YMCA seeks share of available funds

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Less than half of an available $818,000 for developing needy areas in the community was requested to construct a new YMCA in northeast Midland.

"We just hated to be selfish," Doris Richardson, chairman of the board of the Parks Center and Washington branches of the YMCA, said with a laugh. She was speaking during the Thursday night public hearing in City Hall Council Chambers.

"The (city) council will appreciate that because we've got a lot of streets that need paving," Susan Howell, Community Development Block Grant coordinator, told the five representatives from the YMCA branches.

The remaining $500,000 of the federal funds, granted for the development, construction and improvement of public facilities and properties, could be used for paving "bits and pieces" of Tilden, New Jersey, California and New York streets as well as demolishing "dilapidated" houses on Orchard Lane, Ms. Howell said.

According to Ms. Richardson, with the construction of a new YMCA, the status of the Park Center and Washington branches has not been decided.

"Our hope is that maybe the Park Center will stay open," she said. "If we have to close Park Center, we may regret it but we would just like to have a newer and better center and I don't know what we'll do to Park Center."

Kenneth Barnes, executive director of the two branches, said land for the new YMCA, to be located between Butternut, Magnolia and Hickory Street across from Lee Freshman High School, has been secured.

Construction of the $3.5 million facility, planned to include a gymnasium, pool, nursery, health club and racquetball facilities, began more than two years ago.

Construction has been delayed "due to the nature of the economy and a lot of other variables (that) have played into priority," he explained.

"We're trying to take into account and secure whatever money we can to make this dream a reality," he said.

Energy prices fuel year's first wholesale price hike

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rising energy costs boosted wholesale prices 0.3 percent in May, the first increase all year, the government reported today.

For the first five months of 1983, those prices fell at an annual rate of 2.2 percent. Prices were up 3.7 percent last year.

Largely responsible for last month's jump was a 2.2 percent advance in energy prices. Those prices, pulled down by the worldwide oil glut, had fallen for five straight months. They were off 2.8 percent in April.

Home heating oil prices soared 6.4 percent, the largest increase since March, 1981. Gasoline prices climbed 2.3 percent, the most since last July, the department said in releasing its Producer Price Index for finished goods.

Food prices fell 0.5 percent after rising the previous three months. It was the sharpest fall in those prices since last July when they tumbled 1.6 percent.

May's pickup in prices was forecast by economists who, however, were looking for a bigger jump than that reported by the department. They also were looking for further rises in the months ahead. The increases, though, were expected to be only temporary and not a sign of a fresh surge in inflation.

The new report supported analysts' predictions that inflation at the wholesale level will rise at least as slowly as last year. Indeed, one analyst is forecasting an increase of less than 1 percent, which would be the smallest since the mid-1960s.

The bright inflation picture has been widely attributed to the sharp recession and the worldwide oil glut which had sent gasoline and fuel oil prices tumbling.

In recent months, those prices have been stabilizing and starting to climb.

Reflecting that price reversal, the report said the increase in fuel oil costs was the first this year.

Bendectin: Dear or deadly?

From Staff and Wire Reports

ORLANDO, Fla. — The Florida housewife who filed a $10 million lawsuit against the manufacturer of a morning sickness drug for pregnant women says the pill's removal from the marketplace was long overdue.

Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals Inc. announced Thursday that it was halting production of the drug Bendectin amid a flurry of lawsuits contending the drug caused birth defects. But two Midland physicians denied they had seen any birth defects from the drug and believe it's women who are the real losers in this case.

"That's what we've been fighting for all these years — to have it taken off the market," said Betty Mekdeci, whose lawsuit in 1977 paved the way for at least 200 other legal challenges of the drug.

Mrs. Mekdeci and her husband, Michael, filed the first damage suit against the company, contending Bendectin caused their son, David, to be born deformed.

The case, still pending on appeal, has been followed by so many others that the company said Thursday it could no longer continue to market Bendectin.

Thatcher re-elected by healthy margin

LONDON (AP) — Conservative Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, declaring today, "My victory is greater than I dared to hope," romped to a second five-year term as her embittered election rivals split the opposition vote.

In the process, the socialist Labor Party suffered its worst defeat in 60 years.

"I have not been extreme for the last four years. I am not an extreme person and I am not extreme now," said Mrs. Thatcher in a television interview today as she pledged not to use her parliamentary majority to follow radical right-wing policies.

Her party, according to the latest results from Thursday's general election, got almost the same percentage of the popular vote as in 1979, emerging with a stunning success due largely to the strong showing of a new centrist alliance.

The latest results gave the Conservatives a 160-seat lead in the 650-member House of Commons. But they were expected to lose 17 of the 20 outstanding races — including all the races in Northern Ireland — for a final majority of 146 seats over the combined opposition.

That would equal the 146-seat edge won by Labor in 1945 when Clement Attlee defeated wartime leader Winston Churchill.

With votes counted for 630 seats, Mrs. Thatcher's party had 395 seats, Labor 209, the alliance 21 — 16 of them through Liberal candidates — and other parties five.

Updated percentages were not immediately available, but earlier results showed the Tories receiving 43.1 percent of the overall vote, Labor 28, and the alliance 25.8. In 1979, the Conservatives received 43.9 percent and Labor 36.9, while the Liberal Party, the only alliance partner then in existence, got 13.8.

"It's a tragedy," said Michael Foot, the 69-year-old Labor leader. He blamed the alliance for "giving a victory to a government I believe the country does not wish to see running our affairs over the next five years."

By early morning, as the hand-counted results were declared across the country, Foot, a winner in his own Welsh mining district, conceded nationwide defeat and accepted "my responsibility" for the socialist debacle. Labor has ruled for nearly half the post-1945 era.

Greeting well-wishers outside 10 Downing Street is Margaret Thatcher, who won re-election as Britain's prime minister in Thursday's balloting.

The alliance of the Liberal and Social Democratic parties grabbed a quarter of the vote but few of the seats in what SDP leader Roy Jenkins called an electoral "travesty."

"There will be a real sense of anger in the country. This is not a just result," said Liberal leader David Steel, outraged at an electoral system that gave the alliance less than 3 percent of the 650 seats in House of Commons.

In Britain, only seats won, not the percentage polled, counts. The party winning the most seats forms the government and its leader becomes prime minister.

Mrs. Thatcher, 57, is the first Conservative prime minister to win consecutive terms since Lord Salisbury in 1900. In 1979, with a 43-seat majority, she became Europe's first woman prime minster, and last month she decided her public support was strong enough to call the new elections even though her first term had almost a year to run.

The results delighted Mrs. Thatcher, who had urged the British to banish forever the "dark, divisive clouds of left-wing socialism."

With unemployment at a near-record high of 12.8 percent, the prime minister's month-long campaign hammered out the message that only her tight-credit policies would curb inflation and heal the economy.

Years of disarray in the British left led Labor moderates to form the SDP in 1981 and saddled the main socialist party with its most radical platform ever.

Labor had pledged unilateral nuclear disarmament, a ban on U.S. nuclear bases here, withdrawal from the European Common Market, protectionist foreign exchange and import controls, and wider state ownership.

Mrs. Thatcher supported deploying cruise missiles this year to counter the Soviets' nuclear arsenal and sticking to the monetarist policies she used to cut inflation to a 15-year low of 4 percent.

Outside 10 Downing St. this morning, supporters cheered "There's only one Maggie."

Mrs. Thatcher breezed to victory in her Finchley north London district, where spoke jubilantly to supporters.

In evident reference to opposition condemnation of her "autocratic, one-woman" rule, she said: "In this marvelous moment, when we're all thrilled, we have to remember that all power is a trust."

Britain's other female political heavyweight, SDP President Shirley Williams, 52, lost her seat in the northwest England district of Crosby.

Another woman who lost was former Labor Party chairman Joan Lestor, its expert on women's rights. The alliance took 10 percent of her vote and let a Tory win the seat she held since 1966.

In a stunning setback, former energy minister Tony Benn, acknowledged leader of the Labor left, was defeated by a Tory in Bristol East. And Social Democrat co-founder William Rodgers lost to a Laborite in Stockton.

Said Foot, "I think it is a tragedy for the nation that a government like this should have been returned....We will go ahead to rebuild the party and I shall be there in some capacity in the next election."

Foot was not expected to survive as leader long as Labor must either decide to move back to the center or cease being a major political force, observers said.

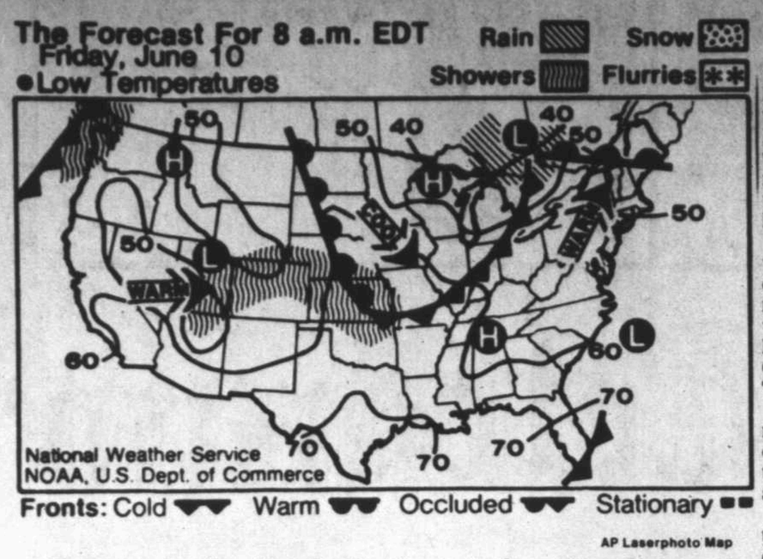
WEATHER SUMMARY



AP Laserphoto Map

Showers extending from the Southwest to the eastern Plains and for coastal areas of Washington are forecast by the National Weather Service. Cool weather is forecast for the Midwest, while most areas will be warm.

Windy weekend weather forecast

Partly cloudy skies and gusty winds are expected to begin the weekend, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Tonight's low should be 60 degrees with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms. Skies should be fair Saturday morning, becoming partly cloudy in the afternoon with a high of 90.

Winds are expected to whirl through the Tall City, gusting southerly 10-20 mph.

Thursday's high of 91 didn't match the heat wave Midlanders experienced with the record high of 105 in 1981. The overnight low of 68 degrees was a little warmer than the record low of 51 in 1975.

One woman killed in Texas tornado

By The Associated Press

A line of heavy thunderstorms moved through the Texas Panhandle early today, spawning a tornado that killed a woman and injured her 73-year-old mother, the Department of Public Safety said.

The twister also destroyed two mobile homes, flipped over a tractor-trailer rig and damaged several houses at a housing development along Lake Meridith, north of Fritsch, according to DPS dispatcher Duane Barnett in Amarillo.

A tornado also touched down in nearby Sanford, but no injuries or damage were reported, Barnett said.

The name of the woman, 38, and her mother were not immediately released.

The shower activity had decreased in severity and moved into the South Plains before dawn, the National Weather Service said.

Mostly fair skies were the rule across the rest of the state. Temperatures were mostly in the 60s. Readings at 4 a.m. ranged from 60 at Amarillo to 74 in Brownsville.

Southerly to southeasterly winds near 10 mph were the rule.

The forecast called for fair to partly cloudy skies with warm afternoon temperatures through Saturday. Scattered thundershowers were possible in the afternoon hours.

Mental patient sought in slaying

CHINO, Calif. (AP) — California law enforcement officials concentrated their search along the U.S.-Mexican border for an escaped mental patient charged with slashing four people to death and seriously wounding a fifth at a posh hillside home.

The search for Kevin Cooper, 25, was being concentrated in the border area near Tijuana after several reported sightings of the man, also wanted on a kidnapping charge in Pennsylvania, San Bernardino County Sheriff Floyd Tidwell said Thursday.

"The more we looked at it, the more we put it together, the more it comes down to one man," Tidwell told a news conference in Chino, about 30 miles east of Los Angeles.

Evidence "places Kevin Cooper at the crime scene, and we have other evidence that gives us cause to believe Kevin Cooper was responsible for the murders," Tidwell said.

He declined to elaborate on the evidence, but noted that clothes, bloodstains, open cans of food and fingerprints had been found in an empty house 150 yards from the murder scene.

A sheriff's deputy who asked that his name not be used said early today that Cooper had telephoned a female friend in the Pittsburgh area from the hillside home and horse ranch where the killings occurred.

The bodies of Santa Ana chiropractors F. Douglas and Peggy Ryen, both 41; their daughter Jessica, 10, and Christopher Hughes, an 11-year-old family friend were found murdered in the home Sunday.

The Ryen's 8-year-old son, Joshua, survived the attack, which the coroner said was carried out early Sunday with a hatchet found near the Ryen home and a knife and a screwdriver or ice pick, which have not been recovered.

A district attorney's complaint filed in Chino Muoicipal Court on Thursday charged Cooper with four counts of murder, one of attempted murder and one of escaping from the Chino prison.

Two dozen San Bernardino County sheriff's officers were in the border area looking for Cooper on Thursday. In the Mexican border city of Tijuana, police Capt. Armando Mazon said more than 300 Tijuana Municipal Police and Baja California state judicial police officers were watching for the suspect.

The San Diego County sheriff and city police departments and federal agencies such as the FBI also were involved in the search.

The suspect, described as black, about 6 feet tall, weighing about 155 pounds and with an Afro hair style, "is considered very dangerous," Tidwell said. "No one should try to apprehend him."

Cooper escaped June 2 from the minimum-security California Institution for Men at Chino, after arriving at the institution only one day before to serve a sentence for a burglary conviction.

He had been captured in Los Angeles in April following his escape Oct. 8 from Mayview State Hospital near Pittsburgh, where he was accused of kidnapping and raping a 17-year-old girl in the suburb of Upper St. Clair.

Joshua Ryen learns of family's deaths as young playmate buried

By PATRICIA KLEIN
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Ten-year-old Christopher Hughes was buried yesterday as San Bernardino County sheriff's detectives pressed their search for the killers who hacked and slashed him and three others to death in Chino, Calif.

The child's body was enclosed in a small coffin at Holy Cross Cemetery in Pomona following a crowded service at Our Lady of Assumption Roman Catholic Church in Claremont.

The sole survivor of the attack, 8-year-old Joshua Ryen, remained under guard in stable condition at Loma Linda University Hospital with a slashed throat, head injuries, broken ribs and a broken collar bone.

Both children were attacked Saturday night at the Chino Hills ranch home of Frank and Peggy Ryen, both 41, who were killed along with their 10-year-old daughter, Jessica.

Joshua was told only yesterday of the deaths of the rest of his family, and has so far provided no clues to investigators.

Sheriff's deputies are continuing to seek information from a 33-year-old man who turned himself in to Costa Mesa police in connection with an armed robbery in an area near where the Ryens' stolen car was seen.

Costa Mesa police Lt. Jack Calnon said Milton August Bulau called the department Tuesday to say he had stolen rifles from a house Monday, and used them to rob a Costa Mesa liquor store. Bulau then arranged to meet officers at a local bar, where he voluntarily surrendered.

His role in the Chino murders, if any, is unclear.

When asked the whereabouts of a hat he had worn in the robbery, Bulau directed officers to the Ha'Penny Inn, the motel where he had been staying. An unidentified motel employee told the officers Bulau had been there the night before with two other men, and that a car at the hotel matched the description of the Ryens' car.

Bulau was at first described as a "good suspect" by Sheriff Floyd Tidwell, but yesterday morning sheriff's Capt. Phillip Schuyler said Bulau "is probably a weak prospect . . . from the standpoint we really don't have anything to tie him in with at this point."

Then, Wednesday afternoon, sheriff's Detective Chico Rosales said the Ryens' car license number was listed on the motel's register for Monday. However, Calnon said he had been told that the license number was not on the register.

"The guy we've got (Bulau) was registered as Mike Hatfield and (had) no car," Calnon said.

The motel's manager, who refused to give his name, said he did not know whether the license number appeared on the motel's register Monday. He confirmed that Bulau was with two men.

Bulau "wouldn't discuss his two friends. He just kind of stonewalled anything that had to do with the case or questions that were relative to the case," Calnon said.

At the Hughes child's funeral, a eulogist said Christopher "was always working so hard, even on the things that gave him trouble, and he was always laughing.

"That's the way we will remember him," said the Very Rev. William Berry, according to the Associated Press.

The three Ryen family members who were killed in the attack were to be cremated, and their ashes scattered into the Pacific following services at St. Paul's Lutheran Church in Orange, the AP also reported.

The detective closest to Joshua Ryen, Hector Campo, said the boy "is improving surprisingly, very rapidly," and is pleased with the deluge of flowers, messages and small gifts that have flooded in from all over the country. He is being visited by his grandmother, aunts and uncles, he said.

"I am still under orders not to ask questions or to pressure the boy," Campo said.

While Schuyler has said that Joshua is able to speak, and in fact, Monday began asking about his parents, Campo said, "He cannot talk."

NATO again signals Soviet Union

PARIS (AP) — NATO's foreign ministers sent a new signal to the Soviet Union today that it must move quickly in arms control talks with the United States to head off deployment of U.S. nuclear missiles in Europe later this year.

NATO Secretary-General Joseph Luns said the ministers "strongly confirmed" the allied commitment to defense and dialogue, and the decision to deploy the 572 U.S. cruise and Pershing 2 missiles if there is no breakthrough in the arms control talks at Geneva on medium-range missiles.

Similar resolutions have been approved at the seven previous meetings of NATO foreign ministers dating back to 1980. The significance of this one is that no additional meetings at the foreign minister level will be held before the December deployment deadline, meaning there will be no opportunity to reverse the decision.

Despite NATO's reaffirmation of its plans, there were indications of disunity. Problems in drafting the communique forced a delay of more than two hours in Luns' scheduled appearance before reporters.

Conference sources said Secretary of State George P. Shultz and French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson were at odds over a section of the communique dealing with West European energy dependence on the Soviet Union.

Luns also was said to have strongly rebuked the Greek delegation for its refusal to endorse the NATO pledge to deploy medium-range missiles.

Nonetheless, the plan appeared to have broad alliance backing. One symbol of this was the fact that Socialist-led France — the only NATO country with Communist representation in the government — agreed to host this year's spring meeting.

Passing through a French honor guard upon their arrival at a Paris theater are U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz, left, and NATO general secretary Joseph Luns. The foreign ministers opened two days of meetings.

AP Laserphoto

At a dinner Thursday night for the foreign ministers, French President Francois Mitterrand said it is "unacceptable" that the Soviets continue to have a "monopoly" in medium-range nuclear weaponry with their arsenal of more than 300 SS-20 missiles.

Expressing pessimism over the Geneva talks, Mitterrand in his post-dinner toast said the negotiations "cannot succeed on the basis of the proposals put forth up to now by the two sides."

The majority of allied ministers believe the Soviets have been dragging their feet at Geneva, hoping public opinion will force the NATO countries to renege on their deployment plan, which dates back to 1979.

A NATO consultative group which monitors the Geneva negotiations issued a statement Thursday saying that in the 19 months since the talks began, the "Soviets have refused to participate constructively" in the talks.

The group coupled its toughly worded statement with an appeal to the Soviets to "cooperate urgently" with the United States in the interest of reaching an equitable agreement.

According to a senior U.S. official, who asked not to be identified, Shultz told his colleagues during a closed session Thursday, "We are strong and we are reasonable. We are ready to make reasonable bargains. When they (the Soviets) are ready to make reasonable bargains, we are ready."

There are a number of items on NATO's agenda but the ministers focused almost exclusively on the weapons issue. They apparently were not eager to tackle divisive issues which could have deflected attention from their nearly unified position on the arms talks.

One such issue was the security aspects of East-West trade, which was sidestepped at the Williamsburg summit because of a lack of a consensus and which received little attention here.

Officials who attended the closed-door meetings also indicated that minimal attention was paid to the question of NATO sanctions against Poland and the desireability of a summit meeting between President Reagan and Soviet leader Yuri Andropov.

Shultz met privately Thursday with West German Foreign Minister Hans Dietrich Genscher to discuss the planned visit to Moscow early next month of Chancellor Helmut Kohl.

The Reagan administration considers Kohl's visit to be important because he will explain in detail to Andropov the allied position on the Geneva talks in hopes of encouraging him to make a constructive counter-proposal to the latest U.S. offer.

This calls for a substantial reduction in Soviet missiles and a deployment of American missiles that equals the Soviet total. The goal is a missile balance at the lowest possible level.

YMCA leads requests for share of community development funds

If secured, funds from the Midland YMCA will match the remaining funding of the project, according to a statement distributed during the first of two public hearings. These meetings allow citizens to suggest ways the money could be used.

When asked later about closing the two YMCA branches, Barnes said a possible motive for the joint center may be to bring the community together.

Another hearing, scheduled for July 19, will be held in the council chambers, according to Ms. Howell. A final list of how the money will be distributed will be released at council meetings at the end of July or first of August.

How additional funding should be distributed also was addressed during the public hearing.

Some $214,000 allocated through a jobs bill, signed into law by President Ronald Reagan in March, must be distributed by July 1, Ms. Howell said.

Designed to "get the unemployed back on jobs," the funds may be used for renovating houses and putting small contractors back in the work force, Ms. Howell said.

The possibility of funding a training program for custodial and domestic help was raised by Ms. Richardson, who was told to submit a plan to Ms. Howell before the next council meeting Tuesday.

Doctors disagree with Bendectin decision

Although it considers the drug safe, Merrell Dow said it was stopping production and distribution because of the adverse publicity and mounting legal costs.

The drug has been taken by more than 33 million pregnant women in 21 countries since 1957.

"It's unsafe," said Mrs. Mekdeci. "There is more to it than just the economics of it. I understand there is a new (medical) study out which shows it causes birth deformities."

The action by Merrell Dow, announced in Washington, came just two weeks after a jury there awarded $750,000 to the family of 12-year-old Mary Oxendine, born with defects of her right hand.

"Bendectin is safe and effective," said David Sharrock, president of Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals U.S.A. "We are taking this action for economic reasons. The real losers are the women of the future who will not have this product."

Midland physician Dr. John W. Young agrees.

In a telephone interview this morning, Young said he wasn't sure what local doctors were going to do for women who have benefitted from Bendectin.

"I think it's a good drug," he said "It's helped a lot of ladies."

Young added the removal of the only approved morning sickness drug was a "sign of times" and that if two or three women who took the drug had children born with defects sued the company, "the cost of defending the company would be astronomical."

Young said Midland physicians prescribe Bendectin to women only after all other conservative measures have not worked.

"It's tragic," said Midland physician Dr. Atilano Diaz in a telephone interview.

It's the only medication we have available to control severe vomiting," he said. "What we're going to see is more and more patients getting sick to the stomach and being admitted to the hospital because of vomiting.

"We have been using this drug for a long time and we haven't seen any deformed babies," Diaz added.

"There's been several large studies done," Young said, explaining that two groups of pregnant women — one taking Bendectin; the other not — showed the identical incidents of birth defects.

Plan for 'master teachers' means of keeping good one in classroom

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

SACRAMENTO, Calif — California is on the verge of setting up a network of "master teachers" in its public schools, giving them higher pay along with more responsibility for upgrading the quality of teaching.

The concept is seen as a way of recognizing and rewarding the outstanding teachers, while keeping them in the classroom instead of bumping them up to administrative jobs.

Under the huge education reform bills already passed by the state Senate and Assembly, these select teachers would be paid an extra $4,000 a year. In addition to keeping a class, they would work with other teachers at their schools to improve the overall caliber of instruction.

Teachers' union leaders are none too happy with the idea and predict it may flounder like so many so-called reforms that have come before.

But state school Superintendent Bill Honig and Senate Education Committee chairman Gary Hart say California's plan will avoid the pitfalls of previous "merit pay" schemes by letting teachers themselves help with the selecting and by insuring that extra money be linked to more work or more responsibility. Both Hart and Honig draw a sharp distinction between "merit pay" for teachers — which has been advocated recently by President Reagan — and paying more for more work.

"The prototype is a football coach or a drama teacher," Honig said. "We pay them more to take on extra work. And we select them based on special talent."

"I'm uncomfortable with saying we're going to pay someone more than another teacher who is doing the same thing," said Hart, a former high school teacher.

For years,"merit pay" has been a foul term among teachers because of schemes that seemed simply to reward the principal's favorite. Moreover, no one could clearly define how one teacher was better than another.

The Senate education bill, sponsored by Hart, says the teaching "mentors" will be "nominated by their peers and school principals" with the final selection left to the school board. Up to 5 percent of teachers could be designated as master teachers or "mentors" (the two bills use a different term) with the state paying the extra cost. The Assembly bill also specifies that the masters teachers will still spend 60 percent of their time teaching, with the rest devoted to helping younger or struggling teachers. But they will have "no administrative duties" and will not evaluate other teachers, the bill says.

