Hijackers release hostages, dynamite jet

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Hijackers of a Jordanian airliner today released 66 passengers and crew, including two Americans, and blew up the plane. Airport and Red Cross spokesmen said eight Jordanian sky marshals were killed in the explosion, but an airline official said they were alive and free.

Munib Toukan, vice president of Royal Jordanian Alia Airlines, said in Amman, Jordan that the sky marshals, or security men, "are now in Beirut in custody of the Royal Jordanian Airline."

But a Lebanese Red Cross official, who watched three explosions rip the plane apart said, "The marshals were blown up inside the plane. Their bodies are in pieces. We couldn't get to them." An airport official who spoke on condition of anonymity confirmed the report, adding that the hijackers "disappeared.'

Toukan told The Associated Press in a telephone interview that the eight sky marshals, or security men, were in the airline's Beirut office. "They are in good health and excellent spirits," he said. "We're going to put them on the first flight out of Beirut."

The pilot of the hijacked airliner, Capt. Ulf Sultan, a Swede, told The Associated Press that the hijackers fled the plane with the sky marshals as hostages before it was blown up. "We have been assured by the hijackers that they are safe," he said.

The hijackers raked the plane with automatic weapons fire, then a series of explosions rocked the Boeing 727 and set it on fire as it stood on the airport runway, witnesses said.

Soon after the explosions, the plane's fuel tanks caught fire and it broke up into burning sections of twisted metal. Only its tail, bearing the crown of King Hussein's Hashemite dynasty, remained intact.

The plane was hijacked in Beirut on Tuesday, stopped in Cyprus, tried twice to land in Tunisia, refueled in Sicily, returned to Beirut, attempted to fly to Syria and then came back to Beirut Tuesday night.

The hijackers, identified by Sultan as Shiite Moslems of Lebanon's Amal militia, were demanding that all Palestinian guerrillas leave Beirut for Tunisia where Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization has its headquarters. Various reports put the number of hijackers at four or six.

Nine crew members and 48 passengers reportedly held hostage were evacuated just before the explosion and gunfire. Nine passengers were released earlier at the Beirut airport.

Tax overhaul plan described as historic, unfair

WASHINGTON (AP) — Members of the Senate Finance Committee are using such words as historic and laudable to describe President Reagan's tax-overhaul plan, and such phrases as unfair and harmful to explain why it must be changed.

"It tends to soak the middle class," Sen. William V. Roth, R-Del., who co-authored the president's 1981 tax cut, said Tuesday as Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III outlined Reagan's latest tax initiative to the committee.

Roth pointed to White House estimates that 17 percent of the people with incomes between $15,000 and $20,000 would pay higher taxes under Reagan's plan; 22 percent of those between $20,000 and $30,000, and 28 percent of those making between $30,000 and $50,000.

"Those aren't rich people," Roth said.

But Baker replied, "The people who get those tax increases are for the most part those taking advantage of tax shelters...(and) itemizing their deductions."

Senate Republican Leader Robert J. Dole of Kansas noted that present law allows a single person $88,000 taxable income before the top, 50 percent, tax rate takes effect. But under the president's plan, Dole said, the new top rate of 35 percent would take effect at $42,000. "Is this fair?" Dole asked Baker.

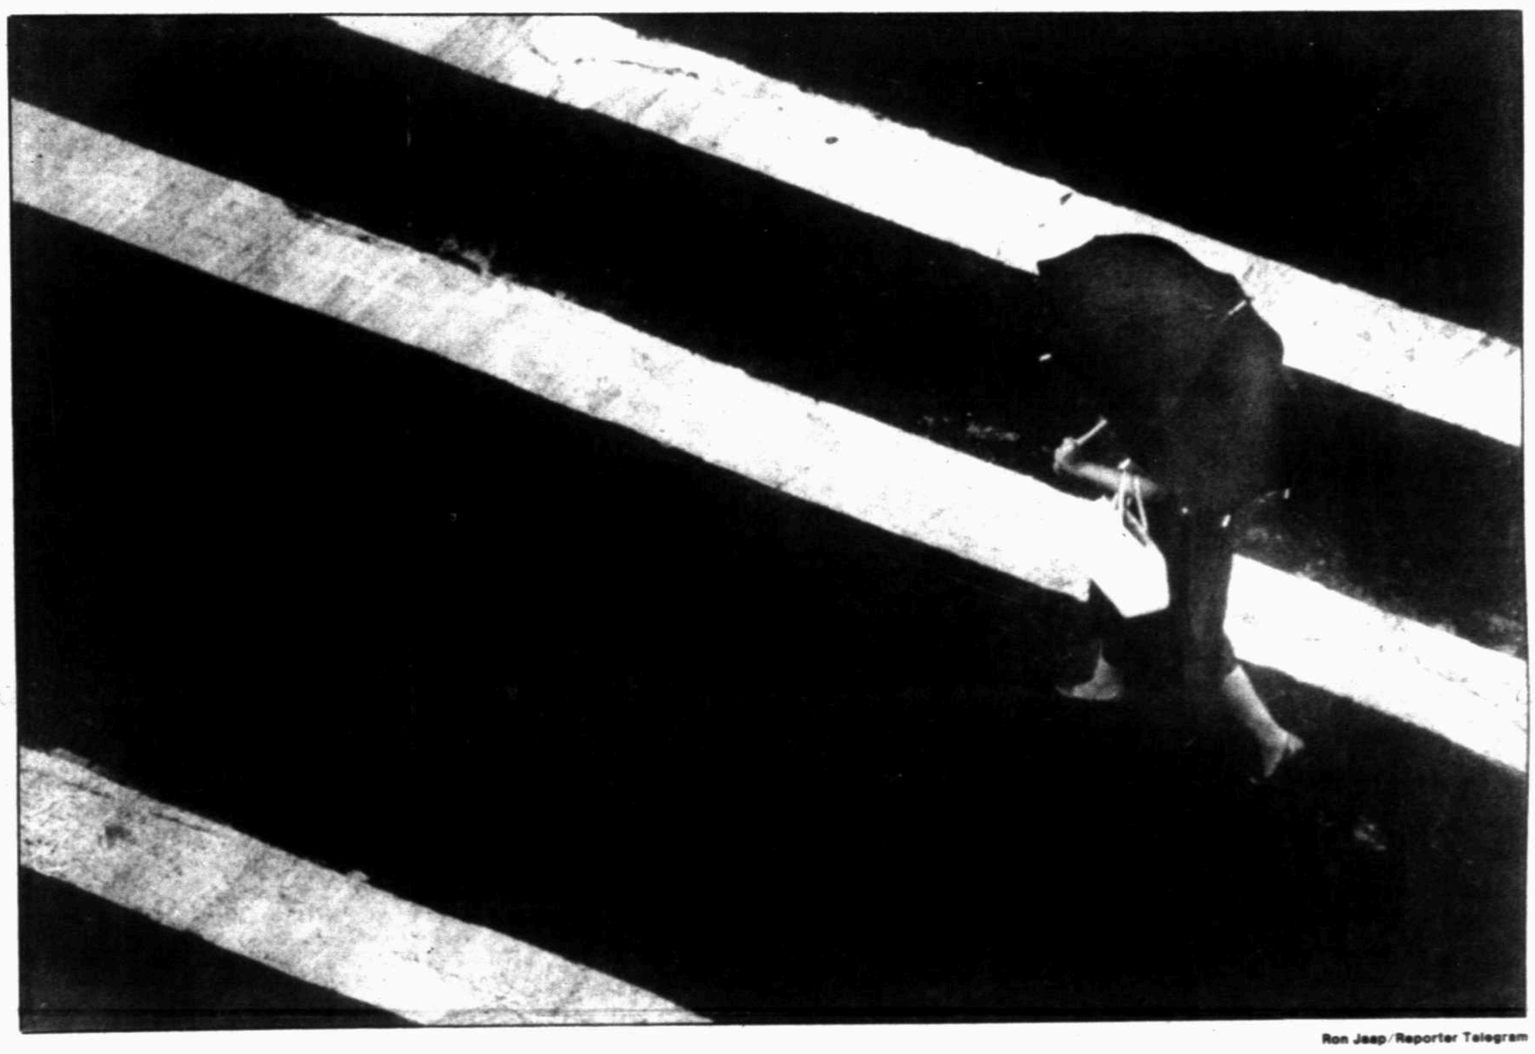

"It is fair if you look at the amount of rate reduction" that Reagan is proposing for those taxpayers, Baker replied.

"That's not going to make up for what they lose," Dole said.

Reagan's proposal would reduce individual and corporate tax rates and boost the personal exemption and standard deductions. He would pay for those tax cuts by repealing or limiting various deductions and credits. The president's aides have estimated those sweeping changes would be "revenue neutral" — meaning they would not significantly reduce or raise government tax collections.

But Baker told the Finance Committee that the administration will consider the final tax plan neutral if the shift in revenue is not more than 1 percent in either direction. That would mean the bill that eventually passes Congress could reduce or raise taxes by about $50 billion over five years and still meet the target.

An unidentified woman shelters herself from the early-morning rainfall as she makes her way across the intersection of Big Spring and Wall streets. The National Weather Service predicts a 40 percent chance of thunderstorms today decreasing to 20 percent tonight. Highs will be in the mid 80s and the low in the low 60s.

Karen Ann Quinlan dies at age 31

MORRIS PLAINS, N.J. (AP) — Karen Ann Quinlan, who found death in the arms of her weeping mother more than nine years after her case established the right to die with dignity, showed "how far we can go to preserve life," her father said today.

Miss Quinlan died at the age of 31 at 7:01 p.m. Tuesday in the Morris View Nursing Home here of "respiratory failure following acute pneumonia on top of a chronic vegetative state," said Dr. James Wolf.

"Please let us mourn in peace," the mother, Julia Quinlan, said in a brief interview today at the family's home.

The Quinlans, deeply religious and daily visitors to their daughter's bedside, in 1976 won a landmark court order allowing them to remove a respirator from Karen to spare her continued

Thunderstorms cause local flooding

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Thunderstorms prowled the Permian Basin area this morning dropping up to 1.65 inches of rain on parts of Midland and Odessa; causing flood conditions in several low-lying areas of both cities.

The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal reported Midland received .97 inches caused by a minor upper-air trough triggering activity across the region. Odessa received an average rainfall of 1.10 inches. The thunderstorm dropped up to 1.65 inches on the city's southeast side, it was reported.

A Texas Department of Public Safety spokesman, said flood conditions existed across low-lying areas and highways following the early-morning thunderstorms.

Flood waters also were apparent near the underpass on U.S. Highway 80 at Midland Regional Air Terminal. Troopers responded to two minor accidents there due to standing water on the roadway which resulted in hazardous driving conditions, according to reports.

Midland Police Department Lt. James Colburn said rising waters this morning left several motorists stranded throughout the city; particularly at the intersections of Neely Avenue and "A" Street, Garfield and Wadley avenues, Scharbauer Drive and "A" Street and along the Garden City Highway and Interstate 20.

The Midland County Sheriff's Department reported normal driving conditions on most county and farm-to-market roads. No accidents were reported in those areas, a spokesman said.

Dettman rounding up bad-check writers

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

"It's roundup time," announced the hot-check trail boss.

The roundup is a raid on hot-check writers engineered by Midland County Attorney Mark Dettman.

Dettman's first raid was launched mid-morning today in an effort to collect almost $30,000 in 784 hot checks written by 47 Midlanders and processed through the County Attorney's Office.

"We've been trying to get the hot-check program going," Dettman said.

The roundup is somewhat of a raid to discourage theft by checks. It's also to alert hot-check writers, including those who carelessly write checks on bank accounts which have insufficient funds, that they, too, may be served warrants for their arrest and jailed.

"We're getting the more flagrant cases that have had lots of notices in the past," said Dettman, "and lots of hot checks."

The criminal offense is theft by check, which is a misdemeanor offense if the check is under $750, and can net the offender a $2,000 fine and a year in jail. A hot check written for $750 or more is a felony offense, is prosecutable by the District Attorney's Office and could result in a penitentiary sentence or felony probation for the offender. Hot checks up to $20 in value are processed in Justice Court. In addition, Justice Court may handle checks for any amount under the worthless-check statute but punishment is mild — fine only.

Man testifies MMH failed to properly treat wife

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

Testimony resumed this morning in a $7.4 million negligence lawsuit against Midland Memorial Hospital by the father of a severely retarded 4-year-old boy who was born at the hospital in October 1980.

Ricky Hamilton claims hospital nurses failed to properly treat his wife, Marilyn Hamilton, during her labor, contributing to the severe retardation of his son, Cassidy Wayne Hamilton, who was born blind, mostly deaf, epileptic and without control over most of his muscles.

Although Marilyn Hamilton's family suffers from a genetic disorder and three of her brothers are mentally retarded, her mother, Della Holiedy, testified that Marilyn later gave birth to a healthy daughter, and that her sister has given birth to healthy sons. Hamilton's suit alleges that Cassidy's retardation is far beyond that of his uncles, and is due not to genetics but to hospital negligence.

"There were standards that were not met," said Hamilton's lawyer, Gerald K. Fugit of Odessa, during his opening statement to the eight-man, four-woman jury in 142nd District Court. "It was a continuous episode of bad judgment."

Marilyn Hamilton died May 24 of heart disease, but a deposition was read to the jury in which she claimed no doctor examined her after her admittance at 8:30 a.m. on Oct. 2, 1980, until about 10 p.m. that night, shortly before her Caesarian-section delivery of Cassidy. She also claimed nurses ignored her complaints of pain, and possible irregularities in the recorded heartbeat of her son.

According to her husband's suit, Cassidy suffered fetal distress during his mother's difficult labor, contributing to his retardation.

"Cassidy has no hope of ever being part of society. Eventually he is going to have to be institutionalized," Fugit said. "Nobody is trying to get anybody put in jail. Nobody is trying to get the hospital de-certified. We are merely asking that there be payment made for this terrible tragedy."

The two doctors originally named in the suit settled out of court in June 1984, according to court records.

Dr. Jesse L. Coleman and Dr. John W. Young Jr. each agreed to pay $100,000 to the plaintiff. Both doctors are scheduled to testify during this week's trial.

AA celebrates its 50th anniversary 'one day at a time'

Associated Press

Bill Wilson was an incorrigible drunk. He had great schemes and great determination, but somehow alcohol always got in the way. He'd been hospitalized, he'd sought psychiatric help, he'd tried everything, but he just couldn't stop drinking.

On May 12, 1935, Wilson, a New York stock broker, was in Akron, Ohio, on business when he realized he wanted a drink in the worst way. He knew if he could just talk to another drunk, he would not have to drink.

Wilson found an Akron physician, Dr. Robert Holbrook Smith, on the verge of losing his practice, but the doctor kept drinking. On June 10, Smith sobered up and then two men talked for the first time about their experience, strength and hope.

That is the day Alcoholics Anonymous was born 50 years ago. Today, AA numbers its members at more than a million, has meetings in 114 countries and is generally lauded by the medical community as the one organization that has had remarkable success with one of the most enigmatic of all diseases.

The official AA celebration will be in Montreal over the July 4th weekend and upwards of 40,000 members are expected to attend.

AA, the granddaddy of all the other self-help groups such as Overeaters Anonymous, Gambler's Anonymous, Narcotics Anonymous, etc., is an organization like no other.

There are no rules, no dues, no permanent leadership, no promotion effort, no chiefs, only Indians. And all the Indians remain anonymous. The insistence upon anonymity is the closest thing AA has to a rule.

Not that members are anonymous to each other. Those in the same home group know hopes and dreams, disappointments and frustrations, even dirty little secrets about each other. Not that they have weaned the secrets out of others. Members talk about anything and everything, knowing that the information will never leave the rooms.

"We are all miracles, each and every one of us. Two years ago, my life was total chaos. Today it is wonderful. But the most wonderful thing of all is that for two years, a day at a time, I have not had a drink. That is a true miracle."

— Member,
Alcoholics Anonymous

"You are only as sick as your secrets," is one of the many slogans in the rooms. The primary one is "One Day At a Time," because that is how members learn not to drink. They don't vow never to drink again. The collective experience shows that doesn't work. They simply don't drink on Monday if it happens to be Monday.

"We are all miracles, each and every one of us," said one member. "Two years ago, my life was total chaos. Today it is wonderful. But the most wonderful thing of all is that for two years, a day at a time, I have not had a drink. That is a true miracle."

Friendships that last a lifetime are made in the rooms, as well as AA marriages.

"I really have very few friends anymore outside of AA," said a 41-year-old woman who was addicted to prescription drugs and heroin, as well as alcohol. "I have found that after the honesty I find in these rooms, I find it hard to deal with civilians."

Everything at the meetings is a suggestion. Witty chairmen point out the "suggested no-smoking section." AA offers individual programs that people work out for themselves.

"When I first came into AA, I realized that the program was a smorgasbord and I was like a magnet passing over the top," said Jim. "I took only what I needed to help me not drink one day at a time.

"As I got more and more sober, I found that I could avail myself of more and more that was on the table."

The suggested program of recovery is based on 12 steps, which include an admission that alcoholics are powerless over alcohol and the belief that only a surrender to a higher power of one's choosing will bring recovery. There are atheists who call their higher power the AA group.

KAREN

"agony" and to honor her expressed wish never to be kept alive through extraordinary means.

"I think there are a lot of lessons to be learned by how far we can go to preserve life," Joseph Quinlan said today. "Death is not so much to be feared. Everything in this world is temporary. We shouldn't really fear death that much."

The father, although weary, said he and his wife are strengthened by their belief in an afterlife. He called life "a trial."

The historic case began when Miss Quinlan lapsed into a coma on April 15, 1975, apparently after consuming several gin and tonic drinks at a party after taking what doctors said was a "therapeutic" dose of a mild tranquilizer and aspirin.

Although she never knew it, Miss Quinlan became a symbol of the right of the terminally ill to decide their fates with their families.

"She had been embraced...as someone with whom the world could empathize," said Paul Armstrong, the family lawyer who argued the case. "I think Karen has moved into the pantheon of the American myth."

The moment of death was "one of great reverence and sense of loss that I could read in Julia's face, who was embracing Karen and was weeping quietly," said Armstrong, who was at the nursing home.

Miss Quinlan developed pneumonia five days ago and "in the last 36 hours, it certainly seemed like she was in more distress than in any of her last 10 years," Wolf said.

No antibiotics were administered, although a non-prescription drug was given to reduce the fever, and by late afternoon, death was "clearly imminent," the doctor said.

Monsignor Thomas Trapasso, the family's spiritual adviser, described the Quinlans as "in some sense relieved" because Karen's death "had always been on their minds."

"It's so hard to believe," Trapasso quoted Mrs. Quinlan as saying when her daughter died.

Trapasso said burial would be Friday or Saturday at Our Lady of the Lake Church in Mount Arlington. An autopsy was scheduled for today.

"Karen Ann Quinlan's 10-year sleep is over and God has called her home," said Bishop Frank J. Rodimer of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Paterson, to which the Quinlans belonged.

"Her tragic accident and her parents' persistence in doing what was morally correct have resulted in a clearer perception as to how we should treat those in the same situation that Karen was in. She had a purpose in life far beyond what she could have suspected."

The Quinlans went to court after doctors said Miss Quinlan would never return to a "cognitive state" but refused to disconnect the respirator.

The New Jersey Supreme Court overturned a lower court and granted the parents' pleas on March 31, 1976. The respirator was disconnected on May 22, 1976, but contrary to doctors' projections, Miss Quinlan lived on.

"It's amazing. We never expected her to live," Mrs. Quinlan said in a 1980 interview.

In 1976, the U.S. Supreme Court dismissed a final appeal by Stephen Garger and Richard Gallagher, officers of the Human Life Amendment Group, who had wanted the case be reopened "in the interests of justice."

The 5-foot-4 Miss Quinlan, who weighed only about 65 to 70 pounds when she died, spent the last decade in a fetal position with no expression on her face other than an occasional frown, Trapasso said. She could move her head from side to side and be "startled by a loud noise," he said.

Miss Quinlan was fed by a tube in the nose. Her mother said removing it would be a "definite move in causing her death," which the family opposed.

The Quinlans never stopped attending their adopted daughter. The father would drive 40 miles each morning to visit her, and a Mass was celebrated each March at which Miss Quinlan's parents, brother and sister prayed and sang Karen's favorite song, "Amazing Grace."

Her condition had deteriorated in recent months. Quinlan said severe lung infections increased in frequency from twice a year to about every two months. Brain damage had left her hands rigidly drawn toward her chin.

In an interview with The Associated Press in January, Quinlan said he had wanted his daughter off the respirator because "she was fighting the machine and it caused a great deal of discomfort.

"When I finally reconciled it in my own mind that she was going to die, I asked myself, 'Why put her through agony, all that extra discomfort?'

"What she was feeling no one can actually say. Every time that machine pumped air into her lungs, she would pull her head away from it."

Mrs. Quinlan recalled that she had discussed the cancer deaths of an aunt and a friend's father with her daughter.

"Karen never specified a respirator per se, but she always said that she would never want to be kept alive by extraordinary means."

During the two-week Superior Court trial, doctors testified that Miss Quinlan had experienced brain death, a condition in which there are no brain waves but the patient continues to breathe.

Although medical experts testified there was no chance the young woman would live, Superior Court Judge Robert Muir denied the Quinlans' plea.

"There is no constitutional right to die that can be asserted by a parent for his incompetent child," Muir ruled.

The state Supreme Court overturned the decision. "No compelling interest of the state could compel Karen to endure the unendurable, only to vegetate a few measurable months with no realistic possibility of returning to any semblance of cognitive or sapient state," then-Chief Justice Richard Hughes wrote in the 7-0 decision.

"The decision rests upon the right of privacy established in the Constitution of the United States," Hughes said Tuesday night. "I have never doubted its correctness."

Their daughter's flickering life helped many people, the Quinlans said.

"It's comforting, because although losing our daughter is difficult...her life still serves a purpose, setting a legal precedent for others in a similar situation," Mrs. Quinlan said.

The Quinlans founded a Karen Ann Quinlan Center for Hope that provides hospice care for terminally ill patients. Under the program, funded in part with money from a book and a movie on the case, patients are cared for at home so they do not have to die in a hospital.

CHECKS

checks to Dettman's hot-check office. There, they are processed by Felis Duran, who sends out letters in trying to collect restitution for merchants. When that fails, the checks are handled by Bobbi Carr and Patricia Patterson, who prepare arrest warrants, which Dettman then signs.

Those who did not respond to the pleas for payment are among the 47 who are being served arrest warrants today out the County Attorney's Office. "We are going to pick up those people," Dettman said.

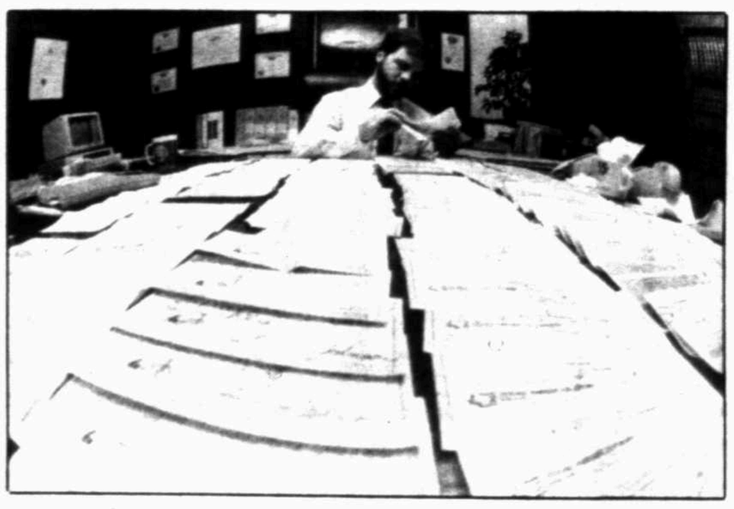

The hot checsk were written on accounts which were either closed or which had non-sufficient funds (NSF).

Those warrants and additional warrants issued by the Justice of the Peace on worthless checks were being served today by deputies of Sheriff Gary Painter and Constable Tom McGinnis and by County Attorney's Investigator Bob Peetz.

Dettman said his office is concerned with persuading the hot-check writers to make restitution. Even so, they are subject to serving jail time and paying fines and fees.

In one case, a 26-year-old Midlander in 1984 wrote 19 checks ranging from $4.68 to $60 at a Safeway Food Store. The checks totaled $663.15 and the fees added up to $195. Fees ranges from $5 to $75 depending on the dollar-value of each check.

A 22-year-old Midland man wrote 26 checks totaling $918.22 and ranging from $7.47 to $117.69. The victimized merchants included Safeway, Albertson's, Gibson's Discount Center, M-System, 7-Eleven and Texas Burgers. Fees added up to $275.

Cody Bell/Reporter-Telegram

Midland County Attorney Mark Dettman is calling in payments on hundreds of hot checks processed by his office. Today, he launched a roundup in serving arrest warrants on hot-check writers who have ignored requests and pleas for payments to Midland merchants.

ANOTHER HOT-CHECK writer, 34, wrote $617.86 via 60 checks ranging from $1 to $36.55 at Albertson's, 7-Eleven and Stop 'n' Go. Fees totaled $375.

Dettman's office this year will process an estimated 6,000 checks. So far, the collection rate has averaged about 65 percent. But Dettman, now in his first year in office as county attorney, is computerizing his hot-check processing in efforts to increase the collection rate. In the first five months of 1985, he has processed 2,249 checks totaling $115,625 and averaging $51.41 per check.

"Most of them (hot-check writers) do tend to be younger," Dettman said. "We seldom get persons any older than 35 on hot-check cases. I don't know if that is indicative of anything. Maybe when they get older they become more stable."

Dettman said grocery stores and convenience stores are among "the hardest hit" by hot-check writers, but "that's not the exclusive domain of the hot-check writer."

Department stores and other retail businesses are targets of hot-check writers, who often write checks for cash, groceries and clothes.

"The main thing that we try to do is to get restitution for the merchant," Dettman said. "If they pay the merchants back, they may get a small fine, small jail sentence or probation." Those who do not make restitution usually serve from 60 days to one year in jail if they are convicted.

Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry today said he has processed worthless checks from 50 cents in value up to $3,000. He said hot-check writers are of two types: accidental and habitual.

The "accidental" type just overdraws his accounts and is embarrassed into keeping better track of his banks funds.

"The habitual offender writes checks to whomever he can, whenever he can and for as much as he can," Sprayberry said. "It's kind of like a disease. He may write checks for a lot of things he doesn't even need or want."

Dettman said hot-check writing becomes just "an easy way to steal."

"Once they steal a couple of times (via writing checks), it becomes easier to steal in the future."

JET

Teams of armed security guards have flown on all Alia flights since the airline's offices in Athens, Rome and Vienna were bombed last March.

The explosions came nine minutes after the hijackers' 2 p.m. (6 a.m. CDT) deadline for blowing up the jetliner if Chedli Klibi, secretary-general of the 21-member Arab League, did not appear to negotiate with them.

Shortly before the blasts, the hijackers demanded that a bus be brought up to the plane.

An airport official, who spoke on condition he not be identified, said a bus was sent out to the jet, which was parked about 100 yards from the middle of the tarmac at the Beirut airport.

At one point, the hijackers opened fire at two Shiite Moslem militiamen who drove a jeep to within about 25 yards of the plane. No one was hurt. It was not clear why they tried to drive up to the plane.

The hijackers had set a 2 p.m. deadline to begin killing passengers. Later they had threatened to blow up the plane with themselves and the hostages aboard if Klibi did not leave Tunis, Tunisia, within an hour to meet with them.

The deadline passed without incident as officials in the Beirut control tower told the hijackers they were working on the demand.

Arab League officials in Tunis said Tuesday that Klibi was out of the country, but did not say where. They said Klibi had been in contact today with the Lebanese government about the situation before the plane was blown up.

TAX

Meanwhile, Martin Feldstein, a Harvard University economist who formerly was Reagan's chief economics adviser, told the House Ways and Means Committee that the plan "has a substantial risk of losing revenue." He added, "It would be a fiscal disaster if tax reform became a deficit-enlarging tax cut."

The Democratic Study Group, an organization of most liberal Democrats in the House, released a report criticizing Reagan's plan on grounds it fails to meet his stated goals of fairness, simplification and revenue neutrality.

The proposal "is far tougher on tax provisions used by the middle class than on exotic tax shelters and loopholes used by those who are not paying their fair share of taxes," Rep. James Oberstar, D-Minn., chairman of the group, told reporters.

At the Senate Finance Committee, most members praised the president's goals and many parts of his plan.

Most Baptists jubilant at conservative victory

DALLAS (AP) — Although some moderates expressed reservations, there was jubilation among the throng of messengers after the Rev. Charles F. Stanley was re-elected as president of the Southern Baptist Convention.

Applause and predictions of a healthier convention clashed with fears of retaliation for agency heads who are not in line with the fundamentalist views espoused by Standley in the wake of Tuesday's vote.

Convention "messengers" at the largest assembly ever elected Stanley to his second one-year term by giving him 55 percent of the vote. Moderate Rev. W. Winfred Moore lost the race with 45 percent and was then elected first vice president in a show of unity.

"I'm impressed with Charles Stanley and everything he stands for," said Marlene Craft, a messenger from Honea Path, S.C. "Anything God leads him to do, I'm sure he'll do."

Becky Stewart, a messenger from Lebanon, Ohio, agreed.

And Jack Ogden of Tawhuska, Okla., added that Stanley "is representative of mainstream Baptist thought. He isn't vindictive; he's very kind."

Others weren't so sure.

"I think it's unfair for the Southern Baptists," lamented the Rev. Steve Jones of Sparta, Va. "They're taking the convention in a new direction, a fundamentalist direction toward creedalism and central control."

He added that "we will be part of a convention where our kind of pastoring will be no longer welcome."

Southern Baptists vow to stick together

DALLAS (AP) — Southern Baptists from Texas said they believe they will stick together even if the Rev. Charles Stanley is unable to heal the rift that has developed between fundamentalist and moderates in the denomination.

More than 45,000 "messengers" in what was the largest turnout ever for a Southern Baptist Convention voted Tuesday to re-elect Stanley, a pastor from Atlanta, as president of the 140-year-old convention.

Buel Berry, a Sulphur Springs delegate, attributed much of the convention's internal discord to the advisers for the two candidates — the fundamentalist-backed Stanley of Atlanta and the moderate-supported Rev. W. Winfred Moore of Amarillo.

Another Texas messenger, Doug McHenry of Jacksboro, said the politicking and controversy over this year's convention has been mostly characterized by "acts that are un-Christian."

Moore Stanley

"The name calling, the mudslinging, I don't think the noble goals are supported by the type of actions that people are going about," McHenry said.

"There's more smoke than there is fire," he added. "It won't affect the local pastors."

Messenger Ronnie Burke of Beaumont also said he thinks Texas Baptists are united and attributed that unity to "Mission Texas," a project to spread the gospel to 7.5 million Texans.

"Texas Baptists are committed and united on that aspect," he said.

Although those and other Texas Baptists said their state's congregation would stick together, they too were split on their choice for SBC president.

McHenry and Fort Worth messenger Tim Everett said they voted for Moore for almost the same reasons Burke said he was supporting Stanley.

Burke said Stanley demonstrated the "unity of our convention."

"I think the people associated with the fundamentalists group and the ultra-conservative group have done a lot of mudslinging," Burke said. "There's been a lot of tapping of phone calls, but I don't think Dr. Stanley has been personally involved in that."

Everett, meanwhile, said Moore was the candidate who could bring the two sides together.

"I'd be very surprised if he (Stanley) could do that."

The record SBC attendance — the previous record of 22,872 was set in 1978 in Atlanta — reflected the tension between the nation's 14.3 million Southern Baptists who say they are usually "well-unified."

Baptists' virtue tested by long lines at convention center

DALLAS (AP) — Food servers wiped their brows and took a breath, but only long enough to prepare for dinner crowds that returned to create endless lines and more waiting.

"We just weren't expecting this many people," lamented convention manager Tim Hedquist of the more than 44,000 "messengers" who swarmed to the Southern Baptist Convention in Dallas this week.

On Tuesday, the convention's official first day, lines of as many as 50 people tapped toes impatiently throughout the Dallas Convention Center — waiting on telephones, bathrooms, cafeterias, information booths.

"Even the Coke machines are goners," Hedquist said. "The biggest piece of information is if you know where there's a secret restroom. That's the kind of information people are hoarding and passing along to their friends."

The annual conventions usually draw no more than 20,000 people in a good year, he said, and as late as a few weeks ago planners were still only predicting a crowd of about 30,000.

"This is the third line I've waited in," groused Clyde Vire of Paris, Ark., as he stood in a food line. "The others were going nowhere."

Vire said he had been waiting about an hour to get some drinks for himself and his family.

"I don't think they were prepared for this many people," he said. "We weren't."

Quinlan case forced examination of treatment issue

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — The life and the death of Karen Ann Quinlan, but mostly the time between, forced American society to confront whether there is an appropriate moment to stop medical treatment of terminally ill patients.

Miss Quinlan died Tuesday night at the age of 31, more than nine years after the New Jersey Supreme Court ruled unanimously that her parents had the right to remove the comatose woman from a respirator.

"If anything, Karen has become a symbol worldwide for the right of individuals and their families to make fundamental treatment decisions while they are dying," said Paul Armstrong, the family's attorney. "It's not a so-called right-to-die test, but a right to make those fundamental decisions in the throes of a terminal illness."

Joseph and Julia Quinlan began a year-long court battle to gain that right in 1975 after their adopted daughter lapsed into a coma, apparently after mixing alcohol and barbiturates at a party.

"People who have terminal illness who don't feel they want further treatment are better protected by the Karen Ann Quinlan case. Many of the advances have been made as a result of the suffering of that family," said Dr. Sidney Diamond, a neurologist who testified at the Quinlan trial.

Superior Court Judge Robert Muir rejected the Quinlans' request, saying, "There is no constitutional right to die that can be asserted by a parent for his incompetent child."

But the New Jersey Supreme Court reversed the lower court in a landmark March 1976 decision and was upheld when the nation's highest court refused to consider an appeal.

