Council candidates answer questions

Seven candidates have filed for the two vacancies which exist on the City Council of Colorado City. Three of the candidates seek to fill the vacancy in District 1, and four seek to fill the vacancy in District 6.

The Colorado City Record has conducted brief interviews with all candidates, asking the same four questions of each. The questions are as follows:

Why are you running? What are your qualifications? What would you like to see changed? What would be the first action you would take upon being elected?

In alphabetical order, now, we present the seven candidates' interviews, featuring their answers to those questions.

Duff Chesney, when asked why he was running, stated that he was born and raised in Colorado City, but left in 1955 when he was transferred to Midland. He was transferred later to Houston, and returned to Colorado City in 1986. Retired now, he feels he has time to devote to the job of city councilman, and he is interested in trying to make Colorado City a better place.

When asked his qualifications, Chesney stated that he was trained as a financial specialist for Shell Pipeline, a subsidiary of Shell Oil. His work for that company over his forty years of employment included payrolls, accounting, assets, expense accounts, budgeting, property accounting, and purchasing.

Chesney added to his list of qualifications the fact that he was the financial representative for the building of a thirty-inch carbon dioxide pipeline, which stretched approximately five hundred miles, from Cortez, Colorado to Denver City, Texas.

When asked what he would like to see changed, Chesney said he would like to see the city cleaned up to make it more attractive to outsiders. He would like to see residents take more pride in their property, whether owned or rented.

Chesney said he stands for civic pride, and that recently he, along with his church group, undertook the project of repainting all stop sign and street sign posts in the city, a project which is now nearly completed.

In addition, he added, he and that same church group have taken the responsibility of cleaning a two-mile stretch of Highway 208.

Chesney's first action if elected, he said, would be to listen and learn until he gets his feet on the ground. Other than that, though, he said he has long had in the back of his mind a project involving the cleaning of Lone Wolf Creek, part of which is located in his district, District 6.

He visualizes the addition of walking paths, and cites the San Antonio River and San Angelo's Concho River as examples of what could possibly be accomplished.

Sammy Contreras, a candidate for the vacancy in District 1, when asked why he was running, stated that he believed he could make the difference for the betterment of Colorado City.

His qualifications, he said, include twenty years of experience in maintenance at Valley Fair Lodge, fifteen years of which have been in a supervisory position, dealing with budgets and personnel. He has dealt with state inspectors, he added, as well as with life safety code inspectors.

Contreras would like to see a change throughout the whole town, he said. He would like to see everyone working together for the betterment of all citizens.

Contreras added that he would like to show the taxpayers of Colorado City exactly where their money goes, that he would like to clean up the town, and that he

Freezing temperatures cause problems with city water lines

According to Victor Huff, waste water and water superintendent for the city, the icy cold weather over the last few days has caused nearly ten breaks in water mains, service lines, and private residence lines.

Huff and his crew, which consists of Kenneth Rich, Dale Haltom, and Huff's father, Frelon Huff, have been on the job almost constantly since they were first notified, at 5 p.m. on Saturday, of a break in the lines at Concho and Riverside streets.

While they were working on that break, Huff said, they were notified of another break at 10th and Pine streets, near the football field.

They arrived to repair that break near 6 p.m., and while they were there they were notified of yet another break, this time in the yard of a residence on East 6th Street.

The crew finally got to go to their homes around 11:30 Saturday night, but Huff said it all started again with a call at 8 a.m. on Sunday, regarding a broken line on Locust street.

This break was within a residence, and therefore the resident's responsibility to repair, but the crew turned off the water, and then responded to a call about yet another broken line near the livestock auction barn at 9 a.m.

After the crew repaired the break near the livestock auction barn, the crew was called to repair a break at Houston and College streets at 10:30 a.m.

On Monday, at 9 a.m., the crew was notified about a break in the water line inside Cooper

Volunteers will be needed for Mitchell County Museum move

L.B. Elliott, chairman of the Colorado City Historical Museum Board, says work is progressing on the cataloging of materials in the present location of the museum, in preparation for the packing and moving of those materials to the museum's new location.

