NATO summit calls for 'new order'

By TERENCE HUNT
AP White House Correspondent

BRUSSELS, Belgium — President Bush and the Western allies hammered out a last-minute compromise over nuclear missiles today and ended unity-minded NATO summit talks pledging "to shape a new political order of peace in Europe."

Bush urged Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev to accept his challenge to intensify negotiations on reducing conventional NATO and Warsaw Pact forces. "I have reason to believe that he knows we've been serious," Bush said.

The president said he hoped Gorbachev will be persuaded by the "unity of the alliance" behind Bush's proposals for lowering troop levels to 275,000 on each side and negotiating new ceilings for tanks, aircraft and other conventional weapons on the European continent.

Bush said his goal was to "finally free Europe from the constant threat of a surprise attack and the shadow of Soviet military power."

■ Mikhail Gorbachev comments on results; Related stories — 3A

And as an inducement to Gorbachev, he said his arms proposals "should save him a lot of money in the long run."

"I think it's a good thing, it's good for NATO, I happen to think it's good for the entire free world," Bush told a televised post-summit news conference before he flew to Bonn for further talks with West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl.

Bush said Secretary of State James A. Baker III had told Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze that the United States was interested in a superpower summit before the end of the year.

"If there was something constructive to come out of such a meeting, I would certainly be prepared to meet and I believe that Secretary Baker has conveyed that to Minister Shevardnadze," Bush said.

Baker said in an interview on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America" show that plans for a Bush-Gorbachev summit will depend on the Soviet leadership's reaction to the president's latest proposals.

The 16 summit leaders disposed of a potentially disruptive issue by embracing a compromise formula for U.S.-Soviet negotiations on reducing — but not eliminating — short-range nuclear weapons. Bush told reporters he would never accept a nuclear-free Europe.

Then, in a final communique ending their two-day talks, the allied leaders acknowledged Bush's goal of completing East-West negotiations on reducing conventional arms within the next year.

Chinese students stage rally

BEIJING (AP) — About 1,000 students and workers rallied outside police headquarters today to protest the reported arrests of leaders of a new independent labor union aligned with the student pro-democracy movement.

A Chinese source said an important Communist Party Central Committee meeting scheduled this week was postponed because conservatives did not have enough backing for their purge of moderate leaders.

Those believed to be targets of the conservatives include the reform-minded Communist Party leader, Zhao Ziyang, who reportedly was stripped of power last week by Premier Li Peng.

The "Goddess of Democracy" immediately drew an angry response from Beijing authorities, who said the students' action was illegal. They ordered the statue removed immediately.

"This is China, not the United States," the nationwide television news quoted one unidentified person as saying. "Even in the United States, putting up a statue in front of the Congress building as one pleases is not permitted."

Conservatives who adopted a hard-line stance toward the pro-democracy protests have started arresting non-student participants.

Three union officials and 11 leaders of a motorcycle gang, which roared through the city in support of the students, were reported arrested.

Zhao Pinglu, head of the Beijing Independent Workers' Union, said one of its leaders, Shen Yinhan, a 27-year-old official with the national airlines, was grabbed by police Monday in front of the Beijing Hotel.

Two other union leaders, both employees of the Ministry of Railways, also were arrested, Zhao said.

Li Zhihuang, wife of railway employee Qian Yiming, said her husband's work unit claimed he was arrested by police "to find out about the situation at Tiananmen Square," where students are continuing an 18-day sit-in for a freer society and an end to official corruption.

A third man, Bai Dongping, 26, was supposed to take his wife to the hospital on Monday but did not show up, said his father. Bai Baofa.

"He would never just disappear," his father said. "The government's actions are vicious."

About 1,000 students and workers protested outside police headquarters near the square. One banner read, "Do not secretly arrest people. Let the people know."

Nation's war dead honored

By JULIE HILLRICHS

Veterans of World War II, Korea and Vietnam reunited, flags adorned city cemeteries and a bugler played "Taps" as Midlanders paused Monday to honor the nation's war dead on Memorial Day.

Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas paid tribute to the men and women who died fighting for their country while attending an American Legion-sponsored Memorial Day service at Resthaven Memorial Park.

"This is something we only do once a year, but it's certainly fitting that we do it on this occasion," Thomas observed as he spoke to a crowd of about 100 Midlanders who gathered to lay wreaths at the base of a cross that was flanked by flags of the U.S. and American Legion, Woods Lynch Post 19.

"We've come to honor the men and women who have given the supreme sacrifice to uphold freedom; that it might continue and that we might all continue to benefit from it."

"This is a free country, but freedom is not free. We only have to think back to the start of this country when the Pilgrims came here for religious freedom, but they were followed by the British government who wanted to take away that freedom.

"Such famous leaders as Patrick Henry, who spoke up and said, 'Give me liberty or give me death,' inspired our forefathers to fight for their freedom," Thomas said.

MISD unhappy with school financing plan

By RICK BROWN and BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writers

Disappointed by Midland schools' slice of the public school financing plan passed by the Legislature Monday, Superintendent Joe Baressi said this morning that the district may need a substantial tax hike to fund state-mandated changes for next year.

A $450 million public school financing plan will go to the governor's desk after House passage late Monday night, when cheers erupted for the last-minute vote.

Baressi, however, said the plan means a sharp stick in Midland Independent School District's 1989-90 school year budget eye, which must focus on paying $1.8 million for 60 teachers needed to comply with the state requirement of a 22-to-1 pupil-teacher ratio in third and fourth grades.

"It's worse than we thought," Baressi said of the plan, which gives MISD an additional $4.399 million for the next two years. "I haven't heard anything that would relieve us from any requirement.

"I think it will put all districts in a bind as far as meeting the state mandates."

With dropping tax values and higher enrollment predicted for next year, the district could recommend raising taxes by as much as 8 percent, the highest a taxing entity can go without risking a rollback election, Baressi said.

The final version of the bill also included a $1,800 yearly pay raise for teachers that would take effect with the 1989-90 school year. The move would cost $30 million each of the next two years.

Baressi said the mandatory pay raise makes next year's budget picture even cloudier.

Superintendent Hugh Hayes of Ector County Independent School District said taxpayers in that district also could see an 8 percent hike for next year. ECISD is faced with spending an estimated $2 million to hire 75 teachers to meet required student-teacher ratio.

"I'm thankful for any new money that we can get," Hayes said. "It's better than what we were projected to get."

Although MISD officials weren't thrilled with the plan, legislators were pleased with getting the funding plan past the House.

"Every once in a while, I get a pleasant surprise out of the House," said Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur and chairman of the joint conference committee that struck a compromise on the measure.

Parker, who was present on the floor of the house, had likened the measure to "a large dose of caster oil" when it emerged from committee earlier Monday, the regular session's last day.

Court bars veterans' exes from sharing disability pay

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today barred the divorced spouses of military veterans from sharing in retirement pay the veterans have converted into disability benefits.

In a 7-2 ruling in a California case, the justices said a 1982 federal law does not permit state court divorce decrees to divide the benefits.

The case stems from the 1979 divorce of Gerald and Gaye Mansell after 25 years of a marriage that produced six children.

Mansell, a retired Air Force major, receives $1,200 a month in retirement pay and $482 in disability benefits. The disability benefits were converted from retirement pay by Mansell because, unlike the pension, they are exempt from taxes.

The divorce settlement, filed in Merced County, Calif., awarded Gaye Mansell half the retirement pay in an uncontested split of that money and, originally, half the disability benefits.

But Mansell went to court in 1983 to modify the divorce decree and exclude the disability pay.

Craddick seeks 'united front' on issue of UTPB expansion

By RICK BROWN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Anticipating an impending governor's veto of legislation that would grant the University of Texas of the Permian Basin four-year status, Rep. Tom Craddick called for a united front on the issue.

The UT-Permican Basin measure was put together "behind Midland's back," said Craddick, R-Midland, when Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, attached an amendment to a bill affecting the UT-Dallas during the last two weeks of the session.

"I think if we're going to do something of this nature, then the cities ought to be united and work together (to) protect the junior colleges," said Craddick, R-Midland.

Craddick felt the proposal should go through the Legislature's regular committee hearing process as a separate bill. But Rep. Gary Watkins, D-Odessa, said the proposal had undergone a committee hearing.

None was held in the Senate, but the House Higher Education Committee, of which Watkins is a member, had quickly stripped the UTPB provision off the bill.

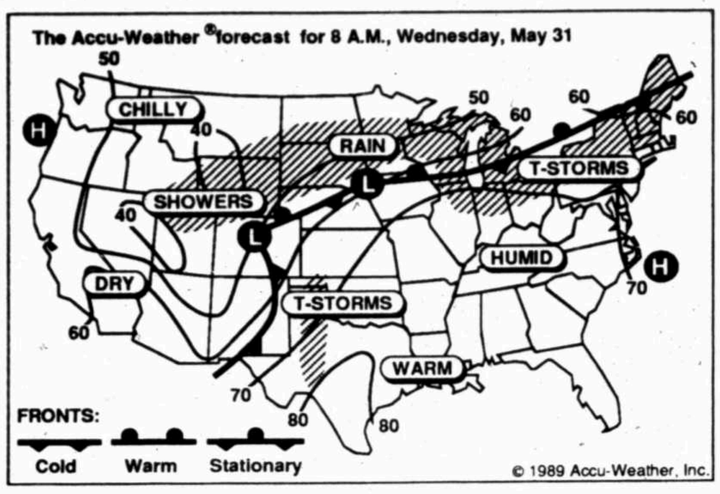
WEATHER SUMMARY



Partly cloudy skies expected

Partly cloudy skies and a 20 percent chance of thundershowers are in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the upper 60s and winds will be from the south at 10-20 mph.

Wednesday will be partly cloudy with less than a 20 percent chance of late afternoon thundershowers. Highs will reach only into the lower 90s and gusty winds will continue from the south at 10-20 mph.

Monday's high of 96 was eight degrees cooler than the record high temperature of 104 set for that date in 1938. The overnight low of 74 was 28 degrees warmer than the record low of 46 set for this date 1937.

STATE

Isolated thunderstorms are possible tonight across West Texas, but most of the state is expected to have continued clear skies and warm to hot temperatures.

Lows tonight will be in 60s in the Panhandle and in the 70s over the rest of the state.

Highs Wednesday will be in the 90s statewide.

An area of low pressure extended early today from southeastern Colorado to the Big Bend area of Southwest Texas. The low pressure system is bringing with it southerly winds that in turn are bringing warm, humid air from the Gulf of Mexico to most of the state.

Early morning temperatures are mostly in the 70s, ranging from the upper 60s in the Panhandle to the lower 80s along the coast. Extremes ranged from 68 at Dalhart to 80 at Corpus Christi.

Other early morning temperatures around the state included 70 at Amarillo, 73 at Wichita Falls, 74 at Fort Worth, 76 at Waco, 73 at Austin, 75 at San Antonio, 77 at Houston, 76 at Brownsville, 74 at San Angelo, 72 at Lubbock, 78 at Midland and 71 at El Paso.

NATION

Thunderstorms drenched parts of Michigan with more than an inch of rain in an hour today, while record cold gripped Montana.

About 1½ inches of rain fell at Grand Rapids in 50 minutes, and lightning set a house and barn on fire in Howard City.

