Pact breach could force Dynagen out

Plant officials appeal to Morales

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff writer

ODESSA — A manager for Dynagen Inc. said Thursday that "petty politics" on the part of Texas Attorney General Dan Morales could lead to the closure of the synthetic rubber maker plant.

Tim Gorman said the facility's survival was in jeopardy should Morales stick to his guns and oppose an amended agreed final judgment that was hammered out in July.

"We stuck to our part of the agreement," Gorman said. "I believe at some point we're going to run out of patience."

Gorman said the latest snag in the ongoing saga had to do with a "few parties" who have motives other than the best interest of the community at heart.

Those groups — the state conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) and the Lone Star chapter of the Sierra Club — apparently were able to swing Morales their way.

In the original agreement, Dynagen was given up to four years to install new technologies aimed at reducing the plant's styrene emissions as well as close its solar ponds.

Both have generated hotbeds of complaints, particularly on Odessa's southside, where residents live downwind from the plant.

Gorman said state claims that the agreement was not fully supported by the community are groundless.

"I have been inundated by calls, letters and messages of support for Dynagen over the last year," Gorman said. "The vast majority of Odessans realize that having Dynagen here is an asset to this community."

Dynagen announced plans to design a $6 million pre-treatment water reclama-

Packwood apology

WASHINGTON — Sen. Bob Packwood apologized Thursday for "unwelcome and offensive" actions toward women but defiantly refused to resign or discuss specific allegations of sexual harassment. Packwood called himself a typical child of the 1930s and 1940s — "boys took shop; girls took cooking" — whose views of women had grown more enlightened professionally while his personal behavior had been worse than "stupid or boorish." "I just didn't get it. I do now," the Oregon Republican told a crowded news conference./ 12C

Lotto pot grows

AUSTIN — No one won the latest Lotto Texas jackpot, which was worth about $5 million dollars. The next drawing is Saturday night, and the jackpot is expected to reach about $10 million, state lottery officials said Thursday. The winning numbers Wednesday were 4, 11, 16, 31, 32 and 45. Lottery officials said 55 tickets matched five of six numbers. Those winners will each get $2,884. More than 3,550 people matched four of six numbers, and will claim $160 apiece. About 85,000 players matched three of six lotto numbers, earning them $3 each.

Female condom OK

WASHINGTON — Experts advising the Food and Drug Administration said Thursday a condom for women should be allowed onto the U.S. market but only if it carries a label warning that its effectiveness is questionable. The FDA usually follows the advice of its advisory panels. There is no timetable for its decision, but it might act before the Clinton administration takes office next month.

■ Selection of Texas senator as treasury secretary reassures financial community.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — President-elect Clinton began building his new administration Thursday by selecting Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen for treasury secretary and a cadre of other experienced hands from Wall Street and Congress for remaining top economic jobs.

Announcing his first Cabinet selections 37 days after his election, Clinton said to "stay tuned" for more major appointments, with his health and environmental picks among those that could come yet this week.

Propelled into office on a pledge to restore the nation's economic vitality, Clinton promised to "work my heart out" with his new economic team. He announced five appointments in all, selecting faces familiar to the Washington scene and reassuring to the business community.

Besides Bentsen, who chairs the Senate Finance Committee, they are:

■ Rep. Leon Panetta, chairman of the House Budget Committee, who will be director of Office of Management and Budget.

■ Robert Rubin, co-chairman of Goldman, Sachs & Co., to be assistant to the president for economic policy and coor-

WASHINGTON (AP) — As Lloyd Bentsen's political star rises, Texas' clout on Capitol Hill wanes.

French open fire, kill 2 Somalis

■ Marines prepare to escort first convoy into interior.

Associated Press

MOGADISHU, Somalia — Troops opened fire on a truckload of Somalis who barreled through a French checkpoint Thursday night, killing two and injuring seven in the first bloodshed of the U.S.-led military mission in Somalia.

The shooting came nearly two days after American and French soldiers took control of Somalia's capital to protect food shipments. The two main Somali warlords, whose looting clansmen have blocked the convoys, agreed Thursday to their first meeting since they began fighting two years ago.

The shooting episode foreshadowed the unpredictable situation U.S. troops may face as they deploy in Somalia's interior. On Saturday, Marines are to escort the first land convoy in a month to the strife-torn city of Baidoa, 125 miles to the northwest.

CARE International said Thursday night that its five-member staff in Baidoa had barricaded themselves inside their compound in anticipation of an armed attack by clansmen. The staff were an American, two Britons and two Australians.

Yeltsin seeks signatures for early elections referendum

By Brian Friedman
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW — President Boris Yeltsin declared Thursday he could no longer work with Russia's hard-line lawmakers and proposed a nationwide referendum to decide whether he or Congress should run the nation.

Frustrated by the rejection of his reformist prime minister a day earlier by the Congress of People's Deputies, Yeltsin accused legislators of trying to lead "a creeping coup" and send the country "on the road to nowhere."

In a campaign to bypass the Congress and appeal directly to the people, Yeltsin proposed a Jan. 24 referendum on whether there should be new presidential or parliamentary elections in the spring.

The Congress shot back by rejecting Yeltsin's action as confrontational, saying any referendum should ask whether early elections should be held for both the president and the Congress, Russia's highest parliamentary body.

Parliament speaker Ruslan Khasbulatov, who has opposed Yeltsin in the past, later told Interfax news agency that Yeltsin was acting like he had "become God with the final say over the fate of the country."

The Congress showed it "will no longer accept general secretaries, dictators or czars. The (Congress) will keep working until it resolves this artificial, far-fetched, senseless conflict," Khasbulatov said.

Returning to the populist tactics that carried him to the peak of power, 61-year-old President Yeltsin left the gilded Grand Kremlin Palace in the afternoon and plunged into a crowd of workers on the grease-covered assembly lines of an auto plant in southeastern Moscow.

"I ask you to go out and collect signatures for a referendum on the Congress!" Yeltsin told cheering workers at the Leninist Young Communist League Auto Plant.

Yeltsin pumped his fist in the air, a gesture he used to stir popular support during the defeat of the Communist-led coup in August 1991.

During a blunt, bitter speech when the Congress convened earlier in the day, Yeltsin accused lawmakers of blocking his economic reforms and of trying to revive "the totalitarian Soviet-Communist system."

"What they failed to do in August 1991 they decided to repeat now and carry out a creeping coup," Yeltsin said.

Lawmakers responded with jeers.

He blasted the Communist-dominated Congress for rejecting his nomination of Yegor Gaidar as prime minister on Wednesday. He said Gaidar, the architect of Russia's free-market reforms, would stay on as "acting" prime minister.

Smarting from the hard-liners' rejections of his compromises before and during the nine-day Congress, Yeltsin attacked the deputies as crude and referred to a melee that disrupted the session last week.

"The walls of this hall have turned red because of endless insults and gutter-style cursing at specific people, because of anger, rudeness and loose behavior, because of the dirt that is inundating the Congress, because of morbid ambitions of failed politicians, their brawls and disgrace in full view of the world," he said.

Immediately after his speech, Yeltsin met with 200 reformist deputies and asked them to begin collecting the 1 million signatures needed to hold the referendum without Congress' approval.

Haitian rights group documents political killings

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — A coalition of Haitian human rights groups said Thursday it had documented 1,867 political killings in Haiti since the September 1991 military coup.

And the Platform of Haitian Human Rights Organizations said that taking into account undocumented killings, the real figure was probably closer to 3,000.

A army-led campaign of political repression followed the bloody coup that ousted elected President Jean-Bertrand Aristide.

Paul Dejean, a member of the coalition, said all of the listed killings "are mixed up with politics" but said the group could not assert that all people on the list were killed by soldiers or allied death squads.

The coalition said nearly half of those killed were under 25, and more than half of the killings took place in or near the capital, Port-au-Prince.

In the most recent known case, gunmen shot and killed Jean Sony Philogene, 20, in his Port-au-Prince hospital bed on Sunday.

Philogene's mother, Delira Philogene, told a Haitian radio program in New York, where she lives, that her son had been abducted with friends after a Saturday night concert.

The rights coalition said it also had documented 5,096 illegal arrests, 2,171 cases of people wounded by gunfire or beatings, and 2,482 cases of illegal house-searches, violent searches and destruction of private property.

Prime Minister Marc Bazin, who heads the military-backed government, has acknowleged human rights violations but blames them on Haiti's extreme poverty, aggravated by a hemispheric trade embargo.

Sessions says he faces problems head-on

By Dan Freedman
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — In 1987 after President Reagan nominated him as the FBI's fourth director, William S. Sessions embraced a reporter's description of him as a "West Texas tough guy."

But midway through his 10-year term as head of the FBI, Director Sessions (as he likes to be called) appears to be less tough than vulnerable.

First, he was hit in October with reports of a Justice Department inquiry involving nonpayment of local taxes, alleged misuse of government aircraft and telephones and allegations of improprieties concerning his wife Alice and longtime assistant Sarah Munford.

Then he was hit again with suggestions that his desire for revenge against Republican overseers was behind the FBI's pre-Election Day probes of U.S. Treasurer Catalina Vasquez Villalpando for alleged influence peddling and Texas Bush-Quayle campaign chairman Jim Oberwetter, falsely suspected of dirty tricks against independent candidate Ross Perot.

Undergirding these episodes was the longstanding whispering campaign by past and present career FBI officials and Republican appointees at the Justice Department that Sessions is an "empty suit" and a "lightweight."

In a recent interview, however, Sessions, 62, dismissed these characterizations and expressed confidence that he was navigating his way out of the storm.

"I do look for clear sailing," he said, sporting a tie dotted with FBI emblems next to the gold FBI badge on his shirt pocket. Sessions noted that the Justice Department informed him Nov. 13 it would not Temperatures climbed into the 60s throughout North Texas as most of the region enjoyed sunny skies. Winds were 5 to 15 mph.

High wispy clouds drifted over parts of South Texas, while most of the region enjoyed abundant sunshine that allowed temperatures to climb into the 80s in some locations.

Clear to partly cloudy skies dominated West Texas, except for the sun country where skies were fair. Temperatures ranged from the upper 40s in the Panhandle to mostly in the 60s elsewhere. Winds across the region were variable from 5 to 15 mph.

In North Texas forecasters are calling for partly cloudy and mild today and tonight with highs in the 60s and lows in the high 30s. Variable cloudiness Saturday with a slight chance of showers and thunderstorms in the west.

NATION

Storms spread rain and heavy snow over the Northwest and much of the East on Thursday. Storm warnings were posted through Friday for some Eastern states.

Snow fell along an arc from Illinois across the Great Lakes and Appalachians, and the storm pushed into the Northeast.

Rain fell at some lower elevations from West Virginia and Virginia south into the Carolinas and northwestern Georgia.

By late afternoon, Grant County in northern West Virginia had up to 15 inches of snow. At midafternoon Cumberland, Md., had 5 inches; Allentown, Pa., had 7 inches; and southwestern Lower Michigan had up to 9 inches..

Winter storm warnings and watches were in effect through today for most of Pennsylvania, northern and eastern West Virginia, northern New Jersey, most of New York state, western Massachusetts and Rhode Island, the National Weather Service said.

CABINET: Clinton begins building administration

(From 1A)

dinate a new National Economic Council.

■ Roger Altman, a Wall Street investment banker, who will serve as Bentsen's top deputy.

■ Economist Alice Rivlin, former director of the Congressional Budget Office, who will be Panetta's deputy.

Taken together, the five nominees offer what Clinton hopes will be the right mix of economic philosophy and practical skill to fill in the details of his economic proposals and get them enacted. Rivlin and Panetta, in particular, are known as strong advocates for cutting the federal deficit.

"These people are seasoned, skilled, incredibly able and ready to work for the American people," Clinton said of his first appointees, who appeared with him at a news conference in Arkansas' Old Statehouse.

He was questioned on other topics as well and said at one point that he would ask his attorney general to review whether a special prosecutor should be appointed to investigate potential criminal wrongdoing in the Bush administration's prosecution of a $5.5 billion loan scheme to Iraq.

Clinton's appointments came on a day that brought yet more encouraging news about the health of the economy. The government reported that new claims for jobless benefits dropped in November and so did wholesale prices.

But Clinton continued to caution that the economy may not yet be out of recession and that the nation needs a long-term strategy to correct underlying weaknesses.

"We did not get into the situation which has led most Americans to work harder for lower wages than they were making 10 years ago overnight, and we're not going to get out of that overnight," he said.

Bentsen said the new administration was inheriting "twin deficits. In effect, what we're talking about is lagging investment and unbalanced budgets, and we're determined to cut both down to size in order to spur this economic growth."

Clinton scheduled more announcements for this afternoon, and transition and Democratic sources told The Associated Press that Clinton he would tap:

■ University of Wisconsin Chancellor Donna Shalala for secretary of health and human services.

■ Carol Browner, Florida's top environmental official and a former top aide to Vice President-elect Al Gore, to lead the Environmental Protection Agency.

■ Robert Reich, a Harvard professor and one of the key architects of Clinton's economic program, as labor secretary.

■ Laura D'Andrea Tyson, a University of California, Berkeley, economist, to head the White House Council of Economic Advisers.

One transition source said former San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros was a leading candidate for housing secretary, but that post was not expected to be among Friday's announcements.

At his news conference, Clinton did nothing to squelch speculation he was considering Gen. Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, to be his secretary of state.

"I certainly think he's qualified," Clinton said, adding that he would reserve further comment until he was ready to announce a nominee.

Powell, attending a White House reception, was asked his reaction and said, "Have a job. I hope to have the same job again."

Clinton got started on forming his Cabinet a little later than some recent presidents. Dwight Eisenhower and Richard Nixon, for example, had named their entire Cabinets by this point and John F. Kennedy had nearly finished. President Bush named his first appointee on Nov. 9.

Clinton was particularly eager to get his economic team in place in advance of next week's economic conference here in Little Rock. The president-elect has invited more than 200 Americans from business, labor, advocacy groups and academia to come together to discuss the nation's long-term economic needs.

He also wanted to ensure that one of his first appointments would be a woman, in keeping with his campaign pledge to construct a Cabinet that would "look like America."

Clinton's appointments must be confirmed by the Senate, where Democratic leaders buoyed by their party's takeover of the White House after 12 years of Republican rule are expected to begin confirmation hearings even before Inauguration Day on Jan. 20.

Congressional Democrats were quick to praise Clinton's choices. Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, called the appointees "highly respected and qualified individuals with impressive records of achievement."

The selection of Bentsen, the 1988 vice presidential nominee, sets up a scramble for his seat in the Senate. Democratic Gov. Ann Richards will appoint a temporary replacement to serve until a special election can be held in Texas early next year.

SOMALIA: Marines pursue snipers, raid buildings

(From 1A)

Wynn-Pope, asked American troops to provide air cover for the town Thursday night.

Army troops from Fort Drum, N.Y., are scheduled to begin arriving over the weekend in Baidoa, then split off and seize three other centers of the starvation zone — Belet Wen, Oddur and Gailassi. Fresh Marines were expected in Mogadishu by Friday.

On Nov. 11, a 34-truck relief convoy to Baidoa was ambushed with heavy casualties. Only one truck — with supplies promised for the warlords themselves — made it through. Since then, truck convoys have not ventured out of Mogadishu.

Fifty to 60 deaths are reported each day in Baidoa. Regular airlifts have done little for the hundreds of thousands of people encamped around the town because the battling clans and looters have prevented agencies from distributing food and medicine.

Even worse is Bardera, about 50 miles south of Baidoa. Unlike Baidoa, which at least has refugee camps, Bardera has neither camps nor sanitation. Heavy seasonal rains have limited food flights into Bardera's muddy airstrip.

Relief officials reported Thursday that a large convoy of Somali "technicals" — jeeps and pickups mounted with guns and cannons — was spotted headed west from the Baidoa area toward the Ethiopian border.

Alarmed by sporadic gunfire near the U.S. Embassy compound in Mogadishu, Marines on Thursday raided several buildings in pursuit of snipers.

With Cobra attack helicopters hovering, Marines burst into a villa a half mile from the embassy and seized two anti-aircraft guns, two surface-to-air missiles and 10,000 rounds of rifle ammunition, according to an NBC reporter.

At the Pentagon, Lt. Gen. Martin Brandtner said the truck that plowed through the roadblock manned by French Legionnaires had been a "technical" mounted with a gun, but there was no further word on who was in it.

The injured Somalis were airlifted to the USS Tripoli for treatment, Brandtner said. Two of the Somalis suffered bullet wounds and five were hurt when the vehicle slammed into a cement wall after it was shot.

In a hopeful development for the violence-wracked land, warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid announced he would meet with his chief rival, Ali Mahdi Mohamed, said special U.S. envoy Robert Oakley.

They will meet with Oakley in Mogadishu today, and with Bernard Kouchner, France's minister of health and humanitarian affairs, aboard a ship carrying relief supplies from French schoolchildren on Saturday.

The emergency food airlift into Mogadishu resumed Wednesday just hours after 1,700 Marines came ashore and seized the airport and seaport, the first steps in an unprecedented, U.N.-sponsored campaign to deliver aid through armed force.

A stream of C-5 and C-141 cargo aircraft landed at the airport from Germany, bringing equipment to supply the terminal with electricity, communications and water, said Col. Fred Peck, the Marines spokesman.

There is little starvation in Mogadishu, where the Marines have been thronged by crowds of astonished, often admiring children and adults.

But relief shipments to the interior have been routinely looted by armed bands of youths set loose by clan conflict following the overthrow of President Mohamed Siad Barre in January 1991.

MAILINGS: Red Cross sends cards to soldiers

(From 1A)

Cross has begun mailing Christmas cards addressed "to any service member" at stations all over the world.

"We also have just received 12 addresses for Somalia," said Sarah Boering, Emergency Services Coordinator for the Red Cross in Midland. "The greatest bulk of the Christmas cards we receive will be sent to Somalia."

Due to conditions in Somalia — famine, theft, problems getting food through, and lack of storage shelters — no packages will be accepted by the U.S. Post Office.

Red Cross workers are coordinating mail with chaplains stationed in Somalia.

"Letters or cards weighing more than 11 ounces cannot be mailed," Ms. Boering said. "We are also limited to mailing everything first class."

Also, letters should be brought in to the Red Cross unsealed and with no stamps affixed to envelopes. Envelopes should be unsealed because Red Cross workers won't mail letters with negative contents to military personnel.

"We are not going to send a derogatory message to our troops," said Virginia Martin, spokesperson for the Support Group for Military Personnel at Home and Abroad. Members of the support group and local Red Cross will serve as a clearinghouse and will prepare all letters and cards for batch mailing.

