Thomas elected mayor; Council race disputed

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

With the number of voters at one polling place unknown and one candidate refusing to concede, Midlanders on Saturday undoubtedly elected Carroll Thomas as mayor and Robert Rendall as City Councilman to Place 4.

And while Kelly Fish announced his victory to Place 3 on the council, opponent Lawrence Connolly was refusing to concede late Saturday until a misunderstanding over a precinct is settled. His decision on having a recount or conceding will come Monday, he said.

An estimated 9,300 Midlanders went to the polls Saturday or voted absentee for a percentage of 16.98 percent of the 55,085 registered voters. Last year, the turnout of 5,783 was about 5 percent of the registered populace.

Personnel at the Elections Administrator's headquarters, 709 W. Washington Ave., said the election judge at Lee Freshman High School failed to get the total number of voters from the back of the voting machines and that will be done Monday morning. In the meantime, they were estimating the number at 200.

Unofficial total in the Connolly-Fish race was 1,093 for Connolly and 1,198 for Fish. Connolly, however, contended he had been told District 3 included a box at Midland Freshman High School. The precinct in question, 303, is a window-pane area and not within the city limits, according to Bettye Calvert, elections administrator. That was confirmed later by City Attorney David Reagan.

Lori Westmoreland, Connolly's campaign manager, said she had been told by the Elections Administrator's office Precinct 303 was included in the City Council District 3 and had obtained a list of registered voters for that area.

"LAWRENCE HAD canvassed that district. We had targeted it as part of our district," she said.

"It's an extremely close election. We were ahead until the Senior Citizens' box came in. So, we're not conceding," said Connolly. The District 3 race had three vote tallies — from absentee, Central Fire Station and Senior Citizens' Center. Connolly led in the first two, 794 to 708. But the third box gave Fish 490 votes to 299 for Connolly.

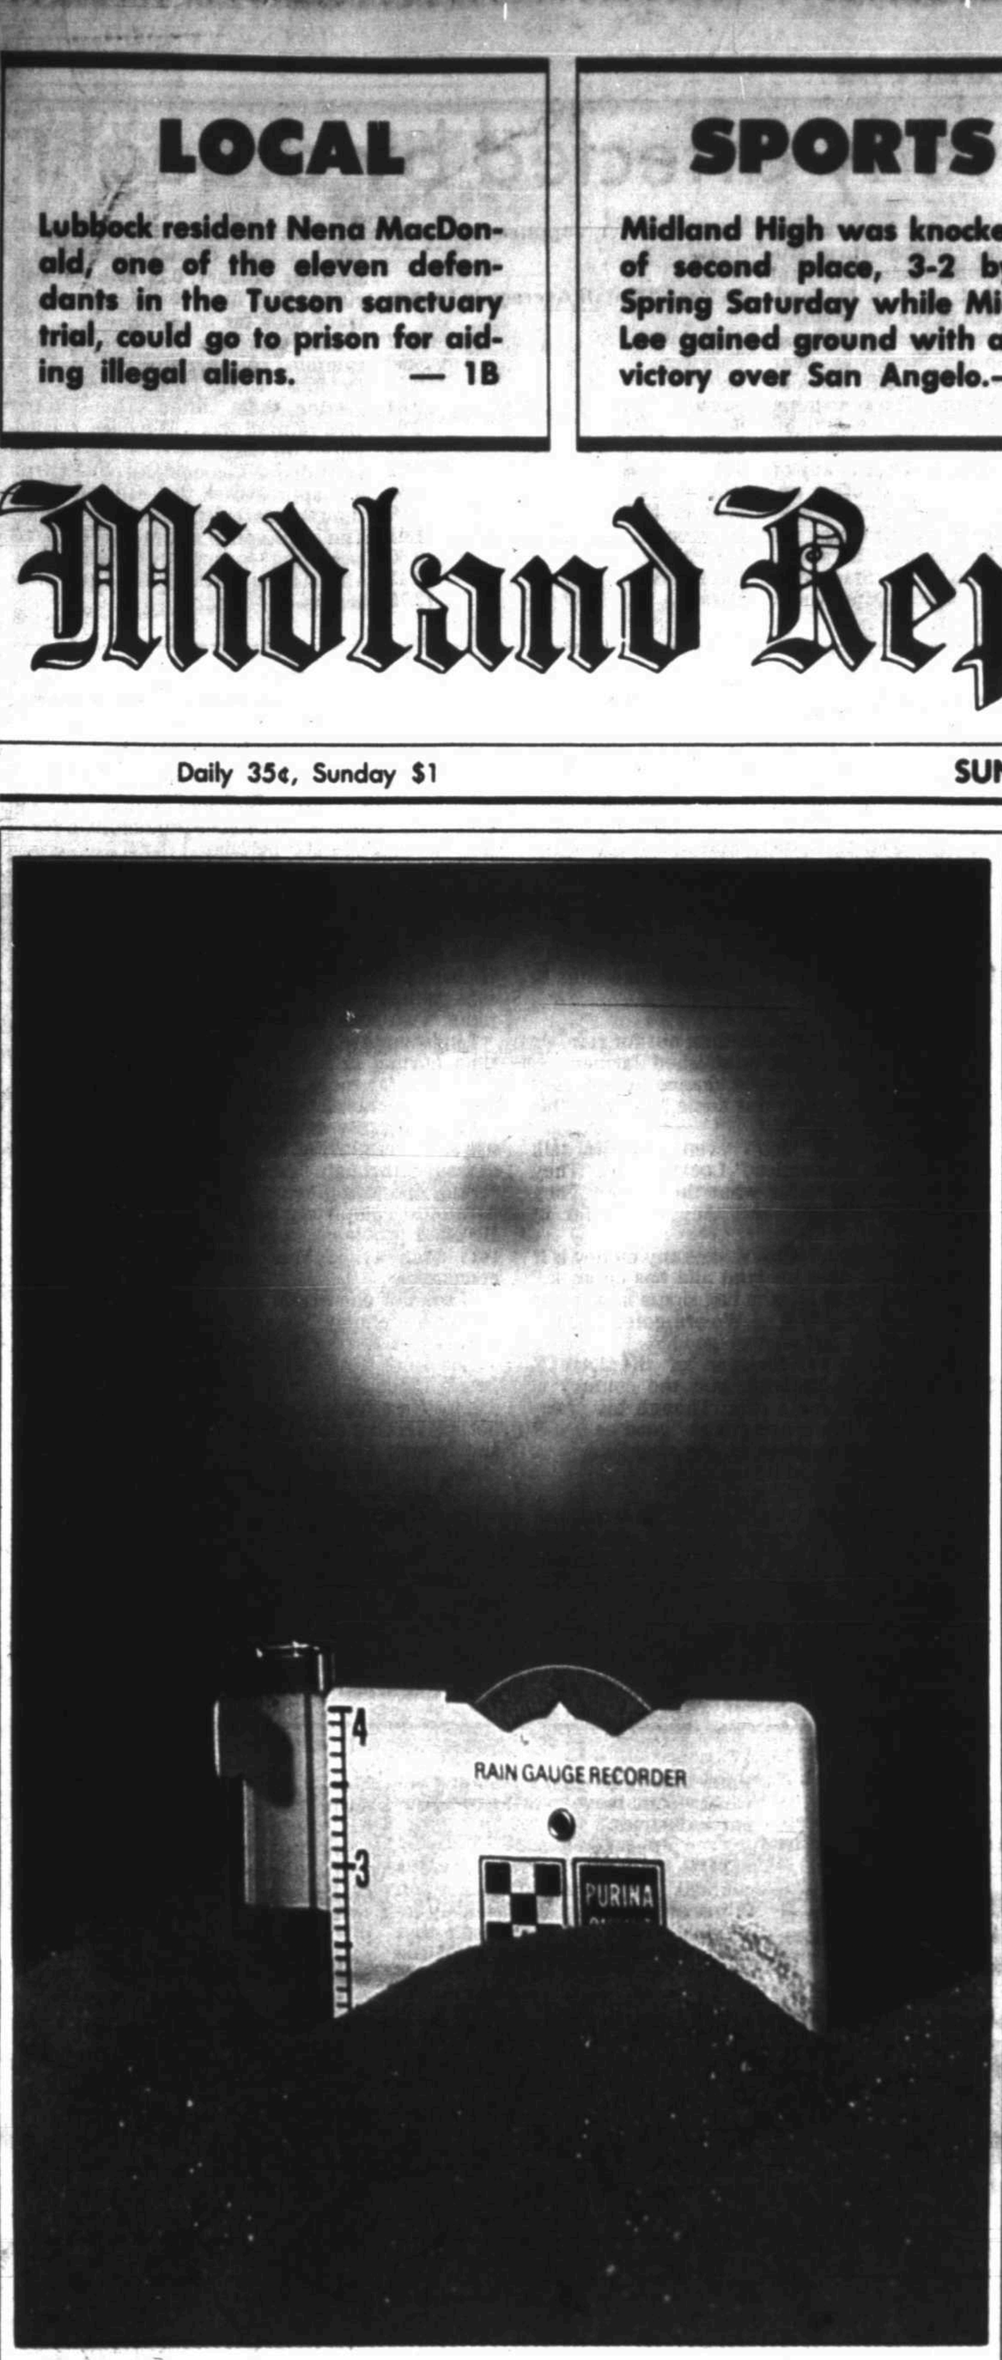

Connolly, 34, did congratulate 28-year-old Fish for a clean campaign and noted they had generated enough interest to draw more than twice the number of voters from that district (2,291) compared to about 900 last year.

"There's no doubt in my mind" about being the winner, said Fish. "We knew it was an extremely close race from Day 1." He also contended he knew Precinct 303 wasn't included in District 3. But when Ms. Westmoreland questioned why he had yard signs in that area, he said he had a supporter who lived in adjacent Precinct 309 who put out Fish signs after seeing Connolly's in the area.

He credited the high turnout to the "competitive, clean, high-spirited campaign on both our sides."

During the campaign, Connolly had promised to listen to the citizens, to protect the neighborhoods and to keep the budget trimmed. Fish campaigned on a platform of turning some city services over to private enterprise as a means of cutting the budget.

There's no rain in sight, the drought lingers on, and the agricultural and oil economy gets buried deeper in the sands of depression.

More broken spirits, less broken sod mark drought

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The drought, the "deplorable economy," and melancholy seem to be settling over agriculture in West Texas.

The area virtually has been without rainfall for five months. Market prices are dropping. The "next-year" optimism for a better crop and economic climate is fading. And many farmers are struck with grief.

"It seems like everybody is in limbo," said Hoot Leonard, a farmer-rancher who manages the Midland Farmers Co-op Cotton Gin. "There's not much incentive. Everybody is sluggish."

Some farmers have broken their land in getting ready for the traditional May plantings if the rains come. Others haven't broken sod.

"I don't see anything in the near future that's going to change the market situation very much," Leonard said. The virtual blanket economic downturn in agriculture and petroleum — Midland's economic mainstays — has almost paralyzed the market. People are "patching old blue jeans" instead of buying new ones, he noted. And the worldwide cotton surplus is keeping commodity cotton prices down.

As always, he's banking on a "good rain and an upturn in the market." Otherwise, said Leonard, "I don't see how many farmers are going to stay in business."

Marc Traweek, 34, got out of farming in February. He went bankrupt.

"FARMING IS OUT," his wife, Zanna, said Saturday, when Traweek was out working. He's doing trucking and oilfield work.

"It's going to be hard on him," she said. "I think he loves farming more than me."

His operation was caved in by "too much high interest at the bank, no rain and no (profitable) prices," Mrs. Traweek said. Traweek was leasing farm land in the Greenwood area.

"We have a roof over our head," Mrs. Traweek said, but no farm.

Back in the drought of the 1950s, farmers and ranchers were blessed with a farm- and ranch-saving blessing: the Spraberry Oil Field. The oil boom offered farmers and ranchers work in the oil patch and in construction.

Leonard was a carpenter.

MC's two contested board seats go to Kiser, incumbent Cooper

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

The long and often hard-fought contest for seats on the Midland Junior College District Board of Trustees ended Saturday as voters went to the polls to elect three candidates to six-year terms.

Attorney Steve Kiser defeated former Midland College President Dr. Al G. Langford in a contested race for the Place 1 seat. Kiser received 5,593 votes to Langford's 2,995 votes.

Incumbent John W. Cooper was re-elected to another six-year term as the Place 3 representative defeating opponent Hugh White by a margin of 4,670 to 3,090.

Incumbent Fred Wright received a total of 5,672 votes in an uncontested race for the Place 2 spot on the board.

"I'm overwhelmed by the voter turnout and I'm anxious, of course, to get started at Midland College," a jubiliant Kiser said in appreciation to Midland voters who supported him during the campaign and at the polls. "I'm stunned and also grateful for the margin of victory."

Kiser

Cooper

A 1973 graduate of Lee High School, Kiser earned a bachelor's degree from Texas A&M University and graduated from Baylor University School of Law in 1980. He is a member of the State Bar of Texas, Texas Young Lawyers Association, American Bar Association, Midland County Bar Association and Midland Young Lawyers Association.

In addition, he has been associated with the American Cancer Society Midland Unit Board of Directors, United Way of Midland, Midland Housing Authority and Leadership Midland.

Langford, who served as president of Midland College from 1969 to 1980, said he was "extremely disappointed" by the election results. "The minds of the people of Midland are very short in terms of the contribution I made to Midland College.

"However, I do read their mandate. I no longer will be fooling with Midland College," Langford said.

Cooper, an insurance agent, said he is elated by the turnout among voters.

"I'm just elated and thankful to the voters of Midland by the turnout, but I was very surprised by the margin of victory," he said.

Cooper said he also is anxious to take the oath of office and begin another six-year term.

'Love You Midland' rally set Thursday

From Staff Reports

Low oil prices and layoffs are creating a sense of negativism in Midland and Bill Morrow would like to see it eliminated.

"I'm not a Pollyanna that doesn't recognize disaster, but you have to analyze where you are and where you want to be," said Morrow, a business attorney and United Way president.

To help Midland dispel that negative attitude, Morrow is among several residents and businesses sponsoring a pep rally entitled "You Are Midland's Best Asset/Love You Midland," at 4:30 p.m. Thursday in Midland Center.

A similar rally will be held simultaneously in Odessa.

"We're saying the world has not come to an end. Midland is still a great place to live. You don't achieve anything by being negative," Morrow said.

Organizers are hoping to fill the Midland Center and encourage employers to give their workers time off early Thursday afternoon to attend the rally.

"Things aren't great. We're not going to stand up at the rally and say everything is grand and glorious. It's just time to rethink your position, pull up yourselves and go to work," Morrow said.

"We can't affect the oil price, so that's not going to change. The economic situation is not going to change because of the rally. But if we can get people's attitude directed toward positive solutions and other problems, then we would really achieve our purpose."

Morrow, who recently turned down a job offer from a Dallas law firm said, "I have 20 years here. I've got a investment in the community and I believe in it."

The rally sponsors include the Chamber of Commerce, City of Midland, Midland College, Midland County, the Midland Independent School District, Midland Memorial Hospital, Midland Reporter-Telegram, the Sesquicentennial Commission and United Way.

By MICHELLE LOCKE

EULESS (AP) — A man holding his ex-wife hostage inside a North Central Texas convenience store reneged Saturday on a promise to surrender, and heavily armed police continued their marathon vigil outside.

A negotiator said Malone Mataele, 27, agreed about 3 p.m. Saturday to come out an hour later with his hostage. As 4 p.m. approached, the man advanced to the front of the store with her, then suddenly backed away, and the hopes diminished for an imminent end of the crisis.

"We are going to wait him out, and it's quite possible that he will come out (soon). But at this point, we have no reason to believe there is going to be an immediate resolution," Police Capt. T.C. Free said about 6 p.m. Saturday, 21 hours after the hostage situation began in this suburb northeast of Fort Worth.

About an hour later, Free said the situation had deteriorated. A police negotiator said Mataele said he had tied up his ex-wife, Sane Mataele, although he claimed not to have harmed her.

Mataele indicated he was ready to surrender, except that he wanted to talk to his young daughter, but didn't want her to see him in handcuffs, Free said.

Police countered with an offer to put him, unhandcuffed, in a secure room at police headquarters, if Mataele would give himself up. There was hope he might agree to the terms, Free said.

Mataele took his ex-wife hostage at the Qwik Pantry store, where she worked, about 9 p.m. Friday and wounded a police officer who responded after the woman triggered a silent alarm, Free said.

Mataele, armed with a .38-caliber revolver, threatened also to kill himself and his ex-wife, Sane Mataele, Free said.

Free said various police negotiators had been talking with Mataele through a rear door of the store intermittently since the situation began. Mataele picked up a telephone when it rang inside the store Friday night and told officers he wouldn't talk with them on the phone, officials said.

If Mataele had managed to get any sleep at all since taking his ex-wife hostage Friday night, it couldn't have been for more than three or four minutes at a time, Free added.

Free said it was unclear why Mataele changed his mind about giving himself up.

"It appears he was scared. He did not say whether he was frightened of this or that," Free said.

Mataele's only request of police was that they bring his 8-year-old daughter to the store so he could talk to her, police said. Police picked the daughter up, but refused to allow Mataele to see her unless he surrendered, Free said.

"When he comes out and gives up, then we'll talk about him seeing his daughter," Free told reporters.

About 9:15 a.m. Saturday, Mataele fired a shot into a metal door at the store's rear, where police were talking to him by bullhorn, but no one was injured, Free said.

Mataele's ex-wife recently immigrated to this Fort Worth suburb from Tonga, a nation of 169 islands in the South Pacific near New Zealand and Fiji, said Vati Katoa, a member of a large local Tongan community.

The store is in an area populated largely by immigrants from South Pacific nations. More than 800 Tongans have moved to Tarrant County since 1982 seeking better education for their children, officials said.

Mataele was holding his hostage in the store's storage area, hidden from officers and negotiators, but Katoa and his father Paul Katoa, a leader in the Tongan community, tried to negotiate with him in their native language via a bullhorn.

Vati Katoa said Mataele was the "new guy in town" who recently arrived from Los Angeles and that negotiations were of "no use at all."

City life not overly affected by drought

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

While the drought stubbornly hangs on, Midland urban life mostly seems unaffected by the dry spell.

"We always encourage people to conserve water when possible and to use water wisely," said Brent Payne, assistant director of utilities for Midland.

However, the city is not enforcing conservation by rationing or fines, he said.

"We try to keep ahead of the game if we can" by encouraging conservation and developing new water resources.

At present, the city water supply comes from the Colorado River Municipal Water District and the Paul Davis Well Field north of Midland. About 55 percent of the water comes from the district, which gets water from E.V. Spence Reservoir near Robert Lee and Lake J.B. Thomas southwest of Snyder. The remaining 45 percent comes from the well field.

"As the water table drops in any of the fields, we move on" to other underground water sources. Payne said there is "basically no recharge" of the fields. "When you use the water, it's gone. That's why the Stacy project is so vital." Stacy Dam would ensure water supplies for West Texas.

30-Year Rainfall Average in Inches

January	0.42
February	0.58
March	0.51
April	0.84
May	2.05
June	1.44
July	1.72
August	1.60
September	2.08
October	1.41
November	0.60
December	0.45
Total	13.70

So far this year, the monthly rainfall has been below "normal:" 0.23 inch for January; 0.17 inch for February, 0.03 inch for March, and a trace thus far in April.

Last year, the heaviest monthly rainfall came in "two episodes" in October, when farmers were harvesting their cotton. The October 1985 rainfall was 5.93 inches, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport. Farmers appreciated the rain then, although it interfered with harvesting. The rains added to the underground seasoning — moisture — for aiding another planting and growing season.

DROUGHT

"I was farming back in the '50s before I had irrigation," he said. "We went to work in the oil field and in housing construction. I went into carpentry and did just fine."

Today, because of the "oil stress" and inflated prices, jobs are not plentiful. In addition, unlike the 1950s, a payroll check is not going to save the farm from foreclosure.

"Our first problem is making cotton," Leonard said. "If you don't have it, it doesn't make any difference what it brings, you're still out of business."

VERNON CHANDLER, who has been farming in Midland County since 1951, said the "ground is awfully dry" through the first 8 or 10 inches of topsoil.

But, he said, farmers have been "real lucky" that the winds have been tame and kept the topsoil from eroding.

Substantial rains between now and spring-planting time in May would help ensure a good crop.

"You don't know whether it's going to rain or not, so you've got to plow," he said.

"Even if we got rain," Chandler said, "our economy is in such of a mess, I don't know what it would take to fix that."

But Chandler speculated that part of the cure would be in reducing the national deficit and cutting back on the "high dollar," which effectively makes United States products far more expensive in the world market than competing goods.

Chandler noted that farm land prices are dropping to about 50 percent of their market value five years ago.

"Anytime a farmer sells around here, it's for housing developments. I don't know of a farmer who has bought another farm."

Farmers hardest hit by the economic downturn are the younger ones — those who do not outright own their own land and farm equipment, Chandler said. The older farmer often is "paid out."

"He was a real good farmer — really good," Chandler said. "We need people like him to keep things going."

NEWT LOCKLAR is holding out for rain. At 86, he's an older, well established farmer.

"We've got a pretty good chance for a decent crop" if the planting rains come," he said. "It's not hopeless yet."

Fellow farmers "don't even want to talk about it" (the economics)," Locklar said. "They can't get any price for what they make. They can't borrow money, and they get so far in debt."

"The only way a fellow makes any money is if he happens to own his land and has oil on it," Locklar said. "But oil is in bad shape now. I just don't see any end to it. ... We are going to have to have rain if we do any good."

Bobby Matthews, foreman of the Lazy Z Ranch north of Midland, said the country is "over due now" for a rain. Though his grasslands are dry, the grazing is as "good as it has ever been for this time of the year."

"But we sure need some rain."

AS SEVERE AS it is, the "drought was the straw that broke the camel's back," said Upton County rancher DeWayne Lindsey of Rankin. Agriculture, he noted, is plagued by "deplorable" economics.

"It's just a depressed economy," he said. "Our cost of production exceeds our net revenues." Today, wool will "not bring a dollar a pound," he said. In 1951, wool was commanding $1.15 a pound, and since then, costs of production have increased 500 to 600 percent.

Lindsey manages 70,000 acres of ranch land in Upton County south of Midland, but he has no livestock on it. Because of another drought two years ago, he shipped his 19,000 lambs and ewes to Wyoming for grazing on 300,000 acres. He hasn't run cattle since 1975. Three of his five sons manage the ranching operation in Wyoming. Two sons work the Texas ranch.

Lindsey noted that rainfall is more abnormal than normal in semi-arid West Texas.

There's far more to the plight than drought and the economic slump, Lindsey said.

"The virginity of land is gone" through misuse and over-grazing, he said. The land has been damaged through "greed and ignorance."

Still, the "complexity" of agriculture's plight is "almost completely beyond comprehension." He cited problems from the drought to predators such as coyotes and eagles to world economics.

"I see not one bright star in the entire (agricultural) economy. We are depleting our underground water sources and our grass."

And were it not for the oil industry in West Texas, Lindsey said, "Nobody would be ranching in West Texas today." Many ranchers, but not all, receive some income from oil royalties and leasing operations.

And the oil industry is crippled because of the slump in world petroleum prices.

Foremost, Lindsey, 49, is concerned about the quality of the land.

"We have but one thing to pass on to them (children), and that's land," he said. "The land, water and air are the things that sustain mankind."

CITY

Thomas, 47, will be back on the council as mayor after a three-year hiatus from his City Council service. The vote was 5,550 for Thomas, 3,057 for Councilman Steve Davidson, and 411 for Barbara Harris.

THE NEW MAYOR, who will take office in May, had campaigned on a pledge to freeze hiring, wages and taxes. Davidson, 37, had called for a positive approach to the city, keeping in mind a trim budget while maintaining the infrastructure. And Ms. Harris had pushed to get a Martin Luther King Center established in south Midland.

Thomas said he felt his campaign addressed the issues the voters "were more concerned about — the economic issues. My number one priority is conservative fiscal management of city government."

When the council works on next year's budget this summer, Thomas said he will take a close look at all the items and priorities. The cuts in personnel and programs and the hiring freeze already undertaken by the council received Thomas's approval and said more cuts may be needed.

However, he denied there is any truth to some rumors that have been circulating the halls of city offices, including that he will freeze all city employee salaries for five years, or police officers' salaries for three years or that he already has a list of city employees' names to fire.

"The citizens as well as city government are facing some tough economic times over the next two years. We need the citizens behind us as we face those decisions," Thomas said.

Davidson, who will be leaving the council in May after serving six years, said he was surprised at the margin of votes by which Thomas won. "We mounted a good campaign" in telling the people what needs to be done for the city to remain competitive. "We just wanted to come out in the sense for people to realize we're in difficult economic times but we have to maintain what we have and move to bring in different industries."

THE CURRENT and previous councils haven't spent money on things or people not needed. "My individual opinion is there isn't that much to cut," said Davidson of the budget. "Just on my observation as someone who went through it (the budget process) you have to analyze something if you're going to cut it and the impact it would have on the people who work for you and on the public."

Taking one polling place from both her opponents and beating out Thomas in another, Ms. Harris said she had done "about as I had expected to do." At Midland Freshman High School, she received 78 votes to 53 for Thomas and 65 for Davidson. At DeZavala, she took 57 votes to 56 for Thomas and 69 for Davidson.

Although she praised Thomas for winning, Ms. Harris said she will remind him if he forgets the people who live between Front Street and Florida Avenue. Nor does the loss mean her dream of a Martin Luther King Center will vanish. "I will be talking to him about the King Center in a couple of months after he takes office," she said.

The turnout for Ms. Harris in two precincts might be an indicator that more people are getting involved in the city elections, she noted. "I hope it will encourage others to run. You never know. Some day we may have a black on the council."

Rendall, unopposed in his race, received 1,342 votes. He did not spend any money on the campaign, saying he didn't "feel comfortable in today's economic times to ask people for money and especially when I'm the only candidate for the office."

It won't be just the public's eye on him once he's in office. With Rendall at Elections Headquarters Saturday night was his "almost 4-year-old" daughter, Margaret, who also had watched him vote that morning. She pledged to go to the council meetings and watch her dad for the next two years.

Nightclub bombing another in long series

By NESHA STARCEVIC

BONN, West Germany (AP) — The bomb blast that tore through a West Berlin nightclub frequented by U.S. soldiers on Saturday was the latest in a series of deadly attacks in recent years against U.S. and NATO targets in West Germany.

The early morning explosion in West Berlin's La Belle discotheque killed an American soldier and a West German woman and injured 155 people, including at least 44 Americans.

It marked the first attack against Americans in West Germany this year. But the approximately 250,000 U.S. soldiers and the American installations in West Germany have been frequent targets for terrorists in the past.

An anonymous caller to an international news agency in London claimed responsibility for the Saturday blast in the name of the Holger Meins Commando, a West German group linked to the leftist Red Army Faction terrorist gang.

A second caller to a West German news agency said the Anti-American Arab Revolutionary Front, a previously unknown group, carried out the attack.

In the last such incident involving Americans in West Germany, 35 people were injured Nov. 25, 1985 in a a car bomb attack at a U.S. military shopping center in Frankfurt. Most of those hurt were Americans.

The attack was claimed by several groups, and authorities are still investigating.

The Red Army Faction and France's Direct Action claimed joint responsibility for an Aug. 8, 1985 car bomb attack that killed two Americans and injured 20 people at the U.S. Air Force Rhein-Main Base, outside Frankfurt.

In letters sent to news agencies, The Red Army Faction enclosed a photocopy of the military identity card of a U.S. serviceman and said it was used to gain entry to the heavily guarded base.

The soldier's body was found in woods near a discotheque outside Frankfurt. Witnesses said he was last seen alive leaving the club with several West Germans.

The Rhein-Main bombing was the first time West German and French leftist terrorists claimed joint responsibility for an attack.

The Red Army Faction, which grew out of the notorious Baader-Meinhof gang, resumed deadly attacks against American and West German targets when it killed a prominent West German industrialist in February 1985.

The gang was relatively inactive between 1981 and 1985, following the earlier deaths of its leaders.

Prior to the Rhein-Main bombing, the Red Army Faction's last major attack on a U.S. military base in West Germany was the 1981 bombing of the U.S. Air Force's European headquarters at Ramstein which injured 18 people.

The group also carried out an unsuccessful attack against the commander of the U.S. Army-Europe, Gen. Frederick J. Kroessen, with a grenade launcher. Kroessen and his wife were only slightly hurt in the attack on their car.

The Red Army Faction evolved out of Marxist and pacifist student circles in the 1960s.

The founding members were students Andreas Baader and Gudrun Ensslin and journalist Ulrike Meinhoff. They soon became known as the Baader-Meinhof gang.

The group turned to violence in April 1968, when they set afire a Frankfurt department store as a symbolic protest against capitalism.

The group developed into a ruthless, efficient gang which claimed responsibility for 30 political killings and and scores of bombings and bank robberies.

In May 1972, the Red Army Faction bombed two U.S. Army headquarters in West Germany, killing four American soldiers.

Baader, Meinhof and Ensslin were soon captured and later committed suicide in prison. Another founding member of the gang, Holger Meins, died in 1974 following a two-month hunger strike in prison.

The group which claimed the latest attack in West Berlin took its name from Meins.

The Holger Meins Commando carried out its first claimed attack in 1975, when six gunmen stormed the West German embassy in Stockholm, Sweden. The group killed two hostages before police stormed the embassy.

One terrorist was killed in the assault. One of the five who were captured died of his injuries after he was extradited to West Germany.

The group was not heard of again until it claimed responsibility for the Feb. 28 assassination of Swedish Prime Minister Olof Palme.

West German authorities believe the Red Army Faction now consists of about 20-30 "hard-core second-generation terrorists," with up to 150 sympathizers who give them shelter.

McAuliffe statue planned

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Pennies donated by West Virginia schoolchildren will go toward a statue of astronaut Christa McAuliffe, say two teachers who came up with the plan.

Melanie Vickers, one of West Virginia's candidates to be the first teacher in space, and Logan County teacher Terry Wilson are organizing the fund-raising drive.

"When the Challenger crashed, I think all of us felt like there was something we needed to do to commemorate not only Christa, but all the people on board," Vickers said.

McAuliffe and six astronauts were killed in the shuttle Challenger explosion in January.

Money for the "West Virginia Pennies for Christa" program will be collected May 5-9 in all public schools in the state, Vickers said Friday. The project was approved by the state Board of Education, she said.

"The state is in a time of economic crisis. I plan to work closely with Dr. (Jess) Parrish and the other trustees as we tutor Midland College through this very difficult time," he said.

In conceding defeat, White said, "I'd like to thank the Midland voters for the support they've shown me.

"I'd like to congratulate John Cooper and Steve Kiser and I'd urge the citizens of Midland to give them their backing to ensure that Midland College remains healthy and flourishing during this period of austerity," he said.

Henderson elects its first black mayor

Associated Press

Residents in the East Texas town of Henderson elected a black to the city council Saturday for the first time in history, while voters in Anderson County rejected a proposal to sell a county-owned hospital to a private company.

The elections were among many city, county and school elections throughout Texas Saturday.

Henderson, 35 miles southeast of Tyler, was assured a black councilman when single-member districts were set up last year and the only two candidates for one seat were both black.

About 20 percent of Henderson's population of 14,000 is black.

Saturday's election returns assured blacks two council seats, however, since one black candidate won outright, and two black candidates won runoff spots in another race.

The only other council race at stake was claimed by Suzanne Cross, who becomes only the second woman ever to win election to the Henderson City Council. Ms. Cross, an employee at a retail furniture store, received 172 votes to 120 for Deryl Sewell. They vied for a one-year unexpired term left vacant by the resignation of Ivan Willard, who is running for county judge.

Both candidates for the District 2 council seat were black, and the winner was George Washington, 56, who works at a brick plant. He received 139 votes to 102 for the Rev. Jerry L. O'Quinn, 36, a minister and bulldozer who led a five-year battle that resulted in adoption of single-member districts.

However, O'Quinn said late Saturday he will contest the election for reasons he declined to discuss.

Two retirees, Frank Ditto, 55, and Fred W. Armstrong, 68, both black, will meet in a May 6 runoff for another council spot. Ditto got 154 votes, but a runoff was required after Armstrong got 89 votes and Joe Troy Cochran, a white candidate and self-employed, got 87 votes.

In Palestine, Anderson County voters defeated — by a margin of 181 votes — a proposal to sell the county-owned hospital to Safecare Health Services Inc., a for-profit hospital company. The vote was 3,217 to 3,398.

Area communities also go to polls

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

West Texans trekked to the polls in 10 area communities Saturday to elect mayors, City Council members, school trustees and water and hospital district directors in largely uneventful races.

ANDREWS

Hershel Armstrong, a retired Mobil Oil Co. employee, polled 516 votes in winning re-election to the Andrews City Council. Altogether, 577 votes were cast in the city election.

A former schoolteacher, R.G. "Jerry" McPherson, won his bid for election to the Andrews Independent School District board of trustees by polling 507. In that race for Position 3 on the board, he knocked out Charles L. Pope, who got 338 votes, and the incumbent, Ernest Thornton, who got 389 votes.

Johnie G. Griffin won re-election to Position 4 on the school board by getting 860 votes. Write-in candidate Serena Nelson received 264 votes.

Andrews lawyer Dan Sullivan won re-election to Position 5 by receiving 690 votes. Running against him were Michael Graham, who got 81 votes, and Dr. R.W. Harper, who received 478 votes.

BIG LAKE

City Councilmen Wayne Jones and Johnny Beavers won re-election in a three-way race. Runner-up Doyle W. "Opie" Settle received 180 votes in his unsuccessful bid. Jones received more than 300 votes, and Beavers got 225 votes.

George garnered 232 votes in winning the Big Lake position over challengers Tim Sellman, who received 215 votes, Blake Kohutek, 99 votes, and Randy Suggs, 56 votes.

Saldibar polled 379 votes to win the Stiles position. He defeated challengers Joseph Wilde, who received 122 votes, and Robert Michalewicz, who got 84 votes.

CRANE

Schul received 256 votes, Cadena, 232, and Rogers, 214.

In the contested race for trustees of Crane Independent School District, candidates Charles Barrett and Richard Box were the victors. Barrett faced two challengers, Dennis Dohlman and Lynn Petit, for Position 6.

GARDEN CITY

Glenda Blalock, Lynn Glass and Delbert Halfmann were elected trustees on the Glasscock County Independent School District in an election for at-large seats here Saturday.

Halfmann, a St. Lawrence farmer, received 161 votes; Glass, a Garden City rancher, garnered 224 votes, and Ms. Blalock of Stanton received 294 votes. Losing in her bid for election was Jo Ann Hiliger of St. Lawrence. She received 119 votes.

GRADY

Grady Independent School District trustees M.W. "Mac" Tunnell, Don McMorries and Bobby Graves were elected to the school board.

Tunnell, a Grady farmer, garnered 155 votes in winning the unexpired term of Buddy Stewart, who resigned to move to Greenwood. Tunnell had been appointed to that post.

Winning re-election were McMorries, who received 149 votes, and Graves, who polled 87 votes.

KLONDIKE

Bill Shofner and Sam Kirkland won election to the Klondike Independent School District board of trustees Saturday in a four-way race for two positions Saturday.

In the at-large election, Kirkland, the incumbent, received 71 votes. Shofner, a farmer, received 139 votes. Duane Snell garnered 55 votes, and Randy Bush received 25 votes.

LAMESA

Mike Duran polled 594 votes, and incumbent Ronnie Payton received 560 votes to win at-large posts on the Lamesa City Council.

Losing out in the three-way race for two slots was Bill Gerber, who received 414 votes.

Odessa voters facing mayoral runoff on April 26

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The April 26 runoff election will see Odessans decide whether they want the first woman mayor or a businessman with 35 years of experience to represent the city for the next two years.

Loraine Bonner, a former Ector County school district public information director, now in the public relations business, garnered 40.4 percent of the total of 11,793 unofficial votes cast, while her nearest opponent, Don Carter, pulled in 25 percent of the votes.

Dave Cox, who operates two furniture stores, wound up with 17.3 percent of the votes, while Councilman Vern Foreman garnered 11 percent.

Incumbent Mayor John Minor, confident of re-election going into the race, received only 620 (5.3 percent) of the votes cast. Ernest Cole, a motel manager new to the city, received 116 votes.

Odessa voters overwhelmingly rejected the question of Civil Service for the fire department by a margin of nearly 2½ to one. Unofficial tallies indicate 11,374 votes were cast on the Civil Service proposal, with 8,062 voting against it and 3,312 voting for it.

In the races for two Odessa City Council seats, former council member Margaret Burton received 43.4 percent of the 1,510 votes cast in the southside District 1 race. On April 26 she will face Jaime Rodriguez in a runoff race. Rodriguez got 515 (34.1 percent) of the total votes cast. George Ontiveros received 22.4 percent, or 339 votes.

In the two-person race for the northeast Odessa District 2 council seat being vacated by Nicky Sheets, J.L. "Barney" Barnett defeated Cliff Summar by a nearly two-to-one margin. Barnett got 1,875 of the 2,841 votes cast to Summar's 966.

In the three-man race for Position 3 on the Ector County school district board of trustees, James Spencer Jr., who received 630 of the total votes cast, will face Olen Arnold, who garnered 524 votes. The third candidate, Darrell Carlisle Jr., received a total of 122 votes.

Odessa College dean of instructional services Dr. Lee Buice emerged the winner of the Position 3 slot on the ECISD board, receiving 1,847 (54.2 percent) of the total votes cast. Her opponent, David Dunn, received 1,558 votes.

Long time ECISD board member Bill Turner defeated Position 5 opponent Fred Pomroy by a nearly two-to-one margin. Turner received 6,635 votes (63.4 percent); Pomroy got 3,828 votes.

In the Position 2 race, Judy Bridges and George "Buddy" West will face each other in the April 26 runoff. Ms. Bridges garnered nearly 27.1 percent of the total votes cast and West received slightly more than 26.4 percent.

In the Odessa College races for three positions on the board of trustees, incumbent Position 1 Trustee Bill Masterson had no opponent and received 100 percent of the votes cast.

In the OC Position 2 race, Sandra Shaw won slightly more than 34 percent of the votes cast while the nearest opponent Richard Hoffman received nearly 29.4 percent. Chuck McHargue, also seeking the Position 2 slot, received about 23.6 percent of the votes, while a fourth candidate, Raymond Chavez, got nearly 13 percent.

McCAMEY

Bolen garnered 308 votes to outpoll challenger Harold Mervin Brown, who received 205 votes.

Berryhill, who received 425 votes, and Sally Bogart, who got 387 votes, were unopposed in their places on the board.

RANKIN

City Council Alderwomen Olevia E. Clanton and Joy Kitchens won re-election to two-year posts. Ms. Clanton received 112 votes, and Ms. Kitchens garnered 175 votes. Challenger Robert Kollman lost by getting only 79 votes in the race.

In another race, Phillip West received 113 votes to win the one-year term remaining on the unexpired term of Nancy Poage, former schoolteacher who resigned her city post last January to run for Upton County treasurer. West beat fellow candidate Carolyn Shankle, who received 81 votes.

In the Rankin Independent School District race, Dr. James D. Gossett of Rankin and Rockian A. King of Midkiff won places on the board. Gossett, a Rankin physician, received 166 votes, and King, who is manager of the Midkiff Farmers Co-op Cotton Gin, got 168 votes.

In another school board race, the Rev. John A. Green, a United Methodist Church minister, received 189 votes to beat out Robert B. Gaines, who received 60 votes, for a two-year place on the board. Green fills the unexpired term of Eddie Hyatt, who resigned earlier this year.

In another race, three directors of the Rankin Hospital District were unopposed in their bids for re-election. They were Bob Whisman, Midkiff businessman, Tommy Owens, Rankin rancher, and Samuel T. Wilkes, assistant plant manager of the Benedum Camp plant of Union Texas Petroleum.

In a fourth election here, W.E. "Billy" Rankin and John A. Kevil were unopposed in their candidacy for re-election to the Upton County Water District.

STANTON

Stanton Mayor Danny Fryar held on to another term as this town's mayor by defeating challenger Jesus "Sonny" Garza by 234 to 144 votes.

Fryar, who farms in Martin and Howard counties, has been mayor since the mid-1970s. Garza is an employee of Cap Rock Electric Co-operative Inc. of Stanton.

Winning places on the Stanton City Council were Howard Jenkins, who got 330 votes; Ronnie Christian, who received 227 votes, and Albert H. Baker, who polled 225 votes. Ousted from the Council was Steve Garlington, who received 218 votes. Jenkins and Christian are incumbents. Baker previously had served on the governmental body.

Stanton dentist Dr. Randy Moore and businesswoman Beverley North won re-election to the Stanton Independent School District. Moore received 174 votes, and Ms. North, 171.

Polygamist seeks office

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A former police officer fired for having two wives has announced his candidacy for Salt Lake County sheriff, saying he would selectively enforce victimless crimes like polygamy.

Royston Potter, 32, who said he now has three wives, announced Friday he would run on the Libertarian party ticket against incumbent Democrat Pete Hayward.

Potter, fired from the Murray Police Department in 1982 for polygamy, unsuccessfully appealed through the civil service and federal courts.

79 officers were slain

WASHINGTON (AP) — Enrique Camarena Salazar, the federal drug agent who was tortured and beaten to death in Mexico, was one of 79 U.S. law enforcement officers slain in the line of duty last year, the FBI reported Saturday.

The 1985 murder total was seven higher than in 1984.

Law enforcement agencies have solved 74 of last year's killings, according to the FBI's preliminary statistics.

GISD balloting 'interesting'

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

About 297 Greenwood residents went to the polls Saturday to elect two representatives to serve three year terms on the Greenwood Independent School District Board of Trustees.

Although the voter turnout was marginal, Greenwood residents who did vote found the races to be anything but dull.

Incumbent Archie Blackwell defeated his opponent, Pete Wilkenson, by a narrow margin of 174 votes to 149 in his bid for re-election to the Place 2 seat.

Midland College student Vicky Moody received 219 votes in an uncontested race for Place 1 on the board. And Janice Brown, a Midland junior high school teacher, received 40 write-in votes.

Blackwell, a Texas Department of Public Safety investigator, said he was delighted by the victory. However, he expressed disappointment over the low voter turnout.

"I was extremely disappointed that the turnout wasn't any better than it was," he said.

Blackwell said his first order of business is to "try to continue to make the education better than our kids get."

He told the Reporter-Telegram last week that Greenwood ISD is looking at a lean year in 1986-87 as the state continues its school district equalization plan under House Bill 72.

Greenwood ISD lost about $28,000 in state revenues in 1985-86 under the plan to divide the wealth among the state's more affluent and less affluent school districts. It is expected to lose as much in 1986-87.

The decline in oil prices also will have its effect on the district in terms of lower tax revenues, he said.

Wilkinson, 38, called the race for the Place 2 seat fair and clean. "It was a fair race, it was a clean race. He won and I lost. I have no further comment," he said.

Wilkinson, manager of secondary recovery with BTA Oil Producers, indicated that his defeat may not be the end to his political career.

"I just might run again in the future. I still stand firm about what I said. I'm still for my kids. I'm for all our kids," he said.

Mrs. Moody, a full-time Midland College student, has resided in the Greenwood community with her husband, Charles, and three daughters since 1983.

Although she said she was disappointed by the low voter turnout, she added that she was pleased by Ms. Brown's interest in running as a write-in candidate.

Mrs. Moody, elected to her first term on the board, said she is committed to doing the "finest job I can when I've seen all the facts on everything."

At 29, Mrs. Moody is a volunteer with Ballet Midland, serves on the Greenwood ISD Parent-Teacher Council and teaches Sunday School at Greenwood Baptist Church.

Hospital facing some challenges, women elected to board indicate

From Staff Reports

Although the Midland County Hospital District elections were anything but hotly contested, voters went to the polls Saturday to choose two women who say recent changes in health care are not dull.

Voters re-elected MCHD secretary Pat Estes, a member of the board since 1979, with a total of 6,206 votes. Also elected to her first term on the board was Margaret Purvis, a member of the Midland Memorial Hospital Foundation's Board of Trustees Executive Committee. She received 5,685 votes.

Nancy Bryant, H.W. Levenett Jr. and Douglas B. Coats each received one write-in vote.

"There are just a lot of changes going on in the health care industry and it's important for the hospital to remain poised for that change," Ms. Purvis told the Reporter-Telegram last week.

At the same time, Ms. Estes said "I feel it's imperative we have experience on the board at this time.... The challenges the hospital is facing at this time demand that experience."

She added that conservative leadership is needed as MCHD faces changes in Medicare and in the economy "not just locally but all over."

During the month-long campaign, the women centered on various issues.

Ms. Purvis said her concerns are "continuing with today's momentum of anticipating evolving needs and planning for tomorrow's perpetuation of excellence in health care."

She emphasized increasing personalized patient care, augmenting outpatient services, enhancing good relations with physicians and hospital personnel and providing state of the art equipment.

Ms. Estes said she plans to "ensure the proper use of taxpayer's money, assist in the challenge of more efficient management for the hospital and see that the best medical care remains available to the residents of the Midland County area."

Ms. Purvis, who has served on the Legislative Task Force on Cancer, also expressed an interest in increasing services and public awareness of the Allison Cancer Center.

"We need more marketing and increased services and coordination with the American Cancer Society," she said. "It's a shame to have those resources here and yet have people still feel they have to go to Houston for treatment simply because they are unaware of what we have to offer."

Ms. Purvis, vice president of United Way of Texas Inc., is on the board of directors of the Midland-Odessa Symphony and Chorale Inc. She has served as president of Permian Basin Perinatal Association, vice chairman of the city's Planning and Zoning Commission, state chairman of the Public Affairs Committee of the Junior Leagues of Texas and president of Family Services of Midland Inc.

Ms. Estes and her husband, Button, are long-time residents of Midland.

Manssour denies role in bombing

By HALA JABER

TRIPOLI, Lebanon (AP) — A woman who identified herself as the suspect in the TWA jetliner bombing that killed four Americans said Saturday she had flown on the plane that day, but denied planting any explosives.

May Elias Manssour

She said that she once fought against Israel, but added, "I'm not a barbarian.... I don't undertake terrorist acts against innocent children and I have never taken part in any operations outside Lebanon."

Greek and Italian officials have said their prime suspect in the Wednesday bombing is a woman named May Elias Mansur who was on the TWA Boeing 727 during a flight from Cairo to Athens. Italian officials said she was a "known terrorist."

The plane went on to Rome, and the bomb exploded hours later as the plane was flying back to Athens with 122 people aboard.

A black-haired woman who carried a Lebanese passport identifying her as May Elias Manssour spoke to The Associated Press on Saturday in this port city 50 miles north of Beirut. The spelling was a different transliteration of the same Arab name. Her passport said she was 31.

The woman said she and her late Druse militia husband, Atef el-Danaf, carried out attacks on Israelis during Israel's invasion of Lebanon in 1982. She said both were members of the leftist Syrian Social Nationalist Party, which advocates the merger of much of the Arab world into a single nation.

The group has claimed suicide bombings against Israeli soldiers in southern Lebanon.

The woman, who said she was Greek Orthodox, was interviewed at party headquarters in Tripoli. Senior party members and several Tripoli residents supported her claim to be Miss Manssour.

A statement distributed Friday to news organizations in Tripoli in the name of Miss Manssour also denied she had a role in the bombing. In Athens, a senior security officer, Nikos Kokkinakis, said, "Why doesn't she come here and testify if she is innocent as she apparently claims. She should come and help us with the investigation."

The bomb that ripped open a 9-by-3-foot hole in the Trans World Airlines jetliner cabin as it flew over southern Greece exploded under seat 10F, according to Kokkinakis and TWA officials.

The woman said she did not sit there during the flight from Egypt to Greece.

"That seat is near the front," she said. "I was sitting on the right hand side at the back, near the toilet."

She said she spent nine days vacationing in Cairo "at the advice of my doctor."

"I was body-searched three times and all my luggage was thoroughly searched...at Cairo airport," she said. After arriving in Athens she spent seven hours in an airport transit lounge waiting for a flight to Beirut, she said.

"Before I got on my plane to Beirut, I saw ambulances and fire engines and police racing on the tarmac.... I didn't know what was happening," she said.

Greek officials have said the suspect left Athens for Beirut on a Middle East Airlines flight shortly after the bomb-damaged TWA jetliner made an emergency landing in Athens.

An anonymous caller to news agencies in Beirut claimed Wednesday that the bombing was carried out by the Arab Revolutionary Cells to retaliate for the U.S. attacks on Libyan targets last month.

Palestinian sources sid the group is linked to Abu Nidal, a renegade Palestinian — real name Sabry al-Banna — wanted for scores of terrorist attacks in the last 12 years.

The woman said she was not a member of the Arab Revolutionary Cells. Asked why she had been linked to the bombing, she said, "Maybe they (investigators) got to know about my husband's career as a veteran fighter against the Jews and my contribution to the struggle."

She said her husband was killed two years ago fighting Christian militia.

The woman said she owns a boutique and lives with her parents and 8-year-old daughter, Nisrine. She said a stroke suffered after her husband's death left her partially paralyzed. She walked with a limp and her speech was slurred.

She told AP reporters when they arrived for the interview, "I'm May Manssour, the supposed great terrorist."

'I no longer think of power,' Marcos claims

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Ferdinand E. Marcos told Filipinos on Saturday from exile in Hawaii that he had lost his taste for power, and called on the army that rebelled against him to support President Corazon Aquino.

His wife Imelda spoke after Marcos and said she and her husband would not return to the Philippines if it would create trouble. "We would rather die here in poverty," Mrs. Marcos said, between audible sobs.

Marcos spoke in a live telephone interview with radio station DZBB commentator Rafael Yabut during a morning program called, in Tagalog, "Let's Be Happy."

"I no longer think of power.... I am irrelevant," the 68-year-old deposed president said.

Marcos, who has said he still considers himself president, did not refer to Mrs. Aquino as president, but only as "Madame Cory Aquino."

The interview came 40 days after he was toppled by a military and civilian revolt backed by the Roman Catholic Church.

Officials of the Aquino government have accused the Marcoses and their associates of embezzling $5 billion to $10 billion in public funds.

Mrs. Marcos admitted taking religious statues of the Virgin Mary and Christ Child adorned with jewels, but said they had been impounded by U.S. Customs officials.

In a nearly hour-long interview from Honolulu, Marcos warned repeatedly of the danger of a communist takeover.

"Let the Filipinos unite and fight together so that these leftist terrorist insurgents do not take over the Republic of the Philippines," he said.

"To our soldiers, I ask, see to it that our armed forces of the Philippines are united," Marcos said.

He asked them to help Mrs. Aquino, Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile and Armed Forces Chief Gen. Fidel V. Ramos, the two men who led the military revolt that toppled him Feb. 25.

By PIERO VALSECCHI

MILAN, Italy (AP) — The spreading scandal of tainted Italian wine, which has killed 19 people and poisoned at least 50 others in Italy, is threatening to devastate this country's billion-dollar-a-year wine export business.

