Diplomats' deaths

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Three top U.S. negotiators heading to peace talks in Sarajevo were killed Saturday when their armored vehicle plunged 100 yards off a dirt road, hit two land mines and exploded. A French peacekeeper was also killed. Page 2A.

To the rescue

PARIS — They called Fred Cuny the Red Adair of disaster relief, but that fell short. During a quarter-century of life-saving, he survived warlords, rockets, landmines, microbes, mosquitoes and mayhem, often commuting to work in helicopters held together by chewing gum. Apparently, it finally got him. After months of searching, Cuny's family has given him up for dead somewhere in Chechnya. Page 3B.

Two millionaires

AUSTIN — Two tickets bought in Weatherford and Harlingen correctly matched all six numbers drawn Saturday night for the twice-weekly Lotto Texas game, state lottery officials said. The jackpot was worth $60 million. The numbers drawn from a field of 50 were: 2, 7, 9, 15, 29 and 41. Lottery officials estimate the jackpot for Wednesday night's game will be $4 million.

Recent figures move Midland/Odessa ahead of all other Texas cities for eating out.

Brian Adcock/Reporter-Telegram

Tammy Jones rushes an order out from the kitchen of the newly opened Black-Eyed Pea Restaurant in north Midland. Statistics indicate Midlanders love to eat out.

'We kind of thought maybe what's happening is the big guys are considering that Midland may end up being a hub for surrounding areas.'

— Steve Kempton, general manager of Luigi's restaurant

Midlanders love to eat out.

"Average (Midland/Odessa) residents spend about $1,400 a year dining out. That's 67 percent higher than statewide averages," said Julie Sherrier, director of communications for the Texas Restaurant Association (TRA), headquartered in Austin.

In fact, those per capita figures put Midland/Odessa ahead of all other Texas cities for eating out. "You all spend the most," Ms. Sherrier said.

Several local restaurant watchers attribute Midlanders' hunger for restaurants to the lack of other activities and amenities.

Projected gross sales from the food service industry in Midland/Odessa for this year add up to $223 million, based on state comptroller figures, according to the TRA. "We're projecting a growth rate from 1994 of 8.84 percent," Ms. Sherrier said.

Estimated gross sales for 1994 are $205 million. That follows 1993 sales that totaled $188.5 million and 1992 sales that added up to $177 million.

A TRA report indicated: "Sales trends continue to be positive for the area which recently experienced slower growth rates and a recovery appears to be in place for area restaurants."

As sales continue to climb, the number of eateries in Midland are increasing as well. Restaurant permits issued by the Midland Health Department currently stand at 303,

Old control technology puts chaos in air travel

New York Times News Service

At least 11 times in the last year, air traffic control centers have stumbled or broken down completely, robbing controllers of the tools they use to keep airplanes separated and on course, sometimes leaving them completely deaf, dumb and blind. The main problem, everyone agrees, is that some computers that help controllers track airplanes are at least 25 years old and long past due for replacement, but updated technology has been delayed because contractors have not been able to write the software for new equipment.

Even thought the Federal Aviation Administration is facing a difficult stretch, until new systems are designed, tested and installed, it is doing something surprising with maintenance: cutting back. It is also letting equipment go unattended on night shifts, eliminating training for technicians and cutting back on hiring, so that in some busy air traffic control centers half the technicians are eligible to retire.

Even if the surge in failures of traffic control computers never results in a crash — and none has so far — each new breakdown delays anywhere from dozens to hundreds of flights, which the airlines say costs them millions and costs passengers even more.

In this rough period, the short-term outlook is dismal. Many of the technicians who can retire are likely to do so this year or next because Congress is planning to cut the retirement benefits of those who retire later on. Lawmakers have already cut the pay of some of them by elim-

Popularity of weapons shows reveals American interest in, love of guns

By Robert Dvorchak
Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — As Congress worries about terrorism, as Bill Clinton vows to keep his assault weapon ban and as we ponder the death of 168 people in Oklahoma City, much of America is marching to a different drummer.

So many Americans love guns.

On any given weekend, in exhibition halls and civic centers, promoters are staging 30 to 40 major gun shows. Such is the fascination with guns that federal officials say the number is probably more like 1,000 a week, counting local events in town halls, school gymnasiums and the like.

A gun show is part ammo bazaar, part military surplus flea market, part memorabilia display. And like shopping at the mall, it's a social event — though one laden with politics and deadly weaponry.

Take, for example, the recent two-day Las Vegas Gun & Knife Show. There was no ban on assault rifles here. And here, the Second Amendment was the first amendment.

"Everything to you guys is an assault weapon. You don't

Growing pains

Schools start year with record enrollments

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

For years Midland citizens have gotten up at public school board meetings and touted the Tall City "as a great place to raise your kids." No matter what the problem parents found with schools, they preferred Midland when comparing the city and schools to large metropolitan areas. Even when the economic downturn of the 1980s saw cities all over Texas lose enrollments, Midland Independent School District defied the odds by consistently setting record enrollments. Some parents said, when they lost their jobs, they dug in their heels and changed careers to avoid moving.

Now the Tall City is reporting a retail boom and local principals say the schools are beginning to experience growing pains, and it's only a few days into the school year.

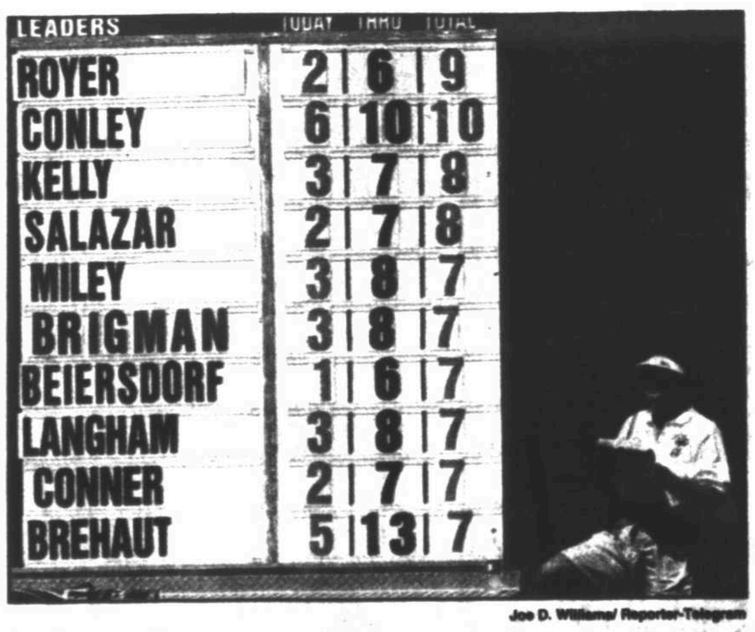

Is Midland really getting bigger? Just swing by any school in Midland County — public or private — and check for yourself. Enrollments are up all over the county and, only a few days into the 1995-96 school year, local private schools already have waiting lists.

'We have certainly shown a good increase compared to this time last year. People just really seem to be pleased with what we are doing... .'

— Eddie Lee, superintendent, Midland Christian School

In Odessa, the University of Texas of the Permian Basin also reported Friday that enrollment is up almost 8 percent over last year. The number of university students enrolled is 1,186, compared to the 1994 enrollment of 1,100. UTPB Registrar Nan Goodwin cited "student friendly" course offerings for the enrollment growth. "Whenever possible, we will develop more classes for the summer session and set up courses on a three-week schedule for students," she said.

Accident kills 3 top U.S. officials en route to peace talks in Sarajevo

Three Top U.S. Officials Killed En Route to Peace Talks

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Three top U.S. diplomats heading to peace talks in Sarajevo were killed Saturday when their armored vehicle plunged 100 yards off a muddy road and exploded.

A French peacekeeper was also killed in the accident, and two Americans and two French peacekeepers were injured.

Robert Frasure, a deputy assistant secretary of state, and Nelson Drew, a National Security Council aide, were killed instantly. Joseph Kruzel, deputy assistant secretary of defense for European and NATO affairs, died at the scene of injuries he suffered in the crash, officials said.

President Clinton said the deaths of the "immensely talented, patriotic Americans" would not halt U.S. peace efforts in the former Yugoslavia.

"The thing that they would want us most to do is to press ahead, and that's what we intend to do," he said in Jackson, Wyo., where he is vacationing.

Nonetheless, the loss of expertise — Frasure had been chief U.S. negotiator for Bosnia since early this year — dealt a severe blow to diplomatic efforts to end the war.

Former President Jimmy Carter, who traveled to Sarajevo last December to try to end the war, said the accident was "a tragic loss to our country and to prospects for peace in the Balkans."

The leader of the U.S. negotiating team, Assistant Secretary of State Richard Holbrooke, said he and the other diplomats would fly back to Washington with the bodies, then continue their mission in Sarajevo.

"Three brave, brilliant, fine American career government officials, who were devoting their lives to the cause of peace in this part of the world, have died in this accident," Holbrooke said.

Holbrooke and other members of the team met Saturday afternoon with Bosnian President Alija Izetbegovic, said State Department spokesman David Johnson.

Izetbegovic offered his condolences at the U.S. Embassy in Sarajevo, and said the diplomats "were on their way here to serve us in trying to find the true path to peace."

The crash occurred less than four miles outside of Sarajevo, on a dirt road muddied by rain and fog. The road led to the Mount Igman route — the only way to reach Sarajevo since Serb threats to target aircraft closed Sarajevo's airport early this year.

Serb gunners have often attacked convoys on the route, which Bosnian Foreign Minister Muhamed Sacirbey called "the most dangerous road in the world." But officials said the crash was an accident.

"There was no shooting by the Serbs. The driver lost control of the vehicle because of bad conditions on the road," said Lt. Col. Pierre Briere, a U.N. spokesman.

The vehicle had moved onto the soft shoulder of the road to avoid an oncoming U.N. convoy when it slipped, plunged down a steep slope and rolled over several times, said State Department spokesman David Johnson.

U.N. officials said it hit two land mines during the plunge, but Johnson said an investigation had indicated there apparently were no mines.

A U.N helicopter was to fly the three wooden coffins, covered with American flags, to Croatia on Sunday. Bosnian Serbs gave permission for the flight over territory they control.

The delegation was on its fifth day of shuttling around the former Yugoslavia with a peace initiative that got a warm reception from Croatian President Franjo Tudjman and generally positive response from Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic.

Details have not been officially disclosed, but reports have said it would lift economic sanctions against Serb-led Yugoslavia and provide international aid to rebuild Bosnia.

France stiffens security, seeks clues in bombing

PARIS (AP) — Steeling the French capital against a "terrorist enterprise," police sealed or removed hundreds of trash cans Friday in a high-profile security sweep after the city's second bombing in three weeks.

The government said it was too soon to know whether Thursday's blast was linked to the July 25 subway bombing that killed seven people and injured 84. This week's attack, near the Arc de Triomphe, wounded 17 people.

Police blamed the subway bombing on Muslim extremists fighting in Algeria's 3 1/2-year-old civil war. Islamic radicals are angry at the French government for supporting the military-backed regime in its former colony.

No one has claimed responsibility for either attack, but police have said that in both cases it was the same kind of bomb, made from a readily available butane canister.

Such a device hidden in a trash can near Paris' famed arch sprayed five-inch nails and hex nuts into a crowded street Thursday. A fire department official at the scene said the device was "exactly the same" as the one used in the subway attack.

However, a police spokesman said Friday, speaking on customary anonymity: "At this point in the investigation, nothing allows us to conclude that the same people are responsible for both attacks."

Mayor Jean Tiberi appealed to Parisians to stay calm yet "remain vigilant" to thwart any further terrorism. "No one can say if we are in the middle of a series of attacks," he said.

Branding the latest attack the work of "a terrorist enterprise," investigators said they were studying a witness' account. They declined to elaborate.

But one witness said he was riding by on a bicycle when he saw two men trying to stuff a package into a trash can near the Arc de Triomphe just before the explosion. He told French television he helped police create two composite sketches of the men.

With police suspicion falling on extremist Islamic groups, Foreign Minister Herve de Charette urged the French to remember that mainstream Islam "merits our respect ... (and) profoundly condemns terrorism."

The Islamic Salvation Front, one of the militant groups trying to topple the Algerian government, condemned the attack on Friday, as did the Union of Islamic Organizations of France.

50 years later, Japanese students still learn how to view World War II

By David Thurber
Associated Press

TOKYO — As Prime Minister Tomiichi Murayama offered one of Japan's clearest apologies for Japanese aggression in World War II, a group of conservative scholars insisted at a rally that Japan fought in self-defense.

And a few days earlier, Japan's new education minister, Yoshinobu Shimamura, said he believed Japan shouldn't keep apologizing for the war that killed at least 20 million Asians.

Fifty years after its surrender in World War II, Japan still hasn't reached a consensus on its role in the war — or even on when it began.

At fault, many say, is a centralized educational system that continues to regulate how much — or how little — students are taught about the war.

And outside of schools, lingering ideological divisions have blocked constructive discussions of the war, just as sharply divergent American views on the atomic bombing of Hiroshima caused the recent cancellation of an exhibit at Washington's Smithsonian Institution.

Historians say Japan's divisions and educational controls arose in the process of the country's rebuilding from the war.

Unlike in Germany, where Nazism was thoroughly discredited and rejected by postwar governments, Japan's Allied occupiers decided to retain the emperor and other government institutions to ease the postwar transition.

"Militarists were able to regain positions of power, and as a result, the postwar government was not eager to have people believe the war was wrong," historian Saburo Ienaga says.

Ienaga says the Education Ministry remained dominated by conservatives after the war and, through textbook screening, was able to control what Japanese learned about the conflict.

Ienaga, now a gaunt 81, has conducted a lonely 30-year campaign in Japan's courts to end the ministry's screening of textbooks.

All books used in Japanese schools, either public or private, must be approved by the ministry, which instructs publishers to rewrite any portions it finds inappropriate.

Authors often don't write about controversial topics to avoid prolonged negotiations with the ministry and the chance the book eventually may be rejected.

Among the most closely screened areas are descriptions of the emperor, World War II, the military and nuclear power plants, publishers say.

Critics, including Japan's neighbors, say Japanese students have only a vague and sanitized knowledge of the war as a result.

"We should be taught that the most important thing is to think on our own. However, we're forced to trust what's written (in textbooks)," Takeshi Yoro, a professor of medicine at Tokyo University, wrote in the newspaper Asahi on Tuesday, as the prime minister made his apology.

Education Ministry officials deny they are trying to mold Japanese minds, and say the screening is intended to maintain educational quality and equality.

Although the screening process has touched all textbook authors, Ienaga until recently fought the government alone in the courts.

Ienaga says he decided to sue the government in 1965 over hundreds of changes it ordered him to make in a history textbook because he believes that militaristic education in the 1930s helped lead to World War II.

"I want to do what I can to protect the freedom to teach about what happened in the terrible war so we can prevent it from occurring again," he said in an interview.

Japan's screening of textbooks began more than 100 years ago.

In 1886, it began requiring that all textbooks be certified by the Education Ministry, and in 1904, the ministry itself began writing all textbooks for elementary schools — the highest education that most people received.

Schools were consciously used to mold students into supporters of the imperial system and of Japanese military exploits in China, Korea and other parts of Asia.

Although courts have rejected Ienaga's contention that the screening process is unconstitutional, the court cases — coupled with pressure from other Asian countries — have influenced the Education Ministry.

WEATHER WATCH

Some clouds to fill Midland skies

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a high in the lower 90s and light east winds. Tonight should be fair with a low of 65 to 70, according to the National Weather Service in Midland. Monday should be partly cloudy with a high in the mid-90s.

After an overnight low of 68, Saturday's high reached 93, compared to the record high for that date of 103 set in 1994. The record low was 60 set in 1950.

STATE

Showers and thunderstorms developed over portions of Texas late Saturday, bringing with them some torrential rains. Elsewhere, skies were partly cloudy to cloudy in Texas.

North Texas skies clouded up as Saturday midday temperatures soared, with heat indexes climbing as high as 112 at Dallas Love Field airport. Scattered showers and thunderstorms continued west of Waco and were redeveloping over the northeast.

As temperatures across South Texas climbed into the 90s, scattered showers and thunderstorms developed across the region Saturday. South Texas winds were generally from the east and southeast at 10 to 15 mph. Temperatures ranged from 84 degrees to 100 degrees. A record 96 degrees was reached in Galveston. The previous record was 95 on Aug. 19, 1991.

Isolated showers and thunderstorms hit the Texas Panhandle south to the Permian Basin. Skies were clear to partly cloudy over the rest of the region. Temperatures ranged from 77 at Guadalupe Pass to 93 at San Angelo. Winds were generally east to southeast.

Forecast for North Texas calls for partly cloudy skies today. Highs will range from 95 to 102. There will be a slight chance of thunderstorms in the east and south. Tonight will be partly cloudy with a slight chance of evening thunderstorms east and south. Lows will be 71 to 77.

Expect scattered showers and thunderstorms in South texas through this evening with highs in the upper 90s, lows in the mid-70s, and light and variable winds.

West Texas and Panhandle forecast calls for fair to partly cloudy skies across the region through Monday. Widely scattered showers and thunderstorms are possible over much of the region today. Highs will range from the 80s to around 100.

NATION

The Northwest chilled to record lows Saturday and scattered thunderstorms drenched parts of the South as Hurricane Felix continued to threaten Bermuda and the East Coast.

Scattered storms moved along the coast of South Carolina, parts of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. Showers also were expected from Arizona through Colorado as thunderstorms moved through the region.

The Northeast was mostly clear with low humidity and temperatures in the low 80s, providing a break from the steamy heat that has gripped the area for weeks.

Forecasters warned Bermudans to prepare as Hurricane Felix appeared to move toward the island. The National Hurricane Center said it appeared to be on a slow loop back to the East Coast, and that residents from the Carolinas through New England should closely monitor its progress.

In the Northwest, Pocatello, Idaho, dropped to 35, the coldest August 19 in 88 years. Other record lows were set in Montana, including 45 in Billings, 30 in Helena and 35 in Kalispell.

The coldest spot in the lower 48 states was West Yellowstone, Mont., with a low of 26. The high was 99, at Maxwell Air Force Base in Alabama.

TRAVEL: Air traffic control systems malfunction inating some cost-of-living increases that other federal employees get.

For 35 years, the FAA has exerted control over all commercial airliners from takeoff to landing. Planes are tracked by tower controllers with binoculars and local radar, by controllers in Terminal Radar Approach Controls, called Tracons, which may serve several airports, and by controllers in the 20 Air Route Traffic Control Centers around the nation. The Tracons and the centers share data from a nationwide network of radar installations and talk to the planes over another network of radio transmitters and receivers. The centers also handle oceanic traffic, which they cannot see, via radio.

THERE ARE VERY few new technicians in training, but even more hiring would not help, because some vital pieces of equipment are now so old that they are operated nowhere else in the world, and the FAA stopped training technicians to maintain and repair them years ago.

Some breakdowns, like when the equipment no longer alerts controllers to potential collisions, are obvious to pilots only because they are told to wait on the ground, or to increase spacing in the sky, while the controllers reduce the traffic to a level the degraded equipment can handle. Sometimes it is obvious because there is no controller's voice at the other end of the radio; in that case, pilots may switch frequencies to try to reach the controller they just left. Occasionally they reach a controller elsewhere and ask permission for an altitude or heading change and are turned down.

The last line of defense for passenger planes is their on-board collision-avoidance systems. Two American Airlines pilots relied on that system a few months ago when faulty equipment in San Juan, P.R., led a controller to direct them toward a head-on collision.

At the same time, the breakdowns may have growing safety consequences because they are becoming more serious and stranger; there are "ghost targets" of planes on the screen that are not really in the sky, planes that do not show up at all and frequent flickers and blinks.

The air traffic controllers say that in at least one incident recently, the equipment led them to believe that it was carrying out certain automatic functions when in fact it was malfunctioning. The equipment was, in effect, lying to them about its condition.

The FAA denies that this happened, but its version of what went wrong strikes federal safety investigators as equally ominous. The FAA suggests that the problem may have been confusion among the controllers about how to manage when only some of the equipment was working — a confusion that may itself be a safety problem.

The National Transportation Safety Board is sufficiently concerned about the recent rash of failures to have sent investigators to Aurora, Ill., and other centers to explore the issue. Safety board officials said they would comment on their concerns and findings when the investigation is complete early next month.

OFTEN THE PROBLEM is old equipment failing, but the FAA has also got into trouble as it modernizes, with new equipment, evidently with bugs, breaking down. This has resulted in several power failures and the collapse last week of a Voice Switching Control System in Seattle — the first installation of this technology. It is the prototype that is supposed to replace old, less reliable connections between the centers and their radio antennas, which are spread out over the territories that the centers control.

The FAA counts 11 failures since a 79-minute power failure last Sept. 14 at the Chicago Air Route Traffic Control Center in Aurora, one of 20 high-altitude and intercity control centers around the nation; the list includes two power failures at another center in Ronkonkoma, N.Y., and one earlier this month in Oakland, Calif., along with four major computer breakdowns in the Chicago center, and others in Fort Worth and Washington. The unions representing the technicians and the controllers also cite major failures at air traffic control offices in Miami, Los Angeles, San Juan and elsewhere.

Each failure has unique aspects, but most share a common component: electronic equipment that is 30 years old and was supposed to have been replaced years ago, before crippling breakdowns became endemic to the system.

FAA officials acknowledge that they have had problems, but they defend their system.

Discussing the Aurora center's performance reliability, Martin G. Duffy, manager of the FAA Chicago Systems Management Office, said, "We are as close to 99-point-whatever as we can get." Drawing a diagram of the center's computer system for a visitor and explaining what went wrong, he pounded the blackboard for emphasis, asserting, "We moved 8,600 airplanes that day through this airspace."

UNION OFFICIALS say that they are proud of not doing any worse with equipment so old that no spare parts are commercially available and neither the manufacturer nor third-party vendors will service it.

Jack Johnson, the president of the Professional Airways Systems Specialists, the Washington-based union that represents the technicians, said that inadequate maintenance was responsible for the growing number of failures and the long periods of time it takes to rectify them.

The Oakland blackout, he pointed out, occurred just after 7:00 a.m. when a transformer blew. Transformers usually smoke before they fail; a technician on duty would literally have smelled trouble coming, he said. But there is no longer a technician on the midnight shift at Oakland, a situation that is now common throughout the FAA's system.

Short staffing was also acknowledged by the FAA as a reason that recovery was so slow from a power failure in New York in May.

Johnson's position has a self-serving element: his union is shrinking, down to 6,000 technicians today, from 11,600 in 1981, even though the number of systems that the technicians are responsible for maintaining has risen to 31,000 from 19,000. But Johnson probably does not have to worry about layoffs, given the rate at which his members can retire.

"We have cut 5,000 jobs in the last five years," said George Donohue, an assistant administrator for technology acquisition with the FAA "We cut them because we had to cut them," he said.

While the FAA's operating budgets have been flat, Donohue said, "flat means negative 3 percent a year; people forget about inflation. The Civil Service increases salaries based on the cost of living, and the work force goes down."

The agency wants to reduce its work force by 19 percent in the next five years. But it anticipates an 18 percent growth in the amount of traffic handled in that period, Donohue said.

At the New York Center, in Ronkonkoma, which has had 16 "significant outages" in which one or more major systems failed between May 1993 and last June, there are 67 technicians and support personnel, down from 108 in 1991. The FAA plans to hire 12 more, but 16 are eligible to retire.

"You can have all the air traffic controllers in the world in a center," said Henry G. Brown, the technicians union's representative at Ronkonkoma, "and if you don't have a technician to keep them going, they can all go home."

Airlines and elected officials are also increasingly concerned about equipment; the airlines recently asked the FAA to employ "utmost haste" to replace the part that has failed most often recently — the IBM 9020e, a refrigerator-sized computer with wiring that looks like cobwebs and is nearly as frail — with an interim fix by 1997, even before long-term improvements can be made in 1999.The FAA recently agreed.

The FAA acknowledges many problems, including the 9020e. A recent internal study of the New York Center found that that computer — a section of the system that takes radar data and flight-plan data from the mainframe computer and delivers it to controllers' screens — had failures 90 times between January 1992 and June 1993.

The 9020e has many redundant parts, so a failure does not always mean a breakdown. But the failures were so frequent that the complex ran without some of its backup parts 56 percent of the time during that period, the study found. That left the system one failure away from breakdown — akin to driving a car with a flat spare tire. Moreover, the study suggested that this probably represented conditions around the country.

BUT FAA OFFICIALS continue to assert that even a breakdown is safe, because generally it deprives controllers only of "enhancements," like the ability of the computers to predict and point out conflicts. They can run the system safely without these tools, managers assert, if they reduce the amount of traffic in the sky.

The amount of down time for the 9020e — which failed in the Chicago Center on July 23 and again on July 24 — doubled between the beginning of 1990 and the end of 1994, the study found.

Johnson, the technicians union president, estimated that half the technicians were already eligible to retire or would be within three years. Hiring rates are very low, and new employees get inadequate training. For example, the last training session for the part that failed in Chicago, the IBM 9020e, was in 1991. The FAA plans another session this fall at its academy in Oklahoma City, but technicians in Chicago say they are so short-staffed they wonder how they will spare anyone for training.

To find spare parts for the system, the FAA has cannibalized one of the two 9020 models it keeps in Oklahoma City; only one survives for testing and training.

"It's really strange that we continue to keep doing this," Johnson said of the cuts in the technician work force and the resulting cuts in maintenance.

FAA executives defend the trims in the work force, which has meant that parts that break tend to not get fixed. The agency dedicates lots of time to each piece of equipment when it is new, said Stanley Rivers, deputy director of the Airways Facilities Service of the FAA , which maintains the nation's network of radar equipment, radio beacons, control towers and air-traffic-control centers. After a break-in period, he said, careful records are kept about how often each part needs service, and work is scaled back accordingly.

"WE REALLY CAN'T afford to have technicians do things that are not necessary or are redundant," Rivers said. In addition, he said, there is a good reason for servicing the 1960s computers less.

"One of the things you're going to confront, particularly with older systems, with experienced technicians, is the need to not overstress the hardware," he said. Cables are brittle, vacuum tubes do not stand too much handling, circuit boards can break when flexed, and transistors can fail under the strain of testing, he said. "As the system matures, you learn that some of that can become destructive after a while."

Rivers and others acknowledge that the agency started to pare its work force years ago in anticipation of getting replacement equipment: modern computers with low-maintenance microchips that can alert users when something goes wrong. But the FAA is still dealing with equipment with vaccuum tubes, dense webs of wiring, thousands of circuit boards and other components that are as extinct outside the FAA as punch-card readers and core memories.

Rivers also played down concerns about the possibility of mass retirements. Only 30 to 40 percent of the technicians will be eligible within the next three years, he said, and "typically, they don't retire the day that they're eligible." Generally, only 13 percent of the work force retires in any given year, he said.

Union members, though, say that a congressional plan would change the rules in a way that would accelerate the retirements. Both the House and Senate have passed budget resolutions that assume a new formula for figuring benefits, based on the employee's five highest-paid years. The current formula uses the three highest-paid. Since most employees' wages increase each year, the effect is to average in some lower-wage years, thus cutting retirement benefits for people who choose to delay their retirements until the new rules take effect.

What is more, the count of who is eligible to retire is a national average, but retirements could be much higher at some centers. The case of Chicago is instructive.

AT THE AIR Route Traffic Control Center in Aurora, an outer suburb about 40 miles west of O'Hare and Midway Airports, the center has 55 technicians; 24 are eligible to retire immediately and five more will be eligible in less than three years. The last time someone was hired was three years ago, and it generally takes three to five years for a new technician to be fully qualified.

In a pinch, technicians can be reassigned from other Airways Facilities offices, but the equipment — and, therefore, the skills required to maintain and repair it — differs from post to post.

For the 9020e, the computer that failed repeatedly at Aurora, there have been no training courses since September 1991. On the two nights in July after the most recent breakdown, Peter Pecharich, a specialist on that computer, worked through the small hours of the morning, the only hours when traffic is light enough to allow maintenance to be done. Another technician there, one transferred recently from Alaska, was supposed to go to the FAA Academy in Oklahoma City for a training course on the 9020e in July, so he would be qualified to do the work, but the course was canceled. The FAA is now planning to hold an abbreviated course in October.

compared with 290 a year ago and 260 two years ago.

Although Midlanders may notice restaurants that come and go, some of the most notable newcomers belong to corporate restaurant chains. The staying power of those is generally greater than family-owned restaurants.

"We kind of thought maybe what's happening is the big guys (chains) are considering that Midland may end up being a hub for surrounding areas," said Steve Kempton general manager of Luigi's restaurant, a Permian Basin Restaurant Association board member and a Texas Restaurant Association executive board member.

Nevertheless, more restaurants mean more competition. And Midland is not having a substantial population growth, Kempton said.

"I'm concerned how small you can slice that pie ... but if they (restaurants) are done well, there's room for growth," Kempton said. "I think it's going to have to make everyone conduct their business more efficiently."

Business for the big newcomers appears to rely heavily on location. And the location of choice — in conjunction with the retail store boom — is along Loop 250.

Packed parking lots demonstrate the restaurants' popularity. Diners at the recently-opened Black-Eyed Pea said they waited 30 minutes for a table; when the Outback Steakhouse opened several months back, an hour wait was common.

"When's the Olive Garden going to open?" is an often-asked question around town. October 16, according to Orlando, Fla.-based Darden Restaurants Inc.

Meanwhile, plans are in the works to build a Spageddies and an On the Border restaurant at the northeast corner of Midland Drive and Loop 250. Projected opening date: nine months to a year.

The two chain restaurants — along with Chili's Grill & Bar — are owned by Dallas-based Brinker International.

The success of Midland's Chili's — opened in 1984 — played a large part in plans for the two additional restaurants. Among the Chili's in 45 states and 11 countries, the Midland restaurant ranks among the sales leaders, according to company officials.

"It's been the success we've had with Chili's. Success breeds success," said Lane Cardwell, executive vice president of strategic development for Brinker International.

"It's only natural if you drill and strike oil in one place you don't run across the country and drill, you drill around it," he said.

Large restaurants are not the only ones trying to make some money from loop traffic. Several fast-food eateries have recently located to the major thoroughfare — as well as elsewhere in the city.

In Midland/Odessa, fast-food restaurants account for 41 percent of diners' expenditures while businesses with table service make up the remainder, according to the TRA.

Not all new restaurants are large chains or fast-food franchises. Midland continues to have its steady stream of family-owned eateries.

For example, Joe Harper combined his many years in the retail business with his brother Johnnie Harper's many years in the food industry to open Jib's Family Restaurant in April.

"I was just tired of working for someone else and with my experience and his experience, we decided to marry the two together," Joe Harper said.

Business has been good, he said, and being well-managed with a fine product, fair prices, friendly service and a clean environment makes for a favorable future.

Among the growing competition, Midland also is seeing some diverse eateries setting up shop.

Two noteworthy restaurants — planning to open in coming months — are Hierman's Hofbrau, a brewpub that will feature a variety of on-site brewed beers, and Jazz, a Cajun-food, chain restaurant that will feature live jazz and blues during the week.

Among the variety of restaurants in Midland/Odessa, the most popular in terms of menu items are Mexican followed by hamburgers then cafe/diners, according to the TRA.

"That's a little unusual that Mexican restaurants topped out the list because typically hamburger restaurants are number one statewide," said Ms. Sherrier with the TRA. Mexican food trails second overall in Texas.

Whether it's Mexican or American, Chinese or Italian, people will seek out restaurants, and in growing numbers, according to some observers.

"I think more than ever they will," said Jib's Joe Harper.

Apocalypse now — or never? Paris buzzes with divisive nuclear testing talk

PARIS (AP) — In nightmarish detail, Pierre Vincent describes the cataclysmic chain reaction he thinks France could trigger by setting off a nuclear test blast under an island in the South Pacific.

In his doomsday scenario, the shock wave topples a brittle undersea volcano. That triggers a tidal wave that tears open the sea floor and unleashes vast amounts of radioactivity, forever spoiling a tropical paradise.

C'est impossible, scoffs Yves Galland. He's convinced that detonating atomic weapons a half-mile below the surface of coral-encrusted Mururoa Atoll, in French Polynesia, will release no more radiation than what's already in the Paris subway.

That gulf between Vincent, a respected geologist, and Galland, a Cabinet minister, underscores the debate now polarizing the French. Just what will happen when France sets of the first of eight planned blasts next month at Mururoa, southeast of Hawaii? Apocalypse now? Or never?

Paris these days is a nuclear cafe buzzing with divisive test talk.

"Reports contradict each other, experts oppose experts," the newspaper L'Est Republicain grumbled in an editorial this week. "One says white: no health hazard. The other says black: watch out for radioactive leaks."

France says seven or eight blasts are needed to develop computer simulations that will make further testing unnecessary, and has promised to sign a global test ban treaty next year. President Jacques Chirac, who announced in June he would break a 3-year-old testing moratorium, insists the tests pose "no ecological harm."

Trying to quell an international outcry — and counter French television's misleading use of a mushroom cloud to symbolize the tests — France issued a report this month that makes it sound as though exploding a warhead underground is about as seismically exciting as lighting up a Gauloise.

The report said the world's three primary sources of artificial radiation are atmospheric nuclear weapons tests, major nuclear accidents and byproducts of nuclear energy production — not the type of underground testing France wants to resume.

After 30 years of underground tests, "the percentage of radionucleids in Polynesia is less than that of France or northern Europe," said Gen. Michel Boileau, of France's Nuclear Test Center.

The new silk road: A 2,000-year-old trade route revives after Soviet rule

Editor's note: The ancient Silk Road, which linked China and Europe across the deserts and mountains of Central Asia, has been reborn since the collapse of the Soviet Union and the opening of long-sealed borders. An Associated Press reporter traveled the new Silk Road to explore the legendary trading route.

By Ggreg Myre
Associated Press

KHORGOS, ON THE CHINA-KAZAKHSTAN BORDER— If the Silk Road traders of 2,000 years ago were to guide their camel caravans into the bustling new bazaars here, it wouldn't take them long to cut a deal.

The Chinese stereos, Korean televisions and Japanese cameras might baffle them, but they wouldn't miss a beat haggling over Oriental carpets, Iranian fruit and Indian sandals.

They'd soon sniff out the value of the Russian vodka, French blue jeans, counterfeit American dollars and illicit drugs, all of which began to flow when this isolated frontier was unsealed three years ago.

After an intermission that lasted centuries, the Silk Road has been reborn in the cities and towns that dot the plains of Central Asia, a region starved of consumer goods and relegated to drab, dreary poverty during Soviet rule.

"Until four years ago, no one went to the bazaars. It was only for secondhand goods," said Yershad Israelilov, a 27-year-old Kazakh trader who was quick to capitalize when borders were thrown open after the Soviet collapse in 1991.

"Now," he said, "our whole life is a bazaar."

Khorgos, a small farming town in urgent need of a fresh coat of paint, was such a backwater that it didn't appear on many Soviet maps. And for good reason. Almost no one was allowed to use it to cross the tense Soviet-Chinese boundary.

But with Kazakhstan's independence, Khorgos suddenly emerged as the main overland trading route of the revived Silk Road, bringing a flood of Chinese goods and hints of prosperity to a long depressed region.

Set against a chain of snow-capped mountains, the new Chinese Market has hundreds of small traders offering imported goods in the Kazakh town of Zharkent (formerly Panfilov), 20 miles from the border.

Such trading outposts marked the original Silk Road, which emerged in the 2nd century B.C. as a network of routes that criss-crossed Central Asia. Silk, spices and jade went from China to Europe, and in return came gold, silver and pottery. The leading cities of Samarkand and Bukhara, both in modern-day Uzbekistan, achieved near mythic status.

In its turbulent history the region was ruled at various times by Alexander the Great, Genghis Khan and Tamerlane, resulting in a cultural goulash. The gene pool is so mixed you can find individuals with blond hair, green eyes and Asian features.

The Silk Road flourished for more than 1,000 years, but was abandoned after European sailors mastered the East-West sea routes 500 years ago. In this century, the Soviets completely cut off Central Asia from the outside world.

Since the borders reopened, Israelilov has been making two trips a week to Khorgos on the Chinese side of the border, stocking up on Chinese beer and lemon vodka, as well as clothes and sunglasses.

On his latest excursion, Israelilov filled his car with 20 boxes of cheap Chinese sunglasses along with dozens of empty boxes bearing Ray-Ban labels, highlighting the open trade in counterfeit goods.

It's a profitable business. Israelilov and his extended family still live on their Soviet-era farm which lacks running water indoors. The outhouse is in the yard next to the shed where they keep their cows, and the family has to cross the street to use the communal bath. But in the past three years, they've moved enough merchandise to buy three new cars.

While most traders still cross the endless empty deserts by road, Central Asia is open to international air traffic and there's a thriving market in chartered shopping trips.

At the airport in Kazakhstan's capital, Almaty, a plane load of impatient Kazakhs had just arrived from a shopping spree in Pakistan. There was furious pushing, shoving and shouting as passengers battled to claim their luggage — dozens of identical plastic sacks stuffed with leather jackets, jeans, shoes, radios and televisions.

Besieged customs officials threw up their hands in despair, unable to push the oversized sacks through the airport X-ray machine.

It's a daily scene at the airport, as shoppers return from India, the United Arab Emirates and the western Chinese cities of Kashgar and Urumchi.

Still in their formative stages, the Central Asian nations are being wooed by China, Russia, Iran, Turkey and the United States, all vying for political and economic clout in a region flush with oil and other natural resources.

Nearly 100 U.S. firms have opened offices in three years, including Chevron, Citibank, IBM and AT&T.

However, prosperity has been patchy, limited mostly to strategically placed border towns such as Khorgos. Most of Central Asia remains mired in recession. Even Samarkand, the greatest Silk Road city of all, awaits a return of its long-lost glory.

The old Samarkand bazaar, set in the shadow of a crumbling 15th century mosque built by Tamerlane, is a riot of color, sounds and smells. Heavyset women with gold teeth and brightly colored head scarves sell fruits and vegetables, some cheap clothes and little else.

You won't find any of the luxuries that were on display a millennium ago. Now, you'd have to settle for a polyester track suit made in a Chinese sweat shop.

But there are traces of the old traditions. Carpet maker Mohammed Bhagishi, driven from his native Afghanistan by civil war, arrived two years ago to set up a new factory on the outskirts of Samarkand.

More than 50 women work the looms, making copies of 19th century carpets that hang on the walls.

In surprisingly strong showing, Gramm ties front-runner Dole in Iowa straw poll

AMES, Iowa (AP) — In a surprisingly strong showing, Texas Sen. Phil Gramm tied Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole in a Iowa's Republican presidential straw poll Saturday night, holding his own against the GOP front-runner in his Midwestern back yard.

Dole and Gramm each got 2,582 votes, according to results the Iowa Republican Party said were tentative because of the closeness. Commentator Pat Buchanan was a distant third with 1,922 votes and former Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander fourth with 1,156 votes.

The remarkable results capped a carnival like day at the Hilton Coliseum in Ames, as campaigns brought in busloads of supporters from out of state in an effort to prove their early organizational prowess.

The influence of outsiders led several of the candidates to characterize the event as meaningless — and hardly a judge of Iowa organizations.

But Dole just a few days ago had predicted a victory here, and his aides were clearly despondent as the results were tabulated. Gramm, on the other hand, was exultant, returning to the convention hall to claim the tie as a big victory.

"The people of Iowa want to put the federal government on a budget like everybody else and that is why they voted for me tonight," Gramm said. "If we can beat Bob Dole in Iowa we can beat him anywhere in America."

Dole advisers insisted that would never happen when the votes actually count.

Scott Reed, Dole's campaign manager, disputed the notion that the vote was a rejection of Dole's message, or that the combined Gramm-Buchanan vote showed deep dissatisfaction with the front-runner among the party's conservative activists.

"All it tells me is they did a good job of getting a lot of people to come to Ames today," Reed said. "This is not going to affect the results of the caucuses in February."

Woman says unidentified leg might belong to missing son

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — A leg found in the bombed-out federal building but not yet matched to any known victim may belong to a man who was last seen at the building shortly before the blast, his mother said Saturday.

Roberta Bennett said she was told her son Sidney Aaron McCallum was dropped off at the building's Social Security office the morning of the April 19 explosion.

Scientists say the leg probably came from a man about 30 with dark hair and fair skin, a description that matches the 29-year-old McCallum.

The leg also had on a military-style boot, Fred Jordan, the state medical examiner, has said. Ms. Bennett said the last time she saw her son, about three weeks before the bombing, he was wearing military boots.

Ms. Bennett was told about her son's disappearance by one of his acquaintances about three days after the bombing, which killed at least 168 people.

Ms. Bennett, who did not go to police, said at first she just assumed her son had gone off without telling anybody, as he has done in the past.

DNA tests on the leg at an FBI laboratory in Washington are expected to be completed within a few days. If testing fails to turn up a match to any of the known victims, then there is little hope of identifying the leg, Jordan said.

The death count will probably be raised to 169 if the tests fail to turn up a match, he said.

A spokesman for the medical examiner said the office will ask police to look into Ms. Bennett's report. It was not immediately clear whether she would be asked to provide any samples that could help in the DNA tests.

The lawyer for bombing suspect Timothy McVeigh has suggested that the leg may belong to the "real" bomber.

GOP drains direct loans for students

By Adam Clymer
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — After complaints from banks that have seen their share of student loans drop sharply, Republicans have changed the accounting rules to make it easier for Congress to kill off the banks' competition — a federal program that makes direct loans from the Treasury.

The Republican-led House of Representatives has also voted to reduce the amount the Department of Education can spend supervising the system of federal guarantees for banks that make student loans — a program that has frequently had management problems. The Senate has yet to act on the House proposal.

Under current law, the direct-loan program is expected to provide $13.8 billion in student loans in the year beginning Oct. 1, while federally guaranteed bank loans will provide $15.3 billion. In 1993, the year before the direct program was created with strong support from President Clinton, bank loans made up all $19.2 billion in federal student loans.

The direct loans have proved popular with students because the money comes through faster, and with university administrators, who have found them to be simpler to administer. Banks, however, have long treasured the guaranteed loan program, which offers profits without much less risk than they have on other loans.

A big boost for the direct loan program, enacted in the 1993 budget reconciliation bill, was an accounting rule that required the Congressional Budget Office and the Office of Management and Budget to exclude federal administrative expenses when calculating the effects of loan programs on the federal budget.

Both sides agree this gave direct loans an unfair advantage in any budget-making comparison, since the direct-loan program gets more federal money for administrative purposes.

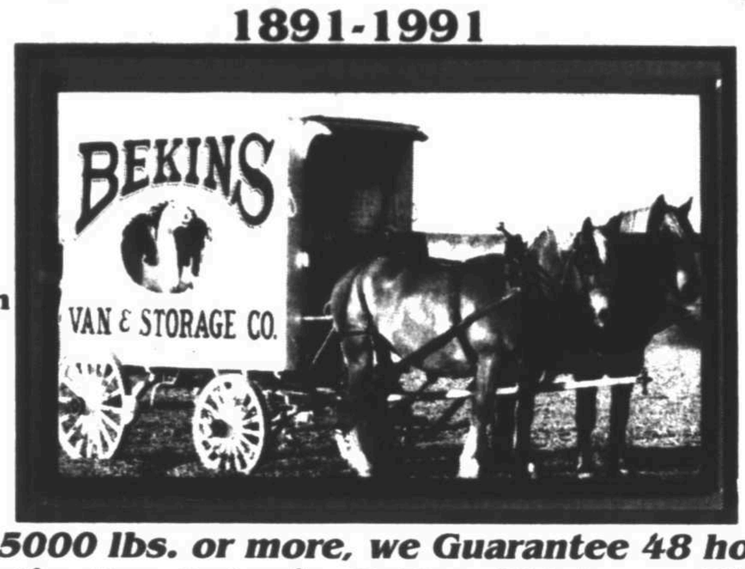

Seizing on that, Republican foes of the direct-loan program put a very unusual directive into this year's budget resolution. It ordered the Congressional Budget Office to include administrative expenses of the direct-loan program, which are estimated at $441 million for next year, in its budget calculations — but not the government's outlays to administer the guaranteed loan program, which amount to about $270 million a year.

When the Budget Office followed orders last month the Republicans hailed the figures as a reason for "scrapping the direct-lending program," in the words of Rep. Howard P. McKeon, the California Republican who heads the subcommittee dealing with higher education.

But the Clinton administration, Senate Democrats and many supporters of direct loans cry foul.

Tales from the crypt: Families of dead face grave mystery

By Jeff Wilson
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Families who long ago buried their grief with their loved ones at two cemeteries are facing a second loss, as they search crypts and peek into coffins looking for bodies that just aren't there.

"They've been dug up," said Robin Blanton after searching Lincoln Memorial Park in suburban Carson for her father and great-grandfather.

Bodies were plucked from caskets minutes after last rites and stacked in nearby mass graves so the burial plots could be resold, according to two class-action lawsuits filed last week against Lincoln and Paradise Memorial Park in Santa Fe Springs.

At Paradise, caskets also were reused, one of the suits claims.

The Lincoln suit claimed up to 150,000 bodies may have been mishandled.

"It's probably one of the most horrific things I've ever seen," said attorney Jeffrey W. Steinberger, who filed both suits.

"What happened to 'rest in peace'? They were supposed to be resting in peace," said DeLong Jackson after locating graves of three relatives. "We found them, but we don't know if they're there."

"At Lincoln, the relatives destroyed the mausoleum, opening up crypts to find relatives. There were no bodies and no caskets and no decomposing anything in there," Steinberger said.

"My father was put in there in 1993 and now he's gone. We didn't watch them seal it. You think you're putting them to rest and they aren't here," said Stacey Oliver.

Both cemeteries also are subjects of criminal investigations.

"I've never seen anything as disgusting as this, disturbing the dead," said Louis Bonsignore, deputy director of the Department of Consumer Affairs.

The state seized control of Paradise in June. The state Cemetery Board on Thursday confiscated bank accounts and records of Hollywood Memorial Park, operators of Lincoln, and on Friday seized control of the 20-acre cemetery.

The Lincoln endowment and trust fund was $450,000 short.

"The owners have admitted that they took the money. Some $600,000 should have been there and there's $142,000 now. It's grand theft," said Ray Giunta, executive officer of the Cemetery Board.

Officials at Hollywood Memorial Park declined to comment on the suit and state investigation, said a receptionist who refused to give her name.

Paradise owners Alma Fraction, her daughter Felicia Fraction and son Victor Fornter have gone into hiding since the state took over their cemetery, authorities said.

The suits also claimed local and state governmental agencies failed to enforce laws.

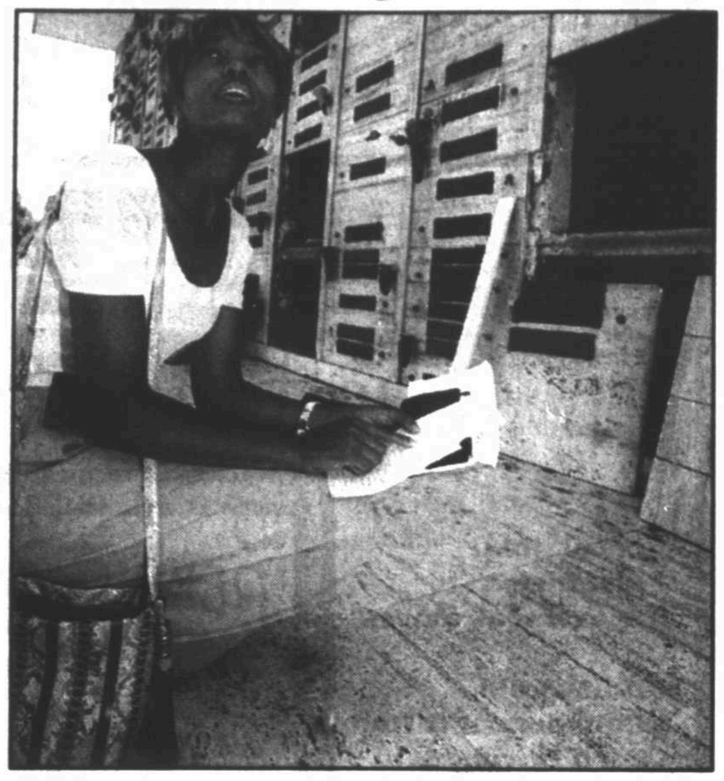

Last week, relatives descended on Lincoln's dying, brown lawns.

