Accident victim was looking for a home

By PATRICK DRISCOLL
Staff Writer

Hiram Duran Garcia, 19, was a walkaway from the state mental health hospital looking for work and a home before falling underneath a moving train Saturday, severing him at the pelvis.

The day before, the six-foot, light complexioned, dark haired man had cried while asking for help as a sheriff deputy carted him off to the state hospital. Among last words, as he lay without legs at the railroad tracks about three-quarters of a mile west of Moss Creek Road, were also cries for help, according to an eye witness. He later died at Scenic Mountain Medical Center.

"He said, 'Help me, help me. I don't want to go,'" Lydia Arguello recalled of Garcia's deportment to the hospital. When told he would be helped, Arguello said, "he kept asking, 'Where? where? Just like a little child.'"

Discharged from the state hospital after walking away for a third time in two days, he walked up to two miles to the same house he kept coming back too, the Arguellos home. The family would see him walking down the middle of North FM 700, watching clouds, teetering and even walking backwards. They tried to help, feeding him, calling the hospital and sheriff's office and trying to reach relatives.

"He was real weak ... you could tell something was wrong with him," said Johnny Arguello III.

The family never did find out where Garcia's parents were. A message left with the local funeral home has so far gone unanswered.

"He said he didn't remember and he started crying," Arguello said.

"He said, 'I like this place, I'd like to stay here,'" Lydia said.

A Texas Identification card lists Texas City as Garcia's home. Garcia, who spoke a Texas dialect of Spanish, carried an Arizona driver's license and told the Arguellos he worked at a car wash in Phoenix before getting fire after two months. He also had hoed cotton and picked onions at different locations.

The Arguellos were at a loss Friday afternoon when the sheriff's office told them that state officials assured them Garcia wasn't a danger and that there was nothing officials could do. Deputy Tony Chavez told the Big Spring Herald that the hospital had discharged Garcia.

"That's not what we meant. We wanted someone to take care of him," Lydia said. "He's a threat to himself, he's going to get killed, that's what we kept telling the sheriff's department."

Garcia stayed the night at the Arguellos home. When the family couldn't get him to tell where relatives live, Juan Arguello Jr. did what he thought was the next best thing, give him a ride to Interstate 20 where he could hitch a ride to Houston or Mexico, some of the places he talked about going to. Arguello dropped him off at Town & Country in Coahoma, tried to give him money but he Lydia Arguello, left, and her son Johnnie III, tried to help a walkaway patient from the mental health hospital in the days before he died in a train accident. The Arguellos sit at their home on North FM 700 where the patient, Hiram Garcia, ended up three times in two days.

Cool front touches off thundershowers

By GARY SHANKS
Staff Writer

A descending cool front, meeting abundant moisture sweeping up from the Gulf of Mexico, touched off rains and thundershowers across the Howard County area through the night.

More than an inch of rain saturated the Big Spring area, creating precipitation and thundershowers along a wide band extending across the Permian Basin.

See related story - 2

Throughout today and this evening, more rain is to be expected, according to National Weather Service Officials. The increased levels of moisture should ensure more storms, but thundershowers should not be terribly severe except to the southeast of Howard County.

The official rain monitor for the Big Spring area is the U.S. Department of Agriculture Research Station on the north service road of Interstate 20.

Rainfall at the Research Station was measured at 1.77 inches of rain. This brings the year's total rainfall to 18.73 inches of precipitation.

Rainfall amounts were measured at 1.6 inches in the east-central region of Big Spring on Purdue.

Toward the southern part of the city, Boyce Hale measured about 1.04 inches of rainfall for the evening.

The rain was of no value to local cotton farmers, according to Howard County Extension Agent Don Richardson. "It sure stopped the cotton harvest," he said of the rains.

"This shouldn't have any long-term devastating effects," Richardson said of the cotton harvest. "Of course this is certainly going to hurt some — we going to lose some of our cotton."

The exceedingly dry summer, coupled with boll weevil infestations has led to some cotton being plowed under, with no harvesting.

By contrast, some farmers near the Knott area may produce as much as two bales of cotton for each acre of land — a very good yield, Richardson explained.

Businesses planning for reform's effects

Editor's Note: This is the first in a seven-part series exploring the effect President Bill Clinton's proposed health care reform package will have on local residents if it is passed in its original form.

By GARY SHANKS
Staff Writer

The effects of the Clinton Health Care Reform Plan is a topic of discussion among larger businesses, having more than 50 or more than 5,000 employees for the largest of companies.

Although great changes may be made to the plan when and if it is passed through Congress, businesses are planning now. "It's been discussed, but not at our level," said Big Spring Fina Refinery executive Paul Hinton.

Fina officials in Dallas will be making final decisions on how to best prepare for the changes in health care.

In midsize companies, those with more than 50 employees but less than 5,000, the employer would pay 80 percent of health care insurance costs while the employee would pay 20 percent. These and larger companies would not be eligible for federal assistance with medical care costs as would businesses with less than 50 employees, according to the Clinton plan.

Corporations with more than 5,000 employees also will be ineligible for federal assistance. These larger corporations, however, can set up their own private health alliances, offering the same three basic plans as the government.

These also would be on a 80-percent employer paid, 20-percent employee paid system.

Health care alliances are at the very heart of the Clinton plan. Paying extra for the ability to choose a doctor also is a major part of the Clinton plan. This is because of the cost effectiveness of so-called health maintenance organizations (HMO), where most or all of an alliance's medical care is under one roof.

In return for losing the privilege of choosing one's own doctor, total costs to the patient for the doctor visit is reduced to perhaps $10 or $15, according to figures from the Oct. 4 issue of Newsweek.

Other possible plans, besides the HMO, are fee-for-service plans — the most expensive to the patient, and the combination plan.

The fee-for-service plan allows the choice of any doctor in any office. There is an additional $400 deductible along with the 20 percent of overall costs with a cap on total out-of-pocket expenses of $3,000.

The combination plan is similar to the HMO in many respects, but allows the patient to choose his own doctor, but pays for the privilege.

Although this complicated health-care reform package is subject to change by both houses of Congress, some of the basic tenets are of importance to the health-care provider and consumer.

Between 1965 and 1991, health care spending rose from 5.9 percent to 13.2 percent of the U.S. Gross Domestic Product, according to figures from the U.S. Department of Health Education and Welfare.

Although 80 percent of Americans are satisfied with their insurance, according to national polls, more than 30 million Americans have no health-care insurance at all.

In recent national polls, however, the Clinton plan is necessary and will be good for the country, according to 55 percent of respondents to a Newsweek poll in late September.

As insurance for small businesses now stand, that is, buying insurance from one of the various U.S. private providers, the cost for insuring a single healthy employee for 80 percent of total coverage would be near $100 a month, or $1,200 a year per employee, according to local insurance agencies.

This, of course, would be much more to insure a spouse and/or family along with the employee.

Because of the economics of scale, larger businesses have always been able to insure employees for less money per employee.

Smaller insurance premiums could be garnered if the employee were insured on a 50-50 insurance plan, where the employee and employer each pay half the cost of insurance. These options are not granted to large businesses under the Clinton plan, however.

Proposition 9 limits tax sale property redemption

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the ninth of a daily 15-part series looking at the pros and cons of 16 proposed constitutional amendments.

By PATRICK DRISCOLL
Staff Writer

Proposition 9 on the Nov. 2 ballot would limit the right to redeem property sold at a tax sale to six months.

Exempted would be homesteads and agricultural land, for which the redemption period would remain two years but from the date a tax suit is filed instead of a tax sale. It would take effect Jan. 1.

"That'd be good," said City Manager Lanny Lambert, who's working on a city program to foreclose on some 600 vacated properties to get them back on tax rolls. "That gives you greater value."

"Getting dead property back on the tax rolls quicker is good government," said State Rep. David Counts of Knox City.

Shorter redemption periods would encourage investors not wanting to wait two years to make property improvements, according to the House Research Organization. "It would encourage redevelopment of abandoned property, stimulating economic growth and a health tax base."

Opponents, according to the research report, say it would deprive taxpayers of modest means of their property.

"There are numerous cases of persons who own a rent house or an undeveloped lot who fall behind on their property taxes because of personal financial difficulties or an economic downturn," it states. "A person might inherit property in a distant area and not receive notification until long after the property had been sold for taxes."

