Pampans express concern about Frank Phillips plans

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

A group of Pampa citizens meeting with Frank Phillips College representatives Wednesday morning expressed their support of the Pampa Center of Clarendon College and asked the Borger college not to "mess with our dreams."

The meeting was held to discuss issues arising out of an expressed intention by the Borger college to offer new course services to Pampa and other area communities.

Local college, city, school and Pampa Chamber of Commerce officials have expressed concerns that the aim of the Frank Phillips expansion is to incorporate Pampa into the FPC service area and to squeeze Clarendon College out.

But the Phillips regents in attendance Wednesday tried to assuage some of those concerns.

FPC President Andy Hicks and board of regents members Bob Knight and Lou Cooley met with the Pampa group in the Chamber office, with nearly 30 people in attendance.

E. L. "Smiley" Henderson and Loyd Waters provided background information on the college situation in Pampa over the years, including efforts to get a junior college in the city.

Pampa tried to get a junior college district established in the mid-1960s but FPC officials then opposed the action and the Texas Colleges and Universities System Coordinating Board (CCB) later denied Pampa a college.

Local citizens and leaders then approached Phillips about offering classes in Pampa, but the college expressed no interest. Clarendon College then began offering classes in Pampa and later established the Pampa Center in an abandoned former elementary school building.

Waters noted there has been an agreement between FPC and PCCC over nursing instruction relating to Coronado Community Hospital, with Phillips handling the vocational curriculum and Clarendon the academic courses.

"To the best of my knowledge this (agreement) has been honored to date," he said.

But he expressed concerns over FPC's intentions about offering new courses in other area communities already having extension class services.

Waters noted Hicks, CC President Kenneth Vaughn and Amarillo College President H. D. Yarbrough had met with Texas Commissioner of Higher Education Kenneth Ashworth in Austin on Tuesday morning concerning the situation.

Waters said he understood Ashworth had asked that he not be forced to make the decision and encouraged a local settlement to the disputes.

Quoting a Dec. 8 article in The Borger News-Herald on a Phillips board of regents meeting, Waters said he understood some regents had indicated a desire to meet with Pampa officials and not "to step on any toes."

Addressing the FPC representatives, Waters said, "Please don't step on our toes. Please don't mess with our dreams."

He said the sign above the entrance says Pampa Center of Clarendon College, "but that center belongs to Pampa." A number of local citizens and students have spent a lot of time and money "to get that center going here," he stated. "We pledge our total support" to Clarendon College's efforts.

Knight, chairman of the FPC regents, said previous action by the regents to expand its services was not intended "to infuriate any people."

Red Cross shows how it handles disasters

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

To provide a glimpse of the disaster preparation exercised by the American Red Cross, the local Gray County chapter volunteers and staff conducted an "Undisaster Day" Wednesday morning.

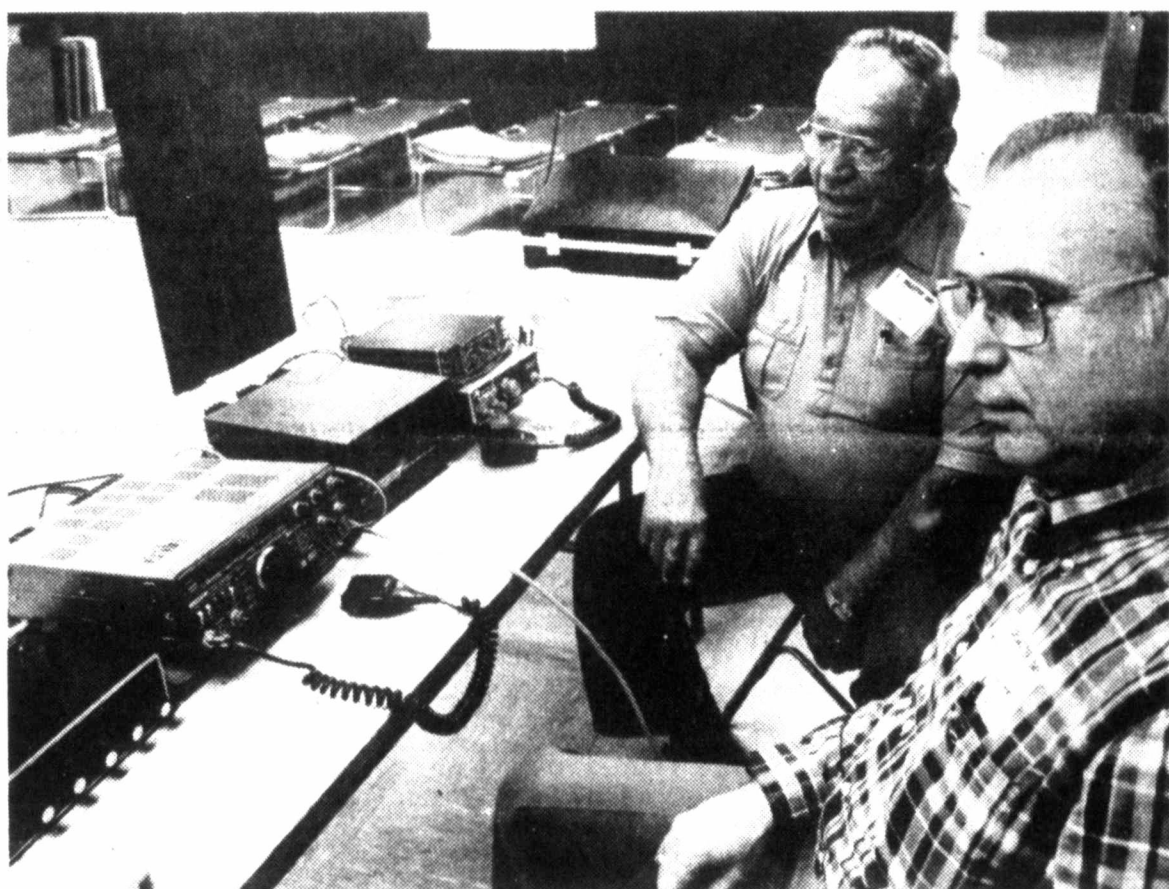

With a mock shelter, a ham radio set-up, supplies, posters and printed materials, the "practice run" offered local residents a chance to see how disaster operations could be set up and conducted in case an emergency ever arose in the county.

Paula Martin, field service manager, said the operations are "a gift of the American people to the American people."

Based in Amarillo, Martin serves five counties in Oklahoma and 41 in Texas. She conducts training sessions in emergency preparedness for local volunteers and coordinates services in case of need.

The Undisaster Day was held to bring attention to the people of Red Cross disaster work, Martin said. The displays and exhibits showed in part "what would actually be functioning in a disaster situation," she explained.

A row of cots, with blankets, were set up in the basement of the First United Methodist Church. At a nearby table, ham radio operators had their radio equipment actually set up and operating. Nursing volunteers were on hand, and a records and reports table was available. And there were food and drinks.

In the event of a major disaster in a community, the Red Cross opens up shelters away from the site of the disaster but near enough to give quick attention to the needs of the affected people, Martin explained.

One of the first priorities is to get the people to a safe location so efforts can be made to see to their needs and begin assistance operations, she said.

The cots provide a resting place for those displaced persons, allowing rest before they return to their homes and businesses for clean-up operations. Or to offer a place for those needing medical attention.

The Red Cross volunteers also offer nursing services to handle the variety of medical needs that might be present, such as injuries, bruises and abrasions, shock or a pregnant woman needing attention, Martin said.

The nursing volunteers can assess injuries. In case of major ones needing more expert and detailed care, arrangements can be made to ship out patients to major medical facilities.

The ham radio facilities aid communication to gather disaster welfare information, provide contacts with outside agencies and give messages among relatives and friends "wanting to know what happened" and if the people are safe, Martin explained.

Staff and volunteers also gather records and reports during registration of the disaster victims.

"There's a lot of paperwork," observed local chapter director Joyce Roberts.

Oil prices: Consumers' bonanza...

NEW YORK (AP) — A sharp slide in crude oil prices promises a shot in the arm for the U.S. economy by creating jobs and putting more cash in consumers' pockets and corporate treasuries without fueling inflation.

Analysts say almost a million jobs could be created by increased economic growth and the typical American motorist could save more than $70 a year in gasoline for each $5 slide in the price of a barrel of oil.

Not everyone would benefit. Lower oil prices are bad news for the oil industry itself, companies and regions dependent on it and banks that have lent heavily to it and to oil-producing countries in the Third World.

But experts forecast that most oil producers, their suppliers and bankers could survive a sustained lower price for petroleum.

In markets where contracts for future delivery of oil are bought and sold, the price of a barrel of oil has plunged $5 in the past week and about $12 in the past two months.

In non-contract, or spot markets, major grades of U.S. and North Sea crude oil available on short notice both are hovering around $20 a barrel, a level last seen in 1979.

If the lower prices hold, and assuming the entire savings are passed on, the average price at the pump of all grades of gasoline could drop from $1.21 a gallon to $1.08 — a $70-a-year savings for the typical driver. Electric utility customers also would benefit, and trucking companies and airlines would see their fuel costs drop.

But unlike the pre-1981 days of federal controls on oil prices, savings no longer are automatically passed on.

Lower prices would have far-reaching implications. Petroleum is among the basic building blocks of the chemical industry, which uses it in fabrics, plastic grocery bags, tires, recordings and building materials.

Lower oil prices also would mean moderation in utility rates.

For the economy as a whole, growth would rise by an additional 2 percent within two years if oil fell to $20 a barrel, creating 900,000 new jobs, according to a study by Data Resources Inc., a consulting firm.

The most important impact of a drop in oil prices to the United States would be a reduction in the bill for imported oil, with each $5 a barrel drop chopping nearly $25 million a day from the nation's tab for foreign oil. That could cut $9 billion a year off the nation's trade deficit, which was closing in on $150 billion last year.

It was an explosion in oil prices in the 1970s that contributed to a double-digit inflation and a crippling global economic slowdown.

Lower oil prices would, however, aggravate staggering debt problems for countries with no other major source of income, such as Mexico, Venezuela and Nigeria. Chances for collecting hundreds of billions of dollars in American and European bank loans to those nations fall in lockstep with the price of oil.

...Headache for states

DALLAS (AP) — The state of Oklahoma predicted oil would sell for about $23 a barrel this year. Louisiana planned on $24, and Texas set its budget for 1986 based on $25 a barrel.

They may all be wrong, and the miscalculations could leave their state budgets in shambles, officials say.

This week's oil price plunge on the spot market from the $25 range to below $21 has sent shivers through the oilpatch and oil-dependent states.

Every $1 drop below $25 means the loss of 25,000 jobs, $100 million in tax revenue and $3 billion in gross state product in Texas, the state comptroller's office said.

Louisiana was expecting a $150 million budget deficit with oil at $24 a barrel, and will lose an additional $50 million in tax revenue for every $1 below that, Mark Drennan, the Louisiana legislature's chief fiscal officer, told lawmakers Tuesday.

State economists in Alaska say every $1 decline costs the state $150 million, but recent price reductions have not substantially affected the state's economy.

And Oklahoma, which planned on an average price of $23 a barrel, stands to lose $33 million in tax revenue if the price drops to $20 or below, said Gov. George Nigh, who has pledged there will be no tax increases.

