Clinton opens health sell

Plan draws partisan reaction from governors

By Vic Ostrowidzki
Hearst News Service

TULSA, Okla. — President Clinton, in an impassioned speech to the National Goverors' Association, pleaded Monday for bipartisan support in overhauling health care.

His address, which contained only broad outlines of the plan that he will detail for Congress next month, drew praise from many Democratic governors. But a number of Republicans voiced skepticism over some of the plan's provisions.

In his appeal Clinton recalled the recent battle that he narrowly won over his deficit reduction plan. "I never want to go through another six months where we have to get all of our votes within one party," he said. "And I don't much care who gets the credit for this health-care reform as long as we do it."

Trouble not new

LUMBERTON, N.C. — Two teen-agers charged with killing Michael Jordan's father didn't say much in court Monday, but a sheriff described them as childhood buddies who were no strangers to police. "These guys have been in big trouble," said Robeson County Sheriff Hubert Stone. Larry Martin Demery, 18, of Rowland and Daniel Andre Green, 18, of Lumberton were ordered held without bond at a brief court appearance Monday./1C

Big Spring arrest

BIG SPRING — A man was in jail Monday after allegedly firing a gun at several people earlier in the day. According to a police report, at approximately 12:02 a.m. Monday, Big Spring officers responded to the 7-Eleven Store, located at 18th and Gregg streets, in reference to a man firing a gun at several people. At the scene, witnesses told officers a gunman had fired several shots from a 12-gauge shotgun into the store's parking lot, damaging at least three vehicles. The suspect had fled the scene before the officers' arrival. The report stated that a 2-year-old girl sitting in the backseat of one of the vehicles was struck in the head by pellets from the shotgun. She was treated and released at Medical Center Hospital. After an investigation, officers arrested Greg Stephen Turner, 43, in Coahoma. He was charged with attempted murder and aggravated assault with a deadly weapon. Bond was set at $30,000.

New developments, attitude shifts alter face of volatile issue

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is third in a three-part series. There is no end in sight for the abortion debate. Nevertheless, some new attitudes and developments are changing the volatile issue, without ignoring either side of the controversy.

What is abortion?

Depending on who's asked, abortion is a lifesaver or a baby killer.

"It's a medical procedure that is done for women that removes something they don't want to have anymore," said Candy Armstrong, 26, who believes in a woman's right to abortion.

In contrast, Debbie Buehler, executive director of West Texas for Life, defines abortion as "the killing of an innocent human life."

Although the difference in opinion was fueled in this country by the legalization of abortion 20 years ago, Americans have lived with abortion for long before that.

Before the mid-1800s in the United States, there were no laws prohibiting abortions performed before "quickening," the time a

'Low-risk' jail release plan takes effect

■ County tries to ease overcrowding; conditions of release will be similar to probationers, can include electronic monitoring.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

In a move to reduce jail overcrowding, county officials will help some low-risk criminal defendants awaiting trial get out of jail.

"We will be going to the jail (beginning today) and looking for offenders to see if they are eligible or ineligible" for the program, said coordinator Tim Long of the Midland County Community Supervisions and Corrections Department.

If an inmate — charged with a felony or misdemeanor — qualifies, his pretrial personal recognizance bond release will be similar to being on probation.

"Basically, what we're going to be doing is trying to relieve some overcrowding in the (two) jails," Long said.

But many inmates will not qualify, according to Capt. Richard Sexton, who oversees jail operations.

"It will not reduce the overcrowding problem. It will ease the overcrowding," Sexton said.

The jail houses 452 people — 152 more than approved by the jail commission. The overcrowded conditions are largely due to convicted felons awaiting transfer to state prisons, officials said.

Program officials estimate about 380 people will be served annually, with about 80 the first month. A maximum of

AT&T takeover to create a vast wireless network

By Edmund L. Andrews
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — In a move that could profoundly alter telecommunications in the United States, American Telephone & Telegraph Co. announced Monday that it would acquire the nation's biggest cellular telephone company for $12.6 billion.

The takeover of McCaw Cellular Communications of Kirkland, Wash., would give AT&T control of a vast wireless network, rapidly blurring the traditional line between local and long-distance service.

The deal, which is subject to federal approval, would be the fifth-largest takeover in the nation's history. And for AT&T, which has been busily investing in or acquiring a wide range of communications and computing companies, the announcement represents an aggressive step beyond its previously stated plan to buy only one-third of McCaw for $3.8 billion.

The outright acquisition is AT&T's response to the explosive growth in wireless communications — a field embracing cellular telephones, two-way paging devices, hand-held computers and mo-

Richards warns of unrest if free trade falls

By Greg McDonald
Hearst News Service

TULSA, Okla. — Texas Gov. Ann Richards warned Monday of possible "civil unrest" in Mexico if the U.S. Congress does not pass the North American Free Trade Agreement.

"I suspect the result of a negative vote on the free trade agreement . . . could result in consequences," Richards said. "We are going to see some very serious disturbances in that country and along our border."

She made her remarks at the National Governors' Association Meeting after leading a committee session that discussed the trade pact involving Mexico, the United States and Canada.

The treaty relaxes trade barriers among the three nations, and side agreements negotiated to make the deal more politically palatable in the United States require Mexico to amend its minimum wage laws and participate in improving environmental conditions along the border.

New Mexico Gov. Bruce King said that Mexican President Carlos Salinas de Gortari had placed such emphasis on the benefits of free trade for the Mexican people that U.S. rejection of the treaty could lead to political unrest.

Richards said that whether the disturbances are political or civil in nature, "I think the result will be the same."

Rejection of the agreement by the United States could lead to "real, natural anger" that could cause "serious unrest on our own continent," Richards said.

Earlier in the day, Richards met with President Clinton, here to pitch his health care plan, and pressed her case for continuing federal funding of the superconducting super collider.

Clinton supports continued development of the scientific project, which he has described as an important investment in research and technology.

But ironically, the president's efforts to cut the federal deficit may end up contributing to a decrease or an end to super collider funding.

To get his economic plan through Congress, the president had to promise more spending cuts this fall, and the collider is a prime target.

The House, which went on record in opposition to the collider last year, voted 280-15 on June 24 to kill the $10 billion project by eliminating its $620 million request from the budge for fiscal year 1994.

The Senate, which breathed new life into the project a year ago, has yet to consider it this year, but Senate opponents believe they have gained strength among newcomers and senators more concerned now about budget problems.

OPENS: President gets partisan reaction

(From 1A)

Afterward, Democratic Gov. Mike Lowry of Washington said he found the president's proposals "positive because they provide a core of benefits, a choice of physicians, (and a way) to contain costs." He said the plan would "fit very nicely with the health-care plan we adopted for our state."

Texas Democrat Ann Richards applauded the plan and called the speech "magnificent."

Two other Democratic governors, David Walters of Oklahoma and Howard Dean of Vermont, said they thought the president's plea for bipartisan support would lead a number of Republican governors to back the plan.

But Republicans generally were cautious.

Gov. Pete Wilson of California said, "While a great many of us like Bill Clinton as a former colleague and a human being, we have to be very careful about agreeing to a system that we think will impose costs on small businesses that we think could actually close their doors." Wilson added: "There is almost universal opposition among Republican governors to a mandatory program."

Massachusetts Gov. William Weld, another Republican, said: "Generally, I think the Republican governors are opposed to employer mandates, we're opposed to tax increases, we're opposed to price controls, we're opposed to cost shifting onto the states,"

Republican Carroll A. Campbell Jr. of South Carolina, who will be elected chairman of the governors' association Tuesday, said Clinton made "a lot of good points," but added that the president left "unanswered such questions as who pays for the transition from the current system, and how long it will take to implement the new system. So far, we've got concepts. Let's get the mechanics on how we get from here to there."

In his speech to the organization he once headed, Clinton said his plan would provide a uniform package of benefits for all legal U.S. residents, "not just those who don't have health insurance coverage now, but those who are at risk of losing it."

The plan, he said, would group people into large purchasing alliances that would act as their agents in purchasing the lowest-cost health insurance.

Clinton said the plan would specify how it is to be financed, focus on services to prevent illnesses, offer some prescription drug coverage and give states freedom to tailor the system to their own special needs.

He assured the governors that their own efforts to deal with escalating health care costs were appreciated and would be accommodated in his plan. "The national government has a lot to learn from the states in the tough decisions that some of you have made already," the president declared.

Clinton said his plan also would forbid insurers to reject people because of pre-existing medical conditions, phase in coverage for long-term nursing care and change antitrust laws to make it easier for hospitals and other health providers to merge or better coordinate resources.

He said he plans to recommend that the 25 percent deductibility allowed self-employed people for health insurance be raised to 100 percent.

To alleviate the burden on small businesses, Clinton said he would recommend that the mandatory premiums be phased-in over several years.

Later his senior health care adviser, Ira Magaziner, said the phase-in period would be five to seven years. He said the plan ultimately would require big employers to pay 80 percent of their employees' premiums. That would cost about 7 percent to 7.5 percent of payroll, he said.

Small firms with just a handful of workers required to pay no more than 4 percent of their payroll for health premiums, Magaziner said.

Expect high near 101 today

Staff report

Today's forecast calls for sunny skies with a high near 101 and south to southeast winds at 5-15 mph. Tonight should be fair with a low in the lower 70s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Wednesday should be sunny with a high near 100.

After an overnight low of 69, Monday's high reached 97, compared with the record high for that date of 104 set in 1946. The record low was 60 set in 1972.

STATE

The relentless August heat continued Monday, with a record high set in Houston and a heat advisory in North Texas.

Houston Intercontinental Airport reported a high of 101 degrees Monday afternoon, breaking the previous record of 100 established in 1951.

In the rest of South Texas, there were a few showers Monday afternoon, but it was another dry, hot day. There were cloudy skies over most of the region, with afternoon temperatures in the 80s and 90s.

Today should be partly cloudy skies with a slight chance for showers or thunderstorms along the coast. Lows tonight were forecast in the 70s near 80s. Highs on Tuesday will be in the 90s to near 100.

Widely scattered showers and thunderstorms were reported in parts of the panhandle Monday, but most of West Texas was sunny.

Temperatures were mostly in the 90s, but reached into the 100s in some areas.

The panhandle should be fair and mostly sunny through today. There also should be partly cloudy skies with a chance of thunderstorms in the far west. Lows tonight should be in the 60s and 70s Highs today should be in the mid-90s to near 110 degrees.

A heat advisory was in effect for North Texas on Monday, and temperatures were in the 90s and 100s.

The heat advisory was expected to be in place until today.

Afternoon temperatures in Sherman were over 100 degrees, and most of the rest of the region was in the mid- and high 90s.

The sunny hot days should continue through Wednesday. Highs should reach near 100 and lows should be in the 70s and 80s.

NATION

Hurricane Fernanda swirled off the Hawaiian Islands on Monday, while on the U.S. mainland storms caused flooding in the Northwest and Illinois.

The West was unseasonably cool, while hot weather gripped the South.

In northwest Illinois, heavy rains flooded some roads near the cities of Joy and New Boston.

In Iowa, flood warnings were posted through Wednesday for parts of the Iowa River, where flooding was expected along Route 14, on Iowa 330 south of Albia, and in farmland at Margeno.

In the West, the temperature in Red Bluff, Calif., was 52 degrees, the lowest for Aug. 16 since 1943.

But in the South, where heat advisories have been posted for several days, temperatures hovered near 100 in many areas and heat advisories were issued Tuesday for most of Arkansas and northern Texas.

In eastern Oklahoma, temperatures also reached 100 degrees.

Showers and thunderstorms were over western New England, the Ohio Valley, the upper Mississippi Valley, the central Atlantic Coast, southern Florida, the Gulf of Mexico coast, northern Georgia and Alabama, central New Mexico, the northern Rockies and the northern Pacific Coast.

In Hawaii, a hurricane watch was posted for all of the islands as Hurricane Fernanda moved along a path that was expected to carry it 100 to 200 miles north of the islands by early today.

About 200 people on Hawaii Island left their homes Monday as a precaution and others stocked up on provisions.

In the 48 contiguous states, rainfall during the six hours ending at 2 p.m. EDT included 1.19 inches at Pendleton, Ore., and 1.05 inches at Huron, S.D., and Binghamton, N.Y.

PLAN: County tries to ease jail crowding

(From 1A)

152 defendants per month will take part.

Each month about 30-40 will drop out of the program as their charges are resolved in court, Long said. Some will obviously return to jail for punishment.

About six to eight program participants per month probably will violate the terms of release and return to jail, he said.

Long said about 200 people per year in recent years are in Midland County jail awaiting trial.

In addition to lowering the number of inmates, the program will help poor defendants get out of jail and save the county some money, program officials said.

Sexton confirmed the status of such prisoners.

"There are people in jail simply because they cannot afford bond," Sexton said. "Hopefully the program will work and get some people out of jail."

And hopefully, removing some prisoners may lessen disruptions among inmates caused by overcrowding, Long said.

About 10 days ago, two inmates, in separate incidents, were hospitalized because of serious injuries suffered in jail fights.

"Tensions are high, no doubt about it . . . due to overcrowding," Sexton said.

Cramped conditions may aggravate disruptions but fights erupt nonetheless during less crowded times, he said.

Serious offenders — charged with any of 12 aggravated felonies — will not be considered for the personal recognizance bond release.

Eligible people will include low-risk inmates jailed for probation violation (who did not commit a new criminal offense), indigent and disabled prisoners, felons mandated to be released due to a hearing delay, and individuals who were in rehabilitation programs and would be better served there.

Conditions of release will be similar to probationers and can include electronic monitoring.

Judges will determine the conditions and receive recommendations by program coordinators, who are probation officers.

Judge George Gilles of the 142nd District does not anticipate the added hearings to further clog the overburdened court docket.

"I don't know that it will necessarily create many more additional hearings because many defense attorneys are filing bond hearings anyway" for bond reductions and other reasons, Gilles said.

Officials said the release of offenders will not increase risks to the public. The program will help insure safety to the public because defendants will be monitored, officials said.

County Commissioners last month approved $30,000 to operate the program through Sept. 30, the end of this fiscal year, and $120,000 for the fiscal year 1994. Program officials had requested $35,000 for the next month and a half, and $200,000 for the next fiscal year.

DEAL: AT&T to take over cellular phone giant

bile fax machines, all of which use radio waves to send and receive information.

For investors, the day's announcement creates uncertainties about which telecommunications companies would benefit from the AT&T-McCaw deal. But for McCaw's chairman, Craig O. McCaw, the agreement will represent a billion-dollar payoff for years of effort building his family's business into a communications power.

AT&T hopes to marry the computerized intelligence of its long-distance network with McCaw's wireless systems to offer a whole new family of customized services. McCaw operates or has a controlling interest in the cellular telephone networks serving many of the nation's largest metropolitan areas.

"Together, we share a vision of wireless communications, a vision of anytime, anywhere communications," Robert E. Allen, AT&T's chairman and chief executive said Monday at the New York news conference where the deal was announced. "This merger is the surest, fastest way to success in this fast-growing market."

For starters, AT&T would market new wireless offerings under the AT&T brand name as part of a combined package with its traditional long-distance services. Over the longer term, the long-distance network could be used to act as a computerized secretary that would screen messages arriving at someone's desk and automatically route them to a pager or pocket phone anywhere in the country.

The takeover should also give AT&T a central spot in the still-infant market for mobile computing. McCaw is already starting to roll out new data services that will allow people to send and receive large volumes of text on the same frequencies that now carry voice conversations.

AT&T, for its part, already owns NCR Corp., a computer maker it acquired for $7.9 billion in 1991, and is part owner of various start-up companies that are creating computers and software for wireless networks.

The deal needs the approval of both the Justice Department and the Federal Communications Commission. And it is certain to be disputed because it raises the specter of a telephone monolith similar to the old Bell System that was shattered almost 10 years ago.

"The first thing that comes to mind is, will it raise a new monopoly problem?" said James H. Quello, acting chairman of the commission, which must rule on the transfer of McCaw's cellular licenses to AT&T. "If that issue gets raised, it's going to have to be explored."

The biggest opposition is likely to come from the regional Bell telephone companies, which were spun off from AT&T in the January 1984 divestiture that split the old Bell System into separate long-distance and local-telephone operations.

Many of the Bell companies, which fear that AT&T would be able to use McCaw's cellular network to invade their local telephone business, point out that they remain prohibited under terms of the court-enforced breakup decree from offering long-distance services. Executives of at least one of the Bell companies said Monday that they would ask the FCC and the Justice Department to block the deal until the long-distance ban on them is lifted.

"We're not afraid of competition from anybody," said James R. Young, general counsel for Bell Atlantic Corp., which owns local telephone companies from New Jersey through Virginia. "But if we're not allowed to provide long-distance service we're being put at a substantial disadvantage."

Israel accedes to request to freeze North Korea ties

JERUSALEM (AP) — Acceding to a U.S. request, Israel froze contacts with North Korea on Monday following a dispute on how best to persuade the Communist country from selling arms in the region.

In return, Israeli officials said they expect Washington to work on persuading North Korea to stop arms sales to the Middle East.

"We are putting off the contacts until we see what is happening," said Behira Burdugo, an adviser to Foreign Minister Shimon Peres. He spoke following a meeting of Peres and Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

Israeli officials met with North Koreans in China last week to prepare for establishing diplomatic ties. Israel wanted to increase its influence with Pyongyang to head off reported sales of North Korean missiles to Iran and Syria.

But the United States sees isolation as the best method of dealing with North Korea. The North has been blocking International Atomic Energy Agency inspectors from two suspicious nuclear sites, heightening fears that it is developing nuclear arms.

"We share Israel's concerns over missile proliferation, and we will work with the Israeli government and the international community to stop such proliferation," said State Department spokesman Michael McCurry in Washington."

"Just as the United States considers us, we must consider them," Peres told Israel army radio.

"Israel would support very much the leading role of the United States to limit the dangers which are coming from North Korea," he told Israel TV.

Officials said they would wait and see how the Americans fared, stressing that the freeze was not permanent.

Warring sides agree to demilitarize Sarajevo

GENEVA (AP) — Bosnia's warring factions agreed in principle Monday to demilitarize Sarajevo and place the city under temporary U.N. administration — an accord which, if implemented, would lift the siege of Sarajevo.

A U.N. spokesman said the tentative agreement would cover a large area around the capital, including strategic hills and suburbs from which Serbs have shelled the city for 16 months.

The accord came in the first face-to-face talks in two weeks between leaders of the warring factions. Until Monday's tentative agreement, the future status of Sarajevo had remained unresolved in the peace talks.

But the U.N. spokesman for the conference, John Mills, cautioned that the accord was not a given.

"We are not talking about a final agreement here," Mills cautioned. "The devil is in the detail. The details are what will be worked out by the committee."

Sarajevo has been one of the most contested issues of the talks. Muslims want to retain control of the capital, but Serbs want to carve out the suburbs they currently hold.

'We are not talking about a final agreement here.'
— U.N. spokesman John Mills

Mills said further talks would be held Tuesday and were likely to consider the question of the fate of Muslim-populated enclaves in eastern Bosnia that are surrounded by Serb forces.

The agreement came as a last group of 200 Bosnian Serb soldiers left Mount Igman, a key peak overlooking Sarajevo. Bosnian Serbs took Igman and nearby Mount Bjelasnica earlier this month, prompting Bosnia's Muslim President Alija Izetbegovic to boycott the peace talks for two weeks in protest.

In Washington, the United States declared the withdrawal of the troops from the two mountains had not ended the "strangulation" of Sarajevo. The United States and its NATO allies are poised to strike Serb positions if Sarajevo's siege is not ended.

In Sarajevo, a U.N. spokesman caused a stir when he refused to use the word "siege" when briefing reporters, apparently to try and defuse the threat of NATO air strikes against Bosnian Serbs.

"What I'm saying is that there are signs that suggest that (Serbs) are moving in a way that is going to allow for improvement of conditions here, I hope," Canadian Cmdr. Barry Frewer said in explaining why he did not use "siege."

Bosnian Vice President Ejup Ganic said Frewer's comments were "irresponsible" and demanded he be withdrawn.

In their agreement on Sarajevo, the leaders "accepted in principle (that Sarajevo) will be administered for an interim period by the United Nations," Mills said, adding that the length of the period had yet to be defined.

Izetbegovic and Croat and Serb leaders agreed to appoint a committee of three representatives to make recommendations for details of the future status of Sarajevo, Mills said.

Sources close to the talks said the three-member committee should determine the ethnic composition of nine of 10 of metropolitan Sarajevo's municipalities in order to establish future local rule. The 10th municipality, Pale, would be part of the Bosnian Serb republic.

"The parties accept as a basic principle the exclusion of all armed forces except those of the United Nations," Mills said.

The committee is also to examine the issue of civilian policing, the establishment of a committee to coordinate with the U.N. administrator and the roles of municipal authorities and U.N. administration, he said.

Earlier Monday the leaders agreed to allow U.N. military observers to go anywhere in the country, a decision that Mills called "important." He said it was "part of the opening up of Bosnia-Herzegovina."

Mills said the leaders then turned to "the focus of today's meeting ... to resolve outstanding areas of the map."

It's nail-biting time in Nigeria as military ruler prepares major speech

ABIDJAN, Ivory Coast (AP) — Nigeria's ruler plans a major speech to a special session of the elected parliament today. Once again, it's nail-biting time for a nation that has come to expect the unexpected.

Many people have been dumbfounded in recent days by relentless speculation, much of it fed by government sources, that Gen. Ibrahim Babangida will retire from the army but stay in power.

By trading his uniform for civvies, he would cynically keep his promise to relinquish authority to a civilian president, namely himself.

A long procession of pro-Babangida groups has been visiting the general, urging him to head the "interim government" of soldiers and civilians that he says will take over on Aug. 27, his long-promised deadline for democracy.

During the weekend, however, other Babangida insiders have reportedly been advising that such a move would be even too blatant for the general, who voided the June 12 presidential ballot that was to produce his civilian successor.

On Sunday, the respected Guardian newspaper of Lagos said a special military committee set up by Babangida is now urging him to name a civilian to head the interim government.

This civilian would not have the title of president and would rule Africa's most populous nation until December 1994, when a new elected government would supposedly take power.

The Guardian did not say what role Babangida envisioned for himself, but if he remains head of the armed forces he still controls the country.

Government officials often leak items about what the government is going to do just before it does something completely different.

This time, the vague comments from members of the general's inner circle indicate that perhaps even Babangida is uncertain which card to play in a tense nation of 90 million people.

Babangida was supposed to speak to the special session of both houses of the National Assembly on Monday, but it was abruptly postponed a day without explanation.

Babangida is obviously serious about the meeting because he has decided to do something he has refused to do previously: pay for the hotel rooms of the lawmakers.

The government also said Babangida, with the nation virtually paralyzed by the political crisis, would preside over a military parade on Tuesday marking his 52nd birthday.

Even Nigerian journalists who study the mercurial ruler's behavior patterns were puzzled by that one.

Babangida has repeatedly rewritten and delayed the transition to democracy, painstakingly organizing each plan and then scrapping it.

One of the effects has been to aggravate ethnic and religious tensions in the nation.

LOSE WEIGHT OR STOP SMOKING FREE
American Health Technology has established a community health care grant to pay professional therapists to help people Lose Weight or Stop Smoking.
The therapist's $60 fee for each person attending is paid by the grant. To help pay for other costs that make this clinic possible, we ask that each person who attending pay a registration fee of $5.
There are no treatment costs for complete "Group Therapy". There are no strings attached.
Funds from the grant are to be used in many communities throughout America. There is sufficient money available in the grant to help several thousands of people in your community, Including you!
We are sponsoring a clinic funded by the grant at the location, date and time published below. Please attend if you want to Stop Smoking or Lose Excess Body Fat.
• If you are an overweight WOMAN you can reduce ONE to THREE dress sizes in 30 days.
• If you are an overweight MAN you can reduce ONE to THREE inches from your waist in about four weeks.
• If you smoke or chew tobacco you can quit permanently with no weight gain or uncomfortable withdrawal symptoms.
• If you smoke and also are overweight you can eliminate both disorders at the same time.
• Attend this clinic and benefit from the latest therapy techniques including CLINICAL HYPNOSIS.
• During the first half of the session we will explain the latest techniques we use to help you. We will answer any questions and discuss your concerns. We then take a 30 minute break so you can decide if you are ready to Stop Smoking, Lose Weight, or both! If you are not, simply leave. There is no obligation to stay. If you stay, you will complete your final hour of therapy after the break.
• After therapy most people feel like a "new person". You can be free of your desire to smoke and also be extremely motivated to eat the proper amount of healthy foods and to exercise.
• You will also be relieved of stress and tension. The entire process is a wonderful relaxing experience that is good for you.
• You only need to attend this one session for desirable results. Daily use of our "optional" hypnotherapy audio cassette tape makes this possible. Our clinical tape for your disorder hypnotizes you safely and gently in just minutes. It will modify your behavior to easily obtain your goal. The tape will be on sale during the break for $15. Cash or check will be accepted.
• Your therapist will be Mel Gilley, Ph.D. Dr. Gilley is nationally recognized for his extraordinarily high client success rate. He has practiced privately for eleven years.
• Hundreds of seats will be available for "group" hypnotherapy. Plenty of free parking. FIRST COME, FIRST SEATED! For best seats arrive early. Tear this out and show it to your friends and coworkers. ALL ARE WELCOME!