"No compelling interest of the state could compel Karen to endure the unendurable, only to vegetate a few measurable months," then-Chief Justice Richard Hughes wrote in the 7-0 decision.

"I have never had any doubts about the correctness of the Quinlan decision," Hughes said Tuesday night from his Boca Raton, Fla., home. "I have received many pros and cons from around the world but in conscience, I have never doubted its correctness."

Hughes, also a former governor of New Jersey, recalled that he canceled a trip to Japan and hurried the decision at the urging of his wife, who felt Miss Quinlan was on the verge of death and that there was a need for a ruling.

"The decision rests upon the right of privacy established in the Constitution of the United States," he said. "It is not stated specifically but is implied."

He added that he felt the decision has led to "important changes in judicial and legislative action in the country.

"I am very sorry and yet I have mixed feeling for the poor lady who had had a long, severe ordeal. It is a classic case of family loyalty and I feel keenly for the Quinlans."

Dr. Julius Korein, a professor of neurology at New York University, testifying on behalf of the Quinlans, said that all treatment Miss Quinlan was receiving was extraordinary and should be stopped. His opinion has not changed.

"If there was any purpose it was to show the futility of applying the enormous technology in medicine to totally futile situations that can lead nowhere," Korein said Tuesday night. "It was a distortion and total abuse of technology."

Dr. Mark Siegler, director of the Center for Clinical Medical Ethics at the University of Chicago, said the Quinlan case represented "one of the most important legal and ethical precedents in modern medicine."

Miss Quinlan was a symbol for the "caring function" in medicine and her case demonstrated what medicine can do when it cannot provide a cure, Siegler said. "An important thing is that people will say she died tonight. They won't say she died nine years ago. It demonstrates a continuity of concern."

Stephen Toulmin, a philosopher at the University of Chicago, added that the Quinlan case may have helped medical professionals and family members "recapture the kind of respect they used to be awarded and their right to use their own best judgment."

The Roman Catholic church supported the Quinlans' actions and the Rev. Thomas Trapasso, their spiritual adviser, said Tuesday night, "The issue is whether our society can develop an ethic where we can say it's appropriate at a certain time to end treatment."

In earlier interviews, Trapasso has drawn a distinction between what the family did and euthanasia.

NATION

"People who have terminal illness who don't feel they want further treatment are better protected by the Karen Ann Quinlan case. Many of the advances have been made as a result of the suffering of that family."

— Dr. Sidney Diamond, neurologist

Quinlan dies ten years after court decision

Here is a chronology of events in the Karen Ann Quinlan case:

— April 15, 1975: Karen Ann Quinlan, 21, of Landing, N.J., lapses into a coma, apparently after mixing drinks and a "therapeutic" amount of a mild tranquilizer and aspirin at a party.

— July 31, 1975: After learning from doctors that their daughter will never return to a "cognitive state," Joseph and Julia Quinlan ask physicians to remove her from a respirator sustaining her breathing. The doctors refuse.

— Sept. 17, 1975: The Quinlans ask a New Jersey Superior Court judge to order doctors to remove the respirator, asserting Miss Quinlan has a right to "die with dignity."

— Nov. 10, 1975: Superior Court Judge Richard Muir denies the request. The Quinlans appeal.

— March 31, 1976: The New Jersey Supreme Court overturns Muir's decision, saying the state has no right to order continued mechanical breathing in a body with no chance of regaining a semblance of life.

— May 1976: Acting on the Supreme Court's ruling, doctors wean Miss Quinlan from a respirator. Her breathing continues.

— June 9, 1976: Miss Quinlan is moved from St. Clare's Hospital in Denville to the Morris View Nursing Home, a county facility in Morris Plains.

— Aug. 20, 1976: The Quinlans donate $10,000 to the Catholic Church — part of the profits from the sale of their story to the Ladies Home Journal.

— Nov. 2, 1976: The U.S. Supreme Court refuses to hear arguments in the case of Karen Ann Quinlan, dismissing the final appeal to the landmark state Supreme Court ruling. The appeal was filed by two New York men representing the Human Life Amendment Group.

— March 31, 1977: A year after the state Supreme Court ruling, Miss Quinlan's condition remains the same.

— June 21, 1977: An attorney for Miss Quinlan reports her condition has deteriorated and the last rites of the Roman Catholic Church are performed.

— March 5, 1979: Three years after the state Supreme Court decision, Miss Quinlan's heartbeat is strong. She remains in a coma.

— Sept. 18, 1979: The Morris County sheriff orders a 24-hour guard at the nursing home after the appearance of a photograph purportedly of Miss Quinlan.

— June 26, 1980: Mrs. Quinlan says the Vatican ruling on euthanasia reaffirms her belief that she and her husband acted within the teaching of the church in removing their daughter from the respirator.

— Aug. 4, 1981: Professional and non-professional workers at the Morris View Nursing Home return to work after a one-day walkout to protest stalled contract talks. Miss Quinlan, moved to Mt. Kemblem, a geriatric facility, for a few days, is returned to the nursing home.

— March 29, 1983: Karen Ann Quinlan turns 29. Her birthday is marked with a Mass, which for the first time since she went into a coma was not celebrated at her bedside because her mother was recovering from a car accident.

— March 29, 1985: Miss Quinlan turns 31. Dr. James Wolf, her personal physician, says her condition has deteriorated in the past year and she has been fighting infection at least once a month.

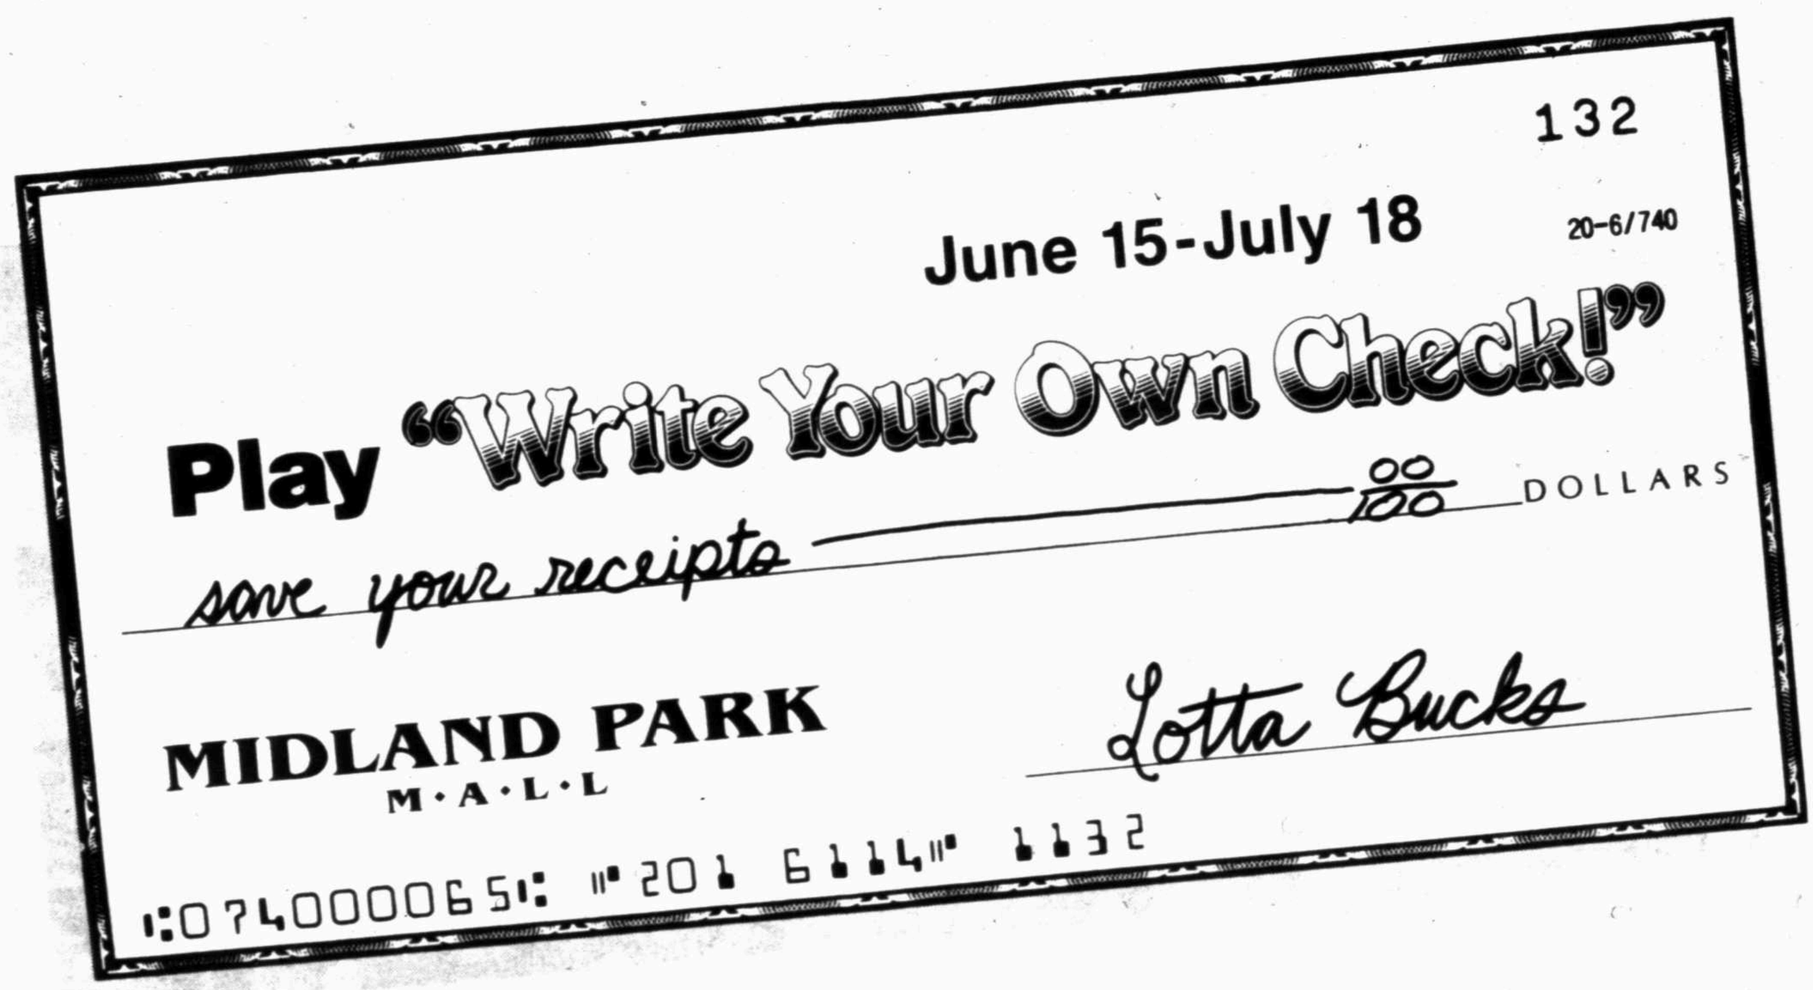

— June 11, 1985: Miss Quinlan dies at 7:01 p.m. at the Morris View Nursing Home of acute respiratory failure on the top of acute pneumonia, nine years and two days after arriving at the nursing home.

Soldier's body found in Oklahoma lake

LAWTON, Okla. (AP) — The body of a soldier stationed at Fort Sill was found by authorities looking for him since he was believed to have drowned Sunday while swimming, Army officials said.

He was identified as Pvt. Jose Alvarado, 19, of El Paso, Texas. Searchers found his body on Tuesday.

Alvarado and a friend had rented a boat at Lake Elmer Thomas on Sunday afternoon, said Sheila Samples of the Fort Sill public affairs office. She said Alvarado was missing after the men dived from the boat to swim in a weedy area.

Man wrestles with wife's 'right to die'

MENLO PARK, Calif. (AP) — Elaine Pritchard lies in a nursing home with her eyes staring blankly, a permanently unconscious "vegetative" patient, while her husband seeks court approval to let her die by removing a feeding tube.

Her physician, Dr. George Waltuch, agrees that she should be allowed to die. But he refuses to starve her to death by taking away the nose-to-stomach feeding tube because he believes it's "not a medical decision."

Waltuch says he resents being asked to be her "executioner," and he likens the removal of the tube to "putting a plastic bag over the patient's head."

Mrs. Pritchard, 43, has been unconscious since a 1982 auto accident. Her hand and leg make occasional, reflexive movements, but neurosurgeons have diagnosed her as permanently brain-damaged on both sides and in a "persistent vegetative state."

Mrs. Pritchard's situation is similar to that of Paul Brophy in Dedham, Mass., and some other less publicized cases among the growing number of permanently unconscious patients.

The questions asked in these cases go beyond the medical, ethical and legal issues that first triggered widespread public debate a decade ago when Karen Ann Quinlan's parents sought to remove her from a respirator.

Miss Quinlan, whose breathing machine was removed after a 1976 decision by the New Jersey Supreme Court, is still in a coma. Her parents have not asked that feeding be stopped.

One of the key questions in the cases of Brophy and Mrs. Pritchard is whether feeding tubes should be considered "life support" systems similar to artificial breathing devices.

Other questions that have arisen are:

— Would removing the tubes and starving the patients to death over a period of perhaps two weeks be more or less humane than letting them continue indefinitely in their present conditions?

— Should relatives of unconscious patients be allowed to grant them their "right to die" if it is known the patients previously said they would not want to be kept alive if there were no hope of recovery?

Harold Pritchard said his wife told him and others during discussions of the Quinlan case years ago that she would not want to remain alive under such conditions.

"It's not a question of me saying this is what I want; it's a question of me allowing her to have what I sincerely believe she would want," he said.

He argues the feeding tube is equivalent to life-support breathing machines, a position held by an appeals court in Southern California in the 1983 acquittal of two doctors accused of "mercy killing" for removing a patient's feeding tubes.

The Massachussetts Medical Society recently adopted the same view of tube feeding, according to a doctor's testimony in the Brophy case, as did a presidential commission in a 1983 study on ethical, medical and legal issues in treatment decisions.

Dr. Waltuch disagrees.

"This is simply not a medical decision; it is not a decision a doctor ought to make," he said. "Mrs. Pritchard is on a 'do not resuscitate' regimen. That means nothing will be done to keep her alive beyond feeding her.

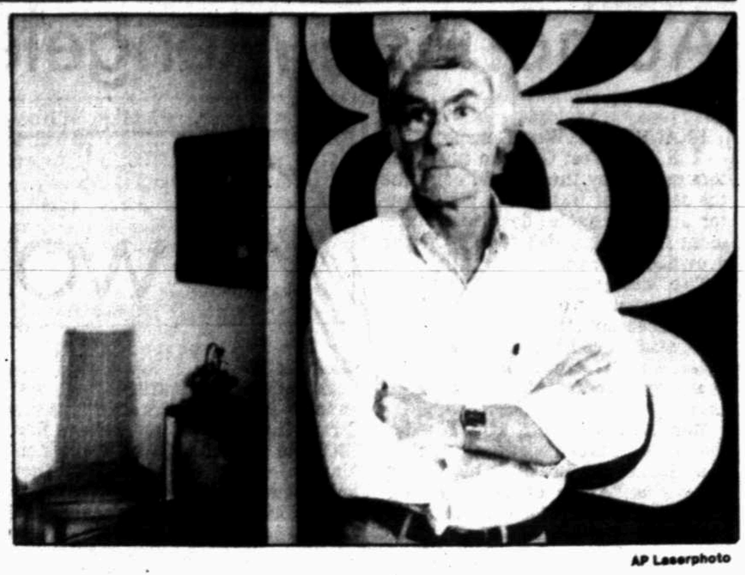

"But I have declined to go to the nursing home and give the order 'do not give water and food.' I can't do that," he said. "And the nurses probably wouldn't do it, anyway. I've told Mr. Pritchard that if wants to take her home and pull out the tube, he can do that. I won't object, but I will not be her executioner."

Waltuch said Pritchard declined to take his wife home to remove the tube because "he didn't feel he was emotionally ready."

Waltuch said he has written to Pritchard, saying he wants to remove himself from the case as soon as another doctor can be found to replace him.

Pritchard, who has spoken with Waltuch only a few times in the past two years and who communicates with him now through an attorney, said his refusal to take his wife home "had nothing to do with emotion."

He said he is willing to remove the tube himself but that his small condominium is not suitable. He also said he could not afford full-time private nurses to attend his wife until she died.

Authorities: Mengele search to continue

WORLD

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — U.S. and West German investigators said today they would continue the search for Nazi death camp doctor Josef Mengele, despite a statement from Mengele's family that he drowned in Brazil.

The Mengele family has given prosecutors no proof of their announcement that Mengele died in 1979, said Hans-Eberhard Klein, the chief West German prosecutor in charge of the case, at a news conference.

Mengele's son, Rolf, said Tuesday that he is certain a corpse unearthed near Sao Paulo, Brazil, is his father. Known as "Angel of Death," Josef Mengele is blamed for the killings of 400,000 Jews during World War II.

"As long as it is not certain that the corpse that was exhumed in Embu (Brazil) is Josef Mengele's, the worldwide investigation will continue," Klein said.

Three U.S. Marshals from Washington who arrived in Frankfurt today to work with Klein on the case also said the search for the most-wanted Nazi fugutive would go on.

"Everything that has been started (in the probe) continues," U.S. Marshal Howard Safir told The Associated Press. Israeli, West German and American investigators met in Frankfurt last month to coordinate their search.

Israelis investigating Nazi war crimes said Tuesday in Tel Aviv, Israel, that they did not believe Rolf Mengele' statement and would continue to search for his father. They said the report may be an attempt to end public interest in the family and take pressure off Mengele because of a $1 million reward Israel offered for information leading to his capture.

Klein said Mengele's relatives, who for years have refused to talk to authorities, have given prosecutors only one piece of paper — the same printed statement that they delivered to reporters in Munich Tuesday.

"I have received no (other) documents from the family," Klein said. He added, however, that he hoped to be in touch with the family "this week or next."

On Tuesday, Rolf Mengele's sister-in-law, Sabine Hackenjos, said at a news conference in Munich: "The proof will be so clear that no one will be able to think that someone is still being hidden."

Asked whether the younger Mengele went to South America to see his father while he was alive, Mrs. Hackenjos said, "That will be learned from the statement given to the Frankfurt prosecutor."

Rolf Mengele planned to give prosecutors the "background leading up to the death of Josef Mengele," said Herbert Bauermeister, who described himself as a freelance journalist representing the Mengeles.

Romeu Tuma, chief of federal police in Sao Paulo, said he received a telex Tuesday from West Germany that said Rolf Mengele's wife had "information about diseases and fractures" suffered by Josef Mengele. He said the telex did not elaborate or say whether the information would be in the statement.

Police in Brazil say the body, exhumed last week, is that of a man buried under the name Wolfgang Gerhard who drowned in the ocean on Feb. 7, 1979 and was buried at Embu, near Sao Paulo.

Mengele's family in the past refused to cooperate with prosecutors. Klein said he hoped the family would be more willing to help investigators now and that he would be able to talk directly to Rolf Mengele.

Rolf Mengele, a Freiburg attorney, is the son of Mengele and his first wife, Irene, who also lives in Freiburg. Other relatives run a farm machinery company in Guenzburg, the Bavarian town where Mengele was born in 1911.

On May 31, West German investigators discovered letters in the Guenzberg home of Hans Sedlmeier, a former Mengele company employee, that led authorities to the grave. Some of the letters may have been written by Mengele, investigators said.

The letters led authorities to an Austrian couple who said they had sheltered Mengele in Brazil, and that Mengele assumed the identity of Gerhard after Gerhard left for Austria, where he later died.

Tass says Agca lied about Soviet order

Agca

MOSCOW (AP) — The official news agency Tass says convicted papal assailant Mehmet Ali Agca was lying when he claimed in a Rome courtroom that Soviet officials had ordered the assassination attempt on Pope John Paul II.

Agca testified in the trial of three Bulgaians and four Turks charged with complicity in the May 1981 wounding of the pontiff that the Soviet Embassy in Bulgaria, offered him the equivalent of $1.2 million for the shooting.

It was the first time in three years of cooperating with police in the case that Agca directly linked the Soviet Union to the assassination attempt in St. Peter's Square.

The case being tried in Rome, in which Agca is the key witness, "will undoubtedly go down in the history of jurisprudence (as a gross attempt to turn a criminal case into an anti-socialist political provocation) and in the history of journalism," Tass said.

"One is led to surmise this because of numerous cases of surprisingly unobjective coverage by some news organs of the trial in Rome in general and Agca's sensational testimonies in particular," Tass said.

"It should be noted that while at first some Western correspondents commented on such statements with irony and sarcasm, making it plain that they regarded the Turkish terrorist either as a schizophrenic or a mountebank, they have altered their ways in the recent days as if at somebody's command and are now trying to present Agca as quite a serious and trustworthy person."

WORLD IN BRIEF

City mourns deaths

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The city of Petah Tikva was in mourning today for 18 high-school students and three adults killed when a train ploughed into their excursion bus.

President Chaim Herzog, Prime Minister Shimon Peres and other leaders were to join the thousands of mourners at a funeral for most of the 21 victims of the crash, one of the worst road accidents in Israel's history.

The 18 seventh-grade students from Petah Tikva's Brenner school were all on a school bus trip to a beachside nature reserve on Tuesday.

Transport Ministry investigators are still trying to piece together why the bus, one of four on the excursion, apparently stopped on the main Tel Aviv-Haifa railway track as an express passenger train approached at 60 mph. Press reports said it was not yet clear if the driver misjudged the time available to cross the track before the train reached the level crossing or whether the bus got stuck or stalled on the crossing.

Dov Tavori, the mayor of Petah Tikva, said all businesses would remain closed today for the funerals and all public events would be canceled during a seven-day mourning period.

Official delays Poland trip

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Foreign Minister Peter Barry has postponed an official trip to Poland because he was refused permission to meet political dissidents, Britain's Press Association reported.

The Department of Foreign Affairs said in a statement Tuesday that Barry's trip, scheduled for next month, had been postponed and talks were in progress to arrange a visit a later date, the association said.

A department spokeswoman refused to comment on the report by the domestic British news agency that Barry had called off the trip because Poland's Communist authorities said he could not meet leaders of the Solidarity trade union movement and other dissidents.

Barry would have been the first government minister from the Irish Republic to visit Poland.

Lawmaker fires shots

QUITO, Ecuador (AP) — Congressman Simon Rivadeneira pulled out a pistol and fired a shot inside the congressional chambers to protest the cancellation of a session for lack of a quorum, newspapers reported.

"If someone does not understand me, I will have to use first my thoughts, secondly my fists and lastly a bullet," he was quoted as saying Monday night, shortly after firing his pistol.

Last year, police accused the center-right independent of firing his pistol in a nightclub but he was not arrested because he has congressional immunity.

Nine die in battle at refugee camps

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Shiite Moslems pounded Palestinians refugee camps in west Beirut with mortars and tank fire today, and Palestinians responded with rocket fire from the hills over Beirut. Police said nine people were killed in the fighting.

Druse and Shiite militiamen, allies in Lebanon's civil war, called a cease-fire to their two days of battles that left four dead and 27 wounded in west Beirut. Sniper fire kept the crossings between the Christian and Moslem sectors of Beirut closed.

Police said a cease-fire was holding in Tripoli, where fighting broke out between pro-Syrian and pro-Palestinian groups.

The Shiite Amal militia and the Lebanese army's mainly Shiite 6th Brigade hammered Palestinian defenders of the Chatilla and Bourj el-Barajneh refugee camps with mortar and tank fire, police said.

Palestinian gunners in hills east of Beirut fired Soviet-made Katyusha rockets at Shiite positions to prevent a ground attack on the two camps, police said.

They said the nine deaths brought the toll since the fighting began May 19 to at least 548. Another 59 were wounded overnight, bringing that total to 2,251.

Shiites attacked the camps to prevent the Palestinians from regaining the base in Lebanon they lost in Israel's 1982 invasion. They fear a resumption of Palestinian guerrilla attacks on Israeli will provoke Israeli reprisals against predominantly Shiite southern Lebanon.

In the clashes between Amal and Druse warlord Walid Jumblatt's Progressive Socialist Party, both sides blamed the clash on an "individual squabble" and vowed in separate statements to uphold their alliance against the Christians in the decade-old civil war.

They announced the formation of a 100-man joint force that began patrolling key residential neighborhoods in Beirut's moslem sector to prevent further clashes.

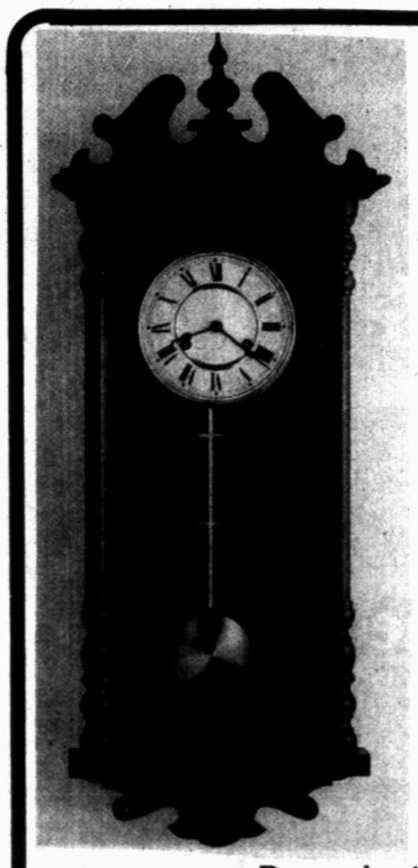

They also agreed to evacuate Palestinian guerrillas who sought shelter in Druse-controlled west Beirut neighborhoods after the fall of Sabra refugee camps to the Shiites 13 days ago.

Fleeing guerrillas were seen boarding school buses at the Fakhani and Mosseitbeh neighborhoods under Druse protection at midmorning for the noon evacuation to the Druse-controlled mountains southeast of the capital.

Despite the civil war alliance, the Druse stayed out of the camps war that had touched off a chain of hit-and-run grenade assaults on Amal and sixth brigade positions in west Beirut over the last six nights.

The underground Sunni Moslem Mourabitoun faction claimed responsibility for the attacks.

Meanwhile, Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy, in a broadcast monitored in London, called for the assassination of Nabih Berri, leader of the Amal militia.

Many Asian Indians checking into American motel business

SPARKS, Ga. (AP) — As the sun sinks over a pine forest, Jayram Patel sits at the front desk of his brick motel, awaiting the weary travelers who pull off busy Interstate 75.

Armed with a master's degree and an entrepreneurial spirit, Patel left his native India in 1971. He worked as a chemist in New Jersey and Tennessee until he had saved enough money to buy the Sparks Inn in 1979.

"The first year was a little disappointing," said Patel, noting that he and his wife, Nila, sometimes had to work 24 hours a day while building a reliable staff of 15. "If the cook doesn't show up, you have to be a cook. You've got to be prepared for everything."

The Patels, seeking what he described as "better opportunity," and their fellow Indian immigrants have found a niche in the motel business.

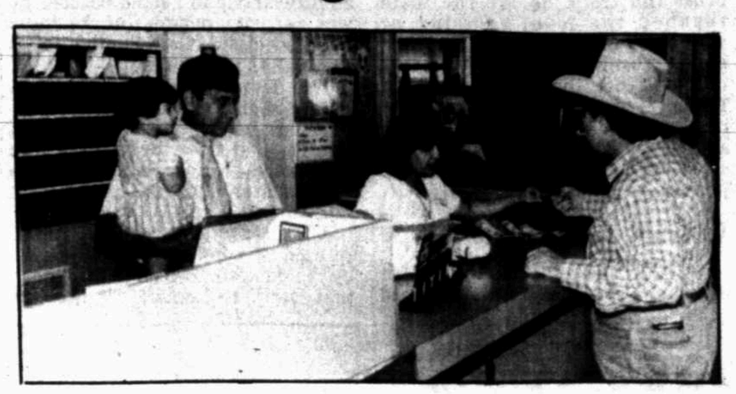

Indians in large numbers began entering the United States from Canada, England and Africa in the early 1970s. Unlike some other immigrants, they had cash to invest. At the same time, the Arab oil embargo had cut down on holiday driving in the United States.

Many American motel owners sold their slumping businesses to the Indians, who were looking for businesses they could learn quickly.

According to one estimate, about 15,000, or 28 percent, of the nation's 53,629 motels and hotels are owned by Indians or people of Indian descent.

"They just got in at the right time and began helping relatives," said Thomas Abraham, president of the New York-based National Federation of Asian Indian Organizations in America. He's compiled a list of Indian businesses in the United States.

Although only 16,000 Indians entered the United States between 1871 and 1965, their numbers surged from 107,000 to 361,544 between 1973 and 1980, according to Abraham. By the end of this year, he said, 500,000 Indians are expected to immigrate to the United States.

Jayram Patel, wife Nila and daughter Krupa, Asian Indian immigrants to the United States, own a motel near Sparks, Ga.

Asian Indians currently have the highest per-capita income of all ethnic groups in the country, said Abraham.

Because of their traditional emphasis on education, many Indians work as college professors, engineers and scientists, but thousands have put their degrees aside to be innkeepers in rural towns like Sparks, a south Georgia farm community of 1,300 that Patel calls slow to accept newcomers.

"They're very conservative people," Patel said. "They don't like too much foreigners. They don't even like people from North Carolina."

Thousands of the Indian motel owners have the same surname, Patel, but are not necessarily related, according to Abraham, who joked that "the Patels own more motels than Hilton and Sheraton combined."

Patel is a caste name for a Hindu business class in Gujarat, a state in western India known for its merchant-entrepreneurs.

Although Indian innkeepers are found in nearly every state, many have settled in California and in the Southeast because of the warm climate.

"We are warm blooded people," said Kiran R. Patel, the Oxford-educated owner of a 50-room motel in Athens. "Most of us have had enough of that miserable weather up North."

Nizar Motani, an owner of the 151-room Sheraton Motel in Albany, the largest city in southwest Georgia, said many people in India, influenced by movies and television programs, view the United States as a land of "golden opportunity."

"People have an image of America as a place they should go to improve their lot," said Motani, a former college professor whose Indian grandparents settled in East Africa in the 1890s.

"There's no doubt in my mind that America is the greatest country in the world. Those of us who are here should consider ourselves very fortunate."

Kiran Patel said Indians enter the motel business because it doesn't require a lot of experience, the entire family can participate and they often can secure assistance from the seller.

'Mr. Aviation,' 83, remembers

From barnstorming to air mail, he's done it

HARLINGEN, Texas (AP) — They call him Mr. Aviation.

While Douglas Harris did not invent the plane, he is surely the living embodiment of its history.

For over 60 years Harris has been involved in every phase of aviation from barnstorming to running an airport. He has amassed over 12,000 hours behind the controls of a plane.

From building his own planes to test piloting, Harris, 83, has seen and done it all. And is still flying high.

Harris grew up in Iowa and was 15 when he saw his first plane. It was four years later before he got his first ride in one from a barnstormer named Frank Knight.

Knight later became one of the early legends of air mail service. After that first ride, Harris was hooked.

He drove 120 miles to Des Moines to take flying lessons from Ray Fisher. Fisher often was gone and when he was in Des Moines his plane was usually being repaired. The trips Harris made resulted in only two hours of in-flight instruction.

In 1923, Harris was working as a mechanic in a garage. His boss sent him to collect a bill in a nearby town. He never did collect the money — but he did find a plane.

It was a Jenny and it was in bad shape. The plane was sitting in a field on its axle, its fabric fuselage full of holes. The wheels, along with the engine, radiator and propeller were in a nearby barn.

The woman who owned it had bought the plane for her son from a pilot named Charles Lindbergh. Harris paid her $75 for it and had it towed back to his home.

Harris spent the winter rebuilding the plane in his spare time, sending off for books on what he did not know. By spring he was ready for a test flight.

Even though he didn't really know how to take-off, he decided to try his hand at flying.

"I figured if I could get off the ground and into the air — well, I knew how it felt to fly it in the air," Harris said.

He got it off the ground and flew in a long, lazy 10-mile turn. Then his only problem was he didn't know how to land.

Harris said he just kept slowing the plane down until he landed.

"I let it roll until it stopped — no brakes on those early planes," Harrissaid.

By that summer he had taught himself enough to start selling rides.

"The airplane was something in those days that the average person didn't get with much and that made it interesting," he said.

"Within a few years he was a test pilot for the Monocoupe Airplane works. In 1928 and 1929, Harris was in charge of an airport at Pawtucket, R.I.

During the Depression, things were slow for the young pilot. He packed his wife and two youngs sons into the front cockpit of his plane and flew south to Florida in a snowstorm.

Harris began barstorming with a parachutist. They would drive to a town during the week and give out handbills advertising their show.

The next weekend they would fly in and perform. The parachutist would make a few jumps and Harris would sell rides for $5.

"When competition got stiffer we went down to $3," he said.

By the time they had worked their way back to Indiana, the partnership broke up. Harris bought another plane and opened an airport near Cedar Falls, Iowa.

Harris soon was making money doing aerial mapping. Deciding there was more money to be made in mapping, he sold the airport and went into his new business full-time in 1936.

Harris made aerial maps for pipelines, geodetic surveys, cities and towns. He mapped the path of rivers to help plane for dams.

One of the planes Harris used was equipped with a 10-gallon reserve tank. When the gas gauge read "empty," Harris knew to switch on the reserve tank and head for home.

A photographer he was working with in South Dakota forgot to turn off the reserve tank at the beginning of the flight. A few hours later when the gauge said empty the engine stopped.

"Of course, if you have a dead engine, things get pretty quiet," Haris said.

He started looking for a place to land. Unfortunately, there were not many fields in the area.

"It doesn't particularly give you a thrill, but you have to do everything right or you're going to have a banged-up airplane," he said.

Harris located a field in time and landed the plane. "I just barely got it stopped before we hit the fence," he said.

Harris is not sure how many miles of country he mapped before retiring in 1970. The closest he can come is estimating 26,000 square miles in one years.

