in Rockford, Ill.

The San Francisco NOW chapter staged NOW Olympics Saturday at Golden Gate Park with about 50 women entered in such events as soccer dribble and the mile run.

There are 640 miles of beaches on the Texas Gulf Coast line.

WITH NIXON GONE

Republicans Now Expect Better Shape In Election

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Republican leaders across the country, many of whom felt doom approaching in November as long as Richard Nixon was president, now are exuberant about their party's chances in congressional and state elections.

Democrats, generally, concede a Ford presidency is a plus for the Republicans and the GOP is in better shape with Nixon gone.

But they still consider Republicans highly vulnerable on the inflation issue and think the new President's "honeymoon" may be over before the election.

A UPI survey found Republican leaders in almost every state delighted with their newfound election prospects.

Oregon Republican Chairman Dave Green said Ford's takeover "dramatically improved the outlook for our candidates." His California counterpart, Gordon Luce, said there was a "new spirit and enthusiasm... there has been a complete change in only a few days."

A whole new mood prevails. Illinois GOP Chairman Don Adams said, "It's got to help. We're up."

GOP National Committeeman Benjamin Clayburgh said, "It creates an entirely new ball game as far as revival of interest is concerned in the Republican party in North Dakota."

A number of Republicans predicted the party would pick up House seats that would have gone Democratic if Nixon remained in office, and most agreed that GOP candidates who had been expected to win were in even better shape.

That assessment is shared by Georgia Gov. Jimmy Carter, chairman of the Democratic Campaign Committee, who said Democrats would fail to capture about 15 House seats they would have picked up had Nixon stayed. But he predicted Democrats still would pick up 35 House seats.

Some Democratic leaders, however, said Nixon's resignation came too late to prevent electable Republicans from dropping out of politics this year and that the GOP outlook was not so rosy.

"Unless there's a miracle and they turn the economy around before November, they're going to be in trouble," National Committeeman John J. Driscoll of Connecticut said. "So far there has been an attitude of 'thank God, it's over' for the Republicans but I think that's deceiving."

Did You Know This About OUR RELIGIONS?

By Dr. Carlyle Adams

RELIGION IN AMERICA

(Commentary)

By DAVID E. ANDERSON

Future church historians may look back on 10 days in Lausanne, Switzerland, this past July as one of signal developments in the history of the world evangelical movement.

For those 10 days, conservative Protestants from more than 150 nations, addressed themselves to what was commonly called the "urgency of the evangelistic task"—preaching the Gospel to the world's 2.7 billion non-Christians.

The missionary impulse is as old as Christianity and has always been a key element in the evangelical movement.

But in Lausanne, nearly 2,000 delegates, led by world-renowned preacher Dr. Billy Graham, added a new dimension to their usual stance—a concern for "social responsibility" as a part of the evangelistic task.

That concern, along with a strongly worded affirmation of the divine inspiration of the Bible and of Jesus as a unique Godman, was contained in a 3,000 word document called "the Lausanne Covenant."

While some parts of the "Covenant" read as if they were written by the liberal theologians associated with the World Council Churches, the statement firmly rejects an identification of social action with evangelism.

But it does emphasize socio-political involvement as a part of a Christian's duty.

"Although reconciliation with man is not reconciliation with God, nor is social action evangelism, nor is political liberation salvation, nevertheless we affirm that evangelism and socio-political involvement are both part of our Christian duty."

What emerges from this, however, is a new stress on the nature of that socio-political involvement. In the past, evangelicals have been criticized, both from outside their ranks and increasingly from within their numbers, for an involvement in politics that does little more than support the status quo.

At Lausanne, however, signers of the "Covenant" declared that Christians should share God's concern for justice and reconciliation throughout human society and for the liberation of men from every kind of oppression.

"Because mankind is made in the image of God, every person, regardless of race, religion, color, culture, class, sex or age, has an intrinsic dignity because of which he should be respected and served, not exploited."

The "Covenant" included a confession for having sometimes regarded evangelism and social concern as mutually exclusive, and went on to affirm that the message of salvation "implies also a message of judgment upon every form of alienation, oppression and discrimination."

Drafters of the statement also indicated a theology by which their view of what it means to be a Christian is tied to the need for social action.

"When people receive Christ," the declaration said, "they are born again into his kingdom and must seek not only to exhibit but also to spread its righteousness in the midst of an unrighteous world."

"The salvation we claim should be transforming us in the totality of our personal and social responsibilities. Faith without works is dead."

The Lausanne Covenant is an eloquent statement of the evangelical faith. The nature of the transformation of that faith in the works of justice and liberation may now be at hand.

FOLLOWING ADVICE — Federal energy administrator John Sawhill, speaking at a news conference, removes his necktie after being asked by a reporter why he was wearing one. During the height of the energy crisis, Sawhill had urged businessmen not to wear neckties in the summer months so that air conditioners would not have to be set so high. Sawhill said he had been to a businessman's luncheon and felt he should wear a tie.

Daughter Saw Execution Murder Of Her Mother

STEPHENVILLE, Tex. (UPI) — Mrs. Ray Ott was murdered and her husband wounded in their rural home and a terrified daughter witnessed the killings.

"The death of Mrs. Ott was an execution," Erath County District Attorney Bob Glasgow said. "The woman never had a chance."

"Her head was blown off while a daughter watched."

Three Colorado prison escapees are accused of breaking into the Ott's home at Gordon, Tex., Sunday, killing Mrs. Ott and wounding her husband, Ott, in satisfactory condition, had testified in a burglary trial against one of the suspects, Jerry Ulmer, 22, of Garland, Tex.

Ulmer, Dalton Williams, 29, and Richard Magnum, 22, of Denver, also are charged with the murder of rancher T. L. Baker. Glasgow said he would seek the death penalty for all three men.

"The law provides for the death penalty when murders are committed during escapes or armed robberies," Glasgow said. "These men robbed the Ott home of weapons before leaving."

Glasgow was familiar with Ulmer.

The redwoods of Northern California were discovered in 1796 by a Spanish expedition headed by Don Gaspar de Portola, according to the National Forest Products Association.

The Woman's View

By GAY PAULEY
UPI Women's Editor
NEW YORK (UPI) —

Benjie Prudom, 21, is a beautiful blonde who rides bucking broncos, fights bulls, models and is studying to become a law officer.

The Dallas girl tried to explain why she had taken to rodeos. "I've talked to a lot of people around rodeos," the national title holder said. "I've never found a good answer to why. Maybe it's the challenge. Certainly it's exciting."

"I don't think more women in competition has anything to do with the liberation movement, although I enjoy feeling that I'm doing something for myself."

Miss Prudom sounded more like a feminist when she said that there was nothing unusual about her long-term goal of police work.

"I don't see why women can't do the same work here as men," she said. "Yes, I'll tote a gun. But I've been shooting since I was 10. Dad started me with an air rifle. I was born a tomboy I guess."

No doubt, her family influenced her decision to take a degree in criminal justice from Sam Houston State University at Huntsville, Tex., where she is a sophomore.

Her father, Lloyd, works for a correctional institution and her brother, Thomas, is a security officer at Southern Methodist University in Dallas.

As for rodeos, more women are riding broncos, roping and tying calves, bull riding and barrel racing.

"Last year," she said, "there were about 15 to 20 girl rodeos on the circuit. This year, there are between 30 and 40. It's no longer a rinkydink thing."

Miss Prudom was in New York to talk up the Girls Rodeo Association world championships Oct. 5-6 at Spring Creek, Nev.

They will be held in an indoor horse palace, part of a community planned resort built by McCulloch Enterprises. McCulloch has put up $25,000 in prize money.

Miss Prudom hopes to move from No. 2 rank in bronc riding to No. 1, the position now held by Sue Pirtoe, of Stonewall, Okla.

She said that from 300 to 400 women would be in the world finals.

Men have their own competitions, which Miss Prudom said was just as well.

Strength is a factor and men, for instance, more easily handle the heavy barrels (standard arena equipment) to divert a charging bull who's tossed a rider.

Here's where Miss Prudom's other specialty, clowning, lies. She rushes in to divert a bull's attention when a rider is thrown to the arena floor.

She wears a clown face ("the fans love it") but the traditional baggy pants are used, like a matador's cape, to distract a bull who will weigh anywhere from 1,800 to 2,000 pounds.

Miss Prudom, who is five feet eight and weighs 135 pounds, said she had been tossed by broncs and once was gored by a bull, but has had no serious injuries.

"I have to stay around 135," she said. "If I got down to skin and bone I might break something."

She has modeled and ridden since her teens. Her riding began while she dated a high school youth whose parents owned a couple of horses.

Eventually, she said, "Someone dared me to come out of the chute on a bronc. 'I don't think bronc busting is cruel at all,' she said. 'The owners want their horses in the best shape. Those animals get the best care in the world.'"

ENERGY SENSE

Driving With a Featherfoot

by John C. Sawhill
Federal Energy Administrator

Want to get better gasoline mileage with your car? It's simple. Change the way you drive it!

If you are not now driving with energy-saving discipline, you may be able to get as much as 50 percent better mileage. Think of the money you'll save at the pump!

And with 100 million registered cars on American roads gulping nearly three-quarters of all the gasoline the nation uses, think of the energy savings the nation can make.

What can you do?

—Drive with a featherfoot, not with a leadfoot. Hot rod starts from city traffic lights cost you 2 miles per gallon on your car's efficiency. And you'll have to slow down anyway, when you find that the cars in front of you aren't in the same rush you are. So press the gas pedal gently.

—Remember, it takes more gasoline to get your car moving than to keep it moving. If you have a manual transmission, run through the lower gears gently but quickly, building up to safe, posted speeds in high gear. If you have an automatic transmission, apply enough gas pedal pressure to get the car rolling, easing up slightly on the pedal to move the transmission into high gear as quickly as possible.