Abortion: Rights or Wrong?

Two sides likely forever at odds over controversy

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

They answer a question with a question.

They cite the Bible and the U.S. Constitution.

They produce statistics and studies and personal accounts.

They talk about a society that neglects and abuses unwanted children, or welcomes them with open arms.

They point out each other's fallacies.

They try to change the argument.

When all else fails, they restate their bottom line:

■ Abortion is legal, and insures the individual, personal and constitutional rights of women.

■ Abortion is morally wrong because it's wrong to take a human life.

"Just because it's legal doesn't make it right," says Debbie Buehler, executive director of West Texans for Life.

Anti-abortionists often compare abortion to slavery in America, with the unborn, like the slaves, prevented from having rights.

Rights advocates claim the slaves and victims of abortion were women prohibited from having abortions prior to the 1973 legalization.

Anti-abortionists also compare abortion to the Nazi death camps, where the innocent were condemned, and minorities were the target of ethnic cleansing.

Rights advocates maintain no woman is forced into an abortion, only given the choice. Furthermore, proponents claim, the legalization of abortion prevents discrimination of poor women from the procedure.

The two sides are clearly arguing over the individual rights of a woman vs. that of an unborn.

Should a woman's right take precedent over a fetus or unborn baby? Should others have any say? Should the choice solely be the woman's? How about the unborn's father or the parents of a young pregnant girl?

"In Texas, if you're pregnant you're an adult," an abortion doctor's employee stated in reference to parental consent laws.

Taking away that right from a woman of any age will lead to dangerous back-alley abortions, rights advocates insist.

If banned, could the law be enforced?

Anti-abortionists say that if abortions were illegal, many women would not seek the easy out for pregnancy. Legality causes women who may not otherwise want an abortion to seek one and use the option as birth control, they say.

Rights advocates ask why a woman would choose the complication of abortion as birth control. Most such women used birth control that failed, they say.

Furthermore, both sides dispute the incidence of abortions and injuries pre-Roe vs. Wade. Anti-abortionists say figures were over-reported and overestimated while abortion rights advocates maintain just the opposite.

The danger of illegal abortions always has been a crucial argument for abortion rights supporters.

"It's a health issue . . . personal and private," said Jane Hellinghausen, director of education and community development for Planned Parenthood of West Texas.

Jesse Guajardo, a deacon at Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church participates and prays at a recent rally outside of the Midland office of Planned Parenthood.

And Dr. John Alderman, an Odessa gynecologist who performs abortions, said he views abortion as another medical procedure offered to women.

"It should not be a political issue or a religious issue, but it's such a hot issue, it's both," he said.

Anti-abortionists counter that an abortion doctor's perspective is influenced by money. And indeed some abortion clinics, such as a chain in California, have been wise business ventures.

'It should not be a political issue or a religious issue, but it's such a hot issue, it's both.'

— Odessa gynecologist Dr. John Alderman.

"It's a very profitable procedure. That's the only reason it's legal," said James Fregia, an Odessa dentist and president of West Texans for Life.

Dr. Alderman retorted: "Contrary to what some people say, people who perform abortions are not filthy rich."

But beyond personal gains of doctors there exists a larger area of concern.

Anti-abortionists claim abortions are another indication and contributing factor to the breakdown of the American family and society at large. Abortion is the disregard for life, they say.

Rights supporters think, instead, that the availability makes for a better society. Abortion provides freedom of choice and prevents unwanted children destined for troubled lives. Many women having abortions are poor and feel unfit to have a child, they say.

Both sides disagree, theoretically and with studies in hand, whether unwanted children are prone to abuse and neglect.

Anti-abortionists say that acceptance of abortion teaches disrespect for life and that such disrespect extends to children being abused.

Does abortion represent moral collapse or progressive thought?

When anti-abortionists speak of moral reasons, their beliefs generally are rooted in religion.

"The issue is religious if you're for life or against life. I don't think you can separate religion from life," said the Rev. Domingo Estrada, Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church.

The Rev. Estrada quickly dismisses any credibility of groups such as the national Catholics for a Free Choice.

"It's not Catholic then. They have started to espouse another faith," he said.

Aside from specific religious doctrines, anti-abortionists and rights advocates argue about Bible interpretations that would apply to abortion.

Those espousing the Scripture also take sides about references to when life begins, being anywhere from conception to birth. When does one have a soul?

Some debaters don't rely on the Bible for such information but utilize other sources. Should life be defined theologically, biologically or in terms of "personhood"?

Anti-abortionists cite the merger of a sperm and egg forming a zygote or fertilized egg, which contains the 46 chromosomes necessary to produce a new life, as the time life begins.

Rights supporters question the existence of a single-cell person. They prefer to see life related to viability or consciousness or personality.

As the unborn grows, it exhibits characteristics of the born.

But what resembles a person may not be a person, some suggest. But in the case of human reproduction, it's part of the continuum of life until death, others rebuff.

Is a fetus a blob of tissue or a baby?

When a woman has a miscarriage, she looses her baby not her fetus, we say. But the terminology for an unborn goes from zygote to embryo to fetus, we say as well.

Despite the branching issues of the debate, anti-abortionists always come back to their moral objection.

"This is not a nice little intellectual moral issue. This is life or death," said the president of West Texans for Life.

Because of the legality, some say abortion shouldn't be a question of morals.

"Of course, it is a moral issue," said Jerry Franks, ethics instructor at Midland College. "There are an awful lot of things that might involve our deepest concerns of morality but permissible in a legal sense . . . like adultery, divorce."

Yet the abortion issue stands out.

"There are some matters of morality, some sins . . . that seem to be far worse in the eyes of those who condemn it," he said. For example, some people see being homosexual as a worse sin than being an adulterer, he said.

And many people think of murder as being one of the greater sins.

"In the case of abortion, you do have the complication that some people very clearly believe, sincerely believe . . . that abortion is murder," Franks said.

But who is to judge? Both the U.S. Supreme Court and those who feel they espouse the word of God have made their rulings.

The Rev. Clare Petersberger of the Unitarian Universalist Church of Midland and a Planned Parenthood of West Texas board member, like other abortion rights advocates said the woman should be the judge.

The Unitarian Universalist Church values "freedom of conscience," she said. As a result, the Rev. Petersberger said she and others don't have the "moral authority" to tell people what to do.

The Rev. Estrada also feels that women should have a choice. But, he said, that decision is made when a woman becomes pregnant.

"The choice should be made before a guy and gal jump in bed together," he said. "Once you made a choice you have to follow through with care, love, family values."

The abortion rights advocates say that an accidental pregnancy isn't a choice. Anti-abortionists insist a woman carry a pregnancy to birth.

Again, the argument gravitates to extremes.

"I consider it terribly unethical to take an absolutist's position on this. I'm right, right and you're wrong, wrong," said the ethics teacher. "You can really despair (about whether there is) any middle ground."

People need to look at the issue with reason, he said. People should look at abortion realistically: that a life is at stake and that bearing the child might not be for the best, he said.

"I think the Platonic tradition of dialogue, keeping the talk going here, is important," Franks said.

But discussion often becomes hampered by both sides knowing how to manipulate the emotions, he said.

And "you can't begin a dialogue with people you hate, fear and loathe," he said. As a result, the ambivalent majority of Americans may be making the choice, not the activists.

Offering a compassionate approach to abortion

By Michael Kashgarian

Charlotte Taft runs the Routh Street Women's Clinic in Dallas. Anti-abortionists have called her "the most sensitive baby killer they've seen," she said. And Planned Parenthood in Dallas removed her from their referral list because of her counseling approach to women seeking abortion, she claims.

About 80 percent to 85 percent of women who go to the clinic for an abortion are emotionally clear about their decision and have realistic expectations of how abortion fits into their value system, Ms. Taft said.

The remainder don't.

"Some women have deep ambivalence in their choice," she said.

For example, a woman may want an abortion but experiences a conflict over fundamental religious beliefs with which she was raised.

'Instead of patting her on the hand to get her through we help her go deeper into how she feels. Abortion is not different from other deep life experiences.'

— Abortion counselor Charlotte Taft

Or a woman may feel trapped into an abortion, a victim with no other choice.

Many times, women who visit a clinic are provided information about the medical procedure of abortion and asked for their consent. When a woman calls Routh Street, she sees of a different approach.

"Instead of patting her on the hand to get her through we help her go deeper into how she feels," Ms. Taft said. "Abortion is not different from other deep life experiences."

At Routh Street, women are asked how they view abortion to help themselves detect any unresolved feelings.

"We are listening to what patients are telling us," Ms. Taft said. "We are not in the business of telling patients how to feel."

Such counseling "takes her to a place so she is not a victim of her feelings . . . but an author of her life," Ms. Taft said.

The approach, developed over the past five years to help women before they elect to have an abortion and not after, isn't for all women, Ms. Taft said.

Counselors do not shy away from discussion of life and death, and the clinic allows a support person to be with the woman during counseling and the abortion.

Women are allowed to see what they're traditionally kept from, Ms. Taft said. "We ask each woman if they want to see the tissue after the abortion . . . to let them know this is not a secret," she said

The total approach is based on responsibility, not for compromise but for integrity, Ms. Taft said.

About seven years ago, Ms. Taft said, she noticed a clear division of feelings among women who had abortions. Some women started voicing regrets about abortion, feelings of exploitation, being lied to and victimized.

"It's either awful, the most traumatic experience of her life, or it's nothing," Ms. Taft said.

A woman becomes devastated by an abortion when she has an abortion unconscionably, she said. And that should not be ignored, she said.

mother first feels the fetus move. But by 1900, abortions became widely illegal in this country.

One estimate shared by various researchers calculates that about 160,000 abortions were performed in 1860 in the United States.

Before the late 1800s, abortion before "animation" — 40-80 days after conception — was not explicitly prohibited by the Roman Catholic Church. In 1869, however, the church prohibited abortions at all times.

Beginning in the late 1960s, some states began to examine and alter their abortion laws.

Before the 1973 U.S. Supreme Court ruling insuring woman's rights, four states permitted abortions in early stages of pregnancy, 14 states had somewhat strict abortion laws, while the remainder — including Texas — maintained older abortion laws, many dating back to the mid-1800s.

Opposition still exists. Since 1977, there have been close to 3,000 acts of violence or disruption aimed at abortion providers, according to the National Abortion Rights Action League Foundation (NARAL).

And despite a presidential administration that supports abortion rights, the vast majority of state legislatures back laws that would interfere with a woman's ability to have an abortion, NARAL reported.

"It is ironic that, at the time when criminal abortion bans have become less of an immediate threat, millions of American women are closer than ever before to losing access to safe and legal abortion," NARAL said in a recent report.

'It is ironic that, at the time when criminal abortion bans have become less of an immediate threat, millions of American women are closer than ever before to losing access to safe and legal abortion.'

— Statement issued by National Abortion Rights Action League Foundation.

Since 1977, there have been close to 3,000 acts of violence or disruption aimed at abortion providers.

Nevertheless, other developments indicate a trend toward protecting abortion rights and easing the access.

One change may be the pending Freedom of Choice Act, a bill that would greatly prohibit states from imposing their own abortion restrictions.

Another victory for abortion rights supporters may be the introduction of the French abortion drug RU 486, expected to be given the go-ahead for testing in the United States this fall. That could mean approval for use in about three years, according to some estimates.

The discreet use of the drug could change the abortion debate, some observers believe.

The French manufacturer of the pill previously decided against bringing it to this country because of anticipated protests by anti-abortion groups.

RU 486 has been referred to as "The Death Pill" by the National Right to Life Committee.

The future of abortion also may depend on the right-to-die issue and the controversy surrounding the medical use of fetal tissue.

There also exists some strife within both anti-abortion and abortion rights groups.

Those against abortions are split on abortion exceptions, such as in cases of rape, incest, the mother's life, or congenital disorders such as Down's syndrome.

For example, Concerned Citizens of the Permian Basin is against all abortions except perhaps if the mother's life is in danger. Professional Women for Life opposes abortion as a birth control method and doesn't take a stand otherwise.

The abortion opposition also shows a split on strategy in their fight. Local groups support only non-violent means but individual members cannot be controlled, one organizer acknowledged. In larger cities and among national organizations, a more defined separation in strategy has been observed.

Abortion rights supporters tend to be more cohesive. Nevertheless, some feel the choice should be entirely the woman's, while others think the procedure should be actively discouraged to reduce the number performed.

Abortion not always an easy, clear-cut decision for woman

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

Abortions are legal. But that doesn't make deciding whether to have the procedure any easier.

"It's a lifelong decision," says a woman who had an abortion at 16. "Once you do there's no turning back."

"No one can tell you (what to do) because they don't have to live with having the child or having the abortion," she said.

Some people claim choosing abortion can have devastating effects. Others think having an unwanted child can ruin the mother's life and destine the child for abuse and neglect.

"Sometimes whatever decision you make you will suffer with," said Gay Mallon-Frank, a Dallas psychotherapist who specializes in abortion-related problems.

Abortion rights advocates maintain that only a woman — and her mate, some believe — can make such a decision, making the availability of choice essential.

Anti-abortionists question whether a woman should be entitled to decide the fate of another, namely the unborn.

That doesn't necessarily help the woman contemplating abortion. However, most women who have an unwanted pregnancy know what they want to do, both "pro-choice" and "pro-life" counselors said.

Locally, women can visit the anti-abortion Problem Pregnancy Center in Midland and Birthright in Odessa to seek information and help with alternatives to abortion.

"We are here to help people who are not happily pregnant or separated. . . . Some people are happy about their pregnancy, they just have no money," said Mary Holley, director of Birthright of Odessa.

Problem Pregnancy Center, 2100 W. Tennessee Ave., also offers alternative advice to abortion, according to their listing in the telephone book and various "pro-life" officials. Executive director Connie Snow refused several requests to be interviewed.

Professional Women for Life also offers counseling, and West Texans for Life distributes educational literature.

But these advisors are clearly for women who don't want to have an abortion.

So where can a woman seek impartial information?

Midland Memorial Hospital and Medical Center doesn't offer advice, counseling, or information about abortions, officials said.

Many Midland doctors have proclaimed themselves anti-abortionists. In a newspaper advertisement, 62 physicians condemned abortion outright.

Planned Parenthood of West Texas, despite claims otherwise by anti-abortionists, purports to provide objective information.

In several pamphlets provided by the organization, abortion is listed after parenthood and adoption. Positive and negative aspects of abortion are discussed.

"Most of the women that come in have already decided what they want to do with their pregnancy. Very rare are cases where a woman isn't decided," said Isabel Hernandez-Brito, coordinator at the Midland clinic.

Of the pregnant women who visit the clinic — about 30 each month — about 90 percent who come are interested in prenatal care, 8 percent seek information on abortion and 2 percent are thinking of adoption, she said.

Undecided women are referred to the Mental Health and Mental Retardation Center, she said. "We can not make the decision for her," Ms. Hernandez-Brito added.

Women who come specifically looking for an abortion are examined, counseled, given a referral sheet with the names of several clinics or doctors, and a booklet on first trimester abortions.

Nevertheless, local anti-abortionists claim Planned Parenthood advocates abortion and doesn't give all the facts.

Apparently many women depend on such clinics for the facts.

"I am surprised at the number of Hispanic women and teens who come for abortions and don't know it's legal," Ms. Hernandez-Brito said.

And facts from clinics that perform abortions or give referrals and "pro-life" groups vary considerably.

Anti-abortionists warn that abortion is dangerous to the health, kills the unborn, and causes permanent emotional damage to the woman.

Physically, abortions are safe, statistics indicate.

"It's the safest surgical procedure in the country, 20 times more safe than the next safest surgical procedure — tonsillectomy," said Dr. John Alderman, an Odessa gynecologist who performs abortions up to the 19th week.

Deaths from illegal abortions in recent years are "extremely rare," according to the Alan Guttmacher Institute.

Complications from abortion also are "rare," with fewer than .5 percent of women requiring hospitalization, the Alan Guttmacher Institute reported.

Currently, a civil lawsuit pends in an Ector County state district court against Dr. Alderman for an alleged failed abortion.

The medical community does acknowledge that any surgical procedure — including abortion — presents some risk. And the further the pregnancy, the greater the risk.

Only medical doctors may perform abortions in Texas. And all abortion clinics must be licensed with the state, although a doctor's office not used primarily to perform abortions is exempt.

Abortions are required by law to be reported to the state as well.

Some anti-abortionists insist that complications from abortions are under-reported and that the truth of the dangers are lessened by proponents.

But women who seek abortions have more mundane concerns.

The most common question asked by women seeking an abortion is, "Will it hurt?", according to Ms. Hernandez-Brito and a counselor with Dr. Alderman's office.

First-trimester abortions using local anesthesia are relatively painless, doctors say. Women who have had abortions vary in opinion. Later-term abortions where labor is induced are naturally more painful.

Anti-abortionists claim that the biggest pain to a woman is emotional, after an abortion.

"They can say it doesn't affect your life but it does, one way or another," said Debbie Gibbs, who had three abortions and founded Professional Women for Life. "Eventually, in some way all women will be affected by an abortion."

Anti-abortionists call it post abortion syndrome. Symptoms include guilt, anxiety, denial, depression, suicidal thoughts, flashbacks, fear of pregnancy, eating disorders, alcohol and drug abuse and marred bonding with children.

Such a description can be found in a 20-page booklet, written by Dr. Paul C. Reisser and his wife, Teri, a counselor and director of a California crisis pregnancy center.

But many medical experts disagree with those findings.

Criticism of airlift missed vital point

The medical airlifts launched by the United Nations this weekend — and carrying badly injured Bosnians to England for medical treatment — have been criticized by some individuals as nothing more than a "publicity show." To an extent there's no question they were that.

Dr. Patrick Peillod, head of the U.N. evacuation team in Sarajevo, said the medical airlift had been turned into a public relations show, parading sick and wounded children like "animals in a zoo." He noted that the British government had asked for more children and consequently more were added to the evacuation list, although there were adults whose medical condition was more critical.

U.N. officials, however, defended the airlifts, noting that one case "triggered a whole series of reactions that are very positive and very helpful" including a flood of offers of hospital beds from 11 other countries.

In a war like the one now raging in the former Yugoslavian state, there's little room for criticism about any medical assistance program offered by the world outside the war zone. Whatever assistance can be given to the injured parties will benefit them immensely. And if some patients are given preferential treatment over others in the interest of getting further offers of outside medical assistance, in the long run the injured and dying in that war-ravaged land will reap the benefits.

There's little doubt that those working to help the people in Bosnia will play the public relations angle to the hilt to gain additional sympathy for the victims of the war; that's how they boost public awareness of the tragedy taking place there. But why shouldn't they — that's what those promoting relief assistance for the starving in Africa have done for years.

As far as preferential treatment for children who need medical assistance, there are no doubt many people who would give children the first chance at medical care anyway.

United Nations officials have a responsibility to investigate and respond to the allegations leveled against the organization because of the way the airlift was handled. But in this instance we believe it was the medical assistance that was important — not who got it first.

'The Last Brother' slurs responsible journalism

We don't usually object to any book blasting Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass.

It's not just his politics that repulses us. There are many liberals we like and respect as individuals, although the bulk of their public policy views are damaging to the nation.

Kennedy lost our respect — and the respect of many Americans — when he abandoned that drowning girl in a car he drove off a bridge in 1969. That cowardly act saved his political career, at least in Massachusetts, even though he should have gone to jail.

So as far as we're concerned the more books reminding Americans of Ted Kennedy's deeply flawed character, the better. Yet that's about the only positive thing that may be said about Joe McGinniss' "The Last Brother."

Reviewers are right to denounce it as tabloid journalism, and bad tabloid journalism at that; except, apparently, where the author cribbed from responsible biographers. McGinness made up quotations and put thoughts in Kennedy's head and tried to pass the work off as authentic biography — backing off only when he was called to account.

Now he defines the book as "a highly personal and interpretive view" of the senator's life. In other words, it's fiction.

What readers want in a biography is truth — and there are plenty of ugly truths to be told about Kennedy's life and times without making them up.

This kind of book gives responsible biographic journalism a bad name.

TV consumers not Congress should decide 'chip' issue

Amid cries that there is too much violence on TV, members of Congress are moving to censor network programming. Congress should mind its own dang business.

This is as bad as caving in to the ban-sex-on-TV crowd.

Remember last year's bill to re-regulate cable TV? That new law may mean that cable TV customers will have to pay local stations for broadcasts. Thanks a lot, Congress.

Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass., wants to require new TV sets to include a computer chip that will allow parents to block violent programs.

That's not as harmless as it seems. What's next? A computer chip to block anti-government programs?

Yes, there's too much violence on TV. There's too much sex on TV. Face it, there's too much TV on TV. People should spend more time enjoying life instead of watching it on television.

But the public — not Congress — should decide whether chips that block certain shows are a good idea.

Israel commits grave sin in Lebanon

There are a few facts one has to consider to understand what an outrageous act of state terrorism the Israeli government just committed against the people of south Lebanon.

Reese

First, Israel occupies south Lebanon and has since 1985. Actually, since 1978, but it withdrew, then invaded in 1982, stayed until 1985, and then established the present occupation.

This occupation is illegal. Period. The United Nations has condemned it and ordered Israel to withdraw, but with the protection of the U.S. veto, the Israelis told the U.N. to go stuff it. As Saddam Hussein pointed out, the U.S. has a double standard.

More than a year ago a new Lebanese government said it would disarm the ad hoc militias in south Lebanon if Israel withdrew from Lebanese territory. Israel refused.

The largely Shi'ite south Lebanese have for years been routinely bombed, strafed, or machine-gunned anytime Israel was pleased to do so. Oddly enough, this has not converted many Lebanese into Zionists. On the contrary, it has recruited young men for the guerrilla group Party of God or Hezbollah.

Lebanese citizens, including those in Hezbollah, have a right to resist the occupation of their country by a foreign aggressor. The right to defend one's home from an invader is as old as mankind.

In the month preceding this latest Israeli outrage, irregular militiamen had killed seven Israeli soldiers — inside Lebanon. Not a shot had been fired into Israel. Under no rational definition is the engagement of one soldier by another soldier, even an irregular, an act of terrorism. These were military operations conducted against Israeli military forces occupying Lebanese territory.

Israel's response? It began a massive, round the clock bombardment by heavy artillery, air strikes, and naval gunfire against — not Hezbollah fighters — but against Lebanese villagers and Palestinians in a refugee camp. Only then —in response to the Israeli attack against civilians — did the Shi'ites start to fire World War II vintage rockets into Israel.

In one of the most chilling statements ever made by a head of state, Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin calmly said publicly that Israel would destroy 70 or 80 Lebanese villages and displace the entire civilian population in order to pressure Lebanon to control the irregulars. He showed not a shred of compassion for innocent Lebanese whose lives he ordered destroyed and disrupted.

More than 500,000 people were driven from homes, 147 were killed, and 496 were wounded. Villages and towns have been destroyed or severely damaged. These people were not terrorists. They are human beings living in their own country. They have human rights and Israel, in the most cold-blooded, premeditated manner, grossly abused those human rights.

Nor are these people millionaire oil sheiks. They are poor — small farmers, peasants, craftsmen, small shopkeepers. Imagine: How would you feel if someone blew up your house? You came home and found rubble — your furniture, your personal papers, dishes, clothes, children's things all destroyed. Or suppose you had a small business and you find it destroyed.

There's no insurance against Israeli bombs and artillery shells. The Lebanese government is broke — there will be no big loans or government handouts. These people, who had little to begin with, have had it all taken away from them by Israel. It is an economic calamity. They did not deserve it.

The Israeli action is an act of state terrorism. The timid response of the Clinton administration is a stain on U.S. honor. The silence in Congress is a disgrace. U.S. laws forbid foreign aid to countries that grossly abuse human rights and forbid military weapons transferred to foreign countries to be used in aggression.

Rabin is heartless and Clinton is spineless.

Foster suicide warrants further inquiry

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department released the text, but not the photocopy, of the note handwritten by White House Deputy Counsel Vincent Foster, ostensibly out of deference to the feelings of the suicide's family. Another reason was to prevent the public from focusing on the missing 28th piece, a triangular piece of the puzzle where the signature would have been.

Safire

The gaping hole in the page symbolized unanswered questions in the case:

Who tore up Foster's note? How could he, or a subsequent finder, tear it up without leaving fingerprints? Why preserve the pieces in a briefcase and not a burnbag? Why remove the signature fragment? How could the pieces be overlooked in a search of a briefcase? Did the belated discovery of the pieces reflect a decision not to destroy evidence? Where is the missing piece?

Why did the White House Counsel delay 27 hours before turning over the reassembled note to the Park Police? We were told it was to review the note with the Clintons on their return from Chicago; but the White House spokesman said Tuesday that "the president did not see the note." Did he review it without seeing it?

Did Foster bring the gun into the White House that morning? Did he leave it in the back of his car? Did he return home after lunch at his desk to get it? Why, with a secluded park within walking distance of his house, did he drive to a park across the Potomac? Was he familiar with that spot? Did he meet anyone there?

Where is the white middle-aged male, no tie or jacket, driving a white van, who reported finding the body to a parkway attendant? Did any of the people in the cars parked in the parkway lot hear the shot? Was Foster alone when the shot was fired?

After the body was reported found at 6 p.m., why was Foster's office not sealed until mid-morning the next day? Park Police Chief Robert Langston told reporters twice after releasing the torn-up note that "a box, a carton of documents, was removed" during that time and later returned, which was independently corroborated by his spokesman, Maj. R.H. Hines; is this true?

