Reagan preparing for economic summit

WASHINGTON (AP) — As Democratic presidential candidates stuggle for the limelight, President Reagan is preparing for a 10-day mission to Europe scripted to impress American voters with pageantry, drama and diplomacy.

The made-for-TV agenda that starts June 1 includes sentimental stops at Reagan's ancestral home in Ireland, where demonstrations are planned against his Central America policy, and a side trip to the D-Day beaches of Normandy, France.

The president will have a chance to display skills as a world leader at the annual economic summit in London, the main purpose of the trip.

There is always a potential for trouble when leaders venture into the international spotlight, but White House aides and staffers at the Reagan-Bush re-election committee are expecting Reagan to come home with enhanced popularity, as they said he did after his China trip.

"It's his fourth summit," White House Chief of Staff James A. Baker III said in an interview last week. 'He'll be at ease, confident. He knows the people. He has a close personal relationship now with all those other leaders."

Since the summits began in the 1970s, they traditionally have brought together the leaders of the United States, Britain, France, West Germany, Japan, Italy and Canada to discuss the pressing economic problems.

In previous years, there have been times when the other nations have ganged up on the United States to protest high interest rates that, in turn, affect their European economies.

Asked whether that was a worry this year, a high-level White House official, who insisted on speaking anonymously, replied: "It's been a pattern. But we've been well prepared for that. Their economies are to some degree dependent upon ours and ours is now in healthy recovery. Theirs have been lagging behind ours.

"There's a concern about our interest rates and we will make the point that we're doing what we can in that regard and that we have a deficit reduction package," he said. "Frankly, we'll plow a lot of the same ground that you plow every year at these summits."

Since returning from China on May 3, Reagan has met with White House staff to discuss the substance, schedule, logistics, and public relations aspect of his next international venture.

The White House summit group, as it is called, is chaired jointly by Deputy Chief of Staff Michael K. Deaver and national security adviser Robert C. McFarlane. Deaver handles the logistical and image aspects, McFarlane the international issues.

Each of the summit nations appoints a "sherpa," or guide, to work out events and schedules with the others. Reagan will meet with his sherpa team Monday.

Mondale wants Reagan apology for Hispanics

By The Associated Press

Walter F. Mondale got a head-start on his Democratic presidential rivals in the high-stakes California campaign Saturday, as Gary Hart urged supporters in Oregon to send President Reagan "back to his ranch for good."

The Rev. Jesse Jackson, meanwhile, distributed ground beef in Nebraska and accused his opponents of "offering only Band-Aid solutions to a cancerous problem" — the plight of the American farmer.

Oregon and Nebraska are holding primaries Tuesday, but the 67 delegates being divvied up by the two states are just a fraction of the stakes in California's June 5 contest.

All three Democrats are to be in California by today, when they will converge on San Jose to court the state's large Hispanic vote at a meeting of the Mexican-American Political Association. The group's president, Fernando Chavez, has endorsed Mondale.

Mondale began his day Saturday in California's capital, Sacramento, and planned a full day of campaigning in the state, which will have 306 delegates at stake in its June 5 primary.

He called on President Reagan to personally apologize for an aide's remark that Hispanics have a "cultural preference" for overcrowded housing.

He quoted Philip Abrams, undersecretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, who said in a Washington Post interview that "Hispanics don't mind, and some prefer...doubling up" in housing.

"That kind of bigotry and ignorance has no place in our country," Mondale told a women's conference. "Silence means assent, and Mr. Reagan cannot remain silent. Mr. Reagan owes an apology to the Hispanic community and to all of us."

He also pledged to appoint more women to high positions in a Mondale administration than any previous president.

White House spokesman Peter Roussel said he had no comment to Mondale's request for an apology, and that Reagan's commitment to the nation's Hispanic population is well-known and a matter of record.

Hart stressed the environment in Oregon and told an outdoor rally in Eugene, "We must not let this president have four more years in office when he will not be accountable to the American people."

He said Reagan should not be permitted to "ride roughshod over the environmental laws of this nation and chop up the environmental safeguards back in Washington. I s[illegible] let's send him back to his ranch fo[illegible] good."

On the trip to Oregon from Nebraska, the Colorado senator said Mondale would be the cause of disunity in the Democratic Party if he continued to attack his chief rival for the nomination.

"I'm disappointed in Mr. Mondale, in the character of the attacks, the nature of them, the inaccuracy, the purposeful misstatements, mischaracterizations, the desperation of it," Hart said.

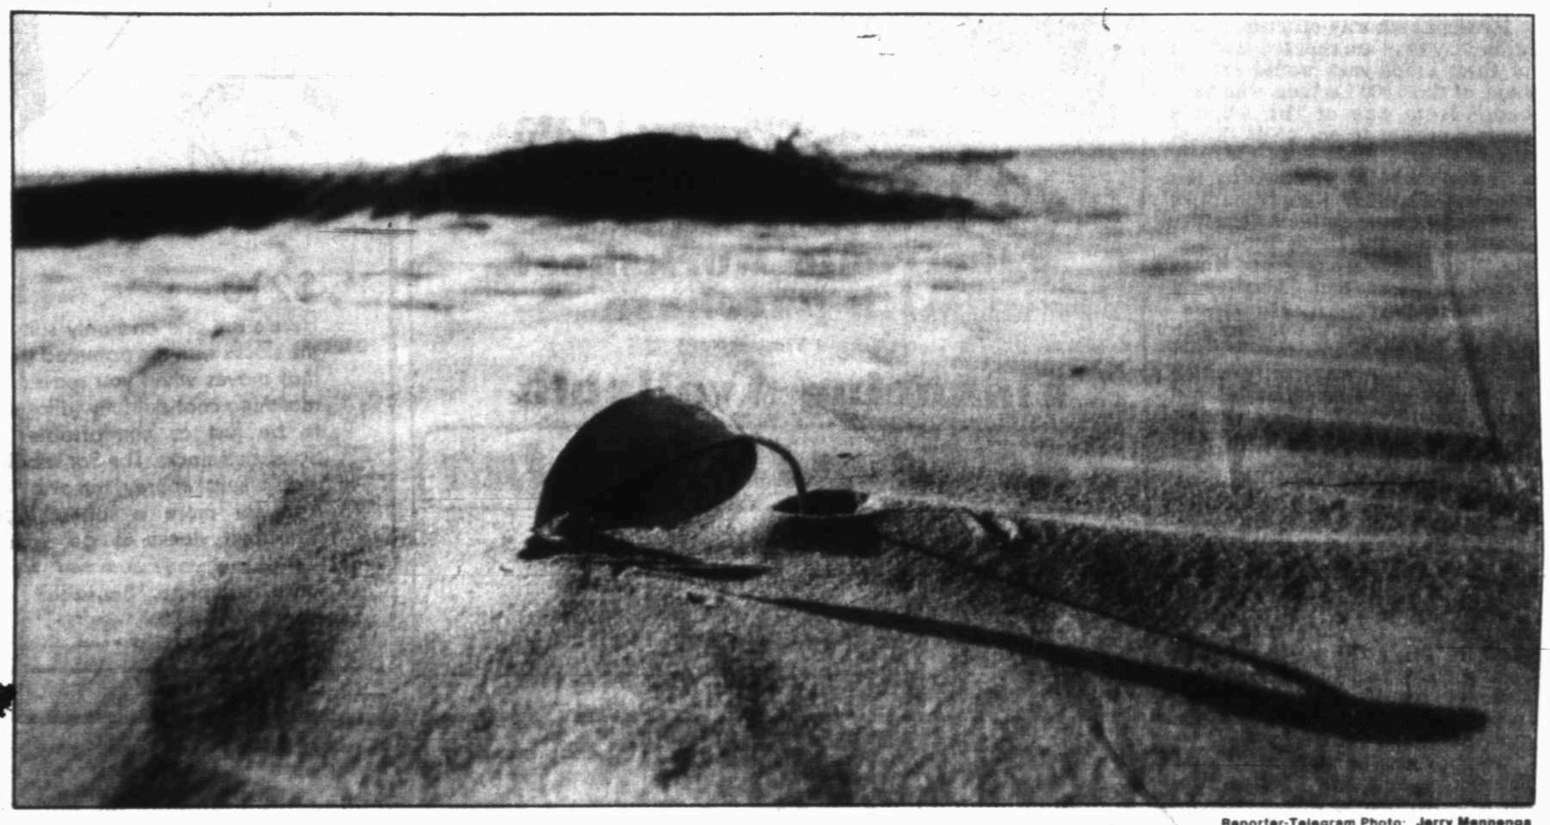

He also disputed claims by Mondale's campaign chairman, James Johnson, that the former vice president would have the nomination locked up after the last round of primaries June 5. "You can discount that pretty clearly as politics," Hart said.

Jackson spent the night at the Murdock, Neb., farm of Vern and Dorothy Lau and then told reporters, "The family farmer has been driven out of business without much drama, without much protest. The protest has been too scattered, too sporadic and not dramatic enough."

Later, Jackson's campaign workers distributed ground beef to supporters in Omaha as he called for a moratorium on farm foreclosures and advocated other programs designed to help the American farmer.

"Today, while he poses as a great defender of traditional American values, Ronald Reagan is presiding over the end of one of our most basic traditions, family farming," Jackson said.

He also said his Democratic rivals weren't aggressive enough in proposing assistance to farmers.

Lone leaf

Life is hardy and enduring. But the unrelenting drought, evidenced by piling sand on wind-blown fields, tends to stymie life. A twig of life stems through the sand.

Drought curse to farmers, ranchers

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

It's another verse of the old song: "The Drought Is On Again."

The melody is the same: It's on a blue note.

"It's dry," said Kermit Lewis. "The only thing I can say good about it is it's good for arrowhead hunting. Me and Granddad (90-year-old Jess Bartlett) hunted arrowheads back in the '50s, and that's when we got the collection started."

It appears the mid-1980s will be another opportune time to hunt for those Indian artifacts and to recall the past.

"I remember the '50s," Lewis said. "They had big dust bowls, and the sand blowed worse than it does now. At 12 o'clock noon, it'd get so dark in the house we'd have to light a kerosene lamp."

Midland farmer Gene Jones recalled the droughts of the 1930s and 1950s.

"The droughts were not only alike," he said, "they were worse."

The dry spell can be overwhelming both to farmers and ranchers. Farmers rather not plant while it's so dry; it'd be a waste. If they do, the seed will just dry up and blow away with the top soil or be covered by blowing sand and humus — the essence of fertile soil. It's so dry now that some ranchers are selling off some of their herds and are bringing in supplemental feed.

"If you're out of stock water," said Jones, "you're out of business whether you have grass or not."

SO FAR, RANCHERS seem to have plenty of well water for their livestock. But they are short on forage.

"We're supplemental feeding cattle right now," said Chris Scharbauer, manager of nine Scharbauer ranches in Texas and New Mexico. "It (the drought) is as bad now as it's ever been since the early '50s."

Rain not in Midland's forecast

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

They certainly don't like it.

But oldtimers, including farmers and ranchers, reckon Midland is overdue for a drought.

They prefer rain. But the weatherman says it's hot and dry and offers no prospects for rain.

Meanwhile, the jet stream, that narrow current of wind which encircles the Earth and seems to foment certain storms, fronts and rain, is too far north to direct rains over these parched plains of West Texas.

Aside from that, there's no rain clouds above these plains to seed with dry ice or silver iodide to nudge the clouds into weeping.

And since the Indians were swept from the territory, there's few legitimate rainmakers around.

"I'm a fair dancer myself," said weatherman Eddie Brit. "I can produce no rain, but I can dance."

And he can predict no rain for at least the next 10 days.

What Brit, who is with the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, can do without flaw is point out the meager rain which has fallen over Midland this year.

Eight teen-agers die in amusement park fire

JACKSON TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — Authorities Saturday began notifying the families of eight teen-agers who died in a fire that whipped through a narrow, dimly lit maze of metal trailers which made up the Haunted Castle attraction at an amusement park.

Eight others were injured in the fire Friday night at the Six Flags Great Adventure Park.

Five of the victims were on a class trip from the Franklin K. Lane High School in New York City, said Ocean County Medical Examiner Walter E. Corrigan. Two others were from Paterson and the only female victim was from a small town in western New Jersey, he said.

All died from smoke inhalation, Corrigan said.

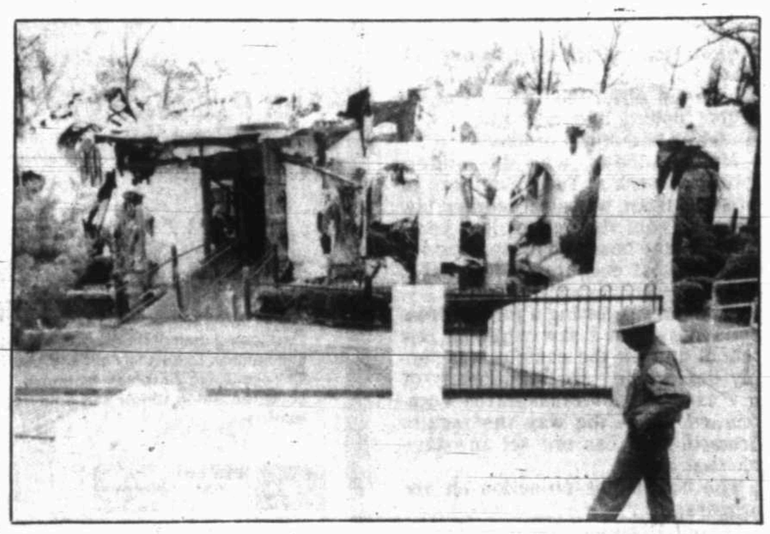

Seven bodies were found huddled together and the eighth was a short distance away, Ocean County Prosecutor Edward Turnbach said Saturday.

Tentative identifications of the badly burned bodies were made through school rings, other jewelry and bus passes, he said.

"They were dead before there was too much burning going on," Corrigan said. "The death was quick and the real horrible part was after that."

The names of the victims were withheld by authorities until all the families were notified, but Norma Quintana said her son, Samuel Valentine, 18, of New York City had perished.

Romania files suit against art museum

FORT WORTH (AP) — The government of Romania has gone to court to force an art museum to return a major 17th century oil painting by the Greek master El Greco.

The communist-bloc country claims the $6 million work, "Giacomo Bosio, or A Portrait of an Elderly Ecclesiastic," was stolen during or shortly after World War II.

The work, painted by El Greco between 1610 and 1614, is considered a national treasure and heritage of the Romanian people and should be returned to Romania, according to the lawsuit.

The 4- by 3-foot artwork, considered one of the top three paintings by El Greco owned by American museums, ranks among the top six of his 30 surviving portraits, officials say.

Kimbell Art Museum officials bought the painting in 1977, according to documents filed Friday with the suit in U.S. District Court.

Assistant museum director Bill Jordan, an El Greco expert, called "absurd" the suit's claim that Romania has title to the painting. He said the museum purchased the painting from Wildenstein and Co. of New York.

Laotians find bribery in new home

DALLAS (AP) — Laotian immigrants who thought they had escaped government graft when they fled their poor Southeast Asian homeland say they've found that bribery sometimes is a part of American life, too.

Their claims that they had to make $100 to $300 payoffs to obtain coveted apartments led to the filing of bribery charges last week against a Dallas Housing Authority officer, Almon Bernice Carroll.

Mrs. Carroll, who was fired April 25, allegedly took bribes from 150 Laotians over a three-year period to move the immigrants to the top of the housing authority's waiting lists for subsidized apartments. She was charged Thursday with two counts of bribery, but police say they have not located her.

Housing authority officials, meanwhile, say they are shocked that one of their employees would exploit some of the 5,000 Laotians who have come from one of the world's poorest nations to one of its richest cities.

"I don't like them cheating the people," Khounsy Keopraseuth, a caseworker with Catholic Charities of Dallas, told the Dallas Times Herald. "The people are poor and it was wrong to cheat them. What could they do but pay?"

Several immigrants told The Dallas Morning News that they viewed the payments as standard practice and similar to the black market system in Laos. "I didn't think anything of it," said a mother of three who declined to give her name.

Keopraseuth and others familiar with the Laotian community said the Laotians were easy targests because they were eager to please their new authorities and wanted to avoid trouble.

Keopraseuth claims Mrs. Carroll used several Laotians who knew some English to serve as links between her and the immigrants. Keopraseuth said half the money went to the intermediaries and the other half to Mrs. Carroll.

One of those immigrants, Chansy Sengsoury, told the Dallas Times Herald that she paid Mrs. Carroll $200 for one of the subsidized apartments.

"She knows that in the United States there is no corruption," Keopraseuth said while interpreting an interview Friday with Mrs. Sengsoury. "So when she paid for it like that, she felt sad about it."

Mrs. Sengsoury said the middleman for her bribe was another Laotian, Chanhda Thongsavanh. Thongsavanh, an elementary school custodian, denies keeping a cut of the alleged bribe and says he has cooperated with police.

But Mrs. Sengsoury said, "A friend told me, 'If you want an apartment on Maple Avenue (where the housing is located), you have to see him.' "

Slovenly profs set bad example, regent says

HOUSTON (AP) — Professors who dress "like mechanics" are setting a bad example for students at Texas Southern University, a member of the board of regents says.

"Some TSU law professors come to class dressed in blue jeans and sandals, or dirty mechanic's clothes and that's no way to set an example or be role models for our young blacks," Regent Naomi Andrews said during a board committee meeting Friday.

Most Texas Southern students are black.

"I have observed they come to school looking like mechanics," Mrs. Andrews said of the professors.

Mrs. Andrews, who did undergraduate work at Texas Southern in the late 1950s, was awarded her law degree from the school last year. She said the board ought to consider a policy that encourages acceptable dress.

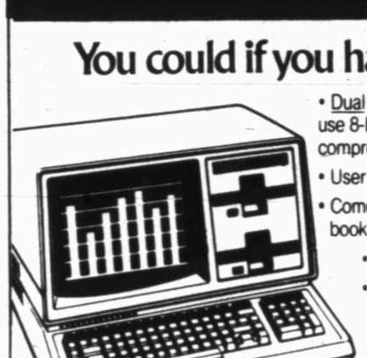

"I'm not suggesting a formal dress code but what I saw while in law school and on the campus was simply deplorable," she said. "Many of my law school classmates complained about the way the faculty dressed. How can one set an example that way?"

The board took no action on her proposal.

School President Leonard Spearman said he has been concerned about the dress habits of some faculty members, who he said were "children of the 1960s" who grew up rebelling against established practices of the day, some of which had to do with modes of dress.

Number of Texas AIDS victims still increasing

FORT WORTH (AP) — Texas has registered only a small fraction of the cases nationwide of acquired immune deficiency syndrome, but the problem is far from leveling off in this state, federal researchers say.

"It will probably get worse before it gets better," said Dr. Peter Drotman, medical director in charge of AIDS research at the U.S. Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta. "Texas has not had huge numbers — yet."

Drotman was one of several physicians, representing the federal research center and major AIDS treatment facilities, who appeared here Friday at a symposium conducted by the Texas Medical Association.

Texas has reported 134 of the 4,307 AIDS cases in the United States. About 100 AIDS cases are confirmed each week in the United States, but the problem appears to have hit a plateau in states where it is worst, the researchers said.

In Texas, the problem "has done nothing but increase," Drotman said. "It just doesn't seem to be increasing quite as rapidly as it was. The number of cases was doubling every six months. Now it's taking a little longer."

Dr. Guy R. Newell Jr. of Houston said that in the past two months there has been an "extraordinary increase" in Kaposi's sarcoma, a rare skin cancer most often associated with AIDS.

Dr. Paul Volberding, a cancer specialist with the University of California School of Medicine in San Francisco, said the disease is much more prevalent than figures indicate.

"I think what we will see when we finally have a good screening test for it is 10 times the number we have now," said Volberding, who is medical director of the largest AIDS treatment program in the country.

"The numbers have been limited by definition," he said. "AIDS has been defined by the malignancy or life-threatening infections that it causes. That is also the reason the percentage of deaths is so high. We define it by the complications that cause death."

Volberding said that cancer is just a symptom of the underlying immune system disfunction. Only two drugs have been developed that have any effect on restoring the immune system and the results have not been encouraging, he said.

Twenty percent of those diagnosed with AIDS this year have died, while 43 percent of those diagnosed within the last four years have died, Drotman said.

Drotman said the discovery of a virus believed to cause AIDS is much more limited than first thought. He added that it would be optimistic to assume that a screening test would be ready in six months and an anti-AIDS vaccine would be available in two years.

"I believe it is a long time before the final answer is going to be in," said Dr. Roger Enlow, medical director of the New York City public health department's AIDS program.

"It is still a huge, immense problem in many parts of the country," he said.

Legislator: Education board deserves credit for reform

AUSTIN (AP) — The state School Board of Education deserves full credit for public school reform proposals prepared for a special session of the Texas Legislature, not the Select Committee on Public Education, says State Rep. Bill Haley.

"You've seen the needs for many years. You did not discover it 10 months ago," Haley, D-Center, chairman of the House Public Education Committee, said Saturday to the body that sets policy for Texas public schools.

"Unfortunately, we (the Legislature) are only now listening."

On Tuesday, Haley's committee, in joint session with the Senate Education Committee, will begin a public hearing on widespread reforms suggested by Haley with the assistance of the Texas Education Agency and H. Ross Perot's 21-member blue ribbon study group.

Perot's widely publicized, and controversial, committee was appointed after the 1983 Legislature failed to act on teacher pay raise demands from Gov. Mark White.

White said Friday he hoped to call a 30-day special session in early June for public school reforms and highway improvements, if he had the necessary legislative support.

Perot, and White, recommended that the 27-member State Board of Education, one elected from each congressional district, be replaced with a nine-member board appointed by the governor.

Perot's committee, financed to some extent by his personal wealth, is pushing adoption of the select committee recommendation by lobbyists and direct mail campaigns.

The State Board of Education is in the process of holding public hearings throughout the state on Perot's recommendations

Portions of the school reform bill, sponsored by Haley with the help of State School Commissioner Raymon Bynum, were endorsed Saturday by the state board.

"The task in this country of educating every student to his maximum potential is an awesome task and cannot be learned in 10 months," Haley said.

State School Board Chairman Joe Kelly Butler of Houston, who was defeated May 5 for re-election, said a special meeting of the board would be called as soon as White names a special session date to firm up the board's school finance recommendations to the Legislature.

The board endorsed Saturday the recommendations of Haley and Bynum that teacher starting salaries be increased from $1,111 to $1,520 a month. It also endorsed a four-step career ladder program that would reward teachers from $2,000 to $6,000 for special effort and training, if state money is available.

Anti-Sandinista saboteurs spread rumors, ex-rebel commander says

HOUSTON (AP) — Saboteurs seeking to overthrow Nicaragua's Sandinista government range from people who simply spread rumors to commandos who ambush government officials, says a man who claims to command an army of silent soldiers.

Julio Zelaya said the agents of his Frente Interno Nicaraguense can be destructive with something as innocuous as a cup of coffee.

The 46-year-old lived in Costa Rica and Honduras for the last 14 months and said he came to Houston to live with his son.

Zelaya, who said he supported the Sandinistas until he concluded they were leading the country into communism, said even the smallest sabotage is important if it slows down the government's bureaucracy.

"The lowest-level saboteurs are the rumor-spreaders," he told The Houston Post in an interview published Saturday.

WEATHER SUMMARY

The National Weather Service forecasts for today for parts of Washington, Oregon, the Great Lakes region, Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, West Virginia, Pennsylvania and New York.

Weather will be cloudy, but still hot for Midland

The sun won't be shining as brightly today as it has been lately, but air temperatures will remain uncomfortably high in the Permian Basin, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Today, early morning cloudiness will give way to a partly cloudy afternoon with highs in the low 90s. Southeasterly winds of 5-15 mph will increase to 15-20 mph. Tonight will be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of showers or thunderstorms and a low in the low 60s. Monday, skies will remain partly cloudy with high temperatures in the low 90s.

Saturday's high temperature of 95 was a bit short of the record 99 set in 1963, and the overnight low of 62 was more than a bit higher than the 1971 record of 39.

STATE

A breeze blowing from the Gulf of Mexico continued Saturday to bring additional moisture to Texas, but most of the Lone Star State remained clear and warm.

A few light rain showers fell in the Brownsville area, but the National Weather Service said conditions were too stable statewide for any serious shower activity.

Temperatures throughout Texas fluctuated in the 80s and 90s, with readings in the low 100s in the Big Bend area.

The forecast called for fair to partly cloudy weather again today with highs in the 80s and 90s. The exception was the Big Bend area, which will see temperatures soar to the low 100s.

Widely scattered showers are expected along the lower Rio Grande on today.

The weather service also forecast early morning cloudiness in portions of West Texas, with a chance of widely scattered showers and thunderstorms in some regions.

North Texas was to continue its warm and fair trend with highs in the 80s and low 90s.

Isolated showers were predicted in coastal areas through tonight, and scattered thundershowers were forecast from Port O'Connor to Brownsville.

NATION

Sunny skies and temperatures in the 70s and 80s Saturday caused the heavy snowpack atop mountains in Utah and Colorado to start melting. The runoff pushed streams over their banks, and mudslides blocked highways.

In the East, a tornado touched down at a fairgrounds in Altamont, N.Y., 12 miles west of Albany, scattering people at a flea market and injuring at least 10 people.

Mudslides triggered by supersaturated soil blocked two highways and restricted travel on an interstate highway in the western half of Colorado, the state patrol reported.

An 1,800-foot mudslide in central Utah's Spanish Fork Canyon appeared to have stabilized Saturday, a day after it slipped off the canyon and filtered between about 40 homes, said Utah County sheriff's dispatcher Ralph Coones.

"It came right around some of the homes, but there was no damage to any of them," he said. "There's a lot of cleanup to be done, though."

The rapid snowmelt is expected to continue into the early part of the week, the weather service said.

Showers and thunderstorms covered the northeastern quarter of the nation Saturday. Thunderstorms with 50 mph winds blew through Ithaca and Utica in upstate New York, while other cities were were pelted with pea-size hail. It rained in parts of northern New England.

Last year, some ranchers sold off herds due to the drought; there wasn't enough forage to get the cattle up to their optimum weight. Ranchers were fearful of their land being further damaged by overgrazing and wanted to cut their losses as soon as possible.

"Some people sold their herds and got out of the (cattle) business," Scharbauer said.

Last year was a "zero" year for the West Texas cattle business, and 1984 seems to be following suit.

"It's going to be a tough old go," he said. Scharbauer has cut down on the number of heads per section. During last year's drought, he trimmed his herds and cleaned them out to strengthen their quality. "We're got a little bit of turf left," Scharbauer said, "and a lot of weeds, and the weeds will die out due to the hot weather."

"It looks pretty grim right now," he said. "The trend is looking just like last year. It's getting hot, hotter, and it's so dry."

Regardless of the severity of the drought, Scharbauer says he plans to hold on to the land, which has been in the family since 1885.

"I've got a love of the land, just like the rest of my family," he reflected. There's something about range land which affords a "freedom" and a "certain attitude."

"You're tired of fighting the bad times," Scharbauer said, "and the good times are far and few between."

FORTUNATELY, there's humor in the drought.

Big Spring banker Luther May, who specializes in agricultural loans, recalls the isolated drought of 1963-64.

"'It's so dry, the catfish are getting ticks on them,'" he recalled a Pecos rancher saying.

"Down at San Angelo," he said, "they said they had bullfrogs 2 years old that didn't know how to swim."

It was no joke that the dust storms of the 1930s were so severe that sand would cover up winter's snow.

"We could dig through the dust and get dirty snowballs," Jones said.

The farmer offered another no-bull tale from the 1930s drought. "I was a kid then," he mentioned.

"This fellow was in The First National Bank in the middle of the summer," Jones said. "He wanted to borrow $50 to finish out the crop, and they (the banker) offered to let him have $30. He took it."

Times have changed. But the weather hasn't.

"Nobody had any money," Jones recalled, "and there was a drought. You put those two together, and it's terrible."

ALONG WITH THE drought of the '30s was the Great Depression. But farmers did better than their city cousins.

"Most of the farmers," said Bobby Howard, "didn't have the problems they had in the city; they were self-sufficient." Vegetable gardens, chickens, dairy cows and a few beef cattle and hogs were common sights on the old family farms.

Back then, the government provided work and wages through the Works Progress Administration and the Civilian Conservation Corps. That helped many town and city people through the Depression.

In the drought of the 1950s, many farmers and ranchers got jobs in the oil field during the Spraberry boom; that tided them over until seasonal rains returned.

Just as it does from crop to crop, humor helps farmers and ranchers keep a sane enough attitude to make it through the droughts.

Banker May told another tale about a farmer remarking to rancher what "a pretty day" it was.

"Yeah," the rancher said tersely, "you farmers and these 'pretty days' are ruining this country."

"THIS DROUGHT is getting pretty serious," said Hoot Leonard, a Midland County farmer who manages the Midland Farmers Co-operative. "We haven't had any significant rain since Oct. 18," when he "kicked the gin off" in readying to bale cotton.

Last year, the co-op cotton gin turned out 2,760 bales of cotton; most of that was from irrigated farm land.

"That's the least amount we've had in 17 years I'm been ginning," Leonard said. The bumper crop was in 1979, when the gin processed 22,600 bales. That year, the rainfall was timely.

And that — rain at the right times — is the number one factor in producing a profitable crop on good soil.

"We can ride with the prices," he said.

For Midland County farmers, 1982 was a "short crop." Worms bit into other crops. 1983 hardly produced a crop, and 1984 seems even more bleak. The drought is the curse.

At the Midland Farmers' Co-operative office-coffee shop, farmer Mike Denny noted that a farmer "would be wasting his money and stirring up the land" to plant now without benefit of rain. There's some subsurface moisture. The land would have to be deep-plowed to bring up that moisture soil. After that, though, a rain direly would be needed to produce a crop.

"I still think it's going to rain," said another farmer, Mike Payne.

"It's got to," Leonard said.

"It's too dry here," noted Denny, "and too wet everywhere else."

Payne said the West Texas land "is as good as any (land) around here, but there's some of my land they should have left to the Indians.

"We've all had to tighten down and squeeze ourselves to stay in business," he said.

TEE TRAGEDY of the prolonged drought, said Leonard, is that many farmers may end up losing their farms or their leases. Those who own their own land won't be able to make mortgage payments. And whether they do own or not, they'll be in trouble. Banks, which are in financial binds, will be calling in overdue loans.

"You can see what kind of situation the bankers are in," said a sympathetic Leonard. "The examiners are telling the bankers to get their agricultural loans current.

"Most of our farmers are just hanging on by their fingernails," Leonard said. "This is probably going to be their last chance."

Payne doesn't expect the government to come in and bail the farmers out.

"I don't necessarily believe they should. We chose to farm, chose to take the risk."

He's just hoping for rain.

"There ain't nothing nobody can do about the rain or the drought," Payne said. "That's just something you gamble on every time you start the tractor."

FARMERS AND RANCHERS are "in kind of a limbo right now," said Dick Hagelstein, district conservationist for the U.S. Soil Conservation Service for Midland County, "because they really don't know what to do. They've got to have rain within the next 20 days."

He noted that 1984 is the "third year we haven't had any growing rain to speak of."

Along with the dearth of rain comes blowing sand and the shifting of topsoil. The loss of soil through wind erosion is compounded, he noted, by the "poor physical condition" of soil which has been planted "in straight cotton" and does not get the re-building effect of crop rotation and rest.

Though early to mid-May seems to be the optimum time to plant cotton, farmers could plant as late as early June if it rains by then. If not, they might bank on late June or early July rains and plant sorghums.

"We're trying to keep an optimistic attitude as much as possible," Hagelstein said. "That (drought) happened in the '50s, and we came back."

"I'm sure it'll rain sometime," he said. "I hope."

Rain not in the forecast

So far in 1984, the weather service has gauged 0.59 inch of rain; the normal rainfall through April is 2.35 inches, and the normal through May is 4.40 inches. The normal (based on a 30-year rainfall average) is 13.70 inches a year.

The 0.59 inch of moisture which has descended over Midland in 1984 is broken down thusly:

January
—Jan. 3: 0.08 inch, rain.
—Jan. 8: 0.26 inch, rain.
—Jan. 9: 0.05 inch, rain.
—Jan. 17: 0.02, rain.
—Jan. 15, 18, 19 and 20, traces of light snow.

February
—Feb. 20: trace of snow.
—Feb. 26: 0.17 inch of rain and a trace of snow.

March
—March 5: trace of rain and snow.
—March 11: trace of rain.
—March 27: trace of rain.

April
—April 1: trace of rain.
—April 6: 0.01 inch of rain.
—April 7: trace of rain.
—April 18: trace of rain.

May 1-12
—Zilch.

For semi-arid West Texas, May is a generous month for rainfall: 2.05 inches is the normal. May is also the traditional time for a "planting rain" — which precedes a cotton crop. September is another "heavy" rainfall month: 2.08 inches. Farmers and ranchers — patiently or impatiently — are just waiting for rain.

The 30-year rainfall average of 13.70 inches is made up of these monthly averages: January, 0.42; February, 0.58; March, 0.51; April 0.84; May, 2.05; June, 1.44; July, 1.72; August, 1.60; September, 2.08; October, 1.41; November, 0.60, December, 0.45.

Midland's most recent memorable rain came last October, when 4.64 inches settled the dust. But it was too late to do much good, particularly since there was little follow-up rain. The May rainfall in 1983 was 0.50 inch, which, from the farmers' viewpoint, wasn't enough for planting. September's rainfall was a mere 0.62 inch. The year's total was 10 inches, which came at the wrong times.

Just why droughts visit the land and seem to do so in seven-year cycles has another weatherman baffled.

"There must be an explanation, but I don't know rightly what it is," he said. "I suppose the doctors in their ivory towers are trying to figure it out."

Letter shows girl getting over loss of mom

CHICAGO (AP) — Emily Roberts had been trying to overcome feelings of loss since the death of her mother last year. And her victory in a city-wide Mother's Day letter-writing contest appears to have helped the 7-year-old take the first big step.

Emily's letter about her mother — and her father, whom she called "a perfect Mr. Mom" — was judged the best of 1,300 entries by Chicago public elementary school children in a competition sponsored by the school system and a city hotel.

"My mother died two years ago," the second-grader's letter read.

"My mother was a good cook and made good dishes," the letter went on. "I think other children are lucky to have a mother.

"I miss my mother telling me there would be no monsters in my room at night, and when she was fluffing my favorite pillow, so I could watch TV.

—"Now my father is taking her place. I think he is a perfect 'Mr. Mom' and I love him for that."

"Mr. Mom" was a recent movie in which actor Michael Keaton played a husband and father who lost his job and took over the household chores and raised the children while his wife went to work.

For winning the contest, Emily and her family will be taken by limousine to a Mother's Day brunch at an elegant Chicago hotel.

In a telephone interview Saturday, Emily said, "I like my father because he's nice and he's special and whenever I want him to take me somewhere he does. He takes me everywhere."

Cheryl Roberts had suffered from Hodgkin's disease, a lymphatic cancer, "but was considered cured, pronounced in remission," said Tim Roberts, Emily's father. "She was in better health than she'd been for many years."

But Mrs. Roberts died at age 33 in her home on a February morning.

"We woke up one morning and she was dying," Roberts, 32, said. "Emily saw it all — the paramedics coming, working, everything. It happened out of nowhere. It's haunting to me, and I'm not sure how Emily feels about it."

But he knows how he'd like Emily, an only child, to feel.

"I didn't want that to be her only memory of her mother," said Roberts, video director at Loyola University here. "We couldn't hide the fact of death, but I started immediately talking about the wonderful times — stressing all the good things."

To fill some of the gap in Emily's life, Roberts moved in with his parents, the Rev. William and Betty Roberts. "My parents filled some of the void," Roberts said, "but Emily distinguishes between her grandmothers and her mother. I think she's adjusted to the loss now."

Now, Emily stands to get another mother. Her father plans to remarry next month and Emily also will gain a 10-year-old sister. The family will move to Connecticut, where Roberts' fiancee lives.

"My new mother is very, very nice," said Emily. "She works very hard but always finds the time for me."

State police Maj. Louis Taranto said the cause of the blaze remained under investigation, but arson has not been ruled out.

The maze of 17 trailers had three emergency exits in addition to the main entrance, but confusion and heavy smoke probably hindered the victims, Taranto said.

"The doors that we were able to locate all had panic bars...the panic bars could work," Taranto said. "I'm sure there was a massive amount of confusion."

A spokesman for Great Adventure, Glenn Vallach, said neither he nor investigators could explain why the victims had been unable to get out. Vallach said he had heard rumors that some patrons believed the fire was part of the attraction.

Vallach said Six Flags had held a drill at the Haunted Castle on April 1. He also said all attractions at the park were inspected by fire officials April 14 and approved as safe.

There were no sprinklers in the Haunted Castle, he said.

Jackson Township Mayor William Schreiber said he had no concerns about safety at the park. "You people would have to come here when there is not a tragedy to see how well it is run," he told reporters.

On Saturday, thousands of tourists attending Family Christian Day at the park were prevented from viewing the burned-out attraction by a makeshift plywood wall 6 feet high.

Telephone calls to the park dwindled as most of the anxious parents whose children were among the park's 20,000 visitors Friday evening were reunited with their youngsters.

"The switchboard was overloaded all night. Any person who had a child who was even late or slept over at someone's house was concerned," said Police Commissioner Richard Borys.

The fire struck the 17 metal trailers that make up the Haunted Castle and spread quickly as winds fanned the flames. Firefighters said the blaze reached heights of 100 feet and temperatures inside the trailers reached up to 2,000 degrees.

The trailers were melted and gutted, and the castle facade around them was standing but charred. The fire broke out at 6:35 p.m., and was brought under control about an hour later.

Fireman briefly hospitalized

A fireman was briefly hospitalized Saturday after being overcome by heat and smoke while fighting a house fire at 2517 Goddard.

Fireman Fred Gifford was released after being treated at Midland Memorial Hospital. He should return to work in a couple of days, according to reports from the Fire Department.

No one was injured by the fire, which was caused by an electrical short circuit in the attic. The roof was destroyed, and there was heavy damage to the rest of the house from fire, smoke and water. The house was owned and occupied by John Philbeck.

Three units responded to the blaze, which was reported at 4:02 p.m. and extinguished by 6:30 p.m., fire officials said.

Reagan prepares for economic summit

Since the economic summit is an annual event, the White House does not expect anyone to claim Reagan is attending solely to boost his political fortunes, even though he is seeking re-election.

As for Ireland, the land of the president's ancestors, it just made sense to include it in the itinerary, the high-level aide said. "Will there be some beneficial political fallout from that? Maybe," the official said. "And if so, fine. But that is not the main reason the trip was scheduled."

And there is no avoiding the emotionalism that is likely to engulf the side trip to Normandy on June 6, the 40th anniversary of the Allied invasion. That stop carries "a great deal of symbolism," the official acknowledged.

"Some cynics, I suppose, would argue that's only being done for domestic political purposes," he said. "I would argue that it's very much a part of the duty of being president of the United States."

From Ireland, Normandy and England, the television images of Reagan that will be beamed back to American voters are designed to strike envy in the hearts of the Democratic candidates and glee in the hearts of Reagan's campaign staff.

"We're better served to let the American people see two Democratic contenders going at each other tooth and toenail and then creating a dramatic difference between their activity and that of the president," said Reagan's campaign spokesman, James Lake.

Police charge two with heroin possession

A 41-year-old woman and a 26-year-old man were arrested by Midland police Friday night and charged with possession of heroin.

Armed with a search warrant issued by Justice of the Peace Robert Pine, police officers went to 805½ N. Dallas and seized several packets of tin foil containing a white powder believed to be heroin. The two suspects were arrested at the scene.

Doctor chooses to go home again

RIO GRANDE CITY (AP) — Being called "Tonito" and home-cooked meals from his patients aren't at all uncommon for Dr. Antonio Falcon, a family physician who chose to practice medicine in this close-knit, South Texas rural community.

The 32-year-old doctor is chief of the medical staff at Starr County Memorial Hospital in Rio Grande City.

"After my residency, I returned to my home town because I wanted to see more of a medical community here. When I was growing up, there were very few doctors. I wanted to create even more of an availability of general health care in this area," Falcon said.

Since he came back to Rio Grande City in 1980, the 44-bed county hospital has increased its staff from three to seven doctors.

"The county has doubled in size in the twelve years I was gone. But I still know more than half of the patients who come to see me. There is a good social relationship between us," Falcon said.

Most of approximately 30 patients he examines each day at his downtown clinic are people he grew up with and people who have known his parents for years, he said.

"The fact that they knew me when I was growing up or that they know my parents creates a more favorable environment for my patients," he said.

Falcon said he doesn't mind when these patient friends call him "mi hito" or "Tonito" or when they bring him food.

Patient friends don't hesitate to go to Falcon's home for a quick diagnosis either.

"Most of these people feel more at ease with me. I don't mind them coming by, although I sometimes am a little tired. But it rarely happens," Falcon said.

"And only in a close-knit community will the people feel comfortable coming by. You don't find that in the bigger cities," said the doctor's wife, Kathleen Falcon.

Mrs. Falcon has ignored the common saying "don't marry a doctor because he is never home."

"Tony is a real family person. He spends all his extra time with us. He always makes an effort to be with his family," she said.

Support from his parents, Emma Falcon and the late Eugenio Falcon, "helped me get to where I am today," Falcon said.

"We helped him by encouraging him and supporting him all along the way. But we didn't have to worry because once he set his mind on something he would do it. Tony never needed help," Emma Falcon said.

Born in Edinburg and raised in Harlingen, Falcon graduated from Rio Grande High School in 1970.

"He was a model boy. He tried his best to as perfect as he could. We never got any complaints from the teachers," Emma Falcon said.

One of Falcon's most influential teachers was his high school chemistry teacher Romeo Lopez because "he further created my interest in medicine," Falcon said.

"Antonio was a very well organized student. He was dedicated, conscientious and responsible. He had a tendency to go further into things and ask questions. He wouldn't just learn something and forget about it," Lopez said.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Primary shows one vote can make a difference

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Perhaps the only real conclusions possible from the May 5 primary in Texas are that one vote can indeed make a difference, and that few people understand how presidential candidate selection works in the state.

Neither of those conclusions is new or novel, but both point to some problems which are likely to be the subject of public debate and legislative attention.

The importance of voting was underscored in the virtual three-way tie among the candidates for the Democratic Party's nomination for the U.S. Senate slot.

There was a terrible irony in the situation for former congressman Bob Krueger, who was edged out of the run-off by less than one-tenth of a percent of the total vote.

In 1978, Krueger lost his attempt to oust Sen. John Tower by a narrow margin, with Krueger later saying that if he'd been able to switch one vote per precinct, he could have won.

On May 5, if Krueger had been able to pick up another vote per precinct, or even every second or third precinct, it would be Krueger and U.S. Rep. Kent Hance of Lubbock in a run-off on June 2, instead of Hance and State Sen. Lloyd Doggett of Austin.

Or, looking at it another way, if one Hance supporter in every other precinct had stayed home, it would be Hance who would be sitting out the runoff.

The candidates understand those figures and understand the importance that a vote can make.

And in the run-off, the candidates know, the difference again could easily be one vote per precinct, or less, because ultimately, one vote is all it takes to win.

Besides underlining that basic lesson in civics and democracy, the primary also pointed to the lack of knowledge among most voters on precinct conventions.

Those conventions are the first step in selection of delegates to national conventions, and some of the Democratic gatherings appeared livelier than usual (if that's possible).

Part of that liveliness was due to the bid by Jesse Jackson for the presidential nomination, which has increased interest and political awareness of minority voters.

Jackson, during his appearances in Texas, indicated his dislike for the delegate selection process, because it requires voters to come back after the polls close in order to take part in selecting a presidential nominee.

Jackson argues that discriminates against the poor and minorities.

Rep. Al Edwards, D-Houston, who chairs Jackson's Texas campaign, complained about "widespread" rules violations and irregularities at the precinct conventions and said he's asking the U.S. Department of Justice to investigate.

Those complaints, whether or not justified, are hardly unexpected — someone usually leaves the precinct conventions unhappy, and certainly always confused.

Those problems always prompt talk about reforming the process, and of holding a presidential preference primary, just as presidential elections always prompt talk of overhauling the electoral college.

Efforts in recent years to institute a presidential primary in Texas have resulted in considerable controversy and inter- and intra-party wrangling.

There was a one-time-only, state-mandated presidential primary in 1976, and Republicans held a binding referendum (with Democrats holding a non-binding straw vote) in 1980.

In 1979, Houston Sen. Jack Ogg attempted to establish a separate presidential primary (proposing a March date), with that effort leading to the walkout of the "Killer Bees" from the Texas Senate (with no primary legislation being passed).

State Democratic Executive Committee members have taken up the question of presidential primaries at various times, but the party hierarchy (and many Republican stalwarts as well) hasn't been much in favor of that method for selecting candidates.

The argument has been that primaries favor candidates with more money, and weaken the role of the party (with the latter concern perhaps the major one for party workers).

Doggett-Hance run-off may test state labels

AUSTIN (AP) — The Lloyd Doggett-Kent Hance run-off could be a barometer that spot-checks the evolution of the Texas Democratic Party.

By most measures, Doggett is the liberal and Hance the conservative in the June 2 race that will produce a Democratic nominee for the U.S. Senate.

U.S. Rep. Phil Gramm, who made use of political ads featuring testimonials by President Reagan, easily won the Republican nomination May 5.

The left-leaning wing of the party did well in 1982, with Democrats who preferred the tags "progressive" and "populist" taking several top state jobs. The Hance-Doggett event could be a 1984 update on the 1982 trend.

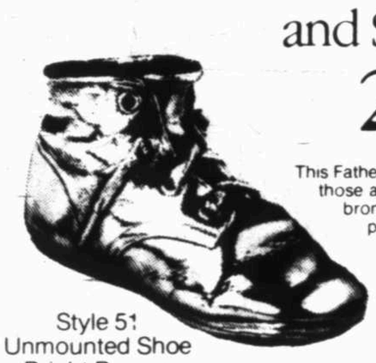

The 1982 victories by Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower, Attorney General Jim Mattox, Land Commissioner Garry Mauro and Treasurer Ann Richards were less than clear signals that the more liberal wing had evicted the traditional conservatives in the party.

"It takes more than one race to say what the Democratic Party is," said Hightower. "After we all won they said, 'Oh my God, the Democratic Party is all of a sudden liberal.' That is hogwash."

The 1982 progressive-populist wins were confounded by some special situations. Ms. Richards won a primary battle over conservative incumbent Warren Harding, who faced a misconduct indictment. Hightower's primary win was over conservative incumbent Reagan Brown, who was hurt by a well-publicized incident of Brown saying "nigger" in public.

The general election victories by Hightower, Mauro, Mattox and Mrs. Richards were attributed in part to the strong showings at the top of the ballot by middle-of-the-roaders.

New Orleans world's fair opens with riverboat whistles, rockets

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Heralded by riverboat whistles and skyrockets, the $350 million 1984 world's fair opened Saturday after a night of frantic construction and cleanup that left only a few parts of it unfinished.

"Let the good times roll," Mayor Dutch Morial told the crowd at opening ceremonies in the huge fair amphitheater overlooking the Mississippi River.

Floyd Lewis, chairman of the corporation that set up the fair despite a financial struggle, urged those in the audience to become "a cheerleader for the fair, and as you leave the amphitheatre, don't leave any trash behind because we're trying to get the place cleaned up."

Little of the debris — lumber stacks, sand piles, mountains of cardboard boxes and scaffolding — that marred the 82-acre site Friday was visible Saturday. The general manager of the fair, Petr Spurney, appeared to have kept his promise to have the site cleaned up by show time.

The African Market and the exhibits of Peru, Bolivia and the Philippines were closed due to various technical problems.

Perfect weather — sunny skies and temperatures in the 70s — enhanced the site.

But at least part of the fair was obviously not ready. Only five of the 40 cars had been attached to what is billed as the world's largest Ferris wheel.

Reports that the fair might not be quite ready failed to dim the enthusiasm of the lines of people at the gates — many of them veteran New Orleans partygoers who gathered as early as 8 a.m. to begin what they saw as the beginning of a six-month Mardis Gras.

There was some early confusion over the opening ceremonies — which were by invitation only to about 6,000 dignitaries. The crowd outside both gates, some of whom bought their $15 tickets at 8:30 a.m. when the booths opened, were not allowed in until noon.

However, at the stroke of noon, blasts of riverboat whistles, fireworks, bells and an Air Force flyover signaled the official opening, and the Southern University band led a dancing wave of first-paying customers through the turnstiles.

Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige pressed a button to unleash 84 skyrockets, which exploded high over the festivities.

Officials hoped that 88,000 people would pass through the gates by the time they closed at 2 a.m. Sunday.

People line up outside one of the entrances to the Louisiana World Expo Saturday in New Orleans prior to opening of the 1984 World's Fair event. The "L" in the world "World" is broken on the archway sign.

State officials hope crowds will flock to the fair, which has been plagued by cash flow problems and slow advance ticket sales. The corporation putting on the fair, Louisiana World Exposition Inc., had to go to the state Legislature last month for a $10 million loan to pay overdue construction bills. Lawmakers grudgingly approved the loan.

Bob Kocurek, president of J&K Rig Builders, Inc., of Lafayette, La., was one of the early arrivals. He had come to see the oil industry pavilion, which his company had helped construct.

The theme of the fair is "The World of Rivers: Fresh Water as a Source of Life."

The theme was evident everywhere, from the lagoons and manmade lakes that greeted visitors passing through the front gates on the edge of downtown New Orleans to the banks of the Mississippi River.

Highlights included a monorail that provided a quick tour of the site and an aerial gondola ride.

Veterans, public may never know if Agent Orange did cause problems

BOSTON (AP) — The question on the minds of Vietnam veterans is simple: Did Agent Orange cause their cancer or their children's birth defects or their wives' miscarriages?

Science doesn't know and probably never will.

The key to such a crucial uncertainty — the bond between one man's troubles and a chemical that touched him — is beyond the powers of epidemiology, the tool that's used to ferret out specific dangers in a world full of danger.

By one estimate, the federal government will spend more than $100 million on at least 64 studies to examine the hazards of the jungle-killing chemical and what it did to soldiers who lived with it.

At best, however, these studies are likely to show whether there is a statistical relationship between the defoliant and increased levels of disease.

For the individual, this information can raise or lower suspicions. But it cannot settle whether an Army sergeant is sick today because he was sprayed with Agent Orange in Vietnam 20 years ago.

Last Monday, seven companies that made the chemical agreed to create a $180 million fund for the thousands of Vietnam vets and family members who believe the herbicide harmed them. But the companies denied liability for the veterans' troubles, and the question remains open.

"With the kinds of health outcomes that we're concerned about with Agent Orange and other environmental exposures, almost to a man they are nonspecific," says Dr. Clark Heath of the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

"You look at a case of leukemia, and you can't know whether it was caused by radiation received in the dentist's chair or benzene in the gasoline he uses in his car or some hereditary influence. No matter what the cause, they all look alike."

From 1965 to 1971, the government sprayed 12 million gallons of Agent Orange to kill forests that hid the enemy in South Vietnam. The chemical is a mixture of two herbicides — 2,4,5-T and 2,4-D — and it was contaminated with dioxin, a poison that causes cancer, birth defects and other problems in laboratory animals.

Veterans who were exposed to Agent Orange claim they have suffered unusual numbers of a variety of ills, including cancer, skin disease, liver damage, personality changes and nerve injury as well as birth defects in their children and miscarriages among their wives.

The problem is proving that their woes result from Agent Orange.

"During the course of their lives, people are exposed to a whole variety of things," said Joseph R. Fiksel, a risk analysis specialist at the consulting firm of Arthur D. Little. "We smoke; we eat; we drink; we are immersed in an environment of carcinogenic agents."

To argue their case, veterans' groups and their lawyers have assembled groups of veterans and their offspring who suffer ills they allege result from the spray.

Epidemiologists, however, generally dismiss this evidence as "anecdotal." In other words, the ailments could have happened anyway. There is an expected rate of occurrence for every illness, no matter how rare.

For instance, Dr. Allen A. Mitchell of the Boston University Drug Epidemiology Unit noted that five out of every 100 children were born with birth defects. They are victims of "the biological lottery."

"The question then isn't whether out of 100 people who get Agent Orange there are five kids with birth defects, because that's what you would expect," he said. "The question is, are there more than five?"

Major studies now under way will try to determine whether veterans sprayed with Agent Orange are, indeed, more likely to get sick. There are many pitfalls to these reviews.

One is figuring out whether the soldiers really were exposed to the chemical, and how big a dose they received.

"You want to compare people who were exposed with people who weren't in terms of health outcome," said Heath. "If you can't clearly decide, the study is already in trouble."

Then they have to make sure the two groups are identical in every regard except their contact to Agent Orange. The idea is to make sure that their problems, if they exist, aren't caused by some other factor, such as smoking, diet or lifestyle.

Fed Chairman Volcker fends off attacks by administration officials

HOT SPRINGS, Va. (AP) — The head of the nation's central bank on Saturday fended off a recent series of attacks by Reagan administration officials and declared the current economic recovery is the strongest in recent history.

Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker also said he saw no threat of a recession but stressed that inflation must be controlled to keep the recovery going.

Since major banks raised their prime lending rate Tuesday to 12.5 percent — the highest level in 18 months — the administration has been directing a steady stream of criticism toward the Federal Reserve, charging that its actions threaten to bring on a recession.

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes blamed the Fed's tight monetary policy for the rise in the prime, the interest rate banks giving their best corporate borrowers. And Treasury Secretary Donald Regan and Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige both weighed in with their own criticisms.

Regan contended Friday that if the central bank does not allow for faster growth of the money supply, it could "lead to the same thing that happened in 1981" when he said the Fed "slammed on the brakes" on the supply of credit and brought on the deep recession.

Regan denied his attacks were a part of an orchestrated campaign against the Fed during an election year, saying the administration was just voicing the same concerns about interest rates as savings and loan companies, farmers and builders.

The administration has maintained that because inflation continues under control, the Fed could employ less restrictive controls on the money supply to keep interest rates from rising.

But Volcker, who spoke to reporters following an appearance here before the Business Council, said the central bank did not have as much control over interest rates as some people "seem to think." And he disagreed with predictions the economy could plunge into a recession by the end of 1985.

Volcker said the recovery from the 1981-82 recession has been the most rapid of any rebound since World War II. He noted that industrial production has risen 19.1 percent during the first 16 months of the current recovery, far above the average increase of 14.8 percent for that time span.

Mondale 'nudes' stripped from subways

NEW YORK (AP) — Advertising posters sporting a caricature of a nearly nude Walter Mondale were being stripped from city subways on Saturday after Mayor Edward Koch declared them obscene.

The posters promoting the current issue of Penthouse magazine began appearing in subway stations on Thursday.

A drawing in the magazine shows the Mondale character dressed only in a pair of briefs. But that area was blacked out in the subway poster.

The drawing depicts Mondale as "a male stripper," illustrating his "obsequious" support from feminist groups, said Bob Guccione, Penthouse publisher.

"We feel Mondale's activities deserve such comment," Guccione said.

Koch, who supports the Democratic presidental candidate, disagreed.

"I felt it was obscene and shouldn't appear in the subways as a commercial ad," Koch said Saturday. "We do not permit racial or religious slurs in our subways and we certainly should not permit obscenity."

The mayor called Metropolitan Transportation Authority Chairman Robert Kiley on Friday and asked about the posters. Koch said Kiley told him that "he was in a difficult position because he did not like to perform the job of censor."

Koch noted that under the contract with Subway Advertising Co., a private firm that has a $10 million franchise for subway advertising, "the MTA has the right to make judgment on the appropriateness of copy."

The mayor said Kiley "took about an hour to think about it" before "he decided to withdraw it."

Koch said he objected to the poster not because he backs Mondale but because it was obscene.

"It would be an obscenity if it were President Reagan, former President Nixon, minister Jesse Jackson or Sen. Gary Hart. We don't permit obscenity directed at anyone to be commercially displayed in our subway system."

Widow to use funds to start cancer clinic

ST. GEORGE, Utah (AP) — A widow of one of the victims of fallout from open-air atomic bomb tests says she will use the $400,000 awarded her by a federal judge to start a southern Utah cancer clinic.

Lorna C. Bruhn was one of 10 plaintiffs included in a $2.6 million settlement ordered Thursday by U.S. District Judge Bruce Jenkins.

The judge found the government had been negligent in the 1950s and 1960s by not adequately protecting people living downwind of the nuclear blasts at the Nevada Test Site.

Jenkins ruled that the cancer that killed Mrs. Bruhn's husband was caused by exposure to fallout from the nuclear weapons tests. Bruhn, a former Dixie College president, died in 1964.

"Now we'll be able to generate funds from national foundations for the clinic," Mrs. Bruhn said Friday.

She said she has started the Arthur H. Bruhn Foundation to raise money for a cancer treatment clinic. The facility would be built near the Dixie Medical Center in St. George, Mrs. Bruhn said.

How soon any of the $2.6 million will be disbursed to the plaintiffs in the massive federal suit depends on whether government attorneys appeal. No decision had been announced on that Friday.

Mrs. Bruhn said she hoped to raise $280,000 for the clinic. Intermountain Health Care Inc. has pledged $250,000 in matching funds.

Democratic presidential candidate Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colorado, steps from the engine of a Burlington Northern train as he campaigns for the nomination Friday in Portland, Ore.

Democratic officials upbeat about November

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Publicly and privately, Democratic Party officials are upbeat about their chances of beating President Reagan despite some nagging questions about Walter F. Mondale's candidacy.

That was the mood over the past three days as party leaders, appearing firm in their support of Mondale, met in the city where their convention will choose a presidential nominee in July.

During the public meetings of the Association of State Democratic Chairs and the convention arrangements committee, the talk was about the opportunity that Democrats have to mobilize women and minorities into a coalition that could defeat Reagan in November.

Several participants in private sessions said the same mood was evident.

"There is a very strong feeling the guy (Reagan) unifies and mobilizes people," said Lynn Cutler, vice chair of the Democratic National Committee.

Ms. Cutler described the private sessions as "very upbeat, very optmistic."

The state party leaders had expected the meetings to be the start of an effort to unify the party behind Mondale. But two days before the session, Sen. Gary Hart beat Mondale in the Ohio and Indiana primaries and prevented the former vice president from all but locking up the nomination before the last round of primaries.

Willie Brown, speaker of the California Assembly, who is neutral in the presidential race, said he viewed the message to Mondale from Indiana and Ohio voters as "we don't think you can win the big one," a feeling that Mondale would lose to Reagan in November.

For the most part, state party leaders disagreed with that assessment.

"I have not seen any sign of nervousness," said Kathy Vick of Lousiana, president of the State Democratic Chairs.

One question being discussed by the Democratic politicians was what happens if Mondale loses most of the remaining primaries, particularly those on June 5, when California, New Jersey, New Mexico, South Dakota and West Virginia close out the primary season.

There was speculation about whether Mondale's big lead in delegates could evaporate under those circumstances.