Italian newspapers on Saturday reported that recent deaths of four elderly people have been attributed to poisoned wine, bringing the toll to 19.

Although no poisonings have been reported outside Italy, authorities in West Germany, Denmark, Switzerland and France have seized thousands of bottles of Italian wine found to have been adulterated with dangerous levels of methyl alcohol.

In the United States, none of the methanol-contaminated wine has been discovered among Italian imports, said Jack Killorin, spokesman for the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms in Washington. He said tests continue.

Vintners in Italy, the world's biggest wine producer, are deeply concerned about the backlash from the scandal, similar to one in Austria last year that cut sharply into that country's wine exports.

It has been "a tremendous blow to the image and prestige of the Italian wine industry," said the Italian Wine Association spokesman, Giorgio Rossi, in Milan. He said many foreign orders have been temporarily suspended.

The recent poisonings in northern Italy involved cheap wine — the equivalent of about $1 a gallon — bottled in most cases by the Odore and Ravera wine companies under the labels Barbera del Piemonte and Dolcetto. Twenty-nine other companies also are being investigated for possibly having marketed tainted wine.

Methyl alcohol, also known as methanol and normally used by the paint and dye industry, is sometimes used illegally to raise the alcohol content of wine. It can cause blindness, coma and death if consumed in large quantities.

A tiny trace is produced by the natural fermentation of grapes and is tolerated. But the poisonous wine contained up to 200 times the permitted amount.

At least seven people have been arrested in the scandal and charged with multiple manslaughter, criminal association and illegal adulteration of the wine. Three are wine merchants, and others are accused of marketing methyl alcohol under fake labels purporting to belong to chemical firms, said Judge Alberto Nobili, who is investigating the case.

Within Italy, wine consumption has dropped sharply since the first deaths were reported in this northern city in early March. Investigators and doctors fear more poisoning cases might surface in the next few months.

"We are trying to track down the various types of tainted wine, produced by a few criminal wine merchants, which might have reached different distributors," Nobili said.

Italian customs police have seized millions of gallons of tainted wine in Italian warehouses and shops in the past few weeks. Inspectors are examining low-grade wine throughout three major Italian wine-making regions — Piedmont, Emilia and Apulia.

Some experts claim a goverment decision to eliminate a tax on methyl alcohol made the product cheap and attractive to some wine merchants who produce low-quality wine that requires correction of its strength.

The Odore company of Incisa Scapaccino, in the Piedmont region, sold two-liter bottles (4.2 pints) of Barbera del Piemonte at 1,900 lire, about $1.15.

"You can't think of getting drinkable wine at that price. One liter of good wine can't cost less than 1,200 lire," Rossi said.

Experts claim a high price guarantees quality. Italian restaurants and shops report growing demand for "DOC," or high-quality wine, costing about $2 to $6 a bottle.

But the Wine Association's Rossi noted that DOC wine accounts for only 12 percent of Italian wine production of 1.7 billion gallons. Last year, Italian exports totaled 400.3 million gallons, worth $965.6 million.

In an effort to dampen the effects of the scandal abroad, the Italian government has made a "certificate of guarantee" declaring the absence of methyl alcohol obligatory for all exported wine.

Bush meets with Saudis

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Vice President George Bush promised leaders of this desert kingdom Saturday that the United States will supply weapons to help keep the "carnage of the Iran-Iraq war" from spreading to other Persian Gulf states.

He also pledged that U.S. relations with Saudi Arabia "will not rise or fall with the daily crisis of oil on the world market."

Collapsed oil prices this past week began to rally when Bush said he would emphasize to the Saudis the importance of market stability.

Accompanied by his wife Barbara, Bush arrived on the first stop of an eight-day tour of Saudi Arabia, Bahrain, Oman and North Yemen.

With the sun hidden behind gray clouds, temperatures still were about 80 degrees as the Bushes stepped off Air Force Two at the ultramodern King Khaled International Airport.

They were greeted by Prince Salman, governor of Riyadh; Hisham Nazer, the minister of planning, and Prince Bandar, Saudi ambassador to the United States. All wore long robes and head-dresses.

Bush said in remarks at a dedication ceremony for a new, $25 million U.S. Embassay building that the United States and Saudi Arabia share common security objectives.

"In particular today we look with dismay at the carnage of the Iran-Iraq war," he said. "That war should never have started and it should have ended long ago."

Bush said the United States recognizes the need of Saudi Arabia and other gulf nations to guard against the war's spreading.

WORLD IN BRIEF

U.S. fuel tank explodes

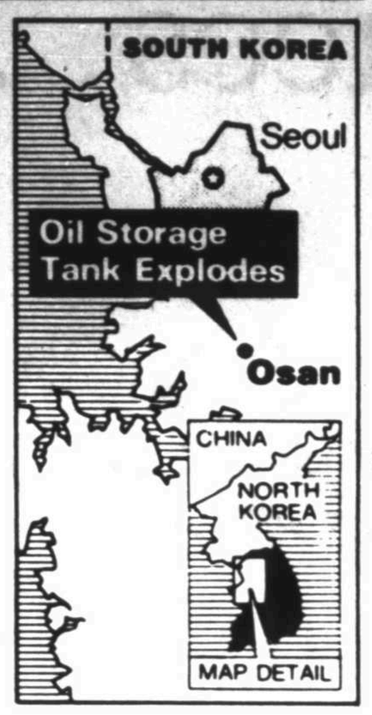

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — An aviation fuel storage tank exploded and caught fire today at Osan Air Base, and the U.S. military said an American and 13 Koreans died and 12 Koreans were injured.

The explosion occurred at the base 37 miles south of Seoul during a fuel transfer operation, U.S. military spokesman Billy Fullerton said here. He said the fire was brought under control after several hours.

Fullerton said an investigation was under way to determine the cause of the explosion, but that there was no indication sabotage or terrorism was involved.

In Washington, U.S. Air Force spokesman Lt. Col. Larry Greer said initial reports indicated 13 people were injured, 15 people killed — including one American — and one person missing.

Later, he said 12 Koreans were injured and 14 people killed. "We believe it to be 13 Koreans and one American," he said of the reported deaths. No one was believed missing, he said.

'Direct action' urged

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Black activist Winnie Mandela today described South Africa's white authorities as terrorists and called for "direct action" against them.

Mrs. Mandela, wife of jailed anti-apartheid leader Nelson Mandela, spoke to about 3,000 mourners gathered in the town of Brandfort for the funeral of a man who residents said was killed by a police informer last week.

"We no longer come to the funerals of our young heros to shed tears," said Mrs. Mandela. "The time for crying is over. We can no longer waste our tears. The struggle cannot be won unless we take direct action against the (President P.W.) Botha regime."

For most of the past nine years, Mrs. Mandela has been exiled to Brandfort, in the Orange Free State province, under the terms of a government banning order restricting her movements and political activities. The order prohibits her from making public political speeches, but she has defied the restriction before.

Her lawyer said Wednesday the government had in effect lifted the restrictions by indicating it would not oppose Mrs. Mandela's appeal of the banning order. Government officials later said the order was under review but remained in effect.

Lebanese fight expands

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Shiite Moslem Amal militiamen, flinging dynamite and using Soviet-made T-55 tanks, pounded Palestinian guerrillas holding out for a ninth day Saturday in two camps, as fighting spread to a third shantytown.

Police said Amal fighters battered the Sabra and Chatilla camps in south Beirut with fire from 120mm mortars and 106mm guns throughout the morning.

Militia sources, who demanded anonymity, reported six people were killed and 25 wounded in clashes overnight and early morning. They gave no breakdown of the casualties.

That raised the toll since the latest war of the camps started March 28 to at least 46 killed and 175 wounded.

Weinberger woos Japan

TOKYO (NYT) — Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger urged Japan Saturday to take part in the Reagan administration's space-based defense research, saying Japan's "great technological genius" would enhance the program.

But Weinberger avoided any appearance of trying to put pressure on the Japanese to make a quick decision. According to Defense Department officials, he told Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone that "when and how it might participate would be solely up to the Japanese government."

Nakasone was quoted by aides as having said he would "study this matter carefully" after hearing from a delegation of 55 government officials and industry executives now visiting the United States to examine the missile defense plan.

Thus far, Britain and West Germany are the only American allies to join the program, popularly known as "Star Wars."

Sikhs free prisoners

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Sikh extremists shot and killed six police officers at a courthouse in Punjab state Saturday and freed three prisoners who were accused of killing a Hindu editor, authorities said.

District Magistrate S.C. Aggarwal said that four people, including a lawyer, were wounded in the attack at the District Court complex in Jullundur, a major industrial city in central Punjab.

At least three attackers opened fire with automatic weapons as police were leading four Sikh defendants into the compound, Aggarwal said in a telephone interview. He said the assailants escaped in a police-style jeep with three of the prisoners and with three rifles taken from the slain police.

It was not clear how the fourth prisoner remained in custody.

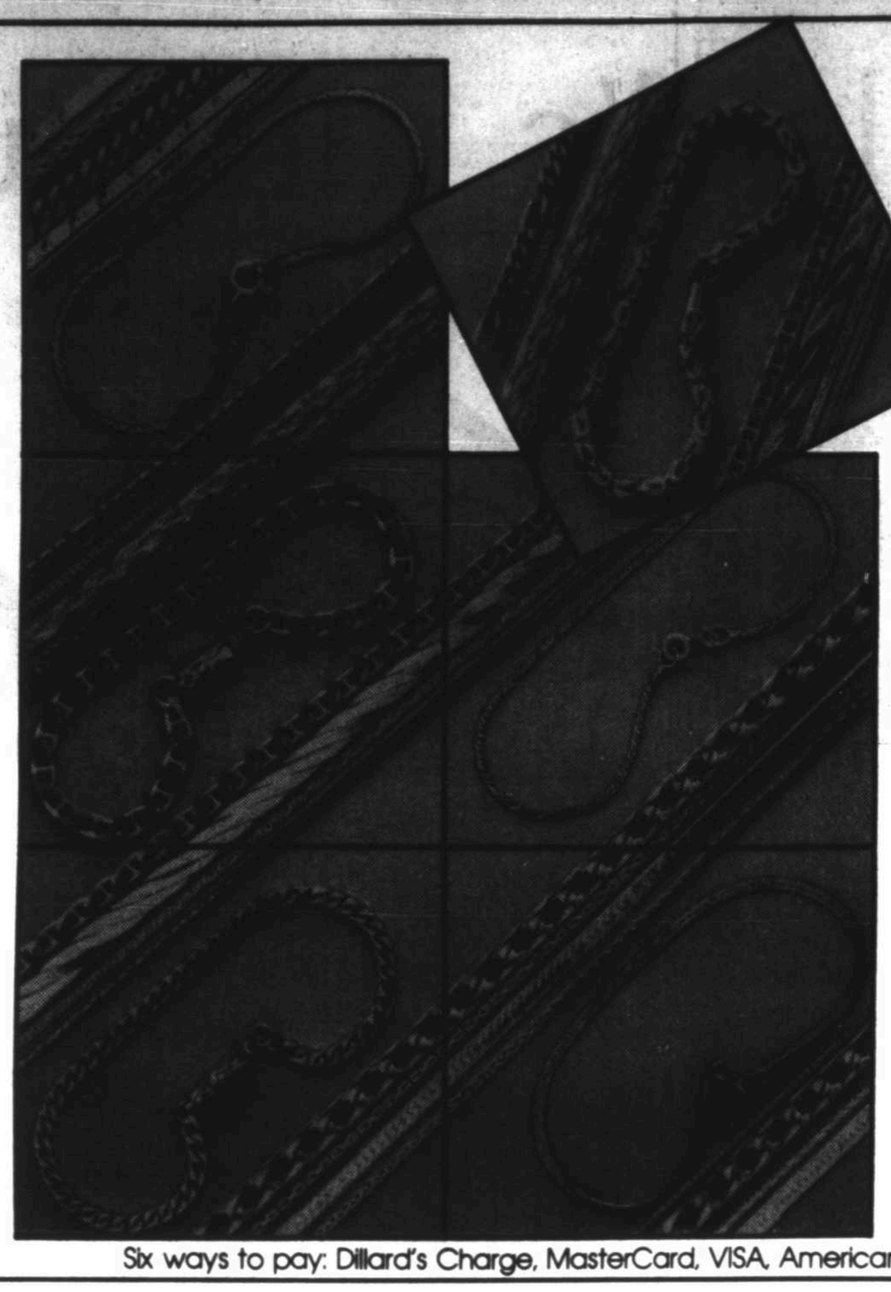

France expels Libyans

PARIS (AP) — The Interior Ministry said today France had expelled two Libyan diplomats, an Algerian man and a Tunisian man in connection with possible attacks against U.S. targets in Europe.

However, a man reached by telephone at the Libyan Embassy, who identified himself as an official spokesman but refused to give his name, said the embassy "formally denied" any Libyan officials had been expelled.

An Interior Ministry spokesman, who could not be identified in accordance with official rules, said the Libyan diplomats were "invited to leave the national territory (France) after having been found to be in contact with individuals liable to commit attacks against American interests in France."

He said both diplomats arrived today in Tripoli, the Libyan capital, aboard a plane from Paris.

British engineers maintain Libyan radar system, Pentagon source says

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — British electronics engineers on contract to the Libyan government maintain and repair the guidance systems of Soviet SAM-5 missiles such as those that were fired at American F-14 jets over the Gulf of Sidra last week, a senior Pentagon intelligence official disclosed.

He also revealed that British technicians helped install and maintain sophisticated Libyan air defense radars — one of which was destroyed by U.S. jets. The radar network was sold to Libya by a West German company and is manufactured with technology that is 80 percent American, the official said.

The network is linked by satellite telecommunications dishes and land lines that extend to control rooms that are buried deep underground in several hidden locations throughout Libya. Other allied nations also have helped Libya obtain advanced Western technology, the official said.

The Libyan naval patrol boat which was sunk by the U.S. Sixth Fleet was sold to Libya by France.

The "combatant-class" French vessel was outfitted with Italian missiles somewhat smaller than the SAM-5s which also are maintained by a team of British technicians. A U.S. congressional source said that Soviet radar technicians are assisted by Belgian engineers.

According to the U.S. intelligence source, the British radar technicians were originally recruited by former CIA official Edwin Wilson in the early 1970s. Wilson was said to have personally brought in about 30 Britons.

Wilson was later convicted of helping Libya obtain bombs and plastic explosives and is currently serving a 20 year sentence in federal prison.

A State Department official, who asked not to be named, said he found it hard to believe the Soviets would permit British technicians to work on the SAM-5 surface-to-air missiles.

Clashes increased Khadafy's popularity

By KEVIN COSTELLOE

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — The Libyan people and armed forces firmly backed Col. Moammar Khadafy in his armed showdown with the United States last month, but Western diplomats say it's too early to tell if the clashes strengthened his grip over the military.

They emphasized over the weekend that at least for now, the clashes vastly increased the radical North African leader's popularity in this country of 3.5 million people.

Khadafy has had trouble controlling the military. Several military rebellions and coup attempts have been reported since he seized power in 1969.

Four Western diplomats based in Tripoli spoke to The Associated Press about Khadafy's popularity and control over the military on the condition that they not be identified by name or country.

"The army as well as the people are united with him," one diplomat told the AP. "It (the fighting) brought them together against a national enemy. It will work in his favor."

Another diplomat added: "He (Khadafy) proved that he can fight when the Line of Death has been crossed. The people knew their fate was in his hands."

The so-called Line of Death is the outer boundary Khadafy has claimed to the disputed Gulf of Sidra off Libya. The United States and most other nations regard most of the gulf as international waters.

In two days of fighting over navigation rights in the gulf on March 24 and 25, the United States sank three Libyan patrol boats and damaged a radar site.

Khadafy hailed the fighting as a "glittering victory" and claimed that Libya shot down three American F-14 fighter jets. Washington has said its forces suffered no such losses.

The diplomats said the fighting firmly united the leaders of the estimated 73,000 active duty military personnel with Khadafy, and made them rally around him as their leader.

"They solidly closed ranks behind him," said one diplomat of the Libyan army, navy and air force.

Aided by a vast network of secret police, Khadafy has ruled this country since overthrowing King Idris in September 1969.

Khadafy's title is supreme commander of the armed forces. Below him is Brigadier Abu-Bakr Younis Jaber, the commander in chief, who is generally regarded as a strong ally of Khadafy's.

One Western diplomat said that while occasional signs of discontent showed in the ranks, no signs emerged of any mounting resistance against Khadafy.

"If there were such a groundswell of discontent in the armed forces, he would be removed," the diplomat said.

All of those interviewed said it is too soon to predict accurately whether Khadafy's control of the armed forces is any firmer now than it was before the Gulf of Sidra fighting.

"So far, there is nothing to lead me to believe there's any difference," said one diplomat.

There has been speculation about a possible military-backed coup attempt against Khadafy after last November's death of Hassan Ishkal, a cousin of Khadafy's. Ishkal was the army commander in the coastal city of Sirte.

But one diplomat dismissed such speculation as inaccurate.

NATION IN BRIEF

Mormon meeting begins

Benson

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Ezra Taft Benson, addressing his first general conference as president and prophet of the Mormon Church, said Saturday that "all is not well in Zion" and admonished the faithful to forsake pride and immorality.

Benson opened the church's 156th Annual General Conference five months to the day after the death of his predecessor, Spencer W. Kimball.

"The Book of Mormon has not been, nor is it yet, the center of our personal study, family teaching, preaching and missionary work," he said. "Of this we must repent."

The former U.S. agriculture secretary, who for eight years opened President Dwight D. Eisenhower's Cabinet meetings with prayer, spoke to about 6,000 church members gathered in the Tabernacle on Temple Square and thousands more via satellite.

The Book of Mormon is one of four in the church's canon of Scripture that includes the Bible.

Was it 'Chicken Little?'

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — The key prosecution witness in the sanctuary alien-smuggling trial was like Chicken Little, a defense attorney has contended in closing arguments marked by fiery exchanges with the judge.

Defense lawyer Robert Hirsh, leading off for 11 attorneys representing the same number of defendants, all charged with conspiracy to smuggle Salvadorans and Guatemalans into the United States, said Friday the government had failed to prove a conspiracy.

Hirsh recalled for jurors the fairytale about Chicken Little, "who told Turkey Lurky the sky is falling." He told them that similarly, key prosecution witness Jesus Cruz, a paid informant, erroneously had told immigration case agent James Rayburn "The sky is falling; Rayburn tells (prosecutor Donald M.) Reno the sky is falling and Reno is telling you that the sky is falling."

But Hirsh said the sky didn't fall, and there was no conspiracy of sanctuary movement members.

Other comments provoked Reno to object at length three times to U.S. District Judge Earl H. Carroll that they were "highly improper, prejudicial and inflammatory."

Big oil family indicted

LAKE CHARLES, La. (AP) — Three members of a prominent Lake Charles oil family have been indicted for allegedly collecting $50,537 from two Texas banks by falsely reporting two certificates of deposit had been lost.

William G. Castle Sr., 85, and William "Bill" Castle Jr., 46, was released after an initial appearance Friday in U.S. District Court here, where Magistrate James Trimble Jr. upheld a $50,000 bond set earlier for each by a Texas magistrate.

A second son of the elder Castle, Kenneth Castle, also of Lake Charles, had not been arrested Friday night, authorities said.

Major quake feared

NEW YORK (NYT) — Recently identified faults under the East River have reawakened concern that, contrary to widespread belief, New York City may be vulnerable to moderately severe earthquakes, according to an authority on the geology of the New York area.

"New York City has always been considered safe from earthquakes, but that is now being reevaluated," said the expert, Dr. Charles Merguerian of Hofstra University in Hempstead, N.Y. Geologists, he added, are having to reconsider the "seismic potential" of the area.

While the city's high-rise buildings are not considered particularly vulnerable to earthquakes of moderate severity, this may not be true of other structures, such as the water tanks perched atop many older buildings. Merguerian said the earthquake potential should be taken into account in designing new structures.

He and Dr. Leonardo Seeber of Columbia University's Lamont-Doherty Geological Observatory have been seeking evidence within the city for faults, or cracks produced by past movements in the earth's crust.

Group seeing shakeup

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chief U.S.-backed Nicaraguan rebel group, torn by internal dissent and charges of mismanagement, is undergoing a behind-the-scenes shakeup that includes appointment of a Miami-based exiled businessman to coordinate its financial and political operations.

Leonardo Somarriba was named secretary general of the United Nicaraguan Opposition, UNO, last month, but no announcement was made because, according to Nicaraguans close to UNO, admission of existing problems could undercut President Reagan's request for $100 million in military and other aid.

The Democratic-controlled House is scheduled to reconsider that package on April 15, after defeating it last month. Reagan's proposal narrowly cleared the Republican-dominated Senate on March 27.

Somarriba's appointment — in effect, to be UNO's chief executive officer — represents an apparent shift in power away from the umbrella group's three publicly known directors: Adolfo Calero, who also heads the chief rebel army, the CIA-organized Nicaraguan Democratic Force, FDN; and two former Sandinista government officials, Arturo Cruz and Alfonso Robelo.

Edwards retrial to begin

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The public might get a peek this week at whatever new strategies the prosecution has planned as U.S. Attorney John Volz tries for a second time to convict Gov. Edwin Edwards of racketeering and fraud.

Opening arguments are expected Tuesday.

Oil price plunge easing debt crisis?

By TOM RAUM
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON — U.S. officials claim the 6-month-old Reagan administration strategy for easing the global debt crisis with an infusion of new loans may be starting to jell — and plummeting oil prices could be helping.

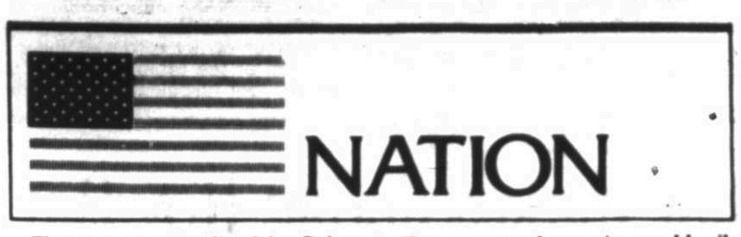

Still, commercial banks, while voicing support for the plan in general terms, have yet to come up with a cent of the additional money it envisions.

"It was never contemplated that you would solve a problem that was 10 or 15 years in the making in six months," Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III said in an interview. "We didn't get into this problem overnight and we are not going to get out of it overnight."

"But I think nevertheless that there has been reasonably healthy progress" on the plan for $29 billion in new loans for developing nations over the next three years, he added.

Baker spoke on the eve of a month of high-level economic conferences, beginning in Washington on Monday with a week-long meeting of finance ministers of 149 nations and culminating in early May in Tokyo at the annual seven-nation economic summit.

Evaluation of what has become known as the "Baker plan" is expected to be a major agenda item for this week's policy meeting of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund.

The plan, first outlined by Baker at a World Bank-IMF meeting in Seoul, Korea, last Oct. 7, calls for $20 billion in new lending from commercial banks to developing nations — most of them in Latin America. The remaining $9 billion would come from multilateral lending organizations like the World Bank.

To receive the funds, the countries would have to agree to make certain policy changes to attract investment and to spur growth — thereby making it easier for them to pay back the some $450 billion they already owe.

While commercial banks have yet to budge, the World Bank late last week announced the first loan of this kind to a major debtor nation since Baker outlined the strategy — a $350 million, 15-year loan to Argentina.

The loan will help Argentina revise the method with which it taxes agriculture, enabling that nation to boost its farm exports by $1 billion a year, bank officials said.

Other similar loans are expected to follow, including a $500 million loan to Mexico and a loan of about $300 million to Colombia, the officials said.

The recent plunge in world oil prices, while aggravating the debt crisis for oil-producing nations like Mexico, promises to help ease the overall problem and may make it easier to persuade banks to loan debtor nations the extra money, Baker and other officials contend.

"Overall I think it (the oil price drop) will be beneficial in terms of the debt problem because there will be more principal debtor nations who are beneficially affected than debtor nations who are detrimentally affected," Baker said.

"But clearly, it will have a detrimental effect with respect to Mexico, Venezuela and Nigeria. There is no question about that," he added.

The oil price plunge will make life far easier for non-oil-producing debtor nations, says Michael Young, an economist for Chase Econometrics, a private forecasting firm. "Not only have you reduced their import bill and increased their balance-of-payments, but the lower interest rates and inflation that come with the lower oil prices mean that their debt service burden has gone down."

And even the oil-exporting countries will reap the benefits of the lower interest rates and inflation, "offsetting much of their lost oil revenues," he added.

Despite the lack of new loans from commercial banks, administration officials and many international economists claim it's only a matter of time before the money starts flowing again.

Generally, smaller banks would rather write off such loans instead of making new ones, while larger banks have so much tied up already that they have little real choice but to make further loans — if reluctantly — and hope it will lessen the chance of defaults, analysts say.

"There are two ways the banks will start lending again, persuasion and coercion," said Richard E. Feinberg, vice president of the Overseas Development Council, a private, liberal research organization that focuses on Third World problems. He said it may take a combination of both.

Some of the debtor nations have also expressed some lack of enthusiasm for the plan, claiming the funds would not be enough or the strings attached to them too many.

"It is politically difficult for some of these countries to concede publicly that they are embracing the (Baker) initiative or taking advantage of the proposal because they don't want to be in the attitude of having their economic policy being dictated by Uncle Sam," conceded an administration official, who spoke on the condition that he not be identified by name.

Reagan calls for 'streamlining'

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan called upon Congress Saturday to streamline the way it appropriates money for defense, saying he agrees with a presidential commission that "there must be a better, more efficient way."

The president devoted his weekly radio address, delivered from his mountaintop ranch 20 miles north of here, to the recommendations of the commission he appointed to study defense management.

Reagan endorsed the commission's work on Wednesday and issued orders to put into effect parts of it that do not require legislation.

The president and first lady Nancy Reagan will wind up a 10-day vacation at the ranch and return to Washington on Sunday.

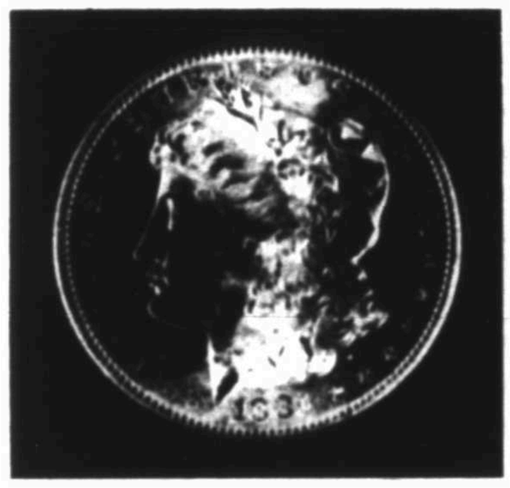

"When we first took office, we inherited a Navy that had shrunk from nearly a thousand ships to less than 500 and planes that couldn't fly for want of spare parts," he said, repeating a note he has sounded in the past.

Carson City Reserve has been authorized to dispose of an extensive hoard of Old West Silver Dollars; some dating in 1870's. The Trustees have authorized Carson City Reserve to release these silver dollars to the American Public for one week only at a guaranteed price of only $34.50 each. An incredible price for treasures of the old west. Due to the size and nature of this extensive holding, no one individual would be able to amass such a treasure. Therefore we've been authorized to release these silver dollars at far below advertised prices. At this extremely low price which is $50.50 below a major national advertiser, we predict this old Western hoard to vanish quickly.

SILVER DOLLAR HOARDS FOUND

There have been a few isolated collections of Silver Dollars discovered over the last 20 years. None will match the LaVere Redfield hoard consisting of over 600,000 silver dollars. Redfield, who became wealthy from oil and stocks, distrusted the government banking system and preferred silver dollars over paper money. Since the dispersal of this great hoard, many silver dollars have escalated 1000% in the last decade.

CONGRESS & PRIVATE INDUSTRY MELTS SILVER DOLLARS

As a result of the Pittman Act and World War I, millions of silver dollars were melted by the authorization of the United States Government, making silver dollars very scarce. United States silver dollars contain approx. 1 Troy ounce of 900 fine silver. In 1980 when silver hit record breaking $50.00 per ounce again a massive meltdown of silver dollars resulted making silver dollars more scarce than ever. As a result of the Pittman Act, WWI, Private Industry, and the Great 1980 Silver Meltdown, over 2/3 of all United States silver dollars were destroyed for their silver content.

San Francisco block cleared of fire debris

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Firefighters began work Saturday to clear away water and hot rubble blocking the search for at least seven people missing after an industrial park exploded and burned, charring a square block and causing at least $10 million damage.

"We're basically going to be pumping out the water today and searching for bodies," said Deputy Fire Chief Charles Cresci. He said much of the water poured on the blaze had collected in a large basement area, where debris was piled several feet deep.

Fire Investigator Bill Jovick said it would be at least a day before enough water could be pumped out to allow firefighters to search for victims, and Cresci said it could take four or five days to pump out all the water.

Seven people who worked at the Bay View Industrial Park were still missing Saturday, Cresci said. It was not known if any non-workers were missing, he said.

"Considering the number of people who were there, it seems very fortunate to only have seven still missing," said Cresci. He estimated that about 100 people were working Friday in the complex's 120 artists' studios, carpentry, auto body, upholstery and other shops.

At least 20 people were reported injured.

The cause of the spectacular fire that roared out of control for nearly four hours Friday in the Hunter's Point area in southeast San Francisco was still under investigation.

It started at midafternoon with a blast that lifted the roof off the converted tannery, bent a corrugated steel garage door 100 yards away, broke windows across the street and rattled homes more than six blocks away.

The blaze sent dense smoke billowing 3,000 feet over San Francisco Bay.

A light drizzle helped cool hot spots Saturday, but Fire Capt. Richard Crispen said that in places where the building was two and three stories high, the coals were "very hot and down deep."

Neighborhood residents saw smoke rising from the site and flames sporadically leaping into the air throughout the night, said Sara Talley, a worker at a convenience market about six blocks from the fire.

The injured — two in critical condition — were taken to hospitals and paramedics treated an uncounted number of minor injuries at the scene.

Sculptor Richard Alpert, 38, said he was in a studio on the third floor of the building and was "lucky to get out alive."

The explosion "was the loudest noise I ever heard," he said. "The floor, the roof and the walls began to collapse. The roof split open. Large parts of it were not there anymore."

"I could hear the guy next to me moaning, and I said, 'Over here,' and we made our way out," Alpert said.

Robert Sandoval, 17, said he escaped from the second floor, where he was working as a cabinetmaker. "A couple of people were buried near me, but they got out OK, thank God," he said.

"But I think one of my friends is dead. He was close to the explosion."

Scallop boat added to armada seeking shuttle remains

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A 96-foot scallop boat and its nets were added to the shuttle Challenger salvage fleet Saturday and assigned the task of recovering remaining crew cabin wreckage from silt on the ocean floor.

The Big Foot, owned by a Port Canaveral seafood company, dropped its scallop nets overboard and began dragging the bottom 100 feet below the surface in an area 18 miles northeast of here where cabin debris is scattered, NASA announced.

Divers from the salvage ship USS Preserver earlier retrieved about 75 percent of the cabin portion of the shuttle, but turbulent seas in recent days covered the remaining wreckage with sand and silt.

"The use of nets has been determined to be an effective way to sweep the area for remaining debris which may be covered by silt."

Time-honored battle over clock adjustment continues

By DAVID GOELLER

WASHINGTON (AP) — If Rep. Ed Markey and Sens. George Mitchell and Slade Gorton had their way, Americans would get an extra hour of daylight tonight.

But Sen. Wendell Ford is prevailing, and the nation won't be turning its clocks ahead for daylight-saving time for another three weeks.

Ford, a Kentucky Democrat, has succeeded in bottling up the latest in a decade-old effort by lawmakers who want the DST season to start sooner and end later.

They argue that the switch would save energy, cut traffic fatalities, reduce violent crime, give Americans more outdoor time in the evening and aid some 400,000 people with retinitis pigmentosa — night blindness.

"Few proposals submitted to Congress ever offer such clear-cut gains and enjoy such broad, bipartisan support," says Mitchell, D-Maine.

But these ranks don't include Ford, a Commerce Committee member and the out-front leader of a group of rural-state senators who are opposing what they see as big-city plan to, as Ford puts it, change "God's time."

The opponents argue that moving the extra hour of daylight from morning to evening will force farmers to begin even more of their days in darkness and require children to wait for morning schoolbuses along dark country roads.

Since 1966, the nation has started DST on the last Sunday in April and returned to standard time on the final Sunday in October.

Markey, D-Mass., last Oct. 22 engineered a 240-157 House vote for a bill that would begin daylight-saving time on the first Sunday in April and end it on the first Sunday in November.

Nine days after the House passed its bill, Mitchell and Gorton, R-Wash., went before the Senate Commerce Committee with renewed hope of getting it to endorse an identical bill.

Joining them were the Department of Transportation and the Daylight Saving Time Coalition, an umbrella group of mostly leisure industries that estimates more DST would bring its members some $4 billion in added annual sales.

What makes Judge Roy Barrera the Republicans' best choice for Attorney General in the May primary?

He can beat Jim Mattox in November.

There is one candidate for Attorney General in the May Primary who can defeat Jim Mattox in November. This candidate will strengthen the entire Republican ticket in November by attracting a broader constituency. The candidate is Judge Roy Barrera. Read this excerpted interview and we think you will agree.

State Senator Cyndi Taylor Krier

Why is this race so important?

I feel Texans deserve an Attorney General who will provide the conservative leadership, moral courage and dependable legal representation which is absent today. Honesty, integrity, and independence are qualities indispensable to this office and should never be in doubt. The Attorney General should never use the power or prestige of his office to advance or protect personal interests. Furthermore, he should never allow family or political relationships to affect his judgment or conduct. I will be the Attorney General Texans can depend on and be proud to have elected.

What experience and qualifications do you bring to the Office of Attorney General of Texas?

Since my graduation from St. Mary's School of Law in San Antonio, I have served my community and state for over a decade in the legal system. I have worked on behalf of crime victims, prosecuting defendants charged with misdemeanor and felony offenses including Capital Murder in our District Attorney's office. For over 5 years as a State District Judge, I have presided over the trial and disposition of more than 3,500 major criminal cases, including 275 jury trials and 4 death penalty cases. To date, over 11,000 years of prison time have been assessed in my court and I have collected more than $1,000,000 from defendants who have come before me.

What would be your goals as Attorney General?

For too long, politics, as usual, has been the way of life in Austin. I'm going to take politics out of that office. I'll replace politics with hard work, professionalism, integrity and honesty. And I'll ensure that the men and women who work there will hold themselves to the highest standards of the law. What's more, Texas needs a lawyer who's a leader, one who by his own work ethic and example will motivate others to give their best for the state and all its citizens. I've done that in San Antonio and I'll do it in Austin.

Why would you be an asset to the Republican ticket in November?

San Antonio is a historically Democrat stronghold. Including the County of Bexar, it is home to more than 1,000,000 residents. We have over 523,000 registered voters. Two years after former Governor Bill Clements appointed me to the bench, I stood for election as a Republican. Although 1982 was not a good year for the Republican Party state-wide, I won in Bexar County with 58% of the vote. I led the entire Republican ticket. What's most significant, however, is that I outpolled Democrats Jim Mattox and Bill Hobby, and received 11,000 more votes than Governor Mark White. I can bring strength to the ticket in November.

Chicago man surrenders after marathon police standoff

Pasch

CHICAGO (AP) — A heavily armed man who held an elderly woman hostage after killing his landlord and a police officer surrendered peacefully Saturday, ending a marathon standoff that police had vowed to end without more bloodshed.

John Pasch Jr., shirtless and with his hands up, walked out of his captive's North Side apartment into the glare of police floodlights at 2:45 a.m., more than 35 hours after the drama began. His 74-year-old hostage was unharmed.

"He simply told us, 'I'm willing to come out,' and he came out," said Richard Rochford, a deputy police superintendent.

"Shoot him! Shoot him!" shouted two people in the crowd of neighbors who watched the surrender. But police, who had rejected the idea of storming the house or shooting at Pasch, kept a promise not to harm him.

"We kept reassuring him that he wouldn't be hurt," Rochford said of the negotiations leading to Pasch's surrender.

Police issued numerous appeals via television for Pasch to surrender peacefully and seemed content to wait him out. "If necessary, we'll be here next week," Police Superintendent Fred Rice said Friday.

Several officials said police did not want to turn the incident into a disaster in which they might have caused the death of the hostage and started a fire or explosion. They said events in Philadelphia last May when scores of homes were destroyed in the police confrontation with the radical group MOVE were etched into their memories.

Pasch, who weighed 300 pounds and was described by neighbors and friends as a "pretty lonely" man who lost his job as a machinist six years ago, was charged with two counts of murder at a morning hearing and jailed without bond.

He is being evaluated by a psychiatric team and kept in isolation so he won't harm himself or anyone else, according to an official at the Cook County Jail.

Police entered the two-apartment building where Pasch had held neighbor Jean Wiwatowski hostage, and found a revolver with 200 rounds of ammunition and a rifle with 150 rounds of ammunition "stacked up and ready to go," said detective Cmdr. Edward Wodnicki.

The standoff began about 3 p.m. Thursday when Pasch, who was months behind in his rent, shot and killed his landlord, Leslie Shearer, 45, who had come to talk to him about it, Rice said.

Police Officer Richard Clark, a member of the department's tactical unit, was shot by Pasch as he responded to reports of gunfire, Rice said.

Corporate jet plunged before crash, officials say

REDWATER (AP) — A twin-engine jet was plunging vertically at more than 400 mph just before it lost its tail and smashed into the ground, killing all seven people aboard, federal officials said Saturday.

The jet filled with Singer Co. employees on their way home to New Jersey crashed and completely disintegrated Friday night amid swirling winds that may have spawned a tornado just before the crash, National Transportation Safety Board spokesman Warren Wandel said.

The 1124 Westwind jet apparently lost part of its tail section just before impact, Wandel said, adding that the exact cause of the crash would probably take months to determine.

"We're just getting the investigation started," Wandel as authorities worked to clear the victims' remains from the crash site, a field of red clay sandwiched between groves of trees.

The plane, which can seat up to 10 people, went down about 7:20 p.m. in the field near Harrison Trailer Park, two miles northeast of here, as a severe thunderstorm rolled through, Bowie county sheriff Thomas Hodge said.

"At this point, we think it's a strong possibility" thunderstorms caused the crash" that ripped a hole 10 feet deep into the ground and spread wreckage for several hundred yards, Hodge said.

The airplane took off from Redbird Airport in Dallas at 6:55 p.m. and was headed for Teterboro, N.J., according to a spokesman for the airport.

The plane was cleared to fly at 37,000 feet but the pilot radioed to request a higher elevation because the storm was worsening. Wandel said air traffic controllers approved the request, but the pilot never acknowledged that transmission.

Wandel said the plane, which was registered to Drayton Associates of New York, crashed at "an almost vertical-type descent" and added that "this is not a survivable impact."

Because the plane disintegrated, "we're limited by the structure we have to work with."

The plane's maximum air speed is 400 mph, but Wandel said it may have been going even faster.

All seven victims lived in New Jersey and were employees of Stamford, Conn.-based Singer, Hodge said.

Those killed were pilot Kenneth Hetland, 35, of Willingboro; co-pilot Steve Fulop, 22, of Hasbrouck Heights; Martin Chen, 44, of Kinnelon; Frank Schmitt, 43, of Cranford; Daniel McBride, 47, of Totowa; Robert Imfeld, 59, of Nutley and William Pasechnick, 49, of Little Ferry, Hodge said.

Singer representatives aiding families of crash victims

LITTLE FALLS, N.J. (AP) — The Singer Co. dispatched representatives Saturday to help families of seven employees of a New Jersey subsidiary who were killed when a company plane crashed in Texas, a Singer spokesman said.

The victims were employees of Singer's Kearfott Division, an aerospace electronics subsidiary based here.

Tom Elliott, a spokesman for Stamford, Conn.-based Singer, said Kearfott employees were "doing all they could to assist the families" of the victims, who died in the crash in Redwater, Texas, Friday night.

"Everyone at Kearfott feels a deep sense of loss and extends their sympathies to the families of these colleagues," said Kearfott President John J. Brett.

Killed in the crash were pilot Kenneth Hetland, co-pilot Steve Fulop, and passengers Daniel McBride, Frank Schmitt, Robert Imfeld, William Pasechnick and Martin Chen.

Elliott said the men were on their way back from a one-day business trip to the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

Hetland, 35, of Willingboro, had worked for Kearfott for six years. Fulop, 22, of Hasbrouck Heights, had worked for Kearfott since January.

McBride, 47, of Totowa was a contract negotiator who had worked for Kearfott since 1982. He had previously worked for the division for a period of time, but Elliott said he did not know for how long.

Schmitt, 43, of Cranford, was a senior program pricing administrator who had worked for Kearfott for four years. Imfeld, 59, of Nutley, was a contract manager who had been with the company for 21 years.

Pasechnick, 49, of Little Ferry, was a program manager who had been with the company for 19 years. Chen, 44, of Kinnelon, was hired one year ago and was a program director.

'Mutual survival' key issue in relations, Soviet specialist says

AUSTIN (AP) — The central issue of Soviet-American relations is "our mutual survival," says a Soviet specialist on the United States political system.

Andrey Kokoshin told a University of Texas Symposium that the Soviets had paid a high price to become as strong militarily as the United States and it is certain it can maintain that parity.

Kokoshin, deputy director of the Institute for the USA and Canada in Moscow, presented a Soviet perspective of the 40 years since World War II. His speech Friday was part of a conference on how the two superpowers had managed to avoid all-out war.

Kokoshin, speaking for nearly 45 minutes in English, said in the Soviet view the most important development of the postwar period was when "the Soviet Union reached strategic parity with the United States" in the late 1960s or early 1970s.

"Maybe, in my view, our feeling of security now is the greatest since maybe the times of Peter the Great ... which provides us much more confidence in our ability to preserve the peace, to deter the aggression ...," said Kokoshin.

Peter the Great, czar and emperor of Russia, died in 1725.

Kokoshin said, "Strategic parity, of course, is regarded by our people as an enormous achievement, and we paid a very high price for it — in economic terms and in terms of the use of talents or our scientists, engineers" in building arms and arms systems.

He said with Soviet atomic missiles capable of reaching the United States, "We understand why, psychologically, many Americans are so uncomfortable with the situation of parity but that's an irreversible situation, and somehow those who didn't adjust have no choice but to adjust."

Without mentioning President Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative, known as "Star Wars," by name, Kokoshin said "now we see the danger of an arms race in space." He said it could result in a "much lower level of stability than we enjoyed until recently."

Kokoshin said the Soviet Union was sure it could "maintain parity for the foreseeable future with the United States ... For example, in the case of space weapons, we discovered that the Soviet answer would be countermeasures — much cheaper and using technology which is already on the shelf."

Kokoshin quoted a symposium speaker from the United States as saying that nuclear weapons had provided a stabilizing effect on the international system since World War II. But Kokoshin said he worries that "the destabilizing effect of the existence of nuclear weapons is becoming greater and greater than the stabilizing effect.

"Therefore, it is so important to find the ways for substantial reductions, and then for total abolition of nuclear weapons," he said.

"We are interested that the United States have the same kind of security we have, not less. At the same time, of course, we don't want to have less security than the United States," Kokoshin said.

He said both nations have the same kind of nuclear insecurity.

The symposium here was proposed by Elspeth Rostow, former dean of the Lyndon B. Johnson School of Public Affairs, who met earlier with Kokoshin in Moscow. She said the meeting was designed to find out "what went right" in the four decades of peaceful U.S.-Soviet relations.

Filipino favoritism alleged

ANDREWS (AP) — One of five workers dismissed from Permian General Hospital claims the layoffs resulted from favoritism by the hospital administration toward Filipino employees.

Licensed vocational nurse Julia Gowin also said Friday the dismissals may be appealed at Thursday's hospital board meeting.

"We're not going to stop and let something like this go," said Gowin, who said she worked at the hospital almost 20 years before being dismissed.

"The Filipinos get the best jobs and never are laid off," she alleged.

Hospital Administrator Scott Mahon said Friday that he had received no formal complaint from the nurses. He said he would have no comment on the nurses' position until a grievance was filed in writing.

The nurse said she and four others — pharmacy employee Lella Fowler, LVN Laverne Bean, registered nurse Betty Butler and vocational nurse John Brooks — complained to county commissioners earlier this week. They were told the proper forum in which to air the complaints would be the hospital board, she added.

The nurses were among about 20 employees at the 114-bed hospital who were laid off Feb. 13 due to cost-cutting measures caused primarily by low patient census, said Gowin.

The nurses had waited until now to protest because they thought the hospital' s financial position might improve, returning them to the payroll, she said.

None of the 20 dismissed were Filipinos, she said.

"It's a racial deal," said Gowin.

She also alleged some Filipinos working at the hospital in Andrews, located about 35 miles north of Odessa, should not be allowed to continue their employment there because they only hold visitor's visas.

Lloyd Bentsen issues challenge

AUSTIN (AP) — U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen challenged Texans Saturday to stop feeling sorry for themselves, and do something about it.

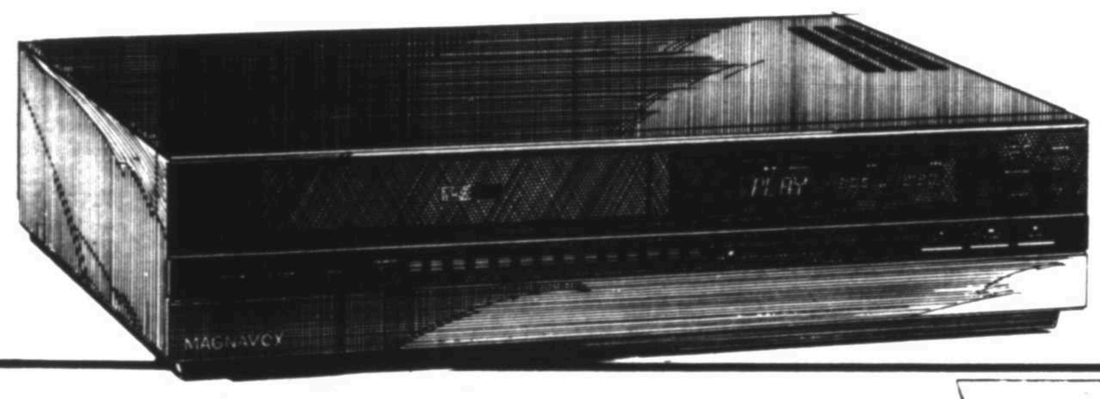

"We have taken some hits and times are tougher than they have been for a while, but I think it's time we quit feeling sorry for ourselves and get to work," the senior senator from Texas said in a speech for the alumni reunion of the University of Texas Law School.

Bentsen said it is true that two of Texas top industries, oil and agriculture, are in bad shape.

"What disturbs me as much as anything about our current situation in Texas is the defeatist attitude," Bentsen said. "That kind of thing feeds on itself.

"Yes, things are dark. But recall the words of Emerson: 'When it is dark enough, men see the stars.' I think Texas needs to start looking up to those stars a little more. Because charting our course by those stars is how we're going to find our way out of our present hardships," he said.

TDC inmates indicted

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Inmates who set fire to their clothes and flooded their cell block during a January disturbance at the Texas Department of Corrections' Wynne Unit have been indicted on charges of felony criminal mischief.

A Walker County grand jury on Friday indicted 23 inmates for their part in the Jan. 7 disturbance. A total of 56 TDC inmates were indicted on various charges by the grand jury Friday.

David Weeks, special prosecutor for prison violence, said that on Jan. 7, a group of inmates broke bunks, sinks and toilets and set fire to their clothes and mattresses. The inmates also flooded the cell block.

Man dies in plane crash

MONTAGUE (AP) — The sole occupant of a twin-engine Beechcraft plane was killed Saturday when his aircraft crashed northeast of here in far North Texas, authorities said.

Officials say the victim was from Oklahoma but would not release further information pending notification of next-of-kin.

The plane apparently dipped low over a house and a watermelon field, said Larry Sanders, a Texas Department of Public Safety trooper.

"He made a sharp upward sweep and nearly hit a barn and then went over a hill" where the plane clipped the top of some trees before crashing in a field, Sanders said.

Anita Light, a Montague County Sheriff's dispatcher, said the crash occured at about 2:30 p.m. about six miles northeast of Montague, which is about 50 miles southwest of Wichita Falls.

Light said the area received rain and thundershowers during the afternoon.

Federal Aviation Administration officials were investigating the crash.

School team wins again

RICHARDSON (AP) — Members of J.J. Pearce High School's Academic Decathlon team are in a class by themselves after winning the national championship for the third year in a row.

The victory, announced Friday in Los Angeles, caps the longest winning streak in the 5-year-old competition.

"We wanted the three, we went for the three and we got the three," said player Mark Maxham.

"Whoever said it's not as good the second time around doesn't know what they're talking about," said a jubilant head coach Ann Steel.

The team scored 45,435 points out of a possible 60,000 for the 10-event contest, which tested participants on subjects ranging from fine arts to immigration.

El Paso needs cook-off

EL PASO (AP) — A leader of an El Paso area chili lovers' group says he can't understand why the West Texas city can't have a world class chili cook-off.

Ben Andrews of the Pod of the Pass Chili Society says, "They have them in the snow in Minnesota. They have them in the Virgin Islands. They even have them aboard ocean liners. So why can't we have more of them here in the Chili Capital of the World?"

Andrews says the actual chili capital is the Mesilla Valley of southern New Mexico. But El Paso is the closest large city and entitled to share in the glory.

El Paso, though, doesn't even seem aware of its good fortune. Dallas, Houston, Corpus Christi, Austin, and many other Texas cities caught up in the chili culture, have chili cook-offs as often as every weekend, Andrews said.

Team to visit Robstown

ROBSTOWN (AP) — An accreditation team of the Texas Education Agency is expected to visit the Robstown school district soon in an investigation of the district that could include two other agencies, a TEA spokesman says.

"As I recall, there were enough items on the complaint to justify a visit," said Ernest Roberts, TEA director of accreditation, said Friday.

"There is no question that we will investigate," Roberts said.

The accreditation division began its investigation this week after receiving a referral from the agency's audit division, which has been investigating a written complaint filed against the school district last month, he said.

RIVER OAKS (AP) — A 24-year-old man was held Saturday on investigative charges of murder in connection with the "gruesome" decapitation slayings of his nephew and niece, police said.

Curtis Jerome McElyea was arrested Friday night and arraigned on the investigative charges before Tarrant County Justice of the Peace Gary Ritchie, who set bond at $200,000, officials said.

The bodies of Scott Lewis, 4, and Karen Lewis, 2, were found about 9:30 a.m. Friday in plastic bags on a smoldering bed in the boy's bedroom in the small white frame house.

The children lived there with their mother, 22-year-old Valerie Lewis, who was at work at an area restaurant when the fire broke out, police said.

Tarrant County Sheriff Don Carpenter said River Oaks police had recovered the knife believed to have been used in the slayings.