Counsel Bernard Nussbaum adamantly disputes the chief's account, claiming that only a plastic bag of trash was removed by a cleaning woman and retrieved. After being reached by David Margolies of Justice, Langston's memory suddenly became befogged. Who was telling the truth and when?

After noting Foster's allegation of a federal crime — "the Ushers office plotted to have excessive costs incurred" — why did the FBI fail to investigate possibly intentional 50 percent cost overruns in White House redecoration? Did anyone seek to block or delay an inquiry into this? Did Justice's Criminal Division question FBI officials about the charge that "the FBI lied in their report to the AG" about the travel office?

Was dread of further scandal a triggering cause of the apparent suicide? Was there anything else Foster was working on, in Arkansas business dealings involving Clinton friends or in intelligence matters, that bear on his state of mind?

Is this why the police and FBI reports remain secret, being vetted for national security and privacy exemptions before release six weeks from now under the Freedom of Information Act?

Were Park Police or FBI agents permitted unrestricted access to Foster's telephone logs, calendar and computer files, as well as home and office long-distance records, to determine a motive for suicide? Did White House officials claim executive or attorney-client privilege? Why did Janet Reno allow the White House counsel to determine what Justice could not see?

Why did officials of the Public Integrity Division wait from July 27 until Friday, Aug. 6, to interview White House aides about the criminal allegations in the Foster note? Did the absence of FBI agents in these visits mean that Justice finds a conflict of interest within the FBI on this matter? Did Public Integrity ask Mrs. Clinton about unbudgeted overtime costs in redecoration? What's the point of this questioning, when 8 out of 10 suicides are driven by depressive illnesses, not external pressures? It may not lead to revelations, but will surely show us how this White House malfunctions in an emergency and its aftermath. That's worth pursuing.

Health plan won't cure waiting room blues

The U.S. health situation has been studied and restudied. Every part of it has been analyzed under a microscope. But the one area being ignored under Hillary Clinton's plan is how long you will have to wait to see a doctor.

Buchwald

Milton Ramrod, M.D., is the first to study the effects of waiting for a doctor on a person's health.

"Our studies indicate that the longer you wait for a doctor, the sicker you feel. To prove this, we conducted an experiment. We filled the outer office with patients. Then we called the name of one and he entered the doctor's office with a jaunty, light step.

"The last person was called eight hours later. His blood pressure was soaring, he was frothing at the mouth, and he could hardly tell the doctor what was wrong. We concluded that all these symptoms began in the waiting room and had to be treated along with the ailment the patient already had."

"Is there any cure for waiting for a doctor?"

"Not under the government plan. You can't have Washington involved without people sitting around. Waiting is the price we pay for good federal health care."

"How do we know if it's going to be good? As I understand it, many of the best doctors are going to refuse to take patients who hand in their government vouchers."

"The government has to assume that every doctor in the plan is a good doctor and therefore worth waiting for. It also feels that any doctor who won't sign up for the national health plan is a bad doctor and not worth waiting for. He should be avoided like the plague."

"Do your studies show how long under the government plan a person may be forced to wait to see a doctor?"

"We have no scientific data on that, but we estimate that it could be anywhere between three weeks and six months. We project that waiting for a doctor will be one of the favorite pastimes of most American citizens."

"How do you think this will work out?"

"Well, let's say that you need a hip replacement operation. You'll get a lottery number. If your number is called, you get the operation. It's fair and everyone has the same chance to be operated on."

"Suppose you want a second opinion?"

"You can get one by applying to a member of the Supreme Court."

"Do your studies predict that the average person will be getting better medical treatment than they do now?"

"Not so far. You see, a great deal of the national health care plan will be run by people not necessarily trained in medicine. They will decide who gets anesthesia and who doesn't, as well as how much a hernia operation will cost.

"The only drawback is if they say that a hernia operation is worth $25, then the surgeon may give them a $25 operation. On the other hand, if you can't afford it, a $25 hernia operation is better than no operation at all."

CHOICE: Issue's often black, white

(From 4A)

Routh Street's approach represents an apparent trend among some abortion-rights advocates to view the entirety of abortion, not simply the matter of choice.

Does this indicate that a middle ground between extremists can be reached?

For numerous anti-abortionists interviewed locally the issue is unequivocally black and white.

"There's no compromise of life and death," said Emory Mansour, active in several anti-abortion movements.

Some abortion-rights advocates also hold uncompromising views. Women should have the right, no questions asked, they say.

A spokesperson for Planned Parenthood of Dallas and Northeast Texas said she could not comment on Routh Street being cut from the abortion referral list.

Planned Parenthood follows guidelines before referring women to abortion clinics or providing the service.

"We talk to the woman alone to make sure she wants to," said Kitty Sullivant-Kahn, clinic coordinator of Planned Parenthood of Houston and Southeast Texas, which provides abortion services.

Some abortion rights supporters — including Planned Parenthood of West Texas officials — said repeatedly that they are not "pro-abortion" but "pro-choice."

Does this indicate that abortion-rights advocates allow leeway for compromise?

"I don't know if there's a moral compromise. . . . I think the moral compromise is choice," said Rev. Clare Petersberger of the Unitarian Universalist Church of Midland, and a Planned Parenthood of West Texas board member.

Could anti-abortionists relax if women continued to have the choice, but more often chose the "morally" right answer?

"The key element for all is to create social conditions in which abortion will be increasingly unnecessary. It is right that we have the choice, but it would be better if we did not have to make it," wrote Roger Rosenblatt in an article titled "How to End the Abortion War," printed in the New York Times magazine last year.

Others — journalists, politicians and abortion observers — have followed the same lead.

But can those who take extreme positions on both sides do the same?

"If they keep demonizing each other, there is no compromise. . . . The two sides are committing an ethical offense if they don't try to reach out and understand each other," said Jerry Franks, who teaches ethics at Midland College.

Some obviously don't buy that philosophy.

Perseverance will pay off for the anti-abortionists, they said.

The early Christians were slaughtered after they stood against the Roman empire, said a local pastor. But, he added, the Roman empire eventually was converted.

Apples cause U.S.-Japan trade rift

By Timothy Egan
N.Y. Times News Service

WENATCHEE, Wash. — Pampered and protected like nothing else on the American farm, Columbia River apples grown specifically to break a 22-year Japanese trade ban are taking on a blush of red, a few weeks shy of harvest.

But what was supposed to be a celebration of fruit and free trade is fast becoming a major source of friction between Washington and Tokyo. The apple farmers here in the nation's most productive fruit-growing region, who have spent more than decade setting up 3,500 acres of orchards to meet Japan's standards, now say they have been betrayed.

Concerned about protecting its own highly lucrative apple-growing industry, Japan has long insisted that American fruit be free of any insects that might cross the Pacific. American farmers say most of Japan's pest concerns are phony, used as a convenient trade barrier. Still, until now, the Americans have dutifully done everything the Japanese said they would have to do to get their fruit into Japan.

American apple growers planted trees that were isolated from other orchards to minimize possible contact with insects. Special traps designed to find bugs were set up. And some of the fruit has been individually wrapped in paper while still on the tree.

All was set for this year's breakthrough crop. But then, earlier this summer, Japan raised fresh concerns about pests that the American growers say are nonexistent.

Infuriated, the apple farmers of Washington State, who raise half the nation's crop and ship their fruit to 24 countries, including several in Asia, have taken the first step to bring trade sanctions against Japan. They are also talking about smashing Japanese electronic products in symbolic acts of defiance.

And at a recent food fare in Japan, American apple growers had a barren display with a sign that read, "Empty boxes, empty promises."

"We have gone through every hoop they have asked us to go through, and we're just fed up," said Doug Pauly, an apple grower and shipper here. "We've had people tearing out pear trees and vineyards and rose bushes so they wouldn't be near these special orchards. Then, we get this close and the Japanese move the goal posts again. We can't win."

Apples are to Japanese and American trade policy what intercontinental missiles were to the Cold War. Both sides have them. They have long been a bargaining chip. And now one side says it is time to put up or shut up.

In Japan, where a single apple can cost up to $5 at a fruit stand, American apples are forbidden by a long-standing agricultural policy that requires importers to prove that the produce are free of insects. The Americans say they have done this, but the Japanese say other scientific concerns remain.

The Americans, from the growers here to the highest reaches of the Clinton administration, say it is a clear-cut issue. As such, apples have become the symbol of President Clinton's effort to open Japanese markets by appealing to the consumer.

American apples would be a bargain to the Japanese consumer, while bringing huge profits to growers here. The growers had expected to sell up to 700,000 42-pound boxes, offering Japanese consumers the red and and golden Delicious variety of apples at roughly half the price of Japan's major domestically grown variety, the Fuji.

PROBLEM: 'Most agonize . . . because it's not an easy decision

(From 5A)

"The allegation that legal abortions, performed under safe medical conditions, cause severe lasting psychological damage is not borne out by the facts," wrote Dr. Nada L. Stoland in the Oct. 21, 1992, Journal of the American Medical Association.

That opinion was substantiated by Dr. Libby Stuyt, a psychiatrist with the Texas Tech medical department.

"There is no such thing diagnostically," she said.

Dr. Stuyt said she was aware of women claiming otherwise.

"There are women who do have problems and most have to do with their mental health before abortion," she said.

Asked if a mentally stable women who had an abortion might experience emotional problems specifically from the abortion, Dr. Stuyt replied: "I think that would be very rare."

But, Dr. Stuyt said, little research has been conducted on the so-called post abortion syndrome. That's either because problems haven't been seen or because most women simply don't have any problems.

Anti-abortionist women, who have had abortions, claim many women deny or repress the experience and problems may not surface until decades later.

Ms. Mallon-Frank, psychotherapist who specializes in abortion troubles, said women are inherently affected by abortion.

"Abortion strikes at who we are as women. . . . It strikes at the heart of our identity, the heart of our sexuality and procreation," she said.

"You can't have an abortion and not come out different," said Ms. Mallon-Frank, who described herself as both "pro-life" and "pro-choice."

Despite the impact, post-abortion experiences shouldn't be viewed as negative, she said.

"Life will present different people with different challenges," she said.

Abortion presents women with conflict and ambivalence.

"This is an issue of dealing more with ambivalence than with any other factor," she said. "Humans have to make difficult choices and sometimes the value of those already living takes precedence."

For example, a woman may vow to treat a child better than she was treated as a child. But because she doesn't feel equipped to raise a child properly, she seeks an abortion.

Such conflicts are not restricted to abortion.

Giving up a baby for adoption can produce the same effects. A woman who gives up a baby for adoption can suffer for decades, Ms. Mallon-Frank said. Various abortion-rights advocates maintain that the vast majority of women who carry a baby to term cannot give the infant away.

Many times, conflict from an abortion compounds other problems in a woman's life, Ms. Mallon-Frank said.

How a woman deals with abortion many times depends on how a women views the soul, not necessarily religiously, and continuity of life, Ms. Mallon Frank said.

"Some women are adjusted well enough and have an understanding of the role of life and death . . . (that) they get along in their lives," Ms. Mallon-Frank said.

Some women don't appear affected by an abortion, she said. But feelings may be repressed, she added.

Other women who are affected have "delayed grief," she said. Middle-aged women may have problems due to, or partially due to, an abortion years earlier.

Reaction to an abortion primarily centers on guilt, despite whether a society condones or mandates abortion, Ms. Mallon-Frank said.

"Many women find a way to deal with that guilt," she said. "It probably has more to do with your personality than your religious beliefs."

Feelings about abortion come down to how one views life, many abortion-rights advocates and anti-abortionists agree.

Anti-abortionists obviously feel that killing an unborn baby is horrible.

Some see the situation just the opposite in some cases.

"I think that's a horrible thing to do: condemn someone to being a parent who doesn't want to be a parent," said Rev. Clare Petersberger, pastor of Unitarian Universalist Church of Midland and a Planned Parenthood of West Texas board member.

For many, the debate's answer lies in their views of when life begins.

"I think the question is 'Do you have a full-fledged human life inside of you?'" the Rev. Petersberger said.

"People have to come to their own understanding of when life begins. Different people interpret the word 'life' in different ways," she said.

Some people may see themselves as purists and put the beginning of life at conception.

Others feel life begins at birth.

Doctors who perform abortions have their own standards as well.

"My feeling is if the pregnancy is at a point . . . if we could open you up and it could live . . . that's where I draw the line, where it's a viable living fetus," Dr. Alderman said. A fetus is generally viable at between 24-28 weeks.

The question of when life begins may not be as easy for a young woman.

"Most agonize over it (abortion) because it's not an easy decision," said an employee of Dr. Alderman.

"They have to come to the decision that this is going to be the best decision for them in their own heads," she said.

Ms. Mallon-Frank said she feels women need to look at abortion straightforward. She said abortion counseling should include the question: "How do you feel about killing?"

Disney denies shutdown considered; seasonal closure not ruled out

PARIS (AP) — Struggling with sagging attendance and growing losses, Euro Disney on Monday denied reports it is considering shutting down but said temporary closure off-season hasn't been ruled out.

The Magic Kingdom, east of Paris, has suffered from Europe's recession like other tourist attractions. It has lost money since it opened in April of last year.

On Friday, the Euro Disney group that operates the theme park and resort reported a 2.4 percent fall in operating revenue in its third quarter ending June 30. The company also confirmed it posted a loss of $83 million during the three-month period, and that officials were considering how to restructure to cut costs.

The Sunday Times of London reported that Euro Disney and California-based Walt Disney executives over the weekend discussed in "crisis talks" a number of options, including "potential closure," according to a Euro Disney spokesman the paper did not identify.

While French markets were closed for Ascension on Monday, Euro Disney shares plunged on the London stock market by about 34 cents to about $4.60.

"A shutdown of the park was never envisaged," Euro Disney President Philippe Bourguignon said in a statement responding to the report, adding that "no crisis meeting took place last weekend.

"No spokesman for the Walt Disney Company or Euro Disney made statements on those subjects," Bourguignon said in the statement released Monday night.

But a Euro Disney spokeswoman acknowledged seasonal closure "may be a possibility.

"It's not ruled out, but it's not a probability," spokeswoman Debra Gawron said. "It's not on the drawing board as far as I know."

Euro Disney's 1,100-room hotel was shut down amid lower-than-expected turnout last winter.

Gawron confirmed that meetings were held over the weekend between executives from Euro Disney and Walt Disney.

Nearly 2 million Ugandans test HIV positive

KAMPALA, Uganda (AP) — One out of every eight Ugandans is infected with the AIDS virus, and the head of Uganda's AIDS control program said most of the population is in danger of dying from the disease.

Nearly 2 million of Uganda's 17 million people are carrying the HIV virus that causes AIDS, and 300,000 more have developed the disease, Dr. Elizabeth Madra said in a nationwide broadcast urging safe sex or no sex at all.

"The nation is in danger of losing most of its people," Madra said over state-run Radio Uganda on Sunday.

Despite wide-ranging AIDS control measures by the government, youths were still engaged in indiscriminate sexual practices, Madra said.

"We are telling people to either abstain from sex, stick to one sexual partner or to use condoms," she said later in a telephone interview from her office in Entebbe.

Untold thousands have died from AIDS since the virus was first diagnosed in the East African nation in 1983.

In Africa, acquired immune deficiency syndrome is spread primarily through heterosexual contact.

DAY WATCH

Greenwood forum

Greenwood Independent School District will host a community forum 7 p.m. Aug. 23.

Topics to be discussed include a district report card, campus performance objectives, and district goals and operations.

All Greenwood residents are invited to attend.

St. Ann's starts

St. Ann's Catholic School teacher inservice began Monday. Teachers will receive training in learning differences and new methods of teaching. Students may find out who their teachers will be for the 1993-94 school year 2-2:30 p.m. Friday. First day of school is Aug. 23.

Police seek info

Midland police are still investigating an Odessa man's death at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center Monday. Police officials said a 35-year-old male was dropped off at the hospital's emergency room Monday and later died. Witnesses said the male was brought in a cream-colored Monte Carlo. No other details were available Monday and police did not release the man's name pending the notification of relatives.

School trailer fire

Emerson Elementary School Principal Mary L. Smith said she is "heartsick at the total loss" of a double-classroom portable building destroyed by fire. Built in 1986, the $43,000 double portable building — located on the Emerson campus — burned about 5:40 a.m. Sunday. Fire officials are investigating the fire as arson, according to Fire Marshal Jerry Petree. Ms. Smith said the building was filled with teacher's materials and was fully furnished with school desks, books, computers and cassette players. "Nothing was taken. It was all just burned," the principal said. "It was filled with instructional materials belonging to experienced teachers." One classroom was totally destroyed and the other sustained extensive heat and smoke damage.

INTRODUCING ...

JA manager expands market

Junior Achievement program brings business world into the classroom.

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff writer

Crackling with energy, Stella Burkhalter is a new face in town, who practically personifies achievement.

At age 25 she is the new program manager for Junior Achievement, the organization that professes to "Show a kid how America works."

Answering phones, darting around the office and offering a greeting and quick grin to everyone, Ms. Burkhalter enthuses about "expanding the market" for the program which brings the business world into the school classroom.

"People may think we just recruit top executives to volunteer in the program, but that's not true," she said. "We need parents, retired people and plenty of well-educated women who may be staying home where we can't reach them."

Laredo born and Austin bred, Ms. Burkhalter said she didn't know much about JA until she arrived in the Tall City with her husband, who is employed with a small law firm.

"I didn't know much about Junior Achievement. Now I can't imagine a world without it," Ms. Burkhalter said.

Coming from Austin, the small-town demeanor of Midland caught her by surprise. "I talked to someone about decorating and called Keep Midland Beautiful about recycling and ended up talking to people at both places for almost an hour," she said. "Everyone I met was friendly. It was like they had known me all of my life."

In Midland for almost a year, Ms.

MHS program gives students Mondays off

Staff report

Midland High School students who enjoy three-day weekends are in luck.

The high school has just announced — as part of its Partnership Schools Initiative (PSI) — students will get five Mondays off while the rest of the district is in school.

MHS teachers aren't so lucky, however. The PSI program allows them more inservice time. So, teachers will be in training while the students have a day off during the following "waiver" Mondays — Oct. 11, Nov. 15, Feb. 14, March 28, and April 25.

"Everyone else in town will be in school those days except Midland High School," said MHS instructional services director Dennis Stratton.

Also for MHS students, "Dawg Days" are looming on the horizon. The school's annual registration days will take place 8:30 a.m.-noon Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Seniors register Monday, juniors on Tuesday, and sophomores on Wednesday.

"We are expecting about 800 sophomores on Wednesday. So, it promises to be busy," Stratton said. "There are a lot of things that can be taken care of during Dawg Days which would take away from instruction time (if done after school starts)."

Students can get ID cards retaken for a $3 charge. Stratton said students are usually issued an ID card in the ninth grade which they keep through their senior year.

Immunization records are updated, lockers assigned and class schedules will be available. An optional need will be signing up for a parking place.

Students who want to order yearbooks should bring a check during Dawg Days.

"Also, D-FY-IT (Drug Free Youth in Texas) is offering drug tests for all students on Wednesday (at the MHS campus). This includes Lee High School students." Stratton said.

Students who test drug-free receive D-FY-IT photo ID cards which qualify them for discounts on food and retail items. Card holders are randomly drug tested throughout the year.

Attorneys select jury for child-murder trial

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff writer

Jury selection for the trial of accused child murderer John Odren Gillum took most of Monday with many of the potential jurors expressing their distaste for hearing testimony and viewing "gory" autopsy photos of the victim.

The jury selection took from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. with approximately 100 potential jurors questioned about a variety of issues ranging from opinions on child discipline to consideration of probation for a guilty verdict.

Gillum

Gillum is charged with murdering 14-month-old Holly Bigler on Feb. 26, 1990, by striking, hurling and pushing the child against the floor, a wall, a table and an unknown object. The indictment alleges he struck the child on her head with his hand and kicked her in the head.

Midland County Assistant District Attorney Teresa Clingman explained, while screening the potential jurors, that the murder indictment has two different charges — one of knowingly and intentionally causing the death of the child and the other of intending to cause — Seeing an attractive woman walking a large dog early in the morning is a pleasing sight.

— Maybe it is because I'm not outside as much I used to be, but I hardly ever see butterflies.

— When a person is in high school one of the status symbols that determines if he or she is accepted in the "in" group often depends on what that person's father does for a living.

— Sort of silly, isn't it?

— There is a fine line between having fond memories from the past and trying too hard to re-live them.

— When an airplane pilot announces that the crew has discovered a mechanical problem, I'm always torn between thinking, "Nothing bad is going to happen. Let's go," and "Good Lord, get me off this thing."

— One of the bad things about living in the computer age is that we no longer get to experience the sound of "pecking on a typewriter," which for some reason always made me feel alive and alert, as if something important was being put on paper.

— It was particularly exciting in a newspaper office, especially when all the reporters were banging out their stories for the next edition.

— In a childish sort of way, it pleases me when I see old acquaintances from my growing up years and realize that they haven't "maintained" themselves quite as well as I have.

— I resent it when family members attempt to make huge financial gains because their brother is president of the United States.

— Television evangelist Robert Tilton and his wife, Marte, have announced they are separating.

— Breaks your heart, doesn't it?

DEATHS

Minnie B. West

Graveside services for Minnie B. (Bobbie) West of Midland have been set for 11 a.m. Wednesday at the Merkel Cemetery. Ellis Funeral Home is in charge of arrangements.

Mrs. West died Sunday at a local hospital.

She was born Sept. 5, 1908, in Roby and attended school at McCally. She married George Frances West on Jan. 18, 1930, in Roby. They lived in Merkel until 1939 when they moved to Corpus Christi. They moved to Sweetwater in 1946, where West started West Electric Company. The family moved to Midland in 1948.

West owned and operated West Electric Company of Midland for a number of years.

Mrs. West worked for Peyton Toys for several years.

Mrs. West was preceded in death by husband in 1989.

Survivors include two daughters, Barbara West and Mrs. George "Frances" Cheyney, both of Midland; four sisters, Fay Brown of Alvarado, Alva Ruth Hamilton of Austin, Evelyn Merryman of Conroe and Jo Johnson of Houston; three grandchildren; and five great-grandchildren.

The family requests memorials be directed to a favorite charity.

Jerry McCain

Services for Jerry McCain will be at 10 a.m. today at Ellis Funeral Home Chapel with the Rev. Jim Beck, of Northgate Baptist Church in El Paso, officiating. Graveside services will be at 3 p.m. today in Slater Chapel Cemetery in Nolan with the Rev. Alton Rodgers, of Nolan Baptist Church, officiating.

Local arrangements are under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Lessie V. Gilmer

FORT WORTH — Services for Lessie Viola Gilmer will be at 2 p.m. today at Sagamore Hill Baptist Church in Fort Worth with the Rev. Gary Miller officiating, assisted by Charles Gilmer. Burial will be in Moore's Cemetery in Arlington. Local arrangements are with Ellis Funeral Home.

Pallbearers will be Clay Gilmer, Doug Gilmer, Mike Allen, Ron Shaw, Russell Stapleton and Larry York.

Paula L. Mullins

Services for Paula Lynn Mullins of Midland are pending with Ellis Funeral Home.

Ms. Mullins died in Brownwood.

Zackary C.Adams

Services for Zackary Christopher Adams, infant son of Larry and Twila Adams of Midland, are pending with Ellis Funeral Home.

Zackary died Monday at a Dallas hospital.

James R. Smith

Services for James R. Smith, 80, of Midland will be at 10 a.m. Wednesday at First Methodist Church under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Smith died Monday at a local hospital.

Vonnah E. Pierce

ATHENS — Graveside services for Vonnah Ezell Pierce, 79, of Malakoff and mother of a Midland woman will be at 2 p.m. today at Owens Cemetery in Athens with the Rev. J.R. Pruett, of Bethel Baptist Church in Athens, officiating. Services are under the direction of Callaway-Tomlinson Funeral Home of Malakoff.

Mrs. Pierce died Monday at a Malakoff nursing home.

She was born Nov. 24, 1913, in Elk City, Okla. She married Ed Roy Pierce on Feb. 25, 1974, in Corsicana. She was a member of First Baptist Church in Malakoff, Eastern Star and was a homemaker.

She was preceded in death by her husband in 1984, and a brother, Marvin J. Ezell.

Survivors include two daughters, Mary F. Melton of Malakoff and Melva Mahanay of Midland; five grandchildren; eight great-grandchildren; and a great-great-grandchild.

JA: Burkhalter takes business to classroom

(From 1B)

Burkhalter said she is focusing on lining up volunteers to speak to students, one hour each week for five weeks at the elementary school level, and once a week for 10 weeks in the high schools. "People can team up with a partner," she said. "So one or the other will always be there. But ideally, they both would be in the classroom."

Junior Achievement has prepared lesson plans for volunteers to present to students. Ms. Burkhalter said the lesson plans clear up "misconceptions about the world of government and how government ties in with business. A lot of kids think profit is a dirty word. But it's how businesses operate and make money to keep the economy going."

"Of course, it does help to get business role models into the classroom," Ms. Burkhalter said.

Having taught bilingual pupils in second and sixth grade at DeZavala Elementary School, the JA program manager said she understands how volunteers get classroom jitters.