"They're not bound and their support is weak," said a party leader who didn't want to be named.

"I don't think a winning candidate is in the race yet," he added, suggesting that someone might emerge at the convention to win the nomination from Mondale, Hart and the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

The Democrats rewrote their rules two years ago, abolishing the firm requirement that delegates follow the results of state primaries and caucuses.

The new rule says delegates have an obligation to follow the state results, but stops short of absolutely binding them.

"As delegates, people will not be automatons, there will be no robot rule," said national party chairman Charles T. Manatt.

But tradition has it that delegates stick with the candidate they were elected to support.

The Mondale campaign also points out that historically candidates who had a big delegate lead were unaffected by a series of late primary losses.

Hart: Mondale attacks out of desperation

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Sen. Gary Hart says Democratic presidential Walter F. Mondale's constant attacks are an act of "desperation" and that if the former vice president persists, "he will be the cause of disunity in the party, not me."

Hart also said Mondale is "whistling past the graveyard" with his campaign chairman's claim that the Democratic presidential nomination will be effectively wrapped up by the end of the primary season on June 5.

The Colorado senator, speaking in an interview aboard his chartered campaign airplane, insisted he would win the nomination, but predicted that the delegates he needs for victory may not swing over to his side until the Sunday before the Democratic National Convention opens July 16.

Hart spent the day campaigning in Oregon and he drew a large and enthusiastic crowds at an outdoor rally at Eugene, where he said, "we must not let this president have four more years in office when he will not be accountable to the American people."

Hart stressed an environmental theme in this state of outdoors' people and said Reagan should not be permitted to "ride roughshod over the environmental laws of this nation and chop up the environmental safeguards back in Washington. I say let's send him back to his ranch for good."

Hart arranged to spend part of his day on a white-water rafting trip on the Deschutes River in an outing that his staff said was designed to stress his commitment to the environment.

"I'm disappointed in Mr. Mondale, in the character of the attacks, the nature of them, the inaccuracy, the purposeful misstatements, mischaracterizations, the desperation of it," Hart declared Friday as he flew from Nebraska to Oregon — the two states holding presidential primaries next week.

The senator has been under pressure from some Democrats in recent weeks to mute his criticism of Mondale, especially after the former vice president's recent string of primary and caucus victories reestablished him as the front-runner in the race. But Hart stunned Mondale by winning primaries last Tuesday in Indiana and Ohio.

Hart said Mondale has been "preaching party unity" for the past two or three weeks.

Jackson says 'we must choose feeding world over killing world'

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — The Rev. Jesse Jackson, declaring Saturday that "we must choose feeding the world over killing the world," called on the United States to initiate an international conference on food.

"We need a new agriculture policy, an international agency that will put food above fighting," the black Democratic presidential candidate told about 1,500 people gathered in a downtown Omaha park.

Wearing a navy blue windbreaker and a gas station cap as he campaigned for support in Tuesday's Nebraska primary, Jackson shook hands with dozens of supporters who strained against security ropes to touch him or snap his picture as he left the rally.

Jackson emphasized the necessity of preserving the family farm as he capped a two-day campaign trip to Nebraska, a major producer of corn, wheat and other agricultural products.

"Those who work the longest and the hardest on the farm are going out of business," he said.

Computers invading courthouses

By TIMOTHY HARPER

NEW YORK (AP) — Arthur Damask arrived at the Bronx courthouse last week carrying the symbols of two eras of America trial techniques — a piece of chalk and a computer graphics video cassette.

Damask, a Queens College physics professor called to testify as an expert witness in a vehicular homicide case, had the chalk to draw blackboard diagrams — something witnesses have done for decades to help explain themselves.

He brought the video cassette in the hope the court would allow computer graphics to be admitted as evidence in a criminal trial for what legal experts said would be the first time.

As it turned out, he could have left the chalk at home.

Damask's testimony took almost the entire week at the manslaughter trial of 19-year-old Michael McHugh, accused of being drunk behind the wheel of his car when it erashed on a Bronx highway last year, killing four friends in the car.

Damask, being paid for his testimony by the defense, said the computer graphics — he called the videotape a "cartoon" several times — were his reconstruction of the accident. He also said the graphics, which he produced along with Arthur Paskin, another Queens College physics professor, showed McHugh could not have been the driver.

LAWRENCE Feitell, McHugh's attorney, argued that the graphics should be admitted because they were a type of map or chart, but with motion.

"Through the magic of the computer — er, through the science of the computer, we now have a visualization," Feitell said.

The debut of the computer simulation Wednesday afternoon marked the start of what might be a new era in trial tactics in America — and a lucrative new market for computer scientists.

The first part of this century was the era of courtroom oratory, when lawyers like Clarence Darrow and William Jennings Bryan swayed juries with wit and eloquence.

Then came the era of demonstrative evidence, when Melvin Belli and F. Lee Bailey hauled photos and blackboards and scale models and even skeletons into court to let jurors see for themselves. "Don't say it, show it," was the law school maxim.

The McHugh trial is an important step toward an era of evidence dominated by technology. Damask said that as computer graphics became more common in court and as clients become willing to spend more for them, his relatively crude home-computer graphics would be replaced by animation as vivid as anything in a video arcade or movie special effects.

Frank Burke, the prosecutor in the McHugh case, objected to the introduction of the computer graphics as "not a fair and accurate depiction." But Judge John Collins overruled Burke and admitted the graphics into evidence.

"EVERY NEW development is entitled to its first day in court," the judge said. "A computer is not a gimmick, and a court should not be shy about its use when proper." In this case, he said, the graphic could help the jury understand the defense's case.

The tape, shown on a television set, depicted McHugh's car — two small dots of white light on the screen — inching through two curving white lines that represented the rain-slick roadway. It showed the car missing the curve, sliding harmlessly onto a grassy area next to the road and then turning back onto the roadway.

At that point the car struck a smaller white light representing a utility manhole left uncovered alongside the road. A final segment of the film, which resembled an instant reply on a TV football game, then showed the car spinning counterclockwise out of control and smashing into a concrete retaining wall.

The jurors stared intently at the screen, some leaning forward but none visibly reacting as Damask narrated. The only person who made no effort to watch the tape was McHugh, a slender, red-haired youth who remained slumped silently in his chair at the defense table.

DAMASK testified that from where McHugh was found by police with a broken arm and internal injuries, the laws of physics dictated that he must have been thrown clear of the spinning wreck from the passenger's seat. The driver of the car must have been killed, Damask insisted.

The introduction of computer evidence will add an element to the way lawyers handle expert witnesses. As the trial continues this week, for example, Burke's cross-examination will have to take into account not only the two professors' credentials as physicists but also their abilities as computer programmers.

In the McHugh case, Burke is expected to recall Steve Coulon, a police accident investigator, as a rebuttal witness to Damask and the computer graphics. In earlier testimony, Coulon said the car had to have been traveling at more than 80 miles an hour. The computer graphics, however, were based on a speed of 45 mph, figured according to Damask's interpretation of physical evidence at the scene.

Such differences in programming, Rothstein said, are what juries will have to weigh when deciding whose simulation is closer to the truth.

nation in brief

O'Neill: House will vote to block MX missile funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., said Saturday the House will probably vote this week to block authorization of money for production of the MX missile.

"I want to announce here today that I believe we have the votes in the House of Representatives to stop the production of the MX," O'Neill said. "I am confident that we will put the brakes on this accelerating nuclear arms race by the end of the week."

In a commencement address at Salem State College in Massachusetts, O'Neill said, "We simply cannot afford to rush into a new generation of first-strike nuclear weapons without achieving an agreement to limit their deployment."

When it takes up a $208 billion defense authorization bill, the House is expected to vote on an amendment that would delete $2.5 billion earmarked for the MX, a land-based intercontinental missile that President Reagan says is a vital part of his military strategy.

O'Neill noted that similar motions on the MX fell short last year by margins of only 13 and nine votes.

Percy warns against war

WHEELING, W.Va. (AP) — Sen. Charles Percy, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, on Saturday called for President Reagan to travel to Moscow for nuclear disarmament talks with Soviet leaders.

Speaking at the Wheeling College commencement, the Illinois Republican said Reagan should take a strong initiative in seeking mutual disarmament. He called the threat of nuclear war "the paramount issue of our times."

In Washington, Peter Roussel, White House deputy press secretary, had no comment on Percy's statement.

Girl has liver transplant

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — A 3½-year-old Kansas girl has undergone a liver transplant at University of Minnesota Hospitals, less than a year after her younger sister received a new liver only to die of a brain hemorrhage.

Amee Bohrer of Wichita, Kan., remained in critical but stable condition after the six-hour operation Friday.

The surgical team was headed by Dr. John Najarian, chief of surgery at University Hospitals, who performed the same surgery on Amee's sister, Julie, on June 22, 1983, when she was 7 months old.

Julie died a month later of a brain hemorrhage which doctors said was not related directly to the transplant.

Criminal charges dropped

SCRANTON, Pa. (AP) — Criminal charges against a professional wrestler known as "Mr. Wonderful" were dropped because the elderly man he allegedly punched during a ringside brawl was unable to testify.

The Lackawanna County District Attorney's office on Friday dropped charges of aggravated and simple assault and recklessly endangering another person against wrestler Paul Orndorff of Atlanta, Ga.

The charges stemmed from an incident in which Elmer Biemueller, 81, of Scranton claimed he was punched in the face following an April 16 wrestling match at the Catholic Youth Center. He was hospitalized for six days with a broken nose and other injuries, said his attorney, Thomas J. Munley.

Girl pleads guilty to assault

ORANGE, Calif. (AP) — A 15-year-old girl pleaded guilty to assault with a deadly weapon in the near-fatal shooting of her younger sister after the district attorney's office dropped a charge of attempted murder.

Debbie Wissman of La Habra admitted shooting her 11-year-old sister, Amy, in the chest as the two watched television April 13.

Superior Court Judge Richard N. Parslow on Friday ordered the teenager to undergo psychological therapy under the supervision of the county probation office and set a May 25 hearing for sentencing.

Prayers may be stopped

MIAMI (AP) — Dade County's school superintendent says he may order coaches to stop "the not uncommon practice" of leading their teams in prayer before a game.

Instead, said Superintendent Leonard Britton, he may suggest a moment of silence, which is allowed under Florida law and school board regulations.

School board attorneys, in an opinion issued Friday, said the constitutional mandate for separation of church and state is violated when coaches lead prayers before athletic contests. Britton has not yet reviewed the lawyers' findings, but had said if they found the practice unconstitutional, he would order coaches to stop.

Team prayers — often the Lord's Prayer — have long been a tradition before football games and other high school athletic events in Dade

Man violated code by 'acting like a redneck'

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — John Wade Carter, in jail for killing a black man in what the state calls a racial slaying, says he violated his own code by "acting like a redneck."

The 20-year-old Carter said that to him, white "rednecks" are just as bad as blacks who "bully people when they got them outnumbered."

He was interviewed at the Hillsborough County Jail, where he is being held until he can be sent to a state prison to serve a 22-year sentence for murdering Wayne Everette Raines.

Carter said he was outraged at seeing Raines and Michael Fields, two black men, in a coffee shop with two white women in the predawn hours of March 25, 1983.

He and his pal Mark Cheek made some racial remarks, then waited outside the restaurant. When Raines and Fields left, Carter trailed them 10 miles to Interstate 275 where he opened fire, killing Raines and wounding Fields.

His attorney acknowledged the slaying, but called it the stupid act of a young man who had too much to drink and was trying to be more macho than his buddy. It wasn't the premeditated deed of a sober person, the defense insisted.

Originally, Carter was charged with first-degree murder and attempted murder. In his first trial, the jury couldn't agree on a verdict. A second jury convicted him of a lesser charge of second-degree murder.

Carter was sentenced earlier this month to 22 years for murdering Raines, and 15 years' probation for wounding Fields.

He said he's not proud of what he did. "I knew if I ever had to kill somebody, it would be for a good reason. But this was for no good reason. My self-esteem was lost after I realized what I had done."

Carter denied that he's a racist and said he's grateful for the sentence he received. "I think I got off pretty easy, considering I killed somebody."

Carter blamed alcohol. He said he was drinking constantly, all day long, in the months preceding the shooting.

In fact, he claimed he doesn't remember having a gun in his hand the night of the shootings. The only thing he can recall is glass shattering, which he figures must have been the passenger window of Fields' car.

"Two months before the shooting, I had become exactly what I looked down on. I was doing to other people what people had done to me. I was picking on people just to get my jollies."

Carter said he understands why he is perceived as a racist. He said he isn't, but acknowledged a distrust of blacks that dated back to grade school when he claimed he was routinely "picked on" by groups of blacks.

He said the blacks he objected to were "somebody bigger than you that will hassle you because they know they can beat (you)."

Carter labeled as "rednecks" whites who act the same way.

United Methodist Church maps strategy to end decline

BALTIMORE (AP) — The United Methodist Church, marking its 200th birthday in the United States, has mapped an ambitious strategy to end its recent decline and rejuvenate its impact on individuals and society.

Concluding its 11-day governing conference in the pre-dawn hours Saturday, church representatives spoke out on a variety of troubling issues.

They urged U.S. asylum for refugees from war-ridden Central America, denounced a resurgence of the Ku Klux Klan and called for a nuclear freeze and vigorous work against the arms race.

They applauded strengthening ties with China, advocated a restoration of U.S. diplomatic relations with Cuba and condemned restrictions on religious freedom.

Such freedom "involves much more than the right to worship quietly within the walls of a church," the conference declared, assailing limitations on churches in totalitarian states.

Delegates to the conference, which meets once every four years, set a hopeful goal of doubling church membership to 20 million by 1992.

Evangelism to spread the gospel and win others to faith was a recurrent emphasis of the conference, and the church's key Board of Global Ministries was directed to keep that task uppermost.

Under recent criticism that it has neglected that job in favor of projects to improve social conditions in this country and abroad, the board was told make sure the "Word" is extended with the deeds.

That balance — of preaching the faith and applying it in practical action — is a hallmark of Methodism, whose 200th birthday as a denomination in this country was celebrated by the conference.

A hardy handful of the 1,000 clergy and lay delegates even rode hundreds of miles on horseback to the conference, commemorating the early circuit-riding Methodist preachers who roved the American frontier in the first years of the nation.

Jailed mothers allowed visits with children in prison

CLINTON, N.J. (AP) — Shirley Green's children have seen her drunk, high on drugs and hustling on the street, but at first she was not sure if she wanted them to see her in prison.

But once she decided she did, a special program made it possible for her children to visit her at the state Correctional Institution for Women.

"I try to give them some insight that this is not the place to be," she said recently as two of her sons played basketball in the prison gym and she discussed family news with her daughter. "If they're doing something on the streets, they better get their acts together."

Mrs. Green, her three sons, daughter and grandson are among the 105 inmates and about 200 children involved in the 7-year-old Mother-Child Visitation Program, paid for in part by federal funds.

Children from seven New Jersey counties within a 1½-hour drive of the state's prison for women in this Hunterdon County community are picked up by a van. They eat lunch, play and take pictures with their mothers in the gym.

Visits go on three days a week for up to 15 children a day, permitting most to come about every six weeks.

"There's nothing cute about sitting here or (the children) coming here," said Mrs. Green, whose husband is in a Pennsylvania prison.

"But it gives me a chance to tell them I still think about them and my love is still with them."

Joanna Cassebaum, a prison social worker, said the visits are important to the children.

"The kids feel abandoned when their mother goes away," she said.

Many inmates hesitate about joining the program at first, ashamed that their children should have to visit their mothers behind bars.

"I tell them, 'If you tell them you did something wrong, they can handle that,'" said Mrs. Cassebaum, the mother of eight.

Most of the mothers cherish the opportunity to see their children and show them off to the other inmates, she said.

"Being a criminal doesn't make you a poor mother," Mrs. Cassebaum said.

HEALTH IMPROVEMENT DEDUCTABLE

If you make home improvements for health reasons, they can be deductible from your income tax. In order to qualify, the improvement must (1) Be prescribed by your physician; (2) Be directly related to medical care; and (3) exceed any increase in value to your property.

Here's a case in point: The Smith's 10-year old daughter suffered from an illness that made it dangerous to be exposed to dry, dusty air. Their physician prescribed a central air conditioning unit be installed so that the temperature and humidity could be controlled. The installation cost $1,300 and increased the value of the home$800. The $500 difference is deductable.

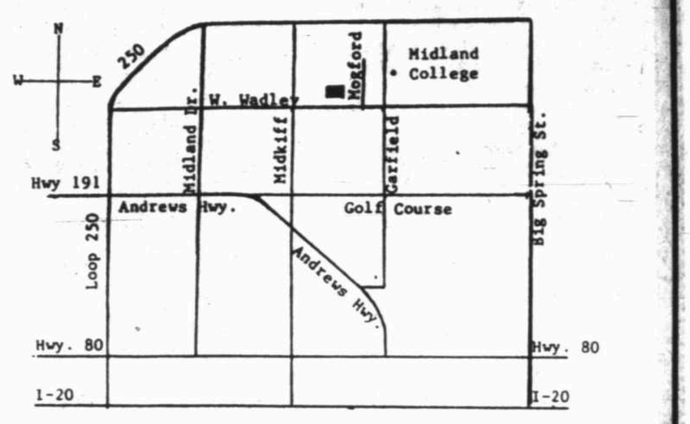

And there is a further break. The annual expeditures for running and maintaining these medical improvements qualify for the medical expense deduction.

Remember though, you will need a written recommendation for the improvement from your doctor and an estimate of its property value increase from an appraiser.

Israeli soldiers under attack in South Lebanon

EBEL SAKI, Lebanon (AP) — Almost every day the Israeli army in southern Lebanon comes under attack, by stone throwers, by Moslem zealots willing to die for a cause, by paid professionals with sophisticated weapons.

In the past year, there have been 508 incidents serious enough that the Israeli military classifies them as attacks. Seventy Israeli soldiers have been killed and 376 wounded.

But even more often, Israeli soldiers are confronted with sticks and stones, with boulders or felled trees across roadways to block their progress, with tires set afire to protest the occupation, with villagers shouting "Allah akbar" — God is great.

In retaliation, the Israelis use force. They fire quickly under attack, make arrests, seal off villages, force shops to close.

The cycle of resentment grows. It is such that even some who oppose the attacks in principle favor them at a distance.

In the market town of Nabatiyeh, a shopkeeper who would identify himself only as Mahmoud said it's "the Lebanese people, the ordinary people" who are harmed because of Israeli reaction to the attacks.

But then he added: "I like the idea of resistance, but not in crowded areas. They should do it outside."

The action-reaction cycle has become a familiar pattern in southern Lebanon as the predominantly Shiite Moslem population resists the Israeli presence.

Late in April, for example, a young man threw a grenade at a four-man Israeli patrol in Nabatiyeh's main square, seriously wounding one soldier, witnesses said.

The Israelis opened fire at the crowded square, hitting at least four civilians, including a woman who was having her hair done on her wedding day.

"This always happens," said an Israeli soldier. "We shoot back. All we can do is shoot in the direction it (a grenade) came from.

"They were wounded. We have no choice. You must understand, we have to shoot to get the person."

Mahmoud, the shopkeeper, complained that after the incident, the Israelis forced most of Nabatiyeh's shops to close for three days while an investigation was conducted. The Israelis didn't believe the shopowners' assertions that they hadn't witnessed the attack, he said.

The Israelis admit they do not always get their man. But some of the attacks on the Israelis are so rash as to seem destined to failure. Others are straightforwardly suicidal.

In another recent incident, a young man ran in front of an Israeli patrol in the port city of Sidon and opened fire with a machine gun. He was killed before he hit anyone.

On April 12, a Shiite Moslem named Ali Safieddin drove an explosives-laden car between two Israeli armored personnel carriers in the village of Deir Kanoun. He detonated his cargo, wounding four Israelis and killing himself.

Then there are the professional attacks. Here in Ebel Saki near the Israeli army frontline at the Litani River, Maj. Torlief Sandes said his Norwegian unit of the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon found two remote-controlled bombs beside the road on March 2 and arrested two men.

Prime minister tries to rebuild Lebanon

By G.G. LABELLE

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Prime Minister Rashid Karami's national unity government, struggling against historic divisions, faces the enormous task of rebuilding a nation that in some ways never existed.

Many people remember Lebanon before the outbreak of civil war nine years ago as peaceful and prosperous. But it bore seeds of destruction planted even before its independence from France in 1943.

In the struggle for independence, many Moslems resisted the plan to maintain the Christian-dominated entity of Lebanon. They favored a union with Syria to make them part of a larger Arab world.

The Christians feared such a union would see them swallowed up in an Islamic society. Some even wanted to remain under France.

But nationalists on both sides prevailed. An unwritten "national pact" divided political offices among the country's sects, based on estimates of their populations.

The pact produced a Lebanon in which life was freer than elsewhere in the Arab world and prosperity came, at least to some. But it perpetuated loyalty to religious sects, feudal families and even outside political movements rather than to the nation.

The fragile chain of statehood was continually strained — by a failed coup in 1949, by a forced presidential resignation in 1951 and by a civil war, albeit a small one, in 1958.

In 1975, the chain snapped. It is that chain Karami is trying to reforge.

Karami, a Sunni Moslem, spent nine previous terms as prime minister and may know the power plays and shifting alliances of Lebanese politics better than anyone. He also has the backing of Syria.

Karami headed off initial squabbling over the Cabinet by naming one without even consulting its members. President Amin Gemayel, a Maronite Christian who chose Karami as prime minister after tilting away from Israel and toward Syria, persuaded Christian members to serve.

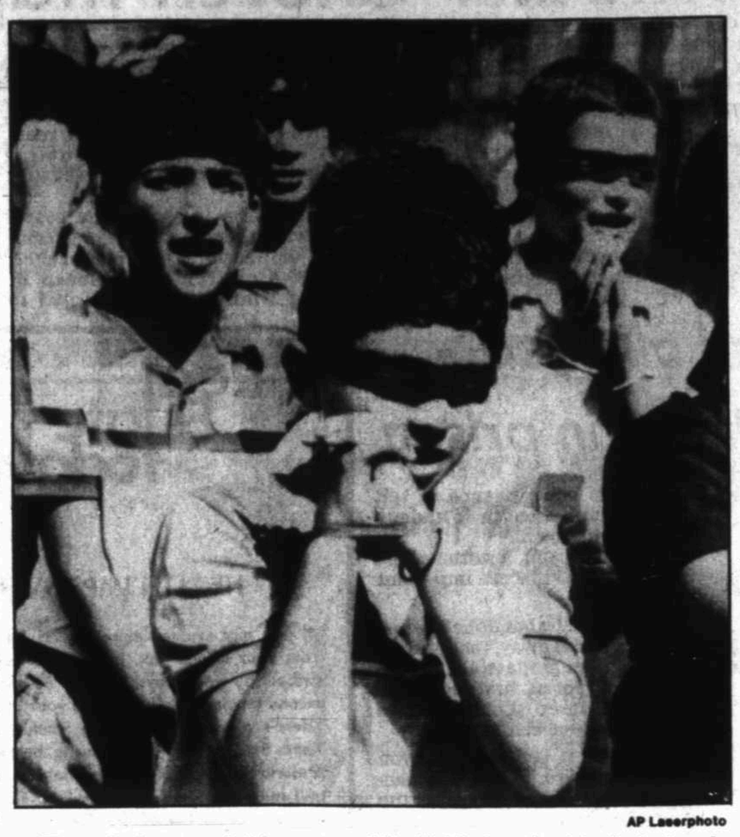

A bit of compromise and pressure from Syria, backer of opposition militias, brought in key Shiite Moslem and Druse members. The 10th member in the half-Moslem, half-Christian Cabinet is not yet convinced, but the Greek Orthodox Abdulla al-Rassi may still come around.

Karami and Gemayel have formed a government pledged to work for peace. It includes leaders whose militias for nine years have been killing each other's fighters, along with thousands of civilians.

It also takes up its task at a time that may be more ripe for peace than any in years, precisely because Lebanon is shattered.

This nation of traders has always prided itself in its vibrant economy. But since last September's renewal of fighting, the flow of money into the country has slowed to a trickle.

Arab nations have blocked goods from Lebanon, suspecting they came from Israel through the occupied south. Beirut's port and airport have been closed for more than three months. The educational system is a shambles. Many of the educated have fled.

AP Laserphoto

Three Lebanese children, two blindfolded and with their hands tied and one yelling, protest against the kidnapping of people by Lebanon's various militias. They were part of Lebanon's first peace march down west Beirut's main shopping street Saturday.

An Analysis

Something of a peace movement has developed. Two peace marches, the first such movements in years, were blocked by renewed fighting last weekend. That only increased public anger at what one woman called the determination of "the butchers" to silence the people.

Even newspapers that in the past avidly championed various militias have begun to write with resentment about the rule of the gun.

Karami brought old enemies together, but they also are men who have failed to solve Lebanon's problems in the past. Already they are arguing over reuniting the army, which split along sectarian lines over the past eight months, as it did in 1975.

They have not even gotten to the central issue. The Christians, as fearful today of being swallowed up as they were 40 years ago, still resist giving up power. The Moslems, who have grown into a clear majority, want their share.

There is the problem, too, of removing the Israeli and Syrian troops that together occupy two-thirds of Lebanon, a nation little larger than Connecticut. The tilt toward Syria has placated the Druse and Moslem militias, at least for the moment. But the Christian Lebanese Forces militia, Israel's chief ally, has begun sliding away from its traditional leaders and deriding Syrian "hegemony."

The militiamen are a problem themselves, both as individuals and tools of their leaders. Many know no life but fighting. They are paid for their work with money channeled from shadowy sources and take power from their assault rifles and grenade launchers.

All these problems face Karami and his government. A genuine cease-fire will be difficult enough, and Karami has pledged something beyond — "a march toward peace."

Few armies have faced a more difficult march.

Terrorists assassinate paper's editor

AMRITSAR, India (AP) — Sikh terrorists assassinated a leading Indian newspaper editor and critically wounded his two bodyguards today, setting off a wave of rioting and arson by angry Hindu mobs, police in the northern state of Punjab said.

Scores of fire engines were reported fighting fires around Jullundur, a major Punjabi city. One rioter was run over by a fire engine and killed, police said.

Authorities rushed armed police reinforcements to Jullundur.

Ramesh Chander, the editor, was shot several times while riding in a car in a downtown bazaar in Jullundur, 53 miles southeast of the holy Sikh city of Amritsar, police said.

Chander, 58, became the chief editor of the newspaper chain, which publishes Punjab's largest-circulation Punjabi- and Urdu-language dailies, after the assassination of his father, Jagat Narain, in 1981.

The slaying of the elder Narain was one of the first incidents in a wave of Sikh terrorism in Punjab, where some militants are demanding greater political and religious autonomy for Sikhs.

As many as 500 people have been killed in attacks in Punjab since 1981.

Police said angry Hindu mobs, protesting Chander's slaying, attacked Sikh-owned stores and vehicles in Jullundur. A bank, a library, 15 shops and 12 city buses were burned, police said, adding that rioters also had set fire to the government-run Press Information Bureau.

Indian President Zail Singh called Chander's slaying "a great blow to Indian democracy." Prime Minister Indira Gandhi and opposition leaders also expressed outrage.

Earlier today, paramilitary police said they seized a truck carrying a large quantity of arms near the historic Golden Temple in Amritsar and a senior Sikh leader threatened to immolate himself unless "sinful happenings" inside the shrine cease.

Jiwan Singh Umranangal, a leader of the Akali Dal party, said he would set himself on fire in public if Sikh militants "do not atone for the sins committed inside the temple complex" by June 15.

The elderly Sikh leader said the Golden Temple, the center of the Sikh religion, had been turned into a sanctuary for anti-social elements, smugglers and killers.

The government of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi claims the temple is being used as an arsenal by Sikh extremists.

A Punjab government spokesman said police seized four rifles, one submachine gun, one revolver, 20 grenades with Indian army markings, 718 cartridges and a large quantity of ammunition from a truck headed for the temple.

One paramilitary trooper was wounded when four Sikhs aboard the truck opened fire on a police patrol, said the government spokesman, who spoke on condition of anonymity. He said the four escaped on foot.

The interiors of the administrative offices of the 15th century Pitti Palace museum were destroyed after two explosions ripped through the ground floor injuring at least 10 people Saturday.

Explosions rip through museum in Florence

FLORENCE, Italy (AP) — Two explosions ripped through the ground floor of the 15th century Pitti Palace museum in Florence on Saturday, injuring at least 10 people, police said. None of the priceless paintings in the building were damaged.

A gas leak was believed to be the cause of the blasts.

Among the three people listed as most seriously injured was Mary Versterman, 33, from Chicago, Ill., a current resident of Florence.

The two explosions, which occurred almost simultaneously in the ground floor administrative offices at about 11:25 a.m., blew a 13-foot-wide hole in a frescoed ceiling and knocked out a main exit door.

Hundreds of people in the museum caused a near-stampede as they rushed outside in panic, said Florence Police Commissioner Umberto Catalano.

"It is almost 100 percent certain that a gas leak" caused the explosions, Catalano told a news conference. He said police had ruled out an earlier theory that a bomb may have been planted in the museum.

"The most probable hypothesis is that the gas filled the administrative offices and that the explosion occurred when someone lighted a cigarette," he said.

Catalano said investigators believed the gas entered the offices through a leaky pipe running through a 16th-century marble fountain.

Police official Bruno Frangipane told The Associated Press by telephone that 10 people were injured and were being treated for burns at local hospitals.

On the list of seriously injured were museum director Cristina Piacenti, 50, who was momentarily trapped by falling debris in her office when the blasts occurred, and museum guard Guiseppe Tognaccini, 45, who remained in the building to help visitors escape.

Catalano said that none of the art works inside the museum — including paintings by 16th and 17th century Italian masters — were damaged because they were housed on the upper floors of the palace.

The museum, in the historic center of this Tuscan capital of pastel buildings and Renaissance palaces, was showing an exhibition of paintings by the 16th-century master Raphael.

The blasts destroyed the walls and doors of administrative offices, cracked ceilings and shattered windows at the museum.

Sri Lanka intensifies search for kidnappers

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — Troops and police intensified their search Saturday for an Ohio couple abducted by Tamil separatists who left a letter saying they would kill their victims if they didn't receive $2 million in gold.

Sri Lankan and Indian navy boats patrolled the Palk Straits, separating the two nations, in search of the abduction gang.

Stanley Bryson Allen, 36, of Columbus, Ohio, and his wife, Mary Elizabeth Dayman, 29, were kidnapped Friday in the northern Sri Lankan city of Jaffna by eight members of an underground terrorist group who also demanded the release of 20 jailed rebels.

The kidnappers set a 72-hour deadline, ending at noon Monday, for acceptance of their demands. "There will be no negotiations," said a ransom note addressed to Sri Lankan President Junius R. Jayewardene. "If our demands are not met within 72 hours, we will kill a prisoner every six hours."

Vice President George Bush arrived in India on an official visit and was immediately briefed by U.S. Embassy personnel on the abduction. It was not known if he discussed the issue with Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi during a dinner meeting.

The U.S. government, in a statement released in Colombo, said it would not pay any ransom to the abductors. "It is the long-standing policy of the U.S. government that we do not pay ransom to kidnappers," it said.

The ransom demand was made to the Sri Lankan government, not to the United States.

Jayewardene has said his government will not pay ransoms to terrorists.

The People's Liberation Army, which claimed responsibility for the kidnapping, is the military wing of the Eelam People's Revolutionary Liberation Front, an obscure Marxist group.

India and the rebel organization denied a report by Lalith Athulathmudali, Sri Lanka's national security minister, that the kidnappers had escaped with the couple to the southernmost Indian state of Tamil Nadu by boat.

"This is absolutely incorrect," Tamil Nadu Chief Minister M.G. Ramachandran, the state's top elected official, told The Associated Press by telephone. "We only have Tamil refugees from Sri Lanka, no kidnappers."

The Liberation Front, in communiques delivered to news agencies, said the Americans were being held in Sri Lanka's Tamil-dominated Northern province. "The Sri Lankan government is trying to divert public opinion by issuing misleading statements," it said.

Allen is an engineer employed by the Ruhlin Corp. of Columbus, Ohio. He was working on water-supply projects funded by the U.S. Agency for International Development in Jaffna. He began work in Jaffna last October and then went back to Ohio to get married. He and his bride left for Sri Lanka on March 27, three days after their wedding.

In the ransom note, the abductors claimed Allen worked for the CIA.

Jaffna is a stronghold of Tamil extremists who want the majority Sinhalese to grant autonomy to the minority Tamils of Sri Lanka.

Tamils, whose ancestors came from the southern Indian state of Tamil Nadu, make up 18 percent of the island nation's 15 million population.

Twelve percent of them live in the Jaffna region, and many hope to win an independent homeland there called "Eelam."

Tamils claim they have been victims of discrimination in jobs, education and language policies by Sinhalese-dominated governments since the former British colony of Ceylon gained independence in 1948.

A leading Indian newspaper, India Today, printed a story saying 2,000 armed Tamil guerrillas are ready for battle and another 2,000-3,000 trained fighters are waiting for arms shipments from the Palestine Liberation Organization and other groups.

Jayewardene has said the separatists are backed by "international terrorist organizations."

Tamil separatists killed 13 soldiers in an ambush in Jaffna last July, triggering rioting by Sinhalese that left at least 400 Tamils dead and 130,000 homeless.

At least 50 people have been killed in a new round of violence in Jaffna district since late March. Most of the victims were Tamils, shot by government troops.

The government has said they were suspected terrorists.

Vice President Bush on mission to India

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Vice President George Bush on Saturday began his three-day mission to improve ties with India, and declared that the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan has upset the military balance in the region and created the world's biggest refugee problem.

"In our view, the most destabilizing factor to emerge in the region in recent years has been the brutal Soviet invasion and continuing war against Afghanistan," Bush told a banquet in his honor at the Presidential Palace.

The presence of more than 100,000 Soviet troops in that country, he said, "has fundamentally altered the strategic balance in the region and created the world's largest refugee population" — 3.5 million people, many of them in Pakistan. The Soviets entered Afghanistan in December 1979 to help the government put down a Moslem rebellion.

Bush said he looked forward to discussing the Afghanistan problem and other foreign policy differences with Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, who attended the banquet.

India, a friend of the Soviet Union, has refrained from publicly condemning the Soviet policy in Afghanistan and has recognized the Soviet-backed regime in Kabul.

Relations between the United States and India have been lukewarm.

Several major Indian newspapers said India could expect little from the Bush visit because the United States clearly has favored China and sells arms to India's rival, Pakistan.

It is the first trip to India by a top, elected U.S. leader since President Jimmy Carter visited in January 1978. At that time, both countries issued the "Delhi Declaration" of shared democratic ideals, good will and cooperation.

President Reagan met Mrs. Gandhi in Washington in 1982 and at the United Nations last year.

The vice president arrived in New Delhi in the midst of a diplomatic embarrassment for India involving the kidnap of an American couple by Tamil separatists in Sri Lanka.

Bush told the banquet that the United States recognizes the importance of a strong India as an anchor of regional stability.

"Good relations between a strong, free and united India and its neighbors also contribute to regional stability and the peaceful, economically progressing South Asia we seek," he said.

The vice president also said the United States welcomes India's efforts to improve relations with China and Pakistan.

Small quake shakes area near Rome

ROME (AP) — An earthquake shook the Umbria region northeast of Rome Saturday but caused no injuries, the Civil Defense Ministry reported.

The quake, which the National Geophysics Institute said measured 3.5 on the Richter scale, was the fourth major tremor to strike southern or central Italy in two weeks.

A ministry communique said more than 27,000 people were left homeless by the quakes, with most of the victims in the Abruzzo provinces of Frosinone, Isernia, L'Aquila and Chieti between Rome and Naples.

A quake in the Abruzzi area Friday caused two deaths from heart attacks and injured 10 people, officials reported.

They said inspectors have found more than 8,000 buildings damaged or destroyed from the tremors.

Civil Defense Minister Giuseppe Zamberletti toured the worst hit areas by helicopter and said the government would provide permanent housing for the homeless.

"There will be no need for prefabricated houses," he told a crowd in the town of Pizzone in Isernia. "The population affected by the earthquakes will move directly back into their homes or into new ones in the briefest period possible."

His ministry said it has delivered 3,500 tents and trailers to the stricken regions.

The latest tremor was centered at Monte Urbino, between the Umbrian hill towns of Assisi and Gubbio — the same epicenter as that of an April 29 quake that injured a dozen people and damaged hundreds of medieval buildings.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on a seismograph. Every increase of one number means the ground motion is 10 times greater.

A quake registering 4 is considered capable of causing moderate damage in populated areas.

Israeli soldiers kill guerrillas

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Israeli soldiers shot and killed two guerrillas who tried to ambush a patrol in the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River, the military command said Saturday.

The communique said the ambush occurred Friday night near the village of Idna in the western Hebron Mountains, about 25 miles southwest of Jerusalem.

It gave no further details and a spokesman said he had no information about the identity of the dead guerrillas.

Guerrillas rarely attack Israeli soldiers on the West Bank, but Palestinian youths often throw stones and fire bombs at them to protest Israel's occupation of the territory it captured from Jordan in the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

Anti-government rebels claim 73 hostages held in store

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Anti-government rebels claimed they were holding 73 hostages today in a grocery store, a day after Jose Napolean Duarte marked his presidential victory by appealing for help from Salvadorans to stabilize the country's shaky political structure.

In other developments in El Salvador, a rebel radio station reported Friday that guerrillas freed a former Salvadoran defense official held for nearly two years in exchange for eight jailed leftist leaders.

At the grocery store, at least three people were wounded in a shootout between rebels and police who foiled a holdup at the checkout counter, authorities said. The rebels said they would release the hostages if they were given safe passage to a Contadora country.

"What we want is to leave here," a rebel inside the store said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press. The rebel said the guerrillas had explosives and "enough (weapons) to last a long time."

The hostage-takers claimed they were members of the Clara Elisabeth Ramirez Front, a guerrilla faction that broke off from the Popular Liberation Forces guerrilla group last year.

THE ULTRARIGHTIST party of Roberto d'Aubuisson, Duarte's challenger in the May 6 presidential election run-off, quickly denounced the Central Election Council's announcement Friday of Duarte's victory. The Republican Nationalist Alliance party called the election a "farce."

Official tallies gave Duarte 752,625 votes, or 53.6 percent, and d'Aubuisson 651,741, or 46.4 percent. Leftists boycotted the election.

Members of d'Aubuisson's party charge fraud and U.S. interference in the election. U.S. officials have said privately they preferred a Duarte victory because if d'Aubuisson won, Congress might oppose more aid to El Salvador.

D'Aubuisson has been linked with right-wing death squad activity, but he has denied the charges.

Duarte, a moderate Christian Democrat, appealed to the populace for help in ending the nation's civil war.

"I call on the people to help me destabilize that machinery they (the far right) have in place, which is based on death squads and in destabilizing institutions," Duarte, 58, said in a telephone interview Friday.

AT A NEWS conference, Duarte signed a pact with the Democratic Action Party. The pact commits the two parties to work together for human rights, economic recovery, peace and democracy.

Radio Venceremos' report on the freeing of the ex-defense official called the prisoner exchange a step toward peace. It was believed to be the first official prisoner exchange in the 4½-year-old civil war between the leftist guerrillas and the U.S.-backed government.

A Defense Ministry spokesman also announced that Col. Adolfo Castillo was freed Thursday afternoon but said nothing about the release of leftists.

However, a government source who asked not to be identified for security reasons said Castillo was freed after the Defense Ministry ordered the release of several rebel commanders and leftist labor leaders who had been held in prisons throughout the country.

The Armed Forces press office said in a brief statement that Castillo left for Europe after being freed.

Radio Venceremos identified only one of the eight prisoners. It said one was Mercedes Aguinada, known as Commander Galia, who was captured last June.

CASTILLO, A former deputy minister of defense, was the highest-ranking member of the army ever to fall into rebel hands. He was captured June 18, 1982, when guerrillas shot down a helicopter over Morazan province, a rebel stronghold about 110 miles northeast of San Salvador.

Also Friday, the Honduran government ordered Nicaraguan Ambassador Edwin Zablah to leave the country within 48 hours.

Honduras was reacting to the shooting down of a Honduran helicopter Tuesday over Nicaragua, in which four members of the Honduran armed forces and four civilians were killed. Honduras says the aircraft was blown off course.

The Sandinistas have said the helicopter incident resulted from the Honduran government's policy of allowing its territory to be used as a staging ground for CIA-supported Nicaraguan rebels.

In Panama City, hundreds of opposition activists marched to the Supreme Election Tribunal on Friday to publicize their claim that the vote count in Panama's presidential election is a fraud favoring the government candidate.

They support Arnolfo Arias Madrid, 82, who has been elected president three times before and thrown out each time.

Spanish delegation sources say Chernenko looked ill

MOSCOW (AP) — Sources in the delegation with visiting Spanish King Juan Carlos said President Konstantin U. Chernenko appeared to be ill last week, but the Soviet leader looked fit at a later public appearance.

The conflicting impressions are typical of the speculation that has surrounded the issue of Chernenko's health since he took office as party chief and head of state.

Chernenko, 72, was seriously ill with pneumonia last year and failed to attend the May Day celebration on Red Square.

Since he took power in February, it has been widely reported that he suffers from the respiratory ailment emphysema. When appearing on Soviet television he frequently seems short of breath and sometimes struggles to speak.

The latest reports about his health came from members of the Spanish delegation who are accompanying Juan Carlos and Queen Sofia on a 10-day trip to the Soviet Union.

The sources said Chernenko needed the help of aides to walk to an area in front of the Kremlin when he greeted the royal couple on their arrival Thursday.

They also said he appeared frail and his hands trembled. At a Kremlin dinner in honor of the king and queen, the Soviet leader easily delivered a toast.

Lars Saga, the leader of a group of wild-wolf hunters, proudly displays a wolf bagged by his group, after it was brought to Oslo's Parliament building in January. Last year, the Norwegian government set a bounty for one of Norway's few remaining wolves.

Conservationists fight to re-establish wolves

GLAND, Switzerland (AP) — The wolf has roamed through history as man's age-old foe. Now, after a unique, 12-year program in Italy, the World Wildlife Fund has reversed ancient fears and hopes to return the wolf to the rest of Europe.

The program, dubbed the "Save The Wolf Campaign," has already doubled the wolf population in Italy by changing people's traditional hostility towards "Canis Lupus," — the European Gray Wolf.

The "Save the Wolf Campaign," pioneered by program chief Luigi Boitani, led to a ban on hunting, the outlawing of poisoned bait, the establishment of protected areas and compensation for farmers whose livestock are killed by wolves.

The Gland-based conservation organization said recently about 250 wolves now roam isolated mountain regions in the central and southern Apennines, one of the few parts of heavily populated Western Europe where the species still survives.

And the wolf's natural prey, the red deer, has also been successfully reintroduced in the Abruzzo National Park in central Italy and in the Maiella area in southern Italy.

After demonstrating that people's almost instinctive hatred of the elusive carnivore can be changed, the World Wildlife Fund intends to repeat its success in Spain, Portugal, Greece, Scandinavia and other parts of Europe.

U.S. conservationists also are using the Italian project to support their battle with hunters and farmers in the United States.

There, the only self-sustaining wolf population is in Minnesota and the National Sierra Club estimates that out of a population of 1,200 about 250 to 400 are killed illegally each year.

While conservationists and farmers in North America argue whether it is necessary to kill the wolves to protect deer populations, in Europe the deer are being reintroduced to allow the wolves to survive.

Elsewhere the wolf's future seems secure only in the Soviet Union with a wolf population estimated at 50,000 to 100,000; in Canada, with 45,000 to 50,000, and in Yugoslavia with 2,000 to 2,500.

But in Western Europe, it is another story. In England, the wolf has long since passed into legend since the last one was killed in the reign of Henry VIII (1509-47) and the Scottish wolf became extinct in 1741.

In Bulgaria hunters killed 15,000 wolves between 1954 and 1969, leaving about 100 wolves alive today.

But even though the wolf has been ruthlessly hunted down and no longer is threatening to man, old prejudices die hard.

Last year the Norwegian government paid hunters the equivalent of $2,880 to kill one of Norway's few remaining wolves, believed responsible for killing hundreds of sheep. The successful hunters took the corpse to Parliament building in a triumphant motorcade to show it to legislators.

Only about 15 wolves are thought to remain in Norway, most along the border with Sweden and Finland.

An attempt a few years ago to reintroduce the wolf into West Germany's extensive Bavarian forests bordering Czechoslovakia also failed.

"The wolves didn't stay where they were put and local villagers became so excited that they hunted and killed them," said Peter Kramer, the World Wildlife Fund's director of conservation.

The fund is now busy launching a wolf program in the Bragonza region in the northeastern part of Spain and in Portugal.

Australian team searching for MIA soldiers in Vietnam

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — An Australian team searching for men missing in action from the Vietnam War has flown from Hanoi to southern Vietnam to collect information, the official Vietnam News Agency reported Saturday.

The agency said the group met in Hanoi with Vietnamese officials to obtain information on six Australians who did not return after the war and who were not known to be dead.

The five-man group includes officials of Australia's foreign affairs and defense ministries.

The Australians fought alongside American forces against the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong communists.

Chinese palace unearthed

PEKING (AP) — Archaeologists have discovered the site of a palace from the third century B.C. near the ancient capital of Xian, the official Chinese news agency reported on Saturday.

Xinhua said that the remains of Wangyi Palace in Xianyang, just west of Xian in central China's Shaanxi Province, were unearthed after a year's study.

Objects discovered at the 500-yard-long site include tiles, hollow bricks and shards of Qin Dynasty murals.

The first emperor of unified China, Qin Shihuangdi, founded the short-lived Qin Dynasty (221-207 B.C.) and protected his tomb to the east of Xian with an army of life-size terra cotta soldiers, unearthed by peasants in 1974.

Garden sprinklers banned

LONDON (AP) — The use of garden hoses and sprinklers was banned Saturday in a million households in the southwest England counties of Devon and Cornwall because of a six-week drought, water authorities reported.

In Wales, where forest fires destroyed millions of dollars worth of timber in April, a similar ban on 427,000 households starts Monday, said Dick Lillicrap, spokesman for the Welsh Water Authority.

"I hope everyone will help us to reduce demand because the water poured onto someone's lawn today could be his pot of tea for September," he said.

England and Wales had the driest April since 1957.

Lee has many shoes to fill

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The Midland Lee Rebels, looking to fill the shoes of 55 departing seniors, completed the first full week of football's spring training Friday with a two-hour scrimmage and new head coach Jack Tayrien is pleased with the results so far.

"We're inconsistent on both offense and defense, but we expected to be," said Tayrien. "But we have some great battles for positions going on and the kids are competing well. That's what we wanted to see.

"We scrimmaged in 103 degree weather Friday and this has been the hottest spring we've had since I've been here. Usually, we have a break in the weather at some point, but not this past week. It takes a special breed of cat to work in spring training anyway with no real games to look forward to, but it has been difficult this year with the heat. Still, the kids are working hard and I'm pleased with the effort we have had."

Positions are there for the taking since Lee lost so many seniors from last year's 13-3 state finalist squad and Tayrien is keeping an eye out for talent on all fronts.

Jake Young and Darrell Robinson have been waging a war at left guard and both have looked good. Anthony Dickens, David Almon, Mike Hubbard and Robert Johnson are all in the battle for tight end while Paul Stiles and Wade Wiesepape have been impressive at center.

The defensive front also has plenty of competition as expected. John Wurster, Wayland Jennings, Todd Cantrell and Chad Bullard are fighting for two defensive tackle slots while Mark Webb, Lee Forrest and Hubert Baker have looked good at defensive end. Mike Rittenberry will join that battle this week since baseball is now over.

In the defensive secondary, Chris Embrey and Tom Denton are battling at the strong corner slot while Terry Young and Kevin Witt are at the weak corner. Chris Kinney and Harold Woods, back from track, are at halfback. Returning starter Earl Davis has looked good at safety.

"The linebacking positions is a real concern for us so far," noted Tayrien. "We have some talent there, but injuries have hurt us in that area. We haven't had all the linebackers together in any one practice."

Brad Pearce has a bad shoulder. Tony Brown has a sprained ankle and Todd Mitchell has a neck brace after a car accident.

'Dogs McCutchen sees positive signs

By BRUCE CASTLEBERRY
Sports Writer

While Midland high football coach Doug McCutchen admits his charges have "a long way to go," the Bulldog mentor has seen positive signs in his initial spring football workouts at MHS.

"We've been real pleased with their progress so far," McCutchen said Friday after a grueling, two-hour scrimmage at Memorial Stadium. "On one hand, we're not as far along as I'd like. But on the other hand, we're about as far along as we can be."

McCutchen and his new MHS staff have plenty to think about. They not only begin a new era at the school, but face interesting problems in turning around last year's 4-6 showing. MHS is sporting a new look on offense, the Veer, and although replacing last year's passing whiz (quarterback James Welborn) won't be easy, McCutchen's offense showed promise Friday.

"It's a slow process," the coach said. "Our defense is coming around more right now because they're getting more recognition of our offense."

MIDLAND HIGH'S offensive scheme will reflect the new coaching philosophy. Under departed Pat Culpepper last year, the Bulldogs were a pass-happy bunch. Welborn keyed the aerial display with a fleet, solid receiving corps of Allan Foret, Darrell Davis and Todd Shiplet. Culpepper, Welborn and Shiplet are gone, but Foret, Davis and Darren Thorpe should handle the chores effectively.

"We have an outstanding group of people there," says McCutchen of his receivers. "They're going to be very experienced and capable of making big plays."

However, Midland High won't necessarily step off the bus throwing the football. Using the Veer offense, McCutchen and the 'Dogs will go towards a more run-oriented mode.

In Friday's scrimmage, the Veer was providing a few power slashes off tackle. And McCutchen kept the attack open. MHS plans on having more than one gun ready for the 1984 District 4-5A shooting match.

"Our running backs have been running extremely well," McCutchen said of the first week of activity. "They've done much better than we expected. The offense is totally different to them but I've been pleased by the effort."

At quarterback, MHS seeks to replace Welborn with a more mobile type. The Veer requires option running from the signal caller. "It's really up in the air there, because we've changed the offense so drastically," McCutchen said.

DEFENSIVELY, McCUTCHEN thinks his team is moving faster, but there are problems. The defensive line, anchored by returnee Brad Edgar, has "done a real good job" according to the coach, and indications are the trenchmen could be a big factor for the MHS fortunes.

Hager beats Davis for shot put title

Lee's Brackens fifth in 400; Relay team sixth

From Staff and Wire Reports

AUSTIN — Odessa Permian's Britt Hager, who had never thrown over 60-feet in his career, won the state shot put championship here Saturday morning with a toss of 60-6¼.

Midland High's Darrell Davis, who went into the meet as the shot put favorite, ended up third with a 58-6¼. Davis had a 60-8½ last week in Lubbock's Region I meet, the best throw in the state this year. But Davis couldn't match another toss of 60-feet this year and Hager, the District 4-5A champion, took the whole ball of wax.

Midland Lee's Marc Brackens finished fifth in the 400 meters with a 48.3, a time that wasn't a season best. Texarkana's Rod Haley won that event with a blazing 45.5, a time that tied the state record.

Midland Lee's 1600-meter relay team finished sixth with a season best 3:17.3 with John Lewis, Craig Swearingin, Walter Jones and Brackens on the team. Dallas Roosevelt won the event with a record setting 3:09.0 while Texarkana was second with a 3:09.8.

Permian's Jason Leach tied his season best of 10.1 in the 100 meters, but finished second to Fort Worth Southwest's Greg Sholars, who set a new state record of 9.9. It was the second fastest schoolboy wind-aided time in history. Mike Taylor of Shreveport ran a 9.8 wind-aided 100 meter only a year ago.

Leach was also third in the 200 meters with a 21.6.

Permian also got a fifth in the sprint relay with a 41.1 and a fifth from Bruce Bennett (1:55.3) in the 800. Odessa High's Reggie Jones placed second in the 100 hurdles with a 13.7. San Angelo's Thomas Emmons was fourth in the 1600 run with a 4:18.2

Junior Roy Martin led the Dallas Roosevelt Mustangs to the Class 5A championship, Panhandle took Class 2A, and Bremond captured the Class A title in the state schoolboy track and field championships Saturday.

Martin anchored Roosevelt's climactic 1600-meter relay victory that clinched the championship.

The Mustangs had a swift time of 3:09.0 in the event and the Texarkana Tigers were second in 3:09.8. Houston Sterling was disqualified after placing second.

Roosevelt's time was a state record, beating its old mark of 3:09.5.

Martin was the 200 meter winner in 20.8 seconds and anchored Roosevelt's third place finish in the 400 meter relay.

The Mustangs got another first place when Johnny Coleman won the 300-meter intermediate hurdles in 37 seconds flat.

Roosevelt scored 52 points. Houston Forest Brook and Odessa Permian had 30 each to tie for second place.

Wilmer-Hutchins was fourth with 28 while Texarkana and Houston Sterling each had 26.

San Antonio Jay and Fort Worth Southwest each scored 20.

Tied for eighth were Killeen and Gregory-Portland with 18 each.

In Class A, Bremond scored 58 points to 32 for runnerup Bruceville-Eddy.

Claude was third with 26 and Tenehah was fourth with 24. Amherst and Roscoe tied for fifth with 22.

In a three-way tie for seventh with 20 points were Anton, Cushing and Snook.

Knox City, Loveta, and Nacogdoches Central Heights, tied for 10th with 16 points each.

In Class 2A, Panhandle compiled 48, edging Kerens by four points..

Finishing third was Grapeland with 29 followed by Waskom 20, and Clint and Longview Springhill with 18.

Tatum had 16 while Hawkins, Itasca, Somerville had 14 apiece.

Roddie Haley of Texarkana ran a brilliant 45.5 in the 5A 400 meter dash which was the sixth best of all-time. It tied the state record set by Anthony Ketchum of Needville in 1981.

Barry Johnson of Amherst was a double winner in the hurdles while Stanley Kerr of Snook won both sprints in Class A.

Panhandle clinched its state title by winning the 1600 meter relay with Stacy Rusk running a strong anchor leg.

Panhandle had a time of 3:20.2 with Tatum second in 3:20.4.

Cubs lose in 11th inning, 12-7

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Dave Clements' three-run homer, his second of the night, in the 11th inning ended the Arkansas-Midland Texas League game somewhat short of 25 innings as the Travelers took their second straight over the Cubs, 12-7.

It was all tied up at 7 going into the 11th and after five scoreless innings, there were visions, for the more imaginative, of a duplication of last week's Milwaukee-White Sox game. But for the Cubs, there was nothing lucky about either the 7 or the 11.

Ed Tanner, who had singled, was on first, but two were out when Jorge Carpio, Midland's fourth pitcher, walked Todd Worrell, a pinch-hitting pitcher, on a 3-2 count. Clements then unloaded on a 2-0 pitch to spoil the night for 1,313 fans.

Carpio walked Mark Schulte and just for good measure Bob Geren hit his second homer in two nights for a 12-7 victory.

SO CARPIO, who has three of Midland's eight wins in relief, now has one of Midland's 24 losses.

Both teams wound up with four homers each. Jeff Jones hit two for Midland while Darrin Jackson and Joe Henderson also connected. The difference was in walks. Four Cub pitchers gave nine walks, five of which came back to haunt, while five Traveler hurlers issued two walks, one intentional, and neither of which figured in the scoring.

History isn't appreciated by some

Some people have no appreciation of history and, therefore, fail to recognize the significance of a "happening," or its contribution to the evolution of mankind.

The Mrs. is one of those. If we had been lucky enough to be with the little guy with the chronic case of angina at Waterloo, she would have said, "I wish, when we planned this tour, we had landed at Dunkirk, instead."

On that July 4 back in 1863 when Pickett was approaching the Bloody Angle on Cemetary Ridge, she'd have wondered why we just hadn't stayed in Chambersburg.

She's the type who would have huffed, "You would pick Dec. 7, 1941 for a vacation in Hawaii."

THAT'S why I wasn't surprised at her reaction to the game-in-progress reports the other night when the White Sox were playing the Milwaukee's.

She was watching something about Whitaker Chambers-Alger Hiss in the den while I had the Braves game on in the bedroom. When I brought in the glad-tidings that Milwaukee had come up with three runs in the top of the 21st inning to take a 6-3 lead, she responded predictably. "Can't you imagine the relief of those people in the stands. How long did the game take?"

When I offered the piece-de-resistance, "Then, the White Sox scored three in the bottom of the 21st," she swooned. Then, she got angry, "And you'd have sat through every minute of it!"

I was glad supper was over. I knew I wouldn't have gotten any in her present rebellious state.

When it was later reported that the game went 25 innings, the second longest in baseball history, in point of innings played, I prepared to duck, but then remembered that since neither of us smoke, there were no ashtrays handy.

IT ALL started back in 1946 at Ebbets Field. It was a late September game between the pennant-bound Brooklyn Dodgers and Philadelphia Phillies, who that year were disguising themselves as the Blue Jays.

Dodgers leading 8-5 with two out in the ninth and Hugh Casey pitching. I suppose I was even the one who suggested we leave. The game was over wasn't it? When you've got money in the bank, it's in the bank, right?...unless there's a holdup.

After our departure, the Blue Jays rallied to win...it may have taken extra innings...but they won.

The real significance of what I had done didn't dawn until several years later when in reading an article about the "10 Greatest Comebacks in Baseball", there it was listed around No. 6 or so. The Phils rally opened the door for the Cardinals, who won the pennant and met the Red Sox in the World Series.

It was then I made the vow.

SO, ON that fateful Aug. 4, 1954, in Ebbets Field, there was no question when it started to rain, runs, that is.

Two were out in the eighth inning and no runs in. Then, the Dodgers started scoring and the outcome soon became apparent. She was the Mrs. by this time, and was tugging at my arm. "Let's go. Not even the Blue Jays could pull this one out," she pleaded.

"No," I was firm, "Something may happen."

What happened was that the Dodgers scored 13 runs after two were out, a major league record...and I saw it.

Years later, Bobby Adams became general manager of the Midland Cubs' first Texas League entry. Adams had played in that game, so I asked him what it was like. He made out like he didn't remember it.

"I think you are thinking of that game in 1952 when we were playing the Dodgers in Ebbets Field and they scored 15 runs in the first inning. I thought the inning would never end." He sounded just like my wife.

I assured him he was mistaken and that his memory was slipping. "It was the eighth inning and it was 1954 and the Dodgers scored 13 runs not 15." But I looked it up later, just to prove it.

There it was, "Cincinnati-Brooklyn, May 21, 1952. It was listed as a National League record for Most Runs First Inning by Both Clubs, Brooklyn 15, Cincinnati 0. It happened and I missed it. I wept until daybreak at my foul, pardon the term, luck.

1942 — Pitcher Jim Tobin of the Boston Braves hit three consecutive home runs in defeating the Chicago Cubs at Braves Field.

1958 — San Francisco Giants teammates Willie Mays and Darryl Spencer each collected four long hits as San Francisco beat the Dodgers at Los Angeles 16-9. Mays had two homers, two triples and a single (four RBI), and Spencer had two homers, a triple and a double (six RBI) for a combined 28 total bases.