Scattered showers and thunderstorms dampened portions of Florida, and showers spattered western Wyoming and northeast California.

It was a chilly Memorial Day for much of Montana. Monday's high at Kalispell was 42 degrees; the lowest previous high recorded on that date was 50 degrees in 1898.

Sheriff's among holiday weekend traffic deaths

Associated Press

A Texas sheriff was among at least 29 people who died in traffic accidents on Texas roads and highways during the long Memorial Day holiday weekend, officials say.

At least three people were killed Monday. James David Hatfield, 21, of Benton, was killed when his motorcycle collided with a pickup in Bell County.

Irene Esparza, 20, of Dallas, died and five of her relatives were injured in a one-car accident on Interstate 35 near Buda in Central Texas.

Officers said a car driven by her husband hit the supporting wall of an overpass after he fell asleep, DPS trooper Dana Moore.

Martin Esparza, 35, the driver, and four other people were injured and taken to Brackenridge Hospital in Austin, Moore said.

Kenneth Ray James, 21, of Houston, died Monday when his sports car went out of control on a Houston street and flipped several times, police said.

Young County Sheriff Ed Shields, 50, who had held the post since 1985, was trapped in his car about two hours Sunday night after the accident on U.S. Highway 380 10 miles west of Graham.

His car, a personal vehicle he used in his job as sheriff, collided with a pickup carrying two men and an 11-year-old boy at about 10:30 p.m., Department of Public Safety officials said.

The three in the truck suffered injuries, and the driver was taken by medical helicopter to Harris Hospital-Fort Worth.

The unofficial fatality count by The Associated Press began at 6 p.m. Friday and ran through midnight Monday.

Also Sunday, Aaron de la Garza, 16, of Mission died in a one vehicle accident that occurred at 4:30 a.m. near Mission. The driver, Robert Garza, 20, also of Mission, was injured. Garza was driving southbound on Bryan Road when he fell asleep and his car veered off the road, hitting an embankment, the DPS said.

The car became airborne and finally landed upside down in an excavation pit.

Two people were killed Sunday night in a two-vehicle accident in Gaines County.

The Texas Department of Public Safety said Jesus Natividad Alvidez, 66, of Seminole was westbound on a county paved road when he struck a steer. The vehicle went out of control and hit an oncoming car driven by Vaughn Bearden, 25, of Hobbs, N.M.

Teresa Annette Dowerman, 20, of Iraan died Sunday afternoon when the car driven by her husband veered off Texas Highway 36, about two miles east of Comanche, said the DPS.

Earlier Sunday, 79-year-old Allie Mae Talbott of Olney was killed when her car collided with a tractor-trailer rig hauling wheat. The accident occurred in the Olney city limits about 3 p.m. at the intersection of Texas Highway 79 and Mockingbird Lane.

SCHOOLS

Many aspects had failed to please all ten conferees, and some thought getting House approval a dicey proposition.

Of the $450 million, $90 million would go to school districts under the state's basic allottment system, with the remaining $360 million apportioned in a second tier of financing.

MISD was allotted only an additional $4.079 million under the plan, but gains and extra $320,000 under a compromise proposal.

Under the compromise, school districts must raise their taxes to 70 cents per $100 valuation in order to receive maximum appropriations. MISD's tax rate is already 90 cents per $100 valuation.

With the plan, the MISD would gain slightly more state aid than if the Legislature had taken no action at all.

Ector County Independent School District would receive $3.906 million under the state's current financing methods, but $6.619 million with the proposed law.

ECISD's tax rate is 95.5 cents per $100 valuation and also qualifies under the compromise plan.

Greenwood Independent School District, with a $1.615 per $100 valuation tax rate, also would stand to gain. The district would receive $289,166 in state aid under current law, but $426,794 in the financing compromise.

The legislation, billed as a first step toward making the state school financing system more equitable to poorer districts and thereby satisfying a lawsuit, may not achieve that goal.

The Senate version originally had called for a six-year plan, but the House-endorsed idea of only two years got the conference committee's nod.

One conferee, Sen. Hector Uribe, D-Brownsville, thought the compromise action "damages progress" the Senate had made toward equity financing. The committee's final version "obviously is not enough, and we shouldn't kid ourselves," he said.

Rep. Paul Colbert, D-Houston, called it "a small bandage for a large wound," and noted that the $450 million constitutes 2 percent of the state's annual public education expenditure.

That increase, weighted in favor of poorer school districts, would barely make up the effects of inflation given an additional 2 percent hike at the local level, he said.

And for richer districts, the extra money won't even go that far, he said.

Also dissatisfied was Rep. Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, who had hoped the committee would kill a money allocation formula that he said benefits larger districts at the expense of smaller ones and "nobody truly understands."

"Instead of abolishing it, when its ugly head has risen, we say let's phase it out," he said.

Still, Parker maintained the compromise contained "a few pearls."

Rep. Ernestine Glossbrenner, D-Alice and main sponsor of the teacher pay incease, reluctantly added an amendment that would affect teacher contracts districts already have signed.

With the amendment, if the contract is signed before June 15 and contains a salary supplement above the state minimum, that contract would remain in effect.

The Senate offered an easy endorsement of the measure, but it underwent several points of order on the House floor, where Colbert had predicted it would "barely pass."

With 10 minutes left in the regular session, one pertaining to jurisdiction might have successfully killed the bill.

But House members entered a suprisingly strong 126-21 tally to suspend all rules to continue consideration. Only a two-thirds majority had been necessary.

UTPB

"Mr. Craddick is simply disappointed that in '69, Odessa was selected (for the UTPB campus) instead of Midland, and he's been fighting us ever since," said Watkins.

During negotiations after the amendment was attached, "We went out of our way to accomodate Midland," he said.

Watkins noted that the university's Center for Energy and Economic Diversification, under construction in Midland County, has received more than $4 million in donations.

Of that amount, about $3 million has come from Midland, and the remainder from surrounding counties, including about $500,000 from Ector County.

Both the House and Senate on Monday, the last day of the regular session, endorsed versions of the UT-Dallas bill that included the UTPB provision and would give free-standing status to Pan American University in Brownsville.

But Gov. Bill Clements, a resident of Dallas, said he would veto any legislation that goes beyond simple expansion of UT-Dallas to four years.

"I want the University of Texas at Dallas to become a four-year institution," he said. "But I can't approve that bill if legislators try to use it to turn other two-year schools into four-year schools."

Should the governor veto the bill, observers expect him to include UT-Dallas expansion on the special session agenda when the Legislature reconvenes June 20.

NATO

In the first official reaction from Moscow, Col. Gen. Nikolai Chervov, a member of the Soviet general staff, said Bush's proposals "need to be carefully analyzed."

The summit leaders also welcomed widespread changes under way in the Soviet Union and East Europe, initiated by Gorbachev's reform policies.

"The possibilities for fruitful dialogue have significantly improved in recent years," they said. "The allies are resolved to grasp this opportunity."

The allies said attainment of lasting peace "will require that the unnatural division of Europe, and particularly of Germany, be overcome."

In a separate declaration, the summiteers said: "We want to overcome the painful division of Europe, which we have never accepted. We want to move beyond the postwar period." They said they wanted to "shape a new political order of peace in Europe."

The missile agreement was endorsed by the United States, Britain and West Germany, key antagonists in the dispute, and NATO Secretary-General Manfred Woerner credited Bush for summit's happy ending. "His leadership set the tone for the whole meeting," Woerner said.

The agreement, drafted after eight hours of intense bargaining by NATO foreign ministers, authorizes the United States to begin negotiations with the Soviets "to achieve a partial reduction" of short-range nuclear missiles once implementation of a conventional arms agreement begins.

The word "partial" was underlined, presumably at the insistence of the British, who had vehemently opposed a West German preference for negotiations to eliminate all such missiles.

Kohl couldn't resist taking a few jabs at British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, his chief adversary in the missile dispute.

"Margaret Thatcher stood up for her interests, in her temperamental way," Kohl amid laughter from reporters. "We do sometimes have differences of opinion. We have different temperaments. And she's a woman and I'm not."

CHINA

Outside police headquarters, a man who identified himself as chief of Beijing Public Security told a U.S. television crew there that no students had been arrested. He refused comment on whether workers were detained.

The official told the journalists they had violated martial law, imposed May 20 in a bid to quash the student-led movement. He said the television crew should not talk with any Chinese in the central Beijing area under the decree, which has been widely ignored.

A police broadcast to the crowd said, "You do not understand the real situation. Beijing is in complete chaos."

When an officer told the crowd to disperse, they replied with calls of "bandit" and "rascal" and "how many people have you arrested?" Police with two video cameras filmed demonstrators, who said they would not leave.

The independent trade union, which claims 3,000 members, was formed May 19 in defiance of a government ban on all but the official trade union federation.

COURT

The California courts rejected his request.

In other action today, the Supreme Court:

■ Refused to lift strict advertising limits imposed on a Texas counseling center that authorities called a "fake abortion clinic" run by anti-abortion activists. The justices, without comment, let stand rulings that ads run by the Problem Pregnancy Center in Fort Worth violated a state law banning deceptive trade practices.

State Assistant Attorney General Stephen Gardner contended that the center was seeking "a constitutional right to lie to pregnant women, to entice them into a fake abortion clinic" where they are urged to continue their pregnancy.

■ Let stand a decision banning organized prayers at the start of high school football games, refusing without comment to review a ruling in a Georgia case that such pregame invocations impermissibly promote religion.

The 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, by a 2-1 vote last Jan. 3, said prayers carried over the public address system before Douglas County, Ga., High School home football games had to stop because they violated the separation of church and state required by past Supreme Court rulings. The appeals court decision affected all public schools in Georgia, Alabama and Florida.

■ Refused to reinstate the conviction of a California man, Stephen Edward Leichty, who admitted he tried illegally to ship a drug via air freight. Without coment, the court left intact a ruling that police unlawfully searched the shipment without a court-issued search warrant.

■ Ruled 7-2 in a Florida case that a state death penalty law does not have to require juries, instead of judges, to make the specific findings authorizing capital punishment.

MEMORIAL

The mayor, alluding to the fighting men who lost their lives at the Alamo, said, "They, too, paid the supreme, ultimate sacrifice that freedom might prevail."

Although Lewis Fernandez, vice commander of the American Legion's 16th District, spoke proudly of those men and women who lost their lives, he paid special tribute to the nation's prisoners of war and the missing in action.

Said Fernandez: "We must make it our business to see to it that each and everyone of them is accounted for; we must not rest until that goal becomes a reality."

Thomas summed up the purpose of the Memorial Day celebration, saying, "One of the best things we can do to honor the memory of these men and women is to rededicate ourselves to freedom and to commit our lives to teaching our children, grandchildren and friends and neighbors that freedom is not free; that we must defend it, support it and work to build a strong government.

"We must support the military and we must help our neighbors at times when their freedom is threatened. These things we must do; for the men and women who died in defense of our country must not have died in vain," he said.

Gorbachev promises cuts in defense budget

MOSCOW (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachev said today the Kremlin spends $118 billion a year for defense — nearly four times the previous official claim — and promised defense cuts would help improve people's lives.