"I was scared. There were all these little faces looking at me," she said. But soon enough, in the midst of explaining how if everyone put a penny into a pot, there would soon be enough pennies to purchase something (an analogy to taxes and community services), she relaxed.

"I tell people, if I could go into the classroom, you can too," she said. "Going into the classroom is a great way to polish public speaking skills or trying out teaching."

Ms. Burkhalter earned a degree in advertising from University of Texas in Austin. "I miss the water there," said the avid backpacker and camper. "But I love the Guadalupe mountains."

With a fine view of downtown Midland from her First City Bank Tower office, a "Buy the Basin" button on her bulletin board and a JA foam "Stress Brick" on her desk, Ms. Burkhalter pronounces her Midland job a "great fit," and JA's aspirations a global need.

At a national JA convention, attendees included teachers from the Ukraine, Canada, and Brazil interested in learning economics and entrepreneurial concepts to teach their students.

Having offered JA county-wide to all ninth graders — including those attending private schools — and teaching it at the second and sixth grade level, Ms. Burkhalter said the difficult part of her job is "going slow."

"I want to get the program into classrooms in the first, third and fourth grade, and at junior high," she said. "But it takes time."

She said she is pleased to see a "trickle up" effect of Midland College students — who participated in JA in their ninth grade classrooms — volunteering to assist in the program now to satisfy Abell-Hanger Scholarship requirements.

And never missing a chance to recruit a volunteer, her parting words after being interviewed: "Would you like to sign up?"

JURY: Trial begins for accused child murderer

(From 1B)

serious bodily injury causing the death of the child.

Ms. Clingman said there are no witnesses to the incident and a conviction would be based upon a variety of circumstantial evidence.

During his turn to question possible jurors, defense attorney Richard Alvarado told them the importance of his task.

"There is no question that the child is dead ... you will have to decide whether (Gillum) killed that child or wanted to do serious injury to that child," he began.

"This is not L.A. Law or Perry Mason — those things don't happen in real life," Alvarado said about the trial.

The attorney questioned jurors about whether they could handle viewing photographs of the autopsy performed on the toddler and remain impartial. Alvarado called the photos gory, gruesome and explicit, insinuating that the assistant district attorney would try to sway the jury by showing "pictures of a mutilated corpse ... for whatever purpose."

Alvarado also questioned jurors if they could consider the full range of punishment if his client is convicted. With a guilty verdict, Gillum could receive five-99 years confinement or life in prison and a $10,000 fine.

While asking potential jurors if they could consider a sentence of five years probation, more than one-quarter of the panelists emphatically said, "No."

At least seven people admitted to Alvarado that they could not be fair and impartial because they already thought Gillum was guilty. Another woman, who declined to say if she could be fair and impartial, spoke for more than 10 minutes stating she saw "no excuse for killing a child."

The attorneys spent about 45 minutes reviewing their panel lists and selecting the 12 jurors and one alternate to hear the case. 238th District Judge John Hyde required the alternate selection because of a past child murder case when a juror passed out while hearing graphic testimony about the death.

The eight-man four-woman jury with one male alternate was seated about 4:15 p.m. and heard Ms. Clingman's opening statements before stopping for the evening. Alvarado reserved his opening remarks until the state has closed its case.

Gillum pleaded not guilty after listening to Ms. Clingman read the indictment aloud in the courtroom.

In her opening statement, the assistant district attorney alleged that she believed the evidence in the case would prove that Gillum caused massive head injuries to the child while he was babysitting her.

The deceased child was the daughter of Gillum's then-fiancee and he was watching her while the mother was at work, Ms. Clingman said.

She also told the jury that the child could not have survived the injuries that "could only have been done intentionally."

"This was no accident. Mr. Gillum told numerous different stories of what happened to the child after the incident," Ms. Clingman explained. "I believe the evidence will show there is no way any of his explanations fit the injuries the child sustained."

The prosecution indicated it will call several physicians, the medical examiner, police officers and the child's family members to testify in the case.

The trial, which has been postponed a number of times, will begin at 9 a.m. with the prosecution calling its first witness.

Gillum has remained free on a $10,000 bond since March 15, 1990.

Goddard begins band practice

Eighth grade band practice for Goddard Junior High School students began Monday. Practice for percussion students is 3:30 p.m. Flute and saxophone players meet at 4:30 and all other band students need to assemble at 5:30 p.m.

MHS: PSI program gives students 3-day weekends

(From 1B)

Sophomores registering at MHS may take a learning styles inventory. "It's aimed at giving some indication of students' learning styles for teachers to use in planning," the MHS administrator said.

Goodfellow starts new mission

SAN ANGELO (AP) — Goodfellow Air Force Base has begun training military firefighters.

Goodfellow's first class — nine students from Lackland Air Force Base in San Antonio — on Monday kicked off the Fire Protection Training Basic Course.

The Air Force fire school was moved to Goodfellow from Chanute Air Force Base in Illinois, which is scheduled for closure.

Eventually, 210 instructors will be working with 300-400 students at a time, said Capt. Dave Bullock, flight commander for the program. The seven-week program focuses on search-and-rescue techniques and aircraft crash rescue.

The fire training will take place in a parking lot and old buildings until a permanent fire complex is completed next year, Bullock said.

LOCAL/AREA REPORTS

Woman drowns

BROWNWOOD — The name of a Midland woman who was found drowned Sunday at Lake Brownwood still had not been released Monday by sheriff's officials.

The body of the 38-year-old woman was found about 10 a.m. Sunday off Cason Cove at Lake Brownwood. The woman was reported missing at about 2:30 p.m. Saturday. Witnesses told Brown County Sheriff's officers that the woman was one of three people in a boat and that she left the boat near the shoreline.

Chief Deputy Sheriff Glen Smith said the others in the boat were apparently preoccupied with working the motor. When they turned around, the woman was gone. Smith said they said they assumed she had gone to shore and left.

The body has been sent to Southwestern Forensic Lab in Dallas for an autopsy.

Goalpost kills teen

A Midland teen-ager died Saturday after a soccer goal fell on him, injuring his chest.

According to a police report, Stephen Nail, 14, and two other youths were climbing and swinging on the soccer field goal at Hogan Park at about 5:30 p.m. when it overturned, trapping Nail beneath it. Paramedics were called to the scene and tranported Nail to Memorial Hospital and Medical Center where he died in the emergency room due to chest injuries, police said.

Justice of the Peace Robert Pine declared Nail dead at 4:45 p.m. His death was ruled accidental.

Juveniles arrested

ODESSA — Three Odessa juveniles were in custody Monday in connection with several criminal mischief cases, including one at the Permian Mall Saturday.

According to a police report, an off-duty officer working security at the mall Saturday was advised of juveniles marking a phone. Three juveniles were detained and transported to the Odessa Police Department's juvenile division.

After further investigation, police believe the three juveniles are responsible for several other acts of criminal mischief that have occurred in recent weeks in Odessa. At least 11 cases are expected to be cleared and additional suspects are expected to be located, officers said.

Investigators are requesting that victims of recent criminal mischief cases involving fences or buildings being painted with the works "Mad," "Hoax 93," or "Sire" to call the department's criminal investigation division at 333-3641, ext. 339.

Judge Smith to serve 2nd term on national executive committee

Staff report

Municipal Judge Robin Smith of Midland has been elected to a second term on the executive committee of the National Conference of Special Court Judges, a conference of the Judicial Administration Division of the American Bar Association.

The election of the National Conference of Special Court Judges officers and executive committee members, including Smith, took place at the recent American Bar Association meeting.

Smith represents Region 9 of the conference which includes Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana and Oklahoma. His term will be for three years. In addition to serving on the executive committee, Smith also is editor for the conference newsletter, the "Special Court News."

Special court judges are judges with limited jurisdiction. Among Texas courts represented by the conference are county, county court at law, municipal and justice courts. There are more than 3,000 special court judges in Texas.

Smith is the presiding judge for the City of Midland Municipal Court, a position he has held since 1984.

Police arrest woman for neglecting children while working as prostitute

N.Y. Times News Service

CENTRAL ISLIP, N.Y. — A 25-year-old single mother has told the authorities that she left her 7-month-old daughter and 2-year-old son alone overnight and went to work as a prostitute in New York City because she needed the money after being cut off from welfare.

The woman, Krista Koopman, who lived in a tiny, two-room apartment with the children in Sayville, N.Y., said she was forced into prostitution after being dropped from welfare rolls and losing financial support from her estranged husband.

"I love the kids," Ms. Koopman said Monday after spending a weekend in jail. "I didn't do it for any other reason than financial reasons."

Ms. Koopman was arraigned Sunday on misdemeanor charges of endangering the children by leaving them unattended. She was released Monday without bail after a hearing in Suffolk County District Court.

The children are being cared for by Suffolk County Child Protective Services, the authorities said.

Officer James W. Lennon of the Suffolk County Police said he broke into Ms. Koopman's locked ground-floor apartment through a window about 8 a.m. on Saturday after neighbors called the police to report they heard crying inside. Neighbors said the crying began at 5 a.m.

Lennon said he found the children screaming and in a panic. The 7-month-old, he said, had become entangled in the mesh cover of her crib. "The mesh had partially collapsed on her and she was kind of stuck," said Lennon. "She was flailing her arms and both children were panicking. They were terrified."

The police and a neighbor changed the children's diapers, clothed them and took them to the Fifth Precinct in Patchogue.

Ms. Koopman came to the precinct about 9:30 a.m. on Saturday "angry, crying and an emotional wreck," Lennon said.

"I wanted to know where she had been for the last 12 hours," he said. "She said she had gone into the city to prostitute herself because she was not getting enough money from social services."

"She was justifying what she did because she needed the money for the children," said the officer. "Her attitude was, what's the problem?"

Ms. Koopman was held at the precinct when she could not post an initial station house bail of $100. The amount was raised to $500 at the arraignment.

During her brief appearance at a bail reduction hearing today, Ms. Koopman stood trembling, twisting and turning her handcuffed hands as her lawyer, Kirk Brandt of the Legal Aid Society of Suffolk County, told Judge Hertha C. Trotto of District Court that Ms. Koopman had no criminal record and should be released in her own custody.

Ms. Koopman sagged with visible relief when Judge Trotto ordered her released into a probation department program.

She tried twice to address the judge, speaking almost inaudibly in a quavering voice about her wish to recover "my children" and "my possessions," but fell silent when Judge Trotto advised her to speak to her lawyer before saying more.

Trotto set Sept. 8 for the next court hearing in the case.

Actor Stewart Granger dies of cancer

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Stewart Granger, the tall, suave star of such adventure films as "King Solomon's Mines" and "The Last Safari," died Monday. He was 80.

He died at Saint John's Hospital and Health Center following a lengthy battle with cancer, said hospital spokesman Gary Miereanu.

The British-born Granger, whose given name was James Lablanche Stewart, starred in English theater revues in the 1930s and made his film debut in "So This is London" in 1939.

Toward the end of his career he returned to his stage roots, appearing with Rex Harrison in 1989 in a Broadway revival of "The Circle. It was his Broadway debut.

Granger made more than 60 movies, and except for time out for military service during World War II he was one of England's most prominent actors in the 1940s.

"His name, like Errol Flynn, was synonymous with 'swashbuckler,'" said his agent, Sig Craig.

Granger came to the United States in 1950 to star in "King Solomon's Mines," changing his name to avoid being confused with American actor James Stewart.

He stayed in Hollywood, where he made a career of playing virile, leading men in such romantic, swashbuckling films as the 1952 remake of "The Prisoner of Zenda" and "Salome" in 1953.

In the 1970s, he played Sherlock Holmes in the television movie, "The Hound of the Baskervilles" and appeared in "The Wild Geese," about mercenaries in Africa.

In 1991, he played an aging Hollywood actor in an episode of the CBS series "Gabriel's Fire." Also that year, he appeared on stage in "Don Juan in Hell" at the Henry Fonda Theater, along with Lynn Redgrave and David Carradine.

Magazine cover shows woman's mastectomy scar

The reaction — outrage, shame, praise — reflects the increasingly heated argument over how hard the nation fights breast cancer.

"Some people are upset by that cover, but let me tell you, it's not as upsetting as having breast cancer," said Barbara Balaban, a Long Island breast cancer activist who says not enough is spent on caring for and curing the disease.

Sunday's edition of the magazine featured a self-portrait by Matuschka, a New York artist who has put such images on posters and post cards. The full-page color photo depicts her wearing a white dress that is cut away at the breast to reveal a jagged mastectomy scar.

The magazine's circulation is 1.8 million. For many readers, its cover offered a first, wrenching view of a hidden agony.

"This is what it looks like when a part of your body is removed," said Elin Greenberg, head of the Komen Breast Cancer Foundation. "I was afraid people would be horrified, but several said, 'It doesn't look as frightening as I thought.' It demystifies mastectomy."

Nancy Nielsen, spokeswoman for the Times, said telephone calls and other responses to the cover were running "about 50-50 pro and con. . . . Some people thought the magazine was brave. Others were appalled by such an explicit photo. Some people said it brought back bad memories."

The decision to put the photo on the cover was made by the magazine's editor, Jack Rosenthal. He was on vacation and unavailable to comment Monday, but Matuschka said the decision was made "without a lot of hemming and hawing" and took a lot of guts.

In an interview Monday, the artist said she had tried for years to place her self-portraits "in almost every magazine in New York except the Times." "I was surprised they ran it," she said.

Ultrair grounded

Ultrair, a fledgling airline that offered upscale amenities on flights between Houston and New York, has ceased operating as a scheduled carrier.

Ultrair executives said they decided to cut their losses and halt service on July 25 after six months of operations because too few passengers lined up for the company's offer of fancy meals and extra leg room at prices that matched the coach service offered by larger competitors on the route. Its meals were developed by Tony's, a noted Houston restaurant. Ultrair removed roughly 60 seats from its 727's, which typically have 150 seats, to add more leg room for passengers.

Ultrair said that customers who held tickets could get full refunds. American Airlines has said it will honor Ultrair tickets.

Ultrair continues to operate as a charter company. It may re-enter the scheduled service business, J. Patrick Millinor, Ultrair's president, said, but as a much different type of carrier, offering low fares and no-frills service.

Ultrair has a lawsuit pending against Continental Airlines, which it has accused of cutting prices to drive Ultrair out of business. Continental has said the accusations are without merit.

Pair up in Twinsburg

TWINSBURG, Ohio (AP) — This is a typical midwestern town, population about 10,000. But for one weekend each August the town swells nearly 10-fold, with visitors and locals cheek by jowl on the square and along Revenna Street for 1½ miles to Glen Chamberlain Park.

Most are here because they love a parade ... love a parade. As it begins, they do a double take ... double take. Then another . .. another.

Heading the procession are Bev and Barb in identical red, white and blue cheerleader outfits. Next are John and Joan, wearing his and hers Western togs. Kevin and Kelly, in look-alike green jumpsuits, stand in the back of a green convertible. Yvonne and Yvette, in matching pink smocked dresses, sit in a pink stroller pushed by their mother, also in pink. Mark and Mike wear jogging shorts and Harvard varsity jackets. Only the numbers on the back set them apart. And, in a line stretching for about five miles, others follow by foot or float, two by two.

This is Twins Days, an annual festival the first weekend in August — this year Aug. 7-8 — that attracts up to 100,000 visitors to Twinsburg, including some 3,000 sets of twins, plus triplets and quadruplets, along with family, friends and a lot of fascinated others.

Although the festival was begun 1976, the town began seeing double back in 1817, when identical twin brothers Moses and Aaron Wilcox moved from their birthplace in Killingworth, Conn., to what was then called Millsville.

Power down your laptops

American Airlines, the largest carrier in the United States, disclosed earlier this year that it will prohibit the use of laptop computers and compact disk players below 10,000 feet, where the potential impact of interference from such devices is believed to be greatest.

While no scientific proof exists that consumer electronic devices can disturb an aircraft's navigation system, and no accident is believed to have been caused even indirectly by consumer electronics, pilots have reported dozens of instances in which their compasses were inexplicably thrown off course, and then settled down when passengers stopped using computers and other gadgets.

The Federal Aviation Administration bans passengers from using devices like cellular phones that transmit or receive signals, but leaves the matter of consumer electronics to the discretion of pilots and individual airlines.

Airlines have instituted a wide range of policies. Some, including Delta and USAir, prohibit the use of compact disk players on all flights. Northwest, like American, follows the 10,000-foot rule.

RVs — They're not for everyone

By Louis Parks
N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — A recent report on CBS "This Morning" claimed that 9 million Americans have some kind of recreational travel home. But it's not perfect for everyone.

"There are two kinds of people," said RV owner Curtis Gleason, "those who love it and those who hate it."

Anyone who buys or rents an RV to economize on travel may be disappointed. There's a price for taking it all with you. You save on hotels, but you have to figure in the cost of rental, gas and a camp parking space (even state and national parks usually charge a fee). If you're buying, of course, there are monthly payments, whether you're using the RV or it's sitting in a rented storage space, and depreciation.

In the summer, renting an RV in Houston costs about $100 to $120 a day, or more. Small vehicles, say 22-foot, may be a little less. Some agencies give lower rates by the week. Check the Yellow Pages under Recreational Vehicles and call around.

Most rental agencies give some free mileage, usually 100-125 miles a day. Every additional mile is an extra charge, probably 20-25 cents. That can mount up fast.

You may hear impressive mileage figures from RV renters or sellers, but owners, those who pay the bill, say expect 6-8 mpg.

Parking in a mall lot may be free, but you won't want to spend too many nights without electric and water hookups. Fees range from as low as $5 a night in some state parks with hook-ups to $30 or more at the fanciest commercial campsites.

At some destinations, hotels are in more convenient locations than RV camps or state parks. In an RV, you have to deal with hookups and dump stations. If you can't find a level site, you may need to jack up the side to level the vehicle. Then again, with an RV you can take along just about everything, including the kitchen sink. On a plane, or even car, you have to pack judiciously.

On most airplane vacations, you have to rent a car when you get there, and that can be expensive. However, RVs can be very inconvenient to use as cars. They're no fun to drive in busy cities, or to park at the mall, and no one wants to unhook the water and electricity just to run out for milk. That's why you see so many RVs carrying motorbikes or towing cars.

Be wary when a dealer tells you how many people a vehicle will sleep. Six people for a week in a 30-foot vehicle will strain any friendship, while eight is likely to result in murder or divorce. Go take a look for yourself. Close all the doors and consider how well you like your friends.

Check the vehicle before renting to make sure the unit looks clean and road-worthy. There are lots of little details to learn, such as how to hook up the water, when to run the generator and where the TV cable plugs in.

There are about 20,000 RV-use campgrounds in the United States, including approximately 7,550 private campgrounds. That doesn't mean there's one where you want to stop for the night, or that they have vacancies. That's when an RV's generator and water storage tanks come in handy. You can't run the generator indefinitely, but it will probably supply your basic needs for a night.

Not needing a hook-up gives the RV a lot more places to stay: road-side parks, side roads and even neighborhood streets. RVers often simply pull into a big parking lot for the night: Wal-Marts are especially popular and accommodating.

If you're considering buying an RV, rent one for a few short trips first.

An enthusiast who had owned several RVs over four decades advised against buying a brand new rig. Many people buy their dream vehicle, take one or two trips and discover the romance of the road is less than they expected, and the bills are more. The person who buys used from them gets an almost new rig at a good discount.

Tourists get conservation conversation

Ed. Note: It seems there's a new trend in tourism. Ecology-minded guides are now turning all that splendid scenery into backdrops for friendly lectures on conservation. Everybody gets a passing grade, as well as a new respect for how Mother Nature puts it all together.

By Carol Ann Riha
Associated Press Writer

WARM SPRINGS, Ore. — Here in a rock-rimmed canyon in Oregon's high desert, tourists have long been in awe of the rugged beauty of this corner of the earth. Now they are going home with a new respect for it as well.

They have traveled here with Elizabeth Davies who has brought to central Oregon a new wrinkle in the travel industry — at least in the United States — which appears to be spreading throughout the land, mostly in national parks and other natural attractions in the West.

"We try to show them there's a connection between the trees and the animals and how everything is interconnected," Davies says.

The trend has a name: ecotourism. The idea is to combine science with scenery. Davies, president of EcoTours of Oregon, says she hopes to impart some knowledge and a sense of personal responsibility for the very natural wonders the tourists are gawking at.

Most such tours operate outside of the United States, teaching visitors about the rain forests of Brazil, for example, or the wildlife of Madagascar.

But the trend has developed sufficiently in America that tour guides such as Davies have a national organization, The Ecotourism Society. Its headquarters is in North Bennington, Vt. According to executive director Megan Epler Wood, it now claims 600 members.

In Oregon, Davies' tour leads through the Mount Hood National Forest to the Warm Springs Indian Reservation.

The tour traverses the Cascade Range, with the towering Douglas firs of the temperate rain forest, to Eastern Oregon's high desert, lush this summer with scattered sage and mounds of blooming wildflowers.

Davies teaches the visitors about the region's geology, the plants and animals that live there, and the history and culture of its people.

"My goal is to make it a turning point," she says. "Hopefully, they draw some parallels with their own lives, the foods they eat, the products they buy."

The realization that personal choices may affect the landscape, she says, plants in the tourist's mind the seeds of environmentalism.

"We're activists," says Jeff Davies, Elizabeth's husband and co-founder of EcoTours. "When we have the opportunity, this is our form of activism."

For example, Jeff Davies says, when taking hikers into the forest he and Elizabeth teach them about the effects of waste and "the ethics of maintaining what's nice."

Warm Springs tribal leaders support the effort, which dovetails with their own beliefs.

"Today's life borrows the land," says Rudy Clemens, spokesman for the Confederated Tribes of the Warm Springs Indian Reservation. Our job is to manage the land for future generations. It's a living, breathing purpose."

Airline to offer Nintendo to travelers

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Coffee, tea or Nintendo?

Travelers on some Northwest Airlines flights who forgot to bring a book and already saw the movie will soon be able to amuse themselves with Super Mario Brothers or Donkey Kong.

Nintendo plans to install its new interactive system in Sheraton hotels and Holland America Line cruise ships as well, meaning a video-game addict never has to be without on land, sea or air.

Beyond video games, the interactive system will give travelers choices of movies, in-flight shopping and audio programs.

Northwest has been testing the system on one of its 747s and plans to install the equipment on 20 jets before the end of the year, spokesman Jon Austin said.

As for whether prospect of Donkey Kong will make people want to fly Northwest, industry experts have their doubts.

"In-flight (entertainment) tends to be one of the last things ranked by travelers as important," said Nick Athanasiou, senior consultant for Arthur D. Little accounting and consulting.

Save money by stretching hotel dollars

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Stretch your family vacation budget by choosing hotels or resorts with summer savings offers.

Look for free nights or deep discounts for weekends or minimum stays, nominal fees or no extra charge for double occupancy, free lodging and discounted meals for children, all-inclusive recreational programs for parents and kids, packages that include admission to nearby attractions.

This summer, a wide range of hotel and resort chains are offering attractive family-oriented programs at most of their properties nationwide or around the world. When checking rates, inquire about family specials and consider the following:

Hilton International Hotel's "Summer World of Savings" is offered through Sept. 30 at more than 100 hotels and resorts worldwide. All Hilton International properties in the United Kingdom are participating, along with selected hotels and resorts in Canada, the Caribbean, Latin America, Europe, Africa, Asia, the Middle East and Australia. Sample prices, double occupancy, are $85 in Corfu, $89 in Edmonton and at London's Plaza Hyde Park, $99 in Antwerp, $112 in Glasgow, $120 in Ponce, $139 in Singapore, $160 in Milan, $169 in Amsterdam and $199 in Paris. Rates are guaranteed in U.S. dollars (taxes and service charges are extra). Guests can upgrade to deluxe accommodations for an additional $30 upon check-in, based on availability. Children of any age share a parent's room free.

Inter-Continental Hotels' "Summer Options," valid through Sept. 12, discounts rates up to 50 percent at 11 properties in the United States and Canada. Children under 14 stay in their parents' room for free or in an adjoining room for half the "Summer Options" rate. Sample rates: New Orleans, $99; New York, $179; San Francisco's Mark Hopkins, $129.

Marriott's "Family Room," valid through Labor Day at 185 properties in the United States, Canada, the Caribbean and Mexico, requires pre-payment with a major credit card. No refunds or reservation changes are allowed. Rates vary from hotel to hotel, ranging from $49 per room on weekends or $59 on weekdays at the Costa Mesa Suites in Costa Mesa, Calif., to $139 in Hawaii for weekends or $192 in New York for weekdays. Up to five people may stay in a room, and up to two children under 10 years eat free from a children's menu for each adult entree ordered in the hotel restaurant.

Ramada International Hotels and Resorts' "Summer Sale," valid through September, offers 30 to 50 percent discounts at 11 properties in the Caribbean, where rates vary from $75 to $100 per night, and Latin America, where rates range from $55 to $80 per night, with up to four people per room.

