Marcos' opposition leader assassinated

Benigno Aquino

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Mourners today filed past the open coffin containing the bloody body of opposition leader Benigno Aquino Jr. slain by a bullet in the head minutes after he returned to the Philippines from self-exile in the United States.

One opposition figure charged that President Ferdinand E. Marcos must take "direct responsibility" for the Sunday slaying of his political rival at Manila airport.

Manila Police Chief Gen. Prospero Olivas said lab tests showed the man authorities said killed Aquino at Manila's airport Sunday had fired a gun. But he said the assailant, who was killed by soldiers immediately after Aquino was shot, still has not been identified.

The city was calm today as Aquino's body — still dressed in the bloody clothes in which he died — was placed in an open coffin in his home in suburban Quezon City. The face was disfigured, with bruises and an undressed bullet wound. The body was clothed in a white safari shirt and jeans covered with dried blood.

His mother, Aurora Aquino, had demanded the body be returned untouched to her by the military."She wants the world to see what they did to her son," said Aquino's sister, Lupita Kashiwahara. "It's not beautiful, and we don't want any mortician to make him look beautiful."

Aquino profile, family's reaction, Page 2A

Opposition Assemblyman Salvador H. Laurel said, "We question the mysterious circumstances in which the assassin was able to enter the restricted area." He spoke at a news conference at Aquino's home.

Laurel said if Marcos does not answer several questions about the assassination, it could be "the end of his regime."

He said the questions that needed answers were: Who killed Aquino, why was the killer there, who went aboard the plane to fetch Aquino, and were any of the security men involved in the assassination?

Asked if he was holding Marcos responsible, Laurel said: "I personally feel that under this situation there should be command responsibility and he should take direct responsibility."

Others in the opposition accused even more strongly. "The government did it!" political figure Salvador Gonzales shouted to scores of mourners at Aquino's home.

Political leaders in various nations called for a thorough investigation of Aquino's slaying as he stepped off an airplane returning from exile, and the International Commission of Jurists in Geneva cabled Marcos calling for an intiative for "restoration of full democratic rights and freedoms" in the Philippines.

AT&T, unions reach tentative agreement

From staff and wire reports

WASHINGTON — A tentative $3 billion contract agreement between American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and its unions seems certain to end the strike by nearly 700,000 workers. Normal telephone service would be restored later this week upon completion of additional bargaining at the local level.

Leaders of the Communications Workers of America and two smaller unions voted Sunday to accept a proposed three-year pact providing substantial job security guarantees and economic gains. It also could mean higher telephone rates for customers.

"We can finally see the light at the end of the tunnel," said Midland's CWA Vice President Tommy Haislip.

"We're going to hold out until local items throughout the company are settled, but we feel we're almost there," he added.

One of the local items Midland's CWA members are hoping for is a reclassification for the Tall City. This reclassification would recognize Midland as a high-cost-of-living town that would result in higher wages for Midland CWA members.

"Everything looks good (on the tenative contract), but we hope to get reclassified," Haislip said. "We feel that the CWA has won the battle. It's going to be 2½ weeks without pay, but it's better than it could be."

Union reaction, Page 7A

Haislip said when union members return to work, there could be some disagreement between the striking workers and those who chose to cross the picket lines.

"There's going to be some problems," he said. "People will be upset. Maybe they won't talk to them (those who crossed picket lines). I don't think there will be any fights, but maybe some dissension."

Glenn E. Watts, president of the CWA, hailed the agreement "in this volatile 'information age' " as a pacesetter that will help all Americans faced with the possible loss of work due to rapidly changing technology.

The proposed pact also was approved by leaders of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and the Telecommunications International Union.

Eleven people die in plane crash

STANWOOD, Wash. (AP) — Skydivers on a parachuting outing with friends were forced to dive for their lives when the World War II-era plane went into a "classic stall" and plummeted to earth, killing 11 people, the survivors and authorities said.

Fifteen of the skydivers survived but nine parachutists and two pilots aboard the twin-engine Lockheed Lodestar were killed Sunday when the plane slammed into a highway embankment about 45 miles north of Seattle, officials said.

Some of the survivors who parachuted to safety before the crash said they had to struggle against gravity forces sucking them back inside the spiraling plane. No one on the ground was hurt.

Authorities sealed off the crash site Sunday night and did not plan to clean up wreckage until today, when investigators from the National Transportation Safety Board were scheduled to arrive.

Witnesses estimated the plane fell at least 12,000 feet and was approaching 400 mph at its nearly vertical impact.

One survivor, Mike Metcalf, 34, of Mercer Island, said the plane went into a "classic stall" just after he made his jump at about 6:30 p.m. Metcalf said he was one of the last six skydivers to get out of the plane.

Steve Dunlap, Northwest Area Safety Officer for the U.S. Parachute Association, said those killed included the pilots of the plane and nine skydivers.

The victims officially were being listed as missing until their bodies could be identified, said a dispatcher for Snohomish County sheriff's office.

The only victim identified, Mark Levering, 25, of Bellevue, died at Cascade Hospital in Arlington of injuries suffered from the crash, hospital Administrator Joe Hopkins said. Another man was taken to Providence Hospital in Everett with fractures, he said.

Metcalf said the jumpers were all friends who had been skydiving from the same plane since June. He said all 24 had planned to form a cluster on the last jump.

Snohomish County Sheriff's Sgt. Dave Sargent said the plane had taken off from Arlington Airport, about eight miles east of the crash site. It lay in twisted chunks of metal late Sunday, its engines resting on a hillside across the road. Bodies and clothing were scattered among the charred debris.

Rick McGuire, 29, who was in his barn when the plane crashed about 300 feet away, said the sound of the aircraft's engines drowned out the noise of the earth-shaking impact.

"It seems like I heard this plane in a nosedive forever, because we thought it was going to hit us. I assumed it was either going to be the barn or the house," he said. "My whole barnyard has got pieces of people."

Metcalf said that as he was leaving the plane, he felt an unusual movement. When he looked up after jumping, he saw the plane go nose up, then fall backwards and go into a spin, passing him as he fell toward the ground. Smoke was coming from the right engine, he said.

Tom Classon, 32, of Bellevue, a 12-year skydiving veteran, said he had to fight his way out of the plane after it stalled. He said his leg was injured when the tail of the tumbling aircraft struck him.

Four Illinois women found slain

JOLIET, Ill. (AP) — The brutal weekend slayings of four women have raised to 14 the number of unsolved multiple killings this summer in the rural area around Joliet, as frightened residents wonder whether "there's a maniac out there."

Gov. James Thompson ordered state law enforcement officials Sunday to beef up assistance to Will County investigators examining the fourth multiple slaying in two months in the area about 40 miles southwest of Chicago.

State Law Enforcement Director James Zagel said Thompson ordered a score of investigators to join the investigation. Investigators drawing up a list of suspects would be looking at names of people recently released from nearby prisons and mental institutions, he said.

Thelma Miller, who lives about six blocks from a store where the four women's bodies were discovered Saturday, said she fears for her children, who deliver newspapers in the dark early morning hours.

"I'm kind of afraid for them going out at that time of the morning," she said. "You never know what might happen."

"It makes you think there's a maniac out there," added her husband, Al.

"It would take a very deranged person to do this to four women," Will County Coroner Robert J. Tezak said after spending Saturday at the ceramics shop just east of town where the bodies were found.

An autopsy Sunday revealed multiple stab wounds in the bodies of all four victims. The oldest victim, 75-year-old Anna A. Ryan, had been shot in the neck, Tezak said. He added in a recorded statement that he will hold an inquiry in three weeks, but declined comment on any other aspects of the case.

"It makes you feel funny," Brett Weiler, a muscular ironworker, said after police found the bodies, three of them bound and gagged, in the store next to Weiler's house.

"It gives you the heebie-jeebies," said a friend of Weiler who lives a few blocks away and who asked not to be identified. "I think people are going to keep their eyes open a lot more."

"Could it be there's a nut out there who will go out and mass murder?" asked John Bourg, mayor of this city of 78,000 which is also the location of Stateville Correctional Center, a state prison. "We don't know. That's one of the fears."

"I've got a little brother — he's scared to death," said Timmy Hare, 13, who grew up in the neighborhood where the latest killings occurred. "He won't come out of the house."

The National Weather Service forecasts showers for Tuesday from the central and northern Rockies into the northern and central Plains and from the upper Mississippi Valley to the mid-Atlantic and northeast coastal areas.

No promise for rain in Permian Basin

Partly cloudy skies early this evening, expected to clear off tonight, hold no promise of rain for the Permian Basin.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, skies will turn partly cloudy again Tuesday but rainfall recorded for the month will probably stick to .43 of an inch with the yearly amount remaining at 2.79 inches.

Temperatures are expected to drop near 70 tonight with a high Tuesday reaching near 100.

Tonight's southerly winds at 5-10 mph should increase to 10-20 mph Tuesday.

Sunday's high of 101 missed the record high of 102, set in 1964, by only one degree. The overnight low of 71 was 19 degrees warmer than 1947's record low of 52 degrees.

Widow doesn't fear returning home

Corazon Aquino

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) — The tearful widow of slain Philippine opposition leader Benigno S. Aquino says she will return to her homeland Tuesday with her five children with hopes her husband's death "will not have been in vain."

"He did not want to compromise," said Corazon C. Aquino of her husband, who was shot fatally Sunday as he stepped from an airplane in Manila. "He could have easily gotten out of jail. His belief was that his country should have a free press and democracy."

Aquino returned to the Philippines after three years of self-exile in the United States to lead opposition to President Ferdinand E. Marcos' violent rule.

His widow said Sunday she does not fear returning to her homeland.

"I feel that God in his own way will take care of me and my children — and my husband's death will not be in vain," Mrs. Aquino said. "You always think of risks. But I never thought it would go this far."

Mrs. Aquino sat straight and calm but wept occasionally and left the room once when overcome by tears.

"My husband wanted to return home," she said. "He wanted to ask President Marcos to return the country to the democracy we knew before his martial law. As I go home, I just pray that the good Lord will continue to watch over me and my children."

Marcos, who opposed his political rival's return, had warned of assassination plots against Aquino. Aquino was jailed for more than seven years after Marcos imposed martial law in September 1972.

Benigno S. Aquino III, 20, said people will someday know who wanted his father killed.

"Eventually, the truth will come out," he said. "My father was fond of saying, 'There's no such thing as a secret in Manila.'"

Aquino's son said he learned about the shooting while watching television news.

"It didn't really register," he recalled. "It was kind of confusing."

Then a Japanese reporter called and confirmed the death. By Sunday morning, family and friends were packing for the trip back to the Aquinos' suburban Manila house. Mrs. Aquino said she and her son and daughters, Maria Elena, Aurura Corazon, Kristina and Victoria, had planned to return anyway. The children range in age 12 to 27.

"My husband's main objective to going was that he wanted to talk to President Marcos to restore the democratic process," Mrs. Aquino said. "And he felt since it is only Marcos who has the authority to call for elections, he felt by presenting his thoughts and beliefs, by reconciling and forgetting the past that both the opposition and Marcos could work for the benefit of his country."

As friends paid their respects, the slain leader's son said. "My father said if he was going to die, he wanted to die in his homeland...No matter what happens, justice will be served."

"We have spent a happy three years here," Mrs. Aquino said of her stay in the United States, "in sharp contrast to the years my husband spent in prison."

Aquino came to the United States in May 1980 to undergo heart surgery and has been on fellowships at Harvard University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Amelia Leiss, assistant director of MIT's Center for International Studies said Aquino had just completed a year of study on the role of the military in developing countries.

"He knew the risks he was running," Miss Leiss said. "He thought they were worth taking. He felt he could be a rallying point for the democratic forces in the country. He was a deeply patriotic man."

Bullet ends Marcos, Aquino struggle

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Former Sen. Benigno S. Aquino Jr., slain by an assassin as he returned from exile in the United States, was considered the splintered opposition's best hope to defeat President Ferdinand E. Marcos' authoritarian government.

The bullet that struck the 50-year-old Aquino in the head as he left a plane at Manila's airport ended a bitter power struggle that began more than 10 years ago.

Aquina lost the first phase of the battle in 1972 when Marcos proclaimed martial law and threw him in jail, blocking his chance of running in the 1973 presidential election.

He won a minor victory when Marcos set him free in May 1980 to undergo heart surgery in the United States — with the condition he return to prison after the operation. Instead, he remained in America for three years, with fellowships at Harvard University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Born Nov. 27, 1932, into a prominent political family, Aquino married Corzona Cojuangco, whose parents were among the wealthiest sugar-plantation owners.

He was employed by the Manila Times, then the largest English-language newspaper in Southeast Asia, and at the age of 17 was sent to cover the Korean War. Marcos closed the Times in 1972 with the imposition of martial law.

When he was 22, Aquino was elected mayor of his hometown of Concepcion in Tarlac province north of Manila and became provincial governor in 1961.

He was elected to the Senate at the age of 35.

Aquino was secretary-general of the Liberal Party and the main contender for its nomination for president in 1973. The party had won a major victory in the 1971 senatorial elections and appeared to be headed for another sweep in 1973.

In 1971, Marcos accused Aquino of subversion, murder and illegal possession of firearms and he was jailed. In November 1977 he was convicted by a special military court and sentenced to death.

Aquino, denying the charges, had dared Marcos to try him before a civilian court, but the challenge was not accepted.

While in prison his lawyers filed repeated petitions to stop the trial by the military court, but each time the Marcos-appointed Supreme court ruled against him.

After 31 months in jail and at the age of 42, Aquino was down from his chubby 200 pounds to 121 pounds following a 40-day hunger strike he began on April 5, 1975.

He had dismissed his lawyers and decided to boycott the proceedings, but the military forced him to attend each of the tribunal's sessions.

Near death on the 31st day of his fast, Aquino was taken to a military hospital where he resisted attempts by doctors to feed him intravenously. He was persuaded to end the hunger strike by relatives and Cardinal Jaime L. Sin, the Roman Catholic archbishop of Manila.

Marcos, following a wave of protests against Aquino's death sentence, ordered the trial reopened, but the process begged down as Aquino filed more petitions with the Supreme Court. Government lawyers said the original conviction and death sentence remained in effect.

In 1978 while in jail, Aquino announced his candidacy for a seat in the Interim National Assembly created under the amended constitution. He lost to Marcos' wife, Imelda, and claimed the election was a fraud.

In December 1979, Marcos granted his arch political enemy a one-week "furlough" from jail to spend Christmas with his family at his suburban Manila home. Marcos extended the vacation by two weeks amid talk that an amnesty was imminent, but the negotiations fell through and Aquino was taken back to jail.

There he stayed until May 1980 when doctors detected his heart ailment amd Marcos gave Aquino a pass to travel to the United States.

Again, an amnesty appeared probable but a series of terrorists bombings occurred in Manila in August 1980 and Marcos accused Aquino of masterminding them. Aquino denied the allegation.

Angry charges followed, with Marcos saying Aquino broke his promise to return to the Philippines and Aquino replying that a "pact with the devil is no pact at all."

On June 7, Aquino announced he would return to his homeland, but government officials refused to renew his passport.

Marcos' political rival assassinated in Manila

Marcos, said by government officials to be in seclusion to write a book, has not appeared in public for several days, renewing rumors he is seriously ill. Those rumors have been denied, and the government said he has seen a number of officials.

He has made no comment on the assassination since Sunday's printed statement of condolence and warning against trouble.

A power blackout hit Manila and much of the main Philippines island of Luzon one day after Aquino's killing, further fueling rumors, not only about Marcos' health but about possible reimposition of martial law.

Power began going back on in the afternoon in some areas and officials said the blackout was caused by the tripping of a major transmission line that caused a chain reaction in several power plants.

Manila remained calm. Marcos' Malacanang palace, however, resembled a military garrison as troops with rifles and machine-guns guarded the area. Firetrucks were parked nearby and on one palace lawn was an armored personnel carrier.

A mortician assisting in the autopsy confirmed an earlier government report that Aquino was killed by a single bullet fired at close range after he left the airplane. The bullet entered below the left ear and exited through the chin.

The airport was crowded with thousands of Aquino supporters. All reporters except those aboard the flight from Taipei with Aquino and a few regular airport photographers were kept out of view of the plane.

The U.S. State Department called the killing "a cowardly and despicable act and spokesman Robert Williams said, "The U.S. government trusts that the Philippines will swiftly and vigorously track down the perpetrators of this political assassination and bring them to justice..."

In Santa Barbara, Calif., White House spokesman Larry Speakes said he did not think the killing would affect President Reagan's plans to visit the Philippines in November. Asked whether government troops were involved in the assassination, Speakes said, "We cannot make that kind of assessment."

But the New York Times reported today a senior Reagan administration official in Washington said if Marcos' government was found to have been implicated in the killing, it could have a very serious effect on U.S-Philippine relations, including possible cancellation of Reagan's trip.

Aquino was jailed in 1972 and in 1977 was sentenced to death after being found guilty of subversion and the murder of a village political leader. Aquino denied the charges. The death sentence was pending Supreme Court review.

Marcos called the assassination a "heinous and outrageous crime" but stressed he had warned Aquino not to return because political foes bearing old grudges were going to kill him.

Aquino put on a bullet proof vest shortly before leaving the plane.

Former Sen. Lorenzo Tanada, 85, expressed skepticism about the results of the promised official probe and wondered if an independent investigation was possible.

"I don't know what they (government) have in mind," he said. "It is very hard to tell, knowing what has happened before with investigations that they conducted."

The police chief said soldiers were escorting Aquino from the plane to arrest him when the gunman appeared and shot him. A man police identified as the attacker was immediately gunned down by security forces and his body lay on the airport tarmac for more than five hours.

The scene inside the store was "beyond belief," said Sgt. Gae Luchowski, one of the officers who discovered the bodies after being summoned by a customer who found the front of the store unattended. "You can't describe something that gruesome."

All of the victims were probably killed between 11 and 11:45 a.m., Saturday Tezak said. Weiler said he was in his driveway from 9 a.m. to 11:30 a.m., but heard no disturbance and saw no activity except for a loud noise like a slamming car door at 9 a.m.

"It makes you wonder a lot more about what, where, who and when," he said. "And if you're next."

The victims were identified as store owner Marilyn Baers, 45, of Joliet and three customers: Mrs. Ryan; her daughter-in-law, Pamela M. Ryan, 29, both of Joliet; and Barbara J. Dunbar, 39, of rural Mokena.

The series of killings began June 25, when two elderly sisters were beaten and stabbed at a Joliet Township home which was then set afire.

On July 2, a housewife and a businessman were shot to death in their car in adjoining Cook County.

On July 16, seven people were shot, five fatally, in Homer Township, seven miles from the Cook County deaths and near Joliet Township.

On July 17, a man was shot to death on an expressway in the area and his fiancee was kidnapped, raped, stabbed and left for dead. She told police of two gunmen.

The CWA represents 525,000 AT&T employees and the other two unions claim more than 150,000 people.

The strikers will remain on the picket lines until some 100 local collective bargaining agreements, which must be included in the national accord, are concluded across the country. Watts and the leaders of the electrical workers and telecommunications unions said they were confident there would be no setbacks in the local bargaining.

Watts said the CWA's members are poised to return to work at 12:01 a.m. EDT Thursday. Members of the other unions also will return to work later in the week when the local bargaining is finished. All strikers would work while awaiting ballots to cast votes in the formal ratification process.

Rex Reed, vice president for labor relations at AT&T, described the accord as a "balanced settlement and one really that serves all parties quite well."

Watts said the settlement, which would provide AT&T employees with $3 billion worth of wage increases and improved benefits over the next three years, "contains very substantial improvements" over an earlier offer that had been rejected by his union's bargaining committee.

Watts said he would not be surprised if telephone rates rise substantially "because of the process that's under way of reorganization of the Bell System, of divestiture, the whole introduction of competition..."

But he insisted that any rate increases should not be blamed on the unions, which struck AT&T on Aug. 7.

"I am suggesting that during the life of this contract, the rate of productivity in our industry is likely to go up 21 percent, and a 21 percent increase in productivity would more than pay for any little $3 billion increase that we got out of it," he said.

Reed said that "I can't answer specifically with regard to phone rates going up, but certainly I would say that wage increases do impact on (telephone) rates...I would fully hope that our productivity in the future would continue to hold down rates."

In enticing the union leaders to accept the proposed pact, the AT&T relented on a host of major issues.

Asked how the unions managed to obtain major contract improvements, Watts said that "...while it is true that the average local telephone call does not seem to be adversely affected, a great many things that must go on daily in the running of the business are adversely affected when 700,000 people are away from the job.

Morton Bahr, head of the CWA's District 1 in New York and New Jersey, said that when management "realized that we weren't going to give up something we had fought 30 years to gain..., then things started to fall in place."

Glenn turning Iowa caucuses into two-way battle

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — The accolades go on and on for the methodical campaign that Democratic presidential front-runner Walter F. Mondale has assembled in Iowa, the solid ties with party leaders, the superior organization, his own relentless travels around the state.

But there's another side to the consensus forming among Mondale's friends and foes. With six months to go before the Iowa precinct caucuses — the first step in selection of delegates to the 1984 Democratic National Convention — Ohio Sen. John Glenn is turning what looked like a one-man show into a two-way fight.

"Mondale has an incredibly strong base here," says John Law, an organizer running California Sen. Alan Cranston's presidential campaign.

"There is no activist in this state who has not met Fritz Mondale. He is our third senator. He's good to us. He helps us," adds Roxanne Conlin, a former gubernatorial candidate who is in Glenn's camp.

"The other campaigns are struggling, financially and otherwise," adds Pete Slone, who is running Mondale's Iowa effort.

But the only public opinion poll in the state shows a tightening race. And if the former vice president's advantages are huge, so are his risks.

"He's got to win here," says Ed Campbell, the former state party chairman and a strong backer of the former vice president.

And given the expectations being raised, there are politicians who say even a narrow victory in Iowa could tarnish Mondale's campaign.

A public opinion poll published July 10 by the Des Moines Register found Mondale with a substantial lead over Glenn among Democrats, 45 percent to 30 percent. But a similar survey taken in March gave Mondale a bigger lead of 55 percent to 17 percent over the former astronaut.

Glenn has recruited two well-known Democrats to help him, Ms. Conlin and Lt. Gov. Robert Anderson and has made several campaign trips to the state. "We're competitive," says Joe Grandmaison, Glenn's national political director.

While the Ohio Democrat has picked up his share of endorsements, Mondale has backing from many more long-time party stalwarts.

By most accounts, Mondale and Glenn have left the other contenders far behind.

Campaign aides agree with the newspaper poll that Cranston and Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado are in a struggle for third place, trailed by former Gov. Reubin Askew of Florida and Sen. Ernest Hollings of South Carolina.

"There's no denying that we lost momentum," says Hart aide Sharane Darlington, struggling to revive what once seemed like a promising campaign.

Firemen seriously wounded by gunman

DALLAS (AP) — Two firefighters were seriously wounded by a gunman who exchanged fire with police and then barricaded himself inside an apartment until officers drove him out more than four hours later with tear gas, authorities said.

Police said the man confronted the firefighters with a pistol when they answered a fire call at his southeast Dallas apartment Sunday morning and opened fire when police, who arrived minutes later, ordered him to drop the revolver.

Larry Lynn Skyler, 27, a city truck driver, was charged Sunday night with four counts of attempted capital murder and ordered held on $500,000 bond, said City Magistrate Tom Boardman.

Firefighters Rick Brewer, 21, and Jerry Morris, 31, were listed in serious condition at Baylor University Medical Center, said hospital spokeswoman Melissa Long. She said Brewer was shot in the chest and Morris was wounded by a bullet that traveled from his abdomen to his leg.

Police officials said they did not know why the man opened fire. But the Dallas Morning News, in a copyright story, reported the man had been arrested earlier in the month on a misdemeanor charge and quoted a neighbor as saying the man had a great fear of police since his arrest.