Elizabeth Connell and Louise Decovic are working on the project now, but Elliott said that volunteers would be needed after the first of the year, when work is expected to escalate.

Among the items which are being cataloged are printed materials, including notebooks, scrapbooks, and journals. Some of the printed materials will have to be copied, according to Elliott, and volunteers will be needed for that undertaking as well.

The museum also has an extensive collection of Indian artifacts, historical artifacts, and wearing apparel from long ago. There are antique tools, antique branding irons, saddles, rifles, even an old horse-drawn hearse, and there are some paintings as well.

If you would like to volunteer for one of the myriad jobs necessary to move the contents of the museum from its present location at 183 West 3rd Street, across from City Hall, to its new location at the recently-donated historic Kiker-Seale Funeral Home building, Elliott asks that you call him at 728-2410, or the museum at 728-8285. Volunteers may also come in person to the present location of the museum as soon after the first of the year as possible. Any help will be appreciated.

Food and toy drives are successful

The Colorado City Optimists Club toy drive collected, this year, over $300 in cash donations, along with contributions of several toys from Corky's TruValue Hardware and Perkins Apothecary and Mercantile.

The food drive also was very successful, and the combination of food collected by area Boy Scouts, donations from private sources, as well as donations from some local merchants, provided enough food to furnish Christmas baskets and leave a large surplus besides.

The Colorado City Community Mission and the local chapter of Helping Hand worked together to aid needy local and transient persons this Christmas. The organizations received and distributed donations of food, furniture, and clothing.

All the charitable organizations would like to thank the merchants, churches, and the individuals who responded to the calls for donations this holiday season.

The staff of the mission would like to remind everyone that its doors are open through the winter. Money is needed for utilities, and the mission also is in need of more adequate building facilities to house its inventory and the transient needy persons, who are allowed to stay one night at a time.

The Salvation Army also is involved with the business of the mission, and any donations to that organization will be greatly appreciated.

Rattlesnakes - a way of life with the Bennetts

Julia Bennett lifts a rattlesnake out of its cage to show it off to our photographer, while husband Don watches to see that she does it right. (Of course, she always does it right.)

If you have ever wakened in the night in a cold sweat from a nightmare about snakes, you won't want to visit the Bennetts who live just outside Loraine.

Don and Julia Bennett surround themselves with rattlesnakes, on purpose, on a regular basis, and they don't act a bit squeamish about it either. In fact, they really seem to enjoy the lifestyle they have chosen...a lifestyle which depends on rattlesnakes.

Don Bennett learned as a child in Oklahoma all about the techniques of hunting rattlesnakes. He learned how to milk their venom, learned about their habits and their mostly nocturnal way of life.

He learned that they can't survive temperatures below thirty-two degrees, or direct sunlight for a long period of time on a very hot day. He learned that they eat birds and small, warm-blooded rodents and animals which they can swallow whole, and that smaller rattlesnakes will eat bugs, and some, with the exception of the western diamondback rattler, will even eat lizards.

Growing up in a medically oriented family, with a father and brother who were doctors and a mother who was a nurse, it was easy for him to learn all about the scientific aspects of rattlesnakes...the medical uses of their blood and venom, and the technology required to prepare them for scientific research.

It was really quite natural that Bennett, even though he was offered the chance to go to medical school, would choose instead to live the kind of free-spirited life he lives today.

Bennett collects rattlesnake venom and rattlesnake blood which is used in medical research at the Veterans' Administration Research Laboratory in Salt Lake City, Utah.

After putting the venom and the blood serum through a lyophilizing, or freeze-drying process, Bennett explains, he ships it to the laboratory in plastic pouches. The process eliminates the need for special handling, or even for refrigeration.

Bennett admits to having been bitten about five times during the approximately twenty years he has been milking venom from snakes. Milking some 5,000 snakes a year, he explained, it will happen from time to time, no matter how much care one takes.