"We're just getting over the shock of seeing that $20 price on the spot market and looking with super concern at what's happening," said Tony Proffitt, tax information director in the comptroller's office.

The price declines were accelerated by slack demand and increased output in recent months, leaving prices 18 percent lower in one week and 35 percent since November.

Analysts say prices could drop below $20 a barrel if OPEC countries continue to aggressively chase market shares.

One week ago, a barrel of West Texas Intermediate, a major U.S. benchmark, cost $25.15 on the spot market, where surplus oil is sold on demand. The spot price closed Tuesday at $20.10. In November it had been $32.

Officials say the drop in prices on the spot market won't immediately translate into a major decline in the oilpatch since most transactions are done on contracts.

Prices on the contract market are still about $25 per barrel, Proffitt said, although Citgo

Main Street architect looks at city

By LARRY HOLLIS
Staff Writer

The wants of the client are the foremost consideration in renovating or remodeling downtown businesses in the Main Street Project to be implemented in Pampa.

But architect Dick Ryan admits he is ready to do some talking and work with a client if he feels the owner's plans are "inappropriate."

Ryan has an undergraduate degree from the University of Texas and a master's degree in architectural history from the University of Virginia (which probably has the best program in the nation, he said).

With his background in architectural preservation, he has been working with the Main Street Project programs in the state for four years.

He said he has probably looked at 300 buildings a year during that period, "over a thousand by now," he said, giving him "lots of experience."

His services are offered free to downtown merchants in communities designated to participate in the Main Street Project program for revitalizing downtown areas.

"I give free advice," he said, explaining he was available "to help building owners anyway I can."

Ryan was in Pampa earlier this week on his first trip to the city. "It's my first chance to see Pampa," he said, but he will be returning about once a month during the program operations.

His main purpose is to help the merchants to look at their buildings and to determine ways to improve them, whether it's taking care of leaks or putting up a new facade.

"I can usually spot leaks faster than a building owner can," Ryan said, smiling as he recalled the extensive number of buildings he has inspected since being in the Main Street program.

His first project is to target at least one building for the initial planning and to draw up plans for remodeling operations, noting he had talked to a few merchants while in town for the one day.

He admitted he hoped to have a drawing to unveil in March when Linda Gail White, the governor's wife, visits Pampa to officially launch the Main Street Project in Pampa.

"But the Number One priority is always the need of the client," Ryan said. He never draws up a plan without talking to the owner to see what he or she wants.

The plans "are usually fairly simple," he said. The major purpose is "to make something look as nice as you can for the least amount of money" needed to achieve the goal, he explained.

It could be something as simple as a new paint job or something as major as putting up a new facade, if wanted, he said. The latter project, though, usually involves more money and sometimes meeting building codes.

The main goal "really is more to have everything look nice than to restore" a building to a previous historical style, Ryan said. He said he only tries to encourage restoration "if it looks worthwhile" and if it blends in with other buildings in the area.

Often a contemporary facade that will somehow fit in better with the street scene may be better.

But he always talks first with the owners to see what ideas they have before drawing up the plans. If the ideas are inappropriate, in his opinion, he will draw up the plans as the owners request. But he's also likely to do an alternative drawing, he said, if he has other ideas he thinks might be better.

"I'm honest with the owner," Ryan said, stating he would try to do what the owner wants, however.

After the plans are considered, then designs are made and cost

Wagon train trails on despite problems

IRVING, Texas (AP) — It will take more than a few sore seats and broken wheels to stop the Texas Sesquicentennial Wagon Train, a sponsor says.

Acknowledging that some of the original wagon riders have dropped out, Glen Courson said that's not unusual for a group whose members are probably a "little softer" than their ancestors.

The wagon train hit the trail at Sulphur Springs two weeks ago and the opening day parade consisted of 200 riders and 82 wagons. There are now fewer than 100 riders and between 42-46 wagons, said Courson, a sponsor and honorary assistant wagonmaster from Irving.

Courson said the decreases were expected.

"We knew from the very beginning that they there were going to be people who would join up just for a while and then go home," he said.

Some participants wanted to ride in the train for a short time, while others planning to ride the entire 3,000 miles have had a change of heart, he said.

"Even 150 years ago, on wagon trains they had some dissension," Courson said. "There's no difference today. People are a little softer than there were then."

The wagon train on Wednesday was in Conroe near Houston.

Courson expects the number of wagons to fluctuate, dwindling to as few as 35. But he said the numbers will pick up as the train nears metropolitan areas, or on weekends and during the summer.

"There will be a core that will go all the way," he said.

The wagon train has received no state funds.

Charles Oliver of Dallas, president of the Irving-based nonprofit organization that is staging the trail ride said the organization is "meeting our expenses and will continue to do that."

Organizers said the wagon train's operating expenses will be raised through private and corporate donations and by royalties from sales of concessions and official wagon train souvenirs. Courson said the journey will cost about $2 million.

Oliver said his organization has raised less than $300,000.

Farmers gather to learn about filing for bankruptcy

AMARILLO (AP) — Farmers concerned about mounting debts and the gloomy economic outlook facing the nation's agricultural industry gathered in this West Texas city to learn how to file for bankruptcy.

More than 200 farmers and ranchers from Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Kansas on Wednesday attended the Farm Crisis Seminar, which was sponsored by the Texas Department of Agriculture.

"A lot of you are not in financial straits, but are here trying to get information on a subject of interest to many," said Ronnie Walker, president of the Panhandle Bankruptcy Bar Association.

A former Crosby County farmer speaking at the seminar told troubled farmers they also can call the state's Farm Crisis Hotline, where they can get information on handling creditors and job retraining.

The hotline also can help someone find an attorney, financial counselor or mental health professional, said Nancille Gallimore, hotline administrator.

Mrs. Gallimore said there are 900 federal Farmers Home Administration delinquencies in the northern 25 counties of the Texas Panhandle, an average of 36 farmers per county.

"Bankruptcy isn't the end of the world. We filed bankruptcy and I'm still here," Mrs. Gallimore said.

She said she and her husband were farmers in Crosby County until 1984 when the "FmHA decided we'd learned all we needed to know about farming and they kicked us out."

"So when you call the hotline, feel sure we understand," Mrs. Gallimore said. "We've been there and we understand that you're scared. We know what you're going through."

"Most of all tell yourself 'What's happening in farming is not my fault,' and if you have to file bankruptcy, it's not the end of the world," she said.

Amarillo attorney Larry Sherman said filing for bankruptcy is fairly simple — it only requires that the individual sign a petition and file it in court.

"Immediately there is an automatic stay in place, or an injunction keeping creditors from repossessing, foreclosing upon, writing letters, suing or taking any action against you," Sherman said.

But Sherman said if a lease terminates on its own before bankruptcy is filed, the stay does not prevent the lessor from "booting you off the property."

He added that creditors can come in and try to get the stay lifted.

Tom Bunkley, another attorney, stressed that in all situations there is nothing black and white, and every case will differ.

Man ain't got no culture

I was driving down a street the other day, out enjoying the unseasonably warm weather, when I passed a friend's house. I noticed a number of boxes stacked on the front yard and a rented car trailer parked in the driveway.

I decided to stop and see what was happening.

As I walked up the sidewalk, my friend came walking out through the front door, a large box in his arms.

"Hey, what's going on?" I asked. "It looks like you're moving or something."

"I am," he said, struggling as he put the box inside the trailer.

"Found another house to rent?" I inquired.

"No," he said. "I'm moving out of this city."

"Whatever for?"

"I just have to find another place, one with more culture, more style, more class."

"I thought you liked small cities," I said, following him as he walked back into the house.

"Oh, I do," he said as he bent down to pick up another box. "I just want a place with more to do, some town that doesn't think the cultural highlight of the year is having people get covered by dirt while some would-be cowboys wrestle a tired steer to the — covered ground."

"Oh, c'mon," I exclaimed as I followed him outside. "What about Chautauqua in Central Park? There's a lot of things to do and crafts to see and entertainment and..."

"Oh, that can be fun. For about 30 minutes. Maybe an hour if you're lucky enough to find a number of friends to visit with. Or, if you like plain food and simple crafts and watching people get dunked in a water tank, maybe you can be entertained longer."

"That's a little harsh," I stated. "Give them time. It's gotten better each year, you have to admit."

"Well, yeah, I guess so." He dropped the box in the trailer and went back for another.

"And what about the Community Concert programs?" I questioned.

"They're good," he admitted. "But when was the last time you saw a full audience there? All those tickets sold, and people would prefer to stay home for Dynasty or a mouldy video."

He had me there.

"Well, what about the local ballet and dance students?"

"Oh, now," he muttered as he lifted a heavy box of books. "After you've seen Fonteyn and Nureyev and Baryshnikov, there's no comparison."

"True," I said. "But even they didn't start out at the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts. After all, Mary Jane Johnson — yeah, I know, she's in opera, not ballet. But she came out of Pampa."

"True. Surprising, but still true," he admitted.

"And what about the night life here? There's several places where you can go out dancing if you're bored of sitting at home."

"What about it?" he countered. "My idea of a good dance place does not include having to listen to half an hour of country-western music interrupting the good dance songs just to please the rednecks and kickers. Or sitting around waiting to see who's going to fight whom before the evening is over."

Again, he had me there.

"But what about our little theater group? They've gotten pretty active."

"Sure," he said. "Remind me to go when they produce Bent or Torchsong Trilogy or A Chorus Line or Eugene O'Neill or..."

"Well, give them time," I said. "After all, they have to get people coming out regularly before they can move on to stuff like that."

"Yeah, I guess so."

"And we have some good bookstores in town," I stated as we sat down on the porch steps for a break.

"Uh huh," he said. "Have you tried to locate some really good poetry book besides something by Rod McKuen? Or purchase some good plays besides Shakespeare? Or locate some of the less-read classics?"

"You can always order them," I suggested.

"Sure, if you want to wait a month. Or have the clerks look at you in wonderment when they ask you to repeat your request."

He sighed.

"Besides," I began, "this isn't New York or Dallas. And never will be. But if you leave, that leaves one less person here wanting to see things change. You'll be just another person in the crowd in a larger city. Here you at least have a chance to influence others, perhaps serve as a means of bringing some enlightenment to the city, acting as a leavening ingredient even."

He remained silent, but I could tell he was thinking over my remarks.

"What brought all this on, anyway?" I asked.

"I was listening to a radio station Monday morning, and the young deejays were reading the names of famous people who had birthdays that day."

"So?"

"They came across Federico Fellini. And they didn't know who he was. They thought he might be an Italian artist or politician or something like that. You'd think anyone would know he's the greatest movie director yet to come out of Italy."

"Hmmm, maybe you have a good point," I said, feeling unbelief that they didn't know Fellini.

"Well, see," I said, "that's a good case. There was the chance for you to call them up and set them straight."

