Concealed gun poll

Texas Gov.-elect George W. Bush said last week that once he takes office in January he will sign into law a bill that would allow qualifying citizens to carry concealed handguns. The bill, sponsored by State Rep. Ron Wilson, D-Houston, would allow people 21 or older who have no criminal record or history of mental illness to carry concealed handguns after applying for a license and passing a firearm education and safety course. Would you support such a measure in Texas? Call Cityline's Community Pulse Poll at 560-2400, category 7655. If you think Texans should be allowed to carry concealed handguns, press 1. Retail boom threatens to drain city's labor pool

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Lower-echelon wage earners are vital to area retail and other businesses. And so far, Midland's economic upswing has not depleted the labor pool of these workers. But with a number of new employers on the horizon, Midland could be affected as have other booming cities in Texas.

Recently, several new businesses have been hiring large numbers of this level employee, according to the managers of Office Depot, Wal-Mart and Hastings.

And so far, Midland's labor pool has not been depleted, according to Texas Employment Commission officials. "We got everybody we needed pretty quick," said Office Depot manager Dane Hitchcock.

Chris Hernandez of Hastings Books, Music & Video said about 70 new employees were added to its staff without great difficulty.

Texas' unemployment rate was 5.9 percent at the first of the month, the lowest rate in three years, according to state statistics. In some markets, this has led to a shortage of suitable applicants for lower-echelon jobs.

In the Dallas Metroplex, some employers have begun surreptitiously scrounging other businesses, offering better pay and benefits for workers who will quit their current jobs.

One new supermarket in Dallas had so much trouble finding staff, officials were campaigning for potential employees from area schools and retirement centers, according to recent reports in the Dallas Morning News.

Many places in the North Dallas and Plano area are being hit so hard by the labor shortage that they are paying as much as $7 an hour for minimum-wage employees such as ice cream dispensers.

Some of these businesses also have begun having trouble filling bottom-

NATO bombing raid raises ante

ZAGREB, Croatia — NATO warplanes bombed a Serbian-controlled air base in Croatia on Monday, destroying its runway and its antiaircraft defenses and taking the Western alliance's political involvement in the Bosnian war to a new level.

NATO commanders said the raid knocked the Udbina airfield out of commission for 30 days. The airfield and its artillery batteries have been used by Serbs in recent weeks to terrorize residents of government-held areas of northwest Bosnia.

A Croatian commander said only two runways were damaged by the midday airstrike and that they could be repaired as early as Wednesday. The airfield is 22 miles southwest of the U.N.-designated safe area of Bihac.

In Washington, a Pentagon official said the mission's intent was to temporarily disable the air-

Air strike may play into Serbs' strategy

By Julijana Mojsilovic

■ Analysis

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — When NATO warplanes bombed an air field in Croatia, were they doing exactly what Bosnia's and Croatia's Serbs wanted?

The Western alliance's raid Monday was clearly meant as punishment after a string of increasingly audacious attacks by the Serbs on U.N.-protected targets.

But its long-term effects are unclear.

Croatian and Bosnian Serbs have lost the backing of Serbia's President Slobodan Milosevic, at whose behest they went to war 2½ years ago. They now are attacking Bosnian territory jointly because they know they must stick together to survive.

Battling a Bosnian government army that appears to be gaining strength, they seem intent on trying to finish the job

GOP moves to deny welfare benefits to legal immigrants

WASHINGTON (AP) — With anti-immigrant sentiment sweeping parts of the country, Republicans are moving to deny welfare benefits to most legal immigrants, many of them the elderly parents of U.S. citizens.

The restrictions, which would save $22 billion over five years, are part of a welfare overhaul in the GOP's "Contract With America." House Republican lawmakers have promised votes on welfare reform and nine other bills in the contract early next year.

One of the least-noticed provisions of the GOP plan is its ban on government services and benefits to most legal immigrants. Refugees and legal residents over the age of 75 who have been in the country for at least five years are the exceptions.

Legal immigrants would be barred from 60 different health, education, job training, nutrition, housing, cash and social service programs — from school lunches and foster care to rental and energy assistance.

Concern grows about O.J. trial disrupting America's workplace

NEW YORK — Leslie Cree was so sick of hearing her officemate blab about O.J. Simpson she designated their common space an "O.J. Free Zone," pinning up a list of forbidden topics of discussion.

"No talk about attorneys, dead people, weapons and no speculation about guilt or innocence," the sign read.

"She was driving me insane," Cree said of her colleague, Martha Gorman, a seminar coordinator for The Hay Group, a management consulting firm based in Philadelphia.

Gorman admitted she talks about the case to anyone who will listen and has even carried a People magazine O.J. trial guide to client meetings.

ROD: Parental involvement, not spanking, is key, studies find ing "high parental involvement," the adolescents had lower aggressiveness, lower delinquency and better psychological well-being whether they had been disciplined with spanking or not.

To Dr. Richard Jackson, president of the Richard Jackson Center for Evangelism and Encouragement in Brownwood and interim pastor of Midland's First Baptist Church, "The parent who loves should discipline, should offer the child the consequences for failure and a reward for growth and maturity.

"It is the parent's responsibility to guide and to instruct," Jackson said. "And the parent who does not discipline does not love. But the parent who in anger punishes does not show love for certain."

If discipline is driven by anger, "it becomes punishment," he said.

The minister said "there must always be, in the growing experience, a consequence for failure or a consequence for disobedience or disrespect for what's right. And a parent is instructed in Scripture to guide the child in love and offer the consequence for that child's lack of responsibility or lack of (proper) behavior."

Proverbs proclaim that "a wise son heareth his father's instruction," that a father who "spareth his rod hateth his son," and "whoso(ever) loveth instruction loveth knowledge: but he that hateth reproof is brutish."

For centuries, "loving parents carefully used spanking in an area (the buttocks) of the body that was not likely to suffer permanent damage but where pain could be inflicted without suffering damage," Jackson said. "And that is a consequence for wrong-doing."

Jackson said that in today's world there is much discussion about "problems in our schools — crime and violence."

And those school problems, he said, can be traced the United States Supreme Court's 1962-63 decision that "took prayer out of the schools.

"And you have got to remember, they took corporal punishment out of the schools at the same time."

Jackson said "the real problem" in today's world is in those "people who don't want to accept any consequence for their own actions; therefore, they can't administer any consequence for other people's wrong actions. An undisciplined person has a hard time administering discipline."

But in anger, an undisciplined parent may punish.

"Discipline is acceptable, and punishment is unacceptable, because punishment is usually done in anger."

Jackson sanctioned "discipline done in love through spanking" and discipline that doesn't injury the child physically, emotionally, or psychologically.

"You can injure a child much worse by verbal put-downs and verbal punishment than you can by punishing him with a paddle," Jackson said. "You can destroy his self-image by never building him up, always tearing him down."

Cindy Olson, a certified family-life educator for the Centers for Children and Families in Midland, recommended that parents "take the trouble to learn alternate forms of discipline." Those are the "type of parents who are involved in their children's lives."

Spanking can "lose its effectiveness especially if that's the only discipline tool a parent does," Ms. Olson said. "The kids get used to it; then, the parent escalates (spanking). If you've got a set of five or six tools, you are not going to need to spank."

Ms. Olson said that "praise is actually a discipline tool if it is used correctly."

And offering the child choices and consequences by explaining the meaning behind the child's actions and the consequences of those actions is a form of discipline.

Other discipline tools include "time-out" for younger children, re-direction and restitution. "That always worked on me when I was a little one," Ms. Olson said. "There needs to be alternative forms of discipline."

In its investigation into discipline by spanking, NIHR examined an Iowa State University study of 332 two-parent families, each with at least one child in the seventh grade. The Iowa study covered a four-year period.

The research measured the nature and frequency of the corporal punishment by the father and the mother, the quality of parental involvement, adolescent aggressiveness, delinquency and adolescent psychological well-being.

Research showed that both fathers and mothers are "more likely to hit sons than daughters.

"Spanking and poor-quality parenting often occurred in the same family," the research showed.

"However, in families that had high parental involvement, the adolescents had lower aggressiveness, lower delinquency and better psychological well-being whether they had been disciplined with spanking or not," the NIHR research indicated. "Corporal punishment administered by mothers was significantly associated with lower delinquency in daughters."

While many social scientists have "argued that spanking or corporal punishment may cause the development of emotional and behavioral problems," research into those concerns "frequently comes from research on physically abused children." And those generalized findings "may not be applicable to the vast majority of families that use spanking as a form of discipline."

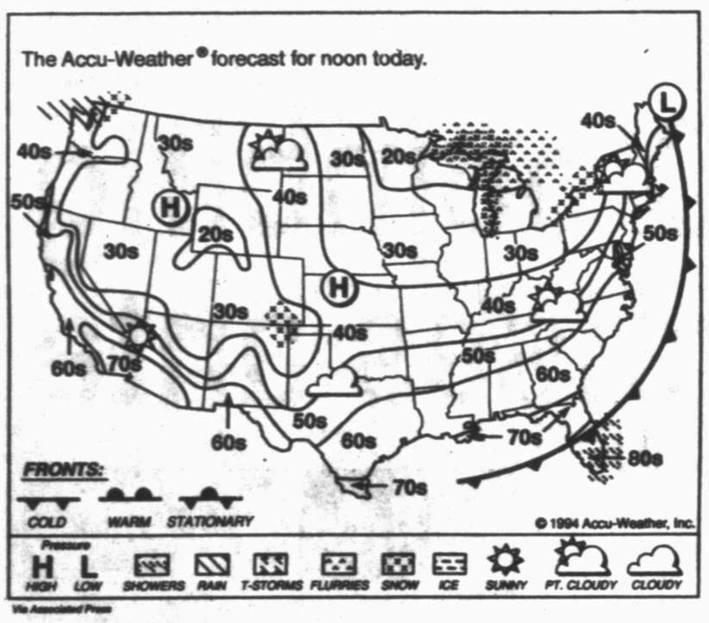

NIHR researchers found that "authoritarian parenting practices, which frequently use corporal punishment as an important component, often result in children scoring low on measures of self-reliance and school performance." The researchers also expressed concern that "corporal punishment could escalate to physical abuse in some families."

Meanwhile, there is some evidence that "physically abusive parenting and milder forms of corporal punishment have declined in recent years," the NIHR study shows. "Unfortunately, there is no reason to believe that there has been a corresponding increase in quality of parental involvement." Additional studies have linked "reduced parental support and involvement to such factors as poverty and economic hardship, marital breakup, and single parenthood."

NIHR researchers said that "public policy efforts to curtail the use of corporal punishment may be misdirected. "Efforts instead should focus more on enhancing parent-child relationships and effective parenting practices."

now, carving out their new Greater Serbia. They may be trying to provoke such a big cross-border conflict that Milosevic would have to come to their aid. In doing so, they increase the risk of renewed war with Croatia and more NATO airstrikes.

Monday's attack not only was the largest military operation in NATO history, it also expanded international involvement in the conflict in former Yugoslavia. In attacking the air base at Udbina, NATO planes for the first time took action in Croatia.

Serbs, who have held one-third of Croatia since their 1991 war, sent warplanes to attack two government-held towns in embattled northwest Bosnia, and joined Bosnian Serbs and renegade Muslim forces in their attacks.

The air raids launched last Friday and Saturday from Udbina appeared primarily to terrorize the population and antagonize the international community.

Whether the airstrikes lead U.N. peacekeepers and NATO itself into a quagmire partly depends on the defiant Serb leadership in Croatia and Bosnia, partly on NATO's appetite for confrontation.

Milosevic, whose nationalist rhetoric whipped up a Croatian Serb revolt in 1991 and a Bosnian Serb rebellion a year later, froze all but humanitarian aid to Bosnian Serbs in August to punish them for failing to accept an international peace plan.

Milosevic wants them to accept so he can win lifting of international economic sanctions against Serb-led Yugoslavia.

Sources close to the Yugoslav army say Gen. Ratko Mladic, the Bosnian Serb commander, orchestrated a shift to all-out warfare hoping to eventually engulf both Croatia and Serbia. That way, they believe, Milosevic would have to commit the still-formidable Yugoslav army to protect them.

Bosnian Serb leaders know well that the Muslim-led Bosnian army is better than it used to be; that NATO is pressing a harder line against them; and that their foes are likely to get more, better weapons with the U.S. decision to stop enforcing an international arms embargo against the Sarajevo government.

They are in a race against time. Bosnian Serbs announced Sunday that they had recaptured all the territory taken by the Bosnian army's 5th Corps in a surprise offensive out of Bihac last month.

That could have satisfied them, but on Monday they kept attacking.

A Bosnian Serb military officer who spoke on condition of anonymity said Serbs in Bosnia and Croatia knew they had to stick together or they would "cease to exist."

Mladic's logic was easily acceptable to the Croatian Serbs.

Their only link to the outside world is through Bosnian Serb-held territory and they fear Milosevic will abandon them, too.

Croatia, meanwhile, has been threatening to retake territory occupied by its Serb minority since 1991, and has greatly strengthened its arsenal of weapons.

"If the international community decides to help defeat the Croatian Serb republic militarily, Yugoslavia must come to our assistance."

ANTE: NATO retaliates, bombs Serb base field, not destroy it. NATO officials said they wanted to limit casualties.

A little more than 20 American warplanes participated in the mission of about 30 aircraft, the Pentagon official said on condition of anoynmity. The planes included F-16C, F-15E, and F-A-18D attack planes.

The planes bombed Serb antiaircraft artillery and surface-to-air missile sites first, and then the airfield. NATO reconnaissance planes did a damage assessment.

In addition to the U.S. planes, Jaguar and Mirage jets from Britain, France and the Netherlands crossed the Adriatic for the airstrike, NATO's seventh since the Bosnian war started in April 1992 and the alliance's first in neighboring Croatia.

"Initial reports are that the strike was successful," said Adm. Leighton W. Smith, NATO commander for southern Europe. Serb surface-to-air missiles were fired at the NATO planes, but he said all warplanes and 20 support aircraft returned safely to their bases in Italy.

The U.N. commander for former Yugoslavia, Gen. Bertrand de Lapresle, requested that the NATO warplanes target runways and taxiways — not destroy aircraft, Smith told reporters in Naples, Italy.

"Our intention was to try to limit collateral damage," Smith said. "We did not want to go outside of that airfield area, and we wanted to limit the number of people on the ground who might be casualties as a result of the strike."

Slobodan Jarcevic, an aide to Croatian Serb leader Milan Martic, asserted that two villages north of the airfield were destroyed, "and it is assumed that all civilians that were in those houses were killed." There was no independent confirmation.

After the raid, Croatian Serb troops seized two Czech U.N. soldiers and threatened to kill them, Jarcevic said. The United Nations said the two were later released, but anti-U.N. hostilities remained high.

Smith said the raid wasn't meant "to put the airfield out of commission for an awfully long time. If we had wanted to we would have taken out all the aircraft, the ammunition."

Croatia's air force commander, Col. Imra Agotic, said the damage to two runways could be repaired in 48 to 72 hours. Agotic also said about 20 planes and 10 helicopters were destroyed or damaged.

The airstrikes actually may play into the hands of Bosnian and Croatian Serbs. Since they have been attacking Bosnian government lands jointly in recent weeks, an escalating cross-border conflict might pressure Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic to help the Serbs.

Milosevic cut off most aid to Bosnia's Serbs in August in exchange for eased international sanctions on Serb-dominated Yugoslavia. He continues to wield influence in Serb-held parts of Croatia.

Senior U.N. envoy Yashushi Akashi said Monday that he and Milosevic would meet Wednesday with Martic, who condemned the bombing.

DENY: GOP moves to cut welfare benefits

(From 1A)

however, would come from kicking legal immigrants off Medicaid, except for emergency health care, and Supplemental Security Income, which provides monthly checks of $446 to the elderly and disabled.

The number of immigrants on SSI has grown dramatically in recent years, from 127,900 in December 1982 to over 700,000 today, and they now account for 12 percent of all recipients on the rolls.

A study by the Social Security Administration found that most immigrants on the SSI roles, as of June 1991, were of Mexican origin, followed by Cuba, the Philippines, the Soviet Union, China, Vietnam, South Korea, Laos, Cambodia and the Dominican Republic.

Many of these immigrants were brought to the United States by children or other relatives who promised to support them, but they eventually wound up collecting public benefits.

President Clinton's own welfare reform plan sought to put some restrictions on the use of SSI by elderly immigrants whose relatives have the means to support them. A handful of moderate Democrats went even further earlier this year and embraced the GOP's near-total ban on welfare to legal immigrants.

Now, after a campaign season in which public concerns about immigration were used to political advantage and California voters endorsed Proposition 187, an initiative to deny public benefits to illegal aliens, the issue is sure to be a top item in the Republican-controlled Congress.

Rep. Rick Santorum, R-Pa., who wrote the GOP welfare bill with a ban on welfare to legal immigrants, said Congress will be looking for ways to finance new work programs for parents on welfare, and immigrants who get benefits are a likely target.

"People want to see something dramatic happen on welfare, some tough work requirements, and that costs money," said Santorum, who was elected to the Senate. "We need a funding mechanism and this is one of the ways to go about doing it, and it already has bipartisan support."

Robert Rector, a welfare expert with the conservative Heritage Foundation, said changes are also necessary because elderly immigrants are an increasing drain on the U.S. Treasury.

Unless the current system is reformed, taxpayers will be spending $35 billion a year providing health and welfare benefits to elderly immigrants "who have never contributed to our society," Rector said.

"There's a growing recognition that the federal welfare system cannot serve as a deluxe retirement system for elderly people from the Third World," Rector said.

rung managerial positions as well, according to the DMN reports.

According to a spokesman with the state TEC office, this does not mean there are not people waiting to be employed, but that many on unemployment lists do not have the basic necessary skills to perform even today's low-level positions.

Midland officials say there are no problems staffing new businesses, but with the regular addition of new businesses during the past year — such as Wendy's, Pier 1 and the Outback Steak House — the local labor pool has been seeing significant reductions.

Further, a host of potential new Midland employers may be poised to add to and profit from the city's economic upswing.

Businesses that may come to dip into the area job market include: Builders Square hardware, Best Buy electronics, Olive Garden restaurant, Black-Eyed Pea restaurant, Discovery Zone recreation center, Hobby Lobby arts and crafts, Anthony's, Rnby Tuesday, International House of Pancakes, Venture Stores, another Denny's restaurant and several other potential newcomers.

TEC officials say they keep no local statistics on the numbers of available workers of a specific skill level, but say such a list would be useful for planning and may one day become necessary.

O.J.: Will trial disrupt workplace?

(From 1A)

The issue is not necessarily guilt or innocence. Rather, some people fear live TV coverage of the trial, expected to start in January, could become a workplace disruption.

Although many U.S. employers don't see this as a problem (how many workplaces even have TVs?), the proceedings in Los Angeles could become a national obsession, much like the Clarence Thomas-Anita Hill hearings a few years ago. And the O.J. trial could last for months.

"Many companies will be caught unawares," said Walter Polsky, chairman and chief executive of Cambridge Human Resource Group, a personnel consulting firm in Chicago. "They are unprepared for the drop in productivity."

His firm is recommending clients hold staff meetings before the trial, make videotaped segments available during lunch breaks and re-emphasize company policies about time off and sick leave.

A random query of big employers showed some companies are at least thinking about how the trial could affect productivity.

"We expect a resurgence of Simpsonitis around the water-cooler and in cafeterias around the country," said Burke Stinson, a spokesman for AT&T Corp.

At Aetna Life & Casualty's headquarters in Hartford, Conn., few people have televisions. Under the insurance company's office rules, an employee may play a radio as long as it doesn't bother others, said spokesman Michael Bazinet.

Some workplace specialists said worries about employees slacking off to gather around the TV for the latest O.J. testimony are overblown.

James E. Challenger, head of Challenger, Gray & Christmas Inc., an employment consulting firm in Chicago, said lunches and breaks may grow longer, but "people will rise to the occasion and get their work done anyway."

PLO supporters gather as Gazans worry about fragile truce, war

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip (AP) — PLO gunmen fired into the air and denounced Muslim extremists Monday as 10,000 people rallied in what Yasser Arafat billed as a show of support for peace with Israel.

Militant Islamic leaders, burying the 14th victim of Friday's factional fighting, called the rally a provocation likely to damage the truce worked out by Israeli Arab mediators.

Ordinary Gazans nervously watched the displays of firepower, fearing their impoverished homeland was on the brink of civil war.

"We support democracy, but we need security and stability to build our state," Arafat told cheering supporters in city square.

"We will not allow anybody to sow disorder and we will not allow anyone to destroy what we have built," the Palestine Liberation Organization leader said.