Curtis McElyea's estranged wife, Arlene, told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram that he had talked for two years about getting help for his violent temper.

"He said at one time everything was falling apart," she said, adding that he had told her the children "got on his nerves."

Mrs. McElyea said she left her husband, a former Fort Worth Park and Recreation Department employee, nearly two years ago. She said she has not yet filed for divorce.

"He had a bad temper when I was with him. We'd get in a fight, and he'd beat me around," she said.

Medical investigator James Seaberry said the children's bodies were not burned in the fire, which apparently was limited to the bedroom and did little damage.

One medical investigator described the scene as "gruesome."

"There was a fire reported.... The children (were) inside, and the uncle who was supposed to be baby-sitting was nowhere around," River Oaks Police Chief Walter Schertz said Friday.

The children's bodies were found by the River Oaks Volunteer Fire Department and underwent autopsies Saturday.

The Tarrant County Medical Examiner's office said in a statement that autopsies showed that both children had been stabbed several times in addition to being decapitated.

The fire did not in any way contribute to the deaths," the statement said, and "the official ruling of homicide has been made in both deaths."

Valerie Lewis did not return to her house Friday afternoon. Relatives said later that she was under sedation. Family members also said Valerie Lewis' former husband, Walter Lewis, had recently returned to Fort Worth and that police were trying to locate him.

Carpenter said his investigators, who are assisting in the case, told him that both children had been stabbed and that the boy had been sexually mutilated. However, Seaberry said he was not aware of any stab wounds or sexual mutilation of the bodies.

A next-door neighbor saw flames at the back door of the house at about 9:20 a.m. He said he pounded on the door of the house and told a man who answered, "You've got a fire there."

Phillip Flassing said he went back home, called the fire department and returned with a bucket of water.

"I pushed the door open and smoke was coming out," he said, and the man was no longer there. Flassing said he did not know that the children were inside.

"I got a foot in the door, but there was too much smoke, I couldn't see anything," he said.

Bobby Creel, who lives behind the Lewis home, said he saw a man leave the house as smoke billowed from it.

"It looked like (smoke) was coming out of the garage," he said.

The house belongs to Gladys McElyea, the grandmother of Valerie Lewis and her brothers. There were no adults home when River Oaks volunteer firefighters arrived at the house about 10 a.m.

Ms. Lewis, a waitress, works two jobs — at Billy Bob's Texas nightclub in the evenings and at the Driftwood Restaurant during the day.

County forecasts

Midland, Ector, Glasscock, Upton, Reagan, Crane, Gaines, Andrews, Dawson, Borden, Martin and Howard counties: Sunday, some early morning cloudiness then sunny with a high in the mid 80s. South wind 10 to 20 mph. Sunday night, partly cloudy with a low in the upper 50s. Monday, partly cloudy with a high in the mid 80s.

Sunny skies expected

From Staff and Wire Reports

Partly cloudy skies this weekend were to fade by mid-day today, when sunny skies were to reappear.

The high temperature reading today is to be in the mid-80s. Winds are to be southerly at 10 to 20 mph.

The low tonight under reappearing partly cloudy skies is to be in the upper 50s. The high Monday is to be in the mid-80s. The sky is to be partly cloudy Monday.

The peak temperature Saturday was 87 degrees, which missed the record high of 92 degrees for April 5 in 1959. The overnight low was 49 degrees, which wasn't close to the record low of 25 degrees for April 6 in 1936.

STATE

Thunderstorms that roared across North Texas produced flash floods, hail, tornadoes and high winds and caused a fatal plane crash, two drownings, several automobile accidents and a train derailment, officials said Saturday.

However, the only thunderstorm that developed Saturday was between Abilene and Wichita Falls where moist, unstable Gulf air encountered much drier air from West Texas.

Elsewhere in the state, scattered rainshowers fell in parts of the southeast, skies were cloudy to partly cloudy over the eastern half and sunny skies brightened the west.

A south to southeast wind at 10 to 15 mph flowed across most of the state. However, a light wind blew in the far west and extreme east while a west wind at 10 miles an hour was recorded in the Panhandle.

Most roadways leading into Athens were closed Saturday morning, with reports of people stranded in their cars outside the city. A bridge was washed out by water reported more than three feet deep on State Highway 31.

NATION

Strong thunderstorms developed across the southern Great Lakes Saturday. A severe thunderstorm watch was posted for a small part of southeastern Wisconsin, parts of northeastern Illinois, northern Indiana, southern Lower Michigan and southern Lake Michigan.

Elsewhere, showers and thunderstorms were scattered over parts of the lower Mississippi Valley and from the mid-Atlantic states across parts of the Ohio Valley to the Great Lakes. Rain also fell over parts of the upper Mississippi Valley, the northeastern Plains and along the southern Pacific Coast.

Purple martins draw flocks of admirers

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Geraldine Simmons never thought she would go berserk over a bird.

But that was before she became acquainted with purple martins.

A purple martin devotee for four years, Mrs. Simmons is among a growing following of martin admirers in Midland.

What is it about the rather plain black bird that has generated a book, monthly newsletter and its own official city?

Mrs. Simmons says it's the birds' huge appetite for mosquitoes, flies and other pesky flying insects. The martin reportedly is capable of consuming 2,000 mosquitoes per day. The bird's personality and intelligence also seem to attract admirers.

"They don't strike the eye as a particularly exotic bird in any way. It's because of their contribution, but most of all it's the personality of the bird. They love to be around people," Mrs. Simmons says. The birds got their name from the purple appearance their feathers take when the sunlight hits them.

Consulting geologist Bob Grace says he admires the purposefulness of the birds and their annual migration from Brazil to the United States.

"They send out scouts to find places and report back, which fascinates me.

"They seem to have an intelligence that is different from other birds," Grace says.

After scouts have located appropriate nesting places, colonies begin to arrive in Midland in late February or early March and go back to South America in August. It's unusual that the birds, normally attracted to bodies of water and wet areas have chosen to frequent arid Midland at all, Mrs. Simmons said. Their favorite nesting spots in town appear to be around small ponds and playa lakes.

Specially built aluminum houses also seem to attract the birds and several Midlanders have constructed the houses in attempts to lure martins to their yards. Some are successful, like Mrs. Simmons, who has four houses. But others like Grace must patiently wait each year hoping the birds will build nests. Grace has been putting up a house each spring for two years hoping to entice the martins.

"We would be tickled to death if the martins would choose us," he said.

A groups of martin lovers have even bought houses to put up in parks to attract the birds. Wadley-Barron Park on A Street used to have four martin houses until three were vandalized. One remains and a group of martin enthusiasts are planning to add another.

But probably the strongest reason for promoting the martins is the birds' natural extermination of flying insects. Many martin lovers feel the bird represents a perfect balance of nature that pesticides have never been able to accomplish. The birds with their annual migrations in spring represent nature at work.

"It's just like when daffodils bloom in February. They tell you winter is over. It's just a thing you look forward to," Grace said.

Jury must decide if religious activists just alien-smugglers

By ANNTOINETTE MOORE
Staff Writer

Corbett

After five long months, a federal jury in Tucson soon will decide the fate of 11 religious activists.

Are they just members of an ordinary alien-smuggling ring, as the government contends, or committed Christians being persecuted for exercising their beliefs?

The defendants, one of whom is Lubbock resident Nena MacDonald, were indicted in January 1985 for conspiring to smuggle Salvadorans and Guatemalans into the United States. They are members of the sanctuary movement, a loose-knit network of about 350 churches which shelters illegal immigrants from Central America from deportation.

Besides Ms. MacDonald, the defendants include two priests, a minister and six church layworkers. They face prison sentences of up to five years on each count against them.

The defendants contend the Central Americans face persecution and death in their homelands and deserve political asylum in the United States.

Mike Gray, a Midland resident who visited the Tucson courtroom in January, offered his impressions of the trial.

"Jesus Cruz (the government's main informant and star witness) was on the stand," Gray said. Before Cruz's job as an informant, "he had been indicted for bringing in illegal aliens — he was a coyote," a person who smuggles aliens into the United States for money.

"HERE HE was testifying for the prosecution (he had immunity) and against people who had admittedly brought aliens in for free," he added.

Because Judge Earl Carroll did not allow the defendants to argue they had a "good faith" belief that their actions were legal (under the Refugee Act of 1980), or allow evidence of conditions in Central America, "the trial so far has been so obviously prejudicial that it makes everything seem unreal," Gray claimed.

"All their defenses were struck before they went to trial," he said. Carroll "limited it strictly to an alien-smuggling case."

Gray sat next to Quaker defendant Jim Corbett's wife during his full day of observing the trial.

"She spent the whole day drawing political cartoons. Mostly animals. I remember one of a snake that had coiled itself around a mouse. The snake was labeled 'The U.S.' and the mouse was labeled 'The Defendants.'"

Volunteer work may net woman prison term

By ANNTOINETTE MOORE

MacDonald

Nena MacDonald's two months of volunteer work in the summer of 1984 could cost her up to five years in prison.

Ms. MacDonald, a 38-year-old Quaker mother of two, is charged with conspiring to smuggle illegal aliens into the United States while working with the sanctuary movement in Tucson.

She is one of 11 defendants in the five-month-long sanctuary trial nearing its conclusion in Tucson.

"I just happened to be volunteering when the guy (Jesus Cruz, a government informant) was hanging out with his recorder," she said in a recent telephone interview from Tucson.

"I was very surprised (to be arrested)...because, really most of the things I did were not illegal, even in Reagan's terminology."

She took people to doctors' appointments and to find clothing, she said. Ms. MacDonald's conspiracy charge comes from using the telephone in a room where an allegedly conspiratorial conversation took place, according to a press release from the Arizona Sanctuary Defense Fund.

Ms MacDonald, who along with her husband was a graduate student at Texas Tech, first became involved in the sanctuary movement through the Lubbock chapter of Clergy and Laity Concerned.

In 1979 she became interested in conditions in Central America because of a friend who had visited the area several times.

"I read that there was torture, mass killings and that the governments were corrupt," she said.

Her decision to volunteer with the sanctuary movement was supported by her husband of 13 years and her Quaker congregation.

"Rather than being an activist, I thought of myself as a community volunteer. I'm a nurse. That gets you involved in lots of different things," Ms MacDonald said.

But she didn't expect to be involved in a federal trial lasting more than five months.

"I still feel supportive of the sanctuary movement. It's hard not to be ambivalent because I know it will affect the children if it's a guilty verdict," she said.

"But part of the reason I got involved was because of other people's children."

She was delighted by New Mexico Gov. Toney Anaya's recent decision to declare that state a sanctuary for aliens fleeing persecution in Central America.

LULAC head announces candidacy for seat on MISD board of trustees

Edia Hernandez

From Staff Reports

Edia Hernandez has announced her candidacy for Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees District 1.

Mrs. Hernandez, 42, is a wife, mother and grandmother. She is a native Midlander and attended Midland public schools.

Mrs. Hernandez, 404 E. Shandon, graduated from Midland High School and attended Midland College. She is a a member of Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church where she serves on the Parish Council Board of Directors, member and past president of the Human Relations Council, vice president and treasurer of the Midland Political Caucus, president of the League of United Latin American Citizens and member of the Texas League of United Latin American Citizens Education Board.

Mrs. Hernandez took an active part in promoting change in the MISD at-large system of electing trustees to the single-member district method. She said she is a candidate for the school board because she is committed to the highest quality of education the public school system can offer.

"The only way I can reinforce my beliefs is to serve on the board," she said.

While Mrs. Hernandez said she recognizes Midland public schools belong to one of the finest and most creative systems in Texas, she understands that trustees will face some tough decisions in the coming years because of the shortfall in state revenues due to declining oil prices.

"To ensure quality, we need to look at all of the programs in existence in all of the schools," she said.

Retired teacher seeks District 2 position on MISD trustee board

James Ramsoure

From Staff Reports

James Ramsoure has announced his candidacy for Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees District 2. Election is May 3.

Ramsoure, a Midland resident since 1958, is a retired teacher and administrator with MISD and earned a bachelor's degree from Alabama State Teachers College and a master's degree from Ohio State University. He also received his counselor's certification from the University of Texas at Austin.

He has been active in a variety of civic organizations, including Permian Basin Mental Health-/Mental Retardation, American Heart Association, Senior Citizens Inc., and served two terms on the MISD Board of Trustees, and on the Midland Memorial Hospital Board of Trustees.

At 74, Ramsoure said he is "well qualified to serve on the board and I have the experience and dedication to do so. My whole life has been tied up in education and I believe I am well versed on both sides of the table."

Calling himself a "sacrificial lamb," Ramsoure summarized his reasons for seeking the District 2 seat, saying "When this particular election came up, it seemed to me that the candidates were hesitant to come forth."

He was involved in education for 35 years, both in the classroom and the central office and later with the school board. He completed post graduate study at Texas Tech University, Eastern New Mexico University, Sacramento State College in Sacramento, Calif., and Queens College in New York.

Condescending nature lovers can take a hike

Those of us in the newsroom recently heard from a couple of friends who are in the process of hiking north from Georgia to Maine.

When I say hiking I mean walking, as with two feet and without the use of a motor vehicle. These two gentlemen obviously are not blessed with great intelligence. An eye for adventure? Yes. Intelligence? No way.

Before they left I posed a question for them. I asked, "Why are you doing this, anyway?"

Predictably, they responded with a condescending smirk and said snooty things like:

"To get away from it all."

"To see America in a way the rest of you never will."

"To get close to nature."

"To avoid the day-to-day humdrum you have allowed yourself to get mired in."

"To witness the natural beauty of the sun disappearing behind a distant mountaintop."

And, as if to top it off, one of them looked me straight in eye and said, "Why not?"

I let the first five slide by but that last one — the part about "Why not?" — was stopped in its tracks. And, I mean immediately.

I said in a rather loud voice, "Because you can't take a shower every night, you can't pig out on cheese enchiladas, you can't hang out in your favorite saloon, you can't watch Mary Tyler Moore reruns and you can't get the West Coast scores from the night before. Need I say more?"

They were not impressed.

Still, my answer hit the nail on the head as to why I would never embark on a nature hike. I don't especially like nature. If I want to get close to nature, I'll look out the window. If I want to see the sun disappear behind a mountaintop, I'll go to an art gallary and admire paintings. If I want to see a different America, I'll watch a PBS special. In any case, I don't have to walk from Georgia to Maine.

There are other reasons I don't particularly care for nature. For one thing, you have to share it with bugs. And gnats. Have you ever been to south Georgia in the summertime? Don't. You walk outdoors, start to speak and before the first word gets out, your mouth is full of nasty little gnats.

And then there are plants. On the surface, that should be no problem. Plants are pretty. Plants smell good. Plants represent life. Unfortunately, plants also have thorns that prick your fingers and cause great pain. Either that, or they rub up against you and make a rash appear on your body. It is a known fact that a rash on your body will scare off members of the opposite sex. They invariably think the worst. They also will laugh at you behind your back, which hurts more than a thorn pricking your finger.

If the bugs and plants don't get you then the sun will. In addition to burning your skin, the sun will also cause you to perspire. Or, more bluntly, it will make you sweat, a word that more adequately describes what really takes place. Perspire is too nice a word. Sweat tells it like it is. Sweat is something that should be reserved for professional athletes and men who get dirt under their fingernails when they work.

There have been a great many advances in this world but perhaps the greatest of all is air-conditioning. If for no other reason, air-conditioning allows a person to spend the bulk of his time indoors where it is nice and cool. Man was meant to be comfortable. He was also meant to stay indoors.

There is a popular barroom line that probably sums it up best. It goes like this: "I'd be in hog heaven if the whole world was indoors and semi-dark."

SANCTUARY

"The government maintained that we can't talk about refugees, international law, INS practices or conditions in Central America," he said in a recent telephone interview.

"Judge Carroll is trying to rig the trial for the government and going to extremes to do so.

"We have to hope that the jury is perceptive enough to know that they're being tricked," Corbett said.

His involvement in the sanctuary movement began when he started an "underground railroad" for Central Americans after a friend of his picked up a Salvadoran hitchhiker in May 1981.

"I HADN'T paid any attention to Central American affairs" until then, he said. "In talking with the refugees (in a detention center), I discovered that there were enormous numbers of refugees being tortured and murdered" in El Salvador and Guatemala.

Although the Refugee Act of 1980 provided that aliens who could demonstrate a "well-founded fear of persecution on account of race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion" would qualify for political asylum, these Central Americans were being deported from the United States.

"It came as quite a shock to me that anything like that could happen," he said.

The defendants are not engaging in civil disobedience by aiding and transporting illegal aliens but rather trying to force the government to obey its own law, according to Corbett.

"Obviously, protecting what you consider to be very good laws is different from protesting what you see as bad laws," he said.

"In fact, if (the Central Americans) are refugees then what the government is doing is not only illegal, it is what is designated in the Geneva Conventions as a war crime," he claimed.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service has a very different view of the situation.

"ANY PERSON coming from El Salvador — any Central American country where there is unrest — can make a claim for asylum," said Alfred Giugni, El Paso district director for the INS, in a telephone interview. (Midland County is in the Marfa Sector of the El Paso District of the INS.)

"We have court orders (saying) we have to advise them of their right to claim asylum," he continued.

When an alien is apprehended by the Border Patrol, he can immediately ask for political asylum, Giugni said. "The initial decision (on asylum) can be made by the district director before the person goes into the deportation process."

Once deportation proceedings for an alien have begun, he continued, an immigration judge will rule on an asylum request.

"If government troops come to your village and shoot across your home and then the rebels shoot across your home, you're just in the crossfire and don't qualify for asylum," he said.

If four of your neighbors were killed because they wouldn't join the army it doesn't automatically qualify you for political asylum, he continued.

"You must prove that you would be killed if you didn't join the army."

"AFTER MARITIME law, immigration law is the most complicated," said Sister Mary Jean Audette, an immigration lawyer who works in Midland. "Anyone with immigration problems needs to consult with an immigration lawyer" or accredited paralegal.

"The filling in of immigration forms is considered the practice of law," she continued, because a lawyer has to advise people on the correct forms to use.

"If a person is apprehended, my advice is to not sign anything, because usually they're signing away their rights," said Sister Audette, who is employed by the Diocese of San Angelo Social Action Office.

Many of the Central Americans are fleeing persecution, she claimed.

"A colleague of mine reported the story of a young man" at a conference of immigration lawyers, she said. "The man's testimony was that his parents had been killed, his grandparents had been killed, he had been mutilated."

He had hidden for two weeks and then escaped to the United States, she continued. The immigration judge did not grant his request for political asylum and he was deported.

"A week after he was returned to his country, his friends sent a picture of his decapitated body," she said.

"Both sides can do this (offer anecdotal evidence on conditions in Central America), but who killed him?" responded Giugni. "Was he beheaded by robbers? This (his murder) has to be governmental action."

GIUGNI CITED two studies which show there is no evidence that "these deported persons are being taken from the airport and killed."

One report, by the Intergovernmental Commission on Migration, headquartered in Geneva, Switzerland, claimed that out of 5,000 people deported to El Salvador in the past three years, not one had been prosecuted, he said. This commission meets deportees at the airport and monitors them for the next six months, according to Giugni.

The INS detention center in El Paso has about 30 aliens from El Salvador, he said. Three of these have been deported before; this is at least their second time to be apprehended in the United States, he claimed.

Many Central Americans at first say they're in the United States because "'my family's starving and I need a job,'" Giugni said. "Thirty days later the same person says 'I'm fleeing persecution.'"

"These people (in the sanctuary movement) are declaring every person as a refugee. Because the person is from El Salvador, we should declare them refugees," he continued. "We can't take every person who knocks at our door who claims to be a refugee."

Guigni and his deputy district director, Henry McGhee, recently appeared at a seminar on the sanctuary movement in Las Cruces, N.M. A Tucson rabbi presented the sanctuary position, McGhee presented the INS position and a New Mexico State University professor spoke on conditions in El Salvador.

Guigni also has tentatively set a meeting with New Mexico's Gov. Toney Anaya, who recently declared that state a sanctuary.

"We feel that we have to answer the statements of people in the sanctuary movement and make sure that the (INS) side is heard also," he said.

Outstanding farmer 'very conscientious'

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

George Anderson Jr.

A 34-year-old cotton farmer was named Outstanding Young Farmer by the Midland Jaycees Friday in the first of what the organization hopes will be an annual event.

George Anderson Jr. has been farming "all my life, really."

"He seemed to be very conscientious," said Leslie Parsons, chairman of the Midland Jaycees Outstanding Young Farmer Program, before a banquet at the Midland Hilton honoring Anderson.

The program is designed "to foster better urban-rural relations through the understanding of the farmers' problems as well as the appreciation of their achievements," according to information supplied by Ms. Parsons.

At a time when the family farm in general and local cotton farmers in particular have been having a tough time, Anderson, his father and their family have made a profit on their southeast Midland County farm for the past three years.

"Our family does most of it," said his wife, Diann. "We all pitch in and do it ourselves."

"The cotton breaks even or makes a little money," Anderson said, but the cattle operation carries them through the winter.

"They're really what we live on," he said.

The farm's diversification "is probably the one major thing" which separates the Andersons from less successful farmers, according to Midland County Agricultural Agent Earnest Kiker.

Kiker also credits the Andersons with keeping costs down by "running their own business."

"We watch our spending," Anderson said. "We do all the repairs — we keep our equipment in good shape."

But Anderson recognizes that hard work and innovative techniques won't push commodity prices up.

"There is a crisis" in family farming, he said, and the federal government should help by finding foreign customers for U.S. agricultural products.

"I don't want the government to support the price," he said. "But opening up foreign markets would help us."

Jaycee chapters have been honoring outstanding young farmers since the 1950s, but this the first year the Midland chapter has participated, Ms. Parsons said.

"We're not just a city organization," she said. "I hope we'll be doing it every year."

From the local winners, one farmer is selected to represent the state, and from that pool, four nationwide winners are selected. The program is sponsored by the John Deere Co.

To be eligible for the award, a farmer must be between the ages of 18 and 35, and must be the actual operator of a farm, receiving at least two-thirds of his income from farming, according to Ms. Parsons.

He urged New Mexicans not to cooperate with the Immigration and Naturalization Service and to thwart its efforts to arrest and deport Central Americans.

"I think it's important that people stand up for moral issues...It may be pragmatic to keep your mouth shut but, in the long term, we all pay for what goes on."

The Reagan administration has "a pattern of neglecting people who are on the bottom — that the way to resolve problems is with force. A kind of mentality where it's 'us against them' in the world...The defense buildup is part of this destructive pattern," she claimed.

"A lot of stuff said about Central America is not true...It's the kind of things governments do when they want to paint the enemy as inhuman and all people on our side as good guys."

In many parts of Central America, anyone who protests the government or ruling classes in any way is subject to persecution, she claimed. This includes labor leaders, people who organize cooperative farms or communities and teachers who teach peasants to read.

"What most of these people want is democracy and we're paying for the repression which keeps (the ruling classes) in power.

"To call cooperative and labor leaders Communists is redbaiting," she said.

Ms. MacDonald rejected criticism that the sanctuary movement only aids people fleeing countries with U.S.-backed governments and ignores refugees from Communist nations such as Nicaragua.

"Lori Thomas (a former director of Casa Oscar Romero, a shelter for aliens in South Texas) was convicted of having a Nicaraguan in her car," she said.

"I think we should help people who need it. I don't approve of repressive Communist governments."

She also denied conservatives' claims that sanctuary workers were smuggling terrorists into the United States.

"Most of the people I've helped have been community-oriented, family-oriented, religious people.

"The refugees have done a lot more for others than those of us on trial. I wish I had as much guts as those people do and as much of a sense of hope," she continued.

"Part of what keeps them going is that sense of community — the world as a good place (full of) people who will respond to them."

Ms. MacDonald cited the biblical injunction that the "sojourners among you should be fed and clothed and sheltered" as the religious basis for her actions.

"It's so disappointing that Christians still manage to live pretty high off the hog while others are going hungry," she said.

The use of government informants to infiltrate church meetings and Bible study groups "just makes me sick," Ms. MacDonald said. "I was suspicious of the two fellows (government informants)...We felt that we were within the law — working within the 1980 Refugee Act."

The sanctuary movement workers were singled out for selective prosecution, she asserted.

"I think it is because we spoke out...We asked questions: 'Why did these people come here?'...'Why are we treating them this way when they apply for asylum?'"

Hospital, TDH investigate typing of heart's donor

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — Wichita Falls General Hospital and Texas Department of Health officials are investigating if the blood type of a heart donor could have been misidentified by the institution.

A 47-year-old Missouri man, with type A blood, received a heart from a donor with type B blood March 21 at Barnes Hospital in St. Louis, officials said.

Routine checking in Dallas of kidneys from the same donor revealed a blood type error but the discovery came too late to halt the transplant, said Barnes spokeswoman Daisy Shepard.

The Missouri man, who hospital officials would not identify, was upgraded from critical to serious condition Friday after receiving another heart from a donor in Billings, Mont., Thursday night, Ms. Shepard said.

The man probably will be moved out of intensive care Monday or Tuesday and discharged from the Missouri hospital in about two weeks, she said.

Dr. John Scott, a pathologist in the Wichita Falls General laboratory would not comment on how the error could have occurred.

"We have been doing an investigation and will continue to investigate this problem," Scott said. "At the appropriate time, we will have some findings and conclusions and release a statement."

The organ donor was the first or second from Wichita Falls General this year, Scott said. Last year, fewer than 10 donated organs at the hospital.

State health officials received permission from the federal agency that oversees Medicare to conduct their own investigation. The Health Department is under contract with the U.S. Health Care Financing Administration to investigate possible violations in Texas hospitals and nursing homes that receive Medicare.

An HCFA official said his agency would have ordered an investigation even if the state health department had not requested one.

In such cases, Health Department investigators try to find out whether a mistake is an isolated incident or an example of a chronic problem, said Dr. Ken Schneider, associate regional administrator for health standards.

"Let's say it's a human error," Schneider said. "It's not likely that would be viewed as a serious breach of institutional responsibility."

The hospital would have a chance to correct any problems, Schneider said.

"We wouldn't be able to simply walk in and immediately suspend or withhold Medicare," he said.

Wright: U.S. ambassadors in more danger than military

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — American ambassadors in foreign countries are in even more jeopardy of being targets of terrorist attacks than are U.S. military personnel overseas, U.S. House Majority Leader Jim Wright said Saturday.

The Texas Democrat said that although Congress last month approved an anti-terrorism measure to tighten security at American embassies and at airports, "there's a limit of what can be done by a free country" to combat terrorism.

Wright was in Indianapolis Saturday to speak at the annual Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner.

Before his speech, Wright put in a good word for each member of Indiana's Democratic congressional delegation and thanked the people of Indiana "for having produced and shared folks of the character and courage and intellect and integrity of the Indiana Democratic delegation."

As for his own campaign to replace the retiring Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill as House speaker, Wright said, "If the Lord be willin' and the creek don't rise...I feel comfortable about it."

Wright, elected majority leader in 1976, said he could not speculate about the outcome of this month's House vote on President Reagan's plan to send $100 million in aid to Nicaragua's Contra rebels.

The measure was passed in the Senate March 27 after the House rejected it the first time by a 222-210 vote.

"There will be an opportunity to offer amendments and alternatives, but I don't know how to it predict what will happen," Wright said at a news conference with U.S. Democratic Senate candidate Jill Long.

In reference to the president's recent remark that it was only a two-day drive from Managua, Nicaragua, to Harlingen, Texas, Wright laughed and said that the President "misspoke" when he made that comment in his campaign for Contra aid.

"I shudder to think the ordeal that would be encountered by anyone trying to drive from Managua to Harlingen in two days," Wright said.

"You would have to have an enormous amount of currency to bribe and barter crossing guards as well as traffic patrol," Wright joked. "You'd also need an awful lot of luck."

Wright added that in case Harlingen ever was the target of any armed invasion, "we would send one Texas Ranger in to stop 'em."

Body may be that of missing girl

CAMERON, La. (AP) — Authorities have found a body they say could be a 4-year-old girl reported missing six days ago from outside her Port Arthur home.

Investigator Donald Benoit of the Cameron Parish Sheriff's Department said authorities believe the body of a young, black, female child, discovered Saturday lying in a ditch along Louisiana Highway 82 about three miles east of the Texas-Louisiana state line, could be Natasha Michelle Small.

The girl's mother, Shelia Marie Jones, reported the child missing March 31.

Port Arthur police and FBI agents say they believe the child was kidnapped.

A passing motorist saw the child's fully-clothed body at 10:50 a.m. Saturday, Benoit said. Benoit said the body apparently had been lying in water for several days and immediate identification was not possible.

Task force seeks to draw Super Collider

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Representatives of a Big Spring, Midland, Odessa and San Angelo joint project have launched their campaign to get the Superconducting Super Collider with a 10-page brochure that touts the reasons for a West Texas location.

These cities are proposing to locate the SSC south of Midland, straddling the four counties of Midland, Glasscock, Upton and Reagan.

The Task Force and steering committee, which produced the brochure titled "The Golden West of Texas, A Natural Site to Study the Nature of the Universe," grew out of a March 7 conference at Angelo State University.

During a luncheon there, University of Texas System Chancellor Dr. Hans Mark explained why the stakes are high in the competition for the SSC project.

The work force would number about 2,000 with an annual payroll ranging from $300-$400 million, Mark said. Benefits from the project would be realized by everyone living within a three to four hour driving distance of the project. The chancellor said it is virtually impossible to calculate the "spinoff" that would be generated as a result of the project, but believes it would be significant.

Concerning the likelihood of the project being located in West Texas, Mark said the area has "some strong suits," — that the country is ideal, there is sparse population in the proposed area and low demand for real estate.

FROM THE standpoint of technology, Mark noted the Texas Accelerator Group, headed by Texas A&M physicist Dr. Peter McIntyre, has developed the superconductor magnets and other phases of the technology required to make the 100-mile concept work. The nearest competitor, he said, is the Fermilab in Illinois, which has proposed a 60-mile concept, but they have been unable to produce much larger magnets required for that concept.

Noting the project cost will be an important factor in the site location decision, Mark said work done by the McIntyre group, made up of scientists from the University of Texas, Texas A&M, Rice University and the University of Houston, should significantly reduce the preliminary estimate of $6 billion.

The SSC is a massive, highly sophisticated, atom smasher that will enable scientists to probe the secrets of the tiniest subatomic particles and, ultimately, discover the basic nature of the universe.

Mark said he doesn't expect the project to be funded by Congress until about 1988. In the meantime, the West Texas Chamber of Commerce Task Force has published the brochure as a first step in a serious effort to obtain location of the SSC project in the West Texas area.

It contends: "Central West Texas is the natural site for the Superconducting Super Collider Project. This is true because of the important factors which must be considered before locating such a project. Some of these factors are:

— COST of land
— Suitability of the land from a standpoint of topology, geology and hydrology
— Cost of construction at the site
— Local, regional and state support for the project
— Environmental impact
— Availability of private funds to reduce the federal investment required to build the project
— Allowing sufficient area for optimizing the size of the proposed ring
— Providing quality social and living environments for scientists doing research at the site.

Some of the "demonstrated advantages" revealed by research done by the consortia of universities, indicate "the project can be built for $2.3 billion at this (Central West Texas) location, rather that the $4 to $6 billion required for other sites."

The topography of the proposed site, the study contends, makes it "nearly ideal for construction," because "it is table-top flat" and elevations vary on an average of only 20 feet along the ring's perimeter, which would allow "less expensive 'cut-and-cover' excavation, rather than tunneling."

Other advantages are few surface obstacles, such as houses, buildings, utility distribution lines and roads, that would hinder construction and increase costs, plus few landowners in the area.

Concerning geography and the quality of life, the brochure points out the Garden City site is midway between Dallas-Fort Worth and El Paso and near two of the nation's major east-west and north-south routes — Interstate 20 and U.S. 87 (Interstate 27).

"THE AREA is a rich mix of the old and new," states the brochure. "Pickups and Porsches, ranchers and research, continental dining and barbecue, burgundy and beer. Ballroom dancing and the Cotton-eyed Joe. Wide open spaces and skyscraper canyons. Modern architecture and the world's most exact reproduction of a 400-year-old Shakespearean theatre. It's the best of both worlds."

Educational opportunities and facilities are varied and plentiful within a 70-mile radius of the proposed site, according to the brochure. "With a total of five colleges and junior colleges, plus outstanding opportunities for vocational training, an institute for the deaf and a regional academic health center. The University of Texas of the Permian Basin offers both upper-level and graduate education in its colleges of arts and education, business administration and science and engineering. Angelo State University has one of the top ROTC programs in the nation, among other distinctions."

Climate is described as "excellent," with long summers, moderate winters and a "pleasant 64-degree average annual temperature, coupled with "a high average" of 316 sunny days annually.

Recreational opportunities abound, according to the brochure, with freshwater fishing, hunting, skiing, horse racing and many other outdoor activities available within reasonable driving distances.

Cultural activities cited include the Globe of the Great Southwest in Odessa, Big Spring's 5,000 capacity outdoor amphitheater, the Midland-Odessa Symphony Orchestra and Chorale and the San Angelo Civic Ballet.

THE BROCHURE observes that the area "is also a trade center within the Permian Basin, which holds almost one-fourth of the nation's known crude oil and gas reserves and features a diversified economic mix of energy-related industries, electronics manufacturing, agriculture, ranching, professional and financial services and plastics, steel and dairy products."

Airline service from Midland Regional Airport, located within 20 minutes of the proposed SSC site, provides daily non-stop service to Denver, Los Angeles, Dallas/Ft. Worth, Houston, Austin and Albuquerque and the San Angelo airport has two regional airlines.

The brochure summarizes the reasons for locating the SSC on the proposed site, saying they combine to make Central West Texas "the natural site to study the basic nature of the universe."

Image important to veteran Dallas County DA

By KIT FRIEDEN

DALLAS (AP) — Image is important to District Attorney Henry Wade, a veteran trial lawyer who won't voluntarily let himself be photographed chomping on one of his famous cigars.

Wade explains that peccadillo quite seriously, just before shooting a brown stream of tobacco juice into a deskside spittoon. People don't like to see a man chewing on a cigar, he says.

Such bits of insight into human nature have helped Wade hold the elected job of Dallas County district attorney for the past 35 years. They also have helped him win every case he personally has prosecuted, securing the death penalty 29 out of 30 times, including in the trial of Jack Ruby.

"Trial work is 90 percent human psychology, deciding what makes 'em tick," says the gravelly voiced 71-year-old prosecutor, who will retire this December.

Psychology is what Wade has used in picking both juries and young lawyers for his staff, who have done all the courtroom work for him the past 12 years.

In trying Ruby, the man who shot and killed Lee Harvey Oswald — the accused assassin of President John F. Kennedy — Wade's psychology prompted him to evoke the image of country lawyer vs. the flamboyant "king of torts," Melvin Belli.

Belli handled civil, not criminal, cases, Wade noted, and "he knew nothing about the procedure in Texas."

"We took the approach they had the greatest lawyer in the world representing the defense and they (the jury) would feel sorry for me, a poor little country attorney," Wade recalled with satisfaction. "He (Belli) called me a cornball or something."

But Wade was able to convince jurors Ruby's act was premeditated, and not a crime of passion, and won the death penalty. The case was overturned on appeal and sent for retrial — a fact Belli contends is proof he really was the winner — but Ruby died before he could be retried.

Phil Burleson, who served as defense co-counsel in the Ruby case, said emotions were high in Dallas after the Kennedy's 1963 assassination.

"It was hard to get jurors who didn't want to strike out at someone for President Kennedy," he said.

In a telephone interview, Belli called Wade "very rough" but "gentlemanly" in the courtroom.

"He was a very tough prosecutor. He had I don't know how many homicide executions, and he gloried in those, and Dallas got what it wanted," Belli said. "Despite his belief in capital punishment, I still admire him for doing his job and his tenacity and giving Dallas what it wanted. I don't like a milquetoast for a district attorney."

Wade says he has never had a moment's regret about the people he helped send to death.

"They're all people that don't deserve to live. I think they all needed electrocuting," he said.

Burleson generously credits Wade's tough law-and-order attitude with helping keep crime in Dallas down.

"No telling how many thousands of crimes have not been committed in Dallas because criminals knew Wade was tough," he said.

Not everyone believes Wade has always been on the right side, though — especially those who point to the 1982 armed robbery conviction of Lenell Geter, a young black engineer in nearby Greenville.

Geter was sentenced by a Dallas judge to life in prison although he had no prior criminal record. His coworkers believed him innocent and brought the case to the attention of the news media, with the story eventually being aired on CBS' "60 Minutes."

After discrepancies were brought to public attention and four of five eyewitnesses identified another man as the robber, Wade dropped the charges against Geter, despite Wade's own uncertainty about the man's innocence.

"We checked out his story. It had a lot of holes in it. A lot of little things were inconsistent," Wade said.

On the other hand, he said, "there was no question the press had raised doubts. One case is not going to make or break the criminal justice system."

Geter declined comment about Wade's handling of the case. He and five other engineers, who also were investigated for possible criminal activity by Dallas-area police agencies, have filed a federal lawsuit against Wade and five agencies alleging institutionalized racial discrimination.

Burleson, who worked as an assistant DA to Wade for three years before he helped defend Ruby, calls Wade a "powerful prosecutor" who knows people.

"He knows what jurors are interested in, knows what it takes to impress jurors," Burleson said.

A devoted family man with five children, Wade says he simply likes people — and that's what has kept him from accepting a judgeship all these years.

Three-year-old boy bitten by snake

AUSTIN (AP) — A 3-year-old boy who was bitten twice in the face by a rattlesnake on a day-care center playground remained in a critical condition Saturday at Brackenridge Hospital in Austin, officials said.

Kirk Fulk, director of the Austin Preschool Academy in North Austin, said the Kenneth Kamp was bitten about 10:30 a.m. Friday.

"There's no way of telling what happened. He was on the playground and was bitten," Fulk said.

One of three teachers supervising the children discovered the attack when the child cried out, Fulk said. The snake was later killed.

The child was taken first to the Round Rock Community Hospital, north of Austin, then transferred by helicopter ambulance to Brackenridge.

The child underwent surgery and was placed in intensive care, a hospital spokesman said.

Case for energy

If the economic devastation wrought in certain areas of the United States because of falling oil prices doesn't do anything else, it should convince a number of Americans of the need for a realistic national energy policy.

That's something this country doesn't have now and never has had, with the exception of the feeble, misguided attempt to formulate such a policy in the Jimmy Carter administration that proved extremely detrimental to the oil industry. The lack of an energy policy is threatening to once again take the nation down that treacherous road of manipulation by foreign governments — notably Saudi Arabia and other oil-producing nations abroad. As the sharp and rapid decline of oil prices since the beginning of the year aptly demostrates, when foreign oil producers pull the strings, the U.S. economy still dances.

It does that because there has been no concerted effort to make the nation independent in energy. In the years since the Arab oil embargo of 1973 graphically demonstrated America's dependence on foreign oil suppliers, the United States has responded to its energy needs in various ways. The initial response, of course, was to prevent domestic oil producers from reaping so-called "windfall profits" while protecting Northeastern cheap energy interests.

During the time since, every energy proposal enacted has been an attempt to keep oil producers from making "big" profits rather than an acknowledgement that the production of energy may entail energy producers realizing good profits.

In a sense it has become a national battle between the energy "haves" and the energy "have nots" and national interests have been pushed aside. Is that reasonable? Doesn't it make more sense to plot a course to energy independence utilizing all available energy-producing technologies and to follow that course unwaveringly in the interest of breaking free of the stranglehold of foreign energy producers?

Through the years, many oil producers in Midland and elsewhere have said that such a course was the only rational way to approach the "energy crisis". In fact, few oil producers — if any — would contend oil is the only source of energy this nation should use. But the shift of American energy dependence from one which relies primarily on domestically-produced oil and imported oil to one that utilizes all available energy sources produced domestically cannot come about overnight. It cannot come about at all with regional interest advocacy.

That's the problem. Congressmen from the Northeast have resisted an energy policy in which domestic producers have experienced large profits. Unaware that incentive is the fuel that drives a domestic energy industry, the entire energy policy of the Northeast is geared to regulating how much money is made by oil producers, rather than producing enough oil to free us from the clutches of foreign oil producers.

Thus, the quest for a rational, long-term, national energy policy has been pushed aside in favor of regional interests.

Now the cost of that decision is evident. Americans are "paying" and will continue to pay in some manner at the whim of foreign oil producers until this country's leaders finally agree to pursue a realistic energy policy.

Another View: Deaver's action ill

At first glance the latest grumbling about Michael Deaver, lobbyist, sounds like nasty nitpicking. Sure, he was one of President Reagan's chief aides until last May, and yes, he recently went to see the head of the president's Office of Management and Budget to push the B-1 bomber, made by a client. But so what?

OMB is not in the White House; it's a separate agency. Deaver did not work on the B-1 while he was in the White House, and in a few weeks he'll have finished the one-year quarantine against lobbying former colleagues in government. Besides, Deaver says, the visit was only "informational," to bring Budget Director Miller up to date on what he's been doing on the B-1.

Technically, Deaver is probably right. Lawyers will help him draw fine lines between one side of the street and the other. Even so, his behavior looks rotten and smells worse.

While formally distinct from the White House, OMB is the president's management agency, in charge of the president's budget and housed inside the White House compound.

That Deaver never worked on the B-1 does not free him to urge building more B-1 bombers, on behalf of his client, Rockwell International, at the expense of the manufacturers of the Stealth bomber. He is not acting here like an alumnus of the Pentagon trading on aeronautical expertise or old friendships. He's trading on a present friendship, with the president of the United States.

And why, coming to Deaver's "informational" point, would any budget director want to know about his activities concerning strategic bombers? Is he expert in budget priorities? No. He is expert in using the President's resonance, not for conviction but for money, pots and pots of money.

Deaver is hardly the first official to have turned lobbyist — but is probably the highest-ranking one in recent years. That means he sets a powerful example and casts a darker shadow. Just as the implicit influence of the president rubs off on him favorably, so does his use of that influence rub off on the president, unfavorably. A wiser man would demonstrate more regard, if not for the office then at least for the friend who occupies it.

The secret new Stealth bomber is designed to be hard to see by radar as it penetrates an enemy government's defenses. Michael Deaver penetrates the defenses of our own government. He, too, is often hard to see; but easy to smell. When will the president stop holding his nose?

Nicaraguan coalition offers 'solution'

WASHINGTON — The agonizing debate over U.S. aid to the Nicaraguan contras appears to be impossible to resolve in a way that will satisfy both the Reagan administration and its critics. The reason is that neither side in the debate has a monopoly on truth and wisdom.

Jack Anderson

Desirable as it would be to get rid of the Sandinista regime in Managua, or at least force it to back off its headlong rush toward Marxist tyranny, the contras aren't the ones who can do the job. The Reagan administration's faith in the contras is sadly misplaced, as our reporter Jon Lee Anderson points out in dispatches from Central America.

The plain truth that cannot be camouflaged by any amount of blue smoke and mirrors is that, after five years of trying, the contras have failed utterly to ignite the massive uprising among the Nicaraguan people that they have predicted so confidently for so long — and without which they cannot prevail.

It doesn't really matter whether this failure is due to the contras' singular military ineptitude or to their dubious origin as a Somocista-tainted creature of the CIA. The fact is that in all their sporadic incursions there has been no sign of the popular support they're counting on to win.

Unfortunately, the net result of the contra operations has been to give the Sandinistas an excuse for building up their military strength with aid from the Soviet bloc. Managua now has an army of 60,000, easily able to fend off attacks by the contras, who number perhaps 12,000 but have never had more than half that many in action inside Nicaragua on their best days.

Since 1982, the contras have received more than $80 million from the CIA, $27 million in "humanitarian aid" from Congress and about $15 million in private funding through the World Anti-Communist League. Yet they have never made any serious invasion of Nicaragua or managed to hold onto so much as a sliver of Nicaraguan territory. They remain nothing more than an irritant to the Sandinistas — and a tailor-made excuse for emergency decrees and pleas for world sympathy by Managua.

There is more fault to be laid at the contra leaders' door: Like poor Blanche DuBois, they are dependent on the kindness of strangers — the Hondurans — yet in five years they have failed to develop either an amicable relationship with their reluctant hosts or to secure safe alternative supply lines for their necessities. Their aid is channeled through the Honduran army, with the predictable result that serious "skimming" is routine.

So hapless have the contras become in their isolation that last fall, when the Honduran government imposed a ban on U.S. supply flights to the contra camps to avoid embarrassment over the contras' clearly illegal presence in Honduras, the doughty guerrilla commanders raised piteous cries that their fighters were barefoot. That, they announced, was why they had had to call off the war temporarily.

What makes this pathetic alibi particularly humiliating is that right next door in El Salvador an anti-government guerrilla group — the leftist FMLN — has been operating for years completely inside their own country. The 6,000 to 8,000 Salvadoran rebels are outnumbered at least eight-to-one by the army they're fighting, and unlike the contras in Honduras, they have no sanctuary to which they can retreat across the border in the event of a military setback. They even fight the Honduran army occasionally.

Interestingly enough, our reporter learned that the Salvadoran rebels' footwear of choice is Honduran-made boots. How they get them is anyone's guess, but their scrounging skill is obviously far ahead of any that the Nicaraguan contras possess.

Is there no choice for the United States, between supporting the Keystone Kontras or letting Nicaragua become a permanent Soviet satellite?

There is.

The BOS (from the Spanish initials for Southern Opposition Bloc) is a Nicaraguan coalition of four popularly based labor, professional and political groups with support inside Nicaragua and among the exile community. BOS is solidly anti-Sandinista, but is untainted by ties to the Somoza dictatorship and its hated national guard.

GEORGE F. WILL

'Batter up!' sounds promising only in ash

LOUISVILLE — I don't want to wax mystical and metaphysical about this, but...

Stop. I want to wax. If an American boy can't get all worked up about a genuine "powerized" Louisville Slugger baseball bat, what use is the First Amendment's guarantee of the free exercise of religion?

George F. Will

When Thomas Aquinas was ginning up proofs of God's existence, he neglected to mention the ash tree. It is the source of the Louisville Slugger, and hence is conclusive evidence that a kindly Mind superintends the universe.

The Big Bang got the universe rolling and produced among the celestial clutter one planet, Earth, enveloped in an atmosphere that causes rain to patter on Pennsylvania ridgetops where ash trees grow. They grow surrounded by other trees that protect the ash trees from windtwisting and force them to grow straight toward sunlight. The result is wood with the perfect strength required for the musical "crack!" that is the sound the cosmos makes each spring when it clears its throat and says, "We made it."

'Tis spring and a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of ... well, to that, too, but also to baseball and its instruments. Baseballs are made in Haiti and many gloves are made in the Orient, but the bats that put people on the path to Cooperstown are made, one at a time, where you would expect, in mid-America.

Wood lathes at Hillerich & Bradsby's "Slugger Park" plant take just eight seconds to make a bat for the masses. But craftsmen — the junior member of the work force has 17 years seniority — take longer to make bats for artists like the Baltimore Orioles' Mike Young (the 1986 American League MVP — you read it first here). The bat-makers must take care. Ted Williams once returned a batch of bats because the grips did not feel right. They were found to be 51000 of an inch wrong.

Hillerich & Bradsby charges $12 for each major leaguer's bat, and loses about $13 on the deal. They do it for the prestige. They must have been relieved when Orlando Cepeda retired. He used to discard a bat after getting a hit. His reasoning (in which I find no flaw) was that there are only so many hits in a bat; you can not tell how many there are in a bat; and he did not want to risk using a bat from which all the hits had been taken. (My father, although he used to teach logic, does not understand that, or this: It is dreadful to win a spring-training game, because a team is only going to win so many games in a year and why waste one in Florida?)

The production of real bats here has declined because of a monstrous development — the popularity of aluminum bats. Hillerich & Bradsby makes such ersatz Sluggers, but commits that unnatural act in southern California, a region of novelties and regrets.

Colleges, those incubators of heresies, use aluminum bats for a grotesque reason: They last longer. But immortality is not a virtue in things that should not exist at all. Because metal bats are livelier than wooden bats, they distort the game. Scoring soars, 200-minute games become common and some teams — yes, teams — have batting averages over .350. (In 1979, Wichita State batted .384.) Aluminum bats in the big leagues would produce every fan's ultimate nightmare: a blizzard of asterisks in the record book, denoting records set after baseball became subservient to the science of metalurgy.

People who will not recognize tradition as a sufficient argument should bow to aesthetic as well as scientific considerations. Aluminum hitting horsehide makes a sound as grating as fingernails scraping a blackboard. If the sound of the aluminum bat were a food, it would be lima beans. Imagine a balmy summer evening, the portable radio on the front porch emitting the soft cicada-like sizzle of crowd noise. The announcer says: "Here's the pitch — and the runner is off at the ping of the bat!" "Ping"? The prosecution rests.

A. Ray Smith never rests. Louisville, like renaissance Florence, is not especially large but is immoderately drenched with the finest art of its century, which in the case of Louisville is baseball. A. Ray (to know him for five minutes is to be on a first name — well, initial and first name — basis) is the reason God made Oklahoma, where he did well in what Oklahomans call the oil bidness. Now he is doing good in Kentucky, giving the community baseball.

RUSSELL BAKER

Being a 'role model' isn't all it appears

NEW YORK — The trouble with baseball is that it believes its own advertising. How else are we to explain the constant talk about "role models"?

Russell Baker

Whenever a baseball player is arrested, somebody says the poor devil's conduct is doubly reprehensible because a baseball player is a "role model" and "role models" ought to be better than the rest of us.

Baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth talks this way to justify acting as prosecutor, jury and judge against ballplayers suspected of using narcotics. Judges, who are supposed to have better sense than the rest of us, have been known to throw the book at baseball players, on ground that "role models" who go astray deserve more jail time than normal rascals.

Even sportswriters, who may be getting sloppy now that Red Smith is no longer around to dispel undue piety and nonsense, occasionally write about the ball-playing "role model."

Do young people nowadays really want to grow up to be like ballplayers? Surely not. Children, being more observant than adults, will notice certain unattractive aspects of baseball life that escape the attention of judges, sportswriters and baseball commissioners.

For example, ballplayers spend half their working lives away from home, living out of suitcases in hotels where there is nothing to do but loaf around the lobby until it gets dark enough to play ball.

What child fancies spending half his life hanging around hotel lobbies? It might seem interesting to judges, and must have once seemed fascinating to embryonic sportswriters, since they now share the players' travel agonies. (Maybe the handful of kids who take ballplayers as "role models" is the same handful that grows up to be sportswriters.)

Today's children have been educated by television. They know about temptations awaiting men who are constantly away from home with nothing to do but loaf around hotel lobbies, most of which have a bar close to the coffee shop. Those temptations don't delight children. Children prefer to be home all yearround by a TV set.

Children, being shrewd, also notice that ballplayers are constantly being uprooted from the home where they could otherwise spend the nice half of their working lives. One day they are sitting in a hotel lobby in Cleveland looking forward to going home to St. Louis for a few days, when somebody phones with news that they have been sold and orders to move to Seattle by Friday.