Rivas joins injury-plagued linebackers

One of the key positions the Rebels have been looking at is fullback. Randy Ellis appears to have the edge, but Ronnie Pertile and Chris Alexander have had a good spring.

Quarterback is another key slot the Rebs must fill. During the first week, Tuey Rankin, Gary Powell, Bryan Wurster, Will Thompson and freshman Rodney Johnson have all been given a good look. Dirk Bergoon and Danny Gonzales, both baseballers, will join that battle Monday.

At the receiver slot, Doug Cummings, Michael Brown and Dexter Traylor have looked good, but track will give up Marc Brackens and John Lewis to that battle Monday also.

With key halfback Walter Jones, who had over 1,100 rushing yards last year, involved with track, Lonnie Dixon has come up with a good spring. Track's Craig Swearingin will also be out Monday at the left half spot.

Tyrone Thurman, another starter last year, has looked good at the right half post, but Rodney Sims and James Brown have had a good spring there too.

"The top priority this week will be to work on consistency," said Tayrien. "We haven't been consistent, sometimes looking good and bad on alternate plays. Our inexperience is showing, but we expected that."

Lee will end the spring grind May 24 with the annual Maroon-White game at Memorial Stadium. "We don't know what kind of format we will use yet. We've talked about different options and we may end up doing like last year where the No. 1 offense and defense takes on the rest of the squad."

Gamblers rip Maulers

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Jim Kelly rifled a league record-tying five touchdown passes, including three to Richard Johnson and a 48-yard bomb to Ricky Sanders, as the Houston Gamblers routed the Pittsburgh Maulers 47-26 Saturday night in the United States Football League.

Kelly threw for 264 yards and four touchdowns in leading the Gamblers to a 34-7 halftime lead. He finished by completing 15 of 29 passes for 307 yards.

The five scoring passes, tying a mark also set by three other USFL quarterbacks this season, give Kelly 28 for the season, breaking the fledgling USFL's previous record of 27 set last season by Bobby Hebert of Michigan.

A rookie from nearby East Brady, Pa., Kelly — despite nursing a sore elbow — threw three of his scoring strikes during a 24-point Gamblers' second quarter as ouston handed the Maulers their 10th loss in 12 games.

Secondary, kicking game need work

The secondary and the kicking games need the most immediate attention. Of the backfield, McCutchen says "This is an area where we had major changes in our defensive philosophy. They have a lot more to learn."

The Bulldogs haven't had time to iron out the serious details of special teams. McCutchen plans work on that area this week. Until then, establishing the Bulldogs' plan of attack and implementing it are the major concerns.

THE BULLDOGS have been injury-free for the most part in the spring, but there has been a notable one. Keith Byrd broke his leg in practice last week. Byrd was currently listed as a starter at running back and at strong safety. Brian DeBose, a backup, underwent knee surgery last week and is also lost for the spring.

Flanker-free safety Foret, a returning speedster, has continued to be plagued by a bad back that hampered him throughout the track and baseball season. Foret has missed about half of the workouts. "Other than that, we've got just the regular bumps and bruises," said McCutchen.

"I'd say we're pretty much on schedule," he said. "We've got our offense in now, but we're not executing yet."

Still, McCutchen has seen good things, and is especially happy with the work of his offensive linemen. "They're doing a good job of opening holes and giving good pass protection. Right now, they're our strength."

McCutchen's Veer attack will depend on strong, mobile interior linemen, so their development is positive for the Bulldogs.

Phillies nip Padres

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Len Matuszek drilled a two-run homer in the top of the ninth inning to lead the Philadelphia Phillies to a 3-2 victory over the San Diego Padres Saturday night.

The shot by Matuszek was the eighth hit allowed by San Diego pitcher Andy Hawkins, 3-1, who had escaped several jams earlier in the game. But there was no escape for Hawkins when Matuszek ripped a pitch some 400 feet into the right-field seats, giving Philadelphia a 3-1 lead.

The win went to Bill Campbell, 3-0, who pitched the eighth inning in relief of Phillies starter Marty Bystrom. Al Holland pitched the ninth, picking up his sixth save after giving up an RBI single to Graig Nettles.

San Diego went ahead 1-0 in the third when pitcher Andy Hawkins singled with one out and moved to second on a single by Tony Gwynn. Alan Wiggins walked to load the bases and Hawkins came in on Nettles' sacrifice fly.

Philadelphia tied the game with a two-out run in the fifth. Ossie Virgil doubled to left and scored on a bloop single to right by Ivan DeJesus.

Hassler should be considered illegal

JACKSON'S LEAD off homer in the first and back-to-back homers by Jones and Henderson to open the second gave Midland a quick 3-0 lead. Starter Jeff Fruge, in a fit of generosity, quickly sqaundered his spoils. A couple of walks, a double by Tanner, a single by Bob Helsom, another walk and Clements' three-run homer made it 6-3 in the third.

Dave Stryffler's solo homer with two out in the fifth made it 7-3, but the Cubs rallied for four in the fifth to tie it. Singles by relief pitcher Jim Boudreau, Jackson and an rbi single by Gary Varsho produced one run. Dan Norman's fly to left got home another and Jones' second homer to left made it 7-7, all off starter Allen Moriock, who significantly left after five without issuing a walk.

THAT'S THE way it remained as Boudreau and Jeff Moscaret held the fort in three-hit style for 5 1/3 innings for Midland and Marty Mason, John Martin and eventual winner Andy Hassler did the same for the Travelers.

Clements wound up with four hits and six rbi for Arkansas while Jones also had a four hit night, two singles to go with the homers, and three runs-batted-in.

CUB-ICLES—Antonio Cordova, playing left for Midland, made the defensive play of the night, roaming into center to pull in Kurt Ford's blast, whirling off the wall at the angle under the clock to make the catch...Ford hit only one homer in 1982 and then switched to the outfield last year and hit 15...Former major leaguer Andy Hassler, who slammed the door on the Cubs' fingers for the second straight night, should be declared illegal...Boudreau hit a double and single in his only two plate appearances and Fruge also got a hit...Manager Dave Bialas used four pinch hitters and got three hits and a walk out of it...

Riley expects series to get tougher

AP Laserphoto

Los Angeles center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar (33) leaps for a rebound over Phoenix forward Mike Sanders Saturday.

NBA Playoffs

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Los Angeles Coach Pat Riley, whose well-rested Lakers opened the Western Conference finals with a 110-94 victory over Phoenix Saturday afternoon, said he expects the series to get tougher for his club.

"This game will be an education for (Suns Coach John) MacLeod," said Riley. "He's one of the best at preparation, and believe me, Phoenix will be well-prepared for the next game.

"We had three days off, but the Suns were probably feeling the effects of their game on Thursday night, and it didn't give them much time to get ready for us."

The best-of-seven series, from which the winner advances to the National Basketball Association Championship playoffs, resumes Tuesday night at the Lakers' Forum. The third and fourth games are in Phoenix on Friday and Sunday.

MacLeod said he was going to give his team time off Sunday to rest up from the seven-game series against Utah and the ensuing game against the Lakers.

"We had no time off, really," he said.

Reserve forward Bob McAdoo scored 20 points, 12 in the decisive final quarter, to pace Los Angeles' victory.

"McAdoo really hurt us," said MacLeod. "The Lakers played very well. We had a good first half, but they dictated the pace in the second half."

McAdoo said: "We keep fresh guys coming in off the bench and that throws the other team off. Teams usually try to relax when the opposition goes to the bench, but we're so deep, we don't lose anything."

Los Angeles took command in the fourth quarter, as the Suns went cold from the floor midway through the period and the Lakers built a commanding lead.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar scored eight of his 19 points in the third quarter to help the Lakers build a 78-68 advantage by the end of the period.

The closest the Suns came in the final 12 minutes was six points, at 78-72 early in the period, but Los Angeles then got consecutive baskets by McAdoo and Byron Scott and the Lakers went on to build a 90-76 pad midway through the closing quarter.

Mike McGee added 17 points for the Lakers, Magic Johnson had 16, James Worthy 13 and Scott 10.

Walter Davis led the Phoenix scoring with 24 points and Alvan Adams added 15 and Larry Nance 14.

The opening half was close almost all the way, with the Lakers finally able to move out to a nine-point edge, 57-48, with an 11-2 spurt in the waning moments of the half.

Los Angeles, which had trailed 32-29 at the end of the first period, led 57-52 at halftime.

Islanders knot series with 6-1 win over Oilers

Stanley Cup Playoffs

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP) — Clark Gillies scored three goals and Bryan Trottier added two as the Islanders' battle-tested veterans paced New York to a 6-1 victory over the Edmonton Oilers Saturday night to even the Stanley Cup finals at one victory each.

Facing the possibility of a 2-0 deficit in the best-of-seven National Hockey League championship series — which now switches to Edmonton for the next three games starting Tuesday — the Islanders were relentless from the opening faceoff. They weren't able to put a puck past Oilers goalie Grant Fuhr in a 1-0 defeat in Game 1, but they jumped on top 2-0 less than six minutes into this game.

Trottier scored off a scramble just 53 seconds into the game after Fuhr had stopped three shots. Greg Gilbert connected at 5:48 during another scramble on a New York power play.

Defenseman Randy Gregg got the Oilers' lone goal at 15:06 with a long slapshot that banked into the net off goalie Billy Smith. Kevin McClelland, who scored the only goal in Game 1, set up Gregg by beating Brent Sutter on a faceoff.

But Gillies re-established New York's two-goal margin by skating out unchecked from behind the net and knocking home a backhander at 18:31.

IN THE second period, the Islanders continued to jam the slot, something they failed to do in the opening game. And the four-time Stanley Cup champions — who are seeking to tie the 1956-60 Canadiens' record of five consecutive titles — got two more goals on backhanders.

Trottier recorded his 50th career playoff goal at 4:52 and Gillies got his 43rd Stanley Cup score at 16:48 on a power play. Gillies completed his first Stanley Cup hat trick with 2:56 remaining on another power play. For Gillies, it was his 10th playoff goal this spring after managing only 12 goals during the season.

The Islanders' defense gave up just one goal for the fifth consecutive game and once again held NHL scoring king Wayne Gretzky at bay. Gretzky had only four assists as New York swept Edmonton in last year's final and he was been blanked in the two games here this spring.

IN CONTRAST to the low-scoring affair in Game 1, the second contest was wide open at the beginning. The Islanders dominated for most of the action-packed first period, even though both teams fired 12 shots on goal.

IOC calls for U.S.-Soviet meeting

LAUSANNE, Switzerland (AP) — The International Olympic Committee, fighting to get the Soviets to the Summer Games, said Saturday it had invited U.S., Soviet and Los Angeles Olympic delegates to an emergency meeting here Friday.

The special session would mark the first face-to-face meeting of U.S. and Soviet delegates, and the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee since the Soviets, and their bloc allies began pulling out of the Games on Tuesday.

The boycott by powerhouse nations like the Soviet Union, East Germany and now Czechoslovakia, which announced its pullout Saturday, threatened to dull the luster of the gold, silver and bronze medals at the July 28-Aug. 12 Games.

IOC President Juan Antonio Samaranch, who called an emergency meeting of the IOC's nine-member executive board and other Olympic sports federations on Friday, has said he would "fight to the last minute" to get the Soviets to the Games.

IOC Director Monique Berlioux, reached at her home here Saturday, said the invitations to "representatives of the Soviet and U.S. National Olympic Committees and the LAOOC" had gone out late Friday night, but that there was no response so far.

IN LOS Angeles, however, LAOOC spokesman Steve Montiel said a delegate would attend the emergency session. And in Moscow a Mexican Olympics official, Mario Vasquez Rana, said Soviet sports chief Marat Gramov told him he, too, planned to attend the meeting.

Berlioux said she was unable to confirm a statement in Moscow Saturday by Rana, president of the Association of National Olympic Committees, that Samaranch hoped to meet Soviet President Konstantin Chernenko in the Kremlin on Tuesday.

A secretary for Samaranch, who asked Moscow for such a meeting Thursday, said at his home in Barcelona that he was expected to go to Malta on Monday for a Tuesday-Wednesday meeting of the Council of European Sports Ministers.

IOC officials said they expected about 40 people at the emergency meeting in Lausanne's stately, old Palace Hotel, usual site of large IOC meetings and located several miles from IOC headquarters at the Chateau de Vidy on the shores of Lake Geneva.

Although a face-to-face meeting of U.S. and Soviets might appear dramatic, it was not clear what it could accomplish. Samaranch said Friday that assurances given by Ueberroth to Gramov, the Soviet Olympic committee chief, at a meeting here April 24 to discuss Moscow's complaints "were not enough."

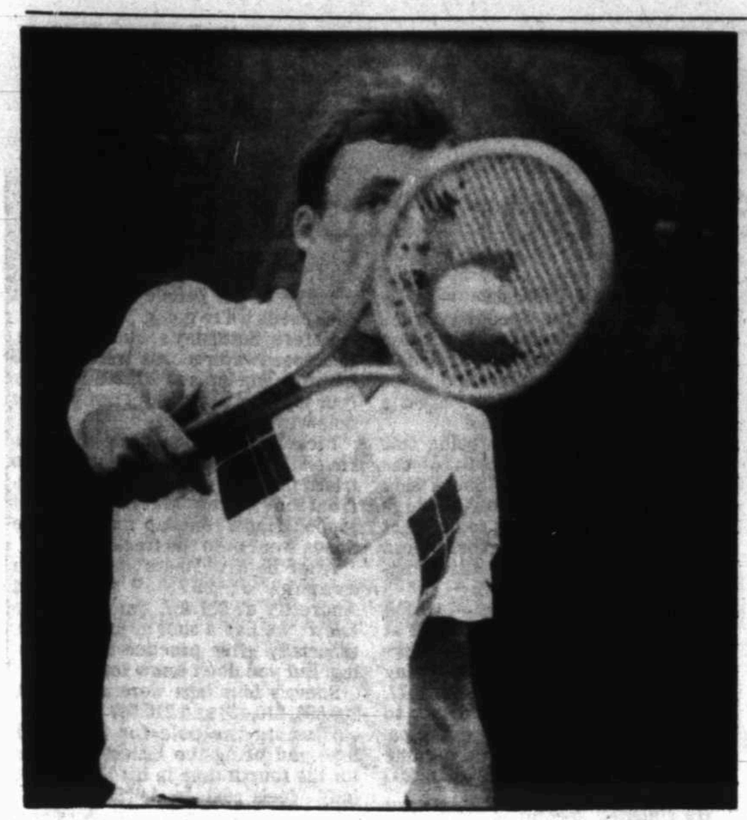

ALTHOUGH THE Soviets have complained repeatedly about U.S. meddling in the Games' organization, lack of security and commercialization, their repeated attacks on President Reagan suggest politics is their chief motive.

Samaranch said Friday he had asked Reagan for a letter answering the Soviets' demands following the April 24 meeting, lending credence to reports that the Soviets had asked for such guarantees directly from the president.

In the letter, dated May 8, Reagan said the Olympics should not be used for politics, but guaranteed the United States would uphold the Olympic charter and would assist Olympic and Los Angeles authorities in security arrangements.

Although Samaranch declared readiness to visit Chernenko in Moscow, his announcement of an emergency meeting here appeared aimed at stressing the role of the IOC, and maintaining its control over the Olympics.

A Soviet boycott of the Olympics would mark the second time im Samaranch's four-year term that a major power has shunned the Olympic Games. Samaranch was elected president of the IOC during the 1980 Moscow Olympics, boycotted by the Americans and dozens of other countries over the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

Ivan Lendl returns a backhand to Jimmy Connors during their semifinal match in the Mercedes Tournament of Champions Saturday at the West Side Tennis Club at Forest Hills, N.Y. Lendl's 6-0, 6-0 thrashing was the worst Connors has received since turning pro.

Lendl hands Connors worst professional loss

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Ivan Lendl, erasing some of the sting from humiliating defeats in the last two U.S. Opens, handed Jimmy Connors his worst beating ever Saturday in the semifinals of the $500,000 Mercedes Tournament of Champions at the famed West Side Tennis Club.

With a 6-0, 6-0 thrashing of Connors, Lendl advanced into Sunday's title match against defending champion John McEnroe, who crushed Jimmy Arias 6-1, 6-2.

"I feel a little bitter — not personally — about Jimmy because he has taken me twice at the U.S. Open," said Lendl, who took only 52 minutes to dispose of the tournament's No. 1 seed on Saturday. Both losses came in the championship matches of America's premier tennis event.

It was the first time since he turned pro that the 31-year-old Connors has ever lost a match without winning a game. And it was the worst defeat in his career since Lendl crushed him 6-1, 6-1 in the ATP Championships semifinals in Cinncinnati in 1982.

Although Connors still leads the Czechoslovakian right-hander 11-5 in their career battle, Lendl now has won 20 consecutive games from the left-hander. In their last meeting, in a match in Rotterdam which was abandoned following a bomb scare, Lendl was leading 6-0, 1-0.

And the time before that, Lendl defeated Connors 6-3, 6-4 in the Volvo Masters in New York in January.

"I was in there. I was hitting the ball all right," Connors said, "but he wasn't missing too much."

McEnroe's destruction of Arias was almost as complete. He reeled off the first five games of the match, and when Arias finally held serve, the 19-year-old clay court specialist bowed to the cheering crowd.

It didn't faze McEnroe, who promptly won the next five game, wrapping up the opening set and taking a 4-0 lead in the second. Arias then held his own service again and broke McEnroe at 30 to narrow the score to 4-2. But it was the end as the New York left-hander lost only three points in taking the next two games and the match.

In the doubles semifinals, former University of Houston teammates, Nduka Odizor of Nigeria and David Dowlen of Houston, upset the top-seeded team of McEnroe and Peter Fleming 7-6, 6-2 after Ernie Fernandez of Puerto Rico teamed up with David Pate of Las Vegas, Nev., to defeat the second-seeded team of Mike Bauer and Steve Denton 6-2, 6-2.

Borg meets Scanlon

OSAKA, Japan — Sweden's Bjorn Borg and American Bill Scanlon will meet in the men's singles final of the $200,-000 Gunze Invitational tennis match here Sunday.

The women's singles title will be contested between Canadian champion Carling Bassett and West Germany's Bettina Bunge.

En route to the finals at the Osaka Castle Hall, Borg, playing in his first competitive tournament in two years, knocked out American Eric Korita 6-7, 7-5, 6-3 in Saturday's semifinals.

Scanlon eliminated compatriot Scott Davis 7-5, 6-4 in the other semifinal match.

Bassett, a 16-year-old high school student, entered the finals when her opponent Hana Mandlikova of Czechoslovakia withdrew from the contest.

The favored Czech, taking the first set 6-4, withdrew after the fourth game of the second set when she suffered an injury in the Achilles' tendon of her right leg. Bassett was leading 2-1.

In the second women's semifinals, Bunge downed Beth Herr of the United States 6-4, 6-4.

Upsets rule in Germany

HAMBURG, West Germany — Henrik Sundstroem of Sweden defeated top-seeded countryman Mats Wilander and Juan Aguilera of Spain upset Guillermo Vilas of Argentina Saturday to reach the final of the $315,00 German Open Tennis Tournament.

The 20-year-old Sundstroem, seeded 14th, ousted an erratic Wilander 6-2, 7-5, while the unseeded Aguilera scored his second major upset in two days by disposing of Vilas, seeded seventh, 7-6, 6-3.

The 19-year-old Wilander, the world's fourth-ranked player, also lost to Sundstroem in the Monte Carlo final last month but still holds a 5-2 career edge over his fellow Swede.

Maleeva posts upset

LUGANO, Switzerland — Manuella Maleeva of Bulgaria beat top-seeded Kathy Horvath 7-6, (7-2), 5-7, 6-3 Saturday in the semifinals of the women's Swiss Open Tennis Tournament.

The victory over Horvath, ranked 11th by the World Tennis Association, set up a final between Maleeva and Iva Budarova of Czechoslovakia, who beat Raffaela Reggi of Italy 6-4, 6-7, (8-6), 6-2.

Maleeva, who is ranked 16th by the WTA, reversed her January loss to Horvath.

The match was delayed for about 90 minutes by rain.

Midland's Brandon Robey was named to the All-State team and Fairmont Park Lanes finished fifth overall while hosting the Texas All-Star Youth Bowling Tournament Saturday.

The tournament, featuring 50 Texas teams made up of bowlers age 12-18, was claimed by Westgate Lanes of Austin. Rachel Perez of San Marcos (representing Sunset Lanes) and Terry Wright of Fort Worth scored high games for the tournament.

Teams entered in the one-day event had to overcome district and regional competition before coming to Midland.

Westgate nipped Fiesta Bowl of Garland in the finals to claim the championship. The Fiesta bowlers went home with a second place showing and the tournament's Sportsmanship Award.

The Texas Bowling Centers Association, which serves and promotes a million bowlers throughout the state, sanctioned the tourney. TBCA president Jim Land was on hand Saturday during the championships.

Robey, Wright, Perez and four others gained All-State honors. Chris Duncan of Kilgore, Eric Keyes of Austin, Lonnie Read of Kilgore and Stan Heicken of Fort Worth also were chosen.

Defending tournament champion Sunny Bowl of Round Rock finished third overall. Sunset Lanes of San Marcos was fourth.

Kilgore's College Bowl was sixth, followed by Ayers Lanes (Corpus Christi), Wedgewood Lanes of Fort Worth in eighth, and Hurst Lanes (Hurst) and P.J.'s Crystal Bowling Palace of Corpus Christi in 10th.

Sneva breaks 210 in four-lap run

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Tom Sneva smashed the Speedway track records with a four-lap qualification run at more than 210 mph Saturday, but the defending Indianapolis 500 champion said he wouldn't mind a 30-mph reduction in speeds.

"We don't have to be going this fast to put on a good show for the people," the 35-year-old Sneva said after he qualified at an average 210.029 mph. "We've got to do what is good for the sport in general, and that's good, close, competitive racing."

Sneva's torrid average — which also included a single-lap record at 210.689 mph — gave him a tentative spot in the pole position for the May 27 race. He also won the pole in 1977, when he became the first driver to turn a lap at 200 mph in qualifications, and in 1978, when he became the first to average more than 200 for four laps.

He finished second in both 1977 and 1978, and he won the race last year after starting from the fourth position with a 203.687 mph qualifying average.

"You've got to be a little crazy to be a race driver," Sneva said. "But if I had a choice between 180 and 210, I'm going to opt for 180. The faster we go, the more chance there is for problems. It's going to take less of a mistake to get people in trouble at the speeds we're going."

Before Saturday's qualifications, the Speedway records were 208.049 mph for one lap and 207.395 mph for four laps, both marks set last year by pole-winner Teo Fabi.

Rick Mears broke both of Fabi's records early in Saturday's time trials, the first of four days of qualifications, then Mario Andretti topped Mears' one-lap mark before Sneva went onto the track.

After he saw Mears' qualification average of 207.847 mph and Andretti's at 207.467, Sneva said he knew "we had a shot at it (the pole), especially after practice this morning. But you don't know for sure."

Sneva's four laps were at 209.113, 209.898, 210.423 and 210.689 mph.

Winning the pole for the third time and being the fastest qualifier for the fourth time in his 11 years at Indy "feels real good," Sneva said. "When you run with your peers and if you can outdo them a little bit, it makes you feel good."

Sneva said, however, he would prefer "to take some of the aerodynamic devices away from the cars (to slow them down). We've got to go to some kind of flat-bottom configuration and make the driver work a little harder. Driving skill should be a bigger factor."

Anthony resumes PBA career in grand style

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Bowling great Earl Anthony resumed his professional career in grand style Saturday, winning $40,000 in the American Bowling Congress Masters tournament with a 212 average for 25 games.

Anthony, 46, of Dublin, Calif., defeated Gil Sliker of Washington, N.J., 193-177 in the final match to become the fourth bowler to win two Masters titles.

Anthony, whose first Masters title was won in Reno in 1977, was a six-time Bowler of the Year who retired from the Professional Bowlers Association tour last year. The Masters event was his only major tournament this year.

The three other bowlers who have won two Masters titles are Dick Hoover of Akron, Ohio, who won in 1956 and 1957; Billy Golembiewski, Detroit, who won in 1960 and 1962, and Billy Welu of St. Louis, who won in 1964 and 1965.

Sliker, also a PBA champion, earned $25,000 for second. Rick Minier of Vancouver, Wash., was third with earnings of $19,500; George Pappas of Charlotte, N.C., was fourth with $14,900.

Federal authorities end investigation on Cowboys

DALLAS (AP) — Federal authorities have ended an investigation into alleged cocaine use by six Dallas Cowboys team members and don't plan to prosecute any of the players, the Dallas Times Herald reported Saturday.

The probe was dropped because of questions about the soundness of the government's case and fears about how the public would react to prosecution of players on the popular National Football League team, the newspaper said, quoting sources in the FBI, U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration and the U.S. attorney's office.

U.S. Attorney James A. Rolfe was wary of the case, because it hinged on the testimony of convicted drug dealers, and a key witness had disappeared, the sources said.

According to the sources and courtroom testimony, six players were under investigation, one of them never named. The other players were defensive end Harvey Martin, halfback Tony Dorsett, fullback Ron Springs, defensive end Larry Bethea and wide receiver Tony Hill.

Martin has since retired and Bethea jumped to the United States Football League this spring.

Rolfe and Christopher Lee Milner, an assistant U.S. attorney who handled the investigation, refuse to discuss the case.

Attorneys for the five players and the players themselves have repeatedly denied that they used cocaine or were involved in any drug transactions.

Martin's lawyer, Dan C. Guthrie, a former federal prosecutor, said Friday that "even if every allegation and rumor about the Cowboys ahd been 1,000 percent accuarte, it would still not be a case that would have been proseucted by federal authorities."

Guthrie said "the rumors and information were not only inaccurate, but totally inaccurate."

The players' names first surfaced during a January 1983 trial in Dallas of a accused drug dealer. A co-defendant testified that he and Martin had used cocaine together and that Martin paid for his share of the drug.

Martin acknowledged that he knew the witness but called the testimony "a lie."

Stadler sees end of frustrating non-winning string

Byron Nelson Classic

DALLAS (AP) — After scoring seven birdies and an eagle-2 in a round of 64, Craig Stadler said he saw the end of a frustrating non-winning string.

"Obviously, I'm pleased with my position," a satisfied Stadler said after he'd opened up a four-shot lead Saturday in the third round of the Byron Nelson Classic.

"Somebody will have to play a pretty good round to catch me now," said the former Masters champion and leading money-winner who has not won since his banner season of 1984.

"I hit the irons very, very good today and the putter is working tremendously well."

One of the iron shots was perfect. That came from about 175 yards out on the ninth, where, he said, "I hit it right at the hole — and that's where it ended up."

That eagle-2 and a birdie-par-birdie finish helped him to a 205 total, eight shots under par for 54 holes, and prompted his challengers to agree that a superior effort will be necessary to catch Stadler in Sunday's final round.

"It will have to be a 64 or 65; 71 won't do it.

"He'll be a hard man to catch," said Tom Watson, a four-time winner of this event who goes into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $72,000 first prize at 211, six off the pace.

"It looks like Craig is so far out in front, the players behind him will have to take chances. And he won't have to take chances," analyzed Lee Trevino, also at 211.

MIKE SMITH, a career struggler who hasn't made a check this season, once lost his playing rights because of lack of performance and hasn't made expenses in four seasons, held second at 209. He birdied the last hole and had a 68 despite a double bogey from the water on the 14th hole.

Watson, Trevino and Mark O'Meara were next at two under. O'Meara had a 66 in warm, sunny weather that remained breezy but not nearly so windy as during the first two rounds.

"A much easier golf course today," Watson said.

Tied at 212 were Andy Bean, Jay Haas, Dave Edwards and Chip Beck. All had third-round 69s.

While scoring, generally, was lower in the diminished winds, PGA champion Hal Sutton could do no better than match par 71 and completed three rounds at 214.

Ben Crenshaw, the new Masters champion and the defending titleholder here, had a 70 and was at 215.

"A fun round of golf," said Stadler, who led golf's money-winners in 1982, took the Masters title that season and collected three other victories. He has not won since, however.

But that, he said, will change quickly.

"I feel like I'm playing well enough to win. If not this week, then the next, or in three weeks. It's just a matter of time before I do.

"And I've got a heck of a chance to do it this week."

He birdied three of the first five holes, twice after hitting short irons inside of 12 feet and the other on a 30-footer, before he had his only lapse of the day.

That came on the sixth, where he drove out of bounds and made a double bogey-6.

"I was pleased that I didn't let it bother me, that I came back with four more birdies and an eagle after that," Stadler said.

He birdied the eighth from 20 feet, then holed out a 5-iron shot from about 175 yards for eagle-2 on the ninth.

Stadler scored from 20 feet on the 12th, and birdied the 16th and 18th from 10-12 feet.

Little birdies way to UVB lead

Virginia Bank Classic

SUFFOLK, Va. (AP) — Sally Little birdied three of her last six holes Saturday to finish with a 3-under-par 69 and take a 1-stroke lead after the second round of the $175,000 LPGA United Virginia Bank golf classic.

Little, who has shot 139 through two rounds, parred the first 12 holes before dropping in 10-foot birdies on the 13th and 17th holes and an 8-foot birdie on the 15th hole.

"Over the first seven holes the wind was very strong and then it died down," Little said after finishing the round over the 6,196-yard Sleepy Hole course. "That's why the scores were better on the late holes."

One stroke back at 140 was Anne-Marie Pallie, who birdied four holes on the back nine to end with a 2-under-par 70.

Tied for third place were Becky Pearson and former champion Amy Alcott. Pearson fired the best round of the day, a 5-under-par 67 that included five birdies.

First-round leader Pia Nilsson fell eight strokes off the pace after shooting a woeful 79.

Little, who missed five months on the tour last year because of health problems, said the tournament lead had a special significance for her.

"It's especially exciting for me to be in the lead because I won here two years ago and I was not able to defend my title last year," she said. "I played a real consistent round today and I felt real good about the way I played."

Reds' Soto loses no-hitter in ninth

By The Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Fire-balling Mario Soto came within one pitch of a no-hitter Saturday against St. Louis before George Hendrick drilled a 2-2 pitch for a home run with two outs in the ninth inning, but Brad Gulden's run-scoring single in the bottom of the ninth lifted the Cincinnati Reds over the Cardinals 2-1.

Soto struck out 12 batters with a blazing fastball, and Cincinnati had made two spectacular fielding plays in the late innings to preserve the right-hander's no-hit bid through 8 2-3 innings.

With two outs in the ninth and the crowd of 24,364 standing and screaming encouragement, Soto fired two strikes past Hendrick.

Hendrick then fouled off two pitches, took two balls high before lining the next pitch well over the 375-foot mark in left field for his second home run to tie the score 1-1.

While Hendrick rounded the bases, Soto stood to the side of the mound with his head bowed and his hands on his knees. Soto then walked Andy Van Slyke before Ken Oberkfell flied out to end the inning.

The Reds won the game as Dave Concepcion singled with one out in the ninth against Bruce Sutter, 1-2, and stole second. Gulden's single drove in Concepcion.

Cubs 5, Astros 4

HOUSTON — Pinch hitter Jody Davis slammed a three-run homer with two outs in the top of the ninth inning off reliever Frank DiPino to earn a comeback 5-4 victory for the Chicago Cubs over the Houston Astros.

Davis' homer barely cleared the orange line signifying a homer in left field. It drove in pinch hitter Bill Buckner and Henry Cotto, running for Ron Cey, who had walked.

Houston's Joe Niekro allowed three hits before giving way to DiPino with one out in the ninth inning. Dick Noles, 1-1, gained the victory, while DiPino, 1-2, took the loss.

Phil Garner led off the Astros' seventh with a single and took second on Niekro's sacrifice. Cubs starter Chuck Rainey loaded the bases on walks to Terry Puhl and Jose Cruz, and then walked Jerry Mumphrey to force home Garner to give the Astros a 3-2 lead.

National League

Mets 4, Dodgers 3

LOS ANGELES — George Foster slugged a solo homer and Ed Lynch won his first start of the season as New York Mets topped the Los Angeles Dodgers 4-3.

Lynch, 4-0, pitched the first five innings and Doug Sisk finished up, recording his third save. The Mets scored a run in each of the four innings against Alejandro Pena, 4-2, who had won four straight decisions.

Foster homered with one out in the third, his fifth homer of the season. It was also his 33rd against the Dodgers, the most among active opposing players.

Hubie Brooks extended his hitting streak to 10 games when he led off the fourth with a single, took third on a single by Fitzgerald and came home as Lynch grounded into a force play.

Los Angeles right fielder Mike Marshall left the game in the first inning because of discomfort in his left foot, which has bothered him since spring training. Later it was announced that Marshall was to undergo surgery Saturday. It was not known how long Marshall, the club leader in homers and runs batted in, would be sidelined.

Giants 8, Expos 7

SAN FRANCISCO — Jeff Leonard belted a two-run homer during a four-run first inning that sent the San Francisco Giants to an 8-7 victory over the Montreal Expos.

Chili Davis triggered the first-inning uprising against Steve Rogers, 2-2, with a single. Manny Trillo was hit by a pitch, which fractured a bone in his left hand and put him on the 21-day disabled list.

Al Oliver followed with a run-scoring single to right and following Jack Clark's run-scoring groundout, Leonard made it 4-0 with his fourth home run of the season.

Mike Krukow, 2-4, won his first game since April 10 as the Giants won their fourth consecutive game despite being outhit 17-7.

Braves 4, Pirates 3

ATLANTA — Claudell Washington drilled a run-scoring triple into the right-field corner to break an eighth-inning tie and give Pascual Perez his second victory as the Atlanta Braves edged the Pittsburgh Pirates 4-3.

Washington's hit came off reliever Cecilio Guante, 0-2, and scored Albert Hall, who was running for Bruce Benedict from first base. Washington then scored the Braves' fourth run on Chris Chambliss' pinch double down the right-field line.

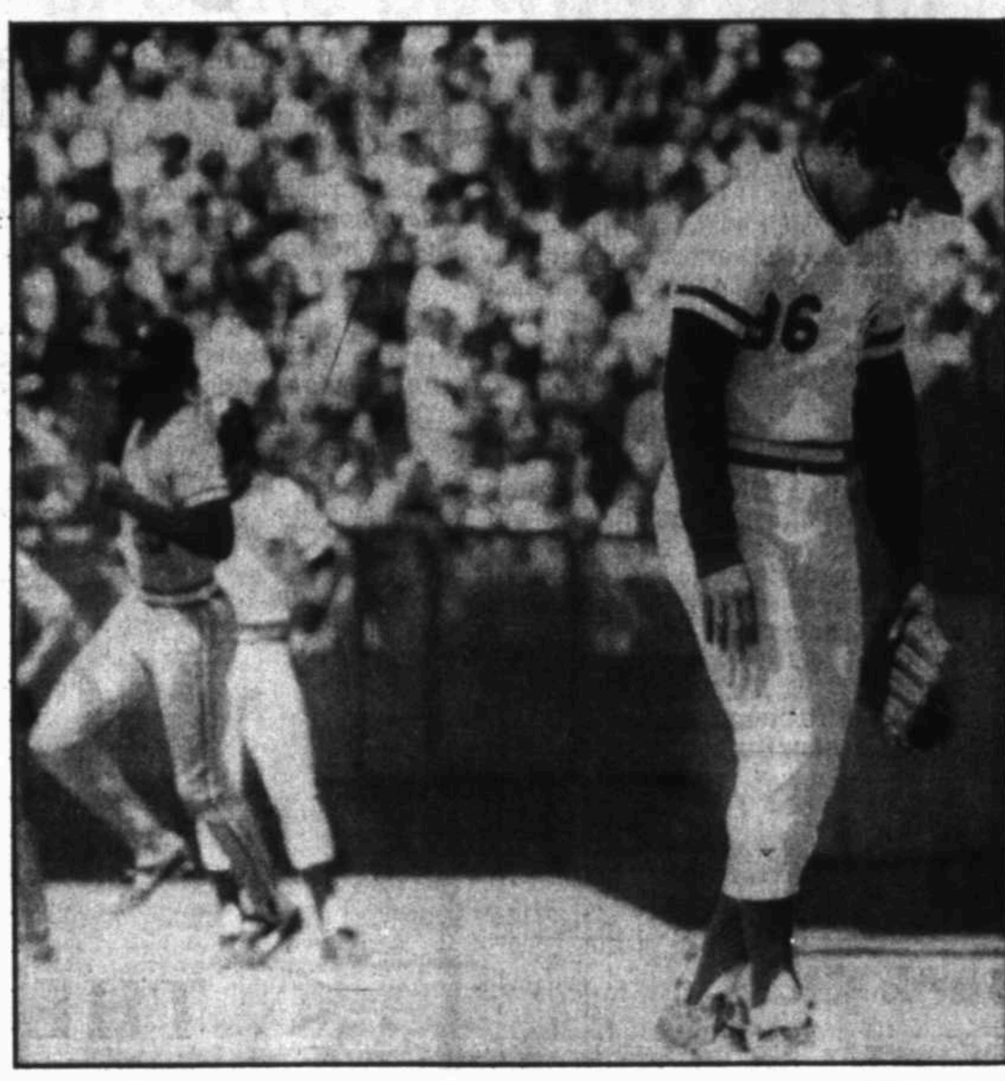

Perez, 2-0, was making his second offical start of the season since returning to action after spending three months in jail at his native Dominican Republic before being convicted on a drug misdemeanor charger and awaiting disposition of an appeal.

Perez went eight innings, allowing only four hits, striking out six and walking two.

Reliever Terry Forster was tagged for an RBI triple by Jim Morrison in the ninth before Jeff Dedmon finished up for his second save.

The Pirates gained a 2-2 tie in the fifth after Perez had retired 10 batters in a row.

The game was played before 41,319.

Angels snap Tiger winning streak

By The Associated Press

DETROIT — Reggie Jackson slammed a two-run homer over the right-field roof and Fred Lynn snapped a seventh-inning tie with a run-scoring single as the California Angels beat Detroit 4-2 Saturday, snapping the Tigers' seven-game winning streak.

Tommy John scattered seven hits as the Angels ended a five-game losing streak and handed Detroit its fifth loss in 31 games, still the best record in the majors this season.

Jackson became only the 12th player in the history of Tiger Stadium to hit a ball over the roof when he connected off Juan Berenguer, 2-2, on a 3-2 pitch in the fifth inning. The blast, Jackson's seventh of the season, was only the 18th to clear the stadium's roof and came after a walk to Juan Beniquez.

California broke a 2-2 tie in the seventh as Doug DeCinces singled, moved to second on a wild pitch by Berenguer and, after a walk to Brian Downing, scored when Lynn singled to right.

Rob Wilfong homered in the eighth, his third of the season, for a California insurance run.

Indians 8, Blue Jays 4

CLEVELAND — Brett Butler singled home Otis Nixon with the tie-breaking run in the seventh inning, sparking a three-run rally as the Cleveland Indians defeated the Toronto Blue Jays 8-4.

Jerry Willard drew a leadoff walk off Jim Acker, 0-2, in the seventh inning. Nixon ran for Willard and Jim Key came on in relief. Nixon went to second on Mike Fischlin's sacrifice bunt, and on the second pitch to Butler, Key pulled his left hamstring.

Twins 4, Brewers 2

MILWAUKEE — Tim Teufel went 4-for-4 to key Minnesota's 14-hit attack as the Twins downed the Milwaukee Brewers 4-2.

Minnesota took a 2-0 lead in the first inning after Teufel singled and Dave Engle doubled down the left-field line off Mike Caldwell, 4-3.

Teufel scored on Gary Gaetti's sacrifice fly to right-center field and Mickey Hatcher drove in Engle with a single to center.

The Twins added another run in the second when Kirby Puckett led off with a double to the left-field corner and Teufel followed with a single to left.

Minnesota got its fourth run in the seventh when Puckett reached first on a fielder's choice, went to second on Teufel's bunt single and scored on Engle's single.

American League

Rangers 6, White Sox 4

CHICAGO — Marv Foley hit a two-run home run to help Dave Stewart win his first game of the season as the Texas Rangers defeated the Chicago White Sox 6-4.

Stewart, 1-6, allowed four hits, walked six and struck out four through five innings. Jim Bibby went the next three innings and Dave Tobik pitched the final inning for his third save.

Hoyt, last season's Cy Young Award winner, has lost three of his last four decisions. He left the game after 3⅔ innings, his earliest departure of the season.

Mariners 5, Yankees 0

NEW YORK — Jim Beattie fired a six-hitter and Alvin Davis smashed a two-run double in the third inning as the Seattle Mariners blanked the New York Yankees 5-0.

Beattie, 3-3, allowed only six singles as New York was shut out for the eighth time this season. The former Yankee hurler struck out six and walked two in recording his second shutout of the season and third complete game.

Royals 3, Red Sox 0

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Mark Gubicza threw a four-hitter and Frank White slammed two home runs to carry the Kansas City Royals to a 3-0 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

Gubicza, a rookie righthander whose fastball is clocked at more than 90 miles an hour, retired 14 straight batters until Mike Easler singled with two out in the seventh. The 6-foot-6 22-year-old notched his first victory in four decisions and outdueled Boston's Bruce Hurst, who gave up only seven hits while his recorded evened at 4-4.

Gubicza didn't walk a batter and struck out three.

White led off the fourth with his fourth home run, a towering shot into the left field bleachers that gave the Gold Glove second baseman the team lead in homers. Steve Balboni and Leon Roberts had one-out singles a moment later but Hurst escaped with a double-play grounder from John Wathan.

A's 12, Orioles 2

BALTIMORE — Bruce Bochte and Joe Morgan each belted three-run homers during a seven-run sixth inning and Davey Lopes added another three-run blast as the Oakland A's crushed the Baltimore Orioles 12-2.

Carney Lansford also homered for Oakland to back the six-hit pitching of Bill Krueger, who was making his first start since being recalled from Tacoma Wednesday. Krueger, 1-0, struck out three and walked three.

With the score tied 1-1, Lopes and Dave Kingman began the A's sixth with singles off Baltimore reliever Dennis Martinez, 1-2. After Lansford singled in Lopes, Bochte hit a line drive over the left-center field fence for his first home run of the season.

One out later, Mike Davis singled and went to second on a wild pitch. Sammy Stewart relieved Martinez and walked Tony Phillips. After another out, Morgan hit a towering homer to right for his second of the year.

The A's had taken a 1-0 lead in the third off Baltimore starter Tom Underwood on Lansford's leadoff homer, his second.

Boycotts punish innocent, never achieve purpose

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

All boycotts are wrong, including the original one in Ireland 104 years ago. They fall on the wrong victims, they punish the innocent and they never achieve the purpose for which they were instituted.

They are only good for vindictiveness and perpetuating hate.

It was interesting that the first glimmer of news that the Russians might boycott the 1984 Olympics came recently from Prof. Harry Edwards. Interesting because it was the good professor who first advanced the notion of Olympic boycotts on the eve of the '68 Olympics, when he suggested a black boycott of the Mexico City Games.

It didn't materialize – it was as ill-advised as any other boycott – but it did prompt medal-winners Tommie Smith and John Carlos to interject a stiff-armed, black-glove salute into the festivities on the Aztec Stadium victory stand.

That minor, insignificant gesture produced an instant worldwide sensation, particularly when the outraged U.S. Olympic committee made the athletes instant martyrs by banning them from the team forthwith (they were through with it, anyway).

THE LESSON was not lost on the revolutionists of the world. When a mere gloved fist can make page one and prime time in every media outlet in creation, what could a more dramatic statement create?

The Black Septembrists undertook to find out at Munich in '72. Before that, a coalition of African nations, joined by a cadre of American blacks, forced the withdrawal of Rhodesia from the Games by threat of boycott. Munich was a disaster of political statements gone wild. Nor did it end there.

In 1976, the boycott became real. This time, the African nations walked out of the Montreal Games because New Zealand was permitted in. New Zealand's crime? A New Zealand rugby team had played a South African rugby team. Now, what this had to do with the Olympics nobody has ever been able to figure out. South Africans were already banned from the Olympics anyway. Nonetheless, 24 African nations walked out. Boycotted. Boycott had progressed from threat to reality.

IN 1980, it became an instrument of national U.S. policy. A beleaguered president, Jimmy Carter, was humiliated because a Near East sick man had taken a whole embassy full of American citizens hostage. Teddy Roosevelt would have sent gunboats. Carter temporized. But when the Soviets marched into Afghanistan, he took decisive action. He took hostages of his own: the U.S. Olympic team. Carter was through fooling around. His response was typically hard-hitting: We couldn't play with the Russian kids any more. We wouldn't go to their Olympic party.

It was a little like going home and kicking your dog after a bad day at the office, but Carter strutted around as if he had just won the Battle of the Coral Sea.

The boycott had finally reached the big time. Because Jimmy Carter not only boycotted the 1980 Olympics, he boycotted the 1984 Olympics. He shot himself in the foot. He detonated a quadrennial festival of youth, one of the few worthwhile congresses of fellowship left in the world. He didn't get one Soviet troop out of Afghanistan, he didn't leave the American flag safe in any embassy in the world.

It took centuries to kill off the ancient Olympics. The modern ones are in the process of throat-rattling already.

WHAT HAPPENS now? Well, first of all, I think we can safely discount all that wishful thinking on the part of the Olympic organizers. If the Russians say they're not coming, they're not coming.

The reasons for their not coming range from the obscure to the absurd. Least credible are their own. The Russians are not coming for that most venerable and human of reasons: vengeance. Their not coming was as inevitable as the sun setting, as a bear leaving tracks in the woods. Russians do not suffer insults gladly.

Americans who do not comprehend vindictiveness do not perceive this. But Capt. Charles Cunningham Boycott, a landlord who was ostracized for refusing to reduce rents and gave his name to such actions, would understand perfectly. It's just a simple triumph of mean-spiritedness, in this case the culmination of an inexorable series of events set in motion 16 years ago.

What to do about it? I put the question to Dwight Stones, 20 times U.S. high jump champion, bronze medal winner in '72, silver medalist in '76, seven times world-record holder and a man who now enters, by default, the ranks of potential medal winners in this summer's games. He is one of the carload of premier athletes who will compete in Sunday's Pepsi Invitational track meet at UCLA's Drake Stadium, an event which now bids fair to host the biggest collection of gold medal winners ever assembled.

"First of all, every track-and-field athlete who is asked to get in front of a microphone this week should do so. We have an obligation to our sport and our event, a duty, if you will, to see to it that these Games do not go down as the 'hollow' Olympics or the 'tainted' Olympics.

"These are the Olympics! Americans should not let down. Our athletes are hungry because they were shut out in 1980. These can be great Olympics! A world record is a world record and we should train harder now to see to it there are a whole host of world records. Now is a time to get behind the Olympics. The Russians got behind theirs in '80. They had a highly successful Olympics. They didn't hide under the bed and cry!"

BUT WOULDN'T the defection of the Soviets and their friends diminish the luster of the Games? Stones gets irritated. "There is no question the removal of the East Germans, the Poles, even more than the Russians, will hurt the caliber. What are there – 120 medals in track and field? Well, the Soviet bloc would win half of them. But, hey, the Chinese are going to be front and center. A Chinese is the world's best at my event."

What if the Soviets stage an alternative Olympics, a Red Games in Sofia? Stones looks scornful. "Oh, swell!" he mocks. "Won't you just see ABC champing to cover them! Won't Coca-Cola be bidding to become an official sponsor? Think you might have trouble getting a reservation, do you? Oh, those would be thrilling Games!"

Wouldn't the medals be easier to come by with the Eastern Bloc out? Stones shakes his head. "The hardest thing to do in any Olympics is still to make the American team. Believe me, that's the hard part!"

Well, isn't this the worst of all possible eventualities? Stones snorts. "Well, hardly! The worst of all possible scripts is for the Americans to pull out. How'd you like to sell that in Dubuque?!"

Hogs win third consecutive title

SWC Track

AUSTIN (AP) - The depth-laden Arkansas Razorbacks parlayed a 28-point landslide in the 1500-meter run into their third consecutive men's Southwest Conference Outdoor Track and Field Championships Saturday night.

The Houston Lady Cougars also successfully defended their women's title before some 10,000 fans in Memorial Stadium.

As expected, Arkansas' four-deep talent in the 1500-meter run was a big turning point.

The Razorbacks' crossed the tape first through fourth for their 28 points. The finish was Paul Donovan, Tom Moloney, Gary Taylor and Mike Byrd.

Donovan of Arkansas, the winner, said "The three of us took the lead on the second lap and controlled the race. We wanted to run so we could finish 1-2-3 and get the team points.

"The way we have it figured, if we finished that way it would really help in the team championship. As it turned out, we got a fourth place too, so that it is realy great."

Arkansas' Mike Conley won the triple jump and the Razorbacks were fourth in the 400 meter relay to show their overall versatility.

THERE WERE some record-shattering performances in the 69th SWC meet.

David Hodge of Baylor soared 18-feet, 2 1/2 inches in the pole vault, the highest jump ever by a Southwest Conference athlete. He broke the old SWC record of 17-4 1/4 by Paul Brattlof of Rice in 1983.

Bill Jasinksi of Arkansas leaped 7-feet, 5-inches in the high jump to brak the old record of 7-4 1/4 by Texas A&M's Jimmy Howard.

Zeke Jefferson anchored Baylor's 400-meter relay team to the finest time this season, 39.23, in winning that event with Arkansas finishing second.

Baylor's Bruce Davis was an upset winner in the 100 meter, winning in 10.16 seconds, nipping Rice's Eliston Stinson, who posted a 10.17.

"This is the first time I've run a wind-aided 10.1 in anything," Davis said. "I've come so close so many times. It was frustrating but this made up for all my near misses."

Southern Methodist's Rod Jones ran the third fastest time in SWC history in the 400 meter, winning in 44.94. The time was a school record for the Mustangs.

In the 200 meter, Houston's Kirk Baptiste shattered the SWC's six-year old record with a time of 20.16. Ray Brooks of Texas A&M owned the record with a time of 20.3.

Rice, Texas win tourney games

SWC Baseball

AUSTIN (AP) — Rice won a Southwest Conference Baseball Tournament game for the first time ever Saturday and Texas crushed Texas A&M 15-4.

Curtis Fox and Kent Koppa hit home runs as Rice ended a string of five straight losses in the SWC tournament in the past few years by eliminating Arkansas 8-1.

Rice will play A&M on Sunday, and the winner will play Texas Sunday night.

Righthander Wade Phillips, who has pitched only five innings this season as a result of a traffic accident that broke his left arm, held A&M scoreless until the eighth inning as Texas built a 13-0 lead.

Texas, the defending national baseball champion and ranked No. 2 this season, led 4-0 after four innings and erupted for seven runs on six hits in the fifth. The hits included back-to-back doubles by Jamie Doughty and Bill Bates for three runs.

A&M scored one run in the eighth and three in the ninth against the tiring Phillips, who also was the winner a week ago against A&M but only threw five innings. Two of A&M's runs came on shortstop Rob Swain's home run in the ninth.

A&M could do little right in the game as Texas got one run on a double steal in the fourth, and the A&M defense misplayed three Texas popups. One fell for a single behind Swain and in front of two outfielders. Another was dropped by third baseman Tony Metoyer, who was on the first base side of the pitching mound.

On yet another popup, Metoyer grabbed it for an out in foul territory but threw to third as the Texas runner broke for home. Swain's throw to the plate hit the umpire, and the run scored.

Kelly Keahy, who pitched 4 1/3 innings, was the loser for A&M, giving up seven runs, five of which were earned.

DAVID WRZESINSKI led Texas, which had 16 hits, with four singles and four runs batted in.

Arkansas, the only SWC team to play in all eight tournaments, fell behind early against Rice and left the tournament with its second loss in two days. The Razorbacks have never won a tournament title and now have an 11-16 record in the tournament.

Rice was leading 1-0 when it scored five unearned runs in the top of the fourth inning off Arkansas freshman pitcher Dera Clark.

A throwing error by Arkansas shortstop Jim Ward led to all five Rice runs, with Fox lofting a three-run home run that hit the foul pole in right field.

Let it burn

If President Reagan was expecting a rush of support from either the American people or the Congress following his address the other night regarding the situation in Central America, he might as well not have taken his case to the airwaves. The mood in this country regarding any type of military involvement in conflicts away from U.S. shores is strictly reserved.

Reagan was correct in doing what he did anyway and Congress certainly should make the military aid he is requesting available. Late this week that appeared to be the direction the vote was moving since the House Thursday approved a Republican-backed amendment that authorized $120 million in immediate military aid for El Salvador and other countries in beleaguered Central America.

The support hasn't been swift in coming, either in the Congress or among the American people. The reasons are simple. Americans can see this country getting dragged headlong into another money and life-consuming brushfire when the circumstances don't seem to justify our involvement. Americans don't want that and even though military assistance to Central Americans fighting communist aggressors seems enough justification, many view it as merely the first step toward eventual physical involvement.

More than a few Americans feel that cost is too high under almost any circumstances — barring an outright invasion of this country. In this instance, though, that isolationistic attitude carelessly overlooks a number of important facts.

First and foremost is the fact that the conflict in Central America, devoid of American involvement, likely will mean another communist toehold in this hemisphere. There is an attitude expressed by many Americans that this country should not get involved in the internal matters of other nations. In most instances, we're in agreement. But when the outcome can directly affect the future security and lifestyle of this country's people, Americans not only have an interest in the conflict, they have an obligation in manipulating its outcome, if possible.

If all of Central America were to be consumed by the flames of Marxism, it probably would not affect the lives of all Americans. It most probably would affect the lives of their children and grandchildren.

For that reason, America has a very large stake in the future of Central America. And Reagan's call for the support of Americans — including the members of Congress — should be heeded in the true spirit of freedom. Let the flame of freedom burn in Central America.

Another View:

Old WPA returns

During the Depression of the 1930s, the Works Progress Administration was ridiculed, wrongly, as a do-nothing operation.

The legendary WPA (We Poke Along) is back in Washington, this time running economic policy, producing motion without movement.

The motion includes the resignation of Martin S. Feldstein, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, who will return to Harvard University in July. Interest rates at major banks are in motion, heading up, the prime rate, the one reserved for corporate customers, rising to 12.5 percent, the third increase in less than two months. The White House is stirring, complaining that rising interest rates are the fault of the Federal Reserve Board's refusal to increase the money supply fast enough.

The Senate roused itself this week, but not enough to go anywhere. A Democratic proposal to combine tax increases and budget reductions to slow deficit spending by $200 billion over three years failed on a tie vote. That proposal would have put a very small dent in deficits that are expected to add around $200 billion each year to the national debt indefinitely unless drastic measures are imposed. The next proposal, backed by Republicans, would make an even smaller dent in the deficit.

Feldstein's departure is no surprise. Harvard keeps its teaching chairs open for faculty members on a leave of absence for only two years, and Feldstein's leave is up. But it would have been no surprise under any circumstances. He has said many times that the deficit problem is sufficiently dangerous to warrant immediate cuts of up to $50 billion a year. The White House ignored him.

Recent polls show that consumer confidence is high, with people planning more major purchases than at any time since 1966. Passenger confidence on the Titanic probably was just as high while the icebergs were still over the horizon, just as the deficit now — for most people — is over the horizon.

President Reagan was on television again the other night, arguing for more money for more weapons for Central America. They will, as has most of the military expansion of the last three years, go on America's credit card, whose interest charges alone were $73 billion between January and March.

Rising interest rates hurt. They hurt America's housing and automobile industries that are so dependent on credit. They hurt Third World countries, deep in debt, and industrial countries still pulling out of the recession. The deficit is a major contributor to the rise in interest rates.

There is no mystery about what must be done to get the iceberg of national debt out of the economy's way. The tax structure must be changed, both for equity and to produce more revenue. The United States must spend less on defense, paying more attention to conservative estimates that the military budget can be cut by $25 billion without sacrificing readiness or modernization. Federal pension plans must be brought into line with private plans, and growth in social spending held to the inflation rate.

But there is a question of whether these things will be done. Despite its reputation, the old WPA did much useful work. So far, the new one, the one in charge of economic policy, has not.

Vietnam living off refugees' pain

WASHINGTON — When the communists seized power in South Vietnam, they put on a big show of eliminating corruption and elitism. Now they have come to terms with the dread forces of supply and demand. Corruption is worse than ever; black-marketing is rife; graft is demanded and given for every kind of government service.

Jack Anderson

The saddest cases are the victims of hardship and persecution. These people are allowed to escape only if they pay enough to the right officials. A few have raised the bribe money to buy a permit to fly out of Vietnam in relative comfort. But most pay small, pathetic bribes for the privilege of risking their lives in fragile boats on the pirate-infested South China Sea or the Gulf of Siam.

In 1979, the United Nations got an agreement out of the Vietnamese government to let a select number of people emigrate legally. Under the Orderly Departure Program, more than 47,000 Vietnamese have been allowed to leave with official permits.

U.N. and State Department officials have been closemouthed about the corruption that underlies much of the refugee flood, legal and illegal. They're afraid public disclosure will jeopardize the legal program. Given the endemic greed of the communist officials, however, this seems unlikely.

From interviews with refugees and internal State Department documents, my associates Corky Johnson and Donald Goldberg have learned that, in fact, departure from Vietnam is guaranteed only when there's money to hand out. Thousands of refugees won their chance at freedom only after paying off corrupt officials.

Here are some typical examples of the Vietnamese regime's traffic in human lives:

— After wretched treatment in one "re-education" camp after another, a former South Vietnamese police lieutenant finally gained her release. But as a graduate of the re-education camps, she was not allowed to hold a legal job. So she became a small-time black-market merchant, selling Western medicines that had been smuggled into the country. In this way, she managed to save several hundred dollars.

She signed up for the "Iron Boat Program" — a semi-legal operation involving payments to security police, who split the money with Chinese businessmen. The businessmen would then provide phony identification papers saying the bribe payer was Chinese — and thus deportable.

But though the woman paid the prescribed bribe, she never got her papers — or her money back. The program was stopped suddenly in 1978. Recently, she escaped in a small boat.

— Several members of a family paid corrupt officials about $2,000 apiece to be deported as Chinese. Loaded on trucks with hundreds of other Vietnamese, they were driven to the seacoast, where they waited for a month.

When their boat finally came in, they were forced to relinquish all their valuables and identity papers. The boat, built to hold 15, was crammed with nearly 200. It soon capsized. Two members of the family drowned; the rest were picked up by another boat and made it to safety.

— One case that casts some doubt on the Orderly Departure Program's effectiveness involved the wife and three children of a former South Vietnamese government employee who was airlifted out of the country in the last days before its collapse. Resettled in the United States, he applied through the United Nations to get his family out.

But the wife was given a bureaucratic runaround as the Orderly Departure Program office moved back and forth between Saigon and Hanoi. After years with no progress, the woman was introduced to a Vietnamese general who told her that he could get her and her children out — for cash on the barrel. Almost immediately after handing over gold, the woman and her children were hustled aboard a plane to the United States.

