Lt. governor: The only way to fix Robin Hood is in special session

By Stewart Doreen
sdoreen@mrt.com

Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick said the state of Texas can't continue to fund schools the way it has in the past, but that an attempt to completely overhaul the system will require the governor calling a special session.

Patrick told the Reporter-Telegram after his appearance at the Permian Basin Petroleum Association's annual meeting Thursday that he doesn't expect the so-called "Robin Hood" school funding system can be addressed during the regular session. He said there are too many bills and too many other items to occupy lawmakers' time.

This year, Midland ISD budgeted a $50 million-plus recapture payment to the state. That money will be distributed to "poorer districts." A budget forecast shows Midland ISD — as a chapter 41, or property rich district — will have to send more than $223.5 million to Austin over the next four years, including more than $68 million in 2020-21.

"If the governor is willing, I am willing to address it in a special session," Patrick said. "We can't continue the way we have been going. ... The best way to handle it is to fix it once and for all."

Gov. Greg Abbott's office didn't respond to repeated requests for comment about the possibility of calling a special session to address school finance.

Lawmakers typically haven't addressed school finance, except when there was a court order to do so. Earlier this year, the Texas Supreme Court called the current school funding system "Byzantine" but fell short of calling it "unconstitutional" as many hoped and expected. That decision, according to state Rep. Tom Craddick, relieved Abbott of any legal obligation to call a special session.

KNOWLEDGE IS POWER

James Durbin/Reporter-Telegram

Kris Rodriguez checks out a modern semiautomatic version of the Thompson carbine, commonly called a "Tommy Gun," made famous by the gangsters of the 1920s and '30s and revered among collectors for its historical and military significance, during the Silver Spur gun and blade show Saturday. A forum Friday at the Horseshoe gave community members an opportunity to learn about gun laws and public figures' positions on them.

Gun forum addresses deficiency in knowledge of firearms laws

By Simone Jasper
sjasper@mrt.com

A forum Friday at the Horseshoe gave community members an opportunity to learn about gun laws and public figures' positions on them.

Martin Stringer, who led the forum, said he and other members of West Texas Discussion Group wanted to educate the community about gun issues after new state laws were instituted this year.

"We had a deficiency in our knowledge of firearms laws," Stringer said. "We wanted the public to know about firearms laws in the United States, the use of deadly force and other things."

More than three dozen community members came to the forum at the Horseshoe Education Building. The event consisted of lectures and question-and-answer sessions with public officials.

U.S. Rep. Mike Conaway affirmed his support of the Second Amendment. He said he's not aware of attempts by Republicans in Congress to control gun rights, but said he's wary of potential restrictions from the other side of the aisle.

"Any time I hear anyone say we need reasonable gun control laws, my antenna goes up," the Midland Republican said.

Student substance use slightly declines

By Simone Jasper
sjasper@mrt.com

For Midland High School junior Mia Bejil, some students' decisions about alcohol and drugs are concerning.

"Seeing it influence my peers ... saddens me," Bejil said. "What they could have been capable of in academics and especially sports, they lost. They had a lot going for them but lost it for their actions."

The circumstances prompted Bejil to join the Drugs, Alcohol, Safety, Health (DASH) Program, a committee within the school's Student Council. This school year, members of DASH have been telling students about the consequences of substance use to encourage prevention.

The Midland Reporter-Telegram asked DASH students and others in the community to weigh in on the results of a recent student alcohol and drug survey.

Slight decline in use, more marijuana acceptance

Survey results released Oct. 20 at Palmer Drug Abuse Program reveal alcohol and drug use among Midland ISD students has been mostly steady in recent years. More than 2,300 students filled out a survey from Texas Prevention Impact Index during the 2015-2016 school year.

The survey asks MISD sixth- through 12th-graders about their use and perceptions of alcohol, drugs, tobacco and violence.

"We try to assess what patterns of use are and what affects kids on a day-to-day basis," said Robert Landry, founder of Houston-based Research and Educational Services, which analyzes the surveys. "We do a comparison over the years to see how it's going. This year, there's very impressive progress."

OPEC members have blinked in standoff over oil prices

THE ECONOMIST

By M. Ray Perryman

On October 19, Saudi Arabia held its first international bond sale — EVER!! The sale, which received orders of $67 billion for the $17.5 billion in bonds offered, is the largest to date from an emerging market economy. Investors eagerly welcomed the offering as a way to achieve further exposure in the Middle East given recent expectations that the price of oil will rebound next year. The kingdom offered dollar-denominated bonds with yields slightly higher than U.S. Treasuries with similar maturities. In total, Saudi Arabia raised $5.5 billion of both 5- and 10-year bonds and another $6.5 billion in 30-year bonds.

This initial sale is expected to be only a beginning of multiple offerings which could total more than $100 billion through 2020. Saudi Arabia has traditionally seen about three-quarters of its revenue come from oil, and experienced a $100 billion deficit last year alone after years of surpluses and accumulating cash reserves.

In addition to raising revenue through bond sales, the country is taking other steps to deal with the budget crisis. The kingdom slashed public spending to meet revenue shortfalls, also decreasing government worker pay and subsidies. Capital expenditures are down by more than 70 percent this year, and infrastructure investments have dropped from a third of government spending in 2011 to only a tenth presently.

Since many of these actions have hurt the private sector and are harmful to the long-term growth of the country (not to mention threatening the power base of the royal family), Saudi Arabia has also adopted an economic reform program named "Vision 2030" looking to achieve a more balanced budget, diversify the economy away from oil, and lead to the creation of millions of non-oil jobs. Major parts of this plan include reforming the Saudi stock market in order to attract more foreign investors and accessing different sources of financing through bond issues. The kingdom has already issued over 190 billion riyals (around $51 billion) worth of domestic bonds since last year and recently borrowed $10 billion from international banks to meet budget shortfalls. Public debt is expected to increase from less than 8 percent to 30 percent of economic output by 2020.

Another part of Vision 2030 is privatizing state assets, including the state-owned Saudi Arabia Oil Company, better known as Aramco. The company will have an initial public offering (IPO) for less than 5 percent of the company. Proceeds from the IPO will help in part to establish a $2 trillion sovereign wealth fund for the kingdom.

Saudi Arabia is not alone in struggling with budget deficits due to the long-standing low oil prices. The Gulf region has been particularly hard hit and the IMF has estimated that these countries will experience a combined budget deficit of $765 billion over the next five years. Many other Gulf nations have already issued international bonds, including the emirate of Abu Dhabi which raised $5 billion in April, Oman which sold $2.5 billion worth of bonds in June, and Qatar which raised $9 billion in May. The success of the Saudi Arabian offering has also opened up the door for other nations who are looking to issue bonds in the future, including Jordan.

OPEC members have been following a market share strategy, led by Saudi Arabia, to increase production in order to lower the oil price and shut down higher-cost oil producers such as the U.S. shale segment. However, the burden on Gulf nations is large and growing, and there is more incentive every day to abandon the market share strategy and cut production. Preliminary agreements have been reached and while some are optimistic about the OPEC meeting at the end of November, others are concerned over the current flooding of the crude market. Production has recently increased in some nations, such as Nigeria and Libya that have recovered from production disruptions and Kazakhstan which just finished drilling in its new Kashagan oil field. Russia has been experiencing record output and while the nation has pledged to cooperate with OPEC, its exact level of commitment has been vague.

Since many of the largest oil exporters are keenly feeling the effects of low oil prices on their budgets, the likelihood that OPEC members will agree to some sort of production cut is growing. Many analysts expect oil prices to rebound sometime next year to the $60 range, though the recent oversupply will take some time to resolve. While this would be a good sign for the oil industry and would add to the modest resurgence we have seen in drilling after projects bottomed out early this summer, an oil surge of the magnitude we saw a few years ago is unlikely for the foreseeable future. Nonetheless, OPEC in general and Saudi Arabia in particular have now blinked, which is the first step toward a more orderly market and more normal levels of activity in the United States.

BBB urges doing homework before enrolling in trade school

BETTER BUSINESS BUREAU

With the recent nationwide closing of ITT Technical Institute, thousands of students are left with a lot of questions and now have to consider what their next steps are. ITT Tech announced the closure of all 136 locations last month, including campuses throughout Texas.

According to the Department of Education, current or recent ITT enrollees may be eligible for a loan discharge. There is also the option of transferring to another school; however, students will need to check with schools directly to determine which credits will transfer. Unfortunately, most students won't be able to finish their current program at ITT, but students who transfer to a new institution may be able to finish their current program.

Vocational schools, also known as trade or career schools, can offer training and the skills needed for a variety of jobs. While many of these programs are reputable, unfortunately, not all are and may be out to take your money. Better Business Bureau serving Central, Coastal, Southwest Texas and the Permian Basin recommends doing your homework before you commit to a program to ensure it's reputable and trustworthy.

Vocational schools train students for a variety of skilled jobs, including jobs as automotive technicians, medical assistants, cosmetologists, paralegals and truck drivers, according to the Federal Trade Commission (FTC). However, some of these trade schools have misled prospective students about the availability of jobs, extent of their job training programs and the nature of their facilities and equipment.

Last year, BBB received more than 900 complaints against business and vocational schools nationwide. Most complaints allege charges for courses that were never taken or the cost of courses were more than initially advertised.

Before enrolling, BBB offers the following tips:

■ Do your research.

Do some searches online and compare information from other schools, including everything the school provides. Find out what is required to graduate, what you'll receive upon graduation and if licensing credits are transferable. Read online reviews of the schools and check out their BBB Business Review page at bbb.org.

■ Visit the facilities.

Take a tour of the facilities in person and ask to see the classrooms and equipment that students use for training. You may also consider sitting in on a class, asking about the instructors' qualifications and talking to current or previous students about their experience.

■ Find out the total cost.

Will you need to pay by course, semester or program? Find out what the total cost of enrolling is, which may include tuition, fees for dropping or adding a class, textbooks, equipment or graduation fees. Also, if you think you may need financial aid, find out whether the school provides it or if you're eligible for federal assistance, work-study programs, scholarships, grants or student loans.

■ Find out if the school is licensed and accredited.

Consider asking the school for its licensing and accrediting organizations. In many states, private vocational schools are licensed through the state Department of Education, so find out which state agency handles the licensing. Also, do an online search to see if a school is accredited by a legitimate organization. Accreditation is a sign that the school has been evaluated and has agreed to meet certain requirements or maintain certain standards.

■ Consider other options.

Look into alternatives, such as community college. The tuition may be less than a vocational school or four-year college or university. Also, some businesses may offer education programs through apprenticeships or on-the-job training.

■ Watch out for red flags.

Before you commit to a program, read the terms and contract carefully. If the school refuses to give you documents to review beforehand, don't enroll. Also, consider it a red flag if the school pressures you to sign up or gives you information different than that in their written materials. Get everything in writing. Remember, no school can guarantee you a job when you graduate.

Stocks wilt after FBI inquiry into new Clinton emails

By Marley Jay
Associated Press

NEW YORK — A midday advance on the stock market wilted in afternoon trading Friday after the FBI notified Congress that it will investigate new emails linked to Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton.

The market had started out on a strong note after the government reported that the economy broke out of a slump in the third quarter and grew at the fastest pace in two years.

The early climb was led by industrial, energy and technology companies, which would stand to benefit most from a pickup in economy, but the gains disappeared after the FBI made its announcement at about noon. Clinton has led in recent polls, and the surprise development added new uncertainty just a week and a half before the presidential election.

"I think the betting has to be that there's nothing too damning, but we don't know," said Brad McMillan, chief investment officer for Commonwealth Financial Network.

The Dow Jones industrial average closed down 8.49 points, less than 0.1 percent, at 18,161.19. The index was 80 points higher shortly before the new inquiry was disclosed, then went down as much as 74 points in the minutes that followed.

The Standard & Poor's 500 index dipped 6.63 points, or 0.3 percent, to 2,126.41. The Nasdaq composite slid 25.87 points, or 0.5 percent, to 5,190.10.

Health care companies took the biggest losses by far. Prescription drug distributor McKesson plunged to a three-year low after its revenue fell about $1.5 billion short of estimates. The company slashed its annual outlook because of weaker drug prices, and investors worried that McKesson and its rivals will compete by making bigger cuts in prices.

McKesson tumbled $36.39, or 22.7 percent, to $124.11 and competitor AmerisourceBergen lost $10.36, or 13 percent, to $69.14 while Cardinal Health shed $7.30, or 9.8 percent, to $67.50.

Drugmakers were pummeled on weak earnings. Amgen, the world's largest biotech drug company, reported solid results for the third quarter and raised its guidance. However, the company also disclosed flat sales of the anti-inflammatory medication

On day OPEC deal seems stalled, Exxon says world oil oversupply likely to last well into 2017

By Jeffrey Weiss
The Dallas Morning News

Consumers and oil companies may be looking at relatively low prices for a while, based on two reports Friday.

Irving-based Exxon Mobil reported its third quarter earnings results. A lot of the report continued what had been reported earlier this year: The continued slump in oil and gas prices has affected how much money the giant corporation is taking in.

That meant this report offered its eighth straight quarter of profit declines compared with the prior year and a ninth straight quarter of falling revenue.

In a call with investors, Exxon vice president Jeff Woodbury was asked what the company sees changing in the worldwide balance of supply and demand that sets wholesale prices.

Demand, he said, has been slowly rising at the rate the industry expects. Oil supply, however, remains above demand, he said, and will likely stay ahead of demand well into 2017. And that's not just about the amount coming out of the ground but includes inventory in storage that will need to get used up. Plus, as Woodbury noted, the ability of domestic oil companies to quickly ramp up production in shale and other unconventional fields could boost output.

It's possible that a decision by OPEC to reduce production could affect supply. But the likelihood experts see about that happening changes by the day. Friday's report from Dow Jones says that Iran and Iraq are deadlocked in a technical meeting that's supposed to lead to an OPEC agreement about cutting oil production. The price of crude quickly dropped by more than a dollar a barrel.

Woodbury wouldn't offer any guesses about whether the meeting would produce an agreement.

"I'm not going to speculate on what OPEC might ultimately decide to do," he said.

Like many other major oil companies, Exxon may run into some value problems if supply stays up and prices stay relatively low. Exxon admitted it might need to cut what it's been counting as the longterm assessment of some of its assets. If federally-defined bookkeeping shows that the company can't make a profit extracting from some of its oil fields, those will have to be taken off the books.

Woodbury said Canadian oil sands, requiring a notoriously expensive extraction process, might be among the assets that would need to eliminated in the estimates unless prices rise. Total cuts in the estimate could total 4.6 billion barrels. And that could affect Exxon's ability to borrow money.

But Woodbury told analysts that those cuts could be put back on the books if the price of crude oil rises.

As for Exxon's third quarter results:

Earnings dropped to $2.65 billion, or 63 cents a share, from $4.24 billion, or $1.01 a share, for the same quarter last year. That's a drop of 38 percent.

Total revenue also dropped, to $58.6 billion for the quarter compared with $67.3 billion for the same period last year, or the first nine months of 2016, Exxon says it took in more than $165 billion compared with a bit over $209 billion for the first three quarters of 2015. That's a drop of more than 20 percent.

Exxon has dramatically lowered what it's spending on capital investments — spending even less that the company had projected at the start of the year. For the quarter, capital investments were down 45 percent from a year ago to $4.19 billion.

Woodbury credited some of that to greater efficiency in exploration and drilling. And he said longterm plans for developing its assets have not changed.

Chevron posts first profit since 2015 as oil inches higher

Chevron Corp. posted its first profit in a year as a recovery in energy prices halted a string of writedowns that have depressed the oil explorer's results since late 2015.

Third-quarter net income was $1.28 billion, or 68 cents a share, compared with $2.04 billion, or $1.09, a year earlier, the San Ramon, California-based company said in a statement on Friday. The per-share results beat the 37-cent average estimate of 21 analysts in a Bloomberg survey.

Chevron recorded almost $4 billion in asset impairments between October 2015 and last month as collapsing energy prices gutted the value of some oil and gas holdings. Since touching a 12-year low in January, the international crude benchmark price has climbed almost 80 percent, easing some of the pressure on explorers battered by the 2 1/2-year slump.

Chevron's oil and gas output declined 1 percent to the equivalent of 2.51 million barrels a day, lower than the 2.54-million barrel average estimate. The company's U.S. wells lost $212 million during the period because of lower crude prices and asset sales that dented gas production.

Chevron will spend about $8 billion this year on dividend payouts to shareholders as other cash-hungry investments take a back seat. Shares rose 0.5 percent to $100.44 in trading before the market open in New York.

Enbrel, its top-selling drug. Enbrel will soon face more competition, which could hurt sales.

Amgen gave up $15.39, or 9.6 percent, to $145.18. It was the stock's worst one-day loss since October 2000. Drugmaker AbbVie disclosed weak sales and lost $3.86, or 6.3 percent, to $57.60.

Health care stocks are the worst performing part of the market this year. They're down 6 percent while the S&P 500 is up 4 percent. Their performance compared to the rest of the market has gotten even worse over the last few months.

Earlier, stocks rose after the economy grew faster than expected during the third quarter. The Commerce Department said exports grew and more businesses restocked their shelves. In total, gross domestic product grew 2.9 percent, which was better than economists expected. Growth had slowed down late last year, causing worry among investors.

McMillan said he thinks the economy should keep growing at a similar pace for the next few quarters.

"We're already seeing business and consumer confidence come back," he said.

General Electric and oil and gas drilling services company Baker Hughes rose as they discussed a possible deal. GE said the discussions concern a partnership and that it doesn't intend to buy Baker Hughes outright. Baker Hughes tried to merge with competitor Halliburton two years ago, but the companies walked away from the combination after the federal government sued to block it. GE added 59 cents, or 2.1 percent, to $29.22 and Baker Hughes gained $4.57, or 8.4 percent, to $59.12.

Other industrial stocks including United Technologies, which makes products including jet engines and elevators, and manufacturer Honeywell also traded higher.

Amazon sank after its profit came up short of analysts' estimates. The company also released a weak outlook. The stock is trading at all-time highs and has surged more than 30 percent over the last 12 months. It fell $42.04, or 5.1 percent, to $776.32.

AB InBev cut its annual revenue forecast following weak results from its business in Brazil. The world's largest beer maker fell $4.62, or 3.8 percent, to $116.84.

U.S. crude fell $1.02, or 2.1 percent, to $48.70 a barrel in New York. That was its lowest price this month. Brent crude, the international standard, lost 76 cents, or 1.5 percent, to $49.71 a barrel in London.

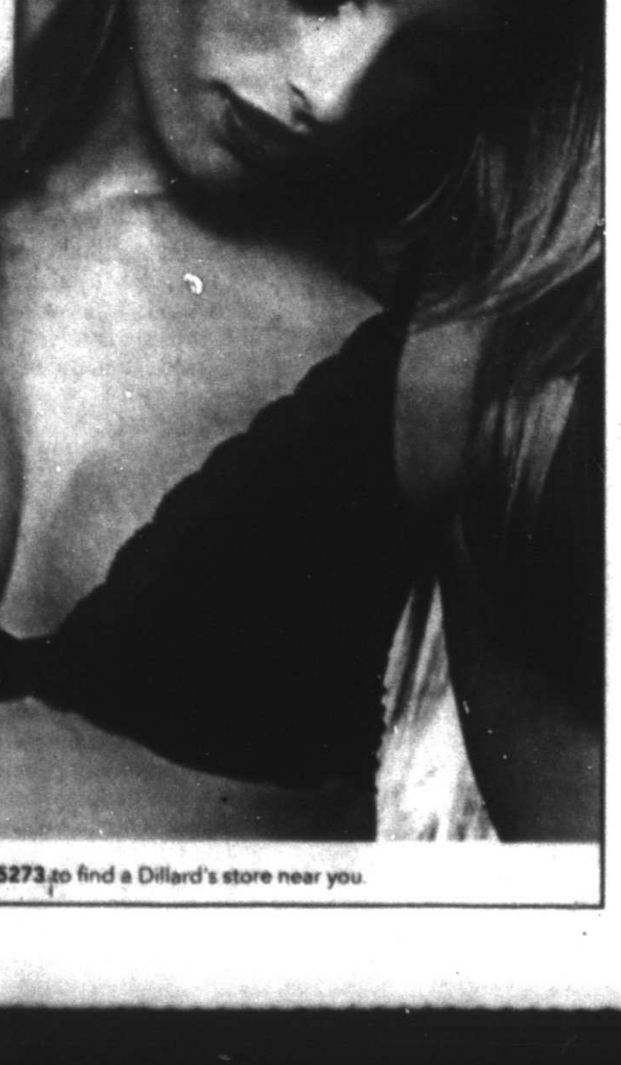

Bond prices edged higher. The yield on the 10-year Treasury note fell to 1.84 percent from 1.85 percent.

The dollar slipped to 104.78 yen from 105.29 yen. The euro rose to $1.0982 from $1.0898.

Metals turned higher. The price of gold picked up $7.30 to $1,276.80 an ounce. Silver rose 16 cents to $17.80 an ounce. Copper added 3 cents to $2.19 a pound.

In other energy trading, wholesale gasoline lost 2 cents to $1.47 a gallon. Heating oil gave up 3 cents to $1.54 a gallon and natural gas rose 4 cents to $3.11 per 1,000 cubic feet.

Overseas, France's CAC 40 rose 0.3 percent and the FTSE 100 in Britain picked up 0.1 percent. Germany's DAX edged down 0.2 percent. Japan's benchmark Nikkei 225 gained 0.6 percent and South Korea's Kospi fell 0.2 percent. In Hong Kong the Hang Seng lost 0.8 percent.

Today in history

Today is Sunday, Oct. 30, the 304th day of 2016. There are 62 days left in the year.

Today's highlight:

On Oct. 30, 1938, the radio play "The War of the Worlds," starring Orson Welles, aired as part of "The Mercury Theater on the Air" on CBS. (The broadcast, which employed a series of fake news reports about a Martian invasion, was said to have panicked some listeners, although how many has never been definitively established.)

SURVEY

From 1A

Nearly 42 percent of students reported drinking alcohol one or more times, compared to nearly 44 percent last year. Also this school year, about 28 percent of students said they planned to drink alcohol in the future, compared to 30 percent last school year. Students were also less likely than in the previous year to report past and future use of cigarettes.

For sixth- to eighth-graders, the survey results were almost steady for students who had used prescription drugs, and the percentage of students in this group who tried marijuana slightly dropped. PDAP's Midland Coalition tries to steer students away from substance use.

Veronica Luna, coalition coordinator, said the results are a sign the prevention methods are working, but there's still room for improvement.

"Our work never ends," Luna said. "We're constantly planning to work on the results."

Adrian Jimenez, MHS junior in DASH, said he's not surprised about continued student alcohol and drug use. "They go during lunch, and they still do it at home and at parties," Jimenez said. "They use social media to record what they're doing."

In recent years, student perceptions toward marijuana have changed, according to survey results. About 54 percent of students thought marijuana users risked harm, compared with 68 percent the previous school year.

"It's a wide societal topic accepted with states legalizing marijuana," said Ron Moss, MISD director of guidance and counseling. "There's an effort not just of educating students but parents as well."

Communication at home

Reducing student alcohol and drug use can start at home, according to Landry. On the survey, the majority of students said they didn't talk to family members about alcohol or drugs within the past month. Some students also said their parents approve of them drinking some alcohol products.

Landry said parents should talk to students at an early age about alcohol and drugs and understand that adult substance use doesn't go unnoticed.

"We need to encourage students to exhibit the behavior they want to see in their kids," Landry said.

Parent awareness about underage drinking also makes a difference, according to Kevin Thompson, regional evaluator at Region 9 Prevention Resource Center. He said students don't always tell parents about their alcohol habits.

"We conduct focus groups in Midland County and Martin County, where Stanton is," Thompson said. "Parents believed they knew what kids were doing at the time. .... There seems to be a lack of communication on the family level."

The PRC gathered data about alcohol, drug and tobacco use in West Texas counties to create its 2016 Regional Needs Assessment. The organization calculated that underage drinking cost the average household in the region $464 last year, a figure that covers costs for work lost, medical care and pain and suffering.

"It might seem insignificant. It costs $464 per year," Thompson said. "But for rent and car payments, it's a significant amount of money. It's preventable. It's unnecessary if we have conversations with our kids about prevention."

Thompson said the PRC is seeking to hold Midland County adults responsible for hosting parties in which alcohol is served to minors.

"We're trying to communicate with law enforcement that parents are trying to (host) what is known as 'safe parties,'" Thompson said. "It doesn't really help the problem. Kids are still drinking under age. It communicates it's still permissible."

But students said many of their peers' parents don't mind underage drinking as long as they think they're safe.

"Parents drank when they were younger," said DASH senior Tyler Klattenhoff. "It depends on trust and how they feel about it. If they have a designated driver, most of the time they're going to be OK with it."

To tackle substance use, the Midland Coalition tries to educate both students and parents about risks. Luna thinks programs targeting marijuana and other drugs might have helped reduce the numbers of students trying some substances.

"We had a Marijuana Mystery campaign to debunk some of the myths about marijuana, so maybe that had an effect," Luna said.

Education through schools

MISD schools teach information about alcohol and drugs starting at the elementary level. Moss said the district gives facts at an early age to help students reach their own conclusions.

"There's been a shift over the last number of years from the 'just say no' approach to having students make informed decisions when they choose to make decisions," Moss said.

But Bejil said learning about risks in the classroom doesn't always transfer to behaviors outside of school.

"A lot of kids I notice brush it off and don't take it into consideration," Bejil said.

The survey found a fraction of students indicated they were comfortable with asking a teacher, counselor or resource officer questions about drinking.

Jimenez said he's noticed a lack of student trust toward adults in schools.

"They think that teachers don't really care as much," Jimenez said. "They can't trust the teachers. They don't spend time with them, and it might come out of their mouth."

Moss said MISD wants to make students more comfortable about trusting adults at schools.

"Research shows any kids that age if they have questions about alcohol or tobacco, they're going to go to their peers first before going to adults," Moss said. "One of the approaches we're trying to get across is: Your peers are going to come to you. Do you really know the answers?"

Despite education efforts, students on the survey thought more of their peers use alcohol and drugs than actually do. Also, only 58 percent of students surveyed thought all school alcohol rules were clearly stated. Last year, fewer students said they were offered illegal drugs on campus than in the past. But nearly 13 percent of survey respondents said they were likely or very likely to use alcohol before school.

Moss said he and others in MISD are considering ways to make the district's no-tolerance policy for alcohol and drugs more evident.

"Moving forward, we're going to take what the survey shows us and see what we can do better," Moss said.

"The governor won't call it without pressure to have something done," said Craddick, who has said he was one of the lawmakers who voted against the Robin Hood system, which was created in 1993 to equalize educational funding among school districts across the state.

The Midland Republican pointed to comments made by legislators who want to at least tweak the current system, even if a special session isn't called.

State Sen. Kel Seliger, who represents the Midland-Odessa area, said during a PBPA legislative panel discussion on Thursday that he wants to look at addressing the volatility that impacts districts such as Midland, which relies on taxable income received from minerals. The Amarillo Republican said it is tough for districts to make recapture payments based on a year when values are high but when the current tax levy is much less. Therefore, he said, a school district is paying on a levy that it is not getting.

This happened with Midland ISD this year. The recapture payment is based on the previous year's valuations. That lag forced an all-time high recapture payment even when oil prices fell into the $30 range.

Seliger has said Robin Hood allows for the collection of $3.5 billion to be distributed to other school districts. He also said there never will be a completely equitable system because there are very poor rural districts and districts with enormous industrial bases.

"I think we can lessen the effects," Seliger said. "We can't do it all at one time, but we can reduce it over time, and I think that should be one of our goals."

Crime of the week

Midland County Sheriff's Office and Midland Crime Stoppers need help on a theft.

Deputies responded Oct. 20 to the 10000 block of County Road 60 regarding a theft. Someone gained entry into the business' IT server room and stole two boxes containing 32 Samsung Galaxy Note 5 cellphones, which are valued at about $25,000.

If you are the first person to provide information on this suspect and it leads to an arrest, it will be worth a $1,000 cash reward. You will remain anonymous and NO caller I.D. is ever used.

Other public figures at the event included Odessa's Brooks Landgraf, the state representative for District 81, as well as local, state and federal law enforcement officials. The event included four lectures, which covered the Second Amendment and state and federal gun laws. Speakers cited statistics, court cases, the Texas penal code and state license-to-carry requirements.

Tim Macy, chair of Gun Owners of America, said gun rights supporters should be informed about the issues so they're ready to counter people with opposing opinions. He said taking away the right to bear arms could have negative consequences.

"What we've seen historically is the government can't always protect you from the bad guy," Macy said. "What's more, the government can actually be the bad guy. That's why the Second Amendment is crucial to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

Other speakers were Nelson Spear, former assistant U.S. attorney, and Charles "Bro" Seltzer, former Midland County judge. Milton Tharp, a retired Odessa Police Department officer, prepared the fourth presentation but couldn't make it to the event.

Seltzer said voters should keep gun rights in mind when choosing the next U.S. president. He said the new national leader likely will make Supreme Court appointments, which could affect future gun laws in this country.

"This is a crucial election if not only for that but for down-ballot races," Seltzer said. "Anyone appointed to the Supreme Court has to pass the scrutiny of the Senate."

New Border Patrol chief works hard to win over skeptics

By Brian Bennett
Tribune Washington Bureau

EL PASO — As the new chief of the troubled Border Patrol, Mark Morgan faces any number of complex problems, from corruption in the ranks to a new surge of children and families streaming to the border.

But the former Marine, Los Angeles Police Department officer and FBI agent was confronted by a far more personal challenge when he addressed an all-hands muster at the Border Patrol station in El Paso on Oct. 5:

How dare he wear the uniform.

Morgan is the first outsider to head the Border Patrol in its 92 years. His decision to shed his dark business suit for the agents' distinctive olive-green uniform, complete with black utility belt and holster, has sparked bitter controversy in the notoriously closed culture.

After all, Morgan, 51, was hired to bring fresh eyes and a reformer's mindset to help clean up the nation's largest — and critics say least accountable — law enforcement agency.

The Border Patrol's powerful union had opposed his appointment, saying a chief should have come from within. Morgan didn't come up through the ranks, didn't attend the patrol academy, never arrested anyone sneaking across the border, and never searched on horseback for smugglers in the desert.

So standing in the muster room, Morgan told the agents that he had struggled with the decision to wear their uniform. But he had decided it would help him represent the 20,000 agents and advocate for their needs with lawmakers and the public.

He also told them he welcomed being taken to task.

"I really hope that's going to get out and they are going to say, 'Holy crap, he challenged the chief and then it was a good discussion,'" Morgan said later while touring the Border Patrol facilities.

Morgan spent 20 years at the FBI and was first brought to Customs and Border Protection, the Border Patrol's parent agency, in 2014 to overhaul its internal affairs division. After a subsequent stint running the FBI's training academy, he got the top job at the Border Patrol in June.

His immediate priority: Thousands of Central American families are again flowing north and surrendering to Border Patrol agents in Texas, threatening to overwhelm sector stations and replicate the crowded, unsanitary conditions that sparked ugly headlines in 2014.

Last fiscal year, the number of people apprehended on the border jumped 23 percent over the previous year — from 331,333 to 408,870 — although it was still below the influx two years ago.

Morgan says he is looking at whether government contractors or federal workers can screen and register the families so Border Patrol agents can spend less time on paperwork and more time on the border.

But Morgan also faces pressure to improve agent training and procedures to avoid shootings of unarmed migrants and other abuses that have outraged critics.

Over the last decade, Border Patrol agents have shot and killed at least eight Mexicans who were across the border, records show.

Only one of the agents involved has faced charges, although the Supreme Court this month agreed to consider whether the family of a Mexican teenager who was shot and killed across the border can sue the Border Patrol agent who pulled the trigger.

The civil case focuses on Sergio Adrian Hernandez Guereca, 15, who was shot in the face in June 2010 as he stood on the Mexican side of a riverbed dividing El Paso from Juarez, Mexico.

Morgan also wants to crack down on the drug-smuggling, bribery and other corruption cases that have embarrassed the Border Patrol.

Brian Bennett/Los Angeles Times/TNS

Border Patrol Chief Mark Morgan plays fetch with a dog named Bosephus, trained to track smugglers and migrants, during a tour of Border Patrol facilities on Oct. 6 near El Paso.

In March, a report from the Homeland Security Advisory Council, an independent task force, concluded that the system for disciplining abusive or corrupt Border Patrol agents is "deeply flawed" because of a weak internal affairs operation.

At the same time, arrests of border agents and customs officers exceed, on a per capita basis, arrests at other law enforcement agencies, according to the report. More than 170 employees at U.S. Customs and Border Protection, including Border Patrol, have faced corruption charges since 2005.

Morgan, who still has his athletic build and Marine buzz cut, has toured nine Border Patrol sectors and met with hundreds of agents since June. He next plans to visit patrol offices in Tucson and along the northern border in Washington state.

His new staff, hustling to keep up, have taken to calling Morgan the "Energizer Bunny."

Morgan — and his critics — say his toughest job may be winning over the agents who work far from Washington, D.C., and distrust any top-down management on border security, a politically charged issue that has played a key role in the presidential race.

"The really tricky part is to make sure he has buy-in from the rank and file and the boots on the ground who will be following his leadership," said Michelle Brane, an immigrant rights advocate at the New York-based Women's Refugee Commission, who met with Morgan last month.

Problems on the border have changed in the last five years. Fewer economic migrants from Mexico now cross to find jobs, while more women and children show up seeking refuge from the drug wars and other violence in Guatemala, Honduras and El Salvador.

As the type of migrant changes, the Border Patrol needs to adapt, Brane says.

"I think they need to get child welfare or social welfare people in the Border Patrol stations," she said. "Border Patrol officers are trained to patrol the border. They don't need to be sitting there baby-sitting kids or taking care of pregnant women."

Morgan got his hands dirty during his visit to El Paso. He put on an industrial diving helmet and sank to the bottom of a training pool to see how agents search for sunken drug packages in murky rivers and lakes.

He rappelled down a 60-foot tower and played fetch with Bocephus, a dog trained to track and sniff out migrants hiding in the brush. He competed on a live-fire range, hitting targets with a handgun, sniper rifle and semiautomatic rifle.

"I think he is realizing how difficult it is to be a Border Patrol agent," Shawn Moran, a vice president of the Border Patrol union, said in a phone interview from San Diego.

Moran, whose union opposed Morgan's appointment, gives him grudging credit for his first few months.

He particularly applauded Morgan's decision last month to reclassify an agent's death on a family fishing trip as a "duty death," a move that ensures survivor benefits for the family and a listing in a national memorial for law enforcement officers.

Javier Vega Jr. and his family were at a campground near Brownsville in 2014 when two men tried to rob them at gunpoint. When Vega reached for his gun, he was shot; his alleged assailants, two Mexicans who had been deported multiple times, have been charged with murder.

At first, the Border Patrol determined Vega was not killed in the line of duty. But a review completed in September reversed that ruling and said Vega had responded to the robbery according to his training as a law enforcement agent.

"That was one of our big issues, and I was definitely encouraged when I saw that," Moran said.

Morgan's decision to wear the Border Patrol uniform doesn't bother Moran. "I know that has upset some people," he said.

Morgan sees the dispute as an opportunity. The day after he was confronted at the El Paso muster, he called and left a voice message for the agent who had challenged him, another former Marine.

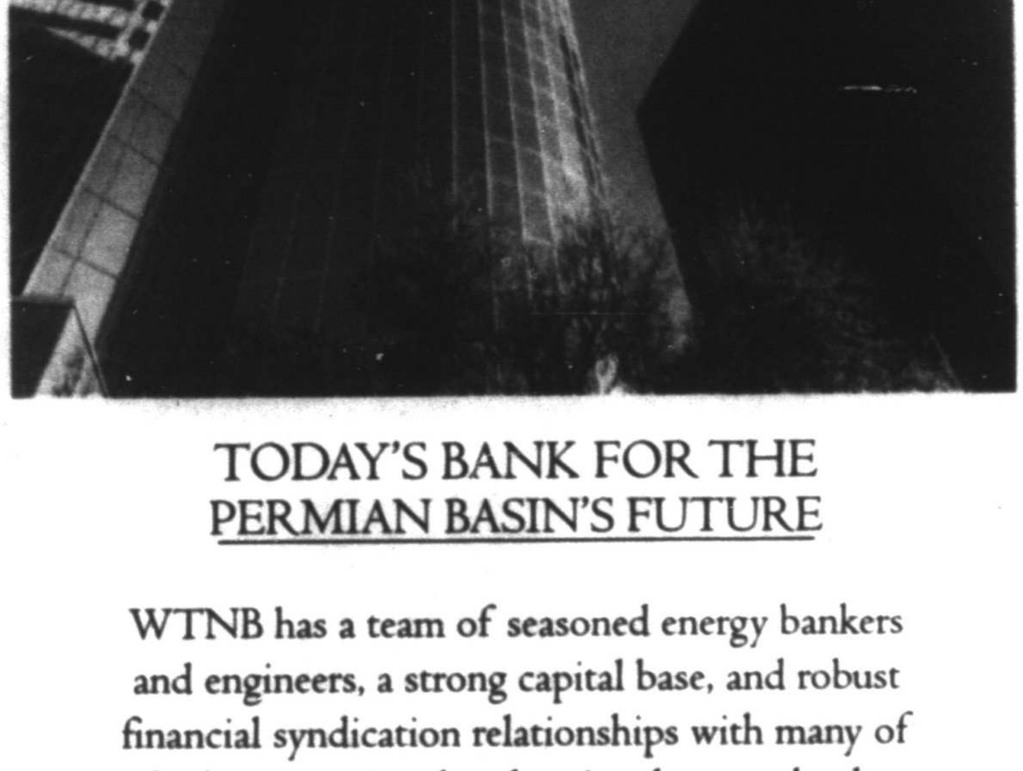

"I just wanted to personally let you know I really, really appreciate you asking the question you did," Morgan said. His goal is to create an environment "where you are willing to say what's on your mind and disagree regardless of rank, with dignity, respect and professionalism," he added.

"Be safe out there and Semper Fi."

Good riddance to a campaign that put the 'ugh' in ugly

By Nancy Benac
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Good riddance to Campaign 2016, the election that put the "ugh" in ugly.

Big league.

Headed for history books a week from Tuesday, the duel between Hillary Clinton and Donald Trump became a battle of "nasty women" and "bad hombres" vs. "deplorables" and voters who are "irredeemable."

A beauty queen, a Gold Star family, an ex-president and his baggage, the FBI director, even the pope were drawn into the fray.

At times, the campaign rhetoric has been so raunchy it's forced middle-school civics teachers to censor their lesson plans. Thank Trump for that.

But Americans can't say they weren't warned about what lay ahead.

On June 16, 2015, mere minutes into a rambling campaign announcement speech, Trump was labeling Mexican immigrants as rapists and criminals, and pledging to build "a great, great wall" to keep them out.

He's been horrifying and/or delighting people with his provocations ever since.

Eleven Republicans were already in the race when Trump joined the field, with five still to come — a boatload of current and former governors and members of Congress among them. It was reasonable to view the impolitic nonpolitician Trump as, at best, an improbable choice to win the Republican nomination.

Clinton, by contrast, strode into the Democratic race two months earlier with a commanding resume and a sunny announcement video that instantly made her the presumed heir apparent for her party's nomination.

She looked poised to finish the business of shattering "that highest, hardest glass ceiling" she couldn't quite reach in a 2008 race against Barack Obama.

This time, it was Bernie Sanders who crashed her party and put the lie to the conceit of a cakewalk to the nomination. (Three more Democrats later joined the field, too, but without much impact.)

And thus the table was set for one of the nastiest, soul-crushing presidential campaigns in history.

In the end, no matter who wins, the next president will be one of the most unpopular ever.

"If the central promises of modern politics are peace and prosperity, we really haven't had either for a long time," said William Galston, a Brookings Institution scholar and former official in Bill Clinton's administration. "That created an atmosphere of discontent and protest that affected both political parties this year."

And how.

The Republican primaries of Campaign 2016 gave us "Jeb!" Bush and Marco Rubio and Ted Cruz and Ben Carson and Carly Fiorina and so many others that the GOP debates had to be divided into two segments to cram everyone on a stage. John Kasich was the sleeper who hung in there till the end.

Democrats felt the Bern, even if Sanders' fire eventually flickered out.

The primaries gave us taco bowls, penis jokes, penis boasts and schoolyard nicknames.

Forget debating the issues. People debated whether Trump was prone to blurting out "bigly" or "big league." (It's the latter.)

It wasn't just Trump who went low in the primary scramble.

Rubio ("Little Marco" to Trump) mocked the New York businessman's "small hands." And that triggered Trump's eye-popping reassurances during a nationally televised debate that there were no problems with his genitals.

New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie predicted he would beat Clinton's "rear end" if he met her in a debate. Bush called Trump a liar, a whiner and a jerk. Cruz ("Lyin' Ted" to Trump) mocked the GOP front-runner for his "Trumpertantrums."

And so it went.

None of it could trump Trump, with his never-ending fusillade of insults and bluster.

He dissed Sen. John McCain's history as a Vietnam prisoner of war, mocked Fiorina's face, and deemed Pope Francis' criticism of building walls "disgraceful."

He proposed a "total and complete shutdown" of immigration by an entire religious group — Muslims — to fight terrorism, only later morphing the idea into a call for "extreme vetting."

For all of that, it turned out that it was Trump, incongruent in his suit and red ball-cap, who best channeled the anger and disaffection percolating among Americans fed up with establishment politics.

Remember when Barbara Bush said the country had had enough Bushes? Her son ("Low-energy Jeb" to Trump) would've saved a lot of heartbreak and expense if he'd just listened to mom.

Trump drove the direction of the campaign, said GOP consultant Kevin Madden, "because he went out and took it, blocking the sun from his opponents while they were busy announcing their latest slate of endorsements of local sheriffs or pushing a policy white paper around."

On the left, it was Sanders, a grumpy socialist, who stirred passions with his promise of a political "revolution" against the entrenched, monied interests on Wall Street. The young voters who'd powered Obama's campaigns gravitated to Sanders. To Clinton, not so much.

Clinton was busy scrambling to explain her use of a private email setup and what the FBI director called her "careless" handling of classified information.

While Clinton tried to play down the email controversy in public, beneath the surface her aides fretted and fussed over damage-control strategies.

"There Is Just No Good Answer," Clinton adviser Philippe Reines wrote in March 2015 in one of hundreds of emails flying back and forth in the Clinton campaign on the subject.

We know that courtesy of WikiLeaks, which released tens of thousands of private emails from the Clinton campaign that U.S. intelligence officials said were hacked by the Russians. Never before had the innards of a campaign-in-motion spilled out like this.

That didn't seem to bother Trump, whose campaign has been one big, long friendly overture to Russian leader Vladimir Putin.

Through it all, Clinton soldiered on, even if she didn't always excite.

The groundbreaking notion of electing the first woman as president had its appeal, but never generated the electricity attached to the election of the nation's first black president.

Millennials seemed to take the idea of a female president as a given.

Once the voting started in the Democratic primaries, Sanders and his zealous supporters managed to claim victory in 22 states but never could find a pathway to the nomination.

Before the voting started in the Republican primaries, people questioned whether Trump's lead in the polls was for real.

Would people really cast ballots for the provocateur whose promise to "Make America Great Again" was so light on details?

In a word, yes.

AP-GfK poll: Most Trump supporters doubt election legitimacy

Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Donald Trump's dubious claims the presidential election is "rigged" have taken root among most of his supporters, who say they will have serious doubts about the legitimacy of the election's outcome if Hillary Clinton wins, according to a new Associated Press-GfK poll.

Just 35 percent of Trump's supporters say they will most likely accept the results of the election as legitimate if Clinton wins, while 64 percent say they're more likely to have serious doubts about the accuracy of the vote count if the Republican nominee is not the victor.

"Of course I believe it's rigged, and of course I won't accept the results," said Mike Cannilla, 53, a Trump supporter from the New York borough of Staten Island. "It's from the top: Obama is trying to take over the country, he's covering up all of Hillary's crimes and he's controlling the media trying to make Trump lose."

"Our only chance on Nov. 9 is if the military develops a conscience and takes matters into its own hands," Cannilla said.

By contrast, 69 percent of Clinton's supporters say they'll accept the outcome if Trump wins. Only 30 percent of the Democratic nominee's backers express a reluctance to accept the results if the former secretary of state loses on Election Day.

Overall, 77 percent of likely voters say they'll accept the legitimacy of the results if Trump wins, while 70 percent say the same of a Clinton win.

In the final weeks of the campaign, Trump has made doubts about the integrity of the U.S. election system a cornerstone of his closing argument. Asked directly at the final presidential debate if he would accept the election results, Trump refused, saying: "I will keep you in suspense."

That extraordinary statement, with its potential to challenge the peaceful transition of power that is a hallmark of the American democracy, did little to harm him with his base of supporters. The poll found that 44 percent of all likely voters say Trump's stance makes them less likely to support him, but the vast majority of his supporters say it doesn't make a difference.

"He should fight it all the way," said George Smith, 51, a Trump supporter from Roswell, Georgia. "Spend weeks in court if he has to. He can't let it be taken from him. That's his right."

Trump has also repeated inaccurate claims that vote fraud is a widespread problem, and the poll finds that most of Trump's supporters share that concern. Fifty-six percent think there's a great deal of voter fraud, 36 percent believe there is some, and 6 percent say there's hardly any.

Most Clinton supporters, 64 percent, think there's hardly any voter fraud. Overall, just 27 percent of likely voters think there's a great deal of fraud. A third of voters overall believe there is at least some, while 38 percent say there is hardly any.

While there have been isolated cases of voter fraud in the U.S., there is no evidence of it being a widespread problem. In one study, a Loyola Law School professor found 31 instances involving allegations of voter impersonation out of 1 billion votes cast in U.S. elections between 2000 and 2014.

Beyond allegations of fraud, 40 percent of Trump supporters say they have little to no confidence that votes in the election will be counted accurately. Another 34 percent say they have only a moderate amount of confidence, and just 24 percent say they have a great deal or quite a bit of confidence in the vote count.

Among Clinton supporters, 79 percent say they have a great deal or quite a bit of confidence in the vote count's accuracy. Many believe Trump should voice support for the electoral system even in defeat.

