Survivors of storms cheat brutal winter

By The Associated Press

His face bloodied by an avalanche of ice on Washington's Mount Rainier, a climber survived in unforgiving winter by stumbling miles on injured legs. In North Carolina, an oysterman spent five days adrift on a chilly bay.

And there were other tales this week of survivors cheating a brutal winter: A father and son who huddled in their crumpled plane, buried in New Mexico snow.

A New Hampshire snowmobiler who crawled to safety while nearly "freezing to death."

A grandmother who climbed from the bottom of a 250-foot cliff in Colorado to find help for her husband and granddaughter.

"It's the will to live. There's no other answer for it," said police Sgt. Roger Corriveau in Manchester, N.H., where 16-year-old Steven Patient was injured in Sunday's snowmobile crash.

"I don't know how...he got out of there," marveled Fire Chief Frank Eshpeter of Greenwater, Wash., after 19-year-old Kurt Fickeisen trudged nearly two miles Thursday with an injured knee, a broken elbow and other injuries from an avalanche that killed his climbing partner.

Fickeisen and Chris Gentry, 19, had been trying to scale a 300-foot frozen waterfall on Mount Rainier when they triggered an ice cascade, authorities said.

When Fickeisen reached a Boy Scout camp where he summoned help, "his face was covered with blood," said Kathleen Utterbach, chaperon of a visiting church youth group at the camp. He was hospitalized in satisfactory condition today.

North Carolina oysterman Albert Jefferson was described as "a very lucky man" Thursday as he was found, unhurt, on an island after drifting in his 25-foot boat since Christmas in bitter wind and without food.

Jefferson, 43, became stranded when his boat's battery died and an anchor chain snapped on frigid Pamlico Sound. He saved himself by burning rags to keep warm, and finally waded to the island and banged a pot with a hammer to attract aid.

"As long as you're still alive you just presume you're going to make it," Tony Mink, 36, said Thursday from an Albuquerque, N.M., hospital where he was recovering from injuries suffered in a plane crash that killed his wife.

Mink and his 14-year-old son, Brian, created a shelter inside the wreckage, using parts of the plane and Christmas gifts, and endured five days of snowstorms and subzero cold before their rescue Wednesday.

"I figured we'd stay alive until we couldn't come up with a clever enough idea to do so," Mink said.

He and his son huddled in the cramped fuselage, burning checks from a checkbook to add warmth and talking about home and food, although they only had one can of survival rations, he said.

For Charlotte Julian, the ordeal began when her snow-filled car settled in a drift after tumbling 250 feet from Wolf Creek Pass in southwestern Colorado.

"I crawled and my feet and my hands are still tingling," said Mrs. Julian, 54, describing how she made it up the slope to bring help to her husband, who was having trouble breathing, and her 11-year-old granddaughter.

"I had a little trouble closing my eyes last night," Mrs. Julian said. "I thought we were going to die right there."

The three were released Wednesday after an overnight hospital stay in Del Norte, Colo.

In New Hampshire, Corriveau said Steven Patient "moved inches at a time," crawling a quarter-mile in four hours Christmas morning with bare hands in temperatures of 10 below to reach a house for help.

"He said he had gotten into an accident (on his snowmobile) and told me he was freezing to death," said Robert Ahern, who was awakened by the boy's knocks on his door at 4 a.m.

"And he said, 'My back's broken and my legs are paralyzed.' "

Steven's father, Marcel Patient, said, "He's going to make it."

Steven was transferred Thursday to Boston, where he is being treated at University Hospital's spinal cord injury unit, said Owen McNamara, hospital public information director. He would not give any details.

Packages stack up at post office

From Staff Reports

Several hundred Christmas packages stacked up at the main post office will be "returned to sender" if people don't claim them within 30 days, according to Postmaster Bill Williams.

Also, some 50 to 60 packages of perishible goods included in the package jam will be destroyed as soon as they go bad.

"We've left notices and called people," said Williams. "We want to deliver the mail, not return it. But we need the space for other operations."

Williams said if people have trouble getting to the post office during working hours, they can call and "we'll try to arrange something." The phone number is 684-5801

Anyone coming in to claim a package should bring the pink notification slip with them, as packages are filed by number, not name, he added.

Marines in Beirut could become campaign issue

By KINGSBURY SMITH
National Editor, Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — Astute political observers in Washington believe President Reagan will have to get the Marines out of Lebanon before mid-summer or face what will become a major and dangerous issue for him in the presidential campaign.

This belief has been strengthened by the report of the special defense department commission which investigated the October 23 terrorist attack on the Marine headquarters in Beirut that killed 241 American servicemen.

The report was not only a severe indictment of the military high command for failing to order better security measures for the exposed Marines. It also criticized the civilian authority in Washington for faulty policy in failing to recognize the "greatly increased" risk to the Marines once the U.S. forces became involved in the Lebanese civil war and American warships bombarded Syrian positions.

The report by three lieutenant generals, a retired admiral and a former deputy assistant secretary of defense is political manna for the Democratic presidential candidates. Unless it becomes apparent that the Marines will be withdrawn from Lebanon before next November, the report is bound to be used by the Democrats as a major issue against Reagan. If the Marines are withdrawn by next Spring, the effectiveness of the report as a campaign issue is likely to be defused.

One of Washington's most astute political observers who believes the administration's Lebanese policy will become a major campaign issue unless it is definitely decided to bring the Marines home early next year is Senator Charles McC. Mathias, R-Md. The independently

'Lens' discovered that magnifies up to 10 billion light years

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — The discovery of a celestial mirage that magnifies the image of a quasar up to 10 billion light years — or 60,000,000,000,000,000,000,000 miles — from Earth gives scientists a new tool for predicting the eventual fate of the universe.

A report released today describes a method for locating such optical illusions, called gravitational lenses. Scientists hope that by tracking them down, they will be able to measure the amount of matter in the universe.

The figure is crucial to theories that predict the future of the universe — whether it will keep expanding or will collapse upon itself in a cataclysm called the Big Crunch.

The latest gravitational lens, known as 2016-112, is the fourth to be discovered since 1979. But it is the first to be located as a result of a systematic search.

"They're very interesting, because it's a way of measuring the amount of matter there is in a way that's entirely independent of anything that astronomers have used before," said Bernard F. Burke of Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Scientists from MIT, California Institute of Technology and Princeton University used three telescopes to spot the latest gravitational lens, and they believe the same technique will turn up many more. A report on their work is being published in the issue of the journal Science released today and dated Jan. 6.

Reagan doesn't back Jackson's Syria mission

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Democratic presidential candidate Jesse Jackson set out today on the final leg of his journey to Syria, saying he was hopeful of arranging the release of captured U.S. Navy airman Robert O. Goodman Jr.

"We certainly are hopeful," Jackson said when asked during his six-hour stopover at Frankfurt airport whether he expected to bring Goodman back to the United States.

"The point is, if we do nothing, nothing will happen," he told The Associated Press after resting in a VIP lounge after an overnight flight from New York.

Jackson, accompanied by a delegation of U.S. clergymen, left at 2 p.m. for Damascus, the Syrian capital, aboard a commercial flight.

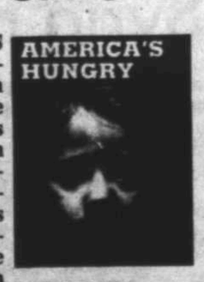

The black civil rights leader told reporters that neither race nor politics played a role in his decision to fly to Damascus. Goodman is also black.

"This is a truly American matter. I have been involved in humanitarian missions in the past," he said.

During an ABC television network interview at the airport, Jackson said it was "really unfair to inject

Debate over hunger has political overtones

Part Ten

EDITOR'S NOTE: The subject of hunger in America made recent headlines when Edwin Meese III, presidential counselor, gave his views on how little hunger the Task Force on Food Assistance has documented. This is the last in a series of articles on hunger with contributions from Hearst newspapers across the country.

By VIC OSTROWDIZKI

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration is not likely to add much to the $19.4 billion being spent to feed the nation's needy, top White House advisers say.

Despite the flap about White House counselor Edward Meese's remark that some people go to soup kitchens "because the food is free and that's easier than paying for it" and before next month's final report of the President's Task Force on Hunger, officials agree that little if any new money would be proposed for the nation's food stamp, senior citizen and school lunch and breakfast programs.

"It wouldn't appear that the problem is lack of money," said Robert Carlson, special assistant to the president for policy development and a White House liaison with the Task Force on Food Assistance.

"When the government provides funds equivalent to feeding 95 million meals a day — that's three meals a day for 31 million people — it doesn't seem money may be the answer," the architect of the 1981 Reagan welfare reform package added.

Another senior White House aide said there are no current "initiatives" to expand spending on the programs used to fight hunger. "We believe the programs are adequate," said a spokesman for the Agriculture Department's Food and Nutrition Service, which administers the food assistance programs.

CARLSON SAID, however, that the White House was not prejudging the task force findings, which are to be announced Jan. 9. In all likelihood, the task force recommendations would be reflected in the fiscal 1985 budget due late in January.

In fact, the task force report probably will renew the debate over the extent of hunger in the nation. This series has documented the growing number of people served at soup kitchens and food lines across the nation. That number has grown sharply in the past two years, even as the nation's economic recovery seems to be under way.

Nonetheless, the debate has assumed political overtones with Reagan supporters and Republicans defending the administration's position, while the case for a widespread hunger problem rests on a stream of reports from churches, mayors, Democrats, unions and charitable organizations which have been telling the task force and congressional committees of a startling increase in the number of families joining the lines to eat in soup kitchens or picking up bags of free groceries.

The debate is far reaching and fundamental, and it likely will be extensive and spirited. Here are the major areas of disagreement:

"These are tough issues," said John Raisian, executive director of the 13-member presidential task force. "My sense is that there is some hunger in America but to get a grip on the term 'hunger' is not an easy task. I am convinced there is no chronic malnutrition in the country."

"For many people the terms hunger and poverty are synonymous," Raisian added. "I think the panel will attempt to make it very clear that there is a difference between hunger and poverty."

Raisian said latest statistics estimate there are about 30 million Americans living below poverty level. "I don't accept that everybody below the poverty line is hungry," he said.

THE ADMINISTRATION has consistently said it lacks specific data, that too much of the information is anecdotal. Critics reply by saying there are sufficient anecdotes to support claims of a wide problem. Further, they say that similar anecdotal data found in the 1960s prompted development of the food stamp, school lunch and other programs existing today.

The National Weather Service forecasts showers for Saturday for the Pacific northwest and cold weather for most of the nation.

Temperatures to be back to normal

After two weeks of sub-freezing temperatures, the weather is settling down for awhile.

The weather this weekend will be returning to near seasonal temperatures, said the weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. That means the lows will be in the low 30s instead of into the teens and below and the highs will be in the upper 50s instead 20 or 30 degrees lower.

For tonight, the weatherman has predicted a low temperature in the mid-20s. Winds are to be southerly at 5 to 10 mph.

Saturday's peak temperature is to be in the mid-50s. Winds are to be southerly at 10 to 20 mph.

Thursday's high temperature was 29 degrees, while the record high is 77 degrees for the date in 1945. The overnight low was 12 degrees, which set a record. The previous low temperature for a Dec. 30 was 16 degrees in 1966.

'Trip-wire' vets hide from society

FORKS, Wash. (AP) — Hiding out in Washington's wilderness, "trip-wire" veterans are almost never seen. But a few are there, shunning society and living by the skills they learned in the Vietnam jungle, the state veterans' affairs director says.

"Trip wire" was the phrase U.S. servicemen used for the unseen, deadly traps the Viet Cong laid along trails to snare and maim GIs on patrol. It also applied to certain soldiers who developed a knack for finding those traps and dismantling them.

Now state officials are using the phrase to describe a very small percentage of veterans who, unable to cope with the stress of their war memories and the disapproval they faced upon returning home, disappeared into the woods to live the only way they felt comfortable.

"Out there in the woods are wonderful, loving people who just want to be left alone, who are saying, 'I don't want a world where I am going to be spit on and have tomatoes thrown in my face,'" said Bruce Webster, a Port Angeles psychologist who works with veterans.

About 85 trip-wire vets have re-entered society since the state Veterans Affairs Department began an outreach program, said department director Randy Fisher. He said he did not know how many more there might be.

With a $100,000 grant from the state, Fisher and Mike McWatters, a private consultant and veteran who says he himself hid for two years in New York's Adirondacks, began the counseling service in August.

Last summer McWatters did a survey to determine how many of the state's 100,000 Vietnam-era veterans needed counseling but lacked programs. He found about 1,000, and a number of them were vets whose existence resembled that of 19th-century mountain men.

Marvin, a 33-year-old ex-Marine who did not want his last name published, says he lived as a woodland shadow off and on for 10 years, tracking and trapping animals, wearing buckskin clothes, living in caves and hollow tree stumps.

He was one of several trip-wire vets interviewed by the Tacoma News Tribune for a series of stories this week.

"There's a lot the public don't know — and probably will never know — about what happened in 'Nam," he said. "The only job skills I have are those that might be useful to a hit man for the Mafia."

Marvin said he spent four years in Vietnam as a Special Forces Scout before being wounded in 1971. When he returned to the United States he headed for the woods, holing up in Colorado,

AP Laserphoto

Ignoring the cold anddamp, Marvin, a former "trip-wire" vet, stripped down to track a mountain lion on a forest trail near Forks Wash.

Wyoming and Montana and ending up in Washington. He avoided all human contact, he said, because "I couldn't stand to be touched."

He said he suffered from paranoia and nightmares. Since he sought counseling a year ago, Webster diagnosed him as a victim of post-traumatic stress disorder — a psychological illness in which symptoms show themselves years after the event that caused them.

Bill Maier, 35, says he was another trip-wire vet. An ex-Marine who saw heavy combat during his Vietnam stint, Maier said he sought refuge in the woods from his recurring nightmares.

But his sanctuary became his torment, for the isolation became too much. "I became afraid of everything," he said. "I had to get out. Everything was closing in on me."

Maier sought help from Webster, his former high school track coach, and now says, "I feel I'm getting well again." He spends much of his time going back to the woods to find other trip-wire vets and urge them to seek counseling.

Trip-wire vets are not "loonies," Fisher said. They are troubled and confused men who cannot come to terms with their post-traumatic stress disorder. In a demanding and complicated society they cannot control their feelings, but in the wilderness — where they know they can survive by their wits — they feel secure, he said.

"I know of one vet who went into the woods naked, came back out later with full leathers (animal hides for clothing), had gained 40 pounds and was armed" with weapons he made, McWatters said.

Nuclear missiles to be made operational without fanfare

By DAVID MASON

An Analysis

LONDON (AP) — By New Year's Eve, and probably without any public announcement, the first group of 572 new U.S.-built nuclear missiles is expected to become operational in Western Europe.

Components of the Tomahawk cruise and Pershing 2 missiles arrived in Britain, West Germany and Italy last month, but there has been no announcement that any of them are operational.

Official statements have made it clear, however, the missiles, intended for the defense of the European NATO area, are to become operational by the end of the year.

This conforms with NATO's 1979 decision to site the missiles by the end of 1983 unless an arms-reduction agreement had been negotiated between the United States and the Soviet Union.

NATO decided to deploy the missiles to counter a buildup of Soviet SS-20 rockets, which now total more than 350, according to Western intelligence.

Separate U.S.-Soviet arms control talks on long-range missiles and medium-range missiles have been discontinued, with no sign when they will be resumed.

One of the latest statements on the missiles was made Dec. 20 by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain in the House of Commons.

Referring to the first of Britain's contingent of 160 cruise missiles, Mrs. Thatcher said "the cruise missiles are not yet fully operational and will not be fully operational until the end of December, because that is the time appointed by the agreement with NATO."

Despite the low profile given the missiles after their arrival, minor protests have continued by anti-missile groups in Britain, West Germany and Italy.

The West German government announced Nov. 23 — a day after its Parliament endorsed deployment — that the first Pershing 2 components had arrived in the country.

Lt. Col. Norbert Huebner, a German defense ministry spokesman, said Dec. 14 some of the Pershings would be operational by the end of December, but was not more precise.

West Germany is to take all of the 108 Pershing 2s and 96 of the 464 cruise missiles slated for NATO deployment.

In Italy, which is to take 112 cruise missiles, the first are expected to be operational by March.

The Bonn newspaper Die Welt, quoting NATO sources, reported Thursday from Brussels that the first battery of Pershings, which is understood to mean nine missiles, and a "flight" of 16 cruise missiles in Britain would be operational at midnight Dec. 31.

Belgium and the Netherlands are each scheduled to take 48 cruise missiles in the five-year NATO deployment program. But it is still not clear when missiles will be sent to those countries.

NATO officials have repeatedly said the missile deployment program can be quickly halted or reversed if there is an arms agreement with the Soviets.

But the Soviets have said NATO deployments must be reversed before they will talk again.

NATO officials hoped that some indication of the next Soviet move might have come from meetings in Moscow this week of the Communist Party Central Committee and the Supreme Soviet, or nominal parliament. But nothing specific emerged.

The next hope for some Soviet signal is Jan. 17 when a 35-nation European disarmament conference opens in Stockholm. NATO foreign ministers, including Secretary of State George P. Shultz, plan to attend, and they may be joined by Warsaw Pact foreign ministers.

Researchers find optical illusion in space

"The first three were found by accident," Burke said. "We thought it was time that we started to look for these gravitational lenses in a systematic way."

No. 2016-112 involves a relatively nearby galaxy and a quasar. The quasar, a star-like source of energy near the edge of the universe, is one of the most distant ever found. It is about 5 billion to 10 billion light years away from the Earth. A light year is 6 trillion miles.

The galaxy is between the quasar and earth. Its gravity acts as a kind of lens that bends, splits and magnifies the quasar's light. This creates the illusion that there are two quasars, not one.

"Out of every 1,000 quasars, there ought to be two or three examples of these," Burke says. "So we'll press on and see if that's the case."

The eventual goal is to figure out how much matter there is in the universe.

Traditionally, astronomers have estimated this by measuring the light of the stars. But not all matter gives off light. And no one knows how much so-called dark matter exists.

Observing a gravitational lens makes it easy to calculate the amount of matter there is in a galaxy, Burke says. "In most of the cases, you see two images. The wider they are split, the more matter there is."

All of this should help cosmologists understand whether the universe is "open" or "closed."

The Big Bang theory of the universe's creation holds that a closed universe expands for eons after its beginning with the big explosion. But finally it stops and collapses into a tiny ball. This theory requires the existence of a great deal of matter in the universe.

In an open universe, there is less matter, and the spheres run away forever. Another theory proposes a balance between the two. The expansion slows down, but the universe never collapses.

minded, influential member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee said Thursday that soon after Congress reconvenes next month he will press for withdrawal of the Marines by the end of February.

Pending business for the committee is a resolution originally introduced by Democratic Senators Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts, Claiborne Pell of Rhode Island and others which called for reducing to three months the 18-month authorization for continued presence of the Marines in Lebanon that the Senate approved September 23. Before Congress recessed for the holidays, Mathias offered an amendment to the resolution which would change the three months to six months from August 29, the date on which the Marines became involved in hostilities.

In view of recent polls indicating mounting public support for getting the Marines out of Lebanon, coupled with the impact of the critical Pentagon commission report, there undoubtedly will be increased political pressure for their withdrawal after Congress reconvenes January 23. The senator believes he stands a good chance of getting an amendment adopted which would call for withdrawal of the Marines six months from August 29. That would be the end of February. But to obtain Republican Senate support, he may have to compromise for a withdrawal date 4 or 5 months from January 1.

Reagan is strongly opposed to a hasty pullout of the Marines before some other peace-keeping force replaces them. He fears it would collapse efforts to bring about a political settlement between the Lebanese Christian and Moslem factions, lead to a partition of Lebanon between Syria and Israel, and wreck his Middle East peace plan.

However, the president is just as eager as members of Congress and the Joint Chiefs of Staff are to get the Marines ouf of Lebanon. The problem is finding other nations to replace the existing American, French, Italian and British forces. All four allied governments want their forces out of Lebanon as soon as possible. The problem is finding replacements.

Reagan has said that if the reconciliation negotiations between the Lebanese Christians, Moslems and Syria collapse, he would withdraw the Marines. That may prove to be the easiest way out for him.

Officials: Unlikely U.S. will remain in UNESCO

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senior Reagan administration officials say UNESCO is so "fatally flawed," so politicized and anti-Western, that they see virtually no chance it can make the changes essential to persuade the United States to reverse its decision to withdraw.

Delegates to the United Nations Educational Scientific and Cultural Organization in Paris predict the expected loss of the large annual U.S. contribution, now about one quarter of UNESCO's $200 million budget, will force the agency to trim its staff, and to cut back and re-examine programs.

Some key Reagan administration officials, complaining of allegedly runaway UNESCO budgets, say such steps would provide at least one dose of the strong medicine they say is essential if UNESCO is to be rescued from its own "mismanagement" and domination by radical elements led by the Soviet Union.

Ending a six-month long policy review, the State Department on Thursday accused UNESCO of displaying consistent "hostility towards the basic institutions of a free society."

Jean-Pierre Cot, French delegate to the UNESCO Executive Council, said some of the U.S. complaints were "well founded," and "some of the criticisms are shared by France." However, the French government had asked the United States not to withdraw, officials in Paris said.

"If the Americans leave, UNESCO will only be able to function poorly," said Cot.

UNESCO Secretary-General Amadou Mahtar M'Bow of Senegal said last November that UNESCO would apply for an international loan if the United States pulled out. He did not give details of how such a loan would be solicited or who the lenders might be.

Speaking for President Reagan, a State Department spokesman said the United States will withdraw permanently on Dec. 31, 1984, one year from now.

Secretary of State George Shultz appeared to leave an opening for reconciliation, telling UN Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar in a letter that the year's wait offers UNESCO "a potential opportunity to respond to the serious concerns that have caused our withdrawal."

But if Shultz left an opening, other officials made clear it is only a small one.

Reagan doesn't support Jackson's Syria mission race into this dimension. If Lt. Goodman were white, or Hispanic or Indian or Asian, it would have the same moral imperative...his presence there is a grim reminder of the low level of relations between Syria and the U.S."

President Reagan has given a cold shoulder to Jackson's initiative, and Syria's defense minister said no release was possible while a "state of war" exists.

Goodman's mother has given her blessing to the trip, but his father said Jackson "should be held responsible" if the effort prolonged the detention.

Goodman, a bombadier-navigator, was wounded and captured Dec. 4 when his attack jet was downed during a raid on Syrian gun positions in Lebanon's central mountains. The pilot of his plane was killed.

Jackson's spokeswoman, Florence Tate, said the delegation would be met in Damascus by someone from the U.S. Embassy, possibly Ambassador Robert Paganelli.

"We don't know what the program there is yet," she said.

Jackson, before leaving New York, said he had "virtual assurance" from the Syrian government that he would at least be able to meet with Goodman, as have Paganelli, the Red Cross, and others.

Jackson said he had a telegram of welcome from the Syrian government, and said he hoped to meet with Syrian President Hafez Assad.