Radisson Hotels International's "Shades of Summer" is valid through Labor Day at 277 properties in the United States, Canada, the Caribbean, Mexico, London, Berlin and Australia, with rates at more than half the properties at $59 or less per night for up to five people (including three children under age 17) to a room. Reservations are required, and some hotels require advance payment.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

TUESDAY, AUGUST 17, 1993

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your career moves ahead by leaps and bounds. Influential people who recognize your talents begin to seek your advice. Use your charms to settle difficult partnership disputes in December. A new home or job is likely early in 1994. Show appreciation when an older person takes you under his wing next March. A spring flirtation could turn out to be the real thing! Plan to vacation in late summer of '94.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Robert DeNiro, actress Maureen O'Hara, frontiersman Davy Crockett, actor Sean Penn.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): News that surfaces today might not be what you expected to hear. Keeping an open mind and taking a brave stand puts you back on top of things. Give children and parents extra encouragement.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The future looks bright. A chance you take now could bring you good luck where romance is concerned. Patch up any misunderstandings with family members at the earliest opportunity.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Swaying to and fro over decisions could make you dizzy. Go by facts not feelings when making financial choices. A quiet evening for two will put romance on a more solid footing.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A trip or special event will lead to bigger and better things. Home and family life fit nicely into your plans. Turn your back on selfish interests and focus on humanitarian concerns.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Promising linkups lie ahead. Plan your schedule with special care. Once you confirm details and inform others, you will be all set. A bright idea could come out of left field. Investigate.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Time spent away from the spotlight will restore your earlier energy and enthusiasm. Be open to loved ones' suggestions. Your loyalties could be tested by a newcomer's overtures.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): It may be time to break with tradition and try something new. Investigate other methods or a different locale. An even-handed approach will reduce a co-worker's envy.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Tackling any neglected correspondence or errands today will let you rest easier tonight. Include family members in big decisions. A child's keen perception will delight you.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may be hard pressed for time or answers now. Resist the temptation to take chances. You will go farther faster by first obtaining dependable data.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You are a dynamo who makes things happen. Your enthusiasm is contagious — talented people join the cause. A new romantic interest attracts attention. Enjoy dinner for two tonight.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your wonderfully warm and loving ways are reciprocated. As you reach out for agreement or romance, other people respond in kind. Your cup runneth over. Count your blessings!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Children are drawn to you. Show your genuine affection for them. Share household decisions with your mate. Watch a tendency to buy things on impulse.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are energetic, fair-minded and fond of their creature comforts. They learn early how to channel their creativity into profitable pursuits. Their love of luxury is a powerful incentive for financial success! A perfectionist streak leads these Leos to work long hours. They want everything they do to be of top quality.

The bidding:

| West | North | East | South |
|---|---|---|---|
| 3 ♣ | Pass | 4 ♠ | 4 ♡ |
| Pass | Pass | Pass | |

Opening lead: King of ♣

While bridge is not a game of luck, being fortunate does nobody any harm. South needed quite a slice of it, as well as accurate card reading, to land this heart game.

Taking advantage of the vulnerability, East raised West's three-club preempt to four clubs. That posed a considerable problem for South, who had no way of showing the two-suited nature of the holding without bypassing four hearts, which was possibly the only makable contract. (Double was out of the question because of the near certainty that North would bid spades.) Four hearts was as good a bid as any.

West led the king of clubs and continued with the queen, ruffed in the closed hand. With a 3-2 trump break, all declarer would expect to lose would be one trick in each suit except diamonds, so declarer continued by cashing the ace of trumps, on which West contributed the jack. That meant there was a danger of a second trump loser.

Declarer solved the problem neatly. Abandoning trumps, declarer cashed the ace-queen of diamonds and continued running the suit

Consider West's predicament. If the defender ruffed at any point, he would be trapped in an endplay. A heart lead away from the queen would surrender a trump trick; a club would allow South to discard the spade loser from hand while ruffing in dummy; and a spade would be ducked to dummy's queen for the fulfilling trick.

East desperately tried to escape the inevitable by discarding two spades and a club, coming down to K 9 in spades and Q 9 8 in trumps, but to no avail. Now declarer simply cashed the king of hearts and exited with a trump, conceding two tricks in the suit to East. At the end, the defender had to lead away from the king of spades and the spade loser vanished. Beautiful!

Slimmed-down Oprah Winfrey is surprise entrant in marathon

SAN DIEGO — A slimmed-down Oprah Winfrey was a surprise entrant in a half marathon, and said she enjoyed her first race even though she finished nearly an hour behind the women's division winner.

Winfrey

"People told me running would be fun. When I first started training, I said, 'What's fun about this?' But today was a lot of fun," the television talk show hostess said.

"That last mile was tough, but the goal was to finish."

Winfrey, who entered under the pseudonym of Bobbi Jo Jenkins, was among 5,019 runners in Sunday's 13-mile, 192½-yard America's Finest City Half Marathon. Accompanied by a video crew, bodyguard and trainer, she finished in 2 hours, 16 minutes, 3 seconds.

Winfrey said she lost 50 pounds in five months of training.

"I decided a long time ago I have to be healthy by the time I'm 40," said Winfrey, whose 40th birthday is 17 months away.

Maria Trujillo, 33, of Salinas won the women's division in 1:16:17.

NEW YORK — Unlikely as it may seem, Diane Keaton has some regrets.

For one, the 47-year-old actress, director and photographer says she regrets not making more movies in the years after her Oscar-winning performance in "Annie Hall" in 1977. And, she says, she wonders whether she should have spent so much time on dramas.

She appeared in "Reds" and "Shoot the Moon" in 1981 and "The Little Drummer Girl" and "Mrs. Soffel" in 1984.

But one thing she doesn't regret is stepping in to star in Woody Allen's newest film, "Manhattan Murder Mystery," after the filmmaker's highly publicized falling out with Mia Farrow, his longtime leading lady and lover.

Keaton stood by Allen throughout his bitter and unsuccessful custody battle with Farrow, which started after Farrow learned of his affair with her 22-year-old adopted daughter, Soon-Yi Previn.

"I liked Mia. I like Mia," Keaton said in an interview published Sunday in The New York Times. "But my history has always been linked with Woody. He's my friend."

Keaton, who starred in five of Allen's films when they were a couple, said it was easy working with him again.

"He responds to me the way he always responded to me, which is like I'm a complete idiot," she said. "It's like an old marriage or like I'm a kid sister."

Allen and Keaton play a husband and wife, and she is obsessed with proving that their neighbor murdered his wife. The film opens this week.

"I think we're funny, but I don't think anybody's going to go, 'Oh, what an adorable couple,' " she said.

"We're too old to be beloved."

NEW YORK — Alan Alda, who played a doctor in "M-A-S-H" will be talking with some real physicians when he returns to television this fall as a host of "Scientific American Frontiers."

"This series gives me a chance to indulge my curiosity," Alda said. "The part I like best about doing the shows is being able to talk to scientists personally and to see in their eyes and hear in their voices how excited they are about their work and how creatively they approach it."

The public TV series begins its fourth season Oct. 13. In the first episode, Alda explores the world of bionics, with segments about "smart" electronic eyeglasses, electrode systems that seem to bring paralyzed limbs back to life and artificial heart mechanisms.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn. — Radio personality Don Imus was hospitalized for the second time in two weeks with collapsed lung.

Imus, 53, was in satisfactory condition at St. Vincent's Medical Center in Bridgeport, hospital spokesman Williams Roots said. He was scheduled to be transferred Tuesday to Cornell Medical Center in New York City, where he was treated the first time his lung collapsed two weeks ago.

"He continues to improve," Roots said. "He's awake and feeling a little bit better than last night."

He said he wasn't sure what caused Imus' lung to collapse.

Imus was admitted Sunday after experiencing chest pains at his Southport home, Roots said. A tube was inserted into his right lung to reinflate it.

Imus called WFAN-AM in New York a few times from his hospital bed to talk on the air.

His raucous and often politically incorrect show received wide publicity during last year's presidential campaign when then-candidate Bill Clinton appeared on the program.

Appeals court blocks attempt to execute Graham

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals on Monday blocked an attempt by the state to execute Gary Graham, whose fight for a new hearing has drawn international attention.

The 5-4 decision followed a day of legal maneuvers, and a public relations blitz to save Graham from lethal injection.

Graham, 29, has argued that new evidence will show his innocence in the 1981 fatal shooting of an Arizona man, Bobby Lambert, in a Houston grocery store parking lot. He is seeking a hearing on that evidence by the State Board of Pardons and Paroles.

Graham had been scheduled to die early Tuesday morning. But on Friday, he won a stay of execution from the 3rd Court of Appeals.

On Monday, Texas Attorney General Dan Morales appealed that ruling to the Court of Criminal Appeals, the state's highest appellate court for criminal matters.

The court however rejected Morales' claims, and granted another stay of execution "pending further orders by the Court."

"Due course of law certainly requires that such a condemned person desperately seeking executive clemency not be executed on the simple expediency that state officials responsible for fairly considering his plea have refused to hear it," said the majority opinion by Justice Sam Houston Clinton.

During the day, about 40 Graham supporters marched in front of Morales' office and then the Governor's Mansion.

"You keep praying and hoping for a miracle. You're hoping God is on your side at this time," said Graham's stepmother, Elnora Graham.

The Congressional Black Caucus issued a statement in support of Graham, and later, Benjamin Chavis, executive director of the NAACP, and actor Danny Glover met privately with Morales.

"It is clear to everybody that Gary Graham at the very least should have a hearing. We feel it is wrong for the state of Texas to pursue an execution when there is evidence that has not been reviewed," Chavis said at a news conference.

Added Glover: "We have reached a critical point. Gary must have a hearing to review the new facts."

Graham even received a boost from Italy's liberal Radical Party in Rome.

Radical Party Secretary Emma Bonino said the group sent Morales a nearly 200-foot-long fax asking for a hearing on Graham's claim of new evidence that will clear him of the crime.

"I ask you to see to it that the Board of Pardons and Paroles holds a fair hearing on Gary Graham's request," the message said.

But Pam Lychner of Houston, president of a newly formed group called Justice for All, delivered to state officials a petition signed by 1,500 people calling for the execution to proceed.

"Gary Graham has received so many appeals and so many hearings. When is this ever going to stop?" she asked.

Graham contends witnesses not called upon during his trial will testify that he was elsewhere at the time of the shooting, and that he didn't match the gunman's description.

Prosecutors say that the alibi witnesses are not credible. Morales said there is no new evidence that would warrant a hearing for Graham.

At the news conference, Chavis said Morales told him that Graham should get a hearing — a reversal of his earlier statements. Ron Dusek, a spokesman for Morales, said Morales would not comment on what was said in a private meeting.

Last month, Graham filed a lawsuit against the state, alleging he was denied his constitutional right to a clemency hearing in which he could present new evidence to try to prove his innocence.

State District Judge Pete Lowry ordered the Board of Pardons and Paroles to hear Graham's new evidence.

The case then went to the 3rd Court, which ruled that continuing with the execution would violate Graham's rights. The court scheduled arguments for Sept. 29.

Graham, who was 17 at the time of the slaying, pleaded guilty to 10 similar robberies where a victim was approached in a supermarket parking lot. In two, the victims were shot. In a third, a woman was raped.

But Graham insists he was innocent of the killing, and his supporters say he was mistakenly identified by a woman who was sitting in a car 6 feet away when the slaying took place.

Before the court's action, Graham had requested no final meal. As permitted, he requested five personal witnesses to view the lethal injection, including Louis Farrakhan, leader of the Nation of Islam; filmmaker Spike Lee; Glover; the Rev. Jesse Jackson, and Chavis.

Defenders of Graham praised the court's decision.

Archaeologists unearth history, graves at Freedman's Cemetery

DALLAS (AP) — Along one of Dallas' busiest thoroughfares, officials are looking to expand into the future. To do so, archaeologists first must dig into the past.

Historians are hoping to learn more about the lives of blacks living in Dallas from 1861 to 1907 as they unearth graves from Freedman's Cemetery.

The excavation just north of downtown began after the land located in "Freedman's Memorial Park" was needed for expansion of North Central Expressway. The Texas Department of Transportation believed a few dozen graves would need to be removed.

But the cemetery is larger than originally believed. Archaeologists now have exhumed more than 460 bodies and expect to remove as many as 1,600. They believe as many as 10,000 people may be buried at Freedman's.

"The work continues to swarm on us," said John Kelly, design engineer for the North Central Expressway project.

Because of construction contracts for the freeway project, cemetery excavation work needs to be completed no later than mid-1995. The cost will probably exceed $5 million, officials say.

One problem is the historic boundaries of Freedman's had never been marked on city maps, only its general location. After it fell into disuse, parts were covered by surrounding streets, other parts sold.

The recovered remains will be reburied on a lot purchased by the city just south of Freedman's boundaries.

Police arrest man atop skyscraper

HOUSTON (AP) — A man armed with a sawed-off shotgun and apparently bent on suicide fired several shots from the top of a 71-story building in downtown Houston before surrendering to police Monday.

No injuries were reported and the gunman was whisked away by police for medical observation. His name and age were not immediately known.

Police spokesman Robert Hurst said the man walked into the First Interstate Bank Plaza building around 1:30 p.m.

When confronted by police, the man immediately threw down his weapon and surrendered, Hurst said.

Bono injured

DENVER — The San Francisco 49ers lost backup quarterback Steve Bono indefinitely with a separated left shoulder Monday night during a 16-13 victory over the Denver Broncos.

Once quarterback-rich, the 49ers sustained another loss when Bono was hit by defensive end Darren Drozdov when he released a pass. Drozdov landed on Bono as they fell.

San Francisco already was without MVP Steve Young, who has a hairline fracture of his left thumb, and Bill Musgrave, who sat out the game with sore ribs. During the offseason, the 49ers traded Joe Montana to Kansas City.

Rookie Elvis Grbac came off the bench to direct two second-half scoring drives for the 49ers and Mike Cofer kicked a 37-yard field goal on the final play of the game.

LPGA Challenge

NAPERVILLE, Ill. — Cindy Schreyer made a 3-foot putt for par on the final hole Monday to earn her first career victory, a one-stroke triumph over Betsy King in the rain-delayed LPGA Chicago Sun Times Challenge.

The conclusion of the tournament was postponed from Sunday when rain delayed play for a third time Sunday and the forecast called for tornados. Only five of 29 groups had finished play when the round was suspended.

Schreyer, the NCAA champion at Georgia in 1984, shot a 1-under-par 71 to finish with a 272 total, 16 under on the White Eagle Club course.

Mirer appeals

SEATTLE — Seattle Seahawks rookie quarterback Rick Mirer asked Monday that an arbitrator decide whether NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue was right in rejecting his contract.

The NFL Players Association, acting on Mirer's behalf, sent the request to the NFL Management Council, said Richard Berthelsen, general counsel for the NFLPA.

Mirer's agent, Marvin Demoff, said Mirer can continue playing while the appeal is decided.

Tagliabue struck down Mirer's contract last Friday, calling the 59 bonus incentives a "sham" and an obvious attempt to get around rookie pool restrictions set forth in the collective bargaining agreement.

A player has 30 days after a contract is disapproved to request an arbitrator. Demoff said he preferred to appeal immediately.

Mirer, the No. 2 pick in the 1993 draft, made his pro debut Saturday against the Minnesota Vikings.

Police think they know killer's name

■ Investigators say they know which teenager pulled the trigger killing James Jordan.

By Estes Thompson
Associated Press Writer

LUMBERTON, N.C. — Police say they know who pulled the trigger in the shooting death of Michael Jordan's father, but refused Monday to reveal which of two suspects it was.

Authorities sealed off this rural North Carolina town as a county judge ordered two teen-agers held without bail in the July 23 murder of James Jordan.

No evidence was presented at the hearing, but Robeson County Sheriff Hubert Stone said investigators "have determined which one was the triggerman." Stone, however, refused to name him.

Police closed roads into downtown and posted lookouts on rooftops when Daniel Andre Green, 18, of Lumberton and Larry Martin Demery, 18, of nearby Rowland, N.C., were brought to the courthouse in separate cars.

The two high school dropouts, during a 22-minute hearing before Robeson County District Court Judge Gary Locklear, said only that they wanted court-appointed attorneys.

However, when asked what he had to say to Michael Jordan, Green told "NBC Nightly News:" "I have nothing to say. But I didn't kill him."

Demery's eyes welled with tears during the proceeding. Afterward, both teen-agers hugged their mothers before officers took them away.

Asked if he was involved, Demery replied "No," The Charlotte Observer reported.

Locklear set Sept. 3 for the next court appearance. Both are charged with first-degree murder, armed robbery and conspiracy to commit armed robbery.

Among the evidence, Stone said, is an NBA championship ring that Michael gave to his father. The ring was in a bag, but the sheriff wouldn't disclose the location.

"NBC Nightly News" reported that Green helped investigators recover the ring and James Jordan was wearing the ring when he was shot.

Hugh Rogers, a Lumberton lawyer appointed to represent Demery, said he intends to have his client tested for "learning impairments, limited functionality as to his intelligence."

Rogers said he hadn't decided whether to seek a change of venue.

"I don't think there's anywhere from here to the West Coast that hasn't had publicity," Rogers said.

Rogers already represents Demery on another armed robbery charge and a check forging charge. Green was paroled two months ago from prison, where he served time for armed robbery.

District Attorney Richard Townsend said he had not decided whether to seek the death penalty. Locklear said from the bench that the case seemed to have elements of a capital crime, but that it was too early to discuss that issue.

Jordan's 1992 red Lexus 400 was discovered on a wooded road in neighboring Cumberland County, stripped of its STUTTGART, Germany — Did Gail Devers really win the women's 100 meters at the world championships? Or should she have at least shared the gold medal with Merlene Ottey of Jamaica?

After deliberating for more than an hour, following a protest by the Jamaican team, the Jury of Appeals of the International Amateur Athletic Federation ruled Devers, last year's Olympic 100-meter gold medalist, did indeed win the race Monday night.

The decision left Ottey yet again without a gold medal in a major championship meet after more than a decade of top international competition.

"I thought I won the race," Ottey said. "I caught her in the last five meters."

Oilers lose another late one, 24-20

By Michael A. Lutz
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON — The Houston Oilers, already accustomed to late-fourth-quarter defeats, lost earlier in the final period this time.

A 37-yard interception return by Mike Iaquaniello to Houston's 3-yard line set up Chuck Long's touchdown pass to Vernon Turner with 8:46 to play, rallying the Detroit Lions to a 24-20 exhibition victory Monday night.

The Oilers (0-2) lost to New Orleans in the closing minutes in their first exhibition game and lost to Buffalo in the AFC playoffs last January after leading 35-3 in the third quarter.

Al Del Greco kicked two field goals, and Warren Moon and Cody Carlson threw touchdown passes as the Oilers moved ahead 20-17 after three periods.

But a pass by Carlson was tipped by Dan Owens of the Lions (2-0-1) and Iaquaniello grabbed it to set up the decisive points. Long completed all five passes he threw in the drive.

Houston's defense was burned badly in the first quarter on a 60-yard touchdown pass from Rodney Peete to Junior Robinson, but the Oilers' goal-line stand late in the second quarter preserved a 13-10 halftime lead.

Robinson got completely open in the Oiler secondary and trotted across the goal line untouched with 1:58 gone in the game.

The Oilers rallied to a 13-7 lead on Moon's 19-yard touchdown pass to Haywood Jeffires and field goals of 21 and 55 yards by Del Greco.

The Lions had a chance to take the halftime lead when Chris Spielman intercepted a pass by Carlson and returned it 37 yards to the Houston 1 with 1:50 to go in the second quarter.

But Ware was unable to get the Lions a touchdown, and Jason Hanson kicked a 21-yard field goal with 46 seconds left in the half.

Carlson — entrenched as the Oilers' backup quarterback — completed a 13-yard touchdown pass to Gary Wellman midway in the third quarter, and Ware hit Larry Ryans with a 3-yard touchdown pass in the same quarter.

Ware, battling with Peete for the starting job, hit passes of 17 and 24 yards to Aubrey Matthews and 25 yards to Marty Thompson to set up the TD pass. Ware finished 6-for-10 for 71 yards.

Rebels hope they're awake for Eastwood

By Terry Williamson
Sports editor

Midland Lee's football Rebels got an early wake-up call this morning for a pre-dawn scenic tour to Van Horn to meet the El Paso Eastwood Troopers in the team's first scrimmage of the year.

The scrimmage is set in Van Horn for 10 a.m. That meant leaving Midland around 5:30 a.m.

"We wanted a later scrimmage, but Eastwood has to be in school Wednesday and they needed to get back," Earl Miller, Lee head football coach, said.

But Miller is looking forward to the scrimmage and thinks it may be the most important of the three on the schedule before the season starts on Sept. 3.

"We've got to find out who can get after it and who will play," Miller said. "We'll probably move some positions around after the scrimmage, but we plan on finding the best 11 we can put on the field."

Miller thinks Eastwood will be a good challenge for his Rebels. The Troopers are coming off a 10-2 season, gaining the area finals before getting roughed up by Odessa Permian, 61-8. They did beat Odessa High last year in a regular season game by a wild 32-26 margin and return seven offensive and seven defensive starters.

"We don't know a lot about Eastwood, but that really isn't our concern in this scrimmage," Miller said. "We just need to go out and find who can run, hit and go to the ball. We won't be so much concerned with execution like we will be in the upcoming scrimmages."

Miller says his troops are ready to meet some outside strangers after all the long two-a-days in heat over 100 degrees almost daily. However, he admits that the team has been strapped with some defections and injuries early.

"We've lost some kids who probably couldn't accept the heat, but this will make us a better team in the long run. What would those kids do when we got into district and try to play the type of ball we're going to be playing? I'd rather go with those who stick it out in the rough part.

Blast in fall league

The Midland Blast '78 Under 16 Boys soccer team earned a position in the North Dallas Chamber of Commerce Soccer Association Classic League Division I.

The league, one of the top classic leagues in Texas, will start play Sept. 11.

Blast '78, coached by former World Cup player Manu Sanon, earned points by competing in a qualifying tournament Aug. 7-8 and last weekend in Dallas. Blast defeated Royal United 6-0, Garland Genesis 3-1 and tied N.E.T. Challange 1-1 earning them a position in Division II.

Friday and Saturday, Blast came from behind to tie the Texas Longhorns 1-1 and that was enough to compile 27 cumulative points for Division I.

Also coaching for Blast is Tim Miller and players included Carey Gentry, Roger Belizaire, Brandon Doty, Dustin Huber, Matt Johnson and Matt Miller. Also, David Rhoades, Clay Boyd, Chris Owen, Sam Snyder, Tim Lupardus and Salvadore Bombara. John Hardell and Steve Phares compete with Blast but did not play in the qualifying games.

Foursome sets record at Hogan

The foursome of Leon Van Rensburg, Rick Gasser, Richard Minnix and Eddie Melket won a scorecard playoff over Clay Kinnard, Bob Glast, Mike Stephens and Gary Dean in the Boy Scout Pro-Am at Hogan Park Golf Course Monday.

Each group shot a 17-under-par 55 to tie for first place.

Two teams tied for third place with 15-under-par 57 scores. Bob Strangby, Mike Wright, Junior Brown and Frank Bryon won the scorecard playoff.

Each team had a professional golfer in its foursome. Chris Carpenter, assistant pro at The Club at Mission Dorado who played in the Nike Permian Basin Open two weeks ago, set a new course record with a 61.

Johnson's life could be a beach

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

'I was 100 per cent sure we were going to win that game (Super Bowl XXIV).'

— Jimmy Johnson, from his book 'Turning the Thing Around'.

IRVING — One of these days, we could look up and Jimmy Johnson will be gone.

At least that's what the head coach of the Dallas Cowboys says in his freshly released book, "Turning The Thing Around."

"I do this job and put in the hours because I enjoy it, and when it gets to the point that I don't enjoy it, that's when I'll stop, and head on out to the beach for good," Johnson said.

"That may be 10 years from now, or it may be next year," he added.

"It could happen when we're winning, if I get to the point where I don't enjoy putting in these hours. I don't have any burning desire to be the winningest coach, or to win so many titles, or accomplish so many things."

Johnson said he wants to be in a position personally where he can pick up and go on a day's notice.

"I will end up on the beach somewhere. The only question is which beach," he added.

"Those offshore oil rigs on the horizon are, in a way, at the root of who I am, and what I am, and what I have become: still, all in all, Jimmy Johnson, a roustabout character, fairly smart and fairly savvy in matters of the human condition, who appened to love football most of all."

Johnson's book deals with his relationship with owner Jerry Jones, his remarkable strategy during the NFC championship victory over San Francisco, and his cocky confidence that the Cowboys were going to blow away Buffalo in the Super Bowl, which they did 52-17.

It also deals with why he won't be making any class reunions at his alma mater, Arkansas.

On the Super Bowl, Johnson said:

"It might be more colorful to tell you that I was consumed with tense, suspenseful thoughts. But there were none. I was 100 per cent sure we were going to win that game. It was just a matter of how much. I had as much confidence in winning that game as any game that I have coached. We held a royal flush. It was just a matter of dropping the cards."

On the NFC title game with the 49ers, Johnson had used a map of the playing field showing showed good and bad patches of grass in Candlestick Park to forge his game plan.

Johnson said the key play, a 70-yard pass from Troy Aikman to Alvin Harper, came because the defender slipped down.

"And it happened because we'd adjusted our game plan according to the footing in various areas," Johnson said. "Very few people picked up on what had happened. They were so busy watching Alvin run, they didn't notice the 49er defender back there on the ground."

The book showed Johnson still bitter over the way Arkansas athletic director Frank Broyles handled a head coaching interview that eventually went to Ken Hatfield. Johnson was at Oklahoma State at the time.

Johnson said Broyles interviewed him after he had already given the job to Hatfield. Johnson felt Broyles lied to him.