"Be an adult. Accept the results," said Shavone Danzy-Kinloch, 37, a Clinton supporter from Farmingville, New York. "If the shoe was on the other foot, he'd expect Hillary to do the same."

Trump's supporters are also more likely than others to say they are concerned about hackers interfering with the election. Forty-six percent of them are extremely or very concerned and 37 percent somewhat concerned. Overall, 32 percent of voters say they're extremely to very concerned and 39 percent somewhat concerned. Among Clinton supporters, 60 percent are at least somewhat concerned.

Although the poll shows many Trump supporters would have doubts about a Clinton win, the poll shows relatively little acute concern that claims of inaccuracy and voter fraud could prevent Americans overall from accepting the results. Just 30 percent of likely voters are extremely or very concerned about that, while another 40 percent are somewhat concerned.

Twenty-nine percent say they're not very or not at all concerned.

"If she wins, we're all going to have live with it," said Daniel Ricco, 76, a Trump supporter from Milford, Connecticut. "It won't be good for the country, but there's nothing we can do."

The AP-GfK Poll of 1,546 adults, including 1,212 likely voters, was conducted online Oct. 20-24, using a sample drawn from GfK's probability-based KnowledgePanel, which is designed to be representative of the U.S. population. The margin of sampling error for all respondents is plus or minus 2.75 percentage points, and for likely voters is plus or minus 3.1 percentage points.

Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump speaks Wednesday during a campaign rally in Kinston, N.C. Trump's claim the presidential election is "rigged" has taken root among most of his supporters, who say they will have serious doubts about the legitimacy of the election's outcome if Hillary Clinton wins the White House, according to a new Associated Press-GfK poll.

AP-GfK poll: Most voters believe media biased against Trump

SPRINGFIELD, Ohio — Donald Trump repeatedly rages that the media is biased against him, putting claims of press prejudice at the center of his campaign for president. Most voters — and not just those who are backing the Republican nominee — agree with him, according to a new Associated Press-GfK poll.

Overall, 56 percent of likely voters say the media is biased against Trump, just 5 percent say it's biased in his favor and 37 percent say coverage is mostly balanced.

Eighty-seven percent of Trump's supporters see the media as biased against him, and even Hillary Clinton's supporters are more likely to see bias against Trump than bias in his favor, 30 percent to 8 percent. Sixty percent of Clinton's supporters see no bias in either direction.

"The majority of the coverage is very biased — some of the stuff Clinton has done doesn't even get reported on," said Julius Villarreal, a 32-year-old Trump supporter from Houston. "Where is Benghazi? She thinks she's above the law, and the media is definitely complicit in helping her get away with it."

By contrast, 51 percent say the media is biased in Clinton's favor and just 8 percent see media bias against her, while 39 percent say the media is mostly balanced. Sixty-seven percent of Trump supporters say the media is biased in her favor.

"Hey, it's record-setting bad treatment, what I'm getting," Trump said on ABC's "Good Morning America" on Thursday. "It's the greatest pile-on in American history. I go to rallies, and they're starting to hate the media because they see it's all a big lie. Not all, but a lot of it's a big lie."

Trump's love-hate relationship with the media has been a major part of his campaign.

No candidate in recent history has ever utilized the media so effectively, winning coverage worth billions of dollars as he swamped opponents in the crowded Republican primary. In the early months of that campaign, the former reality TV star had a knack for both courting reporters and saying something outrageous — guaranteeing he'd receive around-the-clock coverage.

His tone shifted once he entered the general election against Clinton, the Democratic nominee. Republicans have long accused the media of possessing a liberal bias, but Trump took those attacks to a new level.

He routinely exhorts the crowds at his rallies to boo the journalists who travel with his campaign. He takes to Twitter to denounce what he sees as unfair coverage. And he attacks reporters, at times by name, when he doesn't like their questions.

Earlier this month, Trump derisively dismissed a reporter as "a sleazebag" for asking a question about women who have accused Trump of sexual assault.

"These people are among the most dishonest people in the world, the media," Trump said at a rally in Florida this week, pointing to the reporters at the back of the event. "They are the worst."

The AP-GfK Poll of 1,546 adults, including 1,212 likely voters, was conducted online Oct. 20-24, using a sample drawn from GfK's probability-based KnowledgePanel. KnowledgePanel is designed to be representative of the U.S. population. The margin of sampling error for all respondents is plus or minus 2.75 percentage points, and for likely voters is plus or minus 3.1 percentage points.

Respondents were first selected randomly using telephone or mail survey methods and later interviewed online. People selected for KnowledgePanel who didn't have access to the internet were provided access for free.

Clinton took conciliatory tone with health care industry in paid speeches

By Emily Kopp
Kaiser Health News

On the campaign trail, Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton has sharply criticized the health care industry, accusing pharmaceutical companies of profiteering and vowing to control skyrocketing costs.

But Clinton's tone was often more conciliatory before her presidential campaign when she addressed medical companies and trade groups as part of her brief but lucrative career delivering speeches for pay.

Elements of the speeches, some of which were delivered behind closed doors, were revealed in a hacked email that WikiLeaks made public in recent weeks.

"I know how critical the role that you play is," Clinton told the Advanced Medical Technology Association, a medical device trade group, in a 2014 speech. She avoided a direct question about a 2.3 percent tax on medical devices that was intended to fund the Affordable Care Act but was suspended until the end of 2017 after intense industry lobbying.

That appearance, for which Clinton was paid $225,000, was one of 15 paid speeches she gave to health care industry audiences, drawing a total of $3.5 million in fees. Overall, between the end of her tenure as secretary of state in February 2013 and the start of her 2016 White House bid, Clinton was paid about $21.6 million in speaking fees, according to her federal financial disclosure forms.

The health care speeches, largely overshadowed by the political storm over Clinton's paid presentations to big banks, provide another example of an industry with much at stake during the next administration adding to the personal wealth of the woman who is now the Democratic presidential nominee.

Clinton campaign spokeswoman Julie Wood said that the candidate has a long record of "standing up to special interests in health care," noting that the industry waged an aggressive push against her efforts as first lady in the early 1990s to overhaul the system.

"In this campaign, she has put forward proposals to hold drug companies accountable and ensure they put patients before profits and strengthen scrutiny of insurance companies," Wood said. "She's called out drug companies by name when they try to jack up prices with no apparent justification, like Mylan and the EpiPen, or exploit tax loopholes to shift profits overseas, like Pfizer's proposed inversion, or insurance company mergers that threaten to raise prices and restrict choice."

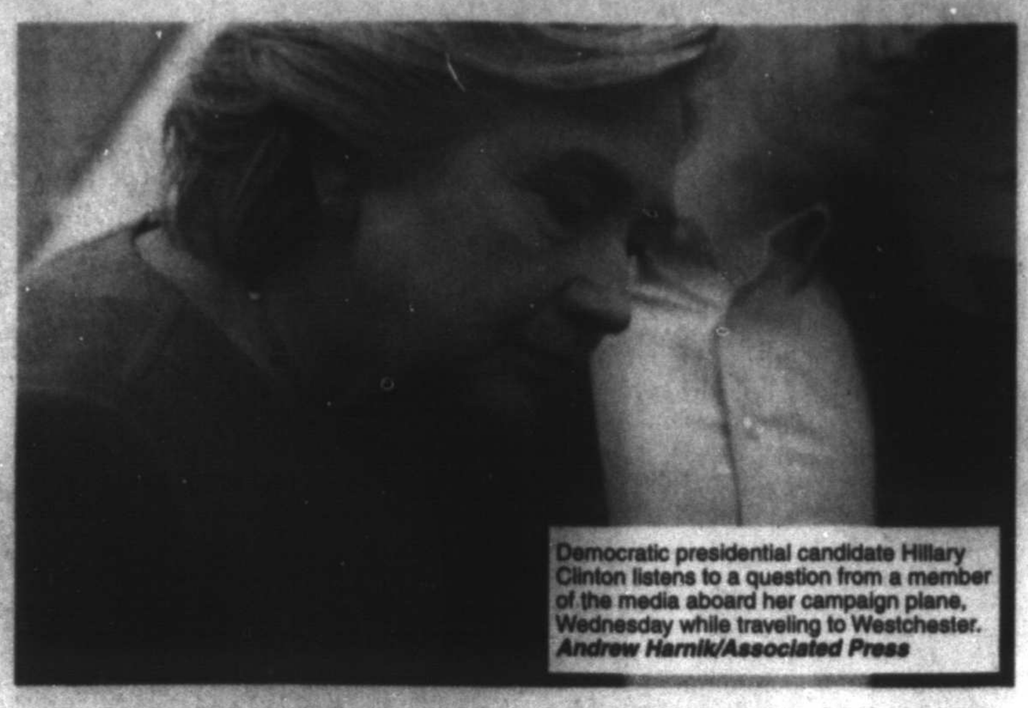

Transcripts and excerpts of Clinton's paid remarks show a cautious speaker treading delicately between flattering her hosts and avoiding compromises on policy that might complicate a presidential run in a time of public antipathy toward the drug industry and rising insurance costs.

One internal email published by WikiLeaks that gained attention this month, for showing an aide flagging politically dicey comments Clinton made to financial institutions, also compiled Clinton's potentially controversial remarks on issues such as single-payer health care, universal coverage, medical devices and pharmaceutical price controls.

The difference between Clinton's tone as a candidate and her paid remarks to the industry is evident when it comes to her comments on how drugmakers deal with the burden of paying high U.S. taxes and issues of costs.

In 2014, Clinton seemed sympathetic to the struggles of the drug industry when she appeared alongside Jim Greenwood, chief executive of the Biotechnology Innovation Organization (BIO), a trade association that includes large drugmakers such as Pfizer and Gilead Sciences.

With newfound vigor, Obama works to rebuild Democratic Party

By Josh Lederman
Associated Press

ORLANDO, Fla. — Gone is the old President Barack Obama, who approached campaigning for other Democrats as a chore. The new Obama is throwing himself into rebuilding his party in his final months in the White House and vowing to keep at it once he's left.

With his popularity higher than it's been in years, Obama has been campaigning for Hillary Clinton with gusto, and White House officials said he'll be traveling to help the Democrat nearly every day until Election Day, Nov. 8. He was paying his second visit in as many weeks to battleground Florida on Friday after releasing a new ad explicitly arguing a vote for Clinton was a vote for his legacy.

"Send a message, by voting for Hillary Clinton," Obama says in the ad.

He'll return to Florida yet again next week, and go to Ohio and North Carolina to boost Clinton. And in a less-expected development, he's putting a similar emphasis on the party's other candidates, cutting nearly two dozen TV and radio ads for House and Senate candidates and holding a similar number of fundraisers.

Obama's long-term goal: ensuring Democrats don't get railroaded when congressional maps are redrawn again in 2020 as, they say, they were after the 2010 census. He's already committing to spend part of his post-presidency developing the National Democratic Redistricting Committee, chaired by his former attorney general, Eric Holder.

Susan Walsh/Associated Press

President Barack Obama arrives to speak during a campaign event for Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton at the CFE Federal Credit Union Arena in Orlando, Fla., on Friday.

So when Obama campaigns for Clinton in Orlando on Friday, Democrats will also be using the visit to boost Democrats in two Orlando-area state House races and one state Senate race that they see as pivotal toward retaking control of Florida's legislature by 2020. Like most states, Florida gives the power to redraw its maps to state lawmakers.

Holder's new group this year shared detailed maps with the White House outlining areas where Obama could boost Democratic candidates up and down the ballot, said former Rep. Mark Schauer, D-Mich., the group's senior adviser.

David Simas, the White House political director, called the 150 state legislative races where Obama is endorsing candidates this year a "preview of coming attractions."

"It's clear these races are going to become much, much more important," Simas said. "As a reaction to that reality, he's been very clear with us, not only this year, to expect this is something he's going to take a personal interest in."

It wasn't always this way.

For years, Democrats griped privately that Obama had allowed the party's political apparatus to fall into disrepair, in part due to his decision after being elected not to fold his own campaign assets into the Democratic National Committee. After all, it was Obama who had brought new voters into the party during his rise to the White House, not the other way around.

While he raised money for Democratic campaign groups ahead of every election, Obama generally took a hands-off approach to the strength of the party itself, current and former Democratic officials said. The party fell heavily into debt in 2012 and it took years to pay off.

Yet, if Obama didn't do as much as some Democrats wanted, it may be because he was never explicitly asked.

"We don't move on our own to campaign for or to endorse or to do things for specific candidates," Simas said. "We let the respective committees, and individual candidates to a lesser extent, know that we were open to engaging in campaign activities for them at the right time and in whatever ways they thought were most effective and important."

Obama's bid to restore balance in redistricting speaks to the biggest obstacle of his presidency, and one he was never able to fully overcome: a Congress occupied largely by politicians from districts that lean so heavily Republican or Democratic that they have little incentive to compromise with the other side.

CLINTON

From 8A

"I don't want to see biotech companies or pharma companies moving out of our country simply because of some kind of tax — perceived tax disadvantage and potential tax advantage somewhere else," she said, according to an excerpt included in the email released by WikiLeaks.

The group paid Clinton $335,000 for the speech, according to her disclosure form.

But as a candidate, Clinton has attacked the industry on several fronts. Her campaign website, for instance, singled out the now-defunct proposed merger of Pfizer and Allergan — which would have allowed Pfizer to avoid taxes by moving its headquarters to Ireland — for "eroding the U.S. tax base." And Clinton sent biotechnology stocks tumbling last year when she rebuked "price gouging" by the specialty drug market, tweeting a link to an article about Turing Pharmaceuticals and then-chief executive Martin Shkreli.

Greenwood, the BIO executive who sat with her in 2014, criticized Clinton's jab, saying at the group's convention two years later that "even a lone tweet by a candidate for high office can have unintended, market-moving consequences."

BIO did not respond to requests for comment.

Clinton resisted the idea of drug price controls during a 2014 dinner with the Drug, Chemical and Associated Technologies Association, at a venue the moderator described as being "filled with individuals from the pharmaceutical industry." She was paid $250,000 for the speech, the content of which has previously not been reported.

"Well, I have to start by saying I don't think we proposed price controls," Clinton said in reference to her efforts in the 1990s, according to the WikiLeaks email. "We proposed more competition, more transparency, state exchanges, if those sound familiar, to entice greater negotiation over price."

In her 2014 appearance before the Advanced Medical Technology Association, Clinton addressed the group's conference in Chicago and participated in a question-and-answer session with the group's chief executive, Stephen Ubl, according to a news release from the group.

Ubl has since become chief executive of the industry's largest trade association, Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers of America, and has been critical of Clinton's negative comments about the industry during the campaign.

A spokeswoman for the association, Wanda Moebius, said asking Clinton to speak was in keeping with the group's outreach to important policymakers "to address our members on key issues of the day and to share their policy perspectives."

The speech excerpts show that Clinton has consistently supported the Affordable Care Act. She applauds government-provided health care but is cautious about applying those lessons to the U.S. market.

Clinton expressed resignation to the current private insurance market in a 2013 address to the Economic Club of Grand Rapids — whose board includes the president of Blue Cross Blue Shield Michigan.

"People are entitled to make a profit," she said.

Clinton Inc. allows the family to return to power

■ Bill Clinton's 'body man' keeps them in the spotlight and living the good life

JONAH GOLDBERG

Tribune News Service

"Doug is very transactional." This was an apt description of Doug Band, Bill Clinton's longtime right-hand man and the figure at the center of the latest WikiLeaks revelation.

The quote comes from an unnamed former White House colleague of Band's in an illuminating 2013 New Republic profile by Alec MacGillis.

Band, who touts himself as the founder of "Clinton Inc.," started out as a White House intern. He turned down higher-status jobs to focus on being the "body man" for President Clinton. In politics, a body man is the guy (or gal) whose only job is to make sure the principal is happy, comfortable and treated with the maximum amount of respect. No task is too small or too humiliating for a president's body man. If POTUS wants a bowl of green M&Ms, green M&Ms it is. But it was also Band's job to make sure no one wasted Clinton's time. In short, he was the gatekeeper, the handler, the problem-solver. Like a royal valet, it was his job to anticipate the president's needs before he even articulated them.

Band recognized what throne-sniffers have known for millennia: Proximity to power can be lucrative.

When Clinton's reputation was in tatters at the end of his presidency, thanks mostly to the Monica Lewinsky scandal and Clinton's outrageous midnight pardons of felons and friends, Band turned down a job at Goldman Sachs to stay with Clinton. Equipped with a law degree he earned at night, Band was like Tom Hagen in "The Godfather" — a lawyer with a "very special practice" handling exactly one client.

It was Band's idea to launch the Clinton Global Initiative, an amorphous pseudo-charity adjunct to the Clinton Foundation whose main purpose was to pull together celebrities, CEOs, government officials and various charitable organizations into one giant confab where Bill Clinton was the star attraction.

The appeal for Clinton was obvious. He loves talking. He loves riffing on wonky solutions — real and alleged — to various public-policy problems. He also adores hobnobbing with the rich and famous and being praised by them. And he has a deep-seated need to be relevant.

Band recognized that all of these needs could be monetized, and that he could get his cut. In the memo released by WikiLeaks, he explained how he did it. If you wanted a speech, an endorsement, a meeting with the big guy, you had to go through the little guy and pay the appropriate tribute, not just to Clinton but often to the foundation as well.

In 2011, along with Declan Kelly, a longtime fundraiser for Hillary Clinton, Band set up a company, Teneo, to fully exploit this system, with a much bigger payday for himself. He steered tens of millions to the Clintons and their foundation, as well as lavish "in-kind services for the president and his family — for personal travel, hospitality, vacation and the like."

MacGillis has too much credulity on one score. Bill Clinton, MacGillis writes, "was notoriously blase about financial matters."

"He doesn't care about money," a Clinton friend told MacGillis. "He doesn't even have a credit card. When he wants to get something he says, 'Wow, I love that,' and whoever he's with says, 'Here it is!'"

This isn't proof Clinton doesn't care about money so much as it's proof he takes it for granted. It's a pristine example of Clinton's aristocratic entitlement. In medieval societies, the nobility looked down on money not because they didn't care about being rich, but because they had little people to sweat the details.

For years I've been making the point that the Clinton Foundation's charitable efforts are both real and misunderstood. They do good things. But, as with the corporations and corrupt monarchies Doug Band squeezed for donations, the good deeds were always a cost center, an overhead necessity like the light bill.

Charity was the price the Clintons had to pay — to get Bono and Bill Gates to show up, and pay up. The real mission of the Clinton Foundation, including the Clinton Global Initiative, was to keep Bill a global celebrity and maintain the lifestyle to which he felt entitled.

But there was a second purpose.

"Clinton Inc." is the wrong term. House Clinton — like House Lannister in "Game of Thrones" — is closer to the mark.

The Clintons always wanted to get back into power, and for a self-styled royal family in exile, the foundation served as a brilliant way to keep all of the retainers, courtiers and henchmen employed — and the donors engaged — as they plotted their return. And, sadly, it appears to have worked.

OUR VIEW

Wagner Noel makes significant impact on local arts scene

Five years ago, the Wagner Noel Performing Arts Center opened, changing entertainment as we know it.

The facility more than lived up to the hype, with Rod Stewart on opening night and entertainment options that probably would never have come to Midland otherwise. Music acts, traveling Broadway-caliber shows, comedians and Las Vegas acts, have come to Midland. Blue Man Group, Jerry Seinfeld, the Moscow Ballet, Diana Ross and the sharing of the stage by Paul Simon, Steve Martin & The Steep Canyon Rangers — these headliners all have come to Midland.

The University of Texas of the Permian Basin has a first-class venue for its graduations and John Ben Shepperd Leadership Institute events.

And local arts organizations have a facility to showcase their talents like never before.

It has been a quality-of-life upgrade of the highest order.

From the day state Rep. Tom Craddick announced that money was secured through tuition revenue bonds for UTPB to build a performing arts center between Midland and Odessa, we knew our entertainment scene would never be the same again. We just didn't know to what extent.

The Wagner-Noel was also an opportunity for the two communities to show they could contribute to a project that would impact the entire Permian Basin. Money was raised from both sides of Farm-to-Market Road 1788. The Wagner and Noel families topped it off with founders' gift donations that made a better performing arts center possible and to establish an endowment.

Another notable is that the Wagner Noel is the showpiece of UTPB's Midland campus. We applaud the decision by Craddick to recommend the location at 1788 and State Highway 191, adjacent to the Center for Energy and Economic Diversification. During the last legislative session, Craddick helped make possible a third element to the Midland campus with a $48 million commitment to the school's new engineering building.

For years, there has been a concerted effort by UTPB President David Watts and other local leaders to make Midland a bigger part of the university. The Wagner Noel and engineering building will help accomplish that.

Lastly, the center is an example of Midland and Odessa coming together on a project. Craddick told the Reporter-Telegram last week that Midlanders and Odessans raised a nearly identical amount of money. The $81 million that the two cities raised supplemented the state funds provided.

But today really is about the fifth anniversary of a center that changed Midland for the better. The Wagner Noel is a performing arts center built to impress, no matter if a person is there to hear Susan Graham, rock out to White Snake or experience Broadway in the Basin.

What will the next five years bring? If the next six months are any indication, the Wagner Noel will continue to impress. Scheduled during that time are Willie Nelson, Robert Earl Keen, Chris Tomlin, The Moscow Ballet's Great Russian Nutcracker, comedian Ron White, Broadway acts "Elf The Musical," "Once," "Rent the 20th Anniversary Tour" and "The Illusionists."

We hope you have a chance to experience the Wagner Noel Performing Arts Center. It has been a first-class addition to Midland.

Sadly, Trump or Clinton will win

■ It's not up to columnists to tell Americans for whom to cast their vote

RUBEN NAVARRETTE

Washington Post Writers Group

On Election Day, I'm voting for ... Actually, it's none of your business who I'm voting for. In fact, I believe there is something wrong with those columnists, pundits and commentators who have, as of late, felt the urgent need to share their presidential picks.

This could be a sign of the times. Many in the media feel compelled to share personal details of their lives with readers, listeners and viewers to establish a personal connection.

It's one thing to pepper a column with "I" or "me" or "my," or refer to your own childhood during a segment on parenting. But once cable news hosts began referring to their sexual orientation during interviews or appearing in magazine spreads in skimpy outfits or identifying themselves as immigrants while berating a nativist politician, all the revealing got creepy.

How long before those who deliver the news figure out that we tune in to find out what's going on in the world — not what's going on with them?

Journalists and other media figures could also be sharing their voting preference in an attempt to persuade others to second the motion. That assumes we have the power to persuade anyone to do anything. And I, for one, have accumulated much evidence to the contrary — which includes stacks of columns that fell on deaf ears.

After I declared myself to be "Never, Never" in this election — committed to not voting for either Hillary Clinton or Donald Trump — a lawyer sent me an email asking for clarification "so you don't cause or encourage exhausted voters to stay home."

I don't have the ability to depress voter turnout. That guy has me confused with the weather.

But winning converts is not the role of journalists, either. There is an epidemic of people in the news business losing focus and trying to do everyone else's job but their own.

In the 27 years that I've written for newspapers and websites, I've been a freelancer, reporter, editor, columnist and editorial board member. And I'm clear on who is supposed to do what — and who isn't. Just like reporters must keep their opinions to themselves, so too should those who are tasked with writing columns resist the temptation to write editorials.

After writing more than 2,000 of each, I can tell you that those are two different animals. And my journalistic pet peeves include sentences that end like this: "This column endorses ..."

Seriously? So now the column is a living breathing entity? What should we do next? Take it to lunch?

Another problem with that approach is that it feeds into the unhealthy notion that those of us who are paid for our opinions somehow operate on a higher plane than those who aren't. You must have a pretty high opinion of yourself, and your thought process, to let your column "endorse" anyone for any office — let alone president. The best way to do this job is to take your craft seriously, and yourself not so much. And on that score, many of my colleagues come up short.

When Americans step into the ballot box, we're all equal — rich and poor, African-American and Latino, those who write columns and those who read them.

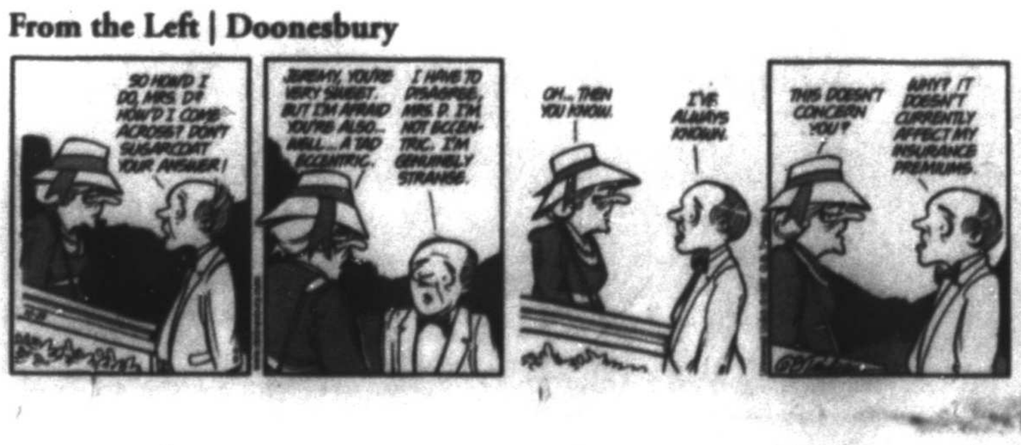

Still, I'm not immune to the pressure that so many Americans are feeling as we approach this election. My wife has been pushing me to write a column explaining what people should be thinking about when they vote, not necessarily telling them how to vote but explaining what the main issues are.

At this point, given all the ugliness we've witnessed, there is only one issue that matters: character. If the person you settle on has character, he or she will keep promises, forge alliances, avoid scandal and put the interests of the country ahead of his or her own. And if that person is lacking character, the country will suffer. And haven't we suffered enough?

On Nov. 8, all Americans have the same six options: Donald Trump, Hillary Clinton, a third-party candidate, writing in a name, leaving the top line blank, or not voting. I've ruled out the first three, and the last one.

Frankly, I'm sick of Trump and Clinton. I think they're both awful, and neither should be trusted with the power of the presidency. Because I love my country, I'd like both of them to lose. My only consolation is that one of them will.

At long last, and perhaps with long lines, we're off and voting

KEN HERMAN
Austin American-Statesman

Some of you may already be aware of this. I think it's been on TV. There's an election going on. We're voting on lots of people and things.

Atop the ballot, we're picking a president. Happens periodically. This year there's a very earnest older woman running. She used to live in the White House and wants to move back in though it was tough on her marriage the first go-round.

(Sidenote: Who'd have thought the Clinton marriage would outlast the Gore marriage? Anyone see that coming?)

And the earnest older woman is running against an even older man. He lives in a gold house and seems to have aged into that phase of life where the filters fade and you just say whatever pops into your head. That can be endearingly entertaining. It also can scare you to death. (FYI, the female candidate suffers from lack of filter only in her emails.)

I voted Thursday at the Ben Hur Shrine Temple near Anderson Lane. No lines at 8:30 a.m. and, as usual, the friendly, helpful poll workers had everything running smoothly. Thank you. Also as usual, I got it right on every race and everybody should vote exactly as I did. I will, however, defend your right to be wrong. (And it is my civic duty to report I saw evidence of vote fraud at the polling place. A woman wearing an "I voted" sticker on her shirt was carrying a cute baby wearing an "I voted" sticker on his or her forehead. Somebody should arrest that kid.)

I backed Ohio Gov. John Kasich for president this year. Facing a Kasich-free ballot, I didn't find anybody to vote for for president. So I voted against the guy who lives in the gold house.

Early voting is big this year. I often caution against voting early. What happens if, post-vote, you find out something bad about the candidate you backed? In a year in which many of us don't like any of the presidential candidates what if, post-vote, you find out something good about the candidate you didn't back?

We're seeing record early vote totals in lots of counties. Through Wednesday, just under 17 percent of Travis County's registered voters had cast ballots. That used to be good total turnout for an Austin City Council election.

For what it's worth (and remember, you can early vote at any of the county's 31 locations), the most popular polling place through Wednesday was the Ben Hur Shrine Temple. Go Ben Hur! Second was ACC-Highland Mall. Could have been a lot of confused people looking for the food court. In last place was the Dove Springs Recreation Center.

One more election thing. Travis County Commissioner Gerald Daugherty's great re-election ad featuring his wife pleading with you to vote for him to get him out of the house has attracted considerable positive intergalactic attention, including more than 2.7 million online viewings. CNN celebrated it Thursday. NBC's "Today" showed it Wednesday, as did MSNBC's "Morning Joe."

"It's one of the best campaign ads I have ever seen," said "Morning Joe" host Joe Scarborough.

"I don't know if he's a Republican," he added. "I don't know if he's a Democrat. I don't care. I'm voting for him. I'm moving to Texas just to vote for him because of this commercial."

On "Today," Matt Lauer said, "It's cute. And very wholesome, which is nice."

The ad also was praised by Mr. Sulu, the original one from the original "Star Trek." Actor George Takei posted it on Facebook.

"I don't know anything about Travis County Commissioner Gerald Daugherty," Takei wrote. "But I found his campaign video to be very droll. Ah, some welcome levity during this election cycle."

Maybe Mr. Sulu can hook us up with somebody who can beam some of the candidates to another planet when this election is over.

DISTRICT 4

Vote for Kennedy is vote for reform

John Kennedy receives my support for Midland Independent School District Board for District 4. As a native of Midland and parent of three children who attended Midland public schools, he is keenly interested in helping to achieve academic excellence.

He is a successful businessman and is mindful of the need for fiscal responsibility.

A vote for John Kennedy is a vote for positive reform of MISD.

Arlen L. Edgar

Kennedy will give his all for betterment of MISD

I am writing to share my enthusiastic support of John L. Kennedy for the MISD school board, District 4. As a former CPA and current business owner, John has the experience needed to assess the complex financial challenges of our school system. John and his wife, Leslie, reared three children in Midland, and they were all students in the MISD school system, but his commitment goes far beyond the interests of his own children.

John has a servant's heart and has served his church and community in leadership positions, and his experience will provide a firm foundation to serve the people of Midland. He knows and has worked with all facets of Midland citizens, and he will represent them equally.

Our children attended school and participated in MISD sports with the Kennedy children. I have seen how John and Leslie were, and continue to be, concerned and committed volunteers. John considers options before making important decisions, and I believe he will be totally committed and will give his all for the betterment of MISD.

Murry takes common-sense approach to solving problems

The Midland community is fortunate to have Bryan Murry running for the open school board seat in District 7. We need strong reform-minded individuals with a vested interest in our education system to fill our school board seats more now than ever.

I had the fortune of teaching his youngest son in junior high and working with Murry from a teacher-parent perspective. I know he is dedicated to supporting our teachers and improving the education our children receive. Murry's wife is a teacher, and he has had four children in Midland schools. He is invested in making the changes that parents, students and educators are demanding. I have also had the pleasure of knowing Murry and his family on a personal level. It is obvious that he adores children and is devoted to his family.

Murry has an extensive resume of leadership in our community. With a successful background in accounting, he has proven to be logical and maintains a common-sense approach to problem-solving.

Trump will deliver change America needs

Let actions and words speak for themselves. For eight years, Obama has downgraded America and its values. On more than one occasion, this man has demoralized Christianity, and to bring up the Crusades was a very important clue to who he is. Now, if elected, Hillary, along with BLM (Obama's puppets), will continue his agenda: the destruction of America.

This is Trump's "Trojan horse." In my opinion, with these facts, I see no Christian, no love for America and a questionable birth certificate.

Change will only come through Trump.

David Newcomb

Voting for Trump is vote for Pence

Jesus Mendoza attacks Donald Trump for being a bully and lying, while Hillary Clinton has lied and bullied to the point of physical harm continuously for her entire public life. By her inaction as Secretary of State, she is directly responsible for American deaths.

Yes, it is very important that teachers instill the habits of integrity, honor and compassion for one another, but you don't do that by pointing out one candidate's faults while completely ignoring the other.

Neither of the two presidential candidates is really worthy of our votes, and it's our fault that the country has degenerated to the point that our choices are either Clinton or Trump. Being someone who strives to instill integrity into the students I come into daily contact with, I would never vote for Clinton, who should be in prison for a multitude of crimes and corruption.

Should we instill in our students the idea that it is fine to break the law and lie about it whenever it suits your goals?

The real question to be asked when considering the two candidates is "how can you not vote for Trump?"

If nothing else cast your vote for Mike Pence.

Donald R. Speir

Not voting is a vote for Clinton

With 350,000,000 people in this great country, it's amazing that we ended up choosing Hillary Clinton and Donald Trump as the candidates for president of the United States. There are stark differences between the two: she, an incontinent liar; he, coarse and crude.

Trump's admitted crudity and vulgarity did not cause Obamacare. His crudity and vulgarity did not cause the Benghazi debacle with the loss of four American lives, followed by Clinton's persistent lies. They did not cause our borders to be unsecured, resulting in the admission (invasion?) of millions of unvetted people. They did not cause the Iran nuclear deal, which will allow Iran to have nuclear weapons in 10 years. They did not cause our national debt to almost double in only 71/2 years to $19 trillion.

The future decisions of our Supreme Court and federal judges are considerations of the highest importance. Under a Clinton presidency, our system of laws and our Constitution will suffer greatly for generations to come.

Many people may say "a pox on both of their houses" and stay away from the polls on election day. Staying home and not voting is a vote — for Hillary.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Food drive successful thanks to stores

My Boy Scout troop, Troop 152, conducted a food drive at H-E-B and Super Mercado on Oct. 15.

Martin Lilly holds the current rank of Life Scout, and this project was a requirement for his Eagle rank, which is the highest rank you can be in Boy Scouts. He planned the entire project by enlisting the help of his fellow Scouts, as well as local business donors.

We had one team for each store, and we collected canned food and other non-perishable items from customers who wanted to contribute. I helped out at Super Mercado, and there we collected around four full shopping carts of food — 1,400 items, including canned goods, rice, pasta and other non-perishable goods. We donated all of the food and money donations to the Midland Soup Kitchen Ministries for the upcoming Thanksgiving and Christmas seasons.

I had a lot of fun collecting cans, and in the end CBS news came and interviewed Martin. I would like to thank the kind people at H-E-B and Super Mercado for allowing us to conduct our food drive at their locations. Without their help, we wouldn't have been nearly as successful as we were.

Opinion piece is overly harsh

The following is a response to the opinion piece that appeared in the Weekender entertainment section about Dinesh D'Souza's DVD, "Hillary's America: The secret history of The Democratic Party."

It is evident that this writer has neither seen the full movie nor done her homework. It is sad that her eyes are so blinded. It is also sad that the overly harsh and unrealistic punishment of Dinesh D'Souza's failure, as an immigrant, to understand our campaign finance laws is so grossly exaggerated, whereas a multitude of those making the same "mistake" on the "other" side have received no acknowledgment of their wrongdoing or received punishment for breaking the law.

This opinion piece was obviously an attempt to turn the American public away from the real information in this incredible movie. This is history, fact-filled history, for which everyone should be aware.

Everyone, get the DVD "Hillary's America: The secret history of The Democratic Party."

A personal friend of Dinesh D'Souza,

Free market is not about giving funds to businesses

Once again, our city leaders have lied to us. When they asked us to vote the 4B tax for the new stadium, they promised it would go away as soon as the stadium was paid for. They did not say it would be redirected, as they are now trying to do.

If city leaders want money for new soccer and softball fields to draw more people to Midland, that money should come from hotel-motel tax; after all, that tax is intended to be used to draw people to Midland.

If they want to make cuts to the Midland budget, stop funding Hogan Park Golf Course with tax money. Like any other course in Midland, it should be self-sustaining.

They say they do not have enough money to fix our roads, then they are bad stewards of our money. They seem to have money to hold special elections. Why was this not on the November ballot? Are they trying to sneak it by the people? Stop giving our money to failed businesses, such as Trace Engines. Stop giving our money to any business; that's not what the free market is about. We need a "no" vote against the 4B tax.

Robert Crites

Winner shouldn't be announced until all polls are closed

National elections: The candididate who receives a simple majority of votes should become president of our great nation. What need is there for an Electoral College and so-called swing states because of the number of electoral votes they have?

On election night, no reports of votes should be made public until all polling places have closed. There have been times when one candidate has been declared the winner even though voting is still going on in the western states, particularly Hawaii. Some (not all) national news reporters remind me of the people in the biblical book of Acts who "spent their time in nothing else, but either to tell, or to hear some new thing." Acts 17:21. Go ahead and tell us who won, but wait until everyone has had a chance to cast their ballot.

Our national government needs to keep us safe from all those who would harm us. There are many things government should stay out of. Someone has said something like: The best possible government being the least possible government. Let us limit executive privilege.

Real estate tax: So-called Robin Hood causes Midland to send $50 million to the state because some school districts do not have enough money. Maybe they need to charge tuition and not expect other people to pay their bills.

Some local taxing entities have my property valued at about $100,000 more than I paid for it. Maybe I could sell it to them. People my age are thankful for Social Security checks, but at the same time wince when it takes more than a third of it to pay property taxes.

Moral values: Abortion is murder.

Homosexual and transgender lifestyles are not natural. God created Adam and Eve not Adam and Steve. Maybe we could build some more bathrooms out back. Do you suppose some of that real estate tax money could be used to pave a path?

In spite of some of these things above, this is still a great country. I love it here.

Robert L. Williams

It's about to get harder to seek student debt relief

By Shahien Nasiripour
Bloomberg

A new rule finalized Friday by the Obama administration will cost student debtors who say their colleges defrauded them of some longstanding rights to get their federal loans canceled, while colleges on shaky financial footing dodged a government crackdown.

Those regulations, proposed in June, mark the administration's response to the spate of closures of for-profit colleges, following state and federal investigations and lawsuits that have so far led more than 80,000 Americans to seek debt relief, alleging fraud, according to new figures the U.S. Department of Education also released Friday.

According to a summary of the rule the agency provided late Thursday, borrowers who receive federal student loans starting next July and who subsequently accuse their colleges of misleading them into enrolling will face a narrower path to debt relief than today's borrowers.

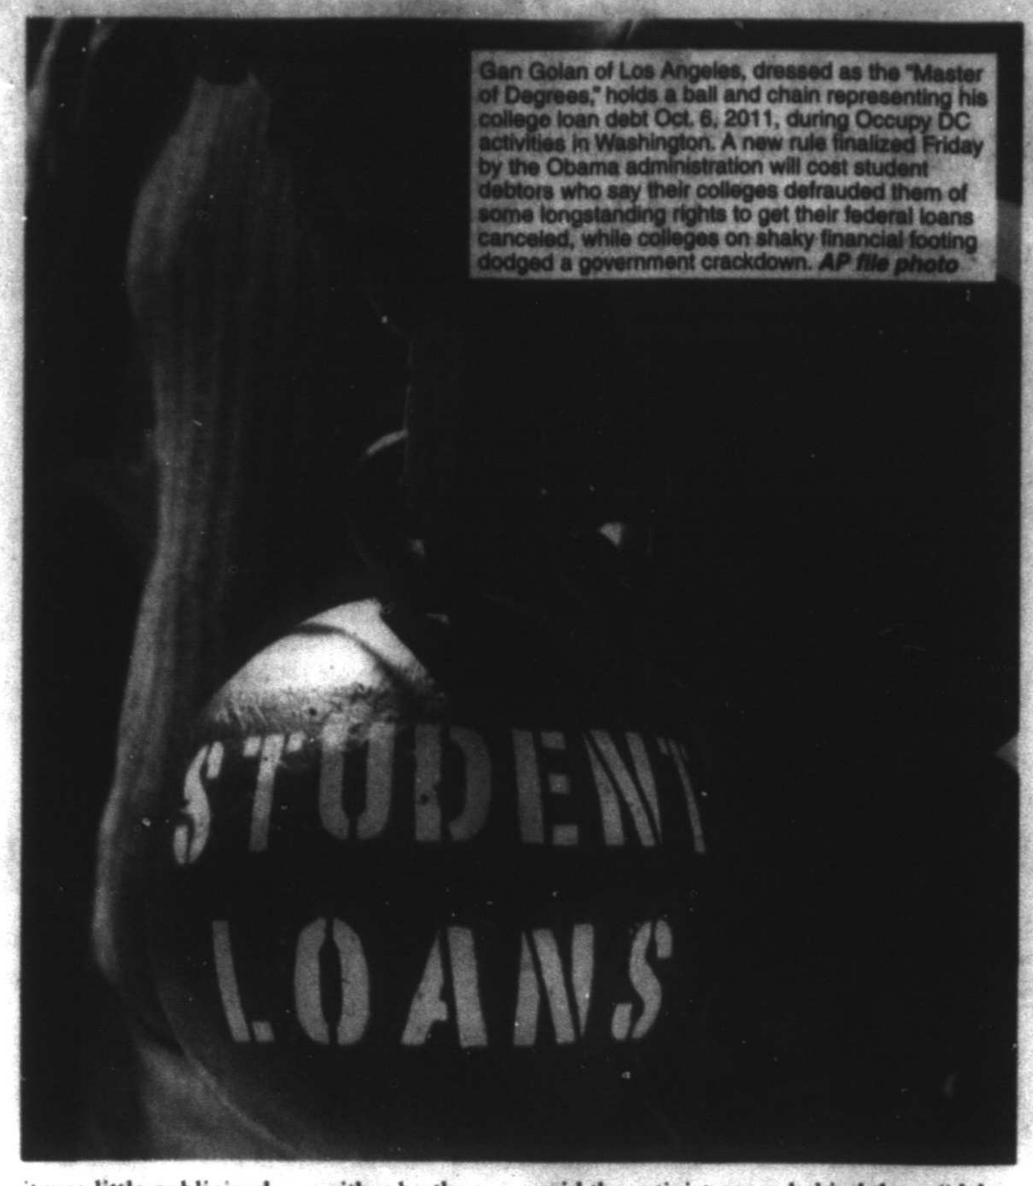

If the rule is upheld, defrauded student debtors no longer will be able to get their loans canceled by alleging their schools violated state laws, unless they first successfully sue. Instead, they'll be subject to a new federal standard — one officials say is more efficient but consumer advocates say limits borrowers' ability to file claims.

The feds also barred colleges from forcing students seeking compensation into arbitration instead of going to court, a practice largely limited among colleges to the for-profit sector.

Already, the Education Department has agreed to cancel $247.4 million in debt owed by more than 15,000 former students of Corinthian Colleges Inc., the now-bankrupt chain that the department says marketed false job-placement statistics for dozens of its programs.

Experts expect the feds eventually will cancel billions in loans owed by students who attended various other schools, also.

The debt-cancellation provision has been on the books since the mid-1990s and has been disclosed in borrowers' federal loan contracts for years. But because it was little publicized — neither by the department's loan contractors nor by consumer advocates — few applied until last year, when a group of former Corinthian students refused to make payments on their loans to protest the agency's policing of for-profit colleges.

Dan Golan of Los Angeles, dressed as the "Master of Degrees," holds a ball and chain representing his college loan debt Oct. 6, 2011, during Occupy DC activities in Washington. "As we know, there's plenty of reasons not to trust the Department of Education in making decisions in students' interests, so we're pretty skeptical about what this new process will look like in practice," said the activist group behind those "debt strikes" — first launched by former Corinthian students and later by ITT Educational Services Inc. students as well.

A flood of unexpected debt-relief applications swamped the department. State prosecutors and consumer advocates said it was ill-equipped to supervise the thousands of colleges that collectively get close to $100 billion a year in federal student loan funds, or to protect the millions of students who borrow from the feds to attend schools that, by participating in the loan program, effectively bear the government's seal of approval.

In response, the Obama administration vowed to rewrite the debt-cancellation rule, promising that colleges — not taxpayers — would shoulder the cost of all the discharged debt. But its proposal in June was panned both by colleges and by consumer advocacy organizations.

Colleges said the feds were proposing to penalize them for seemingly random financial issues they argued had no bearing on their ability to operate or cover the cost of eventual debt cancellations. Consumer groups said the department was trying to make it harder for borrowers to discharge their debt, accusing it of prioritizing limiting the potential cost over making defrauded borrowers whole.

Margaret Reiter, a former top California prosecutor who sued for-profit colleges, called the change to borrowers' debt-cancellation rights "shocking" in an Aug. 1 letter, given "the department's abysmal track record in preventing national scandal time and again because of its failure to adequately police the student loan and grant programs."

Under the new rule, colleges that breach the government's list of triggers — such as a government lawsuit — typically will have to stump up a financial guarantee equal to 10 percent of their previous year's federal aid haul, unless the secretary of education determines the surety should be higher.

That provision is a retreat by the administration from its earlier, more expansive proposal, which would have subjected schools to potentially endless demands for more collateral each time they ran afoul of the government's triggers. Colleges had most objected to this element of the administration's proposal.

Apollo Education Group, owner of the giant University of Phoenix, told investors this year that surety demands in excess of 10 percent could scuttle its planned sale of the school to a group of private equity buyers that includes Tony Miller, chief operating officer of the Vistria Group and a former deputy education secretary under the Obama administration.

■ COMMENTARY

Modern economics has little room for parasites. In the vast majority of models, there are only buyers and sellers — there's no one who just comes up and steals your money. In the real world, of course, there are parasites galore — thieves, con artists, fraudsters, extortionists and more. In the long term, the amount of parasitism in any system should depend on the cost of policing — if it's easy for thieves to steal, there will be more theft.