Ms. Boering said Red Cross and support group members are encouraging Midlanders to send homemade Christmas cards. Support group member Stephanie Spencer designed a card with an armadillo sending greetings from West Texas.

"Even though the troops are on a humanitarian mission, you have to imagine what it would be like to be 19 and alone in Somalia. Young people are so tuned into the instantaneous comforts of home," Ms. Boering said.

The Red Cross worker noted that one Midlander managed to keep in touch with 47 pen pals during Desert Storm. "And she discovered the things that meant the most were cartoons or funnies from the newspaper or tearing out Texas A&M articles for A&M fans and sending them," she said.

Red Cross offices in both Midland and Odessa will be accepting signed Christmas cards, boxes or individual unsigned Christmas cards, letters, photos and postage donations.

"The name of the game is to tell the troops you love them," Ms. Boering said.

"We are doing a citywide push because of the situation," Ms. Martin said. "The cards will be going all over the world, including Saudi Arabia. "And cards won't have to have a stamp to go."

Ms. Martin also noted that the military personnel support group meets at 7:30 p.m. Monday nights in the Red Cross office, 2306 Elizabeth St. "It is open to everyone — especially anyone who has friends or family in the military."

For more information on sending Christmas cards to troops, call 684-6161.

ROLES: Separation fuels debate over monarchy

that the arrangement would not impair the monarchy or the succession to the throne appeared to do little to quiet doubters.

Rather than reassuring people, the announcement that the couple had "amicably" agreed to separate only appears to have fueled debate and uncertainty over the future of the British monarchy, which is facing its most serious upheaval since 1936, when King Edward VIII abdicated the throne to marry Wallis Simpson, a divorced American socialite.

In particular, there was sharp exception to the notion, advanced by Prime Minister John Major in Parliament on Wednesday, that Diana could still be crowned as the queen consort if and when Prince Charles succeeds his mother to the throne.

Geoffrey Dickens, a Conservative member of Parliament, said the idea of the princess becoming queen while she is separated from her husband was "out of the question." Peter Butler, another Tory, warned that such an arrangement would amount to a "constitutional travesty."

"The marriage, in legal terms, may still be alive, but, in reality, it is over, and, just because she was a wife to the future king, does not give her the right to be queen," said Butler, speaking in the corridors of Westminster.

The British press, which for months has been drilling away at cracks in the royal marital facade, pounced immediately on the terms of their new marital arrangement.

"Charles will not be king. Di will not be queen," The Sun said on its front page. The Daily Mirror commented: "This latest royal mess is making a mockery of the monarchy. Unchecked, that mockery will destroy the monarchy itself."

Buckingham Palace, 10 Downing St., and officials of the Church of England insisted that the arrangement preserved, rather than imperiled, the monarchy, arguing that it posed no bar to the succession to the throne. Still, even the most sympathetic commentators seemed bewildered by the idea of separate palaces and separate courts.

Lord St. John of Fawsley, a former Cabinet minister, a constitutional expert, and friend of the royal family, said he agreed with Major that there was no statutory bar to a prince and his estranged wife assuming the throne.

"But it certainly requires a strong effort of imagination to project oneself forward into that situation," he added.

Others questioned the announcement that Charles and Diana would share custody of their children, Princes William, 10, and Harry, 8. While the conventions of joint custody may work for many families, doubters here wondered if they would serve the interests of a royal family.

As The Financial Times pointed out on Thursday, this is a family in which "the monarch is the head of the Church of England, the queen is revered as head of a family, the media reflects public tastes, and the essence of royalty is tradition."

Several newspapers noted the assurances of the palace and the government that the couple did not intend to divorce, and then reminded readers that Queen Elizabeth's younger sister, Princess Anne, also said she had no plans to divorce when she left her husband, Capt. Mark Phillips, in 1989. Princess Anne will remarry on Saturday in a private ceremony in Scotland.

But the government continued to reject questions about divorce as hypothetical, and insisted that the palace's business would go on as usual.

To that end, the prince and princess set off early on Thursday on their separate schedules, attending to royal business as Britain's favorite luncheon guests and cutters of ribbons.

The princess attended a luncheon of the American Chamber of Commerce in central London, where she received an emotional response, including cheers and a standing ovation, from the mostly-American audience. But her remarks on behalf of a charity for victims of head injuries carefully adhered to the prepared text, and she made no reference to her personal situation.

Charles's duties carried him on Thursday on a tour of the London sewer system. As his car arrived outside, a group of well-wishers waiting on the sidewalk applauded, and Charles, appearing pleased by the response, strode over to the group to shake hands and wish them a merry Christmas.

While some regarded the matter as a grave constitutional question, there was another reaction in London as well. The Times of London, long an establishment voice, wondered in an editorial on Thursday morning if the whole matter was being overblown, arguing that the royal couple's new arrangement posed few important public or constitutional issues.

PLANT: Dynagen seeks meeting

tion plant to clean up its polluted water. It also is looking at other options to control odor emissions.

"The old agreement required us to build an incinerator that would emit carbon dioxide. ... The new agreement will allow us to look at other options that won't have such emissions. We don't want to substitute one form of pollution for another," said Gorman, noting CO_2 is an ozone-depleting agent.

The spokesman said he was baffled by the NAACP and Sierra Club's reaction to the agreement, particularly since there has been no effort on either side to talk with General Tire officials about their objections.

"Today, we're asking very strongly for a meeting with Morales to discuss what we think is an overwhelming supply of community support."

Gorman said Morales' decision to withdraw his support has had a psychological effect on the company's 230 employees — 35 of whom have left to seek other business opportunities because of the dilemma.

"They feel very uncertain about their future. ... We feel this is unfortunate and unecessary."

General Tire said that if the present agreement stands, the corporation intends to spend $30 million on capital equipment in addition to millions more to close its solar ponds.

During a news conference Thursday, Gorman learned that 46 southside businesses employing 2,000 workers had signed a petition that's being sent to Morales to show him there is community support for the plant.

"Attorney General Morales should cut through the petty local politics that are standing in the way of this agreement and protect the jobs and investment we have here in Odessa," he said.

CLOUT: Bentsen move is 'good, bad' for Texas, political watchers say prestigious place to have a Texan.

(From 1A)

Bentsen will become only the third Texan in the 203-year history of the Treasury Department to head the influential agency, joining John Connally and Jim Baker.

He may be adding to his place in history, but Texans from Gov. Ann Richards on down are keenly aware that the state will lose a lot: power, political savvy and a place in Congress' inner sanctum.

"You can't be disappointed by an opportunity like that," says Rep. Pete Geren, the Fort Worth Democrat who once served on Bentsen's staff.

"I just wish there were two of him so we could have Lloyd Bentsen as senior senator from Texas and Lloyd Bentsen as secretary of the Treasury."

The worry was clear last week when Richards voiced her desire that Bentsen remain in the Senate and continue building on his 22 years of seniority.

Richards even telephoned President-elect Clinton to point out that Bentsen, as chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, could play a pivotal role in pushing the administration's economic package through Congress.

"Lloyd Bentsen has been pretty much our godfather in Washington, shepherding the projects that are close and dear to our hearts down here through Congress," says Bill Cryer, Richards' press secretary.

"He watches over the Texas interests like no one else in Washington."

Added to the mix is Democratic concern that Bentsen's seat could fall into GOP hands.

Bentsen's successor, whoever he or she may be, will be starting at the bottom rung — the newest freshman among 12 other Senate newcomers.

The 71-year-old senator's influence wasn't built in a day.

The scion of a wealthy Rio Grande Valley family, Bentsen first dabbled in politics after returning from World War II. The decorated bomber pilot was elected Hidalgo County judge in 1946, then moved to the U.S. House of Representatives in 1948 at the age of 27.

By 1954, Bentsen decided not to seek re-election and instead returned to private life to build a fortune independent from his father's extensive farming, ranching, banking, oil and real estate holdings.

Corporate success and the realization that he wanted to be remembered for something other than his net worth led the Houston millionaire insurance executive to challenge Sen. Ralph Yarborough in 1970.

After winning the primary, Bentsen went on to defeat Houston Congressman George Bush for the first of four Senate terms.

The courtly Bentsen initially drew little attention in the Senate, in part because he rarely sought the limelight. But the conservative Democrat quickly built a reputation as a bipartisan coalition-builder and a master of the legislative process.

Bentsen's national aspirations led him to seek the 1976 Democratic presidential nomination, a race he abandoned after gaining little support early on.

His name was mentioned as a possible vice-presidential running mate for Walter Mondale in 1984.

By 1988, Bentsen was one of the Senate's most respected voices on trade, economic issues and foreign affairs. That background and the geographical balance Bentsen offered led Michael Dukakis to select him as his vice presidential running mate.

Bentsen provided one of the highlights of the '88 campaign when he zinged rival Dan Quayle with the now-famous putdown: "Senator, you're no Jack Kennedy."

Despite Bentsen's presence, the ticket didn't carry Texas — or for that matter 39 other states. But he emerged with an enhanced reputation and was urged by many Democrats to run for president in 1992.

Bentsen's stature crosses party lines: Independent presidential candidate Ross Perot said earlier this year that he would not have entered the race had Bentsen sought the White House.

Menchu wins Nobel Peace Prize

OSLO, Norway — Indian rights activist Rigoberta Menchu accepted the Nobel Peace Prize on Thursday, calling it a tribute to exploited people in her native Guatemala and around the world.

"Today we must fight for a better world, without poverty, without racism, with peace," said Menchu.

The 33-year-old laureate won the $973,000 prize for her efforts to bring peace and reconciliation to Guatemala. Some 120,000 people, including Menchu's parents and brother, have died in the Central American country's three decades of civil war.

The award coincided with the 500th anniversary of Columbus' arrival in America. For Menchu and others, 1492 marks the beginning of centuries of violent repression.

"I consider this prize not as an award to me personally, but rather as one of the greatest conquests in the struggle for peace, for human rights and for the rights of the indigenous people who, along all the 500 years, have been ... the victims of genocides, repression and discrimination," she said.

"Let there be freedom for Indians .. because while they are alive, a glow of hope will be alive as well," she said.

The choice of Menchu as the 1992 peace prize recipient was controversial because she has been accused of having ties to armed rebel groups in Guatemala. She claims that anyone who campaigns for human rights in her country is called a rebel.

"This Nobel Prize is a recognition to those who have been, and still are in most parts of the world, the most exploited of the exploited ones, the most discriminated of the discriminated ones," she told the audience in the crowded Oslo City Hall.

Menchu asked Burma's generals to release the 1991 Nobel Peace Prize winner, Aung San Suu Kyi, who has been under house arrest for more than three years for leading a democracy movement.

The chairman of the Norwegian Nobel Committee, Francis Sejersted, presented the Nobel peace medal and diploma.

"By maintaining a disarming humanity in a brutal world, Rigoberta Menchu ... appeals to the best in us," Sejersted said. "She stands as a uniquely potent symbol of a just struggle."

Menchu says she will use the prize money to set up a human rights monitoring foundation in memory of her father, a peasant leader burned alive during a protest.

The peace prize and other Nobel awards are always presented in Oslo and Stockholm, Sweden, on Dec. 10, the anniversary of the death of Alfred Nobel, the Swedish inventor of dynamite who used his fortune to endow the prizes.

At Stockholm City Hall, the Nobel literature prize was presented to Derek Walcott of St. Lucia. Edmond Fischer and Edwin Krebs of the University of Washington in Seattle received the medicine prize, and Georges Charpak, a Polish-born French citizen, got the physics prize.

Rudolph Marcus, an American citizen born in Canada, received the chemistry prize. The Nobel in economics, endowed by the Bank of Sweden in 1968, went to Gary S. Becker of the University of Chicago.

Militia overrun government base

By John Jennings
Associated Press Writer

KABUL, Afghanistan — Militiamen overran a key security post controlled by forces of the Islamic interim government, then agreed to pull back to their bases, the Defense Ministry said Thursday.

Wednesday's firefight in battered Kabul was seen as a warning to President Burhanuddin Rabbani, who hinted earlier this week that he might not surrender power later this month as scheduled.

The militia, headed by Gen. Abdul Rashid Dostam, seized the Bala Hisar fort on the eastern edge of Kabul following a daylong battle with government troops, a ministry spokesman said on condition of anonymity

The two rival sides, which joined forces to topple the former Communist regime in April, agreed late Wednesday to hold their fire, the spokesman said. Dostam's officers also agreed to withdraw their predominantly Uzbek fighters, he said.

The militiamen pulled back from a major intersection wrested from the Kabul garrison and the Department of State Security. But Dostam's troops still controlled the main road from the airport in western Kabul to the city center and occupied sandbag bunkers near the Defense Ministry and presidential palace.

Rabbani's tenure is due to expire when a grand council of tribal and religious elders and scholars meets to elect Afghanistan's next rulers and chart the next phase of its transition from Communist to Islamic rule.

The council is scheduled to convene Tuesday, but many Afghans expect a delay because of charges of vote-buying and bribery by Rabbani's government.

With his forces now controlling the airport and the main highway, Dostam could easily bring in reinforcements for an assault on Rabbani's government.

Dostam's militia had helped to prop up the former Communist regime in the 14-year civil war against the Muslim rebels. But Dostam switched sides and joined forces with the guerrillas to install an Islamic government.

Ever since, the Afghan capital has been wracked by fighting among the diverse groups vying for control. Kabul has endured more destruction this past six months than during the civil war.

Prime minister pleads for help as citizens starve in Sarajevo

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Hercegovina (AP) — The hungry hung on the gates of Sarajevo's last functioning bakery Thursday, but bread supplies were running out nine days after the humanitarian airlift was suspended because of fighting.

U.N. officials said their emergency food stocks were almost gone.

In Brussels, diplomats said several NATO nations were on the verge of intervening militarily to stop the ethnic war over Bosnia's secession from Yugoslavia.

Fears have risen that Sarajevo is close to falling to ethnic Serb forces that have besieged the Muslim-controlled capital for eight months. Western nations have mainly blamed Serbs and Serb-dominated Yugoslavia for failures to end the war, in which Serbs have captured about 70 percent of Bosnia.

Dutch Prime Minister Ruud Lubbers made an impassioned plea Thursday for outside intervention.

"I don't give a damn who takes the lead," he told his parliament. "I think it's downright scandalous that there's intervention in Somalia, but not in Yugoslavia."

At least 17,000 people have died in the fighting among Muslims, Serbs and Croats, and more than 100,000 are officially listed as missing. Sarajevo's 400,000 residents have been surviving on meager rations for months.

Sarajevo officials said they could barely produce 25,000 loaves of bread a day — about a fifth of peak production and only enough to meet the needs of hospitals and refugees from fighting elsewhere in Bosnia.

"The basic food now is bread," said Husein Ahmovic, assistant manager at the bakery. "Without it, it's starvation."

Amira Pinjic, a typist, said she had been living on bread and tea for 10 days. She got her last U.N. aid package on Nov. 21. It contained two small cans of meat, two of fish, 6½ pounds of flour, some hot chocolate and four U.S. military combat meals.

Sarajevo suffered through a fourth straight wintry day without electricity and water because fighting prevented repairs to power lines.

Dwindling bread production has heightened tensions at the bakery's gates, where people collect a daily ration of a 6-inch chunk of bread. One man who felt his slice was too small Wednesday battered a bakery employee's head with an umbrella, Ahmovic said.

In Zagreb, Croatia's capital, U.N. spokesman Peter Kessler said relief flights likely would not resume before Tuesday. They were halted on Dec. 1 after a U.S. plane was hit be gunfire.

Fighting and Serb roadblocks also have hindered truck convoys. One U.N. convoy of 19 trucks with 221 tons of supplies reached Sarajevo on Thursday.

Diplomats said the defense ministers of NATO's 16 nations discussed the possibility of military intervention under U.N. auspices. German Defense Minister Volker Ruehe said "several NATO states were ready" to offer military muscle to end the war.

NATO's military planners were drafting preliminary plans in case the U.N. Security Council mandated intervention, officials said.

The United States and Britain fear an outside force could get bogged down in a guerrilla war in the mountainous country.

NATO members favor intervention

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Some NATO allies expressed support Thursday for using a U.N.-supervised military force to try to end the ethnic war in Bosnia and prevent it from spreading to neighboring states.

Defense Ministry Volker Ruehe of Germany said several members of the 16-nation North American Treaty Organization were ready to offer troops if the United Nations authorizes sending armed forces to Bosnia.

The contingency plans being discussed by NATO leaders include air strikes on Serb artillery, air patrols to enforce the U.N. ban on Serb military flights over Bosnia and troops to create safe havens for victims of "ethnic cleansing."

He added, however, it would be "inappropriate" to have U.S. forces on the ground in Bosnia-Herzegovina, where at least 17,000 people have died in the 10 months of fighting among Muslims, Serbs and Croats.

The United States and Britain have been most hesitant to use force in the former Yugoslavia for fear of getting bogged down in a guerrilla war. Even limited military action, such as air strikes against Serb planes violating the U.N's "no-fly" zone, has risks for civilians on the ground.

In recent days, officials have warned military intervention may threaten the lightly armed U.N. peacekeepers.

Of growing concern is the fear that bloodshed will spill into Serbia's ethnic Albanian-dominated Kosovo province and neighboring Macedonia. This could bring Albania, which has vowed to defend the Albanians of Kosovo, into the fray along with Turkey, which recently signed a friendship treaty with Tirana.

To get to Kosovo, Albanian troops would have to cross Macedonia. If they do, Macedonians fear they would face a Serb invasion.

The U.N. Security Council warned Wednesday it would swiftly consider "further measures" — hinting at military force — if Serbs did not lift their siege of Sarajevo, the Bosnian capital.

German leader bans Neo-Nazi party, defends human dignity

By Ferdinand Protzman
N.Y. Times News Service

BONN, Germany — In a rare display of solidarity, Germany's parliamentary leaders closed ranks on Thursday to condemn the rising violence against foreigners, while the Bonn government stepped up its assault on militant rightists, banning a second neo-Nazi party and starting a wave of house searches and arrests.

Those actions coincided with a speech by Chancellor Helmut Kohl that opened a scheduled parliamentary debate on the violence. After weeks of relative silence, Kohl took his toughest stand so far, saying Germany has a moral duty imposed by its past to act against neo-Nazis responsible for the violence against foreigners and Jewish memorials. He promised "no leniency."

The chancellor said there have been more than 2,000 such attacks this year that have taken 17 lives, eight of them foreigners.

"We are all witnesses to a terrifying increase in violence in our country," Kohl said. He cited the deaths of a Turkish woman and two girls in a firebombing in the western German town of Moelln in late November as a chilling example of the right-wing violence that has badly tarnished Germany's international image and become the overriding concern of most people living here.