The teachers' unions remain uneasy about the whole idea, although they are not fighting to have this section of the bills removed.

Turtles dumped in gulf

PADRE ISLAND (AP) — Scientists hoping to give the Kemp's ridley sea turtle a new lease on life released more than 1,200 of the year-old endangered reptiles into the Gulf of Mexico.

The turtles, almost wiped out by hunters and fishermen, only nest at one location on the Mexican coast. Scientists released the reptiles earlier this week from the U.S. Coast Guard cutter Point Baker at five locations in the Gulf several miles off Padre and Mustang islands.

It is hoped the turtles have been "imprinted" with their new habitat and will return to the protected sands of the Padre Island National Seashore to nest, said Clark T. Fontaine, the federal research biologist who heads the government's joint raise-and-release program with Mexico.

The turtles weigh from 8 to 13 pounds each, Fontaine said.

It will be two to five years before scientists know if their program has succeeded. In previous dumpings, about 8,000 young turtles have been released into the Gulf.

In the spring, after the female turtles lay their eggs along the beaches at Rancho Nuevo, Mexico, biologists place a number of eggs in plastic containers filled with sand from Padre Island.

The containers with the eggs are taken to the Padre Island National Seashore where the eggs are allowed to hatch. After hatching, the baby turtles are released in the surf and allowed to swim 20 to 30 feet from shore. They are retrieved with hand nets and shipped to the federal hatchery in Galveston, where they live for 10 to 11 months before being released.

"Hatching in the sand from Padre Island and swimming in the Gulf off Padre Island is what, we hope, will imprint the Padre Island location in their instinct mechanism so they will return to this area to nest," Fontaine said.

"We are not sure how far they roam, how long they live or at what age the female mates and bears eggs," said Ted Williams, another research biologist working on the program.

The young turtles were trucked from Galveston to the Coast Guard station at Port Aransas, where they were loaded onto the Point Baker for the ride to their new home.

"We don't know much about the scientific part of this, but if we can have anything to do with saving this turtle, it's sure worthwhile," said the Point Baker's skipper, Master Chief Boatswain's Mate Frank Tupa. "And it's a nice break from law enforcement patrols and search and rescue missions."

Tupa and his crew used navigational aids to locate and record the ship's exact position as each batch of turtles was released.

Williams said scientists don't know know how many of the young turtles are lost to natural predators.

"We have no way of knowing how many we might lose, but I guess it's a high percentage."

"If fishermen find a live turtle with a tag on it we are asking them to return the turtle to the water and leave the tag on," Williams said. "If the turtle is dead, we would like the fisherman to notify the nearest Texas Parks and Wildlife warden."

Honduran training site opposed

By MONTE HAYES
Associated Press Writer

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras — Opposition is mounting to the establishment of a U.S. Army base in Honduras to train Salvadoran soldiers to fight a leftist guerrilla insurrection in their own country.

Hondurans, already threatened with war by Nicaragua, fear being dragged into El Salvador's civil strife and object to the presence of Salvadoran troops because of the Salvadoran invasion during a brief border war in 1969.

The leftist Sandinistas ruling Nicaragua say they will fight against Honduras unless there is a stop to the increasingly frequent and bloody raids by Honduras-based rebels across the border. The Sandinista junta claims Honduras and the United States are arming and training the rebels to overthrow it.

The United States has been increasing military aid to Honduras, and American troops have held exercises to train Honduran troops to airlift rapidly along the Nicaraguan border in case of attack.

But Hondurans have not been enthusiastic about the training of Salvadoran troops at a base on their soil.

Felicito Avila, leader of the General Center of Workers, one of the country's two labor groups, warns the base is "an unnecessary commitment that will lead to a regionalization of the war in Central America."

"The general opinion of workers is that we are not in agreement with that kind of training school.... There are still bad feelings because of the Salvadoran invasion during the war," added Andres Victor Artiles, secretary general of the Honduran Workers Federation.

The rightist El Heraldo supports the project, but most other newspapers condemn it. Columnist Miguel Pavon, writing in the liberal El Tiempo, called it "outrageous" and said, "The surprising and most indignant thing for Hondurans who still have a bit of dignity left has been the announcement by the U.S. government that the base will train Salvadoran troops."

All three opposition parties oppose the training center, but Miguel Adonie, head of the centrist Innovation and Unity Party says that whatever happens, Honduras is for trouble.

"If the guerrillas win in El Salvador, they are going to make our lives impossible. And if they lose, they are going to seek refuge in Honduras' mountains," Adonie said. "Honduras has problems."

Even top government officials are critical of the training center, calling it a necessary evil.

Carlos Montoya, the vice president of Congress, said in an interview that the best policy would have been "for us to keep ourselves out of the internal conflict in El Salvador."

But Montoya, a member of President Roberto Suazo Cordova's conservative Liberal Party, claimed the Reagan administration pressured Honduras into accepting the training center because it is the Western Hemisphere's second poorest country and heavily depends on the United States for aid.

"An ally of Honduras is serving us a bitter drink. But we are going to drink it because we have no alternative," Montoya said.

Suazo Cordova's election in late 1981 had ended 17 years of military rule. But, after decades of quiet, a small leftist terrorist group has become active. Montoya said the training center could provoke more leftist terrorism, forcing the government to take repressive measures.

In defending the project, presidential spokesman Amilcar Santamaria said, "The Salvadoran guerrillas have already declared war against the Honduran government. For us, the strengthening of our armed forces and the support that we can give to other armies that also are fighting against totalitarianism are a form of self-defense."

A dozen U.S. Army Green Berets arrived last week to oversee construction of the training camp, near an abandoned World War II U.S. Navy base 150 miles northeast of the capital on an isolated stretch of Caribbean coastline.

Soviets building new submarine

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — U.S. intelligence has discovered still another new-type submarine under construction in the Soviet Union, administration sources reported Thursday.

Satellite photographic imagery of the giant shipbuilding complex at Severodvinsk on the White Sea indicates a nuclear-powered submersible that is larger than the Soviet's speedy, deep-diving 3,800-ton Alfa, but smaller than the 15,000-ton cruise missile-shooting Oscar, the sources said.

Earlier this year, Rear Adm. John L. Butts, director of naval intelligence, told the House Armed Services Committee "We expect to see a new class of attack submarine to follow the Victor program, probably beginning this year or next."

The nuclear-powered, 6,000-ton Victors remain the backbone of the Soviet Navy's attack submarine force.

The U.S. Navy estimates that the Soviets have six Alfa attack submarines operational. Rear Adm. Sumner Shapiro, Butts predecessor as DNI, had this to say about the Alfa:

"We estimate that Alfa's hull is fabricated from a light-weight titanium allow, clearly a major technological breakthrough in sophisticated submarine construction techniques.

Salvadoran offensive launched

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Troops in the eastern provincial capital of San Vicente are reported to be fanning out to other towns to begin a new offensive against leftist guerrillas.

Military sources have said the army was assembling 5,000 to 6,000 troops to sweep guerrillas from Chichontepec Volcano, just southwest of San Vicente, 37 miles east of El Salvador.

Reporters who went to San Vicente Thursday said they saw army trucks carrying personnel from the city to other towns.

Col. Dionisio Hernandez, army commander for San Vicente province, denied the operation was part of a planned month-long military operation designed to clear the way for an economic redevelopment program for San Vicente and Usulutan provinces.

Senate Budget Committee Chairman Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., left, chats with Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, just before Thursday's session of House-Senate budget conferees on Capitol Hill. The panel is attempting to resolve differences in the spending plans passed by the two houses of Congress.

Lawmakers try to discuss budget behind the scenes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional budget negotiators are publicly staking out bargaining positions and resolving minor issues while work goes on behind the scenes to piece together a compromise spending plan that can pass the House and Senate.

The volatile issue of defense spending occupied the negotiators for much of their session Thursday, but they put off a final decision until later.

Domestic spending was due to get attention today as the legislators try to resolve differences between separate budgets passed by the House and Senate.

The conferees also spent several hours Thursday discussing domestic spending, and made progress on several non-controversial issues.

However, debate on House proposals for recession relief legislation and increased spending for health and education were delayed until today.

On domestic spending, the House budget is about $30 billion over President Reagan's original request while the Senate plan calls for $11.4 billion more.

In addition to defense and domestic spending, the negotiators also must consider taxes.

Additional taxes in the House budget provide revenue increases of $30 billion in 1984 and $120 billion over three years. The Senate plan calls for revenue increases of $9 billion next year and $73 billion through 1986.

In addition, the $863.6 billion 1984 budget plan adopted by the Democrat-controlled House in March called for defense spending authority of $263.8 billion. House Democrats say this would be a 4 percent increase after inflation.

Reagan had asked in February for a 10 percent increase.

Prison using tents for overcrowding

SAN QUENTIN, Calif. (AP) — Convicts in a hot, dusty tent city at the maximum-security San Quentin prison say the effort to reduce overcrowding could backfire into summertime violence.

The five-acre tent compound opened June 1 at the prison, and the olive-drab tents now house 200 prisoners, with four times that number expected.

Twelve tents have been erected on a football field at the prison and workers were busy erecting 12 more Thursday to house dozens of inmates arriving daily from around the state.

"They're going to be taking them (bodies) out of here with toe tags," said inmate Richard Pape, warning the volatile combination of heat and boredom "increases the potential for violence."

The tents are "transient quarters" and officials hope to phase them out within two years, San Quentin information officer Percy Massey said Thursday as he escorted reporters through the compound.

"We're piece-mealing this whole thing together," he said.

There are 2,945 inmates in the prison's regular facilities, not counting those in G-unit, the tent city's official name. The prison was intended for 2,712.

G-unit is surrounded by two fences, barbed wire and guards in gun towers. Each 18-by-70-foot aluminum-framed tent is lined with double bunks on both sides and can sleep 42 prisoners.

With wooden floors and aluminum ducts that conduct heat even during the day, "it tends to get a little hot," Massey said. "And once it gets hot in here, the heat stays in.

"But what are you going to do? I don't think I've ever heard of an air-conditioned tent."

Inmates newly arrived at G-unit, meanwhile, complained they were moved into the tents before prison officials solved some of the problems — such as lack of soap.

CBI may spur U.S. jobs

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's Caribbean Basin Initiative (CBI)should spur employment in the United States as well as in Central America and the Caribbean countries, an administration spokesman said Thursday.

Undersecretary of State Lawrence Eagleburger said that the plan to help the countries in and around the Caribbean "will mean both an increase in jobs for their own people at home, thus reduced emigration, and an increase in their demand for United States exports."

"The results on both counts should be additional jobs for our unemployed," he told the House Ways and Means Committee.

Eagleburger, Deputy U.S. Trade Representative Michael Smith, and Assistant Treasury Secretary John Chapoton all emphasized how important passage of the CBI legislation, which is one of the key parts of the administration's Latin American policy, is to the United States and the beneficiary countries.

Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., said as he opened the session that he is convinced that the CBI "should not be a partisan matter" and that it is "essential to U.S. security interests and economic well-being."

ROSTENKOWSKI, who with other members of the committee visited several of the Caribbean countries last year in connection with the plan, said that the CBI is designed to let the region help itself.

The Ways and Means Committee acted favorably on trade and tax elements of the initiative last December and the House passed the bill, but the Senate failed to take it up in the lame-duck session.

The new House bill is virtually the same as that of last year. The Senate is considering a somewhat different version.

The initiative as President Reagan proposed it 15 months ago called for $350 million in emergency economic assistance for the basin countries, duty-free entry into the United States of many Caribbean Basin products for a 12-year period, and an investment tax program. The emergency financial aid was approved by Congress and signed by the president in September.

BUT THE duty-free provision ran into some congressional opposition and leather goods, canned tuna, petroleum and other items were eliminated from the list. The investment tax credit was stricken because organized labor objected that it would result in a net export of jobs from the United States.

Eagleburger undertook to address what he termed the "false" assumption that "what the Caribbean Basin gains will be lost by the United States."

"Trade is not a zero sum game," Eagleburger told the committee. "All economic history proves it. Economic exchange occurs because both parties have something to gain from the transaction. Consequently, the increase in prosperity which we are aiming to achieve in the Caribbean Basin will not come at the expense of the United States economy.

"The jobs created in the Caribbean will not mean that an equivalent number of jobs is lost in the United States," he said, predicting the increase in employment in both the United States and the beneficiary countries.

HIS STATEMENT so impressed Rep. Sam Gibbons, D-Fla., that the congressman asked him to repeat it later in the session for emphasis.

Eagleburger also cautioned against additional protectionist amendments to the bill that could "result in a program with more promise than performance."

Peace group plans human chain

PLYMOUTH, Mass. (AP) — If Buryl Payne and his Academy of Peace Research have their way, people in states coast to coast will join hands Sunday to form a "dotted line" demonstrating their support for disarmament.

Payne admitted it will only be a partially completed chain, estimating it would take 5.5 million people hand-in-hand to cover the 3,000-plus miles from Plymouth Rock to San Francisco.

But even an incomplete chain will be symbolic, he said.

"It more or less is based on the idea that thoughts create reality," said Payne, 42, who hold degrees in psychology and physics. "This will be a way to manifest plans for world peace."

Under the plan supported by the academy, a mini-think tank devoted to world peace, people will be asked to link hands for five minutes beginning at 1 p.m. EDT Sunday.

The East Coast section of the chain will have two ends, one beginning at Plymouth Rock, the other in Boston, where participants are to join hands along the city's Freedom Trail and along the 26-mile route of the Boston Marathon.

Brewers look to Texas to increase beer sales

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Northern-based brewers like Stroh's and G. Heileman Brewing Co. have chugged into the state with plans to capitalize on Texans' lucrative love affair with cold beer.

"Texas is one of the very few states that is showing great potential as a beer market," said Remick Stroh, the company's sales promotion manager. "We plan a frontal assault on the entire state."

Texas ranks second only to California in total beer consumption.

The Detroit-based Stroh's began its Texas marketing campaign in mid-May, with jaunty ads for the fire-brewed beer inundating the television and radio airwaves.

Heileman, based in La Crosse, Mich., completed its purchase of San Antonio's Lone Star Brewing Co. in March and plans to expand both its locally made product line and its marketing campaign.

Instead of being just the so-called "national beer of Texas," Heileman wants Lone Star to pursue beer-drinkers outside its namesake state.

Stroh said his company's marketing campaign for Stroh's and Stroh's Light was aimed at a particular group: white-collar Texans.

"The easiest way to explain the marketing campaign is that we're trying to target to a certain lifestyle," he said.

The Texans that Stroh's wants as customers range from the legal drinking age of 19 to age 34, Stroh said.

"The ads all will concentrate on activities like sports, activities, racing and music," he said. "It's a very conventional marketing approach."

Stroh's hopes to capture a 6- to 7-percent share of beer sales in Texas, about 250 million to 300 million cans and bottles per year, Stroh said.

The Stroh's sold in Texas will be brewed in Detroit, but distributed from the company's Longview, Texas, plant, he said.

"We look on the marketing effort in Texas as a major move forward in our strategy to create a national presence for Stroh's and Stroh's Light in the premium category by either late next year or early in 1985," said Stroh's president Roger Fridholm.

Stroh's also manufactures Schlitz and Schaefer, both already sold in Texas.

Heileman has announced plans to step up production at the Lone Star plant here and gun for a bigger share of the nation's beer market. Lone Star currently holds 5- to 6-percent national share.

At last word, Lone Star's famous beer-guzzling armadillo advertisements were going to spend some time in mothballs, with an undisclosed marketing attack being formulized.

Student awarded $1 million in case

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A jury deliberated less than an hour before awarding a University of Alabama student $1 million for burns she suffered while helping a bartender serve flaming drinks.

Sharon Feinstein, 23, who was a part-time waitress when the incident occurred at a Ruby Tuesday restaurant in Tuscaloosa, Ala., won the award Thursday. She was "set afire" when two specialty drinks exploded after she lit them for a bartender while she was off-duty, waiting to get a work schedule approved by the restaurant manager, according to trial testimony.

Chancery Court jurors ruled that the restaurant, a Tennessee-based corporation, was negligent in the Jan. 18, 1982, incident.

Lawyer to appeal guilty verdicts

ANNISTON, Ala. (AP) — A lawyer for a woman who has started serving a prison sentence of life plus 20 years for murdering her husband and poisoning her daughter with arsenic says he will appeal the verdicts.

"I still maintain my innocence," Audrey Marie Hilley, 50, said Thursday, shortly before being taken to Tutwiler Prison for Women in Wetumpka, Ala., where she is to serve a life sentence for murder and 20 years for attempted murder.

Defense attorney Wilford Lane said he will appeal both verdicts.

Assistant District Attorney Joe Hubbard had portrayed Mrs. Hiley during the nine-day trial that ended in a conviction Wednesday as "a cold-blooded killer" who was after insurance money.

'Pattern' found in black section

WASHINGTON (AP) — A "disturbing pattern" of placing hazardous waste landfills in poor black communities has been found by a General Accounting Office study, two House members say.

"This study confirms our suspicion that those who are both poor and black are being forced more than others to live with the potential health risks posed by hazardous waste landfills," Rep. James J. Florio, D-N.J., and District of Columbia Delegate Walter Fauntroy, a Democrat, said in a joint statement Thursday.

The study found that three of four waste dumps operating in South Carolina, Alabama and North Carolina were located in communities where blacks make up a majority of the population. The congressmen noted that 26 percent of the population in all four communities had incomes below the poverty line. Most residents in this category were black, the study showed.

Contamination search scheduled

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A search for dioxin contamination at 14 herbicide manufacturing sites in three states has been scheduled to determine if "there may be the potential of a problem," say federal Environmental Protection Agency officials.

The sites are in Pennsylvania, Maryland and West Virginia, EPA officials said Wednesday. Dioxin, considered one the most toxic chemicals synthesized by man, often is an unwanted byproduct of herbicide manufacture.

'These are not necessarily sites where there is dioxin," said Steve Wassersug, director of regional EPA air and waste management. "We're talking about sites where there may be the potential of a problem."

'World's expectations differ'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Israel's new ambassador to the United States says the world expects his country to live by a different code of conduct than what is expected of Syria.

Ambassador Meir Rosenne said Thursday that Israel was condemned last year for its invasion of Lebanon by a world community that remains silent about the presence of Syrian troops in the country.

DeLorean's partner to confess

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A lawyer for automaker John De Lorean's drug-conspiracy codefendant William Morgan Hetrick says his client will change his plea to guilty in a move a newspaper claims will bring dismissal of two charges against him.

The Los Angeles Herald Examiner said today that it had learned through unidentified sources that in exchange for Hetrick's cooperation in the $24 million cocaine smuggling case, the U.S. attorney's office will drop a charge of "operating a continuing criminal enterprise" and one of cocaine distribution.

THE TWO counts carry a life term and a 15-year sentence, respectively.

DeLorean's attorney, Howard Weitzman, told the Los Angeles Times on Thursday that if Hetrick testifies for the prosecution in the trial set to start Aug. 9 there is "certainly a possibility that he was part of a prior arrangement" from the beginning of the government's investigation.

Hetrick's attorney, Stephen Wilson, said in a statement that the new plea will be entered Monday before U.S. District Judge Robert Takasugi.

"I have no comment except to confirm that a change of plea has been calendared for William Morgan Hetrick on Monday, June 13, 1983, at 10:30 a.m. in the courtroom of Judge Takasugi," said Wilson's statement. "Any further questions will be addressed after the courtroom appearance on Monday."

A WOMAN answering the phone at Assistant U.S. Attorney James Walsh's office Thursday said Walsh was out of town and read a prepared sttement attributed to Alexander Williams, chief assistant U.S. attorney.

"This office can confirm that a change of plea has been calendared by William Morgan Hetrick .... We have no other comments," the statement said.

However, Walsh has already denied defense allegations of a setup.

Hetrick, 50, who operated a small aviation company in the Mojave Desert, had pleaded innocent to possessing and conspiring to distribute cocaine and operating a continuing criminal enterprise.

An 11-count federal indictment alleged that De Lorean, 57, conspired with Hetrick to sell the drug after it was flown to the United States from South America. De Lorean has pleaded innocent.

"I have no idea exactly what his deal is," Weitzman said, "but I'm not surprised he's entering a plea and I'm not particularly worried or concerned about it."

WEITZMAN repeated arguments that his client was entrapped in the alleged drug plan and said Hetrick was part of a government setup.

Hetrick and Stephen Lee Arrington, 34, of San Diego were indicted in what prosecutors claim was a plot to distribute 220 pounds of cocaine. Arrington also pleaded innocent.

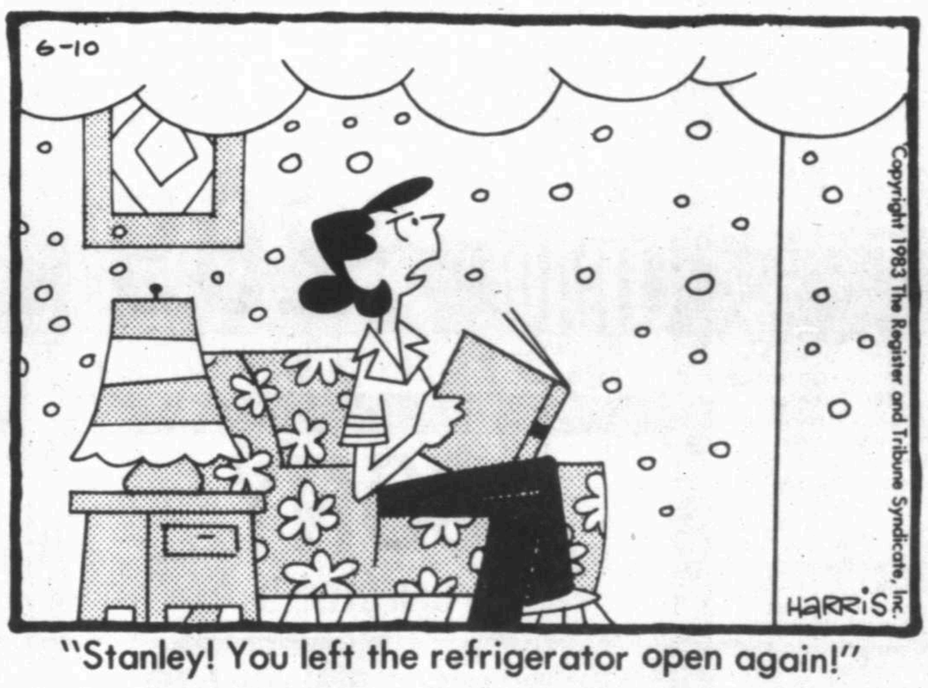
THE BETTER HALF



"Stanley! You left the refrigerator open again!"

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Saturday, June 11, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Landscape painter John Constable, English playwright-poet Ben Jonson, waltz master Richard Strauss, Green Bay coaching great Vince Lombardi and the first U.S. Congresswoman Jeanette Rankin were born on this date. Also sharing your birthday: marine explorer Jacques-Yves Cousteau, actor Chad Everett, author William Styron and philanthropist-art collector Paul Mellon. Willpower is essential if you expect to gain the ambitious goals you have set for yourself. Nothing is impossible if you are determined to make an all-out effort. Get better organized to avoid repeating previous financial mistakes. A windfall or new romance influences your long-range plans.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Developments behind the scenes affect family life in a positive way. Pay attention to details of a home repair project. Get in touch with someone you have not seen for a while.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): This is an "up" day for you emotionally. Be careful when it comes to romance. It is possible to have a good time without getting too involved. Go slow.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Stay away from people who have a negative effect on you. Socializing with old friends is especially pleasurable. Your relationship with a brother or sister shows signs of improving.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You may feel a bit lethargic early today. Someone's arrival will pick you up, however. Face up to your responsibilities. Stop waiting for the phone to ring and make the first move.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do something special for a person who has helped you in the past. You get extra cash from an unexpected source. An old romance could spring to life again.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Others are inclined to go along with almost anything you suggest today. Athletic activities give you a lift. Someone who owes you money pays up. Celebrate with mate this evening.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Tackle household chores first so that you can spend the rest of the day with family or friends. Avoid starting a job you lack the skills to finish.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): An extremely happy day for romance and events centered around home and family. You will have some wonderful choices to make soon. Look for ways to reduce daily expenses.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): No problems will develop today unless you go looking for them. Avoid those who like to gossip. You take great pleasure in decorating or repairing something.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Although you are strong, you need rest and relaxation. Restrain yourself from working seven days a week and late into the night! Accept an old friend's invitation to dinner.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Get involved in activities at home that will take your mind off work-related problems. You need to clear the cobwebs from your brain. Golf or tennis will do it!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Social activities are more rewarding than usual. Do what you can to repair a damaged romantic partnership. You are witty and smart but may not be a good judge of character.