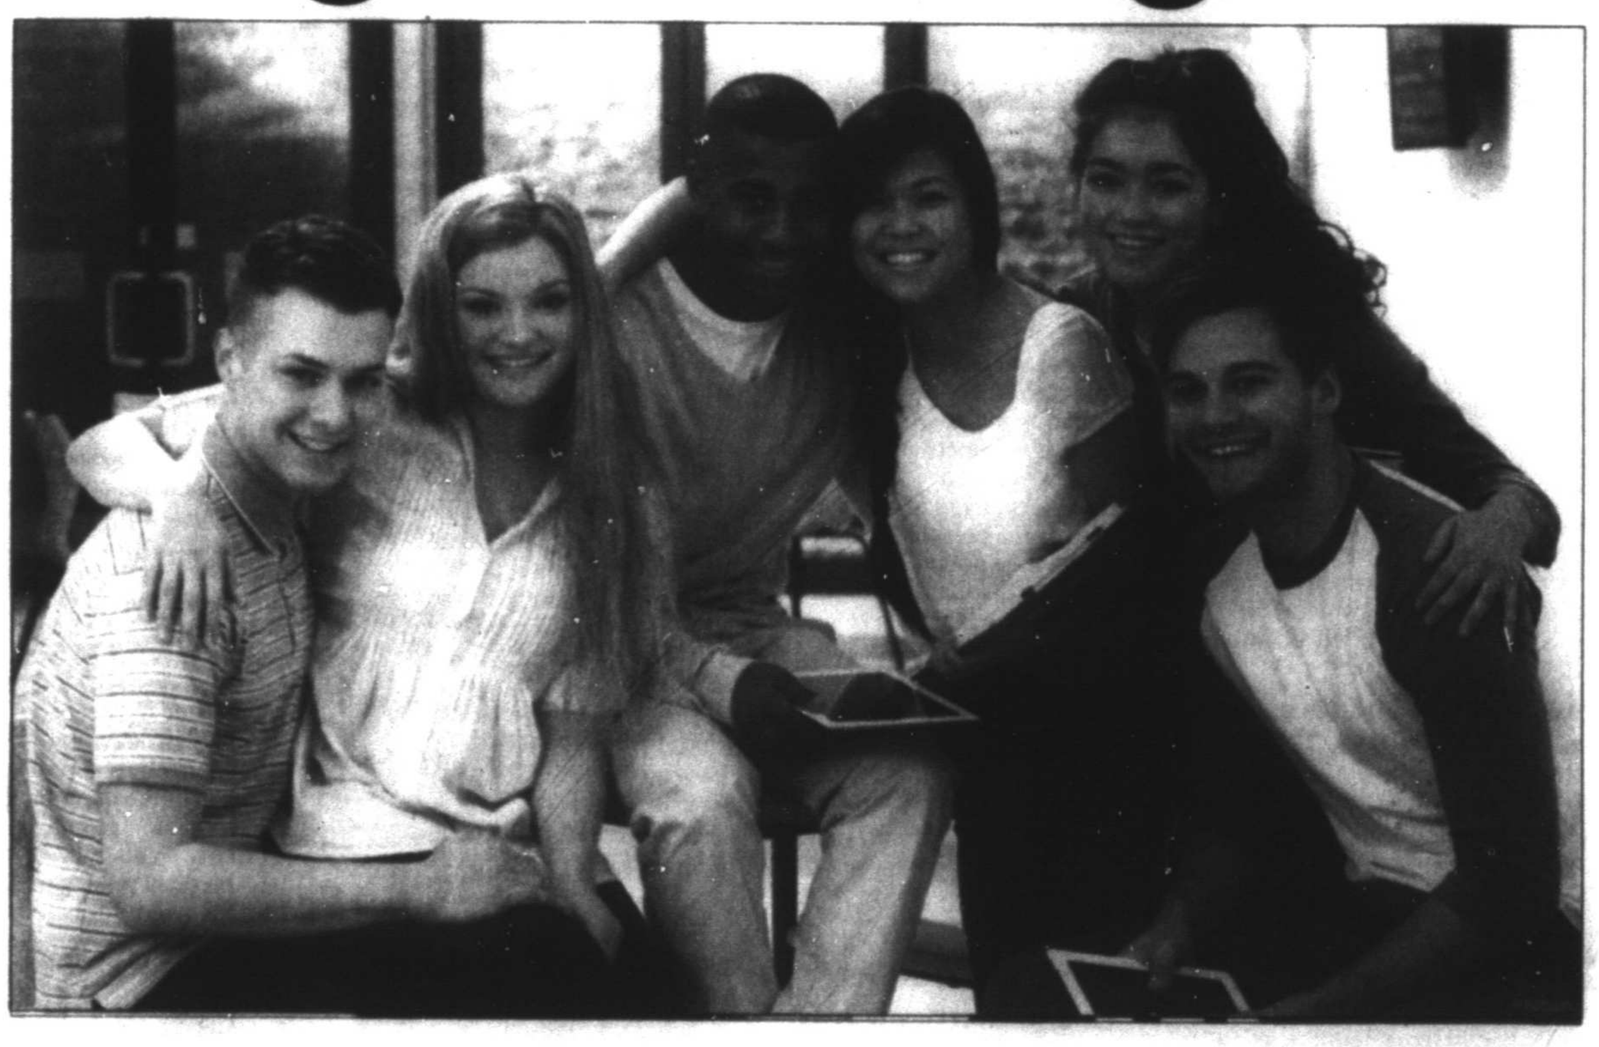

On the internet, parasites are rampant. Email spam, identity theft and cyberespionage are some of best-known examples. And, of course, there was the Oct. 21 denial-of-service attack that made many prominent websites inaccessible. Every year, billions of dollars are spent on cleaning the system of these bloodsuckers. That spending might add to gross domestic product, but in economic terms it's social waste — in an ideal world, we wouldn't have to use resources stopping parasites.

The most recent threat is ransomware. Basically, if you open the wrong file, a program steals the contents of your hard drive and seals it away behind a wall of encryption. Only if you cough up the ransom will the thieves give you the password to get your data back. In 2011 I was reading about ransomware in science fiction novels; this year, it might cost consumers as much as $1 billion. And the amount of money spent on protecting against this menace will probably be much higher than the amount actually stolen, since enough needs to be spent to keep the danger rare and the internet usable.

Taking the Pledge

The Red Ribbon Campaign is about bringing drug awareness to light. If you're wondering how you can do your part in achieving this goal, one of the easiest and most effective ways is to take the pledge.

The rule of the pledge, as set by the Red Ribbon Campaign, is simple: Set guidelines to help children grow up safe, healthy and drug-free.

IMPORTANCE OF TAKING THE PLEDGE

By taking the pledge and enforcing its message, you're doing your part in securing America's future. You will be making a difference in the lives of the children around you.

Teaching them to make the right decisions and stay drug-free will greatly benefit their futures and keep them on the path to success. You may not be able to stop America's drug problem by yourself, but educating today's youth is taking a step in the right direction.

PLEDGE FOR PARENTS

Here are some of the main facets of the pledge:

Explain the risks. By talking to the youth in your life about the dangers of a life of drugs, you can sway children to make the right choices on staying drug-free.

Set a good example. Children will easily absorb the environment around them. They learn from the behavior to which they are exposed. Be sure to live a clean, drug-free lifestyle yourself to make sure you remain a positive role model.

Consequences. Pay attention to your children's behavior. If you believe your children are considering drug use, enforce clear, strict consequences so they will understand the risk of that type of lifestyle.

PLEDGE FOR CHILDREN

For children, here are some of the main personal characteristics to strive for:

Stay in school. Pledge to remain in school and consider postsecondary education so you can learn important tools that will benefit your decisions in life.

Influence your peers. Pledge to be a good influence on other children your age. If you see someone leaning toward drug-use, seek an adult's advice.

Stay drug-free. While growing up, you may feel the impact of peer pressure. Remember this pledge and how important living drug-free is to your future goals.

Why Hollywood, environmentalists and Native Americans have converged on North Dakota

By Steven Mufson
The Washington Post

Why are celebrities like actor Mark Ruffalo, civil rights leader Jesse Jackson, liberal television anchor Amy Goodman and scores of Native Americans from the Standing Rock Sioux tribe all converging on a isolated spot along the Missouri river of North Dakota?

To block the construction of an oil pipeline. But there's much more to it than that.

On Thursday, the group was met by scores of police wearing riot gear and riding in military-style armored vehicles. By the end of the day, after firing tear gas, dismantling teepees and seeking to disperse the crowd, police said they had arrested 141 people, according to news reports.

Here's what's behind the burning tires and riot shields.

Q: What is this pipeline project?

The segment of pipe near the protest site is just part of the Dakota Access Pipeline Project, a new 1,172-mile, 30-inch diameter $3.7 billion pipeline that will carry high quality crude oil from the rapidly expanding Bakken and Three Forks basins in North Dakota to existing pipeline networks in Patoka, Illinois, and refineries in the Midwest, East Coast, Texas and abroad.

Q: Who wins — or loses — from building it?

The pipeline would save money for oil producers in North Dakota, many of whom ship their crude oil in rail cars across Canada and the northern United States. The Dakota Access pipeline could transport as much as 570,000 barrels per day — representing approximately half of Bakken current daily crude oil production.

The reduction in oil transported by rail would also bring down rates for transporting grain out of South Dakota. The competition for transportation has driven up the cost of shipping corn as much as $1 a bushel.

The losers? Railroads that, with little competition, have been charging hefty rates. They include companies such as Burlington Northern Santa Fe, owned by Warren Buffett's Berkshire Hathaway.

The winners would also include the Dakota Access owners: a partnership called Energy Transfer, and its investors.

They include: Donald Trump. His financial disclosure forms in May said he owned between $500,000 and $1 million of the company. Energy Transfer's chief executive Kelcy L. Warren this year has made $1.53 million in campaign contributions to Super PACS and $246,900 to individual campaigns and the GOP, according to the Center on Responsive Politics. In June 2015, he gave $5 million to Opportunity and Freedom PAC, which supported Rick Perry's presidential campaign. The Trump Victory Fund, a joint fundraising committee that includes Trump's campaign, the Republican National Committee and some state parties, received a $100,000 contribution from Warren on June 29.

Q: Why do people oppose the pipeline?

Lots of reasons.

The biggest opponents are environment groups who have built a "Keep It in the Ground" movement that favors throwing up obstacles to companies seeking to extract oil, natural gas or coal.

"We do not want, nor do we need, an expansion of fossil fuel infrastructure," Sierra Club executive director Michael Brune said in a blog post. "We have the technology and ability to continue and complete our transition to 100 percent clean renewable energy and leave dirty fuels like Bakken crude oil where they belong: in the ground."

Another chief critic is Bill McKibben, a Middlebury College professor and leader of climate action group 350.org.

"Since the pipeline has won its 'expedited' 'fast-track' approvals, the climate science has made it very clear that we simply can't build any more fossil fuel infrastructure," McKibben said in an email.

Then there are the Native American Groups, nursing grievances dating back to the 19th century treaties in which tribes ceded much of the Dakotas to the U.S. government. The protestors say the 1851 and 1868 Fort Laramie treaties left areas west of the Missouri River to the Lakota or Sioux tribes.

Energy Transfer says it obtained right of way from private landowners. And the Army Corps of Engineers, which approved the route, says the pipeline crosses half a mile north of the modern day Standing Rock Sioux reservation.

Native American groups have also raised two other objections: danger to water supplies and the disruption of sacred grounds including Lake Oahe. Many of the Standing Rock Sioux live downstream from the spot where the pipeline would cross under the Missouri River, and they cite dangers of a leak similar to ones in Montana's Yellowstone River or Michigan's Kalamazoo River.

The protestors also say that Energy Transfer moved the route of the pipeline, which originally passed through wealthier areas of the state close to Bismarck.

"This is the clearest example of environmental racism in action that you'd ever want to see," McKibben said.

Q: Why do some people support the pipeline?

Many people support the pipeline, even those who worry about climate change. One reason, they say, is that the pipeline would be safer than trains, which have derailed with oil cargos on several occasions.

Another reason, they say, is that we still need the oil and producers will find ways of getting it to market.

"With oil you can barge it, tanker it or put it on railroad cars or on trucks," said Frank Frank A. Verrastro, a senior fellow on energy at the Center for Strategic and International Studies. "Typically people figure out another way."

Q: What happens next?

In September, U.S. District Judge James Boasberg said that while he was "aware of the indignities visited upon the Tribe over the last centuries," he could not grant them an injunction against the construction. He said concerns about sacred grounds could be addressed through the use of tribal monitors or laying the pipeline well below areas with artifacts.

The ultimate resolution could depend on who becomes president.

Big Oil's recovery is still some way off as prices stay low

By Angelina Rascouet, Francois de Beaupuy and Mikael Holter
Bloomberg

Business is still looking pretty bleak for major oil companies in the midst of their third-quarter earnings season.

Exxon Mobil's production sank to a 7-year low and it warned the company may be facing the biggest reserves revision in its history as it extended a run of profit declines. Chevron posted its first profit in a year while production fell short of expectations.

Two years into an oil-price slump that has forced companies to delay projects, cancel billions of dollars of investments and eliminate thousands of jobs, there are few signs of respite. Among Statoil, Eni, Total and ConocoPhillips, which have already reported, three posted a net loss and two did worse than analysts were expecting.

With BP and Royal Dutch Shell still to come, investors should be aware that unpleasant surprises still lurk, although there are some rays of light in the gloom.

Oil prices have almost doubled from the 12-year lows reached in the first quarter, but most producers still can't cover their costs and make shareholder payouts without taking on more debt.

Brent crude, the international benchmark, averaged $46.99 in the third quarter and has risen to above $50 this month after a surprise pledge from the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to cut production.

That's not quite enough for French oil giant Total, which aims to cut spending to a level at which it can fund dividends from cash flow with crude at about $55 a barrel in 2017. Eni probably needs a price of $60 to achieve the same thing, Exane BNP Paribas said in a note. Statoil's break-even could be as high as $65 next year, according to Jefferies.

ConocoPhillips was able to balance the books at current prices, with operating cash flow covering capital expenditures and dividends in the third quarter, according to Chief Executive Officer Ryan Lance.

Second-quarter oil earnings caught analysts off guard, with Shell, BP, Eni, Chevron and Exxon all reporting worse-than-expected results. Industry watchers have only fared slightly better this time.

In the third quarter, Statoil posted a surprise $261 million adjusted net loss as maintenance and exploration expenses compounded the impact of low prices. Eni's $528 million adjusted net loss for the period was more than six times bigger than analysts estimated as a "less favorable" environment hurt its refining, marketing and chemicals units, while gas and power recorded losses for a second consecutive quarter.

Total's $2.07 billion adjusted net income was 7.3 percent above estimates, thanks to deepening cost cuts and a gain from the sale of a U.S. solar farm. ConocoPhillips posted its sixth straight quarterly net loss, which was smaller than analysts had expected.

Integrated oil companies were supported during crude's collapse by a buoyant refining business, but they have lost that buffer as brimming fuel stockpiles swamp demand. Profits from turning oil into gasoline and diesel contracted 42 percent last quarter from a year earlier to an average $11.60 a barrel, the weakest for the time of year since 2010, industry data from BP show.

Exxon earnings declined 38 percent from a year earlier. BP's profit is seen 62 percent lower and Shell's results are expected to be little changed from a year earlier, according to analyst estimates compiled by Bloomberg.

One reason for optimism is that the industry's costs are still falling.

Statoil now plans capital expenditure to be about $11 billion this year, down from an earlier target of $12 billion as it benefits from more efficient operations and cheaper goods and services. Total said it will reduce costs by more than $2.7 billion in 2016 compared with 2014, a deeper cut than its previous target of more than $2.4 billion.

Total is showing resilience to the downturn and "there's a lot to like about the direction of travel" Marc Kofler, an analyst at Jefferies International, said in an emailed note.

ConocoPhillips said about two-thirds of the cost reductions it's achieved so far will endure beyond the end of the current downturn. If all producers can match this, they would have the opportunity to rapidly boost profitability when prices recover.

"While earnings were disappointing versus expectations, the underlying performance implied positive progress," UBS Group analyst Jon Rigby said in an emailed note about Statoil. "The key for the stock is further recovery in oil markets."

INTERNET

From 12A

So far, the people who protect us from cybercrime have managed to stay one step ahead of the bad guys. But this could change with the advent of machine learning.

Most cybersecurity failures happen at the human level. A person clicks on the wrong e-mail attachment or the wrong browser download, and malware can bypass the best cyber-security software. That's because despite all the advances in protective software, we still give human users the final say in what they do with their technology.

But machine learning — in particular, a recently popular technique called deep learning — changes that calculus. Just as deep learning managed to beat the best Go player in the world, A.I. software available to thieves can learn to trick us out of our money — pretending to be a relative over the phone and gain access to your online accounts.

When machines can outsmart humans, the only defense will be better machines. That may require us to give up control over our own internet activities, because the more we're allowed to make our own decisions, the more likely we are to be subverted by hyperintelligent software.

That could decrease the value of the internet as a thing that humans want to use for pleasure and work. It's a bit as if criminals suddenly got the technology to teleport past locked doors, allowing them to enter any home they wanted. A home would become a less enjoyable place to live, either because we'd have all our stuff stolen or because we'd have to spend enormous amounts of time and effort guarding it all the time.

Improvements in cybercrime technology could thus decrease the incredible consumer surplus that we get from the internet. Currently, consumers derive enormous free benefits from the online world — internet access is very cheap, even though most people would probably pay a lot of money to avoid getting kicked off of their smartphones, social networks, web browsers and e-mail accounts. Essentially, we're getting a free lunch.

In econ models, the free lunch of consumer surplus can last forever. But in the real world, parasites enter the equation. It might be that networks with very large consumer surpluses — such as the internet — tend to get parasitized until most of the consumer surplus goes away. That's a possibility modern economics ignores, but it could be real.

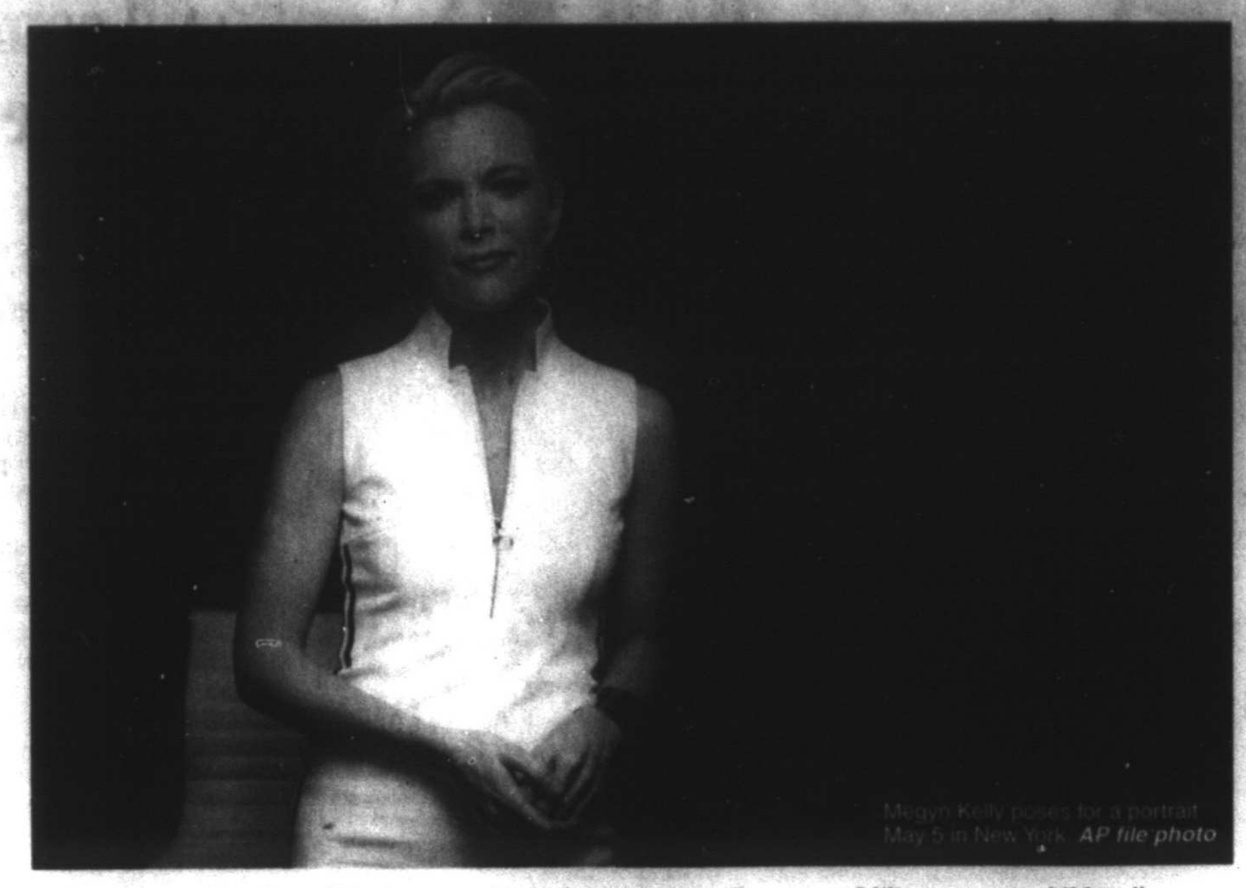

So far, we've been lucky. Spam filters and security measures have kept the internet almost free and without much danger. Machine learning in the wrong hands could change that equation. We might see soaring cybersecurity costs, decreased freedom of use, or rampant danger from artificially intelligent criminals. Technology started this party, but if we're unlucky, technology might end it.

Megyn Kelly and Kelly Ripa: Is this the Fox star's big chance?

By Katie Mettler

She is steely, stern, prepared. Her training as a lawyer helps. Her experience as a Fox News star does, too.

It's why Megyn Kelly, host of "The Kelly File," one of the right-leaning network's most popular shows, can dangle herself as a cable television free agent over the head of her current boss. It's why she can seek an average annual salary of more than $20 million for her next contract, reports The Wall Street Journal, raising her current salary by more than $5 million and aligning her with Fox colleague, Bill O'Reilly.

It's why she can be critical of not just Hillary Clinton, but also Donald Trump.

It's why she is applauded for asking critical questions about the sexual assault allegations against the GOP nominee for president, then heralded further for telling Newt Gingrich, after insulting her on her own show, to take his anger issues elsewhere.

It was "an important moment in one of the more interesting subplots in this election — the dawning realization by at least some conservative women that many of the men in their movement are not on their side," wrote Michelle Goldberg in Slate.

Gingrich tweeted, "For the record, @megynkelly was wrong, i don't have anger management issues. I do have media bias issues!"

But on the brink of a potential career upheaval, can she also prove her versatility?

It appears that Nov. 9 could be her chance.

The Associated Press reported Wednesday that the Fox News journalist is booked to co-host the morning talk show "Live" with Kelly Ripa the day after the election, filling a seat that has been empty since last spring when Ripa's former co-host, Michael Strahan, joined "Good Morning America."

Kelly Ripa is searching for a permanent partner.

Megyn Kelly might be searching for a new job.

But the women's shows could not vary more in terms of tone and structure.

"Live" is lighthearted and jovial, a mix of celebrity interviews, live onstage antics and playful banter.

"The Kelly File" is hard-nosed and serious, a place for political interrogations and uncomfortable questions.

And thus far, Kelly's opportunities to show that her Fox News persona wouldn't cut the softer boundaries of daytime TV have been limited. In a primetime interview with Donald Trump in May, which garnered great hype after he relentlessly attacked her for months, Kelly aimed to show she could create a more intimate experience.

She wanted to prove she had "other muscles," she told The New York Times in early May, and so in addition to Trump, she stretched beyond her political comfort zone and interviewed actors Laverne Cox and Michael Douglas about their personal struggles with sexual identity and health, respectively.

It was supposed to be her breakout moment. Instead, many critics said, it flopped.

"She's not yet shown a warm and fuzzy side," Shelley Ross, a former executive producer of "Good Morning America," told The Wall Street Journal in a story this week about Kelly's contract negotiations.

But that's not to say Kelly isn't extremely likable.

In her interview with Cox, a transgender actress most famous for her role on the Netflix series Orange is the New Black, Kelly showed her willingness to step outside the conservative, Fox News echo-chamber and tackle issues of political and personal sensitivity. She asked Cox about her suicide attempt at age 11, her relationship with her twin brother and the fear she harbored years ago that her mother didn't love her.

Cox, who got emotional during their conversation, playfully chastised Kelly for the intimate line of questioning.

"Let's talk about romance," Kelly then asked. "Give us a little something."

"I like waking up in the morning and seeing a beautiful man next to me," Cox said. "That's one of the best things in the world."

"Amen," Kelly said warmly.

Kelly talks often of her children, and even said in a Variety interview in April that they are one of the reasons she has considered leaving her job on "The Kelly File" — that, and the vitriol this election season has unleashed upon her.

"I really like my show, and I love my team," she said. "But you know, there's a lot of brain damage that comes from the job. There was probably less brain damage when I worked in the afternoon. I was less well known. I had far less conflict in my life. I also have three kids who are soon going to be in school from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. I come to work at 3:30. I like to see my children."

In that same Variety interview, she spoke of how heavily the feud with Trump weighed on her, the dangerous way women are spoken of and treated and her obsession with another famous woman that shares her gritty disposition.

"I freaking love Judge Judy," she said. "She's just, she's the bomb."

"First of all, I like how she doesn't suffer fools gladly," Kelly continued. "If you're a moron, she'll call you a moron. I can relate to that."

This week, that was evident when Kelly asked former house speaker Newt Gingrich about the allegations of sexual misconduct against Trump. He threw a fit, told her she was "fascinated with sex" and said she didn't care about public policy.

She said this: "We're going to leave it at that, and you can take your anger issues and spend some time working on them, Mr. Speaker."

Gingrich muttered "you, too."

The interaction went viral, inspiring headlines like this from The Washington Post's media columnist Margaret Sullivan: "Megyn Kelly's killer moment with Gingrich was a welcome return to badassery."

That so-called badassery may have been most prominently on display in August, when Kelly moderated the first Republican primary debate and grilled Trump on his insults toward women, saying he had called them "'fat pigs,' 'dogs,' 'slobs,' and 'disgusting animals.'"

"Does that sound to you like the temperament of a man we should elect as president?" she asked him.

And then there was the Trump comment that followed, when he said in a CNN interview that while Kelly questioned him, "You could see there was blood coming out of her eyes, blood coming out of her wherever."

The two did not speak for nine months, when Trump came on her show for the primetime interview.

That segment — called "Megyn Kelly Presents" — was, like the "Live" co-hosting gig, a not-so-subtle audition for a job that doesn't currently exist at her network, but one she hinted she hopes to create, there or elsewhere.

A void was created when Barbara Walters retired and Oprah left her daytime talk show, Kelly told The New York Times last spring.

"It's there for the taking right now," she said in the interview. "Those were the biggest spots to go for an interview if you had something you wanted to get off your chest, if you were in the middle of a scandal or a major news story and you wanted to do a long-form sit-down to get past it or to go on the record," she said.

She told the Times in the interview, which happened before "Megyn Kelly Presents" aired, that one success benchmark was if viewers said they saw her "in a new light."

"It doesn't all have to be A-plus level of difficulty," she told The Times. "It can be other kinds of questioning where you get more to somebody's humanity and tell their story."

And she aligned herself well with her choice in producer, Bill Geddie, a veteran of TV news who produced more than 100 segments for her journalistic idol — Barbara Walters.

Keeping Kelly at Fox News seems like a top priority, Rupert Murdoch, chief executive of Fox News and co-executive chairman of its parent company, 21st Century Fox, told The Wall Street Journal this week.

Murdoch told the newspaper he hopes to sign a contract with Kelly "very soon," but that "it's up to her."

One billion dollars? Yes. The campaign has been a gusher for the cable news networks

By Paul Farhi
The Washington Post

Donald Trump and Hillary Clinton have been very, very good for the cable news networks.

Thanks to an audience surge driven by nearly round-the-clock campaign coverage, the leading news networks will reap unprecedented profits this year.

According to people intimately familiar with CNN's finances, the network and its related media businesses will approach $1 billion in gross profit in 2016, a milestone unseen in its 36-year history. The internal estimate reflects a double-digit increase over 2015; it includes CNN's international network, its popular website and the smaller HLN network, but is driven primarily by its domestic channel, according to people at CNN.

Fox News, the longtime ratings leader among cable-news outlets, was already in the billion-dollar profit club before 2016. Despite a tempestuous patch this summer when its parent company ousted Fox's chairman and co-founder, Roger Ailes, Fox News is projected to have its most financially lucrative year. Its gross profit will top $1.67 billion, according to SNL Kagan, a media research company.

Third-ranked MSNBC, which falls under the larger NBC News umbrella, will have projected earnings of $279.6 million this year, according to Kagan. MSNBC is growing faster in percentage terms than its two much-larger competitors; its projected profits reflect a 19 percent growth rate over 2015, compared with 14 percent for CNN and 11.3 percent for Fox, according to Kagan.

The common thread for all three organizations has been improved ratings because of the presidential campaign, said Scott Robson, a research analyst at Kagan.

Trump, in particular, seems to have been a magnet for attracting viewers. The first Republican debate in August of 2015, carried by Fox, attracted 24 million viewers, the most ever for an event during the primaries. That was bookended by the first presidential debate featuring Trump and Clinton in late September, which attracted 84 million viewers, a record audience for such an event.

In between, the networks have larded their airwaves with copious coverage of Trump's rallies and events, leading to criticism that all the attention propelled Trump to the Republican nomination. Jeff Zucker, chairman of CNN Worldwide, recently acknowledged that at least some of CNN's coverage was excessive, but he denied that it vaulted Trump to the nomination.

People have stayed tuned to cable's coverage of more debates, candidate "town hall" meetings, campaign-trail news coverage and the ever-present panel discussions among pundits and hosts.

So far this year, all three networks have seen double-digit gains in their audiences, with each reporting all-time highs.

Fox's daily audience has averaged 1.32 million viewers, 11 percent more than throughout 2009, its previous best year, and 15 percent ahead of the last campaign year in 2012, according to Nielsen data.

The 2016 figure has made Fox the top-rated basic cable network of any kind, a first in its 20-year history.

A 'tweak' for Obamacare is a red flag and not a fix

By Megan McArdle
Bloomberg

■ COMMENTARY

Here's a little diversion to pass the time as you endure Washington's policy debates: Listen for phrases like "All we have to do" or "We need just a small tweak" or "There's a really simple fix." Then watch to see what happens. Whatever that person is proposing will prove to be really, really costly — politically or fiscally or both.

On some endless panel discussion, I once pointed out that fixing Social Security's funding problem would probably involve some combination of tax increases and benefit cuts for future recipients. A very indignant left-wing commentator of some note got up and lambasted me, saying, "All we have to do is raise the payroll tax cap."

I was a trifle astonished. Mathematically, he was correct. But to say that's "all" we have to do? He made it sound as if this were a minor technical correction on par with getting the wheels realigned on your car. In fact, this amounts to slapping a 12 percent surtax on all income above $118,500 a year. This would pretty much exhaust our fiscal capacity to tax the more affluent to fund new spending or existing programs, and it would all be funneled to a single program that is not even our biggest underfunded entitlement (that honor goes to Medicare). Doing this would be extremely politically costly (it would hit affluent professionals, who tend to both support the Democratic Party and run it), and it would also be the biggest single tax increase in living memory. This is rather like saying that "all we have to do to fix climate change is perfect cold fusion."

But of course, he was hardly the only offender. All we have to do to fix American health care is to pay our providers and suppliers low European prices instead of high American ones. All we need to do to make Republican tax plans work is to get economic growth up to 4 percent. All that was needed to make Iraq a better place was for America to depose Saddam Hussein and for Iraqis create a liberal democracy. There is always a devil in the details behind those innocuous "all" statements, and he has his pitchfork ready.

So beware when liberals today start saying that maybe President Barack Obama's health-care law has a few problems, but all we need to do is …

They're saying it a lot.

■ Obama in Florida recently: "If we tweak the program to reach those people who are not currently benefiting from the law, it will be good for them and it will be good for the country. … All it requires is putting aside ideology, and in good faith trying to implement the law of the land." The "tweaks" he envisions involve spending tens of billions more a year on subsidies and creating a public insurer. And, of course, for Republicans to put aside ideology. Because political parties find that so easy. That's all.

■ Jacob S. Hacker writes on Vox.com that there's "a simple fix for Obamacare's current woes" — the public option. That's the public insurer that President Obama was talking about in his Florida speech. A public option doesn't fix any of the problems we have, and it would be hard as heck to set up. If you construct it along the lines that it was originally envisioned (which is to say, a self-funding and market-competitive insurer), it will have the same problems as other insurers, while addressing none of the woes in the market for individual insurance. If you allow it to run at a loss, it's essentially an enormous, open-ended subsidy that would be politically unpopular and fiscally reckless. And if you don't subsidize it, but do give it the ability to slap price controls on providers, you will face a political rebellion from a very active and influential group of voters.

■ Kevin Drum of Mother Jones offers an "11-Word, 1-Chart Plan for Fixing Obamacare" which boils down to: either jack up the individual mandate by 250 percent, or increase the subsidies by 100 percent, or do some combination of lesser increases in both. Okay, but a 100 percent increase in the subsidies would have a headline cost of roughly a half trillion dollars over the next 10 years. And raising the individual mandate by 250 percent would be extremely politically difficult. It might also run afoul of the Supreme Court's 2012 decision in NFIB v. Sebelius, in which the court held that Congress did not have the authority under the Commerce Clause to levy a penalty on those who fail to buy insurance, but could levy a tax on those people, as long as the tax wasn't unduly burdensome. Which is to say: The mandate is constitutional as a tax, but not as a penalty — and only if it's not too expensive.

■ "You could make the individual mandate stronger, you could make the subsidies better … you could add national health insurance plans or a public option to put in more competition. Mechanically what you would do here is not actually that complicated, but without a political party that wants to fix it, it won't get fixed," Vox's Ezra Klein said recently.

These are not easy, simple fixes. We know because they weren't done when the law was passed, because Democrats couldn't assemble a political coalition to do this. At the time they had 60 votes in the Senate, and control of the House, and the presidency — a level of historical dominance they hadn't managed in decades. Either these simple fixes would have pushed the price tag of the bill too high, making it difficult to find even more taxes or program cuts to pay for it, or they would have damaged the popularity of a bill that was already really unpopular.

And this is true of every idea that starts with "All we need to do." If "All we need to do" to fix some substantial problem were cheap and politically popular, it would already have been done, and we wouldn't be talking about it. The stuff we argue about is, almost by definition, the stuff that's hard.

Needless to say, Republicans are not going to be eager to do something hard and unpopular largely to save a program that was passed over their strenuous objections and is now hurting their political opponents. So if all we need to do is persuade Republicans to abandon their objections to Obamacare, and possibly their own electoral futures, to bail Democrats out of the mess they created, then we're all going to be living with these problems for a very long time.

Democrats face difficult Obamacare fight in 2017, even if Clinton wins

Everyone has plans for the Affordable Care Act next year.

After news broke Monday that premiums for the health care law will rise an average of 22 percent next year, Democratic presidential nominee Hillary Clinton spent the week defending the health care law, saying its problems are fixable. She called for lowering the Medicare buy-in age and again advocated for a so called public option — a government-run competitor to private insurers. While polls show her leading Republican Donald Trump with just 10 days to go before the election, a Clinton administration likely would find itself caught between liberal lawmakers wedded to the politically unviable public option and Republicans who want to scrap the law entirely.

"I certainly intend to reach out to Republicans and Independents, the elected leadership of the Congress," Clinton told reporters on her campaign plane Wednesday. "I'm going to be doing everything I can to reach out to people who didn't vote for me because I want to be president for everybody and I think that's going to require a lot of effort on my part to demonstrate my commitment to that."

Early signs suggest such overtures wouldn't be well received. "A couple months ago, I was hoping that once the election was over that cooler heads would prevail when it comes to health care reform," said Jim Manley, a Democratic strategist and former spokesman for Sen. Harry Reid of Nevada. "Based on the way the election has turned out, I'm not so sure I see that happening."

Trump and several down ballot Republican candidates have used the premium increase as a cudgel against their Democratic opponents. "Obamacare is just blowing up," Trump said at a campaign stop Tuesday in Florida, where he claimed premiums are actually rising 60, 70, or 80 percent even though he offered no proof for the higher figures. Repealing the law would be his first order of business as president, he said.

The Clinton campaign defended the law, noting that 20 million people have gained insurance and young adults can stay on their parents' insurance plans until they're 26 years old. "Donald Trump would rip up the ACA, reverse the progress we have made and start this fight all over again," Clinton spokeswoman Julie Wood said in a statement. "Clinton has a serious plan to improve choices and increase competition, including a public option and a Medicare buy-in."

The public option has become the focal point of Democrats' plans to improve the health care law. Supporters argue that the added competition would help keep costs down for consumers, especially in areas where fewer private plans are available. Opponents, including Republicans and insurance companies, say it would hurt the insurers and eventually lead to a government takeover of the industry.

Clinton voiced her support for the public option over the summer, as she and her primary opponent, Senator Bernie Sanders of Vermont, debated several policy proposals that pushed her further to the left. Her support, along with announcement by major insurers like Aetna of a plan to pull out of the Obamacare network, prompted a second wave of public option support from liberal groups and Democrats.

"There's a lot of things we need to do ... but the cost of health care and the high deductibles is something affecting virtually every family in America," said Sen. Jeff Merkley, a Democrat from Oregon and one of the leaders of the movement. "I would love to see a public option on the president's desk in the first 100 days."

The public option failed to garner enough votes to pass in 2010, and would face even steeper odds in 2017. Many of the forces that opposed the bill and lobbied against it also oppose Clinton's proposals. The pharmaceutical industry is preparing to fight off efforts to lower the costs of prescription drugs, another key part of Clinton's health care agenda.

David Merritt, the executive vice president of public affairs and strategic initiatives of industry trade group America's Health Insurance Plans, said that the public option would make things worse, and argued that there are better alternatives to expand coverage than lowering the Medicare eligibility age.

"The exchanges obviously have some serious challenges that need to be solved, and no matter who's president, no matter who's in Congress, they need to work together to solve some of these problems," he said. The industry backs closing loopholes in special enrollment periods that allow people to sign-up for insurance when they're sick and drop it when they're well and allowing companies to offer plans with fewer benefits.Some of Clinton's Democratic allies have more pressing legislative issues than the public option. Tom Leibfried, a health care lobbyist for the AFL-CIO said repealing the so-called Cadillac tax, an excise tax on high cost health care plans offered by employers, is more of priority. Removing the Cadillac tax would fare well as part of a larger legislative deal covering tax policy or infrastructure funding, he said. The tax is opposed by Republicans, liberal Democrats, and Clinton herself, who called for its repeal in September 2015.

As marijuana legalization spreads, more pets are getting high

By Karin Brulliard
The Washington Post

Star, a petite 6-year-old sheltie who competes in dog agility shows, almost missed a contest this month. She had spent the previous night at the vet, totally stoned on pot.

Her drug trip was an accident. Star lives in Oregon, where recreational use of marijuana became legal last year. Her owner's husband had left some loose-leaf pot on the dining room table, and Star got curious. That was days after her sister, Kicker, gobbled up a pot-infused hard candy she found in the car, leaving her wobbling and incontinent. A veterinarian gave both dogs activated charcoal to absorb the toxin, which contributed to nearly $3,000 in medical bills and caused Star to poop in the ring during her competition.

"It was a bad week," said the dogs' owner, Susan Fry, of South Lebanon, Oregon.

But it was probably a fairly routine week for the clinic that treated the dogs. As more jurisdictions legalize marijuana, veterinarians across the country say they are seeing a sharp increase in cases of pets accidentally getting high. Tasty "edibles" such as muffins and cookies that people consume for a buzz are also appealing to animals, who can't read warning labels, and, in the case of dogs, rarely stop at just one pot brownie.

"Dogs used to kind of chew on the stash growing in the basement. Now they're finding a big bag of gummy bears," said Heidi Houchen, a veterinarian at VCA Northwest Veterinary Specialists in a suburb of Portland, which treats a few marijuana cases a week. "Dogs are Hoovers. Dogs are the rock eaters."

These incidents, which are rarely fatal, have driven a 330 percent increase over the past five years in calls about pets on pot to the Pet Poison Helpline, said Ahna Brutlag, a veterinary toxicologist who is associate director of the Minnesota-based animal poison control center. Two-thirds of the calls involve marijuana edibles, and nearly all involve dogs, she said. Veterinarians also cited examples of chihuahuas lapping up bong water, cats being exposed to vaping, and even rabbits, ferrets and birds getting accidentally stoned.

In the year after pot became legal for recreational use in Oregon, DoveLewis, a large emergency veterinary clinic in Portland, saw a 63 percent increase in marijuana toxicity cases despite a client base growth of just 7 percent, said Alaina Buller, a clinic spokeswoman. Those findings echoed the results of a 2012 study that found such cases quadrupled at two Colorado veterinary clinics in the five years after medical marijuana was legalized in that state.

As several YouTube videos illustrate, baked pets look a lot like really high people: Glassy-eyed, teetering, lethargic and pretty pathetic. In the case of Nigel, a 1-year-old pet teacup pig who was vacationing with his family in Nantucket this summer, it led to a serious case of the munchies. One member of the family — none of whom would agree to be identified in this article — had recently been in Colorado, where he had acquired pot peanut butter cookies that were in his backpack. Nigel, who was described as having a voracious appetite when sober, rooted them out and left the empty package as evidence.

"Very soon, we had a very stoned pig on our hands," said one witness, a 54-year-old writer who lives in New York City. "He's just wandering around the kitchen desperate for food, doing a lot of whining and oinking. Then eventually, he just passed out."

Animals can sleep off a marijuana high in many cases, according to veterinarians interviewed, all of whom said they immediately suspect the substance when an incontinent pet shows up. Other common toxins, such as caffeine or pesticides, can be far more dangerous. But veterinarians say there's growing concern about the increased potency of today's marijuana edibles, many of which are made with butters or oils infused with highly concentrated tetrahydrocannabinol, or THC. Many also contain chocolate, which can be fatal to dogs.

Marijuana ingestion by animals can lead to vomiting, racing or slowed heart rates, tremors or even seizures. Veterinarians said it is usually treated by inducing vomiting or administering intravenous fluids or anti-nausea medications. In some cases, medications to control heart rates or tremors are necessary.

"Most of them just need a night of detox," said veterinarian Shaw Thomas, who owns Tanasbourne Veterinary Emergency near Portland. The worst cases, Thomas said, involve owners who have also partaken. He recalled one standard poodle that was hospitalized for more than two days after devouring THC-infused butter. Its owner, Thomas said, didn't quickly realize the dog was suffering because "he was blitzed out of his mind, too."

"Ten years ago, we would have told you there's no chance your dog is going to die of this," he said. "But now, I tell people, it's so much stronger, and you have a four-pound Chihuahua and it could die."

Anson Graves, whose three-pound Chihuahua mix ate most of a pot brownie in August, said he really started to worry when the dog still could not walk 12 hours later. Rusty had fallen under the influence - accidentally, according to Graves, a 25-year-old waiter — amid the revelry of Bourbon Street in New Orleans, which recently decriminalized marijuana possession. Graves and his friends had stopped for beers and cocktails known as Hand Grenades when, he said, he looked down to see Rusty inhaling a packaged brownie lying on the curb. The label indicated it contained 60 milligrams of THC, he said.

"I've had my experiences," said Graves, who lives in Patterson, Lousiana. "That's quite a bit for a dog."

Half an hour later, Rusty was so lethargic that Graves headed home. The next morning, he was "like a slinky," said Graves, who posted a video of the stoned dog on his Facebook page. He called his vet, who advised rehydrating Rusty by offering him Pedialyte. That helped, but the dog wasn't fully recovered until the fourth day, Graves said.

"He was trying to run and jump on the bed. But he'd just hit the bed," said Graves, who added that Rusty's New Orleans visits are over. "That was too much hassle."

The upshot to widening legalization and tolerance of marijuana, veterinarians say, is that pet owners now readily admit when they know their animals have consumed it. In some cases, they even acknowledge having given their pets pot for medical purposes, said Lisa Parshley, a veterinary oncologist in Olympia, Washington. Veterinarians are not allowed to prescribe medical marijuana, but Parshley said she had a client who used her own topical cannabis balm on her dog, which had end-stage cancer.

"The dog got a little drunk on the THC," said Parshley. "I convinced her to reduce the dose, and darn if the dog didn't do well for almost another month."