Storms rip through coast, killing two

The Associated Press

Severe storms that roared across the state for a second straight night have left two people dead and a trail of destruction.

Rains County officials said that a man was killed Monday night in Emory, about 60 miles east of Dallas, when a tornado blasted apart his trailer home.

Officials were still trying to identify the man.

Fire department officials also reported that a barn was destroyed, and roofs were ripped off several residences and businesses.

A student from South Houston High School drowned while on a school field trip to Galveston Island. Other students said he was caught in a strong undertow that apparently was caused by strong winds.

Luis E. Ayala, 16, could not swim and was probably standing on a sand bar when he was caught by the current, officials said.

"With the lateral currents and the troughs and the undertow, it makes for difficult conditions," said Sgt. Chuck Walsh, assistant director of the beach patrol division of the Galveston County Sheriff's Department.

Waylon Collins, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Fort Worth, attributed widespread thunderstorm activity across North Texas to the combination of a stationary front, low level winds, moisture and an unstable atmosphere.

At least 5 inches of rain had fallen in parts of Delta, Lamar and Red River counties in far northeast Texas, Collins said.

The front was expected to move south today and Wednesday, producing storms across South Texas. But inclement weather was expected to continue through Wednesday in North Texas as well, he said.

Television station KETK in Jacksonville, Texas, said the Rains County sheriff's department reported scattered damage about 10 miles north-east of Alba Monday night.

Some of the damage included a boat dealership on Lake Fork, two mobile homes, an outbuilding and the historic Caney Creek Schoolhouse, the station said.

A tornado was reported near Quitman, on the east side of Lake Fork.

No injuries were reported.

Officials in Dallas and Tarrant counties reported heavy flooding; some motorists abandoned their cars to seek refuge from the rising waters.

Police in Arlington rescued an elderly couple when floodwaters forced them from their home.

Heavy storms in Mesquite caused damage at Hudson Airport, where winds ripped off hangar doors and loosed chains that had secured a single-engine plane. Some damage was reported to the plane's wings.

Hudson Airport manager Harry Silbey said he believed a small tornado may have caused the damage at the airport.

"The wind was at least 80 mph, and there was a narrow path of damaged trees in some nearby woods," he said.

It was the second night of storm damage in Texas.

On Monday morning, San Angelo Lakeview High School principal Jim Hundley found his campus in disarray, ripped up by a tornado spawned by overnight storms.

Two metal pit covers and a wooden building from the school's track and field facility were blown across campus.

Hundley described the damage as moderate and estimated it will cost several thousand dollars to repair.

"We're in the process of getting it picked up and stored," Hundley said. "Some of it we probably won't ever find. People are bringing back athletic equipment they find, a football and some track equipment."

Similar destruction — blown out windows, toppled power lines, broken roofs — occurred Sunday night and early Monday at various places across Texas. However, no injuries were reported during the storms.

At Brownwood, the arms at a railroad crossing were ripped loose, a fence at Howard Payne University's baseball field was destroyed, and a hotel lost part of its roof.

Another storm hit near Lampasas County on Monday. Deb Harris, a sheriff's department dispatcher, said there were no damage or injury reports.

In north Central Texas, winds as strong as 70 mph hit electric lines and trees Sunday night, leaving residents in West, just outside Waco, without power.

Attorney for indicted Hutchison says jury improperly picked

The Associated Press

AUSTIN — The grand jury that indicted U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison was improperly empaneled because it contained a juror facing a theft charge, according to motions filed by attorneys for the senator.

Two dozen motions were filed Monday by Mrs. Hutchison's counsel, claiming the official misconduct case facing her should be dismissed because of legal mistakes.

The motions claim grand juror Melvin Wrenn should have been excluded because a November 1988 charge of theft by check was pending against him at the time the panel was selected.

"This grand juror was absolutely mandatorily disqualified under the law," the motion said.

Every indictment handed up by that Travis County grand jury now can be challenged on the same grounds. Saadi Ferris, foreman of the grand jury, said those indictments number between 500 and 600.

"Oh man, that just makes me sick if that's true," Ferris said.

About 525 indictments returned by a Harris County grand jury were dismissed last month because the jury panel's foreman had been indicted on a charge of theft by check.

Wrenn has not been indicted, but it is illegal for accused or convicted felons to serve as grand jurors, according to Texas law.

Henderson "Sam" Buford, Wrenn's attorney, said Wrenn would not be able to comment.

Travis County Attorney Ken Oden told the Austin American-Statesman that Buford contacted prosecutors Monday and paid approximately $100 restitution for three checks that date to 1989 and 1990. The charge against Wrenn will be dismissed as soon as he attends an eight-hour hot check diversion class, Oden said.

Buford confirmed that he paid restitution for Wrenn, but refused to comment.

Travis County District Attorney Ronnie Earle could not be reached for comment by The Associated Press late Monday. His first assistant, Steve McCleery, refused to comment except to say, "There weren't any surprises."

Mrs. Hutchison, 50, a Republican, was indicted last month on four felony counts and a misdemeanor charge accusing her of using state employees for personal and political jobs during her term as state treasurer.

She also is accused of overseeing the destruction of computer records as part of a coverup. The charges carry a maximum sentence of 61 years in prison and $43,000 in fines.

Mrs. Hutchison's attorney Dick DeGuerin, who hand-delivered the filings to the courthouse Monday, declined to comment on the motions.

Briefs

Houston residents not so gung-ho on NAFTA

HOUSTON (AP) — Members of Houston's business and political establishment have made congressional approval of NAFTA a top priority, but the city's voters don't share unanimous support for the pact, a poll shows.

Thirty-one percent of participants in a Houston Chronicle survey said they support the North American Free Trade Agreement, which would phase out most tariffs and other barriers to the free movement of goods, services and investment among the United States, Mexico and Canada.

Another 24 percent said they oppose the agreement, 26 percent were unsure and 18 percent did not answer.

Houston Mayor Bob Lanier and the Greater Houston Partnership, the city's largest business organization, argue that Houston's port, its oil field service companies and the medical industry will benefit from expanded trade with Mexico.

The Port of Houston already handles more U.S.-Mexico commerce than any other port in either country.

Family asks changes for ice cream trucks

DALLAS (AP) — The family of a 7-year-old killed while darting into traffic to reach an ice cream truck has asked a city commission to change rules governing the vehicles.

Five children have lost their lives in the last three years when they ran into streets at the sound of the familiar ice cream truck jingle. The latest was Victor Alfonso Garcia, who was killed in his eagerness to get to the ice cream truck.

Officials said no charges are expected against the driver of the truck that hit the boy.

The city's Health Services Commission on Monday listened to ways to tighten vending regulations regarding the ice cream trucks.

Hoss Rafaty, owner of Yumi Ice Cream Co., one of the area's largest frozen-treat distributors and chair of the International Association of Ice Cream Vendors' safety committee, says he is concerned about policy changes.

George Bush gets new house and a ballroom

HOUSTON (AP) — Not only does former President George Bush have a new residence in Houston, Texas' largest ballroom now bears his name.

The city of Houston on Monday officially named the 31,500 square foot ballroom of the George R. Brown Convention Center the George Bush Grand Ballroom.

Officials estimated about 1,500 invited guests turned out for the dedication ceremony, during which George and Barbara Bush were honored with speeches and a concert band.