Llamas 'spitting' image of loving pet

YAKIMA, Wash. (AP) — More than 400 llama owners, lovers and experts flocked here to discuss one of their favorite animals: light eaters, tireless beasts of burden, providers of fine wool, loving pets — and great spitters.

The agenda for the Fifth Annual International Llama Association Conference recently included llama photography, basic llama care and breeding, "The Future of the Llama Industry" and "LLamas and Retirement." But not spitting.

"When worked with as a pet, they can be gentle and friendly," said conference chairman Sam Granato. "I saw a lady put hers in the back of her station wagon. Some people have them housebroken."

They also spit.

"Like camels," said Stephen Biggs, president of the International Llama Association. "But their disposition is far superior to that of the camel. They usually don't spit on people. Spitting is a gesture of discontent...They do spit at each other quite a lot."

Palmer hits it big with total fitness pitch

NEW YORK (AP) — Almost everyone knows that former big-league pitcher Jim Palmer is in terrific shape. But for those who may have been on Mars and missed seeing posters of his half-naked body teasing at bus stops and in magazines, read it here: He's as fit as ever, or appears to be.

Of course, nothing can replace the daily and strenuous regimen that Palmer observed during two decades with the Baltimore Orioles. He still takes care of himself, and he happily talks about it in "Jim Palmer's Way to Fitness" (Harper & Row, $17.95), the latest celebrity text-and-picture guide to exercise, nutrition and grooming.

"Think fit!" he commands. "Do something about it! And do something more about it!"

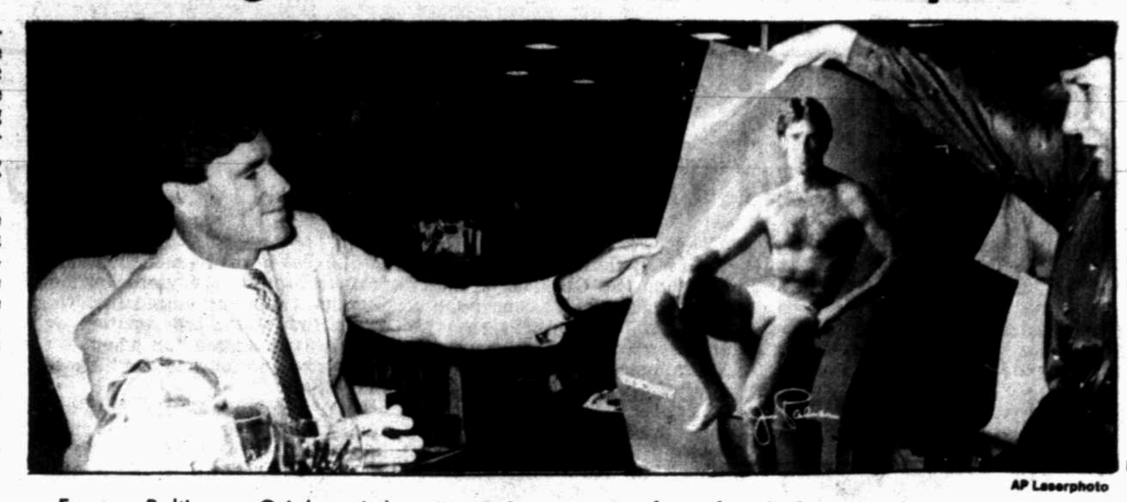

By practicing what he preaches, Palmer no doubt can indefinitely maintain his superb physical condition.

But what about the mental part, the power of concentration, the competitive nature that distinguished Palmer from other "good arms," as baseball people describe pitchers with superior physical ability but little else.

"A woman asked me the other day if I thought I would ever do anything again with the same intensity as pitching in the World Series," he said. "No, I don't think so. Maybe that's why I'm doing as many different things as I am now.

"I asked Dave McNally, who was a teammate of mine, if he missed playing after he retired," Palmer related. "For three or four years, he said, he didn't. Then, all of a sudden, he started to miss the competitive part. He started playing golf with a vengeance to compensate for what he had given up."

Since he left baseball after appearing in five games for the Orioles in 1984 (of 558 in his major-league career), Palmer has kept busy as a commentator for ABC Sports, host of a public-TV series called "The Sporting Life," and model and spokesman for Jockey International.

'Comedy Jam' 'toots' Detroit for cable TV

LOS ANGELES (AP) — One thing that car capital Detroit had never manufactured was a comedy special, so comedian Mike Binder rushed in with a one-hour model called the "The Detroit Comedy Jam."

He nearly lost his shirt, and those of his investors, along the way — Home Box Office, Showtime and the other outlets walked around, kicked the tires, but didn't buy.

"I couldn't sell it for five months," said Binder. "I was looking for ways to support myself in foreign countries. I didn't know what to do because I'd told the backers I'd have no trouble selling it to HBO.

"Then George Carlin and his agent, Jerry Hamza, saw it and liked it and took it to HBO and said they had to buy it. Then there was a bizarre coincidence. Red Skelton was going to make a comedy special for HBO for June release. But for some reason it wasn't made, and HBO suddenly needed a June special. I was ready to go back to Detroit when I got a call from Jerry that HBO had bought our special."

Binder grew up in Detroit and his only ambition was to be a comedian. His grandmother lived in Miami and a neighbor was Henny Youngman. He told Youngman of his ambition and years later they were on the same show, "Make Me Laugh." Youngman had remembered the little boy who wanted to be a comedian.

At the age of 11 Binder went to a summer camp in northern Canada. His counselor was a young man named Cornelius Chase. "I remember he had long hair and a big dog," Binder said. "I knew it was going to be a different summer. It was like a movie with Bill Murray as counselor."

Or Chevy Chase, the name the camp counselor assumed when he became a TV and movie star.

"When I was 17 I wanted to perform, but there was no place in Detroit," Binder said. "I came to L.A. and got a job as doorman at the Comedy Store. Norman Lear saw me perform and put me in the pilot for 'Apple Pie.' When I got home I found I had made a splash in the Detroit papers.

"Mark Ridley had opened the Comedy Castle in Detroit and I was his first comedian. The people packed the place. There had never been a place there for comedy before. Now Detroit is one of the big stops on the comedy circuit."

"Detroit Comedy Jam," a yearly concert, grew out of the Comedy Castle three years ago. When the third concert came up Binder decided to film it. Besides Binder, the concert also featured Howie Mandel, Paul Rodriguez and David Coulier.

"Nobody else had ever done a filmed comedy concert before except Richard Pryor," said Binder. "All the other comedy concerts were on tape. I wanted it to be on film because it has a better look and you can put more quality on the screen."

Binder said he spent a year putting the special together, raising money, editing the film — and trying to sell it.

"After we sold it to HBO," he said, "Playboy and Showtime wanted to see it again. But I like the idea of it being on HBO. I've been on a lot of their specials."

Binder is now completing a screenplay for Rollins-Joffe-Morra-Brezner, the managers whose clients include Woody Allen and David Letterman.

SALT realism

President Reagan's decision to swallow hard and abide by the arms limitation treaty he once called "fatally flawed" is not fodder for those hard-liners who already have been insinuating the Commander-in-Chief has lost his nerve. Rather, it's an indication that the Ronald Reagan who in 1980 attacked the treaty proposal harshly while a candidate, recognizes in 1985 as president that there are limitations when walking the fine line between shaky peace with the Russians and all out warfare.

It isn't that SALT II is any more in the interest of the United States today than it was when proposed. But abiding by an unratified arms limitation treaty, which is a way of keeping the arms race from overheating, is better than no treaty at all in the sense that, hopefully, that gesture will encourage the Soviets to believe the United States also would abide by the terms of another treaty, if proposed.

Under the circumstances, Reagan's decision to abide by the limitations in the SALT II proposal is in the best interests of the nation. Of course, no arms agreement is worth the paper it's written on unless those limits are observed and, according to Reagan and intelligence sources, the Soviets have been violating the limits.

If SALT II had been ratified, which Reagan did not seek, and if the terms of such a pact had been violated, which Reagan says they have, it would have given the president more leverage in seeking congressional approval of domestic arms programs. Obviously, since he has now agreed to abide by SALT II rather than confronting the Soviets, it will provide even more evidence to the Soviets that the United States is willing to negotiate reasonably at Geneva.

Essentially, the United States has given up nothing by agreeing to stick with the limits in SALT II and if it helps bring about a meaningful pact at Geneva that could lead to weapons reductions, the entire world will be safer.

Saved by the Senate

The United States Senate has come to the rescue of President Reagan's Central American policy by approving financial aid for the Nicaraguan rebels. The lawmakers voted to provide $38 million for economic and logistical assistance to the freedom fighters, or contras, who are struggling to get the dictatorial Sandinista government off their backs. Fourteen million dollars would be made available this year, and the rest in 1986.

The disappointing facet of the vote was its closeness. The 55 to 42 roll call result was enough to win, but it was not the resounding vote of confidence the Reagan Administration would have preferred. Nevertheless, it pushed America's efforts to halt subversion in Central America another notch forward.

It demonstrated that the administration is making headway in its efforts to inform the Congress that President Daniel Ortega's government is a puppet of the Soviet Union, and as such that it is an exporter of violence in neighboring Costa Rica and Honduras, and other Central American nations.

The next move is up to the House of Representatives. The last time it voted on aid to the contras — President Reagan had asked for $14 million — its answer was no.

The climate has changed considerably since then, thanks in no small measure to Ortega's trip to the Soviet Union, which opened the eyes of many House members who previously seemed blind to the Marxist-Leninist orientation of the Sandinista regime.

Let's hope the vote goes the other way this time. Aiding the Nicaraguan freedom fighters is one of the administration's best hopes of halting the spread of Communism on our southern doorstep.

Another View:

Incentive for family

Economic realities have played a major role in the decline of the traditional family in which Dad works and Mom stays home to care for the children. These days, many a Mom brings home a paycheck, too. More often than not she has to, or the family is forced to stint and sacrifice.

The larger personal exemptions and standard deductions in the Reagan tax reform package are "pro-family," as the president noted. And so is the change in Individual Retirement Accounts that would allow each spouse to set aside $2,000 a year in tax-deferred savings.

Together these features could give many families the financial flexibility to keep Mom at home or permit her to work only part time.

At present, a spouse without wage earnings is allowed only $250 a year for an IRA — and then only if the employed spouse has one.

The present low limit sounds like someone's idea of a joke. It is unrelated to the enormous contribution to the nation's well-being made by those who keep homes running, children lovingly cared for and the elderly attended.

The only significant reason the current spousal limit is so low is concern about lost revenue. Folding the new limit in a revenue neutral general tax-reform package should make it more palatable to Congress. It is estimated that up to 5 million spouses would take advantage of such a change.

About 23 million, or one-fourth of all households, now have IRAs. The savings they represent are incentives to capital formation, essential if the economy is to create more jobs. And the proposed change may well reinforce society's bedrock, the traditional family. That alone should be justification enough.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

On June 12, 1939, the National Baseball Hall of Fame and Museum was dedicated in Cooperstown, N.Y. — 100 years to the day on which Abner Doubleday is purported to have invented the sport. Historians, however, doubt Doubleday was the true inventor of baseball.

On this date:

In 1776, the state of Virginia adopted a Bill of Rights — the first colonial legislature to do so.

In 1838, the Iowa Territory was organized.

Thought for today: "You can observe a lot just by watching." — Yogi Berra, former baseball manager.

CIA still hoping to 'hit' Khadafy

WASHINGTON — The CIA backed, trained and continues to support the exile group that tried to assassinate Libyan leader Muammar Khadafy last year, according to intelligence sources.

Jack Anderson

The plot failed. Afterward, Khadafy executed perhaps as many as 200 dissidents and imprisoned thousands more.

The Libyan dictator immediately beefed up his security.

He may also have arranged Libya's surprise "union" with Morocco partly to get at the leader of the assassination attempt, who was subsequently booted out by Moroccan King Hassan and now operates out of Iraq.

The CIA-backed assassination group goes by the name National Front for the Salvation of Libya — or NFSL — and is led by Khadafy's former auditor general, Mohammed Youssef Magarieff.

Whether the CIA was actually present at the NFSL's conception is uncertain. Our sources say the agency's search for "a surrogate organization that would overthrow Khadafy by whatever means necessary" coincided with the exile group's formation in 1981.

How did the CIA pick Magarieff and his NFSL out of some 20 identifiable anti-Khadafy groups? Our sources say the Saudis recommended Magarieff.

The Saudis have provided at least $7 million to the NFSL. They use Mustafa bin Halim, a former prime minister of Libya who is now an adviser to the Saudi Arabian government, as their go-between with Magarieff.

The boys from Langley found it easy to deal with Magarieff, a natty dresser and articulate talker, who conveys the impression that he is pre-eminent among Khadafy's foes. When he served Khadafy as head of the Libyan comptroller's commission from 1972 to 1977, Magarieff publicly inveighed against official corruption. It was that act of courage that led Khadafy to ship him off as ambassador to India, where he defected in 1980.

Magarieff attracted other prominent exiles to his banner, including former Libyan envoys to Jordan, Guyana, India and Argentina. The exiles' first public proclamation, on Oct. 7, 1981, called for Khadafy's overthrow and marked the birth of the NFSL.

From the beginning, CIA agents advised and encouraged NFSL leaders and trained their recruits in Western Europe, Sudan and Morocco.

Our sources disagree over how much advance information the CIA actually had about the assassination attempt of May 8, 1984. But there's little doubt that CIA officials knew what Magarieff was up to, and encouraged him. In fact, CIA insiders refer sardonically to the agents involved and their CIA handler, who was transferred after the assassination attempt failed.

The world learned some confused details of the attempt, which began to unravel on May 6, when the leader of NFSL's military wing, Ahmed Ibrahim Ahwas, was caught and killed trying to infiltrate Libya from Tunisia. Two days later, a five-hour gun battle at the Bab Aziziya barracks, where Khadafy often stays, ended in the death or capture of the NFSL rebels.

The ensuing bloody repression was motivated less by Khadafy's fear of a further threat from the shattered NFSL than by his concern that the various exile groups would unite against him. But he did take the precaution of bombing the NFSL radio station in Sudan to silence its "Voice of the Libyan People" broadcasts.

And he proceeded to make the secret "unification" deal with Morocco. King Hassan, a supposedly staunch U.S. ally, didn't tell the Americans about the union with Libya before it happened. Nor did he reveal that part of the bargain with Khadafy was to eject Magarieff from his Moroccan sanctuary.

Our sources in the CIA and elsewhere say the CIA's liaison with Magarieff is doomed. Unlike other Libyan exiles, he enjoys little or no support inside Libya. For another thing, our sources doubt that the articulate accountant and his band of defecting diplomats are capable of putting together a successful coup, which would depend on internal military support they don't have.

Finally, these sources fault Magarieff for being obsessed with simply killing Khadafy, and charge that his ideas about the future of Libya are unsophisticated. Critics stress the necessity for overthrowing Khadafy's entire regime.

While Khafafy often kowtows to Moscow, his second-in-command, Maj. Abdul Salam Jalloud, is completely on the Kremlin's leash. Killing Khadafy and leaving Jalloud in charge would be a triumph for the Soviets and a disaster for the United States.

Bike deaths cite need for changes

The recent death of two more bicyclists in Midland (bringing the total to four in the last 12 months) further underlines the need for changes to protect cycists in the Tall City.

The first change is a change in ATTITUDE. Many times I have experienced personally drivers actually TRYING to drive as close as possible, or reaching out as they pass to attempt to knock me off my bike. In other instances, motorists will wait until they are right up to my rear fender and hit their horn. Pickup trucks seem to be the most flagrant abusers. This is a dangerous game. Friends have reported having objects (beer bottles, Cokes) thrown at them as drivers speed by. What is needed is an educational program by the Midland Police Department to teach the public the rights of cyclists and the responsibilities of motorists to look out for cyclists and drive defensively around them.

Also needed is a change in the law. Police need to take allegations by cyclists more seriously, and be willing to arrest and charge motorists on the basis of cyclists' testimony concerning reckless behavior. Cyclists gain nothing but a great deal of hassle when making reports, so there is certainly no reason that they would falsely report incidents. Secondly, it used to be that cyclists were instructed to ride in the slow lane FACING the traffic. This afforded the opportunity to observe oncoming traffic at the maximum distance possible, and take evasive action when required. Even with helmet mirrors, it is almost impossible for cyclists to adequately view oncoming traffic from behind. Yet it is now unlawful for cyclists to ride facing traffic. There is no apparent reason or benefit for insisting that cyclists ride with the traffic.

Finally, there is a need to change the FACILITIES available to cyclists. Austin has specified bike routes with actual lanes restricted to bicycle traffic. These lanes are made by expanding the shoulders. These routes are posted as bike routes and the Austin police are rigorous in the enforcement of the restrictions, both against motorists who violate the bike routes, and against cyclists that ride on routes that prohibit bicycles.

Bicycling is the fastest growing sport in America today. The number of avid cyclists in Midland is increasing every month. There is no reason why a city with the resources that Midland has should not make a concentrated effort to insure the safety of its citizens who want to enjoy this healthy sport.

I must mention that my fellow cyclists are not without fault. I have often seen cyclists riding two or more abreast, or without helmets. Cyclists that engage in this type of unsafe conduct invite danger for themselves and for other cyclists.

Column cited important virtue need

On Monday, May 27, I read Charley Reese's column with much delight and enjoyment. Near the end he wrote the following: "The wonderful thing about morality is that anyone can become virtuous by simply deciding to be virtuous. It's an accomplishment within the grasp of every human being regardless of wealth, position, age, sex, race, creed or anything else."

Upon reading this I thought, how true. Never have truer words been written. It led me to contemplate the virtuosity of all those I came in contact with during the week. I found few who could lay much claim to virtue, and none who could live up to the standards of such Southern heroes as Thomas Jefferson and Robert E. Lee. Therein lies the greatest danger facing our society. We cannot hope for others to aspire to such levels of virtue, not having historical examples, so when they pose a danger to our society we must be ready to destroy them; however, if we ourselves are not virtuous then there is nothing to defend.

We on the right have a view of a higher order to be formed; however, we must all realize that laws and politics are only important if they assist in the revolution of virtue. After that, the change in government can occur.

There can be but one explanation why government wallows in the same level of decadence through every change in the person or party in power — the lack of virtue.

ART BUCHWALD

'It's in the mail' for tax reform!

The mail has been pouring in on tax reform.

Dear Sir,

I keep reading in the newspaper that the only people who will benefit from tax reform are the very rich and the very poor. How can the very poor benefit from a change in the tax laws?

Art Buchwald

Larry of Lafayette Park

Dear Larry,

The very poor will gain in this way. Their capital gains taxes will be cut from 20 percent to 17.5. So, for example, if a poor person sells a piece of investment real estate or a block of stock he will profit tremendously from the reduced rates. Secondly, while poor people may not be able to subtract the interest on their vacation homes, they will still be able to deduct the interest on their principal residences. Thirdly, even though poor people will be limited on deducting business travel and entertainment allowances, they will be able to keep more of their minimum $3.50-an-hour income.

Dear Sir,

My company makes computer chips. We have a sky box for the Dallas Cowboys home games where we entertain our customers. Under the new tax bill we will not be able to deduct the cost of the box. How can we sell chips if we can't take our clients to watch the Cowboys play?

Horatio Alger IV

Dear Horatio,

For starters you might make a computer chip that works.

Dear Sir,

Why is the President so insistent that state and local taxes no longer be deducted from your federal taxes? He keeps referring to my state as a wasteful spender.

Worried New Yorker

Dear Worried New Yorker,

The President doesn't like your state because you have a Democratic governor, and if Mr. Reagan can make life miserable for him, Mr. Cuomo won't be able to get his party's nomination in 1988.

Dear Sir,

How much revenue will President Reagan's tax reform bill bring into the Treasury?

Just Curious

Dear Just,

The President's tax simplification is "revenue neutral," which means that by the time the lobbyists and Congress get through with it, there will be a lot less money coming in and the deficit will grow even larger than it is now.

Dear Sir,

Then why is he doing it?

Just Curious

Dear Just,

You already wrote in a question. Let someone else have a chance.

Dear Sir,

Why doesn't President Reagan in his tax reform speeches mention that the real reason people are so mad at the present system is because the IRS computers don't work, and the people who work for the Internal Revenue System are always trying to scare the hell out of us.

Frightened Silly

Dear Silly,

When the President talks about tax abuse he never likes to point the finger of blame at anybody. It's just not his style.

Dear Sir,

My brother and I are two people who believe that the more complicated the IRS tax forms are the better it is for the American people. We say Washington should keep their cotton-picking hands off the 1040 form. Could you please pass on this message to Mr. Reagan and the Congress?

H & R Block

Dear H & R,

It's done.

Coke collection is 'real thing'

EL PASO (AP) — As far as Clarence O. Brown is concerned, no matter what they do to the formula, Coke always will be it.

Brown retired earlier this year as vice president of Magnolia Coca-Cola Bottling Co. after spending most of his adult life in the soft drink business.

He was with the El Paso "pause that refreshes" company much of that time. So, while wife Dolly has cabinet after cabinet filled with collections of salt and pepper shakers, figurines and white china cats (with blue eyes), Brown has remained true to symbols of his bread and butter: Coca-Cola memorabilia.

He prizes bottles that range in size from a 2-foot-high one, made for a Coke sales promotion by the Owens-Illinois glassworks, to a 6-ounce one, the original Coke bottle used in El Paso by Magnolia. The small one bears the company's name molded into the clear green glass.

Another, translucent and colorless, contained fruit-flavored sodas of Magnolia's own formulations.

"That dates back to before 1911, the year that Hope Smith (owner of Magnolia) first brought Coke to El Paso," he said.

Still another bottle, of clear, colorless glass, has a metal loop attached to a stopper inside the bottle.

"This is the original 'pop' bottle," Brown said. "They put dry ice into the soda mixture and the gas forced the stopper closed tightly. Then, when you'd push the stopper in to open it, the escaping gas made a loud POP!"

An ornate white and gold ceramic dispenser is a reproduction of one used in early drugstore soda fountains, Brown said. He has two Coke radios — one a miniature vending machine and the other an eye-fooling replica of a bottled drink.

When he was a 13-year-old in his Texas Panhandle hometown of Groom, a friend whose father was in the construction business brought several dynamite caps to school. Brown took one home, not realizing the danger. It blew up in his hand in the family living room, taking two fingers from his right hand. Later, in a hunting accident, the index finger was blown off his left hand.

He quit school soon after the dynamite incident, and regrets that his education went no further than the seventh grade.

"I did all right without all my fingers," Brown said. "I can fix anything, but I could have gone further in the company if I'd just had more education."

Brown serves Coke to guests in Coca-Cola design paper cups, and a rack of Coke coffee mugs stands on the family breakfast table under a Tiffany-style Coke ceiling light fixture.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Temperatures dip as storms dampen nation

From Wire Reports

Temperatures dipped into the 30s in the Dakotas and Wyoming today and thunderstorms dampened sections of the South, Southwest and Ohio Valley.

Thunderstorms rumbled across eastern New Mexico into the Texas Panhandle, along the Texas coast and through southwest Louisiana.

Elsewhere, showers and thunderstorms spread across the upper Ohio Valley.

Temperatures overnight were in the 30s and 40s across much of the Dakotas and eastern Wyoming.

Thunderstorms whipped up winds of nearly 60 mph Tuesday night at Louisville, Ky., and Victoria, Texas, the National Weather Service said.

Today's forecast called for showers and thunderstorms from the mid and southern Atlantic states to the central Gulf of Mexico coast; and rain across New England, the lower Ohio Valley, much of the Great Lakes and the upper Mississippi Valley.

Highs will be in the 50s across the upper Great Lakes and parts of Wisconsin; 60s to 70s from the northern Atlantic states across the Ohio Valley and through much of the Mississippi Valley and Plains; 70s along the Pacific Coast; and from 100 to 115 through the desert Southwest.

Phils wreck record book

National League

The much-maligned National League hitters, led by the much-maligned Philadelphia Phillies, proved for at least one night that runs are not that tough to come by.

With Philadelphia's Von Hayes equaling a major league mark with two first-inning homers in a record-setting 26-7 victory over the New York Mets, NL teams combined to score 74 runs in five games Tuesday night, an average of nearly 15 per game. The league had been scoring just 7.6.

Hayes, who had just two hits in his last 33 at-bats, started the game with a solo homer off Tom Gorman, then capped a nine-run outburst with a grand slam off Calvin Schiraldi — one of three bases-loaded homers hit in the NL.

"We've been kicked, stomped and buried this season, so many guys were hungry," said Hayes, who may have understated his case by calling the performance the best of his career.

"We turned it loose tonight," said Manager John Felske, whose Phillies got the most hits — 27 — and scored the most runs in the team's 103-year history. "We scored more runs tonight than all of June."

He wasn't kidding. Entering the game, the Phillies — who also set team records for most doubles (10), extra-base hits (14) and total bases (47) — had scored 25.

And they weren't alone in their assault on a night when only one pitcher —Houston's Mike Scott — hurled a complete game. All told, 36 pitchers gave up 121 hits.

"I was mad at myself," said Hayes. "I wasn't being patient. Tonight, I waited to get my pitch. You try little things and the big things happen."

Texas victim of Hurricane

College Series

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — The Miami Hurricanes, billed by Coach Ron Fraser as the "happiest team in America," were overjoyed with the results of their final game of 1985.

"This is a special team, unlike any other we've had," said Fraser after the Hurricanes downed Texas 10-6 in the NCAA College World Series Tuesday night. "We've had better talent, but this team had the chemistry and that's what made the difference. This team didn't know how to lose."

Miami made use of five Texas errors, including four in the first three innings, to jump to a 6-0 lead, and the sixth-ranked Hurricanes never looked back.

Greg Ellena, selected the tournament's most valuable player, had four of the Hurricanes' 14 hits as Miami ended a 64-16 season with its second national title. Miami won its first title in 1982.

"This one feels better than the first one," said Fraser. "I thought we did what we had to do tonight — go out there and score some runs. We didn't feel we could win a 2-1 game."

Miami did win a 2-1 game with two unearned runs against Texas Sunday night. The teams were rained out Monday.

The rest gave relief ace Rick Raether a needed breather to strengthen his tired arm. He went 3 1-3 innings Saturday in a 6-5 win aided by Ellena's two-run, game-winning homer over Mississippi State and pitched 3 1-3 in the 2-1 win over Texas to pick up his second series victory. He also notched three saves in the series.

Kevin Sheary, Miami's starting pitcher and 7-4 on the season, picked up his third tournament win with 6 2-3 innings against the Longhorns.

"I felt if Sheary could give us seven strong innings, I knew Raether was good for eight and nine," Fraser said.

Pitching frazzled Angels let one get away

Gators win in 11th

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

It was there for the taking Tuesday night at Angels Stadium.

With three outs to go and two runs in hand, the Midland Angels were in easy grasp of a modest four-game winning streak, their longest of the season.

But all too quickly the two-run bulge turned into a tie ballgame and from there the Angels did all they could to insure the Beaumont Gators an 11-inning 8-7 Texas League victory over Midland.

After blowing a two-run lead in the ninth, and escaping a bases-loaded jam in the 10th, Angels' centerfielder Devon White led off the bottom of that inning with a single. White moved all the way to third on a fielder's choice ground ball by James Randall and an errant pick off throw by Beaumont reliever Pete Kutsukos with just one out.

But struggling Billie Merrifield struck out for the third time and Reggie Montgomery lined to the shortstop for the third out. Both Merrifield and Montgomery hit solo homers earlier in the game.

BEAUMONT FINALLY pushed across the winning run in the 11th after the first two batters were retired by Eddie Delzer, now 2-6. Delzer, pitching his third straight game for the beleaguered Angel pitching staff, walked the next man, Frank Castro, then struck out the would-be third out of the inning in shortstop Gary Green. But when the pitch got away from Midland catcher Dave Heath, Green reached first safely and the alert Castro moved to third as Heath looked around helplessly for the ball.

Gator second baseman David Corman cracked his third hit of the night to plate Castro and put Beaumont a game ahead of second-place San Antonio and El Paso.

The loss not only snapped Midland's three-game win streak, it left them five games under .500 (27-32) and six games out of first.

"We had it right there and we lost it," Angel manager Joe Maddon moaned when the dust had cleared. "We had it once, then we had a chance to win it in the 10th. But I'm absolutely sure we'll bounce back and play with the same intensity we've been playing with lately again tomorrow."

BOTH MANAGERS seemed relieved just to get out the game with pitching staffs intact. Gator skipper Bobby Tolan and Maddon were facing the same dilemma late in the ballgame with starters that had seen enough but precious few relievers to replace them with.

Maddon received some help around the sixth inning when Scott Cannon, just called up from Class A Redwood, stepped into the ballpark from his 8:45 arriving flight and suited up. In the seventh with the Angels leading 5-4, Cannon walked out to the mound to replace starter Scott Seuhr.

The 6-foot-5 righthander went an inning and a third before he was replaced by Delzer with the bases jammed and one out in the eighth and Midland now ahead 6-4. The lefty was able to squelch the rally allowing just one run before Montgomery hammered his 10th home run over the scoreboard in left to give him a Texas League-leading 57 RBI and the Angels a fateful 7-5 lead.

"It's no secret that we've got no pitchers," Tolan said. "But we're in good shape now. I held Jeff Childress who will be ready to go Wednesday if we need him and we got some help from Las Vegas (Class AAA) today in Ben Callahan who has been hurt but is ready to throw now.

"We've just been playing bad fundamental baseball on this road trip (4-7 so far). Maybe pulling one out like this after playing so badly will turn things back around for us."

THE ANGELS were again foiled on the basepaths by the rocket-armed Gator catcher Benito Santiago who threw out Mark McLemore trying to steal and Mike Madril who took too wide of a lead at first base — both in the third inning.

Santiago also took his toll at the plate where he rapped out three hits, including a long triple in the ninth to score one run and then scoring his third run of the game to knot the score at seven.

Rain brightens Seve's outlook

By BOB GREEN

BIRMINGHAM, Mich. (AP) — Under almost any circumstances, Seve Ballesteros and Tom Watson can be expected to play major roles in golf's major championships.

Under the circumstances prevailing at the 85th U.S. Open Championship — cold, rainy weather — their positions are enhanced.

"It's not very good," Ballesteros said of the steady rain, chilly temperatures and blustery winds that curtailed practice Tuesday at the Oakland Hills Country Club course.

"But it's often much worse than this in Europe" where he plays most of his schedule, said the Spaniard who has won two Masters and two British Opens.

"It'll probably be in the 40's when I tee off Thursday morning," a dripping wet Watson said after a practice session played in 50-degree weather, with 20 mph winds and steady, cold rain.

"But," he said, smiling broadly while he toweled his hair, "I've still got my lucky ski cap.

"You know, I've had lots of requests for that cap. Somebody's 95-year-old grandfather would like to have it, things like that. But I just write back and say 'sorry.'

"I'm keeping it."

Watson has a history of playing some of his best, most productive golf under adverse weather conditions. He calls his 69 in some of the worst weather in American golf history at the 1979 Memorial tournament one of the finest rounds of his career. He achieved that score while wearing a ski cap, layers of sweaters and foul-weather gear — and a large smile.

His career, of course, is spiced by one U.S. Open victory, two Masters championships and is highlighted by five British Open titles, several of which were won in cold, wind and rain.

And that was the forecast for the Open: rain continuing today with a high near 60, and possible showers through Friday.

Ballesteros, relaxed and easygoing as he often is when he's playing his best, shrugged.

"I'm very confident now," he said. "It's just right. I'm playing good, but not too good."

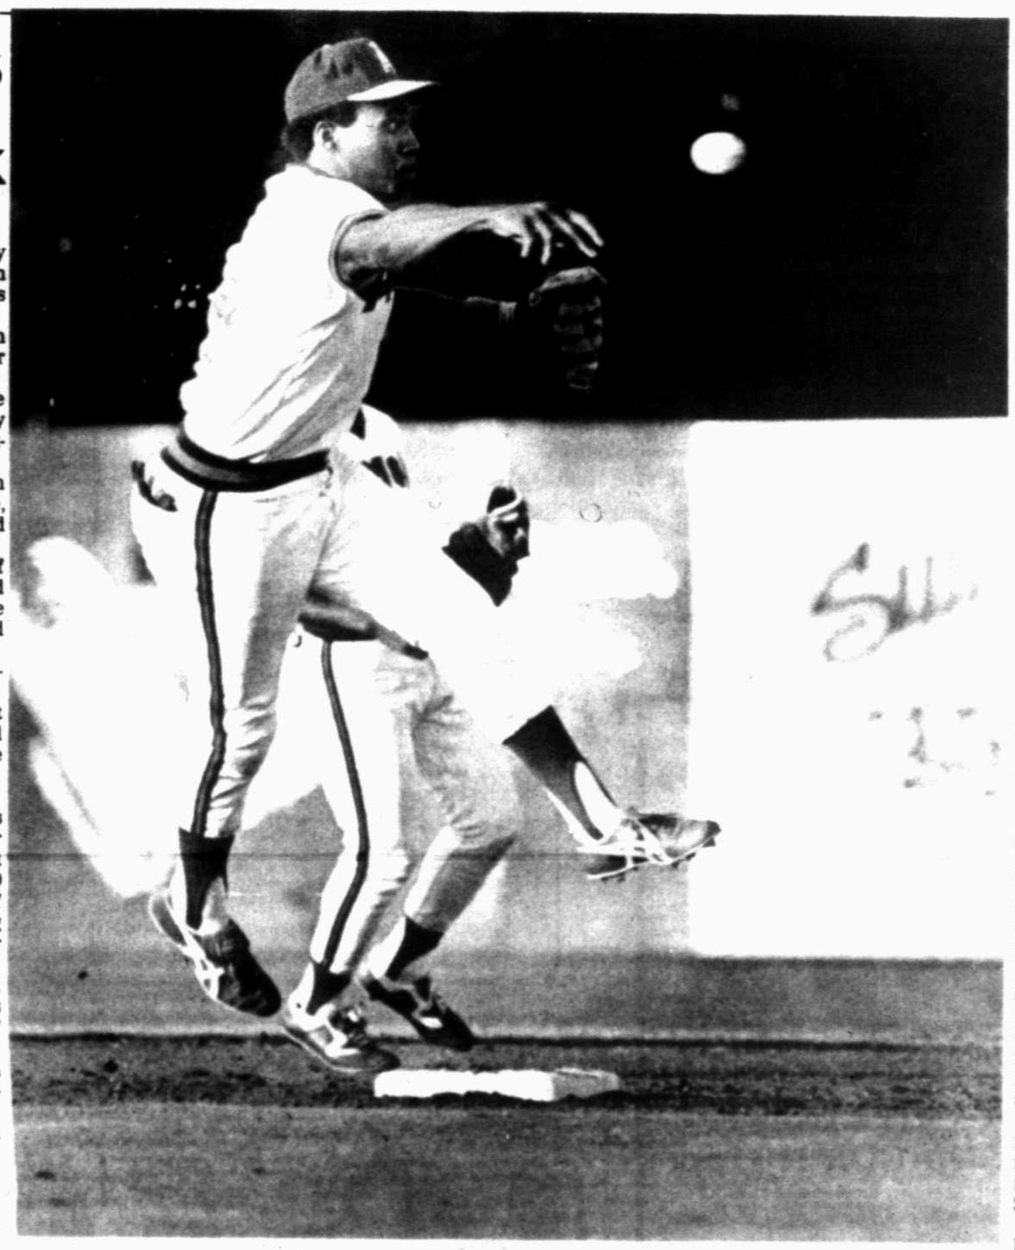

He raised his hand on an ascending plane.