Monica Jackson watered the grass at her father's grave and polished the marker.

"The headstone is cracked and the dirt is loose. I'll never know if he's in there," said Jackson. "This really hurts. Who wants their relatives messed with?"

"I found my brother's gravestone in the (Lincoln cemetery) Dumpster, said Reyvada Tave.

Blanton, who couldn't find her father and great-grandfather, pointed to a rifled nearby crypt with an open coffin. "There's a man in that casket. That's somebody's relative out there like that."

LAPD in wake of Fuhrman tapes: to protect and serve or to beat, harass?

By Deborah Hastings
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Detective Mark Fuhrman's boasting about police brutality is just about the last thing the Los Angeles Police Department needs.

Understaffed, overworked and burdened with antiquated equipment, the 8,200-member force still hasn't recovered from the 1991 videotaped beating of black motorist Rodney King, or three days of race rioting that followed the 1992 state court acquittals of four white police officers accused of beating King.

Now, according to trial attorneys and transcripts of taped interviews reviewed by The Associated Press, Fuhrman, a key witness at the murder trial of O.J. Simpson, boasts of beating suspected gang members in 1978 until their "faces were just mush."

Fuhrman also spews racial epithets and sexist remarks during the 12 hours of tape-recorded interviews he had with a screenwriting professor from 1985 to 1994.

Fuhrman gave conflicting accounts of the beating in transcripts reviewed by the AP, and his stories have been debunked by a police sergeant who was at the scene in 1978. Nonetheless, the tapes are an embarrassment to the LAPD.

They threw Simpson's trial into chaos last week, and created a public relations nightmare for city officials and Police Chief Willie Williams.

"It is outrageous to paint the entire men and women of this department ... with this broad brush of accusation, particularly based on a report that neither the commissioner nor myself has had the opportunity to read," Williams told reporters Friday.

He joined Police Commission President Deirdre Hill in demanding to hear the Fuhrman tapes. The judge limited their release to attorneys in the case, but partial transcripts have leaked out.

"Our officers say, 'Let's do whatever's necessary to ensure the reputation that we are not a brutal, we're not a racist, (or) an abusive organization," Williams said.

But just last month, the predominantly Hispanic neighborhood of Lincoln Heights erupted after police killed a 14-year-old boy who, officers said, pointed a gun.

Residents heaved rocks and bottles, claiming Jose Antonio Gutierrez carried only a flashlight. The shooting is under investigation.

And on Friday, the department was hit with another discrimination suit, on behalf of seven black officers, accusing the department of condoning racism by failing to stop retaliation "against its black officers who have complained about widespread, systematic racism with the department."

Also last week, a black police officers' organization even filed suit against the police union, calling it a "bastion of white supremacy" and claiming it routinely denies representation to black officers.

In May, a black sergeant filed a lawsuit claiming that, in over 21 years, he was repeatedly subjected to racial slurs and discrimination.

It's not as though the department is ignorant of its problems. It was given a mandate for reform by the Christopher Commission, an investigatory panel appointed after King's beating.

The commission uncovered evidence of widespread racism and sexism, including transcripts of radio messages in which officers called blacks "Zulus" and talked of raping women with police batons.

Four years later, many of the commission's recommendations for retraining officers and disciplining problem ones still exist only on paper.

"There is some frustration about implementation," department spokesman Tim McBride said last week. "But it's a very comprehensive training system and we'd rather do it right than do it in a substandard way."

The police union and many black community leaders refused to comment on the tapes.

Detective account of police brutality improved with time

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Detective Mark Fuhrman appears to have embellished his most explosive tale of police brutality, according police officials and transcripts of taped interviews that might become evidence in the O.J. Simpson trial.

When Fuhrman first told a screenwriter in April 1985 about torturing gang members after a 1978 police shooting, he said he and three other officers beat up four suspects, one of whom had to have 70 stitches, according to transcripts reviewed by The Associated Press.

But the transcripts show that just a few weeks later, Fuhrman told Laura Hart McKinny it was just him and his partner against four suspects, and that one of them died as a result of their beatings.

Fuhrman's stories were debunked on Saturday by a retired police sergeant who arrived at the scene minutes after two police officers were shot in East Los Angeles on Nov. 18, 1978.

"That just didn't happen that way," Michael Middleton said by phone from New Hampshire, where he works as an author.

Superior Court Judge Lance Ito could rule as early as Monday on whether to allow the defense to play excerpts of the tapes for the jury in an effort to challenge Fuhrman's trustworthiness.

Public hospitals around country cut services in face of pressures

By Kevin Sack
N.Y. Times News Service

ATLANTA — Battered by new market forces and intense pressure on governments to reduce spending on the poor, public hospitals from Los Angeles to New York are cutting back on basic services and confronting the once unthinkable prospect that they may be closed or sold.

The trend, fed by anti-tax fervor and in some cases anti-immigrant sentiments, as well as heightened competition in the health care industry, portends the demise of an American medical tradition that dates back more than two centuries.

In places like New York, where a mayoral commission recommended this week that the city dispose of all 11 municipal hospitals, health care experts say that closing public hospitals would leave poor people with greatly reduced access to medicine.

The vacuum would be created at a time when the number of uninsured Americans — 41 million — continues to grow and when the prospects for nationalized health coverage are all but dead.

Those who favor deep cuts in financing of public hospitals argue that governments' can no longer afford to pay for them in the face of rising costs. But the health care experts say that many of the poorest Americans, who are often also the sickest Americans, would simply vanish from the health care system.

The looming crisis could also bring the elimination of expensive services that the public hospitals provide to both rich and poor, including burn units, trauma centers, psychiatric wards and public health clinics.

Several medical historians said the movement to abandon public hospitals reflects a marked political, and even philosophical change from a time when governments considered health care for the poor to be an almost moral obligation.

> 'What is so amazing about it is ... we are doing it at a time when the number of uninsured people is climbing.'
> — Sare Rosenbaum, co-directorof the Center for Health Policy Research at George Washington University

"I find it unthinkable," said Sara Rosenbaum, co-director of the Center for Health Policy Research at George Washington University.

"What is so amazing about it is not only that we are dismantling systems of this magnitude with relatively little thought, but we are doing it at a time when the number of uninsured people is climbing. You couldn't pick a worse time."

James R. Tallon Jr., president of the United Hospital Fund, a philanthropic and research group, said, "In the long run, it means an increasingly large number of people in our society are going to have a hard time getting health care."

No public hospital in a large city has shut down since 1977, when Philadelphia General closed its doors. But health care experts say that it is only a matter of time before many of the nation's 450 public hospitals will collapse.

"I think 20 percent of the American hospitals will close in the next 10 years and maybe 40 percent of the public hospitals," said James R. Knickman, vice president of the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, the country's largest health care philanthropy.

Burt Margolin, the Los Angeles County health czar, predicted that one to three of the county's six public hospitals might have to close by the end of the year.

Those predictions can only grow more dire if the Republican Congress acts on its intention to make deep cuts in Medicare and Medicaid, the government health care programs for the elderly and poor, which serve as the primary sources of revenue for public hospitals.

The report this week by the commission of Mayor Rudolph W. Giuliani of New York is only the latest evidence of a rapidly accelerating move toward governments' divesting of public hospitals. The commission concluded that city-run hospitals and clinics are poorly prepared to compete in a managed-care marketplace.

The panel's motivation was not only to save money, a mayoral adviser said, but for the city to get more value for the billions of dollars it spends on health care.

In Los Angeles County, the board of supervisors voted recently to cut nearly half of the financing for the county's $2.5 billion hospital and clinic system. On Oct. 1, it plans to eliminate 75 percent of the outpatient services at the county's six hospitals, close all six of its comprehensive health centers and close 29 of its 39 community clinics.

At the District of Columbia General Hospital in Washington, officials reduced their beds to 250 from 410 this year.

DALLAS — When his wife met him at the door that day, Carlton Stowers realized she had been crying and he sensed at once that something was dreadfully wrong.

"It's Anson," she said, burying her head in his shoulder.

Though not Anson's mother, Pat Stowers knew too well the troubled relationship between her husband and his 25-year-old son.

"He's in the county jail," she said. "I was so afraid you'd hear about it on the radio. I'm sorry ... so sorry."

Anson's history of drug abuse, thefts and robbery raced through his mind as he mentally inventoried the possibilities.

"What's he done?" Stowers asked wearily.

"He's killed Annette," Pat whispered.

So writes Carlton Stowers in "Sins of the Son," a heart-wrenching book about his firstborn's descent into the criminal underworld.

ON NOV. 16, 1988, as Stowers was completing one of his chilling true crime books, "Innocence Lost," Anson graduated from major mischief to homicide. Strung out in a drug-induced fury, he murdered his ex-wife Annette, 25.

"Sins of the Son" is not a true crime story in the traditional sense.

"It is, simply, a story of the lives of two people — my son and me — who have traveled a bumpy, sometimes misdirected 30-year course marked by the ordinary and the extraordinary," Stowers writes in the book's preface.

"At best, putting the story to paper has provided me some understanding, some logical sorting of things that have benefited me and, I hope, might be of some aid to others."

"Sins of the Son" is powerful and tragic personal journalism.

The Dallas author, 53, established himself with "Careless Whispers," which won the Mystery Writers of America award for true crime, and the more recent "Open Secrets."

BUT THIS BOOK says author-child psychiatrist Jonathan Kellerman, will "immerse you in a heartbreaking and courageous and compulsively readable story devoid of self-pity or pat theories. A remarkably honest, sometimes cold-eyed account of a special kind of parental terror wrought by one of our finest crime writers out of the depths of his own nightmare."

AS A YOUNG sports writer, Stowers, with his first wife and infant son, bounced around the newspaper circuit, from Abilene to Roswell, N.M., to Lubbock and finally Dallas.

Anson was 5 years old and Stowers was working for The Dallas Morning News when a second son, Ashley, was born. But the marriage would not last.

Divorced, working as a free-lance writer and living alone in the Texas Hill Country, Stowers was delightfully stunned one day when his ex-wife called to say he could come get his two boys.

He would later gain formal custody.

Anson was a third-grader and Ashley was in kindergarten when they joined their father in the small town of Comfort.

"Comfort, with its gentle, carefree lifestyle and warm acceptance of a bachelor father and two sons, had provided a marvelous healing ground," Stowers wrote.

"In the years to come, however, I would learn that deep invisible wounds remained. They would finally reveal themselves in the steadily growing anger of my elder son."

ANSON WAS 12 when he and his best friend were caught stealing cigarettes from the local drugstore. But it was three years later before the awful reality set in.

By then, Stowers was back in Dallas working for the News' Sunday magazine.

"Adult authority, on the home-front or at school, became his mortal enemy," Stowers recalled.

Anson's schoolwork fell off, he rebelled at any hint of discipline and he began disappearing for short periods of time without explanation. Soon he was in jail on suspicion of theft.

"The only question I have right now is why."

"I don't know," Anson shrugged.

There were more thefts, drugs and a stint in juvenile detention. In desperation, Stowers enrolled his son in a private school. That ended when Anson was accused of attempting to rape a female classmate.

He vigorously professed his innocence.

"Do you believe me?" he asked his father.

"I want to believe you," Stowers replied.

A polygraph cleared Anson.

"In the years to come, I would reflect often on the event, coming to view it as one of my greatest failures," Stowers wrote. "...Though he has not mentioned it to this day, he was, I'm certain, grievously disappointed by my reservation."

SOON ANSON WAS gone again, this time in a stolen pickup. He escaped jail by entering a drug abuse facility in Vernon, but two months later he was discharged as hopeless.

Back home, Anson stole a car for a joyride and was involved in a minor wreck. Placed in a minimum security Dallas jail, he escaped and was on the run for two weeks.

He subsequently was convicted of auto theft and placed on probation.

It was during this period that Stowers noticed something else disturbing about his son, then 17. His romantic endeavors were obsessive, smothering affairs.

"To Anson, there was no middle ground, no concept of a casual, friendly relationship. He fell in love with each new girlfriend."

There were fleeting periods of relief and even fewer reasons for optimism. Stowers himself notified police after Anson stole his car and began forging his father's name on checks.

Before he was caught, Anson robbed a Louisiana roadhouse and this time he went to jail.

When not fighting with fellow inmates, he was assaulting guards, and soon wound up in a restraining jacket and locked away in a padded cell.

During his imprisonment, doctors developed a profile of Anson as angry, frustrated and antisocial, a young man without guilt or remorse who was arrogant and manipulative.

The doctors also concluded, wrote Stowers, that Anson "demonstrated an extremely hostile attitude toward his father."

ANSON WAS STILL in a Louisiana jail in March 1981 when Stowers married Pat Cruce, a divorced mother of two sons. That night Pat's older son was inducted into the National Honor Society.

"What miracle had she performed ...?" Stowers wondered secretly. "And how much had my life's missteps been responsible for Anson being locked away in a jail cell hundreds of miles away?"

Eight months later, Anson escaped and returned home in a stolen car. His freedom was short lived.

On Jan. 21, 1982, at age 19, Anson was sentenced to 15 years in the Texas Department of Corrections but would serve less than a fifth of his term.

Paroled in 1984, he seemed to be getting his life in order. He got a job and began dating a former classmate, Annette Robinson, a blond, petite, pleasant young woman given to flights of fancy.

They married during the Christmas holidays, but it was a union doomed from the very beginning. In no time, Anson was back on drugs and physically abusing his new wife.

In January 1986, he was also back in jail for auto theft and parole violation.

Later that year, Anson apparently attempted suicide. He was found lying unconscious and near death on the floor of his jail cell, the victim of a drug overdose.

Stowers spent two nights and days with his son in the intensive care unit and was at his side when he regained consciousness.

"I'm going to be OK," Anson whispered.

But it was not to be. Released in August 1988, Anson's odyssey of self-destruction was just 76 days from its fatal conclusion.

ALTHOUGH ANNETTE had filed for divorce, she and Anson reconciled. It was unclear why. He was now dealing as well as doing drugs, and the couple's fights had escalated sharply.

On Nov. 16, during an unusually bitter argument, Annette shrilly told Anson one of his drug cronies was an undercover DEA agent.

He beat her senseless, carried her limp body into the bedroom and resumed the attack.

"Afterward, he would have no idea how long the insane rampage had lasted," Stowers wrote. "Outside ... he stared down at his aching hands, where blood was already crusting.

"A half hour passed before he went back inside and slowly made his way toward the bedroom. A silence unlike anything he'd ever experienced permeated the apartment. On the bed lay Annette's ravaged body, her once pretty, almost childlike face masked by blood, her eyes staring blankly toward the ceiling.

"Still around her neck was the strand of ribbon he'd used to strangle her. Nearby, was the ice pick he had plunged into her ear."

GROWING: Area schools see record enrollment numbers

(From 1A)

As the first week of school came to a close for many Midland County students, top enrollments were being posted, with families still calling schools to report they were moving to Midland in coming weeks.

Midland Christian School (MCS) has shown the most dramatic recent growth with a total record enrollment of 753 Friday morning, topping last year's record-breaker of 615. Even after after opening a newly constructed $470,000 intermediate wing, the private school immediately filled up with waiting lists in all but grades three and 11.

"We have certainly shown a good increase compared to this time last year," said MCS Superintendent Eddie Lee. "People just really seem to be pleased with what we are doing in the way of offering a disciplined environment, smaller classroom sizes and teaching moral values."

St. Ann's School Principal Barbara Ramsbottom said the school's total enrollment Friday of 390 was "the biggest ever," up from 380 the first week of school last year.

"We just opened our early childhood center for three- and four-year-olds," she said. "We have waiting lists in most classes, except for fifth and second grades where we have a few openings."

Ms. Ramsbottom said the school is anticipating a record peak enrollment. "We have already been contacted about more families moving in," she said.

MISD began slowly this year, reporting a first-day-of-school enrollment of 90 fewer students than the same day last year. But before anyone could report a drop, almost 1,000 more students had reported to schools by Thursday morning.

"We started a few days earlier in August than we have in the past," said Larry Lusby, MISD executive director of computer and pupil services. "It's not unusual for us to grow 300 or more students each day for the first few days of school."

While enrollment was down the first day of school, by Thursday it had reached 99.3 percent of the projected peak enrollment for the year. On Thursday, the district had registered 988 more students than were in school on Monday, giving MISD a school age enrollment (counting youngsters in kindergarten through grade 12) of 22,201, up from 21,213 on Monday.

Including pre-kindergarten youngsters, the total enrollment for MISD on Thursday was 22,804.

"We had about 100 more students by Thursday then we did the same day last year," Lusby said. "We have 160 more students to go to hit our projected enrollment, and we may have gained a few more today," Lusby said Friday.

MISD's neighboring school district to the east, rural Greenwood ISD, reported a record enrollment and a crowded secondary campus that has school officials looking toward expansion.

"Our enrollment took a pretty good jump this year," said GISD Superintendent Quentin Burnett. "We are setting records every day."

Burnett said the secondary campus with 464 high school students and 258 in grades seven and eight is overcrowded. "Later on in the year we are going to be looking into building additions," he said. The elementary campus enrollment is 848, including youngsters in pre-kindergarten.

GISD has already topped the district's projected initial enrollment of 1,525 to 1,540. "I expect we will see at least another 20 (for a peak enrollment) and get close to 1,600 students this year," Burnett said.

Private school educators said the bottom line for parents interested in sending their youngsters to private schools next year is "get on waiting lists now."

Two other private schools in Midland have yet to open. Trinity School opens Monday, and Hillander School's first day is Aug. 28.

SHOWS: Americans make weekend exhibits success understand us," one exhibitor groused. He was holding a .22-caliber target rifle among his collection of guns and gag gifts, including "Spotted Owl in a Can."

The line got a laugh from A.T. Blann, the gun show promoter who had assembled the 700 tables of exhibits billed as "every kind of gun imaginable from antique to the latest hi-tech weapons on the ban list!"

"Some of us are a little paranoid about the media. All you hear about are assault guns and the militia. That's only 1 percent of what's available at a gun show," said Blann, acting as media escort.

Although summer is seasonally slow for the gun crowd, a convergence of events has added extra sizzle to this year's circuit.

Oklahoma City bombing suspect Timothy McVeigh once made the gun-show rounds, and using the alias Timothy Tuttle, had a table at this very show about 18 months ago. (He sold military surplus and the militias' fictional bible, "The Turner Diaries.")

Meanwhile, Congress has looked into the assault on the Branch Davidian compound at Waco, and at self-styled militias, while still debating the assault gun ban.

The crowd snaking toward the turnstiles under a wilting desert sun could have been heading for any sporting event, movie premiere or baseball card show. Fashions ranged from camo fatigues to cowboy hats and boots to LA Dodger baseball caps and cut-offs. Several couples pushed baby strollers.

In an adjoining hall, separated by a curtain, was the Piccadilly Antique Show. Guns out-drew antiques by nearly 2-to-1.

Of course, the voter registration table set up by the Republicans on the sidewalk was not aimed at fans of bric-a-brac.

Inside, the National Rifle Association had a sign-up desk, not far from where police and security staff monitored the crowd and enforced gun laws.

But the police presence could not put a damper on the festivities. For here, under one air-conditioned roof, was aisle after aisle of handguns, holsters, rifles, bullets, shotguns, bayonets, assault weapons, military gear, machine guns, an array of sheriff's stars and six-shooters, war memorabilia, elk and deer meat, an oil-soaked Ku Klux Klan robe ($3,500), coils of fuses for setting off explosions, lots of anti-government, anti-liberal, anti-Clinton sentiment, and guns, guns and more guns.

Also, wall safes to store guns.

"I've been a policeman for 27 years, and I never found a high quality weapon on a dirt bag," said Gary Rogers, a Los Angeles cop exhibiting several tables of very expensive weapons.

"That's the thing about gun control. A drug dealer doesn't get a business license. A criminal's going to get a gun permit? A criminal's not going to pay that kind of money. He'll let you buy it and then steal it."

High quality weapons were abundant at the show, among them a $7,000 sniper rifle owned by Ike Ziros, a Las Vegas police officer. It was ogled and fondled by admirers.

Gun buffs roamed from table to table, appreciating the precision, balance, power and gunsmithing of the arsenals. Some admired the wood grain in gunstocks the way antique dealers speak of rare furniture.

Collectors pay big bucks for guns for some of the same reason car enthusiasts buy classic autos or sports freaks hoard baseball cards. It's a hobby, and their investment appreciates in value.

Inside the exhibit hall, sales were limited to federally licensed firearms dealers, and all laws about waiting periods and background checks were in effect.

But outside, people could be seen selling weapons from the trunks of their cars, out of sight of the authorities.

Such freelancing led cities such as San Antonio, to ban gun shows at city facilities; in fact, there is a rule at this show prohibiting sales of guns in the parking lot, but enforcement is scattershot.

"The volume of private sales is a major concern at gun shows," said Mark Pollston of the Washington-based Center to Prevent Handgun Violence. "There's no questions asked for a lot of these sales. It's kind of a clearinghouse for people who want to avoid the law. And there's no oversight."

Local race survey reflects nation

■ Many Midland students responded to a USA Weekend poll concerning teens and racism.

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

On the topic of teens and race, 371 Midland students participated in a national survey by USA Weekend magazine, in most cases mirroring the responses of 248,000 teens nationwide.

Racism is a simple reality of life, according to the respondents, but teens vary in their reactions to the specter of routine racial prejudice.

"In American history, we touch on a lot of issues (regarding) race," said Michele Soria, who teaches eighth grade at Alamo Junior High School.

Ms. Soria urged all of her students to participate in the national survey, and then discussed the subject with each of her classes. About 100 of her students chose to do so, she said.

One of the most surprising things Ms. Soria learned in these discussions, was how the students believed they were affected by racism from teachers, she said.

"Most of the students believed that they had a teacher that was biased," Ms. Soria said.

■ For more on national survey, see USA Weekend in today's Reporter-Telegram.

Also, most students said they felt more comfortable in a classroom with a teacher of the same sex as themselves.

"That was a real surprise to me," she said.

Like most of the Midland respondents, Kristen Barr, 14, said she encounters incidents of racial prejudice and stereotyping regularly in her daily life.

While most of these incidents are minor, they sometimes become violent, Miss Barr said.

"When there are fights at school, it's almost always about race," she said.

Aaron Roper agreed that racial divisiveness can sometimes turn violent in Midland schools. Roper cites gang activity as a major racial problem — creating groups of people of the same race with violent intentions toward other gangs of different race members.

Since he is friends with people of many different races, Roper does not greatly fear the chance of violence against himself, but notes that some people could be in danger when finding themselves surrounded by students of a different race.

"They won't be very comfortable. They will feel threatened," he said.

Many of the Midland students, as well as students across the country, ranked racism as a similar or greater problem than drug use, alcohol use, teen sex and violence.

And racism in Midland schools is omnidirectional,

Texas soldiers from Fort Hood head to Kuwait

By Chip Brown
Associated Press

FORT HOOD — After completing Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm in 1991, Army Sgt. Esteban Jimenez hoped his days in the Persian Gulf were over.

On Saturday, Jimenez was one of hundreds of soldiers in a sweltering gymnasium at Fort Hood making out their will, signing over power of attorney and receiving medical shots in preparation for deployment to Kuwait in the next couple of days.

Approximately 1,400 troops from Fort Hood's 1st Cavalry Division are expected to take part in the coming days in training exercises with Kuwaiti soldiers that previously had been scheduled for October or November.

The exercise — expected to last four to six weeks — was moved up after two top Iraqi officials defected to Jordan and reportedly indicated Saddam Hussein was considering sending Iraqi troops to attack Kuwait or Saudi Arabia.

"I am just trying to use my experience over there to help soldiers who are making their first trip," said Jimenez, who experienced front-line fighting during Desert Storm.

"I can't say that I am looking forward to possibly being involved in combat, but this is what I came in the Army to do."

Jimenez, 26, said this trip to the Persian Gulf will be more difficult because he now has a 3-year-old son and a 2-year-old daughter.

"It's much harder this time. When I first went over, I was pretty much a newlywed," said Jimenez, who oversees part of an armored platoon. "Now, I have children as well."

Fort Hood sent 26,500 troops to Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm, with the last troops returning from the Persian Gulf in August 1991.

Soldiers preparing for departure were publicly guarded about their views of Hussein and the fact that the U.S. is still having to grapple with the Iraqi leader.

One soldier who asked not to be identified said, "I really don't feel that we should have to go over there to do this again because I think everything should have been taken care of the first time."

Spc. Aaron Tallman, 25, who was sent to both Haiti and Somalia from Fort Drum in New York, said the soldiers

Trombonist studies with masters of music

By Ed Todd

Midland musician Bill Thomas does what he loves with flair and grace.

"I just love it. It's just great. It's really satisfying."

His flair is for playing the classical trombone, the versatile brass wind instrument often associated with big-band swing-era musicians Jack Teagarden, Glenn Miller, and Tommy Dorsey.

At 20, and already an accomplished trombonist and pianist, Thomas is studying trombone at the Philadelphia-based Curtis Institute of Music, an exclusive school which was founded in 1924 to train exceptionally gifted musicians for performing careers.

The school's 154 students, who are from the United States and 23 foreign countries, are on full scholarships. Thomas is studying with Glenn Dodson, the Philadelphia Orchestra's principal trombonist, and one of the school's 79 faculty members.

By age 5, Thomas was taking piano lessons. At age 10, he took up the trombone as a fifth grader at Midland Christian School. A few years later, he was playing solo in the Midland Lee Freshman High School Concert Band.

At Midland Lee High School, the trombonist and honor student was elected the Rebel Band captain for 1992-93 when the band was in the Rose Bowl Parade, was twice named outstanding soloist in the University Interscholastic League's Texas State Solo and Ensemble Contest, and was twice "first chair" in the Texas Music Educators Association's All-State Band and Orchestra.

Microchip technology helps shelters send lost pets home

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

For those who have lost that favorite pet and spent sleepless nights wondering if you would get it back, modern technology has come up with an answer to finding that special animal.

A microchip, small enough to fit into a hypodermic needle, has been developed to implant into animals, providing a permanent form of identification.

"This helps animals find their way home from shelters and from animal control," said Debbie Hill, director of the Midland Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. "This is a safety net for those animals that don't have a tag or another form of identification."

Learn seven rules to looking intelligent in conversations

One of the bad things about having friends who possess a wide-range of interests is that they enjoy sharing their vast knowledge with you, and that, quite naturally, places you in the potentially uncomfortable position of having to pretend like you know what they are talking about when, in fact, you haven't the foggiest idea.

Ott

In other words, you've got to make sure the other person, in this case your uppity friend, doesn't realize you are really quite stupid.

And believe it or not, it's not that difficult. All you have to do is learn how to be a phony, a fake, an imposter.

And that's where I enter the picture. If I do say so myself, I have become an expert at acting intelligent.

Now I will pass on some valuable tips to you so you can follow suit.

Ready?

Good. Here goes.

Rule No. 1 to becoming a phony smart person: Always keep a stern, yet intrigued, expression on your face when the other person is talking, even if he lost you back in Sentence No. 3 while discussing — in laborious detail — the inner-workings of the disc drive on his home computer. Despite your incredible boredom, act interested.

Rule No. 2: Nod your head in an up-and-down motion every 15 seconds or so. This will give the impression that you are keenly aware of what your friend is talking about even though you are, at that very moment, fantasizing about what Cindy Crawford might look like in real life wearing only the skimpiest of bikinis.

Rule No. 3: Memorize the following two statements — "Yeah, I know what you mean," and "That's very interesting. I just read a similar magazine article the other day." Those are both outlandish lies, of course. You don't have the vaguest notion what he is talking about, and you certainly didn't read a magazine article about it, mainly because you wouldn't have understood a word of it, but your friend doesn't need to know that. So just keep uttering those two sentences over and over during the course of the conversation.

Rule No. 4: Don't allow yourself, under any circumstance, to be pushed into a corner where you might be required to provide a specific answer to a direct question. Granted, this might mean you will have to tap dance your way through the conversation, skirting from one topic to another at breathtaking speed, but so be it. Anything, even being a verbal version of Fred Astaire, is better than having to say, "Duh, you want to repeat that question in English."

Rule No. 5: Always wear a wristwatch. That way, if you find yourself getting dangerously close to having to provide one of those dreaded specific answers, you can always glance at your watch and exclaim, "Good heavens! Look at the time. I've got to run."

Rule No. 6: Learn to change the subject without appearing to change the subject. I can't explain it, you've just got to know how to do it.

And, finally, Rule No. 7: Talk with your hands, especially when in the presence of valuable pieces of art, owned by your friend, that can be knocked over and destroyed by your animated gestures. This, of course, will distract your friend so much he won't be able to listen to your endless babbling on a subject you obviously know nothing about.

So yes, dear readers, follow these seven simple rules and you too can become a pseudo-intellectual.

Try it, it's fun.

MUSIC: Trombonist works toward being professional

by the end of my ninth-grade year," Thomas reflected. "Mr. (Clyde) Wilson at Lee Freshman let me play solo with the band at the Spring Concert. And that's when I really got hooked" on the trombone.

At The University of Texas, Thomas, who graduated from Lee High School in 1993, was principal trombonist in The UT Symphony Orchestra and Wind Ensemble. He was substitute trombonist for the Midland-Odessa Symphony and was a member of the World Youth Symphony Orchestra.

Thomas has performed with the Canadian Brass, the Dallas Brass, and the Ringling Bros.-Barnum & Bailey Circus Orchestra.

"I've always been so competitive," Thomas said last week in a telephone interview. "At first, nobody could beat me. In your first year in the state (ranking), you feel pretty big.

In his pursuit of perfection on the trombone, "I started making the right connections, and I went to the right camps and played the right music with the better groups."

His studying at Curtis under masters of the trombone is a path toward his goal of being a professional orchestral player, soloist or a member of a brass quintet.

"I'm definitely at the right school to meet the right kind of players who have the talent to do that," he said of forming his own quintet, which would be similar to the Canadian Brass.

Following his tenure at Curtis, "I'm either going to graduate school, somewhere like Juilliard, or I'm going to get a job," Thomas surmised.

His mother, Paula Thomas, who played the clarinet in school in Monahans, said that her son "made his own luck." His father, Bill Thomas, plays the trumpet and guitar.

"What happened with Bill was internal," Mrs. Thomas said of her son. "It was all that desire that God puts there. We didn't do it. We wanted him to be a doctor. We thought he would be a good doctor; he's good with people."

At Curtis, Thomas is studying classical music; masters, such as Beethoven, Bach, Mozart, and Brahms he appreciates, but especially Johannes Brahms — his favorite.

Among the wind instruments, Thomas initially was interested in the trumpet but "got stuck" with the trombone since so many students already had selected the trumpet.

"They (trumpeters) are the stars. They get the solos. The get the glory," Thomas mused. "It's kind of like being the quarterback. But if we (trombonists) decide it's time to take over the orchestra, there's not much they can do about it."

Thomas said that he is smitten with the "sound (of the trombone). It's closer to the human voice than the trumpet is."

And of the world of music, Thomas said, "Music picks up where words leave off. It does a lot of things if you just know how to listen to it."

Influences on Thomas' musical life are many. He recalled Sharon Chase, former bass trombonist with the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale.

"When I was growing up, she was the one who pushed me," Thomas said.

"She was a great teacher for me. She taught me how to practice; she taught me how to play ... everything as far as my approach to the trombone."

Classical pianist Shari Santorelli of Midland became Thomas' piano teacher 10 years ago and today encourages him to maintain his mastery of the piano while he continues his trombone studies.

"He has a great affinity for the trombone," said Mrs. Santorelli, who is pianist for the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale and who teaches music at Midland College and Texas Tech University.

Thomas has honed "a good sound," has the "discipline to practice a lot," and has "worked very hard" on the trombone and piano. "He has a lot of talent. You need all of those combinations. You can't just have great talent and not work. He has a beautiful sound and is a very expressive player."

At Curtis, which is probably the "most competitive (music school) in the country," Thomas is and will be studying "with some of the greatest artists in the country and in the world," Mrs. Santorelli said.

Karen McAfee, director of Lee High School's Orchestra, said Thomas has an "absolutely wonderful altitude," works hard, is conscientious, and is "very, very, talented, and well-disciplined. "I'm so proud of him."

Randy Storie, Lee High School's Band director, viewed Thomas as "one of the all-time greatest musicians that has come through Lee High School. He's a gentleman, very dedicated and hard working."

RACE: Students' survey responses reflect national results leaving no one race untouched.

Kristina Barrett, an Alamo student who is classified racially as "white," said that many people close to her harbor racial prejudice and that she herself has been the target of discrimination by people of another race.

Amiee Hernandez has learned the hard way about the universality of racial prejudices, having suffered racial insults from a girl who is racially grouped as "black."

"She called me a taco-eating something, something — and I just went off," Miss Hernandez said of the incident.

"I thought we should be on the same side," Miss Hernandez said of her thoughts during the incident.

Many Midland teens voiced concern with racial stereotyping on television and stated that students of different races were treated differently at local schools.

On the positive side, most Midland teens said they had friends of other races and many would consider dating a person of a different race, even if their parents would not approve, according to responses to the survey.

Most Midland students said they harbored less racial prejudice than do their parents, and many believed they would live to see a minority president.

But, according to their responses, most were resigned to the belief that racism will always be a part of human culture.

"It's in every state and every city," Miss Hernandez said.

"Racism is just people's opinions," she said. "It'll get better, but it'll never go away."

RETURN: Microchip helps animal shelters find pets' owners

began implanting the microchip into the animals that come to the shelter in May. The price of the implant is included in the adoption cost of each animal.

"It costs an extra $10 for each animal," Ms. Hill said. The adoption fee for the animals also includes shots and dipping. It is another $20-$45 for spaying and neutering.

The microchip is implanted with a needle between the animal's shoulder blades. Each chip has an identification number on it. The number, along with the owner's information, is registered not only with the shelter or veterinarian who administered the shot, but also with the AVID Group, the company that developed the chip. The company registers the animal through its PETrac program, a national computerized recovery network.

Using a special scanner, the chip can be read and the 12-digit number will appear on the scanner. The number is then called into local shelters or AVID Group, which provides the name of the owner based on the number.

"We were given three free scanners from the company," Ms. Hill said. "Since May, we have probably implanted about 125 chips into animals."

Local residents wishing to implant their animals with the chip will have to wait until October, when the SPCA plans on opening the procedure to the public.

"Our vet will probably be doing it once a week for $15," Ms. Hill said, adding that owners can register the animals themselves with the company if they so choose.

Ms. Hill said one Midland family has already been reunited with their dog because of the microchip.

"Animal control, which can also scan the animals, called us with a microchip number on Friday," she said. "We had the owner's name and the dog didn't even have to come here. He went straight home."

The microchip is encased in a bio-compatible glass and will last the lifetime of the animal.

In addition to household pets, Ms. Hill said large animals such as cows and horses can be implanted with the chip.

"Nine out of 10 animals who are lost are lost without their tags," Ms. Hill said. "This helps them find their way home."

TROOPS: Hardest part of deployment is leaving family, soldier says

being deployed are "in a state of confusion."

"I don't think anyone knows exactly what's going on, but I think we are ready," said Tallman, who was involved in a firefight in Somalia and transferred to Fort Hood 2 1/2 months ago. "The hardest part is leaving your family. But I have a great wife, so everything will be OK."

Tallman, who has been married four years and has a 3-year-old son, was to be in the wedding of his best friend next weekend in Michigan.

"That's off, but he understood when I called him. He knows it's my job," Tallman said.

Officials said the deployment date likely will be Monday or Tuesday.

Lt. Col. Randy Schoel, of the Fort Hood public affairs office, said soldiers have been deployed to the Persian Gulf for training exercises twice a year since 1992.

Accident

Three Midlanders are in good condition with minor injuries following a two-car collision at Highway 715 and County Road 148 that investigating officers suspect was caused by drunken driving.

Casillas reportedly failed to yield the right-of-way to another pickup truck driven by Louis Alvarado, 44, of Midland. Alvarado's vehicle struck Casillas' car at a high peed, overturning the vehicles. Casillas is being investigated as a possible drunken driver.

Also injured in the accident were passengers Francisco Pizarro, 60, of Midland and Norverto Madrid, 40, of Midland.

CHAMBER: Meeting's theme celebrates Midland growth

(From 1B)

Prentice, a New York attroney, and Arizonan Bob Richmond bought the Angels in 1990.

The theme of this year's Chamber annual meeting is "Midland ... on a Roll."

"You don't have to be an economist to tell that Midland has turned the corner and is building positive economic momentum," Womack said. "Our theme celebrates the future growth and quality of life we are working toward at the Chamber for Midland."

Special centerpieces filled with items manufactured in Midland will be available by silent auction during the events.

Several Chamber volunteer leaders will be honored during the annual meeting. The 1995-96 board of directors will be introduced and Larry Holden, a local banker, will be installed as chairman of the board.

Leadership Midland Alumni also will present the Midland Spirit Award during the meeting. The award recognizes a U.S. community that has mobilized itself in the spirit of the Jessica McClure rescue.

Tickets for the Midland Chamber's annual meeting will be available soon at $15 each or $200 for a corporate table. The public is invited. For additional information, call the Chamber at 683-3381.

Escape artist gets sentence — again

DALLAS (AP) — Authorities will have another chance to demonstrate whether they will be able to contain Dennis Wayne Hope, who has become notorious for his daring escapes.

Hope was convicted Friday on eight counts of robbery, felony possession of a firearm and carjacking. Because of crimes he committed after his most recent breakout, he has gotten at least 45 more years added onto the 80-year sentence he was already serving.

Because of Hope's reputation, six bailiffs and two federal agents were in the courtroom as his verdict was pronounced on Friday.

Hope was first arrested in 1990 for a series of supermarket heists in which he posed as an armed-car security.

Life-saver is finally overcome by odds in Chechnya

Editor's note: AP Special Correspondent Mort Rosenblum has watched Cuny at disaster sites since the 1970s.

By Mort Rosenblum
Associated Press

PARIS — They called Fred Cuny the Red Adair of disaster relief, but that fell short. Adair put out fires and went home. Cuny lived at the heart of the heat. And, apparently, it finally got him.

After months of searching, Cuny's family has given him up for dead somewhere in Chechnya, a victim of the politics that routinely underlie great waves of civilian suffering.

During a quarter-century of life-saving, he survived warlords, rockets, landmines, microbes, mosquitoes and mayhem, often commuting to work in helicopters held together by chewing gum.

A tall handsome Texan, an engineer and adventurer, Cuny shrugged off questions about why he kept at it. But his friends had the answer. He knew man-made calamities could be reversed, and he knew how.

Once committed to a crisis, he stayed, on contract to U.N. agencies, the U.S. government or private groups. His secretary at Intertect, in Dallas, usually laughed if asked when he'd return. "Who ever knows?" was her standard reply.

Mostly, Cuny's work was technical: how to pipe filtered water into Sarajevo; how to send home desperate Kurds in mountain passes; how to deliver dinner to millions in African refugee camps.

His political work was discreet: to budge an incompetent U.N. envoy; to smooth egos in Washington and European capitals; to confront local corruption and indifference in relief operations.

This time, Cuny let fly. In The New York Review of Books in April, he excoriated Russia for pressing an unwinnable war in the separatist republic of Chechnya that endangered hundreds of thousands and threatened a new Bosnia.

"It is ironic that the Chechen rebels are fighting the Russian army to protect a section of a city full of Russian grandmothers," he wrote. "When the full truth of the battle comes out ... that could bring down the Yeltsin government."

Soon after, he disappeared, along with two Russian doctors, on his second relief mission to Chechnya for the New York-based Soros Foundation.

Cuny's brother, Christopher, and diplomats in Moscow say that he was murdered by Chechen officers after Russian agents spread rumors that he was a CIA operative sent to undermine their rebellion.

For Cuny, it seems, speaking out was the eventual last step in a hard lifetime of frustrations.

A decade ago, in Sudan, he watched U.S. transports fly food to starving famine victims and grumbled to an Associated Press reporter:

"Whenever you see the C-130s, you know someone has screwed up."

When the U.S. Marines landed in Somalia, Cuny told the same reporter, off the record, why the mission was certain to collapse in disaster. Military strategists had ignored all humanitarian logic.

After touring Somalia, Cuny realized that food had to be delivered directly to the worst-hit areas in the interior, where security was a minor problem. Foreign troops would never sort out Somali politics.

Airlifts and convoys could deliver enough food, at strategic points, to kickstart the economy and revive agriculture.

"The main thing was to avoid that concrete snakepit of Mogadishu," he said. "And that's exactly where they went."

Soon, Cuny was briefing the reporter in Zagreb, where he sought support for an ambitious plan to restore utilities to Sarajevo. He was characteristically cool. But sometimes he thumped the table.

Cuny was all ready to go, with ample money from George Soros and the engineering problems solved, but he had run up against an impenetrable skein of U.N. bureaucracy.

"The problem is the U.N. has no strategy, they keep putting their hopes in peace instead of planning for worst-case scenarios," he said. "Everyone but the 'international community' knows the peace plan won't be applied."

Cuny spoke when Bosnian Serbs were tightening the circle around Sarajevo and pressing a policy of ethnic cleansing in seized areas. Serb roadblocks determined the movements of humanitarian relief.

"Stuff we wouldn't let a Somali warlord get away with, we're quite happy to let the Serbs do," he said.

But the bigger issue, he added, was the "absolute failure" of international mechanisms. Institutions set up after World War II had neither prevented conflict nor alleviated its effects. He went on:

"The Security Council and NATO have been failures. U.N. peacekeeping, a failure. Humanitarian aid as a salve is a failure. Western leaders, failure. No one comes out of this smelling good, and we've set some very ugly precedents."

Still, Cuny kept at it. When war broke out in Chechnya, he was off again. To his engineering skills and gift for quiet diplomacy, he had added the penchant for saying out loud — clearly — what he saw.

Those who know Cuny hold out a hope that he may suddenly emerge, unscathed, and head off for a restorative plate of pasta in Rome before returning to his hot-air balloon in Dallas.

If not, his family and friends believe, it was this last weapon in his arsenal — speaking out — that finally did him in.

Retired Episcopal bishop won't convert to Roman Catholicism

FORT WORTH (AP) — Retired Episcopal Bishop Clarence Pope, who became a nationally known leader of the denomination's conservatives, has had a change of heart and won't convert to Roman Catholicism.

Pope said his decision to return to the Episcopal Church was based partly on the Catholic Church's insistence that he be ordained again.

"I felt very keenly about the holy orders I had taken, and I didn't feel I could undergo another ordination. ... It was one thing to say it, but as I came closer and closer, I couldn't do it," he said.

Pope, 66, who headed the Fort Worth diocese until his retirement in January, also said that he felt a degree of loyalty to a certain constituency.

"I felt like it would be going back on all that I had been," he said. "I also felt I had abandoned a traditionalist constituency that needed me. I felt very guilty about that. It became very clear I needed to reverse course."

Episcopalians who have converted to Catholicism as well as those who oppose Pope's stand against ordination of female priests were stunned by the decision announced Friday. Before he stepped down, Pope had spoken out about liberal trends in his denomination and was considered a leader among conservatives upset over decisions such as condoning gay and lesbian clergy.

Kim Byham, a gay and lesbian rights activist within the church, said he welcomed Pope back.

"We've never suggested that anyone leave the church," he said. "We're glad Bishop Pope has returned, but we hope in his returning he is recognizing the traditional position of inclusiveness, the Anglican belief in diversity within unity."

Presiding Bishop Edmond Browning of New York, the highest ranking U.S. Episcopalian, also expressed an openness toward Pope.

"This church is his home, his family and we welcome him home," Browning said in a letter to all the U.S. Episcopal bishops.

Catholic officials, including the Right Rev. Joseph Delaney of Fort Worth, could not be reached for comment Saturday. Cardinal Bernard Law of Boston did not immediately return a call from The Associated Press.

Law and Delaney both attended ceremonies receiving Pope into the Catholic Church and have been informed of Pope's decision.

"We remain friends," Pope said. "My decision doesn't in any way reflect critically on the Roman Catholic Church."

Though Pope had planned to be ordained in the Catholic priesthood, the Episcopal bishops had not formally accepted his resignation.

In October when he announced his decision, Pope announced said he had always hoped that Anglicans would reunite with the Roman Catholic Church, but that the Episcopal Church's ordination of women as priests dashed those hopes.

Bishop Jack Iker, who replaced Pope as head of the Fort Worth Episcopal Diocese, welcomed his return.

"I think some will respond with a degree of surprise; others with a degree of cynicism; and some are likely to question his sense of judgment at having reneged so quickly," Iker said.

Judge issues injunction barring removal of 2 Houston city councilmen

LONGVIEW (AP) — A federal judge has issued a preliminary injunction that bars the removal of two city councilmen who claim that a city charter provision they are alleged to have violated is unconstitutional.

In a 32-page order, U.S. District Judge John Hannah wrote a trial is needed for a final ruling on the constitutionality of the provision that says that to serve council members cannot owe the city money.

Councilmen James W. Hunt and Tony Powell owed money when they ran for office and continue to owe the city money.

Hannah ruled Friday that Hunt and Powell, who filed a lawsuit Aug. 1, have "a substantial likelihood of success" in proving the provision unconstitutional.

The legal action is an attempt to stop other council members and the Gregg County district attorney from filing proceedings in state court seeking their removal.

Hannah wrote that a citizen's value does not depend on the size of his pocketbook.

"The court cannot agree with an argument that those who fall on hard times or are too poor to pay taxes are bad citizens," the ruling states.

City Attorney Larry Schenk said he was disappointed and surprised with the decision.

The five council members are considering filing an appeal to the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Stepfather denies abusing girl fitted with birth control device

DALLAS (AP) — A man accused of sexually assaulting his stepdaughter admits that the girl was fitted with a Norplant birth control device but denies that it was used to hide his alleged abuse.

The 39-year-old stepfather, in an interview from jail, said the 14-year-old girl made up the story for fear that he was leaving her mother and would take the family's six children with him to Houston.

"She is a very intelligent little girl," the man is quoted as saying in Saturday editions of The Dallas Morning News. "She always finds a way to instigate things to get her away. She is very convincing."

The girl has accused her mother of fitting her with Norplant after she told her the man was sexually abusing her.

The stepfather has been charged with two counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child, one count of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon and one count of indecency with a child. He was being held on $200,000 bond.

"It's definitely not true," he said. "Have you any idea how horrified I am being in here?"

His 29-year-old wife, who was first arrested on a misdemeanor charge of failing to report child abuse, was arrested Thursday night, accused of felony indecency with a child. She was being held on $50,000 bond in a Dallas jail.

The rearrest was prompted by the girl's allegation that at age 8, she was forced to watch her mother and father have sex and was told to "look and learn," police said.

To protect the girl's identity, the parents' names were withheld.

The girl told police that her stepfather had raped her when she was 11 and that her mother took her to a clinic and had her fitted with Norplant rather than report it.

In the three years since the device was implanted in the girl's arm, her stepfather continued to rape her until she ran away in May, the girl said initially. She later recanted.

Lookout offers good view of Alamo city

By Christopher Anderson
San Antonio Express-News

SAN ANTONIO — The city's modern skyline is clearly visible on the horizon from the crest of Comanche Lookout, a high mound of limestone in northeast San Antonio where American Indians and soldiers alike once scouted their enemies.

