Price of oil could hit $100 if war erupts, experts say

WASHINGTON (AP) — The price of oil could easily "explode" to $100 per barrel if war broke out in the Persian Gulf, a panel of experts told a Senate committee Wednesday.

"There's no limit," said John Lichtblau of the Petroleum Industry Research Foundation. "It depends on how much panic there is."

"The day the war starts prices will explode," said Lichtblau, one of several experts on the oil industry to appear before a Senate Governmental Affairs Committee hearing.

Sen. Joseph Lieberman, D-Conn., presiding over the hearing, echoed growing concern in Congress about what will happen at the pump if war breaks out.

Oil prices hovering in the $33 per barrel range could easily triple, said Professor Fariborz Ghadar of George Washington University's business school. "I would not be surprised if oil prices reached $100 per barrel," Ghadar said.

The response of prices at the pump to rising crude oil prices varies, but some industry experts use a ratio of 12 cents more per gallon for every $5 increase in the price of crude.

At $100 per barrel, under that formula, gasoline could rise to nearly $3 per gallon.

The reasons for the sharp price rise, the experts said, would be fear that war

President Bush said Wednesday he was fed up with Saddam Hussein's harsh treatment of U.S. hostages. Iraq later said it would allow American families to visit the captives for the holidays.

Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak and a British commander meanwhile warned the likelihood of war in the region was increasing.

But Iraq's ambassador to the United States, Mohamed al-Mashat, said he sought to avoid bloodshed and reiterated Iraq's offer to negotiate — if other Middle East conflicts were included on the agenda. The United States has rejected such linkage.

Mubarak said the Persian Gulf crisis has become so dangerous it "could explode at any time." And he urged "our brothers in Iraq" to realize the danger their Aug. 2 invasion of oil-rich Kuwait has caused.

The commander of British forces in the gulf warned that an attack against Iraq is increasingly likely. Air Chief Marshal Sir Paddy Hine said a joint team culled from the Royal Air Force, Royal Navy and Army is developing plans for military strikes.

"Saddam Hussein seems reluctant at the moment to accept the judgment of world opinion," he said. "It is looking increasingly unlikely that Saddam Hussein will withdraw unconditionally from Kuwait."

Bush said his patience was wearing thin with Saddam over the 1,000 American hostages in Iraq and Kuwait.

Defendant found guilty of kidnapping

■ While John Edward Hudson was found guilty of abducting his ex-girlfriend, he was exonerated on a related aggravated sexual assault charge.

By David Morris
Staff Writer

A 238th District Court jury found John Edward Hudson guilty Wednesday of kidnapping his ex-girlfriend, but failed to return a verdict on a related aggravated sexual assault charge.

Judge John Hyde declared a mistrial on the sexual assault charge when the seven-man, five-woman jury failed to reach a verdict after nearly 10 hours of deliberation.

The jury convicted Hudson, 30, of simple kidnapping, a third-degree felony which carries a maximum punishment of 10 years in prison.

Hudson was exonerated on charges of aggravated kidnapping, a first-degree felony with a maximum punishment of life in prison. To find Hudson guilty of the more serious charge, jurors would have had to determine that Hudson abducted the woman with the intent to abuse her sexually or terrorize her.

Prosecutor Ralph Petty said after the verdict was read that the District Attorney's Office may retry Hudson on the aggravated sexual assault charge.

Citing the pending charges, attorneys for both sides declined to comment on Wednesday's verdict.

Jurors are expected to decide Hudson's punishment today.

Hudson, an ex-Midland County sheriff's deputy, was indicted in September for the Jan. 9 abduction and rape of a 33-

Suit claims Williams didn't pay couple

Associated Press

FORT STOCKTON — Clayton Williams' bid for governor suffered a blow Wednesday after a Fort Worth couple filed a $1 million lawsuit against the Midland oilman claiming that he extracted oil and gas from their property without compensation.

Florence Vivian Bradley and Joe A. Bradley are suing Williams for $1 million plus compensation for oil and gas Williams allegedly drilled in violation of a pool agreement.

County district court, "plaintiffs have not received any payments from Williams for the oil and gas removed from their property by the defendant. And further have never received an accounting from the defendant for the minerals and-or gas removed by the defendant."

The suit also claims Williams mined gravel on 10 acres of the Bradleys' property in Fort Stockton without the plaintiffs' consent.

Williams, out on the campaign trail Wednesday, said the lawsuit was politically motivated.

"I don't know anything about it," he said. "It's nothing but politics. I can tell you I never stole anybody's land.'

A spokesperson for the Williams campaign, Mona Palmer, told the Reporter-Telegram the lawsuit was a political ploy and that the Ann Richards campaign was responsible.

Williams beats Richards in MHS, MC mock elections

■ MHS students participate in a mock election sponsored by Time magazine.

In separate mock elections held Wednesday at Midland High School and Midland College, Republican gubernatorial candidate Clayton Williams soundly stomped Democratic opponent Ann Richards.

More than 600 MHS students, as part of a national mock election sponsored by Time magazine, took part in the voting for congressional and gubernatorial candidates as well as social issues. The turnout represented about 40 percent of the 1,600-member student population.

Williams garnered 78 percent, or 517 votes, while Ms. Richards managed only 13 percent, or 89 votes. Libertarian hopeful Jeff Daiell raked in 9 percent, or 48 votes.

Phil Gramm, Republican candidate for the U.S. Senate, pounded Democratic hopeful Hugh Parmer by a margin of 88 percent, or 586 votes, to 7 percent, or 49 votes. Libertarian Gary Johnson managed 27 votes, or 4 percent of ballots cast in the race.

More than 8,000 absentee ballots cast

Staff Report

In the real election world, absentee voting in Midland County is a roaring success this election season, with 8,498 ballots cast since Oct. 17, according to Elections Administrator Bettye Calvert.

"The votes are much higher this year," Ms. Calvert said. "I expect that with each election absentee voting will become a bigger percentage of the total because more and more people will be educated that they can vote without an excuse."

Not only can early-bird voters cast their ballots without explaining why they wouldn't be able to do so on election day, they were also able to vote last weekend.

Ms. Calvert said she counted 1,115 ballots cast during the weekend hours.

"The weekend voting was successful in 1988, but not in the primary this spring," she said. "But this time we were really busy."

Pan Am report

DUMFRIES, Scotland (AP) — An American attorney on Wednesday dismissed a news report that a U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency courier might unwittingly have carried the bomb that blew up Pan Am Flight 103 over Scotland.

Lew Kreindler, leading counsel for U.S. relatives of the victims, said the NBC-TV report on Tuesday was an "old story" that surfaced a year ago in a British newspaper. He said he had no doubt that the drug policing agency had checked it out and would continue to investigate.

An inquiry is taking place in Dumfries, Scotland, into the December 1988 bombing that killed 270 people aboard the jetliner and in the village of Lockerbie.

"It appears to me that someone wants to focus attention away from Pan Am security procedures and toward something which relieves Pan Am of responsibility," the attorney said.

Baby dies when cardiac monitor disconnected

NEW YORK (AP) — The mother of an 8-month-old boy cried, "Somebody killed my baby!" after the infant was found dead in a hospital crib, his breathing tube pulled out and his heart monitor disconnected.

"Somebody did this," Theresa Bostic insisted Wednesday through her tears. "It didn't just come out, somebody did this, somebody did this."

Homicide detectives are investigating the death of Nigel Bostic, who was hospitalized in Montefiore Medical Center since Sept. 17 for breathing problems caused by a constricted trachea. He was found dead Monday afternoon, said hospital administrator Fred Yaeger.

The boy was found face down in his hospital crib by a nurse Monday, said Brian K. Regan, vice president of administration at Montefiore Hospital.

The infant's cardiac monitor had been disconnected and a tracheotomy tube, which helped him breathe, had been removed from his throat and was found under his body, along with the ribbons that were supposed to hold it in place, Regan said.

"This is clearly a tragic situation ... we are doing our best to find out what happened, we are conducting a vigorous inquiry," Regan told a Wednesday news briefing at the hospital.

An initial police report said George and Theresa Bostic didn't learn of their son's death until Tuesday, more than 18 hours after it was discovered.

A review of the baby's care by a panel of doctors, nurses and hospital administrators "found the quality of the nursing care was very good," Regan said.

Nigel had recovered and was scheduled to be released from the hospital on either Tuesday or Wednesday, the administrator added.

Regan acknowledged that the hospital hadn't called the police after failing to resuscitate the baby because "at the time of the death there was no indication of any problem that would require notification of the police."

Regan said the hospital's responsibility was to call the city medical examiner to report an "unexplained death," which it did Monday.

"It is reasonable and prudent to expect the hospital to call the police if they see a criminal event," said Ellen Borakove, a medical examiner's spokeswoman. "They have the same obligation as anyone else to call the police."

An autopsy was completed late Tuesday, but the cause of death was still under investigation, said Ms. Borakove.

An initial police report said George and Theresa Bostic didn't learn of their son's death until Tuesday, more than 18 hours after it was discovered.

However, both the parents and Regan said medical personnel called the parents around Monday evening, summoning them to the hospital, where they were informed of their son's death.

The parents then called police.

Hospital administrators "did not welcome us with open arms," said Sgt. Roscoe Smalls, a detective squad supervisor.

Mrs. Bostic said only the parents and hospital staff were permitted in Nigel's room.

"How could anybody see him suffering and not do anything?" she asked. "Somebody had to see my baby suffering."

WEATHER SUMMARY

Sunny skies continuing

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for mostly sunny skies, with a high in the mid-80s and southwest winds at 15 to 20 mph, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tonight is expected to be partly cloudy with a low in the mid-50s.

Friday will be partly cloudy with a high near 80.

Wednesday's high was 84 compared with the record high for that date of 89 in 1934. The overnight low was 50. The record low for that date was 31 set 1989.

NATION

Cold, wet weather spread across the Northwest on Wednesday, while sunshine prevailed east of the Rockies.

Showers along and behind a cold front produced rain from Northern California and the northern Pacific Coast to the northern Rocky Mountains.

Heavy rain drenched coastal sections of Washington, Oregon and Northern California during the morning and spread into the northern Rockies.

Six to 12 inches of snow was possible during the night in the mountains and passes of northwestern Montana, the National Weather Service said.

A winter storm watch in effect into early Thursday was posted for the mountains of northern Utah, and a winter storm watch was posted for Thursday for the mountains of southern Utah.

Morning lows only in the 30s were reported over parts of the Great Basin, which includes most of Nevada and western Utah, and the Rockies.

Candidates participate in 'mini-debate'

FORT WORTH (AP) — In a "mini-debate" arranged by KDFW-TV and conducted in separate studios Wednesday night, gubernatorial candidates Clayton Williams and Ann Richards each voiced disapproval of a state income tax and disagreed sharply on abortion.

But each candidate promised to build more prisons, start "boot camps" for first-time offenders and be generally tough on crime.

The candidates have not taken part in a face-to-face debate during the campaign.

Democratic candidate Richards said Wednesday that her Republican rival doesn't look good when he's not appearing in a scripted TV commercial.

Since Williams' fumbled a question about a proposed constitutional amendment during a televised interview Tuesday, Richards has said that shows voters he isn't qualified to be governor.

"I think they (the gaffes) have had an effect, because the person that you see that talks informally in response to questions is a different person than the one you see in the carefully staged, memorized message, 30-second television spots," she said.

The latest gaffe was on Williams' mind as he got some last-minute help from the GOP's heavy hitters — former President Ronald Reagan and U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm.

"All I can tell you is that I'm familiar with the amendment; I was familiar with the amendment, voted for it, and I just forgot it. I don't think it'll make the least bit of difference, but the people of Texas are going to decide that in the final poll next Tuesday," Williams said while attending a tribute to Reagan in Houston.

Richards said Williams' latest stumble over the proposed constitutional amendment on confirmation of gubernatorial appointments probably wouldn't damage the Republican by itself. But as one of a series, it does, she said.

Williams has been criticized for making a joke about rape and for saying he hoped Richards, a recovering alcoholic who recently touted her 10th year of sobriety, hadn't started drinking again.

"The people see that. They watch millions of dollars worth of TV, and they see one person who's self-assured, knowledgeable, knows it all," she said.

But when Williams is more closely scrutinized, she said, "They see someone who is uncertain, who seems to be under a lot of stress, not handling tension well."

Richards spoke in an interview, flying from a Fort Worth rally at Tarrant County Junior College to one in Tyler. U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen joined her.

During the Houston fund raiser, Williams compared the 1990 Texas gubernatorial campaign to the 1980 presidential election in which Reagan defeated President Jimmy Carter.

"That election was about change and so is this one," Williams said. "Aren't the people of Texas tired of the same old Austin crowd running government? I am not a politician and I guess that's evident to those of you who follow the election."

After Williams' remarks, Gramm said he plans to work the next six years to bring jobs to Texas and he needs a governor who knows how business works.

tion and this happened in 1963," Ms. Palmer said.

But a spokesperson for the Richards campaign, Chuck McDonald, denied any association with the lawsuit, claiming to have only became aware of it Wednesday afternoon.

"Every charge that comes up against Williams he says it's Richards fault," McDonald said.

The Bradleys are asking for the market value of the oil and gas and gravel they claim Williams wrongfully and fraudulently took from their property, according to the lawsuit.

The Bradleys could not immediately be reached for comment Wednesday by The Associated Press.

Royal Caswell, an attorney representing the Bradleys, said the couple doesn't know how much oil Williams took from their property.

"We have no idea how much oil was taken because we don't know when production started," Caswell said. "That is something we have to ask Mr. Williams."

Caswell said the oil and gas lease agreement was signed by Williams in 1963, but the Bradleys "only recently realized what Williams was up to."

Caswell said the lawsuit was not a political ploy against the Republican, who has watched a sizable lead over Democratic opponent Ann Richards dwindle to a dead heat less than a week before the Nov. 6 election.

"Every person stands before the bar like everyone else and this has nothing to do with politics," said Caswell, of Odessa. "It is my understanding they were old friends."

back," said Dennis Stratton, an MHS social studies teacher who helped coordinate the event. "Our goal in trying to do this was to encourage people to take part and practice in elections. All in all, I feel it was very positive."

Other high schools throughout Texas, including Odessa High School, also are taking part in the election.

Stratton said the Texas results will be sent to state officials in Austin today. After they tabulate the statewide results, the figures will be sent to federal officials, who will compile election numbers from participating high schools nationwide, he said.

The national results will be broadcast on CNN at an unspecified date, Stratton said.

The figures also will include the vote on five social questions addressing the drug crisis, military service, the budget deficit and a gasoline tax.

In the MHS vote, 50 percent of the students favored harsher penalties for drug dealers and users, while 49 percent opposed requiring military service for all young Americans. Some 12 percent voted to legalize some narcotics to make drug dealing less profitable for organized crime.

Addressing another question, 49 percent said the United States should borrow less money and reduce the budget deficit, even if it means cutting the defense budget. Meanwhile, 27 percent said current levels of defense spending should be maintained, even if it means borrowing more money, while 14 percent was undecided.

Some 45 percent of the voters agreed that U.S. spending on social needs, such as housing, education and health care, should be increased. There were 37 percent who said the budget should be reduced, even at the cost of not improving social programs.

Regarding a gasoline tax, 51 percent opposed it, 16 percent supported it, and 13 percent was undecided.

In another election conducted from Tuesday through Wednesday at Midland College, Williams netted 43.2 percent of the 169 votes cast, while Ms. Richards garnered 32.5 percent and 26 percent were undecided.

Libertarian candidate Jeff Daiell received one vote, as did a Midland College basketball player, Texas Rangers pitcher Nolan Ryan, cartoon characters Bart Simpson and Bill the Cat, and someone named "Bubbles Cash."

A Midland College professor and Mickey Mouse received two votes, while five people simply said "none of the above."

"I was disappointed with the fact that I thought there were more Democrats than this on campus," said college sophomore Arnie Zamora, whose fledgling Young Democrats organization cosponsored the event.

"The indication I got from the vote was that, although our candidate lost, it showed that there are Democrats in Midland, especially at the college," said Zamora, 20.

About 1,000 ballots were distributed to students through history and government classes and student government offices, he said. Five ballot boxes were placed around campus, he said.

Scott Folger, 19, a sophomore affiliated with the college's Young Republicans chapter, said he felt the election response was poor.

"I think it shows a lot of apathy among the students," Folger said. "But if we get one more person to vote who wouldn't have, I guess it was worth it."

He said the election was held to promote student involvement in politics and recruit members for the two student political groups.

"We're trying to raise political awareness at the student level," Folger said. "The election affects them as much as it affects a 40-year-old."

year-old Odessa woman with whom he had once lived.

According to testimony, Hudson pulled a gun on the woman and forced her to go home with him after luring her and two of her sisters to his pickup truck from the Travis Elementary School parking lot in Odessa.

Hudson told police that after he drove the woman to his Midland residence at 1500 Willeys Ave., he showed her a 12-foot hole which he had dug beneath the house.

The woman testified that Hudson threatened to imprison her in the hole if she attempted to escape.

During closing arguments in Hudson's trial Wednesday, defense attorney Bob Stevens conceded that Hudson kidnapped the woman.

"(The woman) was kidnapped, yes...John Hudson's statement tells you that," Stevens told jurors, referring to a statement Hudson gave police shortly after his Jan. 11 arrest.

However, Stevens said Hudson did not rape the woman.

"I think the evidence shows that the sex was consensual between them," he said.

The woman testified Monday that she agreed to sex with Hudson only because she feared for the lives of her boyfriend and family members, whom she said Hudson had threatened.

Hyde said he polled the deadlocked jury, which had been deliberating since about 12:20 p.m., shortly after 10 p.m. Wednesday. Ten of the 12 jurors said they felt further deliberation on the sexual assault charge would be futile.

Hudson was a Midland County sheriff's deputy from 1983 until his resignation in 1986, officials reported.

said of the besieged U.S. mission in occupied Kuwait. "The people out there are not being resupplied.

"Do you think I'm concerned about it? You're darn right I am. And what I'm going to do about it — let's just wait and see, because I have had it with that kind of treatment of Americans," Bush said.

Later Wednesday, an Information Ministry spokesman in Baghdad said the Iraqi government is prepared to allow families of Americans in Iraq to visit during the Christmas and New Year's holidays. No other details were available, and there was no immediate reaction from the State Department.

The offer to American relatives appears to be part of an overall Iraqi offer to all relatives of its "foreign guests" to visit the captives. Several Britons have already done so, including wives visiting their husbands being held in Iraq.

"It's probably just another psychological ploy," said Dawn Bazner, whose husband, Mark, early in the crisis was videotaped asking Saddam to let foreign women and children go. Speaking from Palm Desert, Calif., she said, "I'm hoping that we won't have to visit (Mark) there ... but if it comes down to it, I will go."

A few diplomats have held out at the U.S. Embassy in Kuwait, defying an Iraqi order to close missions in the annexed nation. Iraq has cut utilities and surrounded the compound with troops. The British Embassy also remains open.

The administration of former President Reagan used the safety of Americans as a justification to invade Grenada in 1983. The Bush administration also cited the safety of Americans when he sent troops to Panama in 1989.

In Baghdad, Information Ministry Spokesman Latif Jassim said the United States was spreading "false reports" on the conditions of "foreign guests" to seek an excuse to attack Iraq.

Baghdad calls the hundreds of Westerners held in Iraq and Kuwait to deter attack by the multinational force deployed in Saudi Arabia "guests." Many have been sent to strategic sites as human shields.

"I want to tell you that our guests live in good conditions at some places better than many Iraqi families, but Bush perhaps wants an excuse," Jassim said.

CBS Radio quoted Jassim as saying he will make available to U.S. television networks videotaped messages from American hostages to their families to show they were not being mistreated.

would disrupt supply lines combined with the likelihood that a gulf war would curtail Saudi Arabia's oil-producing capabilities.

The witnesses told Lieberman that with oil production already at or near capacity, oil consuming states could do little beyond releasing oil reserves onto the market.

Conversely, if Iraqi President Saddam Hussein suddenly ends the crisis by withdrawing forces from Kuwait, the price of oil could drop just as suddenly to levels below those that preceded the Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait, witnesses said.

"That range is likely to be reached approximately 48 hours after the crisis is over," Lichtblau said.

"This is a very tight market," Ghadar said. "A pipe blowing up in Nigeria, a fire in Venezuela, some other disruption," could be enough to spread panic and push prices higher.

In the second of three hearings on the oil industry, Lieberman continued to pursue the question of whether oil companies and oil producing nations are unfairly gouging consumers.

The answers Lieberman received were not encouraging to consumers. The witnesses said there was little the United States could do to break up the OPEC cartel. In the meantime, the simple laws of supply and demand would govern the price of oil.

Witnesses rejected as unworkable, for example, Lieberman's suggestion that Saudi Arabia unilaterally lower the price of its crude in exchange for U.S. military support. The market would quickly absorb the cheap Saudi oil and no other countries would be compelled to lower their prices, Lichtblau said.

The best the United States could hope for is more money from Saudi Arabia to help pay the cost of Operation Desert Shield.

Clearly, bottled water is enjoying boom

By Charles Campbell

WASHINGTON (AP) — Water is supposed to be cool, clear, healthy, refreshing and if not free, at least cheap.

But more and more people are paying serious money to have bottles of water delivered to their homes, saying they wonder about the safety of what flows out of the pipe or just don't like the taste.

Lisa Ehrlich, for example, says she pays $140 a month to have bottles of spring water home delivered in suburban Bethesda, Md., where she lives with her husband and their two children. The Ehrlichs go through a half-dozen five-gallon bottles every two weeks.

"For our budget it's a lot to pay, but our water is important to us," Mrs. Ehrlich said. "It makes me nervous to drink city water. Plus it tastes great."

Industry statistics show home delivery to be the fastest-growing segment of a booming business, outpacing water sales in restaurants and grocery stores as well as office deliveries.

A total of 424.8 million gallons of water was delivered to American homes in 1989, an increase of 70 percent from the 1985 figure of 248.7 million gallons.

Jane Lazgin, spokeswoman for the Perrier Group of America Inc. in Greenwich, Conn., said there are indications home delivery of water is more than a passing fad.

"We find interest from kitchen designers, who are building kitchens leaving space for the bottled water dispenser," she said. "There's a certain novelty attached to it, but it's becoming more of a refreshment beverage choice."

The average price for home-delivered water is $4.91 for a five-gallon bottle, according to the International Bottled Water Association, the industry's trade association based in Arlington, Va.

About 60 percent of bottled water buyers say they're interested mainly in better taste, the association said. Other reasons cited are safety and, more specifically, worries about chemicals in tap water.

Federal regulations on public water systems set strict purity standards for dangerous chemicals and disease-causing germs. When the rules were tightened last year, the Environmental Protection Agency said the action could prevent up to 90,000 waterborne diseases each year.

Health issues, however, are dealt with carefully in bottled water advertisements and promotions.