Gorbachev

The Soviet president disclosed the figure in a speech to the new Congress in which he also promised and to root out bureaucrats who are holding back reforms and pledged an attack on the special privileges of Soviet officials.

He also said local elections scheduled for the fall would be postponed until the spring to give legislators a chance to work out changes in election laws and other key legislation.

Gorbachev said the savings from a military budget trimmed by more than 13 percent would be channeled into raising the standard of living of a nation plagued by chronic shortages and shoddy goods.

Members of the Congress of People's Deputies — the first Soviet legislative body chosen in contested elections in 70 years — have listed improving the standard of living their most pressing concern.

"All of our production capacities must be reoriented to produce what the people need," Gorbachev said in his 95-minute address.

He told the Congress on the fifth day of its inaugural session that military spending would be reduced by $15.3 billion by the end of 1991, prompting delegates to burst into applause.

The speech was greeted coolly by one of the best-known legislators, the immensely popular reformer Boris N. Yeltsin.

"I was expecting something new, something entirely and radically new that would take into account the crisis state of society and the (Communist) party," he told reporters. "The slogan-making system doesn't work anymore."

Gorbachev's speech contained no direct response to President Bush's announcement Monday of substantial cuts in U.S. forces in Europe and a call for swift East-West agreement on even deeper reductions by 1993.

But both sides have now proposed specific troop and weapons reductions, which could set the stage for detailed negotiations at the Vienna talks on reducing conventional arms.

"Today, we can ensure security by political and diplomatic means," Gorbachev said, reflecting his policy of "new political thinking."

"This makes it possible to cut down on military expenditures ... without any detriment to the defense capability of our country."

The traditionally secretive Soviet government has long concealed its true military expenditures, complicating East-West arms talks. As recently as October, the official budget for 1989 allocated $32 billion for the military.

Economist Leonid Abalkin, speaking to reporters after Gorbachev's speech, said the figure represents about 9 percent of the Soviet gross national product. The $300 billion Pentagon budget represents about 6 percent of the U.S. gross national product.

Asked why previous defense figures were so much lower, Abalkin said they represented only "what we could call the budget of the Ministry of Defense."

"This is certainly coming closer to the truth," said one Western diplomat, adding that considerable analysis of the figures would be required to determine the accuracy of the new total. The diplomat spoke on condition of anonymity.

Gorbachev announced plans to cut defense spending in his address to the United Nations in December, but Western leaders had continued to question the actual impact of the promised cuts, noting what they regarded as unrealistic military spending figures.

In his speech, Gorbachev said many deputies had complained that government ministries responsible for consumer goods and agriculture were dragging their feet on reforms, and he said the Congress is free to question government officials about their actions.

"Apparently we will have to hear at this conference a response from our government," Gorbachev said in the nationally televised report on the state of domestic and foreign affairs.

Dressed in a dark suit and red tie, the president stood before a giant white statue of Soviet founder Vladimir I. Lenin facing the 2,250 deputies gathered in the Kremlin's Palace of Congress.

"Deputies say the ministries are restructuring very slowly, if at all," Gorbachev said. "We have to find out what is wrong."

Construction and planning ministries have continued to increase investments in new equipment and machinery despite his new approach demanding that they make better use of what they already have, he said.

Yeltsin signed up to address the Congress after Gorbachev's speech. The Congress defeated Yeltsin's bid for a seat in the smaller, full-time national legislature, or Supreme Soviet, Saturday.

But Monday, it reversed itself after tens of thousands of people took the streets and sent angry telegrams in protest.

Yeltsin, the 58-year-old ousted Moscow Communist Party chief, won 90 percent of the popular vote in his election to a Moscow seat this year.

His crusade to end the privileges of the Communist ruling elite and fill empty store shelves has made him a folk hero.

NATO allies back Bush plan to reduce troops

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — West European leaders gave a quick stamp of approval to the plan drawn up by President Bush to reduce sharply U.S. and Soviet troops stationed in Europe by 1993.

Their formal approval will come today in the communique the NATO leaders will issue after concluding the two-day, 40th anniversary summit of the 16-nation military alliance.

But the sweeping Bush proposal, clearly aimed at seizing the arms control initiative from Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev, was greeted at Monday's opening session by unanimous praise.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, a staunch U.S. ally, said the offer had "transformed the summit," which had been overshadowed by a nagging dispute over the future role of short-range nuclear arms in Europe.

NATO foreign ministers early today arrived at compromise language to solve that dispute.

West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl called Bush's initiative a "far-sighted step" that "impressively affirmed the United States' leadership."

"President Bush has today paved the way for further success of our alliance," Kohl told his colleagues.

The Western leaders have been dogged in recent weeks by a fight touched off by a German demand for NATO to enter into early talks with the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact on reducing short-range nuclear arms in Europe.

The United States and Britain had opposed immediate bargaining on those weapons, arguing that the alliance should first focus its attention on slashing conventional, or non-nuclear, arms in Europe.

The compromise formula worked out by the foreign ministers in a post-midnight skull session links the start of short-range missile talks to completion of a conventional arms treaty. It also stipulates that no nuclear missiles would be pulled out until the conventional reductions were completed.

Even before the ministers fashioned their negotiating strategy, European officials said the Bush troop initiative had made it easier to resolve the missile dispute.

"The sting is out of the problem," said Dutch Prime Minister Ruud Lubbers. "It is not of the same urgency any more."

Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney urged the other allies to back the Bush proposals and turn them over to NATO experts to flesh out over the next 60 to 90 days.

The plans would then be put down on the negotiating table at the conventional arms talks between NATO and the seven-nation Warsaw Pact. The bargaining, which began in early March in Vienna, covers an area spanning the Atlantic Ocean to the Ural Mountains in the Soviet Union.

Spanish Foreign Minister Franciso Fernandez Ordonez said Bush had given a fresh push to those discussions.

"This proposal," he said, "would reduce the possibility of a surprise attack by the Warsaw Pact."

A senior administration official, briefing reporters under cloak of anonymity, said the response was "even warmer than anything we had reason to expect."

In Moscow, the Soviet news agency Tass said the American offer came from a Bush administration "under serious criticism from the public for the lack of any disarmament initiatives at a time when the Soviet Union has launched a 'peace offensive."

Bush called for Washington and Moscow to agree to trim their troops stationed in Europe to 275,000 on each side.

This would amount to a 20 percent cut in U.S. combat troops in Europe, reducing overall U.S. troop strength by about 10 percent. There are about 150,000 U.S. combat troops in Europe and more than 150,000 support personnel.

The Soviets have an estimated 625,000 troops in Eastern and Central Europe. Gorbachev has already offered to cut to 350,000 and proposed equal ceilings of NATO and Warsaw Pact forces of 1.35 million.

Conventional forces compared

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Here are comparisons of the conventional forces levels proposed by NATO in March, Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev this month and President Bush on Wednesday:

Tanks

NATO — 20,000, with no one country having more than 12,000. ALso, none could have more than 3,200 outside its own borders.
Gorbachev — 20,000, with no country having more than 14,000. Also, none could have more than 4,500.
Bush — The NATO proposal.

Armored Personnel Carriers

NATO — 33,500, no more than 16,800 for any country and no more than 6,000 outside its own borders
Gorbachev — 28,000, with 18,000 as the ceiling for any country, and 7,500 as a limit outside the country.
Bush — Embraces proposals for ceilings.

Artillery

NATO — 16,500, with 10,000 as limit for any one country, and 1,700 as limit outside the country.
Gorbachev — 24,000, with 17,000 as limit for any one country, and 4,000 outside the country.
Bush — Embraces proposals for ceilings.

Troops

NATO — Did not include.
Gorbachev — Cut Soviet troops to 350,000 from estimated 625,000.
Bush — Cut overall U.S. troops in Europe 10 percent, from 305,000 to 275,000. Soviet troops also would be reduced to 275,000.

Combat Planes and Attack Helicopters

NATO and Gorbachev proposals did not set ceilings.
Bush — Cut NATO and Warsaw Pact to 15 percent below current NATO levels of 6,400 or to a new ceiling of about 5,440.

New York Times News Service

A Memorial Day neighborhood picnic in Springfield, N.J., turned into a tragedy Monday afternoon when a 23-year-old man grabbed a 10-inch knife and fatally stabbed his mother and one of his three brothers and then ran into a nearby backyard, killing a family friend and a neighbor, Union County officials said.

The rampage began at 5 p.m. in a family argument in a white two-story house at 14 Crest Place as neighbors gathered for an annual block party, the authorities said.

In the house, the suspect, Rolando Marcelo, who graduated summa cum laude from Yale in 1987, stabbed his mother, Anita, 51, his brother Raymond, 20, and the friend, Nelson Paiva, 21, of Union, the Union County prosecutor John H. Stamler said.

Marcelo then ran from the house and into the backyard of a neighbor, Mark Dennis, 35, where a barbecue was under way. As a score of shocked neighbors and children watched, Marcelo stabbed Dennis and another neighbor, Richard Hartman, 37, as they tried to subdue him, Stamler added.

Dennis, the father of three children, died an hour later at Overlook Hospital in Summit. Hartman was in critical condition at the same hospital.

"They were on the ground, and at first I thought they were just fooling around," said Janice BonGiovanni, who lives across the street from the Marcelos. "But then I saw a knife in his hand."

She added that Marcelo "broke free, ran into his house, came out again, opened the door of his car and said: 'What have I done? What have I done?'"

He drove away clutching a brown garbage bag, said Mrs. BonGiovanni.

The neighbors called the 911 emergency telephone number, and Marcelo was arrested about an hour later after a 20-mile chase.

After leaving his home, Marcelo managed to change cars, switching to a Volkswagen, Stamler said, and he drove west on Interstate 287 and west on Interstate 78, until he crashed unto a guardrail near a bridge over the Lamington River in Somerset County.

AP Laserphoto

Rolando Marcelo, 23, of Springfield is carried to the Somerville State Police barracks after a three-county chase through New Jersey Monday. Marcelo is accused of killing four people, including his mother and brother.

He jumped from the bridge about 40 feet to the edge of the river below, and a tree broke his fall and ripped some of his clothing, the authorities.

A state police trooper passing over the bridge saw the abandoned Volkswagen and the torn clothing on the tree and climbed down to the riverbank and found Marcelo lying exhausted on the ground amid some trees.

The prosecutor said Marcelo had been charged with four counts of murder and one count of aggravated assault and said he would be held overnight in the County Jail in Elizabeth.

Stamler said that Marcelo had "a discussion" in the afternoon with his mother, a nurse at University Hospital in Newark and that it was not known what the topic was.

Judge ruled for GE while holding stock

MILWAUKEE (AP) — U.S. District Judge Thomas J. Curran ruled in favor of General Electric Co. in two cases while holding stock in the company, despite a requirement that judges disqualify themselves in such situations, The Associated Press has learned.

Curran said he would "notify counsel of the existence of the conflicting interest" and avoid future involvement in cases involving GE. The U.S. Judicial Code of Ethics forbids a judge from presiding in a case where he has a financial holding.

AP discovered the incidents by reviewing Curran's financial disclosure statements and cross-referencing his stock holdings with his case files.

Curran has reported in all his financial disclosure reports since 1985 that he held between $15,000 and $50,000 in GE stock. He presided over unrelated cases involving GE Medical Systems in 1987 and 1989 and said in an interview that he was surprised to learn of the conflicts.