Televisions installed in markets

PITTSBURGH (AP) — To Abe Lavi and his fledgling firm, television "prime time" is when bored shoppers wait for cold cuts at the supermarket delicatessen, or stare at magazines on the check-out line.

Lavi's firm, Check-Out-Line TV Network Inc., has installed color television sets in more than a dozen Pittsburgh-area supermarkets, offering short subjects and paid commercials to a captive audience waiting for produce, lunch meats or the cash-register total.

Supermarket television's boosters see it as a new advertising medium as potentially effective as newspapers, over-the-air television, radio, billboards or direct mailing.

"Every household has to go through a supermarket. If we reach 79 percent of households through supermarkets, we are doing a lot," Lavi said.

The 19-inch TV sets — one for every two check-out lines and one each in the delicatessen and produce sections — are hung from the supermarket's ceiling. Sound is directed down on shoppers standing in areas in front of the screens.

Supermarket television offers interested shoppers 60- to 90-second snippets on cooking, gardening, household repairs, finance, fashion, makeup, sports and community events.

Like commercial television, the feature programming draws viewers but not revenue. So supermarket television's short subjects are separated by paid commercials, its reason for being.

The features and commericals are run from videotape cycled to replay every hour.

So far, a handful of Pittsburgh-area businesses have advertised on Lavi's video system, also known as COLTv. For $76 a week, a merchant can buy 320 half-minute commercials in one supermarket, COLTv executive Kyra Bosnik said.

COLTv has not yet sold major advertising agencies on the idea of placing national television commercials in supermarkets. Mrs. Bosnik suggests that tobacco companies might return to television through supermarket advertising.

COLTv executives claim that more than 10,000 people, about two-thirds of them women controlling more than 70 percent of families' disposable income, pass through a supermarket weekly. They say shoppers spend an average of 7½ minutes on the check-out line alone.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
2 NT	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Queen of ♣.

Declarer had only three losers going in. To the delight of the defenders, he found no problem increasing that number by one.

After North's two no trump opening bid, South showed his five-card major. With three good trumps and a ruffing value, North had no hesitation in choosing the major-suit game. Had he been aware of his partner's ability, he might have chosen three no trump — cold as the cards lie if North declares.

West led the queen of clubs. Declarer won in dummy, came to hand with a trump and led a heart to the king and ace. East returned a trump and, when he won the next heart, returned another trump. Since diamonds did not break, declarer ended up losing three heart tricks and a club. Most unfortunate.

In an attempt to make an overtrick rather than be satisfied with his contract, declarer had underplayed the hand. Before he played to the first trick, he had only two heart losers and a club. There was no need for him to be charitable.

Declarer should have won the club ace and immediately led a heart from the board. Now he is a tempo ahead. A defender can win and lead a trump. Declarer wins and clears dummy's last heart. The defenders can lead a second trump, but one trump still remains in dummy. Declarer wins the second trump in hand, ruffs a heart in dummy and leads a club. He can get back to his hand with a club ruff to draw the last of the enemy's trumps and claim his contract.

Good ol' days

Being the polished politician he is, Ronald Reagan was careful while a candidate to avoid saying that if elected president he would campaign for the repeal of the windfall profits tax. He may not have said it, but he sure as heck implied it.

Since the constitutionality of the 1980 tax has been upheld by the Supreme Court, though, Congressman Kent Hance of Lubbock has decided to put Reagan on the spot on the WPT issue. Hance, whose district formerly included Midland, wrote the president a letter just the other day urging Reagan to "live up to your campaign promise of 1980 and join me and other members of Congress from energy producing states in fighting for repeal of the Windfall Profits Tax."

The congressman is stretching political valor to the limit trying to get a commitment like that from any other politician on an issue as hot as the windfall profits tax this close to a presidential election. That's right. The election may still be more than a year away but already it has had its effect on politicians. And, as we've seen in recent months. Ronald Reagan's political instincts are still as strong as ever.

It truly makes you yearn for the good old days when politicians called it as they saw it and let the chips fall where they would. Just once we'd enjoy seeing that type of political daring-do again.

Those days did exist once, didn't they?

Contrasting countries

A Soviet nuclear weapons protester, Alexander Shatravka, has been sentenced to three years in prison for anti-Soviet activities, according to his wife, Anna Gordienko. Mr. Shatravka's imprisonment is a reminder of the immense advantages Americans enjoy in comparison with their Soviet counterparts. And it is a timely reminder, in light of the current popularity of the disarmament movement in the United States.

Although Mr. Shatravka is the first Soviet nuclear arms protester known to have been given a prison term, for "anti-Soviet slander," he is not the first to feel pressure from the Soviet government. Others have been detained or have left the Soviet Union altogether. This contrasts strongly with the United States, where thousands have gathered peacefully and openly to protest U.S. weapons policy.

Soviet suppression of nuclear weapons protesters also should encourage Americans to question Moscow's sincerity in wanting to achieve an arms limitation agreement. It is noteworthy that Mr. Shatravka was calling for mutual reductions, not unilateral disarmament, on the part of the Soviet Union. The American nuclear freeze movement also calls on both sides to halt the production and deployment of nuclear weapons. Moscow's attitude casts doubt on its willingness to agree to such a treaty.

Arms control and reduction are laudable, necessary goals. But Mr. Shatravka's conviction demonstrates that Soviet cooperation may be less than we would like. It also reminds us to realistically assess the freedoms we are trying to protect.

Another View:

Purge must end

Roy P. Benavidez has a Medal of Honor, the highest award that can be given to an American serviceman for bravery in combat. With that and 40 cents, the former Green Beret can buy a cup of coffee.

President Reagan bestowed the Medal of Honor on Benavidez a little over two years ago, citing his "conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity" in saving the lives of eight American soldiers in action west of Loc Ninh, Vietnam. During his political trip to the Southwest, Mr. Reagan cited his presentation of the medal as an example of his administration's recognition of Hispanic citizens, adding that when soldiers "place their lives on the line for us, we must make sure that they know we're behind them and appreciate what they are doing."

The Social Security Administration has shown its appreciation by removing Benavidez from the disability rolls.

Benavidez says he still carries a couple of pieces of shrapnel in his heart and has a punctured lung. A career man, he stayed in the Army until 1976, when he retired with an 80 percent disability.

The Social Security Administration says he's capable of some kind of work. Thanks for placing your life on the line. Now get off your duff.

"What is wrong with these people?" Benavidez asked. "I would work if I could, but no one will hire me because no insurance company will insure me."

What is wrong with these people? When, in 1980, Congress ordered a review of the disability rolls, it certainly did not intend that the review be conducted with the kind of bureaucratic zeal and insensitivity that the Social Security Administration has demonstrated.

"People who are just clearly unable to function, let along unable to hold a job, are being put into the meat-grinder of this process," Sen. John Heinz declared at a recent hearing of the Senate Select Committee on Aging that he chairs. Some people who have received termination notices have threatened suicide. Some have carried out the threat.

The Pennsylvania Republican has introduced a bill that would impose a moratorium on the reviews until the Social Security Administration puts into effect the procedural reforms it has promised. The Reagan administration says the moratorium isn't necessary.

According to a report of the General Accounting Office, Congress's investigative arm, SSA has been using an "overly restrictive interpretation" of criteria to purge people with "severe mental impairments." Heinz's bill would require a revision of the criteria, according to recommendations of a panel of outside experts. The Reagan administration is opposed, fearing "liberalization."

What is wrong with these people? In a letter to Secretary of Health and Human Services Margaret M. Heckler, Heinz has denounced the administration's "knee-jerk negative reaction" and "specious arguments" in its effort to block needed legislative changes. The reaction of Congress ought to be promptly to approve Heinz's bill.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Economic summit just media event

WASHINGTON — Quietly but remorselessly, President Reagan has tightened his control over government news channels. He has gone to the extreme of ordering lie detector tests to discourage government employees from leaking unauthorized news.

Jack Anderson

The White House, meanwhile, controls the flood gates, skillfully directing a steady flow of favorable information to media outlets. The economic summit conference at Williamsburg, for example, was a carefully stage-managed media event. Reporters were given comfortable accomodations, fed the daily White House line and occupied with diversions. But they were effectively shut off from unauthorized versions of the Williamsburg talks.

I have seen a copy of the White House's confidential strategy paper for handling the press at Williamsburg. It provides everything but a shooting script and camera-angle directions. It even contains a list of one dozen "Desired Headlines."

"President's domestic policies highlight summit deliberations" was one headline the White House wanted to see on the front pages. Another headline they hoped to inspire: "Summit leaders to continue strong anti-inflationary stance."

Some headlines were suggested for issues that never made it. For instance: "Allies agree to speed up North Sea gas development." And after it was all over, the White House news managers wanted to read: "Summit leaders conclude Williamsburg in spirit of unity."

The strategy paper made it perfectly clear that the Williamsburg talks were to be a personal triumph for President Reagan — in the media if not in fact. Here's what the document had to say under the heading "Objective/Perceptions."

"Primary Perception — The President as leader of vision (White House emphasis) whose policies spearheaded U.S. recovery and help strengthen the West as a whole. Reaffirmation of U.S. leadership role."

Evidently recognizing the possibility that the economic jargon coming out of Williamsburg would strike many Americans as merely a good cure for insomnia, the White House media manipulators tried a bit desperately to strike some spark of interest in the public. The first of 10 "major public affairs themes" was this: "Williamsburg is a 'people-oriented' Summit."

To buttress this dubious proposition, the president's people pushed three sub-themes: "Popularly elected leaders are determining the agenda, not bureaucrats (top down); emphasis on jobs, on bread-and-butter issues that matter to everybody; (and) informality of atmosphere and no-frills environment will promote freer discussions."

If these themes sound familiar, it's because the diligent White House press agents succeeded in selling them to the bored reporters, who were kept in splendid isolation at Williamsburg and had trouble digging up any real news stories.

Generally speaking, the White House flacks were pleased with what they read in the papers. For example, the Los Angeles Times headline on May 31, the morning after the summit ended, declared: "Summit promises economic unity."

Another Times headline also came close to one the White House had written in advance: "Leaders end Williamsburg meetings seeing clear signs of world recovery."

But the news manipulators must have been disappointed at the media's failure to pick up on one of their suggested themes: "Superb logistical and administrative organization of Williamsburg Summit itself reflects dynamic U.S. leadership."

They even wrote a hopeful headline for this self-congratulatory story: "Summit partners praise Williamsburg organization." But alas, there were no takers.

Footnote: A White House spokesman told my reporters Lucette Lagnado and Leslie Adler the public relations strategy, drawn up on orders of National Security Adviser William P. Clark, was a complete success.

KEEPING IN TOUCH: When William Morris, an assistant Commerce Department secretary for trade development, quit to become vice president of the P & C Bituminous Coal Co. of Brentwood, Tenn., he didn't want his bureaucratic buddies to forget him. So before he left he thoughtfully distributed his new business card to his associates, along with a note on Commerce Department stationery saying, "I look forward to continuing our association."

A department spokesman said Morris made two mailings: the one on government stationery inside the agency, and another to outsiders that Morris paid for himself. The in-house mailing was "totally appropriate," the spokesman said.

NO SMALL CHANGE: Indecision is the mother of cost overruns. Four years after the Russell Federal Office Building in Atlanta was completed at a cost of $65 million, the taxpayers are getting stuck for another $7 million. It's to pay the contractor for the 230 changes ordered by the government during construction. One required demolition and reconstruction of an entire floor.

In a single sentence that reflects the confusion caused by the bureaucratic Hamlets, a Justice Department report says of a particular change order: "The result was change to change, to change of a change order and change to original contract work." Got that?

INSIDE REPORT:

China sees, rejects freer economy

PEKING — Leadership of the world's largest country has looked down the road at its reforms moving toward a freer economy, shuddered a little and judiciously moved back toward orthodox Communist control.

Rowland Evans

That was the unmistakable tone of the Chinese government as the National People's Congress convened here. It was encapsulated for us by Vice Premier Yao Yillin, who will address the Congress on economic reforms: "Under present circumstances, we feel there is too much decentralization in our economy, and now we need a little more centralization."

Robert Novak

Such retrenchment is attributed to economic needs, but more likely the real reason is political. Stability and prosperity were the twin goals of Deng Xiaoping as he began his reforms in 1978 after two decades of intermittent chaos; stability has taken precedence. The same insistence on iron control from the top that smothered democratic sprouts also views with alarm the decentralization of market economics.

Thus, although Chinese agriculture has been outstripping industry, profit-hungry farmers taking advantage of incentive payments displease the bureaucrats. "They think they can do what they want to do," one central planner told us, "not act according to a state plan."

Superficially, China has moved West since our last visit in December 1978. Bright colors, hair permanents and even dresses are commonplace for women. Exhortatory slogans and rhetoric have diminished. Not only are once-ubiquitous portraits of Mao Zedong long gone, but Mao's People's Communes have just been given their death sentence. The new "responsibility" system is based on cash incentives for better work.

But the Democracy Wall posters that flourished 4½ years ago are a bittersweet memory, buried along with false hopes for democratization. Self-styled democratic activists who had been in clandestine contact with Western diplomats disappeared over a year ago, part of tightened state political control. In that climate, the freedom of individual decision-making inherent in market economics is alien.

Today's centralization is typified by the new 55 percent income tax, piled atop other taxes, on profits of Chinese enterprises. Yao Yillin explained to us that the tax is needed to provide funds for "infrastructure" (transport and energy). But in addition, there was deep concern in the government over how enterprises were using their profits.

"Some of the profits were not well used," a government economist told us. But would not higher taxation undermine bonuses for industrial workers — bonuses that have worked so well for farmers? He replied, a little grumpily, that not merely bonuses but "socialist awareness" should motivate workers.

Apart from retrenchment, there is reason for doubt how fully reforms are carried out in this country of 1 billion souls. One plant manager confided recently to a Western diplomat that if he really singled out his best worker for bonuses, both manager and worker would find their bicycle tires slashed. In a country where unemployment is undisclosed but high (estimated at 20 percent for youth in prosperous Shanghai), featherbedding vitiates productivity.

On this trip, as on our 1978 visit, the sight of idle workers in factories was familiar. That explains why the Capital Iron and Steel Complex outside Peking (which we visited) shows no gain in productivity. It employs an astounding 72,000 workers (20,000 in mining) to produce 12 million tons of steel annually.

Even the new, well-publicized abolition of People's Communes so far is limited to pilot projects. Nevertheless, the "responsibility" system has triumphed in agriculture where, Yao Yillin told us, "The enthusiasm of the peasants has been greatly increased." By cold cash? "Yes," he replied, "they are able to make more money."

But those peasants, quite naturally, prefer to grow non-essential fruits, such as persimmons, whose prices are irrationally high under the government's decreed price system, rather than grow lower-priced grains. The price system is supposed to be changed soon, but why not let the market set all prices? The answer from Liu Suinien, a member of the National Planning Commission, is revealing: "Grain is too important to the economy for its price to be set by market forces."

If over 30 years of communism and turbulence have not dimmed the Chinese peasant's profit motive, neither have they dulled the Chinese bureaucrat's demand for control. When we asked Liu whether the Yugoslav model of workers' self-management might suit China, he said of the Yugoslavs: "They only look at their own interests, not the state's. Workers and management (there) come together against the state's interests." The state and party still transcend all in China, which provides a clue to what really happened to Sino-American relations — the subject of our final column from China.

Sanctioning toxic ideas kills society

We seem to be turning a corner on the question of pornography. More and more communities are successfully cracking down on the porno peddlars and this is certainly a good thing.

Pornography is not a First Amendment issue. No literature or political ideas are to be found in a porno book store. People who imagine that pornography is what they see in a girlie magazine at a news stand don't know what they are talking about. Pornography is more than that.

We all know that the human body is not itself obscene. Nor is sex. Both are gifts of God. What makes pornography obscene is that it reduces the human being to a lump of meat without soul or brain and divorces sex from human affection. That is not a basis on which a decent, civilized society can be built. The advantage of legally banishing pornography is not that you will eliminate it but that you do not sanction it.

Laws forbidding murder and robbery haven't eliminated murder and robbery and they never will but they express society's disapproval of those acts. It is good for our society to express its disapproval of sex without affection.

A human being stripped of those feelings we call respect and affection is a dangerous creature. A world peopled with creatures who sought only to indulge their physical desires would be a nightmarish world of cruelty, brutality and violence.

Religion, ethics, laws, customs and rituals all serve the social purpose of directing and channeling man's raw energies into non-destructive outlets. The results over the centuries have been uneven and pornography is always the enemy of the effort toward civilization. It is generally associated with the decay of a civilization.

You can't teach a young man that a woman is only an animated object to be used for his own gratification without at the same time teaching him that all people are just objects to be used. That's the message of the pornographer: not freedom from hangups, but freedom from one's humanity and freedom from the reponsibility to relate to other human beings in a non-exploitive manner.

That's why pornography is not a victimless crime as some overly-simplistic types argue. Putting a toxic substance into a public water supply is not a victimless crime and neither is injecting toxic ideas, for ideas have consequences as surely as chemical compounds have physical qualities.

Since ideas are intangible and cannot be physically eliminated, a society protects itself from toxic ideas by withdrawing its approval and sanction. It was the sanctioning by the Nazi government of anti-semitism that killed six million Jews. It was the sanctioning by state governments of the idea of racial prejudice that caused people to be lynched and subjected to other forms of humiliation and injustice.

You cannot eliminate anti-semitism, racial prejudice, or pornography, but you can withdraw your approval. It is less important that every individual in a society live up to its ideals than it is that the society have a set of ideals and incorporate those ideals into its laws.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, June 10th, the 161st day of 1983. There are 204 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On June 10, 1610, the first Dutch settlers in America landed on Manhattan Island.

On this date:

In 1776, the Continental Congress in Philadelphia named a committee to draft the Declaration of Independence.

In 1942, the Nazi Gestapo killed 173 male residents of Lidice, Czechoslovakia, to retaliate for the assassination of a German official.

In 1967, Israel agreed to a United Nations ceasefire with Egypt, with the Israelis holding conquered territory four times its own size.

And in 1972, a flash flood hit Rapid City, S.D., resulting in 236 deaths.

Ten years ago today: The Soviet Union announced stricter controls on the movement of Americans in the Moscow area.

Five years ago: The exiled former president of Panama, Arnulfo Arias, returned home 10 years after his ouster in a military coup.

One year ago: The Republican-backed budget — which included the largest-ever peacetime increase in military spending — was approved by the U.S. House of Representatives.

Today's birthdays: Britain's Prince Philip is 62 years old. Former astronaut James McDivitt is 54.

Thought for today: "I like a man who grins when he fights." — Winston Churchill, British statesman (1874-1965).

Blood identified on prehistoric stone

WASHINGTON (AP) — Blood residues found on prehistoric stone tools and weapons were so well preserved that a Canadian archaeologist says he determined they came from humans and seven other animal species.

In an article to be published today in the journal Science, Thomas H. Loy of the British Columbia Provincial Museum in Victoria reports that some of the human blood may have come a person who accidentally cut himself on sharp stone.

Experts had previously believed that prehistoric blood residues would have decomposed. But Loy says he could identify residues of blood from caribou, black-tailed deer, Stone Mountain sheep, moose, grizzly bears, snowshoe rabbits and California sea lions on artifacts ranging in age from 1,000 to 6,000 years old.

The blood of both caribou and grizzly bear appeared to be streaked across a 2,830-year-old artifact, the oldest with an absolute date, Loy said. Traces of human blood were found on three more recent artifacts. Some blood was found on a small, triangular projectile point that "probably is an arrowhead," Loy said in a telephone interview.

Loy says two other human blood samples may have been the result of a person accidentally cutting himself while chipping stone to make a tool.

"When I make replicas of stone tools, I invariably cut myself because my fingers are in there close to the chipping," said the scientist. "This easily could have happened to someone else long ago."

Loy said that of the 104 items he examined from four widely differing archaeological sites, 90 of them showed definite surface blood deposits. Varying tests confirm the presence of red blood cells, a blood component called hemoglobin and amino acids that come from proteins, he added.

"Animal and plant tissue, feather barbules, and hair fragments have also been observed," he said in the report.

The archaeologist said hd thinks the thin films of blood were preserved because they had a chance to dry and fix to the stone in air and sunlight before being buried. Static electricity bound fine particles of clay or sand to the blood film, he theorizes, adding a protective layer.

Because these proteins are relatively stable, he said, it may be possible to identify them on artifacts up to 20,000 years old.

Loy said scientists had not previously examined such artifacts for blood and other organic material because everyone assumed it could not have lasted in an unprotected state.

The discovery, Loy said, raises the possibility of re-examining other artifacts for traces of blood or other organic material. The existence of the blood traces may make it possible for scientists to learn about the types of food eaten by prehistoric man and other things about the way he lived, he said.

When other archaeologists began looking at the finish on stone tools in hopes of understanding their use by the polish on the surface, Loy said he got the idea to look for other things that might influence surface characteristics.

By mixing rock scrapings in special salt solutions under controlled conditions, Loy said he was able to grow hemoglobin crystals which have distinctive shapes.

He prays by day, rapes by night

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Police said he led a double life — impressing others as a a devout Christian during the day, then stalking Hollywood streets by night, raping some 100 women in the last several years, including one who died after being attacked.

And yesterday, prosecutors formally charged Jerald Curtis Johns, 32, with 90 felony counts stemming from 11 of those rapes. The charges include murder, rape, forced sodomy, forced oral copulation, robbery, burglary, forcible sexual battery and assault with intent to commit rape.

At his arraignment in Los Angeles Municipal Court yesterday, Johns pleaded innocent to the charges and was ordered into custody in lieu of $800,000 bail.

His alleged realm encompassed a 10-block area in Hollywood, said Jacqueline Connor, who heads the district attorney's Sexual Crimes Program. Lt. Ed Hocking, of the Los Angels Police Department, said only a small percentage of the 100 rapes they believe Johns may be responsible for were reported to police.

The 11 sexual attacks in which Johns is charged took place between January 1982 and this month, the lieutenant said, adding that the man who committed those attacks would threaten his victims — who ranged in age from 24 to 71 — with a knife.

The murder charge stems from the Dec. 11, 1982, death of Sandra Trine, 37, who choked to death on her own vomit after being sexually attacked, Connor said.

TESCO requests rate increase

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Electric Service Co. has filed a request for $195 million in higher rates that would mean a 20 percent jump in the average residential power bill, company officials said.

The proposed increase, filed Thursday with the Public Utility Commission, is TESCO's fifth rate-increase request since the PUC came into existence in 1976.

TESCO president Bill Marquardt said the increase in necessary because of inflation and high interest rates on money the company has borrowed to finance construction — mostly for the Comanche Peak nuclear power plant near Glen Rose.

Immigration bill to be considered

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The House Agriculture committee will hear from Texas cattlemen and shrimp fishermen when members consider the proposed new immigration bill next Wednesday.

The Texas Gulf Shrimp association will be represented, also the National cattlemen's association. The latter's officials came to Washington earlier this year to oppose an increase in permanent immigration quotas but would like to see better arrangements for temporary agricultural workers.

Reagan calls infant's mom

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — President Reagan while in Minneapolis on a busy tour Thursday took time off to telephone the mother of an Abilene baby at University Hospital who is awaiting a liver transplant.

The President has been involved in this case from the start, helping to make arrangements for some $65,000 of medicare funds to be made available from the federal and Texas state governments to help pay hospital costs. The remainder of the total, $140,000, was contributed by West Texans.

Meanwhile, the Surgeon General of the United States and Project Hope, private volunteer health organization in Virginia, and Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Abilene were busy at a press conference setting up plans for a coordinated appeal and supply system to get organs from donors to people who can use them.

Cisneros to woo Japanese

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Mayor Henry Cisneros plans a New York trip next week to woo Japanese businessmen and about 50 other high-level business people with details of San Antonio's economic climate.

The Japanese businessmen who will meet with Cisneros all operate firms in the United States.

The meetings are "to try to increasé awareness of the people who make investment decisions in those firms," said Helen Kiselev, assistant director of San Antonio's Department of Economic and Employment Development.

Nurse had taken overdose, paper says

Hearst Feature Service

SAN ANTONIO — The nurse charged with murdering an infant took an overdose of drugs last September and left a note saying she had "ruined the lives of seven people," according to a copyrighted story in the San Antonio Light.

Genene Jones took the drug, succinylcholine, after being questioned about a vial of succinylcholine that had been tampered with, the Light reported.

