Delicate operation

Dr. Luis Montaldo, obstetrician and gynecologist, peers through a high-powered microscope during Midland's first microsurgical tubal ligation reversal at Parkview Hospital this morning. The procedure, which involves reconstructing the fallopian tubes after a sterilization, is a long and delicate operation.

Was Weidenbaum losing his influence?

ST. LOUIS (AP) — After the unexpected resignation of chief White House economist Murray L. Weidenbaum, President Reagan was considering "four or five" people to help oversee his attempts to pull the nation from one of the nation's most persistent recessions.

Sources in Washington said today that Weidenbaum had quit because of increasing unhappiness with his diminished influence in shaping Reagan's plans.

White House spokesmen, however, said Weidenbaum's resignation is not the result of any policy dispute.

One official close to the departing chairman of President Reagan's Council of Economic Advisers said Weidenbaum's inability to influence the course of major decisions has been a source of "incredible frustration" for some time.

This official, who did not want his name used, said no single incident led to Weidenbaum's decision to resign, which the president disclosed Thursday night while in St. Louis to address a U.S. Olympic Committee fund-raising dinner.

Rather, Weidenbaum, who plans to return to his former job as a university professor, has grown disenchanted with a number of economic policy drifts, including the record budget deficits Reagan has been willing to accept and unrealistically optimistic economic forecasts the administration is sticking to to keep the projected size of future deficits from growing even larger, said officials close to Weidenbaum said.

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes, stressing that there was nothing "untoward" about Weidenbaum's departure, said: "I defy you to read into this a policy dispute of any kind. It just does not exist."

Asked if Weidenbaum's departure would have any effect on the administration's future economic policy, Speakes said, "I don't think it will have any impact."

Speakes said Reagan is considering four or five candidates to replace Weidenbaum. One potential successor, administration officials said, is William Poole, a Brown University professor, who originally had been expected to fill another vacancy on the three-member Council of Economic Advisers.

Weidenbaum, 55, told the president in his resignation letter that "the overall condition of the economy underscores both the difficulty of carrying out fundamental changes as well as the continuing need to move ahead on each of the four key aspects of economic policy in order to achieve your basic goal of restoring the economic strength of our country."

Speakes, who made public Weidenbaum's letter, said the four areas to which the economist referred were reducing taxes, slowing the growth of government spending, reforming government regulatory machinery and moderating the growth of the money supply.

In Washington, some administration officials close to Weidenbaum said he has decided to resign in part because he was frustrated by his inability to influence the administration's economic policy.

Senate favors tax hike

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate early today approved legislation containing the largest tax increase in history — $99 billion over the next three years to help lift the nation out of the worst recession since World War II.

The bill would boost taxes on cigarettes, telephone service and families with large medical expenses; impose a 10-percent withholding tax on interest and dividends; and take back more than one-third of the record tax cut that Congress voted for business last year.

Approved by a 50-47 vote at the end of a 20-hour session, the measure also would cut about $17.5 billion over the next three years from federal spending for Medicaid, Medicare and aid to the needy.

Forty-nine Republicans and independent Harry Byrd of Virginia voted for the bill. Forty-four Democrats and Republicans Paula Hawkins of Florida, Robert Kasten of Wisconsin and Mack Mattingly of Georgia opposed it.

The tax increase, which carries President Reagan's endorsement, is making its way through Congress less than one year after the lawmakers and the administration agreed on the largest tax cut in history.

The Senate-passed bill keeps intact Reagan's three-year, across-the-board personal tax cut, although it takes back a big part of the 1981 business reduction. The administration and its backers say this year's tax increase and spending cuts will bolster the sagging economy by reducing the government's borrowing and squeezing down interest rates.

The House Ways and Means Committee expects to write its version of a tax increase next week, and early indications are that the panel will accept much of what is in the Senate bill. But leaders said there is no assurance the Democratic-run House will pass any tax increase in this election year.

The Senate bill would raise the eight-cent federal cigarette tax to 16 cents a pack for three years; set the 1-percent tax on telephone service at 2 percent in 1983, 3 percent in 1984 and 2 percent in 1986 and later; allow deduction of medical expenses only to the extent they exceed 7 percent of income (the threshold now is 3 percent); permit deduction of only $100 (rather than the current $150) of medical-insurance costs without regard to the threshold; and restrict the deduction for uninsured casualty losses only to those exceeding 10 percent of income.

High-income professionals would lose part of the tax advantage they now enjoy from large tax-deferred retirement plans. Upper-bracket investors would face a toughened minimum tax, designed to assure that they pay some tax despite big deductions. Some tax-exempt bonds, a favorite investment of the wealthy, would be taxed for the first time.

Corporations would have to expedite their tax payments; the "leasing" law that encourages unprofitable firms to sell their tax breaks would be phased out; and big increases in depreciation deductions due in 1986 and 1987 would be repealed.

The Senate stripped one part of the package, which would have produced an estimated $2 billion by strengthening collection of taxes on tipped employees. To pick up $2.8 billion, Republicans joined with liberal Democrats to reduce by one-half the deduction allowed for meals when a businessman is not traveling away from home. Out-of-town meals would remain fully deductible.

New microsurgery technique may make dream come true

By GAIL BURKE

Microsurgery is not new, but today at Parkview Hospital the procedure stretched across a new horizon.

Dr. Luis Montaldo, who specializes in obstetrics and gynecology, and his new associate, Dr. Ricardo Cecchini, used the new surgical technique in an operation on Maureen Dickinson in hopes of making a dream come true.

Athough Mrs. Dickinson has two sons, she is sterile. She wants another child.

And, if all goes well, Midland's first microsurgical procedure to reverse a tubal ligation may allow Mrs. Dickinson to have the baby she wants.

The 23-year-old decided to have a tubal ligation in May 1981 after giving birth to her youngest son. Since then, Mrs. Dickinson and her husband decided they wanted to try for a girl. When they heard that Montaldo could perform a reversal operation with microsurgery, Mrs. Dickinson contacted him almost every day.

However, the equipment for the surgery was not available in Midland — not until Dick Liley, Parkview administrator, was allocated the funds by the facility's owners to purchase the $27,000 microscope with attachments. Besides the high powered microscope, fine-quality microsurgical instruments are needed to allow the precise, secure

Decision due soon on para-legal's access to jail inmates

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

In a case precipitated by personal animosity between Chief of Police Wayne Gideon and former officer James McFadden, Federal Judge Lucius Bunton is expected to rule shortly on whether or not para-legals should have the same access to jail inmates that lawyers do.

McFadden, who has been publicly critical of the administration of the police department, resigned from the force a year ago in a demotion dispute and is now a para-legal for the law firm of Lynch, Chappell, Allday and Alsup. He had been with the department 16 years.

He filed suit a month ago after being denied access to one of his firm's clients, federal prisoner Lewis Eugene Gregg.

In the suit, McFadden claims he had visited Gregg on several occasions in connection with Gregg's appeal of a parole revocation, but was told June 16 he was "barred from entering the jail pursuant to an order of the Defendant, Wayne Gideon, which order only permits licensed attorneys to enter the jail to speak with prisoners."

McFadden also alleges that the order, which has since been partially rescinded by Gideon, "is being primarily directed at him and is being used to unlawfully interfere with his right to earn a living and be free of governmental interference in his chosen profession."

A week-long series of meetings and discussions between Gideon and other city officials resulted in a modified policy whereby para-legals are now allowed to visit clients at the client's request from 2 p.m to 4 p.m. weekdays. The new policy went into effect about June 26 — the same day the suit was filed.

During a three-hour, non-jury hearing Thursday afternoon, Judge Bunton heard testimony from several current and former police officers, including ex-jailer S.J. Young.

Young told the court no written policy on prisoner visits by legal aides existed during his six-year tenure with the department. He also said there had been "some conflict" between Gideon and McFadden and that he had heard Gideon occasionally refer to McFadden as "a sorry son-of-a-bitch."

Gideon testified, however, that he had had no previous experience with para-legals and that manpower and security considerations alone prompted the new policy.

"I think it would be a dangerous precedent to have just anyone come in and say they're a para-legal," he added. He also said he didn't recall calling McFadden names and that the policy was not directed solely at McFadden, but to "para-legals in general."

Gideon also denied telling one of McFadden's lawyers in a phone conversation that if he had to admit McFadden to the jail, he would cancel the city's government contract to house federal prisoners, thereby forcing local attorneys to drive to Pecos to visit their clients — an apparent reference to a contract the government has with the Reeves County jail.

In other testimony, Kimberly Gray said she worked in the department's radio room from 1978 to 1980 and had once been denied a promotion because she and her husband were friends of McFadden. She and her husband, former officer Ronald Gray, both resigned from the force.

Other testimony disclosed that bail bondsmen, mental health workers and the clergy have relatively free access to prisoners and that the code of federal prison regulations and recent high court decisions have given para-legals virtually the same status as attorneys when it comes to visiting prisoners.

Foreign policy haunts Reagan in Europe

By R. GREGORY NOKES

WASHINGTON (AP) — An unraveling of American foreign policy that Alexander M. Haig Jr. blamed for his resignation as secretary of state appears now to be haunting the Reagan administration in Europe.

The decision by the French government Thursday to ignore President Reagan's attempt to block European participation in construction of a natural gas pipeline from the Soviet Union to Europe has cast a pall over U.S.-European relations.

"The government cannot accept the unilateral measures taken by the United States on June 18," said a brief statement from the office of Premier Pierre Mauroy.

French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson said the United States and Europe are undergoing a "progressive divorce."

"There is a remarkable incomprehension between the United States and Europe," he said. "The United States seems totally indifferent to our problems."

HAIG RESIGNED partly because Reagan overruled him on the pipeline issue. Haig felt it would be too damaging to U.S.-European relations and that Washington probably couldn't stop it anyway.

He also believed the administration's decision to lift the grain embargo against the Soviets last year, which he also opposed, undermined the credibility of U.S. arguments for the Europeans to stop the pipeline.

About 20 European firms have contracts worth an estimated $11 billion to help build the pipeline, which is scheduled for completion in 1984. Thousands of jobs are at stake in Europe at a time when unemployment is at a post-war high.

Reagan's action, which was announced on June 18, would prevent European companies from using U.S.-licensed equipment in the pipeline. It was one of the penalties he imposed against the Soviet Union because of the martial law crackdown in Poland.

Reagan also said he was worried that the Europeans would become too dependent on Soviet gas and the Soviets would benefit too much from the deal.

But some senior U.S. officials are convinced Reagan didn't know how important the project is to the depressed economies of Western Europe — as well as a source of future energy.

"THE PRESIDENT is in sort of a box," one official said in a recent interview. "I don't think he realized the implications of this for the Europeans." He said the staff of the National Security Council may not have told Reagan everything he needed to know.

Several officials and experts think the administration is frantically looking for an excuse to reverse the decision without acknowledging it made a mistake. But another said he thinks the action stemmed from Reagan's instinctive anti-Communist, anti-Soviet bias and he wouldn't easily change it.

Haig had charged in his June 25 resignation statement that the administration was wandering from the "careful course" that was needed for a clear and consistent American foreign policy.

Reagan not surprisingly disagreed at a news conference five days later. And in a statement, he declared the administration had "largely eliminated" the disarray that had plagued U.S.-European relations under President Carter and that the Europeans "have confidence in us once again."

But there has been more dismay than confidence lately.

West Germany applauded the French announcement that it has ordered a French manufacturer, Alsthom-Atlantique, to go ahead with deliveries of pipeline rotors developed by the General Electric Co. The French company is licensed by GE to make the rotors, which will be used in gas turbine engines that will pump gas through the pipeline.

BRITAIN ANNOUNCED it "sympathizes with the French action" and Italy stood by its position that the sanctions would damage Italian-American relations.

The White House reacted cautiously to the French announcement, but officials said it wouldn't change Reagan's mind either. "Certainly we will enforce the law," said deputy press secretary Larry Speakes. "There are things we can do."

There were suggestions the United States might try to impose stiff civil and criminal penalties against companies and officers who ignored the pipeline boycott. Foreign companies could be denied U.S. exports and technology.

Dean Fischer, the State Department's chief spokesman, said the United States regretted the French decision, as well as Cheysson's remark that U.S.-European relations were on the verge of divorce.

"We regret very much that Foreign Minister Cheysson has chosen to describe the current strain between the United States and its European partners in polemical terms," Fischer said.

Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee on Europe, said the decision by the French means that "we are going to have to concentrate on France for the moment."

Baby sitter charged with murder

By MELISSA JOHNSON

BLOUNTSTOWN, Fla. (AP) — Two prosecutors say they will decide soon whether to file additional charges against a 19-year-old baby sitter accused of killing two of the five children who have died while in her care.

Christine Falling was being held without bail at the Calhoun County Jail on first-degree murder charges in the deaths of 2-month-old Travis Coleman on July 3 and 2-year-old Cassidy "Muffin" Johnson in February 1980. Both children were from Blountstown, where Miss Falling lives in a trailer with a man named Robert Johnson.

State Attorney Jim Appleman of Marianna said the cause of death in both cases was "strangulation and-or suffocation."

Prosecutors in two other Florida towns where three more children died while in Miss Falling's care said Thursday they would examine evidence before deciding whether to file charges.

Assistant State Attorney Alex Prins of Live Oak said no decision would be made there until next week. His office has jurisdiction over Perry, where one of the five children died.

State Attorney Quillian Yancey of Lakeland in central Florida said no decision would be made before late today. Two children died in his jurisdiction.

Representatives from all three towns where the deaths occurred met Thursday in Tallahassee, said William Braatz, a spokesman for the statewide Medical Examiners Commission.

Miss Falling was arrested early Thursday shortly after being discharged from Tallahassee Memorial Regional Medical Center, where she voluntarily underwent psychiatric evaluation at a mental health unit for more than a week. She had previously submitted to medical tests and was given a clean bill of health.

After the arrest, Miss Falling declined to talk to reporters on the advice of her court-appointed lawyer, public defender Virgil Mayo, who would say only that his client was "upset" by the charges.

"Her reaction fit the picture of a person who is a seventh-grade dropout, who probably has mental problems — upset," he said.

The Johnson baby was the first of the five to die. After four hours with the sitter, she was rushed from Blountstown to a Tallahassee hospital where she died. Encephalitis, a brain inflammation, had been blamed in the death.

A year later, cousins Jeffrey Michael Davis, 4, and Joseph Spring, 2, both of Lakeland, died a few days apart. Those deaths were attributed to myocarditis, an inflammation of the heart muscle.

A few months later, 8-month-old Jennifer Daniels of Perry died in Miss Falling's arms in the presence of the child's mother, Geneva Burnett — who also was the mother of Joseph Spring. The Daniels death was attributed to Sudden Infant Death Syndrome, or crib death.

Betty Daniels, Ms. Burnett's sister, said she was saddened to hear about the charges.

"I don't feel like that girl did it," she said in a telephone interview. "I hope they find her not guilty when she goes to court."

Miss Falling, a heavy-set, junior high school dropout who has epilepsy, has said she was confused by the deaths.

"I've been through it with five young 'uns," she once said in an interview. "I don't know what's happening. It's enough to get you scared."

Christine Falling

Miss Falling has spent most of her life in poor rural communities of north Florida. She was reared by foster parents and drifted between friends and family. Public defender Mayo said she was a victim of child abuse, but he declined to elaborate.

Slight chance of rain forecast for area

Skies should be partly cloudy with only a very slight chance of thunderstorms tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

The chance of rain is less than 20 percent. The low temperature is expected to drop into the upper 60s. Winds should be easterly at 5-10 mph.

Saturday should be fair in the morning and partly cloudy and hot in the afternoon. The high temperature should be in the middle 90s and winds should be southeasterly at 5-15 mph.

Thursday's high temperature of 95 was eight degrees cooler than the record high temperature of 103, set in 1981. The overnight low of 68 was 15 degrees warmer than the record low of 53, set in 1978.

Weidenbaum latest economist to exit administration

WASHINGTON (AP) — The man who serves as chief White House economist is leaving his post reportedly because of mounting frustration that President Reagan prefers to follow his own economic convictions.

Murray L. Weidenbaum is the latest — and highest ranking — economic policy-maker to exit the administration in less than a year. His resignation as chairman of the president's Council of Economic Advisers was revealed by Reagan Thursday night during a trip to St. Louis.

Administration officials close to Weidenbaum said he has decided to return to his teaching post in St. Louis in part because of his inability to set economic policy for the administration.

"The president is very much in charge of economic policy," said one Weidenbaum associate who did not want his name used. "This president feels that he has a great deal of interest in economics and is not open to a change in course from his senior economic advisers."

The associate and other officials involved in economic policy said Weidenbaum's unexpected departure was not precipitated by any single incident or policy clash. One official noted that the economist has been unhappy for some time that the president refused to go along with budget changes to reduce the record deficits the government now faces for 1983 and beyond.

WEIDENBAUM IS THE second member of the three-man Council of

AP News Analysis

Economic Advisers to resign his post within the past month and the seventh economic policy-maker to leave the administration since late last year.

Council member Jerry Jordan, who previously announced he is leaving at the end of this month for personal reasons, was quoted in the latest edition of Time magazine as saying that "you have got to remember that the president himself has set economic policy, and he is so incredibly consistent that it really does not matter who the subalterns, or lieutenants, are."

Sources said Reagan had been expected to name Brown University professor William Poole to replace Jordan on the council. It was not known whether Poole might wind up replacing Weidenbaum or if Reagan had another candidate in mind.

In St. Louis, deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said Reagan is considering "four or five" people in the search for a replacement for Weidenbaum. Speakes said there was nothing "untoward" about Weidenbaum's resignation and added, "I defy you to read into this a policy dispute of any kind."

Asked about the impact of Weidenbaum's leaving on future policy, Speakes said, "I don't think it will have any impact."

OTHER DEPARTED economic advisers have included Myer Rashish, undersecretary of state for economic affairs, and his deputy, Robert Hormats, assistant secretary for economic and business affairs; Martin Anderson, the president's chief domestic policy adviser; and the top two advocates of "supply-side" economics in the Treasury Department, Norman Ture, undersecretary for tax policy, and Paul Craig Roberts, assistant secretary for economic policy.

Even Alexander M. Haig Jr.'s recent departure as secretary of state is believed to have been triggered in part by a dispute with the president's decision to block plans by Western Europe to help the Soviet Union build a natural gas pipeline to Europe.

Ture was unhappy with the presidential decision to go along with the plan for raising taxes in 1983 to reduce the size of the projected deficit, now expected to substantially exceed $100 billion.

Man critically injured in wreck

ODESSA — One man was critically injured and another escaped injury when their vehicles collided here shortly before 9 p.m. Thursday.

In critical condition at Medical Center Hospital this morning was 42-year-old Kenneth Ray Ross of Odessa. He suffered multiple internal injuries when his 1982 Buick and a 1978 Ford pickup truck driven by T.J. Thigton, no age available, also of Odessa, collided at the intersection of 87th Street and Andrews Highway about 8:50 p.m.

According to the Department of Public Safety, Ross was eastbound on 87th and was attempting to cross Andrews Highway when his car was struck broadside by Thigton's truck. Thigton was southbound on Andrews Highway at the time. He was not injured.

Decision due in McFadden suit

McCall, argued during summation that: "The basic question here is the right of prisoner access to the courts. They (prisoners) have the right to effective legal counsel, including the right of counsel to use para-legals. Attorneys have busy schedules and don't always have time to visit their clients."

Charles Tighe, hired as defense attorney by the city, told the court in his summatition: "Para-legals are a new and sometimes difficult-to-describe animal. They may come in droves later."

Tighe also argued that the new visitation policy does not impose unreasonable restrictions on para-legals.

In taking the case under advisement, Judge Bunton said: "It's obvious this is a personal conflict between the two individuals. I do think attorneys have a right to use para-legals, but restrictions are necessary — as long as they're reasonable."

Also at issue in the suit are allegations of poor health and safety conditions in the jail, which houses federal prisoners on a temporary basis for the government.

Commenting on that aspect of the case, Bunton said, "I don't want to run the city jail by dotting every 'i' and crossing every 't'."

Bunton indicated he would reach a formal decision sometime next week.

handling of the flimsy, delicate tissue. The scope also allows the use of miniaturized sutures with minimum trauma.

Carolyn Hilliard, a registered nurse who works in Montaldo's office and assisted him this morning with the surgical procedure, said the new suture materials which can be fabricated in near-microscopic diameter are non-absorbable and relatively free of causing reactive inflammation.

"This procedure is less traumatic to the tissue and the doctor has better visualization of the field," she said.

Microsurgery is a new horizon for gynecology. The vast numbers of tubal sterilizations performed every year have created a significant demand for reversal, according to Ms. Hilliard.

The tubal ligation in the female now rivals the vasectomy in popularity as a method of permanent sterilization.

"They change their minds," Ms. Hilliard said, referring to a small percentage of patients who later regret their decision to be sterilized and request a reversal operation.

According to statistics, the microsurgical reversal of sterilization in females is increasingly successful.

Compared to other specialties, the introduction of microsurgery into gynecology occurred relatively recently. But in the last five years, there has been an overwhelming interest in gynecological microsurgery.

"Dr. Montaldo and Dr. Cecchini both attended seminars and lab workshops in California and Oklahoma where they practiced the procedure," Ms. Hilliard said.

However, the operation has been known to be successful without the application of magnification techniques.

Ms. Hilliard said Montaldo performed a tubal ligation reversal without the use of a microscope in January and the woman is now pregnant.

Microsurgery in gynecology is not only limited to reversing tubal ligations, but also important in cases of infertility. It has been reported that the pregnancy rates achieved through the application of microsurgical techniques to infertility problems have doubled compared with using similar techniques performed without the aid of magnification.

Ms. Hilliard said Montaldo and Cecchini are "very happy and excited" about the possibilities that can be achieved with the use of the equipment now housed at Parkview.

Officials hunt for suspects in slaying of Salvadorans

RICHMOND, Texas (AP) — Authorities still are searching for suspects in the slayings of four Salvadoran aliens smuggled into the United States from Mexico.

The bodies of four Salvadorans were found in Fort Bend County last week and two unidentified Hispanic men were found in Brazoria County on Sunday. All of the victims had been shot in the head.

Authorities said they believe the victims were aliens being smuggled into Texas by "coyotes", or traffickers in human workers.

The deputies on Monday arrested Pedro Hernandez, 27, who is being held in Fort Bend County jail on four charges of aggravated kidnapping. His bond has been set at $50,000 on each charge.

Fort Bend County Sheriff Ervin Hurta said his deputies are now looking for other suspects in the case.

Rapist gets probated sentence

An 18-year-old Midland man, who pleaded guilty to raping two Greenwood teen-age girls after one of the rape-of-child cases ended in a hung jury last week, on Thursday was placed on a 10-year probated sentence by 142nd State District Court Judge Pat Baskin, was fined $500 and ordered to serve 30 days in the Midland County Jail.

The accused, Eric Portillo, admitted that he had sexual intercourse with the girls, then ages 13 and 14, last March 1 when they skipped school.

By state law, a minor — under age 17 — legally cannot consent to having sex.

Testimony in the jury trial, which ended in a mistrial after the jury could not agree on a verdict, indicated that the girls were willing to and did engage in sex with Portillo and his 15-year-old cousin in a Midland apartment in somewhat of a sex orgy heightened by marijuana smoking.

Assistant District Attorney David Joers prosecuted the case.

Portillo, who excelled in boxing and swimming, told the court that he is married and "I've got a 10-month-old (baby) and another on the way."

He said he now regrets the March 1 affair.

"Yes sir, I'm sorry," Portillo said under questioning by defense attorney Edward T. Garza. "I was at the wrong place at the wrong time."

"You know," Garza said, "you have disappointed your friends, your mother, your wife, and other relatives?"

"Yes, sir."

"They have been extremely supportive throughout this ordeal," the lawyer said.

"Yes, sir," replied the defendant. "Especially my wife."

After Portillo was returned to jail, Garza said that his youthful client was a high-school drop-out who easily excelled in sports. "He got bored." He said Portillo was an achiever and was "bright."

Burn victim satisfactory

A Midland man was in satisfactory condition at Midland Memorial Hospital today after suffering first- and second-degree flash burns in a garage explosion and fire Thursday.

According to fire department reports, W.C. "Dub" Calhoun, 704 Lanham St., lit a cigarette upon entering his one-stall garage, igniting gas fumes leaking from two open gas cans. Calhoun, 61, received burns to his arms, back and face.