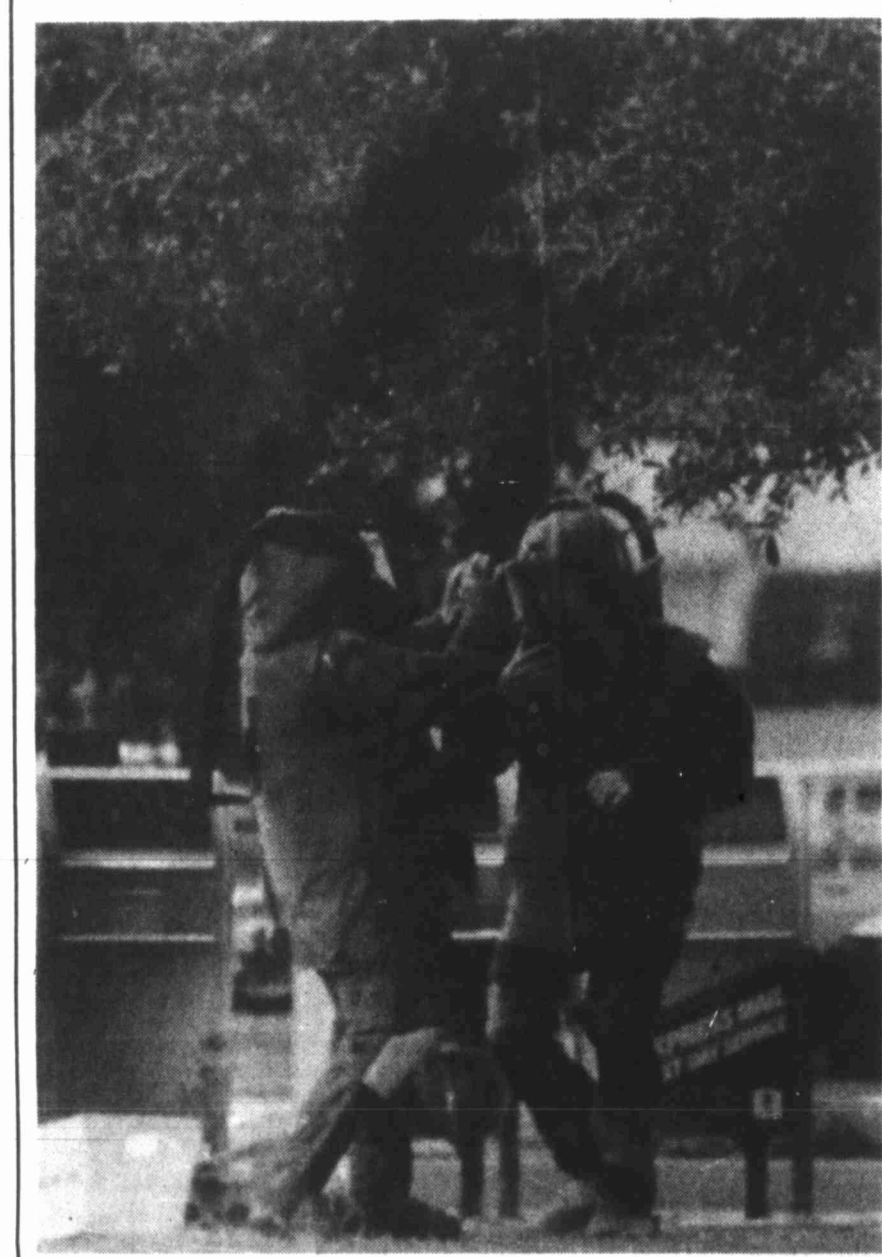

The former president thanked city officials for the gesture and joked that some family members had trouble adjusting to the idea of a ballroom in his name.

"I mentioned this to my daughter and she said, 'Ballroom? You? You can't dance,'" Bush said.

City, transit authority battle over dome

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A transit tax to pay for the Alamodome is generating millions of dollars more than projected, and now the city and VIA Metropolitan Transit are at odds over who will control the money.

Transit officials said in Monday's San Antonio Express-News the city has been collecting the tax money while ignoring VIA's request for accountability the past three years.

Mailbox bombing

Two members of the Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms bomb squad inspect mail boxes Monday in Houston where an explosive device injured mail carrier Nathan Cook earlier that day. He suffered injuries to his right hand.

Pregnant cheerleaders booted off the squad

The Associated Press

AUSTIN — School officials violated a federal anti-discrimination law by kicking four pregnant cheerleaders off the Hempstead High School squad, a spokeswoman for a national women's rights group said.

The district forced the girls off the squad in September after they said they were pregnant. One girl who had an abortion was allowed to return.

The school board has since voted to forbid pregnant students, or those who have children, from holding elective office on campus.

Hannah Riddering, a spokeswoman for Texas National Organization for Women and the NOW Legal Defense and Education Fund, said the policy and the action taken against the girls violate Title IX of the 1972 Education Amendments.

Title IX is a federal statute that bars gender discrimination in schools and educational institutions that receive federal funding. It prohibits discrimination against students because they are parents or expecting a child.

"The district took punitive action and they are not allowed to do that," Ms. Riddering said.

School Board President Betty Vines and Superintendent Robert Roy could not immediately be reached for comment.

According to the law, a school or institution that receives federal funds, "shall not discriminate against or exclude any person on the basis of pregnancy, childbirth, termination of pregnancy, or recovery therefrom or establish any rule or practice which so discriminates or excludes."

The law also says disabilities related to pregnancy or the termination of a pregnancy must be treated as any other disability or physical condition.

The cheerleaders' dismissal has created a furor in Hempstead, a town of about 3,500 people. Some parents in the community, about 100 miles southeast of Austin, have accused the school district of discrimination because the fathers were not punished.

wouldn't accept it. That was four hours before he was hit by the train.

"Makes me feel bad you know. Of course, I tried to help him and they wouldn't help him," he said through sobs. "If I knew where to send him ... Why they don't take care of that boy, I don't know. We feel all helpless and defenseless."

Hospital Superintendent Bob von Rosenberg said he cannot comment on individual patients but said patients voluntarily at the hospital are allowed to leave when they want. Those committed by court can be held up to 90 days but aren't always held that long. Emergency warrants and an order of protective custody can only be issued if the person is a danger to themselves or others.

"A voluntary patient who walks away is discharging himself in essence," Rosenberg said. "Generally, if he was here on a commitment we would issue a pickup and have him brought back."

After being dropped off in Coahoma, Garcia was next seen walking west in the middle of the railroad tracks just before 2 p.m., according to sheriff deputy Barney Edens.

The train was going about 10 mph and the conductor got off and ran out yelling at Garcia, who stepped off the tracks to the south. Garcia then grabbed the train but was hit by a bar. He spun around and fell into a ditch, got up and boarded the train. Officials then called the sheriff's office. Garcia then apparently slipped and fell to the north side of the train, falling underneath the wheels.

"It should have never come to this point," Lydia said.

"Everybody was pretty devastated," Johnnie said.

Reed Irvine says, "Arthur Sulzberger Jr. faces the first crisis of conscience since succeeding his father as publisher of The New York Times."

Perhaps publisher Sulzberger is having to make do with a less educated and less dedicated editorial staff. If so, the rest of the media fraternity must re-evaluate its traditional reverence for "whatever the Times says."

This relates to that: The words we use are those we are force-fed by the professional word merchants.

If they want to divert our allegiance from some rebel with a cause, they have only to designate him "fascist" or "neo-Nazi."

U.N. forces are carefully defined as "peacekeepers," but anybody who dares resist is labeled "terrorist," "warlord," "guerrilla."

Haitians who resisted American troops dispatched to influence that country's politics were labeled "Army-backed thugs."

One day, the tribal leader of Somalia, Mohammed Farah Aidid, is called a "warlord." Hours later, he offers to release a captive American, and overnight, he becomes "Gen. Aidid."

Jury acquits in Denny beating trial

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Two blacks were acquitted Monday of most of the felony charges in the beating of white trucker Reginald Denny and other motorists at the start of the 1992 riots, easing fears of renewed racial tensions.

The multiracial jury ended the day still deadlocked on the most serious count — attempted murder against defendant Damian "Football" Williams in the videotaped attack of Denny — and deadlocked on an assault count against Henry Watson.

Superior Court Judge John Ouderkirk ordered the jury to resume deliberations Tuesday, saying he hoped that a "good night's rest" would be helpful.

The jury convicted the defendants of lesser counts. It first told Ouderkirk it was deadlocked on three charges. He told jurors to continue deliberating and hours later, it found Williams innocent of a robbery charge.

Accepting the defense argument that Williams and Watson were caught up in mob violence after the state Rodney King beating trial, the jurors acquitted them of most charges that required specific intent.

Defense psychologists testified that Williams, 20, and his 29-year-old co-defendant acted in the heat of the moment and couldn't have planned their actions.

Their heads newly shaven, Williams and Watson sat calmly as the verdicts were read, except when the clerk announced "Not Guilty" on an aggravated mayhem charge against Williams, which could have brought him life in prison. Williams clapped his hands over his eyes, reared back in his seat and hugged his attorney.

The jury convicted Williams on simple mayhem, with a maximum penalty of up to eight years in prison.