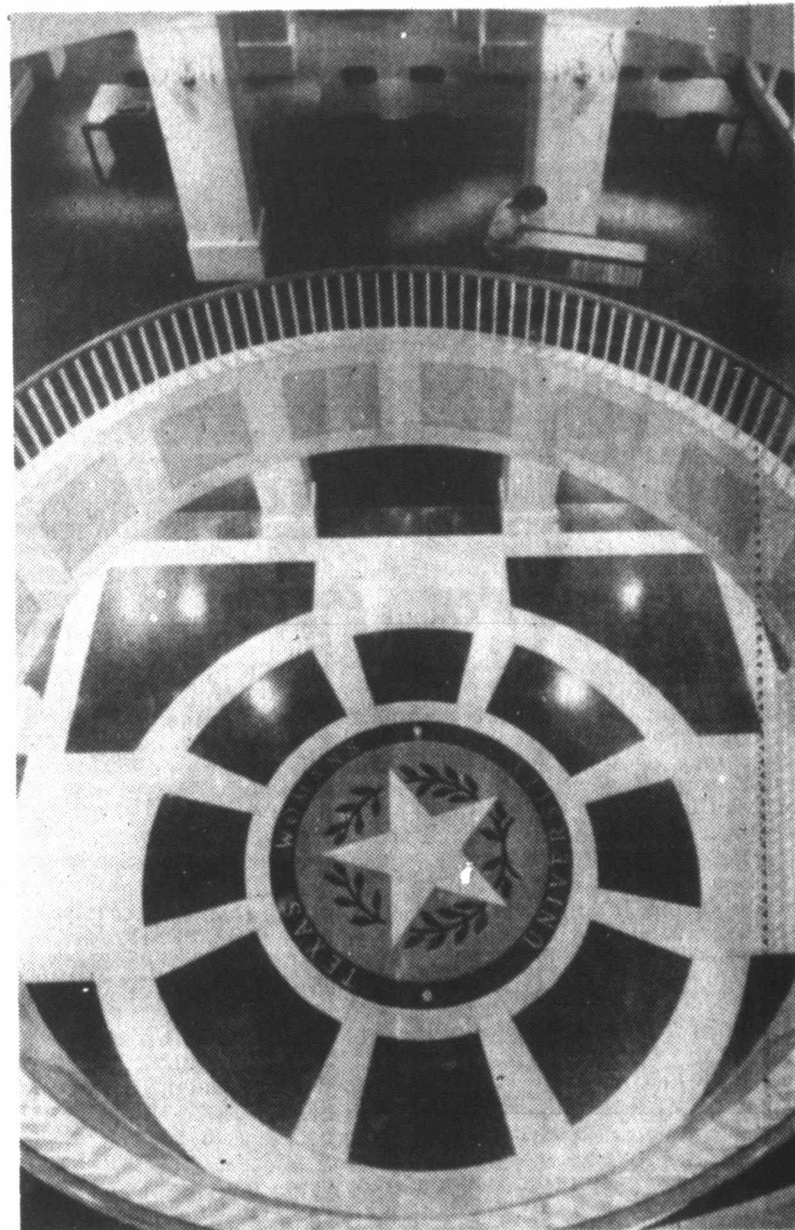

"Hey, that's right," he said, getting up.

"Where are you going?"

"I'm going to make a phone call."

He went back into his house, leaving the other boxes on the yard. I knew he'd stay. For awhile longer, anyway.

Man convicted in wife's murder and dismemberment

ODESSA, Texas (AP) — A Lubbock teacher convicted of murder in the death of his wife, whose head and hands were found buried in the couple's backyard, has been sentenced to 50 years in prison.

Arthur Lee MacLeod was convicted and sentenced Wednesday after a week of court testimony that focused on the couple's stormy relationship and MacLeod's intent and state of mind the night he strangled and dismembered his wife, Evelyn Feather MacLeod.

Jurors deliberated for more than three hours before handing down the 50-year prison term Wednesday night.

MacLeod, who was also fined $10,000, had asked jurors to give him probation because he said he wanted to try and stop others from making the same mistake he did.

The trial included testimony concerning the mental health and psychological histories of the defendant and the victim.

On Monday, MacLeod admitted strangling his ex-Playboy bunny wife of five months during a May 15 argument. But he testified he did not remember dismembering her body in an alcoholic stupor.

The wife's head and hands were found buried in the couple's backyard last year.

Lubbock psychiatrist Dr. H.G. Whittington said Tuesday he doesn't believe Arthur Lee MacLeod planned his wife's death or intended to strangle her.

Psychologist Richard Wall, who described MacLeod as psychotic and an alcoholic and Mrs. MacLeod as a manipulative psychopath, had testified that MacLeod would be a good probation candidate if he stopped drinking.

The Kennedy threat lives

BY DON FEDER

The idle rich in politics are an American tragedy. Nowhere is that problem more pronounced than in the careers of various members of the family Kennedy.

When Senator Ted declared in December that he would not be a candidate for the presidency in 1988, many breathed a sigh of relief. They overlooked an ominous trend.

Days earlier, Joseph Kennedy II, eldest son of the late Robert Kennedy, had announced his candidacy for Massachusetts 8th Congressional District. Now his sister, Kathleen Kennedy Townsend, is poised for a plunge in the political pool, with her eye on a congressional seat in Maryland.

I must admit to having no great fondness for the Kennedy clan. When the archbishops of Camelot solemnly ask us to recall what the family has done for America, I'm inclined to rejoin "you mean to America, don't you?"

The plaster saints in the Kennedy shrine are chipped and peeling. John F. Kennedy, when not harassing businessmen or being conned by Khrushchev, spent his White House years in hot pursuit of amorous adventures.

Brother Robert blew with the political breeze. He was eagerly interventionist when that was in vogue and equally isolationist when the peace movement was fashionable. He was renowned for his personal vendettas, and not above using the office of U.S. attorney general to indulge them.

Senator Edward Kennedy is a stalwart proponent of big government. In twenty-four years as a United States senator, he's distinguished himself as a "double S" man - socialism and surrender.

Which brings us to the second generation Kennedys. Kathleen Townsend, who's presently gearing up her campaign, is described in news accounts as an environmental lawyer. You know what that means - stop growth, regardless of the price, and punish big, bad business for doing nasty things to the environment.

Joe II also is well-qualified to carry on the family tradition. His career has been entirely public-sector welfare-oriented. After brief service in the Peace Corps, he spent two years aiding the downtrodden in a federal anti-poverty agency.

Since 1979, he's occupied himself with something called the Citizens Energy Corporation. With help of the Kennedy name, he buys crude oil from foreign producers and sells the refined product to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, which in turn does it out to the indigent. In other words, he's a welfare worker once removed.

His political philosophy was showcased in a speech several years ago, at the dedication of the JFK library. With President Carter and other notables looking on, he reviled "giant oil companies" ("that are squeezing us so hard all the time"), "big coal companies" ("who are responsible for mine accidents, mine injuries, and polluted streams...") and "agri-businesses" ("...that rake in the dough and give precious little in wages to the migrants who harvest crops.")

He spoke movingly of the plight of miners, sharecroppers, Indians, and even Eskimos. Not a single liberal victim group was neglected. Omitted from Young Joe's sympathy list were taxpayers, managers, professionals, merchants, and independent businessmen. Caring about these people just isn't chic.

In his announcement, Joe II proclaimed his earnest intent to "fight for the rights of the poor." In their service, he would reclaim the tax cuts provided the rich and big corporations by Mr. Reagan.

C'mon, Joe, no one helps the poor by taxing the rich. There simply aren't enough of the affluent. This is a middle-class country, and it's the middle class that ultimately pays for the generosity of little rich boys in politics.

Why are the scions of wealthy families (the Kennedys, Rockefellers, et al) paladins of the welfare state? It's equal parts of pandering to the masses for electoral favors ("Hey, I may be loaded, but I really, really care about you"), guilt over inherited wealth, and noblesse oblige.

Whatever the motivation, it spells disaster for both taxpayers and welfare recipients. Welfare addiction keeps the poor impoverished, while the middle class bears the burden of liberal beneficence.

Far worse than not understanding the poor, rich kids in politics don't comprehend the middle class. They have no conception of what it's like to put in sixty-hour weeks - to sweat and dream for a future - and then be taxed to penury to assuage the guilt of the idle rich.

Never having struggled for a living, silver-spoon socialists have no idea of how the world works. They don't understand that creative risk-taking is the source of wealth, that economic freedom is a necessary condition for human progress - that limiting rewards for production and subsidizing indolence will give us less of the former and more of the latter.

If I had my way, no one with a trust fund could run for political office. Private-sector employment would be a prerequisite to a public career.

Is this the Big Apple?

A funny thing happened to me in New York during my recent visit. Everybody was nice to me. I told a friend back home.

"That's impossible," he said. "You might occasionally find somebody who is nice to you when you visit New York, but not everybody."

Most people who don't live in New York think of it as the home office for obnoxious behavior.

"Never forget one time when I was in New York," a guy told me. "Went up to this fellow selling papers and asked if he could give me directions to the St. Regis Hotel."

"He looked at me and said, 'Outta here. I don't know nuttin' about nuttin.'"

But perhaps New York is changing. Perhaps the Big Apple, or the people who live and work there, are reaching out to us now to say they are sorry for treating us so badly before.

I probably took six cab rides during my visit. Not a single driver refused to speak nor grunted in disgust at the size of his tip.

I even had a driver indulge in a bit of pleasant conversation. He said, "Cold enough for you?"

I replied, "It's as cold as a witch's..."

Well, my reply was quite cordial and when I told the driver to keep the change after I handed him three ones for a $2.20 fare, he actually said, "Thanks a lot, and have a nice day."

These are the mean streets of New York?

I went into a restaurant for lunch. I ordered a beer. I expressly told the waiter not to pour my beer into a glass. I prefer my beer out of the bottle or can.

The waiter forgot and poured my beer into a glass anyway.

"I didn't want the beer in a glass," I said.

"I'm sorry, sir," said the waiter. "I forgot. Allow me to bring you another beer, and you will not have to pay for the first one. It was my fault."

You sure you're not in another city? I asked myself.

I was looking for a restaurant in which to have dinner. The cabbie couldn't find the restaurant.

I got out of the cab and asked a pedestrian if he knew where the restaurant was.

He politely told me where the restaurant was located and, recognizing I was a visitor, said,

"Have a nice stay in the city."

This couldn't be happening.

I went into the restaurant. The coat check lady smiled when I checked my coat. The maitre d' was very pleasant in showing me to my table and didn't sneer at my clothes.

The waiter served dinner with a smile.

I finished the meal, reached into my pocket and pulled out the appropriate cash to pay the check.

As I stood outside the restaurant a short time later trying to hail another cab, the waiter came out and tapped me on the shoulder.

"Sir," he said. "I think you dropped this out of your pocket when you were paying your check."

It was a five-dollar bill. I was shocked. I told him to keep the five to go with his tip. He refused.

I thanked the waiter and got into my cab and went back to my hotel room. Somebody had turned my bed down and there was a piece of chocolate candy on the pillow.

For the first time ever, I slept with the lights off in New York.

Berry's World

"Here's your resume. I suggest you buy some lottery tickets and hope for the best."

By Robert Walters

WASHINGTON (NEA) — Sophisticated electronic equipment installed in New York, San Francisco and Washington enables the government to intercept, monitor and record thousands of citizens' telephone conversations every day.

The targets of that blatantly unconstitutional invasion of privacy are U.S. residents — but the government engaging in the eavesdropping is the Soviet Union.

Although this country's national security officials long have been aware of the extensive scope of the Soviet Union's wiretapping operations, they repeatedly have resisted suggestions that they restrain the practice.

The campaign for remedial action is being led by Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y., who says he first learned of the disturbing situation when he was appointed U.S. ambassador to the United Nations in 1975.