A 1978 Cadillac parked inside the unattached, wooden garage sustained heavy fire damage. A mandoor and an overhead door were torn loose by the blast, which hurled glass and wood chunks toward the street.

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A 41-year-old uncle who refused to commit himself for psychiatric treatment and who declined a probation offer after he allegedly exposed his genitals to his 13-year-old niece last May 16 instead opted for a jury trial and got the maximum punishment: a 20-year penitentiary sentence.

The sentence meted the defendant, John Lee Cook, indicates a strong community stance against sex-related crimes against children, said District Attorney Vern Martin.

"There has been kind of a wave fulminating this kind of activity," District Attorney Vern Martin said Thursday after 238th State District Court Judge Vann Culp had sentenced Cook to 20 years in the Texas Department of Corrections.

"IT MAY BE," Martin said, "people are more prone to report the crimes." But the statement issued by the three-man, nine-woman jury is "that the public is not going to put up with it (sexual abuse of children)," Martin theorized.

The 20-year prison term given Cook will convert to six or seven years of actual time served in prison and reflects an enhancement due to Cook's burglary conviction about 18 years ago. Normally, exposure — indecency with a child — is an offense punishable by a maximum 10-year sentence. However, a prior conviction may extend the range of punishment from two years to 20 years.

Cook lived on Midland's eastside with his sister, the girl's mother; with the girl's grandmother and about 12 other relatives, including sisters and brothers. He stayed in the basement of the house, painted signs for a living, and otherwise "came and went" as a member of the household, said Assistant District Attorney Steve Bruneman, who prosecuted the case.

THE CASE BEGAN on the early morning hours of a weekend after the niece had fallen asleep on the living room floor while watching television, Bruneman said. Cook allegedly knelt over the lying girl while she slept, awakened her and exposed himself.

The prosecution contended that the uncle "tried to arouse and gratify himself, and he got caught," Bruneman said. "The jury believed it."

But the uncle and his defense attorneys, Richard Graham and Vernon Reichle, claimed otherwise. They maintained that Cook, who had been "out on the town" earlier that night, had emerged from the basement to use the restroom, and then in reaching toward the television set, he tripped on his sleeping niece, stumbled, awakened and startled her. What she saw, Cook said, when his niece look toward his pants, was the dangling end of his black belt. In turn, the frightened niece fled to her consoling grandmother and then to her mother, who called police.

"Her (the girl's) mother got 'hot,' " Bruneman said, and screamed at her brother: " 'You've been messing with my child' "

" 'Naw,' " replied Cook.

" 'I ought to kill you,' " the girl's mother told her brother, " 'but I'm going to call the police.' "

THE POLICE arrived, obtained the girl's and mother's version of what happened, escorted the uncle to a waiting police car, and arrested Cook for public intoxication. He dozed off in the patrol car, Bruneman said.

In reaching a verdict, the jury weighed the testimony of the girl, her mother, a police officer, the accused, and the arguments and reasoning of the defense and prosecuting attorneys.

The jury deliberated about 40 minutes before reaching a guilty verdict, and spent 2½ hours in deciding punishment. The uncle was "kind of indifferent" to the jury's findings, Bruneman said.

The prosecutor said the jury foreman, in explaining the relative severity of punishment, reasoned: " 'There are some things you don't do in West Texas, and one is you don't mess with the children.' "

Bruneman said the niece "liked" her uncle before the incident.

"She was a cute girl," he said. "Very likable. She was a real good witness."

In the initial stages of the case, Bruneman said, the girl's family wanted "psychiatric help" for Cook. "They (also) wanted him out of the house. They didn't care whether he went to the penitentiary or not."

But when trial time approached this week, the mother, grandmother and the girl apparently decided not to testify. In turn, though, Bruneman had subpoenas issued; they were served by DA Investigator Robert Settles.

Prior to the trial, psychiatric examinations indicated that the uncle was competent to stand trial and that there was no legal or medical reason to have him committed to Big Spring State Hospital for treatment.

However, Bruneman said, the defendant was offered a chance to commit himself for treatment and thereby bypass the trial; he declined. He also turned down plea-bargaining offers to serve two years in prison and even probation in exchange for a guilty plea. But Bruneman speculated that the judge probably would not have gone along with a probated sentence for the defendant.

Communication creates conflict in war

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — If a nuclear war ever started with the Soviet Union and an American president were trying to stop it, how would he communicate with Soviet leaders whose headquarters and communications systems may have been destroyed by rapidly counter-attacking American missiles?

"There's a real dilemma here that we haven't sorted out," according to retired Air Force Lt. Gen. Brent Scowcroft, the former top national security assistant to President Ford.

The conflict is essentially between an emerging American military strategy that now puts heavy emphasis upon knocking out what Reagan White House adviser Richard Pipes calls "the nerve system of the Soviet leadership" and what Scowcroft points out is a presidential need to "commmunicate with the enemy" after an attack has begun.

THE DILEMMA, in Scowcroft's words, is that "the kinds of controlled nuclear options to which we are moving presume communications with the Soviet Union; and yet, from a military point of view, one of the most efficient kinds of attack is against leadership and command and control systems. It's much easier than trying to take out each and every bit of the enemy's offensive forces."

The remarks of Scowcroft, Pipes and many other top military and civilian officials are contained in a just-released record of a symposium held last October on strategic nuclear policies, weapons and command and control that was sponsored by the U.S. Air Force Electronic Systems Division and the Mitre Corp., an Air Force think tank, at Bedford, Mass.

The symposium was held just two weeks after President Reagan announced a six-year, $180 billion program to modernize U.S. strategic forces with new missiles and bombers. That program includes an $18 billion investment to try to improve presidential control over those weapons, to help the president communicate with those forces and to give him the information he needs in the midst of the chaos of an atomic war.

At the same time, the United States is moving toward a strategy aimed at convincing the Soviets that they could not win a war because this country would retaliate against the Soviet command structure.

"THE SOVIET UNION would launch a preemptive nuclear strike against the United States out of the blue, no matter what the balance of power is. I just don't think that is in the cards. The great danger is that, in a world crisis in which there is an escalation of hostility between our two countries and where both begin to alert the forces and so on — where indeed war between us becomes possible — at that particular point they might strike preemptively," he added.

Scowcroft says that even if a nuclear attack were to come in the midst of a deep crisis, it would still, because of the magnitude of such a step, come as a surprise and the president "may have less than 10 minutes in which to make a decision and seek shelter."

The president then has to convince himself that an attack is actually en route. "Unless the Soviets are a lot dumber than I think they are, they will take that into account in planning their attack ... and do their best to make the first indications as ambiguous as possible and thus force the president to take as much time as possible and thus lessen the chances we would respond quickly," he says.

GETTING THE PRESIDENT the kinds of information he needs is a difficult task, Scowcroft says, and he will need to consult advisers who may not be available. If the president stays in Washington and would-be successors such as the vice president are dispersed to secret locations with their advisers, this would deplete the experts available to the president in Washington and raise the question about whether military command centers would know who the president or top civilian authority is at any given time after an attack begins.

When the missiles have actually begun to land, Scowcroft says, the United States would be in what he calls "the automatic phase of the war ... at which time the quick response (retaliatory) systems are discharged against predetermined targets and the battle plan unfolds more or less automatically." In other words, the initial presidential determination that the United States was under attack and his decision to respond would trigger a quick and automatic American response of some predetermined size.

The next phase would be trying to manage the conflict or terminate it, and for that the president will need to communicate with the remaining forces, the American people and the Soviets, Scowcroft says. That's where the new strategy of striking the Soviet leadership, as they might strike ours, bumps into the problem of ending the war.

Rear Adm. Paul D. Tomb, a member of the staff of the military Joint Chiefs of Staff, told the symposium that "unless all elements of our nuclear triad (land- and submarine-based missiles and bombers) receive the message prior to impact of Soviet reentry vehicles (missile warheads) we risk losing large segments of our retaliatory force."

ONE BIG QUESTION has always been whether messages would get to U.S. missile-firing submarines submerged in distant waters.

But Tomb describes several means to do this. Extremely low frequency transmitters based on land, he said, are not very good message carriers because the information moves slowly. But they are "very good bell ringers" to submarine commanders because they send out a continuous signal that is part of the Joint Alerting Network. If that stops it means that the transmitter may have been wiped out and tells the commander to try another method to receive information.

The next most reliable system would be picking up very low frequency (VLF) transmissions from Navy airplanes or other transmitters using three different kinds of other antennae carried on submarines, including wire devices and special buoys.

If that doesn't work, Tombs said a submarine can come close to the surface, pop another antenna just above the water, and communicate via a Navy satellite that is part of the Submarine Systems Intelligence Exchange System. The commander could also come close to the surface and, with a radio antenna, monitor war messages being broadcast to surface ships on high frequency.

The symposium also was told by Navy officers that the extent of the Reagan administration's plan to put thousands of new cruise missiles on submarines, especially those to be aimed against land rather shipping targets, came as somewhat of a surprise.

Civil law to remove graffiti

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — The multicolored graffiti that gangs paint on walls and streets in this city resemble scars on an old battlefield. They are thick on the borders of gang turf, where rivals spend sometimes bloody nights trying to paint out each other's slogans.

But Los Angeles officials have begun a novel attempt to use two obscure bits of civil law as a weapon to remove the graffiti, and perhaps also to ease the community fears and violence that often go along with the garish scribblings.

City Attorney Ira Reiner, who thought up the anti-graffiti strategy, said in an interview that laws in other states could allow similar attacks on what is a common big-city blight.

Beginning Thursday, Los Angeles will file test suits charging three major gangs and their adult members with being "unincorporated associations" guilty of civil contempt by making a public nuisance.

"They think they are the authority in those neighborhoods, not the police," said Reiner, who sees the effort as much more than a neighborhood beautification project. He and other city officials said they had found almost unanimous support for an anti-graffiti campaign when they circulated petitions in some affected neighborhoods.

"Many people didn't want to sign the petition simply because they said they were afraid of the gangs," Reiner said.

The police have counted 110 gangs in Los Angeles with a total estimated membership of 20,000, about 75 percent of whom are adults. Most are based in predominantly Latino or black neighborhoods, and their shootouts regularly bring death and injury.

The three gangs to be named in the suits — the Dogtown gang north of downtown, the Primera Flats gang south of downtown and the 62nd Street Crips in south-central Los Angeles — are particularly long-lived, well-structured organizations with a reputation for intimidating their neighbors through graffiti.

Reiner said he would attempt to prove that the graffiti are covered under a state law making certain signs and advertising a public nuisance. Then, in the most unprecedented and difficult part of the legal maneuver, he must convince a judge that the gangs are legal entities, "unincorporated associations," and thus can be sued and each of their members be made liable for other members' "tortious acts."

If convinced, the judge could order the gang members to clean up their graffiti and if they don't, convict them of civil contempt and sentence them to five days in jail. After two or three such jail penalties without result, Reiner said, he could then ask a judge to put gang members under indefinite detention.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Bleomycin effective wart treatment

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've had a wart on the sole of my foot for some time and I guess I've been to the doctor about it a dozen times. The bottom line is that the wart is still there. Is this something I just have to learn to live with or is there some treatment for it? I hear so much about medical miracles, why can't something be done about a wart? — Pamela, Salt Lake City, Utah

Dear Pamela: Sometimes relatively simple conditions, such as the common cold, are more difficult to treat than major diseases. However, there may be hope for you.

Dr. W. Mitchel Sams, Jr., chairman of the department of dermatology at the University of Alabama School of Medicine in Birmingham, has reported on what he calls a very effective treatment for plantar warts (warts on the sole of the foot). Specifically, he says that injection of a drug called bleomycin may be helpful.

You may conclude that if bleomycin is that effective, it must be a potent drug. In fact, some doctors may feel that the risks of using bleomycin outweigh its benefits. However, you might want to ask your doctor if this form of treatment is indicated in your case.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am in my fifth month of pregnancy and I have developed a number of dark spots on my body. Is there anything I can do to get rid of them, or should I just wait? — Mrs. N.T., Morganton, N.C.

Dear Mrs. T.: It is not unusual for skin changes to occur during pregnancy, and the condition you describe is fairly common. Dr. Victor D. Newcomer, of the University of California, Los Angeles, School of Medicine, says that if the problem is a minor one, the best treatment is probably no treatment. Sunscreens can be employed to help prevent further pigmentation and cosmetics can be used to mask the discoloration if it is extensive. Most skin changes disappear following delivery.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My whole family is on a diet kick these days, and I've been trying to cut down on calories every way I can. But I tried cooking with a diet margarine and it was a disaster. Would a different brand bring me any better luck? — Mrs. M.Y. Rochester, N.Y.

Dear Mrs. Y.: A change in brands will probably not make any difference. Diet margarines contain much more water than the regular types, and usually do not cook well.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've been told I have gout, and my doctor is sending me to a kidney specialist. Does that mean that gout damages the kidneys? — Sam, Denver, Colo.

Dear Sam: Recent studies suggest that gout rarely causes kidney damage in the absence of other kidney disease. The referral to the nephrologist is probably a prècautionary measure, since gout is a very treatable condition.

For H.B. (San Francisco): For motivated people, my stop smoking shots work well. I couple the shots in the arm with a nicotine cleansing diet and instruction on behavioral modification. You should not gain weight if you stay on my special diet for one month after you stop smoking. For more information, see my new book, "Stop Smoking — Lose Weight."

Polish leader opts for 'Hungarian solution'

Hearst Feature Service

PARIS — Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski's decision to release two-thirds of those who have been detained under martial law since last December and otherwise "normalize" conditions means he has opted for an "Hungarian solution" to Poland's ongoing crisis.

"The idea is to eliminate the opposition by ignoring it," according to Jerzy Bilinski, a former Warsaw journalist now in exile here. "The regime will simply act from now on as though everything is normal even if it is not. The pretense gradually can accustom people to believe it's true, as long as no serious disturbances occur."

That was the approach adopted by Hungary's party chief, Janos Kadar, soon after his country's devastating anti-communist revolt a quarter-century ago. It has been applied uninterruptedly there ever since with notable success.

Polish observers believe Jaruzelski's announcement this week that "most detainees" were being freed, restrictions on foreign travel lifted and other oppressive measures eased means he has consciously decided to follow the Hungarian model.

"He is obviously gambling that the Polish people have lost their taste for violent opposition," Bilinski said.

He warned that behind the facade of normality key detainees like Solidarity founder Lech Walesa will be kept out of sight until they ultimately lose influence and are forgotten. "Troublemakers" will continue to risk prison or, as has been increasingly the case, confinement as "psychiatric" cases.

As far as the Solidarity independent trade union movement is concerned, Bilinski predicted it will remain outlawed. He said it would not be made legal again even in much-diminished form.

"The entire strategy will be meant to show the Poles that they can get along better without Solidarity and the constant restiveness it provoked," he explained. "Individual Solidarity members who display contrition will be allowed to resume union activity, but only under new rules. Jaruzelski assumes Solidarity in time will become nothing more than a faint and little-regretted memory for the average person. Human nature being what it is, maybe he'll be proved right."

In place of Solidarity, the Polish authorities have launched a major campaign to rehabilitate "non-political" horizontal unions — that is, associations of workers organized on a plant and industry basis, instead of regionally as was Solidarity. In the communist system, horizontal unions, easily kept under authority's thumb, are the only acceptable ones.

Jarulzelski indicated last week that workers who go along will get a sweetener in the form of wage concessions and progressively improved working conditions. In short, they are being promised what Solidarity struggled to obtain without the risks of Solidarity.

But, as Bilinski and other observers pointed out, Jaruzelski can't succeed unless he restores some form of political dialogue with those outside the regime. The dialogue with Solidarity destroyed, something else must take its place.

Jaruzelski told the nation that the forum for a new dialogue will be a "Patriotic Commission of National Renewal," but was vague about who would be included in it.

Bilinski said that all signs suggest the principal interlocutor sought by Jaruzelski is the Catholic Church. The latter, he thinks, has not yet made up its mind but will have to do so before Pope John Paul II finally makes his second pilgrimmage to his native land. In a move not unconnected with this week's political developments, the papal visit, originally planned for next month, has been postponed until 1983.

Papal return put off

ROME (AP) — Archbishop Jozef Glemp said today that Pope John Paul II probably will return to Poland between May and September 1983.

Poland's Roman Catholic primate, in Rome since July 5 for consultations with the pope, spoke to reporters before departing for Warsaw.

Airport officials said Jozsef Czyrek, who was removed as foreign minister Wednesday, flew back aboard the same flight. Czyrek had met with Pope John Paul on Tuesday to discuss the pontiff's plans to visit Poland. Czyrek is still in charge of foreign relations for the Polish Communist Party.

The pope had hoped to make the visit to his homeland next month, but Glemp announced earlier this week that the trip was postponed. He said the church did not want the visit to take place in a period of "nervousness and excitement."

"I cannot give a date but talks are already going on" for the visit, Glemp told reporters at the airport. "Eliminating the winter months, the visit will probably take place between May and September 1983."

Poland's Commmunist rulers announced earlier this week the release of 1,227 internees and a relaxation of some martial law regulations.

The first test of the Army's new Pershing II missile ended in failure as range safety destroyed the missile at 10,000 feet. The Pershing II is the second generation of nuclear-tipped missiles to be deployed in western Europe by late 1983.

AP Laserphoto

First Pershing-missile test failed

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The Army says it will go ahead with plans to launch a second Pershing II nuclear missile, even though the first of the $2 million weapons to be tested had to be destroyed shortly after launch.

Officials watching Thursday's test launch at the Air Force Missile Test Range here were "very, very disappointed" by the failure, said Col. William Fiorentino, manager of the Pershing project at the Redstone Arsenal in Huntsville, Ala.

The unarmed Pershing, which stands 34 feet high, began to shed fiery fragments like a Fourth of July sparkler as it rode a plume of white-hot exhaust after the 10:50 a.m. EDT launch.

"It was a good flight for 17 seconds and then there was a malfunction with the first-stage motors," Fiorentino said. "Just a few seconds after that, the range safety officer properly destroyed the missile."

Dave Harris, a spokesman for the Pershing project, said the missile already was coming apart before the safety officer hit the destruct button. But Harris said he wasn't sure if, at that point, the missile was self-destructing.

Burning missile fragments fell near the launch area and sparked a few short-lived brush fires. But the dummy warhead and guidance system landed offshore, in about 12 feet of water, officials said.

Air Force spokesman Maj. Jim Moore said about a dozen pieces of the missile were recovered Thursday and that a ship would try to recover the missile's nose cone today.

Fiorentino said it will be several days before officials determine what doomed the missile's first test launch. But he said the problem appeared to be in the propulsion system and it was "unlikely that it was a major problem."

The test was the first of 18 planned by the Pentagon. Fiorentino said the Army would go ahead with a second second test launch planned within 30 days unless the manufacturer, Martin-Marietta Aerospace of Orlando, determines there was a major problem with the missile.

The test drew sharp words from one Congressman critical of the $1 billion Pershing program.

"They're trying to sell something that isn't salable," said U.S. Rep. Joseph Addabbo, D-N.Y., chairman of the House Defense Appropriations subcommittee. "It's the biggest waste of defense dollars."

Had it been successful, the Pershing II would have struck a target in the Atlantic Ocean some 800 miles from here with accuracy greater than the Pershing I it replaces. The Pershing II has a range of 1,000 miles while its predecessor's range was 400 miles.

The Pershing II is to be deployed in West Germany in December 1983, the first new European-based nuclear missile to be aimed at Soviet targets in 20 years.

Anti-nuclear and peace groups have opposed plans already approved by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to deploy 108 Pershing II missiles and 464 ground-launched cruise missiles in Western Europe.

The Reagan administration has been pressing its allies not to waver from a 1979 decision to deploy the missiles, as a counter to Soviet SS-20 intermediate-range missiles which experts say can now threaten all of Western Europe.

Lawmakers deny funds for nerve gas weapons

By DON WATERS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Although the House has left most of President Reagan's military procurement budget unscathed, it slashed $54 million the administration wanted to start production of a new form of nerve gas weapons.

After a sometimes-emotional debate that dominated Thursday's floor action on a $177.1 billion defense authorization bill for fiscal 1983, the House voted 251-159 to deny the president his request for the money to begin making the nerve gas weapons.

Otherwise, the $86.7 billion procurement portion of the bill, which the House has been tackling, was untouched.

The closest challenge was Rep. Ronald Dellums' effort to cut out $4 billion earmarked for the B-1 strategic bomber. The California Democrat lost, 257-142.

Dellums also tried to delete the $6.8 billion earmarked for two nuclear-powered aircraft carriers, but he was on the short end of a 303-83 count.

After completing consideration of the procurement portion, the House set the defense bill aside late Thursday. It will return to the bill Tuesday, beginning with the section that authorizes spending on research and development programs.

When the entire bill is finished, it will be sent to a conference committee to be compromised with the Senate's version. The final product will be returned to both chambers for approval later this year.

Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich., lost 355-21 in his effort to eliminate all $10.5 billion in procurement money for nuclear weapons, including a Trident submarine, cruise, Pershing II and MX missiles and the B-1.

Those victories came atop administration successes Wednesday in turning back challenges to the start of production of the MX and of C-5B cargo planes in favor of the Boeing 747 jumbo jet.

The White House took an active role in helping its House allies achieve those successes, but a last minute lobbying effort to save the nerve gas plan fell short.

Reps. Clement Zablocki, D-Wis., and Ed Bethune, R-Ark., moved to cut out the weapons-production money on grounds that the program was not only unneeded but also would damage the U.S. image abroad and cause new strains with the European allies.

While the debate proceeded for several hours, Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger and national security adviser William P. Clark dispatched letters endorsing a rival measure that called merely for the Pentagon to destroy one chemical weapon in its current inventory for each new weapon produced.

A similar approach was approved narrowly by the Senate when it wrote its version of the defense bill in May, but the House effort by Rep. James Courter, R-N.J., failed, 225-192, and the winning vote on the Zablocki-Bethune amendment followed.

Reagan sought the $54 million as the down payment on a plan to produce binary weapons — so-called because they are composed of two separate containers of chemicals that mix in deadly combination only after the artillery shell or bomb in which they are packed are released.

The United States has not produced any chemical weapons since 1969. Advocates of the administration position say the Soviets have amassed a huge, modern inventory of nerve agents while the United States' aging stockpile has become increasingly dangerous and ineffective.

This country must have the strength to deter the Soviets from using the weapons first, they said.

WASHINGTON (AP) — A consumer group says it will sue the government unless a new arthritis drug, which has been associated with 45 deaths in Great Britain and one in the United States, is withdrawn from the American market.

Public Citizen's Health Research Group renewed on Thursday its appeal to Health and Human Services Secretary Richard S. Scwheiker to ban the drug Oraflex.

The drug, which also is known by the generic name benoxaprofen, is made by Eli Lilly and Co. of Indianapolis.

Sidney Wolfe, director the group, said that unless the drug is pulled from the American market by the end of the month, his group will ask the courts to bar sales.

When the consumer group first sought a ban on Oraflex last month, it cited 12 deaths in Great Britain that had been reported in the medical literature.

Despite new reports of deaths associated with the drug, Lilly contends Oraflex is "a safe and effective medication when taken in compliance with prescribing information."

"The incidence of serious adverse reactions with this drug is comparable to that of other drugs in this class, including aspirin," company spokesman Ron Culp said.

But Wolfe disagreed. He said its benefits — it is a once-a-day dose preparation — don't compensate for its problems.

Roger Miller, spokesman for the Food and Drug Administration, said patients taking Oraflex should seek their doctors' advice about whether to use the drug. A review that the FDA began when reports of Oraflex-associated deaths first were received is continuing, he said.

The company — at the FDA's urging — mailed physicians a notice last month suggesting that they reduce the doseage level of the drug for elderly patients from about 600 milligrams to about 300 milligrams. Most of the initial reports of death linked with Oraflex in Great Britain involved elderly persons.

The American woman who died was a 47-year-old resident of Las Vegas, Nev.

Her physician, Dr. Michael Rask, said in a telephone interview that she died at her home July 8 of liver failure after taking 600 milligrams of the drug daily.

"She was perfectly well otherwise except for rheumatoid arthritis. The only medicine she was taking was Oraflex. She went into liver failure after taking Oraflex a little over three weeks," he said.