A grand jury indicted Jones, the mother of two, on May 25 for murder-by-injection of 15-month old Chelsea McClellan and injury to McClellan and six other children.

The indictments alleged that the murder and the injuries resulted from injections with succinylcholine or some other unknown substance.

SUCCINYLCHOLINE, A muscle-relaxing drug which can cause paralysis of the respiratory system, is normally used in conjunction with a respirator when administered to children.

Houston attorney James Perdue has filed a $7 million wrongful death suit against pediatrician Kathleen Holland and Ms. Jones in connection with the McClellan child's death.

A hearing is scheduled for Monday in Kerrvilleon a plea to move a civil damage suit against Jones involving one of the other children to Tom Green County, where Ms. Jones moved after leaving Kerrville.

Ms. Jones wrote the note and took the drug overdose on Sept. 27, 1982, in Holland's office within hours after the doctor confronted her with questions about an uncapped vial of the drug.

"It's like a developing soap opera. First we had to fight off cultism, then homosexuality, and a now a suicide attempt...We're fighting off a bunch of untrue stories that someone keeps fabricating and spreading out."
—William Chenault, attorney

Sources close to the investigation said Jones was admitted to Sid Peterson Hospital after the apparent suicide attempt and was discharged the following day, although hospital officials refused to confirm the dates.

FOLLOWING HER discharge on Sept. 28, Ms. Jones returned to the Kerrville clinic and was fired by Dr. Holland.

The pediatrician said in a sworn statement that she fired the nurse for her "inability to explain the vial of succinylcholine and its apparent needle holes."

In a deposition taken May 13 in San Antonio, Dr. Holland said she found the tampered bottle and later learned the bottle contained only water.

According to five independent sources, Dr. Holland discovered the drugged nurse in her office some hours after their confrontation and found the hand-written letter, in which Ms. Jones allegedly stated she had "ruined the lives of seven people."

Kerr County District Attorney Ron Sutton confirmed that the Jones letter was in his possession, but he declined to reveal its contents.

MS. JONES' ATTORNEY, William Chenault, strongly denied that the overdose was a suicide attempt, and he said the note "did not resemble a suicide note."

Chenault said the nurse, who had been suffering from stomach problems and was taking tranquilizers, simply took too many.

The attorney described the hand-written letter as remorseful and its tone as something to the effect of: "I worked for you. I tried to do my best. Why did you do it to me?"

He said the reference to "seven lives" could be interpreted in many ways, and possibly was a reference to Jones' family and friends who would be affected by the firing.

"The doctor let her go — and she was real sad about it. Her whole life was working as a nurse and she was very upset about it," Chenault said.

CHENAULT SAID a second letter was also written by Ms. Jones, but he said it was not related.

Chenault was highly critical Thursday of individuals leaking information about the Jones case.

"It's like a developing soap opera. First we had to fight off cultism, then homosexuality, and a now a suicide attempt.

"We're fighting off a bunch of untrue stories that someone keeps fabricating and spreading out," he said.

Horns barge into finals

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — If it could have been written in advance, the script for the 1983 College World Series couldn't have been any better for Texas baseball Coach Cliff Gustafson.

"This is pretty much the way I'd like to have it," said Gustafson after his No. 1-ranked Longhorns defeated Alabama 6-4 in a 10-inning winners bracket final here Thursday night.

"We really hope we can take back the championship. Nothing else really matters. I'm extremely proud of this ball club having won three games here and earning a spot in the championship game, but if we don't win that championship it won't matter," he said.

Texas, 64-14, won an automatic spot in the NCAA Division I title game. The Longhorns, making their 22nd appearance and having won the title in 1975, must face Michigan, 50-8, 7:10 p.m. tonight, following Alabama, 45-10, against Arizona State, 44-23, at 4:10 p.m.

The winners will advance to Saturday's 6:10 p.m. contest, which could be for the title should Texas win Friday night. A Texas loss would match Michigan against Friday's first-game winner for the right to meet Texas in a Sunday title game at 6:10 p.m.

Texas pitching shut down the hot bats from Alabama in Thursday's contest of tournament unbeatens. The Crimson Tide had a .340 team batting average and the nation's leading hitter, David Magadan, coming into the series.

But Calvin Schiraldi, a 14-2 first-round pick in Monday's major league baseball draft, put the clamps on the Tide. He fanned 11 in 5 1-3 innings of relief.

Freshman second baseman Bill Bates sparked the Texas offense with his three runs scored and game-winning RBI with a double in the 10th.

Schiraldi had a 4-3 lead and had retired seven straight batters heading into the eight when he faced Madagan, who had eight hits in nine at bats coming into the game. The Alabama junior hit a pitch over the left field fence to even the game.

After Rob Skates' double to left, Schiraldi struck out the side. He gave up another double and a walk to bring Magadan to the plate with two out in the bottom of the ninth.

He fanned Magadan to end the threat, then struck out the side in the bottom of the 10th to secure the victory.

The Midland Cubs were giving away rain gear to the kids at Cubs Stadium Thursday night, but it didn't rain. It should have.

The Beaumont Gators downed the puny Cubbies for the third straight time, taking a 5-1 victory behind the sterling pitching of starter Frank Ricci (3-1) and reliever Jim Oberbruner.

The only good news for the Cubs was a rain jacket promotion crowd of 1,562 and an RBI single by Tom Lombarski in the eighth to avoid a shutout. Little else worked for the good of the Cubs, who twice failed to score with the bases loaded and less than two outs.

RICCI, BY his own admission, wasn't sharp, but the Cubs collected only three hits off him in 5⅓ innings. Gator manager Jack Maloof lifted Ricci with one out in the sixth with a 3-0 lead after he walked Bill Hatcher and tossed two balls to Lombarski.

"I wasn't angry at being pulled as I was disappointed with the way I pitched. I didn't give up any runs, but I was ahead of only six of 22 hitters all night," Ricci said. "The Cubs hit some shots off me, but they were at people. My fielders were my backbone tonight."

Ricci got out of a jam in the fourth when he got the slumping Carlos Lezcano to ground into a bases loaded double play.

Oberbruner, who gave up Midland's sole run in the eighth, avoided futher trouble in the inning when he got Randy LaVigne on a pop to first and Lezcano on a grounder to the mound with the bases loaded. Lezcano, who is only two for 15 in the homestand, twice failed to produce with the bases loaded. Lombarski had singled home Rick Baker earlier in the inning.

"I wasn't disappointed in losing the shutout," said Oberbruner. "A relief pitcher's job is to keep the other team down and I did that. But our starting pitchers have been very good lately and that's a big reason for our success."

"Only two weeks ago, we were five games out of first place and really not in the race," said Ricci. "Now we've put ourselves in first place with some good ball."

MIDLAND STARTER Stan Kyles (2-5) pitched three shutout innings to match Ricci early, but a triple off the glove of Midland centerfielder Baker by Randy Kaczmarski and a wild pitch by Kyles gave the Gators the lead in the fourth.

"I thought it was an out all the way, but someone said that he (Baker) broke back on the ball and just barely got to it," Kaczmarski said.

Beaumont won it in the sixth when Mark Gillaspie victimized Baker again with a triple that scored John Kruk from first base. Baker let the ball get over his head in deep center after breaking in on the ball.

"I bet he (Baker) never saw the ball. It was a light sky with no clouds and it was really hard to see out there," Gillaspie said.

Gillaspie scored on a grounder by James Steels and the Gators got single runs in the seventh and eighth on sacrifice flies by Dan Purpura and Mark Parent.

The loss leaves the Cubs 7½ games out of first and in last place in the Texas League West and nine games under the .500 mark, but the main trouble right now is the fact that the Cubs face Beaumont through Sunday before hosting the San Antonio Dodgers. The Gators are licking their chops over that prospect after three straight victories.

Grand jury to probe Bosox' Valdez on rape charges

BOSTON (AP) — A grand jury will investigate statutory rape charges against Boston Red Sox infielder Julio Valdez, who was arrested last month after a 14-year-old runaway girl said she had sex with him in a hotel.

After listening to about three hours of testimony at a probable cause hearing in Roxbury District Court Thursday, Jufge Julian Houston referred the case to a Suffolk County grand jury.

The girl, who will turn 15 on Wednesday, testified that she had sex with Valdez in his room at a Howard Johnson's hotel in Boston on April 5, the night of the Red Sox season home-opening game.

Valdez, 27, who is married, testified on his own behalf, partly through an interpreter. He denied ever having sex with the girl or even discussing it with her.

He has not played for the American League team since his arrest on May 6. Valdez, a native of the Dominican Republic, was arrested in the Red Sox clubhouse at Fenway Park during a game. He was taken away in handcuffs.

McHone serious Spurs candidate

SAN ANTONIO — San Antonio assistant coach Morris McHone is a "serious candidate" for the Spurs' heading coach job, which should be filled by the weekend, claims Angelo Drossos, Spurs president.

Former head coach Stan Albeck was hired this week by the New Jersey Nets.

"Morris McHone will be with this franchise a very long time, in what capacity I cannot say at this time," Drossos said, refusing to elaborate.

San Antonio General Manager Bob Bass stopped short of calling McHone, who has been a Spurs assistant the past three years, management's No. 1 choice.

"I think he's a definite prospect," Bass said. "I'll give him one thing. He's got experience — not as a head coach — but he's got a good basketball background."

McHone said he felt "good" about his chances."

Managers know no fear

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

It was General Grant, I believe, who said, "Always give your enemy room to surrender." Seneca advised, "Always flatter the foolish" and Metternich — or maybe it was Kissinger — said, "Never condemn the fallen till you're sure they can't get up."

Football coaches know this principle very well. A football coach's nightmare is that he will somehow incautiously steel up the determination of his opposition by a careless remark that can be put up on a bulletin board.

"Stagg Fears Purdue" was a standing headline in Midwest papers in the era when Amos Alonzo Stagg's University of Chicago teams were the scourge of the Big Ten and Purdue was a collection of confused ironmongers. Stagg didn't fear Purdue. He feared giving them a psychological edge. Stagg feared a headline, "Stagg Despises Purdue." No matter how true it was.

But baseball managers never seem to get the picture. You may recall the year 1934 when the New York Giants were champions of the baseball world and their manager, Bill Terry, in a rare lapse into wit, responded to a writer's question "What about Brooklyn?" with a contemptuous "Brooklyn? Is Brooklyn still in the league?"

THAT INCAUTIOUS remark grew into a rallying point which saw Brooklyn not only in the league but in the Polo Grounds the last two days of the season, when it beat the Giants both times to knock them out of the pennant race and put the Cardinals in the World Series.

Some 17 years later, Charlie Dressen was managing Brooklyn and enjoying a 13-game lead late in the season when he was moved by Lord knows what demon to observe ungrammatically and — as it turned out — inaccurately, "The Jints is dead." The Giants, far from dead, caught the Dodgers and beat them in a playoff on a Bobby Thomson home run in the bottom of the ninth.

You would think history would impel any manager, particularly a Dodgers manager, to choose his words carefully in discussing a pennant rival. But, as Santayana tells us, "Those who ignore history are doomed to repeat it." And Dodgers Manager Tommy Lasorda seemed on a collision course with history when he took to the airwaves in last year's pennant playoff to relieve himself of a few opinions about the Atlanta ballclub. While stopping well short of asking whether it was still in the league, his words at least had the effect of questioning its qualifications to be in it.

LASORDA did say, in commenting on the speed, or lack of it, of Braves catcher Bruce Benedict, "In a race with a pregnant woman, he'd finish third." He did or did not say of the Braves' pennant, "They're sitting in the clubhouse in San Diego while Joe Morgan wins it for them in San Francisco."

Whether he said it or not is moot. It's also beside the point. The point is, Atlanta thinks he said it.

NOW, ATLANTA has been kind of a laid-back member of the National League West for some years. The trick, it would seem to most people, is to keep them that way, to lull them into even further complacency, to let them keep counting their stock options in fourth place. A headline "Lasorda Fears Atlanta" would be nice from time to time.

What Lasorda really should have said, if pressed on the matter of Bruce Benedict's time in the 90-foot run, would have been something ambiguous, like "Well, Bruce Benedict is not fast, you'd have to say, but, shoot! he pops up most of the time and you don't need speed for that, now, do you?"

There is a form that can be observed in these matters. Say the Braves did win the pennant sitting on their duffs in a clubhouse, which they surely did. Is that any reason to wake them up? Your move is to keep them in the frame of minday of a club waiting for someone else to do their work for them. What you say in a case like that is, "You have to admire Atlanta gutting it out like that, taking their showers and packing their bags and sitting there like a team watching the telecast of the San Francisco-Dodgers game. I mean, that's togetherness!"

YOU HAVE to watch out for the "Is Atlanta still in the league?" traps. Resort to "I'll say Atlanta is still in the league! Finished last four times in a row between 1976 and '80. Where would the rest of us be without Atlanta to kick around? You would have to say they're like the fighter who can take it. Baseball needs doormats, you know. They're indispensable for restoring your confidence, for ending slumps. They're like a Red Cross nurse out there."

There are many ways, as the late Herman Hickman said, to keep the opposition "sullen but not mutinous." You don't give the enemy a rallying cry like "Remember the Maine!" or "Millions for defense but not one cent for tribute!" If Atlanta wins the pennant now, it can lay it all to the flying feet of Bruce Benedict and because of the one thing in this world Tommy Lasorda can't eat — his words.

Breezes of revolt waft Queen's Club

LONDON (AP) — The first breeze of a tennis players' revolt over the Guillermo Vilas case is ruffling the leaves around the Queen's Club.

Stars competing in the Stella Artois tournament, a warm-up event on grass courts before Wimbledon, are lining up behind Guillermo Vilas and making unfriendly remarks about the Men's International Professional Tennis Council.

Vilas was suspended for a year and fined $20,000 dollars because he is alleged to have taken appearance money for a tournament in Rotterdam, Netherlands, in addition to the approved prize money and expenses.

"What is wrong with paying appearance money?" said John McEnroe.

"To make an example of one man is ridiculous," said Ivan Lendl.

The last time anything like this happened before Wimbledon was in 1973, when Nikki Pilic was suspended because he refused to play for Yugoslavia in a Davis Cup match.

Ted, Steve both got hitters out

An AP Sports Analysis
By JOHN NELSON

A bit of trivia. What does Theodore Amar Lyons not have in common with Steve Carlton?

Better known as Ted Lyons, the Sunday pitcher, this Hall of Famer hurled 594 games for the Chicago White Sox from 1923-46, some 21 years and 4,161 innings. He ended his career with 260 victories.

He pitched from the era of Walter Johnson to the heyday of Early Wynn, but there is one thing he never learned. He just couldn't throw the ball past the batter.

He ended his career with only 1,073 strikeouts, an average of only one batter for about every four innings he pitched or a little more than two a game. Philadelphia lefthander Carlton, baseball's new strikeout king with 3,526, averages 7.25 strikeouts per game.

IN HIS BEST season, Lyons was 22-14 in 1927, striking out only 71 batters in 307 2/3 innings. Carlton, in his most prolific year of 1972, the first of his four Cy Young Award seasons, was 27-10 with 310 strikeouts in 246 innings.

A lot of other pitchers have had great seasons or careers without striking out a lot of batters. Eddie Lopat, the great New York Yankees' left-hander, was 21-9 in 1951 with only 93 strikeouts and 16-4 in 1953 with 50 strikeouts.

More recently, Randy Jones won the Cy Young Award with the San Diego Padres in 1976, going 22-14 with 93 strikeouts in 315 innings. Mark Fidrych had only 97 strikeouts in his 19-9 Rookie of the Year season in 1976 with Detroit. And Tommy John was 22-9 in 1980 with the Yankees, striking out only 78 batters.

THE POINT, of course, is that the ability of a Hall of Fame pitcher cannot always be measured in strikeouts.

Take, for example, Nolan Ryan of the Houston Astros, who broke Johnson's record of 3,508 strikeouts in April before being passed this week by Garlton. Ryan leads all pitchers in strikeouts per game with an average of 9.44, yet his lifetime record is only 208-187. He has been a 20-game winner only twice. When his name comes up for Hall of Fame consideration, the debate will be heated.

Not so with Carlton. It has been said before but is worth repeating: Carlton's strikeouts are a byproduct of his greatness. He strikes out batters because he's good, not vice versa.

"He is like any good, or great, pitcher," said St. Louis shortstop Ozzie Smith, who managed to avoid being struck out last Tuesday night when Carlton passed Ryan by striking out six Cardinals' batters. "If he has three or four pitches he can throw for strikes, he can be effective. That's the way Carlton is. He can throw all his pitches for strikes."

The 38-year-old Carlton is a fastball-slider pitcher. His top speed is in the 87-88 mph range; he rarely reaches 90 mph. He throws the slider hard, making him tough on right-handed hitters. In fact, he throws it so hard, it sometimes might be difficult to distinguish from his fastball, but Smith said that's not the toughest thing about it. It's that Carlton varies the pitch's trajectory.

"YOU CAN usually tell it from the fastball when he throws it, but sometimes it breaks down and sometimes it doesn't," Smith said. "He can start it in the strike zone and break it out, or he can start it out of the strike zone and break it back in. It's a lot like a Phil Niekro knuckleball. It doesn't always break the same way."

It's possible that Smith never has heard of Ted Lyons, and surely he's too young to ever have seen him. He's seen plenty of Steve Carlton, though, and in his assessment of the ironman lefty, he found the similarity between the two.

"There's one thing that makes a good pitcher a great pitcher," Smith said. "He can always find a way to get you out."

Even if it isn't on a strikeout.

Hey, these greens fast

CLEVELAND (AP) — How fast are the greens at Canterbury Golf Course?

"I marked one ball with a dime, and the dime slid off the green," quipped Gay Brewer, who fired a 3-under-par 69 Thursday to share the first-round lead with Rod Funseth in the $250,000 Senior Tournament Players Championship.

Richest Belmont ever

NEW YORK (AP) — In a year in which quantity has been mentioned more often than quality in connection with the 3-year-old division, 15 colts will contest the biggest and richest Belmont Stakes ever Saturday.

Asked why there have been so many different winners of 3-year-old stakes this year, trainer Woody Stephens said Thursday, "because none of them is worth much."

Stephens will saddle Caveat in a bid for a second straight victory in the 1½-mile Belmont. Last year, he won with Conquistador Cielo.

Also entered for the Belmont, which marks the 10th anniversary of Secretariat's 31-length victory which made him the first Triple Crown champion in 25 years, will be Deputed Testamony, the Preakness winner; Slew O' Gold, a son of 1977 Triple Crown winner Seattle Slew, and High Honors.

Missing will be Sunny's Halo, the Kentucky Derby winner, who was sixth in the Preakness, and Desert Wine, second in both the Derby and Preakness. Sunny's Halo is the first Derby winner to miss the Belmont since Dust Commander in 1970.

If all 15 start, under 126 pounds each, the richest Belmont will be worth $358,500, with $215,100 to the winner.

Post time is 4:35 p.m., with CBS televising from 3:30 p.m. to 5 p.m.

The most Belmont starters were 14 in 1875, when Calvin won. There were 13 horses each in 1877, when Cloverbrook won, and in 1977, when Pass Catcher won as Canonero II finished fourth in a bid for the Triple Crown.

"Sidney's lit a fire under his horse now," said Stephens of Slew O' Gold, trained by Sidney Watters.

Slew O' Gold, who was fourth in the 1¼-mile Derby and skipped the 1 3-16-mile Preakness, will try to duplicate the feat of his half-brother Coastal in 1979.

Coastal, who missed both the Derby and Preakness, won the Peter Pan, then won the Belmont over Golden Act and Spectacular Bid, who was trying for the Triple Crown.

Slew O' Gold, ridden by Angel Cordero Jr., prepped for the Belmont with a sizzling 12-length victory in the 1⅛-mile Peter Pan May 29 at Belmont.

That performance pushed the Equusequity Stable colt, who drew the rail Thursday, into the early 2-1 favorite's role.

Second at 5-2 is Caveat, the Kentucky Derby third-place finisher owned by August Belmont IV, followed by Daniel M. Galbreath's High Honors, 6-1, and Deputed Testamony, owned by trainer J. William Boniface and his father, Bill, and Francis Sears, 8-1.

Other contenders could be Barberstown, who won the Will Rogers on the grass at Hollywood Park May 21 and is unbeaten in three career starts; Balboa Native, winner of the Louisiana Derby and ninth in the Kentucky Derby; Current Hope, 11th in the Kentucky Derby and third in a grass race at Belmont June 2, and Dixieland Band, winner of the Pennsylvania Derby, and Megaturn, winner of four of six races, all this year.

Outsiders are Au Point, Princilian and the mutuel field of White Birch, El Cubanaso, Canadian Factor and Law Talk.

Caveat, who closed well to be third, 2¼ lengths behind Sunny's Halo in the Derby, skipped the Preakness, then prepped for the Belmont by winning a 1 1-16-mile allowance race in the mud at Belmont May 30. He will start from the No. 6 post under Laffit Pincay Jr.

Deputed Testamony, who stays at the Boniface farm at Belair, Md., until the last possible minute before being vanned to a race.

SPORTS IN BRIEF

Bench to call it quits

By Associated Press

BASEBALL— Johnny Bench, who built Hall of Fame credentials for 13 major-league seasons as a catcher for the Cincinnati Reds, will retire at the end of the 1983 season. Bench, selected to the NL All-Star team 13 times in 16 seasons, and twice was the league's MVP, holds records for most career home runs by a catcher, 324, and equaled Bill Dickey's major-league record by catching 100 or more games in 13 consecutive years through 1980.

GOLF— Rod Funseth and Gay Brewer shot 3-under-par 69s to share the first in the $250,000 Senior TPC at Canterbury GC while one back at 70 were Bob Rosburg, Gene Littler, and Jerry Barber.

TENNIS— Anne White upset Evonne Goolagong, 6-2, 7-5, in the Edgbaston Cup while Alycia Moulton eliminated Rosalyn Fairbank, 7-6, 1-6, 6-3; Nancy Yeargin beat Rafaela Reggi 6-4, 7-5;Sharon Walsh ousted Claudia Monteiro, 6-4, 6-2; Zina Garrison downed Christiane Jolissaint 1-6, 6-2, 6-2;and Elizabeth Sayers won over Lele Forood 6-1, 7-5.

Jimmy Connors defeated Hanks Pfister 6-4, 6-2 to the Stella Artois quarterfinals. John McEnroe bested Cassio Motta, 7-5, 6-2; Ivan Lendl downed Paul McNamee 6-2, 6-2;Kevin Curren beat Wojtek Fibak 6-3, 6-3; Steve Denton overcame Todd Nelson 7-6, 3-6, 17-15; andPat Cash defeated Craig Wittus 6-2, 6-3.

HORSE RACING— Big Boss Too, 14.80, outran South Canyon to win the $11,000 feature at Louisiana Downs... Aguila, $14.80, edged Duc Le Duc by a head to win the $35,000 Studio City Purse.

Mets cool off Cubs in extra innings, 6-4

By Associated Press

Bob Knepper and Bruce Berenyi took a couple of things into their own hands — bats as well as baseballs.

Knepper, who had been on a personal six-game losing streak, pitched a two-hitter — his second shutout, second complete game and second victory of the season — and drilled a mammoth run-scoring triple as the Houston Astros defeated San Francisco 3-0 Thursday night.

Berenyi, who had been on a personal four-game skid — the same length as Cincinnati's tailspin — scattered seven San Diego hits and contributed a two-run double as the Reds pounded the Padres 8-1.

"I was off to a 1-8 start," said Knepper. "You can justify all you want to but you're paid to win ballgames — and I wasn't doing that. This is really satisfying. It's been too long in coming.

"Last season when the season started, I didn't have a good curveball. I started messing around with a cut fastball (a sinking fastball) and made it my second pitch. Without realizing it, I was starting to nibble around the plate and get behind the hitters. I just went back to my bread-and-butter pitches, what got me here." What it got him was 10 strikeouts, matching his personal best.

Phil Garner, with a double, and Jose Cruz, with a triple, each drove in a run for Houston in the first inning, then Bill Doran doubled in the second inning and scored on Knepper's triple to center field.

Reds 8, Padres 1

Berenyi hadn't won since May 7. Like Knepper, he decided it was time to get back to basics.

"In my recent starts I was just trying to stay within myself. Tonight I said I was just going to let it all hang out," he said after striking out eight Padres. "I threw the ball as hard as I could with each pitch."

Paul Householder, with a double in the second inning, Berenyi, with a double in the sixth, and Gary Redus, with a single in the eighth, each drove in two runs for Cincinnati.

Dodgers 4, Braves 2

Steve Yeager drove in all of the Dodgers' runs, three of them with an eight-inning bouncer up the first-base line that turned into a tie-breaking triple when Chris Chambliss failed to short-hop the ball.