Vice President Nelson Rockefeller "told me the first thing I must know about the U.N. is that the Soviets would be listening to every telephone call I made" from either the U.S. mission or the U.S. ambassador's residence.

Indeed, Rockefeller was chairman of a government commission on intelligence activities whose 1975 report said:

"The communist countries appear to have developed electronic collection of intelligence to an extraordinary degree of technology and sophistication for use in the United States and elsewhere.... We believe that these countries can monitor and record thousands of private telephone conversations.

"Americans have a right to be uneasy if not seriously disturbed at the real possibility that their personal and business activities, which they discuss freely over the telephone, could be recorded and analyzed by agents of foreign powers."

In the ensuing years, various federal officials have explicitly or tacitly confirmed that the Soviet Union is engaged in wholesale, systematic eavesdropping at several diplomatic missions in New York, its consulate in San Francisco and its embassy in Washington.

In 1981, the special agent in charge of the FBI's Washington field office estimated that 40 percent of the embassy personnel here were involved in intercepting telephone conversations.

Since then, the National Security Agency has purchased 500 telephone scramblers at a cost of $35,000 each, and telephones in government limousines used by senior federal officials are equipped with scramblers.

The Defense Department last year awarded development contracts for a new generation of secure telephones that will cost about $2,000 apiece and are expected to become available in spring 1987.

The federal government is considering purchasing as many as 500,000 of that advanced model, compared with approximately 4,000 of an earlier version now in use.

The response to Soviet eavesdropping on the part of officials in the executive branch is to protect themselves, especially those performing national security functions, while leaving everybody else — including members of the legislative and judicial branches — vulnerable.

The Senate last year twice approved Moynihan initiatives that would have required offensive as well as defensive action against the telephone tapping.

In both instances, however, they were killed by House-Senate conference committees apparently acting at the behest of the CIA and the State Department.

Moynihan suspects that federal officials are reluctant to take positive action because they fear retaliation, possibly against this country's electronic surveillance in the Soviet Union.

As a result, the senator says, "we are letting the Soviets invade the privacy and the confidentiality of the whole of society — and we do nothing about it."

See Vietnamese as using MIA issue to improve relations with United States

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vietnam's desire to improve relations with the United States, and thereby become a potential foreign aid beneficiary, is a major cause of the recent flurry of activity involving American MIAs from the nation's longest war, legislators and other informed officials say.

"They are reaching out to the world," Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., said Wednesday at a news conference after he and three other legislators returned from a nine-day trip to Southeast Asia.

In recent months, Vietnam has released more information about the remains of some of the 2,441 Americans still unaccounted for from the Vietnam War and the Hanoi government has promised even more information and remains in the future.

But other factors are helping push the issue to the front of the public mind. Those factors include renewed attention on the plight of American servicemen who fought in the Vietnam War, along with a spate of books and movies about fictional rescues of American prisoners.

Included among the latter is last year's hit movie, "Rambo," starring Sylvester Stallone as a former Green Beret soldier who returns to Southeast Asia to rescue American POWs.

While the official U.S. government view is that the possibility of prisoners cannot be ruled out, most U.S. officials say privately they don't believe there are any remaining prisoners.

Sen. Frank Murkowski, R-Alaska, said Wednesday the delegation did not receive anything to encourage the belief that prisoners still remain.

"I don't want to raise any false hopes," Murkowski added.

The U.S. military role in the war began in the mid-1960s and ended in 1973, when American ground troops were withdrawn and 591 American prisoners were returned. But there have been recurring reports — "live sightings" — that have fueled speculation that some prisoners are still being held. Both Vietnam and Laos deny they hold any U.S. prisoners.

The United States has requested a full accounting of the missing men, but it received relatively little attention until 1981, when President Reagan took office and elevated an accounting to the "highest national priority."

Following Reagan's declaration, the president and top administration officials pressed their case in public, declaring repeatedly that they wanted a full accounting of the U.S. servicemen. U.S. officials also traveled to Vietnam for technical and low-level meetings and pressed the case there.

In addition, there have been private, unpublicized meetings between the two sides, according to officials, and Secretary of State George Shultz wrote in 1984 to Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach seeking more information.

But the U.S. efforts met with little success until last summer, when Thach said Vietnam wanted to solve the MIA issue and set a two-year limit in which to try to end it.

Since then, Vietnam has turned over more than 30 sets of remains.

Doctor: diet could have been increased

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A doctor who treated an elderly nursing home patient said he thought a decision to give her 600 calories a day was appropriate, but her caloric intake could have been boosted gradually.

Dr. Robert Sullivan, who treated Elnora Breed occasionally while she was a patient at a Texas City nursing home, also testified doctors do not always comply with federal regulations requiring regular calls to nursing home patients.

Sullivan's testimony Wednesday came in the state's murder-by-neglect trial against Autumn Hills Convalescent Centers Inc. and four of its current and former employees.

They are charged with murder in the Nov. 20, 1978, death of Mrs. Breed. The 87-year-old woman died 47 days after entering an Autumn Hills nursing home.

The state claims she died of starvation from a 600-calorie diet and infection, brought on by severe bedsores.

The defense claims she died of cancer.

Prosecution experts said a doctor's order for a 600-calorie liquid daily diet for Mrs. Breed was a starvation diet.

"I don't believe anyone is going to argue we would have liked to have gotten more calories in her," Sullivan said.

But the doctor agreed with Mrs. Breed's primary physician, Dr. John Konikowski, who said her body could not tolerate more fluids than the 600-calorie diet.

"Her diet might have been slowly increased," Sullivan said. Konikowski ordered her diet boosted to 1,500 calories Nov. 14, six days before her death.

"It's been testified that the 600-calorie diet killed Mrs. Breed. Do you agree?" defense lawyer Tom Sartwell asked.

"I cannot agree with that," Sullivan said. "Mrs. Breed lived on the 600-calorie diet. She died on the 1,500-calorie diet."

Earlier, Galveston County District Attorney Mike Guarino pointed out Konikowski ordered 4,500 cubic centimeters of food, water and medication for Mrs. Breed while she was hospitalized before entering Autumn Hills.

Sullivan said he saw Mrs. Breed while she was a patient at Autumn Hills and pronounced her dead early the morning of Nov. 20.

Konikowski testified earlier he visited Mrs. Breed several times as well, although the nursing home's records do not indicate he did so.

Apparent kidnap victim found shot to death in grave

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Bexar County sheriff's officers say the body of an apparent kidnapping victim was found in a shallow grave 12 hours after deputies, facing a manpower shortage, had called off a three-day surveillance of the site.

When officers returned to the scene Wednesday afternoon and cleared the gravesite, a deputy noticed two gym shoes sticking up from the grave.

The body was identified as John Cruz, 18, who was shot once in the head at close range, said Bexar Sheriff's Sgt. A. Ramon. No arrests were made early today, he said.

"We had been watching it (the grave) for such a long time before we started spot-checking it," he said. "During the day, it is difficult to have a team set up in broad daylight without being seen."

"Also, we do have a manpower problem," he said. "We have a heavy caseload. And there was a budget problem, also."

He said he could not elaborate on the staffing situation at the sheriff's office.

Sheriff's deputies had been alerted Sunday about the grave and had kept a watch on the site "pretty much" around the clock, Sheriff Harlon Copeland said.

"We watched it for 24 hours for three days," said Ramon. "It got to a point that a lot of the work was getting backlogged and we had to come in. And we started spot-checking it. And the last time was when the body was dumped out there."

Authorities said children playing in the area near the banks of the San Antonio River in far south Bexar County found the grave.

But the surveillance was called off at 1:30 a.m. Wednesday. Cruz was last seen early Wednesday, when he left his job at a convenience store one mile from his home, a co-worker said.

The sheriff estimated the man was killed Wednesday morning within two hours of when his body was found.

At 3:15 a.m., a man telephoned Cruz's family and said he had their son and wanted $26,000. The family received a second call about noon Wednesday from a man who said the ransom had increased to $30,000, San Antonio homicide Lt. Albert Ortiz said.

The caller said he would call back at 3 p.m. to make arrangements for a money drop.

Cruz's body was pulled from the grave about the same time as the promised call, which never was made, officials said. The teen-ager was wearing his blue and red Texas Star clerk's jacket, blue jeans and a Hobie T-shirt.

The grave was about two feet deep and covered with an old tire, styrofoam, rags, string, green roofing plastics and broken shingles, investigators said.

EPA wants asbestos ban

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency, saying hundreds of cancer deaths every year could be avoided, is unveiling new rules that would immediately ban some asbestos products and phase out others during the next decade.

"Asbestos is a definite human carcinogen, with no qualifiers, in both short-term or long-term exposures," agency spokesman Dave Ryan said Wednesday night. "We just can't let this situation continue."

The EPA proposal, to be announced by agency chief Lee Thomas today, contains three plans for restricting and banning a wide range of asbestos products, Ryan said in a telephone interview.

After public hearings and comment, Thomas will pick one of the plans, Ryan said. By law, the agency must consider whether substitutes are available for banned products and how much they would cost.

The first plan calls for an immediate ban on asbestos clothing used by firefighters and others working around high temperatures; asbestos cement pipe and fittings; vinyl asbestos floor tile; and asbestos roofing and flooring felt. Felt is a thin, paperlike backing material used to prevent corrosion and to help insulate.

The plan also would phase out the total amount of the substance imported or mined during the next decade, Ryan said.

A second alternative would immediately ban some asbestos construction products, including asbestos cement sheets and shingles, and would outlaw some asbestos friction products, such as brake drums, in five years.

Under that proposal, EPA would gather exposure information on remaining asbestos products and propose additional bans.

A third alternative, Ryan said, would ban all asbestos construction products — and clothing immediately, ban asbestos friction products in five years and ban remaining asbestos products within 10 years.

Such products include asbestos plastics, adhesives, sealants, paints and coatings; asbestos yarn and textiles used for items other than clothing; and asbestos packing, which reduces friction in machines.

Income and spending up

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans' personal income rose 1.4 percent in December, the biggest increase in almost two years, while personal spending shot up 2 percent, the fastest rate in more than a decade, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said the rise in personal consumption spending was its best performance since a 2.5 percent rise in May 1975.

While the big gain in spending outpaced the rise in income, the 1.4 percent earnings increase was still the best performance since a 1.5 percent rise in January 1984.

The report on personal finances served to underscore the fact that the economy staged a major revival in December.

The government earlier had reported that unemployment in December dipped to its lowest level since early 1980 while retail sales, industrial production and housing construction all posted big gains.

Economists are divided, however, over whether these economic barometers signal only a temporary upturn in the country's economic fortunes or mark the long-awaited revival from the sluggish growth the country has been mired in since the summer of 1984.

The Commerce Department reported Wednesday that economic growth, as measured by the gross national product, slipped to a 2.4 percent rate in the final three months of the year. Many analysts believe that accurately reflects the underlying strength in the economy.

The Reagan administration, however, is confidently predicting that growth this year will hit 4 percent, well above the 2.3 percent turned in for all of 1985.

Since consumer spending accounts for two-thirds of GNP activity, such a slowdown would be a major drag on the economy.

ANTI-ABORTION DEMONSTRATION — Anti-abortion demonstrators parade outside the Supreme Court Building in Washington Wednesday to mark the 13th anniversary of the Court's decision to legalize abortion. (AP Laserphoto)

White House denies Reagan will consider pardons for bombers of abortion clinics

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House is seeking to quell reports that President Reagan told a group of anti-abortion leaders he might consider pardoning abortion clinic bombers on a "case-by-case" basis.