"It is fraught with a great deal of other side effects. The chances of its helping a patient are less than its side effects," he said.

Rask said he has discontinued prescribing Oraflex for his other patients and is now unwilling to try any new arthritis preparation until it has been on the market for at least a year.

Oraflex was approved for sale in the United States on April 19 as a treatment for inflammation, pain and fever associated with arthritis. Its sales got off to a quick start, and 64,000 prescriptions were filled in its first three weeks on the market.

Oraflex has been sold in Great Britain for two years as Opren.

Nineteen of the 45 deaths recorded by the British government as being linked with Oraflex were from gastrointestinal hemorrhage or perforated ulcer, and 19 others were from liver or kidney damage.

Jazz saxophonist dies in Washington hospital

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jazz saxophonist Edward "Sonny" Stitt, a prolific recording artist and solo performer whose style resembled that of the late Charlie Parker, is dead at the age of 58.

Stitt died at Washington Hospital Center Thursday evening, according to Sue Thomas of the hospital's nursing office. Miss Thomas said Stitt had been admitted Monday, but would not discuss the cause of death.

Stitt replaced the legendary "Bird" Parker in trumpeter Dizzy Gillespie's combo in 1946, and he won the New Star award in the Esquire jazz poll the following year.

A week before Parker died in 1955, Parker told Stitt, "Man, I'm handing you the keys to the kingdom."

Stitt became an internationally respected soloist in the 1950s. He was featured on concert tours with Jazz at the Philmarmonic and toured Great Britain in 1958.

In one of his numerous appearances at the Newport Jazz Festival, he performed in a leading role in a presentation billed as "The Musical Life of Charlie Parker." He performed memorably at a tribute to Duke Ellington in New Haven, Conn., in 1973.

He made dozens of albums, some with himself as leader and others with Gillespie, Roy Eldridge, Bud Powell and Gene Ammons. He was also featured in "Jazz on a Summer's Day," a 1958 film made at the Newport Festival.

Stitt is survived by his wife, Pam, a daughter and a son. No funeral arrangements were announced.

Dish detergent's lemon smell 'too successful,' some say

PITTSBURGH (AP) — When Lever Brothers set out to make a dishwashing liquid that smelled like freshly sliced lemons, it succeeded all too well.

The National Poison Center reports that about 2,500 people across the country have mistakenly dribbled the new liquid into iced tea and over their salads and fish.

"People are using it for what you usually use lemon juice for," said Dr. Richard Moriarty, director of the National Poison Center Network in Pittsburgh.

"You won't die of it, that's true. You'd have to drown in it first. But people are reporting nausea, vomiting and some diarrhea up to a couple of hours afterward," he said.

For the past several months, Lever Brothers Co. of New York was distributing free samples of Sunlight, a new dishwashing liquid in a bright yellow plastic bottle with lemons on the label. The company, hoping to squeeze out its competitors, added lemon juice to the product.

Young Meese dies in auto accident

McLEAN, Va. (AP) — Scott Robert Meese, 19-year-old son of White House counselor Edwin Meese III, was fatally injured late Thursday when his car ran off a road and struck a tree in this Washington suburb, U.S. Park Police said today.

Officer John Nawrot said the youth, who had been alone in a compact car, was pronounced dead on arrival at Fairfax Hospital shortly after the 11:50 p.m. EDT wreck along George Washington Parkway.

"There were no signs of life" when police reached the scene, Nawrot said, adding that police pulled Meese from the vehicle just before the engine burst into flames.

Nawrot said the car "failed to negotiate a turn," left the roadway, skidded for 330 feet and slammed into a tree.

When learning of the death, President Reagan issued a statement saying, "Nancy and I are shocked and deeply saddened. Our hearts go out to Ed and Ursula who, with their family, are close and dear friends of ours."

CBS to broadcast study of Julliard

NEW YORK (AP) — One would expect the kind of kids CBS News profiles in a documentary Saturday night to be playing big-time college football, while getting the skimpiest of educations the rest of the week. If well-rounded students aren't found in Touchdown Tech, they aren't hanging out at the Juilliard School either.

"Juilliard and Beyond: A Life in Music" attests to the single-minded dedication and determination that makes virtuosos, not bon vivants or humanities majors. For the most part, these are driven individuals, playing their instruments night and day, less for love than for future riches and fame.

As narrator Charles Kuralt says: "They see their lives as deep in commerce. Juilliard is to the music industry what the Harvard Business School is to America's top 400 corporations.... Juilliard is best described as the world's most exclusive trade school."

Juilliard is an elite institution in New York City catering to child prodigies who study the classics, like Mozart and Beethoven. "All my life I've been playing the piano," says one student. "That's the only thing I know how to do really 'cause I'm not well-educated like these Harvard kids."

The broadcast, which examines the dreams and attitudes of several Juilliard students, is subtle and pleasing, although the subject matter isn't compelling enough to keep you home Saturday night. Then again, if you are indoors, it sure beats "Fantasy Island."

Perhaps it's because classical musicians take things so darn seriously, but the feeling one gets about Juilliard is that it's a pretty grim place. The students don't seem to have fun, and many of them approach their music all too clinically, without real emotional commitment.

Producers Perry Wolff and Shareen Blair Brysac focus on these youngsters as performers, not people. Consequently, they're less appealing than the happy-go-lucky high school performers from NBC's "Fame." If there is life away from practice, we barely see it.

There are two notable exceptions — Lisa Hansen and Charles Curtis.

Don't dither! East gave his opponents two chances in the bidding, then failed to extract retribution in the play.

It would have been wiser for East to bid five clubs immediately rather than wait to see what would develop. The fact that he held five-card support for the suit in which his partner had preempted weakened the hand's defensive prospects. Alternatively, he could have passed four hearts. South's pass of five clubs was an overbid. Since he had bid four hearts voluntarily, his pass was forcing, but he was probably the jack of diamonds and a trump short for that action. We applaud North's courageous jump to slam. Faith in partner's bidding can sometimes be a wonderful thing.

West led the king of clubs and declarer ruffed. Even if he could hold his diamond losers to one, declarer was still faced with the possible loss of a spade trick. The trump spots meant that he had only one entry to the table, so an end play had to be found.

Declarer drew two rounds of trumps, crossed to the ace of diamonds, and ruffed dummy's remaining club. Now he exited with a low diamond from his hand — his only chance for the contract was to find East now with the king alone. East won the king and was faced with the ugly prospect of giving declarer a ruff-and-sluff or breaking the spade suit. He elected to lead a spade away from the king. Declarer let that ride to dummy's jack, then took a spade finesse to land a very low percentage contract.

Note that declarer would be down if West held the king of diamonds or if East's king had been twice guarded. But even on the actual layout, East had the chance to defeat the slam. When declarer crossed to the ace of diamonds, East should have jettisoned his king. Then he would have been off the end play, and eventually he would have had to make a spade trick for a one-trick set.

Talk, but no action

President Ronald Reagan has said he, too, is in favor of enacting a constitutional amendment to balance the federal budget. It's good that he has thrown his support to the other forces clamoring for a balanced federal budget. But is a constitutional amendment really required? Would it really do any good?

We doubt it. What is needed is hard-nosed decisions by politicians concerned more with the nation's economic health than their own political futures. No constitutional amendment can guarantee that kind of selflessness.

Reagan, who was elected to the presidency on primarily domestic economic concerns, was successful in taking steps that helped to bring inflation under control. But that old bane of the United States economy — deficit government spending — is continuing virtually unabated. In fact, Reagan's 1983 federal budget contains an anticipated deficit spending figure of $100 billion — the largest in the nation's history.

The nation's lawmakers have always possessed the power to spend within the country's means. No constitutional amendment will change that ability. But deciding to cutback programs that affect constituents apparently calls for more intestinal fortitude than most members of Congress possess.

Certainly there are those in Congress who are fiscally responsible and willing to make the difficult decisions that hold political danger but are in the public interest. They are the only politicians worth keeping in our government.

Americans — hard-hit by unemployment and the staggering interest rates of the past few months — should recognize the balanced budget banter for exactly what it is and let their elected representatives know that what they want is not talk but action.

The time for the kind of decisions needed to help bring deficit spending to an end and put the nation back in good economic shape is long past. But, like they say, better late than never. Let's stop spending so much time talking about it and just get started on the chore of balancing the budget.

Cheap postal service

In 10 years as a public corporation, the U.S. Postal Service has served commercial mailers better than it has the 200 million private citizens.

According to a recent study by the National Academy of Public Administration, postal patrons are regularly affronted by out-of-order stamp vending machines, branch post office lobbies locked at night, and 20-cent letters that take as long to get there as 8-cent letters did a decade ago.

Still, the Nixon administration's massive reorganization in 1971 surely saved the doddering, 200-year-old Post Office Department from collapse under the weight of archaic practices and rising mail volume.

As a public corporation, the Postal Service has increased its capital assets by $3 billion, handled a larger volume of mail with fewer employees, and reduced its operating deficit substantially. In fact, it has learned to serve bulk mailers so well that residents are being snowed under by junk mail.

Nevertheless, the survey points out that the Postal Service has made these gains at the sacrifice of employee courtesy and customer services. The National Academy recommends the Postal Service begin simplifying its "excessively complex" rate structure with four classes and 38 subclasses of mail, and requiring all employees, rather than just some, to be helpful and courteous to patrons.

Despite all the misrouted 20-cent letters, it might be of some comfort to note that, while postage rates rose 88 percent from 1971 to 1980, the cost of first-class mail is still cheaper in this country than in any other Western industrialized nation.

Another View:

Liberalizing child labor

In proposing to liberalize regulations that limit child labor, the administration has raised questions quite different from those that surrounded the enactment of early child labor laws. The question in this case is not so much what kind of work children should do as how much they should do.

The notion of amending the child labor laws should not in itself be grounds for great anguish. The marketplace has changed a good deal in the 44 years since the laws were last overhauled. Letting 14- and 15-year-olds do hand-washing of trucks and vans when they are already allowed to wash cars should not be reason for concern. And prohibiting a generation raised on electronic games from operating cash registers or data-processing machines is surely anachronistic — as long as these are physically separated from hazardous chemicals and dangerous machines as the regulations would still require.

A much more important issue is raised, however, by those parts of the regulations that would allow 14- and 15-year-olds to work longer — and later — hours. This was the change most sought by the amusement and fast-food industries, which represented the major moving force behind the proposed regulations. Allowing young teenagers to work until 9 on school nights and 10 on weekends and vacations opens up a whole range of job opportunities in restaurants and amusement parks that were previously reserved for older youths and adults.

The longer hours would certainly be popular with the many children who are anxious to earn pocket money to support the increasingly expensive tastes of modern youth. And some parents would also prefer to have their children working rather than hanging around on the streets — unless they simply postpone that activity until after work hours. But — and remember we are talking about 14- and 15-year-olds — isn't there something else besides 24 hours of paid work a week that both parents and the law should be encouraging young people to do? What about homework?

The case for expanding job opportunities for young teen-agers would be a good deal more persuasive if an argument could be made that American youths were wearing themselves out at their books or that the labor market was in dire need of extra hands. But educational standards keep falling, and there are millions of older workers — out-of-school youth and unemployed adults — desperately seeking any job opening no matter how menial. Why encourage employers to hire 14- and 15-year-olds when half a million black 16- and 17-year-olds can't find work and millions of older workers have been permanently displaced from their jobs? Regulations shouldn't be written with only the short term in mind, but the employment situation for these groups won't get better soon.

Finding ways to link school learning with on-the-job experience can help many youths find jobs more easily later on. Updating labor laws that keep 16- and 17-year-olds from many no-longer-hazardous occupations could also help school dropouts. The proposed regulations, however, address neither of these problems and perhaps create some new ones.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Commerce 'desk probe' an inane exercise

Jack Anderson

I've already reported how he whitewashed an investigation of Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige's misuse of a charter jet. Now I'll tell you how he cost the taxpayers $1,442 by investigating a desk.

This cockamamie caper began when Commerce Department general counsel Sherman Unger broke his shoulder and arm. As part of the recuperative process, Unger decided he needed a desk he could stand up at.

Instead of just jacking his desk up on a couple of file cabinets, Unger did what any potentate would do: He ordered the government to build him a stand-up desk. But when Assistant Commerce Secretary Arlene Triplett saw the bill from the General Services Administration — which eventually came to $1,442 — she refused to authorize payment.

Unger ordered the desk anyway. He told my associate Peter Grant he planned to take the desk home eventually, and had every intention of reimbursing the GSA personally. This, of course, would have been a violation of federal regulations; GSA isn't in the custom-furniture business.

Unger had nothing to worry about, though. When the inspector general heard about the general counsel's fancy desk, he grabbed his magnifying glass and set out to crack the case. Perhaps as a courtesy to a fellow general, Funk handled the investigation himself.

After sifting all the clues, Funk pounced on the broken-winged lawyer. It would be wrong, he told Unger to pay for the desk and take it home.

Unger delightedly agreed. He would let the government pay for the desk and use it only in his office, he assured Funk.

Having straightened out the general counsel on the federal regulations, Funk then called Triplett. He had solved the case, he told her, and the government should pay for the desk. Triplett reluctantly agreed to approve the expenditure.

So the $1,442 desk is now government property, sitting in the Commerce Department waiting for the next high muckamuck who breaks his shoulder.

Meanwhile, Fearless Funk isn't through with Unger. He's currently investigating charges that the high-flying general counsel flew first-class to London when a cheaper seat was available, and also winged off to a fat farm at the taxpayers' expense. If Funk's past performance is any indication, he may solve this case by asking the government to provide Unger with a private plane.

Footnote: Through a spokeswoman, Funk said of the desk caper: "Each case is handled on its own merit. Here, a few phone calls established there was nothing wrong."

OILING THE DOOR: Ten years ago, Congress passed a law intended to throw some light on the "revolving door" through which Pentagon brass hats passed to higher-paying jobs with defense contractors. The law requires all military retirees to report to the Pentagon when they accept employment from arms contractors.

The door kept revolving — a record high 1,844 former officers reported taking jobs with defense contractors in fiscal 1981 alone — but at least it emitted some embarrassing squeaks. Now the Pentagon is trying to get rid of the squeaks by repealing the law.

The repeal provision, attached to the military pay bill, has already cleared the House Armed Services subcommittee on military personnel and compensation. And in one of those not-so-funny coincidences that crop up regularly in Washington, members of the subcommittee received more than $70,000 between Jan. 1, 1981, and March 31, 1982, in campaign contributions from some of the very defense contractors that are now forced to file reports when they hire retired military specialists.

The defense contractors funnel their donations through political-action committees and employees. Some of the firms have been accused in the past of being involved in conflicts of interest. They include Rockwell International, Northrop, Hughes Aircraft, Lockheed and McDonnell Douglas.

Rockwell, for example, kicked in $2,850 to subcommittee members. In 1975, the company was exposed for hiring a former top official of the Air Force's B-1 bomber project at a time when Rockwell was the prime contractor. Rockwell also hired two former Air Force contract officials, one of whom had administered the development of a guidance system his new employer later produced.

Northrop contributed $3,750 to subcommittee members. In 1975, the company was revealed to have hired the former program director of an Air Force development project in which Northrop had an active interest.

Rep. Bill Nichols, D-Ala., the subcommittee chairman, has received more than $6,000 from the above contractors.

An aide to one subcommittee member told my reporter Eric Koli his boss relied on the assurance of a subcommittee staffer, Robert Emmerichs, that the reporting system wasn't needed because there were already adequate sources of the same information.

Technically, this is true. But the other sources are the individual armed services' files of retired officers' statements of employment. These forms are filed alphabetically by the names of the retirees, not the companies, and include all employers, not just defense contractors. There are more than 40,000 of these forms on file, kept at different locations by each of the four armed services. This means that any investigator looking for conflicts of interest by a contractor would have to crisscross the country and sift through all 40,000 statements.

In contrast, the reporting system the subcommittee wants to kill has files arranged by defense contractors' names, and the records are all in one place at the Pentagon, making it easy to see which companies are using the revolving door. Too easy, evidently.

INSIDE REPORT:

Brown trying to change Gov. Medfly image

LOS ANGELES — A White House staffer's offhand remark that President Reagan "will have" Pete Wilson's vote as a U.S. senator was quickly stockpiled for ammunition in the uphill struggle by Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. to save his political career.

Rowland Evans

"Wilson is the captive candidate of a bankrupt economic policy," Brown told us. To make sure we got the point that he was linking the mayor of San Diego to Reaganomics, he repeated it twice more during a one-hour conversation. That is the heart of Jerry Brown's strategy to take the spotlight off his Gov. Medfly image after eight years in Sacramento and overhaul Wilson's lead.

Robert Novak

Wilson's problem is shared nationwide by centrist Republican candidates who are not automatic subscribers to Reagan's philosophy. If Wilson fully embraces the president, Brown sharpens his captive candidate image. If he does not, suspicions of Wilson's loyalty grow among Reaganite Republicans who might just forget to vote.

What heightens the dilemma is the unpleasant discovery that California is hardly less recession-proof than Illinois or New York. The devastation of the state's once-flourishing real estate and construction industries has fostered apprehension foreign to the usual buoyancy of the Golden State.

Given the economic shambles, conventional political wisdom would have Wilson quietly take a step or two away from Reagan. To show he is more sensitive to the state's plight than his fellow Californian in the Oval Office, Wilson opposed Reagan's veto of the $1 billion housing bailout. He calls for a smaller budget deficit through slashes in the Reagan defense spending.

So, when Wilson came to Washington for fund-raising July 1, White House political aide Ed Rollins was asked by reporters about these deviations. He replied, as reported by Al Donner of the Sacramento Union, that Wilson "has to determine what is most effective to win. I know when he comes back here we will have his vote, and that's what counts."

That is Jerry Brown's favorite quote of the young campaign, not only buttressing the "captive candidate" theme but building a sub-theme around Californian Rollins. When Rollins dined with Brown aide B.T. Collins in a Sacramento restaurant several weeks ago, the governor was a surprise drop-in to scout out the White House operative. Since then, he has been cluck-clucking over the outrage of a federal employee running Wilson's campaign from Washington.

Wilson's obvious inclination to meet this attack by taking his distance from Reagan has pitfalls. The Reagan kitchen cabinet members who made Wilson's nomination possible through a generous war chest would not like it. Nor would that Reaganite hard core, maybe 5 to 10 percent of the vote, think twice about scratching Wilson in November.

Wilson's solution is to sidestep discussions of Reaganomics (partly by finessing Brown's calls for continuous debates) and stick to talking about Gov. Moonbeam. If he can turn the election into a referendum on Jerry Brown, the Republicans will keep their Senate seat.

Brown's vulnerability to that strategy was dramatized when he was unable to cash in on the recent passage of a state budget actually smaller than the previous year's. Even Senate Republican leader Bill Campbell, a Reaganite who is not chairman of the Pete Wilson Fan Club, publicly praised the governor for collaborating in a successful outcome.

Brown's feat was eclipsed that very day by discovery of a dreaded Medfly in the San Joaquin Valley, unleashing a rush of memories about the governor's exotic behavior that has produced his horrendous negative ratings. "If you had a magnifying glass," jokes Wilson, "you'd find a poster on the Medfly saying 'Vote for Pete Wilson.'"

Wilson startled Brown in the first of three mini-debates over Los Angeles television news programs by calling him a "spender and taxer." By the third meeting, Brown was forcing Wilson to give ground on Reagan policies. Future confrontations may be few and far between.

Wilson's opponent may be unique but Wilson's plight is standard. The Reagan administration shouts that it is now too late to give Republican candidates any campaign help through quick economic fixes or policy changes. Bewildered by the plight of the economy, Wilson can think of nothing other than housing subsidies and lower defense spending. Unless Wilson can keep the voters' minds on Medflies and Moonbeams, those rumors of Jerry Brown's death are premature.

Opinion of MMH not shared by all

To The Editor:

I was very upset when I read Jeanne Green's letter of June 20, 1982, concerning the conditions at Midland Memorial Hospital, in which she stated that "the service is very poor, the rooms unclean, and the linens in a deplorable condition, being dingy, tattered and torn." Perhaps her stay in MMH was unpleasant in respect to the service she felt she received, and I do not know how long ago it has been or which ward she was in, but I would like it known that not everyone shares her opinion.

I recently spent four days in the maternity ward at MMH, and from the moment of my arrival until my discharge I received what I felt was the finest of care, even in what was an emergency situation. I cannot vouch for the other wards, but the maternity ward staff was very professional, friendly — and attentive — day and night. And the same thing goes for the nursery staff, who took excellent care of my son for 26 days. Neither did I find the rooms unclean, as my room was thoroughly cleaned once and sometimes twice a day. As to the linens; Midland Memorial Hospital is not a luxury hotel, although the clean, untattered and untorn linen I had was a sight better than that in some of the "finer" hotels I have stayed in!

I am not adequately enough informed to speak to the other matters in Ms. Green's letter. All I know is, that while I think the hospital rates and taxes are high enough all right, neither did I like having the hospital described like a $6-a-night motel.

Getting a laugh

To The Editor:

I've had a laugh watching Midlanders protest at each planned site of the new prison stockade.

These are probably the same people who've been loudest in insisting criminals be removed from the streets for the public's safety! And when it comes to "Where do we put them all?" everyone cries, "Not be me!" (It's really childishly hilarious in a way.)

Yet who protests that over 100 criminals of the worst sort are housed atop the courthouse in the center of Midland where thousands of innocent people spend eight hours a day?

Everyone wants more prisons but no one wants one in their town! Get real, people! Plus, do you want to pay in the millions for a new jail and let them lounge or spend in the thousands and make them work out their punishment?

Prisons should not be a nice place to be.

On owning pets

To The Editor:

Thank you so much for the informative article in Sunday's July 18, 1982, paper on animal control. We are so fortunate to have such a good staff taking care of our lost and stray animals.

Seeing such a cute dog, as was in the picture, waiting to be put down makes me very sad. It is irresponsible pet ownership that makes an action like that necessary. Dalton (Byerly) and his staff try so hard to return lost pets to their owners and find homes for the homeless. However, until we as pet owners become totally responsible for our pets and have them spayed or neutered, they cannot find a place for all the unwanted animals!

I urge you to take a walk through animal control and visit all the precious animals waiting there for someone to come. If you can, adopt one. If you cannot, make a contribution to animal control so that these precious creatures can have a better chance.

When you need a new pet, go first to animal control. There is someone real special just waiting for a nice home.

Remember, we must be responsible in our pet ownership in order to really help our little friends — who cannot be responsible for themselves.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

On July 23, 1914, Austria-Hungary issued an ultimatum to Serbia after the assassination of the Archduke Ferdinand. The dispute touched off World War I.

On this date:

In 1828, William Burt, of Mt. Vernon, Michigan, received a patent for his "typographer," which may have been the first typewriter.

In 1945, Marshal Henri Petain was put on trial on charges of betraying France in World War II.

In 1964, France's President Charles de Gaulle proposed that his country, the United States, Soviet Union and China agree to get out of Indochina.

In 1980, a panel was named to study the controversial links between Libya and President Jimmy Carter's brother, Billy.

Nancy Reagan spends pleasant hours at Virginia's Camp Pleasant

DUMFRIES, Va. (AP) — First lady Nancy Reagan knew what to do when a group of camp kids from the inner city chanted, "shake that thing." She wiggled her hips.

The episode occurred Thursday when Mrs. Reagan toured Camp Pleasant, designed for youngsters who can't afford more expensive summer camps. Parents who are able pay $5 for 11 days at camp.

Mrs. Reagan had read about the camp, and sent off a check for $100. Officials at the camp, a half-hour's drive from the capital, then invited her to visit.

She spent about two hours touring the camp. The temperature was in the high 80s, and when she saw youngsters playing in the swimming pool, she said, "I want to jump in, too."

Mrs. Reagan recalled she had gone to Camp Kechuwa on the northern Michigan peninsula, and said, "I think I'd still be there if they hadn't kicked me out."

She ate pigs in a blanket — dough-wrapped hot dogs — cooked over a camp fire and joined in as children from the "Acorn" group chanted: "w-i-n, win Acorns, win. Boooom. Shake that thing."

WENATCHEE, Wash. (AP) — Almost half a century after embezzling several thousand dollars from a small-town bank and then vanishing, 69-year-old William M. Farley returned to confess — and walked away a free man.

