Reagan's lobbying keeps tax bill alive in House

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's effort to rewrite the federal income tax, kept alive by his high-stakes lobbying of reluctant Republicans, is getting a second chance in the House with no assurance it can pass.

As the House struggled toward adjournment for the year, Democratic leaders accepted a Republican agreement that could lead to a final vote on the measure today. Reagan promised that at least 50 of the 182 Republicans would support the bill, and the GOP was given some concessions that were little more than face-saving devices.

Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III "has told me he has a list available of at least 50 (GOP) members who will vote for the rule (procedures for considering the bill) and for the bill," Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., manager of the legislation, told reporters.

House Minority Leader Robert Michel of Illinois claimed that the House Democrats now must bear the burden of seeing that the tax overhaul bill passes.

"It would seem the ball is in their court now," he said today. "It depends on what the Democratic majority does...I don't know exactly how much erosion (of support for the bill) there's been on the Democratic side."

Reagan himself called House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill to say the Republicans had met the Democrats' conditions. But, because Republican leaders have been so active in their opposition, the speaker said, the GOP might have to find even more votes to assure passage.

"I'm certainly in hope it will be more than 50 votes," Rostenkowski added this morning.

Few lawmakers were willing to forecast victory for a bill that is opposed by the floor leaders of both parties: Michel and Democrat Jim Wright of Texas.

The House Rules Committee cleared the way for consideration today of the Democratic bill and a Republican substitute.

When the Democratic plan of tax overhaul, the president's No. 1 legislative goal of his second term, was called up last week, all but 14 Republicans sided against the measure and, on a 223-202 vote, the House refused even to consider it.

That embarrassing defeat prompted the president to go to the Capitol Monday, where he put his prestige on the line and pleaded his case. "The president was very nice, very conciliatory...but he was not very convincing," Rep. Vin Weber, R-Minn., told reporters.

Top GOP leaders offered little reason for optimism. Barring some changes in the bill itself, said Rep. Jack Kemp of New York, chairman of the Republican Conference, "I don't see the votes right now for the bill."

Pastor believes Bible will lead him to oil in Mideast

DALLAS (AP) — Harold "Hayseed" Stephens, pastor of the Living Way Ministry near Weatherford, Texas, lost more than half of his congregation last year because of members' displeasure with his interest in drilling oil in Israel.

But, according to Stephens, divine guidance played a major role in his decision to drill on the southwest bank of the Dead Sea, and he is busily trying to line up investors for a project that he said is guaranteed by the Bible to succeed.

Stephens, 47, drove up to a north Dallas hotel last week in his white Cadillac, which bears on its front doors a company seal sporting oil derricks atop an open Bible.

Removing his white cowboy hat, Stephens made his pitch to investors from whom he needs more than $1 million to continue drilling in Israel.

"I believe because of the Scriptures we have found the place. I believe because of God's speaking we have found the place," Stephens said.

His confidence comes in the face of historically little oil production by Israel, which produces less than 2,000 barrels of oil daily and imports about 185,000 barrels daily.

Stephens is an evangelical Christian who believes the Bible will lead him to great reserves of crude in the Middle East.

A similar believer is oilman Andy SoRelle of Houston, who uses a host of geologists and seismologists, and an abiding confidence in Deuteronomy, which says, "He (God) made him (Jacob) to suck honey out of the rock, and oil out of the flinty rock."

White calls tax proposal 'terrible mistake' for oil industry

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

Gov. Mark White appears at a reception with Odessan Ray Stoker, who recently was appointed to the State Highway Commission.

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Arriving at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin for a reception honoring Odessa attorney Ray Stoker as the newest member of the three-member Texas Highway Commission, Gov. Mark White held a brief news conference.

White, saying Texas has "the lowest per capita tax in the nation and that stands us in good sted for economic development," has "pledged to veto any income tax, corporate or personal, and I don't think we need to see any increase in our taxes."

The governor also termed the treasury tax proposal concerning the oil industry "a terrible mistake." Saying he was pleased to see the Texas delegation opposing the proposed legislation, the governor said, "I want to make certain they don't let new taxes fall on the oil and gas industry."

Addressing an estimated crowd of 300 to 400 people in the UTPB Student Lounge that included Midland Mayor Thane Akins, Rep. Tom Craddick and State Sen. John Montford, White said he's had a good interest in West Texas for a long time, adding that he "was very pleased to see the overwhelming support for it (the Stacy Reservoir project) in West Texas." The project represents the first major water reservoir in West Texas in more than 25 years, he said. "So I've been working for West Texas for quite some time," said the governor.

White termed his appointment of Stoker, a longtime friend from Baylor Law School days, as "further evidence of our support for West Texas and the (recognition) of the problems we face in this part of our state."

The governor was introduced by Montford, who observed that there were Democrats, Republicans, conservatives, moderates and liberals present, noted people in the Permian Basin "approach politics very intensely," but when it comes to certain key issues that impact Texas we're all united. "Those issues include, certainly," he said, "first of all water and the Texas water department and, secondly, education and, third, highways." Montford noted White had made a commitment to put a West Texan on the highway commission and had fulfilled that commitment with the appointment of Stoker.

White praised Montford and Craddick for their leadership in pushing through the Texas water plan and termed it a great 150th birthday present for Texas that will last well into the next century.

White drew thunderous applause when he noted Odessa Permian will be seeking a championship next week and said, "It seems like West Texas football is not doing badly, in spite of no pass-no play."

"I've always thought the smart players were the best players and I think you've got a good example of them out here right now."

Noting that "we're in tough worldwide competition" economically, the governor said he believes the best way to compete is to use a coach's playbook, and observed coaches stress hard work and practice. "Amazingly," he said, "we find if we work harder we almost always do better."

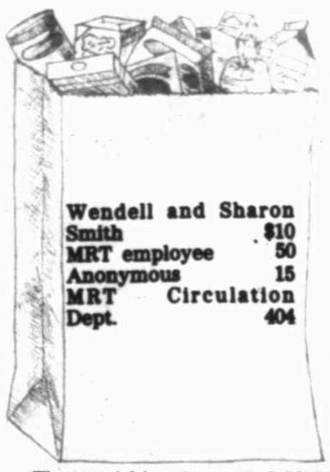

"And that's what we're asking of our young people in education. We also have other responsibilities in this state," White said. "To make certain that we're going to have a transportation system that will be second to none anywhere in the country."

He said he first became aware of highway needs in Texas when Dolph Briscoe was a young legislator and pushed through legislation for farm-to-market roads. "We've seen that farm-to-market road system and highway system and now the interstate system spread across Texas and provide the access to the marketplace we have to have for our agricultural and industrial goods and for workers to get to and from work each day."

Constantine legitimized Christianity

Birth of Christian Doctrine

A five-part series

EDITOR'S NOTE: Christian belief was illegal for its first 300 years under the Roman Empire, and first gained civil rights under the reign of Constantine I, who summoned the first doctrine-defining ecumenical council. This second article of a five-part Christmas series is about that grant of tolerance.

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

One side of silver coins minted by the ancient Roman Emperor Constantine I bore figures of the pagan sun-god, "Sol Invictus," but the other side displayed the Greek "chi rho" letters for initials of Jesus the Christ.

That first public legitimizing of Christianity signaled a monumental turn in the human story. To a degree, it also heralded a mode for the present, even to the dual motifs on modern coinage.

At that earlier time, a beleaguered but persistently spreading young faith gained beginning legal standing in society along with the predominant, entrenched paganism of the vast, tri-continental Roman empire.

Constantine, who ruled from 312 until his death in 337, blazed that fairer way in history, the first imperial power to insist on religious rights for all, whether worshipers of one God, of many or none.

"Mercy to all," he proclaimed.

It was a shining new course in a world that for 300 years had crucified, burned, enslaved and decapitated untold thousands of Christians or tossed them to beasts in the arena. The bloom of religious tolerance didn't last through succeeding centuries for institutions either of state or church, but has revived in modern times as an inherent, though often betrayed, Judeo-Christian ideal.

"Proclaim liberty throughout the land," Scripture says, the words engraved on America's Liberty Bell.

Whatever the ups and downs of that divinely attributed endowment, and its frequent ill use, its application to religion initially emerged in the Western world under Constantine "the Great," as he has been dubbed in church annals since.

He also plunged into early Christian doctrinal disputes, seeking to mitigate them, summoning and presiding over the church's first general ecumenical council.

Through him "occurred events which were to change the course of the history of the church and the empire alike," writes historian Williston Walker. He adds that Constantine's extension of civil rights to Christians meant "taking serious risks," since most of the population worshiped state-mandated idols.

However, the emperor cautiously balanced his innovations. While he himself espoused Christianity, unprecedented in the long line of Caesars, his emblems of office retained a polytheistic tinge.

While the Christian cross and monogram adorned the banners of his praetorian guard and were also inscribed on his diadem and shield, he continued to use the title of chief priest of the pagan pantheon, "Pontificus Maximus."

That shrewdly moderating intermixture has caused questions about his actual personal convictions, particularly since he shunned baptism until his deathbed, but it mollified the wealthy and educated classes, the vast majority of whom remained pagans.

"It is Fortuna (god of luck) which makes a man emperor," he said. But he spoke in religiously inclusive terms, calling for a "true community of humanity."

A year after he won the throne in a stunning victory by his troops under the sign of the cross over heavily outnumbering opposing legions, he and a colleague in 313 issued the famous Edict of Milan.

"Liberty of worship shall not be denied to any, but the mind and will of every individual shall be free to manage divine affairs according to his choice," that path-breaking edict declared.

CONSTANTINE

It granted legality to Christianity for the first time on equal footing with heathenism, allowing people to choose whatever belief they preferred.

That platform marked a striking transition for the long oppressed and victimized believers in Jesus, a breakthrough into civil sanction, both bracing the faith in future centuries and also at times ensnarling it institutionally in oppressions itself.

Yet the change first put the cause of that lowly but strangely gripping teacher from rural Galilee into the lawful processes of civilization, and into eventually becoming its mightiest faith on earth.

The stubbornly growing but ridiculed bands of Christians, harshly persecuted throughout their past, banned as criminals subject to execution under Roman law for rejecting state gods, called "atheists," "insolent barbarians" and "profaners of humanity," slanderously accused of debased secret rituals and seditious conspiracies, suddenly had acquired official acceptance and respect.

"There is no greater drama in human record," writes historian Will Durant, "than the sight of a few Christians, scorned or oppressed by a succession of emperors, bearing all trials with a fierce tenacity, multiplying quietly, building order while their enemies generated chaos, fighting the sword with the word, brutality with hope, and at last defeating the strongest state that history has known.

"Caesar and Christ had met in the arena, and Christ had won."

Constantine restored properties confiscated from Christians in the persecutions, freed imprisoned believers and recalled those in exile, enabled churches to receive bequests like corporations, facilitated Christian emancipation of slaves, exempted clergy from military duty, restricted infanticide and banished the bloody gladiatorial shows in his new capital in the East, the "new Rome."

His mother, Helena, a one-time barmaid divorced by his father on orders of the former emperor, made devotional pilgrimages to Jerusalem in her 80s. She had minions raze the dissolute Temple of Aphrodite, said to have been built over Jesus' tomb.

Constantine financed her building of magnificent churches on sacred sites of Jesus' birth, crucifixion and burial. She claimed to have found wood and nails of the "true cross" and he used one nail for the bridle bit of his war horse and sealed another in his helmet as an ornament.

From royal coffers, he contributed to building of new churches and their adornments, particularly in his "new Rome" of Constantinople in Greece (now modern Istanbul in Turkey). But he also financed the building of heathen temples and altars, and consulted heathen soothsayers and diviners.

He enjoined observance without secular labor of the Christian "Lord's Day" on the first day of the week, but called it by its heathen name, "Dies Solis" or "Sun Day," a name that stuck. He trod a middle course and conceded being politically motivated to solidify the state and his rule.

To put "summa divinitas," the worship of one God, on a par with polytheism, he reasoned, would "confer incalculable benefit on public affairs."

Constantine, the soldier-captain son of a military commander, initially distinguished himself in campaigns in Egypt and Persia under the reign of the Christian-trampling Diocletian. Afterward, he joined his father in West European provinces. On his death, his troops hailed the son as "Caesar."

A tall, broad-shouldered man, he is decribed as vigorously handsome, resourceful and winningly persuasive, with buoyant health and a taste for showiness in dress and demeanor, favoring exalted ceremony, grand palaces and lavish robes of embroidered purple silk.

His father had favored leniency toward Christians and the son, as recorded by fourth century church historian Eusebius, reasoned:

"My father revered the Christian God and uniformly prospered, while the emperor who worshiped the heathen gods, died a miserable death. Therefore, that I may enjoy a happy life and reign, I will imitate the example of my father and join myself to the cause of the Christians, who are growing daily, while the heathen are diminishing."

That utilitarian motive mingled with other manipulations for power. After his military triumph before the Mulvian bridge over the Tiber outside Rome, inspired by the form of a cross he reported seeing in the sky with the words "By this sign thou shalt conquer," he later crushed his ally, Licenius.

That left Constantine in 323 as the sole, unchallenged monarch of the whole empire, reaching from Persia (modern Iran) through the Middle East, Asia Minor, northern Africa and Western Europe.

"Freedom is saved," he said. "The sanctity of agreements has been restored; the foundations of lasting peace have been laid."

In the craft of guarding his power, he, like unreined human sovereigns before him and since, carried out ruthless acts, even against his own kin.

But like David, the Jewish king of biblical times, Constantine was said to have bitterly repented his baleful deeds.

He enlisted Christian leaders among his counselors, but in his counter-balancing style, also retained many pagans in his court.

"In obedience to the command of God," he transferred his capital to Byzantium in the East in 330, a marvelous site connecting two seas and two continents, where he had built a new "queen city" named for him — Constantinople, the "Nova Roma."

Instead of temples to idols, he adorned it with magnificent churches, statues, fountains and porticoes, with imposing fortifications beside its high walls. He decorated the halls of his five imperial palaces with huge biblical scenes, and banned the savage gladiatorial bouts, so popular in Rome. But he built theaters and an ornate, spacious hippodrome for athletic events and festivals.

Beside the stately senate house in the new metropolis, a 120-foot-high pillar bore a colossal statue of the emperor with earmarks both of the pagan god Apollo and Christ in the Forum of Constantinople.

He attended Christian worship, standing for hours through long sermons. He even delivered religious discourses himself to his court, drawing great crowds. He would gesture to discourage applause, pointing toward heaven as the "source of his wisdom."

He had postponed until the end being baptized, wanting its benefits of expiating sin to be complete, covering all his past with as little risk as possible.

Sensing the approach of death at the age of 65, he took off his ornamented, silk robe of purple and put on baptismal white. A summoned bishop performed the ritual.

"Impelled by divine power I began my work," Constantine said in one of his last recorded utterances. "It is for man to be obedient to God."

On his death, May 22, 337, his body, borne in a golden coffin in a procession of troops and civilian dignitaries, was buried in Constantinople's Church of the Apostles.

The Roman senate, disregarding the religious revolution he had wrought, followed past custom by enrolling him among the gods of the heathen Olympus.

Eastern churches have since honored him as a saint, with the reverential title, "Isapostolos," the "Equal of the apostles." But the Western church, disinclined to bestow sainthood on him, simply titled him "the Great."

WEDNESDAY: The Nicene Creed

Keep yule tree fresh

For maximum enjoyment and safety during the Yuletide, select a fresh Christmas tree and keep it fresh. To test a tree for freshness, lift it a few inches off the ground and drop it on its stump. Very few of the green needles will fall off a fresh tree.

As another test, the green needles should bend rather than break when flexed between your thumb and forefinger.

To preserve a tree, keep it in a cool area out of wind and sun. Water it at all times while stored and in use. Before putting it in water, make a fresh cut completely across the stump about an inch from the bottom to allow the tree to absorb water freely. But don't remove the bark from the base of the tree, because this prevents the tree from taking in water.

Don't leave lights burning on your tree for extended periods, and never leave them on when you're away. — CNS

Mistletoe 'shriveled'

According to early Christmas legends, mistletoe was once a tree, but shrank in shame after Christ's cross was made from its wood.

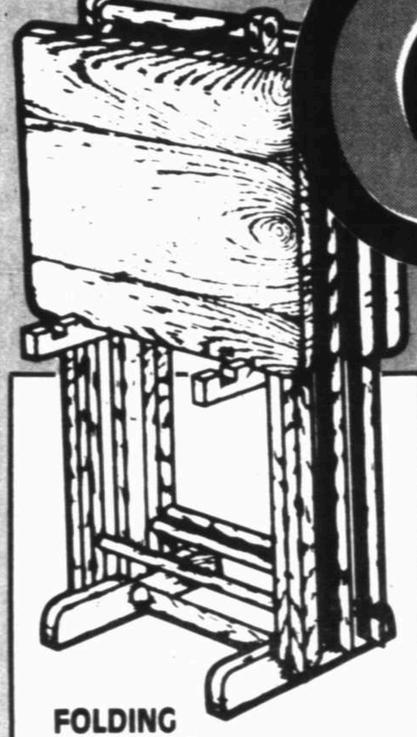

The current romantic custom of stealing a kiss under a sprig of mistletoe comes from Scandinavian mythology.

But only "one berry, one kiss," wrote Washington Irving in his "Sketch Book." No more kisses once the berries are all gone, he said.

Mistletoe, a parasite, can't be cultivated — it just happens. — CNS

Mother reunited with kidnapped baby girl

COPPELL (AP) — As a jubilant Jennifer Lynn Sutton returned from Florida with her baby girl cradled in her arms, a 39-year-old Houston-area woman was charged with kidnapping the child one month ago.

"At times I wanted to give up," Ms. Sutton said as she waited to board a Dallas-bound flight Monday. "I just kept praying and praying. And the investigators kept telling me it was just a matter of time."

Police arrested Susan Oglesby Miller of Seabrook early Monday in a College Station hotel and took her to a Dallas-area jail late Monday night. She faces up to 10 years in prison and a $5,000 fine if convicted on the kidnapping charge.

Ms. Sutton and her mother, Glenda Sutton, identified Ms. Miller in a photo lineup Monday night as "Bernice Kelly," the woman who answered their newspaper advertisement for a baby sitter, police said.

Authorities said they believe Ms. Miller wanted to raise the 3-month-old child herself, but refused to release further details of the case, saying they feared further information hinder their investigation.

"There may be others involved," Coppell police Lt. Jack Foley said.

FBI agents found Mallory Elizabeth Sutton early Saturday in the home of a Tampa, Fla., couple, who police say were the unsuspecting parents of Ms. Miller's former husband, who brought the baby from Houston to Tampa.

Earlier Monday in Tampa, Ms. Sutton beamed as she cuddled her baby and described her reunion with the blue-eyed infant.

"I was kind of afraid to pick up her at first. I just looked at her, then

Jennifer Sutton and three-month-old daughter Mallory appear at a news conference Monday at Dallas/Fort Worth International Airport.

I turned her over and it was her. It was a big shock. She had grown so much," the 20-year-old told reporters at an airport news conference.

"She started cooing...She just seemed to melt in my arms..." Ms. Sutton said.

The baby was discovered missing from the Sutton duplex on Nov. 13 after a friendly, well-groomed woman in her late 30s or early 40s answered a classified newspaper ad for a governess.

Doctor recalls nursing home 'homicide'

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — An elderly woman who died seven years ago at a Texas City nursing home was a homicide victim, a medical examiner has testified in the murder trial of the company that operated the home.

Dr. Vincent DiMaio, Bexar County medical examiner, also testified another female resident died of starvation complicated by bedsores and widespread infection.

DiMaio offered the testimony Monday in the murder-by-neglect trial of Autumn Hills Convalescent Centers Inc. and five of its current and former employees.

They are charged with murder in the Nov. 20, 1978, death of Elnora Breed. The 87-year-old woman died 47 days after entering the Texas City facility.

The defendants also are charged in the death of Edna Mae Witt, but they are not being prosecuted on that charge.

DiMaio is the final witness called by the prosecution, which has spent three months and called 42 witnesses in presenting its case.

The prosecution also has offered about 600 exhibits, many of them reams of medical records.

DiMaio testified the prosecution engaged him to go over the medical records of both women and to sit in on autopsies performed on their bodies earlier this year.

"Did you arrive at an opinion regarding the manner of Mrs. Witt's death?" assistant attorney general David Marks asked.

"In my opinion, it was a homicide," DiMaio responded.

The defense promptly objected and Judge Don Morgan instructed the jury to disregard the statement.

The medical examiner said a doctor's order for a 600-calorie-a-day diet was grossly inadequate for Mrs. Breed. She was on such a diet during most of her stay at the facility, according to earlier testimony.

"In my opinion, she starved to death and the starvation was complicated by decubitus ulcers and infections," DiMaio said.

Decubitus ulcers are bedsores.

Marks asked DiMaio what was the cause of those conditions.

"Poor nursing care," the doctor responded. "The ulcers, maninutrition and infection were all due to poor nursing care."

DiMaio said Mrs. Breed's body was a mere skeleton when her coffin was exhumed. He did not comment on the results of the autopsy.

Medical records showed, DiMaio said, that Mrs. Breed was relatively frail when she entered the Autumn Hills nursing home Oct. 4, 1978.

"But her medical history shows she was a tough woman. She couldn't have been too frail," he said.

Man held in plane bombing to plead insanity

AUSTIN (AP) — A San Marcos man charged with stashing a bomb on a plane that carried his family has been "dulled" by the case and may enter an insanity plea, his lawyer says.

"He is not in a good mental or emotional state at this time," attorney Rip Collins said after Albert Lee Thielman made a brief courtroom appearance Monday.

Thielman, 34, was arrested Dec. 7 in Las Vegas, a day after he was named in a federal charge alleging he put a bomb on an Oct. 30 American Airlines flight from Austin to Dallas-Fort Worth.

The bomb, traced to Thielman's wife's luggage, exploded in the luggage compartment while the plane was at the Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport. There were no injuries among the 154 people on board. Thielman's three children were on board, en route to their grandparents' home in Iowa.

If convicted, Thielman, a salesman, could face up to 20 years in prison and a $250,000 fine.

Collins said an insanity plea is a "clear possibility."

"He's pretty much dulled by all the circumstances and the charges against him," Collins said. "He's in a state of depression. He's not responding very well."

U.S. Magistrate Philip Sanders on Monday set a Wednesday bond hearing for Thielman. The case is expected to go to a federal grand jury later this week.

U.S. Magistrate Philip Pro of Las Vegas, before whom Thielman was initially taken refused to set bond, saying Thielman was a "threat to society."

Thielman has not yet entered a plea.

May take year to determine crash cause

GANDER, Newfoundland (AP) — The chief investigator into the crash of a chartered DC-8 that killed 256 American soldiers and crew members says it may take year or more to determine the cause.

"A big problem is a large portion of the aircraft was consumed by fire and it's just not there," Peter Boag, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board's investigator-in-charge, told The Associated Press in an interview Monday night.

Earlier Monday, the first 20 bodies were flown to Dover Air Force Base in Delaware aboard two C-141 Starlifter military transports. Another planeload of 35 caskets left Gander at dawn today, with rest to be shipped later today and Wednesday.

Boag, 32, said the 40-member investigating team will spend several months closely examining the aircraft pieces, reams of documents and transcripts of interviews.

Once investigators finish their work, the safety board will hold public hearings. More investigation could follow, with the board finally announcing its findings — including the cause of the crash.

"A year is a reasonable period of time," Boag said, talking in his makeshift office in the VIP lounge of Gander International Airport, about half a mile north of the snowy crash site.

"People want to know why right away," Boag said. "You can't determine the why until you determine what happened."

The cause will emerge slowly, he said, "unless you're extremely lucky and get the golden nugget right away."

Speculation has focused on such possibilities as iced wings, weight problems or sudden reverse thrust by one of the engines.

"We're not focusing on any particular cause at this particular time," Boag said Monday morning.

Also at Monday's briefing, he disclosed that the plane's flight data recorder — or "black box" — had yielded important details of the speed and path of the Arrow Air charter's brief flight.

The plane achieved an adequate speed on takeoff — 190 mph — but suddenly veered 20 degrees to the right and steadily slowed down until it crashed just seconds after liftoff.

The New York Times, quoting sources close the inquiry, said today that investigators examining the wreckage found the right outboard engine's thrust reverser was in the deployed position.

Thrust reversers on the other three engines were properly stowed, the Times said. Thrust reversers extend over the rear of a jet engine upon landing and direct a jet's exhaust forward, slowing the craft.

Such a reversal of power would be consistent with the veering and speed loss experienced by the Arrow Air DC-8. But investigators cautioned that the impact of a crash had deployed thrusters in previous accidents, and that other possible reasons for the crash would have to thoroughly investigated, the Times said.

Norm Hull, an official of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, said the Times report "did not originate from the safety board," but would not confirm or deny it. At the probe's temporary offices in Gander, Boag declined to come to the telephone to answer reporters' questions.

The recorder was damaged in the crash, explosion and fire, and analysts have not yet been able to determine the plane's altitude during the flight, Boag said.

Also, the unit installed in the DC-8 does not record as much detail as recent models, so there is no information on such details as the position of the pilot's controls at different times.

In Ottawa, investigators will take the DC-8's four engines apart, looking for signs of a failure that could have left the aircraft without enough power to stay aloft.

The team also plans to find out what the flight crew did during its 17-hour rest stop in Frankfurt, West Germany, while another crew was going to Cairo, Egypt, to pick up the soldiers from the 101st Airborne Division.

"You want to know the activities of the crew in the previous few days," Boag said. "It's normal investigating procedure to investigate those kinds of things."

OIL

$13 million in Israel without striking oil, The Dallas Morning News reported Monday.

Others say they have dreams of exploring for holy crude in Israel, but have yet to sink a drill bit. Among them is the Ford Oil and Development Corp. Its prospectus warns investors that the company is "approaching the oil and gas business on a religious basis, which may increase the risk."

"The Bible tells us there is oil there," Ford president Donald Ackerman said.

Three years ago, Stephens said, he was invited to join other Christian businessmen in Israel for a meeting with then-Prime Minister Menachem Begin. He said he put his white cowboy hat on the table, and Begin spoke of the popularity in Israel of the television series "Dallas."

"The Lord spoke to my spirit and said, 'Give him your hat,' " Stephens said. "I said, 'Lord, I just bought it.' The Lord said, 'Give him your hat.' "

Stephens said he gave Begin the hat, and Begin remarked, "Maybe you'll be the one who'll come find oil for us." Stephens said he protested at the time that he had neither the money nor the desire to drill in Israel.

However, about a year after that meeting, he said, "The Lord brought a man down from Iowa, an electrical engineer. He brought the Scriptures. He showed me those Scriptures and just walked me through the Bible. It was just so beautiful. The Scriptures had come to the same conclusion I had: the oil was in the southwest corner of the Dead Sea."

Stephens cites Genesis 14:10, which says, "And the vale of Siddim was full of slime pits, and the kings of Sodom and gomorrah fled, and fell there."

Slime pits can also be interpreted as tar pits, Stephens said.

"And those tar pits had to be very viscuous, or they wouldn't have fell in them and gotten captured and got killed," he added.

Stephens said that indicates crude petroleum could be in the area.

After much praying and fund raising, he said he struck a deal with the Israeli government and some Israeli business interests and began drilling in June atop a salt dome.

"We drilled to 5,454 feet and twisted off. We fished for 20 days and couldn't find it," Stephens said.

After expenditures of more than $6 million, the project was temporarily abandoned.

Now Stephens and his partners are trying to raise more money to continue the project. Stephens said they must come up with $2 million, of which about $600,000 has been pledged, by Sunday or they will lose their drilling permit.

The company's prospectus says the project's consulting geologist reports a 90 percent probability of discovering $600 million worth of oil.

Propane tank explosion kills 11 people

GLENWOOD SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Firefighters searched the smoldering rubble of a leveled two-story gas company today for a missing person after a propane tank explosion and fire that killed 11 people and injured 13.

Twenty-seven employees of the Rocky Mountain Natural Gas Co. in this west-central Colorado town were believed to be in the building when the explosion occurred Monday morning. Two people escaped injury.

A welding torch that was lighted near an almost empty 1,000-gallon propane tank apparently triggered the blast in a garage where repairs were done, said Les Sitter, a company vice president at its Denver headquarters.

Fire still burned under the wreckage at nightfall.

"We'll continue to look in the rubble in case there were people there who were not Rocky Mountain employees," city manager Mike Copp said late Monday. Since the office did not take payments, Copp said, visitors were unlikely.

Company president Don Parsons refused to speculate on the cause of the blast, and said he would wait for an investigation. He confirmed that a propane tank on a flatbed trailer apparently was undergoing repairs. "I doubt if the tank was full, but I expect it had some propane in it," he said.

Parsons described propane as more hazardous than natural gas, and said the practice of welding near gas "would be abnormal."

No natural gas was stored at the building in an industrial park at the western edge this resort town of 5,000, police said. The combination billing office-maintenance garage was reduced to rubble by the explosion.

"Within 10 seconds, the building was basically demolished," said Arthur Purdy, owner of a nearby restaurant who saw the building explode.

"There's going to be no bodies in there except dead ones," said Keith Gilstrap, a heavy-equipment operator driving past when the plant blew up. "The walls looked just like an exploding pop can, then you couldn't see anything but the smoke."

When rescue crews first arrived, they heard some buried employees screaming for help, said Police Chief Bob Halbert. "But television helicopters over the scene obliterated the noise of people yelling for help," he said. "We could not hear the voices of people crying."

Asked if the choppers might have contributed to any deaths, Halbert said, "That's speculation."

Valley View Hospital spokeswoman Catherine Evans said nine men and one woman remained hospitalized Monday night in serious or stable condition. Three others were treated and released, she said, adding that two others who came to the hospital did not require treatment.

Those admitted suffered from flash burns, broken bones and cuts, but she added that "we don't have anyone in critical condition." Three firefighters also received minor injuries during the rescue operation, officials said.