Reagan met privately with about two dozen abortion foes Wednesday after giving a telephone pep-talk to thousands of demonstrators who marched to the Supreme Court on the 13th anniversary of the landmark decision legalizing abortion.

Paul Brown, chief executive officer of the American Life League, told reporters following the White House session that he asked Reagan "to simply consider a pardon for all of the pro-lifers who have been jailed because of the clinic violence."

"Mr. Reagan stated that he may eventually consider it on a case-by-case basis," Brown said. "We have asked him to consider a pardon, because the majority of these people are well-meaning people. We condemn what they did, but we still think they are nice people and should not have to spend the rest of their lives in jail."

Brown said such individuals "never hurt anybody, they may have destroyed a building or two, but they have not done anything to hurt a person."

Joseph Scheidler, a leader of another anti-abortion group, Pro-Life Action, said he joined in Brown's request.

Scheidler said Reagan "listened attentively" to their suggestion about meeting with the families of the jailed bombers and to consider the pardons. "He said that he might consider this request on a case-by-case basis," Scheidler said.

White House spokesman Albert Brashear disputed their account and denied that Reagan made such a statement.

Brashear quoted Reagan as saying, "I may get a review on that case." He said the president was talking about a case that had been mentioned about a man who received a 42-year sentence for kidnapping a physician who performed abortions.

Brown and Scheidler's remarks caused a stir among several other participants in the meeting. They came forward to emphasize to reporters that they did not believe the president intended to condone the violence and that they did not interpret his remarks in the same way Brown and Scheidler had.

Kate Michelman, the executive director of the National Abortion Rights Action League, criticized Reagan for "giving a platform" at the White House to people who want the bombers pardoned. She said 65 incidents of such violence have occurred since Reagan took office in 1980.

"Would he consider pardoning Palestinian terrorists?" Ms. Michelman asked. "He has to remember that as president he has a special responsibility to make sure that not even a word or a nod is misconstrued — so as not to lead to further acts of violence."

Earlier, Reagan used a telephone hook-up to speak to the marchers rallied some 200 yards away from the White House on the Ellipse.

"I'm proud to stand with you in the long march for the right to life," Reagan told the crowd.

Abortion opponents and proponents mark anniversary of Roe vs. Wade

By The Associated Press

Thousands of demonstrators blocked traffic and marched on state capitols, while others held a funeral for an aborted fetus and met with President Reagan as Americans on both sides of the issue marked the 13th anniversary of the Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion.

Anti-abortion and pro-choice demonstrations Wednesday were peaceful. However, 10 marchers were arrested in Washington, D.C., after they broke through police lines to pray and chant slogans outside the U.S. Supreme Court building, where on Jan. 22, 1973, the justices ruled 7-2 that women have the right to abortions.

The Washington demonstration against the Roe vs. Wade decision was among the largest Wednesday. Police estimated that up to 37,000 anti-abortion activists rallied at the Ellipse near the White House and marched two miles to Capitol Hill. Organizers estimated the crowd at about 100,000.

"I'm proud to stand with you in the long march for the right to life," Reagan told the crowd via telephone hook-up between the White House and loudspeakers at the Ellipse.

Leading the procession were marchers carrying 13 small white coffins symbolizing millions of abortions performed in the 13 years since Roe vs. Wade.

Later, the president met privately with about two dozen abortion foes and two of them — Paul Brown, chief executive officer of the American Life League, and Joseph Scheidler, of Pro-Life Action — quoted him as saying he might consider pardoning abortion clinic bombers on "a case-by-case basis."

However, Albert Brashear, a White House spokesman, denied the president had made any such remark and others at the meeting said they interpreted the president's remarks differently.

In other demonstrations, "Baby Charlie," a fetus used to promote the anti-abortion cause for nearly a year, was buried in a cemetery in Milton, Fla. More than 200 people attended the funeral. The fetus was obtained from pro-lifers in Wisconsin who said it had been aborted somewhere in the Midwest.

Also in Florida, directors of abortion clinics hailed the anniversary in remarks in Tallahassee.

"I really wish that the people who were anti-abortionists could be here when we tell young girls they are pregnant," said Donna Foster, interim director of Planned Parenthood of Florida. "I'm the one who has to hand them a Kleenex when they find out they're pregnant and don't want to be."

FPC meeting

He explained the college was developing microwave system courses using television to offer classes in other communities, including Pampa. He said the regents were thinking of offering those services but "not bumping Clarendon College out."

"There was never any intent to upset you people at all," Knight said, admitting he was speaking for himself and not for all the regents.

Cooley said, "We came over to apologize for not answering all the letters," referring to letters and resolutions in support of Clarendon College from local groups, city and school officials and citizens.

"We came over to sell you our services," she continued, adding that the college felt it had "a lot to offer." She said the college also apologizes "for our failures" in the past, but noted there is a new board and a new administration now.

Cooley disputed any intention to incorporate Pampa into FPC's taxing district. Instead, she claimed the regents had felt it was worthwhile to use its local taxes from the existing FPC district "to augment services" offered to other communities.

She said the regents would consider Pampa's wishes, but she urged those present at the meeting to also make their decisions "on what is best for Pampa in the future."

Cooley also disputed quotes in the Borger newspaper in which Hicks reportedly said there was a law that a college nearest a community should be the one to offer extension classes in that community.

She said Hicks had told the regents there was a ruling in a case, claiming the newspaper had misquoted references to "a law." Ashworth and another CCB official, in interviews with The Pampa News last week, had explained there were policies and guidelines, but no law.

Local bank president Floyd Watson said a number of groups and citizens are on record in support of Clarendon College. He said he hated to "see this come up" since he and others are "satisfied" with Clarendon. He also hated to see "hard feelings" developing from the situation.

Knight said Phillips, beginning in November, was "talking in general" of expanding services to other communities, not of "coming in a blitzkrieg" to take over Clarendon College or other community colleges. But again he noted he was expressing his personal opinion, not speaking for the other regents.

State Rep. Foster Whaley tried to pin Hicks down on what his intentions were about bringing Pampa into the college district and moving Clarendon College out.

"Lou (Cooley) has summed up about all I have to say," Hicks stated, adding he had no other response to make.

He said he came to the meeting with the two regents, noting he was here with them and worked for the board of regents. He refused to answer further questions from Whaley about any definite intentions on taking over the CC operations in Pampa.

Waters said, "I hear you're here as a kind of salesman, trying to make a sell." But he said he also was hearing that someone might be trying to force a sell by going to others, implying the possibility of taking the matter to the CCB.

"You be fair with us, we'll be fair with you," he said. "I think you know how we feel." But he expressed disappointment in not receiving a specific answer from Hicks on his intentions.

Whaley warned Hicks that if the Borger college pursued action that would push Clarendon College out of Pampa, "you're going to get people so damned mad" that Phillips wouldn't have any Pampa students either in Pampa or Borger.

"I'm not telling you what to do," he said, but he urged the Borger regents to consider the Pampa sentiments. If anger is aroused by any actions, "both colleges will have lost," he said.

Knight said if the college felt its services would help Pampa, it should be pursued. "But if it will hinder you, we'll draw back," he claimed.

Cooley said she had hoped the matter could be settled without publicity, referring to local press media representatives who had been invited to attend the meeting.

Pampa school board member Jerry Carlson asked the regents if there was an intent to secure Pampa into Phillips' college district or just to market a service. Knight and Cooley both said they felt the college was trying to market a service and ought to have the opportunity to present it to the city.

Henderson said there was a feeling that any approach on bringing new college services into Pampa was seen as an intrusion on the current college administration. He suggested Phillips should approach Clarendon College first to see if there was a need for the microwave course system; if so, they could work together.

But others expressed no interest in pursuing the televised instruction classes, saying local students had indicated a preference for personal, in-class instructors.

Cooley said she had seen the system used in Arizona. There is more variety of instruction and personal contact than might first be expected, she explained, noting students could use microphones to ask the instructor questions during the class.

Some of the local citizens in attendance offered to send a delegation to a Phillips board of regents meeting to further discuss the situation. But others felt there was no need to send a delegation since the local sentiment has already been expressed in letters, resolutions and meetings in Pampa.

Wall Street bullish on the Bears

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The old Wall Street maxim "nobody loves a bear" will be temporarily suspended this weekend in the realms of finance.

It seems that a victory by the Chicago Bears in professional football's Super Bowl on Sunday would be interpreted as a favorable portent for the stock market through the rest of 1986.

Conversely, an upset by the New England Patriots would be seen as a negative investment omen.

Those readings derive from the Super Bowl stock market indicator, a whimsical but widely publicized theory that has been developed by market analysts over the past several years.

As many investors know by now, this doctrine holds that a victory in the championship game by an original National Football League team (such as Chicago) foreshadows an up year for the stock market.

If a team (such as New England) that originated in the old pre-merger American Football League wins, then stock prices are supposed to be headed for a decline.

So on Sunday, in the words of William LeFevre at the investment firm of Purcell, Graham & Co., "the bulls will be rooting for the Bears."

Of course, no sane and sober student of financial matters puts any credence in this theory. It makes no common sense. Even the market commentators who publish explanations of it say they do so as an entertainment, a bit of comic relief in a business that can be very solemn.

Yet, perversely, the "indicator" keeps working, having proved accurate almost every year for the two decades since the first Super Bowl took place.

In 1985, the San Francisco 49ers from the original NFL beat the AFL-born Miami Dolphins. The stock market obliged by rolling up gains for the year of 25 percent to 30 percent, as measured by various market averages.

A year before that the Los Angeles Raiders, who began life in Oakland with the old AFL, trounced the Washington Redskins 38-9, for the most one-sided score ever in the Super Bowl.

Come Monday morning after the game, an amazed broker in New York reported receiving anxious calls from investors inquiring whether the margin of victory was as significant for the market outlook as the pedigree of the winner.

The broker assured the callers that football results in no way influenced his view of the market outlook. As it turned out, the investors had no cause for great alarm anyway.

This time around, the Super Bowl matchup carries with it some special twists. The Bears, with their rough-edged, antiestablishment image, look like strange allies for any staid investment banker.

Exiles report Contras in disarray

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prominent Nicaraguan exiles say the U.S.-backed rebel movement is in disarray, with some contending that even President Reagan's plan for large-scale American military aid might not revive the war against that nation's leftist government.

The exiles, longtime opponents of Nicaragua's Sandinista government, said the U.S.-sponsored United Nicaraguan Opposition, UNO, had failed to heal divisions that long have plagued the war effort, and sparked complaints of American manipulation.

Several exiles added that the only realistic hope for ousting the Sandinista government is direct U.S. military intervention to crush the Soviet-supplied Nicaraguan army — an option the Reagan administration has rejected repeatedly.

The assessment by leading Nicaraguans in Miami, Washington and California came this week as Reagan prepared to ask Congress for as much as $100 million in military and logistical aid for the Contra rebels — a proposal expected to reignite bitter debate over Central America.

Republican leaders have told Reagan that the perception of UNO's effectiveness as a democratic alternative to the Sandinistas is vital to his aid package.

"UNO will have to show that it is the legitimate political leader of the Contras, that it controls the military and has a platform for a democratic society for Nicaragua," said Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., Senate Foreign Relations Committee chairman.