Dietra Holmes, left, Myeisha Bridges, center, and Keisha Gladney, friends of Damian Williams, celebrated outside the Criminal Courts building after hearing the verdicts returned by the jury in Los Angeles Monday. Williams and co-defendant Henry Watson were acquitted on the most serious charges that were returned. There were five counts that the jury is deliberating on against the two defendants in the Reginald Denny beating trial.

In the charges decided against him, Watson was acquitted of all but simple assault on Denny, a lesser related offense that carries a maximum penalty of only six months in prison. The jury rejected the charge that Watson, who has been held since shortly after the riots, tried to kill Denny, the count that could have brought him life in prison.

"I am in total agreement (with the jurors)," Denny told the TV tabloid show "Inside Edition." "They should let the guy go. He spent a year-and-a-half in jail and has had time to think about what happened."

He said he wouldn't comment on Williams until the jury finished deliberating.

As the verdicts were read, Watson's mother, Joyce, sat in the courtroom's front row, stilling sobs with a handkerchief after Ouderkirk had warned the audience against outbursts.

Williams, who gained fame when he was personally arrested by former Police Chief Daryl Gates, was acquitted of eight counts.

Gates, now a radio personality, denounced the verdicts as unjust.

"We know they're guilty. But I understand this is our system," Gates said.

The new police chief, Willie Williams, said he was pleased with community response, which remained generally calm.

And in South Central Los Angeles, scene of the worst rioting, the Rev. Leonard Jackson of First AME Church said: "There is a sense of calm and there is a sense of true justice. We saw justice working at its best."

Stolen U.N. vehicles returned

The Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Renegade government soldiers returned one of two stolen U.N. armored vehicles Monday after a U.N. commander said the thefts jeopardized the peacekeeping mission in Sarajevo.

With the approach of winter and the absence of any new peace negotiations, growing crime and chaos is gripping Bosnia.

Sarajevo radio, meanwhile, reported heavy shelling in central and eastern Bosnia and in a suburb of the capital city.

The United Nations feared the hijacked armored personnel carriers would be used in combat, compromising the 1,600 U.N. peacekeepers in the city.

Such use of the vehicles — with or without their U.N. markings — would discredit the U.N. mission further in the view of capital residents who feel that the world body has failed to protect them from Serb guns.

The smaller of the two French vehicles was returned Monday, said Sgt. Frans van Mourik, a U.N. spokesman. He said negotiations for the return of the other were continuing with a renegade government brigade.

Gen. Jean Cot of France, commander of U.N. troops in former Yugoslavia, said in a statement that the situation "could have serious repercussions on the continuance of (the U.N. peacekeeping) mission in Sarajevo" if not resolved.

Lt. Col. Bill Aikman, another U.N. spokesman in Sarajevo, said Serbs had expressed concern that the U.N. vehicles, one of which had a mounted machine gun, would be used in combat against them.

The vehicles, clearly marked with U.N. insignia, were commandeered Saturday. The six peacekeepers manning them were released later, minus their personal weapons.

The hijackings came during a weekend of some of the heaviest Serb artillery bombardment of Sarajevo in weeks.

In the Sarajevo suburb of Ilidza, Sarajevo radio reported Monday heavy artillery fire from Serb positions.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Mike McCurry said the escalation of violence in recent days is of "very great concern to the United States." He said the attacks on Sarajevo and turning back of relief convoys "would indicate a new attitude on the part of the Bosnian Serbs that would be very grave and would have grave consequences."

Secretary of State Warren Christopher sent a stern message to Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic on Monday reminding him that NATO resolutions approved in August concerning the use of force in Bosnia still stand.

NATO and U.S. officials have said air strikes could be used against Serbs if they attack Sarajevo, but nobody on the ground considers that a credible threat. U.N. officials have opposed such strikes, saying they could put peacekeepers at risk.

NATO jets roared over the capital on Sunday, but NATO officials declined to comment on whether they were trying to send a warning to the Serbs. NATO aircraft are patrolling a U.N.-imposed no-fly zone over Bosnia.

Two NATO A-10 "Warthog" ground-attack jets roared low over the central Bosnian town of Vitez early Monday in an apparent show of force. The town, hotly contested by Bosnian Croat and government forces, is the site of a British U.N. peacekeeping base.

Reports reaching Vitez said that in the nearby city of Zenica a vehicle belonging to the International Committee of the Red Cross was attacked by a mob carrying crow bars and hammers Monday. Two people inside were not hurt.

Take a walk, for your heart's sake

Heart attack - it can strike any time or any where. It is a killer of more than 51,000 Texans in 1990, about 136 in Howard County.

To aide the fight against cardiovascular disease and fund critically needed research, the American Heart Association sponsors a special event to raise money - the Heart Walk.

This year's Big Spring Heart Walk will be Saturday at 9 a.m. at Scenic Mountain State Park. It is one of hundreds around the nation raising money to fight this killing disease.

Cardiovascular diseases and stroke are not just diseases for when you are older. According to Jan Hansen, chairperson of the walk, cardiovascular diseases and stroke are affecting Americans in their 30s, 40s, 50s and children are not immune from the it either.

Cardiovascular diseases are debilitating and ruins lives. It takes fathers and mothers from their children, grandparents from their grandchildren and children away from their mothers and fathers.

If you listen to the economic experts who are in favor of the North American Free Trade Agreement, they seem to make a lot of sense.

But if you listen to the economic experts who oppose NAFTA, they seem to make a lot of sense.

That's the trouble with economic experts. You could probably find one who said both sides are wrong, and he'd make a lot of sense, too.

But after months of confusion, I've finally made up my mind, at least for the time being, which could be an hour or forever.

And my position has nothing to do with the arguments about the potential loss of jobs, the opening of new markets for exports, or any of the other widely debated points.

I am against NAFTA because of Serapio Zuniga Rios, 29, who is accused of being a really loathsome guy.

You've probably never heard of Serapio Zuniga Rios. I hadn't either, until a few days ago.

I was drowsily watching congressmen jabbering on C-SPAN, marveling that they get paid such handsome salaries and marvelous fringe benefits for making speeches so boring they would be barred by most Chicago taverns.

But then one of them got up and talked about Serapio Zuniga Rios.

It seems that this Rios fellow had been a migrant worker in California until about a year ago.

Mike Royko

Then a terrible thing happened. A 5-year-old girl was kidnapped, sexually assaulted and left for dead. But she didn't die and the police say they have evidence that the crime was committed by Rios.

However, they couldn't arrest Rios because he scammed back to Mexico, his native land, before they could grab him.

Ah, but Rios was not too bright. He returned to his wife and family in Mexico and took a job driving a truck.

It wasn't that difficult tracking him down. The girl's family hired a private investigator, who slipped some money to Mexican cops and they pinpointed Rios' whereabouts.

So a request was made to have Rios arrested and extradited to this country so he could stand trial for the foul crime.

That seems like a reasonable request, right? Especially between neighboring countries that have so close a relationship.

We ship things back and forth all the time. We ship thousands of tourists and hundreds of millions of tourist dollars to Mexico. We ship

American industry and jobs to Mexico.

In turn, Mexico ships tons of drugs and hundreds of thousands of illegal aliens, especially to southern California, where the assault took place.

So there shouldn't be any big deal about Mexico shipping us one accused sex fiend named Rios.

Ah, it isn't that simple.

True, we have an extradition treaty with Mexico. And if citizens of the United States commit criminal acts in Mexico, then run home, our government will send them to Mexico to stand trial. We have done that many times.

But despite the treaty, Mexico doesn't believe in sending Mexicans accused of crimes to this country.

Their position was explained by Bill Gould, an aide to Rep. George Brown, of California, who has been fighting to get Rios returned.

"There is a 1979 extradition treaty that says both countries are supposed to extradite those accused of 31 different felonies. There was a provision added later, for Mexico, that says either they extradite or prosecute the defendant in Mexican courts."

"But they're not doing either. Their position is that their constitution forbids extradition. But it's also a carry-over from the 'anti-gringo' legacy in Mexico. It is culturally unthinkable that any Mexican official would serve up a Mexican national to the United States. They have never extradited even one.

"We have extradited our citizens down there, handed people over to them. They've never given us anybody. The FBI in our region said they have dozens of cases involving Mexican nationals wanted for murder, aggravated assault and rape, and they can't get any help.

"But if we can't get them to cooperate with us in tracking down murderers and rapists, what confidence should American businesses have in the willingness and ability of Mexican officials to protect our interests?"