The last survivors were pulled from the rubble about 2½ hours after the blast, Copp said. Thick, black smoke poured throughout Monday from the building along the south bank of the Colorado River, 150 miles south of Denver.

Large spotlights were brought in at dusk to aid with the search.

"The major danger is getting the fire out without those walls falling on someone," Halbert said. "We need to account for everyone without anyone else getting hurt."

"I was just stepping out of the building and I got thrown in the air with another guy," said Maynard Crandell, a gas company purchasing agent treated for minor injuries and released. "I'm one of the lucky ones. Some dear friends of mine, I know, didn't get out."

The blast "shook our building," said Cameron Calder, president of Coca-Cola of Glenwood, whose plant is next to the demolished building. "We ran right over and we were able to pull about six people out of the building. Then the fire flared up. The smoke was really severe, and we couldn't get any closer."

Meet J. Robert Anderson, philanthropist.

He's not a millionaire. In fact, he's not even rich. But he gives.

Most of the giving in this country doesn't come from the wealthy. Almost half of it comes from people who earn less than $20,000 a year. Everyday, ordinary people. Like the guy down the street. Or your next-door neighbor. Or 100 million others who, every year, give unselfishly just to help people.

And while those who give may sometimes go unnoticed, their contributions don't. Because in this country, when a lot of people give, it adds up to a lot.

It helps fund important research. It helps run community church programs. It helps support local charities. It helps people out.

There are so many things in this country that could use your hand. Your time, your talents, your money. What you give isn't so important. That you do give is.

Because you don't have to be rich to be a philanthropist. You just have to care.

TAX

Less than three hours later, Baker was emerging from Michel's office with the announcement that O'Neill had been promised the 50 GOP votes. Republicans were assured:

• The House will vote on not only the GOP substitute but a Republican amendment to it that would keep present-law tax treatment of pensions. The Democratic bill would raise taxes on many pensions, including those received by millions of retired federal, state and local workers. But there is virtually no chance Democratic pension provision would still stand.

• The president will write a letter promising to veto any final tax bill that has an individual tax rate over 35 percent (the present top rate is 50 percent; the Democrats' bill sets 38 percent), that imposes that rate on any taxable income under $70,000 (the Democrats' top rate hits single people whose taxable income is over $60,000) and that does not offer adequate tax incentives for business investment.

• If the House passes a tax bill, it will consider a resolution stating the House favors making most tax changes effective Jan. 1, 1987. The Democratic bill has several different effective dates.

During the closed caucus, Republicans took a signed secret-ballot straw vote on whether to support the bill. It was unclear whether the pessimistic assessments of GOP leaders actually reflected rank-and-file sentiment or whether Reagan had won votes with telephone lobbying after his 50-minute stay at the meeting.

Even with that agreement, Michel said, he could not vote for the Democratic bill. He and most other Republicans in the House say the bill would damage the economy by imposing an additional $140 billion in taxes on corporations over the next five years. That money would be used to cut individual taxes. The shift to corporations would total about $101 billion under the GOP bill.

Reagan contends the Democratic version of his plan is flawed but says the House should pass it so the GOP-controlled Senate can improve it next year. Several top Republicans reject that argument, saying the Senate cannot be counted on to make major modifications in the House plan.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., added his own skepticism that the Senate will do precisely what Reagan has promised the House Republicans.

Correction

In the Nov. 27 edition of the Midland Reporter-Telegram, a story on a new admissions policy at Midland Memorial Hospital carried the headline "MMH offers same-day surgery." MMH has had same day surgery for several years and the story was about an admission policy which would lessen the stay of same-day surgery patients. The Reporter-Telegram regrets the error.

WHITE

"The investment that we've made over the years amounts to billions of dollars and it's important that we not waste that investment," White said.

The governor, terming the highway commission very important to bring balance to the whole state, described the current three-member commission, that includes Stoker, Tom Dunning of Dallas and Bob Lanier of Houston, as "the most thoughtful, I think, leadership ever in the history of the highway commission."

Stoker, in brief remarks, noted there has been criticism of the nickel-a-gallon gasoline tax as a bureaucratic scam, but without that nickel-a-gallon tax, he and the two other commissioners would not have much to do.

He noted that the $30,000 a year salaries of the commissioners have been terminated and the highway department staff has been reduced about 30 percent and the commission is supervising a budget nearly doubled, which will benefit the state highway system.

"You can say as you drive down our highway system, which is, in my judgment, the best in the world," Stoker said, "that you are helping pay for what you use. In my judgment, that is the Texas way to do it and it ought to be the American way to do it."

The governor was scheduled to attend a fund-raising dinner at the Holiday Inn Centre following the Stoker reception.

Lawyers ask Philippine high court to allow election

MANILLA, Philippines (AP) — Three prominent lawyers, including a former vice president and a retired chief justice, told the Supreme Court today that it should allow a special presidential election, even if it is unconstitutional, to prevent political chaos.

The court heard from the three during the first day of its hearing on a dozen challenges to the constitutionality of the election President Ferdinand E. Marcos called for Feb. 7, a year ahead of schedule. The hearing will continue Wednesday.

Marcos, who has governed the Philippines for 20 years, hopes to renew his mandate in the face of an economic crisis, a Communist insurgency and criticism at home and abroad.

Emmanuel Pelaez, the Philippines' vice president during the early 1960s, told the court that he believed the election is unconstitutional, but that it should be allowed because most voters want it.

Appearing with Pelaez today were former Sen. Ambrosio Padilla and retired Supreme Court Chief Justice Enrique Fernando.

Pelaez said the court approved of a constitution Marcos promulgated in 1973 even though it had ruled that the constitution was not properly ratified, setting a precedent for the court to allow an election in the national interest.

At issue in the case is whether Marcos can call the special election without resigning. The constitution allows a special election only in the event of a presidential vacancy caused by death, permanent incapacity, impeachment or resignation.

Marcos has tendered a resignation but says it will be effective after the winner of the special election, which he hopes will be himself, is sworn in.

The court would plunge the country "into chaos" by canceling the election, Pelaez said.

"What has happened is the biggest stride in the restoration of stability, which was shattered by the declaration of martial law," Pelaez said, referring to eight years of martial law imposed by Marcos in 1972.

Pelaez said other elections held since 1972 were not democratic because the opposition was not united and boycotted most of them.

"Now, by some miracle, the opposition has been united and the two-party system is becoming a reality," Pelaez said. "These are gains that should not be frittered away...This is a democratic advantage that should be taken."

The opposition has united behind Corazon Aquino, wife of assassinated opposition leader Benigno Aquino. Marcos campaigned in his home province of Ilocos today while Mrs. Aquino traveled to her home area north of Manila.

"As far as the people are concerned, it's all systems go for the special election," Pelaez told 12 of the court's 13 justices in a packed courtroom.

"If the court does not believe that it is constitutional, do so, declare it so, but we beg you, do not stop the election...because of the imperative necessity of survival," said Pelaez.

Sen. Padilla argued that the election is unconstitutional, but added, "Let us respect the action taken by the executive and the legislative (branches of government), even if it is unconstitutional."

Fernando said he did not believe the election was unconstitutional, and said the "court should not be the obstacle to the people expressing themselves at the polls."

Chief Justice Ramon Aquino, appointed by Marcos last month, asked Pelaez how a special election could be held without constitutional authority.

Pelaez replied that such a defect no longer matters because even the opposition has agreed to the election under Marcos' terms without insisting that Marcos resign.

More than 15 lawyers representing legal, civic and political groups that filed the challenges appeared in court, but only one had a chance to speak at today's two-hour session.

Eugene Tan, speaking for an association of lawyers and opposition members of the National Assembly, asked the court to stop the election unless Marcos first resigned and handed over power to an acting president.

But one of the assemblymen Tan represented, Homobono Adaza, told reporters later that he was in favor of holding the election.

He said that in filing the challenge, he simply wanted the court to make a ruling to prevent any future challenge by Marcos if the president loses the election.

Youths dance in streets as returns have Gandhi's party losing in Assam

DISPUR, India (AP) — Youths danced in the streets and exploded firecrackers today, celebrating early returns from Assam state elections showing Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's Congress Party losing to a new party formed by native Assamese.

With 20 percent of the votes counted from Monday's balloting, the Congress Party was behind the new Assam People's Council in nearly 50 of the districts that reported results, Election Commission sources said.

A Gandhi ally who is the state's top official, Chief Minister Hiteswar Saikia, was trailing narrowly in his home constituency of Nazira, near the border with Nagaland.

The state legislature has 126 seats, but one race was postponed because of the death of a candidate. Fourteen seats in the Indian Parliament also were at stake.

More than 70 percent of the 10 million eligible voters cast ballots, the largest turnout in an Assam election since Indian independence in 1947.

Chief election officer P.C. Misra said one election official was shot and wounded by an unidentified man Monday evening. The gunman escaped.

He said unidentified groups snatched ballot boxes and ran away at five voting stations Monday. Balloting at those stations resumed today, he said.

The Assam People's Council led in Assam's capital, Dispur, and the adjacent city of Gauhati. The party received all the votes cast at three booths in Gauhati's western constituency, officials said.

More than 200,000 riot troops and tear gas squads guarded centers where election workers began counting votes by hand this morning.

Large crowds supporting the Assam People's Council chanted anti-Congress Party slogans and cheered each time party members announced a new trend over loudspeakers at the counting centers.

Gandhi called the midterm state elections as part of a settlement to end six years of bloody strife between native Assamese and immigrants from neighboring Bangladesh.

The turmoil forced cancellation of elections for parliamentary seats in 1980 and 1984. Most native Assamese boycotted the last state election in February 1983, in which the Congress Party won 90 of the legislature's 126 seats.

Only 17 percent of eligible voters participated in that election, and agitators blocked voting in 18 constituencies. More than 3,600 people died in election-related violence.

The mainly Hindu natives of the oil-rich, tea-growing state complain that million of people, mostly Moslems, have entered the state illegally from Bangladesh since the 1950s and threaten to make them a minority in their own homeland. Bengali immigrants make up about 40 percent of the state's 22 million residents.

Under the Aug. 15 settlement, Gandhi agreed to hold new state elections.

Missing British producer apparently safe in Bekaa

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A British free-lance documentary producer who was reported missing apparently is safe in east Lebanon's Bekaa Valley, a British Embassy spokesman said today.

The producer, Chris Wenner, "is well and staying with a family in the Bekaa where he's working on a story," said the spokesman, saying the information came from people who know Wenner.

"He has been seen at the Palmyra Hotel in Baalbek and was in the company of friends a few days ago," said the spokesman, speaking on condition of anonymity. "We're told he's coming to Beirut tomorrow or Thursday."

Saeed Ashkar, a soundman for a French documentary company, Rund Video News, reported Monday that Wenner had been missing for 18 days and was feared kidnapped.

Ashkar, a Lebanese, said he and Wenner, 30, were working together on a documentary on Lebanon's lucrative hashish trade for Britain's Channel 4.

He said Wenner left Beirut for the Bekaa Valley Nov. 29, agreeing they would meet in Baalbek two days later.

An underground Shiite Moslem group, meanwhile, purportedly threatened to kill four kidnapped Lebanese Jews unless Israel releases 300 Shiite Moslems allegedly imprisoned in its "security zone" in south Lebanon.

The leftist Beirut newspaper As-Safir and the independent An-Nahar published a statement purportedly issued by the Organization of the Oppressed of the Earth, threatening to kill the Jews.

Blacks clash with police over tribal homeland

MOUTSE, South Africa (AP) — Police in armored vehicles fired tear gas to disperse gangs of stone-throwing blacks who were among more than 1,000 people rallying against government plans to incorporate this remote area into a tribal homeland.

Monday's clash was the first violence at Moutse in nearly 16 months of rioting elsewhere in the country against apartheid, the race laws through which South Africa's 5 million whites deny rights to the 24 million blacks.

The rioting began after more than 1,000 people rallied at Chief Tlokwe Mathebe's royal enclosure, a thatched-roof assembly place for tribal gatherings.

The crowd included traditional chiefs, members of the Lebowa homeland legislature and angry young blacks, all opposing the government plan to add the Moutse district to the KwaNdebele homeland Dec. 31.

The 165,000-acre district is 60 miles northeast of Pretoria.

A police van pulled up more than two hours after the rally began, and hundreds of young blacks raced out to chase it away.

Police returned with reinforcements, including several armored vehicles. Security men and youths fought skirmishes until late afternoon along the main road through Moutse and among the small mud houses on dirt sideroads.

The armored vehicles fired tear gas for more than two hours to disperse the roving gangs of stone-throwing blacks.

At least 900 people have been killed in the anti-apartheid rioting, most of them blacks in urban black townships.

Most of the Moutse district's 120,000 residents are from the North Sotho tribe, based in the Lebowa homeland, rather than the Ndebele tribe of the KwaNdebele homeland. They fear repression and social conflict under the KwaNdebele government.

Maredi Chueu, a member of the Lebowa homeland legislature and a leader of the resistance campaign, said months of unsuccessful meetings with federal government officials had increased tensions.

"The Afrikaner doesn't understand any language but this one," he said, gesturing to the main road where young blacks were stoning police vehicles and ducking tear gas canisters.

The Moutse area, long part of Lebowa, was separated from it five years ago in a government plan to relocate the population elsewhere in Lebowa and make the land available for white farming and mining.

South African, Zimbabwean commanders to talk

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — South African and Zimbabwe army commanders in the border area are to hold urgent talks following the deaths of six whites in a guerrilla land mine explosion, the military announced today.

"This means that a channel between the South African Defense Force commanding officer in the northern Transvaal and his equivalent on the Zimbabwe side is being created," a spokesman at the South African Defense Force Headquarters in the capital, Pretoria, told The Associated Press.

The spokesman, who declined to be identified, said the talks will take place shortly, but refused to specify where or when. The Star newspaper of Johannesburg reported this morning that top-level military and intelligence officers from the two countries would meet today.

Earlier, in continued anti-apartheid unrest in South African cities, police reported a mine with a timing device exploded at a bus depot in Durban, and police opened fired on rioters and arsonists in three Cape Province black townships, injuring two people.

Also in Soweto, witnesses reported that black youths stoned and hacked a 20-year-old man, then dragged him into a street and burned him to death.

On Monday, Foreign Minister R.F. Botha sent a note to the Zimbabwe government complaining that African National Congress guerrillas operating from Zimbabwe laid a series of land mines in the border area, which have killed a total of seven people and injured 12 the last three weeks.

Defense Minister Gen. Magnus Malan warned that South Africa may send troops into Zimbabwe in pursuit of black guerrillas.

Shameless mailing

It's a sad commentary on our times that Americans have become so disillusioned and cynical over the behavior of their elected representatives that the disclosure of government-paid mailings by U.S. Senators caused hardly a ripple. In this day of multi-billion-dollar expenditures and incomprehensible governmental deficits, most people probably only shrug at a cost of $11 million to mail out fliers, newsletters and announcements to constituents of 79 senators in a three-month period.

The bill, of course, is handed to the taxpayers.

It is hardly a coincidence that the heaviest use of this mailing privilege is being made by senators who face re-election campaigns in 1986. In this group and topping the list of free-loaders is that evangel of liberalism, California Democrat Alan Cranston, whose three-month mailings cost the country $1,631,832. Senator Cranston lamely explains, however, that on a per capita basis, his mailings were quite inexpensive — a bargain so to speak. But exactly how this modifies the bottom line is hard to imagine.

Texas' two senators were split on use of the mailings. Lloyd Bentsen reported $37,354 for the three-month period for 7,600 pieces of mail, which was much preferable to Cranston's expenditure, but still expensive when compared to Phil Gramm's zero mailing costs in the three months. Neither Bentsen nor Gramm is facing re-election in the immediate future.

To their credit, 21 of the 100 senators, like Gramm, sent out no mailings in the period, thus saving the taxpayers another million or so. In this select group was Connecticut Republican Lowell Weicker. His spotless record contrasts with that of his Democratic colleague, Christopher Dodd, whose mailings came to $603,895.

One thing is for sure: The mailing disclosures caused no red faces among the senators involved. For there is nobody as shameless as a politician running for re-election.

A brighter future

This month marked the second anniversary of the election of Raul Alfonsin to the presidency of Argentina, and that holds an inspiring chapter in the history of democracy in the Western Hemisphere.

In the first place, the selection of Alfonsin, a civilian, brought to an end eight years of rule by three military juntas. They were years of murders, kidnappings and torture, a reign of terror during which 9,000 Argentines disappeared.

Secondly, the civilian regime brought the military leaders to trial. Five were found guilty and four were acquitted. Not everyone agreed with the verdicts or the sentences, one of which was for life imprisonment, but all must agree that Argentina is now ruled by laws and not by guns.

That's not all that has been happening during these two years of the Alfonsin government. The state of siege has been lifted. Labor union bosses who cooperated closely with the heavy-handedness of the Juan Peron dictatorship have been brought under control.

One of the most dramatic achievements of the return of democracy to Argentina is in the economy. The nation's economic problems once looked insoluble, but President Alfonsin has proved they are not.

Last June inflation was galloping along at an annual rate of 1,000 percent. The appointment of able economists to government posts, and the establishment of a series of austerity measures chopped the rate down to a point no one would have dared predict a year ago. Today it is 25 percent.

So there was much to celebrate at the end of two years of civilian rule and the beginning of a third. President Alfonsin has changed Argentina from a country that was bankrupt and demoralized into a country that has hope, self-respect and faith in its future.

Another View:
A lid for lobbies

On Dec. 3, for the first time in years, the U.S. Senate was about to stand up and be counted on the subject of controlling PACs, the political action committees that pour out special interest money to members of Congress. Which senators support even modest limits on all that special interest peddling? There's still no way to tell, for no such vote took place. The senators ducked. They voted, in an 84-7 blur, in favor of embarrassed obfuscation.

Even that, however, amounts to progress, for until hours before the vote, it appeared likely that a majority would, without embarrassment, bury the bill. Yet it lives on, and the key is that word embarrassment. Festering public impatience is making its mark. If it persists, the senators know they can run but not hide. At some point, they will have to be counted. That's the day real reform can begin, and with luck, it could come by March 1.

The cost of campaigns has increased dramatically because of television and direct mail. Much of the increase has been covered by PACs, seeking single-shot influence on issue after issue. Just Saturday the Federal Election Commission reported that political action committees provided fully 26 percent of the campaign funds for seats in Congress last year.

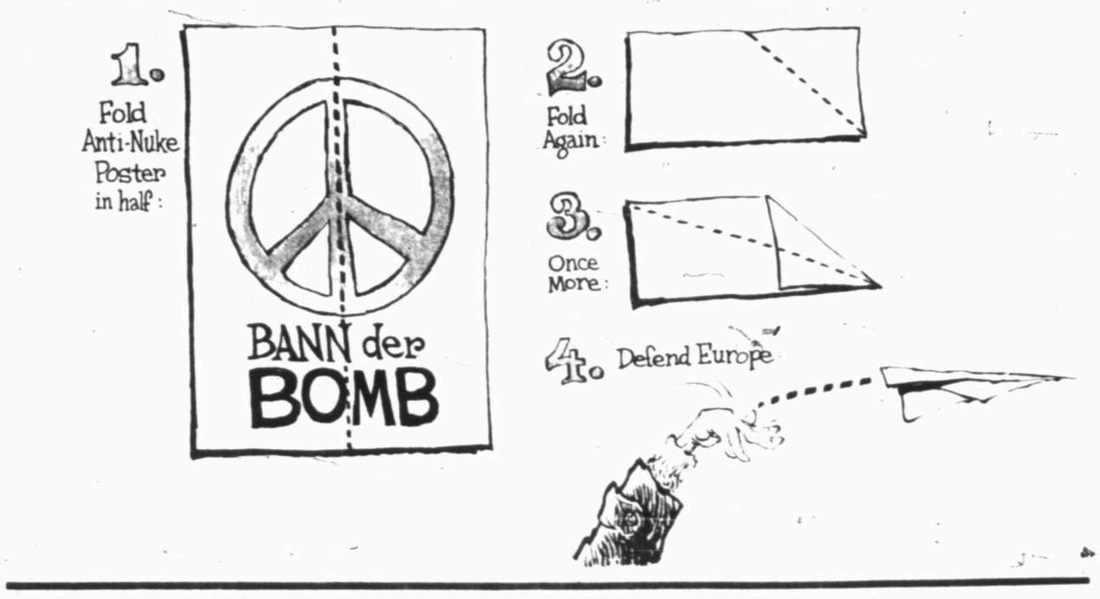

How can their influence be contained? Some people think costs can be controlled by fiat. They cannot. Television costs what television costs. Hence a second approach is to insist that television give free time to candidates. After all, the argument goes, broadcasters ought to pay, in some form, for their license to use public airwaves. That approach seems just as misguided. Perhaps broadcast licenses should be paid for, but why confuse that with campaign finance? And if one believes in public subsidy for campaigns, then let the subsidy come from all the public, not just television stations.

Public finance seems to us the soundest approach. There's nothing speculative about it; it works well in presidential campaigns. Indeed, in 1974, the Senate passed and the House came close to passing just such a system, and there's every reason to try again. Sens. Charles Mathias of Maryland and Paul Simon of Illinois are doing just that and deserve support. But their bill is given little chance of success in this session.

All the more reason also to press for legislation with a chance in 1986 — namely, Sen. David Boren's proposal at least to limit the amount of money PACs can give to candidates. That's the bill the Senate was supposed to vote on recently. Instead, it will now be examined, with the Mathias-Simon bill, by the Rules Committee.

Such hearings can do good — if they don't drag on. If there is no vote by March 1, Boren threatens guerrilla warfare: He'll do everything he can to force a vote, using every piece of legislation that comes along as a vehicle. The rest of us, wielding that weapon of embarrassment, can help.

JACK ANDERSON
PACs grabbing election process

WASHINGTON — Favors are part of a politician's stock in trade. He's expected to produce government contracts, public-works projects and jobs for the people he represents. They, in turn, may contribute to his election campaign.

Jack Anderson

This is a clumsy, capricious system, highly vulnerable to abuse. Many politicians begin trading favors for contributions. Given the high cost of campaigns, it's difficult for a politician to get elected without selling his soul to special interests.

Then, when the campaign contributors come around to collect on their "investment," it winds up costing the taxpayers billions of dollars in special-interest benefits.

Congress, with its usual timidity where campaign financing is concerned, is making noises about reforming the system by curbing the runaway spending of political action committees, known as PACs.

If our legislators need awakening, inspiration or encouragement in this venture, a forthcoming report by the non-partisan Center for Responsive Politics should be stimulating. We've obtained a draft of this exhaustive report, which is to be released later this month. Here are some of the mournful numbers that make clear the urgency of the situation:

— Campaign spending for the 1984 federal, state and local elections was $1.8 billion, compared with the $425 million spent in 1972. Ellen Miller, the center's director, told our associate Les Whitten, "in the next presidential-election year, 1988, it will almost certainly be well over $2 billion."

— Congressional campaign spending alone totaled $77 million in 1974 and $374 million last year.

— The disease is spreading. Some candidates for state legislatures spent more than $1 million in 1984; a few years ago, that sum would have financed a respectable run for the U.S. Senate in a major state.

— PACs gave almost $113 million to federal candidates last year, almost 10 times the 1974 total.

— These increases result from "less (reliance) on traditional political tools, the grass-roots networks, canvassing or rallies," the study discovered, "in favor of more expensive, sophisticated techniques (like) polling services, computers, direct mail and 'high tech' advertising."

— Another cause of the huge increase in campaign spending is the length of the campaigns themselves. Even before a freshman member of Congress has settled into his Washington office, he's already collecting money for the next election (and so are his opponents).

— The average cost of a winning Senate race has soared from $598,000 in 1976 to almost $3 million last year. The average may be $5 million next year. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., spent $16.5 million to squeeze by his Democratic challenger, Jim Hunt, who spent $9.4 million.

— Winning a close House election in 1974 cost, on average, $90,000; last year the price tag was $450,000, and in 1986 it will probably top $500,000.

— PACs are edging small contributors out of the picture. In 1974, 46 percent of House campaign contributions and 38 percent in Senate races came from donors of $100 or less. Last year small donations made up only 19 percent of House candidates' funding and 23 percent in Senate races.

— Corporate PACs have grown 1,790 percent since 1974; labor PACs, which made up one-third of the total in 1974, constituted only one-tenth last year.

— In House races, PAC money rose from an average of $10,000 per candidate in 1974 to $89,000 last year; in the Senate races, the average went from $47,000 to $405,000.

— The center found a disturbing connection between the issues before Congress and the PACs' contributions to members. For example, while defense spending was growing in the early 1980s, the 20 largest defense contractors' PACs increased their contributions by 225 percent, to a total of $3.6 million last year. And $440,000 went to members of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

WATCH ON WASTE: The State Department recently laid out a cool million to build a 16-room house for the Marine guards at the Manila embassy. An inspector general's report questioned whether the department got its money's worth. While noting that the building looked "impressive," the report said there wasn't adequate closet space in the small bedrooms, while the "open interior has considerable wasted space." The kitchen lacks "institutional-type appliances," and all things considered, "the inspectors are astounded that the Marine house is not more functional, given its extraordinary cost."

MINI-EDITORIAL: We were deeply saddened by the recent death of former Supreme Court Justice Potter Stewart. He was a good and decent man and a jurist of surpassing wisdom. Like the overwhelming majority of his fellow Americans, he was a moderate, pragmatic, middle-of-the-roader. Stewart was not a knee-jerk defender of the press, but he clearly understood its organic role in our democracy. When the Supreme Court decided, for example, that journalists had no constitutional right to confidential sources, he accused his fellow justices of having a "crabbed view" of the First Amendment. The people of Cincinnati should be proud of their native son, and the entire nation should mourn its loss.

EVANS & NOVAK
Reagan gets knife on tax bill

WASHINGTON — While Ronald Reagan and his men were raging over lese-majeste by congressional Republicans in daring to knife him on the tax bill, the nature of the chasm between them was publicly spelled out most clearly on Capitol Hill.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Rep. Jack Kemp, trying desperately to paste together tax reform's broken fragments before Christmas, encountered skepticism from his closest Republican allies. There would be no change in their votes, they said privately, until the president made clear — in writing — the changes he would demand in the bill as the price for signing it.

That is a shattering loss of faith between congressional Republicans and their popular president. The explanation lies directly in a Reagan administration blunder so strategic and so costly as to have been seldom seen in this capital of follies.

At the elemental level, the president's men erred by ignoring their Republican minority in the House. After the shocking vote last Wednesday, Deputy Treasury Secretary Richard Darman commented to a friend in his drollest style: "The trouble is, there are just too many Republicans in the House." That jest precisely reflected the administration's mindset.

But graver than ignoring Republicans was the sin of ignoring issues. Even after the House defeat, senior White House staffers and the president himself were still talking power politics rather than tax policy. The first reaction of an outraged Reagan was to ask how in the world he could campaign next year for re-election of Repubican House members who voted against him.

White House staff anger exceeded its master's. Aides railed against Minority Whip Trent Lott, claiming he was interested only in a 1986 tax increase (which he actually opposes). The bitterest denunciation was reserved for Conference Chairman Kemp, described by White House aides as having lost all chance for the presidential nomination.

Broadsides were also fired against Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III and Darman for insisting on full control over legislative strategy. The Baker-Darman reliance on that crafty Democratic power broker, Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, to write the tax bill is properly viewed as the central tactical error.

The Treasury responds that White House chief of staff Donald T. Regan should have immediately ordered up presidential endorsement once the bill emerged from Ways and Means. But in fact that would not have gained enough House Republicans to pass the bill.

The real White House blunder goes back two weeks earlier when it ignored Kemp's pleas to bring the Rostenkowski bill closer to the Reagan model. That meant removing penalties on corporate business and adopting the supply-side agenda: a top marginal rate of 35 percent beginning at a much higher income level than Rostenkowski's $40,000 per couple; a $2,000 personal exemption; lower capital gains rates; a different effective date.

Now, dangerously late, the White House is seriously considering those proposals. But what might have been possible at Thanksgiving has become an agonizing task at Christmas. House conservatives, feeling jobbed by Baker, want a lot more than vague presidential promises before they will change their votes.

Beyond the president's specific commitment to try to improve the bill in the Senate, some change is needed in the House to lock up sufficient Republican votes. Extending the $2,000 exemption to tax-return itemizers would suffice.

But Democrats show no interest in conciliation after a week of frolic watching Republicans look not only parricidal but also captives of big business. Having gotten the tax reform monkey off his back, Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill wants to leave it on the GOP's. "Danny (Rostenkowski) and I still want a bill," one key Ways and Means member told us, "but the rank-and-file (House) Democrats say, 'Why should I bail out Jack Kemp?'" They would rather keep the loudest Republican voice for tax reform on record against it.

The throng of House Republicans oblivious to the political importance of tax reform and all too willing to sign blank checks for big business are culpable in this Republican debacle. And that breed is distinctly overrepresented on the Ways and Means Committee. But they would not have prevailed without the administration's arrogance, ignorance and desire to elevate form over content that has become so familiar in Ronald Reagan's second term.

CHARLEY REESE
Government failings due to humans

What some people tend to forget is that government — any government — is made up entirely of the same old human beings you find in the private sector.

Charley Reese

For some reason, some people who are quick to see the fallibility of human beings in the private sector seem to believe that once a person puts on the mantle of government official they somehow become more than human.

A federal law, for example, allows federal courts to review the entire criminal trial of an individual convicted in a state court. The underlying assumption is that somehow federal judges are better than state judges. But where do we get federal judges? From the states and most often from the state courts. There is no rational reason to believe that a former state judge is any better than a current state judge just for having been appointed to the federal bench because of political pull.

For that matter, there is no reason to suppose that appointed judges will be any better than those judges who have to stand for election. For the benefit of those who may still have a kindergartner's view of the world, all appointments are political. No, Virginia, governors and presidents do not hand out patronage plums like judgeships to their well-qualified political enemies.