Flooding the foreground of this historic vista are the roofs of thousands of homes to the east, west and south, interrupted more by neighborhood shopping centers and a handful of industrial plants than by trees.

Whether the development is looked at as healthy growth or unsightly urban sprawl, from 1,034 feet above sea level, the view is unarguably a commanding one.

"That's what made the hill so important for thousands of years," said Celia Prehn, who was awarded a seat on the parks advisory board after she persuaded the city to buy the hill as parkland.

"If you look toward the east, towards Seguin, you'll see the Cibolo Creek valley. The Cibolo was a major stream, an ancient watering hole. For years, man would watch animals go past and swoop down on them," she said.

Comanche Lookout may be one of the city's few largely undeveloped vistas. And what little evidence of man exists atop the hill is rather quaint: a four-story medieval-style stone tower and part of the foundation to a planned-but-never-built Spanish castle.

Both date to the 1920s, when Edward R. Coppock Sr., an Army colonel and Indian fighter, retired and decided to honor his Norman ancestors with the tower and also constructed a tennis court and a sheep corral.

Coppock's initials and the year 1923 are inscribed above one of the vertical-slit windows. Prehn, who interviewed Coppock's descendants, said the tower was used primarily to store grain and hay, but also as a launching pad for fireworks during Fourth of July celebrations.

'Our eyes fell upon a never to be forgotten sight. Spread out before us lay the ancient, historic and famous old half-Mexican town, serene and beautiful in the bowl of a great sea green valley.'
— from writings of Frank Buschick, a San Antonio writer

The hill was valued centuries earlier by both soldiers and American Indians for its vista of the Camino Real, or King's Highway, which linked San Antonio to Spanish missions in East Texas in the 1700s.

"It was used as a lookout. El Camino Real followed Nacogdoches Road, and it's at the bottom of that hill. It's where the Hill Country meets the flatland, and it was used for survival," Prehn said.

Powderhouse Hill, another historic vista on the East Side, was where many travelers would get their first glimpse of San Antonio.

Gunpowder made of bat guano from nearby caves and sulfur hauled from Mexico by ox cart was stored in a powderhouse adjacent to a 30-foot tower.

The powderhouse and lookout post were built in the early 1800s and demolished around the turn of the century. A Mexican cannon bombarded the Alamo from the hill in 1836.

For Frank Buschick, a San Antonio writer, a break in the mesquite-covered hilltop proved to be a memorable happenstance as he neared the city for the first time as a young boy in the late 1800s.

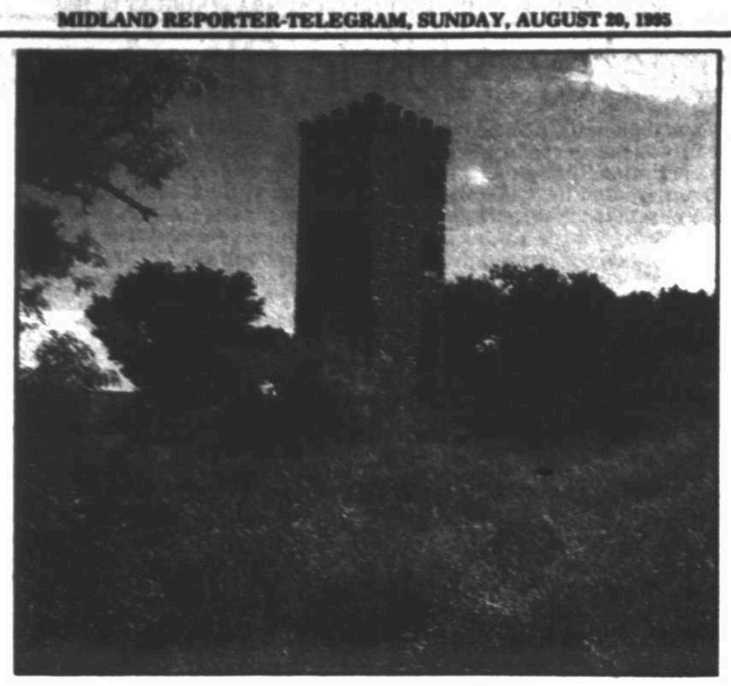

"Our eyes fell upon a never to be forgotten sight. Spread out before us lay the ancient, historic and famous old half-Mexican town, serene and beautiful in the bowl of a great sea green valley," he wrote later.

The Alamodome and a refrigerator plant take much of the romance out of this vista today, but the city will pop in and out of view to anyone driving north or south in the vicinity of the historic East Side cemeteries.

George Lene, an assistant professor of geology at St. Mary's University, said the average elevation in Bexar County is about 700 feet while its peak — Mount Smith in the northwest corner — is 1,892 feet above sea level.

"We have a bunch of hills around, and from our perspective they look like mountains. The Balcones Escarpment, the beginning of the Edwards Plateau, runs to the north and it drops down and flattens out as you go to the south," Lene said.

The hills that ring the city to the north and east, too low to create a barrier to travelers and immigrants, did afford the city one unexpected gem: the vistas of a fascinating and historically rich city.

McAllen mayor denies driver's racism charge

McALLEN (AP) — The mayor of this heavily Hispanic city is at the center of a controversy after a Mexican-born truck driver accused him of making racist statements in a roadside confrontation.

In a news conference at his office on Friday, Mayor Othal Brand emphatically denied that he referred to Ramiro Montes as a "wetback" or told Montes to go back to Mexico.

However, Brand said he might have gone too far when he used foul language when he stopped Montes on Tuesday to issue him a traffic citation for speeding.

"I was wrong at the intemperate response, but I don't like to be called a racist. And I am not a racist," he said.

In a sworn statement filed with the city after the incident, Montes accused the 76-year-old mayor of making the racist comments.

In an expletive-riddled conversation captured on police 911 tapes, Brand told Montes not to question his power as mayor to issue a speeding ticket. The conversation was taped when Brand called the police and stayed on the phone with a dispatcher until a police officer arrived.

During the conversation, Brand referred to Montes as "boy" several times. He also ordered police to check the truck driver's legalized residency card.

"I thought he was from Central America or Mexico, but I didn't know whether he was legal or illegal," Brand said Friday.

After Montes showed Brand his green card, the mayor decided Montes had proper legal identification.

The taped does not document the mayor's comment after police arrived.

Brand said he became angry when Montes, a Houston resident, argued with him.

"In this case, it was a flagrant violation of the speed limits and arrogant attitude of a person that obviously was from someplace other than the United States," Brand said.

Brand said he followed Montes on U.S. 83.

"I was doing about 35 or 40 (mph), and that truck came by, and it came by at such a speed that it just shook my automobile," Brand said. "So I immediately started behind, blinking my lights and blowing the horn, and he slowed down substantially."

Brand said Montes sped up again when Brand tried to pass. He then trailed Montes to a nearby motel, where he called police.

Brand said the complaint Montes filed with police does not concur with the police recordings.

"What he has sworn is not in these tapes, and this is a tape from the beginning to end," Brand said. "And what he is a troublemaker and he's going to get the mayor. But the mayor, fortunately or unfortunately, has been taped."

Brand has received calls at his house, both from supporters who say he was right to issue a speeding ticket, and from people who accuse him of being a racist.

But he said the controversy won't stop him from ticketing anybody else if the situation repeats itself.

"If somebody blows me off the road again, I will guarantee you I will follow them to wherever they are going and have the police come down and give them a ticket," he said.

Montes could not be reached for comment Saturday. He had no listed telephone number in Houston.

McAllen, a city of about 85,000 residents, is the largest city in Hidalgo County, a Lower Rio Grande Valley county with a population that is about 86 percent Hispanic.

Poll: Hutchison's Senate performance ranks over Gramm's

AUSTIN (AP) — More Texans are satisfied with Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison's performance than Republican Senate colleague and presidential contender Phil Gramm, according to the latest Texas Poll released Saturday.

About 53 percent of those polled think Mrs. Hutchison, R-Texas, is doing either a good or excellent job. About 46 percent of those polled had the same favorable impression of Gramm, R-Texas.

Conversely, 33 percent rated Mrs. Hutchison's performance as either fair or poor, compared to 40 percent having negative feelings about Gramm's work.

The Texas Poll, conducted by the University of Texas' Office of Survey Research for Harte-Hanks Communications Inc., interviewed 1,001 adult Texans over the telephone from Aug. 3 to Aug. 11. The poll's margin of error is plus or minus 3 percent.

■ Texas Poll

The poll also shows Bush, another Republican, with a 58 percent approval and a 31 percent disapproval rating.

President Clinton drew a 65 percent negative response to a 31 percent positive.

Larry Neal, Gramm's press secretary, said Friday that Mrs. Hutchison and Bush have high marks because they are doing a good job. But Gramm, as a presidential candidate and a Senate leader on several highly charged issues, faces tougher scrutiny, he said.

"The difference is that Phil Gramm is in an arena where the spotlight is blinding and some get third-degree burns," Neal said. "The president is in the same arena and he's singed around the edges. In fact, there is smoke coming from the White House."

Mrs. Hutchison and Bush have taken more moderate positions on welfare reform than Gramm. But Mrs. Hutchison said she did not think the Texas Poll illustrated Texans' desire for more moderate leadership.

"I consider myself a conservative. I consider George Bush a conservative; and I consider Phil a conservative," she said. "I just think on any given day those kinds of numbers can change."

Bush's job ratings climbed slightly since the Texas Poll in the spring, when the 1995 legislative session was still in progress. The governor said the public took a wait-and-see attitude as to whether he could deliver on his agenda and work with a House and Senate that have Democratic, although conservative, majorities.

"I'm flattered and I appreciate it," Bush said. "I think it reflects Texans' desires to have a government that's functional in a few areas and a government that focuses on what's best for our state and not torn apart by partisan differences."

Clinton's job performance ratings among Texans have barely changed from previous Texas Polls.

Ed Martin, executive director of the Texas Democratic Party, said Clinton's popularity in Texas will climb once Texans see the difference between him and the Republican-dominated Congress.

"Basically, the Republican Congress has yet to act. They've only put three bills on his desk, and until legislation starts reaching the president and he has a chance through vetoes and other action to engage in this battle, you don't expect a lot of chance," he said.

Doctors cite privacy as reason behind secrecy on Mantle's health

DALLAS (AP) — Mickey Mantle's doctors are defending the secrecy, half-truths and, in some instances, lies that filled their reports about his health in the weeks before he died from liver cancer that spread to other organs.

Doctors at Baylor University Medical Center said they were caught in an ethical and public relations dilemma over a patient's right to privacy and the public's right to know about his rapidly deteriorating health.

While Mantle was still on the operating table receiving a new liver on June 8, it became obvious to doctors that Mantle's liver cancer had spread to the bile duct, which drains the liver, and that they were unable to cut it all away.

For more than nine weeks, they struggled to be as honest as possible about their famous patient's deteriorating condition while honoring his wishes for privacy.

Mantle, 63, died early Aug. 13 at the hands of what doctors called the most aggressive cancer they had ever seen.

Mantle succumbed 12 days after he and his doctors disclosed that a half-dozen cancerous spots had spread to his lungs. With astonishing speed, tumors enveloped his lungs, his transplanted liver and the areas near his liver and his heart.

Medical ethicists say Mantle's case dramatically defines the quandary among doctors who treat the famous. How much medical information about celebrities is public business? Did Mantle's case warrant more scrutiny because he received a valuable organ and potential donors want such organs fairly parceled out?

"Mickey put us in a difficult position," said Dr. Daniel DeMarco, a gastroenterologist and Mantle's attending physician.

"But we had to put his needs above everybody else. You can't say no to a dying man," he said.

He had received a new liver about one month before doctors realized how severely his cancer had spread.

Doctors proposed to Mantle that they could keep his postoperative status private from the start. The former New York Yankee rejected that idea, opting to let the public know how he was doing but not reveal the whole truth.

Mantles' main concern was that people not be guessing how much longer he had to live.

Doctors said they knew whatever negative they said about Mantle's condition would get back to him quickly since he had a television set, and sometimes two, in his room.

Although an assisting surgeon told The Dallas Morning News on July 6 that doctors had been unable to remove all of the malignancy and that it posed great risk, senior doctors wouldn't acknowledge that until after Mantle's death.

Routine tests on July 13 detected tumors in Mantle's lungs, but until rumors led Mantle to reluctantly disclose the tumors via videotape Aug. 1, doctors insisted he had the same 85 percent chance of surviving one year as any liver recipient.

Surgeon Robert Goldstein said that the staff's primary concern was Mantle and his family.

In reviewing the information that had been presented publicly, Goldstein told reporters:

"You didn't count because you weren't a member of the family. I had to stretch the truth and bend things around," he said. "If I had been straight realistic or pessimistic, it would've destroyed the family."

In the field of medical ethics, few argue that secrecy is often necessary and an obligation if requested.

"They have a complete duty to their patient," said Arthur Caplan, director of the Center for Bioethics at the University of Pennsylvania. "I think outright lying is a bad idea. But I think everything short of lying is acceptable in trying to protect privacy."

Dr. Goran Klintmalm, director of Baylor's transplant program, said his strategy in discussing Mantle with the media was to omit the dire information. He chose to emphasize how well Mantle's new liver was working, which acted as a diversion from the cancer question.

"I think there would have be a backlash if doctors were too honest" in their disclosures of private medical information, said John Burnside, an associate dean and ethics instructor at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center of Dallas.

At his hospital, doctors have admitted patients under false names to protect their privacy, Burnside said.

"Is that a form of lying? I suppose it is, but it respects the confidentiality," Burnside said.

However, doctors did feel some pressure to disclose information on the ailing baseball hero because he received a liver transplant.

Because organs are donated by the public, Caplan said, the public needs to be assured that the system wasn't abused. Except for that obligation, "they would have had no responsibility to say anything to anybody."

Baghdad trouble merits U.S. move

While details were still sketchy when the Pentagon made its decision to move warships and military supplies toward the Persian Gulf, the defection of a number of Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein's family provided ample reason for U.S. officials to suspect that something extraordinary and dangerous is occurring in Baghdad.

That suspicion was bostered, of course, by information from two of Saddam's sons-in-law, who defected to Jordan the week before last and told debriefers that Saddam had been contemplating an attack on Kuwait or Saudi Arabia. The two were also high-placed officers in Saddam's military machine. A group of some 15 other officers accompanied them to their sactuary in Jordan.

Knowing the volatile nature of Saddam, the Pentagon was wise to forestall another military confrontation with Iraq by beefing up the U.S. military presence in the Persian Gulf area.

Even though it's virtually impossible to speculate with any degree of certainty about what precipitated the defections from Saddam's own family, one thing is certain: The defections verify what has been rumored for years — that not all is roses in Saddam Hussein's Iraq. And the fact that members of his own family are fleeing Iraq could well mean that Saddam's troubles will continue — even if "behind the scenes" — for a period of time.

With that turmoil in Baghdad recognized and Saddam's volatile nature well-known, it's only common sense to keep a close eye on the Iraqi leader and the situation in Iraq. Saddam could easily spawn the winds of war once more in the Persian Gulf.

ANOTHER VIEW

Defection may not harm Saddam's rule

Not only has Iraqi strongman Saddam Hussein had to watch his economy and infrastructure crumble, he now has seen part of his family head for the border...

Whether this points to a deterioration within Saddam's inner circle or just an internal struggle for power is unclear. It could be a little of both. Last month Saddam dismissed Ali Hassan al-Majid as defense minister. The al-Majid clan is related to Saddam on his father's side.

The loss of power by the al-Majids puts more control in the hands of Saddam's sons and half-brothers. They are said to be real hardliners and will refuse to give in to any allied demands that would bring relief to their country. ...

That the al-Majids fled to Jordan does not automatically make them good guys. Remember, they were around when Kuwait was invaded. And Saddam will easily replace them. The defection might not mean much in the big picture. It might merely embarrass Saddam and cause him to lose a little more sleep.

So, what's the problem?

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Aug. 20, the 232nd day of 1995. There are 133 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Aug. 20, 1968, the Soviet Union and other Warsaw Pact nations began invading Czechoslovakia to crush the "Prague Spring" liberalization drive of Alexander Dubcek's regime.

On this date:

In 1833, Benjamin Harrison, the 23rd president of the United States, was born in North Bend, Ohio.

In 1866, President Johnson formally declared the Civil War over, even though fighting had stopped months earlier.

In 1914, German forces occupied Brussels, Belgium, during World War I.

In 1918, Britain opened its offensive on the Western front during World War I.

In 1920, 75 years ago, pioneering American radio station 8MK in Detroit (later WWJ) began daily broadcasting.

In 1940, British Prime Minister Winston Churchill paid tribute to the Royal Air Force, saying, "Never in the field of human conflict was so much owed by so many to so few."

In 1953, the Soviet Union publicly acknowledged it had tested a hydrogen bomb.

In 1955, hundreds of people were killed in anti-French rioting in Morocco and Algeria.

In 1964, President Johnson signed a nearly $1 billion anti-poverty measure.

In 1977, the U.S. launched Voyager II, an unmanned spacecraft carrying a 12-inch copper phonograph record containing greetings in dozens of languages, samples of music and sounds of nature.

In 1986, a postal employee went on a rampage at a post office in Edmond, Okla., shooting 14 fellow workers to death before killing himself.

Ten years ago: The Rev. Jerry Falwell, returning to the U.S. from a five-day tour of South Africa, called Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu a "phony" for presuming to speak on behalf of South African blacks.

Five years ago: For the first time since Iraq began detaining foreigners, President Bush publicly referred to the detainees as hostages, and demanded their release. Three former Northwest Airlines pilots were convicted in Minneapolis of flying while intoxicated.

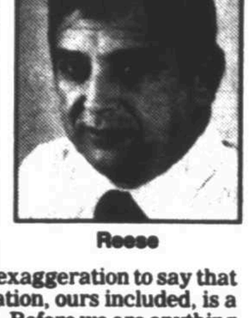

One year ago: President Clinton slapped new sanctions on Cuba that included prohibiting payments by Cuban-Americans to their relatives in Cuba. Benjamin Chavis Jr. was fired as head of the NAACP after a turbulent 16-month tenure.

Americans shouldn't take farmers for granted

Probably one of the most important bills winding its way through Congress in terms of its impact on Americans is the farm bill.

It's ironic in a way because agriculture, for most Americans, has become invisible. Less than 2 percent of the population provides the food and fiber for itself and the other 98 percent. As America has become urbanized (about 70 percent of the population is in 130 metropolitan areas) fewer and fewer of us have any direct contact with farming.

Reese

We tend to take food for granted. Yet it is no exaggeration to say that the foundation of any nation, ours included, is a strong agricultural base. Before we are anything — citizens or partisans, liberals or conservatives — we are animals who require food and water to sustain life.

The state of American agriculture, however, is such that we must no longer take food — and farmers — for granted. We had better become informed while we still have time to head off any catastrophic problems.

I won't try to explain in this column the intricacies of the farm bill (or farm bills) that is still before Congress, but there are some points to keep in mind.

The farmer is in a unique position. He has a negative cash flow for the entire year except for the one day on which he sells his crop. In other words, 364 days of the year he is spending money and only on one day does he receive money. No other business that I know of operates that way.

That's why there are special banks to handle farm loans. If you went to an ordinary bank with a business plan that showed a negative cash flow of 364 days and a positive cash flow — provided everything goes right — on one day of the year, they would laugh you right out of the bank. Like a high roller, a farmer gambles it all on one crop.

But the farmer, as businessman, is unique in another way, too. He has no leverage when he sells his crop.

If you run a shoe store and you don't sell any shoes this week, the shoes won't go bad. They stay on the shelf and you can sell next week. But for the farmer, especially those who grow fresh fruits and vegetables, once the crop is harvested there is a narrow window of time in which to sell it. Otherwise, it rots and he loses everything.

Well, buyers know that, and leverage is all on their side. That helps explain why the farmer gets about 4 cents for grain in a $4 box of cereal. They can beat the farmer down on the price. That's also why it is a mistake to allow too much foreign food imports, such as cheap tomatoes from Mexico. Cheap imports give the buyers that much more leverage against the farmer.

The short-term selfish view, common these days, is that no one cares as long the consumer can buy cheap produce. But only idiots will agree to sacrifice the long-term benefits of a strong agricultural base for the short-term benefits of a few cheap meals.

Finally, urban guy that I am, I can state for you the central problem of American agriculture in one sentence: The price most farmers receive for most of their products does not cover their costs and provide a reasonable profit.

That's why we have agricultural subsidies. That's why the government had to eat $7 billion in uncollectible farm loans. That's why fewer and fewer Americans are able to remain on a farm. And that's the situation that Congress ought to take what steps it can to correct.

The big profits in food are made by the people and corporations in between the farmer and the consumer. The farmer doesn't make big profits, and the consumers don't get food as cheap as food ought to be.

As the number of farmers has shrunk, so has their political voice been weakened. It's time for consumers to realize that we need to form an alliance between our stomachs and the people who fill them.

GEORGE WILL

Bradley could run as Powell with policies

WASHINGTON — Bill Bradley's announcement that he will not seek a fourth Senate term is a reminder that many of the best people in Congress, those with the balanced, mature view of life one wants there, are not apt to want to linger there forever. It also unleashes presidential speculations, the intensity of which are an index of the electorate's dissatisfaction with current choices.

Will

Bradley may not have the ego that for some politicians makes public office an almost metabolic necessity. Edmund Morris, biographer of Theodore Roosevelt and (soon) Ronald Reagan, says that "whereas RR had little vanity, not caring who got the credit for his initiatives, TR was compulsively egotistical." TR's "love of the personal pronoun bordered on the erotic. When his military memoir, 'The Rough Riders,' went into print, a rumor circulated to the effect that halfway through typesetting, Scribner (his publisher) ran out of capital I's and had to send to the foundry for an extra supply."

Bradley seems free of the need for applause, perhaps because he heard enough of it while on basketball courts, as Reagan heard enough in Hollywood. However that may be, consider the caliber of the man who is moving on. That can be gauged by one of his recent speeches, delivered Aug. 8, concerning relations with Russia.

Our relations have been troubled, Bradley believes, by diplomatic romanticism that spawned unrealistic expectations and the basing of policy on personal relationships, first with Gorbachev, then with Yeltsin. "In both cases, we became their cheerleaders, notwithstanding Gorbachev's use of force against Lithuania and Yeltsin's invasion of Chechnya."

Now, says Bradley, the romantic impulse has been replaced by "policy writ small," a "minimalist approach" that emphasizes security issues such as NATO expansion. This revives the "imperial paradigm," which holds that Soviet-era expansionism derived less from communism than from something in Russia's national chromosomes. "Just as the Romantic lens filtered out everything that was going wrong, the Imperial lens filters out everything that is going right."

What is going more right than we realize is privatization, the evolution of market economy institutions such as commercial banks, and the emergence of structures and habits necessary for regular elections. Some things that are going wrong, particularly the rise of ethnic consciousness and environmental degradation, present opportunities for U.S. policy.

More than 100 non-Russian ethnic groups make up one-fifth of Russia's population and occupy much mineral-rich territory. U.S. policy must make the most of "the power of our example as a peaceful, prosperous and powerful multiethnic democracy." It can do so inexpensively by vastly expanding exchange programs that bring young Russians to live and study here, and by connecting our aid with observable improvements in Russian life.

Life expectancy for the average Russian male reportedly has fallen from 64.9 years in 1987 to 59.3 in 1994, and to 45 in some regions. This, says Bradley, is on a par with Bangladesh. Forty million Russians in 86 cities breathe air with more than 10 times the maximum allowable concentration of various pollutants. "Descriptions of Magnitogorsk," says Bradley, "perhaps the most heavily polluted city on Earth, come right out of a Hieronymus Bosch hellscape."

Bradley's speech, so typical of him, is passionate yet measured, and clearly the result of long reflection. It is the work of someone who would make a fine secretary of state and a far better president than we have.

Much of the current support for Colin Powell for president is a form of national flinching from a choice between the flimsy incumbent and the Republican field. It is unfortunate that Bradley says he will not challenge Clinton for the Democratic nomination. He would have a fair chance of winning and then an excellent chance in November. And if he lost in the spring of 1996, he would be well positioned for 2000. Reagan's progress from the spring of 1976 to November 1980 proves that in politics it is possible to rise on the wings of defeat.

Bradley still may run as an independent — as a Powell with policies — so voters unenthralled with the current field can still hope the field is not full.

Cyber soother creates too many distractions

Gomer, my cyberguru, brought a load of fresh equipment. As a result I can make this very machine play Mozart at the same time it processes words. It is not playing Mozart at the moment, but only because I know from experience that newspaper columns written when Mozart is being played are always lousy.

Baker

Gomer told me it would also play Erroll Garner. That's what sold me. Anything that will play Erroll Garner is aces with me, and the idea of having Erroll Garner's piano pouring out of a computer that was simultaneously processing my very own words was irresistible.

With Erroll Garner's chords and my dangling participles intertwined through the miracle of megabytes, what unforgettable cyberduets we might play. It really is a marvelous age.

All too well do I remember the days before cyberwriting. There was nothing but paper, and it was dull, that paper, and it offered only two choices: lined or unlined. Words could not be processed, as they are now with today's magnificent word processors. They had to be formed by hand with pens or pencils.

In love with technology, I dreamed of a typewriter and soon was well-heeled enough to rent a big desk model for $8 a month. With the help of a typing manual borrowed from the library and my private stock of handkerchiefs (necessary as blindfolds to prevent peeking at the keys) I was soon a passable touch typist.

To perfect the skill I composed a novel of 90,000 words one summer. It was rejected by every publisher in the country. This did not discourage me for, as Truman Capote later said of Jack Kerouac's books, it wasn't writing, it was typing. I was saving the good stuff until I learned to type so fast that Alfred A. Knopf himself would beg for the right to publish it.

The typewriter had many defects. If you wanted to write under the influence of the great composers, for example, you had to leave the machine and place a record on another machine. This created distractions that harmed the writing.

For instance, when writing a romantic story set in old Europe, I would play Weber's lovely waltz music, "Invitation to the Dance," at high volume. Creative catastrophe!

It immediately reminded me that I could not waltz, nor for that matter, tango, rumba or even do a fox trot, in fact that I was destined to live and die a wallflower. Depression makes brilliant writing impossible. Despite many phonographic renditions, "Invitation to the Dance" never produced a word of literature.

But maybe historical romances were not up my alley. I tried horror and suspense. Having seen "Fantasia," I chose a recording of Moussorgsky's "Night on Bald Mountain," set it on the turntable and raced to the typewriter to make the world forget Edgar Allan Poe.

Words failed me. All I could think of was the name Moussorgsky. The name Moussorgsky had me in its spell. How in the world was it spelled? I was consumed by the need to know. I wanted to be able to say to lovely women encountered for the first time, "Well, no, I don't tango actually, but would you believe I know how to spell Moussorgsky?"

The world has not forgotten Poe, but I have perpetually forgotten how to spell Moussorgsky. It is spelled this way here today only because I have just looked it up in the Columbia Encyclopedia. The new machine Gomer brought probably has a cyberclopedia that would spell it out loud, maybe in the voice of Mozart's stone Commendatore, and I can't wait to hear it, but...

Well, to tell you the truth, I'm not up to finding new cyberstuff right now. Back there a while ago I put some Erroll Garner into the Whatever Letter They Call That Slot. Did I say earlier how much I like Erroll Garner? Not that Dave McKenna isn't right up there too, but Erroll — and I should call him Mister Garner of course — has always had a special — what's that word everybody's using these days? ...

... Resonance. That's it. Always had a special resonance for me. So I thought, maybe a little Erroll Garner might help this column pick itself up off the floor, you see.

But I should have remembered: Erroll Garner has always meant martinis to me. Two or three sometimes. Put Garner on the turntable, and it's always, "Olive or lemon peel, sweetheart?"

One more, and whattaya say we tango?

Controversial vote must be publicized

By law, Midland Independent School District (MISD) must highly publicize that it may be voting on a controversial subject. But, secretively, they just listed it on their agenda as "Executive Session, discussion of unitary status," which they had previously done on almost every board agenda for the past six months or more. Weren't we promised MISD was "going for unitary status?"

MISD could have won, especially after the recent Supreme Court ruling regarding releasing school districts from desegregation cases. Districts don't have to spend millions of dollars and prove test scores have improved, etc. Even Dallas ISD is going back to court after it won their unitary status motion, requesting it be relieved from its three-year probationary promises made last year. MISD officials and attorneys said that even if we won unitary status we would still be under a "standard probationary period, where we had to do certain things..." Not true, plus at least we would have unitary status guaranteed to us!

The "Agreement Decree" (1) does not include unitary status; (2) does not mention dissolving old consent decree; (3) gives "open enrollment" to honors/advanced classes (which MISD has to get a waiver from the Texas Education Association to do because TEA doesn't allow it); (4) must file annual reports to the government (which we previously didn't); (5) now unable to apply for "Home Rule District" or any other new programs; (6) maybe a couple of schools might be able to stand alone, but yours won't (causing dissension?); (7) more money will be spent on legal fees over the years, because mandated reports, etc. must be delivered to all Intervenor attorneys — for their objections — before being sent to federal people for their approval; (8) Carver Cultural program will be redone (?!); (9) new schools will have to be built in the southeast; (10) after three years, we may petition the court again for unitary status and start this process all over again.

What have we ended up with? More regulations, more legal expenses, more OBE, less Midland control. How much more of this sellout do you want to hear about? Do you even care? So "if you are being raped, just lay back and enjoy it."

Increase in dues benefits association

In response to the continued media misrepresentations of the National Rifle Association (NRA) in an attempt to divide and conquer the membership, I submit the following fax information recently received from the NRA headquarters that sets the record straight.

"Media assault on the NRA continues with reports that the association is losing members. The fact is in late 1993, when NRA's board of directors voted to increase annual member dues by 40 percent, projections were that NRA could lose up to 15 percent of its existing members. Membership, however, only declined 8 percent, while revenue from sustaining members increased from $29 million in the first six months of 1994 to $34 million in the first six months of 1995. During the month of July 1995 alone, NRA netted an average of more than 2,000 new members a day. On the question of new member promotion, the New York Times reported that from 1992 to 1994, the NRA spent $67 million on new member acquisitions, but it conveniently ignored the slightly more than $100 million income derived from that program alone. NRA Executive Vice President Wayne LaPierre declares the first year of the NRA dues increase a major success, affirming that 'we are continuing to move ahead on all fronts, including financial resources, membership, safety, anti-crime, pro-law enforcement and our political efforts.'" — Aug. 4, 1995.

Fathers deserve many thank-yous

We have just finished our long baseball season. Besides being extremely proud of the Tower Little League All-Stars, I had to take the time to express my sincere appreciation of the "unsung heroes." Our manager Brian Webb and coach Brian Mitchell received their well-deserved recognition at each game, but the fathers who helped keep up with 14 very active boys deserve their due.

An endless "thank you" to Jim White, Jimmy Whitehead, Mark Ochs and Steve Fuller for all their attention and direction to these boys while on their "once in a lifetime" trip to State Little League Tournament!

Potomac is needed to clean Washington

Packwood, Whitewater, the Foster mystery, bad checks on insufficient or no funds, stolen stamps, Ruby Ridge (the color seems appropriate), the Clinton Chronicles (have you seen the video?).

It will take the diverting of the Potomac to clean out the Augean stables that are the Washington White House and the Congress. Or would that be enough?

Put terminal idea to 'people vote'

I certainly do agree with the "Speaking Out" by Thomas H. Dollahite (Opinion, Aug. 13), concerning Midland City Council and their high-handed way of going ahead with plans for a new terminal building at Midland International Airport.

They need to remember that they are on Midland City Council to handle city business to the best advantage of all citizens. Not to be spending our monies any way they please.

They are acting like our congressmen in Washington! Stop what you are doing for yourself and your personal interest and put this new terminal idea to a "people vote." Let each of us have our say — then do what the majority votes for.

Government needs dose of cold turkey

My dad was a smoker. My earliest recollections picture him rolling his own using Prince Albert tobacco and Riz-La cigarette papers. It was some time after World War II that he graduated to "ready-mades." He never did go for the filters, though.

Dad, being a thoughtful person, soon realized that he was spending money on a product that caused health problems, which resulted in spending more money to counteract those problems. This seemed to him an imprudent use of limited financial resources. He decided to quit smoking. After 53 years and right in the middle of a pack of cigarettes, he quit. Not without pain. Not without difficulty. But he did stop this counter-productive behavior.

Up in Washington there is presently an ongoing furor over tobacco use, particularly among the nation's youth. There is talk of regulating nicotine as a drug, increasing control and regulation of tobacco and other plans for government to be more involved in this activity.

Excuse me, but isn't this the same government that subsidizes the tobacco farmers? Doesn't one bureaucratic arm of the government pay money to farmers to produce tobacco and another bureaucratic arm of the government spend money to regulate and reduce its use?

I haven't invented any rockets lately, but it seems to me this is a little like forming a fire-starting department to justify increasing the size and cost of the fire-fighting department. Maybe a dose of "cold turkey" is just what is needed.

McCorvey was used in abortion battle

For many years Operation Rescue, and the pro-life movement in general, has been accused of "loving the unborn and hating women." The touching example of the Rev. Flip Benham, director of Operation Rescue, witnessing his faith to Norma McCorvey (a.k.a. Jane Roe) and baptizing her into the Lord Jesus Christ, should put to rest that unfounded attitude.

McCorvey, sadly, was used and exploited by those determined to legalize abortion, especially by Sarah Weddington in the landmark unconstitutional case of Roe vs. Wade in 1973. For Operation Rescue to show McCorvey love, forgiveness and offering to her the gift of grace and salvation proves beyond all doubt that the grace of God reaches all, including a woman who helped bring about the deaths of 30 million babies. It is a shame that Weddington, Michelman, and other pro-abortion supporters, do not support her in making this "choice" that they claim to defend. But I guess it is only a woman's choice to choose abortion. Other choices don't count. May God bless Norma McCorvey and the Rev. Benham who have made the only choice that really matters.

Police should fine no-signal drivers

The traffic in Midland is considered the worst of any town this size, any place. If people who don't use their signals were stopped and fined, it might stop some wrecks.

I talked to a lady recently who has lived in Midland for one year, and in that time she has had three hit-and-runs. A few months ago, a young man pulled out from the curb and totaled my car. He did not use a signal and turned in the opposite direction. No one was hurt, but someone could have been. Yesterday (Aug . 9) a driver at the corner of Florida Avenue and Rankin Highway turned on his left signal to go east and I turned on mine to go west. Then he changed his mind. He just barely missed me. He had the audacity to blow his horn. A woman at the intersection of Cuthbert Avenue and Andrews Highway pulled into the left lane going east, then back across into the right lane in front of me. I was so busy trying to stay in my lane, I didn't see if she went west on Cuthbert.

I have suggested to a policeman that if they would give tickets to these people who don't signal, they might be paid better. They said they aren't paid with that money. Maybe not, but they could save a life. Isn't that important?

Stolen bike gives lesson to pass on

On Aug. 8, a criminal stole my bike, a chrome Dyno Air, from where I had parked it at Albertson's on Andrews Highway. The people who worked there would not allow me to park my bike inside. I knew I was taking a chance leaving it outside the store, but a friend needed help getting his school supplies. Ten minutes later my bike was gone.

The thing is, I worked and saved and bought the bike with my own money, which took me about half the year, and in only two months, it's gone. Sure, I called the police, but what can they really do? My stolen bike is not a high priority with all the gang activity and murders going on.

I've spent a lot of time "beating myself up" over leaving my bike like that. What a jerk I must have looked like to some people, all upset because somebody had stolen my bike. I'm sure some people must have said, "Boy, if I'd had a bike like that, I'd never let it out of my sight." Ordinarily, I would not have left it either. But the reality is, I'm not the jerk. The jerk is the one who stole my bike.

I'm only 13, but I've learned a lesson I want to pass on to others. If you have something you value, don't let it out of your sight. It's too bad we do not live in a society that cares and respects the property and hard work of others. Also, I realize that it is people who matter and not things. I still have my family, my health, my friends, my pride, my freedom, and my integrity. I can work hard and earn another bike. Hopefully, the jerk who stole my bike will get what is coming to him or better yet will have a change of heart and return my bike.

SPEAKING OUT

New air terminal building is sound business decision

By Mike McGregor

Mike McGregor is city manager of the City of Midland.

In a recent article in this space, and through articles over the last several months, a number of erroneous and misleading statements have been made with regard to the new air terminal building being constructed at Midland International Airport.

The new terminal will replace a 40-year-old building that has been remodeled and enlarged several times. There are plumbing, electrical, heating and cooling, asbestos and handicap problems. The new building will be larger in the areas that are overcrowded now, such as baggage claim, ticket-counter queuing and the concourse walkway. A complete remodeling of the old building would cost about half of the cost of a new facility, and is therefore not a cost-effective use of funds.

With regard to the airport and Airway Trust Fund, it currently has a balance of $14 billion with $4 billion uncommitted. Annual income to the fund is $6 billion, primarily from airline ticket tax, and annual appropriations are $6 billion. Grants-in-aid for airports are $1.4 billion of the appropriation, and this is where Midland International Airport receives most of its federal funds. The funding that Midland receives is based upon the number of people flying from the airport. Enplanements have increased about 4 percent over the last two years.

Recently discussions have focused on the FAA's Letter of Intent (LOI). This is a letter which allows airports to use future federal grants on a particular project. The FAA has not issued the letter at this time, but if the LOI were not issued, federal funds could still be used and the project would be completed on schedule.

The financing plan has not changed since 1992, when the decision was made to use federal funds for 30 percent, passenger facility charge (PFC) funds for 55 percent and local airport revenues for 15 percent of the revenues to retire the bonds used to construct the new building.

The airport is accounted for independently of other city operations and does not use any city tax revenues. It generates its own revenues and is self-supporting. Citizens of Midland who use the airport pay about 40 percent of non-federal revenue. The other 60 percent comes from Odessans and other West Texans who use the airport. If additional income were ever needed, there is room for adjustment of such things as landing fees and rental rates which have not been increased since 1990.

It has been pointed out that current enplanements are below airport master plan forecasts. Such plans are designed to be used by airport professionals who understand that the growth projections are optimistic to keep an airport from undersizing its facilities. Actual growth seldom meets these projections. On the other hand, financial plans are conservative and show a minimal rate of growth. Midland International's financial plan anticipates 0.5 percent growth in enplanements per year. In actuality, the current growth rate is 2.5 percent, or five times the conservative forecast.

Midland International and the Permian Basin area are very fortunate to have Southwest Airlines as our primary carrier. Southwest has about 70 percent to 75 percent of the market share of the 560,000 enplanements for this area. When it comes to an airport, they simply want a place to land and take off as well as adequate ticket-counter space for their operations. They are not particularly interested in whether the heating or cooling works well, or if the plumbing always functions properly, or if the public areas are too small. As long as there is a place to buy a ticket and get into a plane, they are happy. Midland has always been a very low-cost airport for the airlines and it will continue to be. In fact, Southwest's only increase in cost may be because of the increased area they want to rent.

The decision by the City Council, airport board, engineers, city staff, Permian Basin Airport Board and many others to build a new terminal building resulted from three years of in-depth study and analysis. It was a prudent business decision that any good corporation would have made. In fact, it was not unlike Southwest Airlines' decision about six years ago to abandon their old office building and construct a new, modern, more efficient building on the west side of Love Field.

The council is to be commended for their foresight and vision in recognizing what is best for Midland and its citizens and their prosperity in the future. Midland International Airport is the single most important asset for the next generation of Midlanders. It is essential that an adequate and modern facility be built to meet our needs over the next 50 years.

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

- Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification. Letters not including this information will not be considered for publication.
- They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations. The briefer the letter, the better its chance of publication.
- Only one letter per month per writer can be published.
- Letters will be edited for length, taste and legal reasons and are accepted only on that basis. Letters which are difficult to reduce in length will be returned to the writer to be edited before being re-submitted.
- We do not publish "open" letters, copies of letters sent to others or multiple signatures.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Letters should be sent to: The Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland 79702, or you may fax to 682-3793.

Police investigate pawnshop owner for gun violation

FORT WORTH (AP) — A handgun police believe was used to kill a woman is at the center of an investigation into whether a pawnshop violated a five-day waiting period involving the sale of such weapons.

The owner of River Oaks Pawn Shop has denied any wrongdoing and said a man walked out of the store while she was distracted with helping other customers.

"I just hate this. I had no idea he was accused in the killing," said Geraldine Cole, 78. "He had started to fill out paper work and the next thing I knew, he had walked out the door with it."

Ms. Cole says she mailed the man a letter telling him he had to come back and fill out the paperwork for the .25-caliber Raven semiautomatic for which he had paid $50.

Fred Todd Ramsey is alleged in an arrest warrant affidavit to have gone into the pawnshop to purchase a handgun Aug. 11 while a friend stayed in the car.

Ramsey is expected to be charged with the Aug. 13 death of his ex-girlfriend, 22-year-old Michelle Reane Myers. He remained in jail on $50,000 bond Saturday, police said.

Fort Worth police Sgt. Paul Kratz confirmed an investigation is ongoing into the sale of the gun and said information was forwarded to agents with the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

Agents are looking into reports that the store sold Ramsey the gun without requiring the five-day wait, said Steve Steele, acting resident agent in charge of the Fort Worth ATF. He declined to elaborate.

The Brady Law requires a five-day wait and background checks before a handgun is sold.

Anesthesiologist resigns following 5-year-old's death

HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston anesthesiologist has resigned from the staff of a Houston hospital in the wake of the death of 5-year-old boy after a circumcision.

Dr. T. Jose Tovar also has been sued by relatives of a woman who died in August 1993 after foot surgery. Court records show that it was the 11th lawsuit filed in Harris County against Tovar, who moved to Houston in 1968.

Dr. Paul Radelat, one of Tovar's attorneys, said his client has never endangered a patient's life, and that he "didn't think being sued that many times in 30 years is unusual."

"If you walk in the woods a number of times, you'll get bitten by the snake," said Radelat, who is also a pathologist. "This is not an indictment of his medical care, but it's difficult to be absolutely right every time in such high-risk work. Too many decisions have to be made. You're going to have some bad luck."

Tovar's resignation came after Jeremie Johnson died after slipping into a coma during the 30-minute circumcision at Doctor's Hospital-Airline.

The child was transferred to Texas Children's Hospital but never regained consciousness. His family removed him from life support a week later, on July 25. Final autopsy results aren't expected for about five weeks.

Tovar, 62, was suspended immediately after the child became comatose, pending a hospital investigation.

He resigned from Doctor's Hospital on Aug. 8, saying he was "so devastated he felt it was the best thing," said administrator B. Lee Brown.

Tovar, married with four children, has referred all media calls to his lawyers.

The latest lawsuit accused Tovar and many other doctors and nurses of negligence that caused patient death or injury.

To date, Tovar has not lost a lawsuit. Some were dismissed by judges; others ended favorable jury verdicts. Still others resulted in cash settlements but no admission of negligence.

Four cases are pending, including the one filed Friday by relatives who contend Dorothy Brackett's death was caused by Tovar and other Parkway Hospital doctors not properly diagnosing and treating her.

Some who know Tovar describe him as caring and meticulous but, like many doctors, the target of complaints of malpractice and negligence.

Plaintiffs' lawyers have questioned Tovar's credibility. In a recent deposition, he said his resume incorrectly listed a certification in advanced cardiac life support. He is not certified.

"Technically, it was a falsification, a slipup," Radelat said. "I don't know how it got on there, when it did, or why."

A native of Bogota, Colombia, Tovar graduated from medical school there and practiced anesthesiology and pediatrics. After moving to Houston, he began training in anesthesiology at St. Joseph Hospital.

In 1976, he moved to Parkway Hospital, where he developed a reputation among acquaintances as one of the hardest-working staff members. In January, Tovar moved his practice to Doctor's Hospital.

The Texas Board of Medical Examiners records show no record of disciplinary action against him.

Wealthy immigrants buy citizenships, visas starting at $500,000

By Michele Kay
Austin American-Statesman

AUSTIN — Money doesn't just talk. It also buys admission to the United States.

Most immigrants face delays that often drag on for decades. But the lucky few who can afford to pay an entrance fee are ushered to the front of the queue, where they are welcomed warmly by U.S. authorities. The cost is high. It ranges from $500,000 to $1 million — money that must be invested in a business in the United States that creates at least five jobs.

An average of 100 to 150 investors are taking that route to legal immigration every year. But the issue is controversial, and Congress will debate changes this fall.

Opponents say the United States should not give preference to wealthy individuals, particularly when efforts are under way to reduce the number of legal immigrants. Proponents say the program creates economic development but could be simplified and made less expensive.

In most cases, immigration attorneys say, the immigrants have their hearts set on coming to the United States, and investor visas are the only option available to them.

That was the case with Ramzi Hakim, a native of Lebanon who now lives in Austin. He had been Texas for 10 years, first as a student at Southern Methodist University in Dallas and later on temporary visas. By 1992, Hakim had exhausted all immigration avenues but did not want to return to Lebanon, which had been ravaged by civil war. His only option was an investor visa. He was one of the first to apply for the visas, which became available in 1991.

"It was the only way I could stay here," said Hakim, 31.

Using money he had inherited from his grandparents, Hakim built two International House of Pancake restaurants. The first was in San Antonio, the second in nearby New Braunfels. He spent more than $1 million and employs about 150 people.

"The investor program has been good for me, and it is good for the country," Hakim said.

Congress decided five years ago to treat overseas investors with special care. Members wanted to attract foreign capita and investors who would create jobs. But the program has had fewer takers than expected. Although nearly 10,000 investor visas are available every year, only 400 to 500 are issued — and those numbers include the spouses and minor children of investors. Immigration attorneys blame the hefty price.

One proposal before Congress would lower the tab and allow the United States to compete with Canada, Australia and other countries who require investors to commit as little as $200,000. Programs in those countries have been so successful that there are waiting lists.

In the United States, investors who settle in rural areas or in cities with high unemployment must invest a minimum of $500,000 and create five jobs. Everyone else needs to commit $1 million and employ 10 people.

A diverse group of investors has been attracted by the program, which immigration attorneys refer to as the "millionaire program." They joke that instead of representing boat people, their clients are yacht owners.

'I get lots of inquiries from people all around the world, but if they decide against coming here, it is because there are too many strings attached.'

— Paul Parsons, immigration attorney in Austin

Robert Banta, an immigration lawyer in Atlanta, cites as an example a client he represented recently — a wealthy Muslim family with four children. Their home was in Eritrea in northern Ethiopia, but they had moved first to Milan, Italy. They decided they preferred to live in the United States and settled in Atlanta, where they started a clothing factory.

Africans account for a relatively small share of investor visas. Asians dominate the numbers, particularly in California.

"I had a client from the Pacific Rim who bought an investor visa for his girlfriend. They were not married, but he wanted her to have the visa so she could live here. He set her up in business and put up the capital," said David Hirson, an immigration lawyer in Irvine, Calif.

In Texas, mayors of larger cities can designate parts of their towns as having special needs that allow investors to qualify for the $500,000 investment. Five investors from Taiwan, for example, built a nursing home in McKinney, north of Dallas, three years ago. Each one was allowed to invest $500,000 because the area was designated by local authorities as being economically needy.

Hakim did no get that break. His visa came attached with a $1 million tab.

"It's hard to come up with million dollars," Hakim said.

Two Texans, U.S. Reps. Lamar Smith, R-San Antonio, and John Bryant, D-Dallas, are leading the opposing camps in the investor visa fight in Congress. Smith, who chairs the immigration committee, wants to experiment with a $500,000 and five jobs requirement for all investors, regardless of where they settle.

"We are losing the best and brightest immigrants. The whole point of our immigration policies is to admit those who will benefit America. The investor program is the only one that guarantees the creation of jobs in the United States," Smith said.