Certain he was headed for jail, Farley carried a suitcase and toothbrush when he turned himself in Wednesday afternoon to the Chelan County sheriff's office.

Superior Court Judge Charles Cone remembered Farley from the old days in Chelan, a nearby community of about 3,000 people in north-central Washington, and told the California man on Thursday he was free to go.

"Criminal charges are not warranted in this case," the judge said as Farley strained to hear from the defense table, cupping a hand over his left ear.

Cone said he remembered that Farley used to work with the Boy Scouts and reminisced, "I can still recall the stir that occurred in that community when you left."

Prosecutor Dick Whitmore had asked the court for permission not to prosecute, but he asked Farley about his life since he left Chelan in 1941.

"I've never even had a speeding ticket," Farley said. "I kept my nose clean and I mean clean."

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — Prince Bernhard, husband of former Queen Juliana, has entered the university hospital in Utrecht in preparation for surgery.

Government spokesman Hans Slotboom Thursday described the surgery as a "small urological operation," but said he did not know the exact nature of the operation or when it would take place.

Bernhard, 72, is expected to be released within a few days, he said.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Henry Fonda has returned home from the hospital, and his publicist says "he has every intention of being well enough to go back (to acting)."

"He is definitely reading (scripts). There are a couple of things that are very interesting to him," said publicist John Springer on Thursday as Fonda, 77, ended a two-week hospital stay. "At the point when he's well, I'm sure he'll have something he wants to do."

Dolly, what are your measurements?

By JOE EDWARDS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Dolly Parton, what are your measurements?

Miss Parton, whose striking figure has helped make her a well-known entertainer, was asked that question at a news conference Thursday. The well-guarded measurements have long triggered much speculation.

The singer-actress seemed startled for a second, then answered cheerfully:

"Lord, they go up and down so much. I could tell you today what they are, but tomorrow they may be different."

The question was posed by an unruffled Max Gibson of radio station WGR of Buffalo-Toronto, whose air name is "Shane."

Gibson has a radio show known as "Desperate and Dateless" where lonely people call in and try to get matched up. He got the idea for his question from the show because asking for measurements is one piece of information the men always seek.

Fifteen minutes into the news conference, he casually rose from the front of the media gallery and asked the zinger.

"It was a rather evasive answer," he said sheepishly afterward.

The news conference preceded the Tennessee premiere of Miss Parton's second movie, "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas," co-starring Burt Reynolds. The movie, adapted from a Broadway musical, opens at theaters across the country today.

"It's a fun movie — not a piece of art," Miss Parton said in response to a less personal question. "What made it good was the people we had."

"It will appeal to people who are Burt Reynolds fans and Dolly Parton fans," she added.

Miss Parton, whose first movie was "Nine to Five," and Reynolds sing a tune titled "Sneakin' Around" in the latest motion picture. It will be released as a duet, she said.

"Burt has a real good commercial voice, but he's no Frank Sinatra or anything like that," she said.

At the premiere, actress Loni Anderson, who is in Nashville making a made-for-television movie, showed up and was introduced to the audience by Miss Parton.

"I feel like a 12-year-old boy standing here next to you," Miss Anderson quipped.

In the movie, Miss Parton portrays the flamboyant Miss Mona, who runs the "house." Reynolds is the local sheriff.

"I think the two of us worked out real well," she said.

"Miss Mona was more my personality (than the secretary she played in 'Nine to Five'). We're kind of alike ..."

She said she saw the play three times and the movie "has captured the whole feel. Both are good."

Asked about her relationship with Reynolds, she said, "Burt is wonderful. We're too much alike to appeal to each other romantically."

One way they are alike, she said, is that "we both wear a wig."

Rose Kennedy's 92nd birthday celebrated

HYANNIS PORT, Mass. (AP) — Rose Kennedy, the matriarch of the political clan that produced a president and two senators, looked over her 2-foot vanilla birthday cake and wished for good things "for the next 100 years."

Mrs. Kennedy turned 92 on Thursday with the help of some 450 senior citizens from across Massachusetts who were invited to the family compound in Hyannis Port to celebrate the occasion.

Her only surviving son, Sen. Edward Kennedy, daughter Eunice Kennedy Shriver and some of her 29 grandchildren and great-grandchildren joined the elderly guests and a group of young performers from Limerick, Ireland, in singing "Happy Birthday," and "My Wild Irish Rose."

Kennedy introduced his mother as "Our Wild Irish Rose, the Rose of Old Boston and the Rose without thorns."

Guerrillas threatened with assaults

By The Associated Press

Israel threatened the Palestinian guerrillas and Syria with new assaults after hitting west Beirut and the Bekaa Valley with the heaviest fighting in more than a month, and President Reagan sent envoy Philip C. Habib on a shuttle seeking agreement on a plan for evacuation of the guerrillas.

Israeli jets shattered the sound barrier over west Beirut today, shaking the city with sonic booms barely 13 hours after they divebombed the Palestine Liberation Organization's last major holdout in Lebanon. But police said the jets today dropped no bombs.

Habib met with Syrian Foreign Minister Abdul Halim Khaddam in Damascus today and was to hold talks later with President Hafez Assad. Sources close to the negotiations said Habib is proposing that Syrian troops stationed in Lebanon exercise stricter control over Palestinian guerrillas there to prevent new clashes with Israeli troops.

Israeli Deputy Foreign Minister Yehuda Ben-Meir charged that the Palestine Liberation Organization "is just playing for time, is dealing in deceit and has no intention of leaving." He warned that Israel has "other means at our disposal to get the PLO terrorists out of Beirut."

An Israeli military communique held Syria responsible for the killing of five Israeli soldiers Wednesday by guerrillas from the Syrian-controlled Bekaa Valley and said: "If the Syrians continue with this conduct, the Israel Defense Force will act in the place, at the time and with the might which it chooses."

Waves of Israeli jets dive-bombed Yasser Arafat's PLO headquarters in the besieged Moslem sector of the Lebanese capital for an hour Wednesday while Israeli tanks and artillery gunners blasted Palestinian and Syrian positions for two hours along a 25-mile stretch of the Bekaa Valley, in eastern Lebanon.

The Israeli command said the attack was in retaliation for 75 Arab cease-fire violations in the two weeks since the July 11 cease-fire.

Lebanese police said eight people were killed and 24 wounded in west Beirut by three air raids within one hour. The Palestinian news agency WAFA said more than 62 people were killed or wounded in Israel's attack on west Beirut, and another 120 civilians were killed or wounded in the Bekaa bombardment.

Syria today said two Syrian soldiers were killed and 14 wounded in Israel's bombardment of the Bekaa Valley. Israel said Arab fire killed two Israeli soldiers and wounded two.

A Syrian army communique said 24 Israeli tanks and four rocket-launching positions were destroyed by Syrian barrages. The communique conceded 16 Syrian tanks and three missile batteries were destroyed by Israeli fire.

U.S. may discourage use of highway

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The U.S. government may warn Americans to stay off Mexico's main West Coast highway because of the violent deaths of two Americans and the disappearance of a third along the route last month, sources close to the U.S. Embassy report.

The sources said embassy officials are considering recommending that the State Department renew the advisory it issued in 1976 against travel on Highway 15, which runs for 1,400 miles from Nogales, on the Arizona border, to Guadalajara and on to Mexico City, after a number of Americans were killed, mugged or harassed.

An estimated 30,000 people a year from the United States, most of them Americans, travel on the highway, which runs through a number of communities where the drug traffic and other crime flourish.

Reporters looking into the mysterious disappearance on Highway 15 of University of Colorado professor Nicholas W. Schrock were told Thursday that two other Americans died violent deaths along the route last month.

Marta Cordoba, head of the Civil Registry at San Blas, a small town 473 miles northwest of Mexico City in Nayarit state, said Randall Scott Evert, 30, of Santa Monica, Calif., was found shot in the head June 9. She said local police assumed he committed suicide.

Ms. Cordoba said another American, John Mills, 34 of Phoenix, Ariz., was found drowned June 11 at Las Islitas, a beach resort a few miles west of San Blas.

Both were buried in the local cemetery, she said, after cursory identification and no investigation of the deaths.

Schrock, 42, an economics professor, was last seen about May 31. The police chief and six officers in San Ignacio, a town on the highway about 200 miles north of San Blas, reportedly confessed to killing Schrock during a robbery June 2 on the highway, but the professor's body has not been found.

A spokesman for the Sinaloa State judicial police, Juan Ramon Martinez Arpon, said the policemen say they buried the body in a roadside ravine and on June 8 moved it to the local cemetery.

The grave pointed out by the suspects was opened on July 11, and the body was sent to Denver, Colo. But pathologists who examined it there said it was not Schrock's.

Some Sinaloa officials speculated that the policemen killed someone who was with Schrock and later assumed it was the professor. Investigators emphasized that they have not given the American up for dead.

Two Maryland businessmen — Doug Harris, 31, of Clinton, and Michael Lewis, 27, of Deale — recently went to the Mexican coastal resort of Mazatlan on a fishing trip and were held by police for five days without explanation.

The two told reporters later that they suspected police were working an extortion racket. Harris said they were freed after he gave a local lawyer a $10,000 check on which he later stopped payment.

PLO leader assassinated in Paris

PARIS (AP) — Three men ambushed and assassinated the Palestine Liberation Organization's No. 2 man in Paris today, bombing his car and riddling it with bullets, a member of the National Assembly reported.

The victim was identified as Fadel el Dani, 38-year-old deputy director of the PLO office, which is headed by Ibrahim Souss.

Louis Moulinet, a Socialist member of the National Assembly who went to the scene, told The Associated Press that three men threw a bomb at the car on Rue des Dessous de Berges, in the city's 13th district, and then opened fire.

Moulinet said the explosion destroyed the vehicle and Dani's burned body was found inside. The three assassins fled in another car, Moulinet said.

Dani has been with the PLO in Paris for three years, the organization said. His death marked the seventh attack against a PLO official in France in the past 10 years.

His car was ambushed outside his apartment building in a working class district in the southern part of Paris at 8:20 a.m. (2:20 a.m. EDT), police said. PLO officials said he was on his way to his office.

The deputy director of the PLO's Rome office was killed in June by a bomb under the seat of his car. A telephone caller in New York claimed the bomb was planted by the Jewish Armed Resistance, a splinter group from Jewish Defense League.

On Aug. 3, 1978, the director of the PLO's Paris office, Ezzedine Kalak, and an assistant were assassinated in their offices by two Jordanians of Palestinian origin.

Before today's assassination, the most recent attack on a PLO official in France came July 25, 1979 in Cannes, when Zouheir Mohsen, head of the PLO's military department, was shot in the head and killed.

Indira Gandhi plans to bring son to U.S.

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Prime Minister Indira Gandhi is introducing her heir apparent, surviving son Rajiv, to the United States and foreign policy next week. But she says whether he succeeds her depends not on her but on whether the Indian people feel he can "deliver the goods."

Mrs. Gandhi disclosed Thursday that Rajiv, 35, his Italian-born wife, Sonia, and their two children will accompany her to the United States, where they arrive Tuesday for a nine-day visit to New York, Washington, Los Angeles and Honolulu.

The 64-year-old prime minister was asked during a joint interview with The Associated Press and four U.S. newspapers to comment on the widespread belief that she is "molding" Rajiv to succeed her and perpetuate the a dynasty that began with her father, the late Jawaharlal Nehru, India's first prime minister.

"You come from a democratic country, now tell me, can you really 'mold' somebody?" Mrs. Gandhi asked.

'Battle of the Gun' divides small town

By ELIZABETH MEHREN
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

OROVILLE, Calif. — Here in the low Sierra foothills, they've called a moratorium on the Battle of the Gun.

But the cease-fire is only temporary. While the town council flip-flops over an ordinance requiring citizens to possess firearms, the town continues to trade verbal bullets.

Harsh words and heated tempers are the principal weapons in a dispute more procedural than philosophical. In this Gold Rush-era town, just 75 miles north of Sacramento, the issue is less whether Oroville's 10,000 residents have the right to keep guns in their homes than whether they must.

KEEPING GUNS AT HOME is not the question, explained bank clerk Mary Smiley. "I know I'd be petrified in my home without a gun," she said. "I think about 99 percent of Oroville would feel that way."

But as railroad engineer Dave Foster said, capturing what seems to be a prevailing sentiment around town, "This whole thing is ridiculous. I don't want anybody telling me I have to have a gun — or that I don't have to have a gun."

Agreed Robert Williams, who retired to this community several years ago: "If a person wants to have a gun, that's fine. But he doesn't have to be forced to own a gun by a stupid law. I think it's absolutely stupid."

STILL, ON THE SAME DAY, June 21, that San Francisco's Board of Supervisors approved an ordinance that essentially bans possession of handguns, Oroville's seven-member City Council did exactly the opposite. With relatively little discussion, the council voted 4-2, with one member absent, to instruct City Attorney Charles Lueder to draft an ordinance requiring all Oroville heads of household to have a firearm and ammunition.

"It just sort of popped into my head," said R. Wayne Houseworth, the councilman who proposed the mandatory gun possession ordinance. "I came to that meeting with not the foggiest idea of proposing anything."

But during a period of open discussion, council members found themselves addressing the growing problem of marijuana cultivation in the Oroville area, and crime they say is related to the increasing drug traffic. In short order the council was expressing concern, too, over the recent layoffs of 22 Butte County deputy sheriffs.

HOUSEWORTH REMEMBERED reading about a new law in Kennesaw. Ga., the first community in the United States to require its citizens to bear arms. "The thing that had impressed me," Houseworth said, "was an article I read saying that the crime rate in Kennesaw had dropped by something like 40 percent" since the ordinance was enacted last month.

"I just thought, by golly, if it would work in Kennesaw, why wouldn't it work in Oroville?"

Houseworth's almost-casual suggestion caught the City Council off guard. Recalled Oroville Mayor Clayton W. D'Arcy: "It came out of the blue. It was a real surprise."

No less amazed was Councilman Henry McCall, so frequent a D'Arcy antagonist that the mayor terms him "the fly in our ointment" — to which McCall cheerfully retaliates by calling D'Arcy "a 75-year-old babbling idiot" and himself, "the thorn in D'Arcy's side." McCall could not believe his ears as he heard Houseworth introducing the bill all Oroville now calls "that gun thing."

"I thought it was a real stupid thing to do," said McCall, 33. "I thought, 'Houseworth's really flipped it.' "

Arguing that "I feel it is a person's right to bear arms, but it is a right, a freedom, a choice," McCall was one of the two dissenters when the original motion passed.

WITH TWO MEMBERS ABSENT at the next regular council meeting two weeks later, McCall masterminded the countereffort that ordered Lueder to stop work on the bill and effectively rescinded the controversial gun law, 3-2.

Taciturn about the specifics of the bill he was drafting, the city attorney took the turnabout in stride. Yawned Lueder, a refugee from more populous Orange County: "Welcome to small-town politics."

BUT HOUSEWORTH WAS FURIOUS, fuming that McCall had engaged in "political manipulation" in reversing the gun action.

Would Houseworth reintroduce the gun possession measure at the council's next meeting? "As sure as a bear wears a fur coat."

Countered McCall: "This issue is dead."

He would continue to do combat for the anti-gun-ordinance cause on the council, McCall vowed, "Absolutely. You have to stand behind your guns."

CERTAINLY THE IRONY of this position — of, the entire gun dispute — was not lost to a large portion of the population of Oroville. Around town, said Councilman Harold Pietz, an ordained minister and barber who was absent for the crucial first vote, "People are strictly against the ordinance. They don't see any need for it."

Houseworth, however, said his informal tally of the community suggested Oroville was "split about 75 percent-25 percent in favor of his gun possession bill.

"I think it's the right thing to do," said gift store manager Alice Dauterman. "We've got to do something about the crime."

BUT AT THE MONTHLY LUNCHEON of the Exchange Club of Oroville, Al Harris almost choked on his beer when asked abut the gun possession ordinance.

"I think it's absolutely asinine, it's plain stupid," said the business manager of the local high school district. "Who wants to mandate anything that idiotic on the citizenry?"

Not, that is, that Harris has any problem with the broader question of voluntary gun possession. "It's our right." Does Harris have a gun in his home? "Oh," he said, "absolutely."

"I think it's an embarrassment to the community," he said. "It's one thing to have Wild West-looking buildings. But that doesn't mean we want a Wild West atmosphere."

"I'm absolutely incensed," huffed Marion MacDonald, proprietor of an Oroville antique emporium.

LEANING ON A COUNTER in her crowded little shop, MacDonald described her amazement when she heard the council had voted to enact the gun measure. "I thought of all our fine neighbors, wonderful people that they are," she said, "and then I began to think of them in a different light. I thought, which one of them might go berserk and start shooting if they had this law and he had a gun in his house?"

"People are afraid of their own shadows these days," said Ellyn Roemelt, who operates a day care center for preschoolers in her Oroville home. "If you give them guns, they're going to shoot first, and ask questions later.

"Who is going to pay for the funerals when a father, mother or child is killed accidentally by a gun kept in the home? The City council?" she asked.

OR, AS DAVID SEARS ASKED, addressing the council as it reconsidered the gun ordinace, "Do you want to have a sign outside every house in Oroville that says, in essence, 'Come in and steal my gun?'

"What I want to know," he said, "is who's going to protect my gun when I'm not there?"

Sears was among a handful of citizens who attended the second council meeting with the express intention of speaking out on the gun bill. Others may have been dissuaded, Henry McCall believes, by an announcement, signed by the mayor, stating that no discussion of the gun issue would occur at that council meeting, published in that day's Oroville newspaper. Then, just to be sure, D'Arcy also distributed a memo at the meeting announcing that "there will be no discussion on gun regulations at this meeting by members of the council, staff of general public."

NOW IN SOME PLACES, such action might be construed as censorship — and in any case, Councilman McCall merely moved to ignore the memo, thus permitting the public to speak.

But Clayton W. D'Arcy has his own explanation for the occasionally irregular way things work in Oroville. It is not so much that Oroville's city leaders lean toward a broad interpretation of the Constitution, said the mayor, simply that "we still believe in some of the older ways, let's just leave it at that."

What this means, said D'Arcy, is that "We usually try to take care of our problems around here. If the state and federal government would get out of the picture entirely, I'm sure we'd do just fine."

DISCUSSING THE PENDING GUN BILL, proponents of the Oroville ordinance frequently cite the model of Kennesaw. They point to the assertion of Kennesaw Mayor Darvin Purdy that mandatory gun ownership "has a distinct and definite deterrent effect to potential crime." From March to June of 1981 — "pre-ordinance," Purdy said — 27 burglaries took place in Kennesaw. "Post-ordinance, said Purdy, "in the same three-month period of 1982, we had no burglaries — zero — in Kennesaw."

Don Harvey, left, and Mayor Thane Akins, second from left, are shown with the doll house that Mayor Akins presented to Josie and Ernie Davis, right. The Davises were recent winners of a free drawing for the doll house held at Midland Park Mall by Don Harvey Realtors. Harvey said the reason for the drawing was "just for the fun of it. It isn't too often these days that someone can get something for nothing."

Harvey added that an upcoming project of the company is the distribution of free cookbooks containing some recipes of several famous people.

New fashions in maternity clothing are very stylish

By JUDI HUNT
Hearst Feature Service

Not too many years back, the pregnant woman had two choices in maternity attire: the oh-so-uninspired smock and dresses that looked like a cross between a muu muu and a circus tent.

Not anymore. There's been a revolution in maternity clothes that Kelly August, a buyer for the Baby Love Maternity chain, attributes to the demands of women who are now working while pregnant.

"Today, women are judged by their appearance — pregnant or not. That's why pregnant women are demanding and getting better styling in their clothes," August says.

THEY'RE ALSO ASKING for natural fibers, she says. "Usually, it's the career woman — the doctor, the lawyer and those high up in sales. She will pay for the cottons, the wools and the pure silk."

The working woman, August says, "goes for blends, because they are less expensive. She still needs a good wardrobe, because she's judged on appearance also, but she has less money to spend."

Either woman — and the pregnant woman who stays home — has a lot more choice these days, according to August. "They can find the same styling in ready-to-wear as non-pregnant women. An example is knickers; we have maternity knickers that differ only in that the waistband is expandable."

THAT BRINGS UP ANOTHER CHANGE in maternity clothing. "Many manufacturers are doing away with the old-fashioned front panel, which identifies the garment as maternity," August says, "and opting for expandable waistbands, which are just as comfortable but can be worn after the baby is born without making the new mother feel she's in maternity clothing.

"It's the same with dresses; they're coming with belts that can be worn afterwards and no one will guess they once were maternity garments. I have several dresses I got here — I'm not pregnant — and none of my friends realizes what they are."

In place of the smock, there are beautifully tailored blouses and "sweaters you wouldn't believe," August says. "There's one called the tummy tickler that looks almost like a sweatshirt, but with a band that goes under the tummy. It can be worn with jeans when you're not pregnant."

THE TREND TOWARD CLOTHING that can be worn both before and after birth was made possible, she says, because manufacturers began doing things like concealing the expanding panel in pockets, something Sassoon did for fall in a jean that has a front zipper.

Sassoon isn't the only big designer getting into the maternity business. Such notables as Lester Hiatt and Carol Horn have entered the market; Judy Loed and Cynthia Gregg are now exclusively into maternity wear, according to August.

OTHER CHANGES IN MATERNITY CLOTHING include such new items as prenatal bras, maternity girdles made of lightwight lycra to help improve posture, nursing nightgowns, maternity slips in either full or half-size and, of course, maternity panties that will last the whole nine months.

Remember how, in about the eighth month, the old-style panties with their elastic bands would give out, threatening to fall down every time you wore them? Now there is a one-size-fits-all stretch panty that won't stretch out, so it can be worn afterwards. But they're no more glamorous than they were in the past.

One major change in maternity clothing is in the colors now available, says August. "We're getting away from the black, navy, brown and gray that used to be associated with maternity clothes."

Home buyers not able to assume some existing loans

By JAMES M. WOODARD
Copley News Service

The recent decision by the U.S. Supreme Court, affirming the right of federally chartered savings and loan associations to enforce due-on-sale clauses in their mortgage loans, might have been influenced by recommendations of the President's Commission on Housing.

The court's decision, in effect, makes it impossible for a home buyer to assume the seller's existing loan at the same interest rate when that loan was made by a federally chartered S&L.

A typical response to this decision from the real estate industry was expressed by Sep Sterpa, president of the California Association of Realtors:

The bride-price custom is still very much practiced today in such modern settings as Abidjan, West Africa. Three representatives bargained for bride Florentine Gnangni-Angate Gnima and Mohamed Elbou Fall.

By LEON DASH
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

ABIDJAN, West Africa — To the sudden shock of many in this lively West African city, one of Abidjan's most colorful bachelors, my friend, the charmingly loquacious Mohamed Elbou Fall, was married recently to Florentine Gnangni-Angate Gnima.

I have been able to attest personally to Elbou's (pronounced el-boo) newly attained marital status, both to the heartbroken and the disbelieving, because I was one of the three-man delegation that haggled for hours with the prospective wife's relatives over her bride price.

TRADITIONAL IN MANY PARTS OF AFRICA, the bride price is paid by the husband to the wife's father, mother and several other relatives before the couple is considered married. It is not to be confused with dowry, the material and property that Western wives once brought to their husbands at marriage.

The bride-price custom is still very much practiced today in such modern settings as Abidjan, a cosmopolitan port city of 1.7 million, although cash has replaced the household implements and farm animals used for payment in the past.

HOPING TO COME OUT OF THE negotiating sessions financially intact, Elbou, a 42-year-old French-language reporter for the Voice of America, chose his three representatives with their bargaining skills in mind. Salif Diouf, a tough banking official, was head of the delegation. Martial Atsain, a hard-nosed Ivorian businessman, and I, with bargaining skills honed while living for two years in rural Kenya, formed the rest of the delegation.

In numerous West African societies, many delicate matters are handled indirectly by relatives and friends to avoid irreparable rifts within the family. Neither Elbou nor the bride's parents could become directly involved in the bride-price negotiations because, when they meet in the future, all must be free of rancor.

DIOUF, ATSAIN AND I formally opened the negotiations by calling on Florentine's father's older brother, Joseph Gnangni-Agate, at his small, one-story house in Abidjan's Marcory, the African-French quarter. The bride's mother's older sister and a maternal cousin were also on hand to begin the bride-price discussions.