This discussion of the obvious is prompted by a lady who wanted to know why the federal government seems to act inconsistently. First of all, it does not seem to act inconsistently — it does act inconsistently.

The reason is that for all practical purposes nobody is in charge. The president is supposed to administer the executive branch but that branch has grown to such an enormous size that no human being could possibly control it in any meaningful sense of that word.

Presidents, like you and I, are ordinary human beings. They have to sleep. They have to brush their teeth. They have to go to the bathroom. They have to eat. They have to have some break from work. They have the same 24-hour day the rest of us have. There is a physical limit to how many meetings they can attend, how many reports they can read, how much information they can absorb, and how many telephone calls they can make.

They do what chief executive officers in private corporations do: they delegate. The people to whom they delegate, however, have the same limitations, so they delegate. There is a long line of delegations between the president and the Indian braves who actually do whatever has to be done. Orders go down this long line and information from the real world goes back up it. The longer the line, the more opportunities there are for foulups, sabotage, mistakes, misinterpretations, and other snafus which plague any human operation.

The more tasks assigned to the government the less chance of finding any president with wide enough expertise to delegate wisely and to evaluate feedback properly.

The only difference between a public and private bureaucracy is that the public one, because it is a creature of the law, is less flexible and less easy to change. A lot of today's problems are yesterday's reforms. Civil service, for example, makes government difficult to manage. People who for all practical purposes cannot be fired cannot be managed.

Federalism was not a bizarre concept dreamed up by our forefathers. It was as rational solution to real problems. Small units of government are more capable of real control. Nor has population growth and urbanization rendered the principle obsolete. One of the defects of the modern mind is to imagine that truth and principles change like fashions.

In fact, as government became centralized, large private corporations adopted the principle of federalism by creating autonomous profit centers. They recognized that after a certain point in growth, it is impossible to manage from the top.

The choice between genuine federalism and a European-style central government is not a choice between two equally viable options. It is a choice between federalism or disaster. Our present government is not out of control. It is beyond human control.

Ugandan rulers, rebels sign treaty

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Uganda's military government and its guerrilla rivals signed a peace treaty today dividing power between them and proclaiming an end to a war of nearly five years that had split the troubled country in two.

The Ugandan head of state, Gen. Tito Okello, signed for the government, while rebel commander Yoweri Museveni signed for the National Resistance Army.

The accord calls for elections "as soon as practicable," proposes prosecution for past human rights violations, and declares an immediate cease-fire in the civil war begun by the guerrilla group in early 1981.

Okello said the pact marked the beginning of a reconciliation process in the East African nation that "will not come easily. But it is the only way of breaking once and for all the vicious cycle of conflicts, revenge and victimization which has bedevilled our society for so long."

Officiating at the signing ceremony was Kenyan President Daniel arap Moi, who chaired intermittent peace talks between the sides starting in August.

Moi said the accord "heralded the beginning of a new era of peace in Uganda," which has been beset by violence and political strife for 20 years.

During the slow-moving and acrimonious talks, Moi several times publicly chided both sides for putting Uganda's interests after their own. He said last week that more than 1,000 Ugandans had been killed since the talks started.

The accord gives the army and the guerrilla group seven seats each on the ruling military council. A 15th seat goes to Okello, who will remain council chairman, and five more seats are allocated to smaller guerrilla groups that supported the government following its ouster of civilian President Milton Obote in a July 27 coup.

Rains bring end to Africa's food crisis

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Abundant rains this year have wrought "spectacular" changes in drought-stricken areas in Africa, helping to bring an end to the continent's food crisis, according to a U.N. agency.

But the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization, in a year-end report issued Monday, said the continent could plunge into another food shortage if it does not strengthen its agricultural industry next year.

FAO Director-General Edouard Saouma of Lebanon said, "The best rains for many years fell throughout Africa this season. The transformation of the drought-stricken countries has been spectacular."

The expected good harvests will provide breathing space, his statement said, but "1986 will be a critical transition period for African agriculture," which has been neglected by some nations in favor of industry or mining.

Unless food production is increased, livestock herds replenished and reserves built up, a continent that was able to feed itself two decades ago may become irreversibly dependent on foreign aid, he said, adding:

"Another famine could easily arise from the persistence of widespread malnutrition in Africa. All that it would take is another drought, and it would be foolish not to expect another drought.

"We were lucky this emergency came at a time of cheap and widespread food surpluses elsewhere. But what if the monsoon had failed in Asia at the same time?"

Saouma's statement accompanied the release of the Rome-based FAO's 12th and final monthly report on the famine emergency.

When the agency began its monthly reports last January, it said the famine affected large areas of Africa, and 30 million to 35 million people were threatened with starvation.

Twenty-one countries — from Morocco in the north to Zimbabwe in the south, Somalia in the east to Senegal in the west — were on the FAO's early emergency lists. But the final report named only six countries: Angola, Botswana, Cape Verde, Ethiopia, Mozambique and Sudan.

"Obviously, the food supply prospects for Africa in 1986 are very much better than last year," Peter M. Newhouse, a British FAO economist who compiled the monthly reports, told a briefing Monday. "But the fact that the rains have returned does not mean the African food crisis is over."

Shultz to express concern about PLO's Abbas

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz said he would express to government officials today U.S. concern about Yugoslavia's decision to release PLO official Mohammed Abbas, who the United States suspects of masterminding the Achille Lauro hijacking.

The secretary of state flew to Belgrade from Budapest, Hungary, for a day of talks with Premier Milka Planinc, who is seeking increased trade with the United States to help her country improve its weakened economy.

Relations between Yugoslavia, which is communist but not aligned, and the United States, were set back in early October when Mrs. Planinc's government declined to detain Abbas.

He had been a passenger on an Egyptair jet forced by U.S. Navy warplanes to land in Italy, had been allowed to leave Italy and then passed through Yugoslavia without being arrested.

Yugoslavia has not responded publicly to the U.S. complaint, but it has had close ties with the Palestine Liberation Organization for years, and Abbas is a member of the the PLO executive board.

"We want to express our concern about that, certainly", Shultz told reporters traveling with him. "We understand their point of view having to do with the PLO. On the other hand, the ship hijacking was a straight terrorist hijacking and in our view it is just totally reprehensible...No conceivable excuses."

One American, 69-year-old Leon Klinghoffer of New York, was killed in the hijacking.

Shultz said the United States is even more upset with Iraq than it is with Yugoslavia.

"With respect to Yugoslavia, he passed through here," Shultz said. "With respect to Iraq, he seems to have been welcomed there. That's different and constitutes much more of a problem."

Abbas reportedly was seen in the Iraqi capital of Baghdad during a PLO meeting in November.

WORLD in brief

Freighter was speeding

MONTRE. L, Quebec (AP) — The freighter that smashed into a St. Lawrence Seaway lift bridge last month was exceeding the speed limit, a duty officer from the vessel has testified.

Sunil Kumar Chadha told a special Federal Court hearing Monday that his ship was traveling roughly two knots over the limit for that section of the seaway system when it hit the bridge.

Seaway traffic was disrupted for nearly a week after the Jala Godavari, an Indian general cargo vessel, rammed the St. Louis de Gonzague span near Valleyfield, Quebec, on Nov. 29.

Two members of the crew have been ordered to testify before the ship is allowed to leave port.

The evidence heard by Commissioner George Addy is aimed at helping settle lawsuits which are expected to exceed $15 million.

Soviet emigre ends 'coma'

BOULOGNE-SUR-MER, France (AP) — A Soviet emigre started talking again nearly three weeks after lapsing into a fake coma in Britain, and was charged by French officials with theft and concealment, court and police sources said.

However, when Vladimir Leontev opened his eyes Monday he still refused to say where he got the 278,500 French francs, or $36,170, found on him after a road accident in Britain, said a court source who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Instead, Leontev said he had "important revelations" to make and demanded that town officials be present, said the source.

The judicial source declined to provide details of the criminal charges.

Dog sinks teeth into work

LONDON (AP) — Maybe it was the presence of royalty that inspired him. But Oscar, British customs' top dog, just wouldn't let go once he'd sunk his teeth into a suitcase full of heroin during a demonstration of his skills Monday at a Heathrow Airport cargo terminal.

The Princess of Wales and customs officers applauded while the 2½-year-old springer spaniel growled and hung on to the blue suitcase, even when he was swung around in circles above the ground by his handler.

Below-freezing temperatures in forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

Below freezing temperatures are expected to continue in the Permian Basin area tonight as forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport call for a low dipping to the 20s.

Tonight will be fair and cold with a low in the mid-20s warming Wednesday to a high in the upper 50s. Winds will be variable at 5 to 10 mph through Wednesday.

Monday's high of 52 was 28 degrees below the record set in 1946. This morning's low was 1 degree above the 1932 record of 18 degrees.

STATE

A high-pressure cell centered over the western Red River Valley early this morning continued to provide fair weather and chilly temperatures to most of the Lone Star State.

The only exception was in the deep south, where a weak low-pressure center over the northwest Gulf produced low cloudiness and scattered thundershowers from the lower coast to the lower Rio Grande Valley.

Light and variable winds were common statewide as predawn temperatures ranged from the 20s in the west to the 50s along the lower coast and deep south. Otherwise, readings were in the 30s and 40s.

The forecast for North Texas calls for widely scattered showers over the southeast tonight and mostly sunny skies Wednesday. Lows should be in the 30s and highs in the 50s.

West Texas should be partly cloudy in the extreme south but otherwise fair through Wednesday. Highs should range from the middle 40s Panhandle to the lower 60s along the Rio Grande. Lows should be in the 20s and 30s.

NATION

Snow spread across the Great Lakes region today and a cold front pushed arctic air into the Plains.

Erie, Pa., already had 5 inches of snow under a heavy snow warning that predicted up to 6 inches of snow for northwest Pennsylvania, the National Weather Service said.

Travelers' advisories were posted in northeast Ohio, western Pennsylvania, western and central New York, western Michigan, and most of northern Indiana.

Scattered snowshowers and gusty winds accompanied a frontal system from Iowa and Nebraska to the Dakotas and Wyoming.

"Lunch Hour Music for Advent and Christmas" on December 11 at First United Methodist Church featured Monta Jo Johnson and Marian Reeder with handbells and Carol Hall on the organ. The third portion of this series of lunchtime entertainment will be presented tomorrow, December 18, in the sanctuary at noon, featuring organist, Brad Kisner.

Greentree Country Club celebrates West Texas Gingerbread Christmas

The members of Greentree Country Club are enjoying this gingerbread ranch depicting a west Texas Christmas, designed and built by Danita Condray.

From Staff Reports

Greentree Country Club is delighting their members and guests with a gingerbread ranch depicting a West Texas Christmas. The display begins with a candy cane archway that leads down a tree-lined drive to the master house. On one side of the drive, a wishing well is surrounded by evergreen bushes. The two-story master house has two chimneys, many "candy" glass windows, a balcony all the way around supported by several columns, a patio with a lounge chair and umbrellas and a light inside the home which gives it a cozy,warm glow.

To complete the home, a swimming pool with inlayed rocks (mints). The deck features another lounge chair, umbrella and a tiny gazebo.

Next door is a four-car garage with most luxurious "chocolate" cars which appear to be travelling along the driveway.

To the right is a stable which houses three chocolate horses. Other horses, complete with saddles are in the fenced area adjacent to the stable.

Behind the stable is a windmill in use with its own water tank.

And what ranch in West Texas would be completed without an oil well? This one has an oil derrick and pump jack with holding tanks to complete this West Texas display.

This ranch was designed and built by Danita Condray for Greentree Country Club, with each piece being handmade. A total of 46 hours was spent completing this project, which is 99% edible.

Components build home entertainment centers

The newest trend in consumer electronics is connecting audio and video devices together to create a "home entertainment center." Unlike the console radio/TV/phono combinations popular a generation ago, the current home entertainment centers offer not merely convenience, but the highest quality and most up-to-date components. This Christmas you'll find more home video products and more home stereo equipment capable of handling and processing signals from such video sources as video disc players, video cassette recorders with high quality stereo sound, and now stereo television.

Some manufacturers offer complete systems and others utilize the building block, or component approach. The component approach is modular, it allows a consumer to create a system for his particular needs, purchase it one piece at a time, or add it on to his current system.

"With the building block approach, a consumer gets to pick and choose his components to fit his tastes and his wallet, but he should pick them with care and have a plan of what the system should finally be," says Don Palmquist, executive vice president of Yamaha Electronics Corporation, a company known for its audio components and now selling video components as well.

According to Palmquist, the most necessary element in a high quality audio/video system is a receiver with enough inputs and outputs to accommodate all of the audio and video devices that will be operated through it. He adds that convenient switching from one source to another is important.

Because most consumers starting such a system already have a sophisticated stereo, a compact disc player such as Yamaha's new CD-3, will complete the audio side if the system does not have one already.

A first video purchase might be a hi-fi VCR, which is a stereo video cassette recorder with improved audio circuitry. While these relatively new components sound fine connected to a standard TV, they offer dramatic sonic performance when played through a superior stereo system.

For the dramatic effect you get in a movie theater, Palmquist advises a "surround stereo" signal processor. Similar to four-channel audio of a decade ago; these units create the enveloping effect of a movie theater environment in a home by adding rear channels to stereo programs and can be used to add dimension and breadth to standard video programs as well.

Stereo television broadcasting is a reality and this may be the time to think about replacing your television set. The latest trend in TV receivers is the "monitor," which is a high quality TV with multiple inputs for equipment such as VCRs and video disc players, and outputs to be directly connected to the audio/video receiver.

Pass the popcorn, please.

Snuggly holiday gifts

Remember when you were a kid, and Grandpa would tell you stories of days long ago, and places far away?

He'd come in after you'd been scrubbed squeaky clean, and were all tucked up in bed, and begin weaving his magic, choosing the best stories from your favorite books. You'd snuggle down into your pillow and enter that special world that only he could create.

After the stories were told Grandpa would hug you, fluff your pillows back into shape, and turn out the light, leaving you to the sweet sleep of childhood.

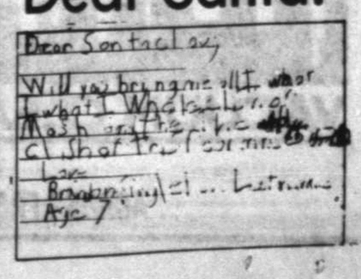

The Dreamweavers at Northern Feather remember the peace and warmth of long winter evenings spent snuggled in pillows of silky down and cushiony feathers. Their new line of pillows, the Little Mermaid Collection — named for the beloved fairy tale by Hans Christian Andersen — captures the magic of those times.

Christmas is the time to recall those days with a gift from The Little Mermaid Collection. These luxuriously soft pillows are stuffed with only the most silky and resilient natural fillings, and covered in 100 percent pure cotton to ensure peaceful nights of natural sleep.

The complete line has a pillow to suit every preference: from ultra soft to gently firm.

Give the gift that captures the sweet sleep of childhood — a pillow by the Dreamweavers.

Dear Santa:

Game that teaches kids safety is a gift that keeps on giving

This holiday, help kids stay safe and smart by giving them "Safely Home," a new board-game designed to reinforce basic rules of safe behavior.

Christmas is for children, with fun and games topping the list of family activities. Yet because it is a time for children, conscientious parents are constantly aware of keeping their precious little ones safe to enjoy the next holiday, and holidays for years to come.

Most parents take seriously the effort to teach their children the basic rules of safety. Now, they can make that instruction easier, with a new boardgame designed to reinforce safe habits and behavior.

The game, called "Safely Home," was created in cooperation with child safety experts and parents, and is manufactured by Pressman Toy Corporation, a leading game company. Suitable for children ages four to 11, its two levels of play emphasize the things children should know or do in order to avoid potentially dangerous situations and always arrive "safely home."

"We protect our children by giving them the knowledge they need to help protect themselves," says Joanne Satterelli, the game's creator and former director of identification services for the National Child Safety Council. "When that instruction is presented through play, it becomes more understandable because kids are learning while they're having fun.

Satterelli is herself the mother of two daughters, ages 9 and 11. In her years of working with children's rights organizations and law enforcement agencies, she has heard too many tragic stories of lost or missing children, and believes that instilling safe and smart behavior in children from an early age is the best way to keep them safe and sound.

Imparting that education through game play is the goal of "Safely Home." Through a basic premise of traveling through the neighborhood from school to home, the beautifully illustrated game incorporates many real-life situations and concepts in a way designed to instruct, but never frighten a child.

For instance, many neighborhoods have designated "safe homes" or "safe havens," which are houses, stores or other establishments to which children know they can safely run for help in an emergency. "Safely Home" features seven such safe spots on the game board, including a fire house and police station; and players are rewarded with a safety token each time they land on one.

In addition, the game features a police officer and a crossing guard as "trusted adults" with whom players may take shortcuts and avoid the "Stranger" on the spinner. Players are also encouraged to "buddy up" with each other and with trusted adults, and to know their full name, address and phone number, and how to dial home and "911" in an emergency.

Also, many parents have established a code word or phrase with their children, which the children are told to listen for if another adult is "sent by their parents" to pick them up. If the adult does not say the correct code word, the child is instructed not to go with him or her.

In "Safely Home," each player's mover has a secret code word affixed to the bottom. Players must remember their word during the game and spin it on the spinner in order to "go with" an "adult" game piece.

Two levels of play are possible, with no reading required in the basic game for younger kids. For older children, Safety Situation cards are used to further reinforce players' knowledge of basic safety concepts.

Each card asks a question or presents a true-to-life situation, and gives several options for response. For example, one card states: "You are at the movies with your buddy and a stranger starts bothering you." The possible responses are: "A. Ignore the stranger." or "B. Change your seats and tell an usher."

The correct answer (in this case: "If a stranger is bothering you in a movie theatre, tell a trusted adult, like an usher.") is printed on the back of each card, enabling the other players to see and learn the right response at the same time.

"The situations are all real, but they are presented in such a way that they shouldn't scare children, but rather should make them more alert to the world around them — and smart in their reactions to situations and people," Satterelli explains.

"The end result, we hope, will be to help protect our children, and even to help save lives."

To help children further relate to the safety concepts involved in "Safely Home," the game features the "Safe & Smart Team," a group of eight "friends" created to serve as role models of safe behavior. The "Safe & Smart Team" is also used to illustrate a 12-page safety tips and activity booklet that comes with each game.

"Safely Home" is available for Christmas giving at toy and other stores nationwide. †

First aid for carpet spills

The holiday season is a time for laughter, good cheer, parties and family gatherings. Unfortunately, this increase in home entertaining also means a greater chance of accidental spills that can cause unsightly stains on rugs and carpets.

With a little advance planning and some fast action once a spill occurs, it's easy to prevent serious carpet staining and damage. Here are a few tips from the carpet cleaning experts at The Eureka Company:

- Keep the necessary cleaning materials readily available for immediate action. These include a mild detergent, white vinegar, dry-cleaning fluid, some clean rags and a sponge.
- When a spill does occur, gently blot up any excess liquid from the area with a clean rag. Scrape away any semi-solid materials.
- To clean oily or greasy foodstuffs (coffee, tea, milk, chocolate, gravy, salad dressing, ice cream, sauces and egg), apply dry-cleaning fluid with a clean rag and let dry. Don't soak the carpet; use only enough fluid as required for the spot. After the area is completely dry, gently vacuum. Repeat application if needed.
- For spots not requiring dry-cleaning fluid, use this simple cleaning solution. Mix one teaspoon each of detergent and vinegar in a quart of warm water. Apply with a clean rag, being careful not to soak through the carpet. Blot up any excess solution with a clean rag.

Have a merry gingerbread X-mas at Mission Dorado

By Gigi McKinney
Advertising Feature Writer

Several members of the Executive Chef's staff at Mission Dorado Country Club decided to have a little creative fun in their work this Christmas.

For the past two months, five staff members, including Robert J. Vervynck, Executive Chef; Bonnie Rochelle; Pedro Florez; Hector Jovan and Christopher C. Cook have been planning and constructing a gingerbread Christmas land.

This is not your average everyday big cookie. Vervynck said that approximately 600 pounds of powdered sugar, 40 pounds of egg whites, 200 pounds of flour and four pounds of ginger were used to complete the project.

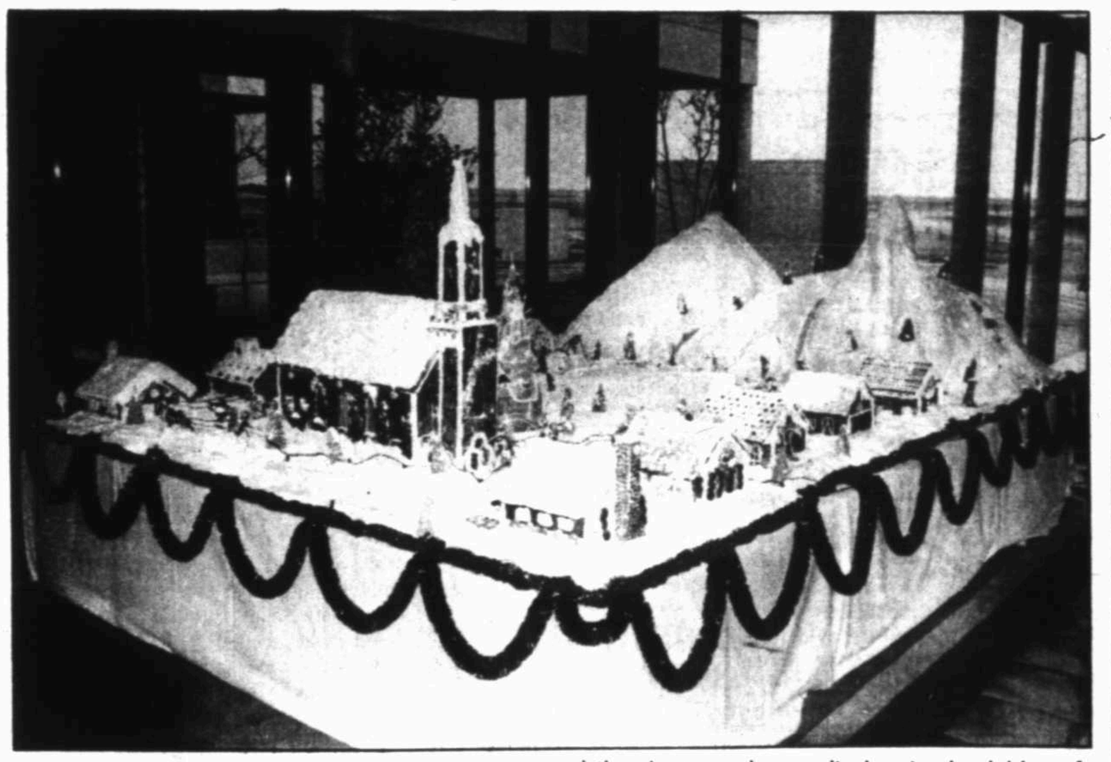

"Each person did their part on their own time," Vervynck said.

And what a completion it is. Upon fluffy mounds of snow, two rows of gingerbread houses, each with its own decor, look upon a large church with a tall steeple and stained glass windows. By narrow snowy trails, the imaginary inhabitants of this village can climb to the tops of the two mountain peaks. The entire scene is illuminated with tiny soft white Christmas lights.

Not to be outdone, the staff at The Odessa Petroleum Club has constructed the "offspring" of this project, a life-size gingerbread house which decorates the lobby of the establishement.

Without a doubt, both projects are works of art to appreciate, but since they are edible, well why not?!!

Bon appetit!

The chef's staff at Mission Dorado Country Club proudly displays their interpretation of a snowy "gingerbread" Christmas village. This depiction is currently on display in the lobby of Mission Country Club for members and staff to enjoy during the holiday season.

This year share holiday memories with pictures

Remember last year's holiday pictures? Great shots of the kids under the tree, the whole family gathered around a table and Mom in her bathrobe in charge of the day's festivities.

A few simple tips from Instants, the Polaroid Photography Club magazine, can improve your picture taking this holiday season and result in an album you'll be proud to share throughout the year.

Move in close. The best pictures fill the frame against a simple background.

Pay attention to composition. Move around, consider whether the poinsettia next to Grandma adds seasonal color or hides her holiday hairdo.

Watch for good people shots. Pictures of your family and friends over the holidays will be among your favorites. Give your subjects something to do or shoot people doing something, unaware of the camera. Nothing beats a picture of a first hug or kiss when aunts and uncles arrive from out of town.

For more information, call toll-free (800) 225-1384 or send your name, address and $6.00 to Polaroid Photography Club, Box 10221, Des Moines, IA 50336.

Your holiday pictures give family and friends the chance to share holiday memories year-round. Instant pictures can be shared immediately and be part of holiday happenings.

The legend, the lifestyle, the fragrance

La Belle Epoque was a time of unparalleled luxury and good living, where beautiful women reigned supreme. It was this period in history that spawned the legendary Maxim's restaurant in Paris.

Almost a century later, Maxim's de Paris Perfume was created and like its namesake, the Maxim's fragrance cannot be categorized. Its exquisite bouquet is a very mysterious fusion of rare floral essences and Oriental subtleties. Narcisse, mimosa, genet, ylang-ylang and orange flower are its heady topnotes, interplayed with the freshness of mandarin, lemon and Borgeons de Cassis, and the sensuous warmth of Bulgarian rose, jasmine, tuberose and muguet. The coup de grace: subtle notes of amber, musk and moss, laced with soft spices, romanced with precious woods, patchouli and incense.

The Maxim's bottle captures the ambience of timeless luxury and splendor. For the parfum, a sleek black flacon is adorned with a graceful golden cartouche, directly replicated from the design of the Grand Mirror in the dining salon, and then wittily capped in red — inspired by the red caps of the "chasseurs" who welcome Maxim's distinguished guests.

Although this fragrance is enchanting anytime, it seems to have been created especially for the vibrancy of the Christmas season. But to celebrate the spirit of Christmas gift-giving, Parfums Maxim's de Paris has created several unique gifts:

La Robe de Bain, a luxurious red satiny kimono-style wrap detailed with black lace. It comes with ⅛ oz. miniature parfume deluxe and it's only $15 with any Maxim's de Paris purchase.

La Montre de Maxim's, a custom-designed watch to keep track of those fleeting moments; it has a black face, indexes of gold and a black leather strap. With ⅛ oz. miniature parfum deluxe sample, it's only $19.50 with any Maxim's fragrance purchase.

Le Cartouche de Soie, an oblong fringed silk scarf in black with a swirling red and gold signature cartouche at each end. In an elegant gift presentation accompanied by 1.7 oz. Eau de Toilette Spray, it retails for $30.

In addition, two gifts, ideal to use as stocking-stuffers, are being offered this season:

La Surprise de Automne, a seductive lace hanky in red or black, it comes with ¼ oz. sample of Maxim's luxurious body lotion plus an ⅛ oz. of the parfum deluxe sample. A gift with any purchase from the fragrance collection.

Le Mystere en Rouge, another gift with any purchase from the fragrance collection — an elegant refillable ½ oz. Eau de Toilette purse spray in black, gold and red, cached in red tissue tied by a red ribbon.

Maxim's de Paris for Christmas and forever after.

Restaurant tipping

The general rule of thumb is to leave 15 to 20 percent. The more expensive the restaurant, the higher the percentage, because often at a finer restaurant, you generally have more people waiting on you, thus more people to tip.

Bartender: Ten to 15 percent for drinks ordered at the bar while waiting for your table.

Waiter/waitress: Fifteen percent, or more for excellent service.

Captain (the person who seats you, and, if he knows you well, can give you priority attention): Five percent. You may tip him in person as you leave or indicate the amount on the charge slip.

Wine steward: Two to five dollars, or ten percent of wine cost. You may tip him as you leave the restaurant.

Coat check: One dollar for one coat; if there is more than one, 50 cents per coat. Even if there's a charge for checking coats, the attendant should be tipped.

Dolphins swim closer to AFC East crown

AP Laserphoto

Miami fullback Ron Davenport celebrates his touchdown in a 30-27 victory over New England Monday to put the Dolphins closer to the NFL playoffs.

New England chokes on Orange jinx

MIAMI (AP) — The Miami Dolphins live. New England's Orange Bowl jinx lives.

And they live because of Fuad Reveiz and Glenn Blackwood, with an assist from quarterback Dan Marino.

The Dolphins beat the New England Patriots 30-27 Monday night on Reveiz's third long field goal of the night — a 47-yarder through a steady rain with 4:27 left in the game.

It left Miami at 11-4 and needing only to beat the 2-13 Buffalo Bills next Sunday to clinch their third straight AFC East title. The only way for Miami to miss the playoffs is if New England, the New York Jets and Denver Broncos all win their final games and Miami loses to Buffalo by more than 39 points.

HANDING NEW England its 18th straight loss in the Orange Bowl wasn't easy. New England overcame a 14-point fourth-quarter deficit by scoring two touchdowns within 15 seconds. Then, after Reveiz's field goal, Blackwood's second interception of the game, with 56 seconds left, clinch it.

The Patriots, 10-5, can qualify for a wild-card playoff berth by beating Cincinnati at home on Sunday and could still win the title if Miami and the Jets lose next Sunday.

"We find ways to keep it interesting," Miami Coach Don Shula said. "We had a two-touchdown lead and all of a sudden they tied the game."

Both kickers fared well despite the wet conditions, "but fortunately, our kicker hit the last one," Shula said.

"You have to put the weather out of your mind," Reviez said. "When you think about it, you start putting things in your head you don't have to."

The Dolphins seemed to put the game away on Ron Davenport's second one-yard touchdown run that gave them a 27-13 lead with 11:08 left.

But Mosi Tatupu dove over from one yard out at the end of a seven-play, 72-yard drive with 7:22 left to bring New England within a touchdown.

Joe Carter, earlier a hero for Miami, fumbled the kickoff when he was hit by Rod McSwain at the 18. New England's Cedric Jones picked up the ball and rambled in from 16 yards out to tie it.