"It was cheap, but I'll take it," Yeager said. "I couldn't have placed it any better."

"I thought I could get it," Chambliss said. "It was just a slow-hit ball that I didn't catch."

Yeager also had a second-inning RBI grounder. Claudell Washington singled and doubled, driving in one run and scoring one for the Braves.

Pirates 6, Expos 3

Tony Pena drove in three runs with a single and a double and Larry McWilliams survived 10 Montreal hits and hit a two-run double in Pittsburgh's romp against Steve Rogers, the ace of the Expos' pitching staff.

The Pirates raked Rogers for 11 hits and all of their runs in 4 2-3 innings, his earliest departure since Sept. 17, 1981. "I wasn't getting what I thought were strikes at the bottom of the strike zone," he said.

Phils 6, Cards 5

St. Louis' hard-luck hurler, Joaquin Andujar, took a four-hitter and a 5-1 lead into the eighth inning. But Pete Rose doubled, Greg Gross and Joe Lefebvre singled for a run, then Joe Morgan hit his second homer of the game and fifth of the year to tie it up.

And in the 11th, Von Hayes reached base on a one-out error by shortstop Ozzie Smith and Rose singled Hayes to third. When Gross failed to make contact on an attempted suicide squeeze, Hayes was trapped and tagged out. But Rose took second during the run-down and raced home with the winning run when Bob Dernier singled up the middle.

Mets 6, Cubs 4

New York, limited to one hit through seven innings, woke up with four runs in the eighth and went on to end the Cubs 7-game winning streak.

Chicago tied it in the ninth, the Mets won it in the 11th on Bob Bailor's two-out, two-run double.

Mike Proly retired the first two batters in the 11th before Mike Jorgensen, who had triggered the big eighth with a pinch-double, doubled again. Danny Heep was intentionally walked before Bailor delivered.

Bosox skid to 4th after Tigers' sweep

By Associated Press

Detroit's street corners will be buzzing with this one, Tigers right-hander Dan Petry says.

It will be a source of pride for a long time. The Detroit Tigers came into unfriendly Fenway Park four days ago at an even .500, 25-25. They left it with a record of 29-25 and their first four-game sweep of Boston at Fenway since 1973, knocking the Red Sox out of first place in the American League East.

The Tigers now have won five in a row and 12 of their last 15.

Petry, 6-3, capped the series with a five-hitter, beating Boston 8-2 Thursday night with the help of a six-run fifth inning. Kirk Gibson had a bases-loaded triple in the spree.

The loss dropped Boston into fourth, one game behind Detroit and four behind the division-leading Baltimore Orioles, who beat Milwaukee 10-8 despite committing a club record-tying six infield errors.

Orioles 10, Brewers 8

Leo Hernandez's three-run homer sparked Baltimore's seven-run first inning, and the Orioles blundered their way to a fourth straight victory, including a three-game sweep of Milwaukee.

Hernandez, a third baseman, committed two of Baltimore's six errors, leading to five unearned runs. First baseman Eddie Murray committed two errors and second baseman Rich Dauer and shortstop Cal Ripken Jr. had one apiece.

Ken Singleton also homered for the Orioles, and Jim Gantner hit one out for the Brewers.

Travelers swipe 7-4 win

Moody expels El Paso Burges

From wire reports

The Arkansas Travelers swiped nine bases, including three by Gotay Mills, to run by Tulsa 7-4 in a Texas League action while John Gibbons hit his fifth homer of the year to propel Jackson to a 4-2 win over Shreveport and Juan Castillo broke up a 13-inning contest with a homer for El Paso as the Diablos beat San Antonio 6-3.

Arkansas third baseman Rod Booker and shortstop Mike Harris each stole two, and second baseman Terry Pendleton and leftfielder Mark Salas each stole one.

The Drillers wasted homers by Kevin Buckley and Robert Hicks.

Jerry Johnson, 5-6, was the winning pitcher. The loser was Tulsa starter Bill Taylor, 1-1.

Gibbons hit his two-run shot for Jackson in the second inning. The Mets added their other two runs in the third on a bases-loaded walk to right fielder Terry Blocker and an RBI single by first baseman Billy Beane.

Shreveport's Chris Brown accounted for both the Captains' runs, with an RBI single in the top of the fourth and an RBI double in the seventh.

Rick Anderson went the distance for the Mets to improve to 3-0, while Craig Chamberlain dropped to 1-4.

The win pushed the Mets to within two games of first-place Shreveport in the East.

Castillo's three-run hohighlighted a 28-hit slugfest between El Paso and San Antonio, which dropped two games behind division-leading Beaumont.

AUSTIN (AP) — Xavier Hernandez struck out 10 batters and shut out Klein on one hit Thursday night to become the second winningest pitcher in Texas schoolboy history as Port Arthur Jefferson beat the Bearkats 1-0 in a Class 5A semifinal game.

Jefferson, making its first trip to the state tournament since 1956, will play Corpus Christi Moody, a 4-1 victor over El Paso Burges, for the 5A title Friday night.

The Jefferson-Klein game ended near midnight, because the start was delayed by two hours by a widespread power blackout.

Hernandez raised his season record to 19-1, second only to the 21 victories David Larson of Brazosport had in 1966.

Jefferson scored the only run of the game in the third inning when Trace Hammond scored from third on a wild pitch. Hammond got on base on an infield hit, went to second on an error on the same play and was sacrificed to third.

Losing pitcher Kyle Atkinson got the only hit off Hernandez, a leadoff single in the fifth, and advanced to third on a wild pitch and passed ball. Hernandez then struck out two batters in a rwo and got Stanley Chapman to bounce back to the pitcher.

Moody's Danny Aleman, 15-3, handcuffed Burges in the other Class 5A semifinal game Thursday.

Moody, 30-9, trailed Burges 1-0 when the Trojans picked up two runs on a lone hit in the third inning. Burges pitcher Jeff Piland, 12-3, walked three and uncorked a wild pitch to fuel the Moody rally. Moody's Julian Mondragon had a sacrifice fly and Ricky Gomez added an RBI single.

Gomez added another run-scoring single in the seventh inning when Moody tacked on two final runs. Burges' only run came in the second when Manny Garcia doubled home Richard Supnet.

In 4A semifinals Thursday, Snyder beat New Braunfels 4-3 and DeSoto beat Austin Westlake 3-2.

In the day's biggest upset, Pollok Central beat defending 2A state champion Southlake Carroll 5-1.

DeSoto managed only two hits, but the Eagles used a suicide squeeze bunt by Todd Worley to score the winning run in their victory over Westlake.

Westlake, 31-3, tallied a first inning run on pitcher Dirk Tidwell's RBI single. DeSoto picked up two in the bottom of the first in a rally that included the Eagles' only two hits of the game.

Stalking hunter has company

By BILL SCHULZ

ATLANTA (AP) — The hunter stalking a deer in a cedar swamp is not alone.

"The public is watching today's hunters," said A.H. Rohfling, executive director of the National Shooting Sports Foundation. "They may think they're operating out there as a remote, lone individual, but they're being evaluated.

"There's a fairly high level of disapproval of hunters that we would like to see lowered, in order to approve a future for hunting."

One problem, he said, is that hunters are blamed for the reckless actions of poachers or people with guns who like to shoot up road signs.

"The pity of it is the poacher is called a hunter and he isn't," Rohfling said in a telephone interview from the foundation's office in Riverside, Conn. "When something is killed by a poacher they (the public) say a hunter killed it when he didn't. An outlaw killed it.

"It gets me when they say a hunter killed an eagle or a hunter killed a California condor. It wasn't a hunter by any definition we know. It is an idiot who kills an eagle."

ROHFLING cited 1967 and 1979 studies sponsored by his group in which the public was asked to select from a long list of adjectives those they thought best described hunters.

The image of a hunter as a good sportsman and a person who respects laws declined significantly in the 12 years, he said.Selection of unfavorable adjectives such as cruel, careless, inconsiderate and irresponsible were selected about twice as often as they were in the 1967 study.

Big game hunting has a slightly more negative image than small game hunting, "but on balance, more adults approve than disapprove of both kinds of hunting," Rohfling said.

"THE PUBLIC will accept hunting under certain conditions. The public says hunting is perfectly all right if you eat what you shoot. The public is less inclined to view the trophy hunter as well as the guy who eats what he shoots."

The percentage of teen-agers critical of hunters was double the adult level and nearly five times the adult level of 1967.

The study also found that few people know the contributions hunters make to wildlife conservations, Rohfling said.

Today's hunter, Rohfling said, "must respect the rights of others; respect the land that he hunts on and treat it if it were his own and should try to make hunting a fair chase and as equitable as possible, meeting the game on its own ground," if he wants to regain his standing with the public.

Midland's John Moffett (right) and his brother Larry of Greenwich, Conn., are shown with their marlin. The brothers caught the big prize of deep sea fishing near Carbo San Lucas off the caost of Baja, Mexico.

Watt Staats of Colorado City caught his 6-pound, 11-ounce large mouth bass in the Sweetwater Open Tournament held May 21.

Snapper bait proves good eating, too

Fresh squid are excellent bait for red snapper and other saltwater fish, but offshore anglers may not realize their bait may be as tasty as some of the fish they catch.

Jerry Mambretti, Texas Parks and Wildlife Dept., claims the tentacles and mantles of squid can be prepared in a number of ways for a gourmet treat. Offshore fishermen often purchase boxes of frozen table-quality squid at local supermarkets for bait. The unused squid can be kept on ice and consumed later at home. The per pound price is low compared to frozen shrimp and other frozen bait, and actually cheaper than most frozen seafood.

"Squid and shellfish which have an external shell, a long quill instead of external armor like other mollusks," says Mambretti. "Although oysters, clams and scallops are the most important mollusks in the U.S., squid probably deserve a lot more attention from seafood lovers."...

WHITE AND striped bass continued biting at Lake E.V. Spence while crappie catches dominated the activity at Lake J.B. Thomas last week. Laura McDonald, Midland, took a four-pound, two ounce black bass out of Paint Creek Marina at Spence while Jack and Jeanette Roseberry, Midland, reported a 7 3/4 striper and Jeff Carter, Midland, took a 4 1/4 pound black bass....At Wildcat Fish-A-Rama at Spence, Chris Spencer, Midland, landed a three-pound striper...

BONITO LAKE is full and fishing is good and all campgrounds are open except at Oak Creek, it is reported by the Lincoln National Forest at Alamogordo, N.M. Snow is gone from the trails at the Capitan Mountains Wilderness and snow remains in the high country in the southeast corner of the Wilderness around the ski area....At Cloudcroft, trails and side roads are open, but muddy...Sitting Bull picnic area is open on the Guadalupe district. Hiking trails are in good shape, but hikers are warned to be careful around rocky outcrops and areas where rattlesnakes may be lurking...

Chaps' Williams signs three H-SU netters

Midland College's new tennis coach Joe Williams knows when he has a winning combination, so he's bringing the key to the Chaparrals.

Williams has signed three players who played for him this year at Hardin-Simmons University.

Sean Strickling and Robert Vrij will join the MC men's team while Valerie Michelon will become a member of the Chap women.

Strickling and Vrij were district and regional doubles champions for Class 5A Houston Westchester in 1982 and played at Hardin-Simmons as freshmen this year.

Vrij is now ranked 20th in boys 18-under by the Texas Tennis Association while Strickling is ranked even higher at 18th. Together they are ranked sixth in Texas doubles.

Vrij played No. 1 singles position for Hardin-Simmons and had a 15-5 record, including wins over Texas Tech's Fred Viancas and MC's Craig Anderson in striaght sets. He also won a three-set win over Odessa College coach Todd Reed.

"Although they wer freshmen this past season, Sean and Robert proved they can handle collegiate competition in both singles and doubles," Williams said. "They could be among the top players in the junior college ranks by the end of next year."

Michelon, a 20-year-old righthander from Cilly Mazarin, France, reached the NAIA quarterfinals for Hardin-Simmons in both singles and doubles. "She could be a dominant force on our squad this year," Williams said.

Michelon played both No. 1 and No. 2 singles poisitions for HSU this spring and had a 16-10 record on a team that was 19-3.

She began playing tennis at age 11, but was also competing in skiing, swimming, volleyball and water skiing. After failing to be accepted for France's National Tennis Training Center, she left the sport before resuming play for a regional team. She was ranked in the Top 20 among French juniors and twice reached the junior regional finals.

"Since there are no high school or college tennis teams in France, you must play only through tennis clubs, regional leagues and tournaments in order to obtain better rankings," Michelon said.

Pro golf air cleared

HARRISON, N.Y. (AP) — Pro golf's touring players and their policy-making body "cleared the air of a lot of misconceptions and misunderstandings," in a pair of unusual meetings, the chairman of the PGA Tour's Policy Board said.

And, E.M. deWindt said Thursday, the first meeting between the Policy Board and the touring pros, a four-hour session that broke up shortly before midnight, "was very positive, almost a landmark.

"It's something we'll have to do on an annual basis so we won't find ourselves again with a lot of misconceptions and misunderstandings resulting from idle chatter."

He said the players' unrest in recent weeks resulted from "a lack of communications" between the tour headquarters and the Policy Board on the one hand and the players on the other.

"In the board's view, the purpose of tonight's meeting — to improve communications with tour players on the goals and programs of their organization — was successfully achieved in a very constructive and gratifying way," deWindt said.

"The board gained new insight into player priorities and concerns. By the same token, we believe the players learned a good deal about the business side of the tour...

"The board continues to fully support Commissioner (Deane) Beman and his staff."

Prior to the general meeting of the players with the board — the first such meeting ever held — the board met privately with Arnold Palmer and Jack Nicklaus.

Palmer and Nicklaus were central figures in a meeting of some leading players held during the Memorial Tournament two weeks ago. At that time, a letter which Nicklaus said "expressed our concern with some of the things that were happening, some of the directions the tour was taking" was written to the board.

That letter, never made public, was an example of the lack of communication

Lopez faces White

Midland's United States lightweight champion Tony Lopez will meet Lubbock's Andy White as part of the full-contact karate card Saturday at 8 p.m. in Odessa's Ector County Coliseum.

The bout was added after the heavyweight bout between Brent Sterling of Lubbock and Chris Sanchez of Albuquerque was cancelled.

Ticket prices range from $6 to $20 and may be purchased at Endless Horizons in Odessa and Midland or at the Coliseum.

Administration proposes big tax changes

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Without fanfare, the Reagan administration has proposed major income tax changes that would benefit the U.S. oil industry by overturning revenue-raising regulations shaped during the Carter administration.

The proposals would, in effect, make it easier for oil companies to claim as credits against their U.S. income taxes part of the money they pay to the governments of foreign countries where they buy crude oil.

Leslie Schreyer, the Departmentof the Treasury's deputy international tax counsel, who helped draft the proposed regulations, said the Reagan administration has no revenue estimates to measure how much the nation's oil companies would benefit or, conversely, how much might be lost in terms of federal tax revenues.

But a top tax official for a major U.S. oil company, who allowed an interview on the basis that neither he nor his company be quoted by name, said he believes that the revenue benefit would be significant. The Reagan tax rules, he estimated, would cut the levy on the oil companies by between $2 billion and almost $4 billion annually from what would be collected under the Carter rules.

Another industry official, J. Francis Hunt, chief tax counsel for the Aramco consortium of oil companies, declined to make a dollar estimate. But he said that, "compared ... to the Carter administration (tax proposals), I'm sure it would be a goodly sum."

TREASURY OFFICIAL Schreyer called such estimates "crazy" and declared that "the effect (of the new proposals) should be minor."

But David Rosenbloom, a Washington tax lawyer and an international tax counsel at the Department of the Treasury in the Carter administration, countered that "the degree of glee in the oil industry" tells him that the proposals are more important than some in the present administration might admit. "It's a highly significant development," Rosenbloom said.

To properly assess the revenue impact, said Jerome Kurtz, former IRS commissioner under President Jimmy Carter, one would have to examine the effect in the oil industry on a company-by-company basis. "Billions of dollars can ride on very fine points — in how you do the arithmetic — and it's not simple."

Adding to the importance of the new tax proposals is that they would be made, in effect, retroactive. Under the proposed rules, the more liberal Reagan tax rules would apply to future years and to any previous years for which the Internal Revenue Service is still auditing a company's return. Big oil companies typically are audited every year, and oil executives interviewed by the Los Angeles Times said the government is still examining their returns for years in the middle or late 1970s.

The IRS did the technical drafting of the 19 pages of highly complex tax changes, which first surfaced in the April 5 Federal Register, a government publication. The IRS has scheduled a one-day hearing on the package for June 23.

THE PROPOSED changes focus on what is known as the foreign tax credit, a tax concept that goes back to 1918 and which was designed to prevent double taxation — that is, to shield U.S. companies from being hit with two income taxes, both in the foreign countries where they do business and in the United States.

Although banks and some other segments of U.S.industry would be affected by the new proposals, D. Kevin Dolan, a former Treasury tax official in the Carter administration, said the proposals are "really directed to oil companies — nobody else cares."

Department of the Treasury figures for 1980, the latest year available, show that total foreign tax credits claimed by U.S. companies that year amounted to $25.9 billion, of which oil companies accounted for nearly half, $12.6 billion.

In the 1950s, as the Middle East nations with major oil reserves began to realize the immense revenue potential of their resources, the concept of the "royalty," a payment to extract oil, became a big expense on the books of U.S. oil companies in the Arabian-American Oil Co. (Aramco) consortium: Exxon, Mobil, Texaco and Standard Oil Co. of California.

The problem for the oil companies was that royalty payments, which ranged up to 90 percent of the sales value of the oil, were treated by the IRS like any other expense of doing business, as a deduction on the oil companies' tax returns. The deductions, which merely reduced the amount of income subject to tax, were worth less than half of what a dollar-for-dollar tax reduction — a tax credit — was worth.

RECOGNIZING THAT the huge oil reserves of the Middle East were of enormous economic and strategic importance to the United States, the State Department in the 1950s went to bat for Aramco. Saudi Arabia and other oil exporters structured as income taxes the bulk of the sums they collected from the oil companies. When the IRS did not challenge that interpretation, these sums became eligible for treatment as foreign tax credits.

That situation continued until 1972 when an IRS auditor was examining the books of major oil companies based in Los Angeles. The auditor stunned the oil companies by disallowing much of their foreign tax deductions, concluding that what they were paying were purely and simply royalty payments to the Saudi government.

Several years of bitter debate before the IRS and in Congress followed, with oil industry critics demanding that this alleged loophole be tightened. By 1979, in a set of new tax proposals, and in 1980, through temporary new tax regulations, the Carter administration developed what became known with indignation in oil circles as the "all or nothing approach" to foreign tax credits.

The Carter proposals said, in effect, that if oil companies were being taxed by foreign countries in excess of what a non-oil company would pay, this would be taken as a strong demonstration that the "taxes" were really disguised royalties. Unless a company could assemble considerable evidence that these payments were indeed taxes, the tax credits would be disallowed.

WHAT THE REAGAN administration has proposed instead is pegging foreign tax credits to whatever the regular income tax is in a foreign country.

So, for example, if an oil company is paying "taxes" to an oil exporting country equal to 80 percent of the value of the oil it receives there, and the regular income tax assessed against other kinds of companies is 40 percent, then the company would be able to claim the 40 percent regular income tax as their foreign tax credit.

Hance demands promises be kept

By TOD ROBBERSON
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Rep. Kent Hance (D-Lubbock) Thursday stepped up efforts to repeal the windfall profits tax on oil, adding cosponsors to a repeal bill he introduced Wednesday and blasting the Reagan administration for its apparent policy reversal on the tax.

In an interview Thursday, Hance accused the administration of "trying to get out of what they had been saying in campaigns in Texas" before the 1980 presidential election. Reagan "certainly created the perception" that he opposed the tax, Hance said, and the president "did a masterful job of creating the perception" that he would work to repeal the windfall profits tax.

Hance said the apparent policy reversal "is going to hurt (the administration's) credibility in the future. He is just way off base on this."

The White House earlier this week denied that the president ever specifically vowed to seek repeal of the tax, but Hance and other congressmen from petroleum-producing states claim Reagan tried to create that perception in order to gain votes in 1980.

"Anyone in the Texas oil and gas business ... can remember him saying that (the tax) is unjust and unfair," Hance said.

A White House spokesman Thursday released a "position paper," taken from White House files, that was used during the Reagan presidential campaign. The paper states: "Our physical supply of fuel has not run out, only our supply of cheap fuels. We must recognize this fact by rapidly phasing out price controls on oil and natural gas and by reducing or eliminating the most destructive elements of the windfall profits tax when fiscally possible."

A Hance aide was able to trace Reagan's position on the tax back to an Oct. 24, 1980 television statement in which he made essentially the same policy statement: "When fiscally possible, we must remedy the disencentive effects of the so-called windfall profits tax."

In a handwritten letter dated July 26, 1981, to Rep. Glenn English (D-Okla.), Reagan wrote, "... I want to express my feelings about the possibility of a windfall profits tax ever being applied to natural gas. In the first place, I'm opposed to that type of tax and beleive it is counterproductive. If legislation should ever be passed calling for such a tax, I would, with pleasure, veto such a bill."

Hance said the chances that such a tax on natural gas would ever be introduced and passed are "pretty slim" anyway. He said he would continue pressing the administration on the oil windfall profits tax issue, and "we plan to posture ourselves" for the battle to repeal it.

Adobe strikes

Adobe Oil & Gas Corporation announced Tuesday an Oil Creek Sand formation discovery in the John W. May No. 2 well in Cooke County.

Total depth of the well is 8,392 feet and the casing has been perforated opposite the Oil Creek Sand from 7,976 to 7,991 feet. On test the well flowed at the rate of 1,027 barrels of oil and 1.11 million cubic feet of gas per day. The test used a 24/64ths choke and was opened with flowing pressure of 780 psi.

The nearest Oil Creek Sand production is three miles to the southeast.

Donoghue's Money Fund Average (Averages for all 247 taxable funds)		38	7.9	7.8

MONEY FUND TABLE COMMENTARY: Assets of the 247 taxable money funds reported by Donoghue's MONEY FUND REPORT of Holliston, MA 01746 decreased $334 million this week.

The 7-day average yield for taxable money funds increased to 7.85% from 7.79% last week. The 30-day average yield decreased slightly to 7.82% from 7.83%.

The average maturity figure shortened one day to 38 days.

Tax-free money fund assets continue to grow -- this week by $258 million.

William E. Donoghue says: "Donoghue's MONEY FUND AVERAGE increased to 7.85% following eight weeks of consecutive decline. In order to take advantage of the upward trend in short-term money market rates, fund managers are shortening portfolio maturities.

Assets of all taxable money funds, excluding "Institutions-only" funds increased $60 million this past week."

Yields represent annualized total return to shareholders for past seven- and thirty-day period. Past returns are not necessarily indicative of future yields. Investment quality and maturity may vary among funds. x - average term to next rate adjustment date. Oil company buys casino

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

The Treasury, a Las Vegas hotel-casino in bankruptcy proceedings whose owner's legal problems forced the closing of its casino, is to be sold to a Calabasas, Calif., oil company which itself just emerged from bankruptcy proceedings, it was announced Thursday.

Five Star Energy Corp. said it has agreed in principle to buy the hotel from Gerald Philbin, a former New York Jets and Philadelphia Eagles football player, for 18 million shares of Five Star stock. The deal is subject to approval of the bankruptcy court in Nevada and the hotel's creditors.

No cash payment from Five Star is required, Five Star President Daniel Lezak said. Instead, the hotel's creditors — principally mortgage-holders — will receive stock in Five Star. In effect, that means they will have stock in the hotel, because Five Star has few other substantial assets.

Although the stock at issue will be valued at $18 million, in fact it will have only a "specu'ative value," said Lenard Schwartzer, the hotel's bankruptcy attorney. "Obviously, everyone would rather get cash, but that's not likely to occur."

The casino at the Treasury, located a block off the Las Vegas Strip, has been shut for nearly a year because Philbin, who bought the hotel with a partner in 1981 for more than $20 million, has been unable to acquire a gaming license from the Nevada Gaming Commission.

One reason, Schwartzer said, is that Philbin was considered a target of a federal grand jury investigation more than a year ago of union hiring practices in New York City, where he owns a sand and gravel company.

The investigation was later dropped with no charges filed against Philbin, Schwartzer said, but by then Philbin had withdrawn his gaming application. Although the hotel has remained open, the Treasury last year filed for protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of the federal bankruptcy law.

Philbin would currently be unable to meet the state's financial stability standards for casino operators, Schwartzer said.

Lezak of Five Star said the new ownership hopes to obtain a casino license after it takes title, perhaps as soon as September.