Bryant, who is the leading Democratic member of the committee, fought against the program five years ago and intends to lead the charge once again.

"It is tantamount to selling citizenship. The idea that you allow people in just because they have money is un-American. We ignore people like physicians or religious leaders because they have spent their careers doing other things than accumulating money," Bryant said.

Immigration attorneys say that the high cost is not the only reason the program has attracted relatively few takers. When investor visas first became available in 1991, immigration attorneys were thrilled. They saw the program as a potential gold mine.

"Attorneys were going over to Hong Kong and other countries in the Pacific Rim to give presentations to potential clients. They put ads in local papers and printed brochures and other promotional materials," said Steve Ledik, an immigration attorney in Dallas with the law firm of Gardere and Wynn.

But their enthusiasm was short-lived. In part, that is because it is cheaper to obtain a Canadian visa. But attorneys also say that the United States puts immigrants through unnecessary hoops. They cite financial disclosure requirements and a waiting period as the two biggest obstacles.

"I get lots of inquiries from people all around the world, but if they decide against coming here, it is because there are too many strings attached," said Paul Parsons, an immigration attorney in Austin.

The requirement that investors disclose how and where they made their money is prompted by a fear that drug dealers will enter the country posing as legitimate investors.

"It is preposterous," Banta said. "Drug dealers are doing everything they can to stay out of the United States. They are a lot better off in Colombia."

Despite having invested the dollars required and created more jobs than the law demands, Hakim is still waiting for a permanent visa. Investors in the United States must wait two years after getting their initial visa for permanent status. They must show their business is successful, that they continue to employ the required number of people.

"It is like being on probation," Hakim said. But he is confident that his permanent papers will be forthcoming.

Officials target decades of fishing violations

By Dean Stephens
Associated Press

MADISONVILLE (AP) — The fishing is so good in Wilson Shoals it's criminal.

At least it was earlier this year for about 10 residents of the tiny fishing community in Madison County, about 90 miles north of Houston.

Each year in Lake Livingston, scores of bass are spawned and swim north in search of swifter waters. The shoals provide those fast currents, but also act as a bottleneck for the fish.

Some fishermen illegally take advantage of the susceptibility of the fish trapped in Wilson Shoals' small waterways. For at least 30 years, the practice has continued with only an occasional arrest and fine to break the trend.

The trailers, shacks and other makeshift homes of Wilson Shoals number about 50 and lay along a rough dirt road on the banks of the Trinity River and Bedias Creek.

Assorted dogs roam the area, and people wave as they drive by one another.

By many accounts, it is a tightknit fishing community.

Therein lies the problem, the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department says.

In February 1994, the department began an undercover operation to end widespread illegal commercial fishing in the shoals.

A year later, 10 people were arrested on more than 150 misdemeanor charges alleging violations of state fishing laws.

Last month, in the county's first trial in 17 years, a six-person jury convicted Larry Quinn "Big Boy" Brisher, 48, of possessing three times the legal amount of white bass. He was fined $2,000.

According to an affidavit signed by game warden Bradley Smith, Brisher and several others sold him bass while he was posing as a fish wholesaler during the sting.

It is illegal to buy, sell, offer to buy or sell or possess for sale white bass or hybrid bass unless a person is a licensed fish farmer or fish importer.

The community is enigmatic. Most residents know each other only by nicknames. Those familiar with the area know only that some of the residents are retired and some are veterans. They say they do not know how the residents make their living. They can't even say for certain how many people live in Wilson Shoals, but they estimate less than 100.

What they do know is that they fish.

"It's just what they do down there," said Ronny Dartez, a 13-year resident of Madisonville who sat on Brisher's jury.

"All they do is fish the Trinity River. And they fish it hard."

And they keep to themselves.

"They mind their own business and don't really like the rest of the people in Madison County coming down and trying to tend to that business," said Amy D. Smith, court-appointed attorney for "Big Boy" Brisher.

Given the residents rejection of outsiders, Dartez said he was "amazed" Bradley Smith could enter the community, be accepted and conduct a sting. Ms. Smith said her research showed that the game warden did a lot of partying with the fishermen to become part of the band.

Wilson Shoals has a rather shady reputation with those who enforce the fishing laws.

Game wardens and parks and wildlife officials say illegal fishing has been rampant in the area for more than three decades.

"The ongoing problem and the documentation that we had about the commercial trafficking of the fish certainly justified our course of action," said Steve Pritchett, assistant commander for special investigation for the parks department.

"They violated the law any way they could to catch as many fish as they could," he said, adding that many of those arrested have criminal histories.

The department's charges against the 10 arrested include possession of more than the legal limit of bass and use of illegal methods — such as large nets and electric shock devices — to catch the bass.

Authorities argue that overfishing in the Wilson Shoals area caused fishing to suffer downstream on the Trinity River, where it is an important part of the economy.

Thousands of pounds of fish can be caught out of the Wilson Shoals area during peak seasons.

Madison County Game Warden Bill Matzke said he once busted a wholesaler transporting 20,000 pounds of bass caught in just four days by fishermen in the shoals.

"It's always been a place where illegal fishing has been going on," Matzke said, adding that it is also known as a place where buyers can purchase fish cheap.

Despite the reputation, at least one resident who calls himself "Cowboy" said he didn't think the bust had affected those not involved.

Heart defect caused death, examiners say

HOUSTON (AP) — The death of 14-year-old Galveston girl at Walt Disney World was caused by a congenital heart defect, medical examiners have concluded.

Linda Elaine Baker died beside her 40-year-old mother, Linda Baker, on May 16 while they were on the Body Wars ride at the Orlando, Fla., park. The cause of death was listed as cardiac arrhythmia.

Ms. Baker told authorities that day that she had used a small inheritance to buy a car and take the girl to Disney World.

"Basically, there was a problem with conduction of electrical activity through the heart," said Dr. William R. Anderson, chief deputy Orange County medical examiner.

"In all likelihood, excitement or happenstance or whatever caused his arrhythmia to become suddenly much worse and the heart stopped, essentially," Anderson said Friday.

Pats cut Bucky

SMITHFIELD, R.I. — New England Patriots coach Bill Parcells released seven players, including former Texas A&M quarterback Bucky Richardson, and put another on injured reserve Saturday, four days before the NFL's deadline for trimming rosters to 60 players.

Richardson, who played for the Houston Oilers last year, was playing fullback for the Patriots.

The most surprising move was the release of Richardson, who was claimed off waivers from Houston two weeks ago. Parcells, who hoped to turn the former quarterback into a backup fullback, still could bring him back if he clears waivers.

Players dismissed

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — Junior James Perry, Arkansas' second-leading receiver last year, and sophomore running back Leon Clark have been dismissed from the Razorbacks' football team, coach Danny Ford said Friday. He said the players broke a team rule, but would not elaborate.

"We've got certain things the people of Arkansas, I think, need to stand for and believe in, and I think if they (players) do things correctly, our people will be glad to support them," Ford said. "But I don't think we're in the position anytime — win, lose or draw — where an individual is more important than people doing the correct things for our football team.

"A team that I want is one that puts the team first more than anything else," he said.

Ford said both Perry and Clark would have to "make a whole lot of changes before they would be back here."

Lack of wind punishes course

■ Players scorch The Club at Mission Dorado course in the third round of the Nike Permian Basin Open.

By Stewart Doreen
Sports Writer

ODESSA — When the winds that blew mightily during the first two days of Nike Permian Basin Open went away, the golfers came to play. And did they ever.

The field at The Club at Mission Dorado, battered by two days of West Texas' winds, directed its anger at the course as its guard was let down on Saturday's third round. The onslaught was, if nothing else, truly awesome.

How awesome were the Nike Tour players?

The stroke average for the third round was 70.063, almost two strokes lower than the average of the previous two rounds.

There were 31 golfers who shot below 70. Only 27 shot below 70 in the first two rounds combined.

There were 149 golfers who shot above par in the first two rounds compared to 9 in the third round.

Two-time Nike tour winner Chris Smith was the day's biggest bully, shooting an 8-under-par, 64 to place himself in a tie with second-round leader Hugh Royer III and Roger Salazar at 11-under-par.

"When it's calm like it was on the first 14 to 15 holes today, you don't have to think as much, you just step up and hit the shots," said Smith, who can become

Cause of death: acute neglect

In December, storied old Southwest Conference dies at age 81

DALLAS — In May 1914 at the Oriental Hotel in Dallas, the league of Davey O'Brien, Sammy Baugh, John David Crow, Kyle Rote, Doak Walker, Bob Lilly, Jim Swink and Earl Campbell was born.

On Dec. 2, 1995, after Texas plays Texas A&M and Rice meets Houston, the storied old conference will be dead at the age of 81. Cause of death can be listed as acute neglect.

The charter members were Texas A&M, Texas, Oklahoma, Oklahoma A&M, Southwestern, Arkansas, and Baylor. Rice joined in 1915 in the first year of official play, sat out two years, and returned in 1918. Louisiana State was represented at the meeting but decided not to join.

There was a harbinger of things to come even in 1915. Oklahoma and Baylor tied for the title but the Bears later had to forfeit their piece of the championship. The reason: an ineligible player.

Tyson stops McNeely in early default

By Ed Schuyler Jr.
AP Boxing Writer

LAS VEGAS — Mike Tyson came back in a fast and furious but unsatisfactory performance that was no fault of his by beating Peter McNeeley in the first round Saturday night at the MGM Grand Arena.

After McNeeley got up from a second knockdown, his manager, Vinnie Vecchione, jumped into the ring and stopped the fight after just 89 seconds.

McNeeley was furious at first, but he was smiling in the corner where his mother hugged him and he gave high-fives to his friends.

When Tyson realized the fight was over, he said, "What?"

Then with a disgusted look on his face, Tyson left the ring before the official decision had even been announced.

Later Tyson indicated McNeeley may have been fortunate the fight ended as it did.

"Eventually he would have gotten hurt," Tyson said. "I'm a blood man. I like to win.

"I didn't think I hit him hard but he fell. I was surprised his corner came in to stop it."

The crowd was also surprised. They booed and chanted obscenities at the abrupt ending.

The fight didn't even last as long as the national anthem, but while it lasted

Tyler John Tyler, Permian 1-2 in AP poll

■ Two-time defending Class 4A champion Stephenville is tied with LaMarque for the preseason No. 1 spot.

The Associated Press

DALLAS — Tyler John Tyler is the No. 1 Class 5A team in the state, according to The Associated Press' first high school football poll, but Odessa Permian is ranked No. 2.

And just in case you want some signficant action along the way, Permian will meet No. 3 ranked Dallas Carter in a non-conference game during the fifth week of the football season at Ratliff Stadium on a Saturday afternoon.

The recurring image of last year's 5A season was the thrilling final minutes of Tyler John Tyler's victory over Plano East in a Division II regional final.

The John Tyler Lions went on to win Division II and Plano won Division I its seventh state title to tie Brownwood for the state record.

The Lions were the runaway favorites in the class with 22 first-place votes. Plano was seventh.

Some familiar names bridge the six spots between last year's champions.

Permian and Carter are followed by Austin Westlake, Converse Judson and Aldine Eisenhower.

Eisenhower's district rival Aldine MacArthur came in eighth, then there was a big dip in voting until No. 9 Plano East and No. 10 Deer Park. No other District 4-5A teams were mentioned in the poll.

Linked by the last two championship games and an expected rematch in December, Stephenville and La Marque are tied for No. 1 atop Class 4A.

Both received 295 points from a panel of 36 sportswriters and broadcasters, although two-time defending champion Stephenville received 14 first-place votes, compared to five for La Marque.

"It's very ironic," said Stephenville coach Art Briles, whose team's 32-game winning streak is currently the state's

El Paso serves up ugly 5-4 win over Halos in 10

By Sean Wallace
Sports Writer

The El Paso Diablos offered up a textbook version of the ugly win on Saturday night.

El Paso committed five errors, three by shortstop Gabby Martinez, but were rescued in the 10th inning on a Tom Nevers home run as the Diablos escaped with a 5-4 win over Midland at Christensen Stadium on a night when the Angels topped the 200,000 mark in attendance.

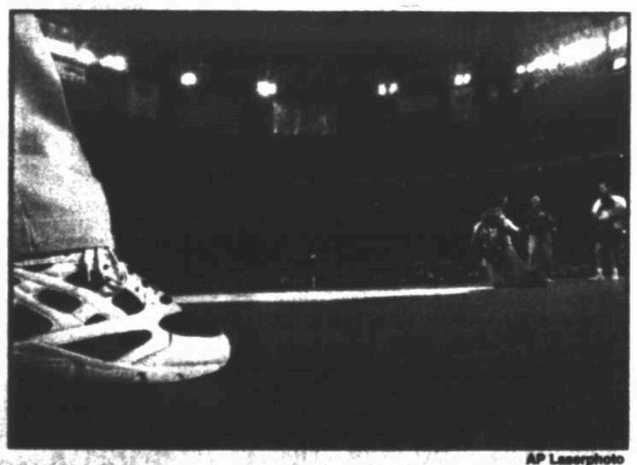

Corey Lidle (5-3) pitched three innings in relief to pick up the win, getting George Arias to ground into a game-ending double play. He walked one and struck out three as the Angels managed only five hits the whole night but managed to send the game to extra innings. Midland's Mike Schooler pitched the final inning and took the loss.

The win keeps the Diablos (28-29) still within a reasonable chance of catching Wichita (33-24) for the Western Division's second-half title, staying five games back. Wichita kept pace Saturday with an 8-5 win over San Antonio, and meet the Diablos in Wichita for a five-game series to close the year. Midland (24-33), which has lost seven of its last 11 games, fell nine games behind Wichita with only 11 games remaining.

The Angels had a chance to win the game in the bottom of the ninth when Michael Wolff walked and was sacrificed to second by Ty Boykin, who had three of Midland's five hits. Lidle then got Basilio Ortiz and Jose Monzon to pop out and end the threat.

Oilers-Chargers game canceled because of turf

AP Laserphoto
The NFL Preseason game between the Houston Oilers and the San Diego Chargers was cancelled Saturday after the turf was found to have pulled off the floor of the Astrodome, shown above, and was determined to be too dangerous to play on. The game was delayed for 72 minutes before it was announced it would be canceled and not rescheduled.

The Associated Press

HOUSTON — The preseason game between the Houston Oilers and San Diego Chargers was canceled Saturday night because the artificial turf at the Astrodome was considered unsafe for play.

The game was scrapped 70 minutes after the scheduled 7:30 p.m. CDT start and would not be rescheduled, according to an announcement made to a booing crowd.

"After looking at the field, the league felt it was not safe," said Nick Skorich, a former NFL coach and the league's officiating observer for Saturday night's game. "I looked at several spots at midfield and the spots in the corner of the end zone. The corner had a very irregular surface. I felt it was not as good as it used to be and was dangerous."

Both teams complained about the conditions.

Carl Marsalis, president of Astrodome USA, which manages the stadium, said Astros owner Drayton McLane agreed to accept liability for any player injured because of the playing surface, but the offer was not accepted by the Oilers.

Marsalis said crews who replaced the field after a baseball game Thursday used the same procedures they have employed for the last eight years.

"This is the first time the Oilers have protested and declared the condition dan-

Mustangs kick off final SWC season in Cotton Bowl home

The Associated Press

DALLAS (AP) — Southern Methodist is back in the Cotton Bowl for its final season of Southwest Conference football. The Mustangs just hope they have as much success as Doak Walker and Kyle Rote did with their winning ways back in the 1940s.

In fact, a .500 season would be a refreshing change for the Mustangs, who are still struggling to bounce back from the NCAA's appropriately named "death penalty."

SMU was 1-9-1 last year with a 21-21 tie with nationally ranked Texas A&M that proved to be the one shining hour for coach Tom Rossley's crew. It was a game the Mustangs could have won in the San Antonio Alamodome last October but a late field goal try missed.

The Mustangs are playing teams close but haven't been deep enough to get into the winning column.

SMU had a seven-point loss to UCLA and a four-point loss to North Carolina, both nationally ranked when they took on the Mustangs.

"We get close but we just haven't been able to finish," Rossley said. "But we are getting there."

The Mustangs will be in the Western Athletic Conference along with the Texas Christian Horned Frogs and the Rice Owls after this final foray against SWC members.

SMU should be a much more experienced team with junior quarterback Ramon Flanigan ready to have his finest season.

Flanigan will have to be at his best as the Mustangs meet Arkansas, Navy, Oklahoma and Wisconsin in a competitive nonconference schedule.

Flanigan averaged 237 yards total offense per game last year, 13th highest in the country. He was hounded by injuries but will be 100 percent healthy for the start of the campaign.

Flanigan is going back to throwing the deep pass again this year.

"Last year we didn't throw deep very much because we didn't have a lot of speed in our wide receivers," he said. "This year we do and we'll go deep."

The Mustangs are hoping to get tougher on defense where the team was worn out by the time the fourth quarter rolled around.

Linebacker Chris Bordano heads a faster and tougher Mustang defense.

"We have to be more aggressive on defense," Rossley said. "Stopping the run will be the key. We need to force other teams to pass, hopefully from their end of the field."

The Mustangs are leaving behind their post death penalty days in Ownby Stadium and hope they can have as much success as the teams in the '50s.

"We're ready to take another big step forward," said Rossley.

3 powerhouses off probation in '95

■ Texas A&M, Auburn and Washington figure into national title hunt.

The Associated Press

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — The national championship picture, notorious in college football for not always being decided on the field, could be altered this season by the probation shuffle.

Auburn, Texas A&M and Washington are all eligible for bowl games this year after serving NCAA sentences for assorted offenses. Alabama, placed on probation for the first time in its history, is not.

The Tigers and Aggies have been picked by preseason prognosticators to be in the hunt for the national title. Alabama usually is, and Washington has been known to stir in the January rush for glory.

"I would hope by midseason that we are a contender," Auburn coach Terry Bowden said. "And I think that's where it really starts to affect you. If you're in the hunt, baby, every day you go out there, you can feel it."

Bowden's team won an incredible 20 straight games while gripped by NCAA probation, yet never rose to No. 1, perhaps because voters knew that the Tigers couldn't play in a bowl game.

Texas A&M, coming off a one-year bowl ban as part of five years' probation, was 10-0-1 last season under coach R.C. Slocum. The Aggies are the fifth winningest team in the '90s, but have not captured a national title since 1939.

Bowden hyped his team for No. 1 last season despite probation, using the sentence as an "us against the world" motivator. This preseason, Bowden's perspective, and his tune, have changed.

"You don't play a Jan. 1 game, you can't win a national championship," Bowden said. "We would have had much more motivation being eligible for everything than not."

Alabama, winner of six national crowns, faces the improbable task of adding a seventh without winning its conference or playing in a bowl. Auburn was in contention for the No. 1 ranking last season until the Tigers' first slip-up — a tie with Georgia — ruined their chances.

Sanctions were levied against the Crimson Tied just last week — three years' probation, a postseason ban this season, scholarship reductions and forfeiture of games. The NCAA hammer came down a mere five days from the start of practice, raising questions about how young players will handle it.

"I feel badly for these players, I really do," Alabama coach Gene Stallings said. "I've got to do everything I possibly can to not let it break our concentration. It will to a certain extent, but I don't want it to be an excuse for failure."

Besides the intrigue of possible runs from the NCAA dog house to championship glory, the Tigers and Aggies have something else in common — star players touted as Heisman Trophy favorites. Auburn has tailback Stephen Davis; A&M, tailback Leeland McElroy.

But the biggest prize on the horizon for these teams is a national championship. Alabama has other things to worry about, as Albright knows all too well.

"I feel tremendously sorry for the Alabama program at this point because I know how hard it is to go through that," said Albright, who warned that the Tide must change its priorities this season.

"When you take (the postseason) away, you start hanging your hat on: Can we still win it in one poll? Can we go undefeated? You start reaching for whatever goals are left."

DEATH: SWC football affected, infected Texans

named the first president for the Southwest Intercollegiate Conference. It was his idea to get the schools together.

The league finally ran out of steam in the early 1990s when schools began to scramble for the best TV packages. Texas, Texas A&M, Texas Tech and Baylor decided to join the newly formed Big 12 Conference. Rice, Southern Methodist and Texas Christian went to the Western Athletic Conference. And Houston signed on with the new Conference USA.

The SWC rose to prominence in the late '30s when TCU won the national title in 1938 and Texas A&M captured the championship the following year. But the real golden years for the league were the 1960s, '70s and early '80s.

Texas won The Associated Press title in 1963 and 1969, was second in 1981, and finished third four times from 1961-72. Arkansas finished second in 1964 and third in 1965 and 1977. SMU, led by the Pony Express backfield of Craig James and Eric Dickerson, was runner-up in 1982.

After that, only Texas A&M kept the SWC in the Top 10.

The death of the SWC will be a hard one for generations of fans who grew up listening to Kern Tips on the radio and watching some of the best high school football in the country.

District Judge James Farris of Beaumont hitchhiked to his first game when he was a kid.

"I just had to see Notre Dame and SMU play in the Cotton Bowl back in 1949," he said. "I didn't have a ticket. I tried to sneak in, got caught and snuck in again. It was the greatest game I ever saw. Notre Dame had won over 30 consecutive game but SMU almost beat them behind Kyle Rote. Then I got really lucky. Somebody left a program under their seat after the game. I've still got that program. It's a treasure."

This is the way SWC football affected and infected most Texans.

"I'll miss it the way it was," said A&M coach R.C. Slocum. "It was part of my life when I was a kid in Orange, Texas. I knew all the players. I had those Humble Oil stickers you put on the windshield of the car. I didn't know anything about pro football then. Everything was college football.

"Our heroes were guys like Bob Lilly and Doak Walker. I met (former Rice quarterback) Frank Ryan one time and he was the most famous person in my life."

Watching the demise of the SWC, Slocum added, is "like seeing an old friend with a terminal illness."

Texas Tech coach Spike Dykes said the SWC began to lose national prestige because it lost a lot of Texas-born players to other schools.

"Our credibility level went down and we lost our mystique," Dykes said. "The changes were brought on by money. I can remember when money wasn't the reason people played. It is now."

"It's the close of a great chapter in a great book," said Dykes, who was born in Lubbock. "The people in the state of Texas are losing a lot. Now, we're down to our last dance."

There were many great games, but none bigger than the 1969 Texas-Arkansas showdown between Darrell Royal's top-ranked Longhorns and Frank Broyles' No. 2 Razorbacks.

Both teams were unbeaten. Arkansas jumped to a 14-0 lead but Texas rallied for a 15-14 triumph before a national television audience and President Nixon. The Longhorns went on to beat Notre Dame in the Cotton Bowl and win the national title.

"This was the game that had everything," said veteran columnist Blackie Sherrod of The Dallas Morning News. "It came down to a crazy fourth-down call when Darrell went for everything. Texas hit on a fourth-and-3 pass to the tight end and finally scored a touchdown. It keyed the comeback."

Broyles said "it was a very special game. We had the attention of the nation. I still think about it a lot."

"We were lucky to win it," Royal said. "Arkansas outplayed us but we just made the big plays when it counted. We had a great play and a gutsy call but the rest of it stunk."

The SWC had many great players, but Sherrod suggested SMU's Walker was the best of them all

"Besides being a great running back he even led the league in interceptions one season," Sherrod said of the 1948 Heisman Trophy winner.

Walker, who starred for the Detroit Lions in the NFL and now lives in Denver, said: "It's a shame to see the old league go. It was something special."

Walker was one of five Heisman winners from the SWC. The others were O'Brien of TCU, Crow of Texas A&M, Campbell of Texas, and Andre Ware of Houston.

Other memorable stars included Lilly of TCU, Baugh of TCU, Rote of SMU, John Kimbrough of Texas A&M, Bobby Layne of Texas, Tommy Nobis of Texas, Lance Alworth of Arkansas, and Mike Singletary of Baylor.

The best coach?

Royal, hands down.

"His teams always knew how to line up," Sherrod said. "Players played hard every down for him. He brought the wishbone into college football. He was very innovative."

Sherrod said pro football helped lead to the breakup of the SWC. Fans began to flock to see the Dallas Cowboys and Houston Oilers play. Only Texas and Texas A&M could maintain a solid fan base.

"The inroads of pro football really hurt college football in Texas," Sherrod said.

The national focus began to swing away from Texas and the high school kids began to drift away to Miami, Notre Dame, Michigan, Arizona, Southern California and other schools.

The overall quality began to drop. SWC schools started to cheat and some like SMU, TCU, and Texas A&M got caught, convincing even more Texas prep stars to leave home.

Arkansas left the league in the early 1990s for the Southeastern Conference, which had better TV deals.

"It was a shame it had to work out like it did because the SWC gave Arkansas the respect it desperately needed," Broyles said. "I spent most of my adult life coaching in the SWC. But times change and we had to change with them."

Sherrod said the SWC started to decline a long time ago.

"The league was never the same after Broyles and Royal quit (in the late 1970s). It was a special league."

The SWC found it hard to keep up with the business changes in modern football. Attendance dwindled, fewer games were nationally televised, and each school began to look for a way out.

"It kills me there won't be a Southwest Conference, and TCU playing in it," said author Dan Jenkins, a TCU graduate. "It just ain't fair."

POLL: 4A champ will be last unified before playoff expansion best. "There's nothing I'd like better than to meet them for the state title again. We're planning on it at this end, and I'm sure they are, too."

(From 1C)

Agreed, said La Marque coach Alan Weddell.

"I hope we get another chance," said Weddell, who reminded that his Cougars have won 37 straight regular-season games, which he believes to be the longest current streak.

Champion-fever helped three other teams atop their classes in the preseason rankings. Only 2A's winner is not sitting at No. 1 heading into the opening weekend of Sept. 7-9.

In addition to having two No. 1 teams in 4A, fans also should follow the class to see which school will be the last to emerge as its unified champion.

Beginning in 1996, the 4A playoffs are being expanded a-la-5A to allow the three teams from each district into the postseason. The largest of the three will go into Division I and the other two go into Division II, eventually producing two separate but equal winners.

"I think that makes it more special to win this year because you'll be able to look back and see that it was the last (unified) one," Weddell said.

Although neither Stephenville nor La Marque will return many starters, both have systems that churn out quality players.

Stephenville's junior varsity hasn't lost the last few years and La Marque's freshmen have won the last two district titles.

Briles admits this year's team will not be as big or as deep as the last two, but he says they'll make up for it by being "scrappier and quicker than the last couple."

"We're going to double defend our title with everything we have," he said. "We really have some outstanding players that I think are going to blend in well with our schemes. Our players also have a tremendous amount of confidence."

Weddell said his team was voted No. 1 on reputation because his defense is full of question marks.

"We lost our entire defensive line, three of our four starting linebackers and two-thirds of our secondary," Weddell said.

But, he added, there is one major bright spot. For the first time in his six years at La Marque, he's returning his starting quarterback, Kwasi Cockrell.

There's even better news for the offense: another year of running back Derrick Foster, a 6-foot-1, 195-pound bruiser who also runs the 40 in 4.3 seconds.

As good as those two teams sound, voters had a hard time separating them from the pack. Corsicana came in a close third and even received 10 first-place votes.

The Tigers return 13 starters from an 11-4 team that was derailed 28-6 by Stephenville in the semifinals.

People are excited about Corsicana because of running back Ketric Sanford, who ran for a 4A-record 2,761 yards on a national-record 475 carries as a junior, and defensive back Malik Ledbetter, who had 107 tackles and 12 interceptions last season.

The rest of the preseason 4A top 10 includes Denison, Corpus Christi Calallen, Sulphur Springs, Southlake Carroll, Waxahachie, Jasper and Borger.

Sealy's undefeated rumble to the 3A title last year was so impressive that the Tigers are picked to do it again.

With Sealy returning quarterback Brad Burttschell and six other starters on offense plus nine more coming back on defense, it's no surprise the closer race is for second place. Cuero slipped in ahead of Tatum.

Springtown is fourth, followed by Commerce, Forney, Newton, Columbus, Port Isabel and Childress. Of the entire 3A top 10, only Sealy and Cuero were ranked when last season ended.

In 2A, whither Goldthwaite, winner of the last two state titles and a finalist the past three years.

The Eagles lost six two-way starters and have fallen to eighth. They didn't even get a first-place vote, as the seven teams ahead of them did.

Celina leads the class with 15 first-place votes and a milestone in the making. Coach G.A. Moore is nine victories from No. 300 and his youngest son, Gary Don, will be the quarterback trying to win it for him.

Schulenburg, last year's season-long No. 1, is ranked second, followed by a tie for third between Alto and Pilot Point. Refugio is sixth, then there's another tie between Riesel and Winters.

Groveton is ninth and Grand Saline is No. 10.

The 1A story again is expected to be Thorndale. Thirteen starters return from last year's scoring machine, good enough to convince 31 of the 36 voters that the Bulldogs are again No. 1.

There will plenty of challengers to Thorndale's attempt to become the first consecutive champ of the state's smallest 11-man class since Big Sandy won three straight in 1973-75.

Sudan is always tough and it's ranked second. Overton is third and Thorndale's arch-rival Bartlett is fourth. Robert Lee is fifth, followed by Wink, Iola, Wheeler, Roscoe, and Crawford.

The top teams don't change much in 1A. Of last season's final 10, eight are back in the preseason ranking.

Gordon likes opponents' overconfidence

■ Jeff Gordon hopes to beat pole sitter Bobby Labonte of Corpus Christi during today's NASCAR GM Goodwrench 400.

BROOKLYN, Mich. (AP) — Jeff Gordon hopes he has NASCAR's top drivers right where he wants them today: up front and overconfident.

Gordon owns the track record for a single lap around Michigan International Speedway, but he wrecked his primary car in qualifying, so he will start 21st in a backup Chevrolet Monte Carlo for Sunday's GM Goodwrench 400.

That might be a big disadvantage for some. Not for Gordon.

The same thing happened last month in New Hampshire. On that occasion, Gordon roared through the pack to win the Slick 50 300-mile race, beating Morgan Shepherd across the finish line.

There is one slight difference this time, however.

"The last time we wrecked in qualifying, we were able to fix the same car and qualify it the next day," Gordon said after qualifying in second-round time trials Saturday. "It's going to take us a little longer to get this car back where we want it. It still needs some minor adjustments."

Bobby Labonte, looking for his second straight victory at MIS, will be on the pole for today's race. Labonte, also driving a Chevy, edged Gordon for the victory in the Miller Genuine Draft 400 on June 18.

It is the third career pole, second this season and first on a superspeedway for Labonte. He earned this pole with a lap of 184.403 mph on Friday. Ricky Rudd grabbed the No. 2 slot with a lap of 184.063 mph in his Ford Thunderbird.

But they'll both have their eyes on the rearview mirror, watching for Gordon.

"We're not exactly where we were last time," Labonte said. "We're going to shake the car down and get it back closer to the way it was last time. The track has changed a little bit since yesterday. It's a little snugger. It's got a little more rubber on it.

"It's a little too tight for us right now, but we're going to make some adjustments and hope they work."

Labonte will be driving the same car he won with in June at MIS. He also drove this machine to victory at Charlotte.

"I guess it's got to be my favorite car," Labonte said.

Mark Martin and John Andretti drove fast enough to start in the second row. Brett Bodine, Bill Elliott, Dick Trickle, Dale Earnhardt, Jeremy Mayfield and Kenny Wallace rounded out the top 10.

It was the 15th pole in 21 races for Chevrolet. After Labonte, however, the next six cars were Thunderbirds.

Ford won both Winston Cup poles at MIS in 1994. The only other Chevy among the first 10 this time was driven by Earnhardt, who was eighth at 182.463 mph.

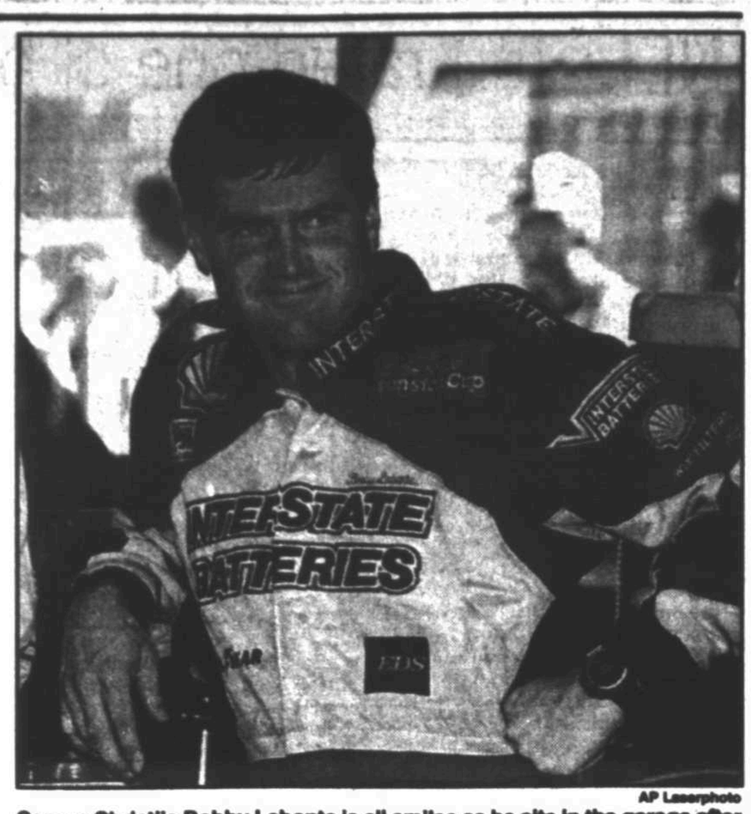

Gordon, who set the MIS record with a lap of 186.611 mph in qualifying for the Miller Draft 400 in June, tops the Winston Cup standings heading into this race. He leads Sterling Marlin by 152 points with 10 races remaining in the 31-race series.

Gordon's backup car was the fastest of the second-round trials. He took it around the high-banked, 2-mile oval in 181.005 mph. That speed would have placed him 20th on Friday in first-round qualifying.

"This car's name is Bricker and we built it for the Brickyard," Gordon said. "Looking back, maybe we should have raced it there. It's a good car.

"We need to have a good finish here to keep everybody pumped up. Getting 21st was important, even though we didn't set a blistering time. We've got a lot of practice left, so who knows what might happen."

That's exactly what Labonte, Rudd and the others are wondering, too.

Martin winner after Jarrett ruling

■ Detroit Gasket 200

BROOKLYN, Mich. (AP) — Mark Martin, easily outrun in the Detroit Gasket 200, was given the victory nearly two hours after the race Saturday when NASCAR relegated Dale Jarrett to the rear of the field for an unapproved engine part.

"The intake manifold had been modified externally on the carburetor mounting flange," said NASCAR spokesman Andy Hall. "It was a part that did not conform to NASCAR rules."

The placement of Jarrett to 42nd position following a post-race inspection of his Ford Thunderbird marked the second time in Busch Grand National history that a victory was taken away from a driver.

In May of 1992, Jeff Burton was placed at the rear of the field when the post-race teardown revealed his car had a rear end that did not conform to specifications.

With the placement of Jarrett at the end of the field, each car was moved up one position. The infraction cost Jarrett about $23,000 in earnings, but Hall said no other penalties were assessed.

Neither Jarrett nor Martin could be reached for immediate comment.

The anticipated battle of front-row starters in the race wound up as a rout for Jarrett, who made history at Michigan International Speedway.

In beating Martin by nearly 7 seconds, Jarrett ran the fastest NASCAR Busch Grand National race in series history, averaging 169.571 mph. The fastest previous race was a 500-kilometer event on July 23, 1994, won by Ken Schrader at Talladega, Ala.. He averaged 167.473.

Despite the high speeds, the race around the high-banked, 2-mile oval in the heart of lower Michigan's Irish Hills region also was safe. It was only the fourth BGN race ever run without a caution flag, the first on a superspeedway. The last time a Busch Grand National race was run without a caution was June 11, 1988, at Rougemont, N.C.

Jarrett earned the pole with a qualifying lap of 174.199. His last pole on the circuit had come in 1989. Martin, also in a Ford, started beside him off a qualifying lap of 174.098 mph.

"There just wasn't any running with Dale today," Martin said. "He just had way more speed than we had."

It was clear from the outset this would be a two-car race. There were four lead changes, all between Jarrett and Martin.

"That was an awful lot of fun out there," Jarrett said. "You don't get a car like this very often. This was just a super car today."

Jarrett went to the pits on lap 51, taking on fuel and four tires. He was back in the lead by lap 53 and steadily pulled away. Jarrett crossed the finish line 6.91 seconds ahead of Martin. The race was completed in one hour, 10 minutes, 46 seconds.

"I raced with Mark there for a while to see if he might be getting through the corners somewhere better," Jarrett said. "But I knew I had a good car."

Both drivers are entered in today's featured Winston Cup race, the GM Goodwrench 400. Jarrett will start 17th, Martin third.

Rookie Ribeiro breaks lap record, wins pole

■ New England 200

LOUDON, N.H. (AP) — Rookie Indy-car driver Andre Ribeiro of Brazil broke the New Hampshire International Speedway lap record and won his first pole Saturday for today's New England 200.

Ribeiro started fifth and sped around the one-mile oval with a top speed of 177.435 mph, bettering the 175.091 by Emerson Fittipaldi to win last year's pole at the country's newest superspeedway.

"It was harder to watch all the times" that followed than drive his Reynard Honda, Ribeiro said. "It was a very exciting moment at the end. It was very, very close."

Ribeiro was not challenged until Scott Pruett, who had the fastest practice lap Friday at 174.613 in a Lola Ford Cosworth, started 17 cars later and turned in a lap of 177.101.

Teo Fabi, in a Reynard Ford Cosworth, started next and shoved Pruett to third with a lap of 177.167.

Speeds dropped more than 2 mph to the next two spots for Robby Gordon, 174.758, and Christian Fittipaldi, 174.479.

Jacques Villeneuve, who can clinch the Indy-car series with a victory Sunday, was a disappointed 15th in 170.784.

"We are not very competitive so far this weekend at all," he said. "The track is not good today and it is because of the heat."

Bobby Rahal, Villeneuve's closest challenger 45 points behind, did worse at 21st in 169.844, but was not downcast.

"Actually, I think we have a good race car for Sunday," he said.

Pruett, the last to win on an oval by a fraction over Al Unser Jr. at the Marlboro 500 in Michigan on July 30, thought he should have done better.

"We were a little too conservative on our changes (for the weather)," he said of the temperatures that climbed toward 80 after a cool morning. "We definitely had a good enough car to put on the pole. We just didn't have quite a good enough setup."

Winning the pole has not been a formula for victory this year; only two have been race winners. Ribeiro also is the record ninth driver in 15 races to win the pole this year.

Ribeiro, whose best qualifying was fifth at Milwaukee on June 4, has finished as high as fourth at Elkhart Lake, Wis., and led for 68 laps three weeks ago in Michigan.

Rookie Gil de Ferran, who drives for Midland-based Hall Racing, qualified eighth for today's race.

Thunder Gulch slowly challenges for Horse of Year

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y. (AP) — Thunder Gulch is slowly challenging for Horse of the Year. Very slowly.

D. Wayne Lukas' Kentucky Derby and Belmont Stakes winner captured the 1 1/4-mile Travers Stakes, the year's final major 3-year-old race, in the slowest time in 14 years on Saturday.

His time of 2:03 3-5 was the slowest since Willow Hour won the 1981 Travers at Saratoga Race Course in 2:03 4-5.

But it was fast enough to beat second-place Pyramid Peak by 4 1/2 lengths and keep Thunder Gulch squarely in the picture for Horse of the Year. The leading contender for the honor so far is the 5-year-old Cigar, who has won nine in a row.

"It looks like he might be a contender for Horse of the Year," Lukas said. "I'm looking forward to the Woodward and meeting Cigar."

The Woodward is scheduled for Sept. 16 at Belmont Park and apparently will provide a pre-Breeders' Cup showdown of America's top two thoroughbreds. The matter then will be settled in the Breeders' Cup Classic on Oct. 28 at Belmont.

The winner, who went off the odds-on favorite at 4-5 under jockey Gary Stevens, returned $3.50, $2.70 and $2.10. Pyramid Peak, ridden by Herb McCauley, held on for second by two lengths over Malthus and returned $3.60 and $2.90. Malthus, ridden by Jorge Chavez, returned $3.30 for show.

Completing the order of finish were Composer, Star Standard, Citadeed and Rank and File. All carried 126 pounds.

Thunder Gulch almost never got started in this one. He appeared to start his leap from the gate a split second before the gate actually opened and Stevens had to check him hard.

From there, however, he settled into fourth place behind Pyramid Peak, Star Standard and Citadeed.

NFL: Turf rated one of best in NFL

gerous," he said. "The turf was installed in 1988 and last year it was rated one of the best in the NFL."

The Elias Sports Bureau, which compiles statistics on professional sports, could not immediately find another NFL game that had been canceled.

On June 15, 1976, a game at the Astrodome between the Houston Astros and Pittsburgh Pirates was postponed because of flooding in the city.

On Saturday night, both teams went through pre-game warmups but then did not return for the scheduled start.

The Oilers had used the field for a workout on Friday, a day after the baseball Astros left town after a series against Philadelphia.

Chargers coach Bobby Ross said the team has asked the NFL for more time to make cuts since the cancellation meant Ross wouldn't get to see some players perform.

"They didn't give us a definite answer right away, but they said it was a reasonable request," Ross said.

Chiefs 36, Bills 10

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Steve Bono, bidding to replace a quarterback many would call irreplaceable, threw three touchdown passes in Kansas City's victory over Buffalo.

Playing almost three full quarters, the hand-picked successor to the retired Joe Montana clicked on 19 of 27 passes for 226 yards. He hit touchdown tosses of 11 yards to tight end Keith Cash and 13 to fullback Tony Richardson as the Chiefs took a 17-3 first-half lead before the largest crowd for an exhibition game in Arrowhead Stadium since 1972.

Then, climaxing a crisp 80-yard march early in the third quarter, the 11-year veteran who's never been a starter found Danan Hughes on the back edge of the end zone for another 13-yard scoring play and a 24-3 lead.

Dolphins 27, Redskins 13

MIAMI — Miami lost four players with injuries, including defensive stalwarts Bryan Cox and Troy Vincent, while beating Washington.

The severity of the injuries wasn't immediately known.

Starting fullback Robert Wilson and reserve cornerback Frankie Smith were also hurt.

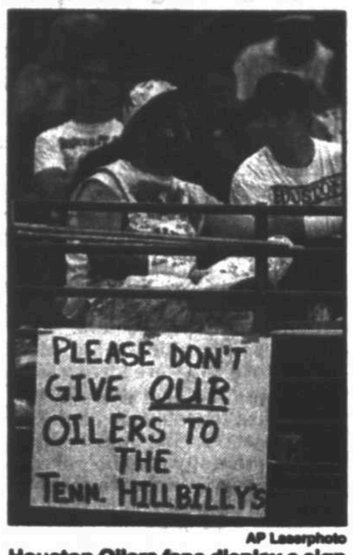

Miami's Dan Marino bounced back from his poorest showing since high school, throwing for 140 yards and a touchdown in 2 1/2 quarters. Louis Oliver scored on a 97-yard interception return of a pass by Redskins second-year quarterback Heath Shuler.

Falcons 19, Browns 10

ATLANTA — Bobby Hebert hit Mario Bailey with a 45-yard touchdown pass in the third quarter and Morten Andersen made four field goals, leading Atlanta a victory over Cleveland.

The Falcons defense did an outstanding job of shutting down Cleveland's running game that had been so effective in a 55-13 victory over Chicago on Monday night. The Browns netted 76 yards on 24 carries.

Andersen's field goals covered 52, 28, 32 and 33 yards, running his exhibition mark to eight in a row before he missed to the right on a 36-yard attempt with 6:22 left in the game.

AP Laserphoto

49ers 17, Panthers 10

SAN FRANCISCO — Steve Young completed all seven of his passes and ran for a touchdown and Merton Hanks stopped a threat with an interception in San Francisco's win over Carolina.

Young played just over a quarter, finishing with a 6-yard scramble for a score 45 seconds into the second period. He completed five passes for 67 yards during the 11-play, 83-yard drive and threw for 72 yards overall.

John Taylor's 21-yard reception gave San Francisco (2-2) a first-and-goal at the 9. Two plays later, with his receivers covered, Young ran up the middle untouched for the score.

Bucs 20, Steelers 7

TAMPA, Fla. — Trent Dilfer continued to make strides leading Tampa Bay's offense, throwing for 197 yards and two touchdowns in the Buccaneers' win over Pittsburgh.

The second-year quarterback wasn't as sharp as he was in directing a 24-point victory over Cincinnati last week, but he did finish well enough against the Steelers reserves to complete 10 passes in 19 attempts. He was intercepted twice.

Giants 32, Jets 31

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Omar Douglas turned a desperation pass tipped by defender Anthony Prior into an 80-yard touchdown and Keith Elias ran in the 2-point conversion, giving the New York Giants a stunning victory over the New York Jets.

Quarterback Kent Graham, scrambling around, flung the ball downfield and Prior settled under it for a game-clinching interception. Instead, he tipped the ball into the air, Douglas grabbed it at the Jets' 35 and sped into the end zone with 22 seconds to go.

Rather than force overtime with a placement, the Giants (3-0) went for 2, and got it.

Adrian Murrell's 1-yard touchdown run with 44 seconds left, one of several big plays by the third-year running back, lifted the Jets ahead 31-24.

Dallas 'D' hinges on Deion

By Chip Brown
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN — Training camp has revealed that the Cowboys' success in Big D this season will appropriately hinge on the three D's: Depth, discipline and Deion.

DEPTH: Just three years ago, the Cowboys had enough talent to field two of the best teams in the NFL with one roster.

The salary-cap crunch, however, has made Dallas mortal. The team projected as a dynasty in the '90s now finds itself wondering who could fill in if a starter was lost at positions such as the offensive line, receiver, defensive backfield, linebacker or even running back.

■ Analysis

The offensive line is filled with Pro Bowl talent, but it is aging. Tackle Mark Tuinei is 35, guard Nate Newton is 33, and center Ray Donaldson is 37. Larry Allen, in his second-year, has proven to be formidable and will play right guard alongside Erik Williams, who is ahead of schedule in his return to right tackle from a career-threatening knee injury.

But the backup for the line is Ron Stone, a third-year player whose progress was such a disappointment that coaches went on a futile search for a replacement, finding an overweight Derek Kennard, who signed a contract, practiced and retired all in one day.

Losing receiver Alvin Harper was no surprise to owner Jerry Jones. The disappointing training camp of second-year receiver Cory Fleming was a surprise. With Fleming dropping passes in each preseason game, the Cowboys have no reliable backup for Michael Irvin and Kevin Williams.

Brock Marion's play at free safety has been a huge sigh of relief for coaches concerned about replacing departed free agent James Washington. But with Marion now on the front line, there is no proven backup.

The Cowboys are desperate to find a safety capable of playing in the nickel package, when Darren Woodson plays linebacker.

With weakside linebacker Darrin Smith in a nasty contract dispute, the Cowboys are relying on injury-prone Godfrey Myles to be the starter and for second-year player Jim Schwantz to be the backup. Myles may prove himself, but in the preseason, he regularly missed coverage assignments and was mediocre against the run.

Emmitt Smith spent the offseason strengthening his hamstrings, but if something happens to No. 22, the Cowboys' running game falls on rookie Sherman Williams.

"We have to be lucky and stay healthy," coach Barry Switzer said. "There are some places an injury would really hurt us because we don't have a lot of depth, but nobody has any depth any more."

DISCIPLINE: This is Troy Aikman's biggest concern. He says practice wasn't regimented enough under Switzer last year, and he fears the lack of a strong hand this year could again leave Dallas short of the Super Bowl.

"If we don't go back to the Super Bowl and win the world championship, it won't be because of a lack of talent on the field," Aikman said. "It will be because of internal conflict within the team, a lack of preparation, a lack of confidence, a lack of discipline going into games, but not because of a lack of talent."