But Nicaraguan exiles interviewed by The Associated Press questioned UNO's success in unifying and controlling rebel ranks after it was created at the administration's urging last June.

The AP interviewed 22 anti-Sandinista Nicaraguan exiles about their views on the political and military situation.

UNO "was set up to function on paper, but not in action," said Jose Medina Cuadra, a Nicaraguan attorney living in Miami who has resigned from UNO. He complained that it "hasn't done anything either for those fighting in Nicaragua or those in exile."

Even with a massive infusion of U.S. military aid, the rebels "can never overthrow the Sandinistas on their own," Medina said. He said he would support direct U.S. intervention in Nicaragua "because the Soviets and the Cubans have already intervened and control Nicaragua."

"UNO is designed to do battle in Congress, not to do battle in the front lines, with the people of Nicaragua," said Silvio Arguello-Cardenal, a former Nicaraguan vice president now living in Miami. "It owes its existence ... exclusively to ... U.S. intelligence agencies that provide it direction and exercise strict, every-day control over its military operations and political pronouncements."

In the year ahead, you are going to set two major goals for yourself. Although they won't be easy to achieve, you'll be victorious before your next birthday rolls around.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Although it will require extra effort and dedication on your behalf, an important career objective can be achieved today. Roll up your sleeves and get going. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it. The Astro-Graph Matchmaker set instantly reveals which signs are romantically perfect for you. Mail $2 to Matchmaker, c/o this newspaper, Box 1846, Cincinnati, OH 45201.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) You'll do well in situations today that contain elements of friendly competition. When you win, you'll do so with grace.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) This is the right day to make a change that you feel will be of benefit to your household. Use your initiative; do not wait on others.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Authorship is not important today. If you feel a companion's suggestions are better than yours, use his ideas.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Industriousness will not only give you pride of achievement today, it could also increase your earnings. Do good work and you will be amply rewarded.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) It will make you feel uneasy today if a situation in which you're involved with others isn't being managed properly. Don't hang back, direct it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Give domestic matters top priority today. If there is something urgent you have left hanging, it can now be completed satisfactorily.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Possibilities for advancing the latest interest that has captured your fancy are excellent today. Move forward with the new.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Lady Luck tends to favor you today in your financial affairs. But you must play an active role and not leave everything up to her.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Much can be accomplished today if you are left to your own devices. Don't let others infringe upon your time with meaningless projects.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) It looks like obstructions are about to be lifted pertaining to something you've been hoping for that must come through another person.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) It's important at this time to maintain good relationships with enterprising friends. One pal might tie you into something that looks profitable.

Horticulture seminar aims at homeowners and professionals

A double-barrelled seminar, sponsored by the Texas Agricultural Extension service, aims at helping homeowners improve their yards and gardens and helping commercial growers learn about various crops which could bring additional dollars to the area. The seminar begins at 8 a.m., Friday, in the meeting rooms of the Clyde Carruth Livestock Pavilion. The two sessions are run concurrently and conclude at 3:45 p.m., said Joe Van Zandt, Gray County Extension agent.

"The commercial - economic production section is intended for anyone interested in learning about horticultural crops as a potential economic enterprise for our area," he said.

"The home - professional horticultural section is intended for homeowners and professional workers interested in horticultural subjects related to home use," the county agent added.

Topics and instructors for the commercial - economic section include the following:

—Economic analysis of selected horticultural crops — Dr. Steve Amosson of Amarillo, Extension agricultural economist and management specialist; —Fertility needs of horticultural crops — Dr. Michael Hickey of Lubbock, Extension soil chemist;

—Irrigation practices — Leon New of Amarillo, Extension agricultural engineer and irrigation specialist;

—And Christmas tree production possibilities — Robert Fewin of Lubbock, area forester.

The subjects and instructors for the home and professional horticultural section are to be as follows:

Additional information about the seminar is available at the Gray County Extension office.

Bright colors top spring styles

By Florence De Santis

Ever since shapelessness reached its climax with the "bag lady" layers of Japanese designer clothes, the ever-turning wheel of fashion has been coming round to the idea that the body is where fashion starts. For next spring, everything begins with the silhouette.

"Silhouette" — we've rarely heard the word for a long time, but for most of this century fashion rested on silhouette. The youth rage of the '60s destroyed it. Sportswear ease seemed to triumph, but even while the Japanese were taking the no-shape to its logical conclusion, such European designers as Ungaro in Paris and Armani in Milan boldly returned to silhouette.

Ungaro shirred and draped to fit the body, and many of next spring's suits, whether from Italy, such as a yellow draped-peplum suit by Elsa Mode di Zanella Elsa or the drawstring waist that makes a softly gathered peplum on a taupe wool suit by New York's Oscar de la Renta, show his influence.

At the New York Pret a Porter, where international fashion gathers twice a year, clean shapes softened by detailing were the rule, whether from Italy, France, England or the United States. The sheath, the chemise, the tunic two-piece and the sweater set with well-cut slacks all appear as simple silhouettes varied by shirring, trumpet-flared skirts and color.

Bright colors dominate for next spring, often eclipsing the traditional navy. At Paula Saker designers use two kinds of color, hot and bright, or delicately pastel, with spring versions of fall's successful tapestry jackets, now in cotton florals like the kind used for summer slip covers. Bold prints have returned, in masses of exotic huge flowers, leaves or fruit.

In their spring shows for buyers and press, designers emphasized the role of color by bringing out their clothes in color groups. Adele Simpson led off with a group of gently wearable classics, all in hot orange. Bill Blass used pink and gray warp-dyed taffeta paisley for easy coats and tops and a cocktail sheath dress. The first group of spring suits at Oscar de la Renta came out in an unusual combination of peach and taupe.

Girlfriend isn't thrilled by man's taste for frills

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1985 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: The gentleman I'm dating is kind, considerate, ambitious and just about the most wonderful man to be around that I have ever met. I love him and he loves me, but there is a problem.

He has told me that he enjoys wearing silk and satin items around the house—women's items, that is. He said he also likes to dress up in women's clothes occasionally, but he has never gone out in public dressed as a woman and has no desire to. He said he was hoping I wouldn't care, but I do. I don't know how to handle this, and I'm not sure I could ever accept it. Abby, he is 100 percent man; this I know for sure.

I asked him if he would consider giving it up, or going for counseling. I offered to go with him and try to understand it. He said he has done this since he was a young boy, and he's not sure he wants to give it up as he wasn't hurting anyone.

Abby, who needs help, him or me? I'm totally confused.

MIXED EMOTIONS

DEAR MIXED: If you love each other, this need not be a problem. The man is a transvestite—he enjoys dressing in women's clothes occasionally, but it does not affect his sexuality; he is as "normal" as any other male. You need to learn more about it before making a judgment. (Maybe you can accept it, and maybe you can't, but I can tell you that there are many men who cross-dress at home whose wives understand their need to do so, and have no objections.)

You don't indicate where you live, but if you will write to Dr. Paul Walker, Janus Information Facility, 1952 Union St., San Francisco, Calif. 94123, he can direct you to the proper counselor in your area. Please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope. All inquiries are confidential.

DEAR ABBY: I'm going with a guy I'll call Sidney, who's divorced and has a couple of teen-aged kids who stay with him sometimes. When I stay overnight at Sidney's place, I am very self-conscious when he makes love to me with a picture of "Shirley" staring at us from the bureau. (Shirley is his ex-wife.) I told him that it bothered me to see Shirley's picture at a time like that, but he just laughed and said, "Don't be silly; she doesn't mean anything to me anymore."

Then I said, "Well, in that case, get the picture of Shirley off your bureau." So he said, "When my kids stay over, they might notice that it's gone."

I don't want to make a big deal out of this, but do you think I'm out of line to insist that he ditch the picture while I'm there?

HERE'S LOOKING AT YOU

DEAR HERE'S: You're not out of line. He is.

Skin repair

When cosmetic creams don't seem to fight the chapping and cracking that deep winter weather causes in the skin, ointments with special ingredients may help.

One is simple petroleum jelly, which forms a barrier coating and allows the skin to heal itself beneath the protection.

Another is aloe vera cream or lotion, available under a number of brands. Some petroleum jelly ointments contain such special ingredients as anti-itch elements.

Consult your druggist for the best choice if your skin has real cold weather problems.

Long or short

If you cut long hair for the first time, it may be hard to manage.

Long hair stays in place solely by the weight of the hair, but short hair must be trained.

First, the cut must be properly done for the style you want. You may have to use rollers and gel or mousse daily for a while until you've tamed short hair to do what you want it to.

Team matchups: What fans can expect in Super Bowl XX

By Murray Olderman

NEW ORLEANS (NEA) — The Chicago Bears and the New England Patriots each rely on strong defense and stolid, almost dull offense to hammer their NFL foes. Which means Super Bowl XX should be a close, physical, low-scoring game.

The Chicago defense will be the ultimate factor in a Bear victory — my pick: Chicago 20, New England 10.

"I don't think anybody can compare to the Bear defense," says coach Joe Walton of the AFC New York Jets, who played and lost to both teams this season.

In an era when many teams are going to three-man fronts and multiple coverages, the Bears stick to a primary 4-3-4 alignment. Richard Dent, the leading pass rusher, is at right end; rookie William Perry and Steve McMichael are at the tackles; Dan Hampton is at left end. But defensive coordinator Buddy Ryan has tried to confuse offenses by switching occasionally to a three-man front, rushing linebackers Otis Wilson and Wilber Marshall from the outside.

The Bears do a lot of stunting up front and mix up their blitzes. With so much manpower trying to get to the passer, the Bears' secondary plays more man-to-man defenses than most teams. It relies on LC Mike Richardson and RC Leslie Frazier to go head-to-head with the wide receivers. SS Dave Duerson made the Pro Bowl in his first year as a regular, and FS Gary Fencik is a heavy hitter.

The hub of the Chicago defense is rambunctious MLB Mike Singletary, who seems to be in on every tackle. But like Sam Huff a generation ago, he benefits from the protective cover of the 4-3, designed to keep blockers off him. The most active of the Bear defenders, the one who really disrupts a game's pattern, is strong-side linebacker Wilson — even more than sack leader Dent.

A key to the New England offense will be Tony Eason at quarterback. It's imperative that he have a good day, throwing quick-release passes that might spring WRs Stanley Morgan and Stephen Starring against the tight coverage. Eason also has two reliable tight ends, Lin Dawson and Derrick Ramsey.

RB Tony Collins, restored to starting status, was the team's leading receiver in the standard two-setback formation that the Patriots favor.

The heavy-duty running back, second in Patriot history to gain more than 1,000 yards, is Craig James, a smart, north-south ball carrier with good vision. The Pats sub a running tandem: Robert Weathers and Mose Tatupu.

On passing downs, when they change to a shotgun formation, New England will sometime cross up the defense with forward handoffs to James or Collins.

In pass formations, the Patriots frequently double the wide receivers on

For maximum pressure on the quarterback, they'll rush both OLBs: Andre Tippett from the left, Don Blackmon from the right. Tippett, a a game.

Because of McMahon's versatility and WRs Dennis McKinnon and Willie Gault, the Bears don't have a predictable offense. McKinnon catches better in traffic; but sprinter Gault should thrive on the Superdome's fast carpet.

Most of the running plays for Payton are now tailored out of the I formation. McMahon will also throw on first down and go to the shotgun on passing downs. He isn't afraid to take off when he sees an open lane.