—Drive at a steady pace. Constant changes in your car's speed of just 5 miles per hour can cost you 1.3 miles per gallon in gasoline efficiency. And don't forget that the legal pace for major highways is still 55 miles per hour. Sticking to it may slow you down a bit, but it's getting you 21 percent better gasoline mileage than if you were rushing at 70.

—Anticipate the traffic flow to avoid unnecessary braking. Too much braking is probably a sign of bad driving habits. It's also a waste of your gasoline. For if you're braking too often, you're making more work for the engine which has to bring up your car's speed again.

—Don't idle your car's engine for more than a minute. One minute of idling burns more gasoline than it takes to start the engine. So next time you find yourself waiting out in the car, turn the engine off. You'll not only be saving money, but also avoiding the irony of wasting the nation's gasoline supply while standing still.

—Avoid racing your car's engine for warmups. This is bad for your engine and it's certainly a gasoline waster. In summer and winter, the best engine warmup procedure is simply to drive your car slowly for a mile or so.

—Finally, as you think about the self-discipline necessary to follow these energy-saving driving tips, think also that energy-efficient driving means pretty much the same as safe driving. Safety sense, energy sense, a good combination for your driving habits!

HIS SUMMER HOME

Rockefeller Gives Tour Of Seal Harbor Resort

SEAL HARBOR, Maine (UPI)—In the old days we used to take the night train to Bar Harbor and come here by boat," said the 66-year-old native of this resort. "It was a very rough boat ride, and I usually got seasick."

The native sitting on a crude pine bench was vice presidential nominee Nelson A. Rockefeller, who had

DPS Says Destruction Of Files Was Routine

AUSTIN (UPI)—The destruction of Department of Public Safety intelligence files indicates the agency maintained an extensive system of political surveillance, the head of a state senate investigating committee says.

The DPS said destruction of the files was routine and not connected with a leaked report on Robert Pomeroy of Dallas. An agent compiled a report on Pomeroy because of his protests against nuclear power plants. Col. Wilson Speir, director of the DPS, said the report was unauthorized. However, last Friday he ordered the destruction of most of the department's intelligence reports and Sen. Oscar Mauzy, D-Dallas objected.

"The action of the Department of Public Safety in destroying all existing non-criminal investigative files proves that the indignity suffered by Robert Pomeroy was not an isolated instance," Mauzy said.

Mauzy's subcommittee is investigating such

Law Officers Know Escaped Convict Ulmer

STEPHENVILLE, Tex. (UPI)—Escaped convict Jerry Ulmer is well known by law officers in Stephenville.

"All the peace officers around here know him on sight," Erath County District Attorney Bob Glasgow said. "They know what kind of a dude he is."

"He's hard."

"He doesn't say a lot but he's hard."

Ulmer, 22, of Garland, Tex., Dalton Williams, 29, of Snyder, Tex., and Richard Magnuson, 22, of Denver, broke out of the Colorado State Prison Thursday. They came to North Central Texas hunting the people who helped convict them. Two persons died before the convicts vanished.

They break out from a Colorado prison and come back to a county where they're known," Glasgow said. "They aren't trying to get away. They're just on a binge. They have some animosity toward us down here. They're just hellbent on mischief."

Hundreds of law officers hunted the three men, sometimes with unwanted help. Police Lt. Herschel Davis called them "country vigilantes."

"You mention something like this and they are going to grab a gun and run around," Davis said. "We haven't had too much trouble with it. We shut them down pretty fast."

The three convicts fled into the rolling Mesquite forests, prompting dozens of phone calls to police about reported sightings. Officers rushed on one area where a caller reported seeing several men.

"We converged on that area but we didn't find them," Glasgow said. "It was just a bad report, one of the many we've had. But don't tell those people to stop calling."

"One report was just two drunks out in the road shooting. One of these times the witness is really going to find them."

Williams had burglarized some guns from rancher T. L. Baker, 64, and Baker testified against him in a Colorado trial, identifying guns used in an armed robbery Baker was the first to die in the revenge mission. Ulmer was convicted of several burglaries, one at the home of Ray Ott. The convicts attacked the home Sunday, wounding Ott and killing his wife.

Magnum had no known connection with Texas.

come home to the picturesque coastal retreat where he was born July 8, 1908.

Seal Harbor is the summer home of the very rich. The 28-page phone book lists two Rockefellers, two Astors and two Fords (the car family, not the presidential one.)

You can tell the people with money by reading the intelligence gathering reports, including one on the First Unitarian Church of Dallas. Pomeroy participated in a debate on nuclear energy at the church and an agent said it was a "sponsor of radical left groups." Peg Spencer, congregation president, today planned a meeting with Spier to discuss the report.

"We want to get some understanding of what plans they have to correct the record of derogatory, inaccurate statements included in the report regarding the church," she said.

"We have nothing against criminal investigations. Actually we support those. But we are concerned about false and derogatory information becoming part of a permanent dossier."

Speir said he ordered the files in several branches of the DPS destroyed one year ago.

"This is true of our traffic files, our general history files and our intelligence files," he said. "This has been no secret. I've talked to members of the legislature about it and others — law enforcement agents."

DPS information officer said the files were destroyed "mainly because of the volume and because of a shift of emphasis to criminal and organized crime activities and away from this word 'subversives'."

Education Today

UPI Family Editor NEW YORK (UPI)—In days not long gone, down in the lower grades boys and girls were scolded if they doodled or wrote in their reading books.

In days around the corner, down in the lower grades, boys and girls probably will get bawled out if they DON'T draw or write in some reading books.

Part of this is due to the influence of television on children's visual literacy.

You should understand that what used to be called "the reading book" of old more likely is many books — soft cover.

In one new series of reading books by a major publisher, MacMillan, the grade one-to-six program consists of about 160 books.

Editor Craig Boultinghouse said in an interview the series was in the making for five years. It replaces a series that has been in the line since 1965, with annual revisions.

The drawings, photographs and general graphics of the new books are aimed at catching the attention and motivating the children whose visual learning has been influenced by the tube — television.

Mrs. Boultinghouse said television has changed boys and girls. Oldstyle books can't capture their attention.

For one grade, to cite an example, there will be seven basic books, seven consumable books, 14 non-consumable books and workbooks. All taking the place of what used to be a basic reading book.

In the "consumable" books, as Mrs. Boultinghouse called them, students are expected to write and draw. Some of these have pages that start out "My story." And blank space.

This is accompanied by a blank space that says "My picture" (to go with the story).

In the new reading program some of the consumable books — so named because the students use them up as they go along — there are learning experiences created by connecting dots or numbers phone book. After their name are separate listings for cottage No. 1, cottage No. 2, cottage No. 3, cottage No. 4, boat house, gate house and so forth.

The Rockefeller compound is on an acre and a half spit of land that hooks out into the ocean so that it looks back at Seal Harbor.

The first thing you see is the boathouse, a weather-beaten structure covering the area of a football field. "Actually it's an old coal wharf," Rockefeller explained. "The three-masted schooners came along and unloaded coal and wood and a train hauled them into town."

Now, in addition to housing the boats, it also is one of many galleries for Rockefeller's art collection. It includes many Oriental wall hangings, bronzes, and more recently, the mural-sized Picasso tapestries that once hung in the governor's mansion in Albany, N.Y.

The small fleet downstairs includes a 65-foot yawl "Nirvana," the 21-foot sloop "Queen Mary," which Rockefeller and his wife Happy sail alone, three motorboats and a five-place rubber motorboat that caught Rockefeller's eye at the New York boat show.

The main house, surrounded by water on three sides, is not pretentious by Rockefeller standards. (John D. Rockefeller Jr., his father, had a 107-room "cottage" with 2,280 windows, 44 fireplaces and 22 bathrooms. "The place became a tax burden and was torn down in 1963.")

Rockefeller's current home was completed in 1939 and was designed by Wallace K. Harrison, architect of Rockefeller Center.

"Nelson brought him out here and said, 'I want to be able to see that view and that view and that view,'" an aide said. "and that's what he got."

to make a picture. There are many, many more pictures and photographs.

Mrs. Boultinghouse also said that psychologically the small softbound books were more attractive to little children. Consider: they are lighter and easier to carry. They aren't ponderous — with the poor child struggling to get through a book during the year — progress marked by a marker on a reading page.

When a boy or girl gets through one of the new books, there is an immediate reward for progress. A new book.

The books include all races and nationalities in stories and illustrations, not just white persons. Women also are shown in a variety of roles and so are men.

Men, for example, are shown in nurturing roles, helping to take care of children. And women are shown doing things outside the home.

These changes have been made to get away from sex-role stereotyping. That and race and nationality stereotyping are not considered in compliance with federal directives to eliminate such discrimination in school.

Almost every major textbook publisher has been doing similar top to bottom revisions of its books to comply with the federal laws and the times.

To help, a committee from the National Organization of Women has been pointing out to the publishers areas in which they discriminate and stereotype.

In one set of readers, for example, the critics found, women always were shown bending down or leaning over — and the men always were standing straight.

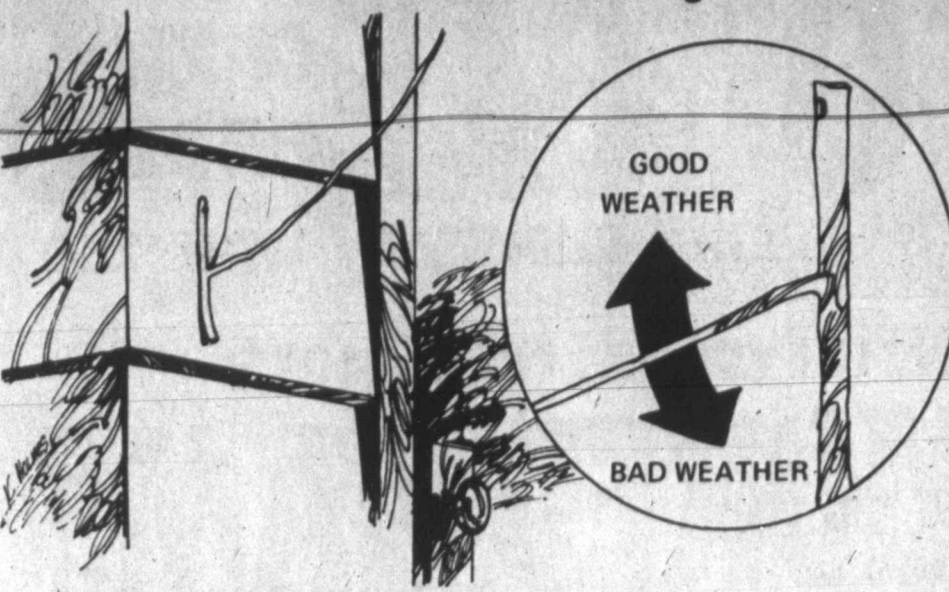

The lending over apparently indicated a lesser role than that of the human who was standing straight.