"IBWA members do not, according to law, make health claims about bottled water," a statement from the association said. "However, all bottled water must come from a government-approved source. In addition, because bottled water is a 'food' product, it must meet more stringent and additional regulations than tap water."

Critics of the industry contend that regulations are not tight enough to ensure that bottled water is free of contamination.

Detroit remains on full alert until Halloween is history

DETROIT (AP) — John Holtyn moved in with his daughter Wednesday, a day after his tidy home burned in in a Devil's Night arson fire. Francine Smith watched her garage burn after saving the family cars.

The Holtyns and Ms. Smith believe they were among the victims of arsonists who celebrated the illegal holiday tradition known as Devil's Night by setting scattered blazes citywide.

Firefighters and thousands of block-watchers remained on guard for the tail end of the fire spree Wednesday night and appeared to be winning; few fires were spotted by reporters driving around the fog-shrouded city, or reported by citizen patrol groups.

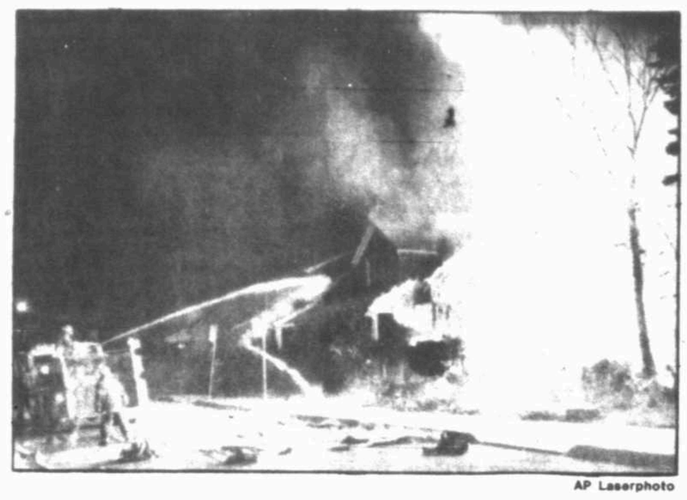

Thirty-four youths were arrested for violating a special curfew, police said.

Although Devil's Night is Oct. 30, the night before Halloween, arson fires also are set the night before and the night after.

"Tonight's Halloween, and the basic thing we're trying to do is make sure the kids are safe," said volunteer patrol organizer Ray Wright.

Fire and police officials on Wednesday refused to discuss the number of fires set. Mayor Coleman Young said the number would be a revealed a news conference Thursday or Friday.

Last year, the mayor's office reported 223 fires between Oct. 29 and Oct. 31, with 115 of those on Oct. 30. Leaders of the firefighters' union, who backed a Young opponent in last year's mayoral contest, counted there were 412 fires over the three days.

Detroit firefighters struggle to get the upperhand on a two-story house fire on the city's east side Tuesday night, "Devil's Night," as it's known in Detroit.

The worst Devil's Night came in 1984, when 810 fires were set over three days.

This year's fires left a haze over some commuter routes and cut visibility to six miles at the city airport late Tuesday.

"On the surface it's very, very clear that we still have a Devil's Night problem," Young said Wednesday. "But those problems are much more under control today than they were."

The Holtyns moved to their daughter's house on Wednesday. Holtyn said vandals torched the vacant house next door, and the flames spread to his home.

"We just saw a flame next door — something blew and it just started burning," said John Holtyn, 65.

Ms. Smith clutched her nightgown as she watched flames she believed to be intentionally set destroy her garage and spread to another next door. "What's wrong with people, anyway?" she asked Wednesday.

In southwest and northwest Detroit, "we have now buried Devil's Night," said Alberta Blackburn, a mayoral aide who coordinated citizen patrols.

The worst Devil's Night came in 1984, when 810 fires were set over three days.

Evangelists praying for 'fallen' 'Frisco

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Two ministers and 7,500 "prayer warriors" hoped to exorcise San Francisco of its "evil immorality" on Halloween, but militant gays and pagans in the city said they were ready for spiritual warfare.

"They'll end up in the hell they deserve with their narrow-minded views," said Sister Missionary De-Light, founder of the 11-year-old Sisters of Perpetual Indulgence in San Francisco. "I think it's scary that they think we're a real threat to society."

Texas evangelist Larry Lea and San Jose minister Dick Bernal planned to lead a "Prayer Breakthrough" for the city they say is plagued by immoral homosexuals.

"The ultimate goal is to save the fallen angels of the city from Satan, from evil immorality," Bernal said.

Shuttle flight delayed

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The Air Force on Wednesday delayed Atlantis' classified flight next week because of problems with a spy satellite aboard the shuttle.

Sources speaking on condition of anonymity have said the satellite was to spy on Iraq.

It is the seventh shuttle flight dedicated entirely to the Defense Department.

Some will look for 'none of the above' as ballot option

BOSTON (AP) — Call it the turkey vote.

Some voters are pushing "none of the above" as a better option in a year when they think the ballot choices are more suited for stuffing than for public office.

The NOTA option has been listed on Nevada ballots since 1976 — and won six times.

The idea has attracted attention in Massachusetts, especially from liberals who are scratching their heads over the choices to replace Gov. Michael S. Dukakis — Democrat John Silber and Republican William Weld.

Silber, a tough-talking university president, alienated some Democrats with his blunt statements about women and minorities. Weld, an advocate of conservative stands on fiscal policy and gun control, offers little comfort to liberals thinking about defecting from the majority party.

Both candidates have participated in name-calling and negative campaigning.

The Pioneer Valley Pro-Democracy Campaign wants election officials in six communities to count the NOTA vote this year, says group spokesman Randy Kehler.

"It seems to be striking a very responsive chord," he said.

The group will hand out NOTA stickers to voters on Election Day, Kehler said, adding that election officials he had spoken to seemed interested in the group's proposal.

Margaret Nartowicz of the Amherst town clerk's office said NOTA votes would be counted in that community.

Kehler said the NOTA option would be more than a mere expression of dissatisfaction. If NOTA won more votes than the candidates, he said, it would force a new election with new candidates.

'Voters need this option when the political system is not giving them candidates to their liking.'

— Randy Kehler, Pioneer Valley Pro-Democracy Campaign spokesman

"Voters need this option when the political system is not giving them candidates to their liking," Kehler said.

In Nevada, the NOTA option has been on the ballot in statewide races since 1976. But that state doesn't provide for new elections if NOTA wins.

Don Mello, a former Democratic Nevada state senator, introduced the NOTA legislation in the mid-1970s after finding widespread dissatisfaction among voters in the post-Watergate years.

The NOTA choice gives people a way to register their dissatisfaction with candidates at the top of the ballot, while voting for other offices, he said.

Curtis Gans, who heads the nonpartisan, non-profit Committee for the Study of the American Electorate in Washington, D.C., said voter participation numbers in Nevada don't necessarily bear out the theory that NOTA increases voter participation.

In the 1988 presidential election, Nevada had a 44.8 percent turnout of eligible voters, below the national turnout of 50.15 percent of eligible voters.

"I don't think it will make a lot of difference," Gans said of the NOTA option as a way to bring out the vote.

Still, he supports the idea.

"I'm for it because I'd rather have active protest than passive protest," Gans said.

Bruce Buchanan, an associate professor of government at the University of Texas, said he doubts NOTA would introduce real change into elections.

"I think it's a bit of a gimmick in that it's one of those answers that appeals to people because it seems emotionally satisfying and would have an immediate impact," he said.

Budget headache hurting us all

When Congress finally did enact what some members grotesquely referred to as a deficit-reduction bill earlier this week, the anticipated result was depressingly familiar — more deficit spending, more taxation.

The $496 billion compromise budget will mean that taxpayers in this nation will be saddled with more cost for, essentially fewer governmental services. A motorist who drives 10,000 miles a year in a car that gets 22 miles per gallon of gasoline will pay $23 more per year in gasoline taxes, analysts say, while smokers and drinkers will also pay more for their vices.

Income taxes were hiked for the wealthy, although the capital gains tax went down by 5 percent, and Medicare charges were increased for the elderly.

Some Congress-watchers say it all will mean a shakier national economy and rockier times ahead. We suspect that while most Americans may not like having to pay for all the government services they're billed for, most are also downright incensed by the lackadaisical attitude of elected representatives toward waste and the bloated federal deficit. They seem to have the attitude they can spend what they want and then send us the tab.

U.S. Sen. Pete Domenici (R-N.M.) summed up the feelings of millions of Americans when he said the budget "will be worse for America, worse for this decade, worse for our children ...." And we're paying for this?

The respected policy research organization, The Heritage Foundation, went further, saying the tax bill "will not only wreak damage in the near term, it also sets the stage for equally destructive tax increases next year."

The foundation went on to note, "The historical lesson is being ignored by George Bush and the handful of his top aides responsible for his budget decisions and by Congress. They are returning to the tax-and-spend policies of the 1970s. As the economy declines, the pressures for more spending increase. The 1970s cycle of decline will start anew."

Most Americans recognize that government overspending is causing serious problems and is threatening their own economic well-being. That point was driven home recently in an editorial in the The Wall Street Journal which noted, "We don't recall anyone in Washington — say, the media folks who keep holding up the deficit shell on those Sunday morning talk shows — ever explaining why it is that Mr. Bush and Congress, after receiving $4.6 trillion from their constituents since 1986, now need more by way of gasoline taxes, beer taxes and higher income taxes."

Then the Journal noted, "But the budget negotiators say spending is being 'cut.' Ah yes, the Spending Reduction shell.

"Under the budget reform law passed in 1974, Congress doesn't touch a new fiscal year's budget until nearly all spending levels in it are automatically raised by some percentage tied to inflation and other factors. The public naturally thinks Congress is working on the levels in last year's budget, since that's the way people think about cutbacks in the real world. But Congress's budget law has already jacked up spending to a higher level. So any 'cut' really comes out of this automatically jacked-up level. The result is that spending usually ends up higher than it was the year before."

Is it any wonder that congressional spending keeps rising and the deficit problem keeps growing? Who's in charge here anyway?

Which candidate phrases it best?

Nov. 6 — earlier if voting absentee — Texas voters go to the polls to elect state and national officials. Two contests are most important to the future of Texans. One is the race for the governor's mansion; the other, the U.S. Senate seat.

On the state level, one gubernatorial candidate is unable to cure a severe case of foot-and-mouth disease. Symptoms are carefully controlled by keeping spontaneous appearances to an absolute minimum. Despite these extreme measures, a diagnosis is possible.

Which candidate regularly portrays the opposite sex in a negative light? Which candidate equates bad weather to a sexual crime? Which candidate believes that personally confronting the other candidate is more useful than openly debating the issues? Which candidate feels omnipotent, making absurd claims of being personally able to obligate state funds when this is the role of the legislature? Governors only approve or veto legislation, not write it.

The answer is found in television advertising. This candidate says, "They just don't know (candidate's name)." Truer words were never spoken.

Nationally, which candidate favors budget proposals beneficial to the rich minority? Which candidate is willing to allow medicare recipients and those in the low- or middle-income brackets to bear the brunt of budget reform? Which candidate agrees with placing federal workers on furlough without pay? Which candidate rejects a full cost-of-living increase for retired workers, Social Security recipients, and others on fixed incomes?

Can you pick the candidates? I can. To paraphrase George Bush, "Read my vote!"

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Nov. 1, the 305th day of 1990. There are 60 days left in the year. This is All Saints Day.

Today's highlight in history:

On Nov. 1, 1952, the United States exploded the first hydrogen bomb, in a test at Eniwetok in the Marshall Islands.

On this date:

In 1512, Michelangelo's paintings on the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel were first exhibited to the public.

Thought for today: "To me it seems as if when God conceived the world, that was Poetry; He formed it, and that was Sculpture; He colored it, and that was Painting; He peopled it with living beings, and that was the grand, divine, eternal Drama." — Charlotte Saunders Cushman, American actress (1816-1876).

Casualty estimates subdue battle cries

WASHINGTON — Top secret Pentagon estimates in the hands of President Bush tell him to expect from 3,000 to 30,000 Americans to die in the first 20 days of a war against Iraq. As many as 10,000 U.S. soldiers could be dead in the first week, the reports say.

Anderson

The most realistic estimate, according to the Pentagon, is that 15,000 would die in the first three weeks. And there could be some days to rival the bloody battles of the Civil War. The record for U.S. casualties in any one day of fighting is held by the Battle of Antietam during the Civil War. There, on Sept. 17., 1862, 22,728 Americans were killed, wounded, captured or missing.

If the Pentagon's highest Persian Gulf estimate is correct — 30,000 dead in the first 20 days — that would be nearly half the total number of Americans who died in the decade-long Vietnam War.

Those numbers have sobered President Bush and caused him to beat the drums of war more softly than he did when he first ordered troops deployed to Saudi Arabia in August. Beyond the horror of the numbers, Bush also knows that thousands of casualties would reverse his high popularity rating.

But, while Bush is appalled at the estimates, our White House sources say he is hardened by the fact that Iraq's President Saddam Hussein is banking on the low American tolerance for casualties.

According to U.S. intelligence reports, Saddam has his own casualty reports that make the American figures look like a skirmish. Saddam could expect 10 Iraqi deaths for every one lost American soldier. He wouldn't flinch at the loss of 10,000 of his men, but he knows that the United States would balk at the loss of 1,000 of its soldiers in the early rounds.

Outspoken former Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. Michael J. Dugan said it best before he was fired for his candor: "The American people will support this operation until body bags come home."

Special U.S. mortuary units and thousands of body bags have been dispatched to the Persian Gulf along with two hospital ships and land-based medical units with thousands of beds. The Pentagon is looking at high numbers of casualties, even if the Iraqis don't use chemical weapons. That is because there is no way to drive back the Iraqis without house-to-house fighting in Kuwait and perhaps Iraq.

There is no doubt that America would swiftly win any air battles, but the long Iraqi defensive lines are dug in with mine fields arrayed in front of them. Iraq favors entrenched defensive warfare, which helped them to beat back Iran for eight years. Dislodging Iraq from its heavily fortified positions would take infantry assaults, which are always costly.

As a rule of thumb, an attacking army should have a 3-1 advantage over its opponent in numbers of troops. But in this case Iraq would be on the defensive with a 4-1 advantage over the United States.

Arab forces allied with the United States would make up some of the difference. A combined Arab force of about 30,000 is holding down the front line at the Saudi-Kuwait border at this moment, while American troops are well behind. U.S. estimates suggest that the Arabs could hold out no more than four hours before falling back to the American lines.

Even if casualties were high, President Bush would enjoy a brief increase in his popularity before the plunge. It's a phenomenon known by pollsters as the "rally-round-the-flag" reaction.

There are cynics who believe Lyndon Johnson concocted the August 1964 Gulf of Tonkin episode in Vietnam to enhance his standing before the election, which it did. Ronald Reagan's campaign handlers were so convinced that Jimmy Carter would stage a pre-election raid on Iran in 1980 to rescue hostages, that the GOP circulated warnings of an "October surprise" to make voters suspicious of any move Carter made.

GOP REBELLION — Angry Republican candidates will blame George Bush if they are defeated at the polls next week. The party has lost ground since Bush compromised on taxes. Voters loved the Republicans when the issue was no new taxes. But now that taxes are inevitable, the issue is who pays, and the voters are lining up behind Democrats who want to tax the rich.

Budget issue makes the home stretch tough

This is the last week for the political managers to coach their candidates. It's tough for the incumbents to figure out what to say at the end of the campaign, particularly when it comes to budget legislation.

Buchwald

"OK, Senator, let's go over it again. If they ask you, you tell them that you don't agree with the budget bill, but you had to vote for it because it's the best deal you could get from the cutthroat Democrats.

"Then you should add, 'It's good to get away from Washington and talk to real people.'"

"Right, Harvey. How do I feel about the President?"

"Sick. You can't support the President on the budget because he went back on his promise not to raise taxes, even if he is the leader of the party of no new taxes."

"I can remember that, Harvey. Why did I vote for the budget in the first place?"

"Because it's the only one we could live with under the circumstances, and something that the liberals will have to take responsibility for when they lead us into a recession."

"Let me ask you this, Harvey. Was the bill too tough on the rich, not tough enough, or just right?"

"Too tough. The Democrats are always trying to sock it to the rich because they have more money than anyone else. But you have to say in your speeches that once they tax the rich, the opposition will want to tax the middle class and then the poor, and then the football fans. Your campaign must portray the rich as being just like everyone else."

"Is it too late to put that on bumper stickers?"

Harvey said, "Our polls indicate that no one likes the budget and the voter is blaming Congress for the mess we're in. We have got to put the blame on the ones who are really at fault."

"Who is that, Harvey?"

"The abortionists are responsible for the budget mess."

"The abortionists!"

"Why not? Better them than us."

"The voters should respect me for that."

"Senator, I want you to tell the people how much belt-tightening we have to do to get our house in order. This means finding capital gains' tax breaks for the guy in the street who wants to invest in America."

"Does that get votes?"

"No, but it gets contributions from those who would like the capital gains' tax breaks."

"Why can't I say that the President wants the same things as I do?"

"You can, but I wish you wouldn't. Bush's popularity is sinking in the polls. There is no reason for you to bail him out at this stage."

"Harvey, am I for or against the excise taxes on smoking which I voted in favor of?"

"Tell the electorate that on odd days you will be for them, and on even days you will be against them. The smokers have vowed to defeat those who voted for the tax."

"They could be a problem, particularly if they are also joined by senior citizens who have promised to bury those members of Congress who've taxed their alcohol."

"Senator, we're in the home stretch and the people are fed up with everything. Our job is to make sure they understand that, although you voted for all the budget reforms, you don't believe in them any more than President Bush does when he's speaking at a Republican fund-raiser."

GEORGE WILL

Wednesday Group keeps Bush guessing

WASHINGTON — George Bush is reeling around the ring, groggy from a devastating flurry of hooks to his solar plexus and uppercuts to his chin, punches thrown by himself. But before concluding that he is ripe for a knockout in 1992, remember what made him President.

Will

In one word, it was: Dukakis. In nine words: the Democrats' combination of moral smugness and intellectual felonies. This combination is on display today.

Unaccustomed to success, and inebriated by it, and construing Bush's pratfalls as proof of their cleverness, Democrats are trumpeting three ideas that do not stand scrutiny. At least not scrutiny of the sort administered by the House Wednesday Group, a by-invitation association of 39 Republicans, in collaboration with Republicans on the Ways and Means Committee.

They are generally moderate conservatives. They are chaired by Ohio's Rep. Bill Gradison, who represents Cincinnati, and they dispose of the Democrats' ideas as briskly as the Reds disposed of the Athletics. Gradison's people prove there is a better defense of the Republican record in the 1980s than the current Republican President has managed to make.

The Democrats' first idea is that the huge deficits are the results of the 1981 Reagan tax cuts. Actually, revenues were $1.1 trillion more in the 1980s (in constant 1990 dollars) than they would have been if the 1980 federal tax collections had been changed only to reflect inflation. Federal revenues in 1990 are more than one-third higher in real terms than in 1980.

Revenues in 1990 will be more than 19 percent of gross national product for the fourth consecutive year. This is the first time in history, including the "garrison state" years of 1942-45, that the tax take has been so high for so long. (Federal receipts for 1941-46 as a percentage of GNP were 7.7, 10.3, 13.7, 21.7, 21.3, 18.5.)

The Democrats' second idea is that federal spending, especially for social programs, was slashed in the 1980s. Actually, there was dramatic spending growth, including spending for social programs.

If spending had not increased over 1980 levels, it would have been $1.9 trillion less than it actually was. Spending increased one-third in real terms. Of the $1.9 trillion, about 46 percent went to Social Security, Medicare, income security and health programs.

The Democrats' third idea is that rich families got extraordinary breaks while poor and middle-class families were saddled with a heavier burden of the nation's taxes. It is true that effective tax rates for the rich were cut (from 27.3 percent to 25.8) while rates for the bottom fifth rose (from 8.4 to 9.7 percent) and the rates of the next two-fifths also rose (from 15.7 to 16.7 percent and 20 to 20.3 percent respectively). But the rich (the top fifth) today pay 58.1 percent of all federal tax revenues, up from 55.7 percent in 1980. And every income group other than the top fifth pays a smaller or equal share.

After the Reagan cuts of income-tax rates in 1981, there were eight other significant tax measures in the 1980s. The most important was the Tax Reform Act of 1986. By cutting rates, it radically compressed the tax code's progressivity. But by the compensatory closing of loopholes, it caused the wealthy to pay more income taxes. (It also increased the tax bill of the wealthy by increasing corporate taxes.)

By the way, although the President is out begging the country to defeat Democrats — Democrats who made possible the passage of the budget package the President supported — the Wednesday Group's members voted 21-18 against that package.

Forgive the President his confusion. He is understandably punchy.

Young people need to cast their votes

I wonder how many of those young people who are complaining about the way our city, state and country are run and about the troops in Saudi Arabia have bothered to vote since they became 18. Almost all that I have talked to about voting do not vote.

The summer I was 75 I had no car, but I walked to the polls. I passed a healthy young neighbor and asked him if he was going to vote. He said; "No, they will do it the way they want to anyway."

Sure they will if we all stay home. The issue then was to pass a sales tax or increase property taxes. I have to pay my property tax, but I can refrain from buying except for necessities.

The sales tax won, man. Why don't you figure out how to learn how many young people don't vote. It might scare you. It does me.

Edwards objects to reclassification

Upon returning to Midland recently, I found that an Ed Berry, in a letter published Sept. 16th, with the stroke of a pen reclassified a political moderate (me) who has voted the Republican ticket consistently since 1946, into a "left-wing liberal democrat" with a terminal case of "sour grapes."

All that because the political moderate is not a sycophantic believer that ol' Claytie is the "second coming" of John Wayne to deliver us from all our state governmental woes. Rather, the moderate prays we will be delivered from ol' Clayton's promised political remedies. He would "make Texas great again alright — a great big joke.

This political moderate is no knee-jerk "Yellow Dog" Republican that will vote for the ticket regardless of who the candidate is. The line has to be drawn somewhere even if, as Berry says, he did throw the best barbecue in Fort Stockton. If that is an essential qualification I'll write in Johnny Hackney's name.

"Sour Grapes" over a pair of big ears, a 'possum grin and an overinflated ego? No way, Berry, not for all the oil in the Permian Basin. He was hard to take before he became "rich and famous," even more so afterward.

What a choice. It is like between "Festus" (Claytie) and "Minnie Pearl" (Annie); they both look and sound like something out of "Hee Haw." What a farce. Hope the rest of the country is enjoying the comedy; I am not. The state's electorate might as well "relax and enjoy it" as ol' Claytie advised others to do when coping with a specific unpleasant situation. There is an analogy between what he referred to and what is now happening to the Texas body politic.

I think I will write-in my vote for the other avowed gubernatorial candidate, "Bubbles" Cash, the Austin topless dancer. She pledges to make a clear breast of her platform and be up front with her qualifications. Can't beat a deal like that!