Switzer does, however, appear to be taking a stronger approach with the team. He threatened to cut players who didn't give a better effort in the second half of the team's preseason loss to Oakland, and was constantly meeting one-on-one with players during camp.

"I think Barry's got an understanding of what it takes now," Irvin said. "Last year, he talked a lot more about things he did in college. That's the only experience he had. Now, he's talking about what he's been through here in the pros. He figured out what it takes to win. It's just a different atmosphere. It's his team."

DEION: Jones firmly believes Deion Sanders is the piece of the puzzle that will put Dallas back on top. He has been obsessed, looking under rugs and renegotiating contracts to find every penny he can for the high-priced two-sport star.

Aikman says he's ready to redo his deal to help make room under the salary cap for Deion and Irvin has intimated as much. Dallas now appears to be the frontrunner in the Sanders sweepstakes.

"I'd be shocked if Deion Sanders doesn't join us," Jones told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram in Saturday's editions.

Cowboys officials said Friday that they have presented the free-agent cornerback with a complex, multi-year contract proposal. No terms were disclosed. Jones said Sanders would be offered the opportunity to play at wide receiver on offense, as well as his usual defensive duties at cornerback.

"I like our chances with the team we have currently. But there's no doubt that if we got Deion, our chances would have to improve," Aikman said.

Giants to retire Simms number despite release

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — His bitterness over being released last year having faded, Phil Simms says he is honored to have his number retired by the New York Giants.

The team announced Saturday it will retire Simms' No. 11 during halftime ceremonies of the season opener Sept. 4 against Dallas.

Simms was cut by coach Dan Reeves last summer even though the quarterback felt he still could play. The Giants reasoned that Simms was a $2.3 million luxury coming off shoulder surgery and they couldn't afford to keep him when they wanted Dave Brown to take over the position.

"I feel better about it now," Simms said. "Last year, I was not sure in the back of my mind that I might play again"

Will thrills with three-run homer

The Associated Press

■ AL Roundup

CHICAGO — Will Clark, who missed the previous four games because of back spasms, hit a three-run homer in a six-run fifth inning Saturday night to lead the Texas Rangers to a 9-6 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

Juan Gonzalez, activated from the disabled list Wednesday, also hit a two-run homer as the Rangers won for the eighth time in their last 11 games.

Kevin Gross (7-11) won his third consecutive start, giving up six hits, walking three and striking out a season-high eight in 8 1-3 innings.

Indians 4, Brewers 3

CLEVELAND — Eddie Murray led off the bottom of the ninth inning with his 15th home run, giving Cleveland a victory over Milwaukee.

The Indians became the first team in baseball with 70 wins and increased their lead in the AL Central to 18 games. They have won 20 games in their last at-bat.

Twins 9, Tigers 5

DETROIT — Ron Coomer and Chuck Knoblauch homered during a four-run third inning and Brad Radke settled down from a shaky start as Minnesota topped Detroit.

The Tigers took a 3-0 lead with four straight hits in the first, but Radke (9-11) retired the next 15 batters, the longest such streak by a Twins pitcher this year.

By the time Travis Fryman ended Detroit's drought with a one-out single in the sixth, Minnesota had rallied for a 7-3 lead.

Red Sox 4, Mariners 3

SEATTLE — Erik Hanson won his fourth straight decision and John Valentin hit his 21st home run as Boston beat Andy Benes and Seattle.

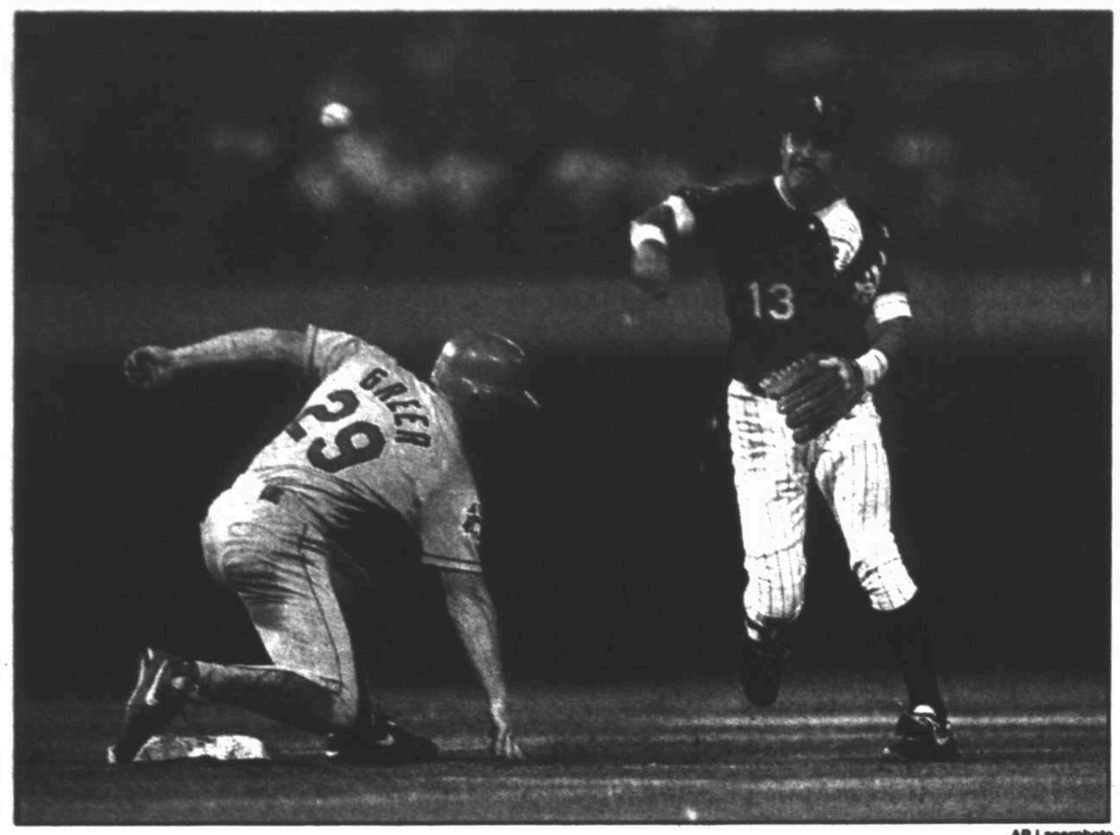

The AL East leaders bounced back for their 15th victory in 17 games a day after the Mariners stopped knuckleball ace Tim Wakefield. Boston's 64 wins are 10 more than it had last season.

Hanson (12-4), facing his former team for the first time, allowed three runs on three hits, struck out nine and walked four in 7 1-3 innings.

Blue Jays 5, Royals 4 (13)

TORONTO — Shawn Green's two-out pinch-single in the 13th inning scored Joe Carter from third base, giving Toronto a win over Kansas City.

Carter reached on a fielder's choice, John Olerud singled and Ed Sprague reached on a fielder's choice that forced Olerud at second. Green, pinch-hitting for Mike Huff, then singled to left off Jeff Montgomery (1-2).

Seles continues roll through Canadian

■ Tennis Roundup

TORONTO — Monica Seles continued to defy her own expectations Saturday, demolishing sixth-seeded Gabriela Sabatini 6-1, 6-0 to reach the final of the Canadian Open.

The destruction was complete and took just 49 minutes as Seles displayed flawless tennis. Her serves, her returns, her placement of shots were all awesome.

It was the best she's been in this first tournament back after 2 1/2 years. She said before it began that it would be unrealistic for her to expect to reach the final. The way she played Saturday, it would have been foolish to expect otherwise.

She will meet the winner of Saturday night's semifinal between Amanda Coetzer and Jana Novotna for the championship on Sunday.

"I played some great points," Seles said. "She kept mixing her shots up and I had to work on every point and do a lot of running."

Volvo International

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — Andre Agassi continued his command of the hardcourts with a semifinal victory over Mats Wilander. Richard Krajicek used 16 aces to eliminate Yevgeny Kafelnikov.

The pressure will be on Krajicek. Agassi has been hard core on the hardcourts all year, taking a 45-2 record into the final. He hasn't lost on the surface this summer.

Agassi also will be seeking to win his 20th straight match and earn his seventh title of the year, surpassing the record of six he won in 1988 — a record he matched last week in Cincinnati.

RCA Championships

INDIANAPOLIS — Pete Sampras' overpowering serve deserted him in the second set, opening the door for Bernd Karbacher to oust the top seed from the RCA Championships on Saturday.

The 12th-seeded German advanced to his first career hardcourt finals with a 4-6, 6-4, 6-1 victory over Sampras, the world's second-ranked player. Karbacher will meet Sweden's Thomas Enqvist in Sunday's final.

Karbacher won the second set by breaking Sampras' serve, the first time Sampras had lost his serve in the tournament.

Astros break up no-no but Reds win 9th straight

The Associated Press

■ NL Roundup

CINCINNATI — Resurgent Dave Burba pitched a two-hitter and Hal Morris had three hits Saturday night, leading the Cincinnati Reds to an 8-0 victory that kept them perfect against the Houston Astros.

Burba (8-2), a setup man with San Francisco for the first half of the season, didn't give up a hit until Derrick May cleanly doubled to right field with two outs in the seventh. Brian Hunter also singled in the ninth.

Houston slid to 0-9 this year against Cincinnati and now trails the NL Central-leading Reds by a season-high nine game. Houston has lost four straight and 10 of 13 overall to fade out of contention.

Phillies 6, Giants 4

PHILADELPHIA — Mickey Morandini's solo homer in the bottom of the seventh snapped a tie and Philadelphia defeated San Francisco.

Matt Williams returned to the Giants' lineup and grounded out in a pinch-hitting appearance in the eighth inning. He had been on the disabled list since June 4 with a broken foot.

Morandini's homer, his sixth of the year, came on a 3-2 pitch leading off the seventh inning against Sergio Valdez (1-3). Morandini is 9-for-21 against the Giants this season.

Mets 2, Dodgers 1

NEW YORK — Dave Mlicki, Jerry DiPoto and John Franco stopped Los Angeles on six hits and New York beat the Dodgers for its third straight win.

The Dodgers lost their third in a row despite holding New York to three hits. Brett Butler, traded by the Mets to Los Angeles on Friday, had a sacrifice fly, and has driven in all three runs the Dodgers have scored since the deal.

Butch Huskey, called up from Triple-A Norfolk Friday, had a sacrifice fly in the fourth inning that put the Mets ahead 2-1.

Pirates 10, Marlins 5

PITTSBURGH — Angelo Encarnacion hit his first major league homer, a two-run, inside-the-park grounder down the third-base line that helped Pittsburgh to a victory over Florida.

Kevin Young also hit a two-run homer as the Pirates overcame a 4-1 deficit and beat the Marlins for the third time in two nights.

Carlos Garcia hit a tiebreaking sacrifice fly in the seventh off Randy Veres (4-3) and added a run-scoring single in the ninth, his third RBI of the night. John Wehner had four hits.

Cubs 6, Rockies 5

DENVER — Sammy Sosa homered and Chicago, a day after coming close to setting team records for runs and hits, held off Colorado.

The Cubs had 27 hits Friday night in routing the Rockies 26-7. They tied the post-1900 club mark for scoring and came within one of matching the team record for hits.

Chicago made the most of its seven hits in again beating Colorado. Sosa homered for the third straight day, a three-run shot in the fifth that made it 5-2. He leads the Cubs with 23 homers.

Padres 9, Expos 5

MONTREAL — Joey Hamilton bounced back from a shaky start to pitch 7 2-3 innings and San Diego beat Montreal to move within three games of first place in the NL West.

Brad Ausmus drove in three runs, Steve Finley and Ken Caminiti each had three hits and scored twice and Scott Livingstone hit a two-run homer. The Padres finished with 17 hits.

Cardinals 5, Braves 4

ST. LOUIS — Scott Hemond hit a solo home run in the fourth inning, the only scoring after an 82-minute rain delay, and St. Louis defeated Atlanta.

The score was tied at 4 after three innings when the game was interrupted by rain. Neither starting pitcher, John Smoltz of Atlanta or Donovan Osborne of St. Louis, returned after the delay.

Hemond connected against Matt Murray (0-1), homering for the second straight game. He has only nine hits this season, three of them home runs. The Cardinals, who have lost 16 of their last 21, beat the Braves for the second day in a row. Atlanta has lost three straight overall.

TYSON: Fight ends in default

there was plenty of action.

McNeeley came storming out of his corner and bulled Tyson into the ropes. But with the fight only 15 seconds old, McNeeley went down from a right hand to the head. He got up quickly and ran around the ring before referee Mills Lane could stop him and give him the mandatory 8-count.

McNeeley came out swinging again and backed Tyson into the ropes again. The two exchanged punches with more misses than hits. Then Tyson landed a right high on the head that almost put McNeeley down. Then he connected with a left and right uppercut that put his opponent down. McNeeley got up but fell into the ropes and that is when Vecchione came into the ring and halted the fight.

After both fighters left the ring, Lane met with commisioners Dr. James Nave and Dr. Elias Ghanam and Marc Ratner, the excecutive director of the commission, who talked for several minutes before ruling the fight was a disqualification for Vecchione's action.

"Mike Tyson was getting at him pretty good," Lane said. "But he came to fight. He could have gone on, the kid could have gone on. I don't understand why his corner came in."

The most exciting part of the event probably was Tyson's entrance into a darkened arena amid flashing blue laser beams and smoke. He was greeted by a tremendous roar as he made his way to the ring, wearing a white towel and his trademark black trunks.

The fight was exciting and might not have lasted much longer. But the ending caused by Vecchione's puzzling action angered spectators.

The 29-year-old Tyson, 220, now has a 42-1 record with 36 knockouts. The 26-year-old McNeeley, 224, has a 36-2 record with 30 knockouts.

Tyson's purse was $25 million. McNeeley got $540,000.

ANGELS: Nevers wins it for El Paso in 10th inning

(From 1C)

The Diablos wasted no time taking the lead in extra innings. With the top of the order due up in the bottom of the 10th for Midland, Schooler — usually kept in the bullpen for save situations — was brought in to give the Angels a chance to win it. Nevers came up and greeted him with a smash to right field on a 2-2 pitch which sailed over the fence to win the game for El Paso.

Both starters were victimized by shoddy fielding in the first four innings as the Angels managed to claw out a 4-3 lead. The Diablos tied the game in the sixth when Midland starter Ryan Hancock walked Nevers, moved to third on singles by Lauro Felix and Gabby Martinez and then scored on a single up the middle by Antone Williamson. El Paso got greedy and sent Felix on the play but Wolff delivered a strike to Jose Monzon and nailed Felix at the plate.

The Diablos scored in each of the first three innings, the first two set up on errors by Harkrider. Mike Harris reached on Harkrider's error in the first, then came around to score on an RBI double by Williamson. Harkrider now has 31 errors on the season.

El Paso went up 2-0 in the second when catcher Bobby Hughes singled, went to third on a single by Felix and scored on a Harkrider throwing error.

The Angels cut the lead in half in the bottom of the second. Raven walked, advanced on a ground out and scored on a single by Boykin.

Geoff Jenkins, Milwaukee's first-round draft pick this year who is playing in just his 10th game with the Diablos, put El Paso ahead 3-1 when he connected off Hancock for his fifth homer of the year in the top of the third.

Angels tied it in the bottom of the third with the help of three El Paso errors. Catcher Fausto Tejero, who later left the game in the sixth when he was involved in a collision at the pate with Felix, reached second when Jenkins misplayed the ball for his first error, then overthrew the base for his second error. He scored when Harkrider Martinez misplayed a Harkrider grounder which bounced out of his glove and into center field, cutting El Paso's lead to 3-2. Raven then tied the game with an RBI triple off the right-field wall which scored Harkrider.

ANGEL DUST — Midland's Kent Coggan became the Angels' 200,000th fan as Midland set a team-record in attendance for one season. The Angels have now drawn 200,075. The previous mark was 196,464 set in 1993. For being the lucky fan, Coggan will receive an Angels jacket, dinner for two at Outback Steakhouse, a photo in the 1996 Angels program guide, recognition at the 1996 Winter Sports banquet, and two season passes for the 1996 season. He also got VIP seats for last night's game

Haas claims International lead

The Associated Press

CASTLE ROCK, Colo. — Jay Haas took the third-round lead in the International on Saturday, using brilliant iron play to set up six birdie putts of 6 feet or less.

Haas, in his 19th season on the PGA Tour, birdied his final two holes and scored 13 points for a 54-hole total of 28 under the modified Stableford scoring system.

On a leaderboard jammed with prominent names, Lee Janzen and David Duval were close behind at 25, while Tom Watson and Ernie Els stood at 24. Davis Love III was at 23, with Tom Lehman and Mark Wiebe at 22, and Mike Hulbert at 21.

The field was cut to 24 for Sunday's final round, and 1989 International winner Greg Norman was the last to make the cut, posting a clinching 2-point birdie at the 17th hole for a total of 15.

Among others advancing to the final day were Tom Kite, Craig Stadler and Jose Maria Olazabal.

For the third straight year, no playoff was necessary to determine the 24 finalists.

The scoring system awards a player 8 points for double eagle, 5 for eagle, 2 for birdie, zero for par, minus-1 for bogey and minus-3 for double bogey or worse.

■ Golf Roundup

Northville Long Island Classic

JERICHO, N.Y. — John Paul Cain maintained his lead in the Northville Long Island Classic, closing with two birdies for a 3-under-par 69 and a one-stroke advantage over Dave Eichelberger. Cain, a 59-year-old former stock broker from Houston who never played on the PGA Tour, had a 10-under 134 total on the 6,775-yard Meadow Brook Club course. Eichelberger shot a 66.

Defending champion Lee Trevino was two back along with Larry Gilbert, Ben Smith and Bud Allin. Gilbert and Smith, who won the 36-hole Super Seniors competition for players 60 and over, shot 68s and Trevino and Allin had 69s.

Cain won the Ameritech Senior Open last year after taking the 36-hole lead, but still remembers losing leads in Sacramento, Calif., and Los Angeles as a rookie in 1988.

Eichelberger converted four two-putt birdies and missed just one green in regulation in his bogey-free round.

Trevino, who will take the next three weeks off to rest his injured right shoulder, has not won since capturing his sixth 1994 title in last year's tournament.

Women's British Open

WOBURN, England — Karrie Webb, a 20-year-old Australian who turned pro just 10 months ago, eagled the final hole for a 4-under-par 69 and a one-stroke lead Saturday after three rounds of the Women's British Open.

Webb has a 27-hole total of 208, one up on American Val Skinner who had a 67 Saturday to finish at 209.

Defending champion Lotta Neumann of Sweden and England's Caroline Pierce and Suzanne Strudwick were tied at 212.

Webb, with her fiance Todd Haller her caddie, rolled in a 40-foot putt on the 18th, pushing her past Skinner and keeping her in the lead she took in the second round.

Knocked out of the lead by Webb's eagle, Skinner still had the day's best round that included seven birdies.

Earlier this year she won the world's richest tournament for women, the $180,000 LPGA Sprint International.

Joe D. Williams/Reporter-Telegram

Brent Geiberger of Palm Desert, Calif. watches his shot during Saturday's third round of the Nike Permian Basin Open. Geiberger, who shot a 69 on Saturday, is the son of PGA professional Al Geiberger.

NIKE: Final round kicks off today at 8:30 a.m.

(From 1C)

the tour's first player to win three tournaments with a victory today. "I don't think anybody would be scoring what they are if it was windy. When it's windy out there like it was the first two days, you have to think your way around the golf course. It (the wind) will make the golf course play 2-5 shots harder."

Smith's roll came on the back nine where he played holes 11 through 15 at 6-under-par. He had two eagles on the backside par-5s, Nos. 11 and 15. Smith, who is in fourth place on the 1995 money list with $123,638, said his good play recently is due to his success with the putter and an aggressive attitude.

"I've started putting better," said Smith. "Playing aggressively is the game I have played my whole life. I played conservatively at the beginning of the year and could never get anything going. I started playing more aggressively and that's when I started playing better. That's one of the reasons I started putting better."

Tied with Smith is Salazar, the first-round leader. Salazar birdied holes 11 through 14 on his way to a 5-under-par, 67. Salazar, who had not made a Nike Tour cut this season, had nine birdies, thanks in part to a hot putter.

"Putt after putt after putt kept going in," said Salazar. "It was a putting round that anyone would love to have."

Salazar, who grew up on the golf courses around Corpus Christi and won his only Nike Tour event in Corpus (at the South Texas Open in 1991), says that strong winds during today's final round might make things more interesting.

"Everybody got to play 12 holes today (without wind)," said Salazar, who tripled-bogeyed the par-3, fourth hole. "If it is windy tomorrow, even-par might win it."

Smith agreed, saying that more wind will spread out the field and would benefit a golfer playing well.

"I hope it's windy tomorrow," said Smith. "I wanted it to play as difficult as possible to spread the field out. If you feel like you're hitting good, you want it to play as difficult as possible. It is hard to play difficult shots."

Royer, the tourney's second-round leader, shot a 68 for his share of the lead. One shot back of the leaders is Abilene's Jaxon Brigman and Dallas' Russell Beiersdorf. Brigman, who missed a putt on 18 that would have given him a share of the lead, made only one bogey during the third-round 66. Dallas' Beiersdorf finished at 206 with a 68 on Saturday.

Nike Notes

Chris Smith's 64 was the low round of the tournament.

Odessa's Ben Bergert, who played at Odessa Permian, shot even-par and is 2-under-par for the tournament.

San Angelo Bobcat, Kawika Cotner, had six birdies on the day, leading his way to the third-round 67. Cotner is minus-7 and played Saturday's par-3's at 3-under-par.

The toughest hole of the third round was the ninth hole. The par-4 played at a 4.156 stroke average. The par-4, 14th, however, remains the toughest hole of the tournament with a 4.428 stroke average.

The 11th hole is the easiest hole of the tournament. The par-5 played at a 4.769 stroke average. The par-5 played at an incredibly easy 4.453 yards on Saturday with one score above par.

Eric Johnson is alone at 207 in sixth place just two shots in back of first place. Johnson, a Nike Tour veteran took advantage of the generous scoring conditions to shoot a 66. The bulk of his scoring came on the back nine, where he birdied four straight holes and six of the first seven.

The former U.S. Junior Champion said the lack of wind changed the attitudes of the golfers going out and that made the usually tougher back nine play a great deal easier. The back nine played 1.2 shots under-par. The first two days the back nine was at least a half a stroke above-par.

"Part of the reason you are seeing so many birdies today is that they have a mind-set that they have to make birdies," said Johnson, an avid fisherman. "The lack of wind made the course play differently, and it took golfers time to adjust.

Johnson, who is ranked 49th on the money list, didn't make the cut last week, but says making the cut and doing well out here can be as difficult as on the PGA Tour.

"It's harder to make a cut on this tour than it is on the PGA," said Johnson. "We had cuts this year where you were six strokes off the lead."

The rest of the pack will go into today's play with 31 golfers within six strokes of the lead. Tee times begin at 8:30 a.m. on the No. 1 and 10 tees. The final group will go off No.1 at 10:10 a.m.

Son of PGA pro Al Geiberger sees dad as idol, tries to crack top 10

■ Brent Geiberger, the victim of playful ribbing by the Nike Tour players because of his famous golfing bloodline, hopes to follow father's example.

By Stewart Doreen
Sports Writer

ODESSA — There could be worse guys to be named after, or at least that's what Brent Geiberger thinks when people ask about his father Al Geiberger. And there is a lot of truth to that.

Al Geiberger has won nine events and $4.3 million from playing on the PGA and Senior PGA Tours, but Brent is out to prove he's pretty darn good.

"My game is getting better and maybe they will know me as Brent Geiberger instead of Al's son," said Geiberger. "That doesn't bother me at all. All I hear are good things about him. He's got a lot of good qualities."

It is those qualities that made Brent to think of his dad as more than a golfer or father. The 27-year-old always looked upon his father as an idol. A reason Geiberger doesn't mind talking about his father is due to his dad's influence in his life.

"I've always looked up to my dad," said Brent Geiberger, who caddied for his dad as a youngster. "People always wanted to talk to him. It's kind of hard to look up to anyone else."

To this day, Brent can still talk to his dad to get feedback about his game or about making it on the tour. It is one of the advantages of having a father who knows his swing about better than anyone and has the 30-plus years experience to back it up. Of course, there is some pressures being the son of someone who has been as successful as Al Geiberger, but Brent tries to look at it in a positive way.

"It's always going to happen and you try to deal with it," said Brent Geiberger. "Hopefully, it will push you a little bit."

Now don't think Geiberger doesn't get ribbed a little bit for having such a talented golfing bloodline. His compatriots will tend to remind him about it, giving him the nickname "Cybervision," a name of one of his father's golfing videos.

The younger Geiberger, who is tied for seventh and is just three shots off the lead at the Nike Permian Basin Open, is competing in his first year on the Nike Tour and is 17th on the money list with over $62,000. Coming to the Nike Tour has been a switch for the 27-year-old, but he had a good idea of what was coming.

"I'm adjusting well," said Geiberger, who won eight tournaments in college and was the conference MVP while at Pepperdine. "I've seen my dad play and I knew what to expect. I'm learning a lot out here and it is starting to pay off."

Geiberger, who has played in two U.S. Amateur Championships, goes about his business with a laid back approach. Not to be confused with that of being lax or lazy, Geiberger says being low key keeps him on an even keel. He will tell you that he does have his moments where a less conservative side will show on the course, but those times are few and far between.

Geiberger is close to cracking the Top 10 of the 1995 Nike money list, and with a strong finish, he could very well earn his PGA Tour card, but it isn't make or break for the rookie as he knows he has a lot of golf to play.

"I try not to think about it, and take it one tourney at a time," said Geiberger, who came into the Nike Permian Basin Open some $23,000 out of the Top 10. "Hopefully, one of those tournaments, I'll do well and I'll have the chance to live. The worst case scenario is that I make the Top 25 and I'll be back out here. Eventually, I'll make it on the tour."

HOMES & Classified

Sizzling Savings!

This charming, four bedroom family home is at 1900 Coleman, a quiet, refined street in north Midland's Polo Park.

As one would imagine just from the location of the house, this is a very impressive property indeed. Each room, from the entry hall to the master suite offers something unique or original, whether it is the design or the decor.

Custom designed by the current owners and professionally decorated to a very high standard this is a home that is as energy efficient as it is beautiful.

The heart of the house is undoubtedly the family room. The honey hued oak floors and ash paneling impart a feeling of warmth to the room that is hard to resist. A wet bar and double French doors to the patio out side make this room as practical for entertaining as it is comfortable.

A second set of French doors lead from the garden into the kitchen. Magnificently designed and decorated, this room echoes the designs found on British china, with cabinets picked out in Wedgewood blue with white accents.

White framed sash windows overlooking the verdant garden add to the English country appeal.

The master suite is, as one would expect from a house of this caliber, extraordinary. The bedroom boasts large picture windows over the front yard, pretty mouldings as trim and the stupendous bathroom offers a separate shower and tub and brass hardware.

Brass accents are a theme in this house and are found in most of the rooms. However, none are more impressive than the Williamsburg chandelier which hangs in the formal dining room.

The open-plan combination of formal dining and living rooms are especially attractive with their Victorian decor, and lend a tremendous impact to visitors arriving at the house.

Although the overall tone of the house comes from a by gone era, this is a very modern property in terms of efficiency and safety.

Zoned air conditioning and heating, Hunter high efficiency fans and adjustable rheostat switches help keep electricity costs down. While double paned windows help with insulation and dust levels.A monitored security system is also built-in.

This house, which is listed at $177,400 will be open for viewing between two and four o'clock this afternoon and will be shown by the listing agent, Joyce Brickey of ReMax.

Surviving Supper

Design by Elizabeth Edwin

Kim Sneed, left, and Becky Ferguson talk about their mini-seminar and planning guide for families with limited time to spare called "Surviving Supper: A Monthly Guide for Planning Family Meals." The guidelines they outline call for planning, shopping and preparing meals in advance to avoid the stress of preparing large meals each evening, giving families more quality time together.

In an earlier age, dads worked outside the home and moms didn't, kids came straight home from school and families gathered around the dinner table at night to have the last meal of the day together.

Times have a way of changing, don't they.

Now families are more likely to have two parents who bring home paychecks — or have only one parent — or one parent who goes to work and the other who spends hours each day taking kids to school, soccer, ballet, gymnastics, scouts, band, football practice, music lessons, Girl Scouts, Boy Scouts, Camp Fire, YMCA programs, etc.

Families may still have the same 24 hours in a day that families had in the past, but they seem to be crowding more activities into them. The result is less time for everything — including cooking dinner.

Becky Ferguson and Kim Sneed of Midland know what that feels like. That's why they have developed their Surviving Super mini-seminar and planning guide for families with great intentions and very little time.

"Basically, the idea is you cook in large quantities and freeze, so you save on repetition of tasks," said Ms. Ferguson.

Please see COOK/2E

Becky Ferguson shows how freezing items flat makes them easier to store, a technique she and her partner suggest in their Surviving Supper tips.

Performers recreate World War II USO

By Marilyn McKnight-Harrison

An SRO crowd greeted the Cherry Jones Performers in their recreation of a World War II USO camp show at the Summer in the City's final event of the 1995 season.

Held in the amphitheatre at Centennial Plaza in Downtown Midland, the show featured siging and dancing, vintage jokes and old radio commercials.

McKnight-Harrison

On the 50th anniversary of World War II's end, the show paid special tribute to the servicemen and women of that era, but all veterans were recognized at the start of the program as the audience joined in singing "God Bless America."

The program evoked many memories with such old, familiar songs as "Anchors Away," "Don't Sit Under the Apple Tree," "In the Mood," and "Boogie Woogie Bugle Boy," to name just a few.

Emcee was Jimmy Patterson, special projects editor of the Reporter-Telegram.

Following the USO show, the musical group, "Then and There," composed of Jami Owen, Pam Six, Linda Bond and Steve Porterfield, performed. The women were dressed in Red Cross uniforms of the war era.

On the south side of the plaza, songstress Janet Pollard and the Wall Street Trio, composed of Jim Ross, Gary Burnett and Bill DeLavan, entertained with songs of the '30s and '40s.

World War II vehicles on display and warplanes flying overhead during the performances added to the special mood of the evening.

Other entertainment included the art of paper plane making by Jack Hickman, in-line skating and charcoal sketches by artist Paul Wecker.

Among those turning out for the nostalgic occasion were June and Jim Ormond, Margaret and John Rhea, Thelma Gardner, Dorothy and Homer Nance and June and Tim Hunt. Also seen were former Midlander Shannon Burnett Fagan, her husband, Sean, and their two-month-old son, Ryan, of Baton Rouge, La. They were in town to visit Shannon's parents, Susie and Gary Burnett, and her brother, John Gray.

WE KNEW WE WERE in Aggieland when we arrived at the home of Unna and Bob Kukla recently for the Midland A&M Mothers' Club's annual ice cream social. A bouquet of maroon and white balloons outside thier house marked the spot.

Inside, guests were greeted by club president Sharon (Mrs. Wilson) Heidelberg and members of the Kukla family, including their three chidren, Rob, Renee and Anthony.

Signs in the patio and pool area, such as "Howdy," "Gig 'em," "Whoop," and "Hump It," brought back memories of our sons' undergraduate days at College Station.

Approximately 100 persons, including former, current and incoming students and parents, attended the party.

Among those seen at the event were Patti and Bill Watson and daughter, Marcie; Faye Welch and daughter, Lisa; Betty and Wylie Basham and daughter, Darby; Joyce and Charles Silverman and daughter, Jennifer; Rachel Sanchez, Brad Heidelberg and Nathan Reed.

Teresa (Mrs. Darrell) Roberts asisted Unna with party arrangements.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY to First United Methodist Church! Midland's oldest church celebrated its 110th anniversary last Sunday afternoon with an old-fashioned ice cream social.

Church members and friends gathered round tables in the Fellowship Hall for visiting and homemade ice cream and cake. Special entertainment was provided by Greenie the Clown (a.k.a. Linda Greene) and Harlin the Magician (a.k.a. Harlin Rhoades).

Clusters of balloons in red, blue and yellow and color-coordinated placemats decorated the tables, and an archway of balloons framed the stage.

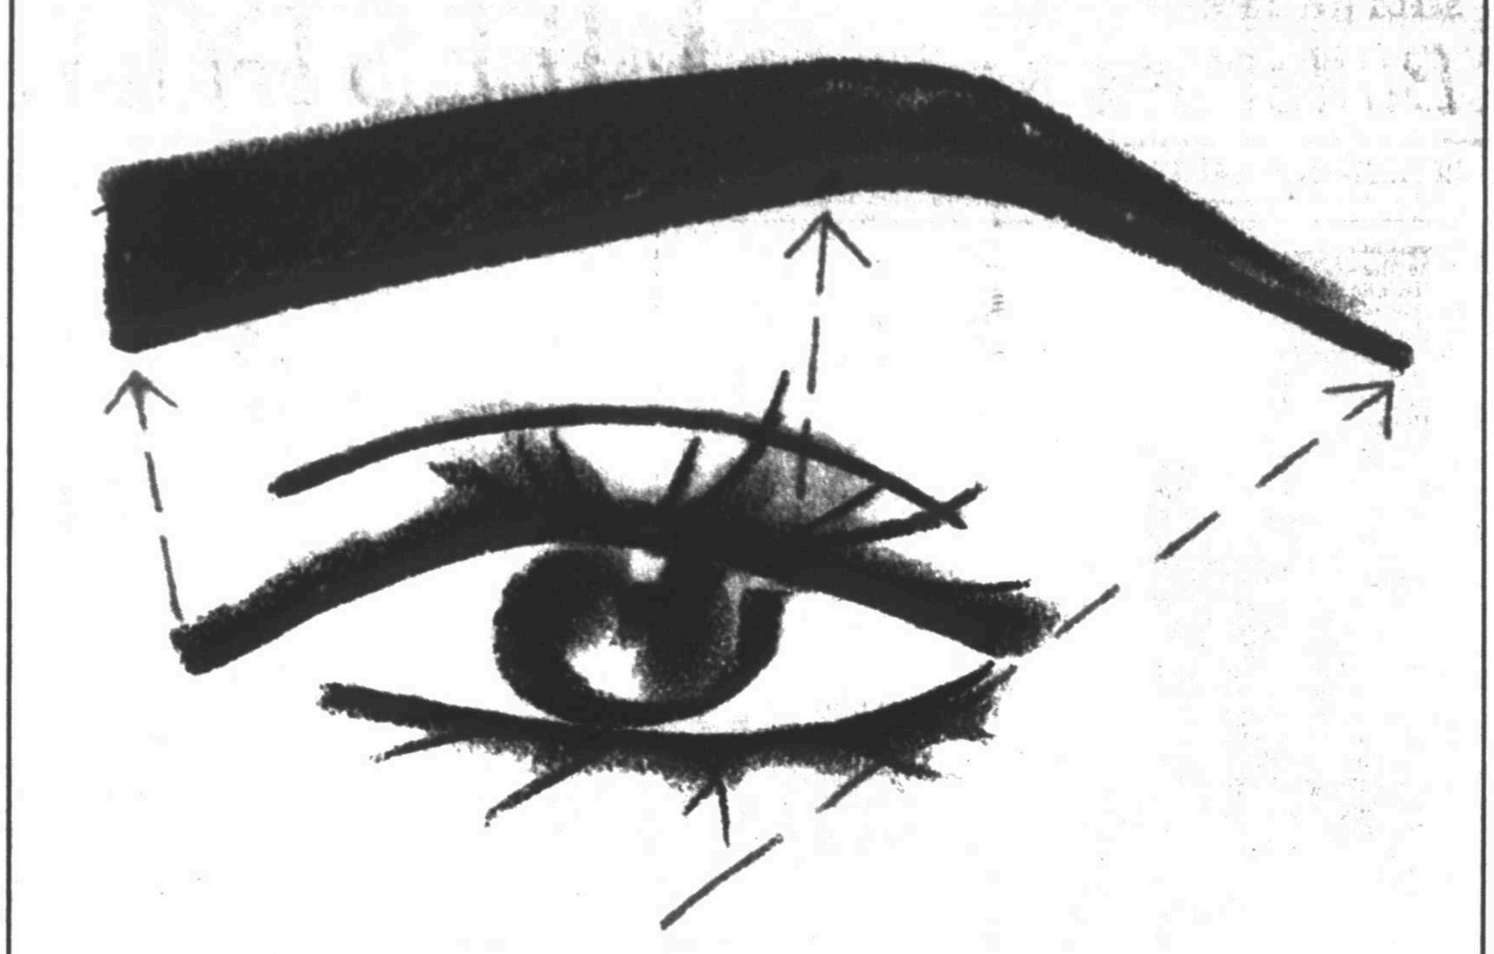

Leona Bryant Smith and Ray Gwyn were recognized as the two oldest members of the church at the festivities. It was interesting to learn that Mrs. Smith's grandmother was one of the church's original members and that her parents were married in the church in 1894.

Among longtime members seen in the crowd were Martha Black, Allis Chapman, Oley Hedrick, Dilly and Shorty Nance, Jenna Welch, Bess Baker, Marie Bond, Mildred Chapman and Loyce and Jerry Cole.

Frances (Mrs. Howard) Atwater, church historian, had arranged an interesting display of historical records and photographs.

The church has always been located on Main Street, but in four different sanctuaries since its inception in 1885, with six charter members.

Marilyn McKnight Harrison is social columnist for the Reporter-Telegram.

Eyebrows, a fall fashion focus, should start just above the inner corner of the eye and extend slightly past the outer corner, as in this illustration from "Real Beauty...Real Women," by Kathleen Walas, international beauty and fashion director for Avon Products, Inc.

Eyebrows get an 'Aye' for fall season

By Mary Martin Niepold
Associated Press

If eyebrows give expression to the face, then faces this fall should definitely be animated.

Gone are the brows that were lightened, thinned and neutered during the recent siege of minimalist fashions. Now, women want color and curves.

Robyn Cosio, a makeup artist who has become the guru of good brows, shapes, waxes and puts expression above the eyes of such stars as Nicole Kidman, Heather Locklear and Darryl Hannah.

"Imagine a face without them," she says of the importance of brows.

Her best-of-brows list includes screen stars from the 1940s — Carole Lombard, Ava Gardner, Gene Tierney. "They're beautiful and it was because their eyebrows were beautiful — streamlined and shaped," Cosio says. "In those days, if your eyebrows were beautiful, they would only do lips and false eyelashes. So what you saw were brows, lips and lashes. You didn't have all that stuff layered on the face like you do today."

Earlier this year, Linda Wells, editor of Allure magazine, credited Cosio's shapely work on her brows with helping her to land her man. Once said, women literally started flying to Art Luna, Cosio's West Hollywood, Calif., salon, for waxing appointments.

"There were 700 calls in two days," Cosio recalls. Now, she visits Peter Coppola's salon in New York one week a month to redefine East Coast faces.

Cosio — and everyone else — recommends natural brows that are noticeable, but not overwhelming. Brows that have shape and color, but not too much of either.

How can a pro command $50 for waxing them?

Nobody has 20/20 vision," Cosio explains. "You can't see yourself symmetrically. It's always basically one eye looking at one brow."

To get the picture of why brows are so important, imagine them as expression marks that balance the entire face. If there's too much brow, the eyes or other features fade away. If there's not enough, you look like someone who's walking in space.

Another eyebrow wizard is Hollywood makeup artist Allen Weisinger, whose clients include Winona Rider, Jodie Foster and Shirley MacLaine.

"Today, the most important look for brows is the semi-tailored look," says Weisinger, currently featured in a Max Factor advertising campaign. "The end result should be a natural eyebrow. Tweeze a little above, more frequently below. You don't want that artificial plucked look, instead, something that frames the eyes."

Tweezing and plucking are the most common methods for shaping brows, but beware of over-doing. With waxing, small slivers of warm wax are applied, followed by cloths which are quickly pulled off. To reduce redness, cold cloths are applied. If a rash appears, Cosio recommends a cortisone cream.

It's critical not to remove too much hair. Sometimes, due to hormonal changes, age or unknown factors, hair doesn't grow back. Experts suggest that you go to a makeup artist or aesthetician to shape your brows. Then maintaining them at home is fairly easy.

Stacie Simpkins is the manager of the Chanel counter at Bergdorf Goodman in New York. "You should always be careful of trends," she says. "When the brows were getting very thin and arched last year, I told customers, 'Let it go by.'"

Once brows are shaped, a little color and gel keep them that way. Due in stores in November is Chanel's Perfect Brow, $60, a makeup case with three powders, two brushes — and miniature tweezers. Chanel's Brow Shaper, $28, is a wand of clear gel that sets the brow after makeup.

For the budget-conscious, feather the brows with either pencil or slanted brush and brow powder. Avon offers Glimmer Sticks, $3.75, and Kathleen Walas, director in New York of Avon's global fashion and beauty, says the No. 1 color is brown. If you don't have a pencil or brow powder, eye shadow works nicely, too. Just brush it on lightly.

Simpkins says baby-boomers are good brow customers.

"It seems when they hit their 40s, they're more interested in makeup to accent what they already have, not to change it," she says. "This return to the more natural brow is perfect."

AT WIT'S END

Be careful when you smell a bargain that is to good to be true

By Erma Bombeck

I have always prided myself on being able to sniff out a bargain. I'm not one of those missing-a-button, seam-not-finished, zipper-in-crooked, darts-in-backward shoppers. I am a professional.

That is why it pains me to tell you the following story. In one of those stores where the merchandise is imported from all over the world, I spotted a batik print dress from Indonesia that was perfect to slip into on a hot day. I was so enamored with the price and the style that I bought two of them in different colors.

Bombeck

As we were riding home, I said to my husband, "Stop the car!"

He asked, "Why?"

"You obviously stepped in a litter box or are dragging a cow chip around on your shoe. Don't you smell it?"

"Of course I smell it. I just figured there was a sewage disposal plant nearby."

The paper bag containing the two dresses was the last thing to be checked. We opened it and our nostrils quivered from the odor. "I've been gassed," I said weakly.

I thought all the dresses needed was a scented bath in a gentle soap, a rinse in perfumed water softener and a day flapping outside in 105 degrees in Phoenix. If that didn't take the Indonesia out of them, nothing would.

It didn't.

It was time to play hardball. I submerged the dresses in a mixture of laundry bleach and put them in the dryer to whirl around with scented sheets of softener.

They still made your eyes water when you got near them.

I hadn't been so frustrated since I owned a Yorkshire terrier who considered my white living room chair the best little outhouse in the western world. The room smelled like a kennel. One day I heard a dog trainer on television say he was going to deal with how to handle a dog who insisted on peeing on his favorite chair. I grabbed pencil and paper and turned up the volume, only to hear him say, "Sell the chair."

There was still one ace in the hole — Heloise. The guru of shortcuts, the stainmeister of the '90s, the woman who advised a bride to carry her train to the church in a garbage bag. Besides, she owed me. I once sent her a tip that to eliminate stinking odors in the kitchen, stop cooking. We've been friends for years.

Her advice was to dump a few cups of baking soda into the water and launder the dresses. She said there is an ozone-something machine that takes out the smell, but it could cost more than the dresses.

It worked. My reputation is still intact.

TO MY READERS: If this column has a one-kidney feel to it, it is because I had one removed in June. I was going to do a funny column on my experience. I couldn't find anything. I looked.

I would love to visit you personally in your homes and thank you for the hundreds of cards, letters and prayers. Only know that I read every single one of them and they made the road back possible.

COOK: Planning, preparing ahead is key

(From 1E)

"You do two months (of meals) at a time," added Ms. Sneed.

According to their book, "Surviving Super: A Monthly Guide for Planning Family Meals," the purpose of the two women's program is "to share with you some ideas we've learned for surviving supper — for taking lots of the hassle out of one of the busiest times of the day.

"It's mostly about planing — planning ahead. But it's also about reducing repetition of tasks and clean-up."

And that is what they hope to teach others — making meal times less maddening and more pleasant by eliminating many routine tasks, both before and after dinner.

The women know the necessity of a program like this in times like these. Both learned from experience that family life no longer resembles "Leave It to Beaver" and that time seems to be in the shorter supply than ever before.

"Both of us were members of a service organization," said Ms. Ferguson, who describes herself as a stay-at-home mom. "We met at water aerobics at the City of Midland (swimming pool) and compared notes." What they both discovered is that they were both short of time when it came to planning, organizing, cooking and serving meals to their families — not to mention getting the whole family together at the same time.

What they did was develop some practical and usable short-cuts to make that job quicker, easier and much less stressful.

"Somebody asked us if we would teach a mini-course for the service organization, so we worked up a plan," Ms. Ferguson continued, and the Surviving Supper program was a success. "Just by word of mouth, other people have asked us if we would teach the mini-course for their organizations."

The things they teach are not difficult to learn or remember, she added. "Just little things for saving time at the end of the day when everyone ... is tired and needs your attention."

The program "has two months of menus, a pantry list, grocery lists, recipes to get you started," said Ms. Sneed, who has a family and her own business. "I work and have a business and have a baby and a husband who likes to eat." For her and others in the same situation, "it's hard to find a way to have meals fixed without stressing you out."

"Kim and I both like the idea of traditional family meals and found the best way to do this is to plan," Ms. Ferguson said. Planning is the best way to "maintain orderly family tradition in a chaotic world," she added.

Planning to lessen the chaos of family mealtime, according to the two women, involves planning two months of menus ahead of time, making one major trip to the supermarket for everything you'll need for those meals (plus weekly trips for such perishables as milk and eggs), cooking in quantities and freezing individual meals ahead of time. They even teach the best ways to freeze the meals in order to save room in the freezer.

Dinner in the evening is "so easy when you look (in the freezer) in the morning and say what's for dinner," said Ms. Sneed said.

"And you pull it out, and it's done," added Ms. Ferguson.

Whether the family cook works outside the home or doesn't, the Surviving Supper program can work for anyone, the women said.

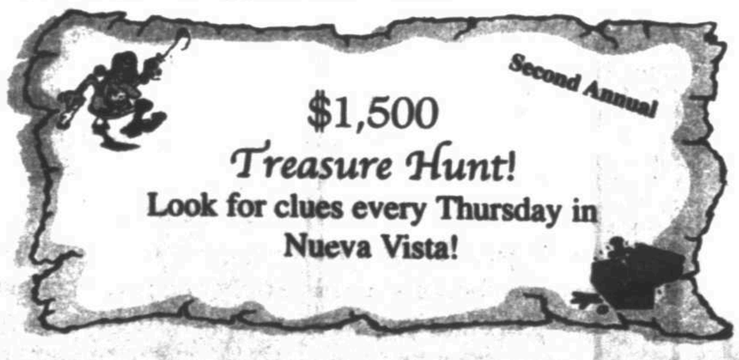

"Kim works for pay," Ms. Ferguson said. "I stay at home and take care of kids and do volunteer work. (We both) try to reduce stress and do things toward reduction of repetitive tasks."

The program "gives you five days (a week) you don't worry about (cooking)," Ms. Sneed added. "Once it's done (the cooking), it's done."

The recipes they suggest in their book can be modified to suit each individual family, the women said. "Our idea was to make things that were family friendly things that children would want and husbands would eat," said Ms. Ferguson.

"Once they take the course, they can incorporate what their families like," Ms. Sneed said. "Anyone who is responsible for producing a meal every night would benefit from this, freezing in whatever size you need, depending on the size of the family."

Anyone interested in learning more about the Surviving Supper method of meal preparation is invited to attend a program Ms. Ferguson and Ms. Sneed will teach in October through Midland College's Continuing Education Department. For more information call MC, or call 687-1717 or 684-3834.

SEEDS FOR THOUGHT

Butterflies can be attracted to garden by using color, food

By Deborah A. Benge-Frost

What can be more beautiful than hardy, stately, colorful blooming plant in your landscape? How about those same beautiful plants — covered in gorgeous butterflies.