"I really thought we had a system to prevent that," Curran said. He said in accepting the cases, he hadn't recognized GE Medical Systems as a "subsidiary" of GE. However, GE Medical Systems is a division of the parent company and not a subsidiary, and in one case Curran's ruling directly cited General Electric Co. as the defendant.

"I couldn't dispute that," said Curran, who had reviewed only one case completely but acknowledged both cases involved GE. Curran said Friday he still owned the GE stock.

William Bauer, chief judge of the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, said judges in his circuit are required to compare their financial disclosure statements against court documents before deciding whether they can preside over that case.

"The code is fairly clear," said Bauer, who was informed of the details of the case but asked that the name of the judge not be disclosed to him. "If you have a financial interest you must disqualify yourself."

Bauer is responsible for enforcing the judicial code of ethics on all judges in his territory, which includes Wisconsin. He said he would impanel a committee to review the matter if he received a written complaint. Any disciplinary action would be decided by that panel, he said.

Impeachment has been recommended only in a handful of cases in the country's history, and those involved allegations of criminal acts.

University of Wisconsin Law Professor Frank Tuerkheimer, a former U.S. attorney, recommended the plaintiffs in both cases appeal the decisions. He said neither suit was large enough to affect the judge's investments, "but the case law is clear that that does not matter."

Tuerkheimer reviewed the case, but also asked that the name of the judge not be disclosed to him.

Curran, 64, is a former Mauston, Wis., attorney who was appointed to the bench in 1983 by President Reagan. His 1988 disclosure showed net investments between $648,030 and $1,720,000, generally in blue-chip stocks. His investments returned between $37,147 and $112,116, including between $1,001 and $2,500 in GE dividends.

Curran's first case involving GE stemmed from a 1983 lawsuit filed by a union representing Robert Holloway. The union claimed Holloway was unfairly denied a promotion at the GE Medical Systems plant in West Milwaukee. There was a one-day trial in 1984, and Curran dismissed the lawsuit June 5, 1987.

His ruling listed General Electric Co. as the defendant.

In the more recent case, Joseph Toth, another GE Medical Systems employee, sued in 1988 claiming he was unfairly fired for missing work because of a health problem. On April 25, 1989, Curran denied Toth's request for a trial, issuing a summary judgment dismissing the lawsuit.

The Toth case listed General Electric Medical Systems as the defendant.

"It's hard to pinpoint how it would have happened," Curran said when asked about his ruling in this GE case. "You try to keep track of these subsidiaries. Apparently in this case we didn't."

He added: "Having been alerted, we will notify counsel of the existence of the conflicting interest and recuse myself so I would not be in a position to pass judgment upon anything further with GE."

William E. Wentzel, who represented Toth, is now considering an appeal.

"Obviously I was never thinking about this," said Wentzel. "It's a conflict of interest. This is going to make my client happy. He wasn't happy with the original decision."

Matthew R. Robbins, whose firm represented Holloway, said he would contact his client, "but I would have to suspect that past due time would make an appeal unlikely."

Robbins said the discovery indicated a problem lawyers "are not aware of. You normally do not know ... the judges' financial holdings."

George K. Whyte Jr., whose law firm represented GE in the Holloway matter, said he could not recall the case. Mary Pat Ninneman, who represented GE in the Toth case, did not return several phone messages.

Suspect sailor wants apology

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — The sailor linked by reports to the investigation of the USS Iowa disaster says he wants an apology from the Navy, and a congressman said he plans to inquire how Kendall L. Truitt was implicated in the fatal blast.

Rep. Glenn Poshard, D-Ill., said he will grant a request by the sailor's attorney to investigate the Navy's handling of its probe as it concerns Truitt, a 21-year-old gunner's mate 3rd class.

"There has been tremendous publicity impugning this young man," Poshard said in a telephone interview. "Somebody had to give the news media this information. ... If this boy is not guilty, how is he ever going to recover from this thing?"

Meanwhile, Truitt, his wife, Carole, and his attorney, Ellis Rubin of Miami, went Monday to the Norfolk Naval Base, where the sailor collected his belongings for a transfer to Mayport, Fla.

"I'd like to see a formal apology — from an identified Navy spokesman," Truitt told reporters outside the gates to the base, the Iowa's homeport.

NATION in brief

Crime, weather cutting tourism?

WASHINGTON (AP) — The years seem to run together for Sara Keren, a vendor who for eight years has made a living snapping pictures of tourists who pose on Pennsylvania Avenue next to a cutout of the president.

Keren, sitting on a chair next to a cardboard of President Bush, said she sells about 10 photos a day — a figure that has remained constant for years. So, when told official statistics show tourism in the nation's capital is sagging, she added with a hint of surprise: "I had no idea. I really haven't noticed any difference from last year to this year. But I hardly ever do."

Figures compiled by the Smithsonian Institution and the National Park Service indicate that tourism is down in Washington during the first four months of 1989 compared with that period last year. Officials put the blame on everything from the weather to the rise in crime.

Tom Mack, president of Tourmobile, the company under contract with the federal government to conduct tours on the mall and Arlington National Cemetery, conceded that the increased homicide rate in the District of Columbia could be a factor. The homicide toll stands at a record 189 so far this year, compared with 122 at this time last year.

"I'd like to think all the rain we've had was the biggest reason for the downturn, but this is not to say I'm not concerned about the criminal behavior in Washington," he said. "But I can't see that it's any worse than say, New York or Philadelphia."

Salvadoran aid assured

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration and Congress have worked out a tentative agreement aimed at continuing U.S. military aid to El Salvador while taking into account congressional concerns about a rightist resurgence in that Central American country, U.S. officials say.

Much of the concern stems from a reported increase in human rights abuses in El Salvador at a time when moderate President Jose Napoleon Duarte is preparing to surrender power to the leader of the rightist Arena party, Alfredo Cristiani.

Cristiani was elected in a landslide on March 19 and will be sworn in on Thursday, ending the rule of perhaps the most pro-American president in the hemisphere, a man who was able to coax billions of U.S. aid dollars from Congress but was unable to achieve peace.

Wooden bridges return

NORWICH, Vt. (AP) — Wooden bridges, long ago relegated to picture postcard status, are making a comeback as engineers merge today's technologies with the material of yesteryear.

"Wood is so commonplace," says John Crist, director of the U.S. Forest Service Timber Bridge Program. "It just hasn't been sexy, like steel and concrete."

With deteriorating bridges on the increase and state and federal highway funds being squeezed, timber is getting a new look from engineers and government planners who for years have favored concrete and steel.

Crist and others say new designs for wood allow timber bridges to support the same 40,000-ton trucks as concrete and steel. They also claim wood will last longer, and is cheaper to build and maintain.

But those who would make wood the product of choice must overcome the fact that it has been dismissed as outdated for so long.

"That's our toughest nut to crack. Most of our engineers in this country have been trained in steel and concrete," Crist said.

Rail safety a concern

WASHINGTON (AP) — Railroads have long been able to set their own safety standards, and a railroad engineer doesn't even need a driver's license, but federal authorities are rewriting the rules of the rail.

Ordered by Congress to take several steps to improve rail safety, the Federal Railroad Administration already has extended its authority over individual railroad employees, increased fines for safety violations, required more testing and certification of train control equipment, mandated automatic train controls on some lines and imposed tough punishment for tampering with safety devices.

Most of the actions arise from the Railroad Safety Improvement Act of 1988, which was prompted largely by the Jan. 4, 1987, collision between an Amtrak train and three Conrail freight locomotives at Chase, Md., that killed 16 people and hurt 175 others.

Conrail engineer Ricky Gates, who has become a symbol for many of the industry's problems, is serving a five-year prison term for manslaughter after admitting he smoked marijuana shortly before the crash and violated several safety procedures.

Fumes kill two children

LARAMIE, Wyo. (AP) — A young brother and sister traveling in the back of a rented moving truck were found dead from carbon monoxide poisoning, and two of their siblings were hospitalized, one critically.

Kimberley K. Hughes, 8, and Christopher A. Hughes, 5, of Vader, Wash., were pronounced dead Sunday at Ivinson Memorial Hospital in Laramie, shortly after they were discovered unconscious in the truck, officials said.

Terry A. Hughes, 6, was in critical condition today and her brother, Leon H. Hughes, 7, was in serious condition.

Congress turns attention to spending, trade bills

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate plans to rework a $3.7 billion domestic spending bill this week, a politically difficult act that would take center stage except for the leadership struggle among House Democrats.

The spending bill took two months for the House to finish and is under a White House veto threat because of its drug spending proposals. Work on the measure is likely to provoke disputes over the federal deficit, fuel House-Senate rivalries and focus attention on 1990 politics.

But despite those attention-grabbing elements, most eyes will doubtless be riveted instead on the travails of House Speaker Jim Wright. Lawmakers struggling over the bill will find themselves in the position of vaudevillians following the animal act.

Wright, D-Texas, is expected by many to step down this week, his 35-year congressional career sunk by ethics allegations over his personal finances. Jockeying among Democrats hoping to move up on the party's leadership ladder is already consuming time in the House.

The spending is a priority because it contains money for programs for the 1989 fiscal year, which lasts until Sept. 30. It includes $1.2 billion for veterans health care, benefit increases and other Department of Veterans Affairs programs, as well as for college student loans, foster care efforts, United Nations peacekeeping activities, refugee assistance, and other initiatives.

The measure contains nearly twice as much money as President Bush sought when he sent a $2.2 billion version of the bill to Capitol Hill in March. Bush's advisors say the legislation is too costly, considering a federal deficit expected to reach about $160 billion this year.

But most controversial of all is $822 million the House shoehorned into the measure for new law enforcement officials, additional prison cells, counseling and other anti-drug programs.

House Democrats — with an eye to surveys showing the public thinks illicit drugs are America's worst problem — argued that the money would finance a war on drugs that Bush has merely talked about.

Republicans said the provision simply threw money at a problem that is already adequately financed. The Republicans complained that Democrats were merely trying to put them in the embarrassing position of voting in opposition to a more muscular federal effort against drug dealers.

But according to congressional aides who asked to not be identified, the Senate version of the bill will probably not include the drug money.

Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., plans an effort to insert some anti-drug spending anyway, his office said Friday.

Kidney allocation system biased against blacks, some experts say

CHICAGO (AP) — Federally mandated rules for doling out kidneys discriminate against blacks, who receive proportionally fewer organs than whites even though they are four times as likely to suffer kidney failure, some experts say.

"I don't consider it a national tragedy. I consider it ignorance. As we become more enlightened, then we expect (the system) to be more fair," said Howard University's Dr. Clive O. Callender, one of the nation's few black transplant surgeons.

The 1½-year-old rules adopted by the United Network for Organ Sharing, which administers the national transplant network, emphasize tissue-matching between kidney donors and recipients.

Callender and some others contend the rules put blacks at a disadvantage because a fifth of them have tissue-matching problems that make them wait longer for kidneys, most of which are donated by whites.

"At the time the rules were made, that information was not perceived as discriminatory," Callender said. "But we now know it because of studies on the black immune system."

Dr. William Vaughn, the network's director of technical services, acknowledges the rules aren't perfect but adds, "it's a good system within the confines that we have to work inside of."