When he does get bitten, he said, he always goes at once to the doctor. In spite of legends to the contrary, he explained, being bitten does not cause a person to develop an immunity to snake venom.

In fact, according to Bennett, there is only one living creature, other than the snake itself, which is known to be immune to rattlesnake venom, and that is the possum. He said research is being conducted at the University of South Texas System to determine the reason for that immunity.

Snakebite antidote is made from the blood of horses which have developed antibodies against the venom, Bennett explained, but the venom is delivered into the horses'

Lucy Chandler Brandt

Well, I suppose it's official now. From now on, I am the editor of the Colorado City Record. From now on, I can no longer ask where the buck stops. It stops with me.

Ray Mayo is taking a much-deserved vacation before beginning his tenure as county judge, and I can only hope that I will be able to do half as well as he has done as editor over the last years. At least at first. Gradually, of course, I hope to do nine-tenths as well as he has done. Who knows how long that may take?

In the meantime, I hope you will all be patient with me, and that you will all bring me your news stories, your opinions, your suggestions for change, your ideas for stories, and anything else on your minds. You and I are all in this together, after all.

I have already received a few suggestions, for instance a request for a gossip column. I'm thinking about it.

My own first priority is to try to keep things running as smoothly as they have been, until I feel comfortable enough to make a change or two.

My second priority is to get another picture taken for the top of this column. I'm sure nothing else needs to be said on that subject.

I would like to reiterate, also, that I intend to remain completely neutral on any controversial issues facing our community.

Now for a moment of sentimentality: I really hope I can do Colorado City proud as the editor of its newspaper. I was reading the Record when I was a little girl, and I still haven't gotten over how exciting it is to be the editor.

And as for how I feel about Colorado City, Mitchell County, and the people here...well, my son asked me that the other night on the telephone, and this is what I said.

"Remember when you were in Sunday school, and the teacher told you what heaven will be like? She said that you will meet all of these wonderful people, some of whom you knew long ago, some of whom know who you are, and all of whom, even the strangers, will feel like friends, and will welcome you home, and make you know that they really mean it. That's how it feels to be back here."

Well, now you all know a little about me, and, as time goes by, I hope to learn a lot about you.

And I hope to be here a long, long time.

Candidates

would like to eliminate the divisions among its citizens.

His first action if elected, Contreras said, would be to study the budget and the needs of the city more closely. He would get input from the citizens, he said, to determine what they feel their needs to be.

Sam Crenshaw, a candidate for District 1 city councilman, when asked why he was running, said he wants to represent his district as a part of the entire city.

His qualifications, he said, are that he works well with people, and would like to see the city grow.

The main change Crenshaw would like to see, he said, would be the encouragement, by all local government entities, of small businesses to locate in this area.

Taking all things into consideration, Crenshaw said, he feels the city is being run very well, but he does feel that more small businesses, like bakeries, for instance, would benefit the city, and should be encouraged to locate here.

Crenshaw's first action if elected, he said, would be to become acquainted with all the needs of those he represents.

As a representative of a district, he said, he would like to do what is best for the city first, and for the district second.

Crenshaw stated that he does not want to see the city divided by special interest groups.

He said he would want to help the city continue to improve, and would be interested in helping with projects which are already in progress or under consideration, for example plans to construct a boat ramp and plans for the renovation of the Baker Hotel.

Crenshaw said he is aware that the city is strapped for money, but that he would not want to see taxes raised. Instead, he said, he would like to try to do a better job with the money already available.

One of the things Crenshaw says he definitely would like to do would be to vote raises for all city employees.

Brenda Hammond is a candidate for the vacancy in District 6. When asked why she was running she said that she has a great love for the city, that she feels as if the city is in her blood.

She said there are many unfinished projects, ongoing grants, and interesting challenges still facing the city, and that she wants to be a part of it all.