— The process of bureaucratic bribery can, at times, be downright Kafkaesque. Consider the case of an elderly, wealthy couple who had no connection with the South Vietnamese government, and so had nothing but their wealth to offend the communist regime.

The couple applied for an exit visa under the Orderly Departure Program. They were told that they'd have to leave their property behind when they left. But in a particularly cynical twist, they were told they'd also have to bribe the appropriate officials before their request to leave would be considered. In other words, they'd have to pay a bribe to be allowed to bribe the government to let them go.

The intricate bribery procedure extended over three years. The government was still not satisfied that the old people had turned over all their money. In despair, the husband tried to commit suicide. This finally convinced the authorities that they had squeezed all they could out of the couple, so they issued them exit permits.

The money trail that supports the refugee bribery system is often a tortuous one. If money for bribes is sent from the United States directly, it is easily confiscated by the Vietnamese government. So usually the transaction involves family members in both Vietnam and this country. A refugee here, whose family still has hidden funds in Vietnam, will be sent a coded message to pay a specific amount to the family that wants to leave.

Like the Rothschilds before them, the Vietnamese have figured out a way to get around the restrictions of a hostile government.

GEORGE F. WILL

Soviets restoring Olympic spirit

WASHINGTON — The law of averages has finally caught up with the Kremlin. After 67 years the Soviet regime has done something useful: by withdrawing its full-time professionals it has gone far towards restoring the amateur nature of the Olympics.

George F. Will

Without drawing deeply on one's fund of cynicism, it is possible to question the sincerity of the Kremlin's announcement, which was made with a characteristic sense of proportionality. That regime's tone of injured innocence increases in proportion as its grievances are trivial.

The day the Kremlin announced the boycott — citing concern for the safety, rights and dignity of Soviet athletes — reports reached the West that the Kremlin, not content with tormenting Andrei Sakharov, was pressing the weight of the state down on his wife, who is under investigation for "defaming the Soviet system." It is a nice question whether it is even theoretically possible to defame that system, but never mind.

Perhaps Soviet sports czars consulted their stop watches and decided they do not have a team that can cope with the likes of Carl Lewis and Mary Decker. But obviously the main purpose of the boycott is to pay back the United States for 1980.

The Soviet boycott, announced against background rumble of the bombing and armored offensive in Afghanistan, illustrates the Soviet sense of symmetry. The United States boycotted the Moscow Olympics to protest the rape of Afghanistan; the Kremlin is protesting organizational niceties in Los Angeles.

One grievance is that the United States will not do as the Kremlin did in 1980, when potential protestors were removed from Moscow. Furthermore, there is the problem of defections. How are you going to keep the athletes happy in Murmansk after they've seen Malibu? (Do you know the definition of a Soviet string trio? It is a Soviet string quartet at the end of a tour in the West.)

The Soviets utter the requisite homage to "Olympic ideals" and their boycott has stirred high-minded talk about "removing politics from the Olympics," an idea akin to removing pasta from fettuccine. It has even been said that "the United States started it" — "it" being the "intrusion" of politics into the good clean fun of the games. That must be news to, among others, the South African regime, a disagreeable regime whose unfortunate athletes have been banned from recent Olympics at the behest of a lot of other disagreeable regimes. Prestige and propaganda are national assets; whenever they are at stake, politics will be present.

The ancient Olympics degenerated into commercial, corrupt and violent carnivals until, in 394 A.D., they were stopped by the Roman emperor Theodosius. Sound fellow, Theodosius.

When the Olympics were rashly revived in 1896 after a merciful lapse of 15 centuries, American athletes arrived in Athens 11 days late. They had not been told that the Greeks were still using the Julian calendar. There has been rough sledding ever since.

Indeed, the Olympics, like the United Nations, often have been a net subtraction from international comity because the games replicate and sometimes magnify the world's tensions. In 1900 U.S. athletes protested the sacrilege of Sunday competition. In 1908 in London, Finns refused to walk behind a Russian flag. Americans, still smoldering from colonial injustices, refused to dip the flag to Edward VII and protested most things British, including the boots the British wore in the tug-of-war. In 1912 the Finns were still at daggers drawn with the Russians, as the Italians were with the French. In 1920 at Antwerp the Belgian crowd went berserk when Britain won at water polo. That was mild compared to the Soviet-Hungarian water polo match in 1956, when the water ran red with blood. Then there was the Hitlerite orgy in Berlin in 1936, and the Munich massacre in 1972.

The proper Olympic ideals are not peace and harmony among nations. Sport is not about such things. Sport is about excellence. That ideal can be served by putting away the pretense of amateurism. Let the competition be between each nation's best athletes, amateur or professional.

East bloc countries advertise their gold medals as proof that socialism, like Wonder Bread, builds strong bodies nine ways. But some odd rulings sometimes help. In 1972 officials set back the game clock, which had expired, thereby enabling the Soviet basketball team to beat the U.S. team. A basketball team between the Soviet professionals and U.S. professionals would be an occasion for our wage slaves of capital (such as Larry Bird and Bernard King) to teach the basketball-playing portion of the Soviet Union's emancipated proletariat a thought-provoking lesson about economic determinism: Capitalism calls forth the best jump shots.

ART BUCHWALD

Anyone for $64,000 question?

There is some question as to whether NBC paid for an exclusive interview on the "Today Show" with Colonel Khadafy after the Libyan Embassy shootout in London. CBS claims they were originally offered Khadafy for $5,000, and turned it down. But CBS did pay a half million dollars for a three-part interview with former President Nixon.

Art Buchwald

It is obvious that the price of exclusive interviews with world figures will soon be an important part of the "news" business.

Every world leader worth his salt will eventually hire show biz agents to haggle over fees for appearing on American TV.

"Hello, Gerry, this is Sam at the William Darkness Agency. Are you sitting down? How would you like the Ayatollah Khomeini, on his rug, for five minutes tomorrow night?"

"How much are you asking for him?"

"One hundred thousand dollars."

"You're crazy, Sam. We got Khadafy for $5,000."

"Khadafy is a bush-league terrorist. Khomeini hasn't been seen on American television for over a year. He's willing to dump on the United States and the Soviet Union, and declare a Holy War on China. If you don't want to deal I'll call ABC."

"Do I have your word that he won't appear on any of the other networks for six months?"

"You have to be kidding. If you want an exclusive it will cost you $200,000. Look, we're talking about one of the most hated men in the Western World. You want ratings, you have to pay through the nose."

"Okay, we'll take him. Who else have you got for next week's morning show?"

"How about Madame Marcos? She knocked them dead on '60 Minutes.'"

"Will she talk about the Aquino assassination?"

"She'll talk about anything if the price is right. Cable TV offered me $75,000 and I turned them down. Madame Marcos is one of a kind, and I'm not going to sell her for scale."

"For that kind of money we're going to ask the tough questions."

"She's used to tough questions."

"Okay, we'll book her."

"Gerry, are you still sitting down? How about Klaus Barbie? I can let you have him for $50,000. You'll be the first network to interview the 'Butcher of Lyons.' You could put him against 'Love Boat.'"

"He's not that known in the states."

"Okay, forget Barbie. Would you go for a package deal of Assad of Syria, Arafat of the PLO and Fidel Castro?"

"What will it cost us?"

"Seven hundred and fifty thousand. The other networks have expressed extreme interest, and the only reason I'm mentioning it to you is that they won't guarantee the show for prime time, which is the only way my three guys will go on."

"Let me get back to you on that. What have you got in your American stable?"

"I can give you Louis Farrakhan, but he's real hot now and it'll cost you."

"Will he promise to stay off the other news shows if we sign him?"

"If the price is right, he belongs to you people until the November election."

Compromises allow each of us to control our lives

Bill Modisett

Life is a series of compromises and, as such, everyone has control over his or her life.

When you hear someone crying that this problem or that occurrence is in control of their life, take it for what it is worth: An indication that they are refusing to deal with the situation.

Let me explain. In the past I've been faced with opportunities to move to larger cities such as Dallas or Houston. Job offers and recreational outlets would make many individuals immediately accept. I've declined without hesitation because I don't relish the thought of living in a mass of confusion.

It isn't that life in the big city isn't "right" for some people. I've known numerous individuals in my life who appeared particularly suited to the metropolitan lifestyle. For them, it's heaven; for me it would be the opposite extreme.

So, when faced with those opportunities I weighed the alleged benefits of residing in those cities — the higher pay scales, cultural attractions, allure of the "big city" — against drawbacks — long drives to and from work on congested freeways, "big city" crime and pollution, aloofness of the citizenry. For me, there's no question of the answer, even though I might be giving up some "advantages" to hold onto some of the lifestyle I now enjoy. That's part of compromising — you give up something in order to gain, or retain, something of more value.

Most of us are faced with situations which involve the art of compromise almost on a daily basis. Some of them are easy to resolve; others require a lot of time, energy and soul-searching. Some of them test our very mettle, our values.

To a large degree that's true because of the society in which we live. Technological advancements are changing our lifestyles almost overnight and calling on us to make life-changing decisions in a brief period. That's the way the world has been progressing in recent years and as the computer age races to the forefront, it will become more and more predominant.

As the pace of everyday life increases, individuals are called upon to make often-difficult choices. Do they want to remain in a particular community? Does it feel like home? Will a couple with a young child allow the mother to work, necessitating the child to be placed in day-care facilities or will she stay at home, forsaking a career in the interest of the child or children? Does one job offer more long-range security and fulfillment than another? Will it call for too much adaptation of one's work principles?

These and any number of other questions involve the issue of compromise. None is easy to answer and all require reliance on values learned throughout our lives.

But life isn't going to change. It'll keep throwing opportunities and challenges at us in every way imaginable.

The only way to meet those challenges successfully, in a personal sense, is through the art of compromise.

Celebration of Arts offers Midlanders myriad opportunities

By DICK DUNBAR

Richard "Dick" Dunbar is the chairman for the Midland Arts Assembly's first annual "Celebration of the Arts." He and his family moved to Midland from Dallas two years ago. He is an associate with Hinkle Enterprises, Inc. and related companies.

The Midland Arts Assembly takes pride in presenting the first annual "Celebration of the Arts" May 11 through May 19th and telling the Midland artist, "We're proud of you!" Midland is a "Cultured Oasis for the Arts." The purposes and goals of the "Celebration of the Arts" are to educate, inform and expose the public to the opportunities offered in the arts, to help the arts develop through audience involvement and to assist in taking the arts off the pedestal and making all art forms available for everyone to enjoy.

For the past year, the committee for "Celebration of the Arts '84" has been working to present the best nine days of entertainment and representation of the various art forms found in Midland. As chairman of this committee it has been my privilege and pleasure to work with some of the community's leading volunteers and to discover the high quality of arts provided by our arts organizations and the individual Midland artist. For a city of only 90,000 population we have many reasons to celebrate our art community.

But why go to all this trouble? What good are the arts anyway? What's in it for me?

Throughout the existence of mankind we have expressed our ideas, concerns and ways of life through the arts, whether it was in the form of cave paintings or Gothic architecture to Mozart compositions or a Henry Moore sculpture. We have realized what scientists now support: that the creativity of the human mind is best developed and stimulated by the arts. This creative thinking helps train our minds to develop into other areas, be it math, science, business, teaching or just everyday living. Can you imagine what life would be like without being able to create or have an imagination? The creative mind has been the one who has developed and advanced our lives to what we are today. To deny and keep the arts from developing is to deny the development and creativity of tomorrow.

THE ARTS help to define our past, provide a link to our future and give us a better understanding of the world we live in. The arts provide us with a means to express our feelings. But most of all they give us pleasure, new experiences and stimulate our imagination. All of us suffer from an overload of secondary images of real objects and experiences as they appear on TV, in movies and in reporductions. The arts bring us into direct contact with an original image and that can be a very special feeling.

The arts are also beginning to be recognized for the economic as well as the philosophic impact they can have on an area, attracting not only tourism but new businesses. They can improve the quality of life that affects companies' employees and families, which is a major consideration when a company decides to relocate and expand.

I believe the arts in Midland offer an opportunity for all people, no matter what color, what culture or how much money we earn, to come together on common, neutral ground and work together. This exposure will allow us to experience how others perceive ther particular art form, ballet or break dancing, fiddling or violin playing, gospel or opera. And, hopefully, we will learn to appreciate others' interpretation of the arts and realize the "arts are for everyone," and not a select few. This ability to work together and understand each other can spread to other common causes in our community.

IF THE arts in Midland are to continue to develop and new art forms and facilities come into being, we must develop the audience to support them. This will require support from all areas of Midland. We must also look to the future audience by exposing and educating our youth in the arts. We need to offer them the opportunity to enjoy and get involved on their own level, not just through our school systems (which do an outstanding job in spite of the pressures for them to disassemble the arts) but through the arts organizations themselves and by example set by adults.

The "Celebration of the Arts" will give the individual Midland artist an opportunity to perform and exhibit — many for the first time. It will also give the citizen of Midland the opportunity to experience the quality of life Midland has to offer through its arts and to tell our artists we value their contribution to our lives.

The Midland Arts Assembly encourages each of you to attend some part of the "Celebration of the Arts." Come, get involved, be a part of it and experience what the arts have in store for you. The rewards are great!

"Speaking Out" columnists are invited to submit articles on subjects of their choice. They should be limited to 850 words or less.

Food stamp program government farce

In the scope of my employment, one of my duties for the past several months has been the morning run to the downtown post office. I have no complaints to offer the postal employees; they have been most polite and helpful to me.

Prior to the time I began going to the post office, I assumed, and it was the most erroneous assumption I ever made, that only those people who could really be classed as "needy" were on the records for receiving food stamps. Now I know that beginning at 10 a.m. and continuing until 3 p.m., intermingled with the actual postal customers standing in line are people who live off the taxes paid by those of us who are paying full dollar for groceries.

I definitely feel that there are those people in Midland who should be receiving food stamps, either because of their advanced age and limited income or in cases of total disability. However, it burns me to the core to realize how few of these people are in these lines each morning. Most of the people are younger and healthier than my neighbors and I.

Midlanders and Americans, stop to think! How long must we each take responsibility for someone who does not take responsibility for him (or her) self? I am divorced, have two children and have a job. I don't need food stamps — I and my children are my responsibility.

I wish I had a few minutes to talk to each of the elected officials who allow the food stamp program to become such a farce. Or better still, a few mornings at the downtown post office might open a few eyes. Just this morning, I saw a young, early 20s couple, well-dressed with two tiny babies, get their food stamps and get in their 1983 model car. There's no doubt in my mind who paid for the new car — you and me!

I am tired of it.

Charlie Sprayberry serves Midland daily

We, the citizens of Midland, are fortunate to have two good men who serve us as justice of peace — Robert Pine and Charles Sprayberry. Since there has been some controversy over Charlie during the past election, I want to elaborate on him.

He has many fine qualities and is a just man. He puts the public first, before his position or office. He is not one to bring attention to another candidate's faults in order to make himself look better. He is a religious man who believes in God. He has a wife and family who love him, and stand by him in all respects, and vice-versa. He works in the community in many ways which several do not know about.

You should have seen how much paint he was wearing after helping to paint a house during "Christmas in April." Just this past Thursday night he was honored as "Lion of the Year" by the Downtown Lions Club. This honor is not bestowed lightly. The selecting committee had 422 members to choose from. The Lions motto is "We Serve." This is what Charles Sprayberry does daily. Charlie, we salute you.

MISD board has no guarantee from bidder

On March 8, 1984, the Midland School Board awarded a contract to a second bidder for the general construction to build a new elementary school here in Midland at the additional cost of $11,700 to Midland taxpayers.

The award was based on estimates of the general contractors as to total time to complete the job, which has little or no guarantee to either Midland taxpayers or the school board of timely completion.

The low bidder submitted a base bid of $2,481,000 and an alternate bid of $2,488,000 for the project. The second bidder submitted a base bid of $2,489,800 and an alternate bid of $2,499,700. The contract was awarded on the alternate bid of the second bidder.

During the board meeting, the representative of the low bidder offered to reduce his estimated completion time for the job, but was not given the opportunity to do so.

I, as a citizen of Midland, would like to express my displeasure with the actions of the Midland School Board.

What about issues sheriff didn't address?

Republican County Commissioner Win Brown expressed his disappointment with the Republican electorate who showed their dissatisfaction with Sheriff Smith. Commissioner Brown indicated that the voters based their decision on rumors alone. I'm not sure what rumors Mr. Brown was referring to, but what about the campaign issues that Sheriff Smith could not address?

— The lack of proper patrols in the county. Sheriff Smith only said that there were limited funds to work with. How about some reorganization? Is the sheriff's office "brass" heavy?

— The high turnover rate. Sheriff Smith only said that some officers quit and some got fired. But how many and why? Was the sheriff the reason they quit? There were never any statistics offered to dispute Mr. Painter's claim.

— Low morale. This is hard to see. However, when Sheriff Smith starts demoting deputies two days after the election it makes me wonder. Should these deputies have been demoted, or was this for revenge? Surely there must be a better answer than "no comment." Is that the whole story?

All I heard about Sheriff Smith was that he is a proven professional. He may have proven himself to Win Brown, but it is obvious that there was a majority of voters who were not fooled. Perhaps Mr. Brown should stop to realize that some of these same Republican voters may show their dissatisfaction with him too in the near future.

Sexual abuse issue which won't go away

"Please, Mommy, don't let Daddy hurt me any more." Such is the cry of a 4-year-old girl from Rockville, Md., and many others like her from 9-months-old and up.

The abuse is sexual, which means physical, emotional and mental all rolled into one. These children regularly endure this ordeal each time they visit their fathers, allowed visitation rights by the court.

In this little girl's case, her mother finally would no longer ignore her pleas and the fact the child could not "stand up straight or sit down and was writhing in pain" after such visits. So, she did what most of us would have: Refused to take the child back to the father for the next weekend.

But guess who got the punishment? The judge sentenced the mother to 10 days in jail for denying the father's "rights." Needless to say, the little girl is being punished even more.

The broadcasting of the Adam Walsh story on TV, and its subsequent flashing of missing children's pictures resulted in finding several, some of them from Texas. When we hear that a child was kidnapped by a parent, we somehow assume that love must be the motivation and that, surely the child was well cared for, etc. Not always so.

The sickening increase in sexual exploitation of children must be halted, and you and I can do something.

Every two minutes in the United States a child is sexually molested; one out of three children will encounter some type of molestation before adulthood.

In every case where sexual assault occurs, one factor is present: The offender started on the road to perverted thinking by reading pornographic material.

So, let's do our part to curb the sale of this stuff. Check the Texas Penal Code p. 55, paragraph 43.22 through 25. This is a law that can be enforced. And don't forget the Supreme Court decision that each community decides its own decency standards. We tend to think it all happens somewhere else. This might motivate some of us to take action, perhaps joining groups such as NFFD (National Federation for Decency) or MAAM (Mothers And others Against Murder) or even forming our own local coalition. Think about it!

Reagan takes convincing case to American people

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — President Reagan took his case for immediate help for Central America, to stop Soviet-sponsored expansion in our hemisphere, to the American people on national television this past Wednesday. He spelled out his message in detail, clearing up lots of confusion among fellow American men and women.

A hitherto reluctant House of Representatives immediately began to backtrack and handed President Reagan a major victory in his request for military aid to El Salvador.

The Democratic-controlled House agrees to discuss further with the Republican-held Senate the whole aid package for Central America in the next few days.

The president's message to his fellow Americans came soon after Jose Napoleon Duarte claimed a 55 percent runoff victory over ultra-rightist Robert d'Aubuisson. It was a triumph acclaimed by President Reagan as a win for moderation, represented by Duarte's Christian Democrats. The guerrillas, who have infiltrated El Salvador and sought to sabotage many polling areas, gave up by saying that the elections were a "farce." Nicaragua has stalled twice on a promise of free elections and is now holding off indefinitely.

AS COMMANDER-in-Chief, President Reagan stressed our national security and the absolute need to thwart Soviet ambitions, with chief surrogate Cuba, in this hemisphere. He didn't say so, but the hardliners in Moscow obviously had reflex actions when they anonymously referred to the U.S. expedition against Grenada when we removed a Caribbean threat and sent Fidel Castro's legions into flight.

Losing El Salvador, unless we rush meaningful aid to the riddled little country, would mean abandonment of all Central America to the Communist tyranny. That places our historic access to sea lanes in the Caribbean in jeopardy and makes the Panama Canal prey to infiltration and Marxist-led demonstrations. Besides, the number of refugees fleeing from Communist rule would be well over a million. They'd come helter-skelter into Mexico first to seek surcease, then gather in growing totals on the U.S. border.

President Reagan, citing the meaning of the area to us, said forcefully:

"Central America is a region of great importance to the U.S. And it is so close — San Salvador is closer to Houston than Houston is to Washington, D.C. Central America is America; it is at our doorstep. And it has become the stage for a bold attempt by the Sovet Union, Cuba and Nicaragua to install communism by force throughout the hemisphere."

THERE WAS no high-falutin' phraseology in the president's presentation. To my mind, and I watched the speech on television along with many millions of other Americans, President Reagan told it like it is and said what the Soviets and their stooges do. We should remember, the president said, that the Soviet bloc gave Cuba and Nicaragua $4.9 billion last year alone, while the U.S. provided all its friends in Central America a tiny fraction of that total. So much for our magnanimity!

President Reagan asked direct questions if we should somehow do nothing or very little. It reminded him, as it did me, of the old-time isolationists who thought in the '30s that appeasing aggression was a solution. Aggressors are insatiable. In this case, read Communists as aggressors. Here's what the president asked and I find it worth repeating:

"The simple questions are: Will we support freedom in this hemisphere or not? Will we defend our vital interests in this hemisphere or not? Will we stop the spread of communism in this hemisphre or not? Will we act while there is still time?"

PRESIDENT Reagan emphasized rather sadly, I thought, that for the last four years, just about half of the administration's military aid requested for El Salvador has been provided. Even as he spoke to the nation, young Salvadoran soldiers were running short of ammunition in the field, down actually in many cases to their last rifle clips against well-supplied terrorists.

For their own right of reply, the Democrats came up with Michael D. Barnes, a critic of administration Central American policies. He heads the Foreign Affairs subcommittee of the Western Hemisphere. His remarks sounded pretty namby-pamby to me. Veteran Democratic Congressman Jim Wright of Texas was crisp and business-like. He has visited El Salvador, was impressed with the electoral process under trying conditions and returned home to advocate swift assistance for El Salvador. A considerable power when it comes to legislating money, Wright is presently busy persuading reluctant Democrats to see it his way.

Obviously the triumph of moderate President-elect Duarte in El Salvador, still to be certified by an agonizingly slow bureaucracy, has made many on-the-fence Democrats line up with congressman Wright. Others also were aware, in advance that by going public to the people, President Reagan could outflank them. He made a telling point of this type of communication for patriotic bipartisanship with references to the late Presidents Truman and Kennedy and to the late Sen. Henry (Scoop) Jackson. It was Sen. Jackson, a lifelong Democrat, who encouraged development of the blue-ribbon bipartisan commission on Central America headed by former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger.

THE ASSISTANCE package seems presently well advanced because of President Reagan's direct appeal to the people. He also used a map of Central America, showing Nicaragua and Cuba in red. In references to anti-Sandinistas fighting the Marxist regime in Nicaragua, President Reagan described them as "Freedom Fighters." They have frequently been denounced as "contras," for counter-revolutionaries.

We should all bear in mind what President Reagan eloquently urged:

"Let us show the world that we want no hostile Communist colonies here in the Americas: South, Central or North."

Does Mr. T really need bodyguard?

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Mr. T needs a bodyguard?

One might pity the person who'd be fool enough to tangle with the muscular star of the NBC-TV series "The A-Team," but Mr. T apparently believes in being cautious.

The tough-guy actor who once was a bodyguard himself for heavyweight fighter Muhammad Ali, was in town to take part in Saturday's Iowa Pride Week parade in neighboring Council Bluffs, Iowa, and make some anti-drug abuse appearances.

He and his entourage requested and got the 11th floor of the Red Lion Inn to themselves Friday night, even though it meant moving music conductor Daniel Hornstein to a different floor. Mr. T's security man got Hornstein's room.

Hornstein, here to conduct the Omaha Symphony's Pops Concerts, said he didn't mind.

"They moved me to a much larger room, so I'm not complaining," he said.

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Former Roosevelt aide Wilbur Cohen, who was instumental in devising Social Security, told his 50th college reunion that the system today is suffering from young people's disbelief, but that it is unlikely to be abandoned.

Cohen, who addressed fellow members of the University of Wisconsin's class of 1934 on Friday, said he guessed he was tapped to speak because of his expertise. He has taught courses on the system and served as secretary of health, education and welfare under President Lyndon Johnson.

"Quite frankly, I know why," he said. "I'm 71 years old, and I'm interested in Social Security, too."

Cohen joined the administration of President Franklin D. Roosevelt just out of college and became involved in setting up Social Security. Later, he taught courses at the University of Michigan on its intricacies, and still lectures on the subject as a professor at the Lyndon Baines Johnson School of Public Affairs at the University of Texas.

He said the Social Security system has its problems but is unlikely to be abandoned and remains a system with dignity, where an individual receives benefits by virtue of contributions, rather than on the basis of a bureaucratic investigation to determine need.

Cohen said a serious problem for the system is one of attitude, because "young people of today don't believe they're going to see their Social Security."

"They don't want to pay in. As a matter of fact, they don't like to pay in."

BOSTON (AP) — The maitre d' at a posh hotel dining room refused to seat former President Jimmy Carter because he showed up for dinner recently wearing a cardigan instead of a jacket, a Boston Herald columnist says.

Norma Nathan, who writes The Eye column for the Herald, said Saturday that a Secret Service agent went into the Cafe Plaza of the Copley Plaza hotel after Carter was turned away and protested, "That's the president."

"All the more reason he should wear a jacket," Ms. Nathan quoted maitre d' Ursula Stadt as saying. She said Carter ate elsewhere.

"He was really rather put out," she quoted one unidentified witness as saying.

"We never saw him after that," said Alan Tremain, president of Hotels of Distinction, which runs the Copley. "And he never came back."

Carter apparently was accompanying his wife, Rosalynn, who was in Boston last week promoting her new book, "First Lady from Plains."

NEW YORK (AP) — Jean Harris, the private school headmistress convicted of killing Scarsdale Diet Dr. Herman Tarnower in a lover's quarrel, threatened suicide repeatedly during her trial and felt like a "nuisance" to her attorney, according to new court papers.

Mrs. Harris, 61, now serving 15 years to life on her murder conviction in the March 10, 1980, death of Tarnower, was driven to the brink of suicide almost constantly, said the 64-page brief asking the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court to order a new trial.

Such things as adverse court rulings and a damning letter to Tarnower which she feared would be made public left Mrs. Harris in a suicidal state of depression, said the brief, obtained Friday by The Associated Press.

And although she took notes in court and appeared to be participating in her defense, Mrs. Harris actually was doing only "make-work" jobs given to her by her lawyer, Joel Aurnou, so she wouldn't bother him, it said.

"Mrs. Harris believed that Mr. Aurnou considered her a nuisance," added Mrs. Harris' new lawyer, Michael Kennedy, who contends she did not receive a fair trial because of errors by Aurnou.

Aurnou argued throughout the trial that Mrs. Harris shot Tarnower accidentally as she tried to take her own life in the bedroom of his Purchase, N.Y., estate.

Hundreds of artifacts turn up in survey of Custer Battlefield

CROW AGENCY, Mont. (AP) — Archeologists and volunteers armed with metal detectors are turning up hundreds of artifacts, mostly spent shell casings, in the first days of their survey of the Custer Battlefield.

"We're finding 10 times as much as we thought," said Jim Court, battlefield superintendent.

So far the only human remains uncovered are bones from a toe. Court said Friday that two Park Service archeologists and 12 volunteers have found 200 to 300 shell casings, the metal backstrap from a Colt pistol and a piece of a leather bridle strap.

Since field work began Monday, the survey has focused on the Calhoun Hill area, where Lt. James Calhoun, who was Lt. Col. George Custer's brother-in-law, and Capt. James Keogh fought to the finish with their troops on June 25, 1876.

The hill is about a half-mile east of the Last Stand area where Custer himself is believed to have died.

The artifacts don't appear significant in themselves, Court said, but the numbers of shell casings and their concentration may say a lot about how the battle was fought.

Casings from Springfield rifles indicate where a cavalry skirmish line may have tried to hold out against overpowering numbers of Sioux and Cheyenne Indians, Court said.

A flattened slug found near one of the original burial sites may have been a bullet that killed or wounded a trooper. "We know it hit something," Court said.

Some live rounds, possibly left by a fleeing soldier, were also uncovered in the area.

Groups of Henry cartridges found in one area indicated an Indian position. "They found so many Henry cartridges the archeologists started calling it Henryville," Court said.

It is pretty easy to tell who fired what on Custer Battlefield, Court said, because the soldiers used only Springfields. The Indians used anything they could get their hands on, including some Henrys. Even a musket ball was found on the field, Court said.

The Park Service approved an archeological survey of portions of the battlefield after a fire last summer cleared the area of vegetation.

Custer's last battle remains one of the great mysteries of the American Indian wars because none of the troopers who were under his command survived. One question the survey hopes to answer is the fate of Company E. The bodies of its members were never found.

Accounts from survivors of other companies led by Maj. Marcus Reno and Capt. Frederick Benteen indicated that the soldiers from Company E were fighting in a coulee near Deep Ravine. But markers placed where the soldiers supposedly fell were placed above the ravine.

Paintings 'resurrected' for auction

NEW YORK (AP) — A little-known collection of 11 paintings and drawings — including major works by Paul Gauguin, Vincent van Gogh and Edgar Degas — has been resurrected from 20 years in storage to be sold at auction Monday.

The group of Impressionist and Post Impressionist paintings is expected to bring as much as $15 million, a figure that would rival the $16.8 million paid last year for 15 Impressionist paintings from another private collection.

The artworks to be sold Monday were assembled 50 years ago by Julius Wolf, a German-born cotton trader who became a Swiss citizen and moved to New York in 1940.

After his death in 1944, his wife Erna Levi Wolf, stopped collecting but kept the paintings after marrying a second time, to Sylvain Dreyfuss, a Swiss watch manufacturer.

At the time of Mrs. Dreyfuss' death last November, the collection had been in storage for more than 20 years.

"She was Swiss and I gather she spent more time in Switzerland so she put the paintings in storage," said David Nash, director of fine arts at Sotheby's, which will auction the works.

The 11 paintings and drawings are the most important of a larger collection that has been dispersed among various Dreyfuss beneficiaries, he said.

Two of the works — Gauguin's "Mata Mua" and van Gogh's "The Canal La Robine du Roi with Washerwoman" — are expected to bring $3 million apiece.

Comparing the paintings to the Havemeyer collection sold last spring, Nash said the quality of both was exceptional but that the Dreyfuss works had "a broader spectrum and concentrated more on Post-Impressionist paintings."

He noted that the Dreyfuss paintings "have been fairly unknown to the general public. They were not exhibitied widely and basically from 1945 they have remained on the walls of one home."

In contrast, the collection of the Havemeyers, best known for donating 2,000 art works to the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, was remarkable in that nearly all the works were acquired directly from the artists or while they were still alive, said Nash.

The record price of that sale was $3.7 million for Degas' "La'Attende" — a record for an Impressionist work of art.

In the current sale, Gauguin's "Mata Mua" (Olden Times) is "very, very rare" because it was painted in 1892 during the artist's years in Tahiti.

Of equal value is van Gogh's 1888 "The Canal La Robine du Roi," which shows a view of the city of Arles, France. "Van Gogh did very few pictures of which the landscape of Arles is visible. It is rare to find it on the market," said Nash.

Another work up for auction is Degas' "Mary Cassatt at the Louvre," a pastel executed in 1880.

'Second wave' casinos open in Atlantic City

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Casino gambling's "second wave" begins unfolding here Monday with the opening of the 10th gaming hall as officials hail the continuing rejuvenation of this ailing resort.

The newest casino, Harrah's at Trump Plaza, will be the first to open in almost 18 months.

Casino gambling came to the East Coast in 1978, when Resorts International Hotel Casino opened here the year after Gov. Brendan T. Byrne signed the Casino Control Act.

Meanwhile, officials said they are heartened by recent non-casino construction, including a shopping mall and a Boardwalk condominium complex, and by renewed efforts at urban redevelopment.

"I think all of those things are important and they're going to become more important," said H. Steven Norton, vice president of Resorts International Inc. "We're on the verge of unleashing a large number of reinvestment dollars."

Despite the revenues poured into the city since the advent of casino gambling here, the resort's poor and elderly residents have complained about being ignored by the new Atlantic City.

On Monday, gamblers will use real coins at slot machines and play money at tables to test the Trump casino's operations, including gambling and accounting procedures. Proceeds from the play money sales will be distributed to a children's hospital and a culinary school.

The Casino Control Commission on Friday unanimously approved a certificate of operation for the lavish $220-million complex, co-owned by Harrah's and a company headed by New York real estate developer Donald Trump.

Elsewhere in the resort, the new shopping mall on a pier designed to look like a cruise ship has been open just under 13 months. More than 90 percent of the 170 shops in the Ocean One mall are occupied, and merchants say business is fairly brisk.

And the Ocean Club, a complex of Boardwalk condominiums selling for hundreds of thousands of dollars each, is a near sellout.

Three more casino hotels are under construction, and several others are on the drawing boards. Some of the operating casinos have plans for additions after the nine casinos reported winning $1.77 billion in 1983 from gamblers.

"The revenues that should reach about $2.1 billion this year could hit in excess of $4 billion by 1990, and could increase up to $6 billion or $8 billion by the year 2000," Norton said.

'Humanoid' skull fragment may be from ancient ass

MADRID, Spain (AP) — A skull fragment said to be a piece of bone from Europe's oldest humanoid may instead be from an ancient animal similar to an ass, a newspaper reported Saturday.

The independent daily El Pais said an international meeting scheduled for the end of the month in Granada to formally present the fragment of "Orce Man" to the scientific world was abruptly postponed because of doubts over the authenticity of the fragment.

Dr. Josep Gisbert, Jordi Agusti and Salvador Moya of the Sabadell Paleontology Institute near Barcelona made public last June their discovery of the fragment in 1982 in the Guadix-Baza depression in Andalusia in southeastern Spain. The three called the piece Orce Man after a village near the discovery site and said tests had revealed it to be at least 1.4 million years old.

The Andalusian regional government Friday postponed the May 28-30 meeting at the request of the three paleontologists.

El Pais said Marie Antoinette de Lumley of the Museum of Man in Paris told the paper she had advised the three to ask for a postponement after receiving a plaster copy of the bone fragment. But she said she did not want to speculate on the nature of the bone.

According to the newspaper, the inside surface of the fossilized skull fragment was covered with a calcareous substance when found. When the substance was finally removed last month, the paper said, a ridge was discovered which led other researchers to wonder whether the bone could be that of an ancient equine animal, similar to an ass.

But Gisbert told the national news agency EFE on Saturday that the bone was definitely humanoid and that "affirmations to the contrary are prompted by shadowy interests."

Perfect nose would score 100 on scale

NEW YORK (AP) - With some help from Michelangelo, a New Orleans plastic surgeon has come up with a new system for rating noses — and he says it should lead to better nose jobs.

"I think doctors who use it will do better work," said Dr. Jack Anderson. But he said the perfect, 100-point nose as defined by Michelangelo and other classical artists will remain almost impossible to produce.

Anderson was introducing his system Saturday in Palm Beach, Fla., at a meeting of the American Academy of Facial Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery.

The evaluation begins with photographs of a nose from the front, sides and below before surgery. Points are subtracted from 100 for each defect that shows up. If the tip of the nose is crooked, for example, that's two points off. If the tip is too wide, another two points. If the upper part of the nose is depressed, that costs one point.

After surgery, the nose is photographed from the same angles and rated again. The change in score is discussed by surgeon and patient. In general a nose that began as a 50 should pick up 25 points in surgery, while an 80 should get about 10 more, Anderson said.

The ratings should help the surgeon find more deficiencies before surgery, Anderson said, and a surgeon should be able to monitor his proficiency from nose to nose by keeping track of the point gains he produces.

If the scale is widely adopted, it might help describe effects of new surgical techniques at medical conferences, he said. And perhaps plastic surgeons could earn titles like "master surgeon" according to the improvements they produce, giving the public a clue to their ability, he said.

Anderson, who said he has not rated his own nose, has used the system with about 200 patients to point out their defects, He said he stresses that he can't give them a 100-point nose, because the surgery is very complex and the healing process can frustrate the careful work of the best surgeon.

"So patients are told in advance the object of the operation is improvement and not perfection," he said.

Disappointed patients might take heart in Anderson's observations about the noses of several topflight models.

"They're not really great noses," he said, "but you never know it because the girl's so pretty."

Monarchs' winter home threatened

Monarch butterflies rest on trees in the mountaintop oyamel fir forest northwest of Mexico City. The butterflies rest on the trees until the sun warms them enough for their wings to open, enabling them to fly.

Riding the wind in burnt orange waves, monarch butterflies are heading north from their winter home, survivors of nibbling mice and birds, the weather and their biggest threat — humans.

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Riding the wind in burnt-orange waves, monarch butterflies have headed north from their mountaintop winter home, survivors of nibbling mice and birds, the weather and their biggest threat — people.

Monarchs, Danaus plexippus, have made their way to Australia, New Zealand, the Canary Islands and South America. But only those born at the end of the summer in North America, where they are most common, are known to fly thousands of miles to cluster in colonies in a mysterious annual migration, unique among insects.

In their most dramatic journey, millions of monarchs from southeastern Canada and the eastern United States wend their way to central Mexico, arriving around Nov. 1, two months after they left their northernmost summer sites.

There they wait out the winter, blanketing the towering oyamel fir trees. Masquerading as another layer of bark or dried leaves when the cold keeps their wings folded, leaving only the light tan undersides exposed, they paint the trees in splashes of autumnal ochre when, warmed by the sun, they open their wings. Black veins lacing their wings and a black border dotted with white add to their disguise.

IT'S NO wonder their winter home wasn't found until 1975.

About three hours west of Mexico City, the colonies were known only to peasants farming below the butterflies' 9,000-foot mountain ridge until Canadian zoologist Fred A. Urquhart homed in on them after decades of research.

Discovery means tourists, a potential danger, but may also mean protection for their habitat from the population pressure that pushes the peasants ever farther up the mountains.

For a monarch, the sun is the key — and the forest.

Big enough to fill the palm of your hand, monarchs are master sunbathers, "like little solar cells," as ecologist William Calvert puts it.

They cannot fly at all in temperatures below 59 degrees, says Calvert, an adjunct associate professor of zoology at the University of Florida and a leading researcher on the monarchs.

But let them warm up. They float from the trees, soar against the deep blue sky like autumn leaves, swoop down a path in an orange blizzard.

If caught on the ground for the night, they may climb up the underbrush, warmer than the ground and less accessible to mice, Calvert said. At 25 degrees, they begin to freeze.

MONARCHS MAKE most birds ill, but two species manage to eat them.

They take up little space at any given moment — 11 acres this season, less than half the area in 1982-83.

"They need the warmest nighttime and coolest daytime conditions," says Calvert.

During storms or cold waves, every tenth of a degree drop in temperature could kill thousands, he has found.

"Every year there's a house a little farther up the slope, it's cut a little farther up the slope," he said of El Rosario, one of four sites the monarchs use every year. "It's pretty hopeless when you think that 60 percent of Mexicans are under 20 and think that all are going to want houses and newspapers and magazines and comic books. The pressure on those little forests is pretty great."

Along the rutted, dusty trail to El Rosario, cornfields slope down the mountainside dotted with tree stumps.

The government has prohibited cutting in the forests and issued a decree to protect the monarchs. The Urban Development and Ecology Ministry is working on another decree that specifies the areas to be protected, Javier de la Maza, assistant director of continental ecological reserves, said.

THEY HOPE to strictly preserve 2,470 acres and allow controlled activity on another 2,470-acre buffer zone at each site, he said.

The ministry envisions a regional, year-round development program that will offer economic alternatives to the peasants and protect the forest.

De la Maza admits it will be difficult to show "ejidatarios" — communal farmers — that they can profit from forest management.

"The ejidatario, unfortunately...lives for the moment and if he needs a tree at that moment, he is going to cut it," said de la Maza,

The sites have survived this long, he added, because they are in such rugged terrain.

"With the rhythm of growth of our country and, in a way, the disorganization that reigns in the countryside, if we do not make our actions work, then I do not give areas that are now preserved more than six or seven years," de la Maza said.

The government wants no more visitors than now because it is not equipped to control them.

Training tourists may be as hard as educating farmers, but de la Maza said that "with paths at a distance, as if it were a museum, so they can see them but from far away, it will not hurt them."

By mid-April each year all the monarchs that survived have headed north. Soon after mating and laying eggs, they, too, will die, having lived eight months.

Recreation leader gets people involved

By LANA CUNNNGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Em Carnett is an initiator.

Hired by the city 23 years ago to handle recreation programs when there was little money in the budget, she has turned the recreation half of the Parks and Recreation Department into one that now must work six months ahead on planning and coordinating its ideas.

She's been with the city 23 years and jokes about the first 14 years she spent as a part-time employee. "I was the longest part-time person they had," she says. For the past nine, she's been recreation superintendent.

Through the years, Ms. Carnett not only has touched the lives of thousands of Midlanders but also has made them bounce, jog, swim, run and learn. The kindergarteners she started with are bringing their children to her for teaching. And she works with the senior citizens with the idea in mind that at 56 she'll soon be where they are today.

Born and raised in Chicago, her ideas of what she would be when she grew up always centered on helping others. She first wanted to be a nurse then dropped that idea after working during World War II as a nurse's aide. Then she applied and was accepted to be an airlines stewardess. Just as she was to begin training, Glen Carnett married her and brought her to Midland.

"I discovered later that I hate flying," she says with a chuckle.

DURING COLLEGE she had worked in the summers as a counselor at YMCA camps. She liked the work so much she would have paid them instead of vice versa.

Ms. Carnett knocked on City Hall's door shortly after she arrived here, but there was no opening for a recreation specialist. Until there was, she opted to work as a secretary for Hiawatha Oil & Gas.

She tried City Hall a second time and was given the same answer. But when she arrived home her phone was ringing. "They said they found out they needed someone immediately, but it was part-time."

That part-time designation suited her well as she wanted more time to spend with her son. It also gave her time to finish her degree at The University of Texas at the Permian Basin and to gain 22 credit hours toward a master's degree in behavioral science.

In designing and initiating new programs over the years, Ms. Carnett says she tried not to duplicate what was already being provided by the private sector.

Her first job was to teach kindergarteners — long before the school district took on the job. "The only kindergarten was at private schools or at the Parks and Recreation Department. I have taught hundreds and hundreds of children. I see those kids now and they remember I taught them such-and-such.

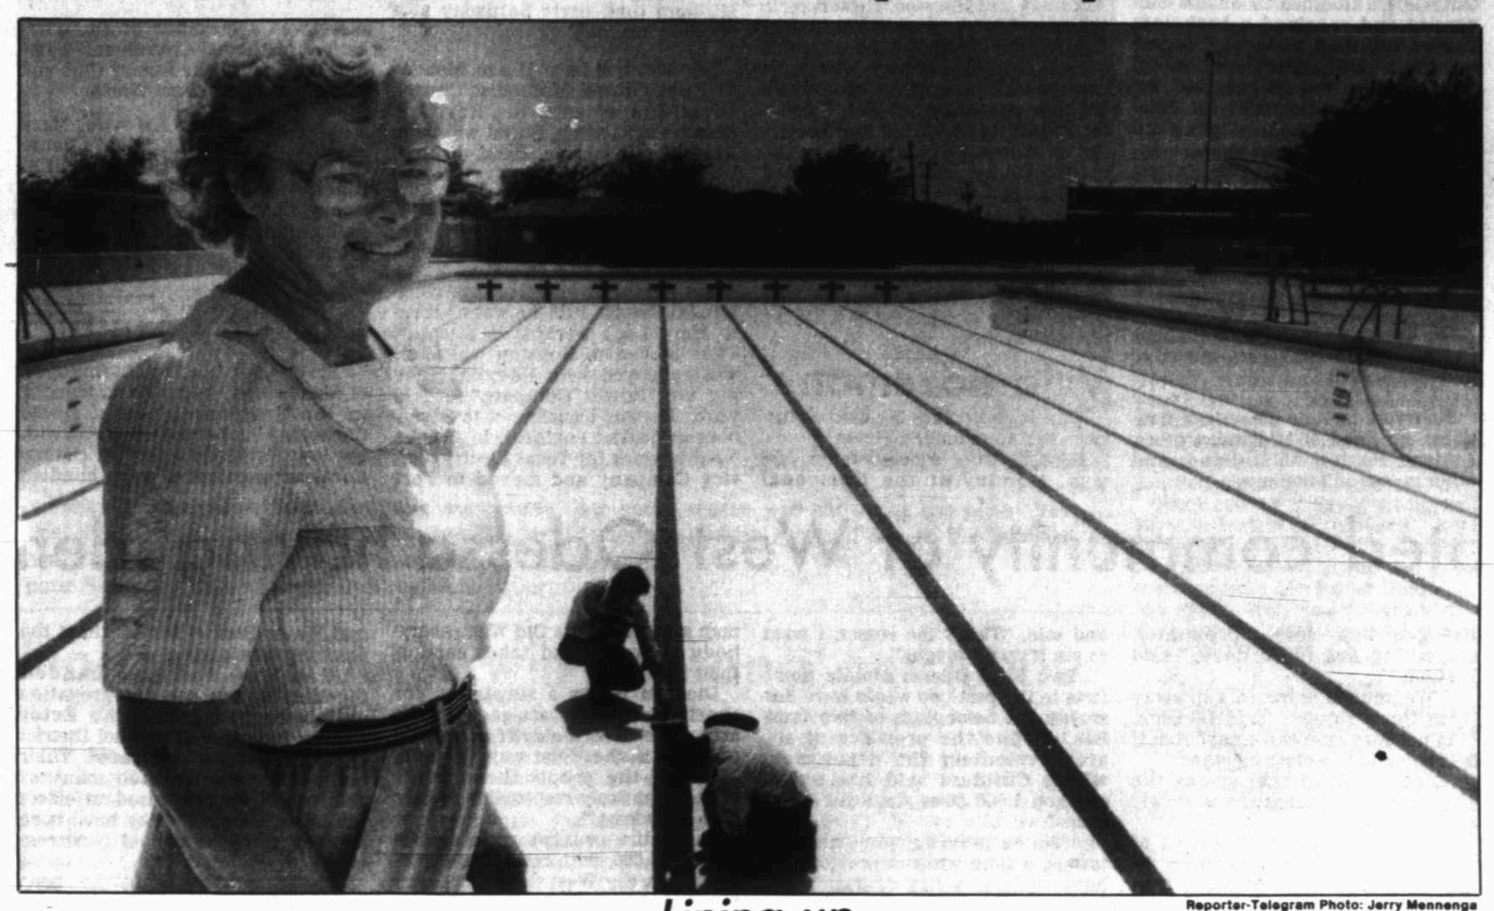

"IT WAS VERY rewarding to work with small children. In their eyes, you can do no wrong."

Over the years, she started the first aerobics classes and dynamic water exercise and initiated the tennis association — just a few of her projects.

"I've come up with some first-time programs that have gotten recognition," she says.

"I tried to do things other people weren't doing. It's been my philosophy on planning to find a need not being met and to meet that need, to try to get the people involved and then let them take over."

Community having identity crisis

Reporter-Telegram Photo: Ron Jaap

A pumpjack across the street from a house is a common sight in West Odessa. An unorganized community of about 30,000, it has no restrictions on zoning and as a result most roads aren't paved and mobile homes are parked next to foundation-built homes.

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Just west of the city limits of Odessa, taking up about as much land as the city and boasting a 30,000 population of its own is an unincorporated area known as West Odessa.

Few cities in the Permian Basin are as populated as this largely unregulated part of Ector County which manages with only the slightest hints of organization.

Another byproduct of the late 70's oil boom which had the entire Petroplex in a frenzy, this community has taken on an identity made up in equal parts of individualists who chose the freedoms found only outside the city and the communal atmosphere that goes with people living together in large numbers.

No accurate figures are available on the explosive growth which this area has experienced. Longtime locals recall as few as 5,000 neighbors less than 10 years ago.

But with the influx of people drawn by the lure of "King Crude," what had been a desolate area dotted by mobile homes and the occasional permanent structure was flooded with city folk fed up with restrictions and new residents unwilling to pay the boom-time prices available in town.

Mobile homes were parked all over the landscape as the West Odessans set up with little regulation to stop them. About 70 percent of the population still resides in mobile homes, though many have been made more permanent by additions and improvements.

"Basically, the people out here are extremely independent," said Sam Holloman, who built the first home in the area more than 30 years ago. "They want an acre or two or three and no one messing with them.

"It's got its drawbacks; but that freedom, people seem to like it," said Holloman, chairman of the month-old Westside Council, an arm of the Greater Odessa Area Chamber of Commerce.

And as county commissioner and West Odessa resident David Childers said, "There's not enough room in the city of Odessa for all these people to live."

The "blue collar" influence is strong here, with the laborers and their families making up a large part of the population. A smattering of small businessmen and a few wealthy oil men complete the employment picture for the area's bread winners. It is also a racially mixed community.

The uncontrolled growth of this area has brought West Odessa to a crossroads. In many places, pumpjacks operate very near well-kept homes — flanked by mobile homes in various states of disrepair, many complete with impromptu junk heaps and broken-down jalopies adrift in the yards.

With 30,000 people come the problems of a dense population, problems traditionally dealt with by the formation of a government.

But the decision to incorporate will not come easily to an area where many moved to escape the city.

Midland attracts market researchers' attention

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

Midlanders don't usually think of their town as a place that attracts a lot of national attention.

And they're probably right.

Outside of the oil business, Midland doesn't figure heavily in the national imagination — it's not big enough or close enough to the major media centers.

But for those very reasons, Midland attracts quite a bit of attention from market researchers, the people who test products for the national market.

"Midland is pretty well isolated from other areas," says Sue T. Jones, owner of Petroplex Market Research.

"In large cities there are lots of independent sources for products," she says, but Midland is too small and too far away to encourage this kind of supplier. "Therefore, it's a good test market for national companies."

GARY OTT

'Born-again hippie' is one up on cowboy

When I spotted the young man — he looked to be in his early 20s — roaming about the Lubbock airport I had the feeling it was going to be an unusual day.

Let's see, how can I best describe him? He had shoulder-length blond hair, which, of course, is not all that peculiar, at least in itself. But add to it his gym shorts, blue windbreaker and bare feet and you might begin to get the picture.

And for some reason he seemed happy. He didn't walk, he bounced. He snapped his fingers a lot and, in general, seemed to be dancing to an entirely different drummer than the rest of us. Maybe he was a refugee from a 1966 Beach Boys concert; I don't know. But he definitely struck me as strange and, frankly, strange people make me nervous...especially if they have the appearance of a born-again hippie.

Predictably, he drew gawks, mostly from those of us who were trying to determine why any person over the age of 14 would want to look like that. He didn't seem to mind. Indeed, he appeared lost in his own little world. Had he known others were staring at him, I got the distinct impression he would have reveled in the notoriety. He seemed the type. It was as though he knew he was bizarre and proud of it and if the rest of us did not approve we were free to cast our amusing stares elsewhere.

And maybe he had a point. So I dismissed him as a mindless, though harmless, freak and retired to the airport bar where normal human beings gather.

Two drinks later I was safely on the plane, lost in my fears about what horrors awaited me upon my return to the office. Despite the anxiety, I was reasonably content.

Then it happened. Through the corner of my eye I spotted him. It was the freak and, making matters worse, he was approaching me. Still, there was hope. The plane was only half-full, leaving him numerous seats to choose from before making his way to my little secluded corner of the smoker's section. No such luck. Slowly, but surely, he kept coming.

Near panic, I pretended to read one of those airline magazines (as I recall, it was an article on a pole vaulter from Abilene. Olson was his name, I think, though that really has nothing to do with this ...merely a weak attempt on my part to impress you with my vast knowledge on a variety of subjects.)

Anyway, the little thug kept approaching me and I was in no mood to deal with what was certain to be his sophomoric drivel. Besides, he was probably a space cadet who voted for Jerry Brown on the grounds that Linda Ronstadt might become first lady. And no doubt he would be puncturing his conversation with innocuous phrases such as, "like, wow, man." I wanted no part of it.

My wishes obviously mattered not. He plopped into the seat next to me and immediately turned on his portable stereo. Lucky us. We were now going to be blessed with a rock concert at 20,000 feet.

Or, at least I thought we were. Instead, the freak had the common decency to use earphones. Thank God, for small miracles. As he settled back into his seat, he adjusted the volumn, closed his eyes and breathed a sigh of relief. A subtle smile raced across his face. His mind appeared to be drifting. He was content.

The rest of us stared at him, and in all honesty, it was as much out of envy as curiosity. He looked so at peace with himself. To a not so small degree, we were jealous.

Finally a cowboy from El Paso, who was sitting across from us, could stand it no longer. "Hey, boy," he said, nudging the freak. "What you listening to?"

"I beg you pardon," he replied, slightly irritated by the interruption.

"The music. What is it? Mick Jagger?" The cowboy was obviously pleased with his knowledge of the rock scene.

The freak smiled. "My dear boy," he replied. "This happens to be Tchaikovsky's Violin Concerto in D major." And he returned to his music.

The cowboy was not impressed. To no one in particular, he grunted, "Must be one of those damn punk rock groups."

He moved to Odessa in 1957 and worked for Superior Electric Supply Company, then moved back to Midland in 1968. Chauncey retired in 1970.

He was a member of the First United Methodist Church and a former member of the Rotary Club and Masonic Lodge in Fort Worth.

Survivors include his wife, Mary of Midland; a son, G.R. "Bob" Chauncey of Midland; two sisters, Mrs.J.A. Blackwell of Metairie, La., and Nancy Chauncey of Schultz, Calif.; four grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

Dorothy Smith

Services for Dorothy R. Smith, 79, of Midland will be at 3 p.m. Monday in the Guardian Funeral Home Chapel in Oklahoma City, Okla., with the Rev. Raymond Kelcy officiating. Local arrangements were handled by Ellis Funeral Home.

She died late Friday evening in a Midland hospital.

Mrs. Smith was born Aug. 25, 1904, in Minnesota. She moved to Oklahoma in 1910 and lived in the Clinton-Weatherford area. She attended college in Weatherford. She was married in 1924 to Thomas Eric Smith. He died in 1963.

Mrs. Smith taught in several schools in western Oklahoma for many years and retired in 1960. She moved to Midland in 1977 to be close to her daughter.

She was a member of Willshire Church of Christ in Oklahoma City and the Oklahoma Educational Association.

Survivors include a daughter, Jeanie Smith of Midland; two brothers, Delbert Radant of San Diego, Calif., and Lorenzo Radant of Pensacola, Fla.; and three sisters, Helen Smith of Loomis, Calif., Minnie Nelson of Willow, Okla., and LaVerne Cheves of Oklahoma City.

Unincorporated community of West Odessa having identity crisis

Holloman said he'd heard "precious little talk" of making this area a city. Suggesting a village (which leaves more latitude for preserving the freedoms) might meet less resistance, he said, "I see some form of government happening. There's just too many people out here to wander without adequate law enforcement, fire protection" and other services.

Rev. Kelly Dickson, pastor of Westside Baptist Church, noted the West Texas Planning and Zoning Commission has said a political entity would be formed by 1985-86.

"When you get this many people living in this close a proximity, something has to be done," said Dickson.

"We moved here to get away from those things," said Dickson. "I'm not sure man can escape that if he's going to live close together."

Dickson added that among the populace "the realization is slowly developing."

"Local government comes out of the realization that sometimes we can do things better together than separately," he said. "That control factor is what most poeople in West Odessa are afraid of."

Childers noted the division of sentiments over forming a government and said, "That's the reason I want to put it up for a vote."

Two West Odessa mobile home fires in the past two weeks have destroyed the belongings of two families, despite the presence of the area's volunteer fire department which Childers said has extinguished 1,600 fires since its inception.

"We're moving very quickly toward a time when we're going to have to form a fire district," said Dickson, noting the need for such a service in an area spanning about 100 square miles.

The sheriff's department has two units patroling this area. But Holloman said, "Like the Old West, everybody is armed and takes care of their own deal."

Dickson wants a substation for sheriff's deputies assigned to the area. "We need a sheriff substation out here in the worst way," he said. "Most of the people the sheriff's office is entirely responsible for are in West Odessa."

The entire county's population is about 125,000, with most of the people not in the West Odessa area living in the city.

"We think water is a problem developing," said Holloman. Those not using water wells buy their water from the Ector County Municipal Water District for 1.5 times the price city users pay.

One time the area banded together was in the desegregation suit brought against the Ector County Independent School District by the federal government. Their complaints are that too many of their children are bused to effect the integration and they have been shortchanged on school constructions.

Fly Elementary School has been built in West Odessa, and the district has indicated more school sites will be considered when the current buildings have reached capacity.

Not being a city presents the area with an identity problem. "(West Odessa) was one of the better kept secrets until recently," said Holloman.

"Right now, this area is in the stage of developing its own identity as a community," said Dickson, whose congregation is the largest in the area.

Noting the opening of a Gibson's store and plans for a shopping center in the area, Dickson said, "As the pattern continues, I think this community is going to move even further toward forming its own identity."

Recreation superintendent Carnett likes getting people involved

The Women's Tennis Association is one example. There was no such organization in Midland until Ms. Carnett came along. "Now, they are very self-supportive. They run it like a business. I step back and enjoy it."

She gets excited if the citizens come to her with an idea for a program. "I help them get it started and then let them take it over."

There's a different twist added to some children's programs. In these cases, she tries to introduce the city's youth to a new form of recreation at a low cost to the parents. Gymnastics is one example, working with the local School of Gymnastics. She would like to add Introduction to Ballet. "It gets the kids involved without spending a lot of money, and then they can go on to the private studios."

Her initiating didn't stop with people. The dog obedience classes sponsored by the city also was her idea. She and her husband were raising and showing German shepherds and the obedience classes evolved from that.

SWIMMIMG CLASSES, water safety instruction and lessons for the handicapped and mentally retarded are part of her portfolio. "The schools didn't have a program for the handicapped. I worked with them in organizing a program in the city gym for handicapped and special education kids. They (school district) eventually got a facility and took it over," Ms. Carnett says.

She also lists among her credits her certification as a water safety instructor trainee for this area, CPR training and membership in the Texas Recreation and Parks Society and Professionals on Aging of the Permian Basin.

Her one self-criticism centers on her conservatism.

"If anything, I'm probably too conservative on programming. I usually investigate it thoroughly."

Offhand, she can't remember what ideas never were accepted. "We tend to forget the flops," she laughs.

The budget is another area she handles with a conservative hand. "I used to not have money in the budget for recreation and I would go to the Salvation Army and get things for the classes. The kindergarten classes didn't have desks for the kids and I would have them stand around a ping pong table," she recalls.