Miami drove 39 yards in seven plays to set up the winning kick by Reveiz, a rookie from Tennessee who earlier had kicks of 44 and 49 yards. The key play in the winning drive was a 17-yard pass to Mark Duper from Marino, who joined San Diego's Dan Fouts as the only quarterbacks to twice throw for more than 4,000 yards in a season. Marino finished with 17 completions in 33 attempts for 192 yards and now has 4,001 yards for the season.

"When we had to come through, we did," Marino said. "Early in the second half, we made some mistakes, but we didn't make mistakes when the game was on the line."

"I thought Marino did some outstanding things," Shula said. "You have to play in all kinds of weather and Marino doesn't seem to care what the weather conditions are like"

The game began with a rash of turnovers.

Miami's Bud Brown picked off an Eason pass, but New England's Raymond Clayborn did the same against Marino.

Then New England's Tony Collins fumbled at his own 39 and Brown recovered for Miami to set up the first score of the evening. Five plays later, Marino, given plenty of time, hit Joe Rose with a 6-yard touchdown pass to give the Dolphins a 7-0 lead.

New England, aided by a 41-yard connection from Eason to Stephen Starring, moved 67 yards to tie the game. The touchdown came on Eason's 10-yard pass to Irving Fryar.

Reveiz kicked a 44-yard field goal 6:10 into the second quarter gave Miami a 10-7 lead. It came at the end of a 54-yard drive that was effectively halted by a sack of Marino by Andre Tippett.

DAVENPORT MADE it 17-7 with 3:18 left in the half, going the final yard of a 50-yard, eight-play drive. The Dolphins got most of the yardage on the ground, with the seldom-used Carter accounting for 25 yards on two carries and Woody Bennett's 9-yard run moving the ball to the New England 1-yard-line.

The half ended as it had begun, with turnovers.

Miami drove into New England territory only to lose the ball when Tippett sacked Marino and Garin Veris recovered the fumble at the Patriot 39. Two plays later, Blackwood picked off Eason's deep pass intended for Fryar.

New England cut it to 17-10 midway through the third quarter, and had a chance to tie after Tony Nathan's fumble was recovered at the Dolphin 20 by Don Blackmon.

But the Miami defense, led by Blackwood and Bob Brudzinski, stiffened inside the 10 and forced New England to settle for Tony Franklin's 22-yard field goal. Miami got those points back when Reveiz kicked a 49-yarder three minutes later.

Franklin's 49-yarder on the first play of the fourth quarter cut it to 20-13, but only after an illegal motion call on tight end Lin Dawson had nullified a successful fourth-and-one play that had carried New England to the Miami 23.

Davenport added his second scoring run with 11:08 left at the end of a 65-yard drive. The drive was highlighted by a 30-yard pass interference call against Ernest Gibson that put the ball at the one.

'Dogs roll from 4-5A gate

Defending champions fall, 43-40

By ERIC SCHUKEK
Sports Writer

It didn't matter where the points came from, not to Midland High girls basketball coach Jane Young, as long as they came.

And the points did come in MHS' District 4-5A opening 43-40 win over defending champion Odessa Permian Monday night at Chaparral Center. They came from one expected source in the form of 17 from leading scorer Amy Cumings, and from an unexpected source, in three straight clutch free throws by reserve Angie Shaw, a 1.1 points per game scorer.

Shaw's free throws stretched a two-point lead to five, 39-34 with 2:26 to go in the game and kept safe the Bulldogs seventh win of the season in their attempt for a second straight state playoff appearance. MHS is 7-5, 1-0 in 4-5A play. The Panthers fell to 0-1, 7-5 on the season.

"We finally got some free throws — and from someone who doesn't usually make them," MHS coach Jane Young said of Shaw, who totaled five points and three rebounds, all in the second half. "Angie played a super game off the bench for us, and although she is a guard, she is one of our better rebounders.

"Amy Hubbard was playing real well but she got into foul trouble with four fouls in the first half and I went to Angie. And then she did such a good job I left her in there."

THE FINE play from Cumings is more expected.

The junior is the Bulldogs' leading scorer at 12.5 points a game and one of their top rebounders. Cumings and Sebrenia Finch each grabbed nine against the Panthers to lead MHS. But as Young adds, Cumings is also the team leader in assists.

"Everyone is always looking for the open person, and that is particularly true of Amy (Cumings)," Young said.

The Bulldogs opened the game in the same doldrums that plagued them in the weekend's Tall City Tournament, scoring only four points in the first quarter. If Permian, which scored just six in the quarter, hadn't been nearly as flat as the Bulldogs, MHS would've found it more difficult than they did to catch up.

As it was, MHS had enough trouble.

Although MHS outscored the Panthers 17-16 in the second quarter, it took a 10-4 spurt to do it. Trailing 18-11, Young had her 'Dogs pressure the ball in the front court. The result was a string of Permian turnovers and MHS fast break baskets. The buckets pulled the Buldogs within one, 22-21, as Cumings layed one in at the halftime buzzer.

"I think that spurt right before the half was the turning point for us," Young said.

THE PANTHER lead finally ran out of gas at 4:36 of the third quarter when Cumings converted a Panther technical into a free throw to knot the score at 24. Thirty seconds later, Cumings grabbed a loose ball and took it the length of the floor for a lay-up and a 26-24 lead.

Although Permian tied the game once more at 26, three straight buckets by Finch, 11 points on the night, and some later free throws by Shaw saw to it that the Bulldogs never trailed again.

"I think this was a really big win for us because it was against the district champions. We played with more intensity than we have in some of our past games, though the kids said they were scared to death before the game. I just told them 'They're probably just as scared as you are.'"

"Anytime you can hold a team as good as Permian to that many points (40), you know you've done a good job."

The Panthers were plagued by poor shooting, both from the floor and at the free throw line. Mojo could only hit on 34 per cent from the field, and just two of eight at the stripe. MHS was slightly better at 40 per cent and seven of 18 free throws.

The Bulldogs will return to 4-5A action on Friday when they travel cross town to play Midland Lee at 8 p.m. in the Lee Gym.

IN THE junior varsity game, MHS again was the winner, 52-43, with Sheryl Spirling throwing in 22 points and Terri Cecil adding 12.

Midland High honors fall athletes

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Midland High's purple and gold gathered at the Midland Center Monday night to honor their athletes for their accomplishments during the 1985 fall season. All the athletes, that is, except girls volleyball.

Because the girls on the volleyball team make up a good portion of the MHS girls basketball team, and since they were playing in their District 4-5A opener Monday night, the volleyball players will be honored in the spring banquet.

Cross-country coach John Ford led off the introduction of athletes. In 1985, MHS' boys finished second in district competition and competed in the regional meet in Lubbock.

John Fernandez and Valdemar Ruiz were selected to the All-District cross country squad and both were team captains this year.

Jose Hernandez was named the boys Most Valuable Player while Nathalie Thevenaz received the honor for the girls. Brad Clark and Thevenaz were also honored for their achievements in the class room, leading their teams in grade point average.

Sophomore of the year honors went to Junior Natividad.

Doug McCutchen followed with awards for the football team.

James Campbell, a two-way starter, was named Outstanding Lineman for his performance this year while Jake Madrid, another two-way player, was named Most Valuable Player.

Two players tied for Fighting Bulldog Award, Steve Pruitt and Chuck Dozier. Special Teams Award went to junior, Jaime Madrid.

The final football honor was the Theresa Klapproth Award, an award Klapproth, an MHS math teacher started in the 1960s.

"This award is presented to the football player whose grade point best exemplifies what Theresa Klapproth stood for," said McCutchen.

Mack Harrison, with a 4.46 GPA and 14th ranking in the '85 class, received the honor.

The featured speaker for the banquet was Texas Tech defensive coordinator and former Midland Lee head football coach Spike Dykes.

Dykes directed his talk to the athletes, about what they need to do for their futures. His talk centered around winning.

"A lot of you fail to realize the importance of your life," said Dykes. "Right now is the most important. In the next few months you have to make some major decisions that will influence the rest of your lives. You'll have to decide what to do with the rest of your lives. You have to make those decisions by yourself. What are you going to be?

Gordon Wood: Banquet feast with only salad plate

By DAVID CASSTEVENS
Dallas Morning News

BROWNWOOD (AP) — When Jim Wood was in the third grade, each member of his class was asked to write a letter to his hero. One kid chose Johnny Unitas. Another Don Meredith.

"It was easy for me," Wood recalled. "My hero was my dad."

Jim Wood grew up. He is 26 now, married, the father of a 13-week-old son.

But Wood never outgrew the boyish admiration he held for his father. His dad never gave him reason to. So it wasn't easy for him. Nor was it easy for Jim's mother, with whom he sat, the two of them tightly clutching each other's hand, sharing the tie that binds.

BOTH KNEW this day would come. One day, someday, the old man would retire. No one can coach forever. Not Paul Brown. Not George Halas. Not Vince Lombardi. Not even Gordon Wood, who has won more football games — 405 — than any other coach at any level, ever, the aforementioned included.

Writing about the life and times of Brownwood's Gordon Wood is a little like standing before a banquet buffet with only a salad plate in your hand. You're frustratingly unequipped. There is more to be sampled than space allows.

He grew up near Abilene, the son of a farmer. As a kid, he picked cotton. Although poor, his father was proud, and told his son the day he died, "I don't owe a dime to any man. But if you find one I do, will you pay him?" As Gordon recalls, "I never did, 'cause I never found one."

It was not riches Gordon dreamed about. If money was his motivation, he never would have gone into high school coaching — or remained there for 45 years. His first job, as assistant coach in Spur, paid $900 a year. Wood took home $73.25 a month, less $1.75 for teachers' retirement. He coached football, basketball and track. He taught four classes. He also drove the bus.

The jobs he held during his early years sound like a conductor's call of stops along the railroad line. Rule. Roscoe. Winters. At Stamford, he won two state titles.

IN 1960, the year after Jim was born, Wood became head coach at Brownwood, where he immediately produced a state championship. A lot of coaches are victims of high expectations. You know fans: Give them an inch and they want a first down. After Brownwood won the state title, the locals decided they liked it. They called for another. Wood gave them six more, the last in 1981.

Times change. Attitudes change. Wood began his career in simpler, less complicated times. Years ago, what the coach said was law. No ifs, ands or buts. He could tell a kid to get a haircut without the Civil Liberties Union getting into it. "No pass, no play" was a warning the coach gave his quarterback who refused to throw the ball, even on third and long.

Although the social climate has changed, Wood has remained an enduring constant. He has not compromised his principles. His formula for success was no different this year than it was back in the mid-1970s when his son played for him.

"I think a lot of coaches know Xs and Os better than him, and he would probably tell you that," Jim Wood said. "But nobody knows more about people than he does." Jim thought back to his schoolboy days and smiled. "When you mess up, he can make you feel THAT small," he said, holding thumb and index finger an inch apart. "He makes you feel like you're disappointing him, the school, the whole community. He appeals to your pride."

THE YOUNGER Wood recalled a practice the week before a big game against Vernon. That day, nothing went right. One player after another missed his assignment. Finally, Wood had his fill.

"Get off the field!" Gordon screamed. Jim and his teammates looked at each other, then at the coach, dumbstruck.

"I said, get off the field!" Wood bellowed, his big jowly face flushed with genuine rage. Timidly, the players silently filed into the locker room, cowering beneath the coach's thunder. Jim dreaded going home that night, so fearful was he that his dad might vent his wrath on family members, which the head of the house never, ever did.

Next day, Wood called his players together and told them that if they made just one mistake he was going to leave the team home. He would play Vernon with his junior varsity. Practice went perfect. Brownwood won the game, 25-0.

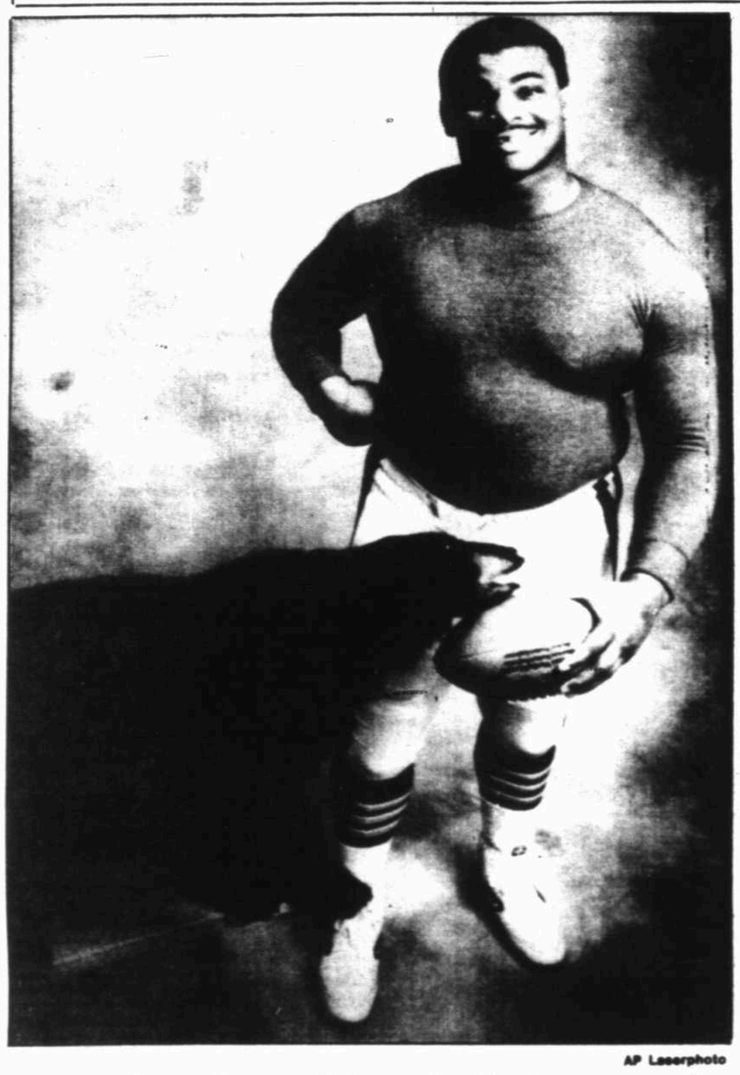

Years later, Jim asked his father if he was serious about his threat. Would he really have played the JV? "Son," Wood said, "that's something you'll never know, will you?"

Wood kept the community guessing this week as to whether he would retire. The school board had offered him a four-year contract. If Wood coached one more year, he would receive an additional $250 a month in retirement pay.

BUT MONEY has never been that important to this man. Until three years ago, Wood was among the lowest paid coaches in the district.

He is 71. His wife has been ill. He has a grandchild, who is named for him, Thomas Gordon Wood.

So the winningest coach in history did what his heart told him to do Saturday, although it was obvious that announcing his decision at a press conference was not easy for him. Eyes brimming, Gordon Wood said that because of "family considerations" he was reluctantly retiring as a football coach. To Jim, now himself a coach, the old man never stood taller.

William "The Refrigerator" Perry takes his place among other sports celebrities who model underwear by appearing in longjohns. The ads are scheduled to appear next month.

'Fridge' turns to underwear

LAKE FOREST, Ill. (AP) — William "The Refrigerator" Perry, the Chicago Bears' rookie who already has everything — fame, fortune and now his own underwear advertisement — said he wasn't expecting anything special for his 23rd birthday Monday.

But the 308-pound defensive tackle is looking to follow former major league pitcher Jim Palmer into advertising stardom as an underwear model.

"It's just another day," said Perry of his birthday, although his mother probably thought otherwise when the 13½-pound infant arrived.

"I'll have to wait and see if my wife's got anything special cooking for me when I get home," he said.

Even if the birthday brings no special presents, Perry figures being an adult makes it easier to take.

"Because my birthday always came so close to Christmas, my mom wouldn't buy me anything and she'd tell me to wait until Christmas," Perry recalled.

"But things are going so well for me now, I don't think I'd mind if I have to wait for Christmas," he added.

Perry's underwear ads will be different from those of the lithe Palmer, the former Baltimore pitcher who posed in briefs.

Perry will appear in double Extra Large-sized longjohns.

Shortly after the National Football League season began, Bears equipment manager Ray Earley asked Royal Textile Mills, of Yanceyville, N.C., for an especially large set of its ThermaForm long underwear for Perry.

"Somebody said, 'It would make a great ad — We Keep The Refrigerator Warm,'" said Mark Atwater, president of Royal.

After a Chicago practice last week, a photographer spent four hours taking pictures of Perry and a 100-pound trained bear.

The ad is scheduled to appear in trade publications and sporting goods store displays beginning in January, Atwater said.

Royal Textile said that it tossed its ad budget out the window for the campaign, although neither the firm nor its ad agency will disclose precise costs.

Steve Luquire, partner in Luquire George Andrews Inc., the ad agency for the underwear company, only would say that the initial fee is in the thousands of dollars and Perry will get a percentage of gross sales.

Cubs acquire Astros' Mumphrey

Associated Press

The addition of major league veteran Jerry Mumphrey to the Chicago Cubs' lineup should give the team a needed boost in the outfield, says Cubs President Dallas Green.

"We feel Jerry can help us fortify our outfield situation," Green said Monday through a club spokesman. "The addition of Jerry gives us increased depth." Green is out of the country on vacation.

Cubs officials announeed Monday that Mumphrey, a 10-year major league veteran, had been acquired from the Houston Astros in exchange for outfielder Billy Hatcher and a player to be named later.

Mumphrey, 33, a switch-hitting outfielder, hit .277 in 130 games for Houston in 1985, with 25 doubles, eight home runs and 61 RBIs.

Hatcher, 26 and a former Midland Cub, hit .245 in 53 games with the Cubs in his first extensive major league service, and .280 in 67 games with Class AAA Iowa of the American Association.

"We hated to include a player of Hatcher's potential in the deal," said Chicago's assistant general manager John Cox. "But to get a player of Mumphrey's caliber, we had little choice."

Astros Manager Hal Lanier said he was impressed with Hatcher's performance with the Cubs.

"I liked his speed and the way he played defense," Lanier said. "Billy is the kind of player who is in the mold of the way we want to build the ball club. He is very aggressive and enthusiastic."

Mumphrey, who plays all three outfield positions, has a career batting average of .287 with 52 homers and 490 RBIs.

He came up to the majors with St. Louis to stay in 1976, and has also played with San Diego and the New York Yankees. He batted .307 and .300 with the Yankees in 1981 and 1982, his best seasons.

Hatcher was originally selected by the Cubs in the January 1981 free-agent draft and never batted less than .276 in his five minor league seasons.

The Cubs last week acquired four-time Gold Glove infielder Manny Trillo from the San Francisco Giants in a swap for infielder and another former Midland Cub Dave Owen.

In other baseball news Monday, it was announced that Texas Rangers pitcher Dickie Noles and outfielder Ellis Valentine will become free agents Friday, bringing the American League teams' major league roster to 38, a club official said.

Noles and Valentine were not offered 1986 contracts, said Tom Grieve, vice president and general manager.

Noles, 29, was 4-8 with a 5.06 earned run average in 28 games and 13 starts during 1985. He was acquired from the Chicago Cubs on July 1, 1984, and has a major league record of 29-36 in six seasons.

Valentine, 31, signed with the Rangers July 10 and assigned to Oklahoma City. He batted .314 with 10 homers and 34 runs batted in during 46 games with the 89ers. He joined the Rangers on Sept. 9 and hit .211 with two homers and four runs batted in during 11 games.

The Cleveland Indians have traded minor-league pitcher Rich Thompson, who spent most of the 1985 season with Cleveland, to the Milwaukee Brewers for minor-league pitcher Scott Roberts.

Thompson, 27, was 3-8 with five saves and a 6.30 earned run average for the Indians last season.

The right-hander was on Cleveland's Class AAA Maine roster when he was dealt. He was assigned to the Brewers' Class AAA Vancouver team.

The right-handed Roberts, 26, was 8-4 with a 5.84 ERA in 24 games, including 14 starts, with Class AA El Paso and Class AAA Vancouver in 1985. He was assigned to Cleveland's Maine roster.

Baltimore outfielder Leo Hernandez has been sent to the New York Yankees to complete a trade made last week, Orioles General Manager Hank Peters announced Monday.

Last week the Orioles traded outfielder Gary Roenicke and a player to be named later — Hernandez — to the Yankees for pitcher Rich Bordi and infielder Rex Hudler.

Hernandez, 26, had 17 home runs and 69 runs batted in in 124 games at Rochester last season. He was recalled in September, but hit only .048 in 12 games.

Alabama nabs 1,000th cage win

Associated Press

It's not exactly an exclusive club these days but you won't hear anybody at the University of Alabama complaining about that.

Alabama became the 35th school to win 1,000 college basketball games when it rolled over Florida State 100-89 Monday night.

Buck Johnson scored 23 points, leading five Alabama players in double figures as the 6-0 Crimson Tide earned win No. 1,000. Wimp Sanderson, now in his sixth season as head coach, has been a part of 420 triumphs in his career as an assistant and head man at Tuscaloosa.

"It's a great moment for our program," said Sanderson, who was forced into some unusual substitution patterns when Alabama got into serious foul trouble. He rotated three players at center in the second half, and he saw the Seminoles grab a brief lead before the Tide rallied.

"WE DIDN'T do a very good job with the zone so I decided to gamble a little early in the second half and put Derrick McKey back in there when he was in foul trouble. I wanted to win so bad I just put everything on the line."

The Crimson Tide hit 62 percent from the field in the opening half, after which it led 51-37.

McKey contributed a 14-point, nine-rebound performance in the opening 20 minutes, but then went to the bench with foul problems in the second half. Johnson saw some duty at center with McKey sidelined and he hit two free throws to give Alabama the lead for good with 7:50 left.

Jim Farmer scored 19 for Alabama, while Terry Coner had 18, McKey 16 and Mark Gottfried 14. McKey grabbed 13 rebounds before fouling out.

Pee Wee Barber led Florida State, 4-2, with 23 points.

Only one ranked team played Monday night, with No. 11 Louisiana State downing Lamar 74-57.

Elsewhere, it was Clemson 89, Baptist 63; Northeastern 75, Stetson 61; Marshall 72, E. Michigan 65; Missouri 72, Southern Illinois 44; Murray State 70, Bowling Green 63 in overtime; New Orleans 84, Oregon Tech 70; Creighton 92, Austin Peay 64; Drake 74, William Jewell 66; Iowa State 95, South Dakota 58; Texas-El Paso 69, Centenary 63; Fullerton State 91, Seattle 39, and Nevada-Reno 92, Santa Clara 61.

College Basketball

LSU 74, Lamar 57

Guard Don Redden scored 19 points and had eight rebounds to pace a balanced Louisiana State. Before a record crowd of 9,432 at Lamar's Montagne Center, the 6-foot-6 senior scored 11 of his game-high total in the first half as LSU built a 41-31 lead.

John Williams scored 16 points and grabbed 13 rebounds for the Tigers, 8-0, while James Gulley and James Nance each had 17 points for 5-2 Lamar in the Cardinals' worst loss at home in 10 years.

"This was our most consistent performance of the year," LSU Coach Dale Brown said. "I can think of only 1½ minutes in the second half where we did not play well."

Unranked

Reserve guard Glenn Corbit scored 10 points in the final five minutes of the first half to send Clemson past Baptist, S.C. It was the eighth win without a loss for the host Tigers, who got 22 points from Larry Middleton.

Forward Reggie Lewis scored 19 points to lead visiting Northeastern over Stetson. Marshall, another visitor, was paced by Tom Curry with 24 points, and never trailed Eastern Michigan.

Derrick Chievous scored 17 points and Dan Bingenheimer added 15 in Missouri's runaway victory. Murray State, led by Chuck Glass' 20 points, survived a late comeback in regulation and defeated Bowling Green. Brian Miller hit a 15-foot shot for Bowling Green with 30 seconds left to send the game into overtime.

Ronnie Grandison had 14 points and 11 rebounds to lead New Orleans, 4-0. The Privateers never trailed the Owls, who were forced into 27 turnovers.

Gary Swain scored 20 points to lead Creighton, which outrebounded Austin Peay 21-5 on its way to a 42-25 halftime lead. Iowa State cruised to its seventh victory in eight starts, with Jeff Grayer's 23 points leading the way.

Center Dave Feitl and guard Quintan Gates had 16 points and six rebounds each to lead Texas-El Paso past Centenary. The Miners, 7-1, led all the way.

B&G Energy wins soccer title

From Staff Reports

B&G Energy of Midland won the Permian Basin Soccer Association's Coed Soccer tournament over the weekend, defeating Crazy Horse by a 4-1 score in the finals.

Jeanni Copeland led the B&G charge, scoring two goals in the championship game. Other goals came from Javier Castillo and Mike Rodgers. Goalkeeper Kevin Rodgers had a big tournament, allowing only four goals to the opposition in four games.

On the way to the title, B&G Energy had victories over Gold Rush, 3-2; Exxon, 9-1; and Strikers, 5-0. The Strikers were the tournament's defending champion.

Consolation honors went to the Odessa Americans with a 1-0 win over Gold Rush.

North Carolina stays at poll top

Associated Press

North Carolina, which won its only game last week by 42 points, remained the No. 1 college basketball team today in The Associated Press Top Twenty.

The Tar Heels, who are undefeated in seven games and have scored 99 or more points in four of those victories, received 45 first-place votes and 1,260 points from the nationwide panel of sportswriters and broadcasters. North Carolina blasted Ohio University 99-57 last Saturday.

Michigan, 9-0, remains second in the voting with 14 first-place votes and 1,191 points and Duke, Syracuse and Georgetown round out the first five as they did last week.

Duke, 8-0, received four-first place votes and 1,146 points, while Syracuse, 6-0, had 1,073 points and Georgetown had the other first-place vote and 980 points.

Kansas, which was seventh in the poll last week, defeated then-No. 9 Kentucky 83-66 over the weekend to improve to 8-1 and vault to sixth with 938 points, while Georgia Tech, 4-1, did not play last week yet fell from its fifth-place tie with Georgetown.

Oklahoma, 8-0, was pressed into overtine before defeating Texas 93-92 over the weekend but held No. 8 in the poll with 775 points.

Louisiana State, 8-0, jumped from 11th to ninth with 713 points, while Memphis State, 7-0, improved from 12th to round out the Top Ten with 647 points.

St. John's, which beat UCLA 69-65 in a nationally televised game Saturday, improved to 8-1 and leads the Second Ten followed by Nevada-Las Vegas, Kentucky, Alabama-Birmingham, Illinois, Louisville, Indiana, DePaul, Notre Dame and Virginia Tech.

Last week's Second Ten was Louisiana State, Memphis State, Nevada-Las Vegas, St. John's, Louisville, Alabama-Birmingham, Notre Dame, Indiana, DePaul and Ohio State.

AP Top 20 Cage Poll

Kentucky, 5-1, fell four spots despite its loss being to a higher-ranked team, Kansas. The Wildcats were forced to play much of the second half without leading scorer and rebounder Kenny Walker who experienced double vision after being hit in the eye with an elbow by a teammate.

Illinois, 6-2, fell from 10th to 15th after splitting its two games last week. The Illini lost to Tennessee 54-51 before rallying for a 102-92 victory over Houston.

Ohio State, 5-1, fell from the poll after joining the Top Twenty last week. The Buckeyes lost their only game last week — a 79-70 overtime decision to Arkansas.

Virginia Tech is the only newcomer to the poll. The Hokies, 7-1, suffered their only defeat in their season opener, falling to Michigan, 67-66, in the first round of the Silversword Invitational in Hawaii.

Rebel girls rout Bronchos, 80-45

From Staff Reports

The Midland Lee girls opened their District 4-5A basketball season in high style Monday night, posting an 80-45 blow out of Odessa High to pull into a four-way deadlock in first place.

Midland High, San Angelo and Abilene High were all winners in opening night action Monday. But Lee, edged out of a post-season berth in a one-game playofff with the Bulldogs last season, took no chances in bucking the Bronchos. Lee jumped out to a 10-point halftime lead, then stretched it to 24 by outscoring OHS 26-12 in the third quarter.

Three Rebels, led by junior Roz Eaden's 14 points, crashed the double digit mark. Senior Vickie Smith hit for her season-high with 12 points and Tina Swinney tossed in 10 points for Lee. The Rebs are now 1-0, 7-4 and OHS fell to 0-1, 5-8.

Lee will return to 4-5A play on Friday when they host Midland High at 8 p.m. at the Lee Gym.

Elswhere in 4-5A girls action, San Angelo jumped out to a 19-2 advantage over Abilene Cooper and coasted home for a 63-46 win in San Angelo and Abilene High nipped Big Spring 50-42 in Abilene.

The Bobcats are 1-0, 6-5 while Cooper's Cougars fell to 0-1, 1-12. AHS upped its mark 8-5, while the Steers dropped to 5-7.

Third string quarterback joins Dallas football lore

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Steve Pelluer's biggest claim to National Football League fame until had been that his brother, Scott, plays linebacker for the New Orleans Saints.

No more.

Pelluer is firmly entrenched in Dallas Cowboys' lore now as the third-string quarterback who brought Dallas a division-clinching 28-21 victory Sunday over the New York Giants.

The 1984 fifth-round draft pick from the Washington Huskies had never taken an NFL snap until Sunday. But he drove Dallas 72 yards for the game-winning touchdown in the fourth period.

"Pelluer never changed expression when I sent him in," said Dallas Coach Tom Landry. "He's worse than I am."

Pelluer said, "I really didn't have time to think about it, which is nice."

Pelluer was needed after starting quarterback Danny White had been sidelined with a shoulder bruise and Gary Hogeboom had suffered a concussion.

With Dallas leading 21-14, Pelluer took the Cowboys on a drive highlighted by a 28-yard pass to rookie Karl Powe on third and 15. The completion to the Giants' 24 set up Timmy Newsome's one-yard scoring run.

"This probably surpasses anything I've ever done," said Pelluer. "I had some close games in college, but this has to be one of my biggest thrills."

As a sophomore at Washington, Pelluer led the Huskies to the PAC-10 title and a 28-0 victory over Iowa in the Rose Bowl.