The MacMillan books, according to the publisher, are supposed to be exciting and fun. At the end of the upcoming school year the educators will know.

In some 300 classrooms nationwide the books will be tested. By the children.

THE MOTHER EARTH NEWS

...it tells you how

Old-timers in the upper Midwest sometimes use a "never fail" weather barometer that is marvelously simple and costs no out-of-pocket money at all. What they do is they find themselves a balsam fir tree. Then they cut from that tree a chunk of small branch which, in turn, has a 16-to-18-inch-long twig growing out of it. "Trim and scrape the bark away from the whole assembly," one of the old backwoodsmen told us, "and drill a little hole in the top end of the short main section. Then tack the indicator to the wall of your garage or corncrib so that the long twig points up. It'll stay that way during fair weather... but, just before and during a storm, it'll point down."

AFTER RELAXING DAY

Ford Lays Groundwork For Economics Session

WASHINGTON (UPI)—

President Ford, relaxed after a day of shooting golf and hobnobbing with reporters, begins laying groundwork for an economic summit conference today, and plans to hold his first formal news conference this week.

With the economy the nation's paramount issue, Ford scheduled a meeting with his Cabinet for late morning to discuss his goals for the summit and what role the department heads would play in helping reverse the long economic slide.

Before the Cabinet meeting, Ford was to meet with Kenneth Rush, chairman of the steering committee for the conference, and William Seidman, its executive director.

The economic summit, endorsed by the Senate in the last days of the Nixon administration and heartily picked up by Ford, was expected to be held by the end of September or beginning of October. It will bring together leaders of government, business, labor and consumer organizations under Ford's direction to seek relief from a near-recessionary economy.

The first Ford news conference, to be nationally broadcast, was expected to be held Wednesday night on national television and radio, his aides said.

Ford's romance with the White House press corps blossomed further Sunday night at a backyard barbecue at the home of NBC correspondent Ron Nessen.

The President, who appeared in a red plaid sport jacket, open collared shirt, red slacks and white shoes, was invited to the gathering of reporters who covered Ford's vice presidential travels around the country.

"All I can say to all of you who suffered with us, who put up with me... is that we had a helluva good time and the truth is I wouldn't have missed this for anything," he said.

He said, "we drank a little, we talked a little... we had a lot of fun" around the pool of Nessen's Bethesda, Md., home.

The reporters serenaded Ford with a parody of the song, "Thanks for the Memories."

Asked later about White House press relations, almost nonexistent in the Nixon administration, Ford said: "They couldn't be better; just wonderful. They're fine people. I hope they think I've been frank with them."

Earlier, Ford shot a round of golf with White House staffer Roger White; White's father, William, a U.S. Steel Co. executive, and Fred Zoll, an executive of the Libby-Owens-Ford Glass Co.

He told reporters he had a tough time on the first seven or eight holes but ended up winning $10.

Ford began the day by going to the Immanuel (Episcopal) Church-on-the-Hill with his wife and son, Steven, later stopping by his old house in Alexandria, Va., to pick up his 1931 high school yearbook and a couple of shoe trees.

LOBBYISTS CLAIM

Agency Shop Bill Cause Of Battle At Convention

AUSTIN, Tex. (UPI)—According to a lobbyists of the National Right-to-Work Committee, the fight to put right to work in the proposed constitution was instigated by labor's attempt to get an agency shop bill through a House committee a year before.

The controversial right to work proposal was credited with the constitutional convention's failure to produce a new charter despite six months of work and the expenditure of more than $4 million.

Reed Larson appeared Sunday on the weekly television show "Capital Eye" to rebut contentions made by Texas AFL-CIO President Harry Hubbard that Republicans and the National Right-to-Work Committee were responsible for the fight which dilitated the convention.

"I believe that the issue really was raised by Harry Hubbard's boys when they pushed an agency shop bill out of the (House) Labor Committee (in 1973) and seriously threatened the protection that Texas workers enjoy under the Texas right to work law," Larson said.

"And it's my recollection that this very apparent threat to the law — and this evidence that union officials were intent on establishing compulsory unionism here — was the thing that triggered the drive to believe that this should be in the constitution," he said.

The so-called right to work provision which was strongly supported by Republicans and pro or by liberals and union supporters at the convention would have prohibited any agency or union shop arrangements between labor unions and employers.

The agency shop bill which Larson referred to

Books

I Remember It Well, by

Vincente Minnelli. (Doubleday, $10.95)

Vincente Minnelli ends this autobiography with a line from "Gigi," one of the many classic movie musicals he directed. "Thank heaven for little girls." In this case the little girl is daughter Liza Minnelli and there is pride of fatherhood in every line and every one of the many photographs devoted to the child of his doomed marriage to Judy Garland.

Minnelli himself was born in a tent to small time touring actors, became one of the youngest of Broadway's art directors at the Radio City Music Hall, then director of all musicals for the Shuberts. Inevitably he went to Hollywood where he spent 26 years with Metro Goldwyn Mayer at a time when many of the greatest stars and talents were either under contract or worked at the studio.

The star he was given for "Meet Me in St. Louis" in 1944 was Judy Garland and after some initial suspicion on her part — she was working too hard and wondered whether people really liked her — they fell in love. One day she remarked, "I use these pills. They carry me through." It was the first confession of the drug addiction that eventually destroyed her despite Minnelli's love and understanding he tried to give her.

Minnelli has written more than an elegy for one star and a poem in praise of another. As director of "The Ziegfeld Follies," "An American in Paris," "Brigadoon," "Father of the Bride" and so on, he picked up a wealth of anecdotes about the famous. Child actress Margaret O'Brien's mother used to get her to weep for a scene by pretending someone was going to kill her pet dog. When a gourmet restaurant refused Cole Porter his hamburger recipe he had his butler order one, sneak it to a laboratory in a paper bag and have it analyzed. That's class.

The Forging of a Rebel, by Arturo Barea. (Viking, $15) This is the first English translation of the late Spanish novelist's trilogy of autobiographical novels which provide a panoramic view of troubled Iberian society from 1900 through 1939. Barea's work is a major achievement, especially the recounting in the third volume of the Siege of Madrid in the Civil War.

Puerto Rican Obituary, by Pedro Pietri. (Monthly Review Press, $7.50) Street poet Pedro Pietri pours from his soul the daily torments and struggles for survival of his people in New York's Spanish speaking ghetto. With nimble play on words and a rhythmic style, he vividly captures the triumphs and tragedies of a life of subway rides, dope, junkies, pushers, cops, unemployment, roaches, civil service exams.

The Twelve Maidens, by Stewart Farrar. (St. Martin's, $6.95) A dandy combination of science fiction and witchcraft on the Devon moors of southwestern England. A black magic coven is blanking out radar aimed at a mountain topped with a neolithic stone circle resembling Stonehenge. A white magic coven, including some of the radar research team, is formed to combat it. The ending is both unexpected and highly latifactory.

Thunder at Sunset, by John Masters. (Doubleday, $7.95) As a mixed bag of politics, military action and love story, this latest novel from Masters is not up to his usual standard. The plot involves the pullout of British civilian and military forces from Mingora, a tiny Asian protectorate, after 150 years association. The Communists are geared to take over. The British commander is torn between duty and saving Mingora, whose future queen was once his mistress.

Savings Bonds Figures Issued

Series E and H United States Savings Bonds sales in Gray County during the month of July totaled $32,586, according to County Bond Chairman Floyd F. Watson.

Sales for the seven-month period were $264,761 for 56 percent of the 1974 sales goal of $475,000.

Sales in Texas during the month amounted to $19,640,596, while sales for the same period last year totaled $17,185,499 — an increase of 14 percent. Year-to-date sales amounted to $136,083,685 with 57 percent of the yearly sales goal of $236.8 million achieved.

DARROW FILM HOLLYWOOD (UPI)—Emmy award-winner John Rich will direct "IBM Presents Clarence Darrow starring Henry Fonda," an NBC-TV special scheduled to air Sept. 4.

It is based on Fonda's critically acclaimed stage portrait of the famous trial lawyer.

Mother Earth News

By J. SHUTTLEWORTH
We're all going to have to learn to do more with less. Become nearly self-sufficient. Grow a large percentage of the food we eat... even if we live in town. Produce at least a part of the energy we consume — right at the point of use — directly from renewable sources such as the sun and the wind. Recycle everything.

In short, we're going to have to change our lifestyles and change them drastically. We're going to have to completely redesign our society... starting with the very houses in which we live.

No, the above paragraph is not a direct quote from any one ecologist, economist or politician. It is, however, an accurate compilation of the conclusions arrived at by nearly everyone who has seriously studied today's pollution, food supply and energy shortage problems. There's only one trouble with that projection of the future: While many people talk about the need for pioneering new ways of living... very few individuals actually seem to be creating and learning to operate the hardware which will make those lifestyles possible. And of that small and select breed, even fewer — so far — have had a great deal of success.

It gives me great pleasure, then, to tell you today about James B. DeKorne and something he calls his "ecosystem." This is, in Jim's words, "an underground hydroponic greenhouse and aquaculture tank which is powered by the wind, heated by the sun and fed on compost"... and which produces enough year-round fresh produce and fish to feed a family of four!