"Whoever thinks that they can change our land with a climate of intimidation and fear, they are fooling themselves," Kohl said. "Germany is a democracy that can defend itself and we will prove it now."

The government quickly backed those words by banning the Deutsche Alternativ (German Alternative), a neo-Nazi party based in western Germany, with a stronghold in the eastern German town of Cottbus. It is the second neo-Nazi party to be banned. On Nov. 27, Rudolf Seiters, Germany's interior minister, banned a group called the Nationalist Front.

'Whoever thinks that they can change our land with a climate of intimidation and fear, they are fooling themselves. Germany is a democracy that can defend itself and we will prove it now.'

—Chancellor Helmut Kohl

Answering critics who have accused him of playing down the violence in an attempt to win right-wing voters, Kohl said Germany's history has given it an enduring obligation to battle militancy from the left or right.

"With the background of history in this century, especially the National Socialist dictatorship, we Germans are in a very special way called upon to stand up against any kind of violence and guarantee human dignity," Kohl said. "We extend special solidarity to all people of the Jewish faith. This is what we, and future generations in Germany, owe to the memory of the victims of National Socialism."

Wolfgang Thierse, the deputy chairman of the opposition Social Democratic Party, echoed that view. "We must use this hour for self-criticism," he told Parliament.

The current crackdown began after the Moelln killings. But that has fueled criticism that Germany's political leaders are partly responsible for those deaths because they waited too long and treated the right-wing threat too lightly.

Some Germans, including Ignaz Bubis, chairman of the Central Council of Jews in Germany, have suggested the government's actions were prompted not by human concern but by fears that the country's image and its export-oriented economy could be severely damaged if the violence is not brought under control.

"There might be some truth in that, but not the whole truth," said Werner Hoyer, the parliamentary whip of the Free Democratic Party, the junior partner in Kohl's conservative coalition. "We are taking this thing seriously and we are going to solve it. I and the great majority of Germans are deeply disturbed and deeply, personally ashamed of what is going on. People are taking to the streets demanding that it stop."

Hoyer was referring to demonstrations in Munich and other cities over the last week in which hundreds of thousands of Germans have called for an end to the violence.

Despite those gatherings, the attacks have continued on a daily basis. But the government has demonstrated its resolve in dealing with the radical right, by banning neo-Nazi groups.

Indian death toll climbs

NEW DELHI, India (NYT) — The Indian government announced a ban on five powerful Hindu and Muslim fundamentalist organizations on Thursday night as the death toll in rioting and clashes with security forces rose to 950.

Bombay, Calcutta, and parts of Northern India were hit by violence for the fifth straight day after the demolition of a 16th-century mosque at Ayodhya by Hindus. The actual death toll is thought to be much higher than official figures.

The Ministry of Home Affairs said three prominent Hindu groups that have spearheaded a Hindu revivalist campaign were banned and accused of spreading religious hatred and destroying the mosque.

The Muslim groups that were also banned are Islamic Sevak Sangh, which is influential in the southern state of Kerala, and Jamait-e-Islami. The Islamic Sevak Sangh was charged with spreading communal discord and hatred while the Jamait-e-Islami was accused of advocating secession.

It is not clear how the ban will help to calm the situation since many leaders from these groups, alerted by the government's announcement on Monday that it planned to outlaw "communal organizations," have already fled their homes and offices and gone into hiding.

Another major hurdle that could block an effective crackdown on these groups is the fact that the Bharatiya Janata Party, a right-wing Hindu revivalist party that has close links with all three banned Hindu groups, is in power in the three northern and central states of Himachal Pradesh, Rajhasthan, and Madhya Pradesh.

Leaders of Bharatiya Janata, including Lal Krishna Advani, the party's leader in Parliament, and Murali Manohar Joshi, its president, were remanded to judicial custody for a week by a magistrate at Akbarpur, a town southeast near Ayodhya.

The magistrate converted a small airport building into a temporary court for nearly four hours as supporters of the detained leaders shouted slogans protesting their detention. In brief remarks to reporters, Advani described the government as "panic-stricken and confused."

Prime Minister P.V. Narasimha Rao, who said on Thursday night on televison that the situation across India was improving, has not indicated how he will react if the party's 150 members of Parliament and the three states the party controls refuse to honor the ban.

Rajendra Singh, a spokesman for the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh, a Hindu group that was outlawed, said his group would oppose the ban "tooth and nail by legitimate means." The Islamic Sevak Sangh developed recently in southern India as a reaction to the influence of the Rashtriya Sangh, which was formed more than 60 years ago and has been banned twice before in India's history — following the assassination of Mohandas K. Gandhi in 1948 and during Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's emergency rule in 1975.

The government accused all three organizations on Thursday of taking an active part in the demolition of the mosque at Ayodhya.

The Bajrang Dal, formed in 1984, is primarily made up of young Hindus who wear saffron scarves and headbands and carry tridents, swords, and knives. The Vishwa Hindu Parishad, formed in 1961, has been the most active of all the groups in the campaign to build a Hindu temple on the site of the demolished 464-year-old mosque, built by the Mogul Emperor Babur.

In the state of Gujarat, news reports said a mob pulled eight passengers from a train near Surat and beat them to death.

Archaelogist: Shipwrecks are 'frozen moment in time'

By John Flesher
Associated Press writer

ABOARD THE PLEASURE DIVER NEAR THUNDER BAY ISLAND, Mich. — It's early afternoon, but fog still hovers over gray, gently rolling Lake Huron as researchers prepare to visit the underwater grave of a once-proud freighter.

From somewhere on the nearby island, a foghorn blast repeatedly warns ships away from the shallow, rocky shoals.

For centuries, too few respected the danger.

The four miles of water separating Thunder Bay Island from the Michigan coast is a graveyard, its bottom littered with skeletons of cargo, fishing and pleasure craft.

An ideal setting to test what the photographers, scientists and historians aboard Pleasure Diver hope will be a breakthrough in shipwreck exploration: Video Mosaic Imaging uses a home-video camcorder and a computer to photograph sunken vessels bit by bit, then combine the images electronically into a complete picture, or "map."

VMI could enable researchers to map a wreck in a few days. Using conventional technology, the process can take years, because photographers must take hundreds of overlapping, still pictures and combine them into a mosaic with scissors and glue.

"This new system will allow an immense saving of time and resources, and archaeologists love it because you get far better detail," said Kurt Stepnitz, a natural science photographer with Michigan State University in East Lansing.

The technology, now being field-tested, was developed by Great Lakes Visual-Research Inc., a Lansing-based underwater photography company, and the Michigan Sea Grant Program, a Great Lakes research cooperative affiliated with the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor.

In addition to detecting flaws in the system, the tests are a showcase for representatives of government agencies and private researchers who might find it useful — and help fund continued development.

Shipwrecks can provide a wealth of information, said Jet Lowe, an archaeologist with the National Park Service who is observing the tests.

"Anything that goes down in the Great Lakes is pretty well-preserved" because of low water temperatures, Lowe said. "You've really got a huge museum on the bottom of the Great Lakes.

"To the untrained eye, they (shipwrecks) may just look like a pile of rubble. But to someone who knows what to look for, they're like a frozen . . . moment in time."

Maritime historian Jay Martin of Bowling Green University said wrecks tell stories about the evolution of shipbuilding and the lives of those who once traversed the lakes.

Last year, for example, the team did its first field test of Video Mosaic Imaging technology on the Alva Bradley, a cargo ship that sank in Lake Michigan in 1892. Someone discovered pieces of a pistol in the captain's quarters, showing that ship officers felt it necessary to arm themselves in case their crews got too rowdy or even mutinied, Martin said.

"People tend to think of how idyllic it was back then, spending your life sailing around the lakes," he said. "In fact, it was quite dangerous back in the 1800s. The sailors were a rough-and-tumble lot."

Great Lakes Visual-Research cofounder Harley Seeley, an archaeological photographer, designed the VMI system with two primary goals. He wanted clear, detailed shipwreck maps that could be produced quickly and efficiently.

And he wanted a system that would be affordable for government agencies, academics, community preservation groups or anyone else with an interest in shipwreck photography.

The computer system, camera and other equipment cost $12,000 to $15,000, Seeley said. "But once you get these start-up costs out of the way, the process itself is relatively inexpensive."

The eight-member crew set out from Alpena aboard the Pleasure Diver, a 46-foot converted Army boat, earlier this month. Destination: the remains of a ship about 15 feet underwater near Sugar Island, a short jump from Thunder Bay Island. Spotted from the air in May, the ship is believed to be the New Orleans, a side-wheel steamer that sank in 1849.

The ship's hull is clearly visible on the computer screen. But there's a catch: The underwater surge is so strong that even with two divers holding the frame, the camera seldom is steady enough for top-quality images.

After about an hour, they call a halt, planning to try the New Orleans the next day. But the weather is so bad, the mission is scrubbed.

Royal fairy tale ends after years of gossip

Cinderella's coach has turned into a pumpkin, and her fine white stallions into mice.

Prince Charles and Princess Diana, whose fairy tale romance and wedding at St. Paul's Cathedral in 1981 drew worldwide attention, are separating, but say there will be no divorce. Thus, Charles can still ascend to the throne and Diana can still be crowned queen.

Their marital problems had been the subject of gossip and tabloid headlines for years. Earlier this year, Diana was portrayed as suicidal in a best selling book called "Diana: Her True Story." A taped conversation between a woman reported to be Diana and a man other than Charles, and another between Charles and an old friend named Camilla Parker Bowles added fuel to the fire of scandal. The masses both in Great Britain and the United States seemed to have a fascination with the royal scandal.

At times, the couple's marital woes took on a comic twist, but Wednesday's announcement verified as true at least some of what the tabloids had been reporting for years. Behind the pageantry and the royal smiles, there was the pain of the human tragedy.

While the separation of Charles and Diana illustrates that even money and power cannot protect royalty from the problems experienced by couples around the world — and that those from royal bloodlines are no more immune to the personal tragedies of today than are common folk — it is only one of the calamities that have befallen the throne in the past year.

Tabloid newspapers have published photographs of Prince Andrew's wife cavorting topless with another man. Anne, Queen Elizabeth II's daughter, has divorced, Andrew and his wife have separated, and Windsor Castle has burned. There also are rumors that the current queen may be the last in the long line of monarchs.

Queen Elizabeth II has already taken steps many deemed past due — assuming support of relatives formerly supported by taxes and giving up her own income tax exemption in the midst of complaints from her subjects. Yet even those changes have not quieted the voices of those who say the monarchy is antiquated government.

In the long view, however, it would be foolish to assume that the marital problems of Charles and Diana would mark the end of the royal dynasty. Historically, the throne has faced numerous challenges of even graver proportion and weathered them.

It's sad that the fairy tale is over, but it truly may be only a footnote in the history of the British crown.

'Fair Share' plan is blow to Richards' credibility

Not surprisingly, the Legislature's special session ended in embarrassment for all involved.

Gov. Ann Richards' so-called "Fair Share" plan was stymied by Republicans. Richards and Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock proved incapable of leading the state at this crucial moment. But Republicans fared no better. When they were given the chance to put forward their own plan, they stood there empty handed, looking foolish.

This disastrous session shows why Richards should never have called it in the first place. She went into this knowing she probably did not have the needed support, but she tried anyway. This has been a serious blow to her credibility. But Republicans need not take comfort in her defeat. Their obstructive actions were not helpful for the state or their reputation.

NAFTA to provide important new market for U.S. banks

Now that Bill Clinton is no longer candidate Clinton, but soon-to-be President Clinton, he is facing a number of domestic choices. On his list of priorities should be the ratification of the North American Free Trade Agreement, for which candidate Clinton voiced support.

The free-trade agreement will affect the American economy in a number of ways, but one that has not been spotlighted, yet which represents a significant advance, is banking. In short, the new trade agreement provides an important new market for U.S. banks.

The agreement's banking provisions are a good example of what free-trading arrangements offer: expansion and growth. The task Bill Clinton thus has before him is to ensure that in drafting enabling legislation, Congress sticks to the text which the Bush administration painstakingly negotiated. In the banking sphere, the agreement represents progress and a chance to further strengthen U.S. banks.

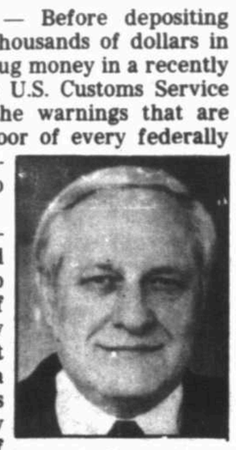
Customs loses money in failed bank

WASHINGTON — Before depositing hundreds of thousands of dollars in confiscated drug money in a recently failed Texas bank, the U.S. Customs Service should have heeded the warnings that are posted on the front door of every federally insured institution: Insured only up to $100,000.



Anderson

Embarrassed Customs officials now find themselves exposed to large losses because of uninsured funds they deposited in the First City Bank of Houston, a chain of 20 banks owned by the First City Bankcorporation of Texas which went belly-up in October. Customs concedes that it had upwards of $400,000 in uninsured deposits at First City, while other officials put the figure closer to $1 million.

At first, Customs didn't cotton to the idea of being treated like any other unfortunate customer. According to numerous government officials, Customs pleaded behind-the-scenes for special treatment with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., the agency that insures deposits in the nation's commercial banks.

Customs apparently argued that it should be allowed to cut in line ahead of other uninsured depositors because it was a federal agency. But they were rebuffed by their bureaucratic brethren at the FDIC, who are treating Customs — which ironically falls under the Department of Treasury — like they would an elderly retiree or wage earner.

Alan J. Whitney, director of corporate communications for the FDIC, although refusing to comment on this particular case, explains there is no legal basis for treating the depositors of a federal agency differently than any other depositor.

Half of the approximately 111 bank failures this year have resulted in uninsured depositors suffering some level of loss. In the case of First City, there were 5,000 bank accounts in excess of the insured limit for a total of $260 million. Customs and other uninsured depositors are expected to recoup 80 percent of their uninsured money.

Asked by our associate Dean Boyd why the deposit insurance limit was disregarded, Customs spokesman Bill Anthony argued, "It wasn't like a Customs bank account that the taxpayers had, it was money that they grabbed from a drug dealer. They put it in there with no idea that the bank was going to fail. ... (But) you're probably right. They could have been more careful."

Government sources in Texas and Washington say that Customs found itself awash in millions in cash after a rash of seizures from Colombian money launderers this fall. In such cases, Customs turns the money over to a local bank for custodial purposes where it can be stored in a vault until a determination is reached about whether cash samples are required as evidence.

Had Customs kept the cash in the bank vault for safekeeping, First City's collapse would not have left the agency's money at risk. But, at some point, Customs officials opted to transfer some of the cash from the vault to an interest-bearing deposit account — and in chunks larger than the $100,000 insurance threshold.

The incident has left other federal banking officials baffled. A veritable death watch had hovered over First City for many months, with rumors of its impending demise — the stuff of daily front-page headlines and television reports. First City is also the first institution ever rescued twice by federal regulators. In 1988, the FDIC contributed an emergency infusion of more than $900 million for a bailout plan for the bank.

CHARLEY REESE

Peace talks to be greatest challenge

One of the first things President-elect Bill Clinton will learn after his inauguration next month is that being president-elect is a lot more fun than being president.

Prior to taking office, everything is promise, hope and potential. Once there, it's decision time and practically every decision a president makes will frost somebody. The presidency is where expectations and reality collide. The bigger casualty is nearly always the expectations.

Reese

No where will this become more evident to Clinton than when he becomes responsible for the Middle East peace talks. From a purely domestic political viewpoint, this is virtually a no-win situation for Clinton.

The Arab participants expect the U.S. to pressure Israel. This is quite reasonable really because the Arab participants have zero leverage over Israel. It is Israel that occupies Arab territory, not the reverse. It is Israel that is the military super-power, complete with nuclear weapons — not the Arabs. It is Israel that has a superpower sponsor (us) — not the Arabs.

If Israel chooses to continue to occupy Syria's Golan Heights and a piece of Lebanon, there is nothing either country can do about it for the foreseeable future. The Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza are in a hopelessly weak position. They are under direct military control by the Israelis who can easily make their lives unbearable to the point of despair.

In short, there is a drastic imbalance at the negotiating table in Israel's favor. Israel doesn't have to concede anything and the Arabs have nothing left to concede. The so-called Arab boycott is so ineffective it's a joke. It's useful only for Israeli propaganda. Thus, there is the expectation in the Arab world that the U.S. ought to pressure Israel to give up land for peace as the United Nations Security Council resolution demands.

If Clinton does, however, he will catch hell from Israel and her supporters in the U.S. If he doesn't, the peace talks will likely collapse. Hence, no matter what Clinton does, he's going to be less popular coming out than going in.

This is the kind of situation that will be new for Clinton. Candidates deal in promises. Governors deal in issues that no matter how they are decided don't involve large numbers of people getting killed or set off 40 years of murderous conflict. People who disagreed with Clinton as governor of Arkansas just disagreed with him on issues that were not of life and death importance to them. Most domestic political issues are like a basketball game — we may be thrilled or disappointed with the final score, depending on which team we root for, but it really doesn't matter all that much.

Not so in places like the Middle East. Whether we think it reasonable or not, Israeli paranoia about Arab intentions is quite real. So, too, is the Arab distrust of Israel and their belief that Israel's real goal is not peace but expansion. Arabs are convinced that Israel's strategy is to put off the Palestinian issue, cut deals with the surrounding Arab countries, and then, when Palestinians are totally isolated, annex the West Bank and Gaza. To Palestinians this outcome is an unendurable horror and totally unacceptable. Israeli hardliners are convinced that Arabs only want peace and land in order to prepare for a future attack on Israel.

Thus, Clinton, who as a governor was accustomed to finding consensus based on compromise, will find himself dealing with issues not easily compromised. Despite the difficulties, the talks are a rare opportunity for peace and if it is lost, the future for everyone — Israelis, Arabs and Americans — will be bleaker and bloodier for decades to come. The Middle East represents one of the greatest challenges Clinton will face as president.

WILLIAM MURCHISON

Packwood defines decline of 20th century

Gone, so far as the women's movement is concerned, is Sen. Bob Packwood's cachet. Why, the rat, the worm, the no-good hypocrite — along with standing up for women's rights, he stood up on one woman staffer's toes while trying to undress her.

Murchison

As it turns out, this was just one instance of the senator's regard for women. The papers and news broadcasts have been full of his exploits, which include touching and kissing, mostly with staff members. No wonder the, um, gentleman from Oregon was so interested in women's issues; he was interested in women, period, but in no complimentary way. Could his vote against Clarence Thomas, whom he denounced as the sexual tormentor of Anita Hill, be explained by the adage "It takes one to know one?"