"I had a big game once when we (The Huskies) came back in the final 20 seconds to beat Michigan and that was a big thrill," said Pelluer.

Pelluer said "I didn't feel like all the pressure was on me. I just went into the huddle and told everybody to do their job.

"It's just an unbelievable feeling."

Dallas running back Tony Dorsett said the completion to Powe "was the biggest play of the game. That enabled us to go down and score our last touchdown."

Pelluer didn't even practice with the first team during the week. He was busy impersonating Giants' quarterback Phil Simms on the scout team.

Pelluer could see some more action in San Francisco on Sunday.

White said Sunday he doubted he would play.

"It's a painful injury and I'd like to sit out for awhile and rest," said White.

Hogeboom has a slight concussion, but was expected to recover for the 49ers.

The Cowboys will meet the Los Angeles Rams either Jan. 4 or Jan. 5.

They must beat the 49ers on Sunday and the Rams must lose to the Los Angeles Raiders on Monday for the game to be played at Texas Stadium.

It was Dallas' first division title since 1981.

Dallas celebrated not with champagne but diet drinks.

"I threw Diet Coke on everyone except for Coach Landry," said defensive back Everson Walls.

Whalers settle for tie against Canadians

NHL Roundup

MONTREAL (AP) — Although the Hartford Whalers failed to come away with a victory at the Montreal Forum, they were happy with a tie.

The Whalers, the only team in the NHL still looking to taste victory at the Forum, rallied from a three-goal deficit in the final 11 minutes of the third period for a 4-4 tie with Adams Division rival Montreal in the only National Hockey League game Monday.

"We were looking for the win, but under the circumstances being down the way we were and coming back, I think everybody is happy with the point," said Stewart Gavin, whose fluke goal tied the game at 13:45 of the third period.

The point deadlocked Montreal with the Boston Bruins for second place in the Adams Division, two points behind the division-leading Quebec Nordiques, who have 36 points. The Whalers are in last place, eight points behind Quebec.

Gavin swept around Canadiens' defenseman Petr Svoboda and fired a wrist shot from a sharp angle. Montreal goaltender Steve Penney didn't have any trouble with the shot, but his rebound bounced off Larry Robinson's skate into the net for Gavin's 10th goal of the year.

"I really didn't see it . . . I just really tried to direct it toward the net," said Gavin. "The next thing I knew it went it."

After Ulf Samuelsson gave Hartford a 1-0 lead in the first period, the Canadiens got goals from Tom Kurvers, Kjell Dahlin, Bobby Smith and Ryan Walter for a 4-1 lead eight minutes into the third period.

The Whalers, however, refused to die and quickly made a game of it. Dean Evason scored at 9:10 and Wayne Babych made it 4-3 at 12:24 before Gavin got the equalizer just over a minute later.

DeBerry passes on Rice position

HOUSTON (AP) — Air Force Academy Coach Fisher DeBerry, whose name had been mentioned in connection with the head football coaching job at Rice University, said Monday he was happy with his present position.

DeBerry, completing his second season as head coach of the service academy, said he had not interviewed for the job vacated last week by Watson Brown.

"I'm very happy to serve at the Air Force," DeBerry said. "We enjoy the great state of Colorado and appreciate the support of the administration there."

Gerry Faust, who resigned Nov. 26 as head coach at Notre Dame, interviewed for the job on Saturday and is believed to be among the leading candidates for the position.

Faust spent five frustrating seasons as head coach of the Fighting Irish, compiling a 30-26-1 record.

"He has the right credentials for Rice University," a member of the Rice coaching search committee said.

Gervinless Spurs change

Associated Press

The San Antonio Spurs without George Gervin are not the same team that always seemed to win 130-125 and lose by the same score.

In the late 1970s and early 1980s, when Gervin was the National Basketball Association scoring champion four times, the Spurs won five division titles. The team's philosophy was simple: put up more shots than the other team and try to outscore them.

But over the last two seasons, that method didn't work. The Spurs lost more games than they won and even failed to make the playoffs once. At 33, Gervin's once-smooth moves were showing some hard edges, and in a bitter preseason separation, the Iceman was traded to Chicago.

"You can't just outscore other teams anymore; the NBA is changed," said veteran center Artis Gilmore. "The organization saw that coming and did something about it.

"There is more emphasis on defense around the league. The teams that are most successful — Milwaukee, the Lakers, Boston — are excellent defensive teams. We had to start playing defense, too."

The Spurs undoubtedly are scrappier on defense and more physical than the old days, but can they be as successful?

San Antonio now is 14-12; the Spurs were 41-41 last season, so the answer is in doubt.

"I think we're better," said the Spurs' leading scorer, Mike Mitchell. "We're a more physical team and we don't have to rely on one guy scoring 25 points to win."

"We can be a better team than we were last year if we can be more consistent," said Gervin's replacement at guard, second-year man Alvin Robertson. "Our division is strong, so there's no telling how far we can go. I think we are a harder team ... by that I mean that we have guys at every position who play hard."

The 6-foot-4 Robertson epitomizes the changed emphasis of the Spurs. While Gervin was almost effortless in his ability to score, effortless is not in Robertson's vocabulary — on offense or defense.

"I'll never be the scorer Gervin was, but I can do a lot of things he couldn't do as well — like rebound, pass and play defense," Robertson said.

Only the 7-2 Gilmore has more rebounds on the Spurs than Robertson, who also leads the entire NBA in steals.

After 27 games, he has 90 thefts, and four times he has recorded seven steals in a single game. Meanwhile, Gervin has only 12 steals for the Bulls.

In scoring, where Robertson seemingly takes a back seat to Gervin, the gap is not as wide as expected.

Gervin went into this season with the the highest career scoring average (27.3) of any active player, including all-time leading scorer Kareem Abdul-Jabbar. For the Bulls, however, Gervin is scoring just 15 points per game, less than a point higher than Robertson, who has improved his average in his last four outings with 29, 17, 23 and 19-point games.

"If I can make my outside shots, I'm pretty hard to stop," Robertson said. "But I have to hit my outside jumpers to be effective."

Baseball ignores free agent crop

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Baseball players and their agents claim collusion. Owners and executive contend common sense.

But whether it's a collective effort or an individual one, the result is the same: Major-league owners, having seen losses mount in the tens of millions, are moving to tighten their grip on the game.

Kirk Gibson, this year's top free-agent prize, has not heard from a single team. Nor has free-agent reliever Donnie Moore, who had 31 saves and a 1.92 earned run average last season.

Long-term contracts are suddenly harder to get. So are multimillion-dollar ones. Drug testing, which the players union has opposed, is being written into individual player contracts.

The average salary in the major leagues is more than $360,000. And owners are saying enough is enough — while stressing their actions are being done independently and individually.

"There's no question they're trying, in the course of one winter, to get back to where they were in 1975," says player agent Peter Rose.

Cleveland Indians president Peter Bavasi, whose team is for sale, plays down the trend. He says owners are just being practical.

"You're seeing a spirit of common concern by the owners," he says. "There's a fellowship coming back to the game."

Commissioner Peter Ueberroth says it's all in the best interest of the game.

"Collusion? I can't take that seriously," he said. "The losses have built up and built up and it just can't continue. Common sense has taken over."

Owners stress that their actions are being taken individually. But Lee MacPhail, a longtime baseball executive and the retiring head of the Player Relations Committee — the owners' bargaining group — recently sent a letter to owners with ideas on how to deal with future contracts.

MacPhail's letter detailed financial problems facing the game and suggested the owners be careful in giving long-term and big-money pacts.

At this year's winter meetings, usually a breeding ground for trades and a forum for free-agent discussions, several top player agents spent the week walking around, usually alone.

"There's a very, very unified effort to close off negotiations, specifically with Kirk," says Gibson's agent, Doug Baldwin. "We're at an absolute dead end right now. We haven't heard from a single team."

THIS FOLLOWS last year's winter meetings, when teams lined up to talk to free agents like Bruce Sutter, Rick Sutcliffe and Fred Lynn.

In Gibson's case, the Detroit Tigers have offered a three-year contract worth $3.9 million. Gibson wants a five-year pact. The Tigers have until Jan. 8 to sign Gibson or lose him, and in the meantime all other 25 teams are staying away.

"Not to downgrade the tremendous talents of Kirk Gibson, but maybe the other clubs feel he's not worth what the Detroit club is offering to pay him," Bavasi said.

Yet at age 28, Gibson, an outfielder who batted .287 with 29 home runs, 97 runs batted in and 30 stolen bases last season, is the kind of player who would have attracted tremendous attention in the past. In addition, procedural changes this year allow any team that wants to pursue a free agent to go after him.

Still, no takers.

"What's happening is the 26 individual clubs are individually recognizing there is a meager return on their enormous investments in free agents," Bavasi said. "We're going back to basics, like putting more money in our farm systems."

Sutter, who signed a six-year contract worth $1.25 million with the Atlanta Braves, finished with a 4.48 ERA — the worst of his career. Sutter also just underwent surgery.

Sutcliffe, the National League Cy Young Award winner in 1984, resigned for millions with the Chicago Cubs and went 8-8 last year during an injury-plagued season.

DON AASE, a journeyman reliever who finally posted good numbers with California during an injury-filled 1984, was given a multi-year, multimillion-dollar contract by Baltimore. Aase had a 3.78 ERA last season and was not what the Orioles had hoped for.

"I think the owners need to concentrate on being financially responsible, in an individual way," said Malcolm Prine, head of the consortium that recently purchased the ailing Pittsburgh Pirates. "Vigilance is required."

Adds Bavasi: "For the good players, salaries will continue to escalate. But they won't keep going up so much for the lesser players."

In some cases, teams are experimenting with other ways to reduce their costs. Several major-league teams are considering going with 24-man rosters, one under the limit.

"We have to cut back somewhere," San Diego Padres General Manager Jack McKeon said. "How often does the 25th player on a team get to play?"

Rose, who represents Moore, said the owners "felt a need to stop the salary spiral."

Regarding Moore and the attitude of the owners, Rose said he came to the winter meetings not expecting "a slew of clubs would be throwing money at our feet."

But Rose said he has not heard from a single team while the California Angels still have rights to him.

"The reaction from the clubs is that they don't need any help."

Near the end of the regular season, Tom Reich, one of the more prominent and respected agents, sent letters to all his players, advising them to be patient under current conditions.

Reich said that he thought it would be particularly tough for older free agents to get good contracts, but said that the situation might get better after Jan. 8, when teams that have not signed their free agents lose negotiating rights to them.

Richie Bry, an agent who represents the likes of Rickey Henderson and Darryl Strawberry, said the climate for players should get better soon.

Midland-bound flight turns back on 'alert' status

From Staff and Wire Reports

DALLAS — A Southwest Airlines jet destined for Midland Regional Airport made a landing under "alert" status this morning at Love Field after a light indicated low oil pressure, officials said.

Flight 328 landed without incident a few minutes before 8 a.m, after returning to Love Field. Airport fire equipment was standing by, but no one was injured or evacuated, officials said.

"It was a minor incident," said a Southwest Airline spokeswoman.

"When you have an engine shut down and a return of aircraft, it is standard operating procedure to have emergency equipment stand by," the spokeswoman said.

The plane returned to Dallas Love Field 15 minutes after taking off at 7:15 a.m. when a low oil pressure light came on. One engine was shut down and the plane returned to Love Field as a precautionary measure, the spokeswoman said.

The Boeing 737 has two engines and a shutdown of one is usually not a problem, according to Southwest and an airport tower manager.

There wasn't any sign of a fire, said John Ruth, airport operations supervisor.

Firefighter Ron Binion said more than half a dozen firefighters were put on alert for a possible emergency, but the plane landed with no apparent difficulty.

Fred DeWitt, Love Field tower manager, said, "It landed without the engine — no problem."

The cause of the low oil pressure light signal was not determined, the spokeswoman said. The plane was checked by mechanics and was rescheduled for takeoff to Midland from Love Field at 9:30 this morning.

— Southwest Airlines spokeswoman

The flight, with 75 passengers and five crew members aboard, was originally scheduled to land at the Midland Regional Airport at 8:20 a.m. today.

In a related incident, Federal Aviation Administration officials are investigating a plane landing without landing gear Monday evening at the Midland Regional Airport.

An unidentified California couple made a "very nice" aircraft landing with its "gear up" at 6:54 p.m. Monday, said Tommy Jones, assistant director of aviation.

"There was very little damage to the plane. He (the pilot) made a very nice landing without his wheels," Jones said.

"We don't know if the pilot or equipment malfunctioned," Jones said.

National Transportation Safety Board officials in Fort Worth would not release the couple's names. The couple was flying a Twin Cessna 310.

Tests show sharpening of basic skills

From Staff Reports

AUSTIN — Results from six years of assessment testing of third, fifth and ninth grade students in Texas public schools show "strong trends of improvement in student performance in basic skills."

Information on the assessment program was included in a two-volume report that the State Board of Education this month voted to adopt and submit to the Legislature as the final report on the Texas Assessment of Basic Skills (TABS) testing program.

Keith Cruse, director of student assessment for the Texas Education Agency, said data in the report indicates that students "knew more at the end of six years of testing than they did at the beginning."

In 1980, Texas began administering the test annually to measure minimum skills competencies in mathematics, reading and writing for students in the fifth and ninth grades. Third graders began taking the test in 1981.

In the first year the tests were given to ninth graders, 72 percent mastered all of the objectives on the math test, 70 percent mastered the entire reading test and 59 percent mastered the writing test.

Percentages of ninth graders who mastered all the objectives in 1985 were 84 percent in math, 78 percent in reading and 65 percent in writing.

Similar improvement trends were noted for fifth grade students.

Percentages on all the fifth grade math objectives were higher in 1985 than in 1980; percentages on nine of 11 objectives in reading were higher; and percentages for six of eight writing objectives were higher.

For third graders, the overall 1985 performance of students in mathematics was equal to or higher than that attained in all previous years on seven of the 10 objectives and performance in reading in 1985 was higher than in 1981 on all eight objectives.

In writing, a higher percentage of third graders taking the test in 1985 mastered six of seven objectives than those tested in 1981.

"This is documented proof of what schools can do," Cruse said.

The report also showed that the gap between the number of objectives mastered in math and reading by Anglo students and by black and Hispanic students is closing for all grade levels.

However, education officials stressed the need for continued emphasis on special programs to help improve the academic performances of minority students.

Volume II of the testing report included information that had not been previously reported.

For the first time, the report contains the results from every school district within the state, as opposed to listing only statewide averages.

Another section of the volume contains an analysis of student performance according to specific characteristics, such as school district size, tax rates and whether the district is urban or rural.

February 1985 marked the last time the TABS tests were administered. Beginning in the 1985-86 school year, a new assessment program required by recent education reforms will be used.

The new program has been named the Texas Educational Assessment of Minimum Skills and will be administered annually to students in all odd-numbered grades.

Sales tax rebate checks dip in Basin this month

From Staff Reports

Sales tax rebate checks for the month of December dipped in comparison to the amounts mailed to Midland and Odessa a year ago, according to a report from the State Comptroller's Office.

Midland's check was for $515,516.04, a $30,000 drop from the $547,922.90 received in December 1984. This gives the city a total of $8,898,785.73 for the calendar year to date, which is a 13.10 percent increase over last year's $7,868,290.94.

Odessa received a check for $482,366.77, which is about $92,000 below the $574,394.63 that came in December 1984. But for the calendar year, the total is still 4.64 percent above 1984's final figure. Sales tax rebates have amounted to $7,720,608.48 compared to 1984's $7,378,237.96.

The 1 cent sales tax charged by the cities is collected along with the state sales tax each month by the State Comptroller's Office, and then is rebated about two months later. The December checks reflect sales made in October.

The sales tax revenue is included in the cities' budgets each year.

Midland and Odessa weren't the only area cities seeing a drop in their checks. Big Spring's December check was written for $80,626, which is $30,000 below last December's check of $112,091. Andrews received a rebate check for $43,603, down from last year's $48,408. Lamesa got a check for $29,120, down from last year's $33,250.

According to the Comptroller's Office, Houston's check was for $9.2 million and the total payments for the year are up 3 percent over last year's. Dallas received a check for $7.7 million for a 1985 total of $112.4 million, which is a 13 percent increase.

But Austin reflected the biggest increase with a check for $2.6 million, bringing the year's payments to $44 million, which is 18 percent higher than the rebates for 1984.

TEA to stress leadership at January conference

From Staff Reports

AUSTIN — The 1986 Mid-Winter Conference, sponsored by the Texas Education Agency and scheduled for Jan. 28 and 29, will provide practical information about state education policies and programs to nearly 1,500 local school administrators.

The theme of the annual conference is "Leadership Can Make the Difference."

Fifteen of the nearly 60 work sessions planned for the two-day conference will feature representatives of individual school districts who will discuss innovative programs implemented in their schools that also could be adapted to other school districts.

Other sessions will be directed by TEA staff who will discuss state rules and regulations, especially those resulting from House Bill 72.

All conference sessions will be held at the Palmer Auditorium, located at the intersection of South First Street and West Riverside Drive in Austin.

State Board of Education Chairman Jon Brumley and Commissioner of Education Dr. W.N. Kirby will open the conference with remarks at a general session at 1:30 p.m. Jan. 28. Other members of the State Board of Education also will attend the general session.

Conference work sessions will be held from 3 to 5 p.m. Jan. 28 and from 8:30 a.m. to 12:45 p.m. Jan. 29.

Work session topics include funding for special education, reports on the Texas Educational Assessment of Minimum Skills tests, improving achievement scores, tutorials, discipline management, teacher appraisals and the teacher career ladder, school accreditation and paperwork reduction.

During the conference, informal open houses will be held at the TEA's new headquarters in the William B. Travis State Office Building, 1701 N. Congress Avenue in Austin.

Pregnancy awareness helps teens cope

AUSTIN (AP) — Community leaders in several Texas cities are making headway in helping girls and their parents learn about the problems of teen-age pregnancy, state officials said.

Rep. Wilhelmina Delco, D-Austin, said Monday that community leaders in Austin, El Paso, Houston, Dallas and other cities are getting involved in counseling programs for young women.

"There is a great deal of concern, a great deal of awareness and an increasing circle of involvement with both public and private sector effort," Ms. Delco said.

In Austin, for example, private companies and organizations have donated space, equipment and other aid to the Austin Teen Pregnancy Awareness Project, which already is helping about 40 young women, officials said.

Vera Jones, a project official, said the young women and their parents are counseled. Day care services also are available so the girls can return to school, she said.

"We've been successful in enrolling teen-age mothers back in school. Our hope is that they will become self-sufficient and independent and be able to function without the use of welfare at some point in their lives," she said.

Ms. Jones said adult volunteers are being recruited to serve as role models and counselors for young women who are pregnant.

According to the Texas Department of Human Resources, some 1,181 girls between 13 and 19 gave birth in Travis County in 1983, department spokeswoman Sally Griffin said.

Lufkin's home-town boy singing his way onto Carnegie Hallstage

By KATHY PARK

LUFKIN (AP) — What do Carnegie Hall and East Texas have in common? Both sites may claim the presence of Lufkin's Paul Hartfield by early 1986.

The "local boy" will reach a great height as a professional opera singer with his debut concert in New York on Jan. 22.

Moving to Lufkin as a teen-ager, Hartfield has made singing and music his life ever since his earlier days in the area.

"I've always hoped I could be proud of my muscial accomplishments," Hartfield said, and a Carnegie performance is definitely something a person can call a proud accomplishment.

The first step of the ladder was at Lufkin High School. Playing catch-up with junior-high-starting singers, Hartfield said choral director Buddy Feazell gave him a chance to learn, which was the beginning of his climb to professionalism. "He gave me the chance to prove myself."

Both parties seemed to have gained from the experience as Hartfield remembers Feazell's remark, "I would have been at a loss musically if Paul had not been there."

Hartfield attended Angelina College for one year and recalls music classes with Eunice Vickrey. "She was the perfect medicine for me at that time. I had a bad attitude when I first encountered Eunice.

"I thought I was the best singer and didn't have to study to improve myself. But Eunice disciplined me and made me realize the importance of studying. I'll be forever grateful to her."

Paul Hartfield, a rising star set to debut at New York's Carnegie Hall in January, performs a recital at Stephen F. Austin State University in Lufkin with accompanist Shirley Watterston.

MS. VICKREY said she realized Hartfield's potential from the beginning.

"He was a very zealous boy whose only exposure at the time was gospel singing in a high school group and at church. He was a bit scared but I pushed him because I knew he had a great voice."

She's not surprised with the Carnegie debut. "I expected something this big from Paul."

Hartfield received bachelor's and master's degrees from Stephen F. Austin University. He paid his way through college by working as a singing waiter at Rossini's Warehouse Italian Restaurant and Club in Nacogdoches.

IN 1985, Hartfield won the G.B. Dealey voice award of $1,500 in Dallas, and winning the Music Clubs of America voice competition awarded him with $1,000 and a promotion, sponsorship and financing of the New York recital.

On Jan.22, he will sing an array of arias and art songs in various languages — Russian, Italian and French included. "I'm scared and excited. I've sung in large cities and have received good reviews but New York is the musical capital of America.

Children's homes founded by Roloff must be licensed or close doors Jan. 1

AUSTIN (AP) — A state district judge has ordered the Corpus Christi children's homes founded by the late fundamentalist Lester Roloff to get a state license or close by Jan. 1.

State District Judge Paul R. Davis Jr. of Austin signed that order Monday, capping a decade of legal battles over whether the three homes must submit to state inspection and licensing.

Peoples Baptist Church officials who run the homes have argued that the state has no right to license them, while the state contended it has a right to make sure children get adequate care and that safety standards are met.

Davis' order gives the homes about two weeks to move about 300 children. Davis set the Jan. 1 deadline at the request of church officials, but those officials would not comment on the order or plans to move the children.

Roloff had refused to have the state license the homes and regulate them. The state sued but lost in state district court in May 1981, and an appeals court agreed with the district court. But the Texas Supreme Court reversed the appellate court's ruling in December 1984.

Davis' order stems from the U.S. Supreme Court's refusing in October to hear the church's appeal of the Texas Supreme Court ruling.

At a recent rally in Austin, the church's pastor, the Rev. Wiley Cameron, said that the school would never file an application for a license. The homes are known for steering children away from drug use and criminal activity and have won high praise from city officials.

Cameron, who has headed the church since Roloff's death in November 1982, refused comment on the judge's order.

The controversial Roloff once shut down his homes rather than allow state inspectors onto the premises. Later, he transferred control of the homes from Roloff Evangelistic Enterprises Inc. to the Peoples Baptist Church to avoid further state intervention.

The fundamentalist Christian church, which receives no financial help from the state, federal or local government, operates three residential homes for adolescents to address the "emotional, social, physical and intellectual needs of the children" in a religious setting.

Andrew's County deputy shot by ricochet at roadblock

From Staff Reports

ANDREWS — Capt. Richard Dolgener of the Andrews County Sheriff's Office was listed in stable condition this morning in Permian General Hospital after being struck in the chest Monday by a shotgun pellet from another lawman's gun, according to sheriff's office reports.

"He's doing fine," a hospital spokeswoman said.

Dolgener, 29, was apparently hit by a ricochet from another peace officer's gun at a roadblock on State Highway 115 just west of Andrews. The road block had been set up to stop a man and a juvenile traveling in a car they had allegedly stolen in Ward County, reports said.

Officers from the sheriff's office, the Andrews Police Department and the Department of Public Safety were at the roadblock, where shots were fired at the car's tires and radiator when it slowed down. One of the pellets apparently bounced off the pavement and struck Dolgener, but he only suffered a flesh wound, according to reports.

The two suspects, both from Ward County, were unarmed. One was in Andrews County Jail this morning, and the other had been turned over to juvenile authorities, reports said.

Crime Stoppers seeks burglars with size 5, 7, party dresses

This week Crime Stoppers is looking for information on a burglary of an Odessa business which deals in party dresses.

The After Five Fashions located at 701 N. Dixie was burglarized on Tuesday night, Oct. 22.

Entry to the building was gained by removing an air-conditioner on the roof and dropping down the shaft on top of the counter. The dresses were taken from the racks and exit was made back up the shaft as all doors remained locked. Dresses were by Climax, New Leaf and Mr. J. in sizes 5 and 7. Information on anyone attempting to sell these brand-name dresses off the streets could bring a cash reward from Crime Stoppers.

Crime Stoppers will pay $1,000 for information given this week only that results in the arrest and indictment of persons responsible for this burglary. Crime Stoppers pay cash rewards for other felony crimes. Call Crime Stoppers in Odessa at 333-TIPS or in Midland at 694-TIPS and remember callers can remain anonymous.

Midlander charged in attempted murder free on bond

From Staff Reports

A 28-year-old Midland man was free on bonds totaling $30,000 today after being charged with two counts of attempted murder for a Saturday night incident in which he allegedly fired a shotgun into a trailer house.

Bruce Leon Crawford, 2005 Western, was arrested at his home Saturday night after an incident at the home of Jim C. Elliott, Route 9, Box 9565. According to Sheriff's Office reports, Crawford fired his 12-gauge shotgun through the closed door of Elliott's trailer house on County Road 1208 about 7:15 p.m. Saturday. The men had been arguing about money, reports said.

Elliott, 28, and 22-year-old Ricky Holder, 4001 E. Highway 80, were treated at Midland Memorial Hospital for buckshot wounds and released, reports said.

Crawford was originally to be charged with aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, but the Midland County District Attorney's Office chose the more serious charge of attempted murder, according to Sheriff's Sgt. Jim Newsom.

Justice of the Peace Robert H. Pine set bonds of $15,000 on each charge.

DPS sets 'Operation Plain-View'

From Staff Reports

The Department of Public Safety will be conducting a high-visibility saturation patrol effort — "Operation Plain-View" — on Thursday to encourage compliance with highway traffic laws, according to Major Dudley M. Thomas, regional commander for the DPS in Midland.

From 10 a.m. to 7 p.m., "We will have a black and white patrol car about every 10 miles along Interstate Highway 20 and Interstate Highway 10," Thomas said. "This special effort is designed to gain compliance with all traffic laws and save the lives of our citizens.

"We will be working Interstate-20 from the Mitchell-Howard county line east of Big Spring to the intersection of I-20 and I-10 west of Toyah in Reeves County, a total of 208 miles," Thomas said. Interstate 10 will be worked for 325 miles from Sheffield to the Texas-New Mexico line, he added.

The black-and-white units, 13 unmarked cars and a helicopter will be looking for any violations of traffic laws, with special emphasis on the 55-mph speed limit and the law against following too closely. So far in 1985, 39 people have been killed in traffic accidents on these stretches of I-10 and I-20, said Thomas, and another 29 are expected to die in accidents across the state during the holiday season.

"This is the first operation of this type in Region 4, and will not be the last one," he said. "We feel efforts such as this one can help make West Texas a little safer for all of us."

Sewing Machine Supply hasnice selection of machines under $200

"A stitch in time saves nine," and a trip to Sewing Machine Supply in the Village Shopping Center may save you more than a few stitches. "Whatever your budget calls for we can fill the bill — from straight stitch and zig-zag to reconditioned used machines and cabinets, even computerized machines that write. You'll be surprised at the many items we have available," said Catherine Claggett, owner of Sewing Machine Supply.

Sewing Machine Supply, Midland's sewing machine store with in-house repair, has announced great savings opportunities just in time for Christmas giving.

The popular Singer Easy Menders are now at close out prices - $17.48, regularly $34.95.

Ms. Claggett says they have a number of New Home, Singer and Glaco machines available for under $200. And, that's only the beginning of the terrific values.

Sewing Machine Supply is offering one New Home machine that does zig-zag, straight stitch and stretch stitch for just $169.95 (regularly $249.95).

Perhaps, you or someone on your Christmas list has always wanted a Viking, but couldn't afford it. Here's your opportunity! The Classica 100 is now reduced $100, making it available at Sewing Machine Supply for under $400. This machine offers classical utility and Trimotion stitches for stretch and non-stretch fabrics and automatic buttonholes without turning the garment.

If a top-of-the-line machine is what you have in mind, you'll find it pays to shop at Sewing Machine Supply whether you want a New Home, Viking or Singer. With a top-of-the-line machine you will get a FREE cabinet or overlock - the choice is yours!

The top-of-the-line Singer 6268 sews sideways to put on patches, has a wind in place bobbin and comes with cassettes to make letters and monograms up to 2¼ inches high. Moreover, cassettes can always be added for other designs. Six cassettes are available now and more will be available soon.

The top-of-the-line New Home, the Memory Craft 6000, features three programmable buttonholes, two groups of letters, unlimited decorative stitches plus great joining and utility stitches.

To make the choice even tougher, the Viking 990 offers six programmable buttonholes, block and script letters, a Satin element which gives unlimited design potential and a sewing guide that thinks for you. You'll have to see this 100 percent jam free machine to believe it!

"We also have good reconditioned machines with a 90 day warranty, cabinets and in shop repair on all makes and models," says Ms. Claggett.

In addition, you will find any accessory you may need at Sewing Machine Supply. Button hole attachments, rufflers, zig zag attachments, Grabbits (magnetic pincushions regularly $8.95, now $7.00), portable steam irons, sewing chairs, lamps and electric scissors are all at this one stop. They even have vinyl mats to hold foot controls in place (just $6.00) and portable cases starting at $19.95.

Husky and New Home overlocks, tables and cabinets to fit any machine are also available.

Sewing Machine Supply has financing and rent-to-own terms for machines.

Whatever you select, be it an accessory or a cabinet, Sewing Machine Supply will do FREE Christmas gift wrapping.

Bill's Plumbing, Fencecraft and Fireplace offers quality selection

Bill's Fencecraft and Fireplace Center specializes in fireplace equipment. Quality log sets, grates for any size fireplace, firescreens, fireplace tools, mantels, wood racks and local service are just a few of the things that Bill has to offer at the corner of Loop 250 and Princeton.

"We appreciate what Midland has done for us. We appreciate everybody selecting us to do their work," says Bill Rodriguez, owner of Bill's Plumbing, Fencecraft and Fireplace.