After the City Council began appropriating money to the recreation budget, she has watched over it closely. "The city can only do so much when budgeting is tight. We listen and see what we can work out.

"IN ONE SENSE," she continues, "I do feel I've been handicapped in that I don't have a first-class facility. I look in awe at the YMCA with their carpeted dance floors and the mirrors on the wall. I've had to be creative and scratch and dig."

The Senior Citizens Center, though, stands in testimony to her work. Once a fire substation, the City Council decided it could be remodeled into a senior center. Ms. Carnett researched how centers in area cities were designed, talked with the users as to what they liked and disliked, then incorporated the best ideas into Midland's facility.

"Our center has been known as a country club of senior centers," she says with a smile. "It's very beautiful and offers a lot of things." The stage in the main room is an unusual feature for a senior center, and it has been "super" for programs.

"For me, it was a nice experience" to be so close to seeing how it was designed. But there's another reason behind her intense involvement with it, she hints with a laugh. "I'm reaching that age so I have a natural inclination to their (senior citizens) needs."

During her tenure, Ms. Carnett has worked under five parks and recreation directors. "I saw how each one contributed his own special talents, for a town going from 20,000 to 90,000 population. Each one was different, but each one had something to contribute."

She in turn has played an influencing role on young people with several who worked under her during the summers deciding later to go into recreation as a career.

Summer programs are about to start, and they will keep the staff busy for the next three months. But she's already getting ideas in her head about the fall.

A self-acclaimed health nut, Ms. Carnett jokes about her ability in the various sports — swimming, running, tennis.

She credits her enthusiasm with keeping her and others going.

"I'd always hoped to encourage them and set an example. It's how I really feel."

Midland attracts attention

According to Peggy Petton of Market Research Consultants Inc., which concentrates on the Midland-Odessa area, "75 percent of our customers are from out of state."

As a municipal guinea pig, Midland enjoys national stature among a select group of market research specialists. Its size is perfect — big enough to provide an adequate sample but not too big to be easily handled. It has television stations affiliated with all three major networks, a high percentage of cable TV users and its own newspaper, so consumers can be easily reached.

And Midland's physical isolation gives researchers more control over their tests, which they want to direct to as precise a target group as possible. In practice, complete control is impossible since people refuse to behave like laboratory rats in cages. But in Midland, researchers don't have to worry as much about shoppers from nearby communities coming in and skewing their statistics.

Researchers are also attracted to Midland because its demographics are good, but not too good.

"Midland is extremely upscale" in both income and education, says Kenneth Karr of Karr/Smith Inc., a local consulting firm. "But it's not totally a 100 percent white collar town. It has a significant concentration of wealth, but also a nice broad middle, which most markets don't have."

When Midland is combined with Odessa, "you really come out with an unbelievably bonafide market segment mix." And the area's ethnic mix is also valuable to researchers, according to Karr.

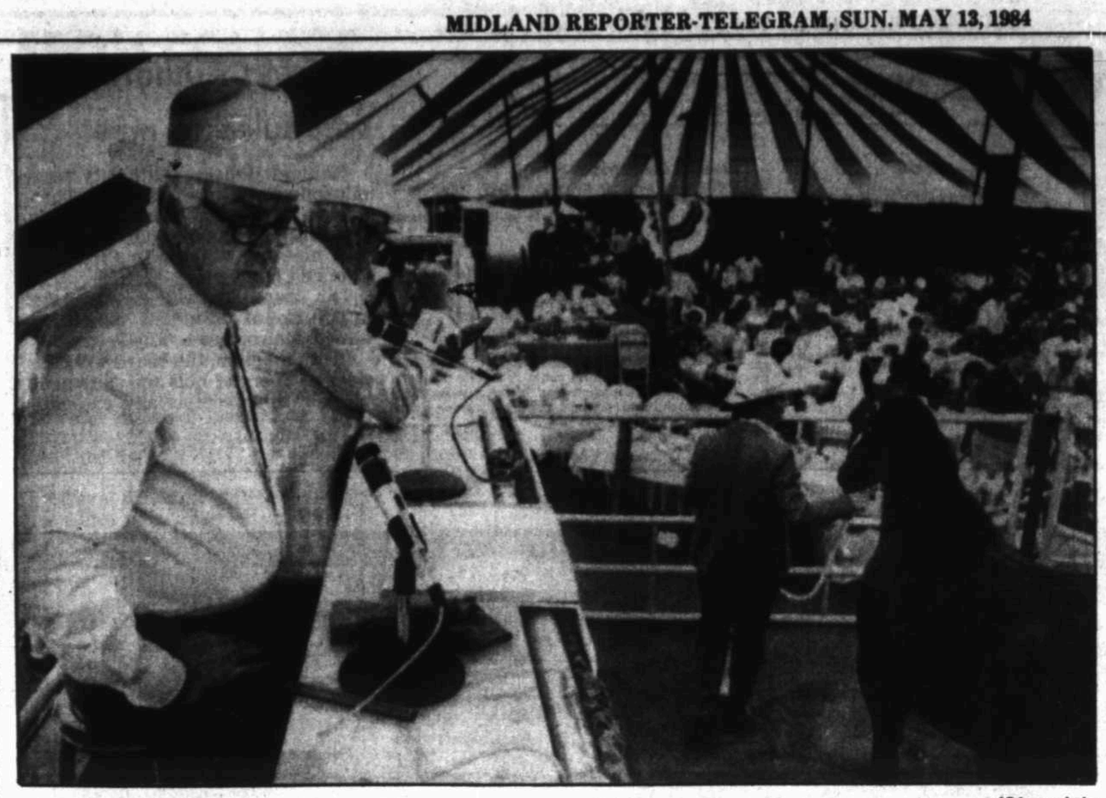

The Midland-Odessa area is considered an especially accurate test market for the West Texas region, Ms. Petton says.

"It's considerered more representative of West Texas than Amarillo or the other Panhandle towns" because the area is involved with both oil and agriculture, she says. "Usually it's the use of a particular product — West Texas is good for corn products (as opposed to potato products) and Mexican food. And we did a study on pickup trucks several months ago."

In many ways Midland seems made to order for market researchers, but all is not perfect in this test market utopia. The testers may be delighted with the set-up, but the testees sometimes get a little, well, testy.

"People here have been burned a lot by people who pretended to be market researchers in order to sell them something," says Ms. Petton. "They've become leery."

Ms. Jones agrees. "It's been very difficult. But true market researchers only gather opinions, and it's to (the consumer's) benefit to answer the questions. That's how the national companies get the information they need to improve their products."

Block advises farmers 'to pray for rain'

DALLAS (AP) — U.S. Agriculture Secretary John Block announced Saturday that 67 more Texas counties have become eligible for drought assistance but said the problem is almost beyond the help of government aid and advised farmers to "pray for rain."

The 67 Texas counties are eligible under legislation that extends emergency assistance to counties adjoining the 99 Texas counties previously designated eligible for disaster aid, Block told a news conference.

West Texas has been suffering under drought conditions since last year and this year's rainfall is far below average.

Farmers and ranchers in designated counties can apply for Farmers Home Administration emergency loans and can apply to purchase low-grade feed corn at reduced prices.

"I don't know what the next step is. Just pray for rain. That's the best solution we have," Block said.

Block said he believes the agriculture industry is "pleased" with progress made by the Reagan administration — lifting the grain embargo with the Soviet Union and the payment-in-kind program that paid farmers in surplus grain if they agreed not to plant.

"There are still lingering problems in agriculture," Block said. "Some of them are frankly almost out of the reach of the secretary of agriculture. They are macro-economic related, they are problems that have have to do with deficits, interest rates, the strength of the dollar, and I hear about these kinds of problems most everywhere I go."

He said interest rates are "down dramatically" but "still too high."

The agriculture department has received about 3,600 applications from Texas ranchers for low-cost grain and about 3,000 applications were granted to purchase about four million bushels of grain, Block said.

He said commodities support payments in 1984 were expected to drop dramatically from a record $18.6 billion in 1983 to about $6.7 billion, but the figure could reach $12 billion in 1985.

Net farm income this year is "definitely going to be near a record" — over $30 billion, Block said. "Farm prices overall are the best they've ever been in history," he said.

The 1985 farm bill will be hammered out by the first of the year, Block said, adding that he believes this year's farm legislation will be "more difficult" to write because of varying interests among factions in the agriculture industry.

Block would make no definitive predictions about what would be in the farm bill.

"Let's just say that my personal philosophy is one of some kind of safety net, but market policies that are market oriented to the extent possible with an intense interest in expanding or strengthening our export posture," he said.

He said he is making a nationwide tour, attending "listening sessions" with members of the agriculture community in preparation for drafting the farm bill.

Block also announced that the deadline for applying for disaster aid has been extended by two months to eight months. He said that means, in most cases, farmers and ranchers can apply up until eight months after the date of the last disaster designation in their state, no matter which county they are in.

Hance attributes win to stand on aliens

From Staff Reports

In a brief press conference at Midland Regional Airport Saturday, Kent Hance attributed his surprise first place finish in last week's Democratic U.S. Senate primary to his strong support from West Texas voters and his stand against amnesty for illegal aliens.

"This campaign would not have been successful without the high percentage of votes we received" in West Texas, Hance said.

In comments made before entering a meeting with his area supporters, Hance attacked his runoff opponent State Sen. Lloyd Doggett for supporting amnesty.

"Amnesty is a jobs issue, it's an education issue, and it's a tax issue," said Hance, a U.S. congressman from the 19th District. He claimed that there is some support in the Hispanic community for his position, "because they understand that the jobs lost (to aliens) are theirs, too."

Responding to Doggett's charge that he has proposed no alternative to amnesty, Hance said he favors giving the Border Patrol enough money to enforce the present laws.

"It would be better to enforce the present laws and make them work," said Hance. "Funds have not been made available."

Wise Airlines requests six month suspenion

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Aeronautics Commission has set a meeting for 2 p.m. Wednesday in Austin to consider a six-month suspension of service by Wise Airlines at Midland Regional Airport.

TAC Air Carrier Division head Harry Rodgers says the San Angelo-based carrier has indicated it is seeking the suspension because it is unable to use terminal facilities, due to modifications to accommodate larger aircraft, to load or unload passengers.

Wise also serves Austin, Brownwood, San Antonio and Dallas Love Field.

Early counseling and issuance of time permits for Midland College's first Summer Session started quickly last Monday. Persons who plan to take classes during the first summer session should visit the Office of Student Services, Administration Building, as soon as possible since time permits for registration are issued on a first-come basis.

Hours are 7 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday this week and Monday and Tuesday of the following week. Last day to obtain a time permit is Tuesday, May 22. Registration is slated for Thursday, May 24, and classes start May 29. Midland College begins its summer schedule tomorrow with offices open from 7 a.m.- 12 noon and 12:30-5:30 p.m. Only the maintenance department employees work on Friday. This schedule will last until August 20.

Started as an energy conservation measure, the four 10-hour days have reduced utility costs dramatically... and the three-day weekends in the summer make the longer hours worthwhile.

Seven Midland College faculty members were awarded cash Exceptional Performance awards by college president Dr. Jess Parrish at a recent faculty meeting. The awards are given by the Midland College Foundation. Recipients included: Clyde Chynoweth, geology; James Fuller, English; Rebecca Tate, English; Warren Taylor, art; Steve Thomas, behavioral science; Tom Vannaman, accounting; and Barbara Scofield, computer science.

Parrish also announced the appointment of Dr. Eileen Piwetz as Acting Chairperson for the newly-created Health Sciences Division and Director of Nursing. She has been an instructor in the Associate Degree Nursing program since its inception. Celia Harris, director of the ADN since it was formed, requested assignment to teaching only. We applaud Ms. Harris for getting the ADN program off to an excellent start, with complete accreditation at the earliest possible time.

Mary Poe Harding, known to all the evening students who visited the snack bar, has retired to waterside life at Lake Bonham.

Ron Hall, who has been Veterans' Service Advisor, is resigning at the end of the month to return to college fulltime.

And Dr. Teena Hughs, director of the Student Activities Office, is leaving at the end of the month to live in Fort Stockton. However, MC isn't losing her entirely, since she'll be teaching a course in the college's Fort Stockton extension center this summer and possibly other courses there this fall.

Best wishes to the Midland College women's tennis team, which left Friday for Ocala, Fla., and the National Junior College Athletic Association's championship tournament this week. Coach Joe Williams' players should draw many of the top seeds, since the Chaparrals won both the conference and regional titles this season. They will be seeking MC's fourth national title in women's tennis.

There's music in the air today... two different types in two locales. At 3 p.m. in Dennis the Menace Park, the Midland College Community Jazz Band, directed by Dr Don Grant, plays its second consecutive Mother's Day concert in cooperation with the Midland Parks and Recreatin Department. It's free, so bring your blankets or lawn chairs and enjoy the music.

Then at 7 p.m. this evening, Barbara Mandrell presents her top-notch concert at the Al G. Langford Chaparral Center. Lee Greenwood is the special guest for the show. At the time this was written, some tickets were available. You should be able to purchase reserve seat tickets at the Chaparral Center box-office late this afternoon. They're priced at $12.50 and $10.50.

Workshop to be Peake Experience

The success of a recent workshop in Midland has prompted Dr. Lee Gibson, founder of PEAKE (Perceive, Experience, Acknowledge, Know, Expand) to return from California for a PEAKE Experience in June.

The intensive five-day program includes one-on-one encounters and is open to the first 20 people who register. PEAKE enables one to break through blocks, past programming and old patterns.

"The PEAKE Experience has demonstrated its effectiveness in assisting hundreds of participants in reaching higher levels of consciousness, career advancement and satisfaction in personal relationship," Gibson said.

Consisting of from 65 to 80 hours, the program ends when each participant competes the material. The limited enrollment allows individuals to examine their lives in detail through a variety of processes, including "rebirthing".

Cost for the program, which runs June 22-24 and June 30-July 1, is $450. A $100 deposit (non-refundable) is due Monday.

For more information or to register, contact the Science of Mind Center at 697-4188.

LHS band named Best Band

The Robert E. Lee High School Honor Band was named Best Band last week at the Mountain States Music Festival held at Arizona State University in Tempe. The band performed a Concert of Honor and received two standing ovations for its rendition of the Conqueror March, The Hounds of Spring and the Holst Suite in F.

The Mountain States Festival is considered one of the most prestigious national festivals in the country.

In addition, the Lee Symphonic Band received first division ratings from each of the concert judges. The Lee Orchestra received an excellent rating.

Music students will perform

Over 400 Midland Independent School District students will perform a Spring Strings Concert at 7:30 p.m. May 21 at Midland College's Chaparral Center. Strings teachers Diane Neil, Judy Green, Wendy Witmer, Bill Prescott, Karen Walker and Marian Stone will direct the more than 300 fourth-, fifth- and sixth-grade students from MISD's 21 elementary schools. Lee Band Director Randy Storie will conduct the Lee High Orchestra. Also performing will be junior high and freshman orchestras. No admission fee will be charged. The public is invited to attend.

Rehearsal will be at 2:30 p.m. May 20 at Chapparal Center.

MC students need time permits

Hours for early counseling and receiving time permits for Midland College's first summer session change Monday as the college goes on its summer schedule.

Persons interested in taking credit courses during the first summer term for counseling and time permits may come to the Office of Student Services between 7 a.m. and 5:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday. Offices are closed Fridays during the summer.

More than 450 students were processed during the first four days of early counseling. As students complete processing they are assigned a 15-minute period to report on registration day May 24. Permits will be issued through May 22.

Classes begin May 29 and continue through July 2, meeting Monday through Thursday. Vocational courses in automotive technology, machine technology and welding are May 29-July 25.

UTPB offers fitness program

An intensive, six-week physical fitness and training program for adolescents will be conducted on the campus of The University of Texas of the Permian Basin this summer.

The U.T. Permian Basin Sports and Fitness Enrichment School will begin May 29 and last through July 6. Registration will cost $95, and can be paid in two equal installments of $47.50 each. Each student will be required to supply his or her swim suit, shorts and tennis shoes. The university will provide sport equipment, towels and a school T-shirt.

The summer athletic program is limited to youngsters between the ages of seven and 13, and will take place within the UTPB Gymnasium/Pool Complex and adjacent outdoor fields.

More information is available from the Office of Student Life, 367-2136.

Expenses down for CRMWD

From Staff Reports

BIG SPRING — Income is down 3.38 percent from budget projections for the first four months of 1984 for the Colorado River Municipal Water District, but expenses are under by 21.98 percent, according to a recent report.

For the period, the district has received $3,621,502, which is about $142,000 less than projected for the period. On the other hand, expenses of $2,196,932 are $540,000 under projections for the first four months. The major cost item was for electric power, $417,542 in April, which was up almost $39,000 although less water was pumped. For the four months, power costs totaled $1,442,186, up 11.30 percent over a year ago with 10 million less gallons pumped.

Pumping patterns changed sharply in April as spring demand began to sharpen. Of total sales of 1,498,603,240 gallons during the month, 1,011,059,700 came from Lakes J.B. Thomas and E.V. Spence. This compared with 82.56 percent for the first four months from the lakes. Similarly, wells supplied 390,063,000 gallons of the April sales, or 26.03 prcent. In the first four months of this year wells have accounted for only 10.34 percent of production. Of total deliveries for April, 7.10 percent was in non-potable water delivered to oil companies for secondary recovery purposes.

Total storage in Lakes Thomas and Spence was 272,150 acre feet, or about 90 billion gallons. Lake Thomas is 15 percent of capacity, Lake Spence almost 50 percent.

Eight-week-old starves to death

GALVESTON (AP) — The grandmother of an 8-week-old boy who starved to death says she noticed nothing wrong with the child.

"He didn't even cry," said the 57-year-old grandmother, who was keeping the child at her house when he died. "I should know something about it. I've raised children."

Mike Clark, an assistant district attorney for Galveston County, said Friday the case against the woman and the boy's 22-year-old mother is being considered by a grand jury.

Clark said a medical examiner's report showed the baby suffered from dehydration, bronchial pneumonia and malnutrition, which caused his intestines to atrophy.

The baby's mother was unemployed, living on welfare and serving five years probation for a forgery conviction when her son died, officials said.

Her other child, a 20-month-old boy, is under care of Galveston County Children's Protective Services.

The mother is being held in Galveston County Jail and is pregnant, her mother said.

"It's a damn shame," said Sgt. Raymond Rubio, who investigated the infant's death. "We've had a lot of neglect cases, but I can't recall anything this severe. To let a kid starve, something's got to be wrong somewhere."

YMCA sponsors basketball teams

An adult summer basketball league will be sponsored by the Midland YMCA with Men's A and B leagues if enough teams register.

The games will be played Monday through Friday nights at the Central and Washington YMCAs starting June 11. An organizational meeting will be at 7 p.m. May 29 at the Central Y, 800 N. Big Spring. All team representatives should attend this meeting.

There will be Southwest Basketball Officials Association scorekeepers and officials for each game. The team fee will be $300, to be paid at the time of registration, and a $5 player fee will be charged.

Each league has a limit and early registration is encouraged. For more information, contact Terry Seth at 694-2528, or Kenneth Barnes at 682-0533.

People of our community who make a difference.

Kelly Fish

Midland has a history of developing leaders out of their young men. One such young leader is Kelly Fish.

Kelly Fish is a landman for Getty Oil. He recently stepped down from the Presidency of the Midland Jaycees, but he is still serving on the Board as Civic Director.

While Fish was President, the Jaycees began planning their gift to Midland for its centennial. The gift will take the shape of a park known as Centennial Plaza.

The Jaycees had experience in park planning from the development of the "Tot Lot". They decided to take on a civic project of a higher level than in the past. Fish commented, "I had confidence in the Jaycees to take on a project of this magnitude."

Having been raised in Midland, Fish has a lot of civic pride and a wish to give the city some token of thanks. This pride has inspired him to help develop and make Centennial Plaza a reality.

Fish was proud to announce, "We (the Jaycees) are going to give the city a one million dollar plaza at no cost to the taxpayers." It took a group philosophy of caring for the city and its people on a local level to accomplish such a feat but it took leadership such as Kelly Fish's to get the project off of the ground. He was willing to give of his time and effort to make the Centennial Plaza project a success.

Fish also contributed to the community through his involvement in the Midland County Young Republicans, where he served as President. He belongs to the Permian Basin Landman's Association. Fish has served with the Midland Chamber of Commerce as well.

Fish is a member of the First Baptist Church in Midland.

Strong beliefs, dedication and action in the community is why Kelly Fish makes a difference in the achievements and successes of Midland.

Answer Line

Midland 79702

I would like to know why Midlanders are able to place Neighborhood Crime Watch signs on city stop signs, and Odessans cannot? In Odessa, we have to place the signs on fences and in the alleys where they are not very effective because they are not noticeable from the streets.

I also would like to know why mail delivery in Odessa is late. I understand items mailed in Odessa are sent to Midland to be postmarked and then back to Odessa. Mail also seems to stack up somewhere along the line, because one of my neighbors received several issues of an out-of-town newspaper she subscribes to all in the same day. — Eric Evenson, Odessa

ANSWER: According to Shirley Johnston, who has done a lot of work with the Neighborhood Crime Watch program in Midland, you evidently have not been contacting the right people in Odessa for permission to have your signs placed on the back of stop signs there. Ms. Johnston says the crime watch signs for stop signs are especially designed so as not to interfere with the stop sign. She worked with City Hall, Midland Chamber of Commerce and utility companies about the placement of the crime watch signs.

Odessans interested in the crime watch program should contact Odessa City Hall and make an appointment to appear before the Odessa City Council to discuss approval for the placement of signs on stop sign poles. Ms. Johnston also pointed out that the only signs permitted in Midland in front yards are those of realtors. She also says that the crime watch program in her neighborhood has resulted in neighbors becoming better acquainted, and they are planning a neighborhood picnic in the near future.

With regard to your query about the postal service, Answer Line contacted V.L. "Bill" Williams, Midland postmaster. The situation was explained to him and he or a member of his staff probably has been in touch with you already to get more information.

Can I deny my ex-husband his visitation rights since he is close to $3,000 behind in his child support payments? Also, I am changing my name back to my maiden name. Can I also change my child's name? — J.K.

ANSWER: No, you may not deny your ex-husband his visitation rights because the child support payments have not been made, says the State Bar of Texas.

You may file a motion for contempt of court and ask the court to render judgment against your ex-husband for the unpaid total. Also you may wish to talk to an attorney about terminating your ex-husband's parental rights because of the non-support.

And, yes, you may petition to have your child's name changed legally but you must follow the statutory requirements of Texas law. The child's father must be notified, and if he objects to the change, there must be a hearing. Your child's name is not automatically changed when you change your own.

Do you know how I can contact someone in the area about information on prisoners of war missing in action? — M.T.

ANSWER: Assistance in obtaining information on missing prisoners of war in Korea, Vietnam and Laos may be obtained by contacting Doug LaBombard at 683-7933, after 6 p.m., or 563-1663, during the day.

What is disability insurance? I already have life and health insurance protection, so why would I need it? — K.C.

ANSWER: If you are between the ages of 35 and 65, your chances of being unable to work at your job for 90 days or more because of a disabling injury or illness are far greater than your chances of dying, says The American Council of Life Insurance.

If you are over 50, there's one chance in four that you will be disabled for six months or more before you retire. Disability insurance provides you with an income if you are unable to work because of sickness or injury. It protects against a family financial catastrophe by giving you the income to meet your daily expenses.

Important to spray for pecan nut casebearer

Spraying for the pecan nut casebearer is very important in Midland County.

Sprays must be applied to the foliage to control casebearers. timing is critical. Since pecan nut casebearers are cold blooded animals, their rate of development is controlled by temperature. In warmer springs, they will show up earlier, and in cooler springs, they show up later.

In Midland, you should expect to start seeing pecan nut casebearers on May 29. On or near that date, Texas A&M Horticulturists suggest that commercial pecan growers inspect 100 nut clusters and spray if one, or more, small, white pecan casebearer eggs are found, then repeat the process 10 days later.

Many people with backyard trees woud rather not bother with the monitoring and just treat on a calendar basis. If this is what you decide to do, I would suggest that you spray on May 26 and again on June 2. For backyard trees we suggest Malathion or Zolone. If you hve an orchard, you may want to try Pydrin. It is very effective but quite expensive for casebearer control on a small number of trees.

Don't forget your zinc (NZN) applications. They are as important as the pecan nut casebearer sprays in groing healthy trees and producing a good nut crop.

This is the last application of zinc for bearing trees, but continue to spray zinc throughout the summer on young, developing trees.

Spring is the time when many homeowners discover they have termites because winged forms appear and swarm.

Winged termites outdoors are a natural occurrence, so usually there is no problem. But if they are found indoors, usually on a window sill, chances are good that an infestation has established in your home.

Termites can cause extensive damage to wooden parts of your home, so take some precautions.

Quite often termites and certain ants swarm at the same time and it's important to be able to tell the difference between these two insects. Carpenter ants swarm in the springtime and can cause some structural damage to wood. However, termites are much more destructive and require different control measures.

Termites have a broad waist — ants have a narrow, constricted waist; termite wings are the same size and shape — winged ants have a front and back pair of wings of different lengths and shape; termites have straight antennae — ants have elbowed antennae.

Termites may be attracted to your house be dead tree limbs, stumps, old lumber and other sources of termite food. These should be removed. If soil is above the point where wood or brick meet the foundation, termites have easy access to our home. Anywhere that wood meets dirt (siding, wooden steps) is a potential spot for termite entry into the home.

Termites also have the ability to build mud tunnels over non-wooden structures to reach a food source. These tunnels may extend several feet up concrete surfaces. On a slab home, these may be seen on foundation concrete between soil and brick. On homes build above the ground, these tunnels can be found on piers or pipes that go from soil to structure. The bath trap in homes built on a slab is another source of entry.

Although a thorough inspection is best done by a professional, a homeowner can make a quick check for termite infestations. If termites or damage is found, contact a local pest control company. This is one insect pest that should not be handled by a "do-it-yourselfer".

Artist to have one-man show

C. Brycelea

Navajo artist Clifford Brycelea will be at the Shop of the Blue Gem art gallery Friday and Saturday for a one-man show of his work.

Although this is Brycelea's first Midland exhibition, he has a large following in this area, according to gallery owner Dorothy Davis.

"There are 55 or 60 of his original works owned in this area," she said.

Born and raised in northern New Mexico and Arizona, Brycelea now makes his home in Dulce, on the Navajo reservation south of Pagosa Springs, Colo. He grew up with a deep understanding and love for his Indian culture and heritage which he has drawn on for his paintings, according to a press release provided by the gallery.

After graduating from Fort Lewis College in 1975, Brycelea set out to establish himself as an artist. The first boost for his career was provided by Western writer Louis L'Amour, who was so impressed with the young Indian's work that he asked Brycelea to illustrate a magazine article for him.

The magazine then asked him to do a painting for its cover, which led to Brycelea's being asked to do another painting for the cover of a L'Amour novel.

Through L'Amour and country singer Charlie Daniels, Brycelea met a number of art collectors, and in 1980 was asked to join the American Indian Cowboy Artists Society. In 1981 and 1982 he won the society's gold medal for oil painting.

Brycelea has presented shows in galleries and museums across the country, and his work is hanging in many private and corporate collections.

Brycelea will be on hand from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday and Saturday at the Blue Gem gallery in the LaVillita Center, 3323-B West Wadley.

Trust fund set up for blind woman

From Staff Reports

A trust fund is being established to aid Brenda Madry, a 32-year-old mother of four who was flown to the City of Faith Hospital in Tulsa last week for treatment of a brain aneurysm that has left her blind.

The May 3 mercy flight — which cost $2,800 — was arranged and paid for by several local businessmen, according to family friend Shirley Stegall.

The same day Mrs. Madry was flown to Tulsa, her husband Jim was fired from his job as a heavy equipment operator because he had missed two days' work in one week due to his wife's illness. The family also was evicted from their apartment May 3.

"She quit breathing twice on the flight," said Ms. Stegall. "But we got her there and are hoping for a miracle. She's only got a 50-50 chance to live."

Mrs. Madry underwent 13 operations in the past four years to relieve brain pressure before it was learned she is suffering from an aneurysm behind the eyes, according to Ms. Stegall.

The family has no insurance and no money. As a result, they've encountered difficulty in obtaining proper medical treatment.

One San Angelo neurosurgeon, said Ms. Stegall, refused to treat Mrs. Madry at all because of the family's financial condition.

"Right now," added Ms. Stegall, "we're trying to raise money for medical and living expenses. I'd like to have an apartment furnished for her when she comes home. We're counting on her making it."

The trust fund is being set up at Community National Bank, 601 E. Florida. It should be in operation this week, said Mrs. Stegall.

Independent Sales Manager

What you do with the Thomas Directory is your own business.

We're not trying to be clever as much as we're trying to make an important point: when you represent Thomas' Regional Directory, you're independently selling space in the nation's number one industrial publication.

Quite simply, you're self-employed.

Your background must include the recruitment, management and motivation of a sales force, as you will be in charge of the development of one. In addition, your sales experience could be in any area where it directly affected your income.

By now, you should also realize that being a motivated entrepreneur is imperative. If you're not, you're in the wrong ad. Goodbye.

But if you're ready for a commission and override package as high as you want to achieve, we'll give you the initial back-up and follow-up support and let you take it from there.

So--if you've already owned your own business, or have the independence it takes to do so, find out more about the large income that could be yours with Thomas behind you. Extensive travel, no overnights. Send your resume to: Ms. Jeannine Kaparonis

BEST BUYS!!!

MINICOMPACTS - MAZDA GLC:
With its sturdy 1.5-liter, four-cylinder engine, the GLC is a solid, reliable automobile with excellent fuel economy (34 mpg city). With a well-designed interior in the luxury model, it remains one of the most affordable cars on the road.

COMPACTS - MAZDA 626:
Few models impressed us more than the 626 did when it debuted in 1983, and a year of enthusiastic driver response has confirmed that impression. Choose between the two-door and four-door sedans or the five-door touring sedan, all powered by the able 2.0 liter, four-cylinder engine. Passenger room is excellent for a compact car, and the fine engineering touches – such as optional three-setting suspension for different roads and driving conditions – set the 626 apart from most of the competition.

SPORTS CARS - MAZDA RX-7:
This has long been THE bargain in affordable sports cars. The interior continues to be improved every year, and with the new fuel-injected 1984 engine, the RX-7 is a truly impressive package. The Wankel rotary engine pumps our 101 horsepower and smooth, strong acceleration, while still giving highway mileage of 29 mpg. One clear indication of the RX-7's worth is that it holds its resale value better than almost any other car in its class, year after year.

"I'VE SEEN EVERY APARTMENT COMMUNITY IN MIDLAND."

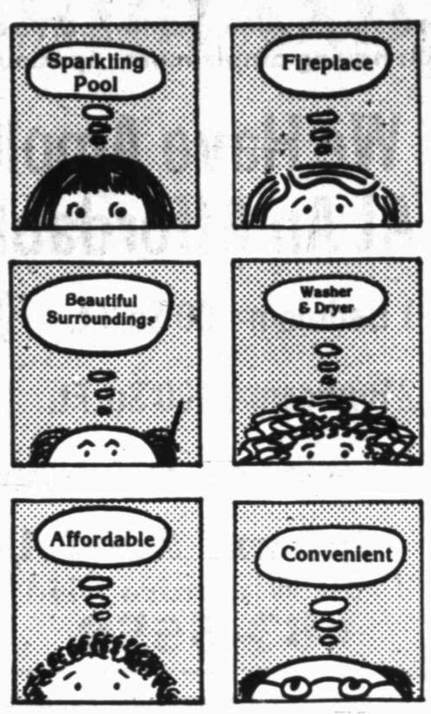

"My feet hurt and my patience was wearing thin. I'd seen every apartment community in Midland, and none met my standards... until I discovered Oakridge Apartments. Just a little off the beaten trail, Oakridge has the quiet, private location I'd been looking for. Plus all the other extras I'd just about given up on. Like new construction, nice, friendly neighborhood appeal and superior amenities—indoor spa and sauna, clubhouse and pool, to name just a few—Oakridge is the greatest. I should know, I've seen them all."

1- and 2-bedroom and 2-bedroom studio apartment homes are available now. Take Loop 250 to N. Holiday Hill Road and look for the giant American flag.

YOUR OWN 5 TO 12 ACRE COUNTRY PLACE AT

TIERRA LINDA RANCH ESTATES

KERRVILLE, TEXAS

With riding horses, swimming pool, tennis courts, paved airstrip, social clubhouse, clear flowing streams, cool lakes, exotic animals, security officer, and much, much more.

Deeded Homesites
Permanent Parklands

TIERRA LINDA means "beautiful land", in the heart of the verdant Texas Hill Country. TIERRA LINDA RANCH ESTATES consists of deeded homesites of five to twelve acres each, interspersed with permanent parklands and private recreation facilities. 2,900 acres of rolling hills, wide vistas and boulder strewn, sparkling streams. Along the winding lanes your neighbors' homes are tucked in among the gnarled oaks on breeze-swept hills overlooking rugged canyons and placid meadows. Sharing this solitude are whitetail deer, wild turkey, exotic mouflon sheep, blackbuck antelope and enough livestock for that good old Texas ranch flavor.

Privacy & Security
Successful Since 1971

The recreation facilities, permanent parklands, riding horses, swimming pool, lighted tennis courts, paved private roads, 3,000 foot paved airstrip and TV cable system are jointly owned by you and your neighbors. Come and meet them; they'll tell you why TIERRA LINDA has been so successful, since 1971, as a residential community which is also a wild game preserve and a showplace ranch. All of this is for the private use of property owners and their guests. A ranch manager and security officer watch over your property while you travel.

Outdoor Recreation
Healthful Environment

Enjoy horseback riding, walking, jogging, fishing in well stocked spring fed lakes, swimming, tennis, the use of the social clubhouse and barbeque area for your large scale entertaining, or simply relaxing and observing the plentiful wildlife, all with total privacy and security. A most healthful environment with comfortable climate, pure air and cool nights at an elevation of about 2,000 feet. The nearby city of Kerrville offers cultural interests, shopping centers and excellent health care. TIERRA LINDA is located just 65 miles northwest of San Antonio.

Ten Year Financing
Investment Protection

Up to ten year financing is available now for deeded homesites of 5 to 12 acres for a permanent residence, second home, weekend retreat, or to hold for your future retirement. Take advantage now of current land values and financing options because TIERRA LINDA RANCH ESTATES is legally limited to its present 2,900 acres. All facilities are complete and only a limited number of choice homesites remain to be sold. We can also show you several custom homes from $140,000. Sensible deed restrictions and the elected board of directors of the homeowners' association ensure the continuity of this most unique community and protect your investment.

Drive Out To See Us

Write for our free information packet containing a color brochure, map and area information. No salesman will call unless requested by you. Drive out to see us real soon, we're open every day until sundown. From Interstate 10, take the Kerrville/Harper Rd. exit #505 and go toward Harper on FM 783. The Tierra Linda Trading Post is just 4 miles from the Interstate. If you call in advance, we can recommend several fine motels. One visit will show you why TIERRA LINDA is one of the finest, most beautiful real estate developments in our nation.

COOKIE MONSTERS

MISD's recent Showcase '84 cookie contest brings out the cookie monster in Charles Tighe, left, Vann Culp, center and Pat Baskin as they judge entries for "the best flavor."

Text by Julie Hillrichs

Cookies have a way of turning even the most mild-mannered individuals into monsters.

And Midland's own version of the "Pillsbury Bake-off" at Midland and Lee High schools was no exception.

The contests, major attractions of the recent Showcase '84, featured more than 100 cookies, bars, candies and other succulent sweets baked — not by little elves in hollow trees — but by faculty and administrators of both schools.

Among the entries were exotic varieties including Pecan Tassies (bite-sized pecan pies) and Caramel-layered Choco Squares.

Old stand-bys such as divinity, fudge and variations of favorite chocolate chip, sugar cookies and cinnamon roll recipes were on display also.

Preceeding the selection of the winners, judges sampled each goodie and rated it according to their own taste preferences. The sticky-fingered judges used no criteria other than flavor in determining who would be crowned "Chips Ahoy Champ" of each contest. It was a classic case of "Battergate."

But judges Lee Fryar, David Adams and Bob Cox at Lee High; and judges Pat Baskin, Vann Culp and Charles Tighe at Midland High, found themselves in Oreo Heaven after consuming the final mouth-watering morsel.

When all was said and done, Dr. Patty Smith at Midland High was awarded a $25 dinner for two at Anasazi Restaurant for her winning recipe, "Raw Apple Cakes."

Ribbon winners at Lee High were Dawn Gibson, first place for "Melt-a-Ways;" Jack Cobb, second place for "Honey Bar Surprise;" and Billie Eiland, third place for "Pineapple Lemon Bar."

The remaining entries were distributed with little or no recognition to guests during receptions at both when the evening concluded. But that's the way the cookie crumbles.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Parties here this weekend are honoring former Midlander Lani Berry and her fiance Jim Jones, both of Houston.

A miscellaneous display shower was held Saturday morning in the home of Francene (Mrs. G.H.) Lawless. Co-hostesses were Heidi (Mrs. George) Goebel, Dottie (Mrs. Jack) Fox, Barbara (Mrs. Jim) Taylor and Barbara (Mrs. Richard) Guenther.

A brunch and kitchen linen and "Honey-Do" shower are scheduled today in the home of Genevieve and Carl Kaiser. Co-hosts are Nancy and Delmar Cox and Kelly and Lynn Jones.

Lani, daughter of Fena and John Berry, also has been honored at showers in Dallas and Houston. The June 3 wedding in Houston is to be preceded by a rehearsal dinner at the home of Lynn and Jan Koenig. Lynn is the daughter of Midlanders Joanne and Harvey Langston and one of the bridal attendants.

Following a Jamaican honeymoon, Lani and Jim will return to Houston to make their home.

KATHY (MRS. JOE) NOBLES celebrated her April 30th birthday in style. "Kidnapped" by a quartet of friends, she was whisked to the Midland airport for an early morning flight to Dallas. There Kathy, along with Jane (Mrs. Dennis) Rambo, Marilyn (Mrs. Bill) Hightower, Robin (Mrs. Jack) Hightower and Bridget (Mrs. Bryan) Gossett, enjoyed a fast-paced day of shopping, with a break for lunch at Los Vacqueros.

They divided their time between Highland Park Village and North Park Mall, finally ending their rounds at Bloomingdale's. Hamburgers at Chilis were a treat before their return flight, which put them home slightly before the bewitching hour of midnight.

BARBARA AND CHARLES HARTWELL and daughters Holly of Dallas and Milby, a student at UT-Austin, enjoyed a recent weekend together in San Antonio during Fiesta. They attended the Queen's Ball, the social highlight of Fiesta's 10-day whirlwind of activities, where their cousin Joan Petty reigned as Order of the Alamo queen, and another cousin Laura Schupbach was the princess. They both are third-generation Fiesta royalty.

Milby, who was presented last November as one of 10 debutantes by San Antonio's German Club, participated in Fiesta by riding on the club's float in both the River Parade and the Battle of Flowers Parade. Fiesta signaled the end of the 1983-84 deb festivities.

Milby leaves the first of June for a summer White House internship. She will be working in the offices of Vice President George Bush. Milby has received many honors during her undergraduate days at UT. Most recently she was chosen the Outstanding Sorority Woman on the campus, one of 20 Outstanding Students at the university and co-chairman of UT's Guest Lecture Series for next year. She is past president of her sorority, Kappa Kappa Gamma.

SEVERAL MIDLANDERS rcently returned from Washington, D.C., where they attended the Continental Congress of the National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution. Those attending from Col. Theunis Dey Chapter were regent Gwen (Mrs. Marshall) Jolly, Jere (Mrs. Walter C.) Hubbard, Alva (Mrs. John P.) Butler and Kim (Mrs. Kelly) Young, and from Lt. William Brewer Chapter, regent Fern (Mrs. F.H.) McGuigan and Clyde (Mrs. John E.) Cross.

Vice President Bush (a former Midlander) brought opening night greetings to the group. A Texas Tea, hosted by the Texas State Society officers at the Capitol Hilton, was among the social highlights.

Gwen's husband Dr. Marshall Jolly accompanied the group to do some sightseeing. In addition to visiting several of the outstanding attractions of the Washington scene, he did some geneological research in the DAR library.

The group reported that Washington was beautiful. While the cherry blossoms had passed their peak, the tulip trees and other flowering trees were in full bloom, and there were thousands of tulips blooming in the parks and around the public buildings. In response to an inquiry about the weather they experienced in Washington, Gwen replied, "Just lovely — it showered a couple of days and we got to walk in the rain." Only a true West Texan would consider rain as "great" weather!

ELLEN LEGGOTT entertained with a hamburger cookout at her home for four of her Lee High School friends who are graduating this May. The guests of honor were Keith Cox and his mother Mrs. Paula Cox; Jason Sessom and his parents Jackie and Raymond Sessom; Dude Martin and his parents Zella Martin and Vern Martin; and Devin Phiffer and his parents Pam and Don Phiffer.

The Lee High colors of maroon and white were featured in the decorations, whice included balloons, a large banner and a special cake. Some 55 guests enjoyed the evening's festivities.

Keith and Jason are planning to attend Texas A&M; Dude, UT-Austin, and Devin, Texas Tech.

LEE HIGH graduating senior Robert Lowe was honored at a Mexican dinner recently at the rural home of his aunt and uncle Rebekah and John Teinert. A Confederate theme was featured in the party decor.

In addition to his classmates, the 20 guests included Robert's parents Shirley and the Rev. J. Allen Lowe, and brothers John and Scott.

Robert is senior class president, a member of the varsity basketball team and an honor graduate.

AT WIT'S END

Mothers' decisions far from simple, easy

By ERMA BOMBECK

This is the tale of two mothers.

They have the title by definition: a female who gives birth to an offspring.

Yet, neither has nursed her baby, bathed it, rocked it or kissed it as it slept.

They show up every Mother's Day to painfully remember that moment when they made a decision they would question the rest of their lives.

When Peg (not her real name) decided to give her baby up for adoption she was 17 years old. "I didn't even think of the part of the child I was taking with me," she wrote. "All I thought of was trying to get my parents to stop crying, get my life back to normal, and find a place for the baby to grow.

"Does anyone know how many times I sat on my bed and hugged my pillow and ached for him? I held him once, but I doubt that he remembers anything I told him. I told him hello and goodbye when he was 10 days old. I told him to never forget how much I loved him. I loved him enough to let go when it was best. I could never do it again. It almost killed me.

"Sometimes I have this heart-felt panic that I don't know if he is in danger. I remember the flutterings of life, but it's all I have of my son. I don't even have the satisfaction of knowing he loves and trusts me."

Pam (not her real name) was estranged from her family when she became pregnant. Without a support system, she clung desperately "to the one human being who related to my doubts and fears ... a person I could not say no to.

"I was unable to raise a child alone, unable to give away a child by a man I loved like yesterday's newspaper, so I terminated the life of my child. Not a choice. A decision. I'm not an advocate of abortion and I don't represent teenagers who have abortions, but I do represent mothers who forfeit their children because they are powerless to do otherwise. We pay for it every day of our lives. Never allowed to grieve, we go on bleeding forever and always. We live with a lie and reminders of the stigma.

"Every little child we see that is about the same age reminds us of the gifts that we denied. The life we destroyed or gave away. Few people would allow us the right to say that we lost a child. 'Lost' is too easy. We should be made to admit the full weight of our sins. Admit that we 'murdered or abandoned' it. None of us expect sympathy. But a little compassion would help."

Excerpts from the letters of these two mothers are shared with you on this day for one reason. Not to judge. Not to pass sentence. But to point out to young girls who have not been faced with the decision, that pregnancy is not as "simplistic" or as "routine" or as "final" as society would have you believe.

This is the one moment in your life where thy will will be done. And it is awesome.

It is not the end of a problem — but only the beginning.

Nurse honored

Senior citizens at Casa de Amigos presented Joanne Peterson with a gift and an engraved plaque at a farewell luncheon recently, in recognition of her eight years as a volunteer in the organization's monthly medical screening clinic.

Joanne and her husband, the Rev. P.D. Peterson, moved to Midland in 1976 when he accepted the position as Headmaster of Trinity School. In 1977, Mrs. Peterson began work as a registered nurse in labor and delivery at Midland Memorial hospital, but continued volunteer work at Casa.

Because of the success of the initial program, the screening service has expanded into testing for diabetes, heart, lung, ears, throat and weight.

"What we do at Casa de Amigos would be ineffective without the support of many local doctors," Mrs. Peterson said.

Joanne and her husband are moving to Knoxville, Tenn.

DEAR ABBY

Prayer honors mothers

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR READERS: The following column was last published in 1980. A significant number of readers wrote to say it deserved to be rerun every few years:

DEAR ABBY: I am a long-time reader but have never written before. I am enclosing a part of your column that I have kept in my Bible for years. As you can see, it is yellowed and shredded and half of it is missing. I don't know how many hundreds of times I have read it. It gave me such a feeling of peace and comfort. It was titled "A Prayer for Mamma."

Will you please print it again? I would love to have another copy. Thank you. — DOROTHY L.

DEAR DOROTHY: With pleasure:

DEAR ABBY: My beloved mother passed away recently, so I called the minister and asked him for the wording of a prayer I could say for my mother, and he said, "I'm too busy — and a lot of good prayer will do her now!" You see, Mamma went to church long ago, but my father never liked to go, so Mamma finally quit going. Abby, I can't believe that heaven is open only to church members.

I've called all the bookstores in town and they say there aren't any prayers for the dead in any of the prayer books they have. I've heard there are places where you send a few dollars and they pray for the dead, but I don't know their addresses. Abby, I'd be so grateful if you would print a short prayer I could say for my mother before I go to sleep. Any faith is acceptable.

I can't let you send it to my home because my father looks over the mail first and I'm sure I'd never get it. Please don't turn down my odd request. It means the world to me. Thank you, and God bless you, Abby. Sign me ... A PRAYER FOR MAMMA

DEAR PRAYER: I found this prayer in my Union Prayer Book. It is the one Jews recite on Yom Kippur (the Day of Atonement) to honor the memory of a deceased mother:

In Memory of a Mother

I remember thee in this solemn hour, my dear mother. I remember the days when thou didst dwell on earth, and thy tender love watched over me like a guardian angel. Thou has gone from me, but the bond which unites our souls can never be severed; thine image lives within my heart. May the merciful Father reward thee for the faithfulness and kindness thou hast shown me; may he lift up the light of his countenance upon thee, and grant thee eternal peace! Amen.

DEAR ABBY: I can't believe it's Mother's Day again. With every passing year the holidays seem to come closer together.

Abby, I wish you'd find space in your column to remind young married women to remember their mothers-in-law — even if it's only a card. There were so many years when I should have remembered my mother-in-law on Mother's Day, but I never did.

This year I sent her flowers — to the cemetery, bitterly regretting that I had never sent her flowers while she was able to enjoy them.

I should have been more attentive to her, written her more about her grandchildren whom she loved so much. And most of all, I should have let her know how much I had grown to love her.

I hope others will not commit the same sins of omission as I. Abby, please print this. Next year might be too late for some. — REGRETTING IN CALIFORNIA

(Getting married? Send for Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address clearly printed with check or money order for $2.50 (includes postage) to: Dear Abby Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Videotape can help preserve wedding memories

Hearst Feature Service

A videotape's appeal is its sense of immediacy and reality, unlike still photography, which captures and sets apart for eternity single, frozen moments. Months and years after your wedding or your son's bar mitzvah, a videotape will recreate the excitement of the moment.

But because there's no second chance to recreate the setting or reassemble the principals and guests, the results will depend heavily on your choice of an accomplished video producer. Here are some pointers gleaned from producers and clients on what to look for in a video production company:

— Choose a full-time video producer with substantial experience in taping similar events. Avoid part-timers who do videos for extra cash and who haven't made a major investment in equipment or time.

— Ask about the quality of the equipment. Is it suitable for professional broadcast use, or amateur equipment more suitable for home movies?

— Ask for references. Talk to former clients and look at an unedited demonstration film, rather than just an edited version. After checking to make sure the sample demonstration tape was made with the same equipment that would be used for your production, study the interviewer's technique and get a general feel for how the event was recorded. Then, note what you like and don't about the result. Be honest with the producer, so he or she knows your preferences.

— Does the crew bring auxiliary lighting, both stationary and portable, or will they rely on normal room illumination? Keep in mind that professional cameras require more lights than amateur equipment, but big, blinding lights can be a nuisance to guests.

— How does the crew dress while on the job? Will they blend in or jar with the tone of your event? Do you expect a suit or jeans?

— Is the producer familiar with the layout of the church, synagogue or hall where your event will be held? If not, will they attend the rehearsals to scout out the location? How early will they arrive to set up their equipment?

— Is the producer aware of any lighting, audio or other restrictions set by your clergyman for taping the ceremony?

— Is studio editing, in addition to camera editing, offered by the producer to provide a sense of continuity and to remove possibly distasteful or embarrassing scenes?

— Does the crew use portable equipment to permit it to mingle with guests for interviews without trailing cables behind.

— How skilled an interviewer does the producer have? Can he or she put 75-year-old Grandma at ease?

— Find out the total cost, up front, including charges for extra copies.

— Finally, realize the limitations of the medium.

Determine the amount of fabric needed for curtains with a casing and heading by first realizing that each window will need two panels of fabric. Add 4½ inches to the mearsurement of the lenght of the window for the casing and heading. Add 6 inches for the double hems at the bottom and 8 inches to allow for straigthening the cross-wide edges. If light weight fabrics are used the total should be tripled, while for medium and heavy weight fabrics, the total should be double the width and add 4 inches to each panel for side hems. If the fabric is not wide enough, buy two extra panel lenghts and sew them lenthwise in a French seam halfway between each panel

WHEN INFIDELS DIE!

WHEN A MAN takes Christ as his Saviour, his heart is flooded with such peace, joy and assurance that it's really a little foretaste of Heaven. Likewise many infidels have received a little foretaste of hell in their last hours on earth.

In some cases they received such an awful revelation of their impending doom that friends at their bedside could not endure it and fled from the room. When Voltaire was dying, his condition became so frightful that his nurse said repeatedly, "For all the wealth in Europe I would never see another infidel die!"

"Until this moment," said Sir Thomas Scott, "I thought there was neither God nor hell. Now I know that there are both, and I am doomed to perdition by the just judgment of the Almighty."

"I am suffering the pangs of the damned!" cried Tallyrand, the French statesman.

"I would rather die on the stove fire," said M.F. Rich, "and broil for one million years, than go into eternity with the eternal horrors that hang over my soul."

"I can see the old Devil here in the bedroom!" cried out A.T. Adams.

"Oh, Thou blasphemed Lord!" exclaimed the dying Altmont. "Hell itself is a refuge, if it hide me from Thy frown"!

"Do I assert there is no hell while I feel one in my own bosom?" asked Sir Francis Newport. "That there is a hell I am certain, Having received an earnest of my inheritance already in my own breast! Oh! that I were to lie a thousand years upon the fire that never is quenched, to purchase the favor of God and be reunited to Him again! But it is a fruitless wish. Millions of millions of years will bring me no nearer to the end of my torments than one poor hour"! And with a groan of inexpressible horror, he cried, "Oh, Eternity! Forever and forever!" And he was gone.

How awful that they should go out into that place of "everlastibng punishment," (Matthew 25:46); yet it was the result of their own deliberate choice. God could have saved them— had they been willing. Likewise God is ready to save you from that same dreadful place—if you are willing. The Son of God loved you enough to die for you, and He is ready to save you now if you will let Him. We pray that you will wake up now and make the right decision.

"He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him" (John 3:36).

Determine the amount of fabric needed for curtains with a casing and heading by first realizing that each window will need two panels of fabric. Add 4½ inches to the mearsurement of the lenght of the window for the casing and heading. Add 6 inches for the double hems at the bottom and 8 inches to allow for straigthening the cross-wide edges. If light weight fabrics are used the total should be tripled, while for medium and heavy weight fabrics, the total should be double the width and add 4 inches to each panel for side hems. If the fabric is not wide enough, buy two extra panel lenghts and sew them lenthwise in a French seam halfway between each panel

1/2 cup warm water (105-F. to 115-F.)
1/2 cup lukewarm milk (scalded then cooled)
1/3 cup sugar
1/3 cup shortening, margarine or butter, softened
1 teaspoon salt
1 egg
3-1/2 to 4 cups all-purpose flour

Disolve yeast in warm water in large bowl. Stir in milk, sugar, shortening, salt, egg and two cups flour. Beat until smooth. Mix in enough remaining flour to make dough easy to handle.

Turn dough onto lightly floured surface; knead until smooth and elastic, about five minutes. Place in greased bowl; turn greased side up. Cover. Let rise in warm place until double, about 1-1/2 hours. (Dough is ready if indentation remains when touched.)

Punch down dough. Shape, let rise and bake as directed. This dough is suitable for cinnamon rolls, tea rings, bubble loaves and other types of sweet roll recipes.

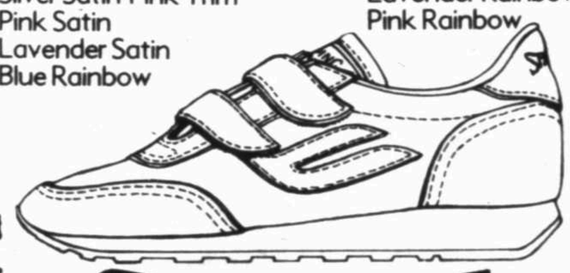

TIP: After kneading dough can be refrigerated in greased bowl no longer than four days.

DATE-NUT SQUARES

WHEN INFIDELS DIE!

WHEN A MAN takes Christ as his Saviour, his heart is flooded with such peace, joy and assurance that it's really a little foretaste of Heaven. Likewise many infidels have received a little foretaste of hell in their last hours on earth.

In some cases they received such an awful revelation of their impending doom that friends at their bedside could not endure it and fled from the room. When Voltaire was dying, his condition became so frightfiul that his nurse said repeatedly, "For all the wealth in Europe I would never see another infidel die!"

"Until this moment," said Sir Thomas Scott, "I thought there was neither God nor hell. Now I know that there are both, and I am doomed to perdition by the just judgment of the Almighty."

"I am suffering the pangs of the damned!" cried Tallyrand, the French statesman.

"I would rather die on the stove fire," said M.F. Rich, "and broil for one million years, than go into eternity with the eternal horrors that hang over my soul."

"I can see the old Devil here in the bedroom!" cried out A.T. Adams.

"Oh, Thou blasphemed Lord!" exclaimed the dying Altmont. "Hell itself is a refuge, if it hide me from Thy frown"!

"Do I assert there is no hell while I feel one in my own bosom?" asked Sir Francis Newport. "That there is a hell I am certain, Having received an earnest of my inheritance already in my own breast! Oh! that I were to lie a thousand years upon the fire that never is quenched, to purchase the favor of God and be reunited to Him again! But it is a fruitless wish. Millions of millions of years will bring me no nearer to the end of my torments than one poor hour"! And with a groan of inexpressible horror, he cried, "Oh, Eternity! Forever and forever!" And he was gone.

How awful that they should go out into that place of "everlastibng punishment," (Matthew 25:46); yet it was the result of their own deliberate choice. God could have saved them— had they been willing. Likewise God is ready to save you from that same dreadful place—if you are willing. The Son of God loved you enough to die for you, and He is ready to save you now if you will let Him. We pray that you will wake up now and make the right decision.

"He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him" (John 3:36).

Back-pain sufferer listens to herself

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Old friends, they were out for the evening to celebrate mutual birthdays. Rounding the curve on the steep hill just beyond the Golden Gate Bridge here, Naomi Baran never had time to see the van that slammed into the back of her tiny Honda. "Look out!" screamed her friend, and Baran felt every muscle tighten.

For Berkeley psychotherapist Baran, now 29, the impact of that high-speed collision last year went far beyond the accordion-shaped car she was left with, far beyond the silent prayer she must have uttered when she realized that, miraculously, she was at least still alive. Suddenly, Baran's life was to be controlled by her back.

BARAN'S FAMILY and friends were chauffeuring what looked to be a Mafia hit victim. Unable to sit, Baran lay in the back seat. When she could, she stretched out in buses. In what might be the ultimate statement in reverse psychology, Baran began receiving clients from a supine position on her office couch.

She shunned movies, avoided restaurants. Her body-building and jogging regimens thudded to a halt. Her love life did much the same as a rocky relationship became more so. Friends who came to visit often shifted uncomfortably, or left abruptly, when they found her reclined on her floor, the only position she could really tolerate.

IT WAS a shock, Baran said, and it was a form of psychological torture that compounded the chronic physical pain. "It makes you put yourself and your back first," she said. "Before your family, before your lover, before your job, before everything.

"With backs," she said, "it's such an invisible kind of disability. It's a mystery to most people. They don't seek out the treatment, the exercises, the education, all that goes with it, until it becomes unlivable." Back injuries are subtle, Baran discovered, difficult to treat and they may hide.

BUT IN fact, as she found, the more research she did into the topic, an estimated 25 million to 30 million Americans are hobbling about with back pain at any given moment.

Trained in psychoanalysis, Baran certainly had never intended to make a career out of her aching back. But those statistics, and her own labyrinth of experience in trying to treat her own nagging back, prompted her to ponder: There ought to be a central resource, a formal support network for people with back problems. Why should each person grope his own lonely way through the morass of physical therapists, back education classes, chiropractors and massage specialists, doctors who advocate "learning to live with it," drugs, exercise programs and, perhaps most elusive of all, psychological spinoffs and side effects?

"HAVING A back problem," said Baran, "is one of the most isolating experiences you can think of. Even though one out of every eight people has it, you think you're the only one."

And the nature of the injury compounds this aloneness, she said. "Through the healing process, you are more alone with it. It's an isolating thing not to go out as much as you used to. You're in pain, and you don't want to bore other people by being a kvetch. There are people whose whole identity becomes their back problem. They're a real drag to be around."

STILL, SHE said, "The truth is it's a very self-centered thing. Healing is a self-centered process."

In Baran's case, that process was to become the genesis of Back in Focus, a new program she has set up with fellow psychotherapist Andrew Condy to offer a total approach to coping with — and, hopefully, overcoming — back pain. Addressing what she calls the "interactional aspects of chronic pain," Baran said she is targeting the occupational ramifications of back trouble, as well as treatment, self-image, issues pertaining to relationships, styles of coping and problem solving and, in a major concession to the Pollyanna complex, using pain as a teacher. "The purpose," she said, "is to become your own best expert."

SAID BARAN, explaining what she hopes to accomplish in a weekend-long back seminar in June, and in the six-week Back in Focus groups that have already begun: "There are chronic pain groups, support groups and such, for people with back trouble. But they are not as multidimensional. It seems like people sit around and commiserate."

By contrast, Baran's own position is that "the worst pit you can get in is 'poor me.' But a good thing is acknowledging, accepting, breaking through the denial and learning ways of caring for what really is a real problem.

"YOU NEED support and you need acknowledgment," Baran said. "But you do not need self-pity. There's a fine line.

"You need faith, you need hope, you need reality and you need education."