"You can't put out quotas" on organ transplants, said Dr. Paul Eggers, chief of the federal Health Care Financing Administration's program evaluation branch.

Transplant specialists have long disputed the importance of tissue-matching for kidneys and will continue that debate at their annual meeting, which begins today in Chicago.

Proponents say the success rate for kidney recipients improves considerably when tissue is matched closely, but critics contend the gains are not great enough to justify letting donated organs deteriorate until a close match is found.

"Even if (tissue typing) is important, should we weaken its importance in the interest of getting minorities a better chance to get a transplant, even if if lowers the success of the operation?" asked Arthur Caplan, director of the Center for Biomedical Ethics at the University of Minnesota.

The standardized scoring system in effect since Oct. 1, 1987, also takes into account severity of illness, length of time waiting, proximity to the donor, size and blood compatibility.

During 1988, the first full year during which the network collected donor and recipient data, whites received 71 percent of the kidneys transplanted in the United States. Blacks received 21.7 percent and Hispanics 7.4 percent.

Whites also got 88.9 percent of the hearts transplanted last year, 85.9 percent of livers and 97.6 percent of pancreases, according to statistics just released by the network.

On the opposite end, 83.2 percent of the 4,083 brain-dead victims whose organs were donated in 1988 were white. About 8.6 percent were black and 5.9 percent were Hispanic, well below their population share.

Sixty-two percent of the donors were male. Men also dominated on the receiving side, getting 79.2 percent of hearts transplanted last year, 49.7 percent of livers, 60.6 percent of kidneys and 56.4 percent of pancreases.

The Virginia-based network excluded from its calculations recipients whose race or sex were not reported.

"Race has nothing to do with who gets allocated the organ. Neither does sex," Vaughn said. "It comes back to who's on the list and who has the disease."

Blacks have more kidney failure than any other group, according to Callender, because of their proclivity toward high blood pressure.

Even the French read l' Anglais!

It's hardly news, even in France, that English has become the lingua franca not only of diplomacy, commerce and popular culture, but of science and technology as well. But there are limits — or there were, at least, until the latest indignity to be visited upon the guardians of "francophonie" emanated not from les Anglo-Saxons but from within the walls, so to speak.

The century-old Pasteur Institute of Paris, one of the world's leading scientific research institutions, has in recent years printed more and more articles about immunology, microbiology and virology — fields pioneered by French scientists — in English. But now, rubbing salt in les blessures of French-language chauvinists, the institute has given the three periodicals English-language titles. Thus has Annales de l'Institut Pasteur become Annals of the Pasteur Institute.

Such a shift is but belated recognition that articles in any language but English are read by a very narrow segment of the world scientific community. That hardly assuages the venerable Academie Francaise, which claims that "the worst enemies of the French language are now inside France."

Oddly, the Pasteur Institute's "treason" has so inflamed the linguistic rearguard that a historian of the Academie, according to the Los Angeles Times, now shrugs off the pervasive assault of the old bete noire, franglais. Among that popular hybrid's latest entries: le zapping — the act of hitting the remote-control button (le zappeur) rapidly to change channels.

China's demonstrators presented a lesson

Events in China appear to offer some lessons to Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega and Panama's military leaders.

China's military leaders, former and active, took a decisive role after it became evident that the student strikers had massive support throughout the country. They clearly saw that, if troops began beating or killing unarmed, peaceful civilians in Beijing, the military would lose the confidence of the people. So they spoke out against government policy and refused to attack the students.

It must be obvious to Panama's top military, all of whom were trained in the United States, that Noriega is not a popular leader. That is an understatement. Most Panamanians consider him a thug and a crook and said as much in the presidential election.

The absence of any action by the Panamanian military is, in itself, a statement. They will allow not only an unpopular but apparently illegal regime to rule the country.

Judged by the Chinese example, that is an indictment of Panama's military. They are proving to be gutless collaborators.

The Organization of American States has asked Noriega to step down. An OAS delegation in Panama has requested an orderly transfer of power to a democratic government. This is a step in the right direction but only a step. It appears Noriega must be pushed — economically, politically and — yes — with force.

The Panamanian military should clean up its own mess — not hope American troops may do it for them. The reason for their inaction is they are divided — some are on the drug take, others are involved with Noriega in other ways, and some fear the risks.

If officers loyal to a communist government can act in the name of sanity and perhaps even greater democracy, why can't so-called democratic generals? Some day, Panama's military leaders must answer that indictment.

Another View:

OAS against Noriega

A heartening victory for the principle of crisis-solving by international cooperation was won las week in Washington. After intense discussion, the Organization of American States in effect labeled Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega the villain against popular rule in Panama. And it voted to send a delegation down there to try to dislodge him from power by mediation, so that the popular will of the Panamanian people may prevail.

This is the strongest stance taken by the OAS in many years against one of its member governments. Nor did the 31-member organization really want to refer to Noriega by name or take a hands-on role in trying to unseat him. Only under heavy pressure from Washington did it act this strongly. The intent in this accommodation was to try to remove any reason for unilateral action by the United States against Noriega, who annulled recent Panamanian elections in order to retain his own ill-gotten power. This time the OAS decided to act itself in order to give credibility to its repetitious calls for regional approaches to crises rather than big-power intervention.

This is all to the good. Some leading OAS states are proud of the multinational decision and glad for Washington's encouragement of it. But now the ball is squarely in the OAS's court. It faces a hard test of performance, especially if the Panamanian dictator tries to nullify its efforts. Right now, Noriega, accused of drug trafficking and other crimes, shows no sign of willingness to give up his military rule.

So if he resists the OAS, what then? Will it act with regional sanctions against him, economic and otherwise? Will it encourage his overthrow? Actually, this brutish regime has gone to such lengths, in trashing the elections and beating the anti-Noriega candidates, as to pose an embarrassment to his neighboring nations that might bring them weightily against him in the end.

But if he resists by force or guile and the OAS does nothing forceful to restore democracy in Panama, then it will have suffered a major defeat, and its inveighing for organizational rather than unilateral actions will carry much less weight afterward. We hope instead that a dawning of real democracy in Panama will be something for which the OAS may take credit — an achievement that will expand its prestige and base of support. But it has to do this job right, and get results.

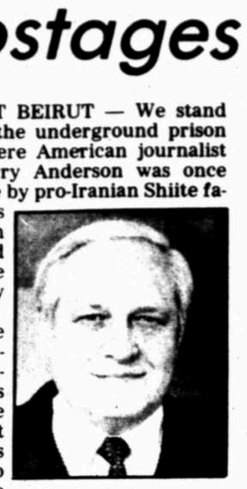
JACK ANDERSON

Hostages still rotting in dreary cells

WEST BEIRUT — We stand in the underground prison where American journalist Terry Anderson was once held hostage by pro-Iranian Shiite fanatics. It is filled with plastic and paper refuse from many dreary meals. The stench of human excrement clings to the nose — proof that no one was allowed to leave the building, which has no toilet.



Jack Anderson

Our own fear of being taken hostage is crowded out by despair for a fellow journalist, inhumanely held by a radical group for more than four years, all in the name of irrational hate. Anderson, an Associated Press correspondent, was taken on March 16, 1985. Four American hostages have been released since then. Anderson's father and brother have died and his daughter has been born.

Local sources confirmed that, at one time, Americans were held here. One Central Intelligence Agency source in Washington, D.C., said that the backdrop in a Christmas videotape Anderson was allowed to make in 1987 matched the stonework here. An American spy satellite was believed to have photographed the transfer of hostage Terry Waite, the Anglican Church envoy, to this building within the last year. But there is no hostage in this dark and fetid place today.

We can stay for only 10 minutes before our six, heavily armed Syrian bodyguards motion nervously that it is time to go.

We came to the Moslem sector of Beirut to discover more details about what has happened to nine American hostages held by Hezbollah, "the Party of God." (Our findings will be detailed further in a TV documentary, "American Expose: Target USA," to be aired Wednesday, May 31.)

The day we arrive in Beirut, Sunni Moslem leader Sheik Hassan Khaled is being buried. He was assassinated by a car bomb, probably planted by Hezbollah. The Hezbollah terrorists are lying low for the funeral. The diversion has allowed us to visit the recently abandoned building that served as both prison and party headquarters for Hezbollah.

It is a converted four-story parking garage. The walls are covered with elaborately painted Shiite graffiti and there are two large drawings. One is the Star of David with a fist breaking through to symbolize the destruction of Israel by the Ayatollah Khomeini. The other is a horrific caricature of Ronald Reagan as a vampire. A Star of David is branded on his forehead and the flags of U.S. allies sprout from his scalp.

On the first underground level, a wall is painted as if it were a mosque where the captors prayed. The hostages were kept three stories below ground.

Terry Anderson, the longest-held American, has been moved several times, according to our sources, and may now be in the Abdul Azziz barracks in south Beirut. Wherever he is, former hostages and other sources believe he is confined to a small, dark room, chained to his bed and allowed to leave the room for a few minutes each day to go to the bathroom. The conditions are so devastating to Anderson that, at least once, he smashed his head repeatedly against his cell wall until blood bathed his face.

The Syrians, who control much of Lebanon, are opposed to hostage taking and have made several sweeps, including house-to-house searches, to find hostages. But Hezbollah intelligence always gets wind of the sweep and moves the hostages. We pressed a Syrian general in charge of West Beirut to take us to one suburb where hostages are rumored to be held. He solemnly explained that even with armed troops, he could not guarantee our safety on that particular day in that particular den of Hezbollah. And if anything happened to us while we were under temporary Syrian protection, he would be executed, he said.

DIPLOSPEAK — Diplomats are, in one respect, like rare tropical birds. They have learned to communicate with one another through near-inaudible sounds and poses. Diplomats seldom say outright what they mean. That is what happened when Secretary of State James Baker went to Moscow. Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, not in so many words, asked for help — Western concessions and cooperation to achieve reforms in the Soviet Union. Baker responded, not in so many words, that Gorbachev must win his own Kremlin battles. The United States must be cautious in case Gorbachev loses and is overthrown.

MINI-EDITORIAL — The Federal Aviation Administration has taken two years to crack down on pilots with drinking problems. We first reported in 1987 that the FAA had turned up the names of 10,300 pilots who had lost their driver's licenses for driving while intoxicated. The pilots were supposed to voluntarily report that to the FAA, but 76 percent of them lied and said they had no DWI conviction. Now the FAA is finally issuing regulations that allow the agency to keep a pilot with a drinking problem out of the sky. Why does it take so long to do something so logical?

CHARLEY REESE

Taxpayers handed OPIC insurance tabs

A lesson Americans must learn — especially conservatives — is that many large corporations pay lip service to free enterprise but actually embrace socialism.

Charley Reese

Their idea of free enterprise is for them to keep the profits but for the taxpayers to cover their risks and their losses. That strikes me as a rather lop-sided view of free enterprise.

Much of American government provides welfare for the corporate rich, and if we are going to dismantle the welfare state, there's no better place to start than in these outrageous public subsidies to the rich and arrogant.

Take OPIC, for example. OPIC is the Overseas Private Investment Corp., a government agency that, like most corporate welfare groups, is cleverly named to hide its government origins.