At Bill's shop, which is located on Loop 250 and Princeton, customer service for every customer is a priority. Bill says that whether he is working with one of his largest customers, such as Magnatex, or with a customer that just wants a small fireplace accessory he wants to give them the attention they need.

This commitment keeps customers, like Mike Morse of Morse Properties, turning to Bill's Plumbing and Fencecraft year after year. Bill has done work for Morse since 1978. This company has called on Bill for plumbing, fencing, wor on swimming pool equipment, installation of a home sprinkler system.

Other companies have also learned that Bill can be counted on for a job well done. One job recent job that Bill is particularly proud of is the fence built along Loop 250, South of the Saddle Club addition.

"Many of our services are seasonal. We want to meet the demands of our customers," says Bill. That's way they offer fencing of many types including brick with wrought iron, brick with wood, and pipe fences for arenas or stock pens. Fence repair is a big part of their business in the spring when the high winds play havoc with weak fences. For the dog runs they build, Bill's Fencecraft has self dog feeders.

Bill is also proud to offer top quality firescreens, gas log sets, tools and accessories. You'll find firescreens of all types including folding ones, standing ones and glass doors at Bill's. Bill is always careful to point out that when you make an investment in a firescreen you need to consider quality as well as beauty.

He is particularly proud of the Portland, Thermo-Rite, and Pacific firescreens which he offers to his customers.

Bill says because they try to offer their customers the best screens available, they have handled orders for customers in Dallas, Ruidoso and other places.

Bill's professionals do the installations in the Midland area so that they can offer a one year warranty. However, Bill says, for those that must install their own at their vacation cabin, he will make it as simple as possible by having all the neccessary parts and instructions.

They also offer Zero clearance, Majestic and masonry fireplace and are qualified to rework log sets and repair gas lighters.

For fireplaces without a gas lighter, Bill recommends a special gas lighter tray which offers some of the same benefits.

As you wrap up your Christmas shopping, remember that Bill's Fireplace at Loop 250 and Princeton, has a full selection of fireplace tools including damper pullers, log carriers, log sets, tool sets and more.

This local company can give you a number of job references and is commited to putting resources back into the community. That's why Bill says they help out at Casa de Amigos.

Watches have become timeless craze, fashion accessory

Copley News Service

Monsieur Cartier would be gratified.

The redoubtable French jeweler, generally given credit for inventing the world's first wristwatch, started a truly timeless craze.

Cartier is said to have created the first wristwatch around the turn of the century at the request of aeronautics pioneer Alberto Santos-Dumont. Its debut paralleled the shattering changes in lifestyle brought about by the dawn of modern industry. Its popularity paralleled the increasingly important role time came to play in a precision-engineered world.

In the world of the new technology, it simply took too much effort to pull a watch out of a pocket to look at the time. The new timepieces came to reflect 20th century technological innovation.

Great advances in watch engineering were made in the development of electric and electronic watches. Self-winding watches were perfected. Batteries were added. Digital watches have become the craze just as computers are becoming more of a permanent fixture in the workaday world.

Most recently, in this society of throwaway products, the disposable watch has come to enjoy smashing popularity.

"It's the style at the moment," says a salesclerk at a department store in Santa Monica, Calif. "People are really into the disposable watch."

Primarily young people, but also the not so young, she adds.

THE WATCHES are called disposable because they don't have replaceable parts. They can't be repaired. Once they break, they go into the trash. Most of the disposables sell for around $30.

They come in a sprightly variety of flashy colors, geometric patterns and high-tech designs.

Watch faces range from paisley to pinstripes, from dotted Swiss to solid black. Nearly all have molded rubber wristbands in primary colors. Some feature tinted translucent bands.

Swatch, U.S.A., a firm billing itself as the "new wave in Swiss watches," started it all.

"The company pioneered the watch as a fashion accessory," says a spokesman, "Swatch Watch was positioned as a fashion-forward accessory which just happened to keep accurate time. Consumers buy Swatch to fit their many moods, their clothes or for different occasions, often stocking a complete wardrobe."

A number of lines similar to Swatch are on the market, including Guess? Brooke and Speidel's M-Watch.

The excitement sparked by the disposable also has been good for sales of conventional watches, merchants say.

"Watches aren't so much to tell time anymore. They're more like jewelry," says a salesclerk at Zales jewelry store in Santa Monica.

"Some people," adds another clerk at the same store, "have five to seven watches. They have a watch for every occasion."

"They're fun," says a young woman sporting a disposable watch. That seems to be the consensus.

Frivolous? Sure. Foolish? Hardly. At least not in terms of dollar sense.

"In 1984, Swatch sold more than 1 million watches," says a company spokesman. "This was the total number allocated to the American market."

FOR 1985, production capacity has been increased, and 3.5 million Swatch Watches will be available in the American market.

Swatch projects total sales of $125 million in 1985, with approximately 20 percent of that total generated by the fashion accessory portion of the business.

The fashion accessory portion is a recent addition. The company is marketing 10 fashion accessories ranging from umbrellas to safety razors, from bags to notebooks. Separate shops within department stores have or will open to accommodate the Swatch accessories.

New York City's trendy Bloomingdale's department store boasts the first Swatch shop.

The Swatch is a "fad watch,"says Sandy Caplan, owner of the Alltime shop in Santa Monica. She quickly acknowledges its popularity pointing out her supply of Swatches is sold out and she's awaiting another shipment.

But, she says, 'if I had nothing else but Casio and Timex in this store, we'd do a fantastic business."

Neither brand, she points out, is disposable. Her most popular Casio is the sports water-resistant G-shock, which starts at $59.95.

Salespeople in other stores report brisk sales of sports watches of the non-disposable variety, as well as more formal timepieces. Seiko was frequently mentioned as a big seller, as well as Bulova, Pulsar and Citizen.

WHILE THOSE popular conventional watches generally range from about $60 to $600, depending on the brand and model, high-ticket items like Rolex and Baume Mercier also are in demand.

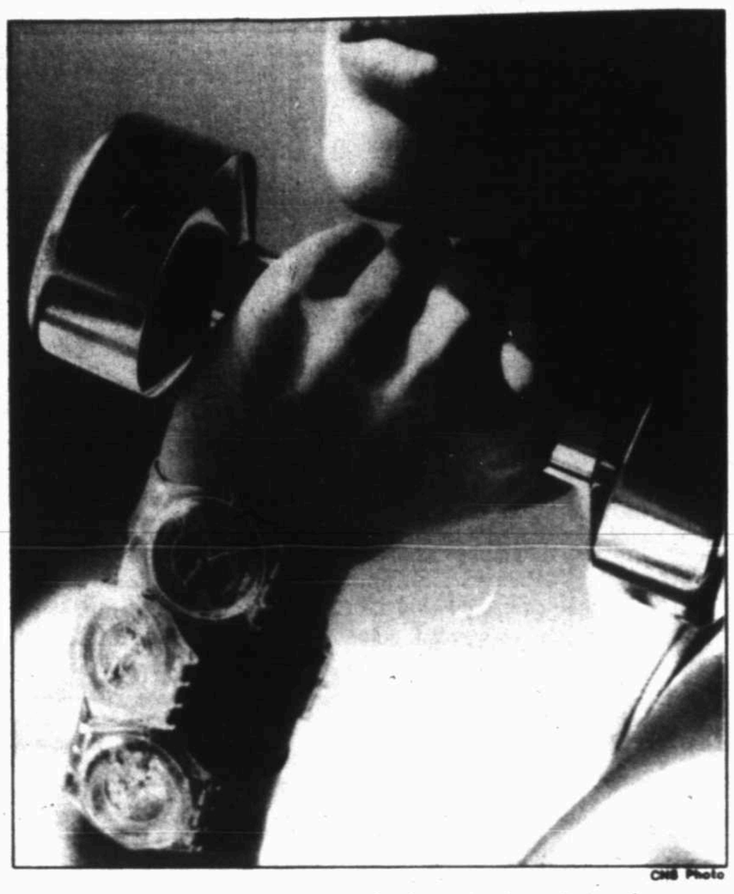

"Rolex, Rolex, Rolex," says the assistant manager of a jewelry store in Santa Monica when asked which watch sells best.

The most popular? An 18-karat gold and stainless-steel model costing about $2,300 for the men's and $1,800 for the women's.

Some customers "do come in looking for Swatch Watches," but the store doesn't carry the line. "Some people like to have both" conventional and disposable, she adds.

A jewelry store salesman traces the current trend toward wearing different watches for different occasion to the LED (light emitting digital) models that surfaced in the early 1970s.

The digital didn't prove to be the mainstay that watch manufacturers had hoped. Today the old-fashioned analog watches are the most popular (disposables are exclusively analog). But LEDs "made people conscious of what they were putting on their wrists. I think that was the big change."

Digital-watch 'revolution' just another passing fancy

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — Pity poor Gumby. These days, it seems as if the weight of the digital-watch industry is sitting in his rubbery green hands. And well it may be.

It was scarcely 13 years ago that the first digital watch was marketed. Well, the revolution to a digital world was short-lived. And now there's the hands vs. the hands-not, it's clear that the old-fashioned, straightforward, hands-on watch — in other words, the analog — has persevered.

So, while the industry has gone on to a new revolution — the quartz analog — digitals have been left with little more of the market than corporate giveaways and inexpensive novelties (which this holiday season are being dominated by the $9.95 Gumby).

"What happened was the public tired of the novelty (of the digital watch), and, frankly, people were still used to telling time the old-fashioned way," said Helene Fortunoff, general merchandise manager of Fortunoff's jewelry division.

In the end, the digital watch may have been the ultimate tribute to consumers' recalcitrance, proving their love of novelty yet their stubbornness to change. But it didn't start that way.

The first digital watch — a $2,100, 18-karat gold, limited-edition Pulsar, manufactured by the Hamilton Watch Co. — left the public breathless. "The first one even made the Johnny Carson show," said Jack Greiff, vice president of Tourneau, a New York watch retailer.

Never mind that the digital watch had its problems. The technology behind the first generation was the light-emitting diode — LED, for short — which required the wearer to push a button to get a flashing red readout of the time.

That was followed by the LCD, or liquid crystal dial. It was an improvement on the LED, because it offered a continuous readout. "But the problem," said Michael Roman, chairman of Jewelers of America Inc., "was that it depended on ambient light to show the time. So if it got dark, you couldn't tell the time. So, they had to put in another battery and another switch to light the dial from underneath."

Still, consumers apparently couldn't get enough of them. In 1973 an estimated 200,000 digitals were sold worldwide; by 1975, the number had surpassed 2.5 million.

There are varying estimates about America's watch sales being taken over by digitals, but Roman said that in the peak years of 1977-78, digitals accounted for about 20 percent of the market.

Although consumer fickleness played a role in the decline of the digital, it was hardly the sole problem. More important, industry observers say, was the glut on the market — not of digital watches, but of digital watchmakers.

Once, watchmaking was the preserve of a precious few who viewed watches as time pieces and manufacturing as a time-honored art.

With the advent of the digital, it became a free-for-all, and within a short time, there was fierce competition between the traditionalists and the upstarts.

At one end were the classic manufacturers, such as Hamilton and Timex. At the other were newcomers — electronics firms such as the National Semiconductor Corp. and Intel Corp., and component suppliers, such as Texas Instruments and the Fairchild Camera and Instrument Co., which had never made watches before.

"Non-watch people got into the market and destroyed it," said Greiff of Tourneau. "Instead of longevity, they were looking for price. They were making disposable watches. They went from inexpensive to cheap, and now you can buy them for $4 made in Hong Kong."

Fred Winans, vice president of sales for Hamilton, which has long since sold off its Pulsar division and stopped making digitals about seven or eight years ago, said it became impossible for companies that viewed watches as jewelry to sell consumers on expensive digitals.

"A company selling jewelery couldn't sell a digital watch with a gold-filled case or an 18-karat gold case," he said. "You can't take a 50-cent movement and put it into a $2,100 watch. The customer wouldn't buy it."

In the wake of the price wars came a shakeout even grander than the current dropout rate among computer manufacturers.

Not only did most of the traditional watchmakers give up — Timex and Casio are the leaders in the digital field today — but so did the non-traditional manufacturers.

Enter Gumby and friends, who represent the novelty segment, which is filled with mass-produced, mass-marketed, throw-away digitals. The Gumby watch — a likeness of the pliable green creature that wraps around your wrist — was introduced in September by Lewco. According to several retailers, the the Gumby watches have been flying out of stores.

Georgio Sant'Angelo offer designs for spring and summer that celebrate the female form by clinging to the body like a second skin.

Sant'Angelo's sensuous and casual patterns are done in soft pastels and Impressionist patterns.

He offers exquisite fabrics in Impressionist and marbleized patterns, splashed with color like an artist's canvas, are the key to Sant'Angelo's sumptuous spring-summer styles.

Pastels, delicate colors hand-painted on lightweight fabrics like linen, silk, mousseline, lace, crepe and jersey are perfect for his sensuous, free-flowing creations.

Leotards and body stockings, used extensively in the collection, are tranformed into luxuriously romantic and flirtatious garments. These are topped with sheer sarongs, full pant-skirts or sari-type wraps, giving the collection an Indian flavor. But Sant'Angelo was quick to note that all his fabrics are American made.

One outfit in the Impressionist group teams a maize linen shirt over a T-shell and silk-chiffon flowered straight pants, cinched at the waist with a leather cummerbund.

New perfume for sight and smell

NEW YORK (AP) — Parfums Baccarat of Westport, Conn., has developed a perfume that you see as well as smell. It's called "City Girl Shimmering Perfume" and is guaranteed to make you stand out in a crowd.

The floral fragrance — comprising honeysuckle, rose, jasmine and carnation — is aimed at young women, particularly aficionados of the rock video station MTV. The shimmer comes from iridescent particles designed to glitter wherever applied.

The product costs $7.95 for a one-ounce bottle and is the brainchild of Philip Maitland, creator of Zarolia ($425 an ounce) and Lamborghini for men.

Maitland is launching a $4-million media campaign to promote the product which will be in some 40,000 mass market stores, including J.C. Penny, Caldor and Sears, by the end of the year.

Beene's designs cling

By ULA ILNYTZKY
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — Geoffrey Beene offers designs for spring and summer that celebrate the female form by clinging to the body like a second skin.

Beene's collection has a '60s flavor to it. Here is a brief overview of his line.

Spring is welcomed with body-clinging dresses sporting bare backs and coordinated with boleros and oversized vinyl and leather belts reminiscent of the 1960s.

Skirts are knee-skimming and slightly above, but not as short as offered for this fall. His colors range from staple blacks, whites and navy blues to radiant lipstick red, banana, tangerine and lime, alone or combined.

Beene's elegant silk and lace gowns borrow ideas from daywear, using the suit as a basic concept. An example is a waist-hugging, wrap-around jacket over a long, skinny skirt that also wraps, baring the legs. Daytime suits are similarly cut.

The majority of his dresses are unquestionably designed for the fitness-minded. A dazzling navy crepe halter gown with sparkling navy piping clung to the model like a second skin. Another in flesh and black re-embroidered lace has the suggestion of nudity.

Scallop-hemmed, loose-fitting boleros or silk shawls with long fringes were casually draped over dresses and suits.

The ultra-fitted look was offset by extra-wide belts — some at least 10 inches wide — oversized clutch handbags, quarter-length gloves and huge psychedelic and abstract earrings. The belts, many with unappealing metal buckles, tended to dwarf the outfits.

DEAR ABBY

Holiday charity should continue all year

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: The approach of the holiday season prompts us to write this letter. As residents of the Freeport Manor Nursing Center in Freeport, Ill., we read "Dear Abby" daily and discuss your column.

Beginning in late November and all through the month of December, volunteers come out of the woodwork. Already our calendar is filling up with all sorts of organizations who want to visit the lonely, put on a program, pass out treats and gifts, or sing Christmas carols in the halls.

All this is wonderful, and we appreciate it. But, Abby, where are these generous people between the months of January and October?

We have a few faithful volunteers who come on a regular basis, but we could use more.

So to all you nice people who come in large groups during the holiday season, we say, "We love you and thank you for caring, but please don't pack us away along with the rest of the Christmas decorations." — MAUDE, RUTH, HENRY, MADELINE AND MANY MORE

DEAR MAUD, ETC.: I'm glad you wrote. The point you raise is a good one. Freeport volunteers, and volunteers everywhere — take note.

DEAR ABBY: Can you stand one more letter about how to eat a banana? I hope so, because there is one and only one way to eat a banana: Take a slightly overripe banana and roll it back and forth between your hands until the pulp is mushy and practically liquefied inside the skin. Bite off one end — it doesn't matter which one — then suck the pulp out of its container.

It's easy, simple and requires no utensils. — ANDREW HUDGINS, DEPT. OF ENGLISH, UNIVERSITY OF CINCINNATI

DEAR ANDREW: It's also unique. If it catches on, yet another expression will be added to our language: "Go suck a banana!"

DEAR ABBY: This is for that smarty-pants Smith grad and her equally know-it-all teacher. I got this right out of Emily Post: "Although it is not bad manners to peel the skin halfway down and eat the fruit bite by bite at the table, it is better to peel the skin all the way off, lay the fruit on your plate, cut the banana in slices and eat with a fork." — SABRINA SMITH, SHERMAN OAKS

And now, a Bird's eye view:

DEAR ABBY: My entire teaching career was spent at girls' boarding schools in the Washington, D.C. area. (They were known as "finishing schools" in those days.)

I am sorry, but not surprised that you never heard of eating a whole banana with a spoon or fork. That's the way I taught the young ladies to eat a banana at the table. — RUTH H. BIRD, ELLENSBURG, WASH.

DEAR ABBY: Now I have heard everything! Please tell that Smith College graduate that she may have learned something about art at Smith, but eat a banana with a teaspoon? My hat!

When I went to Smith, I ate bananas the only way that made any sense — I held the banana in one hand, peeled it and ate it. Never mind the plate, fruit knife or spoon. — M.T.B., SMITH, 1936

DEAR M.T.B.: I'm with you. But read on:

DEAR ABBY: I was taught to eat a banana with a teaspoon at Wilson College in Chambersburg, Pa. We split the banana in half, placed the two halves beside each other and ate the banana with a teaspoon! — DOROTHY S. KINTZEL, ALLENTOWN, PA.

DEAR DOROTHY: Banana case dismissed; I hope nobody appeals it.

Next summer's fashion to be short, chic, shapely

PARIS (AP) — Chanel and Givenchy have shown they have gone short, chic and shapely for next summer. Paris ready-to-wear looks leg-baring, young and fun.

Karl Lagerfeld laid on a bold collection for Chanel, concentrating on black and white and bringing out dressy "city shorts" topped with long tunic tops, blazers, and snappy safari jackets — a favorite theme in these shows.

The new and more shapely Chanel comes out in fitted jackets, one "outre" version in black leather.

But the various houndstooth check jackets, shorts or skirts are easy for even the most conservative dresser to wear.

Fitted waists and flared, pleated peplums are big in this collection, even in a taffeta evening version.

The sensible white-black looks in cardigans, boleros, and long tunic tops over knee-baring skirts or shorts were sometimes complemented by colors such as hot or soft pink.

Hubert de Givenchy also opted for a bouncy, short look, but had more color than Chanel.

Givenchy has plenty of traditional silk dresses with puffy sleeves, hemmed at the knee, and also showed minidresses in wildly flowered cottons.

Daniel Hechter took his audience on an "Indian Ocean cruise," from dressy officers' suits in navy, gray or white gabardines or cottons, to casual jacquard pullovers for the crew.

For a party and "stopover in Bombay," he offers Nehru suits in white ottoman with long jackets. Here again, the general skirt look is short.

Sonia Rykiel's Sunday night show emphasized leggy and lean lines, especially in the tiny striped minidresses or bicycle tights, sometimes gathered and bowed at one leg.

Man-talk valuable in selling cosmetics to women

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Wherever life takes him, Kip DiPaolo engages women in what is known in his line of work as "warm chatter." Banks are the best places, he says, because of the long lines. "Do you believe this line?" he will say to a woman in a bank, moving on to the weather and other neutral topics before complimenting her on some aspect of her appearance and offering her a free facial.

Another man might get a dirty look or worse. But the gold pin on DiPaolo's lapel spells out Mary Kay Cosmetics and the business cards he presses into women's hands identify him as a sales director for the company. These credentials, along with the chatter, have moved women to buy so much lip gloss and such from DiPaolo that he now drives a cream Oldsmobile Firenza, one of the company's sales bonuses.

DiPaolo is making it in a woman's world — direct selling. Of its 5.8 million salespeople, only about 20 percent, or 1.2 million, are men, according to the Direct Selling Association. The trade association says men are more likely to be selling sturdy products such as encyclopedias and vacuum cleaners than powders, perfumes and other things that are the stuff of dreams.

AT AVON PRODUCTS, 5,000 of the sales force of 400,000 are men. A spokeman at Mary Kay's headquarters in Dallas said no figures were kept on the number of men representing the company. According to the marketing department's estimates, no more than 700 of Mary Kay's 152,000 "beauty consultants," or salespeople, are men.

"Records show that men don't achieve the same level of success as women here at Mary Kay," said the spokesman, Carol Floyd. She attributed this to women's "natural reluctance" both to allowing salesmen in their homes and to being seen by men while not wearing makeup, as required for a Mary Kay skin care class.

Kip DiPaolo, 34 years old, professes to have encountered no such reluctance in three years of promoting cosmetics part time. As head of a sales unit of 27, five of whom are men, he says he earns $2,000 a month in commissions on its sales. The unit is currently "on target," as they say at Mary Kay, for a Pink Buick Regal, the level below the Pink Cadillac.

"Hopefully," he was saying the other night, "I'll be driving a pink car in a couple of months or so. People say, 'Kip, a pink car?' But, hey, the money's green."

THIS WAS IN his apartment on West 16th Street. On the door was a pink bumper sticker saying "Ask Me About Mary Kay Cosmetics." Inside, the scent of Mr. K Cologne hung in the air. DiPaolo was just finishing a training session with two new beauty consultants, Mary Castro and Cynthia de Figueiredo. He showed them how to display and apply the products, frequently repeating the company credo, "Try before you buy."

Both DiPaolo and Miss de Figueiredo are airline flight attendants and dry skin is an occupational hazard. "All flight personnel, even pilots, are into skin care systems," DiPaolo said. "If you don't use something the lack of humidity in the plane will ruin your skin."

He was using another brand of male skin care products when a fellow flight attendant, who was also a Mary Kay consultant, persuaded him to try the Mr. K line and eventually to join the company. Since then he says he has recruited 20 men, most of whom had initial misgivings and half of whom have dropped out.

IN CONTRAST TO major department stores where a man behind a cosmetic counter is no longer a rarity, he said, men are wary of demonstrating makeup to groups of women in private homes, which is the Mary Kay way.

"They're afraid their masculinity is going to be threatened whether they're gay, straight or whatever," he said, shrugging. "But men are good at this and women love to be complimented by a man. When I give a skin care class and I say, 'Babe, this eye shadow color looks super on you,' she listens because she values a man's opinion."

In training men to sell to women, he said, he warns against intimidating or patronizing the customer.

Personal sales are only a small part of the picture. As more and more women take full-time jobs, the pool of direct sellers shrinks and recruitment becomes the name of the game. Thus DiPaolo views every customer for a free facial as a potential beauty consultant. He finds recruits on his many jobs — flight attendant, practical nurse and dance teacher — as well as in public places, using the "warm chatter" technique.

Girl's love of sewing leads to start of woman's business

EVELETH, Minn. (AP) — When Diana Werschay was a little girl, her dad told her perfect jobs were those people liked so much they'd work for free.

Well, his little girl loved sewing, and the clothes she made for her nine brothers and sisters were always free.

So when the time came for the young woman to pick an occupation, the choice was perfectly simple: design and sew children's clothing.

Sewing started as a way to make extra cash, but the enterprise is turning into big business for Werschay, who lives with her husband, Frank, and two children 10 miles north of Cotton. Her handmade, brightly colored jogging suits, overalls, shirts, shorts, pants and dresses and other outfits are invading the toddlers' fashion market in Minnesota.

In 1984, Werschay made and sold 2,000 garments for boys and girls ages 1 through 5 and she expects to manufacture and market 6,000 pieces of apparel this year.

The reason Werschay's business, The Sewing Closet Inc., is succeeding becomes evident when buyers begin raving about the clothes she sews.

"She came up with some very unique patterns and designs, and the fabrics and novelties she sews in clothing are top quality," said Bill Williams, Glass Block's youth clothing buyer in Duluth. "The colors are phenomenal."

"I like to make the clothes so that when kids go into the store and see them they want to wear them," she said. "And we keep kids' comfort in mind. Kids are always better behaved if they're comfortable."

Werschay shies away from fashion fads so that children or their younger siblings can wear the clothes longer. "We kind of make basics," she said. "They have style but we keep the parents in mind. We're still in a depressed economy."

The clothing she markets under the M.E. by Diana Lynn label is named after her son, Michael, 11, and daughter, Emily, 2.

Werschay uses fabrics needing little or no ironing. And she includes growth features in the garments. Cuffed pants can be let out and suspenders can be adjusted so outfits can be worn longer, she said.

Until last April, Werschay's sewing room and children's clothing and fabric store were headquartered at her home on Crystal Lake. But with sales skyrocketing, she took a bank loan and moved the business three miles north to near Lions Spring on U.S. Highway 53.

She also bought sewing machines and other equipment so she could hire other employees to do the assembling while she designs and markets the outfits.

China has fashion designing contest

PEKING (AP) — A 28-year-old designer won China's first national fashion design contest, the official Xinhua news agency has announced.

Gao Xilin, director of a garmet factory in the city of Anshan in the northern province of Liaoning won the "golden scissors" award for spring clothing embroidered with golden phoenix and peony designs.

Xinhua said judges considered Gao's entry to be "a harmonious combination of western tailoring and Chinese flair."

Gao was one of 67 designers who entered 268 dresses in the contest, the news agency said.

Chinese were virtually compelled to wear dark Mao jackets during the 1966-1976 Cultural Revolution, when Western clothing was all but banned.

Since then, Chinese leaders have encouraged people to dress more fashionably. Premier Zhao Ziyang and Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang regularly wear Western suits.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Be patient with those who must make a major change in their lives. Greater family unity is possible if you open new lines of communication with loved ones. A different environment helps solve an employment or financial problem. Keep your plans under wraps until ready to take action. An indirect approach brings the best results in business. Use good judgment, avoid foreing showdowns. CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: director Steven Spielberg, Toronto Blue Jays pitcher Jim Clancy, labor leader Douglas Fraser, actor Ossie Davis, baseball great Ty Cobb, Italian violin maker Antonio Stradivari.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You can boost your earnings by taking a job-related course or sharpening your skills. Romance is a source of deep satisfaction. Self-improvement activities enjoy highly favorable influences.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Take the time to write meaningful memos -- they will let others know exactly what you expect. Delegating more authority to subordinates will free you to work on creative projects.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): This is a better day for strengthening existing relationships than starting new ones. Avoid all forms of gambling. Be on guard against a sudden infatuation. Artistic projects and group activities hold special attraction.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You take the lead in a partnership. Stay on your toes at work. Someone influential is watching you closely. Remember that first impressions are difficult to erase! Proofread letters and memos.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You will find yourself in the spotlight today. Dress fashionably but on the conservative side if employed in an executive, position. You may soon find a romantic partner whose ardor matches your own.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your associates are ready to cooperate. Productivity is higher than usual. Avoid financial speculation. Reading or getting together with old friends is the perfect way to spend the evening.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Get to work early, before your co-workers arrive and begin distracting you. If you look on a problem as a creative challenge, you will come through with flying colors.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You take great pride in your work. Meeting a friend for lunch should put you in a wonderful mood. You return to the job feeling refreshed. Mate ponders a change in lifestyle.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Write and mail important letters. Someone who works behind the scenes provides information that helps you renew a contract. Not a good day to participate in an athletic competition.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Someone who suddenly gives you lots of attention could be after your job. Stay on your toes! An excellent day to join a club or professional organization. New friends lead to new business.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A brother or sister makes a request that could upset your busy schedule. Be flexible. Beauty treatments enjoy favorable influences. Your energy increases when you get more rest.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Getting better organized will reduce everyday stress. Your mate or partner is willing to take on new domestic chores. Credit dealings are favored if you check all the figures involved. Consult an accountant.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West

Opening lead: Five of ♢.

For a long as people have been playing contract bridge, an argument has raged about which is superior—the strong no trump played by Americans and many others, or the weak no trump popular in Britain and other European countries. Nothing we write is likely to change any opinions.

Those who favor the weak no trump point to its frequency of use and preemptive effect. Its opponents maintain that you sometimes miss superior major-suit contracts and might not have the advantage of a lead-directing opening bid. A hand from the Venice Cup, the world women's championship, played two months ago in Sao Paulo, Brazil, lends credence to the latter theory.

In two of the matches, East opened a weak no trump. On lead against four spades, both Wests opted for a heart lead, and the declarers coasted home. Since they could use the ace of clubs for a red-suit discard, they lost only the ace of trumps and two tricks in hearts and diamonds combined.

At the two tables where East opened one diamond, the contract was defeated. West led a low diamond and East's jack won. The suit was returned to West's king, and a third round forced declarer to ruff.