Benge-Frost

You can call those enchanting winged jewels into your landscape by the plants you choose. If you like the added, active life butterflies can bring into your garden, be sure to include some of the plants butterflies love.

There are many different species of butterflies that frequent area gardens. Different species present at different periods of time will make the changes in butterfly species as dynamic as the seasonal changes of the garden.

You can grow plants that not only attract the adults, but provide food for the larvae as well. As you know, butterflies have a complete metamorphosis or life-cycle which is made up of four distinct stages: egg, larvae (which is a worm-like stage or caterpillar), pupa known as a chrysalis and winged reproductive stage —the adult butterfly.

Eggs are normally laid on or near larva food which will provide nourishment after eggs hatch. Just a few plants that serve as good larval food are Black dalea, Dalea frutescens, cenizo or purple sage, Leucophyllum frutescens, flame acanthus, Anisacanthus adrifidus, parsley hawthorn, Crataegus marshallii, snapdragon vine, Maurandya antirrhiniflora, Texas virgin's bower, Clematis drummondii, Canna, Canna X generalis, heath aster, Aster ericoides, Texas frog fruit, Phyla incisa, and Mexican petunia, Ruellia nudiflora. Many of these are considered native plants and are very well adapted to local growing conditions.

In choosing plants that will attract the beautiful adult butterflies, look for certain features.

First and foremost is the adult food — nectar, which is more or less sugar water. It is generally a colorless or pale colored liquid of a slight yellow or greenish. Flowers yielding lots of nectar are not necessarily showy. Take the petunia for instance, which has been breed for more color, flower size and other visually appealing features. In the process they've lost much of their nectar-producing abilities. If you take a look at the old-fashioned petunias you see they produce much more nectar (and fragrance) than do the high-powered hybrid petunias of today.

Nectar is produced in the nectaries which can be located in the flower or elsewhere in the flower. Floral nectaries are the most common sources for nectar, but nectaries can be located on stems, leaves or bracts — these are called extrafloral nectares.

Flower color also plays a role. Butterflies can see the full spectrum of color. They do seem to prefer some colors over others. Generally they are attracted to white, pink, purple, yellow and true blues. Some species will prefer red while other prefer orange. Colors lest attractive are in the greenish-blue or blue-greenish range.

Many flower have visual guides for butterflies. Some of these guides we can see, while others are in the ultraviolet color range, undetectable by the human eye. These guides can be like landing lights for the butterfly and consist of rings of lighter or darker color (morning glory or verbena), contrasting lines (pansy or viola), and blotches or spots of color (salvias or penstemons).

Flower shape will also influence the butterfly. Tubular-shaped flowers are attractive, like the desert willow, lemon mint, salvias and penstemons.

In locating nectar, butterflies use the fragrance of flowers, much more than visual markings. Odor guides or scent marks will smell different than other parts of the flower or plant. They help locate the nectaries for the butterfly.

In attracting butterflies to the garden, you can do some things in addition to providing plants, including using overripe fruit, honeydew, tree sap, mud puddles and salt to manipulate or provide supplemental butterfly attractants. For instance, a bowl of very ripe, over-ripe or fermenting fruit can be placed in the garden to provide additional food or supplement food.

Small puddles or excessively moist areas will draw butterflies, not so much for the liquid but for salts or nutrients that might be found at the puddles' edges. Groups of single species are often seen at these sites.

When it comes to plants that attract butterflies, several are available, many of which are extremely beautiful, tough and free flowering.

Let's take a look a few of the plants that would look great in your garden and feed the butterflies. Fortunately or unfortunately this list will be prejudiced with many of my favorites. But don't worry, I think you will like them too.

These plants will be presented in categories: trees, shrubs, perennials and annuals.

Trees

Lilac chaste tree or vitex, Vitex agnus-castus, is a great plant well adapted to our areas. It is a deciduous woody ornamental that can make a large shrub or small tree. This plant has grey-green leaves that are a lighter, silvery color on the underneath side. The plant will grow well in poor dry soils in full sunlight — in fact it will bloom better this way. It grows fast and is easily pruned into a small, multi-trunked tree. It produces a multitude of lilac to lavender fragrant flowers on slender flower spikes that butterflies love.

Desert willow, Chilopsis linearis, isn't a willow at all, but has leaves and form that resemble willows. This plant develops into a small deciduous tree that should be pruned single-trunked, but with careful pruning could be a multi-trunked tree. Unlike the willow it has beautiful orchid-like flowers from spring to fall. Find these in pink, lavender, ruby and white cultivars. A hybrid cross that's looking very good is the Chitalpa, which is very similar but has larger, darker green leaves and larger flowers but with fewer color choices.

Shrubs

Butterfly bush, Buddleia davidii, can't be beat for beauty and attracting butterflies. This plant is best treated like a herbaceous perennial, that should be cut to about 10 inches from the ground in late winter. This treatment will keep the plant fitting into your landscape better, and the plant blooms best on new wood. Plant in good soil, enriched with organic matter, and in full sun. The plant will get about six feet tall and wide if it is pruned each year. The plant has flower spikes covered in tiny flowers that last most of the summer. There are several cultivars, but butterflies are attracted to the lavender and purple shades the best.

Abelia, Abelia X grandiflora, is a hardy, semi-evergreen shrub with graceful arching branches. Leaves are small, dark green and shiny with new growth appearing bronze-colored. The white to pale pink flowers are bell-shaped and tend to bloom all season long. A beautiful plant, it is much under-used in area landscapes. It will bloom best in full sun, but will tolerate shade, and doesn't like strong winds so plant with some protection such as fences, buildings and so on.

Perennial

Weeping lavender lantana, Lantana montevidensis, is a trai' perennial that will overwinter in our area most y s. This plant is worth the effort, even if you do lose it in a cold winter. To protect is, put a generous layer of mulch over in cold months. This plant blooms in small clusters of flowers of pale lilac, purple or magenta. A hardy plant, it will need full sun and will tolerate poor, dry soils, but will flower more consistently if you keep the soil moist and add some nutrients occasionally. Butterflies like any of the lantanas, so try other species and cultivars too.

Lavender, Lavendula angustifolia "Munstead," is classified as a perennial herb. This plant has a soft grey-green leaf and stem, and flowers that are a soft lavender-purple color, so it gives a subdued appearence — but not when it comes to attracting butterflies. This plant produces plenty of flower on its flower stalks, which attract tons of butterflies. Not all lavenders will work in our climate, so look for the one listed or others that will work in similar Southwest areas. Be sure to try this pretty and useful plant.

Annuals

Mexican sunflower, Tithonia rotundifolia, is an easy to grow from seed annual. This plant should be planted early in the season as it needs about three to four months to bloom. It needs full sun and an evenly moist soil. The plants gets large, so you may need to stake it to keep it from breaking over. Once it begins to bloom, it will continue to bloom without ceasing and can be literally covered in butterflies. Flower color is a vivid orange-scarlet and leaves are velvet-like.

Zinnia, Zinnia species, is another easy-to-grow-from-seed annual that butterflies love. This annual will grow and bloom quickly — in fact you've got time to plant a packet or two of seeds right now. There are lots of colors, including reds, yellow, oranges, pinks and ruby. This easy plant should always have full sun and well drained soils.

These are just a few plants that you can put in your garden for gorgeous color and feed the many species of butterflies in the areas. Have the beauty of color and the beauty of the butterfly by selecting the right plants.

DEAR ABBY

Good Book finds good home after journey of 50 years

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR READERS: About six months ago, I received a letter from World War II veteran E.G. Jackson of Houston, stating that in 1945, he had been a soldier in the Battle of the Bulge. He said that he had taken refuge in a bombed-out building where he found a New Testament with bloody thumbprints beside the inscription, "From the young people of Cyclone Union Church."

Van Buren

Mr. Jackson had been searching for 50 years to locate the soldier who had left the Bible there, but his search was futile. Finally, he prevailed upon me to ask my readers for their help.

Hallelujah! Today, I received news from Roger Newton, a staff writer for the Bradford (Pa.) Era, stating that Mr. Jackson had narrowed the candidates down to two men from Cyclone, Pa. And since it was not possible to determine which of them had lost the Bible, he decided to return it to the church from which it came.

Mr. Jackson, and his wife, Nola, traveled 1,700 miles, from Houston to Cyclone, Pa., to present the Bible to the local church at a special service.

Thanks to you, my readers, the bible is finally back "home." An interesting footnote: In his search, Mr. Jackson discovered 78 locations named "Cyclone." However, most of them were mountain peaks or reservoirs; only eight were villages, with populations ranging from seven people to 256 people.

DEAR ABBY: This letter is very difficult to write, but on the chance that it may help someone, please print it.

My husband died recently of metastatic melanoma. I learned much from that experience that I'd like to share with your readers.

First, if you are having a test done to determine if you have cancer, always get a second opinion — even if the results come back in your favor. My husband had a suspicious mole removed in 1991. The tests came back negative for melanoma, so we celebrated and forgot about it. Three years later, at the age of 48, he was dead.

Frequently I hear women talk about a suspicious lump on their mammograms. If the doctor says it's OK, great — but have another doctor take a look at it. Early detection is the key.

Second, understand that skin cancer can be deadly. If you notice any change in a mole (or a new mole), have it checked and removed immediately. And by immediately, I mean the next DAY, not next week or next month. Unless it is surgically removed very early, it is almost untreatable. No current chemo drugs have a good success rate, and it is resistant to radiation. It spreads fast and it spreads everywhere.

Finally, please take the threat of melanoma seriously. It is one of the fastest-growing cancers in our society because of the sun-loving baby boomers and the reduction of the ozone layer. And it doesn't strike just the old — it strikes people of all ages.

Thanks, Abby, for helping to spread the word. You may use my name. — LAURA HEALEY DE VOS, CINCINNATI

DEAR LAURA: Please accept my sympathy on the loss of your husband. And thank you for writing a letter filled with life-saving information.

DEAR READERS: How is this for a day-brightener:

From Ron Alexander's "Metropolitan Diary" in The New York Times: "In a bookstore in Forest Hills, Queens, a young woman asked her middle-aged friend, 'If women are from Venus, and men are from Mars, how come the men I date are from hunger?' "

DEAR ABBY: I went to dinner recently with my boyfriend at the home of a couple we both know and like very much. Abby, I felt very uncomfortable when they prepared to say grace before the meal and everyone clasped each other's hands.

I told the hostess as she reached for my hand that saying grace before dinner — and particularly holding hands — was not my style. She grabbed my hand anyway and made me part of the circle.

Couldn't they have said a prayer without me in the circle? I didn't want to take part in a family tradition that made me uncomfortable, but I did it in order to be polite.

Shouldn't the hostess have understood that I didn't want to take part and simply let me sit quietly at the table? If her tradition is more important than the comfort of her guest, I will avoid going to dinner next time. — OUT OF THE LOOP IN CHARLESTON, W.VA.

DEAR OUT OF THE LOOP: Perhaps she should have. But it's possible that the couple are deeply religious. Since you were a guest, you did the correct thing in holding hands in prayer.

However, feeling as strongly as you do, you are under no obligation to accept another dinner invitation.

DEAR ABBY: Recently some relatives dropped in to visit us on a Sunday afternoon. We did not expect company, but fortunately I had some fresh fruit on hand, so I served it.

It got to be dinnertime, and they made no move to leave, so I asked if they would like to stay for supper. They said they would, so I took their orders and telephoned a place that delivers carry-out food.

We, as hosts, paid for everything. There were seven of us altogether. Before we finished eating, one of the guests said, "I'm too full to eat all of this, so I'll take the rest home with me." The others thought it was a good idea, and they took theirs home, too. We were shocked, but of course didn't say anything.

In your opinion, what would have been the proper way to handle this? — PERPLEXED IN ARIZONA

DEAR PERPLEXED: I, too, would have said nothing. After all, the leftovers were theirs, so they should have felt free to take them home.

Abby shares more of her favorite, easy-to-prepare recipes. To order, send a business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, More Favorite Recipes, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447.

MC offers alternative methods for earning college credit through technology, exams

Bulletin board service offers new way to "attend" classes

The concept of "distance learning" and "time independent learning" is new and exciting ground for Midland College as classes implement the Bulletin Board Service (BBS), a system that allows students to take college classes without being in the classroom.

Dennis Sever, director of instructional information systems, explains that after an initial class meeting on campus to review the technical aspects of accessing the system, the instructor and students communicate via modem.

Accessing a BBS class is as easy as enrolling and paying regular fees and tuition. Equipment needed for these classes include access to a computer and modem and software such as "Procomm" or "Kermit," two public domain programs.

Fall classes being offered through the BBS are English Composition and Rhetoric 1301.813, taught by James Fuller and Literature of England 2322.129, taught by Glenda Lindsey-Hicks.

For more information about BBS classes, call 685-4671.

Passing professional exams can mean college credit

Students who want to get credit for what they already know now have that option through several different programs.

Students who have taken the Professional Legal Secretary Exam can get college credit of 28 hours once they enroll and complete 15 semester hours.

They can earn credit for 12 hours of Office Systems Technology, nine hours of legal assistant courses and seven hours of business courses.

Other professional certifications that award credit are the Certified Legal Assistant exam that awards 19 hours of legal assistants courses and three hours of Office Systems Technology course and the Certified Legal Secretary exam.

Although these credits will count toward an Associates degree at Midland College, they are non-transferrable.

For more information about these exams, call 685-4666 or 685-4657.

ROXANNE FURROW

Student shows volunteer spirit with local girl scout troop

■ The following is an excerpt from one of the winning entries in the Abell-Hanger Essay contest about the value of volunteer work for MC students.

As an Abell-Hanger Scholarship recipient, I was required to complete 60 hours of community service throughout my four semesters at Midland College. Out of my 60 hours, over 50 were spent with the Girl Scouts.

As a former Girl Scout, I was excited to be a helper to Troop 16. I had the opportunity to teach the girls about decision making and ways to handle uncomfortable situations without hurting anyone in the process. For this lesson the girls were each given a special situation and were asked to write a story telling how the situation came about and how they would handle it. They were wonderful stories, all of the girls were honest and applied what they learned to their work. I enjoyed watching them and learning about each of them and their personalities. For the next badge the Troop had an opportunity to meet two very special women that came in to teach them many different ways to sew and stitch. During this activity the Troop learned cross stitch, latch hook and plastic canvas sewing. They made beautiful duck patterns that turned out very nice with very little help. During my time there the girls completed the decision making badge, the sewing badge and the communications badge.

In my third semester at Midland College, I returned to Troop 16 with the privilege of acquiring my 40 hours for the spring and fall semesters of 1994-95. I was invited to join the Troop on a camping trip to Mitre Peak. We stayed at the Girl Scout Camp for two days and nights. All of our meals were cooked over the firs and we learned how to make breakfast burritos, pizza and peach cobbler. At night we sat around the camp fire, sang songs and told stories. As an added treat, we drove to McDonald Observatory, where we listed to lectures on the constellations and learned how to find them. We also had a chance to look through the telescopes to see Andromeda and Saturn.

It was exciting for me to watch the girls and their reactions to our activities. They were all so positive and willing to learn. It gave me a great feeling to know I could be a part of teaching these girls things they will need to know and remember for the rest of their lives. Midland College and the Abell-Hanger Scholarship gave me the opportunity of a life time and I was honored to take full advantage of this privilege.

Roxanne Furrow is a student at Midland College and an Abell-Hanger Volunteer.

A taste of 21st-century kitchen is here

By Tina Cassidy
N.Y. Times News Service

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — Here, in the basement of a building at the foot of Smith Hill, is the kitchen of the future. Built on theory, built from scratch and still evolving.

Like Frankenstein, its parts may be identifiable, but sewn together, it looks like nothing you've ever seen before.

Imagine making a salad without having to walk to the refrigerator to get the greens, bring them to the sink for rinsing, move them back to the counter, reach for a cutting board from a lower-level cabinet, then chopping, getting a bowl from a higher-level cabinet, assembling and finally, walking over to the table (after, of course, it's already been set, requiring several trips to lug everything from napkins to silverware).

You may find it difficult to envision life in the kitchen without these hassles. Not so for students from the Rhode Island School of Design. For more than three years, they have been thinking about changing the home's most popular room.

The results of their research, which included studying kitchen traffic patterns, engineering ideas and demographic data, won't be unveiled until 1998, when the Smithsonian's Cooper-Hewitt National Design Museum in New York, currently undergoing renovations, holds its first exhibit.

So here's a sneak preview of the 21st-century kitchen.

While the we think. Short people and children have a hard time reaching for the glasses, a person in a wheelchair can't reach the back burner of a stove and an arthritic may have difficulty lifting heavy dishes.

Keeping this in mind, architecture, engineering and interior design students listened to gerontologists, ergonomic specialists and professional cooks to put together a kitchen that condenses cabinetry and appliances within a "comfort zone," eliminating the bending and stretching we all experience, while keeping the storage we all crave.

For example, the main counter — lower than the current standard — would have a sink in the middle. A cutting board sits on top of the sink and can be easily moved from side to side or removed entirely.

Then on either side of the sink are induction heating burners, which can be gas-powered for the purists. Chopped vegetables can be scraped right off the cutting board into a frying pan, for instance. The switches to ingite the heat surface are easy to turn, but for safety reasons can only be activated with the magnetic control of a pan and can be adjusted on fine increments. And the oven would be closer to waist level, allowing a cook to slide a 5-pound lasagna from the rack onto the counter without a strain. There is no heavy lifting, and the work happens in the comfort zone.

The idea of a no-lift surface area such as this is crucial, designers say, because US Census data indicate the elderly population, which has the greatest number of expendable dollars, will double by 2020. However, nothing that is being reinvented here would be outrageously expensive, assert those involved.

Next to the counter would be the so-called Snack Center, an innovative design that blows away refrigerators as we know them.

Think of splitting your refrigerator and freezer in half and putting some counter space in the middle, with your microwave, coffee maker and faucet built into the center wall. Want a drink and a sandwich? You can have it all by standing in that one spot, pulling the cold cuts from the refrigerator door on the left, the condiments from the door on the right, the bread from a cabinet in front of you, the knife from a drawer at your waist level. You can make the sandwich there, even warm it in the microwave, and get a glass of milk or water without having to reach or bend.

The doors of the refrigerator slide flush with the counter, so they would not knock over food or block the walking area in front of it. The unit would also be more energy-efficient because you are opening only half of the normal space at once.

"Snacking, so to speak, has become the main meal of the US population, which is unfortunate," says Robin Edman, vice president of design at the Frigidaire Co., based in Columbus, Ohio. The company is sponsoring the school's Universal Kitchen project.

"But if that is the case we should do something that caters to that environment," says Edman, a RISD graduate. "So the idea is great."

Space for trash and recycling is also incorporated in the kitchen with a cart system.

Students visited Julia Child's kitchen, where they discovered that she, like all professional chefs, leaves her trash barrels out in the open for easy use when preparing foods, saving time by cutting down on walking to a closet or bending for the waste basket under the sink. While the idea may be a good one, it was not aesthetically pleasing. So a sleek cart, which can handle recyclable materials as well as garbage, was designed to be able to slide from under the counter when it is needed at your side. The cart also has a removable cover that allows it to double as a transporter of heavy items, such as dishes and cooked foods, to the table.

"To have something movable is really a terrific addition; the cart is adjustable," says Jane Langmuir, a designer and instructor at RISD who initiated the project. "Now that more and more people are having to stay home after having been in the hospital ... the cart could be a mini-fridge, microwave or icemaker and could provide the essentials for someone who is bedridden but not incapacitated."

All of these components are interchangeable and can vary in size and scale. For example, you could have all of your burners on one side of the sink. You could adjust cabinet and sink height. You could purchase the Snack Center and work it into your pre-existing kitchen. Or you could buy the expandable refrigerator that feeds two, rather than one for a family of five.

The students have named it Kit-of-Parts. And the components will continue to be refined until the 1998 exhibit, which is the students' deadline.

"I think they're fairly close in terms of concept," Edman says. "We have, for a number of years, been working on different projects in the same area. None of them have had the manpower behind them as a school project like this."

Sastha Kaposi, a junior who worked on the Universal Kitchen last semester, said he wanted to work on the project because he felt a responsibility to address changing demographics and lifestyles. But the most difficult part of it was picking up where other students left off, trying to expound on ideas that were not his to begin with. However, that constant changing of perspective led to innovation.

"We all feel quite strongly about it. Different points of view and backgrounds were beneficial to the project," Kaposi says.

"They've been working on it for so long because it's very involved," says Langmuir. "We're looking at redesigning an entire room that is filled with the most complex components in terms of technology and engineering that has to interface with a broad user-face."

"This," she adds, "is not the bureau drawer."

It's all in a name; three the same

KISSIMMEE, Fla. (AP) — Ronald Legendre promised to love and honor his bride forever. His best man, Ronald Legendre, handed over the ring and Judge Ronald Legendre pronounced the happy couple husband and wife.

Confused?

The three Rons who participated in the wedding outside the county courthouse Saturday have the same name, but are not related.

The relationship between the three Rons began in May 1991, when Ron Legendre, the groom, was at the airport in Augusta, Ga., where he noticed a blackboard behind a ticket counter that announced Ron Legendre's father had died.

He asked a ticket agent about it, and was told that Ron Legendre was district sales manager for Delta in Augusta.

In November 1991, groom Legendre moved from Louisiana to Augusta, where he became vice president of a Ford dealership. A month later, the Delta employee — and his future best man — walked into the dealership.

"It's just been a great friendship ever since," said the 48-year-old best man, who has since moved to Fort Lauderdale.

"He's like the long lost brother I never had," quipped the 41-year-old groom.

When Ronald Legendre decided to get married, he and his same-name buddy phoned the judge in Kissimmee, whose name the best man had seen in a newspaper story several years earlier.

It took a couple of calls before the judge bought the story and agreed to officiate.

The bride and groom drove from their Augusta home to Kissimmee for Saturday's nuptials.

"We just thought it would be a hoot to do," said the new bride, Hope Legendre, 41.

Judge Ronald Legendre even brought his mother, Dottie, and his wife, Bonnie, to witness the event.

Too bad the judge's son couldn't make it. His name: Ron Legendre.

The Stuermer Store in Ledbetter mixes new merchandise with display items from years past. In some rural areas of Texas, the original "everything stores" — the old fashioned general stores — have been serving their loyal local clientele in the same way, though on a more modern scale, since the 19th century.

General stores sell simpler times

By Mary G. Ramos
Associated Press

In urban areas, where most Texans live these days, mega-supermarkets are the trend. They have seemingly everything — not only food items, but also aspirin and Pepto Bismol, screwdrivers and light bulbs, bug spray and flower seeds. They're big, efficient, and each looks just like the other.

In some rural areas of Texas, the original "everything" stores — the old-fashioned general stores — have been serving their loyal local clientele in the same way, though on a more modest scale, since the 19th century.

A few of these rural one-stop shops, however, sell their dungarees, farm tools and veterinary supplies in stores that are knee-deep in nostalgia.

ALONG WITH the livestock feed, no-nonsense straw hats, and soda waters you don't see in the city, they still have wood-burning stoves, penny candy (well, almost a penny), and collections of old tools and equipment for visitors to view.

You have to look for these stores. You'll never spot one if you're zipping down an interstate. Most often, the old-timey general store is on a farm-to-market road around the bend and down the road apiece from the nearest town that is of sufficient size to be found on a highway map.

You'll recognize a genuine, old-fashioned general store by the sounds the screen door makes: a screek when you open it and a gentle bang when it closes.

The counters are well-worn, having been oiled over the years by hundreds of small hands clutching pennies, nickels and dimes as their small owners waited to purchase treats. Then they were burnished to a rich patina by the rubbing of hundreds of overall-covered bellies whose owners were paying for a flannel shirt or a shaving brush or a new grubbing hoe.

A visit to one of these stores is a trip to a simpler time, a quieter time, when neighbors knew each other and when going to the store was as much a social occasion as it was a commercial one.

PART OF the delight of visiting these very lively places of the past is lingering long enough to feel the softer, slower pace of the store and its neighborhood — to take the time to chat with the owners and to listen to the cadence of conversation between the regular customers and the staff. It is the sound of today with overtones of a time gone by.

Here is a small sample of some of Texas' classic general stores, along with a brief listing of other attractions in their neighborhoods:

CENTRAL TEXAS

The Stuermer Store at Ledbetter has been in the same family since 1891. Unlike many of its cousins, Stuermer's building is on a major highway — U.S. 290 about 60 miles east of Austin.

The trademark wood-burning stove sits in the middle of the store, but with a very modern soft-drink machine across the aisle.

Mixed in with brand-new merchandise are display-only items that were "the very latest" merchandise 75 or 100 years ago. Delicate old dolls and antique quilts are displayed above shelves of bright T-shirts and sturdy blue jeans. Large balls of stiff, new twine are stored on the floor in front of a case holding celluloid collars, topped by several old hatboxes.

A rolling wooden library-type ladder is still used to fetch items from high shelves. A dusty but fascinating museum-and-storage room is upstairs.

At Stuermer's you can buy a low-tech cane fishing pole or you can make high-tech copies. And this is definitely the place to come for state-of-the-art pecan-tree threshing poles.

An adjoining snack bar serves up hamburgers, pizza and catfish, topped off with Blue Bell ice cream.

TO GET THERE — From Interstate 35, take U.S. 290 east about 60 miles from Austin to Ledbetter.

IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD — Round Top, about 16 miles away, holds antiques and arts-and-crafts shows each spring and fall. There are several excellent bed-and-breakfast inns in the vicinity; Royer's Round Top Cafe has top-notch food. Henkel Square is a cluster of historic buildings you can tour.

Winedale Historical Center, 4 miles east of Round Top, holds pioneer crafts shows during the spring and fall Round Top festivals, and tours of historic buildings the year around. From Ledbetter, take FM 1291 southeast 11 miles to Warrenton, turn north on State Highway 237 and go 4½ miles to Round Top.

EAST TEXAS

C.E. Roger's and Son store is nestled in towering East Texas trees between Henderson and Tatum.

The enterprise is 106 years old; the building dates from 1927. Many of the display cases, as well as the main counter, are antiques, but the merchandise is very modern.

Large, open cardboard bins of nails of every size imaginable are lined up neatly under the edge of the counter, out of the way but handy. Across the aisle, Blue Bell treats tempt customers from a serve-yourself freezer.

Screws and small nails are piled into antique bins. A wall of old post-office boxes stands against the back wall, and vintage business machines sit side-by-side on nearby shelves.

Twelve or 15 large glass candy jars filled with pea and bean seeds crowd a table top in the spring. East Texans' favorites are all here: crowders, pintos, purple-hulls and cream peas, among them.

TO GET THERE — From Interstate 20, take U.S. 69 south 11 miles to Tyler, then State Highway 64 east to Henderson, then FM 782 northeast 12½ miles to the store, near the Stewart community.

WHAT SOME consider the ultimate in old-fashioned general stores, the T.C. Lindsey & Co. Store is in Jonesville, just north of I-20 and almost to Louisiana. It has been featured on TV and in bunches of magazine and newspaper articles. The place has been used for scenes in six movies, including two by the Disney Studio and one by NBC.

The enterprise has been around since 1847, the building since the early 1920s. For more than 60 of those years, Sam Vaughan was a vital part of T.C. Lindsey. Tall, straight-backed and lively, Mr. Sam, as he was affectionately known, delighted in showing visitors his "pretties" — his collection of antique equipment and gadgets — and explaining the uses of all the oddments.

Most of the main part of the T.C. Lindsey store is chockablock with everyday necessities, from baking powder to belts and from teakettles to tools. Mr. Sam's "pretties," are displayed primarily in an adjoining room. Mr. Sam's brother, Tom, now carries on the family tradition, including a yoke for oxen and a hand-cranked gin.

TO GET THERE — Interstate 20 east to FM 134, then turn north 2 miles to Jonesville.

IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD — Jefferson, a town with the charm of the Deep South about 22 miles northwest of Jonesville via FM 134, has several dozen bed-and-breakfast inns and many antiques shops. A few miles southeast of Jefferson on the Texas-Louisiana border is Caddo Lake, guarded by venerable, moss-festooned cypress trees.

NORTH-CENTRAL TEXAS

Your greeting at the Rosston General Store in Cooke County will be from a younger man than at the T.C. Lindsey store, but it will be no less friendly and gregarious. Between interruptions to pump some gas, sell a pack of chewing gum or trade some gossip, Nick Muller is happy to tell you about Rosston and about his family's store.

The enterprise has operated continuously since 1879; the Muller family has owned it for a little over 20 years.

The Rosston store's remembrance of things past is manifested in the old tools and equipment hung about the place and the old photographs of the store and its former owners and customers that decorate the walls.

Some of the merchandise is unusual to city eyes — and taste buds. When was the last time you drank a bottle of Nehi Peach? Or Nehi Blue? And just what flavor is blue, anyhow?

TO GET THERE — From Interstate 35, turn west on FM 922 at Valley View and go about 15 miles.

IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD — The town of Muenster is a favorite stop for German sausages and cheeses. From Rosston, take FM 922 east about 4 miles to FM 373; turn north and go 10 miles to Muenster.

In Lindsay, 8½ miles east of Muenster via U.S. 82, is St. Peter's Catholic Church, a Romanesque Revival-style church with intricately painted interior walls and ceiling. The effect is stunning. Look for the church's tall steeple.

Travel tidbits link golf past, royal facts, trivia

By Richard P. Carpenter
N.Y. Times News Service

Golf is more than a popular vacation activity. In the United States, more than 18 million people play the game, including some 8,200 professionals.

Here, from Hilton Golf Resorts, are some facts, mixed in with a few offbeat notes about the game:

■ The first golf-like game may have been played by Roman emperors, who used a bent stick to drive a soft, feather-stuffed ball. But the direct ancestor is the 15th-century Scottish game of "golfe."

■ One of history's luckiest shots happened at the Pointe Hilton Resort at South Mountain in Arizona where a man teed off on hole No. 9, which is par 3 and 105 yards. The shot sliced off into the desert, hit a rock, bounced onto the green and went into the hole. (OK, are you going to play golf or are you going to fool around?)

■ The first US course was the St. Andrews Golf Club of Yonkers, established in Yonkers, N.Y., in 1888.

■ The back-nine area of The Links course at the Turtle Bay Hilton on the Hawaiian island of Oahu was a landing strip for B-29 bombers during World War II.

The Turtle Bay's oldest golfer is Charlie Forsythe, a 92-year-old retired policeman.

And The Links retrieved more than 20,000 balls from the back-nine water hazards in its first year alone. (The course opened in fall 1993.)

■ The first national tournament in the United States, the US Open, was held in Newport, R.I., on Oct. 4, 1895.

■ In the upcoming movie "Casino," a plane lands on the fairway of hole No. 1 of the Las Vegas Hilton Country Club. The movie stars Robert De Niro, Joe Pesci and Sharon Stone — an above-par cast, you might say.

Travel Trivia: What country has a king who was born in Boston? (Answer at end of column.)

Quotable: "One's life is not completed if he has not climbed the Great Wall." — Chinese proverb.

In a name: Delta Air Lines got the name "Delta" from the early days of aviation when it was a crop-dusting company in the cotton fields of the South. It's somewhat bigger these days.

New travel products: "The Stuffed Shirt" is a case that, according to Magellan's Catalog of Travel Essentials, enables travelers to pack a change of clothes in the space of a hardback book without crumpling the clothing, thanks to a flexible internal frame. The Stuffed Shirt costs $79 in canvas or $129 in leather. For more information, call (800) 962-4943.

Glub: Kevin Costner's big-buck film "Waterworld" was filmed on an artificial floating island off the coast of Kawaihae Harbor on the Big Island of Hawaii.

Think about it: "Is there anyone here who does not speak English?" the Montreal tour bus driver asked, in English.

And speaking of Montreal: Images du Futur, Montreal's annual exhibition of interactive computer art, this year includes a big bed upon which visitors can stretch out to encounter a virtual-sex partner.

Tiny but efficient: We thank Seymour Lisker of Wayland for passing along this tidbit from the Porsche Club's regional newsletter, the Nor'easter: In little Carrabelle, Fla., there is a phone booth with a sign reading "The Smallest Police Station in the World." The phone connects directly with the town's only mobile unit.

Did you guess it? Travel Trivia answer: Thailand's King Bhumibol Adulyadej was born in Boston. (With thanks to Larry Robertie of Groveland.)

Lilly Dramkean (Terri Francell) gets the drop on Mary Tobias (Greta Grubbs) in this scene from the Globe Theatre production of "Three Murders and It's Only Monday." The comedy is on stage at 7:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday. For more information, call the Globe Theatre, Odessa College campus, 1-915-332-1586.

Peaceful Times Sanitarium needs help. A murderer is loose. Three people are dead already. And it's only Monday.

"It was a dark and story night," mused director Dee Ann Harris. "OK. So maybe it was a sunny afternoon, but still there are already several people dead. Help us solve the mystery."

Pat Cook's comedy "Three Murders and It's Only Monday," which is on stage Friday and Saturday at Odessa's Globe of the Great Southwest, takes its audience on a who-done-it search, complete with an audience vote at the close of the show.

"It's a comedy murder mystery following in the steps of Dashiell Hammett," said Globe Theatre director Clay Francell.

"The main character Harry, the PI, will stop every now and then and step in front of the stage. The lights go down, the spot comes on him, and he addresses the audience. Toward the end of the show, when the lights are up, he asks the audience to applaud for the person they think did it. Then he steps behind each person, so it's kind of an audience participation show."

"Three Murders and It's Only Monday" precedes the Globe's 1995-96 season.

"It's not part of the season membership, but to help kick off the season," Francell said.

This season, the Globe, located on the campus of Odessa College, will present "An Evening of Chekhov," Sept. 16-17 and 22-23; "You're a Good Man Charlie Brown," Nov. 3-4, 10-12 and17-18; "The Music Man," Feb. 9-10, 16-17 and 23-25; "Macbeth," April 19-20 and 26-28; "Lend Me a Tenor," June 14-15 and 21-23; and "Oliver," July 11-14, 18-19 and 20-21. All season membership shows begin at 8 p.m.

Curtain for "Three Murders and It's Only Monday" is 7:30 p.m. The evening actually begins at 6:30 p.m. with, Francell said, "Kind of a picnic."

From 6:30 to 7:30 p.m. theater goers can dine on the grounds. The menu features a hot dog, chips and a soft drink. The comedy has one intermission and draws to an end around 9:15 p.m.

All seats are general admission. Ticket price is $7. For reservations, call 1-915-332-1586 between 9:30 a.m. and noon and 1 to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

New face at MCT hopes to make stage magical

By Georgia Temple
Staff Writer

Tracy Goodwin wants the youth she works with at Midland Community Theatre to discover what she found in her first childhood experience on stage.

"I want this to be magic," said Ms. Goodwin, who has been hired as MCT's educational theater director. "I want it to be the same magic for every child who crosses my path that was given to me. I can't imagine what my life would have been like, how different it would have been, without the theater."

Ms. Goodwin comes to Midland from San Marcos, where she recently completed a master's degree in child drama at Southwest Texas State University.

"Two of the undergraduate kids that had been in numerous productions I directed down there have Pickwicks (MCT's youth performing troupe) in their blood," said Ms. Goodwin, recalling what first piqued her interest in applying for a job at MCT. "About a year ago, one of them sat down with me one night and said, 'What are you going to do when you graduate?' And I said, 'I really don't know. I would like to get a children's theater job, but they are somewhat few and far between.'"

She had already decided to work on her doctorate if she didn't get a children's theater job. The enthusiasm with which her student talked about MCT inspired Ms. Goodwin to send in a resume this spring.

"I thought it sounded like the gold coin of children's theater jobs," Ms. Goodwin said. "There wasn't a job available. I sent it in on a wing and a prayer. Maybe someday, something would come available. They would like my resume and call me.

"I never dreamed that six months after that conversation I would be educational theater director of Midland Community Theatre," Ms. Goodwin said. "Of all the jobs that I was interested in and sent resumes to — and I really didn't send that many — this one was in the back of my mind."

Since receiving the job, Ms. Goodwin said, "I don't think I've slept since. I've been so excited. I fell in love with the people and the theater and the town and knew that it was where I was supposed to be. This is the job of my dreams."

In her position at MCT, Ms. Goodwin will be in charge of Theatre School for children — the next semester will begin this month and run through December; the Pickwick Players, with auditions in late August; and the MCT Singers, who are sponsored by Texaco and, as adult ambassadors for the theater, perform free for community groups. She also will direct adult productions.

Ms. Goodwin received a bachelor's degree in fine arts from Baylor University in 1987 with a specialization in directing and design with additional work in acting and dance. She has had 16 years of training in ballet, tap, jazz and modern dance, as well as 10 years of professional acting training and six years of experience.

Her life in theater actually began when she was 12 years old.

"I did my first play, 'Lil'Abner,' and from that moment, that was it," Ms. Goodwin said. "There was never any doubt in my mind what I wanted to do and what I was supposed to do. All through junior high, high school, college, I've been involved in some form or another of theater. There's never been anything else that I even remotely wanted to do."

MCT: Goodwin looks forward to job working with children

(From 1F)

Theater changed her world.

"I was extremely shy as a child," Ms. Goodwin said. "The doors that theater and speech opened for me, well, it changed my life as I believe that it has the ability to do... Not just taking shy introverted children and bringing them to life, it can take extroverted children and channel all that creativeness."

As is true for most thespians, Ms. Goodwin has contemplated trying her talent and luck in New York or California.

"I thought about it all the time," she said. "It just never seemed like what I was supposed to do. I'm a Texan, and I love Texas. I never wanted to leave.

"I had plenty of work to keep me busy," Ms. Goodwin said. "I wanted to act. And I did act.

"But I also wanted to get a master's degree, and after six years of being in the business, I decided it was time to come back and get my master's, or I might never do it," Ms. Goodwin said. "I guess I also deep down, even as a child, knew I wanted to teach.

"I never played anything as a child except for school teacher. My father, the poor people at his office, had to xerox tons of work sheets so I could play school."

A native of Kingswood, outside Houston, Ms. Goodwin is the youngest of four children, all of whom still live in the Lone Star state. Her parents, Dorice and Bill Goodwin, former vice president of Southwest Fabrication and Welding, are retired. Her sister, Ruth Goodwin, teaches music to gifted and talented children, while her other siblings, Martha Thomason and Scott Goodwin, have chosen careers in business.

Her family has been, Ms. Goodwin said, "Extremely supportive of both of us."

The six years she spent as a professional actress included work in television, commercials and industrial films.

"It wasn't in any form or fashion a negative experience, but it's just not what I wanted to do the rest of my life," Ms. Goodwin said. "It was wonderful and it was horrible. I loved it. I loved every minute of it because I love acting.

"But the struggle day to day, that's not in my blood. That was always difficult for me. I never had that much trouble with rejection. As human beings no one wants to be rejected, but that was never that big an issue with me.

"The thing that wore me down was the business itself. I loved it, but I like stability. I need stability. And I want to know that I'm doing something that's going to help someone else."

She found what she was looking for at Southwest Texas State, studying under the guidance of Charles Pascoe, chair of the children's theater department.

"I had met him when I was 19, and he had made such an incredible impression on me that I had never forgotten him," Ms. Goodwin said. "I decided to get my master's in children's theater because more than anything else I wanted to work with him, and I felt like that was the direction that I wanted to go.

"It wasn't until I spent those two years there at Southwest that I knew that children's theater was exactly what I wanted to do. I got to see the joy that theater brought to the children over the course of two years."

Ms. Goodwin said creative dramatics is an important teaching tool for all children, not just those considered "artistically inclined" because it enhances communication skills.

"The bottom line is," Ms. Goodwin said, "if we can communicate with each other, the world is going to be a better place."

MURDER Globe presents comedy murder mystery

(From 1F)

The comedy also represents Ms. Harris' directing debut.

"I run lights," said Ms. Harris, who works for Ford Motor Credit Corp. "I just do technical work mostly. Then, all of a sudden, I kind of got roped into doing it. Since I'm on the program committee and I suggested the play, they said, 'Oh good. You can direct it.'

"It was kind of a shock," recalled Ms. Harris, who was in theater school at Permian Playhouse when she was a teen-ager. "It's something I actually had never given that much thought to doing."

'I run lights. I just do technical work mostly, Then, all of a sudden, I kind of got roped into doing it.'

— Dee Ann Harris, production's director

She's found the experience "easier" than she thought it was going to be.

"I got lucky and got a good cast," Ms. Harris said. "People I've known and worked with before."

The cast — mostly a list of possible suspects — includes Tony and Brenda Myers, Kristy Partridge, Greg Cox, Terri Francell, Greta Grubbs, Aaron Cox, Chris Borgman, Tim Baker and Bryan Gilmore.

"It's been a real hoot," Ms. Harris said. "We've had a lot of fun."

Choreographers make light dance

By Jack Anderson
N.Y. Times News Service

Thanks to the theatrical wizardry of Dana Reitz and Jennifer Tipton, light dances in surprising ways and silence has many songs to sing. When Mikhail Baryshnikov's White Oak Dance Project appeared at the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival earlier this summer, audiences were left virtually mesmerized by the world premiere of "Unspoken Territory," a 20-minute solo, without music, for Baryshnikov. It is the latest of several remarkable works with choreography by Ms. Reitz and lighting by Ms. Tipton.

Since the 1970s, Ms. Reitz has been creating dances that often suggest intricate spider webs of steps. In others, the movements look like calligraphic messages written on the air in a foreign language. In still others, dense forests of gestures grow from the seed of a simple choreographic action.

Although Ms. Reitz has sometimes used music in her works, she has been artistically more at home in silence. The scenery and costumes are never elaborate. And because of her astute choice of lighting designers, the productions have a beautiful glow about them.

In 1987, Ms. Reitz became associated with Ms. Tipton, whose imaginative lighting has enhanced dances by such choreographers as Twyla Tharp, Jerome Robbins, Paul Taylor and Jiri Kylian. Together, Ms. Reitz and Ms. Tipton have made light and shadow perform as distinctively as the human beings who dance in their productions.

Their offerings often have similarities. Despite a lack of plot, they usually make enigmatic appeals to the emotions. Secret dramas seem to be acted out, and the performers give the impression that they are on momentous journeys. Yet the action seldom becomes overtly violent; so, too, the many changes in lighting are never flamboyant.

Essentially, each collaboration is a fresh adventure. "Unspoken Territory" is not in the least like "Necessary Weather," which was presented at the Kitchen last year. That piece, which lasts about an hour, proved to be an especially felicitous collaboration involving Ms. Tipton, Ms. Reitz and another choreographer and dancer, Sara Rudner.

These two fine works reveal the range of expression that Ms. Reitz and Ms. Tipton are capable of.

There is a sense of urgency about "Unspoken Territory" suggesting that Baryshnikov was making an expedition through a wilderness of light and darkness. The solo begins in total gloom. Then a smudge of gray becomes visible, and Baryshnikov was glimpsed moving cautiously in it. Like a moth drawn to a flame, he looked as if he was simultaneously lured by and wary of the patches of light that kept brightening and vanishing.

Ms. Reitz evoked this wanderer's mental and emotional states by means of contrasts between stillness and activity. At times, Baryshnikov struck firm poses implying that the man he portrayed had successfully accomplished a task or had come to a decision. But the variety of movements between poses revealed that this voyager did not find his journey easy.

The whirlings in passages of wild turns could be physical counterparts of spinning thoughts. Once, Baryshnikov sagged, letting his arms dangle as if his exertions had exhausted him. Later, he swooped defiantly across the stage. He also shrugged casually, as if the traveler had temporarily felt free of danger.

The silence in which all this happens is, somehow, a totally different sort of silence from that of "Unspoken Territory." The silence in the solo is disquieting because it hangs over uncertain terrain.

In contrast, "Necessary Weather" concerns a world filled with wonders. The silence from which they spring has all the majesty of organ music.

Ms. Reitz and Ms. Tipton do indeed work magic.

HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, AUGUST 20, 1995

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: A new partnership will prove highly lucrative. Legal issues dominate in late fall but can be resolved. In December, money arrives from abroad. Teamwork is the key to landing a big contract early in 1996. Use your social connections wisely to boost your career. An influential acquaintance will help you finance a pet project next June. Romance blossoms under the starry summer sky.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: newswoman Connie Chung, dancer Carla Fracci, boxing promoter Don King, singer Robert Plant.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A leisurely day will suit you just fine! Guard against overexposure to the sun's rays. Visiting old haunts makes you feel like a kid again. Let loved ones know how much they mean to you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Celebrate good news with a family picnic. A new romantic relationship seems almost too good to be true. Give it time to develop. Lessons learned in the past make you wary of extravagant promises.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Leave business cares behind while you concentrate on pleasing loved ones. Romance heats up when you show your affection openly. Set aside a regular time to visit a parent.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Confiding in a member of the clergy could bring piece of mind. Are you really interested in rekindling a former romance? Think twice. A friendly conversation with a young person leads to new understanding.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Let those how always look to you for answers come up with a few of their own. Your concern for a family member is unfounded. A sports event catches your interest.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Worrying about things that may or may not happen is a waste of energy. Others are looking to you for leadership. Do not disappoint them. Move forward with confidence.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Wait until this evening to reveal what is on your mind. Someone who grants a favor may want one in return. Be sure you know what is at stake before pledging your full support.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Make certain travel conditions are favorable before agreeing to go to a distant place. You and mate are on the same wavelength, eager to make a fresh start.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Let partner set the pace today. Your generous approach to family life will be richly rewarded. Parents should take turns playing with the children.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Laughter and games are the best antidote to stress. Resume your love affair with Mother Nature by taking a walk in the woods or along a beach. Thanks to you, family members draw closer together.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Invite your mate to join you in a quest for better health. Adhering to a sensible diet-and-exercise program will be easier if you have a partner. Singles find romance under unusual circumstances.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Finalize vacation plans after talking with loved ones. An in-law lends a helping hand in an emergency. Be appreciative. Indulge your passion for water; take a plunge in the pool or ocean.

The bidding:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
2♣	Pass	2♠	Pass
4 NT	Pass	5♣	Pass
6♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Queen of ♣

Study the diagram above. Would you rather play or defend six hearts after the lead of the queen of clubs?

South's opening bid of two clubs was artificial and forcing. North's response showed a five-card or longer suit headed by two of the three top honors. South checked on aces and settled in six hearts on finding that the ace of spades was missing.

It seems that declarer must lose a trick in each black suit, so did you elect to defend?

Suppose declarer wins the first trick, draws trumps in four rounds and then leads a spade to the jack. If East wins the ace of spades, declarer will discard a club on dummy's spades. If East ducks, however, it seems that all is well. The defender wins the next spade and returns a minor-suit card, and declarer is stranded with a losing club and no place to dispose of it.

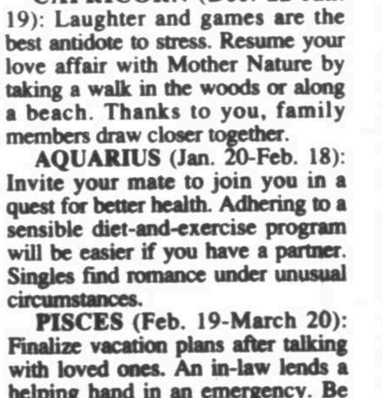

Down one? Not quite. Elect to play. After winning the first trick and drawing trumps, correct technique is to cash the ace and king of diamonds before leading a spade. We have already seen that East cannot afford to win that trick, so you take advantage of being in dummy to ruff a diamond.

Now cash your remaining club honor and lead your last spade to the queen. East wins the ace but has only spades left in hand. On the spade return you discard your losing club, and claim the last trick with your trump.

Congratulations if you chose to play the hand and made it on the above line.