OPIC bureaucrats, for example, will tell you that the corporation — created by Congress as an adjunct to the Marshall Plan but never dismantled — is self-supporting. This is an example of deliberate disinformation.

The income it generates, primarily from insurance premiums, pays its operating costs. So it is self-sufficient to that degree. The insurance it issues, however, is covered by the U.S. taxpayers. As a taxpayer, you will be happy to know that you are liable for $8.4 billion in insurance.

You will be even happier to know that OPIC saddled you with this $8.4 billion liability to enable American corporations to take their money and their jobs and put them overseas.

OPIC insures American corporations which invest in foreign countries against expropriation, currency inconvertibility, and political violence. Why, you may wish to ask, should the American taxpayers provide insurance to private businesses which wish to invest in foreign countries?

The answer is that if the American people fully understood it, they wouldn't. There is no justification for government involvement in foreign investment unless there is some tangible benefit which accrues to the American nation as a whole.

How do we, who are saddled with the liability, benefit from Nabisco's peach-packing plant in Greece? Or from GE's plants in Korea and Nigeria? Or from Citibank's banks in Greece, Pakistan, Philippines, Senegal, Tunisia, China, Equador, India, Kenya, Taiwan, Uruguay, Jordan, Morocco, and Turkey? Isn't Coca-Cola rich enough to insure its $9 million investment in China through Lloyd's of London? Apparently not. Coke and OPIC have stuck you and me with this insurance.

OPIC would have you believe it helps small businesses but the bulk of its insurance is for the corporate giants like Citicorp, Coke, Nabisco, Exxon, Brown & Root, Caterpillar, American Express, and so on down the Fortune 500 line.

Make no mistake. If this insurance has to be paid, the Congress has agreed to tax the American people to pay it. The insurance and direct loans issued by OPIC are backed by the full faith and credit of the U.S. government — which translates into your paycheck, since you are the only source of revenue for the government.

If I were you, I'd write my representatives and senators and ask them why they have not abolished OPIC. I would ask them why the U.S. taxpayers should provide this service for large corporations which prefer to invest their money overseas rather in the U.S. I would ask them what possible justification is there for the U.S. government encouraging overseas investment when they themselves — the politicians — are always mouthing off about the need for jobs and capital investments in the U.S.

If H.J. Heinz, someone in Pennsylvania might inquire, wishes to build a food processing plant in Thailand rather than in Johnstown, Pa., then why should the taxpayers of Pennsylvania provide the insurance?

Someone in Michigan should ask their representatives why Michigan taxpayers are liable for the insurance OPIC issued to Ford Motor Co. for its automobile manufacturing plant in Turkey. And so on.

WILLIAM SAFIRE

Ethics must ask 'Is this right or shameful?'

WASHINGTON — My job in the Nixon administration was to turn off the lights after a meeting was over and call back into the darkened room, while unknown recorders still whirred, "But it would be wrong!"

William Safire

That experience made me an expert on ethics. Such crucibled purity comes in handy these days because — for the first time since Aristotle came to grips with the subject — ethics is getting a bad name.

"Ethics, shmethics," growls the Washington Establishment, an amalgam of officeholders, power brokers, wannabies, ustabies, thinktankers and a legion of world-weary thumbsuckers drawn up in vast, cumbrous array.

These are the Shmethicists, a new school of status quo seekers who believe that demand for a new stringency in standards of conduct is a passing frenzy.

Now that the swooshing scythe of ethics has harvested some certified Good Guys, the voice of the Shmethicist is tightening the Beltway, whining: Enough, already. Everybody did it.

This bloodletting cannot go on. Today's naive passion for the appearance of honesty will prevent talented people from entering government.

Not everyone in the Shmethicist School is unhappy at how the chickens of silent Calvinism have come home to roost. The Wall Street Journal, for example, has been consistent for decades in its editorial page tolerance of executive-branch sleaze; now, having led the crusade to bring down the House speaker in a way deserving of a Pulitzer Prize, its editorialists are doubled over in cognitive dissonance.

But most Shmethicists are unmistakably up in arms at the loss to the Republic of Mr. Wright for abusing his power for personal gain; of his chief staff aide, a criminal who escaped serious punishment and failed to recompense his victim; and the resignation of Rep. Tony Coelho, a fund-raising genius with dubious financing (who at least went out with class by confiding his decision exclusively to Michael Oreskes of The New York Times).

It would be easy to castigate the Shmethicists for allowing partisanship to temper their former zeal. Columnist Mary McGrory, who crusaded for the indictment of right-wing co-conspirators, now gutsily comes to the defense of the abandoned Speaker Wright, whose liberal and dovish ends apparently justify self-serving means. Easy, perhaps — but it would be wrong.

The ethics-shmethics debate has little to do with the philosophy of right vs. wrong and much to do with the human business of Getting Even.

Robert Bork's brilliance and outspokenness infuriated his ideological opponents; they distorted his legal views and unfairly imputed sexism and racism to Get Even with Reaganism.

John Tower's cold brusqueness in a generation in the Senate left a legacy of Tower-haters in congressional staff positions. Together with a spiteful woman scorned, they overwhelmed a committee chairman until he made past personal morality and drinking history the new test for Cabinet suitability. His longtime personal enemies Got Even.

Now the Republicans are Getting Even with "them" through the Housecleaning. The offenses are in no way comparable: Judge Bork was never accused of an ethical or moral lapse, and the revolving-door charges against Tower were tossed in at the end only to provide a respectable cover for senators uncomfortable with the booze-and-philandering ambush.

So the Shmethicists are correct to argue that the current fervor is rooted more in vengeance than in virtue.

They are in error, however, in holding that because the motive is suspect, the cause is unworthy or its effect unwholesome.

Political ethicists are not pointing merely to the appearance of conflict of interest and of failures to properly disclose, which are slips down the ethical slope, but to surreptitious corner-cutting, revolving-door graft and outrageous inequity.

Little lapses grow out of great lapses. Where is the conscience in congressmen who cravenly avoided accountable voting on an overdue pay raise? Nothing Speaker Wright or Rep. Coelho did to favor their friends or enrich themselves was nearly so unethical as setting up the backdoor trick that triggered such widespread public revulsion.

The much-ignored word is "conscience." Hamlet was wrong; it was not conscience, but the lack of it, that made cowards of the Congress. The standard should not be "How will this look?" or "Is there a rule?" Instead, it should be "Is this right?" or "Does this vote or this favor make me feel proud or ashamed?"

That's ethics, and it is not followed by shmethics.

Argentine president declares state of siege

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — President Raul Alfonsin declared a state of siege, and police guarded grocery stores in major cities today after widespread looting by people driven desperate by a collapsing economy.

Many groups of looters have been led by women and children, some of whom have eaten in supermarkets before fleeing with food.

At least three people were killed Monday during looting and riots in the northern city of Rosario, the government news agency Telam said.

Police said about 600 people were arrested and 41 — including five policemen — were injured by rubber bullets, tear gas, stones and fists. Another 300 were arrested in working class suburbs of Buenos Aires.

Alfonsin declared a 30-day state of siege Monday night. The order suspends civil liberties in an attempt to end a week of unrest by people angered by soaring inflation, rising unemployment, a devalued currency and shrunken wages.

The Alfonsin government, which replaced a military dictatorship, "had no alternative than this measure to preserve order and guarantee the property and liberty of citizens," said Interior Minister Juan Carlos Pugliese.

Argentina, rich in resources and once one of the world's wealthiest nations, has been in steady decline. Many trace the crisis back to the policies of former president Gen. Juan Domingo Peron, who nationalized industries and expanded social programs and public employment, allowing government to grow too big after he was elected president in 1946.

The country has a suffocating $59 billion foreign debt, and inflation hit nearly 388 percent last year. Inflation this month may top 70 percent, which amounts to an annual rate of 58,162 percent. Government austerity measures have added to the difficulties faced by Argentina's people.

It was the second uprising of its kind to strike a Latin American nation in four months. In February, at least 276 people died in Venezuela when rioting broke out over a government austerity plan aimed at easing payments on the foreign debt.

In the western city of Mendoza, where a supermarket was firebombed Friday, several others were looted Monday. In the central city of Cordoba, where 200 looters were arrested last week, there was a "hunger march." Cordoba is Argentina's second-largest city, Mendoza its fourth-largest.

The economic crisis has been blamed for the defeat of the governing Radical Civic Union by the Peronists in May 14 elections.

Pugliese blamed the unrest on "ultra-leftists ... who want to cause anarchy." He cited the coordination of assaults, jamming of police radio signals, and pamphlets urging Alfonsin to resign and workers to strike.

Leftist leaders denounced the state of siege and blamed the disturbances on the failure of Alfonsin's economic policy.

"The way to calm people down is to grant an immediate salary hike of 100 percent, index wages weekly, freeze prices and tell businesses and stores — on pain of confiscation — to deliver immediately food and medicine at the frozen prices," said deputy Luis Zamora of the Movement Toward Socialism.

In Rosario, a city of 955,000 people and the country's third-largest, shopkeeper Pablo Davola said he doubted the looting was politically motivated.

"I had a shotgun and had prepared a system to electrify the doors," the independent news agency Noticias Argentinas quoted him as saying. But when looters came in, "there were many people I knew, people from the neighborhood."

Under the state of siege, police can conduct raids without obtaining warrants and make arrests without specific charges. The decree must be approved by Congress, which was to review it today.

President-elect Carlos Menem, who is due to take office on Dec. 10, backed the decree, saying "this wave of confrontations, of disturbances, of lootings must stop" before it spreads.

Police in Rosario encouraged residents to stay home "due to ... the presence of armed individuals in distinct locations or moving throughout the city." The city center was patrolled by local police backed by 2,000 paramilitary border guards.

BACKGROUND:
Argentina declared independence from Spain on May 25, 1810. By the end of the 19th Century, the country had become the most well-educated and industrialized in all of Latin America. Elections were held in 1916, but a military coup ended democratic rule until 1946. In 1955, the military again took control of the government. Military and civilian rule continued until 1973, when General Peron was re-elected as President. He died 10 months later and his second wife, Isabel, took over the presidency. In 1976, she was ousted by military coup amid accusations of corruption. Economic and human rights conditions worsened under the military and, in 1983, democratic rule returned with the election of current President Alfonsin.

Duarte leaves office without fulfilling promise

By TOM GIBB
New York Times News Service

SAN SALVADOR — In 1986, Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Duarte wrote in his autobiography that when he finished his term of office he hoped to write a sequel.

"I would like to write how we ended the war," he said.

"I would like to write how the structure of the economy changed from a rigid, lopsided, dependent economic system to a dynamic, evenly distributive, self-sustaining one; how the political structure became multifaceted, representing everyone with dignity.

"This is my dream."

Duarte, 64, leaves office Thursday, his Christian Democratic Party divided and defeated by the far-right-wing Nationalist Republican Alliance, or ARENA, with no end in sight in the long civil war and with the economy more dependent on U.S. aid than ever.

For some, Duarte is regarded as the father of democracy in El Salvador.

To others, he is a puppet who presided over one of the bloodiest periods of his nation's history.

Duarte has been at the center of Salvadoran politics since the 1960s. He was three times elected mayor of San Salvador and then cheated of the presidency in 1972 after widespread electoral fraud by the military. Duarte was jailed and then exiled.