Arafat is seeking broader public backing following bloody clashes Friday outside a Gaza City mosque between his police and Islamic activists opposed to negotiating with Israel.

About 200 supporters of the Islamic Resistance Movement, or Hamas, marched in the funeral procession of the 14th victim, Ata Kanan, 25, who died Monday of gunshot wounds in the head.

"Arafat is a killer. Instead of shooting at Israelis, he is shooting at our sons," his father Mohammed, 58, said, tears streaming down his face as the body was lowered into a grave next to 10 of the other 13 victims.

At the PLO rally, Arafat, clearly elated by a crowd larger than the one that welcomed him on his arrival five months ago, encouraged supporters to tear down a fence and come within feet of the stage.

Before his speech, members of the Fatah Hawks, the underground armed band that had fought the Israeli occupation, circulated in the crowd wearing masks and firing their weapons in the air. Police occasionally joined in the firing.

Arafat's support among Fatah loyalists had been shaky in the Gaza Strip because he ignored street fighters when assigning key jobs in the autonomy government. Resurrecting the Hawks appeared to be an attempt to shore up his own flank and to distance ordinary police from the fight with the Izzedine Al-Qassam underground of Hamas.

"Arafat, Arafat we love you. No one can challenge you," the crowd chanted. "Izzedine will not scare us because we have Fatah Hawks."

Izzedine said in a leaflet distributed in Gaza that it would attack self-rule officials and start a civil war unless those responsible for Friday's bloodshed were tried and executed.

PLO police opened fire Friday on stone-throwers outside the Palestine Mosque, an Islamic militant center. Aside from those killed, the clash and rioting left 150 wounded.

Many Gazans were clearly distraught by the violence.

"It is a bad sign. We are heading toward a civil war that will only serve Israeli interests," said Salameh Yajizi, 30.

The tension between the two sides also was reflected in graffiti.

"Arafat Goldstein", said a wall slogan, comparing the PLO leader to the Jewish settler who massacred 29 Palestinians in February.

Graffiti outside Hamas leader Mahmoud Zahhar's house signed by Fatah said "Fatah zealots will chop off the heads of conspirators" and accused Zahhar of accepting money from Iran, a charge Arafat echoed at the rally.

Israeli Arab mediators, meanwhile, tried to find a formula to prevent future violence that included compensation to the families of the dead and wounded.

The PLO said the agreement was incomplete.

Hamas leaders supported the principle, but did not sign an agreement because they want Arafat to publicly accept responsibility for the bloodshed until an investigation determines blame.

"He is still refusing to be held responsible for the Friday incident. So no real agreement between us and the PLO has been made," Zahhar said.

Hamas accused Arafat of giving in to Israeli pressure to crack down on militants.

Conviction of man who killed disabled daughter stirs debate

By Clyde H. Farnsworth
N.Y. Times News Service

TORONTO — The second-degree murder conviction of a Saskatchewan farmer in the death of his disabled daughter has kindled debate in Canada about mercy killing and has increased pressure for changes in the law to soften such judgments in the future.

Robert Latimer's daughter, Tracy, 12, was in near-constant pain from the severe cerebral palsy she was born with. Diaper-clad and weighing 38 pounds, she could not walk, talk, or feed herself.

Latimer said he was doing what he thought was right when, on Oct. 24, 1993, he put her into the cab of a pickup on the family farm in Wilkie, in central Saskatchewan, and piped the exhaust into it.

He told the police that he had been ready to stop the engine if she started crying, but that she fell quietly to sleep. "My priority was to put her out of her pain."

He pleaded not guilty to first-degree murder, and, on Wednesday, a jury found him guilty of second-degree murder and gave him a mandatory sentence of life in prison with eligibility for parole in 10 years.

After the judgment, Latimer told the court: "I still feel I did what was right. I don't think you people are being human."

His wife, Laura, tearfully defended him outside the courthouse and criticized a justice system that would "take my husband, a good and loving father, who, when Tracy threw up, he would bathe her. He sat with her, and rocked her on his knees for hours and hours."

Rebels attack city one day after peace accord begins, Angola says

LUANDA, Angola (AP) — The government claimed the rebels attacked on two battlefronts Monday, a day after both sides signed a peace accord, but aid workers in one of the areas said there was no fighting.

Southern African leaders, meanwhile, considered sending troops to join a U.N. force that is to anchor the peace treaty.

Both Angolan state radio and the UNITA rebel station Vorgan broadcast appeals for peace and reconciliation after 19 years of war.

But later in the day, the government claimed that rebels under the command of UNITA Vice President Antonio Dembo attacked the northern city of Uige, in "flagrant violation" of the peace accord.

It said government troops "reserved the right to respond."

AID workers in Uige said UNITA soldiers were patrolling tense streets but there was no fighting.

State radio also said rebels attacked the town of Cacolo in the diamond-rich province of Lunda South.

Journalists were not allowed on U.N. aid flights around Angola on Monday, apparently to prevent any possible reports of clashes from inciting either side to fight on.

Hospitals reported 10 people killed and 87 wounded in the capital, Luanda, by gunfire from citizens celebrating the accord signed Sunday in Lusaka, Zambia.

Repeating a ritual that has twice failed to end the war, Foreign Minister Venancio de Moura and UNITA Secretary General Gen. Eugenio Manuvakola signed the pact.

It capped a year of talks brokered by the United Nations and was to lead to a permanent truce starting Tuesday and power-sharing in Angola, devastated by war that erupted on the eve of independence from Portugal in 1975.

Nigerian Gen. Chris Garuba, U.N. chief military observer, reported "significant progress" at continuing talks between government and rebel military brass in Lusaka on implementing Tuesday's formal truce.

"I do think the cease-fire will be in force and will be observed," he said.

But Manuvakola, heading UNITA's delegation, refused to reveal details about rebel troops and weapons to government negotiators "until the fighting stops."

U.N. observers are to go to trouble spots once Tuesday's truce begins, but U.N. peacekeepers are not expected until the cease-fire is seen to be holding.

U.N. sources said so far they had received commitments for only 15 percent of the 7,000 planned peacekeepers.

Deputy President Thabo Mbeki of South Africa said his country, Zimbabwe and Zambia had received U.N. requests for troops. He stressed that soldiers would only go in once a cease-fire was holding.

"We are not going there to fight, and that would apply to all countries in the region," he said.

The signing ceremony itself cast doubt on the treaty's chances.

Rebel leader Jonas Savimbi, who was supposed to sign with President Jose Eduardo dos Santos, failed to show up.

He claimed he was unable to leave Angola because of government attacks and delegated Manuvakola to sign at the last minute. When Savimbi did not appear, dos Santos also delegated his minister to sign.

The official Jornal de Angola said Manuvakola met privately with dos Santos after Sunday's ceremony, apparently to discuss a possible meeting between the president and Savimbi.

The paper said such a meeting could take place within 10 days at an undetermined site.

Tribe may hold key to archeological puzzle

By Michael Specter
N.Y. Times News Service

SALEKHARD, Russia — A nomadic tribe of reindeer herders who dress in skins, practice ritual sacrifice and have been using the same types of homemade tools and wooden sleds for more than 1,000 years may hold the key to a mystery that has long baffled archeologists.

The Nenets, who wander across the northernmost reaches of the Siberian Arctic, eat raw fish, drink reindeer blood and live year-round in reindeer-skin tepees called chums.

Last summer archeologists came upon a group of about 1,000 Nenet reindeer herders who have had almost no contact with Western culture. Archeologists long eager to connect the ancient peoples of Scandinavia to the Eskimos of the New World thousands of miles away say that this group may help provide the essential missing clues.

And they may do more than that. The Siberian Arctic is one of the last places on earth unknown to archeology. Archeologists and anthropologists had assumed that northern peoples lived in the Arctic out of necessity, and that over time they migrated south. But the Nenets, who have preserved and extended a cultural heritage that may be 10,000 years old, could provide the best proof yet that humans not only can adapt to the harshest possible conditions, they may choose them.

"I could hardly believe my eyes when we stumbled across them," said Dr. William W. Fitzhugh, director of the Arctic Studies Center at the Smithsonian Institution's Museum of Natural History, describing his encounter with the Vanuyto-Serotto clan of the Nenet people. Dr. Fitzhugh spent much of last summer on the Yamal peninsula, where he and a group of Russian ethnographers and anthropologists came upon the group of isolated Nenets.

The scientists were on the peninsula attempting to survey a huge area of the archeologically unexplored Siberian Arctic coast. What they found, to their surprise, was the living equivalent of an important archeological treasure.

McDonald's must move, Beijing says

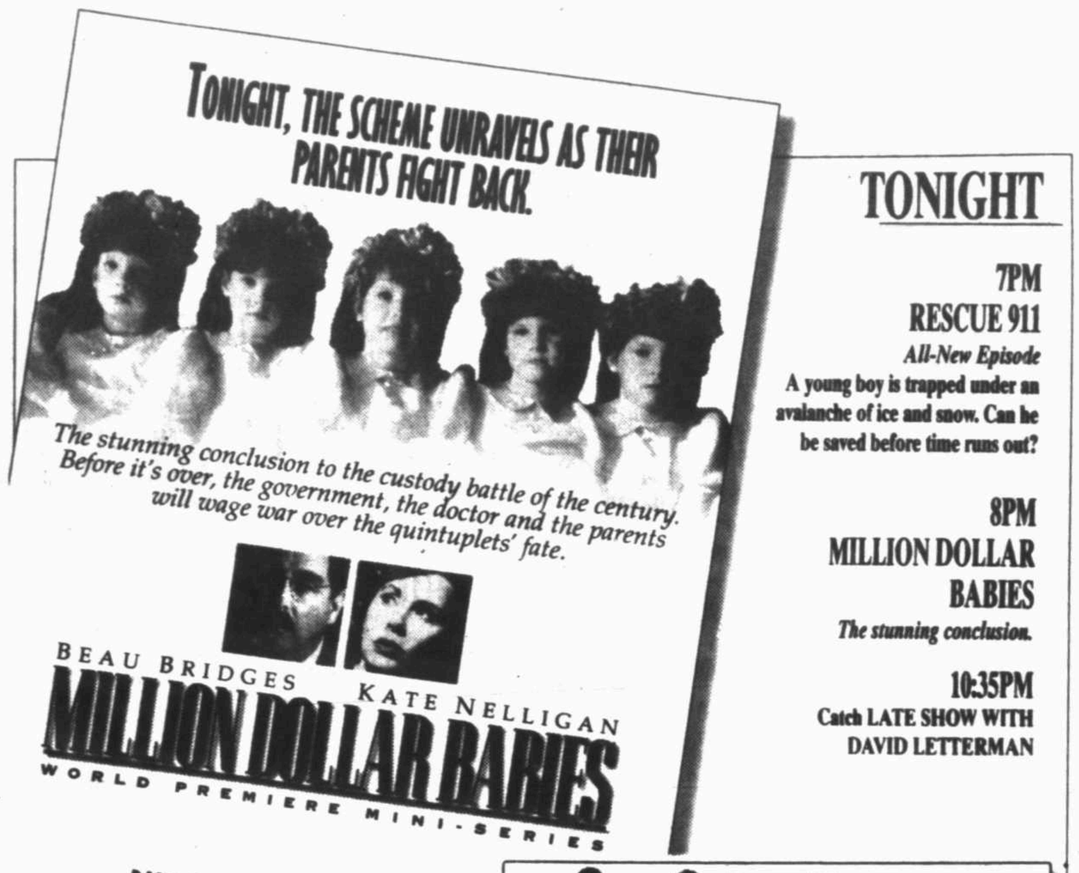

BEIJING (AP) — In a move that may chill the confidence of foreign investors, Beijing said Monday that McDonald's must pull down the golden arches at the city's choicest street corner.

The city reneged on its promise to give McDonald's 20 years at the site after agreeing to give an influential Hong Kong developer the same prime location — the busy corner of Wangfujing street and the Avenue of Eternal Peace.

The Wangfujing outlet, just two blocks from Tiananmen Square, has become one of the most lucrative of the 22 McDonald's in China in the two years since it opened.

Now, the 1.2 million-square-foot site surrounding the restaurant is destined to become the Oriental Plaza, a commercial, office and residential complex planned by developer Li Ka-shing, the richest man in Hong Kong.

An official in Beijing's Foreign Liaison office who requested anonymity said McDonald's would have a site within the new complex once it is completed in about three years. Details of its location within the new complex and of the compensation to be paid are to be negotiated between the land developer and McDonald's, he said.

DEAR ABBY

Woman's boyfriend comes up short in critical respects

DEAR ABBY: I have heard that you don't believe a letter is "real" unless it is handwritten with misspelled words, and tears all over the paper. Well, this is real.

Van Buren

What should I do about my boyfriend? I am 45, he is 50, and we've been seeing each other for several months. He is nice-looking, dresses well, claims to be educated, but he has a trait that may be the end of our relationship unless I can figure out a way to get him to stop it. He is very critical.

He comments on everything I eat. Example: "Boy, you sure use a lot of salt!" Also, "Wow . . . are you going to eat all that?" Or, "Do you really think all that butter is good for you?"

I am not overweight. People tell me I look sensational!

My mother said it is the height of rudeness to comment on somebody else's food, in a restaurant or at home, and I should not put up with it. She asks, "What do you need him for?"

Abby, I have seen this man lick his knife in a restaurant. (I was appalled, but I didn't say anything.)

I have thought of giving him a book on etiquette, but I have given him books on other subjects, which I doubt if he ever read. (Maybe he can't read?)

He has other traits that bother me — like jealousy. If I talk to another man, he accuses me of flirting. I suppose you wonder why I go out with him with all these red flags. Well, a 45-year-old woman can't afford to be too fussy. Or is there something wrong with my attitude? I don't know whether to sign myself "Desperate" or "Insecure," or . . . A LITTLE OF BOTH

DEAR BOTH: You can't be "desperate" enough to tolerate such insulting and belittling behavior.

Unless he has some redeeming features you failed to mention — he's good to his mother, kind to animals and generous to the poor — I'm with your mother. What do you need him for?

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I really need your advice. We have dear friends of whom we are very fond, and the feeling is mutual. There is one problem. Their house is filthy and the kitchen is unsanitary. Their dogs run free in the kitchen while food is out, dog hair gets into everything, and their cooking utensils, pots and pans are visibly dirty!

They keep insisting on having us for dinner, and we are running out of excuses. Help! Believe it or not, they're really great people. — NO NAME, NO TOWN, NO GUTS

DEAR NO NAME, ETC.: Tell these "dear friends" who are "great people" the truth. It would be a kindness.

DEAR ABBY: I was very much amused to read all those letters about zippers. Here's my contribution:

During World War II, we folks in the U.S. were sending "Bundles for Britain," and in one of my bundles, I enclosed a pair of men's slacks. It had a zipper on the fly, and zippers had not yet been introduced in London.

I received a very nice thank-you from the recipient of the slacks saying he had spent an entire evening demonstrating the zipper, and he was the life of the party. — A.E. KAEPPEL, HOUSTON

Good advice for everyone — teens to seniors — is in "The Anger in All of Us and How to Deal With It." To order, send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Anger Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447. (Postage is included.)

AT WIT'S END

Romance is dead — especially during sunny breakfast on patio

Because this column is prejudiced, slanted and totally biased, let me say for the sake of argument that women are far more romantic than men.

Bombeck

We seize every opportunity to rescue a moment from the ordinary and turn it into an event. The other morning was one of those Chamber of Commerce brochure days. The sun was shining. There was a gentle breeze. It was a time to open all the doors. Suddenly I was Barbara Cartland floating around the kitchen in a caftan. I was going to turn an oat bran cereal day into a breakfast-on-the-patio extravaganza.

The cloth and the flowers were in place when I ordered my husband to "sit and be dazzled." I put his grapefruit and a large plate of food in front of him.

"What's this?" he said pointing to a yellow mound.

"They're called eggs."

"I don't eat eggs. You know that."

"Then push them aside. Isn't this romantic?"

"That bush is dead!"

"What bush?"

"You don't suppose it isn't getting enough water, do you?"

"Probably not."

He pushed away from the table to search for the garden hose. "Who takes the nozzles off these things and hides them?" he asked.

"I do. It makes me happy," I said bitterly. "Sit down and eat before the rolls get cold. Now where are you going?"

"This nozzle leaks. There's one on the hose in the front that fits better."

When he finally returned to the table, he squinted at the sun and said, "I can't eat with the sun in my eyes. It's not good for you. Besides, all I want is a grapefruit and bowl of cereal."

Cary Grant would never have said that to Deborah Kerr.

I sat there with my cup of cold coffee. Why didn't I face up to the fact that I was married to a man who jumped into the swimming pool carrying a Brillo pad and cleanser to clean the grouting?

This is the same man who was guest of honor at a family tennis tournament to celebrate his birthday when he was distracted for a moment by a pile of leaves that had blown on the court. Seconds later his partner was playing alone while he pushed a broom around and scooped up the leaves in a dustpan.

I ate all of his breakfast and mine too. No sense letting the caftan hang loose.

Mansfield man becomes largest single Lotto winner

By Chip Brown
Associated Press Writer

'I'm never pumping another gallon of gasoline. In fact, when I buy gasoline from now on, I am going to pull into the full service area.'

— Joe Jones, winner of $53.9 million Lotto jackpot

AUSTIN — Quitting smoking has paid off for 62-year-old Joe Jones of Mansfield.

When Jones, a service station owner, quit puffing in December 1992, he started using the money he spent on cigarettes to buy Lotto Texas tickets.

On Friday, Jones became the state's single largest Lotto winner and the nation's fourth largest single lottery winner by claiming the $53.9 million jackpot drawn last Wednesday night.

"I'm never pumping another gallon of gasoline," said Jones, announcing that he will end a 34-year career in the service station business. "In fact, when I buy gasoline from now on, I am going to pull into the full service area."

Jones, who plays the same 20 sets of numbers in drawings twice a week, collected a check on Friday for $2,698,459.20. He will receive checks for $2,698,000 every Nov. 15 for the next 19 years.

Jones and his wife, Joyce, said they haven't even begun to fathom what the money can buy.

"It's hard to comprehend that much money," Jones said. "I need a car. I guess that will be the first thing I get."

Mrs. Jones said some of the money would go to pay for their two children's college educations.

"A lot of good will come out of this," she said.

Mrs. Jones said the couple hasn't been able to sleep since winning the money.

"We were tossing and turning and tossing and turning," she said. "I said, 'Do you realize you are in bed with a millionaire?' and he said, 'So are you.' "

Mrs. Jones said the reality of the experience likely won't set in for awhile.

"Maybe when I go to the store and write my first check and don't have to worry about telling him tonight that I need a check tomorrow to cover the one I wrote yesterday, then it may sink in," she said.

Mrs. Jones said her husband would tell her after each Lotto drawing on Wednesday and Saturday nights that he had won the jackpot, so she didn't believe him this time around.

"Every Wednesday and Saturday night we win the lottery," she said. "I finally said, 'If we really won, I need to call the lawyer, so tell me now if we didn't because this will be an embarrassing call if we didn't win,' " she said.

The previous single largest Lotto Texas winner was Jean Graham of Houston, who won $41.76 million on Sept. 21.

In the nation, only a $111 million winner in Wisconsin last year; a $64.2 million winner in Kentucky in April; and a $55.2 million winner in Florida in 1988 have topped Jones' jackpot.

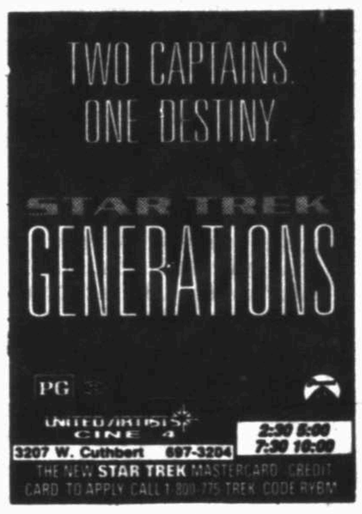

The Stop-N-Go store in Duncanville will receive a $500,000 bonus for selling the winning ticket.

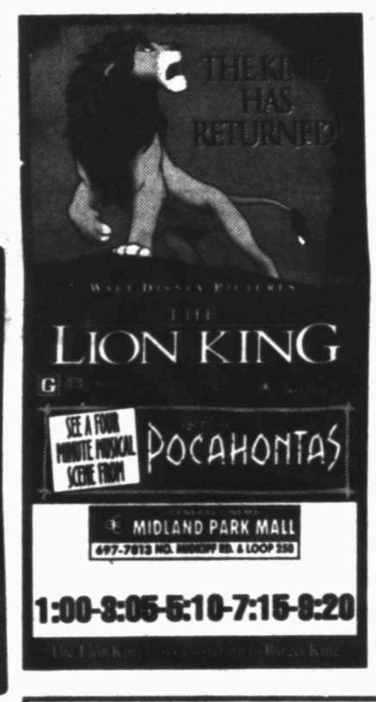

Mansfield is located just southeast of Fort Worth.