Leading Chicago's offensive line: center Joel Hilgenberg and left tackle Jimbo Covert. But a pair of young guards, Mark Bortz and Tom Thayer, rate extra credit for their run-blocking.

For both teams, the kicking games are fairly even. Barefoot field-goal kicker Tony Franklin is deadly at short range for the Pats; Kevin Butler is slightly stronger for the Bears.

The loss of WR-KR Irving Fryar, injured in a domestic squabble, hurt New England's kick-return unit as well as its passing game. Gault of Chicago is a kick-return threat for the Bears.

one side of the field, even putting them behind one another.

But the Pats got where they are by running the ball, and that's going to be tough against Chicago. The equalizer to the Bears' disruptive defense could be a fine Pat offensive line, led by LG John Hannah and LT Brian Holloway.

Defensively, New England relies primarily on a three-man front: 38-year-old RE Julius Adams, NT Lester Williams and rookie LE Garin Veris.

super All-Pro, was named top defender in the NFL in '85. A strong secondary also features CBs Raymond Clayborn and Ronnie Lippett, plus FS Fred Marion.

The big problem for New England will be to contain Chicago QB Jim McMahon, whose mobility is the great factor in his success. More than RB Walter Payton, McMahon's the vital cog in the Bears' offense: Payton is a great player, but he doesn't dominate

SWC roundup

Cougars snap A & M streak

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Cougars and Texas Aggies each had something to celebrate following the Cougars' pulsating 76-69 Southwest Conference victory over the Aggies.

Houston celebrated a return to the league chase with its third straight victory and the Aggies consoled themselves that they at least retained the SWC lead with a 5-1 record.

Houston's victory snapped A&M's five-game winning streak and evened the Cougars' league standing at 3-3.

Texas Tech and Texas Christian each started Wednesday's schedule with one league loss but the Red Raiders lost to Southern Methodist 61-57 and TCU lost to Texas 56-54, leaving the Aggies alone in first place.

TCU and Texas Tech share second place with 4-2 records.

Baylor defeated Rice 53-49 in the only other SWC game.

"They are going to be tough the rest of the way and they are right in the middle of it," A&M Coach Shelby Metcalf said of the Cougars. "If they don't get back in contention, which I think they are, the will be tough by tournament time."

Houston's Greg Anderson scored eight of his 12 points over the crucial final 4:18 of the game to secure the victory.

It was an emotion-charged game for the Cougars, playing their first game since Coach Guy Lewis' announced Tuesday that he would retire at the end of the season, ending a 33-year coaching career with the Cougars.

Anderson's closing surge included a pair of three-point plays and a basket that put the Cougars ahead 70-67 with 1:01 to go.

Alvin Franklin, Renaldo Thomas and Ricky Jackson then added Houston's final six points with two free throws each.

"We must win to stay in the conference race and was wanted to win for Coach Lewis," Anderson said. "It's a combination of those two things."

Franklin led the Cougars with 24 points and Rickie Winslow added 17.

A&M's Don Marbury fouled out with 5:20 to go with 18 points for the Aggies. Winston Crite shared high point honors with another 18 points.

"We're still on top and control our destiny," Marbury said. "We'll get ready to play Rice and keep on going hard. The guys hung in there and traded buckets down to the wire."

Lewis didn't think his recent retirement announcement had anything to do with the Cougars' outstanding effort.

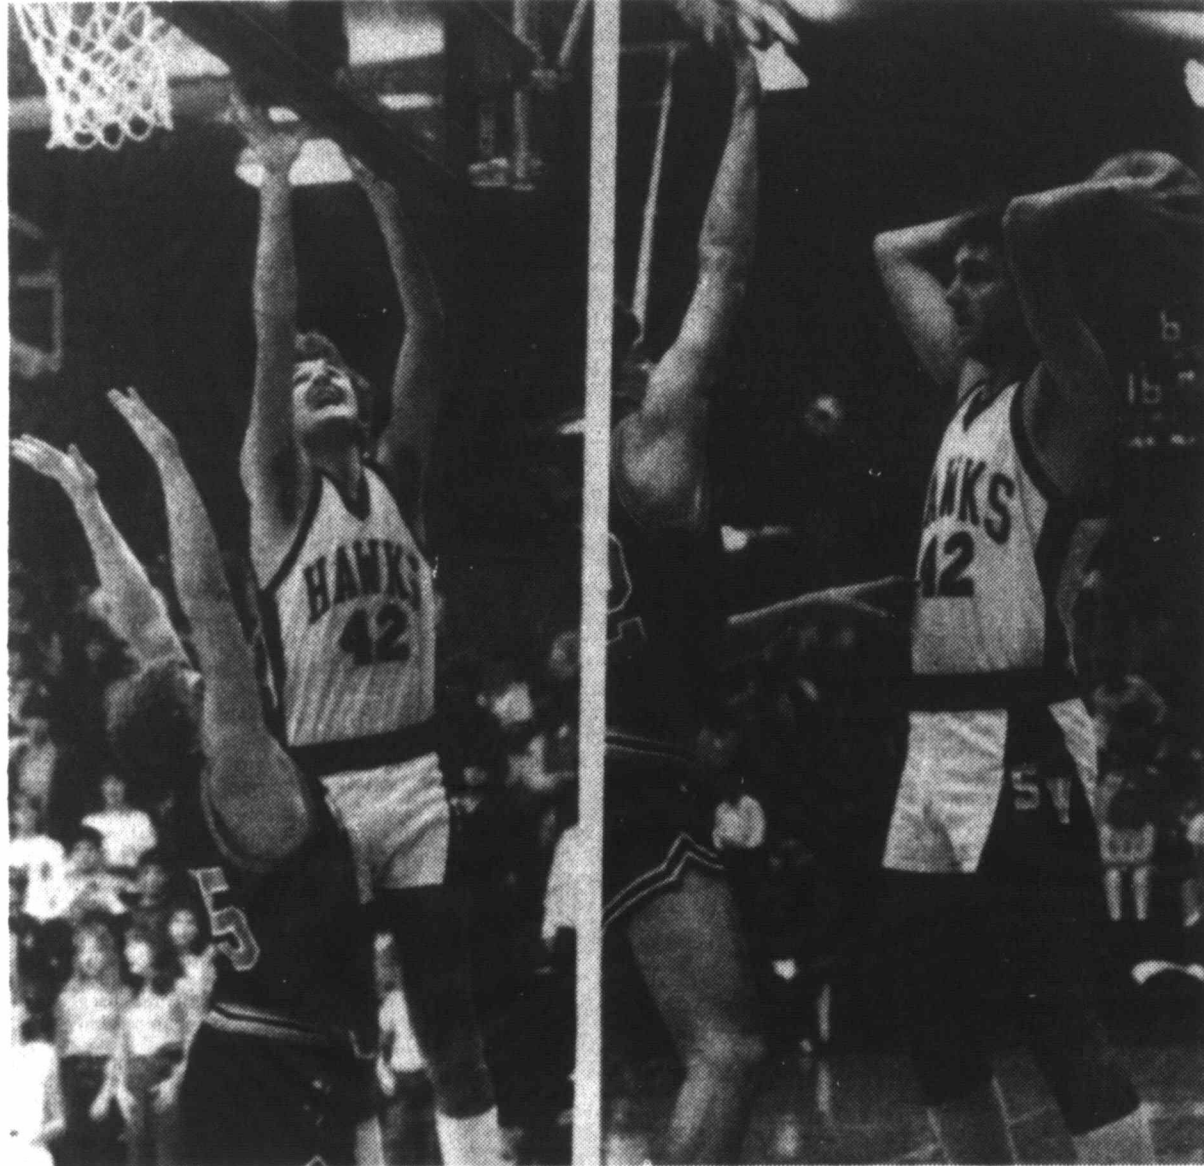

"Our kids were pumped up but they've been pumped up the last three or four ball games," Lewis said. "I'll say again the Arkansas game was a big boost to us."

After starting the SWC campaign 0-3, the Cougars defeated Arkansas and Baylor prior to edging the Aggies.

Todd Holloway, who scored 14 points for the Aggies, got A&M's final basket with 11 seconds to play.

"We had our chances," Metcalf said. "I'm real proud of our guys. They played hard. The score's tied, Anderson airballs one and gets it back."

"If we had gotten that rebound, we're down playing for the last shot."

McMahon's troubles behind him

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Hiroshi Shiriashi gave Jim McMahon his long-awaited shot in the rump — and the rest of the Chicago Bears a shot in the arm.

McMahon, the controversial quarterback who had complained long and loud about the Bears' unwillingness to supply him with his favorite acupuncturist, got his wish Wednesday.

Shiriashi, the trainer for the Japanese national track team, arrived in this Super Bowl city and administered a needle treatment in McMahon's sore left buttock. Shiriashi said he flew here at the request of his friend, former world-class sprinter Willie Gault, now a wide receiver for the Bears.

"I am here for him and to make his Bears feel better so they can win the Super Bowl," Shiriashi said. "My treatment is special, totally oriental. I am so happy to get here."

After the treatment, McMahon participated in a two-hour workout as the Bears continued preparation for Sunday's game against New England.

"The main thing I was impressed with was all of his movement," Coach Mike Ditka said after McMahon took most of the snaps in the Bears' first two offensive series. "He was 200 percent better today."

"I'm really optimistic now. Frankly, I was not very optimistic after yesterday's (Tuesday's) practice. It was a pleasant surprise for me."

At 11 p.m., CST, McMahon was seen walking jauntily at the head of a parade of fans and celebrants down the middle of Bourbon Street. He showed no sign of discomfort as he moved through the famed French Quarter, stopping occasionally to chat with people.

Then, saying "curfew, gotta go," he headed, at a brisk pace, toward the Bears hotel.

At nearby Tulane University, the Patriots went through a 24-hour practice. Wide receiver Irving Fryar, who suffered a cut right little finger in a domestic misunderstanding with his wife and missed the AFC championship game against Miami, took part, catching several passes and fielding punts, a category in which he led the NFL.

Asked if he saw any difference in Fryar's performance because of the plastic splint he wore, Coach Raymond Berry replied, "I didn't see any difference, except that he has a bigger finger."

McMahon had been undergoing whirlpool, rubdown and sound-stimulation treatments under the direction of Fred Catto, the Bears' trainer, but wasn't satisfied. "There's only so much he can do. That takes time and we don't have time," McMahon said.

He wanted Shiriashi. Finally, the Bears relented.

"With the all hype and the comments I hear, people assume it's a put-on," Ditka said of McMahon's injury prior to Wednesday's workout. "It's not a put-on. He's hurting right now. The degree of the hurt nobody knows but him because it's his body. But he's in a lot of pain."

"He'll get acupuncture treatment for the remainder of the week, and hopefully that will help him, or at least speed the recovery."

"We've had other people treated by acupuncture; it's nothing new," Ditka said. "He's treated other people. He's not part of our staff, but he has helped out."

Even before Shiriashi's arrival and McMahon's apparent improvement, Berry was laughing off the suggestion that the Bears' No. 1 quarterback might not start. "Do I believe he's doubtful?" Berry said. "Is there some hope? I'm not taking this seriously. This is a week of a whole lot of words going on."

"It's still sore," McMahon said of his rump. "It's getting better, there's no question about that. But it's still not where I want it to be."