When asked what she would like to see changed, Hammond said that she is interested in progress, and sees change as a natural process of life. She would like to see city facilities upgraded and would like to see city employees provided with the tools and opportunities they need to do a successful job.

Hammond said her qualifications include a dedicated interest, as well as thirteen years of experience with the city. Her experience with the city, she said, included periods of time spent as city secretary, as city manager, and as a member of the city council.

Her first action if elected, Hammond said, would be to become very active in all city activities. She would like to try to bring about more dedication and unity.

Apolinar Molina is a candidate for District 1. When asked his reasons for running he said he wants to try his best to work for the people and the city. He has lived in Colorado City all of his life, he said, and wants to have a chance to contribute.

His qualifications, Molina said, coupled with his sincere desire to do his best, include his willingness to give all the time needed to learn about his job and how to do it well.

When asked what he would like to see changed, Molina said he would like to see more progress. He would like to help turn the population decline around and see the city begin to grow again, he said, and would like to do whatever was necessary to achieve those goals both at the city level and the county level as well.

Molina also said he would like to see an end to the unemployment problem.

His first action if elected, Molina said, would be to listen to the people in order to determine what they wish to see done, and then to get in and see for himself how to achieve those wishes.

Daryl Pike, shown holding a snake, visits frequently from Wyoming, and says he comes to escape the cold. It would seem, however, that he also comes to play with West Texas rattlesnakes.

Coleen Palmer is a candidate for District 6. She is running, she said, because, when she drives down the main street of Colorado City, she can see that something needs to be done.

Having lived here since 1945, she said, she remembers better times. She is an optimist, she said, and would like to see those better times come again. She would like to help.

When asked what she would like to see changed, Ms Hammond said she feels Colorado City has three main needs: better shopping, better recreation, and better living conditions. She said she would like to zero in on one of these needs and work toward achieving it.

Ms Palmer said her qualifications include the fact that she started, ran, and owned a successful business for ten years in downtown Colorado City. She said she attends city council meetings on a regular basis, and is familiar with the problems the city faces.

In addition, she said, she has access to expert advisors and information which would aid her in her position as council member.

Ms Palmer said that her first action if elected would be to clarify the budget. She wants to make it more accessible to the layman, to the public.

Allen Pharis, a candidate for District 6, said he is running because he has been a citizen of Colorado City for eleven years and just wants to get involved with the work of the city government.

He said that he hopes, with the Saddlery on Walnut Street. This break was within the building, and therefore the merchant's responsibility to repair, so the crew turned off the water before heading to another break at 11 a.m., this time in the 1400 block of Waco Street.

At 12:30 p.m. the crew returned to Houston and College streets, where the line they had repaired on Sunday had broken again...about two feet from the first break.

Huff advises property owners and renters to insulate their pipes well in order to prevent breaks due to freezing weather. Even with insulated pipes, however, he says, extremely cold temperatures can still cause water to freeze and burst pipes. He advises in such cases that water be left running slowly.

Huff also noted that, as city water lines are replaced, there tend to be fewer problems with bursting pipes. He said that the pipes along Oak Street, for example, were replaced last year, and have presented no problem so far this year.

blood in very small doses and over a long period of time in order to accomplish that development.

The scars still remain from some of Bennett's old snake bites, bites which he said had caused swelling, pain and sickness at the time they occurred. Ironically the medicines he received to treat the bites, bites received from snakes he was milking, might have come from snakes he had milked at an earlier time.

Medicine and research are not the only uses to which Bennett and his wife Julia put the rattlesnakes they catch.

The live rattlesnakes they have just caught are not brought inside the Bennett house, but are restricted to the outbuildings and storm cellar. Visit inside the house, however, and you will find another Bennett rattlesnake industry.

Here rattlesnake skins become belts, billfolds, clutch purses, lighter covers, earrings, hat bands, and even guitar straps. In fact, the Bennetts say, country singer George Strait has a rattlesnake skin guitar strap which they made.