But he conceded he had no assurance Goodman would be freed, and in Damascus, Syrian Defense Minister Mustafa Tlass appeared to reject the possibility.

Tlass said Thursday, in an interview with The Associated Press, that a "state of war" exists between the United States and Syria and that "military traditions are that prisoners of war are exchanged after the war ends."

There has been no declaration of war and American officials have said repeatedly that the United States does not consider itself at war with Syria.

A U.S. Marine contingent is part of the multinational peacekeeping force requested by Lebanon after the Israeli invasion drove Palestinian guerrillas out of Beirut in 1982. The Marines are supported by U.S. Navy forces off the coast of Lebanon.

At a Kennedy Airport news conference, Jackson said, "We have a moral obligation to do something other than stand idly by."

Marilyn Goodman of New York, the airman's mother, attended the news conference.

Debate over hunger assumes political overtones

There is no measure for hunger; officials relate hunger to poverty statistics.

Liberals, who want to spend more on anti-poverty programs, cite Census Bureau data showing that the official poverty rate has risen in each of the past four years and that there are nearly 10 million more poor people now than in 1978.

Conservatives, who want to limit spending, say the official figures grossly overstate the poverty problem because they ignore the value of noncash benefits such as food stamps, Medicaid and federal housing subsidies.

Officer of Management and Budget Director David Stockman, recently told Congress that if noncash benefits had counted as income, the poverty rate in 1982 would have been reduced from the official 15 percent to 9.6 percent and the number of poor people would have dropped by more than a third, from 34.4 million to 22 million.

Raisian said he hopes the panel "will propose to revamp, change, alter and enhance the efficiency of programs and recommend that eligibility for some of these programs be based on need."

WHEN TWO MEMBERS of the president's task force, Dr. George Graham, director of the nutrition program and Johns Hopkins University, and John Driggs, a former mayor of Phoenix who now chairs Second Harvest, a national food bank network, visited Baltimore Dec. 1, they heard Jean Houbolt, executive director of the Maryland Food Committee, describe the long lines of the cheese and butter giveaway program as "degrading." Houbolt said the food stamp program is much better, because it's "more efficient and dignified."

"We've heard a lot of horror stories about the commodities distribution program, that its been very lumpy and irregular. And we're addressing that question," Raisian said.

"We've been asked to look at the whole issue of food distribution, just how it should be done. It's a question we feel compelled to address."

Raisian said the task force is taking a sharp look at the Women, Infants, and Children supplemental food program, which, in Maryland , is offered under the auspices of the state Department of Health and Mental Hygiene.

"ONE AREA OF controversy is whether WIC is just another food distribution program or whether it actually enhances the health of the mothers and babies who participate," he said.

Some task force members publicly have challenged the WIC program, claiming there has been a dearth of scientific data to support claims that the program is, in fact, a nutritional program. But at the meeting with Maryland nutrition leaders, Dr. John DeHoff, Baltimore city health commissioner, and members of his staff presented evidence showing that the milk, cheese and other foods pregnant women and babies receive through WIC helped raise the iron levels in their blood.

Raisian said the task force also is examining the federal school lunch program. "I think it's a relatively efficient program. But the biggest concern is who should pay. The only real issue is whether a school lunch is the right of all children in America."

Critics argue that millions of school children no longer receive free lunches because of eligibility cutbacks. For many, critics say, this eliminates the only hot meal the children receive each day.

The same argument is made for cutbacks in lunch programs for senior citizens.

The administration has consistently called on the private sector to shoulder more of the burden of helping the needy and malnourished. G. William Hoagland, chief counsel of the GOP-dominated Senate Agriculture Committee argues further that "the growth in state, local, church and private charity food assistance has in fact been stimulated by federal food asssistance policies designed to make available surplus agricultural commodities to those organizations.

"WE'RE ALSO looking at private sector initiative in nutritional programs," Raisian said. "The claim is made that soup kitchen use is way up over the past year. There is no doubt that's the case, but the question is why? Is the problem of hunger worse or are the kitchens serving a need that previously went unmet?"

The President's Task Force on Hunger, which was created last fall to examine the extent of poverty and hunger in the United States and to determine how effective existing federal nutritional programs and funding are in addressing these problems, will be coming out with its findings by Jan. 10.

"We've been hearing testimony that indicates that there are both problems with some programs and a need for more funding," said Raisian.

Some leaders of national anti-hunger groups have been skeptical that the task force will produce anything significant. Said Nancy Amidei, executive director of the Food Research and Action Center, "The task force is doing whatever any group of uninformed people, with no background on the subject they are studying, would do in a situation like this. They are acting like graduate students writing a dissertation. And they are trying to find out in a few short months, what some of us, who've been heavily involved in the hunger issue, have known for years."

Mick Allman, director of Maryland's food stamp program, said he hopes the task force is open minded. "When the task force was first appointed, the press was very skeptical about its makeup, since it included some conservatives, who've been very outspoken about some of the nutrition programs the task force is examining.

"I WOULD HOPE, that as a result of all the testimony task force members have gotten around the country, that they are really trying to reach a balanced approach to the problem of hunger," Allman said.

The Reagan administration has been under fire for being "insensitive" to the needs of the poor because of its requests to slash funding for food programs.

The Congressional Budget Office estimated recently that the changes sought by the administration reduced food stamp outlays by about 13 percent and spending on child nutrition programs by about 28 percent, compared with the amounts that would otherwise had been spent in the period from 1982 through 1985.

The administration has been on the defensive since Meese's allegations.

President Reagan later told a news conference that Meese's comments were taken out of context.

"We're doing more to feed the hungry in this country today than has been done by any administration," Reagan said. He said he "cheered" private charities that are helping feed the poor, saying "this private sector aid is essential."

The president insisted that "if there is one person in this country hungry that is one too many. We're going to do what we can to alleviate that situation. I happen to know he (Meese) feels the same way."

Seattle food banks service increases

Food banks head: People desperate

By DON FAIR
Hearst Feature Service

SEATTLE — Vance Gillette knows he no longer qualifies as even a government statistic.

He is not included in the federal unemployment figures because he's been out of work for two years and his benefits ran out a long time ago.

And even though the federal government may not believe him, Gillette said, he often goes hungry. So does his wife and three young children.

"Right now I'm hungry," Gillette, 24, said following an afternoon visit to a Seattle food bank. "That's probably because all I've eaten today is two pieces of bread — without butter."

HE, HIS WIFE and children, ages 4, 3, and 3 months, usually eat one meal a day, Gillette said.

"Yesterday we had macaroni and mayonaise for dinner," he said.

It's been hard to find work, said Gillette, who never finished high school. He has found "three jobs, none longer than a month in two years." He even tried running his own bicycle repair business.

Recently he enrolled in a computer class at a private, non-profit organization known as Seattle Opportunity Industrialization Center.

MEANWHILE, GILLETTE does house repairs for a friend at $4 an hour for "two or three hours a day whenever I'm needed. Sometimes he can't pay me and I wait until he gets the money."

His wife receives a monthly $371 welfare check, but $150 of that goes to rent. What's left doesn't buy much food. Consequently, Gillette goes to an area food bank about once a week.

Although there are no exact numbers to show how many people are suffering from hunger, the Seattle area has 42 food banks, which are serving record numbers of people.

King County Executive Randy Revelle estimated that 100,000 of the area's 1.3 million people suffer from hunger.

Ruth Sterling, director of Northwest Second Harvest, the umbrella organization for area food banks, each morning finds food wrappers and drink containers left by an overnight guest beneath the stairs at her Seattle headquarters.

SHE SAID NEEDY people are "more desperate" this year than they were last year. She cites statistics collected by her organization:

Seattle-area food banks served more people in 10 months this year than in all of 1982.

Northwest Second Harvest reached an all-time distribution record at Thanksgiving, sending 550,000 pounds of food to banks around the state.

This year's Christmas needs were expected to exceed the Thanksgiving record by 20 percent.

Northwest Second Harvest's food bank figures show that 429,732 people went to county food banks in 1980; 655,768 in 1981; and 1,608,247 in 1982. That record was exceeded during the first nine months of 1983. By year's end, county food bank will have served about 2.4 million people, officials predict. (The numbers reflect people who make repeated visits to food banks.)

MAJOR DALE HILL, Salvation Army Northwest Divisional secretary, points to similar increases in his organization. He says demands are up 30 percent this past year.

Ms. Sterling said most of Washington's hungry are not street people. The majority "had a job (before) and a little apartment. The men range, primarily, between the ages of 25 and 35, and many had never before been unemployed."

Troubles in the Northwest's once profitable industries have made things worse.

The state's major industries — lumber, fishing and aerospace — haven't yet recovered from the recession and jobs have remained scarce. Latest figures show unemployment in Washington state at 9.5 percent, 1 percent above the national average.

Just before Thanksgiving, the police chief in the small fishing town of Westport sent out an urgent call for help to Northwest Second Harvest.

IN HIS 16 years on the job, Chief John Regan said, he had never seen such a critical need for food for the poor and unemployed.

Within 48 hours, Ms. Sterling had the state Air National Guard deliver 13,800 pounds of food to the Westport food bank.

One elderly Westport resident, seeing the food shipment, commented, "I'm 75 and all by myself and I just can't believe this. There's food today I've never seen before. The shelves had been pretty bare lately."

Food banks sprung up in the Seattle area in 1970 when hard times hit the giant Boeing aerospace industry. More than 50,000 workers eventually lost their jobs.

Ms. Sterling said food banks began when "several churches decided to put all their cupboard food for the needy in one spot. Before then, nobody had heard of food banks.

Food banks obviously help. Lines are usually long. And it's not easy for some.

FRANCINE WIGGINS has stood in only one food bank line. That was just before Thanksgiving two years ago. A cutback in government funds had erased her husband's job. They had an older daughter. Mrs. Wiggins was pregnant.

"We ate cold cereal for breakfast, lunch and dinner. That was all we had and looking at hunger was scary," said Mrs. Wiggins, a Seattle University graduate.

So she and her husband went to an area food bank, lining up two hours before it opened.

"I went because I was desperate. When you go to a food bank, you don't think about your normal pride or inhibitions. It is a demeaning feeling. But you do what you have to do. It's either that or starve."

Today, her husband has another job, and Mrs. Wiggins supplements his slim earnings by working at a food bank. She receives a small wage, a bag of food and the smiles from those who line up for their sack of groceries.

"SEATTLE HUNGER?" Ms. Sterling rhetorically asked. 'It's definitely for real and there's a lot of it. At this food bank, we used to serve 20 to 25 people a day and now its 80 to 100 a day."

She can cite horror stories by chapter and verse: people who ask for candles so they won't have to turn on their electricity; or mothers who steal sugar from restaurant containers to mix with water for their undernourished infants.

But she also can cite what she describes as small miracles: a suburban businesman who spent more than $7,000 to purchase 1,000 turkeys for needy families at Thanksgiving; a woman who gave $10,000 to buy special food for Asian refugees and continues to make $1,000 contributions to an Asian food bank; and a couple who have bought 350,000 pounds of surplus potatoes to distribute to the hungry with the smelt they've caught from their beach in front of their home.

Chinese immigrant finally has freedom

CHICAGO (AP) — After living three decades in mental hospitals, apparently because of a language barrier, a Chinese immigrant is free but will never be "the person he could have been," his lawyer says.

In need of constant care, David Tom, 54, spent his first day of freedom Thursday in a community center he now calls home.

He was joined for lunch by his attorney, Pat Murphy, who successfully fought a four-year legal battle seeking financial compensation for the 31½ years Tom languished in institutions.

"He seemed to be as content...as someone in that situation can be," Murphy said. "I think he's going to make it."

But the task of regaining what Tom lost may not be as hopeful.

"David is irrevocably harmed," Murphy said. "There is no money you can sink into him that will undo that...He's never going to be the person he could have been."

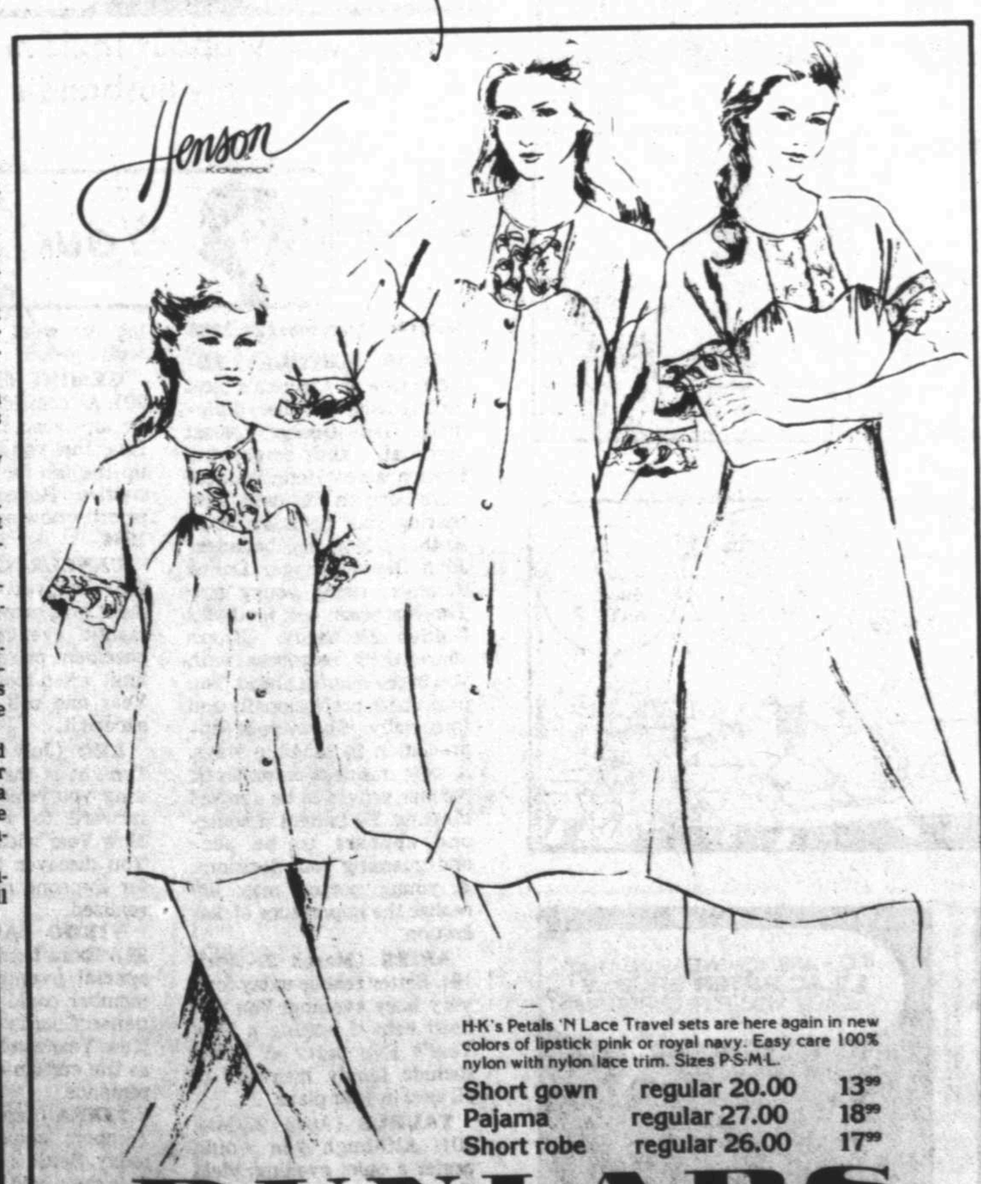

Tom will live at a drop-in center for Indochinese refugees and be cared for by the couple running the facility.

Murphy, who is also Cook County public guardian, won a suit alleging Tom's rights were violated because he was institutionalized for decades without the care of anyone who spoke his native Chinese dialect.

Tom came to the United States around 1949 and was shipped to a mental institution in 1952 after he began acting strangely during treatment at a tuberculosis hospital. His lawyers contended he was victimized by bureaucrats who let him languish in asylums while he lost his mind.

Illinois officials argued that Tom was institutionalized because he was psychotic and that all his needs were met.

Others share their resources with you in the months ahead. You profit both professionally and financially. Show your appreciation in tangible ways. A new business or romantic partner proves to be a mixed blessing. Be patient if someone appears to be second-guessing your decisions. A young person may not realize the importance of discretion.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Better rest up today for a very busy evening! You will need help if hosting a New Year's Eve party at home. Include family members of all ages in your plans.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Although you would prefer a quiet evening, yield to mate or loved ones' wishes. You need to have a clear understanding of who is paying for what if celebrating with a group.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A "coincidence" may not be any such thing. Make it clear that you are not picking up the tab for tonight's festivities. Romance is a top priority now and throughout 1984.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Innovative entertainment will provide a fun, romantic evening at bargain basement prices. Know your limit when toasting the New Year and call a taxi if you exceed it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Tonight is the kind of evening you really enjoy. Look forward to welcoming the New Year with good friends. You discover that you care for someone more than you realized.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Extra funds make this a special evening. A family member could test your patience. Guard your privacy. A New Year's celebration raises the curtain on an exciting romance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Tempers could flare early today. Settle a dispute before it throws cold water on this evening's festivities. Duck out of a family gathering to rest up for a special gala.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Romance is uppermost in your thoughts. Do not despair if your plans have to be changed at the last minute. Welcome the New Year in with good friends.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): If you want to be in great form tomorrow, guard against overindulging tonight. Young people take their cue from you. A date may be cost-conscious. Be on your best behavior.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Celebrating the New Year at home has great appeal if the price is right. You prefer the company of a few good friends to being part of a crowd. Consult mate's wishes.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your ability to get along with others makes you very popular now. Be prepared for a last-minute change in plans. Romance makes tonight a very special farewell to 1983.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): It is time you thought of your own needs for a change. Refuse to be bullied into going somewhere you cannot afford. A pleasant but firm "no" should suffice. Romance triumphs.

Incestuous father portrayed

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Playing an incestuous father in a new TV movie was a difficult role for actor Ted Danson, and it forced him to take a look at "the dark side" of himself.

By that he meant that he had to probe his mind, in the same way an actor portraying a murderer would, to pull out those hidden feelings and emotions.

"My role in 'The Onion Field' was a tough one, too," Danson said. "But I don't think I've ever had to take a look at that side of myself that you don't want to look at often. In a way it's also fascinating."

The movie, "Something About Amelia," which ABC will telecast on Monday, focuses on the effects of incest on a middle-class family and how they cope with it by means of therapy.

It all comes out in the open when Danson's 13-year-old daughter, Amelia, breaks down before her school counselor under mounting feelings of shame, guilt and powerlessness. Glenn Close costars as Danson's wife, and Roxana Zal plays Amelia.

Danson, who plays good guy Sam on the comedy series, "Cheers," said he spent a lot of time discussing his role with Dr. Stan J. Katz, director of education and training for Children's Institute International, who was technical consultant.

He said he asked Katz what kind of people commit incest and Katz told him "ordinary people." Katz also told him he didn't know why men do it, but it appears that it's a lack of self-esteem.

Danson said he was pleased that the film took enlightened therapeutic approaches from different states and used them all in the story. "What I think is good about that is that the bond between parent and child is the strongest bond we have in life," he said. "If there is any way through therapy we can keep that bond together, it's worthwhile."

He also was glad the movie did not show any sexuality. "He was a man who had been involved for two years. If we had done a scene, it wouldn't have been as devastating as having Amelia say, 'Yes, we've been having sex once a week for two years.' That stirs the imagination more than seeing it."

In his portrayal, Danson said he had to suppress feelings of immorality so he would not be a bad guy.

"I had to be as truthful as I could in every moment so people wouldn't sit there and say, 'Hey, that isn't me.' I don't want to let people off the hook."

Danson, tall and handsome, with the lithe build of an athlete, starred last year in the TV movie, "Cowboy" and was the dancing prosecutor in "Body Heat."

Players in the recent World Team Championship seemed to have great difficulty staying out of slam when they were missing two aces. In the final, the U.S. team managed to collect both its aces, and with them the world title. In the semifinal, the U.S. team bid a slam off two cashing aces, but with a luckier result.

North's two diamond opening bid could have been made on a number of hand types. His diamond rebid showed that he had a weak two-bid in hearts. South obviously expected a better suit from his partner and blasted into slam without stopping off to check on whether his side held sufficient number of aces.

West led the ace of hearts to take a look at dummy. He decided that South had to be void in clubs for his jump to slam, so he continued with a trump. Declarer won dummy's king, and he was quick to seize his opportunity.

He came to hand with the ace of spades and sluffed dummy's remaining spades on the ace-king of diamonds. When the king of spades appeared on the next lead of the suit, it was all over. Declarer ruffed on the table, came to hand with a trump and was able to discard all of dummy's clubs on his remaining high diamond and spades.

Even if West's analysis was right and South was void in clubs, it still looks right to lead the ace of clubs at trick two. It is most unlikely that one discard in the South hand would make or break the contract.

Surviving on steel

The announcement by U.S. Steel of the closing of six of its plants and reductions in operations at 24 others fell heavily on a nation already grieved by economic hard-times. For the 15,400 steel workers and their families — and the nation at large — it takes the merriment out of the new year's arrival.

Corporation officials blamed the cutbacks on "global economic and market conditions." Domestic steel production has been hurt by the high volume of low-cost imported steel and burdensome labor negotiations. It has become a faltering giant, lost in a world of high technology.

Although the volume of steel required by modern industry may not approach that of previous years, the United States still needs a steel industry. The question is this: Does it need the kind of steel industry it had in the past?

Probably not. The world is changing. The nation has moved from the industrial age into the technical age and, as a result, its needs have changed drastically.

Today's society needs less steel and low-cost steel. To survive, the domestic steel industry must provide it or continue to be undercut by steel concerns abroad.

It can meet the challenge by changing with the times instead of resisting. It must produce steel in modern plants utilizing the most advanced technology possible. It must consider taking a cue from the Japanese and giving steel workers a piece of the profit pie to in effect make them a part of the corporation. In that respect, they'd likely benefit from increased worker loyalty and less union demands for merely bigger and bigger salaries.

More and more of the new steel plants, using modern methods, have sprang up in recent years as the old furnaces have died out, dinosaurs of an earlier industrial revolution.

In this world the name of the game is competition. Those who can compete can survive. Those who can't won't. Can the American steel industry hold onto the glory from an earlier age?

No, but it can survive if it adapts.

French advantage

As President Charles de Gaulle did some years ago, French President Francois Mitterrand has been trying to root out the use of English in France. He recently pushed French scientists to publish their findings in French.

He was resisted because English has become the international language of science. Even an East German physics periodical won't accept articles not written in English. To shun English is to court scientific isolation.

Eugene Seibold, president of the West German Research Society, said, "English is the common language. Whether you publish in French or Chinese doesn't much matter: Neither language will be read."

Oh, well, Mitterrand can console himself with the thought that French remains the language of l'amour, which is still more of an art, thank goodness, than a science.