Our prototype ecosystem," says Jim, "is still in the experimental stages, but preliminary results have far surpassed our expectations. The unit is located on my small homestead in northern New Mexico (at an altitude of 7,000 feet) and consists of three main parts: (1) the combination hydroponic greenhouse-aquaculture tank, (2) a wind-driven electrical generator and (3) a solar collector. The floor of the greenhouse is four feet below ground level and the unit is banked with earth on its north side. Vegetables are grown hydroponically inside the greenhouse in four 55-gallon drums that are cut in half lengthwise and filled with gravel. Under the eight tanks are two additional drums cut in half horizontally to make four compost bins in which earthworms are raised. And beside the hydroponic tanks is a 1,400-gallon, solar-heated catfish tank.

"This ecosystem was designed to be almost completely self-sustaining. When the wind blows, it generates electricity which runs a pump that circulates water in the catfish tank. The sun is used to heat the same water and the fish thrive in the warmed and filtered liquid. The fluid also acts as a 'heat battery.' That is, it collects solar energy during the day and radiates it throughout the greenhouse at night.

"The worms, as you might have suspected, are fed to the catfish and the earthworm castings are leached to make the organic hydroponic solution which feeds the plants. Other than solar and wind energy, nothing comes into our ecosystem from outside except the organic matter — or compost — which we feed to the worms.

Pretty clever, that Jim DeKorne! In theory, at least, he's come up with a low-cost, do-it-yourself, attractive "miracle" unit that sits in the backyard, consumes only garbage and sunshine and wind... yet produces all the fresh produce and fish his family can eat during any season of the year.

But does the idea really work? Yep, it really does. Jim's prototype most certainly is a do-it-yourself unit because he built it in just a few working days with the help of only one neighbor. It's low-cost because DeKorne constructed the rig entirely from recycled (such as used oil drums) and inexpensive (such as cement blocks) materials. It's attractive. And small enough to fit into most backyards.

And — get this! — last winter, even before the solar panel and windplant were put into operation, the prototype greenhouse-fish tank worked quite well. Despite outside nightly temperatures that plunged down as far as 10° below, radishes, lettuce, spinach and cabbage inside the unit did not freeze. The plants' growth was temporarily arrested during the month of January, but the DeKornes began eating lettuce and radishes from their ecosystem again in February.

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Many mentally disturbed persons refuse to take all the medication needed to help them and a recent study revealed that "unbearable" side effects of some drugs are among the reasons.

A Veterans Administration hospital study, and a review by Dr. Theodore Van Putten of several independent studies, found that between 24 and 63 per cent of patients being treated for schizophrenia take less than the amount of drugs prescribed. Van Putten said the estimate was conservative.

He said the reluctance to take medication was a major problem in the treatment of some mental illnesses and brings about the relapse of the illness and readmissions for many outpatients.

Van Putten, a psychiatrist at the Brentwood VA hospital here, said one researcher speculated that paranoid schizophrenic patients refused to take the full medication dosage because they resent being told what to do — which is part of the problem being treated.

Other researchers believed an important cause of the problem was that drugs force the patient to admit he is sick and other patients saw medication as an external dominating agent identified as an irrational authority.

But Van Putten said in a report in the medical journal, Archives of General Psychiatry, that a major problem is that the drugs — phenothiazines — are often extrapyramidal, or cause confusion of the central nervous system which brings about any of several physical reactions ranging from uncomfortable to unbearable.

The reaction is called "extrapyramidal involvement" or EPI. It can be observed in various syndromes including extreme nervous agitation, lethargy or lack of tissue tone or response.

EPI effects include akathisia, or extreme nervous agitation, which can become unbearable. The patient would not be able to sit or be comfortable in any position for more than minutes at a time. The greatest percentage of drug reluctant patients suffer this symptom.

Another equally serious reaction is akinesia, or extreme lethargy.

"They sometimes look like pieces of wood," Van Putten said. "a term frequently used by nurses is 'Zombies,' because they look and react like zombies."

To the patient involved, it might seem like a loss of "being." One woman studied, who was 50 years old, described her reaction to the drugs: "I have slowed down. I feel like an old lady. I get tired from walking around the block. I want my own personality."

One of Van Putten's primary research sources found that among the psychodynamic aspects of EPI, rigidity and immobility were often equated with paralysis and in many cases the "prime verbalized fear was death."

Van Putten's conclusion was that even mild EPI must be avoided because while it may go undetected by the physician, it would always be all too obvious to the patient.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (UPI) — Florida supplies 48 per cent of all fresh vegetables shipped in the nation, according to figures from the Division of Marketing of the Florida Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services.

Division Director John Stiles said Florida shipped 3.2 billion pounds of fresh vegetables during the 1972-73 fiscal year.

Stiles said Florida shipped 97 per cent of the nation's supply of endive and escarole, 89 per cent of the sweet corn, 80 per cent of the green beans, 77 per cent of the radishes, 52 per cent of the peppers, 49 per cent of the celery, 42 per cent of cucumbers, 41 per cent of the cabbage, 40 per cent of the squash, 39 per cent of the tomatoes, 37 per cent of the eggplant, 12 per cent of the strawberries, 10 per cent of the carrots and two per cent of the lettuce.

Under Twenty

"I was actually singing before I could talk. I'd walk around the house in Brooklyn singing but wouldn't talk at all. Finally my family decided it was time I began talking. They told me I couldn't go through life just singing. Sometimes I'd have to talk to people."

Stephanie Mills, 15-year-old songstress, still prefers singing to talking, and has packed a lot of it into her life. She's appeared on Broadway, has just released her first single, and is getting ready for another Broadway show this fall.

"I guess I've been singing since I was three years old and most of that, when I was younger, was in the Cornerstone Baptist Church Choir. I'd sing every style in the church choir. I never had any lessons," Stephanie admitted, "because I figured that singing in the choir was a lesson in itself."

In Brooklyn's Public School 269 Stephanie was awarded the Music Award for all-around excellence in the vocal department last year. It is only the second time in the school's history the award has been given. The other recipient was Barbra Streisand, who also went to the school.

"She lived just down the street from where I used to live," Stephanie told us. "But she didn't influence my style. It developed mostly out of gospel and music I've heard all my life."

What is amazing is that Stephanie is just a mite of a girl. Yet her voice is a big, BIG one as testified to by her single, "I Knew It Was Love."

"I'm hoping to get to work on my album before getting into the show."

"The show" is an all-black version of the Wizard of Oz entitled "Wiz," in which Stephanie will play the part of Dorothy.

"The music is today music. It's not 'Over the Rainbow,' but tells an up-to-date story about Dorothy," Stephanie said. "We tried to get Ben Vereen (Pippin) to join the cast, but he's busy. He's very good friend of ours and I wish he was available."

Stephanie appeared with Ben in an Ensemble Production Company production of "Piece of the Action."

"I also worked with Leon Bibb and the Electric Company on television, just acting and singing."

Broadway isn't new to Stephanie, who spent nine months in "Maggie Flynn" with Shirley Jones and Jack Cassidy.

"My brother read they were auditioning for the production. I went down with my mother and got the part of Pansie, one of nine orphan kids in the show."

Then, there was the Appollo Theatre story. Stephanie entered the theatre's weekly talent contest and faced what professional entertainers call one of the toughest audiences in New York when they don't like you. She won the first week and for six more consecutive weeks.

"They finally figured the only way to stop me was to give me a regular booking, so I did a week professionally on the same bill with the Isley Brothers."

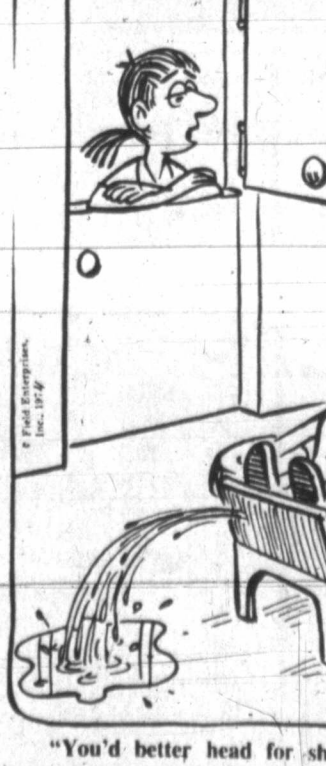

School is very important to Stephanie.

"I want to stay there. I'll have to fit in my work around school and my school around work. It's most important to me," she says.

"I'd say Diana Ross has influenced me a lot. She has class. I love Dionne Warwick's singing and I've tried to mold myself after Billy Dee Williams in acting. I've learned a little

Strategy Pays Off As Cowboys Lose

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — "You can't lose 'em all," New Orleans Saints Coach John North muttered on his way to the locker room.

"You can't keep working this hard and not get anything. With the right kind of effort you can do it and in this game, we sure did."

North was reflecting on his losing team's first victory of the 1974 exhibition game series — a satisfying 16-7 win over the masterful Dallas Cowboys.

The Saints had decided to test the highly respected Cowboy defense by running right at them. The strategy worked.

Paced by the arm of Archie Manning and the legs of Jess Phillips and Rod McNeill, New Orleans humbled the Cowboys before 56,500 adoring Saints fans Saturday night.

"We had a great effort from our defense," said North. "They played great in the first half and held them to what, 10 or 11 plays? Archie moved the club the first half and then (Larry) Cipa moved them when we needed it. Ron McNeill played tonight like we knew he could."

Manning completed 8-of-12 passes for 63 yards while Phillips and McNeill had 105 yards between them on the ground. But the most spectacular play of the night came on a 93-yard kickoff return by Doug Winslow.

Winslow took the second half kickoff on his seven, veered to the left and evaded Ron Howard at the Dallas 40 to race into the end zone standing up.

"The wedge opened a hole left. It was wide open. There was some beautiful blocking to get me in the clear," said Winslow. "I knew the last man had the angle on me so I put on a little move and then gave it all I had left. I got some real good blocking on the run. We've been close to breaking one all year and this is what we needed."