Our spokesman, Diouf, opened the talks by putting a 500-franc note on the green, reed-woven mat that had been placed on the floor between the two sets of negotiators. We then put down four bottles of gin. The cousin interrupted this gentle pace by sharply demanding eight bottles of gin. We responded with a 5,000 franc note (about $17) and only two more bottles. The cousin and uncle, after conferring, accepted the offer.

THEN THE COUSIN demanded 25,000 francs (about $80) as the bride price and the three of us, in unison, balked with the proper exaggerated looks of shock, amazement and consternation, trying to make it seem as if the cousin had asked us to cut off our right arms. But they would not budge on the price. Uncle Gnangni-Agate said "the price is fixed" for a literate woman.

Florentine was prominently pregnant — another attribute that raised her bride price because it proved her fertility. In a number of West African cultures, a woman's marriageability improves and the bride price may double after she has had a child.

WE CAVED IN, and Diouf put 25,000 francs on the mat. The bargaining then seesawed over several smaller items until the price was up to 52,000 francs ($173). We were asked to swear that any clothes and jewelry Florentine brought when she moved into Elbou's house will be replaced by Elbou if lost, that one-third of all riches that accrue to Elbou will belong to Florentine's family and that if Elbou returns Florentine to her family because of a disagreement between the two, he can reclaim only 500 francs of the original bride price.

I EXPRESSED DOUBTS as to whether we should be committing Elbou to all of these conditions, but Diouf said it was all part of the tradition of the tropical forest-dwelling Appoloniens, Florentine's ethnic group.

We swore that Elbou would abide by these rules, even though Elbou is from Mauritania, a conservative country far to the north of the Ivory Coast, and may not feel obligated to honor Appolonien traditions.

The cousin then told us Elbou also must make a payment to Florentine's eldest brother. I suggested that they were now making up fees, but Diouf agreed that it was within the family's right to demand such a payment.

DEAR ABBY

Overeaters Anonymous

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My brother, knowing I am a Dear Abby fan, gave me your book, "The Best of Dear Abby," for Christmas. I will be forever grateful to you for one letter on Page 205 in the chapter, "The Sad Ones."

It was from a 23-year-old women who weighed 326 pounds, was a drug addict, a prostitute and a divorced mother of three on welfare. You advised her to go to Overeaters Anonymous. She went, and in her letter she said, "Today I've lost 121 pounds and I'm still losing. I'm drug-free and I'm learning to like myself. I have a responsible job, a belief in a power greater than myself, and the love and respect of my children and people who believed in me when I didn't believe in myself. After sinking so low, Overeaters Anonymous gave me a chance to be what I've always wanted to be. A lady. Thank you for sending me there."

Well, thank God, I didn't have all her problems, but I did identify with one — I was nearly 100 pounds overweight and had spent most of my 34 years losing weight and gaining it back.

I went to Overeaters Anonymous, and since Christmas I have lost 55 pounds and made a whole new circle of loving, caring friends.

Please give O.A. a boost whenever you can. The organization deserves it. — CARRIE C. IN INDIANA

DEAR CARRIE: I've given O.A. so many "boosts," I've been accused of being on its payroll. However, it deserves all the boosts I've given. And more.

DEAR ABBY: Last Tuesday I buried my husband of 33 years, and on Friday an invitation to a wedding came in the mail addressed to him alone — just like he never even had a wife. It was a nice one with fancy print, and I never heard John mention any of the names that appeared on this invitation. It had a "RSVP" card enclosed with a little envelope already stamped to say whether he's coming or not.

Here's where you come in, Abby. Should I write: (1) John is dead now, so please don't expect him, and please don't expect a present either, because widows don't send gifts to strangers. Or should I write: (2) Don't plan on John for the wedding. Or (3) should I just ignore the invitation since it wasn't sent to me? — WHAT TO DO

DEAR WHAT: I opt for No. 3.

DEAR ABBY: Re the letter signed "Concerned Daughter," whose poor, elderly parents had been in an automobile accident, sued and collected a sizable amount of money, whereupon their "churchgoing lawyer-friend" said he needed to "borrow" it and promptly pocketed all the money: You suggested they engage an ETHICAL lawyer to retrieve their money.

There is a faster and easier solution. The old couple should contact the ethics committee of their state bar association.

The bar association is empowered to compel the dishonest lawyer to return all the money, and also to censure him, suspend him from practice for a period, or even to disbar him completely. This service will not cost the old couple one cent!

To take money due poor, old people for their accident injuries is not, in my eyes, the act of a friend. — BEVERLY HILLS LAWYER

Teaching 'facts of life'

By WILLARD ABRAHAM, Ph.D
Copley News Service

Q. I am the father of a 12-year-old daughter who has begun developing physically. I am afraid that she will start to menstruate one of these days, and without knowledge of that process, it could be a worrisome thing to happen to her.

My wife is not willing to discuss the situation with her because she is uncomfortable doing so. I'm not eager to handle it myself, but I feel capable of talking it through with our daughter. I believe I can do it accurately and with sensitivity so that she will be fully informed and not offended in any way.

Although my wife is a little bit reluctant about my going ahead with this plan (merely because I am a man), we agree to go along with your recommendation. What do you think about all of this?

A. If the facts are really the way you presented them (relating to your "accuracy," "sensitivity," and "no offensiveness,") there seems little danger involved in your fulfilling a parental role in this situation.

Frankly, I have never understood why some people feel it is essential that only fathers deal with growing-up issues related to their sons and mothers do the same with their daughters. If parents give serious thought to this matter, they generally will agree that whichever one has the most accurate information and the best rapport with the child involved, and feels the most comfortable handling the situation, ought to take over.

Obviously all parents won't agree with my approach to this subject.

Q. I haven't been able to handle a situation with my college-age son based on comments like these from him: "All the kids do it." ... "You have plenty of money." ... "I don't have time to get a job."

It all relates to the way in which he handles the money I give him each month. He squanders it on nonsensical purchases, seems to have no concept of price, has constantly overrun his checking account because he refuses to keep the check stubs accurately or to balance it, and also refuses to get a part-time job even though his academic load isn't heavy (and his grades leave a lot to be desired too).

My wife isn't very helpful, because frankly she is just about as irresponsible about money as he is — and a lot older!

So please give me an idea or two of what to do.

A. His lack of responsibility probably began a long time ago, but that doesn't help you now. Your choices are limited, but rather obvious. You can restrict his allowance so that it covers only his essential expenses. You might consider working out a deal with him based on his holding a part-time job or summer job to help support himself.

The tough part may be in sticking with either of those decisions. It's not easy, especially when his habit of irresponsibility appears to be so strongly entrenched.

There's an old psychological term referred to as "Grandma's Law." It says, "You do this, and I'll do that. If you don't, I won't."

Any creative ideas from readers on how they may have handled similar problems will be shared with this reader and others who may be facing it.

Q. This may sound foolish to you, but in our family we've had an enjoyable time talking about what is the most important time of the day within the family structure. Of course, we get off on tangents — as with our jock college son — but we keep telling him that what he's thinking of isn't within the "family structure!" What's your opinion?

A. It all depends on which family is involved, of course, and whether both parents are working or other factors.

Most thoughts I have close in on that first few minutes after everyone gets home after work or school. That's when the accumulated frustrations, achievements and all the rest can either spill out or be repressed. That is also when parents, with each other as well as with their children, can develop the habit of communicating.

The first five or 10 minutes can be more important than an hour or two later in the evening when the edge has been blunted regarding the day's events.

Letters may be sent to Dr. Willard Abraham, Department of Special Education, College of Education, Arizona State University, Tempe, AZ 85281. Questions of general interest will be answered in this column as space permits.

Abraham has written a book about his and his wife's mentally retarded daughter who lived only a few months, titled "You Always Lag One Child Behind," price, $4.95, Sunshine Press, P.O. Box 572, Scottsdale, AZ 85252.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Renewal for bath mats

DEAR HELOISE:

I have several bathroom rugs with rubberized undersides to keep them in place on the floor. But, after several washings, these rugs no longer stay in place and have become something of a hazard.

Is there anything I can do to make these perfectly good rugs usable again? — F.C. Simons

Try sewing a small piece of rubber, such as a square cut from an old hot water bottle or a rubber canning jar ring, to the underside at each corner of the rugs.

This will help prevent them from slipping out from under your feet. But caution should still be observed when walking on these rugs. — Heloise

CELERY SAVINGS

Dear Heloise: Don't let any of that precious celery go to waste.

I cut off the lower part of the stalk and outer ribs that aren't too nice and parboil those pieces immediately, then freeze them in small plastic bags or containers.

These are now ready for stews, soups, meat loaves, etc. The celery that is left is what I'd have, had I bought the more expensive celery hearts. — Edith Long

HINTS FROM HIM

Dear Heloise: Mix everything for biscuits exactly as the recipe directs, but instead of flouring a board and rolling the dough out with a rolling pin, then cutting as usual, just drop small pieces of it into a greased muffin tin.

Bake in a hot oven until lightly browned. You'll have a real breakfast or dinner treat that can be prepared in a very few minutes. — Bud Ridley

BUTTON REMOVAL

Dear Heloise: I've always found buttons very difficult to get off the cards when they are attached with metal loops.

I've discovered that my seam ripper is the perfect tool for the job. It fits right under those hard-to-get-at wires and lifts them right off without harming the button at all!

Use the back side of the ripper — not the cutting edge — to prevent dulling it. — Alicia Greenwald

MICROWAVE 'MAGIC'

Dear Heloise: Microwaves are wonderful for reheating things, right? I just found a nifty way to reheat a two-day-old pizza and have it taste like it's fresh out of the oven.

Using a paper plate, or whatever you want to reheat it on, sprinkle some water on the pizza, cover it with plastic wrap, or just slip it into a plastic bag and into the microwave for 30 seconds on full power, and it comes out nice and steaming, and the crust is soft and delicious.

SPICE STORAGE

Dear Heloise: I use a small turntable in my cupboard to hold cans of spices.

I arrange them alphabetically and it makes it so easy to find what I want when in a hurry. — Mary Ellen King

Boo! Hiss! The Baron Waste (Darrell Ward), left, plots evil deeds with his most wretched of wretched companions, Fritz Von Swineheart (Mike Christy).

Mummer madness

Perils! Ah! Doom! Ah! They wait around the corner. Will the Evil Baron Waste, aided and abetted by his henchman, Fritz von Swineheart (as lovely a twosome as has ever graced the badlands of West Texas) succeed in overthrowing Lana DeFree's fair graces and secure for the Third Reich the secret formula from her uncle, Prof. Benson Burner, professor of chemistry at I.O.U.? It looks as if the bad guys are ahead, but wait, Homer D. Brave and his noble shipmate, Billy Bob Slimswab, are marching to the rescue.

But will they be in time? Will they rescue the fair maiden and her trusted guardian, Amber Wavesagrain?

This libretto is larded with such rendering questions. The answers are forthcoming with a visit to the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado St., for an evening of summer madness at the 34th annual Summer Mummers.

A Review

wherein for our general edification (as a casting of pearls before the swine) unfolds the poignant drama "Poltroonery of the Pacific-The Isle You, See Ain't No Bikini Atoll."

One item is clear from the outset. Oki and Doki, dancing girls (the party type) at The Octopus Arms Inn run by the notorious proprietress Frayda Der Vicekops, don't care about the outcome. They know that to the victor goes the spoils (if you get the drift). They can't lose.

They aren't alone.

The evening is a booing, cheering, hissing, popcorn-throwing event for the audience, the most timid of whom by the night's end have succumbed to the fun and are conducting themselves in the most gregarious of manners.

This year's production is a no-lose proposition. Those who have been kept away in the past years by the crowd's antics, can now ease back in the comfort of the balcony for a voyeur's ringside seat to lighthearted tomfoolery. The balcony's standing rule — no popcorn throwing. Those who throw popcorn, or anything else, in the balcony are booted out. No exceptions.

Downstairs the rules are still the same. It is permissible, even expected, that audience members will throw as much popcorn as they can get their hands on. Midland Community Theatre, which is responsible for this case of madness in the form of a hijinks melodrama, has tried to provide abundantly for the summer show, searching far and wide for an adequate popcorn supply. They hope the 1½-ton supply will last throughout the season, which runs Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights through Sept. 4.

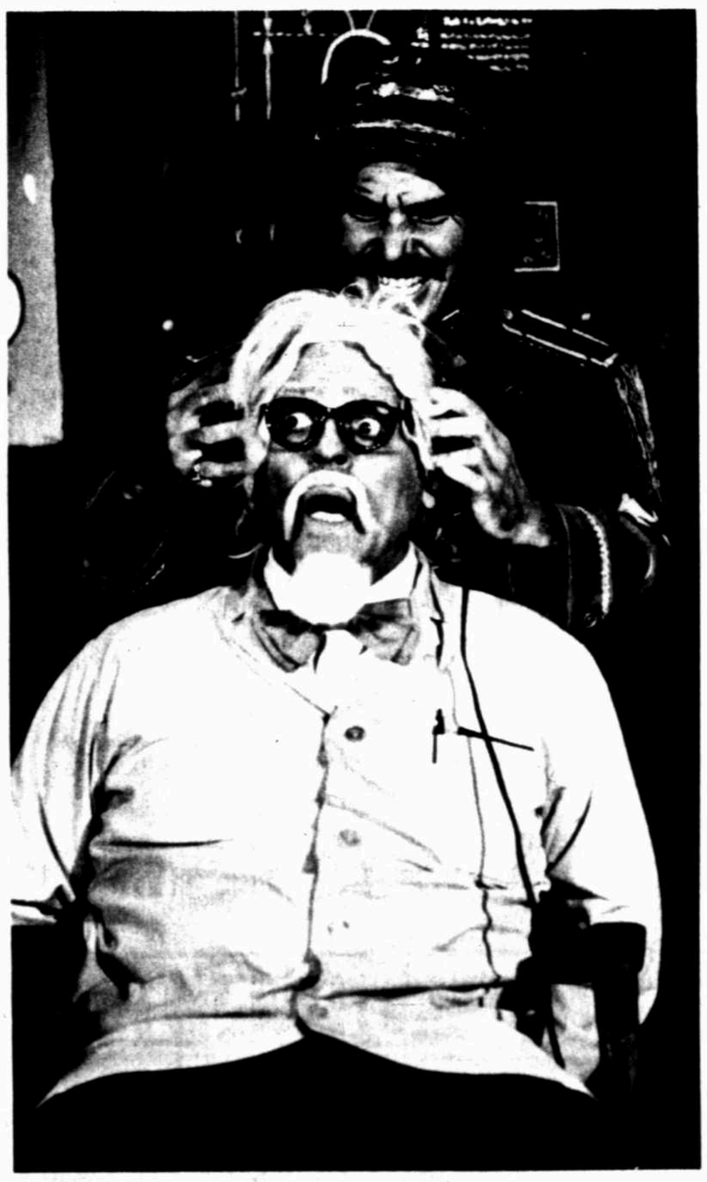
Produced by Susie Q. Hitchcock, (quoting from the venue here) "who is marvelous on stage and magnificent out front," this year's melodrama comes direct from the mind of Randal J. Hicks, Esq. (It is rumored that Hicks has been in residence at Big Spring State Hospital since the script's completion, but such talk is merely idle chit-chat. No verification has been cited, however, it is interesting to note that Hick's employer, the Midland Chamber of Commerce, has reported him in past weeks as "on vacation.") The production is directed by A. Weller Cole (recently returned from the Colorado Badlands specifically for his 34th taste of Summer Mummer madness), with the assistence of his able sideman, E. Charles Strickland (fondly, and otherwise, referred to as Teddy Bare, or is it Bear?). Stage management is by Darrell Ward (an evil sort onstage taking the form of Baron Waste) and Douglas Heck (the Aggie adrift in the midst of the capering cast and crew which is more than enough said). Technical direction is by John Michael Warburton (whose quiet-eyed manner and inverted name, make it clear he's a man it's wise to not-rub-raw).

When the curtain closes on the melodrama, the evening's entertainment is only two-thirds over. Next comes the Olio, directed by (wild) Bill Shaner (known in the melodrama as half a Benson Burner), choreographed by Cherry Jones (of dance hall fame).

Filled to capacity with talent, real and imagined, the Olio is a mind-boggling sequence of short skits, the main ingredient of which is nonsense. One in particular is the high point of the evening. It includes a delightful male threesome, whose actions cause the girls to whistle and the men to boo. Eat your heart out Arnold Schwarzenegger, the see-some threesome is on your trail.

Clearly this is a case of summer madness. In order to catch a dose, call 682-4111 for the prescription. (Any relationship between the words written herein and the truth is purely by coincidence and not to be taken lightly, or is it seriously? One never knows, does one — especially after having been exposed to a case of summering mummering madness.)

— GEORGIA TEMPLE



Prof. Benson Burner (Bill Shaner) is in the hot seat of trouble as Fritz Von Swineheart (Mike Christy) gleefully gives him a dose of electricity, free of charge.

An enthusiatic audience says goodnight as the grand finale brings the curtain down on an evening of mummering madness at the 34th annual Summer Mummers. The melodrama and olio are being staged Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights through Sept. 4 at the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado St.

Her versatile voice accentuates roles

By JAY SHARBUTT
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Mia Dillon speaks Southern in the Broadway comedy, "Crimes of the Heart." She plays a Mississippi miss in some trouble, having shot her husband because she "didn't like his looks."

Off-stage, she speaks Pennsylvanian, if that constitutes an accent. Next month, though, she returns to Southern when she reports to the Berkshire Theater Festival for a new play, "The Place of Amateurs."

"It's funny," she was saying recently. "I seem to do accents in pairs. I had an Irish accent when I did 'Da' on Broadway, then was Irish again in another Hugh Leonard play, 'Summer.'

"It's lucky I pick up accents very quickly," the young actress said, with great fervor. "But I can hardly wait to do a play in New York where I don't have to use an accent."

A tiny woman with a big smile, Miss Dillon was Tony-nominated last season for her work as Babe, the youngest of three strange sisters in "Crimes," a Pulitzer-winner written by Beth Henley.

ENTERTAINMENT

She decided she wanted to act when she was 10. She formally studied her craft at Penn State. Early in her career, she was what you'd call a commuting aspiring actress.

She traveled regularly from her parents' home near Philadelphia to New York, where she tried out for low- or no-pay "showcases." It was a life of auditions, anxiety and Amtrak schedules.

Her heart was broken when she almost got — but was turned down for — a part in a piece called "The Shortchanged Review." The heart mended when the director remembered her and cast her as an understudy when Joseph Papp took the piece to Lincoln Center.

Understudying is a long way from appearing, "but at least I got my Equity card," she said, meaning membership in the actors' union, always a difficult task for young mendicants here.

"That was a lucky break," she continued. "And it forced me to move to New York. But the show closed after 10 weeks." She laughed. "Then the trouble started."

It was back to making the rounds, begging actor-swamped agents to represent her, and facing the old Catch-22: "They won't see you unless you're working and you can't get work without an agent."

A lean period, she said. "I did a little taste of everything — waitressed, worked as an office temp, took ticket orders for the Metropolitan Opera Guild. Finally, I got another show.

"It paid $60 a week. I thought I was on top of the world."

However, a quiz show proved the biggest break of all then. Urged by a friend to audition for "The $20,000 Pyramid," she became a contestant and exited $10,000 to the good. It enabled her to survive.

It also led to an unexpected meeting with one of Broadway's greats.

"During the show, they asked me what I did and I told them, 'I'm an aspiring actress,'" she said. "Three days after the show, I got a call from a playwright.

"He wanted me to come up to his apartment and read his play. Said I might be right for a part in it." She smiled. "Yeah, it sounded fishy to me, too. But I thought, 'How much trouble could I get in?'"

So off she went, half-expecting to find a mustache-twirling roue in a smoking jacket at the door, purring, "Some Madeira, m'dear?"

She found no roue. No Madeira, either. Only venerable, venerated Marc Connelly, author of "The Green Pastures" and other celebrated works. They had a nice chat and she read from his new play.

"It was never produced," she sighed. "But it was quite something to meet him. He was just a fascinating, wonderful man."

Linden lighter his 'Barney Miller' role

He's also weightless in new ABC movie project

By BOB THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Barney Miller has written his last misdemeanor report, and Hal Linden is hustling on to other things, including a $6-million television movie.

It's called "Starflight One," even though Linden refers to it as "Airport '82." He stars, along with Lee Majors, Lauren Hutton, Ray Milland and Robert Webber in the three-hour thriller, said to be the most expensive ever undertaken by ABC.

"I'm the designer of a new hypersonic plane that gets into trouble," says Linden. "It's a hardware picture. It doesn't require much of the actors, but it has been fun, especially dealing with the weightlessness. All of us were floating in a cabin.

"That's why I took the show — for fun. It doesn't pretend to be great drama. It's simply television entertainment fare."

For the first time in more than eight years, Hal Linden is able to plot his own future. That's because of the much-lamented end of the "Barney Miller" series.

Why did it die?

"Because we lost all of our writing staff," explains Linden. "All of them went on to other things, and we were left with the prospect of assembling a new writing team. So Danny (Arnold, the show's producer) said, 'That's it, let's forget it.'

"It was a disappointment for the actors, because we felt there was more in us to give to the show. And I was looking forward to directing next season. I had directed three shows and found it very exciting.

"The trouble with 'Barney Miller' was the standards we had set for ourselves. We started out with two days of rehearsal and two days of shooting. Lately we had been working five days a week, which indicates the time and effort that were devoted to the show. Our standards were not normal in television."

Ratings for "Barney Miller" had slid during the past season, but Linden attributes that to network meanuevering: "They changed our timeslot without any publicity, apparently thinking it didn't matter because the show was going off, anyway."

No need to worry about the future of Hal Linden. Residuals will keep him wealthy for years to come. He'll take his nightclub act to Atlantic City in August, and he's continuing with his public-service show on ABC, 'FYI." If he can find the right vehicle, he says he'd like to try a musical on Broadway. That's where he got his first big break, replacing Sydney Chaplin in "Bells Are Ringing" opposite Judy Holliday in 1958.

Expectably, Linden has received numerous offers for other TV series.

"I've been getting cop shows, hospital shows, whatever they're doing at the moment. Situation comedies, too, but I doubt that I would ever do another one.

"For eight years, 'Barney Miller' was never onerous. It was always exciting to go to work. I can't foresee being involved with another situation comedy with such a dedication to excellence. To do less would be depressing."

Campbell's series to be in syndication

NEW YORK (AP) — "If you see somebody on the show who isn't talented, write me a nasty letter," says Glen Campbell.

"My philosophy is talent," Campbell says. "Just because somebody has a hit record doesn't mean they'll be on. A lot of names have been mentioned from TV shows. I don't want somebody who can sing and not carry a tune, if you know what I mean. I say, 'No, this is a music show.'"

His weekly "Glen Campbell Show," syndicated to 150 TV stations, is scheduled to premiere Sept. 18. A dozen half-hour shows have been taped, and 12 more will be done at the end of the summer.

"There's more music on here in half an hour than in an hour on my old show," Campbell says of his new format, which generally will include a single guest. His previous program, "The Glen Campbell Good Time Hour," was on CBS 1968-71.

Restrictions on the network show there became oppressive, Campbell says. "They asked who Bob Dylan was, and turned down Neil Diamond. They told me not to walk out with the guitar — I looked too country. I am country. And soul, blues and rock 'n' roll."

Yawning, the 46-year-old Campbell says, "I got up at 4. Must be getting older." He sings a bit — "Hot rod cars and honky-tonk bars don't mean a thing no more. Must be getting older" — and adds, "Steve Hardin wrote it. He's the harmonica player on the show, the best I've ever been associated with. You'll love him. The audience will applaud in the middle of his solos.

After 19 years with Capitol Records, Campbell has his first album on the Atlantic label coming out in September. It includes "The Mull of Kintyre," which he plays on bagpipes, with harmonica and fiddle; a country song, "A Woman's Touch," written by Jerry Fuller, who produced the album, and "Ruth," the last song written by the late Judd Strunk, who wrote "A Daisy a Day."

Programming for young TV's 'problem child'

By MICHAEL DOUGAN
Hearst Feature Service

Children's television programming is one of the thorniest bushes in the video jungle. Everyone agrees that it isn't good enough, but the concerned factions cannot reach a consensus on what to do about the problem.