Another View:

Reason for rage

You can get a good idea of people's basic values by what gets them angry. Take the Reagan administration. From the president on down, administration officials seem to get angry at the thought that somebody who could scrape up the price of a meal is getting free food at a soup kitchen. They get angry when they think that some official might have leaked something to a reporter — even when that something is information so widely disseminated through the government that an FBI investigation cannot uncover the leaker.

Then why is it that they don't seem to get very angry — at least judging from their actions — when one of their own appointees advances the flimsiest of excuses for charging $6,800 of personal expenses to the government. The appointee in question is Bill J. Sloan, head of the HUD regional office in San Francisco and former director of the California Republican Party. According to a HUD official, Mr. Sloan stated he did not intend to make excessive claims for travel costs. But here are some of the things he did, as cited in a HUD investigative report:

Mr. Sloan charged the government for expenses at the Disneyland Hotel, where he attended a $1,000-a-plate dinner featuring Richard Nixon. He can recall no HUD business on this trip. His room service charges included a bottle of whiskey and a bottle of wine.

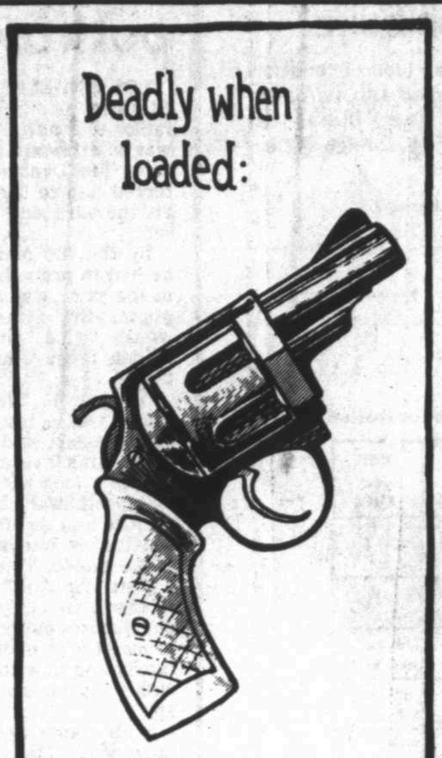

Mr. Sloan took his wife on trips and charged the government for double rooms; he claims he didn't know doubles cost more than singles.

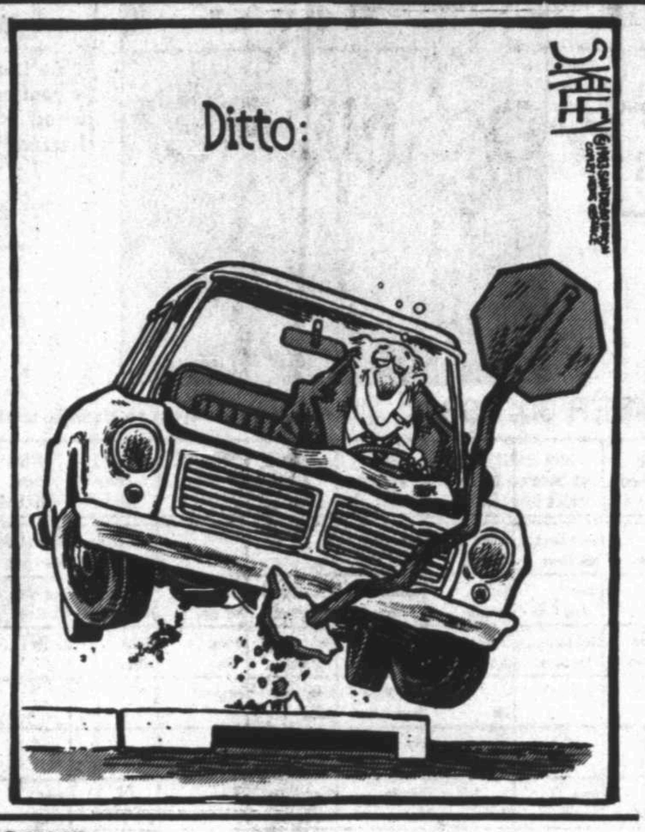

Mr. Sloan charged the government for personal calls made on business trips. "I presume it is acceptable," he said. Would any private business keep on an employee who is either so naive or so disingenuous?

Mr. Sloan often drove his personal car on long trips rather than taking cheaper and faster airplanes. He said he preferred his own car "because you are only allowed to drive a government vehicle 55 miles per hour, and I like to drive faster." Does anyone at HUD know that the 55 miles per hour limit is the law of the land?

What was the administration's response? HUD reprimanded Mr. Sloan verbally and ordered him to pay back $6,800 (with no interest if he pays by Dec. 31). That's not going to send many tremors up the spine of expense account cheaters in the future: they get the use of government funds interest-free for months. Mr. Sloan should have been fired. He had no business standing in the federal soup line to cover his personal expenses at the Sands in Las Vegas or the Beverly Hills Hotel. Why is the administration so relaxed — we should say permissive — about this case?

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Terrorists taking aim at West

WASHINGTON — Terrorists from around the world quietly assembled in Mexico City on Oct. 21 for an underground convention. Many had studied Marxist ideology and "revolutionary" tactics together in training camps behind the Iron Curtain.

Jack Anderson

Out of this bizarre conference came instructions to intensify the terrorist campaign against the West. U.S. intelligence began intercepting sinister messages calling for attacks upon American installations. One message from Cuban leader Fidel Castro urged terrorists to "kill Americans." Other messages from Iran's Ayatollah Khomeini had a similar theme.

So far as I can learn, Castro sent a delegation to the terrorists' convention, but Khomeini did not. Yet in the murky netherworld of terrorists, the lines sometimes get tangled. For example, the Palestine Liberation Organization, which has ties to Tehran, was represented in Mexico City.

U.S. security experts, meanwhile, are searching desperately for ways to deal with the deadly threat. Their task is complicated by the suicide tactics of Khomeini's terrorists. As a State Department official acknowledged to my associate Lucette Lagnado, "Most security precautions have been based on the idea that terrorists did not want to die."

But Shiite Moslem fanatics have been indoctrinated by Khomeini with the idea that dying for their faith will guarantee them glory in paradise. As a result, Khomeini apparently has had little difficulty recruiting kamikaze drivers for bomb-rigged cars or trucks.

After the bombing of our embassy in Kuwait, State Department security officers met with political experts in the Near East Bureau to identify the most likely — and most vulnerable — American targets in the region. Sources say three U.S. embassies were at the top of the list: in Bahrain, Oman and the United Arab Emirates.

These three countries, like Kuwait, are located just across the Persian Gulf from Iran. They also have Shiite communities from which Khomeini can draw recruits willing to die for the cause.

Two of the embassies are in locations extremely difficult to protect. The embassy buildings in Manama, Bahrain, and Muscat, Oman, sit right on the street instead of inside a walled or fenced compound.

The embassy in Damascus, ironically, is not high on the endangered list, though the United States is close to war with Syria. In fact, the Syrians are building a fence around the embassy, as an added precaution to avoid a provocative incident.

The three shiekdoms at the top of the list not only have to worry about the Shiites but the Palestinians as well. As oil-producing countries, some have been obliged to retrench and lay off Palestinian workers. Those discontented Palestinians may be ripe for terrorist recruitment.

A special report prepared for Sen. John Warner, R-Va., warns that "use of car-vehicle bombs is expected to grow in number in the Middle East and other geographic areas as well." The fear is that other terrorist groups will attempt similar suicide attacks.

"More imaginative terrorists could apply the general technique to other avenues," the report states, explaining that "witting (or even unwitting) suicide bombing attacks" could be made using light planes, helicopters or speed boats.

Warner, a former secretary of the Navy, is expected to lead the Senate response to the findings of the Pentagon commission on the Beirut bombing in which 240 Marines died. While publicly expressing his confidence in the Pentagon commission, Warner has been pursuing his own informal investigation into the tragedy.

One of Warner's most significant preliminary findings involved anti-terrorist training in the armed services. He found that while considerable funds have been spent on this specialized training, the Pentagon somehow has failed to match its anti-terrorist experts with the areas most in need of them, like Lebanon.

According to a report prepared for the senator, the available anti-terrorist training "has not been used to a significant degree" by the Marine Corps, presumably because the Marines' traditional all-out combat role had little need for such training. Of some 7,000 military people who took the Army's anti-terrorist courses since 1980, only 57 were Marines. An Air Force course trained 1,300 since 1982 — but only 119 were Marines.

SALESMAN ZERO: Nicaraguan rebel leader Eden Pastora — the famous Commander Zero — drew a lukewarm reception from the CIA and conservative White House advisers during his recent fund-raising tour. But private donors wrote him some generous checks — reportedly with enough zeroes on them to keep his anti-Sandinista guerrillas fighting for a few more months.

INSIDE REPORT:

Information chief 'surrenders'

WASHINGTON — An attempted appeasement of Democratic critics in the Senate resulted in humiliating political retreat for the Reagan administration when USIA Director Charles Z. Wick signed secret terms of surrender.

Rowland Evans

Hard-driving Charley Wick, one of Ronald Reagan's closest friends, agreed to stop financing political seminars for foreign visitors after liberal Senate Democrats complained about their right-wing orientation and threatened to use the power of the purse against the USIA.

Robert Novak

But that looks like just the opening wedge against Wick. His high-level supporters told us privately that Wick made a mistake in signing the surrender document that threatens to undermine imaginative, experimental policies he has managed to force on the staid old United States Information Agency (USIA).

Wick felt he had no alternative, and he may have been right. If so, it demonstrates the continued power of the Democrats and their staff network in the Republican-controlled Senate. Helped along by the complaisance of moderate GOP colleagues, it turns back strong ideological currents sweeping out of the Reagan White House.

On Nov. 2, Wick signed a one-paragraph letter addressed simply to "The Honorable Claiborne Pell" and "The Honorable Charles Percy." Wick wrote that he had determined "that there will no longer be any funding in the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs for conferences and seminars on contemporary political or economic issues."

A second sentence carried particularly foreboding overtones. Wick promised that he would "work with" the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, chaired by Percy with Pell as the senior Democrat, "to develop guidelines on other kinds of conferences and seminars in that Bureau." He thereby opened another door to the baying Democratic wolves.

The Cultural Affairs Bureau is a principal source of one of USIA's key functions: bringing foreigners here to see America and its curious customs. It has been accused by Pell and the Foreign Relations Committee's other Democrats of financing "conservative" and "right-wing" conferences and seminars for the visitors. Thus, Pell and his colleagues ordered committee staffer Peter Galbraith to summon key Wick aides to Capitol Hill Nov. 2 to extract major concessions on next year's programs and financing.

The ideological preferences of Galbraith (son of famed economist John Kenneth Galbraith) are variously described as ranging from "left-wing" to "moderate." There is no doubt, however, that he knows how to promote the interests of Pell and his other clients. He informed USIA Assistant Director Mark Everson, a Wick protege, that the agency's request for $12 million — a $5 million increase — for the Cultural Affairs Bureau was vulnerable. Worse, he said, highly-restrictive language would be put into the new funding bill "unless I get a letter today" committing Wick to end the bureau's financing of seminars and conferences.

Everson promised to "get the letter." He telephoned Wick and, without further ado, the director authorized the one-paragraph surrender. That satisfied Galbraith on the matter of the restrictive language. Nevertheless, Pell refused the $5 million funding increase. In doing so, the liberal Democrat was backed by moderate Republican Percy's unwritten policy to let him control committee actions on all USIA cultural programs (in return for which Pell supports Percy on some other committee matters).

Grants made over the past three years by the Cultural Affairs Bureau that so antagonized the Democrats included one for the Ethics and Public Policy Foundation, headed by conservative Ernest Lefever (who was blocked by the committee in 1981 when nominated by Reagan to head human rights at the State Department). Another controversial grant went to another conservative think-tank, the Claremont (Calif.) Institute for the Study of Statesmanship.

Whether such grants violated the bureau's spirit of non-partisanship is arguable, but Wick had recent precedent. Carter administration grants to labor unions, the Brookings Institution and other liberal outfits were routine. Wick remarked privately that he had approved the Lefever grant because a denial would have been "reverse McCarthyism."

Whether or not he erred, Wick's cave-in to Pell's demand that he give up the right to finance seminars that dare to discuss "contemporary political or economic issues" was a demand for abject surrender. The surrender document having been delivered, the appetite of the Senate's avid Reagan-baiters has been only whetted.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak write for Field Enterprises.

Though this cow in a San Angelo feedlot really isn't as rip-snorting angry as it appears, it had good reason to be, having spent Thursday outside in record-setting low temperatures. Early Thursday morning, San Angelo set a new all-time city record low of 1.4 degrees below zero. Things got a little warmer by mid-afternoon, but for some, it was still something to get steamed about.

Warming trend in sight for New Year

By The Associated Press

Temperature records toppled across the state again this morning as readings plunged into the teens as far south as Victoria, but forecasters predicted that the frigid weather would give way to seasonally mild temperatures for the New Year.

The mercury fell to 10 degrees at San Antonio this morning, breaking the all-time low for December of 11 degrees set Christmas Day. A reading of 8 degrees in Dallas broke a 66-year-old record for the date of 14 degrees.

Ironically, one city where the daily record low remained intact was at Amarillo, where the mercury hit 5 degrees at midnight, 3 degrees above the 1911 low for the date.

Twenty different temperature records have been broken so far this month in Amarillo.

Pre-dawn readings were below freezing statewide, but the National Weather Service predicted that temperatures would warm to the 30s and possibly 40s later today.

At 6 a.m., it was 8 at San Angelo, 9 at Amarillo, 10 at Abilene and Dallas, 13 at Lufkin, 19 at Austin, 20 at Houston, 15 at Victoria, 17 at El Paso, and 28 at McAllen.

"Actually, it looks like we're getting to a gradual warming trend ... up to where we'll have normal temperatures next week, and it should be dry period, with only chance of showers in East Texas on Monday," meterologist Michael Mach said Thursday night.

But the warm news was of little comfort to citrus growers, who estimate the cold hand of winter took up to $100 million worth of crops last weekend.

Insurance officials say the cold spell has caused more than $50 million in damages to homes and businesess — mostly as a result of broken water pipes and mains.

"Most of the damage has been to homes and businesses, mostly due to busting water pipes," said Carl Lee, a representative of the Insurance Information Institute. "The breaking pipes have caused a lot of water damage, and it becomes quite expensive to replace them."

He estimated the $50 million figure would climb, as the above-freezing temperatures thawed out and unveiled more damages.

Authorites also said the big freeze put a chill on illegal alien crossing the border, particularly in Texas, where most Border Patrol checkpoints are reporting a sharp dropoff in activity.

Border Patrol officials in Del Rio, where the temperature plunged to a record 20 degrees Thursday, said their apprehensions for the past week were the lowest since the Rio Grande River flooded in 1954.

"It's just too dadgum cold for 'em to hit that river," chief agent Jack L. Richardson said. "This is the most dramatic slowdown we've seen, and I've been in the Border Patrol for 30 years."

Richardson said agents in the Del Rio area had nabbed 175 aliens Dec. 23 and 122 the following day. But he said the number dropped to 75 Christmas Day and to 33 on Monday.

"I assume it's a combination of the cold and the holidays," said William H. Selzer, chief agent in Laredo, where the temperature was 24 Thursday. A guy crossing (the Rio Grande) and being soaking wet is very apt to be lying out there until spring, if a smuggler is not waiting for him."

Weather-related deaths, meanwhile, continued to climb, bringing the number of people killed to at least 36 since the arctic front began plaguing the Lone Star state on Dec. 18.

Cold weather causes thefts

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston's frigid weather has pushed up the city's auto theft rate because motorists are leaving their cars running but unattended so the vehicles remain warm, police say.

Lt. Bill Bradley of the Houston police auto theft division said the normal rate of 120 auto thefts a day has jumped by 20 or 25 cases daily as thieves race off with cars left unattended in driveways or outside convenience stores.

"They (motorists) come out and see their cars traveling down the street," Bradley said.

Houston has been shivering with the rest of the country with record low temperatures in the teens and 20s. The normal December high in the city is 63.

Bradley said thieves are camped out at stores, self-service gasoline stations and in neighborhoods "just waiting to hop in."

Texas businesses looking better

AUSTIN (AP) — Comptroller Bob Bullock says a survey of top Texas businesses shows retailing and manufacturing companies expect increased business in the first half of 1984 but construction, oil and gas and utility companies see a slower recovery from the economic decline.

"The results of this survey confirmed what we expected when we issued our latest revenue estimates in October," Bullock said in a statement Thursday.

"The survey shows retailers are coming back strong and expect to get stronger, while other parts of our state economy are looking at a slower climb."

Bullock said his survey of 300 top sales taxpayers showed that "Texas business expects to produce more, sell more, spend more and hire more during the first six months of 1984."

Bullock said his survey asked the 300 top taxpayers if they expect the first half of 1984 to be better, worse or the same as 1983. More than 70 percent of those who received questionnaires responded.

"A whopping 48 percent of them expect to hire more employees next year," Bullock said. "Eight out of 10 expect Texas business conditions to improve."

Other results of the survey were:

— Three quarters of those responding expect the Texas economy to perform at least as well as the nation as a whole.

— Three quarters expect the financial condition of their own companies to improve over the next six months.

— Sixty-five percent expect their profit picture to improve.

— Many construction firms, participants in a Texas building boom for the past 18 months, are expecting to reduce the number of employees now on their payrolls.

Hawks figure they belong

By Associated Press

Steve Largent has a simple answer for those who say the Seattle Seahawks should be glad just to be in their first NFL playoff.

"Baloney," says Largent, who has been a Seahawk since the club was enfranchised eight years ago.

Seattle, coming off a 31-7 victory over Denver last weekend in the American Conference wild-card playoff, faces the Miami Dolphins Saturday in one of two conference semifinals. The NFC counterpart sends Detroit against San Francisco.

Sunday, the Los Angeles Rams travel to Washington, and Pittsburgh meets the Raiders at Los Angeles.

"THIS IS just as important a game for us as it is for them," Largent says of the Dolphins. "If we lose, we get knocked out of the playoffs. We're going into the game with one idea — to win. Don't let anyone tell you differently."

Until this season, Largent, a three-time Pro Bowl selection, was the favorite receiver of quarterback Jim Zorn. But Zorn was benched this season in favor of four-year veteran Dave Krieg, who completed 12 of 13 passes for 200 yards and three touchdowns against Denver.

"Everybody expects them to win and everybody expects us to lose," Krieg said. "Well, we'll see."

Miami, AFC East champions with a 12-4 record and losers to Washington in last year's Super Bowl, were 7½ points favorites over the Seahawks, who finished the season 9-7.

The 49ers, winners of the NFC West with a 10-6 record, were 7-point favorites over the Lions, whose 9-7 record was best in the NFC Central. But Detroit running back Billy Sims says his club has something it never had before.

"Before this year, we didn't have the killer instinct," says Sims, who rushed for 1,040 yards this season despite missing four games with a broken hand.

SIMS RUSHED for a career-high 189 yards in Detroit's 23-20 victory over Green Bay this season, marking what Coach Monte Clark feels was "our turnaround." At that point, the club was 5-6 coming off a loss to Houston.

Quarterback Joe Montana leads the San Francisco attack. He passed for 3,910 yards and 26 touchdowns this season while rushing for 284 yards.

NFL Playoffs

Defending Super Bowl champion Washington had the best record in the NFL this year, 14-2, and won the NFC East. The Redskins are 9½-point favorites to beat the wild-card Rams, 9-7, who advanced to the conference semis by beating Dallas 24-17 last Monday.

Washington Coach Joe Gibbs' biggest problem will be injuries to his offensive linemen. All Pros Joe Jacoby and Russ Grimm have been sidelined during practice this week, as has center Jeff Bostic. They're expected to be ready Sunday, however.

The Redskins are led by the NFL's Most Valuable Player, quarterback Joe Theismann, and fullback John Riggins, who rushed for a career-high 1,347 yards. A revitalized Vince Ferragamo quarterbacked the Rams' upset of Dallas last week.

THE RAIDERS, 12-4 and winners of the AFC West, were favored by 7 points over Pittsburgh, champions of the AFC Central with a 10-6 record. The two clubs, archrivals in the AFC, have not met in the playoffs since 1976, but their 1972 meeting is the best remembered.

The Steelers won that game 13-7 when Franco Harris was recipient of what has become to be known as the "Immaculate Reception" touchdown pass. Harris is one of only four Steelers left from that club. Harris rushed for 1,007 yards this season, leaving him 362 yards shy of Jim Brown's all-time record.

Another 1972 holdover, quarterback Terry Bradshaw, is a doubtful starter for the game. Bradshaw has started only one game for the Steelers since undergoing elbow surgery in March.

The winners of the conference semifinals will meet Sunday, Jan. 8 to determine the who will play in Super Bowl XVIII at Tampa Stadium on Jan. 22.

Notre Dame holds off BC

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — The new year is still two days away, but Notre Dame coach Gerry Faust figures he already has a good start on 1984 after watching his Fighting Irish upend 13th-ranked Boston College 19-18 in the Liberty Bowl.

"This is a great start for 1984," beamed Faust, minutes after Thursday night's 19-18 victory in the 25th annual game. "We played a great football team tonight and I'm very proud we could come away with a victory. It was a team effort. This is the begining of something great."

The Irish utilized the talents of sophomore All-American Allen Pinkett, who rushed for 111 yards and two touchdowns, and junior Chris Smith, who added 104 rushing yards, to serve notice that 1984 could be their year.

"I feel really great with this victory," said Irish senior quarterback Blair Kiel, who hit on 11 of 19 passes for 151 yards, including a 14-yard scoring toss to flanker Alvin Miller.

WITH PINKETT and Miller featured in slashing runs, Notre Dame controlled the ball throughout the contest but still had to survive a late fourth-quarter threat before finishing its season with a 7-5 record.

Boston College quarterback Doug Flutie completed 16 of 37 passes for 287 yards and three touchdowns despite temperatures hovering around 10 degrees and a wind chill factor of zero to capture the game's MVP award and almost lead the 9-3 Eagles to victory.

Iowa-Florida gird for frigid Gator Bowl conflict tonight

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Iowa's Hayden Fry and Florida's Charley Pell managed to joke about the cold weather forecast for tonight's 39th annual Gator Bowl, but both admitted they're concerned about team preparations for the nationally televised battle.

"I don't think I've ever gone into a game with as much concern about the lack of preparation as this one," said Fry, whose 9-2 and tenth-ranked Hawkeyes meet the No. 11 Gators at 7 p.m.

"That's not to say that we'll lose the game, but it does mean we have left out a lot of hard work," Fry continued. "I'll assure you we will be rested, relaxed and ready to go. How long we'll be able to go, I don't know."

Record-low temperatures and rainy weather forced both teams to practice indoors most of the week. Fry said the Hawkeyes were able to hold one workout outdoors, while Florida managed two.

Forecasters predicted the mercury will dip into the 20s or lower 30s by gametime, and that brisk gusts could create a wind-chill factor of close to zero.

Pell, whose team carries a 8-2-1 record and hopes of finishing in the Top 10 for the first time, has wavered back-and-forth on the possible effect of adverse weather.