The first mortgage of about $7 million on the hotel is held by Eureka Federal Savings & Loan Association of San Carlos, Calif.

Eureka and its chief executive, Kenneth Kidwell, have been the subject of intense attention ever since it was learned that an FBI agent posed as a Eureka executive in the course of the "sting" operation that led to the arrest of former auto executive John Z. DeLorean on charges of drug trafficking.

Kidwell later said publicly that an FBI agent had been posing as a Eureka executive for two years, during which only Kidwell knew his real identity.

Other creditors, including one other bank and Herb Pastor, a Las Vegas casino operator who owned the Treasury before selling it to Philbin, hold about $10 million in mortgages on the Treasury. They will receive Five Star stock for their mortgages, Schwartzer said. The Treasury's only remaining creditor will be the $7 million mortgage held by Eureka.

Lezak, its current president, took over shortly before the bankruptcy filing and brought the company out of bankruptcy proceedings in early May.

He said the company currently still holds "minimally producing" oil and gas interests in Texas and Oklahoma, but said the Treasury will be its principal property. The company will spend some money to refurbish the Treasury.

Country needs more energy, poll suggests

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A plurality of Americans believes that addiional energy resources are needed to drive economic recovery, says a new national opinion poll.

Conducted by Cambridge Reports, Inc. for the Edison Electric Institute, the survey indicates that a plurality of people believes that, even with "stepped-up conservation," future economic growth will require development of new energy resouces.

The survey, conducted in late 1982, also reveals a significant change in the way people define conservation. The majority of Americans now define conservation as using energy "more efficiently" — not simply using less energy. Fifty-two percent of those surveyed opted for the "efficient use" definition, compared to only 40 percent in an early 1981 study.

Speaking for the Edison Electric Institute, the association of almost 200 investor-owned electric utilities, Douglas C. Bauer, senior vice president of economics and finance, indicates that this attitude change has important implications for energy planning.

Bauer emphasizes that this shift is especially significant now as public perceptions about the energy "crisis" also seem to be altering. "Considering that it takes an average of ten years to being a power-plant into operation," Bauer explains, "we must start to plan now if sustained economic growth is to be experienced."

The Cambridge survey is based on 1,457 in-person interviews with a sample respondents chosen to represent the adult American population.

Long-rangers foresee fiscal enlightenment

By DONALD C. BAUDER
Copley News Service

Although it's anyone's guess who will be named Federal Reserve chief this summer and the Senate's own majority leader thinks there is less than a 50 percent chance that the House and Senate will agree on a fiscal 1984 budget, economists making long-range forecasts are assuming that monetary and fiscal policy will be remarkably enlightened over the next several years.

In fact, most long-range economic forecasts — say, through 1988 — assume that the Fed will be able to walk a tightrope between over-ease and over-tightness at the same time Congress will find ways to hold down the deficit by slicing spending and raising taxes.

"There will have to be careful juggling" of monetary and fiscal policy if the economy is to perform well through 1988, said Kathleen M. Cooper, senior financial economist for Los Angeles' Security Pacific Bank — but she expects exactly that.

Cooper, in an interview, admitted there is no "magic cure" for the federal deficit problem. She expects the deficit to be $180 billion even in 1988, "but it would be $300 billion without any changes," she said. She expects Congress — despite today's utter stalemate — to reduce the deficit by $140 billion through a combination of spending cuts and tax increases.

By 1988, direct federal borrowing will constitute 25 percent of total credit market activity — down from almost 50 percent today, but still high by historical standards. The 1988 deficit will be close to 4 percent of total economic output in 1988 — a level unheard of until just recently.

Nonetheless, she expects the economy to grow at a real (inflation-adjusted) rate of 3.7 percent through 1988, as inflation remains at 5.5 percent. Although there will be volatility, short-term interest rates will average out around today's levels (the prime will average 10 percent over the next five years) and long-term rates will be only slightly higher (an average 12.5 percent on the mortgage rate).

No matter who is named Fed chairman, "the Fed will not cave in" and balloon the money supply, Cooper said. She believes the double-digit growth of the money supply since last August has been appropriate for the economic conditions, and not necessarily inflationary because of the current abnormally low velocity (or turnover) of money.

As long as the recovery remains moderate, the capital markets can accommodate the huge deficits without pushing up inflation, interest rates or both, Cooper said. And if the economy heats up, spurring bank loan demand, or money velocity starts to grow, the Fed will be able to slam on the brakes — resisting reflationary political pressures, both external and internal.

Most economists foresee such stability at least for the short term — say, a year or so — but few dare be so optimistic for a full five years.

Albert M. Wojnilower, economist for Wall Street's First Boston, agreed that today's money growth is not alarming: "Growth rates of a 10 percent order in all the monetary aggregates are probably normal and should not arouse concern." Also, at least for the near term, "no financial market collision with the federal budget impends," said Wojnilower, although if private sector spending surges, higher interest rates are likely.

Wojnilower also sees stable interest rates over the next year or so, as the financial outlook "reflects a curious balance between elements of stability and instability. ... While it would be foolish to become complacent, the net economic experience of the next year or so or perhaps even longer is apt to be quite boring," he said.

Similarly, the consensus of 40 economists polled by Sedona, Arizona-based Blue Chip Financial Forecasts is for a further decline in interest rates toward year-end 1983, followed by a modest rise next year.

But there are other economists who worry that this period of stability is vulnerable right now — much less in two years or five. "If this recovery is to last beyond 1984, Washington's budget deficits must be shrunk as soon as possible," said Irwin L. Kellner of New York's Manufacturers Hanover.

Deukmejian telling Oil he's open-minded

By JOHN SCHWADA
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Gov. George Deukmejian is trying to assure the oil industry that his administration is open-minded about some tentative proposals to build an oil pipeline through California, a top-ranking state official said yesterday.

The Deukmejian administration wants to "encourage" pipeline construction through the state if it is "economically feasible" and if the "net environmental impact is positive," said state Environmental Affairs secretary Gordon Duffy at a press conference.

Meanwhile, Duffy was described as receptive to the environmental concerns of a coalition of Southern California local elected officials who met yesterday in Mayor Tom Bradley's office to discuss their strategy for dealing with the latest off-shore oil drilling proposals coming from the federal government.

The immediate concern of the coalition — composed of elected officials from coastal areas — is Lease Sale 80, a Reagan administration proposal to open 11.6 million acres of Southern California waters to oil drilling. The acreage is set to be leased next February.

Bradley said he was pleased with Duffy's "spirit of cooperation" with the coalition, which previously has fought off-shore oil drilling proposals, while Laguna Beach Councilwoman Sally Bellerue called Duffy "sensitive."

When Deukmejian was state attorney general he filed a lawsuit, at the behest of Gov. Jerry Brown, to prevent the federal government from offering to lease certain off-shore areas in Lease Sale 68.

Due to that lawsuit, the federal government eventually had to remove certain tracts from its proposal, some of which now are included in Lease Sale 80. The lawsuit was backed by the coalition that met yesterday.

But Duffy said the Deukmejian administration has not committed to a position on Lease Sale 80.

It was during the coalition's meeting that Duffy also announced that the Deukmejian administration wants to be open-minded about proposals to build an oil pipeline through California.

Duffy said the governor has picked his office to coordinate a "delay-free" review of any formal pipeline construction plans.

The oil industry apparently is concerned about the possibility of their plans bogging down as they are reviewed by the numerous local agencies with jurisdiction.

Stripper's move office to Abilene

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — The National Stripper Well Association has moved its headquarters here from Tulsa.

The move came after Abilene oilman Glen Michel assumed the executive vice presidency of NSWA.

Michel is former executive vice president of the West Central Texas Oil & Gas Association, ending his 20-year tenure there on March 14. He succeeds Clyde LaMotte at NSWA.

Amarillo oil producer G.E. "Skip" Stahl is current president of NSWA, which has about 200 members.

NSWA, which will ceLebrate its 50th anniversay in 1984, represents oil producers operating wells with an output of 10 barrels or less of crude per day.

'Racketeering' suit against FNB dismissed

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The $100 million "racketeering" suit against The First National Bank (FNB) Midland and a Midland businesswoman was summarily dismissed midway in a federal jury trial Thursday afternoon by U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton.

Bunton said the federal court had no jurisdiction in the case, since no evidence of racketeering or organized crime on part of the bank or co-defendant Jo Ann Jonsson of Christy's Boutique was presented by plaintiffs Dale and Joan Edy Paul or by their attorney, Gerald Fugit of Odessa.

"I have ruled that I do not have jurisdiction," Bunton said after the defense had presented 10 witnesses to prove its case against the bank and Ms. Jonsson. "That does not mean that the plaintiff wins or loses," the judge said.

The lawsuit, which stemmed from the Pauls' losing their stock in the boutique after they had defaulted on a $150,000 promissory note to the boutique's seller, Ms. Jonsson, originated in 238th State District Court. After the Pauls lost their Midland attorneys, Al Schorre Jr. and Rodney Satterwhite, and retained Fugit, another suit was drafted. It alleged violations of the federal Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations (RICO) Act and was filed in federal court.

"AS A MATTER of law," Bunton told the jurors, "we do not have jurisdiction. The case may be tried, if the parties wish, in state court."

"We will go to state court," Fugit said after he had counseled with the Pauls. "It all comes out in the wash."

Charles Tighe, attorney for the bank, said, "We never thought the lawsuit should have been filed to start with and agree with what the judge did."

Before the judge rendered the dismissal order, Tighe and Jim Boldrick, attorney for Ms. Jonsson, argued the defense had not proved its case.

The Pauls failed to prove any "racketeering activity," Boldrick contended. "The testimony reflects no conspiracy, no racketeering, no organized crime."

He noted that the Pauls, who were buying the boutique from Ms. Jonsson for more than $200,000, had defaulted on a $150,000 note after Paul had failed to secure another loan from the bank to make a $50,000 installment payment on the note in October 1982. Subsequently, Ms. Jonsson repossessed the women's apparel shop, which she had owned and operated for 14 years.

"Plaintiffs have shown no loss," Boldrick said.

THE PAULS, through Fugit, had held that the bank, through former loan officer Marilyn Culp, had conspired to deny Pauls another loan to make the $50,000 payment to Ms. Jonsson.

Prior to the Pauls taking over the business on Sept. 30, 1981, the shop had a fair market value of "$250,000 or more" and had no indebtedness, Boldrick said. But under the Pauls' management, the boutique fell into a $300,000 indebtedness, including the $150,000 past due note, $125,000 in back taxes and other expenses, and money due to the bank.

In his argument for dismissal, Tighe said, "There's no issue to be submitted to the jury."

In rendering his judgment and in declaring the federal court had no jurisdiction over the case, Bunton said he had not detected any suggestions of violations of the RICO Act.

"I have found that there has been no racketeering, murder, kidnaping, gambling, arson, robbery, bribery, extortion, or dealing in narcotics or other dangerous drugs," Bunton said.

Further, Bunton said that evidence had not uncovered any other RICO violations, including counterfeiting, embezzlement, robbery extortion or fraud.

"I WILL dismiss the case," Bunton said. "I'm holding that I do not have jurisdiction."

The 10 witnesses called by the defense were Paul and his wife; attorneys Satterwhite, Schorre and Boldrick; Vivian Wood, state district clerk; Art Green, Odessa accountant; Ms. Culp, former bank loan officer who now is a broker; Ms. Jonsson, and Don McCall, FNB vice president.

In his testimony, Paul said he previously had borrowed money from the bank and paid off the loans to establish credit.

"We wanted to be good," he testified. "We wanted to establish ourselves in this community. We're honest citizens."

In September 1982, when he was trying to get an additional $50,000 bank loan to make a payment on the $150,000 note, Paul said he "never had any kind of warning" of an impending default or that he would not secure the loan.

The boutique's $170,00 inventory had a retail value of $340,000, he said.

When he was trying to secure an additional loan, Paul suggested that Ms. Culp was sympathetic.

" 'I hate to see you go in more indebtedness,' " Paul said the loan officer told him. "The prime rate could go up...."

"That's the price you pay for business," Paul said he replied. Paul said Ms. Culp proposed that he hold a sell to "generate cash" to pay Ms. Jonsson.

While he was trying to get the loan, Paul said Ms. Jonsson agreed to an extension on the due date. However, after he secured the $50,000 from another bank, Paul said Boldrick, Ms. Jonsson's attorney, refused the payment and instead called in the $150,000 due on the full note. Since Paul couldn't pay, Ms. Johsson re-gained possession of the boutique and its stock and promptly held a 50-70 percent-off sale. "It was a helluva mess," said Paul, who earlier noted that the autumn season was no time for a sale. "You make your money in the fall season," Paul had said.

In cross-examining Paul, Boldrick asked Paul if he had any proof of racketeering, fraud or sham.

"Yes, I do," he said. "It's the theory of our attorney (Fugit) or it's a feeling of our attorney."

The Pauls' lawsuit also had complained of the bank's floating prime rate, which, the Pauls claimed through Fugit, "is utterly uncertain, vague, unclear, indefinite (and) imprecise..."

Earlier this year, Bunton had not allowed the case to be a class-action suit; Fugit had held that at least 5,000 other borrowers had been subjected to the bank's floating rate in recent years and thus were harmed. The judge found no evidence of that.

Comanche Trail Park has seen centuries of history

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — Where Comanche and Kiowa warriors once smeared warpaint and the guns of the buffalo hunters felled thousands of shaggy beasts, recreation-seekers now bask in the great outdoors.

It's known as Comanche Trail Park, this several-hundred-acre expanse of trees, water and knolls just off U.S. 87 in southwest Big Spring that has seen centuries of history.

Its significance remains great, as it stands as one of the few places in the Permain Basin in which a person can stroll nature trails, skirt the shores of a lake, watch the cascading of a rivulet into a watery oasis.

"It was a popular recreation spot out there even in the earliest days," said historian Joe Pickle of Big Spring. "Some of the first pictures that we have of Big Spring show men and women out there upon those rock ledges."

Comanche Trail Park's recorded history dates back to 1535, when Cabeza de Vaca may have stopped at the "big spring" during his epic journey. Captain Randolph B. Marcy, however, is credited with being the first white man to document the spring's existence when he and his contingent of 90 soldiers found its waters in 1849.

"Our Comanche guide tells us that he has often been (to the big spring) before," wrote Marcy, "and that there was a battle fought here some years since between the Pawnees and Comanches, in which his brother was killed."

Westward-bound emigrants stopped at the site often during the next several decades. Hunters, as well, came this way, slaying buffalos where the park now lies. The earliest settlers noted that a man could walk for a mile in any direction from the big spring without stepping on anything but buffalo bones.

The Texas and Pacific Railroad came this way in 1881, and the park's natural water supply was to prove invaluable to steam locomotives. T&P acquired ownership of the section of land which included the spring, before which they constructed a small embankment to create a pool from which to pump water.

But it was Arza Alderman whose purchase of land in the present-day park put him in the jockey's saddle. Upon obtaining Section 12 in the late 1890s, he discovered that it harbored the underground bowl and sands which supplied the spring. He established a waterworks and soon was selling water to T&P.

With easy access provided by the route to the waterworks, the land and its shade trees became an oft-visited picnic site in early-day Big Spring. The only other close locale with adequate shade was Moss Creek, which constituted a considerable jaunt by horse and buggy.

Splish, splash

Scott Goodblanket, 4, of Big Spring plunges into the cool waters at Comanche Trail Park.

Development of the city park was initiated in 1929-1930, when volunteers cleared out underbrush and staked out a few roads. However, the brunt of the work was done in the Depression days of the 1930s by Work Progress Administration. A contemporary program of the Civilian Conservation Corps, WPA was responsible for construction of the majority of roads, the softball complex, pinic tables and — in 1937-38 — the amphitheater.

Originally built to accommodate about 2,500 persons, the amphitheater later was expanded to seat more than 5,000 and now is the annual site of Chamber of Commerce-sponsored "starlight specials."

The current swimming pool was an addition made by the Public Works Administration.

A nine-hole golf course was laid out in the 1930s by townspeople and later expanded to 18 holes.

With the centennial of the spring's documented history in 1949, the spring was developed further and historical markers added. Because the spring had ceased to flow when park wells were drilled, the city erected a pump in the pool to circulate it upstream and create the animation of a cascading seep.

Downstream, meanwhile, a lake long-since had beckoned fishermen.To preserve water, T&P had constructed a dam at the turn of the century. The resulting lake long was known as T&P Lake, then Hughes Lake, and today goes by Cosden Lake.

Today, Comanche Trail Park summons sun-worshippers, children who enjoy splashing in the wading pool, picnickers, swimmers, fishermen and hikers who explore the trails which front the spring and lake. Additionally, travelers often take advantage of the overnight camping in a section of the park adjacent to U.S. 87 south.

Fight may erupt over MISD curriculum proposals

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Controversy over public school courses could take place at the Region 18 Education Service Center July 27-28.

"It's kind of like political networking, only it's more like an educational network," said Maridell Fryar, who plans to attend the public hearing.

As Midland Independent School District coordinator of secondary language arts, speech and fine arts, Ms. Fryar intends to voice opposition to some of the curriculum proposals — especially one which calls for four years of English as a high school graduation requirement.

"We're not opposed to four years of English," MISD Superintendent Dr. Joseph P. Baressi said. "We're just opposed to not allowing certain alternative courses (to substitute for the fourth year of English)."

MISD requires four years of English for graduation although several fine arts classes are offered as a substitute for English IV credit.

He added members of various patriotic organizations and "historical folks" would probably be there fighting for the back-to-basics.

Although the hearings are held to get the public's opinion on House Bill 246, Baressi said many local educators also are planning to attend.

HB 246, passed during the 1981 legislative session, charged the State Board of Education to designate essential elements of 12 subject areas in each school district, according to the Texas Education Agency (TEA).

The 12 areas include English, foreign languages, mathematics, science, health, physical education, fine arts, social studies, economics, business education, vocational education and history of Texas and the United States.

"The board encourages everyone — parents, educators, interested persons — who has a concern about public school curriculum to attend one of the hearing sessions," said State Board of Education Chairman Joe Kelly Butler.

Butler said the curriculum documents containing the proposed essential elements have been distributed to school districts, teacher preparation institutions and education service centers.

Copies of the documents may be obtained from the TEA, 201 E. 11th St., Austin Texas 78701, or reviewed at Region 18 Education Service Center at Midland Regional Air Terminal.

"(Copies) have been circulated through professional groups," said Dr. J.W. Donaldson, director of Region 18 Education Service Center, "but this is an opportunity for everyone to have some input."

"They want to get two kinds of feedback," Ms. Fryar said. "They want oral testimony and, secondly, forms have been supplied to every district to get the essential elements (from educators)."

The public's comments will be computerized, she said. Then the state board will study the state documents and these comments before making a judgment.

Persons should not testify at the hearings without having extensively studied the proposals, she cautioned. All objections and comments should be directed toward specific elements of the proposals.

When asked if she had been lobbying with fellow educators across the state, she replied, "You bet."

"I think they only pay attention to things that are widely recommended," she said. "It's not only important to speak up, it's important for (those testifying) to be in communication (with others across the state who have similar opinions)."

The local hearing will be directed by Vernon Stokes of the Region 18 Education Service Center. The hearing is scheduled from 1:30 to 5 p.m. and from 6 to 10 p.m. the first day, and from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. the second day.

Mattox tours Odessa's chemical plant

Attorney general says firm still polluting

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Noting "strong feelings about the environment," Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox toured the area around a troubled Odessa chemical plant Thursday and charged that it "continues to cause air pollution, despite a court order to stop the pollution and two subsequent contempt citations for violations of the court order."

The firm, Permian Chemical Co. Inc., is located along U.S. Highway 80 near East Loop 338 and employs about 60 people in the manufacture of potassium sulfate and hydrochloric acid.

The acid fumes allegedly are harming nearby business and residential property by killing shrubbery and causing excessive rust. Some of the complaints and litigation date back nearly three years, and the state air quality board is seeking to close the plant.

According to company attorney Warren Heagy, the firm recently spent nearly $1 million in pollution abatement equipment. But Mattox said Thursday:

"It's not enough. There's been no real effort to comply. They need to hire an environmentally sensitive engineer to get a handle on the matter.

"It's not our desire to close the plant. But if they can't bring their emissions under control, we will shut them down. Other plants have to control their emissions."

Countering criticism that his tour was political in nature and also improper because the case is under litigation and he is the state's chief law enforcement officer, Mattox said, "I'm taking a more active role in environmental matters than some of my predecessors. There's a high level of concern about the plant. People like to know we're moving in this area. They want to know when it's (the pollution) going to stop.

"Coming here gives me a better idea of what's going on. My impression after seeing the (area) is that they are continuing to violate environmental standards."

One of the nearby businesses is Sunset Memorial Gardens, located about a half-mile from the plant. According to cemetery manager Charley Vaught, Sunset has filed a $250,000 damage suit against Permian Chemical. All told, some 15 companies have suits pending against the firm.

Myasthenia Gravis Foundation local chapter to meet

ODESSA — An area chapter of the National Myasthenia Gravis Foundation will meet at 2 p.m. in the Odessa Women's and Children's Hospital auditorium June 12.

Myasthenia Gravis is a chronic neuromuscular disease which affects the body's muscles, especially the eye muscles.

In milder cases the muscles fail to contract only after repeated activity. But in severe cases the disease affects the muscles in the limbs and those involved with respiration, chewing and swallowing.

The cause is not entirely known, but primary defect is in the area of nerve-muscle transmission. Although there is no cure, the disease usually can be controlled with drugs, hormones and, in certain cases, surgery.

The MG chapter will provide patient and public education, assistance in obtaining reduced-rate medication, support research and counseling.

Area MG patients travel to Lubbock, Dallas or San Antonio for services which now can be provided by the chapter.

In a May meeting the chapter elected the following officers: Mrs. Roy Duncan, chairman; Mrs. George (Vicki) Marshall, vice chairman; and Mrs. Robert (Sherry) Renfro, secretary-treasurer. Also Dr. G.H. Cirkovic of Midland and an Andrews doctor have agreed to serve on the medical advisory board.

All MG patients, their families and supporters are invited to attend the June 12 meeting.

Three police officers sentenced

DALLAS (AP) — A federal judge turned a deaf ear to defense contentions he was making scapegoats of three New Orleans police officers, sentencing each of them to prison terms for beating citizens during an investigation of a patrolman's death.

John E. McKenzie, 40, Dale Bonura, 34, and Stephan Farrar, 31, sat stonily in the packed courtroom Thursday as U.S. District Judge Jerry Buchmeyer sentenced each to five years in prison for a felony civil rights violation and one year for a misdemeanor rights violation.

The terms will run concurrently. The three were convicted of beating black residents of New Orleans' Algiers neighborhood during an investigation of the 1980 killing of white officer Gregory Neupert.

Buchmeyer maintained "the loss of their jobs is not sufficient...punishment."

Four people were killed in Algiers during a police crackdown after the shooting of the officer. Although no charges were filed in connection with the deaths, the New Orleans Police Superintendent James Parsons and his top lieutenant resigned amid the controversy.

A federal judge in New Orleans moved the case to Dallas.

Alleged victims of the beatings also have filed an $8 million civil rights suit against the officers.

Defense attorney Ralph Whalen asked the judge to sentence the officers solely on the illegal detention of Robert Davis, one of five people who claimed they were kicked, beaten and choked by the officers interrogating them.

"Assuming there was a mass roundup and civil rights were violated, this has nothing to do with these three individuals," Whalen said.

Whalen also said extensive media publicity surrounding the case and a "blasphemous" report on CBS-TV's "60 Minutes" program might prompt the judge to make "an example" of the policemen.

Ralph Capitelli cited McKenzie's "spotless" 14 years as a police officer and said imprisonment for the three would harm the officers' families.

Prosecutor Michael Johnson told the judge New Orleans had 50 percent more complaints of police brutality than any other city in the United States.

During the three-week trial, a detective granted immunity in the case testified he participated in beating two people being questioned in the officer's death.

Defense attorneys tried to portray the detective, Oris Buckner, as an incompetent whose motives were suspect because of his immunity and because his father died in the custody of New Orleans police in the 1950s.

Prosecutors told the jurors Buckner was still a defendant in the civil suit, even though he was granted immunity.

The jury returned the verdicts March 28 after telling Buchmeyer they were hopelessly deadlocked.

Officers Stephen Reboul, 32, and Richard LeBlanc, 32, and detectives Ronald F. Brink, 37, and Thomas R. Woodall, 32, were acquitted.

PIK program thwarted by weather

DALLAS (AP) — A federal program meant to bolster wheat prices by slowing production has been thwarted in Texas because of that proverbial foe of agricultural economic forecasting — the weather.