Release of funds necessary step

The federal government's decision to release nearly $43 million to Texas and six other states holding large numbers of illegal aliens in their jails and prisons is at least a tacit admission that the undocumented immigrants are in this country because of the failure of the government to control this nation's borders.

That failure has led to a dramatic increase in the crime rate in those states as well as other costs on state governments, municipalities and counties in Texas, California, Florida, Arizona, New York, New Jersey and Illinois. In fact, one estimate indicates that the cost to Texas alone in fiscal year 1993 was $66.8 million. When Texas Attorney General Dan Morales announced during the summer that he planned to file a lawsuit against the federal government for failure to control the nation's borders, he estimated the cost to Texans of that failure at $1 billion.

Texas is only one of a number of states that have sued the federal government because it did not control the nation's borders and, as a result, literally hundreds of thousands of illegal aliens have entered this country to compete with Americans for jobs, government services, health-care benefits and so forth. That has pushed the problem of illegal immigration to the forefront of concern for many Americans. In fact, in California, voters on Nov. 8th passed the controversial Proposition 187 that, if it withstands a legal challenge, will deny government benefits to illegal aliens.

The message coming out of all this activity is that the federal government, and specifically the U.S. Congress, has a duty to reimburse states for costs they have sustained from illegal immigration. More than that, however, is the message that illegal immigration must be stopped.

WILLIAM MURCHISON

What's wrong with prayer in school?

The U.S. Supreme Court was wrong to ban prayer from public places, starting with schools. Newt Gingrich — supported, to one degree or another, by Bill Clinton — is right to talk of a constitutional amendment that would reintroduce prayer to the schools. Are the mush-brained '60s over at last? Let us — pray! There, I said it — let the thought police come and get me.

Murchison

The thought police, disguised as dispensers of fashionable opinion, have roamed the land looking for dissent in order to file suit against it. They have intimidated large numbers. In fact, they still try: Hardly had Clinton prudently declared his open-mind policy on the Gingrich amendment than People for the American Way came down on him hard for supposedly sanctioning a violation of the First Amendment.

Besides being wrong, the prayer ban — accompanied by a ban on Bible-reading and even the posting of the Ten Commandments — was silly. What was the point? To rub religious people's noses in their impotence vis a vis the allmighty U.S. Supreme Court? On these disagreeable terms, the prayer decisions have succeeded splendidly.

Consider. For 175 years, the United States enshrined no anti-prayer policy. Open prayer in the classroom was OK. The United States, in this era, fought two world wars, freed the slaves, settled the West and initiated the mighty economic engine that is today the envy of the world.

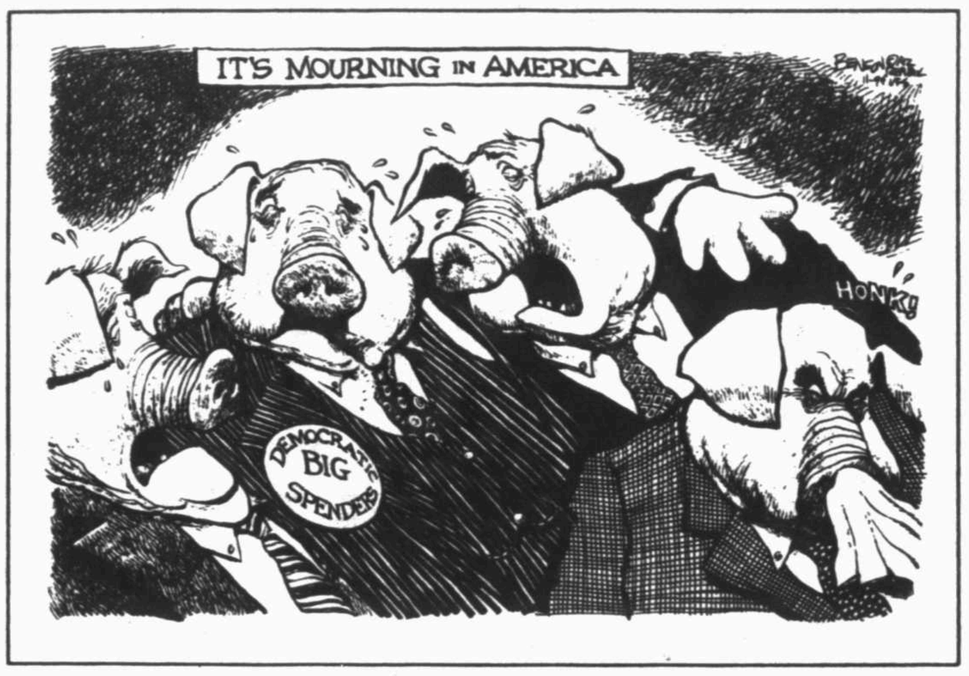

Since we undertook to heave religion out of the public square in 1962, we have fought a divisive war in Vietnam, witnessed student riots across the country, watched the formation of a drug culture, and seen violent crime increase more than 500 percent and illegitimacy 400 percent.

All this is vastly to oversimplify. The point remains: How come school prayer didn't sabotage the most expansive, creative period in our history? And how come, having abolished school prayer, the modern era has been sick and awful? You'd wonder, wouldn't you, to hear People for the American Way go on, how we ever survived under school prayer. Why didn't the roof fall in, the stake and bonfire become our national symbols?

Because the problem — students praying on public property — has been grossly exaggerated, that's why. What's wrong with a little, and it never was more than a little, acknowledgment of divine providence and authority in our affairs? The reverse possibility — realized in our time — is to say, no, we don' t have any truck with Divinity around here. That's hardly the kind of statement we want our schools and public institutions to make — atheism, agnosticism, skepticism.

But prayer infringes on private rights! Or so we hear. Buncombe, is how I respond to that.

CHARLEY REESE

Like monster, liberalism could rise again

I'm delighted with the election results. Still, a cautionary note for conservatives: Remember the old Frankenstein movies of the late 1930s and 1940s.

Reese

In those films, the villagers would eventually blow up or set fire to the castle, which would collapse on the monster. That was that. Only it wasn't really that because in the next film, someone poking around the ruins would find the monster still living.

Liberalism is that monster. It may be under the ruins of the last election, but it is by no means dead. The fact that the American majority does not support it doesn't matter. Liberalism has always been an elite movement, not a popular movement.

And let me define the kind of liberalism I'm talking about. By liberalism I mean that philosophy that sees no natural limit to the powers of government; that distrusts people and therefore wishes to reduce liberty to a minimum in order to control people; that believes people are puppets of their environment and thus, by manipulating the environment, they can manipulate the puppets.

The only difference between that kind of liberalism and communism is squeamishness. The old communist didn't shy away from breaking human eggs to make his socialist omelet. In the United States, liberalism has been too squeamish for that and has employed gradualism: an attempt to impose socialism piecemeal while never calling it socialism or themselves socialists. In fact, the prototypical modern American liberal is what Europeans call a social democrat — a socialist who rejects the revolutionary model of the communists.

I defined the term because liberal and conservative are confusing terms. Many people who are not social democrats think of themselves as liberals, and, to complicate it even more, many who call themselves conservatives are in fact social democrats — Jack Kemp, for example.

Most Americans don't think a lot about this and see themselves really as pragmatists. Even a pragmatist, however, acts on the basis of hidden assumptions. I hope that Americans will begin to examine these assumptions, for only then can they think clearly about what kind of government and society they really want.

The assumptions of the American Revolution were radically different from the assumptions of liberals and neoconservatives. The assumptions of the American Revolution were the following: that government is always a threat to liberty and therefore should be kept weak, with its powers divided; and that it was not the purpose of government to solve people's problems but primarily to protect their liberties, on a collective basis, from assault by internal and external physical forces. The individual, they assumed, would handle his own personal defense.

I agree with their assumptions. Logic was on the side of the American revolutionaries. Modern American government is a mess because it is based on the assumption that government can and should micromanage the lives of 250 million people. It shouldn't and it can't — at least not successfully.

Government can do only four things. It can prohibit behavior and command behavior. It can tax and it can spend. A little thought will tell most people that prohibiting and commanding and taxing and spending cannot solve most of the problems confronting human beings, much less manage something as complex as an industrial economy.

What people see today as problems — crime and poor education, for example — are creations of government. The decline of the American standard of living (real weekly wages have declined by 11.7 percent in the past 15 years) is the fault of U.S. trade policies. It is the failure of government that causes the problems with illegal immigration. It is the government that makes it so difficult for people to start and run successful businesses.

The government, like the monster, is destroying the nation that created it.

OTHER VIEWS

American dissatisfaction shows during election

The American people remain grumpy about politics because more and more people are realizing just how disconnected government has become from their daily lives. Many incumbent Democrats learned about that dissatisfaction firsthand during the election.

This is only partly about issues. It is also, to a large extent, about self-dealing by the governing elite.

As Associated Press business columnist John Cunniff noted, the Bush-Clinton tax and regulatory policies have led to a real, inflation-adjusted reduction in the median wage of 2.6 percent since 1989.

Meanwhile, those in the federal government have continued to enjoy cost-of-living adjustments year after year after year. In 1993, the latest year for which figures are available, the average federal civil servant's pay was 26 percent higher than the average private-sector wage.

When generous fringe benefits were factored in, the gap widened to a veritable chasm: Total average compensation of $46,164 for federal civilian employees was a whopping 45.2 percent greater than the private-sector average.

It's not just the federal government gorging itself on private workers' wallets. In relative terms, for each dollar of increased compensation enjoyed by private-sector workers between 1980 and 1991 (adjusted for inflation), state and local government workers got $4.78.

In the private sector, if you want to make more money, you've got to work harder and smarter or find a different job. In the government sector, you just ram through another tax increase or let the deficit soar.

It's time that Congress reforms way it does business

Few things will be more important to establishing the credibility of a new Republican Congress committed to changing the old way of doing things on Capitol Hill than launching a sweeping reform of how political business is conducted.

One of the first items on the GOP agenda in the new session should be a long-overdue revamping of the internal workings of Congress, including the imposition of term limits on committee assignments and committee chairmanships. For it is in those committees, especially with the chairman of the more influential panels, that so many political power bases have been built, perpetuated and expanded over the decades. . . .

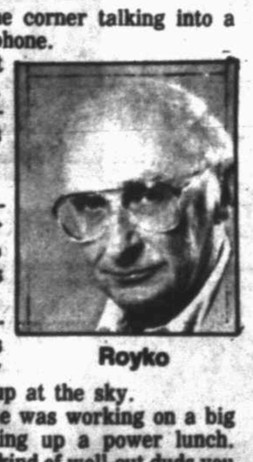

One reason that voters turned control of Congress over to Republicans this election is that they are tired of hearing talk of reform emanating from Capitol Hill and seldom, if ever, seeing any meaningful changes. It is time that Congress reforms itself.

MIKE ROYKO

Superhighway brings new road hazards

He stood on the corner talking into a portable telephone.

Royko

A tweedy sort of guy, lean, dapper, with the kind of slightly graying hair that is considered distinguished.

I noticed him because I was in my car waiting for the light to change and he was near the curb.

As he talked, he nervously shuffled his feet, turned this way and that, and gazed up at the sky.

I idly wondered if he was working on a big business deal or setting up a power lunch. Could be. He wore the kind of well-cut duds you see in the windows of men's shops in downtown Chicago.

Or maybe he was talking to his lady friend — probably a high-fashion model — about dinner plans for that night. Or telling his wife that he'd be with clients and would be home late.

Whatever it was, it had to be important. You don't stand on a corner at 11 a.m. on a blustery day talking into a high-tech telephone if you're just calling the weather bureau.

The light turned green, and I moved slowly forward while glancing to my left to make sure no dawdlers were still crossing the street.

At that moment, I heard a slight thump and suddenly the tweedy guy was sprawled across — of all places — the hood of my car.

He was close enough so that we were almost face to face, separated only by the windshield. And he still had the phone jammed against his ear.

Suddenly I felt sick. After more than 40 years of driving in Chicago, the thing any motorist dreads had finally happened — I hit someone.

My brain raced. I expected to see him fall backward to the pavement, blood oozing from his nose and ears, writhing in pain and screaming for a doctor. Or worse, a lawyer.

There would be the flashing blue and red lights of police cars and ambulances; a sympathetic crowd comforting the fallen victim and glaring at me; witnesses eagerly offering to tattle about my crazed driving; a long line of gapers slowing to look at the carnage; and cops giving me the fish eye while filling out long reports, reading me my rights, and letting me make that one phone call.

Then there would be the charges — reckless this or negligent that. And a personal-injury lawsuit by a wily lawyer, ending with a pitiless jury coming in and awarding him my house, furniture, snow blower, pension and the blond's rings.

Total ruin. I'd spend my old age in alleys, digging around for tin cans to sell.

But he didn't fall to the pavement. He suddenly pushed himself backward with one arm, leaped nimbly onto the sidewalk, and started talking into the phone again.

I sat there for a few seconds with my jaw hanging open. He was now doing exactly what he had been doing before he landed on the hood of my car — shuffling his feet, talking and looking off into the distance.

Then I realized what had really happened. I hadn't hit him, he hit me.

In that split second when I had glanced to the left, he apparently turned and — without looking — stepped off the curb while still jabbering on his phone, thus running into my car and landing on the hood.

I made my turn and pulled over. I wanted to be sure he wasn't going to go into some kind of delayed shock, making me a hit-and-run fugitive.

But he just went on talking. And I wondered what he could be saying. "Uh, give me the costs on those municipal bonds again. Yes, I was distracted for a moment when I landed on top of the hood of a car."

Then the light changed, and he strolled across the street, the phone still glued to his head.

That's what I call real concentration. And a fine example of a real goof, fine clothes and all.

If I hadn't felt relieved not to be on my way to a jail cell, I might have got out of the car and yelled: "Hey, you with the telephone, Mister Busy Big Deal of the Western World, I am going to sue you for negligent babbling, reckless meandering, and scaring me out of two months of my life."

On the other hand, he had done me a favor by exposing me to a new menace of the electronic information highway that I hadn't seen before — the high-tech jabbering jaywalker.

I should have expected it after seeing sacrilegious golfers taking phone calls with one hand while putting with the other. And O.J. Simpson's lawyer being glared at by Judge Lance Ito because his portable phone kept going off in the courtroom.

Now, we have the information superhighway recklessly merging with the old-fashioned highway.

Maybe we need a law that says that anyone who gets into an accident while yapping into a phone is automatically guilty of mobile mopery.

And if that tweedy guy reads this and decides his back hurts and he's going to sue after all, forget it: I've already rounded up 10 witnesses who will swear you had a pint bottle of muscatel in your other hand.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, Nov. 22, the 326th day of 1994. There are 39 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Nov. 22, 1963, President Kennedy was assassinated while riding in a motorcade in Dallas. Texas Governor John B. Connally was seriously wounded. A suspect, Lee Harvey Oswald, was arrested. Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson became the 36th president of the United States.

On this date:

In 1718, English pirate Edward Teach — better known as "Blackbeard" — was killed during a battle off the Virginia coast.

In 1890, Charles de Gaulle was born in Lille, France.

In 1906, the "SOS" distress signal was adopted at the International Radio Telegraphic Convention in Berlin.

In 1943, lyricist Lorenz Hart died in New York at age 48.

Governors begin to eye presidential race of 1996

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — Michigan GOP Gov. John Engler has plenty to say when asked his advice to Republicans preparing to take control of Congress. But bring up the 1996 presidential race and he's a lot less talkative, using a photograph of his newborn triplet daughters to make his point.

"I've got to go home and raise babies," he says. So count Engler out, at least for now.

But as he and his colleagues in the Republican Governors Association gathered Monday to examine the reasons for and lessons of the rout in the 1994 elections, and discuss the 1995 Republican agenda, it was hard not to think ahead to 1996.

Several GOP governors are considered potential candidates for their party's presidential nomination, and an even bigger group gets mentioned when the subject turns to the No. 2 spot on the ticket. It's not lost on anyone here that three of the last four presidents were governors first.

"I think it is just as possible that he or she is in this room than anywhere else," Gov. Jim Edgar of Illinois said when asked about the party's 1996 standard bearer. "There are several of these governors who would make very attractive candidates if they chose to run," said Republican National Committee Chairman Haley Barbour.

And beyond that, the governors are being heavily courted by other likely candidates, because of their clout in GOP affairs back home.

Former Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander, for example, was on hand for the Williamsburg meeting and held a series of private meetings with governors to solicit their support and advice.

Unwilling to leave the turf to Alexander alone, Texas GOP Sen. Phil Gramm arrived Monday afternoon to make the rounds, too, and Senate GOP leader Bob Dole was on the conference program today.

"I see a lot of good horses out there," said Massachusetts Gov. William Weld.

Weld is among the GOP governors who often gets mentioned as a possible candidate, along with Tommy Thompson of Wisconsin, Pete Wilson of California and perhaps George Voinovich of Ohio. It certainly doesn't hurt that all four just won re-election landslides.

Bring up the subject, though, and all say it's the farthest thing from their minds. Yet all four kept a high profile at the meeting, wandering into the media room to chat with reporters as aides distributed materials detailing their governor's accomplishments.

And the governors paid close attention Monday as several GOP pollsters sorted through the election results and detailed President Clinton's weak standing. GOP pollster Ed Goeas, for example, said Clinton's political base had shrunk to about 33 percent "about as low as you can take a Democratic candidate for president."

Open P.A. system was cause of noise on flight, report says

CHICAGO (AP) — A strange "whooshing sound" aboard a USAir jetliner before the Sept. 8 crash that killed all 132 aboard apparently was nothing more than an open public address system, industry sources said Monday.

The report appeared to end speculation over the weekend that the mysterious sound could be a clue to the crash of Flight 427 near Pittsburgh, the fifth fatal crash of a USAir jetliner in five years.

Airline industry sources said the so-called whooshing noise had been traced to an open public address system. They said the pilot had made an announcement and did not turn off the sound system immediately.

They said the account of the noise was confirmed by an off-duty pilot who was riding free in the cockpit en route from Charlotte and got off the plane in Chicago. The sources spoke on condition of anonymity, saying it was protocol for the National Transportation Safety Board to disclose such information.

Michael Benson of the NTSB said "We have one indication of that . . . so far we have not been able to assess the significance of these reports."

Andrew McKenna, a passenger who got off the plane in Chicago after traveling from Charlotte, said he heard the sound. He said he mentioned it to a flight attendant.

"She acknowledged it and that was it. Presumably, she reported it," said McKenna.

Some in GOP think again about term limits

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Republicans, committed to a first-ever vote on congressional term limits, are having second thoughts about limiting their own stays in Washington.

The man who will be the new House majority leader, Rep. Dick Armey of Texas, suggested that public support for term limits may wane now that the GOP will control Congress. If Republicans "can straighten out the House," he said in a recent interview, Americans may not be so enthusiastic about a constitutional amendment limiting the time a person may serve in Congress.

"They don't want to go home, they love this job," said Cleta Mitchell of the Term Limits Legal Institute in explaining the difficulty of getting the two-thirds majority in both chambers needed to pass a constitutional amendment to limit terms.

The House Republicans' "Contract With America" that lays out their agenda for their first 100 days in power promises a vote on term limits, which many Republicans made a key issue in their successful runs for congressional seats.

■ More national news/8B

House Speaker Thomas Foley's opposition to term limits was a major factor in his loss to his Republican challenger, George Nethercutt Jr.

But already there are signs that the Republicans, back in power in the House for the first time in 40 years, are not that eager to give up their jobs.

Armey said in a recent National Public Radio interview that he supported term limits because the House has performed so poorly in recent years, but that he did so "with a terrible amount of reluctance."

"I think Americans will find their enthusiasm for term limits waning quite a bit," the Texas lawmaker said, if the Republicans "can straighten out the House."

Another Republican, Rep. Newt Gingrich of Georgia, the next Speaker of the House and the chief promoter of the "Contract," has also dismayed some term limit advocates by saying the legislation would not be retroactive, thus relieving current members of immediate concern about their future employment.

Mitchell said that even with a groundswell of public support for term limits, getting the two-thirds majority of both houses needed for a constitutional amendment will be tough. If the amendment passes both houses, three-quarters of the states would have to ratify it.