Since returning in 1980 to become head of a civilian-military junta, Duarte has been a key U.S. ally.

He was elected president in 1984 on a platform of peace and economic revival, defeating Roberto d'Aubuisson, the anti-Communist ARENA candidate.

U.S. officials have portrayed Duarte as the only democratic alternative to extremes of left and right.

He has played a crucial role in persuading Congress to keep the hundreds of millions of dollars of U.S. aid flowing — aid vital to the government's attempt to contain the leftist rebels of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front.

But former colleagues on the left accuse him of selling out, by forming an alliance with the military against the rebels as tens of thousands of civilians were murdered by military-operated death squads.

The right has strongly criticized Duarte for allowing himself to be surrounded by corrupt officials of his own party, placing personal loyalty above honesty or competence.

Ignacio Ellacuria, rector of the Jesuit University in San Salvador, credits Duarte with establishing some respect for civil liberties but says he was blinded by his ambition for power.

"He was never prepared to do anything that would have jeopardized his presidency," Ellacuria said.

"He calmly witnessed 30,000 assassinations with the feeble excuse that if he had not been there there would have been more."

He also criticized Duarte's defense of the military after civilian killings by soldiers, insisting there was no "proof" of wrongdoing.

The new ARENA government has pledged to reverse some of Duarte's reforms in an attempt to deny the rebels a social platform.

Cristiani says his government will privatize the National Bank and the export of coffee, cotton and sugar. ARENA has indicated it will not cancel Duarte's land reforms, which were only partially implemented.

Duarte's three rounds of direct talks with the rebels were fruitless, and El Salvador now takes in more from aid than from exports, sharing that distinction with the corrupt South Vietnamese regime propped up by the United States in the 1960s and '70s.

Duarte's successor is already being fitted into the role of America's "friend" by anxious U.S. officials here and in Washington.

In the words of one, "Cristiani is ARENA's Duarte."

Cristiani has praised Duarte for the recognition he achieved for El Salvador during the time death-squad activity made it "a world outcast."

He said that Duarte will be remembered as the Salvador's first civilian president to hand over power to another civilian after elections.

Minneapolis center attempts to rehabilitate torture victims

By NANCY SHULINS

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — At a clinic in a small stucco house near the University of Minnesota, doctors make a point of wearing street clothes instead of white coats, and patient files are stored in a bank vault.

Medical instruments are kept out of sight, along with scissors and other sharp objects. A psychologist may counsel a patient one day and take him to the dentist the next; the whine of a drill or sight of a needle can cause terror.

This is a story about people whose personalities have been taken apart, piece by piece, and the people who try to put them back together. The stucco house with its mismatched furniture, colorful artwork and donated plants is the Center for Victims of Torture, the nation's most ambitious attempt to rehabilitate torture survivors.

The psychologists, doctors and others who work here face a distinct disadvantage: Torture is ancient, but this is a science still inventing itself. "We are designing the car while riding in it," Linda Valerian says.

Though still a long way from the research, training, treatment and education institute envisioned by a governor's task force, the private, non-profit center already is looked to for leadership by a dozen groups trying to launch similar programs in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Elizabeth, N.J. In June, representatives of each group will travel to Minneapolis for four days of workshops.

The conference will focus on treatment of trauma because medical research on torture survivors has yet to be done. The 10 doctors, psychiatrists, psychologists and social workers at the Minneapolis outpatient clinic have borrowed from the treatment of rape victims, Vietnam veterans and others.

Executive director Douglas Johnson thinks torture victims are more profoundly damaged by their experience. "If you were raped or mugged, you would still have some hope of rescue," he says. "But being tortured by your government means losing all recourse. There's a sense of abandonment to evil."

Nearly three-fourths of the center's clients suffer from post-traumatic stress disorder, the disease of combat soldiers, rape victims and earthquake survivors. Symptoms include nightmares, flashbacks, loss of memory, inability to concentrate, and uncontrollable outbursts of anger.

In the beginning, client assessments were kept to a minimum, for fear that too many questions would trigger memories of interrogation. "For most people though, we've found the process was actually comforting," says Johnson, whose staff has begun compiling information as a prelude to serious research. The center also is raising money to renovate a much larger building the state is donating to enable the program to expand.

So far, 147 survivors and their relatives have been treated at the center. They have come from 21 countries, including Cambodia, Ethiopia,

Nearly all now live in Minnesota. With its myriad church and state refugee programs, the state has the highest per capita refugee population in the nation: 39,000 out of 6 million residents, not counting Central American and other illegal aliens. All told, Johnson thinks there could be as many as 6,000 torture survivors among them. Los Angeles could have 50,000 or more, he says.

Minnesota's clinic, established with the help of Gov. Rudy Perpich in 1985, is one of two full-service torture-treatment facilities in the United States. Chicago's Marjorie Kovler Center for the Treatment of Survivors of Torture opened in 1987, five years after Copenhagen established the first center. Others are operating in Toronto and Paris.

Typically, anywhere from one to 10 years pass before a client finds his way to Minneapolis for treatment. The physical evidence may be long gone, but the invisible, psychic wounds have yet to heal.

The victims' initial interview with Barbara Chester, the clinical director, may mark the first time they have ever discussed their experience. Some have trouble remembering; others can bring themselves to speak of it only in the third person, relaying tales of horror that happened to "others."

"It's hard for a nation of Donahue-watchers to understand the reticence of torture survivors," says Chester, a psychologist. "In the Third World, life is much more personal. Some things are simply not talked about."

Women who were sexually abused by their captors may view themselves as pariahs, she says. "There's also the stigma that you must have told them something, you must have joined the enemy, to be still alive."

Torture victims may not see the connection between the beatings of three years ago and the anxieties of today. But such delays aren't unusual. "You're so busy surviving, it may not be until you rest for a moment that this comes out," Chester says.

Center physician Neal Holtan has learned not to mince words: "I may ask point-blank if they've ever been tortured." Often, even when the answer is yes, the response is an unequivocal no. In some of the world's prisons, he says, "it's considered normal to be beaten up every day."

When the long-repressed symptoms do surface, the most mundane encounters, the most common objects, can cause panic. "A knock on the door, a ring of a bell, the turning on of a light bulb can trigger bad memories," says University of Minnesota law professor David Weissbrodt, a board member of both Amnesty International and the center.

For clients' protection, files are stored in a bank vault. For their comfort, the stucco house is unmarked. And when the center opened, four Buddhist monks ceremoniously chased evil spirits out of each room.

Psychologist Rosa Garcia-Peltoniemi and her colleagues probe gently. "We are careful not to play the role of interrogator, and we watch out for anything institutional in the atmosphere of the place." She looks at her donated office furniture and sighs. "I worry that my chairs are too drab."

Garcia-Peltoniemi, who came to America as a Cuban refugee in 1970, is especially attuned to her clients' adjustment problems. In their native countries, they may have been students, professionals or tribesmen. In America, they lose those identities.

"Refugees in America are also exposed to more risk than the average person," she says. "They may live in poor neighborhoods with drugs, crime, assaults. For refugees who've been traumatized, another incident can have a powerful effect."

For those kept alive by the American dream, the reality can be daunting. "They may feel angry at the political asylum process," says Chester. "They may feel that Americans should know what's happened. There's very little recognition of their terrible grief and loss."

The World Medical Association defines torture as "the deliberate, systematic or wanton infliction of physical or mental suffering by one or more persons acting alone or on the orders of any authority to force another person to yield information, to make a confession, or for any other reason."

Reports of torture have surfaced in 90 countries, according to Amnesty International, the worldwide human rights organization. By its count, torture is systematic in 30 countries, a serious problem in another 30.

Historians have tracked the institutionalization of torture to the Greeks and the Romans, who used it to extract confessions from slaves.

The pattern has stayed consistent through the ages, Chester says. "A small group of disenfranchised people

The notion of torture as truth serum has long since been disproved; extreme pain is likely to elicit whatever a torturer wants to hear.

But information isn't necessarily the objective, Johnson says. "The real purpose of torture is to dismantle the personality, leaving an empty husk. It is to leave the person ineffective, afraid to act, unable to lead, a warning to the rest of the community."

To those ends, it is chillingly effective, he says. "No one can withstand modern torture."

Most torturers just ordinary citizens, volunteer says

Linda Valerian, who is also a fundraiser and coordinator of volunteers for Minnesota's Center for Victims of Torture, has testified at immigration hearings as an expert witness on human rights abuses. She gained some of her insights from a former Salvadoran torturer, whom she interviewed at length.

Valerian remembers him as "charming and likable. He was most concerned that I would be upset by what he had to say." The torturer, who'd escaped to the United States, agreed to be interviewed to clear his conscience, she says.

His recruiters used a common technique. "Part of the training involved propaganda induction sessions," Valerian says. "He'd been told that World War III had started. Communists were secretly infiltrating the country, using it as a beachhead to take over the Western world.

"It was imperative that he be made to believe these people were holding the fate of the Western world in their hands."

In reality, the victims had been chosen at random, Valerian says. "He saw elderly men, pregnant women and kids. Still, he had no idea they weren't communists."

As part of his indoctrination, the torturer was himself tortured.

"The torturers are often beaten three times a day, sexually humiliated and punished arbitrarily," Valerian says. "This normalization of violence is the key. The training lasts nine months. This man from the back of his waist to his knees was one giant callus from canings with broom handles."

At the same time new recruits are being beaten, Valerian says, "they're taught that they're the ones who are informed as to what's really going on. They're the elite.

"There are people who do enjoy it. There's the power. The perks. The promise of a job for life. They're given cars. And they're paid very well, with liquor and drugs for the asking. A lot of the torture is done under the influence."

The Salvadoran came from a family of 14 in a rural area. "They were very poor and always hungry," Valerian says.

For a time, he did all that was asked of him. "He finally began to wonder when one of his superiors told him to cut the head off the body of someone they'd murdered and place it on his body as a warning to others," Valerian says. "He couldn't do it."

Early retirement plan coming up before council

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

City Council members will address next week a proposition that would allow a handful of employees to retire early but keep their municipal health insurance benefits.

City employees who are 60 and have 10 years service may retire but retain their municipal health insurance via monthly payments under current policy.

The city manager's office will suggest employees between the age of 50 and 60 who've worked for the city for at least 25 be allowed the same privilege.

The "special offer" will last for two months, Deputy City Manager Mike McGregor said last week.

The move is a part of the city's quest to lower budgetary demands.

While employed with the city, a worker pays about one-third of his health insurance premium. Under the current retirement policy and the special offer, the employee would pay one-half the premium.

In both instances, the city funds the remainder of the premium.

McGregor said authorities have targeted a staff reduction of 15 by Oct. 1, 1989.

Through regular retirement or resignation, the city has already met about 60 percent of that goal, McGregor said.

The city employs about 900 people, so the reduction amounts to little more than a 1 percent decrease in staff.

The move was implemented successfully in 1986 and 1987, McGregor said.

McGregor said the special offer would probably only apply to five to 10 employees.

Ex-president's use of LULAC account being investigated

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A recently-discovered bank account opened in the name of the League of United Latin American Citizens and used by its former president is the focus of an investigation by the Hispanic rights organization.