"Moving up. Getting close to very good," he said.

And Watson, who collected a record sixth Player of the Year designation last season but hasn't won since, also pronounced his game sound and solid.

"I'm playing much better," he said.

"For a while, I was having trouble with the long game. I solved that, and then started having trouble with the short game.

Hogan parking lot too small

Have you noticed, the parking lot at Hogan Park's Angels Stadium seems to have shrunk. Lo, for these many years it has been perfectly adequate, except for special occasions like the Fourth of July fireworks or the annual San Diego Chicken visit. Now it's too small.

There was a time when the baseball crowd and golfers could use the same parking facilities and never bump elbows, back in the days before they built the new clubhouse.

More often than not, cars now are parking in the mesquite bushes, along the access roads...maybe it's a good thing the Angels didn't get off to that flying start everyone expected. There would be a lot of frayed nerves getting in and out of Angels Stadium.

IT ISN'T just your imagination either. Official Texas League attendance figures through the month of May show Midland's attendance is up 10,913 over last year and with 46,815 fans the first two months of the season, the turnstiles are clicking at what will be a record pace, barring an unusual run of rainouts.

Midland is the eighth city in population in the TL, but ranks a close fourth in total attendance and third in average per game.

The leagues shows an overall increase of 22,437 over the same number of dates a year ago with the big gainer El Paso, which has passed the 100,000 mark already and had an increase of 28,006 fans for its first 24 dates.

About the parking problem, the area behind the left field fence offers some room for expansion. The mesquite and brush would have to be cleared.

Of course, there's an easier way, perhaps...just to start a good argument. By re-routing the 15th fairway behind the right field fence....

IF THE name of the Midland Angels' new first baseman sounds familiar, it should. James Randall hails from Whistler, Ala., just like his brother, Aaron, who played for the Midland Cubs back in the Lee Smith era. Aaron, also a first baseman, is out of baseball and is a probation officer in Bradenton, Fla.

James last year played for Edmonton of the Class AAA Pacific Coast League, where he batted .284 and hit 11 home runs. He started this season at Edmonton, but wasn't getting much playing time, so California, needing an outfielder at Edmonton, sent Randall to Midland to log some innings in exchange for Dan Murphy...

Todd Fischer, who recently joined the Angels, came to the club with the best wishes of the Oakland A's. "We couldn't get together," explains Fischer, "so while they were trying to make a deal for me, they optioned me to the Mexico City Tigres."

Since reporting from the Mexican League, Fischer, 24, has compiled a 5-0-2 record. The 5-10, 165-pound righthander is from Fort Myers, Fla., and signed a pro contract out of Edison Junior College. This is his fourth year in OB. Last season he pitched for Albany in the Eastern League.

"The trips are longer here and it is hotter in the Texas league," he compares the two AA circuits, "but I like the hot weather better."....

According to Sunday's Cleveland Plain Dealer, a lot of clubs are dickering for Indians pitcher Bert Blyleven, but the California Angels are making one of the strongest bids to add some "pennant insurance." The fly in the ointment is that the Indians want Mark McLemore in exchange...

Former Midland Cubs pitching coach Goose Gregson, who has been living in Midland since January, will be leaving soon for graduate school in North Carolina, where he hopes to eventually get into college coaching.

"I think I have something to offer young ball players," says Gregson, "And when I started to play pro ball, it was my goal to go into college coaching when my playing days were over."

Governor suggests fans, Cubs trade

CHICAGO (AP) — Gov. James R. Thompson says the Chicago Cubs and people who live around Wrigley Field should work out a trade, allowing the Cubs to install lights in exchange for neighborhood improvements.

The Cubs are trying to gain the right to install lights at Wrigley, the only major league stadium not equipped for night baseball.

Thompson said Tuesday he believes the Illinois Supreme Court will support a state law that effectively prevents night games at the stadium, located in a heavily populated residential area on Chicago's North Side.

"If that's so, it will take a compromise with the neighbors to get lights, and I'm willing to work for such a compromise," said Thompson.

"My best guess is that if the Cubs and neighbors could come to some accommodation, we could work things out," he said.

"Maybe there's something the community needs, like a day-care center, a youth center or something like that, something the Cubs could help with," Thompson said.

Nancy Kaszak, president of Citizens United for Baseball in Sunshine, said her group is willing to negotiate with Tribune Co., which owns the team.

She said the group has tried to arrange meetings with Tribune Co. on a possible compromise for night baseball, but has been rebuffed.

"Governor Thompson ought to tell him (Tribune publisher Stanton Cook) to sit down with us," she said.

Charles Sennet, associate counsel for Tribune Co., which bought the team in 1981, said the company had no comment on Thompson's or Ms. Kaszak's statements.

"Until the court rules, any discussion about negotiations and compromise is premature," he said.

Baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth has said that if the Cubs make the World Series this fall, they face "drastic action" unless they find a way to play night games.

A state law enacted in 1982 subjects stadiums to strict noise pollution standards. Chicago's two other major outdoor stadiums, Comiskey Park and Soldier Field, are exempt because both held night contests before the law was passed.

Texas Tech coaches look back and ahead

From Staff Reports

Texas Tech exes gathered to hear football coach Jerry Moore and basketball coach Gerald Myers discuss the Red Raiders past and future at the Midland Center Tuesday night.

Myers couldn't be blamed for preferring to linger on the past season when the underdog Red Raiders not only won the regular season Southwest Conference basketball race, but proved it was no fluke by winning the post-season tournament as well.

In Bubba Jennings, the 5-10 senior sharpshooting guard from Clovis, N.M., Tech had the player of the year.

Most of the players who made it happen for Tech last year are gone so the Raiders will be rebuilding.

Coming off a 4-7 season, Moore prefers to look forward to 1985, as he begins his fifth season as Tech's head coach.

Actually, Tech was so close to having a good year in 1984, if only the offense had been able to put some points on the board for the defense to protect.

"It was frustrating because we came so close to having the kind of season we wanted. Our defense played well enough for us to have a winning season, but offensively we were too inconsistent, especially in the five games we lost in the fourth quarter."

Tech switches from the I to the Wishbone this season to take advantage of its personnel and make maximum use of the talents of sophomore quarterback James Keesee, Ballinger.

The Raiders are depending heavily on West Texas athletes to turn things around. Among the outstanding newcomers recruited last winter were Midland Lee's Tyrone Thurman and Walter Jones, a couple of swift, slippery backs; and Boyd Cowan, a 6-2 200 pound safety from Odessa.

Returning will be former Midland Lee Rebel Calvin Riggs, the defensive end who developed into one of Tech's big play sophomores, leading the team in quarterback sacks, tackles for losses, fumbles caused, big plays and quarterback pressures.

As for the overall outlook, Moore says, "The defense again should be solid, especially in the secondary. We are going to be bigger up front offensively and I think the new offense will help us to be successful."

Moore adds, "Depth in the offensive and defensive lines and the kicking game are areas of concern."

Tech opens its season Sept. 7 against New Mexico and will catch Texas A&M, Arkansas, Rice and TCU at home in SWC action.

ANGELS—

Seuhr, an emergency replacement for scheduled starter Doug McKenzie who was ill, was making just his second start of the season and pitched well after a shaky first two innings.

"We got a real gutty performance from Seuhr tonight. He wasn't feeling too good but he's done real well in both his starts this season. I went out there in the one inning because I thought his shoulder might be bothering him, but he wanted to stay in there," Maddon said.

ANGEL DUST: The most frequently asked question around Angels Stadium lately is "who's going to throw the ball?" The Midland pitching corps has started to look like a hospital ward with new casualties cropping up every day.

The latest on the list was McKenzie who missed his turn in the rotation Tuesday because of a prolonged bout with strep throat and high fever. Taking McKenzie's turn was long-reliever Seuhr, who has been having some shoulder problems, according to Maddon.

Also Tuesday, Midland put two starters on the disabled list in Bryan Price with chips in his elbow and Fred Wilburn with a sore shoulder. Adding to the woes, reliever Julian Gonzalez cannot throw because of tendinitis in his throwing arm, and short teliever Todd Fischer was not available Tuesday because of an unusually long eight-innint stint in Sunday's 14-inning marathon.

Because of the backlog of aches and pains, Maddon had just one available reliever when Tuesday's game began in Delzer, who has appeared in three of the last four Angels' games.

Gonzalez may now be the next sacrifice to the DL, but at present he is on a day-to-day basis.

Cannon, who was 2-4 with four saves at Redwood so far this season, is a hard-throwing righthanded reliever and a welcome sight for the sore-armed Angels.

Going tonight in the final of the six-game series with the Gators will be lefthander Spiro Psaltis (2-1) for Midland against Jimmy Jones (4-2), a product of Dallas Thomas Jefferson High and the No. 1 pick by the Padres in the 1983 draft.

Question Box

RAY CORIO
N.Y. Times News Service

QUESTION: Over his first two seasons in the major leagues, how does Don Mattingly of the Yankees compare with another left-handed throwing and batting first baseman of considerable ability almost 70 years earlier, George Sisler?

So far, so good — maybe even better. Even in size, the 5-foot-11-inch, 185-pound Mattingly stacks up well with the 5-10 ½, 170-pound Sisler. In 1983, his first year in the majors, Mattingly played 91 games, some as an outfielder, had 79 hits and batted .283 with 4 home runs and 32 runs batted in. Sixty-eight years earlier, with the 1915 St. Louis Browns, Sisler broke into the big time with 78 hits in 81 games, some as an outfielder and a pitcher. He hit three home runs in an era of few homers, batted .285 and knocked home 29 runs. The following season, Sisler played 151 games, and batted .305 with 177 hits. In Mattingly's second season, he won the American League batting title with a .343 mark in 153 games, getting 207 hits. Mattingly-watchers take note: Sisler batted .353 in his third year.

As a fielder, Mattingly also seems to be cut from somewhat the same cloth as Sisler, who led American League first basemen in assists six times during his 15-year career. Mattingly led American League first basemen in fielding last year with a .996 percentage, becoming the first player at the position to lead a league in batting and fielding in the same year since Adrian (Cap) Anson did it for Chicago in 1888.

Sisler, of course, went on to compile a .340 career average (as well as a 5-6 pitching record) in a career that included two batting titles — .407 with a record 257 hits in 1920 and .420 in 1922. He was elected to the Hall of Fame in 1939. He never played in a World Series.

QUESTION: When Dwight Gooden begins striking out batters, Met fans respond with "K" signs in the stands. Why does "K" stand for a strikeout in baseball?

The most widely accepted reason goes back to 1861, and Henry Chadwick, a newspaperman credited with inventing the box score. When Chadwick began using symbols to chart a player's progress on the bases — "A" if out at first base, "B" if out at second, and so on — he found that he could not use "F" for a batter who fouled out since he already had used that letter for one who had flied out. So he chose "L" — the last letter of foul. Since he already had used "S" for a sacrifice, he applied the same last-letter reasoning and used "K" for "struck," the term used at the time for a player who missed the ball in three swings.

QUESTION: During a pro hockey game, Team A intensifies its attack in the Team B zone, until one of the Team B players gets to the puck near the net and sends it down the ice untouched by any other player, across the Team A goal line. Will an icing call follow if a forward instead of a defenseman from Team A drops back and touches the puck first? And what happens if a player from Team B gets to the puck before anyone else?

The only member of Team A who could not touch the puck in this example would be the goaltender, because that would remove the icing situation. When one team ices the puck by sending it from its half of the rink untouched across the goal line of the other team, both forwards and defenseman for the other team can attempt to get to the puck before a member of the team that shot it does. If either one succeeds, icing will be called, stopping play, forcing the puck to be brought back up ice and a faceoff to take place in a circle to the side of the goaltender on the team that iced the puck.

There are two things that can happen in this example if a Team B player reaches the puck before a Team A player. If the player is in the neutral zone when the puck is cleared by his teammate, then an offside call would be made for passing the puck across two lines and a faceoff would take place from the spot at which the puck was cleared. If the Team B player is in the same zone as his teammate, though, no offside would be called and play would continue. That's why opposing players often race for the puck in a potential icing situation: it may mean the difference between keeping play going in one team's defensive zone or holding a faceoff in the other team's.

QUESTION: In golf, what is a fade, what is a slice, and what is the difference between the two?

Assuming a right-handed golfer is hitting, the ball would go to the right in both cases. In a sense, a fade is a controlled "slice" shot, for a ball fades when it turns slightly from left to right near the end of its flight. A slice is more severe and occurs when a shot curves far to the right of the target, a situation caused by the clockwise rotation of the ball. A player may intentionally hit a fade shot, but would almost never hit a slice on purpose.

PITCHER

CONCENTRATION & CONDITIONING

Many People feel the Pitcher has the hardest job on the team. After all, he's got to start every single play by throwing the ball to home plate. And he has got to throw it hard and with great accuracy. He cannot relax or let up. A mistake could cost his team a Ball Game, especially if the score is close.

The Pitcher must be strong and in excellent physical condition. He must take good care of his arm. But he must also keep his legs in shape. If his legs get tired, he won't pitch right, no matter how strong his arm feels.

Besides pitching, the pitcher must be ready to act as an infielder if the batter hits the ball toward him. He must also watch the base runners to keep them from stealing.

FASTBALL

The most basic pitch is the fastball. This is a ball thrown hard and straight. Though no two pitchers throw exactly alike, most hold the ball between their thumb and first two fingers when they want to throw the fastball. They let it go straight out of their hand. Some pitchers throw directly overhand. Others throw three-Quarters overhand, and still others sidearm. But the Ball is held and released the same way for the Fastball.

ARM INJURIES

All pitchers must warm up before they enter a game. If they threw hard without warm-ups they might hurt their arms. Starting pitchers warm up for fifteen or twenty minutes before the game. And relief pitchers warm up in the Bullpen if they think they might be needed.

Pitching is very hard on the arm. That's why starting pitchers must have three, four, or even five days rest between starts. Relievers can pitch more often. But that's because they only pitch one or two innings at a time. Some pitchers have to soak their arms in ice after the game to keep any swelling down.

SERIES

While Sheary and Raether put the lid on Texas hitters in all but a three-run seventh, the Hurricanes took advantage of their hot bats and five Texas errors.

"They gave us the first half of the ballgame and that was important," said Fraser.

"They looked a little tight at the beginning and we came out swinging the bats," said Miami's Calvin James.

"We made mistakes," said Texas second baseman Billy Bates. "Miami played tough, and it is tough to beat somebody when they score 10 runs, and that was due to a lot of mistakes we made."

Texas, ranked third and finishing 64-14, was runner-up for a second straight year. The Longhorns were beaten 3-1 in the title match with Fullerton State a year ago after winning the 1983 championship.

Miami became the fifth team to come out of the losers' bracket to win two straight games against the winners' bracket champ. The last team to accomplish that feat was Southern Cal against Arizona State in 1972.

The championship game's 16 runs also made it the highest scoring CWS title game. The previous record was 15, set in the first CWS title game in 1947 when California beat Yale 8-7, and tied by 1958's final won by Southern Cal over Missouri, 8-7.

Ironically, Hayes didn't think he was going to play. When he came to the park he looked at the middle of the lineup and didn't see his name.

"My head drooped a little bit."

Then he noticed he was in the leadoff spot for the first time since coming to the Phillies from Cleveland two seasons ago.

"I thought they must be kidding me," Hayes explained. "Two days ago I was cleanup hitter."

The Phillies and Mets tied or set three NL or major league marks.

—Most extra-base hits by one club (14), tying the NL mark held by Pittsburgh against Atlanta in 1970, and Montreal against Atlanta in 1978.

—Most extra bases on long hits by one team (34), breaking the major league mark of 32 by the Boston Red Sox against the St. Louis Browns in 1950.

—Most extra bases on long hits by two teams (40), tying the NL record shared by the Milwaukee Braves (27) and Brooklyn Dodgers (13) in 1954, and Chicago Cubs (26) and New York Mets (14) in 1967.

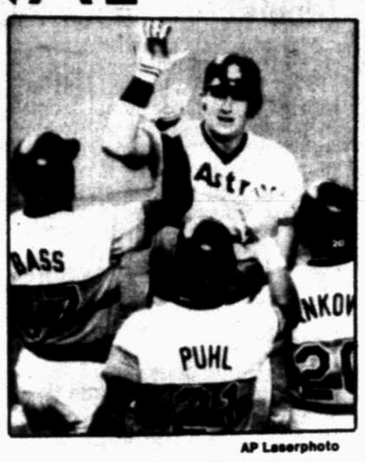

There was more. Juan Samuel, who had five hits, and Rich Schu, who had four, tied the major league record for at-bats in a nine-inning game with seven each.

And the Mets had a few of their own.

The outburst accounted for the most runs and hits ever against New York, which gave up 19 runs to Montreal in a 1973 game and 22 hits in a 1966 loss to Atlanta.

"It's a game I'll never forget," Manager Dave Johnson said in reviewing the three-hour, 21-minute affair which featured 33 runs and 40 hits.

With his fourth and fifth homers of the season, Hayes became the 21st player in major league history to hit two home runs in one inning. He tied and set other corresponding records, including hits and total bases in an inning.

Houston Astros' Mark Bailey is greeted by teammates after hitting a grand slam home run off former Midland pitcher Craig Lefferts as Houston buried San Diego in National League action Tuesday night.

Hayes singled in the second inning as the Phillies added seven more runs to take a 16-0 lead. He drove in his final run by walking with the bases loaded in the fifth.

The Phillies had scored 23 runs on three occasions, the most recent when they beat the Cubs 23-22 in 1979 with Mike Schmidt hitting four home runs.

Cubs 5, Expos 3

Leon Durham's eighth-inning grand slam erased a 3-1 deficit as Chicago increased its NL East lead to 3½ games over New York and four over Montreal.

"I knew the bases were loaded when I came up, but it didn't really dawn on me it was a grand slam until I crossed the plate," said Durham, whose sixth homer of the year came off Gary Lucas.

Lucas had come on after Randy St. Claire, 1-1, walked two batters to load the bases.

Reliever George Frazier, 3-1, got the victory. Lee Smith pitched the final inning to collect his 15th save.

Pirates 13, Cardinals 2

Veteran Rick Reuschel, who started the season in the minor leagues, pitched and batted the Pittsburgh Pirates out of a seven-game losing streak. Reuschel, 3-0 since his recall from Hawaii of the Pacific Coast League, scattered six hits over seven innings and drove in three runs with a pair of singles.

Reuschel, 3-0, hit a two-run single during a three-run Pittsburgh second inning against Neil Allen, then added an RBI single as the Pirates made it 10-0 with a six-run third. Pittsburgh totaled a season-high 18 hits with all 12 Pirates appearing in the game getting at least one.

"Reuschel threw the heck out of the ball," said Cardinals Manager Whitey Herzog.

Both Bill Madlock and Tony Pena hit their third homers of the season for the Pirates.

Giants 5, Braves 4

Bob Brenly had made up his mind that 18 innings was just about all he could take.

"If it wasn't in the dirt or over my head, I was going to swing at it," Brenly said of the Gene Garber pitch he hit into left field to score David Green from second base and end the longest game ever played in Atlanta's Fulton County Stadium.

The victory snapped a five-game losing streak for San Francisco, which had only two runs in 46 innings and went six before scoring three in the seventh Tuesday. The loss ended the Braves' longest winning streak of the year at three games.

Bob Horner, playing first base for the second straight game, hit two homers for Atlanta, his fifth and sixth.

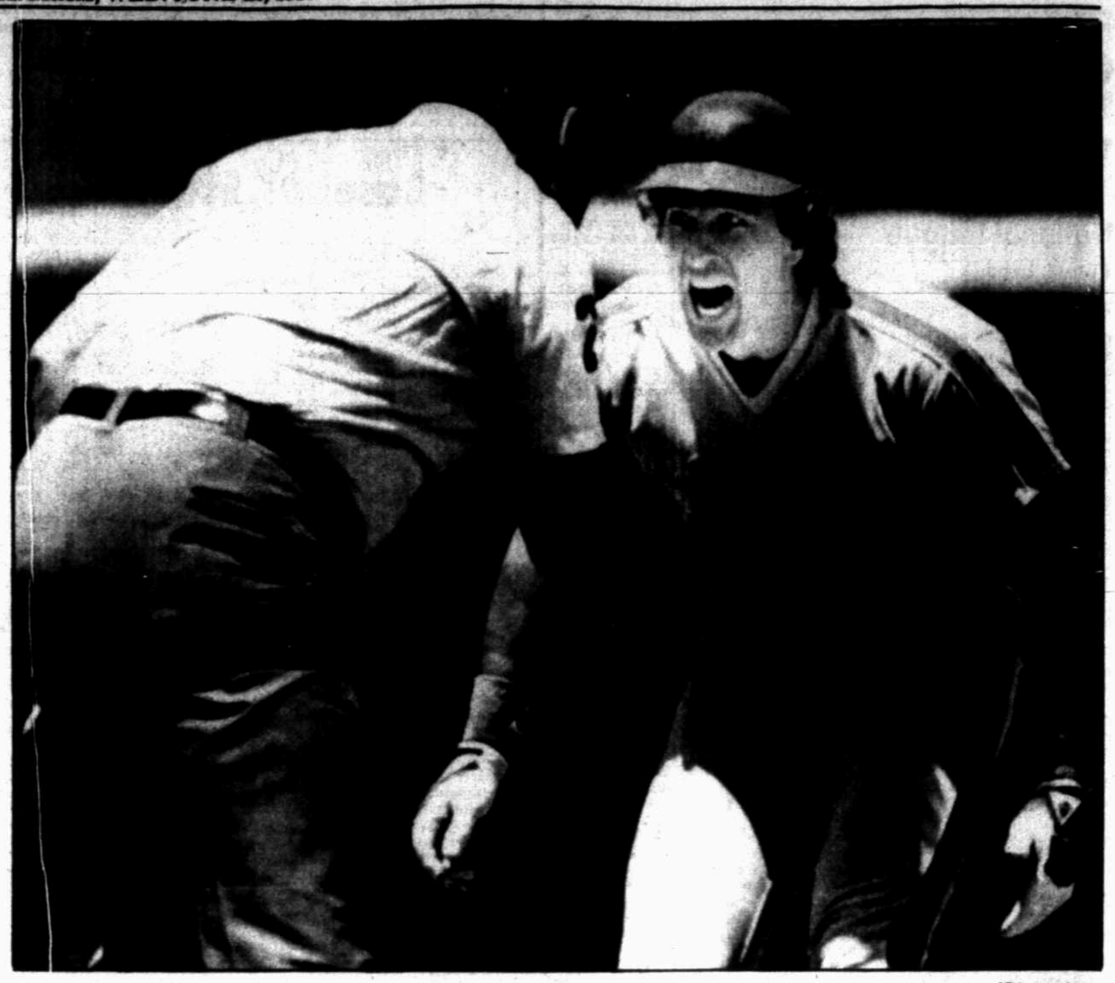

The Giants pounded out 17 hits.

Astros 11, Padres 0

Mark Bailey borrowed a bat from injured Houston teammate Jose Cruz and hasn't been the same since.

"I'm going to keep on using it until he says I can't anymore," said Bailey, who has five straight hits over two games, including a grand-slam homer off San Diego's Craig Lefferts that punctuated a 13-hit Houston attack.

Scott, 5-2, pitched a four-hitter for his first shutout and complete game of the season.

Dropped throw sabotages Yanks

By KEN RAPPOPORT

American League

The New York Yankees got a terrific pitching performance from Ed Whitson and a dramatic, two-out home run from Dale Berra in the bottom of the ninth inning.

Then the bottom dropped out in the 11th because second baseman Willie Randolph dropped a throw.

"We didn't look too good in the field," Martin said after Tuesday night's 4-1 loss to the Toronto Blue Jays in 11 innings. "We had a double play that we didn't get."

Martin referred to an error by Randolph, who dropped a throw from Berra after the third baseman fielded a grounder by Willie Upshaw with one out and runners on first and third in the 11th. Presumably, if Randolph had caught the ball, the Yankees would have turned a double play and killed the rally. As it was, it allowed the Blue Jays to score the tie-breaking run.

"If I was at double-play depth, I would have made that play with my eyes closed," Randolph said of the error. "But where I was playing, and the play being like that — bang-bang — I had to do too many things at once. I had to find the base quickly without looking at it, and I had to watch the runner at third. I had to have four eyes to make that play. It wasn't a routine double play."

Pinch-runner Louis Thornton scored from third on Randolph's error. A two-run single by Buck Martinez added a couple of insurance runs for the Blue Jays, who broke a three-game losing streak.

The Blue Jays were within one out of a 1-0 victory, but Berra homered in the bottom of the ninth off Gary Lavelle. Lloyd Moseby drove in the first run of the game with a sacrifice fly in the third off Whitson, who pitched 9 1-3 strong innings and gave up only six hits while striking out seven and walking only one.

"It's a good way to break it, in extra innings," Blue Jays Manager Bobby Cox said of the losing streak. "It always gives you a lift to win in extra innings, anyway. I'd take this over an 8-0 victory any day."

Brewers 5, Red Sox 3

Ted Simmons capped a three-run seventh inning with a tie-breaking, two-out double as Milwaukee beat Boston to snap the Red Sox's eight-game winning streak.

Danny Darwin, 6-4, scattered eight hits in eight innings while becoming only the second pitcher to beat the Red Sox in the last 13 games. He struck out eight and walked three.

Bruce Hurst, making his first relief appearance since April 5, 1983, replaced Boston starter Roger Clemens at the beginning of the sixth and took the loss, his fifth in seven decisions.

"We made it exciting, taking it down to the bottom of the ninth, but time ran out," Boston Manager John McNamara said after watching a rally abort in the last inning. "We'll just have to start another one (streak)."

Rangers 6, Angels 4

Dave Rozema pitched five innings to win his first start in six weeks and Texas slugged four solo homers to beat California.

AP Laserphoto

California Angels' Gary Pettis takes off to steal home plate with Texas catcher Don Slaught, reaching for ball, in futile pursuit. Slaught had helped cover third, leaving the plate unattended.

Rozema, 3-4, entered the game with a 9.39 ERA for his last 11 outings, all in relief, but held the Angels without an earned run. Greg Harris worked the final four innings, striking out six as he picked up his fourth save.

Hitting home runs for Texas were Pete O'Brien, Cliff Johnson, Larry Parrish and Oddibe McDowell.

White Sox 7, Mariners 1

Tim Lollar held Seattle to one run over 6 1-3 innings and Rudy Law drove in two runs with a triple to lead Chicago over the Mariners.

Lollar, 2-2, scattered five hits, walked four and struck out four in leading the White Sox to their fourth straight triumph. Dan Spillner finished the game with 2 2-3 innings of one-hit relief.

Law's triple capped a four-run second inning for the White Sox, giving them all the runs they needed. Seattle's Billy Swift, 1-1, making his first major league start, yielded seven hits and five runs in 5 2-3 innings.

A's 4, Royals 3

Carney Lansford's two-out single in the bottom of the ninth off reliever Mike LaCoss scored the winning run for Oakland.

Picciolo started the rally with a one-out single off Kansas City starter Bud Black, 5-6. After Donnie Hill walked, LaCoss relieved Black and struck out Alfredo Griffin on a 3-2 pitch. But Lansford then singled to score Picciolo.

Reliever Jay Howell, 6-3, worked two innings to pick up his third victory in his last three games.

"I don't know what pitch I threw, but it was obviously not a good one because he got a base hit on it," LaCoss said of Lansford's single. "It was probably a fastball over the inside part of the plate — I think that's what he hit. It was a good pitch for him and a bad pitch for me."

Gymnastics meet cancelled

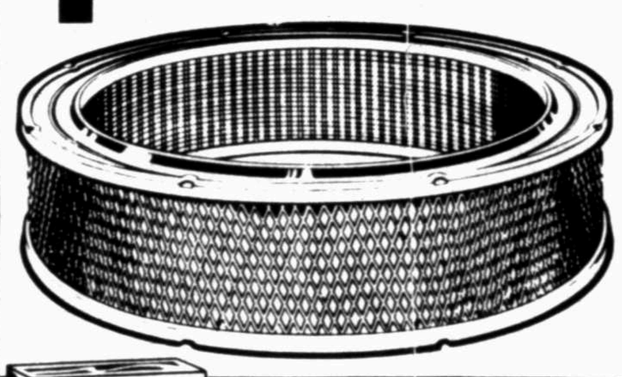

DALLAS (AP) — Poor ticket sales have forced the cancellation of the U.S. Olympic gymnastic exhibition that was scheduled for Friday, one of the tour promoters said.

James Hartung, a promotional associate of J/T Productions Inc. and one of the 11 Olympic gymnasts who comprise the exhibition team, said it is unlikely that the tour will continue.

"After other promoters see the showing in Dallas, I don't think they'll want to give it a shot," he said.

A Hug for Kareem, Other Awards

By SCOTT OSTLER
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

A memory:

It was opening night of the regular season, 1979. The Lakers were in San Diego to play the Clippers.

The Lakers featured a rookie guard named Magic Johnson, believed by many pro basketball experts to be too childishly exuberant for the grim reality of NBA play.

The Lakers also featured a veteran center named Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, believed by many of those same experts to be too old (32), or simply too bored, for the intensity of NBA play.

The Lakers beat the rag-tag Clippers that night. They beat them on a Kareem skyhook at the final buzzer.

Kareem was trotting casually toward the sidelines when he was intercepted at midcourt by Magic, who was overcome with joy. Magic wrapped Kareem in a hug, squeezed him like a boa constrictor.

What could Kareem do? He laughed, maybe the first time in years he had laughed on a basketball court.

Last Sunday afternoon in the Boston Garden, with time running out on the Celtics, Magic Johnson found Kareem Abdul-Jabbar in front of the Laker bench. Magic squeezed Kareem like a boa constrictor.

Sometimes the experts are wrong.

SOME ASSORTED NBA Final Series awards....

Media Darling Award: To Larry Bird. In a time when many sports superstars are retreating into shells to escape the media, Bird is leaping out.

Throughout the series, win or lose, the oncewary Bird was unfailingly patient, cooperative and even humorous with the waves of media.

NBA Oscars

Enough, Already Award: To K.C. Jones, for whining about the new 2-3-2 format for the final, crying about how it cost his team the home-court advantage.

Next season the NBA should give the team with the best record its choice of opening at home or on the road. Had the Celtics been asked to choose this time, do you think they would have elected to open the Big Series with two games at the Forum?

Tell you what, K.C., next year, you guys can open at the Forum, and bring your own floor. Us folks in L.A. have become kind of fond of that funky, oversized, parquet cribbage board.

Unsung Hero Award: To Bill Sharman, whose retired jersey number hangs in the rafters of the Garden, but whose heart now belongs to L.A.

"Fantastic," Sharman said, slipping all but unnoticed through the Lakers' postgame celebration Sunday.

Jinx Award Award: To Larry Bird. What two baseball players will be brave enough to accept the NL and AL MVP awards this season, after what has happened in '85 to NFL MVP Dan Marino and now NBA MVP Larry Bird?

Detour Award: To President Reagan, for getting the Lakers home a half day late. When will we be spared these painfully awkward PR scenes in the Rose Garden?

Don't Bother Running for Mayor Award: To K.C. Jones. Strolling through Logan (Boston) Airport Monday morning, I overheard several different groups of local folks ripping K.C.'s coaching job in the final.

"He shoulda played (Greg) Kite and (Quinn) Buckner more," one Boston griper gripped.

Kite and Buckner? Good God, man, this was the NBA final!

RIP AWARD: To the phrase, "fatigue factor," except when it is applied to TV viewers forced to listen to Tommy Heinsohn for two weeks.

Funny, the Celtics never ran into the dreaded "fatigue factor" until they ran into the dreaded "Laker fast break factor."

Mr. Consistency Award: To Red Auerbach, the patron saint of bad sportsmanship, win or lose. Here's Red, after Sunday's game: "No, I don't think the better team won. We had a bad game, is all. We didn't shoot." Then he stormed out of the Celtic locker room.

Bad Idea Award: To Kareem, who said after Game 5: "What you want to do with (Kevin) McHale is make him take awkward shots." That's the only kind of shot McHale takes, but they all go in.

As a result of this series, McHale and James Worthy have been officially promoted to the highest level of stars in the game, the top 10 or 12 players in sneakers.

CRIMESTOPPER Award: To Johnny Most, Celtic radio play-by-play man. The ever-vigilant Most recognized Pretty Boy Pat Riley and Kombat Kurt Rambis from their post-office posters. Most repeatedly identified the two thugs during his broadcasts. Despite Most's efforts, Riley and Rambis blew town Monday, one step ahead of the law.

Nitpicker Award: To anyone who agrees with me that the Lakers record against the Celtics should be 1-7, not 1-8. L.A. fans, and the teams, should not be held accountable for any sins committed by the Minneapolis Lakers, Cleveland Rams, Brooklyn Dodgers or Oakland Raiders.