We could rightly say, "What a hypocrite!" and let it go at that, waiting for some modern Moliere to turn the Packwood saga into the inevitable made-for-television movie, starring Martin Sheen and Vanna White. But the saga doesn't lend itself to easy dismissal. Like the Hill-Thomas epic, it speaks volumes about manners and mores in these, the 20th century's ember years.

The women's movement, whose principles Packwood upheld publicly while violating them privately, is about respect and the desire for same. This is right and proper. All human beings — regardless (as we nowadays say) of race, sex, ethnic origin, disability, religion, sexual orientation or Vietnam war status — are entitled to respect. Which is different, it seems to me, from statutory protection.

Statutory protection you sometimes have to have, but frankly it's the slenderest of reeds on which to lean. The women's movement has yet to make this discovery. To the politicians the movement goes, demanding protection — laws, regulations and the like. The newest kick is becoming politicians, as did many movement's members in this vaunted Year of the Woman. The idea is to seize and wield — for all the right reasons, naturally — the levers of power.

It seldom works. Respect, the most fragile commodity in the world, isn't founded on law; it is founded on custom, which in turn is founded on conviction. Using the media — which have never been so powerful as they are today — you can whip the politicians into a lather and secure the passage of this or that statute. But that changes behavior, not minds. As bad Bob Packwood demonstrates, even proponents of the law don't necessarily wind up observing it.

What you want is not so much equal rights — rights being a legal construct — as human dignity. The latter has to be taught. Hardly anyone teaches it any more. There, my friends, is the heart of this dilemma.

Once we taught young men to be gentlemen and young girls to be ladies. What are these terms today? Notations on the restroom door.

The mutual obligations these concepts implied — gentlemanly and ladylike behavior — no longer obtain. The Washington Post reports that girls 7 and 8-years-old complain of boys' calling them bad names and pulling up their skirts. I'll testify that it wasn't so 40 years ago. Papa, or some other male authority figure of sturdy build and stern morals, would have pulled down the offender's pants and whaled the tar out of him. This was society, pre-Bob Packwood, defending-its values: practicing as well as preaching what it knew to be right. Packwood himself in the old days might have received a distinctly non-social call from a victim's brother. There would have been vocal talk of horsewhipping, and the errant senator, thoughtfully rubbing his shoulders, might have mended his ways.

Violence! Oh, how we 1990s people shudder at the thought, as we clasp pallid hands together in anguish. Actually, violence isn't the point. Belief is the point. What you believe, you enforce. Modern society's non-belief in the obligations of men to women is matched by only its non-belief in the obligations of women to men. Obligations that proceed, not from any charter of political rights, but from men's and women's common humanity, sub Deo. Deo's precipitous decline in public regard is the late 20th century's defining characteristic. Bob Packwood, rat extraordinaire, is among the consequences of that decline — about as characteristic as you ever come across.

FBI: Agents disagree on Sessions' leadership abilities pursue a criminal investigation over the alleged ethics violations.

Of his management style, Sessions commented, "I would say I'm a tough guy. I believe in facing problems. I believe in dealing with them directly."

But he acknowledged: "You're not looking at a blustery individual. You're not looking at an individual who angers quickly. You're looking at a person who will attack a problem and try to reach an appropriate decision."

Sessions said he expected to serve until his term expires in 1997, and that he has had no contact with the transition team of President-elect Bill Clinton. Although a Republican appointee, he enjoys good rapport with Democrats on Capitol Hill.

An aide to Clinton's transition team who is working on legal policy said, "If Sessions wants to stay, he's in."

With his signature white hair and aviator glasses, Sessions stocks an endless supply of chit-chat on topics ranging from where to get the best Mexican meals in Washington and his beloved home town, San Antonio, to the latest work of author Tom Clancy, a personal friend.

Friends and foes concur that Sessions is courtly and incorruptible. But the agreement ends there.

Sessions loyalists insist politics played no role in the pre-Election Day investigations. They point to a number of the bureau's achievements during Sessions' first five years in office.

The FBI won headlines for its detective work in cases ranging from the 1988 terrorist bombing that downed Pan Am flight 103 to the arrest of New York's chief state judge, Sol Wachtler, this month in the extortion attempt against Republican fundraiser Joy Silverman.

Once far behind the states in computerizing old-fashioned fingerprint file cards, the FBI is building a $750 million state-of-the-art information center in West Virginia that, among other things, will enable the bureau to match fingerprints electronically, said project chief Norman Christensen.

The FBI also is leading the way in using genetic analysis of blood and other body fluids as a way of identifying suspects in violent crimes.

Sessions has pushed for hiring and promotion of minorities and women in the bureau. In 1987, minorities were 9.8 percent of the agent workforce of 9,400; now they are 12.7 percent of a total of 10,500 agents. Women were 8.3 percent; now they are 11.5 percent.

"He's been an excellent director," said Bernardo M. Perez, the agent in charge of the FBI's Albuquerque, N.M., office who led Hispanic agents in a successful class-action discrimination lawsuit against the bureau in 1987. Against the advice of virtually every senior agent in the bureau, Sessions declined to appeal the ruling.

"I don't think the FBI was ever more productive than it is now," said Charles Parsons, in charge of the FBI's Los Angeles office.

Some opposition to Sessions comes from white agents angry over what they see as overly generous concessions to minorities and women.

But several senior officials, who spoke on condition that their names not be used, insist race has nothing to do with their low regard for Sessions. They charge that he is unable to grasp complicated issues and make forceful decisions.

"He is more of a cheerleader than a hands-on manager," said one such agent who recently retired. "He goes around the country giving the same speech to too many people," said another senior agent. "There's way too much Rotary 101. You can talk to guy for 20 minutes and he doesn't say anything."

Yet another agent says Sessions' attention span is short. This agent and others said that in meetings on difficult policy decisions, Sessions has on occasion interrupted to offer agents cookies or has become distracted by the TV set that was constantly on in his office.

But the critics' view is far from universal. "I've never failed to find him fully grasp an issue," said Dick Held, in charge of the San Francisco FBI office.

However, many agents are upset because Sessions failed to block a U.S. Marshal Service effort to seize a portion of the bureau's responsibility for catching fugitives. He also failed to fight the Secret Service's bid to start investigating savings-and-loan fraud cases, once an exclusive domain of the FBI.

Sessions also has had to deal with charges that his chief personal aide, Munford, flashed her FBI credential at a Texas state trooper to avoid a traffic summons against her son and tried to steer a contract to her then-husband, Don Munford. Sarah Munford, who has been notified that she may be fired, called the charges "ridiculous."

Sessions has had to spend additional time dealing with complaints about his wife.

Midland firm lights the way

Chamber recognizes Tomcat's growth, contributions

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff writer

Mitch Clark has helped shine the light on some of the biggest names in entertainment. Along the way, Clark has contributed to the economic development of Midland.

Clark's Midland-based manufacturing company, Tomcat USA, produces aluminum staging, lighting and support systems for the entertainment industry.

"Our clients are diverse, from the Rolling Stones to Mickey Mouse," Clark said Thursday at an open house at Tomcat USA.

The company's clientele is indicative of Tomcat's success.

"We have gained a reputation world-wide as having a high-quality product," he said.

Last year, Tomcat had gross annual sales of $2.49 million.

"In January 1988 we had four employees and we have 30 employees today. So we've had a real jolt of growth," Clark said.

Two months ago, Tomcat moved its operations from a 4,300-square-foot building and almost 3,000 square feet of leased space into a 22,000 square foot facility in the Midland Industrial Park, within the Foreign Trade Zone.

The Midland Chamber of Commerce worked with Clark to secure the property purchased from the Industrial Foundation, a non-profit corporation established to make sure land and facilities are available for manufacturers.

Thomas Stinson, economic development manager for the chamber, emphasized the need to work with businesses already in Midland in addition to attracting new ones.

"Our retention/expansion operation is making sure existing industry is taken care of," he said.

"A large percentage of jobs created comes from existing industry expansion like Tomcat," Stinson said.

Stinson joined other chamber members and Mayor J.D. Faircloth to recognize Tomcat's growth and contribution to the economic development of the city.

Beyond Midland, Tomcat products have spanned worldwide with customers that include: Ringling Brothers, Barnum & Bailey Circus, Genesis, U2, The Beauty and the Beast Ice Show, Opryland in Nashville and magician David Copperfield.

"We sell directly to the artist or to specific shows," Clark said.

Separation of the royals

Many Midlanders don't care about Charles and Diana

By Katherine Poteet
Staff writer

While the separation of Prince Charles and his wife Princess Diana has left the future of Britain's monarchy in question and Britons in a state of shock, not many Midlanders have sympathy for the situation.

Of a group of 15 Midlanders informally asked their opinion on Thursday, only two thought the squabbling couple should try to patch things ıp, with more than half saying they didn't care about Charles and Diana at all.

"I really don't care what they do," said Jo Ellen Piccani. "The thing that struck me, though, is the fact that they managed to do all this without giving up the throne. They separated but didn't divorce. Talk about having your cake and eating too."

Linda Taylor and several others agreed.

"The only reason they are getting any publicity is because of who they are," Ms. Taylor said. "I mean, nobody would care if I got a separation or divorce. It really doesn't matter what they do."

David Volz said he really hadn't thought about it.

"Does it have anything to do with me?" he asked.

"I really don't care, although Diana always looked like a troublemaker to me," Stoney Schourbourgh said.

"Who cares," Paulette Tucker said. "They are just like any other couple who has problems. Why should we get upset over them?"

Others thought the couple should try to work things out.

Education program fails to prepare poor students, panel says

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff writer

The Chapter 1 education program is failing to prepare poor students to succeed and should be radically overhauled, according to a report released Thursday.

The $6.2 billion Chapter 1 program — which currently provides remedial reading, writing, and math for disadvantaged youngsters — is the federal government's largest elementary and secondary education program, accounting for roughly one-fifth of the Department of Education's budget and serving more than 5 million children in nearly 90 percent of the nation's schools.

The Commission on Chapter 1 — a 28-member national commission of leading educators, child advocates, business executives and school officials in Washington, D.C. — spent nearly three years developing a report that demands children be taught higher thinking skills.

The report said, "We agree with the chairman of the National Commission on Excellence in Education's summary in the 1983 report 'A Nation at Risk,'" which said, "We expected less of our young people, and they gave it to us."

"The rationale for the Title 1 (Chapter 1) compensatory education was to supplement education to level the playing field. But it has not happened and the fields are less level from state to state then they ought to be," said William Kolberg, the president of the National Alliance of Business in Washington, D.C, a member of the Commission on Chapter 1.

POOR: Panel praises MISD for teaching higher thinking skills

(From 1B)

"The very notion of Chapter 1 is bankrupt and funding schools has become a political issue, as you can see in Texas," he said.

"There are lawsuits in 22 states which are trying to move toward a more level playing field, or rather, move toward equity," Kolberg said.

Kolberg spoke from the capital in a conference call with eight reporters from cities across the country, several other commission members in Washington, D.C., and Marsha Samponaro, coordinator of federal programs for Midland Independent School District.

Members on the commission applauded Texas school districts for their efforts to continue monetarily rewarding Chapter 1 schools that succeed.

"There are some school districts which have perverse incentives now in place that withdraw funding when schools make progress," the national report said.

"We have never done that in MISD," Ms. Samponaro said, surprising commission members with the example of continuing to award funds to Travis Elementary School even after the school received a $30,000 grant.

"We continue to reward schools even as test scores keep improving," she said. "A lot of other school districts wait until there is a disaster to reward schools. Students may be improving, but they are still poor."

"Kentucky and South Carolina legislators have put into place rewards for schools which make progress, and some form of consequence when there is serious persistent low achievement," said David Hornbeck, commission member, and co-director of the National Alliance for Restructuring Education, and senior policy advisor on the Business Roundtable in Baltimore, Md.

More important than funding, the report decried basic or remedial skills being taught to poor children rather than higher-order thinking skills.

"The original approach of Chapter 1 was to catch students up to their peers ... While it helped a generation of students, its methods are obsolete and the program does not prepare children in poverty for an economy that requires high-level thinking skills," the report said, noting that minority and low-income children are continuing to perform poorly on tests.

Commission members commended MISD for integrating higher thinking skills into curriculum and called the district "an example of what we are trying to do."

"We don't know how people in Allentown should educate their kids," Kolberg said. "We don't know how to teach kids in Allentown. What we know is they should teach world-class standards. We are not proposing a method to punish, but to inform ... The world has changed so much that other elements must be added to education."

Hornbeck said the Chapter 1 program misses the mark because it provides eligible students remedial help outside the regular school program (known as pull-out programs since students are "pulled out" of the regular classroom) when the real problem is the regular school program itself.

Locally, Ms. Samponaro said, "Most of our money is used in full classroom service, with few pull-out programs. We have a remedial reading teacher in every building working with very small groups of students in kindergarten through third grade.

"We also have a 25-minute computer pull-out program at Pease that is a pilot program. We are trying to get computers into classrooms rather than pulling students out."

While the commission's report was called radical, Ms. Samponaro said MISD already has implemented many of the suggestions in the report. "It may be radical to other school districts, especially those who have replaced staff with computers," she said. "But we have been teaching and evaluating higher thinking skills for years. Even though some of our kids may not have privileges or English skills, they can still be enriched."

The report included the following eight main points:

- Each state must set clear, high standards for what all students should know and be able to do.
- States should shift from the low-level, fill-in-the-bubble tests currently used to assess programs in Chapter 1 and instead administer new performance-based systems that measure school progress in enabling students to reach state standards.
- Instead of useless information on what "percentile" their child is in, parents should get clear information at least annually of their child's progress in meeting the standards.
- At least 20 percent of Chapter 1 dollars should be invested in assisting teachers, principals, and other adults in the school with the various tasks involved in transforming their school so that all students reach the standards. This involves reorienting curriculum and improving instructional practice.
- Funding for this program should be concentrated more heavily in schools with higher concentrations of children in poverty. Also, Chapter 1 should be used as a lever to induce states to reduce the disparities within the borders in the provision of core education services.
- Schools should receive funding based on the number of poor children they enroll and should be free to spend it in whatever ways they believe will help increase the number of students meeting the standards.
- Schools should help with family needs as well as those of children by integrating health and social services into the support system for Chapter 1 families.
- States must develop and enforce a system of incentives that rewards schools that make progress — and that assures change in those that do not make progress.

The report concluded: "Chapter 1 is in such great need of reform that tinkering with current law will not work. We urge the new Congress and President-elect Bill Clinton to rewrite the law so that our nation's schools will succeed with students with the greatest need."

Social service agencies to seek more funding

AUSTIN (AP) — Some people might lose access to social service programs because of state budget constraints, Texas Health and Human Services Commissioner Richard Ladd told service providers Thursday.

Ladd said at a meeting of the United Way of Texas, attended by officials from other human service organizations, that state agencies will try to gain federal aid and cut administrative costs before removing people from services.

"In the exercises we've done so far, we've had to go to the bottom line and take people off services," Ladd said.

Ladd issued the warning even as the United Way urged legislators to maintain current funding levels for social services and increase the amount of dollars going to some programs.

United Way officials said their priorities for the 1993 legislative session includes more funding to help support low-income families and provide care for children.

"A number of priorities that have surfaced this time have been on our legislative agenda for the last six sessions," said Barbara Lord Watkins, who chaired the organization's public policy division.

Murder charge

Staff report

ODESSA — An Odessa man was arrested Thursday night in connection with a fatal shooting late last month.

According to a police report, a warrant was issued Thursday for Paris Vonzell Berry, 24. Police arrested Berry and he was charged with murder, according to the report.

Bond was expected to be set today.

Berry was arrested for the Nov. 28 shooting of Michael Ford Young, 21, of Odessa, in the 4600 block of McKnight. Young died Dec. 5 from a gunshot wound to the head.

Police said an investigation into the shooting revealed that Berry's motive for the shooting stemmed from another homicide on July 21, 1991, when Young was present at the shooting of Alvin D. Cornish, who is Berry's cousin.

Accident

ODESSA — A 54-year-old man remained in critical condition Thursday after he was struck by a car while crossing the 900 block of W. Eighth St. Wednesday night, Odessa police said.

Royce Glenn Ellis Sr. failed to yield the right-of-way when he walked into the path of a vehicle driven by Tina Gilday Reyes, 28, police said.

Medical Center Hospital officials would not release the nature of Ellis' injuries.

Ms. Reyes, who was traveling north in the outside lane, was not cited, police said.

Drug charge

A Midland man was free on bond Thursday after officers found marijuana and hashish at his residence Tuesday.

According to a police report, 34-year-old Chastel M. Clark allowed officers to search his residence at 3900 Tanner Drive at about 1 p.m. Officers found three pounds of marijuana, valued at $6,000; 45 grams of hashish, valued at $4,500; and narcotics paraphernalia.

Clark was charged with possession of marijuana and possession of hashish, according to the report. The amount of bond posted by Clark, was not available, jail officials said.

Burglary

A Midland man was in jail Thursday night in connection with a burglary of a business early Thursday morning.

According to a police report, officers were dispatched at 3:47 a.m. to 2207 N. Big Spring to meet with a witness in reference to a burglary. After talking with Taechoy Yi, 36, officers located the suspect, 20-year-old Maurice L. Montgomery, in the 1300 block of Lynn.

Montgomery was arrrested and charged with burglary of a business. Bond was set at $7,500 for the burglary and $500 for resisting arrest.

Clinton to tap Cisneros for HUD, paper says

HOUSTON (AP) — Former San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros, whose name has been mentioned as a candidate to fill U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen's seat, more likely will be named President-elect Clinton's Housing and Urban Development secretary, according to published reports Thursday.

Clinton announced Bentsen's appointment to Treasury secretary on Thursday. Gov. Ann Richards must appoint the Texas Democrat's successor until a special election can be held next year to fill Bentsen's term.

The Houston Chronicle, citing a source with close personal ties to Cisneros, said the former mayor talked to Clinton on Wednesday about taking the HUD job. He said the official announcement could come today.

"I know he had a meeting (Wednesday) with Clinton in respect to HUD," the source said. "That was the recommendation of the team, the transition team, for Henry."

But Cisneros aide John Rosales on Thursday declined to say whether Cisneros would be named HUD secretary. "It's still speculation," Rosales said.

ROYALS: Midlanders don't care

(From 1B)

"I think marriage is made in heaven and they should work on it," said Karen Washington, who added that she and her husband were married the same year as the royal couple and she had her first child the same year Diana did.

"They are setting a bad example," Alexander Perez said. "That nation looks up to them and what are they saying to the people? They need to realize how many people are following what they do."

Other opinion ran against the couple staying together.

"That whole marriage was a fairy tale," Robert Prado said. "It wasn't real from the beginning. They should have realized that."