Though the pain may be wrenching, most people, Baran contends, lack the psychological or emotional luxury to allow them to simply stop. Life tends to go on, albeit in a somewhat crippled fashion. "The truth is," Baran said, "most people who have these serious back injuries would probably get better if they did not sit for three to six months."

BEYOND A shock to the body, a back injury becomes a head trip, Baran said. "There is no back problem, whether by injury or faulty use of the body, there is none that does not have a psychological component.

"That does not mean it's all psychological, that it's 'all in your head' and you don't have a back problem. That's the either-or thing that seems to happen, and it invalidates what's really going on. It seems to be part of a mind-body split in our culture."

One more split might be the mind-body-legal chasm. In cases of accidents in particular, she said, "the lawsuit makes it very hard to heal. You have to keep telling your story, and it has to get worse."

BARAN'S AUTOMOBILE accident was not her first brush with back pain.

But it took the automobile accident — the final insult, as it were — to force Baran to face the full force of her problem.

After all, from a vital, active, energetic human being Baran had been transformed abruptly into a slug. On the education front, she said, "I suddenly started to become more educated, but it took fighting for it. It took assertion."

Baran learned to set up a schedule, to establish "the ideal life style for healing your back, as opposed to what is your life style now."

AS BARAN remembered: "What I did when I injured myself is that I went shopping." She sampled conventional medicine. Chiropractic medicine. The acupuncturist. She did exercises, signed on for manual physical therapy, enrolled in back school. She invested in exotic new chairs and car seats. She purchased the right kind of pillow. She cut back on her own work schedule, and sliced her social life in half. "I learned in depth, in detail to listen to my body — what made it worse, what made it better."

Belinda Duke and Bill Franks were elected Mr. and Miss Greenwood High School at the school's prom recently, which was attended by approximately 150 people.

Miss Duke is involved in cheerleading, basketball and tennis. Franks is involved in student council, football and golf. Both have been Greenwood students since the second grade.

Procedure may aid diagnosis

Hearst Feature Service

Early detection of glaucoma, an eye disease that can lead to blindness, has proved difficult. But a new technique, reported in the May issue of Science Digest, may enable doctors to diagnose glaucoma before major damage has occured.

The procedure, devised at Stanford University by ophthalmologist Louis Roloff and Jim Taskett, manager of photographic services, checks the retina. Photographs are taken of the back of the eye, using a camera equiped with a green filter and medium contrast film. Roloff may be able to detect a loss of as little as 10 to 20 percent of the one million fibers that lead from the eye.

Treatment can then start to stave off the detioration of peripheral vision — a phase of the disease that precedes blindness. Stanford plans to use the diagnostic technique by the end of the year.

DEAR DOCTOR

'Octansanol' new fast-rising health food fad item

By DR. JEANNE A. PETREK

Q. At the neighborhood health store, I noticed a rapidly selling product on the shelf for the first time: octacosanol. The store owner didn't seem to know as much about it as he should.

Can you give me some idea about what it is and how it works?

A. Octacosanol — an extract of wheat-germ oil — is one of the faster-rising health-food fads. As with many such fads, promise surpasses performance.

Octacosanol's reputation as an energy booster has been greatly hyped by a slick advertising drive which includes endorsements by a few well-known athletes.

Unfortunately, what octacosanol may do for primed and full-time athletes it cannot be expected to do for the weekend exerciser.

What, if anything, octacosanol does even for professional athletes is subject to dispute, since the research on which octacosanol bases its claims is not especially reliable (i.e. limited to a single laboratory study of questionable scientific validity).

Barring future studies, the substance remains largely unproven and lacking in precise benefit. Even so, octacosanol has been readily purchased in the wake of continuing advertising.

It is ironic that health-food users, usually characterized by their discretion in selecting foods, should be so taken in by the gloss and come-on of this product which, according to one writer, has claimed to do "everything but windows."

Q. Almost everyone I know past age 60 has lost most of their teeth. Is there any way to prevent this?

A. Periodontal disease (meaning disease "around a tooth") is a process which damages a tooth's surrounding tissue and which, if far advanced, may erode the bone that forms the tooth's socket. It is the major cause of tooth loss after the age of 30 or 35.

While a tooth can be saved by modern techniques even when cavities have become quite deep, a perfectly good tooth may be lost if its supporting tissue is destroyed by periodontal disease.

As the disease begins, the gum usually changes from its normal pink to red. Little spaces then form between the gum and tooth. This stage of the disease, called "gingivitis," is usually not painful. Though it may linger for many years without worsening, it will, as a rule, go on to periodontitis (inflammation around the tooth).

At this stage, the gum recedes from the surface of the tooth and leaves deep pockets where accumulating bacteria may destroy the bone socket supporting the tooth. When the supports erode, the tooth loosens and cannot be kept in place.

All such measures are aimed at preventing the accumulation of bacteria and the filmy matter adhering to teeth.

Brushing and flossing can remove most of these "plaques." Those which remain and harden into "tartar" or "calculus" should be periodically removed by a dentist or oral hygienist.

Established periodontitis, however, defies home treatment. One of two methods will be required to approach the problem: surgery and deep scaling.

With surgery, the periodontist cuts open the pocket and exposes the infection. Diseased material and evidence of infection are then removed.

The gum is then sewn back over the cleansed area so that the gum line is closer to the root than previously and more of the tooth is showing.

When the results are good, the procedure allows the patient to start keeping the disease under control with the usual home-care methods (brushing and flossing).

In the case of very deep pockets, the procedure may have to be repeated at fairly frequent intervals to eliminate recurring disease.

Deep scaling is a possible alternative to surgery. As often as every two or three months, the pockets must be curetted or scraped. If the base of the pockets can be reached and the procedure is repeated often enough, surgery can be avoided.

Of the two approaches, surgery is more likely to provide a long-term solution, since even the most expert currettage may fail to clean out deep pockets.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Osteoporosis reported to also affect young women

Dear Dr. Solomon: As a woman who is now in the menopause, I have benefitted a great deal from your articles on bone loss and what can be done about it. My question, however, is about my daughter, who is only in her twenties. However, she is a long-distance runner and does not have her period. Since she is so young and athletic, is it possible for her to be suffering loss of bone the way an older woman would? If so, what can she so about it? — Mrs. D.L., Vineland, N.J.

Dear Mrs. L.: Dr. Charles B. Hammond of the Duke University Medical Center in Durham, N.C., reports that two women, both under 25 years of age, were treated for hip fractures due to osteoporosis (loss of bone). Both women were competitive runners and were amenorrheic (not menstruating).

However, whether young women such as these should receive estrogen replacement therapy is still not clear. In the first place, there is some question about how serious a problem this is. Secondly, there is some question as to whether estrogen replacement therapy would work in such cases.

In view of these uncertainties, the best course of action for your daughter would be for her to place herself in the hands of a competent gynecologist and to follow his or her advice.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have a duodenal ulcer and I'd rather not have any fancy medicine. Why can't I just take an antacid for it? — Jim, Philadelphia

Dear Jim: The treatment of duodenal ulcers with antacids presents a number of problems. In the first place, the antacid would have to be taken as often as seven times a day if it is to be effective. Second, antacids often have an unpleasant taste. And third, antacids can cause diarrhea or constipation. For these reasons many patients would find it difficult to comply with the treatment.

In addition, antacids may negate the effectiveness of some antibiotics, such as tetracycline.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My buddy said he read in your column that a man can have gonorrhea and still not have any symptoms. Is this true? — Tommy, Albuquerque, N.M.

Dear Tommy: From 5 percent to 10 percent of men with gonorrhea may not have any symptoms. Furthermore, since they are not treated, they are carriers of the disease.

For Penny, Montreal: Parents of young infants should avoid purchasing breakable toys or small toys that can be put into the mouth. Toys that come with cords or strings also pose a hazard and should be avoided.

Infant safety may further be assured by keeping sharp objects out of the reach of children and by installing a gate or some similar device at the head of a flight of stairs.

It is normal and healthy for children to want to explore, and this should be encouraged; however, it is up the the adults to see that they do so in safety.

Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.

Though multiple births are not uncommon in Dana and Larry Roberson's families, from left, Larry Wayne, Daryl, Jesse and Jamie are the first quadruplets.

QUADRAPHONIC FAMILY

Text by Lisa Gerlock

They are 3½-feet tall.

When you see them the grocery store, they'll be with — or near — their mom. You'll see one by the cereal, another by the Jello. Another will come down the vegetable aisle and you'll think your vision is doubled. Then you'll see one more by the potato chips.

It's OK. You're OK. There are four of them. Larry Wayne, Daryl, Jamie and Jesse, sons of Dana and Larry Roberson, are 4-year-old quadruplets.

During her pregnancy, Mrs. Roberson, then 22, was told she was carrying triplets. Nurses made bets that two were girls. But on December 4, 1980, four physicians, including two pediatricians, were on hand to deliver four boys, born at 9:04, two at 9:05 and one at 9:06 a.m.

At the time, they were the first set of quadruplets born in San Angelo, "...9th set...born in Texas; the 84th set in the United States, though those figures have changed now," Mrs. Roberson said.

The odds of having quadruplets four years ago were "one in 784,000," she said.

With a history of twins and triplets in both Larry's and Dana's families, multiple births are not uncommon. But their foursome is a first.

Many people sympathize with the couple. Some sitters fear four-at-a-time duty. But Mrs. Roberson believes "four times the trouble" is more like "four times the blessing."

She saves her sanity by "tuning out" the quadraphonic noise.

"You learn what to listen for and what to not listen for. I know when they cry because they're mad and I know when they cry because they're hurt."

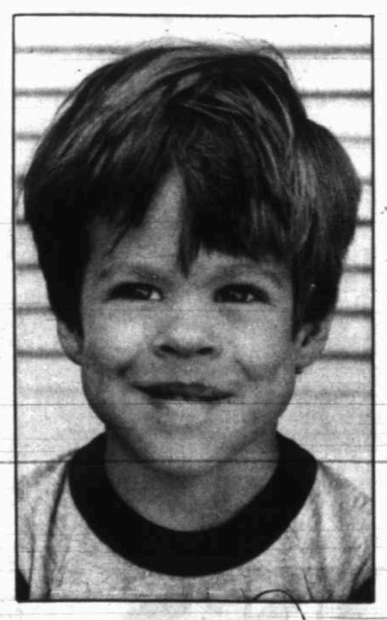

And her family respects her time to be alone. "When I tell the boys to go to their room, they know they're not being punished. They have learned I need that time for quiet."

Other simple things are also understood in the family.

Quadruplets: Four times as fun, hectic

"I don't cook with them in the kitchen — for safety reasons. When they were little, I put up fences in the doorways. They have learned not to come in when I'm cooking but they are allowed to sit at the breakfast bar if they want to talk."

One way she saves her sanity is by sharing her experiences with mothers with whom she has a common bond.

"I enjoy going somewhere where I can share my problems," she said of the Midland Mothers of Twins club. "I can call and visit. It's supportive. I can ask questions and get suggestions."

Another group she enjoys is "Supermom," an organization featuring an exercise program, Bible study and a time for mothers with children to talk, discuss travel ideas and safety hints.

In the beginning, life was not easy. After the quads were born, Mrs. Roberson's mother and grandmother came to visit and assist with child care. But when the babies were 45 days old, the family moved to San Antonio. Larry, manager of Albertson's health and beauty aids department, had been transferred to a new store.

Dana was not in good physical condition.

"The first night we were in San Antonio, we had to spend the night in a motel because our home wasn't ready. There we were...with four tiny babies."

The Roberson's wanted to hire a sitter service to assist Dana, "but I guess the idea of four of them at one time scared them off."

But good things came along during the tough times. "Albertson's was wonderful."

Gifts such as a year's supply of baby food, a five-month supply of diapers and formula were furnished by friends, doctors and co-workers. At a baby shower, Albertson's employees gave them four high-chairs and four car seats.

Mrs. Roberson now is in good health and is grateful to have healthy quads, unusual for multiples. But even in good health, she depends on help from her husband.

"Larry has been wonderful. I think he would have been a good daddy whether he had one or four. He wanted kids and he was ready for them. But with four of them, he had to be.

"When they were tiny, he would come home from work for their feedings. He knew I was tired. And when he comes home from work now, I know he is tired, but I can leave the kids with him so I can get away. And I don't feel like I've burdened him."

To give each child undivided attention may seem like a challenge. And the Roberson's believe each child needs the time. "They've learned they have to take turns. When I hold one of them in my lap, the others know they will get their time, too, but they have to take turns."

The boys have learned sharing is important. The Robersons established a "community toy box," where all toys are shared. Other items, though individually owned, are shared with the owner retaining "priority" on a toy's return.

There are advantages to having a small army in the home. "They have each other to play with so they don't expect me to play with them constantly, as one child would."

Though before she hadn't noticed any "pairing off," identical twins Larry Wayne and Jamie now seem to be in a phase where they play together, leaving fraternal brothers Daryl and Jesse to play together.

Mrs. Roberson believes the identical twins are mirror images of one another. Though both eat with their right hands, she believes one is inclined to left handedness. "One of them sucked his right tumb, the other one sucked his left thumb," she said.

Mrs. Roberson is a big believer in individuality. She wants her sons to have their own friends and their own personalities. She doesn't want any of them to live in the shadow of another.

For now, she dresses them in matching T-shirts, jeans and tennis shoes. But as they grow older, "they will dress how they want."

She hopes each will be different and independent.

With four birthdays less than three weeks before Christmas, a December budget is a necessity. The Roberson's have found a solution: "We alternate between a big Christmas and a small birthday."

Preparing the boys to be separated in life is just as important, which is why she is looking into pre-kindergarten.

"The cost is not bad...for one. But with four, it adds up."

By the time they're ready for college, figuring a college education now is about $20,000, she said, she hopes they'll plan attending a junior college close to home for the first few years.

For the next 12 years, the financial planning priority is at home. The 35-pound, 41-inch-tall quads already "go through about a loaf of bread a day.

"We go through about a gallon of milk in two or three days," Mrs. Roberson said.

But when the day is done, she has four happy faces to kiss goodnight.

From left, Larry Wayne, Daryl, Jesse and Jamie, are dressed alike but their mother believes each should grow up as an independent and different person. As the brothers grow older, " they will dress how they want," she said.

AT WORK

Man called town's only entrepreneur

By ADELE SCHEELE, PH.D

Lecturing is one of the underrated careers of the century. Besides getting to deliver my message to live audiences, I can always bet something unexpected will happen. Audiences, for example, run against the grain, like Frost's west-running brook. When you expect too much from one place, real life muddies it a little. And when you dread going, believing it will be white bread all the way, the event invariably turns out to be explosive.

So, I'm trusting the process, as they say, and leaving home, bag in hand and expectation gear in low, hoping to nudge Mother Nature.

It happened in South Dakota where the air is clean, the snow crisp, and the atmosphere latent with possibility. Just after my lecture at the college I met Dick Thompson, head of the business department. He was introduced to me as the town's only entrepreneur. His restaurant, the Sluice, was his claim to fame in Spearfish. Ninety-nine percent of the town's population ate there regularly. So did tourists on their way to Mount Rushmore.

According to what I saw, the Sluice may be the better attraction, with its historic mining accoutrements, its 50-page menu and its owner-manager.

Dick Thompson began by running the Holiday Inn's restaurant as the food and beverage director and attracted the attention of a group of businessmen who ate there regularly. Impressed, they tried for a year to convince Dick Thompson to join them in starting a restaurant. Finally, he agreed.

His idea was to recreate the gold mining lore that made South Dakota famous. He started collecting old things that nobody wanted — wagons that pulled the ore; original claims and deeds; banker's counters at which the miners stood, depressing the wood with the weight of the gold ore.

It is all used again. The wagons and the teller's stand now serve salads, and one of the old sluicemakers was found and commissioned to recreate a trough filled with water to carry the ore for the entrance to the restaurant carrying its name. Thompson said the craftsman cried when he saw the place. Now permanent art, his wooden waterway welcomes us.

Seven chefs prepare everything from quiche to rattlesnake and promise to create anything within a week — from elephant to bison to vegetables of all kinds. All delicious and at reasonable prices. (You can even get a hamburger for under $3 for lunch or late-night snack).

On the walls in one of the dining rooms is the "Miner's Ten Commandments," initially written as a joke from a miner's gold bust. The spoof quickly struck a vein. That miner sold 100,000 copies to the small group of miners and the greater group of would-be's, and retired from mining.

Mr. Thompson's appetite was whetted to open several other restaurants along with his silent partners. With sites chosen and plans under way, it all changed three years ago when one of Dick Thompson's sons contracted cancer at the age of 11. Weekly six-hour drives to Denver for chemotherapy and enduring the agony of the aftermath of treatments forced a new reckoning: rededication of father to family.

Dick Thompson's meeting life and death put business into a new perspective. Now content with one restaurant, one college division, one wife and four children, Dick Thompson is one of the richest men I have ever had the privilege to meet.

Home designer unusual

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

MARIPOSA, Calif. — James Lincoln Hartley, 78, describes himself as a "two-bit" newspaper columnist who is paid 25 cents a week for writing a riddle that appears on the editorial page of the Mariposa Gazette.

Here in this mountain hamlet of 1,200 near Yosemite National Park he also contributes articles on his homespun humor, his philosophy and his inventions.

But he is probably best known for his Hex House, a six-sided, equilateral, Gothic-arched, one-room hexagon house he built in his backyard.

And then there is that mouse trap he invented that catches mice alive. "We catch our mice unharmed and turn them loose in the country to help the balance of nature," says this Renaissance Man of the Sierras.

Hartley drives a 1930 modified Franklin pickup truck, which he calls "the only car worth a damn ever made in America."

His home library consists of the Home Medical Library Series 1908, the 13 volumes of John L. Stoddard's 1898 lectures and the World Book Encyclopedia, 1928.

Hartley's remarkable Hex House is 13 feet high and 15 feet, 3 inches across the base. It is made mostly of scrap metal that cost him nothing. The shingles and nails ran his construction costs to $64.

He sells plans for the house for $15 and has sold 55 sets of them in the past four years. Some of the Hex Houses have been built in Florida, Maine and Alberta, Canada. One man in British Columbia is building a Hex Houseboat.

Hartley also has plans for a two-story Hex House big enough for a family of four. He says the Hex House would cost no more than $500 if everything needed to build it was brought in new.

Polynesian Cultural Center preserves ancient crafts

CNS PHOTOS

The Polynesian Cultural Center on Oahu preserves the ancient crafts of the islands. Sielu Avea, top, prepares coconut milk in the way his ancestors did, during a demonstration in the Center's Samoan village. Below, Polynesian performers glide by in the afternoon "Pageant of the Long Canoes."

OAHU, Hawaii — What is Polynesia? Golden-skinned Tahitian beauties, grass-skirted with hips swaying to the rhythm of wooden toere drums. A young Samoan, his muscular arms spinning circles of light in the exciting fire knife dance. The warlike Maoris of New Zealand, the seafaring peoples of Tonga and Fiji ... and so much more.

You'd need to travel the whole of the South Pacific to see all this, wouldn't you? The answer is a happy Hawaiian "no." For on the beautiful island of Oahu, set amidst flowering hibiscus and regal palms, the centuries-old traditions of the South Pacific are brought together and kept alive. Where? On a 42-acre paradise known as the Polynesian Cultural Center.

Only a scenic hour's drive from the beaches and nightclubs of Waikiki, the Cultural Center (known to locals as the PCC) has thrilled millions of visitors since its opening in 1963. With seven villages representing the cultures of Samoa, Tahiti, Tonga, Fiji, the Maoris of New Zealand, the Marquesas and, of course, Hawaii — there's plenty to see and do.

You might stroll through the Samoan Village and find yourself greeted with a friendly "Taloea!" (That's Samoan for hello.) Robert Louis Stevenson once called the people of Samoa the happiest of all those in the South Pacific, and here you can see why: they DO laugh and joke a lot. A group of us stopped to watch a coconut-husking demonstration given by Sielu Avea. Before he began, he informed us that this is a popular competitive sport among young Samoan men — the record is three seconds! The coconut is impaled on a wooden spike and the tough fibrous covering torn away.

After husking, and with only a small stone for a tool, Sielu showed us the Samoan method for opening the fruit. He taped the hard shell in just the right place and voila: two perfect halves filled with coconut milk which he laughingly called "Samoan 7-Up." With a swift stroke he had cut out chunks of coconut meat and we walked on, munching the sweet fruit.

Visitors may view many such demonstrations of traditional Polynesian activities and crafts. You might stop to see the Fijians making salusalu. These are leis made from different materials than the better-known Hawaiian flower necklaces, and looking surprisingly different — and beautiful.

In the Tongan Village are continuous demonstrations of tapa-making. Tapa is made from the soaked and pounded bark of the mulberry bush. Flattened into thin strips, which are then pasted together and decorated with elaborate stencil designs, this cloth is popular in island fashions and adorns the interior of many a hut.

Or you may see Hawaiians at work pounding poi from the boiled roots of the taro plant — and try a sample when it's done.

We wandered into the Tahitian Village and I soon found myself dressed in a grass skirt, following the movements of a young Tahitian girl as I attempted to learn the tamure dance.

"Flex your knees," she advised, "and put your heels together. Now point your toes outward and move your hips to the rhythm of the drums. A little faster .... you've got it."

Everything above the hips must remain motionless, while below them, all is movement. The Tahitians seem to do it effortlessly, but it's harder than it first appears — the young women here dance the tamure with towering crowns of flowers atop their heads, and I didn't see one of them fall off!

Visit the Maori Village and you'll be met by fierce-looking men, their faces decorated with curving black lines, tongues stuck out and growling. This is all part of the wero, or ceremonial greeting of the Maoris. They place a token at their visitors' feet — if the token is picked up, the visitors come as friends. (You're advised to pick it up.)

As they shake their spears, one of the men begins to speak. You might expect some sort of grunting Pidgin English from such frightening apparitions, but instead you hear the soft, lilting accents of New Zealand, a cross between British and Australian accents.

New Zealand's Maoris are traditionally a ferocious, warlike people, and the men's tongues and faces were tattooed to intimidate enemies. (Here, however, the tattooes are only black greasepaint, applied in the old designs.)

There's nothing to fear from these Maoris: they'll soon invite you to play tititorea, the Maori stick game. Visitors line up in two rows, pounding, tapping and tossing wooden sticks to an increasingly fast tempo. Again, it's harder than it looks, and we were reduced to gasping giggles before long. Our Maori teacher was amused and agreed that it DOES take "a little practice."

All seven villages at the Cultural Center are authentically recreated from traditional Polynesian models. In fact, 75 to 80 percent of today's Samoans still live in huts like those seen in the Samoan Village. The Maori Whare Runanga is a large, elaborately carved and painted building. This is the setting for a fascinating afternoon talk on Maori history and culture — not to be missed.

To stroll through these villages is pleasant; palm trees and fragrant flowering bushes line the paths. Or try a ride on a quaint Hawaiian-style tram shuttle. There's even a guided canoe tour of the villages, through the Cultural Center's winding, tree-shaded waterways.

The center's several shops feature handcrafted Polynesian wood carvings, woven items, toys and other mementos of your visit. At the Gateway restaurant you'll sample island delicacies and tropical fruit. The building which houses this restaurant is the size of a football field, and is believed to be the largest thatched-roo& construction in the whole of the South Pacific.

Besides mingling with the "natives" in the seven villages, where visitors learn about and participate in these South Pacific cultures, there are several different shows featuring Polynesian dance and song. "Music Polynesia" is presented each morning at 11 and the musical history of these island people is traced through their music and movements.

The daily "Pageant of the Long Canoes," beginning at 3 p.m. is a fun anshow, which premiered in July, packs in all the vibrant excitement that Polynesian entertainment has to offer. Featuring new costumes, music, choreography and special effects (an imposing volcano at the rear of the stage erupts and glowing red lava streams high into the air), "This Is Polynesia" commemorates the Cultural Center's 20th anniversary this year.

The Hawaii campus of the Brigham Young University was already established in Laie when, in 1963, the Cultural Center was opened, with a dual purpose in mind. First, the center was to provide jobs for Polynesian students coming to BYU-Hawaii from all over the South Pacific, to help them finance a college education which might otherwise be far beyond their means. Second, the Mormon Church, which owns and operates the center, wanted to try to preserve what it could of Polynesia's fast-disappearing cultures.

If you're planning a trip to Oahu, be sure to set aside a day for a visit to this North Shore potpourri of Polynesian music, dance, food, craft, costume and culture. And be prepared for a fun-filled and enlightening look into the South Pacific's past and present. It's an experience you're not likely to forget.

Cable cars expected to return to Bay City

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Those little cable cars will soon return to the City by the Bay, clattering and clanging their way up and down the hilly streets. On the summer solstice, June 21, at high noon, the cable cars will be back on the tracks again.

A three-day party is in the making, starting with the official ceremony at noon — ribbon cutting, balloons, fireworks, celebrities, as the cars line up along their routes and go back into service.

One event will be a "Race the Cable Cars" marathon. Merchants in the Fishermen's Wharf area are organizing a torchlight parade, fireworks and parties, and elsewhere along the route merchant associations and hotels are putting together their own celebrations.

The little cars are refurbished and newly painted, all of them red and gold (even the Powell Street line that had been green and yellow), the colors that they were back in 1873.

They will be festooned with flowers and balloons on the day of the solstice and musicians will be aboard, playing for the passengers and well-wishers along the routes.

City officials say that there will be entertainment and special events at Union Square and nighttime fireworks at Victorian Park on Hyde Beach.

The cable cars, so much a part of the personality of San Francisco, rolled off the tracks on Sept. 22, 1982. After 109 years of service, the system of tracks, cables and control center operations just plain wore out. The reconstruction has covered nine miles of tracks and cables and cost $58.2 million. While that was going on, another $2 million was spent to refurbish the cars.

A new underground viewing room has been installed in the Car Barn & Cable Car Museum at Washington and Mason streets so that visitors can view the workings of the cars from beneath.

The cable cars are a National Historic Landmark, which meant that the federal government funded 80 percent of the reconstruction cost. San Francisco raised most of its $10 million share with private donations. For 18 months the city's streets have been blocked by excavations and construction in the 69-block cable-car route area.

The cable cars will resume full service with the beginning of summer, carrying 12 million passengers a year to Union Square, the financial district, Chinatown, Nob Hill, Russian Hill, Fisherman's Wharf and Aquatic Park, home of the San Francisco Maritime Museum, Ghirardelli Square and the Cannery.

The cable cars attain a speed of 9 1-2 m.p.h., which is plenty fast around some of the horseshoe curves or over the crests of steep hills that sweep headlong toward the bay below. The grade is 17 percent where the Powell Street cars plummet over Nob Hill at California and 21 percent along the Hyde Street line between Chestnut and Lombard streets.

It is the No. 59 Powell-Mason line that starts in the center of the shopping district, goes up over Nob Hill and heads down to the colorful attractions at Fisherman's Wharf.

The No. 60 Powell-Hyde line is the favorite of those who want zigzags both vertical and lateral. It runs from the downtown shopping center up and over Nob Hill and Russian Hill and on to gaslit Victorian Square at Aquatic Park. Ghirardelli Square is less than a block away.

The third route is No. 61, which goes from the foot of California Street in the financial district to Van Ness Avenue, through Chinatown and along Nob Hill.

Tourists did not stay away from San Francisco during the long absence of the cable cars, as some officials had feared.

Travel guide includes photos

The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

You know the trouble with most travel books? No pictures.

The leading travel guides have contained millions of words about hotels, restaurants, churches, beaches, nightclubs and mountain meadows, but seldom any pictures of them.

But now, thanks to a company called Insight Guides, we can have our information and pictures, too.

Although the Insight Guides are more expensive ($14.95) than some other travel guides, they are more than worth the price just for the superb photography that packs the fat volumes.

Insight Guides are not guides in the usual sense, failing as they do to emphasize the best hotel or the best restaurant in a town. They do emphasize the essence that makes every country and state unique.

Although Insight Guides have enjoyed a great popularity, many bookstores fail to stock them. If your bookstore does not have them, you can purchase them directly (discounts for five or more titles and special discounts to travel agents) from Prentice-Hall, Inc., Englewood Cliffs, N.J. 07632.

Journey indicative of Scotland's dark, stormy past

SCOTLAND — Traveling through the Scottish Highlands and Islands brings constant reminders of the land's dark and stormy past, when Viking and Scottish or English and Jacobite armies fought across moor and highland, defending and attacking the ancient castles of clan chiefs.

Each fortress still standing in Scotland conceals its own tales of treachery and derring-do. Cawdor Castle, home of the Earl of Cawdor since the 14th century, is the perfect castle to visit. Its tower is built around a tree, its drawbridge and its deep well inside the castle are striking reminders of the harsh frugality of Scottish life centuries ago.

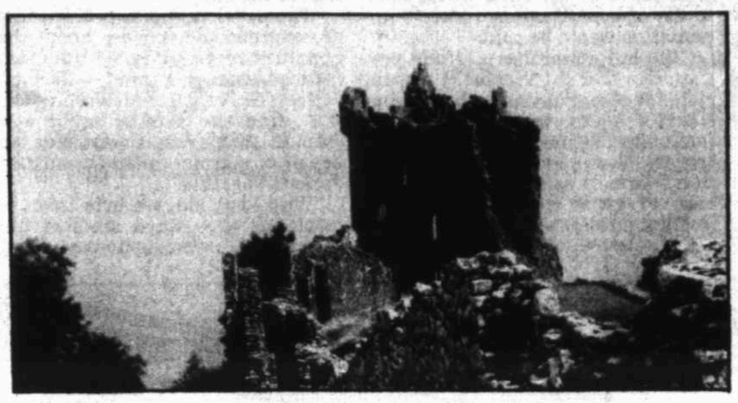

Cawdor Castle also boasts nature trails through the surrounding grounds, a picnic area, a pitch-and-putt course, gift shop and licensed restaurant. Those who drive to Cawdor (12 miles east of Inverness) will find ample free parking. The castle is open daily from 10 a.m.-5:30 p.m. May through September.

An easy way to visit Cawdor Castle is to select a package listed by the Scottish Highlands and Islands Development Board in its "Holiday Ideas '83" booklet.

The six-night "Highland Passport" package at Coul House Hotel in Contin, by Strathpeffer, Scotland's only spa town, costs about $180 per person (reduced rates for children). Included are accommodations with dinner and breakfast daily, service and five free admissions to a choice of over 30 attractions in the Inverness area including, of course, Cawdor Castle.

Dunvegan Castle on the Isle of Skye, part of Scotland's Inner Hebrides on the west coast, is thought to be the oldest inhabited castle in Scotland. Also known as the "fairy castle," Dunvegan Castle is also blessed with rich folklore.

Legend has it that the fourth chief of the Clan MacLeod (Dunvegan has been the MacLeod family seat for over 800 years) married an elfin wife and fathered a son by her. When his wife whom he loved dearly was summoned to return to her fairy people, MacLeod pleaded with her to stay, but in vain. As she walked from the castle, followed by the grief-stricken MaLeod and their child, the wife reached a small bridge and rose into the air, leaving a length of silk at the feet of her family. "Keep this flag," she said, "and unfurl it to the wind whenever a crisis hits you. It will save you and yours twice, but woe on you all if you unfurl it a third time."

Castle Urquhart commanded a prominent position at the edge of Loch Ness from the early 1500s until after the Jacobite uprising of 1689, when it was blown up. All that remains on this romantic promontory are a couple of walls and some ramparts.

(Another version of the legend says the fairy wife was obliged to leave the world of mortals upon the birth of her and MacLeod's child. While the clan was in the midst of celebrating the birth, the mother tearfully abandoned her child. But when she saw him neglected, crying and shivering she stopped briefly to cover him with the silken flag.)

Since that time the flag has indeed been unfurled twice: MacLeod flew it when a plague coursed through the castle and the surrounding lands (all were saved), and again in 1578 when it helped repel a pillaging attack by the Clan MacDonald.

For the last 400 years, however, the silken flag has lain in a glass case inside Dunvegan Castle on view to the public. Hopefully the MacLeods will never need to unfurl it a third time.

There are more Highlands and Islands' castles. Brodick Castle rules over the island of Arran in the Firth of Clyde; Invergarry Castle was burned down by the Duke of Cumberland (still known as "Butcher Cumberland") after the Battle of Culloden which ended the Jacobite uprisings.

Eilean Donan Castle may be the most photographed castle in Scotland. Located on an island in Loch Duich in in Wester Ross, connected to the mainland by a three-arched stone bridge, the castle is magnificent. On one side of the castle, one of the Five Sisters of Kintail mountains rises. From the other side the view down on Loch Duich and the distant mountains of Skye is breathtaking.

New Orleans extravaganza is fairest of them all

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

NEW ORLEANS — New Orleans opened its world's fair Saturday and while nobody can be sure what will happen until it actually gets under way, the six-month extravaganza seems likely to live up to the city's reputation for good times.

This is the city that throws America's liveliest and most famous party every year, the Carnival at Mardi Gras, so the folks on the Mississippi River have a good idea of what's fun. And they've heaped that festive Mardi Gras spirit into their fair.

This one is officially called the 1984 Louisiana World Exposition, a ponderous name for an event that shows every sign of being far more whimsical and entertaining than it is educational.

The theme of the fair, which runs until Nov. 11, is "The World of Rivers: Fresh Water as a Source of Life." The topic, of course, is a serious one, and the fair is appropriately (and scenically) located on the banks of the country's biggest river. But what's that peering around the corner of an exhibit wall?

IT'S A huge, funny-faced alligator, a local river-dweller made of stuffed sandbags normally used for flood control. The creature is ideal for sitting (adults) or scrambling (youngsters).

A fanciful structure of mauve and blue and terra cotta, called the Wonderwall, winds for a half-mile through the fair's 84 acres with no other purpose but to delight and amuse.

Three stories tall, it sprouts exotic beasts, soaring arches, Gothic windows, splashing fountains and nooks for puppet plays. Fair officials call the wall "a stationary Mardi Gras parade," and it could turn out to be the star of the show.

But twice daily, visitors can join in a live and moving Mardi Gras parade, as close to the real thing as possible, when wildly painted floats roll through the fairground's streets to the bouncing tunes of carnival bands. There will be maskers and mimes, acrobats and clowns.

And the list of fun things goes on: daily Aquacade shows, a 1,000-seat German beer hall with oom-pah-pah bands, Dixieland jazz, a gondola that lifts passengers more than 300 feet into the air for a spectacular (and scary) ride across the Mississippi, 75 restaurants or food stalls, a whole garden of water games and water rides and, to end each day, a fireworks show over the river.

THE NEW Orleans fair is divided into six theme areas, which wrap around two large lagoons or stretch for several blocks along the Mississippi. There's a water view from just about anywhere.

The areas are linked by terraced walkways and a 1.4-mile overhead monorail that ducks in and out of major exhibition halls. It is a good way to get an overview of the fair before you start sightseeing on foot. Here's what you will see:

—CENTENNIAL PLAZA: It's the first area you step into past the main gate guarded by two gigantic mermaids. A 100-year-old carousel helps commemorate the 1884 Cotton Centennial in New Orleans. But where cotton was once king, the focus in 1984 is on oil, represented by a full-sized offshore oil rig rising up from a riverside lot.

You can climb inside to explore (there's a 50,000-gallon saltwater aquarium inside) and judge for yourself the message that offshore drilling is important to the country's welfare. Here's where the six-passenger gondolas, 55 of them, take off on their 4 1-2-minute flight across the Mississippi.

—THE GREAT HALL: Head here when afternoon temperatures soar, since the building — all 15 acres of it — is air-conditioned. When the fair is over, it will become the city's convention hall. Until then, it houses many exhibits, but especially the Louisiana Pavilion, where visitors can board 24-passenger barges for a 12-minute floating trip through the state's swamps, rivers and bayous. It's a darkened "tunnel-of-love" setup, with a spotlighted plantation house under moss-heavy oaks or a fisherman's shack around the next bend in the stream.

—INTERNATIONAL RIVERFRONT: More than 20 foreign countries have prepared national displays on the walkway beside the river. Japan has promised a rotating water wheel framed by mechanized dolls that play musical instruments. If you don't want to walk the riverfront's two-thirds of a mile, you can ride a 30-foot-high chairlift, the kind usually found on a ski slope.

World's Fair to offer 50,000 entertaining hours

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

NEW ORLEANS — The hot note of a trumpet echoed down Bourbon Street, announcing that all's well in New Orleans.

What with 50,000 hours of entertainment lined up, it's being described as the first World's Fair to popularize pleasure. Lionel Hampton's Pack will be on hand and Al Hirt and Pete Fountain will blow their horns. Live music will echo across the 84-acre fairgrounds right up until closing day, Nov. 11.

Spectators will crowd Reunion Hall and the Jazz 'n' Gospel Tent. An oompah band will growl away inside a German beer garden and Bob Hope has signed on to celebrate his 81st birthday during an all-star telecast.

THROUGHOUT THE fairgrounds entertainers will perform on two stages. Some will be movable. To keep tempers cool, stages with entertainers aboard will be pushed into action wherever fairgoers must stand in line.

Charles Corson, who spent 17 years with Disney Productions, has lined up talent ranging from Willie Nelson and Barbara Mandrell to soloist Isaac Stern and a rock outfit from Japan calling themselves the Tokyo Rag Pickers. The Boston Pops will put in an appearance as will the London Philharmonic, acrobats from China, Sara Vaughan, Crystal Gayle, Charlie Pride and dozens of other name groups and artists. A couple of Mardi Gras parades will be staged daily along with a nightly fireworks show for a grand total of $1 million in Roman candles and such.

Fairgoers will ride the country's highest Ferris wheel (17 stories); swimmers will re-create the old Aquacade made famous at the New York World's Fair in '39, and crowds will snap pictures of the fair's half-mile-long Wonderwall with its cafes, souvenir shops and gargoyles.

The Vatican sent over an exhibit. So did China, Japan, Australia, Korea, Italy and a lineup of others.

As for hungry visitors, they'll be fed in 75 restaurants and fast-food concessions featuring everything from gumbo and jambalaya to chilled oysters and crawfish.

NEW ORLEANS spent $50 million sprucing up streets and repairing sidewalks for the fair. Twenty-seven old warehouses along the Mississippi were restored and the old Jackson Brewery is being refurbished to focus on food and entertainment beyond the exposition grounds.

Inside the French Quarter, saloon keepers and nightclub owners are waiting for the spillover from the fair. For legions of tourists, this is what New Orleans is all about: the French Quarter, those 90 square blocks bounded by Canal, Rampart, Decatur and Esplanade.

No one ever accused New Orleans of being dull. It's a combination of Paris, San Francisco and Manhattan, a town that's every bit as wicked as Montmarte and Greenwich Village, as breezy as North Beach, as Southern as red beans and rice and black-eyed peas.

Visitors get caught up in all the soul stuff. The food, the carriage rides, the walks along the Mississippi. This along with jazz, booze and nightclubs that seldom close their doors. Morning, noon, nighttime, it makes no difference. New Orleans is a town that spins on 24 hours a day.

AT PRESERVATION Hall the sweet, hot notes of jazz make crowds laugh and applaud. Early risers still run off to Cafe du Monde down on Decatur Street, ordering chicory-laden coffee and beignets, those square-cut doughnuts that are buried in powdered sugar. Later they stroll down to the levee to watch barges and tugs and river boats moving down the muddy ol' Mississippi.

Heavenly aromas drift out of the carriageway of Brennan's and onto Royal Street. Brennan's for breakfast remains a tradition. Sometimes diners stay on the entire morning, sipping champagne and pernod and spooning Eggs Hussarde and Eggs Sardu. Others crowd Arnaud's, K-Paul's, the Commander's Palace, Galatorie's and the Caribbean Room at the Pontchartrain Hotel.

Just as it satisfies the appetite, new Orleans satisfies the soul. Jazz was born here. Off in that sinful section called Storeyville. To this day jazz musicians still march to the cemetery whenever another musician dies, playing their happy, going-home music when the funeral's all over.

New Orleans is a mixture of sights and sounds: paddle-wheelers along the Mississippi, magnolia trees, banana boats being unloaded, chicory roasting in cafes all over town. Some cities barely exist, but New Orleans is something else. It comes alive with a pulse that never misses a beat.

NEW ORLEANS is a combination of the old and the new: towering skyscrapers, ancient buildings, noisy oyster bars and horse-drawn carriages. Its fairgoers will pack the Hilton, Marriott, the Inter-Continental and other major New Orleans hotels. But a small cadre will seek out several 18th- and 19th-century inns deep in the French Quarter itself. Maison de Ville at 727 Toulouse St. certainly leads the list.

Built in 1742, Maison de Ville is the oldest structure operating as a hotel in the French Quarter. Previously a private residence, it overlooks a flowered patio directly behind the Court of the Two Sisters.

Architectural Digest described Maison de Ville as "one of the finest small hotels in America."

Because it is special, it is understandably expensive: $105-$180 a night. The price includes a continental breakfast consisting of freshly squeezed orange juice, croissants and chicory-laden coffee served either in the guest's room or beside a musical fountain in its flowered patio.

It is a lover's choice, a small hotel with huge warmth. For honeymooners or couples celebrating an anniversa ry, the management brightens the occasion with champagne and flowers.

While the Triple A and Mobile Guide folks rate Maison de Ville as a four-star hostelry, just don't make the mistake I did and wind up with a room facing the sidewalk. With Bourbon Street just around the corner, I caught the acts of a couple of gin mills without ever getting out of bed. I was entertained till 3 a.m. No cover charge. (Not much sleep, either.)

Only a block away at 505 Rue Dauphine the same owners operate the Audubon Cottages where James Audubon, the celebrated naturalist, set up his easel in the 19th century. Each of the six cottages faces individual private courtyards, complete with fountains and fragrant gardens.

Parents want surcharge to compensate for vaccine side effects

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration opposes legislation to impose a surcharge on vaccines to compensate children who suffer adverse effects while relatives say a surcharge would help end an "American tragedy."

Dr. Edward N. Brandt, Health and Human Services assistant secretary for health, said that while the proposal by Sen. Paula Hawkins, R-Fla., "has a laudable goal," it also has major weaknesses.

The legislation would require the federal government to impose a surcharge on vaccines to provide compensation for victims. It also imposes record-keeping and reporting requirements, studies of the relationship between vaccines and certain illnesses and development of parent-information material on the risks of vaccines.

The bill establishes lists of symptoms covered and the time period in which they must occur after vaccination in order for the child to qualify for compensation. For example, hospital care would have to cost at least $2,500 or the child would have to die of complications before compensation would be paid.

"The bill establishes a strong presumption that the vaccine is responsible for essentially any adverse condition that happens after immunization unless there is incontrovertible evidence of other causation," Brandt said. "This presumption of guilt would undermine public confidence in immunization."

But relatives of children who died after being vaccinated urged passage of the bill.

"The development and deepening of congressional concern about the continuing tragedy of vaccine-induced damage is most welcome," Jeffrey H. Schwartz of Washington, D.C., told the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee on behalf of a group called Dissatisfied Parents Together.

"With your aid, we hope soon to reach the time when mothers and fathers will never again say: 'They did this to our child, then they left us alone to deal with the damage'."

Schwartz said his daughter died six weeks ago from cardiac arrest during a seizure caused by a disorder resulting from her vaccination for diphtheria, pertussis (whooping cough) and tetanus.

He said pertussis vaccine contained in the vaccination required for children in this country can cause high fevers, convulsion, paralysis, loss of hearing, sight and speech, as well as death.

As Means field grows so grows Andrews

Enhanced Oil Recovery puts perk in area economy

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

"Why is this man smiling?" Is the old cliche, that might aptly be put to Andrews County.

Why is this county smiling? It's smiling because Exxon Co. USA is virtually rebuilding and doubling one of West Texas' old and prolific oilfields, and that monumental task is showing up as jobs and dollars in Andrews County.

The Means field in Andrews County is currently a major focal-point in Exxon's portfolio of enhanced oil recovery projects. Over the next two years, Exxon expects to spend about $300 million in the field, and more than a few of them are expected to stick in Andrews.

Dollars in massive quantities are already being spent in the field as workmen prepare the 50-year-old San Andres-Grayburg field for a carbon dioxide flood that is expected to result in the recovery of 35.2 million additional barrels of oil, and extend the life of the field wells into the next century.

"It looks like boom times in the Means field," stated one observer, commenting on the scale of construction and drilling, taking place in the field.

Six rigs are kept turning to the right continually, with each rig making a well a week. To date, 90 wells have been drilled with about 353 to go.

Plans call for drilling a total of 443 injection and producing wells. At peak operations, some 70 million cubic feet per day of carbon dioxide will be injected alternately with water in a method known as the water-alternating gas (WAG) process.

Construction crews swarm throughout the Means field, putting in a new power system, installing new electrical sub-stations, laying new oil and gas gathering lines, constructing new sub batteries, modifying the gas system, building a carbon dioxide injection system and making changes to the water injection system.

"Things are going great in the project," said Bill Ingram, district manager for Exxon's Andrews District. "We here, and all of Exxon are excited about this project."

Andrews is pretty excited about the project also. While much of the Permian Basin suffered through a recession, Andrews has basked in near boom conditions.

A new shopping center and super market have been built, as well as a theater, several restaurants, numerousa numnew business establishments, and two housing sub-divisions — one a 50-acre development— according to Bill Shipman, Andrews County Chamber of Commerce manager.

"We're not at boom level now," said Shipman, "but we're not far from it."

(see ANDREWS, Page 6G)

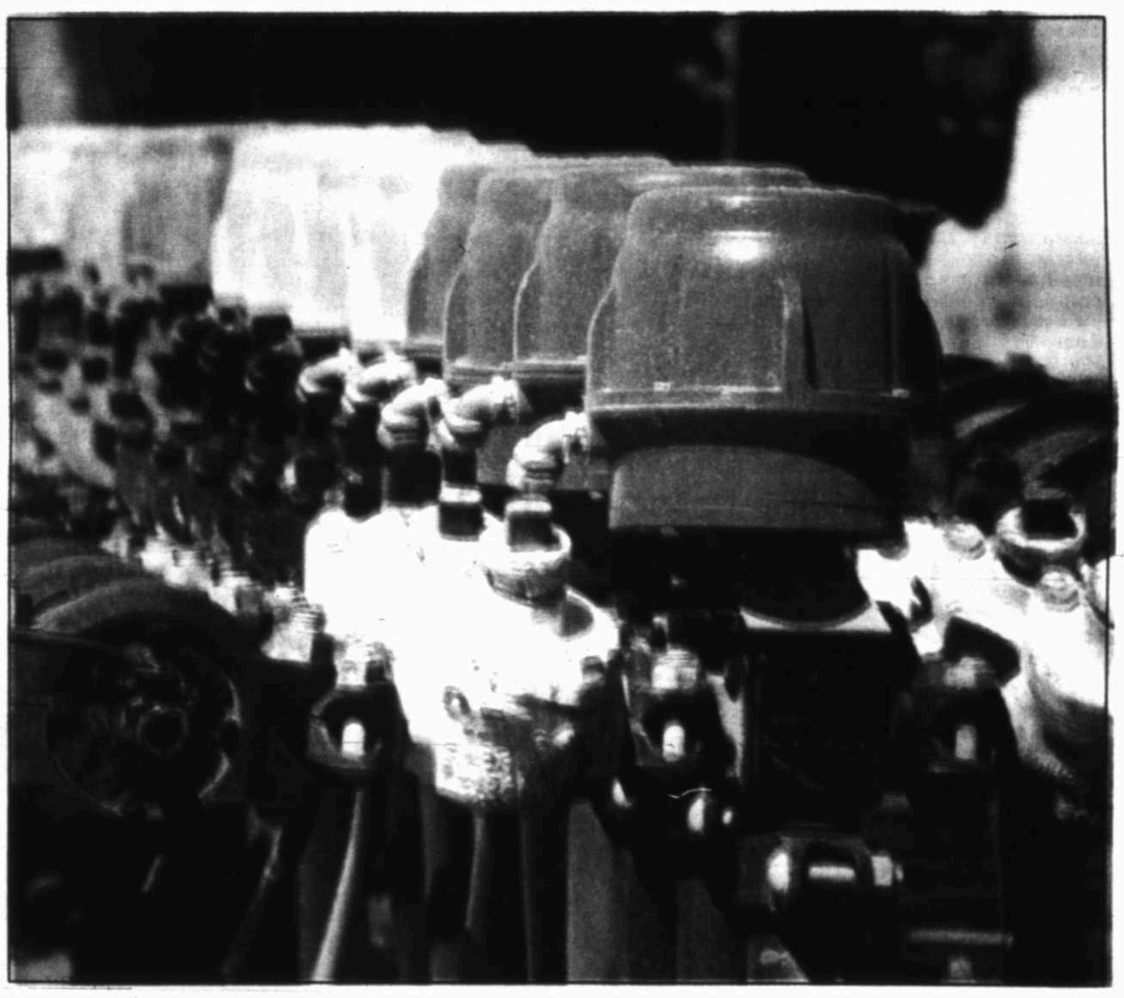

New pipelines are being installed in many areas of the Means field for water, gas and carbon dioxide systems.

A drilling crew on Tom Brown rig 30 makes a connection. Six rigs running in the field are drilling 24 wells per month.

Rig counts make dramatic climb

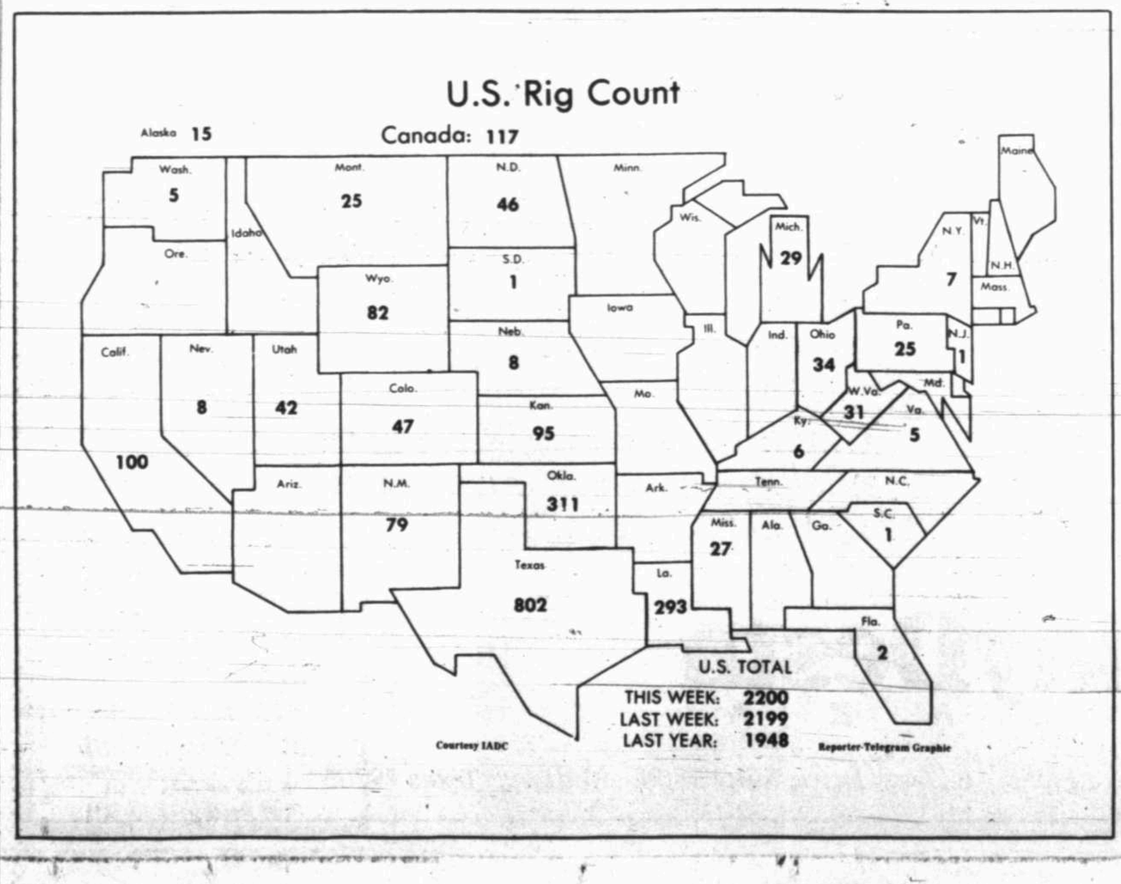

Both the National and Permian Basin rig counts were up again this week.

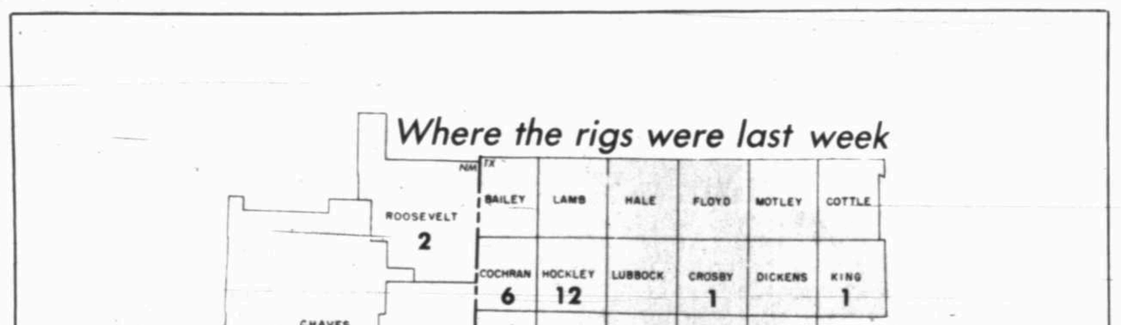

While the National rig count was up only one rig, the Permian Basin added five rigs to the working number.

Counties showing increases were Glasscock, which is now the fourth most active county in the Permian Basin, Sterling, Lea, Eddy, Crockett, Crane, Ward, Gaines, Dawson, Borden and Hockley. All others remained stable or decreased. Lea with 38 rigs running remained the most active county.

Nationally, Texas took a plunge from 817 to 802, but Louisiana and Oklahoma took significant increases.

The strength of the Permian Basin petroleum industry can be seen by comparing rig counts. The Permian Basin now has more rigs running than the entire states of Louisiana or Oklahoma. The Basin also has more rigs than the entire Rocky Mountain region.

Royal Dutch-Shell extends offer for Shell

NEW YORK (AP) — The Royal Dutch-Shell Group of Companies has disclosed that preliminary results of its offer for Shell Oil Co. have raised its stake in the company to 90.1 percent, enough to complete its takeover of the nation's eighth-largest oil company without the formality of a shareholders' vote.

But a Delaware court ruling earlier this week that placed the transaction in abeyance has left open the prospect that some Shell stockholders will still have a chance to back out of the deal.

Royal Dutch-Shell, the world's second-largest industrial concern after Exxon Corp., said its offer of $58 a share for Shell stock, which was to have expired at midnight Wednesday, has been extended until 5 p.m. EDT on May 23.

It said that based on a preliminary count, 64.1 million of the 95.4 million shares it did not already own were tendered to SPNV Holdings Inc., a Royal Dutch-Shell subsidiary that is conducting the offer. That raised Royal Dutch-Shell's holdings in Shell to 278.6 million shares, or 90.1 percent of the outstanding stock.

Under the laws of Delaware, where Shell is incorporated, a shareholder with at least 90 percent of the stock may complete a takeover without putting the matter up for a vote by the remaining stockowners.

On Tuesday, a Delaware Chancery Court judge, acting on a lawsuit by Shell's minority shareholders, issued an order barring SPNV from completing its $5.5 billion offer until it made further disclosures.

In issuing the preliminary injunction, Vice Chancellor Maurice A. Hartnett III held that there was "reasonable probability" that the offer was not a fair price for the stock and that Royal Dutch-Shell had "not made a full and complete disclosure of all pertinent facts with complete candor."

The judge said shareholders who had already accepted the Royal Dutch-Shell bid would be given a chance to withdraw their shares following the release of additional information. A further court order was awaited to spell out the shareholders' withdrawal rights.

SPNV said it has yet to decide whether to appeal.

In court arguments last Friday, shareholders contended that based on internal company information, a price as high as $91 a share was appropriate.

Hartnett said Royal Dutch-Shell withheld from its investment banker, Morgan Stanley & Co., facts needed to arrive at a fair and accurate opinion on the value of the shares.

"The best way to attempt to reconcile and protect the many different interests and investment desires of the minority stockholders and still maintain the duty of the court to prevent breaches of fiduciary duty, is to hold the completion of the tender offer in abeyance, to require Morgan Stanley to review in good faith the data developed by the independent committee and to again express their opinion as to value after such review and to disclose by supplemental notices the information which I have found should have been disclosed," the judge said. "Those stockholders who have already tendered must be given an opportunity to withdraw their shares, if they desire, while or after the supplemental disclosure is made."

Regan 'little bewildered' by prime rate hike

WASHINGTON (AP) — Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan said today he is "a little bewildered" by the increase in a key bank interest rate this week.

"Our growth rate is moderating and our inflation remains low," Regan, who is President Reagan's chief spokesman on economic matters, told the National Conference of State Legislatures. "There is no sign of a widespread surge in inflationary pressures" that would prompt the increase in the prime lending rate to 12½ percent.

He hailed the report that wholesale prices held steady last month as "a clear indication that inflation is staying down."

Regan noted the Reagan administration has repeatedly urged the Federal Reserve Board, which controls the money supply, to relax its policies enough to permit non-inflationary growth. "We hope they will do so," he said.

Regan devoted most of his speech to the state lawmakers to a defense of the administration's economic policies and a renewed plea that Congress reduce federal spending.

Asked by a legislator what has gone wrong with Reagan's campaign pledge to balance the budget in four years, Regan replied, "recession." Virtually no one predicted four years ago the deep recession that began in July 1981, he said.

"In the long run, the only meaningful solution to the deficit problem is to bring spending down in line with revenues," Regan said.

He also renewed his plea for Congress to initiate a constitutional amendment that would permit a president to veto individual items in a spending bill. The Constitution now requires that an appropriation bill be accepted or vetoed in its entirety.

"The president is one of the only two elected officials who have as their constituency the entire nation," Regan said. "And giving the president more authority in appropriation matters can only benefit the nation as a whole."

State Sen. Harry Meshel of Ohio asked why the Reagan administration continues to dip into traditional state revenue sources, apparently meaning taxes on liquor and cigarettes.

Regan reminded Meshel that the federal government has taxed liquor almost as long as there has been a federal government. So it is the states that are invading federal sources, Regan replied.

Meshel shot back, "Some of your actions have led us to drink."

Houston firm closes deal for 27 wells

Southwest Newswire

HOUSTON — Houston Oil Fields Company has announced that it has closed the acquisition of an approximate 82 percent working interest in 27 producing and non-producing wells, and an approximate 44 percent working interest in three additional wells located in the Lost Lake field, Chambers County, Texas from Viking Petroleum, Inc., a Tulsa-based concern. The transaction also provided the Company with an approximate 22 percent working interest in about 1,800 gross undeveloped acres in the vicinity of the producing wells. As consideration for the interests, Houston Oil Fields Company paid approximately $448,000 cash and assumed $5,219,000 of Viking's indebtedness to two banks. The acquisition is effective as of January 1, 1984.