On Wednesday, he indicated cold weather would favor Iowa. Thursday, he backed off, saying it wouldn't mean "a hill of beans."

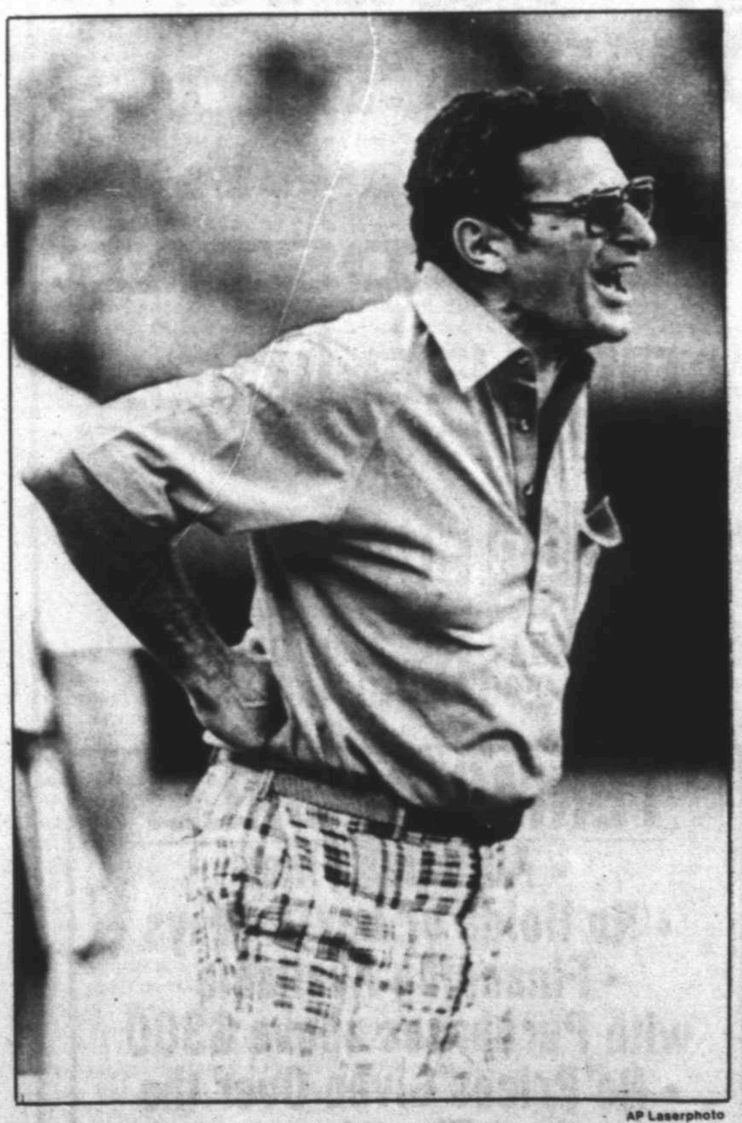

"Both teams will have to play in it," the Florida coach said. "We'll just have to line up, kickoff and see what happens."

Oddsmakers have rated Florida, led by senior quarterback Wayne Peace, a three-point favorite, but Fry and Pell predictably are calling it a tossup.

"I think you'll see two of the best teams in the country . . . " said Fry, whose Hawkeyes dropped decisions to Big Ten foes Illinois and Michigan. "I don't normally brag on my team, but they've earned it."

Junior quarterback Chuck Long, a unanimous all-Big Ten selection, directs the Iowa offense, a balanced unit that's averaged 208.5 yards per game on the ground and 279.2 through the air.

Dave Moritz — 50 receptions for 912 yards — is Long's favorite target, and Eddie Phillips and Owen Gill have contributed 740 and 715 yards, respectively, to a solid ground game.

Next Year here for NC State

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. — Next year has arrived early for North Carolina State, last season's surprise champion of college basketball, which is victoriously marching to a tune any general would love.

The Wolfpack lost three heroes from the starting five that shocked the Final Four last April, so 1983-84 was supposed to be a rebuilding year.

But, buoyed by the inside play of muscular forward Lorenzo Charles and the deadly outside shooting of guard Terry Gannon, North Carolina State has established itself solidly in the Top Twenty and is winning at a pace that has even their wise-cracking coach, Jim Valvano, surprised.

"I am very proud of this team. They've shocked me, to be honest with you," Valvano said. "I don't think anybody was wrong when the people didn't put us in the top 20, when they picked us to be in the lower half of our conference. I would have done the same thing."

N.C. State was conspicuously absent from most preseason polls, even picked to finish fifth in the Atlantic Coast Conference. The reasons were simple.

Thurl Bailey, the smooth-shooting forward, became the first-round choice of the Utah Jazz of the National Basketball Association. Point guard Sidney Lowe, who controlled the pulse of the Wolfpack attack, moved on to the Indiana Pacers. Dereck Whittenburg also went to the NBA, although he was cut after a brief trial with the Phoenix Suns.

Even Valvano was loathe to push his defending champs for preseason honors.

"Given the fact that we lost those guys and given the fact that our schedule is still tough, I didn't think I was low-keying anything by saying 'Hey, I don't think we're going to be all that good,'" Valvano said. "But, as I also said, that was the only bad news I had."

Actually, Valvano was thinking of big things in 1984-85, when recruits such as Chris Washburn, John Thompson and Nate McMillan would join Charles and Gannon as the nucleus for another title attempt.

"I thought next year and in the following years, we would be one of the top teams in the country, given these kids got experience and the kids we've got coming next year," he said.

So far, this year hasn't been bad.

It started with a 76-64 victory over Houston in the Hall of Fame Classic at Springfield, Mass., a rematchy of last year's national championship game — and one Valvano had been advised to avoid.

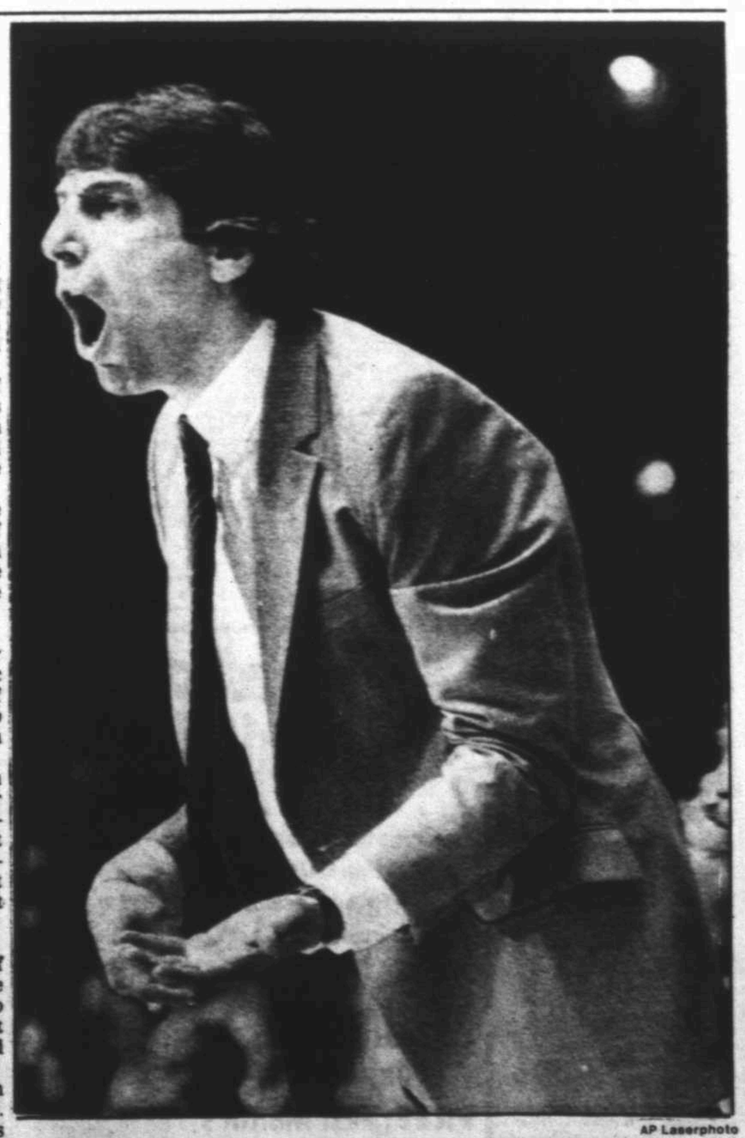

"People said, 'Why play Houston again?' I said 'Why not?' Last year was last year. This is this year," Valvano said. "People aren't intelligent enough to realize that one has nothing to do with the other. So what happens? We go and win again. That was fun, too."

THERE FOLLOWED a sweep of the Great Alaska Shootout and five consecutive victories before losses to Virginia Tech and Louisville. At midweek, the Wolfpack was 8-2 and ranked 13th in the nation.

"I scratch my head and I say ... I'm proud of 'em," said Valvano. "They're overachievers. The sum is probably a little better now than the parts."

Not everything this season has been sublime for the darlings of this basketball-mad tobacco town.

BC tries Indiana next

College Basketball

By Associated Press

It's bowl season for college football players and tournament time for the basketball teams. For some schools, there's action on both fronts.

While Boston College was losing to Notre Dame in the Liberty Bowl Thursday night, the Eagles' basketball players were in the Hoosier Classic. Their minds weren't totally on filling the basket as they downed Iowa State to move into the tournament final against host Indiana, which belted Ball State 86-43.

Top-ranked North Carolina had no such problem. The football team plays in today's Peach Bowl game against Florida State, but the Tar Heels weren't distracted on the Madison Square Garden court where they downed No. 8 St. John's 64-51 to win the Holiday Festival.

In other games involving ranked teams, No. 6 Maryland beat Randolph-Macon 58-52 in the opening round of the Maryland Invitational and will take on La Salle, a 65-64 victory over George Washington, in the title game; No. 11 Georgia struggled to beat Xavier 73-70; No. 17 Memphis State survived a slowdown by Mississippi State for a 43-42 triumph and a berth in the finals of the Winston Tire Holiday Classic against Iowa, which squeezed past host Southern California 62-61, and No. 19 Oregon State belted Washington State 79-57 to move into the finals of the Far West Classic against Oregon, which beat Gonzaga 72-52.

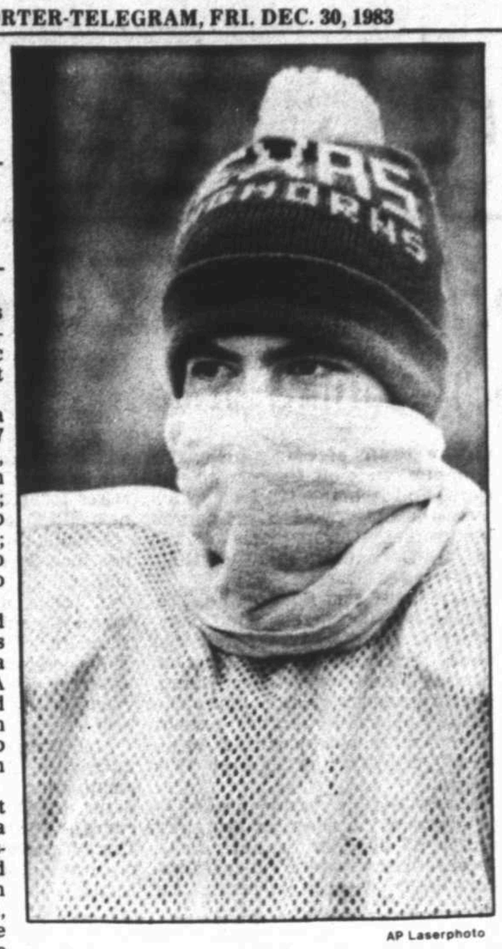

In tournament finals, Nevada-Reno captured its own Wolf Pack Classic by defeating San Diego 70-66; George Mason beat Wagner 89-77 to win the Utica College-Matt's Classic; host Providence downed previously unbeaten Temple 65-59 to win the Fleet Bank Classic; Oklahoma beat Arkansas-Little Rock 87-62 to win the All-College tournament, and Connecticut took its own Mutual Classic with a 66-60 victory over Arizona.

The Cotton States Classic was won by hometown Georgia Tech, 57-54 over Alabama; the Rochester Classic title went to Northeastern, an 87-72 victor over St. Bonaventure; host Wyoming beat Loyola, Calif., 69-51 to take the Cowboys Shootout; SW Louisiana won the Sugar Bowl, 54-45 over Kansas, and the UNCC Holiday Classic was captured by North Carolina A&T, which beat North Carolina-Wilmington 65-54.

In first rounds of tourneys, it was Oklahoma State 89, Wisconsin 84 and host Dayton 78, Yale 57 in the Merrill Lynch Classic; host Toledo 70, Army 47 and Lamar 78, Eastern Michigan 70 in triple overtime in the Blade-Grass City Classic; Santa Clara 85, Alaska-Anchorage 66, and Ohio State 64, St Joseph's 61 in the Cable Car Classic; Virginia 65, Washington 61, and host San Diego State 80, East Tennessee State 58 in the Cabrillo Classic.

It was host Stetson 74, Central Florida 58, and South Carolina 55, Cincinnati 49 in the Citrus Bowl Classic; Eastern Illinois 73, Eastern Montana 66, and Illinois-Chicago 78, Brown 65 in the KOA Classic;Georgia Southern 60, Mississippi 58, and hometown Tennessee-Chattanooga 87, Rice 61 in the Krystal Classic; host New Mexico 74, Idaho State 53, and Bowling Green 59, California 58 in the Lobo Invitational.

Also, Southeast Louisiana whipped Northwest Louisiana 90-66, and host Northeasten Louisiana took Jackson State 74-61 in the Pacemaker Classic; it was Richmond 61, Virginia Tech 56, and Virginia Commonwealth 83, Old Dominion 51 in the Richmond Times-Dispatch Tourney; Siena 61, Dartmouth 52, and Ohio 68, Manhattan 57 in the Siena Classic; Texas 62, Utah 61, and Weber State 83, Cal-Irvine 65 in the Utah Classic, and in the Rainbow Classic, it was Southern Methodist 77, Alabama-Birmingham 63 and host Hawaii 73, Tennessee 60.

UT kicker Trey Brady bundles up against cold during work out for Monday's Cotton Bowl game against Georgia.

Leiding serves foe fair warning

DALLAS (AP) — Texas linebacker Jeff Leiding spotted Georgia quarterback John Lastinger at a Cotton Bowl party this week, walked over to him, and whispered "I hate quarterbacks."

Lastinger, a senior, has never had much respect from opponents or even some Georgia fans during his career and it didn't bother him at all.

"Leiding's just nuts," Lastinger said matter of factly.

Lastinger can always point to the bottom line: 19-2-1 in games he has started. The only losses were to Penn State in last year's Sugar bowl and to Auburn this season.

He'll be starting against the unbeaten, untied No. 2 ranked Texas Longhorns Monday in he 42nd annual Cotton Bowl Classic for the No. 7 rated 9-1-1 Bulldogs.

"I've had my ups and downs," said Lastinger. "This is my last game. It's important to go out on a winning note."

He said, "I've been booed at times but everything has worked out pretty well. This season has been most rewarding as we proved we could win without Herschel Walker in the lineup. I felt I've played pretty good."

Lastinger lost his job earlier this season to Todd Williams. He got it back when Williams was knocked cold with the score tied 10-10 against South Carolina.

Georgia went on to win 31-13 and Lastinger kept the job the rest of the season.

"Coach (Vince) Dooley called me into his office before the next game and told me that if I did start there was going to be a lot of pressure on me to do well," Lastinger said. "I thought I did pretty well."

He said pressure nevers bother him.

"I'm not the wall-punching type," he said.

Lastinger said he doesn't hold any grudges against his detractors.

"I'm not bitter toward anyone," he said. "They might not like me but who cares? I know who my friends are."

Lastinger said when he was being booed he just told himself the fans were actually cheering for him.

He faces perhaps his toughest test as a quarterback against a Texas team which ranks No. 1 in the country in total defense.

"They have big, strong, good athletes," he said. "Their secondary is just great.

"Normally, you look forward to passing against a secondary playing man-for-man defense. However, rarely do they get beat for big plays."

OSU defense faced best

Bluebonnet

HOUSTON (AP) — Oklahoma State's highly praised defense has confronted murderous Big Eight offenses from Nebraska to Oklahoma but the Cowboys haven't seen anything like the multi-faceted offense of Baylor, Saturday's opponent in the 25th Bluebonnet Bowl.

"I haven't seen an offense like Baylor's that can run and pass that well," said Cowboys defensive tackle Rodney Harding. "Nebraska is a better running team. They'll just wear you down and then hit you with a pass.

"But with Baylor, first we have to stop the run and then concentrate on the pass. You've got to be prepared both ways."

Senior running back Alfred Anderson is Baylor's primary running thrust and he hasn't escaped the eye of the Cowboys in game films.

"We have a goal to stop each running back each week and this week it's Alfred Anderson," Harding said. "He's a good back. He can run over you or he can slash."

Anderson finished the season second among Southwest Conference rushers with 1,046 yards on 231 carries, despite missing one game with a sprained ankle.

The Cowboys also will be confronted with a trio of quarterbacks, freshmen Cody Carlson and Tom Muecke and senior Allen Rice.

Defensive back Chris Rockins doesn't see the rotating quarterbacks as a problem however.

"I'm going to play the receiver, not the quarterback," Rockins said.

Carlson is the Bears' deep threat, Muecke is adept at the intermidiate routes and Rice is the team's goalline quarterback. Carlson ranks fourth in the nation in passing efficiency.

"Their offense is kind of scary," Cowboys linebacker Matt Monger said. "With most teams, you can weight their strengths but they are so balanced they can hurt you passing or throwing."

Oklahoma State has ample weapons to combat the Bears offense that led the SWC and ranked 20th in the nation in total offense.

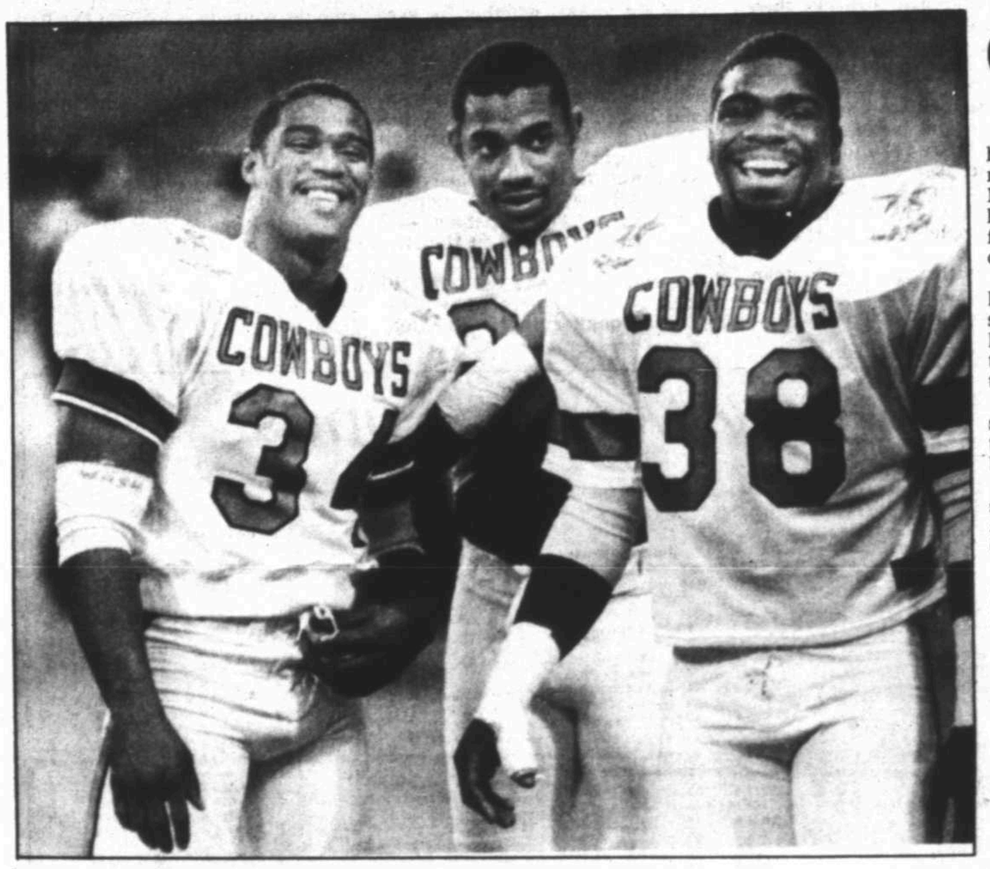

Safety Adam Hinds is among the national interception leaders with seven thefts. As a team, Oklahoma State has picked off 26 enemy passes this season.

Monger, the team's leading tackler, says pressuring the quarterback has assisted in the thefts.

"Some games all we do is blitze and others, times we don't blitze at all," Monger said. "It's varied from time to time."

Oklahoma State carries a 7-4 record that includes one-point losses to Kansas State and Oklahoma and a four-point deficit to No. 1 ranked Nebraska. Baylor, picked eighth in the SWC, is 7-3-1.

Kickoff is at 7 p.m. CST.

Wilkins led all scorers with 16 points, while White added 14 for UTC.

Forward Tony Barnett had 15 points for Rice, now 4-4. Ivan Petitt added 13 and Terrence Cashaw had 10.

Texas triumphs

The Wildcats defeated Cal State-Irvine 83-65.

Carlton Cooper led Texas with 14 points. Marcus Bolden added 14 while Dennis Perryman had 11 and David Seitz finished with 9 each.

Angelo Robinson led the Utes with 17 points and Manuel Hendrix chipped in 14. The victory improved the record of Texas, a Southwest Conference team, to 4-5 for the year. while Utah, of the Western Athletic Conference, fell to 4-6.

Trouble at UH

HOUSTON (AP) — University of Houston forward Benny Anders, who quit the school's basketball team, says the highly ranked Cougars must get over selfishness if they are going to be winners.

"What this team is going to have to do is start playing with each other instead of playing against each other," Anders said Thursday.

"They are going to have to come together as a basketball team. This basketball team is going to have to cut out some of the selfishness that this basketball team has carried the past two years."

Anders lost his starting role this season to freshman Ricky Winslow.

Bulls win 7th straight

NBA

By Associated Press

Despite a 14-point deficit entering the final quarter, the Chicago Bulls were not to be denied their seventh straight victory.

"We had to make it hard for them to score in the last quarter and we had to score at every opportunity," Coach Kevin Loughery said after the Bulls defeated Portland 100-99 by outscoring the Trail Blazers 34-19 in the final period. The Bulls are now 12-14 after a 5-14 start.

Guard Quintin Dailey, who lost his starting spot to rookies Mitchell Wiggins and Ennis Whatley just before the winning streak started, hit five of six shots and scored 12 points in the fourth period to lead the rally. He was 1-for-6 from the field before the fourth quarter and finished with 14 points.

"I get to see a lot from the bench and it helps me," Dailey said. "The openings were there and I felt good late. Early in the game, I was pretty mad."