"Some things work and some things don't,' Warren Frazier said. "Obviously, the marriage wasn't working."

"If they are unhappy, they need to separate," Linda Dillard said. "I think it's pretty evident that they aren't happy."

"It just proves that royalty has just as many problems as anybody else," Ron Bouldin said. "Marriages are the same, if you are royalty or not."

He also said he thought the media had contributed some to the couple's problems.

"The media pursued them relentlessly, picking up every little thing," he said. "I mean, I know they are royalty and their lives are more subject to the public. But, the media never left them alone."

doing it three times a day. They go for an hour at a time," Wolf said.

"They range from their 70s to their 90s," he said. All are women except one 90-year-old man.

"The way some of them (residents) talk, it's beautiful," Wolf said. "It's enjoyable to listen to them. I'll even get home and call them."

Children are encouraged to call and residents are more than willing to fill in for Santa Claus.

"If they want to call everyday that's fine," Wolf said.

"Some kids want to speak to Santa Claus and they (the helpers) say 'sorry he's not here right now,' " he said.

And although Santa may not be available, children love calling, he said.

But "I don't know if they (love it) as much as the residents (love) talking to these kids," Wolf said.

"I think it brings back a lot of memories of Christmas, of their childhood and raising their children," he said.

"It gives them a responsibility also and they look forward to that. They like a schedule and they miss that in their lives," Wolf added.

The nursing center has provided the hotline for seven years.

Chaplains to help soldiers in Somalia deal with shock

Hearst News Service

SAN ANTONIO — Marines and soldiers storming ashore in Somalia are among the toughest troops in the military, but the enormity of human suffering they will see there may be so shocking it will cause psychological problems, officials say.

To ease the stress, the military is deploying psychologists and chaplains to help troops deal with death and starvation on a scale rarely seen in history.

The Army's Health Services Command, based at Fort Sam Houston here, is putting together a training program for chaplains going to Somalia that is designed to help soldiers cope with the sense of helplessness they might experience.

"For many, many years, the chaplaincy has been committed to soldiers experiencing stress and trauma in the battlefield," said Col. Douglas J. Groen, chaplain for the Health Services Command.

"But the battlefield is changing, and probably we will be overwhelmed by scenes of starvation and suffering.

"It will have a psychological impact on the soldier. There's a sense of helplessness in that he can't give any ready answer, and he can't cure long-standing illnesses."

It is not yet determined how many chaplains and psychologists will be sent to Somalia as part of Operation Restore Hope, said officials at the Health Services Command, which manages medical centers and activities at Army posts.

The command is responding to an urgent request by the Army's Office of the Chief Chaplain to design a training program for chaplains heading for Somalia, Groen said.

Soldiers will receive counseling in small groups or individually on an "as needed" basis. The exact format will be determined by each unit's commander, Groen said.

The counseling is similar to that provided rescue workers who handle traumatic events such as plane crashes, he said.

"We're raising issues around recognition of depression and preparing chaplains and soldiers for how they can care for each other," Groen said.

"We're concerned ... that, when they go through this type of trauma, unless they ventilate their feelings, they begin to withdraw."

Soldiers may find themselves struggling with spiritual questions and trying to reconcile what they see in Somalia with their religious beliefs.

"Talking about the goodness of God can have a hollow ring in this situation," Groen said. "This may shake the belief systems of soldiers."

Psychologists have learned from both World War II and Vietnam that early psychological intervention can help, said Joseph Kobos, a psychologist who is director of counseling services at the University of Texas Health Science Center.

Soldiers not only will be dealing with the personal stress of being away from their families during the holidays, but also of being put into an essentially tragic situation, Kobos said.

People experiencing a tragedy go through various stages of shock and anger, he said.

Victim's mother: Execution should have been sooner

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — State officials and the mother of a woman strangled more than seven years ago believe it took too long to put the killer to death.

Kavin Lincecum was executed early Thursday for abducting and killing Brenham teacher Kathy Coppedge, 35, in a 1985 attack that also claimed the life of the woman's 11-year-old son, Casey.

"If they would do it quicker it would be cheaper for the state and be less traumatic for the family of the victims," Joyce Davis of Victoria, Mrs. Coppedge's mother, said after learning of Lincecum's death.

"That is the one thing. Do it quicker."

"Except for victims' families, unfortunately society as a whole forgets those victims," added Drew Durham, an assistant attorney general and the top state official to witness Lincecum's punishment.

"Regrettably, the focus becomes more on the defendant and a lot of sympathy goes toward that defendant. Those victims and their families are still suffering today."

Lincecum's execution occurred seven years after he first was arrested for abducting the pair as they left a church service in Brenham, about 100 miles northwest of Houston.

Durham noted the time gap wasn't as long as other condemned killers, some of whom have waited or are waiting more than a dozen years after their crime.

"The appellate process is still a little bit longer than it needs to be," he said.

Lincecum, 29, had no final words as he lay strapped to the death chamber gurney. He gulped and shook his head slightly when warden Jack Pursley asked for his last statement. Then he closed his eyes and gasped three times as the drugs were administered into his arms.

As a tear trickled from his right eye, he was pronounced dead at 12:18 a.m. CST, seven minutes after the lethal injection began.

Lincecum tried to rape the Mrs. Coppedge and strangled her when she stabbed him with his own knife. Her son was tied up with her purse straps and thrown in the trunk of their car. Casey Coppedge then suffocated when his mother's body also was stuffed into the trunk of the car, which was parked outside in the intense August heat.

The U.S. Supreme Court cleared the way for the execution when it denied Lincecum's appeal on a 9-0 vote about two hours before he was put to death.

Lincecum was the 54th convicted killer executed in Texas since the state resumed capital punishment in 1982 and the 12th this year, the most active year for executions in Texas since 1951 when 13 inmates were sent to the state's electric chair.

Durham said Thursday he expected the one-per-month pace for executions in the state to continue.

Lawmakers commend selection of Bentsen

AUSTIN (AP) — Democrats and Republicans alike Thursday applauded the selection of Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen to be the next Treasury secretary.

But Gov. Ann Richards said the nation's gain was Texas' loss.

"Sen. Bentsen is irreplaceable in the Congress. He was our tireless defender and most elegant champion," Richards said.

The governor, who will name an interim replacement until a special election next year, called Bentsen "one of the most knowledgeable men in Washington and certainly one of the most respected."

The state's other senator, Republican Phil Gramm, offered his congratulations and said he was ready to lead efforts for quick Senate confirmation of Bentsen.

"Sen. Bentsen was an excellent choice to run the Treasury Department. His lifetime of experience and his commitment to a strong business climate will be well received on both Wall Street and Main Street," Gramm said.

"I will miss him as a Senate colleague, but I look forward to working with him in his new post," Gramm said.

Rep. Ron Coleman, D-El Paso, said the appointment would leave big shoes to fill.

"I'm not going to kid you — we are going to miss Lloyd Bentsen's presence in the Senate," Coleman said.

However, he said, "Sen. Bentsen is also now in a position to have tremendous influence on the North American Free Trade Agreement. I feel very confident with Sen. Bentsen in charge that the legislation to implement the free trade agreement is going to be legislation I can be very supportive of."

Senate Minority Robert Dole, R-Kan., said Clinton had "made an excellent selection" in Bentsen.

"Lloyd Bentsen is a man of integrity and great skill who brings instant credibility to the job. Sen. Bentsen is respected on both sides of the aisle, and his nomination should breeze through the Senate," Dole said.

University of Houston political scientist Richard Murray said the state has lost "a power in the Senate."

"But the tradeoff is that he moves into a powerful position in an activist administration."

School limits Mickey Mouse use because of gang association

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Gang members as mouseketeers?

It may sound strange, but officials at a San Antonio middle school are taking it seriously and are limiting the Mickey Mouse emblems students are allowed to wear.

Krueger Middle School officials told the San Antonio Express-News in Thursday's editions that images of Mickey Mouse and Minnie Mouse aren't banned, but students can't dress in mouse ensembles because of possible association with gangs.

For instance, they can't wear a Mickey Mouse shirt with Mickey Mouse shoes and a Mickey Mouse hat.

"We have not told the kids that they can't wear Mickey Mouse clothing, just like we haven't told them that they can't wear black. What we have told them is that they can't be predominant," said Krueger Principal Bob Bird.

Ensembles of the colors royal blue, black and red also are banned.

"What we have told them is that if they wear a black shirt they have to wear different color pants, and if you wear a Mickey Mouse T-shirt, then don't wear Mickey Mouse shoes or Mickey Mouse everything else," Bird said.

Bird said students violating the rule won't be allowed to return to class until their parents meet with school officials.

"What we have told them is that if they wear a black shirt they have to wear different color pants, and if you wear a Mickey Mouse T-shirt, then don't wear Mickey Mouse shoes or Mickey Mouse everything else.

— Krueger Middle School Principal Bob Bird

The Krueger policy doesn't mention the Disney characters by name, but Bird said they fall under the purview of rules banning gang symbols. Both the male and female cartoon mice are associated with specific gangs, Bird said.

San Antonio police Sgt. Bruce Ritchey of the department's gang unit said Mickey Mouse's likeness has been associated with gangs for several years. Ritchey said he has heard Mickey Mouse's initials stand for "Mean Mexican."

"We have drawings of Mickey Mouse holding a gun and assault rifle," Ritchey said.

FAMILY MATTERS

Daughter dreading mother's holiday visit

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: Christmas is a month off and I'm already dreading it because of my mother's visit. She and dad will be coming to stay almost a week and I already know that it's going to be awful. I have a perfectly normal 26-month-old son who is into everything. He is in those "terrible twos" but is as good as any 2 year old boy.

May

My mother expects everyone to be perfect all the time. She is always telling me what I should be doing with (son) and what he's doing wrong. I am a single mother and I think that I do a very good parenting job. I am a teacher so (son) is in day care five days a week. I may be a little lenient with him because I feel guilty about having to leave him in day care, but I don't think that I am a "roll over."

My son already knows to stay away from his grandmother. He and granddad get along great. They go and do things together and have fun. Grandmother, on the other hand, is always telling (son) what he's doing wrong and correcting (or trying to correct) him. As a result, I think that (son) acts worse around her than he normally acts. Then mother is constantly telling me what I'm doing wrong and how she would never let us kids act like that, or do that, or talk like that, and so on. All of this stuff makes me crazy!

Can you give me some ideas as to what I can do about my mother or my son so that I can have some sort of a merry Christmas? I don't know what to do because mother is a very strong-willed person and always thinks that she is right. On the other hand, I don't want to hurt her feelings because I think that she means well. I just want Christmas to be good for everyone. CONFUSED

DEAR CONFUSED: You did not say how often your mother and father visit and that would be an important consideration. If they only visit on special occasions, you might consider "rising above" your mother's criticisms. As you have observed, your mother's behavior is having an undesirable effect on her relationship with her grandson — he is beginning to avoid her. He and granddad are having a great time.

Prepare yourself for the known problems and "observe" the problems instead of reacting to them. That is, try to remain more detached from your mother's comments unless she is hurting your son's feelings. You might consider using the explanation, "Well, that's just mother," to yourself and your son. The idea is to sometimes accept the things you cannot change and to not exhaust yourself trying.

If the visits are more frequent and/or you wish to try changing things, you may wish to speak to her directly. Consider writing to her before her visit, and telling her that you would like to discuss a "communications problem" with her this time. When she arrives, set aside some time for just the two of you to discuss your observations and feelings. Send granddad off with your son to play away from your home.

Try to use "I" messages when talking with your mother. For example, "I feel put-down when you say that you would never let me act like that." The idea is to convey the effect of her comments and behaviors on your feelings. This is not a "right or wrong" discussion, but a "choice of words and content" discussion. You may want to share your parenting philosophies with her — you are allowing your son more freedom since you are not as actively involved in his day-to-day life as you wish to be.

Consider reading Dr. Burton White's book, "The First Three Years," as a solid reference for typical 2-year-old behavior, and Tim Kimmel's book, "Legacy of Love," as a "blueprint" for parenting on purpose. Do not give up. I know that you will develop an approach that will work for you and your family. Christmas is a time for giving and sharing of self — it may be the greatest gift of all!

PARENTING TIPS FROM THE PERMIAN BASIN CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION PROGRAM. The following are some communications tips for parents:

- Respect children and use a courteous tone of voice. If we talk to our children as we would our friends, our youngsters may be more likely to seek us out as confidants.
- Catch children and teens being good. Praise them for cooperating with you or their siblings, for doing those little things that are so easy to take for granted.
- Use "door openers" that invite children to say more about an incident or their feelings — "I see," "Oh, tell me more," "Say that again, I want to be sure I understood you."

Parents learn 'just say no' during holidays

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Although it is difficult, parents can let their children know that spending during the holidays does have limits.

Experts suggest a few ways to tell children all the toys in the world won't end up under their tree. Here are a few tips on how to do just that.

- Have children make a short list of the things they want for the holidays and make them understand they may only get three of the gifts on the list. Children have to learn there are shortfalls in everything, including buying toys, said Paul Richard, vice president and director of education for the National Center for Financial Education, a nonprofit educational foundation focusing on spending, saving and using credit wisely.
- If the child wants a big item, such as a bicycle, tell the youngster you will pay for half of it and he or she will pay or work for the other half.
- When you have to say no, find other ways of saying it, he said. Such as, "I'm willing to consider this, but here are the challenges we face" or "We just can't do this right now because ..."
- Be honest with your children, especially now that people are so budget-conscious, said Linda Block, a suburban Woodland Hills family therapist.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Living wills document medical instructions

By Steve Edwards

QUESTION: What is a living will?

ANSWER: A living will is a legal document that allows you to specify what kinds of medical treatment you wish to receive should the need arise. Most states, including Texas, currently recognize living wills.

Edwards

QUESTION: What can I specify in my living will?

ANSWER: Texas' "Directive to Physicians" (living will) has a space to specify what kinds of treatment you do or do not want. You can also:

■ State whether you would prefer to die in the hospital or at home;

■ Donate organs and other body parts;

■ Specify a particular person to speak on your behalf.

In Texas, living wills are effective until they are revoked. Still, it's considered a good idea to initial and date your living will every few years to show that it still expresses your wishes.

QUESTION: What are the issues surrounding the use of life-support system?

ANSWER: Since the early 1970s, many cases involving the use of life-support systems have gone before the courts. Regardless of the individual circumstances, the main questions surrounding each case were:

■ Whether or not the life support systems served to prolong life or to prolong suffering prior to inevitable death, and

■ Whose right was it to decide whether to continue to withdraw particular therapies?

These are difficult questions. How do we answer them? Who decides?

In 1980 the President of the United States established a commission to clarify the decision making process regarding life-support. The commission's report was completed in December 1982. The commission recognized that each of us is unique and that decisions will vary from person to person. They may be based upon a combination of factors, including the lifestyle you lead, your religious or moral views, and past experience. The commission further emphasized, and federal law now specifies, that it is your right to be informed by your physician of your choices and to decide what type of medical treatment you wish to receive. Decisions to accept or reject life sustaining therapies, like other choices about medical treatment, must be made voluntarily by competent and informed patients, or if the patient is unable or incompetent, by another appropriately informed person acting on the patient's behalf. The person could be a family member, legal guardian or attorney. It's an excellent idea to communicate your wishes about life support and intensity of care to your family and to your physician(s). You may also wish to complete an advance directive such as a living will or a durable power of attorney for health care.

DEAR ABBY

Front desk clerk resents guests' requests

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am a front desk clerk at a resort hotel, but please don't say which one because I am writing on behalf of hotel and motel desk clerks throughout the world.

Van Buren

I would like the public to know that we are not maintenance men. We cannot repair television sets or break into their automobiles when they have locked their keys inside the car. We do not unplug toilets or change light bulbs, and we can't repair the telephone if it isn't working.

Also, we are not in "housekeeping," so we can't bring them extra washcloths, towels, pillows, blankets or toilet paper. We are not bellmen either, so please don't ask us to carry luggage or run errands.

Now I will tell you what front desk clerks ARE paid to do: greet and register incoming guests, and make sure that outgoing guests see the cashier about paying their bill and turning in their key before departing. Thank you. — FRONT DESK CLERK

DEAR FRONT DESK CLERK: I doubt that you can speak for all hotel and motel desk clerks throughout the world. In the name of good customer relations, you should be prepared to handle all questions and complaints to the satisfaction of the guests so they will want to return to your establishment.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are getting a divorce. What is the proper thing to do with my wedding and engagement rings?

How should I relate to his family when my ex-parents-in-law die? Do I sit with the family? Do I stay away?

I need to know the proper thing to do. Or should I just follow my heart? — I NEED GUIDANCE

DEAR NEEDS GUIDANCE: The fact that these questions have occurred to you, and you want to do the "right thing," says a great deal for your sensitivity.

You did not say how long you were married, but your questions lead me to believe that you were married for a long time. By all means, follow your heart. If you had a good relationship with your in-laws, sit with the family should there be a death in the family.

The rings are yours to do with as you choose. (If they are your husband's family heirlooms, it would be gracious to return them — but you are not obligated to.) After the divorce is final, do not wear your wedding rings, and consider having a jeweler reset the stones into another piece of jewelry.

DEAR ABBY: In your column on Nov. 8, you said that the shortest poem you had ever read was:

"If called by a panther,
"Don't anther." — Ogden Nash

May I submit another, also by Ogden Nash? It's slightly shorter:

"Fleas:
"Adam had 'em."
— PHIL MAERSCH, HOUSTON

DEAR PHIL: It was not until I published the Nov. 8 item that I learned that "If called by a panther, don't anther" was part of a much larger poem by Ogden Nash ... so your submission may very well be the shortest poem I have ever read. Thanks for sending it!

Disabilities in elderly women to be studied

BALTIMORE (AP) — Researchers from the Johns Hopkins schools of medicine and public health are conducting a three-year study to determine what factors make elderly women's health problems worse. The Women's Health and Aging Study will look at 1,000 Baltimore women 65 or older who have health problems that require nursing care.

"We know that women who reach 65 can expect to live another 19 years, on average, and a significant number are disabled," said Linda Fried, the study's director. "The goal of the study is to determine what factors cause improvements and decline in the disabilities. With this information, we can begin to come up with effective interventions."

The women, selected at random from Medicare recipient lists, suffer a range of disabilities — diabetes, Parkinson's disease, cancer and arthritis.

"There hasn't been a major study of this sort, so it's of great importance," said Ruth Bennett, deputy director of Columbia University's Center for Geriatrics and Gerontology. "It is crucial that we learn what can be done to keep elderly people living independent lives."

One likely participant in the study is 91-year-old Jennie Brown, a widow who lives alone and suffers from heart problems, hernias and poor hearing and eyesight.