Hope you enjoy your new job with Claydesta, Berry.

Bob Bullock knows what Texas needs

I wish I could count the times Bob Bullock has told the legislature and the people of Texas just what needs to be done to fix state government.

Had the legislature listened to Bullock's education plan, we'd be better off today. Instead we have the federal courts telling us what to do.

I'll vote for a straight-forward, honest candidate like Bullock any day. I wish there were a few more like him.

Curt D. Stanley
Midland

Property taxes most urgent issue

Bob Bullock is the only candidate that is seriously talking about holding down local property taxes.

Bullock is the only candidate with a plan to finance our schools and keep our property taxes at a minimum. Bullock also has a plan to assist local governments with the burdensome cost of indigent health care. This is certainly a high priority in Midland County, where hospital district taxes are increasing at a tremendous rate.

I hear a lot about taxes these days, but Bullock's the only candidate who's telling us just exactly how we can hold down property taxes.

I'm voting for Bullock for lieutenant governor because I want something done about property taxes — the taxes that hit me the hardest.

Janet Massey
Midland

Combined services would save money

Having just paid our property taxes, I am wondering why we have to visit two different offices to take care of the matter.

I am writing to the Midland Central Appraisal District and Midland County Tax Assessor-Collector Frances Shuffield to find out why these two tax bills could not be combined into one so that money could be saved every step of the way — computer processing costs, postage to every resident in Midland and Midland County, all the personnel involved, all the costs of two offices, etcetera.

I think all the citizens of Midland and Midland County would appreciate knowing why we have to pay twice for taxing services.

G.R. Hunter
Midland

Taxpayers organize against fiscal abuse

Citizens Against Taxpayer Abuse (CATA) has formed in Midland to give every resident an opportunity to have his or her voice heard in protest of the growing practice of fiscal irresponsibility and insensitivity to taxpayers.

It has come to the attention of CATA that there are patients utilizing the indigent care program funded by Midland County taxpayers who are not true indigents and often are not even residents in the hospital district. There are many reforms that we must demand be instituted by the Midland Memorial Hospital, but obviously before they are willing to make these changes we must say NO to more tax money.

Petitions are being circulated to force a tax rollback election. Daily we encounter individuals who say they want to sign or circulate a petition, but did not know where to obtain one. We have been remiss.

Please call 694-9623 or stop by 5025 Princeton, Suite No. 1, to become an important part of this democratic process.

Deadline for letters to be published in the Sunday edition is noon Friday.

Gramm helpful, compassionate

I wish to speak up for my senator, Phil Gramm. This man is one of the most caring, helpful and compassionate people I have every known. I believe he really wants to help the elderly, poor and needy.

The time he has been in this area he has shown all these fine traits for the American people. I am voting for him and urge other voters to do the same.

I know from experience that he does help people He helped me when I wrote him a letter expressing my personal feelings on how the elderly and low-income were being treated by government offices. He was right there and made sure that things were reviewed and corrections were made.

I suggest to any person with legitimate complaints to write him. Also, while they are writing they should write to other officials they voted into office and then compare the response time and effort put forth by these elected officials. It might be a big surprise to you as to whom will do what and how.

I am a registered voter. I want to convey to all people who have the right to vote to make sure they do.

V.M. Swicegood

One vote can decide who goes to Austin

As election day draws closer, it is time to stand up and be counted. No one can vote for you and no one can take away your vote but you. Remember, only a few votes sent Harry Truman to the White House. He was one of the best. Don't underestimate only a few votes. It takes us all to get the job done.

My money is on Texas. How about yours? Are we going to send a governor to Austin with experience in handling the state's money or do we send a governor to Austin on a million-dollar flying saucer to spend money? There's a big difference between spending and handling. There's never enough money until you learn how to handle it.

All of the mud-slinging only proved one thing — Ann Richards is one smart lady! She was smart enough to realize she had a problem and smart enough to get busy and do something about it, and go on to win the state treasurer's post for eight years. She was smart enough to let her opponent make all those promises to get the neighborhood schools back. She knows the Supreme Court will never let it happen. Intergration is here to stay; busying is here to stay. When will the poor fellow stop putting his foot in his own mouth?

Ann Richards not only has brains, she has class and a style all her own. Most of all she will have time to take care of the business of running the governor's job while her opponent is flying to and from his million-dollar ranch, million-dollar oil fields, and million-dollar bank. There are only 24 hours in a day.

Whatever your choice go out and vote for Texas. One vote could make a difference.

Gore lauds Israel; Amazes citizen

Watching television yesterday, I was amazed (and appalled) at Sen. Gore's lauding Israel and its posture in the Middle East.

Where has he been?

Israel has been on a path of "naked aggression" against its neighbors almost continuously since its inception in 1948. And we have been told that we must dole out $4 billion a year (and a spur of the moment 400 MM dollars) because "Isreal is our ally." Ally against whom and gainst what?

And now, to put the lid on the jar, when all Isreal has to do is keep quiet and do nothing, they proceed to murder a bunch of Palestinians and bolster new support for Saddam.

Again I ask, "Where have you been?"

Activists seek cure to time-zone blues

CHICAGO (AP) — The harsh cold of a Chicago winter is bad enough, but seeing the sun go down before you even get off work makes it worse. The ½ Hour Time Zone Lobby says it's found a way to make winter a little brighter.

The solution is splitting the wide Central Standard Time zone in half, and moving up the clock — effectively delaying sunset — by half an hour in Chicago and the rest of the zone's eastern portion, says Ken Peterson, the group's leader.

"Chicago hasn't recognized that it's at a severe disadvantage," said Peterson, a 49-year-old architect from the suburb of Forest Park.

The sun sets an hour earlier for Chicagoans, on the eastern edge of the zone, than for residents of Bismarck, N.D., at the western edge.

Combine that with the shorter days of winter and the end of daylight-savings time, and Chicagoans don't need sunglasses after work.

"It all goes back to why do people hate Chicago in the winter," Peterson said. "We hate it because it's dark when we go home.

"Rush hour is bad enough. But when it's dark, it's really bad. Then, when you add sleet, snow and hail, it's a real downer."

Under the lobbying group's plan, when it's 5 p.m. in Bismarck, it would already be 5:30 p.m. in Chicago and workers would have had a chance to see the sun after leaving the office.

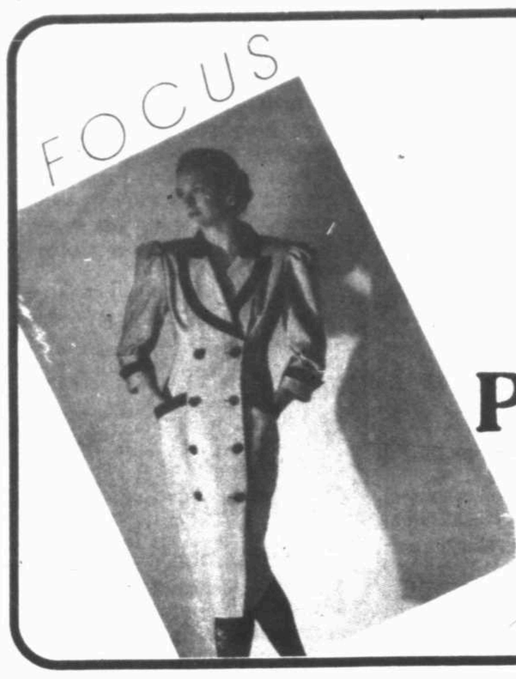

The group says that extra dose of sunlight might be enough to help cure winter doldrums.

The group placed an ad in a newspaper this week asking for public feedback on their proposal.

Peterson, who began organizing the group this month, knows some might scoff at his solution, but he's standing by his principles.

"People can label me a loony and the idea may go nowhere," he said. "But people have a right to know they can have more sunlight in the afternoon."

Gilbreath stumps at GOP men's club

Calling himself "a voice in the wilderness," Wes Gilbreath brought his campaign for general land office commissioner to the Republican Men's Club in Midland Wednesday.

"Two years ago I had two airplanes, a million dollars in the bank and a happy family," Gilbreath said. "Now it's none of the above and I'm still not in office."

But the candidate has not lost heart.

He considers it his mission to let the voters know that land office incumbent Garry Mauro, the trustee of $11 billion in public lands, is a "liberal professional politician," not a conservative businessman.

Gilbreath

He asked what "cleaning beaches has to do with managing land for public beaches," a jibe at Mauro's well-publicized environmental sentiments.

"I'm not running against Garry Mauro," Gilbreath said. "I'm running against the best press agents in the state."

Not that Gilbreath is against the environment.

He supports the use of clean-burning natural gas in fleet vehicles, which would clean up the air and provide a market for natural gas trapped in state lands.

He would also like to see better marketing of state-owned drilling mud and minerals.

Gilbreath said he is concerned about Texas aquifers and would take steps toward regulating the importation of hazardous wastes into Texas.

"The jobs it generates won't exceed the problems it creates," he said.

He attacked Mauro's management of the land office, saying it was losing money for the school children of the state by not promoting the lands it oversees.

He added that the office's 25 percent royalty on oil lands was too steep to be an incentive to drillers.

Gilbreath said Mauro had been forced to sell bonds to support the faltering veteran's

MCHD hears from NAACP

■ The head of the Odessa NAACP says Midland Memorial Hospital policy does not afford employees due process protections.

By Erin Blair
Staff Writer

Odessa NAACP chapter president Gene Collins asked the Midland County Hospital District board to create a better system for hearing employee grievances at the directors' Wednesday meeting.

Collins claimed that Midland Memorial Hospital does not give its employees due process because those charged with offenses do not have the right to face their accusers.

He added that the hospital lacks a clear policy for addressing grievances; while the board has final authority over personnel matters, its powers are not spelled out in the personnel manual.

Currently the handbook details a chain of command through which complaints must proceed: immediate supervisors to managers, human resource managers to the president, Collins said.

"But often personnel are just discharged by being told" that they are fired, he said. "It takes two years to train a good employee. When you throw one away without the courtesy of letting her defend herself, you're returning to pre-Constitutional days."

He said Odessa's Medical Center Hospital had a similar policy problem a few years ago, but settled it by forming a four-person grievance board comprising two peers of the disgruntled employee and two administrators.

A series of levels in the hearing process, beginning with peer reviews and following the adminis-

Parade marks beginning of homecoming

Past and present Lee High School students will be able enjoy a "tropical paradise" at this year's homecoming.

The festivities will begin with a homecoming parade featuring the Lee High band, the Lee Freshman band and bands from other schools whose students will feed into LHS. It will begin at 4:30 p.m. today at Midland Park Mall and flow down Midkiff Road to Neely Avenue before reaching Lee High School.

There will be about 50 entries in the parade, all following this year's tropical paradise homecoming theme. Grand marshals will be Henry Kitzman and Bobby Dunn, both assistant principals who will be retiring after this year.

In addition, the Homecoming Court, consisting of five king and five queen nominees, will join the march.

Phone solicitations not UW-sponsored

Staff Report

The United Way of Midland Inc. and United Way of Odessa have had several telephone calls from people regarding a local phone solicitation effort to raise funds for child abuse.

According to Jane Wolf, executive director of the United Way of Midland, people are being contacted by telephone to donate money for a program scheduled for December 1990 for an organization that is not affiliated with either the United Way of Midland or United Way of Odessa.

Further, Ms. Wolf explained, funds raised through such solicitation will not be distributed to the Permian Basin Child Abuse Prevention Program of Family Services, a Midland and Odessa United Way agency.

Gem Show opens Saturday

■ Exhibits will feature gems and minerals from throughout the Southwest.

Staff Report

Rock enthusiasts take note: The 28th Annual Midland Gem and Mineral Show is scheduled for this weekend at the Midland County Exhibit Building, 2445 E. Highway 80.

Show organizers believe the general public — not just hard-core pebble hounds — will find the show worthwhile.

"It will be a stimulus to people's interest in rocks," said Hershel Beaty, show publicity chairman. "Rocks have character — they tell a story."

Dick Cassin, show chairman, said the show will feature lapidary (rock-cutting and polishing) and faceting (gem-cutting) demonstrations, as well as exhibits by gem and mineral dealers from around the Southwest.

"It's a rare opportunity to get these kind of people (dealers) together to see the variety of work that can be done with rocks and also a chance to really observe how it is done," said Cassin, a retired Midland petroleum engineer.

Beaty added that dealers will sell some of their work at the show, which is sponsored by the Midland Gem & Mineral Society and the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

"We would like to invite everybody to come out and see, and do their Christmas shopping," he said.

In addition to lapidary and faceting demonstrations, the show will feature silversmithing and bead-making demonstrations and museum-type geological displays.

Cassin said several hundred science students from area schools are expected to attend the show, which will be open from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m Saturday and 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Sunday.

Show exhibits will include a polished malachite table top, jeweled eggs and a 24-inch silver Roman-chain necklace.

PUC approves utility refund

By James Cullen
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — TU Electric Co. ratepayers will see lower rates in December after the Texas Public Utility Commission Wednesday approved a $70.8 million refund for fuel overcharges this past spring and summer.

The one-time refund will amount to $10 per 1,000 kilowatt hour and will be deducted from the December bill, a TU spokeswoman said.

The overcharges resulted from electrical demand from March through July that was lower than anticipated.

Fuel charges are estimated in advance, based upon expectations of normal weather conditions, said Kathi Miller, a TU spokeswoman in Dallas.

Mild weather from March through July caused less use of electricity, so TU was able to supply its electrical needs with lignite and nuclear generating plants and did not have to use plants that are fired by higher-priced natural gas, she said.

Feeling mighty free, easy, comfortable on the river

RIO GRANDE — On the way down to the Rio Grande, on the river, and on the way back to the plains of Midland by way of the mountains and mesas, two adventurers reveled in nature.

They roughed it — sort of.

These fellows, tough but hardly macho, hold a kind heart toward nature, wildlife and wilderness. They seem to have found their niches in the workaday world so that they can "play," as men are prone to do, on weekends.

They like to behave like civilized river rats.

Todd

The players are Tom Bruner, who has the build of a grizzly bear and the agility of a large cat, and Gene Grimes, who has the build of a fighter pilot and the eyes of a hawk.

Bruner, versed in the law, makes his living as a lawyer, climbs around mountains and is enthralled with white-water rafting.

Grimes, schooled in engineering, drills oil wells, plays racquetball like a Spartan, and sights his keen eyes on birds of the air.

Though hardy, neither is fool enough to walk on quicksand, to get into a spitting contest with a wildcat, or to take a beauty bath in the muddy Rio Grande.

But they raft on the river between two great nations: Mexico and the United States of America.

Down the highway on the way to the river, they whiled away the time like a couple of town sages on the courthouse bench.

"Beautiful country," said Grimes, as they approached mountainous Alpine.

They sighted an old house, which was not quite dilapidated enough to be part of the eon-old scenery. It seemed out of place, out of harmony with the mountainous backdrop.

It was for sale.

"I'd like to buy it and tear it down," murmured Bruner.

Down the way, the twosome, particularly Grimes, couldn't get enough of bird-watching.

It didn't much matter what it was: meadowlark, TV (turkey vulture), chaparral (roadrunner), hawk or owl. Any bird sighted in flight, resting on a fence, pole, or occasional tree or standing or running around got in Grimes' memory bank.

"If we forgot anything, it's too late now," Bruner said, as he barreled down Texas Highway 118 to Terlingua, home of the World's Championship Chili Cook-off, and Lajitas-on-the-Rio-Grande, home of Clay Henry, the beer-guzzling goat.

"We could live off the land — strangle lizards," quipped Grimes.

They might fish if their lives depended on it. But hurt a lizard? Hardly.

Why, that evening on the campsite at the entrance to Santa Elena Canyon and its Rock Slide, the two rafters were greeted by a rattlesnake. The critter was holding its territory quite well. Peaceably. Didn't say much. Didn't even shake his tail.

The rattler, apparently secure in squatter's rights, was there first and stayed put. By then, the campers were satiated with Bruner's cooking: "Everything out here tastes pretty good no matter what you fix," observed Bruner. He was right.

Once fed and once the dishes were washed, they were ready to sack out and do a bit of star-gazing before another day on the river. They were too sensible to contest the snake's rights. They settled down.

They were ready.

Already, they had unloaded the big rubber raft, inflated it, patched a reed hole, put the raft into the river, tied down their supplies, and set off for two days and a night on the Rio Grande.

Grimes was in a bit of pain.

The day before, he played racquetball with more vigor than a back muscle could stand.

Humor seemed to help more than whistling.

"I still couldn't win the Kentucky Derby," groaned Grimes. "Place or show at best."

On the oars, he, like Bruner, was adept. And while rowing and pivoting, Grimes, fortunately, was without the acute pain.

And while Bruner was at the oars while the raft was going down some Santa Elena rapids, Grimes, in an instance, forgot his pain and started climbing quickly to the raft's "high side." That's a smartness called "survival."

Other than the occasional rapids, the river, which was both high and muddy with fertile soil, was running serenely.

Life followed the river.

A great blue heron showed up.

Sandpipers strolled around.

Kingfishers passed by.

Swallows, those superb aviators, flew quite happily. Black phoebes graced the river. Eagles and falcons stayed out of sight.

Bruner, who is quite taken with rafting, enjoyed the toil of oarsmanship.

While Grimes may have been tempted to whistle and moan out of pain, Bruner occasionally blared out his Hippopotamus Mud Song.

"Mud, mud glorious mud.
Nothing quite like it
For cooling the blood."

After the weekend trip ended near the Chisos Mountains and amid a grove of cottonwood trees, Bruner and Grimes loaded up their modern-day wagon. They headed back through the mountains to the West Texas flatlands, where sunrises and sunset are daily symphonies.

He died Wednesday at his Monahans home.

Bragg was born Aug. 29, 1914, in Comanche County.

The 42-year resident of Monahans was a member of the First Baptist Church and a World War II Army veteran.

He married Alice Hopkins on July 24, 1939, in Los Angeles. He was a retired equipment repairman for Exxon.

Survivors include his wife; one son, Duane Bragg of Carrollton; one brother, Loften Bragg of Brownwood; one sister, Ora Stacy of DeLeon; and two grandchildren.

L.J. 'Jay' Wilson

KINSGLAND — Services for L.J. "Jay" Wilson, of Kingsland and a former Midland resident, will be 2 p.m. Friday at the Ninth Street Church of Christ. Burial will follow in Evergreen Cemetery, with Max Pratt officiating.

Wilson, 67, died Tuesday at his residence.

He was born Sept. 24, 1923, in Corsicana. He was a meat cutter and worked in the food service industry.

He married Ruby Louise McKenzie June 10, 1943, in Palacios. She preceded him in death.

Survivors include: his daughter, Martha Dodd of Tomball; two sisters, Betty Becker of Houston and Ruth Farmer of Searcy, Ark.; one brother, Herman Wilson of Spring; and two grandchildren.

Floyd W. Bustwar

SEGUIN — Floyd W. Bustwar, 63, of Seguin, died Wednesday.

Services are set for 2 p.m. Friday at Goetz Memorial Chapel in Seguin with Rev. Neil Kibbe officiating. Visitation at Goetz will begin at 10 a.m. today. Interment will be at Guadalupe Valley Memorial Park.

Survivors include his wife, Fay Bushwar of Seguin; a son, Bobby Bushwar of San Angelo; two stepdaughters, Judy Timmons and Anna Gunnels, both of Seguin; a stepson, Jim Peeples of Cost; and two brothers, W.L. Bushwar Jr. of Corpus Christi and Oscar Bushwar of Dallas.

Memorials may be given to Hospice of Guadalupe Valley Hospital.

Tranquil O'Neal

Graveside services for Tranquil Shequestiny O'Neal, infant daughter of Ethel Edwards, will be held at 2 p.m. Friday at Fairview Cemetery with the Rev. Odell Baker officiating. The services are under the direction of Baker-Jackson Funeral Home.

Tranquil was born on Oct. 29, 1990, and died that day in Odessa.

She is survived by her mother, Ethel Edwards of Midland; her grandmother, Hellen Edwards of Midland; and her grandfather, William Earl Edwards of Midland.

GOP backs push for more minority House districts

WASHINGTON (AP) — With encouragement from Republicans and the Supreme Court, blacks are pressing for the creation of new minority congressional districts next year, a demand that threatens once-secure Democrats.

Creating a black congressional district in Virginia, for example, could require stripping three Democratic congressmen of their most reliable supporters.

Comparable situations exist in Alabama, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Texas, according to an official of the Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights Under Law.

The conflicting agendas of blacks and long-term white Democratic incumbents present an unusual opportunity for Republican gains when new legislative district lines are drawn next year to conform to the 1990 Census.

The final Census figures won't be available until next spring. But preliminary data indicate that 19 House seats will shift, most of them going from northern industrial states to the Sun Belt.

Democrats are far stronger than Republicans in state legislatures where the new lines will be drawn. Through alliances with blacks as well as through court action, Republicans hope to neutralize, at least partially, that Democratic advantage.

The GOP tactic is driving a wedge between Democratic Party leaders and their most reliable constituency.

"There's going to be a real serious problem between blacks and the Democratic Party establishment," said Hank Sanders, a black Alabama state senator.

Even in Virginia, where Gov. L. Douglas Wilder is black, tensions are high between civil rights organizations and party officials.

Paul Goldman, the white chairman of the Virginia Democratic Party, complains that civil rights groups "have threatened Virginia. They say if you don't do this or you don't do that, we're going to sue you."

"We will oppose any friend or fight any foe to ensure that there is a black congressional district in Virginia in 1991," said Jack Gravely, president of the state NAACP.

Wilder has approached such proposals with extreme caution. The closest the nation's first elected black governor came to endorsing the concept was when he told the state NAACP that he saw no legal prohibition to such a district.

At the same time, Wilder warned blacks against redistricting alliances with Republicans, saying it would be "wrong to write off one party and get in bed with the other, not knowing what's in that bed. You might get bit."

To emphasize his point, the governor cited President Bush's veto of civil rights legislation.

Democratic concern about creation of a black district in Virginia is based on the fact that its likeliest location would strip blacks from the districts of Reps. Norman Sisisky, Lewis Payne and Owen Pickett, all Democrats.

Goldman referred to all three as "good Democrats who have worked hard for the party," and added that as party chairman he would take a hard look at "any lines that are drawn that would affect them or make it harder for them to get elected."

Civil rights leaders contend that legally the Democrats have no choice.

Assemblyman David Gantt, chairman of the New York Assembly reapportionment committee, said he was not prepared at this early stage to speculate on the percentage needed for black majority district.

tration hierarchy, could settle most issues before they reached the directors, he said.

Richard Pehl, MMH's director of human resources, said his policy was standard for the industry but indicated his willingness to work on other alternatives.

Collins did not seem pleased when the directors approved considering a policy clarification.

"I don't see a commitment from this board," he said. "People are laid off now and you want them to wait 30 days for a decision?"