Marilyn Gibson, who lives in an apartment above Skyler's, told the newspaper that she and her husband, David, heard a fire alarm go off in Skyler's apartment about 10:20 a.m. Mrs. Gibson said her husband looked out the window and saw Skyler, who was armed with a gun. The Gibsons notified police and fire dispatchers.

Chief Bill Newman of the Police Department's special operations division said four firefighters arrived at the apartments several minutes before police units. Residents of the apartments directed three of the firefighters to Skyler's first-floor apartment in the 208-unit complex.

The firefighters smelled what they later described as smoke from an electrical fire and entered the apartment through an open front door, Newman said. Skyler emerged from a bedroom holding a revolver, the chief said.

The firefighters retreated out the door of the apartment, and Skyler ordered them to sit down, police said.

Police arrived minutes later and ordered the man to drop his weapon, Newman said.

Instead, Newman said the man opened fire, spraying five or six shots at the firefighters and police.

Newman told the News that police Cpl. Nancy Cawthon and Lester C. Hammond returned the fire.

Lt. Mel Southall, a supervisor of the department's crimes against persons section, said Skyler then slammed the door of the apartment and barricaded himself inside.

While police officers surrounded Skyler's apartment and evacuated nearby residents, the barricaded gunman called friends and local media, Newman told reporters.

The Faith Lutheran Church in Sugarland has tarps drapped over the front portion, to prevent further weather damage. The front of the church was ripped away when Hurricane Alicia passed through the area. The church congregation will continue to meet at a nearby Catholic church.

Hurricane disaster contributes to Lutheran church's faith

SUGAR LAND (AP) — The Faith Lutheran Church was split apart by Hurricane Alicia, but the lives and homes of every parishoner were spared.

The eye of Alicia passed over the church southeast of Houston on Thursday, and 50 miles in every direction the powerful storm left its mark.

Winds ripped a 30-foot section from the main building of the nine-year-old church with surgical precision. But it was not an experience that has created grief or despair, the minister, the Rev. Ken Sinclair, said.

"The building took it on the chin, but the people are doing great," Sinclair said Sunday.

"None of the parishioners experienced damage to their homes," he said. "The Lord has been good to us and that is a good reason to rejoice together."

Within hours after the church was shattered — even while Alicia's rain continued to cascade over the storm-wrecked region — members of the church gathered to protect what was left.

They worked, their clothes drenched in a gathering gloom to string tarpaulins and plywood across the gaping wound in their church, said Emmett Daniel, who serves on the church's board of directors.

"The members were uplifted by it," he said. "God is going to turn this into something good for all of us."

Some people were even apologetic they couldn't help more, Sinclair said, while other churches "rallied around and offered support and help and prayer and several offered their sanctuary."

Fatalities from hurricane reported

By The Associated Press

Here is a list of fatalities from Hurricane Alicia and its aftermath:

1. Elisa Lopez Flores, 71, of Houston, was killed early Thursday when a tree crashed through the roof of her house and struck her as she lay asleep in her bed.

2. Robin Norman, 21, of Highland, was killed Thursday when a tree fell on a car at her home in Highland.

3. Cynthia Gaye Bingham, 15, of Porter, was killed Thursday when a tree fell on her house.

4. Richard L. Furstenfeld, 54, of Conroe, was killed Thursday when a tree fell on his house.

5. Vien Van Le, 53, of the Beaumont area, was found in Seabrook and had apparently drowned in floodwaters Thursday. The body was found near the Pier Restaurant.

6. Billy Austin Hatcher, 26, of Roff, Okla., was killed when winds blew over a traffic sign on the LBJ Freeway in Dallas, striking his truck.

7. Christopher Michael Bowman, 10, of Dallas who was swept into a storm sewer by high waters Friday morning in northeast Dallas.

8. Kenneth Long, 22, of Houston, died when his truck smashed into a fallen tree Friday morning in the River Oaks section of Houston.

9-10. Michael Lopez, 17, and Sergio Rodriguez, 20, both of Houston, pulled Friday from Huntington Bayou, where they disappeared on Thursday while swimming.

11-12. Alfred Gilliam Jr., 19, and Lolita Gilliam, 19, both of Houston, died in a house fire early Saturday that apparently started from candles they were using for light.

13. Tommy Lee Campbell, 62, died in a blaze caused by a candle burning in a plastic cup in his blacked-out home near Rosharon.

14-15. Two out-of-state shrimpers, believed to have drowned after falling out of their boat in high winds and thought to have been dead two to three days, pulled Saturday from Braes Bayou near Brady Island in the Houston Ship Channel.

16. Hung Van Le, 20, of the Beaumont area, whose body was found in a sunken boat in 15 to 20 feet of water near Clear Lake.

The National Weather Service forecasts showers for Tuesday from the central and northern Rockies into the northern and central Plains and from the upper Mississippi Valley to the mid-Atlantic and northeast coastal areas.

No promise for rain in Permian Basin

Partly cloudy skies early this evening, expected to clear off tonight, hold no promise of rain for the Permian Basin.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, skies will turn partly cloudy again Tuesday but rainfall recorded for the month will probably stick to .43 of an inch with the yearly amount remaining at 2.79 inches.

Temperatures are expected to drop near 70 tonight with a high Tuesday reaching near 100.

Tonight's southerly winds at 5-10 mph should increase to 10-20 mph Tuesday.

Sunday's high of 101 missed the record high of 102, set in 1964, by only one degree. The overnight low of 71 was 19 degrees warmer than 1947's record low of 52 degrees.

Widow doesn't fear returning home

Corazon Aquino

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) — The tearful widow of slain Philippine opposition leader Benigno S. Aquino says she will return to her homeland Tuesday with her five children with hopes her husband's death "will not have been in vain."

"He did not want to compromise," said Corazon C. Aquino of her husband, who was shot fatally Sunday as he stepped from an airplane in Manila. "He could have easily gotten out of jail. His belief was that his country should have a free press and democracy."

Aquino returned to the Philippines after three years of self-exile in the United States to lead opposition to President Ferdinand E. Marcos' violent rule.

His widow said Sunday she does not fear returning to her homeland.

"I feel that God in his own way will take care of me and my children — and my husband's death will not be in vain," Mrs. Aquino said. "You always think of risks. But I never thought it would go this far."

Mrs. Aquino sat straight and calm but wept occasionally and left the room once when overcome by tears.

"My husband wanted to return home," she said. "He wanted to ask President Marcos to return the country to the democracy we knew before his martial law. As I go home, I just pray that the good Lord will continue to watch over me and my children."

Marcos, who opposed his political rival's return, had warned of assassination plots against Aquino. Aquino was jailed for more than seven years after Marcos imposed martial law in September 1972.

Benigno S. Aquino III, 20, said people will someday know who wanted his father killed.

"Eventually, the truth will come out," he said. "My father was fond of saying, 'There's no such thing as a secret in Manila.'"

Aquino's son said he learned about the shooting while watching television news.

"It didn't really register," he recalled. "It was kind of confusing."

Then a Japanese reporter called and confirmed the death. By Sunday morning, family and friends were packing for the trip back to the Aquinos' suburban Manila house. Mrs. Aquino said she and her son and daughters, Maria Elena, Aurura Corazon, Kristina and Victoria, had planned to return anyway. The children range in age 12 to 27.

"My husband's main objective to going was that he wanted to talk to President Marcos to restore the democratic process," Mrs. Aquino said. "And he felt since it is only Marcos who has the authority to call for elections, he felt by presenting his thoughts and beliefs, by reconciling and forgetting the past that both the opposition and Marcos could work for the benefit of his country."

As friends paid their respects, the slain leader's son said. "My father said if he was going to die, he wanted to die in his homeland...No matter what happens, justice will be served."

"We have spent a happy three years here," Mrs. Aquino said of her stay in the United States, "in sharp contrast to the years my husband spent in prison."

Aquino came to the United States in May 1980 to undergo heart surgery and has been on fellowships at Harvard University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Amelia Leiss, assistant director of MIT's Center for International Studies said Aquino had just completed a year of study on the role of the military in developing countries.

"He knew the risks he was running," Miss Leiss said. "He thought they were worth taking. He felt he could be a rallying point for the democratic forces in the country. He was a deeply patriotic man."

Bullet ends Marcos, Aquino struggle

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Former Sen. Benigno S. Aquino Jr., slain by an assassin as he returned from exile in the United States, was considered the splintered opposition's best hope to defeat President Ferdinand E. Marcos' authoritarian government.

The bullet that struck the 50-year-old Aquino in the head as he left a plane at Manila's airport ended a bitter power struggle that began more than 10 years ago.

Aquina lost the first phase of the battle in 1972 when Marcos proclaimed martial law and threw him in jail, blocking his chance of running in the 1973 presidential election.

He won a minor victory when Marcos set him free in May 1980 to undergo heart surgery in the United States — with the condition he return to prison after the operation. Instead, he remained in America for three years, with fellowships at Harvard University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Born Nov. 27, 1932, into a prominent political family, Aquino married Corzona Cojuangco, whose parents were among the wealthiest sugar-plantation owners.

He was employed by the Manila Times, then the largest English-language newspaper in Southeast Asia, and at the age of 17 was sent to cover the Korean War. Marcos closed the Times in 1972 with the imposition of martial law.

When he was 22, Aquino was elected mayor of his hometown of Concepcion in Tarlac province north of Manila and became provincial governor in 1961.

He was elected to the Senate at the age of 35.

Aquino was secretary-general of the Liberal Party and the main contender for its nomination for president in 1973. The party had won a major victory in the 1971 senatorial elections and appeared to be headed for another sweep in 1973.

In 1971, Marcos accused Aquino of subversion, murder and illegal possession of firearms and he was jailed. In November 1977 he was convicted by a special military court and sentenced to death.

Aquino, denying the charges, had dared Marcos to try him before a civilian court, but the challenge was not accepted.

While in prison his lawyers filed repeated petitions to stop the trial by the military court, but each time the Marcos-appointed Supreme court ruled against him.

After 31 months in jail and at the age of 42, Aquino was down from his chubby 200 pounds to 121 pounds following a 40-day hunger strike he began on April 5, 1975.

He had dismissed his lawyers and decided to boycott the proceedings, but the military forced him to attend each of the tribunal's sessions.

Near death on the 31st day of his fast, Aquino was taken to a military hospital where he resisted attempts by doctors to feed him intravenously. He was persuaded to end the hunger strike by relatives and Cardinal Jaime L. Sin, the Roman Catholic archbishop of Manila.

Marcos, following a wave of protests against Aquino's death sentence, ordered the trial reopened, but the process begged down as Aquino filed more petitions with the Supreme Court. Government lawyers said the original conviction and death sentence remained in effect.

In 1978 while in jail, Aquino announced his candidacy for a seat in the Interim National Assembly created under the amended constitution. He lost to Marcos' wife, Imelda, and claimed the election was a fraud.

In December 1979, Marcos granted his arch political enemy a one-week "furlough" from jail to spend Christmas with his family at his suburban Manila home. Marcos extended the vacation by two weeks amid talk that an amnesty was imminent, but the negotiations fell through and Aquino was taken back to jail.

There he stayed until May 1980 when doctors detected his heart ailment amd Marcos gave Aquino a pass to travel to the United States.

Again, an amnesty appeared probable but a series of terrorists bombings occurred in Manila in August 1980 and Marcos accused Aquino of masterminding them. Aquino denied the allegation.

Angry charges followed, with Marcos saying Aquino broke his promise to return to the Philippines and Aquino replying that a "pact with the devil is no pact at all."

On June 7, Aquino announced he would return to his homeland, but government officials refused to renew his passport.

Marcos, said by government officials to be in seclusion to write a book, has not appeared in public for several days, renewing rumors he is seriously ill. Those rumors have been denied, and the government said he has seen a number of officials.

He has made no comment on the assassination since Sunday's printed statement of condolence and warning against trouble.

A power blackout hit Manila and much of the main Philippines island of Luzon one day after Aquino's killing, further fueling rumors, not only about Marcos' health but about possible reimposition of martial law.

Power began going back on in the afternoon in some areas and officials said the blackout was caused by the tripping of a major transmission line that caused a chain reaction in several power plants.

Manila remained calm. Marcos' Malacanang palace, however, resembled a military garrison as troops with rifles and machine-guns guarded the area. Firetrucks were parked nearby and on one palace lawn was an armored personnel carrier.

A mortician assisting in the autopsy confirmed an earlier government report that Aquino was killed by a single bullet fired at close range after he left the airplane. The bullet entered below the left ear and exited through the chin.

The airport was crowded with thousands of Aquino supporters. All reporters except those aboard the flight from Taipei with Aquino and a few regular airport photographers were kept out of view of the plane.

The U.S. State Department called the killing "a cowardly and despicable act and spokesman Robert Williams said, "The U.S. government trusts that the Philippines will swiftly and vigorously track down the perpetrators of this political assassination and bring them to justice..."

In Santa Barbara, Calif., White House spokesman Larry Speakes said he did not think the killing would affect President Reagan's plans to visit the Philippines in November. Asked whether government troops were involved in the assassination, Speakes said, "We cannot make that kind of assessment."

But the New York Times reported today a senior Reagan administration official in Washington said if Marcos' government was found to have been implicated in the killing, it could have a very serious effect on U.S-Philippine relations, including possible cancellation of Reagan's trip.

Aquino was jailed in 1972 and in 1977 was sentenced to death after being found guilty of subversion and the murder of a village political leader. Aquino denied the charges. The death sentence was pending Supreme Court review.

Marcos called the assassination a "heinous and outrageous crime" but stressed he had warned Aquino not to return because political foes bearing old grudges were going to kill him.

Aquino put on a bullet proof vest shortly before leaving the plane.

Former Sen. Lorenzo Tanada, 85, expressed skepticism about the results of the promised official probe and wondered if an independent investigation was possible.

"I don't know what they (government) have in mind," he said. "It is very hard to tell, knowing what has happened before with investigations that they conducted."

The police chief said soldiers were escorting Aquino from the plane to arrest him when the gunman appeared and shot him. A man police identified as the attacker was immediately gunned down by security forces and his body lay on the airport tarmac for more than five hours.

The scene inside the store was "beyond belief," said Sgt. Gae Luchowski, one of the officers who discovered the bodies after being summoned by a customer who found the front of the store unattended. "You can't describe something that gruesome."

All of the victims were probably killed between 11 and 11:45 a.m., Saturday Tezak said. Weiler said he was in his driveway from 9 a.m. to 11:30 a.m., but heard no disturbance and saw no activity except for a loud noise like a slamming car door at 9 a.m.

"It makes you wonder a lot more about what, where, who and when," he said. "And if you're next."

The victims were identified as store owner Marilyn Baers, 45, of Joliet and three customers: Mrs. Ryan; her daughter-in-law, Pamela M. Ryan, 29, both of Joliet; and Barbara J. Dunbar, 39, of rural Mokena.

The series of killings began June 25, when two elderly sisters were beaten and stabbed at a Joliet Township home which was then set afire.

On July 2, a housewife and a businessman were shot to death in their car in adjoining Cook County.

On July 16, seven people were shot, five fatally, in Homer Township, seven miles from the Cook County deaths and near Joliet Township.

On July 17, a man was shot to death on an expressway in the area and his fiancee was kidnapped, raped, stabbed and left for dead. She told police of two gunmen.

AT&T, unions reach tentative agreement

The CWA represents 525,000 AT&T employees and the other two unions claim more than 150,000 people.

The strikers will remain on the picket lines until some 100 local collective bargaining agreements, which must be included in the national accord, are concluded across the country. Watts and the leaders of the electrical workers and telecommunications unions said they were confident there would be no setbacks in the local bargaining.

Watts said the CWA's members are poised to return to work at 12:01 a.m. EDT Thursday. Members of the other unions also will return to work later in the week when the local bargaining is finished. All strikers would work while awaiting ballots to cast votes in the formal ratification process.

Rex Reed, vice president for labor relations at AT&T, described the accord as a "balanced settlement and one really that serves all parties quite well."

Watts said the settlement, which would provide AT&T employees with $3 billion worth of wage increases and improved benefits over the next three years, "contains very substantial improvements" over an earlier offer that had been rejected by his union's bargaining committee.

Watts said he would not be surprised if telephone rates rise substantially "because of the process that's under way of reorganization of the Bell System, of divestiture, the whole introduction of competition..."

But he insisted that any rate increases should not be blamed on the unions, which struck AT&T on Aug. 7.

"I am suggesting that during the life of this contract, the rate of productivity in our industry is likely to go up 21 percent, and a 21 percent increase in productivity would more than pay for any little $3 billion increase that we got out of it," he said.

Reed said that "I can't answer specifically with regard to phone rates going up, but certainly I would say that wage increases do impact on (telephone) rates...I would fully hope that our productivity in the future would continue to hold down rates."

In enticing the union leaders to accept the proposed pact, the AT&T relented on a host of major issues.

Asked how the unions managed to obtain major contract improvements, Watts said that "...while it is true that the average local telephone call does not seem to be adversely affected, a great many things that must go on daily in the running of the business are adversely affected when 700,000 people are away from the job.

Morton Bahr, head of the CWA's District 1 in New York and New Jersey, said that when management "realized that we weren't going to give up something we had fought 30 years to gain..., then things started to fall in place."

Glenn turning Iowa caucuses into two-way battle

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — The accolades go on and on for the methodical campaign that Democratic presidential front-runner Walter F. Mondale has assembled in Iowa, the solid ties with party leaders, the superior organization, his own relentless travels around the state.

But there's another side to the consensus forming among Mondale's friends and foes. With six months to go before the Iowa precinct caucuses — the first step in selection of delegates to the 1984 Democratic National Convention — Ohio Sen. John Glenn is turning what looked like a one-man show into a two-way fight.

"Mondale has an incredibly strong base here," says John Law, an organizer running California Sen. Alan Cranston's presidential campaign.

"There is no activist in this state who has not met Fritz Mondale. He is our third senator. He's good to us. He helps us," adds Roxanne Conlin, a former gubernatorial candidate who is in Glenn's camp.

"The other campaigns are struggling, financially and otherwise," adds Pete Slone, who is running Mondale's Iowa effort.

But the only public opinion poll in the state shows a tightening race. And if the former vice president's advantages are huge, so are his risks.

"He's got to win here," says Ed Campbell, the former state party chairman and a strong backer of the former vice president.

And given the expectations being raised, there are politicians who say even a narrow victory in Iowa could tarnish Mondale's campaign.

A public opinion poll published July 10 by the Des Moines Register found Mondale with a substantial lead over Glenn among Democrats, 45 percent to 30 percent. But a similar survey taken in March gave Mondale a bigger lead of 55 percent to 17 percent over the former astronaut.

Glenn has recruited two well-known Democrats to help him, Ms. Conlin and Lt. Gov. Robert Anderson and has made several campaign trips to the state. "We're competitive," says Joe Grandmaison, Glenn's national political director.

While the Ohio Democrat has picked up his share of endorsements, Mondale has backing from many more long-time party stalwarts.

By most accounts, Mondale and Glenn have left the other contenders far behind.

Campaign aides agree with the newspaper poll that Cranston and Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado are in a struggle for third place, trailed by former Gov. Reubin Askew of Florida and Sen. Ernest Hollings of South Carolina.

"There's no denying that we lost momentum," says Hart aide Sharane Darlington, struggling to revive what once seemed like a promising campaign.

Firemen seriously wounded by gunman

DALLAS (AP) — Two firefighters were seriously wounded by a gunman who exchanged fire with police and then barricaded himself inside an apartment until officers drove him out more than four hours later with tear gas, authorities said.

Police said the man confronted the firefighters with a pistol when they answered a fire call at his southeast Dallas apartment Sunday morning and opened fire when police, who arrived minutes later, ordered him to drop the revolver.

Larry Lynn Skyler, 27, a city truck driver, was charged Sunday night with four counts of attempted capital murder and ordered held on $500,000 bond, said City Magistrate Tom Boardman.

Firefighters Rick Brewer, 21, and Jerry Morris, 31, were listed in serious condition at Baylor University Medical Center, said hospital spokeswoman Melissa Long. She said Brewer was shot in the chest and Morris was wounded by a bullet that traveled from his abdomen to his leg.

Police officials said they did not know why the man opened fire. But the Dallas Morning News, in a copyright story, reported the man had been arrested earlier in the month on a misdemeanor charge and quoted a neighbor as saying the man had a great fear of police since his arrest.

Marilyn Gibson, who lives in an apartment above Skyler's, told the newspaper that she and her husband, David, heard a fire alarm go off in Skyler's apartment about 10:20 a.m. Mrs. Gibson said her husband looked out the window and saw Skyler, who was armed with a gun. The Gibsons notified police and fire dispatchers.

Chief Bill Newman of the Police Department's special operations division said four firefighters arrived at the apartments several minutes before police units. Residents of the apartments directed three of the firefighters to Skyler's first-floor apartment in the 208-unit complex.

The firefighters smelled what they later described as smoke from an electrical fire and entered the apartment through an open front door, Newman said. Skyler emerged from a bedroom holding a revolver, the chief said.

The firefighters retreated out the door of the apartment, and Skyler ordered them to sit down, police said.

Police arrived minutes later and ordered the man to drop his weapon, Newman said.

Instead, Newman said the man opened fire, spraying five or six shots at the firefighters and police.

Newman told the News that police Cpl. Nancy Cawthon and Lester C. Hammond returned the fire.

Lt. Mel Southall, a supervisor of the department's crimes against persons section, said Skyler then slammed the door of the apartment and barricaded himself inside.

While police officers surrounded Skyler's apartment and evacuated nearby residents, the barricaded gunman called friends and local media, Newman told reporters.

The Faith Lutheran Church in Sugarland has tarps drapped over the front portion, to prevent further weather damage. The front of the church was ripped away when Hurricane Alicia passed through the area. The church congregation will continue to meet at a nearby Catholic church.

Hurricane disaster contributes to Lutheran church's faith

SUGAR LAND (AP) — The Faith Lutheran Church was split apart by Hurricane Alicia, but the lives and homes of every parishoner were spared.

The eye of Alicia passed over the church southeast of Houston on Thursday, and 50 miles in every direction the powerful storm left its mark.

Winds ripped a 30-foot section from the main building of the nine-year-old church with surgical precision. But it was not an experience that has created grief or despair, the minister, the Rev. Ken Sinclair, said.

"The building took it on the chin, but the people are doing great," Sinclair said Sunday.

"None of the parishioners experienced damage to their homes," he said. "The Lord has been good to us and that is a good reason to rejoice together."

Within hours after the church was shattered — even while Alicia's rain continued to cascade over the storm-wrecked region — members of the church gathered to protect what was left.

They worked, their clothes drenched in a gathering gloom to string tarpaulins and plywood across the gaping wound in their church, said Emmett Daniel, who serves on the church's board of directors.

"The members were uplifted by it," he said. "God is going to turn this into something good for all of us."

Some people were even apologetic they couldn't help more, Sinclair said, while other churches "rallied around and offered support and help and prayer and several offered their sanctuary."

Fatalities from hurricane reported

By The Associated Press

Here is a list of fatalities from Hurricane Alicia and its aftermath:

1. Elisa Lopez Flores, 71, of Houston, was killed early Thursday when a tree crashed through the roof of her house and struck her as she lay asleep in her bed.

2. Robin Norman, 21, of Highland, was killed Thursday when a tree fell on a car at her home in Highland.

3. Cynthia Gaye Bingham, 15, of Porter, was killed Thursday when a tree fell on her house.

4. Richard L. Furstenfeld, 54, of Conroe, was killed Thursday when a tree fell on his house.

5. Vien Van Le, 53, of the Beaumont area, was found in Seabrook and had apparently drowned in floodwaters Thursday. The body was found near the Pier Restaurant.

6. Billy Austin Hatcher, 26, of Roff, Okla., was killed when winds blew over a traffic sign on the LBJ Freeway in Dallas, striking his truck.

7. Christopher Michael Bowman, 10, of Dallas who was swept into a storm sewer by high waters Friday morning in northeast Dallas.