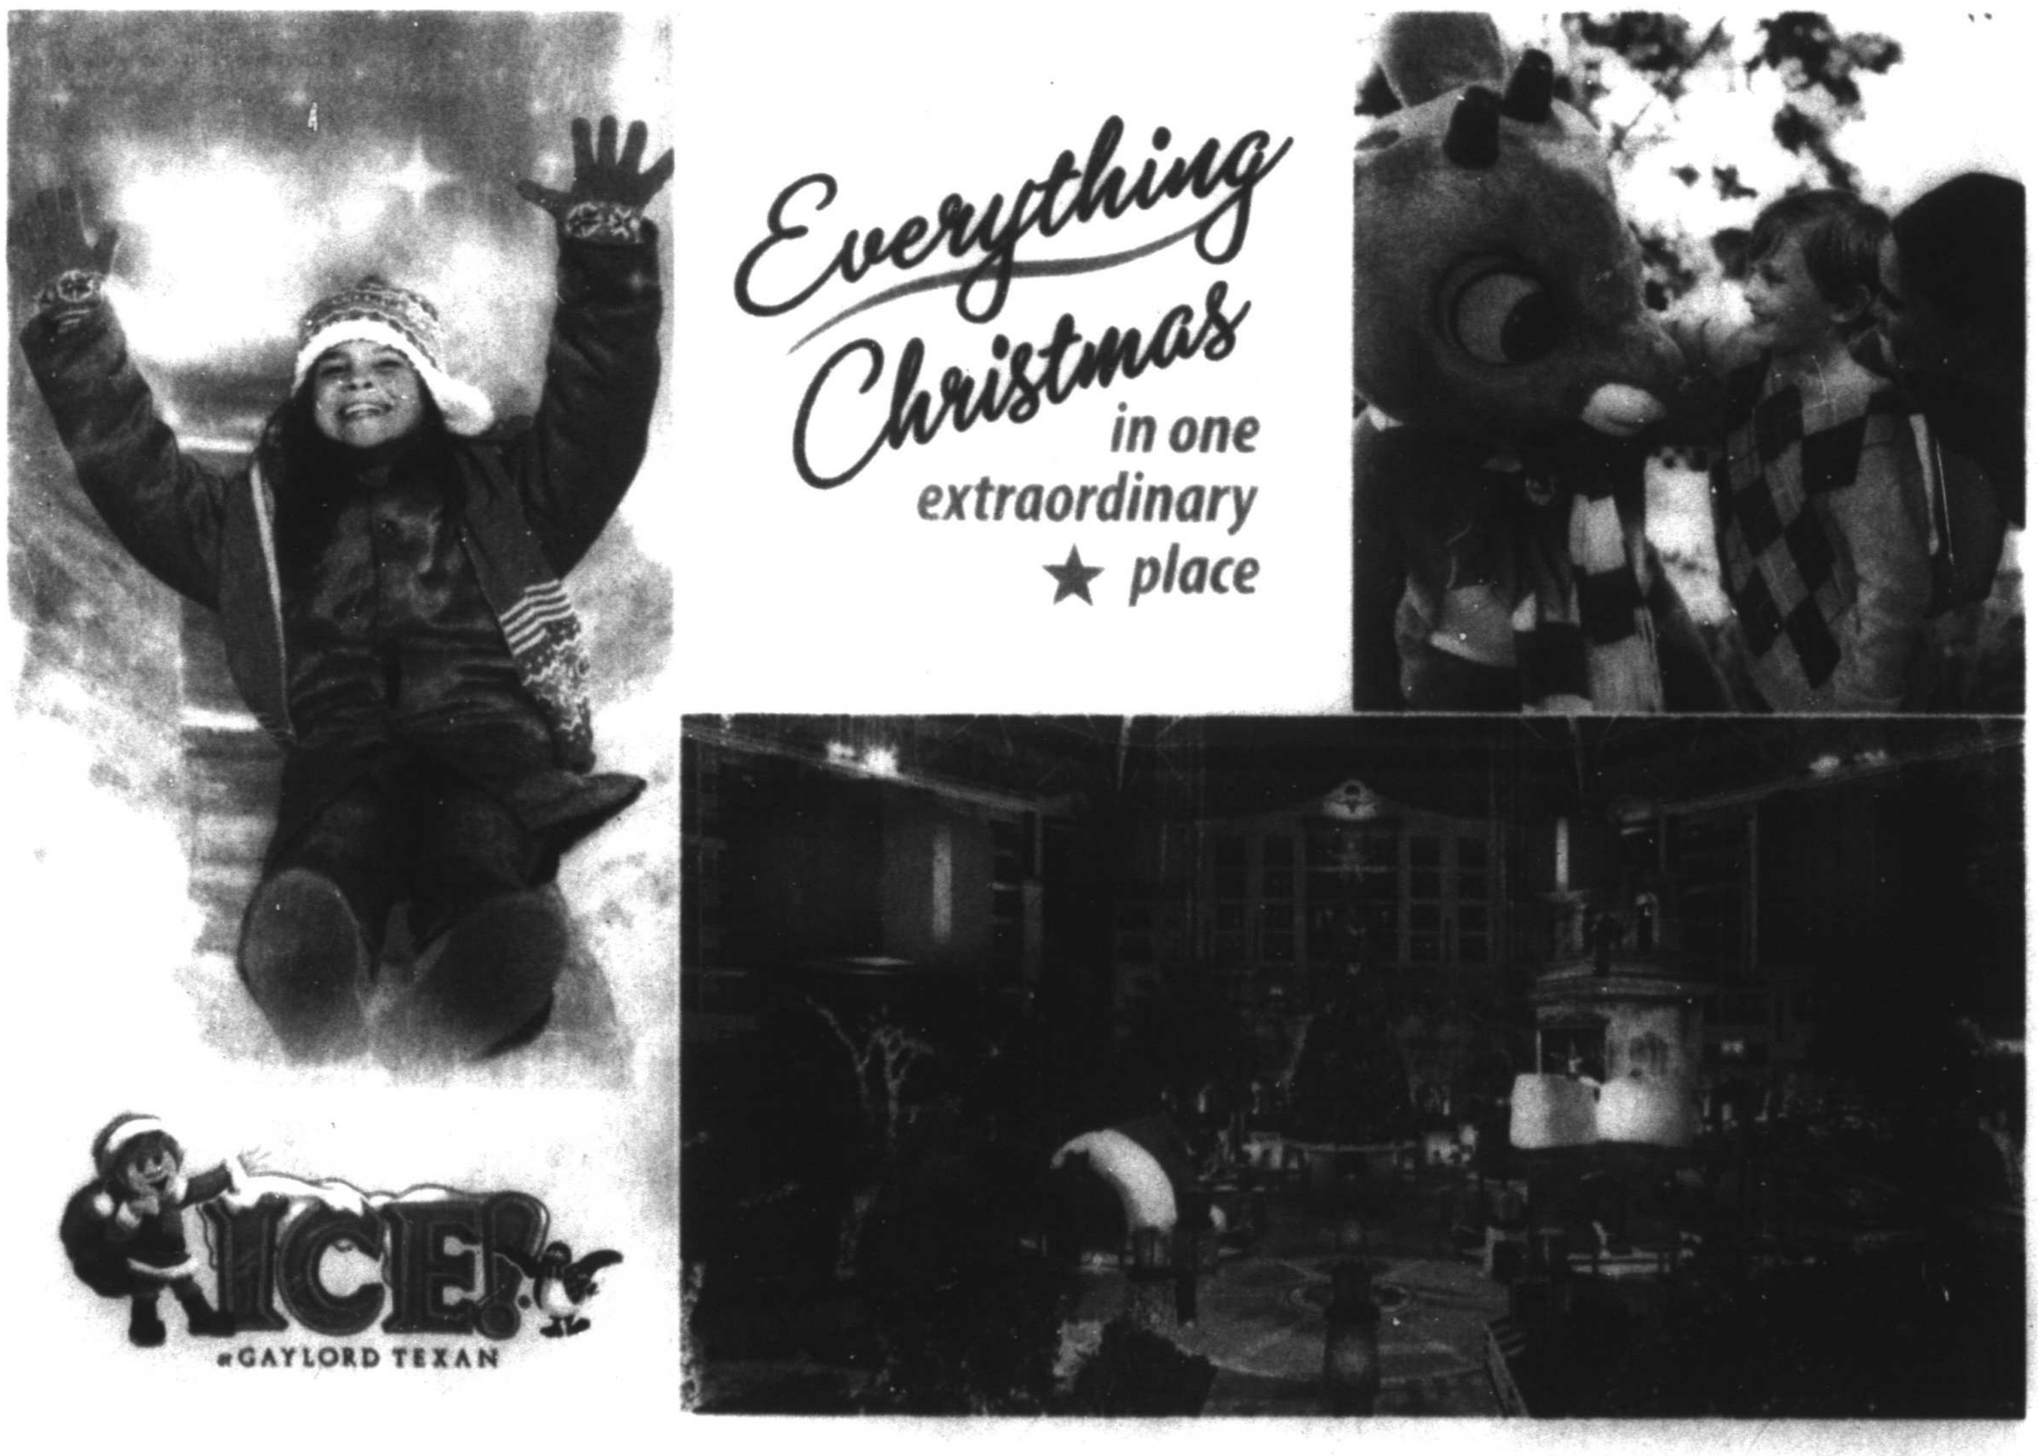

Veterinarians say the biggest lesson from the increase in stoned pet patients is an obvious one: Pot, like any potentially dangerous substance, needs to be kept out of a pet's reach.

Fry said she's now enforcing that with her husband, John, who she said began using marijuana when he contracted multiple sclerosis 30 years ago — before it was legal in Oregon. He "isn't noted for being a super clean guy," she said, explaining why he'd left the candy in the car cupholder and the pot on the dining room table.

Kicker, the candy-eater, had a particularly strong reaction that left Fry — who said she tried marijuana once and was not a fan - in tears and worried she would lose the "feisty little thing."

But both dogs bounced back — Star so well that she performed two of her agility events flawlessly just two days after her inadvertent overdose. Next month, both dogs are competing at a national event in Arizona where, luckily for them, there are no drug tests.

PRECINCT RACE HEATS UP

Get to know the county commissioner candidates for Precincts 1 and 3

The following are responses sent to the Reporter-Telegram from candidates for county commissioner races, Precincts 1 and 3.

Question: General Fund expenditures have risen from $51.2 million in 2010 to $72.5 million in the county judge's budget. In your examination of budgets, do you feel this is an appropriate increase in spending, and how much larger of a general fund budget could you support by the end of your first term?

District 1

Scott Ramsey

During that time period, Midland County has experienced unprecedented growth in its population. With that growth comes the demand for extra services and maintenance of County property especially roads. Since I was not been a member of the court during that period of time and don't know all of the circumstances and budgetary issues behind the increase, it would be particularly difficult for me to judge whether this past increase is appropriate. I must look to future so I can tell you my goal going forward is to hold the budget to below the rate of inflation and population growth.

Amanda Rosales: No response provided

District 3

Luis Sanchez

The general fund has increased in the last few years because of our increase in population, which in turn reflects the need of increasing the number of county employees needed to meet the county's needs. Another reason is that there is about a $5 million increase in the judicial expenditures due to an increase in personnel which correlates to the increase in population. Another reason is the road project in which we have spent over $52 million dollars in the past three years to improve our county road system. This is the most Midland County has invested in its roads in many years. Out of the $21.3 million difference, $12 million of that is specific to the one-time capital expense for county roads.

The question should not be how much larger of a general fund budget could I support, but will I support a larger county budget as long as taxes stay low and we have the appropriate funds in our fund balance to support those projects. If this is the case, then my answer is that I will support a larger budget as long as there are available funds to cover those investments that benefit the entire county.

Lynn Yarbrough

I have spent the last three days looking over the proposed 2017 budget. The increase of $21.3 million does seem extreme for a six-year period. In the time I have had, it would seem that it's very possible that they had kept the budget very lean through the time that we were somewhat at a standstill (i.e. holding off on hiring, replacing equipment, etc.) and when oil went up, as usual, it seemed the boom would never end and it was time to do all the things that had been put off.

I was surprised at how many departments there are to deal with in the budget. I would highly recommend that anyone interested go to the Midland County web site and take a look at the proposed budget for 2017. There are 165 pages of very informative material.

With the increase in property values (as in every year) and all the new building and construction and if the oil prices remain stable with an upward trend, I don't think the budget would increase more more than just the inflation rate of doing business. It is difficult enough to try predict one year much less four years. I would very much like to see all the taxing entities strive to lower the property taxes, especially to senior citizens.

Question: What is the appropriate amount of money in the county's reserves (savings)? Currently, more than $50 million in reserves are reported, which is more than 69 percent of next year's budget.

District 1

Scott Ramsey

I would prefer to have at least six months of expenses

Bobby Ray Newsom

Bobby Ray Newsom, 79, faithful father, husband, grandfather, and friend, of Midland, Texas, passed away on Tuesday, October 25, 2016 at home after several months of illness.

Bob was born December 22, 1936 in Brownfield, Texas to Robert Lee and Evelyn Patterson Newsom. The family moved to Big Spring when Bob was five years old, and the Newsom clan grew to nine siblings. Bob first began a lifelong love of the beautiful wild country in southern Val Verde County when he would camp and fish along the banks of the alluring aquamarine waters of the Devil's River, later to be covered by the waters of Lake Amistad. In high school, Bob was active in numerous sports but excelled in football. He was a part of the '53 state runner-up team and later played center, snapping the ball to a future NFL Quarterback, Charlie Johnson.

On July 26, 1957, Bob married his high school sweetheart and the love of his life, Donna Michael Shirley.

Life was full and good during the coming years, working for Southwestern Bell, (22 years in Big Spring and 12 in Midland) while he and Donna raised three children.

Bob became an active follower of Jesus Christ as a young adult, experiencing the transformed life as a "new creation." His new found faith led to roles through the years as Deacon, Elder, and very naturally as a leader of men and men's groups to fish at "the Nest" at Lake Amistad. Bob served not only His Lord but also his country while in the National Guard and was called to active duty to Fort Polk during the Berlin Crisis in 1960 and '61.

Bob dearly loved his grandchildren. They all have memories of him attending their sporting events, graduations, and weddings, but he was also actively involved in their lives through the many fishing adventures, spring break trips, holiday celebrations, games of dominos, and conversations over coffee.

Bob is survived by his wife Donna of 59 years; three children, Michael of San Angelo, Robin Newsom Wilson and husband Tom of Midland, and David Newsom of Midland; five grandchildren, Dustin Scott and wife Tabitha of Andrews, Leah Wilson Williams and husband Taylor of Midland, Jordan Wilson of Athens, Georgia, Kirklynd Newsom and Brady Newsom of Midland; adopted grandson, Gervack Washington of Kentucky; one great-grandchild, Kolton Scott of Andrews; three sisters, Nancy Newsom Phernetton and husband Gus of Big Spring, Pennie Newsom Lemire and husband Clay of Sacramento, and Marilyn Newsom Grigg and husband Walter of Houston; two brothers, Donald Newsom and wife Kay of Amarillo, and Tommy Newsom and wife Sherry of Big Spring; and by numerous nieces and nephews.

He is preceded in death by his parents; his brothers, Jim Newsom and Kenneth Newsom; sister, Juanita Newsom Adams; and lifelong friend and brother-in-law, R.V Cobb.

Sacrificial, kind, forgiving, patient, listener, and dry sense of humor all describe this "gentle giant" of a man we knew as Dad, Grandpa, and Bob. We are all richer for having known him, and we rejoice for his graduation to his heavenly home.

The family would like to express our gratitude to all of the many caregivers who attended to Bob. Special thanks to Dr. Mike Miller and Dr. Paul Best.

A viewing is scheduled 10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday, October 31, 2016 at Nalley-Pickle & Welch Funeral Home in Midland.

A Celebration of his life will be held at 10:00 a.m., Tuesday, November 1, 2016 at Nalley-Pickle & Welch Chapel in Midland, officiated by the Reverend Larry Long, Reverend Vergil Schmidt, Reverend Roy Smith, and Reverend Wade Cobb.

Graveside services will be held at 1:00 p.m., Tuesday at Trinity Memorial Park, Big Spring.

Pallbearers include Dr. Tom Green, Lee Thompson, Jordan Wilson, Gervack Washington, Dustin Scott, Brady Newsom, Taylor Williams, and Tom Wilson.

The family asks that memorials be made to Fellowship Community Church or the charity of your choice.

Arrangements are under the direction of Nalley-Pickle & Welch Funeral Home & Crematory of Midland. Online condolences may be made at www.npwelch.com.

C. Raymond Viverette

C. Raymond Viverette, age 94, of Odessa, Texas, died on October 19, 2016, at Madison Medical Resort. Memorial services will be held on Saturday, November 5, at 2:00 p.m. at Lutheran Church of the Risen Lord. Pastor Larry Hood will officiate.

Born on October 8, 1922, in Union, Mississippi, Raymond was the son of Luther Elby and Mamie Smith Viverette. Raymond attended East Central Junior College (Decatur, Mississippi). He served in the Air Force from March of 1943 through April of 1947, and returned to marry Ruby Henderson on June 15, 1947. He graduated from Mississippi State University with a BS in Petroleum Geology in 1950.

Raymond and Ruby moved to Odessa in 1950, and lived in either Odessa or Midland since then. During his career, Raymond worked with Lane Wells Company (now Dresser Atlas), Hycalog, Inc., and Ram Guns, Inc. He also founded two businesses, Tracer Surveys and Tracer Drilling. In the early 1980's, Raymond began a consulting career, which he continued until his retirement in 2003.

Raymond was preceded in death by his wife, Ruby, in August. They were married for 69 years. He is survived by his daughter, Susan V. Milner and husband, William; son, Charles R. Viverette, Jr. and wife, Connie; grandchildren, Joseph Milner and wife, Kali, Whitney Viverette, and Amy Viverette.

The family wishes to thank the entire staff at Madison for the loving care they extended to both Raymond and Ruby.

Memorial contributions may be made to Texas South Plains Honor Flight, P.O. Box 94787, Lubbock, Texas 79493.

Dixie Lee Bagwell

July 17, 1944 - October 23, 2016

Dixie Lee Bagwell went to be with her Lord and Savior Sunday, October 23, 2016. Throughout her battle with cancer, she always glorified God and knew her life was temporary and her mission was simple - to love, serve, and make disciples.

Dixie is survived by the love of her life, Jack Lynn Bagwell. Also surviving are her three daughters, Robin Grosse and her husband David, Jacque Bagwell, and Samantha Blackwood and her husband Jeff. Her grandson Jonathan Grosse and his wife, Lindsey, and their sons, Carter and Jack; her grandson Brian Grosse and his wife, Stacy, and their son, Crawford; her granddaughter Baylee Blackwood and her son, Beckham; and another grandson, Daegan Blackwood, also survive her.

Dixie was born July 17, 1944 in Ellwood City, Pennsylvania to Mildred and C.W. Long. She moved to Texas shortly after where she would soon meet her "gray fox," Jack Bagwell. Dixie and Jack met at a young age through a blind date their mothers arranged. They lost touch for a few years but were later reunited and married April 3, 1965. Together, they raised their three daughters and loved taking them on family trips with their best friends, Carole and Ernie Gibson, and their daughters.

In Midland, Texas, they were active members at Temple Baptist (formerly Corinth Baptist), Westside Freewill Baptist, and Kelview Heights Baptist Church where they made many lifelong friends. Like her parents, Dixie loved to sing and used her gift for the Lord, singing in The Romans Road Trio with Vernon Syler, and her daughter Jacque, and later included Marvae Blanscett. The group traveled to sing at various churches and festivals and won "Best Gospel Trio of the Year" at the Brand New Opry in Odessa, Texas.

If one thing is certain about Dixie, it's that she absolutely adored her Savior. Almost every conversation she had with anybody led to talking about the Lord and her love for Him. She taught vacation Bible school, Sunday school, and was on Midland Memorial's Shepherd's staff for many years. She loved her Bible study groups, and when she became too weak to do her own, she loved her family to share with her what they were learning in God's Word.

Dixie was a fun-loving, goofy, and God-fearing mom to her daughters. Some of her and her daughter's best memories where Saturdays, when they would rush to finish the chores so they could tune into American Bandstand and dance until they laughed themselves into delirium. Dixie also delighted in traveling, reading, playing games, writing both poetry and short stories, and chatting with family and friends.

After years of residing in Midland, Texas, Dixie and her husband retired to Lindale, where they quickly joined First Baptist Church and started establishing new friendships. While living in Lindale, Dixie gained four great-grandsons that she took delight in.

Above all, Dixie was always thinking about how she could minister to others. Having been saved at a young age, she knew her true mission in life. In her last years, she thought it her mission to witness to her doctors and nurses and would often have her granddaughter write Scripture on the whiteboard in her hospital room in hopes it would spark a conversation with her caregivers about the hope she found in the Lord. The last verse written in her hospital room was Hebrews 12:1-3, "Let us run with endurance the race that is set before us, looking to Jesus, the founder and perfector of our faith, who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is seated at the right hand of God. Consider Him who endured such hostility against Himself, so that you may not grow weary or fainthearted," - and she did just that! She ran with endurance and unwavering faith.

While we grieve for Dixie's precious life on earth, we also find abundant joy knowing that she is finally able to meet her Savior, whom she so eagerly longed to see.

Private burial service will be held for family.

Leona Lynn Swopes (Nana)

Leona Lynn Swopes (Nana), 70, passed away peacefully surrounded by her family on Thursday, October 27, 2016.

Leona was born in Bloomington, Illinois on July 8, 1946 to her loving parents, Richard and Edith Craig.

Leona graduated high school in Wilcox, Arizona. On July 4 1964, Leona married Wayman Swopes. Wayman was her soulmate and best friend for 46 years. She was a homemaker, mother, and actively involved in the ministry of Greenwood Baptist Church.

Leona worked at Midland Memorial Hospital for 23 years. After retirement from MMH, she enjoyed spending time with her children and grandchildren.

Leona was preceded in death by her loving husband, Wayman, and her loving and caring parents, Richard and Edith.

Roger W. McCabe

Roger W. McCabe passed away October 26, 2016 in Corpus Christi, Texas after a courageous battle against lung cancer.

He was born on November 4, 1956 in Tulsa, Oklahoma and grew up in Midland, Texas. Roger was a resident of Freer, Texas where he worked in the oil and gas industry and owned an equipment salvage company. He was one of the rare individuals who unplugged his T.V. years ago because he realized it was a waste of his precious time.

Some of his joys in life were reading, visiting frieads, and spending time with his dogs Bosco and Sugar. After 12 years together, Bosco passed away the day before Roger.

Roger is pre-deceased by his parents John Q. and Doris McCabe.

He is survived by his siblings and their spouses, John and Marlene McCabe, Ed and Laura McCabe, Greg and Melissa McCabe, Rozena McCabe and Diana Everett; his nieces and nephews and their spouses, Greg and Mandy McCabe, Amanda and Peng Fan, Josh McCabe, and Jenny McCabe; and his close friends, Joe and Cyndee Turney, Mario G. Perez, and Charley Johnson.

The family would like to give special thanks to Roger's employee and friend Miguel (Mike) Perez for his years of loyalty and for his compassion as he stood by Roger during this extended and difficult illness. Mike and his family have adopted Sugar and she will have lots of room to run with other dogs on their ranch.

A memorial service will be held at Chapman-Black Funeral Home in Cleveland, Oklahoma on November 5, 2016 at 11:00 a.m. and Roger's ashes will be buried next to his parents in Osage, Oklahoma.

In lieu of flowers, please send memorial donations to the Osage Cemetery Fund at P.O. Box 95, Osage, OK 74054.

All Obituaries must be submitted by 3:30 P.M. prior to next publication day.

Sheryl Jeton Anderson

Sheryl Jeton Anderson, 60, departed this life for her heavenly mansion on Thursday, October, 27, 2016 at her residence in Denver City, Texas.

Family and friends will gather to celebrate her life at 2:00 p.m. on Sunday, October, 30, 2016 at McNett Funeral Home Chapel in Andrews with Minister Lynn Money of Sherwood Church of Christ of Odessa officiating. Interment will follow in the Andrews North Cemetery, under the personal care of McNett Funeral Home.

Please celebrate the life of Jeton by visiting www.mcnettfuneralhome.com

She was born in Snyder, Texas on May 11, 1956 to her parents, Lewis and Wanda Hearon, and was the middle child of three girls. Jeton was a faithful servant of the Lord, having been a baptized believer since the age of 12. She was raised attending Sherwood Church of Christ in Odessa, Texas and attended Golf Course Road Church of Christ in Midland, Texas for many years.

She was the proud mother of her only daughter, Allison. She married her husband, Ben Anderson, on February 15, 2007. Jeton was a very creative person who loved to draw, paint, crochet and craft. Most of all she loved to go "junkin." She reveled in the find of a good treasure.

She loved music, fishing, camping, night hunting, star gazing, games, and puttering in her garden. She was always up for a good laugh or a practical joke. Jeton loved life, her many friends and family, and was never without a smile for anyone. She loved simple pleasures but her waters ran deep. She always blessed people with her love of Jesus. She was giving and kind, sweet and sincere, loving and caring. HAPPY and loads of fun. She will be deeply missed, but Jeton will be the first to greet us with a big smile when we all arrive at Heaven's door.

Jeton is survived by her husband, Ben Anderson of Denver City, Texas; her daughter, Allison Rogers and husband Aaron; and her two precious grandchildren, Nash and Georgia; stepgranddaughters, Blake and Dakota Rogers; three stepchildren, Sarah, Marc and his wife Tanitha, and Shannon and his wife Sarah; stepgrandchildren, Nevin, Madison, Serena, Elija, Tristen, and Teagan Anderson; her parents, Lewis and Wanda Hearon of Andrews, Texas; her sisters, Connie Gill and husband Randy of San Angelo, Texas, and Marsha Gage and husband Chris of Midland, Texas; nephew, Clay Anderson of Dallas, Texas; nieces, Kelan Gage, and Karah Lucas and husband Brandon; great niece, Maki; and great nephew, Baylor, all of Midland, Texas.

Donations may be made to Mission Messiah, 1213 W. 2nd St, Odessa, Texas 79763.

That type of downturn doesn't have a lasting effect on the budget. The 1986 cycle lasted several years. That type of downturn can have a lasting detrimental effect on the budget. Having an appropriate reserve fund gives the county the ability to maintain its employee base and facilities over a longer period of time without having to pass that burden on to the tax payer.

WASHINGTON — THE ISSUE: Politicians love trying to use the tax code to highlight their goals to voters. This year, the battlefield is between Hillary Clinton, who wants to boost levies on the rich to pay for expanding social programs, and Donald Trump, who says cutting taxes would gird the economy. The clash has consequences for the rich, poor and those in the middle.

Where they stand

Trump: The Republican trotted out an initial plan but has pared it back twice so far. He'd slice individual income taxes across the board: the current seven brackets, which peak at 39.6 percent, would collapse into three tiers with a maximum 33 percent rate. The corporate tax rate would fall from 35 percent — which few companies pay because of deductions — to a maximum 15 percent. There would be new tax breaks for some expenses for caring for children or the elderly. And he'd eliminate the estate tax, which bits inheritances exceeding $10.9 million this year for married couples. The nonpartisan Tax Policy Center says the proposal would likely bestow "outsized benefits" to the wealthiest families, but it lacks sufficient detail to be too specific.

Clinton: The Democrat's proposal is more detailed than Trump's and targets the rich — big-time. She'd slap a 4 percent surtax on incomes more than $5 million, impose a minimum 30 percent tax on those earning more than $1 million and cap itemized deductions for higher earners. The Tax Policy Center said the bottom 95 percent of taxpayers — those earning under $300,000 — would see little if any change in their tax bill. She'd impose the estate taxes on inheritances starting at $7 million for couples. Clinton would leave corporate tax rates alone, though she'd raise levies on U.S. companies shielding more thanseas income and would eliminate tax breaks for fossil fuel producers.

Both candidates propose tax relief for child care costs. Trump's plan provides for a new income tax deduction for child care expenses, other tax benefits and a new rebate or tax credit for low-income families. Clinton says no family should spend more than 10 percent of its income on child care. She would double the child tax credit for families with children 4 and younger, to $2,000 per child.

Why it matters

One way or another, tax proposals by whoever becomes president will affect most Americans.

Clinton would hit the wealthy hard and use the money to bolster public works, medical research and other domestic programs. The Policy Center says the top 1 percent of households, with annual incomes averaging $2.1 million, would pay more than three-quarters of the $1.1 trillion extra federal revenue her proposal would raise more than a decade. Her plans would have a "relatively modest" tax impact on everyone else, the Policy Center says. She'd help working families pay college costs and cut taxes for companies that share profits with workers.

The Policy Center said last year that Trump's original plan would reduce revenue by $9.5 trillion more than 10 years. His campaign says his newest, scaled-back version would cut taxes by $4.4 trillion more than that same period. The Policy Center hasn't estimated the price tag of Trump's new proposal, citing a lack of detail, but says some of its estimates are unsubstantiated.

Under Trump's earlier proposal, people from all income levels would enjoy tax cuts but the best-off would benefit most, the center said. The top 0.1 percent of earners — with incomes exceeding $3.7 million — would have gotten tax breaks averaging more than $1.3 million, or 19 percent of after-tax earnings. Though lacking enough detail to be precise, the group said, Trump's new plan "is probably somewhat less regressive," meaning it's less tilted toward helping the rich.

Major tax more thanhauls are enacted infrequently because they spark brutal battles more than winners and losers, especially if Congress and the White House are controlled by opposite parties.

Yet, with Republicans expected to retain House control next year, Speaker Paul Ryan, R-Wis., has already outlined plans to cut families' and businesses' taxes. He'd no doubt find it tougher to find common ground for reshaping the tax code if Clinton, not Trump, wins the White House.

Texas congressional chairs rally to save their gavels

■ Texas Republicans would lose seven committee chairmanships if their party loses control of the U.S. House

By Abby Livingston
Texas Tribune

WASHINGTON — Donald Trump's polling freefall is shaping up to be not merely a presidential problem for Republicans but also a major congressional complication for the party.

And no state would feel that impact quite like Texas.

There is a quiet but increasing fear among Republicans that Trump's turmoil is putting control of the U.S. House of Representatives, where Republicans hold a 59-seat majority, into play. If that was to occur, Texas Republicans would lose seven committee chairmanships.

But none of those chairmen are in danger of losing their own re-election bids, so they've spent the past two years raising money to protect their colleagues. Those funds are now being deployed nationwide to save the House.

"It's a part of the job, and frankly, it's a part of our push for better solutions," U.S. Rep. Kevin Brady of The Woodlands told the Tribune in September.

Brady is one of seven Texas chairmen whose jurisdictions cover a wide swath of issues including national security, fiscal policy, the flow of legislation, farming and NASA. Combined, they've raised over $11.7 million to save their colleagues this cycle.

Because so few seats were drawn to be competitive in the last round of redistricting, most members of Congress on both sides of the aisle are expected to donate much of their campaign money to more vulnerable members and to their House campaign arms.

Few have higher fundraising expectations upon them than chairmen. The Texans, who come from a state that already has a reputation for sending campaign money to the the rest of the country, are key financial drivers.

"If we want our vision for tax reform and the economy and national security to go forward, we need members of Congress who support those bold reforms," Brady said. "Which is why as chairman, I enjoy helping raise resources to reelect members I know who are committed to those as well as support candidates who want to change the direction of the country."

The seven chairmen from Texas have collectively raised over $11.7 million, according to a Texas Tribune analysis of Federal Election Commission records and information provided by the members' political operations.

Here is how their fundraising breaks down by member:

■ U.S. Rep. Kevin Brady of The Woodlands, Ways and Means Committee chairman, raised $2.2 million.

■ U.S. Rep. Jeb Hensarling of Dallas, Financial Services Committee chairman, raised about $2 million.

■ U.S. Rep. Michael McCaul of Austin, Homeland Security Committee chairman, raised $2 million.

■ U.S. Rep. Pete Sessions of Dallas, Rules Committee chairman, raised $1.5 million.

■ U.S. Rep. Mac Thornberry of Clarendon, Armed Services chairman, raised about $830,000.

■ U.S. Rep. Mike Conaway of Midland, Agriculture Committee chairman, raised about $2.3 million.

■ U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith of San Antonio, Science, Space and Technology Committee chairman, raised in the ballpark of $700,000.

The money is going toward airing political ads from California to Maine to shore up Republicans in tight races.

As it stands, the Texas chairmens' gavels appear secure.

Early in the cycle, Democrats missed some key have always felt the need to maintain at least 50 percent of the subsequent years' expenditures. This past year is a great example of that volatility because our sales tax has taken a 35 percent hit. Since we have a robust fund balance, we are able to take some of that money to meet the needs of the county. I also want to remind you that Midland County has had the lowest property tax rate in the state of Texas for six of the last seven years. To give you an idea, the No. 2 lowest tax rate is about 60 percent larger than Midland County. As of 2016, Midland County had a property rate of 14.0811 cents per $100 valuation.

Lynn Yarbrough
Through some investigation of counties of like size and population, they try to keep approximately 40 to 50 percent of the year's budget in reserves. If the 69 percent is correct, then there should be funds available for infrastructure work. In the future we should possible lower taxes so that we don't have that much reserves.

Question: More than $30 million has been spent on the construction of the Horseshoe facilities (all without voter approval). Would you support future expansion and if so how much?

District 1

Scott Ramsey
At this point, I feel the Horseshoe is complete. Once in office, it will be my job to help the Commissioners' Court manage the property so that it continues to serve the citizens of Midland County in a fiscally conservative way.

Amanda Rosales: No response provided

Luis Sanchez
I will remind you that I was not yet elected when the Horseshoe first came up for a vote. When the second phase of the Horseshoe came up for vote, I voted against the expansion. I believe that we are done expanding the Horseshoe, and I will not support any expansion until we have completely finished paving all public roads within Midland County.

Lynn Yarbrough
I was not in favor of the expansion on the Horseshoe and at this point would not be in favor of any more expansion. I will say that I was in favor of the Horseshoe being built.

Question: What has been an area where county government is failing to meet the needs of its residents?

District 1

Scott Ramsey
Personally, I feel county government has done a good job in addressing the issues of the residents of Midland County. However, I'm just one person, and I realize other people have different issues than I do. It is the responsibility of the people to inform the Commissioners' Court of any short comings that the court is not aware of. It is the duty of the court to listen to the citizens and act on their legitimate concerns. Once elected, I look forward to hearing from the residents of the county and helping address their concerns.

Amanda Rosales: No response provided

District 3

Luis Sanchez
I know that we are not perfect and that we surely have some shortcomings. I also believe that this is a question that the public should answer. We hold Commissioners' Court every second and fourth Monday at the Midland County Courthouse starting at 9 a.m. I always urge residents to call my office if there is anything I can help answer. My number is 432-688-4803.

Lynn Yarbrough
The county needs to do a better job on the roads. I would like to see some work on a Volunteer Fire Dept in Precinct 3. To my dismay, I have not seen much done in Precinct 3 other than some grading done to attempt to fill the edges of some of the roads — Midkiff and Cotton Flat mainly.

Question: What is an area where county government has improved recently in meeting the needs of its residents?

District 1

Scott Ramsey
The three-year $30 million program of paving county roads has helped a great deal. This program, which is in its third year, has paved every road in the county with a 60-foot right of way. Continuous maintenance of these roads and the existing roads will be a priority of mine.

Amanda Rosales: No response provided

Luis Sanchez
Midland County has made a great investment in many ways these last eight years. From purchasing and remodeling our new Midland County Courthouse, to meeting the needs of our day-to-day customers and creating more parking for our visitors. We have also built a state-of-the-art Midland County Library and a large and more functional Midland County Jail. We have made an extremely large investment in our roads within Midland County by spending well over $50 million to improve them. Many of these projects have been done with sales tax dollars, which in turn has allowed us to keep the lowest property tax rate in the state of Texas.

Lynn Yarbrough
County residents are by nature very self-reliant. We are used to providing for ourselves. We very much appreciate the great job that the Sheriff's Department does out here and also the Midland Fire Department.

Thank You, St. Ann's Young Adult Group!
Last Saturday (October 23) five members of St. Ann's Young Adult Group spent the day at Helping Hands. They look for service projects to do and were we ever blessed that they chose us! Not only did they assemble most of our donated Christmas trees (creating a virtual "forest"), but when they were done with that project they helped out in the store in whatever capacity they were needed — working with the cashier, picking up hangers, collecting shopping carts and just about anything else they could find to do...and did they stay busy! Special thanks to L.J. Glass, Kelley Korinek, Christina Dang, Robert Leidy, and Clay Roberts for your help. We hope you come back soon!

Thanksgiving/Christmas Food Drive
Next weekend we will kick off our annual food drive for the holidays. The food collected will go to the families of the Christmas Angels that we will be sponsoring for Christmas this year. We are in most urgent need of cash to purchase gift cards so that our families can pick out the meat they would prefer for their Thanksgiving and Christmas meals. We will also publish a list of other foods that we could use should families prefer to shop. Cash donations can be mailed to us at Helping Hands. 1301 Brinson Lane, Midland, TX 79703. Food can be brought to us at the same location or put in our trucks parked outside of St. Stephens (4601 Neely). We thank you for your support of these families who all fall well below the poverty level and who struggle each day just to keep a roof over their heads, and the lights and water on.

Why it matters: Energy

Associated Press

THE ISSUE: Energy independence has been a goal of every president since Richard Nixon. Hillary Clinton and Donald Trump have very different ways to achieve it. How energy is produced and where it comes from affect jobs, the economy and the environment.

Where they stand

Clinton pledges that under her leadership, the U.S. will be able to generate enough renewable energy to power every home in America within 10 years, with 500 million solar panels installed by the end of her first term. She also vows to reduce U.S. oil consumption by one-third through cleaner fuels such as biodiesel and natural gas and more fuel-efficient cars, boilers, ships and trucks. Clinton generally supports oil and gas drilling on federal lands but would bar drilling in the Arctic and Atlantic oceans.

After running as a champion of coal in 2008, Clinton now calls for protecting health benefits for coal miners and their families and helping retrain them for new jobs. She offers cautious support for nuclear power.

Trump vows to "unleash American energy," allowing unfettered production of oil, coal, natural gas and other sources to push the U.S. toward energy independence and create jobs. Trump would sharply increase oil and gas drilling on federal lands and vows to revive the struggling U.S coal industry. He also would open up offshore drilling in the Atlantic Ocean and other areas where it is blocked.

Trump calls for rescinding the Clean Power Plan, a key element of President Barack Obama's strategy to fight climate change, as well as a rule to protect small streams and wetlands from development. He also would cancel the 2015 Paris climate agreement and stop U.S. money going to U.N. global warming programs.

Why it matters

Although energy independence remains elusive, increases in U.S. oil production have lowered reliance on imports. In 2015, the U.S. relied on net imports for about 24 percent of petroleum use, the lowest level since 1970.

Domestic production of all types of energy except coal has boomed in recent years, spurred by improved drilling techniques and discoveries of vast oil supplies in North Dakota and natural gas in states such as Pennsylvania, Ohio, New York and West Virginia. Production also is up in traditional energy states such as Texas, Oklahoma and Louisiana.

Prices at the gasoline pump have declined sharply, to an average of $2.21 per gallon for regular unleaded in September, according to the AAA auto club. That's down from $3.60 per gallon in 2012.

Natural gas, cleaner than coal, has been embraced by politicians from both parties, including Clinton and Trump. Still, critics worry that popular gas drilling techniques such as hydraulic fracturing and horizontal drilling could be harming air, water and health.

Clinton has said fracturing should not take place where states and local communities oppose it, and she pledges to reduce methane emissions from all oil and gas production and protect local water supplies. On climate change, she vows to meet Obama's goal to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by up to 30 percent by 2025.

Trump says restrictions supported by Clinton would hurt energy-producing states such as Colorado, Pennsylvania, North Carolina and Virginia — battleground states in the election. Although he argues that tax credits and other subsidies for wind and solar power "distort" the market, Trump says the U.S. should "encourage all facets of the energy industry."

Wind and solar power have grown in recent years, thanks in part to support from Obama, but renewable energy sources accounted for just 10 percent of total U.S. energy consumption in 2015. Renewable energy is generally more expensive to produce and use than fossil fuels. Clouds impair solar energy and calm skies slow wind farms.

CHAIRS

House candidate recruiting opportunities. Seats that now appear competitive lack a Democrat on the ballot. But the bigger obstacle is the U.S. House district map, which GOP-dominated state houses across the country drew in 2011, often stacked in favor of GOP control.

Yet Trump so threw the party into turmoil following the release of a video showcasing his vulgar sexual assault comments that strange political circumstances are emerging — like speculation that Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton could win Texas and chatter that Trump could be dragging down Republican House incumbents and, in effect, jeopardizing the House.

Democrats must capture 30 seats to win control. Even the most grim-faced GOP operatives in Washington ballpark their party's losses only at 20 seats — for now. But there is increasing concern about Trump's polling deterioration.

Nathan Gonzales is the editor of The Rothenberg Gonzales Political Report, a nonpartisan handicapping guide, and he concurs.

"There are still three weeks before Election Day and 24 hours in each day — all opportunities for Trump to tank his chances even further and take Republicans down with them," he added.

Such a scenario would be a blow to Texas political power in Washington. The state's high number of chairmanships are a point of pride among Tex-pats in the District of Columbia.

It would mean lost gavels, lost power and lowered profiles among a group that is central to the country's financial and defense policy.

But it also could translate to empowering a pair of Texas Democrats.

With her party in control of the House, U.S. Rep. Eddie Bernice Johnson, D-Dallas, would be in line to take over as chair of Smith's Science, Space and Technology Committee, which includes legislating Houston's NASA.

Futhermore, U.S. Rep. Gene Green of Houston would likely take over the House Energy and Commerce subcommittee on health, a position that several House Democratic aides described as more powerful than many chairmanships.

That would put Green at the center of a particularly high-profile issue. If the new president and Congress aimed to make changes to President Obama's health care law, it would run through Green's jurisdiction.

Green has raised over $330,000 and Johnson raised $136,000 for the House Democratic campaign arm and individual general election campaigns the party has indicated are competitive, according to internal party documents obtained by the Tribune.

Why it matters: Guns

A row of different AR-15 style rifles is displayed for sale at the Firing-Line indoor range and gun shop in Aurora, Colo., in 2012.

THE ISSUE: The right to bear arms is fundamental to the U.S., carved into the Constitution and seemingly embedded in the national DNA. But after a seemingly endless stretch of violence, Americans are confronting how far those rights extend, propelling gun issues to the forefront of this year's elections.

Do Americans have the right to have AR-style firearms, the long guns with a military look used in the past year in several mass shootings? Should they be able to buy magazines that hold 10 or more bullets? Can those on a terrorist watchlist, but not charged with a crime, be allowed to buy a gun? Should every gun buyer have to pass a background check?

Where they stand

Hillary Clinton and Donald Trump are like bookends marking the divide that exists in the U.S. today on gun issues.

Trump casts himself as an ardent protector of the Second Amendment and proclaims that if more "good guys" were armed with firearms there would be fewer gun tragedies. He even went a step further than the National Rifle Association after the Orlando nightclub shooting, suggesting that if it weren't a gun-free zone, a patron would have been able to stop the bloodshed. (The NRA, although it supports Trump, said it's not a good idea to allow firearms where alcohol is being served.)

Trump also has vowed that on his first day as president he would end gun-free zones at schools and on military bases. He also supports reciprocity among all 50 states for concealed-carry permits.

Clinton, whose husband as president successfully pushed for a 10-year ban on assault-type weapons, has advocated renewing that ban. She's also called for measures to ensure background checks are completed before a gun sale goes forward, mandating such checks for gun-show sales and repealing a law that shields gun manufacturers from liability.

Why it matters

The next president will get to nominate at least one member of a Supreme Court that's closely divided on how to read the Second Amendment, and the next Congress will continue to confront gun-rights issues.

Justice Antonin Scalia, who died in February and will be replaced by a nominee from the next president, was the decisive vote in a Washington, D.C., case in which the court on a 5-4 vote affirmed the right of individuals to own handguns for self-defense.

Whatever gun policies a Clinton or Trump administration were to pursue would probably be challenged, and Scalia's replacement could be the pivotal vote. This year alone, for example, the court sided with gun control advocates to rule that people convicted of misdemeanor domestic violence crimes can be barred from owning weapons, and also rejected challenges to assault weapon bans in Connecticut and New York.

A recent AP-GfK Poll found the highest levels of support for restrictions on guns since the question was first asked in 2013. That's a sharp departure from the past two presidential election years, when gun issues were largely absent from the campaigns.

Much has happened to bring guns to the forefront again: Charleston. Orlando. Oregon. San Bernardino. There's even been a protest staged by members of Congress on the floor of the House.

There are about 300 million firearms in the United States and tens of thousands of shootings each year.

In a world that feels increasingly violent, whether at home or across the globe, America's cowboy culture and the Second Amendment are under the microscope. Voters are asking what will make them safer, more guns or fewer?

Why it matters: Abortion

Associated Press

NEW YORK — THE ISSUE: Persistent Republican-led efforts to restrict access to abortion and to curb government funding for Planned Parenthood have been hotly debated in Washington and in states, and will be shaped in some way by the next president.

Where they stand

Democrat Hillary Clinton supports access to abortion and is an outspoken defender of Planned Parenthood, which is the largest provider of abortions in the U.S. and also offers other health services.

Republican Donald Trump, who in the past was a supporter of abortion rights, now says he isn't, although he's been somewhat inconsistent in his campaign statements on abortion. Numerous anti-abortion leaders, initially wary of Trump, now support him because of his pledge to nominate Supreme Court justices who are open to curtailing abortions and his choice of Mike Pence, a staunch abortion foe, as his running mate.

Why it matters

The prime battleground over abortion is the Supreme Court, which regularly confronts legal challenges on the issue. The next president has one vacancy to fill on the high court and could have more.

Trump, in the third and final presidential debate, said he would appoint justices open to overturning Roe v. Wade, the 1973 decision that established a nationwide right to abortion. Clinton vowed to appoint justices who would uphold that ruling, saying, "We have come too far to have that turned back now."

A Clinton victory could strengthen the court's current 5-3 majority that supports abortion rights. A Trump win could lead to a reconfigured court that would uphold tough state laws restricting abortion and possibly consider overturning Roe v. Wade, the 1973 decision that established a nationwide right to abortion.

Advocates on both sides have singled out the presidential election as the key to where the issue goes next.

In June, the Supreme Court issued its most important abortion decision in many years, striking down restrictions in Texas that required doctors who perform abortions to have admitting privileges at nearby hospitals and forced clinics to meet hospital-like building standards. The court held that placed an "undue burden" on women seeking abortion because it would force closure of many clinics.

In the future, the court is likely to face the question of whether other types of abortion restrictions impose an undue burden. One example: laws adopted by numerous states that ban most abortions after 20 weeks of gestation on the disputed premise that a fetus can feel pain at that stage.

Republicans in Congress voted to impose a 20-week ban nationwide, but it was blocked by Senate Democrats. If Democrats gain more Senate seats in November, that would make federal anti-abortion legislation even less likely.

Congressional Republicans also have sought to halt federal money to Planned Parenthood. Most of that money goes to provide non-abortion services to low-income women.

A Clinton presidency would be expected to

Why it matters: Social Security

Associated Press

THE ISSUE: More than 60 million retirees, disabled workers, spouses and children rely on monthly Social Security benefits. That's nearly one in five Americans. The trustees who oversee Social Security say the program has enough money to pay full benefits until 2034. But at that point, Social Security will collect only enough taxes to pay 79 percent of benefits. Unless Congress acts, millions of people on fixed incomes would get an automatic 21 percent cut in benefits.

Most older Americans rely on Social Security for a majority of their income. Monthly benefits average $1,237.

Where they stand

The candidates have said little to acknowledge the issue, even though it's a main driver of the government's long-term budget problems.

Democrat Hillary Clinton has proposed expanding Social Security benefits for widows and family caregivers. That would worsen the program's finances. She says she would preserve Social Security by requiring "the wealthiest" to pay Social Security taxes on more of their income.

Unusual for a Republican, Donald Trump has promised not to cut Social Security. His campaign has suggested he'd revisit the program after his tax-cut plan boosts economic growth.

Why it matters

Social Security's financial problems might seem far off. But the

This Feb. 2, 2015, file photo depicts a part of a U.S. $100 bill. The federal government is borrowing about one out of seven dollars it spends and steadily piling up debt — to the tune of about $14 trillion held by investors. Over the long term, that threatens the economy and people's pocketbooks.