Julia Bennett is a taxidermist, and creates mounted snakes by stretching their skin over forms she carves from high-density styrofoam blocks. The mounted snakes, she says, along with rattle earrings, are the best selling items of all.

The Bennetts make snake head key rings and belt buckles, snake head paperweights in domes, and snakes or snake heads suspended in clear, poured epoxy resin to form pen sets and even toilet seats.

Other popular items are the legendary fur-covered snow snake, and the snow snake head. The latter comes complete with drops of venom on the tips of its fangs and rattles suspended on either side. The snow snake head, the Bennetts say, is perfect for hanging from a rear-view mirror, and according to literature which appears on its sales tag, "apparently wards off evil spirits, highway patrol, and other encountered menaces of the highway."

Rattlesnake meat, of course, is considered a delicacy by many, and the Bennetts ship refrigerated truckloads of it to wholesale meat suppliers located in Illinois.

Most of the novelty items they make are also sold wholesale, to specialty stores in the United States and Europe, but the Bennetts set up booths to sell their wares to the public at such events as the Sweetwater Rattlesnake Roundup the second weekend in March, the Houston Fat Stock Show in February and early March, and the Cheyenne, Wyoming Frontier Days which usually occur around the last ten days of July.

Daryl Pike, a friend of the Bennetts from Wyoming, visits with them frequently to escape the cold Wyoming weather. Pike is involved in the rattlesnake business, too, and also in another shared enterprise...a big-game hunting camp in Wyoming.

During the Wyoming hunting season from September through November, the three friends can often be found at their camp, where they hunt snakes as well as big game.

November through April is the best time to hunt rattlesnakes here in West Texas, they say. On any warm day during those months, the snakes will probably be outside sunning themselves near their den entrance, which will face south or southwest.

Julia Bennett offers a recipe for rattlesnake meat for those of you who may be getting a little tired of your leftover turkey by this time:

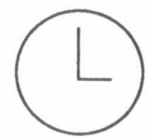

Skin the snake, she says, and clean out the entrails. Then, wash the snake and cut it into three-inch sections.

Marinate the meat overnight in a mixture of milk and jalapeno juice to taste.

Roll the marinated meat in a mixture of half cornmeal and half flour, seasoned to taste, and then deep fry.

When the meat is cooked, it will float to the top.

Serve with the same sorts of side dishes you would serve with fried chicken or shrimp...and enjoy!

Another great idea for leftover turkey

Turkey "Tet"

4 cups chopped turkey or chicken
1/2 pound short cut spaghetti, cooked
2 (4 ounces each) cans mushrooms and liquid
2 sticks butter or margarine, divided
1 bell pepper, chopped
1 onion, chopped
1 quart whole milk (do not substitute)
3/4 cup flour
1/2 pound grated Deluxe Kraft American cheese (do not substitute)
1/2 pound grated Old English cheese (do not substitute)
1 (2 or 4 ounce) jar chopped pimientos, as desired

Place turkey and cooked spaghetti in a very large mixing bowl. Add mushrooms and liquid. In a dutch oven melt 4 tablespoons of butter, saute the bell pepper and onion. Add to turkey. Stir gently. Melt the remaining butter and make a white sauce with the flour and milk. After sauce thickens, add grated cheeses and continue stirring until melted. Pour over turkey mixture. Add pimientos. Freezes well. Bake in a 3 quart casserole or 8x11 baking dish. Cover with bread crumbs if desired. Bake 325 for 45 minutes. If frozen, bake 1 1/2 hours. Stir often. Serves 8.

Loraine Personals

by Lois Phillips

Today is Christmas Eve but by the time you read this it will be almost New Years. I hope you have had a very good week and all is well at your house with you and yours. If you have loved ones in the service of our country, we send our love and support to them.

To those who have tied your yellow ribbons, we thank you for showing your support of our troops. If you have not put out your ribbons, please try to do so before January 15, as that is D-Day or the time the President has set as a deadline for war or peace. We pray that peace is the answer, but we still need the ribbons to show our support.