8. Kenneth Long, 22, of Houston, died when his truck smashed into a fallen tree Friday morning in the River Oaks section of Houston.

9-10. Michael Lopez, 17, and Sergio Rodriguez, 20, both of Houston, pulled Friday from Huntington Bayou, where they disappeared on Thursday while swimming.

11-12. Alfred Gilliam Jr., 19, and Lolita Gilliam, 19, both of Houston, died in a house fire early Saturday that apparently started from candles they were using for light.

13. Tommy Lee Campbell, 62, died in a blaze caused by a candle burning in a plastic cup in his blacked-out home near Rosharon.

14-15. Two out-of-state shrimpers, believed to have drowned after falling out of their boat in high winds and thought to have been dead two to three days, pulled Saturday from Braes Bayou near Brady Island in the Houston Ship Channel.

16. Hung Van Le, 20, of the Beaumont area, whose body was found in a sunken boat in 15 to 20 feet of water near Clear Lake.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Tuesday, August 23, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: This was the birthdate of American naval hero Oliver Perry, "Spoon River Anthology" author Edgar Lee Masters and "Nancy" cartoonist Ernie Bushmiller. Also sharing your birthday: actresses Vera Miles and Barbara Eden, sportscaster Sonny Jurgensen and tennis' Nancy Gunther. You get an unexpected opportunity when you admit what you really want from life. The financial picture brightens. Focus on a child's needs. Those who have been married for some time find that their love has matured. You learn an important lesson while teaching others. Do not let romance grow stale. Willpower helps you keep your figure. Singles find great fulfillment.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The law of averages favors you today. Look at your financial options again. Listen to a friend's advice. He/she has had more experience than you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Preparation pays off. Settle disputes by refusing to get into personalities. The right equipment can increase productivity. Be daring when it comes to the new technology! Watch what you sign.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Appearances are important. Quit playing follow-the-leader. The changes won now will become permanent. Go out of your way to win the support of others in your field.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your relatives can be convinced to help if they are made fully aware of your objectives. You gain strength from a parental figure. Travel enhances romance while boosting sales.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Resistance disappears when you make the facts known. Your romantic plans are thwarted. Do not despair. You have learned a valuable lesson.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Luck smiles on those who update old ideas. Go shopping, but do not buy luxury items. This is not a good time for legal negotiations. Postpone signing agreements.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Do not let your friends decide how you invest your money. Postpone signing deals and contracts. Someone means well but could be too impulsive. Examine shopping merchandise carefully.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You pursue new interests that can be highly profitable. A special gift means more than cash. Younger person begins to play a major role in romance. Look forward to setting a date!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Display more patience when dealing with children. You tend to receive more than you give. Forego penny-pinching. Friends who say "yes" may really want to say "no."

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Admit the truth and you save yourself a lot of embarrassment. You benefit financially when you share your knowledge. Deals finalized now can be very lucrative.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Do favors for an older person. Home improvement projects will have beneficial results. Handle someone influential with kid gloves. He/she agrees with your ideas.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A good day for desk work. Rely on your powers of persuasion to put over a big deal. Travel is part of your game plan. Give tax matters more attention.

Station plays only Beatles

HOUSTON (AP) — Radio station KYST-AM played the Beatles' first big American hit, "I Wanna Hold Your Hand," at 6 a.m. May 9.

Since then, KYST has broadcast only records featuring John, Paul, George and Ringo, in becoming the nation's lone all-Beatles station.

Cat Simon, the station's operations manager, says the idea was born of desperation. Faced with 39 competing stations in a declining AM market, the small (5,000-watt) KYST was left with almost no audience.

"We felt that in order to stand out, we had to do something different," Simon says. "Different, but something that would be a viable format. It would be silly to do something to get everybody's attention, and then drop it two weeks later."

Executives at KYST found radio consultant Todd Wallace's idea for "narrowcasting" attractive.

"We're not asking you to listen 24 hours a day," Simon says. "But if you ever want to hear the Beatles, you'll know exactly where to come.

"If you'll listen to us three or four times a day for two or three songs, you'll get your Beatles fix, and we'll get stronger ratings," he adds.

So far, the plan seems to have worked. Birch Radio, a ratings service, reports an increase in the station's audience by mid-summer, and Roy Henderson, the station manager, says his own research found "in excess of 300 percent" more listeners since the switch.

Nostalgia for the Beatles and their music is a powerful draw, the station has discovered.

"A lot of people remember what they were doing the first time they heard this Beatles song or that Beatles song," Simon says. "Because they are emotionally attached to the music, they are emotionally attached to the radio station."

In addition to the music, KYST also profits from surviving Beatle-mania with a number of 30-second features which Wallace, who is from Phoenix, incorporated in the format he devised.

One chronicles the history of the group. Another parcels out Beatles trivia (guitar wizard Eric Clapton, not George Harrison, played the lead on "While My Guitar Gently Weeps"). Yet another is a collection of tapes from Beatles concerts all over the world.

Wallace says he came up with the idea for an all-Beatles station in 1976 while looking at a list of 500 songs that members of a survey group named as their favorite "oldies."

"About 200 were Beatles songs," he says. "It began to kick into my mind, 'My gosh, that's a format unto itself.'"

1 ♡	1 ♠	4 ♡	?

What action do you take?

A. — If you elected to double four hearts, you are in good company — a number of Souths elected to do so in the World Open Pairs Championship, only to find that the contract was unbeatable. Those who bid four spades achieved an excellent result — down one with game cold in the other direction.

Q.2 — Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AJ8 ♡AQ842 ◇AQ1082 ♣Q
Partner opens the bidding with three diamonds. What action do you take?

A. — Partner has promised six tricks with diamonds as trumps. You can expect to bring him three or four tricks, but your diamond void might mean that partner has to lose more trump tricks than he thought. We salute you if you curbed your bidding instincts and chose to pass.

Q.3 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK108 ♡A7 ◇8754 ♣764
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
3 ◇	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A. — You might have a slam, but investigation could prove awkward if you were to make any raise in diamonds, even a jump. It is more convenient to make an advance cue-bid of the ace of hearts now, since you can raise diamonds at your next turn. Bid three hearts.

Q.4 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠875 ◇KJ108753 ♣954
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♠	2 ♡	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A. — We agree that three diamonds will probably play better than two hearts. However, unless you are playing a system that allows partner to pass such action, you cannot afford to bid — partner will bid again and you are in bigger trouble. Pass and wait to see what happens. If partner gets doubled, you can then run if you see fit.

Q.5 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q983 ♡J732 ◇Q753 ♣6
Partner opens the bidding with one club. What action do you take?

A. — Although you are a point short of the requirement for a response, you dislike partner's suit so much and are so prepared to play in any other spot that we would hazard a response of one diamond. Naturally, you intend passing at your next turn unless partner makes a forcing rebid.

Q.6 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠4 ♡Q983 ◇J73 ♣Q7632
Partner opens the bidding with one spade. What do you respond?

A. — There is a temptation to keep the bidding open with one no trump in the hope that partner can introduce a second suit, as in Question 4. However, partner might take some violent action in spades or even pass one no trump, neither of which would appeal to you. Pass.

Lawyers' secrets

There was an outburst of righteous anger in some quarters recently when the American Bar Association adopted a new rule on the confidentiality of the lawyer-client relationship. The outrage was unjustified, we believe.

Watergate delivered a deep insult to the public image of lawyers. A president, himself a lawyer, called on the services of a number of other lawyers to conduct a secret conspiracy in the White House to obstruct the administration of justice, and they almost got away with it.

But, in the end, the president and his men were all discovered. They paid the penalty. The system worked. The more reason to beware of overreaction to change the system in the wake of Watergate.

Crooked lawyers have been and always will be a problem for the bar and the courts. There are already well-established ways to discipline them, not always working as promptly and as certainly as would be desirable but still effective.

The great majority of lawyers are honest, and they need the privilege of confidentiality if they are to do their job. They must have their clients' trust and confidence. They must have the privilege to refuse to answer questions about their private conversations, just as do doctors and pastors and news reporters.

It was proposed by some state bars that lawyers would not have to keep any client's guilty secret, if a lawyer knew of an ongoing fraud, for example. That would have been unworkable.

The ABA adopted a rule that requires attorneys to blow the police whistle whenever they have good reason to believe a crime of violence is about to be committed by their client. The rule makes clear that no lawyer can knowingly connive, as White House lawyers did, in the commission of a crime and must resign if he feels his advice is being used to commit a continuing fraud. But it neither requires nor permits lawyers to go to the authorities whenever they think their clients may intend to pursue a criminal course not involving "imminent death or substantial bodily harm."

That ethical compromise is reasonable and reassuring.

Another View:

Neighbors huddle

President Reagan's recent journey to La Paz to discuss Central America with Mexican President Miguel de la Madrid underlines the administration's commitment to cooperative solutions to the conflict in that embattled region.

Although the results of the summit involving an important neighbor with broad and deep ties to the United States can't be considered a victory for American policies, neither do they constitute a setback.

The administration's critics immediately harped on differences between the two leaders over U.S. policies aimed at giving democracy a chance in El Salvador against the threat of Marxists with outside help from the communists.

But it would have been unrealistic to expect a sudden change by Mexico, which has supported the Marxist Sandinista regime in Nicaragua and refused to take a stand opposed to guerrillas fighting the U.S.-backed, democratically elected government in El Salvador.

President Reagan said, "We agreed on a great many things." Secretary of State George Shultz said the two presidents were in accord on the principles of freedom, development, democracy, and non-intervention in Central America.

Within that consensus, differences seem sharp. But it was preferable for Mr. Reagan and other U.S. leaders to be frank in asserting this country's position than to try to gloss over points of dispute in order to present a false front of harmony.

De la Madrid has publicly criticized deployment of U.S. warships for naval maneuvers off the coast of Nicaragua, and suggested that "shows of force" threaten "to touch off a conflagration" in Central America.

Shultz accurately observed that "the problem in Central America is not the show of force, but the use of force ... primarily coming from Nicaragua, originating in Cuba, with Soviet support, designed to disrupt and intervene in neighboring countries, most principally El Salvador.

Mexico's leader referred to chronic inequality and social injustice as the real problems deserving attention in Central America. Surely he realizes that U.S. aid to those fighting the leftists is only the tip of the iceberg of U.S.-funded economic and social development programs in the region.

And de la Madrid asserted, "no nation can impose its own image on others." If it was intended for the United States, which has backed elections and democracy in El Salvador, it should be redirected to the Sandinistas and their Cuban and Soviet helpers.

As President Reagan said, the people of Central America "should be able to determine their own solutions." De la Madrid must be aware that repression, not self-determination, has been the communist stamp on regions in which they gain a foothold.

Hopefully, in Central American exchanges between the U.S. and Mexican presidents which had both frank and conciliatory aspects, at least a few seeds were planted toward what Mr. Reagan called that "beautiful" time when all foreign elements may be safely withdrawn.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Abscam still confusing case

WASHINGTON — New evidence keeps bubbling to the surface of the ABSCAM cesspool, and Justice Department officials keep trying to submerge it.

Jack Anderson

The story needs to be told from the beginning: It started in 1978 with the employment of Mel Weinberg, a convicted con man, to lure some sleazy politicians into an FBI net. While he was on the FBI payroll, he continued his misbegotten ways and engaged in chicaneries of unbelievable magnitude and pettiness.

The FBI agents who were supposed to control Weinberg were drawn into his machinations. They found it expedient to cover up for him. Then the FBI covered up for its agents, and the Justice Department laid a web of concealment over the whole ABSCAM operation.

But two federal prosecutors assigned to the case, Edward Plaza and Robert Weir, refused to join in the cover-up. They reported to their superiors in 1980 that Weinberg was out of FBI control, that he had perjured himself before grand juries and that he may even have siphoned off some of the bribe money intended for ABSCAM targets.

By this time, the unhappy superiors had ventured so far out on a limb with Weinberg that they couldn't saw it off without risking their own careers. So instead of cracking down on the incorrigible Weinberg, they retaliated against the two whistleblowers.

I publicized what had happened to Plaza and Weir, who were then summoned before a House Judiciary subcommittee in June 1982. They not only repeated their allegations under oath, but Plaza challenged Congress to cite him for perjury if he had lied.

The Justice Department's internal ethics unit, the Office of Professional Responsibility, conducted its own independent investigation. The conclusion was that Plaza and Weir were right and had been unjustly harassed.

Later the chief of the ethics unit, Michael Shaheen, was questioned by House investigators. A staff summary, reviewed by my associate Indy Badhwar, reports what Shaheen told them:

— After the two prosecutors complained of Weinberg's criminal misconduct, Deputy Attorney General Charles Renfrew fired off a blunt memo to the ethics unit. The memo made "an absolute and categorical finding of misconduct" against the whistleblowers and asked the unit to recommend punishment.

— But Shaheen "characterized the Renfrew memo as 'alarmingly weak' and found his conclusions 'unacceptable.'" Never before had the ethics unit "received such a complaint coupled with an absolute finding of guilt," said Shaheen. He refused to be intimidated by the deputy attorney general, rejected Renfrew's preconceived finding and went ahead with an objective investigation.

— Meanwhile, still another superior, Irvin Nathan, then deputy assistant attorney general, "authored his own memo (attacking the two prosecutors) and sent copies to the courts and defense attorneys. Almost simultaneously the Nathan memo was leaked to the press." Plaza and Weir were subjected to "a barrage of press calls concerning the Nathan memo they had never seen and knew nothing about."

— Shaheen characterized the Nathan memo as "libelous and slanderous" in its attacks on the two whistleblowers and "not an accurate analysis." Shaheen concluded it was "our finding that Plaza and Weir were not guilty of any improper conduct."

— Shaheen concluded that the Justice Department's position was a "twisted analysis," adding tersely: "Plaza and Weir obviously felt they had been given the shaft and we agree with them."

— The problem, Shaheen told House investigators, was that the Justice Department "had consistently failed to see to it that persons without a conflict of interest investigated complaint about FBI and (Justice) misconduct during ABSCAM."

This is not the end of the cover-up. The Justice Department refused to release the Shaheen report to the House Judiciary subcommittee, though it has been commissioned by Congress to investigate the department's handling of the ABSCAM case.

Then a reference to the briefing that Shaheen gave House investigators, summarized above, was mysteriously deleted from the public record. Subcommittee chairman Don Edwards, D-Calif., explained that the briefing was confidential and that an agreement had been made with the Justice Department not to make it public. He blamed a former subcommittee staff member.

The former staffer, Michael Tucevich, said he had never given the Justice Department any promise of confidentiality. When confronted, Edwards changed his story and said he had agreed to the confidential arrangement himself.

Then the Judiciary Committee's chief counsel, Alan Parker, told subcommittee members that he was responsible for the agreement and deletion. This is all the more disturbing since Parker, as the Justice Department's chief legislative liaison during ABSCAM, participated in the cover-up.

Increasingly, the ABSCAM case is becoming a baffling source of mystery and dismay.

Footnote: Parker did not return calls requesting his comment. Edwards said that Parker played no role in the subcommittee ABSCAM investigation.

INSIDE REPORT:

Political pressures can backfire

WASHINGTON — Sen. John Glenn's unreported telephone call to Defense Minister Moshe Arens in Jerusalem last week was an effort to keep Israel out of the 1984 presidential campaign and end anti-Glenn moves by Israel and some of its American friends.

Rowland Evans

Glenn failed to get from Arens what was wanted and needed as an antidote to the Aug. 9 story by New York Post reporter George Arzt. In his widely-read column "Inside City Hall," reporter Arzt indirectly quoted Arens as having confided to a select political audience in Gracie Mansion Aug. 2 that as president, Glenn would try to get Israel off the West Bank and other captured Arab lands.

Robert Novak

Intervention from abroad is not unique in presidential elections, but it is risky. That is particularly true when it takes the form of pressure from behind closed doors, as reported by the Post, against a candidate stating a conviction widely held in the U.S.

Glenn's immediate reaction — to call Arens and set him straight on Glenn's pro-Israel voting record — was unsubtle but characteristic of the Marine hero. Agreeing that astronaut Glenn was a strong friend of Israel, Arens told him he had never expressed reservations about him. He promised he would issue a denial of the Post story and confirm Glenn's esteem for Israel.

But when it came, Arens' denial simply said the story was "groundless." Arens, whose influence in the American Jewish community is profound, ignored Glenn's pro-Israel voting record, thus buttressing the Post's revelations and emphasizing Glenn's vulnerability.

The vulnerability revealed itself in a frank interview Glenn gave to Jewish World, the influential Long Island weekly, published on June 24. Dredging up old statements by Glenn on the Middle East and trying to tie him to the Palestine Liberation Organization after telling him he had a "rather negative perception ... in the Jewish community," the paper's reporters triggered an angry response from Glenn:

"You're continually trying to put words in my mouth, which I don't like, quite frankly .... I did not say that .... Don't put words in my mouth. That's not fair. I resent that." Defending the consistent line of his Mideast policy, Glenn stuck to his position that the U.S. should open up "contacts" with the PLO to move it away from "terrorism." He pleaded for the right of American politicians, and particularly presidential candidates, to discuss "the contentious issues" without fear.

"If we're afraid to mention even what the problems are and I'm so scared of getting criticized ... that's not leadership," Glenn said.

Neither front-running Walter F. Mondale nor Sen. Alan Cranston has Glenn's vulnerability with the American Jewish community, whose political pull derives from high voter turnout, skill in selling a point of view and ability to make campaign contributions.

If Arens worries that President Glenn will pressure Israel to withdraw from the West Bank, President Mondale's skirts would be cleaner — in Israel. Addressing a United Jewish Appeal fund-raiser in Los Angeles last winter, he compared an Israeli pullout from captured Arab lands to "an American president coming back and saying 'I got peace with the Russians and all I had to give up was everything west of the Mississippi.'"

Cranston is also viewed as loyal to Israel. His new fund-raising letter, targeted on Jewish contributors, says that President Cranston would "lay to rest the myth of a 'balanced' U.S. policy in the Middle East." He would tell the Arabs that Saudi Arabia's "holy war" and the "extremism" of Syria, Iraq and others have no more claim on a "balanced" U.S. policy than "martial law in Poland, apartheid in South Africa or torture in Chile and Argentina and El Salvador."

Courtship of ethnic voters is no phenomenon. Ronald Reagan has been gushing about his deep affection for Hispanic voters and the Democrats will soon do the same.

But those from beyond U.S. borders may exceed a tolerance level when, as the Israeli defense minister has discovered, political pressures against a presidential candidate are exposed. That could spell backlash.

CHARLEY REESE

Gromyko still selling used cars

I have just read the entire text of a major foreign policy address by Andrei Gromyko, the Soviet foreign minister, and you will be happy to know that you have nothing to worry about — the Soviet government, according to Gromyko, is about the nicest, most benign government in the history of the world.

Charley Reese

The Soviets are all against war, nuclear weapons, chemical and biological warfare and interference in other people's affairs. That's what Gromyko said.

The government you really have to worry about, according to Gromyko, is the United States which is a war-mongering, treacherous, lying, imperialistic mad dog. We started the Cold War, we refused to disarm, we interfere in other people's affairs and we refuse to bring peace and plenty to the people of the world.

You may think that is such an obvious load of fertilizer that nobody would believe it, but if you think that, you are wrong. Plenty of Americans believe it and not just those who are paid by the Soviet Union or compelled by their Communist ideology to believe it. The naive in America are legion.

The biggest myth in the late 20th century is that the Soviet Union is a normal government which, while it may have differences with other countries, can be treated in the same way as any other. This is a myth that will probably get a lot of people killed.

The Soviet government is a criminal government, just as criminal as the Nazis. It has murdered more people, gobbled up more countries and is impelled by an ideology every bit as repellent and crazy as that which impelled the Nazis.

The only truthful statement Gromyko made was that the Soviet government adheres to Marxist-Leninism. What that ideology teaches is a world view in which capitalism and Communism are locked in a death struggle in which only one can survive. It teaches that whatever advances their side of the war is moral and whatever impedes it is immoral.

This is what turns the language of Communism upside down. Lech Walesa, who wants a modicum of freedom for Poland, is immoral by definition. So is anyone who resists socialism. The Sandinistas who like to administer vest cuts to captured contras — that's cutting off a man's arms and legs and leaving him to bleed to death in the village square — are moral and the victim is immoral.

You are immoral. I am immoral. Our country and our government are immoral. We are, from the Soviet point of view, an implacable enemy to be destroyed.

Recognition that the Soviet Union is a criminal, barbaric government which has imposed by force and violence its rule on an empire of unwilling subjects would logically lead us to isolate it by cutting off trade and cultural and diplomatic contacts.

We lack the guts to do this. Vast corporate interests are more concerned about making money by doing business with the Kremlin than they are about long-term survival of human freedom. Others are frightened by the Soviet Union's military power and want to appease it just as a large segment of the British upper class wanted to appease Adolph Hitler.

You cannot look at the progress of the Soviet Union's advancement since 1945 without concluding that appeasement, which has been U.S. official policy since the late 1940s, will not work.

Now people want to turn over Central America. Hitler once observed that there was no excuse for anyone being surprised by what his intentions were. So have the Soviets. They mean it. The real choice is resistance or defeat.

The assemblage of tap dancers, sponsored by Macy's, was short of the record set in Australia in 1982 when 2,647 dancers danced in unison. Macy's was hoping to regain the record which it set in 1981 when 2,023 tap dancers gathered in New York City.

Official: Project to identify discriminatory laws 'sham'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Justice Department official says she publicly accused President Reagan of breaking a promise to revise federal laws that discriminate against women because "he doesn't deserve loyalty."

In an article published Sunday in The Washington Post, Barbara Honegger, said the project she heads to identify discriminatory federal laws is a "sham" because her reports have been ignored by the White House.

Reagan "reneged on his commitment" made in the 1980 campaign to revise federal laws that are discriminatory, Ms. Honegger wrote in the article, which was published in the newspaper's opinion section.

"Not a single law has been changed" even though the study group has sent three quarterly reports to the White House listing statutes that discriminate against women, Ms. Honegger wrote. Reagan pledged in 1980 to revise discriminatory laws as an alternative to the Equal Rights Amendment, which he opposes.

"He doesn't deserve loyalty because he has betrayed us (women)," Ms. Honegger, explaining her decision to publicly criticize Reagan, said in an interview published today by the Post.

"Part of what led me to do precisely what I did was to know that media attention would get them to fulfill their own promise," Ms. Honegger told the Post.

In the article, Ms. Honegger said an executive order setting up the study was interpreted by Assistant Attorney General William Bradford Reynolds "as requiring Justice to identify problems but not also to propose solutions."

Ms. Honegger said she heads the Attorney General's Gender Discrimination Agency Review. But Justice Department spokesman Tom DeCair said "she is not the project director of anything.

"This Gender Discrimination Agency Review — we have never heard of it. It doesn't exist," DeCair said. "She's not a policy-level official...It's a technical job."

But Ms. Honegger, 35, said her job description states that she "participates in the formulation of Civil Rights Division programs and policies concerning sex discrimination."

In the article, Ms. Honegger said the administration's Task Force on Legal Equity for Women, had the job of implementing changes in discriminatory laws. But that task force "has had nothing to do. The original chairman of the task force...has left the government, and the White House has not bothered to replace her," she wrote.

About a year ago, Ms. Honegger said an "angry" White House aide, whom she did not identify, complained that her computer search of discriminatory laws included statutes relating to pregnancy and abortion.

The aide "told me that abortion and pregnancy have nothing to do with women's rights and therefore were to have no part in the identification effort," Ms. Honegger wrote.

Ms. Honegger, who helped write the 1980 Republican platform section on women's rights, also criticized a project to identify discriminatory state laws.

AT&T workers may be back by Thursday

By The Associated Press

Although striking AT&T workers remained on the picket lines today, union leaders from across the country expressed hope that local issues could be resolved and workers back on the job by Thursday.

Operators and technicians idled for more than two weeks by the walkout greeted news of Sunday's tentative settlement with cheers, and harried managers filling in for them expressed relief the strike would soon be over.