You can imagine how repugnant this must seem to children. Children are conservative. They like to stay wherever they are, instead of having to master a new cable TV setup.

Children are also idealistic. Doing anything dishonorable makes them suffer miserably, and from watching baseball they know people involved in it will probably have to do dishonorable things sooner or later.

Suppose, for instance, children really behaved in accord with the "role model" theory, and fashioned their lives after a fine baseball player, learned to hit the curve on the outside corner, acquired great agents who could make the bosses pay them $2 million per summer for playing for the home team and for being super role models for all the hometown kids who came out to root, root, root for the home team....

Suppose all that, and then suppose the team owner says to the youngsters who have taken the "role model" route to glory, "Phooey to the hometown kids; I can get more dough by moving this team to a new hometown with a bigger sap population to root, root, root for the home team."

A child pondering baseball can imagine that happening to a team on which he becomes a nationally famous role model. That child, with typical youthful American perspicacity, can readily see that he will be contractually obliged to join the owner's dishonorable abandonment of the hometown kids in the squalid pursuit of fatter profits.

American children are smart enough to know that nowadays. Many of them have been hometown kids who have seen club owners abandon them for a new crop of saps. Children are pained when forced to connive in dishonorable behavior. They are not likely to look to baseball for role models.

In my own childhood I admired baseball players extravagantly, particularly the insouciance with which they constantly spit chewing tobacco. Most boys my age did, but I can't think of a single one who took to a life of tobacco chewing. Instead, we took up cigarettes to be like our real "role models" in the movies, just as today's youngsters probably dream of the machine pistols and sweaty pectorals they see modeled by Rambo and the Miami Vice gang.

Bill Modisett

There's a disturbing trend in a segment of the American population that advocates crawling inside a hole in the ground and pulling the grass over us as a nation where international conflict is concerned. Most recently that trend was in evidence after Moammar Khadafy drew an imaginary line across the Gulf of Sidra and dared Uncle Sam to step across.

Then he had the audacity to fire missiles at some of our aircraft and, well, the rest is history.

On one hand, I'm not overwhelmed by the United States' decision to provoke Khadafy into a confrontation. I think in the long run that move will come back to haunt us in the form of increased hatred of Americans and terrorism against innocent people by Islamic states.

But on the other hand I believe it is cowardly and ill-advised to run from a fight and that's exactly what those Americans are saying who counsel head-in-the-sand isolationism.

Their attitude seems to be: "If we'll just stay out of the world's hair and quit picking on everyone else, those other nations will leave us alone and we'll be OK."

Good thought, except for one problem: It won't work. What those Americans are saying, in effect, is that all the problems being encountered by this nation around the globe are primarily a result of our interference in other nations' internal affairs.

Now I'll concede that such meddling on our part has occurred and may still be occurring to a degree, some of it justified, some not. And a people or a nation can't escape the repercussions of its sins.

But hiding in the sand won't get us out of the Islamic war spreading like wildfire in far-flung corners of the world. Elimination of American values — the very American way of life — is the object of that war. And it is a war whether we want to recognize it or not. Any time people are being killed in carefully orchestrated assaults that are government-supported — whether termed terrorism or whatever — you are in a war.

Don't get involved? Don't shoot back when Khadafy's soldiers fire missiles at our aircraft? I think that's a little stupid.

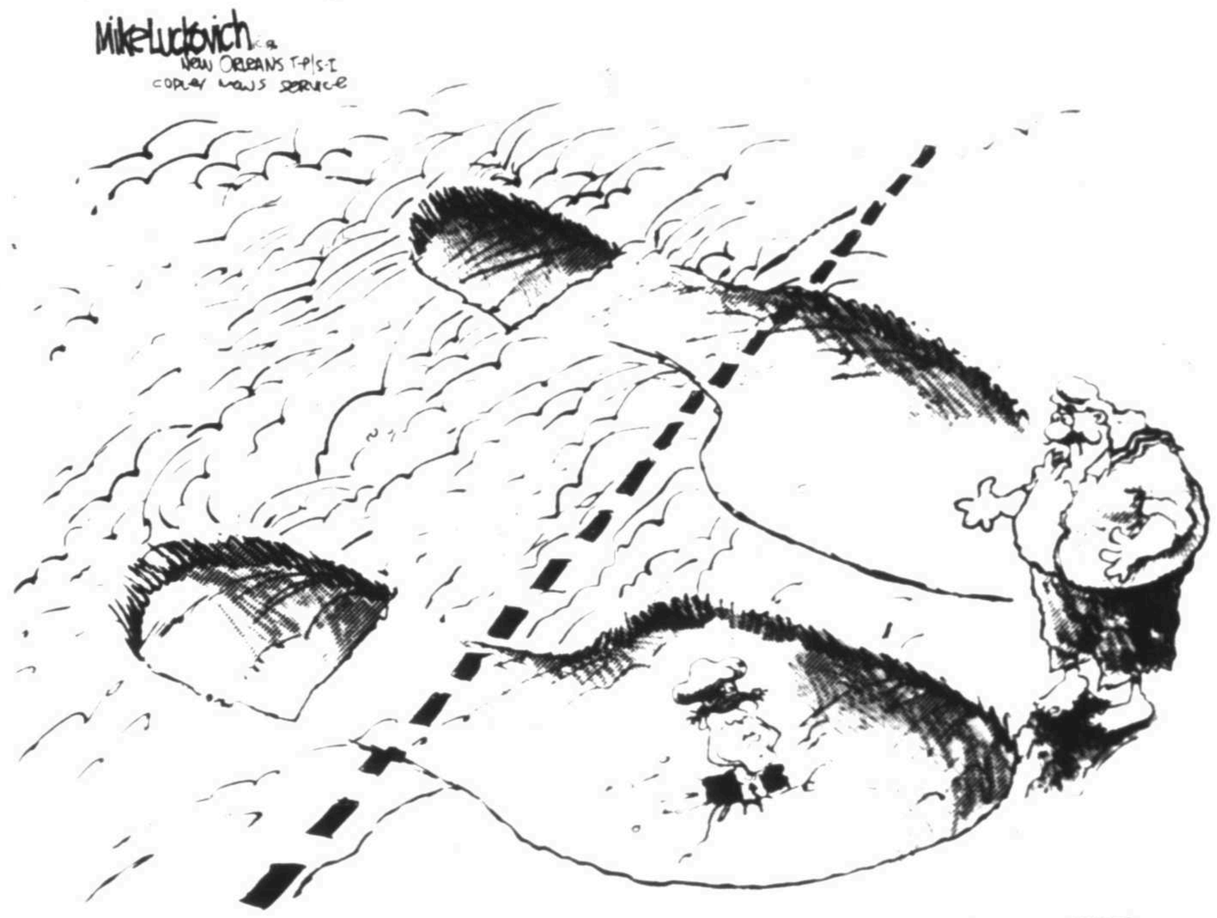

We probably shouldn't have provoked Khadafy, but we certainly can't run when he confronts us. If we do, he'll only come after us like the mad dog he is.

Americans have to stand up for decency and our way of life. No one else will do that for us. This Gulf of Sidra conflict is just another chapter in a war of survival that will continue in the future.

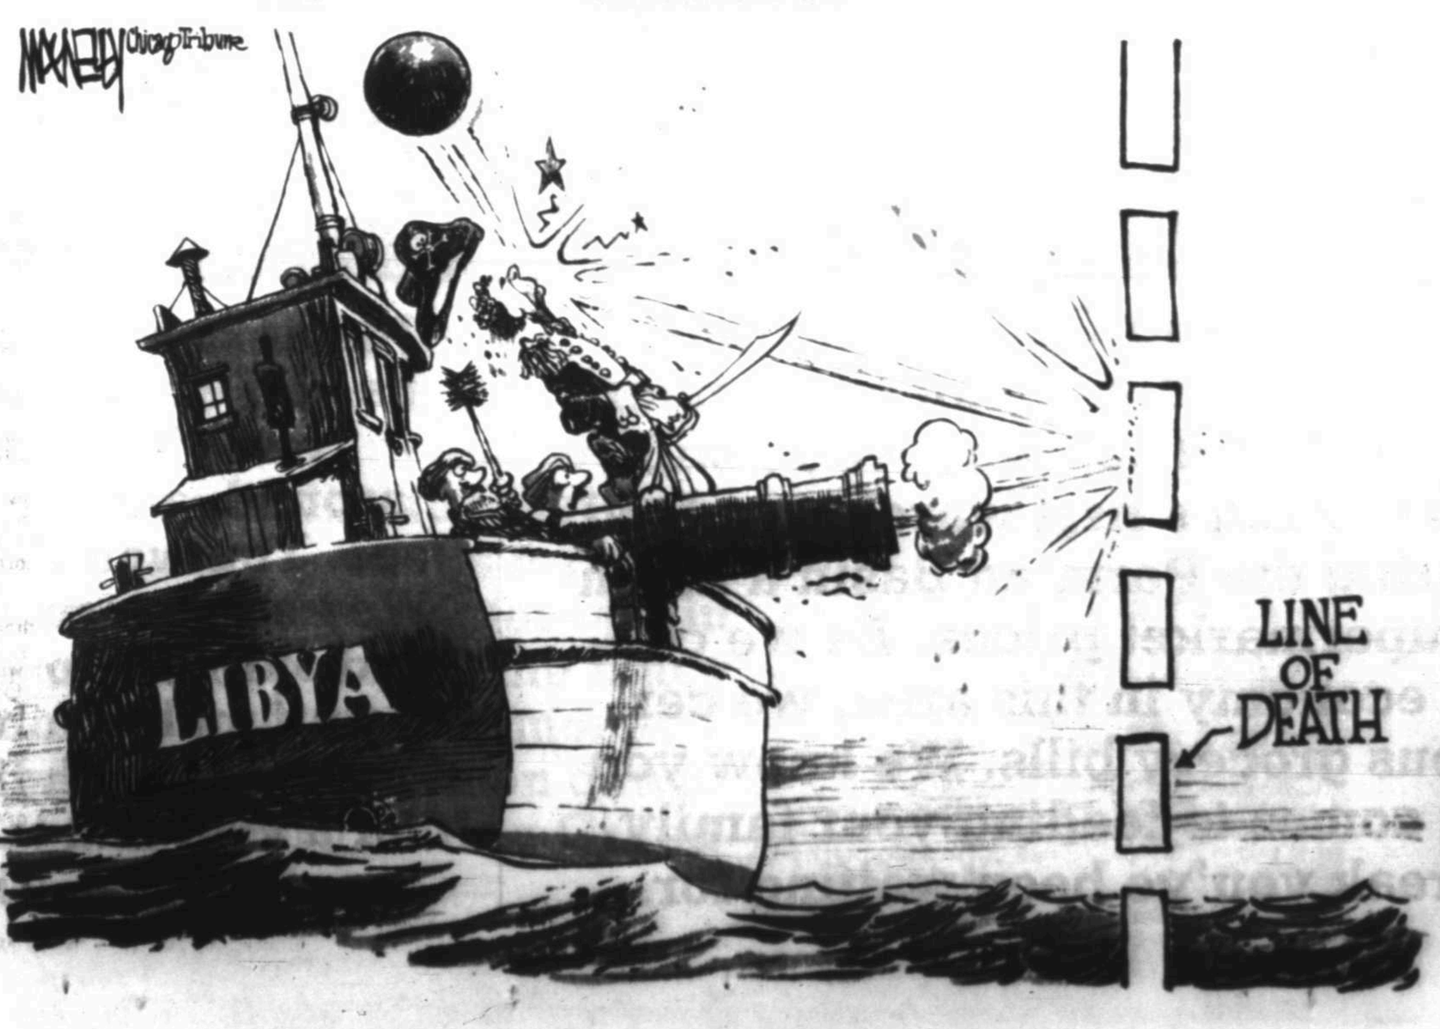

Hiding our heads in the sand only keeps us from seeing our enemy approaching.

City should be pulling together, not fighting

We have just attended the MISD school board meeting of March 25. We would like to share our views on this subject.

With the current economic situation in Midland, this is a time when our community should be uniting together. Instead, we are fighting high school against high school and neighborhood against neighborhood. With the possibility of a declining school enrollment, which can best be seen this September, we wonder if it wouldn't be more responsible to wait until next fall for a more realistic picture of our actual and projected enrollments.

If the school board feels determined to move the boundary lines this spring, we hope they will carefully consider the impact each proposed plan would have on our whole community. Maintaining two separate but equal high schools is a tremendous challenge, and we admire the board for taking this attitude.

According to the reports on the "Comparison of the High Schools" and the study done by Larry Lusby, it seems very clear that the two high schools are about as equal as possible in areas of academic excellence, extracurricular participation by students, and in the amount of parental support. The discrepancy between the two schools appears in the number of students projected over the next five years and the percentages of the ethnic populations at each school.

The plans offered by Doctors Taebel and Mailey seem to correct numbers in each high school. These plans balance according to population percentages, but the other parameters for equal schools have become much further apart. The question seems to be: Do we want equal numbers at the cost of equal schools?

It bothered us greatly to hear the comment at the school board meeting that Midland High needed higher socio-economic areas. The present equality of the two schools in all areas but numbers would certainly discount this argument.

Since the northern and western growth areas will have a major impact on the school system, we feel that both of these areas should be shared equally. Each area offers potential assets to the school system. If they are not divided equally, our community will probably be fighting this same battle a few years from now. The growth potential to the west is greater in land area and will probably develop faster as these homes will be affordable for more families.

We are not opposed to boundary changes if they are justified, but we urge waiting until September to see what impact the oil recession will have on our projected school enrollment. If a change is required, care should be taken to not just balance numbers. Other parameters such as academic achievement, extracurricular participation and parental support are equal, if not more important, to a school's success.

Ott's Sunday column highlight of week

Gary Ott's Sunday column is always one of the highlights of my week. I read it before anything else in the paper. He makes me laugh out loud.

His recent one about tanning in the nude was so funny I clipped it out and mailed it to my mother in St. Louis who, in turn, mailed it to her sister in Joplin, Mo. We all thought it was hilarious. Tell him to keep up the good work. At least one reader appreciates his efforts.

Grandchildren take precedence over events

SAN SIMEON — We came out to California to visit our children and grandchildren for an Easter visit.

When my wife, Austine, and I arrived, the grandchildren were under the weather. But like kids everywhere, they recovered quickly and have joined us here.

It's very pleasant to be with my son Will, who as you know is publisher of our San Francisco Examiner and his wife, Nan, along with their children. The weather here is balmy. Spring has sprung.

Thankfully, as this is being written, the world seems to be somewhat less hectic this week than most recently.

So, I hope that you will understand if I take off completely for now and resume my review of events next Sunday.

CARPET SURFACES

Each carpet texture offers specific wear advantages. Level loop pile has a surface of uniform uncut lops. This surface has many advantages. In tweed colorations, it conceals footmarks and soilage. The denser the surface, the better it will wear. It is particularly recommended for heavy-traffic areas and commercial installations. With cut pile plush, the entire surface is sheared to produce a smooth, plush effect. It gives a room a more luxurious look. This texture is subject to shading, which many people feel adds interest. Twist is an all-cut pile surface made from yarn that has been tightly twisted. The twist is set by a special heating treatment. This firm texture wears very well.

Electric utility companies spread rapidly in the 1890s. Municipally owned utilities predominantly supplied street lighting and trolley services, and reached their peak share of total power generation, about 8 percent, at the turn of the century.

PERSONAL USE OF VACATION HOME

Under today's tax laws, if you are claiming your vacation home as an investment property, you are restricted to personal use of no more than 14 days or 10% of the annual number of days the property is rented. If you exceed this number of "personal use days", you'll lose many of the important investment deductions, such as depreciation and utility and maintenance costs.

This 14 day limit of personal use can be extended if the visits are for the purpose of maintenance and upkeep. If this is your case, be sure you can document the fact that you actually did the maintenance work during that extra time period.

In the past, if you brought a relative or friend along, it was automatically considered personal. Now you can bring the whole family, as long as you can prove that you did maintenance work during the visit. Since the IRS is always looking for their share of taxes, you must be prudent about the number of visits and the timing. It is doubtful that they'll buy visits every weekend during the rental season. Talk to your C.P.A. or Tax Attorney for more information.

At 3 p.m. today in Chaparral Center, 20 of the nation's most talented junior college basketball players will participate in an All-Star Game matching 10 players from Texas against 10 from the rest of the United States. MC coach Jerry Stone will be directing the Texas All-Stars, including Chaps Ricky Grace and Eddie Frazier. The game is being sponsored by the Midland Jaycees. Tickets are available at the door for $6 each. I can guarantee fans will be watching a number of future Division I players and possibly some who'll be playing in the NBA in three years.

The gallery, which is located in the Allison Fine Arts Building, is open 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday, and 1 to 5 p.m. Sunday.

Just returned from a successful series of matches in Florida during the Spring Break, the Chap tennis teams swing back to conference competition Tuesday when they go to Levelland for matches against South Plains College. The women's team then goes to Las Cruces Thursday for a three-day invitational tournament hosted by New Mexico State University.

•••

Friday there's conference action for the MC golfers. They'll be in Roswell for the conference tourney hosted by New Mexico Military Institute. This is the first of three spring conference tournaments. The Chaps placed first among the conference teams after the three fall events and are taking aim on the conference title. Tourneys at Odessa and at New Mexico Junior College also are on the spring schedule. NMJC also is hosting the Region V Tournament.

•••

Midland College art instructors John Harmon and Warren Taylor have been spreading MC's name recently through several shows and events. Harmon was a panelist at the San Antonio convention of the National Council of Education for the Ceramic Arts. He also has six new ceramic sculptures on display at the University of San Antonio show "Texas: Past and Present." Taylor currently is represented in three shows. He has two large drawings in the Amarillo Art Center competitive show; another piece in "Texas Visions" organized by the Houston Art League for a state travel circuit; and another work in "Totally Texas," a show of Texas artists organized by the Nimbus Gallery of Dallas.

•••

Dr. Jack Schneider, chairman of the communications studies division, has written an article about 50 years of Indian fiction that's being published in the next issue of the Cross-Ties Review. The article is entitled "From Laughing Boy to Indian Giver."

•••

Gallagher brings his own brand of humor to Chaparral Center

From Staff Reports

Tickets, priced at $12 for reserved seating, may be purchased at Endless Horizons and Chaparral Center box office. At this time, 4,200 of the 4,500 seats have been sold.

"In the beginning, we were only setting for 4,000 because we felt that 6,000 seats put people too far from the stage," said Mike Stevens, director of Chaparral Center. "We are moving the stage up so that the 4,000 ticket holders will have good seats. Tickets have sold so well that I talked the promoter into hanging Gallagher's sound so we are able to increase the number of seats we are selling. As of Wednesday night we had about 300 seats to sell. It's definitely going to be a sellout."

Stevens has a suggestion for those sitting close to the stage.

"I advise people to bring protective gear, especially those who are sitting in the front," said Stevens. He laughed, then added, "I particularly enjoy watching Gallagher in action, and I know those who are familiar with his routines know why they need at least a rain coat, if they are sitting in the front rows."

Can Texas beat the USA?

The United Bank National Junior College Athletic Association Basketball Classic at 3 p.m. today in the Al Langford Chaparral Center will settle the issue, perhaps, but for many in the stands, it won't be so much who wins or loses, but how they play the game.

College coaches will be taking the opportunity to scan the jewelry case of talent for some gems to help them next year on the four-year college level. Signing is date April 9, so this, in many cases, is a last look.

And in some instances, it's a case of the players making up their minds after narrowing the field down to a handful of schools.

NJCAA All-Stars

With only one day of workouts, it will be pretty much of a case of doing what comes naturally for today's all-stars.

The USA will have the height advantage with 6-9 Harvey Grant, Independence CC, Kan.; 6-7 Melvin Faust, Miami Dade North CC; 6-7 Tyrone Howard, New Mexico Military Institute; and 6-7 Kenny Reynolds, Chowan College, Murfreesboro, N.C., give Coach Leon Henderson's squad depth as well as size.

Texas will counter with 6-9 Robert Nash, Kilgore JC, Kilgore; 6-7 Jeff Chumbley, Angelina College, Lufkin; 6-6 Eddie Frazier, Midland College; and 6-6 Wendell Perkins, Jacksonville College, Jacksonville; and Edward Wright, 6-6 from Alvin CC, Alvin, for Coach Jerry Stone of MC.

An idea of the kind of talent lured into Midland for this game is hinted at by the four-year colleges looking in this direction.

The USA's Chris Blocker, 6-4 College of South Idaho, is being courted by UCLA, Marquette, Kentucky, NC State and UTEP. Reynolds is pondering Villanova, Connecticut, Old Dominion and East Carolina. Mitch Richmond, 6-5 from Moberly, Mo., the nation's No. 1 ranked JC team for much of the season, is torn between Missouri, Miami and Oklahoma.

Already committed from the USA are 6-3 Darryl McDonald, Westchester, N.Y., to Texas A&M. Central Arizona's 6-3 Leonard Jackson has signed with Centenary.

MC's 6-1 Ricky Grace, has SMU, Oklahoma and Missouri on his list, while 6-5 James Dawn of Western Texas College in Snyder is looking at Wake Forest, Arkansas-Little Rock and Indiana State.

Six-four Tim Scott, Lon Morris, is considering Arkansas, UALR, Oklahoma and Iowa. Perkins' possibles are Oregon, S.F. Austin, Centenary and Texas A&M. Cisco's 6-0 Cedric Ellis is leaning toward Centenary.

Already committed are 6-3 Alvin Hicks, WTC, to Virginia Commonwealth; Howard to Eastern Kentucky; Wright to Michigan State.

In tracking Midland's Texas League attendance and its steady growth down through the years, an unexpected discovery was made about the popularity of the Class AA circuit at the gate over the years.

Texas League baseball, which opens its 98th season Tuesday, is more popular and draws better than it did during the era of the "big cities."

With its highest total attendance in 31 years, the new look Texas League outdrew the last year of the Albuquerque, Dallas/Fort Worth, Memphis, Little Rock, San Antonio, Amarillo, Shreveport TL of 1971 by close to half a million fans. And, as TL President Carl Sawatski points out, 1985 was no one year phenomenon.

Midland came into the league the next year when the Chicago Cubs, seeking consistent fan support in an atmosphere where their young players could participate before a live audience rather than 200 lost souls rattling around in a stadium of 3,000, went looking for a new Texas League home in 1972.

THE NATIONAL League club moved its franchise from San Antonio, Texas' third largest city and an area boasting a Top 20 U.S. metropolitan area, to Midland, which wasn't even the largest city in West Texas.

That first year, in a renovated ball park with a temporary fence and a series of temporary, seldom fully operable scoreboards, the Midland Cubs attracted a surprising 71,747 fans, better than Amarillo (65,569) and Shreveport (34,165) and almost as many as Little Rock (79,358). More significantly to the Chicago Cubs, it was a jump of some 30,000 over what the farm club had drawn the previous year in San Antonio.

In the years to come, Midland's attendance remained reasonably stable.

Dropping to 69,277 in 1973, Midland bounced back to attract 87,870 in 1974, which would remain a record for five years. The Cubs didn't surpass 80,000 again until the 86,080 in 1978 and the record 89,915 in 1979 as the turnstiles began to reflect the growth in population.

In 1980, Midland reached 95,820 and has been over 100,000 every year since, peaking at 127,836 in its first year as a California Angels farm club in 1985.

TEXAS LEAGUE attendance over the years has reflected a similar growth.

Last year the gate for the eight-team league hit 1,139,037. In 1972, it was a respectable 848,877 and dipped as low as 584,619 in 1974, climbing gradually to 998,419 in 1980.

Every year since, total league attendance has exceeded one million.

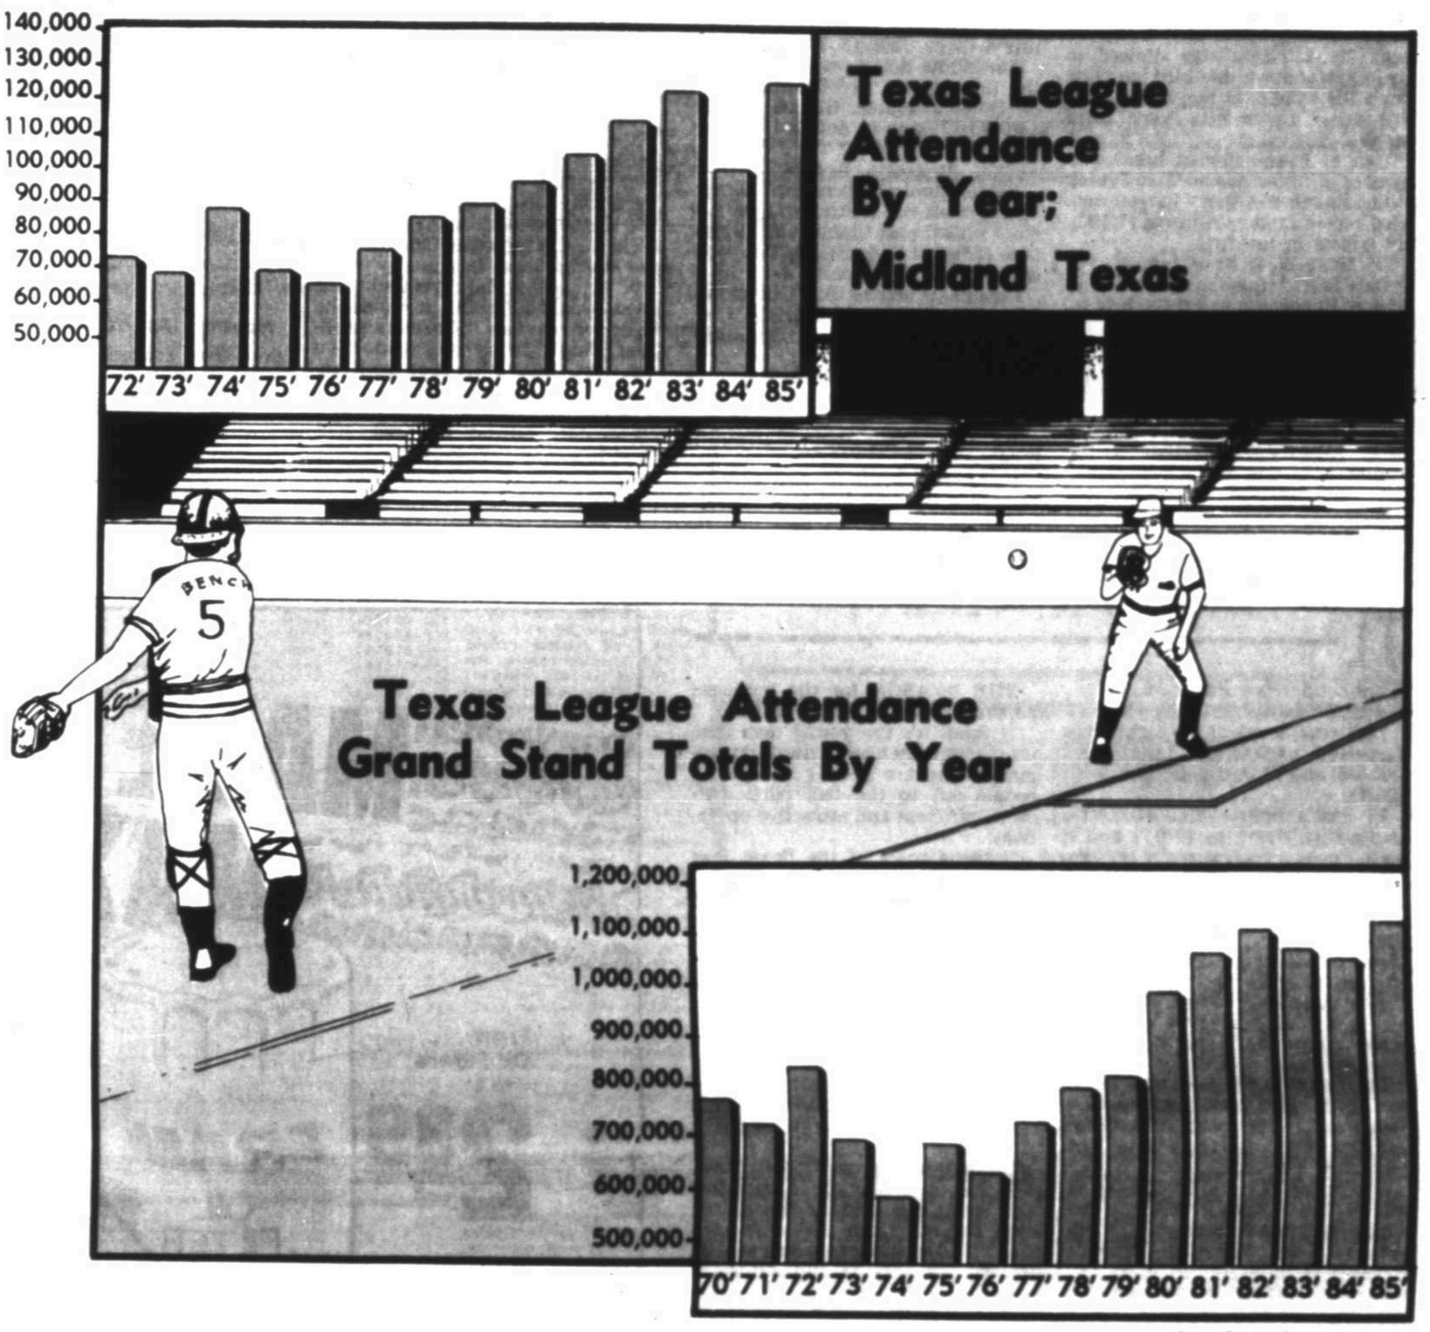

But the big surprise comes in comparing the figures since Midland's entry into the league with the two years (1971-1970) before the Cubs moved their franchise to West Texas.

Those were the glory years, the years when the storied TL listed on its roster of cities Fort Worth-Dallas, Albuquerque, San Antonio, Little Rock and Memphis.

It was a big city league. DFW, raised eyebrows around the country when its AA franchise drew 182,743 in 1970 and 213,249 in 1971.

Little Rock, Albuquerque drew more than 100,000 in 1971 and Little Rock, Memphis, Albuquerque joined DFW over 100,000 in 1970.

Bobcats use depth to capture relays

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

SAN ANGELO - The San Angelo Bobcats bit the Midland Lee Rebels with a numbers con game here Saturday afternoon in the 28th annual San Angelo Relays.

The Bobcats rolled out 173 points to win the meager five-team Division I field while Lee had 144 and Odessa Permian 136.

San Angelo won only three of 16 events, but placed heavily in just about every event. When a race was run, it always seemed like there were three Bobcats in it.

Depth paid with interest despite the fact that Lee won six events and Permian five.

"I tell you one thing. San Angelo should be the heavy favorite to win the district meet with all the athletes they have. They didn't get any points in the sprint relay after dropping the baton and they still score over 170 points," said Lee head track coach Eddie Wolski.

Lee, trailing by as many as 47 points at one point, still showed it has the top quality of District 4-5A.

Mike Garza led the Lee attack, scoring 25 points for the third time this year, but he had to do a pile of work to do it. Garza ran 14 laps in one day, equalling the feat he performed a year ago when Lee won the San Angelo title.

Garza remained unbeaten in the 3200 with a 10:09.67 and won for the third straight time in the 1600 with a 4:31.54. He also ran a leg on Lee's winning 3200 relay.

"I've worked hard and I was ready to go. Last week in workouts, I was sweating salt and I've never worked that hard," said Garza.

Quintus Hampton also remained unbeaten in the 300 hurdles and he did it in fine style with a meet record of 37.23, his career best. He was still pushed by San Angelo's Charlie Good.

"With Good pushing me, I can get into the 35s," said Hampton. "I hit six hurdles today because I was alternating steps, but I wasn't as tired at the end because you don't get tired when someone is pushing you. I'll be in the 35 second area if I can go through the hurdles clean."

'Dogs caught with let down

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

After winning a big game — which Midland High did Tuesday, 12-4 against Midland Lee — the Bulldogs have been known to have a let down. They did Saturday against Big Spring and paid the price, a 3-2, eight-inning loss to the Steers.

Even though intensity wasn't a part of Midland High's performance, the Bulldogs did manage to almost beat the Steers in regulation.

With two out in the bottom of the seventh, Kenny De La Garza trying to hold a 2-1 lead, runners on first and third and Aaron Allen at the plate, Big Spring came up with the biggest break of the day.

De La Garza struck out Allen to apparently win the game. But, the ball was wide and in the dirt and MHS catcher Tommy Yorkman couldn't get a handle on it. Aaron made it safely to first and Matt Garrett scored the tying run from third.

"The turning point, I felt, was when we had two out, two strikes, runners on first and third and Kenny's pitch goes in the dirt," said Whalen. "We lost our composure."

Not to mention the game.

After getting Randy Hayworth to strike out to end the seventh, the Bulldogs failed to help their own cause in the eighth. The Steers were up to the challenge.

Mike Dodd led off with an infield single down the third base line that Ricky Castaneda had no chance to play. Felix Olivas walked and it was the end of Bulldog defense.

Big Spring's Charlie Ogle failed to lay down a sacrifice bunt, pushing the ball back to De La Garza who threw to second to try for the double play. His throw was high and pulled Robert Malacara off the bag to load the bases.

With nobody out, De La Garza got a break when Castaneda outraced Dodd to home plate after Dodd was picked off third base. It was short-lived. Raymond Ontiveros' slow, bouncing grounder to shortstop was bobbled by Malacara, Olivas scored and the 'Dogs were knocked out of second place in the 4-5A standings.

"We had our chances to win this game but couldn't put them away," said Whalen. "They don't have any killer instinct. When they smell blood they think it's a pungent odor. They don't know it's supposed to kick them into a higher gear."

WHAT THE Bulldogs discovered is the same thing three other 4-5A teams have found out this year: The Steers, if you let them keep their heads up, don't give up. They're no longer the kind of team that will let opponents get away with mistakes.

"Right now, they believe in themselves," said Big Spring coach John Velasquez. The longer we stay close in a game, the more they believe they've got a chance to win.

"The key for us winning the game was we shut them out for the first five innings," continued Velasquez. "It gave us a lot of confidence."

The loss was a hard one for the Bulldogs to take, especially Malacara who could have prevented the winning run with a cleanly fielded play on Ontiveros' grounder. But, as Whalen noted, he never should have been in that situation in the first place.

Bosox' Clemens happy with post-surgery progress

Associated Press

Roger Clemens, the Boston Red Sox pitcher who underwent surgery last summer, is doing just fine, thank you.

"I'm very satisfied where I am right now," Clemens said after yielding just three singles and striking out nine in seven innings on Saturday to lead the Red Sox to a 6-0 exhibition baseball victory over the Detroit Tigers. "It's been a lot of hard work."

Only one Tiger got as far as second base while Clemens was on the mound. It was his best performance since he shut out Cleveland 5-0 on May 17, 1985.

The only Detroit hits off Clemens were by Dave Bergman in the second inning, a bunt single by Doug Baker in the third and a single by Matt Nokes in the fourth.

While Boston's pitching was shutting down Detroit, the Red Sox attack was led by Tony Armas, who had four consecutive hits, the first a high fly ball that was allowed to drop 20 feet down the third base line for a RBI double in the first inning. His other three hits were solid singles.

Dwight Evans singled home two runs off Detroit starter Walt Terrell in the fourth and Marty Barrett doubled across another run against Randy O'Neal in the fifth.

Yankees 6, Blue Jays 1

Dale Berra tripled in two runs and Rickey Henderson had three hits, including a home run, and his first stolen base of the spring to lead the Yankees. Joe Niekro worked the first five innings, giving up Toronto's run in the top of the second before the Yankee bats exploded for three runs in the bottom of the inning.

Cardinals 5, Royals 3

Exhibitions

Phillies 4, Orioles 2

A two-run triple by Rick Schu gave Philadelphia its victory over Baltimore. It was the sixth straight exhibition season victory for the Phillies.

Pirates 3, Mets 2

Jim Morrison's two hits, including a homer, led to all of Pittsburgh's runs as the Pirates downed the Mets.

Morrison hit a two-run homer in the fourth, then broke a 2-2 tie in the sixth when he doubled, stole third and scored on Mike Brown's sacrifice fly.

White Sox 7, Astros 2

John Cangelosi, Carlton Fisk, Ozzie Guillen and Tim Hulett each had two hits to pace Chicago over Houston.

The White Sox scored six runs in the first inning, two coming home on Hulett's double. Guillen tripled and Joel Skinner doubled in the rally.

Braves 6, Reds 5

Rafael Ramirez's three-run homer capped a six-run ninth inning as Atlanta rallied past Cincinnati. All the runs came off Reds pitcher Ted Power, who failed to hold a 4-0 lead.

Cincinnati starter Bill Gullickson allowed just two hits over the first five innings, striking out two without walking a batter.

Brewers 3, Indians 2

Mike Felder's single drove in the tie-breaking run in the seventh inning as Milwaukee nipped Cleveland.

Phil Niekro made his first appearance in a Cleveland uniform, starting for the Indians. He gave up two runs in six innings, retiring 11 of the last 12 batters he faced.

Rangers 4, Cubs 2

Oddibe McDowell hit a two-run homer as Texas beat the Chicago Cubs in a game played in Oklahoma City.

McDowell hit his second homer of the spring to break a 2-2 tie in the fifth inning. He also had an RBI single in the third and scored in the same inning on a balk by Cubs starter Dennis Eckersley, 1-4, who got the loss.

Texas starter Bobby Witt, 4-0, gave four hits in five innings and allowed his first two earned runs of the spring.

Mariners reject Vancouver pitch

SEATTLE (AP) — Seattle Mariners officials have rejected a proposal to move a three-game series with Toronto in July from the Kingdome to B.C. Place Stadium in Vancouver, British Columbia.

Moving the Mariners-Blue Jays games July 21-23 for Expo 86, the World's Fair opens next month in Vancouver, had been proposed by Stu Kehoe, general manager of the Class AAA Vancouver Canadians of the Pacific Coast League.

"Even though the revenue looked good, we didn't think it would be right for our fans," Mariners president Chuck Armstrong said. "We don't anticipate sellouts at the Kingdome for those three games."

More than 55,000 fans were expected for each game if the series had been moved to Vancouver.

The Mariners are playing Montreal in a three-game exhibition series at B.C. Place this weekend. A crowd of 14,789 turned out Friday night to see Seattle beat the Expos 7-2.

Badger Land wins Flamingo

HIALEAH, Fla. (AP) — Heavy favorite Badger Land lived up to his billing in the $300,000-added Flamingo Stakes on Saturday at Hialeah, moving to the lead going into the far turn and pulling away to win by four lengths over Bolshoi Boy.

Badger Land, a likely Kentucky Derby favorite who went off at 1-5 odds, was third into the first turn of the 1⅛-mile race for 3-year-olds. He passed Strong Performance during the turn and settled in on the shoulder of Big Jolt for the trip down the backstretch.

With three furlongs to go, jockey Jorge Velasquez asked the colt to go and he zoomed past Big Jolt

TL

Last year, seven of the eight clubs surpassed 100,000 and Little Rock (207,985) and El Paso (245,744) passed 200,000.

El Paso's figures (245,744) better Dallas-Fort Worth in 1970-71 and it wasn't even a good year for the Diablos, who drew 282,272 in 1983 and 326,084 in 1982. The Diablos, in fact, have broken 200,000 every year since 1977.

Instead of drying up with the departure of some of its prize franchises, Dallas-Fort Worth, Albuquerque and Memphis, to bigger and better things, the TL has flourished.

TL PRESIDENT Sawatski points out, "Last year's total gate was the highest since 1954 and it marked the sixth straight year the league has gone over a million."

In 1970, the TL drew 770,070 and in 1971 it lured 733,859 through the turnstiles. Since then, the league has been has been looking back over its shoulder at those figures since 1977 when the exorable climb began with 740,770.

Sawatski emphasizes that last year two clubs broke their city's single-season attendance marks.

THE REASON for the immense popularity of the Texas League?

"I think it's the young men running the franchises," Swataski begins. "They are getting the young people out to the ball park with clean, efficient and attractive operations.

"It's the price of the ticket that makes it attractive. A fan can enjoy a whole evening of entertainment for $3 or $4 and he can still get a hot dog for a dollar at the ball park."

Sawatski claims the attendance figures also reflect the stability of the league. "We don't have franchises bouncing around like they used to when Lafayette, Victoria and Alexandria were in and out of the league. And, yes, we do have cities that have expressed interest in joining the league, but there's no place for them."

Sawatski continues, "You have good franchise operations by energetic young men and the league has some attractive ball parks. Shreveport will open the season in a $4 million stadium April 14. Midland has a beautiful park and there are relatively new parks in Jackson and Tulsa while the old ones are good old parks with lots of atmosphere and good facilities."

RELAYS

Brad Cooper also remained unbeaten in the 400 meters and his 48.28 was only .08 of a second off the division record.

"I wanted that record bad, but I need someone to push me around the track. It's pretty hard to get the record when no one is on your heels," said Cooper. "Still, its the best time I've had this year and I wasn't tired. I know I belong in the 47 second range."

Lee's other two victories came in the relays, winning the 3200 in 8:06.49 with David Almand, Carl Long, David Parkerson and Garza. The 1600 relay team of Kevin Witt, Hampton, Jimmy Fennell and Cooper posted a 3:19.59, almost two seconds better than their season best.

Almand was defeated at the tape in the 800 to settle for second and Odell Samuels had a second in the high jump with a 6-2. Rodney Clark had a third place in the 800 in a strong showing.

"We also got some help from Mike Little and John Bradley in the shot put," noted Wolski. "Our kids are competing, but its beginning to look like we will have to have Permian, San Angelo and Abilene knock each other around for us to win the district title.

"We did pretty well, considering the fact that we were coming off spring break and we finally got the stick around in the sprint relay. That's something. This meet showed that some of the kids worked hard during the break. Some could have worked harder and they know who they are. We've got two tough weeks of work ahead of us before the district meet."

Lee and Midland High will host the Tall City Relays next Saturday at Memorial Stadium and the 4-5A meet follows the next weekend. Midland will be the center of the track world for the next two weeks.

Monahans won the Division II title with an 89-69 margin over Tivy and Fort Stockton had 60. Lamesa's Gerry Woodberry set a Division II record in the 100 with a 10.64 and Andrews won two titles with a 6-2 from Danny Neighbors in the high jump and a 169-3 1/2 from Bobby Kimbrough in the discus.

Vernon scored 69 points to edge Crane by three points in the Division III competition. Crane got victories from Dwayne Tarpley in the 400 (50.42), Kenny Walker in the long jump (21-3 3/4) and won the 1600 realy in 3:23.45. Ron Cook of Vernon set a division record in the 300 hurdles with a 37.42 and Breckenridge's Gary Oliver set a pole vault mark of 15-0 1/2.

Christoval won the Division IV crown, the most competitive division, with 56 points as Mason was second with 53 and Anson third with 52. Anson's Lew Mays set a 300 hurdle record in that division in the prelims Friday with a 37.42. The 3200 record also fell with a 10:06.24 from Stinnett's Charlie Phillips. Reagan County's Marvin Mitchell won the discus with a 156-10, scoring all 10 of the Owls' points.

Lloyd gains net finals

MARCO ISLAND, Fla. (AP) — Top-seeded Chris Evert Lloyd beat Bonnie Gadusek 6-1, 6-1 in a semifinal match at the $150,000 Tournament of Champions Saturday and will meet second-seeded Claudia Kohde-Kilsch in the finals on Sunday.

Kohde-Kilsch, of West Germany, beat Australian Janine Thompson 6-4, 4-6, 6-2 in Satuday's other semifinal match.

Evert Lloyd said the match against Kohde-Kilsch will be a tough one.

"Claudia plays very well," Evert Lloyd said. "Last year, she gave me a very tough time at Amelia Island (Fla.), taking me three sets and getting to 7-5 in the last set. It won't be that easy of a match."

"She's the only player in the world that I haven't beaten, so of course, it would be very, very special to beat her," Kohde-Kilsch said of Evert Lloyd.

Evert Lloyd, 31, said she has been working for the last year-and-a-half on becoming a quicker tennis player and said she is prepared to "play my best game" Sunday.

"Have patience and a big weapon," she said. "A Kohde-Kilsch or a Hana Mandlikova have the big shots that can get to my style of game. But you must be patient, get the opening and then make that big shot for the point. It's not easy, obviously, to execute all of these things at the same time."

The $250,000 Women's Team Championship doubles final also will be played Sunday on the clay courts at the Marco Island Resort.

Angels send Willis to Denver farm club

CINCINNATI (AP) — The Cincinnati Reds reacquired minor-league pitcher Carl Willis from the California Angels and sent him to their Class AAA Denver farm club Saturday.

Willis had 11 relief appearances for the Reds last season with one victory, one save and a 9.22 earned run average.

The Angels drafted Willis for $50,000 at the winter meetings, and didn't intend to keep him on the Opening Day roster. Under major-league procedures, a club that doesn't keep a drafted player at the major-league level must offer him back to the original club for half price.

A Reds spokesman said Saturday night the ballclub agreed to pay $25,000 to get Willis back.

Bill Linderman...Hall of Fame induction revives memories of what might have been for one-time southpaw blaze-baller.

$1,000 for $5 plaque ...it was well worth it

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

"I spent $1,000 to get a $5 plaque," laughs William "Bill" Linderman, but he leaves no doubt that he'd do it again.

The 67-year-old Midlander traveled all the way to New York recently where he was inducted into the Corning-Painted Post Sports Hall of Fame in recognition for his baseball and softball pitching skills.

"When they called up to tell me I'd been nominated, they wanted to know where I'd been. "We've been looking for you for five years.'"

As a young lefthander, it was his ability to throw heat, some claimed faster than Feller, that got him a job in the depression era and almost a ticket to the majors with the Philadelphia Phillies Whiz Kids.

A sore arm short-circuited his baseball career and steered into him into softball.

THE 12TH annual Corning-Painted Post Hall of Fame banquet program, at which Cornell University football coach Maxie Baughan was the guest speaker, capsules Linderman's qualificiations:

"William Linderman (1930-50) era; Bill, now of Midland, Texas, was outstanding southpaw pitcher with championships NHS in late 1930s and with the area semipros...After outstanding World War II baseball career, signed with the Phillies chain in '46 and had 14-10 rookie season the Three-Eye League... Later 7-3 with pennant-winning Utica of Eastern League, where he played with several of Philadelphia Phillies Whiz Kids who later won the NL pennant...Sore arm in '48 ended pro career, but he continued to pitch several seasons with Indiana industrial teams."

"WHEN I got out of high school, there were lines three blocks long waiting for job openings at Corning," recalls Linderman. Bill was one of those in line when he was recognized and asked to pitch for the office team, "I agreed on condition that I got a job."

The team won the Corning title and in the state championships, Bill won 2-1 on Saturday and lost 2-1 on Sunday.

The Yankees offered him $50 a month and a minor league contract, "I was working at Corning and making more there and pitching semipro."

In 1942, Linderman got an offer of $175 from Williamsport, Eastern League, "I was supposed to report July 4. I went into service July 2."

While in service, he got to pitch against the major league loaded Great Lakes team, "I gave up eight hits and lost 3-1 when an outfielder dropped a ball and it rolled under the stands."

After the war, the Phillies offered him his first pro contract. Following his season at Terre Haute, he was scheduled to move up to Triple A, but that's when the arm troubles began. "They sent me to Portland, Maine. I never saw the sun." It rained or was overcast and cold all the time he was there.

It was there his arm became so tight he could hardly move it. "They sent me to Boston for an examination. The doctor said he could have me throwing again in 20 days, but when I got back to Portland, Del Bissonette listened and said, "But we need you to throw tonight.'"

So he pitched, and that was the beginning of the end. "When I hung 'em up, I couldn't break a pane of glass."

But the memories linger. "Eddie Sawyer was a fantastic manager...Richie Ashburn was a great guy and clean liver...I pitched to Stan Lopata in his first pro game and did you know that Gil Hodges was a catcher at the start of his career..."

HE admits overwork may have been part of his arm trouble. "I was 10-0 at Terre Haute (Three-Eye) in '46 and was working five and six inning relief stings between starts.. I wound up 14-10."

Still, despite the heavy pitching load, Linderman confesses that it was a $10 offer to play first base for Owensville, Ind., in a semipro game after the 1947 season that may have done it. "I was playing first base with a man on second. I fielded a grounder and threw to third, sidearm, and I felt something go in the back, just below the armpit."

On today's salaries, "As a semipro I made $190 at work and $175 pitching and thought I was getting rich. Now they are paying players $1 million a year. No ball player is worth that."

A 12-year resident of Midland, Linderman, with his son-in-law, is involved in the Rainbow Enterprises distributorship, where he is vice president.

A year ago he fought off cancer and is now thinking of retirement — "Midland in the winter and Indiana from April to October."

Ags' Barnes sets SWC shot mark

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas A&M's massive Randy Barnes made the third best shot put throw in Southwest Conference history Saturday and the best ever nationally by a freshman, taking the 59th Texas Relays' first-place medal with a heave of 69 feet, 2¼ inches.

It was the best university-college division shot put in Texas Relays' history. Al Feuerbach set the meet mark of 70-1½ while competing in the open division for the Pacific Coast Track Club in 1974.

Olympians Randy Matson of Texas A&M and Michael Carter of Southern Methodist had throws of 71-5½ and 71-4¾, respectively, during their collegiate careers.

Matson had a toss of 68-8 in the 1976 Texas Relays for the previous college-university division best.

However, Carter and Matson never threw the shot as far as Barnes during their freshmen seasons. Carter had the national freshman record of 67-7.

The 6-foot-5, 265-pound Barnes of Charleston, W. Va., made his tremendous throw on his first try before the Memorial Stadium crowd of 11,000. His previous best was 67-7¼ in the College Station Relays.

"I'm excited," said Barnes, who was voted the outstanding male performer. "I'd heard of the Texas Relays and I was excited about competing here. My next goal is the collegiate record."

Texas Relays

"I don't know if I can get it this year but I'm sure going to try," said Barnes, who followed his older brother, Lee, to Texas A&M.

Barnes' throw overshadowed Texas Christian's meet record of 38.97 seconds in the college 400-meter relay. It broke the old hand-held time of 38.09 by Houston in 1982.

The Texas Lady Longhorns became the first women's team to capture four relays events by winning the 400, 3200, 1600 and sprint medley relays. They won the outstanding team award and Texas' Mary Bolden was voted the outstanding female athlete.

Odessa Junior College established two meet records. Odessa posted a 39.67 in the 400-meter relay, breaking its old standard of 40.11 and 3:02.4 in the 1600 meter relay, beating its old mark of 3:04.09.

Missouri's Chidi Imol of Nigeria, wearing crowd-pleasing florescent orange shoes, successfully defended his invitational 100-meter dash in a time of 10.24 seconds. It was well off Johnny Lam Jones' meet record of 9.9.