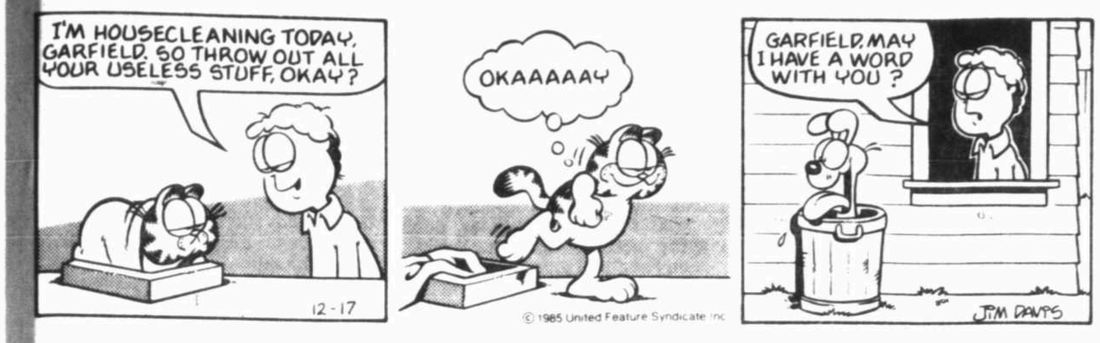

When East won a trump lead with the ace, they returned their remaining diamond. Whether declarer opted to ruff high or low, West's ten of spades was promoted to the setting trick.

Without wishing to take sides in the argument, one fact did strike us. The two teams who were not using the weak no trump were, at that point, leading in the qualifying rounds of the championship.

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — A hug and a peck from singer Kenny Rogers at his recent Fort Myers, Fla., concert fulfilled the wish of an 11-year-old girl San Angelo girl who is terminally ill.

"I told him he was nice and I liked his singing," said Cindy Hernandez after her return to San Angelo Sunday.

Cindy was granted her wish to meet her favorite performer by the Make-A-Wish Foundation of West Texas Inc., which grants special requests to children with terminal illnesses. The young girl has a malignant brain tumor that has been growing since June.

"He came out of the dressing room and Cindy was waiting. He pointed his finger and said, 'Cindy! You must be Cindy!'" her mother, Estella Hernandez, said. "Cindy got up and said, 'Ohhh, and you're Kenny Rogers.'"

She said the two exchanged a hug and a kiss, and then Rogers went on stage to serenade his long-time fan through the evening with songs that included her favorite: "Islands in the Stream."

Cindy was welcomed at the Miami airport hours before the Saturday concert by city Mayor Xaviar Suarez, who presented her with a dozen pink roses and a limousine to take her to the motel.

The trip also included a trip to the beach for Cindy's first view of the ocean.

"We saw dolphins that were real close to the shore," she said, adding she thought Rogers "was very nice. He sure did sing."

Matthau

NEW YORK (AP) — Walter Matthau says a heart attack he suffered 19 years ago, just before the filming of the movie "The Odd Couple," may have helped him become a star.

"Before the heart attack, I saw myself as a cigar-smoking comedian," Matthau said, in an interview conducted by his stepson, Aram Saroyan, and published in the January issue of House and Garden magazine.

"But after it, I had to give up smoking and I began to see myself the way I had when I was in my late teens and early 20s — as a poetic, romantic figure," said Matthau, 65.

There followed a series of leading roles in romantic comedies, including "A New Leaf," "Pete 'n' Tillie" and "House Calls."

"I don't know how I became a movie star, but I'm sure glad I did," he said.

WILLMAR, Minn. (AP) — An estimated 250 people, sitting on folding chairs in a high school gym, listened to country gospel singer Cristy Lane, evangelist Lowell Lundstrom and others who donated their time to help raise money for Minnesotans suffering from the ravaged farm economy.

The organizers of Sunday's Christmas Aid concert at Willmar High School, Family Farm and Range Promotion Inc., hope their idea will spread.

Gloria Tepfer, who chairs the newly formed group, is one who knows first-hand tough times on the farm. She and her husband, Wayne, farm near Danube. Their sons and a son-in-law used to farm with them until conditions forced the younger generation to seek off-the-farm jobs.

Mrs. Tepfer said the money raised would help needy farm families and Iron Range families have a happier Christmas. The organizers hoped to raise $15,000.

Picking perfect fragrance is blossoming art

Copley News Service

"I just don't know," said the well-dressed perfume shopper, picking up yet another bottle of fragrance from the sparkling collection at the department store counter, "how can you ever tell what to buy as a gift? I know what I like, but what will she like?"

That's the $3 billion dollar question.

With that amount in fragrance sold annually in this country, smelling good is big business, especially at Christmastime when the scent of the tree often is overpowered by what's in the gift boxes.

There are several ways to go in choosing a fragrance as a gift. Buyers can opt for one of this year's best sellers — Giorgio, Obsession, Diva, Coco and Ysatis — or choose a perfume suited to a personality. It's also possible to have a perfume made to order — some perfumers will create a "designer" fragrance just for you.

By next Christmas, help in choosing may come from a pair of French computers.

Expected in stores in this country early next year are Anton and Cleopatra, computers developed by the French company Hyperlog, which ask questions and chart responses into more than 15,000 personality types. From this information the computers — Anton for men, Cleopatra for women — will suggest several choices from a memory bank of information on more than 200 perfumes.

"The computer asks such questions as 'Do you follow your desires and don't hold back' or 'Do you ever break down without an explanation' before it selects fragrances," said Nicole Sandifer, Hyperlog's information officer.

"The concept has been highly successful in France, Holland and Switzerland. We're talking to companies here, but nothing is firm as yet. We expect Anton and Cleopatra to be on the West Coast in January."

Americans need all this help in choosing perfumes because today we like a wardrobe of fragrances rather than just one "signature" scent, according to Annette Green, executive director of the Fragrance Foundation of New York, a non-profit organization of manufacturers, suppliers and retailers.

"Women used o wear perfume as they would jewelry, but not anymore," she said. "Today a woman has a wardrobe of fragrances which she uses variously to give her a lift, be more successful, become more romantic or even calm down. And men are not far behind; they want success, romance and power from the scents they use. Our whole attitude about fragrance has changed radically in the last five years."

What we spend has increased along with our choices. In 1977, annual sales in the fragrance industry in this country amounted to $950 million. This year, sales are up to $3 billion.

Along with spending more to smell good, we keep changing the kinds of fragrances we like. When we become saturated with such Oriental scents as Opium and Cinnabar, said perfumer Alexander Bende, we turn to romantic florals such as Coco or Ysatis.

In three and a half years of business at Alexander's in La Jolla, Calif., Bende has created and numbered more than 700 scents for women, several dozen for men, and even several light and airy fragrances for girls as young as six.

"For women, we have now entered the time of heavy floral fragrances," said Bende. "Opium by Yves Saint Laurent came out in 1977 when Oriental fragrances were a trend, for instance. But now Poison by Christian Dior, Coco from Chanel or Ysatis from Givenchy are some of the favorites.

Bende thinks that a perfume should be as individual as the person wearing it.

"Perfume is so delicate that you should make it a piece of yourself. A good balanced perfume will smell differently on each person's skin. There are perfumes, however, such as Giorgio, which don't change a lot with body chemistry. Other perfumes which will smell pretty much the same on anyone are Opium by Yves Saint Laurent and Oscar de la Renta."

Perfume industry advises care when choosing ideal fragrance

Copley News Service

Some perfume dos and don'ts from the fragrance industry:

- At a perfume counter, don't spray perfume on your wrists, then rub them together. That simply increases the temperature of the skin and proper developing of the perfume does not take place.
- The best way to test a fragrance is to spray one wrist and let it air dry. The other wrist can be used to test a second scent and the inner elbow, a third. Three scents are generally all your nose can sniff-test in a period of several hours.
- If the scent is not available in a spray to test, put a little on a cotton ball and apply to your skin. Using your fingers puts oils into the bottle or onto the stopper and can change the perfume's character.
- It will take from five to six minutes after application before you can smell the entire fragrance. For the most benefit, scent should be applied to warm points of the body such as the neck below the ears, the wrists, and inside the elbows, knees and ankles.

'Lean, uncluttered' spring fashions featured at shows

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Even designers who are fond of elaborate clothes with plenty of exterior decoration are cleaning up their act for spring. Basic shapes are lean and uncluttered. A kind of austerity prevails.

For Zoran and Michael Kors, designers whose clothes are usually described as minimal, this represents no major change of pace.

"It is what I think of as the American look," said Zoran, who was born in Yugoslavia. He sold his first T-shirts to Henri Bendel 10 years ago and is still making the same easy wide-leg trousers he did then. His aim is not to make clothes obsolete, but to offer new styles that he hopes women will add to their wardrobe.

Zoran goes further than simple cuts. He avoids collars, seams and even prints. What's more, he makes his clothes in just one size.

By keeping the design simple, he is able to spend more time on his fabrics. Though he is primarily associated with knitted materials, especially cashmere, he has always used such basic woven fabrics as gabardine and flannel.

For spring, he has expanded his range to include silk faille (in dressy shorts), taffeta (in jackets and coats) and a pin-striped navy woolen fabric used for what he calls, with tongue in cheek, his "Wall Street suit." This is a loose jacket, pants and white pique blouse that is a far cry from the man-tailored suit.

For more formal occasions, he uses a silk fabric with a metallic sheen in the same low-key cuts as his other clothes. To increase the luxury of his knitted clothes, he favors a cashmere and silk mixture, attractive in a cabled cardigan and pullover shown with white taffeta pants. An alternative is a white sweater set in cotton worn with gray lame pants.

Five years ago Michael Kors started making clothes that were "simple and understated" and though his concept has evolved, he hasn't changed his basic approach.

The evolution for spring took the form of more dresses than he usually makes because he thought the one-piece dress seemed fresher than separates, he said.

For variety, he mixed different fabrics, usually keeping the top in cotton jersey so it would fit like a T-shirt and using linen cotton poplin or silk crepe for the skirt. A linen skirt has cotton jersey side panels to achieve a snugger fit.

His biggest innovation was for evening, where he made sleek rayon crepe dresses, usually with tank tops. The difference was the wide midriff of see-through chiffon. The dresses are in black and navy.

"So many women asked me for evening clothes that were sexy and dramatic but not beaded or ruffled," he said. "They also want dresses that don't take up a whole suitcase."

The crepe dresses, either short or to the floor, will work for black-tie evenings, he says.

New swimwear 'too daring' for U.S. market

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — When the girl from Ipanema goes walking to the beach this year, she's likely to be wearing a "boomerang" — a minuscule new swimsuit that designers say is too daring to be sold in the United States.

The "boomerang" or "delta wing," named for the slim triangular shape of its lower part, has replaced the already tiny tanga as Rio's fashionable beachwear. The suit consists of about 1 square foot of brightly colored fabric, and strings to hold it on.

"It's about 10 percent smaller than last year's tanga," Ines Myssen, 35, who designed the suit, said in an interview.

Myssen said the mini-bikini was a success with Brazilian women who "want less and less fabric in their beachwear because of the problem of suntan marks on their skin." Summer is on its way in this part of the world, and beaches already are jammed.

The Brazilian designer also exports swimsuits to the United States, France, Italy, Argentina, Chile, Puerto Rico and Bermuda. But she said there were problems selling the skimpy suits in the United States and the Spanish part of Latin America.

"We had to create a special model for those regions, using more fabric and designing bigger bras and bottoms," Myssen said.

Reluctance to wear the new suits is "a question of culture," she said.

Rosana Lara, a fashion designer and executive, predicted the new Rio style will influence beach fashions in Europe and, eventually, the United States. Some Western European importers already are accepting Brazilian mini-bikinis "as is," she told The Associated Press.

"It's traditional for U.S., French and Spanish designers to visit Brazil each year at this time to see the new summer fashions," said Lara, 32. Her company has introduced a high-cut swimsuit with abstract designs inspired by the late Spanish painter Joan Miro. "Little by little, countries will assimilate our more liberal beachwear," she said.

However, U.S. and Mexican women in Rio told the AP the style was too audacious to wear at home.

"North Americans generally are very bashful about the lower part of the body, and Brazilian swimsuits expose it almost entirely," said Lynne Robinson, a 30-year-old New York City native who designs beachwear here for the U.S. market but "within the American mentality."

"Trying to sell tangas in the United States or Spanish America is like trying to persuade Hindus to sacrifice their holy cows," said Diana Gutierrez, 28, a Mexican citizen living in Rio.

Even for those willing to wear the new suits, there may be risks, warned Veja, Brazil's largest circulation news magazine, in a recent edition.

Wagner & Brown, partner make MidCon offer

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Midland-based Wagner & Brown, along with Freeport-McMoRan, Inc., a New Orleans-based energy company, have tendered a $62.50-a-share offer for outstanding shares of MidCon Corp. Wagner & Brown is an oil and gas partnership founded 22 years ago by Cyril Wagner Jr. and Jack E. Brown.

Ken Smith with MidCon's public communications department, said the offer has "our people studying the offer and reviewing our options."

The offer, which expires at midnight Jan. 14, 1986, is further complicated by MidCon's recently completed acquisition of United Energy Resources. "The United acquisition was just completed last Thursday. It's brand-spanking new," said Smith. The $1.14 billion purchase involved a cash and stock transaction. Prior to completion of the purchase, MidCon's 1985 Annual Report listed its stock at 46⅝; after the purchase, MidCon stock began trading in the low 60s, closing Monday at 63⅜, up 1⅝.

Taking into consideration the assets gained from the United merger, MidCon has about 38.6 million shares outstanding, worth about $2.42 billion. The tender also involves MidCon's outstanding 10¼ percent convertible subordinated debentures, due in 2009. The two bidding companies have offered $1,488 on face amount of $1,000. According to Securities reference materials, there are $100 million of debentures outstanding, a total of $1.5 billion for the purchase of all the bonds. This would bring the total offer to about $3.9 billion.

"It looks like, to me, they are seriously intending to buy this company," offered Joe Liberty, senior vice president and manager of the Midland office of Rausher, Pierce and Refsnes. "They aren't using any gimmicks. This is a straightforward up front cash offer to buy the company. They intend to own the company. They're not playing any games."

Liberty added that he was excited about the offer, saying that it would be tremendous for Midland if Wagner & Brown acquires MidCon, which he said he thinks they can do. "This is a huge company, with over $4 billion in revenues. Some of that could end up in Midland."

MidCon is primarily a gas pipeline-related business, and Wagner & Brown knows a lot about the gas business, Liberty said. "I've known them both over 20 years. They surely mean business."

Drexel Burnham Lambert, Inc., the partners' financial adviser would raise $1.25 billion through private placement of debt securities; a banking group, reportedly led by Chemical Bank of New York, would lend $1 billion, and the partners would put up $600 million, according to today's edition of the Wall Street Journal. The Journal also quotes sources at Drexel Burnham as saying the firm is highly confident it can raise its share of the financing. The newspaper also quotes sources close to MidCon as saying MidCon considers the offer "unfriendly."

The Journal also reported that, according to Securities and Exchange Commission filings, the partnership of Wagner & Brown and Freeman-McMoRan said it won't be able to raise the $2.74 billion required after Jan. 1, when a federal law limiting the type of financing it plans to use takes effect. The law prohibits takeover offers where more than 50 percent of the financing is made up of high-yield, high-risk "junk" securities.

CPAs optimistic about Texas' economic outlook

From Staff and Wire Reports

DALLAS — The overall outlook for Texas' economy is one of cautious optimism with most indicators remaining stable, according to the CPA Poll of economic trends released today by the Texas Society of Certified Public Accountants.

CPAs surveyed in the Poll reflect relative optimism about current business conditions in Texas, with 20 percent rating the business climate as good, 45 percent normal and 35 percent bad. Houston CPAs were far more pessimistic, with 3 percent rating the economy good, 31.5 percent normal and 65.3 percent bad.

The sharpest regional contrasts occur in the central Texas areas of Austin and San Antonio, and in Dallas-Fort Worth. CPAs in Dallas-Fort Worth see present conditions as 35 percent good, 51.5 percent normal and 14.1 percent bad. Central Texas CPAs were equally positive, varying only about one point in their views.

Responding CPAs in the border, southeast and west Texas regions reflect opinions similar to Houston. In assessing the outlook for 1986, CPAs in these areas are slightly more optimistic in rating prospects at 25.1 percent better, 62.6 percent same and 12.2 percent worse.

Only 16.2 percent of CPAs statewide see any prospect of a downturn in Texas' economy during the first six months of 1986, with 63.8 predicting no change and 20 percent expecting an upturn. While Houston CPAs have a dim view of the present, they express optimism about the future. Only 8.1 percent predict a further downturn, while 24.6 percent expect business oncditions to improve. These results suggest that Houston CPAs believe the impact of the oil and gas downturn has bottomed out and that they anticipated some growth in 1986.

This survey of the state's CPAs indicates that respondents believe Texas' economy will be driven by expanded sales in the service, retail and wholesale sectors. However, they do not foresee increases in oil and gas, agriculture, and real estate. Inflation and unemployment are expected to remain at current low levels.

"The CPA Poll draws upon the specific experience of professionals who act as primary consultants to business on financial, operational and managerial plans and problems. In this way, the Poll provides an informed perspective on current conditions and anticipated plans of business within Texas," explained Dan Hanke, TSCPA president.

The CPA Poll also reports that a sizeable majority of the respondents expect the federal government to enact significant new tax legislation in 1986, but to take no action to address the federal budget deficit of the balance of payments.

The CPAs surveyed identify the federal deficit as the greatest factor affecting the economy in 1985, except in Houston where the oil and gas downturn was cited as most significant, a full 10 points ahead of the deficit. Only 4 in 10 of the CPAs polled anticipate that government will act to reduce the deficit in 1986. Of that group, 63.5 percent think reductions will be achieved through increased taxes, while 72.6 percent think spending will be reduced. CPAs across the state concur that the deficit will be the primary economic factor in 1986, followed by tax legislation.

More than 60 percent of CPAs surveyed in the Poll expect the government to pass significant tax legislation in 1986. However, 66.4 percent think that any new tax law may achieve greater equity but will not simplify the tax system.

The CPA Poll samples more than 1,000 of the 26,000 TSCPA members. The project was conducted jointly with the Ohio and New York CPAs and provides comparisons among the three widely divergent states. Texas CPAs tended to be generally less optimistic than their counterparts in either New York or Ohio, with New York CPAs the most positive both about current conditions and prospects for 1986.

The TSCPA, headquartered in Dallas, Texas, represents the CPAs in Texas.

Construction falls 12 percent in November

WASHINGTON (AP) — Housing construction plummeted 12.2 percent in November, the steepest decline in six months, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said the decline left construction at an annual rate of 1.55 million units in November, the lowest pace since April 1983. The month-to-month decline was the sharpest since a 13 percent drop in March.

Housing starts had risen 9 percent in October following a 7.1 percent September decline.

Analysts have been puzzled by the weakness in housing activity, given the fact that mortgage rates have now fallen to their lowest levels in six years.

The decline was centered in construction of single-family homes, which fell by 17.5 percent, the biggest drop since March 1984. The fall left construction of single-family homes at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 928,000 units.

Construction of multi-family housing fell by a smaller 2.7 percent to an annual rate of 619,000 units after having declined 0.8 percent in October.

All regions of the country suffered a decline in building activity with the biggest fall coming in the Northeast, a region which for most of the year has enjoyed a sharp rebound as the housing industry basked in the area's reviving economic fortunes.

In November, housing construction plunged 31.25 percent in the Northeast, the biggest decline in this region since a 42 percent drop in March 1984. The decline put construction in the region at an annual rate of 209,000 units last month.

Housing starts fell 16.2 percent in the Midwest and 1.8 percent in the West. The South, which accounted for half of new construction last year, had a 9.3 percent decline in construction in November, putting the annual rate at 730,000 units.

Permits for new construction also fell last month, dropping 2.4 percent following an even sharper 6.6 percent decline in October.

Texaco files suit to buy time while avoiding $12 billion bond payment

NEW YORK (AP) — In what Pennzoil Co. attorneys are calling "an act of desperation," Texaco Inc. has filed suit to block enforcement of a Texas law that would require it to post a $12 billion bond before appealing the record damage award Pennzoil won .

A Pennzoil lawyer contended Monday that the federal suit is an attempt from the nation's third largest oil company to buy time while trying to find ways of avoiding having to pay the judgment, which totals $11.1 billion with interest.

In documents filed Friday with the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York, Texaco said that if it is forced to post a bond of $12 billion — an amount approaching the company's $13.5 billion net worth — the expense would "will destroy Texaco as a going concern."

Thus, because Texaco would be financially unable to defend itself, its constitutional right to due process and equal protection under the law would be violated, the company maintained.

Irv. V. Terrell, an attorney with the Houston law firm of Baker & Botts, which represents Pennzoil, scoffed at the argument.

"We think we're going to win, because the Texaco bond statute is constitutional," he said. "Texaco has taken action in a federal situation out of desperation."

"This is just a delaying action to prevent Pennzoil from collecting ... They're delaying because they hope that the longer they hold out, something will happen — because what's happened so far is not so good," he added.

In Houston, Pennzoil spokesman Tom Powell said his company would file a reponse to the suit within 20 days.

Texaco's stock fell $1.12½ a share to $28.62½ in composite New York Stock Exchange trading.

In the lawsuit, Texaco also asked the federal court to keep Pennzoil from claiming any Texaco assets while Texaco appeals the judgment.

Last month, a Houston jury ruled that Texaco had wrongly interfered with a merger agreement between Pennzoil and Getty Oil Co. and then acquired Getty istelf. The jury awarded Pennzoil $10.53 billion in damages.

Texas State Judge Solomon Casseb Jr. affirmed the award last week, added $600 million in interest, and said more interest would accumulate at the rate of 10 percent annually.

Casseb also temporarily waived the requirement that Texaco post the $12 billion after the two companies agreed that Texaco could continue operating for up to 90 days without paying the bond. Texaco also agreed not to file for reorganization under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code, while Pennzoil agreed not to attach any liens to Texaco property.

General Dynamics officials plead innocent

LOS ANGELES (AP) — NASA Chief James Beggs, General Dynamics Corp. and three of its executives asked for a speedy trial after pleading innocent to charges they conspired to defraud the government by hiding $7.5 million in losses on the Sgt. York anti-aircraft gun.

Beggs, three other General Dynamics executives and an attorney for the defense contractor entered the innocent pleas Monday before U.S. District Judge Ferdinand F. Fernandez, who set an April 8, 1986 trial date.

A seven-count indictment claims the government lost $3.2 million when the defendants conspired to hide losses on a $41 million Sgt. York development program by charging expenses to other government-paid accounts between 1978 and 1981.

Attorney Thomas P. Sullivan, acting as chief counsel for General Dynamics, told Fernandez the defendants wanted the trial to begin as soon as April 1986, citing the government's suspension of virtually all General Dynamics contracts until the case is resolved.

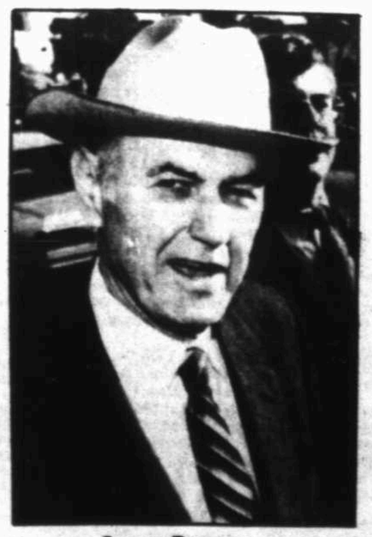

"This company could be literally ... put out of business by this suspension," Sullivan said.

Justice Department attorney Randy I. Bellows argued the case was too complex to be heard so quickly. Attorneys estimate the trial could take at least 12 weeks, with Bellows saying he would call at least 70 witnesses.

If convicted, the four men face up to five years in prison and a $10,000 fine on each count. The corporation faces up to $10,000 in fines per count.

The indictment returned Dec. 2 prompted Beggs to take a leave of absence from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration until the case is resolved.

Texas Air may buy TWA if Icahn bid fails

HOUSTON (AP) — If New York financier Carl Icahn's bid to buy Trans World Airlines collapses, Texas Air Corp. will have more then $700 million in cash ready to take his place, Texas Air President Frank Lorenzo says.

TWA and Texas Air officials confirmed Monday that Lorenzo has offered $22 per share as well as his promise to negotiate concessions with TWA's labor unions if Icahn's bid falls through.

The statement came one week after Wall Street sources disclosed Icahn is having trouble assembling financing to buy the approximately 16.9 million shares, or about 48 percent, of the airline he does not already own. The acquisition was supposed to be completed by Dec. 1.

It was the latest twist in a bitter battle Icahn and Lorenzo began earlier this year to acquire the financially ailing TWA.

Lorenzo originally offered $26 a share in cash and securities for the airline, but TWA opted to be acquired by Icahn for $24 a share in cash and securities in September.

Icahn was aided by TWA employees who were fearful of Lorenzo's anti-labor reputation.

GM waiting for competition to fire first shots

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp. went too far when it ignited a rebate and cut-rate financing war last summer and would like to let competitors fire the first shots next time, according to GM Chairman Roger B. Smith.

But Smith, in a Monday interview, said he would prefer that Ford Motor Co. and Chrysler Corp. make the first moves.

In August, GM set off a cut-rate financing and rebate war by offering 7.7 percent financing on most of its car lines.

Crown Zellerbach announces three-way deal

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — James River Corp. would acquire majority ownership of a smaller Crown Zellerbach Corp. and British financier Sir James Goldsmith would buy most of three businesses spun off from Crown Zellerbach in a newly announced three-way deal.

James River would control a version of Crown Zellerbach stripped of everything but its paper operations, while Goldsmith would buy most of the stock in three companies involved in forest products, cardboard containers and office products, the companies said Monday.

Hitachi plans start of VCR production in U.S.

TOKYO (AP) — Hitachi Ltd., Japan's largest electronic company, says it will start production of home-use videocassette recorders in the United States in June.

The company's subsidiary, Hitachi Consumer Products of America Inc., will spend about $1.5 million in remodeling production facilities at its television plant in Anaheim, Calif., for VCR production, officials said Monday.

Government relaxes Chinese trade restrictions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is relaxing restrictions on a wide variety of goods exported to China. Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said Monday that easier trade relations can be had with the Soviet Union, too, but that much still depends on Soviet progress on human rights.

The secretary said licensing changes would expand from seven to 27 the number of categories of products that can be shipped to China without special review. He called the action "a major step ahead" in trade relations between the two nations.

"My boss thought we weren't ready for word processing. But I showed him it's easy and affordable with Olivetti Videotyping."

The Olivetti ETV240 Videotyping system combines the video display and features of word processing with the simplicity and price of an electronic typewriter. With the ETV240 anyone can learn to create, modify, store and print documents in less than an hour. And, for simple tasks it can be used as a typewriter alone, without even turning on the screen.

Imagine...an electronic typewriter plus word processing functions, all for about the cost of a typewriter alone.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

T notes, bonds pay interest semianually

BY BILL DOYLE

Q. I have some two-year U.S. Treasury notes, with a maturity date of June 30, 1986. A newspaper table of Treasury bonds and notes, a clipping of which I have enclosed, lists its price as 14.87, as of June 1986, but shows it dropping to 12.62 in July 1986. I don't understand this. Have I misread the clipping?

A. Yes. The numbers you mention are not prices. They are the interest rates our federal government pays on two different issues of Treasury notes.

The only Treasury note issue due to mature on June 30, 1986 is one paying 14 7/8 percent annual interest. That's 14.875 percent — the 14.87 number in the table, with the final digit deleted.

For every $10,000 face value of those notes you own, you receive $1,487.50 annual interest — $743.75 every six months, because Treasury notes and bonds pay interest semiannually.

And, when your notes reach maturity, you will receive their full face value.

The 12.62 number immediately below the 14.87 number in the rate column of the newspaper Treasury bond and notes table has nothing to do with your notes. That number refers to the 12 5/8 percent — 12.625 percent (12.62, without the final digit) — issue of Treasury notes due to mature in July 1986. That's an entirely different issue of notes than those you own. Also, you're confused about other aspects of your notes. The "Treasury 14 7/8s of June '86," you own are not two-year notes. Those particular notes were issued in 1982. They are four-year notes.

It may be that you bought your notes in 1984, when they had two years left to maturity, leading you to believe you purchased two-year notes. Not so.

Please don't think I am picking on you, but you should find out what you're buying before you make any investments in the future. My strong suggestion is to sit down with your broker or banker and have every investment you make, or are considering making, explained in detail.

Fortunately, the Treasury notes you now own have been excellent investments. However, if you're mixed up on what you're buying, you might make some bad investments in the years ahead.

• • •

Q. I am 78 and may lose my sight. So, I would like to buy 10-year Treasury notes. Is this possible?

A. The U.S. Treasury issues notes with maturities of anywhere from two to 10 years at different times, depending on the federal government's needs to finance this nation's debt.

If a 10-year note issue is offered for sale, you can purchase some at that time. If no such new offering is made, you can buy whatever previously issued long-term note issue is available in the "secondary market" — where notes are traded. A brokerage firm or bank will handle the purchase for you.

• • •

Q. Can I purchase U.S. Treasury notes maturing in two or three years and have the interest paid to me monthly or quarterly?

A. You can't have that arrangement, if all the notes you purchase are of the same issue, for the simple reason that notes pay interest semiannually.

You can accomplish what you have in mind by buying notes with different maturities, which pay interest at different times. For example, you can purchase some notes that pay interest in March and September and others that pay interest in June and December. That way, you'll get an interest check quarterly.

And, if you buy six different note issues — one paying interest in January and July, the second in February and August, the third in March and September, the fourth in April and October, the fifth in May and November, the sixth in June and December, you'll receive an interest check every month.

Here's a word of caution. You'll probably have to pay a commission, markup and/or service charge on each note issue you buy. The extra costs involved could negate the advantage of receiving monthly interest checks.

Also, the total commissions, markups and/or service charges on the purchase of two or six purchases of notes almost certainly would be higher than on one note purchase.

MIDCON

MidCon has three principal lines of business: natural gas transmission and marketing, oil and gas exploration and production, and onshore contract drilling. The firm's five main subsidiaries include Natural Gas Pipeline Company of America, Mississippi River Transmission Corp., MidCon Enterprises, Inc. and MidCon Exploration Co., both based in Houston, and Exeter Drilling Co., based in Denver. The company operates primarily in the Gulf Coast, Southwest and Rocky Mountain regions.