In Helsinki, museum itself is art

By Herbert Muschamp
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Now here's another major building by an important New York architect that you won't get to see, unless your travel plans include Finland.

But if you get over to the Urban Center on Madison Avenue in the next few weeks, at least you can check out drawings and models depicting Steven Holl's design for the Helsinki Museum of Contemporary Art.

The design, the winner of a 1993 international competition, is Holl's first for an art museum. Roughly one and a half times the size of the Whitney Museum of American Art in Manhattan, the Museum of Contemporary Art will occupy a prominent site in Helsinki's civic center, near Eliel Saarinen's train station and Alvar Aalto's Finlandia Hall. And Holl's irregularly shaped museum, which will exhibit art made since 1960, seeks to bring some formal coherence to the surrounding cityscape.

The building's most assertive form is a curving, trussed roof, sheathed with zinc tiles, that widens like a horn as it twists off the building's main axis. In plan, the roof resembles a comet's tail; in elevation, a billowing spinnaker. These dynamic images evoke the fleeting evanescence of contemporaneity, while the horn shape sounds the Romantic ego's great blare.

But the roof also serves functional as well as expressive needs. The curve is designed to catch the low, horizontal sunlight peculiar to Finland's northern latitude, while allowing the placement of skylights that will admit natural light into galleries on the lower floors.

A structurally integral torus, the roof also eliminates the need for columns on the soaring top-floor gallery space.

The horn shape is set off by a more conventional rectangular wing, somewhat lower in height, a juxtaposition that creates a sequence of spiraling, variously shaped galleries within. Staggered doorways and curving walls give these otherwise neutral spaces a somewhat dreamy personality; the galleries wander a bit, just as museumgoers do. Construction is to begin in December.

Steven Holl is in some respects a deeply conservative architect. He's not above using the Golden Section to determine his proportions.

He holds founding modernists like Le Corbusier in high regard. His philosophical outlook is unfashionably humanist. Yet his architecture is more subversive than work that strains for polemical effect. It is classical without recourse to period style, modern without emulating a machine, and it explores new possibilities of form without fetishizing the new.

Holl grasps that the truly critical act in architecture today is to break down trends and movements, not to build them up.

The show, presented by the Architectural League, is conceived to convey the rawness of the design process. It unfolds chronologically, beginning with a display of the notebook in which Holl made his initial sketch and culminating with a large scale model of the completed design.

Informal sketches and study models fill in the gaps between progressively more refined versions of the museum.

If Holl were a less gifted architect, the inclusion of all these artifacts — each study model is presented to us as a kind of sacred relic — could be insufferably pretentious.

I find it a useful and illuminating display of the interaction between an architect's intuition and the practical requirements he is called upon to address.

In one corner of the exhibition, a monitor flashes computer images — Holl is no Luddite — but it has fallen to a human hand and brain to synthesize the building's complex array of technical and philosophical functions into a compelling whole.

Fortunately, the design embodies the intuitive quality of Holl's architecture even more fully than this show.

Steven Holl's designs for the Helsinki Museum of Contemporary Art remain at the Urban Center, Municipal Art Society, 457 Madison Avenue, at 51st Street, through Sept. 16.

Listings accepted

The Arts Extension Service is accepting craft fair listings for the 1996 edition of "Fairs and Festivals."

AES offers festival producers an opportunity to reach thousands of potential exhibitors, buyers and journalists who use "Fairs and Festivals" to find crafts events. "Fair and Festivals," now in its 21st edition, is an annual directory that lists contact and key application information, locations and descriptions of more than 1,000 festivals through 27 states in the northeast and southeast United States.

Producers of events that offer crafts people a market place to sell their work are invited to contact the Arts Extension Service to request a Sponsor Packet sent to them. The 1996 edition includes a new preview published in early October 1995, and lists events with deadlines up to March 1, 1996.

To be listed in the book, the deadlines are Sept. 15 for events held January through July 1996; and Oct. 20 for events held July through December. Listings received after the preview deadline still have until Sept. 15 to be listed in the book. Illegible submissions, press releases and publicity brochures are unacceptable.

"Fair producers receive free promotion that will reach thousands of people who use 'Fairs and Festivals'," said a release from the Arts Extension Service.

To be listed in the book, request a Sponsor Packet from the arts extension Service, Division of Continuing education, 602 Goodell Building, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. 01003, or call 1-413-545-2360.

Contemporary art comes to tourist mecca

By Deborah Baker
Associated Press

SANTA FE, N.M. — In the Museum of Fine Arts, an original Georgia O'Keeffe oil painting hangs askew. It's the focal point of a tribute to her that incorporates trumpets and apples — real ones — on a big, white wall.

Outside the museum, on the street corner where a Santa Fe tourmobile picks up its customers, stands a massive, granite slab. In gilded lettering, it says:

"If One Looks Down At Earth From The Moon, There Is Virtually No Distance Between The Louvre And The Zoo."

Contemporary art — big-time contemporary art — is on display this summer in this northern New Mexico tourist mecca.

For the next few months, Santa Fe is home to an international contemporary art exhibition featuring 31 established and emerging artists from 13 countries.

It already has drawn collectors, curators, critics and the just plain curious from around the world.

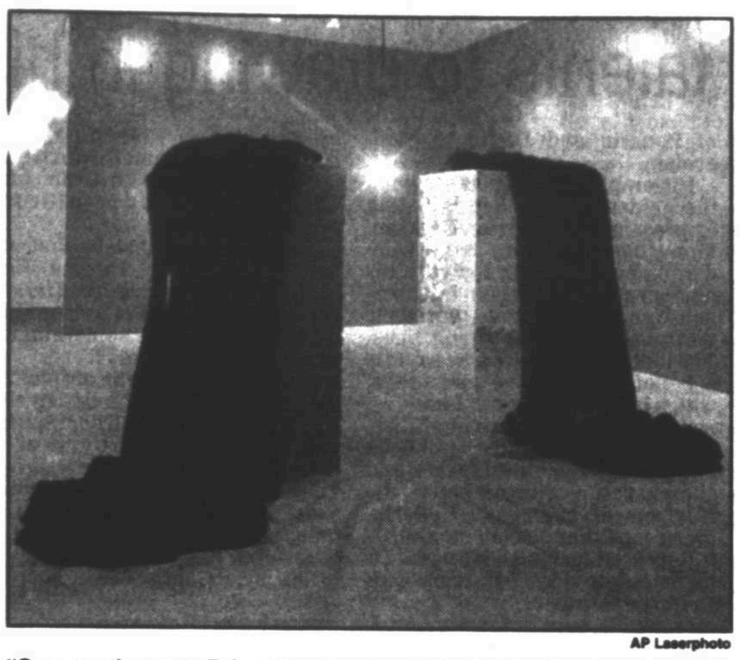

Nothing quite like it has been done in the United States, according to its organizers.

Borrowing the second part of its title from an O'Keeffe painting — which was also her salutation on letters to East Coast friends — the exhibition is called: "LONGING AND BELONGING: From the Faraway Nearby."

"The theme is about place and identity in the late 20th century — what does place mean to identity now," says Bruce Ferguson, an independent curator who put together the exhibition.

"It used to be simple. ... Today, it's a much more complicated situation, where place could be somewhere on the Internet."

The exhibition consists largely of a series of installations at two sites: a former beer warehouse in the city's railyard district, and at the state-owned Museum of Fine Arts, downtown.

"Coorperative as an Enigma" a mixed media installation by Japanese artist Chie Matsui, is inside a former beer warehouse that has been converted into an art space in Santa Fe.

Painting, sculpture, photography, film, video, performance, a symposium, a modern opera — even a lowrider car show, to accompany the opera — are part of the exhibition, which ends Oct. 8.

According to its sponsor, the nonprofit SITE Santa Fe, the exhibition provides "an opportunity to encounter issues of social and environmental change through challenging contemporary art."

Visitors may find challenging the operative word.

Consider:

■ Barbara Bloom's dark, wooden bridge spanning a large room, suspended over a red vinyl floor on which appear to float hundreds of small face masks. Midbridge, viewers can stop and look through magnifying glasses at erotic Japanese images printed on grains of rice.

■ Carlos Capelan's mud-walled, mock museum space, where glass cases enclose both prehistoric rocks and already-chewed gum.

■ Bruce Nauman's video screens featuring two mouths — bright red lips and white teeth — one upside down atop the other. The mouths are talking: identical soundtracks, but slightly out of synch with one another for five jarring minutes.

■ Rebecca Belmore's opening-day performance at the warehouse, in which she stripped naked, lay down, and was covered by her assistants from head to toe in mud and twigs.

"This is not easy art," says Stuart Ashman, acting director of the Museum of Fine Arts, which has given more than half its floor space to the privately organized exhibition. "This is not, 'Go buy it and hang it in your living room.'"

And it doesn't matter whether you like it, organizers say.

"Contemporary art is not for everybody," says John Marion, president of SITE Santa Fe and former chairman of Sotheby's North America. "It is something that opens doorways of knowledge, and makes people inquisitive, makes them think."

An art collector and part-time Santa Fe resident, Marion helped raise the more than $1 million the exhibition is expected to cost. The exhibition is entirely privately funded.

Northern New Mexico long has been a haven for artists. Georgia O'Keeffe spent 37 years here, and a room of the Museum of Fine Arts is devoted to her work.

That's where Braco Dimitrijevic, of the former Yugoslavia, installed his homage to O'Keeffe, which focuses on her 1915 oil painting, "Special No. 21 (Palo Duro Canyon)."

Ferguson suggests that Dimitrijevic's installation removes O'Keeffe's painting from its mythological status and gives it contemporary status — and perhaps serves as a tongue-in-cheek reminder that art is not to be taken too reverentially.

Despite its attraction for artists, Santa Fe's reputation in the art world is largely that of a regional center. It is best known for its native arts and crafts and for representational art with a Southwestern flavor. SITE Santa Fe organizers hope the exhibition will give the city a higher profile on the international contemporary art scene.

Photographer Cartier-Bresson turns talents to drawing in his later years

By Michael Kimmelman
N.Y. Times News Service

PARIS — France's pre-eminent artist is sharp, amusing, affectionate, generous and mischievous.

Henri Cartier-Bresson turns 87 on Tuesday. A bum knee hobbles him, but otherwise he remains a live wire who likes to say his approach to life has been shaped by Buddhism. More to the point, his wife, the photographer Martine Franck, once described him to the Dalai Lama as "a Buddhist in turbulence."

The view from his apartment, overlooking the Tuileries, takes in the Louvre to the east and the Musee d'Orsay to the south.

A century ago Monet and Pissarro painted the scene from the apartment below. These days Cartier-Bresson sometimes draws it from his balcony. "No one would care about my drawings if I weren't a famous photographer," he says. "I'm not gifted; I'm an imposter."

HE HAS HARDLY taken a photograph in over 20 years, save for the odd landscape or portrait done for pure pleasure and on the sly. He claims he doesn't even like talking about photography anymore and can turn uncharacteristically peevish if you ask him, say, whether he saw the recent exhibition of the 19th-century photographer Nadar (he didn't).

"It's like when you're divorced and people keep asking you about your former wife," he says. "There's something indecent about it."

In truth, he talks about photography a lot but fears being a broken record. Drawings are something else. His intense, even boyish enthusiasm for them is contagious, not to say remarkable in someone his age.

He draws constantly, on some days in the Louvre. This late spring day was to have been one of those occasions, but a strike has closed the museum, so he goes to Orsay, only to discover it is shut, too. He is fazed, and votes to recoup over lunch at a Chinese restaurant, then try again tomorrow.

Cartier-Bresson can be indecisive about trivial affairs like this, which may seem odd in someone best known for a book of photographs called "The Decisive Moment."

'It would take hours and hours to feel a painting ... . I don't say understand; I say feel. We always want to work with our brains, but we must be available and let our sensitivity direct us when we look at a painting ... .'

— Henri Cartier-Bresson

But he is contradictory. He says that he doesn't like interviews and over lunch insists that a tape recorder and notebook be put away. That is, until some bon mot pops into his head, and then he looks expectantly at them, his eyebrows raised as if to say, "So?"

His life story has been told many times. Born near Paris, he was the scion of a prosperous textile family so puritanically frugal that he thought he was poor. He became a rebellious young man who hunted boar and antelope in Africa before contracting blackwater fever, which nearly killed him.

Recuperating back home, he acquired a Leica and set off with the tiny camera, taking pictures that, although related to photographs by Lartigue and Kertesz and to paintings by de Chirico, were groundbreaking and original nonetheless.

HE TURNED TO cinema next, learning the ropes from Paul Strand, then assisting Jean Renoir. When the war began, he enlisted in the army. He was captured and escaped three times from German labor camps, after which he joined the Resistance. About the camps, he says only, "For a young bourgeois with Surrealist ideas, breaking stones and working in a cement factory was a very good lesson."

At the end of the war, he helped found the Magnum photo agency and spent the next 20 years on assignment, bearing witness to the great upheavals in India and China. His photographs chronicled this century's singular people and events, and they are among its most brilliant and humane testimonials.

"I AM FED up with the segregation between photo and drawing," he announces, settled into his meal. "I was never deeply interested in photography as such. I don't say drawing or painting is better than photography. I want to make people aware that beyond the use of a tool, there is a basic connection: what counts is your eye, your sensitivity and the strength of the shapes you make."

The composer and writer Nicolas Nabokov's description of Cartier-Bresson in 1936 is still apt. He recalled his "blond and pink head" and "gently mocking smile." What most astonished Nabokov were Cartier-Bresson's eyes: "like darts," he wrote, "sharp and clever, limpidly blue and infinitely agile."

Today those eyes are behind thick lenses when he draws. His hair has thinned. He is tall, with patrician bearing and manners, unostentatious in his appearance. He has a photographer's penchant for invisibility and has gone to attention-getting lengths to avoid being photographed (once shielding his face while receiving an honorary degree at Oxford University).

His anonymous attire consists of a suede jacket, cap and knapsack, the outfit, perhaps, of one of the waiters or taxi drivers or museum guards he cheerfully chats with at every opportunity.

"I call myself an artisan," he explains. "Techno-science has destroyed artisanship. Anyone with talent is potentially an artist. But then you must have concentration besides talent. Degas was right when he said something like, 'You must copy, copy before you are entitled to paint a radish from nature.' He meant you have to learn from others, from the past. Art for people today starts with Duchamp. But Conceptual thinking is like walking with your head instead of your legs. You need a sense of culture to cultivate yourself. It's the difference between writing a tract and literature."

THE LOUVRE REMAINS on strike for several days. But the Musee National d'Art Moderne at the Pompidou Center is open, and Cartier-Bresson agrees to go. He takes along his sketchbook.

"It's strange I never think of coming here," he says, then remembers a visit years ago with his daughter to the Musee d'Art Moderne de la Ville de Paris. "We saw there was an exhibition of sculpture and wanted to get in," he says, "but we were told it was only for blind people. So we went blindfolded. I couldn't recognize one sculpture from another."

A slightly surreal story, it's a reminder of his roots. In the mid-1920s, as a teen-ager, he used to go to the cafe in the place Blanche where Andre Breton met twice daily with his Surrealist compatriots.

Cartier-Bresson never became one of them exactly, but from Surrealism he developed a respect for free, iconoclastic expression, not to say a taste for revolution in politics and art. During the 1930s, he even collaborated with Renoir on a propaganda film for the French Communist Party that denounced the 200 most prominent families in France, including his own.

He didn't formally join the party, but his sympathy for the poor and downcast, so essential to his photographs, led him, like many of his generation, to embrace Communist causes.

His opinions about art turn out to be refined, his tastes eclectic: he admires early Pollock, Joan Mitchell, Ernst, some Nolde, early Leger but not late Leger.

WHAT HE LIKES is work with an edge to it, art that balances intellect with sentiment, which of course describes his own photographs. When the balance tips, he demurs. He is left cold by most Dubuffet and actually flees a room of Duchamps.

"A charming man, a dandy. But art was just a subtle game for him. Conceptualism," he reiterates, "is a dead end."

His visit takes on the air of a reunion. A Calder reminds him of a little sculpture that artist once gave him. Some Rouaults remind him that he has misplaced several letters Rouault wrote to him.

Drawings by Alberto Giacometti, to whom he was especially close, leave him nearly speechless with admiration. The nervous, searching lines of Cartier-Bresson's drawings owe an obvious, perhaps too obvious, debt to Giacometti.

"For me, Alberto's drawings are the top, top, top," Cartier-Bresson says. "If you look at the copies he did of Cezanne, of medieval sculptures and everything else, you want to stop working because they're so inquisitive, intelligent and powerful. He was a man of tremendous culture, and you see that in his copies."

He settles into a room of Bonnards, then relates a favorite anecdote about the time he photographed Bonnard. It involves the importance of intuition. "We were chatting, and mostly he was quite silent," he recalls.

"Suddenly, when I raised my camera, he put his scarf over his face. 'Too fake,' he said. So I put my camera down. Finally, I managed to take a picture and he asked, 'But why did you take it at that moment, why?' And I said, 'Excuse me, but why have you just put that yellow there?' "

Cartier-Bresson looks hard at a Bonnard from 1939-45, a luminous self-portrait of the aged painter staring in a mirror. "The modesty of it," he says admiringly. "You know, Picasso didn't like Bonnard, and I can imagine why, because Picasso had no tenderness."

He goes on. "It's a very flat explanation to say he's looking in a mirror. He's looking far, far beyond. To me Bonnard is (italics) the (end italics) great painter. Picasso was a genius, but that is something quite different. Look here: this is tremendous freedom and also discipline."

HE CONTINUES: "YOU can't have freedom without discipline. There is no such thing as complete freedom, just as nothing in the world is completely good or completely bad. Everything is relative. There must be freedom, yes, but always with a sense of form and structure behind it. This is what Andre Lhote taught me. All I know about photography I learned from Andre Lhote."

In 1927 Cartier-Bresson became Lhote's student. Lhote was an early exponent of Cubism, an admired teacher and author of pedagogical books, though a minor painter. He preached a doctrine that sought to link the French classical tradition of Poussin and David to modernism.

His emphasis on geometry and the golden section left a lasting impression on Cartier-Bresson. Many commentators have wondered about the split between his photographs, with their instantaneity, and his drawings, with their hesitant, even painstaking lines. The link between them, he says, is a belief in discipline and order, which he traces back to Lhote.

He arrives at a room of Matisses, removes a small sketchbook and pencil from his knapsack and silently settles himself before the 1917 portrait of Auguste Pellerin, the great Cezanne collector.

Balanced on his shooting stick, he begins to draw, starting with Pellerin's massive head, oval eyes and thick eyebrows, which he traces over and over, using an eraser to blur the lines. The image gradually darkens so that the face, with its pinched and catlike expression, emerges out of a shadow, much as it does in the painting.

WHILE CARTIER-BRESSON sketches, a man snaps his picture and a woman videotapes him, neither aware of who he is. He is too absorbed to notice them.

When he finishes, he says: "Goethe wrote that the best way to understand a painting was by drawing it, and he's right. How many people have been here? A dozen? More? And they don't look. They all have their cameras. But looking is meditating, and how can you meditate and look through a camera at the same time?"

He points to the portrait. "He seems to be questioning you from his grave, no? And you see how one side is much warmer than the other: the eye on the left is affirmative, definite, the other eye belongs to somebody who has been suffering, who doesn't pass judgment. He seems immobile at first, but there is nothing immobile about the picture. The little pink here, the swirls there, the touch of brown on the collar. This is real action painting. Everything is moving, contrasting. The contradictions are beautiful."

He's ready to go. But on the way out he spots a couple sitting side by side, a child resting on the man's shoulder. Though he says he's finished with photography, he occasionally makes a point of letting you know when some image catches his eye.

"A perfect composition if you cut out the woman," he says and makes a chopping gesture toward her with his hand. He is standing just a few feet away from them and they look, as you would imagine, baffled. "Why didn't I bring my camera?" he sighs, and sounds as if he means it. He stares for a second longer, clicks an imaginary shutter, then leaves.

The strike ends and Cartier-Bresson finally sets out for the Louvre. "One must go often to museums and look at a few paintings at a time," he says. "And for a long while. It shouldn't be just about identifying this or that — oh, a landscape, oh, a portrait, oh, an Ingres — and then move on." He says, "We are nourished by studying the past, though we must also be fully involved with the moment."

Nowadays he fills his sketchbooks with drawings after Old Masters. He has done a series based on works by Delacroix, Goya and others at the museum in Lille. Today he wants to draw Chardin's big still life of 1725-26, "The Ray."

TO GET TO it requires walking through many galleries of works by 17th-century French painters like Simon Vouet and Eustache Le Sueur and Charles Le Brun, and Cartier-Bresson has no patience for them.

"We just want to show that we are rich," he says. "This satisfies historians, but the public suffers." He thinks the I.M. Pei pyramid is jarring, too. "It has something of death about it," he says.

He brightens when he arrives at the gritty "Peasant Family" by the Le Nain brothers. "The figures seem to come out of a very, very distant past and say, 'Here we are.' They are so dignified. You see the same in the peasants of France today. They are profoundly rooted."

Nearby, a Georges de la Tour of Christ as a boy holding a candle that illuminates Joseph reminds him of Leger and Cubism. "The sense of volumes," he says. "It's too theatrical for me, with the candle and so on, but interesting."

'I call myself an artisan. Techno-science has destroyed artisanship. Anyone with talent is potentially an artist. But then you must have concentration besides talent.'

— Henri Cartier-Bresson

He also warms to Watteau's "Faux Pas," an image of a young man putting his arm around a reticent young woman. "He didn't have the patience to wait, huh?" Cartier-Bresson laughs. "He's like a torero."

From many of Cartier-Bresson's photographs, with their particular combination of anecdote, wry humor and affection, you can understand his attraction to Watteau. "His work is so sensuous," he says. "Pornography has killed all this, of course."

CHARDIN'S "RAY" DEPICTS a dead stingray hung to dry among pots and pans. Fish and oysters are in the foreground, sniffed at by a wiry cat. Cartier-Bresson sits in front of the picture and begins sketching the cat but soon crosses out the drawing and starts again.

It's especially hard for him to get the spatial relationships in the picture just right. He occasionally pulls out a postcard of the image, which he turns upside down to compare to the painting. "Like a camera obscura," he explains. "You can see it more clearly this way." He used to advise photographers to do something similar, a variation of what Durer recommended: look at images flipped or backwards to focus more on the geometry than on the subjects.

HE SPENDS ABOUT an hour, all told, intensely studying the Chardin: "This is a most mysterious painting. The ray seems to look up to eternity, like a Pieta. The fish and oysters and ray are dead. The cat is the only living thing. It is a picture about life and death. A spiritual painting."

Cartier-Bresson points out the work's intricate scaffolding, the way the line of a pot handle intersects with the eye of the ray, the way the leg of the cat points to the oysters.

Then he says: "It would take hours and hours to feel a painting like this. I don't say understand; I say feel." Cartier-Bresson got excited recently by an article about a neurophysician who says emotions are the foundation of reason. "We always want to work with our brains," he says, "but we must be available and let our sensitivity direct us when we look at a painting, as if we're surfing on a wave.. We must be open, open, open to what it gives us. That is the Buddhist idea."

He packs up his sketchbook. In a room of Davids, he admires the portraits, then gravitates to the Delacroixs and Gericaults. He has copied several of them before, including Gericault's pictures of the insane. He loves the fluency of the easel-sized works by these painters. Their bigger works leave him cold. "I prefer small things," he says. "That's why I like the Leica."

Gradually, his energies flag and he decides to stop. As he heads for the exit he sees an odalisque by Ingres. He pauses, drinking it in, then smiles: "Oh la la!" he says. "C'est l'invitation a la valse, non?"

The business of art films: Not for the squeamish

By Josh Young
N.Y. Times News Service

The business of buying and distributing art-house films these days has become, in practice and in product, more Quentin Tarantino and less Louis Malle.

Today's executives must be more like savvy street fighters than film scholars, and they may need to be better at spotting hits in English than reading subtitles.

The co-presidents of Sony Pictures Classics — Michael Barker, Tom Bernard and Marcie Bloom — see themselves as highly competitive, and boast about their success in distributing foreign films over the last decade, both at Orion, their former home, and at Sony.

These films include Agnieszka Holland's "Europa, Europa"; Malle's "Au Revoir les Enfants"; Stephen Frears's "My Beautiful Laundrette," which introduced Daniel Day-Lewis to American audiences; Zhang Yimou's "Raise the Red Lantern"; Akira Kurosawa's "Ran," and the Merchant-Ivory production "Howards End."

But as the market shifts from foreign-language films to English-language ones, the pressing question now is whether Sony Classics can continue to thrive. This year the company, a division of Sony Pictures Entertainment, has released such acclaimed documentaries as "Crumb"; it has put its weight behind a retrospective of nine films by the Indian director Satyajit Ray; it is the distributor of the Imax 3-D film "Wings of Courage," and it is handling Zhang Yimou's new film, "Shanghai Triad," which will open the New York Film Festival on Sept. 29.

Still, none of the Sony Classics features in English this year have found wider audiences. "Love and Human Remains," the first film in English from Denys Arcand ("Jesus of Montreal"), received strong reviews, though the box office was mixed.

"Safe," starring Julianne Moore as a woman with a mysterious illness, was more popular with film festival audiences than movie crowds. And "Living in Oblivion," a comedy directed by Tom DiCillo about low-budget film making, opened strongly in July but does not look as if it will be a crossover hit.

Sony Classics is hoping its luck will change with the Sept. 15 release of "Mute Witness." The film, about a B movie being made in Moscow, is a thriller involving a mute makeup artist whose life is endangered. It is directed by Anthony Waller, who has a background in television commercials, and has a cast of unknowns.

"Mute Witness" is the company's first risky attempt at a wider release. The film opens in five cities on about 150 screens — the most yet for a Sony Classics film — and the company hopes to play the film on a total of 1,500 screens in six weeks.

To do so, it is getting additional marketing dollars from Columbia/Tri-Star Home Video, Sony's video division.

"They have earned the right to push the envelope on projects like 'Mute Witness,' " said Alan Levine, president of Sony Pictures Entertainment. "Sure, it will require a bit of a stretch, but when they stretch within the resources the studios has, there is somewhat of a safety net."

Bernard, 43, says that he and his partners have never looked for a big splash. "In Hollywood, people don't look to be somewhere long term," Bernard said during an interview in which he and his two partners took part, in their offices in the Sony building in New York City. "They look to make noise at that moment. We have built our careers differently."

Bernard and Barker, 41, were in the art-film business long before it was in vogue. They started at United Artists Classics in 1981 and moved to Orion and founded Orion Classics in 1983.

Ms. Bloom, 38, worked as a publicity agent for several Orion Classics films from 1985 through 1989, then joined the company as a partner. The three moved to Sony in February 1992 after Orion collapsed.

Their first release at Sony was the Merchant-Ivory period film "Howards End," a multiple Oscar winner that starred Anthony Hopkins and Emma Thompson and that was the most profitable movie of the partners' careers.

They have also released the last three Oscar winners for best foreign-language film, "Indochine," a French film starring Catherine Deneuve, the Spanish comedy "Belle Epoque" and the Russian political drama "Burnt by the Sun."

Much of what competitors say about the three partners is critical, and nearly all of it is not for attribution. But Bingham Ray, a partner in the New York-based October Films, said: "They have spun a myth about themselves that the media buys into. They have had a lot of success, and they have had their share of colossal failures, too, like 'Germinal' and 'A Pure Formality.' "

Sony Classics reportedly paid more than $1 million each for "Germinal" and "A Pure Formality"; both were box-office flops. "Germinal," a 1994 French release directed by Claude Berri that was bought as a finished film, is a quasi-epic based on Zola's novel about class conflict in 19th-century France. "A Pure Formality," a French film purchased at the script stage and released in May, was directed by Giuseppe Tornatore ("Cinema Paradiso") and starred Gerard Depardieu as a writer accused of murder.

John Pierson, who was the producer's agent on the documentary "Crumb" and who has been involved with films that Sony Classics released as well as films it competed against, said: "There is nobody more competitive than Tom Bernard. He is out there pushing his films and pushing his competitors' films down."

Todd Haynes, the director of "Safe," said, "I get the feeling there isn't anything they wouldn't do for the film."

And everyone seems to agree that the company's forte has been marketing subtitled films. Tom Rothman, a competitor at Fox Searchlight Pictures, called Sony Classics "the best in the world at acquiring foreign films."

But with the subtitled-film audience shrinking and the appetite growing for more edgy English-language imports like "The Crying Game," Sony Classics has shifted its release pattern. This year, 10 of the company's 16 films (not including the Ray retrospective) are in English, compared with three of eight in 1994 and only two of eight in 1993.

In addition to its forthcoming release of "Mute Witness," the company will open "Persuasion," an English film based on Jane Austen's novel, in October.

Essentially, Sony Classics is moving from a less competitive into a more competitive business. Bernard, Barker and Ms. Bloom believe there are several reasons their techniques will work on low-budget English-language releases like "Mute Witness" and "Persuasion."

They say they are more likely to see profits because they are more cost-conscious and careful in marketing films than other distributors, and more proficient at collecting revenue owed by theater owners.

They also say that their success has sometimes convinced film makers to take less money up front from them than from their competitors. Barker says that the makers of "Howards End" and Sony's recently released "Living in Oblivion" both accepted lower offers from Sony.

An idea grows from Harlem to retrospective

By Janet Tyson
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

FORT WORTH — There are lots of ideas out there, sculptor Melvin Edwards says. And many of them come to nothing.

"But to have seen an idea grow to the extent this one has is beautiful," he says.

"This one" is the Studio Museum in Harlem, which is being celebrated in an exhibition that open this week at the Modern Art Museum of Fort Worth and runs through Oct. 1.

The Studio Museum was inaugurated in 1968 as a place for artists to work and show their art. But over the years, it has achieved international recognition, even as it continues to nurture artists and maintain close connections with its immediate, urban community.

When Edwards first heard about the museum, it was an idea being discussed by supporters of Harlem's cultural heritage. He lived in Los Angeles at the time.

A year later, Edwards moved to New York and found himself attending the museum's opening. Shortly thereafter, his work was included in a four-person show there, organized by William T. Williams, founder of the museum's artist-in-residence program.

"At first, the museum had only one large loft-room," Edwards says. "With our show, we opened the second loft-room. We painted it and installed the show. The museum was sort of an alternative space then, one of the blossoms of the (National Endowment of the Arts) efforts.

"Now it's an accredited institution that is concerned with the world. It's just that that world starts at 144 W. 125th St."

"The Studio Museum in Harlem: 25 Years of African-American Art" is an exhibit that speaks eloquently of the desire for personal communication through art ... and of the significance and complexity of work by artists of African descent.

The first show to present a significant number of works from the museum's collection, it features a lively selection of paintings, sculpture and works on paper, made by some 40 contemporary artists during the museum's first 25 years of existence.

> 'What the collection shows more than anything is that black artists have been deeply engaged in dialogue about American art, that their work is part of the dynamic of American art and crucial to the discussion of what American art is.'

> — Kinshasa Holman Conwill
> Museum Director

The Modern Art Museum of Fort Worth is one of 12 venues for the exhibition's three-year national tour.

"If nothing else," Studio Museum Director Kinshasha Holman Conwill says, "I hope this exhibition lays to rest the notion there is any one thing called black art, and that black artists are anything less than major contributors to what art in America is today."

Collecting art, however, was not part of the museum's originally stated mission. It only began acquiring works in 1979, primarily through the solicitation of gifts.

Today, it owns more than 1,500 artworks, divided into three categories:

- Traditional African sculpture and artifacts.
- 20th-century African and Caribbean paintings, sculptures and mixed-media works.
- 20th-century African-American paintings, sculpture, photographs, prints, drawings and installation works, from which the current exhibit is taken.

The 1990s have been designated the Studio Museum's decade of collecting and, as part of its 25th anniversary, works by several major artists, among them Romare Bearden, Elizabeth Catlett, Sam Gilliam and Howardena Pindell, were added to the museum's holdings.

Other institutions that have opened since the Studio Museum's debut may be more dedicated to history or general culture, Conwill notes.

But that means the Studio Museum can focus on its mission as an art museum and as publisher of the principal literature in its field, as well as a major presenter of educational programs and a prime resource for scholars.

It also has become the principal training ground for museum professionals addressing black art.

But at the heart of it all are artists.

"What the collection shows more than anything is that black artists have been deeply engaged in dialogue about American art, that their work is part of the dynamic of American art and crucial to the discussion of what American art is," Conwill says.

In that light, the exhibit is an introduction to ideas that will be developed more fully within the next three to five years, says Michael Auping, the Modern's senior curator.

"This exhibition is a sort of opening statement, part of a larger program that will expose our audience to as wide a range of contemporary thinking as possible," he says. "I'm hoping it opens up a discussion about the nature of African-American art: What does it look like? What forms does it come in? What thoughts does it evoke? How does it relate to other forms of American art?

"At the same time, this show isn't going to provide any hard-and-fast answers. This issue of ethnicity and art is very complex, and the only way to begin to deal with it is to put it on the walls, look at it and discuss it."

Without limiting viewers' perceptions, it can be said that many of the works in "25 Years of African-American Art" blend an awareness of mainstream trends with such traditional Afro-centric concerns as being part of community life.

For example, Williams' painting "Trane" (1969) shares characteristics with works of the same era by Frank Stella and other mainstream abstractionists, who dwelt strictly on the flatness of the canvas and other such physical concerns of painting.

In contrast, Williams' work, over the course of his career, reflects as well the dynamic tensions of urban life, the atmosphere of the church he attended as a boy in North Carolina and other kinds of personal experience.

Edwards is another example of an artist who has brought a personal, expressive dimension to art for art's sake, Conwill says.

"In terms of metal sculpture in this country, he shows how a material that was engaged abstractly and with little emotional or historical weight is capable of expressing history, memory, violence, poignancy," she says.

Still another example is Los Angeles artist Betye Saar. A late-20th-century pioneer of artworks made from found objects, Saar brings to her work a wide range of cultural influences: African, European, Asian and Latin American.

Saar's association with the Studio Museum began with group exhibitions in the 1970s, when venues for emerging black artists were almost non-existent.

"The Studio Museum in Harlem was like a beacon for those of us who were striving to bring our work up to a museum level of quality," Saar says.

An idea, a beacon, a showcase, a celebration.

"If I could impart any one idea to exhibition visitors in Texas," Williams says, "it would be that the Studio Museum is a celebration of the hopes, dreams and aspirations of many people."

In music, though, there were no victories

By Alex Ross
N.Y. Times News Service

BERLIN, Germany — When Thomas Mann set about writing the novel that would encompass the limitless catastrophe of World War II, he made a curious decision.

"Doktor Faustus," his apocalyptic narrative of Germany's spiritual collapse, would have as its central character no demagogue or commandant. Instead, the protagonist would be a composer, a rather obscure composer of esoteric inclinations, a radical experimenter at the edges of musical possibility, a man outside the crowd.

When Hitler takes power, the fictional music of Adrian Leverkuhn is banned and forgotten; the composer dies insane as the war begins.

It is, however, this isolated artist who signs his soul to an ambiguous devil and comes to represent, in Mann's crushingly heavy allegory, the damnation of the German soul.

The argument is simplistic but impressive: German music, which had sought sublimity, transcendence, disengagement from the ordinary world, must bear responsibility for what happened down below as it roamed through higher realms.

Mann hinted further that this very "musicality of soul" was the key to Germany's fall; the esthetic had triumphed over the merely human. In Nazi Germany, music became either a weapon of hate or an opiate of indifference.

In the war that ended 50 years ago, music lost on all sides. Classical composers, who had achieved a substantial degree of social influence at the turn of the century, failed miserably to have any effect or even make a plausible comment on the terrors accumulating around them.

Protests fell short; triumph sounded hollow. Greatly gifted Jewish composers died in Nazi concentration camps; German composers fled to exile, fell silent or compromised themselves, and many of the victors and survivors retreated en masse into intellectual obscurity, trying with mixed success to confront the war's cultural, social and spiritual aftermath.

This summer, war dominated the programming of many European festivals: an "Apocalypse" theme in Dresden, "Art and Resistance" at the Holland Festival, musical victims of the Holocaust in Lucerne, Prague and Berlin.

Record labels have released dozens of disks commemorating those persecuted by the Nazi regime. The fashionableness of the theme should not distract from the seriousness of the issue. While the opera houses of Dresden and other cities have risen from the rubble, music is still deeply haunted by the war, and it will never be as it was.

Dresden, the great German cultural center destroyed as retribution for German crimes, confronted the war most intensely at its festival in May. An introductory essay by Michael Hampe, the festival director, quoted the final sentences of "Doktor Faustus": "Clung round by demons, a hand over one eye, with the other staring into horrors, Germany flings down from despair to despair. When will she reach the bottom of the abyss? When, out of utmost hopelessness — a miracle beyond the power of belief — will the light of hope dawn?" There is one more sentence, although Hampe omitted it: "A lonely man folds his hands and speaks: 'God be merciful to thy poor soul, my friend and Fatherland!' "

Today there is a widespread feeling in Germany that the country need no longer cry for mercy; the "light of hope" burns bright. Many believe that Germany's moral debts have been paid, that the country can again show its face as a world power — as Mann said it never could.

Although Adolf Hitler received vast public adoration and 37 percent of the vote, Germany's unconditional surrender in 1945 is now generally referred to as the "Befreiung," the liberation, as if from occupying forces.

The pressing question on the musical side is whether German composers who did not go into exile can now be seen as error-prone human actors rather than as demons in league with the devil. Two figures, Richard Strauss and Carl Orff, invariably spring up in this context. In this Orff centenary year, "Carmina Burana" was heard in Dresden and then played no fewer than four times in one week in Orff's home city of Munich. Strauss's "Friedenstag" — "Day of Peace" — appeared in Dresden and Vienna.

Strauss and Orff both collaborated with the Nazis, at least early on. Strauss was appointed president of the Reich Music Chamber in 1933; he was asked to resign two years later after failing to cut ties with his Jewish librettist, Stefan Zweig.

The aging, melancholy Strauss never wrote anything of real use to Hitler, although "Friedenstag," a one-act opera dramatizing the final day of the Thirty Years' War, has been interpreted as an argument for Austria's peaceful acquiescence in the greater German good.

The completely unscrupulous Orff accepted a commission to write a replacement score for Mendelssohn's verboten "Midsummer Night's Dream," one of the shabbiest acts in musical history.

These strangely congruent works — "Friedenstag" is Strauss's worst composition, "Carmina Burana" Orff's best — provoked a certain amount of historical-minded discussion in Dresden and elsewhere. More often they were cast in an innocent contemporary light.

In one press report, the bland, dutiful anthem of peace at the end of "Friedenstag" was found to resonate humanely not only with the tragedy of the Holocaust but also with atrocities in Bosnia. "Carmina Burana," heard in open-air arenas across Germany, proved as adept as ever at rousing primitive, unreflective enthusiasm.

But it is unwise to look for too much sinister meaning here. Strauss and Orff were cultivated by the Nazi regime not because they had exceptional sympathies with Nazi ideology but because they had a self-evident power to affect broad audiences. Their surrender to Nazi overtures is an ineradicable stain on the biography of each; but the music itself commits no sins simply by being and remaining popular.

That "Carmina Burana" has appeared in hundreds of films and television commercials is proof that it contains no diabolical message, indeed that it contains no message whatsoever.

What is the measuring stick for righteousness in this time? Who acted justly? Witness a work written on the other side, the right side: Shostakovich's "Leningrad" Symphony, which traveled by plane to Toscanini for its American premiere and came to symbolize to an enormous Western audience the entire Allied struggle against Nazi military might.

The composer appeared on the cover of Time magazine wearing a firefighter's helmet; Wendell Willkie, the former presidential candidate, returned from Russian visit and summed up the Soviet Rjalf of the struggle with the words "Shostakovich is a great composer."

The ironies are thunderous. Shostakovich was himself in thrall to a genocidal dictator who demanded musical triumphalism as a matter of course. When Shostakovich declined to deliver more bombast after the war — his much-anticipated Ninth Symphony was a suite of satiric sketches — he fell once again into potentially fatal official eclipse.

In recent years the "Leningrad" has actually been interpreted not as a defiance of Hitler but as a secret protest against Stalin. Nothing illustrates more clearly the malleability of musical meaning. Beethoven, it might be mentioned, served as a wartime propaganda tool to Hitler, Stalin and Churchill all at once.

The most agonizing example of music's helplessness was the fate of the artistic community in Theresienstadt, a Gestapo prison in Czechoslovakia that was enlarged to form a Jewish ghetto in 1941. It is a terrifying place, the more terrifying if one studies the painstaking history of SS operations assembled in the town's Jewish Museum. (The state-run museum at the prison makes little mention of Jews.)

Reinhard Heydrich, one of the devisers of the Final Solution, conceived of Theresienstadt as a "transit ghetto" for Jews on their way to the death camps. He also had the idea of assembling artists in the ghetto and employing them as a propaganda tool to convince Red Cross delegations that Jews were being treated well.

Some of the most talented younger Czech composers arrived in Theresienstadt and were allowed to continue their work. A film was made, "The Fuhrer Presents the Jews With a City," in which the ghetto residents appear to engage in happy labor. (In a documentary shown at the Holland Festival, survivors commented on that film, pointing out traces of the suffering that had been artfully concealed.)

The film shows Karel Ancerl conducting Pavel Haas's Study for Strings. The music's forceful fugal motion speaks of a defiant spirit. But this astounding vigor is diabolically twisted around for propaganda purposes: the music communicates an illusion of Jewish safety. Haas died a month later in Auschwitz.

Music is adept at the larger, vaguer emotions, like joy and despair. Joy or despair at what, the listener decides; anything more particular, such as political protest, usually falls outside the composer's reach.

Perhaps the most moving musical document of the war is Strauss's 1945 elegy "Metamorphosen," which glides down from despair to despair and ends with a quotation from Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, the "Funeral March." It was inspired more by the destruction of opera houses than the destruction of human beings. But its message of deepest sorrow cannot be misheard.

"Composing has become too difficult, devilishly difficult," the Devil tells Leverkuhn in "Doktor Faustus." It was partly in reaction to the easy triumphalism of the victory years that composers turned against any hint of a public, affirmative, tonally based style.

The rapidity with which 12-tone and Serialist modes of composition took hold in the late 1940s has much to do with a deepening sense of horror at the larger consequences of the war, particularly the Holocaust.

No single tyrant had been conquered, as Schoenberg weakly implied in his "Ode to Napoleon"; sensations of universal guilt and existential despair helped push music toward an esthetic of purposeful difficulty.

One of the musical sages of the postwar era was the philosopher and critic Theodor Adorno, who, as it happens, had advised Mann on musical aspects of "Doktor Faustus" and helped shape the portrait of anguished compositional complexity contained in that book.

It was Adorno who most forcefully articulated the idea that music must isolate itself from a culture capable of mass destruction. Bourgeois mass culture, he notoriously argued, had become a mirror image of the Nazi engine of mass destruction. This was a farfetched notion, but it caught the fancy of many European composers of the time, particularly in Germany.

So it was that Bernd Alois Zimmermann, one of the few major voices to emerge in German music after the war, ironically juxtaposed Beethoven's "Ode to Joy," the Beatles' "Hey Jude" and a speech by Josef Goebbels at the climax of his overpowering orchestral, choral and electronic-tape epic "Requiem for a Young Poet."

Twenty-five years after his death, Zimmermann's works have gained considerable currency: the "Requiem" is to be heard at the festivals of Salzburg and Edinburgh, and Willy Decker's new production of the antiwar opera "Die Soldaten" palpably stunned its audience in Dresden.

Zimmermann's vision of a world ringed round by disaster is impressively realized in musical terms. He creates a tumult of genres, styles and historical quotations, superimposing the whole chaos on a rigorous atonal 12-tone framework. But his esthetic of total catastrophe is ultimately unsatisfying as a response to the singular crime of Nazism.

It does not make distinctions: the Holocaust cannot be lumped together with Soviet actions in Eastern Europe, 1968 student protests and other political talking points of the day. The "Requiem" has an air of fashionable leftist paranoia about it, although Zimmermann's anguished suicide six months after the premiere showed he was in dead earnest.

A less talented exponent of multitextured disaster music was Krzysztof Penderecki, who released a "Dies Irae" subtitled "Auschwitz Oratorio" after making a name for himself with the "Threnody for the Victims of Hiroshima."

There is an unfortunate tendency for composers seeking ultimate gravity to adorn their work with the inexpressible. Penderecki's vocabulary of air-raid sirens, eerie choral chanting and aleatoric orchestral free-for-alls fulfilled its destiny as a cliche of horror film scores almost overnight.

When Benjamin Britten set about composing his war memorial in 1961, he had the advantage of unimpeachable personal involvement in his subject; the focus of his "War Requiem," a synthesis of Latin texts and antiwar poems by Wilfred Owen, was to be the urgency of peace, and his lifelong commitment to pacifism put him in good stead.

Britten's approachable style defied prevailing fashion; he summoned the gnashing destructive forces of his "Dies Irae" in tones strongly reminiscent of Verdi, raising them to a high pitch of intensity through a characteristic distortion of simple tonality.

The "War Requiem" culminates in a scene of intimate reconciliation between an English and a German soldier after death; it has therefore inevitably proved popular in the summer of war commemorations, particularly in German cities.

It is at this point that something rings false. A work so steeped in the philosophy of pacifism is sadly inappropriate to the circumstances of World War II, in which Adolf Hitler nearly conquered Europe by playing virtuosically on the passive temperament of Western democracies. The closing words, "Let us sleep now," are an empty reassurance, whether in 1962 or 1995.

Britten delivered a more private and powerful message immediately after the war's end. He wrote "Holy Sonnets of John Donne" after he saw Dachau; the last song in the cycle, "Death Be Not Proud," ends with a furious plain cadence in B major and a long-drawn-out cry of "Death, thou shalt die." It is a greater protest than the whole public and correct statement of the "War Requiem."

As Hannah Arendt wrote in "Eichmann in Jerusalem," the only truthful reply to the ultimate horrors of Nazism is unforgiving rage.

"I find that it is not to be," says Adrian Leverkuhn to his friend and biographer Zeitblom. "The good and the noble, what we call the human, although it is good, and noble. What human beings have fought for and stormed citadels, what the ecstatics exultantly announced — that is not to be. It will be taken back. I will take it back."

The composer's friend asks: "I don't quite understand, dear man. What will you take back?" "The Ninth Symphony," he answers.

Ostensibly, the composer in "Doktor Faustus" represents Germany's moral collapse; but he is also a perversely moralistic figure who finds sincere expression for his hopeless predicament.

His works are not Orff-like celebrations of collective vigor, nor are they purely cerebral constructions. In one of the stranger phenomena of music history, Leverkuhn has himself become a figure of importance in postwar composition. Zimmermann seems to echo his methodology in "Requiem for a Young Poet" with his pluralistic approach and his travesty of Beethoven's Ninth.

Britten, upon whom Mann modeled Leverkuhn's poetic settings, responded to the novel indirectly in his last opera, "Death in Venice." Gyorgy Ligeti and Sir Peter Maxwell Davies also seem to have drawn inspiration from the nonexistent composer.

Other resemblances are manifold: a recourse to medieval elements and Monteverdi's madrigal style; a ballet scene of satiric intent; the use of amplification and loudspeakers; the construction of musical motifs out of cryptic alphabetic codes.

Music cannot heal the world; the most it can do is heal itself. Time passes, and composers try to make of their own time something durable. During World War II, there was a concerted attempt to destroy music; the only response can be to make more music, make new music. The rest, in Hamlet's words, is silence.

Pipeline option

Longhorn Partners Pipeline has secured an option to purchase 412 acres of land near El Paso. The land owned by Texas Pacific Land Trust is located on Montana Road near the junction of Highway 659. The land will be used as a site for a pipeline terminal facility, truck loading rack and interconnect point with other pipelines.