James Geoffrey, legislative aide to Rep. Bill McCollum, R-Fla., agreed that the prospects of winning two-thirds of the members were "on the edge." McCollum has 105 co-sponsors for a bill he introduced earlier this year that would limit House members to six two-year terms and senators to two six-year terms.

Many Democrats can be expected to support the Clinton administration position that term limits threaten the election system, and even some key Republicans oppose limits. "I think America is always going to need statesmen and you don't get them out of the phone book," Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., said earlier this year at hearings on term limits.

It is likely that Hyde will become the next chairman of the House Judiciary Committee.

Clinton assures Rabin he'll ask Congress to maintain aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton assured Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin on Monday he would ask Congress to keep U.S. aid at the $3-billion level and to approve new funding for an anti-missile defense system.

"We are going to have a very robust security relationship," Clinton said after an 80-minute meeting in the Oval Office that centered on lagging peace talks between Israel and Syria.

That view was echoed by Sen. Bob Dole, the next Senate majority leader. "I would hope and I would guess that at this time of great tension in the Middle East where we're trying to achieve peace there wouldn't be any effort to reduce the level of aid," Dole said at the beginning of a meeting with Rabin.

Since any agreement is bound to involve an Israeli withdrawal on the strategic Golan Heights, Clinton went out of his way at a joint news conference to emphasize the United States intended "to stand behind Israel and its security."

In fact, he said he was prepared to make a case to the American public and Congress for deploying American troops in the border enclave as part of an international force to monitor any Israeli-Syrian accord.

But, Clinton said, "there has been no agreement of any kind about this. We are jumping the gun here on this part of it."

Keeping aid to Israel at the $3-billion-a-year level could run into resistance as Republicans who take a skeptical view of foreign aid assume control of Congress. Sending American troops to the Golan Heights also is bound to conflict with sentiment against overseas involvements.

Rabin set aside a heavy proportion of his meeting time to see senior members of Congress, with a special emphasis on Republicans such as Dole of Kansas and Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, who is to become chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Clinton said Israelis "have to feel it in their bones" that they are secure as they approach agreements with the Arabs.

Capital gains gambit ups stakes in GATT showdown

WASHINGTON (AP) — A global trade accord emerged Monday as a potent test between President Clinton and Senate GOP Leader Bob Dole, whose demand for a capital gains tax cut escalated the issue beyond conservative concerns for American sovereignty.

No sooner had Dole suggested linking the two over the weekend than White House Chief of Staff Leon Panetta shot down the suggestion. "I don't think he's going to get a commitment from us that we're going to suddenly support a capital gains tax cut, particularly as part of" the trade accord, Panetta said.

Asked about the rebuff, Dole said Monday: "He only took one shot at it. He can fire again."

On political grounds, many congressional Democrats oppose a cut in the capital gains tax, which is levied on the profits of sales of stocks and other assets. House Democratic leader Richard Gephardt said Republicans were interjecting their "favorite giveaway for the rich" into the debate over a trade agreement. He said 72 percent of the benefits would go to taxpayers earning $100,000 a year or more.

At the same time, Clinton has pushed hard for passage of the trade agreement, which is scheduled for a vote next week, and rejection would be a blow to his prestige.

Several White House officials said that while talks continue with Dole on other issues, Panetta's comments stand on a capital gains tax cut. Lobbying for the accord during the day, Vice President Al Gore said, "This is a big fight. It's going to be hard fought and close."

Rep. Newt Gingrich, soon to be the new Republican speaker in the House, made it clear that extracting a capital gains tax cut for a approval of the trade agreement is not a card in his hand.

"I gave my word before the October break that I would help pass GATT," Gingrich said in Atlanta. "Sen. Dole is negotiating a situation in the Senate that is different than the House. I wouldn't attempt to critique what he's doing. . . ."

Capital gains aside, officials said Dole and the administration were making progress in addressing other subjects that would be included in legislation to be passed separately in 1995.

Given concerns raised by conservatives over sovereignty, the two sides are discussing a plan to have a commission made up of federal judges review rulings by a new World Trade Organization for adjudicating disputes.

Agencies request children's coats

Annual drive collects outerwear, blankets for those in need

■ Organizations in Midland, Odessa seek donations for area families.

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

Winter's icy fingers have started to extend and grasp the exposed, so, in defense of the cold, area service agencies are collecting children's coats and blankets to warm those in need.

Coats for Kids, headed up by Casa de Amigos and AMOS (Area Methodist Outreach Services), is a coat collection for children in need. The coat drive was started two years ago, according to Lael Cordes-Pitts, executive director of Casa.

The coats are distributed through Casa, AMOS, St. Andrews Presbyterian Mission and the Baptist Crisis Center. Drop-off points are Texas National Bank at the main branch and the downtown branch; Midland National Bank; the public library at Midland Park Mall; Sam's Wholesale Club; Wal-Mart; and Cattleman's restaurant.

Texas National Bank and Midland National Bank are sponsoring the collection, which will continue through the end of the month.

A Casa spokeswoman said children's coats are still in need, especially in sizes one through 10. She said the coats are distributed to those in need and many are referred to the agencies from the schools.

Last year, 400 children's coats were collected.

Ms. Cordes-Pitts said the coat drive benefits a variety of people in need.

"In our social-service program, most people can meet their daily expenses, but it's those extras that put a strain on their budget; extras like school supplies, coats for kids," Ms. Cordes-Pitts said. "We want to make sure every child has a warm coat this winter."

Coats and blankets are being collected in Odessa by Catholic Charities Community Services. The organization supplies the collected goods to needy people of any religion.

Catholic Charities is the drop-off site in Odessa, 606 W. 10th St. between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. or contact Faye Rodriguez or Al Garcia at 332-8020 to make arrangements to have the donations picked up.

Ms. Rodriguez, Catholic Charities director, said the organization serves people throughout Ector County as well as stranded travelers.

"We usually try to collect in October ... fortunately the weather has not been too bad, but it's beginning to cool off already," Ms. Rodriguez said. "It's especially important to collect children's coats because we give more of them away ... it doesn't necessarily have to be a heavy coat. It can be a windbreaker or cardigan."

Both collection drives will end Nov. 30.

Pioneer matches funds with labor to help renovate Fort Davis site

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

After it was determined that the Fort Davis National Historic Site needed renovation, it didn't take an act of Congress to accomplish — it took one good-hearted Midland man and about 70 of his friends.

Sam Perkins, who retired from Southwestern Bell Telephone about three years ago, is no stranger to rolling up his sleeves and getting to work — and neither are his fellow members of the Telephone Pioneers.

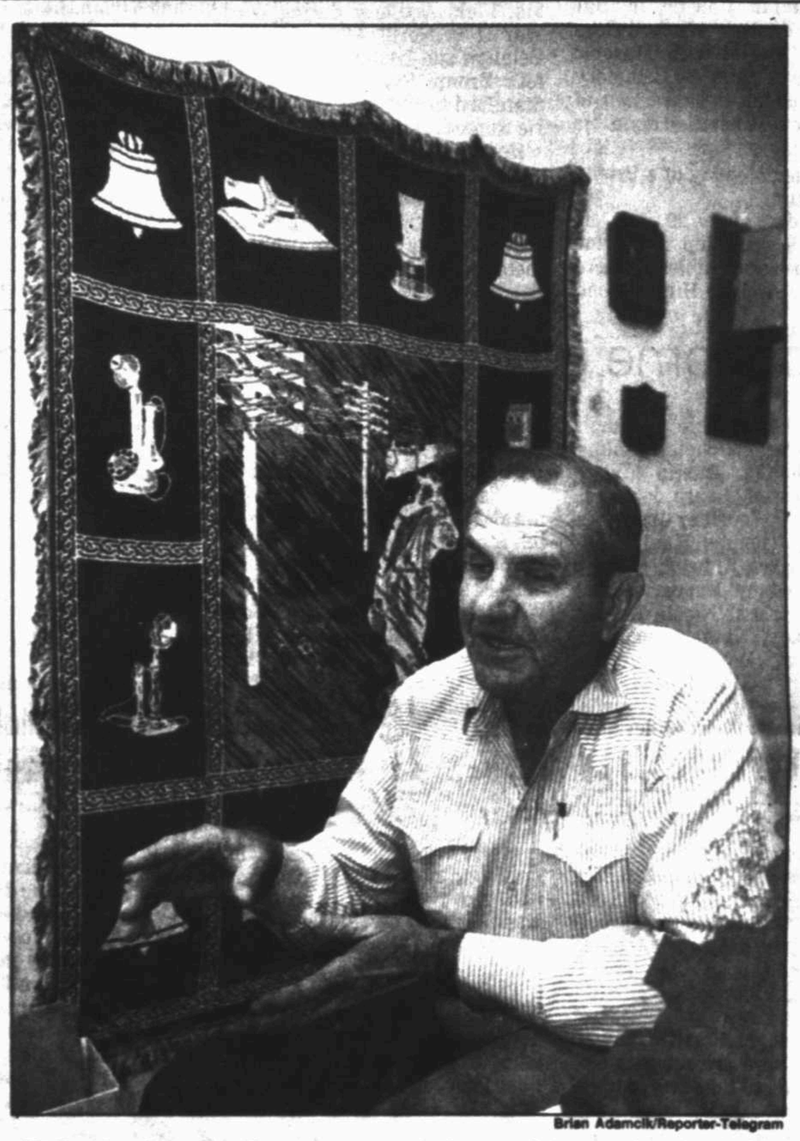

The Pioneers are a group of present and former Bell employees who spend their spare time doing community service work in and around the Permian Basin, Perkins explained.

Various groups of Pioneers in the five-state area serviced by Southwestern Bell provided more than 4.8 million hours of community service work, he said.

The Fort Davis project was brought to Perkins' attention during one of the Pioneers' quarterly meetings, he said. Not only did the historical site need some restoration, like many parks there were no facilities for handicapped and elderly visitors.

Perkins agreed to chair a committee to provide labor for the renovation, and authentic materials were purchased using matching funds from the National Parks Service and the National Parks Foundation. Southwestern Bell also provided funding for the project.

Program would help Hispanic residents finish their education

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

Hispanic residents whose education was cut short because of immigration, work, children or other factors soon will get the chance to learn to read and write in their own language and in English.

Teresa Marmolejo, coordinating chairman for a biligual program in the Midland Independent School District, and members of the Mexican consul in Midland and Odessa are working together to bring a program to the area that would aid Hispanic residents in finishing their education.

"We are trying to introduce this program to the area," said Ms. Marmolejo, who organized a meeting at Crockett Elementary School of prospective residents Monday. "It is a literacy program used by the Mexican government in Mexico to help residents with their continuing education."

The program — taught entirely in Spanish — runs for three months, with textbooks and other materials provided by the Mexican government. Teachers for the program come from Mexico on a volunteer basis and would have their lodging and travel paid for by the Mexican government, according to consul Carolina Roldan.

"It is important that these residents who came from Mexico be able to read and write fluently in their own language before they try to learn English," Ms. Roldan said. "They need to finish their own education in order to help their children."

GARY OTT

We don't need any more analysis of Nov. 8 election results

More rambling thoughts . . .

— No matter how many times I see "To Kill a Mockingbird," and it seems like it has been hundreds of times, the scene in which Scout meets Boo Radley for the first time, right after Boo has saved her brother's life, always brings tears to my eyes.

Ott

— I always feel a bit silly when, sitting all alone, tears suddenly well up in my eyes. Subconsciously, I glance around the room to make sure no one is watching. After all, real men don't cry.

— I'm a bigger political junkie than most, but even I'm tired of hearing so-called experts explain exactly what the results from the Nov. 8 general election really mean.

— You can over-analyze certain things. What the election really means was that the American people were mad at Washington and since Democrats control Washington, the people voted for Republicans.

— It's not that hard to figure out.

— Nothing comes across phonier than an introverted person attempting to come across as a backslapper, whether it be for business or personal reasons.

— It is attempted more often than you might think.

— Overheard: "His sense of self-worth is greatly exaggerated."

— Don't you know it was horrible being the KPEJ switchboard operator this past Sunday when thousands of Dallas Cowboys fans realized that a Saturday night storm had knocked the station — and, as a result, the Dallas-Washington game — off the air?

— Regardless of the business, there are always two distinct groups that work in any office: those who want the building so hot you could fry an egg on your desk and those who prefer the temperature to dip into the upper teens from time to time.

— Some people have a real knack for throwing cold water on a happy event, especially when the good fortune involves someone else.

— Sometimes it is because of jealousy, but more often it is simply due to the fact that some people don't know how to share a happy moment with another person.

— It angers me to no end when I read a newspaper article that points out a former ruthless leader, such as Raoul Cedras, who was supposedly responsible for the murder of hundreds of his fellow countrymen in Haiti, now lives a life of leisure in Panama. It is as though he is being rewarded for being a thug.

— Whoever said, "life isn't fair," knew what he was talking about.

— For some rather bizarre reason, it pleases me that Sonny and Cher are bickering with one another through the news media.

— And you thought celebrities were different from the rest of us. Not true. They can be petty, too.

— And today's final quote comes from Kahlil Gibran, who once said, "I have learned silence from the talkative, toleration from the intolerant, and kindness from the unkind; yet strange, I am ungrateful to those teachers."

Station to show documentary on Blackshear Junior-Senior

Staff Report

ODESSA — An almost forgotten episode in West Texas history has been documented and will air at 9:30 p.m. Wednesday on KOCV-TV, Channel 36, (Cable 13).

"Blackshear, a Family Remembered" relates the experiences of attending the all-black junior and senior high school in Odessa. Through interviews and vintage photographs, Blackshear Junior-Senior High School students and teachers recall what it was like during the 1950s and 1960s.

Extensive interviews were conducted during July of this year at the annual Blackshear Reunion and later in the studios of KOCV-TV.

"We're glad to have been able to put together such a program," said Tom Hughes, station manager. Hughes and Shorty Stokes served as executive producers of the 30-minute documentary. Both are longtime television producers in the Midland-Odessa area.

"It's hard to believe that there was a separate school so recently," Hughes added. "But it's also hard to believe so few people are aware there ever was such a school."

Blackshear Junior-Senior High School was in operation from 1949-66, at which time its students were integrated into the former Ector High School, Odessa High School and Permian High School.

The television documentary has been funded in part by grants from Rexene Corp., and Odessa Medical Center Hospital.

PIONEER: Perkins rounds up friends, renovates site

(From 1B)

These funds were matched with in-kind services — the thousands of man hours provided by the Pioneer volunteers. "He (park Superintendent Jerry Yarbrough) had the funds, and we matched it with labor," Perkins said.

Lumber matching the style of the fort was cut in Oregon, and volunteers constructed fences, wheelchair ramps and hand rails using square nails (Perkins still sports a blackened thumbnail as proof) similar to those used when the fort was first built.

The original barracks at the fort also were restored.

Perkins left for Fort Davis with 22 Pioneers for a project park officials expected to take two to three weeks. Throughout the week, their numbers swelled until 72 people had provided labor, and the job was finished.

"We went Sunday to Sunday," Perkins said.

The Telephone Pioneers began with phone company employees getting together in 1911. "We're going to go over 100,000 members this year nationwide," Perkins said.

Perkins has lived in West Texas most of his life. He and his wife, Shirley, have been in Midland since he went to work for the telephone company in 1957.

Perkins fell in love with the Davis Mountains area in 1965 when he took part in the famous laser shot from the McDonald Observatory that precisely measured the distance from the Earth to the moon.

program necessary.

"Many of these people came over from Mexico without finishing their education," she said. "Our primary goal is to help them continue learning."

An English As a Second Language course also is offered in the program.

Ms. Marmolejo said parents of children who were in biligual programs were targeted first, to help determine interest in the program and help with the organization.

"The program will include anyone who is interested, but we wanted to target these parents first, since their education would help the education of their children," she said.

Possible sites for the program — depending on how many residents are interested — include Casa De Amigos and area schools, Ms. Marmolejo said.

No timetable has been established for getting the program up and running.

"This is just an organizational meeting," she said. "It really depends on the people when this gets started."

Anyone interested in the program may contact the MISD Biligual Department at 689-1007, Ms. Roldan at 687-2334, or Linda Simpson-Jones of Ector County Indepedent School District Biligual Education at 332-9151.

New system allows Cap Rock to restore power

Staff Report

A newly designed integrated loop transmission system helped Cap Rock Electric restore power to its customers following two weather-related incidents Saturday night.

High winds knocked out a number of poles west of Stanton at about 8:15 p.m., officials said. Simultaneously, a storm in the Ackerly area caused the loss of another stretch of line. A total of 38 wooden transmission poles and in excess of 70 distribution poles were lost.

"Ordinarily, either of these line sections could have sustained such damage, being dual-fed, and the outage would have been of short duration," said Ulen North, Cap Rock vice president/chief operating officer. "But when they occurred at the same time, our dual-feed capabilities were lost."

The Cap Rock system was not the only utility to suffer storm damage. Other utilities also lost poles and other equipment to the high winds.

The new construction is part of a new loop system that is powered by Southwestern Public Service Company (SPS) of Amarillo. The system has been completed only for a part of the utility's northern service area.

"We were very fortunate to have that portion of our new system in place," North said. "Some of our customers were out of power until 4:30 a.m. on Monday, and we hate to have an outage of that duration. But without that new system, our customers would have been out of power at least twice as long."

American Express subsidiary settles money laundering case

HOUSTON (AP) — An American Express Co. subsidiary has reached a $50 million settlement with the government that prosecutors said includes the biggest civil fine ever assessed against a U.S. bank for money laundering.

The settlement with American Express Bank International, which provides banking services to overseas clients of American Express Bank, stemmed from an investigation of a Mexican drug ring that allegedly smuggles hundreds of tons of Colombian cocaine a year into the United States.

Two officers from the Beverly Hills, Calif.-based bank were convicted earlier this year in the money laundering scheme.

"This case is important because it accomplishes an important goal in the war against drugs by taking the profit — money from the drug dealers — and eliminating the principal money laundering avenue," U.S. Attorney Gaynelle Griffin Jones said in announcing the settlement reached Friday.

Under the settlement, the government agreed not to seek criminal charges against the bank.

The bank agreed to forfeit $40 million that prosecutors contend was laundered by the former bank officers, Antonio Giraldi and Lourdes Reategui.

And the bank was fined $7 million in civil penalties and agreed to spend $3 million on training and audit procedures to follow federal banking guidelines.

The only larger civil penalty in this country was $200 million against Bank of Credit and Commerce International, the multinational bank shut down by regulators in 1991 for widespread fraud.

Prosecutors charged that the bankers in the American Express International case set up elaborate international transactions to hide the origin of drug profits in the accounts of their biggest client, Ricardo Aguirre Villagomez, a money launderer for reputed Mexican drug lord Juan Garcia Abrego. Both men are wanted in the United States, Aguirre for money laundering and Garcia Abrego on drug smuggling charges.

Customs officials conservatively estimate that Garcia Abrego's organization does more than $20 billion in sales a year in marijuana and cocaine.

"They are the most significant and most powerful transshipment arm of the Cali cartel," the world's biggest cocaine operation, FBI spokesman James Conway said.

Giraldi, a senior officer for the bank, was sentenced earlier this year to 10 years in prison on charges including conspiracy, money laundering and bank fraud. Reategui, his former assistant, was sentenced to 3½ years.

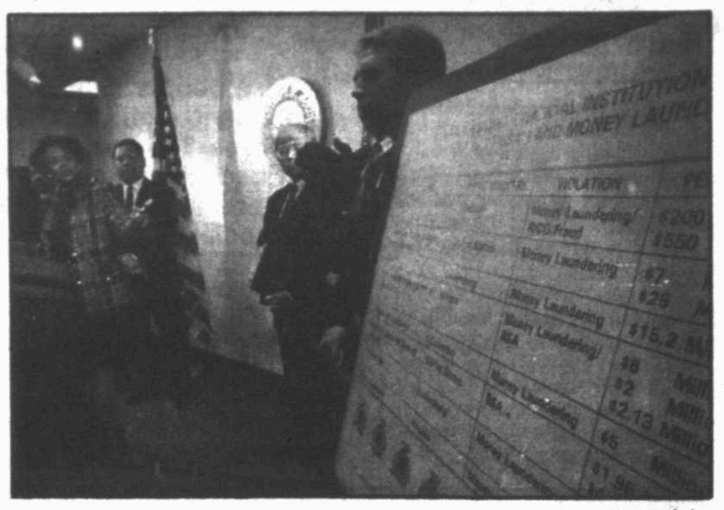

The fine against he bank was steep because it didn't cooperate in the investigation, said Assistant U.S. Attorney Dave Novak, who prosecuted the case.

"The bank stood by their employees the whole way through their trial and in fact paid for their defense," Novak said.

Bank officials have contended they cooperated with the investigation.