Collins suggested that negative publicity about the hospital's personnel policy could hurt the institution: "Employees influence the perception of a hospital; you won't get good care in a hospital with a morale problem."

He requested that the board hear several grievances while policy changes are made.

The board agreed to hear one Wednesday and entered into a lengthy executive session, in which it heard the facts behind the dismissal of Linda Knight, a registration clerk at the hospital.

About eight members of Citizens Against Taxpayer Abuse attended the meeting, but left after the board went into executive session. Seven supporters of Collins also attended the meeting.

At the conclusion of the session, Ms. Knight was reinstated with back pay and Collins, who had attended the hearing, seemed optimistic that a grievance board would be formed.

In other business:

■ The district board approved two bids totaling about $67,000 for video monitoring equipment for laser surgery and a recovery room.

■ It set up a new bank account for Diagnostic Imaging Associates, MMH's outpatient radiology center, which should have three rooms open for business by Nov. 19 and the CAT Scan installed by mid December.

■ Board president Thomas Bruner told the directors that Clearview Hospital had 24 psychiatric and substance dependency patients and was $27,000 in the black in September.

■ Chief Financial Officer Jim Kendrick said MMH had served 3,105 Midland County indigent patients in the fiscal year ending Sept. 30 at a cost of $6.3 million. He said the hospital faced $26 million in bad debt, including $2 million for county indigent care not covered by taxes and $17 million from Medicaid and Medicare underreimbursements.

Woman finds small needle in candy bar

HUMBLE (AP) — A woman told authorities she found a small sewing needle hidden inside a candy bar Wednesday when she bit into it.

Belle Hanson, 75, who is visiting the Houston area, was not injured when she bit into the Baby Ruth candy bar and found the needle.

tradition," said Marybeth Hughes, a Lee High School instructor, who is assisting the homecoming student council sponsor.

A bonfire and pep rally will follow the parade at Lee High School.

The fun will continue Friday with a reception from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. at the school library.

"This is honoring all ex-Lee students and ex-faculty and staff ... this is also a new tradition at Lee," Ms. Hughes said.

"They will be free to roam the halls and visit teachers," Ms. Hughes said, adding that there will be an annual display and other memorabilia.

"What we want to do is bring back the true meaning of homecoming," Ms. Hughes said.

And a homecoming wouldn't be a homecoming without the traditional football game. The Lee High Rebels go up against the Abilene High Eagles at Memorial Stadium. Kick-off will be at 8 p.m.

In keeping with the "bring back the true meaning of homecoming" sentiment this year, a pre-game show featuring ex-cheerleaders, ex-Dixie Dolls and ex-band members will start about 7:30 p.m.

Ex-band members who wish to participate should go to the Lee band field at 4:30 p.m. on the day of the game for practice. If possible, they should bring their instruments; otherwise they will be supplied with instruments. Any questions can be directed to Randy Storie at the school.

Ex-cheerleaders and ex-Dixie Dolls need to meet at Memorial Stadium at 6:30 p.m. prior to the game. For more information, cheerleaders can call Barbara Hester and Dixie Dolls, Brenda Watson, both at the school.

Winding up homecoming on Saturday, students can build future memories at the homecoming dance. The dance will begin at 9 p.m. and last through 1 a.m. Tickets can be purchased in advance at school for $10 or at the door for $20, the evening of the dance.

Show tickets are $1.50 in advance and $2 at the door. Proceeds will benefit the Gem & Mineral Society's educational programs and its earth-science scholarship at Midland College.

The Gem & Mineral Society has approximately 150 members. The society sponsors geology field trips as well as lapidary, faceting and silversmithing classes.

land board.

Tucker Southerland, Mauro's campaign manager, said Gilbreath "speaks out of both sides of his mouth."

He disputed Gilbreath's criticisms of the office.

"We're pretty aggressive about royalties because we're trying to raise money for the school kids," Southerland said. "Gilbreath wants to raise money for kids but he doesn't want to charge producers any royalties."

Southerland said the land office has raised $2.3 billion for the state's school and university permanent funds since 1982 and has generated $20 for each $1 allocated to it.

The land office sells bonds for the veteran's land board as a standard operating procedure, he said. "It's a self-funding program."

He added that the land board provides loans for home purchases and repairs as well as raw land as a result of Mauro's expansion of the program.

"Wes really doesn't know anything about the land office," Southerland said.

LOCAL/AREA REPORTS

Robbery

An undetermined amount of cash was taken during the aggravated robbery of a convenience store Tuesday evening, police said.

The incident occurred about 10:40 p.m. when a man entered the Kent Kwik at 3310 W. Wall Ave., made contact with the clerk, jumped the counter, pushed the clerk and demanded money. The clerk, Lynda Moffett, 40, opened the register and the robber took the cash before fleeing.

A witness saw the robber leave the scene in a late-model yellow Cadillac with two other occupants.

The suspect was described as a black male, 6 feet 1 inches tall, about 200 pounds, wearing a white T-shirt and dark pants.

Burglary

ODESSA — About $21,600 in goods were taken during a burglary of a building reported to police Tuesday, Odessa police officials said.

London Square, 1213 W. 2nd St., was stripped of copper tubing from the ceiling, 14 window air conditioning units, five gas stoves, 54 chairs and other items sometime between Sept.13 and Sept. 30.

In addition, the burglary caused about $7,000 in damage.

At this time police have no suspects in the burglary.

Bond set

ODESSA — A 69-year-old Odessa man was arrested Tuesday in connection with the aggravated sexual assault of a child, police said.

The suspect, Walter H. Benedict, remained in jail Wednesday under a $20,000 bond set by Municipal Judge J.E. Weatherly.

Benedict allegedly fondled and performed oral sex on a 15-year-old boy in April of 1988.

The incident was reported to police in September.

Fire

ODESSA — West Odessa Volunteer firefighters responded to a major trailer fire in Ector County about 8:45 p.m. Wednesday, fire officials said.

Three units were sent to the blaze at Susan Street and Long Drive.

No one was injured during the incident.

Details of the fire were not available Wednesday evening.

Four Texans victims of blast

GRAND ISLE, La. (AP) — The bodies of four Texans were recovered by the Coast Guard Wednesday after a south Louisiana gas well exploded in flames.

A fifth man was missing and presumed dead and a sixth man suffered critical injuries in the fire and explosion late Tuesday afternoon, officials said.

The workers, all from Texas, were trying to cap the well when the explosion touched off a fire that burned for about three hours, the Coast Guard said. There apparently was no blowout or pollution.

The fire was out by about 8:45 p.m., said Lt. j.g. Carl Edmiston at the Coast Guard's 8th District headquarters in New Orleans.

The Coast Guard said it was still trying to determine what caused the explosion and fire.

First, one man's body was found under the rig in the marshes of Barataria Bay. Three other bodies were found within hours after the rig caught fire.

None of the names were released, pending notification of relatives.

The Coast Guard said all six men worked for a Houston-based company called Pacer Atlas.

Agent gets job back

HOUSTON (AP) — An agent removed from investigatory duties because he disclosed possible corruption by high-level officials must be reinstated by the U.S. Customs Service, an administrative judge said.

Fonsworth Jackson, a Merit Systems Protection Board administrative judge, ruled that agency officials failed to show "clear and convincing evidence that it would have restricted" Special Agent Louis Smit's work if he had not blown the whistle on certain officials.

Smit has said he was removed from investigatory duties because he disclosed possible official corruption brought to his attention while he was investigating a South Texas drug smuggling operation.

The judge ordered Customs to restore Smit's full duties and give him back pay and benefits, which could exceed $20,000.

Bucy named to panel

AUSTIN (AP) — J. Fred Bucy of Dallas, retired president of Texas Instruments, has been appointed as a member and chairman of the Texas National Research Laboratory Commission, Gov. Bill Clements announced.

The commission is the state agency that has been involved with the superconducting super collider project to be built near Waxahachie.

Bucy, 62, replaces Mort Meyerson of Dallas, who resigned. The term announced Wednesday will run until Feb. 1, 1993.

BCT seeks oversight

DALLAS (AP) — A Baptist Convention of Texas committee will investigate Baylor University endowments to check whether funds are being spent as stipulated by donors.

The committee wants to know if the contributions were made on the condition that the school remain under the convention's control. The decision to study Baylor donations was made Tuesday.

The study committee was formed in reaction to Baylor's sudden move away from Texas convention control.

Construction cleared

AUSTIN (AP) — A diplomatic process that began over 16 years ago has been completed, clearing the way to build the Los Indios international bridge near Harlingen, Texas, according to Gov. Bill Clements.

Clements on Wednesday sent formal notification to Gov. Americo Villarreal Guerra of Tamaulipas, Mexico, that final diplomatic notes have been exchanged by the United States and Mexico state departments.

The bridge across the U.S.-Mexico border would be the fourth to be undertaken or completed during Clements' current term, he said.

Gimmick backfires

AUSTIN (AP) — Calling himself a straight shooter, Steve "Bo" Sawyer has been handing out bullets while campaigning as a write-in candidate for the 10th Congressional District seat held by Democrat J.J. "Jake" Pickle.

But the campaign gimmick has backfired, he says, sparking fear among some voters.

"If I don't shoot straight, shoot me," Sawyer, 39, told voters as he handed them bullets.

"I think it scared a few people when I gave it to them," the candidate told the Austin American-Statesman. "I handed one out a girl on the University of Texas campus, and she just looked scared of me. It made me feel bad."

Father says he wanted written proof of gender

DENTON (AP) — A father who called for a sex check of at least two skillful female soccer players to make sure they were not boys in disguise, said he wanted only written proof, not a physical examination.

In a three-page letter sent to the media and the North Texas State Soccer Association, Jeff Gutknecht says he did not ask for a physical examination for girls who played for the Lewisville Blaze.

"I insisted on seeing proof that the players in question were actually girls," Gutknecht wrote, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported Wednesday.

Gutknecht accused the media of being "one-sided" in reporting his request.

But John Kebiro, the referee of a Lewisville Blaze game, said Tuesday that Gutknecht did request a female player be taken to a bathroom and examined to prove she was a girl.

"There were two men on the field," Kebiro said. "The shorter one, who did not come to the hearing, was the one who made the request."

Gutknecht and Randy Hill, another father, were suspended from youth soccer activities during a special hearing Oct. 15. The hearing was requested by the parents of Natasha Dennis, one of the girls whose gender was in question.

A call made by the Associated Press to Gutknecht's home was not returned.

Natasha's mother, Linda Dennis, and the mother of another player were also suspended from activities because they confronted the fathers after the game.

In his letter, Gutknecht said it was Blaze Coach Joe Johnson's idea to physically examine the girls. The coach denied that.

"There's really nothing I can say, but that's a lie," Johnson said.

Asthma deaths up in U.S.

CHICAGO (AP) — Asthma deaths have risen steadily in the United States, with the highest rate among black male children, and New York and the Chicago area are largely responsible for the deadly trend, researchers say.

Asthma afflicts an estimated 9.9 million people in the United States and "affects children, blacks and the poor disproportionately," researchers wrote in this week's Journal of the American Medical Association.

"For example, asthma hospitalization rates and mortality are more than twice as high among blacks as whites," they reported.

The researchers noted that from 1968 almost through the 1970s, the nation's asthma mortality rates declined.

But they added: "Since the late 1970s, there has been an alarming reversal. It seems that rates are increasing faster among younger children, aged 5 to 14 years, than among adolescents and young adults, aged 15 to 34 years."

A related journal article found that hospitalization rates for asthma among children up to age 17 also increased from 1979 to 1987.

An accompanying editorial called the studies' findings "worrisome because they come at a time when morbidity and mortality from many chronic diseases are decreasing, when we think we have a fairly sound understanding" of asthma, "and when we believe we have more effective drugs for its management."

The editorial was written by Drs. A. Sonia Buist of the Oregon Health Sciences University in Portland and William M. Vollmer of Kaiser Permanente Center for Health Research in Portland.

The asthma study examined government data on deaths of 5- to 34-year-olds from 1968 through 1987 in all 48 states except Hawaii and Alaska and in the District of Columbia.

Asthma deaths rose steadily from 1978 through 1987, the most recent year data were available, and the 1987 rate of 4.2 per million population was even higher than the 1968 level, 4.0 per million.

The highest mortality rate in 1987 was among non-white males — 13.5 deaths per million and almost five times higher than the level for whites of both sexes.

Lead researcher Dr. Kevin Weiss of George Washington University Medical Center and co-author Dr. Diane K. Wagener of the National Center for Health Statistics wrote that previous research tended to blame the increase largely on diagnostic changes. But that explanation alone doesn't suffice, they said.

When combined, New York City and the six-county Chicago metropolitan area accounted for 21.1 percent of the asthma deaths studied, suggesting those areas "are driving the U.S. trend" in rising asthma mortality, the researchers wrote.

Because of the problem's severity in inner cities, Weiss said, the National Institute for Allergies and Infectious Diseases soon will announce a major study aimed at understanding the disease's severity in urban areas.

Researchers could not fully explain the increased death rates.

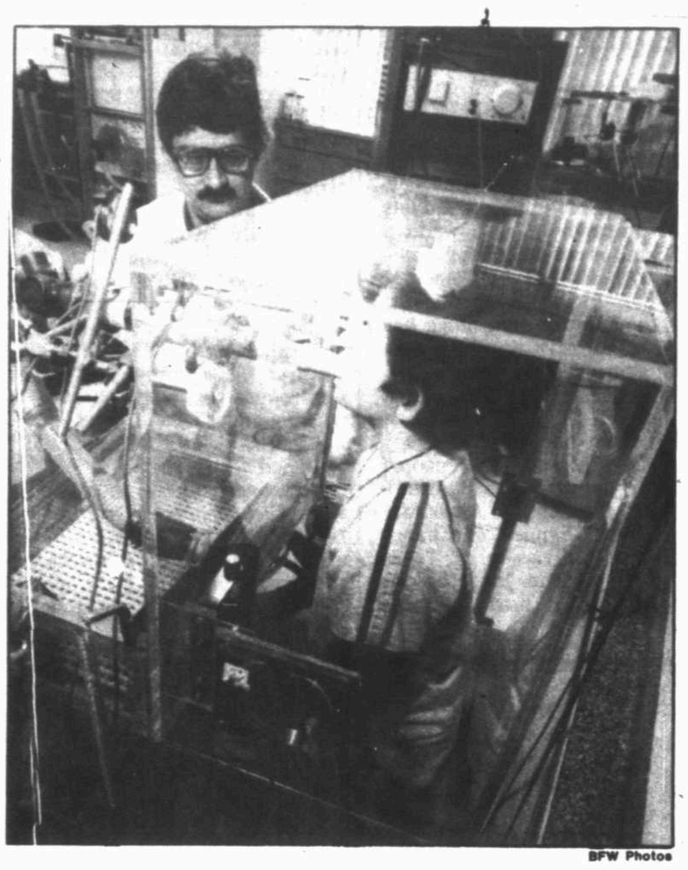

"The suspicions are that it's a combination of access to medical treatment" and a worse environment in urban areas, Weiss, also of the National Institutes of Health, said Tuesday.

In the related journal article, Dr. Peter Gergen of the National Center for Health Statistics and Weiss reviewed hospitalization rates among children and found that such hospitalizations increased 4.5 percent per year. The largest per-year increase was 5 percent among children 0 to 4 years old, while the smallest increase — 2.9 percent per year — occurred among 5- to 17-year-olds.

Young black children showed the largest increase in asthma hospitalizations. Among children up to 4 years old, blacks had about 1.8 times the increase of whites. In 1979, the hospitalization rate was 2.67 and 5.76 per 1,000 population for whites and blacks, respectively. By 1987, the rate had risen to 3.53 for whites and 10.16 for blacks.

Dr. Frank Speizer of Harvard Medical School, who was not involved in the studies, blamed the increased hospitalizations of blacks on "the inadequacy of our health-care system."

But Speizer, who is researching respiratory diseases, said the trend might speak well of doctors who now better realize that asthma patients often need hospitalization.

Side effects milder in new drug for colitis

NEW YORK (AP) — A new drug can ease the headaches, nausea and temporary infertility that afflict about 40 percent of the 1 million Americans with ulcerative colitis, doctors say.

Those side effects are the result of the sulfa drug sulfasalazine, the standard treatment for ulcerative colitis. The new drug, olsalazine, is equally effective against colitis but is not a sulfa drug.

That means it doesn't have the side effects of sulfasalazine, said Dr. Stephan Targan of the University of California Los Angeles. He is scientific adviser to the National Foundation for Ileitis and Colitis.

Ulcerative colitis, a severe inflammation of the colon, is characterized by diarrhea, rectal bleeding, weight loss and pain. It can occur at any age but often strikes people in their 20s.

The new treatment also has side effects, but they are milder than the side effects of sulfasalazine, doctors say. Olsalazine's side effects include abdominal pain and diarrhea in a small number of patients, researchers say.

Olsalazine was recently approved for commercial use by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration.

'Wonder drug' a concern

WASHINGTON (AP) — An American Medical Association group has issued a warning about a synthetic hormone in an effort to keep athletes from abusing it to increase their endurance.

Synthetic erythropoietin, a genetically engineered hormone developed to help anemia victims directs bone marrow to produce oxygen-carrying red blood cells. It is powerful enought to kill athletes who misuse it.

The AMA's Council on Scientific Affairs is worried that endurance athletes may get the hormone from a doctor — or on the black market — because victory may depend on keeping hard-working muscles fully supplied with oxygen.

Part of the problem is that EPO is good at what it does, scientists say. It can dramatically raise the percentage of red cells in the blood.

"If you run probably a 2K race (less than 2 miles), you'll probably see an improvement of 3 seconds per kilometer, which doesn't sound like much, but, if you're an elite athlete, it's a lot," said Michael N. Sawka, who studies how exercise affects blood.

The danger is that, in a person who starts with a normal red cell level, the EPO-enhanced level may rise so high that the blood becomes too thick for the heart to pump properly, they say.

The experts say the blood can reach the viscosity of motor oil, increasing the possibility of clots forming in the bloodstream. And the body's loss of water through sweat during exercise makes the viscosity greater, they say.

The result can be seizures, heart attack or stroke, the council's report said.

"Unfortunately, the sky's the limit," said Randy Eichner, a professor of medicine at the University of Oklahoma Health Sciences Center. "You would have mud, not blood."

Eichner is to take part in a symposium in New York City two days before the New York Marathon on Nov 4. The meeting is to warn athletes, trainers and doctors about misuse of synthetic EPO. It is sponsored by the hormone's manufacturer, Amgen Inc. of Thousand Oaks, Calif.

Injecting EPO is an easier way to seek an unethical endurance advantage than is blood doping — removing blood, storing the red cells and re-injecting them before a race, said Sawka, director of the thermal physiology and medicine division of the U.S. Army Research Institute of Environmental Medicine in Natick, Mass.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1990

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Reflect somberly on a career change or business expansion. A romance begun over the Christmas holidays could turn serious by Valentine's Day. Stay out of family feuds as spring approaches. Invest in property or stocks if you get an unexpected windfall. A sweet deal can be finalized next July. Postpone travel until you can really afford to take the time off from work.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Betsy Palmer, columnist James J. Kilpatrick, pitcher Fernando Valenzuela, golfer Gary Player.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A bank statement or notice may worry you. Check into it. A child does you proud. Find a meaningful way to reward this youngster. A financial project begins to show higher profits.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Getting involved in a community project could prove quite enjoyable. You need to circulate more. News from a loved one boosts your spirits. Look to your elders for helpful advice.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Looking for romance is a waste of time today. If it happens, it will fall into your lap. Do not be afraid to say "no" when you know you are in the right.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Someone's comments could harm your reputation. Demand that this person come up with proof. Spend the evening relaxing. Get together with old friends or read a good book.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A fear that your luck is running out may slow you down. Stop being so superstitious — hard work will pull you through! Meet a ticklish situation head-on — and be honest. Postpone romance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A simple misunderstanding can be cleared up with a single phone call. Your interest in science is stimulated by something you read today. Children will do a lot to brighten your evening.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your creative talents enhance your reputation with those you love. Stick to artistic work, where you can reap the benefits of your vivid imagination. Do not hide your feelings from mate.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Pressure may lead you to do something that is not in your best interests. Check documents regarding children's welfare. Overlooking a minor mistake now could make for future problems.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A friend may seek your counsel. Encourage this person to find the answer in his own heart. A visitor from afar could make certain demands on you. Set rules but be polite.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A long-awaited phone call will relieve your concerns. A complicated family situation can be quickly straightened out if everyone refrains from making suggestions.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be careful where you put your keys, mail or money. Expect a surprise from a conservative friend who is about to make big changes. Do not try to limit a personal relationship.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be prepared to do some sleuthing. Asking questions will help you understand a new friend. A feisty young person attracts new attention at work. Avoid trying to force an issue with a relative.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are trustworthy and good at keeping secrets. On the other hand, they are also gifted at turning other people's mistakes to their advantage! Their ability to uncover things that would remain hidden to others makes them wonderful detectives and reporters. Getting outdoors is the best thing these Scorpios can do for themselves. Their restless spirit is soothed by communing with nature. Spending a weekend in the country is the ideal way for these hard workers to recharge their batteries.

Opening lead: ?

Here's a test of your opening lead ability. Look only at the West hand and the bidding, select your opening lead, then give the reasons for your choice. This deal is from the team event at the recent World Bridge Olympiad, and the outcome of your match hangs in the balance.

Books have been written about how to choose the winning opening lead. In one of his works, the great British expert Terence Reese once penned: "There's no such thing as a blind opening lead, just deaf opening leaders." Both a Polish and an American squad bid to six clubs on similar auctions. One West found the killing lead; the other did not.

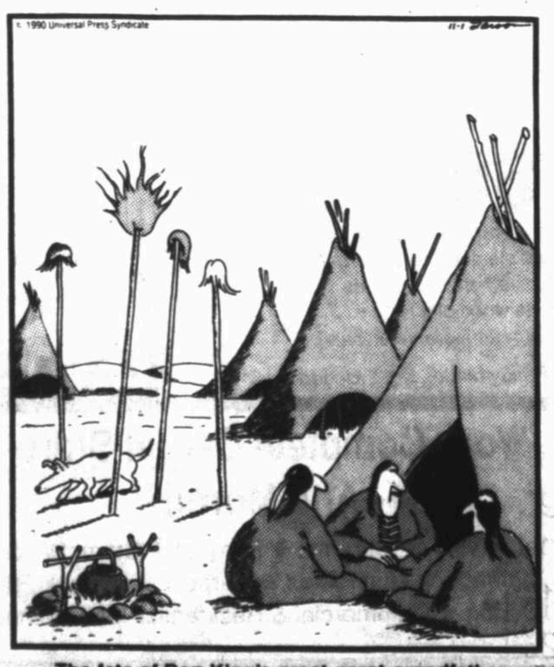

What inferences are available from the auction? The Polish West decided that, since his partner could have doubled the four-spade cue-bid or the Blackwood response of five diamonds if he wanted either of those suits led, there was no future in attacking either. So he led the nine of hearts away from the king, with most satisfactory results. East took the ace and in the fullness of time West had to score a club trick for down one.