Current gross production from the producing wells in which the interests were acquired is approximately 400 barrels of oil per day. In connection with the acquisition, Houston Oil Fields Company has been designated operator of the producing properties and plans to drill seven additional wells on the undeveloped acreage during the next 18 months.

Separately, the Company also announced results of operations for the three months ended March 31, 1984. The Company began consolidated operations on June 24, 1983, therefore comparable information for prior periods is not available. The Company reported revenues for the quarter of $2,192,000 and net income of $50,000. Provisions for dividends of $155,000 on outstanding Preferred Stock resulted in a net loss of $105,000 ($.01 per share) applicable to the Company's outstanding Common Stock.

Houston Oil Fields Company is an oil and gas exploration and production company which conducts its activities primarily in the Gulf Coast area. The Company's Common Stock trades in the national over-the-counter market under the NASDAQ symbol HOFC.

New construction contracts increase

NEW YORK — Contracting for new construction reached a new high during 1984's opening quarter, but lost some of its momentum in March, it was reported today by the F.W. Dodge Division of McGraw-Hill Information Systems Co. The March reversal, a seasonally adjusted setback of 4 prcent, was due to declines in homebuilding and public works construction that were only partly offset by a solid gain in commercial and industrial building.

McGraw-Hill Information Systems Co., a primary source of data on constructin markets, is widely known for its Dodge Reports on construction activity, Sweet's Catalog Files of construction product information, and building cost information systems.

Contracts for residential building totaled $8.8 billion in March, as the housing market showed a seasonally adjusted decline of 7 percent. According to the Dodge economist, "Multi-family building has been the source of most of the recent folatility in housing starts, and was the reason for March's decline. By contrast," said Christie, "single-family starts have been holding steady at just over a million units ever since interest rates leveled off early in 1983. Now that rates are rising again, this will be the prt of the housing market to watch."

Nissan to build cars in U.S.

DETROIT (AP) — Nissan Motor Corp. of Japan plans to begin building cars next year at an assembly plant in Smyrna, Tenn., according to a report published this week.

Nissan Motor Manufacturing Corp., the automaker's U.S. subsidiary, intends to assemble up to 300,000 subcompact Sentras each year at the facility beginning in January, the Detroit Free Press said.

Nissan, the No. 2 Japanese automaker, has manufactured compact trucks at the new $600 million Tennessee plant since June. The company scheduled a press conference for today at its U.S. headquarters in Smyrna, where it is expected to announce the move to produce autos in the U.S., the Free Press said.

Engines, transmissions, body panels and other major components would be shipped from Japan, the newspaper said. The Free Press quoted sources as saying that Japanese-built parts would be replaced by American components over the next two to three years.

The move would make Nissan the third Japanese manufacturer to decide to assemble cars in the United States.

Honda Motor Co. has been building its Accord models at a plant in Marysville, Ohio, since November, and Toyota Motor Co. plans to assemble subcompact cars in Fremont, Calif., through a joint venture with General Motors Corp.

A spokesman for Nissan Motor Corp. in Tokyo would neither confirm nor deny that the U.S. production plans would be the subject of today's press conference.

"At present we are unable to confirm reports that the company scheduled a press conference Friday at its U.S. headquarters in Smyrna to announce our decision to produce autos in the United States. We cannot say if the company will make such an announcement." said the spokesman, who declined to be identified.

CO-EXX Pipe Co. expands facility

The CO-EXX Pipe Co. of Big Spring has announced a major expansion of their production facility located in Big Spring. In 1981, CO-EXX started producing premium quality high-density polyethylene pipe primarily for application in the oil patch for the transmission of water, oil or gas. CO-EXX has grown into a multi-million-dollar operation, employing 27 people using highly automated computer-controlled production equipment.

The expansion will include an increased production capacity of 125 percent plus an expansion of their product line to include pipe up to 12 inches in diameter. In addition to the expansion of the pipe lines, CO-EXX will also expand their machine shop capacity allowing for a greater range of custom and production machine work.

Granville Hahn, president of CO-EXX, has stated that "the reason for the expansion of our plant at this time is to meet the growing demand of the oil patch for high quality polyethylene pipe at competitive prices. The introduction of CO2 into the fields of the Permian Basin has generated this demand. We at CO-EXX plan to be a major and reliable source for our customers as their needs arise."

In conjunction with this plan CO-EXX has established six stocking distributor installers strategically located throughout the Permian Basin who are supported by extensive inventory at the manufacturing facility.

EOR project comprises about 80 percent of area of Means field.

Andrews, Means field close to boom stage

James Roberts, veteran publisher of the Andrews County News, says he is amazed at the new developments in Andrews.

"The Means field project was a life saver for our community. When the bottom fell out in 1983, we hurt just a little at first, but hardly lost a step thereafter," said Roberts.

He attributes Andrews healthy economy to the fact that the Means project was on the drawing board and ready to go when the 1982 recession hit.

"Things were active around here when Andrews County went on waterflood in the fifties, but this (EOR) is different. It costs a lot more money."

Roberts said that sales tax in Andrews was up six percent over last year, and was a sure sign of a healthy economy.

Chamber Manager, Bill Shipman, noted another sign of a healthy economy in Andrews. "Our unemployment is down to about three percent. That means that everyone who wants to work is working."

Installation of a carbon dioxide tertiary recovery project in the means field may be helping account for some of the health in the Andrews economy, but the project should continue to contribute substantially to the economy long after its completed.

Production before injection stated November 28, 1983 was approximately 8,500 barrels per day. Production will almost double to 15,000 barrels before a production decline sets in.

"With the extra production and facilities we will probably add a few more employees," said Ingram.

But what few employees will be added by Exxon in the field does not compare to the extra jobs that will be created in the service industries of Andrews, which will keep the additional wells and water and gas and carbon dioxide systems repaired and maintained.

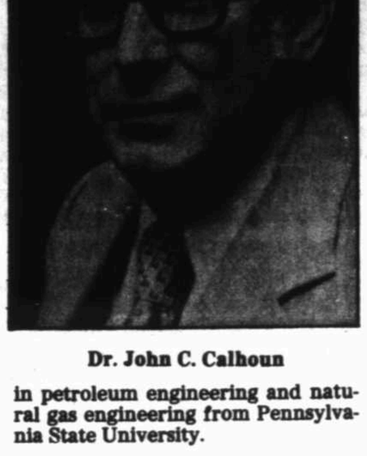

Calhoun to address petroleum engineers

From Staff Reports

The Permian Basin Section of the Society of Petroleum Engineers of AIME will meet Tuesday, May 15 at the Ranchland Hills Country Club. The guest speaker will be John C. Calhoun, Phd., SPE Distinguished Lecturer and recently retired from Texas A&M University.

Calhoun's topic will be "Petroleum Engineering Education: Where We've Been and Where We're Headed." He points out that the recent energy concerns have refocused attention on this discipline. Calhoun examines the relationship of petroleum engineering education to development of technological systems, and he discusses problems in graduate education, research programs and faculty availability.

Calhoun is the second SPE Distinguished Lecturer Emeritus, having lectured on a similar topic in 1961. He recently retired from Texas A&M University, where he had held key positions since 1955, most recently deputy chancellor for engineering. He is now a consultant. Calhoun received B.S., M.S. and Phd. degrees in petroleum engineering and natural gas engineering from Pennsylvania State University.

Long-distance rates to drop 6.1 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Long-distance telephone rates paid by most Americans could drop by 6.1 percent starting as soon as the end of May, the Federal Communications Commission has reported.

FCC officials estimated total savings to long-distance users at about $1.7 billion to $1.8 billion a year.

But the commission also made some decisions that could lead to higher payments for customers. They include:

—A fee of up to $6 per phone line paid by business customers to local telephone companies.

—A charge of 50 cents for every long-distance directory-assistance call over two per month.

The additional payments were estimated at about $1.3 billion per year.

FCC members were careful to note that that figure was less than the proposed savings.

Commissioner Mimi Weyforth Dawson, for example, said, "One would hope we wouldn't have a reduction that is so offset by the additional cost to consumers that it's mooted."

In addition to providing that assurance, FCC Chairman Mark Fowler and other officials said today's actions, taken together, would support the commission's overall goal of transferring more of the phone systems costs to the people who actually use it.

Fowler said most families seldom use long-distance directory assistance while credit bureaus and other businesses may use it eight hours a day at essentially no charge.

Today's FCC order stipulates that long-distance rates charged by the American Telephone and Telegraph Co. be reduced by an average of 6.1 percent across the board as soon as May 25, assuming prompt industry compliance.

If such compliance is not forthcoming, said Jack Smith, chief of the FCC's Common Carrier Bureau, "The commission will have to take other action."

BUSINESS NOTEBOOK

Number of charter businesses shows increase

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

New corporations chartered in Texas increased eight percent during the first quarter of 1984 as compared to 1983, the Secretary of State's Office reports.

A spokesman for the office's corporation division says the first three months of this year saw 11,688 new for-profit charters issued, compared to 10,812 for the first quarter of 1983.

Comptroller Bob Bullock reports that records at his agency, for such items as sales tax permits, indicate that despite the number of business failures, growth in the number of new businesses has resulted in a "balancing out."

• • •

State Board of Insurance issued reminders that the transition program to change calculation of worker's compensation insurance premium from the $300 per week payroll limit to use of unlimited payroll took effect May 1.

SBI noted that the new rates and rules changes apply to "new and renewal policies" at the "next normal anniversary rating on and after 12:01 a.m., May 1, 1984."

If policies are cancelled and rewritten prior to their anniversary rating date, the old rates and rules must be applied until the next anniversary date.

Some companies and agents have indicated they feel the provisions will result in some loss of premium to them.

At hearings on the change, it was indicated that the over all amount of premium collected would not change, but that the distribution of premium charges would vary.

• • •

State Banking Board members approved plans for Department of Banking examiners to conduct reviews of financial statements of organizers of proposed State banks with those organizers as part of the process of charter aproval.

The move is part of the board's attempt to assure greater equity investment in some applications, with members having expressed concern over some highly leveraged applications.

• • •

State Board of Insurance issued a call for credit life and credit accident and health insurance experience for calendar 1983, with that experience to be reported to SBI by May 31.

The last four months of 1983 will reflect a reduction in rates for single premium level term insurance (the most common coverage), SBI notes.

In the past, the board has held a hearing on rates following collection of such data, but no indication has been given as yet by the board on whether a hearing will be called this year.

Texas Aeronautics Commission reports commuter airlines in Texas are experiencing some improvement in their operations this year, with some reporting record boardings. TAC currently has eight carriers under its jurisdiction.

Harry Rogers, director of air carrier operations for TAC, reports those carriers are "coming back out of the effects of the recession," with a number looking at new equipment to expand their operations.

There also are "three strong prospects" for additonal commuter lines in Texas, he says.

Two helicopter services in the Dallas area have suspended operations, he notes, but a Houston helicopter service is operating successfully.

TAC executive director Clay Wilkins reports TAC is working with the Garland Indpendent School District on a pilot project for teaching basic science courses in kindergarten through the 12th grade with an "aviation theme."

Several companies in Texas have been asked to donate funds for the project, Wilkins says, with plans calling for implementation this fall, using a guidebook developed in Michigan but being "customized" for Texas.

Applications to the State Securities Board indicate a decline in sales of money market funds in Texas in recent months, while sales of other types of securities have remained near the same level.

For the first seven months of the fiscal year, total dollar volume of securities processed by the board was $19.8 billion, compared to $25.1 billion for the comparable prior-year period.

Of the 1984 total, $9.2 billion represents money market funds — with money markt funds accounting for $14.5 billion in the 1983 period.

Both periods showed applications of approximately $10.6 billion for other types of securities.

In March (latest month reported by the board), 314 permits for over $3.2 billion were issued — with money market funds accounting for $2.3 billion of that total.

Total number of applications processed during the first seven months of fiscal 1984 came to 2,386 — compared to 2,030 for fiscal 1983.

White to urge tax hikes on liquor, cars

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White is expected to propose a $1.3 billion tax bill that would increase taxes on alcoholic beverages, cigarettes and motor vehicles in order to finance teacher pay raises and state highway improvements, the Dallas Times Herald has reported.

White favors increasing the alcoholic beverage tax by 20 percent, the cigarette tax by a nickel-a-pack and a 5 percent hike in motor vehicle taxes, the newspaper reported today.

The governor already has said he intends to propose a 1-cent increase in the state's sales tax and a 5-cent increase in the state's gasoline tax.

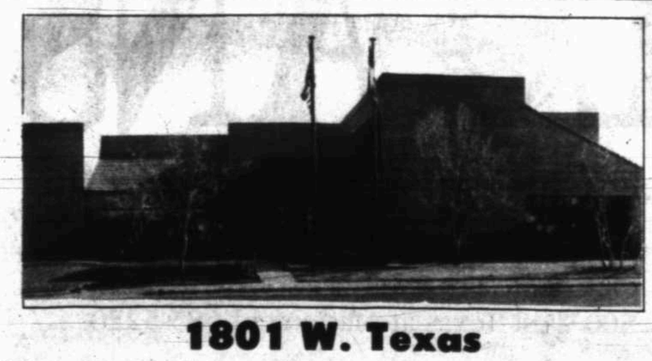

"At this time, that's the governor's preferred plan," said Jim Turner, White's legislative liaison. "We have been trying to build a consensus by talking to the lieutenant governor's office and the speaker's office."

Turner called White's proposal a "conservative tax bill" and said it could change significantly as the governor consults with legislators and business lobby representatives.

ClayDesta buys Spring Park

ClayDesta Corp., developers of ClayDesta Plaza, has purchased Spring Park, an office/warehouse business center in north Midland from its developers, Griffin and Burnett Inc.

The 10-acre site, located off North Big Spring Street, east of ClayDesta Plaza, has three buildings immediately available for tenant build-out including 1,100 square feet of office space, 22,000 square feet of office/warehouse space and 12,000 square feet of warehouse space.

The site, which is also zoned for retail establishments, offers ample room for expansion. In addition to the three existing buildings, ClayDesta can construct other buildings to suit individual needs.

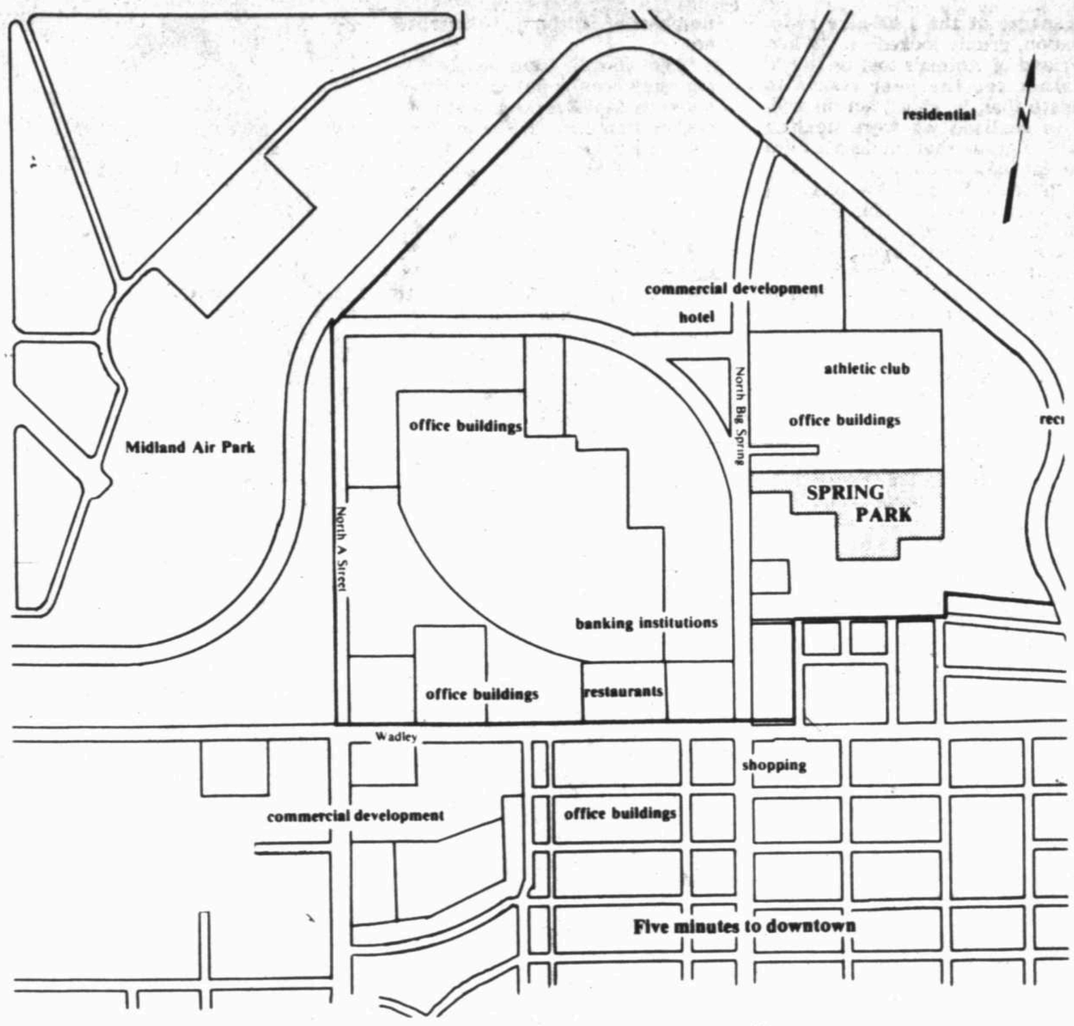

According to Bob Smith, executive vice president of ClayDesta Corp., the addition of Spring Park enables ClayDesta to offer a variety of leasable office space.

"With Spring Park we will become more versatile in our leasing operations. This development offers tenants the opportunity to office and warehouse all in one location," said Smith.

In addition to ClayDesta Plaza ad Spring Park, the corporation also coordinates leasing for the Gulf Building in downtown Midland.

Smith also said leasing at Spring Park offers many advantages including easy access to ClayDesta Plaza, Loop 250, Midland Air Park, competitive leasing rates, convenient banking, shopping, restaurants and free parking.

"The addition of Spring Park fills out our office portfolio and gives us a full compliment of facilities and rental rates. We will now be able to meet the diverse needs of midland companies," Smith said.

This graphic shows Spring Park center, located in the midst of the fastest growing, most intensive commercial development taking place in Midland.

Hewlett to introduce 'brief case' computer

By the Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — Hewlett-Packard Co. will introduce a portable computer today at press conferences here and at the company's Palo Alto, Calif., headquarters that analysts say is the first briefcase-size, full-power computer to sell at a reasonable price.

Although several competitors, including dominant International Business Machines Corp., are expected to enter this burgeoning market in the next few months, analysts say that Hewlett-Packard is scoring a market victory by announcing its offering — codenamed "Nomad" during development — first.

Analyst Paul A. Rickert, with Montgomery Securities in San Francisco, said "The reactions of people who have seen the computer range from enthusiastic to ecstatic." He said the machine weighs about 9 pounds, runs on batteries, and will sell for between $2,000 and $3,000.

The Nomad is packaged with a powerful 256 kilobytes of internal memory, twice the amount in a standard IBM Personal Computer — and unlike several portables now available, will include a large work screen measuring 80 characters wide by 16 rows deep.

A spokesman for Hewlett-Packard said that the company could not confirm or deny details about the equipment until after the official introduction.

One attractive feature of the Nomad, analysts note, is inclusion of a version of Lotus Development Corp.'s 1-2-3, a popular business software package. The machine will be compatible with IBM equipment, using the MS-DOS operating system, which is the basic set of instructions that operate a computer, and will be able to use most of the same software as IBM, analysts say.

A number of "briefcase" portables currently on the market — manufactured by Gavilan Computer Corp., Grid Systems Corp. and several Japanese companies — have not sold well for a variety of reasons, including software availability and high price — up to $6,000 for the Grid Compass.

One exception is Radio Shack's Tandy Model 100, which has been particularly successful in word-processing applications and sells for as little as $599.

IBM currently manufactures a 30-pound model, but is said to be working on four separate lap-sized projects and is expected to announce an entrant soon.

Success with the Nomad would give Hewlett-Packard's personal-computer line a much-needed boost. Although the company is a leader in the minicomputer market, its first personal computer, the HP 150, introduced last fall, has failed to capture a major share of market.

A.A. LaFountain, an analyst with Hambrecht & Quist in New York, said, "What (the Nomad) may do is underline the company's publicly stated commitment to becoming a factor in this market."

Comptroller closes loophole for 'non-bank banks'

By the Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Comptroller of the Currency, who regulates nationally chartered banks, Wednesday brought to a halt the rush by many major banks to open offices across the country despite laws prohibiting nearly all interstate branching.

But the comptroller, C. T. Conover, said that unless Congress passes major new banking legislation by the end of the year, he will lift his ban and approve the applications of major bank companies such as New York's Citicorp and Chase Manhattan to establish nationwide banking networks, as well as requests from smaller banks that want to establish a regional presence.

Banks and other financial companies have found a loophole in the federal law that prohibits a bank headquartered in one state from setting up a bank in another state, or companies that are not primarily banking organizations from owning a bank. Many banks have slipped through the loophole to open offices far from their headquarters, touching off a trend toward nationwide banking that could drastically change the industry's competitive structure.

Conover's decision affects the flood of applications for "loophole" banks — 230 from 29 institutions — that were filed after March 31.

The administration wants Congress to give the nation's banks broad new powers that it says they need to compete with other financial services companies that have steadily been encroaching on territory that once was solely the province of commercial banks.

There is sentiment in Congress to permanently ban loopole banks. The administration is willing to go along in return for legislation permitting bank companies to enter securities, insurance underwriting and real estate activities.

Battle rages over fate of starving young deer

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

LIPSWICH, Mass. — The young deer had crawled out of the wind into a thicket of bayberry to die. A fox, coming upon the fresh carcass, had burrowed into its belly, devoured the spleen, liver and kidneys, and scattered the bowels on the damp earth.

The deer was two days dead, its black eyes turned cloudy, when James McDonough found it as he tried to flush a live deer out of the thicket for a news photographer. McDonough was surprised. He did not expect deer at Crane Memorial Reservation to start starving to death for a few more weeks.

The 67-year-old biologist squatted and ran his freckled hands over the dead animal's coat. It was thick as a dowager's fur coat, but there was no flesh between the coat and the animal's spine and ribs.

With the confident air of a man who has done 8,000 deer autopsies in his 35 years with the Massachusetts Division of Fish and Game, McDonough stripped loose flesh from the deer's right rear femur and whacked it against an aspen. The bone cracked open, spilling bone marrow that was gelatinous and deep red instead of firm and pink.

He split the animal's rumen, the first compartment in its stomach, and took a pinch of the green mash inside. He fingered it in his palm. The deer, he said, had been eating pine needles — a "stuffing food" deer use to fill their stomachs when they can find no nutritious food.

McDonough feels a strong kinshp with Irish ancestors who knew hunger and even starvation. "Starvation," he said, "is a terrible death."

As McDonough performed his field autopsy, Wayne N. Mitton, manager of the 1,400-acre reservation, grimly looked on. "When Friend of Animals told us they'd rather see the deer starve to death than be shot," Mitton said, "we realized we were dealing with a group that thinks a lot different than we do."

Priscilla Feral, New England director of Friends for Animals in Westport, Conn., proudly claims credit for forcing the cancellation of a November hunt intended to thin out the white-tailed deer herd and avert starvation.

"Hunting is an anachronism, an unjustified cruelty," she said. "I am opposed to it on moral grounds."

Winter starvation, on the other hand, is nature's way of limiting the deer population, Feral said. "The ones that starve aren't supposed to survive. I don't think we can interfere with that.... We've got to accept death as much as we accept life. There isn't any cruelty involved. It's a natural process.

"Wild animals should not be controlled by man because we do a poor job at it," she said. "We owe them freedom."

Feral, 34, has been working against hunting and for the protection of wildlife for 10 years. She adopted Feral as her professional name because it means wild or savage.

Wild and savage are not terms that can be applied to Crane Memorial Reservation. A half-million people a year visit its beach. Behind the beach, human prints crisscross with deer prints on sand dunes sculpted by the wind.

Stands of dwarfed white pine, pitch pine, cherry, aspen and gray birch, with an undergrowth of bayberry and other brush, grow in sheltered depressions in the dunes. There, deer find shelter and search for food.

On an adjacent hill overlooking the Atlantic looms a grand brick mansion. It is the former summer home of the Crane family, which made a fortune in plumbing fixtures and later donated the property for public recreation. Deer browse on the ornamental shrubs on the lawn and shelter in a surrounding narrow band of woods.

From a helicopter, McDonough counted 165 deer on the beach, the dunes and the mansion grounds. He estimated the herd at 200, and said the area could properly support fewer than 50. It was McDonough's work, much of it done on his own time, that convinced the Trustee of Reservations, a private, non-profit group which manages the property, that it should have a hunt.

Seventy-five deer were to be shot. Participating hunters had to prove five years' experience and pass a shooting competency test.

Two days before the hunt, a protest organized by Friends of Animals drew about 100 people to the Ipswich Green. Someone passed out the home telephone numbers of Mitton and the trustees.

"I got 10 calls from people saying they would put themselves between the deer and the hunters," Mitton said. "Some of them were serious enough to do it." The trustees, he said, did not want anyone put in danger and did not want mass arrests. Abruptly, the hunt was cancelled.

After the cancellation, Mitton said, people concerned about the deer began showing up with beet greens, cabbages, squash. One man, he said, brought a case of canned green beans and began opening them in the parking lot.

Eight to 10 people a day dropped off food, Mitton said, until he was able — with handbills and through the newspapers — to convince people that the deer would die if they ate such food.

The deer, hungry enough to eat anything, did devout the truckload of cabbage someone dumped on the reservation, Mitton said. Deer diarrhea surrounded the site.

Deer peers out from bush.

Wayne M. Mitton, left, manager of the Crane Memorial Reservation, and James McDonough, a Massachusetts state biologist, examine a pine after all the growth the deer could reach has been stripped. Hungry deer will stuff on pine needles when no better food is available.

James McDonough, a Massachusetts state biologist, examines a young deer that starved to death. Friends for Animals claims credit for forcing cancellation of a hunt to decrease the deer overpopulation and would rather see the animals stave. "Starvation is a terrible death," McDonough said.

Change coming slowly to small town banking

INDUSTRY, Texas (AP) — At noon each working day, Arno W. Krebs or another banker locks the doors of the Industry State Bank for the lunch hour. The bank reopens at 1 p.m. and closes again at 3 p.m.

Behind the teller counter, checking transactions are posted manually to customer accounts and consolidated each day into the company's hefty Boston Ledger, where the ink of a blue ball point pen records the daily balance of assets and liabilities.

In many ways, Industry State and dozens of other rural banks in Texas have escaped the fast-paced change that has swept through the financial industry. In towns such as Industry, bankers still keep bankers' hours and customers have no checking account numbers — only their names.

Most of the banks, nestled in old, stable communities, face no direct competition and serve customers who put a premium on continuity.

Clinton Blezinger opened his first account at Industry State when he was about 12 years old. He obtained his first home mortgage loan at the bank. His general store across the road does business with the bank where his son now works.

Industry State has had its brushes with change. The bank was all ready to offer interest-bearing checking accounts a couple of years ago, but called it off.

"Our customers were not interested in NOW accounts because at certain stages they would have to pay service charges," said Krebs, the bank's president.

As one might expect, lending practices are generally conservative at the state's smaller rural banks. While an aggressive Houston bank might have more than 80 percent of its deposits in loans, 35-45 percent is more the rule in the rolling hills northwest of Houston and the flatlands to the southwest.

The smaller banks, which have fewer lending opportunities than their metropolitan counterparts, often invest a large amount of their funds in federal and municipal securities, which earn less but have a lower risk.

The average cost of funds for a downtown Houston bank may run about 10 percent, compared to less than 5 percent at some rural organizations that may not pay interest on checking accounts and only recently have begun paying interest on savings.

In Needville, where telephone calls still cost a dime and haircuts at David's Barber Shop run $5.50, the opening of Gulf Coast Savings and Fort Bend Federal branches about six years ago prompted the First State Bank to begin offering interest-bearing passbook savings accounts for the first time, said Walter Boche, chairman of the bank.

But customers still seem to have relatively little enthusiasm for the interest-bearing accounts. Of the bank's $6.8 million in deposits, $5.8 million remains in non-interest bearing checking accounts.

For the most part, rural bankers are doing business with people they've known for years.

"When a customer walks into the bank, I have been here long enough that I pretty well know whether we're going to make him a loan," Krebs said.

Conservative loan practices breed low loan losses. Over the last 30 years, Industry State has had an average of less than $2,000 in loan losses each year, Krebs said.

For customers, the advantages of small-town banking go beyond down-home service and annual calendars.

Service charges on checking accounts are the exception rather than the rule. Some bankers who are considering adding service charges said they still haven't figured out how to break it to their customers.

On the lending side, interest rates tend to be less volatile in the rural banks.

"If you make one loan at 16 percent, another next week at 17 percent and then go back to 16 percent, somebody is going to get mad at you," Krebs said.

Of the 1,600 banks in Texas, about 45 percent are located outside metropolitan areas. Many of the state's older banks, including Industry State, were chartered in the "free banking period" of 1905-1913 in which all a person needed to open a bank was $25,000 in capital.

"Charters were granted with no regard for need or for the number of banking institutions already serving the area," one former state banking commissioner said. "And as history later revealed, many new banks were either undercapitalized or located in communities without sufficient business to support a bank."

Many of the banks were family businesses and a few remain. In Needville, nothing is as thick as the Kunkels in the First State Bank.

G.A. Kunkel, 96, started with the bank during the Great Depression and spent his first nine years there living in an apartment above the lobby. His family has owned the institution since the 1950s.

His son, Oliver, followed him as president. His grandson, Oliver Jr., is now president.

Are U.S. facilities just Scout camps?

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Democratic congressman who toured U.S.-built facilities in Central America returned last week with the message: "The United States has amassed a military force in Central America that is poised for war."

But a Republican lawmaker who made the same trip came away with a different conclusion, saying, "I have seen much better facilities at Scout camps."

The contrasting assessments of Rep. Bill Alexander, D-Ark., and Rep. Ralph Regula, R-Ohio, demonstrate the confusion about American objectives that has arisen during an ever-expanding U.S. military build-up in the region.

At the end of April 1983, when President Reagan appealed to Congress to approve his package of economic and military aid to Central America, about 90 American military men were in El Salvador and neighboring Honduras.

Now, with Reagan preparing once again to speak to Congress to seek support for increasing aid to Central America, there are about 90 U.S. military men in El Salvador, another 2,500 in Honduras along with a network of airstrips and radar stations and heavier-than-ever CIA involvement with the growing force of "contras" fighting the leftist Sandinista government of Nicaragua.

IN THE current Honduran exercises, "Grenadero I" — which have been underway for a month — about 1,000 U.S. troops are joining Honduran forces.

The exercises have been portrayed by the Pentagon as simply normal peacetime drills. But a cable from the U.S. embassy in Honduras described the previous 7-month-long maneuvers, "Big Pine 2," as "what may have been the longest exercise in U.S. military history."

In his April 1983 appeal to a joint congressional session, Reagan said, "There is no thought of sending American combat troops to Central America; they are not needed — indeed they have not been requested there. All our neighbors ask of us is assistance in training and arms to protect themselves while they build a better, freer life."

But American combat troops have been sent to Honduras, a staunch U.S. ally that sits between El Salvador and Nicaragua. While those troops have not been engaged in fighting in either nation, they have edged closer to the borders — and to guerrilla wars in both nations.

LAST WEEK, after visiting Honduras, Alexander said, "The United States has amassed a military force in Central America that is poised for war, and we have allowed no equal force for peace."

But Regula, who accompanied Alexander on the same trip, said it would take "a very substantial amount of both money and effort" to make the installations built by the U.S. military fit for war. "I have seen much better facilities at Scout camps," he said.

Here is a country-by-country review of U.S. military presence in Central America:

GUATEMALA

Five American military people are stationed with this U.S. ally, which is governed by a dictatorship. Two are in the defense attache's office in the U.S. embassy and the other three are members of a U.S. Military Group. The United States cut off military aid to the Guatemalan government in 1977 in a dispute over human rights conditions. While the United States supplies no direct military aid, the Reagan administration wants to sell spare parts for U.S. helicopters previously supplied to Guatemala.

HONDURAS

There are now about 2,500 U.S. military personnel in this U.S.-allied country, including 800 Army engineers from Ft. Lewis, Wash., who are working to prepare a pair of dirt airstrips at Cucuyagua and Jamastran for the Grenadero I exercises. Another 1,000 U.S. troops will take part in Grenadero I, and although no future exercises have been announced, the fact that Grenadero has a numeral attached to it indicates later maneuvers might be under consideration.

The other 1,700 U.S. military personnel include about 100 Marines who staff a mobile radar station at Tiger Island on the Gulf of Fonseca, along with about 180 U.S. trainers who are teaching the Honduran military. Of those trainers, 20 are based in the Honduran capital of Tegucigalpa and the other 160 are at the regional military training center near Trujillo on the Caribbean coastline.

The remaining U.S. personnel also include 300 members of the Army's secret 224th military intelligence battalion, stationed at a second radar facility at Palmerola. They receive information from 11 OV-1 Mohawk reconnaissance planes which fly regular missions from Palmerola over neighboring El Salvador. The information is turned over to the Honduran military and the Salvadoran government.

EL SALVADOR

The Reagan administration is seeking ever-increasing amounts of aid to help the U.S.-backed government which has been fighting rebel groups, which the United States says are supplied and supported by Nicaragua and Cuba.

There are 50 U.S. trainers working with the Salvadoran military, five below the Pentagon's self-imposed limit of 55 trainers. In addition, there are another 12 men in the U.S. Military Group which provides various aid, and four military personnel attached to the U.S. embassy in San Salvador. There is also a medical team of 23 people, bringing the current total to 89 U.S. military people.

NICARAGUA

The United States does not support the leftist Sandinista government, which came to power after the 1979 overthrow of the dictator Anastazio Somoza. The Reagan administration has accused Nicaragua of supplying aid and arms to rebels in El Salvador.

In December, 1981, President Reagan approved a secret order directing the CIA to aid exiles opposed to the Sandinista government, reportedly for the purpose of halting weapons ships to Salvadoran rebels.

The "contra" forces, originally envisioned as a paramilitary group of about 500 people, have grown to a total of about 15,000. There are two chief "contra" groups. One, operating into northern Nicaragua from bases in Honduras, is the Nicaraguan Democratic Force, known by its Spanish inititals FDN. The second, operating into southern Nicaragua from Costa Rica, is the Revolutionary Democratic Alliance, known as ARDE.

Last month, it was revealed that the CIA had mined the Nicaraguan ports of Corinto, Puerto Sandino and El Bluff. The acoustic mines — which exploded when touched off the sound of a ship passing nearby — were placed by CIA-hired Latin mercenaries operating in speedboats dropped from a CIA "mother ship" which remained outside the 12-mile territorial limit.

The CIA was also behind the Oct. 10 raid on Corinto, according to intelligence sources, in which attackers in speedboats shelled oil storage tanks.

COSTA RICA

There are no U.S. military trainers in Costa Rica, which has no army. However, three people are in a U.S. Military Group team and the U.S. ambassador last week announced that some military equipment will be sent to Costa Rica after the nation's tiny defense forces clashed with Nicaraguan soldiers along the border.

U.S. officials say they will supply jeeps, trucks, light weapons and ammunition, some patrol boats, and two helicopters.

PANAMA

There has long been a substantial U.S. military presence to guard the Panama Canal. The Pentagon's Southern Command (Southcom), headed by Gen. Paul Gorman, has responsibility for all U.S. military forces in Central America.

The total of U.S. military in Panama is about 9,000, including the Army base near the Canal and Howard Air Force Base. There are 1,750 Army troops in three battalions, including two infantry battalions and a brigade of Special Forces (Green Beret) troops.

Cameraman publishes view of Vietnam War

AUSTIN (AP) — James McJunkin's first job in Austin was doing photographic portfolios for strip-tease dancers.

It was 1974 and "Austin was then a major stop on the strip-tease circuit," recalled McJunkin who still uses the laughing face of one stripper as a background for his business cards. "Later, it all died out. I don't know why."

McJunkin, who grew up mainly in Colorado in an Air Force family, was then a few years out of the U.S. Army after a year in Vietnam as a Signal Corps photographer. He wanted an artistic career but, because of the war's extreme unpopularity, never thought to trade on his hundreds of Vietnam negatives.

"It was like being angry and somebody was trying to cheer me up while I was still wanting to be angry," McJunkin, now 35, said of his readjustment to life as a civilian.

"By 1981, I'd kind of forgotten about the war, really. But I was trying to get a show together and I heard of one for Vietnam veteran artists. It started bringing back memories. I got real excited and printed my stuff all up."

The roundabout result was "Visions of Vietnam," a black and white photographic view of the war published last year by President Press, a military book publisher in Novato, Calif.

The thick, $25 book is coffee-table sized and is unusual in the growing literature of the Vietnam War because it is almost completely apolitical — a feature McJunkin said has angered some reviewers.

"It's had mostly favorable reviews, and the unfavorable ones usually have political overtones," said McJunkin who now works as a cable-splicer for Southwestern Bell Telephone Co.

"It's been criticized for a lack of blood," said McJunkin's co-author, Max Crace. "But we wanted to do something that veterans would remember."

Crace, 28, is a former drummer with Austin's Van Wilks rock 'n' roll band. Although he did not serve in Vietnam, he, too, grew up in an Air Force family and began drawing military subjects for the Air Force Art Programs. Using his collections of military insignia and uniforms as a check for accuracy, Crace provided line drawings of soldiers and weapons for the book from photographs and stories supplied by Austin Vietnam veterans.

Divided into three sections — "The War Machine," "The Civilians" and "The Grunts" — the book records the peculiarities of weapons and uniforms, tactics and terrain.

Although tanks and helicopters figure in its pages, the book concentrates on the faces and experiences of unidentified members of the 25th Infantry Division, the 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment, the 1st Cavalry Division and Special Forces units and the civilian residents of the II, III and IV Corps military districts of South Vietnam.

James McJunkin poses during an interview at his home in Austin, Texas, recently. McJunkin has published "Visions of Vietnam," a black and white photgraphic view of the war.

McJunkin's Signal Corps job — which took him into one ambush and "a few short firefights" — was, as he put it, "to put the Army in a good light." Most of the photographs chosen for the book are neutral on the point but the lack of any overt "message" or attempt to portray the war as right or wrong gives a haunting power to the boyish faces of the soldiers and the weary expressions of the civilians — from rice farmers and street urchins to hoodlums like the famous Saigon "cowboys."

The book led McJunkin into participation in the Time-Life series, "The Vietnam Experience" and the Vietnam Veterans Arts Project, recently displayed at the LBJ Library and now on an East Coast tour. But McJunkin, who was drafted for the Vietnam war, says finding new uses for his old war pictures was not a personal catharsis.

He never pulled a trigger in Vietnam, he said, only pushed a shutter button.

"The camera was like a cloak for me," he said, demonstrating by forming a frame with his fingers around his eyes. "But sometimes, I wondered to myself, 'Why am I doing this?' "

Now, he is working on a new book about reflections in modern glass office buildings and has recently become interested in underwater photography, mainly in the Caribbean. He and Crace also have collaborated on a record album cover for Golden Earring, a Dutch rock band.

And 'Visions of Vietnam,' partly the unplanned result of Army public relations and the memories of Austin Vietnam veterans, is slowly making its own way home.

"A friend of mine," McJunkin said, "told me he recently saw a copy in a bookstore in Bangkok, Thailand."

Chinese 'cleaning up' library, bookstores

PEKING (AP) — In the view of China's leadership, Kafka's "The Trial" and Joseph Heller's comic "Catch 22" reflect the absurdities and abuses of the capitalist system, and therefore are good reading for Chinese comrades.

But Western literature in the stream-of-consciousness style and the existentialism of Jean-Paul Sartre are struck off the list for putting too much stress on the individual.

That's part of the literary fallout six months after the Communist Party launched a breath-catching campaign against "jingshen wuran" — spiritual pollution from the West.

Aimed primarily at the obscene and sexually explicit, the cleanup reverberated in libraries and bookstores where many contemporary Western works suddenly disappeared from shelves.

In January, Culture Minister Zhu Muzhi wrote a self-criticism admitting "weak and lax" leadership in failing to halt the spread of the bourgeois cultural pollutants.

As the shutters came down after five years of post-Mao literary expansion, more than 100 detective novels published in the past two years were withdrawn. They had become the vogue and sold more than 30 million copies.

The clampdown alarmed intellectuals, but hasn't approached the xenophobia of Chairman Mao Tse-tung's Great Proletarian Cultural Revolution in 1966, in which Hamlet was condemned as a "poisonous weed."

Some of the "in" authors untouched by the latest purge include Shakespeare and Charles Dickens, whose works have sold more than a million copies; George Bernard Shaw, Romain Rolland, O. Henry, Graham Greene and Alex Haley with "Roots."

But the authorities have fallen back on a Soviet model for the most recommended reading: books should be optimistic and realistically portray social life and customs.

As the People's Daily, official newspaper of the Communist Party, put it: "Western modernist schools of literature lack a concrete approach to life."

The journal Red Flag updated this judgment in its latest issue, singling out stream-of-consciousness as the worst Western influence on Chinese writers.

It "cuts the inherent ties between literature and social life," the magazine said, stressing that art should reflect communist ideology and portray the pioneers of modernization.

Some 20th-century imports can and should be analyzed, it added, citing "Catch 22" and "The Trial."

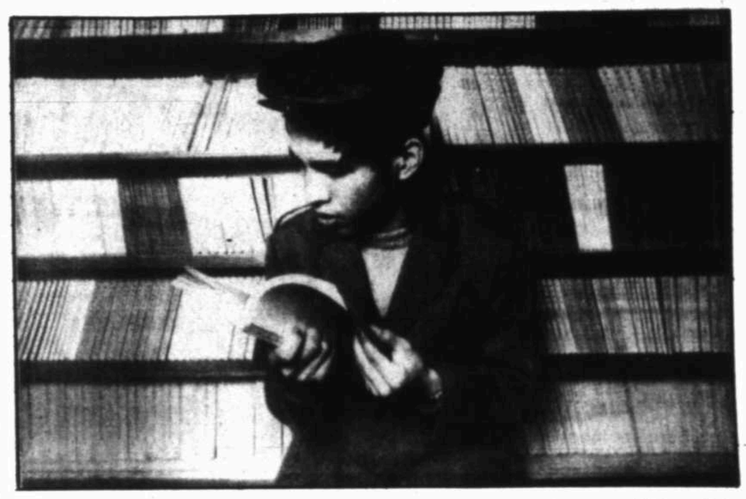

They not only "lay bare the conflicts in life under capitalism and some aspects of the insurmountable mental crises in Western society but powerfully thrash the social abuses of the capitalist world," the journal said.

In a January speech, Politburo member Hu Qiaomu, close to Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping, grudgingly approved other Western artists he termed "sympathizers of socialism."

Anatole France, Thomas Mann, Bertolt Brecht, Theodore Dreiser, Charlie Chaplin, Pablo Picasso, Pablo Neruda and Rabindranath Tagore were among those named.

But Sartre, the French leftist philosopher, has been severely abused by the party for the sin of individualism. The Chinese party lays emphasis on sacrificing oneself for the group.

The foreign literature publishing house, replying in writing to questions from The Associated Press, said: "Sartre was a friend of China but even between friends there are often differences. We uphold Marxism and Sartre upheld existentialism and the alienation of the individual."

AP Laserphoto

Chinese authorities make sure avid readers such as this bookstore browser buy only "approved authors.

The publishers claimed "the only reason his books are unavailable is that they have been sold out."

"We publish those works that we think contribute to the progress of world culture and have a good influence on China's construction of a spiritual civilization. Those works that depict violence, sex and certain anti-communist works are definitely not published."

Ironically, the argument over what students and party cadres should read coincides with a boom in China's book trade.

The state publication bureau says book sales reached a record $1 billion last year, with 36,000 new titles and 5.8 billion copies of books and pictures printed.

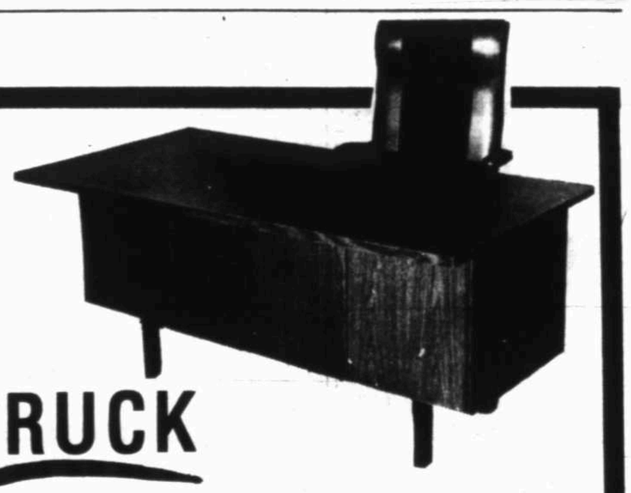

The nation's best seller was the "Selected Works of Deng Xiaoping," which sold 54 million copies.

Choctaw Tile and Marble means quality products and service

Choctaw Tile and Marble has been busy showing Midlanders that quality craftmanship is still available to them. Choctaw has complete over 2100 jobs since they opened their Midland-based company in January 1975.

They get this many jobs because their work always meets or exceedsthe Tile Counsel of Americ a's (TCA) specification. The TCA sets the industry's standards for tile installation.

Choctaw believes in keeping with the latest technics. They do this by attending the Southern Tile, Terrazzo and Marble Contractors Association Convention. George "T" Barr, President, attended the April 25-28, 1984 convention in Cincinnati, Ohio. Choctaw also visits the tile manufacturing plants to learn first hand the characteristics of a particular tile. Within the last year, Oscar Barr toured the Aztec Tile plant in San Antonio and the D'Hanis plant in D'Hanis, Texas.

You may be wondering what makes Choctaw different? Oscar Barr, Vice President of Choctaw, feels strongly that their business concept is more conducive to providing the services and products demanded by the public. They do not subcontract or piece their work to others. All of their tile and marble work is done by their employees, which means consistant quality each and every day. Choctaw tilesetters' experience ranges from 9 to 35 years -- over 100 combined years of experienceto better serve their customers.

An example of the confidence they have in their work is the fact that they give a five year waranty on their shower installation and/or repair.

Choctaw is always ready to show customers their cultured marble department. Harold Boze, manager, hs over 14 years experience pouring culture marble. He uses the best materials available and he requires that each stage of work be inspected by himself, George or Oscar. This in-house control assures that Choctaw reputation for quality is maintained.

Choctaw has the only in-house facilities for cutting and polishing natural marble in the Mid land/Odessa area. they can make table tops, fireplaces, mantles, and even replolish old marble tops. They are about to finish facricating and installating natural marble in a house for a local builder. Their next major project is the Cowboy Art Museum in Kerrville, Texas.

While discussing tile and marble, George "T" Barr brought up a very important point. If it is necessary to watch your budget, remember - the installation is one of your most important considerations. If laid incorrectly, the most expensive tile or marble will, in time, crack, chip or break loose. But if installed properly, a less expensive tile or marble will look beautiful for years.

Many people do not realize that Choctaw is also a ceramic tile and marble distributor. The showroom at Choctaw is a unique experience. The floor has been divided into sections and over 40 kinds of floor tile have been installed. Within the showroom, Choctaw has over 700 floor tile and 100 marble samples. Choctaw keeps on hand several of the more popular natural marble slabs and will assist you in selecting the one that best enhances your decor. Also, they have 18 cultured marble colors as well as a large cultured marble tub with a 6-jet Hydro Unit System, a medium and a small-tub and vanity tops.

Choctaw Tile and Marble is having a 10% discount from posted prices on all tiles in their showroom through June. Present this article with your next order of tile and receive an additional 5% discount. Their showroom is located at 2550 Flynt. See their ad shown below or call them at 685-3071.

Choctaw Tile and Marble, 2550 Flynt, offers quality craftmanship and products to serve you better. They are extending a 10% discount on posted tile or marble purchased through June. If you bring this article with you, you will recieve an additional 5% off your purchase. Stop by or call 685-3071.

Greg and Walter also do custom exhaust systems as well as complete brake work.

For those of you who think that the name Greg Mayo sounds familiar, it might be because Greg worked for Midas for six years. So you can see that he is very qualified to redo you exhaust system or just replace a tailpipe.

If you have an R.V. or a foreign car that needs a new muffler, once again Greg and Walter would be glad to help you out. They are knowledgable in these specialized areas as well as domestic cars. They also install trailer hitches.

Bob Hawk offers monthly parking lot maintenance

With today's economy it is neccessary to use quality materials, have professionals install them and maintain them properly to get your money's worth.

Bob Hawk and Associates are blacktop specialists, having been in the business since 1946. They do asphalt paving, sealing, trench patching, and drivway and parking lot construction, repair and maintenance. The most modern equipment is utilized to give you the fastest and most dependable service available.

Bob Hawk and Associates is home owned and operated, with each and every job given the time and attention to assure the absolute best of every time. With 37 years experience working with asphalt, Bob Hawk knows the properties and tendencies of asphalt, as well as the importance of proper maintenance and repair.

Along these lines, Bob Hawk has initiated a new service, parking lot maintenance. They will bring the lot back up to top shape. Once it is in excellent condition, Bob Hawk and Associates will maintain the lot to keep it that way. Once the three year contract is signed, they will, for a monthly fee, maintain your lot.

By having Bob Hawk maintain your lot you won't have the worries of trying to get someone out to repair that pothole that is getting bigger by the day, someone else out to reseal the asphalt and still someone else to stripe the lot. Bob Hawk does all of these automatically when they need to be done. Besides being more convenient for you it is also a good idea from a bookkeeping point of view. Once a contract is signed you will pay the same monthly fee for the next three years- putting an end to unexpected bills.

Weather and time can destroy asphalt if it is not cared for properly. For longevity it is important to keep the asphalt sealed with a impervious coal tar emulsion. This emulsion should protect against deterioration from gasoline, oil, jet fuels and other hydro-carbons that tend to deteriorate asphalt.

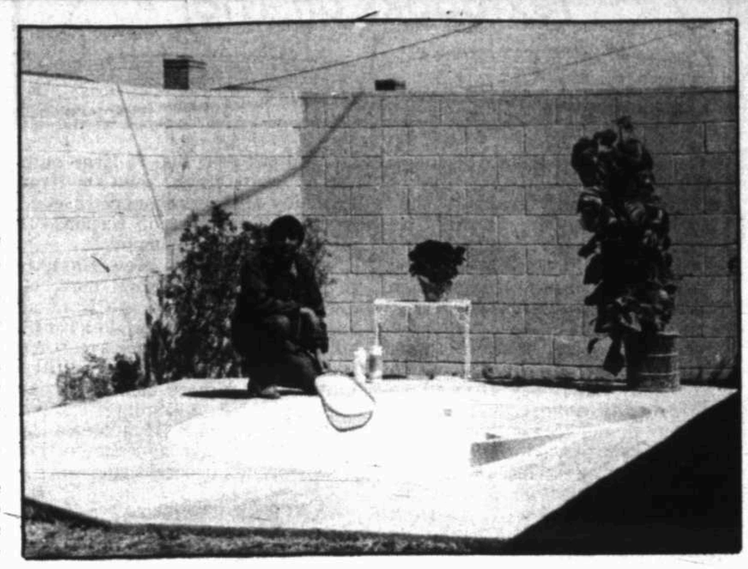

Bob Hawk and Associates has the equipment and the know how to save you money on expensive repairs or replacement of your parking lot investment to say nothing of the the enriched look and the ease of cleaning your parking lot.

Unlike city streets, traffic on a parking lot runs in definate patterns. Cars do not constantly change lanes in a parking lot.They follow the same paths and consequently only a very small area gets the traffic that is so vitally needed to keep the asphalt surface sealed. This is one reason why proper sealing and maintenance is so necessary. Bob Hawk and Associates have the professional crack routing and sealing equipment to properly repair and seal cracks in asphalt pavement. This is also the most important procedure to prevent moisture from entering the pavement and rendering the susbase unstable, which in turn causes more cracks and "alligatoring". They also furnish and install precast concrete bumpers and stripe parking lot stalls.

"Give us a call- We do it all" is their motto. If you are in need of these or are interested in the maintenance contact, give Bob Hawk a call at 694-6572.

Bob Hawk and Bob Hawk Jr., of Bob Hawk and Associates, are shown here with a paving machine. They are waiting to help you with your asphalt needs. They also now offer parking lot maintenance to keep your lot in top shape. Give Bob or Bob Jr. a call at 694-6572 today.

Do dull textbooks make duller students?

EDITOR'S NOTE: Report after report has criticized American education: the school day is too short, teachers are poorly trained, curricula are too easy. Now educators are drawing aim on another target to help explain what's gone wrong in U.S. schools: the textbook. "Textbooks on Trial," three stories by AP Education Writer Lee Mitgang examinehow "basal readers" can discourage youngsters from reading.

By LEE MITGANG
AP Education Writer

NEW YORK — In 1914, Ginn & Co. published a fourth grade primer, "The Young and Field Literary Reader." The print was small, the pictures few and selections included classics by Emerson, Coleridge, Lewis Carroll and Victor Hugo.

By the 1950s, the use of color in children's texts was big, the print was bigger and classic readings had virtually disappeared. Youngsters got their first exposure to literature through the stilted, inane language contained in what educators call "basal readers."

Look, look! Run, run!

Dick, Jane, Sally, Spot and Puff had arrived.

NOW, AFTER A YEAR of reports decrying the "rising tide of mediocrity" in U.S. education, the secretary of education and other leaders say "dumbed-down" children's textbooks are another piece in the puzzle in what went wrong in the American classroom.

Textbooks, these critics charge, have become easier — and duller.

"The nationwide effort to attain reform and renewal of our schools will fall flat and fail if we do not improve our textbooks," Education Secretary T.H. Bell told a gathering of school administrators in Las Vegas recently.

"Basal readers are not part of the solution. They're part of the problem," said professor Tom Cloer, director of reading at Furman University's department of education.

The calls for education reform this past year led some state officials, most notably in California and Florida, to campaign for tougher texts.

LAST MONTH, education officials from 22 states met in Florida to try to demand — as a group — tougher children's texts from publishers. But a multistate coalition proposal faltered, an indication of how formidable is the task of changing the tool that teachers rely on for the majority of their lesson time.

William Honig, head of California's Department of Public Instruction and a vocal critic of "dumbed-down texts," said reading texts up to third grade level were effective in teaching basic skills. But from fourth grade on, he said, texts do a poor job of developing reading and thinking skills, mainly because the stories neither plumb the real world nor teach comprehension.

"I made this pitch to publishers last November," Honig said, "and they said, 'our editors would love to write that kind of text. But will they sell?'

"Well, I told them they're the only kind of books they'll sell in California from now on if we have our way."

"Seventy-five to 85 percent of what happens in the classroom is driven by a textbook," said Florida state Sen. Jack Gordon, who organized the aborted multistate coalition effort. "So here we are, pushing for excellence, and we're being held up by textbooks."

BUT PUBLISHING spokesmen like Don Eklund, vice president of the school division of the Association of American Publishers, reject the criticism.

Eklund said publishers dropped most of the dreariest Dick-and-Jane-type stories in the 1970s. The good books are there, he added, if schools really want them.

"There are plenty available; they just aren't buying them," he asserted, while also saying it would be a "disaster" if schools switched wholesale to tougher texts when teachers and students are unprepared.

Some publishers, notably Lippincott, Houghton Mifflin and Open Court, have already turned to higher-quality children's literature and more demanding vocabulary.

The current best-selling Houghton Mifflin Reading Series, for grades kindergarten through 8, contains poetry and selections from such children's classics as "Charlotte's Web" by E.B. White.

"We have a heavier vocabulary load in our current series than we did in 1970 and 1966," said Richard Gladstone, Houghton Mifflin executive vice president and publisher.

BUT CRITICS INSIST most early readers offer only bland writing and truncated selections that may show children the mechanics of reading, but not the pleasures.

Ernest L. Boyer, former head of the U.S. Office of Education and current president of the Carnegie Foundation, recently wrote: "Textbooks seldom communicate to students the richness and excitement of original works. When students are privileged to read the primary sources, they meet authors personally and discover events first hand."

President Reagan's National Commission on Excellence in Education charged last year that "a large number of texts have been 'written down' by their publishers to ever-lower reading levels in response to perceived market demands."

Said Jean Padilla, New Mexico's director of instructional material and past president of the National Association of State Textbook Administrators: "There are some areas where textbooks have improved, like more balanced treatment of women and minorities. But reading levels have been constantly pushed downward, and they're not as well written in some cases."

ANOTHER REPEATED criticism of publishers is that they are slow to change and tend to choose the safest course, offending the fewest.

"Publishers won't take any chances. They don't want to rock the boat. If enough people want something, give it to them," said P. Kenneth Komoski, executive director of the Educational Products Information Exchange, a non-profit consumer group that evaluates educational materials.

"What we say to the schools is, tell us what you want," countered Eklund.

It's not always that simple, critics say. For one thing, individual schools and teachers are often remote from textbook selection, especially in the 24 states where state committees choose textbooks.

Teachers have only "token representation" on selection committees, said Sharon Robinson, director of instruction and professional development of the National Education Association, the 1.7 million-member teacher union.

And because states with centralized selection usually work out to be a publisher's biggest customers, committees from larger states like Texas often have enormous influence on what textbooks will be read.

Publishers are not entirely to blame for what's happened to textbooks. Vast changes in America's teaching methods have had their effects.

ONE EXAMPLE IS the belief held by some educators that children should not be made to feel like failures.

"Educators say they want children to succeed, so publishers water down the textbooks," Ms. Padilla asserted.

The teaching profession changed, too. For years, teaching fell in prestige and preparation until it became widely assumed that teachers needed to be led by the nose through lessons. Since the 1950s, textbooks have been accompanied by increasingly detailed teacher manuals, some of which give virtual word-for-word scripts on how to conduct each lesson.

"The feedback from the field is this: you've got to have teachers' editions that say, 'Here's how to teach this, step 1, step 2, step 3,'" said Eklund.

Some teachers chafe at such scripts.

"I think basal readers are excellent for beginning teachers. But most teachers are creative enough they can figure out their own lesson plans," said Kathy Dotson, a third-grade teacher at Tecumseh-Harrison School in Vincennes, Ind.

Tecumseh-Harrison is one of relatively few schools that have decided that basal readers are overused, especially in school districts where traditional texts have stymied minority youngsters, or children on Indian reservations or isolated geographic areas where unusual dialects are spoken.

"The trouble with basal readers is they assume there's a match between the language in the reader and the language of the student," said Roach Van Allen, a retired University of Arizona education professor.

About 25 years ago, Van Allen invented the so-called "language experience method" of teaching, in which the teacher constructs reading lessons using the child's own language and experiences.