"I want to emphasize that AEBI and its parent company American Express Bank will not tolerate anything less than the strictest adherence to compliance procedures," said Steven D. Goldstein, chairman of American Express Bank.

American Express said its AEBI subsidiary represents about 5 percent of its $14.3 billion in assets. The parent bank operates in 37 countries.

Convicted killer in Galveston shooting faces execution

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Warren Bridge remembers committing his first burglary at age 15.

"I guess I was a career burglar till I was 18," he said.

His "career" got him a 15-year prison term in Georgia in 1978, but he managed probation a year later and came to Texas, where he won a trip to death row.

Bridge faced execution before dawn today for killing a Galveston convenience store clerk in a robbery that netted him and a companion $24.

He had been in Texas just 2½ months.

"I had a lot of fun in the short time I was here," he said. "It's a country in itself. People do things different in Texas."

No appeals were pending Monday.

"We've gone through the system," lawyer Anthony Griffin said. "We've gone to the 5th (U.S.) Circuit (Court of Appeals) three times and the Supreme court twice."

Griffin asked Gov. Ann Richards to issue a 30-day reprieve, an action she was allowed but rarely invoked.

Bridge, 34, was 19 when he was arrested for the Feb. 10, 1980, fatal shooting of Walter Rose.

Rose, 62, was shot four times during the robbery. He died two weeks later.

An accomplice, Robert Joseph Costa, was convicted of aggravated robbery and sentenced to 13 years in prison. He was released less than six years later.

Bridge, a cashier and restaurant worker born in Fauquier County, Va., grew up in Albany, Ga. He was identified as the triggerman in the Galveston shooting and received the death penalty.

Bridge declined recent requests for interviews but told The Associated Press in a past interview that murder victim Rose was more fortunate than he was.

"I sit here on death row ... and think about dying and I believe Mr. Rose got a better deal," he said. "This is harder to deal with."

He said he found the prospect of being strapped to the death chamber gurney especially irritating.

"I'd rather die standing up, with my shoes on," he said. "I'd rather be shot. Lethal injection is cowardly."

In 1988, he came within 90 minutes of execution before receiving a reprieve from the U.S. Supreme Court.

Dow Chemical faces first court test in implant case

HOUSTON (AP) — Dow Chemical Co. faced its first court test Monday against two women who claim co-owner of breast implant manufacturer Dow Corning Corp. should be held liable for problems they say the implants caused.

Attorneys for Gladys Laas, of Bellville, and Army Dr. Jennifer Ladner, of El Paso, say both companies first learned through their own research in the late 1940s that silicone created health problems.

But both companies maintained a conspiracy of silence and continued with the development of silicone in what became the breast implant in 1964, said Richard Mithoff, attorney for Dr. Ladner.

"Dow Corning made the product, Dow Chemical supplied the defective technology," said Mithoff.

In 1943, Dow Chemical, of Midland, Mich., and Corning Inc. of Corning, N.Y., formed the joint venture known as Dow Corning Corp., which made implants until 92.

Although Dow Corning is also a defendant, it is the inclusion of Dow Chemical that is making the case a closely watched one. Dow Chemical is named in thousands of lawsuits, however, the company is usually dismissed before the cases come to court because of a lack of evidence proving liability.

But plaintiffs' attorneys claim internal documents never revealed before will show the Dow Chemical and Dow Corning knew early on about problems with migration of silicone in the body and raised concerns of its effects on human anatomy.

Defense attorneys for the two companies dismissed the so-called proof plaintiffs claim to hold. Although research for Dow Corning was performed at Dow Chemical laboratories from the late 1940s to the early 1960s, the firms say research does not constitute liability and that at no time was Dow Chemical called upon to approve breast implants.

Fields of misery: Farm workers harvest poverty

By Sonny Lopez
El Paso Herald-Post

These people, many dressed in layers of secondhand clothing, are part of a mostly unseen work force. They work in a system — often described as dirty and mean — that provides no room for advancement and only limited access to basic social services.

EL PASO — The bundles on the ground are hard to make out in the early morning darkness.

But as a pair of beer bottles thrown from a passing car shatters along South El Paso Street, about 15 people sit up and scan the area for danger.

They quickly readjust their cardboard and newspaper bedding and settle back down. The threat has passed.

At the southernmost point of a street median, bleary-eyed men and women scatter like frightened pigeons as a second volley of bottles hits the asphalt and a car jumps a curb.

The teen-age boys and girls riding in the souped-up 1965 Mustang laugh as the car's bottom scrapes against the concrete, sending out showers of sparks. One of the boys yells, "Get a job, you bums," as the car's throaty engine roars and sends them speeding down the road.

The men and women curled up along the sidewalks and medians are waiting for a job.

These people, many dressed in layers of secondhand clothing, are part of a mostly unseen work force. They work in a system — often described as dirty and mean — that provides no room for advancement and only limited access to basic social services.

The workers' bodies are distorted from years of stooping over bushy chile plants in muddy fields and riding in cramped, converted school buses. Their access to medical care is almost nonexistent and conditions haven't changed in decades. These farm workers remain the working poor, harvesting poverty in the booming chile business.

Meanwhile, the multimillion-dollar chile industry that employs them continues to expand and prosper. New Mexico is one of the nation's leading producers of chile, satisfying a growing appetite for salsas, hot sauce, raw chile and related products such as decorative ristras.

The industry has the support of university researchers, powerful New Mexico businessmen and politicians.

Workers have no medical or life insurance, depending on employers to provide it, say their advocates. Most of the workers don't speak English and are unskilled.

As the car races off, Juana Bujanda Saenz, 40, calmly walks back to the triangular median, which most of the people here call "La Isla de Focas" because the tightly bundled workers sleeping there look like seals on an island.

Ms. Bujanda picks up a sheet of cardboard she'd been sleeping on before the car jumped the curb along El Paso Street. As if sleepwalking, she crosses Sixth Avenue. She finds an open spot on the sidewalk at the entrance of Yang's Shoe store and drops the cardboard scrap.

She curls into a semi-fetal position, using a plastic-mesh tote bag filled with an extra blouse and a pair of pants as a pillow, and closes her eyes. But sleep doesn't come.

"I sleep very little," Ms. Bujanda says. "I won't sleep now because drunken kids will be leaving the bars in Juarez. They throw things, scream obscenities and run their cars loud. Then there's the vandals who'll steal what little you have."

The workers pick chile because it's the most plentiful crop in the area. These same workers also pick onions, lettuce and pecans, and help irrigate and strip weeds, but often the wages for those jobs aren't as high as for picking chile.

The workers wait near the Santa Fe Bridge — in part of a street revitalization project called Paseo de las Luces, or the Street of Lights — to be bused to the chile fields of southern New Mexico.

"I've been working in the fields for about eight or 10 years, and look at me, still sleeping in the streets or in a smelly gym so I can go work," Ms.

Bujanda says, clutching the ends of a worn sweater at her neck and chest to ward off the night's chill. "They call this El Paseo de las Luces, but there's no pretty lights for us. This is it."

It's a decades-old system used by contractors to recruit chile pickers. The laborers, most of them legal residents or work-permit holders, begin gathering around 10 p.m. at the intersection of Sixth Avenue and El Paso Street.

They often wait for more than four hours to make sure of a place on one of the dozens of converted school buses headed to Deming, Hatch, Rincon, Lordsburg and other chile-producing towns.

Federal judge sets aside state conviction, orders new trial for Mexican on death row

N.Y. Times News Service

'I'm relieved that we are finally to see some light at the end of the tunnel. This is a good man who has been to hell and back on a crime he didn't commit.'
— one of Ricardo Aldape Guerra's lawyers

HOUSTON — Twelve years after he was sentenced to death for the murder of a police officer here, a Mexican whose claims of innocence were backed by his government has had his conviction set aside.

Calling the actions of the police and prosecutors "outrageous," a federal judge here on Tuesday ordered Texas to give the Mexican, 32-year-old Ricardo Aldape Guerra, a new trial or to release him.

"The police officers' and the prosecutors' actions described in these findings were intentional, were done in bad faith, and are outrageous," said Judge Kenneth M. Hoyt of federal district court. He set aside the conviction of Guerra and gave the state 30 days to retry or release him.

The office of the attorney general, which represents the state on criminal appeals in federal court, called habeas corpus proceedings, will review the order and then determine a course of action, said spokeswoman Sonya Sanchez.

But John B. Holmes Jr., the district attorney of Harris County, whose office prosecuted the case, has asked the attorney general to appeal the order to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, in New Orleans, said Kari Sckerl, a state prosecutor who represented the office in the federal hearing. Guerra will remain in prison while an appeal is pending.

"I'm relieved that we are finally to see some light at the end of the tunnel," said Scott Atlas, one of Guerra's lawyers. "This is a good man who has been to hell and back on a crime he didn't commit."

Guerra's story began on a steamy summer night in a predominantly Hispanic neighborhood on Houston's southeast side. At about 10 p.m. on July 13, 1982, Police Officer James Harris stopped a car driven by Roberto Flores Carrasco, in which Guerra, who was here illegally, was a passenger.

The two men got out of the car and moved to place their hands on the officer's patrol car, when one of them pulled a 9-millimeter handgun and killed Harris. As the two men ran from the scene, the gunman shot and fatally wounded a passing motorist. The police converged on the scene and combed the neighborhood for the suspects. Another policeman was shot five times in the abdomen, and Carrasco was shot by the police, before the conflict ended. Guerra was arrested.

Guerra has consistently asserted that Carrasco was the gunman. The murder weapon, clearly established as Carrasco's, was discovered beside his body, and Harris's revolver was found in Carrasco's waist band. At trial, prosecutors presented a theory in which the two men inadvertently switched weapons in the car before the shooting and traded them later while they were eluding the police. On the strength of testimony from witnesses in the neighborhood, Guerra was convicted and sentenced to death in 1982.

After state courts upheld the conviction, defense lawyers presented a brief to Hoyt, who presided over an evidentiary hearing last November. The death sentence was suspended pending the outcome of the federal appeal.

Lawyers for Guerra contended that their client was denied a fair trial because of pretrial intimidation of witnesses, improper identification procedures, the prosecutors' failure to disclose exculpatory evidence, the prosecutors' use of false evidence and illegitimate arguments, and the cumulative effect of misconduct by the prosecution. The judge agreed on all points.

Chris Brian's Martial Arts & Fitness Center
Training the complete person

For 3-years, Chris Brian and his wife Andrea have run the martial arts center at Mission Square, 4400 N. Big Spring.

With increasing enrollment and interest throughout the Permian Basin, they have expanded their operation to include a second school at 1004 West Front St.

The new school, which opened on the last week offers a wide range of instruction in martial arts as well as fitness equipment and tanning facilities.

Adding the new school has enabled the Brians to offer very flexible lesson schedules because the two centers offer opposite calenders.

This means that if students miss a class, then the same class is offered at the other school at a different date, enabling them to make up the class.

Chris Brian and his chief instructor Rodney Green, who are both second-degree black belts share the teaching responsibilities at the two locations.

The principle discipline taught is Tae Kwon Do, and the center strongly emphasizes the self defense component whilst using elements from other disciplines, such as Judo, Kenpo, Akaido, boxing and wrestling. According to Brian, the reason behind incorporating other disciplines is to, "help students become more versatile and well rounded."

All of the staff at Chris Brian's Martial Arts & Fitness Center are passionate believers in the good Karate training can do for individuals; particularly young people.

Brian said, "There are a great number of benefits to Karate, it improves self-confidence, discipline and focuses on learning within a structured environment. It creates a mentally and physically fit person who is better able to interact with his peers, and it is great training for most other sports."

There is however more to martial arts training than the physical aspects, students of all ages are taught to respect their new techniques and to use them carefully.

The emphasis at Brian's school is very much on good character: gangs and drugs are not tolerated.

In addition to the martial arts school, the Brians have included a fitness center that is equipped with 9 different machines including Hip Sleds and squat machines. The arrangement is perfect for parents who can drop off their children at the Karate school and do their own work out while they wait for the kids to finish. A high-tech tanning bed by 'Wolf' completes the options available.

For more information about classes and facilities, call the Brians at 682-1911, or stop by their location at 1004 West Front Street in Midland.

Students at Chris Brian's Martial Arts & Fitness Center practice breaking boards at the company's new school located at 1004 West Front St. The new school offers martial arts training as well as fitness and tanning facilities. Drawing upon a variety of disciplines, such as Judo, Tae Kwon Do and Kenpo, Brian teaches self defense classes with an emphasis on improving the person, both physically and mentally.

Real estate proves to be risky business for many investors

By Diana Shaman
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Would-be buyers of new houses who need immediate occupancy usually are out of luck. Few builders are willing to put up so-called inventory houses on speculation and few banks are willing to finance speculative ventures that include building even one house without a signed contract.

Except for town-house developments in which an unsold house is often built as part of a cluster of houses under contract, "you don't build inventory," said Peter D. Klein, one of the principals of Klein & Eversoll, a Commack, N.Y., developer. "They build inventory in Florida and California and that's why they have so many boom and bust cycles. When the market turns, they're dead in the water."

Nevertheless, some developers realize there is a market niche and they try to fill it.

"The need for immediate occupancy comes from a large segment of the population," said Marylin Larsen, the owner of Lane Realty, in Great Neck, N.Y., which markets houses for several developers. At one development for which she is the marketing agent, Birchwood at Spring Lake, in Middle Island, N.Y., 220 one-family detached houses priced from $149,900 to $164,000 are planned and 12 are being built for buyers who want quick occupancy.

A buyer who recently sold a house bought one of the 12 and will be in by January. "If I hadn't had an inventory house, I would have lost him," Mrs. Larsen said.

"A lot of people won't buy until they sell their own house," said Jack Campo, a director of Campo Brothers Development, in Port Jefferson, N.Y., which also has inventory houses available for buyers who want a fast deal.

Among them are model houses and houses built on speculation. Currently available at $249,000, for example, is a 2,300-square-foot, three-bedroom colonial in Stony Brook, N.Y.

Among recent buyers of one of Campo Brothers' model houses were Thomas and Rory Stanley. The Stanleys had sold their house in Bay Shore, N.Y., in October 1992. Unsure whether they wanted to stay on Long Island, they rented an apartment in Woodbury, N.Y. It took them many months to make the decision to stay.

"We both have good jobs," said Staney, a nuclear medicine technician. Mrs. Stanley is a vocational guidance specialist in a high school.

'You don't build inventory. They build inventory in Florida and California and that's why they have so many boom and bust cycles. When the market turns, they're dead in the water.'

— Peter D. Klein, one of the principals of Klein & Eversoll

The couple, however, were close to losing an income tax rollover on capital gains from a house sale, which requires that another house be bought within two years. With time running out, they despaired of finding a new house, which was what they wanted.

"Most builders we talked to said, 'Pick a lot and I'll build you a house,' " Mrs. Stanley said.

Building a house, they were told, took three to six months and they had almost resigned themselves to buying an older house. Then the Stanleys, who have two daughters, Alison, 8, and Maggie, 6, found a four-bedroom Victorian in Port Jefferson Station, N.Y., that was available for $199,900 from Campo Brothers.

They closed the deal late last month — just four days before their two-year rollover period expired.

"I always have houses available," said Steven A. Klar, an East Meadow developer who has several subdivisions under construction in Suffolk County. "I need them for people who are transferred in from out of town or who for one reason or another need to buy a new home within a 60-day period or even a 30-day period." He said that about 25 percent of his sales were inventory houses.

Currently available at one of Klar's subdivisions in St. James, the 56-unit Estates at Mills Pond, are three houses ranging from three to five bedrooms and priced at $299,000 to $360,000.

In another development, the 110-unit Windmill Gate in Oakdale, five two-bedroom houses priced from $125,000 to $190,000 are immediately available. To buy at the Oakdale project one family member has to be 55 or older.

Esti by Sid Farber in Hagerman, N.Y., just north of Bellport, also has inventory houses available. The interior finishing is at a stage that lets buyers select their own color schemes and choice of flooring. The 108-unit subdivision, being built by the Farber Organization of Medford, N.Y., opened two years ago and has 27 home sites still available.

"People want a house quickly for many, many reasons and we have put up a handful of houses just for that situation," said Marci Weiss, the sales director. Demand comes from people who have sold their houses more quickly than they thought they would, she said. With winter approaching, many people also realize that a new house may not be ready for many months because weather may delay construction.

Buyers who want to move into the Sid Farber development by this January have a choice of four houses ranging from a 1,530-square-foot, three-bedroom colonial with a basement and a two-car garage, for $138,000, to a four-bedroom, 2,400-square-foot colonial, with no basement and a one-car garage, for $159,900.

The inventory houses cost no more than houses built when a contract is signed, Ms. Weiss said. Prices at the development where houses are on a third of an acre generally range from $129,900 to $169,900.

In Kensington Woods, a Port Jefferson Station development, 37 traditional and postmodern houses are under construction on minimum half-acre lots. FN Development Corp., of Pompano Beach, Fla., is the developer and Freeform Construction, of Setauket, N.Y., is the builder.

The three- and four-bedroom houses range from 1,700 to 2,400 square feet and are priced from $175,400 to $218,000. Sales opened two weeks ago.

"We are building some houses that don't have contracts because we feel there are a lot of people who want to move in quickly," said Joan McCool-Szynkiewicz, sales manager of Rankin Realty in Port Jefferson, N.Y., the marketing agent. "Last weekend alone, two people came in and bought inventory houses."

Of 11 houses already in contract, 7 are ready for immediate occupancy, she said. It takes about four months to build a house. Three more inventory houses are currently available priced from $187,240 to $189,240. Buyers can move in by Christmas, she said.

Buyers can often close more quickly on a new house than on an existing house, according to lenders.

Store owner leaves fortune in tome-sized will

By Geraldine Fabrikant
N.Y. Times News Service

Of course, the very rich are different from you and me. Their wills are longer.

And no recent will, lawyers believe, has run on longer than the 120-page tome filed on Nov. 14 in New York County Surrogate Court for the late Milton J. Petrie, founder and majority owner of Petrie Stores.

Petrie, 92, a pawnbroker's son who made a fortune in ladies' apparel back when women didn't mind being called ladies, had been a generous man all his life, impulsively dashing off checks to hard-luck cases he learned about in the morning's tabloids.

Nonetheless, since Petrie's death on Nov. 6, New Yorkers have been awaiting the details of his will, knowing that this final burst of good deeds will most shape how a real-life Daddy Warbucks is remembered.

Fans of the old television series, "The Millionaire," will not be disappointed. The single biggest piece of Petrie's net worth is the 54 percent stake he owned in Petrie Stores of Secaucus, N.J.

The stock is conservatively worth about $750 million, at current market prices, but could rise to $860 million or more within months, if the company's pending restructuring proceeds on schedule.

In keeping with Petrie's life-long habit of adopting the down-and-out, the will meticulously arranges for more than $90 million in trusts and gifts, ranging from $5,000 to $15 million, to 383 individuals, a constantly changing list since Petrie was always adding to it.

But the single biggest beneficiary of Petrie's largesse is to be a newly formed foundation, the Carroll and Milton Petrie Foundation, named after him and his widow. The foundation is expected to open its doors with anywhere from $300 million to $400 million, and gives its eight trustees enormous latitude to act on their own charitable impulses.

As for Petrie's wife, Carroll, not to worry. While the 15-year alliance was a fourth marriage for both, Petrie was clearly smitten with his elegant blond wife, and sheltered her in his will with a $150 million trust fund that guarantees her $10 million a year in income for life.

He also gave her $5 million in cash, two homes, including a Fifth Avenue apartment, planes, cars, jewels, art and antiques — the requisite paraphernalia for life at the high end.

Mrs. Petrie and seven others will also have the privilege of serving as executors of the estate and as trustees of the new foundation.

With about $15 million available to give away a year from the outset, Mrs. Petrie and her associates will be among New York's most sought after dinner guests.

Hosts and hostesses are already preparing personal wish-lists of New York's neediest cases that they can whisper in the ears of Mrs. Petrie and her comrades-in-alms. "For sure, she won't sit home at night," one New York society matron purred enviously.

In addition to his widow, Petrie has also turned to six life-long associates and to his son to help oversee the estate and run the foundation, creating a board that William Zabel, a trust expert at Schulte Roth & Zabel, said was so large, it is more appropriate to a corporation.

As the will broadly states: "The foundation shall be operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary or educational purposes."

Such flexibility is quite common today in a world where causes and institutions can lose favor rapidly, said Fred Lubcher, a trusts and estates specialist at Fried, Frank, Harris, Shriver & Jacobson.