The American West led a more plebian spade. Declarer won in hand, drew four rounds of trumps and cashed the ace of diamonds. After crossing to dummy with a spade, declarer discarded the queen of hearts on the king of diamonds, and West could make only his trump trick.

Trust in partner does have its rewards.

Eddie Fisher says Liz Taylor has 'severe' drug problems

NEW YORK (AP) — Entertainer Eddie Fisher says ex-wife Elizabeth Taylor has severe problems and he's "fearful for her."

Taylor

In a television interview with Geraldo Rivera broadcast Wednesday, Fisher said Taylor's problem with drugs is just as bad as when they were married in the early 1960s.

"I was using ... hardly anything when I was with Elizabeth," he said of his own 37-year addiction to drugs. "I was her nurse for all those years and her problem was tremendous. ... Whatever her problem was in 1960, it was the same in 1990."

Fisher said his ex-wife's problems are "very, very severe and I feel very fearful for her today."

Taylor's publicist, Chen Sam, said: "There's no comment on what the man's saying. Miss Taylor is doing very well. She's in perfect health."

Fisher said he stopped using drugs after being treated at the Betty Ford clinic six months ago.

Taylor, who acknowledged a 35-year addiction to sleeping pills and pain killers in 1983, has been treated for alcohol and drug abuse.

Taylor and Fisher married in May 1959. She left him and married Richard Burton in May 1964.

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Rock 'n' roll pioneer Chuck Berry is suing the magazine High Society, saying it published stolen nude photos of him with several women.

In the suit filed Monday in St. Louis Circuit Court, Berry claims that the magazine published eight photographs of him posing with unidentified nude women as the cover story for its January edition.

The suit says the photos were stolen, and claims their publication violated Berry's privacy.

An official of the magazine who declined to give his name said the magazine would not comment because it had not been served with papers in the lawsuit.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A company planning to produce a pay-per-view national TV broadcast of a 2 Live Crew concert has canceled the show, saying the band showed an "irresponsible attitude" by skipping a news conference.

Choice Entertainment said Tuesday it wouldn't produce the "Banned in the USA" benefit concert scheduled Nov. 8 at The Palace in Hollywood.

"What would happen if they decide not to show up for the concert? It's simply something we cannot risk," said Lisa Phillips, company president.

David Chackler, a band spokesman, said tour-related communication problems kept the group from the news conference.

Concert proceeds were to benefit the American Civil Liberties Union's Musical Majority to Fight Censorship project.

The group has canceled several concerts since June, when a judge in Florida ruled that the group's album, "As Nasty As They Wanna Be," was obscene.

A Fort Lauderdale jury acquitted band leader Luther Campbell and two band members of state obscenity charges Oct. 20 for performing songs from the album.

LONDON (AP) — Prince Charles on Wednesday made his first public appearance since an operation nearly two months ago on his broken arm, paying a call on an alternative medicine center in central London.

Prince Charles

The prince easily extended his right arm to shake hands with officials during the visit.

The 41-year-old prince broke his arm in two places in June when he fell from his pony during a polo match.

The prince underwent a three-hour operation at Nottingham University Hospital, where surgeons took a piece of bone from his hip and secured the fracture with a 6-inch metal plate.

NEW YORK (AP) — Two days after John F. Kennedy Jr. took the New York bar exam for the third time, he covered himself by taking Connecticut's bar exam.

Kennedy

Sadie Green of the Connecticut Board of Bar Examiners confirmed that Kennedy took the test, the New York Post reported Wednesday.

Connecticut's test is reputed to be easier than New York's, the newspaper said.

Kennedy, 29, took the New York exam July 24 and the Connecticut exam on July 26.

Results for both bar exams could be announced as early as Friday.

Kennedy needs to pass the New York bar exam to keep his job as a prosecutor in the office of Manhattan District Attorney Robert Morgenthau, who allows assistants only three shots at the test.

Passing the Connecticut exam would allow him to practice in that state.

Press questions Dockery pledge

DALLAS (AP) — Republican gubernatorial candidate Clayton Williams was questioned in a television interview over a $25,000 campaign contribution from a key figure in the 1985 athletic scandal at Texas A&M that led to NCAA probation at several Southwest Conference schools.

Panelist Ken Bunting of the Fort Worth Star-Telegram noted Williams' latest campaign finance reports showed the contribution from Rod Dockery, who, like Williams, is a Texas A&M graduate. Bunting asked how well Williams knew Dockery.

"I don't know him. I've met him twice," Williams said. "He's an Aggie and I think that's why he supported me."

Williams said he, himself, has contributed millions of dollars to his alma mater, but only small amounts to the athletic department, and never to individual players.

Williams also said during the interview at WFAA-TV studios in Dallas Tuesday that Texas A&M on one occasion rented one of his corporate jets to fly football players.

"I've given a scholarship to the A&M athletic department," he said. "I think it's $15,000. I've donated money to donate my airplane way back, that's all I've given.

"Now I've given a lot of money to A&M — several millions of dollars. But very little to the athletic department. I have never given an illegal donation, not only to an A&M athlete, but to any athlete anywhere."

He said no rules were broken when some Aggie athletes flew on one of his airplanes.

"I contributed my airplane, only I contributed the money, like $10,000, and then they hired the plane back — totally legal and my staff has checked it. But I only did that one time," he said.

Williams said he did not know any specifics about the type of travel or when the trip took place.

The NCAA began investigating Texas A&M in 1985 after media reports that Dockery, a Dallas booster, paid then-Aggie quarterback Kevin Murray $3,550 in 1983-84 for work he never actually did.

The probe never implicated Dockery, but did spread to other SWC schools in 1987, including Southern Methodist. The NCAA banned the SMU football program in 1987 after an investigation showed a booster slush fund of $61,000 was used to pay 13 players.

Gov. Bill Clements was on SMU's governing board and said he was aware of the slush fund.

Teacher, students set forth man's story

By Valerie Barna

PLANO (AP) — When death overtakes Bubba Baker, a Seminole-Apache Indian now tending Florida's Everglades, he wants two treasures buried in the grave with him.

One is a rifle more than 100 years old — the legacy of a Seminole chief who never surrendered.

The other is a looseleaf book recounting the glorious days of the River of Grass. The story is his own story, as told last summer to Judy Killion, a first-grade teacher at Christie Elementary School in Plano. It is illustrated with the Crayola-bright pictures of Christie first-graders.

The book has been copyrighted, Mrs. Killion said. She and the first-graders who contributed their pictures are discussing whether it should be published.

Baker, a wildlife management technician at Corbitt Wildlife Preserve on the northeast side of the Everglades, has loaned the children's original book to the Corbitt Teacher Training Institute in hopes that it can be used to foster positive environmental attitudes.

He has told Mrs. Killion he was particularly touched by the last lines in the book: "What if we could reflood the River of Grass? Maybe the panthers would come back ... Maybe the alligators would come back ... and maybe those who camp at distant fires would know that ... we care."

If the Christie schoolchildren create a new set of pictures under and around which Mrs. Killion can write the River of Grass story, that book might be presented to the National Wildlife Federation.

Mrs. Killion said her sister, Lori Warren of Melbourne, Fla., is investigating that possibility.

Mrs. Killion's visit with her sister last July set the stage for the book's creation. The two accompanied Baker on a daylong tour of the 60,000-acre wildlife preserve. They traveled in a mud buggy, a vehicle with huge tires that float on water.

They came to the remains of what are now called the Mound Cities — Caloosa Indian villages that ringed the Everglades in about 500 A.D. The mounds consist of sand brought by canoe from the Gulf of Mexico. They were used to protect the village from flooding Lake Okeechobee and from the ebbs and flows in the vast River of Grass, Mrs. Killion said.

For hours Baker told the women about the River of Grass, a hundred-mile-wide expanse of water studded with sharp-pointed saw grass. It extended from Lake Okeechobee in south central Florida to the Keys at Florida's tip.

Baker told about the alligators that lurked in the tall reeds; the black panthers that hunted on its edges; the playful manatees that sported in its warm waters.

He talked about the coming of the Spanish explorers and their impressions of the River of Grass. They called it "Everglades" because glades of green were all the eye could see, he said.

Abruptly, the Caloosa Indians vanished — the victims of white men's diseases, Mrs. Killion said. All that was left were piles of bones on the Florida Keys. For a long time, no one even realized what the bones were, Mrs. Killion said.

Baker talked about the bobcat and deer and the various reptiles that were native to the area. As he talked on and on about his beloved River of Grass, Mrs. Killion said, she and her sister grew more and more anxious to see it.

"I almost cried when he told me it was gone," Mrs. Killion said.

"It was so sad, that there was nothing left in all the world that was like the River of Grass. And now it was gone."

Mrs. Killion said the 50 square miles that remain of the River of Grass had no water last July. The underground aquifer was gone and Lake Okeechobee was low.

For the last 130 years, settlers had been building dams, channels and canals in the unique river area. The river's lifeblood went to water the white man's burgeoning sugar cane fields and the ranches in southern Florida.

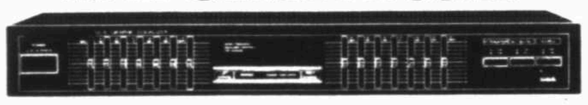

In retelling the story to Christie first-graders, Mrs. Killion used puppets and paints. She demonstrated the salt water to be found at the southern portion of the Everglades and asked the children why they thought water there would be salty.

The children — about 88 of 190 first-graders — were enchanted.

Owls eye Hogs' defense

■ Rice football coach Fred Goldsmith believes his team can exploit a leaky Arkansas defense Saturday.

Associated Press

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Fred Goldsmith's evaluation of Rice's chances against Arkansas depends on which reel is on the projector.

Roll the Razorback offense.

"You look at how in the world can these guys lose," he said. "How can we win? Their offense has been pretty much unstopped for most of the season. (Quinn) Grovey may be the outstanding player in the Southwest Conference."

Now a reel from the defense.

"You look at the defensive breakdowns and say, 'Maybe we have a chance,'" he said.

Goldsmith and his Rice Owls take on the Razorbacks Saturday night in Little Rock. Rice is 3-5, 1-4 in the Southwest Conference. Arkansas is 2-5 — its worst start since 1958 — and 0-4 in the SWC. During those four SWC games, Arkansas has given up 214 points.

Asked if Arkansas' 0-4 means confidence for Rice, Goldsmith said Wednesday, "I'd have my head in the ground if I said that wasn't a possibility. We're not awed, I'll put it that way."

His concern is the Razorbacks' speed on offense. He called Derek Russell one of the premier wide receivers in the country.

"All that speed and skill gives us a lot of problems," he said. "That's always been a problem for us. We haven't had the speed ... the big-play capability ... some of the things people have hurt them with."

Goldsmith pointed out that the Arkansas-Houston game was close for a half and that Texas only led the Razorbacks 20-17 heading into the fourth quarter. Then, all of a sudden, it was 62-28 Houston and 49-17 Texas.

If the Razorbacks can do that against two of the best teams in the league, he said, they are "very capable of doing it for four quarters."

Goldsmith took over at Rice in 1989 after serving as defensive coordinator at Arkansas under Ken Hatfield. In response to a two-pronged question, he said all the talk about paying back Arkansas for its move to the Southeastern Conference has been overblown.

"Teen-age kids have more on their mind to worry about," he said. "I have not heard one of our kids mention that."

Such talk, he said, is from the alumni and media.

The second part of the question involved personal motivation. He said Arkansas gave him the opportunity to enhance his reputation in this part of the country and that he had nothing but good memories about the people of Arkansas.

Half Marathon titles on the line Saturday

■ The absence of defending men's champion Bob Jackson leaves the door open for a pair of Midlanders.

By Bill Grimes
Staff Writer

As president of the Permian Basin Road Runners Club, Berry Simpson has his finger of the pulse of local road running as well as anybody.

But even he admits that the men's and women's crowns for Saturday's MRT-YMCA Half Marathon Run and Relay are up for grabs.

Simpson feels that, in the absence of injured defending champion Bob Jackson of Jal, N.M., Midlanders Ben Volk and Brian Bonner should be favored to win the men's division.

Jackson underwent two knee surgeries and treatment for phlebitis this summer, and has only recently resumed training after a long layoff.

But Volk and Bonner, though capable of a sub-six minute per mile pace, won't know if they'll lead the pack until after the 8 a.m. start at the Courtyard at Midland Park.

That's because there are several variables to consider:

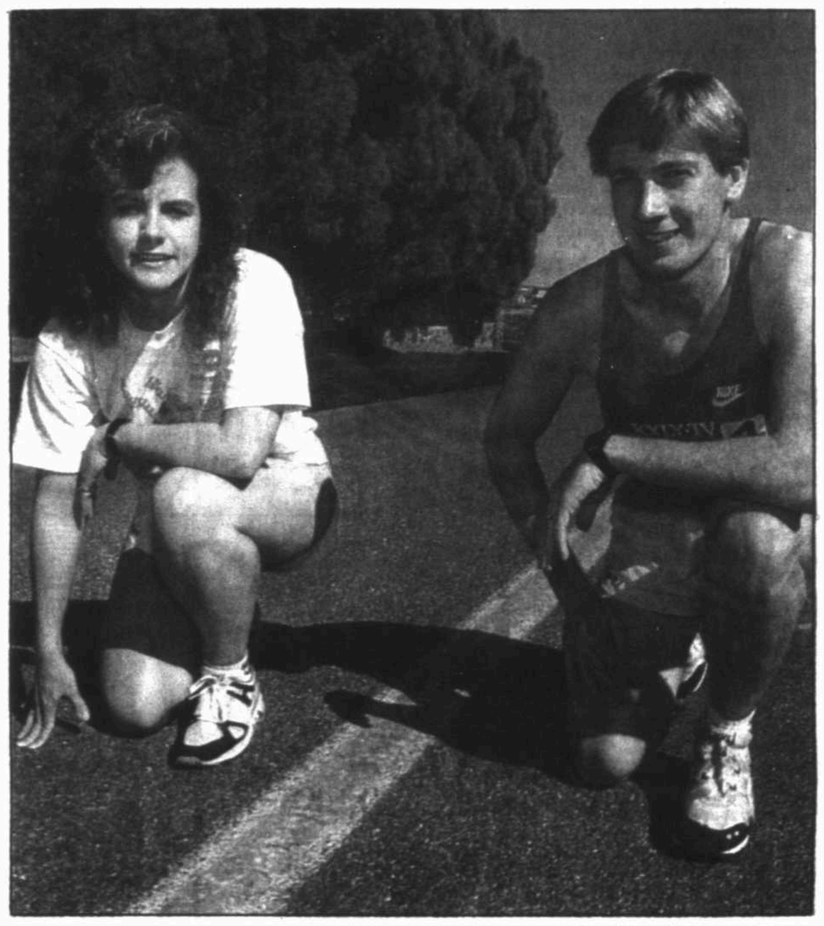

■ What will San Angelo standout John Stukey do? In past MRT-YMCA runs, Stukey has opted to run on a relay with some of his fellow San Angelo Road Lizards. If he does decide to go the whole way — and if he's in shape — Volk and Bonner could be in trouble:

■ Will anybody from the Lubbock and Amarillo running communities show up Saturday? Inside Texas Running lists races in both Amarillo and Lubbock for Saturday, but the Amarillo race is a 50-miler, while the Lubbock runs are two and four miles. That would seem to leave the possibility open for a South Plains or Panhandle runner to come in and challenge, which would please race official Roger Moon.

"We would like to increase our numbers, but it's been hard to draw outside Midland and Odessa," Moon said.

■ And what about Dave Felice? The Midland Fire Department captain has in the past expressed a desire to qualify for the 1992 Olympic Trials marathon. He also has shown a

Leyland top NL field manager

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Jim Leyland, who turned the Pittsburgh Pirates into contenders and guided them through the pressure of a pennant race, was selected the National League manager of the year on Wednesday.

Leyland

Leyland took a team that went 74-88 and was fifth in the NL East in 1989 and molded it into a division champion at 95-67. The Pirates overcame the New York Mets and all the odds in the stretch to finish with the second-best record in baseball.

The Pirates had Barry Bonds and Bobby Bonilla for offense, but did not have a set starting rotation or a relief ace. Leyland juggled his staff and wound up with 18 different pitchers getting victories.

Leyland got 17 of the 24 first-place votes and finished with 99 points. Lou Piniella, who led Cincinnati to the World Series championship in his first season with the Reds, got three first-place votes and was second with 49 points.

Montreal's Buck Rodgers also got three first-place votes and was tied for third with 32 points with Los Angeles' Tom Lasorda, who got the other first-place vote. San Francisco's Roger Craig and New York's Bud Harrelson tied for fourth with two points each.

No manager was named on all 24 ballots. Two members of the Baseball Writers Association of America in each NL city vote, and voting was completed before the start of the playoffs, in which Cincinnati beat Pittsburgh in six games.

Jeff Torborg of the Chicago White Sox was selected the American League manager of the year on Tuesday.

Leyland, 45, won in his fifth season with Pittsburgh. He was a career minor league man before that, playing seven seasons as a catcher in the Detroit organization and then managing for 11 years in the Tigers' system.

He joined the White Sox as a coach in 1982 and studied under manager Tony La Russa, who remains one of Leyland's closest friends, and was finally hired to manage in the majors in 1986 with Pittsburgh.

Pittsburgh improved the first three years under Leyland, going 85-75 in 1988 and challenging the Mets for most of the season. But in 1989, the Pirates slipped far back and they were given little chance this season of competing with the Mets, the defending champion Chicago Cubs or St. Louis.

The Pirates struggled for the first two weeks, then hit their stride and took over first place. Pittsburgh stayed there for most of the season and, even when the Mets nudged ahead in the first week of September, would not fold as many predicted.

Leyland would not let his team collapse, guiding the Pirates with an intense yet cool demeanor.

Mike Tyson loses suit

Associated Press

NEW YORK — A jury on Wednesday decided that former heavyweight champion Mike Tyson fondled a woman at a Manhattan dance club in 1988 and awarded the woman $100 in compensatory damages.

The five-women, one-man jury will return to Manhattan's federal court on Thursday to hear testimony on Tyson's financial status before ruling on punitive damages.

The woman, Sandra Miller, asked for up to $2.5 million in punitive damages in her civil lawsuit.

The jury deliberated about 4½ hours before finding that Tyson, the former heavyweight champion, grabbed Miller's breasts and buttocks

Perry Mason enters the sporting world

Having weighed some of the stories of the past few years that pass for sports news, I am of the mind that we ought to change our interpretation of what exactly "sports" is.

Price

Maybe in order to win a high school district football championship in the state of Texas, quarterbacks should not only have Perry Mason on retainer, but be versed in myriad precedent cases where ineligibility questions are involved.

If all major colleges and professional football teams deem a 200-pound defensive lineman too small to play for them, he could at least get a scholarship to some fine institution of higher learning with a respected law school, then eventually sue the NCAA and NFL for lack of due process. He could argue he wasn't allowed to present his assessment that 200-pound linemen can fight off the block of a member of the 300-pound club like Joe Jacoby.

Maybe in order to win the NCAA Division I basketball championship, "student-athletes" should be required to attend at least one basket-weaving class without the promise of a new pair of alligator boots or a shiny new Buick or a bundle of cash every week. That way, they could learn the intricacies of fine hand manipulation, then translate that to manipulation of the facts.

Then we have a whole new class of sportsmen not only with law degrees, but the mental abilities to utilize those degrees to the fullest.

Heck, they might come to defend those lowly female sports writers who have to fend off trendy electronic media by getting post-game quotes and maybe a different angle from the locker room, on deadline.

Player-lawyers could represent former coaches — those who teach all about fair play, taking the good with the bad, and how much character competing in athletics brings to young people — when said coaches feel their reputations have been besmirched by every institutional body that governs them.

Sports writers would be assigned not only to the state district courts on game-day Fridays, but federal courts of appeal and quite possibly take that cushy assignment on the steps of the U.S. Supreme Court the first Monday of every October.

Not only would they know the intricacies of the infield-fly rule and how to compute earned run averages, they would be versed in the decorum acceptable in the court room, where women sports writers are allowed but good chili dogs are not served (it goes without saying that nachos are a no-no down at the courthouse).

Championships will be won by retrieving affi vits and persuasive closing arguments, not tailbacks with 4.5 speed or 6-11 forwards who can run the length of the court. To the devil with the notion that rules are to be followed. Rules are made to broken, right?

Maybe I'm exaggerating, but I get a little tired of people who think they can run a reverse around the rules by hiring a lawyer (or "attorney" for all those uppity people with law degrees).

All I can say is that I'm reminded of a coffee mug I saw at a novelty shop once. The mug had a little inscription on it that read "The first thing we do? Kill all the lawyers."

RUN: Late entry $15

penchant for showing up at a race after spending the night fighting fires — and winning.

As of mid-week, Felice was going to anchor the Midland Fire Department relay, but hadn't ruled out going the whole way, which would necessitate a move to the first leg.

Felice, who has run 5K on the road in 15:02, 15:03 and 15:14 this year, as well as a 2:42 marathon this fall, thinks he could run a 1:10 in Saturday's race.

Volk finished a distant second to Jackson with a time of 1:22.12. Barring any of the aforementioned variables, the native Montanan hopes to be in the hunt with Bonner, his weekend training partner, for an individual championship.

"We're shooting for six-minute mile pace," Volk said. He thinks his marathon training regimen may give him an advantage over Bonner, who doesn't run quite as many miles.

"I feel like I may have the edge in endurance if it comes down to the last mile or two," Volk said. "I've put in some 18 to 20 mile runs recently.

"Of course, Brian's up to 14 (miles), so he's run the distance, too."

Bonner's best finish was a second to former course record-holder Bob Jones in 1987. He also won the Septemberfest Run For Fun two-mile race, while Bonner won the 10-kilometer event.

The women's division appears to be even more up for grabs. Midlander Cyndi Simpson would probably be the odds-on favorite to defend her 1989 crown, but she — and husband Berry — are running in Sunday's New York City Marathon.

"The women's field won't be at its competitive best," Berry Simpson said. Several top local women have either moved out of the area or have been relatively inactive.

Of those still available, Donna Reker has been challenging Cyndi Simpson in recent shorter races since her return to competition. Kay Arrell may also be a challenger.

As Mary Laird, former Angelo State runner Mary Hanson was second to Cyndi Simpson in last year's women's division, but has been missing from the scene lately.

"We haven't heard from her in awhile," Berry Simpson said.

As in previous years, Saturday's seventh annual race will be run on a out-and-back course from the Courtyard at Midland Park to the northern edge of the Green Tree Country Club area. At the northern end of the course, runners will make two separate loops around the Green Tree subdivision.

Though it would have been cheaper to pre-register, runners can enter the race on Saturday beginning at 7 a.m. in the race headquarters at Bless Your Heart. The late entry fee is $15 for individuals and $60 for relay teams. T-shirts are available to the first 300 entrants.