Best Supporting Actor Award: To Michael Cooper. All but lost in the tumult and-shouting was Cooper's consistently clutch shooting and aggressive play.

Nasty Rumor Award: To whoever put out the word that Boston clam chowder is really nothing but melted quiche.

NL struggles through bat slump

By JOE MOOSHIL
AP Sports Writer

There's a general hitting slump in the National League this season, and it's being attributed to speed, defense and better overall pitching.

"Everybody's trying to analyze it, and it's all guesswork," said Jim Frey, manager of the Chicago Cubs. "But there's no question hitting is down throughout the league."

Chuck Tanner, manager of the Pittsburgh Pirates, attributes the slump to better defenses, an emphasis on speed and pitchers who have developed fork balls and slip pitches.

The current campaign is at one-third mark. And with the exception of the St. Louis Cardinals, averages throughout the league are down sharply from the final totals of 1984.

The Cardinals, a team built for speed because of the big park and artificial turf at home, are batting .272. The second team is San Diego with a .263 average. Houston, Cincinnati, Atlanta and Montreal are the only other teams above .250.

Chicago is sixth in the league at .240. The figures then plunge to San Francisco's .210. The averages were based on performances going into Tuesday night's games.

Philadelphia led the league in hitting last year with a .266 average, but nine other teams had averages above .250. Cincinnati and Los Angeles finished at .244, a figure that would place those teams in seventh place or the middle of the pack this season.

Frey has some definite ideas about the matter and, after expressing them, he paused and said, "It's still a mystery that the whole league is going through the same thing.

"It used to be that having a short man in relief was all that most teams felt they needed, but now teams are developing a whole bullpen. In addition to the short man, there are two righties and two lefties and the managers flip-flop pitchers and pinch batters without giving it a thought."

Frey also believes there are better defenses in the outfield.

"Because of the Astro-turf surfaces you need more outfield speed, and every team has two or three burners in the outfield who can fly," Frey said. "Where you once wanted big power hitters in right and left fields, you now have speedsters. They cut down on run production with their defense and don't provide as much batting punch.

"And at some point, you have to start believing the pitching is better," Frey said. "Years ago when I played, it was a generalization that when the count went to 3-and-1 or 2-and-0 or even 3-and-2, the hitter could expect a fastball.

"But the pitchers today are not giving in to the hitters as much," he said. "Not as many pitchers live with the fastball. They just as soon go with a sinker, a slider, a curve, a fork ball or any kind of off-speed pitch they can throw."

Tanner agreed with Frey's evaluation but thought that speed and defense were even more important than the better pitching.

"With the outfielders most teams have now, you can't get a ball through the gaps," Tanner said. "The outfielders are so fast that they cut off what would be a double or triple and hold it to a single and if the ball stays up, they make the catch.

"When you have that much speed plus the bigger gloves, defense becomes an important part of the game and makes it that much tougher to score runs."

There's a feeling that this trend might make the National League consider going to the designated hitter concept used by the American League.

That's where Frey and Tanner, both of whom have managed in both leagues, differ.

Tanner, a traditionalist, doesn't care of the DH and jokingly said, "If the National League goes to the DH, we'll go out and start another league."

Dollar slides

LONDON (AP) — The dollar edged lower in what dealers said was quiet, trendless European trading early today. Gold prices were mostly steady.

Dealers said the currency markets were awaiting fresh news on the U.S. economy expected later in the week.

On Thursday, the U.S. retail sales figures for May are due for release, and traders said the market is expecting a rise in the neighborhood of 0.6 percent, slightly smaller than that reported April. On Friday, the May producer price index is expected to show an 0.3 percent rise, the traders said.

"Everybody is looking at those numbers, but they are also looking ahead to the Gross National Product," which is due out next week, said a trader in Frankfurt.

A sharp slowdown in the rate of U.S. economic growth in the first quarter of this year was accompanied by a steep fall in the value of the dollar, which had hit record highs in February.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar slipped to a closing 249.75 yen from Tuesday's 249.95. Later, in London, it was quoted at 249.72 yen.

Against other currencies in Europe at midmorning, one dollar bought:

—3.0809 West German marks, down from 3.0855 late Tuesday.

—2.5933 Swiss francs, down from 2.5957.

—9.3850 French francs, down from 9.4200.

—3.4735 Dutch guilders, down from 3.4795.

—1,957.00 Italian lire, down from 1,964.50.

—1.3675 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3712.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $313.75 an ounce, compared with late Tuesday's $314.50. At midmorning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed the opening level as the recommended price.

In Zurich, the noon bid price was $313.70, down from $315.50 late Tuesday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose the equivalent of $1.10 to close at a bid $314.70.

In New York Tuesday, gold fell 30 cents to close at $313.80.

Bureau plans to appeal Montana oil, gas lease hold

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — The director of the federal Bureau of Land Management says the agency plans to appeal a federal judge's ruling that put oil and gas leases on hold in Montana.

BLM Director Bob Burford made the comment on Monday, at a public lands mineral leasing conference held at the University of Colorado.

"I'm fairly certain we will appeal," said Burford, who spoke at the conference. He did not say when the appeal will be filed, but said lawyers for his agency are at work on the case.

U.S. District Judge Paul Hatfield in Butte, Mont., ruled in March that the BLM and the Forest Service acted illegally when they issued leases in the Flathead and Gallatin national forests without completing environmental impact statements.

The case has become a focus of attention for the oil industry and environmental organizations, and was among topics discussed at the Boulder conference.

The oil industry and the Denver-based Mountain States Legal Foundation have rallied to challenge the decision, maintaining that lessees didn't learn of the 1982 suit — Conner v. Burford — until the judge ruled this year.

The suit, involving 765 leases, was filed by two environmental groups and James Conner of Kalispell, Mont.

Hatfield held that the BLM and Forest Service failed to comply with two federal laws — the National Environmental Policy Act and the Endangered Species Act, a view repeated Monday at the conference in Boulder.

Problems with the government's mineral-leasing program, which is under increasing criticism in Congress, stem from the agencies' ongoing failure and refusal to comply with federal law and prepare detailed environmental impact statements before issuing leases, said Karin Sheldon, a lawyer with the Sierra Club Legal Defense Fund's Denver office.

The impact statements, which are meant to detail the expected environmental consequences of oil and gas drilling, take time and cost money, she said. But when balanced against court challenges and more confusion in the leasing program, preparing the impact statements is a better choice.

According to Larry MacDonnell, director of the Natural Resources Law Center, the Montana case may be part of an emerging trend toward more restrictions on mineral leasing to protect the environment.

Some congressional critics of the overall leasing program, notably Rep. Sidney Yates, D-Ill., have threatened to cut off funds unless the agencies improve the program.

Burford warned industry officials on Monday not to ignore that threat.

Strike costs Hawaii $57 million in income

CHICAGO (AP) — Hawaii's lieutenant governor, saying a strike by 5,000 pilots against United Airlines has cost the state as much as $100 million a day, urged the two sides Tuesday to resolve their dispute.

Lt. Gov. John Waihee told United President Jim Hartigan the 25-day walkout has severely disrupted Hawaii's tourism industry, and has cost the state $57 million in direct income.

"With the multiplier to businesses, it's about $100 million per day," Waihee said, referring to the ripple effect of the losses on the state's economy. "As a result of United not flying, we have lost an average of about 1,600 people per day coming to the state of Hawaii."

United, which normally carries about 50 percent of all passengers between the mainland and Hawaii, has cut the number of daily flights to the island state from 19 to two, airline spokesman Joe Hopkins said.

Hotels, restaurants, night clubs and other businesses that depend on tourism probably will begin laying off up to 40 percent of their workers this week, Waihee said.

If the strike continues into December, that number may increase to 60 percent, he said.

Waihee later described his state's plight to representatives of the Air Line Pilots Association, said Captain Jim Waters, a union spokesman.

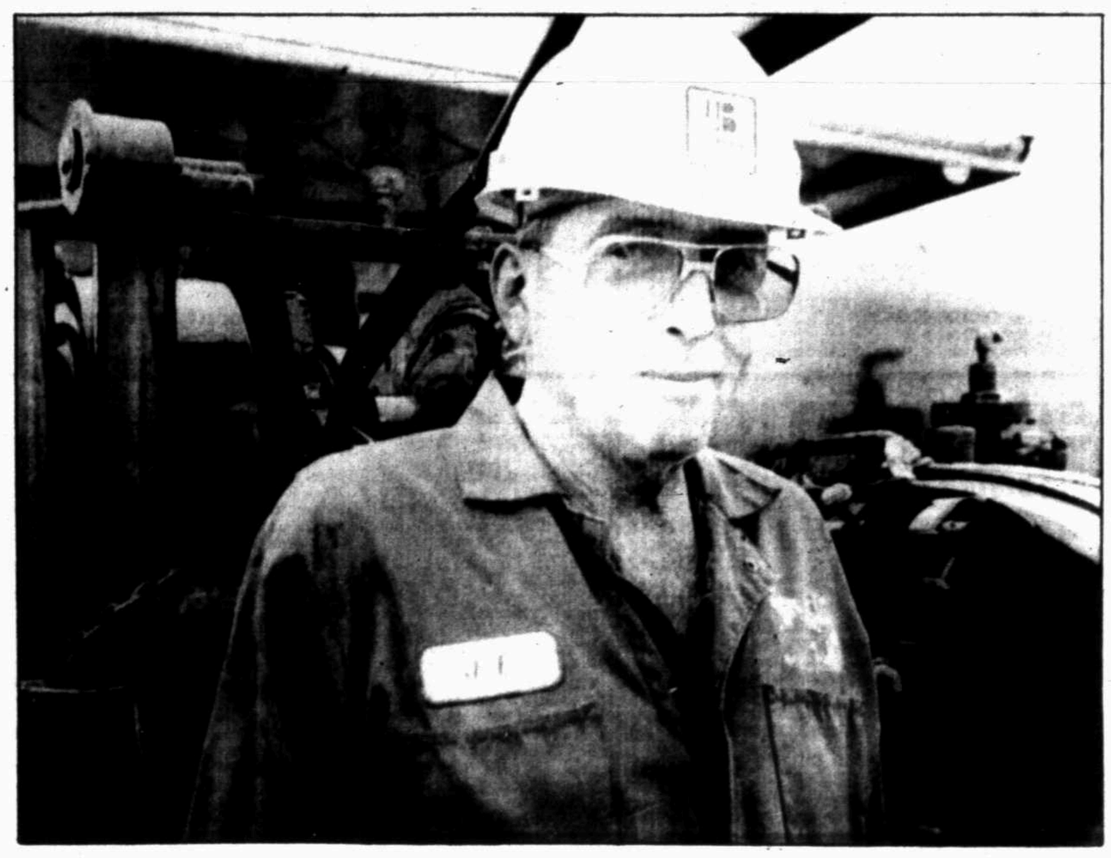

Talks between the pilots and United collapsed May 25 even though the major contract issue, a two-tier wage scale that would pay new pilots substantially less than veteran pilots, had been resolved, said National Mediation Board officials.

United rejected a call by federal mediators last week to resume negotiations. No new talks have been scheduled.

Hopkins said the airline will resume negotiations if pilots drop a demand to ensure job security for all United employees who honored their picket line.

The union was prepared to resume negotiations, Waters said.

"We want to go in and talk to these people and get this issue settled," Waters said. "We think the prolongation of this strike is just ridiculous."

J.E. Metcalf of Archer City poses on a drilling rig where he is a driller. He has worked in the oil field most of his life and has worked in fields in South Texas, West Texas and New Mexico.

Oilfield roughneck says he enjoys his job despite hazards

ARCHER CITY, Texas (AP) — Roughnecking is the most dangerous job in the oil field, but it's a good life if one doesn't mind the outdoors and getting dirty, says J.E. Metcalf of Archer City.

Metcalf is a driller, the man behind the controls on an oil rig and supervisor of a crew of roughnecks, who work as laborers from the top to the bottom of a rig.

He has worked in the oil fields most of his life, the last six years for L.D. Burns Drilling Co. Before that, Metcalf said he worked fields in South Texas, West Texas and New Mexico.

As a driller, Metcalf said his work is not really all that dangerous, though he has had a leg crushed by drilling pipe. "The biggest part of accidents you have in the oil field is your own fault — carelessness," he said.

Danger aside, the life of a roughneck is not for the unhardy soul. Roughnecks must hazard all the elements of Mother Nature; be it burning hot, freezing cold or storming, work continues, Metcalf said.

"I don't pay much attention to the weather. I've never heard of a rig being struck by lightning yet, and I've been in some pretty good storms," he said.

If fact, the only time a rig might be temporarily shut down is if the area where it's located is very muddy, Metcalf said, because mud can harm equipment going to and from the site.

Metcalf said he works eight days, then he's off two days. Roughnecks get two days off for Christmas, "unless you're working somewhere and just can't shut down," and a week's paid vacation, he said.

Metcalf's work days begin at 6 a.m., starting with checking equipment on the rig and greasing any machinery that needs it, he said. Then the drilling begins, with intermittent stops to connect pipe to go in the well hole.

"It's kind of a snap nowadays. You get the (drilling bit) in there, and it lasts 150 hours. It used to only last eight to 10 hours (before bits were improved)," he said.

The deeper the crew drills, the longer it takes to make headway, Metcalf said. To drill a joint down to 3,500 feet takes 15 to 30 minutes, he said. Then it takes another 45 minutes of drilling to get to the point where pipes must be connected.

At 4,000 feet, mud is mixed and circulated through the well hole to keep it cleaned out, Metcalf said. "It brings the cuttings out and keeps the hole in shape so it doesn't cave in or anything," he said.

"When you get down to 4,500 feet, you have to pull all the pipe out and change the bit and go back in the hole. That's when the work is," Metcalf said.

Most of the day consists of waiting to connect pipe and keeping the machinery cleaned up while the drilling machine does its work, he said. "It takes three to five minutes to connect pipe together, then anything else you need to do, you do it," he said.

Admittedly, the job gets boring "doing the same thing over and over every day," Metcalf said. To relieve the boredom, one simply finds something to do, he said. "You can always find something to do around one of these (rigs) if you want to."

Usually, Metcalf said, there is a set of drilling depth, and then officials log the progress and take samples of the soil at that depth.

"They look at the samples, log it and decide if they want to set the pipe. If they do set the pipe, we move the rig off to another location and let someone else (well service companies) finish (work at the site)," he said.

"Most of this country around here, they know pretty well about where (the oil) should be, how deep the formations are," Metcalf said.

A rig averages a stay of 10 to 12 days at a location, depending on how deep the well is drilled before it is moved to another site. On moving days, roughnecks work until the job gets done, he said, instead of quitting at the usual time of 2 p.m.

Metcalf said the long drives to drilling sites are what he dislikes most about the job. "We average 40 to 60 miles one way. Some boys drive 112 miles one way," he said.

Airline hopes favorable inspection ends safety concerns

WASHINGTON (AP) — Continental Airlines hopes a favorable report from Federal Aviation Administration inspectors will put to rest concerns about the airline's safety, but the pilots union says it won't let the issue go away.

The FAA declared Tuesday that an intense inspection of Continental has shown the airline is being operated as safely as any other air carrier, although inspectors discovered sloppy record-keeping and 20 safety violations.

Ever since Continental briefly shut down in September 1983, abrogated its labor contracts and reorganized itself as a low-cost airline, the Air Line Pilots Association has charged Continental with violating numerous federal safety regulations ranging from pilot training to how it loads its aircraft.

Continental pilots who went on strike when the airline filed for reorganization under the bankruptcy laws remain out of work. Meanwhile, the airline has hired scores of new pilots and steadily expanded its route system.

"I think this will put to rest (concerns about safety at Continental) among all of the thinking people in the United States," said Clark Onstad, a Continental vice president and the airline's representative in Washington.

But the Air Line Pilots Association called the FAA report "a whitewash," and said, "It does not reflect the true safety conditions" at the airline. The ALPA said it would ask congressional committees to investigate the FAA's inspection process.

"We think it's a continued coverup on the part of the FAA," Harold Marthinsen, ALPA's director of accident investigation, told reporters. He accused the FAA of ignoring training and procedural violations at Continental during the past 20 months.

The special FAA inspection stemmed from continued labor strife at Continental as well as from allegations of safety problems. It covered six weeks beginning last March and included examination of Continental's records, pilot training, ground and maintenance facilities and dozens of en route inspections.

"They're a safe airline and they're equipped and staffed to continue to be a safe airline," William J. Ayton, who supervised a 24-member team of FAA inspectors, told a news conference.

But Ayton said Continental was guilty of "sloppy record-keeping" that on the surface implied that pilots had not been adequately trained and that senior pilots who were supposed to give new pilots their flight checks had not been properly certified.

Ayton said none of these apparent failings turned out to be true after inspectors dug more deeply into the records at both the FAA and airline.

"They were doing the job but not properly recording it. ... We found that every one of (the pilots) had been qualified. ... We found there was nothing to (the allegations)," he said.

But the FAA said its inspectors found 20 violations in addition to nearly 100 "discrepancies" in which inspectors found something they didn't like, although no regulation was violated. The violations and discrepancies were primarily of a procedural or record-keeping nature that might be found on other airlines as well if given the same scrutiny, the officials said.

Among the violations found by the inspectors were that flight crews in some instances were flying longer than the FAA allows, training manuals were not always current, some equipment was not properly checked to assure it was functioning properly, and some flights did not have items of equipment required by regulation.

Inspectors said there also were at least five incidents in which flight crews followed improper procedures, although the only violation cited specifically was one in which a crew began a flight checklist at the wrong time.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Don't let mother sell family home

Q. My widowed 77-year-old mother owns her home, which she and my father bought 40 years ago for $15,000. It now is worth approximately $150,000. One of my two brothers lives with my mother.

For some reason, my mother feels she should sell now, because of a tax break. At her age, I don't want her to sell and move. What is her tax situation if she sells now? What will be the tax situation for us, her three sons, if she doesn't sell and wills the house to us?

Doyle

A. Besides the obvious fact that she'll undoubtedly be happier spending her remaining years in her own home, there's no good tax reason for your mother to sell.

The tax break she is thinking about must be the once-in-a-lifetime exclusion allowing anyone 55 or older who sells his or her principal residence to escape paying federal capital gains tax on up to $125,000 of the profit, providing he or she has lived there for at least three of the five years before the sale.

The profit on the sale of your mother's house would be the difference between the proceeds from the sale and her "basis." The basis is the $15,000 at which the house was purchased, plus all additions and improvements made.

It's a cinch that, over 40 years, your mother and late father put at least $10,000 into additions and improvements on their home. That should make your mother's basis $25,000 or higher.

If her basis is $25,000 and she gets $150,000 by selling, it would all be free from federal income tax, because she could exclude the $125,000 profit from capital gains tax. However, when she passes on and leaves the house to you and your brothers, everything she leaves will get a new "stepped-up" basis. The basis of inherited property is the value placed on it when the estate is settled — the value on the date of death, unless an alternative value date is used.

Let's say the house is valued at $160,000 when your mother dies. Unless you three sons sell it for more than that, you'll have no taxable profit.

I'm very much in agreement with your thoughts. As long as she's happy in that house, talk her out of selling.

• • •

Q. When a person who qualifies for the once-in-a-lifetime exclusion lives on a farm or some other large property, can the exclusion be taken on the sale of the entire property?

A. No. That exclusion applies only to the profit from the sale of the residence — the house and property used by the house. When a farm or other large tract of land is involved, the profit has to be allocated between the residence and the rest of the property. The profit on the rest of the property is subject to capital gains tax.

• • •

Q. We are a young couple who may have to sell our home at a loss. If we do, will we be able to write off our loss for income tax purposes?

A. Unfortunately, no. A loss on the sale of your home or any other "capital assets" held for personal use cannot be taken as a capital loss on your income tax return.

• • •

Q. I sold my house several years ago and took back a mortgage from the buyer. Since then, I have been reporting the monthly interest and principal payments I have been receiving on my income tax returns.

The family to whom I sold the house is reselling it and I will get the remaining mortgage balance. Will I be required to report that entire amount on my 1985 income tax return?

A. No. You should have reported your profit — the difference between your basis and the proceeds from the sale — on the income tax return you filed for the year in which you sold the house. Taking back a mortgage didn't change the fact that you realized a profit at the time of the sale.

To stay square with the Internal Revenue Service, you should file an amended return — Form 1040X — for that year.

You also should file amended returns for the years in which you reported the buyer's mortgage principal payments to you. The interest received from a mortgage is taxable. The principal repayments are not. If you have reported those principal payments as income, you have paid unnecessary taxes.

4. After the stock is quoted, the computer will ask you to enter another Stock Code. You have two options:

A. You may request the quote for another stock simply repeating Step 3, or...
B. You may request additional information on the stock just quoted by once more depressing the star key (*), in which case the computer will respond with the Price, Net Change, Volume, High and Low. The computer will then ask you to enter another Stock Code (repeat Step 3).

You may enter up to 10 requests per call.

STOCK CODES

All Stock Codes are based on industry standard Ticker Symbols provided by your broker or available from any Standard & Poor's Stock Ticker Guide. Codes are made up of a series of two-digit numbers, each representing one of the letters in the Ticker Symbol.

To determine the two-digit code for any letter of a Ticker Symbol, remember: The first key to be depressed is always the one on which the letter appears. The second key is always a "1," "2" or "3" indicating that letter's position on its own key (first, second or third position). EXAMPLE: "IBM" = "43 22 61"; "BX" = "22 92." Remember to depress the star key (*) after entering each code.

ADDITIONAL ASSISTANCE

Call the StockQuote customer service number (915) 682-5311 (Monday thru Friday 8 a.m. - 5 p.m.) for additional information or to report any problem with the service.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Thursday, June 13, 1985

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Influential people are willing to listen to your ideas now. Make any presentations clear and concise. Financial backing helps you move forward in every area of your life. Make the most of an unusual opportunity. You need to actively pursue that special job you want. Use your social contacts or family connections to get an important introduction or interview. Patch up any quarrels with relatives as quickly as possible. Romance beckons those ready to settle down. CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: poet William Butler Yeats, actor Basil Rathbone, comedian Paul Lynde, actor Ben Johnson, actress Ellen Corby, tennis great Don Budge, the Milwaukee Brewers' Bobby Clark.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A natural curiosity could make it difficult for you to stay out of trouble today. Be subtle when asking questions. Pride leads you to probe behind the scenes for answers.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Have faith in yourself and you will quickly defeat a tough adversary. Give romance a second chance. People can change if they really want to. Travel enjoys highly favorable influences.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A monetary proposal deserves further exploration. Others may ask you to fight their battles for them. Offer moral support, but refuse to become directly involved. Time proves you right.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Enthusiasm and perseverance are your strongest assets. You make quick work of a tedious or unpleasant task. There is almost nothing you cannot achieve this summer! Showcase your special talents.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A change in your financial situation benefits everyone whose lives you touch. You are at your most persuasive when dealing with romantic partner. Be careful not to get in over your head.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Beware of a business associate who likes to play games. Show that you are also an expert in office politics. A romance could put you on a collision course with a friend.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Take a common-sense approach and victory will soon be yours! Do not let a difference of opinion come between you and a child. Let bygones be bygones. Mate's enthusiasm is contagious.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A depressing situation is strictly temporary. Keep your chin up! Your productivity rises when you focus on one project at a time. Money comes from an unexpected source.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The outlook is bright for those in search of a job or college education. Refuse to let someone manipulate you. A change in a romantic relationship is a pleasant surprise.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Changing your attitude towards a project works to your advantage. A financial choice must be made without further delay. Procrastination will only cause headaches. Get busy! Others applaud your initiative.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Someone who has opposed you in the past becomes an ally when it really counts. Let romantic partner know your true feelings. Playing games would be a big mistake. Speak from the heart.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Someone who has been waiting begins to grow impatient. Be honest about your goals and plans. It may be time to end a deteriorating relationship. Tension subsides when you follow your conscience.

A seemingly innocuous play can sometimes have a strange effect. Watch what happened on his deal from a team match.

After a similar auction, a contract of four spades was reached at both tables of the match. Possession of support for partner's suit was the key ingredient in South's decision to introduce his spade suit at the three-level.

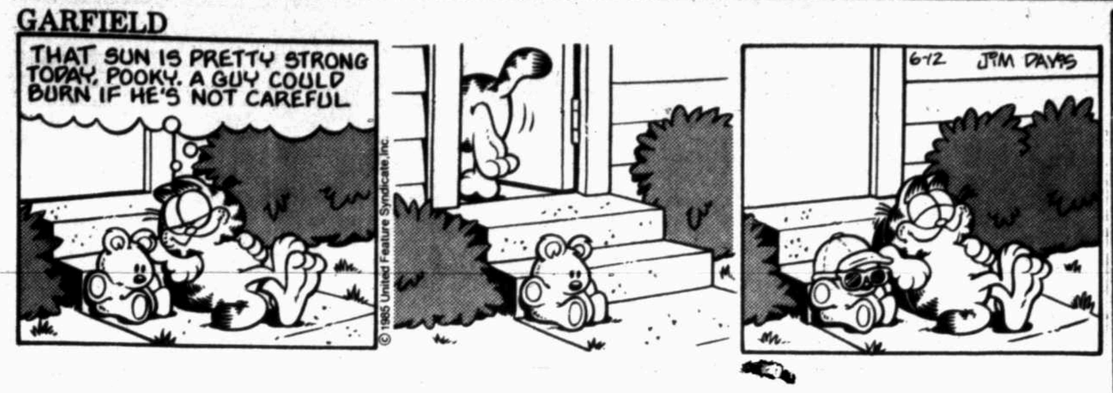

At both tables, West led the king of hearts and continued with the queen. At one table, he shifted to a club. Here, the declarer was Tom Smith, of Greenwich, Conn. He played low from dummy and East won the king. Smith won the club return on the table and the outlook brightened when the jack of spades was led and run successfully. When a trump to the king next picked up the ten, the stage was set for a trump coup.

Declarer reentered dummy with a club and ruffed a club as East sluffed a diamond. Declarer cashed two of dummy's high diamonds then led the table's last club. East was fixed. If he ruffed, declarer would overruff and pick up the last trump. If East sluffed his remaining heart, declarer would sluff his last diamond and then lead a diamond from the board to complete the trump coup; making four-odd.

At the other table West, Kathie Cappelletti Walvick of Washington, D.C., switched to a diamond at trick three. Declarer won and played trumps in the same manner. When he lost the club finesse, however, back came another diamond, and declarer found he was an entry short for the trump coup. Whichever minor suit declarer opted to ruff to shorten his trumps, East would be able to discard his last card in the other minor and declarer would have no way back to dummy for the coup to operate.

Anton moved by Vietnamese refugees

ROCKVILLE CENTRE, N.Y. (AP) — Actress Susan Anton says she saw the trauma of the Vietnam war and its aftermath in the faces of children when she visited the home of a couple who adopted four small refugees.

She visited the Long Island home of Hugh Boyle and his wife on Tuesday to get acquainted. Miss Anton will be narrator of a documentary about adoptions of Vietnamese refugees that will feature the Boyles.

"I'm becoming very, very overwhelmed by it all," the actress said. "I'm very emotional, because it's one thing to read about it, but you come face-to-face with these little faces, and you realize the courage it took them to get here. There's no way you can express it."

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Americans who don't want to pay for a monthly television movie service might be interested in seeing first-run films at home without the bother of driving to the video store, some companies think.

It was one of the prime topics at the National Cable Television Association convention, which just ended.

"Pay-per-view," as the idea is called, takes advantage of telephones, computer technology and cable television to deliver a blockbuster movie, an erotic film or a prizefight to viewers who call in an order for a showing.

Showtime-The Movie Channel, which already uses cable to deliver movies to the homes of subscribers to its monthly services, announced at the convention that it is launching a pay-per-view system.

Showtime expects to price its showings at about $4.50 per event. That compares with a national average of $3.15 to rent a video cassette, a figure that includes annual membership fees and late charges.

Another entrant is Playboy Enterprises. The company's president, Christie Hefner, said she will suggest that cable system operators charge $3 to $4 to watch a three-hour Playboy show, which would include a 90-minute adult feature film.

But Playboy and Showtime will offer only one title a week, compared to the hundreds of titles available in a video store.

Alex Haley

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Americans should look at their family trees before taking credit for their own successes, says Alex Haley, Pulitzer Prize-winning author of "Roots."

Haley told University of Tennessee graduates in a commencement address Tuesday that it is easy to forget that ancestors made those successes possible.

"As we go forward, we need to look back with a sense of reverence to those who made it possible for us to do the things we're doing today," he said, telling the graduates to open their arms to their parents and "hug them, kiss them and say, 'I want to thank you for what you have made possible for me.'"

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Leopold Bloom might not have recognize the place, but because of its resemblance to the turn-of-the-century Dublin in which he rambled, Philadelphia is home to the 18th annual James Joyce Festival.

Some 250 scholars — about a dozen of them Europeans — are set to celebrate the life and works of Joyce, who ran afoul of U.S. censors because of the salty nature of his 800-page "Ulysses," which details one day in the life of Bloom.

Carol Shloss, co-director of the festival which begins today and a fellow at Drexel University, said the city offers the chance for a "walking conference" spread out among several small cultural institutions in and around Rittenhouse Square.

"There's a sense of the scale of Dublin here," she said. "The heart of this city is very similar. If you walk around, you run into people you know. Like Leopold Bloom."

Previous U.S. conferences — the gathering is held in Europe every second year — have been in small college towns, except for two jaunts to Provincetown, Mass.

The conference's opening reception today is set for the Rosenbach Library and Museum, which owns the manuscript of "Ulysses."

Loretta Swit

MIAMI (AP) — Mr. Bill, the clay character featured on "Saturday Night Live," makes his TV comeback this summer in a commercial campaign for Burger King's reformulated Whopper that also will feature live celebrities.

Loretta Swit, Mr. T, Emmanuel Lewis of television's "Webster," and Bruce Weitz of "Hill Street Blues," also will appear in the $32 million campaign, in which celebrities play skeptical consumers who already liked the Whopper but are won over to the new product after a taste.

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Vic Tanny, a body builder and health club pioneer, died Tuesday. He was 73.

Tanny opened his first health club in his native Rochester, N.Y., in 1932 and opened another in Santa Monica, Calif., in 1939. The chain grew and, at one time, included more than 100 clubs in the United States and Canada.

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Most of the medical records from the artificial heart implant in Barney Clark, reported missing by Dr. William C. DeVries, has been found by the surgeon and returned to the University of Utah, the school said Tuesday.

DeVries, who implanted the artificial heart in Clark in 1982, was preparing to move to Louisville, Ky., last summer when he was unable to find a 1,000-page record that included Clark's hour-by-hour condition report.

Enrique Borrego of Hearst's San Antonio Light had the creative idea that delivered 88 papers in 13 inches of snow.

Whether they're an executive or a secretary, a book editor or a TV cameraman, someone in a newsroom or someone in the mailroom.

Whatever they do at Hearst, we want each and every one of our 13,000 people to be creative people. To not just "do" their job, but to come up with creative ways to do it better than anyone else.

Helen Gurley Brown's creative idea for Cosmopolitan identified a whole new group of women who today consider Cosmopolitan the only magazine they can truly call their own.

Enrique Borrego's creative idea solved the problem of delivering his papers on time even after a huge blizzard. What Enrique did was prepare in advance, by starting an hour earlier and enlisting the help of a partner...his father!

Creative ideas have helped us more than triple our size in the past ten years and have made us one of the largest and, we think, one of the best communications companies in the world.

A company people want to work for.

A company people want to grow with.

Going fishing? Tuck these tantalizing recipes into your tackle box and turn the catch of the day into an outdoor feast.

Barbecued Grilled Trout is wrapped in bacon and brushed with a tomato and beer sauce for spice.

Fish

Your catch of the day can be the outdoor feast with recipes for Grilled Trout or Fish 'N Spinach Stew — but don't worry if the big one gets away. Both recipes are just as tasty with frozen fish.

The baste for Barbecued Grilled Trout lends the crowning touch to those fish you've worked so hard to catch. Bacon-wrapped trout is brushed inside and out with a mixture of mild tomato sauce, beer and seasonings punctuated with nippy Worcestershire sauce. Use a closed wire rack to turn fish with ease over an open fire or grill, cooking until trout is flaky and the bacon-wrapped skin is crisp. Serve with corn-on-the-cob or foil-wrapped potatoes baked in the coals, fresh sliced tomatoes, beverage and melon for dessert.

One pot Fish 'N Spinach Stew makes an ideal choice for camping. Supplies are kept to a minimum without sacrificing flavor thanks to the convenient use of sour cream and chives potato mix. Combine and simmer the boned fish, potatoes and vegetables in one pan using any type of fresh or frozen fillets. All you need are hard rolls, beverage and any easy-to-carry fruit for dessert.

Barbecued Grilled Trout

1 can (8 oz.) tomato sauce
½ cup beer
1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce
1 teaspoon onion salt
1 teaspoon lemon juice
6 whole pan-dressed brook trout (8 oz. each)
12 slices bacon, partially cooked

Combine tomato sauce, beer, Worcestershire sauce, onion salt and lemon juice in small saucepan; simmer two minutes. Brush inside of fish with part of basting sauce. Wrap two slices of bacon around each trout. Grill over low coals in closed wire rack 13-16 minutes, basting frequently with remaining sauce. Cook, turning occasionally, until bacon and trout skin are crisp. Makes six servings.

Fish 'n Spinach Stew

1 pound fresh or frozen fish fillets
1 package (5.5 oz.) sour cream and chives potatoes
2⅓ cups water
⅔ cup milk
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
1 can (4 oz.) mushroom stems and pieces
3 cups cut-up fresh spinach

Cut fish fillets into ¾-inch cubes. Combine fish cubes, potato slices and seasoning mix from package, water, milk, butter and undrained mushrooms in large skillet. Simmer, covered, 30 minutes, stirring occasionally. Add spinach; cover and simmer five minutes. Makes four servings.

Sardines are a great ingredient for sandwich explorations.