Dallas, which failed to pick up a first down until midway through the second quarter, finally scored its only TD on a third period drive that went 58 yards in eight plays, capped by a 13-yard scoring run by Robert Newhouse.

The Saints opened their scoring late in the first period with a 33-yard field goal by Bill McClard and added six more in the second period on a 38-yard touchdown pass from Manning to rookie Joel Parker. McClard missed the extra point on a bobbled snap from center.

Roger Staubach completed 4-of-5 passes for 31 yards in the first half and Morton completed 9-of-15 for 37 yards in the second half as Dallas, now 2-2 in pre-season, sputtered to a halt.

Bengals, Lions Tangle Tonight In Nationally Televised Contest

United Press International The National Football League will find out tonight just how advanced the Cincinnati Bengals are in their training.

The Bengals had the most players — 28 — cross the NFL Players Association picket line during the 43-day strike and are undefeated in preseason play against teams composed of mainly rookies and free agents.

Tonight the Bengals face the real thing — the veterans — when they entertain the Detroit Lions (1-2) in a nationally televised game that should serve as a gauge for most clubs as to exactly how far behind they are in their training schedules.

Cincinnati Coach Paul Brown promises a "100 per cent veteran lineup" but he's slightly off. One rookie — No. 1 draft pick Bill Kollar of Montana State — will be in the starting lineup at defensive tackle.

Chicago is at Baltimore and Atlanta at Houston in other action tonight.

In Saturday night games, Los Angeles stunned Miami, 31-13; Washington edged Cleveland, 20-17; Pittsburgh ran its record to 4-0 by beating the New York Giants, 17-7; Kansas City ripped San Francisco, 26-7; New Orleans beat Dallas, 16-7; Denver whipped Green Bay, 31-21; Philadelphia upset Oakland, 25-14, and

New England topped San Diego, 23-14.

Rams 31 Dolphins 16 The Rams' defense smothered Miami's offense to the delight of 71,284 fans in Los Angeles. Dolphin quarterbacks Bob Griese and Don Strock were dropped four times and Ram defenders also picked off five passes while holding Miami scoreless until the fourth period. James Harris, who took over for John Hadl in the third period, completed four passes to Pat Curran for 103 yards to set up two third period TDs that gave the Rams a 24-0 lead.

Redskins 20 Browns 17 Mike Moseley's 43-yard field goal with two seconds left gave Washington a victory over the Browns. The Redskins, winning for the first time in four games, scored the tying touchdown with only 1:50 left on a three-yard run by Moses Denso.

Steelers 17 Giants 7 Roy Gerela kicked a 20-yard field goal in the third period and rookie Bruce Henley set up Steve Davis' last-minute TD with an interception as Pittsburgh ran its record to 4-0 by beating the Giants. Joe Gilliam completed 18-of-31 passes for 225 yards to spark the Steelers.

The Pampa Daily News Pampa, Texas 68th Year Monday, Aug. 26, 1974

Otis Taylor helped the Chiefs rout the 49ers. Dawson, playing only the first half, hit 10-of-15 passes for 185 yards, while Taylor caught five for 96 yards.

Saints 16, Cowboys 7 Doug Winslow returned the second half kickoff 93 yards for a TD to lead the Saints to their first victory of the preseason. Saints quarterback Archie Manning also had a 38-yard TD pass to rookie Joel Parker.

Broncos 31, Packers 21 Veterans Steve Ramsey and Charley Johnson threw three TD passes to spark the Broncos over the Packers. Jerry Simmons caught one TD pass from each in helping the Broncos to their third straight win.

Eagles 25, Raiders 14 Rookie Mike Boryla's 77-yard pass to Harold Carmichael set up the winning touchdown in the Eagles' upset of the Raiders. The pass carried to the two and Tom Sullivan scored from there to give the Eagles an 18-14 lead.

Miller Shows Up Critics By Winning

HARRISON, N.Y. (UPI) — Johnny Miller answered his critics the only way he knew how Sunday. He went out and won another golf tournament.

Miller started in 11 tournaments before the end of April and won five. In the intervening span he played in only another six and failed to challenge, causing his detractors to say he was in a slump.

The likeable Californian laughed at suggestions his game was in a nosedive and decided the best way to silence his critics was to post another victory. Win No. 6, duly arrived at the $250,000 Westchester Classic Sunday, which attracted the cream of the tour with the exception of PGA champion Lee Trevino.

A superbly confident Miller stayed cool when Tom Weiskopf started the final round, birdie-birdie, and refused to yield when Don Bies, a name you don't usually find on the leader board, charged. He finished with a five-under-par 67 for a record 72-hole aggregate of 269, 19 under, to best by a stroke the old record held by Arnold Palmer and Jack Nicklaus.

Bies rolled in a 10-footer at No. 18 for a birdie to finish alone in second at 271 following a 66, while Weiskopf dropped a 25-footer for his 68 and 272 which gave him third place.

The $17,750 check Weiskopf earned made him golf's seventh millionaire, while Bies' $28,500 was his biggest payday by far since he joined the tour in 1967.

Jerry McGee was alone at 274. Larry Zeigler and Nicklaus were at 275, while Bruce Crampton and Dale Douglass finished at 276.

"I owe this victory, and my earlier wins, to my caddy Andy Martinez," said Miller after the formalities were completed. "I'm not playing in any PGA event, and that goes for the PGA championship itself."

Borg Wins Over Kodes

BROOKLINE, Mass. (UPI) — Bjorn Borg, the unassuming wonderchild of tennis, had his adoring followers squirming in their seats Sunday.

After racing out to a two-set lead over ninth-seeded Czech Jan Kodes, the 18-year-old Swede lost his magic touch — temporarily.

He dropped the next two sets and was on the verge of elimination, trailing 5-1 in the final set in the semifinals of the $100,000 U.S. Professional Tennis Championships.

But then, as unexpectedly as it left, the magic was back — and the scrappy Kodes had nothing in his bag of tricks powerful enough to prevent Borg from moving on to the finals tonight, where he plays second-seeded Tom Okker, an easy victor over Argentina's Guillermo Vilas.

Borg held his serve, then broke Kodes' and held his own again to trail only 5-4. But Kodes was serving for the match. Borg, now playing inspired tennis, tied it, smashing forehands and backhands that left Kodes helpless.

Borg doublefaulted at duce of the next game, then watched Kodes whip a backhand winner down the left sideline to break the teen-ager's serve. But Borg came right back to break Kodes' serve, sending the match into a fifth set 13-point tiebreaker and the crowd into a frenzy.

Kodes, 28, won the first point of the tiebreaker but then the tide turned against the Czech until Borg raced across the court to put away a drop shot to end the 3-hour, 15-minute marathon, 7-6, 6-0, 1-6, 2-6, and 7-6.

In comparison to Borg's win, Okker's conquest of Vilas, who had won four of his last six tournaments, was serene.

The 30-year-old Dutchman disposed of his 22-year-old opponent, 6-4, 6-3, 6-2.

Dickey Picked To Start Tonite

HOUSTON (UPI) — Quarterback Lynn Dickey of the Houston Oilers has recovered from a dislocated hip injury but he is facing another challenge — winning on the field.

"Maybe one quarterback can throw further, run faster and pick up more weights than another one, but it means nothing if he can't win," Dickey said.

Coach Sid Gillman selected Dickey to start in tonight's exhibition game against the Atlanta Falcons and the fourth-year quarterback is ready. He missed the 1972 season with the hip injury and started four games in 1973, backing up Dan Pastorini. He wants the battle for the starting post settled.

"I wish they'd do something with one of us so one of us can stay here and help us win," Dickey said. "I'm sure Dan feels the same way."

Pat Sullivan was expected to start at quarterback for Atlanta in only the second meeting between the two teams. The Falcons beat Houston 20-10 in the 1972 regular season. Atlanta had its best year in history last season, 9-5, and for the second straight year Houston had the worst record in the NFL, 1-13.

Atlanta is 1-2 in exhibition play, losing in sudden death last week to Cincinnati. The Oilers also lost in overtime to the Dallas Cowboys.

Underpaid Rudi Smacks Grand Slam, Knocks In 5 To Lead A's Past BoSox

United Press International Joe Rudi insists he isn't thinking about money but he's still making a good case to lighten Charlie Finley's bankroll next spring.

The quiet, soft-spoken Rudi universally is regarded as one of the most underrated players in the majors. A superb leftfielder for the Oakland A's, he often manages to get overlooked on a team filled with controversial, outspoken characters.

Rudi is the kind of player whose value to a team isn't judged best by measuring sticks like statistics. Yet, when his average dropped to .270 last year after a 305 campaign in 1972, Finley, the team's irascible owner, offered Rudi only $55,000.

Rudi went to arbitration, asking for $67,000. But the arbitrator ruled against Rudi, and he's had to play for Finley's offer this season. Things should be different next year, though, since Rudi is building a nice statistical case should his contract to arbitration next year.

He boosted his average to .293 Sunday as he drove in five runs with a grand slam homer and an RBI double to pace the A's to a 7-0 triumph over the Boston Red Sox. It was Rudi's 15th homer this season and third career grand slam.

In the other AL games, New York downed California, 2-1; Detroit beat Texas, 6-5; Kansas City blanked Milwaukee, 2-0; Minnesota beat Baltimore, 5-1, and Chicago beat Cleveland twice by identical 8-5 scores.

In the National League, New York blanked Atlanta, 1-0; Cincinnati downed Montreal, 3-1; Houston blanked Philadelphia, 5-0; Los Angeles routed St. Louis, 9-3; San Francisco edged Chicago, 4-3, and Pittsburgh swept a pair from San Diego, 4-1 in 12 innings and 10-2.

Twins 5, Orioles 1 Bert Blyleven pitched a fourhitter and Larry Hise and Bobby Darwin drove in two runs apiece to hand Minnesota the triumph over Baltimore. Ross Grimsley was charged with the defeat.