Proceeds for the race benefit the Midland YMCA. Race official Dick Hardin expects 300 total entries, including 75 individuals. Assuming that there are late entry fees, 300 paid runners nearly covers the anticipated $4,000 cost of the race, Hardin said.

The race makes money through local and corporate sponsorships, Hardin added.

Sponsors include Rogers Ford-Volvo, Better Homes and Gardens-First Realty of Midland, Texas Instruments, American Airlines, Bill Williams Tire Center, the Permian Basin Chapter of the Texas Society of Certified Public Accountants, Mike Lewis & Associates Real Estate, Bless Your Heart, Magic 102.1 FM, KMID-TV, Gatorade and the Courtyard at Midland Park.

Jordan holes out

Staff Report

Jordan used a 9-iron to ace the 138-yard hole. Witnessing the event were Andy Hancock, Jim Pritchett and Royce Gillmore.

Chaparrals face stiff challenge this weekend

Staff Report

The Midland College men's tennis gets its toughest test of the fall season Friday and Saturday at the Fairway Oaks Invitational Indoor Tournament in Abilene.

That's because the Chaparrals are an at-large team in a bracket comprised mostly of Southwest Conference teams.

"Our players have pretty much had things going their way ... and they've had some good wins ... but this another notch higher than most of the competition we've faced this fall," said MC coach Joe Williams.

Last weekend the Chaparral men took doubles wins over Division I teams and then blasted New Mexico State University in a dual meet 8-1, losing only one singles match in three sets.

"Although most of them are freshmen, these men can play with almost anyone. This weekend they get to test themselves against opponents that are just as good as they are," Williams said.

Heading the MC contingent is number one player freshman Greg Muller of South Africa. Muller won the Rolex ITCA Southwest Regional Junior College title and then finished fourth in the national tournament two weeks ago. Freshman Toby Curtis and freshman David Draper, both from England, hold down the second and third singles spots.

The Fairway Oaks event wraps up the fall season for the Chaparral men.

SUIT: Boxer emotionless

after she refused his advances at Bentley's Disco on Dec. 10, 1988.

Tyson, who had denied that the incident ever took place, showed no outward emotion as U.S. District Judge Michael B. Mukasey read the verdict, which found the fighter had committed battery but not assault.

In his instructions on the law, the judge had explained that assault required no finding of contact but must include a threat. A finding of battery requires actual contact, he said.

Tyson said he was not disappointed with the verdict. "If they thought it was serious, they would have given her more than 100 bucks," he said.

When asked how she felt, Miller, a 26-year-old computer operator from Queens, said, "Great that they know that he did it."

Tyson, who testified during the three-day trial, acknowledged that he was at Bentley's Disco that night but denied knowing or ever touching Miller.

Cowboys avoid panic button

Associated Press

IRVING — The Dallas Cowboys have tripled last year's victory output and coach Jimmy Johnson sees nothing but improvement down a road leading to next April's bountiful NFL draft in which they have three first-round draft picks.

Dallas was 3-5 at mid-season and could have been at .500 if it wasn't for another Randall Cunningham football miracle which stole a 21-20 victory for the Philadelphia Eagles away from the Cowboys last Sunday.

Although Dallas is next to last in the NFL in total offense, Johnson said the Cowboys have avoided the panic button.

"We're already a much better football team than the one we had when the season started," Johnson said. "The second half of the season I think we can show what we can do offensively. We'll still be inconsistent at times because we have some players who didn't go to quarterback school or training camp."

Johnson was speaking of first-round draft pick Emmitt Smith of Florida, who made quarterback school but missed training camp; second-round draft pick Alexander Wright of Auburn, who missed some quarterback schools and training camp; fullback Alonzo Highsmith, who was obtained in a trade from Houston a week before the regular season began; and offensive guard John Gesek, who was obtained in a trade with the Los Angeles Raiders.

"We had three motion penalties last week against the Eagles and they were against players we didn't have in training camp," Johnson said. "They were critical penalties, too. That's the kind of thing that causes you to be inconsistent. With another training camp we can get rid of those kind of mistakes."

Smith is learning the NFL is tougher than the Southeastern Conference.

He averaged 5.6 yards per rush in his career at Florida. For the Cowboys, he's averaging 3.6 yards per carry.

"He's going to be a big-time back in this league," Johnson said. "But missing training camp hurt him a lot."

Johnson has enjoyed this season much more than the last.

Johnson, who was 1-15 in his rookie year, called it the worst coaching experience of his life.

"It was miserable and I never want to go through another like it," said Johnson, who was used to playing for national championships at the University of Miami.

Owner Jerry Jones had predicted Johnson would win as many games in the first third of the season as Tom Landry (3-13) did in his final year with the Cowboys.

This week he said, "I feel better about our future than I've ever felt before. We're getting ready to take advantage of our opportunities. We're getting the financing set up to be aggressive in signing our draft picks."

The Cowboys will have 17 draft picks in April, including three first rounders: their pick, Minnesota's pick in the Herschel Walker trade and New Orleans' pick in the Steve Walsh trade.

Dallas has two second rounders, two third rounders, and two fourth rounders. They then have a pick in each round through the 12th.

Greenwood readies wishbone

Area Football

By Bill Grimes
Staff Writer

GREENWOOD — To Bob Bellard, there's a right way and a wrong way to run the wishbone. And the Sonora head football coach should know.

Bellard is the son of wishbone inventor Emory Bellard, who conceived the offense while an offensive assistant at the University of Texas and then rode the innovative attack to moderate success at Texas A&M and Mississippi State.

Oddly enough, the younger Bellard doesn't use the wishbone at Sonora. But the Broncos will face Greenwood's wishbone attack in a District 6-3 showdown Friday at J.M. King Memorial Stadium.

A Greenwood win coupled with a Reagan County win over Colorado City will put the Rangers into the playoffs. A Sonora win will throw the race into chaos, because Sonora, tied with Greenwood at 2-1 in district play, must face district leader Crane next week, while Greenwood travels to a beatable Colorado City and Reagan County faces an awful Kermit team.

In other area action Friday, Andrews travels to Monahans in what amounts to a District 3-4A elimination game; Big Spring hosts Pecos; Lamesa hosts Lubbock Dunbar; Stanton travels to Forsan; McCamey visits Coahoma; Iraan hosts Ozona; Rankin visits Sanderson and Garden City hosts Robert Lee.

Bellard, who worked with his dad at Mississippi State for three years, said Greenwood's wishbone may be beyond stopping, even with his expertise.

"I have some idea on how to stop it, but it's not possible to stop if executed right."

And that's what worries the Bronco mentor.

"Greenwood runs it like it's supposed to be run," Bellard said. "A lot of teams use it as a power offense, but it works best when you use the triple option."

Greenwood quarterback Cody Mebane has at least mastered two of the three options. The 190-pound senior hasn't been much of a factor passing this season, but he has been a factor running the football, with 649 yards on 84 carries.

The Rangers also rely on the fullback tandem of Shan Cumba and Joe Kilgore, who have combined for 860 yards in eight games.

Greenwood coach Bob Purser agrees with Bellard that stopping a well-executed wishbone is easier said than done.

"When you know the wishbone and have a pretty good idea of how to stop it, you still have execute it (the defense)," Purser said. The Greenwood mentor hopes the nature of his triple-option attack can offset the visitors' perceived physical advantages on the line.

"I think their front line is a little stronger," Purser said. "But when you're running the option, you don't necessarily have to block them all."

A key line matchup between a pair of all-state candidates will be Greenwood right guard Mike Bradford against Sonora left defensive tackle Robert Gallion, a 6-1, 225-pounder who has dominated opponents all season — as has Bradford.

Sonora has some offensive weapons of its own, most notably quarterback David Mirike. Purser is impressed with the Bronco signal-caller, who runs Sonora's...I-formation.

"He's faster than Cody (Mebane), though not as strong," Purser said. "He can run three or four different types of option."

Mirike can also hand off to fullback Oscar Perez, tailback Eric Espinosa, and wingback Adam Youngblood. Unlike many I-formation teams, the Broncos feature a balanced rushing offense, with all four backs handling the ball regularly.

Prices gain

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices rallied late Wednesday to move above $35 per barrel in a third straight erratic trading session that largely ignored news on the Persian Gulf standoff.

West Texa Intermediate had been down about $1 per barrel in early trading on the New York Mercantile Exchange, but a surge in the afternoon pushed it up by about $2 from the morning lows. Crude settled at $35.23 per barrel, up 69 cents for the day, on contracts for delivery in December.

There was no dominant news moving the market.

Natural gas prices were also mixed. December delivery contracts fell 4.8 cents to $2.36 per 1,000 cubic feet.

GM loss

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp. said Wednesday it lost $2 billion in the third quarter, the biggest quarterly loss in automotive history, largely due to the enormous costs of retooling or closing inefficient factories.

Even without the $2.1 billion in restructuring charges, the world's largest automaker made just $109 million during the quarter, far less than Wall Street forecasts.

Industry analysts said GM's accounting decision to deduct all of the costs from the third-quarter bottom line reflected the new management's decision to get a fresh start following the retirement of Chairman Roger Smith this summer.

Dollar gains

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar advanced against most major foreign currencies in domestic

The dollar rose to 1.5185 German marks in New York from late Tuesday's 1.51485. In earlier European trading, the dollar was quoted at 1.5150 marks, down from 1.5190 late Tuesday.

In London, the British pound was quoted at $1.9440, compared with $1.9485 late Tuesday.

In Tokyo overnight, the dollar closed at 129.35 yen, up 0.35 yen from Tuesday's finish.

Other late dollar rates in New York: 1.2865 Swiss francs; 5.0855 French francs; 1,138.00 Italian lire; and 1.16675 Canadian dollars.

High oil prices shaking economy

■ The Federal Reserve Bank reports economic declines throughout the U.S. as a result of oil prices.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Higher oil prices are shaking the confidence of consumers and businesses in many regions of the country, the Federal Reserve Board said Wednesday in a generally bleak assessment of the nation's economy.

Every one of the central bank's 12 districts reported either slow growth or an actual decline in economic activity.

"Most districts reported that retailers were generally pessimistic. ... (They) blamed lower consumer confidence brought on by greater uncertainty and higher fuel prices," said the report, known as the "beige book."

District Federal Reserve banks said economic activity was holding up relatively well in the Midwest and Northwest but the Boston district warned, "Manufacturers are battening down the hatches."

The report, based on information collected through Oct. 19, was prepared for the Nov. 13 meeting of the Federal Open Market Committee, which meets every six weeks to set the central bank's monetary policy.

In response to enactment of the budget deficit-reduction package, the central bank on Monday lowered a key interest rate, the one charged among banks for overnight loans, by a quarter of a percentage point to 7.75 percent.

Economists believe policymakers will be reluctant to cut the rate again soon for fear of further weakening the value of the dollar or adding to inflation pressures already boosted by higher oil prices.

Oil shortage threat eases

PARIS (AP) - The International Energy Agency reported Wednesday that threats of oil shortages due to the Persian Gulf crisis are easing as OPEC countries boost output and industrial nations cut demand.

In a report made public as delegates from the organization met privately, the IEA predicted the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries will produce 22.6 million barrels of oil per day in the last quarter of 1990.

This would be a slight increase over 21.9 million barrels in the third quarter.

IEA Chairman Ulrich Engelmann told reporters after the meeting that the situation is "somewhat easier than anticipated."

Nonetheless, he said, "if something happens, there isn't any flexibility in the supply situation."

Personal spending up slightly

■ Personal spending power is under pressure from Gulf crisis but Americans are not pulling back.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Americans' consumer spending jumped 1.1 percent in September, the government said Wednesday, outpacing a 0.5 percent growth in personal income and contributing to the lowest savings rate in three years.

The Commerce Department report "shows consumer purchasing power obviously is under intense pressure in the aftermath of the (Persian Gulf) oil shock," said Stephen S. Roach, senior economist with Morgan Stanley & Co.

Nevertheless, Roach added, "Consumers are really sort of clinging tenaciously to their lifestyles. Their spending is holding up just fine."

However, the Federal Reserve reported separately on Wednesday that consumers' and businesses' confidence in the economy was waning in many regions of the country. Every one of the central bank's 12 districts was reporting either slower growth or an actual decline in economic activity.

"Most districts reported that retailers were generally pessimistic. ... (They) blamed lower consumer confidence brought on by greater uncertainty and higher fuel prices," said the Federal Reserve's report based on information collected through Oct. 19.

The Commerce Department said that Americans' incomes reached a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $4.70 trillion in September, a $23.8 billion increase over August.

At the same time, it said spending reached a rate of $3.73 trillion, up $39.9 billion from a month earlier. It was the biggest increase since a 1.2 percent gain last June.

In its report on the third-quarter gross national product on Tuesday, the department had said consumer spending from July through September rose 3.6 percent, well above the 0.2 percent advance from April through June.

But Roach said spending will drop to "the 1 percent vicinity" during the current quarter.

"There's no way we'll be able to hold (the 3.6 percent pace) up in the weak income and low savings environment," he said.

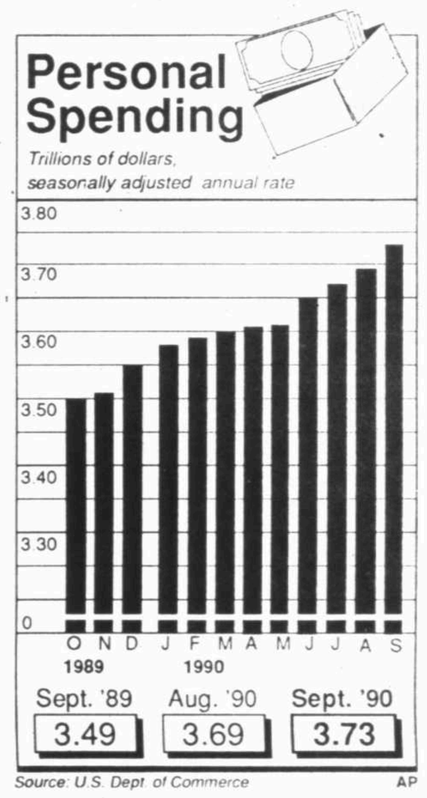

Consumer spending represents about two-thirds of U.S. economic activity and Roach said the lower level of consumption this quarter means a temporary decline in overall economic growth.

But he said his company was not projecting two consecutive quarters of declining gross national product, the total output of the nation's goods and services.

The Commerce report said the rate of Americans' savings as a percent of disposable income fell to 3.5 percent, down from 4.1 percent in August and the lowest since a 3.3 percent rate in October 1987.

The report said Americans' income after taxes increased 0.4 percent, up from a 0.2 percent gain in August.

The spending and income figures were not adjusted for inflation. When adjusted, spending rose 0.3 percent after declining 0.1 percent in August. Disposable, or after-tax, income fell 0.3 percent

Factory orders edge upward

WASHINGTON (AP) — Factory orders for manufactured goods inched up 0.1 percent in September but would have fallen except for the added cost of oil products, the government said Wednesday.

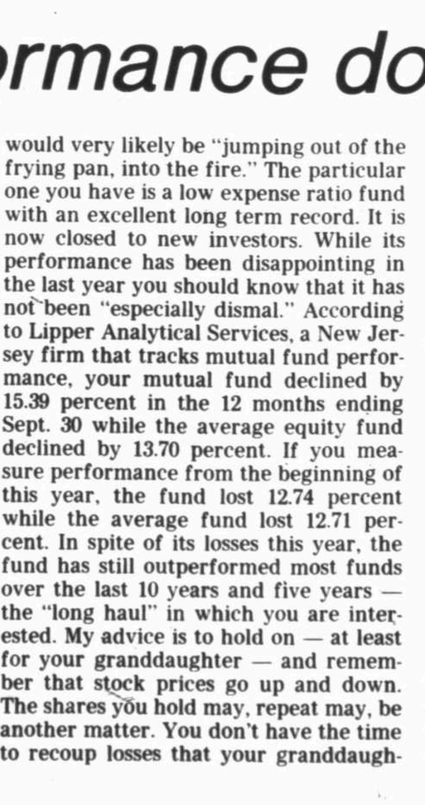

The Commerce Department report points "to a rather fragile state of affairs in the manufacturing sector," Stephen S. Roach, senior economist with Morgan Stanley & Co., said.

The department said orders of durable and non-durable goods totaled a seasonally adjusted $244.5 billion, up just $159 million from the August level and the weakest advance since orders actually declined 1.9 percent last June.

"Price increases in the petroleum refining industry continued to heavily influence the data," the report said. "Excluding petroleum, orders were down 1.1 percent."

Orders for durable goods — "big-ticket items expected to last more than three years — fell 1.4 percent to $125.2 billion after a 0.9 percent decline in August. It was their third drop in four months.

Non-durable goods orders, which include petroleum products, advanced 1.6 percent to $119.3 billion in September. But excluding oil, non-durable orders were down 0.7 percent.

Horizontal wells get dual legs

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — It's horizontal drilling with a new twist.

Called dual-leg drilling, the technique which involves drilling two legs instead of one has been been tested successfully in the prolific Austin Chalk geologic formation of South Texas and is now being touted as one of the most promising technologies in today's oil patch.

While dual-leg wells cost more to drill -- one operator using the technology estimated his costs rose by more than one-third – they also promise to double production since they cover twice the acreage.

Carl Jameson, president of GLG Energy in Austin, Texas, said, "It gives us the benefit of having two horizontal wells instead of one. We are getting a substantial increase in oil from each of the legs."

In August, a partnership half-owned by GLG completed work on one of the state's first dual-leg wells, four miles west of Dilley in Frio County.

Jameson said the well cost about $1.3 million to drill –conventional wells run just less than $1 million – and last week was producing 1,609 barrels of oil per day and about 400 million cubic feet of natural gas per day.

Rick Hebert, vice president of operations at Meridian Oil Co. in Houston, said his firm has completed horizontal wells similar to the McDermand 1, but none in Texas.

Other operators in South Texas say they have been eyeing dual-leg drilling for some time but have not yet attempted a well.

Dallas-based Oryx Energy Co., one of the nation's largest independent drillers, said it has so far side-stepped dual-leg drilling because it believes it can produce more oil at a cheaper price with conventional horizontal drilling.

Tom Gladney, regional reserve development manager for Oryx in Houston, said a major roadblock to dual-leg drilling is the need for longer-than-normal leases.

Because the tip of each leg must be at least 467 feet from the lease boundary, many leases are not long enough to accommodate the span of dual-leg wells, which can extend 5,000 feet across, Gladney said.

In addition, Gladney said dual-leg wells often miss several hundred feet of producing formations because of the space needed to angle the two axes from vertical to horizontal. Two wells on the same property can eliminate that gap, he said.

GLG's Jameson said dual-leg drilling could become the drilling technique of choice. "We think it's going to catch on."

Poor performance doesn't mean sell fund

By Scott Burns

Q. In June 1989 I purchased $10,000 in shares of a mutual fund for my 6-month-old granddaughter. I bought this for her for the "long haul" for college funds, etc. It has gone down over $10 per share since purchase — more than 10 percent — and I am apprehensive. Should I change out of the fund now and perhaps switch to two or three different funds for her? Which ones?

Burns

Also, my husband and I have shares in the same mutual fund as well, as does our 28-year-old single daughter. Everything is looking bleak these days but this fund is especially dismal and I don't know what to do, sit tight or what?

A. Switching to another equity fund would very likely be "jumping out of the frying pan, into the fire." The particular one you have is a low expense ratio fund with an excellent long term record. It is now closed to new investors. While its performance has been disappointing in the last year you should know that it has not been "especially dismal." According to Lipper Analytical Services, a New Jersey firm that tracks mutual fund performance, your mutual fund declined by 15.39 percent in the 12 months ending Sept. 30 while the average equity fund declined by 13.70 percent. If you measure performance from the beginning of this year, the fund lost 12.74 percent while the average fund lost 12.71 percent. In spite of its losses this year, the fund has still outperformed most funds over the last 10 years and five years — the "long haul" in which you are interested. My advice is to hold on — at least for your granddaughter — and remember that stock prices go up and down. The shares you hold may, repeat may, be another matter. You don't have the time to recoup losses that your granddaughter has. Also, your investments are being used to generate income, not accumulate. If you are pressed for income you might consider reducing your equity exposure.

Q. I have talked to several representatives of insurance companies about a policy that could help cover estate taxes if put in ownership of one of my children. Since I am 65 the rates are fairly high to pay for a policy within nine to 10 years. I have about $65,000 in insurance and a house worth about $200,000 that could be used to pay taxes. My children are, in a manner, against buying the insurance because it would lower my income. They also are concerned that interest rates might go down. A trust we have could pay for the insurance but that would stop its growth. Am I being shortsighted in this? What is your opinion?

A. Many insurance questions are matters of the heart, not calculation. This is something that insurance planners tend to forget as they whiz through figures fixated on estate tax reduction. I think you should be happy that your children are more concerned about your income and welfare while you are alive than about the size of your estate after taxes when you are dead. There is no law that says you need to maximize your estate for your children. It's nice to leave them something but it should not come at the expense of your standard of living.

Q. I recently purchased a new car with a variable rate loan agreement. The loan is for $18,000 at 9.25 percent with 48 payments of $448.35 a month. The interest rate will vary with the four week average of 182 day T-bill rates rounded to the nearest 0.05 percent. When and how can I track the four week average of the 182 day T-bill rate? If I have sufficient cash to pay off this loan at any time but have this cash in various CD's and money market accounts, is this loan wise as far as interest spread?

A. Watch your newspaper for the results of the weekly T-bill auction, usually

INVESTORS' GUIDE

How to withdraw from multiple IRA accounts

By Bill Doyle

Q. Withdrawals from individual retirement accounts and Keogh self-employed retirement plans must commence at age 70 1/2. You have explained that a person with two or more IRAs is allowed to make the total required withdrawal out of one of his IRAs.

Doyle

I have a Keogh plan in a local bank's certificates of deposit earning 9.5 percent interest for 10 years. I also have two mutual fund IRAs in gold funds. When I do reach 70 1/2, I plan to make the required withdrawals based on the joint life expectancy of me and my wife.

To do that, can I combine the values of all three accounts and make withdrawals from only one?

A. Not unless the regulations are changed by the time you turn 70 1/2. As the rules now stand, you will be able to total up the values of your two IRAs and make the required withdrawals from just one of those accounts. But you will have to make separate withdrawals from your Keogh plan. You won't be able to combine the IRAs and the Keogh plan for required withdrawal purposes.

There is an alternative available to you. You can terminate the Keogh plan and put that money into an IRA. That kind of rollover is permitted from all qualified retirement plans, including Keoghs and IRAs. You could then make your required withdrawals from just one of the IRAs.

But I caution against going that route. You would be giving up that generous 9.5 percent interest the Keogh CDs provide. It's most unlikely you get even close to that much in your present IRA mutual funds.