Mrs. Brown needs a nurse to help her bathe and dress. The state sends someone to her Baltimore apartment once a week to clean. Her daughter brings groceries and medicine and often moves in with her mother when she gets sick.

Society will save a tremendous amount of money if researchers can find a way to prevent elderly people from losing their ability to function independently, Ms. Fried said. The number of elderly men and women needing help with daily tasks will likely reach 13.8 million over the next 40 years, according to the National Institute on Aging, which is funding the $7.9 million study. An estimated 22 percent of women 65 or older are disabled. Those living at home often need the help of another person for dressing, eating, bathing and shopping.

The study is focusing on women, because more than two-thirds of all disabled Americans over 65 are female, Ms. Fried said. But, many of the study's findings will be applicable to men, she said.

During the study, the women will be visited in their homes by interviewers who will determine how their disabilities and diseases have affected their daily lives. Other factors such as the death of a spouse, loneliness and aging will also be studied.

Nurses will perform 35 tests on participants, including electrocardiograms, visual and hearing assessments and neurology tests, said Susan Rogers, one of the nurses hired by Hopkins.

Health care for disabled, older Americans costs $65 billion annually, according to NIA statistics.

"The costs are going to continue to rise, since people over 65 are the fastest growing segment of our society," Ms. Fried said.

Errant taxpayers pay their dues

HOUSTON (AP) — Thousands of deadbeat taxpayers wanting to come clean have talked to local Internal Revenue Service officials about finally paying their share to Uncle Sam.

Since the agency launched a non-filer program in October, the IRS Houston district has taken 300 calls a week, said spokesman Steve Yost.

So far, a total of 3,868 errant taxpayers have either called or walked into a local IRS office, he said. But that's just a fraction of Houstonians who have avoided what many others thought was the inevitable.

The IRS has estimated there are 46,000 people in the Houston district who have not filed tax returns. Yost told the Houston Chronicle the IRS has the names and addresses of those people.

Of the $69,482 in back taxes the IRS has collected so far, a large portion can be attributed to a certified public accountant who hadn't filed or paid taxes in three years, Yost said.

"He just thought he could get away with that, and it started bothering him, and he was handing out all this tax advice to people," Yost said.

Other tax violators who have come forward include a Vietnam veteran who hadn't filed returns since he came back from the war 20 years ago and a woman who stopped an IRS official in line at a restaurant and confessed her tax sins.

"Most of these people aren't bad people," Yost said. "These are people that had something happen to them."

The IRS hasn't recommended criminal prosecution, for anyone who voluntarily comes forward, but "if we find them first, all bets are off," Yost said. "Get in here before we contact you."

SAN FRANCISCO — When Barry Bonds donned a San Francisco Giants jersey for the first time Thursday, it was with a bow to his father, not his godfather.

Bonds, who joined the Giants for $43.75 million last week, decided to turn down godfather Willie Mays' offer to unretire his No. 24 jersey so Bonds could have the number he wore for six years as a Pittsburgh Pirate.

Instead, Bonds will wear No. 25, the number his father, Bobby, wore for the Giants from 1968-1974.

NHL expands

PALM BEACH, Fla. — Walt Disney Co. and the head of Blockbuster Video won NHL expansion franchises Thursday for Orange County, Calif., and South Florida.

The California club, Disney's first professional sports team, has begun negotiations to play in the new Anaheim arena, which opens in June.

The South Florida team will play initially in Miami Arena. Blockbuster chief H. Wayne Huizenga, who last year won a baseball expansion franchise for South Florida, plans to build a new hockey arena but declined to speculate on a site.

Key note

NEW YORK — The New York Yankees finally got a free agent Thursday night when left-hander Jimmy Key agreed to a four-year deal for $17 million.

Key, 31, was 13-13 for the World Series champion Toronto Blue Jays last season. In nine years with the Blue Jays, Key was 116-81.

The Yankees came to the winter meetings in Louisville, Ky., hoping to sign Barry Bonds, Greg Maddux and David Cone. But general manager Gene Michael was frustrated each time.

Michael was able to trade for California pitcher Jim Abbott at the meetings, giving the Yankees a rotation of Abbott, Key, Melido Perez, Sam Militello and Sterling Hitchcock or Bob Wickman.

The Blue Jays originally wanted to keep Key, but withdrew their offer at the meetings. Texas was also interested in Key.

Hawks eclipse MC

■ Midland College suffers an 89-74 setback to Howard College, dropping the Chaps to 1-2 in conference play.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant sports editor

BIG SPRING — The Black Hole known as the Midland College offense grew wider and darker Thursday night as the Chaparrals head into a 37-day Christmas break with only the memory of an 89-74 loss to the No. 5-ranked Howard College Hawks.

For the second straight game, MC shot below 36 percent from the field. And during one tediously long eight minute stretch in the second half that seemed to last even longer than Wednesday's lunar eclipse, the Chaps went without a single field goal. For MC fans, there was nothing breathtakingly spectacular about this blackout.

"I've come to expect it," MC head coach Steve Green said of his team's offensive dry well. "That's what's wrong with this team. We shouldn't have to play as hard as we do and end up not being rewarded by not scoring."

In losses to Howard and Odessa this week, the Chaps' accumulated a total of only eight more points (141) than they had in their record-setting win over Frank Phillips last Thursday.

MC sophomore forward Demeitreus Drew landed wrong while lunging for a loose ball and suffered a severely sprained ankle with 10:08 left in the first half. X-rays will be taken this morning as a precautionary measure, but officials believe there were no broken bones suffered.

"We taped him up just to see what he could do, but he couldn't do anything," Howard athletic trainer Everett Blackburn said.

Five minutes after being carried to the locker room, Drew limped back to the bench to at least offer his services as a cheerleader.

When Drew went down, the Chaps trailed Howard, 23-11. Partly because of increased emotion due to their teammate's injury, but mostly thanks to Green's installation of a zone defense, MC outscored Howard 19-7 in the last five minutes of the half to force a 30-30 tie. After trading baskets before the buzzer, the score stood at 32-32 at the break.

"When they went into a zone, that stifled us," Howard head coach Jeff Kidder said. "We weren't prepared to play against a zone. In the second half (when MC returned to the zone) I won't say we solved it, but we hit a couple of shots off of it.

"There were three things we wanted to do tonight: We wanted to guard the ball first, second we wanted to guard the basket, and third we wanted to contain the perimeter."

Statistics show quite clearly that Howard accomplished all three of its goals.

In the second half, Howard jumped out to a quick offensive start, but a flur-to an impressive 8-1 record, winning the Northside Invitational title in San Antonio along the way.

However, Lee enters the tournament after suffering its first setback of the season Tuesday in a narrow loss to Lubbock Coronado, in a game in which four players who have started this season fouled out. Lee has burned opponents this year with an awesome display of three-point shooting.

"We've been hitting the threes, and there is no question that has helped our start this year," said Lee coach Jon House. "The kids are playing hard, but we've had a couple of games where turnovers hurt us and we've had a lot of fouls. I guess you can expect that with as many road games as we have played."

Midland High carries a 6-1 record into the tournament and a four-game winning streak. The Bulldogs played at the Chap Tuesday and came away with an 89-60 romp over Lubbock Dunbar.

Girls soccer nets coaches

By Joe Wyatt
Staff writer

The advent of girls soccer as a varsity sport in the Midland Independent School District moved one giant step closer to reality Thursday when athletic director Jack Tayrien named the new head coaches for the Tall City's latest prep venture.

Former Midland High boys' junior varsity soccer coach Scott Hodkinson will head up the girls' program at MHS.

And Van Gravitt, a former football player at Midland Lee, who took up soccer after college, will be the first girls' soccer coach at his alma mater.

"I'm extremely pleased to have two guys with the kind of expertise that Scott and Van have in soccer — in addition to the good academic teaching they do — who can step into these roles as head coaches," Tayrien said.

"I know that they will do a good job, and that makes my job a heck of a lot easier."

While MISD boys have been playing varsity soccer since 1988, the girls' program was not voted into existence by the MISD board of trustees until early in this school year. Girls at both Lee and MHS can earn varsity letters this year, but neither team will compete for a district title until 1993, when as members of District 3, they will join Abilene Cooper, Abilene High, San Angelo and perhaps Ector in the playoff chase.

Ector, a team combining players from Odessa Permian and Odessa High, also debuts this season at the girls' varsity level, but not in the district, which currently has just the

Baseball deals continue even if meetings are done

■ Pittsburgh signs Alejandro Pena while the Mets nab Frank Tanana and Detroit gets Tom Bolton.

By Ben Walker
AP Baseball Writer

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — A day after the week in which baseball changed by the hour, order returned to the Galt House.

The Kentucky Farm Bureau's Ladies Tea was all set to take over the same hotel ballroom where, in the past 24 hours:

— Carl Barger's death was announced.

— Marge Schott apologized.

— Greg Maddux was introduced as a new member of the Atlanta Braves.

The winter meetings were over Thursday, but the dealing was not done. Pittsburgh agreed to a one-year deal with reliever Alejandro Pena, Detroit got reliever Tom Bolton for one season and the New York Mets signed veteran lefthander Frank Tanana for one season.

By then, clubs had spent $258 million to sign free agents such as Maddux, Barry Bonds, David Cone and Andre Dawson, and made a slew of trades that sent the likes of Jim Abbott, Ivan Calderon and Kelly Gruber to new teams.

Here's how hectic it was: On Tuesday, executives from the Phillies, Blue Jays, Angels and Cubs all crowded into the press room, each preparing to announce deals in a span of five minutes.

After a few seconds of shuffling around the parites to see who would go first on the podium, Philadelphia spokesman Larry Shenk stepped to the plate, so to speak.

"We have received clearance from air traffic control to go ahead," Shenk started, summing up the craziness with a smile.

It was a shopping spree of unparalled proportions, one that not even a scoreboard and a calculator could fully comprehend.

But, as everyone knows, the bottom line of baseball business is wins and losses. So, who won?

The Braves and Toronto, who met last October, became even stronger. Gone are the days when the World Series teams used to come to the winter meetings to gloat, not to get better.

The Pirates and Oakland, playoff losers who now face difficult dollar decisions, broke apart even further.

The Yankees got Abbott in a trade

COLLEGE STATION — David Edwards hit 11 free throws in the final four minutes Thursday night as Texas A&M held off South Alabama 85-77.

Edwards finished with 24 points, all but 10 of them from the free throw line, and Tony McGinnis added 23 points and Chuck Henderson 21 for the Aggies (1-2). Edwards, who hit 14 of 17 free throws, also had 11 assists.

The Jaguars (1-2), led by Marcos Cohen's 21 points and Earnest Jackson's 18, fell behind 71-60 with six minutes remaining and began fouling the Aggies.

Texas A&M, led by Edwards, however, hit 14 of 18 free throws down the stretch and 21 of 25 in the second half.

The teams were tied at 38-all at halftime, and South Alabama's final lead came at 43-41.

The Aggies adjusted from a pressing man-to-man to a zone defense in the second half, and the Jaguars' shooting from the field fell from 64 percent in the first half to 46 percent in the second.

The teams were whistled for a total of 51 fouls, 26 on Texas A&M, which lost Brett Murry, Henderson and Lance Broderson on fouls.

With the score tied at 105, Anderson, drove the lane and passed to Chucky Brown for a dunk that put the Nets ahead for good with 24 seconds to play.

Then, after Danny Manning's drive rolled off the rim, Anderson was fouled and sank two free throws with 14.2 seconds remaining to wrap up the victory.

Jazz 112, Bullets 96

SALT LAKE CITY — Karl Malone scored 33 points and John Stockton added 17 points and 19 assists as the Utah Jazz defeated the Washington Bullets.

Mears retires from racing

Associated Press

READING, Pa. — Four-time Indianapolis 500 winner Rick Mears surprised the racing world Thursday night by announcing his retirement as a competitive driver at the age of 41.

Mears, who had surgery on Aug. 19 to repair a broken wrist suffered in crashes before and during the Indianapolis 500 in May, drove his last race on Aug. 2, finishing 16th in the Marlboro 500 at Michigan International Speedway.

He sat out the rest of the season, but was expected to begin testing for Roger Penske's Marlboro Team Penske later this month.

The surprise announcement came during Penske's annual Christmas party at the team's shops in Reading.

"It was a tough decision," Mears said. "I started thinking about it some time ago, probably even before Indy. Obviously, Indy was something that made me think."

ry of four straight MC steals helped bring on another tie, this one at 49. Soon after, the Chaps retreated back into their offensive Twilight Zone.

When Terrance Rone knotted the score at 49 at the 12:20 mark, MC would not again hit a shot from the field until the clock read 4:34, a stretch of almost eight minutes. By then, Howard had taken a 71-58 lead.

"We got three yards and a cloud of dust in our face," Green said. "The whole deal is that we just don't do anything offensively. We come out and for the first five minutes of the second half we don't do anything. And the way they were playing us, we should've been up 10 points early in the game. We just don't shoot the ball. We can't complete plays and get the ball in the basket."

Not even when Mark Davis, Chuckie Robinson and Bernard Lloyd — Howard's three most dominating players — got into foul trouble was MC able to take advantage.

"One fortunate thing about us," Kidder said, "is we have depth."

Even though Davis racked up four fouls, he had 17 points and 13 rebounds. Robinson was the game's high point man with 19.

Steve Walston led MC with 14 points. Ari Rodriques had nine of the Chaps' 42 rebounds.

The loss drops MC to 13-4 overall, 1-2 in Western Junior College Athletic Conference play. Howard improves to 15-1 and 1-0.

The Chaps will have well over a month to cure whatever it is that ails them offensively. The team returns to action following the Christmas break with a Jan. 11 game at Seward, Kan. The next MC home game is Jan. 14, a nonconference date against Clarendon, and the Chaps will not get a chance to even their conference record until Jan. 16 at South Plains, their next scheduled league game.

road game against Class 4A Fort Stockton, an effort that didn't please MHS coach Jack Stephenson.

"This is taking nothing away from Fort Stockton, be we just didn't play that game," Stephenson said.

Overall, however, Stephenson likes what he has seen so far from his cagers.

Lee will meet Canutillo at 6:30 p.m. today while Midland High will face Amarillo Caprock at 8:15 p.m.

The tournament starts at 3 p.m. with El Paso Riverside meeting Odessa Permian. Arlington Martin faces El Paso Eastwood at 4:45 p.m. in what could be the feature game of the openers.

Saturday's action continues at 8:30 a.m. with consolation bracket games. The championship semifinals are at noon and 1:45 p.m. The seventh place game is at 3:30 p.m. and the consolation championship will be played at 5:15 p.m.

Third place action is set for 7 p.m. Saturday while the championship will be decided at 8:45 p.m.

Should MHS defeat Caprock today, the Bulldogs will have a very tough semifinal match against the Martin-Eastwood winner. Both Martin and Eastwood have had major playoff experience over the last few years. Martin has now moved to Region II under the new UIL realignment.

Should Lee defeat Canutillo, the Rebels will advance against the Permian-Riverside winner. Riverside, a team that has losses to both Lee and MHS last weekend in El Paso, did carry the Rebels to overtime before losing by one point. The Bulldogs had a much easier time with Riverside, winning 82-63.

The Bulldogs are led by senior Antwan Goodley, who is averaging 11.9 points per game, but 6-foot-8 Andre Gill is coming on strong, averaging 9.4 after four consecutive games in double figures. MHS, however, has shown a strong bench and tends to spread its scoring punch around.

Lee, which is on a record setting three-point pace while hitting just over seven treys per game, has David Wilson (22.6) and Martin Lattibeaudiere (20.1) both averaging over 20 points a game. Corodon Watson is also hitting at a 10.2 clip and Ryan Tucker is close to a double digit average at 9.9.

'Skins get edge over Cowboys

By Dave Goldberg
AP Football Writer

It's back ... Dallas week in Washington.

Just like in the early '80s, the Cowboys visit the Redskins on Sunday with a lot on the line. A win gives Dallas its first NFC East title in seven years, while the Redskins need a win to stay in position to defend their Super Bowl title.

The Redskins, who seem to be reviving with the return of Jim Lachey, Joe Jacoby and Darrell Green, have actually lost three of the last four to Dallas at RFK Stadium. They include the Cowboys' only win in Jimmy Johnson's first season and last year's 24-21 win that was Washington's first loss after an 11-0 start.

"When we beat Washington last year in their home stadium to break a long winning streak, we knew we had arrived in the NFL," says Dallas owner Jerry Jones.

Washington, favored by three, may have arrived with big wins the last two weeks, albeit over the bereft Cardinals and the banged-up and strife-ridden Giants.

On opening night at Texas Stadium, the Cowboys and the crowd noise hassled Rypien and the Cowboys won 23-10. Rypien hasn't much enjoyed the crowd noise (Boooooo!) in Washington this year, either.

This one's a hunch.

The Cowboys are on a bit of cruise control; Joe Gibbs' Redskins are playing well and are 12-2 in December the past four seasons.

REDSKINS, 20-14

San Francisco (minus 5) at Minnesota

Rich Gannon comes back at quarteraback for the Vikings, who may need this game and next week's at Pittsburgh to ensure clinching the NFC Central before Green Bay comes calling the final week. The Niners want this as they build toward home-field advantage in the playoffs.

49ERS, 20-14

Green Bay (plus 7) at Houston

The Packers have won five of six and have an honest shot at the playoffs. The HomeDome advantage, but barely.

OILERS, 23-20

Raiders (plus 6) at Miami (Monday night)

The thing to note about the Raiders is that they're consistently inconsistent.

DOLPHINS, 20-7

Pittsburgh (minus 3) at Chicago

Will the Steelers go easy on the Bears because Mike Ditka's from western Pennsylvania?

STEELERS, 17-13

Denver (plus 14) at Buffalo (Saturday)

Rerun of last year's AFC championship, which went to the Bills 10-7.

But that was when Jim Kelly was in form and John Elway was healthy.

BILLS, 20-5

New Orleans (minus 5½) at Los Angeles Rams

The Rams won't come back from 27-3 against these guys.

SAINTS, 17-13

Cincinnati (plus 14) at San Diego

Oh, that last place schedule.

CHARGERS, 27-7

New England (plus 16) at New England

The Chiefs have trouble scoring. The Pats don't score at all.

CHIEFS, 17-3

Cleveland (minus 2½) at Detroit

The Browns are officially thinking playoffs because Bill Belichick uttered the "P" word.

BROWNS, 14-10

Indianapolis (plus 5½) at New York Jets

The AFC East's two hottest teams? Yup.

JETS, 20-14

Philadelphia (plus 9½) at Seattle

This sounds strange, but these are two of the league's best defenses.