A reasonable question. You would think that if Mexico is so eager to get NAFTA approved that it has spent tens of millions of dollars lobbying our politicians, it could see its way clear to part with a few accused murderers and rapists.

So maybe the NAFTA agreement should be amended: For every job we let Mexico pluck from us, we expect one accused child rapist or murderer or other felonious type in return.

And maybe for every Mexican drug merchant the Mexican authorities arrest and convict, another job. For every shipment of dope the Mexican authorities intercept, another job.

I mean, what are a few murderers, rapists, and drug merchants among friends and neighbors?

Solution for Jordan withdrawal

"I think I have thought of the answer," my friend Paul said.

Earlier last week his voice, like the voices of many Michael Jordan fans, had been full of despair at the news of Jordan's retirement. "I am looking for a 12-step program to deal with my depression over no more Jordan," he had said then, sounding ready to weep.

But now his voice was almost chipper. "My life is going to be complete again," he said.

I asked him what was making him so happy. What miraculous solution to Jordan deprivation had he devised?

"A boxed set," he said. Seeing my puzzlement, he explained:

"All of the greatest stars have boxed sets of their complete works," he said. "Sinatra, the Beatles, Shakespeare ... you can get a collection of everything they've ever done."

And?

"A Jordan boxed set," he said. "The videotapes of every game he ever played."

He was beaming. I thought about it: Jordan, according to the Chicago Bulls front office, played a total of 778 games for the Bulls: 667 regular season games, 111 playoff games. (Exhibitions were not counted.)

"If I get a boxed set of the videotapes, I can watch Jordan play a different game every night for more than two years," he said. "If I were to start with his first rookie game for the Bulls tonight, and watched one game a night, I wouldn't be finished until the end of 1995."

Are such boxed sets available?

"Not yet," he said. "But someone ought to think of it. SportsChannel and WGN and NBC ought to have all the tapes from recent years. And even in the early years, when all the games weren't telecast, the Bulls must have made their own tapes."

And you would actually spend the money for 778 tapes?

"I could take out a bank loan," he said. "I could sell my house and move to a less expensive place."

And you would watch a game every night?

"In order," he said. "From his first game in '84 to the last Phoenix game last June."

Wouldn't that screw up your social life?

"It would be preferable to the social life I have now," he said. "I would never have to go out to dinner again and listen to people talk. I could just watch Jordan."

Would that not get boring?

"Boring?" he said. "It would be the highlight of every day. It would get me through work, knowing what was waiting at home."

This might cost thousands of dollars, buying 778 tapes. It might cost more than a car.

"I wouldn't need a car anymore," he said. "I wouldn't have any desire to drive anywhere."

Oh. Uh. ... Wouldn't you have to sit through tapes of a lot of meaningless games?

"I don't consider any game Jordan played in to be meaningless," he said. "You can find nuances in every game. I didn't see most of the early games. They will be brand-new to me."

So if you're sitting at work and you know that what's waiting for you at home is just some 1987 regular-season game the Bulls played against the Milwaukee Bucks ...

"I would race home," he said.

But 778 videotapes ... where would you keep them all?

"I could move some furniture out of my den," he said. "I could throw some suits out to make room in my bedroom closet."

Just for videotapes?

"I would think of them as the Dead Sea Scrolls," he said.

Wouldn't this occasionally become dull?

"Not if I fast-forward through the parts when Jordan is on the bench," he said.

Do you think you might seem like an oddball, spending two years doing nothing but this every night?

"I would not be alone," he said. "I think there would be thousands upon thousands of people, doing the same thing."

But isn't it a rather pale substitute for life? Sitting inside your house every single night and watching old tapes of Jordan?

"It would be better than life," he said. "What's so good about what's outside in the real world, anyway?"

But you could look in a basketball record book and know in advance who won each game. Isn't the whole idea of spectator sports finding out who wins the contest?

"That used to be the idea of sports," he said. "Before Jordan came along."

And what would you do at the end of 1995, when your 778 Jordan tapes ran out?

"Start over," he said.

Link found between great creativity and mental illness

Scripps Howard News Service

"For that fine madness still he did retain Which rightly should possess a poet's brain."

It turns out that the old boy who penned those lines about 16th-century English poet Christopher Marlowe was onto something. Science now confirms what observers of the musical have long suspected: a link between mental illness and great creativity.

In a study of 1,004 men and women eminent in 18 fields, University of Kentucky psychiatry professor Arnold Ludwig has discovered that manic depression was 13 times more common among poets than scientific inventors. Other researchers contend that artists are 30 times likelier to suffer mental disorders than the general population.

These studies raise an intriguing question: When doctors succeed in vanquishing the demons that haunt men's minds, are they also nipping in the bud wonderful sonnets, concertos and paintings?

Tough question. Perhaps for now it is enough just to appreciate all the suffering poets.

A not so 'World Serious'

It's World Serious time ... the Blue Jays and Phillies going head-to-head in America's fall classic.

So much for sports jargon.

For the life of me, I can't get excited about the Series this year. Apparently, neither can most others in these parts.

There's just no real excitement.

The Phillies ... they're ugly, unkempt, brash, rough and powerful. That's what we look for in our football teams out here in West Texas. But baseball's supposed to be made of kinder, more cerebral stuff.

And the Jays? Well, they're more to our tastes in baseball...

But they're from Toronto for chrissake!

Toronto's in Canada!

It wasn't so bad back when nobody had to worry about the Jays or Expos getting into the World Series. Both flirited a few times, but the Cito Gaston's boys have gone and won themselves a World Championship and are looking for a repeat!

It's almost more than this over-taxed ticker can take.

Same's true for most others, if sales of Toronto and Philadelphia shirts, caps and the like is any barometer.

Dick Helms, the manager at Athletic Supply Inc., says he's seen a jump in popularity of the two teams' licensed products, particularly baseball caps.

But Kay Roberts, owner of Neal's Sporting Goods, says the public's shown little or no interest.

"They're just not buying," she said. "It was that way last year. We didn't sell much in the way of Blue Jays stuff, even after they won the World Series."

That's a stark contrast, she says to previous years when other teams were in the Series, not to mention the can't-keep-anything-in-stock popularity of Dallas Cowboys' products after they won the Super Bowl in January.

Of course, it's simply not fair to compare any professional franchise's popularity with the Cowboys' ... especially not here, Roberts says.

John A. Moseley

Both she and Helms say "Cowboys stuff" outsells everything else combined. Of course, that's something the National Football League has known and admitted for some time.

Helms said Athletic Supply's sales of Cowboys products fell off considerably a few years ago when Dallas wasn't going to the playoffs, but Roberts says Neal's has always done a booming business in Cowboys goods.

"There's no comparison to Cowboys things," she said. "It didn't matter what we got in with the Cowboys' logo, it sold out as fast as we could get it in."

But Roberts says she believes the biggest problem the Jays may have in selling licensed items in these parts is ... how can I put this nicely ... well, er uh ... well, not ugly, but uh ... not very attractive.

"There are just certain teams that aren't requested much, and the Blue Jays and Phillies are two of them," Roberts explained. "The Blue Jays just don't have a pretty logo ... not like the Colorado Rockies. I can't keep the Rockies' stuff in stock. People like the logo and they like the colors."

She knows what she's talking about, too.

"Last year, when the Cowboys were going strong and even after they won the Super Bowl, I got all kinds of requests for other NFL play-off teams' stuff ... even several for Buffalo Bills items," she said. "But nobody wants the Blue Jays or Phillies stuff much. Of course, we've got it here if they change their minds..."

Not likely.

Growing is more than size

Local 4th grader with GHD see advantages of being short

By DEBBIE LINCECUM
Features Editor

Chris Correa has a goal. The local 4th grader wants to grow as tall as his favorite basketball player, Shaquille O'Neal.

He may not make it to that size, but Chris should be growing soon. He's taking medicine that is hoped to help.

At 9 years old, Chris is about the size of his 7-year-old brother Matthew, because Chris has GHD, or growth hormone deficiency.

"I like being small because everybody wants to be my bodyguard," said Chris, an honor student at Moss who loves to read, ride his bike and watch cartoons. "But sometimes, it means people don't think you can do things that you can do."

Kids call him "shorty banana" sometimes, but he doesn't really mind.

What really aggravated Chris about his height was this year, when he and Matthew began school. Some kids joked that Matthew was bigger than Chris, or said they must be twins.