Nuggets 101, 76ers 89

At Denver, the high-scoring Nuggets registered their second-lowest point total of the season, but they also allowed the fewest to hand Philadelphia only its sixth loss in 27 games. Dan Issel scored 28 points and Alex English 23 for Denver, which snapped its five-game losing streak. The 76ers had won six in a row before the loss.

Julius Erving scored 14 points for the 76ers, leaving him seven short of the 25,000 mark in his pro career.

Spurs 138, Kings 127

San Antonio got 44 points from George Gervin to give Bob Bass a home victory over Kansas City in the first game of his third stint as Spurs coach.

Rockets 107, Celtics 94

The Rockets, playing before a sellout crowd of 16,016 at Houston, beat Boston behind Ralph Sampson's 27 points. The Celtics fell behind 66-45 at halftime, but Larry Bird scored 12 of his 25 points in the third quarter to help Boston cut the deficit to 81-78. But Sampson hit three baskets during a 10-1 Rockets spurt that gave them a 98-86 lead with 4:04 left.

Cavaliers 88, Hawks 77

Cleveland snapped a six-game losing streak and held Atlanta to the lowest point total in the NBA this season. World B. Free scored 23 points and rookie Paul Thompson 20 for the Cavaliers, who were one of three teams who had scored the previous season-low of 83 points.

Cleveland led by as many as 28 points in the second quarter and still had a 21-point margin after three periods, but the Cavaliers equalled an NBA season-low of nine points in the fourth quarter to let Atlanta make the final margin respectable.

Greenwood girls lose

San Angelo Lake View went two overtimes to defeat Greenwood's Girls, 65-64, Thursday night at Greenwood.

Belinda Duke scored 22 points to lead the Ranger girls.

Lake View raised its record to 13-2 while Greenwood is 11-3.

Next Year arrives for NC State

Center Cozell McQueen played some of his best basketball in the NCAA championships, but has not produced consistently. He is averaging 5.5 points a game.

Guards Gannon and Anthony "Spud" Webb are too short in today's tall world of backcourt basketball at 6-feet and 5-7, respectively, although Lowe and Whittenburg weren't much taller themselves. Valvano would likely be starting 6-4 sophomore Ernie Myers, but a shooting slump has limited Myers to spot duty.

At the forward spot opposite Charles, Valvano has alternated a pair of freshmen, Bennie Bolton and Russell Pierre. Both have shown signs of future brilliance, but neither has been steady enough to secure a starting role.

"I think I'm wise enough to know that we can't know where we want to go with a 5-7 guard and a 6-foot guard in the backcourt unless they were both jets," Valvano said. "Ernie's got to get back into the flow of things, he's got to get back on his game, and I've got to have his confidence back for the long haul.

"We're playing with inconsistency at four of the five positions and we're (8-2). I very easily could be talking to you with a 3-6 team and no one would get upset, either. Of course, I'm thrilled, but I'm not misled by that because we're not solid, we're not consistent in those areas."

VALVANO AND the Wolfpack learned in an 89-65 loss to Virginia Tech that they avoid run-and-gun basketball this year if they are to survive. But they also learned, in their 83-79 loss to Louisville, that Charles — the hero of the championship game with his last-second slam-dunk — can be an intimidating force. Charles scored a career-high 29 points and grabbed 14 rebounds, and said he's just beginning to play the way he knows he can.

"It's been there all along," a quiet Charles said when asked about his talents. "When Dereck, Sidney and Thurl were here, we had three great scorers. We just needed people to do other things like rebound and play defense."

Charles is second in the ACC at 20.1 points per game, sixth with a 60 percent field goal percentage and fourth in rebounding at 9.2.

"Lorenzo Charles is becoming an outstanding player," Valvano said. "That was critical for this year. He had to do that without Sidney and Dereck. He had to do it against people who are keying on him ... he's appeared to blossom. He's only gonna get better."

Webb has made up in talent what he lacks in height. He has produced 10 points a game and, yes, he can dunk. In the loss to Louisville, he closed out the Wolfpack scoring with a one-handed jam.

"I can't complain about the way I've been playing. Terry and Lorenzo are scoring and I want to take the load off them," Webb said. "There was pressure in coming in behind Sid because he was so good. When I came, I tried to see how the team was playing and I tried to blend in that way."

Gannon made his mark last year when the ACC experimented with a three-point field goal from behind a 19-foot arc. The three-pointer is gone, but Gannon still is firing from long range, hitting more than half his field-goal attempts and averaging 14.6 points a game. He, too, is surprised by the beginning.

" We had some good, young players. I thought it would take a little while longer because some young teams don't have the poise it takes to play in the big games," Gannon said. "That's the key. I think we've had that poise."

POISE CARRIES teams a great distance, as Valvano has discovered. Thus, last season's odyssey to Albuquerque has spawned a new motto — survive and advance.

"You don't go into it thinking, 'Well, I can't win it ...'" the coach said. "Play the game you're playing, and if you survive that, you advance. That's what we did last year without really having that philosophy."

This season, Valvano said, he wants to make the NCAA tournament by winning 20 games and finishing in the top four in the ACC; take the ACC tournament championship; then, survive and advance.

Ecuador cutting oil prices 70 cents

Abu Dhabi reportedly cutting prices

NEW YORK (AP) — Ecuador is cutting its oil price by 70 cents, to $27.50 a barrel, and a report from Tokyo says Abu Dhabi is knocking as much as 24 cents off its price.

The action by Ecuador and the reported move by Abu Dhabi are signs of a weak oil market in which exporters are struggling to avoid a broad decline in prices. Despite conflicting signs now, many analysts think the exporters will succeed.

Ecuador is the second-smallest producer in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. Abu Dhabi is one of the sheikhdoms in the United Arab Emirates, which is a major OPEC producer and one of the cartel's most powerful members.

Ecuador's price cut is an adjustment to "market conditions," said Alfredo Garcia, a marketing official of CEPE, Ecuador's national oil company. It takes effect Sunday.

Last Aug. 19, Ecuador raised its price by 70 cents, to $28.20 a barrel.

In a telephone interview from CEPE headquarters in Quito on Thursday, Garcia said the price cut was "Ecuador's decision," although the other 12 OPEC members were notified. Price changes normally are made only after formal approval by the full cartel.

No other OPEC member has officially cut prices since OPEC cut its benchmark price, around which all members' prices are arranged, by $5 last March to $29 a barrel.

Earlier this week, two American oil refiners rescinded a $1.50-a-barrel cut in their offering price for domestic crude oil. Citgo Petroleum Corp. and Ashland Oil Inc., which were the only two U.S. refiners to reduce their offering prices to $28.50 in mid-December, restored their prices to $30 a barrel.

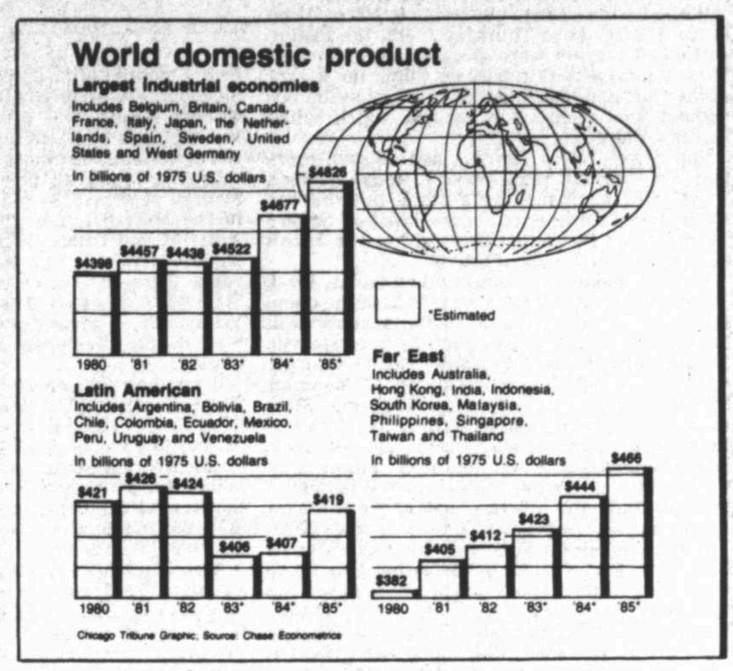

Garcia also said Ecuador was producing 243,000 barrels of oil daily, which is 43,000 more than allowed under terms of OPEC's production-sharing agreement of last March. That agreement, which limits the output of each member except Saudi Arabia, was reaffirmed at an OPEC conference earlier this month.

Garcia said his country needed to produce more than its assigned quota of 200,000 barrels daily because "our domestic (oil consumption) needs are growing faster." He added that Ecuador probably would ask that its production quota be raised to 250,000 barrels a day at the next OPEC conference.

Ecuador's production amounts to less than 2 percent of OPEC's total output.

In Tokyo, meanwhile, a Japanese business publication, Nihon Keizai Shimbun, reported that the Persian Gulf sheikhdom of Abu Dhabi was lowering the price of some of its crude oil by liberalizing payment terms.

Abu Dhabi, the main oil-producing state in the United Arab Emirates, is lengthening the payment period to between 45 and 60 days from the current 30 days, the report said. That effectively lowers the purchase price by between 12 and 24 cents a barrel.

Social Security, federal income tax changes begin Sunday

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, members of Congress, judges and other top federal officials will start paying Social Security taxes Sunday as part of the plan enacted last year to shore up the system's sagging finances.

Vice President George Bush and all top political appointees will also be required to pay the payroll tax, along with all new federal workers hired starting Sunday. Coverage also becomes mandatory for all non-profit organizations and their employees, including hospital and school workers.

The tax rate an employee pays is 6.7 percent on the first $37,800 of income.

Also taking effect Sunday is the last chunk of the Reagan administration's four-step cut in federal income taxes. The final 5 percent cut leaves the typical American with a 23 percent lower tax bite than when the program began on Oct. 1, 1981.

But the cut won't show up in the amount withheld from your paycheck. The third and final reduction in withholding — 10 percent — came last July 1; and that mid-year adjustment accounted for both last January's cut as well as the upcoming drop in actual tax rates.

Several changes are in store in 1984 for millions of Americans who contribute to Social Security or draw benefits from the $170 billion retirement and disability program.

Starting with benefits received in 1984, some retirees will have to pay income tax on half their Social Security for the first time. They will be hit by the tax if their adjusted gross income, plus half their benefits, plus any tax-exempt interest from municipal bonds or other sources, exceeds $25,000 for an individual or $32,000 for a married couple filing jointly.

The 36 million beneficiaries will get a 3.5 percent cost-of-living increase in their Jan. 3 checks, their first increase in 18 months. It was delayed six months as part of the compromise plan to rescue the system.

Reagan could be both Social Security taxpayer and beneficiary. The law allows those 70 and older to draw benefits regardless of income. Reagan, 72, became eligible last January when the age at which no income test applies dropped from 72 to 70.

Reagan said through a spokesman at the time that he was interested in using his benefits to help reduce the national debt.

It is not known whether he ever applied for those benefits, which could amount to more than $700 a month. "I don't know if he ever filed," Social Security spokesman James Brown said. "Everybody has to file to get benefits. You have to fill out a form."

As part of the Social Security rescue plan, the payroll tax on employers will climb from 6.7 percent to 7 percent on Jan. 1, also on the first $37,800 of an employee's pay.

For employees, the tax bite will remain at the 6.7 percent in 1984. But in a bookkeeping transaction, the Treasury will transfer an amount equal to a 0.3 percent payroll tax from its books into Social Security's coffers.

Democrats on the National Commission on Social Security Reform balked at raising taxes on workers in 1984, so they settled on the bookkeeping device of giving workers a one-time 0.3 percent tax credit in 1984 while keeping their payroll tax at 6.7 percent. Workers will not have to file for the credit. It will be handled entirely as a transaction between the Treasury and Social Security.

SW Bell bills already reflecting changes

At the stroke of midnight on Dec. 31, the dismantling of AT&T — the world's largest corporation — will be quietly completed. It will be the end of the nationwide Bell System, but just the beginning of the new Southwestern Bell Corp.

"This event will shake the foundation of telecommunications in the United States, but for the individual customer it will mean one thing. Customers will need to begin thinking of their telephone service as pieces belonging to several different companies," said Darlene Gifford, manager-community relations for Southwestern Bell Telephone.

For instance, customer bills are already reflecting the change brought about by the breakup. While the new statements break out components of telephone service, customers will continue to receive one bill for services provided by the Bell System and make only one payment to Southwestern Bell.

Customers' will notice a separate page for local service provided by Southwestern Bell. This charge is for connections to the local and long distance networks and additional network services such as Custom Calling.

"Leased telephone equipment will be listed on a separate page because ownership of all Southwestern Bell-leased equipment will be transferred to AT&T Information Systems on Jan. 1, 1984," Gifford said. "Customers already should have received information about leasing or purchasing their equipment from AT&T Information Systems. All questions should be referred to the telephone number on the statement page.

Long distance charges will be split into two categories according to Gifford. One category will be for toll calls made within Southwestern Bell's (Midland-Odessa or Lubbock or Amarillo or Abilene) LATA (local access transport area) which includes Big Spring, Kermit, Terminal and other nearby cities.

Another page will be for long distance calls made between one of the 15 Texas or 161 LATAs nationwide. Those calls will be listed on a separate statement page and reflect charges by AT&T Communications. Southwestern Bell will no longer provide inter-LATA telephone service.

Southwestern Bell will continue to repair problems in telephone lines at no charge. However, customers will need to determine if the trouble is in the equipment or on the line.

Because AT&T will own the equipment once leased from Southwestern Bell, they will be responsible for its maintenance. Customers will be charged for repairs if the equipment is out of warranty; questions about equipment from non-Bell suppliers should be referred to the vendor or manufacturer.

If a customer calls Southwestern Bell for repair service and the problem is found to be in the equipment leased from AT&T and not on the line, there will be a charge for the repair visit.

"Customers need to become more informed about their telephone service," Gifford said. "That's why we've undertaken a major informational advertising campaign over the last month in addition to information in our regular bill inserts."

Pennzoil chief does not want bidding war

NEW YORK (AP) — The chairman of Pennzoil Co. says his company's $1.6 billion offer for 20 percent of the larger Getty Oil Co. is not designed to trigger a bidding war or set up a merger, but he won't say much beyond that.

Analysts say they are unsure of Pennzoil's long-term objective in seeking to buy up to 16 million of Getty's 79.1 million outstanding shares for $100 apiece. Getty's stock soared $19.62½, to $100 a share Wednesday in heavy trading on the New York Stock Exchange.

Pennzoil, an energy and mining company based in Houston, said its aim is to help restructure Getty, a Los Angeles-based company three times bigger than Pennzoil. The main source of income for both companies is oil and natural gas production.

Pennzoil chairman J. Hugh Liedtke said in a telephone interview Wednesday his company is seeking "a long-term position" in Getty, the nation's 14th largest oil company, and that Pennzoil wants neither a bidding war nor a merger with Getty.

"We're not fast-buck operators," Liedtke said.

He declined to say exactly what Pennzoil had in mind as a restructuring plan for Getty, but said it would be broad — "like a shotgun shell that has many BBs in it."

Liedtke would not describe his objections to Getty's current operating strategy, but alluded to Getty's recent inclination to stray outside the oil business.

"I worry about management skills getting a little thin when you get into areas that you know nothing about," he said.

Besides its interests in coal, gold and other mining operations, Getty owns ERC Corp., an insurance firm based in Overland Park, Kan., and in 1981 bought a 50 percent interest in Entertainment and Sports Programming Network, an all-sports cable television network.

Getty is under fire from the beneficiaries of the J. Paul Getty fortune to change its course back into the oil business.

Liedtke declined to say whether his company is siding with Gordon P. Getty and Harold Williams in their fight with Getty management. He stressed he had not discussed the $1.6 billion offer with any of the Getty parties and that Pennzoil was acting independently of them.

But he said he intends to meet with Gordon Getty soon.

Gordon Getty, son of the late billionaire J. Paul Getty, is sole trustee of the Sarah C. Getty Trust, which controls 31.8 million shares, or 40.2 percent, of Getty's stock.

Williams is president of the J. Paul Getty Trust and the J. Paul Getty Museum, which together control 9.3 million shares, or 11.8 percent of the Getty stock.

Gordon Getty wants the company to focus more on its oil business.

Getty management had sought to have him replaced as trustee of the Sarah C. Getty Trust, but on Wednesday it announced it had dropped that effort. Getty said it backed off to "facilitate the resolution of these disputes." Getty said Pennzoil's offer had nothing to do with its decision.

MGF plans to contest lawsuit

MGF Oil Corp. said Thursday it plans to "vigorously contest" a lawsuit filed Dec. 23 by two of the company's bondholders in United States District Court in Dallas.

While he would not discuss the case, Dick McMillan, attorney for MGF, said the company was presently preparing a reply to the lawsuit. McMillian said MGF had 20 days, from the time the company was formally notified of the lawsuit, in which to reply.

The plaintiffs in the lawsuit are Richard Carpenter, trustee, and Robert Gulick. Other defendants in the lawsuit are MGF International Finance, N.V., a wholly owned subsidiary of MGF and the trustee for the 14.25 percent debenture (bonds not secured by mortgage or collateral) holders.

Dollar lower, gold steady

LONDON (AP) — The dollar fell on foreign exchange markets early today on the final trading day of 1983. Gold bullion prices were steady.

Traders said the dollar was under pressure from Thursday's Commerce Department report of a 0.4 percent decline in the U.S. Index of Leading Economic Indicators in November, the first monthly drop in the index since August 1982.

The report reinforced market sentiment that the U.S. economic recovery is leveling off and interest rates will come down. Higher rates make dollar-denominated investments more attractive.

In Tokyo, the dollar ended the year at 232 Japanese yen, down from 233.32 yen late Thursday. Last Friday, the dollar closed at 234.10 yen. On Jan. 4, the first trading day of 1983 on the Tokyo exchange, the dollar was quoted at 229.75 yen.

In London, the British pound edged up to $1.4490 in early trading, compared with $1.4462 Thursday.

Other mid-morning dollar rates compared with late Thursday included:

—2.7238 West German marks, down from 2.7300.

—2.1785 Swiss francs, down from 2.1805.

—8.3375 French francs, down from 8.3500.

—3.0600 Dutch guilders, down from 3.0655.

—1,657.50 Italian lire, down from 1,663.

—1.2445 Canadian dollars, unchanged.

Gold bullion trading in Europe also was lifeless, with morning prices varying only marginally from the previous day.

London's five main bullion houses fixed a recommended mid-morning gold price of $381.50 an ounce, unchanged from the opening bid and down 50 cents from late Thursday.

In Zurich, the metal also was bid at $381.50, compared with Thursday's late rate of $382.25.

Earlier in Hong Kong, gold rose $2.73 to finish at a bid of $384.01.

Silver was quoted in London at $8.90 an ounce, down from $8.935 late Thursday.

The Southwestern Bell Telephone guide to changes in business telephone service.

When the Bell System splits up and Southwestern Bell Telephone becomes an independent company, there will be some changes in the way we do business together. The biggest change is that the phones you now lease from Southwestern Bell Telephone will become the property of AT&T. Here's a look at what you can expect.

TELEPHONE EQUIPMENT.
If you want to continue leasing the equipment you now have—from single line telephones to complex equipment—you'll hardly notice a change. In fact, there will be nothing for you to do. You'll simply lease from AT&T instead of Southwestern Bell Telephone. If you call Southwestern Bell Telephone to inquire about this equipment between now and the first of the year, we'll refer you to AT&T.

Of course, you'll still have the option of purchasing new equipment from a variety of suppliers. In fact, Southwestern Bell Corporation has formed a subsidiary, Southwestern Bell Telecom, which, beginning next year, will market telecommunications equipment and services.

REPAIR SERVICE.
Because AT&T will own the equipment you once leased from Southwestern Bell Telephone, they will be responsible for its maintenance. Telephone equipment that you may have purchased from Southwestern Bell Telephone or AT&T will also be serviced by AT&T. But you'll be charged for repairs if your equipment is out of warranty. Repair of equipment purchased from companies other than Bell should be referred to the original vendor or manufacturer.

TROUBLE ON THE LINE.
Here's an important point to keep in mind. Southwestern Bell Telephone will continue to repair problems in your telephone lines at no charge. We're still responsible for the telephone network that enables you to complete calls. In fact, when you want to establish service, please continue to call us first, just like always.

However, if you call Southwestern Bell Telephone for repair service and the problem is found to be in the equipment you lease from AT&T and not on the line, there will be a charge if our technicians make a repair visit. And we won't be authorized to repair this equipment. So it's important that you try to determine if your trouble is in the equipment or on the line.

ABOUT THE BILL.
When the Bell System breaks up, your bill won't split with it. In most cases, you'll still get one monthly bill from Southwestern Bell Telephone for services previously provided by the Bell System.

Since different companies will provide different parts of your service, however, your bill will be broken out by suppliers on separate pages. For example, charges for leased equipment from AT&T will be on one page. Long distance calls placed within your local area and handled by Southwestern Bell Telephone will be shown on one page, while long distance provided by other companies will be shown on another.* Special telephone numbers will be on the bill in case you have questions.

WE WANT YOU TO KNOW.
These and other changes will affect the way we do business together. So please watch for more details in your bill insert and in ads like this. If you have questions about the breakup of the Bell System, call us toll-free at 1 800 555-5000. If you have specific questions about your telephone service, you should continue to call your Southwestern Bell Telephone Business Office.

*If you have long distance or other services from companies other than AT&T or Southwestern Bell Telephone, you will receive a separate bill from them.

Crime Stoppers' success alters Silent Witness program

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — For as long as there have been irresponsible citizens breaking the law, others have been ready to give information to help with their arrest - often for a fee.

Odessa Crime Stoppers, using tried-and-true methods and reenactments of specific crimes to refresh the minds of potential informants, has aided law enforcement in clearing 43 cases during its first six months' operations.

"Police officers have paid for information since police work began," said Odessa Police Sgt. Milton Tharp. "Now it's an organized reward fund."

Before the advent of organizations such as Crime Stoppers and Silent Witness (used in Midland), money for information often came from the officer's own pocket, said Tharp.

Donations and fund-raising efforts by its citizen board bankrolls Crime Stoppers, which pays up to $1,000 for information. Cases which Crime Stoppers' information helped solve have netted $9,459 in recovered property and $2,397 in confiscated narcotics.

Midland is preparing to change its unit's name to Crime Stoppers and begin using reenactments of unsolved crimes publicized through local media. Silent Witness, developed before Crime Stoppers became the popular term, consists of a phone number informants can call, with the possibility of earning money for their time.

Midland's crime stoppers should continue dialing the Silent Witness number, 685-1190, but now their calls may be prompted by a reenactment that jogs their memory.

"Everything that helps any area around here, helps all of us," said Midland County Sheriff Dallas Smith. "It would be pretty confusing if we had a different name." Though plans have been in the works for several years to develop the Crime Stoppers program in Midland, the reenactments are expected to go public in January.

Silent Witness was less expensive, calling only for a phone line which ran into the sheriff's department. "Everything was gravy that we did get off of that."