"We should have an agreement by Wednesday night" at midnight, the deadline set in the national agreement, said Dominic Guadagni, vice president of Local 409 of the Communications Workers of America. The CWA represents 525,000 of the 675,000 workers on strike against American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

While CWA workers won't be back until their local contracts are settled, members of the two other striking unions, the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and the Telecommunications International Union, probably will be back on the job within 48 hours, union spokesmen said.

CWA workers at the Kansas City Council headquarters had planned to stage a morale-boosting rally Sunday night, but "now it will be a celebration," said Dennis White, president of Local 6327. "There will be some heavy-duty partying here tonight."

Mountain Bell workers at a rally in Denver began cheering when they got word that bargainers in Washington, D.C., had reached a settlement, said CWA staff representative Iris Walters. "I anticipate at midweek we'll be back if there are no problems reaching an agreement locally."

Hangups on local issues kept New York Telephone Co. workers on strike for seven months in a 72-day national walkout in 1971, but a repeat was unlikely this time, said Angel Feliciano, business agent for CWA Local 1101. "We still have a lot of local issues pending, but we anticipate reaching agreement by midnight Wednesday."

Management spokesmen also said they were pleased that workers would be back on the job. In Oklahoma, supervisors have been working 14-hour days to keep up with a flood of requests for new service by students returning to college, a Southwestern Bell spokesman said.

"I'm delighted," said Frank Just, spokesman for Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone in Baltimore.

"We'll be real glad to have our folks back," said John Ed Miller, district manager for South Central Bell in Nashville, Tenn.

Meanwhile, with local issues ranging from work schedules to holidays and seasonal layoffs remaining on the table, picketing continues.

"We're very pleased with the contract," said Thomas J. Perrins, vice president of CWA Local 2201 in Virginia. "But we won't go back in until they settle everything."

Rally for 'jobs, peace, freedom' beset with number of problems

WASHINGTON (AP) — Twenty years after the historic "march on Washington" capped by Martin Luther King's "I have a dream" speech, organizers of an anniversary march hope to draw almost as many people to a rally for "jobs, peace and freedom."

But organizers of Saturday's march and rally at the Lincoln Memorial have been beset by a number of problems, including opposition from a number of Jewish organizations and only lukewarm support from organized labor.

The rally is sponsored by a long list of leaders from labor, the women's movement, civil rights organizations, religious groups and several members of Congress. More than 715 groups have endorsed the march and plan to have groups present, say rally organizers.

March leaders have been working most of the summer to draw up position papers spelling out their goals in the areas of jobs, freedom and peace.

The Middle East paper has been redrafted several times, but a number of Jewish organizations have still withdrawn their support, including the American Jewish Committee, Jewish War Veterans, and Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith. They have complained that the rally may take a position critical of Israel.

In addition, the National Urban League has not endorsed the rally, arguing that organizers are trying to focus on too many issues.

The AFL-CIO is publicly supporting the march, but has put its resources instead into a celebration of Labor Day a week later.

Twenty years ago, on a hot Aug. 28, 1963, more than 200,000 people gathered along the lawn and under the trees near the Lincoln Memorial.

Divers hope to raise anchor from Monitor on Tuesday

HATTERAS, N.C. (AP) — Divers who reached the remains of the Civil War ironclad USS Monitor say they expect to raise the historic ship's four-pronged anchor on Tuesday.

The discovery of the ship Sunday night, delayed by a miscue from an electronic navigation system, made way for divers to begin work today to prepare for raising the anchor, a spokesman said.

"I anticipate there will be two dives, one in the morning and one in the afternoon," said Jack LaCovey of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, which is cosponsoring the expedition to retrieve the anchor and other artifacts. "We're expecting to raise anchor Tuesday."

The anchor, believed to be buried on the sea floor about 700 feet from the wreckage, would be the first major artifact raised from the site since a lantern was retrieved in 1977.

The search for the Monitor was hampered by a change in LORAN, a ground-based radio system by which ships can get exact bearings within about 10 feet, LaCovey said.

"There were apparently some changes in the LORAN system that threw them off," LaCovey said, explaining that the divers accidentally descended to another wreck in the area. "What they thought was the target was not."

A charter boat captain familiar with the area assisted the divers in locating the vessel, the Greensboro Daily News reported. The newspaper said the lost day will cost $8,000 — the price of keeping the 120-foot research vessel Johnson afloat.

Divers plan Tuesday to use a cutting torch to remove a 10-foot section of the chain connecting the anchor. A winch and crane aboard the Johnson will lift the anchor to the surface.

The divers, who went down to 230 feet in a four-person submarine in the first dive of the expedition on Sunday, are to make photographs and videotapes, said Dina Hill of mission co-sponsor East Carolina University.

The expedition, which ends Thursday, is aimed at the eventual recovery of the Monitor's gun turret and prevention of further deterioration of the vessel. Divers planned to remove core samples from the ocean bottom and dig in an area near the turret.

The Monitor, which sank in a storm in December 1862, is upside down on the sea floor.

Two planes forced to make safe unscheduled landings

By The Associated Press

Two New York-bound DC-10 jetliners loaded with passengers made unscheduled, but safe, landings just hours apart, one when a broken valve sapped the cabin of pressure and oxygen and the other when one of its three engines malfunctioned.

In one of the two incidents Sunday, American Airlines Flight 14, bound for New York's Kennedy Airport from San Francisco, was cruising over Iowa when the crew reported a loss of cabin pressure, said Robert Frederickson, the airline's area general manager.

The 252 passengers and 14 crew members wore oxygen masks until the landing at 2:50 p.m. CDT.

Although mechanics were unable to determine what had caused the aircraft to lose pressure, it took off again at 7 p.m., flying to New York at 10,000 feet so pressurization was not required, said Al Becker, another airline spokesman. Normal cruising altitude is 30,000 to 40,000 feet.

Becker said the landing was normal, but a flight attendant was injured.

Texas firm studying disposal of hazardous wastes at dump

VICKERY, Ohio (AP) — A Texas firm is studying the deep-well injection system used at a hazardous waste dump near here to determine whether the disposal method is safe.

Underground Resource Management Inc. of Austin is being paid an estimated $65,000 for the study by Waste Management Inc., the parent firm of Ohio Liquid Disposal.

The study was ordered by the Ohio Environmental Protection Agency after allegations that Ohio Liquid Disposal was improperly handling wastes shipped to the site.

Liquid hazardous wastes are pumped into wells nearly 3,000 feet in the ground. The company said the wells empty into a layer of sandstone known as the Mount Simon formation, which is porous and acts as a sponge to trap the wastes.

Boston neighborhood goes dark

BOSTON (AP) — A 20-block area of the city's Back Bay neighborhood was plunged into darkness for nine hours when a 20-inch water main ruptured, flooding manholes and threatening to cause fire and explosion, officials said today.

The break was first spotted as a small leak about 4 p.m. Sunday. Four hours later a six-foot hole appeared in Boylston Street, filled with muddy water. Within a few hours more the hole had grown to a 30-foot-wide pool.

Boston Edison officials, complying with a fire department request, shut down power to about 5,500 commercial and residential customers when flooded manholes threatened fire and explosions, according to Caroline Tyler, a power company spokeswoman.

Power was restored to about 17 blocks of the affected 20-block area by 5:06 a.m., said Mike Monahan, a spokesman for Boston Edison.

Quints progressing 'beautifully'

NEPTUNE, N.J. (AP) — A hospital spokeswoman said a set of newborn quintuplets are progressing "beautifully" and their mother has been able to hold one of the babies for the first time.

"It was really nice. It made it seem so real," said the mother, Jennifer Joyce, 27, of Sea Girt. She and her husband Jerry had been trying for years to have children and she was on fertility drugs.

Three of the infants have started feeding through small tubes inserted through their mouths into their stomachs. The others receive nutrition intravenously. The underweight quints, born six to eight weeks premature Thursday, remained in critical but stable condition today, said a Jersey Shore Medical Center spokeswoman.

Christian, Druse militias exhange fire

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Christian and Druse militiamen entrenched in the hills overlooking Beirut exchanged artillery and rocket fire for seven hours with shells hitting the northern and eastern flanks of the capital. The commander of the Italian contingent of the multinational peacekeeping force said he was slightly wounded.

Police said at least four Lebanese civilians were killed and 19 wounded elsewhere around Beirut and in the Central Mountains before a new ceasefire halted the battle.

Gen. Franco Angioni, commander of the 2,100 Italian troops in the four-nation multinational force, said he was slightly wounded when four Soviet-made Grad rockets exploded near his jeep as he was inspecting his troop positions on the southern outskirts of the city after the fighting started.

U.S. Middle East envoy Robert C. McFarlane held a one-hour meeting with Prime Minister Shafik Wazzan, but made no statement to reporters about what the two men discussed or what was said during his weekend meeting with Egyptian leaders in Cairo.

Wazzan told reporters the talks dealt with the impending partial Israeli withdrawal from the Central Mountains and plans to send the Lebanese army there "in a way that will satisfy and reassure all parties concerned." He did not elaborate.

The new round of fighting broke out at 2:05 a.m. and flared without letup into midmorning, jeopardizing government efforts to bring about a Christian-Druse reconciliation before the Israeli army pulls back from the mountains.

Shells and rockets fell on several Christian neighborhoods on the northern and eastern flanks of Beirut and hospitals issued urgent appeals for blood donations. Both warring militias accused each other of shooting first.

Radio stations of the rightist Christian Phalange Party charged Syrian army positions in the upper Metn Mountains joined their Druse allies in shelling east Beirut's Christian neighborhoods of Sin El-Fil, Doura, Bourj Hammoud and Mekalles. The claim could not be independently verified.

Police closed all northern and eastern entrances of Beirut to traffic during the exchanges.

A U.S. Marine spokesman, Warrant Officer Charles Rowe, said the fighting flared east of the Marine base at Beirut International Airport and no rounds landed near Marine positions.

Residents of this house in Mar Takla near the Lebanese Defense Ministry in Beirut weep as they survey the damage to their house from Saturday night's shelling by leftist Druse militia.

Druse gunners shelled the airport two weeks ago and two Marines were slightly injured.

Israel, which signed a troop withdrawal agreement with Lebanon in May, plans to pull back its forces soon from the turbulent mountains of the Aley and Chouf to a new front line along the Awali River in southern Lebanon.

Druse leaders are demanding that all rightist Christian militiamen who moved into the Aley and Chouf regions after Israel's invasion last year withdraw and close down all their barracks in the area before they allowing the army to move in.

On Sunday, Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak urged Israel to withdraw completely from Lebanon and said he was confident Syria would then remove its troops. Israel says it will withdraw its estimated 28,000 troops simultaneously with Syria's 50,000 fighters.

Workers threaten strike in Gdansk

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Shipyard workers in the Baltic port of Gdansk have threatened a work slowdown, and the authorities have intensified a media campaign to discredit Lech Walesa, calling the founder of the outlawed Solidarity labor union "the millionaire from Gdansk."

A secret committee of shipyard workers circulated a leaflet on Aug. 12-14 demanding that the government open negotiatios with Walesa by today or face a work slowdown. The government has refused to negotiate.

The top leader of the Solidarity underground, Zbigniew Bujak of Warsaw, has endorsed the Gdansk call, urging nationwide support for the workers' protest.

Military authorities in Gdansk put security forces on alert and restricted public gatherings.

The mood was calm in the Baltic port, where Solidarity was born after a wave of strikes in August 1980. Walesa went fishing Sunday, and Western reporters in Gdansk said there were no disturbances.

Task force leader to assume Chad post

N'DJAMENA, Chad (AP) — Brig. Gen. Jean Poli, the newly named commander of the French task force in embattled Chad, left Paris today to assume his post following completion of the planned 3,000-man French military lineup there with the arrival of eight combat planes.

Four Jaguars and four Mirage F-1s joined the task force headquarters in N'Djamena on Sunday, accompanied by a KC-135 refueling plane. Other French combat planes were standing by in Bouar.

Gen. Poli, 54, one of the French army's most experienced paratroop commanders, has spent almost all his military career in Africa, including time in Chad.

Military sources said the French deterrent force — the largest French show of force in Africa since the end of the Algerian war in 1962 — was now almost fully installed in its planned positions to deter any further advance by Libyan-backed rebel forces in Chad.

The French force includes some 2,000 marine paratroopers and members of the foreign legion, deployed in strongpoints along the nine-day-old tacit truce line.

Anti-Sandinista rebels hit from north, south

By The Associated Press

Anti-Sandinista rebels pressed attacks from the north and south in Nicaragua, while U.S. Navy ships maneuvered off Central America's coasts. U.S. special envoy Richard Stone prepared for a possible second meeting with El Salvador's guerrilla leaders.

Defense Ministry spokesman Roberto Sanchez said heavy fighting continued Sunday between Nicaraguan troops and Honduras-based rebels in the northern Nicaraguan provinces of Jinotega and Zelaya Norte.

From the south, rebels based in Costa Rica, using speed boats along border rivers, have been mounting hit-and-run raids in southeastern Nicaragua, Sanchez said without providing details.

In the northern fighting, at least 24 rebels and 20 soldiers died, for a total of 204 guerrillas and 99 soldiers killed since a 2,000-man force from the Nicaraguan Democratic Front invaded Nicaragua on Aug. 3, according to Sanchez. It was the Front's third attempt this year to overthrow the leftist Sandinista government.

"In some places, there has been fighting for 24 hours at a stretch and in some places the fighting continues," Sanchez told reporters at a briefing in the Nicaraguan capital of Managua.

The reports could not be independently verified. Reporters need special government permits, which are not readily available, to go into combat zones.

The Front rebels, or "contras" whom President Reagan has referred to as "freedom fighters," include national guardsmen under former rightist President Anastasio Somoza, overthrown by the Sandinistas in July 1979.

Unlike the Front rebels, who have received $19 million in secret aid from the CIA, the smaller Nicaragua Democratic Alliance, active in the south, is not known to have received U.S. aid. It is led by former Sandinista revolutionary hero Eden Pastora and made up of disenchanted Sandinistas.

In El Salvador, rebels blew up a railroad bridge 46 miles southeast of the capital Saturday, but there was a lull in fighting Sunday. An estimated 43,000 people have been killed since the civil war started in October 1979.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger has said the situation is "going very much better" for government forces since the United States started training Salvadoran troops two years ago. A contingent of 55 American noncombat military advisers are stationed in that country. Weinberger is planning to visit El Salvador, Panama and Honduras Sept. 6-8.

In Santa Barbara, Calif., Deputy White House spokesman Larry Speakes said Sunday that Stone will travel to Central America later this month for a hoped-for meeting with leaders of the Salvadoran leftist rebels.

Speakes made the statement in response to an announcement Saturday by rebel spokesman Francisco Altschul in Washington that Stone and the leaders would confer "sometime in the coming days" with an "open agenda" in Latin America. He would not specify the time or place.

Altschul also said leftist leaders would meet in the next few days with the Salvadoran government's National Peace Commission in an effort to establish groundwork for broader discussions. Stone first met with rebel leader Reuben Zamora in Bogota, Colombia, on July 31.

Counter-revolutionaries involved in assassinations

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. intelligence reported more than a year ago that Nicaraguan counter-revolutionaries had assassinated Nicaraguan government officials and a Cuban adviser, and labeled one of the insurgent groups a "terrorist" organization.

While the leftist government of Nicaragua has made the assassination charges in the past, a Defense Intelligence Agency report is the first public evidence that U.S. officials were aware of such activity.

The DIA's four-page report, dated July 16, 1982 and classified "secret," was distributed to reporters by John Kelly, editor of "CounterSpy," a magazine sharply critical of CIA activities. The report's authenticity was confirmed independently by two government sources familiar with the original document.

The DIA report does not mention the Central Intelligence Agency's now widely acknowledged support for some of the groups. Nor does it allege any U.S. role in the assassinations.

CIA spokesman Dale Peterson refused to discuss the report, but added: "We would not be involved in any activity in which assassination was contemplated or discussed." DIA officials declined comment.

Presidential executive orders dating back to the mid-1970s have forbidden U.S. intelligence agencies from engaging in assassinations. The latest order, signed by President Reagan on Dec. 4, 1981, states: "No person employed by or acting on behalf of the United States government shall engage in, or conspire to engage in, assassination."

Reagan administration officials have defended arming the "contras" — or counter-revolutionaries — as a way to stop weapons smuggling from Nicaragua to leftist guerrillas in El Salvador and pressure the Nicaraguan government, which the president claims is allying itself with Cuba and the Soviet Union.

The DIA report said that from March 14 to June 21, 1982, the contras launched about 85 attacks, including sabotage of highway bridges, sniper fire against small military patrols, burning of a customs warehouse, and destruction of crops.

It said contra actions also included "attacks by small guerrilla bands on individual Sandinista soldiers."

KIKKOMAN INTRODUCES LITE SOY SAUCE

Are you thinking more about your health and the amount of salt that's added to your food? You're not alone. People all across the country are now, more than ever before, eating foods that are lower in calories, cholesterol, sugar and salt.

Kikkoman International, aware of this growing concern about health, is introducing a new soy sauce this month. Kikkoman Lite has 43 percent less salt than naturally brewed Kikkoman Soy Sauce and over 50 percent less salt than the other leading brands.

According to Elaine Beatson, Kikkoman's assistant manager of consumer services and home economics, "Kikkoman Lite was developed for health-conscious consumers who are now choosing more and more to cut down their total sodium and salt intake. We've carefully extracted 43 percent of the salt but made sure that the rich fragrance and flavor of our soy sauce was maintained in the Lite," she added.

"Few people realize that it takes six months to make a single drop of brewed soy sauce," Elaine continued. Unlike other soy sauces that are blends of hydrolized vegetable protein, corn syrup and caramel coloring, we use a natural fermentation process that combines soybeans, wheat, salt and water. It's this natural brewing process that gives Kikkoman soy sauces their basic taste characteristics of sweetness, tartness and saltiness. Natural brewing also produces its rich, reddish brown color and aromatic qualities," she concluded.

Cooking with brewed soy sauce isn't limited to Oriental dishes any more. As an all-purpose seasoning, brewed soy sauce is an excellent flavor enhancer for meats, poultry and fish. It also adds interest to many other recipes including vegetables, sauces, snack dips, salad dressings, soups and stews.

So, if you're concerned about the amount of salt in your diet, substitute Kikkoman Lite Soy Sauce in any recipe that calls for Kikkoman Soy Sauce and be assured of perfect results.

Carner rallies for win

SHAKER HEIGHTS, Ohio (AP) — As Ayako Okamoto was applying tremendous pressure with a hole-in-one followed by two birdies on the front nine, veteran JoAnne Carner convinced herself there were still plenty of birdies to be had.

The mental peptalk helped Carner pick up five strokes on Okamoto during the final nine holes as she registered a two-stroke victory Sunday in the Chevrolet World Championship of Women's Golf.

"I knew I played the backside far better than the front side," Carner said. "It goes back to my match-play days. If somebody was hot on the front, I knew I could catch her on the back."

Carner, 44, the defending champion, collected three birdies to go with one bogey on the final nine holes, finishing with a 3-under-par 69 for a 72-hole total of 6-under-par 282 on the 6,225-yard Shaker Heights Country Club course.

Okamoto, Japan's leading woman golfer and the runnerup to Carner last year, bogeyed four of the first six holes on the backside and closed with a 70 for a 4-under-par 284.

"Ayako was just so hot, it was hard to believe she could lose it," Carner said. "I think that comes maybe from having too much of a lead. You can lose your concentration."

Okamoto, 32, needed only 12 putts on the front nine, where she turned in a 5-under-par 30. She then putted 19 times on the final nine holes for a 40. Carner shot 34-35.

Okamoto said she actually considered the hole-in-one on the par-3, 154-yard second hole a bad omen, because she recorded an ace under nearly identical conditions during a major Japanese tournament in 1981, eventually losing to Jan Stephenson.

Nine straight for Bannister

Texas Rangers

ARLINGTON (AP) — Another strong pitching performance by Floyd Bannister and a massive homer by Carlton Fisk have combined to keep the Chicago White Sox on their sizzling pace in the American League West.

Bannister struck out nine, walked two and gave up only five hits in 6 2-3 innings Sunday night, working out of two early jams, in a 3-1 victory over Texas.

The triumph was the ninth straight for Bannister, who was only 3-9 at the All-Star break, and put Chicago 14 games over .500 in the Western Division, where every other team has lost more than it has won.

Fisk's towering two-run homer in the fifth inning erased a 1-0 Texas lead and made Bannister, 12-9, the winner. The drive, above the walkway in the left field stands, was Fisk's 20th homer of the season — the first time he's circled the bases that many times since 1978.

"He got all of that ball," White Sox Manager Tony LaRussa said. "I'd like to see that ball hit in our ball park with the wind behind it. That's a roofer, no doubt."

Texas starter John Butcher, 4-4, said he knew as soon as he released the fast ball that he'd made a mistake. Butcher, who threw a 1-hitter his last outing and had a string of 15 scoreless innings going, said he wanted to keep the pitch low against Fisk. He didn't.

"When the ball left my hand, I knew it wasn't going to be down. I could only hope he would pop it up. He did — about 500 feet," the righthander said.

Butcher gave up one of his two walks, to Rudy Law, just ahead of Fisk's homer, and it was all Bannister needed. The White Sox added an insurance run on Bucky Dent's throwing error an inning later.

Salome Barojas struck out two and gave up one hit over the final 2 1-3 innings for Chicago to get his 12th save.

The Rangers got three of their hits in the second inning. Larry Parrish, Bill Stein and Dave Hostetler hit successive singles at the top of the inning to give Butcher a 1-0 lead.

After striking out Billy Sample, Bannister threw a wild pitch that put Stein on third and Hostetler on second with only one out, but the lefthander struck out Jim Sundberg and got Bucky Dent on a ground ball to end the threat.

Bannister walked Wayne Tolleson and Buddy Bell in the third inning, but second baseman Julio Cruz snuck in behind Tolleson, setting up a successful pickoff, and Bannister then got George Wright on a ground out and Parrish on a strikeout to end the inning.

Fisk, who also singled, said he had been pressing over the past week, trying to get the 20th homer.

"It's kind of special to get that 20th home run. It puts you in kind of special category, and I hadn't hit that many in a while. I hit that ball as good as I could hit it," he said.

Chicago now is 28-17 for the last half of the season, and Sunday's win was its sixth in seven games on the current road trip. The White Sox remained eight games ahead of Kansas City, where they play a three-game series beginning tonight.

"I hope it (the streak) carries over to Kansas City," Fisk said.

Gary hears boo birds

Dallas Cowboys

DALLAS (AP) — Gary Hogeboom's bid to take away Danny White's No. 1 quarterback job took a decided turn for the worse Saturday night.

White, the Cowboy's starting quarterback, turned in a precision passing performance in the first half of a 24-7 National Football League preseason loss to Pittsburgh. But Hogeboom fared poorly.

Hogeboom threw two interceptions and was roundly booed by some of the same fans who had cheered him ony two weeks ago when he threw one touchdown and completed several passes to set up another in the final seconds of a 20-17 victory over Miami.

"I'm still ready to start at quarterback and working to get the job and I am looking forward to next week. I think I learned a lot tonight. I tried to do somethings that just didn't work out," said an undaunted Hogeboom.

"I felt really good about it," White said of his performance.

White completed 11 of 14 passes for 124 yards, but the quarterbacking star of the game was Pittsburgh's Cliff Stoudt, heir apparent to Terry Bradshaw until the veteran Steeler quarterback's injured arm heals.

Stoudt, who has played in only 14 regular season games in six years and started only one, passed for a touchdown and ran for two more.

He apparently will be in the Steeler lineup at the start of this regular season because Bradshaw, who had off-season surgery, is still on the inactive list.

"We have a lot of confidence in Cliff and there's no way now Bradshaw could be ready (by the opener) if he came back," said Steeler coach Chuck Noll.

Noll went all the way with Stoudt although he had considered inserting backup quarterback Mark Malone into the fray.