"It wasn't true," said Chris, but admitted it bothered him just the same. What doesn't bother him, though, is the shots he takes almost every day to help him grow.

"It doesn't hurt as much as a sticker," Chris said. "At first, it kind of hurt, because I wasn't used to them. But now, no way."

Chris' mother, Patsy, discovered her son had GHD when a school nurse looked at his growth chart.

"She said he was growing only about a half inch to an inch per year, but he was supposed to be growing two or three inches," Patsy said. "Other people had said he seemed short for his age, but I didn't think it was a problem."

Patsy said she thought her son was just following in his family's footsteps. She and her husband are both short, while their oldest son, Michael, is slightly below average height for his age.

"Sometimes, it means people don't think you can do things that you can do."

But the growth chart was the clue - Patsy took Chris to see a doctor. They ended up in Lubbock, in the office of a specialist.

In one of their regular brainstorming sessions, Monday, members of the El Rodeo yearbook staff go over the various materials to be used in the annual. El Rodeo production already underway by journalism students

The Big Spring High School annual yearbook, El Rodeo, is a year-long effort with most of the work going on behind the scenes in the journalism department.

Journalism teacher Steve Poitevint tries to leave the project as much in the hands of the students as possible. "I pretty well just try to guide them. I do some photography — I try to stay out of it as much as I can," he said.

Much of the work falls on the shoulders of yearbook editor Liz Hernandez, a senior at BSHS.

The only veteran on the nine-person staff, Hernandez gained experience working on last year's annual staff. "I discovered that I really liked it," Hernandez said.

Hernandez and her staff are hammering out the design of the yearbook in almost daily brainstorming sessions. Hernandez has decided to use the school colors of black and gold to showcase school spirit. "I think our colors tell a lot about us," she said.

Former local hurt by friend handling gun

By DEBBIE LINCECUM
Features Editor

A former local boy is facing a long, slow recovery after he was accidentally shot Sept. 18.

David Anderson, who moved from Big Spring to Youngstown, Ohio, in 1990, is hoping to escape permanent damage from the gunshot wound, his stepfather said.

"He's doing pretty good, back at home now," said Charlie Hunt of Big Spring, stepfather to David. The 18-year-old local native was shot in the basement of a friend's home in Youngstown.

Hunt said he doesn't have all the details, but apparently the accident occurred when a group of guys were trying to fix a jammed handgun. A friend was working with the gun, Hunt said, and it fired, going through the friend's hand and into David's lower side.

Hunt did not know how or why the boys had the gun, a .22-caliber pistol.

David's mom, Bonnie, the former manager of Whataburger in Big Spring, is caring for the teenager at home.

"He's been real down," said Hunt, adding David would like to hear from some of his friends in the local area. "We thought some letters might boost his morale."

Local friends who want to send

DAVID ANDERSON encouraging letters to David can write him at: 415 Matthews Road, Youngstown, Ohio 44512.

"They put Chris in the hospital and ran some tests," Patsy said.

"I wasn't scared," said Chris. "But I wanted to know what was wrong with me."

Soon they knew about GHD, and Chris took his first shot, administered by Mom. In Lubbock, they found out Chris was the 100th child to have the syndrome.

The problem, doctors have told the Correas, is that his pituitary gland does not secrete enough growth hormone. So he takes the shots of a medicine called Protropin.

Once Chris begins growing again, he should be able to stop taking the shots and let his body work on its own. He hopes it will be soon.

"Sometimes I don't get treated my age," Chris said. "But I can run fast, and I like to play soccer. Being short doesn't matter."

Who will be the next Our Gang kids?

By The Associated Press

DALLAS — Pudgy Norman Mitchell thinks he makes a good Spanky. Michael Randall can be a dead-ringer for Alfalfa. Then again, Daniel Zielinski and Andrew Thiesmann look pretty convincing with their slicked-back, one-spike hairdos.

Those four youngsters were among hundreds vying for parts in a new "Our Gang" for a Universal Studios movie version of the popular black-and-white television show "The Little Rascals."

Norman, 5, of Muskogee, Okla., flew to Dallas for Saturday's casting call, "cause I never did it before."

Michael, 9, of Allen, was there because "I want to show off."

He faces some of the stiffest competition because most of the crowd also came dressed to play Alfalfa.

There even was a black-eyed dog named, of course, Petie, dragged to the audition by Anita Saunders. The talent search for Petey the movie dog is being held in another city.

Casting director Lynn Ambrose said she expected about 2,000 children to attend the casting call in Dallas. Similar events are scheduled for Orlando, Atlanta and Los Angeles.

Jays playing by Phils' rules

By The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — After a week of debate about what to do with designated hitter Paul Molitor, Toronto manager Cito Gaston has made up his mind.

Only he's not telling.

"I know what I'm going to do," Gaston said Monday, a day before the Blue Jays played the Philadelphia Phillies in Game 3 of the World Series. "I'll announce it tomorrow."

Gaston, however, did say Todd Stottlemire will start Game 4 Wednesday night against Tommy Greene.

"So I've made one decision, so far," he said.

But with his other decision under wraps, speculation about Molitor continues.

Will he play first base while lefty John Olerud, the AL batting champion, sits against left-hander Danny Jackson? Will he play third base

Toronto Blue Jay pitcher Pat Hentgen takes batting practice Monday in Philadelphia. Hentgen, who will start the third game of the World Series tonight against Philadelphia's Danny Jackson, said he's batted three times since high school - all in spring training. The designated hitter will not be used in the Series game at Philadelphia.

instead of Ed Sprague? Will he be benched? Or will Gaston go game-by-game?

"It'd be nice to know what's going on," Olerud said after Toronto's workout at Veterans Stadium. "If we decide to go one way, I'll be pinch-hitting. That could happen. It would be understandable if it did."

Olerud began two World Series games on the bench last year in Atlanta when Gaston juggled his lineup to make room for DH Dave Winfield. Last year, though, Olerud had not hit .363 in the regular season and .348 in the playoffs, as he did this season.

Molitor played 23 games at first base this year. He was a third baseman with Milwaukee in the 1980s, but his last appearance there was two games in 1990. Since then, shoulder and arm problems have limited his throwing.

Molitor, for the first time in a week, fielded grounders at third base and threw to first. He bounced several throws, and said it was by design. He also spent a little time taking ground balls at first.

Molitor batted .332 with 22 home runs and 111 RBIs, and stole 22 bases. He hit .363 against lefties. Olerud hit .291 against left-handers.

Molitor is 3-for-7 in the series. Olerud is 2-for-6 with a home run and Sprague is 1-for-8.

Crossroads league is a big hit with area's young players

Boys, girls join local football league in record numbers

By DAVE HARGRAVE
Sports Editor

Football keeps getting bigger and bigger in Big Spring.

The Crossroads Little Football League is in its eighth season, but the Big Spring-based league has never had a year like this.

There's more players than ever, more cheerleaders than ever. This season, the league even has its first female player - nine-year-old Amanda Lovett.

All of this has given league coach and president Carl Brunson a reason to smile.

"A previous league here disbanded...and when we first started, the kids had to furnish their own equipment," Brunson said. "Now we're able to suit up 316 kids. We've got 167 cheerleaders this year, too."

The league's fields are across from the American League Baseball Park. It has 10 teams and two divisions, one for third- and fourth-graders (Division I) and the other for grades 5-6 (Division II).

The league has 75 more players than it had last season, Brunson said.

"Next year, we may have to expand and add more teams."

The league plays its games in Big Spring, but players come from as far as Garden City, Brunson said.

Forsan and Coahoma have given the league a shot in the arm - each town has entered two teams in the league, one in each division.

"We're really glad to have the Forsan and Coahoma kids playing in the league," Brunson said. "It's really added a lot to it."

One thing Forsan and Coahoma add is a huge rivalry. Coahoma's Division I coach, Ray Rye, said his players want to win every game - but especially the one against Forsan's Buffaloes.

Is there really such a thing as a rivalry in youth football?

"There is between Coahoma and Forsan - you better believe it," Rye said. "They want to beat each other worse than anybody else. They get up for the Big Spring teams, but there's something about two small towns playing each other."

Rye's team has 29 players, and he said Coahoma's Division II team has at least that many. Coahoma and Forsan teams have played quite well - Coahoma's Division II team is 4-0.