"All these things cost money," said Smith in explaining the time taken to switch programs.

While Midland works toward producing its first reenactment, Odessa police are planning to expand their operations after moving to the new police office presently under construction.

Donations have come from outside the city, with calls originating in Andrews, Midland, Wink, Kermit and other area towns. More than $12,000 was added to Crime Stoppers' coffers after the November fund-raiser which called for pledges to free media "inmates" temporarily incarcerated for the cause.

Fears of prospective tipsters has been one obstacle Crime Stoppers has been working to overcome. "We've had to build the trust of the individuals out there," said Tharp, one of the officers coordinating Odessa Crime Stoppers.

"I don't even know who gave us the information," explains Tharp. "That's one thing we've had to sell, we don't even want to know their names."

Crime Stopper information provides the "link" which investigators turn into a case. "We have not had a case yet where we've had to use an informant (in court)," said Tharp.

"Now someone else knows what they know," he pointed out. "We are going to avoid at almost all costs having somebody (an informant) as a witness," he said, "If they say no, the case is over as far as we're concerned."

Cooperating with other law enforcement agencies and using Crime Stopper information, crimes have been solved in Monahans and Kermit. A murder suspect was apprehended through a cooperative effort by Odessa and Big Spring Crime Stoppers.

Informants have been known to call many times, said Tharp. One has called 30-40 times and helped solve several narcotics cases.

"Believe it or not, this person hasn't made any money and doesn't want any money," said Tharp.

"They don't want to talk money," he said. "They're satisfied they've done what they wanted to do."

Freight loading zone permits expire Saturday

From Staff Reports

City freight loading zone permits expire Saturday.

Applications for new or renewal permits can be obtained in the traffic division of the police department. Applicants will be notified when the applications are approved, according to traffic division secretery Beverly Holder.

Permits are $25 each and the number of permits any one company can have is limited to three. Only commercial vehicles — trucks, vans and station wagons — are eligible, with passenger cars excluded.

Delivery vehicles must bear the name of the company on each side — either in paint or on magnetic signs. There is a 30-minute time limit in each loading zone.

Vehicles in non-compliance with the law are subject to $25 tickets and also may be towed, said Ms. Holder. While the permits expire Saturday, there is a 30-day grace period, she added.

Ector County reports increase in rabies cases

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Ector County accounted for 10 of 84 cases of rabies reported in West Texas during the initial 11 months of 1983, according to the Texas State Health Department.

"It's all been in skunks — wild animals," said Rick Rel, field supervisor for Odessa Animal Shelter. "I would say the greater majority of them were in the county."

Rel said more cases were reported this year than in 1982, but that it was not as critical a situation as that which existed in Midland County, where 35 cases were reported in 1983.

Rel said dry conditions contributed to more reported rabies cases this year, as "animals that have rabies worked into the residential areas of town, traveling to find water. The climate has a lot to do with it, because if you have a drought condition, animals that don't have water out in the outlying area come into a source in town."

Rabies, which is Latin for fury, is an infectious disease that destroys the brains nerve cells and almost always results in death. According to Odessa veterinarian Linda Smetak, it "is more common in the warmer times during the summer" and has certain identifying signs.

"If a skunk comes up to your house and you live in the middle of town, that's a suspicious sign in itself," she explained. "If a coyote or wild animal is aggressive at all toward you or your animals instead of running, that's a good sign."

In domestic dogs and cats, said Ms. Smetak, "probably the first thing you would see would be a depressed animal and then a change in temperment, from a friendly animal to a detached, shy one. Sometimes they might be aggressive, but sometimes they hide — that's the behavior changes you see."

Later, she said, the animal may exhibit frothing at the mouth.

According to a Texas State Health Department spokesman in Austin, 703 cases of rabies had been reported statewide in the first 11 months of 1983, compared to 750 cases during the same period in 1982.

Stricken animals included 509 skunks, 38 bats, 27 bovines, 24 cats, 19 horses, 13 dogs, 12 foxes and 2 raccoons.

As of Dec. 1 Martin County had 3 cases, Howard 2, Dawson 2, Upton 7, Crane 2, Reagan 2, Pecos 19 and Andrews 0.

Appeals court ruling victory for minorities

Lower Court committed 'an abuse of discretion'

From Staff and Wire Reports

NEW ORLEANS — A federal appeals court has ruled that a district court committed "an abuse of discretion" in adopting a desegregation plan for Ector County schools, and has sent the case back for reconsideration.

The ruling is a victory for two Odessa minority organizations. CRUCIAL (Committee for Redress, Unity, Concern and Integrity at All Levels) and MALDEF (Mexican-American Legal Defense and Education Fund) filed an appeal when the court-ordered desegregation plan was implemented in the fall of 1982.

The organizations were dissatisfied with the court-ordered plan and wanted to substitute one of their own. They argued a hearing to discuss the plan and present alternatives was never held.

Despite desegregation mandates for the Ector County Independent School District from other federal cases, south Odessa schools in 1967-68 had 87.4 percent minority enrollment. A segregation suit was filed in 1971, but was not heard until 1981. By that time southside schools were 96.4 percent minority.

In its ruling Thursday, the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said, "We think it abundantly clear that the district court's action in adopting the stipulated plan constituted an abuse of discretion in light of its duty."

It declared segregation of ECISD schools was not only clear, but flagrant.

"Its repeated failure to develop and institute an effective desegregation plan, which resulted not only in continued segregation but also increased segregation . . . mandated the immediate and careful consideration of the proposed remedies."

The 5th Circuit sent the case back to the lower court and ordered a hearing and entry of findings be held by April 1. The current plan will remain in force until it is amended or replaced.

The opinion depicted Odessa as a city where predominantly black and Hispanic residents live south of the railroad tracks, and the mostly white neighborhoods are to the north.

The district court, reviewing the Ector County ISD's plan, also found evidence of segregation in bus transportation and the assignment of faculty and administrators.

The lower court's findings of fact and law were unchallenged on appeal.

It held that the district intentionally "not only continued to fail to meet its duty to dismantle its dual school system, but actually increased the segregation in its schools of both blacks and Mexican-Americans."

West Texas ranchers face 'double whammy'

FORT STOCKTON, Texas (AP) — West Texas ranchers, who suffered through a year of drought conditions and depressed energy prices, are being forced to think about creative economics as they tighten their belts and reduce the size of their herds.

"It was a double whammy," said Fort Stockton rancher Jerry Puckett, who depends on livestock and mineral rights to earn his living.

Puckett said profits this year are slim, but he's been luckier than most West Texas ranchers who don't enjoy the extra buffer of mineral income.

Because of a drought that lasted until October, Puckett has been feeding his livestock instead of depending on grazing. The added expense, he said, has forced him to sell more animals than usual.

He also has seen a drop in mineral royalties coincide with a drop in oil and natural gas production. Income from surface damages also has dried up as exploration came to a standstill, the rancher said.

Zan Matthies, Pecos County agriculture extension agent, told the Odessa American recently that despite problems in both industries, ranchers with mineral income still come out ahead.

"Anything you get out of the minerals is a gift, to some degree," Matthies said. "You don't have to go out and feed an oil well.

"The people that are in strictly ranching, they're hurting. They have no other source of income," Matthies said.

Ranchers across West Texas began selling sheep and cattle last summer after much of the grassland died in the wake of drought conditions. Without natural grazing little profit is left in ranching, they said.

Kent Powell, Upton County agriculture extension agent, said there is little grazing now — despite some autumn rains.

Powell noted that a landscape dotted with oil production equipment does not necessarily mean success.

"You see all the pumpjacks around, and you think that ranchers don't need to worry," he said.

Willie Stumberg, Crane County agriculture extension agent, said most ranchers either lease the land or have sold the mineral rights.

"Most of them that are ranching are leasing their land so they don't have to worry about oil," Stumberg said. "Most of the oil producers lease the land to ranchers so they don't have to deal with ranching."

Some ranchers who do worry about both businesses are from established families who have suffered hard times before and know how to cope, said Winkler County Agriculture Extension Agent Alan Fires.

Even so, Fires said, decreased drilling activity in Winkler County is affecting the economy.

Couple encounters destructive driver

FRANKSTON, Texas (AP) — Weary from a night of driving through blowing snow and ice, a Louisiana couple thought the worst was behind them — until they encountered a pickup truck apparently bent on wrecking their car, they said.

Before daybreak Thursday, Nikki Rasmussen would stand in Frankston's town square, next to the family car, and point his .357-caliber pistol between the headlights of the oncoming truck.

The Rasmussens' ordeal began at 1:30 a.m. Thursday, when Rasmussen, his wife, Theresa, and their two children were heading south on Texas Highway 175, about three miles from Poyner. They had already traveled 500 miles of treacherous roads from Nebraska on their way to Louisiana.

Rasmussen, 28, was asleep in the passenger seat, his wife at the wheel, when he awoke to feel the car swerving to avoid hitting a pickup truck that was backing out of a driveway onto the highway.

"We swerved around him and kept going until he caught up with us. He pulled along side us and then rammed the side of our car, trying to force us off the road.

The truck kept pulling up to the side of the car and ramming it. One hit forced the car into a spin and finally into a ditch, he said.

Rasmussen guided the car out of the ditch and drove 10 miles to Frankston for help. But as they entered town, the truck returned, driving head-on toward the car, he said.

"The car was barely rolling, but we drove through the park and he kept coming after us. So I got out of the car with the gun and told my wife to keep going," Rasmussen said.

He said he fired at the truck four times, striking a tire and the driver in the right wrist.

"I had to jump out of the way. He missed me by inches," he said.

Rasmussen said he then drove his steaming, damaged car to a service station, where another truck driver was already calling the police.

Creationists plan museum

GLEN ROSE, Texas (AP) — Biblical creationists have announced plans for a $3.5 million international creationist museum that would be the same size as Noah's Ark.

During a meeting of the Bible Science Association on Thursday, members of the group also showed fossilized human bones that they said prove evolution is a hoax.

Organizer Carl E. Baugh said the museum would be the exact size of the ark described in the Bible as carrying Noah, his family and animals to safety during the great flood.

"It will be 450 feet long, 45 feet high and 75 feet wide," said Baugh, a Missouri minister who has been active in creationist groups.

Baugh said financial backers include Fort Worth millionaire Cullen Davis, a born-again Christian who supports creationist theories.

"Cullen has given us both financial and moral support," said Baugh, who is president of International Baptist College, a small school in Crystal City, Mo.

Plans call for the museum to be built in stages near the Paluxy River, west of Glen Rose, where numerous fossilized dinosaur tracks have been found.

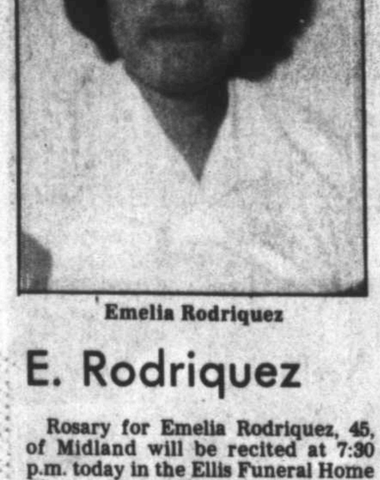

"We can't think of a better place than Glen Rose for the museum," said Baugh.

Baugh gained attention last year when he said he found human footprints in the same limestone as dinosaur tracks at Glen Rose.

Although his findings were rejected by many scientists, Baugh said finding the human and dinosaur prints in the same limestone stratum proved the evolutionary theories are wrong. Scientists say dinosaurs had been extinct for 70 million years before the appearance of man.

Baugh said the two fossilized human skeletons he displayed were found in a rock stratum near Moab, Utah, which by standard dating methods would make the human fossils 136 million years old.

Cold snap keeps many Mexican aliens home

DEL RIO, Texas (AP) — Freezing temperatures have put a chill on illegal alien crossings from Mexico into the U.S., particularly in Texas where most Border Patrol checkpoints are reporting a sharp dropoff in activity.

Border Patrol officials in Del Rio, where the temperature dipped to a record-low 20 degrees Thursday, said their apprehensions for the past week were the lowest since the Rio Grande flooded in 1954.

"It's just too dadgum cold for 'em to hit that river," chief Border Patrol agent Jack L. Richardson said.

"This is the most dramatic slowdown we've seen, and I've been in the Border Patrol for 30 years."

Richardson told the Houston Chronicle that officials nabbed 175 aliens last Friday and 122 on Saturday. But he said the number dropped to 75 on Christmas Day, and to 33 on Monday.

In Laredo, the Border Patrol has been averaging 100 alien arrests a day in December. Officials say the number plunged to 17 on Monday before edging slowly back up to 77 by Wednesday.

"I assume it's a combination of the cold and the holidays," said William H. Selzer, chief agent in Laredo, where the temperature was 24 Thursday. "A guy crossing (the Rio Grande) and being soaking wet is very apt to be lying out there until spring, if a smuggler is not waiting for him."

In the West Texas mountain country, agents in Marfa reported apprehending only 32 or 33 aliens a day during the cold spell. The normal count is 70 per day in December.

The story was the same in the Rio Grande Valley, where agents in the McAllen sector reported a dropoff of apprehensions from 93 on Dec. 21, before the cold hit, to 18 three days later.

Border Patrol officials say the holiday season is the slowest month of the year in illegal alien activity. A reduced staff also contributes to a lesser number of apprehensions.

Still, officials in every Border Patrol checkpoint in Texas, except El Paso, attribute the cold to an unsually low number of apprehensions.

In El Paso, where the low was 10 degrees Thursday, chief agent Alan Eliason said the cold is not a key factor because the Rio Grande is so shallow there that aliens simply wade across.

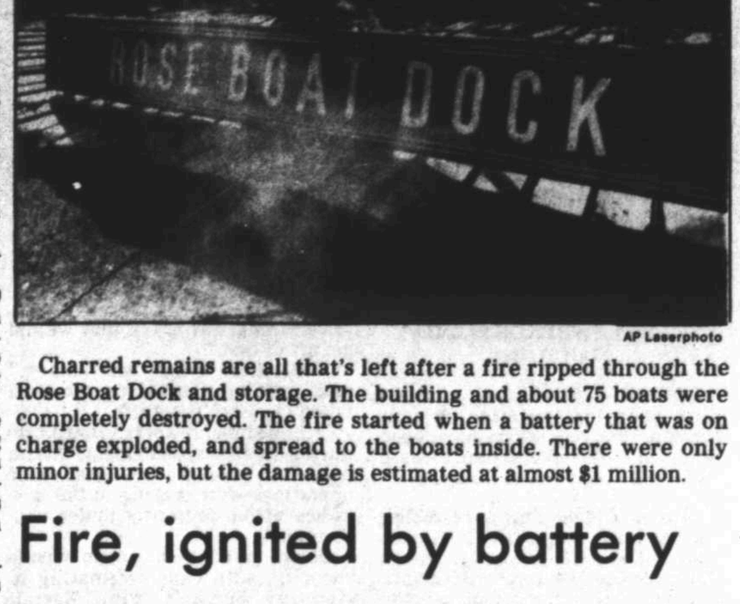

But Rudy Garcia, an intelligence agent for Eliason, said subfreezing temperatures have altered certain modes of clandestine travel, especially on freight trains where aliens hop boxcars to reach a destination on warmer days.

Apprehensions in the El Paso Border Patrol sector — the nation's busiest behind Chula Vista in southern California — dropped from an average of 400 a day this month to 90 on Christmas Day, but immediately rebounded.

Selzer said today's crop of aliens, mostly from Mexico, grew up in cities and, consequently, are not as ready to battle the weather as were their country cousins who constituted the greatest number of illegal aliens 20 years ago.

"They are not outdoors people," he said. "I think they know that."

The drop in illegal alien activity closely follows another record year in apprehensions by the Immigration and Naturalization Service's Border Patrol. More than 1 million illegal aliens were apprehended nationwide during the federal fiscal year that ended Sept. 30 A continuing upswing over 1982 has been reported since then.

Charred remains are all that's left after a fire ripped through the Rose Boat Dock and storage. The building and about 75 boats were completely destroyed. The fire started when a battery that was on charge exploded, and spread to the boats inside. There were only minor injuries, but the damage is estimated at almost $1 million.

Fire, ignited by battery explosion, destroys dock

BROWNWOOD, Texas — A fire, which have been ignited by an exploding truck battery, devastated a Lake Brownwood boat dock, destroying at least 70 boats, the dock's owner says.

Damage to the boats and dock was estimated at $1 million.

Tommy Davis, an employee who lived in an apartment above the boat house, suffered minor injuries in the fire.

The fire at the Rose Boat Dock on the southeast shore of the lake destroyed the dock's main house, a storage building, 70 to 75 boats, a pickup truck and a jeep, said Tom Buford, who had owned the dock since 1975.

The fire began about 9:30 a.m. and was under control in an hour. Thick black smoke from the burning of fiberglass and plastic in the boats was visible for more than 10 miles.

Buford said he thought the fire originated in the back of the main building, which is a boat repair shop, where the battery of the pickup truck was being charged. The battery apparently exploded in Davis' face, Buford said.

Houston Zoo has a problem. Yin the zoo's 9-year-old lesser Panda needs fresh bamboo that has not been frozen. She usually eats three or four stalks a day. Since she is a valuable animal an appeal has gone out for fresh raw bamboo in the area.

Zoo inundated with bamboo offers

HOUSTON (AP) — Yin, the Houston Zoo's lesser panda who lost her bamboo supply to the recent freeze, is being overwhelmed with offers of bamboo from around the country, zoo officials say.

Dave Mask, supervisor at the Children's Zoo and the man who cares for 9-year-old Yin, said he received at least 50 calls on Thursday from people who wanted to send him bamboo.

In addition, a shipment of bamboo shoots from residents of Hawaii was headed by air to Houston.

Besides being swamped by calls from Houston-area people who wanted to give bamboo, Mask said he was getting calls from bamboo raisers in such unlikely places as Illinois and Missouri.

"I guess a lot of people grow it in greenhouses," he said.

The search for bamboo began earlier this week when frigid temperatures in normally balmy Houston froze bamboo which grows naturally at the zoo.

Mask said a crisis was averted when officials at the Cincinnati Zoo suggested he take the frozen bamboo and soak it in warm water.

"Hopefully, it will be like freeze-dried food," Mask said.

So far, Yin, who resembles a fox or raccoon, has been eating the recycled concoction.

Odessa man arrested after stabbing incident

From Staff Reports

ODESSA - An 18-year-old Odessan was arrested Thursday morning on attempted murder charges stemming from a stabbing incident early Dec. 17 near the intersection of Murphy and Muskingum in Odessa.

Jesse Barela Dominguez, 18, was arrested Thursday at 9:20 a.m. by Odessa police after the victim of the stabbing, Ruben Cuellar of Odessa, filed the attempted murder charges against Dominguez.

Following an argument early that night, Dominguez and his 16-year-old brother allegedly attacked Cuellar, 19, who sustained several stab wounds in the struggle. He was taken to Medical Center Hospital in Odessa.

Cuellar was treated for stab wounds to the abdomen and released Dec. 24. The Dominguez brother's case is being handled by juvenile authorities.

Bond was set at $15,000 by Municipal Court Judge Otis Moore. Police have not recovered the weapon used in the alleged offense, said police spokesman Lt. Rusty Baker.

Man indicted in murder

From Staff Reports

A 28-year-old Midland man was indicted by the grand jury Wednesday in the murder of his girlfriend's teen-age daughter, who apparently was thrown to a bedroom floor and kicked in the head during a disturbance at 1001½ N. Garfield early Dec. 21.

Charles Conaway, of the same address, was released from custody after a $40,000 bond posted for attempted murder Dec. 22, carried over for the murder charges.

Midland police found Teresa Luscynski, also of 1001½ N. Garfield, unconscious and not breathing when they arrived shortly after 6 a.m. Dec. 21. The 13-year-old was taken to Midland Memorial Hospital where she remained on life-support systems until she was pronounced dead by Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry at about noon Dec. 23.

Fire damages trailer house

From Staff Reports

A trailer house occupied by David Barbeau at the Pecan Grove Mobile Park on North County Road 1135 and East Highway 80 sustained heavy damage following a fire Thursday morning.

Eight fire fighters responded to the call at 9:30 a.m. The fire, blazing on arrival, was extinguished with 200 gallons of water. No injuries were reported.

About $550 worth of items were reported missing at Mesa Vista, Inc., 1921 English Drive, following a burglary that occurred sometime between Dec. 6 and 3:30 p.m. Thursday. According to reports, entry apparently was gained through a north door. An electric range and two kitchen cabinets were taken.

Neile Sutton, of 3417 N. Midland Drive Apt. 709, reported the burglary of her residence at 9 a.m. Thursday. Taken were a television set, cable television box and assorted items valued at a total of $470. The burglary apparently took place between Dec. 15 and Thursday.

Baptist school refuses to play Catholic school

IRVING, Texas (AP) — A Baptist school in East Texas has canceled its basketball games with Cistercian Preparatory School in Irving after learning that the suburban Dallas school is Catholic.

"We thought they were merely a private school," Stan Kiefer, the basketball coach at Longview Christian Academy, said Thursday.

"We didn't know they were Catholic," he said. "We played them when we had a broader philosophy. Now we are just going to play Baptist schools."

Father Bernard Marton, headmaster of the Catholic school, told the Dallas Morning News that he was shocked by the cancellation.

"They contacted our coach and said they had not researched our school properly and learned we are Catholic," Marton said. "Ten days before the game, they said they were canceling our schedule becuase we had philosophical differences.

"When I heard it, I thought, what kind of a world are we living in?"

Officials at the Longview academy, an independent Baptist school, had already informed Cistercian coach Robert Haaser this year of strict rules for cheerleaders performing at the academy.

"They said cheerleaders must wear skirts no shorter than two inches above ground from a kneeling upright position," said Marton. "They said they may not wear long pants and could not perform mounts, cartwheels, splits or perform cheers with a rock beat."

Marton said when he heard of rules that he told Haaser not to take the school's cheerleaders to Longview.

Price-gouging, water shortages burden state

HOUSTON (AP) — State and county officials are investigating plumbing companies accused of price-gouging in their repairs of water pipes that burst in the recent frigid weather.

A.D. Downer of the attorney general's office in Houston had 30 calls on Wednesday. Another 50 were reported on Thursday.

Downer said the problem was "as big or bigger" than the number of complaints his office fielded last summer after Hurricane Alicia hit southeast Texas.

Tim Horan, a prosecutor with the Harris County district attorney's office, said his agency was investigating complaints of plumbers charging for work not completed. In one case, a plumber allegedly was charging $125 per hour.

Houston Better Business Bureau President Dick McClain said his office has received complaints of plumbers charging $100 to $150 for the first hour of service. The usual price is $35 to $50, he said.

"We have some people trying to take advantage," McClain said.

Houston area officials were recommending people shut off water to their homes to avoid breaking pipes.

While water pressure citywide improved Thursday, Doctor's Hospital, in north Houston, was pumping water out of decorative ponds in front of the building to ease its water shortage.

"We're using water from a pond to flush commodes," emergency room nurse Mary Martin said.