"I thought Cliff had a good game in all respects," said Noll. "I was particularly pleased with the way he directed the running game. We had planned to play him only about three quarters, but then we decided to let him go all the way so that he would become the winning pitcher."

White flipped a 13-yard scoring pass to tight end Doug Cosbie in the first quarter to give Dallas a 7-0 lead before a rash of turnovers, including two fumbles by running back Tony Dorsett and Hogeboom's two interceptions, spelled doom for Dallas.

"Danny looked sharp with the first unit," said Landry. "Gary was in a situation that was just almost impossible with all the second teamers in there. He didn't have much of a chance."

Landry said the turnovers killed Dallas' chances but added, "We didn't do anything."

The Cowboys were coming off a Monday night game in which they had looked most impressive by whipping Los Angeles 30-7.

Stoudt completed an eight-yard scoring pass to Greg Hawthorne, ran six yards for one score and sneaked a yard for another.

"(Jack) Lambert called me a glory hog when I ran it in for the last touchdown," Stoudt said. "But it was just there. I don't care about stats. We came here to win and we did."

Pittsburgh upped its record to 3-1, while Dallas dropped to 2-1 in the exhibition season.

Carey shatters oldest record

Pan Am Games

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — Four times in 15 days, Rick Carey did what other world-class swimmers couldn't do once in the past seven years.

John's Naber's 100-meter backstroke world record of 55.49 seconds, set during the 1976 Olympics, was the oldest on the books until Aug. 6. On that day, Carey, a 20-year-old from Mount Kisco, N.Y., started an assault that culminated Sunday at the IX Pan American Games.

On Aug. 6, at the U.S. Swimming championships, Carey swam a 55.44 in the preliminaries for a world record and lowered it to 55.38 in the final. He went 55.93 in Sunday's prelims and then broke the world mark again, shattering the 56-second barrier for the fourth time with a clocking of 55.19 in the final.

"No one else active has broken 56 seconds and now I'm approaching 55 seconds," Carey said. "And if I can break that, I'll have a real advantage psychologically."

CAREY LED a five-race U.S. sweep in swimming Sunday, giving the Americans 21 gold medals in 24 events. Greg Louganis of Mission Viejo, Calif., won the 10-meter platform for his second diving victory and the fourth straight U.S. diving gold medal.

The United States now has an overwhelming medal lead, with 82 gold, 166 overall and a week to go in the games. Cuba follows with 53 golds and 108 overall, while Canada's standing is 11-68, Venezuela's 3-37 and Brazil's 2-26.

U.S. athletes had 127 gold medals and 264 overall in the 1979 Pan Ams, the most ever in ecah category.

BOXERS Louis Howard and Evander Holyfield moved into he semifinals with easy victories, and the United States ended Canada's unbeaten streak in women's basketball with an 87-79 victory, behind Lynette Woodard's 18 points.

The U.S. baseball team remained unbeaten and won the first game of its final round-robin when Ben Abner hit a two-run homer with two outs in the eighth inning that gave the Americans a 4-3 victory over Panama.

Cuba dominated Greco-Roman wrestling, and U.S. shooters wound up a virtually spotless tournament.

Carey, who also is the world record-holder in the 200 backstroke, is the second world-record setter in Pan Am swimming in 1983. On Wednesday, Steve Lundquist lowered his own 100 breaststroke mark.

The closest challenger to Carey Sunday was Dave Bottom of Danville, Calif., in 56.90. The bronze medal went to Mike West of Canada in 57.20.

Carey, who also won the 200 backstroke here, joined Tracy Caulkins and Tiffany Cohen in earning their second individual gold medals. Carrie Steinseifer swam the freestyle leg on the Americans' winning 400 medley relay for her third overall gold medal.

CAULKINS, of Nashville, Tenn., won the women's 200 individual medley, topping the field in 2 minutes, 16.22 seconds. The winner of an unprecedented 47 national swimming titles, she also won the Pan Am 400 individual medley.

Cohen, of Mission Viejo, Calif., won the the women's 800 freestyle in a meet-record time 8:35.42. It was her second individual gold medal.

World record-holder Craig Beardsley of Harrington Park, N.J., smashed his own Pan Am record in the men's 200 butterfly, winning in 1:58.85, a whopping 1.64 seconds faster than his previous meet mark.

Steinseifer, of Saratoga, Calif., who won the women's 100 freestyle and swam a leg on the winning 400 freestyle relay, anchored the U.S. medley relay team to victory in a meet-record 4:12.99.

TED BATTLES

You'd think Telluride would be safe from 'letters'

You'd think Telluride would be the perfect refuge for one seeking to escape Letters to the Editor.

It's 700 or 800 miles from Midland, and I'll bet there isn't a home delivery within 100 miles of the place. It's tucked away so deep in the mountains, it takes 2½ hours to get there from a town not 10 miles away.

The Mrs. and I were toying with the salad like hungry bears in the Powder House on Colorado Street, an elegant Victorian style restaurant, which, as it turned out, really was a Chinese Laundry. A couple across the way shared the intimacy of the cozy room.

"I think that lady is scowling at me," I told my wife.

She said, "Nonsense."

As the other couple finished and got up to leave, the lady said, "You are from Midland, aren't you?" The way she said it made me feel like it would be better not to admit it. Her husband lit up triumphantly when we confessed to his, "You are the Battles, right?"

Jack Kirby's wife Pat came to the point in a hurry, "I was in Silverton yesterday and I didn't hear the whistle either."

SHE HAD read the infamous expose here a month ago about how the Mrs. unbelievably and inexcusably missed the 2 p.m. train from Silverton to Durango because, get this, "I didn't hear the whistle," a four-salvo salute 10 minutes before departure that makes you feel like you're trapped in an echo chamber as it reverberates off the amphitheater of mountains.

My "tell it like it is" piece was written to coincide to run on the day of a second departure for Colorado, so, frankly, the wife wouldn't see it. Timing is so important in sports writing.

But she did see it and was still upset by it. Mrs. Kirby's substantiating testimony wasn't the last heard on the subject. Back in Midland, at another restaurant, Gary Wisener, jumped me on sight. The former Baylor-Houston Oiler spouted such phrases as, "Her side of it. Equal time. The whole truth. Distortion of facts..." He sounded more like a lawyer than an ex-football player, which come to think of it...

The Mrs. contributed the old "I bumped into a door," alibi, but now was excusing herself with the "he left out the fact that my watch stopped." It had been considered and wisely dismissed as irrelevant and immaterial...and interferring with a good story.

Someone wanted to know why in the world any one would make a return trip to Colorado. It was, of course, because in June, I arrived too early to participate in the Kendall Mountain marathon, a sprint up a 3,800-foot mountain. On the second trip, I arrived too late for the Silverton run in which 167 started and one surrived, or was it only one failed to finish? At any rate, it's another illustration of the importance of timing in sports competition.

ONE OF the lures, this time, was the Cumbres & Toltec Scenic Railroad out of Chama, N.M. Of course, it couldn't be another Durango, but the curiosity had been aroused.

It, in fact, was equally spectacular in its own way. Whereas, the Durango wends its way through the canyons along the Animas River, the C&T climbs a four percent grade out of Chama to Cumbres Pass, 10,022-feet above sea level, in just 14 miles and over track that has more turns and switchbacks than a coiled rattlesnake. Heightening the uncertainty of it all are the passenger cars, converted box cars that squeak and sway as the engine strains up the mountain.

The view is more panoramic than that of Durango, puffing through pasture land where anglers and campers can be seen enjoying the winding streams. Among the hazards along the way are the livestock, which must be chased off the track by whistle or a hissing burst of steam.

At Osier, where the New Mexico Special meets the Colorado Limited from Antonito, passengers are served an outdoor meal, Mexican or 1880's style beef. The beef is probably a must since they've got to do something with the steers not fast enough to outrun the train.

AT A higher altitude, a wrap is necessary and storms can blow over the mountain unexpectedly. Part of the trip back was in a thundershower.

Chama is more accessible to the photographer than Durango, where so much rolling stock is in the process of being restored that the roundhouse area is a beehive of activity and tourists wandering the yards can not be tolerated. With one train a day out of Chama, nothing, if you ask, seems to be out of bounds.

All is not what it seems in Telluride

Telluride, missed on the first trip, has been a place I've been itching to visit for years, allegedly to check out the ski possibilities.

It may be a mining ghost town, but you'd never guess it to judge by the restoration activity on the old homes and the work being done on main (Colorado) street in the heart of town.

It's all part of an overall plan, now that the community has been declared a national historical site or monument. It turns out the private residences are being restored by individual owners. The work downtown is being undertaken by the city, er town, er ghosts?

THE YOUNG proprietor of a sporting goods store said, "I came here in 1967, bought a house for $2,000. I sold it for $8,000 a few years later. Now the guy I sold it to is asking $120,000. That city block over there," he said pointing across the street, "could have been bought for $5,000 10 years ago. Now you couldn't touch it for 50 times that."

Plans call for more lifts and more trails on the ski mountains that rise from the western edge of town. Right now there's a problem getting the wherewithall loan. The idea is to make Telluride another Aspen within the next decade or two.

Outside of town, I hiked up the mountain to get a shot of Bridal Veil Falls, its 481 foot drop the highest in Colorado, and discovered a maze of old mule trails used for bringing ore and supplies to and from the old mining camps high up in the mountains. Today they serve as hiking and jeep trails for exploring the high country.

Rain showers in Colorado, blamed on the "Arizona Monsoons", interferred with the full enjoyment of Telluride. Nothing, at 7 a.m. on a rainy morning, is open.

I found a place just up the alley from the Opera House. A peek inside and it turned out to be a western bar-restaurant. One table was occupied by a group of eight or 10 men who looked like they had just come out of the mountains and were waiting for the drinks to arrive and the party to start.

The Mrs., as usual, disagreed, "They looked more like ranchers and business men and highly respectable."

But in Telluride looks are deceptive. Like the Powder House, which once was a Chinese Laundry in the boom days, nothing is what it seems.

It was a bar-restaurant all right, in the basement of what once was a church. Apparently, it hasn't been able to shake its past. Before we finished our meal, the "miners" had finished their breakfast and were holding a prayer meeting.

Cubs make it 4-of-5 at Beaumont

By Associated Press

Midland's suddenly hot Cubs made it four-out-of-five in Beaumont by pushing over a 10th inning run to beat the Golden Gators, 3-2, in the Texas League Sunday night. At San Antonio, the Dodgers slugged El Paso, 16-11.

Midland, by virtue of its win, moved ahead of Beaumont in the TL standings.

Midland scored the winning run on a two-out single in the 10th by Trey Brooks. Tom Lombarski walked with two out, moved to second on a single by Mike Anicich and came home on Brooks' single.

Brooks had two hits in four trips to the plate.

Jim Gerlach, 4-4, was the winner. Bill Long, 2-4, took the loss for the Gators.

Stu Pederson knocked in three runs on four hits and R.J. Reynolds had four more RBIs on three hits as the San Antonio Dodgers won a rain-delayed Texas League slugfest with the El Paso Diablos 16-11.

The Dodgers, who had 19 hits, ripped seven doubles, including three by Pederson, in a game that lasted four hours.

San Antonio took the lead for good and broke an 8-8 tie in the sixth inning with three runs. Tom Byers doubled and scored on a sacrifice fly. Cecil Espy singled, and scored on Pederson's singled. Pederson scored on a Reynolds double.

Bill Max went three for four at the plate and drove in four runs to lead the Diablos.

Morris Madden, 5-5, got the win for San Antonio. Steve Parrott, 2-4, was the loser.

Strange wins Hartford

WETHERSFIELD, Conn. (AP) — It was a bold Curtis Strange who twice charged to the top of a pack of golfers vying for the lead in the $300,000 Sammy Davis Jr.-Greater Hartford Open.

But it was a conservative Curtis Strange who walked to the 18th tee in the final round of the tournament Sunday clutching a two-stroke lead over Jack Renner, the man he had overtaken for the lead.

Strange's second shot on the par-4 hole came to rest on the fringe of the putting surface about 35 feet from the cup. On the next shot he tried only to push the ball to within putting distance.

The ball stopped about five feet from the pin and Strange missed the short putt. It was the second time in two days he bogeyed the hole.

But by then it didn't matter.

Strange already had won the $54,000 first prize. Renner, his playing partner, parred the hole and finished a stroke behind.

"I played a very conservative chip and a very conservative putt," said the 28-year-old Strange, who won his first PGA tournament in three years. He didn't mention that he teed off on the 424-yard final hole with a one-iron.

"With a two-stroke lead, you just don't want to make the big mistake," said the six-year veteran, who posted a closing 68.

Renner made his mistake a hole earlier.

Down two strokes heading into the par-3 17th hole, he missed a four foot putt for a bogey. Had he made the putt, Renner may have forced a playoff for the championship. Strange would not have had the breathing room to play the 18th as conservatively as he did. Instead, Renner, with a final round 71, wound up tied with Jay Haas for second place at 269.

Strange's 16-under 268 was the highest winning score at the 6,579-yard Wethersfield Country Club course since 1974. In last year's GHO, Tim Norris broke three course records en route to a 25-under 259.

Renner and Haas, who came out of 13th place with a 6-under-per 65, each won $26,400. Don Pooley's 270 was good for fourth place and $14,000.

Until Sunday, Strange had run up a three-year string of 29 PGA tournaments in which he placed in the top-10 without winning.

Home run relinquishes center stage to bullpen

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

There was a time that the supreme thrill of a baseball game was the home run — regardless of the circumstances.

Oldsters treasure the memory of pot-bellied Babe Ruth running the bases with mincing steps on pipe-stem legs after his bat had formed a perfect parabola with a ball sailing over a distant fence.

Later fans thrilled to the home run artistry of Ted Williams and Joe DiMaggio, who turned swings into poetry; the machine-like power of Hank Aaron, the coiled spring of Stan Musial and the muscles seeming to bulge beneath Mickey Mantle's uniform when he went his knees to generate awesome power.

Now we are in another age.

The premier crowd-rousing, electric moment of games today is generated by a wild assortment of men who spend most of their careers in the bullpen waiting for a ring of the telephone.

They are baseball's late relievers, the savers, the intimidators. You might call them the one-man riot squad. They come in when the house is on fire, put out the conflagration in maybe 15 minutes or less and then go back to wait for another emergency call and a paycheck that brings them $1 million or more a year.

They're baseball's new aristocrats — the true super stars.

Our all-time favorite, now that Mad Hungarian Hal Hrabosky has gone into the business of haunting houses, is the New York Yankees' Goose Gossage.

As did Hrabosky, with his heavy beard and mustache looking like a fugitive from a Fu Manchu thriller, Goosage starts the fans' blood pumping the moment the Yankees reach the late innings in trouble and Billy Martin sends a signal to to bullpen: "Get the Goose going."

The crowd reacts immediately.

Then bedlam erupts when the hulking form of the man, 6-3 and 215 pounds, with a walrus mustache and sideburns down to his chin, strides to the mound — his massive shoulders stooped and an angry look on his face.

Then the Goose starts unleashing that rising, smoking fastball which often crosses the plate before the batter can get the stick off his shoulder. When he's right, he's awesome. When he's not right, he's merely intimating. Win, lose or draw, he always provides a thrill.

Almost all of the major league clubs have their own versions of Goose Gossage — in different guises and with varying techniques — but their purpose is the same:

"Drive the nail in the coffin — quick."

The lowly New York Mets have just turned up with their own extermination specialist but a young man who has little similarity to Gossage. He is 26-year-old Jesse Orosco, a slender 185-pounder who doesn't scare anybody by just looking at him.

But with his tricky slider, off-speed pitches and occasional fastball, he has moved up behind Atlanta's Steve Bedrosian in competition for the National League's Rolaids Relief Man Award. He has strung together 23 scoreless innings, won two consecutive Player of the Week awards and over 60 days has posted a 6-3 win record and nine saves with a 1.26 earned run average.

Bearded Bruce Sutter, exponent of the split forkball, is the demolition specialist of the world champion St. Louis Cardinals, and Tippy Martinez does for the Baltimore Orioles.

Kansas City's Dan Quisenberry and Pittsburgh's Kent Tekulve do the dirty work with deceptive deliveries that seem to rise right out of the ground. Batters shudder when Jeff Reardon comes in for Montreal.

Late relief pitching did not become such a respected science until the 1960s. There always have been fine relievers — Hoyt Wilhelm, Johnny Murphy, Elroy Face and Jim Konstanty, coming immediately to mind — but not until the present era did they earn super star status.

They are products of the "specialist age" — keys to club success, lavishly paid and pampered, beloved by the fans. Baseball's new darlings.

Wilander stuns John McEnroe

From wire reports

Martina Navratilova dominated Chris Evert Lloyd 6-4, 4-6, 6-1 to win the Player's Challenge at Toronto, her fourth win over Lloyd in four meetings this year. "I was surprised at how well she played... She played even better against me than she did at the Australian Open." Saturday, Lloyd claimed to be mentally stronger than Navratilova and said she would win if the match went three sets. But Lloyd recanted Sunday. "I think, probably, Martina got a little tougher in the third set...I had a bit of a letdown since the first couple of games went so quick."...

Mats Wilander upset John McEnroe 6-4, 6-3 to win the ATP championship. The 18-year-old Swede upset Ivan Lendl Saturday. "I can't play better tennis than I did today," Wilander said. McEnroe was a little surprised by Wilander, whose forte is clay courts, not the hard courts. "That's the best I've seen him play on this type of court. If this is an indication of things to come, he's going to be tough. He's only 19."...

Tennis

Ilie Nastase was fined $8,500 on Sunday and suspended from tournament play for 42 days following a dispute with a line judge in a tournament at Stowe, Vt. The punishment, if it stands, would keep Nastase from playing in the U.S. Open, which begins next week in New York, any other Volvo Grand Prix tournaments and Davis Cup matches.

The penalties stemmed from an incident Saturday during a doubles semifinal, which Nastase lost. Nastase had to be physically restrained after the match following a scuffle with a line judge. The incident allegedly included the use of obscene language. Earlier in the week, Ilie was fined $2,500 for abusive language and destroying his racket during an opening-round singles loss. Nastase asked Frank Hammond, the umpire, to overrule a line call on the other end of the court. Hammond refused and Nastase, in a fit of anger, broke his racket and demanded the point...

Cale Yarborough dominated the last 200 miles of Sunday's Champion Spark Plug 400, running off to an easy victory and completing a sweep of the two Grand National stock car races at Michigan International Speedway this season. Yarborough, who now has won eight of 26 starts on the two-mile, high-banked Michigan oval, stayed near the back of the lead pack in the early going, but ran to the front near the halfway point of the 400-mile race, averaging 147.511 mph to beat Darrell Waltrip by .86 seconds. Bobby Hillin, Midland, Texas, finished 25th...

Honeycutt blanks Phils

By Associated Press

Rick Honeycutt had never pitched in the National League and hadn't been at bat since college. So, naturally, he felt right at home throwing and swinging for the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Honeycutt was 14-8 with Texas before being dealt to the Dodgers on Friday. He made his LA debut Sunday in a 6-0 victory over Philadelphia, scattering four hits over seven innings before leaving with a slight cut on the left middle finger. Honeycutt struck out a season-high seven and retired the final 11 batters he faced.

He also singled in his first major-league at-bat and brought home a run with a squeeze bunt as the Dodgers registered their ninth victory without a loss this season over Philadelphia. Los Angeles has outscored the Phillies 34-7 in the nine games and shut them out five times.

"This ranks way up there in my career. I know one game doesn't make you but you have to start somewhere," said Honeycutt. "I've always been in a situation before where we've been out of it by now. But here, when you're definitely in a pennant race, these guys come to play every day. It tends to make you stronger."

Honeycutt, who can become a free agent at the end of the season, was not disturbed about switching leagues, though he was anxious to get started as a Dodger.

"I had a lot of butterflies. I was nervous," he admitted. "I tossed and turned a little last night. If I get back in the groove, I feel I'll do better here. I feel it's to my advantage. There's a lower strike zone and you're facing the pitcher every third inning or so.

Mike Marshall slammed a two-run homer for the Dodgers.

Braves 11, Cubs 9

While the East leader can't find an offense, the West pacesetters from Atlanta rediscovered theirs in Wrigley Field. The Braves had lost four in a row, scoring only six runs, but got 25 in their last three victories against the Cubs. DaleMurphy had a two-run single in a six-run first inning, homered in the fourth after the Cubs had climbed within a run, and singled to cap a two-run seventh.

Leon Durham, Mel Hall, Jody Davis and Thad Bosley homered for Chicago.

Cardinals 5, Astros 2

Host St. Louis won its fifth in a row as rookie Danny Cox outpitched Nolan Ryan for his first major-league victory. St. Louis, which had been having trouble on the mound, held Houston to six runs in a four-game sweep of the Astros. George Hendrick had four hits and knocked in two runs.

"You couldn't tell they were bad from what they did against us," Astros Manager Bob Lillis said of the Cards' pitchers. "Against us, they've been world-beaters all year."

Cox gave credit to Chase Riddle, his coach at Troy (Ala.) State and the same man who who signed Steve Carlton to his first pro contract in 1963.

"He put a lot into my head about pitching," said Cox."Mixing speeds, getting the hitters' timing off; that was the main thing. I've always been able to throw the ball hard."

National League

Reds 6, Pirates 4

The visiting Reds rallied for three eighth-inning runs with the help of a two-run error by second baseman Johnny Ray.

"I thought I had a play on the ball, but I knew it would be close," Ray said after misplaying the high hopper by Duane Walker. "It would have been a bang-bang play."

Mets 4, Giants 3

George Foster homered for the third straight game and Mike Torrez fired a five-hitter before needing ninth-inning relief help from Jesse Orosco as the Mets swept a three-game series with the Giants. Foster's ninth-inning homer tied the game Friday and he belted a grand slam Saturday.

By winning all three games, the Mets posted their first series sweep over the Giants since 1977 and their first sweep at Candlestick Park since May 1-3, 1972.

"We've played .500 ball (21-21) since the All-Star break and we're displaying some good, young talent out there," Foster said. "Something like this sweep has to be a confidence-builder."

Expos 3-2, Padres 0-5

At San Diego, Charlie Lea extended his personal winning streak to four games with a nine hitter in the first game. The shutout was the third of the year for Lea and his sixth complete game.

In the nightcap, Dave Gwosdz slammed his first major-league homer, a three-run shot, to lift San Diego to victory.

Bowie says next czar will have problems

NEW YORK (AP) — The next baseball commissioner will have his work cut out for him, according to the lame-duck commissioner.

"He will be told, for instance, that legalized gambling and baseball are perfectly compatible and that we can even turn a profit from the relationship," Bowie Kuhn said in an article written for Sunday's editions of the New York Times.

"He should tell the compromisers to get lost," Kuhn continued. "They are burglars of our patrimony. They will never understand the threat to baseball posed by such things as legalized gambling, sports betting, drug abuse and undesirable associations. He should use his power fearlessly to protect the integrity of the game. The critics will call him self-righteous and moralistic. Have courage. Ignore them."

Kuhn could not ignore the pressures placed upon baseball's top man.

Palmer not the same

By Associated Press

Jim Palmer seemed to be throwing all right, but he wasn't the old Jim Palmer. If you're looking for the old Jim Palmer, try the new Moose Haas.

Palmer, the 37-year-old Baltimore right-hander who has won 265 major-league games, returned from his latest visit to the disabled list and allowed four runs and 10 hits — including solo homers by Leon Roberts and Hal McRae — in 6 1-3 innings Sunday as the Orioles lost to the Kansas City Royals 8-3.

Palmer was gone when the game ended, but Manager Joe Altobelli said: "I don't think he was happy with it, but the big thing is how he comes out of it physically. I'm encouraged if he comes out of this without any pain or strain on his arm. If everything is OK, he'll probably work again in five or six days."

Meanwhile, Haas scattered five hits in six innings to tie a club record with his eighth consecutive victory as the Milwaukee Brewers downed the Oakland A's 7-1 and pulled within one percentage point of first-place Baltimore in the American League East.