With acquisition of United Energy Resources, MidCon will have about 30,000 miles of pipeline. The projected 1986 budget will be $374 million, of which $137 million is for exploration and development. According to the 1985 Annual Report, MidCon had an income of $70 million in Fiscal Year 1985, following a writeoff of $85.5 million due to termination of participation in the Great Plains coal gasification project. In FY 1985, the company had revenues of just under $4.1 billion, assets of $5.8 billion, and long-term debt of $1.8 billion.

Wagner and Brown have both been listed on Forbes Magazine list of the top 400 richest Americans and are close associates of T.Boone Pickens, president of Mesa Petroleum. They have also participated with Pickens in takeover bids for Gulf Oil Corp., Phillips Petroleum Co. and Unocal Corp.

PLEA

The indictment also caused the Pentagon to bar General Dynamics indefinitely from obtaining new government contracts, although the Navy relented and let the company bid on nuclear submarine work.

It was the second time this year that St. Louis-based General Dynamics was barred from getting new defense contracts. A three-month suspension over disputed contracting practices began in May.

General Dynamics spokesman Peter Connolly has said the company committed no crime and said indictments resulted from "a highly sophisticted regulatory and accounting matter which should be resolved in a civil forum."

Beggs, 59, of Bethesda, Md., was the company's executive vice president and a corporate director during the period covered by the indictment. He became head of NASA in July 1981.

Other defendants, still employed by General Dynamics, are Ralph E. Hawes Jr., 54, of Claremont; David L. McPherson, 45, of Alta Loma; and, James C. Hansen Jr., 53, of Upland.

The Division Air Defense (DIVAD) weapon that came to be known as the Sgt. York was a radar-guided, tank-mounted gun designed to protect tanks and infantry against aircraft.

Eventually, the Pentagon awarded the production contract to a General Dynamics competitor, Ford Aerospace & Communications Corp.

But the Sgt. York was scrapped last August by Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, who said: "The system didn't work well enough. That's the simple fact."

The government spent $1.8 billion on the Sgt. York but only 65 of the guns were delivered before the program was canceled.

Techtronic to merge with Amarillo firm

The merger of Techtronic Data Systems, Inc. of Midland with Turnkey Computer Systems, Inc. of Amarillo through a stock exchange has been announced jointly by Dale A. Brown, president of TDS, and Lynn Camp, head of Turnkey.

"Joining of out tow companies will open up new markets and result in considerable growth potential for both entities," said Brown.

Since its formation in 1979, TDS has provided computer systems and services for the oil and gas industry throughout the Permian Basin. Turnkey has specialized in the same type of computer systems and services for the oil and gas industry throughout the Permian Basin. Turnkey has specialized in the same type of computer systems and services directed toward cattle feeders, CPA's, attorneys, physicians, and a variety of small businesses.

TDS was formed initially by two Midland service providing firms and its plan was implemented by six Midland businessmen. Brown became president of the business in 1980. In November, 1982, Brown and Jack R. McGraw purchased TDS from the founding shareholders.

From an original staff of four TDS currently has 20 employees and maintains its offices at 407 N. Big Spring Street in Midland.

The Midland firms has evolved into a company which provides its oil and gas accounting systems to primarily small and medium sized oil and gas producers, operators and drilling companies. The system is designed specifically for these clients and accommodates all areas of oil producers' accounting and land department lease records, and provides up-to-date information for these areas, according to Brown.

At the present time, TDS has seventy clients using a variety of products and services including complete in-house systems, facilities management arrangements, time sharing and custom processing services. These clients are located primarily in the Permian Basin but some are in Dallas, Houston, San Antonio, Oklahoma, Illinois, North Carolina, and Massachusetts.

The merger will result in TDS operating as a wholly owned subsidiary of Turnkey Computer Systems, Inc. Brown will continue as the chief executive vice president and a director of the combined entities. McGraw of Midland will serve as a director of the firm.

Officers in addition to Brown and Camp will be Mike Borger, financial vice president, and Stan Feighny, marketing and sales vice president. Both are in Amarillo.

"We are excited about the growth possibilities which the merger will provide," said Brown.

Effective date of the merger was November 1, 1985.

Comet watching may be man's common denominator

FORT DAVIS (AP) — The McDonald Observatory offers a choice view of Halley's comet, which is drawing an emotional response from many who haven't scene the astral phenomenon in 75 years.

Recently an elderly, ailing man arrived at the observatory perched in the Davis Mountains, clutching a portable oxygen bottle and asking to look through a telescope at the comet.

The man claimed to have seen the comet during its last visit, in 1910, observatory staff member Robert Scheppler said.

After seeing it for the second time, he announced he was ready to die.

It's that kind of emotion that has accompanied Halley's return visit, Scheppler says. Its next pass won't be for another 76 years, in the year 2061, and in Scheppler's analysis people are looking at the comet as a "common denominator" for all humans, past and future.

"In a period of time when people pooh-pooh historical values, it raises the hair on the back of my neck to think that in theory there is one experience everybody who ever lived can share, and that is looking at Halley's comet," Scheppler told The Dallas Morning News.

About 200 miles southeast of El Paso, McDonald Observatory is considered by astronomers to be nearly perfect for looking at the comet.

It's also protected, within a 60-mile radius, by a state law that prohibits light encroachment that would affect the observatory, which sits at the base of 6,700-foot Mount Locke.

Aside from a few professional astronomers, whose time with the scope was allotted two months ago, only a select group of VIPs are scheduled to get a view of the images captured by the giant device.

Gov. Mark White will have his chance to view Halley's comet with the state's best telescope. He's expected in late March.

Pilots form airlines' weakest safety link

DALLAS (AP) — Despite technology that has propelled flight from Kitty Hawk to the Moon, passengers' lives still depend on what one federal official calls "the weak link in the system" — the people in the cockpit.

"There is the annoying sound of a skeleton rattling in ourset," James Burnett, National Transportation Safety Board chairman told the Dallas Times Herald. "The human in the cockpit remains, if not the weak link in the system, certainly the most unpredictable."

That human factor is crucial because is contributes to between 70 and 80 percent of aviation accidents, the newspaper reported in copyright stories today. And as many long-recognized facets of the problem continue to prompt accidents, changes in modern aviation are producing new ones to confront.

Experience in the cockpit is one of the biggest of those concerns as airlines scramble to fill the demands of expanding airlines and flight schedules.

In October alone, airlines hired four times more pilots than in all of 1975, and thousands of fliers trained in World War II and the Korean War are soon to depart as they reach the mandatory retirement age of 60.

Some airline-recruiting standards have been relaxed to fill those demands, and veteran pilots say it shows in the new recruits' performance, the newspaper said.

"Recently we've hired people that just have the basic qualifications," said senior Air Midwest captain Jim Cheney. "You might have a guy that last week was flying a single-engine Cessna, and this week he's flying a multi-engine plane as a co-pilot."

THE FEDERAL Aviation Administration has expressed concern about the trend and says it is looking at the adequacy of minimum standards and the training pilots receive.

Since last year, the FAA has cited three large airlines for improper training or inadequate licensing of more than 375 pilots. In the last two years, the FAA has cited at least 16 airlines for inadequate training programs or documentation of pilot training and certification.

Meanwhile, inattention, fatigue and a tendency to take chances take their toll on pilots forced to conquer increasing monotony and computerized flight. Experts say complacency looms as the next great cockpit problem, the Times Herald reports.

In the May 1979 crash of a Downeast Airlines plane in Rockland, Maine, investigators found the veteran captain had recently shown signs of chronic fatigue; the first officer, who was flying, had almost no experience and the crew ignored FAA minimum-altitude restrictions in trying to land in the fog. The crash killed 17.

Today, government and airline officials say they are addressing the threat of the human factor and are making progress in solving it.

In 1983, the NTSB established a new human-performance investigation division in 1983, and airlines have developed programs to train pilots to use sound judgment and stay alert.

BUT THE industry continues to experience accidents caused by human errors.

"They represent an enormously dangerous void in our knowledge of what it is that causes accidents," Burnett said.

Besides the problem of inexperience — pilots hired this year have an average of a third less jet experience than those hired two years ago, the Future Aviation Professionals of America job bank says — promotions are quick, too.

The NTSB says that in 1982, it took the average first officer for a major airline 14 years to become a captain. Today, the average is nine years, and pilots at some growing airlines can move to captain in a year or less.

Most major airlines today require applicants to hold a commercial pilot's license, which represents a minimum of 250 flight hours, as opposed to the previously required air transports license that requires 1,500 hours.

"A guy with 1,000 hours didn't have a prayer 10 years ago. He couldn't have gotten an interview," said FAPA President Louis Smith.

Airlines say pilots who emerge from training programs that are running at full-tilt at facilities throughout the country are thoroughly schooled and fully capable of ensuring safety.

But many pilots — including 45 percent of 1,221 that responded to a Times Herald survey — said the new recruits just aren't as good as pilots used to be.

"You have to watch them like a hawk. You've got to constantly watch them," a 53-year-old United Airlines captain said about new crew members he'd flown with. "You begin to wonder how they would handle something if it went really wrong."

Some younger pilots say their senior colleagues are exaggerating the problem and are making it worse by refusing to give them pointers.

But even when pilots are qualified and experienced, accidents occur. A recent study found that 60 percent of the crashes during a 10-year period happened when pilots didn't properly heed procedures.

Austin may snuff smoking in public places

AUSTIN (AP) — The Austin City Council will hear public testimony this week on a proposed ordinance that would limit smoking in public buildings and private workplaces.

Supporters of the ordinance say passive exposure to tobacco smoke — breathing smoke from someone else's cigarette — is a hazard to nonsmokers.

Limiting smoking in offices, restaurants and other gathering places would follow action taken by Dallas and several other major cities, backers say.

"The ordinance operates under the basic premise that everyone has the right to breathe clean air," said Councilwoman Sally Shipman, who proposed the ordinance along with Mayor Frank Cooksey.

"I want to start the public hearing and get some reaction," she added.

The plan submitted by Ms. Shipman and Cooksey would forbid smoking in all public buildings and private workplaces, except in areas designated for smoking.

The effort is supported by Friends of Austin Nonsmokers and other groups, including the local chapter of the American Lung Association.

STATE IN BRIEF

Jordan: Corporations must fight apartheid

AUSTIN (AP) — Multinational corporations must do more to help end racial discrimination in South Africa, says former congresswoman Barbara Jordan.

"We, the United States, ought to do more to bring about an end to this (apartheid)," Ms. Jordan said in remarks made public Monday.

Ms. Jordan, a professor at the University of Texas' Lyndon B. Johnson School of Public Affairs, was the only American to serve on a United Nations committee that examined the impact of multinational corporations doing business in South Africa and Namibia.

The panel, chaired by former Australian prime minister Malcolm Fraser, held hearings in September and is making recommendations to the international body. An interview with her about the proceedings was released by the UT public relations office.

"I am hopeful that it (the current South African situation) will be resolved peacefully. The country probably is not quite a hair-trigger away from a bloodbath, but it is moving in that direction," Ms. Jordan said.

Blind refuse to move

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Passengers on a flight to Portland were delayed more than two hours and had to switch planes in Dallas when four members of a national advocacy group for the blind refused to give up their seats near an emergency exit.

The four people all are members of the National Federation of the Blind and were returning to Portland on Sunday after a demonstration in Little Rock, Ark., before the National Accreditation Council for Agencies Servicing the Blind and the Physically Disabled.

The action was the latest in a series of incidents during the past 13 months in which blind passengers have protested airline policies that restrict seating for the handicapped.

"We didn't ask to be assigned those seats, but there was no reason for us to move," said Dianne Hayes, president of the Portland chapter of the federation.

Continental 'most cited'

DALLAS (AP) — Continental Airlines' pilots are being cited for violating federal regulations more than those at any other airline, and Delta Air Lines' pilots have the lowest citation rate, the Dallas Times Herald reported today.

The newspaper said that based on comparisons of 1,152 federal pilot citations issued since 1980 and the number of flights per major airline, pilots at Continental, Midway and American ranked first, second and third for the highest rate of violations.

TWA, USAir, Frontier and Pan Am were among other airlines whose pilots were cited more often than the average of the 17 airlines used for comparison, the newspaper said.

Victims to be paid

DALLAS (AP) — The city of Dallas has agreed to pay as much as $169,000 to the victims of two police shootings, although the officers involved were cleared of any wrongdoing by police and grand jury investigations.

According to documents now under seal in Dallas federal court, two sons of an armed man shot to death by police in 1980 received $25,000 each.

Drug test appeals won

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A policy change, not errors, prompted the overturning of disciplinary actions against 1,621 current and former servicemen accused of using marijuana or other illegal substances, Air Force officials say.

Brooks Air Force Base spokesman C.B. Perdue said Monday that a change in what constitutes a positive sample — not mishandling or testing errors — resulted in the Army or Air Force service members winning appeals of drug tests.

Another 2,817 appeals are under consideration because of changes in standards implemented by a blue-ribbon panel, including an increase in the amount of trace chemicals of marijuana needed to be found in urine for a positive sample.

The memorial, located on the Texas State Fair Grounds in Dallas, will consist of four granite tablets bearing the names of those killed in the war. A reflecting pool will surround the memorial, while an eternal flame burns over a tablet inscribed with the names of those soldiers still missing in action. Landscaped gardens covering approximately two acres of the Texas State Fair Grounds will encircle the monument and provide an area for quiet contemplation and reflection.

Your support is needed for this statewide memorial to become a reality. So send your tax-deductible donation today to the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Fund of Texas – and build a memorial honoring these brave Americans.

Alleged mob boss' murder could touch off war

Prosecutors say Castellano's life, death epitomized career of Mafia crime lord

Castellano

NEW YORK (AP) — To his prosecutors, the life and death of Paul Castellano epitomized the career of the contemporary Mafia crime lord, from his ascent to wealth and power to his ultimate destruction by the system that made him.

Castellano, 73, shot to death with his bodyguard Monday in a Manhattan street assassination, was a butcher by trade, a Prohibition bootlegger by avocation, and one of the youngest mobsters to attend the Mafia summit conference in 1957 at Apalachin, N.Y., authorities said.

Reputedly the head of the Gambino family — the nation's largest and mightiest organized crime combine — Castellano had been enriched by business ventures licit and illicit.

He also had been snagged by three racketeering indictments in the past two years, and was in the middle of a federal trial when he was killed.

Author Paul Meskil said when Carlo Gambino arrived in America in 1921, he was met by Castellano, his cousin, at a dock in Norfolk, Va. Castellano later married Gambino's sister, Kathryn.

When Gambino died in 1976, Castellano reportedly was chosen to succeed him at a meeting of family leaders.

Castellano looked and acted more like a successful Staten Island businessman than a hoodlum. He lived in Staten Island's Todt Hill section in an expensive new brick house where tree-mounted video cameras scanned the street.

When mobsters said "Up the hill," police said, they meant Castellano.

Although he was held in contempt of court for refusing to discuss the Apalachin meeting with investigators, Castellano was only convicted once of a crime, and served several months in a Connecticut prison for robbery.

"He's a millionaire purely on his legitimate businesses," a Brooklyn assistant district attorney who demanded anonymity said several years ago. "He doesn't need to get involved" with overt illegality.

"If you handed him a gun he'd jump out the window," said a New York City police organized crime specialist. "If you handed him some heroin he'd run a mile in the opposite direction."

Law enforcement sources said that when Frank Perdue, owner of Perdue Farms Inc., faced a challenge from labor unions five years ago, he sought and received a meeting with Castellano.

Asked by an FBI agent why he wanted to meet Castellano, Perdue — who was not accused of any wrongdoing — reportedly answered, "He's the godfather."

In recent years Castellano did much of his business at home. He never traveled far without the man who also was killed Monday, his chauffeur and bodyguard Thomas Bilotti.

While authorities would not speculate on who was responsible for the killings, FBI organized crime specialist Thomas Sheer called them, "a part of the changing of the guard that's been going on for the last 25 years."

Although the Gambino family remained entrenched in such areas as loansharking, pornography and extortion, money also flowed in from interests in the trucking, construction and garment industries.

In 1970 Castellano's sons, Joseph and Paul Jr., formed Dial Poultry, a company which grew rapidly and soon distributed poultry to hundreds of stores in the metropolitan area.

Neither has been accused of wrongdoing, but Dial has been listed by the police as a mob-controlled business.

NEW YORK (AP) — The daring rush-hour street shooting of the reputed boss of the nation's most powerful crime family and his bodyguard could "determine the future of organized crime in this country" and touch off a battle for control within the Mafia, authorities said.

Paul Castellano, the reputed mob boss, and Thomas Bilotti, a reputed captain in the Gambino crime family, were shot in the head and body by three men who walked up to their car, pulled automatic weapons from under trenchcoats and opened fire, said Chief of Detectives Richard Nicastro.

Both died where they fell Monday evening, lying face-up in pools of blood within feet of the black Lincoln sedan Bilotti had driven.

"It could be the beginning of a crime war. But only time will tell that," said FBI organized crime expert Thomas Sheer. "This undoubtedly will trigger some sort of reaction. It's a part of the changing of the guard that's been going on for the last 25 years."

Castellano, 73, and Bilotti, 45, were walking from the car when they were shot outside Sparks, a midtown steak house, Nicastro said.

The gunmen ran into the rush-hour crowd after the 5:26 p.m. shooting just blocks from Grand Central Terminal and drove off in a car parked a block away, said Nicastro. The street was littered with shell cases. No weapons were recovered.

"What we have here was the assassination of the head of the largest and most powerful organized crime family in the United States," Sheer said.

Arthur Brill, spokesman for the President's Committee on Organized Crime, said, "Whoever authorized the hit, whoever takes his place, could very well determine the future of organized crime in this country."

He refused to speculate on who was responsible for the slayings, as did other law enforcement officials.

"Quite frankly, we don't know who did it," Sheer said at the scene of the shootings. "But our investigation is only two hours old...Our track record is good. We'll find out who did it."

Castellano had been on trial on federal racketeering conspiracy charges in federal court in Manhattan. He was charged with running a car-theft ring that also murdered five people who threatened to expose it.

Star prosecution witness Dominick Montiglio testified last week that Castellano took over the Gambino family in 1976 and was the ultimate authority in the car-theft ring.

John Mitchell, a partner of Castellano lawyer James La Rossa, said Castellano had met with La Rossa earlier Monday. The trial, which recessed last Wednesday, was due to resume today.

It was not immediately clear how Castellano's death would affect the case, although it seemed likely the remaining defendants would ask for a mistrial as they have several times.

Castellano also was indicted earlier this year with the alleged leaders of New York City's other four Mafia families, all charged with sitting on a Mafia "Commission" which authorized murders and settled disputes.

"At first I was shocked," said Edward McDonald, head of the federal Organized Crime Task Force in the borough of Brooklyn, after hearing of the shootings. "But history shows so many mob bosses have been murdered, there's always reason to believe the head of a crime family will eventually be executed."

Police said many of the Gambinos' 200 to 250 members were increasingly involved in legitimate concerns in the food, entertainment and jewelry businesses as well as illegal pursuits.

Castellano, a butcher by trade, allegedly succeeded his late brother-in-law Carlo Gambino as head of the crime family, which had a reputation for being comparatively judicious in its use of violence. "They're not a crazy family," a narcotics prosecutor once said.

In addition to its activities throughout greater New York, the Gambino family is alleged to have illegal enterprises in Pennsylvania, Florida, Atlantic City, N.J., and Las Vegas, Nev.

Castellano's underboss was alleged to be Aniello Dellacroce, who died earlier this month of natural causes. Time magazine reported after his death that he had been a federal informant, but the FBI has declined comment.

Lawmakers reject $370 billion spending bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Much of the federal government was running on empty today and Congress' plans to adjourn for the year were in shambles after the House rejected an omnibus, $370 billion spending bill that would have restored the flow of money.

Conservatives upset with the overall size of the measure, liberals angry at increases included for the Pentagon, and other legislators concerned about a possible future pay raise for members of Congress joined to kill the measure on a 239-170 vote shortly before midnight Monday.

"It's never wise to keep the House in after 11 (p.m.)," said Rep. Lynn Martin, R-Ill. "It's like managing a nursery school without a nap."

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., angrily warned that rejection of the money bill could keep Congress meeting right up to Christmas.

"We have enough work to carry us until (next) Monday or Tuesday," O'Neill said.

With the end of the first session of the 99th Congress nowhere in sight, President Reagan sought a resurrection in the House of his tax overhaul plan that was buried last week by near-unanimous Republican defections.

Congress' chaotic year-end lurch also included possible action on:

- Massive farm legislation touching everything from food stamps to agricultural research and providing about $52 billion over five years for price and income support programs.
- A federal guarantee of the troubled Farm Credit System.
- Legislation promised in the budget adopted last August to force about $80 billion in deficit-reduction action over the next three years.

Government workers were told to report to work as usual today although the spending authority of many federal agencies technically ended at 6 p.m. Monday with the expiration of a stopgap measure Congress enacted last week.

Action was expected today in the House and Senate on a short-term measure to keep affected agencies operating at current levels through the end of the week. The bill that was rejected in the House would have carried the agencies without a regular appropriation through the remainder of the fiscal year, which ends next Sept. 30.

The measure is necessary because seven of the 13 regular annual appropriations bills for the fiscal year that began Oct. 1 have yet to either gain final congressional action or be signed into law.

Edwin L. Dale Jr., spokesman for the White House Office of Management and Budget, said late Monday, "All workers will come to work tomorrow morning (today) and they will get the word then as to whether they will go into a shutdown mode or not."

The overnight lapse in spending authority was not expected to cause any disruption of government operations.

In the push toward adjournment, legislators have scrambled to use the urgently needed spending bill as a vehicle for pet projects that otherwise would not be enacted.

In addition, House and Senate negotiators finishing work on the spending bill Monday voted to allow senators to earn an extra $7,510 a year in speaking fees and opened the door to a 1987 pay raise for all legislators.

Critics decried the increase in senators' speaking income when spending for many programs was being cut to reduce federal deficits.

"For us to sneak it in or for us to appear to have snuck it in does us a disservice," said Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz.

The provision would allow members of the Senate to earn as much as 40 percent above their $75,100 congressional pay in outside honoraria. The current limit is 30 percent, and the increase would lift the cap from slightly over $22,500 to a little more than $30,000 annually, effective Jan. 1.

The old 30 percent cap would remain in effect for House members unless they took a separate vote to change House rules.

Another section of the bill would require that both houses of Congress pass legislation to block any pay raise expected to be proposed in late 1986 by a federal pay commission.

The bill also would permit defense spending to rise to at least $282.5 billion next year while freezing or cutting many domestic programs.

During House debate Monday night, Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., hit at the Pentagon spending saying it was part of a "continuing saga of giving the Pentagon more money than it can reasonably spend, to the detriment of virtually every other segment of our society."

He added that people advocating the bill "fall below what ought to be an acceptable moral standard."

President and Mrs. Reagan, during a memorial service, console the loved ones of the servicemen who were killed in the jetliner crash at Gander, Newfoundland.

Reagans console soldiers' families

FORT CAMPBELL, Ky. (AP) — Tracey Walker, who was engaged to one of the 248 soldiers killed aboard the chartered jet that crashed in Newfoundland, wept and clung to President Reagan as he offered consoling words during a memorial service.

Spec. 4 Jeff S. Kee, was carrying home a diamond ring for Miss Walker on the Arrow Air DC-8 that crashed on takeoff Thursday from Gander International Airport. The crash killed 248 soldiers from Fort Campbell's 101st Airborne Division and eight crew members.

The Hopkinsville 18-year-old continued to weep as the president and Nancy Reagan moved on to comfort more than 300 other relatives and friends of the dead soldiers at Monday's memorial service.

"You do not grieve alone," the president told those gathered in the bunting-festooned hangar.

"We grieve as a nation, together, as together we say goodbye to those who died in the service of their country."

Behind him was a 40-foot banner of the "Screaming Eagle" division, and soldiers on either side held multicolored unit flags.

Reagan stayed a half-hour longer than his scheduled hour visit so he could talk to each of the mourning families. The division's band played solemn music as the president and Mrs. Reagan, dabbing her eyes with a handkerchief, made the rounds.

The soldiers of the 101st Airborne had been returning home on a regular roation after serving six months in the Middle East on a multinational peacekeeping force in the Sinai.

Bessie Jennings, who lost her son, Staff Sgt. Donnie Jennings, said she appreciated the president taking the time to visit.

"He showed a lot of care and understanding but it's not going to take the grief away," she said. Jennings never got to see his newborn son, just four weeks old, she added.

Columbia launch postponed 24 hours

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The launching of Columbia was postponed 24 hours, after the countdown team fell far behind today in readying the flagship of the fleet for its first flight in more than two years.

"They had too much work to do, and they just ran out of time," said George Diller, a spokesman for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

The launching, originally set for Wednesday morning, was rescheduled for 7 a.m. EST Thursday, with Columbia carrying a crew of seven that includes a Florida congressman and the first Hispanic-American astronaut.

With work running behind schedule in closing out the engine compartment, NASA inserted an unplanned four-hour "hold" in the countdown Monday night, stopping the clock for four hours. The time was borrowed from an 8 hour, 40 minute hold period that had been planned today to give crews time to catch up on any task that might have fallen behind.

Columbia will be commanded by astronaut Robert Gibson. The other crew members are Rep. Bill Nelson, a Democrat whose district includes Cape Canaveral; Franklin Chang-Diaz, a Costa Rican-born Hispanic-American; Charles Bolden, Steve Hawley, George Nelson and Robert Cenker.

Officers issued disinfectant lotion

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — Largely out of concern over AIDS, police have been issued disinfectant hand lotion in case they come into contact with people who are afflicted with any contagious diseases.

Eight-ounce bottles of EpiCare, a lotion that is 50 percent alcohol, were issued to officers last week, said police Maj. Jerry Bullins. The lotion won't kill the AIDS virus, but will let officers wash their hands on duty.

Growing publicity about AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases had prompted police officials to be more concerned about sanitation, Bullins said. "It's the AIDS scare more than anything. Everybody is a little more cautious. It's probably something we should have been doing all along."

"Some of the people we come in contact with are telling officers that they have various diseases," Bullins said. "Whether or not it's true, it is becoming a problem."

Jeweler charged with tax evasion

NEW YORK (AP) — The president and comptroller of Van Cleef & Arpels, the prestigious Fifth Avenue jewelers, have pleaded innocent to charges of evading state and city sales taxes on $4.6 million by pretending to send merchandise out of state.

Manhattan District Attorney Robert Morgenthau on Monday announced the indictments, which he said covered 129 transactions from January 1980 through March 1985. The firm allegedly filed forms showing the purchases had been mailed out of state.

Morgenthau said a grand jury charged the company, its president, Claude Arpels, 74, and its comptroller, Al Schwartz, 66, with 273 counts of filing false tax returns, falsifying company records and conspiracy.

Arpels, of Manhattan, and Schwartz, of Oceanside, pleaded innocent before acting state Supreme Court Justice Carol Berkman, who released them on their own recognizance pending a Feb. 24 hearing before the trial-level court.

Edwards' brother partially acquitted

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Despite a jury deadlock in his racketeering and fraud trial, Gov. Edwin Edwards says the acquittal of his brother on 41 of 50 counts is a sign "we're moving slowly but surely toward the ultimate good results."

After jurors reported the deadlock and read the partial verdict, U.S. District Judge Marcel Livaudais sent them back to work to strive for a complete verdict. The jury ended its fifth day of deliberations about 5 p.m. Monday.

News of the deadlock and Marion Edwards' partial acquittal came a few hours after Livaudais refused to remove a juror who touched off a furor Saturday when he flashed a thumbs-down sign to television cameras.

U.S. Attorney John Volz said he wasn't worried about the partial acquittal and that the remaining charges constitute the most important part of his case.

All five defendants in the case remain charged with conspiracy under the federal Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization act. In addition, the jury is working on eight counts of mail and wire fraud against Marion Edwards, 49 counts of mail and wire fraud against the governor, Ron Falgout and James Wyllie Jr., and three counts of mail fraud against Gus Mijalis.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Environmental groups complain that the government left many dangerous substances off its list of 402 most toxic chemicals and that some of the chemicals on the list should be subject to tougher regulation.

The Environmental Protection Agency released the list Monday in an effort to help communities cope with accidental toxic emissions.

Toxicity was the only criterion for inclusion on the list, and the agency warned communities they should also consult other lists such as the one maintained by the Transportation Department for regulating transportation of inflammable, corrosive and explosive substances.

The agency says the list is made up of chemicals that pose an immediate, short-term danger to those exposed to them.

Benzene, for example, has been shown to cause leukemia in workers exposed to it over many years. It is one of the 20 chemicals EPA regulates as a hazardous air pollutant under the Clean Air Act, but is not on the list of 402.

"It's not really that acutely toxic," said David Patrick, chief of EPA's air pollutant assessment branch at Research Triangle Park, N.C. "They used to use it in chemical laboratories all the time."

Former presidential aide acquitted

NEW YORK (AP) — Former presidential aide Thomas C. Reed, acquitted on charges of engaging in illegal "insider trading" to make a $427,000 stock market killing, said he would return to private life in California.

Reed, an Air Force secretary under President Gerald Ford and a former special national security assistant to President Reagan, was cleared Monday of securities fraud, wire fraud and obstruction of justice charges growing out of his March 1981 trading in Amax Corp. options.

Reed told reporters he has no plans to seek another job with the Reagan administration. "I finished what I went to Washington to do," he said.

Reed, 51, still faces civil suits filed by investors who lost money selling him options that became very valuable almost as soon as he bought them. He said he plans to return to his real-estate and wine businesses in San Rafael, Calif.

Reed joined President Reagan's National Security Council staff in 1982 and became part of the Scowcroft Commission, which advised the president on basing options for the MX missile. He resigned a year later amid congressional criticism of his 1981 transactions.

In 1981, Reed agreed to forfeit his $427,000 profit in return for an end to an investigation by the Securities and Exchange Commission, but continued to deny any wrongdoing.