Face it, mutual funds holding stocks of gold-mining and related companies have not been good investments. Statistics from Lipper Analytical Services show the value of an investment in the average gold fund plunged 13.26 in the three months ended Sept. 30 and was up only 7.07 percent over the past 10 years.

My advice is to stay with the Keogh CDs until they mature, withdrawing only the required amounts. And give serious thought to switching your IRAs out of gold funds.

Q. What purpose is served by making withdrawals from one IRA by a person who has several IRAs?

A. It allows an IRA participant to keep higher-earning money at work longer.

Let's say you have three IRAs, one earning 6 percent, another earning 8 percent and the third earning 10 percent. When age 70 1/2 rolls around, you are required to begin making withdrawals at a rate sufficient to exhaust all your IRA money during your life expectancy or the joint life expectancy of you and your IRA beneficiary.

By starting your withdrawals from the 6 percent IRA, your two higher-interest IRAs will continue to build up at 8 and 10 percent — increasing the money available for your later retirement years.

When the 6 percent IRA is exhausted, you start taking money out of the 8 percent IRA and, finally, out of the 10 percent account.

Q. I just turned 65 and will continue to work at my present job. I will not apply for Social Security benefits at this time. I have monthly pension checks coming from a previous employer. Can I roll these pension checks over into an IRA until such time as I decide to retire?

A. Nope. Contributions to a regular IRA, even when made monthly, must come from "compensation" — wages, salary, commissions, fees, tips and such — for personal services, from self-employed income or from alimony and separate maintenance. Periodic pension payments do not qualify.

If you had received your pension or other qualified retirement plan money in a lump sum, you could have put it into a rollover IRA, thus keeping it deferred from income tax until you withdraw it.

Assuming your present job pays well, you're wise not to apply for SS benefits yet. The horribly vindictive "earnings test" penalizes workers ages 65 through 69 by slashing those benefits $1 for every $3 earned over $9,360. By postponing your application, you will collect big benefits later on in life, if you live that long.

BURNS: Beware sucker rate

held on Monday.

In addition, there are tables such as "Money Rates" that include the most recent T-bill rates. Another alternative is to subscribe to "Selected Interest Rates," a weekly publication of the St. Louis Federal Reserve Bank. Unless the 9.25 percent is a "sucker rate" you have a very attractive loan. The least expensive car loan I have seen recently is 9.9 percent and most are closer to 11 percent. What do I mean by "sucker rate"? The first and last time you see 9.25 percent is in the first 4 week period of the loan. If the rate rises rapidly after that the loan may be a problem. Something very much like this happens with many people who buy houses with ARMs (adjustable rate mortgages). The rate in the first year can be attractively low. Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp., for instance, is now quoting 7.75 percent arms with a 2 percent cap in annual change. When the interest rate is reset at the end of one year, however, the interest rate can rise dramatically. A typical ARM, for instance, is based on the one year Treasury bill index, currently 7.58 percent PLUS a margin spread of at least 2.50 percent. That makes a renewal rate of 10.08 percent for some ARM holders — a much higher rate than the starting 7.75 percent.

SUPPLY: Oil shortage eases

(From 5C)

Engelmann described the meeting as routine and said the delegates devoted most of their time to planning next year's budget.

The report said total fourth-quarter world oil supplies among nations outside the former communist bloc should total 53.4 million barrels per day, up 400,000 barrels from the third quarter.

Consumption in the 21 industrial countries making up the IEA, founded in 1973 to plan strategy for energy crises, should fall by 800,000 barrels per day in the fourth quarter, it said.

The latest estimates suggest a better balance in oil supply and demand than the IEA thought at its last meeting in September, according to the report.

The reasons are falling demand, a moderate third-quarter buildup of OPEC stocks, and increased output by OPEC members to make up for the 4.5 million barrels per day lost to world markets by the U.N. embargo of Iraq and Kuwait.

"There isn't any shortage of supply in oil product markets," said IEA Executive Director Helga Steeg.

Industrial countries will need to draw on a bit less than 1 million barrels of oil a day from commercial reserves after New Year's to keep the figures in balance, the report said.

"Short of any demand restraint and draw of government controlled stocks, the draw of commercial stocks is practically the only possible response left to cope with unforeseen demand surges or supply disruptions," it said.

The IEA urged members to keep their strategic petroleum reserves as high as possible and warned that the oil market remains vulnerable to disruption.

Saudi Arabia, the main staging point for the U.S.-led multinational forces arrayed against Iraq in the Gulf, has boosted production to 8 million barrels per day to help make up the shortfall caused by the embargo.

The IEA said Saudi Arabia could keep output at that level but probably not increase it much.

American Exploration buys Conquest for $160 million

HOUSTON (AP) — American Exploration Co. is acquiring another Houston-based oil company, Conquest Exploration Co., in a deal estimated at $160 million.

Under terms of the agreement, American Exploration, an independent oil and gas company, will pay $1.90 per share for about 12 percent of Conquest's common stock and exchange 0.44 shares of American Exploration common stock for each remaining share of Conquest stock. Conquest has more than 44.4 million shares outstanding.

In addition, American Exploration will buy 5 million shares of Conquest voting preferred stock and assume Conquest's debt of about $55 million.

The deal is subject to the approval of shareholders of both companies and regulatory agencies.

"The acquisition of Conquest will significantly increase our cash flow over the next few years and balance the very long life reserves added by our acquisition of Hershey Oil Corp. earlier this year," Mark Andrews, chairman of American Exploration, said.

At the end of 1989, Conquest had 6.4 million barrels of crude oil and 112 billion cubic feet of gas. Conquest also had 222,300 undeveloped acres in North America.

Israeli soldier sentenced for beating two Palestinians

JERUSALEM (AP) — An Israeli soldier was sentenced Wednesday to two months in prison for participating in the beatings of two Palestinian brothers, one of who later died.

Three other soldiers were given suspended sentences by the military court. All four — who could have faced a maximum of 20 years in prison each — were demoted in rank.

The soldiers maintained throughout the trial they were only following orders from top officers to beat Palestinian riot suspects.

Also Wednesday, a spokesman for Defense Minister Moshe Arens said the minister proposed limiting the number of Palestinians working in Israel. The plan would reverse Israeli policy begun in 1967, when Israel captured the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

Last month, Israeli authorities closed off the occupied lands for four days following a wave of violence between Palestinians and Jews.

The case of the four soldiers was seen as a test of the army's willingness to punish troops convicted of brutality in suppressing the 34-month-old Palestinian uprising.

The three-judge court earlier this month found the defendants guilty of the Feb. 7, 1988, Gaza Strip beating of brothers Khaled and Eyad Akkal. Eyad died hours later at Shifa Hospital in Gaza City.

They were charged with aggravated assault because prosecutors found no direct connection between the beating and the death.

Israel army radio also quoted the judges as saying the defendants "violated basic norms of an advanced society ... (and) operated under the distorted concept that everything is justifiable for the sake of a military mission."

1st Lt. Ofer Reshef was ordered to serve two months in prison, given a six-month suspended sentence and reduced in rank to sergeant.

Maj. Yitzak Levitt, 32, received a three-month suspended sentence and was demoted him to 1st lieutenant. The panel said he was not directly involved in the beatings, but was responsible for them.

Staff Sgt. Eli Shukrun and Sgt. Gad Zinbar were eac.. given a five-month suspended term and reduced in rank to private.

Earlier this month, the chief army prosecutor ordered an investigation of Col. Effie Fein, who was commander of the soldiers' unit at the time of the beatings.

In the early months of the uprising, officers said they were ordered to beat people caught rioting, but not strike those in custody. But many soldiers said the orders were not clear. The army has since banned beatings as punishment.

Arens's proposal to limit the Palestinian work force in Israel was made Tuesday before Parliament's Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee, said spokesman Dan Naveh said. It would have to be approved by the government.

Meanwhile, Israel is under pressure to find jobs for tens of thousands of Soviet Jewish immigrants in a country with an unemployment rate above 10 percent.

A three-man commission appointed by Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir to look into the Temple Mount shootings released its findings Friday, stating that Palestinians had caused the violence by throwing stones at police and that police were justified in using gunfire because their lives were in danger.

WORLD

Warsaw Pact will no longer serve as military alliance

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — After menacing the West with Soviet-led military might for more than three decades, the Warsaw Pact reportedly will cease to exist as a military alliance next year.

A senior Hungarian official said Wednesday the six-nation alliance would end joint military maneuvers in December and would stop operating as a military alliance in June.

Thereafter, the Waraw Pact would function "only as a political forum," he added. The official, who spoke to selected reporters on condition of anonymity, gave no further details.

The Warsaw Pact was formed in 1955 in the early years of the Cold War as a Soviet response to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Originally comprised of the Soviet Union, Albania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Hungary, Poland and Romania, the alliance was reduced to seven members after Albania withdrew in 1968.

The pact began to lose cohesion with the start of liberalization within the Soviet Union. That led to the advent of democracy in East Europe last year and a further weakening of the alliance, which was reduced to six members with the unification of Germany.

At nearly completed conventional arms talks with the 16-nation NATO, Warsaw Pact members are basically negotiating as individual countries. The pact nations often advocate positions closer to those of the West than to Moscow.

The Kremlin is withdrawing its forces from several former satellites, including Hungary, which was among the East bloc nations that ousted the Communist Party last year.

Col. Anatoli Kirilov, deputy commander of the Soviet troops in Hungary, said Wednesday that all his soldiers would be out of the country by June 30, 1991, as scheduled under an agreement signed in March.

By late October, more than half the 50,000 Soviet troops had left, the state MTI news agency reported.

Hungary announced earlier it would leave the military arm of the Warsaw Pact next year unless the military functions ceased. Last week, Czechoslovak President Vaclav Havel said the pact's military structure would be abolished and turned into a body with a "consultative political function," the Czechoslovak state news agency said.

Woman sentenced for selling pornography

BEIJING (AP) — An illiterate woman was sentenced Wednesday to life in prison for selling tens of thousands of pornographic books, according to official reports.

The Beijing Evening News said the case involving Li Xiurong, 39, and six others was the largest ever in Beijing of dealing in pornography.

It was the first reported case since China approved strict new laws last week that call for severe penalties, including death, for those who produce or sell pornographic materials.

China has no legal definition of pornography, and anything showing a naked body or even kissing can be considered obscene. In many cases, books considered pornographic in China may be nothing more than racy romance novels.

PERSIAN GULF CRISIS

Troops in gulf can shop from catalog

DALLAS (AP) — An Army tent in the blazing Saudi Arabian desert may seem an odd place for Christmas shopping.

But thanks to the Dallas-based Army and Air Force Exchange Service, a mail-order catalog will allow the 200,000 troops in the Middle East to send gifts to their loved ones back home.

The catalog includes items found in most any stateside store: model planes and tanks, puzzles, roller skates, walkie-talkies and wagons.

There's also the Bear Forces of America — 20-inch teddy bears wearing the uniforms of the four service branches, available in desert camouflage.

There are housewares, jewelry, clothing and a grandfather clock. Soldiers can even order a hand-held tanning wand, although the idea may not have much appeal in the desert.

Despite the Saudi ban on non-Moslem religious symbols, angel ornaments and creche figures also can be ordered.

About 98,000 copies of the Christmas catalog have been sent to Saudi Arabia. The troops' orders will be processed at AAFES in Dallas, filled from a warehouse or vendor and sent to U.S. recipients.

The Christmas catalog is available at military exchanges around the world. But orders from those stationed in the Persian Gulf, who may have nowhere else to shop, will get top priority.

"We just don't want them to order something for their girlfriend or their mother and have it come back not in stock. Because they don't have another choice," said Maj. Gen. Jeffery B. Kahla, AAFES commander.

In addition to the mail-order service, AAFES also tries to boost morale among troops in the Gulf by circulating hit movies, operating vending machines and managing pay phones. The organization also plans to open barber shops within about two weeks.

One walk-up "generic fast-food outlet" has opened, with plans for four or five more. Next may be a mobile Popeye's fried chicken franchise.

But perhaps the main focus of the 95-year-old, self-supporting organization is operating cut-rate stores on bases in the United States and around the world for members of the military and their dependents.

"One of the things I think most of our American troops over there are accustomed to is the ability to go in and browse in nice stores. And we want to give them that capability, every day if their duties will allow that," Kahla said.

"Our goal is customer satisfaction, whether people are in the sands of Saudi Arabia or living in a beautiful house in Dallas, Texas."

The stores are known in Air Force slang as "BX," for base exchange; in the Army, it's "PX," for post exchange. Altogether, AAFES generates about $7 billion in annual sales and employs 82,000 mostly civilian employees.

The AAFES set up field exchange stores within 15 days of the beginning of Operation Desert Shield, Kahla said.

The 50 shops in Saudi Arabia offer soldiers candy, sodas, cigarettes, lotion and batteries — lots of batteries, mostly for cameras and personal stereos, also for sale. Shoppers also can buy socks, underwear and plastic thongs, popular for walking across the burning sand to the showers, Kahla said.

The only things missing are alcohol and adult magazines, barred by the Saudis, Kahla said.

Exchange sales in Saudi Arabia have reached about $3 million a month, he said.

Some of the shops operated originally from the backs of trucks. Most now are in cramped tents, with shelves of wooden slats and sand or wood floors. Few as yet have air conditioning or refrigerators.

Hostages need warm clothes, food

By Leslie Dreyfous
Associated Press

Simple daily rituals are growing more difficult for Margaret Williams, whose son and daughter-in-law are among Saddam Hussein's "human shields."

She sets the dinner table and recalls a month-old letter smuggled out of Iraq in which her son says food is growing scarce. She pulls an electric blanket down from the closet and thinks of the desert's unforgiving cold of winter.

"It's awfully hard to do these things when you know your kids are suffering," Mrs. Williams said Wednesday from Germantown, Tenn. "We've just got to help these people out."

The families of many hostages held in Iraq and Kuwait have in recent weeks expressed similar concerns to members of the State Department's Kuwaiti Task Force, spokeswoman Diane Salisbury said.

"We are looking into the possiblilty of sending packages to our embassy in Baghdad to be forwarded to the Iraqi government, which would then hopefully forward them to the hostages," she said.

Similar attempts have been made to get letters to hostages, but Ms. Salisbury said the process was complicated and the results unclear. She also said it was not necessarily possible or advisable to make contact with Americans in hiding.

"In any case," she said, "we are holding the Iraqis accountable for taking care of the hostages — whether or not they receive packages from home."

Donnita Cole isn't willing to leave the situation up to the Iraqis. The Odessa, Texas, woman has been on the phone to Washington, D.C., daily for more than three weeks, pressing for a way to get her husband the clothes he needs.

"At this point in the game I don't care whose responsibility it is," said Mrs. Cole, who on Tuesday heard from a freed French hostage who spent much of his captivity with 50-year-old John Cole.

"The Frenchman's words to me were: Please, please tell your government it must get their men some cold-weather clothes," she said. "I've got to help John. When the temperature starts falling out there, I want him to have a pair of socks on."

Like Mrs. Cole and many other oil workers' wives, Patricia Hale has experienced desert cold. She's spent winters in the Middle East with her husband, who was wearing short sleeves when invading Iraqi troops removed him from an oil rig Aug. 2.

"I think a lot of Americans have some misconceptions about the desert climate," Mrs. Hale said from Spring, Texas. "They think about sand and the sun burning all the time."

"But there's no place colder than the desert at night," said Mrs. Cole, who has become a close friend of Mrs. Hale since the crisis began.

Mrs. Cole said that in his telephone call Tuesday, the freed French hostage also warned her husband and other Americans were not getting adequate nutrition.

Freed foreigners have repeatedly warned of dwindling food supplies but Ms. Salisbury said such reports were impossible to confirm.

"We do think sanctions have taken some effect," she said. "How much food is getting to people, however, is difficult to assess."

Hostage families say they have grown increasingly impatient with the occasional letter and second-hand reports that have emerged with hostages — most recently about 300 French citizens — freed by Saddam.

"We don't want our husbands over there without proper food and clothing," Mrs. Hale said. "If there's a way my government can help alleviate that problem and they refuse to do it, well, I find that totally unacceptable."

Popular prints enliven menswear

By Nancy Miller Lewis
Copley News Service

Remember ...

When a muted paisley tie was considered "wild"?

When a guy, presented with a candy-stripe shirt and neat print tie, would whine, "Are you sure these go together?"

When a man dressed in madras slacks immediately was categorized as either a golfer or a sartorial P.T. Barnum?

Well, tuck those memories away with your black-light posters.

Because they're gone. Dead. Passe.

The radical prints revolution has arrived. And, for once, this is a fashion movement that's being lived out in real life, instead of just in the style pages.

Baggy, bright, crazy-print pants that would have brought snickers from the world at large just a couple of seasons ago are the hot tip for the volleyball gods at the beach. Young guys in relaxed work environments wear designs like turquoise and purple printed shorts on the job.

And those Hawaiian-print shirts? Well, they look so normal now, it's hard to imagine that guys ever thought twice about looking like a tacky tourist in them.

"I think the whole thing started in the athletic market, with the guys who go to health clubs," observes Tom Julian, associate director of the Men's Fashion Association. "The baggies really cinch the waist, that's why body-builder types have gone after them. They have small waists and they can show off their biceps and pecs."

"They fit like sweatpants. Gold's Gym has had the style out for a while," he adds.

Gold's Gym still features lots of the printed baggies, including its own brand, selling for between $26 and $30, says Andrea Nomura, a buyer for Gold's.

MOST OF THE styles are 100 percent cotton and are available in either knit or sheeting. The Space-Age adhesive closure is of 10 featured at waistbands and ankles (so shoes can be put on over the pants), making the pants an easy fit in sizes small, medium or large.

"Bright colors are popular and so are prints with either a black or white base," Nomura says, adding that men — usually between the ages of 17 and 27 — like to wear the baggies with oversize shirts or tank tops.

Budget-minded shoppers may be more familiar with the trend now, however, through the street vendors. Weekend shoppers find the sidewalk entrepreneurs selling the printed pants everywhere from gas-station lots to parking areas of closed banks. Prices are usually less than $20. Brand names aren't necessarily the draw at the sidewalk stands — in fact, many of the sellers sew their own baggies.

While the young guys wearing all the cutting-edge stuff seem to put their outfits together quite effortlessly, Julian has some pointers for those who might be less than sure their prints have come.

Men who aren't too comfortable with prints will probably fare better starting off with printed shorts, rather than going immediately into full bloom with baggies.

Shorter and/or stockier men should avoid large-scale pattern pants or shorts. Instead, they would do well to seek out vertical stripes or subdued patterns.

When trying to put together a print top and slacks or shorts of a different print, remember opposites attract. A print with a white background may match up nicely with another print on a black background. A large-print shirt will probably look OK with a small-print pair of shorts.

FINALLY, JULIAN TOSSES in a last word of caution:

"Don't try to get too matchy-matchy with prints — or you'll end up looking like you're wearing pajamas."

For the most part, Julian believes the prints will stay in the casual wear side of the closet.

"Most men probably still will try to keep their casual and professional wardrobes separate. Even though lifestyles are more flexible, the print-sportswear look is so bold and dynamic, it doesn't translate easily into the traditional wardrobe," Julian notes.

Men in the corporate arena who favor classic clothes may try translating the trend by combining a bolder-pattern tie with a fine-line striped shirt, or a thick-stripe shirt with a floral-print tie.

Hair needs protection from sun all year

NEW YORK (AP) — If your hair is still suffering the ravages of too much time at the beach, remember that the sun is a year-round enemy. So get rid of dry, split ends with a haircut and conditioner and buy a flattering hat to keep winter wind and sun at bay. You also might want to try styling gels rather than hot rollers, curling irons and blow dryers, which can further damage hair, according to Graham Webb Academy of Hair based in Arlington, Va.

Fur fury to fly again this season

By Thomas F. McElroy

NEW YORK (AP) — To wear fur or not to wear fur?

That is the question many New Yorkers faced this last winter as animal-rights activists mounted a major assault against the fur industry.

Even as fur prices plunged and several retailers declared bankruptcy, the battered furriers fought back. Round one has ended and both sides are claiming victory.

"No question the animal rights groups have had a great deal to do with that decline," declares George Cave, a national director for Animal Rights Mobilization, an animal-rights group based in Williamsport, Pa.

"Their tactic is to keep sales high, but they're driving prices way down to keep sales volume at the same level," Cave adds.

"The movement has forced the issue to be in the media, but it hasn't changed anybody's mind," counters Lili Glassman, a spokeswoman for Saga Furs, an international fur marketing and trade association.

"In fact, the American fur industry has projected retail sales at $1.9 billion — up from $1.86 billion for last season," Glassman says.

The fur industry has been in trouble, but officials blame it on a worldwide glut of furs and warm winters in the United States and Japan, the two largest consumers of mink.

"Up until 1986 the fur business grew rapidly — sales tripled in dollar volume," according to Glassman.

"By 1987 farmers were overproducing and at the same time we had a stock market crash and the fur market slowed — it was a natural correction," Glassman explains.

Nevertheless, the battle has been fierce.

Anti-fur demonstrations were held across the nation, especially on Nov. 25, a date designated by the animal-rights movement as Fur Free Friday.

That day, Bob Barker, host of the game show "The Price is Right," led 2,500 protestors in a march down Fifth Avenue.

Barker, a longtime animal-rights activist, resigned as host of the Miss USA pageant over its award of a fur to the winner.

Four fur shops were vandalized in Miami and Fort Lauderdale, Fla. Dozens of other cities were hit with protests, including Beverly Hills' ritzy shopping district.

The issue even went prime-time when the television series "L.A. Law" aired a show that presented Canadian trappers as brutes and showed animals being mangled in traps.

AP LaserPhoto

Four models show off furry — but not fur — fashions by American designer Norma Kamali. Some fashion houses are responding to the anti-fur campaign, but furriers say many consumers still want the real thing.

Activists also adopted confrontational tactics. There were reports of fur wearers being jeered at, sprayed with ketchup or red paint, and even having their coats slashed.

ARM, formerly known as Trans-Species Unlimited, says it doesn't condone violence.

"It was a couple of isolated incidents," Cave says. "We don't advocate any kind of illegal activity."

The fur industry used the vandalism incidents for propaganda purposes and character assassination, according to Cave, who says he believes the strategy backfired.

The fur industry also downplays the attacks on fur wearers.

"There might have been a few incidents of spray painting — more a scare tactic to make people think they might do it," says Glassman.

All this has changed the industry's promotional strategy to emphasize a fur wearers' freedom of choice and the humane aspects of the industry.

When Barker called the nation's fur farms "animal concentration camps," fur farmers responded by saying that American fur farms receive the highest standards of care of any farm animals in the world.

"An animal's coat is a clear signal of well-being," Glassman said. "The animals must be taken care of very well in order to produce quality fur."

The industry also has attacked the animals rights activists as extremists who don't believe in using animals for anything, including clothing, meat, entertainment, and even AIDS research.