What is there to fret over? Well, for starters:

—Cable and over-the-air pay TV routinely program R-rated movies and specials that include liberal dollops of foul language, excessive violence, nudity and explicit sexual behavior.

—Saturday morning, the traditional time for kiddie shows to be aired in a single bloc, features numerous misleading advertisements for cereals that consist of up to 40 percent sugar and a host of confections with no nutritional value.

—Beer and wine ads, particularly those that spotlight well-known athletes or entertainers, are believed to predispose youngsters to look favorably upon alcohol consumption. Worse yet, the National Association of Broadcasters recently abandoned its own strict advertising code, opening the door for hard-liquor commercials.

—Studies that include a recent update of the 1972 Surgeon General's report on televised violence support the thesis that violence on television does promote violent behavior in youngsters.

—Several excellent children's programs — including "Animals Animals Animals" and "30 Minutes" (the only national news program for young people) — have been stricken from the fall lineup.

—Public television, one of the best sources of good children's programs, is in financial trouble.

—President Reagan's Federal Communications Commission chief, Mark Fowler, has reduced the regulatory role of that agency, giving broadcasters more leeway for abuse in their children's programming practices.

The FCC began examining television's influence on children 12 years ago. In 1970, ACT (Action for Children's Television) spurred the FCC to take up the question of whether the networks should make children's programming a part of their daily public-service obligation.

Now, more than a decade later, the commissioners are still stalling. "I think children's television is sort of a back-burner item here at the commission," said Commissioner Joseph Fogarty last April. In the month that followed, ACT filed suit against seven FCC commissioners and the commission itself, charging them with foot-dragging on the issue.

ACT is one of the more rational voices raised in protest over children's television. Whenever discussion of the problem is held, activists stand four-square in favor of censorship. At ACT, that's a dirty word.

ACT has firmly disavowed itself from the Moral Majority movement. Likewise, ACT is opposed to efforts to ban R-rated material from broadcast, preferring instead that cable operators be required to provide free lock-out devices, enabling parents to block reception on channels they find objectionable.

"Television would be a lot less fun for children and adults alike if all controversial programs were forced off the air," reads an editorial in ACT's latest newsletter. "Taking responsibility for what children see on TV is the right of every parent. Forcing programs off the air is no one's right."

When the Moral Majority and Coalition for Better Television started making noises about boycotting networks over what they see as the "anti-Christian" content of prime-time programs, ACT responded with an anti-censorship petition drive. More than 100,000 signatures were netted.

"Throughout its 14-year fight to improve children's experiences with television, ACT has refused to resort to censorships tactics," writes ACT's publications director Cynthia Alperowicz. "Where ACT would reform TV by giving viewers more choices, the Coalition would take away the right of all Americans to choose for themselves what they and their children can watch on TV."

Quartet has merry approach to music

By CARLA HALL
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — It's time to take pictures. The Primavera String Quartet — four women, ages 23 to 30 — take their places amid stacked chairs and tables in an unused Holiday Inn banquet room. They sit like ducks in a row, chairs adjacent, stringed instruments poised. Ah, a perfect opportunity for their specialty — making mischief. Immediately, one's bow is nonchalantly stuck into another's ear.

"Ready?" asks the violist.

The group gives a four-bow salute into the air.

The cellist mockingly turns her cello into a bass, throws her head back, eyes narrowed, and does a little jazz improvisation. The violist picks up the rhythm, and the melody goes down the line until they've managed to start a little jam session.

From the sidelines grins Stanley Silverman — composer, arranger, their biggest fan and the first violinist's husband. "The show is much sillier," he comments.

The show is "The Columbine String Quartet Tonight!," a mixture of music, theater, singing and dancing written especially for and featuring the Primavera String Quartet. The show is about them, their personalities, their backgrounds. They are: violist Diann Jezurski, 28, short, feathered hair, lilting voice, searing ice-blue eyes; second violinist Mitsuru Tsubota, high cheekbones, the youngest (and the quietest) at 23; cellist Melissa Meell, 26, thick blond hair, mugs a lot; Martha Caplin, first violinist, gentle warm face, the oldest at 30 (she buries her face in her hand as she admits to it). Larry Pine, a New York actor, rounds out the "Columbine" show. Silverman, who wrote the original music and arranged the other music in the show, is a composer, has done much musical theater and is writing the film score to the in-progress film "I'm Dancing as Fast as I Can." For the record, he is 43.

They are a serious and well-respected string quartet (the prestigious Naumburg Award for Chamber Music in 1977) and a serious and well respected backup group (Frank Sinatra, among others). And they've been a quartet for six years — with Mitsuru Tsubota coming in during the last year to replace another violinist who had left. What, then, accounts for their on-stage high jinks? Blame it on Silverman, who was dating Ms. Caplin at the time he came up with the idea behind "The Columbine String Quartet Tonight!" "I was interested in telling the relationship between their serious music and their rather cutup, dormitory sense of humor.... They had a kind of unjaded raw sense of humor. If you could juxtapose this with their serious musicianship, it could be really good theater."

"We were completely open," says Ms. Jezurski.

"But just not sure what to," says Ms. Meell.

Silverman asked director Andre' Gregory (the subject of the film "My Dinner With Andre'") to work with the Primavera on the show. "He was the perfect person to deal with their lack of theater experience," says Silverman.

He got playwright Tina Howe ("Museum," "The Art of Dining,") to write the show. "She followed them around at rehearsals for two months," Silverman says.

And so far — since June, when it debuted in New York City — it has been successful theater. Their strict, old-school coach, Felix Galimir, loved it. "He said he didn't know we had it all in us," says Ms. Jezurski. Their Russian coach hasn't seen it yet. "We do a lot of Russian stuff," says Ms. Meell. " 'Mischa, Yascha, Toscha, Sascha.' " (A George Gershwin song in the show.)

Their well-schooled colleagues accepted this departure from serious concert-giving, too. "All of our peers whom we respect just loved it," says Ms. Caplin. "They're almost envious."

Most of the people who come to see them, they say, are people who wouldn't normally attend a string quartet concert.

They've been such a hit that they were chosen to go to Romania in late January for the 10th anniversary celebration of the American Library in Bucharest. They were to perform straight classical music concerts there — no show.

"Think we can trade our jeans for fur hats?" asked Ms. Jezurski.

When they are not traveling, they live separately in apartments in New York, all on the Upper West Side. All except Ms. Tsubota are married. They wear engagement and wedding rings on their right hands so as not to interfere with their playing. Ms. Meell has been married almost three years to physician Stephen Richardson. Ms. Jezurski has been married just a few months to tuba player Sam Pilafian of the Empire Brass Quintet. They married Christmas Eve. "My husband went on a five-week tour with his group," says Ms. Jezurski, "so I haven't seen him since the wedding.... I never get to see my husband in concert and he never gets to see me."

Since the members of the Primavera rehearse several hours a day together, they get to see each other a lot. But they are not best friends, they say, and all seek ways to avoid constant contact with each other.

"We make it a point to stay in different hotel rooms," says Ms. Jezurski, "and sit in different seats when we're on an airplane."

Pause. "No, we sit in each other's laps," says Ms. Caplin. Giggles around the table.

"I meant we sit far apart in an airplane," says Ms. Jezurski.

They travel extensively, doing the show and their regular string quartet work. They will do a concert with Benny Goodman later this year. They used to tour with Frank Sinatra (Brazil last February) and backed him on a recent recording, "Trilogy."

"He's very professional," says Ms. Caplin. "He just came out and did his concerts. You didn't get to know him. But he's very generous — in terms of money and putting us up."

They have reached the plane of success that gives them freedom from the bar mitzvah and wedding circuit, but they are not rich. "The air fare kills us," says Ms. Meell. "The cello needs a half-fare. They put the cello in the seat next to me. It's like a child's fare."

Their disagreements, they say, are purely musical. "We argue about concepts," says Ms. Jezurski. "We never feel the same way about music."

Diehard optimists confess doubts of economic recovery

By OWEN ULLMANN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A recent string of weak economic signs is shaking the confidence economists once had in a mid-year recovery, and even diehard optimists in the Reagan administration are starting to acknowledge doubts about whether the year-long recession will end soon.

A majority of the most widely followed private economists still expect an upturn later this year, although the improvement will be slower and more modest than the group had predicted just a few months ago.

A few economists, however, believe the economy will stay as weak as it is for the rest of the year, and some forecasters warn that things will get worse before they get better, with unemployment passing 10 percent and business failures accelerating.

The more sober views are rooted in the failure of interest rates to register much of a decline this year despite the severe economic downturn. Most forecasts now see little, if any, drop in interest rates for the rest of the year.

The economic gloom was intensified Thursday by a discouraging government report showing a drop last month in factory orders for durable goods, a sign that the recession may be continuing.

The outlook for the economy has been clouded by seemingly mixed signals. Some economic indicators suggest the recession has petered out; others suggest just the opposite.

On Thursday, for example, while the Commerce Department was reporting a drop in durable good orders, the Labor Department said, in a hopeful report, that the number of people filing new claims for state unemployment benefits during early July fell to a 4½-month low.

On Wednesday, the government reported that economic activity during the spring expanded for the first time since last summer. But economists noted that improvements during April and May were reversed in June.

"The odds for a recovery this year are still better than 50-50," says Charles L. Schultze, former President Carter's chief economist. "But the odds are decreasing," he added, putting the blame on "very, very high interest rates."

Reagan administration officials have steadfastly predicted that a turnaround is imminent, but even their bright outlooks have grown dimmer in recent weeks.

Several officials who did not want their names used complained Thursday that outgoing chief White House economist Murray L. Weidenbaum went too far Wednesday in declaring, "The worst of the difficult times ... are behind us."

Weidenbaum made the comment in response to the Commerce Department's report that economic activity rose at a 1.7 percent annual rate during the second quarter of the year.

The officials said Weidenbaum has been saying since early this year that the recession has bottomed out. The problem is getting the economy off the bottom, they say.

Assistant Treasury Secretary Manuel Johnson, who said earlier this week he thought a healthy recovery was already under way, backed away from that view Thursday after the durable goods report was released.

"Things may not be bouncing back as fast," said Johnson, who has been one of the administration's most optimistic economic forecasters

Officially, the administration's forecast is that interest rates will continue declining and consumers will spend their way out of the recession, using their July 1 tax cut and Social Security cost-of-living raise.

As a result, according to a revised economic forecast the administration is preparing, there will be relatively healthy economic growth and declining inflation throughout 1982 and into 1983.

Privately, however, a number of administration officials expressed doubts about whether there will be an upturn this year.

Chairman Paul A. Volcker of the Federal Reserve Board, which may have more influence over economic events than any other institution, also has grown less optimistic about the prospects for a recovery.

"I don't think this recession will last indefinitely," he told Congress Wednesday. "I think the prospects are favorable for some recovery."

"Obviously the economy remains quite weak," said Alan Greenspan, chief White House economist in the Ford administration and now a private consultant on Wall Street.

Greenspan, who attributes a recent, modest decline in interest rates to the unexpected weakening in economic activity during June, still sees some recovery later this year. "It's unlikely things will get worse, but there is a modest possibility of that happening," he said, summing up the consensus view of economists.

The pessimists, however, believe hard times definitely lie ahead.

"The economy is going to hell," says Michael Evans, head of Washington-based Evans Economics Inc. and one of the most pessimistic forecasters around. But Evans does expect a recovery to get under way in 1983.

Gasoline prices lead one percent rise in June consumer costs

By SALLY JACOBSEN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer prices, spurred by a big jump in gasoline costs, kicked up a full 1 percent in June for the second straight month, the government said today.

Even with the strong surge, which amounts to a 13.3 percent gain on an annual basis, inflation was running at a modest 5.1 percent annual rate for the first half of this year, the Labor Department said.

That compares with the 8.9 percent of last year and 12.4 percent of 1980. Economists are predicting an inflation rate for all of this year in the range of 5 percent to 7 percent.

In advance of today's report, private economists had said any sharp upturn should not be viewed as a return to the sizzling inflation levels of previous years.

"I don't think this is a re-emergence of double-digit inflation" for the year, said Edward Yardeni, chief economist for the E.F. Hutton & Co. brokerage house.

Thomas Thomson, chief economist for San Francisco's Crocker National Bank, said he did not expect to see a change in the "downward trend in the basic rate of inflation."

"Given the weakness of the economy," he said, "it's very unlikely we'll see an acceleration."

June's advance in the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index was propelled largely by sharply higher gasoline prices which rose a seasonally adjusted 5.4 percent for the month, well above the 0.9 percent gain in May but stilaseh

H' (pew report said. Fuel oil prices rose 2.1 percent in June compared to a 0.7 percent increase in May.

Energy prices had been falling earlier, tumbling nearly 15 percent from March 1981 to April 1982. But experts had been looking for sizable increases this summer with the tightening of oil stocks and the lessening of the worldwide oil surplus.

Also kicking up the inflation measure last month were housing costs, which soared 1 percent, lower than the 1.4 percent increase the previous month, but still well above the monthly changes earlier in the year which had either declined or risen less than one percentage point.

Home prices climbed 2.3 percent but mortgage interest rates were off 0.8 percent. Rents were up 0.4 percent, the report said.

Food prices were up 0.6 percent, compared with an 0.8 percent increase in May. Prices rose sharply for beef and pork whil poultry prices were off slightly. Egg prices tumbled for the fourth straight month. The cost of restaurant meals and alcholic beverages were up.

The June and May increases of a seasonally adjusted 1 percent compared with the tiny 0.2 percent increase insaid.

For the 12 months ending in June, inflation rose 7.1 percent, the new report said.

If prices rose for 12 straight months at June's pace, the yearly jump would be 13.3 percent. The annual rate reported by the department is based on a more precise calculation of monthly changes than the figure the department makes public.

In other areas, today's report said.

—Transportation rose 2.1 percent, reflecting the big jump in gasoline costs. New car prices climbed 0.7 percent and prices for used cars were up 0.2 perecent. Automobile finance charges rose sharply, after falling earlier in the year.

—Medical care costs were up 0.9 percent, about the same as in the last three months. Physicians' fees rose 0.7 percent and the cost of hospital rooms was up 1 percent.

—Apparel cost rose a scant 0.1 percent after falling by 0.1 percent in May. Modest increases in apparel services and shoes offset declines in the costs of most types of clothing.

—Entertainment costs were up 0.7 percent, more than twice the increase reported in May and April, when it 0.3.

In all, the unadjusted Consumer Price Index stood at 290.6 in June, meaning a hypothetical list of goods and services costing $100 in 1967 would have cost $290.60 last month.

Next year the department will adjust the widely criticized housing component of the index by replacing that calculateen used in June, prices would have registered a seasonally adjusted increase of 1 percent for the month — but the annual rate would have been 12.7 percent rather than the 13.3 calculated under the current method, the department said.

For the first six months of the year the experimental method rose at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 4.2 percent, compared with the 5.1 under the system actually being used.

The housing component has been criticized for overstating the effect of increases or decreases in home prices and financing because those factors are so heavily weighted.

Reagan looking for legal leverage to use on French

ST. LOUIS (AP) — President Reagan, faced with the most serious problem in U.S.-French relations since he took office, is looking for legal leverage to prevent a French company from selling U.S.-licensed equipment to the Soviet Union for a gas pipeline.

Ignoring Reagan's ban on the sale of U.S. technology to the Soviets, France on Thursday ordered French companies to honor contracts with Moscow to provide machinery for the natural gas pipeline.

An administration official, who asked to remain anonymous, said the only thing that would prompt the president to relax his opposition to Western aid for the pipeline would be an unexpected change in Soviet activities in Poland, Afghanistan and elsewhere.

Reagan, in his first public comment on France's decision, told a television interviewer Thursday that the help the allies are providing for the pipeline would would pump $10 billion to $12 billion a year "in cold, hard cash" into the hard-pressed Soviet economy.

The president was in St. Louis to address a U.S. Olympic Committee fund-raising dinner. Before the dinner, he met his eldest son, Michael, who arrived in the city several hours earlier after a record-setting 25-hour 8-minute speedboat trip up the Mississippi River from New Orleans.

A White House official said the administration's options were limited on how to deal with France's announcement. He added that U.S.-French relations are at their lowest point since Reagan took office 18 months ago.

France ordered Alsthom-Atlantique, a French manufacturer, go ahead with deliveries to Moscow of pipeline rotors developed by the General Electric Co. The rotor blades will be used in compressors to drive gas through the pipeline stretching from Siberia to Western Europe.

Discussing his plans, Reagan said in an interview with KMOX-TV, "What I have asked our Commerce Department to do is do a study, and come back to me with a report on what our situation is."

He said he wants to know "our legal position with regard to subsidiary companies in France and in the other European countries owned by American firms, and whether they are legally bound, possibly, by contracts that were made before."

Reagan said he had spoken with French President Francois Mitterrand about the U.S. opposition to allied assistance for the pipeline. Those talks were during the president's trip to Europe last month, the official said.

The president said Mitterrand explained that upon taking office in May 1981, he discovered that the pipeline contracts had been agreed to by the previous French administration. "And they (the French) feel legally bound by those," Reagan said.

Reagan began his campaign against the pipleine last December in response to the Soviet role in the military crackdown in Poland. The president announced on June 18 an expanded ban on exports of U.S.-licensed technology to the Soviets.

Reagan also said the United States has been looking into developing energy sources in the North Sea, Norway and the Netherlands. These areas would not leave Western Europe "in a position to be blackmailed by the Soviet Union if they decide to cut off the gas," he said.

City OKs $3.87 million in construction

Seventy building permits were issued by the city of Midland for the week of July 12 through 16, for construction and alterations valued at$3,870,320. This brings the construction valuation total for the month to $9.49 million, and to $195,627,677 for the year to date.

Ten permits for commercial construction or alterations were issued, to: Modern Floors, 104 S. Pecos, $20,000; J.D. Rivas, 703 E. Front, $600; Abbott Building Co., Windecker and Wright, $135,000; B. Wallace, 610 Andrews Highway, $30,000; Area Builders, 3300 North "A", $17,500; Associated Buildings, 2300 Wadley, $200,000; Amos McGuairt, 400 N. Midland Dr., $32,000; Northstate Construction, 215 W. Wall, $50,000; James E. Borron, 300 W. Wall, $8,500; Larry Z. Rusk, 1110 W. Texas, $9,000.

Twenty-eight permits were issued for new residences worth between $30 and $126,000. The remaining permits were for residential alterations, commercial signs, mobile homes or swimming pools.

Judge blocks changes in protective law

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal judge says the Reagan administration cannot substantially revise a labor law that has protected construction workers for more than half a century unless it shows the statute is defective or wrong.

U.S. District Judge Harold H. Greene on Thursday temporarily blocked the Labor Department from changing the Davis-Bacon Act, which established minimum wages for employees on hundreds of thousands of construction projects.

Greene issued the temporary order because the government's changes were to take effect next Tuesday. Although his decision is not final, Greene said the 16 unions that challenged the plan along with the AFL-CIO "demonstrated a substantial likelihood that they will prevail."

The judge said when an agency abruptly changes a long-standing position, "It may be expected at a minimum to show that the earlier understanding of the statute was wrong or that experience has proved it to be defective. The secretary (of labor) has done neither; his primary reliance throughout has been on cost and cost-savings."

Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan said in a statement, "We are taking the necessary steps to implement the order, but at the same time we are exploring those legal options which are available to us."

The Davis-Bacon Act, enacted in 1931 and amended in 1935, was passed to prevent out-of-town contractors from entering an area and undercutting local wages paid carpenters, bricklayers, laborers and all other categories of construction workers.

The act applies to projects built for the federal government and construction that uses at least $2,000 in federal funds. There are about 600,000 such projects under way at any one time, and the AFL-CIO's Building and Construction Trades Department estimates that 1.5 million to 2 million workers are employed on these projects.

"The new regulations will permit that which Congress intended to halt in 1935," Greene said.

Among the revisions, the department regulations would have:

—Permitted contractors to make greater use of semi-skilled helpers. The unions said this would have allowed contractors to force skilled tradesmen to be paid lower salaries as helpers if they wanted work on the construction job.

—End a requirement that construction companies submit payroll records each week to the Labor Department. This provision was enacted to stop kickbacks in the construction industry.

"For 47 years ... through the administrations of eight presidents and 15 secretaries of labor" the act stood "without substantive alteration," Greene said.

The Labor Department has estimated the changes would save the government would save nearly $600 million annually. It has argued that greater use of semi-skilled workers would open more doors for women and minorities in the construction industry.

DETROIT (AP) — Indefinite layoffs among U.S. autoworkers dropped a bit this week to 213,502, while an industry trade journal reported that 1982 auto production will be about 15 percent behind last year.

The drop in indefinite layoffs from last week's 215,158 largely was due to callbacks at American Motors Corp., the five major U.S. automakers said Thursday.

Ward's Automotive Reports said the low production this year is obvious from the fact that domestic carmakers will not reach the 3 million mark until Monday. By this time last year, more than 4 million cars had been built.

For all of 1981, the domestic automakers produced 6.25 million cars, the lowest total since 1961, when just 5.5 million were built, according to the Motor Vehicle Manufacturers Association.

GM reported indefinite layoffs unchanged at 125,000, but temporary layoffs rose to 21,900 from 13,600 as model changeover began in plants in Lansing, Mich., Framingham, Mass., Lordstown, Ohio, and Moraine, Ohio.

In a separate announcement, GM said it will add a second shift, employing about 750 people, to its GMC Truck & Coach Division plant in Pontiac, Mich., on Oct. 4. Another 1,100 jobs will be available at component plants, GM said. The Pontiac plant assembles the automaker's popular compact pickup trucks.

Ford Motor Co. said it had 43,422 autoworkers on indefinite layoff, down from 44,708 because of people falling off the eligibility rolls. Temporary layoffs rose from zero to 1,100 because of layoffs at Lorain, Ohio, Ford said.

Chrysler Corp. indefinite layoffs were unchanged at 40,100, while temporary layoffs dropped to 5,900 from last week's 8,000 because the Belvidere, Ill., plant resumed operations, the company said.

AMC said it had 3,580 autoworkers on indefinite layoff, down from 4,000. Temporary layoffs were unchanged at zero. Indefinite layoffs at Volkswagen of America rose to 1,400 from 1,350 and temporary layoffs remained at zero.

Environmentalists sue Watt

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Seven environmental groups and the states of Alaska and California have gone to federal court in an effort to halt Interior Secretary James Watt's five-year coastal oil and gas leasing program.

The suit, filed Thursday in the U.S. Court of Appeals, charges that Watt's program fails to properly balance the potential for finding oil and gas with the possible environmental dangers.

"Never before has such a massive turnover of federal lands to private interests been proposed. No area of the outer continental shelf is excluded from the leasing schedule for environmental reasons," said Sarah Chasis, an attorney for the Natural Resources Defense Council, one of the groups bringing suit.

The environmental groups said they were worried about the potential for catastrophic oil spills. They said this danger was even greater in the waters off Alaska, where ice and heavy seas would make cleanup harder.

Watt, in adopting the leasing program Wednesday, said it would be carried out under "rigorous environmental controls." The program calls for making 1 billion acres, an area equal to half the land mass of the United States, available for leasing in 41 sales beginning next month.

Not that much land would actually be leased, but Watt said he hopes to lease up to 12 million acres annually. The most offshore acreage ever leased before was 2.2 million acres last year.

In addition to the law suit, resolutions seeking to overturn the leasing program were introduced in the Senate and House Wednesday. The congressional challenge, however, faces the prospect of a presidential veto if it clears Congress.

Environmental groups joining the NRDC in the suit were the Sierra Club, Friends of the Earth, National Audubon Society, National Wildlife Federation, Conservation Law Foundation of New England and Trustees for Alaska.

In addition to the states of Alaska and California, others filing suit were the North Slope Borough, representing Alaskans living on the North Slope, and another group representing Alaskans living around Norton Sound.

The appeals court last October upheld a similar suit filed against a five-year leasing plan approved by the Carter administration and directed Watt to rewrite that effort.

Ms. Chasis said Watt's program "poses new and even more troubling violations" of the offshore leasing law.

Oil companies report lower profits

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

Many of the nation's major oil companies are reporting sharply lower second-quarter profits, and the most common reason cited is weak consumer demand for oil products and depressed economic activity worldwide.

Exxon Corp., the world's biggest oil company and the largest industrial concern in the United States, said Thursday its profit in the quarter plunged 51.5 percent to $885 million from $1.83 billion a year earlier.