EAGLES, 14-0

New York Giants (plus 3½) at Phoenix (Saturday)

The Giants have beatem the Cards eight straight, but they won't pass up this chance to make sure Ray Handley gets fired.

CARDS, 27-17

Atlanta (pick 'em) at Tampa Bay

The most interesting thing about this game is the delightful relationship between Jerry Glanville and Sam Wyche.

FALCONS, 24-17

ALL-AMERICA: A&M's Buckley first-team linebacker

(From 1C)

the country's top lineman and is a finalist for the Butkus Award, which goes to the best linebacker. He led the Seminoles with 111 tackles, including three sacks and seven others behind the line of scrimmage.

Joining Faulk in the backfield are Miami quarterback Gino Torretta and Georgia running back Garrison Hearst.

Torretta is 26-1 as a starter, holds almost every career passing record at Miami and is one victory away from leading the Hurricanes to their second straight national championship.

He threw for 3,060 yards this season, completed 57 percent of his attempts and had 19 touchdown passes with only seven interceptions. He already has won the Maxwell and Walter Camp awards as the best college player, and is favored to win the Heisman Trophy on Saturday.

Hearst was second in rushing with 1,547 yards and first in scoring with 21 touchdowns, which broke Walker's Southeastern Conference record. He averaged 6.8 yards per carry, third among 1,000-yard rushers.

The all-purpose back is Stanford's Glyn Milburn, who was second in all-purpose yardage (177 per game) and third in punt returns with an 18.5 average and three touchdowns.

The wide receivers are Sean Dawkins of California and O.J. McDuffie of Penn State, and the tight end is Chris Gedney of Syracuse.

The offensive line is led by Nebraska guard Will Shields, who won the Outland Trophy as the outstanding interior lineman. Rounding out the offense are center Mike Compton of West Virginia; guard Aaron Taylor of Notre Dame; tackles Lincoln Kennedy of Washington and Everett Lindsay of Mississippi; and placekicker Joe Allison of Memphis State.

The defensive line features a pair of ends from Alabama's top-rated unit, Eric Curry and John Copeland.

They are joined by linemen Rob Waldrop of Arizona and Chris Slade of Virginia; linebackers Jones, Micheal Barrow of Miami and Marcus Buckley of Texas A&M; and backs Ryan McNeil of Miami, Carlton McDonald of Air Force, Deon Figures of Colorado, and Carlton Gray of UCLA.

The punter is Sean Snyder of Kansas State.

The team includes 18 seniors and six juniors, with Faulk the only sophomore. The juniors are Hearst, Dawkins, Taylor, Allison, Waldrop and Jones.

Top-ranked Miami has three players on the team, while No. 2 Alabama has two. No other school has more than one representative.

Dawkins set school records for receptions (65), receiving yards (1,070) and touchdown catches (14) in a season. He now has 31 career TD catches.

SOCCER: Teams begin UIL play in '94

three member schools.

Tayrien said both MISD girls' teams — which will adhere to University Interscholastic League rules in their initial season — would not be joining District 3 immediately because, even though many youngsters have already expressed interest in the infant program, nobody could be absolutely certain that either school would have enough bodies to field a team until the season actually got under way.

"I'm personally sure that the interest level is high enough to assure plenty of participation in these programs," Tayrien said. "But we could not guarantee to the other schools in the district that we would have enough players to field a team until we actually did so.

"Therefore, we didn't want to work out a UIL schedule with all the area people and have these kids decide, for whatever reasons, not to come out for the sport. And having to forfeit games or ask our opponents to reschedule dates would mess up the entire district alignment.

"But I don't think there's any doubt that enough girls are coming up through the ranks of the large number of soccer clubs that we have here in town and that once they see the program has been established and put in place, interest will probably increase."

That could signal the state of junior varsity programs, as it did early on in the boys' programs. But for now, Gravitt and Hodkinson will have in the neighborhood of 15 to 20 girls each with which to begin their soccer teams.

Of course more girls are always welcome on the fledgling teams, which will hit the fields for their first after-school practices on Jan. 4.

"One of the main problems has been attracting enough people into the program. We've had to do a lot of it through word of mouth," Hodkinson said. "But I'm really excited about the opportunity to start a program from scratch and I think any coach would.

"We've assembled a list of around 20 girls, some with experience and some who are beginners. But I'm sure we'll have enough for a team."

So will the Lady Rebels, who Gravitt says will also bring a good bit of soccer experience to Lee's first squad.

"We've got about 17 girls right now and around half of them have played a good deal of competitive soccer," Gravitt said. "That's a good nucleus to work with and a real good situation for us to start with.

"We'll get busy right away teaching the fundamentals where they are needed and get ready go compete."

UIL rules allow teams to conduct their first practices on Jan. 2, but Lee and MHS will wait until Monday the 4th. The first games may be played on Jan. 11.

MHS will host Lubbock Coronado in a scrimmage on Jan. 8, then the Lady Bulldogs open their regular season with a Jan. 11 home game against Lubbock Monterey.

Lee will host AHS in a scrimmage on Jan. 9 and entertain Cooper in the season opener on Jan. 12.

DEALS: Blue Jays may be even better with California, but left Louisville more disappointed than anyone.

(From 1C)

Hey, Abbott! Who's on first? Don Mattingly, but he will not be joined by Maddux, Bonds, Cone, Doug Drabek, Jose Guzman or any other top free agents the Yankees hoped to sign.

There was a chance the Yankees still could sign Ruben Sierra, who, along with Mark McGwire, are the two best luxury cars left on the free-agent lot. Dave Winfield, Wade Boggs, Jimmy Key and Tom Henke all have some miles on them, but each might be good for one more ride.

Even though they could lose Winfield, Key and Henke, and even though did lose Cone, Dave Stieb and traded Kelly Gruber, the World Series champion Blue Jays could be better next year.

Toronto came to the meetings with a game plan that began with re-signing Joe Carter. It was between the Blue Jays, Carter's new home team, and Kansas City, the team he grew up rooting for.

The Royals offered a $10 million signing bonus, and Carter considered it carefully. He even sent a statement to his agents at the Galt House that thanked the Blue Jays, their fans and the city of Toronto for all of their support, to be read just in case he signed with the Royals.

But, he picked Toronto. So did Paul Molitor and Dave Stewart, who each broke off long-term associations to join the Blue Jays.

Stewart was Oakland's ace, the pitcher who kept the Athletics' season alive in the playoffs against Toronto.

"If this is going to be my last contract, which I've seriously considered, I want a chance to win two more times," Stewart said. "I'm aware of everything going on. I can't see that this club has gotten any weaker. It'll probably be a stronger club in 1993."

Molitor, a staple in Milwaukee since 1978, was worried that the Brewers' cost-cutting measures might turn them into losers. He wanted to play for a winner, and that meant Toronto.

"From what I've heard from other players, and what I've observed from afar, they have a real strong commitment," Molitor said.

Maddux, meanwhile, took $6 million less than he could've gotten from the Yankees and instead signed with the Braves for five years and $28 million. The National League's reigning Cy Young winner will join a rotation that includes 1991 Cy Young winner Tom Glavine and the last two NL playoff Most Valuable Players, John Smoltz and Steve Avery.

"The money issue was secondary," his agent, Scott Boras, said. "He wanted a chance to win a world championship."

The money matter didn't matter as much to Maddux because even though he could've got more elsewhere, he's set for life. Money was the main matter, however, for Oakland and Pittsburgh.

The A's went into the offseason with 14 free agents, with McGwire, Sierra, Stewart and Mike Moore among them. Oakland cannot keep them all, and Stewart and Moore already have left.

The Pirates, who traded Gold Glove second baseman and lost free agent reliever Roger Mason before the meetings, saw Bonds leave for San Francisco. They also lost Bob Patterson, an effective middle reliever.

As the holidays approach, plenty of teams will try to fill their wish lists.

Boston really wants Henke. They moved close Wednesday to signing him, but could not make a move because their 40-man roster had been filled by signing Dawson.

Later in the day, the Red Sox took up their time trying to complete a trade with San Diego. After midnight, Boston announced a deal that sent Phil Plantier to the Padres for reliever Jose Melendez.

Alabama's Stallings win Bryant Award

HOUSTON (AP) — Alabama coach Gene Stallings can't escape the presence of Bear Bryant even when he wins an award.

Stallings, who played for Bryant at Texas A&M and was his assistant at Alabama, won the Bear Bryant Award Thursday night as the college football coach of the year.

"The players live in Bryant Hall," Stallings said. "Right in front of my office is Bryant Boulevard, then on to the Paul Bryant Conference Center, right beside Paul Bryant Museum, right down by Paul Bryant Stadium.

"That's the way it's going to be for a long time. It doesn't bother me one bit."

Stallings hasn't won six national championships as his mentor did at Alabama but the Crimson Tide did roll through the season with a 12-0 record and gets a chance to be national champions if they can beat No. 1 ranked Miami in the Sugar Bowl.

The award was presented for the 36th year by the Football Writers Association of America and benefits the American Heart Association.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Patience is the key to getting what you want. Reacting angrily to a "maybe" could make the answer a firm "no." Learn to play the waiting game! A previously rejected business proposal could win approval early in 1993. Update your presentation and resume. Romance and travel go hand-in-hand next summer. Returning to school in September could boost your earning power. Family members will be supportive if you let them know your plans.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: movie producer Carlo Ponti, author Alexander Solzhenitsyn, actresses Rita Moreno and Donna Mills.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Lie low and wait for further developments to furnish the clues you need. Concentrate on your dear ones or a favorite hobby. Paying closer attention to details saves the day!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You may not be able to put your finger on the cause of a blue mood. Contact old friends. An interest in business is revived. Turn an unusual opportunity into future financial gains.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Going quietly about your business is the surest way to head off interference. Let your imagination roam this afternoon. Prepare for the long climb toward a major objective.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Contact with an admirer at a distance could be a sweet surprise. Luck smiles on your long-range plans. A harmonious atmosphere at home allows you to concentrate on business goals.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Emotions may run high today; strive for stability. Make certain higher-ups get what they expect from you. Bargains abound for holiday shoppers. A reunion with an old flame could reignite romantic fires.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An encouraging message or welcome visitor boosts your expectations. You feel much more optimistic! Dining with a favorite companion is the perfect way to unwind.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Take a chance on love. Plunging into an affair of the heart will recharge your batteries. Spend only what you must, not what you would like to. A holiday message brings wonderful family news.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Kind feelings flourish within the family circle. A joint planning session will produce spectacular results. A new household project has special merit. Persevere!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Even minor career gains could lead to big benefits down the road. You have an innovative way of doing things. Reviewing past mistakes can prevent similar errors.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your financial prudence will pay off today. Keep your ear to the ground for snippets of news. An employment situation could annoy you. Advertise your talents.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A partner could prove difficult to please. Business squabbles may have to be ironed out legally. Be adventuresome if you see a way to make new profits.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your financial prospects get a dramatic boost. A change in technique or attitude will bring you rich rewards. You meet someone at work who electrifies you. Go slow.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are generous, tolerant and quick to help those in need. Their happy-go-lucky attitude endears them to people of all ages. Money always seems to fall into these Sagittarians' hands and is seldom a problem for them. Although these children are not especially diplomatic, their candor rarely offends people. It is obvious that their blunt comments are not motivated by malice. They seem incapable of carrying a grudge. A career in science or engineering may offer the greatest rewards for these detail-oriented Sagittarians.

Opening lead: Ace of ♠

In a perfect world, everyone at the bridge table would be able to divine the distribution and make nothing but correct plays. In real life we are all prone to act reflexively, and sometimes we live to regret it.

North-South bid well to six hearts. Since North had little in hearts and had bid strongly, including a cue-bid, South knew there were no losers in the minor suits. The bid over game asked about control in the enemy suit and, with a second-round stopper, North bid the small slam.

West led the ace of spades and continued the suit. From South's point of view everything seemed to be in order. Most of us would now lead a low heart to the king and, when West shows out, we would unhappily concede down one—there would be no way to shut out the queen of trumps from scoring.

Declarer did better, leading the jack of hearts at trick three. Had East played low to this trick declarer would have risen with a high honor, since the probability of a 2-1 split far outweighed a 3-0 break. However, East got caught up in the swing of things and carelessly covered the jack with the queen.

When West showed out on this trick, it was a simple matter for declarer to cross back to the table in one of the minors and take the marked finesse for the ten of hearts. Making six-odd!

East is a poorer, but wiser man. Holding Q 10 x, East should have realized there was no way declarer was going to take a finesse.

Jackson's sparkle fizzles out of glittery production

LAS VEGAS — LaToya Jackson was fired from her starring role in a show at the Sands Hotel six nights after she joined the glittery production.

Her husband-manager said he would sue for $2.3 million.

Jackson debuted in the show, "Bare Essence," the day after Thanksgiving. She was to be paid $26,000 a week, but the arrangement didn't work out, said Lynn Garlock, spokeswoman for the show's production company.

"We did give her a dismissal notice and we're looking at other options," said Garlock, declining further comment.

Jackson's husband, Jack Gordon, said he would file the lawsuit against the show's producer, David Wright, for breach of contract and mental stress suffered by his wife.

NEW YORK — Richard Avedon has become The New Yorker magazine's first staff photographer, the latest sign of change at the venerable publication under new editor, Tina Brown.

Avedon

Avedon, 69, a veteran fashion and portrait photographer, will produce 50 black-and-white full-page photographs for The New Yorker in the coming year and will not take assignments from other magazines, Brown said.

"He can do anything he wants — one great image an issue or a run of images together," Brown said. "Basically he wants to make himself available for anything in the magazine."

Brown took over at The New Yorker two months ago. The few full-page photographs that have appeared in the magazine since then have been by Avedon. The first was a shot of black leader Malcolm X.

Under Brown, former editor of Vanity Fair, The New Yorker has become more colorful, bylines now precede articles rather than coming at the end and more photos accompany stories.

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Dennis the Menace creator, Hank Ketcham, says the 5½-year-old boy has lasted in the funny papers for 43 years not because of his skill for calamity but rather his essential innocence.

"He doesn't know all the answers," Ketcham said. "He's seeking for the truth. He doesn't know what's under the rock. He doesn't know how deep the mud puddle is."

Ketcham, of Carmel, Calif., was in Kentucky for meetings with his publisher about his book, "Dennis the Menace: Prayers and Graces," which is to feature classic strips combined with traditional prayers.

Ketcham, 72, said the book is a humorous attempt to help parents nurture children spiritually. He said it's important for parents to provide children with a strong religious base so that "they will have someone else to turn to."

The cartoonist said he hopes to retire soon and pass on the strip to someone else. His book was scheduled for release in February.

Once the basis of a popular TV show, Dennis the Menace is being made into a movie scheduled for summer release.

RIVERSIDE, Calif. — Alice Cooper is coming to the rescue for a fan who painted his house with the ghoulish rock star's likeness.

Homeowner Patrick Kelly and an official of the mortgage company threatening foreclosure were invited to Phoenix, where Cooper was scheduled to hand over a check for $13,044.52 Thursday to cover part of Kelly's debt, said Toby Mamis of Alive Enterprises, Cooper's agency.

Cooper

After seeing news reports about the house's psychedelic artwork, which Kelly painted to show his frustration over not being able to find a buyer, Cooper held a rock 'n' roll garage sale there Nov. 22, drawing about 1,200 people.

The event raised $11,300 and more money was donated.

The payment will bring the Kelly account up to date, but does not pay off the loan on the home, which has been valued at $258,000, said Pam Beck, vice president at Standard Mortgage Co. of San Bernardino.

DULUTH, Minn. — Ted Nugent, the rock star turned hunting advocate, said his prowess with a bow and arrow will help him feed venison to the poor.

Speaking to about a dozen hunters Wednesday night, Nugent promoted his World Bowhunters group and criticized those who oppose hunting.

"The media and the general public have accepted the fantasy that their McChicken dinner got there in a less painful fashion than my pheasant dinner," said Nugent, 43, a resident of Jackson, Mich.

He said he will cook venison from six of his deer for "hundreds of hungry people" at the Salvation Army in Detroit on New Year's Eve. He also operates a hunting camp for children each summer.

Prices surge

NEW YORK — Oil prices rose Thursday as several news developments spurred buying among traders.

Daylong protests in Red Square by supporters and opponents of President Boris Yeltsin raised concerns that more serious political turmoil could be brewing in Russia, a major oil exporter, said Naunan Barakat, vice president of energy futures at Merrill Lynch.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in January settled at $19.28 per barrel, up 44 cents, at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Local crude purchasers such as Scurlock Permian, Navajo Refining, Texaco Trading and Transportation, Citgo, Marathon and Phillips raised their posted price 25 cents to $18.

Crude prices fell back when it became clear that the demonstration posed no immediate threat. Yeltsin on Thursday tried to circumvent Russia's Congress and proposed a national referendum on whether he or the lawmakers should run the country.

Natural gas prices were higher, with contracts for delivery in January settling at $2.114 per 1,000 cubic feet, up 7 cents.

Dollar mixed

NEW YORK — The dollar was mixed against major currencies Thursday, rising against the German mark and falling against the Japanese yen.

The dollar rose to 1.5795 German marks in New York trading from 1.5725 marks late Wednesday.

Also in New York trading, the dollar was quoted at 123.70 Japanese yen, down from 124.05 yen late Wednesday.

In New York, one pound cost $1.5540, less expensive than $1.5660 late Wednesday.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Wednesday's rates, included: 1.4090 Swiss francs, down from 1.4105; 5.3950 French francs, up from 5.3665; 1,397.00 Italian lire, up from 1,393.00; and 1.27275 Canadian dollars, down from 1.27305.

Stocks retreat

NEW YORK — The stock market gave ground in a busy session Thursday, yielding to sellers even in the midst of positive economic news.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up 47.28 points over the four preceding sessions, dropped back 11.62 points to 3,312.19.

Declining issues outnumbered those advancing by about 4 to 3 on the New York Stock Exchange.

The Nasdaq composite index dropped 4.99 to 658.93. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was off .59 at 392.39.

Schlumberger to buy Dow's interest

■ Dowell Schlumberger to continue to provide cementing, stimulation, coiled tubing to oil-field industry.

Staff report

NEW YORK — Schlumberger Ltd. and the Dow Chemical Co. have announced a definitive agreement whereby Schlumberger will acquire Dow's 50 percent interest in the Dowell Schlumberger Group of companies.

The purchase price will be $675 million in cash and a warrant to purchase 7.5 million shares of Schlumberger stock with an exercise price of $59.95. The warrant is fully vested, non-transferable and expires in 7½ years.

Schlumberger Chairman Euan Baird said, "We are convinced that it is an excellent opportunity to achieve 100 percent ownership of Dowell Schlumberger, an operation with a bright future. From the beginning of Dow-Schlumberger cooperation in 1960, our relationship has been a good and productive one."