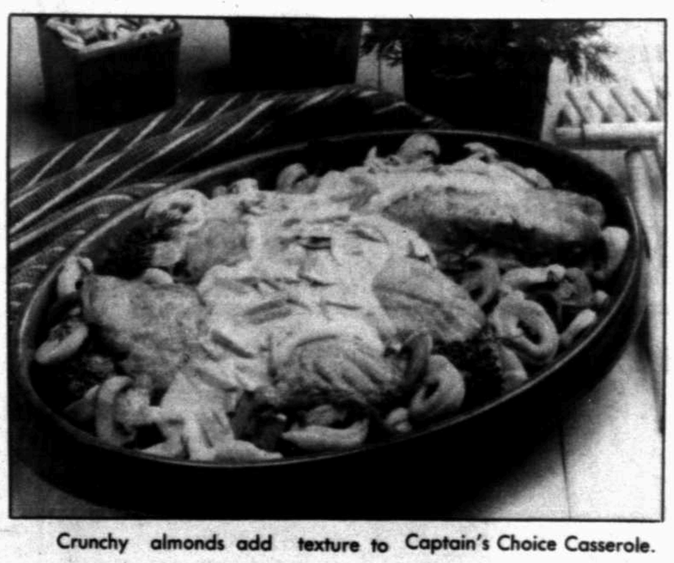

Sardine Snacks

½ cup shredded lettuce
¼ cup each shredded carrot and zucchini
¼ cup sliced green onions
1 hard-cooked egg, chopped
½ cup shredded Monterey Jack cheese
Dressing (recipe follows)
2 pocket breads, halved
1 can (3¾-oz.) sardines in oil, drained

Sandwich: Combine vegetables, egg and cheese. Toss lightly with dressing. Fill pockets in bread with vegetable mixture and sardines, dividing equally.

For salad: Arrange carrot, zucchini, onions, egg, cheese and sardines on lettuce-lined plates. Spoon dressing over salads. Accompany with pocket bread, if desired. Makes two servings.

Dressing: In small bowl combine 1⅓ tablespoons each unflavored lowfat yogurt and sour half-and-half, 1⅓ teaspoons milk and curry powder and salt to taste. Mix to blend.

Crunchy almonds add texture to Captain's Choice Casserole.

Baked Catfish

4 catfish fillets (about 1 pound)
1 tablespoon lemon juice
2 egg whites
2 tablespoons plain lowfat yogurt
1 tablespoon chopped onion
1 clove garlic, minced
¼ teaspoon crushed basil leaves
¼ teaspoon pepper, divided
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
2 tablespoons flour
1 cup skim milk
4 teaspoons prepared horseradish
½ teaspoon paprika

Arrange catfish on cookie sheet sprayed with non-stick cooking spray. Sprinkle lemon juice on top. In small bowl, beat egg whites until soft peaks form. Fold in yogurt, onion, garlic, basil and ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Spoon on top of catfish. Bake in 375-F. oven for 20 minutes or until fish is flaky.

In small saucepan melt butter. Stir in flour until smooth. Stir in milk, horseradish, paprika and remaining ⅛ teaspoon pepper. Cook, stirring constantly over medium heat, until mixture is bubbly and slightly thickened. Serve with catfish. Makes four servings.

Captain's Choice Casserole

Fish is quick and easy to saute and the perfect bland base for wonderfully tasty sauces. While not all fish falls into this classification, most white fish do. Mild in flavor and low in fat, more and more cod, fillet of sole, snapper and other white fish are being purchased by health- and time- conscious cooks.

And frying in batter, once thought to be the easiest way to cook fish at home, has been replaced by sauteeing, poaching and baking. They are all less complicated, less apt to add excess fat and allow faster methods of preparation.

Here, quickly sauteed cod is lightly sauced, sprinkled with sliced almonds and baked over a base of fresh vegetables and tortellini. This casserole with its crunchy almond topping is an entire meal in itself. All you need is a fresh tomato salad to make a complete and colorful dinner.

1 pkg. (10-12 oz.) fresh or frozen tortellini
2 cups fresh broccoli flowerettes
4 tablespoons butter
1 teaspoon dried dill weed
1 pound fresh or frozen cod fillets
1 red bellpepper, sliced (or 4-oz. jar pimiento)
1½ cups sliced fresh mushrooms
⅓ cup sliced green onion
2 tablespoons flour
¾ cup water
½ cup white wine
1 cup whipping cream or half-and-half
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon finely grated lemon peel
¼ cup chopped parsley
½ cup toasted slivered almonds

Cook tortellini in boiling, salted water as package directs, adding broccoli in last five minutes. Drain, place in 1½- to 2-quart casserole dish. In large skillet melt two tablespoons butter over medium-high heat. Stir in dill. Saute cod fillets until just tender and flaky. Remove fillets to plate. In pan drippings saute bell pepper (if using pimiento, do not saute), mushrooms and green onions; add to pasta.

Melt remaining two tablespoons butter in skillet. Stir in flour. Add water and wine, cook stirring constantly until thickened. Blend in cream, salt, lemon peel and parsley. Stir half the sauce into pasta and vegetables.

Place cod fillets over pasta. Top with remaining sauce, sprinkle with almonds. Bake at 350-F. for 30 minutes or until heated through. Makes six servings.

Herb vinegars can be made inexpensively at home

Hearst News Service

Peg Brown's eyebrows lift at the thought of herb vinegars selling for $8 or $10 a quart at specialty food stores. Brown, who started the herb garden at Five Rivers Environmental Education Center in Delmar, N.Y., 10 years ago, knows how easy and cheap it is to make those popular vinegars and other herb preparations such as butters and oils.

Making herb vinegars, butters and oils presupposes growing your own herbs. If you're a novice, the Five Rivers herb garden is an excellent guide. Your can walk through its six sections, which contain more than 100 medicinal herbs and herbs used for fragrance, dyes, teas, seasonings, pot herbs and salad greens.

There is also a brochure and herb list available explaining the history, planting information and uses of the herbs.

The Berkshire Garden Center in Stockbridge, Mass., is known for its herb gardens and the herb products it sells. Brown also recommends some books on herbs, including "Herbs, Their Culture and Uses," by Rosetta Clarkson (MacMillan and Co.); "Handbook on Herbs," (Brooklyn Botanic Garden); and "Herbs and Spices" by Julia F. Morton for the Golden Press.

Herb vinegars are among the most popular herb products on the market today because vinegar draws the flavor from herbs and preserves it well. Vinegar is inexpensive, but Brown also makes her own wine vinegar and then flavors it with homegrown herbs. Vinegars can be flavored with basil, tarragon, oregano, wild thyme, peppercorns, mint, dill, chervil, chive blossoms and savory.

"The herb shouldn't be left in unless you know you will use it soon, as it will disintegrate," Brown said.

Herbs and vinegar should be brought just barely to the boil and then they should stand in a large glass jar for three weeks. Shake once a week, then strain and bottle.

Butters and oils can be made by adding one to two teaspoons chopped green herbs to a quarter of a pound of butter or an equivalent amount of oil. Herb butters can be used as spreads, as butter for hot vegetables, or to saute eggs or vegetables.

Appropriate herbs for butters or oils are green basil alone or with parsley, tarragon alone or with parsley, thyme and marjoram, dill, chervil, chive and savory.

"Don't use very much sage, if any," she said. "It will dominate, and overpower the flavor of the food."

PEG BROWN'S WINE VINEGAR

2 pints inexpensive dry red or white wine
1 tablespoon fresh tarragon leaves or ½ teaspoon dry tarragon
½ cup fresh lemon balm, or ¼ cup dried
4 to 6 bay leaves
1 clove garlic, chopped coarsely

Place in a stainless steel kettle. Barely bring to a boil and simmer for 20 minutes. Put through a coffee filter paper, fine sieve or cheesecloth. Cool and place in sterile containers.

GARLIC VINEGAR

Mash 3 cloves of garlic in a quart mason jar. Add 1 quart red wine vinegar and stir for several minutes. Cover and let stand in a dark place for one week. Strain vinegar through coffee filter paper. Pour into sterilized bottles and cork.

MINT VINEGAR

Crush two cups spearmint leaves with one cup honey or sugar and let stand for a few minutes. Bring 1 quart cider vinegar to a boil. Add the mint and sugar or honey mixture. Simmer 3 minutes. Strain. Bottle while hot and seal. Let stand for several weeks. May be used as a mint sauce, or mixed with water or seltzer on ice to make a cool summer drink.

TARRAGON VINEGAR

1 pint tarragon leaves
1 pint wine vinegar, heated
2 cloves
1 clove garlic, halved

Crush tarragon leaves slightly with the hands. Add vinegar, cloves and garlic. Cover and let stand. After 24 hours take out the garlic, then let stand 14 days more. After that, strain and press through a cloth. Bottle and cork tightly.

From "Herbs for the Kitchen," by Irma Goodrich Mazza (Little, Brown).

HERB MUSTARD

One 8-ounce jar Dijon mustard
½ teaspoon oregano
1 teaspoon thyme
½ teaspoon tarragon

Put the mustard into a 2-cup bowl. Stir in the herbs, mix well and return to the original jar or a decorative jar with a tight stopper. Keep refrigerated at least three weeks before serving. Makes 8 ounces.

From "Seasonal Gifts from the Kitchen," by Emily Crumpacker, (William Morrow).

HERBED BUTTERS

Try on filet mignon, fresh steamed asparagus, or with smoked salmon as an hors d'oeuvre. To use as a garnish, roll into a log and slice.

½ pound butter
3 tablespoons parsley, finely chopped
¼ teaspoon freshly ground white pepper
2 tablespoons fresh tarragon, or thyme, or sage, or one good sized garlic clove, minced or mashed, or 1 tablespoon horseradish, freshly grated, or 2 anchovy filets

Mix the butter, parsley, pepper, and chosen flavor together in a bowl with a fork. Pack the butter into several small crocks and cover or troll into a log and wrap tightly. Store in the refrigerator or freeze. Makes one cup.

From "Seasonal Gifts from the Kitchen," by Emily Crumpacker, (William Morrow).

WALNUT GARLIC OIL

5 cloves garlic, peeled and halved
8 walnut halves
2 cups vegetable oil or light French olive oil

Drop the garlic and walnut halves into a pint bottle. Warm the oil slightly and pour into the bottle. Seal and store in a cool place for at least a week to allow the flavors to penetrate the oil.

Zesty vinegars add zip

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

When I was growing up, I used vinegar liberally in salad dressings and on many vegetable dishes. But the only kinds we had were distilled white apple cider.

It wasn't until World War II that I began sampling the tangy red and white wine vinegars used in the homes and restaurants of France.

Now we are receiving a number of elegant wine vinegars from the French that are part of the much-discussed nouvelle cuisine. They are often costly, but have a unique taste.

The new ones include champagne or white wine vinegars blended with blueberries, cherries, raspberries and strawberries, to name a few.

Actually, such off-beat vinegars are not new. For years inventive chefs have been experimenting with vinegars made from bananas, dates, oranges and pineapple, with varying degrees of success.

For some time, gourmets have indulged in sherry vinegar, which has a nutty flavor. This type should be used in moderation because it has a high acidic content that grates on some palates.

The French vin aigre, or sour wine, has existed for as long as the fermented grapes of France. It is said to have originated there when an absent-minded steward left a cask of wine uncovered and it turned sour.

The origin of vinegar goes back much further than France's first effort. More than 3,000 years ago, the Chinese made a vinegar from rice wine, and the Japanese used a relatively sweet vinegar to flavor rice.

Back in the Middle Ages, Europeans actually drank vinegar mixed with spices in an effort to ward off the dreaded Black Plague. It is not known how the therapy worked, but vinegar still is used in the health field. Those on a low salt diet often replace salt with a touch of vinegar in salads, soups and stews.

Vinaigrette is one of the basic dressings for greens. Here is a recipe.

VINAIGRETTE DRESSING

2 tablespoons red or white wine vinegar
1 clove garlic, minced
1 teaspoon Dijon mustard
¼ teaspoon salt
Pinch pepper
6 tablespoons olive oil or salad oil

In a small bowl, mix vinegar, garlic, mustard, salt and pepper. At this point vinegar buffs can raise the vinegar content from 2 to 4 tablespoons, or any amount in between. Using a fork or whisk, gradually beat in the oil until the dressing is slightly thickened and well combined. If you make the dressing ahead of time, place it in the refrigerator, and beat again to combine thoroughly before adding to salad. Makes just under half a cup, enough for a salad for 3 to 4 people.

DEAR ABBY

Unintentional pregnancy causes marriage to crash

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am 22 years old, married for eight months, and I just found out I am six weeks' pregnant. (It was an accident.) My husband blames me for my carelessness. He says he doesn't want the responsibilities of being a father and he wants his single life back. He ordered me to get an abortion, but I can't see myself killing my unborn child, so now we are separated.

I now feel that he doesn't care about me anymore, but I still love him and miss him terribly. We were so happy before this happened.

I want my husband, but I can't kill our baby. We are both Catholic. What shall I do? — SPEECHLESS

DEAR SPEECHLESS: You need counseling to find out why you still "love" a man who would leave you because you became pregnant. He needs counseling, too, but your first order of business is to look after yourself.

Please talk to your priest. He can comfort and counsel you. And feeling as you do, under no circumstances should you abort your child.

DEAR ABBY: Six months ago, my husband and I bought a lovely old home from an estate. The elderly woman who had owned it had died, and some of the furniture was sold with the house.

About two weeks after we moved in, I was putting my china away, and what do you think I found tucked away in the back of the dining room cabinet? An envelope containing $700 in cash, and several pension checks made out to the woman who had died!

Immediately I telephoned the daughter of the woman whose home it had been. I told her what I had ound, and in less than an hour her husband was at my door to pick up the envelope. He didn't stay 30 seconds, and never even said "Thank you"!

I told several friends about this, and they all said I should have kept the money, that the dining room set was sold with the house, and I was entitled to whatever was in the cabinet. I felt better giving it back, however, even though no one would have known about the money in the cabinet had I not mentioned it.

In retrospect, I can't believe they didn't offer me even $10 just for the heck of it!

What do you think? — CINDY IN PENNSAUKEN, N.J.

DEAR CINDY: I think you did the right thing by returning the money. And the beneficiaries of your honesty are for the birds. (Cheap, cheap!)

DEAR ABBY: What's bugging me? I'll tell you what's bugging me. I'm a grown man, and I have a problem I am too ashamed to admit to anyone else. When my brother and I go to lunch together, he usually brings someone else along, or else we are invariably joined at the restaurant by a third party — usually a friend of his whom I also know. When there are three guys, the two of them carry on a conversation and I am completely left out. Maybe it's my fault for falling into this trap, but I can't very well tell my brother not to bring anyone, and I can't really ask a person to get lost if he wants to join us for lunch.

I wouldn't mind a third person, but I'm getting tired and fed up just sitting and listening to two other people talk to each other. — EXCLUDED DOWN SOUTH

DEAR EXCLUDED: Your brother and the third parties who invariably join you are rude and insensitive. Look for more compatible luncheon companions.

(Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Thank-you notes, sympathy letters, congratulations, how to decline and accept invitations and how to write an interesting letter are included in Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped envelope to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Herbs easily home-grown

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Six hours of sunlight a day and average soil: Fulfill these two requirements and herbs will thrive. Since it is too late in the year to start with seed, buy the young herb plants that can be found at most quality garden centers.

Not just any herb plant will do, however. Select only those that are appropriate for the amount of growing space available, be it an apartment window box or a backyard garden. Some herbs will grow much too big and overwhelm a small patch. So unless the garden is huge, avoid the rampant angelica, comfrey, lovage and tansy.

Choose, instead, herbs such as basil, summer savory, sweet marjoram, rosemary and tarragon, which fit nicely into a container, either a rectangular clay or redwood planter or a window arrangement. The herbs can be planted as little as eight inches apart. Keep the container near the kitchen so their leaves are handy to use and their delicate fragrances can scent the room.

A great many herbs are permanent plants. True perennials, they last for years. Just cut them back after frost touches their tops in late fall and, after Thanksgiving, apply a light leafy mulch. These herbs will come back next spring.

Other herbs are annuals. Pull them out at the end of the growing season and plan to buy new ones next spring.

Three popular herbs that are easy to grow are basil, summer savory and sweet marjoram. All are either annuals or what is known as tender, that is, frost or cold weather kills them.

Use average soil or buy a standard commercial potting mixture. Since herbs need a lighter soil, add several handfuls of a coarse grained sand (not beach sand) if the mixture appears to have too much peat moss or leaf mold. Water during dry spells. Try to cut herb sprigs often, preferably before flowering and after the sun has dried the dew. This keeps the plants thriving and succulent.

Another easy-to-grow herb and one well-suited to a small garden space is dill. It, too, is an annual. Clip dill frequently or it becomes lanky.

Parsley is simple to manage. A biennial, its beautifully curled foliage serves a dual purpose: as an attractive edging and as a much-used seasoning. If mulched for the winter, parsley roots often survive and resprout.

Thymes are a must for the herb garden. About 400 different kinds exist and fill many roles. The one most often selected for flavoring is common thyme, a shrubby compact plant with narrow leaves. Lemon thyme is also highly desirable for its pungent flavor.

Rosemary is another culinary pleaser. A very aromatic plant with sweet blue flowers, it does not survive the winter and must be kept indoors in a cool place.

Two Fruit Ice recipe made without milk

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

A young friend of mine, who loves fruit ices, recently became allergic to dairy foods. Because she couldn't find a fruit ice on the market made without milk, she worked out a recipe of her own. It calls for pineapple and strawberries, sugar and corn syrup and a little dry white wine.

Various friends have tried this Two-Fruit Ice and it always wins applause from tasters. One of its features is that it stays just malleable enough to be scooped up the moment it is taken out of the freezer. Other virtues: this ice has more body than other ices of its kind because it has plenty of fruit in it, and it stores extremely well.

The following recipe for the Two-Fruit Ice calls for two 8-ounce cans of unsweetened crushed pineapple and includes the juice in the cans. However, if you like, you may substitute 2 cups of fresh pineapple chunks for the cans.

TWO FRUIT ICE

Two 8-ounce cans unsweetened crushed pineapple, undrained
½ pint strawberries (rinsed and stemmed), about 1¼ cups
1½ cups light corn syrup
½ cup dry white wine
½ cup sugar

In an appropriate size food processor, with the steel blade, puree pineapple and strawberries. Add corn syrup, wine and sugar and process until blended. Churn freeze. Turn into freezer containers and freeze for several hours or overnight before serving.

Pecan pie 'best'

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

The following recipe for Chocolate Chip Pecan Pie entranced a group of teen-age cooks who labeled it "The Best."

It has a smooth and creamy bottom layer with chocolate and pecan halves on top. Along with a glass of milk it makes an extra-special offering at snacktime.

CHOCOLATE CHIP PECAN PIE

3 large eggs
1¼ cups light corn syrup
⅓ cup sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
6-ounce package semisweet chocolate pieces (1 cup)
1 cup pecan halves
Unbaked 9-inch pastry shell

In a medium bowl, with a fork, beat eggs slightly. Stir in corn syrup, sugar and vanilla just until blended. Stir in chocolate pieces and pecans. Pour into pastry shell.

Bake in a preheated 375-degree oven 45 to 50 minutes or until a knife inserted half way between the outside and the center comes out clean. Cool on a wire rack.

Crab meat honored

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Crabs have been on earth for about 200 million years, 180 million years longer than man, but only five years ago folks in the City by the Bay decided to honor this old, homely but tasty crustacean.

Press and celebrities were invited to San Francisco to celebrate the Pacific Coast's Dungeness Crab. Chefs from all over submitted recipes for their best crab dishes and the winners demonstrated their cooking expertise to the public. The party was a huge (and filling) success, and it became an annual event. The two-day affair includes a cook-off, demonstrations by chefs and food personalities as well as an all-you-can-eat crab feed. Proceeds from the festivities now benefit the American Lung Association.

The 1985 contest was opened to amateurs only. Twenty-five finalists were picked (from more that 200 entries from as far away as Nevada, Washington and Maryland) to bring their entrees to Nepture's Palace.

Angie Cohn, from Napa, Calif., cooked up a judge-pleasing batch of crab and avocado soup that took top honors. Cohn, who has lived in Maryland, modified a recipe for hot crab soup to fit the local Dungeness crabs and California avocados and it won her her first cooking contest.

Cohn's dish was judged best of breed for presentation, palate, originality and creativity. Here's the prize-winning recipe.

CREAMY CRAB AND AVOCADO

2 tablespoons butter
1 tablespoon vegetable oil
1 medium onion, chopped
1 clove garlic, chopped
½ stalk celery, chopped
1 cup dry white wine
2 cups mild fish stock
½ teaspoon Tabasco sauce
1 whole Dungness crab, cooked and cleaned
1 cup heavy cream
2 ripe avocados
1 cup sour cream
1 small ripe tomato, seeded and chopped

Melt butter in the oil in a saute pan over low heat. Add the onion, garlic and celery. Saute the vegetables for 10 minutes on low heat. Stir frequently with a wooden spoon to prevent the vegetables from sticking to the pan or browning.

Add the wine and simmer for 5 minutes on low heat. Add the fish stock and simmer 10 minutes longer on medium heat.

Remove the pan from the heat and stir in the salt, Tabasco sauce and crab meat. Puree the mixture in a blender for 60 seconds. Pour mixture in a glass bowl.

Peel one of the avocados and remove the pit. Cut into several pieces and place in the blender. Add the heavy cream and puree for 15 seconds.

Stir this mixture into the crab mixture in the bowl. Cover with plastic wrap. Chill for 3 hours or overnight before serving.

To garnish: Peel remaining avocado and cut into 12 slices. Seed and core and chop tomato. Place 2 slices of avocado on top of each serving of soup so that they resemble a heart. Spoon 1 tablespoon of sour cream onto the center of each heart. Spoon 1 tablespoon of chopped tomato on the sour cream. Serve immediately. Makes 6 servings.

The second-place winner, Carmela M. Meely of Walnut Creek, Calif., made a hollowed-out loaf of sourdough bread filled with a seafood mixture:

MIXED SEAFOOD BREAD

½ pound butter, softened
½ cup parsley, chopped
3 whole shallots, chopped
3 to 4 tablespoons minced garlic
3 to 4 tablespoons ground pine nuts
½ cup champagne, white wine or vermouth
1 pound medium, raw prawns, shelled and deveined
1 cup Dungeness crabmeat, flaked
½ pound raw scallops
1½ teaspoons salt
1 teaspoon white pepper
One round loaf sourdough bread

To make a garlic butter, blend the butter, parsley, shallots, garlic, wine, nuts, salt and pepper together in a food processor or blender.

Slice the top off the loaf of sourdough bread. Hollow out the bottom portion. Set aside crumbs. In the hollowed loaf, layer the shrimp, ⅓ of the garlic butter mixture, scallops, another ⅓ of the garlic butter, crabmeat and sprinkle with bread crumbs. Spread the remaining 1/3 of the garlic butter on the underside of the loaf top.

Bake the uncovered, filled loaf at 400 degrees for 20 minutes. Cover with the bread lid and bake an additional 10 minutes. Cut into wedges. Serve hot or cold.

A major favorite was a pasta dish done by Robert Nelson of San Francisco.

FETTUCCINE, CARB, PEAS AND PIMENTO

Pasta:
2½ cups unbleached flour
2 eggs, beaten
1 teaspoon olive oil
1 teaspoon salt
⅓ cup warm water

Place 2¼ cups of flour in a large bowl. Make a well in a large bowl. Add ½ teaspoon salt, eggs and olive oil and combine until eggs are absorbed. Gradually add the warm water until all of it is absorbed in the flour.

Turn the dough out on to a floured surface and knead until it no longer sticks. Roll with a pasta machine and cut with the fettuccine attachment. (Commercially prepared fresh pasta can be used instead of the homemade.) Set aside until sauce is almost ready.

Sauce:
1 small shallot, minced
2 cloves garlic, minced
1 tablespoon olive oil
2 cups milk
4 tablespoons unsalted butter
2 tablespoons flour
½ teaspoon nutmeg
Salt and pepper to taste
1 pound lump crab meat
½ cup chopped fresh dill
1 cup fresh shelled peas
½ cup pimento, chopped (optional)

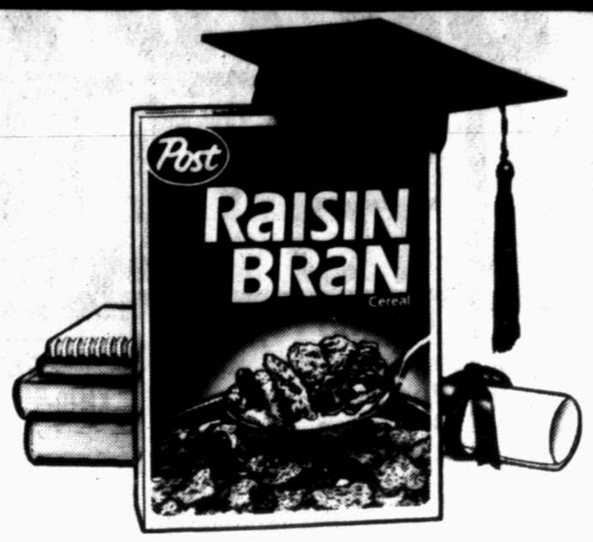

Saute shallots and garlic in olive oil. Remove from heat.

Heat milk to scalding in a medium saucepan. Add flour all at once. Cook butter and flour for about 5 minutes, whisking constantly. Slowly add hot milk and cook until thickened. Add nutmeg.

Cook pasta in rapidly boiling water for 2 to 3 minutes. Drain.

Return skillet to heat and add crab, dill, peas and pimento. Heat through. Add this mixture to the sauce and heat through. Pour sauce over drained pasta.

Nutritional concern nothing new

By MERLE ELLIS

There is nothing really new, I think, about this nation's concern for nutrition. There is much more talk about it than there ever was before, but the basic concern hasn't changed much. I can remember far back in my childhood such parental comments at the dinner table as: "Drink your milk." "If you don't eat your spinach, you don't get dessert." "No, you can't have a cookie. You can have an orange, but no more cookies." "Eat your cereal before it gets soggy."

Things were a whole lot simpler then. We learned as early as kindergarten about the four basic food groups, about a balanced diet and about moderation. Sometimes knowledge had to be enforced with a little loving discipline, i.e. "eat your spinach or else," but the basics of nutrition were really rather simple. They still are, but you wouldn't know it to witness the flood of nutritional information that has descended upon us in the past decade.

Today every food producer with a product to sell wants to tell us how "good it is for you," how "natural," how "low in this or high in that" it is. For the past ten years we have been barraged with bits and pieces of nutritional information in television and radio commercials, and on the labels of nearly every packaged food we pick up in the supermarket.

The side of every cereal box tells us how "nutritious" the contents are, how "natural" and "whole grained." We are given the "percentage of U.S. RDA" of a whole long list of nutrients from vitamin A to zinc. The calories are counted; the protein, carbohydrates and fat are listed in grams, the cholesterol, sodium and potassium in milligrams. It's all there — everything you need to know to make you feel good about consuming the food in that package is there on the label.

In this flood of nutrition information, meat has not fared too well. Perhaps that is because there never has been a label on a package of pork chops or a T-bone steak to testify in black and white that meat is good, wholesome, nutritious food. That is no longer the case.

In a comprehensive program called "Nutri-Facts," the U.S. red meat industry will offer even more nutrition information than other food industries — so there! For example, information on cholesterol, sodium and fat (including saturated, monounsaturated and polyunsaturated fats) will be included on meat labels.

For years we have been told that saturated fat is a "no-no." It may surprise you to discover, when you read the Meat Nutri-Fact label on a package of beef sirloin steak, for example, that there are only 185 calories and a total fat content of only 8.3 grams in a 3-ounce serving of broiled steak, which accounts for only nine percent of the calories and 12 percent of the fat recommended in a 2000-calorie-per-day diet.

Even more amazing is that of that total fat, only 3.3 grams is that awful saturated fat, while 3.6 grams is the not-so-awful monounsaturated fat and .4 grams is that good-guy, polyunsaturated fat. That leaves only one tiny gram of fat unaccounted for, and that's hardly worth worrying about. It's probably poly-unnaccounted-for fat, at that.

The "Meat Nutri-Facts" program is long overdue. Consumers in America, in survey after survey, have indicated that they want and need this kind of nutritional information in order to make informed decisions when it comes to feeding their families.

During the test period of the Nutri-facts program, it was found that the number one benefit shoppers identified was receiving direct information on calories. Using a package sticker, the program highlights those cuts of meat with fewer than 200 calories per 3-ounce cooked serving. Now, before you buy one of those "under 300-calorie" cook-in-a-pouch packages in the frozen food case, check the Nutri-fact labels at the meat counter. You may be able to make the same dish from fresh ingredients (without a lot of things that you can't pronounce) for a lot less money and fewer calories.

Perhaps, one of these days, thanks to programs like Meat Nutri-Facts, we'll all become super-saturated with nutritional information.

Perhaps one day, when we all know all there is to know and much more than many of us ever wanted to know about calories and cholesterol, sodium and such, perhaps then we can get back to some common sense, a little moderation and the four basic food groups. They're still valid. They probably always will be and they are much easier to deal with. You don't even need a label!

Pork roasted with spices

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

PORK FLORENTINE

6-pound pork shoulder roast
2 tablespoons finely chopped fresh or crumbled dry rosemary
3 cloves garlic, finely chopped
½ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
⅛ teaspoon ground cloves

Have pork boned, rolled and tied — it should weigh about 4½ pounds. With a sharp paring knife cut small slits in meat at 2- or 3-inch intervals. Mix together rosemary, garlic, salt, pepper and cloves; with the tip of the paring knife insert mixture in slits. Roast pork in a shallow pan (with or without a flat rack) in a preheated 350-degree oven until cooked through — 165 to 170 degrees on a meat thermometer.

Precooking can make grilled foods even greater

By BETTY WILSON
Hearst News Service

At home or away, preparing your own meals is the best way to keep cost and diet under control.

With summer nearly here, one thing almost everyone agrees on is that meat cooked outside tastes the best. Plan to put grilled meat on the weekend menu.

It's easy to prepare the meals and still enjoy the summer. Keep menus simple and food preparation to a minimum. Take advantage of convenience foods. Disposables cut down on clean up.

Most often meat cooked out of doors is grilled, barbecued, roasted or steam smoked. Costly, tender cuts of meat are not needed when cooking over the coals.

To use economical, less tender cuts of beef and pork, precook the meat or marinate to make tender.

Marinades are a mixture of oil, herbs and acid. Oil and herbs play an important role in giving flavor to the food. The acid, in a vinegar for example, softens the tough connective tissues in the meat. Bottled oil and vinegar salad dressings are convenient marinades for campers.

Ground meats, poultry and many cuts of pork are naturally tender. Precook to reduce time on the grill or to remove part of the fat, as with spare ribs. To add flavor, serve cooked tender meats from the coals with a barbecue sauce. It's easy to make your own and and a good way to keep salt under control.

Plan to eat well in good weather and bad. Ham or canned fish are easy and please hungry appetites.

CHICKEN IN FOIL

6 chicken portions
Salt and pepper
1 cup onion chip dip
1½ cups crushed potato chips

Season pieces of chicken. Spread each with chip dip and roll in crushed crumbs.

Cut three 12- by 18-inch pieces of foil. Place two servings on each piece of foil. Wrap and place on wire rack two or three inches from glowing coals. Cook 20 minutes on each side. Serves six.

MEATLOAF IN FOIL

1 pound ground beef
1 egg
½ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
1 tablespoon onion flakes
1 tablespoon parsley flakes
¼ cup barbecue sauce
Breadcrumbs
6 slices bacon

Combine the first seven ingredients and divide into six equal portions. Form into 2- by 4-inch rectangle and roll in breadcrumbs. Cut bacon in half and place half slice on each side of meat. Cut six 9- by 9-inch pieces of foil and wrap around each portion of meat.

Cook two to three inches above coals for 20 minutes on each side. Serves six.

TERIYAKI MARINADE

1 cup soy sauce
1 cup sugar
1 tablespoon grated ginger root
1 clove crushed garlic
1 tablespoon oil

Heat soy sauce and sugar until sugar dissolves. Remove from heat and add remaining ingredients.

For Sirloin on a Skewer:

Slice partialy frozen sirloin steak into ¼-inch slices, planning four servings to the pound. Marinate sliced meat in Teriyaki Marinade 30 minutes. String meat onto skewers. Cook over the coals 10 to 15 minutes.

For Teriyaki Chicken:

Parboil chicken pieces until almost cooked, about 30 minutes. Marinate chicken pieces in sauce in refrigerator overnight. Arrange on grill and barbecue until heated through and tender. Serve with rice.

Wood returns to barbecue grills

By VINOD CHHABRA
Hearst News Service

We have that awful flavored chemical to thank for bringing us back to our senses. We were told that a squirt or two of this bottled liquid was all we needed to give a leathery steak the flavor of smoke.

Real smoke and high heat that chars and seals in the juices are the very essence of a good barbecue. That was known for years. But when all those Lyndon B. Johnson cookouts at the LBJ Ranch made front-page news, droves of killjoy researchers descended on the scene to tell us each smoky LBJ sizzler packed the wrath of 800 cigarettes. Cut back on the searing wood heat, we were told; more important, cut out the smoke.

The scare spawned a new industry: nubbins of charcoal powder with a chemical binder, to be doused with high-octane chemical starter fluid. As prescribed by researchers, the heat emitted was low. But you could give it the look and flavor of a real barbecue by splashing the meat with chemical smoke. This we did for years until other researchers came by to tell us the chemical substitute was as detrimental to health as the real thing.

Food addititives and chemical substitutes were already under fire and it didn't take much to nudge the backyard barbecuer back to the real thing — real wood, real smoke. Restaurants plowed right in, and real hickory-smoked ribs became an instant success. Industry magazines now say there's a mania for grilling over wood — the more exotic the better — which is one reason why mesquite leads the list.

The reasons:

— Wood burns hotter and lasts longer than carbon briquettes and gives off plenty of smoke.