Texaco Inc., the third-ranking U.S. oil company, reported a 45.1 percent decline for the April-June period, to $305 million from $556 million.

Smaller oil concerns showed mixed results, with Standard Oil Co. (Indiana) reporting a 30.9 percent decline and Ashland Oil Inc. posting a five-fold gain.

Standard Oil Co. (Ohio) said its earnings slipped 1.2 percent, while Amerada Hess Corp. earned $61.1 million compared with a big loss a year ago.

Exxon's earnings were its lowest for any quarter since the second quarter of 1979, when it reported net income of $830 million. For Texaco it was the lowest since the first quarter of 1979, when it earned $303.9 million. Oil company profits soared in the second half of 1979 as a result of an oil-price spiral sparked by the Iranian revolution.

Although the latest quarter's profits for both Exxon and Texaco were slightly higher than in early 1979, those gains were far outstripped by U.S. inflation. Prices, as measured by the government's Consumer Price Index, have increased about 33 percent since mid-1979.

Exxon said its net income for the first six months of 1982 totaled $2.13 billion, or $2.45 a share. That was a drop of 37.9 percent from $3.43 billion, or $3.96 a share, earned in the first half of 1981. Revenue dropped 9.4 percent, to $52.37 billion from $57.79 billion.

Texaco's income for the first six months fell 44.6 percent to $672 million, or $2.58 a share, from $1.21 billion, or $4.54 a share a year ago. Its revenue was off 19.1 percent to $24.5 billion from $30.3 billion.

Other oil companies not as dependent as Texaco and Exxon on crude production in the Middle East reported generally less drastic drops.

—Standard of Indiana, the nation's fifth-largest oil concern and the biggest U.S. marketer of gasoline, said its second-quarter profit fell 30.9 percent to $382 million.

—Standard of Ohio, which ranks as the No. 14 oil concern, said its earnings in the second quarter fell 1.2 percent to $473.2 million.

—Amerada Hess said it earned $61.1 million in the second quarter compared with a net loss of $53.7 million a year ago.

—Ashland Oil, the nation's biggest independent refiner, said its second-quarter earnings jumped more than five-fold, to $69.1 million.

Donoghue's MONEY FUND AVERAGE(TM)
-(Averages for all 202 taxable funds)		34	13.0	13.1

Yields represent annualized total return to shareholders for past seven- and thirty-day period. Past returns not necessarily indicative of future yields. Investment quality and maturity may vary among funds. (x) - average term to next rate adjustment date. MONEY FUND TABLE COMMENTARY: Assets of the 202 money funds reported by Donoghue's MONEY FUND REPORT (TM) of Holliston, MA 01746 increased $3.6 billion to $206.8 billion for the week ending July 21, 1982.

The funds' seven-day average yield decreased to 13.02 percent from 13.28 percent. The funds' 30-day average yield decreased slightly, to 13.14 percent from 13.16 percent.

Publisher William E. Donoghue says, "For the first time in 29 weeks the money funds' average maturity figure increases beyond 33 days. This is the highest the average maturity has stood since it hit 35 days on Dec. 22, 1981. This week is the third consecutive week that this figure has increased. Continue watching the average maturity, if it increases again next week expect short-term rates to fall. Institutions-only money funds experience the largest asset increase this week as the assets of these funds increase $2.8 billion."

Economists arguing recession's end

By LORRAINE CICHOWSKI
AP Business Writer

Economists disagreed over when the recession might end, but most business executives were in accord that the outlook for profits, inventories and employee rosters remains bleak for the next few months.

They made their comments on the day the resignation of Murray Weidenbaum, chairman of President Reagan's Council of Economic Advisers, was announced.

Weidenbaum, who will return to teaching at Washington University in St. Louis, said he believed the president's economic recovery program was working, but noted in his letter to Reagan on Thursday that, "From the outset, we have said yours is a long-term program, unlike the quick fixes of the past."

Meanwhile, the Bureau of Labor Statistics was to announce today the monthly Consumer Price Index, which is a measurement of changes in the retail prices of a constant marketbasket of goods and services.

Wall Street economist Henry Kaufman, chief economist of Salomon Brothers Inc., slightly amended his earlier forecasts Thursday to predict short-term interest rates would fall soon because of the Federal Reserve Board's decision to relax control over money growth.

But he repeated his previous prediction that long-term rates would rebound to their record highs by early 1983. He had said previously that short-term rates would move irregularly higher but fall short of their record highs.

"Most of the additional decline in short-term interest rates will likely occur relatively soon," Kaufman said.

One administration official, Manuel Johnson, acting assistnt Treasury secretary for economic policy, said, "I still think we'll get a healthy recovery. I think it's already under way."

His comments came despite a Commerce Department report that new factory orders for durable goods fell a seasonally adjusted 1.6 percent in June from the preceding month to $74.9 billion. New orders for non-defense capital goods, which are considered a barometer of future plant and equipment sending, fell 5.5 percent.

But Otto Eckstein, chairman of Data Resources Inc., a leading economic-forecasting firm, said, "The best we can hope for now is a mild recovery stretching into 1983. But there are a lot of risks there will not be a recovery."

A survey by Dun & Bradstreet, the research unit of Dun & Bradstreet Corp., said corporate executives are growing less optimistic about the outlook for profits, inventories and payrolls for the third quarter. However, more executives are growing optimistic about a sales increase.

At the same time, Standard & Poor's Corp. said profit margins for U.S. corporations fell in the first quarter to the lowest level since 1975. Its index of 400 industrial corporations averaged 4.45 percent in the first three months of the year, the lowest since a 4.43 percent average return for the S&P 400s in the final quarter of 1975.

In other economic news:

—The major automakers said the number of U.S. autoworkers on indefinite layoff fell 1,656 to 213,502, largely because of callbacks at American Motors Corp. Meanwhile, an industry trade journal predicted that this year's auto production in the United States will be nearly 15 percent behind last year's already depressed level of 6.25 million.

—Reagan signed legislation guaranteeing small businesses a share of the money the federal government spends on research and development projects. The legislation requires nine agencies to set aside for small businesses a fraction of the money they spend for outside research.

Cox' disappointment as a player long forgotten

By TED BATTLES
Sports Edtior

It came after several seasons of minor league development. John felt it was time to make his move...and he was ready, a former all-star third baseman, good glove, now, if he could just find Brooks Robinson's bat to go with it.

When they called him into the front office that spring, it wasn't to tell him to report to Chicago. "Hey, John, we've got a GM's job open. Would you be interested?"

JOHN, OF course, rejected it without hesitation. "I'm a third baseman," he reminded.

It turned out the offer was too good to turn down. "Well, it's this way, John, we already have a third baseman...."

Cox buried his disappointments neatly beside the major league career and attacked GMing just as he had a slow roller down the line. It was a circuitous route, fraught with peril, but John made it to the majors as a front office executive. And in renewing acquaintances and rehashing old times, the game's faults, the game's undying appeal for the masses during his weekend trip to Midland, it's obvious John is enjoying doing what he's doing in the majors more than he would have as a player.

"It's like working in the CIA. You are constantly dealing with people and you can never know what tidbit of information will prove beneficial, or for that matter, where it will come from," explains John, whose title is assistant to Chicago Cubs executive vice president Dallas Green.

"For example, I was in San Diego with Dallas Green a few weeks. I had to go back to Chicago and in the Los Angeles airport I picked up a paper. There was a small paragraph that Jay Johnstone had been released by the Dodgers and we desperately needed a left-handed hitter. When I got to Chicago, I called Dallas and asked if he'd seen the paper. As it turned out, the item wasn't in the San Diego paper.

"Jay is an established player with a track record and he had played for Dallas before, so we signed him, even though he has the reputation of being a flake. However, he's the kind of flake that can keep a club loose and that's something we need in Chicago right now."

So Jay was signed and there have been no regrets.

IN ANOTHER recent incident, a scout from a team that has suffered a horrible first half was encountered and John made conversation by offering, "I suppose you'll jump from advance scouting to scouting the American League teams for possible off season trades?"

The scout returned, "I thought I would be, too. But the boss says to continue to scout teams we are going to play. He thinks the two teams up front are going to fold in the last half and we are going to be battling our old rival (also in the depths of despair) for the pennant before it's over."

For Cox that was significant. "That meant, if they planned to be in the pennant race, they would need relief pitching, which is where they were hurting. It also meant we might be able to make a deal for one of our relievers whose salary was based on his past and not his current performance."

Last December at the winter meetings in Hollywood, Fla., the Cubs tried, right up to the midnight deadline, to make a deal for a centerfielder. One of the enticements was a relief pitcher Bill Caudill. Cox thought he had the dealed sewed up and got the GM of the other club to call Dallas three minutes to midnight. No deal.

John relates, "I happened to see the GM and president recently and mentioned out attempts to make a trade and couldn't resist a little dig. 'Remember, we wanted to give you Caudill.'" John relates he thought he was going to see an on-the-spot firing, "They were still a little sensitive about it."

Caudill has something like 16 saves for Seattle and even the Cubs wish they had him back.

AS A member of baseball's CIA since leaving Midland as GM in 1974, John has survived a couple of palace rebellions and a military junta in Chicago and is still loving every minute of what he is doing.

When Green was named to complete the rebuilding job that has been going on in Chicago since 1945, John wasn't sure what

Future rivals team up tonight

HOUSTON (AP) — Newton's Anthony Byerly and San Antonio Holmes' Jimmie Hawkins will be arch rivals next football season when Byerly attends the University of Texas and Hawkins goes to Texas A&M.

Tonight, however, they will unite in an attempt to bring back offensive excitement to the Texas High School Coaches Association All-Star football game.

(Related story, 4C)

The annual game has produced only 59 points in the past four years and the South starting running backs predict changes in tonight's battle against the North.

"We will put points on the board, our offense can be explosive," said Hawkin. "I don't really care where I line up, I just think we can move the football."

BYERLY, WHO produced 6,598 yards as a schoolboy, and Hawkins, will be joined in te South starting backield by Tom Muecke, a top-rated quarterback prospect from Angleton.

North Coach Greg Sherwood of Plainview will counter at quarterback with Andrews' Keith Brooks. Running backs will include Cedrick Love of Borger and Chris Vaughn of DeKalb and tailback Earl Johnson from Dallas Thomas Jefferson.

Brooks isn't conceding any ofensive punch to the South.

"OUR BACKS on the North team are just as good as the South and with our line it will make it that much easier," said Brooks, who will attend Southern Methodist. "The pulling guards will leave you behind if you don't hit the hole. It's not like in high school where you are waiting for them.

"I'm excited because I'll get to play with four or five good backs. With the backs we have, they won't be able to key on any one of us."

Lamesa defeats Northe Central, 5-3

LAMESA—Wes Shook hit a two-run homer as Lamesa defeated Midland North Central, 5-3, here Thursday night in the District Little League double-elimination tournament. Lamesa advances to Saturday's 8 p.m. championship game while North Central will play at 8 p.m. tonight against Big Spring in the losers' bracket final which will produce Lamesa's opponent.

David Scott pitched the win while Sam Sowders took the loss. Brent Hail had a double for North Central.

Oilers put rookies, free agents under microscope

SAN ANGELO (AP) — Houston Oiler rookies and free agents working out for the first time today will get a closer look than recent Oiler newcomers — some may even win starting assignments.

"We've got people coming in who are legitimately, not just cosmetically, competing for starting jobs," Head Coach Ed Biles said Thursday prior to greeting about 55 players. "It should make our practices more exciting."

The Oilers got 11 players in the National Football League draft that included their first No. 1 choice since 1978.

JIM MURRAY

Walter Wellesley Smith was something special

His name was Walter Wellesley Smith and if my name were "Walter Wellesley Smith," you can bet I would use every syllable of it. Except, if it might be "W. Wellesley Smith" even though a sage once remarked you never trust a man who parts his name in the middle.

Know what the real Walter Wellesley Smith preferred to be known as? "Red." He had a moniker right out of the pages of "Ivanhoe," but he prefered a name that sounded as if he had just climbed down from a truck.

You don't have to be all that good if your name is "Westbrook Pegler." Or "Grantland Rice." Who the hell is ever going to forget that? But, if your name is Smith, and all you have to go with it is Red (or Jack), you'd better be good.

RED SMITH was good. People knew the name. And what it stood for. Uncompromising integrity. A surgical deftness with words that made some of us wonder if Red wrote wearing rubber gloves.

To give you an idea what a class act Red Smith was, there was another Red Smith, and he was a baseball wheeler-dealer in the '40s. One night in 1948, the real Red Smith was awakened from a sound sleep by the real Leo Durocher. I mean, the voice was unmistakable. It was either Leo Durocher or a bullfrog. He wanted to discuss a baseball deal. It would have been a real scoop for Walter "Red" Smith, but he realized Leo the Loud wanted Richard P. "Red" Smith, a scout for the Chicago Cubs at the time. Leo was with the Giants, and a three-way deal was in the works.

"You've got the wrong Red Smith, Leo," Walter Smith told Durocher, "but don't worry, only next time check the room number, I don't want to wind up with one of your pitchers to feed." And he hung up and went back to sleep. Red didn't pick up stories by eavesdropping. You got one call to your lawyer with Red.

I bring this up both because Red has a book out postumously (Red died last January) and because I have a somewhat more personal interest. I was honored immeasurably in my craft by being presented with the Red Smith Award by the Associated Press Sports Editors last month. And when I tell you the only other winner of that award to date is Red Smith, you know how proud I am.

BUT I COME not to self-praise. I come to tell you what kind of a craftsman Red Smith was, the standards he set, and why they named an award after him. (Actually, I warned the APSE that Red should have been consulted. Red considered that anything that came out of California should be divided by 11. He might have thought that they had got a short horse again if he knew about me.)

Red's book is called "To Absent Friends" (Atheneum), and it's vintage Smith.

Red was the master of the pithy quote. For instance, the bookmaker who booked himself on a ocean cruise in quarters so palatial that a rich passenger — Red thinks it may have been an Astor or Rockefeller — asked the bookie how he could afford to go so first-class. "Odds-on favorites," the bookie told him laconically.

Red could pick the quote that was an oration. Like the time the Great Yankee slugger, Tommy Henrich, was told by manager Joe McCarthy to lay off a certain pitch. Henrich couldn't. Several misses later, Marse Joe told him, "Henrich, either lay off that pitch, or you'll learn to hit it in Newark." Another time, the Newark farm team of the Yankees was so good, it won its pennant by 27 1/2games, and, when Henrich went up to the Yankees, somebody wondered why, and Joe Gordon, Newark's second baseman at the time, cracked, "because he couldn't make the team here."

He told of the time his great good friend, Granny Rice, was telling a young reporter his favorite racetrack was not lordly Belmont, regal Santa Anita, or storied Hollywood Park, but a track in Tampa, Fla., Sunshine Park, which Red describes as "a sort of slum clearance project in a rattlesnake colony." And the young reporter couldn't understand Granny's affection for it. "Well, then, what's your favorite city?" he asked. "Quebec," answered Granny, "you go there for snow, you'd get it."

Red tells of the time Heartley "Hunk" Anderson was warming up the interior linemen for practice on the Notre Dame field as assistant to Knute Rockne, and Rockne finally hollered over "all right, Heartley, will you be good enough to bring those behemoths over here?" And Hunk answered "Hell, Rock, they ain't even bleeding yet."

Red remembers the time a colleague, Tom Meany, described the fabled Rudy York, as "part-Indian, part-first-baseman." And Red remembers the time Rudy was pulling away from an inside pitch on a sudden blackout that hit the Polo Grounds in wartime, and, falling away, hit the ball in the right field seats. "The scorer ruled it self-defense," wrote Red.

HE REMEMBERS Pegler in his non-political phase as almost as savage as when he was chastising the Roosevelt White House. Pegler once wrote that a horse owner's silks should be "a dirty shirt with a louse in it."

Red could puncture pomposity with the most invisible and painless of needles. On Avery Brundage, he commented, "Avery Brundage stood as a monument to Avery Brundage's concept of sport. It did not trouble him that what he stood for existed mainly in his own mind." Avery, he said, had "an integrity equalled only by his insensitivity."

Red could keep an eye on his own craft, too. Of Jimmy Cannon he would write, "at his best, he could make any writer wonder what was the use?"

So could Red. He wrote that another writer said of Cannon: "Jimmy, you remind me of a young left-handed pitcher with all the stuff in the world and no control."

Red had control. He was like the grizzled old Grover Alexander who could keep the batters (read, readers) off balance on sheer artistry. With Red, if you were guessing curve, you got fastball. I got his award. But I never got his touch.

Brad Essary, the 6-5 forward from North Mesquite who is headed for Midland College, earned a starting berth for the North All-Stars in the annual Texas High School Coaches Association game in Houston. Essary is reportedly angry at being snubbed by major colleges and will join Coach Jerry Stone's Chaparrals with something to prove. That's really nothing new for JUCO players, and Stone would probably like to have a team full of those types...

Former Midland Lee and New Mexico University quarterback Brad Wright is trying to wing his way onto the roster of the Dallas Cowboys, and he just might make it this time around if the Cowboys trade the unhappy Glenn Carano. Wright just missed latching on with the Miami Dolphins last year...

Will the new USFL fly next spring? With the big TV contract with ABC and ESPN aside, the new professional football league, which hasn't even signed its first player yet, still faces some problems. The USFL has announced that it will hold its player draft in December and many of the college coaches don't like it, including Michigan's Bo Schembechler. College coaches don't seem to like the idea of any draft being held prior to the bowl games and during regular season play when players will have the draft on their mind. Schembechler says, "If the USFL persists with a December draft, we will not allow them on our campus. We will not allow them to view our films and they will not be welcome at our workouts."...

For all the money spent on minor league operations, the Chicago Cubs aren't using the Midland Cubs to best advantage. Only Lee Smith and Randy Martz are graduates of the Midland based team on the big club and both are pitchers. Dennis Lamp, Mike Krukow and Bruce Sutter are some other pitchers they have let get away. And there is not an everyday player to be found. The way the things are going in Chicago, maybe the Cubs should give the youngsters in the system a chance. I can't help but believe that someone

Madden predicts strike in fifth week

FOOTBALL—A strike by NFL players is inevitable and can be expected sometime after the fifth week of the 1982 season, former Coach John Madden predicts. "Both sides (owners and players) are hard-headed. They have big egos and they want to win. They think it's a sign of weakness to give in."

Madden said he thinks a strike would come sometime after the fifth week of the season because players are paid a 16th of their salary each week. "If a guy makes $10,000 a game, he can come out in pretty good shape having played five games. And if you get five playing weeks in, the season counts as a pension-qualifying year." Madden said he doubted that any strike would last more than one or two weeks...

Yanks' Winfield escapes crowded NY doghouse

Winfield, object of Steinbrenner's displeasure in the past, has to be making the New York Yankee owner happy the way he's hitting and fielding the ball these days.

Thursday night, he ripped two doubles, including a two-run job, and made a fine defensive play to help the Yankees beat the Texas Rangers 4-3 in only one of two American League games. Chicago beat Toronto 3-2 in the other contest.

Winfield's performance raised his batting average to .295 and gave him 53 runs batted in for the season. He also has hit 17 home runs.

SOME OTHER former National Leaguers, however, are still having problems in their new surroundings — particularly right fielder Ken Griffey and first baseman Dave Collins. They were among seven players who were ordered to take extra workouts before Thursday night's game because Steinbrenner was displeased with their recent performances.

White Sox 3, Blue Jays 2

"I feel like my job is to keep us in the game," Burns said after Jerry Hairston's two-run single in the eighth inning catapulted the White Sox to their victory. "My personal statistics haven't been as good as the last couple of years," Burns added, "but we've been close in the games I've pitched in."

When Toronto went ahead 2-1 in the seventh inning, starter Jim Gott stood to be the winner. McLaughlin bailed him out of a jam in the bottom of the seventh, but couldn't hold the lead in the eighth.

"He's had great stuff all year, but he's also had tough luck all year," Toronto Manager Bobby Cox said of Gott. "He's going to be a real good pitcher very soon."

Andrews ranks fourth in state

Angelo, Permian in Top10

HOUSTON (AP) — Bryan in Class 5A, Brownwood in 4A, Post in 3A, East Bernard in 2A and Lindsay in A received No. 1 state rankings Thursday in a poll of sports witers attending the Texas High School Coaches Association Coaching School.

Bryan, with 13 starters returning from last year's 9-1 finish, received seven first-place votes to beat out runner up Baytown Sterling in Class 5A. Port Arthur Jefferson was third followed by Lewisville, San Antonio Jay, San Angelo Central, Odessa Permian, Austin Reagan, Conroe McCullough and Houston Washington.

Gainesville, with two first-place votes, was second followed by Stafford Willowridge, a state finalist last year. Andrews was fourth followed by Bay City, Cleburne, Huntsville, Flour Bluff, Belton and Georgetown.

Eastland and Tidehaven ranked two and three on the Class 2A list followed by Frisco, Trinity, Clarendon, Shallowater, Dublin, and Kress, with Forney and Cooper tied for 10th.

In Class A, Eden ranked No. 2 followed by Runge, Rocksprings, Agua Dulce, Ropes, Throckmorton, Meridian, Bremond and Valley Mills.

An AP Sports Analysis
By JOHN NELSON

The Dodgers' opening-day lineup for the '49 World Series against the archrival New York Yankees had Pee Wee Reese at shortstop, Spider Jorgensen at third, Duke Snider in center and Jackie Robinson at second. On down the line, it read: Hermanski, lf; Furillo, rf; Hodges, 1b, and Campanella, c. Newcombe, who would be voted Rookie of the Year, was on the mound.

IN THE opening game, on Oct. 5, Newcombe pitched a five-hitter, giving up just one run on a homer by Tommy Henrich and lost 1-0. The Yankees' Allie Reynolds allowed just two hits, one each by Reese and Jorgensen, and New York went on to win the Series 4-1.

"I remember that game better than any in my career, probably," says Newcombe. "We'd still be playing it today, trying to get a run off Allie Reynolds, except, of course, that 'Old Reliable,' Tommy Henrich, hit a home run off me."

Today, however, the game seems vastly different for Newcombe, 56 years old and the Los Angeles Dodgers' director of community relations. A look at the Dodgers' lineup of '49 tells part of the story.

"NOW, YOUNG ballplayers are getting their experience in the majors instead of the minors," he says. "There's a lot of inexperience.

"We went through 15 or 20 years as a pro ballplayer, and we see the kids now after one or two stars making $150,000," Newcombe says. "And we see them making mistakes they should have been making in the minor leagues. It's becoming alarming."

Although he believes Steve Sax, the Dodgers' rookie second baseman, will one day be a great ballplayer, Newcombe says Sax is a prime example of what has happened to baseball. In a three-game stretch recently, Sax was picked off first base twice while switching hands on the bag. It never would have happened to Robinson.

"We have a great kid in Steve Sax, but he makes mistakes," says Newcombe. "There is a lack of experienced players today. The supply line has dried up.

"IN 1955, the Dodgers had 27 farm clubs," he says. "Now, we have four. The colleges are the ones that are going to have to do it, and the major leagues are going to have to help."

Newcombe's concern for these young ballplayers is deeply rooted in his own career, shortened to 10 years by alcohol. "It shortened my career. It bankrupted my business. Worst of all, it almost broke up my home," Newcombe says of his drinking problem.

Newcombe, who now lectures on the subject of alcoholism, would like to see major league baseball help to bankroll college programs. Without the financial help, he says, the college can't afford to hire coaches who can teach.

"We have to do something because the fans see too much inexperience and mediocrity," he says. "And it could also be a detriment to young ballplayers if they don't get the experience somewhere.

"They don't get the coaching in high school. Maybe the colleges should contract someone like Stan Musial or Lou Brock or someone like that to work with them, but where are they going to get the money to pay people like that? With the economy the way it is, the colleges need help," he says.

NEWCOMBE compiled a record of 149-90 in his career and set a record for pitchers by hitting seven homers in 1955. The following year, he was voted the first Cy Young Award and named MVP of the National League, becoming the only pitcher to win MVP, Cy Young and rookie honors in a career.

"In 1956, I won 27 games, was voted the first Cy Young and won the MVP," Newcombe says, "and that made me the best player in baseball that year. I was very proud."