"I think the closer we get to game time and the adrenalin starts pumping, a lot of the pain will disappear. I'm sure I'm probably going to have some novacaine before the game."

McMahon's rear end, bruised when Los Angeles Rams linebacker Jim Collins applied his helmet to it during the NFC title game, has become the No. 1 subject of conversation. A close No. 2 is McMahon's headband collection.

NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle fined the Bears $5,000 after McMahon wore a headband with the "adidas" brand visible during Chicago's first playoff game, so McMahon wore one with "ROZELLE" hand-lettered across the front for the Rams' game. Rozelle headbands, now sell for $5 around town.

WORDS TO GROW BY—

Avoid over-mulching. It can cause suffocation of the original root system and encourage new roots to grow into the mulch layer, especially in species that are able to root readily. Because the mulch layer is elevated and does not retain water well, roots developing in this layer are extremely susceptible to even minimum root-killing temperatures.

Walton sparks Celtics Pats capitalize on turnovers

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD
AP Basketball Writer
Boston and Los Angeles both acquired a veteran big man during the offseason after the Lakers beat the Celtics in last year's NBA championship finals.

On Wednesday night, when the two teams met for the first time since that June series, it was Bill Walton who stood out in Boston's surprisingly easy 110-95 victory.

The 6-foot-11 Walton had 11 points, eight rebounds, seven blocked shots and one steal in 16 minutes of action. His performance revved up a crowd of 14,890, the 240th consecutive sellout for the Celtics at Boston Garden.

"He inspired the troops the way he was blocking shots out there," Lakers Coach Pat Riley said. "His performance didn't surprise me. He plays inspired in every game. Some nights he may not be as productive, but he always plays hard. He showed tonight he hasn't lost too much of his game."

"I'm feeling good," said Walton, whose career has been plagued by injuries. "Playing about 20 minutes or so every game helps my timing. I'm not worrying about my foot or other injuries. I'm able to concentrate on basketball and that makes a difference."

In other National Basketball Association games, it was Philadelphia 118, Phoenix 111; Atlanta 131, Golden State 100;

Detroit 107, Cleveland 104; Los Angeles Clippers 131, Dallas 118; Denver 137, New Jersey 124.

The Lakers, with basically the same cast (except for veteran forward Maurice Lucas and rookie A.C. Green) that won the title last year, are now 32-8 this season, only a half-game ahead of Boston's 31-8. Celtics Coach K.C. Jones, who was able to rest his regulars after taking a 23-point lead in the fourth quarter, said the victory was a result of tight defense by Boston and an off night for all-time scoring leader Abdul-Jabbar.

The 38-year-old veteran scored 17 points to lead the Lakers, but he was just 6-for-20 from the field. As a team the Lakers shot 38.6 percent.

"I'd like to think our 'D' stopped Kareem, but he was just missing," Jones said. "The only people that stop Kareem is Kareem."

Dennis Johnson scored 22 points and Larry Bird had 21 points and 12 rebounds in leading the Celtics, who led 57-49 at halftime, then broke away in the third quarter for an 88-75 advantage.

Nuggets 137, Nets 124

Denver's Alex English reached the 40-point plateau for the sixth time this season with 43 against New Jersey, which lost despite the return of Micheal Ray Richardson from drug rehabilitation.

The Nuggets, who snapped a four-game losing streak, led 90-75 with 3:08 to go in the third quarter, but a 22-6 spurt by the Nets gave them a one-point lead with 9:27 left in the game.

English and Lafayette Lever, who scored 13 of his 17 points in the final period, gave Denver its final cushion.

Hawks 131, Warriors 100
Atlanta hit 67.5 percent of its shots, the highest in the NBA this season, and pulled away from Golden State in the second half.

The Hawks, who won for the ninth time in 11 games, took the lead for good at 50-49 late in the first half. An 11-1 streak in the third period helped Atlanta take a 91-78 margin into the fourth quarter, when the Hawks outscored the Warriors 40-22.

Dominique Wilkins paced Atlanta with 25 points, while the guard duo of Randy Wittman and Glenn Rivers added 23 and 17, respectively. Wittman was 10-for-12 and Rivers 8-for-8. Golden State was led by Joe Barry Carroll with 16 points.

Clippers 131, Mavericks 118
Marques Johnson scored 22 points and Kurt Nimphius, traded by Dallas earlier this season, added a season-high 21 for Los Angeles.

The Clippers broke open a close game in the third quarter, when an 18-8 streak gave them an 83-69 advantage.

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The players didn't know what to make of their coach's bizarre behavior.

Raymond Berry gathered them around him at the New England Patriots' minicamp last May, dropped a football on the ground and flopped his lanky 6-foot-2 frame on top of it.

"We were in shock," wide receiver Cedric Jones said. "We had no idea what he was doing." The Patriots know now.

Berry was demonstrating the importance of recovering fumbles and collecting turnovers.

Berry got up off the turf, Jones said, and told his players. "This is your basic fundamental that can separate the good teams from the bad teams."

As the season progressed, the point was proven.

New England was third in the NFL with 47 takeaways. In their three playoff games, the Patriots have capitalized on 16 turnovers to score 61 of their 84 points. They have scored three touchdowns in their last five games after recovering fumbled kickoff returns.

They are hoping for more of the same when they meet the Chicago Bears in Sunday's Super Bowl.

"The first thing we do is get the guy tackled," special teams standout Mose Tatupu said. "Then you get your hand on the ball."

The Patriots practice falling on loose balls and picking them up and running. They also learn the proper way to recover fumbles, by sliding into them rather than pouncing and having the ball squirt away.

"When we first started this drill, most of the players weren't crazy about it," said Greg Hawthorne, who forced a fumble on the second-half kickoff of New England's AFC championship game victory over Miami on Jan. 12. "Now when we do that, everybody looks forward to it."

The Patriots also practice stripping the ball from opposing players.

"The last time many players did all that was in high school," said linebacker Steve Nelson. "That's the last time I did it."

Gooden's ankle okay

NEW YORK (AP) — Dwight Gooden, who posted a 24-4 record in 1985, is fine in the opinion of the New York Mets team physician, who examined the injured ankle that jolted club officials when they found out about it through the news media.

Dr. James Parkes called the injury "an uncomplicated mild sprain of the left ankle" and said the National League Cy Young Award winner would be "100 percent by the beginning of spring training." Mets publicity director Jay Horowitz reported Wednesday at a news conference at Shea Stadium.

All the practicing may be needed Sunday against one of the NFL's most careful teams.

The Bears have lost just one turnover, a fumble, in two playoff games. They tied for fourth in fewest regular-season turnovers with 31. The only touchdown an opponent scored on a turnover came Oct. 13, a 43-yard interception return for a touchdown by San Francisco's Carlton Williamson.

Chicago even may turn the tables on New England. The Bears led the NFL with 54 takeaways.

Still, Jones said, "We will probably overemphasize the fact that we can knock the ball out from the first play" on Sunday.

Gooden said he injured the ankle Jan. 5 when he tripped over a drainpipe while shagging fly balls hit by Gary Sheffield, his 17-year-old nephew in a Tampa, Fla., park Jan. 5.

Gooden said he didn't report the injury to the Mets when it first happened because "I didn't think it was serious. I thought it was just a sprain."

But Gooden said he went to a hospital for X-rays, which revealed no break.

"I was never on crutches," Gooden said. "At the hospital they gave me X-rays and the phone number of a bone specialist. But I never called him. And they had me walk on crutches in the hospital to keep the weight off the ankle."

"Everybody's got their opinion, but I think it was blown out of proportion," said the right-handed pitching star.

"Next time, I will call the Mets. If I get a cold, I'll call the Mets."

Gooden was to go to the Mets training camp in St. Petersburg, Fla., to work out under the supervision of Tom McKenna, Mets' trainer emeritus.

Horowitz opened the news conference by saying no questions would be entertained about Gooden's contract or contract negotiations.

Gooden reportedly is asking for a $1.5 million per year contract, while the Mets reportedly are offering $1.1 million. The matter is scheduled to go to arbitration.

Moore released from hospital

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — San Antonio Spurs point guard Johnny Moore, suffering from non-contagious meningitis, was released from a hospital Wednesday, the team announced.

Spurs General Manager Bob Bass said Moore is "feeling better, but he is still out for the season unless a miracle happens."

The 6-foot-3 Moore was first hospitalized with the disease known as "desert fever" Dec. 26 and was discharged Jan. 10.

Last week, he re-entered the hospital and underwent surgery twice.

Bass said doctors say Moore will have to get plenty of rest. He said he did not know how long it would take Moore to recover.

Reagan aide finally gets window for his office

WASHINGTON (AP) — It looks like pop art hanging there alongside the formal portraits of Theodore Roosevelt and Calvin Coolidge. But pop it's not. It's Pat Buchanan's White House window on the world.

Many saw it as a sign of Buchanan's inevitable decline in the pecking order when the president's communications director was moved last fall from the coveted spot between President Reagan's suite and the office of the chief of staff to the windowless cubicle across the hall.

But it's windowless no more. Buchanan's media relations staff, headquartered in the Old Executive Office Building next door to the White House, took pity on him and gave him a window for his birthday in November. Karen Fuller, Buchanan's executive assistant, said members of the staff liberated the dirty old set of panes from a pile of rubble on Capitol Hill on Halloween and presented it to their boss.

Buchanan laughed and talked about hanging it but never did. At Christmas, he received a set of curtains and a bottle of Windex, but the window was left sitting on the floor. "We just decided it was time to put it up and get some sunshine in," Nancy Lewis, the communications director's personal secretary, said this week. And now the old window hangs on the wall right along with the presidential portraits and political cartoons.

"He was out, and we just hung it," Mrs. Fuller said, adding that she and Ms. Lewis had the assistance of a White House carpenter, who came to hang a picture in place of a portrait of President James Knox Polk, which was lent to a nearby museum for an exhibition.

"Hm, smells like onions in here," Mrs. Fuller remarked the other day as she came back from lunch. "Somebody must have left the window open."

Buchanan first threatened to take the window down but then thought better of it. "I'm going to put a picture of the Washington Monument and the Jefferson Memorial behind it and make believe I'm looking out from the Oval Office," Buchanan said.

It's a 'go' for 'Amerika'

NEW YORK (AP) — "Amerika," the miniseries that Moscow wanted killed, has survived political pressure and ABC's accountants to get a new life on TV for its depiction of the United States under fictitious Soviet rule.

The 12-hour movie from ABC Circle Films has been in production limbo for several weeks, but it got the go-ahead from ABC Entertainment on Wednesday. The script has been approved and production will start in two months, ABC said. It is scheduled to be broadcast in the spring of 1987.

"In light of the inherent dramatic quality of the material, the decision to present 'Amerika' was an easy one," Brandon Stoddard, president of ABC Entertainment, said in a statement.

But political pressure suggested otherwise — first from the Soviet Union to cancel the project in the name of détente, then from a Reagan administration official to carry on with the production in the name of freedom.

"Good for them!" Secretary of Education William J. Bennett said Wednesday. "Whatever the merits of the show, I think every American will be pleased that ABC is making its own decisions."

Two weeks ago, Bennett criticized the production's delay and said postponing the filming was "a bad lesson for our children. The American people might be denied a television series because the Kremlin does not like it."

A spokesman for the Soviet Embassy in Washington said Wednesday that Soviet officials were not available for comment.