— The intense heat does an efficient job of searing and sealing in the meat juices. There's plenty of flavor and variety, too.

— As a grilling wood, hickory is very similar to oak — both offer a strong flavor and are a favorite for pork and ribs. But hickory is used more widely because it is more exotic and more expensive.

A bitter-tasting hardwood, the most valuable hickory species is the one that produces pecan nuts. Most hickories are used for tool handles, sports equipment, furniture, flooring and now are increasingly prized as fuel.

— Fruitwoods: Cherry, apple, pear and peach impart a milder and sweeter flavor and are being put to good use to grill seafood.

The wood taking the country by storm, though, is mesquite, the spiny, gnarled nuisance shrub found from the Southwest through Mexico and parts of South America.

A mesquite-fired grill burns so hot the wood chunks have to be soaked in water for at least an hour before they are fired. That brings out the true virtue of the wood. Instead of going up in flames, it smokes profusely, imparting a bold and mellow flavor.

Cake blasts off with blueberry filling

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

When fresh blueberry season rolled around each year, I tried old and new recipes for Blueberry Cake, a traditional American dessert. However, since last summer I have been so enthusiastic about a particular version, that it is the one I want to make this year. You may want to try the recipe, too. It was evolved by my tester, Mary R. Greene, in her own kitchen.

MARY R. GREENE'S BLUEBERRY CAKE

2½ cups all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
½ teaspoon baking soda
1 cup butter, at room temperature
1¼ cups sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
½ teaspoon grated lemon rind
2 large eggs
1 cup sour cream
Blueberry Filling, see recipe
Topping, see recipe

Stir together flour, baking powder and soda. In the large bowl of an electric mixer, at medium speed, thoroughly beat together butter, sugar, vanilla and lemon rind. Beat in eggs one at a time, then sour cream. At low speed gradually beat in flour mixture until blended.

Turn about ⅓ of the batter into a greased and floured 9-inch tube pan. Sprinkle with ⅓ the Blueberry Filling. Repeat layers. Spread with remaining batter. Sprinkle with Topping.

Bake on the rack below center, in a preheated 350-degree oven until a cake tester comes out free of batter — about 50 minutes. Loosen edges and around tube and turn out on rack; cool completely. Invert on a cake platter.

Blueberry Filling: Stir together 2 tablespoons sugar, 1 cup blueberries and ½ cup walnuts (chopped medium fine).

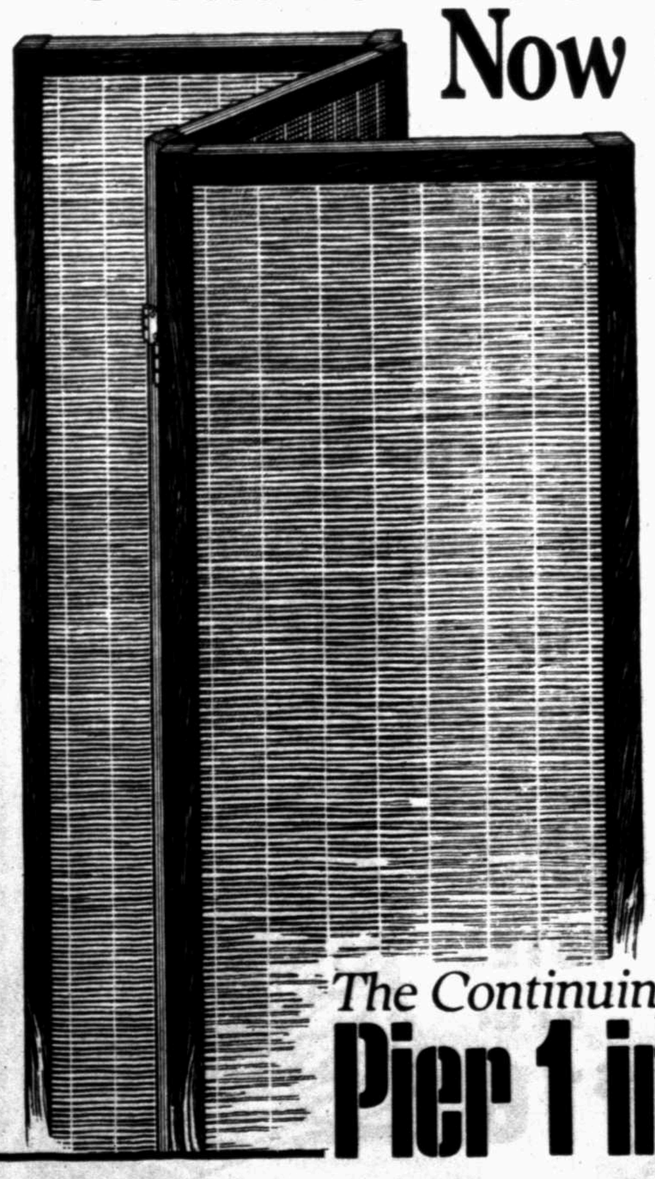

Topping: Stir together 1 tablespoon sugar and ½ teaspoon ground cinnamon.

Chile Rellenos and Enchiladas are tasty and versatile Mexican specialties which can be served for festive occasions such as a dinner party or even for the gatherings of a Friday night poker crowd.

Full house sure bet with Mexican food

By KEN JOHNSON
Copley News Service

When it's Mexican food you're after, you usually don't turn to a third-generation Swede named Johnson to get it. You get your recipe from a Garcia or a Torres, or you dine at a place called Jose's or La Fiesta.

But when you're invited to dinner at my place, you're probably going to eat Mexican cuisine. Be forewarned: These dishes are not authentic by the classic definition of the Mexican-American cook.

But they'll hold you in good stead if you're planning a party feast, a weekend dinner extravaganza or just a good midweek meal.

The guest list determines my approach to a dinner. If the invitation includes some new faces whose tastes are a mystery, or children, who usually disdain hot food, I keep the dishes basic (tacos, enchiladas and rice).

If it's my poker gang that's coming by, I almost double the chili input (not to mention the quantity per person).

MY CURRENT personal favorite dish is chilies rellenos, a crisp-fried form of omelette topped with salsa. Stuffed with plenty of Monterey Jack cheese, they are at home as an entree or as a side dish.

If you're looking for something different, try the Carne Caliente over rice. Boiling the meat with hot chilies and their seeds provides a rousing dish for the heartier Mexican-food lovers, and it's very filling. Go easy on the side dishes when you serve it; it's almost a meal in itself.

Remember, stick to fresh meats and vegetables, and keep experimenting with the chilies to meet the tastes of your eating audience.

CHILI RELLENOS

Whole green (Anaheim) chilies, 1 for each relleno
Monterey Jack cheese cut in 3-inch-long logs
Salsa
1 dozen eggs
Salt and pepper
Oil for frying

Fresh chilies are best, but they must be peeled. Canned chilies are handy, ut the lack of freshness costs. A good rule of thumb is to use fresh chilies for a small dinner and the canned, whole green chilies for a larger crowd.

The best way to peel a fresh chili is to hold it over an open burner flame with a fork, turning it as the skin burns and pops. After all the skin has been roasted, place the chili on a working surface and remove the skin.

Keep the chili as intact as possible. Remove the stem and the white pulp inside the top of the chili. The seeds are optional (I prefer to leave them in.)

Stuff each chili with Monterey Jack cheese and set aside. Begin warming about 1 pint of salsa for each half dozen rellenos you plan to cook.

Separate two eggs and whip the white first, adding a little salt and pepper. Add yolks and blend to a froth. You'll need to blend a two-egg mixture for every three rellenos.

Into a frying pan with ¼ inch of oil, spoon in frothy egg mixture about double the size and the same shape as a chili. As the batter cooks, place a stuffed chili onto its center and cover with a layer of the egg mixture. (Don't worry if it doesn't seem to hold.)

As the bottom layer cooks, begin "rolling" the coating and chili with a spatula so that the batter begins to encircle the relleno. Once the egg is done, the entire chili should be coated.

Place rellenos on a platter, cover each with the warmed salsa and serve.

ENCHILADAS

2 cans enchilada sauce
1 dozen corn tortillas
1 lb. ground or shredded beef, cooked
Chopped onions
Chopped cilantro
¾ lb. Monterey Jack cheese, cut into 12 3x½-inch logs (grate the rest)
Salt and pepper
Pitted olives

You'll want to build these enchiladas to your taste. Prepare all ingredient and place on countertop.

Warm one can of enchilada sauce on stove. In lightly oiled frying pan (next to sauce), warm tortilla thoroughly. Using tongs, remove tortilla and drain, then place in warm sauce.

Make sure entire tortilla is covered with sauce, then place tortilla on working board. Placing fillings toward one edge to facilitate tight wrap, fill tortilla with meat, onions, cilantro and cheese logs. Salt and pepper to taste. Roll.

Place enchilada in rectangular casserole dish or on foil-covered cookie sheet. Repeat process with remaining tortillas. Use any leftover warmed sauce and contents of second can to cover enchiladas. Sprinkle grated cheese (and onions and cilantro, if desired) over top.

Place few olives on each enchilada and bake in 350 F oven about 15 minutes, or until cheese melts.

CARNE CALIENTE

4 yellow chilies, cleaned and coarsely chopped, with seeds
2 jalapeno chilies, cleaned an coarsely chopped, with seeds
2 lbs. round steak or other moderately priced beef

In 2-quart pan, bring water to boil, and blend in yellow and jalapeno chilis (with seeds). Let chilies boil about 15 minutes.

While chilies boil, cut meat into 1- to 1½-inch chunks, removing all fat. Add meat to boiling water (add more water if necessary). Let mixture simmer about 1 hour. Drain meat thoroughly and serve (with chilies if desired) over plain rice, Mexican rice or simply as meat entree.

Makes 4 servings.

Jalapeno perks up chicken

JALAPENO CHICKEN

6 chicken legs with thighs attached
2 tablespoons vegetable oil
1 pint dairy sour cream (2 cups)
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon black pepper
2 tablespoons all-purpose flour
1 garlic clove, minced
1 to 2 canned whole jalapeno peppers
1 large onion, sliced
1 (4-oz.) can diced green chilies

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Wash chicken; pat dry with paper towels. In a large heavy skillet, heat oil. Add chicken pieces, a few at a time, and brown on both sides. In a blender or in a food processor fitted with a steel blade, combine sour cream, salt, black pepper, flour, garlic and jalapeno peppers; process until smooth.

Arrange browned chicken in a shallow 3-quart casserole or 13 by 9-inch baking dish. Pour sour cream mixture over chicken. Top with onion and green chilies. Bake, uncovered, 40 minutes or until chicken is tender. Makes 6 servings.

Tillamook's citizens all say cheese

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

TILLAMOOK, Ore. — For nearly a century, Tillamook has been synonymous with Cheddar cheese.

In Tillamook County, a lush, green patchwork quilt of small dairy farms lying between the rain-soaked Coast Range and the Pacific Ocean, cheese is the biggest thing going.

Even the local high school's athletic teams are called the Cheesemakers, a word emblazoned on the school's football grandstand as one enters the south end of town.

Tillamook Natural Cheddar Cheese, the product of a 208-member dairy cooperative, has grown in popularity year by year since it was first made near the turn of the century.

Last year's sales by the Tillamook County Creamery Association totaled $75 million — triple the sales of 10 years ago. In 1984, the cheese makers — the real ones, not the high school team — sold 26.8 million pounds of Tillamook. Forty percent of the cheese was sold in Oregon and Washington, 40 percent in California and the rest in Alaska, Hawaii, Idaho, Montana and Arizona.

"The bottom line is that the farmers here produce the highest quality milk produced anywhere in the nation," insists Harold Schild, 47, assistant manager and official spokesman for the Tillamook County Creamery Association. "Excellent milk means excellent cheese."

The first cheese makers came to Tillamook (from the Indian word killimuck) County in the late 1800s, drawn by abundant water, lush grass and a mild climate — the sort of combination that makes for contented cows.

Many of the dairy farmers came from Switzerland, including Schild's grandfather. But one Canadian immigrant, Peter McIntosh, left his mark in 1894 when he began making cheese the way they did it in the village of Cheddar near Bristol, England.

Tillamook cheese was launched.

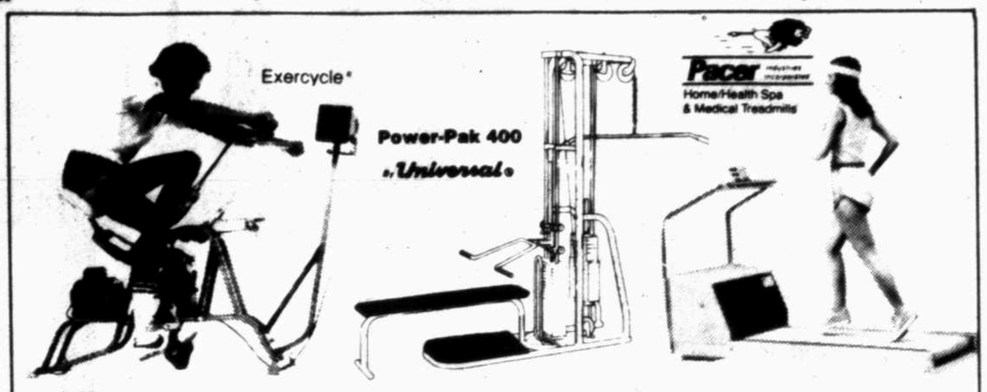

The Tillamook County Creamery Association was formed in 1909 as a quality-control organization for the 25 independent cheese factories that existed then in Tillamook County. By 1918 the cooperative had become a marketing agency as well. But it was not until 1968 that all of the factories consolidated operations under one roof — that of the co-op's big cheese factory that was built in 1949.

Many of the descendants of the pioneering families have sold out in the last 10 years as grandchildren decided on other endeavors. But about 30 of the original Swiss families continue to run dairies in the county.

About 50 of the co-op's members are dairymen from California, mostly of Dutch descent, who were squeezed out by urban development.

These days, these small family farms average 100 acres each with 100 to 120 cows. The average farmer nets between $30,000 and $40,000 a year after taking in nearly $250,000, half of which goes into feed costs.

Phil Lundberg, director of the a new chemical dependency unit under construction in West Midland, stands near the $3.4 million project. Schedule for a Sept. 23 opening, the new facility will offer alcohol and drug rehabilitation.

Permian Basin may have 25,000 drug abusers

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Midland-Odessa could have 25,000 drug and/or alcohol abusers, if the national average is applied to the area population, said the director of Clearview, a behavorial health center currently under construction in West Midland.

"The problem is those numbers could be increased here because of the large young population here," said Phillip Lundberg. "According to recent surveys, the percentage of users among high school students has increased."

Midland is a prime setting for drug abusers, he added.

"You have a lot of factors here that contribute," he said. "A young population, a lot of money, young professionals — factors that indicate the percentage of addicts is higher here than the national average."

Lundberg is busy trying to lay the groundwork for the new facility which is due to open Sept. 23.

"We're in the process of setting up programs and establishing our philosophies that we will follow," he said.

Unlike current treatment in institutional settings locally, Clearview will emphasize rehabilitation.

"Midland Memorial Hospital is doing some detoxification," he said. "This is just simply getting the alcohol or drug out of the blood system. 'Drying out' is the more common term for it."

With 50 staff members currently hired, Lundberg hopes to begin rehabilitating patients by first detoxifying them and then working with them closely in an average projected stay of 21 days.

"The detoxification will take place under the direction of our medical director, Dr. Joseph Wolpman," said Lundberg. He indicated that, for some patients, a substitute drug would be given when they were taken off the problem drug.

"In many cases, the patient would literally die if you took him straight off the drug," he said.

Evaluation follows the detoxification process, he said.

"There will be a 24-hour observation to make sure they are detoxified and then we will look at what kind of support and rehabilitation they need," he said. "In rehabilitation the patients will be in a classroom setting where they will discuss what addiction is, how they got to where they did, how to get out of it and we will also offer group and individual therapy, and physical therapy including volleyball and swimming."

"There are crafts such as working with modeling clay, music, art and other activities," he said. "One of the real problems is that people who have been abusing drugs do not know how to use their leisure time."

Still another problem occurs when the patient goes home.

"When you take a person out of an environment, get them sober and on the process of recovery and then send them back to the same environment, they still have the same friends and contacts," he said.

The problem is alleviated, suggested Lundberg, by encouraging the patient to get involved with a support group or church.

"Groups like Palmer Drug Abuse Program, Alcoholics Anonymous are great," he said. "I even anticipate a Cocaine Anonymous chapter being formed here in the future. We need one. Midland has a trememdous cocaine problem."

Support groups, however, are often not found in rural areas — another problem for a facility that will serve a large portion of West Texas.

"West Texas is so big," he said. "How do you effectively work with people who live in a small town 100 miles away?"

One method is the West Texas Rural Health Association.

"We're working closely with the WTRHA," he said. "I foresee a lot of phone counseling as well."

The WTRHA is a new group being formed in Odessa by health officials who are concerned about special problems plaguing rural areas.

"We also have an After Care follow-up program where we work with them while they are making the transition," he said.

Bills work for, against new CDU

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Recent legislation in Austin is working both for and against a new chemical dependency unit under construction here, according to director Phillip Lundberg.

Although a May 28 decision to disband the Texas Health Facilities Commission is creating bureaucratic headaches for the fledgling facility, other legislation requiring Texas insurance companies to provide equal coverage for alcohol and drug abuse treatment is opening doors for the center that it never anticipated.

"We're not real sure where we stand," said Lundberg, of the THFC decision. "The commission is not going to process any more applications and we're sort of caught in the middle."

Lundberg was referring to a certificate of need, filed with the THFC that could get hung up in the commission's final days. Although Clearview had an approved certificate of need already, projected construction costs fell short of actual costs, resulting in a a cost difference of more than 20 percent. The THFC mandates a new certificate of need any time there is a cost difference of more than 20 percent from the originally stated figure, said Lundberg.

"We appealed that certificate and asked the THFC to amend our original certificate at a hearing last month, but they told us we would still have to apply for another certificate," he said. "They wanted to see a reason for the cost difference."

While Lundberg states that construction will go ahead as scheduled and that the facility can open legally with the original certificate, Clearview still plans to play by the rules.

"We'll probably go ahead and file a new one just to show that we are acting in good faith," he said.

According to an article that appeared in the June 11 edition of the Dallas Morning News, the decision by the THFC to stop processing applications for certificates of need has in effect, resulted in a summerlong moratorium on health care construction and major purchases.

Until Aug. 31, Texas hospitals and nursing homes must obtain a certificate of need from the THFC to build, expand or purchase new equipment, said the article. But after state legislators decided that the commission should go out of business, the commission began dismissing all pending applications.

"Their suspending processing jeopardizes a great number of members of the Texas Hospital Association," said D. Dean Davis, an attorney representing the THA in a lawsuit against the THFC. "Some just need some very perfunctory ministerial things done. They (the commission) have just shut down everything — in effect, a 90-day moratorium."

While the question over certificates of need continues, the new chemical dependency unit is encouraged about new state legislation requiring insurance companies to help pay for alcohol and drug abuse treatment.

"Until now, most people's access to treatment was very limited because it was not covered by insur-

Pretrial motions, lack of jurors delay trial

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

The judge overruled all of Alexander's motions, clearing the way for the trial to begin this morning.

ODESSA — Consideration of a number of pretrial motions and problems obtaining a sufficient number of prospective jurors for Ector County's three district courts delayed the start of the trial of a 47-year-old former Gardendale man Tuesday.

Retired District Court Judge C.V. Milburn agreed to allow the jury panel called to be split between the courts of Judges Joe Connally and Tryon Lewis so trials scheduled to begin in their courts Tuesday could get under way. Prospective jurors not selected for jury duty in either court were instructed to return to 70th District Court this morning for voir dire in the indecency with a child-aggravated sexual assault trial of Donald LeClair.

LeClair's court-appointed attorney, Bill Alexander, spent the better part of Tuesday morning closeted with Milburn and prosecutors as he submitted motions seeking to quash eight indictments against LeClair.

The judge overruled all of Alexander's motions, clearing the way for the trial to begin this morning. Milburn also said he expects Alexander to seek a change of venue because of pretrial publicity which, Alexander contends, could prejudice LeClair's right to a fair and impartial trial.

LeClair first faced trial March 22 of this year but 70th District Court Judge Gene Ater declared a mistrial when it was learned a juror had been improperly seated.

LeClair has remained in the Ector County jail in lieu of bond since he was arrested.

City Council defers zoning action

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Faced with the legal question of spot zoning in the middle of Midland's largest residential neighborhood, the City Council Tuesday deferred action on a zone change request for a dentist office in the heart of a neighborhood. Instead of changing the zoning on the southwest corner as requested, the city staff will look at rezoning the other three corners of that intersection at Garfield and West Golf Course Road.

About 131 households had signed a petition to protest the zone change to PD, planned district for an office development, which had been requested by Dr. Curtis Nicholson and Dr. Mike Courter, both dentists. However, numerous other neighbors, including several adjacent to the tract proposed for the dentist office, supported the change during a public hearing before the council.

William Smith, an attorney protesting the zone change, pointed out the illegality of allowing spot zoning. "To change one lot in the heart of the 1F-1 area is spot zoning unless you can show adequate change in the surrounding area. This corner has always been a residence," he said of the southwest corner.

LATER, CITY Attorney David Reagan told the council, "I partially agree and I partially disagree. Smith said there was no change in conditions of the neighborhood that would justify the zone change. There has been a change in traffic. But I agree it's spot zoning." All the lots at the intersection would be affected by that zone change if they were not also changed to the same type of zoning.

On the northeast corner is a fire station and houses are located on the other two corners.

Jim Rhotenberry, an architect representing the dentists, said the office was designed to be 3,600 square feet and constructed of brick and shingles.

"Our overriding concern was to design a building to conform to the neighborhood in architecture. We moved the building into a corner

Council gives Hispanic chamber $15,000 grant

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

With $15,000 in its pocket, the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce has until October to design a plan for revitalizing East Midland if it wants more federal grant money allocated by the Midland City Council.

During the council's regular meeting Tuesday in City Hall, the $15,000 grant from Community Development Block Grant funds was released to Hispanic chamber representatives. In other action the council also adopted changes in an ordinance to strengthen regulation of circuses and carnivals and rejected a proposed change to the ordinance governing recreational vehicles to allow future discussion of more recommendations.

An Economic Development Task Force consisting of numerous city leaders has been formed to study the eastside, said Maria Antonieta Soto, first vice president of the Hispanic Chamber. "We plan to come back in October and report to you the results of our study. If, in your opinion, we should continue ahead with the project, we would hope that you would grant us at that time additional funding," she said.

About two months ago, the council approved the grant contingent upon the chamber getting approval and assistance from county commissioners. Ms. Soto presented a resolution from the commissioners endorsing the proposal.

"This resolution is all you got out of the county?" asked Councilman David Godfrey.

"Yes," replied Ms. Soto. "But I hope if the city gives us the $15,000 it would be an incentive for the county."

Much of the $15,000 probably will be used to hire an outside consultant, she said. Taking an Urban Land Institute study of the area in 1980 as the basis for its work, the task force will decide what needs to be done with the area.

"We want to improve the retail area and attract some industry favorable to the area," she said.

Sheriff's deputies continue search for armed suspect who escaped

From Staff Reports

Midland Sheriff's deputies continued their search today for an armed felony suspect whom they chased through parts of southeast Midland Tuesday night before he escaped after abandoning his vehicle and running into a house, reports said.

Sheriff's deputies were trying to serve a warrant in the 2200 block of South Baird when the chase began about 8 p.m. The man, whose name and alleged crime were not released by the Sheriff's Office, was chased in his blue Datsun pickup to the 500 block of South Terrell, where he ran into a house and apparently escaped out the back. His pickup was impounded, according to reports.

In other law-enforcement reports, a 38-year-old Midland man was being held in city jail this morning after allegedly taking a shot at an employee of the Four Seasons bar, 3421 W. Wall, at about 2:30 a.m. today, according to police reports.

The man, who was expected to be charged with aggravated assault later today, apparently became angry after a waitress refused to serve him any more drinks. According to witnesses, he created a disturbance and was told to leave. He then backed his pickup up the open door of the bar and spun his wheels, throwing gravel and dirt through the door. Later, he was seen outside the bar, and when Four Seasons employee Bruce Riley stepped outside, the man took a shot at him with a rifle, but missed. He was later taken into custody by police, reports said.

In other police reports, a rash of auto burglaries struck northwest Midland between Monday night and Tuesday morning, including four reported in the parking lot of the Treemont Apartments, 5216 Tremont.

Herb Henderson of Treemont reported the loss of a $245 radar detector from a 1984 Oldsmobile Royale belonging to Vendage Petroleum sometime between 5 p.m. Monday and 8:30 a.m. Tuesday. The passenger window was broken out, reports said.

Brian Wheeler of Treemont reported a $200 radar detector, a $180 stereo and other items worth a total of $460 were taken from his 1984 GMC pickup sometime between midnight and 7 a.m. Tuesday. The vent window on the driver's side was broken out, reports said.

Robert Westmoreland of Odessa reported the loss of a $250 radar detector from a 1984 Chevrolet Impala belonging to B.J. Tighten Co., also of Odessa. The car was parked at Treemont Apartments, and was burglarized sometime between 10 p.m. Monday and 7:30 a.m. Tuesday, reports said.

Bruce Belson of Treemont reported the loss of $400 in stereo equipment from his 1979 Monte

Gramm nominates prosecutor from Fort Worth as U.S. attorney

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Fort Worth prosecutor who says he wants to concentrate on the "burgeoning" drug traffic in the Dallas-Fort Worth area has been nominated by Republican Texas Sen. Phil Gramm to be U.S. Attorney for the Northern District of Texas.

Marvin Collins, 42, has been assistant district attorney in Tarrant County since 1983. He served as a district judge for one year after being appointed by Republican then-Gov. Bill Clements, but was unable to win the seat in the 1982 election and returned to the Tarrant DA's office.

Collins replaces James Rolfe, who is not seeking reappointment to the four-year job.

Rolfe created a stir last month — after he had said he would not seek reappointment — when he wrote a letter to a federal judge in Washington seeking leniency for his friend, Dallas stockbroker Billy Bob Harris, who had pleaded guilty to charges connected with an insider trading scheme that also involved former Deputy Secretary of Defense Paul Thayer.

Collins declined to talk specifically about the Rolfe letter, but said, "The ethical standards in our office will be high."

When asked if he would ever send a letter to a federal judge about a case, Collins said, "probably not on behalf of a defendant."

The Justice Department disavowed Rolfe's letter. Harris and Thayer were sentenced to four years in prison.

Rolfe is leaving the job on Friday. Gramm said Collins would take office on Monday as an interim appointee of the federal judges in the district.

Gramm's nomination of Collins goes to the White House for approval, and then through Senate confirmation proceedings.

The Northern District covers 100 counties and includes Dallas, Fort Worth, Lubbock, Amarillo, Abilene, San Angelo and Wichita Falls.

Collins said one of his first priorities in office will be to increase cooperation between state and federal law enforcement agencies, especially in the area of drug trafficking in the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

"The drug problem is burgeoning in that area. I don't think it has anything to do with lax law enforcement," he said. "I think it has to do with that being such a fast-growing area."

Collins said he does not want the office to let up on prosecution of "white collar" crimes, like that involving Harris and Thayer, but said, "I tend to have more interest in the traditional areas of law enforcement, like drugs."

IRS collects $5 million for AFDC

AUSTIN (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service has collected almost $5 million this year for Texas families with dependent children who have been unable to collect child support, Attorney General Jim Mattox says.

Mattox said Tuesday his department had received a $2,064,590 check from the IRS as the largest amount received by Texas in the IRS intercept program. The check makes a total thus far of almost $5 million.

Under the program, Mattox's office files notice with the IRS if a particular parent is delinquent in child support payments to a child that is supported by Aid to Families of Dependent Children (AFDC).

as far back as we could and kept parking to the rear as much as possible. The broad lawns in front would be heavily landscaped. It is designed to appear residential in character," Rhotenberry said.

PROPONENTS contended the lot isn't suitable for a residence, the one there now is abandoned and the office, as it is designed, is aesthetically preferable. Opponents charged the one zone change would set a precedent and more offices and retail would be allowed into the neighborhood. In addition, the dentist office would generate more traffic at an already busy intersection.

Ron Roetschke, who at 1609 N. Garfield is next door to the abandoned house on the lot, said he was concerned about the type of people who had lived in that house, both legally and illegally. "This is the only decent thing I've seen come up," he said of the architectural plans.

Jim Brown, 1606 N. Garfield, said because of its location at that busy intersection, he couldn't see the tract being purchased for a residence.

Mary Berry, daughter of Bebe Fisher, grew up in the family residence at 1608 N. Garfield. "That lot has never been becoming to the neighborhood. People are failing to realize that nothing can be done with it. I can't see that if a dentist office goes in there then a shopping center would go up."

Smith, 2301 Boyd, argued if the zoning is changed on that corner lot, then a vacant lot adjacent to it will be next. He pointed to an advertisement by Carriage Company in which they had listed the lot on North Sparks that backs onto the Garfield lot as being listed in the commercial section. A Realtor at that firm told Smith if the Garfield lot goes commercial, there's "no problem with this next one going commercial," the lawyer related.

ALSO SPEAKING for the opposing side was Lisa Gray, 1904 Sparks. She, too, voiced concern about the rezoning spreading through the neighborhood. "Who's going to stop other houses from being torn down for the right price?"

The people who bought houses in the area thought they were buying into a residential neighborhood, she said, adding the zone change would change that environment.

Shirley Trimble and her family have lived at 1419 Sparks since 1964. The proposed office "is a beautiful thing and would look nice. But I remember Louisiana and Michigan streets. After they became one-way, the houses are all slowly becoming doctors' office. If we had a guarantee that this would be the only thing it wouldn't be so bad."

In defense, Nicholson said the zoning being requested is the most restrictive in the city "to protect myself and the neighbors."

But the council was concerned about the spot zoning issue.

"A lot in this situation (intersection of two arterial streets) is very unique," said Mayor G. Thane Akins. "It requires unique treatment. It's not the same as Golf Course and Lanham or any other intersection."

Richard Hennessy, director of planning and community development, said it wouldn't be spot zoning if the zoning were changed on all four corners.

Councilwoman Oralia Corrales at first suggested the proposal be denied on the basis of neighborhood objection. "I think we should protect the neighborhood," she said.

However, the motion to send the request back to the Planning Department to study rezoning all four corners at that intersection was approved on a unanimous vote.

Passed on first reading was an ordinance requiring a $500 bond from any applicant bringing a circus, carnival or menagerie to Midland. Any employee with those operations must request a license from the Police Department and shall submit to fingerprinting and photographs.

Complaining about the noise of carnivals and the character of the employees was Wayne Weekes, 4315 W. Storey Ave. He pointed out that when a carnival set up near his house recently not one of the residents had received a notice.

"This is a family neighborhood; it's not a lot on the edge of town," Weekes said. "I put up with those people (circus) for almost three weeks. Those people had no business in a neighborhood. I put up with the noise and people running up and down the alleys."

Mayor G. Thane Akins said before another circus is allowed on that spot on North Midland Drive again, "it'll be in my back yard."

An ordinance changing regulations of recreational vehicles parked in front of a house died on the second reading.

"My position has consistently been if this ordinance is passed it will erode our ability to regulate obstructions in the front yard," said City Attorney David Reagan. "It hampers the ability of firefighters to get into a burning building and it hampers police."

By allowing RVs of certain lengths to be parked in a driveway it would open the door for other long vehicles, such as dump trucks, he argued.

A committee of RV owners and council members will study a proposal by Councilman Bart Hotchkiss which deals with the length of the vehicle from the city right of way, and not just the vehicle's length.

The council voted to allow beer and wine in Centennial Plaza and gatherings of up to 1,000 persons, but only with permits granted by the council. Centennial Plaza will be completed for July Fourth activities and a pre-dedication party is planned in the Plaza by the Jaycees. Getting the Plaza designed and built was a project of the Jaycees.

Parks and Recreation Director George Logan said, "We don't want brown-baggers bringing their lunch (to the downtown park) and enjoying a beer with it at lunchtime."

The council also granted a taxicab franchise to Yellow Checker Cab Co., denied a sidewalk variance to R.V. Vivion and agreed to close Texas Avenue between Colorado and Main Streets July 5 for Centennial activities.

Sims' brush control bill praised by TDA

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A bill by Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, creating the Texas Brush Control Program has been praised by a Texas Department of Agriculture official, who says the measure "could allow not only improvement of range productivity...but could also directly increase beneficial runoff or aquifer recharge."

Sims' SB 1083 establishes a statewide brush control management program, to be administered through the Soil and Water Conservation Board and districts under the board's jurisdicition.

The board would designate "critical areas" where brush infestation is particularly serious and water needs are great. A management plan, including methods approved for eradication of brush, would be adopted, and landowners wishing to participate would be eligible for assistance through state cost-sharing.

"The state office of the U.S. Soil and Conservation Service estimates that as many as three trillion gallons of water every year may be lost to unwanted scrub brush and mesquite in Texas," said Bob Kind, director of TDA's office of natural resources. "The conservation service lists almost 100 million acres as excessively brushy, and this degradation of formerly productive range grasslands will not be reversed without a serious commitment to improvement by the state as well as property owners."

Sims has said the spread of mesquite and salt cedar in West Texas has resulted in a loss of productivity on the land, with the mesquite consuming three-and-a-half times the amount of water consumed by the grass it replaced.

A legislative analysis of the bill states that mesquite and salt cedar cover "vast amounts of acreage" which was native grassland little more than a century ago.

"In several areas of the state, the Sims bill could allow not only improvement of range productivity and reduce damaging soil erosion, but could also directly increase beneficial runoff or aquifer recharge within a given watershed."

The bill was approved by the Legislature in late May.

ance," said Lundberg.

The outlook is healthy, he indicated.

"We're projecting in excess of 50 percent occupancy by the end of the year and 75 percent by the same time next year," he said.