Why it matters: Debt

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — THE ISSUE: The federal government is borrowing about 1 out of 7 dollars it spends and steadily piling up debt — to the tune of about $14 trillion held by investors. Over the long term, that threatens the economy and pocketbooks.

Most economists say rising debt risks crowding out investment and forcing interest rates up, among other problems. At the same time, rapidly growing spending on federal health care programs like Medicare and the drain on Social Security balances caused by the rising tide of baby boomers could squeeze out other spending, on roads, education, the armed forces and more.

It takes spending cuts, tax increases or both to dent the deficit — and presidential leadership. Lawmakers instead prefer higher spending and tax cuts.

Where they stand

Neither Hillary Clinton nor Donald Trump has really focused on the debt.

Trump has promised huge tax cuts that would, in fact, make the debt explode by trillions of dollars over the coming decade, though details are fuzzy. Trump has also shown no interest in curbing expensive benefit programs like Medicare and has actually criticized prior Republican efforts to balance the budget. He also wants big spending increases for veterans, the military and infrastructure projects — even suggesting that the government should take on new debt for such projects because interest rates are so low.

Clinton, by contrast, is proposing tax increases on the wealthy. But she wouldn't use the money to bring down the debt. Instead, she'd turn around and spend it on college tuition subsidies, infrastructure and expansion of President Barack Obama's health care law. She also wants to get rid of that law's so-called Cadillac tax on generous employer-provided health plans.

If elected, Clinton is expected to face a hostile GOP-controlled House, making her goal of tax increases for new spending highly unlikely to be achieved, even if Democrats take back the Senate.

Why it matters

Most economists believe that rising debt, especially when measured against the size of the economy, is a serious threat to the long-term economic health of the country. Very low interest rates have made the nation's debt relatively easy to handle — for now.

But as debt continues to grow, economists fear rising interest rates are inevitable, as the government's demand to borrow competes with private borrowers needing capital for investments. If debt slows the economy down, tax revenues would fall and create even more pressure on the budget and raise the possibility of a European-style fiscal crisis. In that event, policymakers might have no choice but tax increases or large benefit cuts.

Economists who are more liberal say interest rates are remaining low despite high debt levels and the debt is easily manageable.

There's also the question of generational fairness. The federal budget is dominated by programs that help the elderly — Medicare and Social Security. Their growth is squeezing programs like education, infrastructure, national parks and scientific research, just to name a few. At the same time, the steadily growing debt, both in nominal terms and when measured against the economy, is a burden that future generations will have to bear.

America's debt problem can't be wished away, but there's little evidence the political system is up to the challenge. Part of the reason is increased polarization between the parties and an increasingly rancorous atmosphere in Washington. It's also true that politicians across the spectrum fear the political consequences of taking the difficult steps required to cut the deficit. That won't change whoever is elected to succeed Obama.

Why it matters: Immigration

Associated Press

THE ISSUE: An estimated 11 million people are living and in many cases working in the United States illegally. The questions of what to with them and how to curb future illegal immigration have been a campaign issue for more than a decade. Never more so than now. Illegal immigration goes to the heart of Donald Trump's presidential campaign. It's a source of his strength among supporters, contention among critics and confusion over what he really intends to do.

The long debate over immigration in Congress has focused on which should come first: stiffer enforcement at the border and inside the country or a path to legal status for the millions of people who are already a part of their communities. Efforts to overhaul the country's immigration laws have routinely been defined by Republicans supporting an enforcement-first approach with Democrats preferring a path to legal status for those here while working on security efforts at the same time. The result? A standstill.

Where they stand

Trump vows to build a wall along the U.S.-Mexico border complete with a "big beautiful door." He vows Mexico will pay for the wall; Mexico vows it won't. Trump had repeatedly pledged to deport all the people living in the country illegally. Now he'd focus on deporting people who have committed crimes beyond their immigration offences. As for the rest, he's proposing no path to legal status while they are in the U.S.

Democrat Hillary Clinton has pledged to push for an overhaul that would enable citizenship — not just legal status — for many living in the country illegally. She has also said she would expand programs that protect some groups of immigrants from deportation, including those who arrived as children and the parents of U.S. citizens and legal permanent residents. President Barack Obama's effort to shield parents from deportation is on hold after the Supreme Court deadlocked on a decision in a case challenging the president's authority to expand the deportation protection program.

Why it matters

Illegal immigration has remained at nearly 40-year lows for the last several years, and several estimates of the immigrants living in the country illegally suggest that Mexican migration trends have actually reversed, with more Mexican nationals leaving the United States than arriving. And billions of dollars have been spent in recent years to build fencing, improve technology used at the border and expand the Border Patrol.

Nonetheless the U.S.-Mexico border remains a focal point for those who argue that the country is not secure. As evidence that the border is not secure, many Republicans point to the illegal crossings of hundreds of thousands of unaccompanied children and people traveling as families in recent years. The surge of children and families from Central America in 2014 was described as a crisis at the border and the volume of people apprehended overwhelmed government resources.

At the same time, the Obama administration has dramatically slowed the pace of deportations after setting a record by sending home more than 409,000 people in 2012. During the 2015 budget year, the administration removed 235,000 people.

Multiple efforts to overhaul immigration policies have repeatedly ended in a legislative stalemate as Republicans and Democrats spar over how to approach both securing the border and dealing with those immigrants already here.

Social Security

longer Congress waits to act, the harder it will be to save Social Security without dramatic tax increases, big benefit cuts or some combination.

Here's why.

Once Social Security's trust funds run dry, the program faces huge shortfalls that get bigger and bigger each year.

In 2034, the program faces a $500 billion shortfall, according to the Social Security Administration. In just five years, the shortfalls add up to more than $3 trillion.

Over the next 75 years, the shortfalls add up to a staggering $139 trillion. But why worry? When that number is adjusted for inflation, it comes to only $40 trillion in 2016 dollars — a little more than twice the national debt.

Why is Social Security facing these problems?

In short, because Americans aren't having as many babies as they used to. That leaves relatively fewer workers to pay into the system. Immigration has helped Social Security's finances, but not enough to fix the long-term problems.

In 1960, there were 5.1 workers for each person getting benefits. Today, there are about 2.8 workers for each beneficiary. That ratio will drop to 2.1 workers by 2040.

Despite the program's problems, Social Security could be preserved for generations to come with modest but politically difficult changes to benefits or taxes or a combination of both.

Some options could affect people quickly, such as increasing payroll taxes or reducing annual cost-of-living adjustments for those who already get benefits. Other options, such as gradually raising the retirement age, wouldn't be felt for years but would affect millions of younger workers.

All options carry political risks because they have the potential to affect nearly every U.S. family while angering powerful interest groups. Liberal advocates and some Democrats oppose all benefit cuts; conservative activists and some Republicans say tax increases are out of the question.

But if Congress acts fast, changes can be made gradually, sparing current beneficiaries while giving younger workers time to adjust.

Each year, Social Security's trustees implore Congress to act. Here is what they said in this year's annual report: "Lawmakers should address these financial challenges as soon as possible. Taking action sooner rather than later will permit consideration of a broader range of solutions and provide more time to phase in changes so that the public has adequate time to prepare."

Abortion

carry on President Barack Obama's opposition to such defunding attempts, with veto power to back it up. Trump says he'd support the stripping of federal financing from Planned Parenthood, though he also has made positive comments in the past about the importance of the organization's non-abortion services.

States, too, have sought to curtail public money for Planned Parenthood over the past year — blocked by courts in some cases, but elsewhere forcing Planned Parenthood to curtail some contraceptive services, health screenings and other programs.

Federal law, and the laws of most states, already prevent public money from paying for abortions except in rare circumstances. The recent defunding bills prohibit state money for any services by organizations that also provide abortions.

Public opinion on abortion is sharply divided, and has barely shifted in recent decades. The latest Gallup poll on the topic finds 50 percent of Americans say abortion should be legal under certain circumstances, 29 percent want it legal in all cases and 19 percent want it outlawed in all cases — about the same breakdown as in the 1970s.

In this Oct. 6, 2015, file photo, the HealthCare.gov website, where people can buy health insurance, is displayed on a laptop screen in Washington. About 9 in 10 Americans now have health insurance, more than at any time in history. But progress is incomplete, and the future far from certain. Rising costs could bedevil the next occupant of the White House.

Why it matters: Health Care

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — THE ISSUE : About 9 in 10 Americans now have health insurance, more than at any time in history. But progress is incomplete, and the future is far from certain. Millions remain uninsured. Quality is still uneven. Costs are high and trending up again. Medicare's insolvency is two years closer, now projected in 2028. Every family has a stake.

Where they stand

Hillary Clinton would stay the course, making adjustments as needed to major government health insurance programs. She'd build on President Barack Obama's health care law, with one exception: a tax on generous coverage that she'd repeal. Medicare, the health care program for older Americans and the disabled, would get new legal powers to negotiate prescription drug prices with pharma companies. Clinton would also offer some relief from rising out-of-pocket costs, like deductibles and copayments. Donald Trump would repeal "Obamacare." But recent studies found his plan would make 18 million to 20 million people uninsured. Stay tuned, because Trump has also said he doesn't want people "dying on the street." Similar to Clinton, he has promised not to cut Medicare. He agrees Medicare should be able to negotiate drug prices, which is unusual for a Republican.

Why it matters

Patients from all over the world come to America for treatment. U.S. research keeps expanding humanity's ability to confront disease. But the U.S. still spends far more than any advanced country, and its people are not much healthier. Obama's progress reducing the number of uninsured might be reaching its limits. Premiums are expected to rise sharply in many states for people covered by his namesake law. That, along with some major insurers leaving the program, has raised concerns about the future.

The health care overhaul did not solve the nation's longstanding problem with costs. Total health spending is picking up again, underscoring that the system is financially unsustainable over the long run. Employers keep shifting costs to workers and their families.

No one can be denied coverage anymore because of a pre-existing condition, but high costs are still a barrier to access for many, including insured people facing high deductibles and copayments. Prescription drug prices — even for some generics — are another major worry.

The election offers a choice between a candidate of continuity — Clinton — and a Republican who seems to have some core beliefs about health care, but lacks a coherent plan.

If the presidential candidates do not engage the nation in debating the future of health care, it still matters.

Even if you're healthy, deeper national debt affects the economy and in some way everyone's standard of living, especially the next generation. If the government has to spend more on health care, it comes at the expense of more debt, cuts in something else or higher taxes.

America's problem with health care spending can't be ignored or wished away. Political leaders can postpone hard choices, but that will mean consequences even more wrenching when the bill comes due.

Why it matters: Supreme Court

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — THE ISSUE: No one likes an even number on a court that makes decisions by majority vote. Yet that's just what the Supreme Court has been left with, eight justices, since the death of Antonin Scalia in February.

Four cases ended in a tie after Scalia's death. With Senate Republicans refusing to confirm President Barack Obama's choice to succeed Scalia, the outcome of the presidential election will determine whether the ninth, tie-breaking justice moves the court right or left. How much can one vote matter?

In key decisions in recent years on health care, gun rights, same-sex marriage, voting rights and campaign finance, the vote was 5-4. And more Supreme Court appointments probably await the next president because two justices will be older than 80 and a third will be 78 come Election Day.

Where they stand

Both Democrat Hillary Clinton and Republican Donald Trump have made the future of the Supreme Court part of their pitch to their respective party faithful. In talking about the court, Clinton has stressed her support for abortion rights, LGBT issues and immigration. Trump has released a list of 11 conservative state and federal judges whom he would consider nominating if elected.

Why it matters

The current vacancy is the moment both sides alternately have wished for and feared. Supreme Court nominations are always important because a justice can serve a quarter century or more. But the stakes are even higher when the president has a chance to put a like-minded justice on the court to take the place of an ideological opponent. Such a switch can change the outcome of some of the court's most important cases.

That's the tantalizing opportunity for Democrats and why Republicans have been resolute in refusing to consider Obama nominee Merrick Garland. Though Garland has a reputation as a moderate, he still would be left of Scalia on most issues.

A Clinton victory in November would, with the confirmation of Garland or someone else as the ninth justice, immediately shift the court to the left and result in a majority of justices nominated by a Democratic president for the first time since 1969.

If Trump is elected, he presumably would restore the court's conservative tilt by appointing a like-minded successor to Scalia.

So the direction of a court closely divided between conservatives and liberals is at stake. The Supreme Court may be the least understood of the three branches of government, but its decisions affect Americans rich and poor.

A switch of one vote would have doomed Obama's health care overhaul in 2012, kept the heart of a voting rights law in place in 2013 and prevented some Americans from marrying their same-sex partners in 2015.

Chances are Trump or Clinton will have other Supreme Court vacancies to fill, nominations that could cement conservative or liberal domination of the court for decades.

Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg is 83, Justice Anthony Kennedy is 80, and Justice Stephen Breyer is 78. Justices tend to retire when their replacement is likely to be of similar ideology.

Garland or another Democratic nominee could be expected to reinforce support for abortion rights, look favorably on executive actions to deal with immigration and climate change and be more willing to uphold campaign finance restrictions. Trump's choices probably would come down on the other side of those issues and be more skeptical about gun control and consideration of race in higher education as well.

Why it matters: Veterans

Associated Press

THE ISSUE: There are an estimated 21.6 million veterans in the United States. Among them, nearly 9 million are enrolled in health care provided by the Department of Veterans Affairs. About 4.3 million veterans get disability compensation from the VA and nearly 900,000 have been diagnosed with post-traumatic stress disorder.

A 2014 law signed by President Barack Obama aimed to alleviate delays many veterans faced in getting treatment at VA hospitals and clinics and end the widespread practice of fake wait lists that covered up long waits for veterans seeking health care. Two years later, many of the problems remain.

Where they stand

Hillary Clinton has pledged to ensure veterans have access to timely and high-quality health care and vows to block efforts to privatize the Veterans Health Administration, the VA's health-care arm. Clinton also wants to bolster veterans' benefits, including education and housing aid included in the GI bill. She would ensure that military sexual trauma is acknowledged as a disability under VA rules.

Donald Trump says he will expand programs that allow veterans to choose their doctor — regardless of whether they're affiliated with the VA — and still receive government-paid medical care. Trump says that's not privatized care but, he told The Associated Press, "a way of not allowing people to die waiting for doctors."

Trump also pledged to fire or discipline VA employees who fail veterans or breach the public trust. He also would increase mental health professionals and create a "White House hotline" dedicated to veterans. If a valid complaint is not addressed, "I will pick up the phone and fix it myself if I have to," Trump said.

Why it matters

Lifetime health care is part of the bargain for many of those who put their lives on the line in the armed forces, and it's become clear the government isn't holding up its end.

Veterans care has gained prominence since a 2014 scandal in which as many as 40 veterans died while waiting for care at a Phoenix VA hospital. Similar problems were soon discovered nationwide. Veterans waited months for care even as VA employees created secret waiting lists and other falsehoods to cover up the delays.

A law approved after the scandal broke created a program that allows veterans to seek private care at government expense, but the program is limited to veterans who have waited 30 days for an appointment or live 40 miles from a VA health center. Trump says he would vastly expand the program, calling problems at the VA under President Barack Obama "widespread and totally inexcusable."

Clinton says the VA must retain "the ultimate responsibility" for veterans care. She cites the Veterans Health Administration's leadership in areas such as prosthetics and traumatic brain injury. She promises to create an oversight board to monitor quality of care.

Veterans groups are encouraged by the increased focus on the VA, as evidenced by a recent forum that featured both Clinton and Trump. But they say the VA must do more to improve access to health care, address veterans' suicide and change VA's culture to ensure real accountability.

With nearly 370,000 employees and an annual budget of nearly $167 billion, the VA is the largest civilian agency in the government, and second overall to the Defense Department.

Veterans are also a politically consequential group. Nearly 70 percent voted in the 2012 presidential election, a higher rate than the general population.

Local forecast

The chance of showers returns to the forecast this week, according to the National Weather Service. There is a chance of showers Wednesday through at least Saturday. Otherwise, the NWS expects above-average high and low temperatures through Thursday.

The record high for Oct. 29 is 90, set in 1933. The record low is 27, set in 1980. On Oct. 29 of last year, the high was 77 and the low was 48.

National weather

A cold frontal boundary shifted over the Northwest on Saturday, while a low pressure system moved across the Great Lakes.

A Pacific frontal boundary extended south southwestward from western Washington to northwest California. As this frontal boundary transitioned northeastward, it generated light to moderate rain and high elevation snow in northern California, Oregon and Washington. Winter storm warnings were issued for the northern Sierra Nevada. Mount Shasta, Calif., reported a midday total of 0.95 of an inch of rain. Brookings, Ore., reported a midday total of 0.93 of an inch of rain.

Meanwhile, a low pressure area moved east northeastward over the upper Midwest and the Great Lakes. This system ushered a mixture of rain and snow across the upper Midwest, Upstate New York and New England. Plymouth, N.H., reported a midday total of 0.49 of an inch of rain.

Protesters shout down Christie at Superstorm Sandy event

By Wayne Parry
Associated Press

SEASIDE HEIGHTS, N.J. — Two years ago, on the second anniversary of Superstorm Sandy, New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie yelled at a protester frustrated with the slow pace of storm recovery to "sit down and shut up."

On Friday, a day before the fourth anniversary of the storm, it was Christie's turn to be silenced, at least temporarily.

Protesters angry that hundreds of Sandy victims have still not been able to return home four years later shouted Christie down as he visited a storm-damaged boardwalk bar in Seaside Heights. They included the heckler who Christie rebuked two years ago.

When Christie used an oft-cited figure that his administration had to deal with helping 365,000 homeowners, the protesters stood up, waved signs critical of the recovery pace and began yelling at him.

"What do we want? To go home!" chanted Amanda Devecka-Rinear, director of the New Jersey Organizing Project.

They claim Christie's administration has grossly inflated the number of people it helped with storm recovery, an assertion the administration has rejected.

Before his speech, Christie's office released figures saying that of the about 7,600 homeowners actively participating in New Jersey's main storm rebuilding program, about 4,300 have completed construction and another 1,400 have returned home while construction is completed.

"I'm proud of what we've been able to do within the last four years to be able to restore our state," Christie said once the protests subsided. "I've given you the very best I can give you over the last four years in this effort."

Protesters included individuals who are still not back in their homes. And Jim Keady, an Ocean County businessman and unsuccessful candidate for state Assembly who was on the receiving end of Christie's "sit down and shut up" put-down in October 2014, also yelled out. This time, someone else told him to be quiet.

While the protesters shouted and chanted, an uncharacteristically restrained and patient Christie huddled with other residents who had come seeking help, taking down their names and phone numbers, and promising that someone from his staff would contact them on Saturday to hear their concerns.

Christie also called for abolishing the National Flood Insurance Program, saying it had failed many policy holders after Sandy.

"But I ran for president and lost, so I don't get to do it," Christie said.

Since months after Sandy hit, Christie has been pushing a plan to build or reinforce protective sand dunes along New Jersey's entire 127-mile coastline; shore towns that had the dunes fared much better during Sandy than those that did not.

But the effort has met with pockets of resistance up and down the coast. Though some work is already underway and more is due to start in the spring, some oceanfront homeowners are still fighting the plan. Friday morning, a group of five Margate homeowners asked a judge to issue an order prohibiting dunes from being built in their town just outside Atlantic City.

They claim water will become trapped between the dunes and their homes, creating fetid ponds that will spread disease and cause flooding.

Texas hands No. 8 Baylor first loss with late field goal

By Mark Rosner
Associated Press

AUSTIN — Trent Domingue kicked a 39-yard field goal with 46 seconds remaining and Texas upset No. 8 Baylor 35-34 on Saturday to hand the Bears their first loss.

For the second straight season, coach Charlie Strong and the Longhorns (4-4, 2-3 Big 12) beat Baylor (6-1, 3-1). This time Texas also dealt a blow to the Big 12's hopes of putting a team in the College Football Playoff.

Domingue, who transferred this season from LSU, missed a critical field goal during a loss at Kansas State last week. He had three PATs blocked by Oklahoma State earlier in the season.

"He was walking the sidelines saying, 'Give me one chance, give me one chance,'" Texas coach Charlie Strong said. "You just knew he was gonna hit that."

Both of the conference's remaining unbeaten teams lost Saturday, with No. 10 West Virginia going down at Oklahoma State .

D'Onta Foreman rushed for a career best 250 yards and two touchdowns for the Longhorns, who scored with 7:03 left on 7-yard pass from Shane Buechele to Andrew Beck to make it 34-32. The Bears stuffed Tyrone Swoopes trying to run for a 2-point conversion.

Seth Russell had 364 yards passing and running and accounted for three touchdowns for Baylor. Russell, a senior, rushed for 138 yards, second-most of his career.

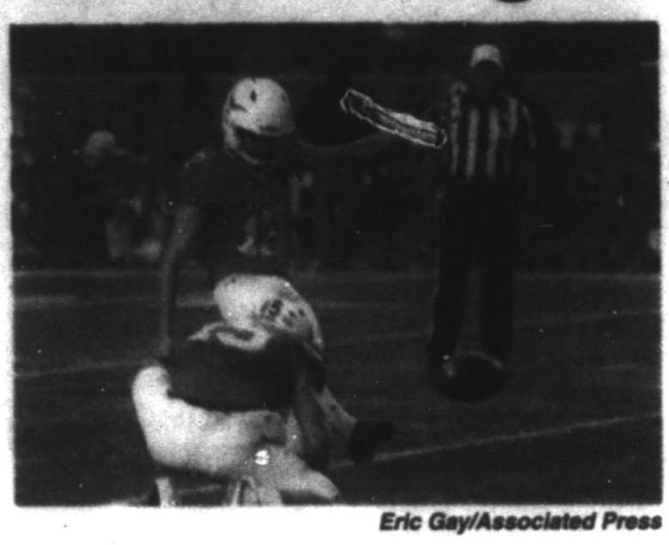

"We knew the quarterback run was gonna hurt them," Russell said. "But it didn't hurt them enough."

Foreman rushed for 100 yards in the first quarter, reaching the 100-yard mark for the ninth straight game. He scored twice in the half, on runs of 37 and 9 yards, and Texas held a 23-21 lead at the break.

Takeaways

Baylor: The Bears played a weak nonconference schedule and have faced only one team with a winning record so far. Getting into the playoff is going to be very tough even if they win out, but they have two games left against ranked teams (at No. 10 West Virginia and No. 16 Oklahoma).

Texas: Was this a much-needed breakthrough for Texas? The Longhorns avoided falling to 3-5 for the third straight season under Strong. He is now 15-18, including 11-12 in the Big 12, during his three seasons.

Texas Tech escapes TCU with a 27-24 double-OT victory

By Stephen Hawkins
Associated Press

FORT WORTH — Clayton Hatfield kicked a 37-yard field goal in the second overtime and Texas Tech beat TCU 27-24 in a surprisingly low-scoring game on Saturday.

Patrick Mahomes scrambled 15 yards for a touchdown in the first overtime before TCU tied the game on Desmon White's incredible 25-yard TD catch from backup quarterback Foster Sawyer.

White caught the pass despite having a defender on his hip, and secured the ball against his helmet to complete the score. The play stood after officials did a replay review of the catch.

The Horned Frogs (4-4, 2-3 Big 12) had the ball to start the second overtime. But Brandon Hatfield — not related to the Texas Tech kicker — shanked a 40-yard field goal attempt, his third miss of the game.

A week after matching an FBS record with 734 yards passing in a 66-59 loss to Oklahoma, Mahomes went 24 of 39 for 206 yards with two touchdowns and an interception as Texas Tech (4-4, 2-3) ended a three-game losing streak.

"It was a pass play called and it wasn't open," Mahomes said of his TD run in overtime. "They were covering up pretty much everything all day. I just opened up and I just ran."

Texas Tech had a season-low 345 total yards.

"It wasn't pretty offensively," Tech coach Kiiff Kingsbury said. "I told (TCU coach Gary) Patterson that's the best defense I've ever gone against because it was nothing what we've seen all year."

The previous two times the teams met in Fort Worth, they combined for 109 points both times. Tech won 56-53 in triple overtime in 2012, and TCU broke Big 12 and school records in an 82-27 win two years ago. The Frogs won 55-52 in Lubbock last year.

Sawyer took over after dual-threat quarterback Kenny Hill's last pass was intercepted. Hill was 16 of 29 passing for 160 yards, and has now struggled in three consecutive games since back-to-back 400-yard passing performances.

MC wins last home match, secures regional bye

By Oscar LeRoy

Dana Lohrke believed that the only appropriate way to finish out her time on the Chaparral Center court was with a win.

While Frank Phillips College at times didn't make it easy for Lohrke and her Midland College teammates, the Lady Chaparrals sent sophomores Lohrke and Bailey Wright out in style with a 25-23, 25-21, 25-22 victory in the Western Junior College Athletic Conference finale on Saturday.

The Lady Chaps got some more good news later on as Odessa College swept New Mexico Military Institute, which gave MC (18-13, 7-3 in WJCAC) the No. 2 seed and the first round bye in next weekend's NJCAA Region V West Tournament in Borger. Odessa College, the WJCAC champion, will also have the first round bye, while NMMI will be the No. 3 seed in the tournament.

"Today meant a lot and it means a lot being a part of the Midland College Chaparrals," said Lohrke, a middle blocker from Bandera, who led the team with 11 kills and 2.5 blocks. "To come out with a win like that is just great."

Young stars power MCA past Lakehill Prep

By Will Korn
wkorn@mrt.com

The Midland Classical volleyball team didn't play as clean as it would have liked on Saturday in its opening playoff match.

At first, a slew of mistakes slowed the Lady Knights against an upstart Dallas Lakehill Prep squad ranked No. 8 in the state.

But it was MCA's young star power that helped lift the No. 3-ranked Lady Knights to a 25-20, 25-17, 25-10 sweep of the Lady Warriors in a TAPPS 3A area match at the MCA gym.

For the first time in the program's history, MCA advanced to the TAPPS regional round, where they will face No. 6 Irving Highlands on Tuesday. The match's date and time have not yet been finalized.

With their strong all-around play, MCA's talented freshmen duo of Andie Sheppard and Jenny Coco alleviated the Lady Knights' early flops. They both alternated between making a hustle defensive play and connecting on a big swing for a momentous kill.

LUBBOCK — Andrews is sending both its boys and girls cross-country teams to the UIL state meet following each team's second-place finish during Saturday's Region I-4A meet at Mae Simmons Park.

The Big Spring boys finished fourth with 184 points to also punch their ticket to state.

The UIL State Cross-Country Championships take place, Nov. 12 at Old Settler's Park in Round Rock.

The Andrews boys will be heading to state for the sixth straight year, and the girls are going back for the second straight season.

The Andrews boys posted a team score of 130 points, which was bested only by Region I-4A champion and defending state champion San Elizario with 22 points.

The Mustangs were spearheaded by senior Alberto Bejarano's fifth-place finish (16:17.02), and senior Joaquin Garcia's seventh-place showing (16:35.23).

In the girls race, meet champion Dalhart registered a team score of 72 points, beating Andrews' runner-up score of 114 points.

Andrews senior Hannah Travis ran her team's best race with a ninth-place finish (12:49.87), while sophomore teammate Elizabeth Garcia came in right behind her in 10th (12:50.05).

GRADY BOYS, GCHS GIRLS GOING TO STATE

SAN ANGELO — The Grady boys team and Garden City girls team are continuing the tradition of reaching the UIL State Cross-Country Championships.

Grady qualified for the state meet for the third

MHS girls relay team sets record in San Angelo

SAN ANGELO — The Midland High girls finished sixth and the MHS boys finished fifth during Saturday's 54th annual San Angelo Invitational swim meet at Gus Clemens Aquatic Center.

The MHS 200-medley relay team of Dailey Parker, Kile Carriger, Mollie Wright and Maya Anderson set a pool record with a winning time of 1 minute, 52.12 seconds.

On the boys' side, MHS' Nathan Keller won the 50 freestyle with a time of 5:02.91.

Midland ISD was victorious in both diving events as Lee senior Charlye Campbell won the girls 1-meter diving with a score of 443.25 points and Midland High senior Garrett Martin won the boys 1-meter diving with a total of 459.25 points.

Lee's playoff hopes quelled by late collapse vs. Frenship

WILL KORN
wkorn@mrt.com

The final 10 minutes of a game couldn't have been any rougher for the Lee football team than it was Friday at home against Wolfforth Frenship.

The Rebels, needing a win to clinch a playoff spot in District 2-6A, were gashed time and again by play action passes downfield, as well as the bruising running style of Frenship sophomore tailback Scooter Garcia.

It all added up to a 31-14 deficit for the Rebels with 5:31 to play in the third quarter. But Lee stormed back with a pair of touchdowns over the next seven minutes to trim the Tigers' lead to 31-28 early in the fourth.

And that's when chaos ensued.

Frenship rattled off 27 unanswered points in the following order: a 1-yard quarterback keeper by Chandler Brand, another 1-yard quarterback keeper by Brand, a 45-yard fumble return by Garcia and a 90-yard interception return by Nick McCauley.

It was a demoralizing ending for the Rebels, who showed steady improvement on nearly every front over the previous three weeks. To make things especially grim, the loss also eliminated Lee from playoff contention.

Lee head coach Clint Hartman said there was a somber atmosphere in the Lee field house on Saturday morning for the team's film session and workout.

"It was rough, man," Hartman said. "I feel for our kids."

I understand there had been a bit of confusion surrounding the Rebels' playoff situation following their loss to Frenship and I was one definitely one of those confused individuals.

But Lee has indeed been eliminated from playoff contention. Allow me to explain in the simplest way I know how.

■ First and foremost, San Angelo Central and Midland High have both clinched playoff berths. That's two of the four spots off the board. Conversely, both Odessa Permian and Odessa High have been eliminated. We already knew that.

■ If Lee (3-6, 2-3 in District 2-6A) beats Permian Friday at Ratliff Stadium it will finish 3-3 in district play, which would tie the Rebels with Frenship at 3-3.

Amarillo Tascosa is currently 3-2 in district play and hosts San Angelo Central on Thursday. If Tascosa wins and finishes at 4-2, they will clinch a playoff spot with four wins.

At that point, a two-way tie would be created between Frenship and Lee for fourth place and that is decided by the teams' head-to-head result. Thusly, Lee would be eliminated via its loss to the Tigers.

■ If Tascosa loses to Central and drops to 3-3, there will be a three-way tie among Frenship, Tascosa and Lee. Per the district tiebreaker rules, a tie of three or more teams for third place is settled by positive/negative point differential among the teams in the tie.

Remember that the most points a team can gain or lose in one game is 15, regardless of the game's actual score.

Among the three teams, Frenship owns the best differential at plus-8, Tascosa is at zero and Lee has a minus-8. In this scenario, Frenship would earn the district's third playoff seed and Tascosa would take the fourth.

I can tell you first hand these procedures and all the what-ifs, at first, absolutely caused some heads to spin in the Reporter-Telegram's sports department. Lee fans might be asking "We beat Tascosa head-to-head so why aren't we in?"

For the sake of simplicity, the Tascosa-Central game Thursday is the key angle in which to view the situation. Let that game play out and you can go from there.

Either way, it appears that the Rebels will soon be preparing for the 2017 season.

alternated between making a hustle defensive play and connecting on a big swing for a momentous kill.

Sheppard co-led the team with 10 kills, while Coco paced MCA in assists (17), digs (15) and aces (7) while adding nine kills herself.

One might not have been able to tell it was the duo's first varsity playoff match. Still, even with as well as they played in their postseason debuts, they mentioned very little of themselves after the win, reinforcing the selfless nature of the Lady Knights' program this season.

"We stayed really mentally focused as we kept playing," Sheppard said. "The team was really encouraging to each other and that was our focus for this game. That's what we did and we just got better the entire time. We kept growing and getting stronger and stronger as the game went on. I can't just say that I played well."

Said Coco: "I thought we played great as a team and definitely in the third set. We all just played as a team and we communicated, and that's what helped us win this game."

Once the Lady Knights finally cut down on their errors, they began to assert themselves. MCA closed the second set on an 8-2 run and then, with the sweep in its crosshairs, raced to a quick 10-1 lead in the third set.

MCA head coach Lindsy Dunn said it was that characteristic team play that pushed her players to improve as the match progressed.

"When our mistakes compound on each other, I try to tell the girls to play unselfishly and not think about yourself so much," Dunn said. "When you make a mistake, you've got to let it go and (get to the) next play."

Dunn added that that Saturday's historic victory could spark her team as it continues its attempt for its first volleyball state title.

"Credit to Dallas Lakehill, they were tough," Dunn said. "They came all this way (to Midland) and they wanted it. This game was awesome for us and it gives us an idea of what the next teams will be like and their level of play. It's a little bit of a jump start for us for next week."

Lizabelle Russell contributed 10 kills and a team-high 2 1/2 blocks for MCA in the win. Micaela McDougal had 11 assists, five digs, four aces and a kill for the Lady Knights.

on the Lady Chaps as each set was close and each set was decided only with a late surge by MC.

"We played well but we played a little bit flat," MC coach Tammie Jimenez said. "Our energy level was a little bit low and the excitement was a little bit low. I don't know if it was a confidence (thing) where we knew we could win, maybe an expectation to win, but we had already talked about not underestimating who we're playing. We have to face them just like we have to face everybody else. I don't know what it is. Maybe there's a little bit of fatigue at this point in time, but overall we did well."

Breann Schreiber addded nine kills, Ashley Vanfleet had 10 digs, Wright had 20 assists and Nelda Grau added 11 assists for the Lady Chaps.

The win for the Lady Chaps also big in terms of gaining back some momentum heading into next week's tournament after suffering a disappointing five-set loss at NMMI on Wednesday. For a young team, any positive reinforcements should help.

"That was a tough loss," said Lohrke about Wednesday's setback at NMMI. "Coming back from that, it was good. We hope to take this momentum and carry it to the regional tournament.

"I'm so excited (for regionals). I feel we can make nationals. We can go to the national tournament if we play to our ability."

Rudolph powers Oklahoma State past No. 10 West Virginia

By Cliff Brunt
Associated Press

STILLWATER, Okla. — Mike Gundy's 100th career win at Oklahoma State was one of his best.

Mason Rudolph threw three touchdown passes and ran for a score to help the Cowboys upset No. 10 West Virginia 37-20 on Saturday.

"It's special for all of us," Gundy said of the milestone. "For me to not say that 100 wins is not special to me is not fair. That means that we're doing well here and we're having success."

It was Gundy's sixth win over a top-10 team since 2008. The Cowboys are now in position to contend for the Big 12 title.

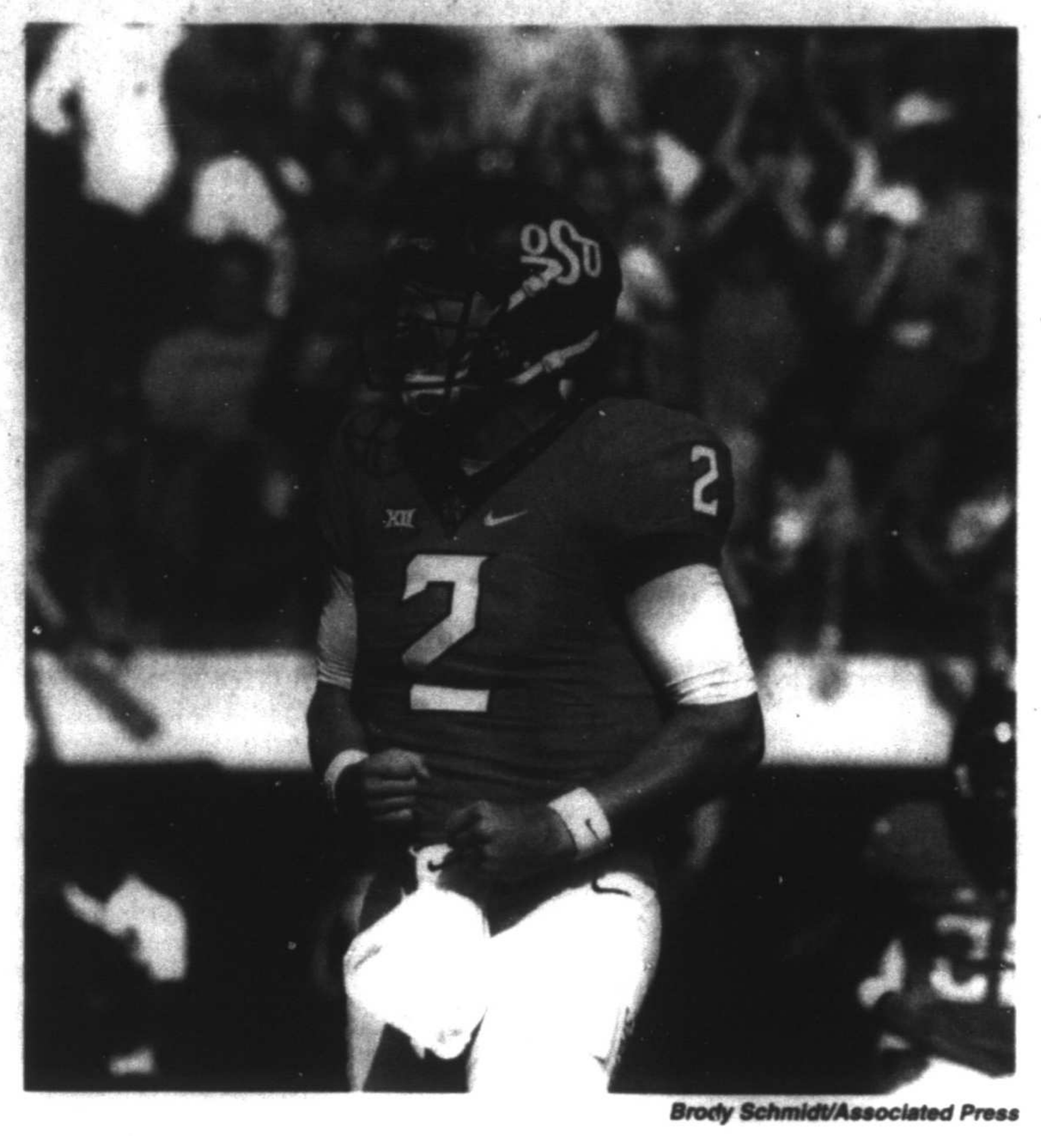

"They've kind of created a monster here, and the only way to feed it is to win big games like we did today," he said. "And that's just the way it's going to be from this point on."

Rudolph completed 26 of 36 passes for 273 yards. James Washington had six catches for 117 yards, Chris Lacy caught two touchdown passes and Jalen McCleskey matched a career high with 11 receptions for the Cowboys (6-2, 4-1 Big 12).

"It feels great," Lacy said. "We knew we had a big game coming, and this was a game to go out and make a statement. We wanted to prove that we run the Big 12."

West Virginia's Skyler Howard passed for 212 yards, but he threw two interceptions and lost a fumble for the Mountaineers (6-1, 3-1).

"We just didn't play as good as we have the last couple of weeks," West Virginia coach Dana Holgorsen said. "Maybe we're not as good as we thought we were."

Brody Schmidt/Associated Press

Oklahoma State quarterback Mason Rudolph screams after scoring a touchdown in the third quarter of an NCAA college football game against West Virginia on Saturday in Stillwater, Okla. Rudolph threw for 273 yards in the Cowboys' 37-20 win.

The takeaway

West Virginia: The Mountaineers hadn't played too tough of a schedule, so it was difficult to tell how good they were. West Virginia, which entered the game 10th in the nation in yards per game with 510 yards per game, finished with 421.

"Honestly, they were doing what we thought they were going to do," said West Virginia receiver Daikiel Shorts Jr., who had 8 catches for 82 yards. "We had stuff that was there. They did exactly what we thought they were going to do, we just didn't execute."

Oklahoma State: The Cowboys are known for their explosive offense, but their defense led the way in this one. Three times, the Cowboys forced turnovers and gained possession inside the West Virginia 15-yard line, leading directly to 17 points.

Gundy said the Cowboys showed great discipline on Ramon Richards' 59-yard interception return in the third quarter and Kevin Henry's 26-yard interception return in the fourth.

"We practice the fumble recovery and the interception, blocking in front of the returner, and not blocking below the waist," Gundy said. "The time that we put into it and the players' ability to focus and absorb that information has paid great dividends for us, and today was a great example."

Poll implications

West Virginia: The Mountaineers are looking at a steep drop because they don't have any really strong wins to give them a case to avoid it. They could fall out of the Top 20.

Oklahoma State: The Cowboys could re-enter the rankings. They might already have been in the Top 25 if not for a controversial loss to Central Michigan.

Injury report

Rushel Shell, West Virginia's leading rusher, left the game in the second quarter with an ankle injury and did not return.

No. 13 Midwestern State wallops UTPB

From staff reports

WICHITA FALLS — No. 13-ranked Midwestern State clobbered UTPB, 76-21 during Saturday's Lone Star Conference game at Memorial Stadium.

The Mustangs (7-1, 6-1) raced out to a 49-0 lead with 8:09 remaining until halftime, behind 35 points in the first quarter and 21 points in the second.

Lone Star Conference leading scorer Vincent Johnson scored two rushing touchdowns, including a 51-yard scoring run, within the first seven minutes and Midwestern State never looked back.

Mustangs quarterback Quade Coward and Layton Rabb each tossed a pair of touchdown passes in the rout.

Midwestern State outgained the Falcons, 610-370 in total yardage.

Kameron Mathis completed 19 of 38 passes for 216 yards, two touchdowns and one interception for the Falcons (2-7, 0-7) in a losing effort.

UTPB freshman Jordan Williams rushed 22 times for 94 yards.

The Falcons' schedule doesn't get any easier as it hosts No. 8 Texas A&M-Commerce on Nov. 5 at Ratliff Stadium in Odessa.

FROM STAFF REPORTS

NO. 2 MICHIGAN 32, MICHIGAN STATE 23

EAST LANSING, Mich. — Amara Darboh caught eight passes for a career-high 165 yards, and De'Veon Smith ran for two touchdowns to help No. 2 Michigan beat Michigan State 32-23 on Saturday.

The Wolverines (8-0, 5-0 Big Ten) scored every time they had the ball in the first half, beating the Spartans (2-6, 0-5) for only the second time in the last nine meetings. Michigan avenged last year's loss in which the Spartans scored the winning touchdown on the final play when the Wolverines botched a punt.

Michigan won the Paul Bunyan Trophy for the first time since 2012.

Michigan led 30-10 in the fourth before the Spartans scored a pair of touchdowns, the last of which came with only a second left. Michigan State attempted a 2-point conversion and fumbled, and Jabrill Peppers returned it the other way for a defensive conversion.

Michigan State's LJ Scott rushed for 139 yards and a touchdown.

NO. 5 LOUISVILLE 32, VIRGINIA 25

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — Lamar Jackson floated a 29-yard touchdown pass to Jaylen Smith with 13 seconds left and Louisville survived a frenetic finish.

Jackson's fourth touchdown pass kept the Cardinals (7-1, 5-1 Atlantic Coast Conference) in the College Football Playoff picture, and couldn't have hurt the Heisman Trophy frontrunner's candidacy. Virginia (2-6, 1-3) scored with 1:57 remaining and used a 2-point conversion to take a 25-24 lead.

Jackson did not have one of his best days, getting sacked five times and turning the ball over twice, but on the final drive, he ran for 18 yards, hit Cole Hikutini in traffic for 5 yards on fourth-and-3 and ran twice more for 16 yards before hitting Smith in the end zone.

NO. 24 PENN STATE 62, PURDUE 24

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. — Saquon Barkley ran for 207 yards and two touchdowns, Trace McSorley threw three scoring passes, and Penn State had a 24-point third quarter.

The Nittany Lions (6-2, 4-1 in the Big Ten) converted an interception, a fumbled punt and a failed onside kick into third-quarter touchdowns on their way to a fourth consecutive victory. They snapped a seven-game road losing streak dating to 2014.

Tied at 17 through two quarters, the Nittany Lions outscored Purdue (3-5, 1-4) 24-7 in the third. McSorley threw a 1-yard touchdown pass to Chris Godwin and for 21 yards to Miles Sanders for another.

Barkley padded the lead with 13:56 left on a career-best 81-yard run along the right sideline. It was the longest touchdown run by a Nittany Lion since Larry Johnson's 84-yarder in 2002 against Illinois.

NO. 4 WASHINGTON 31, NO. 17 UTAH 24

SALT LAKE CITY — Dante Pettis returned a punt 58 yards for a touchdown with 3:25 left and Washington held off Utah 3to remain undefeated.

After Utah tied it at 24 with 9:07 left, Washington (8-0, 5-0 Pac-12) pinned the Utes on their own 1 on quarterback Jake Browning's pooch punt. The Utes (7-2, 4-2) went three-and-out and punted to Pettis, who ran parallel toward the far sideline, broke a tackle and outran everyone else.

Browning threw for 186 yards and two touchdowns, and Myles Gaskin ran for 151 and a touchdown.

Utah quarterback Troy Williams threw for 163 yards and two touchdowns, and Joe Williams continued his remarkable post-retirement career with 172 rushing yards and a touchdown.

NO. 8 OHIO STATE 24, NORTHWESTERN 20

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Curtis Samuel had a 3-yard touchdown run with 9:43 left to give Ohio State the lead, and J.T. Barrett converted two key third downs on a game-sealing drive.

After being upset by Penn State last week, the Buckeyes struggled against another multi-touchdown underdog. The Buckeyes (7-1, 4-1 Big Ten) punted on five straight drives in one stretch, but responded to Northwestern tying it at 17 with a touchdown drive, capped by Samuel.

Northwestern (4-4, 3-2) then got to the Ohio State 3, but settled for Jack Mitchell's 33-yard field goal to close to 24-20 with 3:31 left.

Barrett was 21 for 32 for 223 yards, but didn't complete a pass over 19 yards until the fourth quarter. Mike Weber rushed 14 times for 87 yards and two touchdowns.

NO. 14 FLORIDA 24, GEORGIA 10

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — Jordan Scarlett scored for the sixth consecutive game, Antonio Callaway had the first rushing touchdown of his career and Florida used a dominant defensive effort to beat Georgia.

Playing just their second game in four weeks, the Gators won their third straight in the "World's Largest Outdoor Cocktail Party." It was Florida's 21st victory against the Bulldogs in the last 27 years.