Texas agriculture analysts said Thursday this year's winter wheat crop will reach record proportions, with an average yield of 30 bushels an acre — compared with a usual-good yield in the 20s — and possibly ranging from 40 to 60 bushels an acre in Central and North Central Texas.

Under a payment in-kind program that went into effect this year, farmers are paid in grain for the acres they do not plant. But experts say a mild winter created a bumper crop from the acres that were planted and canceled the effect of the program.

"There's a mixed reaction, I suppose, from having an outstanding crop," said Roland Smith, a marketing analyst for the Agricultural Extension Service. "Your farmers like to do well in production and they like to have a top yield, But what's good for a farmer individually may not be good for farmers in the aggregate."

John Wells of Plano stops his combine to take a closer look at his wheat fields. Texas agriculture analysts said that this year's winter wheat crop will reach record proportions.

In the past, when Texas has had a good wheat year, Smith said, it has "outproduced the market," and that could happen again this year, with what he called "phenomenal yields" from Texas acres.

Texas Department of Agriculture spokesman Leland Beatty said although the number of acres planted was down more than 20 percent, production was only down 2 percent in Texas.

An already sluggish market will not be helped by a record Texas crop in combination with national production, which was down only 10 percent despite a reduction in planted acreage of 19 percent.

Beatty said a spot check of grain elevators showed wheat prices generally down 10 percent with operators reporting "considerably more grain" coming into elevators compared with last year.

He said labor problems in the southern hemisphere may slow the international grain competition giving American farmers, and meetings between U.S. and Soviet officials on a long-term grain deal are reasons for optimism.

The two sides meet again on June 20.

"But all in all, the export demands are going to be very competitive," Smith said.

Additionally, Texas' record crop will compete in the market against grain farmers got from the government under the PIK program.

"Wheat prices haven't been going up," Beatty said. "They (Texas farmers) did produce a lot, but with the kind of surplus already built up, I wouldn't say it meant anything good."

Rotarians award scholarship to LHS graduate

The Midland Downtown Rotary organization awarded a $500 scholarship Thursday, and presented $250 each to four high school students who will represent the club overseas in its Youth Exchange Program.

Katherine Boyle, recipient of the annual scholarship, is a Lee High School graduate. She will use the scholarship to attend Texas Christian University.

Mark Berman, International Service director for the Club, presented the four young women who will go to Switzerland and Germany in the Youth Exchange program this summer.

Meg Brennan, a Lee High graduate, will go to Geneva, Switzerland,for one year in an even exchange for a Swiss student. She will stay with that student's family.

She said, "I've lived in Midland for five years. I'm going to miss West Texas, with its flatness, cacti, dry weather — I think I'll adjust."

Holly Rogers, also a Lee High graduate, will go to Zurich in Switzerland for the summer. She told the Rotary she thought going on the trip will be challenging, fun and educational.

Holly Williams, a Midland High sophomore, talked about being torn between her father's wishes — for her to be a doctor — and her own desire to be a specialist in international relations.

Ms. Williams will go to Hagen, Germany, and is being accompanied by two German exchange students on her return. Her speech captivated the audience — and was punctuated with the remark, "I'm not very interesting."

Sarah Yuronka, a Midland High junior, said she is studying hard and attending summer school so she can finish high school before she leaves for a year in Germany. She wants to learn some German and has a desire to communicate her ideas to the country she will visit.

"The Germans feel we (Americans) are superficial, and that we are heavy consumers," Ms. Yuronka said. "I want to tell them that we are really caring people. I'm going to change the people I go to live with."

Chief deputy clerk named for state's Western District

Daniel E. Young, clerk of the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the Southern District of Texas, has been named chief deputy clerk for the U.S. District Clerk for the Western District of Texas.

The San Antonio-based Western District takes in the Midland-Odessa Division of federal court and six other divisions within the expansive district.

Young, who will be transferring from Houston to San Antonio, was described as a man with "sterling credentials in education, work experience and public service" by Charles W. Vagner, clerk of the court.

The Western District takes in seven divisions: Midland-Odessa, Pecos, El Paso, Del Rio, Waco, Austin and San Antonio. Deputy clerk for the Midland-Odessa Division is Loretta McKibben of Midland. Presiding judge of the division is Judge Lucius D. Bunton.

Vagner said Young will be "an invaluable asset to his court."

"Mr. Young brings to this district a wealth of experience of a very high order in the federal judiciary," Vagner said in his announcement. As clerk for the Houston-based bankruptcy court, Young has been "personally responsible for numerous improvements in his court's efficiency. He has overseen substantial managerial alterations in his office's procedures that were designed to better service the Court, the Bar and the general public. He has overseen a dramatic increase in personnel strength in his district."

Before he joined the federal judiciary, Young was a "successful and upwardly-mobile" U.S. Army officer, Vagner said.

Young, who succeeds Bill Putnicki who resigned as chief deputy, will assume his new post in July.

Coalition given food-bank funds

AUSTIN (AP) — The Atlantic Richfield Foundation of Los Angeles has granted $25,000 to the Anti-hunger Coalition of Texas to help distribution of donated food to needy persons, the coalition said.

The funds will be used for food bank transportation and the movement of donated goods into and around Texas.

The announcement said an estimated 12 million tons of edible but unmarketable food is wasted annually in Texas. Twelve food banks have been set up in the state to solicit, collect and distribute donated surplus food to charitable organizations that feed the hungry.

"While there's been no damage to headstones, the smell causes headaches to our employees and (visitors)," said Vaught. "Our shrubbery is being damaged. People think it's our fault."

Mattox indicated that more complaints will be filed soon against the company and said, "I'm not in any way trying to prejudice the case, but to resolve it and get the problems corrected."

Pointing to the plant, Mattox added: "My prime concern is stopping what's coming over that fence."

Youth's condition improves

A youth injured Wednesday in a motorcycle accident that killed his companion has been taken off the critical list and now is in serious condition at Midland Memorial Hospital.

Frank Hernandez Perkins, 16, of 608 Waverly, suffered massive head and chest injuries in the crash, which occurred about 1 p.m. Wednesday in the 700 block of Andrews Highway near Luby's Cafeteria.

Killed was 17-year-old Robert Michael Mundy of 4624 Wilshire. Police said he was the driver of a 1977 Kawaski that collided with a 1976 Cadillac which had pulled out of a private driveway and was struck broadside by the motorcycle.

Driver of the car, 38-year-old Douglas R. McLoed of 1905 Ward, was released following emergency treatment at MMH. His daughter, 6-year-old Theron McLoed, also was treated for minor injuries and released.

Psychologist helps pets overcome anxiety

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — The problem: A German shepherd owned by a movie producer here had caused between $3,000 and $4,000 in damage to the home's couches, curtains and first-edition books in just two months.

The owner loved Molly, but she was literally wearing out her welcome. An obvious case for Richard Polsky, animal shrink.

"I discovered that the only time Molly destroyed was when she was alone," Polsky diagnosed. "She was suffering anxiety attacks."

Dogs are pack animals and it is against their nature to be left alone, he explained. In such circumstances, some will howl, some will bark, some will destroy.

The solution for Molly: Whenever the owner departed the house, he left the radio on — a cue to his absence. If he returned and the dog had been non-destructive, she was rewarded with a bowl of Haagen-Dazs vanilla ice cream.

"THE ANIMAL HADN'T EVER been given ice cream, and I've never met a dog that didn't like it," Polsky said. "In this instance, when the bad behavior had been remedied, we phased out using the radio as a cue and the ice cream as a reward."

Chalk up another one for Animal Behavior Counseling Services, an enterprise begun two years ago in Santa Monica. During that time, for $200 to $250 a case, Polsky has treated 140 pets, most of them referrals from veterinarians.

What he calls himself is an animal clinical psychologist. "There are fewer than a dozen of us in the entire nation doing this," he said.

The psychologist said that he never guarantees a change in behavior. "It isn't like fixing a TV set," he explained. "I'll work with the pet as long as possible, and I'll try everything possible, but in about 20 percent of the cases we don't get resolution."

Sometimes the owner loses motivation, sometimes the animal is simply incorrigible.

"WE ARE SEEING A NEW TRAIT in cocker spaniels called shy sharpness — a combination of fear and dominance, occasionally resulting in the dog severely biting the owner," the psychologist said. "Unfortunately, some breeders are overlooking this, breeding for looks instead of behavior.

"A dentist was the victim of this. His cocker bit him on the hand and he couldn't work for a week. He came to me with the problem, and we tried our best, but without resolution."

Another case, a German shepherd with an excessive attachment to his owner, resulted in improvement, but not a completely satisfactory solution.

"IT WAS A SINGLE WOMAN, and the dog was everything she had in life," the counselor said. "She even spoon-fed the animal. He in turn would follow her around the house like a shadow.

"The problem was that if she had to leave the premises, he would pine, and he eventually developed ulcerative colitis. I attempted to make them independent of each other — I had her ignoring him intentionally — but it was only partially successful."

Usually, however, the ending is a happy one. The pet — either a dog or a cat — doesn't spend time on a couch telling about his early years, but the same principles are put to work.

One instance involved a situation as old as the ages — common jealousy.

"FOR SIX YEARS A HUSBAND and wife and dog had lived together pleasantly," said the 35-year-old Polsky. "Then the couple had a baby, and once he got out of the crib and became ambulatory, there was one unhappy Australian shepherd.

"The dog began urinating in the kid's room, growling at him. And the parents would punish the pet by throwing him outside, which only made him resent the kid even more."

The psychologist recommended "structured interaction." This translated into a daily 15-minute walk with the dog, during which attention was devoted entirely to him.

Family tranquillity was further encouraged by having the animal remain lying down, about 10 feet away, while the parents played with and talked with their child. If the dog cooperated, he was given a food reward, and he eventually accepted the presence of the newcomer.

THE DOWN STAY was used as a counter-conditioning behavior — a technical term — to oppose any sort of aggression the dog would have exhibited toward the baby.

The counselor encourages outpatient treatment, preferring that the animal stay in the home where the problem exists. Occasionally he accepts an inpatient in his own residence, the current one an English springer spaniel whose appetite unfortunately includes visitors to the owner's home.

This comes under the heading of territorial aggression. The therapist said that he would keep the creature a few weeks, subject him to conditioning procedures, then transfer him to the owners and work closely with them.

Another technique used is known as systematic desensitization, wherein the patient is gradually exposed to what he fears.

"I had one case, easily treated, which involved a terrier-poodle who was afraid of all percussive-type sounds — thunder, firecrackers, the garbage truck going by. He would tremble and try to hide in the closet," Polsky said.

"WE GOT HIM RELAXED in anticipation of a food reward, then played recordings of those very sounds at a low level. If he exhibited no fear, we gave him social praise (a pat on the back) plus a reward of cheddar cheese."

The rewards vary according to the patient. One who had a habit of growling and lunging at visitors was bribed into a submissive posture of lying down.

"What worked was roast chicken," the psychologist said. "I happened to be eating some at my table, and he went bonkers when I gave him a piece. I knew I had my inducement."

Dogs, according to this specialist, are more motivated to work for human food than for dog food.

Speaking of bribes, Polsky said that it was more difficult to get a cat to respond to one.

"Thus far only about 10 percent of my patients have been cats," he said. "With them I have had success in manipulating their environment.

"THE MOST COMMON PROBLEM is failure to use the litter box. Sometimes it is just a matter of the litter not being to the kitty's liking — perhaps a chlorophyll additive is responsible, or sometimes the location of the box needs to be changed, or if the owner has two cats he or she may have to get two separate boxes." The counselor has been asked for help with pets such as rabbits, birds and snakes, but has declined.

"Either I didn't regard the problem as serious enough, or I didn't feel there was a reasonably good prognosis. One guy told me he had a rabbit that was hyperactive. I told him I would think about it, but I concluded I couldn't get resolution."

Polsky's interest in animal behavior goes back a ways. "When I was a youth playing golf in Philadelphia, I would watch the squirrels while I was walking between holes. I remember wondering why they would rear up and look at me. I wondered what they were thinking.

"I LATER FIGURED OUT they also had a curiosity, namely about my walking into their territory, and that they wondered what I was doing chasing a little ball."

At Ohio State University he majored in biopsychology, and said that he became hooked on the subject of ethology, the scientific study of the characteristic behavior patterns of animals.

"For some time I had it in the back of my mind to open an animal behavior counseling service," he said. "When the chances of one of my grants being renewed began seeming bleak, I felt that the time was opportune to begin working with owners."

ONE CASE WAS A DOG, a German shepherd-Doberman pinscher mix, who had been rescued by his new owner from a shelter and obviously had been abused by a previous owner.

"The animal was very shy, very submissive," the psychologist said.

"What we did was build up his confidence. We avoided any postures that he might interpret as aggressive — standing over him, staring, scolding him.

"And every time he controlled his behavior, we rewarded him with his favorite balogna."

Your suspicions notwithstanding, that is not what you have been getting here.

Pants former: Plastic ruler

By BETTY W. KINSER
Copley News Service

DEAR MRS. KINSER: Will you please tell me what a Pants Former is and where I can find one. — Mrs. Flora D. King, Inglewood, Calif.

Every time I mention this nifty gadget, I get letters of inquiry. A Pants Former is a foldable plastic ruler that is used to shape the crotch line from front waistline, through the legs, to the back waistline. Once the ruler is shaped to your particular figure, you can use this shape to restyle the crotch curve of your pants pattern. Pants Former is made by Fantastic Fit Products and can be found at most full-line fabric shops.

DEAR MRS. KINSER: Several weeks ago a lady wrote you for help in finding a pattern for a contour waistband. You told her McCall's Palmer-Pletsch jeans pattern had one. I looked at several patterns, but could not find one that stated such a waistband. Would you please send me the number of your pattern. I have used several of your tips. Please keep them coming. — Viola E. Rice, Joliet, Ill.

The pattern is McCall's 7555 and you are right. Nowhere on the outside of the pattern does it state that there is a contoured waistband. Even the sketches on the back of the envelope are misleading. But — take my word for it — the waistband is contoured.

Halston — J.C. Penney team up for high sales

Halston's cropped red wool crepe jacket worn with a classic A-line skirt is among the new collectin for J.C. Penney. The Halston signature blouse has a detachable bow.

A polyester print dress with signature "H's" and a tie collar with a leather belt is among the new Halston III collection for J.C. Penney introduced this week.

NEW YORK (AP) — Halston usually aims at high fashion with a big price tag, while J.C. Penney shoots straight for the budget-minded. But now these two have joined forces, it could be a marriage made in retail heaven.

Halston's line of women's apparel for the nation's third largest retailer was unveiled Tuesday with music, lights, glamorous models and even a 150-foot replica of a blue whale.

Not for nothing was J.C. Penney's middle name "Cash," say Penney officials proudly. And company officials are following the founder's mandate with unabashed promotion of the new line, called "Halston III," that carries a price tag of $10 to $200.

"Its quality is right, and the price is right," Penney vice chairman William R. Howell said as 1,000 people packed the American Museum of Natural History.

Similar shows on a smaller scale were held in 20 other U.S. cities Tuesday at a cost Penney has not divulged.

The company hopes the agreement will lead to $1 billion in sales during the next five years.

The line of fall apparel will be in 600 stores this summer. Holiday and spring lines are planned, along with menswear, children's clothing and home furnishings by 1985.

Penney, which does $11.4 billion a year in gross sales, has embarked on a new marketing strategy concentrating on apparel, and "repositioning" its merchandise in line with consumer buying patterns in the shopping centers where most of its 1,700 stores are.

"Consumer research has told us we have an opportunity to sell those customers what they perceive to be fashionable clothes," Howell said.

Halston III combines inexpensive fabrics such as rayon and polyester with signature Halston touches.

But sometimes the fabrics look cheap. A royal blue polyester dress with neck ruffles intended to look like elegant silk jacquard looked like what it was — a copy.

Elsewhere, the line was successful. A $200 wool crepe suit with a red jacket piped in black, a Halston signature, was wonderfully tailored and could easily pass for a $900 couture ensemble.

His coats, notably a red melton wool with black piping and a single-breasted melton in sand with top-stitching, were good and serviceable without losing that high-fashion look. Prices here were $190.

Casual wear looked great though, in denim with red top-stitching that went under bright lumberjack shirts, and velour warm-ups in lush red or royal blue piped with black.

The designer, whose clientele includes stars such as Liza Minnelli, Martha Graham and Bianca Jagger, does not seem to feel he is lowering his standards by reaching for a broader-based mass market.

"Only through Penney can you do that. They have the organization power and the buying power and the know-how."

DEAR ABBY

Divorce not answer

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I recently discovered that my husband of 38 years has been having an affair with a young woman of questionable character. She made sure that everyone in town knew about their relationship, adding to my hurt and humiliation.

Friends have rallied to my support. My minister, family physician and married children are all urging me to divorce my husband, but I am not sure I want a divorce. Like most women of my generation, I consider marriage a lifetime commitment.

I am by nature a very tolerant and forgiving person, and frankly, the thought of living the rest of my life alone frightens me. Also, I am home-oriented, with no skills.

With our present moral climate, I'm sure there are thousands of older women who find themselves in a similar position.

Is it better to keep my marriage vows and forgive a husband who has broken his, or face the future alone? What do you advise? – FOR BETTER OR FOR WORSE

DEAR FOR: Never mind what your friends, minister, family physician and married children say. As long as a shadow of doubt exists in your mind, stay married. (I would give a man the same advice.) Never cut what you can unravel.

DEAR ABBY: I am dating a girl who has a very irritating habit. She interrupts me in the presence of others to correct my pronunciation of words.

I wouldn't mind so much, but later when I check my dictionary, I learn that I was right and she was wrong.

How should I deal with this? No names or initials, please, as this is a very small town. – IRRITATED

DEAR IRRITATED: If there are two girls in your town, date the other one.

DEAR ABBY: You asked how one may be certain his burial wishes will be carried out when the law provides that the next of kin has the final say.

A few years ago, an Arkansas man wanted his body cremated and his ashes scattered on the White River, where he had spent many happy hours fishing with his friend, the local undertaker. He had a lawyer draw up his will, leaving all his property to his next of kin, provided they followed his wishes. The will stated that if they failed to do so, everything would go to the undertaker.

The next of kin insisted on burial instead of cremation. The undertaker said, "If you want to make me his heir, I'll bury him, but if you want his property, you'd better let me cremate him and scatter his ashes on the White River."

No argument. He was cremated. – COUNTRY LAWYER

DEAR LAWYER: It should be stressed that the next of kin, the funeral director and all others concerned should be notified PRIOR to death, since most wills are not read until AFTER the funeral takes place.

Solve house painting problems

By Andy Lang
Associated Press

The three most common paint failures are alligatoring, blistering and peeling.

Why these failures? Generally, because of poor surface preparation, especially on the outside of a house. An amazing 80 percent of all coating failures on wood are attributed to improper pre-painting procedures.

Alligatoring is exactly what it sounds like. The surface of the paint resembles the skin of an alligator and, if you knew how the skin of an alligator felt, it would feel that way too. Checking, by the way, is merely a milder form of alligatoring. In checking, the cracks and wrinkles in the paint surface are not as wide nor as deep.

Alligatoring or checking is usually caused by too many layers of paint, but there are two other causes. One is applying a second or third coat of paint over a previous one that has not dried sufficiently. The other is using a primer and a topcoat that are not compatible. This can be avoided by buying and using those made by the same manufacturer. If this is not possible, carefully read the labels of both containers at the time of purchase and, if still in doubt, ask the dealer.

The solution? James O'Connor, director of technical services for Rust-Oleum Corp., says it is virtually impossible to paint over an alligatored surface without scraping, sanding or chemically removing all the old paint and starting again from scratch.

Blistering is also a word that accurately describes the ailment. The defect resembles human blisters, with the paint lifting up from the surface in bubbles. It is caused by moisture which, as it evaporates, lifts off the coating. Sometimes the moisture acts on the paint after it has been applied. At other times, it occurs if the paint has been applied on already damp or wet surfaces.

There is one type of latex paint which, the manufacturers say, can be applied on a surface that is damp, but be very certain you have that kind of paint and that you follow the directions to the letter. When you have to paint an area that has this problem, it first must be scraped. You then must feather or blend in the rough edges with sandpaper, brush off the dust or grit, then prime and paint.

Peeling and its companion, flaking, also can be caused by moisture, says O'Connor. However, it will occur if one of the bottom layers is too glossy or dirty or, again, if the topcoat is not compatible with the primer or whatever the undercoat is. The paint surface must be examined carefully and all paint removed that isn't bonded properly. Peeling usually precedes flaking, although sometimes the two conditions will occur simultaneously on the same wall. When the scraping or other remedial procedure is completed, feathering with sandpaper is necessary, followed by use of the appropriate primers and topcoats.

One of the big mistakes made in painting the outside of a house is to skimp on the preparation and attempt to cover defects with paint. No matter how good the paint and no matter how much time and energy you save, you will pay for it later when alligatoring, blistering or peeling takes place. No paint is any better than the surface underneath it.

When you first move into a house which has wooden shakes or shingles on the outside walls, continue to paint it if it already has paint on it or continue to stain it if it already has stain on it. It's a difficult, messy job trying to get paint off shakes and shingles, so you paint them only if are certain you never want to go back to stain.

During the preparation of the wooden surface of a house prior to painting, use the opportunity to inspect the places which have been caulked, such as at butt joints, around doors and windows, and at utility inlets and exhaust pipes. Where recaulking is necessary, do it then. Also, steel wool where there is loose rust, dull all glossy spots and remove mildew.

Offbeat housing needs ingenuity

By The Associated Press

If you intend to build a house that might be classified as out of the ordinary or offbeat, you have to check local building codes to determine whether it fits community standards.

Especially if you plan on building the house of old newspapers, bottles, cans and other discarded materials!

Such structures have been known as "garbage housing" ever since Martin Pawley's book with that title. Forrest Wilson, a professor of architecture at Catholic University in Washington, D.C., has looked into the matter and says some persons actually have built or are building such houses, which loosely might be called shelters.

"All it takes," says Wilson, "is some Yankee ingenuity, plus a little innovation and the confidence you can do it. A person doesn't have to be an architect to build a house of such materials. In fact, if you are an architect, you probably won't want to do it."

In addition to paper, bottles and cans, materials such as rubber tires, stones and old automobile parts are being used. As Wilson points out, auto windows often work better than the windows in conventional homes.

While housing costs rise and help the trend gain momentum, it's not the major reason why some people choose to build houes from recycled products. It's mainly because they want to stamp their creative imprint on their surroundings.

If you get away from high density areas, you are likely to have less trouble with building codes, which is why the recommendation is given to check the regulations before you start. If you find the restrictions won't hamper your work, you should begin your construction education by reading books on the subject. Several have been published and more are on the way.

Your next step — or one that can be taken while doing the reading — is to gather as many materials as possible and begin experimenting. One way to do this is to build something smaller than a house, such as a backyard tool house. After constructing the frame, you can set bottles and tin cans in the mortar and use old newspaper as insulation. While walls made of bricks and cans filled with water or beer can provide excellent insulation, Wilson prefers other uses for liquids, especially the beer.

Prepare for negative comments from your friends who may not be able to see any beauty in a house of cans and bottles. But Wilson says you can build a good-looking house out of bottles. He says light shining through a wall of bottles can be very attractive, while cans can be so cleverly arranged that they form a new architectural style.

How much will such a house cost? There's no real way to tell, since most owners provide their own labor. One man spent less than $600 for his house, which was made principally of cans, but that was the cost without any fixtures. Even if you build a garbage house in an area which has no restrictive building codes, you still must be careful about not violating electrical and plumbing codes. Some communities which don't care too much about the kind of house you build are very touchy about who wires the place and puts in the plumbing fixtures.

Folk beats rock when pregnant

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "Puff the Magic Dragon" may be better than hard rock for an unborn child, says a Canadian psychiatrist who maintains there is increasing evidence that outside activities shape the personality of a baby in the last few months of pregnancy.

Dr. Thomas Verny, the author of "The Secret Life of the Unborn Child," told a weekend audience at Pepperdine University that fetuses in the womb are more aware than parents realize and are acutely affected by stress, soothing sounds and whether they are wanted by their parents.

"One woman told me she sang a Peter, Paul and Mary song to her unborn child every night during her pregnancy," Verny said. "Later, that one song settled him when nothing else worked.

"Another woman who always watched 'M-A-S-H' during her pregnancy said her baby perked up when it came on after he was born, as if it had special meaning to him."

He said one mother he knew went to a rock concert and her unborn child kicked her so strenuously that she suffered a broken rib.

Verny said his interest in the unborn began while practicing psychiatry in Toronto.