Royals 2, Brewers 0 Bruce Dal Canton pitched a three-hitter and Orlando Cepeda singled in the first run of the game in the ninth inning as Kansas City downed Milwaukee. Kevin Kotel was charged with the loss.

Pass Over Takes 1st In All-American Derby

RUIDOSO DOWNS, N.M. (UPI) — Pass Over, a 3-year-old filly on the comeback trail, caught Rocket Elaine at the wire Sunday to win the first running of the All-American Derby, the world's second richest horse race.

Rocket Elaine broke well in the 440-yard race and was well ahead at the halfway point, but Pass Over kept coming on the outside and won by a nose. The winner's time on a wet, muddy track was 22.08 seconds.

Pass Over picked up $172,936 for her owner, Jack Delar of Rosenberg, Tex., for the first place finish. The gross purse for the Derby was $519,300, making it second to only the $1 million plus All-American Futurity.

Pass Over, ridden by Jerry Nicodemus, was one of the top 2-year-old quarterhorses in the country last year but injured a leg and underwent surgery. The Derby was her first major victory since the 1973 Kansas Futurity and boosted her career earnings to $437,323.

Rocket Elaine, owned by Roger and Douglas Devenport of West Bend, Wis., and ridden by Wayne Morrison, earned $83,092 for her second place finish.

In third place was Easy Request, who picked up $43,104, and fourth was Timeto Thinkrich, quarterhorse racing's all-time leading money winner. The $22,850 Timeto Thinkrich earned Sunday boosted his career winnings to $542,016.

Gibron Expects Good Chicago Team

CHICAGO (UPI) — The Chicago Bears went through a sweaty Sunday afternoon workout after a Saturday night loss to the Green Bay Packers.

This may portend how things will be for Coach Abe Gibron's charges in the 1974 campaign and give ever-optimistic Bear fans an earlier start on "waiting for next season."

At this point in the 1973 preseason campaign, the Bears were 3-0. Now they are 0-3. A year ago, Gibron said the winning streak was important because it establishes a winning attitude.

After Saturday night's 20-10 loss to the Packers, Gibron said he was not worried. "We know when the whistle blows to start the regular season, we'll have a good team."

A continuing Bear problem since the days of Sid Luckman has been at quarterback. For the past two seasons, it has been the erratic throwing of left-hander Bobby Douglass. Gary Huff, his infrequent replacement, failed to entirely solve that problem.

Douglass is on a rehabilitation program after knee surgery. Huff, now a second-year man, is slated for thorough scrutiny by Gibron in preseason action.

Meanwhile, Joe Barnes, a late-round draftee from Texas Tech, looked impressive enough to survive the cat by completing 11 of 17 passes for 140 yards against Green Bay.

Barnes' throws were caught by Hank Cook and Mike Reppeund, a pair of rookies who appeared proficient enough to give Gibron's regulars a hard time holding on to their jobs.

The lack of a star running back to spell off Carl Garrett may have been filled by the acquisition of Dave Cagnon or Oliver

Alexander, the latter a 6-1, 240-pounder from Grambling.

Waymond Bryant, the Bears' first draft pick, is a sure shot to fill the gaping hole left at middle linebacker by Dick Butkus, and Wally Chambers, who proved himself last season, is also set again as regular linebacker.

Another Bear weakness was at fullback. But Gibron said he plans to go again with Jim Harrison "who is as good as there is in the league."

Gibron says he has no idea whom he will name as his 22 starters for the first league game.

"I've got 80 players in camp now. I've only seen the veterans for the last few days," he said. "Don't ask me now who's going to start."

Gibron has also said he is not through wheeling and dealing in trades and purchases.

Pirates Sweep 2 From Padres

United Press International If the Pittsburgh Pirates play the final six weeks of the season the way they played the last six, the National League playoffs will open in Three Rivers Stadium.

"It's been a long haul," was Manager Danny Murtaugh's comment after the Pirates swept a doubleheader from San Diego Sunday, 4-1 in 12 innings and 10-2, to move into first place in the NL East.

Pittsburgh began the season by reeling off six straight losses and six weeks ago the Pirates found themselves saddled with a 37-49 record and in fifth place.

The second game triumph over the Padres represented Pittsburgh's 29th victory in its last 41 games and moved the Bucs a half game ahead of second-place St. Louis.

"Our bats started ringing four games before the All-Star break when we took four straight from Atlanta," Murtaugh recalled. "That got us started. It was then that (Al) Oliver and (Richie) Zisk started hitting. In fact, the All-Star break came at a bad time for us."

Pittsburgh rapped out 26 hits Sunday, with Oliver collecting six to extend his hitting streak to 19 games and raise his batting average to .321. Zisk had three hits and is batting .333, second only to Atlanta's Ralph Garr, who leads the league with a .358 mark.

The Pirates took advantage of five walks, two of them with the bases loaded, in the 12th to win the opener, while Ed Kirkpatrick's bases-loaded, two-run single snapped a 2-2 tie in the seventh inning of the nightcap.

In other NL games, Los Angeles trimmed St. Louis, 9-3; Cincinnati beat Montreal, 3-1; Houston blanked Philadelphia, 5-0; New York shaded Atlanta, 1-0, and San Francisco nipped Chicago, 4-3.

In the American League, Minnesota beat Baltimore,

5-1; Kansas City shut out Milwaukee, 2-0; Detroit nipped Texas, 6-5; New York edged California, 2-1; Oakland blanked Boston, 7-0, and Chicago swept a doubleheader from Cleveland by identical scores of 8-5.

Dodgers 9, Cardinals 3 Ron Cey's two-run homer and Willie Crawford's two-run double highlighted a five-run first inning for Los Angeles as the Dodgers went on to beat St. Louis. Andy Messersmith recorded his 15th victory against five losses.

Reds 3, Expos 1 Pete Rose's third single of the game drove in two runs in the eighth inning and enabled Cincinnati to beat Montreal, giving the Reds a sweep of the three game series. Clay Kirby gained his ninth victory against seven losses.

Unseeded Duo Captures Title In Tennis Play

Elaine Edkins and Mike Branham, an unseeded team, whipped Deby and John Michie in the finals, 6-1, 6-3, to capture the first place trophy in the Pampa Mixed Doubles Tournament over the weekend.

The winners reached th finals by disposing of Donna Coufal and Eugene Laycock, 6-3, 6-3; Beverly and Jack Scott, 6-3, 6-4, and Stacy Douglas and Jerry Allen, Jr., 7-5, 6-4.

The Michie duo beat Beverly Brown - Warren Wilson, 6-2, 6-7, 7-6, and Mary Hughes - Joe Davis, 6-4, 5-7, 6-3, prior to the finals.

In the consolation bracket, Martha Plunk and E.B. Ellis stopped Ann Henderson and Richard Stowers, 6-2, 6-2, in the finals. In earlier action, Henderson - Stowers downed Mary Ann Allen - Jerry Allen, Sr., 6-4, 6-4, while Plunk - Ellis defeated Donna Coufal - Eugene Laycock, 6-3, 6-4.

The Pampa Tennis Club's next activity will be a one-day Whist Tournament Sept. 15.

Our Capsule Policy

The Pampa News is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessing. Only when man is free to control himself and all he produces can he develop to his utmost capability.

The News believes each and every person would get more satisfaction in the long run if he were permitted to spend what he earns on a volunteer basis rather than having part of it distributed involuntarily.

The 'Allowing' Of Rights

Senator Henry Jackson, D-Wash., is concerned about the U.S. giveaway to the Soviet Union.

Among other things, he mentioned sales by American firms of Soviet equipment to the Soviet gestapo, KGB.

The Senator says that if he were President, he would say to the Russians that the United States would help provide for their people if they would change their ways and allow more human rights.

What Jackson is doing here, knowingly or unknowingly, is to mix in statements that correspond with the aspirations of many Americans with clever Socialist propaganda. He gets you to agree with him on the first point and then, a friendly understanding having been established, he slips the bad one in on you.

Numbers of Americans believe the Nixon administration betrayed this country when it paved the way for shipments to the USSR of technology and hardware that build up the military strength of our adversary. That's the torch that Senator Jackson carries, and that's where he expects to gain the greatest agreement. Immediately thereafter, however, comes the statist sales line — the part about getting the Soviet rulers to allow more human rights.

The fact is, human rights are not something "allowed" by any government. Rights are endowed by Nature or the Creator (whichever one prefers). Governments often have the power to restrict the exercise of rights, but there is no way that Caesar himself could remove a right.

Of course, the practical soul will ask what good is it to have something if you can't use it. Well, to have a right and to know you have a right makes a big difference. For that knowledge is the means by which you convince other men to recognize your entitlement. In the process of time, you hope that the right that you have — the unalienable right — will become so well recognized that your exercise of it will be taken for granted.

We enjoy the exercise of our rights today, in part, because the authors of the Declaration of Independence insisted that men had those rights even though the English king was in fact preventing the full exercise of them. That insistence was the verbal explanation that accompanied "the shot heard 'round the world." To this end, the signers of the Declaration directed their message to "the opinions of mankind." The message struck a note wherever it was read because it was RIGHT!

Now comes our latter-day statesman with intimations that unalienable rights can be canceled out by an act of lawmakers. Senator Jackson may have fallen unwittingly into that ideological trap.

Morality aside, the offense has an equally bad portent whether committed accidentally or on purpose. To say that Congress, or any other lawmaking body, can extinguish a right or create a right increases the power of government relative to the individual. It tends to defy politicians.

Since Marx, the studied objective of socialism has been to maximize the state and to minimize the person. Thus, while seeming to protect us from the Soviet Union, Senator Jackson was undercutting the basic American idea.

We all need to re-read the Declaration of Independence to keep fresh that first vision.

"Well then if you won't rollback prices, would you consider giving trading stamps?"