"The fur industry is a matter of freedom of choice, and these people want to take away their freedom of choice and their right to wear fur without intimidation," says Glassman.

Exhibit fashionable

NEW YORK (AP) — Forty years of women's fashions by Pierre Cardin are on exhibition at the Victoria & Albert Museum in London through Jan. 6, 1991.

"Pierre Cardin: Past, Present, Future," is the first by the museum for a living couturier. It includes his crisp knife-pleats of the 1950s and the vinyl and plastic fashions inspired by space travel of the 1960s.

Pajama picks reflect style

By Deborah Hofmann
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — What do you wear to curl up and watch an old movie? For male and female homebodies, it should be versatile enough to wear while entertaining, opening the door to the pizza deliverer, or wearing out in a spur-of-the-moment dash for a pint of ice cream. And then to bed.

"I wear what Kate and Marlene wore in those movies: 40s street pajamas," said Elaine Ramseyer, a Manhattan real-estate broker. "Something elegant, light, but that really says, 'I'm staying home tonight. I want to be alone.'"

Ms. Ramseyer gets her ensembles at Stella Dallas (218 Thompson Street in Manhattan), a retro boutique of new and used clothing.

There she recently bought a 1940s rayon floor-length gathered shirtwaist dressing gown in red and white polka dots. It cost $35.

At AM/PM (109 Thompson Street), cotton nightshirts by La Gioconda in white with white jacquard stripes ($53) can be worn over leggings till bedtime.

So can long-sleeve bodysuits by Caroline Lewkovitz in black, henna, rust, gilded green, gold or indigo ($140), with matching leggings ($110) in matte or crushed velvet.

"Think of Katharine Hepburn, answering her doorbell," said Josie Natori of her soft wool swing-style nightshirt. It comes in red, black or green with notch collar ($95), and it's shown with black cotton leggings ($50).

Rosalind Russell inspired Mrs. Natori's swing jacket with a Mandarin collar ($110), over a cotton lycra unitard ($65). They are available at Bloomingdale's, Bergdorf Goodman, Saks Fifth Avenue, Ruth's Lingerie in Merrick, L.I,. and Elaine's Understatement in Scarsdale, N.Y.

Rayon street pajamas in her Natori 2 line are practical enough to be tossed into the washing machine. One style designed with Lauren Bacall in mind is done up in ivory with either a white or navy border along the sleeves and collar ($115).

The man who watches "My Man Godfrey" can do so in pajamas William Powell could have worn.

The Hobo collection by Charles Goodnight, in cotton or flannel patchwork, mixes patterns taken from tartan sleeping bag linings or multi-color dots and stripes.

"I see men in SoHo restaurants wearing my polka dot pajama tops under their jackets and I can't believe my eyes," said Dan Turk, principal owner of the company.

They are about $45 a set in cotton or flannel, but some stores sell the tops and bottoms as separates.

Joe Boxer's line of sleepwear consists of multicolor motifs of feathers, ducks, fish, elk heads, Indian chief heads, or dots and stripes. Cotton pajamas are $42, flannels $45, and robes $48 at Bloomingdale's, Macy's, Lord & Taylor and Saks.

The silk pajamas are strictly Cary Crant. A paisley jacquard weave is overlaid with dots, paislies or feathers and come in rich foliage hues. The pajamas are $175, the robe $190.

"More men are buying silk for lounging and sleeping in," said Denise Slattery, a spokeswoman for Joe Boxer. "It's been coming down in price since the days of the old movies, so it's not as intimidating anymore to dress like Cary Grant."

What your sleepwear says to your partner

LACY NIGHTGOWNS
You are a fragile woman. Look, but touch very carefully.

HIS PAJAMAS
You are self-assured and adaptable to whatever adventure he has in mind.

THE ALTOGETHER
The woman who always sleeps in the nude seems indifferent, rather than bold and sexy.

HINT:
Try variety in nightclothes to spice up your love life.

Burgundy, jade dominate collection

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — "It's been 30 years since I first came to Stavropoulos," Yveta Graff said. "I used to wear his white and beige chiffon dresses, but recently he's been talking me into reds and greens and I love them."

Mrs. Graff was one of George Stavropoulos's fans who crowded into the chiffon specialist's salon at 16 West 57th Street in Manhattan recently to check out his fall collection and to gauge his progress from pale classic tones to vibrant ones.

Burgundy, jade, even bright red dominated the collection of mostly chiffon evening dresses.

Of course, there also were lace, satin and even cut-velvet dresses, but the chiffons caught the eye.

The supple, flowing fabric was combined with brocade, velvet or metallic materials. The designer always has something magical to say about chiffon. In the beginning, his smooth handling of the fabric contrasted with other designers' elaborate folds and drapes.

Then he began layering it in multiple colors so unusual shades developed as one color was placed over another. There was always a flurry of color, sometimes rainbow hued, when the wearer walked or danced.

But the big change in this collection was the switch from traditional floor-length dresses to short styles. "The short dresses are a real breakthrough because they are so simple," said Martha Phillips, who founded the dress shop that bears her first name.

Her daughter, Lynne Manulis, president of the store, added: "We haven't seen chiffon used like this. He has taken off all the buttons and bows and achieved a hard-to-find purity."

Since he came to New York from Athens in 1930, Stavropoulos has developed a clientele that includes private customers as well as stores. Socialites like Audrey del Rosario; her daughter, Pamela; Isabelle Leeds and Kay McEnroe, the mother of John McEnroe, were among those who approved both of the switch to stronger color and to short dresses.

Daytime prints were sheltered by cashmere shrugs or jackets; the chiffons were in sober brown with black or brown and beige striped prints, and the shapes easy. But the show soon moved into a dressier mode, with rhinestones decorating a red shirtdress or a triple-layer cape floating on the shoulders of an aqua dress.

But the prettiest of all was a white chiffon style with a floating scarf, a scooped neckline and a whoosh of fullness set in diagonally at one side of the skirt.

Among the long dresses, a metallic brocade jacket over an orange chiffon dress was a favorite of many customers, providing a lively display of brilliant color and calm styling.

Some carried their own feathers, others a few rhinestones.

At Wit's End

A couple of dollars less

By Erma Bombeck

I awakened the other morning to a headline on the front page of my paper, "Government Runs Out of Money."

Bombeck

That translated to the closing of parks and recreational facilities, discontinuing school for native Americans, and furloughing people who predict earthquake and volcanic activities, to name a few.

I wanted to blame someone, and then I realized, I'm the government. A large chunk of what I earn goes to elected and appointed officials to spend wisely. From time to time I read about how the Pentagon is paying $300 for a toilet seat or the printing office works nights turning out free bulletins on studies on why children fall off bicycles, but I don't know what to do about that.

I try to bring things down to a personal level. What did our own family do when we had more week than money? How did we handle our personal budget crisis?

We stayed home more. In fact, if there had been a war, we couldn't have afforded the airfare to go to it.

We didn't entertain. So what if Princess Diana came to America to hit the malls? We couldn't possibly have scooped together $2,500 a plate and $3,500 for the privilege of mingling with her.

We were in no position to guarantee loans for friends. If a developer had asked us to insure some loan on a speculative deal, we'd have had to turn him down. We couldn't risk losing money we didn't have.

We contacted the people who owed us money and told them if there was ever a time to pay some of it back, it was now.

We began to shop more carefully, not getting bids on the basis of friendship, but on a fair price. We passed up things we could live without.

We made do with what we had... repairing the old house and the old car ... wearing old clothes and reading paperbacks.

We learned that convenience carries a price tag and you can pump your own gas, sit your own children and pack your own lunch.

What we couldn't live without in those lean years were the free parks and recreational areas that dotted our countryside. They not only provided us the only bit of richness and diversion left in our lives, they reminded us of our history, our struggle, and gave us the courage and the optimism to hang in there.

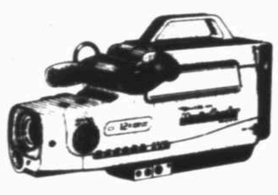

It's an easy, instant cut. It gets people's attention. But it's cruel. I pray this body in Washington is never granted credit cards. They'd go crazy.

New look is modern, relaxed

By Trish Barr
Copley News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — The air of the tropics is blowing through resort fashions for spring. The early spring attitude is relaxed, yet modern, with updated looks from the '60s and renewed attention to nautical themes.

Here at the new Fashion Center, 150 San Francisco designers recently presented more than 300 pieces from their upcoming holiday and resort collections.

Collectively, the clothes showed sophistication with an edge. These are designs that will be wearable for several years.

Of particular interest were the collections of Ana Daniels, Ian Arrow, Michael Casey, Repsychowear and Bekke, all from young, up-and-coming Bay area designers.

It was the first showing of Bekke by Becky Bruce. She presented finely tailored contemporary sportswear with an unusual mix of tops and pants: a sarong top that's put on like a vest and wraps around twice, tying in front over a high-waisted pant with a flattering silhouette.

The Ian Arrow Collection San Francisco by Ian Arrow presented easy rayons in softly silhouetted suits for men. Arrow styles a longer, double-breasted jacket as well as shorter waiter jackets, both in pastels and sand-washed colors for spring.

Ana Daniels by Ana Daniels is incredibly detailed and very nostalgic. Her nautical clothing for resort showed a decidedly military influence from the turn of the century. Of special interest was a jacket that was pulled up in back and fastened with buttons.

The premise behind Repsychowear by David Elliott is to use recycled clothing in new designs that are hand-dyed, painted and sewn. His skirted jean featured a yellow-gold pant with a multicolored overskirt topped by a blue body suit and an olive jacket. A leather hat completed the look.

MICHAEL CASEY COUTURE by Michael Casey is very sophisticated evening wear. A long leopard-print lame gown featured off-shoulder sleeves and a gathered bodice that created soft pleats falling to the floor. But his to-die-for dress was a short bugle-beaded, rainbow-striped dress that fringed above the knees and bared back and cleavage.

Generally, for upcoming holidays, the city's designers like velvet mixed with chiffon and crushed velvet in tones of purple, blue, red and lots of green, from acid to emerald. Gold, in burnished materials and metallics, was prevalent.

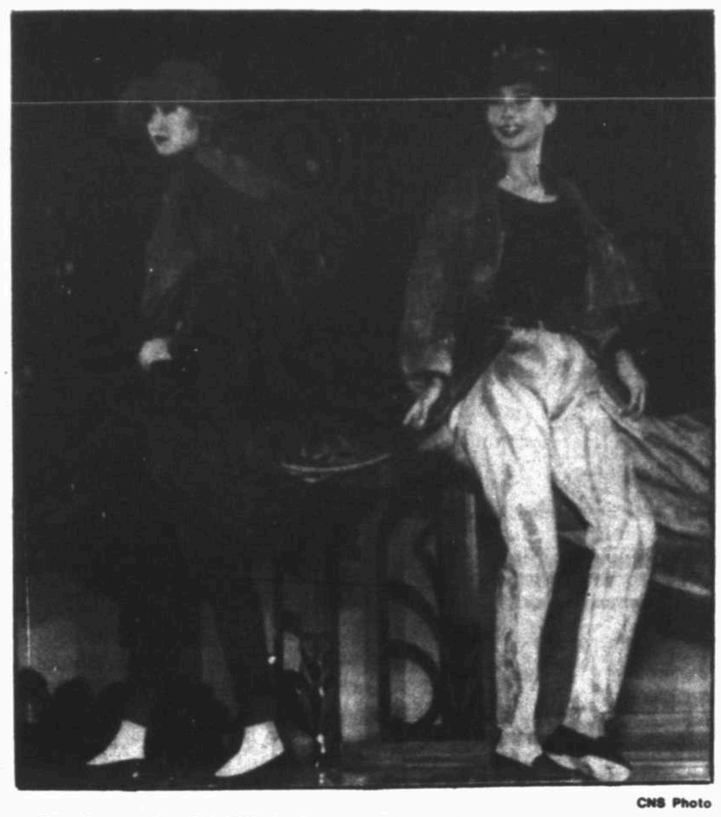

For resort, the designers like pop-art colors and patterns. Here, as elsewhere, there's a decided '60s influence. The look was exemplified by Roberto Robledo, who did psychedelics a la Pucci.

And there were lots of tropical looks, from flirty white dresses made from yards of material presented by Karen Alexander to acidy fruit colors of hot citrus and real orange mixed with purple in fruit or floral prints.

As usual for the season, there was an abundance of navy and white, which was offset by the sophisticated side of resort — cool pastels in light, light mint and blue. The fabrics of choice were gabardines, rayons and silks, all of which show a lot of movement.

THE SEA'S INFLUENCE was seen in shore motifs — shells were everywhere. One of the most unusual outfits was by Bibjoux by Bibi Hazel, which featured a shell bra-top over a green sequined skirt fashioned as a mermaid's tail. Another fantasy costume was presented by Blue Bird Woman by Elena Reyna, who dressed a model as a squaw in buckskins, complete with blanket wrap and lacking only a papoose.

Approximately 4,000 buyers, who are the arbiters of what we consumers will ultimately see in stores, attended the recent grand opening of the Fashion Center, a luxurious six-floor building that houses 550 permanent showrooms, a 96,500-square-foot exhibition hall and a 25,000-square-foot grand atrium theater. The $90 million wholesale complex will host five annual market weeks, where buyers from the Western region can view all the latest fashions by season — spring, summer, fall, holiday and resort.

Planning key to fashion success

Associated Press

How many women have stood in front of their closets and complained they had nothing to wear? Join the club.

Many women love to shop and have a closetful of clothes — but nothing goes together. Ladies' Home Journal invited fashion experts to discuss the problem at a recent symposium in New York City. They agreed the key to fashion success is not more clothes but better planning.

Every woman needs a basic, neutral wardrobe foundation (a jacket, trousers, slim skirt) upon which to add seasonal updates and well-chosen personalized accessories. Here are the pros' buying tricks and secrets to dressing with style.

Know where to go:

Spend a day shopping for stores instead of clothes. Aggravation and time will be minimized by knowing the stores inside and out. Find the ones that provide:

— A wide range of the type of clothing preferred;

— Clothing displayed so shoppers can find what they want and put outfits together easily;

— A pleasant shopping atmosphere and private dressing rooms.

Look for super service:

Clothing stores want business, and many will go to great lengths to make sure customers are happy.

— Bloomingdale's, Macy's, Saks Fifth Avenue and Nordstrom's, to name a few, offer free personal shopping services. Simply make an appointment to be accompanied by the shopper through departments, or ask to have preselected items ready for perusal at the store.

— Many stores keep a book with client purchases recorded. They will notify customers when clothing that compliments previous purchases arrives at the store.

— Nordstrom's, Neiman Marcus, K mart and other stores won't be undersold. These stores promise to honor the competitor's price.

— An important part of good service is a store's return policy. Always ask: Will they take anything back, regardless of the reason? Do you get a cash refund or a store credit? Within how many days must an item be returned?

Learn about sales:

There are different kinds of sales — the preseason sale (when new fashions are marked down for a few weeks as soon as they reach the stores), postseason clearance sale, and special purchase (the latter is not a sale, but a promotional price for an item that the store bought at a lower price).

Get wise about size:

Sizes vary by designer, and even within a designer's own line it's not unusual to find the size-eight trousers are too small, while the size-eight skirts are too large.

The most standardization in clothing sizes is in catalogs and private-label clothing. But a catalog like Spiegel, which carries many different designer labels, is aware a size eight from DKNY won't fit the same as a size eight from Liz Claiborne, so they provide a note to the customer (for example, "Item X is a generous silhouette, and you may want to order a smaller size").

No spur-of-the-moment shopping:

Most successful shopping excursions will be well planned. They should be allotted a specific time. The shopper should have specific items in mind, as well as specific stores. Shopping networks arranged with friends is also a great timesaving way to find out what's going on at various stores without having to check them all out.

Demand quality:

While most people would take a 90 cent loaf of moldy bread back to the store instantly, if a zipper breaks on a new $90 skirt most would simply replace it. According to the Ladies' Home Journal panel, 95 percent of consumer complaints about faulty merchandise are never reported.

DEAR ABBY

Father's experience, lesson for all parents

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: After reading the letter from "A Loving Mom in Durham," about using harnesses for her young children, I had to write.

Van Buren

Our son, Carl, was also a very active child — almost from birth. My mother-in-law suggested we consider a harness when we took him in large crowds, etc. I thought she was old-fashioned and cruel. Her insistence eventually caused a rift in our relationship.

When Carl was 3 years old, he and I were downtown waiting to cross a street when he noticed a large stuffed animal in a store window. He jerked his hand from mine and dashed into the street. Before I could catch him, he was struck by a car!

Both of his legs were broken; one was badly crushed. He also suffered head and chest injuries. At first, the doctors doubted that they could save him, but after three major surgeries and nine weeks in the hospital (three weeks in intensive care), Carl survived. He sustained some permanent loss of vision and balance, still suffers occasional headaches and walks with a limp.

Carl is now 5, and he is facing five more major surgeries over the next 11 to 15 years to deal with his crushed leg's inability to grow as quickly as the other.

Shortly after the accident, I was hospitalized for a nervous breakdown, and I'm still in therapy to help me deal with my feelings of guilt about the accident. The poor woman who struck Carl is still in touch — no one will ever convince her it was not her fault.

I must apologize for the length of this letter, Abby, but I just had to tell you how I feel about harnesses for hyperactive children.

When I see a child wearing a harness, I always smile and say, "Good for you!" to the adult at the other end. — A LOVING DAD IN TEXAS

DEAR ABBY: Please help me to impress on schoolteachers that the now popular idea of using baby pictures for graduations and yearbooks is not a good idea.

I have cared for many foster children in my home, and I also have four adopted children, all of whom have no baby pictures. All of our children's sixth-grade graduations used baby-picture slides. Some children are hurt by this. Often, the teachers would suggest that they bring in some other picture, but when everyone else brings in a cute baby picture, and your picture is of Little League a year ago, it's like announcing to everyone that you didn't have a family until a few years ago. These kids dread such occasions.

Don't get me wrong — I've seen many touching ceremonies done with baby pictures of the class, but I've also seen the tears, as a child desperately looks for a baby picture — anyone's baby picture — to take to school so he won't be different than the others. — SENSITIVE TEACHER, BLACK CREEK, N.Y.

DEAR TEACHER: Thanks for your sensitivity. This never would have occurred to me, but you make a good point for other schoolteachers to consider.

CITATION BY PUBLICATION
COUNTY OF HARRIS
DOCKET NO. 214505
RECEIPT NO. OUT OF COUNTY
ESTATE OF: FRANK DAVID CANTER, DECEASED

GREETING

YOU ARE HEREBY COMMANDED TO SUMMON FRANK DAVID CANTER, PRESUMED DEAD OF WHOSE WHEREABOUTS ARE UNKNOWN TO THE PLAINTIFFS, ROGER E. CANTER AND LORA M. CANTER, BY MAKING PUBLICATION OF THIS CITATION ONCE A WEEK FOR FOUR CONSECUTIVE WEEKS, COMMANDING THE DEFENDANT, FRANK DAVID CANTER, TO APPEAR AND ANSWER AT OR BEFORE 10 O'CLOCK A.M. OF THE FIRST MONDAY AFTER THE EXPIRATION OF 42 DAYS FROM THE DATE OF ISSUANCE BEING NOVEMBER 19, 1990. IN PROBATE COURT #4.

To be holden in the Courthouse thereof, in Houston, Texas, the same being Monday, NOVEMBER 19, 1990, then and there to answer a Petition filed in said Court on AUGUST 16, 1990, in a probate action now pending in said Court in the above numbered and styled Estate on the Probate Docket of said Court, wherein ROGER E. CANTER AND LORA M. CANTER Are the Plaintiffs.

NO. 214,505
ESTATE OF FRANK DAVID CANTER DECEASED
IN PROBATE COURT NO. 4
OF

Brief for Publication
First Amended Application for Determination of Death, Determination of Heirship, Independent Administration and Letters of Administration

Roger E. Canter and Lora M. Canter are jointly the Applicant in an action concerning the Estate of Frank David Canter, deceased, pending as Cause No. 214,505 in Probate Court No. 4, of Harris County, Texas, pursuant to First Amended Application for Determination of Death, Determination of Heirship, Independent Administration and Letters of Administration ("Application"), which Application asserts that Frank David Canter has absented himself continuously since December 1977 and there is no evidence that he is living and requests a determination that Frank David Canter is deceased and the declaration of his death which must be proved by circumstantial evidence. The Application also requests a determination of who are the heirs and only heirs-at-law of Frank David Canter, that an independent administration be granted on the estate, and that Applicant be appointed as Independent Administrators, without bond. In Connection therewith applicant, under the provisions of the Texas Probate Code, has requested Judgment that the sole heirs-at-law of Frank David Canter are as follows:

(1) Roger E. Canter - father, (2) Lora M. Canter - mother

Applicant has requested that on final hearing hereof, a judgment be entered determining: that Frank David Canter is deceased and determining the heirs and only heirs of the said Frank David Canter, deceased, and their interest and shares in the estate of the decedent; that an Independent Administration be granted in the estate; that Applicant be appointed as Independent Administrators and that Letters of Administration be granted to Applicant; that no bond be required of Applicant as Independent Administrators; that no other action be held in the Court in relation to the settlement thereof other than the return of the Inventory, Appraisement and List of Claims of the estate; and that the Court enter such other and further orders as appear to the court to be necessary and proper.

Proposed forms of contract documents, including plans and specifications, are on file and available for inspection at the office of the Housing Authority of the City of Midland, Texas and the office of Pierce, Pace & Associates, Architects/Planners, 1002 West Wall, Midland, Texas 79701 and at local plan room.

Copies of the documents may be obtained by depositing $25.00 with the Architect at 1002 W. Wall, Midland, Texas 79701 for each set of documents so obtained. Such deposits will be refunded on return of the plans, specifications and other documents in good condition within 10 days after bid opening to the Architect's office.

For bids $10,000 and over, a certified check or bank draft, payable to the Local Authority, U.S. Government Bonds, or a satisfactory bid bond executed by the bidder and acceptable surety in an amount equal to five (5%) percent of the bid and bidder's qualification statement shall be submitted. For bids less than $10,000 no bid bond will be required however a statement of bidder's qualifications has to be submitted. Also two (2) original signed copies of HUD 2530 "Previous Participation Certificate" shall be submitted with all bid documents.

The successful bidder for contracts $10,000 and over will be required to furnish and pay for satisfactory performance and payment bond or bonds. For contracts less than $10,000 the full amount of the contract will be paid in a lump sum at the completion of the work and no performance or payment bonds will be required. No contract will be awarded for less than $10,000 unless at least 3 bids are submitted for the particular work item.

Attention is called to the provisions for Equal Employment Opportunity as set forth in these documents.

Attention is called to the fact that not less than the minimum salaries and wages as set forth in the specifications must be paid on this project.

The Local Authority reserves the right to reject any or all bids and to waive any informalities in the bidding.