Our hearts go out to the family of Stetson Lewis whom we lost last week. He was a very nice person; we watched him grow up. We saw lots of him during his school days and we all loved him. May God bless each member of his family and comfort you with his love.

I found out that Edgar Haltom is the guy who keeps gravel around the driveway at the fire hall. Thanks for that good deed. It could help getting the trucks out a little faster if it is icy.

We saw George and Brenda Martin with their son, son-in-law, daughter and grandchild at the Cree Mee on Saturday night. They looked like they were ready for the holidays.

Saw Maz Webb's mother also. She really looks good after her illness. She lives in Sweetwater and is spending Christmas with the Webbs.

Mr. and Mrs. Larry Gross, Sylvia and Brent spent Christmas in Loraine with his sister and family, Sandy, Donnie, and Chris Phillips. Reba Gross of Lake Buchanan also was here visiting with the daughter and family.

The Maylon Beatty's of Abilene spent Saturday and Sunday with

Wheeler tells Christmas story

The North Loraine Extension Homemakers Club held their Christmas meeting on December 18, at the Seniors Citizen Center in Loraine, with pot luck supper.

Effie Wheeler read an interesting Christmas Story telling what their parents, Elba Mae Evans and Earl and Lois Phillips. They will be moving their daughter, Pattie, to Amarillo this week where she plans to teach in the Amarillo High School as a Math teacher. Good luck, kid.

The Kenneth Butlers had their Christmas dinner on Saturday night. Their guests were the Max Ervins of Houston. They are Max, Sue, and Scott. Scott is a student at Baylor University in Waco.

Also attending the dinner were Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Irvin of Eunice, New Mexico and the daughter and her children. Mrs Van Devender is also of Eunice.

Wanda Spence and her son, Randy, were in Loraine visiting with her brother, Dr. Doug and Faye Smith. They also visited an aunt Gladys Hart and an aunt and uncle Kenneth and Jaunice Butler.

I left out Danny and his family who were also at Jaunice's Christmas dinner. Sorry about that.

Clovis and Jean Hale, their sons and their girlfriends of Austin spent Christmas with Jean's mother, Irene Kidd. Also, Bill and Barbara Long of Georgia came to visit Irene and Barbara's sister Jean and the rest of the family.

They will also visit Bill's mother, Annie Bell Jones. rumor has it that the bill Long's will attend the U.T. football game as guests of Coach Clovis Hale New Year's day in the Cotton Bowl in Dallas.

The children of Steve and Marsha Key are visiting with the T.J. Green's and Brian and Shawn are helping out at the store. Dorothy had a birthday party for one of the granddaughters on Saturday.

Our neighborhood woke up one morning last week to find out someone had decorated Mr. Boyds trees and shrubs for Christmas. At least I guess it was for Christmas happened the night of the Birth of Christ Jesus that has never been told.

Twenty-five members and guests enjoyed a delicious meal and gift exchange.

The evening closed with games and visiting. Those present were: Veida and Ralph Gage, Blondie and "Ham" Hamiton, Millie Rose, Chuck Wheeler, Amarillo, Effie Wheeler, Jimmie Jacks, Bobbie and Hanza Graham, Hubert and Nina Meadows, Al and Elaine McMichael, Bobby and Darlene Hamick, Pauline Smiley, Eva Wells, E.J. and Billie Schroeder, Margaret Brane, Bertha Faye Snyder, Bessie Ann Vaughn, Pat and Ralph Carter.

except it was all done in white ribbon that looked like bathroom tissue. Mr. Kent Long is a teacher in our school. I am sure Kent would have left it up during Christmas but it was very windy and it was blowing in the neighbor's yard.

Heard L.R. Webb talking about how cold it was breaking ice so his cows would have water to drink. When it is as cold as it was the weekend, it is a job that has to be done over and over.