The Gators (6-1, 4-1 Southeastern Conference) pressured freshman quarterback Jacob Eason and stuffed Nick Chubb on just about every carry. Georgia (4-4, 2-4) lost for the fourth time in five games.

Florida's Luke Del Rio, coming off a three-interception performance against Missouri, completed 15 of 25 passes for 131 yards and a touchdown.

NO. 11 WISCONSIN 23, NO. 7 NEBRASKA 17, OT

MADISON, Wis. — Dare Ogunbowale scored on an 11-yard run in overtime, and Wisconsin held on to hand Nebraska its first loss of the season.

The Badgers (6-2, 3-2 Big Ten) stopped Nebraska on fourth-and-8 from the 23 after defensive back D'Cota Dixon swatted away a pass to the end zone from Tommy Armstrong Jr. intended for Stanley Morgan Jr.

Dixon's giddy teammates rushed from the sideline to meet the safety in the end zone to celebrate. Tested Wisconsin picked up its third victory over a Top 10 program.

Nebraska (7-1, 4-1) overcame a 10-point deficit in the fourth quarter. Drew Brown's 35-yard field goal with 3:43 left tied it at 17.

WYOMING 30, NO. 13 BOISE STATE 28

LARAMIE, Wyo. — Defensive tackle Chase Appleby sacked Brett Rypien and forced a fumble for a safety with 1:25 left to lift Wyoming past Boise State.

It was Wyoming's first win over the Broncos in 11 games between the two teams. Thousands of fans swarmed the field and the Cowboys' players as the final seconds ticked off.

Josh Allen completed 18 of 31 passes for 274 yards and three touchdowns, and Brian Hill ran for 146 yards for the Cowboys (6-2, 4-0 Mountain West).

Rypien completed 22 of 35 passes for 295 yards, and he also caught a 33-yard TD pass on a trick play for Boise State (7-1, 3-1). Jeremey McNichols ran for 143 yards and two TDs, and Jake Hollister caught six passes for 144 yards and two touchdowns.

NO. 15 AUBURN 40, MISSISSIPPI 29

OXFORD, Miss. — Kamryn Pettway ran for a career-high 236 yards and a touchdown, and Sean White passed for 247 yards for Auburn.

Ole Miss' Chad Kelly threw for a school-record 465 yards, beating Archie Manning's previous mark of 436 yards set in 1969. Kelly also threw three touchdown passes and one interception.

But the Rebels couldn't keep up with Auburn, which finished with 554 total yards. The Tigers once again gave a heavy workload to Pettway, a sophomore who responded by smashing through the Ole Miss defense with his 240-pound body time after time.

Auburn (6-2, 4-1 Southeastern Conference) won its fifth straight, while Ole Miss (3-5, 1-4) lost its third in a row.

NO. 16 OKLAHOMA 58, KANSAS 3

NORMAN, Okla. — Baker Mayfield passed for 236 yards and four touchdowns and Oklahoma overcame a sluggish to take sole possession of first place in the Big 12.

Receiver Dede Westbrook extended his hot streak for the Sooners, scoring on a 71-yard punt return and a 41-yard catch as Oklahoma won its 13th straight Big 12 game.

Losses by West Virginia and Baylor earlier Saturday put Oklahoma (6-2, 5-0) into the lead in the conference. Oklahoma is 5-0 in Big 12 play for the first time since 2004 and for the fourth time ever. On all three previous occasions, Oklahoma went 8-0 in league play, winning titles in 2000 and 2004.

Oklahoma limited Kansas (1-7, 0-5) to 170 yards, the fewest by an opponent this season. Jordan Evans' 33-yard third-quarter interception return for a touchdown meant the Sooners' defense outscored Kansas.

Kansas has lost 17 straight Big 12 games and 39 straight road games overall.

SOUTH CAROLINA 24, NO. 18 TENNESSEE 21

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Jake Bentley two touchdown passes, Rico Dowdle ran for 127 yards and another score, and South Carolina handed Tennessee its third straight loss.

The Gamecocks (4-4, 2-4 Southeastern Conference) had struggled on offense much of the season and were expected to be a comfortable bounce-back win for the powerhouse Vols (5-3, 2-3) after consecutive losses to No. 9 Texas A&M and No. 1 Alabama.

Instead, South Carolina's defense bottled up the Vols most of the game, holding them to 251 yards of offense. Joshua Dobbs threw for only 120 yards and was picked off twice by cornerback Jamarcus King, the final time with 3:50 left in the game and Tennessee needing a dramatic rally.

Eagles, Cowboys head into NFC East showdown

By Schuyler Dixon

Dallas Cowboys quarterback Dak Prescott (4) prepares to throw a pass under pressure from Cincinnati Bengals defensive end Michael Johnson, left, in the second half of an NFL game Oct. 9 in Arlington. Prescott and Philadelphia's No. 2 overall draft pick, Carson Wentz, have looked like anything but newcomers. Wentz leads NFL rookies with eight passing TDs, while Prescott has a passer rating of at least 100 in five straight games, all wins.

ARLINGTON — Trying to explain the quick success for Philadelphia's Carson Wentz and Dallas counterpart Dak Prescott often comes back to the complementary parts behind both rookies.

For Wentz, that means relying on a persistent if not wildly successful running game, and one the NFL's best defenses. For Prescott, it means the league's top rushing attack fueled by fellow rookie Ezekiel Elliott, the NFL's rushing leader with 703 yards, and a dominant offensive line.

If you want to use the term "game manager" for two quarterbacks who protected the ball at the start of their careers better than any first-year players before them, so be it. Their teams are winning, which makes for quite a story line in a key NFC East game Sunday night.

"I obviously don't think it's a negative way to describe any quarterback," said first-year Eagles coach Doug Pederson, a former NFL QB. "If you're efficient throwing the ball, you're not turning the ball over, and you're converting on third downs, then that's a pretty good way to manage the game."

When Wentz and Prescott were trading the rookie record for pass attempts without an interception to start a career, this Eagles-Cowboys meeting was a potential target for the return of Tony Romo, who broke a bone in his back in a preseason game. But Dallas' 10-year starter has been ruled out for the game despite practicing on a limited basis and for the first time since his fourth back injury in less than four years.

So Prescott gets a chance to extend a five-game winning streak that has the Cowboys (5-1) tied with Minnesota for the best record in the NFC.

"It's going to be big because it's the next game," Prescott said. "I'm not going to really put much into it, the rival or the division opponent. It's a game that I want to win. Every game that I play, I'll be the same way and I'll treat it that way."

Things to consider as the Eagles (4-2) go for a fourth straight win at the Cowboys, which would match their longest in the series going back to when Philadelphia won eight straight overall from 1987 to 1991:

Dez returns: Dallas receiver Dez Bryant is expected back after missing three games with a hairline fracture of a bone in his right knee. He said he was ready to play against Green Bay before the bye, but the medical staff opted to give him the extra two weeks of recovery time. The 2014 All-Pro missed seven games last year after breaking his foot in the opener and finished with career lows in catches, yards and touchdowns. He scored his only touchdown this season against Chicago when he returned after injuring the knee. "Seems like forever. Now it's over," Bryant said.

The aggressor: Pederson describes himself as conservative, but his play calling isn't. Pederson has gone on fourth down with the lead — the Eagles are 5 for 5 on fourth down. He took a point off the board last week after a penalty and tried a 2-point conversion — it was successful . Wentz is 3 for 3 for 21 yards on fourth downs and he ran 6 yards on fourth-and-2 against Minnesota.

"I trust our guys and I trust our offensive line and I think it sends a great message to the rest of the team, to the defense and special teams," Pederson said.

Protecting the rookies: The Eagles can trace their success directly to protecting Wentz. He's been sacked four times total in their four victories and eight times combined in the two losses. Not only have the Dallas blockers created huge holes for Elliott, they've allowed the second-fewest sacks of Prescott with nine. Four of those came in one game, a fourth-quarter comeback at Washington that was Prescott's first win .

Secondary shuffle: Eagles Pro Bowl safety Malcolm Jenkins should get more snaps at cornerback because Ron Brooks sustained a season-ending knee injury. Jenkins played more than half his snaps last season in coverage against the slot receiver, so he'll help fill Brooks' role as the nickel cornerback. When Jenkins shifts to cornerback, Jaylen Watkins will take his spot at safety. "I just get bored playing deep sometimes," Jenkins said.

More QB tidbits: Wentz and Prescott are on the verge of breaking the team rookie records for touchdown passes. Wentz will pass Donovan McNabb (eight in 1999) with his next TD pass. Prescott needs two to tie Troy Aikman (nine in 1989). Wentz and Prescott are also 1-2 among rookies in TD passes and passing yards. Wentz has the edge in touchdowns (eight to seven), Prescott the nod in yards (1,486 to 1,324).

Houston's Osweiler looks to bounce back against Lions

Houston Texans tackle Chris Clark (74) sets to block against the Minnesota Vikings during an NFL game Oct. 9 in Minneapolis.

HOUSTON — Houston's Brock Osweiler has been so bad on the road this season that a fan started a Go Fund Me page in a comical attempt to raise money to buy out his $72 million contract.

Criticism of Osweiler and his huge deal have increased with each Houston loss, and his latest lackluster performance in Monday's defeat at Denver spawned countless memes mocking the quarterback.

The good news for Osweiler and the Texans is that they return to Houston this week where they'll look to improve to 5-0 at home when they host the Detroit Lions .

Osweiler hasn't been great in Houston's four home wins, but he has been much better than on the road, with seven of his eight touchdown passes coming in those victories.

Osweiler has struggled to get Houston's passing game going and the Texans rank 30th in the league with 204.3 yards passing a game despite having big-play receivers DeAndre Hopkins and rookie Will Fuller.

Osweiler knows he needs to play better and eliminate mistakes, but also noted that a win on Sunday would leave the team in a pretty good spot at the midway point of the season.

"If we can put ourselves 5-3, 2-0 in the division, first place in the division going into the bye week, everything else is irrelevant," he said.

Though Osweiler has taken much of the blame for Houston's offensive struggles this season, Hopkins was quick to point out that everyone on the offense needs to improve to turn things around.

"Anytime we lose a game, you can't point the fingers at the guy that everybody wants to point the finger at because it's not just him," Hopkins said. "There's 10 other guys on the field that need to help him out, including myself."

They'll try to get back on track against a Detroit team that has won three in a row behind the late-game heroics of quarterback Matthew Stafford to improve to 4-3. Stafford is fourth in the NFL with 15 touchdowns and has thrown just four interceptions.

Stafford deflected credit for the fourth-quarter comebacks to his teammates.

"More than anything, it says a lot about the guys around me and the team I have," he said. "I've been really privileged to play with a lot of really good players. In those situations, you just try to put the ball in position for those guys to go make plays, and I've had guys around me that have made plays."

Some things to know about the Detroit-Houston game.

Miller's health: Houston running back Lamar Miller has been limited in practice this week after taking a shot to his shoulder in the first quarter against Denver, but he is expected to play on Sunday. He has been one of the few bright spots on the offense this season and is fifth in the NFL with 581 yards rushing.

Slay likely out: Detroit's top cornerback Darius Slay will likely miss Sunday's game because of a hamstring injury. Slay sat out the second half last week with the injury and hasn't practiced this week.

If he can't go, it will put more pressure on cornerback Nevin Lawson to make plays. Lions coach Jim Caldwell said Lawson is playing a lot better than he did last season.

"He's been steadily growing and last week he had a really, really good game," Caldwell said. "Played extremely hard, played extremely well, so I like where he's trending."

Run defense woes: Houston is looking to improve its run defense after allowing 190 yards rushing to Denver on Monday.

While Houston's pass defense is among the best in the league, the Texans have had trouble against the run all season and rank 29th by allowing 135.4 yards rushing a game.

"We all have to do a better job," coach Bill O'Brien said. "We've got to coach it better. We've got to get off blocks better. We've got to tackle better. At times, we stop it and it looks pretty good, but it's too inconsistent. We have to do a much better job."

Healthy Clowney: Texans defensive end Jadeveon Clowney continues to play well in his first healthy season after missing significant time in his first two injury-plagued years in the NFL. Clowney has moved to defensive end after playing outside linebacker his first two seasons to fill in for J.J. Watt, who is out for the season with a back injury.

The top overall pick in the 2014 draft has started each game and has 27 tackles and two sacks, and his eight tackles for losses are the most by an NFL defensive end this season. He's improved each week as he's finally seen consistent playing time and has five tackles for losses in the past four games.

against TCU's defense. A month after hurting his shoulder, Mahomes took another hard hit in the second overtime, but said he was OK. The win helped the Red Raiders in their pursuit for a bowl berth, now needing only to split their last four games to get bowl eligible.

TCU: TCU's defense had one of its best games overall, making some changes that surprised Tech. "Our whole thing was make them beat themselves, make them have patience, make them run the ball," Patterson said. But the inconsistency of the offense has to be concerning. The Frogs have been held to 24 points in three consecutive games after scoring at least 33 in their first five.

Indians beat Cubs 7-2, now lead World Series 3-1

By Jay Cohen

Nam Y. Huh/Associated Press

Cleveland Indians' Rajai Davis and Francisco Lindor (12) celebrate after Game 4 of the Major League Baseball World Series against the Chicago Cubs on Saturday in Chicago. The Indians won 7-2 to take a 3-1 lead in the series.

CHICAGO — One more win and baseball fans everywhere might finally believe in these Cleveland Indians.

That's all it will take for Corey Kluber & Co. to clinch this World Series.

Kluber pitched six sparkling innings on short rest for another win, Jason Kipnis hit a three-run homer in his hometown and the Indians beat the Chicago Cubs 7-2 Saturday night to take a 3-1 lead.

Carlos Santana also connected for the first of his three hits as Cleveland moved closer to its first championship since 1948. Trevor Bauer gets the ball Sunday night at Wrigley Field in Game 5 when the Indians try for the franchise's third World Series title against Jon Lester and the faltering Cubs.

"I think we like the position we're in, but the task isn't done yet," Kluber said. "We still have one more game to win, and we're going to show up tomorrow and play with the same sense of urgency we've played with until this point. We don't want to let them build up any momentum and let them get back in the series."

Still, not bad for a team that seemed like an underdog all year long. Manager Terry Francona's club beat the defending champion Royals and star-studded Tigers for the AL Central title, and then eliminated David Ortiz and the Red Sox and the heavy-hitting Blue Jays on their way to the AL pennant.

Then much of the talk centered on the major league-leading Cubs and their 108-year championship drought. But it's been mostly Indians once more as they moved to 10-2 in this postseason. They did it with Francona pushing all the right buttons while he improved to 11-1 in the World Series.

The Indians now will try to bring another crown to Cleveland, adding to the one LeBron James and the Cavaliers earned earlier this year.

Dexter Fowler doubled and scored in the first for the Cubs, and then homered against Andrew Miller in the eighth. Fowler's drive to left-center was the first homer for Chicago in the World Series since Phil Cavaretta connected in Game 1 in 1945 and the first run allowed by Miller during his dominant postseason.

In between Fowler's two hits, the Cubs came up empty every time they had a chance to put any pressure on Cleveland.

The Indians won for the second straight day at Wrigley — those two wins matched the Cubs' entire total of World Series victories in more than a century of playing at their famed ballpark.

Pitching on three days' rest for the second time, Kluber allowed five hits, struck out six and walked one. The steady, stoic right-hander, who struck out nine in a dominant performance in Game 1, improved to 4-1 with a 0.89 ERA in five playoff starts this year.

Francona put Santana at first after starting him in left in Game 3, and Mike Napoli was out of the starting lineup for the time in the playoffs. And just like the rest of October, the decision worked out quite well for Francona and the Indians.

Santana led off the second with a drive to right against John Lackey, tying it at 1. Santana's third homer of the playoffs silenced the crowd of 41,706 at Wrigley Field, and the Indians seized the momentum from there.

Two throwing errors on Cubs third baseman Kris Bryant, including one on Kluber's infield single, led to an unearned run that put Cleveland ahead to stay. Francisco Lindor singled in Kipnis in the third, Lonnie Chisenhall added a sacrifice fly in the sixth and Kipnis' second playoff homer made it 7-1 in the seventh.

Dubnyk gets third straight shutout as Wild beat Stars 4-0

Minnesota Wild goalie Devan Dubnyk (40) stops a point blank shot by Dallas Stars right wing Patrick Eaves (18) during the second period of an NHL game Saturday in St. Paul, Minn. Minnesota Wild center Mikael Granlund, of Finland (64) looks on during the play.

ST. PAUL, Minn. — Devan Dubnyk stopped 29 shots for his third straight shutout and 22nd of his career as the Minnesota Wild beat the Dallas Stars 4-0 Saturday night.

Mikael Granlund, Nino Niederreiter, Eric Staal and Tyler Graovac scored for Minnesota, which improved to 6-2-1.

Dubnyk didn't have to make any spectacular saves in establishing a new personal best scoreless stretch of 180 minutes. The last goal he allowed was in overtime last Saturday.

Kari Lehtonen made 11 saves for Dallas, which has just four goals in its last four games.

A key to the Wild's early-season success has been offensive contributions from all players. Eighteen players have accounted for Minnesota's 32 goals and a league-best 18 now have points.

Granlund added his name to that goal list to give Minnesota a 1-0 lead in the first with the Wild's first short-handed goal of the season.

Off a turnover by Jason Spezza, Mikko Koivu deked John Klingberg with a toe drag in the Dallas zone before centering to Granlund, who tucked the puck behind Lehtonen. Granlund was the only Wild player to appear in all the team's previous eight games without scoring.

Niederreiter gave the Wild a 2-0 lead early in the third with a wrist shot from the far edge of the left circle, before Staal and Graovac scored less than three minutes apart. Graovac's goal was the first of his career.

Jackalopes shut out, swept

From staff reports

ODESSA — The Lone Star Brahmas beat the Odessa Jackalopes 4-0 Saturday at Ector County Coliseum to complete a three-game weekend sweep of Odessa.

Lone Star (13-2-1) scored one goal in both the first and second periods and then added two in the third to pull away.

The Jackalopes (7-9), now on a five-game losing streak, will next take the ice on Nov. 11 when they host the Shreveport Mudbugs at 7:05 p.m.

NBA ROUNDUP

HAWKS 104, 76ERS 72

PHILADELPHIA — Even with Dwight Howard having an off game, Atlanta won easily.

And coach Mike Budenholzer said that's a good sign for the Hawks.

Paul Millsap scored 17 points to lead five Hawks in double figures and Atlanta toppled the Philadelphia 76ers 104-72 on Saturday.

Kyle Korver added 15 points and Mike Muscala added 14 for Atlanta.

The Hawks barely needed top offseason acquisition Howard. The big man had just two points and seven rebounds in his second game for his hometown team after signing a three-year, $70 million free-agent contract this summer. The 31-year-old center had 19 rebounds and 11 points in Atlanta's season-opening 114-99 win over Washington on Thursday.

CELTICS 104 HORNETS 98

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Avery Bradley had 31 points on a career-high eight 3-pointers, and the Boston Celtics defeated the Charlotte Hornets 104-98 Saturday night.

Bradley was 8 of 11 from beyond the arc and had 11 rebounds as the Celtics shot 75 percent from the field in the fourth quarter.

Isaiah Thomas had 24 points and seven assists and Al Horford added 14 points for the Celtics, who trailed by one entering the fourth quarter.

Boston finished 15 of 31 from 3-point range, while the Hornets were just 9 of 32.

Kemba Walker led the Hornets in their home opener with 29 points, while Frank Kaminsky had 11 points and four rebounds in his first regular season action.

BULLS 118, PACERS 101

CHICAGO — Doug McDermott had 23 points, Jimmy Butler added 16 points on 6-of-9 shooting and Rajon Rondo had 13 assists to lead the Bulls to a 118-101 rout of the Indiana Pacers on Saturday night, Chicago's second straight victory to open the season.

McDermott scored 11 points in the fourth quarter as coach Fred Hoiberg gave his veteran starters — Butler, Rondo and Dwyane Wade, who had 14 points — the rest of the night off after the third quarter.

Taj Gibson had 12 points and eight rebounds, and Robin Lopez added 12 points for the Bulls.

Paul George and Myles Turner had 20 points apiece to lead the Pacers (1-2).

The Bulls had a 24-20 lead at the end of the first quarter before breaking things open with a dominant second. They scored 36 points on 14-for-18 (77.8 percent) shooting in the quarter to race out to a 62-41 halftime lead.

CAVALIERS 105, MAGIC 99

CLEVELAND — LeBron James scored 23 points, Kyrie Irving added 20 and the Cleveland Cavaliers beat the Orlando Magic for the 15th straight time, 105-99 on Saturday night.

Kevin Love scored 19 points to help the NBA champion Cavaliers improve to 3-0. They haven't lost to the Magic since Nov. 23, 2012 in Orlando.

Evan Fournier scored 22 points for Orlando. The Magic cut a 22-point deficit to three at 88-85 with 4 minutes to play, but J.R. Smith hit three 3-pointers and scored 11 in the fourth quarter.

Smith made 3-pointers on back-to-back possessions and Cleveland forced a shot-clock violation. James followed with a pair of baskets, including a left-handed finish at the rim.

Serge Ibaka converted a three-point play and hit a free throw, cutting the lead to 98-95 with 45 seconds left, but Smith's 3-pointer from the corner pushed the lead to six.

SPURS 98, PELICANS 79

SAN ANTONIO — Kawhi Leonard had 20 points and the San Antonio Spurs beat the New Orleans Pelicans 98-79 on Saturday night in their home opener.

The Spurs won their first season opener in 20 years without Tim Duncan, who retired in the offseason. San Antonio played without any of its Big Three as Tony Parker and Manu Ginobili both sat out to rest in the first night of back-to-back games.

San Antonio didn't appear to miss them, as 11 players scored to help the team remain unbeaten after three games.

Patty Mills scored 18 points starting in place of Parker, and LaMarcus Aldridge had 12 points.

Pelicans forward Anthony Davis was held to 18 points after scoring 50 and 45 points in the first two games. Aldridge picked up three fouls in the first half as Davis' primary defender, but still managed to hold the 6-foot-10 forward to 6-for-15 shooting in the game.

E'Twaun Moore also had 18 points for New Orleans. The Pelicans are 0-3.

KNICKS 111, GRIZZLIES 104

NEW YORK — Kristaps Porzingis scored 21 points, Carmelo Anthony had 20 and the New York Knicks used a fast start and strong finish to beat the Memphis Grizzlies 111-104 on Saturday night in their home opener.

Derrick Rose, Joakim Noah and Courtney Lee all had impressive moments in their first home games at Madison Square Garden, and Anthony converted the three-point play that sparked the decisive spurt.

Rose had a couple of crossovers and quick bursts into the lane that showed his legs looked healthy and scored 13 points. Noah finished with six points, 10 rebounds and seven assists, and Lee scored 16 points as the Knicks got their first win under coach Jeff Hornacek after falling apart in the second half and getting routed 117-88 by Cleveland in the NBA season opener.

Marc Gasol scored 20 points for the Grizzlies.

BUCKS 110, NETS 108

MILWAUKEE — John Henson's tip-in at the buzzer gave the Milwaukee Bucks a 110-108 victory over the Brooklyn Nets on Saturday night, their first of the season.

Rashad Vaughn scored a career-high 22 points, including six 3-pointers, for Milwaukee. Giannis Antetokounmpo added 21 points and 11 rebounds. He scored all of his points in the paint, including seven dunks.

Vaughn, who surpassed his previous career high of 12, hit consecutive 3-pointers that gave Milwaukee a seven-point lead late in the fourth quarter. But after Matthew Dellavedova missed a driving layup, Bojan Bogdanovic nailed a 3-point to tie the score with 11.6 seconds remaining, setting up Henson's heroics.

Bogdanovic's 26 points led the Nets, who made just 11 of 35 3-point attempts.

Logano back at Martinsville aware of mistakes of last year

By Jenna Fryer
Associated Press

MARTINSVILLE, Va. — Joey Logano was initially unrepentant, insistent he had done nothing wrong in a feud with Matt Kenseth that ultimately cost Logano a chance to win his first Cup championship.

A year later, Logano has a new perspective about the soap opera that fueled the Chase for the Sprint Cup championship. He returns to Martinsville Speedway on Sunday with a maturity about him that could put Logano in position to win that elusive title.

"I learned some valuable lessons last year," Logano said. "I learned a whole new level I didn't even know I had. Now I know how to reach that level mentally inside a racecar to make things happen and be a great leader for my team."

Logano was en route to NASCAR's championship race last year as perhaps the driver to beat for the title. He'd swept the three-race segment of the second round of the Chase, and was dominating at Martinsville, headed toward a win that would have advanced him to the season finale.

Then Kenseth intentionally wrecked Logano as payback for a spat that started during the second round of the playoffs. Logano had already won at Charlotte to secure his spot in the third round, and Kenseth was closing in on a must-win victory at Kansas that would have extended his playoffs.

But Logano, who only had a trophy on the line that day at Kansas, raced Kenseth hard in the closing laps and spun his rival. Kenseth was livid at how hard Logano had raced him. Logano didn't care.

The hard feelings simmered for two more weeks, then with Kenseth out of the playoffs, he exacted his revenge.

Looking back, Logano knows now his shoulder-shrug attitude toward Kenseth flamed the fire. Had he picked up the phone.

Steve Helber/Associated Press

called Kenseth or sent him a text, it might have changed the entire season. Kenseth might have let it go, Logano would have won at Martinsville, maybe would already have a Cup championship.

That's all in the past as the third round of the playoffs begins Sunday at Martinsville, and Logano and Kenseth are both still in play. Logano scored a must-win victory last week at Talladega to advance , while Kenseth used consistency and a play-it-safe strategy at Talladega to ensure Joe Gibbs Racing got all four of its Toyotas into the round of eight.

Logano is the only Ford driver still in the playoffs. He's got to face the entire JGR organization — the team he raced for before they let him go and he was scooped up by Roger Penske — as well as six-time champion Jimmie Johnson, who leads 2014 winner Kevin Harvick and a trio of Chevrolets.

Penske believes Sunday is a critical race, for his driver and his team, in this Chase.

"It's a level playing field. We're satisfied where we are," he said. "I think we need to get through what happened last year at Martinsville and get some good success there so we can move on hopefully to the next round."

Logano, who starts second Sunday, very much wants this do-over. He had a bull's-eye on his back last year, in part because of that three-race sweep in the playoffs, in part because of his supreme confidence. But he had to deliver last week to get to this round, and he's not yet stamped himself as a favorite in this Chase.

"I think we're a little bit more under the radar than we were last year," he said. "We've just got to go out there and fight, do what we know how to do. Don't need to change anything. We've just got to keep the intensity up, keep realizing we like the pressure; I think we're better under pressure. That's kind of our motto this year. I look forward to those moments. I looked forward to this weekend."

Other drivers to watch:

Johnson: His quest to win a record-tying seventh championship begins in earnest at Martinsville. An eight-time Martinsville winner, Johnson failed to make it to the third round of the Chase in the first two years of this format. This is a good round of track for Johnson, who has 23 career top-10s at Martinsville and has won the last four Chase races at Texas.

Denny Hamlin: He squeezed into this round of the Chase on a tiebreaker, but he's a five-time Martinsville winner and feels like his shot at the championship race comes Sunday. "I think every time I come here that anything less than a victory is a disappointment," Hamlin said.

Harvick: A poor qualifying effort has Harvick starting 20th on Sunday. But he has the best average finish among drivers on short tracks this year at 7.0, and he led 72 laps at Martinsville in the spring. No one is very concerned with how Harvick runs on Sunday, though, because he owns Phoenix, where the final four will be decided.

Jeff Gordon: Martinsville is his eighth and final scheduled race as the replacement driver for Dale Earnhardt Jr., and it's presumably the last of his career. He's the defending race winner, and he's been to victory lane at Martinsville nine times in his career. Last year's win was one of the biggest of his career, and Gordon would love one last victory celebration.

Martin Truex Jr: He was the Chase favorite just a few weeks ago after winning two races in the first round of the Chase. Then a blown engine knocked him out of Talladega, and out of the playoffs. Truex responded with a pole-winning run for Martinsville , and he's determined to close out the season with a string of wins to replace his championship disappointment.

Hamilton and Rosberg duel will start 1-2 in Mexico

By Jim Vertuno
Associated Press

MEXICO CITY — Lewis Hamilton kept up the pressure and Nico Rosberg responded on his final lap.

The Mercedes duo will start 1-2 at the Mexican Grand Prix on Sunday after Rosberg rallied from difficult practice sessions to join his teammate at the front of the starting grid.

Hamilton earned pole position Saturday for the second week in a row as he pushes to cut Rosberg's 26-point lead in the driver's championship with just three races left.

"I'm going to try to do the same thing I did last Sunday," Hamilton said of his victory at the U.S. Grand Prix. "The car feels great."

Rosberg's leap into second position came just as the qualifying expired. And it came after three practice sessions when he struggled to match his rival's pace. Late into qualifying, it looked like Rosberg would be locked out of the front row for the first time since Japan in 2015.

Earning the front row start is critical. Even if Hamilton wins, Rosberg's lead is big enough that he can clinch the title by finishing second twice and third once in the final three races of the season. That would match the 1982 season championship won by his father Keke Rosberg .

Rosberg's best lap of was 0.254 seconds slower than Hamilton.

"Lewis' lap was brilliant, not so much mine," Rosberg said. "I put it together in the end though."

Hamilton has been in top form chasing Rosberg of late. His win in Texas kept alive his slim title homes with hopes he can keep pressuring Rosberg into a mistake.

But Rosberg's season has been relatively problem-free, with nine wins so far as Hamilton has been bedeviled by problems. Hamilton had a comfortable late lead in Malaysia when he was knocked out of the race with an engine problem. The defeat handed Rosberg a commanding lead for his first career season championship.

Hamilton also has been dogged by poor starts much of the season: His previous 10 pole positions have resulted in only four victories. Hamilton avoided a similar problem in Texas when he led from start to finish, but Rosberg couldn't resist a jab Saturday to remind him of his struggles from the front.

"As we've seen, pole position isn't everything on Sunday," Rosberg said.

Red Bull's Max Verstappen and Daniel Ricciardo will fill out the second row Sunday, with Force India's Nico Hulkenberg fifth ahead of the Ferrari duo of Kimi Raikkonen and Sebastian Vettel.

The two Mexican drivers, Force India's Sergio Perez and Haas F1's Esteban Gutierrez had disappointing qualifying sessions in front of their cheering home crowd. Perez will start 12th and Gutierrez 17th.

Rosberg dominated the Autodromo Hermanos Rodriguez in 2015, winning an easy race from pole position. Hamilton said he's much more comfortable on the surface and racing in Mexico City's high altitude this year. The 2015 race was Formula One's first at the circuit since 1992.

"Last year we were sliding around a lot," Hamilton said. "Today it feels a lot more like a racetrack."

A Hamilton victory Sunday would be career win No. 51, tying him with Alain Prost for the second-most in Formula One. Michael Schumacher holds the record with 91.

straight year as it finished third with a team score of 92 points during Saturday's Region II-A meet at Angelo State University.

Grady was led by freshman Elijah Perez, who recorded the Wildcats' best time of 18:20.30 to finish seventh.

Garden City is Round Rock-bound for the fourth consecutive year following its third-place showing with 128 points in the girls race.

Garden City junior Kenzie Schaefer ran her team's best of time of 13:53.70, which put her in 18th place overall.

The UIL state meet will be held Nov. 12 at Old Settler's Park in Round Rock.

FORSAN'S CUNNINGHAM QUALIFIES FOR STATE

LUBBOCK — Forsan senior Rhian Cunningham qualified for the UIL state meet by finishing 14th with a time of 13:20.87 during Saturday's girls race of the Region I-2A Cross-Country Championships at Mae Simmons Park.

Cunningham earned an individual berth by being one of the top 10 individual runners not on a qualifying team.

MHS FINISHES 15TH, AND 16TH IN 6A MEET

LUBBOCK — The Midland High boys team finished 15th out of 24 competing teams during Saturday's Region I-6A Cross-Country Championships at Mae Simmons Park.

Cade Michael was MHS' top boys performer as he finished 27th overall (16:15.64). Michael missed out on an individual qualifying berth to the state meet by 13 spots.

The Midland High girls finished 16th out of 24 programs.

Matsuyama keeps 3-shot lead at HSBC Champions

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

SHANGHAI — Hideki Matsuyama left the highlights to everyone else Saturday at the HSBC Champions.

All he cared about was keeping the lead.

In a third round that was dull by the standard Matsuyama had set for himself in making 19 birdies the opening two days at Sheshan International, the Japanese star picked up three of his birdies on the par 5s and rarely got out of position. Bogey-free for the first time all week, he was more than satisfied with a 4-under 68 to keep his three-shot lead going into the final round.

"The first two days, making lots of birdies, it's a lot of fun," Matsuyama said. "But today, when you're in a position to win, playing smart and making no bogeys was very satisfying for me."

Even more satisfying was that only four players were within five shots of his lead.

One of them was defending champion Russell Knox, who had far too much excitement in the middle of the back nine that kept his round together. Knox sandwiched birdies on a pair of tough par 4s around a par on one the third-easiest hole on the course, the par-5 14th. He hit into the water and was headed for a bogey when he made a long putt that kept his momentum and sent him to a 68 to stay three shots behind.

"After hitting in the water on 14, to make a massive putt for par was huge," Knox said. "Those little moments are what add up in a tournament. Could have been a lot worse."

Daniel Berger was another shot behind after quite the adventure over his final hour.

Berger ran off four straight birdies to get within two shots before taking bogey on the par-3 17th. Then he chose to go for the green on the par-5 closing hole, only to block it right into the water. He took his penalty drop, hit a full wedge into 5 feet and escaped with a par for a 67.

"That's what it's been like the last three days," Berger said about his scrambling. "To make bogeys on the last two holes would not be nice going into tomorrow."

Sunday might be no less daunting considering how Matsuyama has been playing — not just this week, but all month.

Matsuyama was at 17-under 199.

Francesco Molinari, who won the HSBC Champions in 2010, shot a 68 and joined Bill Haas (70) at 12-under 204.

Matsuyama finished fifth in the Tour Championship to cap off his most successful season on the PGA Tour, which includes his Phoenix Open playoff victory over Fowler at the start of the year. Two weeks ago, he won the Japan Open, then flew to Malaysia and was runner-up to Justin Thomas in the CIMB Classic.

Starting with his 10-birdie round of 66 to start the HSBC Champions, he has looked like the man to beat all week. No one got closer than two shots of Matsuyama in the third round, though the last hole was important to him. He hit driver down the right side of the fairway, along the edge of the lake, and then powered a 3-wood from 248 yards over the corner of the water to about 25 feet.

His eagle putt turned away at the end, leaving him a tap-in birdie that restored his lead to three shots.

Rory McIlroy tried to make a run and pulled off what he called one of the best short-game shots of his career for an unlikely birdie on the par-5 eighth. After sailing his 3-wood well right of the fairway on a thin patch of muddy grass, McIlroy faced a 50-yard shot over a creek with the pin on that side of the green. He hit a hard, low shot into the bank and it popped onto the green about 15 feet away, and he made the putt.

"One of the best up-and-downs of my career," he said.

That got him within four of the lead, but he began dropping too many shots to keep the momentum. McIlroy needed two late birdies to salvage a 37 on the back nine, and his 70 left him eight shots behind.

The shot of the day came from Matt Kuchar, minus the reward.

He made a hole-in-one on the par-3 17th, with a car perched behind the tee for whoever made an ace. Kuchar happened to read the fine print, however. Because the tee had been moved forward, there was a notice that the car would not be awarded Saturday because insurance only covered a tee shot of 200 yards.

"That was probably one of the saddest hole-in-ones I've ever had," Kuchar said. He shot 68 and was eight behind.

Matsuyama was quite happy to plod along with four birdies and no bogeys, and he wouldn't mind another day of that if it means becoming the first Japanese player to win a World Golf Championship.

"Everyone is so good. I know I'm going to have to make some birdies," he said. "But I think the key for tomorrow's round will be not making any bogeys."

Logano back at Martinsville aware of mistakes of last year

By Jenna Fryer
Associated Press

Steve Helber/Associated Press

Driver Joey Logano, right, talks with Jimmie Johnson prior to practice for Sunday's NASCAR Sprint Cup auto race at Martinsville Speedway on Saturday in Martinsville, Va..

MARTINSVILLE, Va. — Joey Logano was initially unrepentant, insistent he had done nothing wrong in a feud with Matt Kenseth that ultimately cost Logano a chance to win his first Cup championship.

A year later, Logano has a new perspective about the soap opera that fueled the Chase for the Sprint Cup championship. He returns to Martinsville Speedway on Sunday with a maturity about him that could put Logano in position to win that elusive title.

"I learned some valuable lessons last year," Logano said. "I learned a whole new level I didn't even know I had. Now I know how to reach that level mentally inside a racecar to make things happen and be a great leader for my team."

Logano was en route to NASCAR's championship race last year as perhaps the driver to beat for the title. He'd swept the three-race segment of the second round of the Chase, and was dominating at Martinsville, headed toward a win that would have advanced him to the season finale.

Then Kenseth intentionally wrecked Logano as payback for a spat that started during the second round of the playoffs. Logano had already won at Charlotte to secure his spot in the third round, and Kenseth was closing in on a must-win victory at Kansas that would have extended his playoffs.

But Logano, who only had a trophy on the line that day at Kansas, raced Kenseth hard in the closing laps and spun his rival. Kenseth was livid at how hard Logano had raced him. Logano didn't care.

The hard feelings simmered for two more weeks, then with Kenseth out of the playoffs, he exacted his revenge.

Looking back, Logano knows now his shoulder-shrug attitude toward Kenseth flamed the fire. Had he picked up the phone, called Kenseth or sent him a text, it might have changed the entire season. Kenseth might have let it go, Logano would have won at Martinsville, maybe would already have a Cup championship.

That's all in the past as the third round of the playoffs begins Sunday at Martinsville, and Logano and Kenseth are both still in play. Logano scored a must-win victory last week at Talladega to advance , while Kenseth used consistency and a play-it-safe strategy at Talladega to ensure Joe Gibbs Racing got all four of its Toyotas into the round of eight.

Logano is the only Ford driver still in the playoffs. He's got to face the entire JGR organization — the team he raced for before they let him go and he was scooped up by Roger Penske — as well as six-time champion Jimmie Johnson, who leads 2014 winner Kevin Harvick and a trio of Chevrolets.

Penske believes Sunday is a critical race, for his driver and his team, in this Chase.

"It's a level playing field. We're satisfied where we are," he said. "I think we need to get through what happened last year at Martinsville and get some good success there so we can move on hopefully to the next round."

Logano, who starts second Sunday, very much wants this do-over. He had a bull's-eye on his back last year, in part because of that three-race sweep in the playoffs, in part because of his supreme confidence. But he had to deliver last week to get to this round, and he's not yet stamped himself as a favorite in this Chase.

"I think we're a little bit more under the radar than we were last year," he said. "We've just got to go out there and fight, do what we know how to do. Don't need to change anything. We've just got to keep the intensity up, keep realizing we like the pressure; I think we're better under pressure. That's kind of our motto this year. I look forward to those moments. I looked forward to this weekend."

Other drivers to watch:

Johnson: His quest to win a record-tying seventh championship begins in earnest at Martinsville. An eight-time Martinsville winner, Johnson failed to make it to the third round of the Chase in the first two years of this format. This is a good round of track for Johnson, who has 23 career top-10s at Martinsville and has won the last four Chase races at Texas.

Denny Hamlin: He squeezed into this round of the Chase on a tiebreaker, but he's a five-time Martinsville winner and feels like his shot at the championship race comes Sunday. "I think every time I come here that anything less than a victory is a disappointment," Hamlin said.

Harvick: A poor qualifying effort has Harvick starting 20th on Sunday. But he has the best average finish among drivers on short tracks this year at 7.0, and he led 72 laps at Martinsville in the spring. No one is very concerned with how Harvick runs on Sunday, though, because he owns Phoenix, where the final four will be decided.

Jeff Gordon: Martinsville is his eighth and final scheduled race as the replacement driver for Dale Earnhardt Jr., and it's presumably the last of his career. He's the defending race winner, and he's been to victory lane at Martinsville nine times in his career. Last year's win was one of the biggest of his career, and Gordon would love one last victory celebration.

Martin Truex Jr: He was the Chase favorite just a few weeks ago after winning two races in the first round of the Chase. Then a blown engine knocked him out of Talladega, and out of the playoffs. Truex responded with a pole-winning run for Martinsville , and he's determined to close out the season with a string of wins to replace his championship disappointment.

Hamilton and Rosberg duel will start 1-2 in Mexico

By Jim Vertuno
Associated Press

MEXICO CITY — Lewis Hamilton kept up the pressure and Nico Rosberg responded on his final lap.

The Mercedes duo will start 1-2 at the Mexican Grand Prix on Sunday after Rosberg rallied from difficult practice sessions to join his teammate at the front of the starting grid.

Hamilton earned pole position Saturday for the second week in a row as he pushes to cut Rosberg's 26-point lead in the driver's championship with just three races left.

"I'm going to try to do the same thing I did last Sunday," Hamilton said of his victory at the U.S. Grand Prix. "The car feels great."

Rosberg's leap into second position came just as the qualifying expired. And it came after three practice sessions when he struggled to match his rival's pace. Late into qualifying, it looked like Rosberg would be locked out of the front row for the first time since Japan in 2015.

Earning the front row start is critical. Even if Hamilton wins, Rosberg's lead is big enough that he can clinch the title by finishing second twice and third once in the final three races of the season. That would match the 1982 season championship won by his father Keke Rosberg .

Rosberg's best lap of was 0.254 seconds slower than Hamilton.

"Lewis' lap was brilliant, not so much mine," Rosberg said. "I put it together in the end though."

Hamilton has been in top form chasing Rosberg of late. His win in Texas kept alive his slim title homes with hopes he can keep pressuring Rosberg into a mistake.

But Rosberg's season has been relatively problem-free, with nine wins so far as Hamilton has been bedeviled by problems. Hamilton had a comfortable late lead in Malaysia when he was knocked out of the race with an engine problem. The defeat handed Rosberg a commanding lead for his first career season championship.

Hamilton also has been dogged by poor starts much of the season: His previous 10 pole positions have resulted in only four victories. Hamilton avoided a similar problem in Texas when he led from start to finish, but Rosberg couldn't resist a jab Saturday to remind him of his struggles from the front.

"As we've seen, pole position isn't everything on Sunday," Rosberg said.

Red Bull's Max Verstappen and Daniel Ricciardo will fill out the second row Sunday, with Force India's Nico Hulkenberg fifth ahead of the Ferrari duo of Kimi Raikkonen and Sebastian Vettel.

The two Mexican drivers, Force India's Sergio Perez and Haas F1's Esteban Gutierrez had disappointing qualifying sessions in front of their cheering home crowd. Perez will start 12th and Gutierrez 17th.

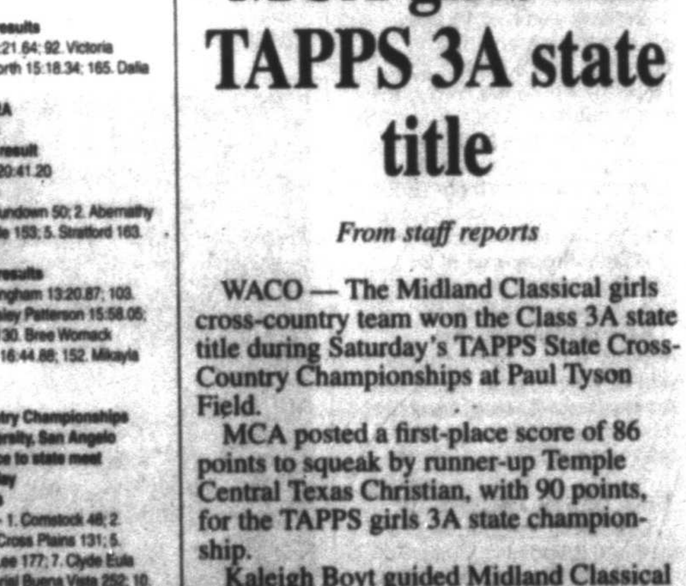

Rosberg dominated the Autodromo Hermanos Rodriguez in 2015, winning an easy race from pole position. Hamilton said he's much more comfortable on the surface and racing in Mexico City's high altitude this year. The 2015 race was Formula One's first at the circuit since 1992.

"Last year we were sliding around a lot," Hamilton said. "Today it feels a lot more like a racetrack."

A Hamilton victory Sunday would be career win No. 51, tying him with Alain Prost for the second-most in Formula One. Michael Schumacher holds the record with 91.

straight year as it finished third with a team score of 92 points during Saturday's Region II-A meet at Angelo State University.

Grady was led by freshman Elijah Perez, who recorded the Wildcats' best time of 18:20.30 to finish seventh.

Garden City is Round Rock-bound for the fourth consecutive year following its third-place showing with 128 points in the girls race.

Garden City junior Kenzie Schaefer ran her team's best of time of 13:53.70, which put her in 16th place overall.

The UIL state meet will be held Nov. 12 at Old Settler's Park in Round Rock.

FORSAN'S CUNNINGHAM QUALIFIES FOR STATE

LUBBOCK — Forsan senior Rhian Cunningham qualified for the UIL state meet by finishing 14th with a time of 13:20.87 during Saturday's girls race of the Region I-2A Cross-Country Championships at Mae Simmons Park.

Cunningham earned an individual berth by being one of the top 10 individual runners not on a qualifying team.

MHS FINISHES 15TH, AND 16TH IN 6A MEET

LUBBOCK — The Midland High boys team finished 15th out of 24 competing teams during Saturday's Region I-6A Cross-Country Championships at Mae Simmons Park.

Cade Michael was MHS' top boys performer as he finished 27th overall (16:15.64). Michael missed out on an individual qualifying berth to the state meet by 13 spots.

The Midland High girls finished 16th out of 24 programs.

Matsuyama keeps 3-shot lead at HSBC Champions

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

SHANGHAI — Hideki Matsuyama left the highlights to everyone else Saturday at the HSBC Champions.

All he cared about was keeping the lead.