"The decision to sell our ownership in Dowell Schlumberger was based on its business becoming less chemistry-intensive and less dependent on Dow's technology and participation, while becoming more synergistic with Schlumberger," said Frank Popoff, Dow Chemical's chairman and chief executive officer.

Dowell Schlumberger, a worldwide market leader, will continue to provide cementing, stimulation, coiled tubing and other services to oil-field companies.

As a result of this investment, DS will be wholly owned by Schlumberger, and "another example of our confidence in the future of the oil-field service business," Baird said. He said strategic direction of the company was provided jointly by Dow Chemical and Schlumberger, with Schlumberger managing the joint venture utilizing its experience in worldwide oil-field services. Dow Chemical, through Dowell, will provide the technology until DS is in a position to develop its own.

"As a result, this acquisition will have little effect on the way DS is run," Baird said.

He said the success of the 32-year-old joint venture is due largely to the outstanding support and cooperation provided by the management of Dow Chemical. "It has been an enriching experience for us to have been associated with Dow Chemical, and we look forward to the relationship continuing in the future," he said.

Layoffs drop; inflation stays under control

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of Americans filing new claims for jobless benefits fell to a three-year low in late November while inflation on the wholesale level remained well under control, the government reported Thursday.

"It's a nice little holiday gift," Robert G. Dederick, an economist at the Northern Trust Co. in Chicago, said of the reports.

The Labor Department said first-time applications for unemployment insurance fell 38,000 to 324,000, during the week ended Nov. 28. It was the lowest since 323,000 claims were filed the week of Sept. 23, 1989.

The decline was widespread; 41 states and territories reported decreases, and only 12 recorded increases. But a work week shortened by the Thanksgiving holiday may have caused some of the big decline, the government said.

At the same time, the department said wholesale prices, held to moderate gains this year, actually fell 0.2 percent in November. It was the first decline since the Producer Price Index fell by a similar amount last January.

Both energy and food prices, which had risen in October, were down. Energy costs plunged 1.5 percent, wiping out a 1.4 percent advance a month earlier. And a 0.5 percent decline in food costs erased a 0.1 percent gain the previous month.

Excluding the volatile energy and food components, prices inched up a tiny 0.1 percent. For the year so far, wholesale prices have risen at an annual rate of just 1.4 percent.

Despite the effect of the Thanksgiving holiday on layoffs, analysts said the overall employment trend continues to improve.

Report: FTC staff seeks injunction against Microsoft

Hearst News Service

SEATTLE — After months of rumors and vague press rumblings surrounding a Federal Trade Commission investigation into Microsoft Corp.'s business practices, the commission staff may be urging antitrust action against the Redmond, Wash., software giant.

A Washington-based newsletter this week said staff lawyers in the FTC's Bureau of Competition are seeking authorization from the five FTC commissioners to seek a preliminary injunction against Microsoft.

Chrysler Corp. Chairman Lee A. Iacocca gestures Monday as he talks from his Highland Park, Mich., office about his career and his coming retirement at the end of December.

TWA considers Iacocca for its top job

NEW YORK (AP) — TWA's incoming owners are considering a star like Lee Iacocca for chairman, but would be happy with the relatively anonymous team that has been running the airline in recent months.

Iacocca, who retires as the head of Chrysler Corp. at year's end, met with officials about the top Trans World Airlines job on Wednesday after a Machinists union consultant approached him in August.

As TWA's largest union, the Machinists would hold the largest share of the 45 percent stake that employees are buying in TWA. The airline's creditors would hold 55 percent of TWA as part of a bankruptcy court-supervised reorganization.

"There have been discussions about someone for the chairman position who could provide guidance, wisdom and some pizazz," said James Spiotto, attorney for TWA's creditors. "The two in there right now are doing a good job. ... We're not desperate."

Iacocca said Thursday he isn't interested in running a business full-time after he retires, Chrysler spokesman Tom Houston said. But Brian Freeman, the Machinists union adviser, said that would be consistent with the arrangement the two have been talking about.

Freeman said the plan would be for the 68-year-old Iaccoca to initially work full time to set up a management team and steer TWA toward profitablity. Iacocca would then become less involved and oversee the managers, who would run the business, he said.

TWA would also be interested in taking advantage of Iacocca's reputation as Chrysler's chief salesman.

"Iacocca has two great skills," Freeman said. "One is marketing. The other is putting together a strong management team."

However, any decision by Iacocca or TWA is months away, Freeman said.

A two-man management committee has been running TWA in recent months since Carl Icahn decided to sell the carrier to creditors and employees. The unions appointed one committee member, Robin Wilson; creditors named the other, Glenn Zander.

It long has been assumed that the two would take over the airline's top spots after the reorganization and Spiotto said that still is possible. But in exploring their options, the new owners are considering hiring someone "who could add a little luster," he said.

Other candidates with stature comparable to Iacocca's and some executives well-known in the airline business are also being considered, Spiotto said. He wouldn't be specific, but said that as the oldest U.S. airline still operating, TWA has attracted many interested executives.

Iacocca is widely credited with staging two comebacks at Chrysler in his 14 years there. In the 1980s, he led the company's rescue from the brink of bankruptcy and this year again helped nurse it back to health after a brush with financial disaster during the recession.

Houston said Iacocca has received many job offers, including several from troubled companies.

Freeman and Spiotto said the first priority for TWA's new managers would be to update the airline's aging equipment and jet fleet, the oldest in the industry.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Annuity is safe income source for retiree

By Bill Doyle

Q: I have about $100,000 in an annuity, which earns 6 percent. As a 62-year-old retired widow, I am drawing out part of the principal to supplement my Social Security benefits. The financial planner from the investment firm that sponsors the annuity suggests I cash in the annuity, because it is "too safe and lacks growth."

Doyle

He wants me to put $50,000 in each of two mutual funds, also run by his firm. One is a high-yield, tax-exempt fund, the other a managed retirement fund. He says a $5,000 fee would be deducted for this service.

I just moved here and the new financial planner assigned to me is a very young man. Do I have reason to question his wisdom?

A: You certainly do. But there is little question about his motive. He wants to make money — at your expense.

Unless you have a good deal of wealth you didn't mention in your letter, the annuity seems right for you. While it is true an annuity won't grow in value, it is a safe investment. And that's what you need. "Too safe," indeed!

The two mutual funds the financial planner recommends might produce better results than the annuity. They might not. They would involve risk, which it is doubtful you should take.

It's obvious you need income. That indicates you are in the low 15 percent federal income tax bracket. A fund paying tax-exempt dividends would not be right for you.

The $5,000 fee might be a commission load taken off the top of the money you invest. Or it might be a charge for managing your account. Either way, that financial planner would get a big chunk of the $5,000.

In recent years, investment firms and brokerages have been giving their sales representatives fancy titles such as "financial planner." No matter what they are called, they are still salesmen and saleswomen.

Q: In today's mail, I received literature regarding mutual funds that are "no load," meaning no commission is charged. But I would have to invest by calling an 800 telephone number, because there are no personal representatives.

I am frozen in my tracks trying to decide whether to invest by phone. Can you help me?

A: I'll give you a nudge in the no-load direction.

Make the phone call. Ask for additional information. You'll receive more literature and a prospectus for each of the funds whose shares are offered for sale. Study each prospectus carefully. If you like what you read, invest.

Millions of people invest in no-load mutual funds through the mail or over the phone. But if you are like the many more investors who want face-to-face contact with a broker or other sales type, go the load mutual fund route.

Q: We currently hold 2,000 shares of a mutual fund on which dividends are scheduled to be paid at the close of business on the last day of each month.

We receive our dividend checks on the eighth or ninth day each month. The checks do come from a city about 1,000 miles away, but up to nine days seems like an awfully long time.

How much time is the fund allowed before it is required to mail the checks?

A: The checks should be in the mail no later than the first business day after the dividend payment date. If the postmarks and the check dates show that is not the case, complain to the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission, 450 Fifth St., N.W., Washington, DC 20549, and the National Association of Securities Dealers, 1735 K St., N.W., Washington, DC 20006.

However, I suspect you have your dividend schedule mixed up. The fund might declare a dividend the last day of each month and pay that dividend about a week later, so that the payment date is the seventh, eighth or ninth.

■ Cable companies warn of rate boosts

WASHINGTON — Cable television companies could be forced to roll back rates if they raise consumer prices excessively while the government works on rules to enforce the new cable law, the Federal Communications Commission said Thursday.

After the law takes effect, consumers who complain about excessive rates to the FCC could get refunds from their local cable companies, FCC staff members said.

The FCC is just beginning to write regulations for the law passed in October that put monopoly cable television systems back under federal control.

Public comment will be gathered before anything is definite. In the meantime, some cable companies have raised their rates.

In suburban Washington, D.C., for example, cable companies in three counties notified subscribers that prices for basic service would go up 8 percent to 12 percent next year.

Consumer outrage over rates that rose three times faster than inflation from 1986 to 1991 were responsible in part for the re-regulation law.

■ Man in red dress pulls guns from purse

BATON ROUGE, La. — A man in a red dress shot a locked cash register to open it up and ran out with the money in his blue pocketbook and a gun in each hand.

Baton Rouge police were still looking Thursday for the man.

He fired at least six shots during the incident Tuesday night, slightly injuring a customer at the International House of Pancakes and a driver outside the restaurant, police Cpl. Don Kelly said.

Police did not know whether the customer's back was hit by a bullet, a bullet fragment or flying debris. Glass flew into the driver's eye when the gunman shot through his car window, Kelly said.

The robber, who also wore eye makeup, a red bandanna over his face, red socks and white tennis shoes, didn't attract much attention at first, employees told restaurant owner Joe Schwartz.

■ Police, malls pump up security for holidays

NEW YORK — Holiday purse snatchers and carjackers, beware — the chances are better than ever that you're under surveillance. Police departments and shopping mall managers are stepping up security for the holiday season.

"Security has been probably one of the most important issues that we have looked at, that our members want to have more information about," said Keith Foxe, spokesman for the International Council of Shopping Centers.

After requests from its members, the council last month conducted a one-day conference on security attended by 280 people.

Statistics on shopping crimes are not available. Many retailers and mall managers insist that nationally, crime in shopping centers is not up.

But crime has risen in some areas. And some high-visibility crimes, such as a rash of urban carjackings, has heightened public sensitivity, police and retailers said.

"By and large, most of our malls are showing a decrease in serious crime," said Cathy A. Lickteig, spokesman for The Rouse Co., which operates 54 regional shopping centers across the country.

Retailers and mall managers have strengthened security for the holiday season. While the aim of some of these measures is to catch criminals, many retailers simply want highly visible measures that make shoppers more comfortable.

■ Fundamentalists plan inaugural protests

WASHINGTON — Two fundamentalist groups said Thursday they plan demonstrations around the time of President-elect Clinton's inauguration to protest his abortion policies and support for homosexual rights.

The demonstrations will underscore opposition to "the advance of paganism and anti-Christian behavior" said Randall Terry, head of Operation Rescue, an anti-abortion group based in Binghamton, N.Y.

"Governor Clinton is going to bring a curse on this nation — greater than there already is," Terry told a news conference.

He and the Rev. Patrick Mahoney, director of the Washington-based Christian Defense Coalition, an interdemoninational group that opposes abortion, said they expected about 500 people to demonstrate during the Jan. 20 inauguration.

Neither Terry nor Mahoney would be specific about the demonstrations, except to say they intend to block roads and disrupt the ceremony.

Clinton may investigate Iraq scandal

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — President-elect Clinton said Thursday he would consider an investigation of the Bush administration's handling of an illegal loan scheme to Iraq.

Clinton, answering questions at a news conference to announce the appointment of his top economic aides, said he would make his decision after consulting with his prospective attorney general.

"We certainly need to know more than what we know now," Clinton said. "I want to know what else I should do," he added.

Attorney General William Barr on Wednesday rejected congressional demands for the appointment of an independent counsel to examine alleged wrongdoing in the prosecution of the $5.5 billion in loans by an Atlanta bank branch.

Democrats, including the chairmen of the House and Senate Judiciary and Banking Committees, contend that the Bush administration botched the prosecution of the Atlanta bank manager in order to conceal its embarrassing policy of supporting Iraq up until its invasion of Kuwait in 1990.

New ethics rules allow lobbying for foreign companies

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bill Clinton's proposed ban on foreign lobbying by former top government officials leaves a lucrative opening: It covers lobbying for overseas governments but not corporations.

Under the new ethics rules announced Wednesday, some 1,100 top-level Clinton appointees — about the top third — will have to pledge not to lobby their former agencies for five years and never to lobby for any foreign government or foreign political party.

Among these, government trade negotiators can represent foreign governments and companies if they wait five years after they participate in negotiations.

But all other top officials will be able to lobby for foreign businesses right after they leave government, provided they don't go before their former agencies.

That means most former government officials will still be able to work for foreign corporations, a business that economist and lobbying expert Pat Choate estimates is worth at least $500 million a year. "It's big, big money," Choate said Thursday.

"The money's with the companies," said Liz Galtney, director of the Project on Government Oversight, a liberal research group. "If the foreign companies aren't covered, then we're back to Square One."

Charles Lewis, executive director of the Center for Public Integrity, a non-profit investigative research group, said the exclusion of foreign companies from the permanent lobbying ban leaves "a huge hole."

"It makes the ban on foreign (lobbying) almost meaningless," he said.

Clinton transition spokesman Jim Whitney confirmed Thursday that the lifetime foreign lobbying ban on senior officials does not cover companies. He could not say immediately whether the ban would extend to companies owned partly or fully by foreign governments.

Whitney declined further comment on the new rules, referring the call to other transition spokesmen. They were not immediately available.

The Justice Department, which keeps records on all Americans who act as foreign agents, doesn't have precise figures on what percentage of such activity is done for overseas companies as opposed to governments. But the department's best estimate, according to spokesman Joseph Krovisky, is that it's at least double that for governments or political parties.

'The money's with the companies. If the foreign companies aren't covered, then we're back to Square One.'

Parents, chief dispute over school curriculum

NEW YORK (AP) — The chief of the nation's largest school system is locked in a bitter dispute with some parents over whether first-graders should be taught to respect gay people.

Schools' Chancellor Joseph Fernandez suspended a neighborhood school board last week for refusing to accept the "Children of the Rainbow" curriculum, which contains a section on how to teach respect for homosexual parents.

The city's Board of Education dealt him a setback Wednesday night by voting to reinstate the nine-member elected board in District 24, a largely Roman Catholic section in Queens.

However, it affirmed Fernandez's authority to supersede the board if the two sides cannot come to terms on an alternative curriculum.

Fernandez set a deadline for this evening for the school board to meet with him and his staff. If the board doesn't respond, he will appoint three trustees to assume all responsibilities for the development of a multicultural curriculum.

What has particularly angered some parents in the district are two books on a suggested reading list for teachers — "Daddy's Roommate" and "Heather Has Two Mommies."

Thousands of letters have been mailed to parents warning that the curriculum meant first-graders would be taught about the "homosexual lifestyle, including oral and anal sex."

"I'll be the first one to pull my kids out of the school" if the curriculum is enforced, said Anna Saez, who heads a parent association at Public School 89.

"I wish it wasn't in the school at all," said another parent, Betty LoCicero. "If it's going to have to be, let it be in the junior high school."

It's the latest controversy involving Fernandez, whose name has surfaced as a potential education secretary in President-elect Clinton's administration.

As education chief in New York, Fernandez hasn't shied from controversy. He was a leader in paving the way for AIDS education nationally and for condom distribution in schools.

Packwood apologizes; refuses to resign

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Bob Packwood apologized Thursday for "unwelcome and offensive" actions toward women but defiantly refused to resign or discuss specific allegations of sexual harassment.

Packwood called himself a typical child of the 1930s and 1940s — "boys took shop; girls took cooking" — whose views of women had grown more enlightened professionally while his personal behavior had been worse than "stupid or boorish."

"I just didn't get it. I do now," the Oregon Republican told a crowded news conference, his first public appearance since 16 former women employees or acquaintances accused him of improper sexual conduct.

The divorced Packwood, 60, portrayed his 24 years in the Senate as a contrast between his strong voting record for women's rights and "a blind spot" in his personal conduct. In fact, he said he didn't remember many of the incidents cited by former employees when confronted with them.

Packwood, who recently spent several days at a facility that treats alcohol problems, said he would "not use alcohol as a defense" for his conduct. The senator said he will continue to seek counseling but is not sure whether he has a drinking problem.

Not once did he use the word "harassment." He refused to discuss specific incidents or the conduct that caused his apology. And he wouldn't comment on allegations by some of the women that he threatened to discredit them personally with derogatory information.

Instead, he said he had been moving women into positions of authority ever since he was a county Republican official in 1960.

"From that time forward all my political activities have been ... gender neutral," Packwood said, noting that women have been his chiefs of staff for the past 15 years.

But of his personal behavior, he said, "My actions were just plain wrong."

Former employees, lobbyists, campaign workers and others said that from the 1960s to the 1980s, Packwood made uninvited advances that ranged from abrupt kisses to sudden physical grabbing.

The Senate Ethics Committee is conducting a preliminary inquiry into the conduct.

Testy at times, Packwood said forcefully that "I am not going to resign under any circumstances."

Packwood's news conference, televised live in Portland, did not assuage his critics. Betty Roberts, a former Oregon Supreme Court justice who lost to Packwood in 1974, said in Portland that "what we saw today was a cover up."

"He wouldn't discuss the facts. It's his attempt to avoid it. He still doesn't get it," she said.

Packwood supporters, who watched the news conference in Portland, had a different view. "This was not sexual harassment. To slap that term on this conduct injures working women," said Jeanette Slepian, a former Packwood staffer. "A demand for an apology is understandable. But the demand for a Senate seat is political."

Narrowly re-elected to a fifth term last month, the moderate Republican said "I could not recall many of the incidents" when the Washington Post confronted him with the specific allegations five days before the election.

"It was just a blank," the senator said, saying he didn't even remember some of the women mentioned by the newspaper. The Post published the first story on the allegations Nov. 22.

Packwood's statements about lack of memory — and his refusal to discuss accusations that he tried to discredit some of his accusers — angered at least one of the women, former staffer Julie Williamson.

Williamson, who said the senator kissed her and tried to pull her clothes off, said after the news conference that he was still "trying to deceive the people of Oregon and the people of this country."

"I know he was asked about the incident with me over the years," she said by telephone from New York. "I know that he remembers the incident because he immediately went out of the Washington Post interview and told people to send letters about me to The Post."

Packwood pledged "full cooperation" with the ethics committee if asked about those and similar allegations.

He said of his accusers, "I would like to meet with them personally and apologize.