"I say the most important thing is to realize that the unborn child is much more developed than given credit for. This isn't all scientifically proven, but there is growing evidence that what happens during pregnancy is a major influence in life, just as the first two years after birth pretty much determine a person's character. There should be as little stress as possible," Verny said.

"Statistically, children of what we might call the 'ideal' mother versus the 'catastrophic' mother are calmer, healthier at birth. There are fewer premature births and fewer complications," he said. "At the other extreme, we see gastrointestinal problems, babies that cry all the time, that are shrill and unpleasant. And that, of course, only adds to their problems."

Radio Moscow reader an anti-war activist?

Hearst Feature Service

LONDON — Vladimir Dantchev, the Radio Moscow news reader who spoke of "Soviet invaders" in Afghanistan and Afghan villagers resisting foreign "bandits," was almost certainly acting in concert with a growing anti-war movement in Russia that has grown powerful enough to penetrate the Soviet propaganda apparatus.

That is the considered judgment of one of the few people in the West in a position to know something about it: a former colleague of Dantchev's at Radio Moscow's foreign languages service, Renata Lesnik.

In an interview, the broadcaster who worked for the Soviet radio until two years ago explained that "no way could exist for Dantchev to have said what he did in at least four English language transmissions without inside collusion at Radio Moscow."

She added, "Either that, or someone very high up in the party's propaganda section ordered that he should not be interfered with. That seems almost impossible, so it had to be that well-placed critics of the war at Radio Moscow plotted the gesture with Dantchev."

Ms. Lesnik, a news broadcaster in Hungarian at the station from 1978 until she was allowed to leave the Soviet Union following marriage to a foreigner, said Radio Moscow exercised a "fail-safe" editorial control system designed to prevent just such incidents as the Dantchev protest from occurring.

"At Radio Moscow, every script passes through four to five "control stages, depending on the importance of the subject matter," she said. "The chief of the section in person, in Dantchev's case, of the English section, then 'verifies' it. The broadcaster gets the text well in advance and, of course, doesn't go on 'live.' Everything is taped and checked yet again, ostensibly for technical quality."

It was obvious from this that Dantchev's gesture could not have been an individual protest, she emphasized.

"He might have gotten away with it once," she said. "But never a second time."

Lesnik added that, to her knowledge, no comparable "slip" had ever before marred Radio Moscow's monolithic propaganda image, testimony to the efficiency of its control methods.

"But to tell the truth, I'm not as surprised as some people," she said. "In my time there, the atmosphere at Radio Moscow had already become very sombre. I think a lot of the staff, especially the younger ones, dreamed secretly of denouncing the lies they knowingly had to broadcast day after day."

Their resentment was less political than professional, she thinks.

"Most of my colleagues weren't positively anti-Soviet," she said. "It is just that they were disgusted by the constant propaganda barrage that they themselves were submitted to. In their position, there was never-ending indoctrination, far more than ordinary citizens are directly subjected to."

The war in Afghanistan, with its steady casualty lists and the realization that it could go on indefintely, seems to have been the occasion to convert the reveries of people like Dantchev to reality.

"Already by 1981, Afghanistan was traumatizing the ordinary Soviet people much more than Westerners imagine," she said. "There was a mounting sense of unease at Radio Moscow where, whatever else, the staff was inevitably better informed than the average person. From the start, a feeling existed that a serious error may have been made in sending a Soviet occupation army there. I recall one of my Russian colleagues exclaiming in disbelief when he first heard of it, 'But that country isn't one of ours!', meaning, of course, it wasn't part of the Soviet bloc."

Since she left the Soviet Union, the dismay and demoralization over Afghanistan have clearly grown by leaps and bounds, she believes. In her view, there can be no other reasonable explanation for the Dantchev "incident."

Additional Soviet soldiers arrive in Cuba; Role remains uncertain

WASHINGTON (AP) — Additional Soviet troops have been sent to Cuba but U.S. intelligence sources say it's unclear whether they will reinforce a permanent brigade or replace soldiers scheduled to return home.

Two troop ships, each with a capacity to carry 800 to 900 soldiers, recently docked and unloaded at a port where Soviet replacement troops normally arrive to join the brigade, estimated at 2,700 men, the sources said Thursday night.

Amphibious and air defense exercises by Soviet and Cuban troops have been carried for what U.S. analysts have called a test of Cuba's readiness in case of a naval attack.

According to the sources, who spoke only on condition they not be identified by name, it is possible that Soviet troops assigned to replace other soldiers in the brigade are participating in the exercises.

Hammer encourages agreement on nuclear weapons limitations

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Dr. Armand Hammer, chairman and chief executive officer of Occidental Petroleum, called on President Reagan to sit down with Soviet leader Yuri Andropov to try to reach a new agreement on limitations of nuclear warheads.

Hammer, 85, spoke at the 35th annual Brotherhood Ball of the National Conference of Christians and Jews here last night at which he – as well as William Wilson, U.S. envoy to the Vatican; and Francis L. Dale, publisher of the Los Angeles Herald Examiner – received the conference's Brotherhood Award.

In a pointed reference to the president's current massive arms budget, Hammer, who personally does a great deal of business with the Soviet Union, said:

Hanging opposition voiced

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Robert Walker, R-Pa., who thwarted a House attempt to avert three South African hangings, has refused to back off his position despite public and private criticism from his colleagues.

"Things brought up in the waning hours of a session without prior notice to members are not to be trusted," Walker said Thursday in self-defense. "That is very bad procedure."

Because it had not been considered in a committee, Walker objected Wednesday night to a resolution urging clemency for Simon Mogoerane, Jerry Mosololi and Marcus Motaung, alleged members of the outlawed African National Congress, three hours before they were executed in Pretoria.

The resolution, killed instantly by Walker's objection, also asked President Reagan "to immediately convey to the government of South Africa, in the strongest possible terms, the objections of the United States to the scheduled hangings of these men."

Gritz thinks he has proof

HONG KONG (AP) — Former Green Beret officer James "Bo" Gritz headed to his Los Angeles home today after predicting his latest mission to Southeast Asia will yield "final proof" that at least 50 U.S. war prisoners are still alive in Laos.

"I will put into motion the machinery that will produce what I believe to be the final proof," he said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press in Hong Kong Thursday. He traveled to California today.

"I believe that there are more than 50 Americans now alive in Laos," he said. "My task is to furnish the American government with proof so that they could diplomatically negotiate with Vietnam and Laos to get the Americans out."

Gritz maintains that American soldiers captured during the Vietnam War are still being held in Laos. Laotian authorities deny this, and U.S. and Thai officials say Gritz' activities are jeopardizing their attempts to improve relations with Laos.

Clark's leadership queried

OTTAWA (AP) — The opposition Progressive Conservative Party is deciding whether to drop former Prime Minister Joe Clark for another leader who might have a better chance of ending the long domination of Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau's Liberals.

Clark is assured of a first-place finish Saturday in the first round of voting by about 3,000 delegates to a party convention. But that might not be enough for Clark, 44, who has been plagued by a loser's image and an unexciting speaking style.

John Crosbie, finance minister during Clark's short-lived government in 1979, and Brian Mulroney, a Montreal businessman who has never run for public office, have enough delegate support at least on the first ballot to deny Clark a majority, and thus a victory.

Stone to meet with D'Escoto

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — U.S. presidential envoy Richard Stone plans to meet today with Foreign Minister Miguel D'Escoto, who Nicaraguan leaders claim was the target of a CIA assassination plot.

Stone's visit comes when relations between the United States and the leftist Sandinista government are at a new low, and Western diplomatic sources said they felt the visit would do little to ease the tension.

Twelve more bodies located

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — Twelve more bodies were recovered from the sea off Quemoy Island where a Taiwanese C119 military transport plane crashed moments after takeoff Monday.

The toll of confirmed dead now stands at 31, and seven passengers still are missing, air force officials reported today.

Officials said the bodies, recovered Thursday, included those of three of the plane's eight military crewmen.

12 relief workers released

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — Twelve famine relief workers abducted by Ethiopian rebels seven weeks ago were released and reported in good health but kept in seclusion at the request of Sudan, diplomats said.

"The 12 workers were handed over to their respective embassies at the Sudanese security headquarters," said Yamani Kidane, chief representative of the Tigre People's Liberation Front which kidnapped them April 20.

He accompanied them on a tour by muleback of Tigre province, in north central Ethiopia, to see the effects of the drought and the Ethiopian government's military campaign against the rebels.

If the shoe fits, they wear them... at a farrier price

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post New Service

PERRIS, Calif. — If you are unemployed, of less than average height, punctual, a good conversationalist, relatively sober and would enjoy living in the country, Phil Hirnshall offers this career guidance counseling: Become a farrier.

A farrier, your grandfather could tell you, is a person who shoes horses. And unlike horse-drawn buggies, farriers did not disappear with automobiles and freeways. They are alive and well, and some make lots of money.

"A guy in the right area with good work habits could make anywhere between $500 and $1,500 a week," said Hirnshall, 39, who shoes horses in the Perris-Lake Mathews area of Southern California, southeast of Los Angeles.

Hirnshall does not earn that much because he has a weakness for the Sierra Nevada. For the past seven summers he has worked as a wrangler at the Rock Creek Pack Station near Mammoth Lakes in Central California.

"When I come back home, it's like starting up a new business every September," he said. "By May, when it's time for Jamie (his wife) and me to start packing for the Sierra, I'm up to about $400 a week. I'd do much better if I treated it as a year-around business."

OUTDOORSMEN WHO have packed into the mountains to fish for trout, hunt deer, photograph wildlife just for fun know that most wranglers can shoe a horse, in a pinch.

"It's part of the job," Hirnshall said.

He makes some points for prospective farriers:

"Physically, it's demanding. Nothing in life prepares you for shoeing a horse, and I don't care if you're a weight lifter. You have to bend over, squat in a knock-kneed position and do hard work for 45 minutes to an hour and a half.

"YOU'VE GOT TO BE punctual and a good conversationalist. It's not hard to find farriers, so if you can't show up on time for appointments, forget it.

"Stay out of bars. Farriers have a lot of dead time, and a lot of them wind up alcoholics. Non-appointment hours should be devoted to recruiting new customers."

"One of the bonuses of this business is that places where horses need shoeing are generally good places to live. It's not a city job."

FARRIERS EARN FROM $25 to $50 per horse in California. Only those who work at race tracks must be licensed by the state. Thoroughbred farriers earn $40 to $60 per horse. "There's a shortage of good farriers at race tracks," trainer John Russell said.

"You can learn the mechanics of shoeing in three months, working 6 to 8 hours a day," Hirnshall said. "But you really need a couple of years experience to handle all situations.

LAT Photo

Phil Hirnshall, being helped by his wife, Jamie, works as a farrier in Southern California and says that a man can make $500 to $1,500 a week shoeing horses — but he does not earn that much because he prefers to spend about half a year doing other things in the Sierra Nevada.

'Kremlin on Potamac' gets complaints

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Srvice

WASHINGTON — An elderly woman in the Glover Park section of Washington gets annoyed because the Soviet children sometimes play noisily behind the black iron fence facing her back yard.

A 35-year-old medical secretary gets irritated because parking has become more difficult in the residential neighborhood now that Soviet diplomats' cars are occasionally parked outside her door.

A local lawyer says his television reception has not been the same since the Russians came to Glover Park.

Aside from complaints this type, detente is apparently alive and well — so far — in the Northwest Washington neighborhood where the Soviet Union is building its massive new $70 million embassy compound.

The United States, meanwhile, is simultaneously building an embassy compound in Moscow under terms of treaties that took more than a decade to negotiate. Because Soviet law prohibits foreigners from owning land, the Americans in turn decided that the Russians would have to lease federally owned land in Washington.

BEGUN IN 1977 and partially occupied since 1980, the U.S.S.R.'s embassy complex is something of a mini-city for the roughly 500 Soviets, and their families, attached to the country's mission.

The 10-acre compound includes a nine-story, 165-unit apartment building, an eight-classroom school, a gymnasium, an Olympic-size pool, a 400-seat auditorium, a four-story consulate and ambassador's residence, an eight-story administration building, a playground, underground parking garage and a spacious reception hall — all totaling nearly half a million square feet.

The construction of what one neighbor calls "the Kremlin on the Potomac" has meant the loss of about 20 parking spaces, an increase in noise and traffic and some reported interference with television and radio reception, according to neighbors.

Cemetery: American way of death

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post New Service

RIVERSIDE, Calif. — The mournful sound of "Taps" echoed through the foothills of the San Bernardino Mountains as Air Force Master Sgt. Robert S. Stephens, 48, was laid to rest in Riverside National Cemetery.

Adjacent to March Air Force Base, the cemetery was dedicated on Veterans Day in 1978 and is one of the newest of America's 109 national cemeteries.

Stephens' wife told the military chaplain who presented her with the flag that had draped his casket:

"This is where he would want to be."

Since the cemetery was dedicated, more than 16,000 veterans, servicemen and servicewomen, their spouses and their minor children have been buried in the 740-acre plot.

It has the capacity for 1 million graves.

Abraham Lincoln signed an act on July 17, 1862, that created the national cemeteries to symbolize America's gratitude to service personnel and veterans.

Twelve cemeteries were initially established to provide burial places for soldiers killed in the Civil War and veterans of that conflict.

The staggering number of casualties and the great numbers of veterans from Wrold War II, the Korean conflict and the Vietnam War have necessitated the creation of seven new national cemeteries in recent years.

In California, only the cemetery at Riverside has space for burials. The other four are full.

Any man or woman who served in the armed forces at least two years, his or her spouse and their minor children are eligible to be buried in a national cemetery.

No expenses are incurred inside the gates of a national cemetery. The federal government provides a site without charge as well as opening and closing grave costs, a liner for protection of the casket, a flag for the next of kin and a grave marker.

If available and if requested, a military honor guard consisting of pall bearers and firing squad is provided for the cemetery service.

At nearby March Air Force Base, enlisted men and women are selected to serve for 28 days on the 22-member honor guard detail.

Members of the honor guard come from flight crews, secretarial pools, mess halls, hospitals, airplane maintenance shops.

Once a haven for sheep, now a harbor of desolation

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post New Service

TULELAKE, Calif. — On a ridge top high above the lava beds where the last California Indian war ended 109 years ago, a wooden and wire corral is overgrown with rabbit brush and bunch grass.

Rusty chains and padlocks still secure the wooden gates. The eight-foot-high hog-wire fence leans, bent slightly by the cold winds that sweep across the mesa and make the junipers sigh.

The winds and the magpies make the only sounds heard on the mesa now. The old corral looks like it belongs in a ghost town, and in a sense that's what it is. A wildlife ghost town, complete with bighorn sheep skulls lying in the sage.

UNTIL THREE SUMMERS ago, bighorns lived inside the 1,100-acre corral in a wildlife transplant experiment for which experts had high hopes. Earlier, bighorns had lived in the lava beds for countless centuries before settlers developed agricultural districts in northeast California and southeast Oregon in the mid-1800s.

Then, a combination of factors doomed the native bighorns. First, cattle and sheep overgrazed the land and spread diseases to which the bighorns had no immunity. And, biologists believe the settlers probably killed too many for food.

"By the second decade of this century, the lava beds bighorns were all gone," said Dick Weaver, a big-game biologist for the California Department of fish and Game.

In 1970, a five-agency effort was launched to return bighorns to the area now known as the Lava Beds National Monument. Ten live-trapped bighorns from British Columbia were turned loose there in 1971. For a few years, the herd prospered. Lambs were born every spring. Then, within weeks, they were all gone. Pneumonia, believed introduced by domestic sheep, ended what began as a showcase experiment in reintroducing species into areas where they had been wiped out.

IN THE AFTERMATH, biologists have worked to ascertain what went wrong. To a man, they believe domestic sheep grazing on nearby leased Forest Service land infected the bighorns. And to a man, they want to try again.

DFG biologist Weaver: "The National Park Service people consider it a mandate to return bighorns to the lava beds. They don't want to give up. Neither do I. It was a noble experiment. We learned some painful lessons, going from 43 bighorns to zero. We can do it."

Said Lava Beds National Monument Superintendent Jim Sleznick: "It was a very, very sad ending to what was developing as an extremely worthwhile wildlife project."

Sleznick, showing a reporter around the old bighorn enclosure, said:

"SEE THAT BIG juniper over there? I watched a ewe deliver a lamb right under that tree in the spring of '78. She got it on its feet and worked it up that ridge, to the top. Took her almost all morning to get that little lamb up there.

"It's a shame. The bighorns were almost a town (Tulelake) project. The locals loved coming out here on weekends for picnics and using binoculars to scan the ridges, watching the bighorns."

"The lava beds area is prime bighorn habitat," Sleznick said. "It was to have been kind of a staging area for all future bighorn transplants to other mountain areas of California. The corral was temporary. We planned to keep them in there the first years so we could keep an eye on them. Eventually, the corral would've come down. They would've had the run of the whole lava beds area."

The six-by-six mile Lava Beds National Monument, near the California-Oregon line, is rich in history and wildlife. In the winter of 1872-73 the Modoc warrior, Captain Jack, and 53 braves held off 600 U.S. Army troops — killing 46 of them — for five months from a fortress of lava rocks.

The area has two caterpillar-shaped lava flows, The Devil's Homestead and the Schonchin, both over two miles long. As impressive as any in North America they've been described as looking like a dark, storm-tossed ocean, frozen into lava.

The lava beds and the adjacent Tule Lake and Lower Klamath national wildlife refuges also provide visitors with some of the best wildlife viewing opportunities in California. Hundreds of species of birds visit or live in the refuges and lava beds, including the larger concentration — over 500 in normal winters — of bald eagles in California. Each winter, the eagles arrive with the largest gathering of ducks and geese found anywhere in the lower 48 states.

And the inhospitable-looking lava beds are home to an abundance of wildlife. Mule deer, coyotes, bobcats, an occasional mountain lion, quail, owls and blue grouse are seen.

And twice, there have been bighorn sheep.

The last reported sighting of a bighorn from the original herds was in 1912. In 1966, several wildlife agencies began paperwork for a project to restock the bighorns.

IN 1970, an interagency agreement was signed by the Department of Fish and Game, the National Park Service and the Bureau of Land Management. First, a $25,000, 1,100-acre enclosure was built atop Gillem's Bluff. A 5,000-gallon water guzzler was installed.

On Oct. 23, 1971, eight ewes and two California bighorn rams were live-trapped near the Fraser River in British Columbia. They were injected with penicillin, loaded onto a truck and driven nonstop, 24 hours, to the corral gate. All 10 bighorns arrived in good health.

Soon, Tulelake and Yreka, Calif., and Klamath Falls, Ore., citizens began visiting on weekends. Bighorn-watching from the highway became a northeastern California weekend pastime.

For lambs were born the next May and the transplant seemed to be going well. The herd grew despite some setbacks:

— In 1973, two rams were killed by poachers.

— In 1974, seven bighorns died of bluetongue, a gnat-carried domestic animal disease.

— In 1975, another domestic animal disease, ecthyma (sore mouth), killed six lambs in one week.

Nevertheless, normal reproduction occurred each year. By 1979, the 8-year-old herd had increased from 10 animals to 42. Biologists were delighted.

IN OCTOBER, 1979, project managers agreed it was time to move some animals from the enclosure to other promising bighorn sites. The first was the Nevada-facing slopes of the Warner Mountains east of Alturas, historic bighorn habitat.

Of the 10 bighorns rounded up for the transfer, 6 died due to the stress of capture. However, the 4 survivors, augmented by 10 bighorns from the Sierra Nevada, have grown to about 20 animals today.

On the Fourth of July Weekend, 1980, a project worker found a dead ram. A tissue sample was sent to the DFG's pathology lab at Sacramento, where a strain of domestic sheep bacterial pneumonia was found. The bighorns had no immunity. Biologists could only pick up the remains.

Futilely, biologists drained water from the guzzlers, scrubbed them with chlorine and bleach, refilled them and added an antibiotic to the water. Nothing helped.

Carcasses were found almost daily.

On Aug. 23, 1980, a 17-man search team failed to locate a single live bighorn within the enclosure. All were dead. An apparently successful eight-year project had been wiped out in seven weeks.

"I felt like I'd been kicked by a mule," Weaver said. "We all did. It was a sad time.

"Bighorns have an Achilles' heel — pneumonia. Almost every wild bighorn dies of pneumonia. Whatever stresses the animal — old age, bad teeth, lung worm, poor nutrition, dust — results in pneumonia.

"There is strong circumstancial evidence that domestic sheep in the area brougt it on. There was a herder in the area. We thought we had a buffer zone between his sheep and the bighorns."

Gould quits play before premiere

Elliot Gould

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor Elliot Gouldd has decided he won't be one of "The Guys in the Truck."

Less than a week before the show of that name was due to make its Broadway debut, Gould, 44, quit Thursday, citing "artistic differences" with director David Brown, said spokesman Ed Gallaghan. Gould's unexpected departure after 15 preview performances forced postponement of the opening, originally scheduled for June 14.

He is being replaced by understudy Harris Laskawy, who will continue in preview performances, Gallaghan said.

A new premiere date is to be announced.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Shirley Jones will find out in court whether she will receive the benefits of a $50,000 life insurance policy of her late ex-husband, actor Jack Cassidy.

Lawyers for the 49-year-old Miss Jones and Cassidy's estate argued Thursday in California Supreme Court whether Miss Jones lost her right to the benefits when she signed a property settlement agreement when the couple was divorced. Cassidy died in a fire at his apartment about a year later, in December 1976.

Miss Jones has since married comic-turned-agent Marty Ingels.

A trial court ruled in favor of the Cassidy estate, but that decision was reversed by a court of appeals.

Flip Wilson

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Comedian Flip Wilson figures prominently in a court test of provisions in California's so-called Victims' Bill of Rights, passed by the voters as Proposition 8 one year ago.

A lawyer for the 50-year-old Wilson told the state Supreme Court on Thursday that his client was constitutionally protected against illegal search and seizure. Wilson was stopped and searched by an officer for suspected drug possession at Los Angeles International Airport in 1981.

The comedian was charged with two counts of possession of an illegal substance after the discovery of small amounts of cocaine and hashish oil in his briefcase. Wilson contends the search was illegal and has sought to suppress material seized as evidence against him.

A state appeals court has held that Wilson was legally detained.

Edward Koch

NEW YORK (AP) — Mayor Edward I. Koch had planned to tell graduates of the Polytechnic Institute of New York, "The fireworks begin today," and he did — but only after the ceremony was interrupted by fire.

In his remarks prepared for delivery in the main auditorium of Carnegie Hall, Koch said "The City of New York salutes you. The fireworks begin today. Each diploma is a lighted match. Each one of you is a fuse."

As honorary degrees were being handed out Thursday, people in the upper balcony smelled smoke and shouted "Fire!"

As smoke poured through the hall, Koch sat calmly on the stage while 3,000 people were evacuated. No injuries were reported.

Later, the audience returned and the mayor delivered his address.

He was given an unscheduled honorary doctorate for helping to prevent panic until the fire, which occurred in the air-conditioning system in the basement, was extinguished.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

X-rays confirm coup diagnosis

Solomon

Dear Dr. Solomon: My child had a cough and a little trouble breathing and the doctor took an X-ray and said it was the croup. Was it necessary to take the X-ray to tell what it was? — Mrs. A.W., Cleveland, Ohio

Dear Mrs. W.: Dr. James T. Rhea, of Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston, points out that the X-ray findings are specific and confirm a diagnosis of croup. In addition, the X-ray rules out other conditions with symptoms similar to croup.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Can you answer this question? If there is medicine that can relieve depression, why are there so many depressed people around? — Mike, New York City

Dear Mike: If we all took pills every time we felt depressed, we would be a nation of zombies. It isn't possible to be alive without experiencing some moments of depression. However, the relatively well adjusted individual can learn to overcome them.

Having said that, I should add that antidepressant medication can be of great help when used appropriately. In fact Dr. Donald F. Klein, professor of psychiatry at the Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York City, says that almost all appropriately diagnosed depressed patients can benefit from such medication.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Why would a teen-age boy refuse to sit on his mother's lap or let her kiss him? I tell my son that I am not his girl friend even though many people can hardly believe that I'm old enough to be his mother. So why should he be so embarrassed? — Ginny, Lido Beach, Long Island, N.Y.

Dear Ginny: I must confess that it is difficult for me to respond to your letter because of the nuances involved. Furthermore, as I've written on a number of occasions, I refuse to diagnose from a distance and I certainly would not attempt to treat anyone from a distance.

I would suggest, however, that you discuss the situation you raise with your own or your son's physician, whether pediatrician, internist or family physician. I would point out that since your son is a teen-ager, his sexual development may be well underway and he may be embarrassed by your actions because he finds them stimulating.