In a third round that was dull by the standard Matsuyama had set for himself in making 19 birdies the opening two days at Sheshan International, the Japanese star picked up three of his birdies on the par 5s and rarely got out of position. Bogey-free for the first time all week, he was more than satisfied with a 4-under 68 to keep his three-shot lead going into the final round.

"The first two days, making lots of birdies, it's a lot of fun," Matsuyama said. "But today, when you're in a position to win, playing smart and making no bogeys was very satisfying for me."

Even more satisfying was that only four players were within five shots of his lead.

One of them was defending champion Russell Knox, who had far too much excitement in the middle of the back nine that kept his round together. Knox sandwiched birdies on a pair of tough par 4s around a par on one the third-easiest hole on the course, the par-5 14th. He hit into the water and was headed for a bogey when he made a long putt that kept his momentum and sent him to a 68 to stay three shots behind.

"After hitting in the water on 14, to make a massive putt for par was huge," Knox said. "Those little moments are what add up in a tournament. Could have been a lot worse."

Daniel Berger was another shot behind after quite the adventure over his final hour.

Berger ran off four straight birdies to get within two shots before taking bogey on the par-3 17th. Then he chose to go for the green on the par-5 closing hole, only to block it right into the water. He took his penalty drop, hit a full wedge into 5 feet and escaped with a par for a 67.

"That's what it's been like the last three days," Berger said about his scrambling. "To make bogeys on the last two holes would not be nice going into tomorrow."

Sunday might be no less daunting considering how Matsuyama has been playing — not just this week, but all month.

Matsuyama was at 17-under 199.

Francesco Molinari, who won the HSBC Champions in 2010, shot a 68 and joined Bill Haas (70) at 12-under 204.

Matsuyama finished fifth in the Tour Championship to cap off his most successful season on the PGA Tour, which includes his Phoenix Open playoff victory over Fowler at the start of the year. Two weeks ago, he won the Japan Open, then flew to Malaysia and was runner-up to Justin Thomas in the CIMB Classic.

Starting with his 10-birdie round of 66 to start the HSBC Champions, he has looked like the man to beat all week. No one got closer than two shots of Matsuyama in the third round, though the last hole was important to him. He hit driver down the right side of the fairway, along the edge of the lake, and then powered a 3-wood from 248 yards over the corner of the water to about 25 feet.

His eagle putt turned away at the end, leaving him a tap-in birdie that restored his lead to three shots.

Rory McIlroy tried to make a run and pulled off what he called one of the best short-game shots of his career for an unlikely birdie on the par-5 eighth. After sailing his 3-wood well right of the fairway on a thin patch of muddy grass, McIlroy faced a 50-yard shot over a creek with the pin on that side of the green. He hit a hard, low shot into the bank and it popped onto the green about 15 feet away, and he made the putt.

"One of the best up-and-downs of my career," he said.

That got him within four of the lead, but he began dropping too many shots to keep the momentum. McIlroy needed two late birdies to salvage a 37 on the back nine, and his 70 left him eight shots behind.

The shot of the day came from Matt Kuchar, minus the reward.

He made a hole-in-one on the par-3 17th, with a car perched behind the tee for whoever made an ace. Kuchar happened to read the fine print, however. Because the tee had been moved forward, there was a notice that the car would not be awarded Saturday because insurance only covered a tee shot of 200 yards.

"That was probably one of the saddest hole-in-ones I've ever had," Kuchar said. He shot 68 and was eight behind.

Matsuyama was quite happy to plod along with four birdies and no bogeys, and he wouldn't mind another day of that if it means becoming the first Japanese player to win a World Golf Championship.

"Everyone is so good. I know I'm going to have to make some birdies," he said. "But I think the key for tomorrow's round will be not making any bogeys."

Construction Manager

The real estate industry is finally on the rebound, improving the career outlook for professionals in the construction industry.

© FOTOLIA

One role within this sector is that of the construction manager, a professional who can oversee work on both residential and commercial projects ranging from new construction to remodeling jobs.

Here's what a construction manager does on a daily basis, according to a collection of job descriptions found on the career services website Indeed.com:

- Organize, coordinate and lead crew members in line with project specifications;
- Work on site to assess and improve crew performance;
- Ensure health and safety of all personnel, subcontractors and vendors;
- Work with specialized GPS equipment and other technical tools; and
- Collaborate with upper management to develop, analyze and monitor project budgets.

SALARY AND OUTLOOK

According to the Occupational Outlook Handbook reported by the United States Department of Labor, the median pay for a Construction Manager is about $82,000 per year.

The department's last in-depth look into the profession came in 2012, when it was projected to grow 16 percent by 2022 — faster than the average industry in the United States.

The professionals best equipped to land construction management jobs have a bachelor's degree in construction science, construction management or civil engineering, according to the outlook handbook.

KEY TRAITS

Given the amount of people a construction manager oversees, the ability to get along with all levels of leadership is critical.

One minute you may be dealing with a general laborer on a roofing project. The next you could be talking to a client, updating them on the status of the project. In the very next, you might be in a meeting with a company executive covering how your budget and labor hours look compared to the pre-determined project plan.

Being able to navigate all of these relationships requires collaborative communication skills and a strength in building positive relationships.

Going Freelance

More than half of the workforce is expected to be freelance by 2020, according to a recent Gallup poll.

© FOTOLIA

A growing desire to build a business or simply escape the corporate grind has many trading in their office computers and mahogany desks for their laptops and home offices.

But is going freelance really feasible? Can you make a great living and still enjoy all the benefits of being your own boss? The numbers say yes.

THE COMPANY PERSPECTIVE

A freelancer can be categorized into a few segments: the business owner, the independent contractor and the consultant. Companies are hiring these professionals because they are specialized in their crafts.

They also are hiring them because they are cheaper. Let's say a consumer goods company needs a graphic designer to create an exciting new product campaign. The job will take about four weeks to complete and will include the design of print materials, a website and a billboard.

Instead of hiring a full-time graphic designer with a salary, health insurance and retirement, companies are looking to independent contractors to complete the work.

Why? Because they don't require the salary, health insurance or retirement. They pay for that themselves. Companies also save money by only paying for the hours they agree to in the project contract.

Freelancers are easy to find with online talent websites or advertisements through social media or your local newspaper. And as they numbers show, they will only become easier to find in the future.

THE FREELANCER PERSPECTIVE

Freelance work comes with a new prestige that didn't exist in years past. According to a study by the Freelancer's Union based in New York, freelancers are seeing major gains in their available projects and are excited about their futures.

Some of the study's major findings include:

- Twice as many freelancers have seen an increase in demand in the past year as have seen a decrease
- Sixty-five percent of freelancers said their line of work is a career path that is more respected today than it was even three years ago.
- Thirty-eight percent of freelancers expect their hours to increase in the next year.

Real Estate Tips and Advice

Consider Solar Panels

Especially in sunny states such as California and Florida, solar contractors are completing an unprecedented number of projects on residential homes. The benefits of equipping your home with solar panels and systems are vast, including their positive impact on the environment and your overall heating and air savings.

Installing a solar system on your home may be more affordable than you think. Material costs have dropped as technology has caught up with the idea. Also, many contractors offer do-it-yourself services that allow a homeowner to take care of the heavy lifting, such as digging trenches. In return, customers can expect a smaller bill for the total project.

Reach out to your local solar contractor today to learn your options. Most systems pay for themselves in a matter of years when you consider the savings they bring to your electric bill.

Statistics

The Solar Energy Industries Association reports that the costs of installing solar on a home has dropped by 40 percent since 2010. This is welcome news for homeowners looking to install solar without breaking the bank.

Homeowners are taking advantage of the price drops. Through the first six months of 2015, a new solar project was installed every two minutes in homes and businesses, according to SEIA.

This drop in costs is good for customers and workers. That's because as more homeowners have the means to afford solar technology, more jobs will be needed to fill the demand. The solar power industry is one with great potential for everyone involved.

Costs

When trying to determine if installing solar panels is a good fit for you, consider the price of installation and maintenance versus the overall savings you will receive on your energy bills. Talk with your local solar contractor about how to estimate the savings and incorporate that number into your calculation.

These costs will vary per location and will depend on the different aspects of the system and available sunlight. That's why a local expert should be your go-to resource for this scale of project.

Local, state and federal programs and incentives can help make a solar system more affordable, and the cost reductions don't look to be slowing anytime soon. According to the government energy website, federal tax credits are available for solar energy systems through 2021.

SHOE BAR RANCH
25,572 Deeded Acres+/-
Ector County, Texas

The Shoe Bar Ranch is located approx. 15 air miles southwest of Odessa, Texas at Penwell. This ranch has been under the same family ownership since the 1920's. This quality Permian Basin ranch is all native pasture and is in good condition. The ranch has been rested with no livestock for approximately two years. Livestock water is primarily provided by eight taps on the CRMWD water line, two windmills and one submersible. Structural improvements include a two bedroom/two bath brick home, a bunkhouse, a shop building, pipe shipping pens and two sets of working pens. Oil production is mostly concentrated in the southeast portion. The majority of the ranch is free of oil field activity, which could possibly present future opportunities for the collection of surface damage income. Trophy quality mule deer and an abundance of quail are found on the ranch. Seldom does a ranch of this size, mostly free of oil field activity, come on for sale in close proximity to Midland/Odessa. The Shoe Bar Ranch is reasonably priced at $350 per acre.

Address Storage Space With Your Agent

Many of us are collectors, some of big articles and some of many different small things. The saying "One man's junk is another man's treasure" probably didn't come about because of a neatnik who never has anything out of place. But, more likely, was coined by some creative being who believed that he could make something out of nothing or who rescued a forgotten or forlorn object from the trash can and now everybody says how great it looks. Some of us are just like that! However, few of us have the storage space for our collections. If you happen to be a collector and are house hunting, keep in mind where you will put all those treasures. If you need wall space for a big china cabinet, or a place to hang that moose head, write it down on your wish list before you go looking. If you have yards and yards of fabric that you are sure you will sew up someday, look for a sewing room with a closet large enough for your "lifetime" supply. If you collect cookbooks, storage space near the kitchen would be nice and would encourage you to use those wonderful recipes. If you find a home you love that doesn't have space for your collectables, check into the possibility of adding cabinets or shelves or whatever type of storage you require. On the other hand, one of the reasons people like to travel is to stay in that sleek clean motel room without any clutter to worry about. Perhaps your home would keep that new feeling and stay neat and clean longer if you could bring yourself to part with at least some of the junk-oh I mean treasures! Be sure to clue your Realtor about your storage concerns, they may live with collectables too!

Costly Mistakes Sellers Make

There are always appropriate steps to investing in real estate. However, there are also inappropriate steps sellers can walk down when it comes time to put their house on the market. Work closely with your real estate professional to help avoid these cost mistakes:

• Mistake 1: Putting the home on the market before it is ready. Most times this happens because the seller gets impatient or is a procrastinator and has pushed himself up against a moving deadline without getting the pre-sale work done. So it comes on the market with the horrible carpet (that gets replaced during the marketing of the home);or they are painting it while it goes on the market. Presentation is everything -- so get the work done before marketing the property.

• Mistake 2: Over improving the home for the neighborhood. This happens with additions, bump outs, and upgrades that make the home stick out from among its competitors so much that it is an anomaly, instead of a nice addition to the community.

• Mistake 3: Pricing the home based on what the seller wants to net. This pricing strategy always ends in failure. Sellers can control the "asking" price, but they do not control the "sale" price. The market does. It does not matter what the seller wants, the price is determined by the black-and-white, matter-of-fact reality of the market.

• Mistake 4: Getting emotionally involved in the sale of the home. This is one of the biggest challenges home sellers face when putting their house on the market. Once you decide to sell your house, it is no longer a home, but a commodity. It needs to be prepared as a commodity, marketed as a commodity, and priced as a commodity. It does not matter what you "want," only what the market can bear on pricing. People are going to come in to kick the tires, so to speak, and you can not get emotional about how they may or may not appreciate the nuances of your home of seven years.

• Mistake 5: Trying to cover up problems, or not disclosing them. Most states have a property disclosure/disclaimer form -- use it wisely. Just because you disclaim does not mean you cannot be sued later for the leaky basement, or dilapidated heating/air system that is discovered 30 days after settlement.

• Mistake 6: Not getting your ducks in a row before trying to sell. This would involve financing, reading the fine print on your current mortgage to ensure no prepayment penalties, not listening to the particulars of your local market, etc. If your local market is dictating lower home prices, then lower it early, not later -- it will cost you more. If the local market dictates selling your home first, then buying second, do it in that order, or vice versa.

Avoiding these mistakes is not that difficult. There are plenty of resources out there and your real estate professional can help you step over the pitfalls. Do the research early, and listen to all the professionals (finance, real estate, insurance) who bring their expertise to the table and help you avoid costly mistakes in the process ❖

H-E-B's Feast of Sharing is a feat for organizers

By Rich Lopez
jrlopez@mrt.com

Supermarket chain H-E-B has hosted Feast of Sharing around the state for the past 13 years in an effort to battle hunger and foster community. The 14th annual feast kicks off Friday in Midland at the Horseshoe Pavilion. The 23-city tour will conclude on Christmas Eve in Corpus Christi.

Organizer Danny Flores and his team have been planning this year's event since the 2015 tour concluded.

"In order to do a dinner at this capacity, we have to start planning from that time," he said from H-E-B headquarters in San Antonio.

Flores, senior public affairs manager, has been the driving force behind Feast of Sharing since its inception. He has been with the chain for 21 years, and began as a driver for FOS events. While he may have the planning down to a science, it's nevertheless a monumental task.

With a caravan of trucks including a mobile kitchen, a refrigerated trailer and storage trailer, his team will begin making their way to Midland starting Wednesday to prepare a turkey dinner for 8,000 to 10,000 people.

"We'll bring in all the food and resources and our cooking crew for that many people, which could depend on who is playing football that night," he said with a laugh.

Although each city varies, the team will start with a base service for 5,000 people as they did in Big Spring last year for that community's first event. They also will have food in reserve, but then Flores can gauge what's needed for future events.

With a seven-man cooking crew, the Midland meal will begin taking shape on Thursday in the mobile kitchen trailer.

"That's when we'll start preparing the fixings, slicing the turkey and put the tables on the floor and get the pies ready," Flores said.

The kitchen will then be ready to provide the hot meals at a rate of 6,200 an hour. Table decorations and audio-visual equipment is also prepared the day before.

Of course, he does it with a bit of help.

In each stop, Feast of Sharing will work with the area stores. Flores has worked with Bob Murphy, manager of the Wadley Avenue H-E-B, since the beginning. Feast of Sharing also works with volunteers from area nonprofits.

"We have a lot of great community volunteers who help us plan it and gather workers," area coordinator Nancy Wells said. "We have several good partnerships with all the organizations involved."

Flores said there is one crucial part to having the event run smoothly.

"Our public affairs team keeps everything ticking, but the key is having a really good dishwasher," he said. "We're washing dishes as soon as they come in and when it's over."

Like a band or circus, Flores and his team has to pack it all up and head to the next city.

"We'll also start planning next year's. It's a year-round working plan to make the logistics work," he said.

Regardless of the time and stress of putting together Feast of Sharing and then serving up to 10,000 people, Flores delights in the bigger meaning of it all.

"What's most important is that everyone is coming in and enjoying the dinner. It's special when someone says 'thank you' to us. That's coming from the community, which makes it even more special."

He adds that H-E-B wants Feast of Sharing to show what it is to be a community and have people come together. If they can lighten the load by cooking a hot meal, while people talk with each other, then Flores and his team have done their job.

Like every holiday meal, there are leftovers, but that's taken care of as well.

"Any meals or products that remain, we'll turn those over to make sure that they get to someone who can use it. So we work with the West Texas Food Bank on that. They'll provide the hot meals to someone either that night or the next morning," he said.

Beyond the free meal, courtesy of H-E-B, the event features local entertainment and activities for children. Santa Claus is even expected to be there.

Flores offers some simple advice for those experiencing their first Feast of Sharing.

"Bring family and come hungry," he said. "Our volunteers will show guests their seats and serve a turkey dinner. It's our way of giving back. There's no hidden agenda, no questions. This is our thank you to the community."

GISD INTERACT CLUB

Greenwood High School's Interact Club (a Midland Rotary Club-sponsored youth organization) gathered at Hogan Park recently for a demonstration and participation in setting up and taking down the contents of a ShelterBox. About 40 students took part in learning how the disaster relief tent — the heart of ShelterBox, according to its website — is pitched and taken down.

ShelterBox disaster relief support is sponsored members of Midland's four Rotary Clubs. The students also learned about other contents of the box, including thermal blankets, sheets, water storage and purification equipment, solar lamps, cooking utensils, tool kit, mosquito nets and a children's activity pack. Marla Barbee of Midland North Rotary Club and a ShelterBox ambassador talked about the international organization and how it helps people worldwide who survive natural disasters such as hurricanes, earthquakes and tsunamis.

After the tent was taken down and the supplies were packed up, the students and Rotarians had pizza and soft drinks.

MIDLAND QUILTERS GUILD

The Midland Quilters Guild last month hosted a two-day workshop featuring Katie Fowler, an art quilter and creativity coach from Denver. Fowler discussed painting fabric for quilting purposes and gave a lecture, "Creative Wonderland: The Importance of the Looking Glass and the Rabbit Hole."

Workshop attendees included Pat Connally, Gloria Carrier, Dean Deerfield, Barbara Ditto, Muff Fregia, Jean Grimes, Ann Hicks, Kathy Lupardus, Jean Pittman, June Swift, Zoe Swift, Pam Thompson and Jan Wiese. Some participants even traveled from Lubbock for the event, which was partially funded by the Arts Council of Midland and Texas Commission on the Arts.

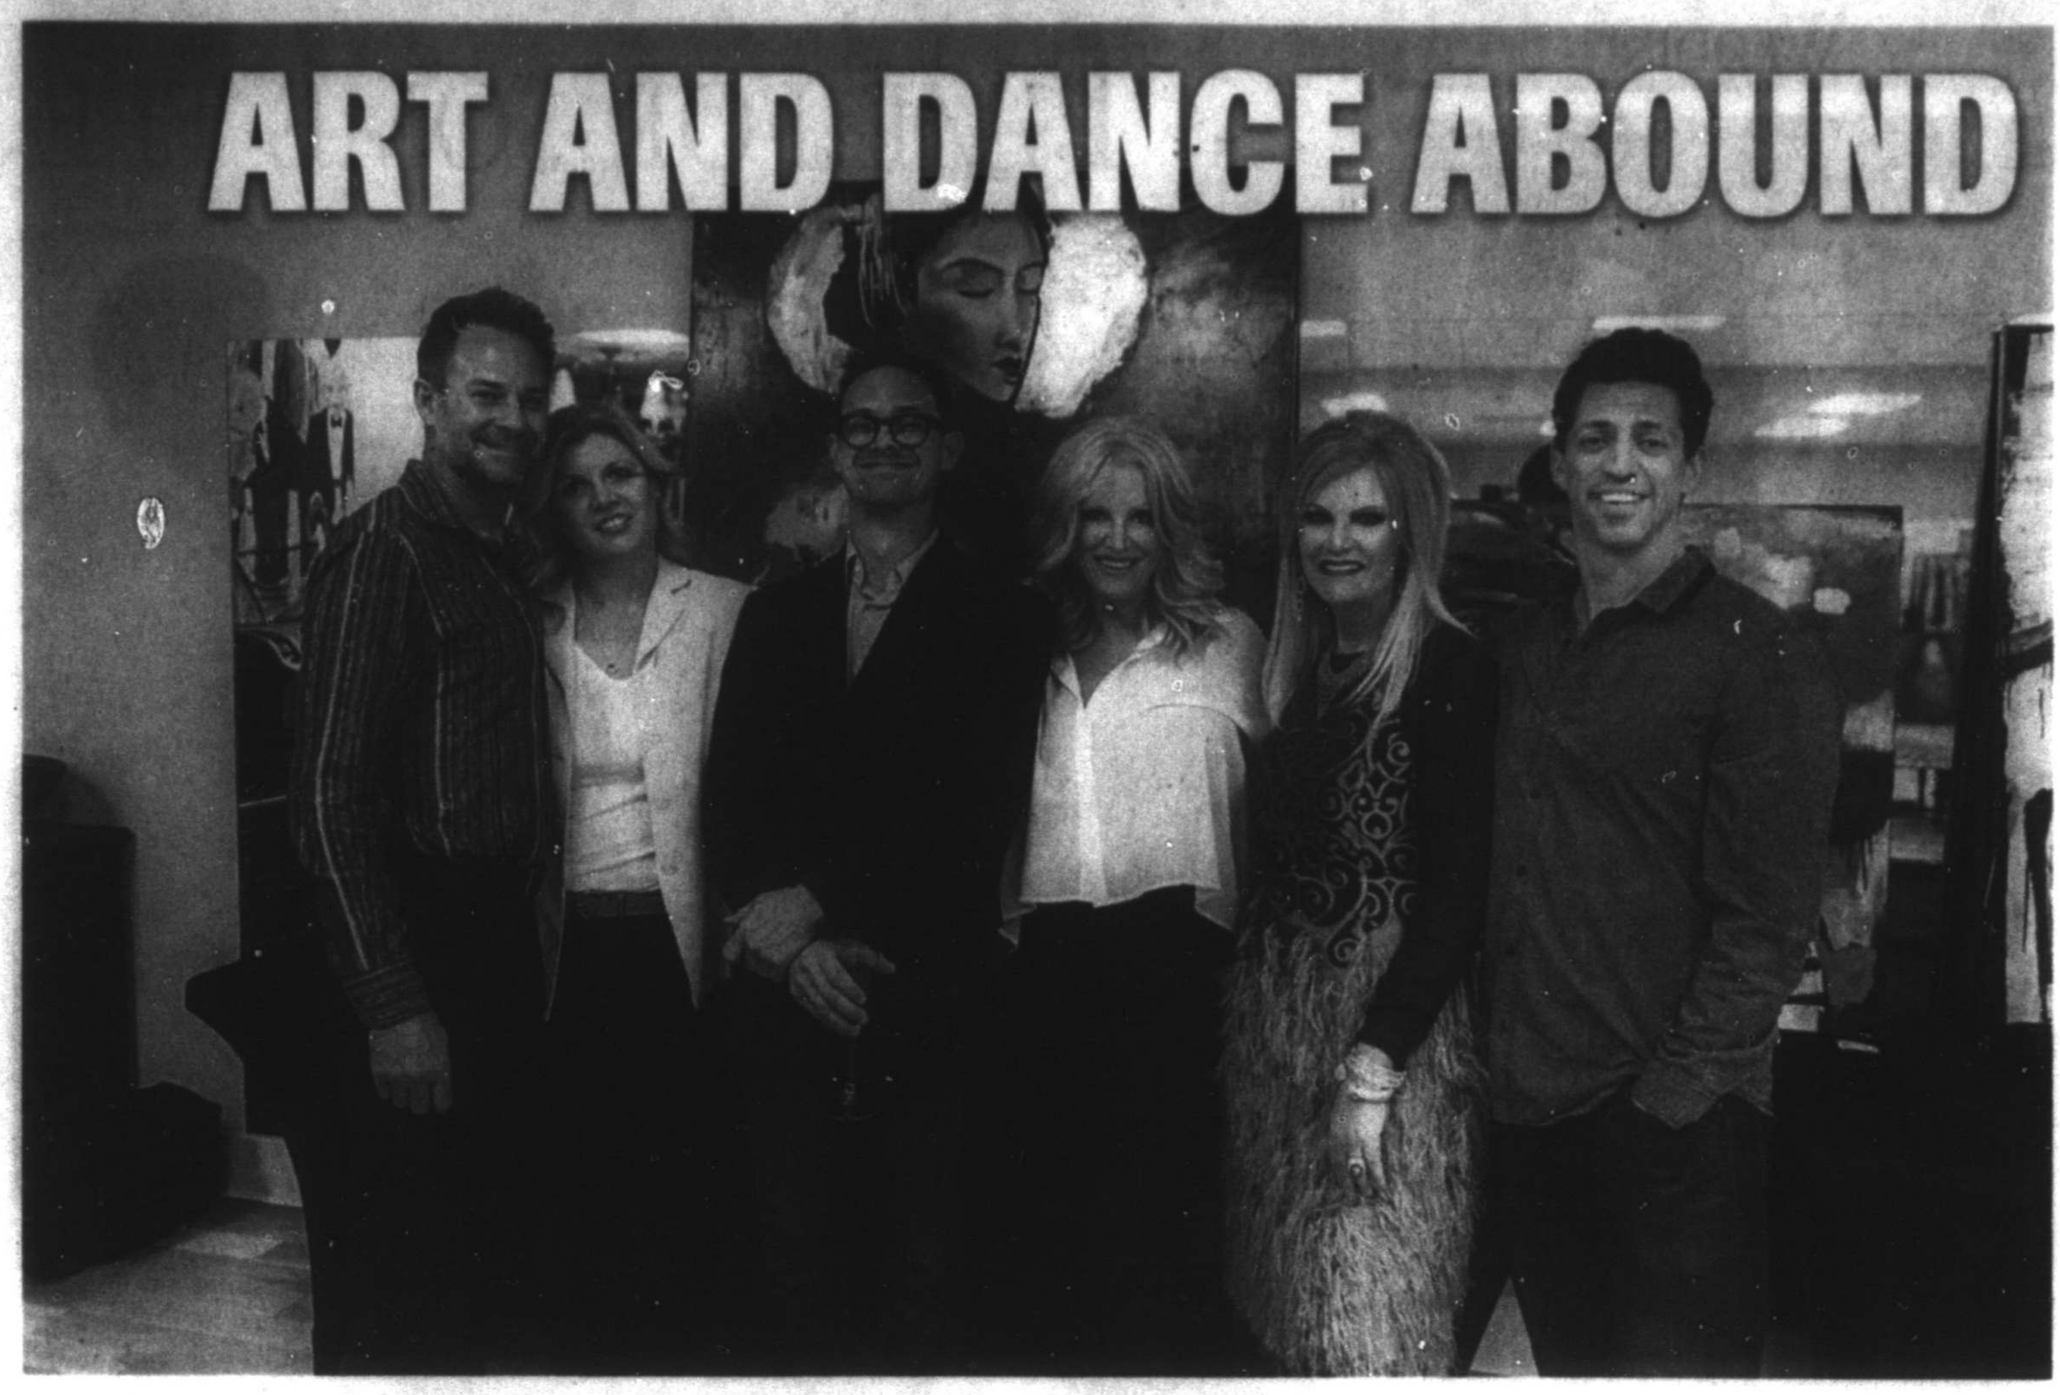

The guild has been making quilts for children admitted to the Barbara Bush Pediatric Intensive Care Unit in Portland, Maine. The project was started by members Pat Connally, Wanda Doehne, Carolyn Hillis, Becky Holley and Miriam Prude.

The group also makes quilts for cancer patients at Texas Oncology at the Allison Cancer Center, Midland's Habitat For Humanity and for veterans and service members through Quilts of Valor.

WEDDING

Tennant - Starnes

Miss Mary Elizabeth Tennant and Mr. Robert Noble Starnes were united in marriage on Saturday, October 15, 2016 at six o'clock in the evening on the front lawn at The Forest Club in Houston, Texas. The ceremony was officiated by Pastor Steve Schorr of Midland, Texas' First Presbyterian church. Scripture readings were delivered by Cameron Salehi Kelly, dear friend of the bride and groom. Following the ceremony, the bride's parents hosted a reception at The Forest Club. On the eve of the wedding, the parents of the groom hosted a Rehearsal Dinner at Carrabba's on Kirby.

The bride is the daughter of Ms. Tina Henderson Tennant and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Houston Foster Tennant of Houston, Texas. She is the granddaughter of the late Mr. Joseph Allen Tennant of Houston, Texas, the late Mrs. Elizabeth Foster Tennant of Fort Worth, Texas, and the late Mrs. Mary Ann Reeves Henderson of Houston, Texas. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Mac Aubrey Starnes of Midland, Texas. He is the grandson of the late Mr. and Mrs. Robert Flay Starnes of Lindale, Texas and the late Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Gale Noble of Colorado City, Texas.

Presented in marriage by her parents, and escorted by her father, the bride wore a couture gown designed by Carolina Herrera of New York. The ivory gown of silk mikado featured a beautiful deep V-neck with a fitted waistline. The full A-line skirt and buttons down the back fell into a soft circular chapel train. To complement the gown, the bride wore an ivory long cathedral veil with re-embroidered lace along the edge designed by Toni Federici. The bride carried a fragrant bouquet of cream majolicas and seeded eucalyptus wrapped in jade green silk ribbon.

Kendall Elaine Broussard served as maid of honor. Jessica Carameros Rensimer served as matron of honor. The bridesmaids were Currie Miller Rice, Kellen Shults Sandoz, Rebecca Putterman Silberman, Lauren Clark Snyder, Leanne Lazar St. Clair, Aubrey Raylee Hollis Starnes, sister of the groom, and Kathryn Anne Wolitarsky. The bridesmaids wore a variety of powder blue and light grey floor length gowns. Jessie Schimpff Capt, Sarahbeth Sharp Pipkin, and Catherine Eleni Elisabeth Tennant, sister-in-law of the bride, served as the house party. Sadie Katherine Jackson served as flower girl.

Serving as best man was Spencer McFadden Starnes, brother of the groom. The groomsmen were Ryan Paul Allen, Blake McFarlane Bonner, Junior, Kevin Michael Blonkvist, Junior, William Wright Drummond, John Wood Foster, III, Steven Alan Goudeau, Matthew James Guisinger, Harrison Greer Reese, Tyler Wesley Smith, Borden Hamilton Tennant, brother of the bride, and Austin Gene Wallace.

Mary is a 2004 graduate of Memorial High School and a 2008 graduate from Texas Tech University where she earned a BBA in Marketing and a graduate of the University of Saint Thomas where she earned a MBA in Finance. Noble is a 2004 graduate of Trinity School of Midland and a 2008 graduate from Texas Christian University where he earned a BBA in Finance. Mary moved to Midland in 2016 and currently works for Concho Resources. Noble works for BC Operating.

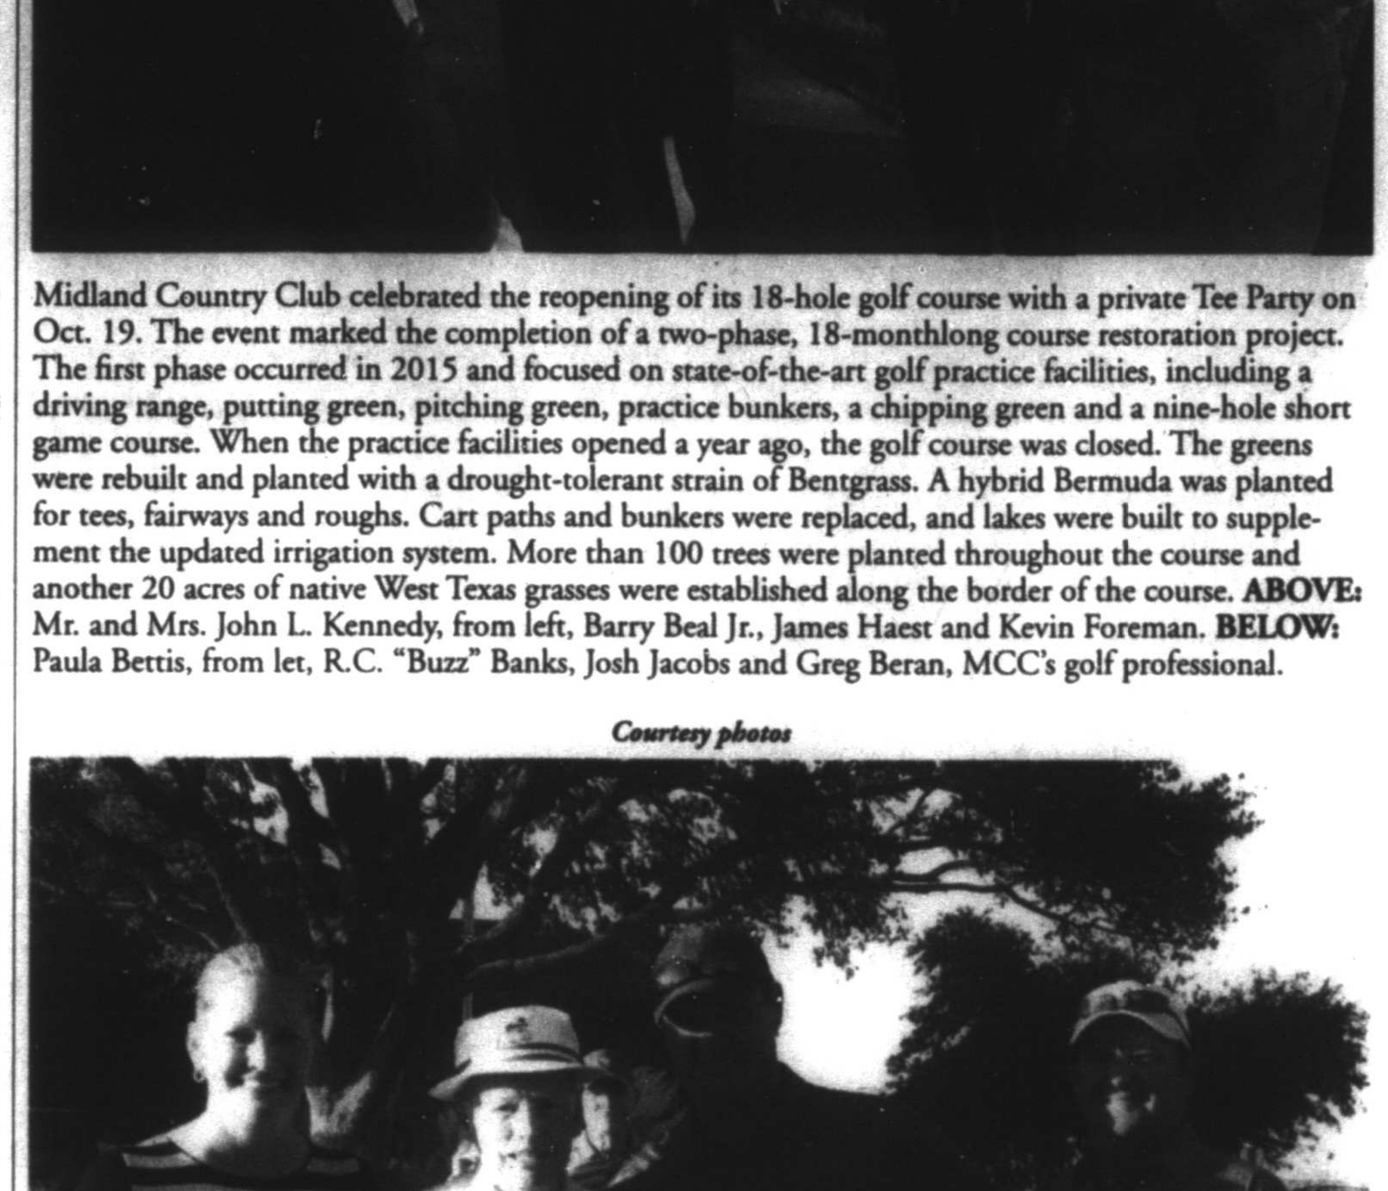

The couple will reside in Midland.

TIME FOR SOME TEE

Midland Country Club celebrated the reopening of its 18-hole golf course with a private Tee Party on Oct. 19. The event marked the completion of a two-phase, 18-monthlong course restoration project. The first phase occurred in 2015 and focused on state-of-the-art golf practice facilities, including a driving range, putting green, pitching green, practice bunkers, a chipping green and a nine-hole short game course. When the practice facilities opened a year ago, the golf course was closed. The greens were rebuilt and planted with a drought-tolerant strain of Bentgrass. A hybrid Bermuda was planted for tees, fairways and roughs. Cart paths and bunkers were replaced, and lakes were built to supplement the updated irrigation system. More than 100 trees were planted throughout the course and another 20 acres of native West Texas grasses were established along the border of the course. ABOVE: Mr. and Mrs. John L. Kennedy, from left, Barry Beal Jr., James Haest and Kevin Foreman. BELOW: Paula Bettis, from let, R.C. "Buzz" Banks, Josh Jacobs and Greg Beran, MCC's golf professional.

Dogged mold might make landscape visitors heave

JEFF FLOYD
Texas A&M AgriLife Extension

One uninvited guest that occasionally pops up in wood mulches during October is the crudely named "dog vomit fungus," appropriately named because most people react negatively at the sight of this landscape visitor. Think of it as dirty scrambled eggs that have been dumped in a flowerbed. Despite its name, it is not a fungus but rather a mold.

Molds favor a wet, dark, warm environment, so this time of year, it's not uncommon to get questions about mold seen in mulches. Fortunately, this dog vomit fungus is harmless to people and plants and prefers to eat dead wood. Nevertheless, it can be a little unsettling to see it growing in your landscape.

If you just can't live with the fungus, replace your regular wood mulch with one that naturally resists decay, such as pine needles or bark. Cedar mulch also contains resins that allow it to escape the interest of most molds. By occasionally fluffing mulch with a pitch fork or loose-tined rake, you'll increase the air space between particles and speed up the evaporation of wet areas.

Since molds are so closely related to fungi, mulch treated preventatively with general purpose fungicides can suppress their development. However, this will also slow the decomposition of mulch, which slowly releases nutrients for plants and microorganisms. The slow decay of organic mulches is one of its major benefits in landscape.

Another option is to leave it alone. The conditions that favor mold growth usually don't last very long in West Texas, and the pest will soon disappear.

Simply put, the advantages of properly maintained organic mulches in the landscape far outweigh any supposed shortcomings. A 3-inch layer of wood chip mulch doesn't invite plant problems; it solves them.

Most landscape professionals are staunch advocates for maintaining a layer of organic mulch in flowerbeds and over roots to help conserve soil moisture, limit weeds and reduce the effects of temperature extremes. However, any sensible person who hears a pitch for spreading hundreds of square feet of wood chips around the yard must question the sanity of such a practice. After all, a nicely mulched flowerbed is a veritable buffet for wood-eating critters such as fungi and molds. Who in their right mind would invite these critters into their lawn?

To learn more about plants and gardens or how to become a Texas Master Gardener, contact the Texas A&M AgriLife Extension office at 432-686-4700. Texas Master Gardener training classes begin with an orientationfrom 1-5 p.m. Jan. 12 at the Midland County Extension office, 2445 E Highway 80. You'll learn about native and adapted plants, vegetables, lawn care, trees, landscape design, composting, botany, weed control, water conservation and much more. The registration fee of $250 which covers a comprehensive Master Gardener manual and speaker expenses.

Come join the Master Gardeners

DEBBIE ROLAND
Compost Specialist

I was on my hands and knees searching through the vegetable seed packets at a local big box store this spring when a person I didn't know said "You look like you know a lot about seeds, can you help me?" "Of course," I said.

For years I wanted to become a master gardener. I looked at the newspaper pictures of the newly elected officers and the trainees who had received their certification each year, and envied everything they must know.

I couldn't grow a thing. Every once in a while a lucky plant would catch drips from infrequent rains and somehow make it through another year. I had worked full time for years but in 2011 a family medical emergency had me reconsider my priorities and I retired. After the urgency of that had passed, I again focused on master gardening. I called a friend who was a member and she sent me off on my inquiries about how to apply.

I called the local extension office, filled out my application, passed the required background check and wrote a check to pay for the books, speakers and handouts. I was accepted in January 2013.

Thereafter, I attended class one day a week for 12 weeks. I was given enormous amounts of information from professors and extension agents, as well as local master gardeners. My class had 16 "trainees" and we all had different levels of gardening knowledge. Some were already good gardeners and some had a lot less experience — like me who did not know the difference between compost and mulch. I have to admit that at the end of six hours of botany I wanted to run for the hills, but I was reassured we would survive. And we did. There are tests every week, but we worked together to complete them and passed. Fourteen of us finished the class and are still close friends. It is amazing how close you get when you are digging in the dirt or trying to identify plants in a pasture.

The local chapter requires 60 classroom hours of education and 60 volunteer hours the first year. You will need dedication, willingness, and availabiiity to take extensive training in horticulture so that you can take that knowledge back to the public and perform the volunteer hours. If you show up for every class and take advantage of opportunities presented to work in the gardens or help with the annual plant sale, at the West Texas Food Bank, home and garden show, Kids Kows & More and other projects the chapter participates in, the hours accumulate and you are finished before you know it. All the classes and projects not only teach you, but prepare you to teach others.

Master gardeners try to teach the community in the areas needed most. We cover topics such as water conservation, irrigation practices, rainwater harvesting and xeriscaping. We have a series "Backyard Basics" that teaches about raising chickens, beekeeping and more.

The local chapter, Permian Basin Master Gardeners, which has members from Odessa and Midland as well as outlying areas, trains volunteers in aspects of gardening in an arid climate and operates under the Texas A&M AgriLife Extension Service. The program is overseen by the master gardener coordinator, Jeff Floyd, who is our local county extension agent.

Master gardeners attend monthly meetings, accept volunteer assignments, keep a record of education and volunteer hours, all the while representing AgriLife in a professional manner.

When I entered the program I could see myself growing flowers and having a formal well-groomed yard. As I neared the end of my training I became fascinated about the magic of compost and mulch. My once-empty and struggling flowerbeds now look like a rain forest with soil amendments and plants that will actually grow in West Texas. My Bermuda grass is gone, taken over by more xeric mulch, with an occasional ornamental grass or plant.

Each gardener has a different passion. I may not be able to answer every question, but I have access to 125 other master gardeners and Texas A&M AgriLife to get an answer.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

King Features Syndicate

Freezing garlic has 'a-peel'

Dear Heloise: This may be a hint that many are aware of already, but it is new to me: freezing entire bulbs of garlic. I never realized how much easier it makes the garlic to peel, because the skin falls right off! It's also easier to slice when it's so cold. Finally, you can remove as many cloves as you need and simply refreeze the rest for use another day. No more wasted garlic that has gone bad. — Ellen P., via email

You can freeze garlic bulbs (whole), or you can chop it and wrap it in a plastic freezer-safe bag or plastic wrap. With garlic as an ingredient in so many dishes, it makes sense to keep some in the freezer. — Heloise

Soup stock

Dear Heloise: I like to make chicken and turkey stock in large quantities. I remove grease from the stock by placing slices of bread on top when the soup has slightly cooled. Once the grease is absorbed, I can lift out the bread onto a plate, grease and all. — Paula K. in Florida

Great hint, and soup stock is a staple food to keep stored in the freezer (especially this time of year as the weather gets cooler). Would you like to try some of my closest friends' and family's soup recipes? Order one of my Heloise's Spectacular Soups pamphlets by going online to Heloise.com. Make soups creamier by adding mashed potatoes or rice! — Heloise

Candy picnic

Dear Heloise: To keep the kids from eating too much candy, my wife came up with a candy picnic. After a week of one or two daily Halloween sweets, they put out a blanket, dump the bounty and eat as much as they want for 30 minutes while giggling. The remaining candy goes to work with a parent for all to share. The kids don't feel cheated, and everyone else gets a treat when they visit the office. Much better than "young me" hoarding candy until the Easter Bunny came. — Tony C., via email

Canning hint

Dear Heloise: When canning a product, I write the year on the lid so I know what year it was processed. When I use the product and the canning jar is empty, I save the lid. After cleaning the jar, ring and jar lid, I let it air-dry. I then replace the ring and lid on the jar. This saves the jar from getting chipped and also keeps the jar clean so that the next time I want to use the jar for canning, it requires little cleaning. At that time, I throw away the used lid. — Sandy F., St. Mary's, Pa.

Sophisticated sweet potatoes get a kick from chipotles

By Elizabeth Karmel
Associated Press

Many years ago, I made this chipotle sweet potato puree for my good friend, pie and cake expert Rose Levy Beranbaum. Since that day, we have each made it again and again as a great fall and winter side dish.

Rose likes to add Aleppo pepper — a Turkish crushed chili pepper that has an ancho-like flavor but is slightly sweeter and tart. And, for Thanksgiving, I like to add a crust of mini marshmallows as a nod to everyone's' favorite, candied yams with marshmallows. In this dish, the marshmallows add a nice counter-balance to the smoky heat of the chipotles in adobo sauce and a beautiful crust. And, unlike candied yams, the dish isn't cloyingly sweet.

This dish can be made the day before and re-heated before serving, making it ideal to bring to a Thanksgiving feast or to make in advance if you are hosting the holiday. The recipe has just a few ingredients so it is essential to buy the best quality ingredients that you can find. Make sure to purchase Garnet sweet potatoes which have a deep orange color, and have a silkier texture than other sweet potatoes.

Chipotle sweet potato and maple syrup puree

When choosing the potatoes, pick about five large or 10 medium-sized potatoes. Make sure the skin is tight, no wrinkles and almost shiny.

Start to finish: One hour and 40 minutes (20 minutes active)

Servings: About 8

- 5-10 Garnet sweet potatoes about 5 pounds total
- 1 overflowing cup real maple syrup
- 1 cup sour cream
- 1 stick unsalted butter, softened
- 2 to 3 canned chipotles in adobo sauce
- 3 teaspoons ground cinnamon
- Fine sea salt to taste
- Mini marshmallows for topping

Preheat oven to 400 F.

Clean any dirt and bad spots off potatoes with a rough brush. Dry well. Coat all over with a little Crisco or olive oil and prick the tops with a fork about three times.

Set the potatoes on a baking sheet lined with a Silpat or aluminum foil. Place in the center of the oven and bake until you can see the sugars oozing out of the fork holes, about 1 hour, or more for larger potatoes. You can also test for doneness by inserting a small sharp knife in the potatoes — if it slips in easily, they are done. Turn off the heat and let sit in the oven for 30-60 minutes to finish baking. They will be silky soft.

Meanwhile, combine maple syrup, sour cream, butter, chipotles in adobo, cinnamon and salt in a small bowl. Scrape the mixture into a food processor and puree until smooth, scraping down the sides as needed.

Peel the potatoes, and add the warm peeled potatoes to the food processor. Process until silky smooth, scraping down the sides as needed.

Taste for seasoning, adding more salt, or maple syrup if needed. If the mixture is too stiff, add a bit more butter and/or sour cream. Transfer to an oven-safe casserole dish.