THE CONSERVATIVE ADVOCATE

Watergate's Real Meaning

BY WILLIAM RUSHER

Of all the things that needed saying about Richard Nixon's resignation and the accession of President Ford, let us begin with two: the least important, and the most important.

The least important first. No one knows better than I how galling it has been, during this past year or so, for conservatives to watch the exultation of America's liberals at the discomfiture and downfall of one after another of the major figures in the Nixon Administration, and finally of the President himself. Whether one was a political supporter of Mr. Nixon has nothing to do with it. We conservatives long ago correctly perceived the relentless liberal bias and growing arrogance of the national news media — as, decades before, conservatives had been the first to recognize and speak out against the dangers of an increasingly imperial presidency. As Watergate unfolded, we realized with stomach-turning disgust how little the Administration's critics in Congress and the media were motivated by genuine shock and high-mindedness, how much by sheer bias masked in sanctimony. Not long ago, in a Washington television studio, I happened to overhear a leading political reporter for the "Washington Post" introducing himself to a stranger. "Chalmers Roberts," he purred. "For impeachment before Watergate." Precisely.

But our annoyance, so huge and perfectly human and entirely justified, is surely the most transient and unimportant aspect of the whole affair. The misdeeds of the Nixon Administration were real enough, after all; in a rough sense at least, justice was served. And the net political benefit to the liberals seems likely to be astonishingly small: President Ford, whom their labors have installed in the White House, may well turn out to be the number of Mr. Nixon on a right of crucial issues. Even this November's elections may well see a striking reaffirmation of the basically conservative mood registered by the voters in 1972.

Far more enduring, and almost surely the most important national consequence of Watergate, will be its impact on a presidency whose steadily growing power has for forty years been the most serious danger facing the American society. The liberals, who are human too, have not been overly generous about admitting a conservative recognized and resisted that menace for decades before they did, and they have tended to treat Watergate as if it had no relation to the larger issue — as if it were merely a case of a bunch of foxes who recently got into the henhouse. But Watergate was not an isolated incident, attributable simply to the criminal genes of a few officials in the White House. It was the end product of four decades of immense growth in the power of American presidents and their immediate aides.

Beginning with Franklin Roosevelt, and — after a relative slackening in the Truman and Eisenhower years — with increased velocity under Kennedy and Johnson, the presidency was glorified and Caesarized far beyond any level that was either necessary or safe. Richard Nixon understood the modern powers of the office very well indeed, and when he assumed them in 1969 he was determined to use them to the full.

At some point, however, a healthy society was bound to fight back. Indeed, the public outcry against Lyndon Johnson, culminating in his decision not to run again in 1968, was probably an early rumble of the approaching storm. And even if the Watergate burglars had not been caught, and Nixon had survived to complete his term, it seems inevitable that, sooner or later, some American president would have gone too far, and been forced to pay the price that Nixon has paid.

As a result of Watergate we can, I think, be sure that imperial presidencies will be out of fashion for a while — perhaps, if we are lucky, for quite a while. America has had enough, for the time being, of executive arrogance and over-reaching. It is not too much to say that we are, in a real sense, a freer people as a result of this experience. And for that every true conservative, surely, can be grateful. Copyright 1974)

Rapid Transit

It has been said that if each person who heard a particular piece of gossip passed it along to two other people within fifteen minutes, that the whole world would know the gossip in about eight hours!

John Bunyan, when converted, saw two women whispering together and he assumed they were gossiping — and he wanted to listen! So he drew near to overhear their words; and discovered they were talking about Christ. As a result, Bunyan was converted.

If Christians were all "gossiping the Gospel" we would see more sinners come to Christ.

INSIDE WASHINGTON Inflation Not Only No. 1 ---But Toughest Problem

By ROBERTS ALLEN
WASHINGTON — President Ford is soundly stressing that inflation is the "No. 1 public enemy of the country" — and he could well add, "also the most baffling."

One of the grimmest aspects of this fearsome problem is the striking scarcity of imposing solutions.

Various proposals, schemes, devices and procedures have been broached, in and out of Congress, but basically they fall in the category of time-worn formulas which may have worked with some effectiveness in the past but are of dubious usefulness in the current dire economic crisis.

It is highly significant that economists, industrialists, financiers and other authorities — of the right, left and middle — are very wary about propounding far-reaching remedial measures.

This circumspection is particularly marked among liberals — usually highly vocal in criticizing and in projecting ideas and concepts.

This is frankly admitted by Prof. Peter Kenen, Princeton economist, who says: "Much of what the liberals are doing is to second-guess the mistakes that have been made, and not to show how to deal with the situation."

Harvard's widely known Prof. John Kenneth Galbraith is equally candid.

Asked if liberal economists have a "strategy" for fighting inflation that is basically different from the conservative "old-time religion" of cutting the budget and tightening credit, he replied, "No, they don't. The older generation of liberal economists was reared on the dangers of unemployment. When they are asked about the problem of inflation, they warn about the dangers of recession."

Most caustic is Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., outspoken vice-chairman of the Joint Congressional Economic Committee, who bluntly says:

"Liberals economists have really flunked the course on this one. By and large these experts have walked away from the inflationary problem. They are afraid that if they move a little conservatively, they will affect unemployment."

While readily admitting it calls for nothing new, Proxmire has a prescription to "start fighting against inflation": Slash the defense budget by $6 billion; drastically cut spending for highways and the space shuttle; and "roll back crude oil prices."

Key difficulty facing such a plan is graphically pinpointed by Sen. Harry Byrd, Ind.-Va., as follows: "Every program in the federal budget has its constituency, and the politicians in Congress and the administration naturally dread the job of making major spending reductions. Every cutback will raise an outcry."

Byrd could well have added — "particularly in an election year," as this one is.

What's Causing It
While innovative solutions and remedies are scarce, there is general agreement among the experts and authorities on the basic causes of the somber inflation dilemma.

Foremost among these contributory factors are:

— The government's huge deficits that have skyrocketed the national debt to $475 billion — with the virtually certain prospect of exceeding one-half trillion dollars in a matter of months.

— Interest on this stupendous debt as of June 30, end of the past fiscal year, was a breathtaking $29 billion — an immense debt within a debt. It costs 17 cents of every individual and corporation income tax dollar to pay this enormous interest on the national debt.

— The spending budget submitted to Congress by former President Nixon last January for the current fiscal year was $305 billion — $35 billion more than last year. The President also said he would cut federal employment by 40,000 out of 2.8 million civilian employees. But in May, the total civilian employment in the executive branch was 46,270 greater than in the same month the year before.

— The unending large-scale spending for foreign aid — which as of December 1973 totaled some $254 billion since 1946; it amounts to about one-half of the staggering national debt. Actually, proposed foreign aid spending this year comes to around $10 billion. The recommended $5.18 billion foreign aid budget in reality is only about one-half of contemplated spending for this purpose. The other $5 billion is buried in various appropriation measures.

Continuing huge annual deficits and steadily soaring budgets necessitate constant Treasury borrowing — with resulting direct inflationary impact on interest rates. In the eight-month period from Nov. 1, 1973, to June 30, 1974, a total of $71 billion in various government securities were issued. This immense federal financing not only deprieved the private sector of these tens of billions, but was a major factor in forcing up the prime interest rate to 12 percent.

Says Sen. Byrd somberly:

"This kind of deficit spending cannot be sustained. If continued, it will destroy the economy of our country. It is causing inflation to feed on itself; the expectation that prices will continue to rise artificially spurs demand, strains capacity and forces prices still higher."

"There is no hope of getting the cost of living under control until we get the cost of government under control."

Tough Going

Needless to say, that's not going to be simple or easy. So far, neither Congress nor the administration has been very helpful. Both have talked a lot about economizing and budget balancing, but like the weather have done nothing about it. Following is a graphic illustration:

Last spring, the administration, at State Department urging, proposed giving another $1.5 billion to the International Development Association — the so-called "soft loan branch" of the World Bank. Previously, the U.S. had contributed $2 billion to IDA — approximately 40 percent of its total capital.

Leading backer of the $1.5 billion "refresher" is Robert McNamara, Defense Secretary in the Kennedy and Johnson administrations, the bleeding-heart head of the World Bank.

The House, after a torrid floor fight, killed the IDA giveaway by a wide margin. But several months later, the Senate, by a big bipartisan vote, spearheaded by lame-duck Foreign Relations Chairman J. William Fulbright, D-Ark., approved the handout.

As a result, in the end the House reversed itself and also authorized the $1.5 billion "refresher."

Notes Sen. Byrd sternly, "To get that money, the government will have to go into the market to borrow it at 8 percent or more. Yet the loans disbursed by IDA carry less than 1 percent interest, while the countries to which IDA makes loans then loaned out the funds to their own citizens at rates from 12 to 20 percent."

"Our government simply must stop saddling taxpayers with this kind of expenditures."

And that stricture goes for a lot of others, too! (All Rights Reserved)

Potomac Fever

By JACK POSNER
Scientists predict human colonies can be established to live in space. It's already been tested and proved in Congress.

The reason all those subpoenas were not answered was because they were addressed to the President, instead of Your Royal Highness.

Attorney St. Cloud disputed the expert's testimony on the tapes. The hums could have been caused by the paper shredder.

OUTRIDER

Who Should Own The Tapes?

By GARRY WILLS
WASHINGTON — George Washington, whose sense of duty was his ruling principle, told all his executive officers to live with a corrective awareness that their acts would be appealed to, ever after, as a precedent. They were the government's beginning. They would set its course for many years.

Washington knew that what applied to his subordinates applied trebly or more to him — he led the most scrutinized and scrutinizable presidency of all time. What he did, even inadvertently or by accident, became a rule.

Unfortunately, that applied to his private papers. The very existence of these papers came from a special attention to the documents that belonged to the nation. There was an emphasis on the binding first public documents, which were filed in the State Department. Nobody cared much, yet, for the slim file of things that did not bind the young nation.

Washington, a man about to free his slaves and strike a blow at his own wealth, did not seek any pecuniary advantage from owning his papers. He took them away, simply because there was no place to leave them.