Walmart store brings attitude change to town

By Jacques Steinberg
N.Y. Times News Service

GREENPORT, N.Y. — When Wal-Mart opened a huge discount department store in Columbia County last spring, no one tried harder than Pamela Taylor-Farrell to warn mom-and-pop businesses that their survival was at stake.

But nearly eight months later, Ms. Taylor-Farrell, the former president of the downtown merchants association, has been won over by the other side: now a self-described "Wal-Mart groupie," she roams the gleaming aisles of the store after work on each payday.

She has stocked up on Suave hair spray and Revlon cosmetics. She has bought hand weights, an aerobic step and an exercise slide. And after shedding 82 pounds in recent months, she has sought out Wal-Mart to rebuild her wardrobe, snatching up L'Eggs thigh-high stockings, bras and black stirrup pants.

"I took a hard line against them and felt I fought a good fight," said Ms. Taylor-Farrell, the advertising manager of a local newspaper. "There's just too many damn attractive things. And they're at a reasonable price."

Like countless other places across the country, Greenport and the neighboring city of Hudson have seen long-time shopping patterns upset by the arrival of the nation's largest retailer.

On a recent afternoon, hundreds of cars lined Wal-Mart's spacious parking lot, while only a few people strolled along the cobblestone sidewalks of Warren Street, Hudson's main thoroughfare and the shopping district closest to the new store.

It is difficult to assess the sales performance of the new store, because the Arkansas-based chain is notoriously secretive. But a manager at the Greenport Wal-Mart said the sporting goods department alone, fueled by brisk sales of hunting rifles, would exceed $1 million in business before the end of November.

Heart gives woman new life, but woes soon appear

By Michael Hughes
Amarillo Globe-News

AMARILLO — Vicki Johnson runs after her 14-month-old son, Mark, as he dashes toward the playground at a local park.

Mark is headed toward the swing set, but he pauses long enough to hand his mother a short length of electrical tape and several cigarette butts he found along the way.

"At least he's not putting these things in his mouth," Johnson said as she accepted Mark's gifts.

It is a scene that would not have seemed possible for the Johnson family less than a year ago, when Vicki's heart failed following Mark's birth. Her condition was caused by myocarditis, a rare virus that sometimes attacks the heart following a bout with the flu.

She was placed immediately on the waiting list for a donor heart. In what doctors said was miraculous, a donor heart was found in time to save Johnson's life.

On Oct 17, 1993, Vicki got a new heart. The 34-year-old mother attributes her restored life to the grace of God and the talented hands of Lubbock transplant surgeon Dr. Vince Rittmann.

"The last thing I remember was someone saying that my blood pressure had dropped dramatically," she said. "For the most part, from the end of September until I woke up with the new heart on Nov. 11, I don't remember anything. I lost a lot of time."

Today, after months of rehabilitation during which she learned how to walk and feed herself again, Johnson said her life is getting back to normal.

She likes to draw and paint and hopes to write a book about her experience so the public can learn more about the transplant and rehabilitation process.

But Johnson's life has not been filled completely with happiness. During her recovery, Johnson's husband filed for divorce. Rittmann, the surgeon to whom she has grown so close, has been diagnosed with gliovlastoma — a malignant, inoperable brain tumor.

Rittmann, 43, has performed 33 heart transplants and 1,500 other heart operations. He has a wife — Ellen — and four children — Christian, 5; Dean, 3; Randall, 1; and Adrienne, 3 months.

He gives all the glory associated with his life to God.

"I think there's living faith and dying faith," Rittmann said in a telephone interview from his home. "When you get to a point in life when you're staring the angel of death in the face, you've got to have faith to be able to tolerate that.

"My family, my local church and many other people around West Texas have been praying for healing mercies on me."

Rittmann said he once told Vicki Johnson that all healing is divine healing.

Stamp to honor Texas statehood

DALLAS (AP) — The U.S. Postal Service has announced plans to issue a new stamp that will have Texans beaming with pride, again.

The stamp will celebrate the state's second sesquicentennial.

Eight years ago, the Postal Service issued a stamp commemorating the Lone Star State's 150-year celebration of its independence from Mexico.

The new commemorative stamp will observe Texas' 150 years of statehood.

"Texas is unique because it was a country before it was a state," said postal spokesman Sam Bolen. He said Texas is the only state possessing two sesquicentennial stamps.

Bolen said the new Texas stamp is one of more than 100 new commemorative stamps to be issued in 1995. He said he expects it to do well.

And even though 40 million stamps will be printed, Bolen said he doesn't expect it to be more popular than the Elvis Presley stamp. Bolen said the postal service sold every one of the 500 million Elvis stamps printed.

A new stamp featuring the late movie star and sex symbol Marilyn Monroe will be issued in June.

Designer Laura Smith, a Texas native residing in California, said the 1995 Lone Star stamp features a rider carrying the state flag atop a bucking horse.

Inmates from the Batrop County Jail fill potholes in Bastrop on Thursday. The work-release program saves taxpayers an estimated $1.2 million a year.

County puts its prisoners in work projects

By Mike Ward
Austin American-Statesman

BASTROP, Texas — One at a time, counting them off on his fingers, Sheriff Fred Hoskins quickly gives six reasons why punishing some criminals at home is much better than sending them off to a state prison.

The old Bastrop hospital is one, now renovated for county offices. "A sow's ear made into a silk purse," as Hoskins describes it.

Then, there are the new animal shelters in nearby Elgin and Smithville, the freshly painted Little League ball fields in Bastrop, a new wall in an Elgin park, even the potholes that were filled in county roads.

All that was done by prisoners, who, if not for crowded state prisons, would have been incarcerated elsewhere.

As part of a special rehabilitation project Hoskins initiated more than a year ago, the crews — averaging 48 workers a day — have done everything from pick up trash to work on roads to save an old wooden school building from the wrecking ball and move it to a new site.

They are public-service chores that would not get done otherwise, he says.

In addition to learning a work ethic and trade skills, the volunteer crews have saved taxpayers more than $1.2 million by Hoskins' estimate, almost as much as the annual budget for his jail.

The Bastrop County program for nonviolent offenders is one of several being operated from county jails across Texas, something Hoskins and county officials say they would like to see expanded as an alternative to building more state prisons.

"This makes so much more sense," Hoskins said. "It takes hands-on experience to rehabilitate a person, and that's where your county jails come in. We can do a better job than a state prison. And local taxpayers can reap the benefits."

Take the old city hospital, for instance.

Hoskins said it sat vacant for several years, leaky roof and all. There was no money for remodeling, even though the county needed the office space.

This year, with a crew of supervised convicts and about $45,000 for materials, the place was redone.

Navy ranked female F-14 pilot killed in crash above average

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Navy records released by the mother of a pioneering female F-14A pilot killed in an October crash show the aviator was rated above average when she qualified to land the jet on aircraft carriers.

The records of Lt. Kara Hultgreen, one of the Navy's first two women to qualify for carrier operations in the jet fighter, were released in response to widely circulated anonymous claims that she wasn't qualified.

Hultgreen's mother, Sally Spears of San Antonio, released the records to The San Diego Union-Tribune and the San Antonio Express-News, the Union-Tribune reported.

The Navy gave Spears the records along with Hultgreen's personal effects. Spears, who notified the Navy before releasing the flight records, sought to answer the anonymous claims, which assert that Hultgreen received preferential treatment as the Navy pushed women into combat roles.

"It certainly hurts me to have to listen to that kind of thing," she said in an interview with the Union-Tribune. "She had some really good days and some really bad days. The scores show that. But her total grade was slightly above average. The way I look at it is, being a slightly above-average F-14 pilot is like being a slightly above average Phi Beta Kappa."

Spears noted in a written statement that the Navy had rightfully guarded the privacy of its personnel by refusing to release the records.

"It has placed no such restriction on me," she added. "In spite of the Navy's vigorous defense of Kara's qualifications, gossip continues.

"The best answer to gossip is the truth," Spears wrote. "Kara always told the truth, but she is not here to tell it herself. Her father, her sisters and I are."

Although refusing to release records, the Navy had stated that Hultgreen was "average to above average" as an F-14 pilot.

The flight records released by her mother state, "Overall, Lt. Hultgreen's performance was slightly above average."

Prayer already exists in many of our nation's public schools

By Peter Applebome
N.Y. Times News Service

ATLANTA — As President Clinton and the new Republican leadership in Congress consider measures that would return organized prayer to public schools, it is worth remembering one thing.

Prayer is already there.

Despite a Supreme Court ruling 32 years ago that classroom prayer and Scripture reading are unconstitutional even if they are voluntary, prayer is increasingly a part of school activities from early-morning moments of silence to lunchtime prayer sessions to pre-football-game prayers for both players and fans.

The most common forms are state-mandated moments of silence at the beginning of the day, which are permissible to the extent they are not meant to be a forum for organized prayer. But, particularly in the South, religious clubs, prayer groups and pro-prayer students and community groups are making religion and prayer part of the school day.

At Louisa County High School in Louisa, Va., for instance, lunchtime prayer meetings on the steps outside the school's band room were organized last year by Tenille M. Wermteer, who is now a senior.

"We read a chapter of the Bible and prayed for 15 minutes every Monday and Wednesday," she said.

"We got some weird looks, but a lot of people came up and asked what we were doing. I told them, 'Jesus Christ loves you so much, it would be mean for you to turn him down without giving him a chance.' "

At Greenville High School in Greenville, S.C., the head football coach, Larry Frost, asks an assistant to say a prayer and lead the team in reciting the Lord's Prayer before every game.

In Iowa, 50 to 100 of the state's 358 high schools had prayers at graduation ceremonies last year.

The director of the Mississippi chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union said the group was planning to sue a school district in northern Mississippi, asserting that the school allows prayers over the school intercom and pays Bible study teachers to teach in elementary and middle schools.

The American Center for Law and Justice, founded by Pat Robertson, estimates that 12,000 Bible clubs are operating in American public schools. People for the American Way, a civil liberties group, says 60 to 70 percent of Americans respond favorably to the idea of prayer in school.

Nancy M. Wilson of Student Venture, a part of the Campus Crusade for Christ International, said: "Student prayer is not rare at all. Students are praying whether they're officially allowed to or not." Student Venture is helping high school and junior high students organize prayer groups that have 177,000 participants.

Much of the activity is private and voluntary and within constitutional guidelines. Some of it probably goes beyond what is legally permissible, because a large segment of the public is more inclined than the courts to have prayer in the schools. Particularly in the South, there is enough support for school prayer that communities are sometimes content to let it continue.

Food From FRIENDS

Midland Scouts, their friends and families distributed the ingredients of Thanksgiving dinners to hundreds of needy families Sunday. The families, who were selected by the Salvation Army and Casa de Amigos, recieved food baskets from local sponsors including Furr's Supermarkets Inc. and the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

Some 150 families received an early Thanksgiving gift Sunday when local organizations donated and delivered food baskets containing the ingredients for a Thanksgiving dinner.

"In times when many of us are given so much, it is a great blessing to be able to give back something to people in need," said Richard Garner, district manager for Furr's Supermarkets Inc., which supplied the baskets.

Sunday's distribution was part of the second annual "Food From Friends" program which is sponsored by Furr's and the Midland Reporter-Telegram in conjunction with Casa de Amigos and the Salvation Army.

Each year, the charitable organizations provide lists of needy families to whom the meals are delivered by members of local Scout troops, their friends and families; many of whom volunteered last year.

The annual campaign, which also serves Odessa, provides each family with a turkey, pumpkin pie, fresh fruits and vegetables, and all of the trimmings.

13-year-old Spencer King, his brother Randall, age 9 and Tyler Jones, 8, delivered food baskets to the Rodriguez family in East Midland, Sunday.

Ann Weckworth, manager of the Furr's store at Plaza Oaks, who has coordinated the event each year said, "It is only the second year (of the program) and we are getting better organized, it's going really well."

Distribution of the food was made possible with the help of: KGEE radio, KWESTV and the Odessa American.

Garner summed up Furr's involvement by saying, "Furr's is thankful for the opportunity to help the community."

Plans are already in place to, repeat the distribution next year.

Robert Castillo, a sacker at Furr's Plaza Oaks store, packs the baskets.

IRVING — Don't expect to see the Dallas Cowboys in their traditional home white jerseys when they host the Green Bay Packers on Thanksgiving Day.

On Monday, owner Jerry Jones unveiled a new "Double Star" jersey for the game. Jones said the jersey will not replace the Cowboys' traditional uniform, but will be used for special occasions such as Monday night games and selected playoff games.

"The Cowboys have always been out front in terms of introducing new concepts to the NFL," Jones said. "We felt it was the right time for an NFL team to give its fans a little variety with a fresh 1990s look while not moving away from its traditional uniform.

Chaps sweep Ranger

■ MC men remain undefeated with another 100-point barrage against Ranger.

By Bill Petitt
Staff Writer

Midland College might have seen its game with Ranger on Monday night as a walk in the park after defeating the Rangers 101-82 in the season opener for both teams.

But seven minutes into the game MC found itself down 17-10 and coach Pat Rafferty was hoping this would not be a New York City mugging at the Chap Center. It finally turned into a 106-72 win for the 7-0 Chaps.

Following a timeout, the Chaps' defense limited Ranger to just three field goals over the last 11:30 of the first half as Midland built a 48-29 halftime lead and never looked back.

"I think we might have thought this was going to be an easy game at first," said Midland College freshman guard Devon Phillips, "but coach got on to us pretty good at the timeout and we came out better."

The Chaps did turn up the heat as a 15-2 run over 4:41 opened up what was a physical game inside up until that point.

She does not look like Mike. She can not take off from the foul line and slam dunk. She does not have a shoe contract nor does she endorse an underwear company or a national fastfood chain.

She might not be able to hit a curve ball, but this Jordan sure shoots like Mike.

After a sluggish performance in the Lady Chaps' 104-101 win over Paris Junior College on Friday, Shannon Jordan resumed her long range assualt on opposing defenses as she poured in 19 of her game-high 21 points in the first half, including five three pointers, to lead Midland College to an easy 112-56 win over Ranger Junior College at the Chap Center.

Midland's 56-point win ties the largest margin of victory in a game, for men or women, as MC improves to 7-1 on the year while Ranger drops to 0-3.

MC raced out to an 11-2 lead to start the game and made a laugher out of this one early as the Lady Chaps built a 29-13 in the first seven minutes of the game, thanks to eight points from Stacie Johnson in the first 4:17.

Oklahoma's Gary Gibbs ...an early resignation

Gibbs gives up OU post

By Owen Canfield
AP Sports Writer

NORMAN, Okla. — Oklahoma coach Gary Gibbs announced his resignation Monday, putting to rest media speculation that has swirled in recent weeks and that he said contributed to his decision.

Gibbs, who last week denied he planned to step down, read a two-page statement after briefly discussing Friday's game against No. 1 Nebraska.

He said he was not asked to step down, and made his decision without talking with the school's regents or with athletic director Donnie Duncan.

Gibbs has a record of 44-21-2, a .671 winning percentage. But his teams have finished no better than third in the Big Eight, and they are only 2-14-1 in games against the Sooners' biggest rivals — Texas, Colorado and Nebraska.

"While we did not reach a championship level, we have achieved the 19th-best record in the country over the past five years while having the highest graduation rate of any of the Big 12 schools this past year," he said.

"Our players have represented the university with class at all times and I'm proud of what we have accomplished."

Gibbs said he had to ask himself, "Am I being fair to my family and to the team to continue as head football coach?"

"While I had intended to ask this question at the end of the season, and all of those closely involved with the program were committed to evaluating the program at the end of the season, the media frenzy created by inaccurate reporting last week led me to the conclusion it was in the best interest of my

Fisher loses Oiler debut

■ Even a new coach can't turn around the fortunes of the Houston Oilers.

By Michael A. Lutz
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON — New coach, same result for the Houston Oilers.

David Treadwell kicked a 37-yard field goal with 2 seconds to play Monday night to help the New York Giants snap a seven-game losing streak with a 13-10 victory over the Oilers, who lost for the seventh straight time.

Houston's loss ruined the coaching debut of Jeff Fisher, who replaced Jack Pardee last Monday and decided to scrap Houston's run-and-shoot offense.

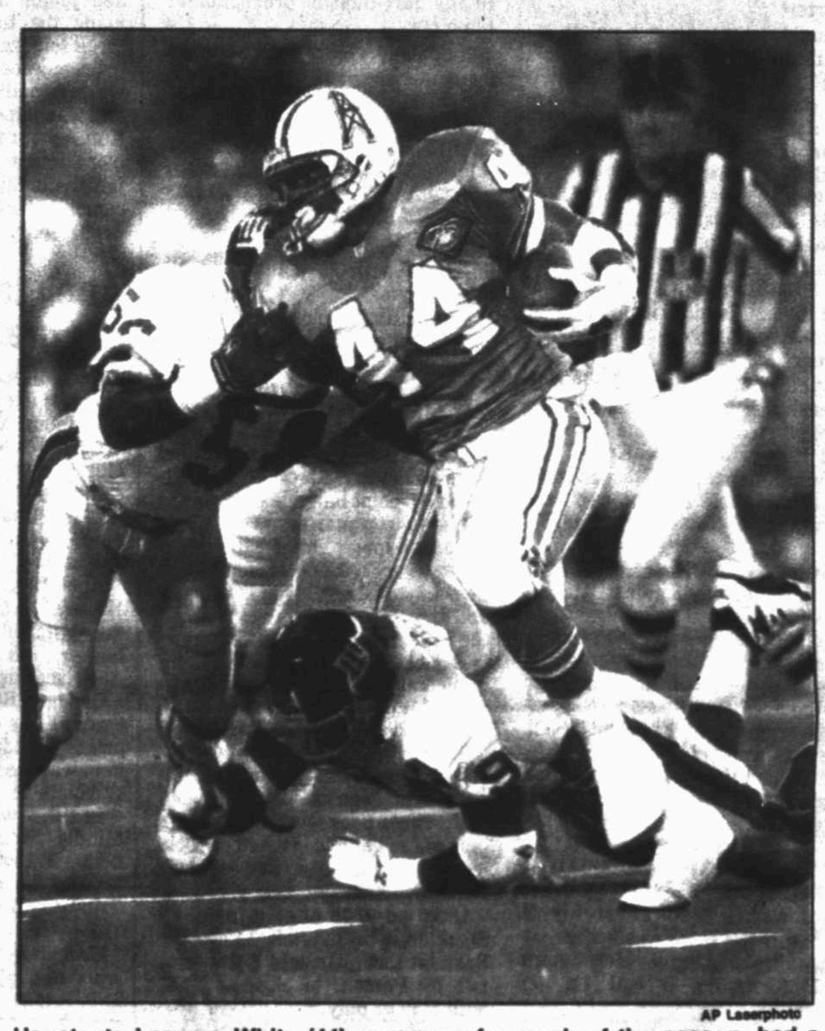

Kent Graham, who replaced injured Dave Brown, rallied the Giants after a scoreless first half and gave New York a 5-0 all-time record against the Oilers.

After a scoreless first half, Graham threw a 40-yard touchdown pass to Mike Sherrard and set up Treadwell's first field goal, 26-yarder, with a 55-yard pass to Sherrard.

New York led 10-7 with 8:19 to play, but the Oilers tied it with 4:08 left on Al Del Greco's 42-yard field goal.

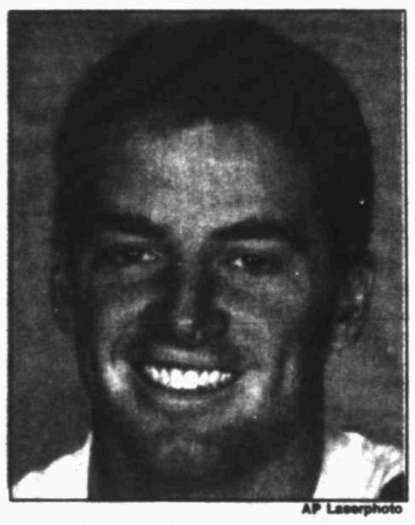

Fisher turned the play-calling over to offensive coordinator Dick Coury, but the Oilers, who relied mostly on the run, didn't get into the end zone until 4:44 remained in the third quarter on Tolliver's one-yard keeper.

Cowboys' Jason Garrett ...going from third to first

Thanksgiving with Garrett

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — Jason Garrett will start at quarterback for the Dallas Cowboys against the Green Bay Packers on Thanksgiving Day while Troy Aikman and Rodney Peete recover from injuries doctors have decided weren't as serious as first feared.

The Cowboys signed former Indianapolis, Cleveland and Los Angeles Rams quarterback Mike Pagel to a contract for the rest of the year as backup insurance. Pagel, a 12-year veteran, played under Dallas offensive coordinator Ernie Zampese with the Rams in the early 90s.