"I've had very little contact with the people at my alma mater, especially Frank Broyles, since," Johnson said.

As for Jones, his roommate at Arkansas, Johnson reiterated that they have a good working relationship, but aren't beer-drinking buddies.

"Jerry Jones has given me a responsibility and a freedom to work, to choose and coach people that I probably couldn't have gotten from any other NFL owner," Johnson said.

"Yes, he gave me that trust because he knew me going in and we liked and respected each other. But no, we were not buddy-buddy. He did not hire me because I was his friend, and I did not take the job because he was my friend," Johnson wrote.

"People are still trying to figure out our relationship, and they're still misconceiving, going from one extreme or the other. The reality of our working relationship is that we communicate back and forth in a lot of different areas, but the responsibilities are clearly defined.

"When it's football and it's personnel and it's talent, I'll be making the decision. And, with Jerry being the owner, he is actively involved in making the financial decisions regarding those players."

Johnson added:

"I truly believe and I think Jerry believes, that we have the best working relationship of any in the NFL, or any in professional sports that I'm aware of. If it were anything less, we could not have turned the thing around nearly as fast."

TECH: Offense strong

(From 1C)

American Lloyd Hill, the senior split end whose average of 114.64 yards per game led the nation's receivers in 1992.

Hill joins senior quarterback Robert Hall and junior running back Byron "Bam" Morris on Dykes' list of big playmakers.

Hall, who missed three and a half games with a bruised shoulder last year, underwent arthroscopic surgery at the end of spring workouts. The joint has healed, Dykes said.

Hall completed 51 percent of his passes for 1,645 yards and 10 touchdowns last season.

"That's a guy who is very, very talented," Dykes said. "His shoulder is fine. He's a good field general."

Jason Clemmons, a senior, stepped in when Hall was hurt to help beat Texas Christian 31-28 and Southern Methodist 39-25. The victory over the Horned Frogs came when Clemmons threw a 43-yard touchdown pass to Hill with three seconds remaining.

On the ground, Morris rushed for 222 yards in a snowstorm the last game of the season in Texas Tech's 44-35 victory over Houston. Morris, 6-1 and 235 pounds, racked up 10 touchdowns and 1,279 yards rushing.

But defense might be another matter.

The Red Raiders lost six starters, including All-SWC free safety Tracy Saul.

Injuries plagued the lineup in 1992, when the defense gave up 418 yards and 30.2 points per game. The same defense never started together in back-to-back games.

"We played so many players, we never developed a personality," Dykes said. "We never got in sync."

Dykes has switched to a 4-4 defensive scheme he hopes is better suited to the speedy sophomores and transfers who must replace 12 lettermen.

LEE: First scrimmage

(From 1C)

(wide receiver/quarterback) Corodon Watson are not with us yet and that has hurt us because they are a big part of what we are doing."

Connally broke a nose in a non-related football accident and Watson has a pinched nerve. Connally reported Monday for workout. It isn't known if he will scrimmage or not.

One of those who has left the team is Ahmed Belazi, a 207-pound senior who was expected to see a lot of action at defensive end this year.

Still, Miller is taking an optimistic approach.

"The kids this year have been here on time and they are working hard. We've lost some quality kids to the heat, but the ones we have are going to make good football players. We've got some kids who want to win."

Lee's next scrimmage will come Monday at Memorial Stadium when the Rebels host the University of Chihuahua in a rematch of a regular season game played two years ago. Lee won that battle, but football was a new sport at the university at that time. It will be interesting to see how much football has improved in Mexico over a two-year span.

Miami revamps to two-back system

CORAL GABLES, Fla. (AP) — To make another run at No. 1, the Miami Hurricanes will use a two-back attack.

When coach Dennis Erickson took a look at his roster last spring, he found plenty of running backs, a depleted receiving corps, huge offensive linemen and an inexperienced quarterback.

So Erickson revamped the playbook that helped Miami win 29 consecutive games during the past three seasons.

The one-back offense Erickson brought to Coral Gables in 1989 will remain part of his arsenal. But he plans to have two running backs in the game about half the time.

"Because of personnel, we're pretty much forced to do it," Erickson said. "We have to get our best players on the field."

The memory of a 34-13 loss to Alabama in last season's Sugar Bowl also influenced Erickson. Crimson Tide defenders ignored the run, harried Heisman Trophy winner Gino Torretta into three interceptions and handed the Hurricanes their worst loss in seven years.

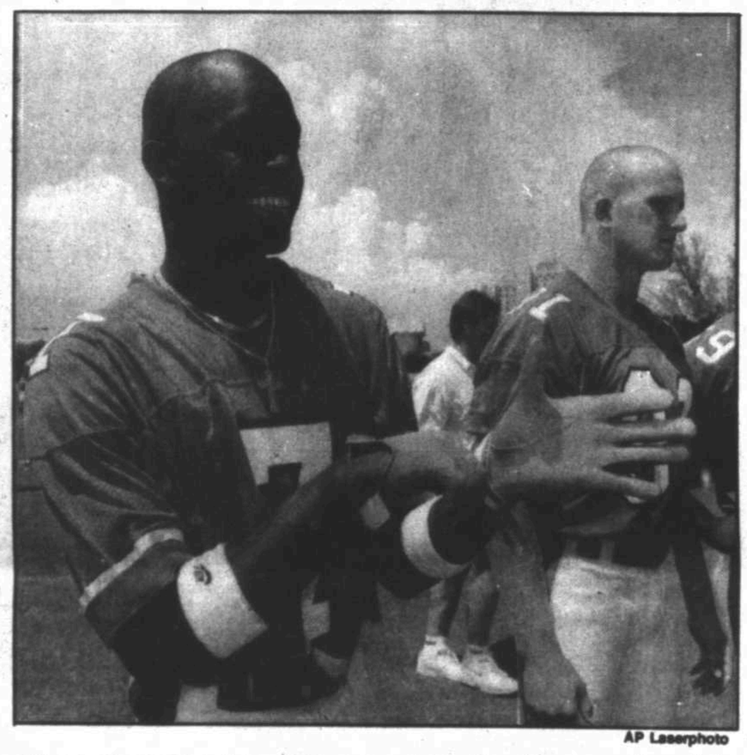
It ruined Miami's bid for a fifth national championship since 1983.

"Any time you get beat like we did in the last game, you evaluate what went wrong," Erickson said. "We came to the decision we have to establish the run every time we play."

Poised to pursue that goal is perhaps the best set of running backs to attend Quarterback U. At least four likely will be part of the rotation.

Sophomore tailbacks Danyell Ferguson and James Stewart have breakaway speed; junior fullbacks Donnell Bennett and Larry Jones can run, block and catch. The group is so good that Jones might not even start, and he was the most valuable player in the 1992 Orange Bowl.

Miami will still throw plenty, even with new faces at quarterback — junior Frank Costa — and at wide receiver. Lamar Thomas, Horace Copeland and Kevin Williams, all now catching passes in the NFL, are among 15 departed starters.



AP Laserphoto

Costa, a 6-foot-4 Philadelphian who spent the past two seasons as Torretta's understudy, has the same sturdy build and a stronger arm. He moves into a job that has produced two Heisman winners and four NFL starters since 1982.

"He has a chance to be as good as any of them," Erickson said. "I look for him to have a great year."

Costa's most dangerous target might be freshman Jammi German, a speedster from Fort Myers, Fla., who was one of the nation's most highly regarded recruits last winter.

"I would expect Jammi to play a lot," Erickson said. "Coming out of high school, he was probably as talented as I've seen."

Even in a two-back set, the Hurricanes will run the same plays as in the one-back alignment. With two running backs, Miami will split them, use the I formation or send one back in motion.

"We're going to be a passing team," Costa said. "We're just trying to get a 50-50 blend."

But Erickson hopes to throw less and run better. More than 70 percent of the Hurricanes' yardage came through the air last season, when they finished 87th in the NCAA in rushing.

Better balance would help keep opponents off-balance. In the Sugar Bowl blowout, Alabama exposed the Hurricanes' one-dimensional approach, and well as their quick but small offensive line.

"We got physically mauled," Erickson said.

Miami's blockers will be much bigger this fall. Four starters weigh at least 295 pounds, led by immense sophomore tackle Ricky Perry (6-foot-7, 310 pounds).

"We could be better in the offensive front than we've ever been," Erickson said.

Defensively, Miami will look much the same as in the past — that is, fast. The primary concern is at linebacker, where last year's talented trio of Micheal Barrow, Darrin Smith and Jessie Armstead have departed.

"That's our biggest question mark," Erickson said. Likely replacements include freshman James Burgess of Homestead, Fla., and 5-foot-8, 205-pound Rohan Marley, son of the late reggae star Bob Marley.

The front four should be one of Miami's best yet, and that's saying something at a school that produced Russell Maryland, Cortez Kennedy and Jerome Brown. Six linemen who saw considerable action last season return, including starting ends Darren Krein and Kevin Patrick, and 280-pound sophomore tackle Warren Sapp.

"The strength of our team is probably our defensive front," Erickson said. "How the linebackers play is the key. If they come through, we have a chance to be very good on defense."

Miami begins the season with two remarkable streaks — seven top-three finishes in a row (an NCAA record) and 51 consecutive victories at the Orange Bowl (six shy of Alabama's record). Trend buffs should note that the Hurricanes have won all of their national championships with a first-year starter at quarterback in odd-numbered years — 1983, 1987, 1989 and 1991.

Laredo girl thinks football is just another sport

■ Becky DeLeon is not trying to prove girls can play football — she wants to play because she loves the game.

By Griffin B. Cole
Laredo Morning Times

LAREDO (AP) — The crash being heard on the United High School practice football field may be more from the gender barrier falling than pads clashing.

Among the yells of agony from teen-age boys involved in drills where sweat waters the grass, Rebecca DeLeon battles in the sport she has loved since she can remember.

Rebecca, she prefers Becky, is going through all the tortures of two-a-day drills in an attempt to make the Laredo United Longhorns varsity football roster.

That door was opened last spring when the University Interscholastic League voted to allow girls to play high school football in Texas for the first time since the 1940s.

Becky is not real familiar with the historical perspective of the UIL decision, she just knows it gave her the chance to get out on the field.

Senior Becky DeLeon, left, leaves football practice with Laredo United teammates. She is attempting to make the varsity.

By being on the football field, her real battle is not making the varsity unit as much as fighting the belief that she does not belong where she is.

"I just think of it as a sport," Becky said when asked what made her think she could play football.

There was no thought about whether football was a boys sport or if volleyball was a girls sport. It was just, football is a sport.

"I'm a human being," Becky said. "The only thing that makes me different (from boys) is... some of the body parts. I think boys should be able to play volleyball."

Becky said the boys on the team have treated her just fine, "There's trash talking, but that's football."

There is no apparent out-right animosity on the players part. During drills last week most of the players were too busy wheezing, yelling and grunting to even realize a girl was among them.

Of course, if there is any displeasure on the boys part, they have a chance to show it on the field.

The boys may actually be at a disadvantage. There is a natural tendency to let up when she is across from them.

All that gets, is the player yelled at by a coach. What good is a player who doesn't go full out all the time?

"One guy told me he was mad because he was taught not to hit girls and there I was across from him," Becky laughed.

But Becky isn't trying to be some type of martyr, or trying to be special, she wants to play because she thinks its fun.

Her chances are slim at best of making the varsity unit.

She is 5-feet-5-inches tall and weighs around 125 pounds. Not particularly gifted as an athlete, she is not fast, her strength can't match most of the boys and she isn't real agile.

What she does have is perseverance. When two-a-days started last Monday morning she was there. She was back for the afternoon session going through the drills specially made by coaches to separate the men from the boys.

Or, more accurately, the serious players from the pretenders.

What hurts her chances most though, is she is starting football as a senior.

"We use the junior varsity squad to develop players that will help us next year," said Longhorns head football coach Bobby Gonzalez. "It's made up mainly of sophomores and juniors."

What that means is, there is no room for seniors at a lower level if they can't play varsity.

Gonzalez will keep a player if he has gone through the program the four years. If they started late, and don't have the talent, they are cut.

Becky was informed of that and had no problem with it.

"It's like a friend of mine told me, 'Somebody starts out as a senior and we've gone through the hell for four years, it's not fair.'," Becky told the Laredo Morning Times.

Of course, the UIL ruling came a few years too late, so Becky couldn't have the chance of starting at seventh grade and continuing like she wanted to.

The other problem is that she can't be as good as a younger player, she has to be better.

Gonzalez explained that if two players are equal in talent, the younger player is going to get the shot to play and a chance to show he will develop into a better player.

The coaches treat her like any other player. She gets the teaching, the yelling and the cajoling in the same amount as the boys.

After the drills were completed, Becky was walking toward the water with a slight limp. One of her teammates informed Gonzalez, Becky had hurt her knee.

"What's the matter Becky?," Gonzalez replied in a condescending tone.

"It doesn't hurt that much," was all she could reply.

Like the others, Becky wants to show how tough she is.

Mattingly is marvelous again

Associated Press

NEW YORK — It seems almost everything is back for Don Mattingly: his swing, Yankee pride and a pennant race.

It's been a long ride. The Yankees first baseman won a batting title with a .352 average in 1986 and hit .327 the following year. Then he started to fade because of nagging back injuries and losing teams, hitting .256 in 1990.

Earlier this season when Mattingly was struggling with an injured side, one New York paper carried the headline "THE YANKEE SLIPPER" on the back page.

It seemed, rightly at the time, that Mattingly would never be the same player. He wasn't hitting many home runs and he wasn't driving in a lot of runs. Some Yankee fans asked if the team could afford to carry a first baseman who hit 10 homers and drove in about 60?

He's already surpassed those numbers with 13 homers and 64 RBIs heading into Monday's night game against Texas. He's batting .314.

Mattingly has 51 RBIs in his last 50 games, batting .372 (71-for-191). He was batting .253 earlier in the year and spent some time on the disabled list, returning on June 10.

In recent years, you could almost see the worry in Mattingly eyes and hear it in his carefully chosen words. He joined the Yankees in 1983 but never made it to postseason play, although there were a few races. But the Yankees always faded when it counted.

So far this season, New York is showing no signs of letting go in their race with Toronto, and Mattingly, their captain, is leading the way. On Sunday, he hit a home run in the eighth inning to give the Yankees a 1-0 victory over Baltimore before 47,428 at Yankee Stadium.

New York Yankees slugger Don Mattingly watches his homerun in a game against Baltimore Sunday. Mattingly hopes to lead New York back to a pennant title.

He brought 52,000-plus to their feet Saturday with a game-tying two-run single against the Orioles on Reggie Jackson Day.

"I've seen him for three years now and I think I give him more credit the last two years when he showed up and busted his butt when the team had nothing to play for," Sunday's winner, Scott Kamieniecki, said. "It's not surprising to see him do what he's doing now. I guess it has more impact now."

Although Mattingly won't admit it, he's a little concerned he might not be considered among the Yankee greats like Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig, Joe DiMaggio, Mickey Mantle and Reggie. The team retired Jackson's No. 44 this weekend and gave him a plaque in Monument Park.

Somewhere in the back of his mind, Mattingly must wonder if his No. 23 will be retired someday or given to some rookie when he's gone. He entered this season with a career average of .311, 192 homers and 913 RBIs in 10 seasons. Good, but perhaps not good enough for a Hall of Fame career.

But Mattingly would give up most of the honors and numbers for a World Series ring. Then, he really could feel like the Babe, Joe D., Mickey and Reggie.

"Today, and today only. That's all that matters," Mattingly said of his game-winning homer against the Orioles. "This is baseball, we've got to come back tomorrow."

Mattingly has the prize spot in the clubhouse, a large locker in the front right corner complete with a stereo system and small refrigerator. He also has purchased a luxury bus to take his family on short road trips.

The Yanks are a close-knit team this season, allowing their kids to run wild in the clubhouse after the game. Mattingly is everyone's uncle, and the past doesn't matter to him right now when there's so much work to be done.

"Let the past go," he said. "And the future can't be controlled until tomorrow. It's a pretty good look for everything, not just baseball."

Fernandez leads Mets over Reds

Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Sid Fernandez got his first win in four months by pitching 7⅓ solid innings and singling home New York's go-ahead run Monday night in a 6-2 victory over bumbling Cincinnati.

New York scored four runs in an error-filled seventh to hand the Reds their season-high seventh straight loss. Fernandez singled off Larry Luebbers (2-3) for a 3-2 lead, and Eddie Murray capped the rally with a two-run homer.

Fernandez (2-3) gave up five hits and four walks to the Reds' slumping offense over 7⅓ innings, striking out seven. Mike Maddux got his fourth save, completing the Mets' third victory in 10 games.

Fernandez hadn't won since April 14, three weeks before he went on the disabled list with torn cartilage in his left knee. The left-hander had pitched well in three starts since arthroscopic knee surgery, but lost them all because of the Mets' poor offense. He produced the biggest hit Monday.

Left fielder Randy Milligan slipped on the wet turf and dropped Jeromy Burnitz's fly ball for a two-base error opening the seventh. Luebbers then bounced a throw to first on Kevin Baez's sacrifice attempt for another error. Fernandez, just 1-for-12 with five strikeouts, lined a single to center for his second RBI of the season and a 3-2 lead.

New York wasted a chance to blow it open when Baez was thrown out at home trying to score from second on Ryan Thompson's double to right. Todd Hundley followed with a sacrifice fly and Murray hit his 19th homer.

Cincinnati has scored just five runs in six games, managing 21 hits while getting shut out three times.

Fernandez gave the Reds a run in the first with a bases-loaded wild pitch. Kevin Mitchell hit his 19th homer in the third.

Joe Oliver's passed ball let in a run in the second and Burnitz followed with an RBI single to tie it.

Orsulak kept it tied at 2 by stretching over the top of the fence in left field to take a solo homer away from Hal Morris in the fifth.

JORDAN: Car stolen

(From 1C)

wheels and stereo speakers. The car's UNC-0023 license plate also was missing as was the NBA ring.

Investigators traced the crime to the suspects using telephone records from Jordan's cellular car phone.

The father of the Chicago Bulls superstar was shot in the chest with a .38-caliber pistol and his body dumped in a creek near McColl, S.C., where it was discovered Aug. 3 by a fisherman. The body was identified Aug. 13 through dental records.

The four males accused of vandalizing Jordan's car pleaded innocent Monday.

Terrellis Marnicus Teasley, 22, is charged with breaking and entering and larceny of a motor vehicle. Kenneth Connor Farrior, 20, was charged with breaking and entering of a motor vehicle. Jovan Jamahal Carter, 18, was charged with possession of a stolen vehicle, although officials said it doesn't necessarily mean he stole the car.

Gary Rodel Farrior, 16, Kenneth Farrior's brother, was arrested earlier on charges that he helped strip Jordan's car of tires and stereo equipment. Vanity license plates and the logo from the red Lexus were missing when the car was found on a dirt road in a wooded area.

All are from Fayetteville. They were released to the custody of their families and told to return to court Sept. 1.

Stone said Jordan was asleep in his car at the intersection of U.S. 74 and Interstate 95 near Lumberton when two men approached the car to rob him. The car's doors were unlocked and a window rolled down.

"When the robbery started to occur, he was asleep at the time and he started to wake up and the gunman got scared," Stone said. "He was shot inside the car."

There was no blood in the vehicle because the bullet didn't leave Jordan's body, Stone said.

The suspects realized they had killed Michael Jordan's father about an hour after the slaying when they rummaged through his personal belongings, Stone said.

"They couldn't believe it happened," the sheriff said.

Neighbors near the trailer park where Green lived told The Charlotte Observer they suspected something wrong for about two weeks.

They said they saw Green and his friends riding in the luxury Lexus.

"I was picking peas and I looked up and saw this fancy car pulling in, and I thought, 'Lord, who's driving that car? Where'd they get that car?'" said Janice Graham, who lives across the street from the trailer Green shared with his mother and sister.

She said Green and a carload of friends cruised the roads in the neighborhood, sometimes so fast and recklessly they burned the rubber on the tires. At night, they hid the car in a wooded area or beside a 4-acre fishing hole.

Her son, Buddy, went for a closer look one day. A red light blinked from the dashboard as if an alarm were set. Potato chips littered the tan leather interior.

"They were killing it," Buddy Graham said of the car. "They were acting like they didn't care about it."

Ojeda loses first start since accident

Associated Press

CLEVELAND — Bob Ojeda turned the page on a tragic year Monday night when he returned to the Cleveland starting rotation in a disappointing but gutsy 4-1 loss to Toronto.

Five months after he was seriously injured in the Florida boating accident that killed two teammates, Ojeda fulfilled a promise he had made to himself in June, when he said: "I need to get up. I need to go forward. I need to turn the page."

Almost predictably, the first inning was a struggle. After waving to the crowd to acknowledge a standing ovation, Ojeda (0-1) allowed a leadoff single to Devon White and consecutive home runs by Roberto Alomar and Paul Molitor.

But then, the 35-year-old lefthander's pitching instincts kicked in, and he mixed speeds on breaking balls to hold the Blue Jays scoreless through the balance of his five innings.

He gave up seven hits, struck out one and walked none, leaving after the fifth of a pitch limit. Of his 86 pitches 53 were strikes.

Ojeda had arthroscopic surgery on his left shoulder April 27 for an injury unrelated to the accident. He returned to the Indians' roster Aug. 7 and made two relief appearances — at Baltimore and Milwaukee — before Hargrove gave him the start Monday.

Watching from the stands were Ojeda's wife, Ellen, and Patti Olin, whose husband, Steve, was killed with Tim Crews in the March 22 accident on Little Lake Nellie. Crews and Olin, both relief pitchers, died when the boat Crews was piloting hit a dock in early-evening darkness. Ojeda's scalp was torn off and had to be replaced surgically.

There were scattered boos when the fans realized Ojeda had not come out for the sixth inning. Reliever Bill Wertz then gave up a home run to the first batter he faced, John Olerud's 21st home run this season.

Ojeda's return overshadowed a strong performance by the Blue Jays' Juan Guzman, who allowed six hits in innings. Toronto won its third straight and a took a half-game lead in the AL East over New York, which was rained out.

Guzman (9-3) struck out seven and walked none — his first walkless game of the season — and didn't allow a run until Sandy Alomar's two-out, RBI single in the seventh. Guzman set up the unearned run by missing Paul Sorrento's leadoff grounder to the mound.

Athletics 4, Brewers 1

OAKLAND — Rookie Todd Van Poppel allowed two hits in 6⅓ innings to win his fourth straight start as Oakland beat Milwaukee Brewers and stopped a four-game losing streak.

Van Poppel (4-3) didn't allow a hit until Pat Listach's single in the sixth. Van Poppel blanked the Brewers until the seventh, when John Jaha hit his ninth homer of the season with two outs.

Van Poppel struck out one and walked five in the longest outing of his big-league career. He is 4-0 with a 2.41 ERA in his last four starts after going 0-3 with a 7.47 ERA in his first four.

Dennis Eckersley, Oakland's fourth pitcher, got four outs for his 26th save, finishing the four-hitter.

Rafael Novoa (0-2) pitched a six-hitter for his second complete game. He struck out four and walked two.

Oakland went ahead in the first when Brent Gates walked, took second on a groundout and scored on Dave Henderson's double. The A's added three runs in the fifth on a two-run homer by Gates, his sixth, and Mike Bordick's bunt single on a squeeze play.

Van Poppel escaped a bases-loaded jam in the sixth when B.J. Surhoff hit a comebacker that the pitcher turned into a home-to-first double play.

Tigers 7, Angels 2

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Bill Gullickson allowed two more homers but hung on to win his third consecutive start as Detroit beat California.

Tim Salmon and Ty Van Burkleo hit solo homers off Gullickson (9-6), who has allowed 19 this year following a major league-leading 35 last year.

Gullickson allowed eight hits in seven innings, struck out three and walked none for the second straight start. Mike Henneman, Detroit's third pitcher, got three outs for his 19th save.

Alan Trammell, Mickey Tettleton and Chris Gomez had early RBI singles off Hilly Hathaway (4-2), who lost for the first time in seven starts. Hathaway allowed four runs and eight hits in six-plus innings with four walks and no strikeouts.

Mariners 8, Orioles 6

SEATTLE — In a tense game that appeared to carry over harsh feelings from a big brawl in June, Seattle beat Baltimore, sending the Orioles to its seventh straight defeat.

Baltimore, on its longest losing streak since an eight-game slide from July 19-27, 1989, dropped 5½ games behind first-place Toronto, which beat Cleveland 4-1.

The last time the teams played was June 6, when their 20-minute brawl resulted in seven suspensions. A fight didn't break out this time, but home-plate umpire Greg Kosc warned Orioles starter Rick Sutcliffe (9-9) and both benches after Sutcliffe hit Bret Boone on his left arm with a pitch in the first.

Sutcliffe lost for the seventh time in eight decisions, getting tagged for eight runs and seven hits in 3 2-3 innings with five walks. He has allowed 44 runs in his last 49 2-3 innings, a 7.97 ERA.

Fleming gave up three runs and seven hits in 6 2-3 innings with six strikeouts and two walks. Randy Johnson, in his second career relief appearance, pitched 1 1-3 innings for his first major league save, striking out four.

Christie: 'I'm the fastest gun in the West'

STUTTGART, Germany (AP) — Linford Christie is an Englishman, but he reached into Wild West lore to describe how it felt to beat Carl Lewis and the top American sprinters.