Longhorn Partners is a partnership between Axis Gas Corp., a privately-held company in Dallas, and the Beacon Energy Investment Fund in New York to construct and operate a products pipeline from Baytown to El Paso. The company has proposed to reverse a crude oil pipeline from Baytown to Crane Texas and to build a new pipeline from Crane to El Paso.

Rig count steady

Drilling activity was steady for the week ended August 11, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

The Permian Basin rig count fell one rig to 118, and is above the year-ago count of 104.

Nationally, the rig count recovered the previous week's loss, rising seven rigs to 739 for the week. A year ago the count was 753.

Prices strengthen

Oil prices began the week on a sour note amid reports Saddam Hussein may lose power in Iraq, making way for Iraqi oil to return to a crowded world market.

Crude futures moved higher on the New York Mercantile Exchange later in the week, however, boosted by rising gasoline prices and developments in the Persian Gulf. West Texas Intermediate closed at $17.66 a barrel late in the week. The posted price was $16.25 a barrel.

West Texas Safety Center standardizes safety training

■ Safety Training Center aims to standardize training in Permian Basin.

■ College courses/4G

By Ellen Hopkins

West Texas Safety Training Center (WTSTC) has grown to over 200 members since opening its doors 18 months ago, and must be doing something right if OSHA sends some of its new compliance officers there for training.

With its facility on I-20 between Odessa and Midland, and with its traveling training program, the Center's goals include addressing the requirements of OSHA 29 CFR 1910 and 1926, documentation of completed training, and information sharing of safety literature, safe work practices and OSHA regulations.

The Center is attempting to standardize safety training throughout the Permian Basin and provide a quality, economic means for all businesses to achieve OSHA compliance.

The Texas Employment Commission has estimated that nearly 175,000 employees work in the 17 counties of West Texas, with 60 percent of them in the Midland/Odessa area. Many of these employees need initial and refresher training in safety and environmental issues. The Center's volunteer Board of Directors and Advisory Steering Committee represent many of these employees from all facets of the oil industry as well as the maintenance, service and construction fields.

Employees who successfully complete their first course at WTSTC are issued a laminated plastic, photo ID card indicating course completion and date. The card provides supervisors an on-site means to verify that employees have the requisite training.

Subsequent courses and dates are added to the card and the employee's permanent training records are kept

THE NEXT BATTLE LINE

Freshwater spills from a drill pipe connection. Brine water used in drilling and produced water could become the next environmental battleground for contractors and producers, when new regulations are written.

Saltwater regulations may be new cause for concern

■ Experts warn operators to brace for more saltwater regulations.

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

For operators wondering where the next battle lines will be drawn in the environmental war there is one word of warning — "saltwater."

According to industry sources, regulation in this area could intensify in coming months as regulators begin to pin down what levels they want to cover with rules.

"Regulators want saltwater spills cleaned up now, but they still haven't determined at what levels," said John Buster, an environmental consultant. Saltwater kills vegetation, but at issue is what level of chlorine in produced water and drilling brines does the most damage to vegetation. Almost all plant species will grow at concentrations under 2500 parts of chloride per million, but above that some plants begin to have problems. About the only thing cheap about a salt spill is the soil test which runs about $10 compared to $50 for oil.

Because of its ability to kill vegetation and because it is harder to clean up than oil, Buster says most of the complaints to date about saltwater spills and containment have come from landowners. Spills of five barrels are now routinely cleaned up and

HIGH COST OF COMPLIANCE

A never ending process

By Ellen Hopkins

While well servicing and drilling contractors are unanimously behind the safety programs spurred by OSHA and indicate they have seen measurable results in lower incident rates, but environmental compliance is another matter. It is always costly and in many cases unneeded say contractors who are feeling the pinch of over-regulation.

Safety compliance is generally accompanied by the warning of advance legislation and regulation and contractors can prepare for it. Environmental compliance, on the other hand, may or may not come with a warning label as some contractors have quite suddenly discovered.

Over-regulation costs industry jobs and money

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

Restrictive environmental regulation threatens the economic lifeblood of America, says Carl Giardini, Marathon executive vice president for exploration and production.

In an opinion piece authored by Giardini, he notes that the U.S. economy is 97 percent dependent on oil and gas for its transportation needs and two-thirds of its total domestic energy needs, and that supplies must grow if the nation is to sustain economic growth.

Said Giardini: "While our industry stands ready and able to facilitate this growth with new supplies, we are increasingly restrained from doing so by prescriptive environmental regulations. We are not against environmental regulations tailored to specific state and local needs, but we are opposed to those regulations with little or no environmental payoff. Our ability to provide cheap energy to a competitive U.S. economy is being squandered by misguided restrictions on our upstream activity."

Giardini

He said that the bottom line was more bureaucratic red tape meant less domestic oil and gas and fewer jobs, citing an American Petroleum Institute (API) study, which concluded pending regulatory requirements could cost the industry 64,000 jobs. Over 19,000 jobs would be lost in exploration and production, and another 35,000 in oilfield services.

"Worse of all," says Giardini, "this loss of jobs would be accompanied by little or no environmental benefit to the country or the community."

The Marathon executive lists several solutions to the growing problem of over-regulation:

First, he says the federal government should reconsider the imposition of new regulations on the petroleum and exploration industry that do not produce commensurate benefit. He gave as an example new regulations under the National Emission Standard for Hazardous Air Pollutants that would place stringent controls on thousands of remote oil and gas production facilities throughout the nation. "Most of these are in rural areas where there is little impact or risk to the public or the environment," he informed.

Second, he says government should reexamine proposed massive new reporting and monitoring requirements which would not improve air or water quality, but would only result in a new level of administrative gymnastics.

Giardini said the EPA should incorporate risk assessment, cost benefit analysis and sound, peer-reviewed scientific principals in setting regulatory priorities.

He said unless the new regulations were checked by Congress, they would help push oil imports from their current 50 percent to 60 percent by the end of the decade. Further, the additional imports would cost $2.3 billion per year and result, over the next 15 years, in a loss of $1.6 billion per year from lower taxes and loss of royalty payments.

Giardini, who is Chairman of American Petroleum Institute's General Committee on Exploration and Production, noted that the oil and gas industry already spends $1.5 billion or roughly one-quarter of the EPA budget on environmental protection, and that the industry was continually making changes to its operating practices to enhance public health.

He said there was a historic shift taking place in Washington and all Americans should make their concerns known to their congressman. "It is incumbent upon all of us to impress upon our elected officials the need for regulatory reform."

SUBJECT: EARNED REDUCTION IN ROYALTY RATE-
88TH OIL AND GAS LEASE SALE - NOVEMBER 14, 1995

The Board for Lease of University Lands has approved lease provisions pertaining to the 88th Oil and Gas Lease Sale, providing for an opportunity to earn reductions in the standard required royalty. The following explanations related to the earned royalty reduction rates are provided for your information:

20%: The 25% royalty will be reduced to 20% if production of oil or gas in paying quantities is established within the first eighteen (18) months of the lease term. (This validates the 20% royalty rate for the entire lease and for the life of the lease.).

22.5%: The 25% royalty will be reduced to 22.5% if production of oil or gas in paying quantities is established within the second eighteen (18) months (19th-36th month) of the lease. (This validates the 22.5% royalty rate for the entire lease and for the life of the lease.)

25%: The 25% royalty will be in effect for leases where production of oil or gas in paying quantities is established after the 36th month of the lease term, OR after the expiration of a valid dry hole extension for the second eighteen (18) months.

A dry hole and extension provision will also be in effect for royalty considerations. If one or more dry holes are completed on the lease, the following royalties can still be earned:

20%: If an additional well or wells are commenced within the first eighteen (18) months, and by virtue of a 90-day extension, if needed, the production of oil or gas in paying quantities is obtained on the leased premises within the 90-day extension.

22.5% If an additional well or wells are commenced within the second eighteen (18) months (19th-36th month), and by virtue of a 90-day extension, if needed, the production of oil or gas in paying quantities is obtained on the leased premises within the 90-day extension.

Community colleges offer OSHA courses

■ Midland, Odessa college courses keep OSHA training in area.

By Melia McEwen
Staff Writer

Midland College's two-year-old environmental studies program is expanding with the addition of two new courses, both of which were not previously available in this area.

This fall, MC will offer anew credit course for people who want training in Occupational and Health Administration (OSHA) standards.

The second course, to be offered in the spring, will address the state and federal regulation/compliance issues including Hazardous Material Training (Hazmat), Hazcom or the "Employee Right to Know" regulation and Hazardous Waste Operations and Emergency Response (Hazwoper) training/certification.

The Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board approved these "special topics" courses to be added to the MC curriculum so that the college can offer new and/or emerging environmental topics related to the oil and gas industry, according to Fred Wetendorf, environmental technology instructor.

"What Midland College recognized is the curriculum was designed to bring to industry a technical person knowledgeable of everything from rules and regulations to the actual course work," he said. "The course work was defined with help from the oil and gas industry. Conoco was instrumental in the design, as were Bruno Hanson, Harry Spannaus and other members of the advisory committee."

He added that the two new courses were the result of growth within the environmental studies program.

"We recognized a real need within the program for basic OSHA training and the next level of OSHA guidance, which is hazardous waste, hazardous communications and hazardous materials. If you look at the job opportunities available, they frequently specify OSHA training."

Andy Price, the course instructor and district manager for Callaway Safety and Environmental, said that "A number of students have taken jobs in this area. The college's environmental program is strong but we needed Hazwoper training - the practical end; people were having to leave the area for the training. Now we can keep them here and work with the companies here and also bring in companies from out of the area."

He noted that "A large percentage of people have made career changes - they're still in the oil and gas industry, they've gone from different areas to the environmental area."

Citing his own experience, earning his associates degree from Midland College and gong on to graduate from Texas A&M's Occupational and Safety training program, Price noted that "A lot of companies hire people like myself who are trained in these areas, to try to voluntarily comply with laws. The Texas Natural Resources Conservation Commission, the Environmental Protection Agency and OSHA don't have enough staff to go around and check on compliance. We're seeing in this area and around the country, companies are having to educate themselves in this field. Companies will pay for this training. This is a field where the student can take his training and turn it into a paycheck."

The OSHA training course (ENVT 2399) is a three-credit hour course for students who are enrolled in the Associate of Applied Science Degree in Environmental Studies and/or in the 32-hour certificate program in Environmental Technology. It will be offered from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Saturdays. Registration is open until the first day of class; late registration is also available.

Price said the course will give the student a good general overview of OSHA standards and guidelines. The Hazwoper course will actually offer five different levels of Hazwoper training.

Also, persons not pursing an Environmental Technology degree but who are interested in learning more about OSHA workplace standards of those who are required to have updated OSHA training are welcome to enroll in the course.

"There is a requirement under OSHA that employees have to be recertified in a certain amount of time, and we want to do both - we want to train the workers in the college credit courses, and we want to offer refresher or recertification training on the continuing education side," Wetendorf said.

Keeping up with changes in environmental regulations will keep the faculty busy, Wetendorf said.

"All the EPA laws and their associated subtitles - air emissions, for example - these statutes are reviews every two to five years and if new standards are set, new regulatory language is written to take into consideration these additions or deletions. It's like the IRS and changes in the tax code. We as a teaching facility must be able to incorporate into our material those changes in regulations. We strive to anticipate what is changing, what applications are emerging. We keep very busy keeping up with all the trends."

Wetendorf is hopeful the program will also receive approval from the EPA, which is reviewing course materials.

Odessa College has scheduled its petroleum technology classes as well. Evening classes include "Petroleum Overview"; "Rotary Drilling Fluids"; "Natural Gas Overview"; "Computers for Petroleum"; "Refining Methods"; "Industrial Safety"; "Petroleum Instrumentation"; "Hazardous Waste Operations"; "Drilling Methods"; "Well Stimulation Methods" and "Environmental Issues."

SALT WATER: More regulations expected

saltwater left in pits has to be hauled off for disposal. One of the most potentially damaging spills is a leak in a saltwater pipeline, under a farm.

Unlike oil spills which can be remediated with microbes, salt must be removed physically before reseeding can begin. Often that requires flushing it down below the root level, using a chemical treatment of calcium nitrate or calcium sulfate. Gypsum has been used by farmers for over 100 years to clean up salt damage.

In theory, the sodium chloride attaches to the soil particles and inhibits a plant's ability to absorb nutrients. To remedy the problem a chemical is used that will temporarily knock the sodium particles off the soil and allow them to be flushed down into the soil where they will reattach to deeper soil particles that will prevent them from going into the water table.

After the salt has been removed from the root system the area is reseeded with a mixture of native and salt-resistant grasses. The average total cost for a 25-30 barrel saltwater spill is estimated, by Buster, at $2,000 to $3,000. But the concentration of salt and cost of chemicals can drive the cost higher.

"In the future I think we will see more and more of the spills and clean-ups involving saltwater, especially once rules have been formalized." said Buster. "Present rules for oil clean-up are very clear, but not for saltwater. The industry would probably be better off without the rules, if it just cleaned up damage properly, without any direction from a bureaucracy, but I don't think it will happen."

He said the industry could become straddled with costly standardized rules that would apply everywhere and not make sense in a lot of cases.

"For instance, in the Ozona area where there is not much vegetation, a saltwater spill might only involve mapping up several inches of saltwater off the top of rocks — or doing nothing."

Whatever saltwater clean-up is done now, Buster says oil companies should keep comprehensive documents.

CENTER: Can simplify compliance, ease paperwork burden on file. OSHA conducts periodic training audits of companies with more than 50 employees, so WTSTC keeps each member's documented training on file.

The facility's course curriculum offers training in every area of safety/environment from H2S to Hazwoper and including PSM (Process, Safety, Management) requirements, fire and rescue courses, forklift safety, fall prevention, OSHA, and first aid/CPR/bloodborne pathogens, among others.

Carl Thunem, safety coordinator for Parker & Parsley and one of the initiators of the Center, said the WTSTC was patterned after a similar facility in Houston. Other coordinated training centers around the state have found it advantageous to standardize training such that new employees have documented certification no matter where they work. Employers are assured that job applicants are as trained as they claim to be.

He said reciprocity among these Texas training centers is currently under discussion so companies with employees in more than one location can have standardized training. It assures them that employees who transfer from one locale to another, i.e. from RefChem in Odessa to Texas City, have taken the same training courses.

He added that there are 27 such centers in the U.S. and organizations like the National Petroleum Refiners Association (NPRA), for example, are looking for similar ways to improve the consistency and quality of training for refinery employees on a state, regional and national level. NPRA's interest stems from a need for qualified training in the current market and layoff roller-coaster.

Thunem said many of the major employers in the Permian Basin have had in-house training available, but that a number of them are looking to outsource this training. He said that's where WTSTC can lessen the burden of training and paperwork compliance.

Tony Logsdon, executive director of WTSTC, said that by using WTSTC instead of conducting all their own training, employers' safety staffs can concentrate on auditing work practices and other aspects of OSHA compliance.

He said in addition to the Center's location on I-20, a satellite facility courtesy of Ackerly Trucking has been set up in Big Spring. Logsdon is also pursuing a locale in Jal, NM. He added that the Center takes to the road providing onsite training courses on request.

For example, different refineries have varied layouts, so Logsdon said emergency response training is more effective if it is taught onsite.

Site-specific training provides employees a means to learn the refinery's particular alarm system and where to go for evacuation. Logsdon said WTSTC is also able to develop training from scratch using a contractor's materials.

He said hands-on training is an important part of the curriculum, and as such the WTSTC's course in handling a fire extinguisher requires participants to put out a small fire.

Like fire safety, much of the training learned at the Center, such as first aid, CPR and fall prevention, is applicable at home.

OSHA requirements for fall protection devices are gradually being implemented and will take full effect in 1998. Anyone climbing over six feet high will be required to wear a device to prevent falling.

Various fall protection devices have been designed for a rig's derrick man, one style resembling a paratrooper-type body harness. Thunem said the biggest design obstacle has been not restricting the derrick man's mobility, however, fears that the derrick man will get caught up in the superstructure are blown out of proportion.

He compared it to wearing a seat belt in that 99 times out of 100 the seat belt will save your life and not impede your exit in case of fire or the potential for drowning.

It was from OSHA's interest and questions about specific aspects of oil and gas operations that first prompted interest in a local standardized training center.

Logsdon said the idea originated because OSHA used to call the industry's major employers, like Parker & Parsley, and inquire about particular oil field details such as how to load and unload pipe stands. Thunem said it got him thinking about the inconsistencies of the training available from one employer to another.

He said that even though other training sources have been available locally for some time, WTSTC's audience is different from Odessa and Midland Colleges. The Center's training courses are primarily taken by field workers in various industries while the colleges attract a lot of insurance, managerial administrators and staff positions. The private, for-profit training schools tend to overlap the audience and Thunem said there is plenty of potential audience for all involved.

He said although training schedules and locations are flexible, and costs are competitive with the local colleges, course fees are discounted further for members.

Members are kept apprised of the latest in OSHA regulations such as the fall protection device and the hazard audit -- a formal hazard assessment to assure a company has all the correct PPE (Personal Protective Equipment) and that it is being used properly.

Logsdon said significant to all industries is the certification of forklift operators which is in final

COST: Many firms feel costs unjustified

(From 1G)

Quality Control Commission. About six months ago they came to Cobra's yard in Hobbs and asked some expensive questions.

"They wanted to conduct a yard site assessment in our plant yard and wanted us to pay $1,380 for the assessment and another $50 to file it," said McDermott.

Along with the assessment, the Commission asked for a rainwater runoff plan and inquired about bioremediation in the caliche-based area where Cobra's rigs are parked.

"We also manufacture tanks here, so the Commission wanted us to drill monitor wells under the wash bay, haul off our metal scrap pile, and wanted to declare our sump hazardous waste," he said.

"As it turned out we spent a lot of time discussing all these issues and didn't have to drill the monitor wells or do the bioremediation," he said. "But we have to completely drain and steam out our concrete sump and it's only four years old."

McDermott said the Commission also required him to take soil and liquid samples from all parts of the plant to compare with the samples the agency had taken. That cost another $1,500. And he was informed that the state intends to conduct yard assessments on a five-year review basis.

He said 60 days later EPA representatives from Dallas randomly picked Cobra to conduct their own assessment, at an additional cost to McDermott of around $1,000. "We're completely different agencies," they told him.

Regarding safety, McDermott said safety is an ongoing program at Cobra where he has an in-house safety director and is self-insured on workman's comp. He said the safety incentives and bonuses are working, and he's been drug testing randomly and on pre-hires.

"We've seen considerable savings in insurance," McDermott said. "We're working and training better, monitoring the results and it's been profitable for us. We know we can't ever let up."

Never letting up is the reason rig costs and the incident rate are both down at Exeter. Bob Lange said safety has resulted in helping keep his crews steady.

"Our biggest problem is still turnover, but if our people don't get hurt, then we don't have to find someone to fill in for them," Lange said. "Safety has definitely paid off and our rig costs are down through worker's comp."

Lange said the push toward safety has resulted in the company looking for ways to improve employees' working conditions, such as installing an exhaust fan above the mud hopper house.

"Adding the exhaust fan results in the hands not breathing that dust, and now it's mandatory that all Exeter rigs have this," he said.

DA & S Oil Well Servicing's Safety Director Bill Sonnamaker cited 10 areas of compliance: some mandatory, others voluntary and all expensive.

"We hired an environmental consultant from Albuquerque to perform wash rack solids analysis and to instruct us how to dispose of them properly," Sonnamaker said. "That ran about $3,000."

The company's next step was to purchase biodegradable soaps for use in washing rigs and equipment. He said at a price of $8/gallon, and purchasing it by the barrel, costs ran between $3,000 and $4,000 per month.

DA & S purchased an oil filter crusher to squeeze the motor oil out of used filters. The expenditure ran $2,000. The crushed filters are hauled off at a cost of $90/barrel.

Part of hazard communications compliance requires contractors, among others, to compile Material Safety Data Sheets on the chemicals employees may contact. Sonnamaker said he made over 40 notebooks, with approximately 80 material data sheets apiece and with each sheet covered in a plastic sleeve to prevent damage, and said the endeavor cost about 100 hours labor.

"We're the only well servicing company I know of that has these data sheets posted at the job sites," he said.

Sonnamaker said DA & S sponsored two OSHA compliance seminars for the Hobbs community so OSHA representatives could explain what compliance meant for various businesses and industries. The company also conducted voluntary compliance audits at their locations in Texas, and is in progress on the New Mexico audits.

Compliance costs must take into consideration equipment purchase and rental, and Sonnamaker said both safety and environmental equipment is needed. He cited the example of tubs that are needed to collect drippings whenever a swab line is run into a well. He also talked about the rental of "Enviro-vat" equipment that sits on the wellhead and siphons off oil drips for disposal.

Fall protection devices for derrick men are gradually being integrated into the well servicing business. As chairman for the southeast New Mexico chapter of AOSC (Association of Oilwell Service Contractors) that investigated the various designs of the proposed fall protection devices, Sonnamaker said he decided on the retractor spool and full body harness.

"These are going to run about $2,000 a unit for the cable spool and harness," he said. "And the harnesses will have to be purchased in small, medium and large for different sized derrick men."

He added that many companies were involved in selecting this particular design, including the majors and Vallen Safety Supply who built it to specifications.

Sonnamaker said DA & S worked with Advanced Ergonomics in Dallas on a testing program to measure what employees are required to lift and whether they can do it safely. The company conducts an agility test on new employees now as well as tests them to be sure they are able to fulfill the lifting requirements of the job.

"We paid about $10,000 to set up this program because we feel that one potential back injury is not worth the risk," Sonnamaker said. "We decided to donate the program to AOSC because we're all in this together and everybody needs to be concerned with working safely."

Brownlee Well Service's Elvin Brownlee said safety is a continual training process and employees are awarded safety bonuses on both an individual and rig basis. Adding these bonuses to the cost of safety equipment and a salary for a full time safety director, and he still feels he comes out way ahead. Actually, Brownlee credits safety with saving his business.

"We wouldn't be in business today if we hadn't started the safety program back in the 1980s," Brownlee said. "It's paid off because our worker's comp modifier is the lowest in the nation."

The modifier is a percentage applied to the state's rate for worker's comp which is based on per $100 wages. Brownlee said the company's modifier is only 29 percent, meaning he pays 29 percent of the normal rate. He said it saves him several hundred thousand dollars each year.

"But the biggest advantage is for the employees, that they have a low accident rate," he said.

Putting employees first was the idea behind Pride Petroleum Services adopting the DuPont STOP program, otherwise known as "All accidents are preventable." Jim Byerlotzer said that through the DuPont program, safety has become a primary driving force for the company.

"Safety is not a cost to us, it's a savings," Byerlotzer said. "We don't worry about what it costs to keep our employees accident free because they're our biggest asset."

He said Pride Petroleum's management became aware of the STOP program through a customer who defined it as "learning safety to an art." Management asked DuPont to conduct an audit of Pride's working practices, and soon afterward the STOP program was implemented.

"STOP is a tool that we need to survive in today's market," he said. "We've taken it further and added to this a Total Quality Management program. Now if there is an accident or a close call, it's not the employee's fault. The mistake happened because the system has a problem. We're all responsible."

Every close call is recorded even if no one was injured. These "for record only" notations are shared with other employees in an effort to avoid future accidents.

Safety training at Pride is also attempting to avoid accidents through interactive CD-ROM video. Employees view a video on back injury, for example, and respond to the program's questions by touching the screen. An instantaneous record of what each employee has learned is registered. Byerlotzer said it has helped bridge the gap for employees who are uncomfortable with normal classroom instruction due to educational and cultural differences.

"We've also taken some of our training out of the classroom and into the field," he said. "With the support of our customers -- because they're just as concerned about safety -- we've been able to offer new employees some hands-on training at the wellhead."

Byerlotzer said another program, an internal innovation developed by employees, has been pegged "Do The Right Thing." It has helped employees view compliance as a necessity -- not because OSHA mandates it -- but because employees owe it to themselves, the company and their families.

Along with these formal strategies for increasing safety, Pride's management has learned to lead by example. Byerlotzer said they want employees to follow all the rules and have become increasingly more responsible them-

"The reason people have accidents is the same reason people speed when they're driving. They want to take a shortcut. If we want our employees to do the right thing when they're working, we can't be driving around with radar detectors in our cars. We all have to be continually responsible."

He said by working together, management and employees can prevent all accidents. It takes the right approach and a belief in safety and quality.

"Quality and safety are synonymous," Byerlotzer said. "We're working for continual improvement in eliminating all accidents. We're not quite there yet, but we work on it every single day."

Conoco team focuses on upstream

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

Where's the environmental risk in the hydrocarbon business? Producers exasperated with the EPA and state agencies may think the burden of the world rests on their shoulders, but in fact downstream risk far outweigh those of in the upstream sector.

In 1989 Conoco, striving to become more environmentally responsible, announced the formation of the environmental geosciences group, a research group that was supposed to provide geological research and support for worldwide exploration and Du Pont's environmental projects.

The Ponca City-based group of 11 hand-picked geoscience professionals and technicians was organized to minimize the impact of exploration in environmentally sensitive areas, and was to work closely with environmental groups.

Now, six years later, the group is almost totally involved in the downstream side of the business,

'Window of Opportunity' just around the corner (on Front St. to be exact)

Mid-West Door and Window President Mike Smith does a final inspection on the installation of an energy-saving window. This is a double-pane window with a thermal break that keeps heat or cold from coming in through the window frame as well as through the glass.

Whether you've recently bought an older home or you've left your home "as is" for quite awhile, you're sure to have an ongoing wish list of home improvements. Two of the most common areas that homeowners overlook when updating (yet two with great impact) are replacing the home's outdated and/or insufficient windows and entry doors.

If replacement windows top your list, Mid-West Door and Window has a great variety of styles and sizes available from several manufacturers. "A lot of people don't realize you can take windows out and replace them," said owner Mike Smith.

There are numerous options to consider, including wooden and aluminum framed windows with tinted and insulated glass, thermal-break frames, low-maintenance clad exteriors on wooden windows, grilles and more. These are available in double or single-hung, sliding, fixed picture, casing, awning, bay and bow windows.

The turnaround time on replacement windows is very reasonable and homeowner inconvenience is minimal. After measuring existing windows and ordering replacements, it takes about two weeks for Mid-West to receive the order and approximately two or three days after the job is scheduled to replace the windows of the entire house.

If, instead, your first priority is a new front entry door, Mid-West Door and Window has many beautiful styles from which to choose. They offer several elegant leaded-glass, beveled and raised-panel doors in a variety of rich woods or steel.

New technology continues to advance the energy efficiency of windows and doors beyond the realm of most homeowners. The experts at Mid-West can help you decide which products best suit your needs. They've been in business here in Midland since 1976, and they specialize in custom-tailoring jobs to exceed clients' expectations.

"We have our own installers on staff, so we do all of our work in-house. We make sure the job gets done right with the least amount of inconvience to the homeowner," said Smith. "Since we do specialize we can usually meet or beat other local bids."

2 of the most common areas that homeowners overlook when updating (yet two with great impact) are replacing the home's outdated and/or insufficient windows and entry doors.

In fact, Mid-West Door & Window offers free, no-obligation estimates for any job. The company places a priority on competitive pricing, as well as a no-nonsense warranty they stand behind. Good service and customer satisfaction are what have kept them in business for almost 20 years.

If replacing an entire house full of windows or a front entry door is not in your budget, consider replacing one side of windows at a time, or a less expensive option might be adding a storm door or storm windows to your existing windows.

With fall and winter approaching, custom-fitted storm windows are worth consideration. They increase the energy efficiency of a home and create a quieter, less dusty environment (especially important here in West Texas). Storm doors will do the same for any exterior door, offering extra insulation and keyed exterior locks.

There are so many other products offered by Mid-West Door and Window they may have to consider adding "and Siding and Skylight and Screen and Guttering" to the name. To find out more about the windows, doors and other products that are offered, you'll just have to stop by 2400 Front St. to see the company's showroom and catalogs for yourself. Don't let the 'door' close on this 'window' of opportunity!

Mid-West Door and Window, in business since 1976, sells and installs all types of doors and windows, as well as siding. Located at 2400 W. Front, the phone number is 682-4632. Hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday - Friday.

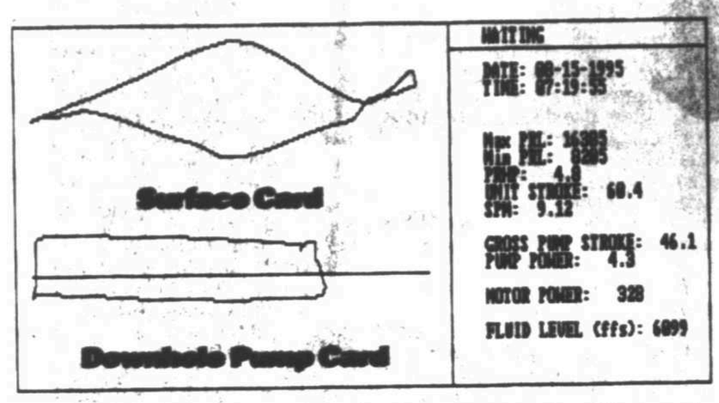

A Pump Card Monitor serves as pump off controller and operator's diagnostic tool

By displaying the surface card and by calculating and displaying the downhole pump card, (pictured at right) Nabla's Pump Card Monitor offers operators a detailed look at downhole conditions.

This monitor spots worn pumps as well as alerting operators to rod parts and tubing leaks. It also calculates gear box torque loads and displays run histories on a laptop computer.

The Pump Card Monitor distinguishes between pure pump off and gas interference. Most wells should continue to pump when gas interference is present and fluid levels are high.

Monitoring rod loads for violations allows the system to diagnose sticking pumps or paraffin build-up.

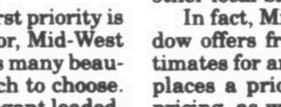

For more information on how Pump Card Monitor can provide your company with more information, call at Nabla, 697-2228.

Transco revises plans for SeaBoard 97 project

HOUSTON — Transcontinental Gas Pipe Line Corp., one of The Williams Companies, Inc., has revised its previously announced plans for the SeaBoard 97 project and began a new 30-day open season starting Aug. 8. The SeaBoard 97 project contemplates an expansion of Transco's Leidy Line and market area facilities and is intended to be in service by the 1997-1998 winter heating season.

"SeaBoard 97 was created to provide customers with a choice of supply options recognizing that each customer has unique supply requirements," said Frank Ferazzi, vice president, Customer Services. "The project enables customers to combine Transco's firm transportation with any of several potential storage services in the Leidy area and/or other upstream services that most closely match their needs."

The proposed expansion will provide up to 115 million cubic feet per day of annual firm transportation capacity from points of receipt in proximity to the Leidy hub in western Pennsylvania to most points of delivery on the Transco system. Consistent with the newly announced Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) policy regarding pipeline expansions, Transco intends to seek rolled-in rate treatment for the costs associated with this service. If approved, shippers participating in SeaBoard 97 would pay Transco's firm transportation system rates.

Transco also will accept requests for capacity expansions to certain other points of delivery on its system subject to separately stated incremental rates. The distribution of market commitment will determine the final design and capital cost of the project.

"By redesigning this project based on a rolled-in rate design we have enhanced Transco's ability to provide fair and competitively priced, high quality service to customers across the Transco system," said Cuba Wadlington, senior vice president and general manager. "The SeaBoard project is a natural extension of Transco's goal to aggressively serve the needs of our customers."

Transco will hold a 30-day open season beginning Aug. 8 and ending Sept. 6, during which it will accept service requests from shippers interested in this firm transportation capacity.

Benton Oil completes West Cote Blanche Bay gas producer

CARPINTERIA, Calif. — Benton Oil and Gas Co. has successfully completed the No. 868 well on the West Cote Blanche Bay Field in St. Mary Parish, La.

The No. 868 well has commenced production at a rate of 15.6 million cubic feet of natural gas per day and 145 barrels of condensate per day on a 32/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 2,620 pounds per square inch.

The well encountered a total of 80 feet of net pay and is currently producing from the 22 sand at intervals between 10,124 to 10,150 feet.

"The No. 868 well was drilled updip to the prolific No. 831 well which was placed on production in May 1994 and has cummulatively produced over 6.2 billion cubic feet of natural gas," stated A.E. Benton, Chairman of the Board, Chief Executive Officer and President. "The No. 868 well was drilled as part of Benton's overall strategy of applying 3-D seismic technology to further develop existing Gulf Coast fields and was based upon the interpretation of a 51 square mile 3-D seismic survey over the West Cote Blanche Bay Field. As a result of the success of the No. 831 and 868 wells and further interpretation of the 3-D data, additional prospects have been identified."

Benton Oil and Gas Company and Tenneco Ventures, a unit of Tenneco Gas, each have a 22 percent working interest in t[illegible]vell. Texaco Exploration & P[illegible]uction Inc. has a 50 percen[illegible]working interest and WRT Energy has a 6 percent working interest. Texaco is the operator of the field.

RISK: Downstream seems to have fewer environmental regulations in refining, marketing and transportation, and is seldom involved in upstream problems.

About the only time the group, which has now expanded to include environmental services for Conoco and DuPont, steps across the line into the upstream sector is to become involved in a pipeline leak or to help potential environmental liabilities in conjunction with properties being put on the market.

The reason cited by Conoco is that fewer environmental risks and smaller risks exists in the upstream side, where production facilities are monitored almost daily and present localized problems.

Producers who think they are over burdened by environmental regulations at the lease can be thankful they do not have refineries or transportation racks to add to their responsibilities.

Tom Brown income slips in quarter

Staff Reports

Tom Brown Inc. reported net income of $273,000 or 2 cents per share on revenues of $9,162,000 for the second quarter of 1995 compared to net income of $731,000 or 5 cents per share of $7,740,000 for the second quarter of 1994.

The company recorded revenues from operations of $18,590,000 for the first six months ended June 30,1995 compared to $17,276,000 for the comparable period of 1994. The increase was due to higher production volumes, and was diluted by an average 50 cents per Mcf decrease in gas prices from year-ago levels.

Donald L. Evans, chairman and chief executive officer, noted continued success during the second quarter of 1995 in the Val Verde Basin of Texas with natural gas and oil production increasing 48 percent and 49 percent respectively, as compared to the second quarter of 1994. Two recently drilled wells, the Conoco-operated Anna McClung 1-5 and Creek Ranch 12-1 will begin production in August and will increase the field deliverability to an estimated 50 million cubic feet of gas per day and 2,000 barrels of oil per day. The company has a 50 percent working interest in this field.

In the Wind River Basin of Wyoming, the company elected to voluntarily curtail approximately 50 percent of its gas production during the second quarter due to lower than expected gas prices in the Rockies. The company drilled six wells in its three fields this year and increased its net deliverability to approximately 25 Mmcfd among those three fields.

On May 31, 1995, the company announced that it had written to Presidio Oil Co. in order to propose a business combination between the two companies. On June 23, 1995, the company announced that it had agreed to purchase $56 million principal amount of the $100 million principal amount outstanding of the Senior Gas Index Notes due 2002 of Presidio.

The purchase closed on June 28,1995 and was funded through a bank loan. The company continues to believe that a business combination with Presidio represents an opportunity to acquire oil and gas assets complementary with those of Tom Brown Inc., which will provide significant value to its shareholders in the future.

The company is negotiating arrangements for commencement of due diligence with respects to the value of Presidio's assets.

TMBR/Sharp reports income

Staff Reports

TMBR/Sharp Drilling Inc. reported net income of $511,000 or 13 cents per share for its fiscal first quarter ended June 30, 1995. This compares to a loss of $148,000 or 4 cents per share for the same quarter a year earlier.

Revenues increased 82 percent to $6.3 million from $3.5 million, including a 155 percent increase in oil and gas revenues to $359,000 from 4141,000. Contract drilling revenues increased to 45.9 million from $3.3 million.

Thomas C. Brown, chairman of the board, commented that rig utilization rates in the quarter increased by 59 percent while operating expenses as a percentage of revenue declined by 13 percent due largely to the company's ongoing cost containment program> He also noted that TMBR/Sharp's safety record has improved substantially, which had a positive impact on worker's compensation costs. He added that, over the last three moths, the company has participated for its own account in four successful oil and gas wells and currently has several additional projects under way.

Parallel completes new gas discovery

MIDLAND – Parallel Petroleum Corp. announced the completion of a discovery well in a new and deeper Yegua gas zone, the Cox & Perkins Mollnar No. 2, located in Wharton County, onshore the Texas Gulf Coast, utilizing data developed by three-dimensional seismic imaging.

On an official Texas Railroad Commission flow test, the well had an open flow potential calculated to be 1.8 million cubic feet of natural gas and 35 barrels of condensate per day with a flowing tubing pressure of 5,625 pounds per square inch on an adjustable choke. The production is from perforations made selectively in an 84-foot interval from 10,665 to 10,749 feet in the Downdip Expanded Yegua sand. Parallel owns a 20% working interest and a 15% net revenue interest in the well.

En route to its objective, the Mollnar No. 2 well passed through the gas sand which produces in the nearby Mollnar No. 1 and Runnells No. 1 wells. These two wells are producing an aggregate of approximately 9 million cubic feet of natural gas and 325 barrels of condensate per day from a Yegua sand at about 9,200 feet. This zone will be behind pipe in the Mollnar No. 2 and will be produced at some time in the future.

Privately held Cox & Perkins Exploration, Inc., Houston, is operator of the project and owns a 40% working interest. Other working interest owners are DDD Energy, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Seitel, Inc. (NYSE: SEI), 20%; Tenneco Ventures, 10%, and individuals who own the remaining 10%. The group owns comparable interests in 3-D seismic surveys covering an area of mutual interest of approximately 45,000 acres.

A nearby wildcat well, the Gold-Zapp-Mollnar Unit No. 1, is expected to begin drilling this week.

ACTIVITY HIGHLIGHTS

Dawson yields 362-barrel Devonian strike

Staff Reports

A Devonian discovery has been recorded in Dawson County, nine miles west of Lamesa.

PATRICK PETROLEUM CORP. completed the No. 1 Patrick Lindsey Trust "109" to flow 362 barrels of 35.5 gravity crude and 3.7 Mcfd on a 12/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 191 psi. The well flowed from open Devonian interval 12,255 to 12,280 ft., which had been acidized with 250 gallons of 10 percent acetic acid.

Permitted as a 12,700 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 12,280 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 12,255 ft.

Santa Fe Energy reports offshore drilling success

HOUSTON — Santa Fe Energy Resources announced that its increased 1995 capital budget for the Gulf of Mexico had thus far yielded success in 5 of 7 exploratory wells and 7 of 7 development wells.

The company also initiated an extensive 3-D seismic exploratory venture, acquired additional offshore producing property interests and was awarded 9 leases in the recent OCS lease sale.

SFR budgeted $50 million for offshore capital programs in 1995 versus $24 million spent in 1994. The Company's interests in the Gulf of Mexico are now at the highest level ever with participation in 158 blocks. The Company's current net production from the offshore Gulf of Mexico is approximately 95 million cubic feet of gas and 2,250 barrels of oil per day. For the month of July 1995, Santa Fe Energy's company-wide production had grown to an average of 66,800 barrels of oil per day and 160 million cubic feet of gas per day.

Highlights of the 1995 offshore exploratory program include a natural gas discovery at the Company's Intrepid prospect on Galveston A-34/A-35, offshore Texas. The A-34 No. 1 well tested at the rate of 6.6 million cubic feet of gas and 78 barrels of condensate per day through an 18/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 2,970 pounds per square inch. Two development wells have been drilled. The A-34 No. 2 well was tested at the rate of 10.2 million cubic feet of gas and 235 barrels of condensate per day through a 25/64 choke at a flowing tubing pressure of 2700 pounds per square inch. The A-35 No. 1 well logged 16 feet of hydrocarbon bearing sand and is currently undergoing completion. SFR is the operator and holds a 100 percent working interest in the Intrepid prospect.

The Vermilion 57 A6 well, an exploratory discovery, was drilled from an existing platform and went on production in May at approximately 17.5 million cubic feet of gas and 160 barrels of condensate per day. Santa Fe Energy holds a 50 percent interest in this well and the Vermilion 57 block.

During the second quarter Santa Fe Energy formed a joint venture with two industry partners to acquire and utilize 3-D seismic data to explore an area covering approximately 3 million acres in the shallow waters offshore Louisiana.

The partnership has thus far received about half the expected seismic data and has already identified numerous attractive exploratory prospects. The group, with SFR as operator, currently controls 13 blocks and expects to acquire more as prospects continue to be identified.

SFR holds a 30 percent working interest in the 3-D program. The company has also taken advantage of other acquisition opportunities and has expanded its interests in certain blocks as well as purchased interests in other offshore producing properties with development potential. Reserves totalling 19 BCFE have been purchased thus far.

Also this year, the fourth well was completed on the Company's Liberty prospect at High Island A-442, offshore Texas, which is scheduled to commence production by November at approximately 5,000 barrels of oil and 18 million cubic feet of gas per day. A production platform is currently being installed and a pipeline to the site is being completed.

Iowa town can choose gas supplier

By N.Y. Times News Service

Rock Valley, Iowa — In the first test of retail competition for household natural gas consumers, residents of tiny Rock Valley, Iowa, will get to choose their service from three different distributors.

Midwest Gas, a Sioux City-based division of MidAmerican Energy Co., recently offered three gas distributors the chance to compete for about 1,000 residential and small industrial customers in Rock Valley.

Households in Rock Valley, population 2,500, will be able to choose among Equitable Resources, Minnegasco and Utilicorp United's Energy One for gas supplies, or to stay with Midwest Gas. The three natural gas retailers will be the first in the U.S. to compete for retail customers as part of the Midwest Gas test-marketing program.

In recent years, as part of natural gas deregulation, large commercial and industrial gas users have been able to contract for their own gas supplies. The test in Rock Valley, 50 miles north of Sioux City, will be the first chance for residential customers to have a choice of suppliers.

For Midwest Gas, the program transfers its responsibility for low-profit distribution to other suppliers, while developing capacity release sales on its pipeline system.

"We won't lose anything because of (departing residential customers) and we gain transportation customers. We don't make much money on gas we buy and sell," said Bud Karachiwala, manager of gas energy services for Midwest Power in Sioux City.

"In the long run, we want to make money, and it's in our best interest to get out of the distribution business," Karachiwala said. "Under this program, the obligation to supply gas shifts to other suppliers."

The three companies selected by Midwest Gas to participate will be permitted to begin marketing programs Sept. 1 and will begin supplying gas to new customers Nov. 1.

"We intend to use a variety of marketing techniques to convince customers to buy from us, but we can't solicit them until Sept. 1," said Gregory Martin, vice president-gas measurement for Equitable Resources in Pittsburgh. "This is the first gas project giving residential users the option to buy supply from competing sources."

The benefits to the three suppliers include access to a new market with additional customers and the ability to explore a competitive environment without substantial risk.

"We want to test the reliability of our planning process for residential customers," Martin said.

Asking customers to leave their current supplier may be more difficult than some who promote such competition believe. For example, when the telecommunications industry was deregulated, few customers wanted to leave AT&T Corp.

"With the telecommunications industry breakup, 65% of their customers stayed with AT&T, but natural gas is different," Karachiwala said. "Nobody wants to risk losing their only source of heat in the middle of winter."

To ensure reliable and efficient service to their current customers, Midwest Gas requires the new suppliers to contract firm capacity on Northern Natural Pipeline and also evaluates the companies' firm gas supply contracts.

"We must show evidence that firm supply is available," Martin said. "We can't just use the spot market."

HALLIBURTON DECREASES WATER PRODUCTION
CASE HISTORY # 247

Location of job: Ector County, Texas

Type of job: Conformance Control

Customer Challenge: Decrease water production from Clearfork zone and lower the operating cost to return the well to an economical producer.

Halliburton's Solution: Customer performed multi-rate injectivity survey to determine the feasibility and the appropriate conformance placement technique. The technical advisor and customer utilized their "Team Association" to select and design a HYDROCHECK treatment (MATROL/MOC-ONE). Design specs were tailored through laboratory testing for down hole temperature and well conditions.

Major Obstacles: Using available data to minimize the possibility of unwanted placement of the conformance treatment into the upper oil bearing zone interval. On site chemical reactions were to match designs requirements based on laboratory analysis testing.

Job Details:

Formation:	Clearfork
Rock Type:	Dolomite
Perforations:	5,302'-5,348', 188 holes
Porosity:	8% (Dual Porosity sys.)
Permeability:	10 md
BHST:	110 °F
BHP	1,200 PSI
Casing:	5.5"
Tubing:	2 7/8"
Packer:	Set at 5,250 ft.
Tubing Land Plug	2 7/8"
Frac Gradient	0.68 psi/ft
Max. Allow. Surface Inj. Pressure	1,280 psi
Pre-treatment Prod.	15 BOPD: 1,324 BWPD

Job Procedure: Rig up Halliburton to perform HYDROCHECK treatment as follows:

- 2,000 gal 2% KCL Preflush
- 4,000 gal MATROL
- 420 gal Kerosene Spacer
- 650 gal MOC-ONE @ 13.1 ppg
- 630 gal Kerosene Spacer/overflush
- Dropped 2 7/8" tubing plug (with fishing neck)
- Displaced tubing plug w/840 gal filtered KCL

Shut well in over night to allow MATROL to fully complex and the MOC-ONE slurry to develop compressive strength.

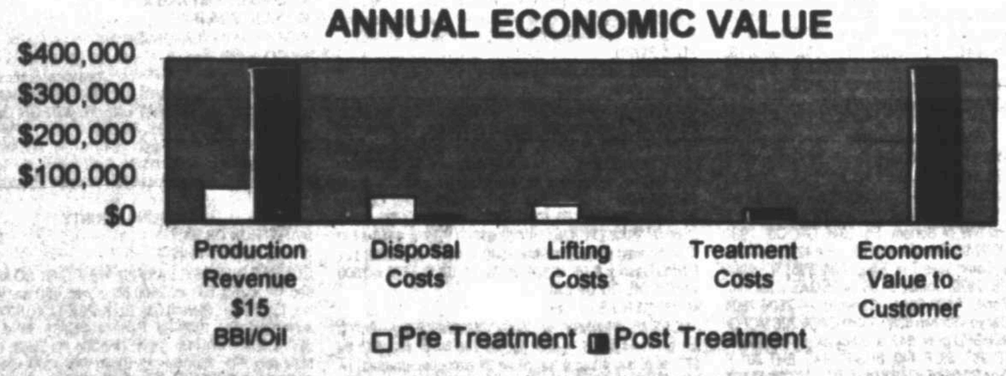

Results: The job was successfully executed with adherence to Halliburton/Client safety guidelines. Water production was decreased from 1,324 BWPD to 292 BWPD. Oil production increased from an average 15 BOPD to 70 BOPD. Six months following treatment, production stabilized at 70 BOPD, 250 BWPD. Electricity costs were reduced from $3,300 to $700 per month by converting lifting system from Electrical Submersible Pump to conventional rod pump.

Customer Testimonial: Halliburton's HYDROCHECK system has been effective in reducing water production in fractured carbonate and dolomite reservoirs in five out of seven wells. The results were continually improved with better understanding of the problems encountered in the wells so that more suitable treatment solutions and placement techniques were utilized. Proper evaluation using existing well data and other means such as pump-in tracers, crossflow checks, etc., increase chances of success. Halliburton has addressed the need for expert advisory and design knowledge for a successful conformance control treatment.

UNIQUENESS OF JOB: The HYDROCHECK System for Conformance Control is an exclusive Halliburton treatment. The use of hydrocarbon based micro-fine slurries following the placement of a solution such as MATROL does not deteriorate the effective complexing of this polymer as a conventional water base slurry does.

FUTURE WORK: Conformance teams have been established with customers to identify potential applications of this technology. Combined efforts of the team associations are providing many concepts and problem resolutions for future success on Conformance Control problems.