Rye is a first-year coach in the league, and he's impressed with what he has seen.

"It teaches kids sportsmanship, responsibility, and how to play as a team," he said.

Brunson said the league could not support the many players and cheerleaders it has without the league's numerous sponsors.

The league is for fun - it's that simple. Brunson agrees with Rye - the league teaches teamwork, responsibility and character.

"Young men and ladies can be very disciplined - some people don't think that," Brunson said. "In football, you teach them how to play, how to win, how to lose. But most of all, you teach them how to have fun playing football."

Alomar joins large club

By The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Roberto Alomar's base-running blunder in Game 2 of the World Series was just one more mistake magnified by the October spotlight.

Trying to steal third with two out and the tying run at the plate is a good play, only if you make it. Get thrown out by the pitcher, as Alomar was in Toronto's 6-4 loss, hung him out to dry. He is, however, in some pretty good company.

Over the years, the Series has assembled an impressive Hall of Shame of otherwise perfectly capable, sometimes outstanding, players who made dreadful mistakes in baseball's showcase event.

Among the more memorable blunders were Mickey Owen's passed ball, Bill Buckner's error and Lonnie Smith's basepath mistake. None of those, however, ended a Series the way Babe Ruth's miscalculation did.

Ruth was baseball's first great slugger, a huge man who hit 714 home runs in his career and 60 in one season. And yet, in one bizarre lapse of judgment, he was responsible for the final out of the 1926 World Series, of all things trying to steal a base.

St. Louis had survived a seventh-inning jam when Grover Alexander struck out Tony Lazzeri with the bases loaded in one of the most enduring World Series moments. The Cards were still up 3-2 in the ninth when Alexander retired the first two hitters and then, pitching carefully, walked Ruth.

With slugger Bob Meusel up next and representing the winning run, Ruth, hardly a speedster, decided on his own to steal second. Catcher Bob O'Farrell threw him out easily, ending the Series.

Was it a bad play? Probably, considering that Ruth had stolen just 11 bases all season and never reminded anyone of Ty Cobb.

A year earlier, Roger Peckinpaugh, shortstop for the Washington Senators, was the American League's MVP. The 1925 World Series, however, would be a nightmare for him when he committed eight errors, including two in the decisive seventh game.

Owen was a journeyman catcher, whose career would have been long forgotten had it not been for his passed ball in the 1941 Series. The Brooklyn Dodgers were one strike away from winning Game 4 and tying the Series against the New York Yankees.

Hugh Casey had two strikes on Tommy Henrich when strike three broke off Owen's glove and allowed Henrich to reach first. Before Casey recovered, the Yankees rallied for four runs to win the game.

Speculation over the years was that Casey had broken off a wicked, and illegal, spitball that got by Owen. The catcher denied that, saying it was a curve, one he had not been expecting.

Buckner's error at first base on Mookie Wilson's 10th-inning grounder in Game 6 of the 1986 World Series is commonly blamed for Boston losing that game and the Series to the New York Mets. The fact is, however, that the Mets, one strike away from defeat, had already rallied to tie the score with two out, before Wilson ever hit the ball to Buckner.

In 1991, Atlanta and Minnesota were scoreless in the eighth inning of the final game. Smith was on first base when Terry Pendleton hit one in the gap that should have scored the run.

But Smith, having trouble locating the ball and momentarily slowed by second baseman Chuck Knoblauch's fake, hesitated rounding second. It was enough to keep him from scoring and the game remained scoreless until the 10th inning when Gene Larkin's pinch hit delivered the victory to Minnesota.

Stars beat 'Hawks

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO — Mike Modano scored twice and added an assist Monday night, lifting the Dallas Stars to a 5-3 triumph over the Chicago Blackhawks.

Darcy Wakaluk, playing his first game in goal this season for the Stars, chipped in with an assist during a three-goal Dallas first period.

Jeremy Roenick's 20-footer from the right circle at 5:24 of the third had trimmed Dallas' lead to 4-3.

Wakaluk made a spectacular save on Joe Murphy from point-blank range at 12:38 and one on a 50-foot slap shot from Steve Smith at 13:08 to help preserve the Stars' third win.

Neal Broten scored an insurance goal for Dallas at 15:11.

The Blackhawks (1-4-2), off to their worst start since the 1988-89 season (1-5-1), received bad news when the league suspended all-star defenseman Chris Chelios for two more games for his part in last week's melee with the Hartford Whalers.

Last Thursday, Chelios resisted a linesman during a fight and then became involved in a second altercation. At the time, he received a misconduct penalty and a game misconduct. On Friday, the league announced Chelios would be suspended indefinitely pending a hearing. He missed Chicago's game in Winnipeg on Saturday night and Monday night's game against Dallas.

Modano, with a goal and an assist in the opening period, capped his evening with an unassisted goal at 11:49 of the second. It gave Dallas a 4-1 lead. Modano took the puck away from Roenick at the Chicago blue line, then put a 10-footer past Jeff Hackett.

Rich Sutter scored for Chicago at 3:01 of the first after Jeff Shantz, getting his first career point in his first NHL contest, picked off an errant clearing pass.

The Stars then got a power-play goal from Modano and a goal from Paul Broten in the span of 34 seconds.

After Modano scored, the Blackhawks cut the deficit to 4-2 at 16:45 when Jocelyn Lemieux redirected Craig Muni's 45-foot slap shot from the left point.

NCAA waits for Texas A&M's version of player payment fiasco

Investigation of Aggies' football team continues

By The Associated Press

COLLEGE STATION — The NCAA has asked Texas A&M to respond to allegations that at least seven football players were paid by a Dallas booster for work that was not done.

Dean Gage, the school's interim president, said Texas A&M will answer the letter of inquiry in time for the NCAA infractions committee to deal with the issue at its next regular meeting, Nov. 12-14.

David Berst, the NCAA's assistant executive director for enforcement and eligibility appeals, said the response must be in the NCAA's hands by Friday if the school wants it on the November agenda.

Several athletes, including 1992's top rusher, Greg Hill, served suspensions as a result of the allegations. Hill played his second game last weekend after sitting out five games. Another player was suspended for the year, and three other players were suspended for shorter periods.

Texas A&M refused to renew the scholarships of two other players involved in the work at a Dallas apartment complex owned by Warren Gilbert.

In 1988, the NCAA placed sanctions on the school for payments to athletes for work not performed.

In light of that, the letter of inquiry said, Texas A&M should have placed "more emphasis on the control and monitoring" of athletes who work for boosters.

These latest allegations first surfaced in The Dallas Morning News last December, shortly before Texas A&M's Cotton Bowl game with Notre Dame.

A&M is accused of failing to monitor the university's employment program for football players and to take appropriate action when it learned of possible violations of NCAA regulations.

The letter from Berst said the allegations concerning the Aggie football program "appear to be of sufficient substance and reliability" to warrant an official inquiry.

Berst requested the presence of the following at the November meeting: football coach R.C. Slocum, athletic director Wally Groff, recruiting director Tim Cassidy, vice president for finance and administration Robert Smith and director of intercollegiate athletic compliance Ted Zalesky.

Runnels sweeps Sweetwater

Two of Runnels Junior High's three volleyball teams saw action Monday in Big Spring, and both teams beat Sweetwater.

Runnels' "B" team did not play Monday evening, but its "C" team beat Sweetwater's "B" team, 15-7, 15-7.

Top servers in the first game for Runnels were Gina Valdez with seven points and Amanda Harrell with six.

In the second game, Maria Hinojos served for six Runnels points, and Tramaine Anderson served for three.

Other stars for Runnels' "C" squad were Kelly Hinojos, Veronica

Martinez and Amy Mays.

Runnels' "A" team had no trouble with Sweetwater's "A" team, winning 15-8, 15-1.

Kara Hughes served for six points in the first game to give the Lady Yearlings a boost. Marisa Smith had an excellent second game, serving 10 points for Runnels.

Jessica Cobos served five points in the second game.

Also starring for Runnels' "A" team were Crystal Flynn, Heather Edwards and Kelly Hollar.

Runnels' "C" team finished its season at 2-4. The "A" team is 5-9 and plays again Monday.

Cowboys face three key NFC East showdowns

By The Associated Press

IRVING, Texas — The Dallas Cowboys get two weeks off but don't need it. Their 26-17 victory over the San Francisco 49ers shows they are back on the Super Bowl track.