To make room for Pagel and offensive lineman Frank Cornish, both free agents, the Cowboys put offensive lineman Erik Williams on the injured reserve, and cut defensive lineman Toddrick McIntosh and practice squad player tight end Coleman Bell.

Aikman, who suffered a left knee ligament sprain in Sunday's 31-7 victory over Washington, walked with a limp around Valley Ranch on his 28th birthday.

"I'm still stiff and sore but it feels better than it did last night," Aikman said. "I'll just have to see what my body tells me on this one. I'm going day to day and see how it goes. It could be two weeks or it could be five weeks from now. I'd be shocked if I felt good enough to play on Thursday. I don't see that as a possiblity but I'm not going to

CLASS 5A SMALL SCHOOL PLAYOFFS

Sweet 16 round huge hump in road

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

Midland Lee's football Rebels will find themselves in the land of Sweet 16 for the ninth time in its playoff history, but they will have to overcome some major obstacles to reach the next level that could possibly see Lee meet Abilene Cooper next week for the second time this year.

Lee only has a 3-5 mark at the region round of the playoffs and three of those five losses have been to an Arlington team. Lee is 0-3 against Arlington teams in the playoffs and will host Arlington Lamar at 2 p.m. Saturday at Memorial Stadium in an effort to end that skid.

Lee and Lamar also met in Midland in 1989 where the Vikings took a 17-3 win over the Rebels. Lee also owned Farris Strambler that year. Strambler had over 2,700 yards rushing that season and Lee was only able to score three points. Lamar will bring a solid 11-1 mark to Memorial Stadium this year, having lost only to its district champion and rival Arlington High during regular season play.

Arlington High meets Abilene Cooper at 2 p.m. Saturday in Maverick Stadium in Arlington. That means all four schools have a special reason for wanting to win. All would like a season rematch next week in the quarterfinal round of eight.

Lee's other region round losses to Arlington teams were to Sam Houston, 38-13, in 1976 and to Arlington High, 27-7, in 1987.

"Lamar is awfully good," says Lee coach Earl Miller, who faces his final game with a Rebel unit with every step out of the gate. "The last time we played them (1979) I remember that we couldn't move the football at all. But it isn't going to get any easier from here on out. I think they are better than Amarillo High."

Lamar advanced to the region round with a narrow 28-27 victory over Fort Worth Wyatt in bi-district play and won Saturday night at Texas Stadium, 24-13, over The Colony in area action. Lee tied No. 10 state-ranked Amarillo High and advanced 4-3 on penetrations in bi-district and then slugged El Paso Riverside 35-13 Saturday in the area round.

Lamar senior quarterback David Sobezak, 6-2, 175, can run and throw and has a lot of good receivers from the one-back offense. The Viking tailback of note is 1,000-yard rusher Joe Walker, a junior. Walker is a real athlete. He is the only two-way starter on the team, also playing at a defensive back position on defense.

The Viking offensive line is also huge, averaging 245 pounds per man. That meat market is headed by 272-pound tight end Shea Holder and 280-pound tackle Ahmad Johnson.

Lamar coach Eddy Peach, however, isn't talking about next week, yet.

"I promise you. Both teams (Lamar and Arlington) will have their hands full with Abilene Cooper and Midland Lee this week."

It's easy to see why there isn't any talk yet of a Cooper-Lee rematch next week. There are enough problems for both teams to face this week before thinking of returning to District 4-5A turf.

Lee, MHS girls host basketball games today

By Amy Wolfenbarger
Staff Writer

The Midland Lee girls will attempt to get back on the winning track today with a 7:30 p.m. contest against Class 4A San Angelo Lake View at the Lee gym.

Lee (3-1) dropped its first game this season with a 71-56 decision against Midland High in the championship of the Tall City Tournament Saturday. But for an eight-point run at the end of the third period, the Lady Rebels were in good shape to win their first against the Lady Dawgs since 1993.

There were a few details of Lee's game which demonstrate what Lady Rebel coach Elise Kail has been saying since before the first game: that her team, while young, is much farther along than last year's squad.

For instance, the Lady Rebs outrebounded MHS 20-14 in the first half and shot better than 50 percent from the field in the first half and shot 5-of-7 in the fourth quarter. Their only blemish was 3-of-14 shooting when MHS outscored them 23-13 in the third.

Throughout the tournament, Lee's youngsters continued to provide a strong supporting cast around its only returning starter, senior post Krissy Woodard.

Sophomore wing Jamie Rhoads picked up the slack and scored 17 in Lee's win over Lubbock Monterey. Against MHS, senior wing Michelle Benson hauled down 10 rebounds and shot a perfect 4-of-4 from the field including an ace on her only three-point attempt. Also in their only loss, junior Claire Wright, despite recovering from injuries sustained in an auto accident, led the team with 14 points, including two long-range three-pointers.

"I'm not dissappointed at all with the kids," Kail said after the game. "We've come a long way, considering where we were at this point in the season last year and where we are now, it's great."

Unlike this year, Lee lost its opener and then lost one of two games in the tournament, including a loss to Lubbock Monterey for third place. Lee beat Monterey this year to make it to the finals.

The Lake View Maidens fell to 2-2 over the weekend with a 1-3 performance at the Big Spring tournament after winning their season opener.

Lee's contest with Lake View is not the only local game in town today as the MHS girls try to extend their unbeaten streak to five games. The Lady Dawgs host Lubbock Coronado in the MHS gym at 7:30 p.m.

Midland High senior Amy Alcala has lived up to her role of team leader in just the first few games, averaging 29.75 points and setting three school records. Against El Paso Bowie, Alcala scored 42 to snap her own school mark of 41. She then broke the school steal record twice with eight against Bowie and nine against Lee.

Lubbock Coronado (3-1) recently won consolation in the Abilene Wylie tournament with a win over San Angelo Central.

The Midland Lee boys (1-1) opened their season with a win over Copperas Cove but then fell to 4A Pampa, ranked No. 4 in the state, on Saturday. Lee travels to El Paso Hanks for an 7:30 p.m. MST contest.

The Midland High boys (2-0) are open.

Harper steal ignites Knicks over Spurs

Associated Press

■ NBA Roundup

NEW YORK — Derek Harper made a key steal in the last minute and New York's defense held San Antonio without a point in the final 1:51 as the Knicks defeated the Spurs 92-88 Monday night.

Charles Oakley scored 16 points and Patrick Ewing had 13 despite an injured right knee. Neither team ran off more than four consecutive points in the fourth quarter.

David Robinson had 29 points, including 10 in the fourth quarter, and 12 rebounds, and Chuck Person added 17 points off the bench for San Antonio, which never led by more than two points and never trailed by more than eight.

After Ewing committed his fifth foul, Robinson sank two foul shots with 1:51 to play, bringing the Spurs to 91-88. Oakley then missed two 18-footers, and San Antonio had the ball before Harper stole it from Avery Johnson in the left corner.

Anthony Mason then grabbed an offensive rebound with 28 seconds to play and Johnson was forced to foul Harper after the Knicks ran the clock down to 12.6 seconds.

Harper sank one of two free throws to put New York ahead, 92-88.

Ewing sat out New York's 92-79 victory Saturday against Atlanta because of a sore right knee, only his eighth absence in the last eight seasons.

Robinson entered the game leading the league with a 15.3 rebounding average. His 27.3 scoring average was fourth-best in the NBA, and he had a 35-point, 13-rebound game in the Spurs' 101-82 victory against the Knicks on Nov. 12.

Magic 124, Heat 89

ORLANDO, Fla. — Anfernee Hardaway scored 17 of his 30 points in the third quarter as Orlando broke open a close game with Shaquille O'Neal on the bench.

O'Neal returned from foul trouble to lead a 21-3 surge at the start of the fourth period and finished with 22 points in 28 minutes, 10 below his NBA-leading average.

Orlando led 64-61 when O'Neal left with his fourth foul and built the advantage to 14 with Hardaway going 11-for-11 from the foul line and nearly matching the Heat's third-quarter production of 19 points.

Hardaway, who was 14-for-14 from the line, sat out the entire fourth quarter. That was hardly relief for Miami, which managed only 17 points in the last period to fall to 0-5 on the road, 1-7 overall.

Nick Anderson added 21 points for the Atlantic Division-leading Magic (6-2), while Kevin Willis led the Heat with 20 points and 12 rebounds.

Miami stayed close in the first half despite shooting 42 percent from the field.

Jazz 106, Suns 91

SALT LAKE CITY — John Stockton scored 25 points and Karl Malone added 17 as Utah withstood a 3-point barrage by Phoenix in the fourth quarter.

Phoenix point guard Elliott Perry was knocked unconscious when he collided with Malone in the second quarter. He was carried off the court on a stretcher and taken to a local hospital. There was no immediate word on his condition.

Dan Majerle led Phoenix with 21 points and Danny Manning added 15. The Suns, already playing without Charles Barkley, played without Kevin Johnson in the second half. Their backcourt for a large part of the game consisted of rookies Trevor Ruffin and Wesley Person.

Utah led 92-78 after a layup by Stockton with 5:26 left before the Suns hit three straight 3-pointers, two by Person, to close to 94-87 with 3:39 to play.

Abell takes two 8th grade wins

Abell Junior High took two victories in eighth grade basketball action Monday.

Abell White defeated San Jacinto Green 53-46 as Matt Winston had 22 points and 10 rebounds. Charles Tatum had a game high 26 points for San Jacinto.

Abell Blue nipped San Jacinto White by a 51-50 margin as Andre Mitchell had the winning basket. Ed Johnson led the Abell scoring with 10 points.

Goddard Red defeated Alamo Gray as Jay Christenson had 18 points and Jesse Nicholson 12. Conaway and Ratliff each had 10 points in the loss.

In the seventh grade, Trinity Middle School defeated Coahoma 26-14 with Matt Hinkley leading the way with 11 points. Trinity is now 2-0.

Coalition still has confusion

By Rick Warner
AP Football Writer

When the bowl coalition was formed three years ago, it was supposed to improve the likelihood of a national championship game. It worked well the first two years, but this season the title picture is as confusing as the old days.

With three undefeated, untied teams heading for three different bowls, there won't be the kind of 1 vs. 2 bowl matchup that has highlighted the last two seasons.

There's also a chance three major teams — top-ranked Nebraska, No. 2 Penn State and No. 3 Alabama — will finish with a perfect record for the first time since 1954. That would be fine if there wasn't such an obsession with winning national titles in college football, the only sport that determines its champion by polls instead of playoffs.

But given the importance of finishing first, the failure to pair at least two of the top three teams in a bowl will frustrate fans and anger players and coaches at any undefeated school that doesn't win at least a share of the title.

Most likely, that would be Rose Bowl-bound Penn State or Alabama, which would go to the Sugar Bowl with a victory over Florida in the Southeastern Conference championship game.

If Nebraska beats Oklahoma on Friday and maintains the No. 1 ranking going into the Orange Bowl, it would almost certainly win the national title with a bowl victory. That's based more on history than speculation. In the era of post-bowl polls, every No. 1 team that has won its bowl has captured the championship.

Penn State knows the anguish of winning all its games and going home empty-handed. It's happened three times to the Nittany Lions, including two straight years in the late 1960s.

The coalition was going to change all that, and it got off to a good start by matching the top two teams in 1992 and 1993. Now the holes in the system are showing.

The Rose Bowl's decision not to join the coalition means Penn State can't play coalition members Nebraska or Alabama. The three schools belong to different conferences and send their champions to different bowls.

The easiest answer to the problem would be a playoff, but that idea has repeatedly been rejected by the NCAA, most recently last summer. There is help on the way.

No. 6 Lady Raiders host NIT finale

LUBBOCK (AP) — Tonight's final of the Women's Preseason NIT pits No. 6 Texas Tech against No. 13 Washington in a rematch of a stepping-stone game that sent the Lady Raiders to the 1993 national title.

"Washington will come in here and play the toughest pressure man-to-man defense in the country," Tech coach Marsha Sharp predicted Monday.

"They don't really care what kind of an offensive set they run or how they look on that end of the floor, so much as they want to just really get after you defensively," Sharp said.

Tech (3-0) advanced to the final by beating Toledo, Arkansas State and No. 12 Vanderbilt — in overtime, 86-81, Sunday.

Washington (3-0) beat Southwest Missouri State 85-77 after taking tournament victories from Northwestern and Seton Hall.

Tipoff is at 7:30 p.m. in Lubbock Municipal Coliseum, where the Lady Raiders have won 24 straight.

Tech surged Sunday from a 7-point deficit with less than 90 seconds to play to tie the Commodores at 73-73 and force overtime.

Michi Atkins had 26 points, including 10-of-10 free throws, and 14 rebounds. Connie Robinson added 23 points and 10 rebounds

"Even if we hadn't won the game I think it was a great game for us to be involved in that early in the year," Sharp said. "I think we became a better basketball team yesterday."

The Lady Raiders edged the Huskies 70-64 in a 1993 NCAA tournament game played in Lubbock.

Sharp said she expects Washington will match Tech's speed and put on display "the best transition team we'll play all year. They get the ball and go with it."

Her players still lack some consistency and prudence on shot selection, Sharp said. But she seemed delighted by the Vanderbilt victory.

"Anytime you win in an overtime and particularly when you have to come back as far as they came back yesterday, you have to feel like they're gaining some valuable experience," she said. "And I think more than anything else is maybe they won't ever count themselves out of a game."

QB: Aikman, Peete to return soon

(From 1C)

rule it out."

Aikman had a sprained knee ligament in 1991 and missed five games.

"I was suited up for the second game and could have played," said Aikman, still miffed that former coach Jimmy Johnson went with Steve Beuerlein into the playoffs. "It wasn't my choice but I could have played."

Coach Barry Switzer said Garrett would start and added "I believe in fairy tales. I believe in Disneyland and Tinker Bell and Captain Hook. I like situations like this. We could have us a new hero."

Peete's ligament damage in his right thumb wasn't as severe as first feared.

"Peete was not as a bad as the doctors through he might be," Switzer said, "It won't have to be operated on. He might be back for the Philadelphia game on Dec. 4. "

Owner Jerry Jones said "we thought Peete might be gone for the year but he just has a strained ligament. He could get back quick."

Switzer said the team has confidence in Garrett, who has been on the active roster for two years and has completed 10 of 23 passes for 65 yards.

"He's an extremely intelligent player like most Princeton kids are and he knows our offense as well as any quarterback," Switzer said. "He has the ability to do certain things. He doesn't have a lot of arm strength. He's not like Aikman or Peete who can throw the deep cuts. But he won't get you beat."

The Cowboys picked up Cornish, whom they cut earlier in the year, because of nagging injuries to the offensive line. Guard Derek Kennard has a toe injury that could keep him out of the Packer game.

"We had to get some help," Switzer said. "We've got a real depth problem."

The Cowboys listed 15 players on an injury list, including running back Emmitt Smith, who is bothered by a sprained shoulder.

"The injury is there and it's going to hurt but I'm going to play," Smith said.

OILERS: Giants hit late field goal

(From 1C)

The score came one play after Tolliver completed a 41-yard screen pass to Lorenzo White, who was knocked out of bounds at the 1 by Jesse Campbell.

The Giants responded on their next series, capped by Graham's 40-yard TD pass to Sherrard, who squeezed between defenders Marcus Robertson and Blaine Bishop for the score with 14:01 elapsed in the third quarter.

The Oilers, who ranked among the top offensive teams in the NFL in recent years with the run-and-shoot, didn't use the four-wide receivers alignment in the scoreless first half.

Instead, they gave the ball to White, who had eight carries for 40 yards in the first quarter and 116 yards by halftime. He finished with a career-high 156 yards on 27 carries.

Hampton had 122 yards on 34 carries and Graham was 6-of-13 for 105 yards.

Fisher, whose defense blitzes fearlessly, showed he wasn't afraid to take chances on offense too, going for a first down on fourth-and-1 at the Giants' 40 in the second quarter.

The try failed, and New York drove to a third-and-10 at the Oilers 20. But the Giants never got to kick because Graham took the snap with 14 seconds left and scrambled away all the time.

Brown, who won his starting job back at the beginning of the week, received a concussion when he was tackled by linebacker Lamar Lathon in the second quarter.

MEN: Phillips scores 21 to keep MC unbeaten points, loosened things up in the middle with a pair of three-pointers in the first half as he and Arlington product D'Juan Baker combined for 23 points in the first half.

(From 1C)

Sophomore guard Kevin Rice limited Ranger guard Durville Patton to seven points on the night. It was a huge a change from the 38-point performance against the Chaps in the first meeting.

"The last time we played them, we had trouble defending their point guard, and when we would collapse on him, he would kick it out to Patton and he scored," said Midland College coach Pat Rafferty. "This time we put Kevin on Patton and we did a better job on their point."

The pressure on the point forced 28 Ranger turnovers as Midland stole the ball 12 times and had a season-high six blocks to stifle Ranger offensively.

"When Patton would get the ball, I would just try to stay under and contest his shots," said Rice, who also scored 14 points.

Ranger, which sported shaved heads for the game, built its seven-point lead in the first half thanks to solid play from inside people Lebaron Brown and Ronnie Steed. Steed, which led Ranger with 19 points, scored four of the team's first nine points before Midland got untracked.

"We didn't shoot the ball very well," said Ranger coach Tommy Simmons, "but I thought the officials missed some calls and they built a 15-point lead in the first half. Midland outplayed us in the second half, so I guess it doesn't matter."

Ranger hit just 7-of-16 free throws in the first half, including three one-and-ones.

Midland returns to action Friday in Fort Smith, Ark., in the Westark Junior College Tournament.

WOMEN: Jordan nails five three-point shots

(From 1C)

Johnson finished with 13 points as six Lady Chaps scored in double figures.

Pam Hicks scored 16 points while Tomenia Porter added 13. Greenwood product Brandy Wright had her first double figure game of her career with 11 points and JoAnna Kailahi, who scored 41 points against Paris on Friday, added 11.

"I think they were thinking about JoAnna," said Jordan. "They knew about her game against Paris and they were packing it inside and it left me open. I didn't shoot very well against Paris and I wanted to come out and do better tonight."

The Lady Chaps hit nine three pointers in the first half as they raced out to a 68-32 lead. They appeared ready to eclipse their team record of 15 three's in a game set in the season opener against Southwestern Christian, but MC cooled off in the second half as every one saw extensive playing time in the game.

"The bottom line is that they are a better team than we are," said Ranger coach Tommy Simmons. "We are not very smart or talented and that's not a good combination."

"There will be no more like this on our schedule," said Midland coach Ron Jones. "We shot the ball well and that makes everything look better. It is really hard to say how we played when you play a team like that."

MC came out in the second half and limited Ranger to one field goal and six points in the first 13:30 to complete the domination.

Ranger was led by Jennifer Speight and Charlotte Chapman with 16 points apiece.

Midland Lee freshman center Deborah York scored two points and had a career-high five rebounds.

Midland travels to Paris to particpate in the Paris Rotary Shootout Thursday through Saturday.

A&M falls to Arizona State

LAHAINA, Hawaii (AP) — Mario Bennett was 12 for 13 from the field and scored 27 points Monday to lead Arizona State to a 103-73 victory over Texas A&M in the opening round of the Maui Invitational.

Bennett, a 6-foot-9 junior, was unstoppable underneath. Most of his shots were dunks and layups, although he did make his only 3-point attempt.

He had 19 points in the first half as Arizona State put the game away early, taking a 53-36 lead at the break.

Arizona State, which shot 58 percent (41 for 71) took its biggest lead at 80-40 on follow dunk by Ron Riley with 11:28 to play.

The Sun Devils will play the winner of Monday's Michigan-Tulane game in Tuesday's semifinals.

If No. 13 Michigan wins, it would mark the first time Arizona State coach Bill Frieder faced the school he coached from 1981-89. He was forced to leave just before the 1989 NCAA tournament began when he signed to go to Arizona State.

Joe Wilbert led the Aggies with 16 points, and Damon Johnson had 14.

OPEC seeks caps to boost prices

Cartel members hope to increase profits by squeezing oil supplies

N.Y. Times News Service

DENPASAR, Indonesia — Oil ministers from nations of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries gathered Monday on the Indonesian resort island of Bali to devise a way to drive up sagging prices in the world's oil markets by freezing production for up to a year.

The ministers, who hope to increase profits by squeezing oil supplies, say the question is not whether but how long they should hold crude oil production at the current cap of 24.5 million barrels a day.

Saudi Arabia, the largest oil producer in the world, has proposed that the freeze continue for a full year, while other OPEC members have suggested three to six months.