Joe Dial, the American record holder, won the pole vault with an effort of 18 feet, 4½ inches but failed three times in an effort to eclipse Billy Olson's met record of 18-10. Olson did not compete but was watching from the pole vault pit area.

'86 Angels abandon sleek look for bulging biceps

Midland Angels

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Vance Lovelace respresents a change in thinking for the California Angels when it comes to the Texas League and what it takes to win in the Class AA circuit.

Instead of speed and finesse, the team Manager Joe Maddon will bring to Texas for Tuesday's opener in San Antonio will feature power-hitting and power-pitching.

Lovelace is a 90-mph fastballer who spent five years in the Los Angeles Dodgers' organization, but will be with the Angels this season. Rafeal Pimental , an eight-year veteran of the Milwaukee and St. Louis farm systems who pitched for Arkansas 1981-83, also will be on the staff.

Another example of the change: Vincincio Cedeno had 140 strikeouts in 139 innings at Quad Cities and Redwood.

It's a team that will have a little more seasoning to go with the youth of a year ago. As a matter of fact, that youth is a year older, a year that could mean a lot in the TL.

IN 1985, the Angels fielded a team, the nucleus of which, had compiled the best record in minor league baseball the year before in the California League, but discovered the jump from A to AA ball was a little more than it was ready for as a unit.

But now pitchers like Doug Banning (2-5) and Don Timberlake (5-12) are back on a staff that includes some strong younger arms as well.

Mike Cook, a first round draft choice in 1985 out of the University of South Carolina, where he was 13-2 with a 1.96 ERA, joins Sherman Corbett, 11-12 at Redwood, and fourth round draft pick Scott Marrett, 5-5 at Redwood.

Heading the relief corps is veteran submariner Julian Gonzales, who was 8-5 with a 3.82 ERA in Midland last year. Cedeno, Lovelace, and Pimental could give Midland the strongest pen in the league.

Other familiar names returning will be catcher Doug Davis (.263) from North Carolina State; Doug Reibel or Sap Randall at first; Kevin Davis at short; Dante Bichette or Doug Merrifield at third; and Kris Kline or Mark McLemore at second.

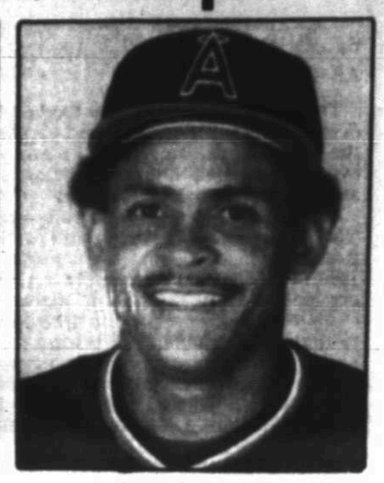

Brian Hartsock, the late season star for the Angels last year, will be back along with Mike Madril, a make-something-happen type outfield.

Reibel started the season at Midland last year and was farmed out while Randall finished the season here after starting at Vancouver.

While the season opens Tuesday, the Angels will be on the road for 10 games in San Antonio and Beaumont before its home inaugural against El Paso in Angels Stadium.

ANGEL DUST: Some 90 percent of the box seats have been sold for the season and asssitant GM Bill Davidson and the front office staff has their sights set on a gate of 150,000 this season....Last year the Angels set a Midland TL attendance record with 127,000-plus....For bargain hunting fans, bonus books with 12 general admission tickets are selling for $20....The book also includes a special family pass for opening night-....Former Angel Reggie Montgomery was named the California Angels' minor league player of the year after a 1985 season at Midland in which he hit .289, bashed 22 homers, knocked in 101 runs and showed a .491 slugging percentage...

KUFO-FM to air all of Midland TL games

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

In just the second season of existence for the Midland Angels of the Texas League, the Angels have been able to do what no one else has done since minor league baseball became a fixture in the Permian Basin in 1972 — secure a local radio contract.

Radio station KUFO-FM (104.7) has agreed to broadcast all 136 games of the Angels regualar season schedule — and follow them into possible playoff action. It is the first daily broadcast of minor league baseball in the Permian Basin, and station vice president Charles Campbell couldn't be happier.

"In 25 years in the business, I've never done anything that has me as excited as this," Campbell said. "I'm excited, our sponsors are excited, and it gives everyone a sense of more community involvement. I'm looking forward to it.

"It's a major step for the radio station. All time and energy we'be put into it is worthwhile. We've had good commments from the business community and the general public. Everybody is excited about hearing the Midland Angels on the radio."

With KUFO in the Texas League fold, all the league's clubs will have home and road radio service this season. New ownership in San Antonio, the city with the largest league market, has secured a radio contracti this season, and Shreveport, the league's smallest market, will inaugurate home and away radio broadcasts this year.

"We're very glad to finally get on the radio, it's a real step to promoting ourselves and the league as being professional," said Matt Perry, director of operations for the Midland club. "For a long time, no one in this market was ready to do it. We're very happy KUFO has stepped forward to take the bull by the horns."

Flinging the cape in an effort to subdue that bull will be Jim Smith, the "Voice of the Midland Angels." Smith is a newcomer to the Tall City, but he is far from a newcomer to baseball play-by-play.

An eight-year radio veteran, Smith, 38, spent the 1985 season in Seattle as a sports radio reporter covering the Mariners, the football Seahawks and hockey Thunderbirds. Since arriving as the KUFO sports director early this year Smith has also worked with KRIG in Odessa doing broadcasts of the Odessa College basketball games — including the Lady Wranglers national championship.

"Probably the most exciting thing looking ahead to the season is that we're coming off a good attendance year and we have what appears to be a much more rounded ballclub in 1986," Smith said. "I think there's a good chance to present a winning ball club to the listeners of the Permian Basin."

"Jim Smith is one of foremost announcers we could get, experienced, enthusiastic and knowledgeable," Campbell added. "Jim will travel with the team, eat with the team and sleep with the team. He'll be out there everyday."

Smith will inaugurate the 1986 broadcast season with the team's opener against the San Antonio Dodgers in San Antonio on Tuesday night. Air time is slated for 7:00 p.m. with a pre-game show to air at 6:30.

Smith will maintain a daily vigil with the club from now until the end of the season, August 30, airing "Angels Replay" the morning after every game, and taping pre-game shows for use every evening.

Pat Bradley storms into Dinah Shore lead

Dinah Shore

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (AP) — Pat Bradley, winner of 16 LPGA tournaments, but still looking for her first Nabisco Dinah Shore victory, shot a 3-under-par 69 on Saturday to open a three-stroke lead after three rounds over Juli Inkster.

Bradley, who lost the 1984 Dinah Shore title to Inkster in a playoff, opened up a little daylight on the 18th hole Saturday when she rolled in a 15-foot birdie putt.

The 35-year-old Bradley, who has finished no worse than sixth in the Dinah Shore for the past six years but hasn't been able to win the event, stands at 7-under-par 209 through 54 holes of the tournament, which carries the LPGA's top winner's prize, $75,000.

She had cards of 68-72-69 through the first three rounds at Mission Hills Country Club, leading the first day and sharing the second-round lead with Inkster.

Inkster had a third-round 72 after rounds of 69-71.

Val Skinner, with a third-round 70, was four shots off the pace heading into Sunday's nationally televised final round.

There was another two-stroke drop back to a group of six at 215, including Mary Beth Zimmerman, who's won twice already this year and tops the tour's money list.

Also in the group were Betsy King, Becky Pearson, Beth Daniel, Patti Rizzo and Sandra Palmer.

Laura Baugh, who began the third round tied with King one stroke back of co-leaders Bradley and Inkster, struggled to a 77 that dropped her back into the pack.

Two years ago at Mission Hills, Bradley led by one shot heading into the final hole, but Inkster tied her with a closing birdie.

Inkster then won the tournament with a par on the first playoff hole as Bradley bogeyed.

The 25-year-old Inkster, the tour's Rookie of the Year in 1984 and winner of five tournaments already in her brief career, ranks second on the LPGA money list this year behind Zimmerman.

Bradley is third on the earnings list this year and second on the all-time money list behind only JoAnne Carner. Bradley has collected more than $1.8 million since joining the tour in 1974, winning 16 tournaments.

Lyle's lead down to 3

Greensboro

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — British Open champion Sandy Lyle struggled to a 73 and saw his lead dwindle to three shots Saturday after three rounds of the $500,000 Greater Greensboro Open Golf Tournament.

Lyle, a Scot who has won 17 international tournaments but none in the U.S., completed three trips over the Forest Oaks Country Club course in 205, 11 shots under par.

"Well, we closed the gap a little bit. Maybe we can make it interesting tomorrow," said Tom Purtzer, who has a history of strong play in this tournament.

Purtzer, who set the course record of 64 in 1980 and saw it tied by Lyle in Friday's round, moved into second place with a 68 that could have been much better.

"It could have been a real good round," said Purtzer, who played the front in 31, then took a double bogey on the 14th and finished at 208, eight under par.

Lyle, who was five shots clear of the field after 36 holes, has seven contenders within that range going into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $90,000 first prize.

Former Greensboro winner Craig Stadler and South African David Frost were at 209, four back. Stadler had a 71 in the hot, sunny weather, and Frost had a no-bogey 68.

Tied at 210 were Dan Pohl, Andy Bean, Leonard Thompson and Jim Simons. Pohl had a 70, while Bean and Thompson matched par 72 and Simons shot a 73.

Lyle, who hit only four of a possible 14 fairways, had to one-putt for bogey on the first hole and got a lucky break on the 572-yard, par-5 ninth, where his massive drive hit a paved cart path and bounded toward the green. The shot covered "about 350 yards," Lyle said. It left him with a 6-iron to the green and he 2-putted for a birdie that enabled him to reach the turn in par 36.

His lead was cut to a single shot when he drove poorly and bogeyed the 10th moments after Stadler birdied the hole.

Stadler, however, couldn't maintain the pressure, bogeyed two of the next four and took another bogey on the last.

It's Pass or Flunk Out at U. of Georgia

ATHENS, Ga. (AP) — The English teacher who now holds Jan Kemp's old job at the University of Georgia says that times have changed for academically deficient athletes at the school — as evidenced by the fact that four flunked out last week.

One of the athletes, starting football tackle Henry Williams, said after flunking out of school that it wouldn't have happened had it not been for the Kemp trial.

"He would be correct to say that at any time previous to now an administrative exit (into the regular curriculum) probably would have been the case," said Dr. Ruth Sabol, head of the remedial English program.

Williams, reserve football players Ronnie Hammonds and Spencer Polk, and Traci Waites, a starter on the women's basketball team, were dismissed from school this week.

"I think the practice of administrative exits has ended," Sabol said. "I think the university is finally getting its house in order. The timing was way off, but I can only see the decision as a correct decision. Board of Regents policy states that students in developmental studies must pass. So it behooves us either to follow policy or change it."

The so-called "administrative exits" were a major focus of the trial of a lawsuit filed by Kemp, a former instructor and English coordinator in the Developmental Studies program. She sued two university officials, charging that she was fired for protesting preferential treatment for athletes, and a federal jury awarded her $2.57 million.

Union balks at drug tests

Reject Uberroth's program

NEW YORK (AP) — Baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth sent details of his drug testing program to major league players and their union, a spokesman for the commissioner said on Saturday, and the union promptly challenged his right to implement it.

Ueberroth "doesn't have the authority to impose it," said Don Fehr, executive director of the players association. "We've asked the players to do nothing until we have had a chance to talk further with the people on the other side about it."

Rich Levin, Ueberroth's spokesman, said no information would be made public until it is received by the players, their agents, the union and club officials.

Fehr said, however, that the plan appears to be "same program that he's had in the minor leagues."

Minor league players and baseball personnel, other than players, have been included in a drug testing plan Ueberroth started in 1985.

"I didn't notice ... that there were any tremendous variances from what he's been saying in the past in that regard," the union chief said.

Fehr told ABC Radio Sports that the commissioner "did suggest to the players that the plan be in effect only for two years, which may or may not be a step forward depending on what happens after two years."

The Player Relations Committee, the owners' labor arm, said that some 500 players have agreed to random testing. The union put the number at about 460.

The union estimates that only about 45 of these players have agreed to testing through clauses in their guaranteed contracts.

"Most of the others were intimidated into agreeing to testing clauses," said a union source, while the owners said it was a "totally voluntary act on the player's part."

The Major League Players Association filed a grievance over the inclusion of such clauses and Fehr said on Friday that he learned during the opening hearings into the grievance that not even owners consider these clauses binding in contracts which are non-guaranteed.

"Even though they were signed, the players never had the obligation to take the tests, and if they refused, there were no penalties. This, however, was not the understanding that the players had," Fehr said.

"That still leaves us with about 45 guaranteed contracts," he said, adding that if the clauses in the other contracts cannot be enforced, the union would like to see these removed also.

One-legged fighter faces former Big 10 grid star

CHICAGO (AP) — Craig Bodzianowski, a one-legged fighter, resumes his boxing comeback Sunday when he meets Ric Enis, a former All-Big Ten Conference halfback, in an eight-round cruiserweight bout.

It will be Bodzianowski's second fight since he shattered and lost his right leg in a motorcycle accident almost two years ago.

Bodzianowski, 25, had his right leg amputated six inches below the knee and fitted with a prosthesis. It is a rubberized device that can withstand the rigors of the boxing ring.

Bodzianowski, who has a 14-0 record including 12 knockouts, started his comeback last December, stopping Francis Sargent in the second round.

A week after the fight, Sargent, who is black, said he threw the fight because of death threats and racial insults.

Sargent later recanted, but agreed to a six-month suspension from the Illinois Department of Registration for making statements detrimental to boxing.

"It was an unfortunate incident," said Bodzianowski, who operates a gym in suburban Tinley Park, "and now I am more determined than ever to win this important fight."

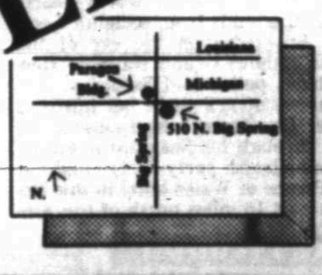

Enis, 30, rushed for 1,013 yards for Indiana in 1977 when he made The Associated Press All-Big Ten team. He was drafted by the Denver Broncos of the National Football League, but was cut. He is now a fireman in Richmond, Ind.

Troubled Baseball runs toward daylight

By JOHN NELSON
AP Baseball Writer

The 1986 baseball season begins this week in the dreary aftermath of what will be chronicled as on.. of the game's darkest periods. It was a year during which owners tightened their purse strings against fiscal crisis and mounted an all-out assault on drugs.

Commissioner Peter Ueberroth proclaimed 1985 "The Year of the Record" as fans paid particular note to Pete Rose, Tom Seaver, Phil Niekro and Rod Carew. Again in 1986, eyes will follow select players, but baseball watchers may well be hoping for more "negative" results.

AS THE season approached, 21 players were ordered to undergo periodic drug testing for the rest of their careers as the result of sweeping penalties invoked a month ago by Ueberroth. The players, some of whom also were fined, included Keith Hernandez, Dave Parker, Joaquin Andujar, Lonnie Smith, Jeff Leonard, Enos Cabell and Dale Berra.

"I am dedicating myself to removing drugs from our sport," Ueberroth said. "And I have good reason to believe we may get there by opening day. ... When I took over as commissioner, I knew the problem was out there, but I had no idea of the extent or dominance of it."

Perhaps as significant, although less headline-grabbing, was a new resolve by club owners to right their books after discovering the majority of them were losing money. There followed an unprecedented coalition among teams to curtail the unbound spiral of free-agent costs.

The top free agent this past winter, Kirk Gibson of Detroit, did not even receive a serious offer from another team. In years past, his availability would have signalled the start of an all-out bidding war.

As tradition dictates, the official season opener will be Monday in Cincinnati with Philadelphia playing the Reds at 2:05 p.m. EST. Barring bad weather, it will be the 100th season the Reds have opened at home, having missed 1877 and 1966 due to rain.

THERE WERE four other games scheduled for Monday: San Diego at Los Angeles (3:04 p.m.) in the National League, and Boston at Detroit (1:230 p.m.), Cleveland at Baltimore (1:05 p.m.) and Milwaukee at Chicago (1:30 p.m.) in the American League.

All clubs were scheduled to open at home by April 18.

Six teams will begin the season with new managers: Chuck Tanner at Atlanta, Hal Lanier at Houston, Lou Piniella at the Yankees, Jim Leyland at Pittsburgh, Steve Boros at San Diego and Jimy Williams at Toronto.

Last year, Rose broke Ty Cobb's all-time hits record, Seaver and Niekro pitched their 300th career victories and Carew topped the 3,000-hit plateau. The lineup of record-smashers is less impressive this year, but there probably will be a few, such as:

— Don Sutton, a 41-year-old right-hander traded last September from Oakland to California, begins the season just five victories away from 300 in his career, which began in 1966 with the Los Angeles Dodgers.

— Rose, player-manager of the Cincinnati Reds, is 24 runs behind Hank Aaron and Babe Ruth (2,174) for second on the all-time list. Cobb is the all-time leader with 2,245, 95 more than Rose. Rose already holds the NL mark.

— Reggie Jackson of the Angels is within six home runs of Mickey Mantle (536) for sixth on the all-time list.

— Mike Schmidt of Philadelphia is 42 home runs away from 500.

The Kansas City Royals of the AL West begin the season as the defending champions of major league baseball, having beaten the St. Louis Cardinals of the NL East in a seven-game World Series. The emergence of the Royals, led by veteran George Brett and 21-year-old AL Cy Young winner Bret Saberhagen, may signal a swing in power from East to West in both leagues.

"Kansas City has the pitching, and Oakland is much improved," says Minnesota Twins Manager Ray Miller. "I've got to feel that Seattle and Minnesota have the best young talent in baseball. One thing is for sure — the AL West won't be a doormat for the East anymore."

The power in the NL West is centered in Los Angeles, Cincinnati, Atlanta and San Diego.

"It's a very good division, and I agree that it has really changed — gotten stronger," says Manager Tom Lasorda of the defending West champion Dodgers. "Each club has improved a great deal. I definitely think we'll be stronger and more exciting."

THE AL EAST should once again be a very competitive division, with no one expecting a repeat of the Detroit Tigers' 1984 runaway victory. Last year, the Toronto Blue Jays won the division, and they should be in the race again.

"The division is balanced and competitive," Boston Red Sox Manager John McNamara says. "The club that can stay away from injuries will have the best chance. ... The Yankees, Toronto, Detroit — they're all good ballclubs, and we have a good club. Cleveland has some good, young players.

"We had Detroit in California during their streak when I was with the Angels in '84," McNamara says. "But it doesn't shape up to happen that way again. It wasn't a fluke. They played outstanding baseball. But those years are far and few between."

The New York Mets, second the past two seasons, are favored to win the NL East behind players such as NL Cy Young winner Dwight Gooden, Hernandez, Darryl Strawberry and Gary Carter. Cardinals Manager Whitey Herzog feels it could be a four-team race among the Mets, Cards, Chicago Cubs and Montreal Expos.

"We've got the best defensive team in the history of the game and one of the fastest," Herzog says. "The Mets are favored and rightly so because of their starting pitching and power. But they can't outrun us or outfield us. They can throw a good pitcher out there every day, though, and sometimes good pitching can take care of bad defense."

Rookie of Year, Who will it be?

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

Which rookie will be the toast of the major leagues in 1986?

A power-hitter like Jose Canseco of Oakland, Pete Incaviglia of Texas or Will Clark of San Francisco?

A pitcher like Jose Guzman of Texas or Juan Nieves of Milwaukee?

Or someone who already has put a dent in the big leagues, like fastballing relievers Todd Worrell of St. Louis or Lance McCullers of San Diego?

"A great deal depends on the ballclub. If you try to make a rookie into a star, you can run into trouble," said Al Rosen, general manager of the San Francisco Giants.

Incaviglia, who will start in right field for the Rangers, will join Dave Winfield of the New York Yankees and Bob Horner of the Atlanta Braves as the only active players who jumped right from college to the major leagues.

Incaviglia set NCAA records last year with 48 homers and 143 runs batted in at Oklahoma State. He was taken by Montreal as the eighth player overall in the June draft, but he didn't want to play for the Expos. Montreal then traded him to Texas for two minor leaguers.

It did not take the 6-foot-1, 220-pound powerpack long to make an impression at the Rangers' spring training camp.

"The last guy I saw as strong as him was on top of the Empire State Building with Fay Wray in his arms," Texas veteran Tom Paciorek said.

Incaviglia, 22, was hitting over .350 and leading the spring leagues with six homers. But what really stirred folks was a ball he hit in batting practice that tore a hole in the inch-thick plywood fence in left-center field.

"I just swing the bat and sometimes it's good and sometimes it's bad," he said. "I want to hit 30 to 40 home runs and drive in 100 runs. That's what I'm here for."

Canseco, who will start in left field for the Athletics, already has shown he can hit. In 29 late-season games last year with Oakland, Canseco batted .302 with five home runs and 13 RBI.

Canseco, 21, played at Class AA, Class AAA and Oakland last season and hit over .300 at each stop with a combined 41 HR and 140 RBI.

Clark, 22, was playing for Mississippi State this time last year. San Francisco drafted him and sent him to Class A Fresno, where he batted .309 with 10 HR and 46 RBI in just 65 games

The Giants will start him at first base this season next to another rookie, second baseman Rob Thompson.

"Surprised? Not at all," Clark said. "I came here with the idea to have fun, relax and try to make the big club."

Rosen said Clark's lack of professional experience could make the transition tough.

"How is he going to handle the emotional stress of his first slump? Rosen asked. "He will have them. Everybody does."

But he added: "If a player gets into a lineup and no one realizes he's there, like Vince Coleman, he can get his feet on the ground."

Coleman was the National League Rookie of the Year in 1985 when he stole 110 bases and helped St. Louis win the East. Coleman did not start the season with the Cardinals, and was only promoted to the major leagues after Tito Landrum was hurt.

The American League Rookie of the Year was Ozzie Guillen of the Chicago White Sox.

Other promising sluggers to watch this year include Wally Joyner of California, Andres Galarraga of Montreal, Billy Joe Robidoux of Milwaukee and Danny Tartabull of Seattle.

The Angels felt comfortable enough with Joyner's potential at first base that they released Rod Carew. Joyner, who has never played in the majors, won the triple crown in the Puerto Rican winter league by batting .356 with 14 HR and 48 RBI in 54 games.

Galarraga, who will start at first base for the Expos, starred in the Venezuelan Winter League, leading the circuit in homers and runs batted in while batting .300. The Expos tried eight players at first base in 1985, none of whom hit more than six homers.

Robidoux will start at first base for the Brewers while Cecil Cooper recovers from elbow surgery. Robidoux was the Texas League MVP last season at Class AA El Paso, where he batted .342 with 23 HR and 132 RBI.

Tartabull, the son of former major-leaguer Jose, is the latest of recent Seattle top prospects. Tartabull batted .300 with 43 HR and 109 RBI at Class AAA Calgary, and hit .328 in 19 games with the Mariners.

"His tremendous offensive potential makes him a rare commodity among infielders," said Seattle Manager Chuck Cottier, who will start Tartabull at second base after sending veteran Jack Perconte to the minors.

Two other rookies may start at second base in the majors this season. Leon "Bip" Roberts is trying to make the jump from Class AA to the San Diego Padres, and Steve Lombardozzi could open for Minnesota, where he batted .370 in 28 games last September.

Among the highly touted rookie pitchers are three guys in Texas.

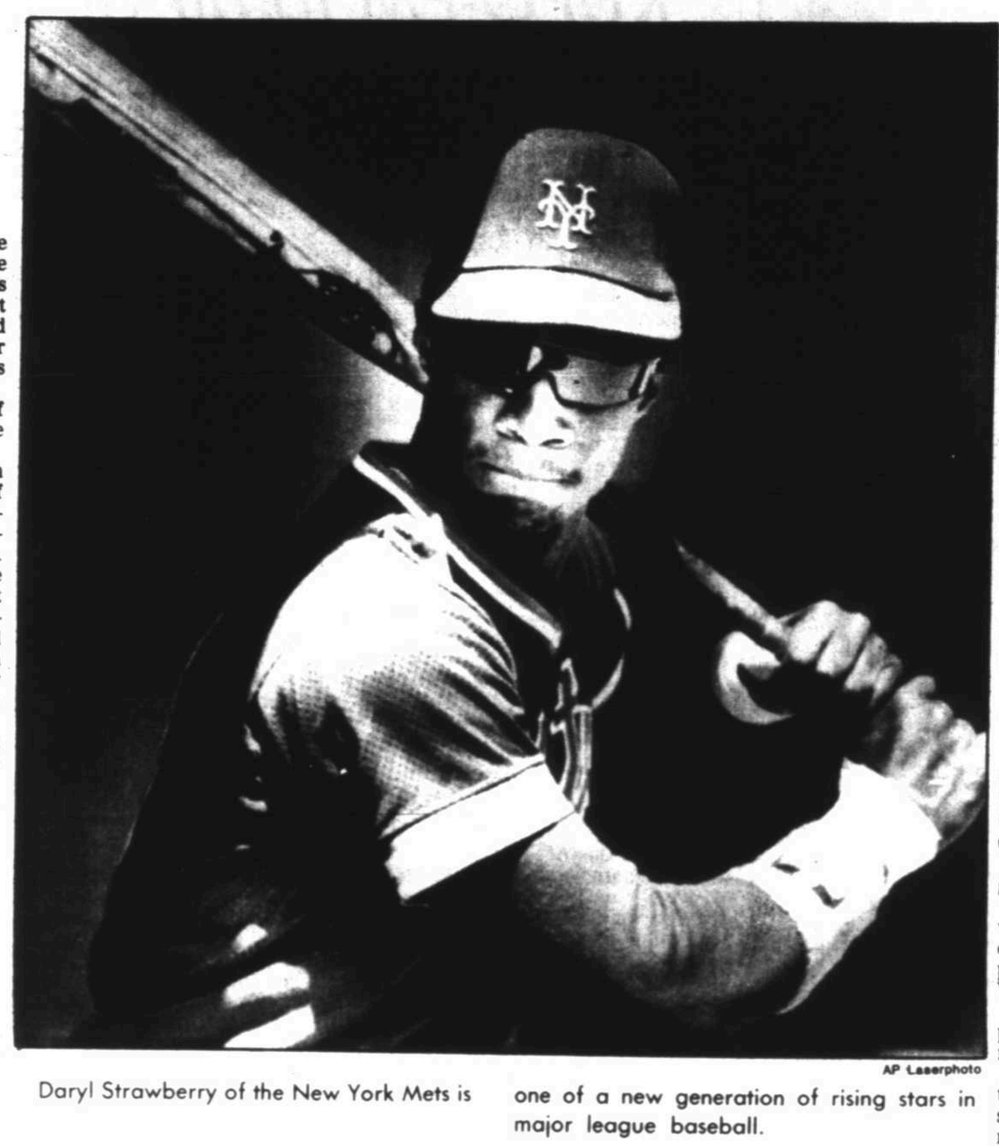

Guzman, who will start the Rangers' season opener because of an injury to Charlie Hough, was 3-2 with a 2.76 earned run average in five starts with Texas last season. The right-hander was 7-1 with a 1.65 in the Puerto Rican winter league.

Bobby Witt, a spring sensation, and Ed Correa may also do well for the Rangers.

Nieves, a left-hander expected to be a starter for Milwaukee, is 33-9 in his last three minor-league seasons.

Bob Tewksbury made the Yankees' rotation and will start during the first week of the season. Atlanta, which waived pitchers Pascual Perez, Len Barker, Rick Camp and Terry Forster in spring training, is counting on Paul Assenmacher, who was 9-2 in the minors last year and averaged more than one strikeout per inning.

While some teams hope their prospects can succeed in the majors, the Cardinals and Padres hope two of their rookies can duplicate their success of 1985. McCullers and Worrell both qualify as rookies because they did not play enough in 1985.

Smith crushes Weaver in first

LATHAM, N.Y. (AP) — James "Bonecrusher" Smith, rebounding from a controversial loss to Marvis Frazier less than six weeks ago, knocked out Mike Weaver at 2:29 of the first round Saturday in a heavyweight fight at the Coliseum Theatre.

Weaver and Smith, two of the hardest punchers in the division, predicted a short fight and they were right.

Sensing the 215-pound Weaver was in trouble, Smith moved in and rocked him with a flurry of punches before referee Luis Rivera interceded. Rivera forced Weaver to take a standing eight count before stopping the fight.

It was Smith's 13th knockout and raised his record to 13-5. Weaver, from Pomona, Calif., and ranked third by the World Boxing Council going into the fight, saw his record drop to 28-12-1.

Wilander in River Oaks final

HOUSTON (AP) — Top-seeded Mats Wilander defeated Martin Jaite 6-3, 6-0 Saturday to advance to Sunday's championship match of the 52nd River Oaks tennis tournament against Jimmy Arias, a 3-6, 6-3, 6-1 victor over Aaron Krickstein.

Wilander, ranked third in the world, said he felt good on the clay court. Saturday.

"I felt like I had really great rhythm, and this was especially satisfying since I have not played on clay since last October, and the French Open (also played on clay) is my No. 1 goal for the year," Wilander said.

Arias, of Jericho, N.Y., started slow and complained that humidity bothered him early in his match with Krickstein.

"I felt like I was dying in the second seat from the heat," said Arias. "All of a sudden, I got my second win and everything started going right for me."

Robbery at the races

SOUTHPORT, England (AP) — Thieves stole jewelry worth nearly $300,000 pounds from socialite Georgina Bronfman on the eve of the world famous Grand National steeplechase, police said Saturday.

Thieves struck while her husband Edgar Bronfman, who sponsors the race through his Seagram holdings, hosted a lavish party Friday night at the Prince of Wales hotel in this English port 16 miles north of the Aintree racecourse.

Inspector Alex McKie of the Merseyside police told the Associated Press that four rooms on the third floor were raided during the party, but only Mrs. Bronfman suffered a major loss.

"The rest of the amounts stolen were small — probably less than 5,000 pounds ($7,300) worth," McKie said.

He said that virtually all the property reported stolen was jewelry.

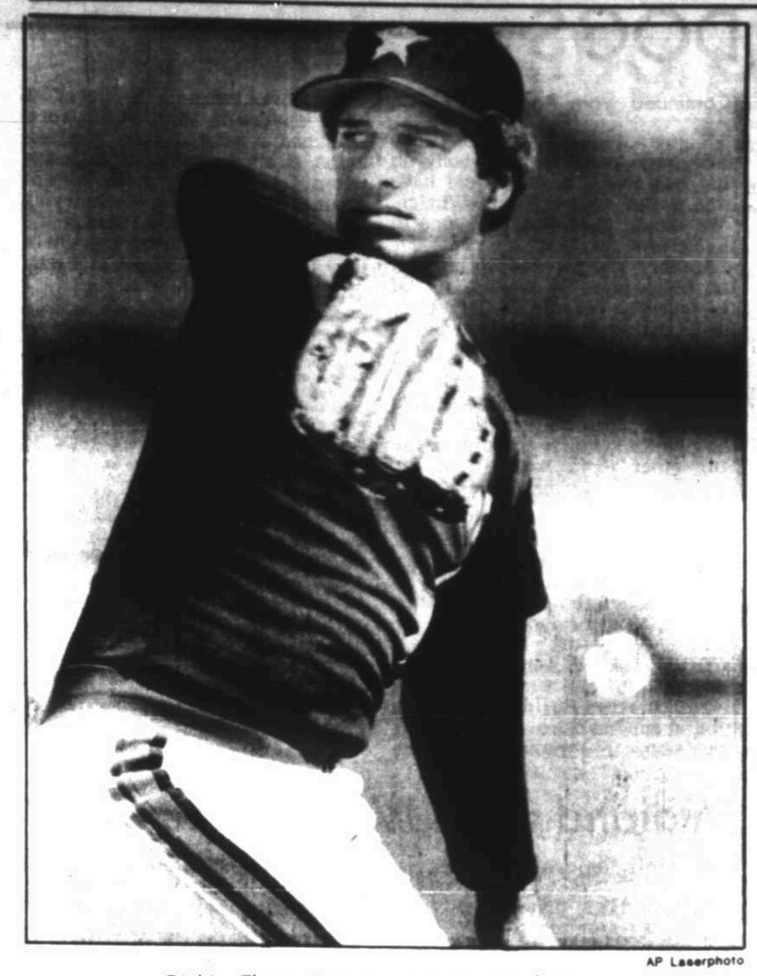

Everton, Liverpool in showdown

LONDON (AP) — Everton and Liverpool set up the first all-Merseyside English Cup soccer final and stayed on course for the English League and Cup double by winning semifinal matches in overtime Saturday.

Everton edged Sheffield Wednesday 2-1 to reach its third straight final, while Liverpool blanked Southampton 2-0.

The final will be at Wembley May 10.

Everton and Liverpool also are the leaders in the league title race, and with both involved in Cup action, third-place Manchester United took advantage to cut the gap to two points by winning 3-1 at Coventry City.

Lanier spring training dream now nightmare

Houston Astros

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

HOUSTON (AP) — The haze was supposed to have been cleared by now.

Houston Astros Manager Hal Lanier had hoped by the end of spring training he'd have the lackluster 1985 Astros whipped into an aggressive, sparkling base-running machine.

He hoped he'd have a solid pitching staff with three veterans and two more young arms to grab the other two spots in the rotation.

He thought the Astros would be primed to improve their standing in the National League Western Division after last season's mediocre showing.

But the Astros will go into Tuesday night's season opener in the Astrodome against San Francisco with almost as many question marks as they started with in spring training.

Strikeout artist Nolan Ryan will be the opening night pitcher, followed in the rotation by Mike Scott and Bob Knepper, but there are no clear takers for the other two starting positions.

Lanier had hoped a 40-pound weight loss would transform Charlie Kerfeld into a fourth starter. But the pitching picture was not clear going into the weekend prior to the opener.

Kerfeld is now being considered for the bullpen and Mike Madden, whom the Astros tried to trade in the off-season, and trade acquisition Jim Deshaies have moved to the forefront as possible starters.

"The thing is, I just want to pitch," Madden said as he battled for a spot on the team. "If it's here that's fine, if it's somewhere else, that's fine too."

Deshaies, who has had some impressive outings during the spring, was obtained from the New York Yankees as part of a deal for Joe Niekro.

Dave Smith returns as the ace of the Astros bullpen after posting a career high 27 saves last season and a 2.27 earned run average.

Smith underwent minor knee surgery in the off-season and hopes to resume his backup duties on a regular basis.

"I like to pitch every three days," Smith said. "Last year I had plenty of chances and I was lucky to come through when they needed me."

Injuries have clouded the Astros starting lineup with leftfielder Jose Cruz sidelined with a knee injury and rightfielder Terry Puhl trying to get back into shape after a freak ankle sprain early in camp.

The Astros were among the league's least agressive base runners last season and the injuries have hindered their attempt to change.

Rangers pin hopes on O-State rookie

Texas

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

ARLINGTON (AP) — One year ago, the rightfielder was slugging home runs for Oklahoma State, the centerfielder had fond memories of playing on the 1984 U.S. Olympic team and the starting pitcher had yet to throw his first major league pitch.

But Tuesday night in Arlington Stadium, Pete Incaviglia, Oddibe McDowell and Jose Guzman will be in the starting lineup for the Texas Rangers when they open their American League season against the Toronto Blue Jays.

They are among the survivors of a spring training filled with tough decisions for Manager Bobby Valentine, who had to make a choice between experience and promising youth.

Youth won.

Leftfielder Gary Ward, 32, and second baseman Toby Harrah are the only plus 30-year-old players in the field and Larry Parrish, 32, will bat fourth as the designated hitter.

"I think this is my time," said Guzman, who is the Rangers' opening day pitcher because ace righthander Charlie Hough broke a finger on his pitching hand.

"I'm still young but that's the way you start. If I pitch as well as last year, I'll help this club."

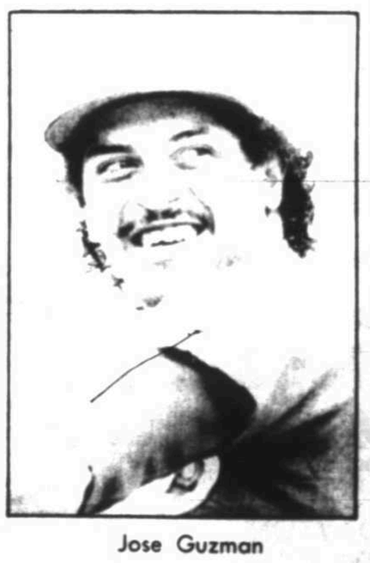

Guzman was called up to the Rangers in September and lost his first two starts. But then he won his last three, yielding only two earned runs over 22.2 innings for a .790 earned run average.

Guzman says he learned a valuable lesson in his debut last season.

"I tried to do more than I could do," he said. "I have talked to (pitching coach Tom) House and he told me to work on what I could do, just make my pitches."

Incaviglia earned a spot in the starting lineup with a compact but powerful swing that shattered NCAA home runs records last season.

Jose Guzman

He set an NCAA record last season with 48 homers at Oklahoma State.

The Rangers hope Incaviglia can improve on the team's last-place finish in slugging percentage last year and their last-place finish in the American League West with a 62-99 record.

McDowell, who hit .275 as a member of the U.S. Olympic team, played 31 games in the minor leagues last season before making a super rookie impression with the Rangers. He hit .239 in 111 games and led all major league rookies with 18 homers and 25 stolen bases.

"I feel a lot of excitement and enthusiasm that I didn't feel last year," McDowell said. "I'm not getting caught up in any of the past failures. We'll just go do our best and the rest will take care of itself."

SWC woes continue to mount

Seven of nine members in trouble

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

DALLAS (AP) — A University of Houston athlete says he asked for and received money to buy a wedding ring for his future wife. Another Cougar player said he sought money from Coach Bill Yeoman to pay for an abortion.

Other athletes reported receiving cars, money and other inducements from school officials and boosters in a litany of charges against Southwest Conference schools over the past year.

Yet tales of alleged impropriety produced a string of shocking headlines for newspapers and telecasts — and in some cases brought NCAA penalties against certain schools.

Former players and recruits told stories linking seven of the nine SWC schools to offers of illegal inducements in exchange for their athletic skills.

IN MOST of the cases, overzealous boosters were cited as having doled out favors to key players, but coaches also have been accused of ignoring the rulebook.

Sanctions were handed down to Southern Methodist, Baylor and Houston, another probe is pending at Texas Christian and more accusations have been made against Houston, Texas, Texas A&M and Texas Tech.

Each new allegation adds to the tarnish of the league's image and brings new headaches for SWC Commissioner Fred Jacoby.

"It's been a slow and agonizing period for the conference," Jacoby said.

He is taking particular aim at boosters in proposing ways to solve the league's problems.

"When you look at the overview, the booster always seems to be involved," Jacoby said. "I wish there was some way to legislate ethics.

"Sometimes they want to help so bad that they hurt. It would be great if they could corral all of that energy into the right direction."

Arkansas and Rice are the only SWC schools not operating under the threat of investigation. The others:

—SOUTHERN METHODIST, charged by the NCAA with recruiting violations ranging from inducements of $5,000 from a supporter to illegal expense-paid trips, received a stiff penalty that started last year. It cost the school all bowl appearances and the loss of 45 scholarships over two years and no television appearances for one year.

—Houston, the 1985 Cotton Bowl representative, is embroiled in controversy in both basketball and football.

The NCAA declared Tito Horford ineligible to compete for the Cougar basketball team because assistant coach Donnie Schverak committed a rules violation in recruiting the 7-foot Dominican Republic native.

Schverak was restricted to on-campus recruiting for one year by the school after an internal investigation revealed he met with Horford during a non-recruiting period.

Former Cougar guard Rob Williams reportedly said he had received a payoff from Houston boosters to keep him from telling that he had received "thousands of dollars" from boosters while he attended Houston.

Houston Chronicle sources said Williams received $7,000 to remain quiet about the alleged payoffs.

The football program also has come under scrutiny after former football players Lonell Phea and David Roberson allegedly claimed they and other Cougar football players received cash from their coaches, including Coach Bill Yeoman.

Jack Sharr, a former backup guard, said he went to Yeoman in 1981 and sought financial help to pay for an abortion. He said Yeoman at first agreed to help but later told Sharr his grades weren't good enough to merit help.

Roberson said he received $300 from assistant coach Don Todd as a down payment on a wedding ring and another $300 as a wedding gift.

Houston officials have announced the formation of an internal committee to investigate the charges.

—UNIVERSITY OF Texas players admitted they sold game tickets for more than the face value to Texas boosters, a violation of NCAA rules.

Former Longhorn tailback Don Holloway said he received money from assistant coach Ken Dabbs, a 13-year veteran of the department. Dabbs has declined comment.

Texas Coach Fred Akers has denied that any of his coaches gave money to players.

—Baylor basketball coach Jim Haller resigned amid allegations that he had helped a player with a car loan. Later it was claimed that players were paid for outstanding performances and received gifts and money from boosters.

The Baylor basketball program has been placed on two years probation by the NCAA and the SWC banned the Bears from the 1986 postseason tournament.

Under the punishment, new coach Gene Iba is allowed to recruit two players this year and four in 1987.

—Texas Christian Coach Jim Wacker dismissed seven players, including All-American running back Kenneth Davis, from the Frog football team after players admitted receiving cash payments from boosters.

The NCAA reportedly is completing its investigation into the TCU program. A TCU booster, Dick Lowe, has admitted he paid players at TCU.

—AT TEXAS TECH, San Antonio schoolboy recruit Chris Pryor alleged that he was offered money and the use of a rental car when was being recruited by former Red Raider quarterback coach Rodney Allison.

Tech Athletic Director T. Jones asked the NCAA to investigate the alligations but no notice has been given to the school that a probe is underway.

Allison, now an assistant coach at Duke, has said he would leave all comments to the NCAA.

—The Texas A&M Aggies and booster Rod Dockery have denied wrongdoing in the case of quarterback Kevin Murray in connection with alleged illegal cash payments and a leased sports car to the player.

Dockery said he did nothing more than give Murray a job cleaning printing equipment at $14 to $15 per hour over a six to eight week period and leased him a 1984 sports car.

Rebels avenge darkness loss, 8-7

From Staff Reports

SAN ANGELO — The Midland Lee Rebels avenged their "Darkness Loss" to San Angelo Saturday with an 8-7, eight-inning win in the Concho City.

Going into the eighth with the score tied at seven, Rebel David Barrow led off with a single off the glove of pitcher Chris Lowry.

Terry Baxter moved Barrow to third with a single on a hit and run and then the excitement became too much for third baseman Craig Nolen.

Lowry tried to pick Barrow off third but Nolen's tag was too late. However, on the throw, Baxter went for second base and Nolen, after two pump fakes, let the ball fly into right field. Barrow scored for an 8-7 game.

Lee had control of the game in the early stages with a 4-1 lead before the Bobcats teed off on Rebel starter Durian Jenkins for six runs and a 7-4 score in the fifth.

Lee countered with three unearned runs in the sixth to tie the game and a final unearned run in the eighth.

Baxter led all Rebels with a 3-for-4 performance while Raul Pena, Jay McCarty and Barrow collected two hits. The Bobcats were paced by the 5-for-5 hitting of Lowry.

The victory moved Lee into a three-way tie for fourth place. Abilene Cooper and Odessa Permian are tied for first at 6-2 followed by Midland High at 5-3, Lee, Abilene High and Big Spring at 4-4.

IN OTHER games around the district, Cooper rocked Odessa High 14-1 in five innings; Abilene High upset Permian, 11-3 and Big Spring won its fourth straight, 3-2 over Midland High.

For Cooper, Danny Whitford improved his record to 5-0 as he gave up one run, four hits and one walk in five innings of duty to put the Cougars back into a tie for first place with Permian.

Meanwhile, the Cougar bats returned to life, collecting 13 hits against OHS pitcher Paul Chavez and Rodney Roman.

4-5A Roundup

Disaster struck Permian in the top of the first inning as Abilene High jumped out to a 7-0 lead, knocking Panther ace Larry Hill, 6-2, off the mound after only two-thirds of an inning.

Brad Cornett finished the game, giving up four more runs, but Permian's bats didn't come alive until the fifth inning when two runs were scored followed by one in the sixth.

Jeff Reese, 5-1, went the distance giving up nine hits to claim the victory.

In 4-5A action on Tuesday, Midland High is at Abilene High, Abilene Cooper is at Midland Lee, Permian is at Big Spring and San Angelo at Odessa High.

"I guarantee you, that kid (Malacara) hurts more than anybody on that bus and it never should have even gotten to him," said Whalen. "We should have won the game in the seventh."

Another key for Big Spring was the Bulldogs' softly swung bats. Of the four hits, only De La Garza's triple to center field and Eric Boyt's line drive out to shortstop were crunched.

The other two hits barely got by the Big Spring defenders as pitcher Aaron Allen and Mike Dodd combined for the four-hit victory. De La Garza finished the game for Castaneda and took the loss.

'DOG TRACKS — Thanks to an Abilene High 11-3 win over Odessa Permian, the Bulldogs lose no ground on first place. However, Abilene Cooper, 14-1 winner over Odessa High, moved into a tie for first at 6-2. MHS is alone in third at 5-3...Yorkman had a good day on the base paths, stealing two bases on a day when five runners were caught stealing, including two Steers trying to score from third...On Tuesday, the Bulldogs travel to Abilene where they face the AHS Eagles at 4 p.m.

Fireworks at staid Masters?

By BOB GREEN

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — The Masters, dignified and detached from the pro golf tour's problems, may be the perfect setting for some fireworks next week.

Before play begins Thursday, questions seem certain to arise involving two-time Masters winner Seve Ballesteros, defending champion Bernhard Langer and the tempestuous Mac O'Grady.

Ballesteros has been suspended for a year, Langer has tax troubles and O'Grady could be slapped with golf's stiffest penalty in a decade.

But while they are here, on the azalea and dogwood-dotted Augusta National Golf Club course with 87 other invitees, they are safe because the Masters is not a PGA Tour event.

PENALTIES or fines leveled against players by the tour don't count at this tournament, one of golf's "Big Four" along with the U.S. and British Opens and the PGA Championship.

Their stories, which have occupied the tour's time and attention, no doubt will be revived and rehashed before the Masters begins, then forgotten once it does.

Unless, of course, they win. Ballesteros and Langer, arguably the best two players in the world, are among those favored to wear a green jacket Sunday.

For Ballesteros, a victory would be particularly remarkable considering he has had practically no competition due to his suspension for not playing a required 15 tour events last season.

Asked if he would eventually return to the U.S. tour, the Spaniard recently said, "If I'm not required to play more than 10 tournaments a year."

Langer, a West German, probably will have to curtail his tour appearances this season because of a tax law that reduces from 182 to 122 the number of days a foreigner can be in the United States without paying U.S. taxes on worldwide earnings.

THROUGH the Tournament Players Championship, he was No. 5 on the money-winnings list with $160,515.

"I've tried to pack as many tournaments as I could into the schedule," he said. Langer was in title contention on a weekly basis earlier this season, but then he tailed off when the tour hit Florida.

"I became very tired, not something I wanted myself to do," Langer said.

O'Grady, making his first Masters appearance, faces golf's stiffest penalty ever if he continues his bitter insults against PGA Tour Commissioner Deane Beman.

He has been silent since he was slapped with the last of three notices of disciplinary action, which could total as much as $12,000 in fines and 12 weeks suspension. Beman promised more penalties if O'Grady's outbursts continue.

If those three central figures are not at the peak of their game — Ballesteros due to no competition, Langer from overextending himself and O'Grady from all the distractions — Curtis Strange could be the beneficiary.

He led during the final round last year until he hit into the water on both the 13th and 15th holes, made a pair of 6's and tied for second.

"With all that's been going on, nobody's going to pay any attention to me," he said.

WATSON, a non-winner for almost two years, has been on the verge of playing well this season.

"I've hit the ball well at times. I've even putted well at times. But, this damn game, it just won't let you get it all together at the same time," said the five-time British Open champion.

Nicklaus, now 46, who counts a record five Masters titles in his 17 major professional crowns, has fared much worse and comes into the Masters with one of the poorest seasonal records of his career. In seven starts this season, he's finished only three tournaments.

"I just haven't been ready to play," he said.

But Calvin Peete is, and he's the only two-time winner on the tour this year. Since the start of the 1982 season, Peete has won more tournaments and more money than any other player in U.S. golf.

"I don't play well at the Masters. The course really isn't suited to my game, or my game isn't suited to the course," he said.

That's the same comment Lee Trevino made back in the late 1960s. And Trevino, 46, winner of two PGAs, two U.S. Opens and two British Opens, still is chasing the one major title he needs for a career sweep of golf's "Big Four."

While the game's established stars, with some exceptions, have had their problems this season, a wave of new faces has appeared.

ASU takes gym title

Dan Hayden scored a 9.9 in the high bar and his brother posted a 9.8 to give the Sun Devils their first national gym title.

Arizona State, which had finished second in 1978 and 1974, scored 283.90 to 283.60 for second-place Nebraska. Stanford was third with 279.50 points.

The Haydens' efforts on the high bar boosted the Sun Devils over the 1.35-point lead held by five-time champion Nebraska heading into the final round of competition.

The judges' denial of the fourth protest proved costly for the Cornhuskers because of an automatic penalty of three-tenths of a point. Without that protest the meet would have ended in a tie.

"I didn't know what the score was at the time," Allen said. But he noted it wouldn't have mattered had the judges agreed with his argument that one inquiry already upheld was the same as two the judges later denied.

Allen filed an inquiry about the scoring on a particular move on the high bar by a Husker competitor and the gymnast's score was raised. Allen said he also filed inquiries about the same move performed by two other Huskers, but those inquiries were denied.

Earlier, Allen filed an inquiry about the score given to one of the Huskers in the parallel bars competition. That protest was denied.

This is the first year the NCAA has permitted coaches to file inquiries about scoring in gymnastics competition. The three-tenths of a point penalty is assessed if the fourth protest filed by a coach is denied.

Besides being hurt by the protest penalty, Nebraska also suffered because of the final vault by Husker senior Wes Suter.

Suter, who was awarded the Nissen Award as the nation's top senior collegiate gymnast on Thursday, slipped and sat down on his landing. His 8.95 score was thrown out as the team low in the vault.

"I saw him sit down," Arizona State Coach Don Robinson said of Suter's vault. "I didn't know the score at the time. I was scared."

Allen said he had thought the Huskers were on their way to claiming the team title.

"I thought we had the meet won," Allen said. "I thought all we had to do was have five vaulters land on their feet. I didn't care what the sixth one did."

After Suter's miscue, Dan Hayden hit his routine on the high bar, scoring the 9.9 for the top score in the team competition.

"It was one of the better sets he's done all season," Robinson said. "We were excited to have him hit it. We had a meeting this morning and said we don't quit until the last man is done. I'm glad to have the gold. It's been a long time coming, 18 years in coaching."

Hasek fourth in nationals

GRAND FORKS, N.D. — City of Midland swimmer Michella Hasek, 15, was just five-one hundredths of a second off her best-ever time in the 100 backstroke Saturday and the result was a fourth place finish here in the National Junior Olympics for swimmers 18 and under.