"I am the fastest gun in the West. I was shooting them out of town," Christie said Monday, one day after beating three Americans in the 100-meter dash at the World Championships in 9.87 seconds, second fastest in history.

"The Americans might still think they're the best, but whereas they might have their Colt .45s, I've got a Gatling gun," the British champion said.

After winning the final, Christie turned to the crowd and waved his fingers in a sharp-shooter salute as if to show that he had just gunned down his rivals.

Christie, 33, complained he never got the respect he deserved after winning the 100 at the Barcelona Olympics last year. Skeptics said the Olympic field was "soft," because Lewis, the world record-holder, was missing.

"I am glad he was here," Christie said. "No one was missing this time."

Lewis never even figured in the race. Trailing from the beginning, the three-time world champion finished fourth, in 10.02.

Two other Americans came after Christie. Andre Cason, the current top American sprinter who ran 9.94 in the semifinals, clinched the silver at 9.92, while Dennis Mitchell took the silver at 9.99.

Christie felt there was no doubt the Americans remained the dominant nation in the sprint.

Christie is now the only runner to win Olympic, world, European and Commonwealth titles.

Steinbach to miss rest of season

OAKLAND (AP) — Oakland catcher Terry Steinbach will probably miss the rest of the season with a fractured wrist, the Athletics said Monday.

Steinbach was hit by a pitch Sunday.

Steinbach, whose wrist initially was thought to be bruised, was placed on the 15-day disabled list Monday. The All-Star left Sunday's game in the fifth inning after Minnesota's Scott Erickson hit him.

The loss of Steinbach was only the latest blow to the reeling Athletics, who won the AL West last season but have dropped to last place this year. Going into Monday night's game with Milwaukee, Oakland was 21 games below .500.

Oakland's pitching staff, which owns a 4.99 ERA, has struggled all season, and starter Bob Welch recently was placed on the disabled list. First baseman Mark McGwire has missed 84 games with a foot injury, and no return date has been announced.

Steinbach's .285 average led the team, and he had 10 homers and 43 RBIs.

To replace Steinbach, the A's recalled catcher Henry Mercedes from Tacoma of the Pacific Coast League. During two previous stints with Oakland this season, Mercedes appeared in two games but has yet to get an at-bat.

He was hitting .238 with four home runs and 32 RBIs at Tacoma.

Prices retreat

NEW YORK — Futures prices for crude oil and related products were mostly lower Monday as traders cashed in on last week's gains.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in September settled at $17.86 per barrel, down 28 cents at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Local crude purchasers lowered their posted price 25 cents to $16.25 a barrel.

Crude rose a total of 87 cents a barrel last week.

Peter Beutel, an oil specialist at Brody, White & Co. in New York, said last week's rise in prices was due largely to so called short-covering.

Natural gas prices were higher for the day, with contracts for delivery in September settling at $2.357 per 1,000 cubic feet, up 6.2 cents. Beutel said the buying was driven by technical factors.

T-bills fall

WASHINGTON — Interest rates on short-term Treasury securities fell in Monday's auction to the lowest level in six weeks.

The Treasury Department sold $12.4 billion in three-month bills at an average discount rate of 3.03 percent, down from 3.05 percent last week. An additional $12.2 billion was sold in six-month bills at an average discount rate of 3.12 percent, down from 3.18 percent last week.

The rates were the lowest since July 6, when three-month bills sold for 3.01 percent and six-month bills averaged 3.10 percent.

Dollar slides

NEW YORK — The dollar slid against major currencies on Monday as the Japanese yen pushed to yet another postwar high against the greenback and the German mark surged.

The dollar sunk to 101.63 yen, a drop of 0.19 yen from Friday, when it hit the previous postwar low against the Japanese currency.

The dollar also dropped 2.4 pfennigs against the German mark, falling to 1.6870 marks. Traders said investors sold the dollar and yen to collect profits from the currencies' recent rise against the German mark. Once some investors started buying marks, others jumped in, in a domino effect, traders said.

In New York, it cost $1.4890 to buy a British pound, up from $1.4600 on Friday.

Other dollar rates in New York, compared to late Friday: 1.4955 Swiss francs, down from 1.5240; 5.9650 French francs, down from 6.0595; 1,608.00 Italian lire, down from 1,622.00; and 1.3134 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3144.

Heat helps boost industrial production

■ Summer weather keeps air conditioners working overtime in July.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — U.S. industrial production increased moderately in July after a two-month decline, helped by hot-weather demand for electricity, the government said Monday.

Economists were expecting the seasonally adjusted 0.4 percent gain in the Federal Reserve's industrial production index, which followed drops of 0.1 percent in June and 0.2 percent in May. But they warned that the number was not as good as it looked.

Sweltering temperatures in the East and elsewhere early in July kept air conditioners working overtime. Consequently production at utilities jumped 3.3 percent, helped by a 4 percent gain in the output of electricity.

Manufacturing output advanced a much more modest 0.2 percent and production slipped 0.3 percent in mining, which includes oil drilling.

"The contribution from utilities obviously is not a good thing," said economist Louis Crandall of R.H. Wrightson and Associates. "The improvement in utility output will do nothing more than increase electric bills in August and act as a drag on consumer spending."

But, on the positive side, the overall gain in manufacturing came despite a decrease in auto production, down 3.7 percent for the third consecutive drop.

Automakers, in response to stronger sales in May and June, already have scheduled increased production for this month, which probably will continue into the fall. That alone should keep overall industrial production growing.

"The auto industry seems to have cut back production significantly enough to lay the foundation for future production gains," said economist Mark Zandi of Regional Financial Associates in West Chester, Pa.

Economists are hoping to see the industrial sector shift out of stagnation. Production had advanced strongly during the fourth quarter of last year, in response to strong sales before Christmas, but has since lapsed.

Zandi said he expects production to be better during the second half of the year but warned that job growth in manufacturing may remain slow, with employers relying on overtime and temporary help to boost output.

"Many manufacturers came close to going under in the recession or saw others actually go under. They've been chastened and as a result they're not going to be aggressive about expanding their operations," he said.

In July, consumer goods other than autos and trucks advanced strongly, 0.6 percent, with output of appliances, televisions and air conditioners soaring 5.3 percent.

Output of durable goods — items such as cars and computers expected to last three or more years — increased 0.3 percent. Production of non-durable goods was unchanged.

The various changes in production left the Fed's index of industrial production at 110.6 percent of its 1987 base, up 3.5 percent from a year ago.

With production increasing, the operating rate for industrial concerns edged to 81.5 percent of capacity, up from 81.3 percent in June but still below the 81.7 percent mark of April.

Economists watch capacity use closely for signs of production bottlenecks that could lead to inflation. An overall operating rate below 85 percent is considered non-inflationary.

Continental to cut 2,500 full-time jobs

HOUSTON (AP) — Continental Airlines, saying its financial comeback has fallen short of expectations, plans to cut 2,500 full-time jobs, halt service to nine cities and retire 30 older planes.

None of the airline's Midland operations will be affected.

The Houston carrier, which emerged from its second bankruptcy in late April, lost $24.4 million, or $1.45 per share, for the period between April 28 and June 30.

"These results are less than we could have hoped for," Daniel Garton, Continental's chief financial officer, said Monday. "We have to be realistic. Continental is coming back, we are going to return to profitability. (But) you can't turn on a dime. We're going to improve with time."

Earlier this year, the airline's former chief financial officer testified in bankruptcy court that the carrier expected to resume making money once it implemented its bankruptcy reorganization plan.

John Luth, who has since been named senior vice president for restructuring, also said the airline expected an operating profit of $168.3 million between May and the rest of the year.

Sears to close last catalog outlet stores

CHICAGO (AP) — Sears, Roebuck and Co. said Monday it will close the last of its catalog outlet stores by the end of September.

Sears abandoned its 106-year-old catalog earlier this year and stopped taking catalog orders May 27.

The retailer already has closed 24 of the original 91 outlet stores, which sold surplus merchandise from its catalog operation.

The remaining 67 outlet stores in 25 states will mark down prices to speed up the liquidation of the remaining merchandise, Sears said.

Two of the five warehouses that supplied the outlet stores already have closed, and the remaining three are almost empty and will close by the end of September.

Economists believe Fed will hold interest rates steady

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite Chairman Alan Greenspan's tough talk to Congress, Federal Reserve policy makers meeting behind closed doors Tuesday probably won't boost interest rates, economists believe. The reasons: Inflation is nowhere in sight and the economy is still weak.

Most analysts think the Federal Open Market Committee, the Fed's monetary policy arm, will opt to keep short-term interest rates unchanged, as they have been for nearly a year.

"They're going to do absolutely nothing. Greenspan talked tough (last month) but at the time economic activity looked a little firmer than it does now and there was evidence that prices were on an upward trajectory," said economist Samuel D. Kahan of Fuji Securities Inc. in Chicago.

"Since then the economy has been mixed and the inflation news has been super good," Kahan said.

In two appearances before congressional committees, Greenspan warned, much more bluntly than usually, that the central bank would not hesitate to use higher interest rates to dampen inflation.

"At some point rates are going to have to move up," he said.

After he spoke, economists said they wouldn't be surprised if the Fed acted sometime after Oct. 1. But now, after examining the latest data on economic growth and prices, many think Fed action won't come until early next year.

Federal Reserve Bank redeems Leave Bonds

BY Bill Doyle

Q: I just came across my old Navy sea bag. Among other memorabilia, I found a $250 Armed Forces Leave Bond. Although I don't remember receiving it, I assume I got it when I was discharged after World War II.

I realize this might be an odd-ball request, but can you tell me anything about such bonds? What is mine worth? Where can it be redeemed? Does it have any extra value as a collectible?

A: Your assumption about receiving the bond is correct. Armed Forces Leave Bonds were issued to WWII veterans of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard who were discharged between Jan. 1, 1943, and Sept. 30, 1946, or who remained on active duty after that latter date.

The face amount of your bond represented the dollar value of leave to which you were entitled but did not take. During WWII, many members of the armed forces built up sizable unused leave.

I got my leave bond at the Lido Beach, N.Y., Navy Separation Center and cashed it at a hometown bank. But you probably will get a blank stare if you take it to a local bank now.

Your bond can be redeemed at the Federal Reserve Bank or branch serving your area of the country or at the Bureau of the Public Debt, 399 13th St. SW, Washington, DC 20239.

Those bonds accrued interest at a 2.5 percent annual rate until they reached maturity five years after they were issued. At that point, interest stopped accumulating. A quick run with my handy calculator shows you can get $282.85 by redeeming your bond.

Robert D. Fisher, vice president at R.M. Smythe & Co., 26 Broadway, New York, NY 10004, says it is most unlikely you would get more by selling it as a collectible. The Smythe firm specializes in tracing old securities and conducts auctions at which old certificates are sold.

Q: You sometimes mention the Treasury Direct system of purchasing U.S. Treasury bonds, notes and bills through Federal Reserve Banks without paying any commission, fee or other charges. Well, Treasury Direct might be a nice way to buy and own Treasury securities, but it is hell to try to sell.

I opened my own Treasury Direct account through a Fed bank and bought three $1,000 Treasury notes. As you have written, a Treasury security cannot be sold out of a personal Treasury Direct account; it must be transferred to a bank or brokerage firm before it can be sold.

I went to a brokerage firm with the proper government forms to arrange the transfer. The forms went to and from the Treasury Department three times, because of technical errors. The Treasury Department finally said the brokerage's "operations department" should be able to give me "complete delivery instructions."

After all this and three long-distance phone calls, I still don't know if the notes are in my brokerage account.

What do I do next? Do I contact the Treasury or the brokerage?

A: The brokerage. Ask if the Treasury notes have reached there and have been credited to your account.

You might not have to do even that. Your next monthly brokerage statement should show whether the notes are in your account.

They should be there, assuming the brokerage finally did provide accurate delivery instructions. If they are not, check with Treasury Direct again to find out if the notes were transferred.

You're getting a harsh lesson. As has been pointed out in this space, Treasury Direct is an excellent, expense-free way to purchase and hold U.S. Treasury securities. However, as also has been noted here, Treasury Direct is intended primarily for investors who intend to hold Treasury bonds, notes and bills until those securities reach maturity.

Federal tax law frightens some; others see boon

By Susan Hightower
Associated Press writer

DALLAS — Alex Brennan-Martin, proprietor of popular Brennan's restaurant near downtown Houston, fears the new federal tax law will carry a bite worse than any turtle that ever went into a bowl of his famed soup.

And he's joined by some other owners of Texas businesses, from trucking companies to country clubs, who say the new $496 billion deficit reduction plan falls on them unfairly and ultimately could lead to layoffs.

"I'm scared to death, I'll tell you that. And I'm not alone. When I talk to other restaurant people, this is a real wild card in the deck. There's some real concern out there. We just don't know how the public is going to react," Brennan-Martin said.

The package, signed into law last week, is designed to reduce the deficit by $496 billion over five years through $255 billion in spending cuts and $241 billion in new taxes.

President Clinton says the measure will keep interest rates down, place the burden of higher taxes on the wealthy and foster an economy that will create at least 8 million jobs nationwide.

Some $1.1 billion of the bill's revenue will come from killing the deduction for club dues primarily for furtherance of a trade or business, effective Jan. 1, 1994.

That doesn't sit well with Dallas-based Club Corporation International, which owns and manages about 230 country and city clubs nationwide.

"We expect it to be a negative impact on the whole country, but on our business as well. It's going to cost jobs," said Randy Williams, executive vice president of ClubCorp affiliate Club Corporation of America.

"A guy who's got a small business that formerly could write off the dues as a deductible item, he's going to say, 'Well, I can't afford that anymore,'" Williams said.

Some Texas businesses are expecting a boon from the bill, which includes incentives for small business investment and also repeals the 10 percent "luxury tax" on the selling price of expensive yachts, planes, furs and jewels that took effect in 1991.

$95 million Diet Coke account is up for grabs

By Stuart Elliott
N.Y. Times News Service

Coca-Cola Co. is unofficially reviewing its estimated $95 million Diet Coke account, entertaining ideas from seven shops including Lintas New York, the agency for the brand since it was introduced in 1982.

Advertising executives, who spoke Monday on condition of anonymity, confirmed a report this week in the trade publication Advertising Age about the unusual creative shoot-out.

The unofficial review comes after months of efforts by Lintas to hold onto the account. The agency is also contending with a formal review called by another large client, the IBM PC Co.

Though not as threatening as a formal review, in which an agency is officially notified it might lose a client's account, the Diet Coke shoot-out is a stinging rebuke to Lintas. Once thought to have a lock on the advertising assignment for the nation's No. 3 soft drink, Lintas has been reeling from a decision Coca-Cola abruptly made in May to pull all Diet Coke television and radio commercials from a campaign the agency introduced amid much fanfare just four months earlier.

As a result, Lintas has suffered a considerable embarrassment: During summer, the soft-drink industry's crucial sales season, its Diet Coke handiwork, which carried the theme "Taste it all" and featured fit-looking men and women in athletic pursuits like climbing cliffs and surfing, has all but disappeared except for a handful of magazine advertisements.

Two top Lintas executives, F. Stone Roberts, president and chief operating officer, and Tony DeGregorio, executive vice president and chief creative officer, were in Atlanta Monday to meet with Coca-Cola officials. The pair, along with other leading Lintas executives like Tony Miller, chairman and chief executive, have labored mightily to produce a campaign to replace the one Coca-Cola withdrew.

The agency Monday ended a lengthy search for a creative executive to direct the Diet Coke account by hiring Rodd Martin, who is 34, as an executive vice president and group creative director. He accompanied Roberts and DeGregorio to Atlanta.

Martin, an Australian, has worked in New York at two small, creatively focused shops, Mojo New York and Martin Davis Omon & Partners. Accounts Martin has worked on include corporate campaigns for Toyota Motor and the Reader's Digest Association.

Sega USA gambles Las Vegas amusement center will be virtual winner

(NYT) — In the unreal light of Las Vegas, Sega USA hopes to win big with a new form of illusion.

The Redwood City, Calif.-based company is teaming up with Circus Circus Inc. to create a lavish amusement center in the gambling city that will allow visitors to control simulated spaceships, jets and race cars.

Called VirtuaLand, a 20,000-square-foot center rests in a pyramid-shaped resort called Luxor Las Vegas, and is scheduled to open on Oct. 15. The casino-hotel-complex, in what may be the ultimate bluring of time and space, will also boast the world's largest atrium and a full-size replica of King Tut's tomb.

A centerpiece of VirtuaLand is the AS1, an enclosed mini-theater that seats eight players and moves in synch with space adventures unfolding on a large video screen. In a nod to commercial excess, the host and flight commander is an electronic version of Michael Jackson.

Other key attractions include R360, an air combat simulator that swivels the player 360 degrees for gut-wrenching dogfights, and an expanded version of Sega's Virtua car racing game that lets eight players compete in the same race.

"It's a total environmental experience," said Tom Petit, president of Sega USA.

The company, the U.S. arm of Japan's Sega Enterprises, is mainly known in this country for arcade games and home video-game machines and software. Though Sega has long operated video arcades in Asia, it sold off a business operating video-game centers in U.S. malls three years ago.

Sega was inspired to return to the market by new technologies that could really draw people to a location, Petit said. Key factors include the ability of a game machine to move in tandem with video action, and game formats that encourage strangers to play together.

The latest games also can be more profitable. Sega expects to charge $2 to $4 per ride for the VirtuaLand games, compared with 25 to $1 for most arcade games.

Lee Isgur, an analyst with Volpe Welty & Co., said the key to success in the field is picking locations, such as Las Vegas, that have heavy traffic much of the day. The other benefit of such ventures, he noted, is that they serve as a test laboratory for future home products.

"Luxor gives them a new venue in which to test their wares," Isgur said.

Besides Luxor, Sega will develop and manage a new arcade within the so-called "adventuredome" at the Grand Slam Canyon entertainment complex behind Circus Circus, and renovate Circus Circus' Midway entertainment center. Petit said his company is also considering entertainment centers in other cities, but would not identify which ones.

DEAR ABBY

Parents try to make visits to grandmother's a family affair

(NOTE: Dear Abby is on a two-week vacation. Following is a selection of some of her favorite past letters from 1977.)

DEAR ABBY: I have a dear mother who lives about an hour's drive away. She's blind, but very cheerful and mentally alert. I phone her every day. She lives with a housekeeper and loves to have company.

Van Buren

When she had her sight, she couldn't do enough for my children. She sewed for them, bought them gifts and always made sure there were goodies in her house. Now the children are teen-agers, and I have to beg them to visit their grandmother because it is so "boring" there; there's nothing to do there, etc.

My husband and I visit as often as possible. We realize that our kids are involved with friends and activities, so we don't expect them to accompany us on every visit, but is it too much to expect them to visit her once a month?

They read your column daily, Abby. I can bet my bottom dollar that you'll agree with me, but if the kids hear it from Dear Abby, maybe they'll realize that Mom and Dad are right. — ASKING

DEAR ASKING: Your children are old enough to realize that it's a mark of maturity to do things (without whining) that aren't particularly fascinating but are well worth the effort because of the pleasure it gives others. Visiting grandparents falls into that category.

A suggestion for youngsters who resist visiting elderly relatives because it's "boring": Interview the old folks. Ask questions about relatives who preceded you, and how things were back in the "olden days." You'll learn some interesting facts, and you'll find that those visits will be rewarding to both you and the old folks.

DEAR ABBY: We are just ordinary people. My husband has a 9-to-5 job and I am a homemaker. We have been married for 10 years, and in all that time we have never gone anywhere without taking our children. (We have three.) I have never had one night away from home except those few when I went to the hospital to have another baby.

We have never hired a sitter. (Never needed one.) My husband said the children grow up so fast we should enjoy every moment we can with them. I love my children, Abby, but don't you think I deserve a night out without the children just once a year? — STALE MATE

DEAR MATE: Your husband forgets that you "enjoy" your children all day, every day, when he is at work. Remind him. You not only "deserve" an occasional night out, you NEED one.

DEAR ABBY: A male co-worker of mine has a habit of calling all his women clients "dear."

I told him that I thought he was being presumptuous, and I was sure that some women found it offensive.

He insists that ALL women feel complimented to be called "dear" — even by a stranger. Do they? — WOMAN REALTOR

DEAR REALTOR: No one can speak for ALL women, but in my opinion, "dear" has no place in a business conversation. And that goes for "honey," too.

AT WIT'S END

Women's goodbyes are fond farewells

I concede there are some social differences between men and women. Men simply do not know how to say goodbye properly.

A classic example of their behavior is my Uncle Kenneth. He and my aunt used to come to the house to visit, and finally I would say to her, "I think Uncle Kenneth is ready to go home."

Bombeck

"How can you tell?" she asked.

"He's in the car, the motor is turning over, and your car is slowly backing out of the driveway."

That was my aunt's final call to hug me and race for the door.

A woman, on the other hand, feels a need for closure. As she stands at the door, she will tell you what a good time she had and how you should get together more often. She will make plans to call next week and proceed to give you her entire schedule away from the house. She will ask if you have her number at work and wait while you get a pencil and pad to write it down.

As you rummage through your handbag you come across the latest picture of Mildred's baby. Then you trash Mildred for five minutes. She says, "I've got to get going" a minimum of five times. You say, "You really do look wonderful" at least four times. You hug at least twice before she says, "I really do have to go. You've got my number?"

Women's goodbyes never stop at the door. They walk you to the car, hang onto the door for another 10 minutes, and run alongside the vehicle down the street like a Secret Service agent.

The telephone reflects the biggest difference. Men will spend a maximum of 15 seconds to set up a golf game. A woman lining up a fourth for bridge will spend a minimum of 47 minutes on the phone, only to hang up and say, "She can't do it. I have to call Phyllis."

Women don't even hurry through their death scenes. In "Wuthering Heights," when Laurence Olivier lugged Merle Oberon to the window for a last look at the moors, she said goodbye for 20 minutes. Some marriages don't last that long.

Are there exceptions? Of course there are. Johnny Carson took five weeks to say goodbye to NBC. We keep saying goodbye to Bob Hope, but he doesn't go anywhere. But generally when a man uses the remote control to zap the program you've been watching and turns off the lights around you, he's saying good night.

America's sea faces new threat from flood

By Bill Kaczor
Associated Press writer

PENSACOLA, Fla. — Environmental officials hope enthusiasm generated by the just-ended Year of the Gulf of Mexico will continue as "America's Sea" faces yet another threat from flooding along the upper Mississippi River.

Scientists are predicting that a "dead zone" in the gulf off the Louisiana and Texas coasts may double in size to 6,000 square miles because of the flooding, said William Whitson, chief of operations for the federal Gulf of Mexico Program.

"It's natural to be concerned, as we all are, with the human impact and the tragedy of the flood on . . . daily lives," Whitson said from the program's office at the Stennis Space Center near Bay St. Louis, Miss. "But the environmental story is the gulf is an end point. This is where it all ends up."

The Mississippi's impact was one of the focal points of the Environmental Protection Agency-sponsored Year of the Gulf that officially ended in July.

Vice President Al Gore joined more than 1,200 students from Louisiana to Minnesota to test the Mississippi and feeder rivers May 12. The students wrote letters to government officials, project sponsors and newspaper editors to tell them what they learned.

"The test showed us what we already realized," Whitson said. "There are nutrients coming down the Mississippi River system and they are having an effect on the gulf. To what extent, it's going to take time to bear that out."

The nutrients — from sources that include fertilizers washing off farms and effluent from sewage systems — promote algae blooms that take so much oxygen from the water in the dead zone that fish cannot live there.

The size of the dead zone fluctuates, depending on weather conditions and the amount of water flowing into the gulf from the Mississippi.

The goals of Year of the Gulf included making people aware that what happens upstream has an impact, and realizing the gulf's importance to the nation as a provider of seafood, recreation, commerce and natural resources.

The observance was designed to generate public support that will be necessary to obtain money and pass new laws to clean and protect the gulf.

"Now with the flooding this is even more significant to show again the importance of the gulf," said Doug Lipka, acting director of the Gulf of Mexico Program.

The EPA-sponsored program has two events scheduled next month to keep the focus on the gulf.

A "Take Pride Gulfwide" beach cleanup has been scheduled in the gulf states — Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas — for Sept. 18.

The five states also will launch a Boater's Pledge program that will ask boaters to promise they will not dump trash in the water.

It is being sponsored by Sea Grant and Sea World in Orlando, where a ceremony is tentatively set for Sept. 23.

Those events are separate from the Year of the Gulf effort, which also has some unfinished business: a radio quiz contest and speakers' packages that are expected to be completed by October.

The Year of the Gulf celebration got off to a late start — six months — and its $380,000 in EPA grant money and $60,000 in unsolicited corporate contributions was well under the multimillion-dollar program originally envisioned.

"That turned out to be a blessing in disguise," said Honey Rand of Mote Marine Laboratory in Sarasota, which ran the promotional campaign under contract with the EPA. She said the shortage of dollars resulted in a grassroots, instead of top-down effort.

"We had to implement some pretty innovative communications strategies," she said. "The people owned the program."

Seafood festivals and other celebrations along the Gulf Coast adopted the Year of the Gulf theme. A pair of environmental troubadours toured schools and sang the gulf's praises to 17,000 youngsters. The gulf program distributed 100,000 Year of the Gulf posters, 33,000 fact packs and 1.8 million bookmarks.