"I will consider 12, six or three months," the Iranian oil minister, Gholamreza Agazadeh, said as he arrived in Bali for the year-end meeting of the 12-nation organization in Denpasar, Bali's capital. "At this time the most important issue is that the price is not very strong."

The current production ceiling has been in place since September 1993. A decision to keep it in place for another year, and to crack down on rampant quota cheating by some OPEC members, would demonstrate a rare level of discipline for the organization.

OPEC has reported that worldwide demand for oil is up this year by about 700,000 barrels a day and should increase again next year. If oil production holds steady, the ministers say, oil prices will almost certainly go up, perhaps sharply.

Despite their vast oil reserves and their reputations for free spending, several of OPEC's most prominent members, including Saudi Arabia, are pressed for cash, and they are anxious to see oil prices rise.

Under the price measurement used by OPEC, the average price for an assortment of different types of crude oil averaged about $17 for a 42-gallon barrel last week. This is far below the OPEC target of $21 a barrel and little better in real terms than before the Arab oil embargo of 1973.

As the oil ministers plotted production strategy Monday, they faced a potential spoiler from within their own ranks — Iraq, which has been barred by the United Nations from exporting oil since it invaded Kuwait in 1990.

Iraq, its economy now a shambles, has said that it will pump oil as quickly as it can when the embargo is lifted. Iraq was once the world's sixth-largest oil producer, and its return to the oil market would almost certainly push prices down unless other large suppliers agreed to new limits on their own production.

Last month, Iraq announced that it would recognize the sovereignty of Kuwait, another OPEC member, in what U.N. officials agreed was an important step toward meeting the conditions that would allow it to resume oil sales.

Iraq's oil minister, Safa Hadi Jawad, said Sunday that he expected the embargo to be lifted in the first three months of 1995. As soon as it is lifted, he said, Iraq will ask OPEC to be allowed to pump oil until it reaches the production level of its longtime enemy Iran, the group's second-largest producer.

Prices hold

NEW YORK — Crude oil futures prices ended little changed Monday after climbing in early trading when Saudi Arabia proposed a 12-month extension of the current OPEC production limit.

Prices retreated closer to Friday's finish because much of the market has already assumed some sort of rollover of the current quota. Oil ministers from the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries are meeting in Bali, Indonesia, to set production targets.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in January settled at $17.56 per barrel, up 1 cent, on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Natural gas prices finished 2.4 cents lower at $1.661 per 1,000 cubic feet.

Dollar mixed

NEW YORK — The dollar ended mixed Monday in light, directionless trading, holding gains made against key currencies last week after the Federal Reserve's sharper-than-expected increase in short-term U.S. interest rates.

In late New York trading, the dollar was quoted at 1.5568 marks, up from 1.5547 late Friday.

The dollar also was changing hands in New York at 98.36 yen, down from 98.53.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Friday: 1.3192 Swiss francs, up from 1.3190; 5.3415 French francs, up from 5.3408; 1,598 Italian lire, up from 1,593; and 1.3708 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3678.

The British pound was quoted at $1.5673, up from $1.5660.

Gold prices declined. On New York's Commodity Exchange, gold for current delivery dropped 70 cents to settle at $383.20 per troy ounce.

On the Comex, silver for current delivery gained 1.2 cent to settle at $5.151 per troy ounce.

Stocks sink

NEW YORK — Investors dumped stocks Monday and pulled the Dow Jones average down nearly 46 points to its weakest level in nearly three months.

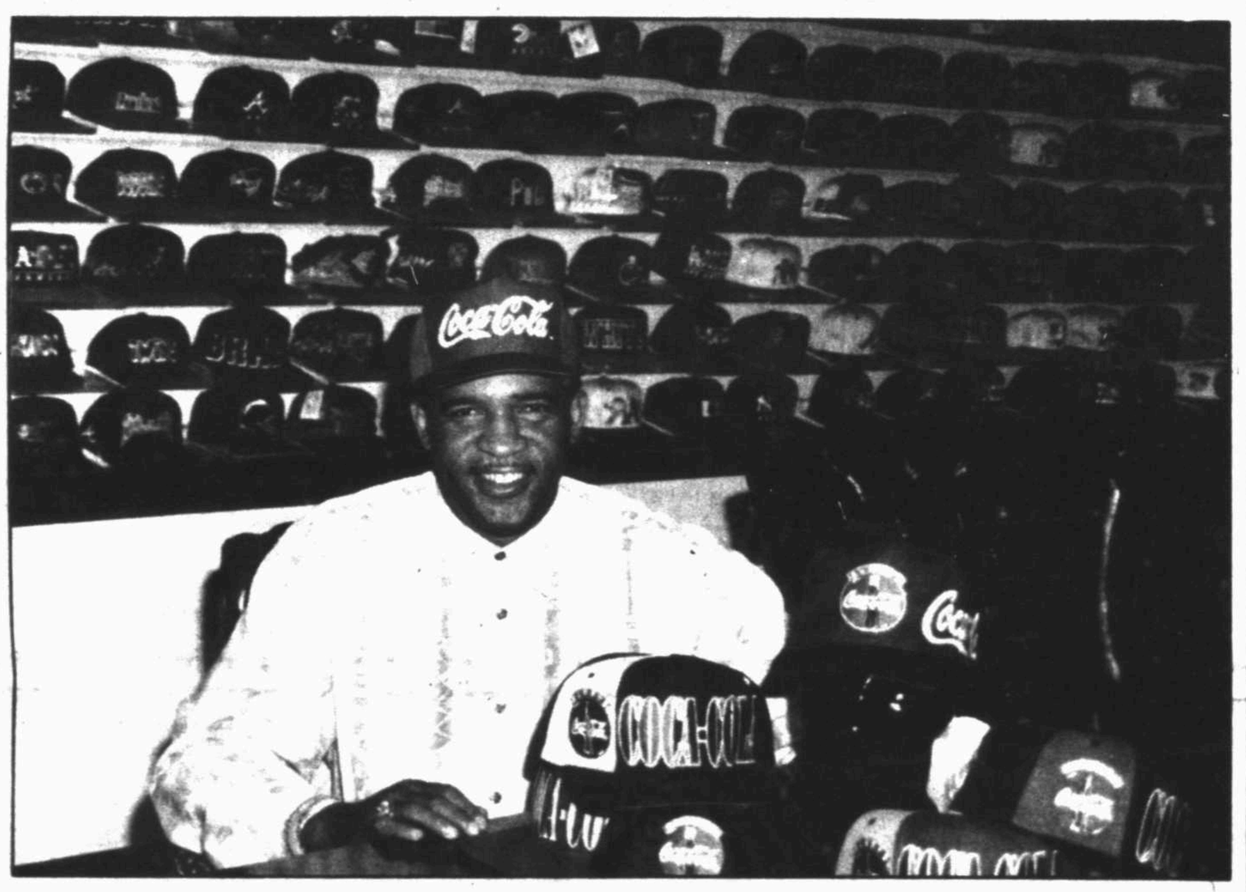

Analysts attributed the weakness to higher yields in the bond market, which have made fixed-income securities an increasingly attractive alternative to the risks of the stock market.

The Dow average, the market's best-known indicator, ended the day with a loss of 45.75, or 1.20 percent, at 3,769.51, its lowest closing level since Aug. 22. The Dow average has not closed below 3,800 since Oct. 7.

Declining issues outnumbered advancers by about 15 to 8 on the New York Stock Exchange. But volume was moderate ahead of the holiday, with 293 million shares changing hands, up from 252.30 million last Monday.

Broad-market indexes fell.

Time-sharing a business jet? Firms can buy piece of sky

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — You've heard about time-sharing a vacation home. How about time-sharing a business jet?

A New Jersey company, Executive Jet Aviation, sells one-eighth and one-fourth shares of Cessna and Raytheon business jets. The share gives buyers with a minimum of 100 hours of occupied flight time a year a guarantee that an aircraft will be available on as little as four hours' notice anywhere in the country, 24 hours a day.

The program, called NetJets, begun in 1987, isn't just for big companies, says Kevin Russell, senior vice president of Executive Jet.

The company has 180 owners, including companies such as Texaco and Pier One. But it is most popular among busy executives and smaller firms that don't keep jets flying much of the time and frequently visit small cities and rural areas far from commercial airline hubs.

"I tell you, we couldn't be happier with it," says Scott Sayers, agent and business manager for pro golfer Ben Crenshaw of Austin, Texas, who last year paid $315,000 for a one-eighth interest in a seven-seat Cessna S/II.

Like other NetJet owners, Crenshaw also pays $5,765 a month for a management fee and $1,090 for each occupied hour of flying, for fuel, catering and maintenance. But it's worth it, says Sayers, noting Crenshaw gets all the tax depreciation benefits and has a guarantee of selling the interest back to Executive Jet after five years.

American Airlines, pilots at a standoff

DALLAS (AP) — Four months after they began negotiations, American Airlines Inc. and its pilots' union are still haggling over a $300 million annual cut in labor costs.

The Fort Worth-based airline says saving that money is essential. American Pilots Association president Jim Sovich strongly disagrees.

"American Airlines is not a company in financial distress," Sovich says.

Sovich says he's willing to agree to increase productivity under certain circumstances. One of them isn't the full labor savings package sought by American president Robert Crandall.

Crandall says American needs to trim its costs because of challenges from low-cost competition. Airline managers are frustrated that union leaders don't agree the reductions are necessary.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Investor asks how to calculate stock 'basis'

By Bill Doyle

Q: For years I have accumulated stock registered in my name and Social Security number. I want to put half the stock in joint names with my husband and include his Social Security number. If I pass on, would my husband's "basis" for the stock be one-half the value at the date of death?

Doyle

Also, do gifts of stock between husband and wife have a cost based on the day of transfer?

A: Second question first. The basis — cost for tax purposes — is the original purchase price of the stock. It is not based on the value of the stock on the date of transfer.

As for the first question, here's an example of how the basis would be figured:

Let's say you pay $10,000 for shares of XYZ Corp. stock. You give half to your husband, by making him joint owner. His basis would be $5,000. Let's also say that after awhile, when you leave this vale of tears, the stock is worth $18,000.

Your husband would inherit the other half, which would have a basis of $9,000. He would add his original $5,000 basis to his inherited $9,000 basis, leaving him with $14,000 as his new basis. If he sold the stock, he would have a capital gain, for tax purposes, of $4,000.

Q: I have some stock that has appreciated greatly in value. If I sell it, I will have to pay very high federal and state taxes on the capital gain. I am considering giving my son and my daughter-in-law $20,000 worth of stock. I was told that my wife and I can each give $10,000 and avoid the gift tax.

Could my son and his wife sell the stock for its current $20,000 value and not have to pay a tax because it didn't increase in value while they had it?

A: For openers, you and your wife can actually give your son and daughter-in-law up to $40,000 each year without filing a federal gift tax return.

You can each give $10,000 to your son and to his wife. That would be gift of $20,000 from you two to each one of them.

Your son and daughter-in-law could not sell the stock without paying a tax on the capital gain. Their basis would be the stock's original purchase price.

However, by giving the stock to your son and his wife, you might be shifting the tax liability from your higher bracket to their lower bracket.

Q: I need to have my deceased husband's name removed from our U.S. savings bonds and have my son's name put in as the heir. Where in Washington do I take these bonds to have the names changed? I was told that they have to be sent to the U.S. Treasury for the transfer. I would like to go to Washington to do this personally.

A: If you do go to Washington, you can take in the sights and, perhaps, talk to your newly elected member of Congress. But you won't be able to find a place to have the names changed on the bonds.

The federal Bureau of the Public Debt, the agency that deals with savings bonds, is not set up to handle walk-in customers.

To accomplish the name change, the bonds must be sent to your district Federal Reserve Bank, along with a certified copy of your husband's death certificate — assuming he was co-owner — and a filled-in Form PD-F 4000.

Your local bank should be able to help you fill out the form and sent it along to the Federal Reserve. If, for some reason, your bank doesn't have the correct form, you can get one by writing: Bureau of the Public Debt, P.O. Box 1328, Parkersburg, W.Va. 26106-1328.

Q: I have shares in a tax-exempt mutual-bond fund. If I cash in the fund and get a capital gain because it has increased in value, is the gain also tax-free?

A: If you cash in a tax-exempt bond investment, you owe tax on the capital gain. The income is tax-exempt, not the capital gain.

Grandmothers bear burden of care for AIDS-infected children

By Felicia R. Lee
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — For a long time, Kathleen Buete feared a telephone call saying that her daughter Florence had died of an overdose. That call never came, but Florence did come home pregnant and with AIDS. She eventually died and Ms. Buete is caring for her 8-year-old grandson, who grows weaker and thinner every day from the same virus that killed his mother.

"I scream sometimes for no reason," Ms. Buete said. "I have my crying fits. I go into the bathroom so he doesn't see me, but he catches me sometimes."

As the AIDS epidemic rages, grandmothers across the nation are increasingly thrust into an old role with a new twist: they are caring for adult children dying of AIDS and for the grandchildren, in some cases also dying, who are left behind.

These women are the unexpected victims of a changing epidemic. Heterosexual AIDS infection jumped 130 percent from 1992 to 1993 (an increase due in part to a change in definition) and experts estimate that as many as 125,000 children will lose their mothers to AIDS by the year 2000. These children are increasingly left in the care of relatives, family friends and social agencies.

In many ways, the AIDS epidemic simply worsens the crisis of American families caused by drugs, abuse, abandonment, prison and death.

In 1992, there were 865,000 children under 18 being reared by their grandparents. Last year, that number jumped to over one million, according to Census Bureau information analyzed by the American Association of Retired Persons.

Most of the orphans are in New York, Newark, Miami, Los Angeles, Washington and San Juan, Puerto Rico, according to the Orphan Project, a research group that explores policy options for children orphaned because of AIDS.

"We believe AIDS may be one of the categories that will explode," said Rene Woodworth, coordinator of the Grandparent Information Center of the AARP, which is based in Washington. The center opened a year ago to offer help and information to the increasing number of grandparents raising grandchildren for various reasons.

"We don't have any numbers, but we are hearing the stories," Ms. Woodworth said of the impact of the AIDS epidemic on grandparents forced to raise orphaned children. "You're dealing with the issue of loss, maybe some guilt, maybe some shame. Their biggest concern is taking care of their grandchildren. They are issues the country needs to grapple with."

Many are also struggling financially.

"Some people say, it's very sad, the mother died, but the grandmother takes over without really knowing what it means," said Carol Levine, executive director of the Orphan Project, based in New York City. "The long-term impact is there are sometimes very fragile arrangements."

Carmine Buete, 8, does not remember his mother, who died seven years ago. Now a weary and ailing 65, Kathleen Buete says her greatest fear is dying before her grandson does. In July, she underwent quadruple-bypass heart surgery.

Carmine is the size of a 5-year-old, and tires easily. He recently got a small, bright red and black wheelchair, which he practices driving around their sunny Queens apartment.

"Mom, I'm tired," he said when his grandmother suggested they go out to eat. "We're going to drive there — or I don't eat."

"We could always take my wheelchair," he added. "I'm pushing."

Ms. Buete is divorced and supports herself and Carmine on Supplemental Security Income, a Social Security program for the disabled. His medication is supplied through his participation in clinical trials for children with the disease.

Carmine knows he has AIDS and has watched some of the other children in his trials die. For the last 18 months he has had no immune system to speak of. He receives tutoring at home to reduce the risk that he will get infections from other children.

The quiet, tidy household, with a room full of Carmine's toys and games, masks layers of heartache. Ms. Buete's first-born son, Ralph Grosso, died of AIDS five years ago. He was gay. She recently learned that another son is HIV-positive and was probably infected, like Carmine's mother, by sharing needles.

"I never imagined it, not until the AIDS thing came about," Ms. Buete said. "I was thinking about going on a motorcycle and touring the United States, but when it happens, you're there. All grandmothers are.

"There was one grandmother in my situation, but she just lost her granddaughter in August," she said. "We used to call each other once a week. You get upset a lot because you lose a lot of people."

Given the toll the disease has taken on her family, Ms. Buete feels it is important to talk frankly about their experience, and to work with AIDS-related causes like Gay Men's Health Crisis.

Statistics suggest that more grandparents will be caring for children as the disease increasingly affects entire families.

Megan McLaughlin, the executive director of the Federation of Protestant Welfare Agencies in New York, said extended families that care for children with AIDS should be given more support.

Opening lead: Five of ♡

In a perfect world, everything good would be suitably rewarded. All too often, unfortunately, virtue has to be its own reward. This deal is from a world championship match between France and Israel.

For Israel, South judged well to bid five clubs. Marked by the auction with a singleton heart at most, all North's assets had to be working, and the queens of spades and diamonds would be enough to guarantee the contract.

Had West made the routine lead of the ace of hearts, the defense would have been held to two tricks since one of declarer's spades would go away on the fourth diamond. But West found the brilliant underlead of the ace of hearts, taken by East's queen. After some thought East chose to shift to the queen of spades, and the defenders took two tricks in that suit for a one-trick set.

East-West had every right to expect an excellent result on the board. In the other room, however, the French South elected to open one no trump, and that became the final contract when West decided not to interpose because of the rattiness of the heart suit.

The play to the first two tricks was the same as in the other room. West led a low heart to East's queen, and back came the queen of spades. That defense allowed the East-West to collect the first 11 tricks for a five-trick set, and the French lost 400 points on the deal.

It's over — even the shouting — between Tom Arnold, Roseanne

LOS ANGELES — It's all over — including the shouting — between Tom Arnold and Roseanne.

Tom Arnold says he'll marry his 21-year-old girlfriend.

Arnold said Monday he will marry his girlfriend, 21-year-old Detroit college student Julie Champnella, next summer. His divorce from Roseanne will be final this week.

Last week, Roseanne said she would marry her bodyguard Ben Thomas.

Arnold, 35, and Champnella plan a July 22 wedding in Bloomfield Hills, Mich., said the actor's spokeswoman, Michelle Bega.

The bride-to-be will transfer from a Michigan college to the University of California at Los Angeles, Bega said.

"I feel very blessed that Julie has come into my life," Arnold said.

DALLAS — A sprained knee means he can't play, but Dallas Cowboys quarterback Troy Aikman still had a good time on his birthday, thanks to some famous friends.

Troy Aikman still had a good time on his birthday.

Members of the group Shenandoah called to sing "Happy Birthday" to Aikman while he was a guest on radio station KPLX on Monday, his 28th birthday. Aikman, a country music fan, is friends with some of Shenandoah's members.

Aikman was hurt in Sunday's 31-7 victory over Washington and could be out up to four weeks.

MILPITAS, Calif. — Lockout or no lockout, The Great One has scored again.

While the National Hockey League and its players are stuck in a labor dispute, Wayne Gretzky is playing in another arena: computers.

Hockey's all-time leading scorer signed a three-year agreement Monday with Time Warner Interactive Inc. to help produce a line of computer hockey games.

Time Warner also signed a license with the NHL Players Association to provide the game with real player names, profiles and statistics.

"We could not have found better partners than Wayne Gretzky and the NHLPA for our new line of hockey games," said Dan Van Elderen, president of Time Warner Interactive, Games Division.

Gretzky plays for the Los Angeles Kings.

NEW YORK — Lonette McKee says she's drawing on her own life to play the tragic character Julie in the Broadway musical "Show Boat."

The 39-year-old actress, whose father was black and mother was white, said she can relate to the role: a mixed-race singer whose attempts to pass for white lead to tragedy.

In the latest issue of People magazine, McKee said that during her 20-year career, some Hollywood producers told her she was "too exotic," while others found her "not black enough."

Things are better now. McKee is fielding offers from movie producers and working on a novel, which she describes as "kind of the story of my life."

LONDON — Edward Albee's "Three Tall Women" and its English star, Dame Maggie Smith, were named best play and best actress at the 40th Evening Standard Drama Awards.

The presentation Monday came less than a week after the opening of the acclaimed American play. The play, a current off-Broadway hit, won the Pulitzer Prize for drama this year.

In accepting his award, Albee said he is "astonished" whenever he wins a prize "and equally astonished whenever I do not."

Smith's trophy marked the fifth Evening Standard award for the Oscar- and Tony-winning star, who plays an embittered 92-year-old in "Three Tall Women."

LOS ANGELES — David Crosby remained in critical condition Monday after a transplant to replace his drug-ravaged liver.

"The transplanted liver is functioning very well right now. Mr. Crosby is off the ventilator and talking," said Dr. Ronald W. Busuttil, leader of the transplant team.

The 53-year-old member of the rock group Crosby, Stills and Nash received the new organ Sunday at University of California at Los Angeles Medical Center.

Crosby was hospitalized Nov. 2. His liver had hardened and deteriorated because of decades of alcohol and drug abuse.