Hasek swam the 100 backstroke in 59.78 in the prelims to qualify sixth and shaved half a second off her time in the finals for a 59.28 to move up two notches.

Her best time came two weeks ago in the Texas Age Group Swimmers championship when she won the event in 59.23. Her fourth place finish is the highest ever for a Midland swimmer in the 12-year history of the meet.

Her efforts helped the COM girls, of which she was the only one, to a 32nd-place finish in the team standings. The COM boys, of which Sam Perry was the only swimmer, finished in 61st. Combined, COM placed 36th out of approximately 150 teams.

Perry, who swam a 55.0 in the 100 back in prelims Saturday, failed to qualify for the finals.

"I was real pleased," said COM coach Brad Swendig. "We did everything we could for both Sam and Michella to swim well. Michella had some real still competition in the state meet and she came back to swim her best time in the 200 backstroke (Wednesday) and was right on her best time in the 100 back today. She did a great job considering she swam in two tough back-to-back meets."

Small-boating on in waterway: fun way from ocean

By ANGUS PHILLIPS
The Washington Post

CONCH KEY, Fla — Fifteen years ago, Bud Wood, a real estate man from Easton, Md., helped deliver a 42-foot motor boat down the Intracoastal Waterway from Chesapeake Bay to its winter home in Florida.

He enjoyed the trip but had the feeling it would have been much better in a small boat.

That idea gnawed at him over the years, and the more he talked about it, the more he found others who shared his feeling.

"Everybody said the same thing — 'Wouldn't it be great in a small boat?' — but I never could find anybody willing to try it," said Wood.

Last fall he was negotiating to buy a 22-foot outboard motorboat from Fred Quimby at Nautical Marine in Easton.

"We worked out all the particulars," said the 48-year-old Wood, "and then I hit him with the clincher. 'I'll buy it,' I told him, 'but only if you agree to take your boat down the waterway with me, all the way to Conch Key.'"

THE DEAL was struck. Quimby and his 18-year-old son Scott would take their 21-foot Mako, and Wood and his 19-year-old son Roo would be in the new 22-footer.

They left on the tail end of a half-day hurricane that hit the bay late in September and roared 1,247 miles in six days and five nights. They slept under canvas covers by the light of the moon and "the wrath of the rain," as Wood put it. "We called it the Mako Hilton, Suites 21 and 22."

They crossed big bays and little inlets, marshes and creeks, and would up 421 gallons of gasoline later in a winter paradise, none the worse for wear.

"Folks treated us like orphans," said Wood. "We'd pull into a place and get talking to people. We'd tell them what we were up to and they looked at us like we'd had too much to drink.

"But when we explained it, they'd say, 'You know, we always wanted to do that ourselves.' And they kind of took us under their wing."

FOR THOSE unfamiliar with it, the inland waterway is a series of dug canals and natural waterways that winds along the East Coast from New England to Florida, providing a protected route north and south for those disinclined to venture into the ocean.

It is dredged and maintained by the Army Corps of Engineers and served during World War II as a route of commerce for ships avoiding the perils of enemy submarines lurking offshore.

Commerce on the waterway is minimal these days. Most traffic now is big pleasure boats going north and south between the summer and winter cruising grounds of the Atlantic.

The Waterway's nickname among these big-boat skippers is "the ditch." They regard it as a safe but boring service road for coastal travel.

But those with an eye for the natural beauties of river systems, marshes and backwaters see something wonderful about the waterway — something best observed from a little boat.

"We were basically making time this trip," said Wood, "feeling out the boat and getting our bearings. But when we go back, we're going to take our time. We'll bring our bird books, fishing gear and camping stuff. We'll stop at the Golden Isles of Georgia, maybe run up the New Bern River in North Carolina, and I want to run the Florida back country up to Key Largo."

Wood's overall view of the waterway? "Absolutely beautiful."

HAVING RUN a good portion of it two years ago, delivering a sailboat north from Florida, I agree.

But a relatively small, fast boat to travel in is appealing for a couple of reasons: It provides quicker passages in the less scenic, dug canals that connect natural waterways, and a small boat can avoid long waits for bridge tenders to open their draws at most road crossings, which are numerous.

I've often wondered why no entrepreneur has yet organized a charter-boat concession for the waterway, along the lines of the European canal boats.

By renting a boat in the 25-foot range from such a service, a medium-sized family could meander the back country of the waterway in the Dismal Swamp region of North Carolina, down the wild Waccamaw River in South Carolina, along the marshy Sea Isles of Georgia or up and down the fertile Indian River behind Cape Canaveral here in Florida.

THERE'S very little danger in the waterway, outside the inconvenience of occasional groundings. "I've never been on a body of water in my life that was better marked," Wood said.

Wood's destination was Poseidon Harbor, a little marina and motel on this tiny island in the Florida Keys where efficiency motel units rent for $50 a night and you tie your boat up right outside your room.

He's driven down twice so far this winter to fish. When I arrived a few days ago, he had his brother Larry and young Kenny Bryan from Easton with him, and we four went straight to work catching snappers and grunts out of the azure water for our dinner.

That was fun. But what Wood is really looking forward to is April, when he gets to tackle the waterway again.

Nice and slowly this time.

If you are going to travel the Inland Waterway down the east coast, a canoe is not the best mode of transportation, but there is less likelihood of a grounding.

Drum active on coast

Large black drum are being caught along the Texas Gulf Coast, according to the Texas Parks and Wildlife Dept.

Drum averaging 15 to 20 pounds have been plentiful along Galveston's North Jetties, and party boats are reporting catches up to 50 fish per trip.

Most of the big drum were being taken on shrimp, but many were being taken with crab and sea lice.

TPWD biologist Jerry Mambretti says larger drum are not considered good table fare and he recommends releasing any fish that are not going to be consumed.

Black drum fishermen are asked to be on the lookout for tags, which help biologists learn more about the movements snd life history of the fish...

JUVENILE red drum spawned last fall are fingerling-sized now, and fishermen seining for bait are asked to be on the look out for the young game fish.

It is illegal to retain any red rum under 18 inches in length, so seiners need to examine their catch of bait fish and release any juvenile red drum or spotted seatrout...

The TPWD has certified two saltwater fish as state records. Barbara L. Thompson of Kremmling, Colo., caught a two-pound Atlantic cutlassfish out of Matagorda Nov. 4, 1985. Frank Zizmont of Nederland took a two-pound 16-ounce rock hind Feb. 26 out of Sabine Pass...

BOTH LAKE Spence and Lake Thomas reported greatly increased activity last week.

At Thomas, it was principally the crappie, now hitting the spawning season. At Spence just about every variety of fish was hitting every kind of bait.

George Snowden, Snyder, took a string of 16 crappie to 1 1/2 pounds at Thomas, but the most unusual catch was a 6 3/4 pound walleye caught by Sherry Newcomb, Big Spring.

Among the catches at Spence were three stripped bass over 20 pounds, five in the 10 to 20 pound range and numerous catfish, including a 26-pound blue.

White Water can also be found in Missouri

By TOM COHEN

FREDERICKTOWN, Mo. (AP) — Stan Stoy remembers first hearing about a river in Missouri with falls, chutes and eddies of churning white water. He didn't believe it.

Such a river, he thought, could not exist in Missouri, a state of limestone bluffs and gravel-bottomed Ozark streams filled with riffles and fallen trees. White water meant the Colorado River and the Grand Canyon, rafts careening through roaring rapids.

Then he saw the St. Francis River, a steep ribbon of green through the granite hills of Missouri's Lead Belt about 90 miles south of St. Louis. The sight of rapids called Big Drop, Double Drop and Cat's Paw quickly converted Stoy from a pleasure canoeist to a white-water fanatic.

Stoy, 30, is a member of the Missouri Whitewater Association and organizer of the state's only white-water canoe and kayak races. Every March since 1968, racers from across the nation and, sometimes, other countries travel to Silver Mine dam, Highway "D" bridge, Millstream Gardens, Turkey Creek and other landmarks on the St. Francis for two days of running the rapids.

THIS YEAR'S event drew more than 100 participants. The banks along the 400-yard stretch from Silver Mine dam to Highway "D" bridge were dotted with judges and spectators as boats of all colors and paddlers of all styles maneuvered through the 25 sets of green and red gate poles hanging from ropes above the river.

The St. Francis is the only river of its kind for hundreds of miles. A few Arkansas rivers have white water, and a handful of lively streams run through eastern Tennessee. Another half dozen are up in Wisconsin, but otherwise, the St. Francis is it.

"That's what's unique about Missouri," Stoy said. "Because there's only one river, and it dries up in the summer, we joke about the fact that it really should be called the Missouri Whitewater and Driving Club.

"You have to make friends," he said. "That's the only way you can get to these rivers. You end up driving nine or 10 hours."

AS A RESULT, the more active paddlers leave town about every summer weekend. They travel by caravan to the Gauley River in West Virginia or the Youghiogheny in Pennsylvania or the Dead River in Maine.

Mum's the word on price of Masters tix

But buying a four-day pass second-hand would cost about $850. People are paying it, and Masters officials aren't happy.

One out-of-state firm dealing in Masters tickets is Murray's Tickets and Travel in Los Angeles. The company is careful to protect the anonymity of those from whom it receives the badges.

"The Masters doesn't want its members to sell the tickets to the public," said Greg Lacoy of Murray's. "We do everything to make sure they remain anonymous. Accordingly, we won't sell to just anyone. We check out our customers, because we protect our suppliers."

If Masters officials discover someone has sold a badge, that person is dropped from the ticket list.

"These people selling tickets are violating the agreement they signed when they originally purchased them from us," said Col. David Davis, director of the tournament. "They are violating the scalping laws of Georgia and South Carolina. If we catch them, they are immediately purged from the list.

"I wish we could find them all out," he said. "The horrible thing is that we have had thousands of legitimate people on the waiting list for such a long time and these others are speculating and making money off theirs."

Lacoy said Murray's will sell between 60 and 100 badges to the Masters this year. "We pay anywhere from $300 to $600 apiece for them and turn around and sell them for $850," he said.

Selling a ticket for more than face value is illegal in Georgia, said Sam Sibley Jr., district attorney for the Augusta Judicial Circuit. But he added that mail transactions and telephone sales usually come under the laws of wherever the ticket changes hands.

"We're brokers, not scalpers. There is nothing illegal about what we do," he said. "The guys that stand in front of the gate and sell their tickets are scalpers. They make the great profits, not us. They are cash and carry. We declare every penny to Uncle Sam."

Steers split with Bears

SWC Baseball

AUSTIN (AP) — Elanis Westbrooks drove in three runs with a double and triple as Texas exploded for 16 hits in a 16-2 victory over Baylor, but the Bears came back for a 5-3 victory in the second game of a doubleheader Saturday night.

The split left the Longhorns at 36-9 overall and 6-3 in SWC play and cost Texas a share of the Southwest Conference lead with Texas A&M, which swept a doubleheader Saturday with Texas Tech to raise its league record to 7-2.

Westbrooks was 3-for-3 in the opener as the Longhorns scored in every inning but one off six Bear pitchers. Todd Haney and Jay Searcy also hit triples in the opener to help Texas starter Mark Petkovsek win his eighth game in nine decisions. Baylor starter Ted Richardson (6-5) took the loss.

Beatty, 7-1, who also defeated the Longhorns last year in Waco, survived a three-run outburst by Texas in the first inning of the second game. Beatty allowed just two hits over the last five innings.

Baylor used a three-run third inning off Texas starter Curt Krippner to take the lead for good. Keith Shepherd, who hit a solo homer in the first inning, was 2-for-2 with three walks for Baylor.

Texas A&M 10-12, Texas Tech 4-2

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Mike Scanlin hit four doubles and a pair of singles to lead Texas A&M to a two-game sweep of Texas Tech Saturday that catapulted the Aggies into undisputed possession of first place in the SWC race.

A&M captured the first game 10-4 and the nightcap 12-2. A&M had defeated the Red Raiders Friday in the first game of a 3-game weekend series.

The sweep lifted A&M to 28-17 for the season and 7-2 in league play. Tech, which led the league going into the series with A&M, fell to 29-12 overall and 5-4 in SWC action. Texas lost the second game of a doubleheader with Baylor Saturday to fall to 6-3, one game behind A&M.

Scanlin had two doubles and a single in the opener and two more doubles and another single for three RBIs in the second game. For the series, Scanlin was 10-for-14 with two home runs and four doubles.

In the opener, the Aggies never trailed after scoring three runs in the first. Darryl Fry (7-4,1-1), who was relieved by Barry Smith in the seventh, was the winning pitcher. Craig Chapin (5-2, 0-2) went the distance for Tech in losing.

In the second game, Scott Livingstone hit a grand slam in the second inning to boost the Aggies. Gary Geiger (4-4, 2-1) was the winning pitcher and Clay Hollock (4-2, 1-2) the loser.

Rice 6-6, Texas Christian 5-15

HOUSTON — Bubba Jackson hit a home run and two triples to lead Texas Christian's 15-6 win over Rice in the second game and a split.

In the first game, Todd Ogden (4-2, 1-1) worked the final 4 1/3 innings in relief to earn a 6-5 victory for Rice after Tim Vannaman's single in the fifth provided the tying and winning runs. Jim Bane (3-2, 0-1) was the losing pitcher.

In the first game, Jackson's fourth homer of the season in the fifth off losing pitcher Ed Holub (6-6, 1-2) broke a 5-5 tie. He had a run-scoring triple in the first and a two-run triple in the seventh. Dwayne Williams won his seventh game in nine decisions.

TCU is 26-17 overall and 4-5 in the Southwest Conference.

Rice, which also won the series opener on Friday night, is 27-19, 3-9.

ASTROS

Kevin Bass is scheduled to start in center field and Eric Bullock could be the opening day rightfielder for Puhl and Billy Hatcher may start in left field for Cruz.

Thon has had a full spring of regular work at shortstop and expects to fully recover from a career-threatening 1984 beaning incident.

Lanier has pushed forward with his plan despite the injury setbacks and his efforts have not gone unnoticed by the team.

"He relates to the players real well but he wants you to work," Smith said. "The last few years have been laid back but this year is different.

"There were times the last three or four years when we needed a kick in the pants and didn't get one. But with this guy you get it before you ask for it," Smith said.

RANGERS

The Rangers opening night lineup also will include first baseman Pete O'Brien, shortstop Curtis Wilkerson and third baseman Steve Buechele.

The Rangers young pitching staff gets even younger after opening night. Valentine released veteran Burt Hooton and placed Ed Correa, 19, and Bobby Witt, 21, in the starting rotation.

Lower interest rates continuing to bolster nation's home resale market

WASHINGTON — At 3.27 million units, the seasonally adjusted annual rate* of existing single-family home sales last month was 13.1 percent above the February 1985 rate, the National Association of Realtors reported recently.

"Mortgage interest rates, which are more than one-and-a-half percentage points below a year ago, are bringing more people into the housing markets, and many of them are finding the home they've dreamed of is within their grasp," said Clark E. Wallace, association president.

"Now clearly is a great time to buy a home," Wallace continued. "Interest rates are down, and home prices are rising only modestly. In the future, home values can be expected to increase as demand continues and the economy improves," he added.

Association economists noted that a slight 0.1 percent January decline in the seasonally adjusted annual rate of existing-home sales from February's 3.30 million units likely was weather-related. While the monthly home resale rate is adjusted for seasonal variations, unusually bad weather in the Northeast and the West last month had a greater impact than the adjustment factors compensated for.

The association's latest survey of boards of Realtors throughout the country showed the actual number of existing single-family home sales last month to be 217,000, compared with 213,000 in January and 193,000 in February last year. Although the actual number of home resales did increase from January to February, it was not enough to yield a higher seasonally adjusted annual rate.

"The fact that the existing-home sales rate remained above the 3-million-unit level for the 12th consecutive month in February and is significantly improved from last year's rate is good news for homebuyers and the economy in general," Wallace said.

National association economists calculate that each existing-home sale generates an average of nearly $20,000 worth of economic activity in expenditures for landscaping, remodeling, appliances, title insurance, legal fees and other housing-related products and services.

Existing-home sales and related spending in 1986 should represent about $456 billion, or nearly 11 percent, of total gross national product.

The Midwest reported the largest improvement last month, with a 3.4 percent January-to-February increase in its home resale rate to 920,000 units. The West followed with a 1.9 percent increase to 530,000 units.

The South experienced a 0.9 percent decline to 1.16 million units, and the Northeast dropped 8.2 percent to 670,000 units on an annual basis.

Analysts noted that despite the drop in the Northeast, the home resale pace there remained 28.8 percent above a year ago, indicating that the market is still very strong. All four regions had February resale rates that were higher than a year earlier, they said.

Nationwide, the median existing single-family home price increased $400 from January to February to $77,500. The February median was 4.7 percent ahead of the $74,000 median a year earlier.

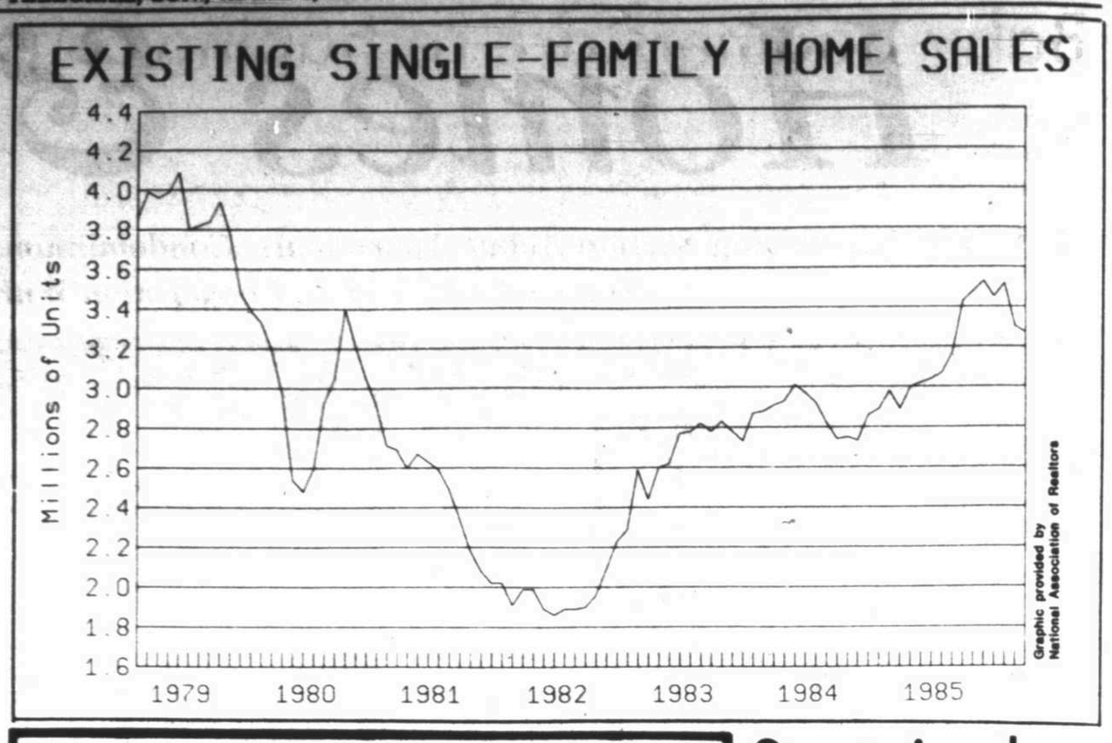

The largest annual increase occurred in the Northeast, where the median existing single-family home price rose 16.4 percent from February 1985 to February 1986, reaching $99,500——$1,700 above the January level. he Midwest followed with a 6.6 percent annual increase to a $62,600 median in February——$2,600 above the January median.

The median existing-home price in the West rose 4.2 percent over the year to $95,900 in February——$900 higher than the January median, while the South experienced a 1.6 percent annual increase to $75,600——$600 less than the January median.

About 51 percent of the resale homes sold in February were in the $40,000—$90,000 range, according to the association. While 1.8 percent had prices under $20,000, 3.1 percent sold for $250,000 or more.

More than 53 percent of the resale homes sold last month had three bedrooms, while 18.0 percent had one or two bedrooms and 28.7 percent had four or more bedrooms. This compared with January, when 52.9 percent of the resale homes sold had three bedrooms, 18.3 percent had one or two bedrooms and 28.8 percent had four or more bedrooms.

The number of resale homes available for sale last month dropped to 2.20 million units, an 8.0-month supply at the February sales pace. This compares with 2.65 million units last month, a 9.6-month supply at the January sales pace.

Not the garden variety home

In the foyer, a most unique slate-looking tile leads to its convenient coat closet and to the living areas.

Swing doors lead to the sunken utility room with extra cabinets for storage.

The bedroom areas, standing just off a hallway from the entry, continue with the contemporary gray appointments in carpeting.

Each of the two guest bedrooms feature large closets; one projects a more feminine appeal with walls of a deep rose hue and gathered sheer curtains accented by a chic full-length drape replacing the traditional closet door.

The master bedroom suite projects its own refreshing feeling with patterned full length drapes replacing the doors to the large closets. A lighted ceiling fan and yellow mini blind appointments reflect the more upbeat theme of this home. In the 3/4 bath, white tile and fixtures with tiny blue dotted paper reemphasize a fresh appeal.

Fascinating Facts

by Bob & Bill Drummond, Licensed Master Plumbers

Barrel pens consisting of pen points and a rolled metal barrel made to fit on a wooden holder were first made in 1780 by a locksmith named Samuel Harrison of Birmingham, England. The first English patent for the manufacture of steel pens was that of Bryan Donkin in 1803. Since then, pens have been widely made. But despite the low cost of the modern steel pen, some sixteen different processes are involved in its manufacture from raw sheet steel to the finished product. Some of these include annealing, polishing, rolling, shaping, curving, hardening, tempering and slitting.

Like pens, furnaces have been around for a long time. If yours has been around too long, let SANITARY PLUMBING, HEATING & AIR CONDITIONING replace it with a new Coleman furnace. Call us at 694-8871. We're your licensed professionals with over 40 years experience in plumbing, heating and air conditioning.

Baby boomers are reshaping consumer housing market

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — More abundant in income than offspring, the maturing Baby Boomers are likely to boost sales of single-family homes over the next decade, but the outlook isn't rosy for apartment builders, a private population study group has reported.

The first members of the Baby Boom generation, people born in the period just after World War II, are about to enter their 40s, years of increasing affluence when people traditionally are married and seeking to move from apartments and starter homes into more costly surroundings, according to the study by the Population Reference Bureau.

"We see nothing occurring in the next decade or so that should dampen Americans' desire for the best, most spacious, detached single-family home they can afford. The increased numbers of middle-aged Americans should assure even greater popularity for this type of home," wrote the report's authors, George Sternlieb and James W. Hughes, professors at Rutgers University.

But, they said, while the huge Baby Boom generation is moving into the house-buying years, people in the much-smaller group that followed — called by some the Baby Bust — are just getting old enough to form households and rent apartments. They added that they expect this smaller group will mean much less demand for rental housing in the coming few years.

Despite delays among Baby Boomers in marrying and forming families, the authors of the report anticipate that the majority of them will follow the traditional pattern as they enter their peak earning years.

But their late decisions to have children — including smaller families or no offspring among many Baby Boom couples — means that their incomes do not face the heavy demands from this source.

"This giant generation has redefined consumer markets at each stage of its life cycle," the authors said.

"First financed by parental pocketbooks, the spending spree began with diapers in the 1940s and 1950s, moved to soft drinks and records in the 1960s, and then designer jeans and stereos in the 1970s, when the generation's own spending took over.

"Gaining momentum during the 1980s, this spending will reach a peak in the 1990s and the peak of the Baby Boom generation's reshaping of the prime consumer market of housing," they added.

"More fertile with income than with offspring, the maturing Baby Boom generation will edge the housing market further upscale," as it is dominated by the affluent, repeat buyer, they said.

They said rental units are expected to face problems, and the recently popular townhouse market could be affected, they added.

They said renter rates are highest for people under 34, just establishing households, and because of the Baby Bust this group will decline by 1.4 million from 1990 to 1995.

Study provides profile of first-time home buyer

First-time home buyers spent more time looking for a house last year and paid less for it when they found it than didi their 1984 counterparts, reports Cicago Title Insurance Co. in itsd 10th annual survey of recent home buyers.

The company's survey analyzes home buying trends in major metropolitan housing markets nationwide. First-time buyers in 1985 were 36.6 percent of the market, down from 37.7 percent in 1984.

John Pfister, vice president and manager of market researach for the national title insurer, said that in 1985, 78.6 percent of the buyers in this group were married coules. Less than half had one or more children under age 18.

Pfister said first-time buyer spent 4.7 months shopping for a home in 1985 compared with 4.2 months the previous year. On average, buyers in this group looked at 15.4 homes before making a purchase compared to 12.7i homes in 1984.

Average famiy income for first-time buyers rose from $35,070 to $37,520 in 1985. However, the median home price dropped from $81,500 to $75,100, a decline of 7.8 percent.

The median price is a mid-oint with an equal number of homes priced above and below it.

Pfister said the average monthly mortgage payment for first-time buyers, which includes principal, interst and taxes, dropped from $8f10 in 1984 to $794 last year. The percentage of household income used for mortgage paymetns was down from 33.7 percent in 1984 to 32.7 percent in 1985.

The average down payment for buyers in this group in 1985 was 11.4 peracaent of the purchase price, and the average length of mortgage was 28.3 years.l On average, the time first-time buyers needed to save for a down payment was 1.8 years.

For 79.9 percent of first time buyers, the down payment was made from personal savings. Relatives helped 11.5 percent of buyers in this group; an additional 8.6 percent got the down payment from other sources.

The Chicago Title study reveals the average age for first-time buyers in 1985 was 28.4 years, down from 29.1 years in 1984. Avaerage family size was 2.6 persons.

A significant shift last year was in the number of first-time buyers purchasing previously owned homes, Pfister said. The percentage rose to 83 percent from 76 percent in 1984.

Detached single-family homes were the choice of 90 percent of first-time buyers, he added.

Some fire hazards can be avoided

By H. Ray King

The Building Advisory Council of Texas (BAC) warns apartment and condominium tenants to be aware of fire dangers in and around their units throughout the year.

The BAC stresses the point that tenants living in complexes with untreated wood shingles on the roof, wood balconies or exterior wood paneling should be even more alert. Just a spark or an ember from a charcoal grill or fire in the fireplace could mean trouble, as it could easily ignite the wood. Also, with the commonly high Texas winds, a burning ember could quickly spread a fire to other nearby units.

The BAC offers the following tips on fire safety to apartment or condominium dwellers:

* Clean out charcoal grills after cooking outdoors. A breeze blowing into the grill could rekindle the coals. Remove the coals and store them in a metal can. Do not store them in a paper bag or plastic trash bag.
* Make certain the building management changes or cleans heating unit filters. Dirty filters in a heating unit could lead to overheating.
* Allow ashes from fireplaces and wood burning stoves to cool before disposing of them. Do not throw them away in a paper sack or plastic trash bag. Store them in a metal can or water them down if they need to be thrown away immediately.
* Keep a screen in front of fireplaces. Sparks can easily jump out of a fireplace when the wood pops, even after the fire appears to be out. Do not build a fire larger than the fireplace can easily accommodate. This will prevent hot logs or embers from falling out.

The Building Advisory Council of Texas is concerned about the fire hazards of combustible building materials being used in the state's growing apartment and condominium markets.

It's time to prepare for the summer heat

By ERIC JUDE
Copley News Service

The first day of spring always is a welcome arrival. But it must be celebrated with a grain of salt. Sure, the day is a sign of renewal and rejoicing, but it's also a sign that the heat of summer soon will be bearing down. To beat the heat before it strikes, experts recommend "summerizing" a home during the spring.

Bill Moore, vice president of marketing for Trane Dealer Products Group, a manufacturer of heating and air-conditioning products, named four main areas on which to concentrate to prepare a home for summer heat.

Central Air-Conditioning. Air conditioners generally are trouble free, so they often are ignored until something goes wrong. If that's during the heat of summer, it may mean a long and uncomfortable wait for repair specialists to get everything in working order. Routine maintenance and checkups during the spring, however, may prevent problems from occurring when the heat is on.

Since air conditioners are complex systems, Moore urges consumers not to attempt to make adjustments themselves. He recommends, however, that they perform some simple maintenance tasks.

To begin, check and clean an air conditioner's filter once a month. Excessive accumulation of dust particles blocks the airflow, forcing the unit to work harder to maintain desired temperatures — and that means higher operating costs for the home owner. To clean the filter, it can be left in the frame and vacuumed or taken out and washed like a sponge.

Also, since air conditioner efficiency depends on a free flow of air over the coil, make sure the outdoor compressor unit is kept clear of all shrubbery and flowers.

Each spring, arrange for a professional checkup of the system. The serviceman should oil all unsealed bearings, tighten belts, check for and repair refrigerant fluid leaks, add refrigeration, flush the evaporator drain line and secure all electrical connections.

If an air conditioner was costly to operate or malfunctioned last year, Moore said it's time to consider replacing it. Though it's tempting to repair an old unit, buying a new compressor or other parts usually won't increase its efficiency, he said.

Before making a purchase, Moore said, check the system's Seasonal Energy Efficiency Ratio, a standard measure of cooling efficiency used by the Department of Energy. A SEER of 6 indicates poor performance, SEER 8, good performance, and SEER 10, excellent performance.

Ventilation. Proper ventilation allows hot air to escape from the home, decreasing by 10 percent to 30 percent the cost of running an air conditioner. Ventilation is especially important in the attic, where summer temperatures can reach 150 F or more.

Natural ventilation can be achieved by placing vents in the roof, the number depending on the floor space of the attic. Start with 1 square foot of vent opening per 300 square feet of attic floor area, following the vent manufacturer's installation instructions. For maximum efficiency, vents should be evenly spaced on all sides of the attic.

A whole-house attic fan is another ventilation device to keep a home cool. Fans can be installed on the ceiling or on the rooftop to draw air from all parts of the house and expel it through attic vents.

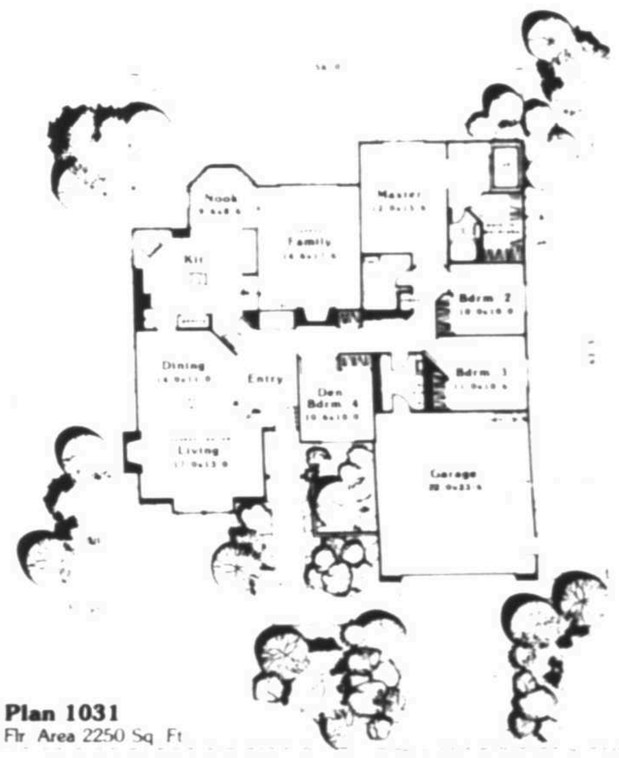

Moore also recommended "installing vents and exhaust fans in kitchens, laundry areas and bathrooms, since activities that take place in these spaces place a strain on air-conditioning by generating additional heat and moisture."

Insulation. Since heat seeps into a house through walls, insulation is as important in warm locales as it is in cold winter climates. As with ventilation, the attics should receive priority. Insulate at least the attic floor, and in very hot climates, consider insulating exterior attic walls, as well, Moore said.

Be sure to insulate around ducts and hot-water storage tanks and bare pipes that give off heat indoors.

Coziness, spaciousness combined in one

Plan 1031
Flr Area 2250 Sq Ft

Bungalow coziness blossoms into a lavishness of space and style in this Tudor inspired showstopper. The sunken living room's heightened ceiling and diagonal latticed windows may be reminiscent of Old English tradition, but the enormous island kitchen, sunken living room and luxurious spa tub in the master bedroom qualify as thoroughly up-to-date.

And what would a splendid manor house be without a wealth of storage space. You'll find it in the kitchen's extra pantry and cabinertry...in the master bedroom's generous walk-in wardrobe...and in the optional den/fourth bedroom; all presented in a package that positively exudes street appeal.

Winter fuels fire hazards

By H. Ray King

The Building Advisory Council of Texas (BAC) warns apartment and condominium tenants to be aware of fire dangers in and around their units throughout the year. It's particularly important, however, to be conscious of fire hazards during cold winter months.

With lower humidity indoors and outdoors, everything is dryer and more susceptible to fire. The BAC stresses the point that tenants living in complexes with untreated wood shingles on the roof, wood balconies or exterior wood paneling should be even more alert. Just a spark or an ember from a charcoal grill or fire in the fireplace could mean trouble, as it could easily ignite the wood. Also, with the commonly high Texas winds, a burning ember could quickly spread a fire to other nearby units.

The BAC offers the following tips on fire safety to apartment or condominium dwellers:

* Make certain the building management changes or cleans heating unit filters. Dirty filters in a heating unit could lead to overheating.
* Allow ashes from fireplaces and wood burning stoves to cool before disposing of them. Do not throw them away in a paper sack or plastic trash bag. Store them in a metal can or water them down if they need to be thrown away immediately.
* Clean out charcoal grills after cooking outdoors. A breeze blowing into the grill could rekindle the coals. Remove the coals and store them in a metal can. Do not store them in a paper bag or plastic trash bag.
* Keep a screen in front of fireplaces. Sparks can easily jump out of a fireplace when the wood pops, even after the fire appears to be out. Do not build a fire larger than the fireplace can easily accommodate. This will prevent hot logs or embers from falling out.

The Building Advisory Council of Texas is concerned about the fire hazards of combustible building materials being used in the state's growing apartment and condominium markets.

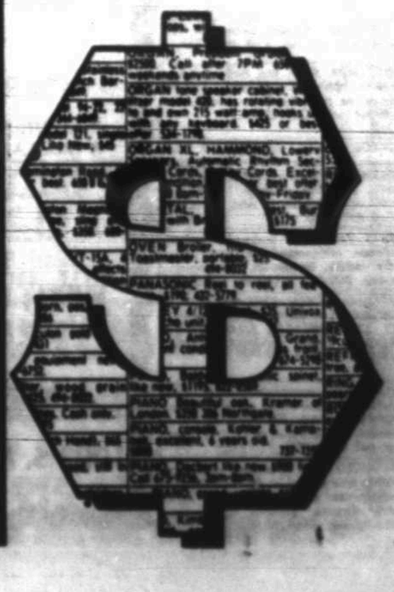

It is the Building Advisory Council's intent to provide fire-safety information and relevant research findings to fire and government officials, as well as the general public, in order to strengthen fire and building codes for low-rise, multi-family housing.

Let's talk about Real Estate

This week 1552 residential properties were on the Multiple listing Market. The implications of this to a buyer should be obvious: there is a wonderfully wide range of properties from which to choose and purchases can usually be made at fair, competitive prices. Add to this the fact that interest rates experienced another small dip Monday (quotes from at least one firm included 9¼% on a 15 year fixed) and it just reinforces the fact that NOW is the time to buy! And if you must sell your present property to purchase another home to fit changing family needs, please let me encourage you to call us to assist you through these more complex, but quite attainable transactions. At no cost or obligation we will help you determine the price at which you should sell and what funds you will need to purchase, by preparing a market analysis of your present home then showing you what is available to meet your new requirements. Then if you want to proceed, we will work together to attain your buying/selling goals. We've beem doing just this for Midlanders for years!

Parade of homes

Mr. and Mrs. Hightowers' dining room looks out into their atrium.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Hightower is featured in the second of a four-part Sunday series on the Midland Junior Woman's Club's 17th Annual Parade of Homes benefit. Proceeds from the homes tour will go to the Palmer Drug Abuse Program, the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children, Hearthstone and the Educational Division on Child Abuse through the Rape Crisis Center. The Parade will be presented 1:30-5:30 p.m. April 27. Tickets are $7.50 and are available from club members. Children under age 12 will not be admitted and tickets will not be sold at the door. For more information, call 689-8314, 683-6406 or 699-6696.

THE HIGHTOWER HOME

While the home of Robin and Jack Hightower at 2007 Stanolind has many attractive features, perhaps its biggest showstopper is — all of things — a bathroom.

The recently remodeled house has a total of 4½ baths, but easily the most impressive one is adjacent to the master bedroom. This spacious, elegant bathroom features a large, raised marble tub equipped with its own whirlpool.

"We just had a lot of room back there when they added the master bedroom," Mrs. Hightower said, so they decided to put the extra space to good use.

The master bath is decorated largely in blue with floral wallpaper, which is accented by live houseplants scattered around the spacious room. A skylight brightens the bathroom and provides the plants with plenty of light.

"They seem to do real well in there," she said, noting that perhaps the extra humidity of being in the bathroom aids the plants.

Please see PARADE, PAGE 2E

The roomy kitchen has been heavily renovated and modernized.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Apparently the secret to eternal youth is dancing. Or that's the conclusion those of us reached who watched the Sun Cities Pom Poms in a recent performance for the Midland Country Club Ladies Association.

The unique dance troupe composed of women ranging in age from 61 to 83 dazzled the audience with their performance, which included acrobatic, tap and modern jazz numbers and ended with their famed pompom routine.

There were gasps of amazement when it was revealed that the Pom Poms director, Corinne Leslie, will soon turn 84. As astonishingly youthful appearing woman and agile dancer, she entertained with a solo soft shoe number, as well as performing with the group.

Corinne and her husband, the late Ray Leslie, were a professional dance team for over 50 years, performing in the U.S., Europe and South America. Retiring in Sun City, Arizona, they initiated classes to teach other retirees the basics of dance for recreation and exercise.

Evolving from those classes, the Pom Poms have been performing for six years, an average of 50 shows per season. Most recent appearances have included "The Bob Hope Show" and the President's Council on Physical Fitness Foundation in New York City.

A number of women were spotted at the luncheon meeting enjoying the company of their daughters, who were in town for the Easter holidays. Among them were Jackie (Mrs. Wilson) Comola with Andrea, a student at the National Academy of Arts in Champaign, Ill.; Mary Lou (Mrs. Jack) King with Julie (Mrs. Eric) Olson of Houston, and three generations, Virginia (Mrs. Billie) Gilbert, Pat (Mrs. Parker) Humes and Paige, a student at the University of Texas Medical School in Galveston, and Pamela. Martha (Mrs. Ben) Black entertained at the event for her daughter, Fredda Hadden, who was visiting here from Dallas, with a party for 12.

A SERIES OF PARTIES in Midland has concluded for Karen Gilmore, bride-elect of Stuart Nelson. Karen is the daughter of Betty and Bill Gilmore Jr. and granddaughter of Dorothy and Bill Gilmore and Madge (Mrs. L.W.) Davis, all of Midland.

Most recently, the couple were honored with a cocktail party in the home of Patricia and Martin Allday, with Kaye and Bill Franklin, Phyllis and Bob Cowan and Dell and John Ruwwe co-hosting. A conversation piece was the serving table decor, a bridal couple, "Mildred and Milton Mouse," dressed up in tux and wedding gown and veil and surrounded by daisies.

That morning, a recipe shower honored Karen in the home of Wally (Mrs. Jerry) Fullinwider. Co-hostesses were Betty (Mrs. Don) Ewan and Patti (Mrs. Watson) LaForce. The serving table was decorated with a large basket of spring flowers.

Festivities also included a brunch and book shower in the home of Joan and Dick Cramer. Also hosting were the Cramers' daughter, Nancy, who will be a bridesmaid in the May 3 wedding, and Iona and Vic Vasicek. The clever invitations, printed in the form of a book, asked guests to bring an item for Karen and Stuart's library.

The Garden Room of Midland Country Club was the setting for a luncheon hosted by Harriet (Mrs. Harvey) Herd, Mary (Mrs. James H.) Steedman and Dorothy (Mrs. William B.) Neely. The guest list included several mother-daughter pairs and even some three generations of Midland families. The tables were decorated with arrangements of spring flowers.

Other social events have been held for the couple in Amarillo and Dallas, including a party at the Amarillo Country Club hosted by the groom's parents, Dollie and Luther Nelson.

NEWLYWEDS MINA HEMINGWAY, granddaughter of the late writer Ernest Hemingway, and Jim Adams, who has strong Midland ties, were both raised in East Africa. When they decided to marry, they opted for an informal style safari wedding. Bastrop State Park near Austin was chosen as the site for Saturday's outdoor ceremony, which was attended by a number of Midlanders.

Jim's parents, Martha and Dr. John Adams of Fort Worth, were missionaries to Africa for over 25 years. A native of Midland, Martha is the daughter of Mrs. Mae Linville and the late Arnold Scharbauer.

Mina's parents, Carol and Pat Hemingway, reside in Bozeman, Montana. Her father was formerly owner-operator of Hemfar Safari Company of Tanzania and instructor at the College of African Wildlife Management.

Owners of the Austin Angler, the Adamses will be busy running their new fishing shop following a honeymoon.

Hostesses were Jo Ann (Mrs. Earl) Whisnand, Martha (Mrs. Jim) Rogers, Mrs. Myrtle B. Shepherd, Mrs. Pat Adamson, Valera (Mrs. Herman) Jones, Faye (Mrs. Bob) Denton, Clara (Mrs. Bill) Johnston, Anna (Mrs. Fred) McMann and Sue (Mrs. Jim) Brusenhan, leader of the Martha Adams Group of First Baptist's Women's Missionary Union.

Mina was presented a lovely engraved, brass tray from the group, which is named for her mother-in-law.

Children honor couple with reception

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson Hollars

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson Hollars of Midland were honored with a reception Saturday in the parlor of First Baptist Church, marking their 50th wedding anniversary. Their children and spouses, Mr. and Mrs. James Hollars of Perrysburg, Ohio, Mr. and Mrs. Ronnie G. Wynne of Grand Prairie, and Dr. and Mrs. Leroy Humphries of Amarillo, hosted the gathering.

Hollars and the former Evelyn McCasland were married April 5, 1936 in Lubbock. They also have 13 grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

The couple has lived in Vernon, Wichita Falls, Lubbock, and since 1969 in Midland. Green has worked in dairy, as manager of Vernon Transit Co., and with Tom's Food Distr. The Hollars attend First Baptist Church and are affiliated with Midland Downtown Lions Club.

PARADE

The atrium was also developed during the remodeling.

"The space was there, but it was just bricked," Mrs. Hightower said. "We added the doors and the glass."

The adjoining dining room has a number of rich brass accents, including a brass chandelier.

The 5,700-square-room house, which is decorated primarily in peach and blue, also has a breakfast nook, two living areas, a roomy kitchen with an angled island and four bedrooms.

The traditional-style home, located in the Warwick addition, was originally built by Harold Schull 23 years ago, but it was completely remodeled by Ralph Tomas in 1984 and decorated by Bettye Jones.

During the extensive renovation, Mrs. Hightower said, "We added the master bedroom and master bath. The kitchen we almost gutted."

The effort was worth it, she added. "We've loved it."

DEAR ABBY

Retirement doesn't slow man down

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: You have never had a letter like this one in your column. I hope you will print it.

My husband retired five years ago, and I still can't get him to slow down. When we ride in a car, he hollers at the person ahead of us because he didn't pull away from the stop sign fast enough. In the grocery checkout line, he grumbles because the lady ahead of him has to write a check.

He wolfs his food down. He's halfway through his meal before I even sit down. When we're walking together, he is always three steps ahead of me. He says I "poke" along. No, he doesn't have high blood pressure. It's way down. But mine is creeping up. We are both senior citizens, and I think it's time we both slowed down — especially him. What do you suggest? — THE MRS. IN ORLANDO

DEAR MRS.: I have the perfect piece for you. It was written by the Rev. Wilferd A. Peterson. I pray your man slows down long enough to read it. It may change (and possibly lengthen) his life:

Slow me down, Lord!
Ease the pounding of my heart
By the quieting of my mind.
Steady my harried pace
With a vision of the eternal reach of time.
Give me,
Amidst the confusions of my day,
The calmness of the everlasting hills.
Break the tensions of my nerves
With the soothing music of the singing streams
That live in my memory.
Help me know
The magical restoring power of sleep.
Teach me the art
Of taking minute vacations of slowing down to look at a flower;
to chat with an old friend or make a new one;
to pat a stray dog;
to watch a spider build a web;
to smile at a child;
or to read a few lines from a good book.
Remind me each day
That the race is not always to the swift;
That there is more to life than increasing its speed.
Let me look upward
Into the branches of the towering oak
And know that it grew slowly and well.
Slow me down, Lord,
And inspire me to send my roots deep
Into the soil of life's enduring values
That I may grow toward the stars
Of my greater destiny.

DEAR ABBY: I'm 21 and recently fell in love with a 30-year-old man. He has never been married. He asked me to move in with him, but he didn't have to ask me twice because I am very much in love with him. He tells everyone he will never fall in love, get married or have kids. But I want all three.

When I pressure him (in a joking way) about my wanting marriage and kids, he tells me I'm scaring him. In a way, I think he really loves me, but I don't know for sure how much.

Should I stay with him and hope he changes his mind about love, marriage and kids? Or should I look for another mate? — WANTS IT ALL IN PA.

DEAR WANTS: Keep looking. But move out first. While you're wanting it all, he's getting it all. Your problem is that you each want different things.

DEAR ABBY: Why does a woman sit around the house in front of her husband all day Saturday with a mud pack on her face and rollers in her hair just so she can look pretty for a bunch of strangers on Saturday night? — JUST ASKING

DEAR JUST: For the same reason a man shaves before going out among strangers, then comes home with a Brillo beard and nuzzles his wife.

French cognac celebrates birthday in April

COGNAC, France (AP) — Birthday time for cognac has just passed. Jacques Martell, director of a cognac firm founded in 1715, says, "Unless our wine can be distilled into cognac by the stroke of midnight, March 31, it misses its first birthday."

He says all true cognacs celebrate their birthday April 1, and it is law that if the wine from the region's grapes is not made into cognac by that time, the brandy produced too late has to wait until April 1 of the next year to be officially registered as authentic cognac qualified for future blending.

AT WIT'S END

Breed vanishing

By ERMA BOMBECK

Okay, you got 15 seconds to answer.

When was the last time you heard a mother-in-law joke? See? You can't even remember.

There is a reason for this. Mothers-in-law have been added to the growing list of endangered species.

Don't look for them at weddings wearing black armbands anymore. They're not there. Don't look for them riding in the back seat of their son's car while his wife rides in front. They're not there either. And you certainly won't find them paddling over to their house with a casserole so her son won't starve. Sightings these days are rare.

There's a whole generation of women out there who want to be Yuppie in-laws, but we're not. (Note that I have just changed person.) I don't mind telling you my time clock is running out. In a few years, I'll be too old to be a mother-in-law. I won't have the strength. The relationship isn't something you can just throw together on the spur of the moment.

A lot of us, seeing no in-laws in our future, started careers and got on with our lives. To be a stereotype mother-in-law is a full-time job.

Take "sighing." It's an art form that takes stamina and controlled breathing. It isn't just something you pick up.

You have to have a pained look on your face that leaves doubt in an in-law's mind as to whether you approve or disapprove.

And have you any idea of the time "guilt" takes? If you do it right, it can take up every minute of your day.

You have to keep track of the holidays spent with her/his family, making sure to send Polaroids of how you draped their empty chair with a floral wreath. You have to "milk" those wonderful moments when your son was late with your birthday card or forgot to ask what the doctor said after your check-up. And you have to be there when he eats his wife's lima beans when he never ate yours.

There was a time when I looked forward to bringing grandchildren home for the weekend and not only spoiling them, but bleaching their underwear and cleaning out their neglected ears.

Frankly, I don't think I could give it the time it deserved. I fall asleep right after the 10 o'clock news anymore.

I honestly don't know if we can ever get back to the mothers-in-law of the '50s, the ones who did the headache commercials that showed a young mother grabbing a hot saucepan out of her hands and grousing irritably, "Mother, please! I'd rather do it myself!"

Some of the few species walking the earth today are actually liked, respected and needed by their daughters and sons by marriage. It'll take a lot of work to get the old stereotypes back.

Someone suggested in view of my age, I might consider adopting a daughter-in-law — one a little older who wouldn't be as demanding — and I'd still feel fulfilled.

I just want someone I can take to the park and lay some guilt on.

Stomach butterflies 'electrically measurable' occurrence

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Stomach butterflies are not an imagined phenomenon, but real, electrically measurable stomach rumblings caused by stress, an Ohio researcher said.

"I think we're talking about a variation in electrical activity," said Larry VandeCreek of Ohio State University, who has measured stomach energy with an electrogastrograph, the abdominal equivalent of the heart's electrocardiograph.

VandeCreek measured his subjects' stomach electricity first while they were relaxing, and then again after asking them to imagine themselves in stressful situations they had experienced in the past. "We asked them to feel the feelings that go with this situation," VandeCreek said. "Remember what you felt."

In people who said they often suffered stomach butterflies, the amplitude, or height, of the electrical waves went up sharply. But in people who did not suffer butterflies, the waves did not change.

All the subjects fasted for four hours before the experiments, so they wouldn't confuse stress-related stomach energy with normal digestive activity.

ASK DR. RUTH

By DR. RUTH WESTHEIMER

Dr. Westheimer

Q. We've had three children, and each time my husband got it on with my best friend of that period while I was in the hospital. This time the woman wants to stay friends with me. Should I let her?

A. No. She has gone beyond what you can let a friend do and get away with. You can forgive her someday later on, if you like, but don't have her around your house and husband.

And your husband! I hope he sees this column. He has gone beyond what is acceptable. That was his child you were bearing. If he could make an opportunity of your being in the hospital to make love to your friend, always making sure you found out, just when you needed love, support, reassurance, then you both need to see a marriage counselor. Something is not right in your relationship.

Q. My husband puts his hand on my thigh and explores while he is driving on the highway. First, this repels me. Second, I want both his hands on the wheel. Is this wrong of me?

A. Yes! You know why? First his hands on the wheel! Then talk about repelling. What nonsense is this? If he drives into a ditch, will the ambulance crew care whether you were repelled or not?

In principle what he likes to do might be pleasing to many women, showing that he has a live sexual interest in his lawful wedded wife. It is a kind of playfulness we sex therapists like to encourage to keep marriages perked up and sexy.

The furtive approach while the respectable couple are partly in the public view can be stimulating to both husband and wife, suggesting youthful ardor and naughtiness. But not if you don't care for it — and certainly not at 55 mph on the highway.