Just before serving, sprinkle top with mini marshmallows and set in a 400 F oven for 5-7 minutes until browned and puffy. Be sure to watch as the marshmallows can go from brown to black quickly.

If making in advance: Store covered in the refrigerator. Remove and place in a preheated 350 F oven for 45 minutes or until hot throughout. Just before serving, sprinkle top with mini marshmallows and bake at 400 F until browned and puffy.

Healthy living: Thanksgiving salad with arugula, citrus

By Katie Workman
Associated Press

Almost any big meal could use a green salad to round things out (and balance the heavier items on the table). But not just any old pile of lettuce.

This salad is simply gorgeous, and a great way to bring color, flavor and oomph to a holiday meal. The combination of tartness from the citrus, sweetness from the pomegranate seeds, sharpness from the onion, and a bit of herby bitterness from the arugula — plus a bright vinaigrette — makes this a salad that isn't just a placeholder on a plate. And the colors are amazing.

You can buy pre-shelled pomegranate seeds in little containers in the produce section of the supermarket, or if you're feeling industrious, buy a whole pomegranate, split it apart and remove the seeds yourself. It's messy but slightly therapeutic work. If you have kids, lay out lots of paper on the table, put them in big T-shirts that can get messy and let them take on this project.

Arugula, red onion, orange and pomegranate seed salad with lemon vinaigrette

Start to finish: 20 minutes
Servings: 6

Lemon Vinaigrette:
- 1 large shallot, thinly sliced
- 2 tablespoons lemon juice
- 1 tablespoon rice vinegar
- 3 tablespoons olive oil
- Kosher or coarse salt and freshly ground pepper to taste

Salad:
- 8 cups baby arugula
- 1 small red onion, halved and very thinly sliced
- 2 cara cara or blood oranges
- Seeds from one pomegranate (about 3/4 cup)

Make the vinaigrette. In a small container, combine the shallots, lemon juice, rice vinegar, olive oil, salt and pepper. Shake to blend.

Place the arugula in a large serving bowl with the onion. Peel the oranges, and use a paring knife to remove all the white pith from the outside of the fruit. Cut the oranges crosswise into slices, and cut those slices into 4 pieces. Add these to the bowl. Pour the dressing on the salad, and toss to combine. Scatter the pomegranate seeds over the top and serve.

Cancer survivors dispute 'PREvivor's' place at relay

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to "Conflicted in California" (March 20), whose co-worker walks the "survivors' lap" in Relay for Life events. Her co-worker is what we call a "PREvivor," someone who took steps to lessen his or her chances of developing cancer. For other co-workers to belittle her for walking this lap is just plain mean. As a survivor, I have no problem with a previvor walking the lap. — DIANE IN NEW HAMPSHIRE

DEAR DIANE: In your letter, you made reference to "previvors." This is a term I was unfamiliar with. After doing some research, I found the following information on the site of Facing Our Risk of Cancer Empowered (FORCE). It reads:

"Cancer previvors are individuals who are survivors of a predisposition to cancer but haven't had the disease. The group includes people who carry a hereditary mutation, family history or some other predisposing factor. ... The term specifically applies to the portion of our community that has its own unique needs and concerns separate from the general population, but different from those already diagnosed with cancer."

Some of the letters my office received were vehemently against "Conflicted's" co-worker participating in the survivors' lap. Read on for more reader comments.

DEAR ABBY: The co-worker walking the survivor lap is a fraud. I am a two-time cancer survivor currently going through a round of chemotherapy. I call foul!

She had a genetic threat of cancer, but has not had it. She hasn't heard those horrible words confirming her worst fears. She hasn't felt the pain of a chemical cocktail shot into her veins, which can only be described as Drano mixed with napalm. She hasn't watched her hair fall out or seen her skin burned and charred from treatment. She chose elective surgery based on genetic markers.

If she wants to participate in Relay for Life, there is a caregiver lap and other activities she can participate in to honor her aunt and mother. She may have gone through pain and grief, but she is no survivor. — SURVIVOR IN THE SOUTH

DEAR ABBY: It's sad that this has become a case of whose cancer was worse and a judgment of who can or should walk the lap. Just let her walk. It doesn't take away anything of value from anyone else. Relay for Life is an individual experience in a group environment.

I was once invited to walk the survivor lap and a "friend" came up and asked me point blank, "Why are YOU here? You only had thyroid cancer, not breast cancer!" I responded that I didn't realize cancer was a contest, and I walked the lap. — LET IT BE

DEAR ABBY: How do I fight feelings of jealousy? I don't want to sulk over what other people have and I don't. I just want to live my life being unaffected by other people's riches, fertility and happiness. Any tips would be appreciated. — JEALOUS IN COLORADO

DEAR JEALOUS: NOBODY has everything or a life that's completely problem-free. A way to minimize jealousy would be to be grateful for the positive things you DO have going for you. Quietly list them in your mind before going to sleep at night, and again in the morning before getting out of bed. If you do, it will set the tone for your day and help you to keep the green-eyed monster at bay.

The Robinson-West Plantation holds rich history

TUMBLEWEED SMITH

Storyteller

Point Blank is a small place in San Jacinto County just west of Lake Livingston. It got its name from a French governess who was hired to teach children on the Robinson Plantation. When she arrived, the cotton was high covering the ground in white. She exclaimed in her native language, "pointe blanche" which translates into "white point." When it came time to establish a post office, the place took on the literal name: Point Blank.

The Robinson family arrived in what is now Point Blank in 1846 when Texas was a brand new state. Land was cheap and fertile and the Robinson clan left Alabama to carve a future in the Lone Star State. They bought 3,500 acres where 60 slaves built a grand home that looks like something from "Gone With The Wind." Sam Houston, who lived nearby, used to spend the night with the Robinsons when he was traveling. The family lived on the land for 120 years before it was sold to Bill and Barbara West. The Wests have been in the house nearly 40 years. Barbara died in 2014 but Bill carries on the legacy of the home by giving lectures about the place, conducting tours of the grounds and entertaining his children and grandchildren.

Bill searches for artifacts with his metal detector and has found enough treasures to turn his barn into a museum, which contains tools, jewelry, coins, glassware, silverware and other items from the Robinson family. My favorite was a slave's creation of a mop made of corn shucks.

The Robinson-West River Plantation is a state archeological landmark.

Bill has interviewed several descendants of both the Robinsons and their slaves and has written two books about the place. Their titles are "To Live Again" and "Journey to the Robinson-West River Plantation."

Bill is a former coach and teacher for Huntsville ISD, which named him Teacher of the Year in 2000. He spent some years in Arizona where he had a scholarship to Grand Canyon University in Phoenix. He later taught and coached in Flagstaff, eventually settling n Sedona. During the summers he worked as a forest ranger in northern Arizona and wrote about the beauty of the Oak Creek-Sedona area. The Wests had a home in the middle of Oak Creek Canyon. They were a popular couple. Just before moving back to Texas, Bill and Barbara were named Sedona's Man and Woman of the year.

I had a great visit with Bill. I arrived at the plantation on a Sunday afternoon and immediately we got in his pickup and drove around the place. He showed me a special picnic area overlooking a creek where he and Barb went to solve all the problems of the world. We drove to Onalaska for supper and when we got back, I had one of the biggest thrills of my life. I got to sleep in the same room where Sam Houston slept. Although the plantation does not have overnight accommodations, Bill extended me a surprise invitation to spend the night. The next morning, he prepared a breakfast we shared at the place where he and Barb solved all the problems of the world.

Cranston details dark thoughts, inspirations in new memoir

By John Carucci
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Bryan Cranston seems so far apart from the murderous Walter White that one wonders how he was able to channel such darkness with Emmy-worthy ferocity in "Breaking Bad."

But in his new memoir, "A Life in Parts," Cranston details a real-life incident that helped him get in character: an unhinged ex-girlfriend who threatened his life and made him have violent thoughts about her.

"She threatened my life. She threatened to kill me and it was a constant thing and there were times when I thought I was going crazy," Cranston said of the woman (Later he married actress Robin Dearden and they've been together 27 years).

It's one of the more revelatory moments in the book, released earlier this month. The Emmy-winning, Oscar-nominated Cranston covers everything from his early childhood to his signature role on "Breaking Bad" to personal challenges. Cranston, 60, discussed some of those moments in a recent interview with The Associated Press.

AP: You write about wanting to kill your ex-girlfriend. What drove you to that?

Cranston: I was flush with fear and I felt like a trapped animal and I realized that I was capable of killing someone. That experience helped me in developing Walter White in the transition that he made, because Walter had to come to terms with that himself. That he was actually a good guy, but transitioning into not such a good guy ... he was able to be honest with himself and say, "Yeah I could take another life," and that is a tough thing to say to the person in the mirror.

AP: What made you want to write a book at this point of your career?

Cranston: I am aware from an objective point that the wave, the tsunami wave that "Breaking Bad" created also created tremendous opportunity for me, and there is a peak and valley to careers and that includes fame. If you are lucky to ride this wave of fame to a plateau — it won't last there. ...I guess it is just a blue-collar work ethic that I was raised with.

AP: In the book you talk about your dad being dissatisfied as an actor. Why follow in his footsteps?

Cranston: It was in my DNA, and they were actors — my parents were both actors — so that was part of it. So really when you think about it in that sense, you're going into the family business, so it's very common. The turmoil that my dad went through, and then by extension, the kids went though, was profound and disastrous for the marriage, for the family.

AP: In season two of "Breaking Bad," Walter watches Jesse Pinkman's girlfriend die. Why did Jane's death affect you?

Cranston: I had this transformative experience that is almost hallucinogenic that — that I saw the face of my real daughter, Taylor. Her face took the place of Krysten Ritter and it made me, uh, just you know, hesitate. And God it is funny — every time I retell this story or when I wrote that story in the book, there is an uneasiness in my chest 'cause I think it is my biggest fear. It is my biggest fear, something happening to a child, your child, is unfathomable.

AP: How long do you plan on working?

Cranston: When the sun is shining, make hay, because it would be sunset on my career at some point, and when it is, I want to be exhausted. I want to be done, and actually, go "I had a good run. No regrets. I'm ready to step aside."

When North cue bid four clubs, despite holding minimum values, he was following the general principle that "cue bids below game do not promise extras." The slam was no more than the jack of clubs away from being cold. As it was, it seemed to rely on a successful club finesse — a finesse that rated to lose from the auction. South showed that it was better than that.

South carefully played low from dummy at trick one, ruffing it in his hand. South thought it quite likely, from the auction and the lead, that East held both high hearts. He drew trumps in two rounds, then led a diamond to the king and a diamond back to his ace, before ruffing his last diamond in dummy.

Declarer next led the queen of hearts from dummy, which was covered by East with the king. Rather than ruffing this trick, South elegantly discarded a low club. East was on lead with a surprise heart winner, but he didn't like it one bit. East had a choice between leading a club into the ace-queen, setting up the heart jack, or yielding a ruff-sluff. Whatever he chose, South had his slam and a hand to brag about for at least a month.

Note that the slam would have failed had South played a heart honor from dummy at trick one. It's also worth noting that, on this line of play, the location of the king of clubs was not relevant.

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Sunday, Oct. 30, 2016:

This year your creativity and endurance open new doors for you. Whether you choose to go through them is entirely up to you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) ★★★★ You'll discover how strongly a partner feels about a key issue. Remain open to a conversation that covers your differences.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) ★★★★★ You might want to defer to others. Listen carefully to feedback. Some people might need more space when making a decision.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) ★★★ Accept that you might not be as energized or as witty as you think you are. Know that you need to slow down and make today a lazy day. Don't give in to anyone's bias.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) ★★★★ You have the ability to draw others toward you. Some people might be mesmerized by what you say and do. Honor a fast change of pace.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) ★★★ Stay centered when dealing with a key associate. A new beginning evolves if you can stay open-minded. You have a lot to follow through on.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) ★★★★ A loved one could be quite alluring. This person might want your thinking to be like his or hers. A conversation opens up new possibilities.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) ★★★★ Pace yourself, and understand that new possibilities are coming forward. Listen to what is being shared, and be willing to ask for support.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) ★★★★ Your sensuality seeps out in many situations. A secret admirer could have difficulty not expressing his or her awareness.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) ★★★ Your imagination comes forward when dealing with a problematic situation. You might not want to say a lot.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) ★★★★ Friends come forward with some fun plans. Don't hesitate too long, or it could be too late. You'll gain a unique perspective of what a friend is going through.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) ★★★★ Read between the lines with a boss or parent. You are taking on a lot of responsibility right now. Can you really handle everything that is on your plate?

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) ★★★★★ Your temper could emerge from out of the blue. A new beginning is possible, as long as this person is able to let go of his or her rigidity.

BORN TODAY
Poet Ezra Pound (1885), former U.S. President John Adams (1775), actress Nia Long (1970)

MRT: What is the best thing you cook?

Thompson: Pesto is probably the best thing that I make. At least that's what my son and his friends request most often. It's not really cooking, but processing basil, pinenuts, parmesan, garlic, salt, pepper and my secret ingredients.

MRT: Who is a fictional and real-life hero and why?

Thompson: I interact with so much fiction that this is a really hard question. I want to say something literary worthy like Odysseus, but I'd rather pick Katniss from "The Hunger Games." She is a fabulous fictional heroine. She has everything: strength, intelligence, compassion, wit, beauty, plus she is full of flaws.

Now a real-life hero would probably be my husband, Matt. He works to get real nutritionally dense food accessible food to everyone. For that, he's a hero. People can read about his efforts at patreon.com/FarmerMatt.

MRT: What book do you always recommend?

Thompson: "The Alchemist" by Paulo Coehlo and "Dirt" by me!

European analyst visits Permian Basin International Oil Show, finds upbeat mood

By Mella McEwen
mmcewen@mrt.com

A broad swath of exhibitors and visitors flocked to last week's Permian Basin International Oil Show in Odessa.

Andlauer

Among those wandering through the Ector County Coliseum complex was Alexandre Andlauer, head of the oil and gas sector for European-based equity research firm AlphaValue. The Paris resident spent a week in the Permian Basin attending the show and talking with a variety of oilfield workers, from field crews to management as well as banks, industry associations and Permian Basin recruiters.

"Everybody in the world is speaking about the Permian Basin. So I was interested to know more," Andlauer told the Reporter-Telegram by email.

Asked if the feedback he received during his visit was what he expected, he replied, "I hadn't expected such a positive mood."

He said he found that in spite of stronger activity, the view remains cautious.

Operators told him $50 oil price was fine but they do not believe the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries will finalize an agreement to reduce output and are cautious prices may fall again.

New Midland facility allows service firm to expand its service offerings

By Mella McEwen
mmcewen@mrt.com

Permian Basin operators' drive for increased efficiency in light of low oil prices has rippled through all facets of the industry.

Two years into the downturn, service companies such as Danos are learning to turn that focus to their advantage.

Danos just relocated its Permian Basin operations to a 7,000-square-foot facility at 1501 W. Francis Ave.

"We had an office in downtown Midland on Wall Street that, frankly, we outgrew," Eric Danos, executive vice president, said in a phone interview from the company's headquarters in Gray, Louisiana.

The new facility combines office, warehouse and shop space and includes a secured laydown yard, allowing the company to allow its full range of services to oil field customers in the Permian Basin, he said.

"When we started in the Permian in 2012, we started with production support services," Danos said. "We see the opportunity to expand our footprint in the Permian Basin."

From the new facility, Danos will now offer construction and automation services in addition to its production support services.

The company also will offer project management teams that provide a single point-of-contact to oversee all phases of a project.

"That's part of the value proposition in this market: A customer can source all services with one supplier," Danos said.

All of the company's field personnel are cross-trained in the various phases of a project, which not only reduces the resources needed but lowers the number of people required at a site, he said.

"Our project team manages the resources and the execution. The customers get more efficiency in managing supplies."

Because the company has just added construction, it is not currently involved in any projects, but is talking with customers about future projects and is doing some maintenance work.

The company also is working with customers to automate their fields — from instrumentation and electrical systems to control and system integration elements and cathodic protection services.

"There's a lot of work to bring infrastructure up-to-date, modernize infrastructure. That's part of the efficiency drive," Danos said.

He sees opportunity in automation and helping operators develop more efficient operations, whether it's older fields or newer fields.

Oil companies keep paying for Permian Basin land

■ 'High-water numbers,' analyst says

By David Hunn
Houston Chronicle

Oil companies continue buying acreage in West Texas's prolific Permian Basin.

This time, it was Denver's SM Energy, announcing Tuesday it was picking up 35,700 acres in Howard and Martin counties, north and east of Midland, from private-equity backed and Houston-based QStar for $1.6 billion in cash and stock. The deal included 2,400 barrels per day of existing oil and gas production and works out to at least $42,000 per undeveloped acre, analysts said, stacking the purchase up among top prices this year.

It's the second big announcement in a week. On Oct. 20, Dallas-based RSP Permian bought Silver Hill Energy Partners, also headquartered in Dallas, and its 41,000 acres for $2.4 billion, or as much as $47,000 per undeveloped acre, according to some analysts.

The investment banking firm Piper Jaffray called the purchase another among "transformational acquisitions" this year.

The two announcements again show how U.S. oil companies, regardless of the slump in oil prices, are fighting to get into the oil-rich Permian Basin, even as they pull rigs from other fields. They also show how much companies are willing to pay.

"The Permian is so hot right now," said Ben Shattuck, an analyst with the energy research firm Wood Mackenzie. "These are high-water numbers."

The Permian Basin's two sections, the Midland and the Delaware, are the most competitive markets in the country in tight oil right now, he said.

RSP's buy was in the Delaware, the Permian's western lobe. There, year-to-date transactions have averaged $14,400 an acre. Piper Jaffray said — about $30,000 less than what RSP paid.

It's the second big Permian purchase for SM Energy. Just two weeks ago, the company bought Denver- and Houston-based Rock Oil Holdings and its 24,783 acres in Howard County for $980 million.

The two buys together buoyed SM's Midland Basin footprint to 82,450 acres. Moreover, much of the land is contiguous, allowing the company to drill longer horizontal wells and get out more oil.

At the same time, SM Energy has pulled rigs from the Eagle Ford formation, west of Houston, and is now dumping its acreage in North Dakota's Williston Basin, too.

ENERGYBRIEFS

FROM STAFF & WIRE REPORTS

SPE completions group to meet

Members of the Completions and Operations Study Group, Permian Basin section, Society of Petroleum Engineers, will meet Thursday at the Petroleum Club beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Gary Griesenbeck, xenior vice president for ORION Water Solutions, will present "Chlorine Dioxide treatment in the Permian Basin…Is it good, bad, or ugly?"

Cost is $26.87 when registered online, $30 at the door, and includes lunch. Reservations can be made online at http://www.brownpapertickets.com/event/2708991.

WTGS schedules fall social

The West Texas Geological Society will host its Fall Social Thursday at Kessler's Place, 3204 W. Wall St.

There will be food, fellowship and music provided by The Stateline Band.

There is no charge, but reservations are requested and can be made by calling 683-1573 or by email at wtgs@wtgs.org. Reservations may also be made online at www.wtgs.org and clicking on the Events tab.

SPE to host scholarship fundraiser

Members of the Permian Basin section, Society of Petroleum Engineers Permian Basin Section will hold a scholarship fundraiser dinner Nov. 10 at the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum. Cocktails begin at 6:30 p.m., followed by dinner at 7 p.m.

Jeff Skiles, co-pilot of U.S. Airways flight 1059, will present "Miracle on the Hudson."

Sponsorships are available for a VIP meet and greet with Skiles. Tickets can be obtained online at http://www.brownpapertickets.com/event/2705398. Additional information is available by calling Cathy Harris at 972-768-8070 or by email at CathyA-Harris1416@Gmail.com.

Maverick sells Blue Ridge Field

Maverick Drilling and Exploration has signed two agreements for a cash sale of the Blue Ridge Field to help fund company developments in the Eagle Ford Shale region.

The Blue Ridge Field is a salt dome formation and drilling area in eastern Fort Bend County, southwest of Houston.

Houston-based Maverick has received a down payment for the $9.1 million sale agreements, which are expected to close within the next month, according to a company statement.

Selling the Blue Ridge Field will allow Maverick to shift its resources to develop new Eagle Ford Shale holdings in South Texas, company Chairman and CEO J. Michael Yeager said in a statement. Maverick is studying 11,000 to 13,000 acres in Dimmit County and working on plans to begin drilling.

"As the sale of Blue Ridge finalizes in the next few days, we are very anxious to devote all of our efforts toward our new Eagle Ford position," Yeager said in a statement. "We are in one of the thickest parts of the Eagle Ford formation, so the opportunity for multiple levels of development will be tested. We plan to begin initial drilling in the next three months."

Energy Transfer to acquire interests in PennTex Midstream

Energy Transfer Partners LP agreed to acquire certain interests in Houston-based PennTex Midstream Partners LP for about $640 million.

Energy Transfer will own 100 percent of PennTex's general partner, with all of its incentive distribution rights, 6.3 million common units and all 20 million subordinated units of PennTex. That represents about 65 percent of the total limited partner interests in PennTex, the Dallas-based company said in a statement.

The transaction will be paid half with Energy Transfer common units issued directly to sellers and half with cash, and is expected to close in the fourth quarter, according to the statement.

Shell selling Canadian shale assets for $1 billion

Royal Dutch Shell has agreed to sell off Canadian shale assets to Tourmaline Oil for $1.04 billion, its latest in a string of transactions aimed at shedding assets to make room for its recently acquired BG Group.

Shell's 206,000 net acres in Western Canada produce 25,000 barrels of oil equivalent a day, about 85 percent natural gas. Shell said the deal could close in the fourth quarter.

The Anglo-Dutch oil major plans to sell off $30 billion in assets as it integrates British gas producer BG Group into its corporate fold. It bought BG Group for about $50 billion earlier this year.

Houston investment bank Tudor, Pickering, Holt & Co. said it believes the rest of Shell's assets in Western Canada would be worth about $2 billion if oil prices reach $70 a barrel and natural gas prices rose.

Gastar to develop wells, sell other acreage in Oklahoma

Gastar Exploration Inc. and a private investor have worked out an agreement for scores of wells in a high-development area of north-central Oklahoma, the company announced.

With the agreement, Houston-based Gastar and its private investor will develop 60 wells in Kingfisher County, part of a region northwest of Oklahoma City referred to in the industry as the STACK play. A company statement only describes the investor as a "large private global development fund."

Gastar has 18,000 acres of undeveloped mineral leases in the area where the company will develop the wells. Gastar and its investor have agreed on locations for the first 20 wells, according to a company statement.

The company also announced it has agreed to sell noncore leases in Kingfisher and Canadian counties for $71 million. The area being sold is about 19,100 acres that produces 181 barrels of oil equivalent per day.

Shareholders sue to stop Spectra merger with Enbridge

Shareholders have filed five separate suits in two weeks against Spectra Energy Corp., alleging the Houston pipeline company is selling itself too cheaply to the Canadian energy firm Enbridge.

The all-stock deal, valued at $28 billion was announced in September, is expected to close early next year. The lawsuits, each filed in U.S. District Court in Houston, ask the court to block the sale, alleging that Spectra should have sought other merger partners who might have been willing to pay more for the company.

Under the terms, Spectra stockholders would trade each share for slightly less than one share — 0.984 share — of the combined company, which will keep the Enbridge name. Both Spectra and Enbridge executives touted the deal as an opportunity that would create the largest energy infrastructure company in North America while boosting values and dividends for shareholders.

Each of the shareholder lawsuits are seeking class action status to represent other shareholders, according to the plaintiffs local lawyer Thomas Bilek.

Spectra said in statement that it doesn't comment on pending litigation.

The most recent suit, filed by Joseph McMillan, criticized Spectra's board for agreeing to several "coercive deal protection devices" in the merger agreement, including a "no solicitation" clause that prevented alternate bidders from coming forward, "matching rights" that gave Enbridge four days to match a better offer, and a termination fee of $1 billion that Spectra would have to pay if it decides to pursue a competing offer, according to the lawsuit.

Woe in the oilfield: 213 companies have now declared bankruptcy

By David Hunn
Houston Chronicle

Fewer and fewer oil exploration and production companies are declaring bankruptcy.

But more oilfield service companies are.

So far this month, only one North American E&P firm filed for Chapter 11 protection, according to data released on Tuesday by the Dallas law firm Haynes & Boone. That's down from two in September, three in August and four in July.

But it's been an especially tough few months for service companies. As crude prices began crashing in 2014, drillers started idling rigs. That led to fewer jobs for the companies that make their money helping producers pump oil and gas. Moreover, when producers did hire service companies, they often forced them to heavily discount their rates.

Eight service companies filed this month. Seven filed last month, and eight again the month before. Almost 50 have filed in the last six months, half of the 108 over two years.

In total, 213 North American oil and gas companies have now filed for bankruptcy since the start of 2015, listing more than $85 billion in debt.

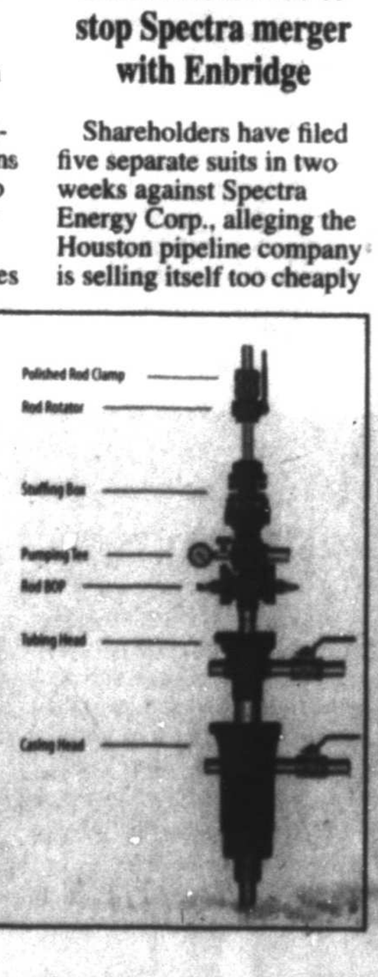

The most recent exploration firm: the private oil and gas company Mountain Divide, based in Montana, filed on Oct. 14, and listed $83 million in debt.

On the oilfield services side, Houston-based Key Energy Services filed on Monday, with more than $1 billion in debt.

And Basic Energy Services, headquartered in Fort Worth, said Monday it had reached an agreement with debt holders and filed on Tuesday.

ANALYST

From 1F

In some areas of the Permian Basin, he found activity levels the same as when oil prices were $100 a barrel. The number of fracturing crews at work has risen from 30 at the low point to 40 currently, still down sharply from 100 crews at the high point. The stronger companies are hiring again, and their crews are working 15-hour days, he said. If prices stabilize at $55 a barrel next year, that number could rise to 50 crews and could challenge any potential OPEC output cuts, he said.

The Delaware Basin is seen as a key driver of growth, but he found one issue is road quality.

The real challenge will be personnel, he found. Many companies responsible for hiring in the industry believe many potential workers will be reluctant to come back to the industry because they're not confident enough in oil prices. And staff might be lacking soon, especially if oil goes to $60 with the resulting increase in activity.

To meet staffing challenges, Andlauer said salaries might have to be higher than when oil prices were $100 a barrel. Today's salary is close to $20 an hour for those working close to the wellhead, down just slightly from $22 to $25 an hour at $100 oil. To meet staffing needs, he theorized that salaries may have to rise to $30 an hour, and he questioned how that would impact well costs. Another question is how to attract workers with unemployment at 4.5 percent.

"For sure, it will not be resolved in six months after oil reaches $60 a barrel the first time; rather, it will take 18 months," he said.

Such volatility may have more of an impact on shale producers than any actions taken by OPEC, he said.

He found equipment is not an issue, either, in the short or medium term, with rigs in place and pipe inventories at an estimated seven months and falling to the optimum three to four months of inventory. Equipment also could be easily moved in from other basins, he said. Any issues could arise from raw materials, such as sand or water, and some equipment such as pressure pumps.

"Survival mode is active. At $50 a barrel, the industry is working, the staff are there, some companies are starting to hire, costs are stabilized and profitability is OK. At $55 a barrel, the situation is perfect, as inflation does not offset higher revenue increases, staff will be there and fully employed. Inflation starts to be visible."

was Alexandre Andlauer, head of the oil and gas sector for AlphaValue

Summing up his investigation of the Permian Basin, Andlauer said he found oil prices below $45 means "survival mode is active. At $50 a barrel, the industry is working, the staff are there, some companies are starting to hire, costs are stabilized and profitability is OK. At $55 a barrel, the situation is perfect, as inflation does not offset higher revenue increases, staff will be there and fully employed. Inflation starts to be visible."

At $60 a barrel, the benefits of the higher price will be limited by a lack of workers and efficiencies couldn't offset inflation, which may hit margins in the short term, he said.

COGENT

From 1F

model is to incorporate a veteran service company, Animas Well Service of Midland into Cogent.

"This is a new company formed in August for the sole purpose of buying the assets of Animas Well Service of Midland," Erwin said in a phone interview.

He said the company was not looking specifically at Animas but for a Permian Basin company "in distress and buy their platform."

Animas, founded in 2005, was a good company with a good team that got caught up in the downturn like a hundred other companies, Erwin said. He estimated 40 percent to 50 percent of its fleet was being utilized at the time of the purchase.

"We wanted to take our coiled tubing strategy and bolt it onto Animas' business model," Erwin said.

By combining the two, Cogent can offer services — from its fleet of workover rigs through coiled tubing units that can help increase well performance to aftermarket services on all wellsite equipment. Future plans include offering compatible snubbing services, wireline services, fishing tools and plugging and abandonment services.

"As the industry recovers, customers large and small will be looking for one-stop providers," said Erwin, calling it perforation-to-pipeline services.

Cogent "will be able to do all downhole, remediation and stimulation (work), and when the hydrocarbons reach the surface," offer production field services such as maintaining gas compression, production equipment and other gas processing and rotating equipment.

"I think companies are looking for young companies like ours with a fresh approach, a fresh balance sheet," Erwin said.

The Permian Basin, where Erwin has worked for much of his 30-year career and where his parents live, will be Cogent's main focus, though the company does have business development in South Texas and in the Mid-Continent.

He said he plans to leverage Animas' good name and expand its footprint, having retained that company's personnel.

"We certainly hope to hire more people. The business model we've laid out contemplates all our assets out and in service. We have 35 employees today, and once all our assets are out and running, will add up to between 50 and 60 employees just on the operations side," he said.

Erwin acknowledged that pay may eventually be an issue as the company grows.

"Quality operations personnel always command a premium, as they should. Our approach will be to pay market rates. There will always be pricing pressures. Hopefully, as commodity prices rise, our customers will make more money but that will raise pressure on us to raise pay," he said.

"The nice thing about being a small guy is we're a very efficient operation. We're the right-sized company for today's market. We also have a nice capital structure that will allow us to grow as demand warrants."

The company is headquartered in Houston with a regional office in downtown Midland at 306 W. Wall St. and an operations yard for its equipment.

DANOS

From 1F

Production support continues to be its dominant line in the Permian Basin, according to Danos.

"In spite of cutbacks, our Permian customers have had some activity," he said. "I was out there about two weeks ago and as I was driving to an early morning safety meeting, it was interesting to see drilling rigs along the way," he said.

The family-owned company has seen these cycles since its founding in 1947, and Danos said the business has grown by understanding its customers' needs to be focused and efficient and working with them on those needs. The company has also been strategic in choosing its customers, he said. That hasn't eliminated the need to make tough choices during downturns, he said. And being family-owned, the company has been conservative in not taking financial risks.

"We're committed to our purpose and our values. Our purpose is to develop great people who are up to solving challenges, and there's no better time than a tough environment. We use this market to innovate and create new solutions, focusing on what we need to do that's new and innovative, rather than worrying about the downturn."

Since arriving in the Permian Basin in 2012, the company has grown to more than 200 employees and a dozen support staff, who are all local, Danos said. He expects that growth to continue. With the expansion into the new lines, the company hired two new people to head the automation and construction lines and is hiring a safety specialist "because of the growth we've experienced," he said.

2016 Executive Oil Conference set for Midland to spotlight its growing importance

From staff reports

More information

To register for and learn more about the 2016 Executive Oil Conference and be a part of the daylong, targeted networking opportunities, please visit ExecutiveOilConference.com.

The votes are in and the Permian Basin is the clear winner. It's the hottest oil producing region in the U.S., if not the world, and that's why top executives will gather in Midland soon for the 22nd annual Executive Oil Conference.

The event, hosted by Hart Energy, is scheduled for Nov. 8 at the Midland County Horseshoe Pavilion. Some 900 attendees are expected.

The event is preceded by an awards dinner at Midland Country Club the evening of Nov. 7, which is sold out. The awards dinner features the annual Midland Reporter-Telegram Hearst Energy Awards.

"We are delighted to be back in Midland again for this conference," said Hart Energy's Leslie Haines, executive editor-in-chief and a former Midland resident. "Compared to other oil and gas provinces in the nation, the Permian Basin remains relatively healthy. In fact, it's like a magnet right now — our database shows that since January, some $20 billion in deals have been announced here. All kinds of oil companies are scrambling to get their acreage position lined up in the Permian."

Thanks to operators unlocking more potential, this year overall Permian production will reach 2 million barrels a day, the most since 2007, according to the Energy Information Administration (EIA).

The Executive Oil Conference brings together top producers, investors and analysts focused on the drilling activity, deal opportunities and technical challenges in West Texas. Haines said conference topics to be covered include enhanced completion designs, whether lower drilling costs can be sustained, whether the rapid pace of big deals will continue, and the availability of rigs and crews in 2017.

During the opening session Nov. 8, Scott Sheffield, chairman and CEO of Pioneer Natural Resources, will sit down for a fireside chat on everything he's seen in the Permian Basin over his 30-plus years' career, from export opportunities to how the company is making new wells work at lower oil prices. Sheffield retires at the end of this year, so this may be one of the last opportunities to hear from him.

Another highlight of the conference will be John Christmann, CEO and president of Apache Corp. He'll dive into Apache's massive new discovery in Reeves County, the Alpine High, and update attendees on results from the company's 3.2 million gross acres across the Permian Basin.

Other operators taking the stage will include executives from Henry Resources, Plantation Petroleum, Noble Energy, Approach Resources, Callon Petroleum, Laredo Petroleum, and Cimarex Energy.

Providing another perspective will be several analysts and investment bankers from Citigroup, Petrie Partners and Tudor, Pickering, Holt & Co. They will discuss their views on the commodity price outlook, M&A trends and metrics, and the enormous amount of capital pouring into the basin.

Anadarko shifts from Eagle Ford to Permian Basin

By Rye Druzin
San Antonio Express-News

Anadarko Petroleum has cut its drilling budget in the Eagle Ford Shale to focus on the more profitable Permian Basin in West Texas, where it plans to triple production over the next five years even as oil hovers at about $50 a barrel.

"We've been active in West Texas for quite a long time. ... Our operations and opportunity in West Texas has really grown," spokesman John Christiansen said. "We view the Delaware Basin as a very important growth opportunity for our future."

The Houston-based company has cut spending in the Eagle Ford almost in half and is searching for a new regional office in Midland, he said. The Permian, which spans roughly 300 miles by 250 miles from West Texas to eastern New Mexico, is the most prolific and resilient region in the United States for producing so-called tight oil.

"We did significantly reduce the amount of activity that we had in the Eagle Ford," redeploying that money to the company's shale fields in the Permian Basin and in the DJ Basin in Colorado, "which are our two most attractive, economically, plays in the U.S. onshore," he said.

Anadarko, which operates at least six drilling rigs in the Delaware sub-basin, which is part of the larger Permian Basin, hopes that it can increase production from 41,000 barrels of oil a day in this year's second quarter to 130,000 a day in 2021. To handle that growth, Christiansen said, Anadarko will need to add staff and an office in the region.

"We're looking at some pretty significant growth here over the next couple of years, and to support that growth, we felt we needed regional staff in the area," he said.

Christiansen offered few details of Anadarko's new offices, saying the company is in the preliminary planning stages and hasn't determined how much office space or people it will need there. Chevron recently completed a $100 million regional campus in Midland, while Occidental Petroleum built a 212,000-square-foot complex next door to Chevron.

Anadarko's $2 billion purchase of deep-water assets in the Gulf of Mexico last month is expected to generate enough revenue to pour some of it into the Delaware sub-basin, located west of Midland in Loving, Winkler, Ward and Reeves counties. It is also sending some of that money to the DJ Basin in northeastern Colorado.

The Permian Basin has seen significant and continued oil and gas investments over the past two years despite the collapse in oil prices. Oil hit a peak of $107 a barrel in June 2014 before it collapsed to $26 a barrel in February. It has since recovered to around $50 a barrel.

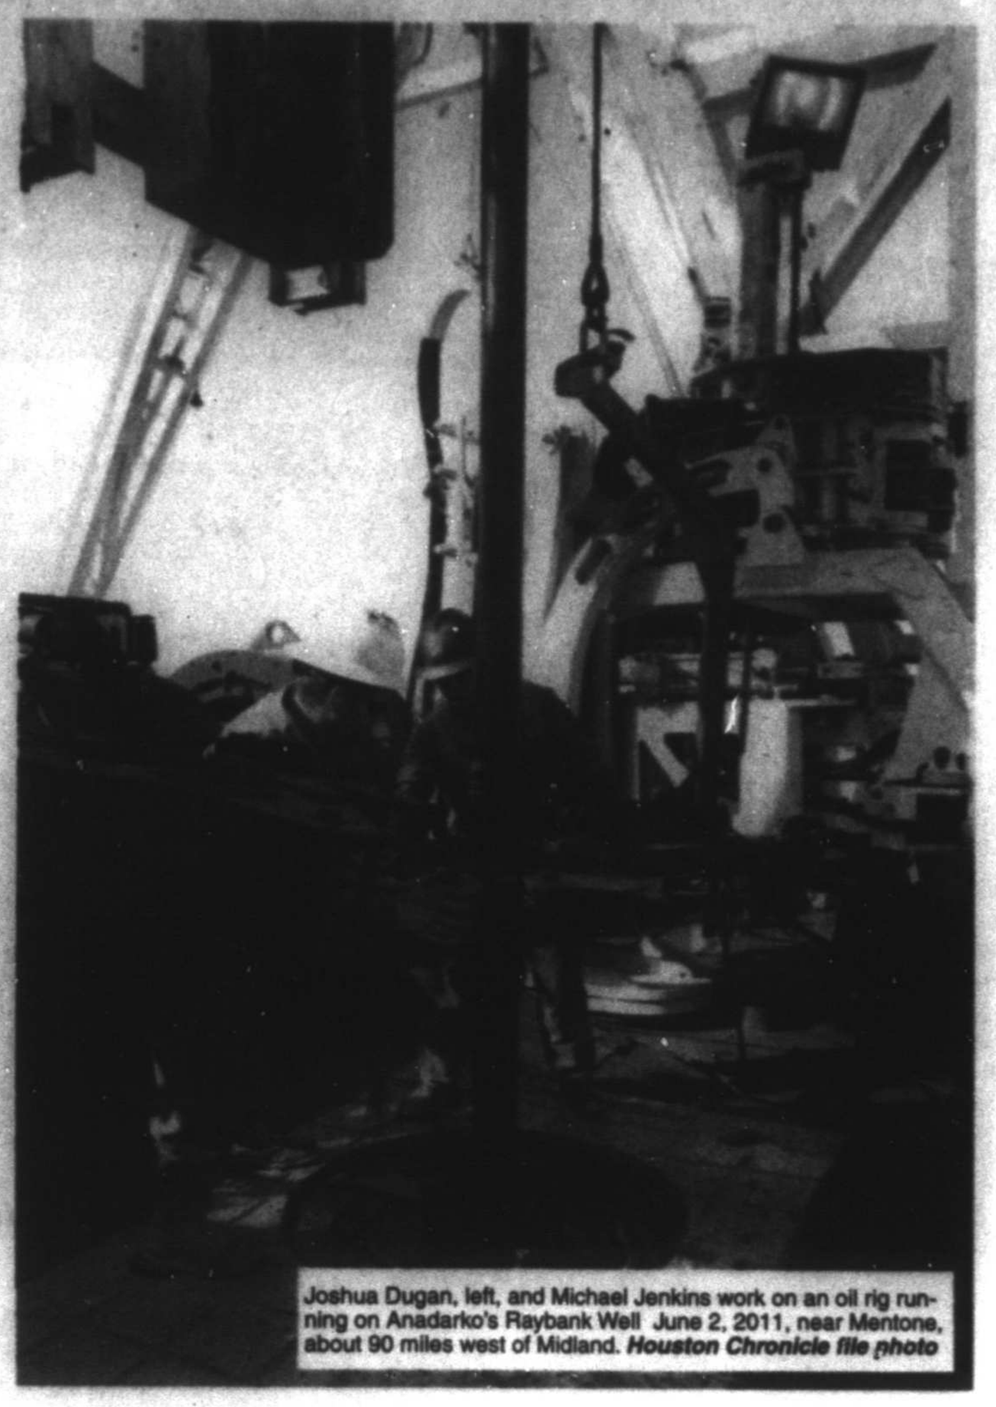

Oil and gas companies have cut more than 350,000 jobs since crude prices started to plummet and have cut spending by hundreds of billions of dollars.

But Permian Basin oil production has remained little changed throughout the rout, hovering just below 2 million barrels of oil a day while other shale fields such as South Texas' Eagle Ford and North Dakota's Bakken have seen daily production fall by hundreds of thousands of barrels, according to the U.S. Energy Information Administration.

Land prices and companies based in the Permian have remained at a premium, while others can be had at fire-sale prices. Denver-based SM Energy bought 35,700 acres in Howard and Martin counties for $1.6 billion in cash and stock, or roughly $45,000 an acre. RSP Permian acquired Silver Hill Energy Partners — and that company's 41,000 acres — in mid-October for $2.4 billion, $1.25 billion of which was in cash.

Anadarko's strategy is unique, Christiansen said.

"Instead of getting in the bidding wars in West Texas, we were able to acquire the deep-water assets ... for very good value, and then we can redeploy that cash flow to accelerate our activity in the Delaware Basin," he said.

Revolutionary in-pipe generator uses gas flow to power SCADA systems, more at remote locations

Getting power to a remote well or facility is a challenge, no matter what currently popular method you choose. Running power lines across the desert is very expensive; solar power is costly, unreliable and requires regular cleaning; internal combustion-powered generators require a reliable fuel supply and regular maintenance; wind power is not really available for singular installations.

Now Lightning Master® has developed a system that solves all those issues—its patent-pending In-Pipe Turbine Generator (IPTG) for remote locations. The IPTG is an electric generator contained in a two-foot section of 6" stainless steel pipe. It harvests energy by using the natural flow of gas within the pipe to rotate a turbine and produce electric current in coils mounted around its exterior. The generator is designed to generate power 24 hours a day with an option for 12 or 24 volt output.

Manufactured of stainless steel, the IPTG is designed to meet Class 1, Division 1 standards. Measuring two feet long and weighing about 300 pounds, it currently uses 6" class 600 raised face slip-on flanges to attach to the pipeline, but it can be customized. In order to allow production to continue during installation, Lightning Master® recommends installing the IPTG in a bypass line rather than in the main transmission line. The IPTG is designed to last 6-18 months before inspection/replacement of the turbine and other internal parts.

The unit produces 24VDC at 250-300W, with generation starting at a flow rate of 3M cfm. At the lowest flow rate it generates about 100W. Several units can be installed in series for more power.

Here is a partial list of the IPTG's benefits:

- Un-attended operation
- Next to no maintenance
- Free electricity once online
- Can't be stolen
- Ideal for site lights and battery charging
- Zero emissions
- Units can be run in series for more power
- Much more efficient than solar at half cost
- Instant power at 250Watts
- Can be moved to another pipe if needed
- Can be inside the berm
- Can be monitored through existing SCADA system

Lightning Master® technicians from the new Permian Basin office will do at least your first installation. If you desire, they can train your field personnel to do future installations. The process takes about two hours under normal circumstances.

Right now you are reading about the future of clean, cost-effective, "Why Not?" energy generation. This solves so many of the remote generation issues—why didn't someone think of this before?

Lightning Master® has, and now you can benefit. Call them this week to learn more.

UTPB Athletics, MCM Elegante' Hotel partner to honor military

Active military, veterans, Purple Heart recipients will be honored Nov. 5

Ryan Haage
Communication and Special Projects

When many 18-year olds enter college, they experience fears and become homesick. Entering the military at this age can be even more daunting.

In 1941, 18-year old Andy Kauffman volunteered for the U.S. Army Air Corps soon after the events at Pearl Harbor. On his 13th combat mission, his B-17 was shot down over Germany, where he was taken prisoner until the end of the war.

Kauffman was a recipient of the Purple Heart and member of the American Ex-Prisoners of War Organization (POW-MIA). He passed away in Midland a few months ago at age 93. His son, Dr. Andrew Kauffman of Midland, has been invited by Odessa's MCM Elegante' Hotel to receive a posthumous award for his father during a ceremony at UTPB's Military Appreciation Falcon football game on November 5.

In conjunction with the playing of our national anthem, all active military and veterans will be recognized and thanked for their service. Special recognition will be given to Purple Heart recipients during half-time.

Military personnel receiving the Purple Heart suffered wounds during combat. The MCM Elegante' Hotel received the nation's first "Purple Heart Hotel Chain" award for dedication to and support of America's wounded combat veterans. According to Ed Lasater, President of the MCM Family of Hotels, "We look forward to honoring all active and retired military personnel during the Falcon's game versus Texas A&M – Commerce at 7 p.m. on Saturday, November 5, at Ratliff Stadium, 1862 E. Yukon Rd, Odessa."

The names of any Purple Heart recipients you would like to have recognized during the ceremony should be emailed to Athletic Director, Steve Aicinena at aicinena_s@utpb.edu before 12:00 pm on 11/2/16. Please include the honored's, name, rank, branch of the military, and the war or conflict in which the individual received his or her injury. For example: Frank Curley - PFC - US Army – World War II.

Active and retired military will receive free admission to the football game at the ticket window on the west side of Ratliff stadium between 12:00 pm and kick-off on the day of the game. A military I.D. must be shown to receive free admission.