Governor's new plane authorized

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Aircraft Pooling Board has approved spending about $1.7 million for a new jet plane for the Texas governor.

The final decision will be up to the 1985 Legislature.

The three-member board voted unanimously to replace the 20-year-old twin-engine state aircraft now used by Gov. Mark White.

Ray Spies, executive director of the board, said Thursday that bids on the lease-purchase of a new, smaller jet plane for the Texas governor will be asked about the middle of January, minus the trade-in value on the old plane, a 16-seat Gulfstream G-1 turboprop craft.

"The one he has now costs about $1,750 per flying hour and that is just exorbitant," Spies said. "We estimated it would cost more than $800,000 just to operate it the next two years."

Immigrants suffer from leprosy rise

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Carlos immigrated from Mexico in 1969, married and fathered two sons, now six and 11. But he keeps a secret from his boys — Carlos has leprosy.

"Sometimes I think they may catch it," he said. "I want to leave them free, without problems. They have all of life ahead of them."

Carlos — who asked that his real name not be used — is typical of most leprosy patients in the United States. He works full time, is raising a family, poses almost no threat of infecting anyone but relatives and suffers few symptoms other than occasional burning pain in his legs and a few subtle spots on his body.

But like many other leprosy patients, Carlos represents what experts say is a trend: Leprosy, the disfiguring scourge of the skin most associated with exotic lands and Bible stories, is increasing in the United States because of the immigration from Southeast Asia and Latin America.

"THESE PEOPLE COME to the United States and bring their disease with them," said Dr. Thomas Rea, a University of Southern California dermatologist who treats Carlos and about 400 other leprosy patients at County-USC Medical Center.

Leprosy, also named Hansen's disease after the Norwegian doctor who discovered leprosy bacteria in 1873, is a little-understood disease that over a period of many years attacks body tissue, especially skin and nerves.

If untreated, it can lead to spots or sores on the body, nerve pain, accidental hand and foot mutilation stemming from victims' inability to feel pain through damaged nerves, and even death from complications.

During the first 9½ months of this year, newly reported cases of leprosy totaled 193 nationally, compared with 160 during the same period of 1982, said Dr. Charles Shepard, chief of the leprosy section at the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

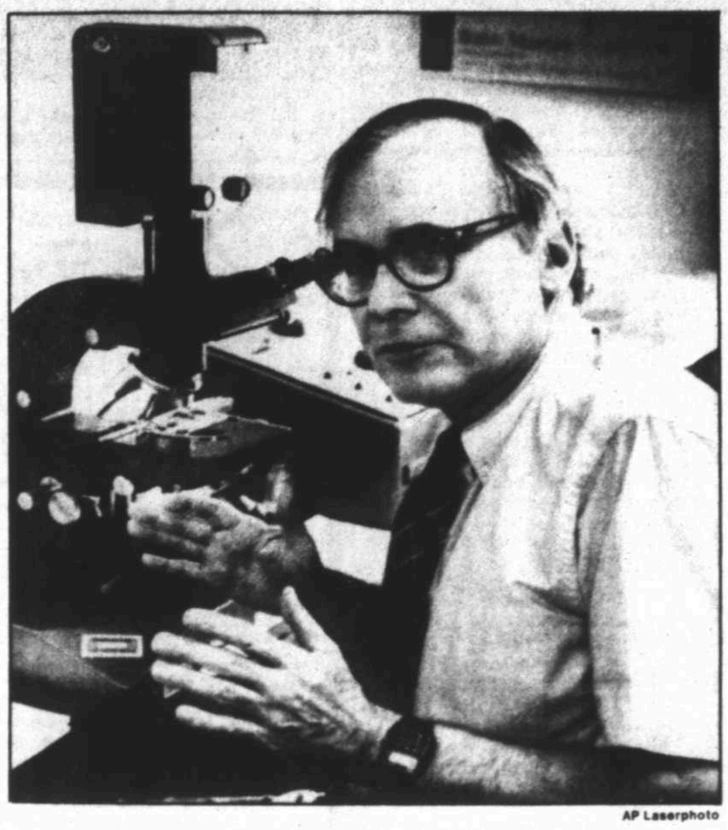

WITH THE EXCEPTION of a few years, the number of leprosy cases reported in the United States has increased annually — more than doubling from 103 in 1963 to 231 in 1982, he said.

There are 4,000 to 5,000 leprosy patients in America and 11 million worldwide, most in India and Southeast Asia, he said.

"The increased incidence is due entirely to imported cases," said Dr. Robert Jacobson, clinical chief for the U.S. Public Health Service leprosy facility in Carville, La.

The 1983 CDC figures show most of the new cases were reported in areas that receive the most immigrants from Southeast Asia and Latin America: 58 in California, 28 in Hawaii, 27 in Texas, 24 in New York City, 15 in Washington state, nine in Arizona and six in Florida.

"California has been number one for quite a while in new cases of leprosy reported," Shepard said. "There's more immigration in California from countries that have leprosy," particularly Mexico, Southeast Asian nations and the Philippines.

AP Laserphoto

Dr. Thomas Rea, a University of Southern California dermatologist, sits in his office where he tests 400 leprosy patients at County-USC Medical Center. As of mid-October, a total of 193 new cases of leprosy had been reported for 1983, compared to 160 for the same period in 1982.

SHEPARD, REA AND OTHER experts said that despite public fears about leprosy, the disease is only mildly contagious. Immigrants who imported leprosy rarely infect other people, and then mostly relatives living under the same roof, they said.

Carlos, whose three siblings in Mexico also have leprosy, works as a restaurant busboy — a fact Rea said "doesn't present any problem. That's not the sort of contact that seems important."

"When patients are treated, they pose no risk of infecting anyone else," said Gilbert Gibson, who manages Seton Medical Center in Daly City, Northern California's major leprosy clinic.

Leprosy's milder form either disappears spontaneously or can be cured with drugs, while the more severe form — which Carlos has — can be arrested with drugs.

SYMPTOMS USUALLY DON'T appear until three to 10 years after a person is infected, so many immigrants — including Carlos — don't show symptoms until after they arrive, Shepard said.

While leprosy is relatively common in many of the immigrants' home countries, it remains endemic only in two parts of the United States — the Gulf Coast of Texas and in scattered areas of Louisiana, where it was brought in the 1700s by French-Canadian pioneers. And in those areas there are fewer cases each year among non-immigrants.

No one really know why the disease is common in certain countries and areas, but experts speculate leprosy is linked to poverty, cramped housing, poor nutrition and possibly heredity.

Rea called the rise in U.S. leprosy cases an "opportunity" because, like leprosy, cancer and rheumatoid arthritis also may be linked to a malfunction of the body's immune system.

Group seeks organ donors

MILLWOOD, Va. (AP) — A national federation, the American Council on Transportation, has been organized to increased the availability of donor organs and tissues to patients who need them, reports Family Practice News.

The organization's objectives include motivating the public to voluntarily donate organs and tissues, improving the identification of potential donors, promoting the effective use of available organs and ensuring equitable distribution.

These objectives will be met by stressing public education as well as greater awareness in the medical community and among others who come in contact with patients during the acute phase of medical care.

AIDS report criticizes Reagan administration

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — Accusing the Reagan Administration of jeopardizing the "lives of countless Americans," a congressional panel's scathing report blames White House budget cutters for overriding medical experts in allocating funds for fighting AIDS.

The congressional study found that researchers and physicians of the Public Health Service were "subjected to severe political and fiscal constraints, especially in times of shrinking federal budgets for public health programs.

"Unfortunately, the lives of countless Americans may be jeopardized when the scope of AIDS research and surveillance is dictated by budget considerations rather than the professional judgements of public health and medical experts," the report concluded.

The study also complained that much of the federal funding that has gone into combating AIDS has come from research allocations that would have been used for "other critical health needs."

The report found that "a large portion of ... funds (spent by HHS) were not appropriated for AIDS and represent a transfer of funds from other critical health needs."

Dental anesthesia accident reduces boy to 'vegetable'

Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — What is left of a little boy named Rodney Tacub is under around-the-clock nursing care at South Bay Child Care Center in Carson, near here.

His once pliable limbs are now so rigid he is difficult to move or bathe. His body, wracked by periodic seizures, has to be strapped in a wheelchair because he cannot hold himself up.

He is deaf, blind and unable to eat except through a tube in his abdomen. His crying rarely stops unless he is picked up and held by someone.

Doctors call his condition "severe spastic guadriplegia." In layman's terms, he is a vegetable.

RODNEY, WHO WAS a normal, healthy 2-year-old, ended up this way after a visit to the dentist to have four cavities taken care of. According to court records, he was overdosed on anesthetics and stopped breathing while in the nearby Lomita offices of Drs. J.M Williams and James Correa.

What happened to Rodney is not an isolated event, but an example of a larger problem concerning dental anesthesia and the ability of some dentists to prevent or handle emergency situations.

Although complete statistics are unavailable, many incidents similar to the Tacub case have been reported across the nation — most of them involving dentists untrained in anesthesia and resuscitative techniques, such as CPR.

"WE DO HAVE a problem. We know death and injuries happen and they're happening more and more as dentists get into sedation and general anesthesia," said Dr. Eugene Casagrande, president of the California Board of Dental Examiners.

Dentists, however, may not be the only ones at fault. Ensuing court cases have focused on the conduct of at least one major drug company making anesthetics that dentists use.

Among other things, they allege inadequate warnings on drug packages, lack of research on adverse effects and a hesitancy to do anything in light of repeated death and injury.

DESPITE THE REPORTED cases and lawsuits, the extent of the problem is difficult to assess. The U.S. Food and Drug Administration's reporting requirements are weak, and dentists encountering a death or injury at their offices usually do not tell California authorities about them although required to by state law.

Drug companies must inform the FDA of any adverse reactions they learn about involving its products. On the other hand, doctors and dentists do not have to tell the FDA about any drug-related injuries or deaths.

What statistics are available often do not reflect overdosages and dental use of the drug. Nisentil is one of those. During the last 10 years, the FDA has received 111 reports of injuries, including 13 deaths, related to Nisentil. The death figures reflect hospital use only, while the injuries represent a mix of hospital and dental use.

"THERE IS NO way to estimate the risk, and that is one of the problems," said Dr. Peter Mendelis, who works for the FDA's National Center for Drugs and Biologics. "It's tempting to say there is a small risk, but we don't know the total quantities of the drugs used or their reactions. It's frustrating. There just isn't enough information."

The anesthetics most often used in dental offices include Xylocaine, Phenergan, Valium, Nisentil, Demoral, Lidocaine, chlorohydrate and nitrous oxide. Some are local while others are sedatives or able to render a patient unconscious.

Although pending lawsuits dispute the safety of Nisentil, dental experts say the drugs, including Nisentil, are not dangerous when properly used.

IDEALLY, THE DOSAGE should be adjusted for each patient based on his or her age, weight and susceptibility to the drug's effect.

If the person is heavily sedated or rendered unconscious, trained personnel or the dentist should constantly monitor the patient's breathing and heart rate. Oxygen and drugs to reverse the anesthesia should be immediately available in case of cardiac or respiratory arrest.

Also, dentists and their assistants should know how the drugs work and take special care with children, who can react quickly to anesthetics.

According to a formal statement by the American Society of Anesthesiologists, anything less than that might constitute the "unauthorized practice of medicine."

BECAUSE OF CONCERNS over safety, some dentists are treating patients, who have to be rendered unconscious, in hospitals where anesthesiologists, cardiologists and nurses are available.

"I won't take risks with my patients or my reputation," said Dr. Cordell Fisher, a nearby San Pedro dentist.

DEAR ABBY

Girlfriend fuming over ex-wife's behavior

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I have been dating the most wonderful man in this entire world for the last four months. (I'll call him Henry.)

His mother died, and Henry asked me if I would go to the wake with him. Of course I said I would, and I did.

Well, his ex-wife of 16 years showed up. (I would like to make it clear that they were divorced before I got involved with him.) His "ex" did in fact use this occasion to cry on the shoulders of Henry's brother and sisters – not about the death of their mother, but because she and Henry were divorced and he had another woman by his side.

As a result of this, Henry's family asked him not to bring me to the funeral, so he didn't. I can hardly control my rage over this. What should I do? – EXCLUDED

DEAR EXCLUDED: Rejoice. If this hadn't happened you might have gone on thinking Henry was the most wonderful man in the world – instead of a wimp who does what his family asks without thinking it through and with total disregard for your feelings.

DEAR ABBY: I enjoy getting mail. Is there some way I can get my name on a mailing list so I can get what is called "junk mail"? I was told that the post office makes money on every piece of mail it handles, so it encourages it.

I would like to get some junk mail. I am 74 years old. Thank you. – VACAVILLE, CALIF.

DEAR VACAVILLE: It's simple. Just order one item you see advertised in a magazine or catalog: personalized stick-on address labels, flea powder, greeting cards, vegetable seeds, bicycle horn – anything at all will do. I promise you, in no time at all you will need a bigger mailbox, which can also be ordered from one of the many catalogs you will receive after your initial purchase. Once your name goes into the computer, it will breed like a hutch full of rabbits.

DEAR ABBY: A week before Thanksgiving, I telephoned an elderly widowed friend of mine and said, "If you aren't spending Thanksgiving with your daughter, please spend it with us."

She thanked me nicely, then in a very cheery tone she said, "Of course my daughter is coming to get me."

I later learned that this lady did not spend Thanksgiving with her daughter. She stayed home alone and cried all day. Her daughter, I was told, had not invited her, but she was too ashamed to admit it.

I feel guilty because of the way I phrased my invitation. There is nothing I can do about it now, but please print this so others will not be as stupid and thoughtless as I was. – KICKING MYSELF IN BOSTON

DEAR KICKING: Please stop kicking yourself. You meant well. But I'm printing your letter so some other well-meaning person doesn't make the same mistake.

DEAR ABBY: In a recent column dealing with pets, you noted that special arrangements could be made according to "religious preferences." Would you please tell me how I can determine the religion of my pet? I wouldn't want it observing Christmas when it should be celebrating Hanukkah. — EDGAR J. BURNS, PORT ORANGE, FLA.

DEAR MR. BURNS: Pets raised in a Christian fhome are assumed to be Christian. pets raised in a Jewish homeare assumed to be Jewish. I once knew a terrier in Sioux City, Iowa, named "Tex Lansburg" who refused to eat anything that wasn't kosher.

CONFIDENTIAL TO A.J.F. IN EL PASO,TEXAS: Go for it! "Fortune is a prize to be won. Adventure is the road to it. Chance is what may lurk in the shadows at the roadside." Those are the words of one William Sydney Porter, whose pen name was O. Henry. (Surprise!)

Study links pill to breast cancer

LONDON (AP) — A study published today in the British medical journal The Lancet said women who take birth control pills before their first pregnancy run a significantly higher risk of breast cancer than women who don't.

Professor Martin Vessey, Dr. Klim McPherson and their team calculated that women who take the pill for between one and four years before their first full-term pregnancy may run twice the risk of developing breast cancer as those who don't.

They said women who take the pill for more than four years may run three times the normal risk.

The team from the Department of Community Medicine and General Practice at Radcliffe Infirmary in Oxford stressed their findings are only preliminary and need confirmation by other studies before firm conclusions can be drawn.

A study by a team headed by British epidemiologist Dr. Malcolm Pike, published in The Lancet last Oct. 21, reported a significant link between breast cancer in young women and contraceptive pills containing high levels of the synthetic hormone progestogen.

AT WORK

Opportunities made

By ADELE SCHEELE, Ph.D.

Q — I am a 34-year-old black female working as a nurse while attending graduate school for psychology. I find that opportunities are not opening to me as I feel they should. I'd like to work as a personnel manager or at a rehab center, but when I apply, I am not hired.

I have good communication skills and am constantly reading books and articles about how to succeed. Are there no opportunities for an educated black woman?

A — First, opportunities are never labeled as we would wish them to be. Always we have to find and develop them. You have a few right under your nose. One bet is to use your graduate psychology assignments to write about new developments in personnel management. Locate an agency or company to use as a case study. This will let you demonstrate your enthusiasm and talent.

Another is to create an internship in a rehab center. Start anywhere, even if it is less than a nurse's level and make yourself known and, we hope, indispensable.

A third opportunity is to move from nursing to the personnel division of your hospital. If that is not possible, find someone who knows personnel directors in other, larger hospitals who would talk to you. As a prospective employee, you must demonstrate your value by showing that you know about them and their organization and how you can contribute to them.

Now about the terrible prejudice factor. Alas, racial prejudice exists as well as all the other prejudices that each of us has for anyone else who is different. To overcome some of that, find common bonds in your commitment to work and to contributing to your shared interest — the organization.

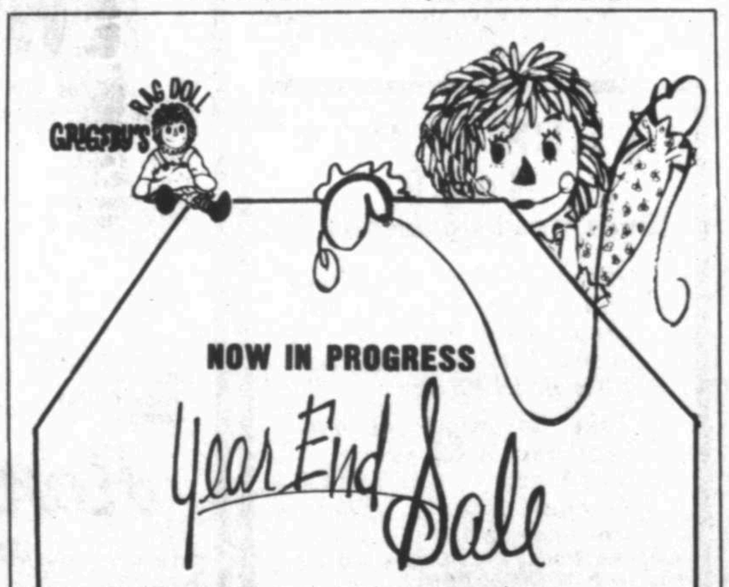

The better you are, the stronger the bonds, then the more opportunity you can create.

Dr. Scheele answers letters from readers in her column. Write to her in care of this newspaper.

Government arrests insurgents

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — The Soviet-backed Afghan government says it has arrested 210 insurgents in the northeastern province of Badakhshan.

A broadcast by the government's Radio Kabul, monitored in Islamabad, said Thursday those arrested were among 700 rebels led by Maulvi Mehdi, an Islamic Front guerrilla commander in the Zibak district of Badakhshan.

It claimed the rebels were planning to raid Zibak's Lapis Luzuli mine.

Several guerrillas were killed, the broadcast said, but it did not say when the incident took place or if there were any government casualties.

The Soviet Union sent thousands of soldiers into Afghanistan four years ago to help the Marxist government battle anti-communist guerrillas. More than 100,000 Soviet troopers are believed to be still in the country.

Premier submits guidelines

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — Premier Turgut Ozal has submitted a package of economic measures, including steps to ease restrictions on imports and on foreign travel.

Some measures went into force Thursday with publication in the official gazette. Others are expected to become effective before the end of the year.

The program also means price increases. Prices of petroleum products went up by 2.9 percent last week, and the prices of alcoholic beverages and cigarettes, produced by state monopoly, went up Thursday by 11 to 50 percent.

Under the new decree, Turks are allowed for the first time to purchase such foreign goods as luxury cars, color television sets and Scotch whisky.

U.S. official predicts meeting

MOSCOW (AP) — A senior U.S. official predicts Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko will meet with Secretary of State George P. Shultz at a disarmament conference in Stockholm next month.

The official, who asked not to be identified by name, said Thursday it appeared members of the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact have decided to send their foreign ministers to the East-West conference.

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization foreign ministers recently decided to attend the 35-nation conference Jan. 16-18 in the Swedish capital. Shultz has said the conference could provide a chance for him to meet with Gromyko.

The Stockholm conference is a followup to the Madrid Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe that ended this summer.

Foreign minister to be promoted

TOKYO (AP) — North Korea will promote its foreign minister to a ranking party post, ending a tenure of 13 years as foreign policy chief of the Communist country, according to a report monitored today in Tokyo.

Radio Press, a Japanese organization which monitors official news transmissions of foreign countries, quoted a Radio Pyongyang report that said Foreign Minister Ho Tam will assume a new post in the State Administration Council, the equivalent of a cabinet, within the ruling Korean Workers' Party.

Ho will be replaced by Kim Ei Nan, head of the North Korean Foreign Ministry's International Division since December 1972, Radio Press said.

Woman gets money for honesty

ANSTEY, England (AP) — Hong Kong-born Kitty Ng, who found a bundle of banknotes in the street in this Leicestershire town, handed the money, worth $115, to the police.

When officers traced it to businessman Ken Allen, he sent Mrs. Ng the whole lot and an extra 20 pounds — $28.

"I had written the money off, so I sent it to the lady with a few quid on top for doing the right thing," Allen said Thursday.

Ex-official resigns as leader

CANBERRA, Australia (AP) — Former Deputy Prime Minister Doug Anthony resigned today as leader of the opposition National Party, saying he expected early elections next year.

Anthony, who headed the party for 12 years, said it was time to step aside to allow fresh leadership. Elections are likely next year, two years early, and the party must have a chance to prepare for them, he said.

Assad had heart trouble, defense minister says

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — Syria's defense minister says the group that bombed U.S. and French military headquarters in Beirut, killing almost 300 men, has refused assistance from Syria, Libya and other Arab sources.

Mustafa Tlass, in an interview Thursday with The Associated Press, also said heart trouble forced President Hafez Assad to drop out of public sight for several weeks, but that he has recovered completely. Syria previously claimed Assad suffered from appendicitis.

Tlass, speaking through an interpreter, said Assad fell ill Nov. 13 with a "problem at the end of the arteries leading into the heart as a result of exhaustion."

A group called Islamic Holy War has claimed responsibility for the Oct. 23 bomb attacks on the multinational force posts in Beirut, as well as those at the U.S. Embassy in Beirut and at the U.S. and French embassies in Kuwait.

He did not elaborate about Assad's health problems, but a doctor said that from the description, the ailment appeared to be "a kind of angina pectoris," which is marked by chest pains. The doctor asked not to be identified.

Assad's sudden disappearance from public view prompted widespread speculation that he was seriously ill or even dead. Some Israeli papers reported he apparently suffered a heart attack.

Tlass also said Lt. Robert O. Goodman Jr., a U.S. Navy bombardier captured by Syria Dec. 4, is being treated well and received thousands of Christmas letters.

Tlass repeated Syrian assertions that Goodman would not be freed until U.S. ships leave Lebanese waters.

"When American ships leave our shores, we will put him aboard a plane, and I guarantee he will reach America before the American ships do," Tlass said.

Goodman was in a carrier-based A-6 jet shot down over Lebanon during a bombing raid. The pilot of the plane was killed.

Wild elephants kill at least 10

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Wild elephants have killed at least 10 people in the past month in India's northeastern state of Assam, according to reports from the area today.

The United News of India, in a dispatch from Jorhat about 420 miles northeast of Calcutta, said a herd of about 20 elephants had rampaged through villages and gardens in the area.