Q. We have been married two years. Our sex life is good and we show each other lots of affection, but I cry a lot because he flirts so heavily at every party. Women take it seriously and touch him intimately. He says it is all "sociable." I don't want this to go on and on.

A. This is serious because it is causing you long-term stress that will harm you, and it is ingrained behavior in him. He can't see why he should change, and I doubt that he can change unless he understands how seriously he is hurting you and his marriage.

First, you have to face the seriousness yourself and be willing to separate from him for your own health and well-being. I don't say make up your mind to split. But face the possibility that it may be best for your good.

Tell him, "I can't live with this. My health and self-respect are going. I don't trust you, and I don't believe in your feeling for me. I want to. If you will seek help in changing your behavior, I will go to therapy with you or be patient with you. If you refuse to see this as important, I can't stay with you and suffer."

I hope he hears what you tell him and can change, because there are such good things in your marriage.

Q. You have said that all women need wooing, but my suitor is all woo and no action. I really like him, though. Do I have to dump him?

A. Some women are all "woo me" and no action. He may want more response to his wooing. Maybe you could melt a little more than you have in the past. Take some little liberties with him, showing what you consider permissible at this stage in your relationship. A well-wooed woman can become a seductress, right?

FORT WORTH

WORTH

In the never-ending feud between Dallas and Fort Worth — some of it good-natured and some of it not — perhaps the most obvious difference is the most often overlooked. Dallas, with its chrome and glass architecture, seems to be looking toward the future while Fort Worth, with its downtown restoration and preservaton projects, has respect for the past.

The cattle industry has been important in Fort Worth for more than a century, so it is only natural that the Fort Worth Stockyard District has become a point of civic pride and accomplishment — and sometimes the butt of Dallasites' jokes. Swift & Co. and Armour formerly operated packing plants in the area. Now restaurants, shops and hotels make the area a booming attraction.

The Tarrant County Courthouse, built in 1894 for about $300,000, is a pink Texas granite and marble structure in the heart of downtown Fort Worth. According to the publication Fort Worth Today, last year's renovation on the courthouse, which cost $12 million, restored the offices and courtrooms to their original appearance.

FORT WORTH'S colorful history is also reflected in its Sundance Square, where red brick streets and unique old buildings present a picture of the past while contributing to the present. The Square's renovated structures house shops and restaurants, and at the same time provide the visitor with a glimpse of Old Fort Worth.

Another historic downtown Fort Worth building is now the Hyatt Regency hotel. It originally opened in 1921 as the Hotel Texas and became known as "Home of the Cattle Barons." The hotel was the site of many social events during the '20s, including the 1925 luncheon which kicked off the fund-raising drive to found the Fort Worth Symphony Orchestra, and an audition, in 1926, by famous Broadway promoter Billy Rose. According to information from the Hyatt Regency, the audition, which was to "discover" young Texas lovelies to be in the entertainment complex, Fort Worth Frontier Centennial, was a disappointment to one young woman from Weatherford, who later achieved fame as Mary Martin.

Perhaps the most famous visitors to the Hotel Texas arrived in November of 1963. President and Mrs. John F. Kennedy spent the night there Nov. 21 of that year, before traveling on to Dallas the next day.

Ossie Richie, bartender at the Hyatt Regency, has been with the hotel for 29 years and served breakfast to the Kennedys the morning of Nov. 22. Richie remembers Kennedy as a "very gentle man. We shook hands that morning before he went to the head table. Something went through me — what little hair I had stood up."

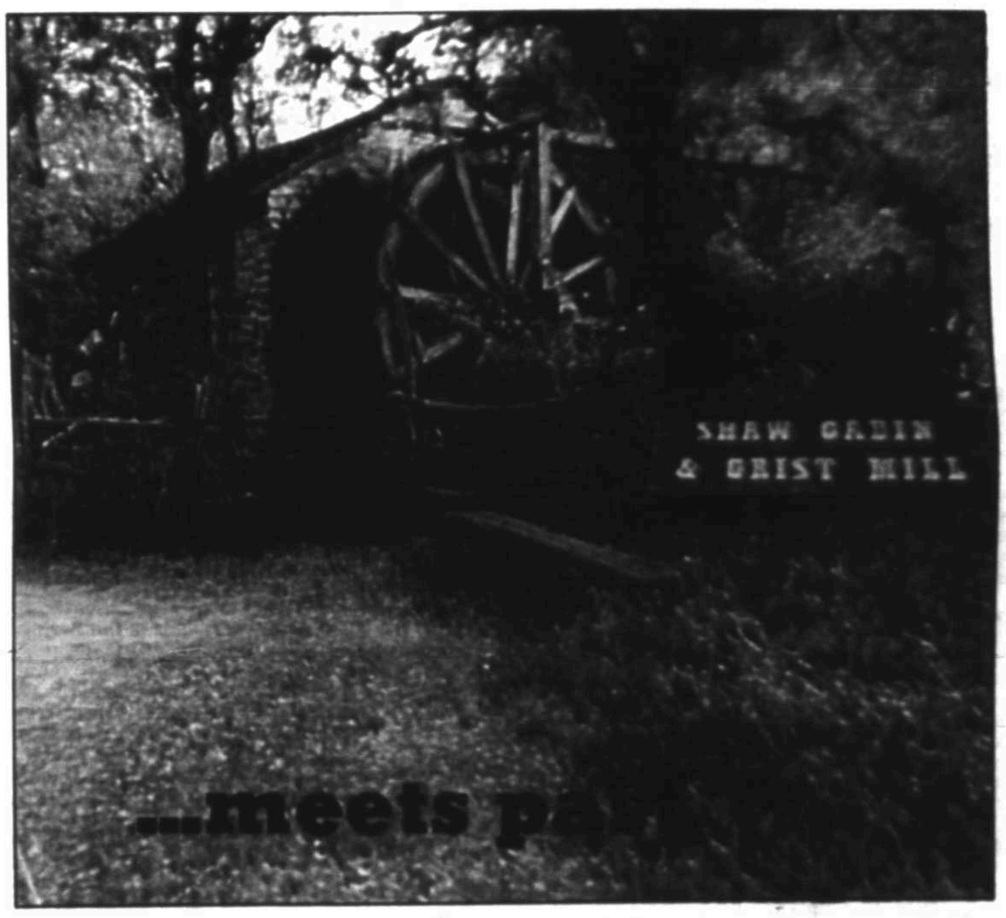

MRS. KENNEDY was "charming," he said. "She had the most beautiful smile I had ever seen."

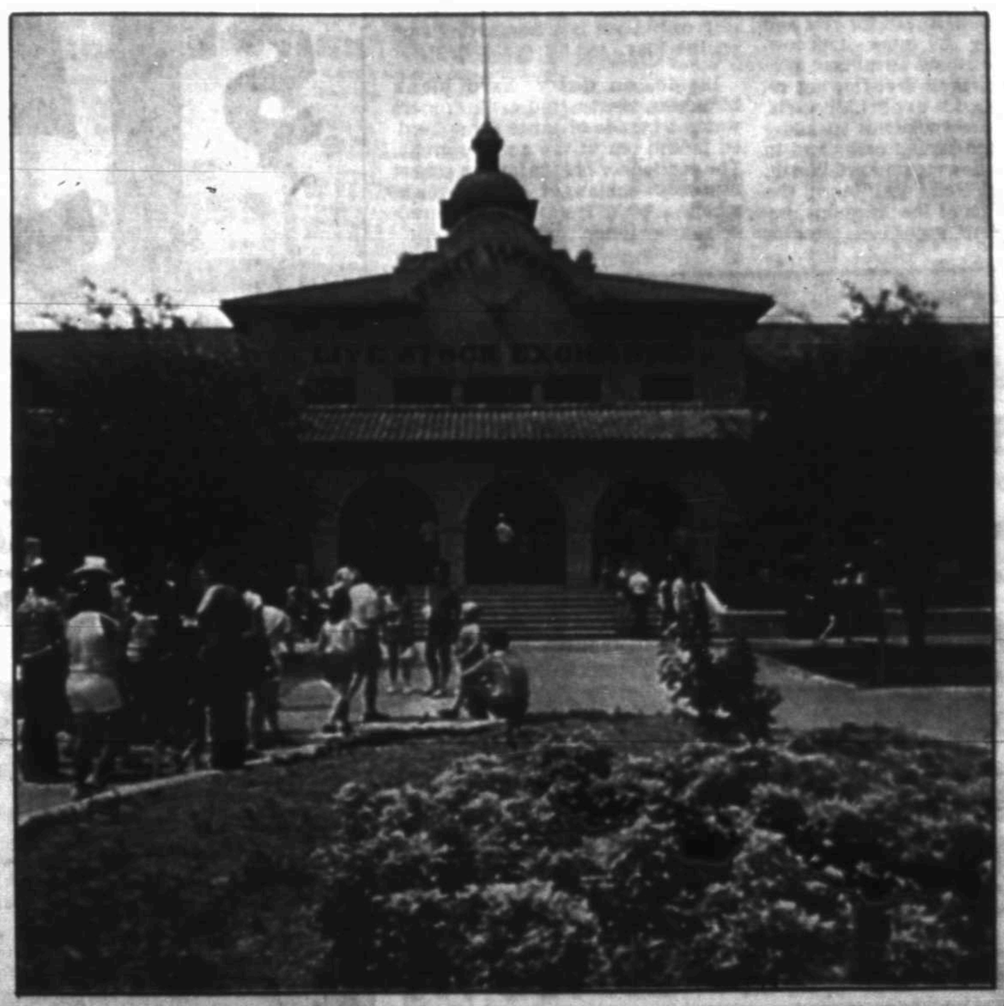

When the news came about the assassination, Richie said it "seemed like the world ended. I just walked off — it seemed like everything was on standstill."

Other celebrities who stayed at the Hotel Texas included Joan Crawford and Gloria Swanson, Richie said. "At that time we had the Palace Theatre" where Hollywood stars frequently appeared.

In 1979, after several operators and renovation projects, the hotel was named to the National Register of Historic Places and was taken over by Woodbine Development Corporation and Hyatt Hotels Corporation. A massive renovation changed the inside of the hotel while it preserved the outside. Richie said the rooms are now bigger, the lobby ceiling is lower, the skylight court was added and other extensive changes were made. "About the only thing left of the Texas Hotel is the outside," he said.

Please see FORT WORTH, Page 2F

The Hyatt Regency is one of many old buildings in downtown Fort Worth which have restored or renovated. The Flatiron Building is a triangular-shaped building, an architectural style more common early years of the century. Caravan of Dreams, a downtown performing arts center, is housed in a restored building, constructed in 1904, and several churches in the area have been in use for decades.

First Christian Church of Fort Worth, established in 1855, moved into its present building in 1915. Organ concerts are presented at the church at 12:10 p.m. each Wednesday.

St. Andrew's Episcopal Church's parish was founded in 1875. Its present building was completed in 1912.

St. Patrick Cathedral, along with its rectory and St. Ignatius Academy nearby, is in the National Register of Historic Places. The parish was established in 1870, and the church, built between 1888-1892, is still in use today.

According to its historical marker, St. Ignatius Academy was the first Catholic school in Fort Worth. It was begun in 1885 by the Sisters of St. Mary of Namur, and the school building itself was completed in 1889. Classes were conducted there until 1962.

Other areas in downtown Fort Worth are of more recent construction. The Water Garden, near the modern Tarrant County Convention Center, sends 19,000 gallons each hour through ponds and over waterfalls. Civic beautification efforts are evident in the daffodils blooming beside traffic-heavy streets.

Downtown Fort Worth isn't the only area in the city to take pride in the past — and in the present. Just a few miles away is the Fort Worth Zoo, home of thousands of exotic animals — some endangered — including lions and tigers and bears as well as giraffes, gibbons, hippopotamus, mountain goats and all kinds of birds. The zoo also houses the James R. Record Aquarium and what is reported y to be "American's largest herpetarium" — which means it houses a lot of snakes.

Next door to the zoo is an amusement park catering mostly to children's tastes. Many kiddie rides are offered, but the one most worth the trip is a 75-year-old merry-go-round which features calliope-type music and horses that go up and down. At 35 cents a ride, the carousel is a small, inexpensive taste of the past.

Across the street from the zoo is Log Cabin Village, another step back into Texas history. Seven cabins — homes of Texas pioneers Isaac Parker, Captain Howard, Harry A. Foster, John Baptist Tompkins, Thomas J. Shaw, William Sidney Pickard and Isaac and George Seela — have been moved to the Fort Worth location, restored and opened for public viewing. Docents and craftsmen employed through Senior Texas Employment Program are on hand to demonstrate skills such as spinning, quilting and grinding cornmeal.

Other points of interest in Fort Worth, historical and otherwise, include the Amon Carter Museum, the Fort Worth Art Museum, the Fort Worth Museum of Science and History, the Kimbell Art Museum, the Thistle Hill mansion — built in 1903 as a wedding gift for cattle and oil baron W.T. Waggoner's daughter — the Eddleman McFarland House, the Botanic Garden and its Japanese Garden.

And of course, there's Billy Bob's Texas, a sprawling country-western nightclub like a modern-day Longbranch, for those who are so inclined.

Fort Worth's past, preserved alongside the present, is proof that Cowtown — which some call the edge of West Texas — has more to offer than Dallasites care to admit.

Tourist industry attracts mature travelers

By EVELYN KIERAN
Copley News Service

It's no news to lots of people that the older you get, the more travel opportunities come your way. And as I am rapidly becoming eligible for senior discounts, I get more interested in the many notes relating to bargains for seniors that come across my desk.

Seems as though everyone in the travel industry — hotels, restaurants, travel agents and tour operators — are doing everything they can to attract more mature travelers. They claim that folk seem to pick up the three keys to successful touring: curiosity, common sense and patience as as they mature. Let's hope they're right.

"There's no reason in the world why traveling shouldn't be a piece of cake for reasonably healthy, mature people," Robert Dunn, vice president of the travel division of the 16-million-member American Association Of Retired Persons, told Newhouse News reporter Joel Sleed in a recent interview.

"After all, they know Rome wasn't built in a day and they're aware that it's foolish for them to think they can properly see it in one day."

Dunn, who is 62 and a bachelor, has spent more than 25 years tracking the ways of the mature traveler. He divides his time equally between checking out tour operations and facilities here and abroad and lecturing to older and retired people about travel opportunities. In the course of a year, he travels about 10,000 miles and lectures to about as many people.

CNS Graphic

IN THE INTERVIEW with Sleed, the travel executive offered the following advice for travelers of all ages — some of which can be taken somewhat lightly with a grain of salt:

If you're traveling with a spouse or companion, sit down and find out what each of you actually wants to see and do. Make a list.

If you want to shop during that free hour and your friend prefers museums, agree to go your separate ways before you ever start out — otherwise, you'll spend the hour arguing, with no one happy at the result.

Get brochures from at least six tour companies. Be sure to read the small print so you'll know exactly what you're getting for your money. The front page may have one price, but the add-ons listed in the small print, such as tipping, transfers, etc., could push the price way up. Be sure to find out everything that's included in the price.

Check the number of meals included in any package and make arrangements for others.

Learn the language of the brochure. For instance, you should know that a continental breakfast may only be a roll and coffee. And there's a big difference in how something is worded.

If the brochure states that you'll see the Louvre, your tour bus might just be driving by it. The correct language should be that the group will visit the Louvre.

TAKE A LIST from each brochure and add up the total cost. Then go to a travel agent and ask him about the package. If there are some things he can't answer, call the tour operator directly. Just about every one of them has a toll-free number.

This also applies to the actual number of days included in the package — a 10-day trip may start late the afternoon of Day 1 and end early on the morning of Day 10 — cruises are notorious for this.

Make sure the tour operator will send you any necessary documentation you may need in your travels, such as visa applications, and also ask if you'll need any inoculations.

Be sure to get the shots well enough in advance so they won't bother you on your trip.

Take at least a two-week supply of prescription medications with you in your carry-on luggage. Also, get a typewritten generic prescription, as well as a typewritten prescription for your glasses.

The major thing to remember is to do a lot of homework before deciding on which tour to take.

"You're spending a lot of money and a bad choice will only result in bad memories. That's something you can't get back," advises Dunn.

Anyone 50 or older is eligibile to join the American Associaton of Retired Persons. Meantime, here are some other good travel buys to consider:

■ Swiss Miss: This year 385 hotels in 140 Swiss cities and resort towns are featuring special rates for men over 65 and women over 62 (or for couples in which one partner is the eligible age). The 1985 "Season For Seniors" program, sponsored by the Swiss Hotel Association, offers senior customers the accommodation of their choice, including breakfast, service charges and taxes at a reduced rate. For a brochure, write: Swiss National Tourist Office, 608 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y. 10020.

■ Directory Results: Californian Harry H. Henry has updated his Senior Citizen Travel Directory, which tells where to find hotel, entertainment, dining and transportation bargains in the United States, Canada, Mexico and the British Isles. For a copy, send $3.95 to: Senior Directory, P.O. Box 1822 Oakland, Calif. 94612.

■ Passage To... Designing enjoyable holiday packages for folk 55 and older is the whole idea at Passages Unlimited Inc., a Stamford, Conn. tour wholesaler. They will arrange "at homes" (fully equipped resort or apartment-hotel accommodations) for people who simply want to establish a home base and explore Europe on their own.

Those who need more help in planning their vacations may take advantage of moderately priced tours to the continent, India and Nepal or the Soviet Union. Holiday packages, such as their 24-day excursions through the Greek Islands ($1,579 per person, including all airfares, meals and accommodations) may be booked through any retail travel agent.

Other companies also specialize in programs for the mature traveler:

■ Grand Circle Travel has been arranging tours for the 50-and-older set for 26 years. In addition to escorted worldwide tours, cruises and more leisurely "countryside tours of Europe," Grand Circle features "extended vacations," which enable travelers to choose a single overseas destination and stay as long as they want or add on excursions to other places.

Contact Grand Circle directly (and ask for a copy of the free 24-page booklet, 101 Tips For Mature Travelers), 555 Madison Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022; (800) 221-2610.

■ Saga International Holidays aims year-round, off-peak travel programs at people 60 and older. Opportunities range from domestic and international coach tours and cruises to "Adventure Holidays" in Kenya, India/Nepal and Australia.

Equally popular are their tours of the U.S. National Parks and the Canadian Rockies. Contact them at 120 Boylston St., Boston, Mass. 02116; (800) 343-0273 (for information), (800) 762-3413 (for brochure requests).

Fort Worth projects Old West atmosphere

By JACK BIESTERFELD
Copley News Service

"Howdy, Pard'ner!"

Welcome to the Old West. The West of cowboys and longhorn cattle. Of Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid. Of rodeos and honky-tonk saloons.

Welcome to Fort Worth.

Although this bustling city not far from Dallas is bursting with new skyscrapers and ultramodern buildings, it can't shake its Old West image. And it shouldn't try. It is a living legacy of a glamorous era of American history.

Legend has it that there was a big old oak tree on the banks of the Trinity River in the early 1800s that was a favorite spot for friendly Indians and early pioneers to swap linens and beads for ponies and pelts. Then in 1849 an Army fort was established on a river bluff nearby and named after Mexican War hero Gen. William Jenkins Worth, and Fort Worth was born.

Soon a town sprang up, and it boomed as cowboys and trail drivers stopped over on their way up the legendary Chisholm Trail.

This was the last spot for rest and recreation for 300 miles, and cowboys took the utmost advantage of it. Saloons, with their free-flowing refreshments and dancehall girls, lured many a cowpoke into spending his year's hard-earned cash. And in what is now downtown Fort Worth, a spot called Hell's Half Acre, the most notorious of the hangouts, became home to such bad guys as Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid.

The Fort Worth Stockyards to the north became the cattle hub of the nation, with millions of head of cattle crowding into its acres and acres of wooden pens, before being auctioned off and butchered nearby. Naturally, the area became a great rodeo center and hub of Western culture.

Much of that culture is being revived — if, in fact, it was ever dead. The stockyards are undergoing a multimillion-dollar restoration into a major tourist center. The 150-acre area is an official National Historic Landmark, and development is in keeping with the historic nature of the area.

Hub of the Stockyards District is the Livestock Exchange Building. Deals made around this building, constructed in 1902, made millionaires out of many a cattle trader. The Spanish mission-style stucco and tile building still houses major stock trading firms but, in addition, holds several shops and galleries.

Out back, a wooden skywalk spans dozens and dozens of pens, often crowded with loudly protesting cattle, awaiting sale in the nearby auction house. That building, a squat, square cement block structure, is unimpressive, yet is a fascinating stop on the tour.

Inside, on dusty, hard plank bleachers, visitors and cattle traders watch a parade of cattle being herded in and out of the auction arena. The auctioneer breaks into an almost non-stop onslaught of jibberish, which only the trained ear of a trader can decipher.

Pribilof Island celebrates its roots

New York Times News Service

In the year 1786, Gerassim Pribilov, commander of the Russian fur sealing sloop St. George, discovered a group of five islands in the Bering Sea. Today, the Pribilof Islands, part of the state of Alaska, draw thousands of visitors to view the horde of northern fur seals and myriad seabirds that migrate to their rookeries each summer.

This year, to commemorate the bicentennial of the islands' discovery by Pribilov, St. George — one of the two inhabited islands in the chain (the other is St. Paul) — will be the site of a celebration. Activities throughout the summer will focus on Aleut culture, history and religious and secular traditions.

MISTER ROGERS

Children need comfort

By FRED ROGERS
with BARRY HEAD

Rogers

It had all the makings of a disaster: an active 12-month-old toddler, an anxious young mother and father, and the three of them sandwiched into the middle aisle of a jam-packed, stuffy, jumbo jet that was delayed on the runway prior to a three-hour flight.

The toddler's parents had given him a lollipop — their first attempt to keep him quiet and happy. The boy seized the sticky end with his free hand, then, standing on his father's lap, reached into the hair of the woman in the seat ahead. His parents yanked him sharply back, and when his father took the lollipop away and ate it himself, the boy set up a howl. From there it was downhill all the way.

His parents gave the boy the in-flight magazine, but he tore it and got scolded. They enticed him with the snap-out tray table, but when he repeatedly banged on it, his mother slapped his hand — gently but firmly.

He screamed and squirmed down to get off the seat. They jangled a set of plastic keys in front of him. He snatched them and flung them into the aisle, wriggling and sobbing.

By this time, the passengers all around were shaking their heads and rolling their eyes as if to say, "We can see what kind of flight this is going to be."

The mother tried the bottle. The boy, crying hard, struck out at it and hit his mother instead. The mother struck back, not hard, but with anger enough to provoke a real scream of temper from her son. And so it went — for the half-hour delay before takeoff and all during the first hour of the trip until finally the boy, exhausted, fell asleep in his mother's lap.

There's no pretending that there's an easy answer to such dilemmas, but the real-life scene above made me realize once again how sensitive young children are to their parents' feelings — how easily they "catch" the feelings of the grownups close to them.

In this instance, the boy was catching both anxiety and anger, and he certainly became anxiously angry himself. Who knows what his parents were going through? This trip may have been difficult for them from the moment it was booked. Unfortunately, their son's reaction was making the whole thing all the more difficult for them.

There may have been an alternative, though. If the parents could have kept their own tensions under more control, their son might have caught some calm instead of catching mostly stress.

Instead of trying constant distraction, those parents might have had more luck lessening their son's level of stimulation by making their laps safe, quiet places in the confusing new environment of the airplane.

Certainly this kind of parental calmness can be difficult and hard to maintain, but so often it's just this kind of self-control that young children need to borrow from us before they have self-control of their own.

Of this we can be fairly sure: When our young children find themselves in new and confusing situations, they'll look to us for something to borrow...and that makes it worth thinking about what it is we're going to offer them. It could very well be a gift that lasts a long, long time.

New York Times News Service

Amid discussions of development of the next generation of supersonic passenger aircraft, there will always be travelers whose pulse stirs to the rhythms of the railroad.

For such individuals, a series of tours through Switzerland has been designed to appeal both scenically and technically — with steam and electric trains, standard and narrow gauge railways, fast and slow travel and cogwheel and adhesion rails.

Beginning and ending in Zurich, the tours include not only train trips but also lake steamer excursions along an itinerary that takes in most of the country — including places such as Lucerne, Bern, Interlaken, Gstaad, Lausanne, Zermatt, Locarno, St. Moritz and Davos. Tours are scheduled May 16 to June 1, June 13 to 29, July 18 to Aug. 3, Aug. 15 to 31, Sept. 19 to Oct. 5 and Oct. 17 to Nov. 2.

Based on double occupancy, the Railroader tour is priced at $1,479 a person. Included are train travel, lodgings, most meals, transfers and baggage transport. Round-trip air fare between New York and Zurich is expected to range from $768 to $876. More information and a brochure are available from Europe Train Tours (17372 Chicago Avenue, Yorba Linda, Calif. 92686; 714-524-5130 or, from outside California, 800-551-2085).

Midland thrifts pass through final phase of deregulation

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

There was not much fanefare, but Midland thrifts passed through an era this week — the last phase of deregulation.

Beginning April 1, the 5.5 percent rate ceiling on regular savings accounts, including passbook and so-called statement accounts, was removed, leaving banks and saving sand loans free to pay any rate they wish.

The move, hailed by consumer groups, ends Depression-era restrictions on banking and allows small savers to earn market rates of interest. At the same time restrictions on savings accounts were eased, the Depository Institutions Deregulation Committee, formed to dismantle savings regulations in 1980, ceased to exist.

"Essentially what this last round means is that we can pay whatever interest rate we choose on time deposits that, traditionally, the less one had on deposit the less one got in interest. I think we're seeing the demand account becoming extinct," said Don Jones of United Bank.

This last round of deregulation certainly does not have the excitement of earlier phases of deregulation that helped boost the popularity of the IRA, the NOW checking account, and mini-jumbo and jumbo certificates of deposit, and few changes will be seen locally in savings banks.

"I don't expect much excitement or activity from this latest round of deregulation," said Robert Baxter, president of First Bankers Trust and Savings. "There's already been enough deregulation that the public won't really notice much difference."

According to Bob Bevins, vice president with First Federal Savings in Big Spring, about the only thing customers will notice is a higher minimum deposit required for opening a savings account. He said First Federal requires $100 for adults and $25 for children to open a savings account, as opposed to the old industry standard of $5.

Otherwise, First Federal plans to continue paying 5.5 percent on savings accounts, but will observe the market, the competition and see what the market dictates. He anticipates that First Federal will make some adjustments down the road, he said.

On the other hand, Manufacturers Hanover Trust in New York just cut its savings account minimum from $300 to $1, and will compound interest daily instead of quarterly. The bank also will charge $3 per month on balances below $400, rather than $2 on balances below $300.

"One thing keeping financial institutions from getting into new rates is that rates are already so low, this might decrease them even more," Bevins said.

Indeed, experts say an upward swing in rates might cause passbook savers to switch to to other accounts, such as in the late 1970s. Ballooning rates then caused savers to switch to higher-yielding products like money-market mutual funds and interest-bearing checking accounts. Passbook savings peaked at a high of $499.5 billion in May of 1978, falling 42 percent to $288.5 billion at the end of 1984, according to Federal Reserve Board data.

However, with interest rates drifting into single digits, passbook savings are showing a comeback, with the amount in such accounts increasing 5.7 percent since the end of 1984.

UP FROM CHAPTER 11

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Aaron Giebel once rode a high horse. He was chairman and largest stock holder of MGF Oil Co., one of the most progressive and fastest-growing exploration and drilling companies in the nation, with 1,300 employees, 46 drilling rigs, 6.25 million barrels of oil reserves and 65 billion cubic feet of gas reserves. In its prime his prized MGF stock sold for $28 a share. He owned extensive oil and gas production, an oilfield trucking company, drilling rigs, cattle ranches, pecan farms and real estate development firms and made money hand over fist.

Then came the bust of 1982 and Giebel suddenly found himself biting dust — shot from the saddle by a registered letter from his bank that called his $24 million in notes and forced him to take Chapter 11. It was a grim, dark experience.

Today, the Brangus ranches and the 28,000 pecan trees in the Maverick County orchards are gone, and his MGF stock which had been used as collateral to launch his mini-conglomerate is worthless, but for Aaron Giebel things are brighter. "I can smile again," says Giebel, who just completed a reorganization that guarantees the survival of his company and satisfaction for his creditors.

Under the terms of the agreement hammered out with FDIC over a three year period 72 percent of the creditors named in his Chapter 11 will be paid off in cash, 26 percent of the larger creditors will receive a 20 percent cash payment with the balance to be paid-off over a three year period and the remaining largest two percent of the creditors, which include FDIC, will become limited partners in Giebel Petroleum Ltd. High Sky Drilling Inc., a newly formed company that will receive the assets of A.F. Giebel Petroleum Consultants Inc.

"First National had been my bank forever," said Giebel. "It was a shock when I received the registered letter calling my notes. I never suspected it for a moment. The only thing I could do to keep things in place was take Chapter 11, and I had to do it quickly, or everything I owned would have been auctioned off at the court house." He said he knew he could makes things right again if he only had time to reorganize.

Said Giebel: "I don't know what other nations do when businesses fall on hard times, but I do know that Chapter 11 is a good thing for this country. It's like a referee in a rough and tumble game of free enterprise. It locks everything in place so all parties involved can pause, reflect and determine the most beneficial remedy for all concerned."

Oman hardest hit by falling crude prices

Los Angeles Times,
Washington Post News Service

MUSCAT, Oman — Few of the oil-producing countries of the Persian Gulf were hit so hard and fast by plunging petroleum prices as Oman. And few reacted as quickly in trying to bring their economies into line with the new realities.

In late January, Oman devalued its currency, the rial, by 10 percent and cut the budgets of all its ministries by the same amount.

Yet it is now clear that these measures will not begin to be adequate, and the recent story of Oman's economy — fiscally conservative, free-market and supervised by an international array of experts — stands as a good example of just how unpredictable the region's finances have become.

With only a handful of exceptions, the government of Sultan Qaboos bin Said has been careful throughout his 15 years in power to avoid the extravagances of other oil kingdoms. The emphasis has been on carefully planned development rather than showpiece construction.

The Defense Ministry, a sacred cow in many countries, was the first to feel the knife here when cuts became mandatory in January. Delivery on an order for eight British Tornado jet fighters costing more than $250 million was postponed until 1991 or later, according to government officials.

Several Western diplomats said they saw this as a quick demonstration that Oman was serious about avoiding major debts at a time of continuing economic uncertainty.

"We developed quite late, and we learn from other people's mistakes," said Fauzia H. Kindy, director of research at the Central Bank of Oman. "Considering the circumstances, we're doing quite well." But she added, "Your guess is as good as mine as to what is next."

According to official statistics, oil revenues form 92 percent of foreign exchange earnings and about half of the gross domestic product.

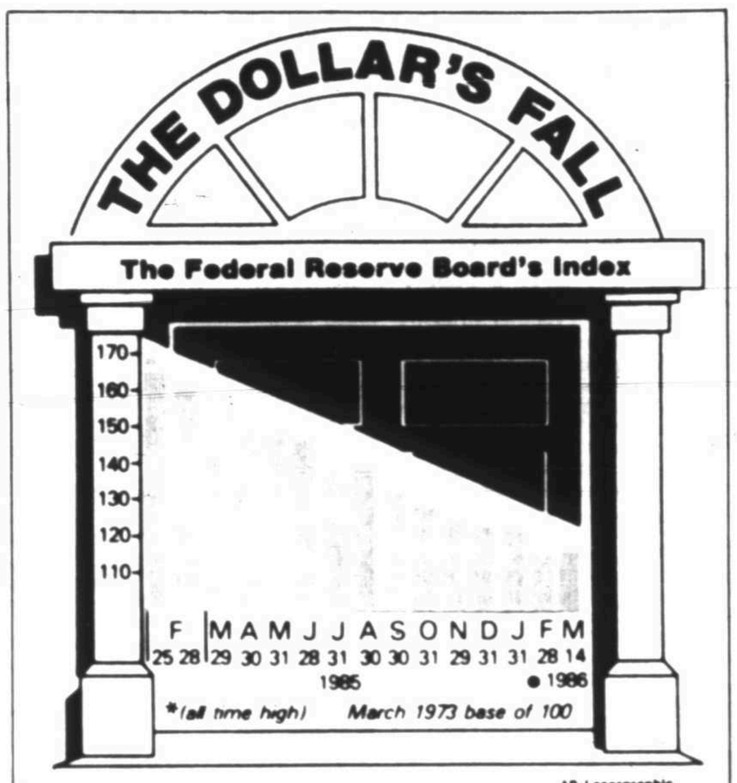

Development only began in earnest here in 1970, after Qaboos deposed his father, and the growth rate during the oil boom that followed was predictably spectacular.

Oman implemented its first two five-year plans with considerable success. Even last year, according to Sherif Lotfy, one of the sultan's economic advisers, the growth rate was about 11 percent.

But a year ago, Omani oil was selling for $27 a barrel. Now the price is half that.

Since the beginning of this year Lotfy and other economists have been trying to put together a new five-year plan while riding the oil price roller coaster, and the car has been rushing nowhere but down.

This graphic measures the value of the dollar against the currencies of 10 major industrial nations weighted on the basis of trade.

Why did the dollar fall?

NEW YORK (AP) — Why did the dollar drop 30 percent in the past 13 months?

Economists give two reasons: market forces set in motion by the huge U.S. trade deficit and a coordinated effort by five major industrial nations to drive down the exchange rate.

Finance ministers and central bankers of the United States, Japan, Britain, West Germany and France agreed in a Sept. 22 meeting at New York's Plaza Hotel to seek a lower dollar as a way of shrinking the U.S. trade deficit.

The "Group of Five" feared a protectionist backlash in the United States might spark a tariff war that could freeze international trade and throw the world into a 1930s-style depression.

Central bankers of the five nations pushed the dollar down by selling dollars from their reserves and buying other currencies such as the Japanese yen and the West German mark.

To the surprise of skeptics, the plan worked. After a big round of dollar-selling, the central banks for the most part stepped aside and let the mere threat of further intervention send the dollar down.

The Group of Five does not deserve all the credit, though. Half the dollar's 30 percent fall occurred before the finance ministers met, and economists say it might have fallen further even without intervention.

Declining interest rates and a sluggish economy made investments in the United States less attractive, decreasing the world demand for dollars.

Moreover, the high valuation of the dollar was a problem that tended to correct itself in the long run, economists say.

The strong dollar helped create the huge trade deficit by making U.S. goods expensive and foreign goods cheap. Thus, the world demand for dollars to buy American products went down and the world demand for other nations' currencies to buy their products went up.

Simply put, when the demand for dollars fell, the price of the dollar — in foreign currencies — tended to fall. Likewise, when the demand for other currencies rose, so did their price.

Is dollar riding J-curve?

NEW YORK (AP) — Some economists say the United States is riding the "J-curve," a perverse glitch that could help explain why the nation's trade deficit is rising at the same time the dollar falls.

Americans were told the yearlong fall of the dollar would shrink the trade gap by boosting exports and cutting imports. So far, it hasn't happened.

According to the J-curve explanation, the first effect of a dollar decline is to cut the money earned from exports and increase the cost of imports.

A graph of it looks like the letter 'J,' with the nation's trade balance worsening for a period before straightening out and then improving.

As J-curve believers might have predicted, the U.S. merchandise trade deficit set a record of $16.5 billion in January, the most recent month reported by the Commerce Department.

Most economists say the trade deficit won't really improve until the second half of 1986, long after the dollar's peak in February 1985.

JOHN PAUL PITTS

I had rather be in Texas than anyplace else

Question: What could be worse than being down and out in Midland, Texas? Answer: Being down and out in New Jersey.

If things seem dark in Midland now, there is a bright side — we're still in Texas. If you love Texas like I do that means a lot.

Proud Texan? It's more than proud. I love Texas so much that sometimes just thinking about it brings tears to my eyes. Not a day passes that I don't thank the Lord for bringing me back to Texas — where I think all real Texans should be.

Larry King has the drawl and spins good tales about Texas, but if he was a true, Texas-loving Texan, it seems he would find more comfort in the company of good ol' boys in Texas than the artsocrats of New York's cafe society. For me a bad day in Texas would be better than a good day in Washington D.C.

I haven't made up my mind who I will vote for yet, but I certainly admire Tom Loeffler. Any man honest enough to stand up and say: "Sure I want to be governor, so I can come back home and raise my kids in Texas," is a man after my own heart.

Of course living outside Texas is defensible if one is looking after the national interest of Texas.

What makes Texas so lovable? Three things, I think: climate, class, and people.

Hot, flat, dry, dusty, treeless, waterless, it's hard to imagine that one could love such an unblessed portion of geography as West Texas. But the springs that begin in February and summers that end at Christmas make it very easy to love.

ACTUALLY, the geography itself is not so unlovable. When brought here four decades ago from the green woods of Arkansas, my mother almost cried. The other day I heard her comment on a recent trip back to the South: "I hate Alabama. You can't see nothing for the trees."

There are other states far prettier than Texas but none to match the style and class of the Lone Star State. Legends grow easy in Texas, because it is more than just a state. It's a state of mind. Perhaps because of our special history, one feels special in Texas. And could it be that this is why we have special ways of doing things in Texas — of talking, walking, looking, cooking, thinking and singing that makes for the Texas-style.

Texas really is different, you know. How many songs have been written about Iowa ? How many movies have made about North Dakota? How many books have been written about Ohio? Why is Texas the best known of all the states among Europeans, Asians, Africans and all other foreign countries? When the Premier of China visited the U.S. why did he ask to see Texas and Disneyland?

Somehow, I can't imagine a black tie art show, goat roping and barbecue happening anywhere but Texas, or 10,000 people showing up to cook chili and be silly at Terlingua, Texas? Where else but Brady, Texas would you find 5,000 people turning out for a barbecued goat cookoff ,where big name Hollywood actors are judges.? Then there's the black-eyed pea cookoff at Athens, hush puppies at Lufkin, yams at Gilmer, beans at Ballinger. Added together they make for style.

AFTER FOUR YEARS in Colorado I can testify to the difference style and class make in the quality of one's life. Without question Colorado is the most beautiful state in the union, but once you have said that you have just about said it all. It's sort of like being married to a beautiful woman with no personality.

Traditions there are about as rare as the air. High school and college football is so bad in the state that nobody really bothers. The stadium at Kermit is bigger than that of most major colleges in the state, and the attendance at a single Lee and Permian playoff game would probably equal the entire year's attendance of a major Colorado high school. It makes for a dull fall without good football.

The food is equally dull. Try to find a decent bowl of chili, a decent chicken fried steak, a decent steak, fajitas, or juicy, mesquite smoked ribs in all of Colorado. You can't. It's a culinary wasteland.

Once in Colorado Springs, I had a dry hamburger patty, served with mashed potatos and green gravy (Yes, I said green gravy.). It was billed on the menu as chicken fried steak.

The Permian Basin Landmen's Association will hold its annual "Executive Night" to be held April 8 at the Midland Center, beginning at 6:30 p.m. Jackie Sherrill, athletic director and head football coach at Texas A&M University will be the guest speaker.

Sherrill, a native of Duncan, Okla., moved to Biloxi, Miss. during his sophomore year in high school and became an All American fullback and linebacker for Coach Paul "Bear" Bryant at Alabama.

Prior to becoming head football coach and athletic director at Texas A&M in 1982, he served as assistant coach at Arkansas, Iowa State and Pittsburgh. He served as head coach at Washington State and then at Pittsburg prior to joining Texas A&M.

SPE to hear talk on carbon dioxide injection

Carbon dioxide injection specialist Fred I. Stalkup will speak to the Trans-Pecos Section of the Society of Petroleum Engineers at the Odessa Country Club on April 16, 1986, beginninat at 11:30 a.m.

"Carbon Dioxide Miscible Flooding: Its Promise Becoming Reality" will be Stalkup's topic. The 400-mile, 644-kilometer pipeline recently constructed to carry carbon dioxide from Colorado to the oilfields of West Texas illustrates the industry's high expectations for carbon dioxide as an oil recovery technique. Stalkup explains these expectations and surveys the major carbon dioxide flood projects in progress. He cites plans for future carbon dioxide floods and assesses current sources, supplies and distribution systems.

Tenngaso will suspend monthly posting of prices

HOUSTON — Tenngasco Exchange announced recently that it has suspended its monthly posting of spot market prices it will pay for natural gas.

"The almost-daily changes in gas prices that are occurring makes it almost impossible to determine a price that would remain realistic or meaningful over a 30-day period," explained Tenngasco Corp. president Jerry R. McCleod. These frequent changes have been brought about largely by the volatile fluctuation of crude oil prices and the resulting impact on fuels competitive with natural gas, he said.

Since its inception in November, 1984, the exchange has posted prices which reflected anticipated market conditions for the ensuing 30-day period. "To continue in today's market conditions would require constant price revision, making it extremely difficult to be equitable to producers, purchasers and Tenngasco," McLeod said.

The company will continue to evaluate the market and will be prepared to resume posting if appropriate, McLeod noted. During the 17-month period the exchange posted prices, it bought more than 63 billion cubic feet of natural gas on the spot market.

Introducing Briercroft's new TaxBreak CD.

You hear a lot of talk about tax reform these days. But that's all it is. A lot of talk.

Briercroft Savings has actually done something about it. We came up with a one-year CD that can defer your taxes on the interest earned. We call it the TaxBreak CD.

Deposit as little as $500 in a TaxBreak CD. Then wait. For one year.

When a year's up, you collect your interest in one lump sum. Only at that time are you liable for taxes on the interest earned.

If you'd like to take a break from paying taxes on your interest earned this year, and who wouldn't, sign up for Briercroft's all-new TaxBreak CD.

Area rig count up for second straight week

The Permian Basin rig count rose for the second straight week, up one to 178. The National count, however, continued its three month long downturn, dropping an additional 29 rigs to end the week at 1,034.

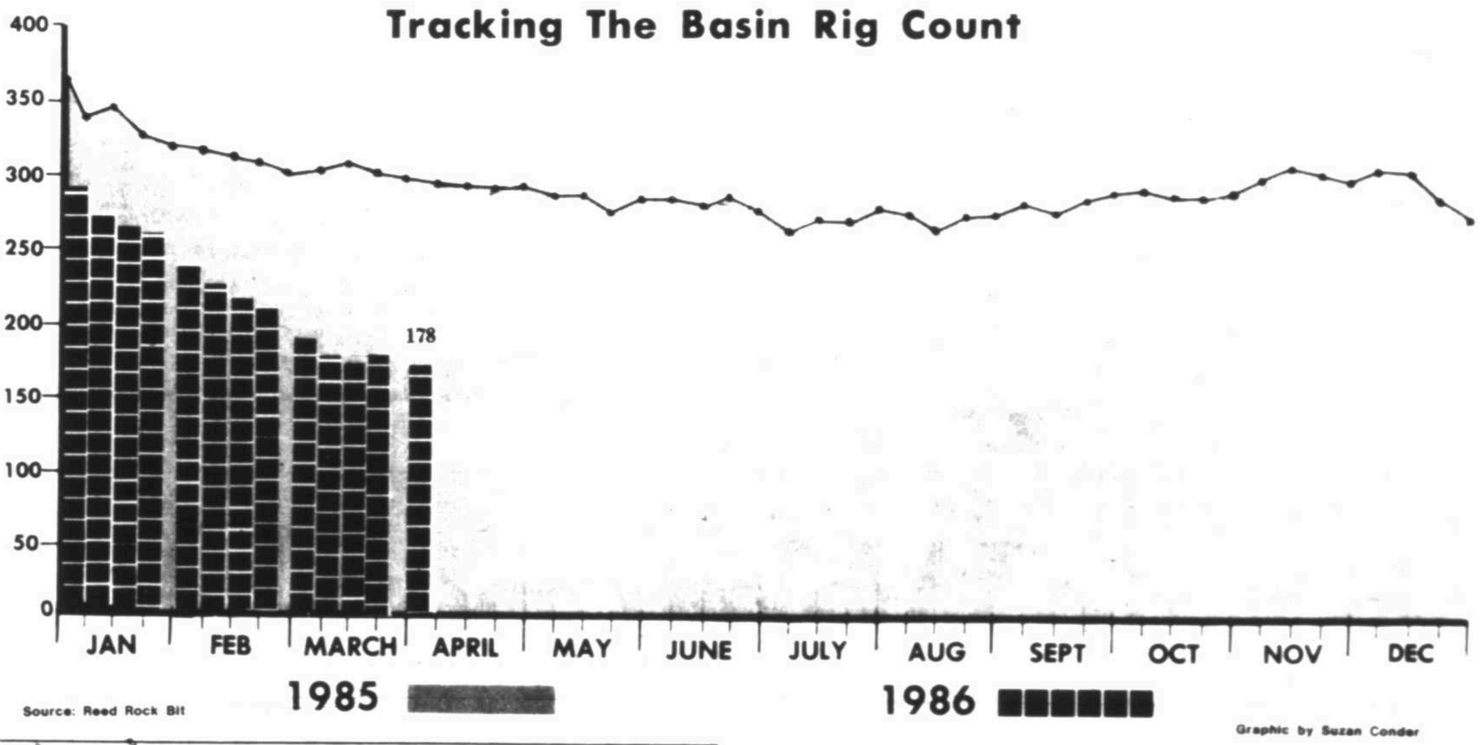

Locally, both Midland and Ector counties fell. Midland dropped one to nine, while Ector lost two, leaving only two rigs at work there. Andrews added three to regain the most active spot in the Basin. Lea County remained close behind, holding at 22 rigs.

In the U.S., Texas contributed 16 to the national loss, dropping down from 358 to 342. Louisiana fell by four for a 157 total, while Oklahoma managed to up its total by three to 169. California and Colorado each recorded slight decreases in rig activity.

One year ago there were 301 rigs at work in the Basin and 1,910 working in the U.S.

State offshore leases produced 131,261 barrels of oil during January, down from 133,526 barrels in December, according to the Texas Railroad Commission.

HOUSTON (SWN) Rowan Companies, Inc. announced the completion of a gas-condensate discovery offshore Lafourche Parish, Louisiana. The State Tract 12234, Well No. 1 is located in Bay Marchand, Block 4. The well was completed through perforations in Miocene sands from an interval of 8,850 feet and 8,006 feet and flowed 4,213 MCF of gas and 83 barrels of 38 degrees gravity condensate per day through a 16/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 3,142 psig. Shut-in tubing pressure measured 3,948 psig. The well's calculated absolute open flow is 147,000 MCF per day.

RRC issues 15 permits in February

AUSTIN — The Texas Railroad Commission has announced that 15 permits to operate new pipelines in Texas were granted in February. In January, the Commission approved 13 permits.

Seven of the new permits were for gathering pipelines, five were for gas plants, and three were trunk transmission lines. Gathering lines bring oil and gas from production leases, while trunk lines are larger diameter lines into which smaller pipelines connect. At gas plants, natural gas is stripped of the liquid hydrocarbons usually present in gas as it is produced from a well.

One of the pipeline permits was in the San Antonio area, four in Southeast Texas, one in deep South Texas, three in East Texas, one in Central Texas, one in the San Angelo area, one in North Texas and three in the Panhandle.

Workers at River Bend nuclear plant indicted on cocaine charges

By KEVIN McGILL

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Although the River Bend nuclear plant passed a safety inspection after authorities learned five people who worked for the facility's general contractor were alleged to be involved in a cocaine ring, U.S Attorney John Volz says the 11 indictments issued here were "cause for concern."

"The significance of the indictment certainly is the quantity of the cocaine involved," Volz said at a news conference in New Orleans.

Eleven people from four states were indicted by a federal grand jury here Wednesday on cocaine conspiracy charges. The ring is accused of running cocaine from Miami into south Louisiana.

"While it is relatively small on each particular transaction, over a period of time it amounted to somewhere in the neighborhood of 50 pounds of cocaine."

Volz said it has not been determined yet whether drugs were distributed or used at the site of the nuclear power plant, located at St. Francisville, La.

"Those facts are being investigated — whether there was any actual distribution at the plant," Volz said.

When it was learned that employees involved in plant construction were involved, Volz said, the NRC was notified. He said NRC investigators inspected the plant and found no problems — a fact that was confirmed by both the NRC and the company that owns the plant.

"Basically, the NRC did its investigation and it's complete and it had no impact on the safety of the plant," said Priss Gallagher of Gulf States Utilities.

"We conducted special inspections last August," said Clyde Wisner, a spokesman for the NRC's regional office in Fort Worth, Texas, "and we assured ourselves that none of them worked in areas that impacted on safety."

Bill Benedetto, a spokesman for GSU, said a company investigation last summer failed to turn up any evidence that drugs were distributed or used on the construction site.

Benedetto said the primary contractor on the site was Stone and Webster of Cherry Hill, N.J. Five of those arrested worked for Stone and Webster.

The $4 billion River Bend reactor started operating last November and was granted a full-power license then by the NRC.

The investigation began when Jefferson Parish sheriff's deputies arrested Randy Farrington, 30, of New Orleans, as he attempted to bring in about 10 ounces of cocaine from Miami, officials said.

Ashland Oil to buy out Belzbergs

By JONATHAN P. HICKS
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Ashland Oil Inc. said Tuesday that it had agreed to pay the Belzberg family of Canada $51 a share for its 9.2 percent stake in Ashland, ending a brief skirmish for control of the nation's largest independent oil refiner.

The Belzbergs will make a profit of about $14 million on the purchase, most of it on the 1.4 million shares purchased on the open market between Feb. 11 and 28 at prices ranging from $38.50 to $45.375. The price of Ashland's stock jumped early last week after the Belzbergs filed documents showing their stake and indicating that they were considering a takeover bid, which was made on Wednesday at $60 a share.

Ashland's stock was down $1.75 Tuesday on the New York Stock Exchange, closing at $49.75. The price of the stock did not tumble further, analysts said, because Ashland's board was scheduled to meet Tuesday night to consider a financial restructuring of the company that was likely aimed at warding off another takeover bid.

Because the $51-a-share buyback price was 50 cents below the Monday closing price and $9 a share below the Belzbergs' bid, Ashland insisted that its repurchase deal did not amount to "greenmail," the term applied when corporate raiders extract above-market prices to sell their stock back to a company.

"It's absolutely not greenmail," Dan Lacy, a spokesman for Ashland, said. "They are selling their shares below the market price when the deal was struck."

Still, analysts note that Ashland's stock was trading at slightly under $46 just days before the Belzbergs, one of Canada's wealthiest families, disclosed on March 25 that they had accumulated a 9.2 percent stake in the oil refiner and marketer. Close to half of that stake was in the form of options to buy shares from Bear, Stearns & Co. at between $44 and $53.31 a share.

"Whether or not this is greenmail is a matter of semantics," Andrew Gray 3d, an analyst with Pershing & Co., said. "When the Belzbergs bought the stock they drove the stock price up. If the Belzbergs attempted to sell their shares into the market, $51 a share is more than they would get. I call this greenmail."

Ashland said that the First City Financial Corp., the Vancouver (British Columbia) investment company controlled by the Belzbergs, had agreed not to purchase any voting securities in the company for 10 years.