Did you remember to say "Thank you, Lord," for a nice warm house and a good warm bed to sleep in? When we think of our troops on all fronts, I can only hope they are being well taken care of. One mother told me she thought her son would be going to sand deserts very soon. I will tell you who it is if it happens.

Herbert and Christmas Mearse had company over the weekend. Mike and his family and Jan and her family were here. I am sure it was a fun time for them. They were all in church Sunday.

The Herb Roevers and their family were here over the weekend with her mother and family, Shirley Clifton. They attended services at the first Baptist Church.

The Glenn Sanders visited in Abilene over the weekend.

Doug and Clara Foshee are visiting in the state of Colorado with their daughter and family.

I will tell you next week all about who had company over Christmas and who went where. Since we had to get the paper out early, I could not get everyone's news.

I understand that quite a few people from Loraine will attend the U.T. - Miami game in the Cotton Bowl in Dallas on New Year's day. I'll try to tell you who all was lucky enough to get to go.

Roy and Mary Helen Price had their three sons and their families on Saturday night for their Christmas dinner. There were Jerry and Jerry Lynn, Steve and Debbie and children, and Roger and his lovely wife. Two of the granddaughters spent two nights with the Price's. They were Jerry Lee and Christi Graham both of Colorado City.

Highway death toll estimated at 61

Austin...The Texas Department of Public Safety estimates that as many as sixty-one persons could die in traffic accidents on the state's streets and highways during the Christmas and New Year's holiday periods.

"We Texans like to brag we're biggest and best in most categories, but one list we don't want to be high up on is the number of holiday traffic deaths," said DPS Director Colonel Joe E. Milner. "Last year, only California had more motor vehicle fatalities than Texas during the holidays."

In 1989, thirty-six persons died of injuries suffered in traffic accidents in Texas during the seventy-eight hour Christmas holiday period, with another thirty-two persons dying from accidents over the New Year's holiday, which also was seventy-eight hours in length. This year, the DPS Statistical Services Section estimates thirty-three persons will die in traffic during the seventy-eight hour Christmas period, with the possibility that another twenty-eight persons will be killed in New Year's accidents.

"It is tragic that so many motorists may not survive these two holidays," Colonel Milner said. "The way to prevent this terrible death toll is simple: Please don't drink and drive, don't exceed the speed limit and don't push your personal limit by driving when you are tired. Aside from these 'don'ts' is one major 'do.' Use your seat belt."

The Christmas counting period runs from 6 p.m. Saturday, December 22nd until midnight Tuesday, December 25th. The New Year's period will begin at 6 p.m. Saturday, December 29th, and will conclude at midnight Tuesday, January 1st.

"I hope all of us can work together over the holidays to keep the number of traffic deaths way down this year," Milner said.

The National Safety Council has estimated from 380 to 480 persons will be killed in holiday traffic accidents across the nation this year, with another 14,000 to 17,000 suffering disabling injuries.

County Agriculture

NOTES

by BRYAN LIMMER
County Extension Agent-Ag

Although many people know the size of Texas, not many know that Texans are blessed with an abundant supply of inland water. In fact, the 4,790 square miles of rivers, lakes and creeks found within its borders rank Texas second only to Minnesota. However, because of the importance of water to the state, water quality and conservation are growing concerns to all Texans.

In Mitchell County, our water situation is good. We have about six square miles of lake water and several rivers and creeks running through our county. Water, its quality and conservation are vitally important to the future of all Mitchell County citizens.

One reason for this concern is that the ground water and surface water used for irrigation and municipal water supplies is being depleted in many areas, and allocation problems have arisen. Management of private water through locally-controlled districts is a potential solution. At this time, Mitchell County does not have a water district, although the prospect of one is looking good with enough community support and action.

A second reason for concern relates to agricultural lands where most streams flow and aquifer recharge originates. As regulated municipal and industrial point source discharges are cleaned up around our state, nonpoint sources of water pollution upstream (including run-off from agricultural lands, urban areas and discharges from improperly constructed septic tanks) will become the focus of water quality concerns.