State and federal officials signed an agreement to protect and restore "America's Sea" at a three-day symposium at Tarpon Springs last December.

"I think probably the main accomplishment of the Year of the Gulf was . . . to publicize there was a program," said Leigh Pegues, who heads the Alabama Department of Environmental Management and is co-chair of the gulf program's Policy Review Board.

"I think you can almost say everybody on the gulf now is an environmentalist."

Some Indians criticize centennial celebration

By Bill Johnson
Associated Press writer

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — On a sizzling September day in 1893, a volley of gunshots sent more than 100,000 people surging across imaginary lines in the largest scramble for free land the world had ever seen.

They came on foot and horseback, in wagons, on bicycles and by train, hoping to stake a homestead in the fabled Cherokee Strip, 7 million acres that were home to buffalo and Indians.

Oklahoma's buffalo are mostly gone now, except for a small herd in a government refuge. But Indians remain (the last census showed Oklahoma with the largest Indian population of any state) and many are outspoken in their criticism of the current celebration commemorating the land run.

"To us, it's analogous to the Germans celebrating the Holocaust," says Sherman Bold Warrior, administrative assistant to Chairman Genevieve Pollak of the Ponca tribe. "It amounts to the same thing. In the western movement of the dominant culture, 95 percent of the native population was wiped out."

"It was devastating to the native people in Oklahoma," says Wilma Mankiller, chief of the Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma. "That is being totally overlooked. I don't think that ever occurs to people because they don't think of Oklahoma as being Indian territory where many different native peoples lived before statehood."

Dr. John Ogle, an Enid physician and president of the Cherokee Strip Centennial Foundation, says the point of the centennial was to mark history, not celebrate.

"History is history," Ogle says. "We can't change it. We need to make sure it is told as accurately as it can be, and now we need to go on and deal with issues today that would help all our citizens."

Chief Charley Dawes of the Ottawa tribe agrees on that point.

"It's a historic event," Dawes says. "Like any centennial, it should be noted."

But Dawes also joined other Indians in a protest of a life-size statue for Ponca City that depicted a man who has just leaped from his horse squatting down as he drives a claim state into the ground.

The original title was, "This Land is Mine." After protests by the Poncas, Ottawas and Cherokees, it was changed to "Holding the Claim."

By 1893, members of the Cherokee tribe had been removed from their homeland in the southeastern United States, some voluntarily in 1828, others by force over the Trail of Tears in 1838, and resettled in what is now northeastern Oklahoma.

The 226-mile-wide Cherokee Strip, technically the Cherokee Outlet, had been set aside by the federal government to give the Cherokees a way to get to the buffalo-rich plains.

In 1866, the federal government asked the Cherokees to sell portions of the strip to "friendly" Indians. By the time of the land run 27 years later, the fourth of five such events that lured settlers to Indian Territory, the strip was home to the Osage, Pawnee, Kaw, Ponca, Tonkawa, Otoe and Missouria tribes.

At noon Sept. 16, 1893, the sound of cavalry guns opened the strip to homesteaders. Trains packed so full that men rode on rooftops and hung from the sides, puffed southward from Kansas. To keep it fair, the trains could move only at 5 mph, as fast as a horse could run.

By evening, tent cities had sprouted on the plain and the 40,000 to 50,000 lucky participants were lined up at nine land offices to register their claims.

Ogle, whose grandfather participated in the run, expressed frustration over three years of fruitless attempts to draw Indians into plans for the centennial.

"We had some really neat things we thought would be interesting to do to tell the Native American story," he says. "But there was virtually no communication with them."

The planners eventually contacted Dr. Gerald Walker, president of Oklahoma City University, "and through him we got two Native American teachers who helped us outline the educational plans for the centennial," Ogle says.

Ogle emphasizes that two years of planning and 90 percent of foundation funds went into developing the educational aspects of the event, which began in April, and only five months of planning and no money into the celebration.

Next year, he said, a statue of an Indian will be dedicated at Enid; money raised through sales of small bronze replicas will go toward scholarships for Indians.

"They don't want to hear that," Ogle says of the Indian protesters. "All they hear is the bad things."

"We are not just some disgruntled people who want to create problems," counters Ms. Mankiller. "We have genuine concerns about how our history is portrayed, whether there will be accurate reporting of how the land run impacted the tribes."

The Cherokee leader made note of the United Nations' proclamation making 1993 "the year of indigenous people."

"What did we do in the United States?" she asked. "We issue a postage stamp commemorating the land run."

WHO: Schools need to revamp curriculums

By Lawrence K. Altman
N.Y. Times News Service

Medical schools around the world need to revamp their curriculums to deal with AIDS and many other chronic incurable diseases, an official of the World Health Organization said last week.

Doctors "need to consider their patients as knowledgeable allies, not as passive recipients of care, and involve them fully in the entire care process, including decision-making about treatment," said the official, Dr. Michael H. Merson, who heads the organization's global AIDS program.

"Doctors need to learn how to live with AIDS, just like their patients," he told a meeting in Edinburgh of the World Federation for Medical Education.

In calling for a fresh look at medical education, Merson said doctors of the future would need greatly improved communication skills, which he said had been a sorely neglected area of the medical school curriculum. He said medical students needed more grounding in human sexuality, more training in public health and an increased appreciation of the social environment of the diseases they treat. Merson also said there was a need for improved understanding of the interplay between health and human rights.

People infected with HIV, the virus that causes AIDS, often have no symptoms for 10 or more years before developing medical problems from AIDS. Even then, some AIDS patients survive for more than five years. Those infected "have no way of knowing how long they have to live or when the next illness will strike," Merson said. "The most important challenge is to insure that doctors are just as comfortable giving care as they are giving a cure."

'Doctors need to learn how to live with AIDS, just like their patients.'
— Dr. Michael H. Merson

In an interview, Merson said his views extended to other chronic illnesses like arthritis, diabetes and cancer. He called on doctors to improve the use of ambulatory care and hospices to spare patients unnecessary hospital stays. He said his comments were directed at medical schools in the United States, Europe and developing countries.

Dr. Stuart Bondurant, a spokesman for the Association of American Medical Colleges in Washington, said that he agreed with Merson's points and that the skills needed for dealing with AIDS were generally those needed for other chronic ailments.

Medical schools in this country "have been working diligently on the principles that Merson espoused for some time" and "with varying success," said Bondurant, who is the dean of the medical school at the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill. But he added, "Our capacity to teach the kinds of things Merson is advocating is more limited than our ability to teach the science of medicine."

More than 200,000 medical doctors have graduated from American schools since 1981, when AIDS was first recognized, said the Association of American Medical Colleges.

Although information about AIDS has been incorporated into medical school curriculums since 1981, the emphasis on the viral infection is believed to vary among medical schools. All medical schools in the United States teach certain basics, but their curriculums "differ substantially," Bondurant said.

More than 250,000 AIDS cases have been reported in the United States, and federal health officials estimate that about 750,000 other Americans are infected with HIV. The World Health Organization estimates that 13 million people are infected with HIV and that the total is expected to reach 40 million by 2000.

Curriculums in medical schools around the world have importance not only for patients in foreign countries but also for those in the United States. About 20 percent of the 653,000 medical doctors in the United States graduated from foreign medical schools, the American Medical Association said. But very few foreign medical school graduates begin practicing in this country without first training as residents in American hospitals. Currently, the AMA said, about 20 percent of the 89,566 young doctors now in training as specialists in American hospitals graduated from foreign medical schools.

Specialists say the challenges of AIDS are increasingly tied to other afflictions. For example, many specialists say that doctors need to pay more attention to infections that only a few years ago were said by most medical educators and health officials to be a thing of the past.

In dealing with infections, Merson said, doctors need to take a more vigorous approach in preventing and treating sexually transmitted diseases. "Many people hesitate to seek such care for a sexually transmitted disease because they know they will be made to feel unwelcome, judged immoral or treated with outright hostility," he said.

Thousands of boatyard workers return to docks

By Jon Nordheimer
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW GRETNA, N.J. — Judy Ott spends more time aboard million-dollar yachts than most millionaire playboys and crowned heads of Europe.

Yet the only part of the world she travels is between her South Jersey home and Viking Yacht Co.'s manufacturing sheds on the banks of the Bass River here, where she spends her days applying the finishing touches to wooden stateroom panels in luxury vessels taking shape on the plant's twin, 1,000-foot-long assembly lines.

Ms. Ott is one of thousands of boatyard workers in the metropolitan New York region trickling back to jobs they lost two years ago after Congress passed a 10 percent luxury tax on boats with a price tag of more than $110,000. Rehirings at Viking began earlier this year in anticipation of the repeal of the luxury tax, an event that took place last week in the new budget package that squeezed through Congress.

The tax had been aimed at the small number of Americans rich enough to afford the kind of boats Ms. Ott helps assemble in an area where boat building offers the only year-round jobs outside of those available at the Atlantic City casinos, about 15 miles south.

"You had to be an ignoramus to believe the luxury tax was only going to soak the rich," Ms. Ott said as she brushed a sealer on the door of a passageway aboard a 50-foot fat-beamed boat nearing completion after three months of fabrication. "The only people it hurt was working people like myself," she said, slapping the sealer against the wood paneling in short, angry strokes.

A single parent with three children, Ms. Ott survived on unemployment benefits of $287 a week for the nearly two years she was without a job. At the same time, her former husband could not pay child support, she said, because the recession killed the small business he ran.

The worst part was worrying about getting sick without medical benefits. Her coverage ended with her furlough in 1991 and did not resume, she said, until she was called back to work last month.

Robert T. Healey, the silver-haired dynamo who with his brother, William, started Viking Yacht in 1959, said, "All these people suffered needlessly because the politicians in Washington needed a symbol in 1990 to sell the American people a new tax increase." The Healeys built Viking into one of the top luxury boat manufacturers in the world.

"It's a saying in the industry that big companies make little boats, and little companies make big boats," Healey, 64, said with a smile. A lawyer turned businessman, he serves as chairman of the board of Viking, a family-owned enterprise.

In 1990, the year before the tax was levied, Viking built nearly 200 motor yachts and luxury sports fishing vessels and grossed about $100 million in sales. Its plants in New Gretna and St. Petersburg, Fla., employed 1,451 workers. The next year, with sales plummeting and inventory backing up, the Healey brothers shut the Florida plant, eliminating 700 jobs.

By the end of 1991, the work force at the 400,000-square-foot New Gretna plant was reduced to 60, kept going a small number of orders from foreign buyers unaffected by the tax and Americans who swung a deal that had Viking, in effect, discounting the boats by 10 percent. By the end of 1992, Viking had sold only 45 boats.

Officials rescue kidnapped business executive from pit

NEW YORK (AP) — Police rescued a business executive Monday from a rail-yard pit where he had been buried for almost two weeks by kidnappers who extorted a $3 million ransom from his family.

Two people were arrested, one of them an employee of the victim, police said, and at least half the ransom was recovered.

Television news footage showed rescuers pulling Harvey Weinstein, filthy and exhausted, from the 14-foot deep pit in a railroad yard in the city's borough of Manhattan.

"It is a story that makes the movies sound tame," Police Commissioner Raymond Kelly told reporters.

He said Weinstein's first words to his rescuers were: "Thank God you're here, and I'd like to have a cigarette."

Weinstein, who appeared shaken but relieved, smiled broadly after the rescue. He was taken to Mount Sinai Hospital for treatment.

The two men who were arrested were identified as Fermin Rodriguez and Francisco Antonio Rodriguez.

Kelly said the men were related but didn't say how. He said Fermin Rodriguez was a sewing-machine operator at Lord West Formalwear, a tuxedo company where Weinstein was chief executive officer.

Kelly said Weinstein was last seen on Aug. 4 at a diner where he stopped each morning for breakfast.

Sometime after that, Weinstein's kidnappers demanded $3 million and sent his family a tape of Weinstein's voice urging them to pay, the commissioner said.

Twice during the next 11 days the family was directed to deliver the money to various locations, Kelly said, but the exchange was never completed.

Then, on Sunday night, the kidnappers demanded that the cash be dropped off.

Tommy Melton, one of the professional window tinters at Midwest Auto Glass puts the finishing touches to a truck's windows.

Midwest Auto Glass: Keeping you cool this summer

The sun's ultraviolet rays are known to cause all sorts of problems for the human body. Skin cancer and premature aging of the skin are both common afflictions of those who spend a lot of time exposed to the sun.

Unfortunately, ultraviolet rays are also very bad for your car or truck and whilst there is little one can do about the exterior of the vehicle it is possible to protect the interior.

Excessive exposure to ultraviolet light has a number of different effects: leather and vinyl upholstery can fade and crack, and expensive stereo and radio equipment can be permanently damaged both of which are inconvenient and expensive.

The solution is very simple, have the windows of your car or truck tinted at Midwest Auto Glass.

Not only will the tinting block out about 99% of the damaging ultraviolet rays, but it will also help to keep your vehicle cool by reducing the green house effect that takes place and which can raise the temperature inside the vehicle to over 150°.

This alleviates the problem and inconvenience of getting into a car that has been sitting out in the West Texas sun all day and to very uncomfortably hot.

The best safeguard against ultraviolet radiation is Sun-Gard window tinting from Midwest Auto Glass. With a professionally installed window tint, the interior of cars remains like new, and the temperature remains bearable, creating a more comfortable environment.

The professional installers at Midwest Auto Glass are very busy at the moment because the summer months always bring on a rush as the weather gets hotter and steering wheels become unbearable and more and more people take advantage of the low prices and expert service that Midwest Auto glass offers.

Many of the local car dealerships rely on Midwest Auto Glass to do their window tinting. Rogers Ford, Berg Motor Co., Friendly Pontiac and Jack Sherman Chevrolet to name but a few are all long term clients who trust the quality of service and precision of Midwest Auto Glass' team of highly trained professionals.

Window tinting doesn't just work well for cars and trucks, it also works very well in homes and businesses. It is possible to realize tremendous savings in utility bills by reducing the need for expensive cooling systems.

For more information about Midwest Auto Glass and its range of window tints, warranties and services call Kent Sloan or Sandy Olgin at 682-0303 or stop by at their convenient Midland location at 901 West Washington and help keep you and your vehicle cool.

A breakthrough against break-ins

As the crime rate soars and the economy falls, more and more people are looking for an affordable and secure security system to help protect their families, homes and possessions

Fortunately, AT&T's Bell Laboratories have developed a new type of security system that surpasses other systems with its unique level of protection.

There are many different levels and features which can be built in to the system, (each system is tailored to the customers particular requirements) but the heart of the each system is the Central Controller.

This is the systems nerve center; it sends and receives signals from all of the protected areas, constantly monitoring them for any sign of a disturbance.

In the event of an alarm being triggered it can then take a number of programmed actions such as dialing a preprogrammed number, sounding sirens or alerting a central monitoring station which is manned 24-hours a day and linked to the emergency services.

In short, the AT&T system offers blanket coverage. It can be adapted to provide not only protection from intruders but also using connected smoke alarms and panic buttons, from fire, medical and environmental emergencies.

Crime Alert Incorporated is a family owned company based in Texas which specializes in these unique AT&T systems. Owned by Kathy and Charles Azzopardi who set the company up in the late 1980's in order to market AT&T's new product it has recently opened a branch office at 4500 W Illinois in Midland.

There are many special features to the AT&T 8000 and 8300 home security systems; the main features are that they operate using radio signals on a special frequency and they can be monitored around the clock by trained personnel.

This means that they are very easy to install and update because there is no wiring to route through the house and because they are constantly monitored there is no risk of them breaking down or being ignored.

Mysterious print on Foster's suicide note raises questions

By David Johnston
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Contradicting the assertions of federal law-enforcement officials who said last week that only a smudged, unreadable palm print had been found on an anguished note left by Vincent W. Foster Jr., government officials now say that a partial but identifiable palm print had been found but had never been investigated.

As a result, the identity of the person who left the print on the note poses yet another question surrounding his brooding words. The note — unsigned and undated — was found in 27 pieces in Foster's briefcase on July 26, six days after his body was discovered in a Virginia park along the Potomac.

And the FBI's decision not to try to identify the print seems to reflect an unusually casual approach for criminal investigators examining an issue related to the death of a top official.

Those investigators have said that their actions were guided by their assumption from the first that Foster, the deputy White House counsel, had taken his own life, a judgment that they made final in supposedly closing the case.

The note, written by Foster at some undetermined time before his death, was discovered by another White House lawyer, Steven Neuwirth, but was not turned over to the U.S. Park Police for nearly 30 hours, until President Clinton and his aides had considered its significance.

The authorities said it had been missed in an initial search of his office by Bernard W. Nussbaum, who, as White House counsel, was Foster's immediate superior.

Questions also have been raised as to why Nussbaum, Foster's boss, searched the office first rather than with or after law enforcement officers.

The palm print is discussed in a forensic report that has not been made public by the FBI, which investigated the White House delay in turning over the note. The FBI report says, "The specimens were examined and one latent palm print of value was developed on one piece of paper." Justice Department officials say they will eventually make the report public after any personal information is excised.

Investigators did not try to match the palm print with those of Foster or other people who might have handled the note because the fingerprint files immediately available to the investigators do not include the palm prints of Foster or any of his close associates at the White House counsel's office.

FBI officials and other investigators have apparently ruled out any such effort now, saying that as far as they are concerned, the case is closed.

While many people are fingerprinted for employment or other identification purposes, palm prints are rarely taken.

Federal law-enforcement agencies, for instance, do not take palm prints unless they are conducting a major criminal investigation. Foster's fingerprints were taken after his death by medical examiners, but not his palm prints.

Carl Stern, a spokesman for the Justice Department, defended the FBI's decision not to obtain palm prints from White House officials. "No one was suspected of wrongdoing," he said, "so what would the purpose have been running around the White House taking everybody's palm prints?"

The FBI inquiry centered on only the narrow issue of whether any White House official had acted improperly by withholding the note, which was found by one of Foster's colleagues on July 26 and turned over to investigators on July 27.

On the basis of the FBI inquiry, the Justice Department concluded that no one at the White House had acted improperly.

At a news conference at the Justice Department last Tuesday, when officials made Foster's note public, Robert Bryant, head of the FBI's Washington field office, and Robert C. Langston, chief of the U.S. Park Police, said the note bore no identifiable prints, only one smudged print.

Maj. Robert H. Hines, a spokesman for the Park Police, later acknowledged that Chief Langston had been in error when he said no discernible prints had been found on the note. He said the chief had not intended to mislead anyone about the matter but had been unfamiliar with some of the details of the investigation.

Some crime-scene experts have expressed surprise that only one latent print was found on a note that had been torn into 27 pieces and tossed into the bottom of a briefcase before it was handled by a number of White House officials who acknowledge touching it.

But other law-enforcement officials said Friday that latent prints did not readily adhere to the porous surface of the type of legal paper on which the note was written.

National search continues for transsexual deadbeat dad

PORT HUENEME, Calif. (AP) — A transsexual who is now living as a woman has made a national list of most-wanted deadbeat dads.

William Henry Reid, now known as Billie Jean Reid, was last seen in Port Hueneme, according to the National Council of State Child Support Enforcement Administrators' list of parents who refuse to pay child support.

Reid, 43, a registered nurse, fathered two children but had a sex change operation in Miami in 1985, said council spokesman Leslie Frye. He was working last year in Port Hueneme, 60 miles west of Los Angeles.

Some Marines support ban that never was

By Robert Reinhold
N.Y. Times News Service

OCEANSIDE, Calif. — High-school sweethearts married when they were both 20, Rick and Lisa Hihath are the quintessential Marine couple: he the trim noncommissioned officer whose duty has shuffled him around the world, she the dutiful wife rearing two daughters and following him when she can, struggling to keep the marriage intact.

"It's stressful," said Sgt. Hihath, now 29 and a logistics expert with the First Marine Division at Camp Pendleton here, who recently returned from Somalia. "Given the amount of time Marines spend away from home, the family has to adjust to dad's being away. And then they have to adjust when he comes home again."

Similar stories can be told throughout the corps, and it was precisely to avoid that sort of disruption in the lives of recruits that the Marine commandant recently issued a new corps policy that would have barred enlistment of married recruits, a startling departure made without the knowledge of civilian superiors.

Once the superiors found out, they quickly scuttled the idea, but the episode underscored the toll that military life takes on families, particularly in the Marines, a kind of international 911 service. And it reopened an age-old question about whether military and family life can co-exist.

High court: Faith healing parents did not kill child

Court, however, says manslaughter conviction could stand against reckless parents.

BOSTON (AP) — The state's highest court has overturned the manslaughter conviction of a Christian Science couple whose son died after they relied on spiritual rather than medical healing.

But the court didn't rule out all prosecutions of parents who rely on spiritual healing. It said they can be found guilty of involuntary manslaughter if they are found to be "wanton and reckless" in their care of a child.

David and Ginger Twitchell were convicted of involuntary manslaughter and sentenced to 10 years' probation in the death of their 2-year-old son, Robyn, who died in 1986 from a bowel obstruction.

In a 6-1 decision, the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court overturned the verdict last week on a narrow point of law. The justices said the Twitchells "reasonably believed" they could rely on spiritual treatment without fear of criminal prosecution because a church publication the father had read suggested as much. That argument should have been presented to the jury, the court said.

During Robyn's five-day illness, the family retained a Christian Science practitioner and consulted with other Christian Science Church officials.

The church, founded in 1879 and based in Boston, teaches that physical disease can be healed by spiritual means alone.

The court left it to prosecutors to decide on a retrial. Assistant Suffolk County District Attorney Robert Gittens said no decision had been made.

Both sides claimed at least some victory.

"The law is now clear: Parents cannot sacrifice the lives of their children in the name of religious freedom," Gittens said.

The Twitchells, who live in Brentwood, N.Y., declined to comment. Their attorney, Stephen Lyons, said he was "absolutely delighted" that the convictions had been overturned.

Between 1980 and 1990, seven Christian Science parents in the United States were prosecuted on charges ranging from murder and manslaughter to neglect. Four were convicted.

New treatment provides hope for infertile men

FAIRFAX, Va. (AP) — A new infertility treatment in which a single sperm is injected into a human egg in the laboratory could help men unable to father children because of low sperm counts, a researcher said last week.

"This is a big breakthrough," said Dr. Joseph Schulman, director of the Genetics and IVF Institute, where a northern Virginia woman conceived twins using the sperm injection method. The 29-year-old woman, who asked that her name be withheld, said the twins are due in March.

She and her 35-year-old husband had been trying infertility treatments for more than three years before sperm injection worked on the first try.

Schulman said his institute used the method in one other pregnancy that ended in miscarriage and a third that is in an extremely early stage.

Dr. Andrew C. Van Steirteghem of the Brussels Free University in Belgium developed the method, which is a variation on in-vitro fertilization procedures devised 15 years ago.

Under in-vitro fertilization, sperm is mixed with eggs in a petri dish. It has primarily helped women whose fallopian tubes were blocked, preventing sperm from reaching a woman's eggs.

Under the new technique, a single sperm is injected into a human egg in a petri dish. Steirteghem told The New York Times that he has a 65 percent fertilization rate from the procedure.

So far, 300 pregnancies have been produced through sperm injection and 100 babies have been born. Most of the rest are continuing pregnancies.

D-FY-IT
MIDLAND

DRUG FREE YOUTH IN TEXAS

I. PURPOSE

1. To provide high school students with a voluntary program that rewards them for being drug free, and to influence abusers to reject the use of drugs and alcohol through positive peer support.
2. The primary purpose of D-FY-IT is to rid students of drug abuse. Testing of drugs or narcotics in the students system is in no way an investigative tool of law enforcement. Positive results will not result in criminal prosecution. The ultimate goal of this program is to abolish drug abuse, not prosecution.

II. GOALS

1. To promote drug/alcohol-free students in Midland County.
2. To educate the student community of the dangers of drug/alcohol abuse and provide more positive alternatives.
3. To improve communications between youth, law enforcement, and the community.
4. To enhance the leadership capabilities of students.

WHAT IS D-FY-IT?

D-FY-IT (Drug Free Youth In Texas) is a voluntary drug testing program that rewards students for being "drug free". For students to join the program they must voluntarily agree to a urinalysis test, and then subject themselves to retesting whenever their names are randomly selected. The urinalysis detects amphetamines, cocaine and marijuana. All testing is confidential, and test results are not reported to the police. A student who has a positive drug test is given confidential counseling by certified counselors who work with the program. This is done to keep that student in the program through counseling and further drug testing. Parents are Not notified when a student tests positive.

Once a student tests "clean", he/she receives a D-FY-IT identification card that entitles them to discounts from local businesses and admission to various D-FY-IT sponsored events such as dances and concerts. At this time, over 60 businesses in Midland are giving discounts to D-FY-IT members. The cards can also be used in surrounding towns that have the D-FY-IT program.

The D-FY-IT program in Midland County started in December, 1991 and currently has over 2,400 students in the program. At the present time there are four high schools participating; Greenwood, Midland Christian, Midland High and Lee High. There are currently over 9,000 students in the Permian Basin participating in the D-FY-IT program which includes the cities of Big Spring, San Angelo, Midland, Odessa, Monahans, Pecos, Stanton, Grady, Andrews, Coahoma and Seminole.

"What I like best about D-FY-IT is that the program doesn't punish bad behavior,--it rewards good behavior, and that's bound to have better results with any of us. What's more, D-FY-IT depends on the most powerful incentive of all--peer pressure.