With the buyout agreement, Ashland joins a long list of companies that have turned back a Belzberg family takeover bid. In each instance, however, the family has profited by its defeat.

Among the concerns that have tangled with the Belzbergs are U.S. Industries, the Masonite Corp., Blue Bell Inc., the H.H. Robertson Co., Gulf Oil and Potlatch Inc. The most recent struggle involved Potlatch, which rejected a buyout offer from the Belzbergs last November. The company then repurchased the 1.1 million Potlatch shares held by the Belzbergs, giving the family a profit of $8.1 million.

A year ago, the Belzbergs acquired the Scovill Corp., outbidding rivals by paying $523 million for the Waterbury (Conn.) maker of household products.

What was unclear in the Ashland matter, analysts said, was whether the Belzbergs had earnestly intended to acquire the company in the first place.

THRIFTS

Bevins estimates that his thrift has deposits of approximately $157 million, of which $5.3 million is in passbook accounts. According to Fed data, the national average account size is $3,500 with affluent consumers more likely to have them than lower-income consumers.

Market Facts, a Chicago-based financial survey company, reports that a nationwide survey conducted in January, 1985 indicated most consumers held such accounts because it is easy to get money out in an emergency, and many consumers said they kept a passbook account because of tradition. Elderly customers in particular like passbook accounts, bankers point out, because they remember the banking failures of the Depression and perceive money-market accounts, money-market funds and other savings vehicles as less safe.

Savings and loans have seen a roller coaster existence since deregulation began. Thrifts were suddenly thrown into competition not only with each other but with commercial banks, financial supermarkets and other financial institutions. Deregulation has forced savings and loans to become innovative in order to expand and survive while competing for customers' deposits.

As Bevins noted, "It's been a change to have to price products competitively after having had the price set for you by regulators. But, while things have changed somewhat, our basic business functions haven't changed."

OMAN

Initial planning in 1985 had assumed a gradual price decline to an average of about $23.65 a barrel through 1990. At that, an average 4 percent growth rate was expected.

"But that is history now," said Lotfy. No one in the government wants to guess publicly at this point how much the economy will shrink.

As the plunge began, the budget cuts and devaluation in January were based on the expectation that after a drop, prices would stabilize near $20 over the next five years.

Then, within days, new contingencies had to be drawn up for $14, $12 and even less.

Now prices have become so unpredictable that Lotfy, Kindi and others say they simply do not know what they will do beyond certain broad guidelines .

CURVE

"The J-curve is a well-recognized phenomenon," said Robert Lawrence, an economist at the Brookings Institution in Washington. "The crucial argument is that prices adjust more quickly than quantities."

Let's say the dollar falls 30 percent against the Japanese yen. That means it costs Americans more to buy Japanese products, and U.S. exporters receive fewer dollars for goods they sell to Japan. For a while, the U.S. trade account with Japan worsens.

In the long run, Americans will buy fewer Japanese imports because they're more expensive. The Japanese will buy more American imports because they're cheaper. The trade balance will improve.

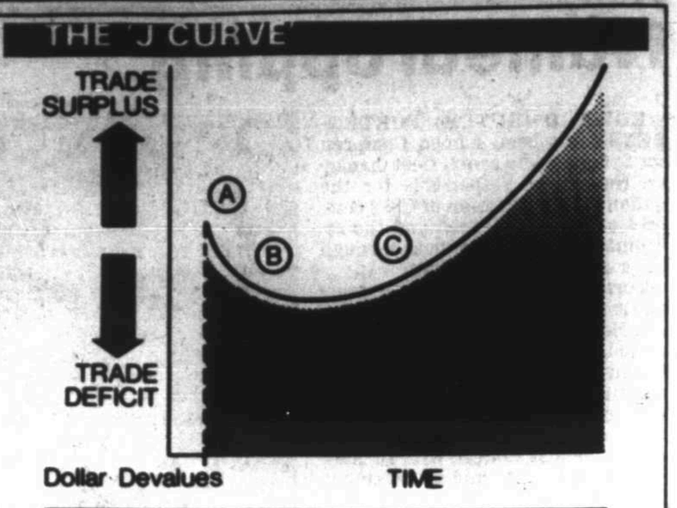

The change in buying patterns takes time, however. Long-term purchasing contracts and the habits of buyers slow the switch.

Also, with the dollar falling, some Americans may hurriedly buy extra Japanese products before they go up in price. The Japanese may wait to buy American products, expecting prices to drop.

Finally, some U.S. companies reacted to the overvalued dollar by closing factories or moving production overseas. Reversing those decisions could take years.

Some economists, however, doubt the J-curve is a factor. Since foreign companies did not lower prices much when the dollar rose, they should not need to raise them much now that the dollar has fallen, said David Lund, a Commerce Department trade analyst.

"It's Newton's other law: What didn't go down can't come up again," Lund said. "Economists learn J-curves in school. But it's a theory, and it's a theory that's more and more questionable."

PITTS

I once saw a Texas deer hunter in Gunnison come within an inch of going to jail for verbally abusing a restaurant owner over a bowl of chili. I later tasted the "chili" which proved to be a tomatoey goo, with beans and hamburger meat, and tasted more like a bad spaghetti sauce than chili.

WANT BARBECUED RIBS in Colorado? They're big, tough beef ribs baked in an oven and smeared with a store bought barbecue sauce.

After a while majestic mountains just don't make up for culinary and cultural deprivation. That's why a handful of us deprived Texas expatriates would gather sometimes to consume pounds of mesquite-smoked pork ribs, chili and menudo chased by Dr. Pepper.

To retain cultural ties to the homeland, we would have formal discussions on Texas football and country music. I remember for one event we had Bud Townsend (that's Dr. Bud), Professor of History at West Texas State in Canyon, come and lecture to us on Bob Wills. Dr. Bud is a former cowboy, part time rodeo announcer and author of San Antonio Rose, Bob Will's authorized biography, what he didn't know about the legendary fiddle player from Turkey, Texas could be written on the back of a postage stamp.

But in the end it's the people that make a difference. Texans make Texas different, and the best place I know to live. When Flair magazine asked over 30 residents of Midland and Odessa what they liked best about Texas, almost to a man and woman they said the friendly people. It's no myth, no perception; the people in Texas really are friendlier. In the scheme of quality of life good people goes a lot further than anything else you can name.

A CBS cameraman from New York and a former Texan sat in my office recently. "Being here is like a breath of fresh air...being back where people who don't even know you treat you like a friend," he said.

There is no joy in being broke, busted and down and out, but if that is to be, I would want it to be in Texas.

Poorly trained workers could hinder national economy

By JAMES HANNAH

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation must properly educate and train its disadvantaged entry-level workers if the economy is to reach full strength by the turn of the century, says the head of a national business-led coalition.

John Ong, chairman of the National Alliance of Business and chief executive officer of the Akron, Ohio-based B.F. Goodrich Co., said Wednesday an estimated 16 million new jobs will be created in the next 10 years, but the labor force will only increase by about 14 million workers.

"Unless we start acting now to ensure that these young people have the education and training necessary to fill the jobs our economy can create for them, economic growth will falter and their isolation in our society will become a permanent and socially perilous problem both for themselves and for the rest of society," Ong said.

Ong made his remarks following the release of a study by the alliance which said the biggest change in the nation's work force during the next 10 to 15 years will be the increase of poorly educated workers.

The study concluded that business must assume a greater responsibility in training the work force and that employers must become more involved in the educational system and training institutions.

The report said that by the year 2000:

—The number of youths entering the work force will decrease, but the percentage of minorities in that group will rise;

—The number of high school dropouts will increase, as will youth unemployment;

—Teen-age pregnancy will become more common, and the incidence of female-headed households will continue to increase;

—Women will account for two-thirds of the growth in the labor force, and families with two working parents will become more common;

—The prospects for permanent dislocation of workers will continue due to a shift from manufacturing to high technology and service industries and because of international competition.

Norway's oil, gas production could close down soon

OSLO, Norway (AP) — A labor conflict among catering personnel on fixed North Sea rigs could close down Norway's oil and gas production by the weekend, Norwegian radio said Wednesday.

The 670-member union, Caterin-gansattes Forbund, had refused on Tuesday night to sit down with a public mediator in a bid to end the wage deadlock.

The employers' organization, Norsk Oljeindustris Arbeidsgiverforeining, replied immediately to CAF's demand for an average 28 percent wage hike by issuing a lockout warning to the 3,600 workers on Norway's North Sea platforms.

The public mediator, Bjoern Haug, has called the parties in for a final forced mediation session on Friday.

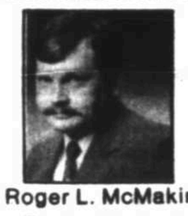

The strike and lockout are expected to go into force on Sunday unless the dispute is settled within 40 hours of the start of mediation.

"A shutdown of production may soon spread to involve 15,000 other workers within industries directly dependent on the fixed North Sea installations," the Oslo newspaper Dagbladet said Wednesday.

Norway is a leading non-OPEC producer of oil and gas.

According other press reports, CAF workers now earn average annual salaries ranging from 160,000 to 180,000 Norwegian kroner ($22,200 to $25,000).

The reports said CAF demanded not only a 28 percent pay raise but also a cut in the working week from the present 35 hours to 30 as well as full pension rights at age 55 after 20 years of service.

Declining oil prices taking toll on banks

HOUSTON (AP) — Declining oil prices are taking their toll on Texas bank profits as more energy loans turn sour, and analysts said they are leading to ominous operating losses.

"First-quarter earnings are going to be dismal," said Sandra Flannigan, vice president and regional bank analyst for Paine Webber. The spillover of energy problems into other commercial loans and the prospect for little or no loan growth "doesn't paint a pretty picture."

Allied Bancshares in Houston reported two weeks ago it is expecting a 47-percent drop in earnings for the first three months of 1986.

The banks' first-quarter earnings will depend on what price of oil they use, said Frank Anderson, vice president and bank analyst for Weber, Hall, Sale & Associates in Dallas.

The state's largest bank holding companies are expected to use existing contract prices in the range of $14 to $17 a barrel in evaluating their loans and deciding what amount of funds to set aside for losses, analysts said.

"Texas Commerce has evaluated current market conditions carefully and is applying various pricing scenarios which are substantially below $17 a barrel," a Texas Commerce statement said.

MCorp plans to use prevailing contract prices and assumes they will continue for the next three to four years, said J. Thomas Hudgins, president of MBank Houston.

So far, most of the energy losses for Texas banks have come on loans to contract drillers and other energy service and supply companies. Production loans — those tied to oil and gas reserves in the ground — held up well as oil prices dropped from $36 to $25 a barrel.

United Bank earnings up

United Bank Board Chairman and CEO, Wayne Merritt announced that the bank had after tax earnings for the first quarter of 1986 of $273,696 versus $206,553 for the first quarter of 1985, an increase of 32.3 percent. United has experienced its seventh consecutive quarter of profitability, Merritt added.

United Bank finished the first quarter of 1986 with total capital of $19,871,108 and total assets of $111,162,152 resulting in a capital-to-asset ratio of 17.8 percent, the highest of any financial institution in Midland. "We are committed through capital strength and customer service to provide stable and reliable banking," Merritt said. It was also announced that United's annual shareholder's meeting will be held on April 17, 1986 at 9:30 am. on the first floor of the bank's head quarters. The public is invited to attend.

GIEBEL

and I have learned some valuable lessons that will make our present operations stronger." he said.

How has the oil entrepreneur managed to recover from financial gunshot within three years?

According to Giebel it was a combination of luck and concerted effort on three fronts: reducing costs, improving cash flow and working closely with FDIC on restructuring.

First to go were the passive investments, his prized pecan orchards and Brangus cattle ranch. They were sold, reducing overhead by about $600,000 a year. His operation was trimmed from 34 to 12 employees, and scores of residential homes built by his development company went on the market. "Looking back I can't say that I really did anything wrong with these passive investments. We had good ideas, sound plans and the right people. I just got caught in circumstances beyond my control," he reflected.

Then came the task of improving cash flow. Several significant oil finds solved that problem.

In 1976 he had abandoned the corporate life as chairman and CEO of MGF, a post he had held since 1970, to get back to finding oil and gas as an independent.

"That's what I do best. I have a feel for deals, but I never was happy in the corporate world. I didn't like working with brokers, investors, banking groups, attorneys and accountants, so Jack Majors became president and CEO of MGF and I set up Giebel Petroleum Consultants," he said. Now down to a skeleton force, the firm at its height had 34 professionals on board developing and evaluating oil and gas prospects. Two rigs were kept to drill strictly house deals.

After going into Chapter 11, Giebel was allowed to remain active. From among the 40 prospects in the company portfolio at that time, one developed into the 25-well, multi-pay Giebel Lower Clearfork and Abo field on the New Mexico, Andrews County line. Another became the Giebel Strawn field in Tom Green with two very strong wells.

The two wells contributed greatly to the cash flow of the firm and helped make possible the payoff of creditors and the formation of the limited partnership.

Said Giebel: "I was leery about working with FDIC, but in the long term, I think they have been fair. I won't say we haven't had our differences, we have. But we were in intense negotiations. At least they weren't closed-minded."

He said it took six to eight months to convince FDIC to enter the limited partnership agreement, and FDIC finally agreed after determining that the partnership would provide a more effective arrangement for paying back debt because of tax advantages.

"We still have a ways to go," said Giebel, "but from where we're at we can move forward and grow."

BETWEEN THE LINES

Q. Could you please tell me about Julian Lennon?
Arlene Garcia
Fresno, Calif.

Lennon

A. John Charles Julian Lennon was born in Liverpool, England, on April 8, 1963, just as Beatlemania was beginning to swell to epic proportions. Because of that, his parents left Liverpool for London when he was about a year old and settled in the exclusive section of West Kensington.

Before long, though, the crowds that clustered around their apartment forced them to move to a more secluded house in Surrey. Physically hidden, he and his mother, Cynthia, were hidden in the official Beatle's biographies as well, the thought being that it was not good for John's image to have a wife and child.

Eventually, though, the two were revealed, but their days as a family with John were numbered. John and Cynthia were divorced when Julian was 5 (the now famous story has Paul McCartney writing "Hey Jude" as a way of soothing Julian's feelings over the divorce).

John married Yoko Ono the following year, and Julian, living with his mother in Cheshire, didn't see his father very much, a situation that continued through his teens. John did send him presents, though, such as a vintage guitar which he put to good use while in school in Hoylake — he and classmate Justin Clayton started a band, just as his father had many years before.

Julian and John were finally becoming close as he got older, so it was even more tragic when he got the news in 1980 that his father had been shot. Within two days, he was in New York with Yoko and his half-brother, Sean.

Several months later, still reeling from the shock of that event, he became visible in the London nightclub scene and in one highly-publicized scene, was photographed holding a gun to his head.

When that phase ground down, he retreated into music, spending 18 months writing songs and playing piano, trying to determine the direction his music should take. In 1983, his manager sent a tape of his songs to a Charisma Records executive who promptly signed him, as did an Atlantic Records executive in the U.S.

He took his time producing his first album, "Valotte," which, as you undoubtedly know, was successful. He took his time again on his second which, as we go to press, was scheduled to be released in March. He should be following the album with another U.S. tour in the next few months.

Q. Could you please tell me a little about Ted Shackelford of "Knots Landing"? I'd like to know where he grew up and if he's married.
Amy Smith
Dothan, Ala.

Shackelford

A. He grew up in Oklahoma City, the first of five children of a dermatologist and his wife. The next state he spent time in was Missouri, where he attended Westminster College, but he then followed a girlfriend to the University of Denver.

After graduating in 1969, he moved to New York, where he lived the life of a struggling actor, working for a while as a clerk at the Carlyle Hotel until he got a few commercials and a role in the soap "Another World." While making the acting rounds, he met his wife, actress Jan Laverenz. They decided to move to Hollywood, where he got the role of Gary Ewing.

Q. Please tell me what Liberace is currently doing.
Anne M. Marcatti
Oakhurst, Calif.

Liberace

A. A lot. This month, he's performing at Caesars Palace in Las Vegas, then he moves to the Riverside Theater in Milwaukee, the Northrup Auditorium in Minneapolis in May, the Fox Theater in St. Louis, then on to Clearwater, Fla., New Orleans and, at the beginning of June, Expo '86 in Vancouver.

At the end of June, he's in Cincinnati and Pittsburgh. In July, he's performing in Atlantic City, Cleveland and Lake Tahoe, and in August, he's back in Las Vegas.

Looking ahead, he's booked for the last two weeks of October at Radio City Music Hall in New York. And that's not all: He's also publishing a book, "The Wonderful Private World of Liberace," in the fall, and this month he brings out his first compact disk. He already has a video out called "Liberace Live."

Q. What is Jamie Lee Curtis working on now and where does she live?
William Smith
Bloomfield, Ill.

Curtis

A. She lives in Los Angeles with side trips to a farm in Idaho that she recently bought. Her most recent project is "As Summers Die," co-starring Bette Davis, in which she plays a '50s-era Southern belle. It's due to air on HBO sometime this spring.

Q. Will Phil Collins will be doing any more acting?
Pamela Cash
Ventnor, N.J.

A. Undoubtedly, given his funny, hammy performance recently on "Miami Vice." But at the moment, the only project he's giving full energy to is a new album.

Q. Where was Elke Sommer born? Also, is that her real name?
Hope Fachetti
Hanford, Calif.

A. Her real name is Elke Schletz and she was born in Berlin on November 5, 1942.

Q. Does Richard Thomas really have triplets? What is he doing now?
E.C.
South Bend, Ind.

A. Yes, he and his wife, Alma, really do. They're 4½, their names are Barbara, Gwyneth and Pilar and they have an older brother, Richard. As we go to press, their father is rehearsing for a Broadway play called "Citizen Tom Paine."

Q. I'd like to know if Ralph Macchio will have any new movies soon.
Jennifer Chubb
Buchanan, Mich.

A. He has a new movie called "Crossroads" and has the sequel to "The Karate Kid" coming in June. He's also appearing now in a play in New York called "Cuba and His Teddy Bear" with Robert De Niro.

Cynthia Freeman, 77, of San Francisco, is the author of such best-selling novels as "Seasons of the Heart," "Portraits" and a "World Full of Strangers."

Cynthia Freeman

By LINDA-MARIE SINGER
King Features

"No, wait. Is this one 'No Time for Tears' or 'A World Full of Strangers?'" best-selling San Francisco novelist Cynthia Freeman asks aloud as she examines one of her books in Mandarin.

As the writer tries to unscramble the title from the picture on the jacket, she inadvertently runs her fingers across the tops of her other hardbound editions that have sold more than 15 million copies worldwide.

"This is what happens when you're translated into 33 languages," Ms. Freeman explains with a shrug, as she tries again to decipher the storybook printed in Mandarin. "Sometimes you forget..."

But don't let this 70-year-old great-grandmother fool you. Titles in exotic languages, yes, she's allowed that little transgression, but it's rare when anyone catches this woman off guard or lost in dreamland.

Hear Ms. Freeman speak and it's evident that her voice is as compelling as her string of seven best-sellers — deep, perceptive and commanding. And potential bestseller No. 8, "Seasons of the Heart" has just been published, ready to sizzle up to the top of the lists.

Her enthusiasm for life stops at nothing. Not even the tragedy of her beloved daughter's death or the lingering illness of her husband can topple this individual's love affair with life.

"And, sweetie, if I didn't write anything, at least I'd know that life is one of the greatest things you'll ever possess. Why, we don't even begin to fathom what an enormous thing it is just to wake up each morning. And, darling, I've had many reasons not to feel that way in the past few years. So I had to allow myself to enjoy even the pain. That's right, I celebrate it all!"

Readers celebrate something else: Cynthia Freeman's insight into generations of Jewish families who've struggled up from pogroms to New York's Lower East Side, or into the The Promised Land where they could begin their lives again as free souls.

And yet, there is no conscious effort to proselytize in her books, or to glorify "The Chosen People," unless they've proven themselves. "But that goes for Jews and gentiles alike," she says, with her finger stabbing the air. "I write it as I see it, and if someone's a bastard, it doesn't matter what religion he is, does it?"

Tackling Ms. Freeman's last international success, "Illusions of Love," will have you remembering back to 1975 when she burst on the literary scene with "A World Full of Strangers." And if you look closer at "Fairytales," "Come Pour the Wine," "Portraits" and "The Days of Winter," you'll recognize the writer's quest for dealing in universal themes of love, hate, self-discovery, joy and pain.

And sex? You'll find little steaminess boiling over on any of her pages, beccause Ms. Freeman doesn't consider herself a "romance novelist." In fact, this very suggestion elicits a major drop in her voice and a stare as cold as Candlestick Park when the fog rolls in. She says that although she doesn't get upset people call her a romance novelist, "I just won't concede to it, for I view myself as a very serious writer who tells about life's experiences. Now, it's my understanding that these romance people deal with lots of hugs and kisses, lots of rolls in the hay. And they're probably dealing with only two basic characters, right?

"Mine are sagas from the cradle to the grave. But romance? Come, darling, who in the world past the age of 5 hasn't been kissed? You get my point?...Of course there's love. There's also hate and sex, but I absolutely refuse to believe that I'm a romantic novelist, although it's true that some people promoted my work with that particular label. So I don't know what else to add." She pauses. "Would you consider Judith Krantz in that category?"

She lives in an Architectural Digest-like apartment with panoramic views of the bay. "I was an interior designer, you know, before I became a writer. I guess that I've always felt that I've had a lot to say no matter at what age. Why, even at 18 I considered myself an 'old soul,' as they say in India.

"Thank God that I've never lost my childlike quality of being interested in the world. For, you see, I always have been far beyond my years, and carried this tremendous curiosity that told me one thing: Life is never a series of cul de sacs — stopping-off places.

"I married at 18...after a three-week courtship. I definitely was ready both mentally and emotionally, for even at that time I knew how to make a home for a man. And when I became a mother, I loved and adored my children.

"Yet, when they reached that age where I didn't have to be home anymore for milk and cookies, I had a right to do something for me. Because I mattered.

"And it had nothing to do with Gloria Steinem. Honey, we never even heard of her in those days. We never knew from an emancipated lady, let alone the syncopated lady. So one day I asked my husband, 'Would it offend you if I became an interior decorator?' The truth is that I probably would have done it on my own, but it was nice to have his blessings.

"So for 25 years I would say I was very successful, but not for the reasons you think: I was fulfilled. Did I have the whole ball of wax? You're damned right. Did I also have problems? You're damned right."

Sun streams in the room and the cable car bell sounds. Ms. Freeman talks about a low ebb in her life — a mysterious illness that checked her in and out of hospitals for five years.

She explains, "It all started in my 50s, and when I finally recovered, I thought, 'Now what am I supposed to do?' After all, God gave me a little bit of talent and I simply wasn't about to vegetate. If I only cared about joining all kinds of causes, I would have, but that wasn't for me. So I wondered what was.

"My schooling was minimal (she completed sixth grade), although I was always artistic. I could speak three languages, sing, dance and play the piano. I'm naturally talented and not afraid to say it. What's more, it would be ludicrous not to know who the hell I am. You must know who you are first, and not get into a little orbit where you think you're handblown by God.

It's often hard to let go of something held dear

By KAREN KENYON
King Features

I recently lost a valuable diamond ring my father left me 18 years ago when he died. It was valuable not only because the diamond was very large, almost a carat, but because it was the one tangible object I had from him. He had entrusted it to me by leaving it to me.

I felt physically sick for a few days, almost as if someone had died. I guess this was because it was a loss connected with a person close to me. That affected me much more than its monetary value.

The ring was more or less a relic to me, not something I ever wore, and I often thought of it playfully as "the family jewel." I always just kept it in the pockets of old robes for safekeeping (I thought) so a burglar wouldn't find it.

But, of course, my fear of losing it was what did me in...more or less.

It all began when my son and I decided to move from the house we'd all lived in together as a family for 15 years. It had been six years since the death of my husband, Dick, and I felt it was time to let go and go on.

In the process of going through the clutter and collection of all those years, I at times found myself clinging to little, perhaps insignificant, memorabilia.

I knew I had a tendency to hang on to things, so I tried to go beyond that and just do what needed to be done in order to be able to move. I picked out hanger after hanger and rolled the dress or robe or blouse in a sort of ball and stuffed each in a bag for give-away.

I WAS proud of myself. I'd accomplished quite a lot. The closet was much less crowded, and I'd done it all with not much feeling at all. None of my usual pondering with each garment.

I pushed back and denied the scents, textures, the scenes from the past, associated with each piece of material. After my day's endeavor I called the thrift store and told them I had donations.

It wasn't until a week later that, while talking to my brother, Bud, on the phone one evening, he happened to mention our father and the fact that he had obtained a copy of our dad's will as a sort of family treasure. My thoughts went immediately to the ring, my legacy from my dad. I hadn't thought of it for a while.

Suddenly a kind of white-hot shiver ran through me. The ring. Where was it?

"I have to call you back," I said, and immediately ran to the closet and put my hand in every pocket of every remaining garment, over and over again. Then to the hall closet, and to my bedroom closet, frantically squeezing each garment, slipping my hand into every possible opening. No ring.

The next day I experienced almost a grief sensation, a numbness, sadness, terrible guilt. I went over and over the situation in my mind. Why hadn't I taken better care of it?

I went to both branches of the thrift store. Each journey felt like a brief descent into hell — huge, impossibly full warehouse-type structures. I knew it was hopeless, but I had to try.

The workers in the stores were shocked. This was obviously the best story they'd heard for a long time. Their "You're kidding" turned into open-mouthed disbelief.

I REPORTED the loss to the police, even took them a copy of the appraisal, but I felt inside that nothing would come of it, and I was right.

I had to resign myself to a loss, and I began to see it as a kind of a costly metaphor for the leaving of my house, for acceptance of loss in general and for the fact that I was in many ways going to have to learn even more about letting go.

I suppose, too, it tapped into earlier feelings of loss I had experienced, and so brought loss vividly to my consciousness again, but, thank goodness, this was only a material loss, and I was grateful for that. If life demanded another sacrifice, I thought, this is an easy one to handle.

One day, I felt I needed to do something almost ritualistic to express the situation — something physical, yet calming — so I got up early one morning and opened the Tao de Ching, which I occasionally do. It fell open to the words, "Gratefulness seems empty, but it cannot be exhausted." The connection of these words with what had happened to me gave me some solace.

Then I decided to write a poem, dedicated to my father. I called it "Invocation," and I asked him in the poem to take me to the place beyond loss, because I knew it was the issue of loss, and not at all the object which was important.

The ritual seemed to help me, and I began to realize that in some ways the loss had more meaning than the possession of the ring had had. The ring was not anything I ever thought about except maybe once or twice a year. Now here I was, thinking of the ring, but mostly of my father.

It began to feel as if the absence of the ring bored a hole into me through which my father entered. I thought about what he valued, what he taught me — what he had left me, really.

Though he and my mother were divorced when I was 13 and I seldom saw him after that time, still, he had left me an appreciation for learning, a realization that there can be some love even with distance. He left me a sense of dignity, because he was, in spite of flaws, a dignified man, a gentleman.

AND THEN something dawned on me. We've all been taught the three R's, but we've had little instruction in what I like to refer to now as the three L's: losing, leaving and letting go. Instead we are taught to win, to persevere and to hang in there.

I thought about what this means in my life — and in all our lives. I realized the truth is that most of our lives are spent losing — childhood, friends, loves, our parents, our figures, maybe our health — not to mention jobs we want, money and sometimes our reputations, or face, as the Orientals say.

To lose also can mean to fail, though often we do not even acknowledge this. We are even taught to see failure as success, as in, "You may have lost the game, but you won their respect."

Leaving, I know, is a process to be dealt with, something we can't escape, for it is in many ways the very process of life.

It's hard to leave my house of 15 years, but I feel and know, too, that it is time. It is time to go on, to shed this skin, this phase of life.

Skin analysis offered at Julian Gold

A representative for the Erno Laszlo Skincare System will be offering complimentary analysis 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Monday through Wednesday at Julian Gold, 4610 N. Garfield St.

Dr. Erno Laszlo, now deceased, opened his first institute in Budapest, Hungary in 1927, six years after his graduation from medical school. In 1939, he opened his first institute in the United States, located at 677 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

He would tell his clients, "At every level, you are at least three persons — the woman you think you are; the woman you really are; and the woman you appear to be." He insisted that, "If you want skin beauty after 40, you should begin to work at it when you are 20. The treasure of beauty must last a lifetime."

Laszlo was a pioneer in the concept that it is water, not oil, which is the benefactor of skin. He instituted soap and water-wash techniques that call for at least 30 splashes per-cleaning to remove impurities from the skin. He would often say, "No ugly people exist — only those who neglect themselves."

Advance appointments for analysis may be arranged by calling 682-5368. Walk-ins are welcome.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Tickets, priced at $12 for reserved seating, may be purchased at Endless Horizons and Chaparral Center box office. As of Thursday, 4,200 of the 4500 had been sold.

"In the beginning, we were only setting for 4,000 because we felt that 6,000 seats put people too far from the stage," said Mike Stevens, director of Chaparral Center. "We are moving the stage up so that the 4,000 ticket holders will have good seats. Tickets have sold so well that I talked the promoter into hanging Gallagher's sound so we are able to increase the number of seats we are selling. As of Thursday night we had about 300 seats to sell. It's definitely going to be a sellout."

Stevens has a suggestion for those sitting close to the stage.

"I advise people to bring protective gear, especially those who are sitting in the front," said Stevens. He laughed, then added, "I particularly enjoy watching Gallagher in action, and I know those who are familiar with his routines know why they need at least a rain coat, if they are sitting in the front rows."

"There never has been a comedian as a solo act at the center, but then he's an exceptional act," said Stevens. "He has a lot of current day humor. He doesn't poke fun at one thing, he pokes fun at everything. He's not filthy or vulgar, but his humor is adult humor."

Brass quintet to play

The Midland-Odessa Symphony Chorale and the Lone Star Brass Quintet present their annual spring concert on April 15 at St. Ann's Catholic Church and April 17 at St. Paul Presbyterian Church, Odessa. Both performances will begin at 8 p.m. and are free to the public.

The Chorale repertoire will span five centuries of music by European and American composers. The works include a Victorian English motet by Charles V. Stanford entitled "Justorum Animae," "Tu Solus" by the Renaissance Netherlands composer Josquin de Pres and a 20th century French motet, "Ubi Caritas," by Maurice Durufle, based on a Gregorian chant. The first half of the concert will end with Psalm 100 set to music by the 17th century composer Heinrich Schutz. This piece was written for two choirs. The Lone Star Brass Quintet will join the Chorale to play the second choir part.

The Quintet will continue the concert, performing four pieces including "Quintet" by Malcolm Arnold, "Fugue in G Minor" by J.S. Bach, "Suite" by William Boyce and "Quintet in D-flat Major, Op. 7" by Victor Ewald.

Following the Lone Star Brass Quintet performance, the Chorale will close the concert with an arrangement of "Three Hungarian Folk Songs" by Bela Bartok and three folk hymns and spirituals.

The Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale, Inc. offers this free-to-the-public concert and invites everyone to attend. For more information, contact the Symphony office at 563-5269.

"History of Dance" was choreographed by Tom Pazik of the Atlanta Ballet. This is a multimedia presentation of dance through the ages; from the minuet to break dancing. Projection slides are used to project images of the period the dancers are focusing on.

'Winnie' to be staged

FORT WORTH — It's almost more than a bear can bear when Winnie-the-Pooh is forced to forgo his honey to rescue Piglet from taking a bath in the Casa Manana Playhouse production of "Winnie-the-Pooh" Friday and Saturday.

Tickets to the production are $4.50 and may be purchased by calling the box office, 1-817-332-6221.

In A.A. Milne's story, dramatized by Kristin Sergel, Piglet's been captured by Kanga, who is cleaning up the forest by giving all the animals a bath. Although Kanga considers it her civic duty to bathe the animals, the other forest animals are mortified at the prospect of taking their first baths.

"Winnie-the-Pooh" is the seventh in a series of eight playhouse productions for children. The final production of the 1985-86 season will be "Sleeping Beauty" May 2, 3, 9 and 10.

CYNTHIA

"I keep everything in its proper place and know the extent of my worth. I've tried to stretch and reach so that 'Seasons of the Heart' will be better not for you, but for me.

"Extraordinary? You think I'm extraordinary? No! A little boy of 4 who conducts a symphony at Carnegie Hall, now that's extraordinary. You get the difference, or don't you? Want me to go on?

"Always remember that God doesn't gift many people. You've got to take things as a blessing and not take it all for granted. Be humble. Be grateful...

"I started writing at a time that could be considered a bit late in life. Let's face it, darling, who begins a writing career at age 55? Isn't that a time when you sit down and worry about what to do with the rest of your life and cry? The bottom line is that I've worked hard for everything."

Suddenly there's a wistful look in her eyes. Quickly changing the subject, she turns to her daily schedule that could put wrinkles even on Estee Lauder.

At 4 a.m.every day this relentless bubble of energy rises to the quiet of the San Francisco morning. By 4:30 she's in and out of the bath and fully dressed.

One hour later and she's poised at her table ("No desk, thank you") and ready to go. Before 8 a.m she's up and around the park for a mile-and-a-half walk.

She doesn't care much for sports — "Sweetheart, I'm not into sports." She frowns. "I'm into words."

To help organize each new day is Kimberly, her secretary, who shows up promptly at 9 a.m. After a lengthy tete-a-tete to discuss the motivations of a particular character, the author begins editing until they break for lunch.

By 3:30 Ms. Freeman is buzzing downtown to take a breather — a movie or dinner date — and usually is home by 8:30 that evening.

"In case you're wondering about this incredible amount of energy, it never leaves me," she states. "And I never, ever sigh and say, 'Boy, am I glad this day's over.' I don't want to wish any day away."

But if she could have any day back, perhaps it would be when the pretty 18-year-old wed Herbert Feinberg, one of San Francisco's most eligible doctors. Although 15 years her senior and never married, the doctor was considered the catch among eager mothers desirous of making a "shiddach" — a match for one of their daughters.

But Ms. Freeman had a head start when, at age 15, she was smitten by Feinberg, who happened to be her grandmother's physician. Three years later on a Sunday afternoon, much like the events of Doris in "Portraits," they fell in love and have maintained that devotion for over 50 years.

She sighs. "He proposed on our first date."

She says Feinberg began his conquest by sending his friend orchids, and then wined and dined her. Afterwards, he suggested she accompany him to a speakeasy.

"Absolutely not," she replied.

"Why?" he asked her.

"Because my father would kill me!"

Apparently the doctor was more persuasive. Ms. Freeman not only went to the speakeasy, but on the way home he stopped the car, leaned over and whispered, "You know I'm going to marry you."

"When did you make up your mind about that?" she questioned.

"Last Sunday."

"But you just met me last Sunday."

Three weeks later the two eloped over her parents' objections. "They thought I was nuts," she recalls.

She scoots along her marble floors and into the pink-hued bedroom for a photograph of her husband. "So handsome, wasn't he? And such lovely eyes."

She says she doesn't like to be compared to her characters. "I'm like none of them and like all of them. Obviously they're all out of my psyche, but to say they have particular traits like I have, no, honey.

"But I'll tell you something: I wouldn't mind being like some of them. Chavala, for example, in 'No Time For Tears.' Now there was some courageous lady. What a survivor. So if I am like any of these people, I'm a survivor."

Literary critics would agree, for it took the author 25 years to complete what some considered her finest book, "No Time for Tears," a story that spanned three continents and embraced Israel's historic struggle for statehood.

"I worked hard gathering all that information, as you can imagine. In fact, I spent a full year inside the Jewish Archives in New York. It got so the guards never asked me for identification. I was becoming a fixture."

For that last bit of realism, Ms. Freeman took off for another year exploring kibbutz life in Israel.

But let's not forget Doris from "Portraits" who, became a writer at age 55. "It was funny, really. In her old age she was becoming a sort of celebrity..."

"And you think I'm Doris? Boy, that was a mistake," she declares, shaking her head in disapproval. "Look, I'm not Doris and my husband doesn't resemble the character of Dr. Levin. But if you want to hear something funny, my husband proofread the book with me, and truthfully, he never put us in the novel. Apparently everyone else did, and it caused a lot of unnecessary pain to our family. But tell me honestly. Can you think of one profession in the world which allows women to become overnight successes at age 55?

"I'm always looking for new adventures and storylines." Her eyes begin to dance as she discusses a project of her dreams. Ms. Freeman's fondest wish is to see her stories on celluloid one day, but until then, the peppy great-grandmother is content receiving reams of fan mail filled with adulation, kudos and even proposals.

And then there are special letters from children, notably from South Africa where her name lights up in the country's strong Jewish community. "It's so thrilling to hear that I've inspired them, that I've given an insight to their Jewishness."

"But someone asked me what was going on when I wrote 'Illusions of Love.' She just didn't like it. I wrote her back and explained that I was sorry. You see, the book was completed in a sad time in my life when I truly wanted to abandon writing. But fans kept saying, 'Please give us one more.'

"Anyway, she sent a note back and explained how upset she was for hurting my feelings. So, what to do? I had to answer her once more, so I wrote, 'You didn't need to apologize. I just wanted you to understand.'"

Remodelers meet 'Raiders' in 'Pit'

By DAVID LEE FORREST

Forrest

Our hero is on the long, curving staircase. It looks old, but seems study enough. Suddenly, unexpectedly, the steps begin to heave violently. The leading man is clearly in danger as the stairs slowly self-destruct in an spectacularly terrifying sequence. He is finally left dangling by his fingertips from the edge of the precipice...

That scene could very well have come from Steven Spielberg's adventure epic "Raiders of the Lost Ark." In fact, it's from a new romantic comedy about home remodeling, "The Money Pit," which was produced by Spielberg and features many of the elaborate touches commonly associated with his work.

The movie stars Tom Hanks as a New York City lawyer and Shelley Long as his classical musician girlfriend who are evicted from an apartment and have to find new lodgings quickly with very little cash.

They are offered a wonderful deal on beautiful old Long Island home and, of course, fail to realize that it literally is too good to be true.

The front door falls off its hinges when someone knocks. The plumbing makes bizarre noises and drips gooey sludge into the bathtub. The electrical wiring erupts into a sizzling trail of flame. And, of course, the staircase collapses.

When they hire contractors to make repairs, the couple soon find their "bargain" home has become, as the title says, a bottomless pit swallowing up every spare bit of money they have — and some they don't have.

The clever Hanks and lovely Ms. Long both put in good performances, even though the story is occasionally weak. For example, a subplot involving Ms. Long's character and her ex-husband, played by dancer Alexander Godunov, is unimaginative, but the actors still manage to make it work reasonably well.

Compared to the household decay and damage their characters have to cope with, the demoniac haunted house in "The Amityville Horror" films would seem positively cozy.

Some critics have even gone so far as to suggest that "The Money Pit" can be seen as a remake of "Poltergeist," the haunted house horror movie Spielberg produced in 1982, with obnoxious remodeling workers replacing the unruly ghosts.

Some of the film's most intricate gags are very reminiscent of Spielberg's "1941," the John Belushi-Dan Ackroyd comedy that laid waste to World War II-era Los Angeles.

The film's production designer, Patrizia Von Brandenstein, had also been working with her husband on a 250-year-old home in Connecticut for four years when she became involved in the movie.

They helped fill "The Money Pit" with glimpses of real-life situations (exaggerated for the sake of satire) that most people who have built or renovated a house should be able to recognize — and laugh at.

'Lucas' lightweight but likable film

Meanwhile, Cappie falls for Maggie (with names like "Maggie" and "Cappie," they're obviously meant for one another) and dumps his old cheerleader girlfriend, who's rather snide but may be a basically decent person.

While that romantic triangle — actually more of a pentagon — may sound like a TV soap opera subplot, it's actually the storyline of "Lucas," a mild-mannered teen romance film about a mild-mannered teen.

The title character, played by Corey Haim, is a small, brainy 14-year-old boy who has been "accelerated" so that he's attending classes with 16-year-olds.

Those two teen years might as well be light-years when Lucas falls for red-headed 16-year-old classmate Maggie, played by Kerri Green.

Not only is Lucas younger and physically smaller, but, for all his intelligence, he's terribly naive and lacking in social graces (at least what passes for "social graces" among high schoolers).

Lucas is a mild-mannered outsider, scorned and taunted by some of his classmates as being "different," who likes to imagine himself as a rugged individualist.

In a wildly desperate attempt to win attention and admiration, slight, bespectacled Lucas goes out for the varsity football team, which he actually despises. One of his friends aptly sums up this endeavor by shouting, "It's suicide!"

On the one hand, the film is a bit disappointing because it forces Lucas to try to blend in and become just "one of the guys" instead of letting him valiantly stand by his own independent values.

On the other hand, the movie doesn't give in and take the easy way out during the inevitable big football game scene.

The performances are generally good. Haim, who played Sally Field's son in the recent "Murphy's Romance," is nicely quirky. Cappie, played by Charlie Sheen (son of Martin Sheen and brother of Emilio Estevez) and Ms. Green's Maggie remain likable even as they inadvertently break Lucas' heart. Rina, played by pixie-like Winona Ryder, is so winsome that one wishes she'd had a bigger and better role.

There's also a lot of genuine emotion in the quiet screenplay. Most people have probably been through a moment like the quietly catastrophic one when Lucas, all decked out in a tuxedo for his big prom date with Maggie, suddenly realizes she has fallen for Cappie instead of him.

"Lucas" is sentimental and a little pat, but director David Seltzer manages to keep it from turning into a wimped-out teen version of "Peyton Place."

"Lucas," rated PG for strong language, is now showing at the North Park Cinemas.

'Police Academy' cops third sequel

The original "Police Academy" comedy was essentially a ripoff of Bill Murray's popular 1981 "Stripes." "Police Academy" took the basic premise of "Stripes" — dump a group of misfits with a wacky leader into a rigid authoritarian situation — and then attempted to add the pacing and style of 1980's hit "Airplane."

Unfortunately, the quality of the writing, acting and directing in "Police Academy" was nowhere near as good as in "Stripes" or "Airplane."

For some reason, though, kids loved "Police Academy" and it did well at the box office. Since it was made cheaply, the movie easily turned a tidy profit, which, of course, made a sequel almost inescapable.

"Police Academy II: Their First Assignment," was even less interesting than its predecessor. There really wasn't a lot more the filmmakers could do with the thin premise, so they just recycled the same old, stale jokes.

The new "Police Academy III: Back in Training" is actually a mild improvement over that second film and is only slightly weaker than the original comedy.

Most of the same old inept police jokes are used again and the same cast is back; there's Steve Guttenberg as the smarmy leader of the motley cop crew, David Graf as the macho weapons freak, Bubba Smith as the mild-mannered but massive muscleman, Michael Winslow as the walking sound effects machine and Marion Ramsey as the squeaky-voiced policewoman who always yells "you dirt bag!" at least once per picture.

This group is reassembled to help the dim-witted head of the academy, played by George Gaynes, beat his archrival Mauser, Art Metrano, and keep the hallowed halls of the academy open during a budget crunch.

The only things that make this movie marginally better than "Police Academy II" are comedian Tim Kazurinsky as a wimpish new recruit and some new sight gags based on other movies.

"Police Academy III" uses the shower scene from "Psycho," a combat shot from "Missing in Action," a line from "Sudden Impact," the boat chase from "Live and Let Die" and some bits lifted from bad martial arts films.

If you loved both the original "Police Academy" and "Police Academy II," then you'll probably enjoy this latest installment in the series.

If you weren't exactly swept off your feet by the first "Police Academy" and didn't like "Police Academy II," you should certainly back away from "Police Academy III: Back in Training."

"Police Academy III: Back in Training," rated PG for strong language and sexual innuendo, is now showing at the Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

'April Fool's' slashes to twist ending

After "Halloween," "Friday the 13th" and even some Christmas-themed horror films, it was inevitable that one day there would be a teen-age slasher movie with the title "April Fool's Day."

As with most of these slice-and-dice extravaganzas, the bulk of the audience at the showing of "April Fool's Day" reviewed was made up of teens.

The continuing popularity of slasher flicks with teen-agers is something of a puzzle, since it's usually other teens getting horribly hacked up in these films.

Perhaps these Dead Teen-ager movies are a way teens, who are just coming face-to-face with adulthood, try to learn to deal with and accept the concept of mortality.

"Kids are endlessly, voraciously curious, not only about death but about everything," horror writer Stephen King said in his study of scary fiction and film, "Danse Macabre." He wrote that "the horror film suggests we just have a good close look at the physical artifact of death."

King went on to theorize that "the ultimate subtext that underlies all good horror films is, But not yet. Not this time. Because in the final sense, the horror movie is the celebration of those who feel they can examine death because it does not yet live in their own hearts."

At any rate, as far as this genre goes, "April Fool's Day" is acutally mild and tries to inject a little humor in the generally grim proceedings.

The movie is about a small group of college kids who go to spend a weekend on a isolated island at the home of their classmate Muffy.

Within 24 hours, members of the group have started mysteriously disappearing at a rapid clip, leaving only grisly clues behind.

Virtually all of the movie is utterly ordinary gore film fare, but, without giving too much away, the plot does have a rather neat — if mildly ridiculous — twist at the end.

The nice thing about this ending is that it turns the tables on the terribly trite geek-with-a-knife theme that has dominated youth-oriented horror movies for years. It also greatly softens the impact of the preceding violence.

The film's advertising slogan is that it's "A cut above the rest." "April Fool's Day" is by no means a great — or even good — movie, but at least it is a narrow nick above most teen slasher flicks.

"April Fool's Day," rated R for violence, strong language and some sexual material, is now showing at the UA Cine IV.

Odessa artist recognized in two competitive exhibits

ODESSA — Odessa artist John Hillier recently received regional and state recognition in two competitive exhibitions.

Hillier appears in the Texas Fine Arts Association's Texas Realism Show throughout the state. The exhibition features 61 selections chosen from 1,300 entries.

His mixed media drawing, "The Garden of Reason," premiered with the exhibit in Austin in December. It was one of 44 works from the show to receive the Touring Citation Award from juror Thomas A. Livesay, director of the Museum of New Mexico. The tour will extend through the spring of 1987 and will visit Nacogdoches, Port Arthur, Abilene, Waco, Temple and San Antonio.

Hillier's, along with 29 other paintings, drawings, photographs and water colors from the Texas Realism Show, is on display through April 25 at the Art Institute for the Permian Basin.

"Although Hillier, is a board member for the Art Institute, the staff scheduled the Texas Realism Show without realizing he was one of the exhibitors," said a spokesman for the Art Institute.

"It's a real honor for a local guy to hang in the Art Institute," said Hillier.

In addition, an acrylic painting of Hillier's, "The Marriage of Romance and Reason," is on exhibit at the Abilene Fine Arts Museum through April 5. Juror Patricia Meadows, director of D'Art Gallery of Dallas, selected Hillier for an honorable mention award from a field of 200 entries in Abilene's 42nd annual painting competition.

He received a bachelor of arts degree from U.T. Austin in 1975 and earned a masters of fine arts from Texas Tech University in 1980.

Hillier has shown in Midland exhibitions such as the Museum of the Southwest, Midland Arts Association annual shows, Permian Basin Petroleum Museum and Texas Fine Arts Association regional show.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF
©1986 Tribune Media Services, Inc.

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—I enjoyed the article on the bid out of turn. Please tell me what would be the ruling had there been a pass out of turn, rather than a bid. — Mrs. W.E.M., Virginia Beach, Va.

A.—That depends on several factors. First, unless an opponent accepts or condones the pass, the call is cancelled and the bidding reverts to the player whose turn it was. If the pass out of rotation occurred before any player has bid, or when it was the turn of the player to the offender's right to bid, the offender must pass when next it is his or her turn to bid. There is no other penalty.

If the pass out of turn occurred after any player has bid and when it was the turn of the offender's partner to call, the penalties are more serious. The offender must pass throughout the rest of the auction; the offender's partner may make any sufficient bid or pass, but is not allowed to double or redouble at that turn. Should the offender's partner pass and subsequently have to make the opening lead, lead penalties apply. Declarer may either require or prohibit the lead of a specified suit, and this restriction continues for as long as the offender's partner holds the lead.

Q.—We were defending a contract of four hearts and had collected the book. With four tricks left to play, declarer had left three trumps and a winning card. He said: "You make the high trump. Down one."

When we all faced our cards, it turned out the outstanding trump was not high, and declarer could have made his contract by drawing the trump. He demanded we give him the contract. What's the rule? — J.P., Chicago, Ill.

A.—Faulty claims and concessions cause more of a problem than any other ruling I know. The Laws state that once a player has made a claim or concession, he may not make any play that is inconsistent with that statement. It does add that a player cannot concede a trick which he could not possibly lose.

However, the latter is not the case in the situation you submit. Here, declarer had forgotten which trump was outstanding. Therefore, it is quite possible he would have led a low trump rather than his high trump, since he thought he had to concede a trick no matter which card he elected to play. Under the circumstances, the ruling must be that he went down one.

There is a lesson to be learned from this. If there is a card outstanding which you think is a winner, play the highest card you can afford when conceding the trick. You might find you have forgotten which card is outstanding, and the rest of the tricks are yours for the taking.

Selections from 'Texas Realism' at art institute

ODESSA — Selections from Texas Fine Arts Association's "Texas Realism 1985" exhibition are on view at The Art Institute for the Permian Basin, Odessa, through April 25.

Covering the spectrum from traditional to contemporary, the exhibition showcases a broad range of realist work by members of Texas Fine Arts Association, a statewide visual arts organization. Selections range from watercolors, pastels and prints to photographs, drawings and paintings.

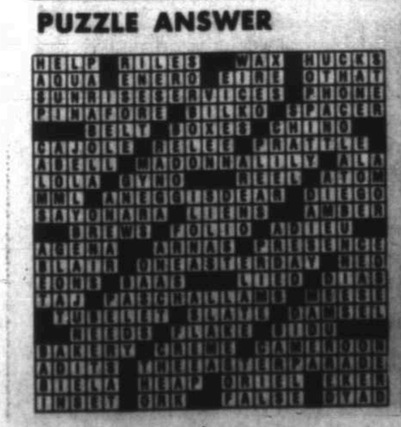

This traveling exhibition was organized by the Texas Fine Arts Association and jurored by Tom Livesay, director fo the Museum of New Mexico, Santa Fe., N.M.

Livesay looked at over 1,300 slides submitted by some 300 artists to select the original exhibition of 60 works which opened in Austin at the Atrium Gallery, St. Edwards University.

According to Livesay, the show represents "an incredibly diverse spectrum of excellent works as varied as the possible views of reality." Describing his selection criteria, Livesay says, "I was looking primarily for fresh versions of 'realism,' fresh interpretations and view points. Technical mastery was an important consideration, since by its very nature realism deals with recognizable features and forms. I tried to determine whether the artist expressed a genuine affection for the work, for the subject matter. The ones that work best mesh all of these concerns."

TFAA is the oldest and largest statewide visual arts organization in Texas composed of working artists and supporters of the arts. For membership information, contact the Association at Box 5023, Austin, Texas 78763, or call 1-512-453-5312.