"What Moose is doing is no accident," said catcher Ted Simmons. "I don't want to talk about the Cy Young Award, but right now it would take Dave Righetti or Dave Stieb for me to even consider trading him."

Winner Bud Black allowed seven hits and two runs in 7 1-3 innings, including a homer by Gary Roenicke. Royals relief ace Dan Quisenberry notched his 34th save despite a two-run homer by Eddie Murray in the eighth.

"I just stink," said Quisenberry, who blew a two-run ninth-inning lead Friday night."I'm not making major league pitches. I've thrown more high pitches this weekend than I have in a month."

...magic gone?

Brewers 7, A's 1

Cecil Cooper, the major-league RBI leader with 105 RBIs, drove in four with a pair of singles to back the seven-hit pitching of Haas — who hasn't lost since June 10 — and Jim Slaton. Haas' club record of 28 consecutive scoreless innings ended in the third on Mike Davis' RBI single, but Cooper's first two-run single put the Brewers ahead in their half of the third, ending Chris Codiroli's string of 24 scoreless innings. Cooper singled two more runs across in the fifth.

"Moose always had the hard stuff," Simmons said. "When you have a good fastball and a hard slider and can throw strikes, you're always good for five or six innings. But after that, unless you have something else, you're going to get beat. Now Moose is throwing off-speed stuff for strikes and he can consistently get the left-hander out on the outside corner."

Twins 4, Tigers 3

Ken Schrom and Ron Davis combined on a six-hitter forMinnesota. Schrom, 12-4, owns 23 percent of the Twins' 53 victories. Gary Ward's single, Kent Hrbek's triple and Gary Gaetti's sacrifice fly gave the Twins a 3-2 lead in the fifth and they scored what proved to be the winning run in the seventh on Randy Bush's bases-loaded grounder.

Blue Jays 7, Red Sox 3

Cliff Johnson hit a tie-breaking double in the eighth inning, one of six Toronto doubles, and pinch runner Willie Upshaw scored on Jesse Barfield's single. Toronto scored twice in the ninth on RBI singles by Lloyd Moseby and Rance Mulliniks. Jim Gott scattered seven hits, including Jim Rice's 27th homer, tying him with teammate Tony Armas for the AL lead.

Yankees 2, Angels 1

Ken Griffey's two-run single following a two-out, two-base error by Angels second baseman Bobby Grich in the ninth inning lifted the Yankees behind the four-hit pitching of Dave Righetti and Rich Gossage. Geoff Zahn was staked to a 1-0 lead in the ninth inning on Daryl Sconiers' triple and Doug DeCinces' single. But he walked Roy Smalley to start the bottom of the ninth and Willie Randolph's two-out bouncer skidded past Grich, setting the stage for Griffey.

Mariners 7, Indians 2

Mike Jeffcoat, making his major-league debut, blanked Seattle on two singles over the first six innings. But the Mariners scored five times against Jeffcoat, Dan Spillner and Tom Brennan in the seventh on singles by Al Cowens, Steve Henderson, Pat Putnam, Ricky Nelson and Rick Sweet, plus Spike Owen's RBI grounder and a single by Ron Roenicke.

Interest in housing high

By ARELO SEDERBERG
Hearst Feature Service

Housing, which has been in a virtual depression the past few years, has recovered sharply, but now may be plunging back into the doldrums.

Interest rates again are rising. FHA and VA rates are 13.5 percent. Private lenders are charging 14 percent or more for long-term money. That means the old problem of affordability is back — or perhaps it never left.

If you're a potential buyer with a roll of cash, you're in good shape. You can bid sharply under posted prices and probably get your way.

If you're a seller, however, you could be in trouble. You may have to take fire sale prices, especially if the property is re-financed with a new loan.

Building in June was up a blistering 92 percent from a year ago, an annual rate of 1.7 million units. But since then, it has edged down. And some forecasters, such as Fred Case of the University of California-Los Angeles, see starts of only 1.4 million units for the year.

Housing economist Michael Sumichrast recently told builders: "Let's enjoy it while we can. But by September or October, we will see a sharp drop in activity." And Seattle developer Harry Ryde comments: "This could go down as the shortest housing recovery in post-war history. It started last October and could end this summer."

Forecasters blame the higher interest rates on the massive Treasury funding to cover the fat federal budget deficit. In other words, you're competing for funds with Uncle Sam, and apparently Uncle's needs come first. Of course, rates could come down as unemployment improves — that results in more tax revenues — but it's unlikely that long-term rates will come down very much this year, or even next.

"With interest rates at 14 percent, we're right back to where we were in October," says Dennis O'Brien, president of the California Building Industry Association. "And then we were looking at rates that had dropped two percentage points since August. Now they're headed in the opposite direction."

O'Brien estimates that the rise of two percentage points in rates priced 282,000 Californians out of the market. Only 9.6 percent of households can afford a median-priced home with rates at 14 percent.

A study by the U.S. League of Savings Institutions comes to the rather dismal conclusion that the issue of affordability is still very much with us. The league concludes that the economic realities for home buyers are no where near as bright as conventional wisdom suggests.

The "affordability gap" is the difference between what potential buyers can pay and what houses cost. It's now about $14,000 nationwide — not much better than in recent years, when housing sales were virtually frozen by high prices and high interest rates.

Another analysis, by Verle B. Johnston of the San Francisco Federal Reserve Bank, also is far from optimistic. He concludes that the 1980s will hardly produce the record housing boom so widely forecast.

Gas lease sale this week

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Bidding later this week for natural gas drilling rights in the mineral-rich Gulf of Mexico, off the Texas coast, will be the second lease sale conducted under a profitable new Interior Department policy.

It used to be that oil companies got up a list of the most desirable tracts and then let the Interior Department pick which to accept bids on.

Last May, the Interior Department discarded that policy and let oil companies bid without restriction for drilling rights.

The result was a record-setting $3.5 million in bidding for tracts off the Louisiana coast.

Speculators do not expect this Wednesday's sale to bring in as much money.

For one thing, natural gas is not the first choice these days in the petroleum businesss. And some companies spent more than they had expected to in May.

"It's not a bottomless pit" for oil companies these days, one industry official said.

Still, 86 companies by the middle of last week had filed papers indicating they intended to participate in the sale — a good showing by government standards.

More than 5,800 tracts on 32.6 million acres are up for lease.

In May, deepwater tracts in the central Gulf got the highest bids.

However, Texas' Matagorda area, closer to shore, is one where oilmen have made recent natural gas discoveries and may try to put together lease blocks to support the finds they've already made, according to one industry watcher.

Stock market gains

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market posted a broad gain today amid encouragement over the latest statistics on the money supply.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials climbed 11.99 to 1,206.20 by noontime.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by more than 2 to 1 among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Late Friday the Federal Reserve issued figures showing a $500 million drop in the basic measure of the money supply for the latest reporting week.

Energy issues dominated the active list, continuing their recent rally on expectations of stable oil prices and increased demand stemming from the economic recovery.

The NYSE's composite index added .61 to 95.53. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up 1.72 at 232.73.

Volume on the Big Board totaled 33.75 million shares at noontime, against 28.52 million at the same point Friday.

Cotton

NEW YORK (AP) - Cotton futures No. 2 were higher at midday dealings today.

The average prices for strict low mid- dling 1 & 1-16 inch spot cotton advanced 50 points to 71.75 cents a pound Friday for the eight markets.

Foreign money pouring into U.S.

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Foreign money is pouring into the United States these days, but that doesn't mean sacks of francs, yen or other currency. It's all done with bank accounts. The actual cash never changes hands.

To most people, foreign exchange means buying foreign currency when they go on vacation in another country.

Recently, however, the foreign exchange market has made the headlines. High U.S. interest rates and a stable economy have made investments in American securities and property attractive to foreigners. In order to make those investments, the foreigners need dollars — dollars they buy on the foreign exchange market through commercial banks.

"The changes that take place are in ownership of bank deposits," said Scott Pardee, senior vice president of the Discount Corp. of New York. Investors — mainly corporations — buy dollars through commercial banks. The money is deposited in a dollar bank account. Later, it can be used to buy anything from stocks to real estate.

In the United States, the bulk of the foreign exchange activity goes through a small number of American and foreign banks and dealers, mostly in New York City. The trade is conducted by telephone, cable and mail. You can't take a tour of the foreign exchange market the way you can the stock market; it's not a place.

The New York banks also deal with banks overseas. They may, for example, get rid of an excess of a particular foreign currency by selling it to a bank in another country.

Here's an example of how the market can work:

Suppose an American importer wants some French wine. The French exporter quotes a price of 8,000 francs — currently equal to about $1,000. The importer contacts his bank with an order to buy 8,000 francs; the money will be taken from his account. The bank cables its branch or correspondent bank in Paris to pay the 8,000 francs to the wine exporter. The exporter's account will be credited; the account of the U.S. bank in Paris will be debited.

The importer may not want to pay for his wine immediately, however. He may want to wait until it is delivered. But if he waits, he runs the risk that the franc could rise in value. He would need more dollars to buy 8,000 francs.

BUSINESS MIRROR

Higher interest rates command attention

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — All over America these days the big concern seems to be more about interest rates than the weather, vacations or baseball, or even about the situations in Central America or Chad.

All this concern is perfectly understandable because there are many more debtors than vacationers and many more people with a direct, personal, vested interest in the cost of money than in games of baseball or foreign affairs.

This concern has now turned to worry, and in the case of the housing industry, to near-hysteria, simply because most interest rates have ceased to fall and some have edged higher.

In the current jittery state of economic affairs, any little squiggle can grow up to be a trend, and once a trend is nourished through its adolescence, recent history seems to indicate, it can become a monster.

Do you recall the prime rate of 21.5 percent in December 1981? Do you remember those home mortgage rates of 18 percent? And the forecasts by otherwise reputable people that the prime rate would rise to 28 percent?

Who can forget?

It is the remembrance of such convulsions from the recent past that brings the latest interest rate squiggles to the forefront of concerns, especially in view of the big federal budget deficits that must be financed.

But, lest the almost universal concern undermine your spirits, you should know that there is another view of the interest rate squiggle, a view of the future that contains no monster at all, or else a monster slain.

Many people credit Donald Regan, the treasury secretary, with having sown the idea in mid-July when he told the congressional Joint Economic Committee that rates would be lower by the end of the year.

Anyone can make that statement, but Regan supported it with statistical calculations and other paraphernalia of research, which is often confused with wisdom. Besides, he said what people wanted to hear.

"We expect they'll be down by the end of the year," he said of interest rates. The prime lending rate over the next few years, he said, could even be down as much as two percentage points from the existing level of 10.5 percent.

The recovery was swift enough, he explained, so that the enormous deficits would not crowd out private investors in the credit markets. The suggestion seemed to be that federal revenues would cut into deficit predictions.

In spite of a subsequent rise in the prime lending rate to 11 percent, that idea seems to have caught hold, although not sufficiently to allay the pervasive fears one hears throughout the country.

Asked if it would be wise to consider a second mortgage, a small-town banker thought it over last week and responded: "Why don't you consider waiting until later in the year when rates will be lower?" Lower? "Yes."

Lawrence Kudlow, a consultant now but a short time ago the chief economist at the Office of Management and Budget, continues to have faith in both the economy and the administration. The recent interest rate rise, he states, is a marketplace over-reaction. He believes fears are exaggerated.

And Jack Lavery, chief economist at Merrill Lynch, offers the opinion that the very consternation in financial markets is already acting to head off higher interest rates because it is slowing the economic pace.

"The consternation in the financial markets acts as a brake on the dimensions of the forward momentum of the economy," he explains. "We think a renewed lessening of interest rates will emerge in the fourth quarter."

Will interest rates fall, or at least cease to rise? Can the monster be fended off? Will the recovery continue?

Nobody really can say — that much has been proven over the past few years. But in your concerned conversations, perhaps the views of Regan and Kudlow and Lavery can be included. Maybe they might moderate some of the fear.

Maybe they can even help slay the monster.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

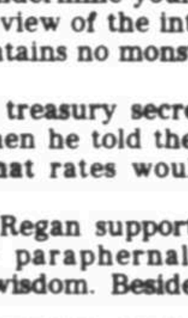
Check provisions of rollover IRA

By BILL DOYLE

Q. When I retired a year ago, I took my pension benefits in a lump sum, which I rolled over into an individual retirement account. I have not had to touch that money, because I have income from consultant work and investments. I expect to earn about $28,000 as a consultant this year.

Can I add $2,000 for this year to my existing IRA and avoid current income tax on that amount? If so, would I avoid self-employed Social Security tax on that $2,000?

A. In order, the answers to your questions are "maybe" and "no."



Doyle

Some IRA sponsors allow you to add your annual contribution — up to $2,000 for an individual and $2,500 for a spousal IRA of a married couple with only one working spouse — to a rollover IRA. Some IRA sponsors insist you set up a new IRA for your annual contributions. You'll have to check that out where you have your rollover IRA.

In any case, you can put either $2,000 or $2,250 into an IRA. And, because your consultant work produces self-employed income, you can open a Keogh plan — into which you can put up to 15 percent of your self-employed income annually, with the same tax advantages as an IRA.

You'll have to pay Social Security tax on your net self-employed income — your consulting fees, minus expenses. However, contributions to an IRA and-or Keogh plan do not reduce the amount of self-employed income subject to Social Security tax. For 1983, that tax is 9.35 percent on up to $35,700 of self-employed income.

Q. My husband has a full-time job and is president of a part-time incorporated business, at which I am employed as vice-president and bookkeeper. In a recent column, you wrote, "When one spouse who is a proprietor hires the other spouse, no Social Security or federal unemployment tax is due" on the employed spouse's salary.

Our accountant says those taxes must be paid on my salary. Why?

A. Because that business at which you are employed is incorporated. It would be a different story if that business was set up as a proprietorship, with your husband as the sole owner. They key word, here is "proprietor." A corporation is not a proprietorship.

• • •

Q. We are living well on Social Security benefits and pensions. We receive about $15,000 a year in interest from savings certificates. Next year, we expect to inherit $10,000, which will make our total income more than $32,000. As a result, we will have to pay income tax on our pensions, interest, the $10,000 inheritance and up to half of our Social Security benefits.

It has been suggested we give the $10,000 to someone, thereby paying only the federal gift tax. That would be better than giving the government half of our inheritance. Do you agree?

A. No! No! No! Unless you feel very generous and are sure you will never need that $10,000, don't give it away. Even if you do make a gift of that money, there will be no federal gift tax. Each individual can now give up to $10,000 to each of as many people as he or she pleases every year, without federal gift tax obligation. For a married couple splitting the gift, that number doubles to $20,000.

You won't have to pay income tax on the $10,000 you inherit. Inheritances are not subject to federal income tax. Nor will they be included in calculating the "threshold" of annual income — $25,000 for an individual and $32,000 for a married couple — past which up to half of Social Security benefits will be taxed, beginning in 1984.

Assuming you invest the $10,000 and get interest on it, that interest will be added to your income and will be taxable. But, the federal government won't get any of the $10,000 when you inherit it.

Paper: Corporation doesn't enforce rules

CLEVELAND (AP) — The Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. fails to enforce its own rule governing rates lenders may charge for the assumption of fixed-rate mortgages, according to a published report.

The (Cleveland) Plain Dealer in a series of articles reported that the corporation, known in financial circles as Freddie Mac, failed to tighten its rules about assumptions until 1983 and even then was lax on enforcement.

In a three-month inquiry, the newspaper reported, widespread abuses occurred by lenders in assessing fees for assuming mortgages.

The investigation was spurred by abuses in Cleveland, reported by the newspaper previously this year. As a result, 60 people got refunds totaling more than $80,000, and in one case a borrower who was charged $4,556.91 to assume a $57,662 mortgage received a $4,033.54 refund.

The newspaper's investigation uncovered similar abuses in such cities as Seattle, Salt Lake City, Houston, Memphis, Birmingham, Ala., and in Washington, D.C.

"People are so deathly afraid of the guy who holds their mortgage," Jon A. Iverson, a Seattle real estate lawyer, told The Plain Dealer.

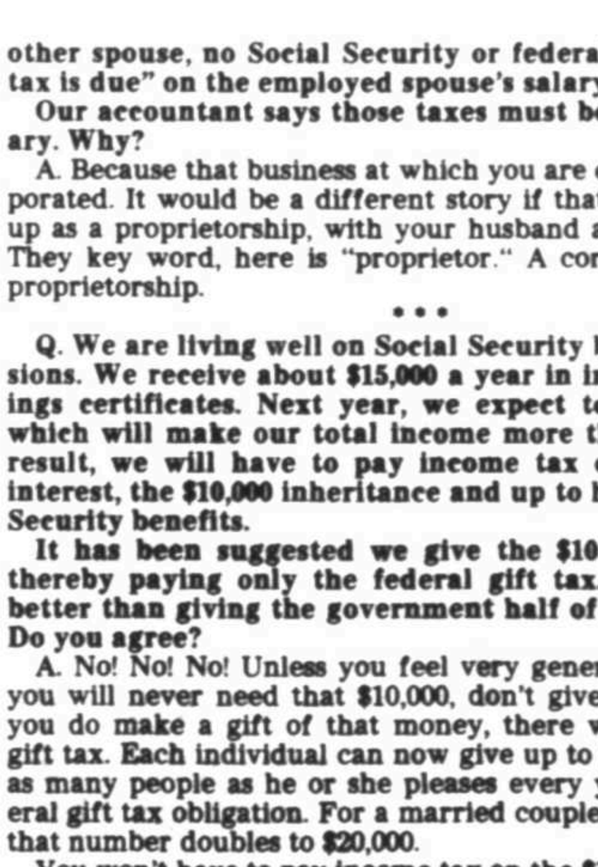
The agency allows lenders to charge a fee for an assumption, but no more than the actual processing costs involved. The agency is a private business, chartered by Congress, that buys mortgages to encourage cash flow of funds into housing. It is controlled by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the federal agency that regulates savings and loans.

The newspaper reported that:

—Even though Freddie Mac tightened its guidelines slightly in January, a number of lenders continued to charge excessive fees in the first six months of the year and in some cases increased fees.

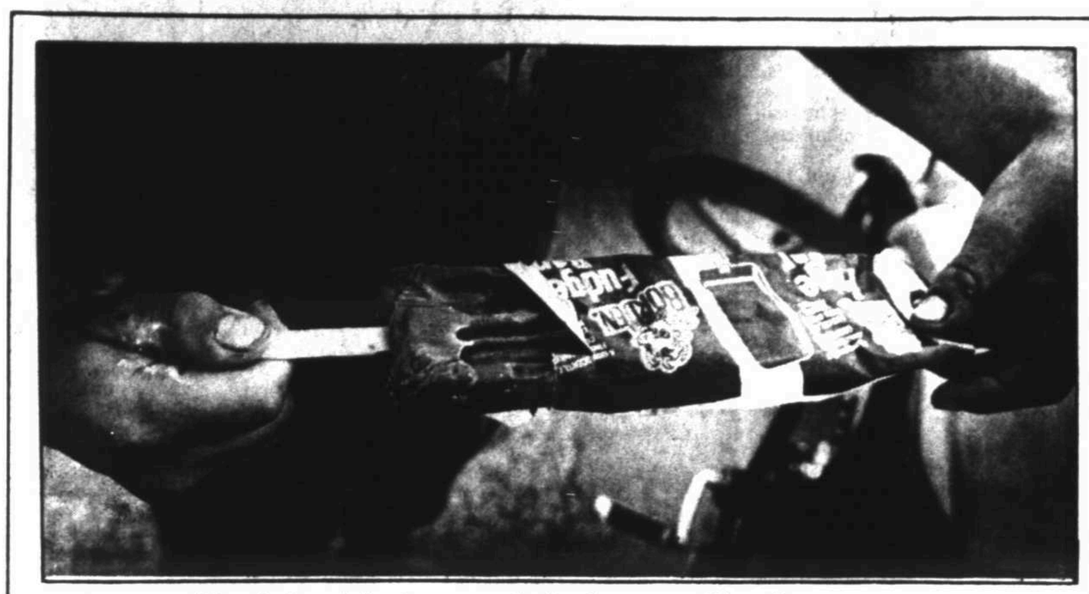
—Freddie Mac officials considered surveying lending institutions this year to learn the extent of lender abuses, but decided against it for lack of time and personnel.

—Freddie Mac policy is to respond only when a complaint arises, though consumers usually don't know how to complain.



Answer to today's Crossword Puzzle

Midland Reporter-Telegram
MONDAY, AUGUST 22, 1983



The fudgesicle is one of the better selling flavors.

We scream ice cream

Not Midlander Bill Koegler.

While he's not bringing back the ice cream man in the white suit and black bow tie, Koegler is providing Midlanders ice cream on wheels.

"I've got this van that sits all summer and about three weeks ago I started an ice cream truck service," he said.

Koegler attached magnetic ice cream signs on the white van, hired a driver and stocked the truck with pre-packaged ice cream bars from Bordens.

Each afternoon, after completing an eight-hour work day, ice-cream vendor Lloyd Applegate garbs himself in jeans, a T-shirt and dark glasses wrapped around his eyes.

While a snappy jingle sounds from the van, the 22-year-old creeps along his route, stretching from Midkiff Road to A Street in southwest Midland.

"You don't want ice cream until you hear the bell," Applegate said. "The kids get into that music and start dancing."

"The nutty-buddy's and fudgesicles sell the best," Applegate said.

While business has been "a little slow," Applegate said "once people gain trust, I think it will pick up.

"Mostly it's children that stop me," he said. "The ice cream van makes a lot of those little kids happy."

And Applegate has gained some notoriety. "They'll see me in stores and say 'hey ice cream man, where's your sunglasses.'"

But ice cream hasn't always been sold out of trucks. While many Americans think the creamy blend was first produced on grandma's porch, it was actually first made in Italy about 1550.

The Italians, who used ice from the mountains to cool their beverages, discovered that ice and salt made a freezing mixture which resulted in a product much like today's modern ices.

By the time it reached the United States in 1700, cream was added. But the concoction was still considered a rare delicacy when Dolly Madison first served it at the White House in 1809.

Although the recipe for ice cream remained a secret for many years, the first ice cream factory was established in Baltimore in 1851. It was not until 1904 at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition in St. Louis that the first ice cream cone appeared.

Six-year-old Chris Jones buys a snowcone from Kevin Kent.

Lloyd Applegate is a delivery man by day and ice cream truck driver by afternoon.

Ben Rodriguez chases the ice cream van.

VENUS, Texas (AP) — Diane Shaw says her family cannot pay $100 a week for a growth hormone here 2-year-old daughter Earin needs to keep from staying 32 inches tall for the rest of her life.

Mrs. Shaw said a state agency for crippled children refused to help because its programs do not cover the child' condition.

The 29-month-old girl, who weighs just 24 pounds, was born with a brain defect that prevents her body from producing needed hormones, causes seizures and has made her blind. It also keeps her from growing.

"She has not grown any in the last 11 months, absolutely nothing," said Dr. Jose Gonzalez, an endocrinologist and one of several pediatric specialists treating Earin. He said Earin suffers from septo-optic dysplasia and is missing part of her brain.

Earin is the same size as her 15-month-old sister, Krissy.

Her mother, Diane Shaw, says the family spends about $30 a month on anti-convulsant drugs, cortisone and thyroxine to replace the life-sustaining hormones Earin's body does not produce. But Mrs. Shaw told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram the family cannot afford the $100 a week it would cost for the growth hormone.

"I don't know what we are going to do," said Mrs. Shaw. "I guess she will have to stay this size."

Gonzalez said that when he realized Earin was going to need the growth hormone for about 12 years, at a cost that will escalate as she gets older, he referred her to Texas Crippled Children's Services. But the agency rejected Earin's case.

"Basically, we cover physical defects," said the agency's administrator, Joe Horsley. "There has to be a physical defect, and it must be reasonable to expect improvement as a result of treatment.

"Endocrine disorders do not fall within the scope of this program," he said.