ANOTHER ALTERNATIVE showed up five years ago in Grove City, Ohio, where the Highland Park School began providing each elementary classroom with paperback libraries. The books include children's literature like "Pinballs" by Betsy Byars and "Bridge to Tarabithia" by Catherine Patterson, as well as more controversial selections by authors like Judy Blume.

Principal Phil Bush said Highland Park pupils had scored just as well on basic reading skills tests as youngsters taught with textbooks. But more importantly, he contended, children who learn to read using "real books" go on to be more avid adult readers.

"Children come to reading knowing it can be fun," Bush said. "We teach them how to select appropriate books, challenging rather than easy. Children come to feel better about their capabilities."

Charlotte S. Huck, a professor of education at Ohio State University who has worked with Highland Park and other schools that have replaced basal readers with children's literature, said youngsters became "better writers, more creative thinkers."

But such schools seem certain to remain the exceptions. Most educators believe basal readers are here to stay.

"They're so ingrained, they're so omnipresent," said Joseph Kender, professor of education and coordinator of the reading program at Lehigh University, "and teachers like their security."

History has long been textbook battleground

NEW YORK (AP) — They've been called stupid, mindless, condescending. Blacks, women, Indians, Northerners and Southerners have fought over them.

They are American history textbooks, and critics say some are perfect examples of what Education Secretary T.H. Bell has called the "dumbing down" of school texts.

Consider exhibit "A" from a widely used high school American history text:

"The United States of America is big. Our hills and mountains are covered with forests. The United States is the leading manufacturing nation of the world. This is no accident. Our nation is blessed with the raw materials that feed hungry machines."

Or this passage about Asian-Americans:

"Today it is much easier for Asian-Americans to get better jobs and find better housing. There is much less discrimination. Asian-American families value education. As a result, Asian-Americans have gone to college and become doctors, pharmacists, lawyers and engineers."

Both quotations are from the 1981 edition of "The New Exploring American History," published by the Globe Book Co.

The passages illustrate two forces that in the last 20 years have radically reshaped American history texts. One is the pressure for easier texts, from school districts, state textbook committees and teachers. It has resulted, critics say, in crashingly dull texts with sentences that march monotonously along in subject-verb-subject-verb lockstep.

The second pressure has come from minority groups demanding better representation in history texts. They got their wish in the last decade — but in a way that has dismayed some of them.

The Council on Interracial Books for Children is currently studying how well history texts treat such issues of social justice.

Their verdict: not well at all.

True, women, blacks and Indians have gotten more space in history texts in the past two decades, said Madelon Bedell, a council researcher. But too often, minorities are not part of the main narrative. Instead, they are featured in special sections that start like: "Blacks, too, played a part in the Civil War," or "Women, too, were a part of colonial life."

"They come on stage, do their tap dance and then get off," said Howard Dodson, Ms. Bedell's co-researcher.

An unreal America thus emerges from those texts, those critics say — bland, inoffensive to any ethnic or geographic group, but with little relation to historic truth.

Still, a look at earlier editions of "Rise of the American Nation" shows how vastly American texts have changed in their portrayal of blacks and other minorities in recent years.

Women and blacks appear hardly at all in the 1961 edition, and slavery is portrayed almost benignly. A pastoral color print shows well-fed and -clothed blacks happily at work in the cotton fields.

"Many planters provided for their slaves as carefully as they did for members of their own families," the 1961 edition said, "and in turn won the love of the slaves."

That benevolent view of slavery was gone by 1972. That version of "Rise of the American Nation" gave more space to the cruelty of slavery.

Nevertheless, critics say that what has emerged from two decades of such changes in textbooks is a boring America — devoid of drama or historic narrative.

"American history texts are not by their nature dull. They have achieved dullness," wrote Frances Fitzgerald in "America Revised," a widely cited critique of such texts.

"They're terribly written. You wonder how anyone could get through them," said Albie Burke, a history professor at California State University at Long Beach and editor of "The History Teacher," the only journal that regularly reviews history texts.

Textbooks, said Burke, "are responsible for the general misunderstanding of what history is all about. Most people wind up thinking, 'Oh, yes, history: That's memorizing names and dates.'"

What is missing from nearly all texts, said Ms. Fitzgerald, is "intellectual history in the broadest sense. Were a foreigner to read American history texts, he or she would have to conclude that American political life was completely mindless."

Ms. Fitzgerald and others often cite how many texts handle the clash between Thomas Jefferson and Alexander Hamilton in the earliest days of the Republic.

Common books create crisis in science

NEW YORK (AP) — Maybe as a fourth-grader you were fascinated by the changing color of chameleons. Perhaps as a sixth-grader, you watched in amazement as chicks hatched in an incubator.

But if you're like many Americans, any excitement over science you felt as a child was wiped out by high school. The prime culprits, say some science educators, are the textbooks most commonly used for decades.

That, say educators including Robert E. Yager, head of the Science Education Center at the University of Iowa, is the true "crisis in science education."

Yager, who recently studied American student attitudes toward science, concluded that science classes were seen as "fun, interesting and exciting" by most third-graders. By the eleventh grade less than half feel that way.

FOR MOST YOUNGSTERS, science in high school means biology.

And high school biology textbooks, bloated with bewildering vocabulary, are at least part of the reason most American youngsters come to dread science, according to the critics.

"The status of science education can be summarized by a single word: textbooks," said Yager.

National Science Foundation studies report that typical high school science courses introduce students to 2,500 new words — such as mind-numbing "bacteriophage," "endodermis" and "platyhelminthes" — about double the new vocabulary a student would be expected to learn in a year of foreign language study.

Numerous critical reports this past year, most notably by President Reagan's Commission on Excellence in Education and the National Science Board, focused more attention on the poor state of science education than at any time since the United States was jolted by the Soviet launching of Sputnik in 1957.

REFORMERS IN MANY states are now pressing to require students to take more science.

Yager and others warn, however, that the problem isn't teaching too little science, but teaching the wrong kind: technical, full of jargon and of little use to the average student.

Many youngsters may not want science careers but still need to understand nuclear power, pollution and other issues affecting daily life. Instead, most texts offer, in excruciating detail, the tissue structure of mosses and liverworts, the physical traits of salamanders and newts, and the reproductive habits of spirogyra.

Too often, teachers and school districts are overdependent upon textbooks.

"The trend we're finding is the textbook becomes the curriculum in most places," said Leroy Lee, a biology teacher in Madison, Wis., and acting executive director of the National Association of Biology Teachers.

"There are a lot of schools that don't do labs anymore," Lee said, explaining that a nationwide shortage of science teachers had forced many schools to put relatively untrained teachers into science classrooms.

Texts have become a convenient crutch for many of those teachers. All they have to do is stay one lesson ahead of the students.

BY FAR THE MOST widely used text is "Modern Biology," published by Holt, Rinehart & Winston. Publishers generally refuse to discuss market share, but Holt, Rinehart's science editor, Nick Moore, said in an interview that "Modern Biology" holds about 50 percent of the nation's biology textbook market, and sells "about a million copies per edition."

That probably makes it the best-selling high school text in the nation, Moore said.

But "Modern Biology," as well as most other texts on the market, offer little lab work or experimentation that would make studying science exciting. What passes for experimentation is usually an exercise in which students act out what the teacher or the text says is supposed to happen.

For the student, what might have been a wondrous field of study becomes a struggle to memorize enough science terms to pass standardized tests, graduate and be done with it forever.

"We assume if they know words, they know science. And that's just not true," said Yager.

CONTROVERSY OVER the content of biology texts is hardly new. Americans have battled for decades over how — even whether — to teach concepts like evolution, sexual reproduction, ecology, conservation, nutrition and genetics.

Biology texts didn't change much from the 1920s until the late 1950s. Most were dominated by the usual chapters on the plant and animal kingdoms. Whole sections of 1950s editions of "Modern Biology," for instance, were word-for-word duplicates of their 1920s ancestor, "Biology for Beginners."

Sputnik sparked dramatic change in all science texts, including biology. In the 1960s especially, the federal government spent hundreds of millions of dollars training science teachers, helping local school districts buy lab equipment and financing projects aimed at letting scientists themselves produce better physics, chemistry and biology textbooks.

The resulting "Biological Sciences Curriculum Study," a non-profit organization that still operates at Colorado College and writes widely used textbooks, had enormous impact on the content of all biology texts, especially in the 1960s.

The BSCS project spurred publishers to update texts with more biochemistry, genetics, human reproduction and ecology. The most controversial subject of all — evolution — had its heyday in the 1960s, with all texts devoting more space to the subject than ever before, or since.

BUT THE NEW TEXTS spawned by the BSCS movement came under harsh attack beginning in the 1970s, mainly from right-wing and Christian fundamentalist critics who objected to the emphasis on evolution. Federal funding for science education gradually dwindled.

BSCS's three biology texts are still on the market, published under the titles "Biological Science: An Inquiry into Life" by Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Inc., "Biological Science: A Molecular Approach" by D.C. Heath, and "Biological Science: An Ecological Approach" by Houghton Mifflin Co. The publishers get the profits from those texts, but BSCS retains editorial control.

Geraldine Stutz has worked her way up the retail ladder to become the owner of Henri Bendel, a New York store much admired by other stores across the nation.

Merchant Princess

By KATHY LARKIN
King Features Syndicate

She slips behind the Louis XV desk in the president's office of Henri Bendel, that offbeat, pace-setting New York institution with ties to all America, as easily as Cinderella fitting into a slipper. But Chicago-born Geraldine Stutz worked her way up the retail ladder minus a push from any Prince Charming. Now she owns the store that other retailers monitor for trends.

Bendel is not, as Gerry Stutz admits, exactly your normal store. It's not just that most Bendel customers share her small-boned size (she is 5 feet 5 inches, 110 pounds and wears a size-6 dress) and her giant, all-consuming curiosity about what happens around the next event.

It's not even that Ms. Stutz has a knack for discovering talent: A relative unknown, Andy Warhol, did some of her first store ads; sizzling hot fashion designer Michaele Vollbracht still speaks happily of his days as a Bendel illustrator when Ms. Stutz sat in the sixth-floor beauty salon and dictated memos while employees, like flying sparks, shot in all directions.

It's not just that Bendel sells things unique to Bendel — Calvin Klein separates mixed the way Stutz likes them, Ralph Lauren fashions cut in different shapes and colors, finds from new designers created just for the little powerhouse of a store around the 57th Street corner of Fifth Avenue.

IT'S NOT even that Henri Bendel, by Gerry Stutz's count, tallies $25 million annually in a 24,000-square-foot space, awkwardly shoe-horned into two patched-together, long and short real-estate lots — a total of $1,500 per square foot.

Says Ms. Stutz, "Merchants talk of the millenium in terms of $1,000 per square foot, realistically hope for $500 and average $400."

Now she is networking Henri Bendel across the United States by computer, launching her own electronic search for all those store customers (mirror images of herself) whom she describes as "hip, small-sized women, age 8 to 108, more interested in style than fleeting fashion."

They may live in oil-rich Dallas, or send their children to Los Angeles schools, or help their husbands farm in the Midwest. But, by instinct and shopping tastes, they belong inside the pages of Bendel's newly relaunched mail-order catalogs.

It is an explosive rebirth. The Christmas '82 test launch aimed at $500,000 in sales. Says a gleeful Ms. Stutz, "We made twice as much, over $1 million, so we leased space on the other side of the Queensboro Bridge, stocked up on computer hardware and software — and started mailing more catalogs." Revenues for Christmas 1983 soared well above the $2-million mark.

Ms. Stutz is a superlative retailer, dubbed the "Merchant Princess" by "Fortune" magazine for her successful record since becoming president of the store some 25 years ago, at age 33, in an era when most women in retailing were still standing behind the counter.

AND SINCE JULY 1980, she has been the first woman to take over a major specialty store. In that month, Gerry Stutz, backed by three silent European partners, paid $8 million to ailing giant Genesco, a retailing conglomerate then tallying $800 million in annual sales.

However, it was hemorrhaging so much red ink (and selling so many losing properties — in 1979, 12 Genesco-owned Bonwit Teller stores and 33 Plymouth Shops were spun off to Allied Stores for $21 million) that little Bendel was one of its very few pluses.

It is also true that Ms. Stutz revolutionized an entire industry with her "Street of Shops," a string of indoor main-floor boutiques patterned by designer H. McKim Glazebrook on his childhood memories of wandering through Palm Beach shops. It's "a bazaar image," says Ms. Stutz, "dating back to the Souks of Mesopotamia but not seen in the northeast sector of this country in decades."

It was a sales idea whose time had come. But when Ms. Stutz first invited retailers to see the wonders Glazebrook, with her instant firm backing, had wrought, the opening party on Bendel's main floor was a disaster.

Shrugs Ms. Stutz, remembering her fellow retailers: "They came — and laughed and laughed and laughed. And called my 'Street of Shops' the 'Street of Flops.' "

But Henri Bendel customers came and browsed and bought and bought and... Months later, the concept was copied by stores across the country.

MS. STUTZ ALSO rocked the same retailing industry with street theater — revolutionary store windows that sold lingerie by framing mannequins, clothed in wisps of fabric, starring in a typical big-city boudoir murder scene. And once again, stores up and down Fifth Avenue did their own "slice of life" epics with mannequins in Laundromats, supermarkets, discos — all coping with reality.

Fashion designer Bill Blass cites both the Street of Shops and street windows in explaining the impact Ms. Stutz, who graduated from a small Catholic college (Mundelein) with majors in drama and journalism, has had on the continent-spanning life style of thousands.

Says long-time friend Bill Blass: "She is unique. She is an innovator. So much of what we accept as retailing savvy now, was begun by Geraldine Stutz."

Even the competition approves. Says vice president Helen O'Hagen of Saks Fifth Avenue: "She is a fashion leader who has created a fantastic atmosphere for any customer."

But none of that quite explains why pocket-sized Bendel and Ms. Stutz carry such clout.

It is, of course, Ms. Stutz herself who comes closest to explaining the offbeat little store, an upstart David surrounded by Goliaths like Bergdorf Goodman, Bloomingdale's, Bonwit Teller and Saks Fifth Avenue.

SHE FLATLY rejected her lawyer's advice to pin John Hanigan, Genesco CEO at the time of Bendel's sale, down to written terms on his promise to match the best going offer for the store.

BETWEEN THE LINES

Q. I think Kevin Bacon from "Footloose" is great. Please tell me about him.

T.N.
Midland, Texas

A. He's 25, from "an upper-middle-class WASP family in Philadelphia," as he describes it, and was "drawn to fame and fortune at an early age" due to his father, Edmund Bacon, a renowned city planner. His way, he always knew, would be acting. He used to mimic the movements of his classmates at school and loved drama class.

After graduation from high school, he moved to New York to study at Circle in the Square drama school and got his first movie break because a casting director was looking for "wet behind the ears freshmen" for the film "Animal House."

Kevin Bacon

Bacon got one of those roles but then nothing else, so he worked as a waiter for nearly a year, then got roles on two soaps: "The Guiding Light" and "Search for Tomorrow."

Roles off-Broadway finally led to roles in films — "Friday the 13th," "Only When I Laugh" and his breakthrough, "Diner," as the rich, alcoholic Fenwick.

For "Footloose," though, he claims that he had to go through three screen tests because the producers weren't sure he was photogenic enough.

Obviously he is, but he's also selective: After finishing the recent NBC live production of "Mister Roberts," he flew straight back to New York without making up his mind on his next project.

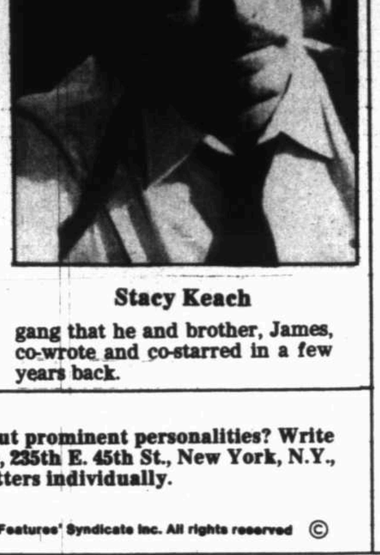

Q. Please give me some information on Stacy Keach — age, married, where he lives, what he's doing next.

Marilyn Mason
Waterbury, Conn.

A. He's 42, married (his third time) to the former Jill Donahue, a landscape artist, and they have two homes: a ranch in Malibu where he rides his horses and practices his moves for polo, which he loves, and a condo in Hollywood.

Until mid-June, though, he'll be living in France filming "Mistral's Daughter," a CBS miniseries based on Judith Krantz's bestseller, due to air in September.

If his current TV series, "Mike Hammer," is renewed as he expects,he'll start shooting that series as soon as he returns from France. Otherwise, he's been working on a sequel to "The Long Riders," the film about the James gang that he and brother, James, co-wrote and co-starred in a few years back.

Q. I hope you can settle a disagreement my husband and I are having: Was Marc Singer in the show "Bosom Buddies"? I say he was, my husband says he wasn't. Please answer so I can get some peace.

L. Hachey
Mississauga, Ont.

A. Hate to do this, but your husband is right. The two actors in "Bosom Buddies" were Tom Hanks and Peter Scolari. But if you like Marc Singer, he'll be back on TV soon in the continuation of the sci-fi miniseries "V," which just aired in the U.S. on NBC.

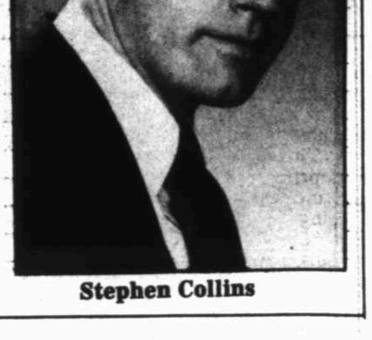

Q. How old is Stephen Collins? Also, is he married, what has he done and what is he going to do?

May Kwong
Sacramento, Calif.

A. He's 36, from Des Moines, Iowa, but raised in Hastings-on-Hudson, N.Y. A graduate of Amherst, he decided in 1969 to take on the acting world in New York.

However, because of his extremely all-American, blond, 6-foot good looks, he was offered "only bland parts, bland doctors, bland lawyers," as he explains. So he went to the New York Shakespeare Festival, "begged," and got a three-line part in a production of "Twelfth Night," thus beginning a career in theater.

His film debut, a few years later, was in "All the President's Men," followed by "Between the Lines," "Loving Couples," "Star Trek" and "The Promise."

Stutz works her way from employee to owner

"John Hanigan is an honorable man. His word is enough." And it was. When Hanigan got a top bid for Henri Bendel from Barney's, he called Ms. Stutz. She matched it — and bought out the store.

Amateur designers know all about the 10 a.m. Friday morning line-up, winding into the employees' entrance, one door down 57th Street from the entrance frequented by Yoko Ono, Diana Ross, Lauren Bacall and White House pal Jerry Zipkin — searching for a birthday present for first lady Nancy Reagan.

The designers come from across the country and wait to see Henri Bendel buyers. And the buyers, under orders from Ms. Stutz and vice president Jean Rosenberg, see every one. In fact, Ms. Stutz estimates 20 percent of her merchandise, from bird whistles to blouses, stems from the Friday line-up. Her own personal wardrobe mixes clothes from it with old couture favorites bought from name designers.

Bendel's has been an offbeat success story almost from the day Walton Maxey Jarman, then chairman of Genesco, lured Ms. Stutz into the president's seat. He had already coaxed her into his organization after five years of fashion reporting with "Glamour" magazine.

Says Ms. Stutz candidly: "I had just embarked on psychoanalysis with a borrowed $1,000 and I needed money. So I demanded triple my salary, a staff, the works. And they kept saying yes." Soon, although she warned Jarman she couldn't "run a peanut stand," Ms. Stutz was running his chain of I. Miller shoe stores.

SHE SAYS: "Jarman was an extraordinary man by the standards of any generation. I have never heard any other male business executive say: 'Businesses devoted to women are better run by women than men.' He did."

Henri Bendel was not her favorite assignment at first. In fact, she refused it and kept refusing for six months. Why? The store, then a new Genesco acquisition, was in poor shape financially and physically.

Says Ms. Stutz, drumming a finger on her desk for emphasis: "Even the stockroom roof was leaking. And I knew — and he knew I knew — that Maxey Jarman had already asked every good specialty merchant from here to California. Not one would tackle a dowdy white elephant of a store doing $3 million annually — and losing $1 million."

So Jarman ran Bendel's himself — with advice from Geraldine Stutz. She says ruefully: "Every Friday, he sat here, in my chair and outlined his plans, all so wrong! After five months, he swore he was quitting and gave me a list of possible successors, all women.

"And when I vetoed the last one, I found myself saying: 'Look, do you really want me to run the store?' And he said: 'That's what I was waiting for,' picked up his briefcase and marched out that office door."

Ms. Stutz, who had five years to turn Bendel's from red to black, squeaked home with a profit margin of $8,000.

IT WASN'T EASY. Inside the store — "where I had just been installed as a 33-year-old whiz kid most people had never heard of" — Ms. Stutz encountered a frigid reception.

Geraldine Stutz

"Most of the existing store people wouldn't talk to me. So, for the first few months, rather than make the drastic changes everyone expected, I just sat on my hands." She grins suddenly: "I mean that literally. In this old building, even the temperature was cold."

Her survival was her dream. "The only thing I could do," says Ms. Stutz, "was to build a store that I wanted to shop in. So I did. That was my vision, and gradually I made everyone else believe in it."

By contrast with those difficult, early days, the final step from president to owner was easy. Says Ms. Stutz practically: "When I considered the alternative, buying the store was not a major gamble at all. If I didn't, someone else would. And I'd be left outside those glass windows looking in.

"I believe everyone has one real, big shot in life. Just one. This was mine. And don't forget, I'd been allowed as a hired hand to build this store in my own image — a rare thing. To go out there and build another Henri Bendel, when one of my own creation already existed... Looked at that way, buying the store was a simple necessity."

And a good investment, since Gerry Stutz had already targeted new faces, new merchandise places and new pockets of money as Bendel's president: helping launch Jean Muir, Sonia Rykiel, Mary McFadden, Holly Harp, Stephen Burrows and more.

BOB SAKOWITZ, chief of the Sakowitz store chain, shared the early days. "I remember sitting next to Gerry in a little Paris loft, writing some of the very first orders for Kenzo. We've traded possible fashion winners. She calls me. I call her.

"She has a laser eye for fashion trends; an inborn timer for pacing. And she knows you involve yourself with a good designer on a long-term basis or you 'don't get involved.' "

Good designers were, and are, her perpetual quarry. Says Ms. Stutz: "By the time I came into Bendel's and the retail business, stores across the country were trekking to Europe, buying couture samples and reproducing them." But soon the trip wasn't worth the ticket fare.

Adds Ms. Stutz: "The day that Ohrbach's and Alexander's abandoned all that obvious trendy stuff and began ordering every sneaky, subtle little black dress on our order, I said: 'We're through.'

"And I wrote to every Paris couturier and explained that much as we loved them, selling a $750 copy of the same dress that Ohrbach's was reproducing at $230 was retail suicide and, regretfully, we were kissing them all goodbye."

That letter launched vice president Jean Rosenberg on a pioneering search through the beginnings of American involvement in European ready-to-wear. Chloe, now famous, was stitching a few interesting things. There was a relative unknown, a talent named Valentino.

WHAT KIND OF an executive is Gerry Stutz? She considers a few seconds: "I think I'm a good administrator. My talent, a real one, is to create circumstances where people do their best, sometimes better than they expect. I am truly a good appreciator."

But she is also a severe judge. "I give people leeway. When they don't match my expectations, I am bitterly disappointed. That shows and it can be devasting to people."

She is, by her own admission, a procrastinator; often late to appointments. And she is her mother's daughter; the mother who worked before her marriage as a DuPont executive supervising 12 people.

"My father admired my mother enormously," says Stutz, "and he was, I think, defeated by her. She was exasperated by my father's weaknesses. And I was totally aligned with my mother. But quite late in life, I got to know my father, out from under my mother's wing and on his own. He was, I realized, rather an attractive man."

Her own 1965 marriage to British painter David Gibbs ended by degrees — first a separation 12 years after the wedding, then a quiet divorce, none of it caused by the pressure of her job.

"By the time I married David," says Stutz, "I had been a store president for years. It was a terrific relationship at its inception; and for a quite a long time. When we married, we were two people with identical views about the life we wanted.

"BUT WE BOTH changed. When we separated, David and I had one of those amicable no-contest divorces. Neither one of us wanted to marry anyone else. It was just, at the end, nothing was working out for us."

Her life now, in 1984, is a seamless meshing of people and places. Ms. Stutz dines out (in A-list circles) perhaps four or five nights a week. She rents the upper floors of fashion designer Donald Brooks' townhouse in New York and enjoys life most weekends in the Connecticut home that she and David chose together. It is the simple life lived on a giant scale.

It is a quiet existence, says Gerry Stutz. No cocktail parties. Occasional Sunday lunches during winter. Six guests to Saturday night dinner. And summer gardening.

Her own Shangri-la is an English-style house perched above the river. There is a fern forest, a woodman's cottage, a former country post office and landscaped grounds.

But Gerry Stutz has little time to enjoy the Connecticut view. She flies to Europe for collections; to warm beaches, when she can, for vacations and always, like a homing bird, back to her office in Henri Bendel.

Says Stutz simply, "I mind the store. You have to."

Gershwin bubbles fill air

By GEORGIA TEMPLE

Georgia Temple

The sound of George Gershwin and Cole Porter music bubbled across Midland High School's stage Friday during Texas Opera Theatre's production of "Champagne & Gershwin."

Most were successfully airborne. A few soared gracefully. Others popped as quickly as they formed.

The five-member male chorus, three-member female chorus, two dancers and TOT band moved with ease from selection to selection, covering such numbers as Gershwin's "Strike Up the Band," "Fascinating Rhythm" and (his first smash song hit) "Swanee" to Porter's "Summertime," "Friendship" and "Anything Goes." In all, they performed 14 Gershwin tunes and 13 Porter songs in less than two hours.

The Cole selections were a pleasant surprise. After all, he wasn't included in the billing.

That TOT is an opera company was startlingly evident with the female vocalists. The male voices were by far better suited to Broadway singing. For example, soprano Karen Williams could not be understood in the balcony when she sang Gershwin's "My Man's Gone Now."

The exception was one of the high points of the evening. When soprano Nancy Elledge sang Porter's "When I Was a Little Cuckoo," she danced, she pranced, she belted the song, all the time coquettishly flipping her feather fan.

"Cuckoo" was sandwiched into another Porter song — "Come On In." This number was effectively staged. Bass S. Ray Jacobs's singing was complemented by dancers Holly Cruz and Ben Shelton. The three worked the entire stage. It was humorous, fun and received laughs from the audience.

Miss Cruz's dancing ability can be summed up in a simple statement. She has all the right moves.

Another selection performed in a memorable manner which left the audience chuckling was "Friendship." Performed by the male singers, this number sparkled with enthusiasm.

Baritone William Parcher did an outstanding job on the ballads he sang. For the most part, the most effective numbers were the fast-paced ones.

When TOT performed "Anything Goes," the audience agreed anything goes. Tenor Darren Keith Woods joined Miss Cruz and Shelton in a tap dance which left the audience wanting to join in. The most upbeat, snazzy number of the evening, "Anything Goes" was performed next to the closing selection — Porter's "Ev'ry Time We Say Goodbye." The former kicked up its heels, the latter dragged its feet. Why TOT chose to end its show on a downbeat instead of an upbeat is a good question.

It was easy to see the audience had a good time. When the show was over, many stood and applauded. Hosted by Sohio Petroleum Company at the Petroleum Club of Midland, the reception which followed this final Midland Community Concert of the season was packed with enthusiastic concertgoers.

Although TOT is celebrating its 10th anniversary through the vehicle of this musical revue, Friday's performance was not in the class normally presented by Community Concerts or by TOT. However, it was a nice, light evening and a warm kick-off for Midland's first annual Celebration of the Arts festival which runs through Saturday.

Artist consultant for MC watercolor seminar

William B. Chenoweth, Denver watercolorist, has been named a consultant for the upcoming annual Midland College watercolor workshop by Dr. Charles A. Stewart, workshop director. The workshop begins May 29 and closes June 13.

William B. Chenoweth

A native of Trinidad, Colo., Chenoweth studied with Boardman Robinson in Colorado Springs; at the Corcoran Art School, Washington, D.C.; and the Art Center School, Los Angeles. A former commercial artist and art director for advertising agencies in Los Angeles, Oklahoma City and Dallas, he handled the advertising for Titches' of Dallas and the May Company of Denver. He was advertising executive and vice-president of Fox and Chenoweth Inc. of Denver until 1969.

Active in politics, Chenoweth served as Colorado state representative, state senator and county commissioner. At present he serves on the Moffat Tunnel Commission.

Proficient in all painting media, he has concentrated on watercolor since 1965, both in Europe and the United States, while maintaining a mountain-top studio near Winter Park, Colo., and another studio in his home in Denver. He has studied watercolor with William Schimmel, Bogomir Bogdanovic, Clarence Kincaid, Bill Alexander, Carole Barnes, Hal Shelton, Edgar Whitney and others.

His work has been shown in the Southwest Watercolor Society, Watercolor West and Own Your Own annuals, Sangre de Cristo Center, Pueblo. Galleries in Taos, Winter Park and Denver have featured his work. His one-man show opening the new Sullivan-Bisenius Gallery in Denver was a near sell-out.

In making the announcement Stewart said, "Chenoweth will demonstrate, lecture, critique and teach for two days during the workshop."

Storyteller to weave folktales for children

Giving children something to dream about is what storyteller Joe Hayes will be doing beginning at 2:30 p.m. today at the Museum of the Southwest. His hour-long storytelling session, "Not Just For Kids," is part of the free festivities at the Museum's Family Fun Day planned in conjunction with Midland's Celebration of the Arts.

Hayes began his unusual career, which he refuses to refer to as work, in a library in Los Alamos, where he taught high school English. He found a book of tall tales on the library shelves and selected an old Appalachian tale to tell his own children.

"People like stories because it's a natural interaction for human beings. It's the way people have transmitted information for most of the history of the species. We don't very often get a chance to have that need satisfied anymore. When we do, a transformation comes over people," Hayes said in a recent interview for New Mexico Magazine.

"One of the things that pleases me most is that the kids get so excited, and it's not a slick production. Kids are used to lavish productions, and it's real nice for them to see someone just walk in and be as entertaining as a film that costs millions."

Although Hayes tells most of his stories in classrooms throughout the Southwest, he feels an audience of children, teen-agers, adults and senior citizens is the ideal setting for storytelling. Not only does it draw the family closer through the mutual eperience, but a story well told is a catalyst for keeping the storytelling tradition "alive."

"One of the nicest bits of feedback I get is when kids go home and tell the stories to their families. That's exciting — that the story has made enough of an impression that they carry it with them."

All the stories Hayes tells are traditional folktales. Although he tried to compose his own stories at the beginning of his career, he soon began to draw exclusively upon traditional material, especially those with a Southwestern theme.

"Folktales have a wonderful simplicity, a lack of logic we don't dare attempt when we make them up ourselves."

Hayes also realized that like a family heirloom, a story develops its universal appeal and meaning only after being passed along from person to person.

"Not Just For Kids" will feature a selection from his repertoire of Indian lore as well as Anglo and Hispanic tales.

People converge on Cannes for annual movie festival

CANNES, France (AP) — Filmmakers, stars, critics and fans have crowded into this Riviera resort for the Cannes Film Festival, where nearly 300 movies will be screened almost non-stop until May 23.

The 37th annual festival opened Friday with "Fort Saganne," a French-made colonial saga set in the Sahara, and ends with "The Bounty," a big-budget version of the famous South Pacific mutiny.

In between, if this year's extravaganza goes the way of predecessors, movie moguls will crowd into high-priced restaurants, cafes and bars along the Croisette, Cannes' coastal road, to try to cut the best possible film distribution deals.

While the dealmakers barter and the critics watch the screens, other Cannes visitors will be gawking at topless sunbathers on the resort's beaches.

The festival began as an art competition and showplace for Europe's avant-garde directors but has evolved into a huge movie marketplace.

Indeed, "outside the competition" films at the festival have soared in popularity over the years. One of them is "Fort Saganne," which stars Gerard Depardieu and Catherine Deneuve, who last teamed in Francois Truffaut's Academy award-winning "The Last Metro."

Other films up for the exposure and not for awards are Woody Allen's "Broadway Danny Rose," an homage to his early days as a cabaret performer, and Ingmar Bergman's "After the Rehearsal," a movie about actors and their real-life emotions. Neither director will be on hand to present his film.

Only 17 movies are competing for the Golden Palm, an award which can spell the difference between success and failure at the box office. Entrants include John Huston's "Under the Volcano," Werner Herzog's "Where the Green Ants Dream" and Wim Wender's "Paris, Texas."

British actor Dirk Bogarde heads the jury for this year's official selections.

Some 3,000 reporters, 12,500 film professionals and 12,000 spectators and groupies are expected to come to this year's festival. The affair drew filmmakers from all over world, including South Korea, Ireland, Hungary, the Philippines, Holland, Greece and India.

One festival highlight will be the premiere of Sergio Leone's "Once Upon a Time in America."

Leone, who made his name and fortune on "The Good, The Bad, and The Ugly" and "Once Upon a Time in the West" spent 14 years and $30 million on the 3-hour-40-minute portrayal of two Jewish gangsters, played by Robert de Niro and James Woods, in New York during Prohibition.

Last-minute arrivals had little chance of checking in at Cannes' ritziest lodging places. The elegant Carlton Hotel, a gracious white building overlooking the shimmering Mediterranean, is booked solid for the festival period through the year 2000.

If short on accommodations, you might follow Jerry Lewis' example. Last year, the American actor, beloved by the French as one of the world's most gifted comics, had his private 747 plane converted into a home-office complex to avoid the hoopla of downtown Cannes and packed hotel lobbies.

Former Midlander has one-woman art show

Former Midlander Nancy Chambers has a one-woman show, "Finding and Combining: Works by Nancy Chambers," opening today at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave. She will also demonstrate her skills today at 1:30 p.m.

A graduate of Midland High School, Ms. Chambers received her bachelor of fine arts from Austin College in 1974 and master of fine arts from the University of Dallas in 1976. Since then, she has been teaching at Richland College, Dallas, and exhibiting at galleries and museums and making sculptures.

Each of Ms. Chambers' pieces is a three-dimensional sculptural assemblage which includes painted, colored, crafted, glued, printed and "found" objects put together to challenge the viewer and to evoke emotional responses.

Described in the February issue of Ultra magazine as one of Texas' leading artists who "dares to be different," her works are unique. Her colorful sculptures recreate a new world through the combination of contrasting materials. Seeds, fortunes from cookies, buttons, shells, beads, clay, telephone wires, pine needles, sea urchin spines, etc., are incorporated into these assemblages.

Ms. Chambers has had one-person exhibitions at the Carver Center in San Antonio, the Waco Art Center, the Delahunty Gallary in Dallas, the Beaumont Art Museum and the Museum of the Southwest. She has been included in group exhibitions throughout the Southwest and the Northeast. Her works are owned by the Gihon/McMurray Foundation, Mountain View College and ARCO, as well as 17 private collectors.

The public is invite to view "Finding and Combining: Recent Works by Nancy Chambers," through July 8 in the Stables Gallery at the Museum of the Southwest. Hours are 10 a.m.-5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday, and 2-5 p.m. Sunday. Admission is free.

Also on display are selections from the Museum's Permanent Collection, Dances and Dreams: Prints by Woody Crumbo, The Hogan Collection of The Taos Society of Artists and The Creative Stitchery of Martha Mood.

House painter successful with short 'Moron Movies'

LANSDOWNE, Pa. (AP) — After three unpublished novels, a failed humor magazine and undistinguished stints in sportswriting and advertising, Len Cella finally found success.

He created "Moron Movies."

For six months Cella has been showing his short comedy films in a small screening room at the Lansdowne Theater outside Philadelphia. The films recently began showing up on the "Tonight" show, and now there's talk of production deals, a full-length motion picture and videos.

Not bad for a 46-year-old Ivy League dropout who had been living on $500 a month as a house painter.

"A lot of people had their doubts about it, but I knew what I had. I had seen these things make dozens and dozens of people laugh," Cella said.

An average showing of Moron Movies contains 130 short films usually between 10 and 50 seconds long. They assault the viewer one after another, some very funny, others straying far south of the good-taste border. All are shot on 8-mm film, giving them the look of very primitive home movies.

In "Pea Abuse," the camera focuses on three peas as they are split by nails. "The Plant Mugger" shows a man attacking a plant. Cella uses a stuffed animal as a paint roller in "Pets Can Be Useful After All." And "Jello Makes A Lousy Doorstop," well, that doesn't need an explanation.

Clearly filmmakers Steven Spielberg and George Lucas have no need to worry. Cella's operation is purely a one-man show. He's the writer, cameraman, actor and set designer. He built the screening room and serves as projectionist and usher. He does everything but develop the film — a local drugstore does that.

Cella, who says he's a University of Pennsylvania dropout, stumbled into filmmaking while trying his hand at every kind of artistic pursuit imaginable.

"I was was just trying to get my foot in the door anyway I could, creatively," he said.

"I did a spoof of 'Bonnie and Clyde' and showed it to about five friends. They laughed and I was on my way," said Cella. "They just kept on laughing so hard I thought that if I could do that, it must be worth something."

Cella made more films, showing them to friends and friends of friends.

Actress hosting lunch for 2,000

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Deidre Hall of the NBC soap opera, "Days of Our Lives," is asking a few fans to lunch.

For the occasion, set for May 27, she has rented the Hollywood Palladium to handle the expected 2,000 guests.

It will be Miss Hall's third annual "Lunchbreak," which features a surprise gift package for everyone, door prizes and a showing of fashions from the show. There will also be a video presentation of past highlights from the show.

MILWAUKEE (AP) — A new batch of pun-laden slogans to ballyhoo this year's Wisconsin State Fair will soon begin appearing on billboards in the state, the fair director says.

"We will show no swine before its time," is a sample of groaners that will be ribbing or rubbing the public from billboards, says fair director James W. Greiner.

The state fair staff asked the public to contribute slogans for the annual event, scheduled for Aug. 2-12 in suburban West Allis.

Greiner says four other witticisms were selected: "Our coop runneth over," "Every bunny's welcome," "Hot buttered fun," and "Cheep thrills."

Poet named recipient of fellowship

NEW YORK (AP) — The chancellors of the Academy of American Poets recently named Robert Francis as the 47th recipient of the $10,000 fellowship for "distinguished poetic achievement."

Francs is the author of eight volumes of poetry, including "Collected Poems 1936-1976." He has also written four books of prose.

Combine light menus with exercise to lose weight

King Features Syndicate

If you've put on some weight — and inches — over the winter, here's the help you need. With these light menus you can lose a pound or two a week while eating splendidly. And if you combine the menus with exercise, as they were designed to be used, you'll lose more.

The meals are packed with the best of the season's fruits and vegetables, and plenty of carbohydrates, which are the preferred "fuel" for exercise.

Drink plenty of liquids because they provide nutrients and also the extra fluids you need when exercising in warm weather.

Dieting more than two weeks? Just repeat the menus — or plan your own, following this "formula": Cut way down on fat — to less than 400 calories a day. Plan on about five ounces of protein-rich foods, plus the protein you get in two cups of milk a day. That will leave about 600 calories for fruit, vegetables, breads, cereals.

Vegetables and fruits are calorie bargains — figure about 25 per half-cup of greens and other nonstarchy vegetables, about 40 for a serving of fruit. Breads, cereals and starchy vegetables like potatoes are a bit higher, about 70 calories a serving.

Ready to shape up? Start here with two weeks of great 1,200-calorie menus.

CHECKING OUT THE LIBRARY

Friends will spread the word about library services

By JOHN W. DEATS

On Saturday, May 19th, from 10:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m., the library will participate in Midland's first Celebrtion of the Arts at Midland Center, 105 N. Main. Members of the Friends of the Library Executive Board and Library Avisory Board will serve as volunteers at the Friend's booth, helping to spread the word about how many library services reinforce the arts.

For instance, the Friends of the Library have provided the total funding for our collection of 359 framed prints which can circulate to the home or office for a two-month period. In April, alone, 111 art prints were checked out. The collection is very broad, with a contemporary emphasis, although there is depth in the work of more popular artists such as Boulanger (five prints), Andrew Wyeth (10 prints), and Porfinio Salinas (five prints).

Another Friends project has been the introduction of microcomputers for public use. The Apple IIe microcomputer is stationed in the Fine Arts department, accompanied by a wide assortment of books and periodicals on various microcomputers, software, and applications. On the average, 159 persons are using the microcomputer per month, a number which should increase upon the addition of our second microcomputer. The list of programs available is growing, and the graphics applications will be greatly increased by the addition of a printer.

We will present a series of highly acclaimed opera, symphony, ballet, and solo piano performances on videodiscs and videocassettes. For instance, excerpts from Verdi's AIDA are performed in the famous Arena di Verona.

The symphonic works are Dvorak's famous 9th Symphony, also known as "The New World," performed by the Czeck Philharmonic Orchestra. Conducted by Yoshihiko Kano, it was recorded at the Dvorak Hall in the House of Artists in Prague. Another very popular performance is Maurice Ravel's Bolero, as Zubin Mehta conducts the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra. Interestingly, a large portion of the disc is devoted to conversations between the conductor and his musicians in preparation for the performance.

Vladimir Horowitz came back from his second retirement at the age of 77 to play for HRH The Prince of Wales for the benefit of The Royal Opera House Development Appeal. The legendary piano virtuoso performs works by Chopin, Scarlatti, Schumman, and Rachmaninoff. In addition, Horowitz reminisces about his personal and musical life.

Two of the videocassette programs slated for Saturday are Roger Tory Peterson's Watching Birds, which reveals the technique and artistic genius of America's foremost painter of birds, and Glory of the Garden. The latter is a stunning tour of the beautiful gardens created by Lionel Nathan de Rothschild. Roughly a hundred miles southwest of London near the Hampshire coast, the Rothschild estate of some 250 acres is blooming with one million rhododendrons, azaleas, and magnolias, plus thousands of trees, shrubs and other plants.

There are over 200 videodiscs and videocassettes available for loan for home use. Come by the Friends of the Library booth for a preview!

Book profiles nine publishers who tried to be different

A Review

"Mavericks: Nine Indpendent Publishers," compiled by Richard Peabody; Paycock (P.O. Box 3567, Washington, D.C. 20007); $4.95, paperback; 129 pp.

In America, big publishing is big business. MCA owns Putnam's. Simon & Schuster is a subsidiary of Gulf & Western. CBS is behind Holt Rinehart & Winston. Larger corporations live for profit under conglomerate pressures of board room and bourse.

When accountants decide what makes good reading, big publishing homogenizes books to a bottom line. Backed by the immense capital necessary for advertising and financing, corporate booksellers can now bombard us — part of a preselected market category — with today's "biggie" and tonight's "wild sensation," assured of a wide readership. They may sell prefabricated nonsense and paperbacks that fall apart as you read them, but in this new marketplace of bookstore chains and TV ads, the commercial Goliath usually emerges victor, unmercifully squishing small-fry competitors. Given the state of things, what fool — though free and enterprising — David would ever choose to go against him?

"Mavericks" is about nine unorthodox publishers who made that choice, and thereby kept choosing — not by committee or balance sheet but according to individual taste. Richard Peabody — himself an independent publisher — has compiled essays and interviews to explain why. Obstinate individualists, supportive of free enterprise and free expression, all nine of these American publishing mavericks care deeply for good books. None, however, carries the illusion that going against Goliath is easy.

"We publish and then hope to find a market," admits George Braziller, whose imprint is attached to many fine art and architecture volumes. Several independents — such as John Martin, whose Black Sparrow Press publishes Charles Bukowski and other exciting (though unadvertised) poets — cut costs by keeping offices in home or garage. All lament the crippling hegemony of large chain bookstores — predisposed to buy only from corporate houses who can afford large printings and even larger promotional budgets.

Some independents have risked real injury; Barney Rosset of Grove Press was pushed to the edge of bankruptcy fighting obscenity charges against "Lady Chatterley's Lover" and "Tropic of Cancer." He was harassed by the FBI, CIA and the U.S. Army, and his offices were bombed in 1965.

But advantages usually outweigh dangers. These entrepreneurs feel part of a tradition remembered by Braziller, when publishers were names, not corporate structures. David R. Godine and Noel Young, proprietor of Santa Barbara's Capra Press, both attest to the benefits of a "human touch." "There's a sense of freedom in it," says Young, "along with a lot of responsibility."

Much of the responsibility embraces writing not only for today but tomorrow. Whereas conglomerates have a sink-or-swim attitude toward unproven authors, demanding profitability or else, independents will invest in the future and nurture a career. Commercial publishers are short-sighted, writes Anais Nin in her moving essay on Alan Swallow.

James Laughlin, whose New Directions is a successful medium-size house, believes independents will survive and prosper if they "can choose with taste, publish with economy and keep a good book in print." Bravo. The demand for that "good book" is certainly out there. The only question is whether readers will find it.

'Brady Bunch' isn't what stepfamilies really like

By MIDGE L. SCHILDKRAUT
King Features Service

On TV, the Brady Bunch painted a generally rosy picture of stepfamilies. But in real life, couples with children may have to deal with serious conflicts and problems before the newly merged family can live happily ever after. Here are the most common problems occurring in stepfamilies — with advice from experts on how these problems can best be worked out:

Replacing a lost parent

A serious emotional problem a stepparent often faces is the resentment of a child whose natural parent has died or whose parents have divorced.

The problem is often compounded if the stepparent moves too fast in trying to establish "instant love," says Jeannette Lofas of The Step Family Foundation in New York City.

"The stepparent must make it clear that he or she isn't trying to replace the natural parent," advises Ms. Lofas. "It's important to encourage the child to continue loving the dead or absent parent, and at the same time explain that it's not disloyal to form new attachments.

"The stepparent (and the natural parent) should try not to disparage an absent parent. The child needs to esteem both parents even if there is no contact with one."

Adoption and inheritance rights

Adoption of a child by a stepparent (even if the natural parent is still alive) is usually possible, as long as the ex-spouse gives consent.

But it's not a decision to be made lightly, cautions Dr. Emily Visher of The Stepfamily Association of America in Baltimore. It's a very sensitive situation for everyone involved. If the biological parent is alive, it means breaking off ties to that parent (and perhaps severing an important psychological bond) — something that may later be regretted.

Adoption does establish a legal relationship and makes the stepparent equally responsible with his spouse for the financial support of the child, says Dr. Doris Jonas Free, a New York City family-law specialist. (Without adoption, a stepparent's financial responsibility varies by state, she adds.) You can find out your state's law by checking with a lawyer.

A stepchild who is not adopted has no legal rights in most states to the inheritance or life-insurance benefits of a stepparent unless he or she is specifically named in a will or as the beneficiary of an insurance policy.

While adoption does assure the right of inheritance from the stepparent, it generally severs the child's inheritance rights from the natural parent, who agreed to the adoption.

Grandparents' rights

Psychologists generally agree that under most circumstances it's important for a child to maintain close contact with all the grandparents, particularly if they have been close in the past.

Even the courts are addressing the issue of grandparents' visitation rights, comments Ms. Free. Forty-five states have some provision for enabling grandparents to petition the courts when they're not allowed to see their grandchildren.

In some states, however, the statutes apply only when the natural parent has died; in other states the statutes include divorced parents and stepparents.

Different life styles

Two different families with different ideas about such matters as tidiness, responsibility for household chores and concepts of discipline may need help to merge successfully. Ms. Lofas suggests that couples decide how they want their household to run, what the responsibilities of each family member should be, and so on.

Once they've made the basic decisions and agree to support one another, the plan can be presented to the children, allowing them some input.

In the matter of discipline, Ms. Visher advises new stepparents to leave the disciplining up to the natural parent initially. Then, after time to adjust and build up a relationship with the child, the stepparent can gradually step in to enforce rules. The end goal is to have stepparent and natural parent play equal roles in discipline.

Health-care coverage

New guidelines, followed by most insurance companies, are helping stepfamilies deal with a child's health-insurance coverage following a divorce, according to columnist Grace W. Weinstein.

If the natural parent in the stepfamily has court-assigned responsibility for the child's health-care expenses, his or her health-insurance plan pays before any other plan.

If the court has not assigned responsibility, the plan of the parent with custody of the child pays before the plan of the natural parent without custody.

People with headphones live in their own world

By CANDY SCHULMAN
King Features Syndicate

I never wanted one. I contemptuously watched those strange creatures plugged into their headphones, black wires mysteriously disappearing into their bodies. On buses and in parks they appeared, silently.

How isolated they were; weird people who cut themselves off from others and had no need for human contact. Then I received a Walkman as a gift, and I warily decided to try it — just to see what all the hoopla was about.

The next day I had to pick up my aunt at the airport in the middle of rush hour. I situated my new device on the seat next to me and set the earphones in place. Music! So crisp and clear, as if I were hearing Mozart for the very first time. Rush hour was horrendous, but who cared? Stopping and starting in rhythm, I was deliriously pleased with the sound in my ears.

An hour later, I was plodding through some foreign land, having missed my exit. I'd become lost in Mozart before, but never so literally. Turning around, I burned rubber and sped back with Bruce Springsteen on his motorcycle.

Soon I was wearing it everywhere. I'd strut down the street to the Rolling Stones, perambulate to John Coltrane, glide to Bach. I crashed cymbals with Tchaikovsky and was amazed to hear Barry Manilow songs emanate from the mouths of passersby.

I bought broccoli while Linda Rondstadt sang sad love ballads. Waiting in line at the bank had never been less painful. I couldn't understand why there were so many frowns and sour expressions on the faces of my fellow line-waiters while Eugene Ormandy was conducting Beethoven's "Pastoral Symphony."

I was hooked. Addicted. Unable to go anywhere without my antennae. I wore my halo even in front of my mother, who thought that I, an alleged adult, was too old for such inane toys. Distressed, she said, "Bad enough my grandchildren listen to those awful instruments all day long, but now you, too!"

"What did you say?" I asked over Pink Floyd's synthesizers.

Why was I so seduced by a simple piece of technological advancement? I suppose it's because I'm old enough to remember a world without stereos, before the first space ship was ever launched, and today I'm always in awe of machines and inventions. The highlight of my adolescence was receiving my first transistor radio.

I wore it during breakfast, and then to a dull party. Friends thought I was depressed; the beginning of a breakdown, they diagnosed. But I didn't fall apart until my Walkman did. One Sunday it just stopped. Dead. I shook it and pressed its buttons.

Upon further investigation, I realized that the battery light had gone out. Relieved, I had to simply buy new batteries and all would be musical. But could I muddle through an entire Sunday without it?

Withdrawal symptoms came a few hours later. My hands shook, in search of the rewind button. Panicking, I called a friend and pleaded for her set of batteries.

"I gave up my Walkman," she told me. "Every time I used to put it on, I'd go through a moral dilemma over it. Finally I decided I was tired of living in a cocoon. Besides, I was afraid of irrevocably damaging my hearing. And I think my marriage started to fail when my husband refused to buy his own set of earphones."

My friend frightened me. I didn't want to live in my own world, even if it sounded so beautiful. I'd heard about Walkman-related accidents. New York passed a law banning earphones on drivers of cars and bicycles. I didn't like the way my ears rang after wearing it too long. My conversational skills were rusting. I had to go cold turkey.

My first tentative step outside was agonizing. I felt naked without my Walkman. But then I heard mellifluous traffic noises, horns blaring and brakes screeching. Yes, and the subway roared and squeaked again! Music of another kind.

People on the street spoke words once more. Dogs barked and babies cried. I tapped my foot impatiently while waiting on an endless line in the post office. The man next to me lambasted our government for all the taxes we pay. "And what do we get for it?" he asked me.

I smiled. It was nice to be alive again.

GOREN BRIDGE

By CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

DEAR READERS: We have had many requests over the years for those hands that we consider to be our favorites. That makes quite a list. For the time being, therefore, we are devoting the Sunday column to a series of famous hands. At the end of the series, we will go back to our weekly question and answer column.

North-South vulnerable. West deals.

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
1 ◇	Dble	3 ◇	4 ♠
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Ace of ◇.

Bridge players are usually not shrinking violets. However, no one has yet come forward to claim to be the defender on this hand from an international team trials almost 20 years ago.

At seven of the eight tables in the event, North-South reached a contract of four hearts, which went down one when declarer had to lose three trump tricks in addition to the ace of clubs. At the eight table, however, the bidding went as shown. We do not know what caused North to opt for a takeout double of one diamond — it certainly wasn't the quality of his spade suit. South made up for partner's optimism with one of the most conservative leaps to game we have ever seen.

West got off to the unfortunate lead of the ace of dimonds. Now there is a legitimate chance for declarer to make his contract. Since he must lose a club and a trump trick, he cannot afford more than one heart loser. The only way that can happen is if the defender wo holds the ace of clubs has a blank ace or king of hearts.

Therefore, declarer should ruff the opening lead, cash the two high trumps and then exit with the king of clubs. As soon as West wins the ace of clubs, he is end played. He can take his high trump and king of hearts, but then he must lead a minor suit card ad give declarer an entry to the table for all the discards he needs.

However, declarer was mesmerized by the two high diamonds in dummy and tried to steal an entry to the board at trick two by leading a low club. West flew in with the ace of clubs, ashed the king of hearts and put declarer back in hand with the king of clubs.

Declarer now cashed the ace-king of trumps, but West countered beautifully by unblocking the queen and jack. Although declarer's trump loser had suddenly vanished, he could not make his contract because he had no way to avoid losing two more heart tricks in addition to the two tricks he had already lost.

Woman enjoys challenge as Gulf Oil Co. engineer

King Features Syndicate

At 4:30 a.m. Barbara Becker Bailey, trim, attractive and 58, wakes to an alarm-clock duet. The first beeps; the second, set for 10 minutes later, buzzes.

She dresses unhurriedly in a shirt, blue jeans, safety shoes and a hard hat. In winter, she tops the outfit with a fleece-lined jacket. Gulf winds can bite.

She drives from the oak-shaded brick house near New Orleans which has been home to her and her husband for three years to the Lakefront Airport overlooking Lake Pontchartrain. Her destination: a cluster of oil production platforms far out in the Gulf of Mexico, each about half the size of a football field.

At a time of life when many women think of retiring, Mrs. Bailey has launched full tilt on a tough and challenging career. A few years ago, when she began job-hunting, her resume listed "Girl Scout leader" and "PTA committee chairwoman."

Since 1981, she has been project engineer for Gulf Oil Company's Central Office Area, based in New Orleans, responsible for keeping the environment pollution-free, and for the safety of hundreds of Gulf employees based offshore.

In her New Orleans office, she confers with high-level government officials, studies environmental regulations and surveys, plans safety seminars — and sometimes wonders how she managed the transition from frightened housewife to executive holding a position extremely rare for a woman her age.

Twice a month, Mrs. Bailey boards a helicopter bound for a very different setting — for an inspection trip of the platforms that stand astride the waters of the Gulf, where the oil is drilled, or of installations in sheltered Timbalier Bay, where it may also be stored.

The chopper rises from the airport to meet the 6 a.m. dawn and heads east for Bayou Lafourche. Mrs. Bailey never tires of the panorama as the aircraft skims above the small towns strung out like necklaces along the banks of the bayou.

After an hour-long flight, where the Gulf changes from slate-green to deep blue in the day's new sunlight, the two- and three-story gleaming white platforms are in sight.

As hour follows hour, Mrs. Bailey meticulously examines life preservers and fire extinguishers, complex fire and pollution control system and the escape capsules, which resemble flying saucers tethered to the platform sides. She must be sure that they could evacuate a crew in minutes. Mrs. Bailey is all over the platforms, climbing the metal, see-through steps, as many as 450 in a day, she once figured. She scoffs at the notion that the looming height of the 100-foot-tall platforms might make her nervous.

"Nonsense," she says. "We have handrails and safety devices all over the place. If I found anything to make me nervous, it would be my job to change it.

"Until a few years ago," Mrs. Bailey says in her soft, southern accent, "I could not have imagined myself in a job like this. It's true that when I came from Brookhaven, Miss., to Louisiana State University, I was the only girl in my class, in 1947, to major in engineering. But the only career I planned was marriage, and I was a lot more interested in my date for the next prom than in my grades. I wasn't even close to being an A student. But I liked math, and although I didn't want to teach, I wanted a skill in case I ever had to support myself."

The possibility seemed unlikely. After a brief stint in an oil-company office, Barbara Becker married and retired to raise three daughters in McComb, Miss., a mid-1800s town that had grown up around the railroad.

While the children were still young, the family moved to New Orleans. Then, suddenly, in 1975, her safe, secure life was shattered — the marriage was over. "I was 49, scared to death of being on my own, scared of my too-near 50th birthday. I was sure nobody would hire a 50-year-old woman. I hadn't worked in 30 years. I didn't know where to turn for a job. My children were grown, but I needed to support myself."

She began an application blitz, sending out 500 answers to ads within a few months. "I answered everything. Sometimes I felt as though I should drop resumes from the air, like leaflets."

A department store hired her — briefly. "The problem was that I had a terrible time learning to work the cash register."

After more months of applying, Halliburton Services, an oil field service company, employed her as a trainee. "I was equal parts thrilled and terrified," Mrs. Bailey says. "I was also mystified. According to government equal opportunity laws, the company had to hire a woman. But why me?

"Maybe they thought that because I was so conscious of the age gap, I might be more humble, less pushy." They were right, but in any case, she says, "They couldn't have been nicer."

The nine months of training began with four weeks of classes covering the latest engineering developments. Says Mrs. Bailey, "I worried off 10 pounds, passed the courses third from last, went home and slept for two days."

Although a daily swimmer and frequent tennis player, Mrs. Bailey found the field training even more grueling. She learned to cement casing pipes into the wells with fraction-of-a-minute precision, under broiling summer sun and in icy mud on winter nights, snatching sleep when possible in a car parked on the well site.

"We carried our clothes and food on our backs like snails," says Mrs. Bailey. Sometimes her coveralls and work coat were so stiff with cement that they could almost stand alone. Sometimes she worked on a platform 50 feet high. She was never afraid, she says, "because I was with veterans who knew what they were doing. They could smell trouble, and once or twice when they gave me a signal to move out, I went down that rig faster than I ever thought I could."

During her four years with Halliburton, Mrs. Bailey rarely went into the field, but was assigned to the sales office in Lafayette, La.

Then, in 1980, she remarried, moved back to New Orleans and joined Gulf Oil, for a new beginning in a demanding field. Looking back, Mrs. Bailey says that her male compatriots never made her feel uncomfortable because of her age or her sex. "Not even when I was a trainee, and a man asked me to hand him a '36.' I hadn't the vaguest idea that it was a huge wrench, and when I found out, I couldn't pick it up."

The years spent preparing for a career were a time in her life that could never be duplicated. "My children were on their own and I could devote my entire time to this one project, to expending every bit of myself in doing the very best I could. I knew that if I failed it was back to a clerk-type job that wouldn't pay enough for me to live on."