"We've won four in a row, but we're still one behind the New York Giants and they are playing extremely well," Dallas coach Jimmy Johnson said Monday.

"We have a very important stretch coming up against three division teams — Philadelphia, New York, and Phoenix," he said. "After we play those three games, we'll see how we stand. We have one of the better teams in the NFC but we're not on top yet."

Johnson added, "We're playing better right now after six games than we did a year ago, even if we're one game down on our record."

Johnson wasn't overjoyed to get a bye week after the Cowboys have won four in a row.

"We just play 'em the way the NFL schedules 'em," Johnson said. "We'll have to make the best of it."

Johnson will give the Cowboys the weekend off after they spend the week preparing for the Eagles.

"We have to keep working because we're getting better every week," said Johnson, whose club started with two losses with running back Emmitt Smith missing from the lineup in a contract dispute.

Troy Aikman and Michael Irvin blistered the 49ers Sunday in what Irvin called "pitch 'n catch."

Irvin caught 12 passes for 168 yards and one touchdown in his best day as a Cowboy.

"Some guys at the point of the catch shrink up. Their strike zone gets a little smaller," said Aikman. "Michael's gets bigger at the point of the catch. He's just phenomenal."

The Cowboys beat the 49ers 30-20 in their NFC title game, but the rematch was a rerun as Dallas dominated in the second half again. The Cowboys increased their record to 4-1, a game behind the New York Giants in the NFC East.

"The 49ers were the team of the 1980s but we took it away from them in January and we want to keep it," said Dallas owner Jerry Jones. "We had a fire in the stadium on Wednesday but it wasn't anything like the fire we had on the field Sunday."

Irvin said: "I think we're the best team in the NFL. We beat the 49ers in January and we beat them in October. That makes us the best."

But Johnson disagrees.

"It's too early in the year to say we're the best," Johnson said.

Jacqueline Bigar - Horoscope

FORECAST FOR WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1993

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Watch the tendency to overdo things today. Bosses may push hard, but your natural levity helps you through it all. You find yourself giggling as you work the day away. Take advantage of another's good will. Tonight: Out and about.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Prepare to enjoy yourself to the max today. Look to an adventure, possibly an encounter with someone unique. A co-worker may make a surprising confession. Hold on tight. Tonight: Off to the movies.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A partner wants to make the most out of a situation. Be aware of what you need and exactly where you are coming from. One-to-one relating is highlighted, both professionally and emotionally. Money matters are up for grabs. Tonight: Continue the one-to-one.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Defer to others. They have good intentions today and in the long run you will find their suggestions help you enjoy yourself. Surprises occur on the home front. Be careful of an overindulgence; too much play will stop you from finishing an important job. Tonight: Now play.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your energy is strong today and there's every reason to believe you can complete all of your projects. Tune in to the realities of a key situation and focus on good communications. Remember, there are many ways to say the same thing, so choose the one that allows your partner to best understand you. Tonight: Dine out with a co-worker.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your playful side can come out, leading you into a day of fun and adventure. At work, let your creative juices profit from e lightness. Do be careful, though - spending could get out of control. Tonight: Invite a favorite person to join you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): So much is going on at home that you may need to evaluate the excitement and make a key decision. Stay in tune with what is appropriate both for you and others. A realistic approach is crucial; take off those rose-colored glasses. Tonight: Entertain at home.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): "Hectic" is the word today. What is going on emotionally with you could be coloring your day and affecting your work. Realize that your attention might be on love or money, not on work. Make important phone calls during a break. Tonight: Be with the person that is on your mind.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Watch the urge to spend or play too much. A friend tries to lure you down a trail that could prove disastrous. Discipline needs to come from you. Be aware of someone's good intentions and a relationship could suddenly become more friendly. Tonight: Glue your wallet shut.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A boss is looking at you positively, and there's no reason you can't get what you want. If you've been hesitant in asking, go for it today - not in a demanding tone but in a positive manner. Your charisma will come through for you. Tonight: You can have it all.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Listen carefully to determine just what is happening between you and another. Communications from a distance may have you glowing. You are cared about, even if the affection is not expressed as you would like. Accept an opportunity to advance your education or to travel. Tonight: Go exotic.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Zero in on what is happening with a friend. A self-indulgent partner may try to convince you to go overboard. Be aware of your own limits - what is acceptable and what you feel works for you. Allow another to be more creative and upbeat. Brainstorming works. Tonight: Fun, fun, fun.

IF OCTOBER 19 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Much of your focus is around home and family this year. Your charisma is extraordinarily high and people seem to bend to you more easily than in other years. Your ability to express your well-meaning intentions is high, allowing others to see where you are coming from.

THE ASTERISKS (*) SHOW THE KIND OF DAY YOU'LL HAVE: 5-Dynamic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult.

Dear Abby - Letters...

Cheater once is a cheater again

DEAR ABBY: I had an affair with a co-worker I'll call Pete. I was single, but Pete was married. I didn't see anything wrong with it because he told me his wife was a cold fish, and he was going to divorce her and marry me.

After waiting for four years, it seemed like it was taking him an awfully long time to divorce his wife, so I decided to speed things up a little. I called Pete's wife and told her about Pete and me. Guess what? She said she knew all about it - and all the others. That's right, I wasn't the only one.

I dumped the jerk immediately, and the worst of it was, he didn't care.

You have said it before, but say it again: "A guy who cheats on his wife will cheat on his girlfriend." — SADDER BUT WISER

DEAR SADDER: "Guys" don't have the exclusive on cheating. A woman who cheats on her husband will probably cheat on her lover.

DEAR ABBY: After reading the letter signed "McFrustrated," who fell for the waitress at a fast-food place, I had to write and tell you my story.

When I graduated from high school, I worked for the summer at a local McDonald's. Almost every night, three guys from the nearby air base would come in for their snack. One night only two came in, so I jokingly asked where the third musketeer was, and a minute later, he came in. When he placed his order, it was for a Big Mac, large fries, large Coke, and a date for tomorrow night! I liked his looks and his manner, so I said OK.

That was in June; by February we were engaged, and got married the following May — 18 years ago!

I would like to suggest to "McFrustrated" to go ahead and ask the waitress for a date. If she's seeing someone, she will tell him so, and if she isn't... well, who knows, in another 18 years, he may be writing to thank you for the advice. — CAROLE LANGUI, MAGNOLIA, DEL.

DEAR CAROLE: Not all waitresses were as lucky as you. Read on.

DEAR ABBY: This letter concerns the one you printed signed "McFrustrated."

I am a fast-food waitress who had the unfortunate experience of encountering a "McFrustrated."

While I was working behind the counter, a man nearly twice my age came into the restaurant. After ordering his meal, he proceeded to ask me for a date. I told him I was only 15 years old, but he insisted that didn't make any difference and tried to talk me into it. He didn't get very far because I had the feeling that he wanted to take advantage of me.

After that episode, the man (like "McFrustrated") returned several times. The way he looked me up and down made me feel very uncomfortable.

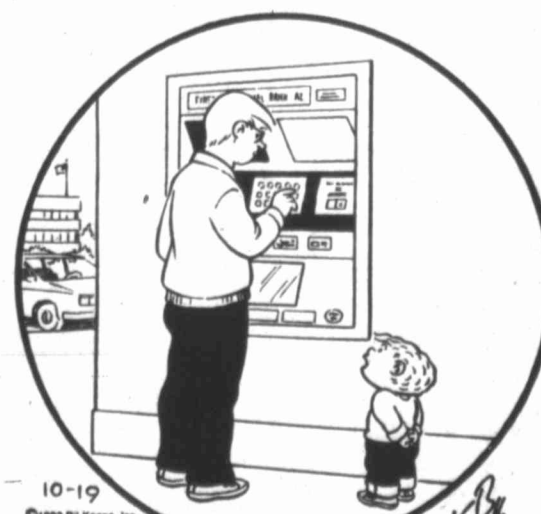

My advice to "McFrustrated," after reading your column, is that "his waitress" either already has a man in her life or she is just not interested. His waitress is not the only fish in the sea, and it is obviously time to rebait his hook! — OFF LIMITS IN DEKALB, ILL.

Everybody has a problem. What's yours? Get it off your chest by writing to: Dear Abby, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069. For a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

"THIS IS WHERE WE STORE OUR DEAD BATTERIES."