Horsley said a medical committee reviews each case, though "some of the things we cover, like cystic fibrosis and spina bifida, it is because the Legislature specifically wrote them in."

"Earin is missing part of her brain," Gonzalez said. "Are they saying, 'Sorry, we don't cover that part of the brain?'"

"It's unfair," said Mrs. Shaw. "Someone with club feet qualifies for help, and they say Earin doesn't. There's something wrong with a program like that. Earin is a lot worse off than a baby with webbed fingers."

Mrs. Shaw said the family has no medical insurance and has found most companies unwilling to provide it.

"Most companies won't cover Earin," she said. "My mother-in-law says it's because she has so many problems that they know it's going to cost a lot of money."

Two-year-old Earin Shaw, center, poses for a photo with her sister and mother at their Venus, Texas home. Earin was born with a brain defect that retards her growth.

She said her husband lays flooring to support the family.

"He was making five-something an hour, and we had insurance and qualified for Medicaid and SSI (Supplemental Security Income). Then he found a better job that paid $9.25 an hour, and we lost our insurance and the money for Earin's medical bills," she said.

"He's looking now for a job that pays less so we can get back on SSI."

Robbery suspects pursued

ODESSA — Police are seeking a man who escaped with $480 in cash after holding up the Rio Grande Distributors gas station at 1201 N. Grant St. about 9:25 p.m. Sunday.

Attendant Cindy DeFoe told officers the man emptied the cash register and a cash box under the counter after ordering her and the station manager's son to lie on the floor. The man was armed with a large black revolver.

He was described as white, about 6 feet tall, weighing 190 lbs. and having brown eyes and brown hair. He wore tan slacks and black-rimmed glasses.

Police seeking rape suspects

ODESSA — Police here are looking for two men who raped a northside woman after apparently breaking into her home early Saturday morning.

The 28-year-old victim told officers she was awakened by someone who had put his hand over her mouth as she lay asleep on a living room couch about 4:30 a.m.

She began screaming but one of the attackers slapped her and told her to "shut up" or her two children, who were asleep in another room, would be harmed.

The pair fled out a rear door after raping the woman, according to police, who said there was no sign of forced entry. The woman told officers the men were black, but could provide no other description.

A similar rape, but involving only one black man, occurred in the same neighborhood about three weeks ago.

Deputies look for suspects

Sheriff's deputies are looking for two men who held up the Colonial Food Store on West Highway 80 near the OIME plant early Sunday morning.

Clerk Robert C. Sauer told investigators the pair entered the store about 6:45 a.m. and escaped on foot after taking an undisclosed amount of money at gunpoint.

A small black revolver, which may have been a blank pistol, was used in the holdup. The suspects were described as black, about 5 feet, 10 inches tall and in their 20s.

Police search for escapee

Police are searching for a youth who escaped from the city jail Sunday night.

The 15-year-old boy, who was being held on a parole violation charge from the Texas Youth Council, was discovered missing about 9:20 p.m. Police said he escaped after a cutting a second-floor window screen.

He is 5 feet, 7 inches tall, weighs 120 lbs. and has blond hair and blue eyes. He was wearing blue jeans, but no shirt or shoes.

In a theft complaint, Robert B. Pheils of Rt. 3, Midland, reported the disappearance of $7,370 worth of construction equipment. The theft occurred sometime over the weekend.

And William Tilley of Alvin told officers a camera and related equipment was stolen from his vehicle while it was parked Saturday at 2408 Goddard Court.

Texas universities brace for enrollment increase

DALLAS (AP) — Officials at universities and colleges across Texas say they're bracing for another enrollment boom this fall that should hit private and public schools alike.

At the University of Texas, with an enrollment of 48,039 last fall, the student population is expected to grow by more than 12 percent, officials say.

Texas colleges got their first inkling about the student-population boom this summer when unprecedented numbers of freshmen-to-be showed upfor orientation programs, officials say.

"Our program was up by 5,000 transferring and new entering students, and we still have another week of orientation," said Kathern Van Ness, a UT spokeswoman.

Bridge workers get heavy doses of fumes

EL PASO (AP) — Some days, U.S. Customs Service inspector Allen Bell wants to slam the door when a smoke-belching vehicle approaches his booth at the Paso Del Norte Bridge.

His second impulse, though, says do the job, which he does.

"Sometimes there are days when I feel like if I take a deep breath of air out here, I could chip a tooth on it," Bell said, watching a steady stream of cars, taxis and buses pouring across into El Paso from Ciudad Juarez, Mexico.

"Look, there goes another one," he said, pointing to a white pickup truck pouring out bluish exhaust into a hot July afternoon.

Fifteen years after the federal government first conducted air quality tests at El Paso's border bridges, customs and immigration officials face what many see as worse breathing conditions than ever.

Those tests demonstrated that carbon monoxide levels far exceeded federal standards at times, mainly at the Paso Del Norte Bridge downtown. The human exposure factor was within accepted limits, though.

Since then, the federal government has started a worker rotation system and installed blowers to disperse fumes.

But the problem has outpaced the solutions, inspectors say.

Many more El Pasoans, for example, are filling their tanks with the still inexpensive but lower-grade gasoline in Juarez. And the U.S. inspectors live with the aerial byproducts.

"I am resigned to the fact that I have to live with (the air)," said customs inspector Raul Mendoza, 52, a 12-year bridge veteran.

Little research evidence has linked heavy carbon monoxide exposure to later long-term health problems.

It is small consolation, though, to bridge workers, whose booth windows have to be washed every two days to remove exhaust soot.

Some inspectors say the federal government should consider giving hazard pay to bridge inspectors and allow them to take early retirement.

Other inspectors suggest building a new bridge on the East Side to alleviate bridge congestion. They propose wearing masks or enforcement of federal air standards at American ports of entry.

Each answer — some tried, some too expensive — has its problems.

Masks cause a public relations problem, Mendoza said. "People think you are sick or something."

Customs inspector Joe Najar said he is not holding his breath that air quality changes will happen soon at the Paso Del Norte Bridge.

Najar is president of the 250-member National Treasury Employees Union in El Paso. The union includes customs inspectors, clerks and patrol officers.

Repeated federal and local air-quality tests on the bridges have shown levels of carbon monoxide in excess of federal standards.

A 1979 federal study by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration showed Lane 1 — nearest the Paso Del Norte Bridge office — routinely exceeded carbon monoxide standards by 50 percent.

However, the Tri-Agency Border Survey noted that worker exposure to the high levels of carbon monoxide in El Paso fell within federal standards.

The federal study recommended better air-conditioning maintenance, improved traffic control such as speed bumps and signals, and future construction with prevailing winds in mind.

"Available studies on the long-term effects of continued exposure to low levels of (carbon monoxide) are scarce," the study states. It said employees failed to document ailments related to air quality.

Telltale symptoms of carbon monoxide poisoning include headaches, fainting spells, nausea, lethargy and irritability.

Immigration inspector Norman Fisher said he knows them. When he complained that fumes were making him ill, he was told to look for another job, he said.

"You can quote me on that. Most of us are told the same thing," said Fisher, who is president of the American Federation of Government Employees Local 1210.

County jail converted into western museum

PALO PINTO, Texas (AP) — Wags in this North Central Texas community say visitors to their museum worry about losing track of time with the exhibits and getting accidentally locked in after hours.

The two-story, native sandstone structure a few blocks from courthouse square is the old county jail.

"You could conceivably get locked into the museum," said Thelma Doss of the Palo Pinto County Historical Association. "It wouldn't be much fun."

Killers, cattle rustlers, rowdy cowboys and other rabble-rousers spent weeks and months trying to figure a way out of the jail before county officials began allowing visitors inside its recesses.

"Oh, one time some prisoners escaped with a dummy gun they made out of soap and stained with shoe polish. So you really can get out," said Nita Hall, historical association president. "But it is one museum you wouldn't want to get locked into."

The museum was the brainchild of association members who decided three years ago that families in the rolling hills surrounding the Palo Pinto county seat possessed memorabilia of the early farming and ranching days that was worth saving.

"There have been loans and donations," said John Winters, county tax assessor-collector who is a past association president. "I have a whole display case in there from my family — all my father's ropes and rawhide hobbles he had in the ranching business, and spurs, boots and bridles and other Western gear.

"We've got some woman's cut glass and different things like that — just pretty much donations," said Winters, chairman of the county historical commission.

Some eye-catchers in the museum include a straight razor used twice to shave outlaw Sam Bass while he holed up in the county.

"Sam Bass hid out here in the 1880s, and came into town to Bill Hale, who was the barber at that time," Ms. Hall said. "Bass slipped into town and gave Hale a $5 gold piece, and told him to keep quiet about it."

Hale's son, 92-year-old Bill Hale of Mineral Wells, donated the razor, she said.

"It was a close shave," she quipped.

But Bass, nicknamed the Robin Hood of Texas, never stayed at the jail. He later was betrayed by one of his own men at Round Rock and killed by Texas Rangers.

On a wall in the jail's first floor is a picture of every sheriff of Palo Pinto County since the structure was completed in 1880 to replace a log jail. The picture is framed with loaded dice that were confiscated from a raid.

Historical buildings weather the storm

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — Caretakers of Galveston's past say the island's historic buildings weathered the last hurricane for the same reasons it did others — quality construction with bricks, heavy beams and fine hardwoods.

"They're built much more strongly than most structures are today," said Peter Brink, executive director of Galveston's Historical Foundation.

"You either have heavy brick construction with heavy beams or you have really fine hard woods."

Brink said the historic district gets some protection from being located on the leeward side of the island. But the construction of the buildings provides the greatest protection, he said.

"The lesson that we got out of it is that quality stood up," said Brink's brother David. "You look at the ticky-tacky.

David Brink is the overseer of Elissa, an 1877 sailing ship moored in Galveston to heavy-duty, flexible pilings.

He said about 40 volunteers helped batten down the hatches on Elissa.

American life lures children of diplomats

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Alonso Alvarez de Toledo, son of the second-ranking Spanish diplomat here, has lived in Spain only four of his 20 years. He says he doesn't know much about the 16-year-old son of a Soviet official who allegedly attempted to defect last week — but he does know all too well how the temptations of that extra ounce of America's cultural freedom can affect your life.

Just this week, for instance, he got his first speeding ticket. "I got out of it," he said Tuesday at the Washington International School, where he is summer camp counselor. "I think you could say for some, not all, they take too much advantage of their opportunities and feel too much at home."

BURGER KING LUNCHES and Budweiser bashes. The latitude to date and to dabble with Dad's car. Punk rock soundings and glued on designer jeans. To American adolescents, these are symbols of American life as familiar as Pac-Man.

But to many of the 2,000 diplomatic families in Washington, these are the Eden-esque apples dangling before their impressionable children. Diplomatic parents, many of whom are only here for three-year assignments, say they can cope with bringing up their children in this foreign environment — until that moment when something goes awry.

Last week, the diplomatic community awoke from its August slumber when 16-year-old Andrei Berezhkov, the son of a high-level Soviet diplomat, took his father's car and ran away from home because, according to a letter he allegedly wrote, "I hate my country and its rules and I love your country."

HE RETURNED TO HIS family's apartment in suburban Maryland less than 24 hours later. By then, the matter had escalated into an international incident involving the FBI, the State Department, the Soviet government and the White House. The youth's whereabouts remain a mystery, as the Soviet Embassy continues to refuse American requests to interview the teen-ager.

Tuesday morning, neighbors in the Chevy Chase, Md., area were reluctant to talk about the family or the incident, as have been most members of the diplomatic community. One youth, who said his father was with an embassy but who refused to identify himself, said he knew Berezhkov and that he did not seem to have many friends. Another woman working in the building where the Berezhkovs lived, described him as "polite" and "alone a lot."

"I DON'T THINK the parents realize until later the things that have gone on that they wouldn't have wanted," says Cathya Stevenson, associate director of The Washington International School here, which has about 175 students whose parents are diplomats. "How do you prepare parents for the American way of life? You can't. It's difficult for them ... "

This week, de Toledo and two other children from diplomatic families discussed the ups and downs of their American experience.

"Americans are very warm at first, then, after a while, not so much," says Pamela Rodriguez, 19, an Uruguayan student at George Washington University whose father is with the World Bank. "You can never get too close, just so close and then you have to be on your own."

"Americans look very nice, but when you get to details, they stop," said Nasser Boumenna, 20, son of an Algerian diplomat.

"YOU HAVE TO FIND your own way here," maintained Rodriguez.

At American University, de Toledo says, relationships are hard to establish when even in the cafeterias, Americans and foreigners dine separately. "It's not all the American kids," he said. "The foreigners may be chauvinistic in a certain way."

They say they're aware that they are, at times, perceived as prima donnas and troublemakers, and they are defensive about the image.

"If they (diplomatic children) have the money to be at Harvard and have racing cars, then they might be like that," said Boumenna. "Not most of them, though."

"Americans drink to get drunk," said de Toledo. "Foreigners drink to have a good time. We drink regularly, so we drink in a normal way."

"A FUN PARTY for us is not a party with 15 kegs," said Boumenna. "We care about what music there is and the kind of ladies. ... Some parents are afraid. From where I'm from there are no drugs, no alcohol. But other parents are more open-minded."

Despite their misgivings about America, all three agree on one thing.

"Once you've traveled so much," said Rodriguez, "you can't go home. You don't fit in there."

Children of diplomats are, for the most part, exposed to the same enticements American teen-agers are. "There is talk at school about some people" who use drugs, such as marijuana and cocaine, says 17-year-old Wilmot Mwandanda, son of an attache' at the Kenyan Embassy.

"SOME ARE INTO that, some are not. It's not different" from attitudes among American students, Mwandanda says.

"It's a milieu. They live in this milieu, and I shouldn't say I approve or disapprove," says Francois Dopffer, counselor at the French Embassy and the father of three teen-agers. His children "approve of certain things, certain television shows, and they disapprove of others. They are discriminating. We don't interfere."

One Polish career diplomat posted here says he is comfortable with America's influence on his 6-year-old son just as long as he attends Polish cultural classes at the embassy.

A Canadian counselor fears for the safety of his 12-year-old daughter in Washington. "Let her go to the movies alone — No way!" says Charles Patrick Gossage, minister-counselor for public affairs at the Canadian Embassy.

Ronald van Beuge, economic minister at the Dutch Embassy, points out that most diplomatic children here have already lived in several nations. "They love going to McDonald's," he says of his two teen-agers, "but they've already done that in Paris."

AND THEN THERE'S the West German official who says he is concerned that his children are not being Americanized enough. Yet he sends them to The German School in Potomac, Md., where the majority of students are also children of German diplomats.

"They live another way than they would in Europe," says the official, Gebhardt von Moltke. "We live in a small place near Bonn. The children could go everywhere they want by bike, they didn't have to travel in cars. It's not so easy to get from one place to another. But these are problems you just have to cope with ... "

DEAR ABBY

Undertaker's tale shaves truth

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: You said that hair and fingernails do NOT grow after death. Well, you are wrong. My mother told me that when she was a little girl, she lived above a funeral parlor, and bodies were kept down there for as long as two weeks waiting for all the relatives to get there for the funeral.

She said the undertaker said sometimes they had to shave a corpse and cut the fingernails several times because they grew long and became noticeable.

My mother isn't living now to verify this, but it's true nevertheless.

I think you owe your readers a correction. -- NELLIE IN KNOXVILLE, TENN.

DEAR NELLIE: I received many letters from people who had "known" about cases where the remains of people long dead had been found with "beards down to their knees and fingernails six inches long."

Pursuing this grave undertaking, I called Bill Gold, spokesman for the Los Angeles County Coroner's office, who said "Growth of hair and nails ceases at the time of death - when body metabolism stops.

"Hair and nails may give the appearance of having grown after death, but that is due to the dehydration and shrinkage of the skin."

Sorry, you are dead wrong. My statement remains good as Gold.

DEAR ABBY: Until I saw the letter in your column signed "Second Thoughts," I thought I was the only person in the world who just plain didn't care for sex. I could easily live the rest of my life without it.

My husband and I lived together for two years before we were married, so he most definitely knew how I felt about sex. Last week we celebrated our eighth anniversary and I thank God every day for sending this wonderful, understanding, considerate man to me.

We rarely have sex. It almost never comes up, but our lives are filled with other things that interest us. He has never complained or made me feel guilty. We have never gone for counseling because apparently we don't need it. I've always heard that a poor sex life will turn a marriage sour, and wonder why it hasn't affected ours? -- DOING NICELY WITHOUT

DEAR DOING: Maybe he gives at the office.

DEAR ABBY: I have a problem. I love a man who lives with another woman. He acts like he is afraid of her and doesn't know how to get away from her.

He calls me all the time and asks me to meet him somewhere after work just so we can be together. I know he loves me because he always wants to be with me. I love him and want to be with him, too, but it's hard for us to be together because this other woman has some kind of hold on him.

He doesn't know what to do and I don't either. Please help me. - B.

DEAR B.: Only your boyfriend knows why he is "afraid" to tell the woman with whom he is living that he wants out. As long as he lacks the courage to free himself, you can consider yourself on the outside looking in.

AT WORK

Resumes: Stick to facts

By DR. ADELE SCHEELE

Q: I'm having trouble finding a job and have two questions. One, should I write my conservative group alliances on my resume when I'm looking for an environment research job? Two, do I have a right to ask for the credentials of the person who was hired for the job I applied for? I would like to see if the reasons were sound.

A: No to both. The purpose of a resume, in many person's opinions, is to get you in the door. Be as reasonable as possible, to keep yourself from being knocked out of the running because of the possible prejudice of the person reading the resume. Therefore, don't put age, race, religion, or political alliances. Keep it down to bare bones for a "just the facts, ma'am" resume.

However, I also know that resumes do not get you the job. They may only open a door. You still have to call and sell yourself as the person they are looking for.

Despite our best efforts, at times many of us find ourselves in the position that your second question refers to — we are not hired, someone else is. We are outraged and want to find out if it was fair. But checking out whether that person is as good as we are leads us to a blind wall.

First, we can't do it, second, we can't make a case of it. Therefore, I would advise you to go back to the one doing the hiring and ask what you could do to help yourself for the next interview. Explain that you do want a job in this area, that you would have liked to work for them, and you regret that you weren't the one. Could they help you?

Could they refer you to another agency or institution? Could they suggest something that you need to compensate for?

Q: A year ago I started an export business and have enjoyed some success. Since most of my transactions are now done by writing letters and by telephone, my office is at home. But I want to expand. Now that I have access to so many products — bed linens, crystal, china, etc. — at wholesale prices, I would like to start a limited retail business offering discount prices. However, I want to avoid the constant flow of traffic in and out of my home. How can I establish an outside business with a limited budget for advertising and also accommodate customers?

A: First, you might sell some of your items on consignment at a store whose products are compatible with yours.

Second, you might find some retail space — a counter, alcove, or suite — that you might lease from an already going business.

Hirt will open new restaurant

Al Hirt

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Jazz trumpeter Al Hirt, who closed his famous Bourbon Street club in New Orleans' French Quarter in May, is reported ready to blow up a storm in a new restaurant and club called "Cooper's Deli and Al Hirt Presents."

Club owner Joe Cooper says he and the 60-year-old Hirt shook hands to seal the deal Sunday and that lawyers will work out the details.

"Al will play a minimum of six weeks in Memphis, spread out through the year," said Cooper. "And he also is going to assist me in bringing other famous entertainers into the club."

Koo Stark

LONDON (AP) — Actress Koo Stark, Prince Andrew's onetime girlfriend whose picture frequently graces British newspapers, has taken some photos of her own.

The snapshots show the Fleet Street photographers Miss Stark says have been hounding her, and she presented them along with a plea for "freedom from the press."

"While I am all in favor of freedom for the press, there is a case to be heard for freedom from the press," Miss Stark, 27, wrote in the London Sunday Times magazine. "The attention I receive ranges from the frightening to the absurd."

Miss Stark — who appeared in two erotic films when she was in her teens and whose Caribbean vacation with the 23-year-old British prince last October created a sensation — tells of harrowing car chases through London with photographers in pursuit.

She says in her first-person account, "At the beginning I used my little Mini (automobile) to outwit them. But the strain began to tell and the gearbox literally fell out."

NEW YORK (AP) — Sex expert "Dr. Ruth" has a reply for critics who say some of her advice is too funny to be taken seriously.

"I don't start out to be funny,'" says Ruth Westheimer, whose blunt radio talk about sex could make the birds and bees blush. "But if it comes out that way, I use it."

"If they call me an entertainer," says the psychotherapist and professor of human sexuality at New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center, "I say that's great. When a professor teaches with a sense of humor, people walk away remembering."

On her radio programs, in New York and Los Angeles, her listeners include "to my bitter regret, young children" under 15, for whom she finds what goes out over the air unsuitable, and people in their 70s, whom she praises for keeping active.

Mrs. Westheimer, 54, describes herself as old-fashioned. She counsels teen-agers to ignore peer pressure, reassures virgins that it is OK to hold off until marriage, and admonishes callers to end affairs with people who turn out to be married.

C. Towers

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Singer-actress Constance Towers, wife of John Gavin, the U.S. ambassador to Mexico, finds herself playing a double role that sometimes has its hazards.

At least twice a month she flies to Los Angeles to put in long days before the camera as the matriarch Clarissa McCandless in the CBS daytime soap "Capitol."

After one flight back to Mexico City, the 52-year-old actress says in the current People magazine, she had to dress in an airport ladies' room for a diplomatic reception — and "got stuck in a stall."

Couples give words of wisdom on golden anniversary

CHICAGO (AP) — With half a century of marital experience each, 425 couples who gathered to celebrate their golden anniversaries ought to know how to achieve wedded bliss. Their message: Persistence pays off.

Young couples should "work their problems out instead of breaking up," said Jennie Kindernay, 72, of suburban Oak Park.

"You struggle and everything else," added her husband, John, 76. "You finally make it. God's got a lot to do with it — and faith."

The couples repeated their vows Sunday at Holy Name Cathedral as nearly 1,000 children, grandchildren and other relatives looked on. Cardinal Joseph Bernardin, who celebrated Mass, described the pairs as "an inspiration and source of encouragement to our young couples and to those who are contemplating or preparing for marriage."

Several partners offered some of the wisdom they have gained over the years.

"Stick together and don't give up the ship," said Frank Matthews, 70, of Palos Park. "When you're in trouble, confide in each other and work things out," added his wife, Mae, 71.

"Never go to bed mad, because when you wake up, you're still mad and it keeps on going," warned John Glynn, 73.

His wife, Kathryn, 70, who he said is "a good cook and gets prettier by the year," offered her own motto: "It doesn't cost anything to say, 'I'm sorry.'"

"The longer you live, the better it is," said Harold Knudtson, 70, of Chicago. "It's a different generation that started out struggling and stuck with it," said his wife, Harriet, who is also 70.

Sunday marked the sixth year the event has been held. It is designed to honor the couples and give public notice that "there are a lot of people who don't give up," according to the Rev. Timothy Lyne, pastor at Holy Name.

"These people who got married in the Depression are a unique group," he said. "They started together in difficult days."

Lyne said he believes prosperity has led modern couples to expect too much of each other.

"We live in a society that has hyped everything so much that everything has to be perfect," he said. "Also, people tend to give up when times are tough."

The Rev. James O'Brien, one of two priests whose parents were among those celebrating their anniversaries, said "the occasion gives me something to think about when I try to prepare others for marriage."

"If someone works within the sacrament of marriage, even if there are gloomy days and down days, people can grow together and gain in tenderness toward each other," he said.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Most people allergic to poison ivy, study shows

Dear Dr. Solomon: My wife and I were gardening over the weekend. I came down with a poison ivy rash and she did not. Are some people immune? And how soon after you touch it does a person usually break out? — Don, Richmond, Va.

Dear Don: There are many more non-immune people than immune people in regard to poison ivy. Studies have shown that from 80 to 90 percent of all people are likely to have an allergic reaction to the plant. This means redness, blisters and itching that generally appear within hours but that may not develop for as long as two weeks.