Reagan, Andropov share 'Man of Year' title

NEW YORK (AP) — President Reagan and Soviet leader Yuri Andropov were chosen to share Time's "Man of the Year" distinction because "the deterioration of U.S.-Soviet relations overshadowed all other stories in 1983," the magazine said.

Time's "Man of the Year" cover story details the recent history of Soviet-American relations and concludes "the continuing chill in superpower relations" poses dangers of an escalating arms race, strains in the Western alliance and "proxy wars."

But the article proposes ways in which Reagan, without changing his convictions, could make the relationship "less menacing and more manageable."

These would include offering to merge disarmament talks on strategic and intermediate nuclear weapons; proposing measures to guard against war by accident; seeking regular and frequent contacts with Soviet officials at every level; improving relations with China; and building up conventional forces more rapidly, while urging European allies to do the same.

Time admonishes its Men of the Year that, "Whatever else they do, Reagan and Andropov will be judged by history primarily on how each deals with the other's country — and with the other as a man."

Twice before Time has named two people to share the title of "newsmaker who, for better or worse, has dominated the events of the preceding 12 months."

In 1937 one of the "Men of the Year" was a woman, Madame Soong Mei-ling, honored with her husband, Nationalist Chinese Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek, for their resistance to the invading Japanese.

In 1972 President Richard Nixon and Henry Kissinger, then national security adviser, were chosen jointly for their efforts to realign U.S. diplomacy and end the Vietnam War.

Time noted, however, that these pairings were of individuals sharing a common goal, and the selection of Reagan, 72, and Andropov, 69, marked the first time the magazine has paired antagonists.

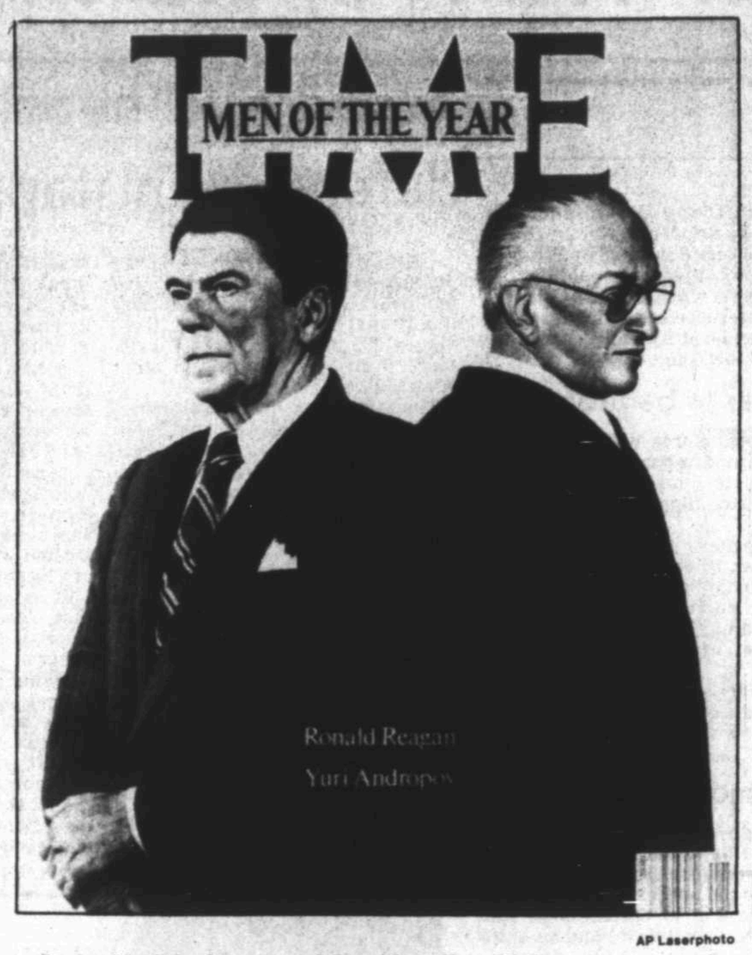

Among those who lost out in the selection process, Time said Monday, were U.S. servicemen, particularly the 278 volunteers who died for their country in 1983; Pope John Paul II, cited for his "taxing pilgrimages" to Central America and Poland; British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, for her sweeping electoral victory; and Harold Green, the federal judge who supervised the breakup of American Telephone & Telegraph, "the largest corporate divestiture in history."

It was the second designation for Reagan. He was named Man of the Year in 1980 for parlaying his popularity as a film star to sell a conservative viewpoint and gain the presidency.

Andropov, named for the first time, was the third Soviet leader to receive the designation. Nikita Khrushchev was named in 1957, and Josef Stalin in 1939 and 1942.

The magazine noted that "Reagan and Andopov symbolize some of the stark differences in U.S. and Soviet values and political systems that make the Washington-Moscow competition so intractable."

After not being seen in public for more than four months and known to be ailing, the Soviet leader missed a meeting of the Communist Party Central Committee on Monday, sending regrets that he was unable to attend "because of temporary causes."

Soviet Yuri Andropov and President Ronald Reagan occupy the 57th annual Man of the Year cover of Time magazine's year-end issue. The selection by TIME editors goes to newsmakers who dominated, for better or for worse, the events of the past year.

Toddlers with hangovers a problem

FARMINGTON, Conn. (AP) — Toddlers with hangovers during the holiday season have become a problem in recent years, says an official at the University of Connecticut Health Center's poison center.

Assistant Director Dennis Crean says that behind the trend is an upsurge in popularity of cologne, scented cosmetics and other alcohol-based Christmas gifts.

"The packages are brightly colored and smell good and are an attraction to youngsters under 5 years old," Crean said. Some colognes and perfumes are as much as 75 percent alcohol — or 150 proof, he said.

Railroad museum crosses state line

SCRANTON, Pa. (AP) — All of the sidetracks, derailings and uncouplings have apparently been overcome. Steamtown U.S.A., billed as the world's largest operating rail museum, is moving from Vermont to Pennsylvania.

"I really don't see any hitches. We have a signed contract. There's no doubt they're going through with it," said Scranton Mayor James McNulty, who spearheaded efforts to bring the 100-piece collection of steam locomotives and rail cars here.

The move is seen as mutually beneficial for this depressed coal mining city with a rich railroad heritage and a tourist attraction seeking a wider audience.

"We haven't really pulled into the station yet, but we're way down the track," McNulty said in a recent interview. "We're like the little engine that could. I think I can, I think I can, I did."

The first steam engines are scheduled to fire up their boilers for arrival here in January or February from Bellows Falls, Vt., a village of about 5,000 which had been Steamtown's home since 1966.

Steamtown's first excursion on a 13-mile section of track through the Pocono Mountains between Scranton and Moscow, Pa., is set for June or July. But the entire collection won't be in place until 1985.

"Things sometimes don't go as fast as you like. It takes awhile to get all the papers signed," said Frederick Blount, chairman of the Steamtown Museum board and son of its founder, the late F. Nelson Blount.

"We intend Scranton to be the last and permanent home for Steamtown," he added. "It had a lot of facilities that can be adapted very easily to our needs."

The courtship began 20 months ago after Steamtown officials expressed dissatisfaction with their location. In 1981, it attracted only 17,000 visitors, and Vermont law prohibits billboards on interstate highways, which restricted Steamtown's advertising.

In addition, there are no indoor facilities in Bellows Falls to protect the collection, which includes the 600-ton Union Pacific "Big Boy," the largest steam locomotive ever built, from bitter New England winters.

On March 11, Steamtown directors voted to leave Bellows Falls and entertained offers from several cities. They signed a contract with Scranton on May 13, and Steamtown held its farewell to Vermont in October with a special two-day excursion.

Scranton, a city of 88,000 that had declined as an iron and coal center, is banking on Steamtown as the crown jewel in the revitalization of its downtown.

"It's a marriage between a community that had a great location but no attraction, and a great attraction that had no location," said McNulty, who said Scranton has 20 million people living within a 100-mile radius and is accessible by three interstate highways.

"We're an old northeastern 'Rust Belt' city, but we're also sitting on the new rivers — the interstate highways. That's the advantage Scranton has," he said.

Canada welcomes Salvadoran political refugees

Copley News Service

MEXICO CITY — A large industrialized country to the north, with a tradition of welcoming newcomers, has admitted more than 1,600 Salvadorans as political refugees this year.

The nation isn't the United States, which didn't accept a single Salvadoran as a political refugee in the past fiscal year. The open-door policy belongs to Canada.

And, the Ottawa government will admit even more Salvadoran refugees in 1984, said Jacques Drapeau, immigration counselor at the Canadian Embassy here.

Canada has no embassy in El Salvador. Canadian consular officials based in Mexico City conduct interviews at refugee camps in Central America and process applications for refugee status here.

Drapeau acknowledged that admission of Salvadoran refugees is a "sensitive issue" in Canada, but said public opinion there strongly supports his government's policy.

"Supporters are certainly much more vocal than opponents," he said.

In the United States, no Salvadorans were admitted as political refugees in the fiscal year that ended Sept. 30, according to Vern Jervis, spokesman for the Immigration and Naturalization Service in Washington.

The United States did grant political asylum to 71 Salvadorans in the past fiscal year, but denied asylum to 2,914 applicants from the war-torn Central American nation, Jervis said. More than 13,500 cases are pending.

A person granted political asylum enjoys the same benefits as a political refugee. Refugee status, however, is sought outside a person's homeland before departure for the country of his choice, while political asylum is sought after arrival there.

Jervis said most of the Salvadorans failed the test for refugee status or asylum, which he described as a well-founded fear of individual persecution based on race, religion, nationality, political opinion or membership in a particular group.

Human rights activists have charged that the Reagan administration is barring the door to Salvadorans because it doesn't want to concede that political persecution exists in a country with a government supported by the United States.

The United States is planning to admit a group of 200 Salvadoran political refugees as soon as sponsors can be found for them, said a spokesman for the State Department's bureau of humanitarian affairs.

The group is made up of about 50 former political prisoners and their families. The former political prisoners were released from jails last summer under an amnesty program in the civil-war-torn country.

The decision to admit the group was made "in a positive spirit, after a lot of discussion," the spokesman said. He held out hope that similar groups of Salvadorans could be admitted to the United States in the future.

Drapeau, the Canadian counselor officer, said his government rejected only about 15 percent of the Salvadorans who applied for admission as political refugees.

An applicant with a criminal record is automatically refused, Drapeau said. Otherwise, he said, Canada is lenient with health and economic requirements that could normally disqualify a potential immigrant.

Germans losing enthusiasm for work

From Wire Reports

HAMBURG, West Germany (DPA) — Germans, internationally known for their unbounded devotion to work, may be fast losing that trait.

In spite of the world economic crisis, mass unemployment and large-scale dismissals, enthusiasm for work in West Germany apparently has reached an all-time low.

A 1983 survey asked thousands of employees in Britain, Israel, Japan, Sweden, the United States and West Germany about their attitude to their job. The survey's experts found it hard to believe that the Germans were least interested in their work.

The survey, conducted by the Aspen Institute for Humane Studies in West Berlin, showed that nearly 80 percent of the employees in Israel and just under 70 percent of those in the United States considered their jobs important enough to make sacrifices to it. In West Germany, by contrast, only 43 percent of those responding felt motivated to that extent.

About 40 percent of the German employees said that their jobs really did not mean that much to them. They were, they said, prepared to do what was demanded of them, no more.

In the United States only 24 percent of employees thought likewise, and in Israel a mere 18 percent.

Although in America every second person asked was prepared to do his or her "best," regardless of the pay, in West Germany only every fourth person claimed that degree of devotion.

A West German Justice Department employee, Heiko Mathiessen, 32, told public opinion pollsters, "In my opinion there is more to life than job satisfaction."

Siegfried Schueler, 27, a telecommunications technician in Dinslaken, said leisure was of greater importance to him than work. "Living comes first," he said, "and I work only in order to live."

The results startled Elisabeth Noelle-Neumann, West Germany's best-known public opinion pollster, who commented, "German work morals have sunk to an unbelievable extent."

West Germans, a self-proclaimed "society of achievers" in the years following World War II, seem to have become a society of leisure seekers. They spend an increasing part of their income on hobbies, holidays and cultural pursuits.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Married heart attack victim has better chance of survival

Dear Dr. Solomon: I remember when I was still in college being told that married people tend to live longer than unmarried people. What I would like to know is whether being married also has an effect on how long a person lives if the individual has a heart attack. Has anyone ever studied this? — Hannah, Gettysburg, Penn.

Dear Hannah: The results of a study by Dr. Vijay Chandra, of the Johns Hopkins University School of Hygiene and Public Health in Baltimore, show that married persons who have an acute myocardial infarction have a better chance of surviving than do unmarried persons. This holds true for women patients as well as for men.

A review of almost 900 patients 10 years after they had had an acute myocardial infarction showed that about one-half of those who were married, but only about one-fourth of unmarried people, were still alive.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I had an argument with a friend of mine because he said that alcohol is not a stimulant. All I know is that when I go to a party and have a couple of drinks, I can do things that I can't do when I'm sober. Will you please straighten him out? — Chuck, Altoona, Penn.

Dear Chuck: I'll give you the facts and you decide who needs straightening out. Alcohol is a depressant, not a stimulant. The reason some people feel free to behave in a way that they ordinarily would not is that alcohol reduces inhibition through its effect on the brain.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've never been able to understand figures or statistics, and I would like you to give me a simple answer to a simple question. Is a person who has coronary artery surgery better off or worse off after the operation? — Burton, Easton, Penn.

Dear Burton: The results of a study of more than 300 patients from four different medical centers showed that the great majority of those who had coronary artery bypass graft surgery were able to return to normal economic and social functioning within six months of the operation.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Whenever I read about the danger of smoking or drinking or anything else that can hurt a pregnant woman, they always seem to list prematurity as one of the things that should be avoided. What's so terrible if a baby is born a little early? — Ms. D.E., Albany, N.Y.

Dear Ms. E.: Children who are born prematurely may be at risk of various disabling conditions, such as brain damage. This does not mean that all premature children will develop a disability, but the risk is increased.

For Loretta, Macon, Georgia: A number of items that are commmonly found around the house are potentially dangerous and should be kept away from children. These include such products as bleach, ammonia, and furniture polish. Even cosmetics may pose a hazard for inquisitive children.

Drifter to be awarded for heroism if he can be found

LEVITTOWN, Pa. (AP) — A drifter who was shot in the neck while saving a teen-age girl from her attacker could receive a medal and money for his heroism — if someone could find him.

Tullytown Borough police credit Joseph Patrick Mahoney, 26, with the Sept. 29 rescue of a 13-year-old girl from an assault by an armed man in a wooded area where Mahoney lived.

The Carnegie Commission of Pittsburgh, which presents medals and $2,500 grants each year to about 100 people who have risked their lives to save others, heard about the incident.

The commission last week contacted Tullytown Police Chief Gasper Favoroso seeking details. He mailed his report Monday, but said he had no idea where Mahoney was.

"I call him a hero...If Mahoney had not been there, there's no question there could have been a tragedy," Favoroso said.

Mahoney, a tall, thin, bearded man described by acquaintances as deeply religious and well educated, told police he saw schoolbooks scattered along a path in the woods and had started to pick them up when he heard a scream.

He ran to a clearing, where he found the man lying on top of the girl.

The assailant, a heavyset man who was carrying a small-caliber pistol, struggled with Mahoney while the girl fled.

He grabbed Mahoney by the throat, shot him in the neck and fled on a dark green bicycle.

Mahoney staggered to a tavern in a nearby shopping center and collapsed. The girl, a parochial school student who had been taking a short-cut home, went to a pizza shop, where someone called police.

The girl, whose name was not released, was treated for cuts and bruises at Delaware Valley Medical Center in nearby Bristol. Mahoney was taken to the medical center, but was transferred that night to Albert Einstein Medical Center's North Division in Philadelphia.

Mahoney was released from the hospital, and the last time anyone reported seeing him was about two weeks ago, when a Levittown crossing guard spotted him near an elementary school.

The bullet that lodged in Mahoney's neck is still there because doctors decided it would be too dangerous to remove it, according to Lois Tanzola of Levittown, a clerk at a department store near the woods where Mahoney lived.

Children's prayers sustain woman in her weight battle

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — A woman who was sustained by schoolchildren's prayers and a liquid diet has lost 150 pounds since doctors told her seven months ago she might not live to see the New Year.

Brenda Meicht, 40, can smile now when she remembers when she couldn't cross her legs or sit at a restaurant counter.

Those were the days when she weighed more than 300 pounds, washed dishes in 15-minute shifts with a breather in between and waited for shoppers to move out of grocery aisles so she could pass.

"I have been given a new life," she said Wednesday a few hours before a birthday celebration for her 12-year-old son, Marc.

But it has required iron discipline for Mrs. Meicht to get her new life. She hasn't eaten a morsel of solid food since May under a strictly supervised liquid weight-loss program for people termed "morbidly obese."

Mrs. Meicht said she received a lot of support from Marc's eighth-grade class at Our Lady of Refuge school. It adopted Mrs. Meicht as its class project and regularly prayed for her to complete the weight loss program successfully.

"Month by month as I would come to the school," she said, "the kids would come and put their arms around me and say, 'Brenda, you're going to make it. It's coming off.' Those kids were great for me, like so many people who supported me."

The 5-foot-9 woman has lost more than 150 pounds from her original weight, which she prefers to keep private.

Her husband, Robert, who weighs 260 pounds and says jokingly he may be next to join the weight loss program, shares his wife's joy.

"She's lost half her body," he said. "It's like 'Fantasy Island,' like a new wife...Now you roll over at night and you don't know who you're sleeping with."

Board wants to 'Dump Berkeley'

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — A vote to exclude Berkeley from a county board because of the City Council's refusal to open meetings with the pledge of allegiance is "shameful," the city's vice mayor says.

The move to "Dump Berkeley" from a board that will decide how to spend $12 million in federal job training funds came Wednesday night in an 11-2 vote and means the city will have no control over $660,000 slated for Berkeley.

Berkeley Vice Mayor Gilda Feller, noting that the county board does not open its meetings with the pledge of allegiance, called the vote "an act of pious hypocrisy." She said she was unsure if Berkeley could contest its exclusion.

Arson suspected in building fire

DETROIT (AP) — Arson is suspected in an apartment building fire that killed two people and injured nine others, but investigators said they found no evidence of a firebomb which residents said was tossed into the building.

Residents said they heard gunshots shortly before a firebomb was hurled through a basement window early Thursday, and witnesses said an unidentified man living in the basement ran through the building shouting that someone was trying to kill him.

Investigators found bullet casings but uncovered no signs of a firebomb, authorities said.

Airport may get new radar

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — An airport that has been avoided by about 150 flights since two recent runway crashes may get a ground radar system to help with chronic fog problems, according to a federal official.

Tom McCarthy of the National Transportation Safety Board, which has been investigating two non-fatal accidents at Anchorage International Airport this month, said Thursday that "we are thinking very seriously" about recommending a ground radar system.

But Paul Steucke of the Federal Aviation Administration said Wednesday the airport does not have the traffic density or instrument landing equipment to qualify for the new radar.

Alcoholic ex-judge 'frightened'

BARRE, Vt. (AP) — A former Superior Court judge who is an admitted alcoholic says he is frightened about "what the future may hold for me" after his third conviction for drunken driving.

John Morrissey, 54, who served on the bench for 15 years, was sentenced Thursday to at least 20 days in jail by a judge who said, "A judge ought to receive the same punishment as an ordinary citizen."

Morrissey pleaded no contest last month to his third drunken driving charge in seven years, then resigned from the bench. He is to begin serving his sentence Jan. 13.

Refugees eat poison mushrooms

SAN PABLO, Calif. (AP) — Although some of 14 Laotian refugees who ate poisonous "death cup" mushrooms had been expected to die, doctors now say all are expected to recover fully.

The refugees were hospitalized Dec. 16 after eating the amanita phalloides fungus, whose poison usually destroys the liver and kidneys. A spokesman for Brookside Hospital said Thursday that all but two of the victims have been sent home.

Alan Tani, a pharmacist with the San Francisco Bay Area Poison Control Center, said death by mushroom poisoning usually occurs within five days. In those who don't die, "the liver grows back and will recover to function fully."

Reagans to spend holiday in Palm Springs

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan, traveling with heavy security, again will celebrate the New Year on a friend's walled estate near this desert resort city.

Reagan flew to Palm Springs aboard Air Force One on Thursday from Los Angeles, where he had spent two days secluded in a hotel suite at the start of his year-end vacation.

Other vacationers visiting Palm Springs flocked to the airport hoping for a glimpse of the president and his wife Nancy. But spectators were kept outside the airport gates and saw little more than the president's plane approaching in the distant sky.

The president and Mrs. Reagan paused briefly as they stepped off the plane and waved to a small group of reporters and photographers assembled on the airstrip.

They then walked a few yards to a helicopter for the short hop to the estate of millionaire publisher Walter Annenberg and his wife Leonora.

The high point of the Reagan visit here is a New Year's Eve party given by Annenberg, the former ambassador to Great Britain during the Nixon administration, and his wife, Reagan's first chief of protocol.

The Reagans have attended the annual party for more than a decade, and many of their old friends from the Hollywood movie community are scheduled to attend.

The White House confirmed Thursday that among those coming to the party is Charles Wick, the chief of the United States Information Agency, who made news this week when it was disclosed that he tape recorded many of his phone calls.

Presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said Wick's office informed the White House that he had not taped any phone calls involving the president or the first lady.

Speakes said White House counsel Fred Fielding is reviewing taping. "If there is any action to be taken, we'll take it," Speakes said. But he added that Wick, a close friend of the Reagans, "can serve at the USIA with the president's full confidence."

The staffs of the Senate Foreign Relations and House Foreign Affairs committees also are looking into the matter.

Speakes said Thursday that the president will make no official comment on the departure of presidential candidate Jesse Jackson for Syria where he is seeking the release of captured Navy Lt. Robert O. Goodman Jr.

"Jesse Jackson will be going as a private citizen and will not be representing the United States government," Speakes said.

Meanwhile, a White House official, who requested anonymity, said the president had declined to accept phone calls from Jackson because he feared any personal contact would imply Reagan sanctioned the trip.

"This is an extremely delicate situation," the official said. "We made a decision to leave it in the hands of the ambassador at the outset. We do not want to send any confusing signals."

The offical said U.S. Ambassador Robert Paganelli has been negotiating with the Syrians for Goodman's release.

"We'd like to see Lt. Goodman back," the official said. "We've made a very deliberate attempt to handle this in a low-key manner and keep it out of the public arena."

In another development Thursday, assistant press secretary Mark Weinberg said the Reagans were "shocked and deeply saddened" to learn of the death of Dennis Wilson, the drummer of the Beach Boys rock group, who drowned in a diving accident Wednedsay at Marina Del Ray.

Mrs. Reagan and White House officials leaped to the defense of the Beach Boys this year when then-Interior Secretary James Watt banned them from the usual Fourth of July concert at the Washington Monument. The group appeared later in the summer in Washington.