Mount Vernon already existed, but it was not turned into a monument; and certainly no new "library" was raised to celebrate him. His adopted son showed people his memorabilia, but at his own house, Arlington, and there was never any question of making money from their display.

Admittedly, politics was an aristocratic occupation at the outset, and universal suffrage introduced a different kind of president into the executive mansion. But that is why we have granted latter-day presidents a very generous pension.

But these later presidents, given cabinet salaries all the rest of their lives, and top executive expenses, not to mention extensive protection and privileges, have taken their papers and based a further wealth upon them. This means that the public has paid for these papers three times over — once, when they were made, on paper the taxpayers bought, typed by secretaries on our payroll, using increasingly expensive machinery of duplication; twice, when we have given the presidents who donated these public papers a big tax write-off for giving back what we paid for in the first place; and thrice, when we gave tax advantages to the donors who built grandiose libraries to put these papers in.

That is the way it has been; and it was not fair to the nation when LBJ or JFK, in effect, built themselves monuments at public expense without a public decision in their regard. Mr. Nixon's lawyers, who have unilaterally declared that the White House tapes belong to Nixon personally, can indeed appeal to this custom — but it is a custom that badly needs changing, and what better time to change it than now?

President Ford has refused to get involved in this. If the Justice Department or the Special Prosecutor do not step in, the Congress should instantly draft a bill stating that papers generated during a presidency belong to the nation, and no further profit or tax advantage can be derived from them.

The Nixon tapes, purchased with public funds, played on government recorders operated by civil servants, were made — Mr. Nixon claims — for historical purposes. Some of them have been demanded as criminal evidence, and others of them could well be demanded in the future. Neither of these purposes would be served by giving the tapes to Mr. Nixon. Both would best be served by sealing those adjudged as harmful to the public good and releasing those that are needed in trials.

We should discourage the building of expensive monuments to each president's papers. This just leads to the production of a mass of trivia that can fill the mausoleum. Indeed, one reason for Mr. Nixon's tapes being made in the first place may have been to provide more documents for his memorial library. It would be fitting if the tapes served the higher purpose of desecrating this whole practice. We are not living in ancient Egypt. We don't need to raise pyramids to our dead kings.

Dear Consumer

If You Can It, Can It Right

By Virginia Knauer

Special Assistant to the President and Director
Office of Consumer Affairs
Department of Health, Education and Welfare

Pump red tomatoes. Mellow green cukes. Crisp, crunchy beans. All lined up in jars on your pantry shelves after you've lovingly canned them yourself.

I have had pleasant experiences growing and canning my own fruits and vegetables. But I also know how important it is to follow proper and safe canning methods. Don't risk food poisoning by taking short cuts.

Here are suggestions from Agriculture Department:

- Don't experiment. Use tested recipes, follow them carefully and also follow instructions that come with your canning equipment.

- If your jars aren't new, get new rings for 1-piece lids and new metal lids with sealing compound for 2-piece lids.

Unfortunately, many would-be home canners are having trouble finding enough lids for their canning needs. Lid manufacturers have been faced with a shortage of tin plate, but they are trying to allocate the available lids on the basis of last year's sales.

I suggest you start looking for your lids early, if possible, so that when your favorite produce is ready to be processed, you will be prepared. But, please, don't buy more than you need—hoarding lids or any other items is a disservice to all consumers.

Since there is no substitute for lids in traditional home canning, you may sometimes be obliged to use your fruits for jellies and preserves that require paraffin rather than lids. Another possibility is to freeze more produce if you have a freezer available.

● Never use ordinary containers such as mayonnaise or baby food jars, or canning jars that are very old, nicked or cracked.

● Try not to take short cuts. You need proper temperature and proper timing to kill bacteria, yeast and mold—micro-organisms that cause food spoilage.

● Be alert for signs of food spoilage. Beware of bulging can ends, jar lids or rings. Watch for leaks, spurting liquids, off-odors, mold. If in doubt, dispose of the food; don't risk food poisoning.

Today is Monday, Aug. 26, the 238th day of 1974 with 127 to follow.

The moon is approaching its full phase.

The morning stars are Venus, Jupiter and Saturn. The evening stars are Mercury and Mars.

Those born on this date are under the sign of Virgo. Scottish statesman and novelist John Buchan was born Aug. 26, 1875.

On this day in history:

In 1883, the volcano on Krakatoa, in the Dutch East Indies began erupting. Before it subsided the following day, two-thirds of the island had been devastated and 36,000 persons were dead.

In 1920, American women were given the right to vote as the 19th amendment to the U.S. constitution went into effect.

In 198, Mildred Elizabeth Gillars, known as "Axis Sally," was brought to the United States to face charges of espionage and treason for broadcasting for the Nazi in World War II.

In 1964, PRESIDENT Lyndon Johnson and Sen. Hubert Humphrey were selected to head the Democratic ticket. They won in November.

Did Lead Poisoning Cause Empire's End?

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Several thousand years ago, the Romans were the most powerful people in the world. They spread their empire from Italy through the Middle East, northern Africa and Europe.

But after several centuries, the men and women who built the empire lost their enthusiasm, creativity, and ability to rule. They found it difficult to reproduce. Without successors, their empire crumbled. One of the greatest eras in the civilization of the world came to an end.

Today a number of scientists believe that lead pollutants had a lot to do with the downfall of the Romans. The Roman rulers ate and drank from vessels that had been made from lead.

As a result, traces of lead could have gotten into their foods and wines and could have slowly poisoned their bodies. Traces of lead could have made them feeble-minded, listless. Lead poisoning could have made it difficult for them to reproduce.

Whether lead pollution and lead poisoning actually or fully led to the fall of the Roman Empire is not known for sure. But one thing is sure: lead pollution and lead poisoning did not stop with the Roman Empire.

Today, Americans are estimated to have one hundred times more lead in their bodies than people who lived several thousand years ago.

People living in and near cities are usually more exposed to lead pollution than are people living in the country.

Children are especially prone to lead pollutants. For one thing, they are closer to the ground, and thus to automobile exhaust, a major source of lead pollution.

Many children living in older tenement houses in cities are tempted to nibble on paint that has flaked from the walls. This paint contains large amounts of lead, which are easily absorbed by the body.

Air is a major source by which people take in lead pollutants. A third of the lead that gets into people living or working in cities is breathed from the air. But the other two-thirds comes from food, beverages, and drinking water.

Scientists estimate that of the lead we eat, 39 percent is in meats, including chicken; 22 percent in vegetables; 17 percent in bakery products;

10 percent in juices; 9 percent in dairy products; and 3 percent in other foods.

What happens when lead gets into our bodies? The tiny traces of lead build up. If they build up enough, they can poison us, that is, cause some or all of these consequences: anemia, kidney disease, liver disease, muscle paralysis or overaction, brain damage, convulsions, death.

At the cellular level, traces of lead are known to inhibit enzymes in the mitochondria, the energy factories of cells. Lead can interfere with iron-containing enzymes in blood so that hemoglobin cannot be made. Lead can attack the nuclei of cells, which contain the cells' genetic material. It can also keep helpful trace elements, such as iron or magnesium, from passing through cell membranes. Lead can destroy nerve chemicals that nerve cells use to communicate with muscle cells.

Animal experiments have shown that traces of lead can seriously damage both sperm and eggs. Lead can pass from an animal mother's blood to the blood of the fetus she carries in her womb, even though the two circulatory systems are separate. If pregnant animals are exposed to high enough levels of lead, their offspring may be born dead or may not grow properly. They also give birth to fewer offspring. Lead can probably do similar damage to human reproduction.

The traits that people inherit can make them more vulnerable to lead poisoning. Pediatricians found that children lacking a particular enzyme in their blood were more open to lead poisoning than were children born with the enzyme.

Many of the bacteria people are exposed to through air, food and water make poisonous substances called endotoxins. Scientists have found that if endotoxins get into the body along with lead, this pollutant is even more harmful than usual. And the lead, under these conditions, appears to attack enzymes.

Lack of enough vitamin C can make us more susceptible to lead poisoning too, it seems.

In one experiment, young guinea pigs were given a diet lacking in vitamin C. A second group received food without C but with lead. Others were given a diet with both C and lead. The animals getting C and lead showed no serious signs of disease. Those simply lacking vitamin C had some trouble with muscle control. Those lacking C and also taking in lead completely lost their muscle control and even their ability to move.

If you think you and your family are escaping lead's pernicious influence, you may be kidding yourself. No other trace pollutant has accumulated in people to levels so close to those causing obvious poisoning.

Over a fourth of all American children, 5 percent of the men and 2 percent of the women are estimated to have levels of lead in their bodies that border on toxicity (ability to poison).

Feel tired or irritable? You may be suffering from a mild case of lead poisoning. Are your children hyperactive? Lead pollution may be the cause.

As Dr. Henry Schroeder, of the Dartmouth Medical School and a leading trace pollutant investigator, puts it, "It is disturbing to think that all of us are being poisoned at least a little bit by lead."

Joshua, Tex., near Dallas Fort Worth, is the site of the annual All-Girl Rodeo, the largest such event in the nation.

College Notes

Douglas Laramore, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Lloyd Laramore, 417 Magnolia, will serve as graduate assistant band director to Dr. Gary Garner at West Texas State University this fall.

He is currently working on his masters degree and expects to finish it in May 1975. Afterwards he plans to attend North Texas State University in Denton to work toward a Doctorate in music education.

Laramore received his Bachelor of Music Education in December, 1973 and has been a member of the Rosewell, N.M. Symphony and the Amarillo Symphony and Kappa Kappa Psi Music Fraternity.

He is married to the former Patty Klaus of Odessa, who graduated from WTSU recently.

Two area students graduated from East Texas State University in Commerce recently.

Robert Anthony Moulryie, Pampa, received his bachelor of business administration degree and Rodney Ray Ivy, Perryton, received his master of science degree.

They were two of a total of 1,101 who received degrees in summer commencement exercises.