But he says there was one accomplishment that made him even more proud. Newcombe, Robinson and Campanella were all signed by the Dodgers in 1946. While Robinson made it to the majors two years before Newcombe and one before Campanella, Newcombe feels a kindred spirit.

"That was my biggest moment, being signed along with Robinson and Campanella," Newcombe says. "We were pioneers in an effort to break the color barrier."

TED BATTLES
BATTLE SCENE

A few weeks back when everyone was analyzing what was wrong with Bruce Sutter, it was a cause for concern.

Year in and year out Bruce is the National League leader in saves, but if it weren't for Fred Martin, Bruce would be working in a printing shop back in southern Pennsylvania. He was that close to giving up the game.

That's when Fred Martin got hold of Bruce and taught him the split-fingered fast ball, the pitch that has given National League batters late-inning nightmares for six years and won for Sutter a Cy Young award in 1979.

SUTTER SUDDENLY became a hot property and in 1975 he was the guy behind the starters that let Midland win the Texas League West.

It was at the end of the 1975 season that the Chicago Cubs gave Fred his walking papers. Fred's crusty attitude and outspoken opinions finally were his downfall. Martin didn't hesitate to state an opinion, no matter whose toes he might step on.

While some folks swore at Fred, Cubs pitchers swore by him. It was on the night in El Paso that the Cubs were one victory away from clinching the pennant that Fred got word that he had been fired. The Midland players dedicated the game to him.

WHEN SUTTER made it to the majors, he had permission to call in Fred anytime he experienced pitching troubles, even though Martin was working for another organization. Bruce treasured his counsel that much. More than that, Fred was the only one that could take one look and tell him what he was doing wrong.

So when they began asking what was wrong with Bruce a couple of weeks ago, it was cause for genuine concern. We wondered if it might be the end of the road. Fred Martin had died a couple of summers ago and it looked like there was no one left to whom to turn.

Fortunately, Mike Roarke, former pitching coach for Chicago in the minors and later in the majors, was almost as familiar with the mechanics of Bruce's delivery as Martin. Roarke left baseball a couple of years ago for private business, but he is helping the Red Sox' International League Pawtucket club in his spare time.

SUTTER was given permission to call in Mike for consultation. Roarke, the old Detroit Tiger catcher, decided Bruce's only problem was "overthrowing" and Sutter, now the ace of the St. Louis Cardinals' bullpen, responded with two saves in a doubleheader against Chicago.

A year earlier Bruce responded to a Roarke visit with three saves and a win in a 10-day stretch.

Sutter has made one other adjustment. He is relying less on the split-finger fast ball and going more with his fast ball. He discovered the batters had stopped chasing bad pitches while taking those big swings, trying to hit the ball out of the park

As Sutter explains, "If you throw the same pitch all the time, they just get so they totally disregard everything else. When I mix up my pitches, it makes my fast ball look faster and my split-finger look like it's breaking more."

Midland scores 3 UGSA triumphs

Girls softball teams invaded Lancaster Park Thursday for the 1982 version of the United Girls Softball Association West Texas State Tournament.

Four games were played Thursday to kick off the three-day fast pitch tournament with Midland winning two of three games played.

In Division I (ages 8-10), Midland destroyed the Big Spring representative by a 30-3 count with Courtney Powell claiming the pitching victory while Anna Martinez fell in defeat. The Tall City team jumped out in the bottom of the first inning to a 12-1 lead and was up 20-1 after two. Big Spring managed to score its final two runs in the fourth and fifth innings.

In the other Division I game, Snyder rallied in the top of the fourth inning for nine runs for an 11-4 lead over defending state champion Odessa. Odessa came back in the bottom of the frame with five runs to pull within 11-9, but those runs were neutralized when Snyder scored five more in the fifth. Connie Valequez was the winning pitcher while Mary Burian suffered the loss.

In Division II play (ages 11-13), Midland Blue came up with the second Tall City victory by knocking off Odessa's second defending state championship team with a 17-6 victory. Odessa led 5-1 after two inning, but Midland rallied to tie the game in the third at 5-5 and took the lead for good in the fourth, 9-6. A seven-run sixth inning gave the Tall City team a good insurance margin going into the final frame.

Big Spring handed Midland Red a 15-8 in the other Division II game. Five Midland runs in the sixth inning were not enough to overcome a Big Spring 15-3 lead. Jeannie Forte was credited with the pitching victory while Melissa Martinez claimed the loss.

The tournament has four divisions of competition determined by age. Division III (ages 14-16) and Division IV (ages 17-19) are the other two age brackets with teams seeking the West Texas Title.

The tournament resumed action today at 8:30 a.m. with the final games on the two Lancaster Park fields scheduled for 6:30 p.m.

Garvey says TV revenues will avert NFL lockout

WASHINGTON (AP) — National Football League club owners, in the opinion of Players Association chief Ed Garvey, will not risk losing television revenue by locking out the players.

As the two sides prepared to continue their non-productive contract negotiations today, talk persisted that the owners will create a lockout if no agreement has been reached as the Sept. 12 season openers draw near.

Garvey, commenting on that Thursday said, "I don't think they will ever call a lockout.

"Once they do that, they know the players can strike. I don't see a lockout as an effective tool, only a good threat. They would risk their TV package."

Asked about a report that more than half the owners want to lock the players out before the start of the season, management's chief negotiator, Jack Donlan, director of the NFL Management Council, said, "I haven't polled the owners. My only comment is 'no comment.'

"The last time I talked to the owners there were some who favored a lockout and some who didn't. There were others who were wary of what happened in baseball last year.

"That is an issue we will have to address before we open the season."

At Thursday's session, the first in a week, the union once again proposed a joint drug counseling and rehabilitation program with the owners. And, management was expected to once again reject the plan, which would be in keeping with the tone of the talks until now.

After the latest five-hour meeting, both sides agreed that there was no agreement on any of the issues, except that each had submitted proposals which the other had agreed to study.

Hunter, 78 other rookies and eight veterans prepared for a scrimmage with the Los Angeles Rams' rookies to be held Saturday at the Cowboys' camp.

Comiskey gets 50th Star game

CHICAGO (AP) — Comiskey Park, where baseball's first All-Star Game was staged, will be the site of next year's 50th-anniversary contest, and all surviving players from that first squad will be invited.

"It's fitting that when you celebrate something like 50 years of the All-Star Game that you have it at a historic park like Comiskey Park," Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn said at a news conference Thursday to publicize the previously announced decision.

Chicago White Sox President Eddie Einhorn said all living players from the All-Star squads of the first and 25th games — in 1933 and 1958 — would be invited to ceremonies at the 50th-anniversary game and be asked to play in an old-timers' contest.

"It's a tremendous opportunity for the White Sox and Chicago to showcase baseball and the city," Einhorn said. "We view it as an exciting challenge to bring the All-Star Game back to the place of its origin on the exact anniversary of its founding in 1933."

Kloza, lettered in golf four years at San Antonio Lee, was All-District and a region qualifier in 1982. He also lettered in both basketball and football two years and was a quarterback on the Lee football team.

"I think John is one of the best all-around athletes that we have ever signed at Midland College," said Poss. "His dad (John Kloza) is a SWC official and I've worked some games with him."

Harris scores ace

Bill Harris aced the No. 11, par 3, 160-yard hole at Midland Country Club Wednesday with a five-iron.

Harris was playing with Cecil Rhodes, Lloyd Henderson and Burt Conly. It was Harris' second hole-in-one.

Franklin, a blue chipper from LaMarque, completed a three-point play with 32 seconds to play Thursday night to rally the favored South to a 92-91 victory over the North in the Texas High School Coaches Association All-Star basketball game at Hofheinz Pavilion.

It was a Snook-like victory for Victorick, who has led the Bluejays to three straight state Class A titles using a style that often includes dramatic comeback victories.

Snook also goes for the high percentage shot, but Victorick will take what Franklin gave him.

"Alvin's drive was about a 50-50 chance, he makes it, and we win," said Victorick, whose teams have lost only 10 games in three years. "We had to make the foul shots and the game was ours. We didn't rebound well and that made the game close."

The game was not close with 5:35 to play when the underdog North had taken an 83-73 lead, the biggest margin of the game.

Two free throws by Graford's Tim Ford and a fast break basket by Kennan DeBose of Killeen with 2:04 to play put the North back on top 91-85.

But Edwin Mitchell of Diboll, the South's most valuable player, and Ivan Petit of Bay City hit baskets to pull within two points and set up Franklin's game-winning three-pointer.

It was the second straight one-point victory for the South, which won last year's game in Dallas, 100-99. The victory also cut the North's overall lead in the series to 19-18.

The favored South fell behind early in the third quarter on the shooting of Ryant Greene of Plano, who scored 15 points and earned most valuable player honors for the North.

Brian Essary of North Mesquite scored 13 points for the North, but missed a pair of free throws with 41 seconds left in the game that would have given the North the lead. DeBose missed again with 11 seconds to play.

"We had the game won if we had just hit free throws," said losing North Coach Keith Kitchens of Shallowater. "They hit free throws late and it cost us. We played good and had a chance to win."

SPORTS IN BRIEF

Little Poison dies at 76

By The Associated Press

GENERAL

OKLAHOMA CITY — Baseball Hall of Famer Lloyd Waner, a 19-year veteran with a .316 lifetime batting average, died of complications related to emphysema. He was 76.

Nicknamed "Little Poison," he started with the Pittsburgh Pirates in 1927 and set a major league record with 223 hits as a rookie, batting .355 that year. His brother Paul, a fellow baseball Hall of Famer known as "Big Poison," died in 1965.

TENNIS

WASHINGTON — Second-seeded Jose-Luis Clerc of Argentina advanced to the third round of the D.C. National Bank Classic with a 6-4, 6-1 victory over Austrian Bernard Pils. Other winners included No. 4 seed Yannick Noah of France, who defeated NCAA champion Mike Leach 6-4, 6-2, and Rodney Harmon, who beat Bolivia's Mario Martinez 6-1, 6-4.

SANTA CLARA, Calif. — Chris Evert Lloyd posted a 6-2, 6-2 victory over 16-year-old Claudia Hernandez and Martina Navratilova downed 18-year-old Heliane Steden 7-5, 6-0 in Federation Cup play...

GOLF

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — Bruce Lietzke fired a 6-under-par 65 for the first round lead in the Anheuser-Busch Golf Classic. Calvin Peete and Bill Rogers were one stroke back at 66.

like a Mel Hall could help...

NFL commissioner Pete Rozelle once ruled his domain with an iron fist, but maybe things are slipping away from his iron-clad rule. He can't handle Al Davis of the Oakland Raiders and all of the scare stories on cocaine are beginning to take its toll. And then there is the possibility of a partial or shortened season due to the players' contract demands. All this must leave baseball's Bowie Kuhn with a smile...

At least some members of Midland College's national championship team have been keeping busy on the hardcourts this summer. Spud Webb, Chester Smith and Puntus Wilson are among the Chaps playing in a summer recreational league in Dallas. Wilson is headed for Arizona State while Webb and Smith return to MC. Tim Shelby, another former Chap, has also been playing in the league. Word is that the league is a shooter's league and the only defense played is when someone like Stone drops in for an unannounced visit...

Stone's new basketball assistant, Reggie Franklin, has a good basketball background. He played for the Harlem Globetrotters after a stint at SMU. Wonder if he is bringing some Trotter style to the Chaps? However, anyone who has seen Webb dunk one from his 5-foot-6 perch doesn't need the Globetrotters to get through a winter...

Here's wondering what Texas Tech football coach Jerry Moore will do for an encore after his 1-9-1 season with the Red Raiders last year. Coming from Lubbock to Midland after a Tech game, I'm always impressed with the number of tailights that can be seen on the way home. Maybe I'm forgetting how is was, but there sure seemed to be fewer tailights last year...

No one seems to know what to expect from the Midland High and Midland Lee football team this year. One spring game is not enough to base any sure opinions. But I was impressed with MHS running back Ricky Madrid. I always pictured him as a tip-toe runner last year who didn't like to run over people. He was completely different this spring. "He's much tougher and has added some weight," explains MHS coach Pat Culpepper. And Lee has a host of linebackers who will put the crunch into your morning cereal...

Was that San Angelo ranked No. 4 in the state in one preseason football poll? The Bobcats will be tough, but its not hard to remember that Coach Jimmie Keeling was 0-10 only two seasons ago. Give San Angelo backers some credit for sticking with Keeling over the rough spots...

Spurs get Gilmore

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The San Antonio Spurs have traded free agent backup center Dave Corzine and starting forward Mark Olberding to the Chicago Bulls for veteran center Artis Gilmore.

Corzine became a free agent at the end of the last season and announced a week ago that he had signed an offer sheet with the New Jersey Nets.

Under National Basketball Association rules, the Spurs had 15 days to match the Nets' offer — reported to be $3.25 million over five years — or let Corzine go to New Jersey.

his future would be. "I talked to Dallas, expressed my views and it turned out we saw eye-to-eye on many of our theories of what it would take to build a winner."

John is having fun now, but there were a couple of times when it seemed he might not make it. Like that time at Davenport, Iowa, in the Midwest League. He was counting the gate receipts from the night's take when a bunch kids were making a terrible racket running around in the stands over head.

Finally, John couldn't stand it any longer and went out to put a stop to the racket. He couldn't. The kids turned out to be a crackling fire and the stands were burning to the ground.

A FEW YEARS later, he took the late Russell Davis out to Cubs Stadium one February afternoon to show him how the faulty lock on the concession stand freezer had been fixed. They stepped inside at 5 p.m., pulled the door shut and there was no doubt about it's being fixed. They couldn't get out. Fortunately, John did a local 10 p.m. TV sportscast each night and when he didn't show up at the studio or at home, the search began.

Give your fine old furniture a new lease on life with upholstering by Hines-Wood Upholstering Co., 1105 N. Midkiff, and for the month of July, save money with free labor on most furniture with purchase of fabric in stock.

Free labor during July

Paid Advertisement

For the month of July, customers of Hines-Wood Upholstering Co. can save with free labor on most upholstering jobs. Denton Hines has many thousands of fabric samples from which to choose, and says he'll offer free labor on most furniture with the purchase ofany fabric in stock. Exceptions are recliners, dining room chairs and antiques.

Hines says, however, if fabric has to be special ordered, a labor fee will be charged.

Hines brings 30 years of upholstering experience to his customers, and offers this sound advice to anyone considering replacing a worn piece of furniture with a new piece.

"It's a lot less expensive to re-cover good pieces of furniture than it is to replace them with similar new pieces," he says. "In fact, it costs about half as much. Also important is the fact that you can keep a chair or sofa you like and which fits into your decor, instead of shopping around trying to find something that may fit."

Once you have selected your fabric, give Hines a brief description of the item you wish to have redone, and you can have an estimate imediately.

If you choose a fabric in stock, Hines-Wood will arrange to pick up your furniture and the job will be completed within seven to ten days and returned to your home.

If the fabric has to be spcial ordered, the furniture will not be picked up until the work is to begin. Pickup and delivery is free anywhere within the Midland city limits.

Hines-Wood is located at 1105 N. Midkiff and is open Monday through Friday from 7 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. You may call 694-8891 for more information.

This is the Homo Avis (man-bird), a strap-on jet plane that a human may someday fly when the concept being developed by the Booster Technical Associates reaches the prototype stage. Fabricated of super-light materials, weighing less than 100 pounds with a 13-foot wingspan, it will hit a top speed of 110 mph and have a 150-mile range on a five-gallon fuel supply.

'Homo Avis' better than wax wings

Hearst Feature Service

Someday, a kid may ask his father, "What did you do in the war, Daddy?" And Daddy may answer: "I was a jet airplane."

It could happen. All you have to do, according to an article in the July issue of Popular Mechanics, is put on the jet-powered wing and you become a human airplane, soaring off into the wild blue yonder at better than 100 mph.

Strap-on wings have been a dream of man since the ill-fated mythical flight of Icarus. Now a young engineer, Igor Dmitrowsky, has come up with a modern version — the ultimate in sophisticated technology — that might just have a shot at success. Dmitrowsky's company, Booster Technical Associates, Elmhurst, N.Y., currently is hard at work on an operational prototype that is expected to fly later this summer.

The craft is appopriately called Homo Avis (man-bird). It straps on your back like a parachute, leaving both your hands free to operate controls on the pistol-grip handlebars. You take off vertically, level out into horizontal flight as your speed increases then swing upright again for a two-point landing on your feet.

Requiring no runways, the craft could be stored on a garage wall and flown out of your back yard. It could also come in handy for aerial observatin work such as highway and border patrol, military reconnaissance and wilderness rescue work.

Budget amendment best seller

By WALTER R. MEARS

WASHINGTON (AP) — When cornered on a tough issue, the journeyman politician tries to change the subject. Only the master craftsman risks an attempt to turn it to his own advantage.

That is what President Reagan is attempting with his campaign for a constitutional amendment to balance the federal budget. He calls it an idea whose time has come, although for the Reagan administration, it didn't come very long ago.

An Analysis

The public opinion polls and the growing roster of congressional supporters bear out what the president said. In a congressional election year of economic woes and giant deficits, the balanced budget amendment is a best seller of an issue.

The original version of Reagan's own budget for next year would have run up a deficit estimated at more than double the record level. The compromise version Congress finally approved envisions a $104 billion deficit, by far the biggest in history.

There was no mention of that at Reagan's rally for the balanced budget amendment, a measure the administration embraced three months ago. Reagan always said he favored the concept, but the administration initially was cool to the measure now before Congress. On April 29, Reagan said Congress should pass a balanced budget amendment as soon as possible; two weeks later, the administration said it should be the one before the Senate.

No matter how soon Congress acts, the ratification process and the two-year lead time built into the amendment mean that it probably will not affect the budgets of the Reagan administration. There is an outside chance that the amendment could apply during the final year or two of a second Reagan term, but that is unlikely.

"It seems to me that Americans are saying 'No more ifs, ands or buts,'" Reagan said at a Capitol rally on Monday. "'We want an amendment to the United States Constitution making balanced budgets the law of the land, and we want it now.'"

Actually, the amendment wouldn't make balanced budgets the law of the land. It would make it more difficult for Congress to vote deficit spending, or to increase taxes.

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, prime sponsor of the amendment, said its terms "would be enforced primarily through the political process," by making the members of Congress more accountable for votes that produce deficits.

Sixty percent of the members of each branch of Congress would have to go on the record with votes for deficit spending if deficits there were to be. And if government revenues were going to go up faster than the rate of increase in national income, 51 percent of the members of each house would have to vote for that.

"The polls indicate that between 70 percent and 80 percent of the people in this country want a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution," Hatch said.

Sixty-two members of the Senate have signed up to sponsor the amendment, and they'll need the support of only five colleagues to produce the two-thirds majority required for approval of constitutional amendments. The debate started on Monday, recessed for the pro-amendment rally on the steps outside, then was suspended for debate and action on tax increases to reduce the size of next year's deficit.

The path is a bit more difficult in the House, but everyone who wants to stay there has to run for re-election this year, and the amendment issue is a handy antidote for candidates who have just approved record deficits. The amendment has been stalled in the House Judiciary Committee, but Republicans are gathering signatures for a petition to send it to the floor despite committee opposition. There it will take 290 votes to approve the amendment.

The next step would be to send it to the state legislatures for ratification. It would take the approval of 38 states to make it part of the Constitution. Legislatures in 31 states already have voted for resolutions seeking a constitutional convention to adopt a balanced budget amendment.

The political clout of the issue is evident in the debate; every opponent of the amendment prefaces his remarks by saying that he bows to no one in devotion to the goal of balanced federal budgets. Then they blame Reagan for the current deficit problem.

Reagan blames the Democrats and Congress, saying they are responsible for laws and attitudes that create a built-in bias toward more spending, and therefore chronic deficits.

But those arguments are for the fine print right now. With his push for the balanced budget amendment, Reagan has managed to steer voters away from the deficits built into his own budgets, toward a chance that the red ink might run dry later on.

Space sickness could be serious setback

By THOMAS O'TOOLE
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — When astronaut Joe Engle flew the space shuttle Columbia back to Earth last November after an abbreviated three-day mission, he was so dehydrated from being sick in space that he gulped down two quarts of water in the van that took him and astronaut Dick Truly from the runway at California's Edwards Air Force Base.

Not only had Engle suffered his entire time in orbit from space sickness, but one of the fuel cells that power the shuttle and supply the crewmen with their drinking water had broken down and was putting out water that was so alkaline and filled with hydrogen bubbles that it was undrinkable.

"We brought that flight down early because the fuel cell didn't work, but it would be a tough question today if somebody said would you bring it down early anyway," Dr. Gerald Soffen, director of life sciences for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, told The Washington Post. "I remember, I was sweating blood at the time. I'm grateful we brought it down because I didn't have to deal with it."

What Soffen and the space agency he works for have to deal with more and more these days is what Engle suffered through in his three days in space. After more than 20 years of sending men into space, NASA is discovering that it has a new problem on its hands. Its most careful calculations now suggest that half of all the astronauts the agency puts into orbit will become space sick.

The surprise is that space sickness is a new problem. Of the more than 30 astronauts who flew on the Gemini and Apollo missions, only a handful got sick, and none was seriously ill in space. The numbers increased slightly on Skylab, but the nine men who flew the marathon Skylab missions were in space for so long that nobody worried about the sudden change.

Just wait a few days, the doctors said, the Skylab crew members who aren't feeling too well will be shipshape in no time.

"This is the Russian solution to the problem," Dr. Soffen said. "One of the reasons the Soviet space flights are so long is that they tell their cosmonauts to do nothing the first few days they're in orbit.

Species identified off coast

SAN LUIS OBISPO, Calif. (AP) — Eleven apparently new species of tiny marine life have been found off the California coast, showing the ocean has yet to reveal all its secrets, researchers say.

"People sometimes think the age of discovery is over, but in things like this, in trying to find out about the other animals that live with us on the Earth and in the ocean, you get to see a lot of things for the first time," said John Ljubenkov, a marine biologist with a private consulting firm in Los Angeles.

"It's a popular misconception that almost everything is known and has been seen. There are probably many, many species yet to be discovered (in the ocean)," he said in an interview earlier this week.

Ljubenkov is studying several of the organisms, which range in size from about an inch long to scarcely visible to the naked eye. They were scooped off a rocky outcrop beneath 400 feet of water.

The discovery was made about 10 miles off Point Purisima in northern Santa Barbara County — some 200 miles north of Los Angeles — last September and October by Nekton Inc. The San Diego research firm is working under contract for Atlantic Richfield Co., which proposes exploratory drilling on two offshore tracts and hired Nekton for a required survey of marine life.

Nekton biologist Jay Johnson said the organisms seem closely related to jellyfish, marine worms and tentacled animals called sea anemones.

He said the creatures were scooped off the sea floor by a submersible research vessel. He and Ljubenkov said they were hardly surprised new species were found since the 400-foot waters off the central coast are largely unexplored by biologists.

"If anything," Johnson said, "I would be more surprised if no new species were found there."

HONDA

And a car to be enjoyed for many moons. Both because of the attention to quality engineering that goes into all our cars, and the Prelude's standard power-operated moonroof.

The moon and stars come standard as well.

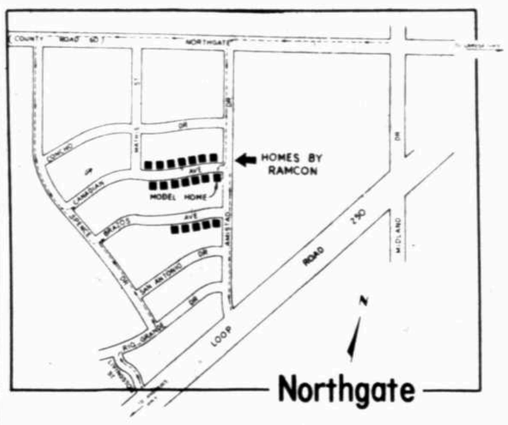
$673.30 Per Month



You can't afford NOT to buy any longer!

Total move in costs of $5250 is based on 5% down or $3800 plus $1450 limited closing costs based on 15 days prepaid interest. The first year's payment of $673.30 (principal and interest only) is based on a loan amount of $71,400. The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivas tent to a rate of 10 7/8% for 95% loan-to-value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 15 7/8% for the first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be changed at the most recent 6 months Treasury Bill plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage bases upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7 1/2% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principal exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. Annual percentage rate approximately 16.575%.