Most of our farmers, ranchers, homeowners and others in Mitchell County will voluntarily adopt water quality management and water conservation practices when they are provided with education, demonstrations, technical assistance and appropriate financial incentives. All our citizens must be better informed on how to maintain and improve water quality and stretch available supplies. Specific educational programs are needed to improve the knowledge of county leadership, teach homeowners/consumers how to conserve water and help our agricultural producers determine proper water use concerning crop irrigation, livestock and chemical use.

In Mitchell County we plan to conduct over the next four years programs to educate citizens on the need to protect the water supply. Information will be provided on how to form and finance an underground water conservation district and what the district's duties are.

In Mitchell County, we can ensure adequate supplies of clean water by: (1) protecting surface and ground water quality from urban, industrial and agricultural pollution; (2) increasing water use efficiency in agriculture, municipalities and industry; and (3) developing alternate water supplies, including treated waste water.

Sterling participates in meeting

Lucille Sterling

Lucille Sterling, a Colorado City cattlegrower, recently participated in the Consumer Information Committee meeting of the Beef Promotion and Research Board. The committee met in Raleigh, N.C. Dec. 9, as part of the Beef Board's winter meeting.

Sterling serves on the 11-member Beef Board and on the board's Consumer Information Committee which oversees consumer information programs conducted with beef checkoff dollars. Consumer information programs are managed by national industry organizations and state beef councils and involve distributing nutritional data and other information to assist consumers in making decisions about purchasing, preparing and using beef and beef products.

In Raleigh, the 12-member committee reviewed 1990 program evaluation reports and began developing plans for 1992 consumer information programs.

During the Beef Program meeting, Dr. Ronald Ward, University of Florida, presented updated research information on the economic impact of beef checkoff programs. Ward said his research found the checkoff has had a significant impact on demand for beef and produced a positive effect on beef prices including live cattle, boxed beef and retail beef. The average rate of return, Ward said, is $5 for every $1 invested in the checkoff.

Beef Board members are appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture and represent producers from all regions of the country. The board administers the national beef checkoff program which is designed to improve profitability by strengthening beef's position in the marketplace and expanding consumer demand for beef. The beef checkoff funds programs in promotion, foreign marketing, consumer information, industry information and research.

Wolves show team spirit in Merkel game

In a previous meeting between the Colorado City Wolves and the Merkel Badgers, the Badgers ran away with the basketball game and won by 20 points, but on December 18, the Wolf Pack displayed courage and pride in a losing effort of 44-43.

During the first period of play, the Badgers took the early lead but were always within striking distance as Merkel led 13-11 going in period number two.

With 5:38 left in the first half, Merkel increased the lead to seven points and ended the quarter with a 27-20 lead.

Returning from the half, the mighty Pack outscored the Badgers 13-7 and took the lead for a brief moment as Merkel regained the lead on a buzzer shot, 34-33.

With a period remaining, Colorado City was biting at the heels of the Badgers but could never quite make up the difference. With over 3:51 to go in the contest, Merkel pulled the ball out and began wasting time off the clock. The Wolves picked up the defensive pressure but could not come up with the ball, so the Pack began using their own strategy by committing fouls but to no avail.

With :05 seconds remaining, Merkel led by 4 and as the last buzzer sounded, Robbie Smith let go a 25 foot jump shot which fell, ending the game, 44-43.

Contributors in the outstanding effort were R. Smith 18, Brandon Raschke 10, Kevin Green 9, Scott Galey 4, Jeremy Strain, George Ramsey, and Jason Lawson 2, and Mark Smith 1.

In the Junior Varsity game, the Wolves were also trampled by the Badgers in game one, but this contest belonged all to the Pack in a 48-35 convincing win.

Scoring for the Wolves were Wendell Iglehart 18, Jeremy Lelek 7, James Franco and David Castillo 6, Billy Robinette 5, Justin Sullivan 4, Bryan Ritchey and Ryan Galey 2.