The resin on the surface of the plant can also produce symptoms through indirect contact — for example, by petting a dog or touching a toy that has become contaminated through contact with the plant.

Dear Dr. Solomon: A neighbor's child was rescued from drowning and for a while it seemed that he wouldn't make it. However, they got him to a hospital in a hurry and it seems the people there did all the right things and he seems perfectly normal to me. Is he just one of the lucky ones? I thought people who almost drowned had all sort of problems later one. — Eve, N.Y.

Dear Eve: Many people, particularly children, who nearly drown, survive the ordeal with no apparent lasting effects provided they receive proper treatment. In one hospital study of 40 patients who almost drowned, cardiac activity on admission was found to be the most accurate indicator of the eventual outcome. All 19 patients who had spontaneous cardiac activity survived without any lasting ill effects even if they were unconscious when brought to the hospital.

Dear Dr. Solomon: If a woman has breast cancer, why is it necessary to have such a major operation? The cancer is usually just a single lump, so why do doctors make a big operation out of it? — Mrs. J.S., Jackson, Miss.

Dear Mrs. S.: A woman in whom breast cancer is diagnosed may have involvement of the lymph glands which are located under the arms. In addition, the cancer may spread to other parts of the body. That is why early treatment is so essential.

Not all surgery for breast cancer is as extensive as you seem to believe it is. A partial mastectomy, for example, may involve removal of the lump and some of the surrounding normal tissue. This procedure is also referred to as a lumpectomy and may be followed by radiation therapy.

How extensive surgery for breast cancer will be depends on the stage in which it comes to the physician's attention. I will not pretend that breast cancer is not a serious disease, but I would repeat that early detection holds out the best possibility of cure.

For Benjie, Denver, Colo.: According to Dr. Bruce S. Schoenberg, of the National Institute of Neurological and Communicative Disorders and Stroke in Bethesda, Maryland, the treatment of high blood pressure is the most important measure available for the prevention of major strokes. Of course, advancing age is also associated with an increased risk of stroke.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column`

Joblessness increases among blacks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Joblessness among the nation's black population increased 140 percent during the last decade, a period when the income gap between blacks and whites widened, according to a Census Bureau report.

The number of blacks living below the poverty line grew from 8 million to 9 million during the period, according to the study entitled "America's Black Population: 1970 to 1982." Blacks living in poverty represented 34 percent of the nation's poor during each of the years covered by the study, the report said.

The number of unemployed blacks grew by 140 percent to 2.1 million between 1972 and 1982, when the jobless rate among black teen-agers was 48 percent, the report said.

A rapid increase in the number of black families headed by single women was blamed in part for a widening in the income gap between blacks and whites.

In 1982, 41 percent of black families were headed by women without husbands, compared to 32 percent a decade earlier. The proportion of children living in one-parent homes increased from 32 percent in 1972 to 49 percent last year, the report said.

In 1971, the income of the average black family was 60 percent of the income of white families.

Indians push for tribal recognition

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Growing up in California's Imperial Valley, Richard Olivas, an Indian, was "a typical boy playing cowboys and Indians. I was on whichever side was winning."

About 16 years ago, Olivas, who is now 40, became interested in being Indian, in being publicly identified as Indian. Today he is one of those working to gain tribal recognition for the Coastal Band of the Chumash Nation.

If the Chumash, original occupants of a slash of prime California real estate extending from Malibu north to San Luis Obispo and from the Channel Islands inland to Bakersfield, succeed in getting the U.S. government to agree that they are a cohesive "nation," they wil be eligible for federally funded health, housing and educational programs.

Perhaps more important — they will have established their soverignty, their right to self-determination, which is both a moral and philosophical issue and one with broad implications that could include a move to reclaim some lands.

WITH PROGRAMS FOR Indians being sharply cut, and relations between Indians and the government further strained by a recent statement by Secretary of the Interior James G. Watt — "If you want an example of the failures of socialism, don't go to Russia. Come to America and go to the Indian reservations" — the Chumash are not deluding themselves that there is any federal pot of gold.

But as Frances Franco, 62, the Chumash tribal secretary who has been plowing through genealogical records at the Santa Barbara (Calif.) Mission, said, "Our roots have always been important to us. The older generation hid our Indianness. The younger generation has more strength."

Olivas put it this way: "People see us and say, 'There's a Mexican.' To survive, we changed cultures, to either American or Mexican. We've been raised with Spanish surnames."

But now, Olivas said, "We're really coming out." He figures there are thousands of Chumash who do not know they are Indian, do not want to know or do not know whom to contact.

Why is tribal recognition imortant to him? "It's unexplainable," he said. "It's inside, in the heart. You're born with it, you're part of the land. It's something somebody's trying to steal from you."

Victor (Sky Eagle) Lopez, at 84 the grand old man of the Chumash, a white-haired philosopher who as a barefoot boy hunted rabbits in the mountains above Santa Barbara with a stone knife, seems starteled that anyone would ask why.

"Because it's proper," he said.

THE COASTAL CHUMASH Tribal Recognition Project is an undertaking involving Indians, and for Indians, but it is largely under the guardianship of a 29-year-old University of California, Santa Barbara, doctoral candidate and ethno-historian, Gregory Schaaf, who is only as Indian as his part-Choctaw grandfather from Missouri.

Schaaf is head historian for the project, working under a one-year, $20,000 grant to the Chumash from the Administration for Native Americans (a Health and Human Services Department agency) to help the Chumash to document their political and cultural continuity.

It is an odyssey that is taking him to the National Archives, the Library of Congress and to the Smithsonian Institution. The Smithsonian houses the Harrington papers, about 750,000 pages on the Chumash compiled by sthe late and prolific linguist-ethnogropher John Peabody Harrington of the U.S. Bureau of American Ethnology during a 50-year career.

"More Harrington keeps popping up in old trunks," Schaaf said."Most of it's never been calalogued. Sometimes he'd just write on napkins." (Indeed, a trunkload of material was recently discovered by Harrington's granddaughter, Ruth Dempsey, in the garage of the family home in Simi Valley, Calif.)

Schaaf laughed and said, "I can show you newspaper articles that say that the last Chumash has just died, the Chumash are extinct." In fact, he estimates that the Chumash population today at 1,000, three times the number estimated when his research began in October.

"Maybe," he suggested, "there are some people who wished the Chumash were extinct."

FROM THROUGHOUT Santa Barbara, Ventura and San Luis Obespo counties, Chumash have been going "public" for the first time. "These people are Chumash," Schaaf said.

When Schaaf was a boy, he heard Indian tales from his grandfather and, as a teen-ager, he lived near a Paiute reservation in Arizona, but medicine was his career goal. Then he "went to Europe and fell in love with art," earned a degree in art history at the University of California, Santa Barbara, and started a private art research service.

Around that time, he was put in contact with an 84-year-old Santa Barbara widow, Susannah Morgan, who had called a friend of Schaaf to say she had some documents that might interest someone. "I kind of expected to see Uncle John's love letters tp Aunt Mary," he recalled.

What he saw instead was an eye-opening cache of letters from the likes of George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, John Hancock and Benedict Arnold to Col. George Morgan, a Revolutionary-era Indian agent for the Colonies and the great-great-grandfather of Mrs. Morgan's husband, William. The letters had been locked in her bank vault. She had decided it was time they had a good home.

WHAT SCHAAF acquired was perhaps the historical find of America's Bicentennial year. The correspondence answers the question historians had posed for years: Why had not the Indians sided with the British in the Revolutionary War? Morgan's journal tells of one of his men infiltrating a meeting between British and Indians at which the British offered huge bounties for American scalps, an alarming bit of intellgence that led to extraordinary American efforts, ultimately successful, to convince the Indians to remain neutral. At one point, according to the documents, there were even efforts to make the Indian territories a founding colony, along with the original 13.

Schaaf enjoyed some celebrity as the result of a big spread in People magazine and soon he was back at the university pursuing a graduate degree in Indian studies. (His doctoral dissertation is on the Morgan papers.)

In June he will get his Ph.D.; in December, the Chumash will submit their application for tribal recgnition

Gregory Schaaf, a graduate student at the University of California, Santa Barbara, is helping the Chumash Indians in their campaign for federal recognition.

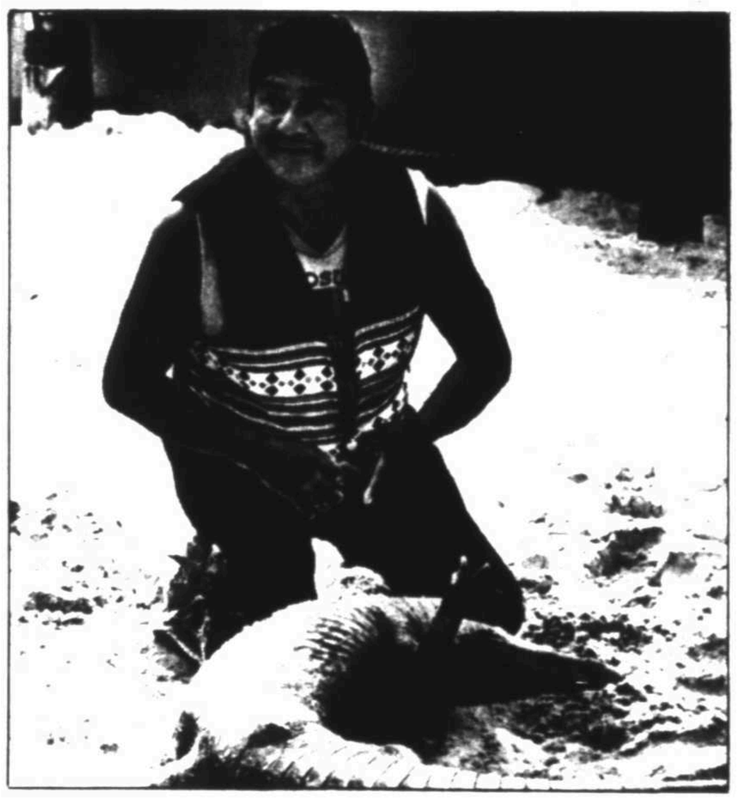
One of the important things about the Chumash project, he said, is that "we're bringing all this information back to the people. So often historical research is done in a scholarly realm, but doesn't get back.

"Some of the Chumash are very knowledgeable about their history and culture. Some of them are just learning about it. Our meetings are like family reunions. They'll see a great-uncle they hadn't seen since they were children. To see these people come back together in a spirit of unity is really beautiful. They're proud of their culture and they know they had a hard history. It wasn't easy for their grandparents."

THE REQUIREMENTS the Chumash must meet to prove their right to federal recognition include providing proof that they have been identified continuously from earliest times as American Indian or aboriginal and that the present members are direct descendants of those who originally occupied the same land. The Chumash must also show proof of a constitutional document setting forth membership criteria and a membership list based on criteria acceptable to the secretary of the Interior.

"Essentially," Schaaf said, "the Chumash have to prove that 200 years of forced assimilation failed. They have to document their political and cultural continuity in the face of years and years of being told to give up their way of life. They must prove they resisted — and they did. They went underground.

Alligators back, thriving in warm waters of Florida



LAT Photo

George Billie, a Miccosukee Indian, gets the best of another alligator at a Miccosukee village near the Tamiami Trail in the Florida Everglades. He wrestles alligators for a living.

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post New Service

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. — Walter Banks is standing on the bow of our boat, armed with a bow and arrow, searching the banks of the canal with a light strapped to his forehead. A semihysterical policwoman is in a condominium on the shore. Somewhere in the water is an alligator with 88 teeth in a mouth the officer claims is big enough to swallow a Greyhound bus.

"When the light hits his eyes, they'll glow red," whispers Banks, who looks in the dim light like Clint Eastwood starring in Robin Hood of the Everglades.

Alligator hunting is illegal in Florida. It has been since 1962, when the snaggle-toothed reptiles were put on the endangered species list. In their pursuit of hides for shoes, purses and belts, hunters had nearly wiped out the 200-million-year-old species in Florida and the half-dozen other southern states where they are found.

NOW THE GATOR IS BACK. After a federal law curbed the sale of hides in the early 1970s, the survivors regrouped in remote swamps and multiplied. Louisiana has just held its first alligator hunting season in 18 years, hides are again for sale in some places and Florida now has between 600,000 and 1 million alligators.

"We've got alligators in backyards, alligators in swimming pools, alligators everywhere," says Tom Stice, a biologist with Florida's Game and Freshwater Fish Commission and the coordinator of South Florida's Nuisance Alligator Program. In an average week, his office will get 100 calls complaining about alligators camped behind $200,000 townhouses or which have just gobbled up someone's French poodle.

When the complaint is legitimate, Stice calls Banks. He is one of 20 trappers licensed to catch and kill alligators. The men are not paid for the work. Instead, they get the meat, which is said to be right tasty, and 70 percent from the sale of the hide, which brings about $20 a foot. Alligators grow to 14 feet and larger and can weigh more than 1,000 pounds.

The alligator resurgence is one of the few success stories in Florida wildlife. There are 82 species in the state on the endangered list. Their demise is due more to loss of habitat through drain-age programs and developments than hunting, although last year game wardens broke up a poaching operation that was stealing the eggs of an endangered turtle species and selling them to Haitians as aphrodisiacs.

FLORIDA'S NEWEST residents do not mix well with the furred and feathered natives, especially when those wild things leave the interior for a visit to the coast. Most of the city-bred folk don't retire here to get closer to snakes, gators and birds of prey.

"You wouldn't believe some of the calls we get," says Lt. Biff Lampton of the game commission. "People want us to come and catch frogs. They'd rather hear a freight train at night than frogs croaking."

Relations between Florida's humans and its wildlife reached a particularly frenzied state last summer after the game commission announced a special hunt to thin out a herd of 5,500 deer in danger of starving to death.

A Miami lawyer filed suit to stop the hunt. A few conservation groups rallied to the cause, and the national media reacted to the story. A compromise was reached that allowed hunters to go after deer in one area while conservationists tried to rescue animals in another area.

THE ALLIGATOR hunters have not roused any great public outcry. Although gators aid other wild life by creating pools in the Everglades that retain water during dry spells, they are neither soft nor cuddly.

There have been only three known deaths caused by alligators since 1973 in Florida, but there have been many more attacks on humans and their pets who are often just one quick swallow to a good-sized alligator.

"I was frantic. I turned around in my backyard and there was this alligator moving toward me. I screamed and ran." That is Regina Siedentopf talking. She is a young Miami Beach police officer, newly arrived from Colorado, who lives in a condominium development on the edge of the Everglades.

"I go against some nasty people in my job. But that just did not look like a nice guy," said Siedentopf.

WHILE BANKS, 34, perched on the bow of the boat with his compound bow and arrow, his trapping partner, George Rodriquez, piloted the three of us up and down the canal. We were looking for a pair of eyes shining red in the darkness and hoping they would not be set too far apart.

"You get one of those big boys up against your boat and you wonder what the hell you're doing out there," said Rodriquez, a soft-spoken man who works as a receiving clerk in a hospital by day and admits to bringing a healthy fear to his night time job. "If you're not afraid, you're a fool."

This night there would be no fear to face. The alligator was gone, probably through a water culvert into a large lake nearby. Banks and Rodriguez seemed more disappointed than Siedentopf.

"When you see it move, it really is kind of elegant," she said. "I guess the alligator has to survive somehow, too."

For Pamunkey Indians, fishing's an ancient sport

KING WILLIAM, Va. — Three hundred years ago a Pamunkey Indian would prove himself brave by wading into the Pamunkey River to rope a giant sturgeon by the tail.

"That man was counted a cock-arouse, or brave fellow that wouldn't let go, till with swimming, wading and diving he had tired the sturgeon and brought it ashore," wrote an English visitor to the tribe in 1705.

The Pamunkey still wrestle fish from their river, but these days they do it with gill nets and 14-foot johnboats. For a month each spring fishermen from this small tribe that once ruled much of Virginia and Maryland, spread their drift nets across the changing tide to catch the shad and herring that are, like the Pamunkey, no longer so plentiful.

"On a good tide you might catch 35 to 40 fish. Sometimes you catch hardly anything," said Tecumseh Deerfoot Cook, 83-year-old chief. His tribe lives on an 800-acre reservation 30 miles east of Richmond, Va.

For Chief Cook and the Pamunkey, shad and herring fishing is both part of their livelihood and a link to a way of life that was already ancient when the first European settlers arrived to discover and then steal their land.

In 1607, when Captain John Smith and his colonists began settling Jamestown, the Pamunkey were the largest and most powerful tribe in a confederacy of 34 tribes. Wars and smallpox decimated both the Indians and the traditional lifestyle.

THERE ARE NOW AN estimated 9,000 Indians living in Virginia, but barely 200 live together on either the Pamunkey or nearby Mattaponi reservations.

Instead of farming, fishing and hunting as their ancestors did, the contemporary Pamunkey are more likely to commute to Richmond to work as mechanics, bakers and nurse's aides.

"People often ask me about why our people move away," said Chief Cook recently during a break in the fishing. "It's simple. They have to do that to make a living."

Chief Cook, son of a former chief, is one of the most photographed men in Virginia. Once a year for 42 years, Cook has danced on the steps of Richmond's state capitol in ceremonial buckskins and feathered headdress.

THE PAMUNKEY and Mattaponi make a present of game to the governor each year in lieu of taxes under terms of a 1677 treaty.

"It doesn't have to be more than a snowbird, as long as it's something wild. One rabbit will pay the tax," said Cook, who is possessed of a sardonic sense of humor.

Three years ago when the Pamunkey failed to bag a deer for Gov. John Dalton, the governor said that was fine since his son had gotten his own deer that month with a bow and arrow.

"I guess I could shoot a bow and arrow, too, if I could get a paleface to teach me how," said Cook.

Cook still fishes the shad run on the Pamunkey as he has for more than 70 years.

This spring he is especially pleased to be on the water again because of a recent threat to that practice. Last winter Virginia's Marine Resources Commission recommended closing the Pamunkey and Mattaponi rivers to all net fishing in an effort to preserve the dwindling numbers of striped bass that are spawning there this time of year.

"If they take the fishing on the Pamunkey River away from us, they might as well shoot us," said Cook at a public hearing on the proposal. "If this law goes into effect, I guess I'll just spend the rest of my life in jail because I'm going to keep on fishing."

The regulation was relaxed to allow the netting of shad and herring.

COOK IS ONE OF the few Pamunkey who has not had to travel far for his livelihood. For more than half a century he has worked as a hunting guide on a corporate estate that has changed hands three times during that period.

"They've sold me with it each time," said Cook. "People seem to think you can't have any luck hunting unless you have an Indian guide. That's fine with me. It keeps me in a job."

Other tribal members have not been as lucky. Mildred Moore, also known as Gentle Rain, makes pottery that is sold at the reservation's trading post. But because the reservation is far from the beaten path, that income is not sufficient for the widowed mother of a 16-year-old daughter. So Moore commutes 40 miles each day to work in a hospital as a nurse's aide.

John Langston is a 54-year-old Pamunkey who left the reservation as a teen-ager to work in Richmond as a baker.

He returned to the reservation a few years ago, but still commutes to Richmond where he operates a machine that lays the cream filling inside Oreo cookies.

Because Langston works the afternoon shift, he had his mornings free recently to fish for shad.

Arafat fights to control PLO

An Analysis

ROBERT H. REID

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — One year after his fighters began leaving Beirut, Yasser Arafat is struggling to maintain his grip on the Palestine Liberation Organization and salvage what remains of the PLO's political clout.

It was on Aug. 21, 1982, that young Palestinian fighters, who had battled Israelis to a standstill at the gates of west Beirut, shouted "revolution until victory" as they boarded a chartered Cypriot vessel for their voyage into exile.

Arafat, who had been master of a "state within a state" in the Lebanese capital, called the evacuation a triumph. The stage was set for an intense political struggle aimed at marshaling world opinion into pressuring Israel to reach a settlement with the Palestinians.

The time for such a settlement never seemed riper. After weeks of worldwide television reports on the ferocious Israeli siege of west Beirut, Israeli prestige was low and that of the Palestinians never higher.

"We are moving from one fighting position to another," said Arafat's deputy Salah Khalaf. "This revolution will never end."

But a year later, after the smoke and bravado disapppeared, the PLO finds itself deeply divided. The story of the past year has been more one of lost opportunities than success.

Deprived of its power base in Lebanon and with fighters scattered over the Arab world, the PLO must rely for support as never before on Arab states.

ARAFAT WAS expelled from Syria, which had become the PLO military operations center, after accusing the Damascus government of supporting his enemies within the guerrilla movement.

Rebels in his own Fatah group, the largest of the PLO factions, have challenged Arafat's leadership, accusing him of a willingness to compromise the goal of an independent Palestinian state.

Although PLO fighters still face the Israeli army in the Bekaa Valley of Lebanon, more Palestinians have been killed over the last year in clashes between pro and anti-Arafat groups than in battle with the "Zionist enemy."

The decline in the PLO's fortunes stemmed in large measure from Arafat's own personal weakness after the Beirut pullout.

During the years in Beirut, Arafat remained in control of the PLO, a confederation of eight factions with widely differing philosophies, because of his grip on Fatah.

Fatah in turn controlled 80 percent of the fighters as well as most of the PLO's money, Beirut bureaucracy and liaison offices abroad.

These factors all gave Arafat immense power to deal with potential rivals in Beirut and gave him international prestige as the only credible leader of the Palestinians.

Even his enemies abroad saw him as the only man who could ever make a deal which would be accepted by the Palestinians and the rest of the Arabs.

BUT WITH the loss of the Beirut base, Arafat's power and authority began to slip away, even in Fatah.

The degree of loss became apparent last April when Arafat was unable to convince the leadership of his own Fatah group to accept a plan for King Hussein of Jordan to enter talks with Israel on their behalf for a Palestinian homeland.

After months of negotiations, Arafat appeared to have accepted the idea in principal as the only means of halting Israeli settlements in the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip.

But in a stormy meeting in Amman, Jordan, pro-Syrian and other groups in the PLO balked at the idea. Arafat then departed for Kuwait where he summoned his Fatah executive committee. When Arafat failed to win unanimous support, Hussein called off the talks.

Since then the PLO has been unable to put forward any clear, coherent plan for either its struggle with Israel or for its main goal — a Palestinian state.

Instead, most of Arafat's time has been spent trying to put down a mutiny in Fatah by rivals who accuse him of being too willing to compromise with the United States and Israel and solving the dispute with Syria that led to his expulsion last June.

In the meantime, young PLO fighters in the Bekaa or in lonely camps in places like Sudan and South Yemen wonder what their leaders will do now to continue the "Palestinian revolution."

U.N. official flies to Cape Town

MADRID (AP) — U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar flew in a Spanish air force plane to Cape Town, South Africa, today to begin a round of talks on the future of South-West Africa.

The secretary-general's visit will be the first to South Africa by a U.N. leader in 11 years.

Perez de Cuellar, after a private 24-hour stopover in Madrid, was scheduled to hold talks in Cape Town until Thursday, then go on to South-West Africa and Angola, where rebels fighting for the independence of the South African-held territory, also known as Namibia, are based.

Boat rams waterfront mansion

ISTANBUL, Turkey (AP) — Turkish tugs salvaged a tourist boat which rammed into the living room of a waterfront mansion on the Asian side of the Bosporus, a maritime agency spokesman said today.

Nobody was injured in the Sunday accident.

Huseyin Kalender, described by the Turkish press as a "veteran captain," told interrogators he lost control of the ship and drifted ashore because of strong surface currents in the scenic 21-mile Bosporus strait.

Belgium expels East Europeans

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — The government has arrested a Foreign Ministry official and expelled five East Europeans, including four diplomats, for "economic espionage," government sources said.

"A certain number of diplomats, embassy members, have been asked to leave the country urgently," Foreign Minister Leo Tindemans said Sunday.

He did not name them or say how many there were, but he said Foreign Ministry official Eugene Michiels, 60, had been arrested on charges of passing information to the diplomats in exchange for money.