The $3.4 million facility, jointly under construction by Midland Memorial Hospital and two Arizona firms, is located west of Thomason off Loop 250 on 10 acres of land donated by the Scharbaurer family. The 36,500-square-foot center is under the administration of Midland Camelback Samaritan Group Inc., an organization formed from the three health groups involved in the project: MMH, Camelback Hospitals of Scottsdale, Ariz., and Samaritan Health Service of Phoenix, Ariz.

The center's board was announced one month ago. Members include: Ray Branson, president of MMH; J. Coley Cowden, chairman of the Palmer Drug Abuse Progam (PDAP); Paul Rae, oil company executive and United Way of Midland board member; Steve Thompson, an insurance executive and youth rehabilitation volunteer; Dr. Daniel Vestal, pastor of First Baptist Church and Donnette Williams of Families All Coming Together (FACT), a local support group.

Scheduled opening date is Sept. 23, according to Lundberg.

Shelia Griffith, 1602 E. Magnolia, reported the burglary of her home sometime between Saturday and Monday. Taken were a $325 gold watch, a $150 gold necklace and $70 in currency, according to reports.

A 32-year-old Midland man was arrested about 8 p.m. Tuesday after he allegedly took some items from a storeroom at J.C. Penney's in Midland Park Mall, 4511 N. Midkiff. According to reports, the man was seen taking the items from the storeroom, ran away from the security guards and went into Bennigan's restaurant, across the parking lot from the store. He was arrested in Bennigan's by police, reports said.

Negligence ruled out in boy's death

DALLAS (AP) — A committee of Boy Scout officials say Scout leaders didn't realize the danger of a "human wall" stunt in which a 13-year-old Plano boy was killed.

Scout officials also said they have canceled a performance of the stunt at the national jamboree next month.

But the committee concluded a two-week investigation into the May 18 accident that claimed the life of Kenneth Krawczyk by ruling out any negligence on the part of Scout leaders supervising the stunt.

"At the time, they felt like they had taken extensive safety precautions," said Bill Gamble, executive director of the Circle 10 council.

The stunt, which required 30 Scouts to climb onto 10 ladders to form a "human wall," was developed by Scout leaders from a photograph of Italian firefighters.

Gamble said the leaders didn't realize how dangerous it could be.

Odessa allows street beautification

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The City Council Tuesday granted InterFirst Bank of Odessa permission to beautify the sidewalk area in front of the bank.

In recommending the city enter into a street beautification agreement with the bank, Public Works Director Bobby Tucker said InterFirst Bank has had flush sidewalk planters with trees for several years.

The bank is seeking permission, he said, to enlarge the openings to allow for the planting of larger trees in the planters. Bank plans call for the eight tree wells to be covered with a flush grate to minimize disruption of pedestrian traffic, Tucker told council members.

Noting that the proposed agreement is comparable to others used in the central business district in the past, Tucker said it requires the bank to indemnify and hold the city harmless and that the bank will bear the full cost of installation and maintenance, as well for the subsequent removal of the trees and return of sidewalk areas to their previous condition should it ever become necessary.

Scheduled meetings also will take place at 8 p.m. June 17, 19, 24 and 26.

AG office probing group's claims

DALLAS (AP) — A group claiming it will stage a parade in honor of Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday, is under investigation by the attorney general's office because no such event has been planeed.

Assistant Attorny General Steve Gardner said his office has had several complaints concerning Rainbow Inc., a group that apparently is using the names of famous black people to solicit money it claims to need to have a parade in Dallas honoring King.

White signs anti-child abuse bills at nursery

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White has signed into law two bills designed to help Texas communities fight child abuse and neglect.

"These two bills will safeguard the physical and emotional well-being of the children in Texas," White said Tuesday in a ceremony held in the shade of a tree on the playground of the Austin Community Nursery School.

The governor was assisted by Christina Flores, a 3-year-old student.

After the signing she threw her arms around the governor's neck and hugged him tight.

Later, at White's urging, the little girl laboriously wrote "Christi" under White's name at the bottom of a measure establishing a Children's Trust Fund. The trust fund in the state treasury would provide grants to community groups for child abuse and neglect prevention programs.

The fund would be financed through an increase in marriage license fees, from $7.50 to $25. The fund would get $12.50 out of each license and counties would get $5 for issuing the license.

MC to begin program in audio technology

From Staff Reports

A program in audio technology, designed to train students in music recording skills for studio and concert work, will be instituted at Midland College this fall.

The program, an outgrowth of the Commercial Music Program initiated by MC three years ago, is "a rather unusual program in that it combines studies in the technical area of electronics," according to MC President Dr. Jess Parrish. "We found a number of the students were leaning more toward working in the recording aspect of commercial music than toward performance. We also noted that there was a shortage of personnel specifically trained in this aspect of commercial music."

Participants in the program will study such topics as recording engineering, studio equipment maintenance, studio management, recording production and production of audio for video. Upon completion, students will receive an associate of applied science degree.

A recording studio complete with eight-track recorder, mixing console, stereo graphic equalizers, turntables, speakers, synthesizers and microcomposer is available for student use. Monies also may be available to purchase additional equipment.

"In order to be successful, students need to combine a knowledge of music with a sound basis in electronics, lighting and business," Parrish said.

"Before starting this new program, we surveyed recording firms in several states to determine the need for such trained employees and found there was strong support for such a program, along with a lot of enthusiasm," said Parrish. "We also established a local Audio Technology Advisory Committee, which helped us define the needs and the skills necessary."

Members of the advisory committee include Bob Bailey, The Production Center, Odessa; Mike Fitzgerald, Fitzco Sound Inc., Midland; Charlie Debenport, Odessa; and Nick Carlton, No Mountain Recording Studio, Midland.

Report: Staff worked on Juneteenth

Edwards says he didn't force staff to help with event

HOUSTON (AP) — Two former employees of state Rep. Al Edwards say they spent most of their job time working on events to promote Juneteenth festivities, according to a published report.

But Edwards, D-Houston, said involvement in community activities like Juneteenth is expected of public officials and that he never compelled staff members to help with such events, The Houston Post reported in a copyright article published Tuesday.

The two former employees — Rose Nowotny and Erin Flynn — said they worked in Edwards' Capitol office until May, when they were fired for complaining about not receiving promised raises.

Ms. Nowotny was an administrative aide for four months, and Ms. Flynn was a secretary with the lawmaker for six weeks.

The women said that while working for the four-term legislator, they wrote letters, press releases and compiled brochures to promote Juneteenth U.S.A., a non-profit organization headed by Edwards.

In 1979, the Legislature passed Edwards' bill making June 19 a state holiday to commemorate tne freeing of all Texas slaves. President Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation did not take effect in Texas until June 19, 1865, when an Army general issued the order after landing at Galveston Bay.

"Juneteenth U.S.A. is a tax-exempt organization. If elected officials were not involved in community activities, I think we'd be poor excuses for state officials."
— State Rep. Al Edwards

The state holiday, Emancipation Day, is commonly called Juneteenth.

Some of the festivities slated to commemorate Juneteenth this year are a June 1 "Salute to Al Edwards" at an old theater that the legislator wants to convert into a black heritage museum; a gospel festival at Houston's Miller Outdoor Theatre on Tuesday and Wednesday; and an Al Edwards Family Day Celebration at the Astroarena on June 22.

"Juneteenth U.S.A. is a tax-exempt organization. If elected officials were not involved in community activities, I think we'd be poor excuses for state officials," Edwards said.

Edwards said that if any if his staff members worked on Juneteenth festivities, it was on a voluntary basis and on their own time.

"I don't tell my staff who to volunteer for," the lawmaker said.

But Ms. Notwotny said the work was not voluntary.

"I didn't have that much choice — it was work that was allocated to me," she said. "If I hadn't been on salary, I wouldn't have done it."

She said she spent two days in Houston helping Edwards arrange to rent the Astroarena for the family day and also spent work time completing three grant requests to help fund the gospel festival and to pay a Juneteenth U.S.A. staff.

Ms. Flynn said she spent at least half of her work time on Juneteenth-related assignments, such as press releases, correspondence and brochures.

"What surprised me was that there wasn't much political work. There was very little focus on legislation at all," Ms. Flynn said.

The Post also reported that promotional materials and grant applications indicate Juneteenth U.S.A. uses the phone number of Edwards' district headquarters in Houston.

Edwards said work for Juneteenth is done in a room adjacent to the headquarters and that the space was donated by his landlord. He said the telephone number and address will only be used for Juneteenth until a permanent headquarters can be set up at the proposed heritage museum.

Ben Florey, of the Travis County District Attorney's Public Integrity Unit, told the Associated Press his office "has received information in regard to the allegations in the (Post) story, and we are reviewing the information."

Florey, whose division investigates allegations of misconduct among public officials, declined to comment further on the story.

Two men to be sentenced for trying to smuggle money

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Two men, including an adviser to a right-wing Salvadoran leader, were to go before a federal judge today for sentencing on charges of trying to smuggle nearly $6 million out of the country.

Francisco Guirola Beeche and Oscar Rodriguez Feo have relinquished their claim to the $5.9 million confiscated Feb. 6 at Kleberg County airport in Kingsville as the men were preparing to leave the country, authorities said.

On April 29, Rodriguez pleaded guilty to conspiring to transport more than $10,000 out of the country without reporting it to U.S. Customs Service officials. Guirola pleaded no contest to the conspiracy charge.

U.S. District Judge Hayden Head Jr. was to decide today whether to accept a plea-bargain arrangement made with federal prosecutors.

If Head accepted the pleas, charges against a third man, Miami pilot Gus Maestrales, were to be dropped and his T-39 Saberliner plane returned, attorneys said.

Maestrales claimed he did not know the men were carrying the money and that Guirola, of El Salvador and Albuquerque, N.M., and Rodriguez, of Miami, were merely his passengers.

Felony theft nets woman probation

From Staff Reports

A 51-year-old Midland grandmother convicted May 16 of felony theft was sentenced Tuesday to six years probation by 238th District Court Judge Vann Culp, who also ordered her to pay $3,200 in restitution.

Paula Lovett's sentencing had been delayed three weeks because she was hospitalized with symptoms of a heart attack. Despite her three days in the intensive-care unit at Midland Memorial Hospital, doctors still aren't sure what's wrong with her heart, Mrs. Lovett said Tuesday. But she thinks her trial for the theft of $880 from the Midland Women's Clinic affected her health, especially since her husband has been unable to work until recently.

"We're on the verge of losing our home," she said. "It was more than my system was able to handle, I suppose."

Mrs. Lovett, of rural Midland, was convicted by a seven-man, five-woman jury of stealing money by pocketing cash payments from patients in December 1983, and disguising the thefts with false computer entries. Although the amount she was convicted for was only $880, evidence gathered by the Midland County District Attorney's Office shows she may have taken more than $3,000, which explains the higher restitution figure.

The defense had claimed the prosecution's evidence was circumstantial, since no one had seen Mrs. Lovett actually making false computer entries. But four doctors and 13 employees of the Midland Women's Clinic, 2009 W. Wall, had testified she was the only one trained to post accounts received on the computer.

Bess Pruitt, administrative coordinator for the clinic, testified she first became suspicious when a patient whom the computer listed as delinquent in her payment showed up with a cash receipt. When Mrs. Lovett left for a vaction in April 1984, an investigation was conducted which turned up "more than 100" erroneous computer entries, prosecution witnesses testified.

After the jury returned its verdict, defense attorney Jim Osborn of Odessa made a motion asking Culp to assess punishment. He was due to sentence her the following week, but her heart ailment intervened.

Allocation of job-training funds announced

AUSTIN BUREAU

AUSTIN — Gov. Mark White has announced the allocation of $1,607,153 to counties in the Permian Basin region, including Midland County, to provide job training and other services to teen-agers and adults.

Also, $765,707 will be provided specifically for summer youth employment programs, according to the governor's office.

The funds are part of $103,949,667 being provided to the state's 34 local service delivery areas for job training programs under the Job Training Partnership Act, White said.

"The Job Training Partnership Act is a valuable mechanism that brings the public and private sectors together to train Texans for productive employment and economic self-sufficiency," said White.

Under the act, local officials work with private industry councils composed of business and community representatives to design and implement job training programs tailored to meet the needs of area residents.

Other counties in the region to receive funds are Andrews, Borden, Crane, Dawson, Ector, Gaines, Glasscock, Howard, Loving, Martin, Pecos, Reeves, Terrell, Upton, Ward and Winkler.

Navy: Spy damage 'not catastrophic'

WASHINGTON (AP) — As soon as John A. Walker Jr. was arrested in suburban Rockville, Md., and charged with espionage, the Navy began its detective work, trying to answer the question, "How much were we hurt?"

Within hours, Navy investigators were poring through Walker's service records, checking his duty stations and assignments and beginning the long process of interviewing his neighbors and friends.

As more arrests followed in the widening ring, Rear Adm. John L. Butts, director of naval intelligence, was appointed to head a 35-member board charged with coordinating the activities of investigators and producing a damage assessment.

Working late into the night behind locked doors on the Pentagon's top floor, the panel sifted through the reports of investigators, talked with Navy experts on tactics and operations, and came up with an answer for top Pentagon officials to the question of how much damage was done.

That answer, provided Tuesday by Adm. James Watkins, chief of naval operations, was "serious" but "not catastrophic." Navy Secretary John Lehman said that while U.S. ships and weapons were safe, overcoming the security loss would cost "many millions of dollars."

The damage assessment given at a Pentagon news conference capped three weeks of intense work by investigators.

They began their answer on the worst case assumption, Watkins said.

"We always consider the worst case," he said. That means the service figured that any sensitive information that could have been passed was actually given to the Soviets.

One of the three others charged with Walker faced a preliminary hearing in U.S. District Court in Norfolk, Va., today. The hearing was to determine whether there is probable cause to hold Arthur Walker, John's brother who worked at a defense contracting company after retiring from the Navy, and whether bond should be set, prosecutors said.

John Walker has been jailed without bond in Baltimore since his May 20 arrest in rural Maryland. His son, Navy seaman Michael L. Walker, has also have been charged with espionage in the theft of classified documents. Another suspect, Jerry A. Whitworth, was arrested in California June 3.

For the Pentagon investigators, the chief fear involved missile-firing submarines, the "boomers" that form the heart of America's nuclear arsenal.

Superior American technology has made the giant boats invulnerable to Soviet detection — and thus attack — and Walker's service aboard two subs in the 1960s, along with his tour at an onshore sub communications facility, raised concern that the subs might have become more vulnerable.

Watkins laid that fear to rest. The U.S. subs, he said, "are still 100 percent survivable," which means they couldn't be knocked out by a Soviet nuclear strike. "There is no indication that the Soviets have broken the code of how to detect" U.S. subs, he said.

There were two main investigations, one involving the FBI and the Defense Intelligence Service and the other run by the Office of Naval Intelligence, according to Navy officers speaking on condition they not be named.

The first was aimed at determining the extent of the spy ring, and the second tried to find out the possible worth to the Soviets of the compromised information, the officers said.

The ONI operation, coordinated from the Pentagon's fifth floor, involved questioning of former neighbors and acquaintances of Walker and the other three men arrested, according to Navy officers, speaking on condition they not be named.

It also involved combing through duty records where the men were stationed to coordinate that information with the Navy's extensive records of ship movements and communications, the officials said.

The investigation also tried to determine why the spy ring had gone undetected as long as it apparently had — 18 years or more, according to officials. The conclusion was that Walker did not demonstrate any behavior which would have aroused suspicions among his Navy colleagues, the officers said.

The worst damage, Watkins said, involved communications, including codes and the design and operation of some sophisticated equipment. Much of that information is "perishable," which is the Pentagon's term for information that changes often enough so that it is not particularly valuable.

'Can-do' committee negotiates 1986 budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — A "can-do" conference committee on the budget is off to a running start on resolving House and Senate differences over the 1986 budget, but new, higher deficit projections and calls for tax increases from Democrats are complicating the efforts.

The House-Senate negotiating panel met Tuesday for the first time and after less than an hour of opening speeches began to clear away a thick underbrush of minor differences, postponing until later major differences on Social Security and defense spending.

At the opening session, negotiators agreed overwhelmingly to go along with a House decision to hire an additional 800 agents for the U.S. Customs Service to help the government intercept drug smugglers.

The move would cost taxpayers $100 million next year above the level approved by the Republican-led Senate, and a total of $350 million more over the next three years. But sponsors argued that fees and penalties brought in by the improved enforcement resulting from the extra agents would offset the higher initial costs.

In another budget agreement, the House-Senate panel voted to adhere to the Senate plan calling for roughly $100 million more in spending next year on various space programs than under the House budget.

But they split the difference for the next two years — voting to allow space spending to rise with inflation in 1987, as under the Senate plan, and embracing the House's increase of half the rate of inflation for 1988.

The tone of the first session was upbeat, with leaders of both parties calling for bipartisan agreement.

"Yes, there are differences, but that's what conference committees are for," said Rep. William H. Gray III, D-Pa., chairman of the House Budget Committee.

And Rep. Delbert Latta of Ohio, leader of the House Republican negotiators, told the panel: "We can be a 'can-do' or a 'can't do' conference. The American people want us to be a 'can-do' conference."

At the same time, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., indicated for the first time that House Democrats, while unwilling to bow to the Senate on freezing Social Security benefits, are ready to agree to a variety of cuts and terminations in other domestic programs in an effort to reach an overall compromise with the Senate.

He told reporters the cuts could come from "somewhere in the $90 to $100 billion that we give back to the cities and the towns," including possible elimination of Urban Development Action Grants, as the Senate budget advocates.

The conference committee was to reconvene again today to continue working on minor differnces, with leaders voicing optimism that a final compromise could be produced by the Fourth of July recess.

Former FBI agent tells his side of spy story

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Fired FBI agent Richard W. Miller, testifying against two Russians accused with him of espionage, said his career was a shambles and his marriage on the rocks when he met a Soviet woman who became his lover.

Miller, the first FBI agent accused of spying, insisted Tuesday on the witness stand that he has yearned to tell his side of the story ever since his arrest last year, but that his attorneys instructed him not to testify.

Miller at first refused to testify on constitutional grounds of self-incrimination, but U.S. District Judge David Kenyon signed an order granting him immunity so his testimony cannot be used in his own trial later.

The 48-year-old former agent, after proclaiming, "I never had anything to hide," testified that he was obese, his marriage was in trouble, he had been excommunicated from his church and his career was a shambles when he met Svetlana Ogorodnikov, 35, and her husband, Nikolay, 52.

According to previous testimony, it was during this time that Miller met Mrs. Ogorodnikov and began a love affair prosecutors claim led to espionage.

The Ogorodnikovs are in the seventh week of their espionage trial. The Russian couple are alleged to have conspired with Miller to pass classified documents to the Soviet Union. Miller faces trial for the same charges later. All three face life sentences.

In his first hour on the stand, Miller answered government questions designed to portray him as a vulnerable target for Soviet recruitment as a spy.

He said he was threatened early last year with dismissal from the FBI job he had held for 20 years if he didn't reduce his 227-pound bulk.

"I've had to struggle with my weight as long as I can remember," said Miller, 5-foot-11, who is now even heavier than when he was arrested in October 1984. Under FBI standards, Miller said, he should have weighed 193 pounds.

Nine of twelve charges of child molestation were dropped Tuesday in Los Angeles against Virginia McMartin, founder of the Virginia McMartin Pre-School in Manhattan Beach, Calif., shown here in an early court appearance in 1984.

Charges dropped when children fail to testify

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A judge dismissed 64 of the 208 charges in the McMartin Pre-School molestation case after prosecutors abruptly rested their case in a preliminary hearing to avoid subjecting more youngsters to cross-examination.

"The case by far is not over — we intend to proceed to trial based on the strength of the evidence that we have produced thus far," said the chief prosecutor, Deputy District Attorney Lael Rubin.

The prosecution's move came Tuesday after Muncipal Court Judge Aviva Bobb ruled that child witnesses would not be allowed to testify over closed-circuit television, as permitted by a state law enacted after the hearing began.

"This is hardly fatal to your case," Ms. Bobb told prosecutors.

"I move to dismiss each and every count to which named plaintiffs have not testified," Ms. Bobb said as she threw out nine of the 12 charges against school founder Virginia McMartin, 77; all but one of the 14 counts against her grandaughter, Peggy Ann Buckey, 29; and 42 of 67 charges against Mrs. McMartin's granddaughter, Peggy McMartin Buckey, 58.

Ms. Bobb said she would consider dismissing additional charges today against the other four defendants: Raymond Buckey, 27, Mrs. McMartin's grandson, who had been charged with 97 counts; Betty Raidor, 64, charged with 32 counts; Babette Spitler, 36, charged with 22 counts; and Mary Ann Jackson, 56, charged with 15 counts.

Thirteen youngsters have testified in open court since the preliminary hearing began 10 months ago, and Ms. Bobb said she didn't want to "change the rules in the middle of the hearing."

Six of the seven defense attorneys quickly followed the prosecution in resting their cases, then sought to have charges against their clients dismissed.

Ms. Rubin said she was "very, very disappointed and angry because we believe the judge's ruling is dead wrong on the law. And as a result of that we intend to appeal."

She said prosecutors declined to call six more youngsters to the witness stand unless they could testify over closed-circuit television, out of the presence of the defendants.

"We have a duty and a responsibility under the law to protect and prevent children from psychological harm," Ms. Rubin.

She said she decided to rest the case largely "as a result of a judicial system that is not equipped to properly protect childrn."

The children's testimony produced allegations of rape, sodomy and "naked games" during which children were photographed. The young witnesses testified they were forced to watch animals being butchered to frighten them into silence.

NATION IN BRIEF

Von Bulow will visit 'Sunny' in hospital

NEW YORK (AP) — Claus von Bulow, acquitted this week of charges of trying to kill his wife, says he plans to visit the comatose woman for the first time in four years as a gesture of his love for her, and does not intend to divorce her.

Asked by the New York Post if he would divorce Martha "Sunny" von Bulow and marry his companion, Andrea Reynolds, von Bulow replied: "No. I think that would be in bad taste. No, I feel emotionally very strongly about Sunny."

Von Bulow, 58, was found innocent in Rhode Island Superior Court on Monday of twice attempting to murder the heiress by giving her injections of insulin.

Mrs. von Bulow, 53, remains in a coma at Presbyterian Hospital, where von Bulow told the Post he intends to visit her. "I feel that a person whom you've loved...you keep your own photographic memories of happy moments," von Bulow said of her.

Children naturalized

SEATTLE (AP) — Ten children adopted in Peru by a Roman Catholic missionary priest have become U.S. citizens in a "moving and impressive" ceremony the priest says will be part of a day they'll never forget.

The Rev. John Branche, who took in 35 orphaned or abandoned children during his 13 years as a missionary in South America and adopted 14 of them, led the 10 children on Tuesday to the federal courthouse in Tacoma for the ceremony.

Branche, who went to Peru in 1969, said from his home near Puyallup, 30 miles south of Seattle, that having the children naturalized also fulfilled a promise he made to the first child he took in, now 21.

"I have kept my word to give them honor and honorableness," he said. "I always said to them, 'You are a human being and a child of God, whatever else you are doesn't matter after that.'

"The ceremony was very moving and impressive. I wanted it to be a day they would always remember."

Branche said he began taking care of children in Peru when he was asked by another priest in 1970 to care for a 5-year-old shepherd boy who had run away from a man who had abused him. He adopted the 14 children in Lima in 1980.

Pizza is reading bribe

WASHINGTON (AP) — Education Secretary William J. Bennett says he ascribes to what Aristotle once said: learning should be for its own sake. But Bennett's making an exception for a new program to encourage children to read by plying them with free pizza.

"Aristotle never had a pizza and I think it's entirely possible that the legacy Aristotle passed on might have been expanded had he had a pizza," Bennett quipped Tuesday.

The former philosophy professor lent his hearty endorsement to the reading incentive program that Pizza Hut Inc. is launching nationwide this fall.

The chain of 4,500 restaurants expects to give away $30 million to $100 million in pizza to an estimated 7.5 million school children in the program called "BOOKIT!" that starts this October, according to company spokesman Mike Jenkins.

Unusual film chronicles Andropov's life

Soviets to televise documentary on leader's birthday

MOSCOW (AP) — A new documentary film about the late President Yuri V. Andropov portrays the former chief of the KGB secret police as a refined man who wrote poetry to his wife and a committed Communist who fought imperialism.

"Y.V. Andropov, Pages of a Life," publicly screened for the first time Tuesday night, chronicles Andropov's life in an unusually personal manner, including interviews with his family and visits to his country "dacha" and Moscow apartment.

Andropov's role as Soviet ambassador to Hungary during the 1956 uprising there was recalled by Hungarian Communist Party leader Janos Kadar, who formed a counter-government that with Soviet troops eventually suppressed the anti-Stalinist revolt.

Andropov gave "extraordinarily important" support to Hungarian Communists during the "most difficult days of our nation," Kadar said.

Photographs of bayoneted bodies and bullet-riddled vehicles and street signs accompanied the interview with Kadar.

One Soviet said after the screening that such pictures of the uprising had never been shown in the Soviet Union before.

Andropov, who succeeded Leonid Brezhnev as Soviet leader in November 1982, died in February 1984. He was succeeded by Konstantin U. Chernenko, who died in March.

The documentary wove together film clips from Andropov's speeches during his 15-month tenure as Soviet leader, news footage of his meetings with visiting foreign dignitaries and still pictures, some of which were included in a display in the lobby of the Oktyabr Theater where the film debuted.

The documentary is scheduled to air on national television Saturday, which would have been Andropov's 71st birthday.

A camera followed a limousine through snow-dusted streets of the capital and leaf-strewn country lanes, recreating drives taken during the normal course of a Soviet leader's day to give a sense of continuity between the filmed events of Andropov's life.

The film also retraced the steps between the front door of Lyubyanka, the central Moscow building housing the headquarters of the KGB, and the office Andropov occupied as KGB head for 15 years.

His work as head of the intelligence and internal security service was described by Col. Gen. Nikolai Yemokhonov, first deputy chairman of the KGB, as a significant contribution to national security and by the narrator as part of the Soviet struggle for peace and against the threat of imperialism.

Former classmates and fellow partisans recalled that Andropov as a young man was committed to party ideals. They praised his efforts as general secretary to improve discipline and industrial performance — campaigns taken up again recently and given new force by current Soviet leader and Andropov protege Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

The film included visits to Andropov's huge cedar dacha overlooking the Moscow River and the apartment on Kutuzovsky Prospect, where the narrator said Andropov lived for more than 30 years.

Paintings, sculptures and classic literature in his private study gave the image of an educated and cultured man.

His wife Tatiana, in a brief interview at a kitchen table with his son Igor and daughter Irina, recalled personal moments in the life of Andropov, who cultivated an especially private image even for a member of the traditionally secretive Kremlin elite.

His widow fondly recalled poems written for her by her husband and songs they shared as a family.

In a separate interview at the dacha, Igor Andropov, the Soviet ambassador to Greece, said his father taught him to follow the course laid down by Soviet founder Vladimir I. Lenin.

Updated 'Odd Couple' enlivens Broadway

NEW YORK (AP) — Oscar is now Olive and Felix is now Florence, but "The Odd Couple" fortunately is still "The Odd Couple," Neil Simon's funniest play, brought back to Broadway in a new sex-changed version starring Rita Moreno and Sally Struthers.

The comedy, which opened Tuesday at the Broadhurst Theater, has been rewritten and updated by Simon to accommodate its two female stars, and the changes work. In fact, in some ways, they enhance the play.

The basic premise of "The Odd Couple," originally played on Broadway by Art Carney and Walter Matthau and on television by Tony Randall and Jack Klugman, is still there. Two mismatched souls — who happen to be best friends — begin sharing an apartment. One of them has been divorced for a while. The second has just suffered the shock of a marital breakup.

In this new version, Olive, the slob, is a television news producer, and Florence, the neat, fussy one, is a housewife. Florence has been dumped by Stanley, her husband, after 14 years of marriage. She shows up suicidal at the weekly game of Trivial Pursuit held in Olive's apartment.

Trivial Pursuit has replaced poker in this new version of the play, which Simon has peppered with updated references to such cultural and culinary landmarks as "Dynasty," Arthur Treacher's fish shops and Haagen-Dazs.

The comedy even has a message of sorts, as Florence strikes out on her own after being held back for years by Stanley. There's also a hymn to women's liberation at the end of the evening when the women sing an off-key rendition of that old Frankie Valli hit "Big Girls Don't Cry."

The humor is prime Simon. It's done in rapid-fire, machine-gun style, with one-liner after one-liner hitting the audience. Some of the jokes may misfire but the barrage is persistent, and most of the funnies are on target.

The two stars worked together on Broadway several seasons ago in a short-lived comedy called "Wally's Cafe." Since then Ms. Struthers, a wonderfully forlorn Florence, has developed into a remarkable theater comedian. Her winning stage presence, evident in "Wally's Cafe," has been given ample opportunity here. She mugs, sings, dances, and can get off the best of Simon's zingers.

NBC, Cosby peak in this week's Nielsens

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Once again Bill Cosby led the way as NBC scored another triumph in the Nielsen ratings for the week ending June 2 and ABC barely made it into the Top 20.

NBC, which languished in third place for nine years, has been consistently in first place in recent weeks. The network had a major victory the previous week and it won the May sweeps.

NBC won six places in the Top 10 and second-place CBS had four. Third-place ABC had no shows in the Top 10, and in fact barely made it into the Top 20. Its highest-ranked show was "Who's the Boss?," which tied for 20th with CBS' "60 Minutes."

CBS' coverage of the pro basketball championship finals won two places at the top of the ratings. Game four last Wednesday was in a three-way tie for sixth place. Game five on Friday was 18th. The Sunday wrapup game in which the Los Angeles Lakers won over the Boston Celtics four games to two was not in prime-time and was not rated.

NBC took the week with a network average of 13.9 in the A.C. Nielsen Co. survey. CBS was second with 13.0 and ABC was third with 9.8. The networks say this means that in an average prime-time minute 13.9 percent of the nation's TV homes were tuned to NBC.

Some of the audience for the week was taken away by the Billy Graham Crusade, according to ABC. It said ABC and CBS were affected 8-9 p.m. Tuesday, all three networks at 8-9 p.m. Wednesday and Friday, and CBS from 8-9 p.m. Saturday.

Here are the Top 10: "The Cosby Show," NBC, first; "Family Ties," NBC, second; "Miami Vice," NBC, third; "Remington Steele, NBC, fourth; "Simon & Simon," CBS, fifth; NBA finals Game No. 4, CBS, "Dirty Work" on CBS, and "Cheers" on NBC, three-way tie for sixth; "Riptide," NBC, ninth; "Kate & Allie," CBS, 10th.

CBS was first again among the evening news shows with a rating of 10.7. NBC was second with 9.5 and ABC was a close third with 9.4.

Here are the ratings of the highest and lowest-rated shows of the week:

1. "The Cosby Show," NBC, a rating of 21.9 or 18.6 million households.
2. "Family Ties," NBC, 20.0 or 17.0 million.
3. "Miami Vice," NBC, 18.8 or 16.0 million.
4. "Remington Steele," NBC, 17.7 or 15.0 million.
5. "Simon & Simon," CBS, 17.6 or 14.9 million.
6. NBA Finals Game No. 4, CBS, 17.0 or 14.4 million.
6. Tied-"Dirty Work," CBS, 17.0 or 14.4 million.
6. Tied-"Cheers," NBC, 17.0 or 14.4 million.
9. "Riptide," NBC, 16.9 or 14.3 million.
10. "Kate & Allie," CBS, 16.8 or 14.2 million.
11. "The A-Team," NBC, 16.5 or 14.0 million.
12. "Trapper John, M.D.," CBS, 16.0 or 13.6 million.
12. Tied-"Cagney & Lacey," CBS, 16.0 or 13.6 million.
12. Tied-"Newhart," CBS, 16.0 or 13.6 million.
15. Movie-"M.A.D.D.: Mothers Against Drunk Drivers," NBC, 15.7 or 13.3 million.
16. "Highway to Heaven," NBC, 15.4 or 13.0 million.
16. Tied-"Crazy Like a Fox," CBS, 15.4 or 13.0 million.
18. NBA Finals Game No. 5, CBS, 15.3 or 12.9 million.
19. "Facts of Life," NBC, 14.9 or 12.6 million.
20. "60 Minutes," CBS, 14.8 or 12.5 million.
20. Tied-"Who's the Boss?," ABC, 14.8 or 12.5 million.

Court upholds sentence for singer David Crosby

DALLAS (AP) — A state appeals court has upheld singer David Crosby's conviction and five-year prison sentence on a 1983 conviction on drug and gun charges.

The 9-4 decision, issued Tuesday, reversed an earlier ruling by a three-judge appeals panel that overturned the conviction.

The full 5th Court of Appeals said that police had a right to search Crosby's dressing room in a Dallas nightclub in April 1982. Crosby was arrested and later convicted of possessing cocaine and a .45-caliber pistol as a result of that search.

After State District Judge Pat McDowell sentenced him to five years in prison, Crosby remained free on an appeal bond until early this year.

McDowell ordered Crosby jailed for eight weeks after the singer violated the terms of his appeal bond by leaving a drug treatment program at a New Jersey hospital.

Patti McGuire, a Los Angeles publicist, said Crosby is scheduled to begin a nationwide tour with fellow musicians Steven Stills and Graham Nash on June 28.

One of Crosby's Dallas lawyers, Jerry Banks, said he expected Crosby to ask the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals to review Tuesday's ruling.

In his appeal, Crosby argued that police had violated his right of privacy when they searched his dressing room at the now-defunct Cardi's nightclub.

The court's majority opinion said that state law gives police the right to search the premises of establishments holding alcoholic beverage permits.

Shoemakers ask for import relief

WASHINGTON (AP) — The International Trade Commission is ready to decide on import relief due the U.S. shoemaking industry, which says it has been overrun by shipments of foreign footwear.

The commission will forward its recommendations on relief — expected to be announced today — to President Reagan, who makes the final decision.

Today's meeting followed the ITC's May 22 ruling that the domestic industry faces serious injury from imported shoes.

Industry leaders have sought import quotas stringent enough to guarantee U.S. manufacturers "breathing room" from imports, George Langstaff, president of Footwear Industries of America Inc., said recently.