The account was used by former LULAC president Oscar Moran of San Antonio, who wrote thousands of dollars in checks, mostly for cash, the San Antonio Express-News reported Sunday.

When the account at Plaza Bank, N.A., was discovered it had only a few dollars in it. However, bank records reflect a deposit of a $10,000 check from Exxon Inc. of Houston and a $2,500 check from Aldolph Coors Brewing Company, the newspaper reported.

Account records indicate about $7,000 in checks, mostly written for cash, were drawn within a month.

An entrepreneur and LULAC's national chief for three years, Moran was the only signatory on the account and wrote many of the checks for cash after he was no longer the LULAC national president.

The Exxon check was written to LULAC Foundation in Washington, D.C., an organization of former national presidents. But current LULAC President Jose Garcia de Lara said the foundation never received the check.

"There was no real reason for the foundation to be aware of it," Moran said. "It came in the mail to my San Antonio office. I was going to become foundation president in April, which I did."

Moran told the Express-News he wrote the checks to settle accounts.

"I simply had not had a chance to tell anyone and transfer it to the present (LULAC) administration," Moran said.

LULAC's national treasurer Jose Botello of Dallas said he fears the account may threaten LULAC's nonprofit status granted by the Internal Revenue Service. Botello says he has frozen the account and conferred with IRS criminal investigators.

"I'm the national treasurer. I didn't know about it. (Garcia) de Lara didn't know about it. I have serious concerns and serious questions," Botello said.

Moran established the account on Oct. 17, 1985, about two months after he was elected president of LULAC. His term ended July 10, 1988.

An inquiry by Botello and Garcia de Lara into allegations of fraud, mismanagement and nepotism against LULAC Council 2 in San Antonio led to the discovery of the account, on which Moran was the only person authorized to sign.

Botello said he had the account frozen after learning the bank continued to honor thousands of dollars in checks written by Moran after control of the account had been transferred March 24.

A requirement that both Botello and de Lara sign checks before they could be honored apparently was not followed. Botello said has asked the bank "to restore the balance of the account for all checks paid for after the date we removed Mr. Oscar Moran's signature from the account."

Teachers honored for rare qualities

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The sweetness of life abounds even in rarefied forms.

And in Midland, there are many scholars and ex-students, inspired in their youth, who would say that a genuine, living sweetness is in Millie "Sweet Millie" Howard, a popular school teacher who is known for her caring qualities.

"She reaches out. She makes learning fun," said Midland High School grade-level principal Gene Isaacs at a recent retirement party for Mrs. Howard, a teacher of English, and Peggy Leeton, vocational adjustment coordinator.

The two teachers, admired by their peers and students, were kind to one another.

"Everyone loves Millie," said Mrs. Leeton. "She is absolutely so unusual. She is wonderful."

And Mrs. Howard said Mrs. Leeton "is a lovely lady."

Both could have retired from teaching at age 65, noted Mrs. Leeton, but didn't.

"We both taught a little over age time, but we enjoyed it," she said.

Mrs. Leeton said she is "one of them who went back to teaching after my children were grown," while Mrs. Howard was teaching while her children were at home and growing up.

"I couldn't have her as a teacher, and I was jealous because she's such a good teacher," lamented M.R. "Marc" Howard, who was graduated from Midland High School in 1968.

"I have people coming up all of the time to say that I am so lucky to have her as a mother because she's such a good teacher," Howard said.

The retiring teachers said they revel in teaching and find the demands of teaching most rewarding.

"I have felt like a mother more than a school teacher," Mrs. Leeton said of her role as a teacher. "I look at school from a parent's viewpoint" due to her years of rearing five children and working in Parent-Teacher Associations.

"I have never gotten over being a parent," Mrs. Leeton said. "I am very fond of these young people, and I'm very optimistic about today's young people."

Both teachers are active in Midland civic and cultural affairs and both have been honored as "Outstanding Teacher of the Year" by the Midland Kiwanis Club.

Mrs. Howard posts a motto that is a tribute to her students: "Many have been my students. All have been my teachers."

One of her former students, 22-year-old Angie Baldinelli, described Mrs. Howard as "vivacious" and "comfortable" to be around.

"She has a glow of love about her," Miss Baldinelli said. "Even if you didn't know she was so loving, you can see the glow about her."

Mary Frances Beverley, one of Mrs. Howard's fellow teachers in the 1960s, lauded her.

"She could teach students who were determined not to learn anything," Mrs. Beverley said. "She was fabulous."

Another teacher, who happens to be Mrs. Howard's daughter-in-law, noted that Mrs. Howard "has changed the hearts of many a student by her example from being 'fighters to being lovers.'

"Her ability to keep a healthy, loving sense of humor and not take things too seriously has been a relief and a welcome change for all of us at Midland High," Vickie Howard said.

Dolores Hundley described Mrs. Howard as a "selfless" person whose positive attitude is contagious."

Mrs. Howard has been teaching in Midland public schools since 1962, and Mrs. Leeton first started teaching here in 1974.

Mrs. Leeton is a graduate of Texas Christian University. Mrs. Howard was graduated from Hardin-Simmons University. Both have done graduate work at other universities.

"I was going to retire two years ago," said Mrs. Howard, "but they rehired me."

In high school and in college, Mrs. Howard was twice "voted most likely to succeed."

And in jest, she reflected on those honors: "And I ended up the 'brokest' one of my classmates. That's what we call 'dramatic irony.'"

And if she were to return to school as a student, "I would learn how to make money and keep it," said Mrs. Howard.

"No," she said. "I enjoy teaching. I love it. It's stimulating and challenging."

Couple weds on longest, strangest day of Legislature

AUSTIN (AP) — It was a long, strange road but the strangest stretch was the last of the 1989 legislative session, which included a wedding in the House chamber and other assorted eleventh-hour oddities.

During a 7 p.m. dinner break in the frenzied final hours of lawmaking, House Speaker Gib Lewis gave away Bekki Lammert to her beau, Cowboy Hines, in a wedding ceremony on the speaker's podium.

"Just take your seats, just like you were in church," Lewis told meandering lawmakers who had not yet left the floor when the ceremony was about to begin. He also asked House members to offer their chairs to wedding guests.

Lammert, who is Lewis' director of administration and special programs, married Hines, who works for the State Purchasing and General Services Commission in a ceremony that included the Texas standby, "Waltz Across Texas."

Mike Moncrief, former Tarrant County judge, officiated and the couple was attended by best man Guich Koock and maid of honor, Gayle Harris, executive director of the Texas Wildlife Association.

"As far as we can tell, no one has gotten married on sine die," Hines said. Sine die is Latin for "without another day," and refers to the last day of the regular legislative session.

Before the ceremony, Hines said the couple decided on the unusual nuptials because, "Everyone we know and would invite is going to be here anyway."

As in recent years, Rep. Ernestine Glossbrenner, D-Alice, sang to signal the end of the regular legislative session, but this time all the women representatives joined her.

And in closing, lawmakers recognized Rep. Jerry Beauchamp, D-San Antonio, as a "Legislative Master Mumbler" for his lack of elocution in speaking during House debate on bills.

Other items peppering the last day of lawmaking included a resolution the House approved honoring the Lonesome Dove Baptist Church, namesake of the Pulitzer Prize-winning novel by Larry McMurtry.

The 143-year-old Tarrant County church was named through "divine guidance," the resolution said, when members, praying about the decision, saw a dove land in a nearby tree and took it as a sign from above.

Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, a member of the House-Senate budget conference committee, presented each member with a little stuffed pig in a barrel, as a memento of their work on the $47.4 billion spending plan.

Legislators praised for making 'tough, courageous decisions'

AUSTIN (AP) — Although a special session has been called to try to finish reform of the workers' compensation system, top state leaders today praised other work of the 1989 Legislature.

Clements announced the June 20 special session on workers' compensation about six hours before Monday's midnight session end, insisting he wants a reform bill adopted.

"Our current workers' compensation system is one of the worst in the nation ... It's hurting our efforts to bring new jobs to Texas," Clements said.

But he said the rest of the session was productive.

"Texas is at the crossroads, and the Texas Legislature will be known for its tough and courageous decisions in a time of historic change in our state," said Gov. Bill Clements.

Clements hailed passage of a $47.4 billion, two-year budget that won't require a tax increase, plus the overhaul of the state's criminal justice system, construction of 11,000 more prison beds and mergers of South Texas colleges with the Texas A&M and University of Texas systems.

The session, Clements said, "will rank as one of the most productive in Texas history."

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby noted those achievements on his list of major accomplishments. He also cited legislation to provide water and sewer service to colonias and a six-fold increase in funding for AIDS research, treatment and education.

House Speaker Gib Lewis called it "a very successful session. We addressed major issues of this state. We made some very hard decisions. We were very lucky that we were able to increase our budget without a tax bill and at the same time decrease taxes in some areas."

The $47.4 billion budget that won approval represents a 12 percent increase over the current, $42.3 billion spending plan. It also allows about $500 million in temporary taxes passed in 1987 to expire on Aug. 31.

Some lawmakers criticized the budget as shortsighted and virtually requiring a tax hike in 1991.

Money was much on the minds of legislators, who decided to ask for a raise. Their last pay increase came in 1974, when the salary for their part-time jobs was boosted to $7,200 a year.

Under the proposed constitutional amendment that sailed through the House and Senate, lawmakers would see their salary tripled to $23,358 if voters agree this November.

Under the new plan, legislators in the future would be paid 25 percent of the governor's salary — which they set. That would allow them to control their own pay scale instead of constantly asking voters to amend the Constitution. The lieutenant governor and House speaker would get half the governor's salary, or $46,716 in 1991.

Although the 1989 session lacked the extraordinary tax-and-spending battles of recent years, lawmakers dealt with numerous issues. Those included:

PRISONS

A criminal justice bill would allow the now-overloaded Texas prison system to become the nation's second-largest, with more than 60,000 beds, by 1993.

The plan calls for the construction of about 11,000 more prison beds at new state and regional correction facilities, along with up to 7,500 additional spaces in community-based programs.

These county-based facilities — seen by lawmakers as critical to easing overcrowding at the Texas Department of Corrections — include so-called "boot camps," restitution centers, alcohol and drug treatment units, work-release facilities and halfway houses.

"Criminals now know that if they commit the crime, they'll soon hear the jail door slam," the governor said.

COLONIAS

Clements said he supports a sweeping bill to provide millions of dollars to build water and sewer facilities in the substandard housing developments called colonias.

The measure, sought by Rio Grande Valley residents and others for years, also would give counties powers to restrict the growth of such developments in the future.

AGRICULTURE

Each state agency faces "sunset" review every 12 years, when a bill continuing it must pass, or the agency dies. This year, it was controversial Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower's turn, and the outcome remained in doubt until the last days.

Clements, a Republican, had indicated he might veto the bill and kill Democrat Hightower's agency as Hightower took heat over pesticide regulation and promotion of hormone-free beef.

A last-minute compromise won the governor's support. Pesticide regulation was turned over to a nine-member board, of which Hightower is chairman. He's seeking a third term and apparently will have a Department of Agriculture to run if he wins.

FORECLOSURES

Perhaps inevitable when the state leads the nation in bank failures and depressed real estate, lawmakers tangled over a proposal to make it harder for lenders to sell foreclosed property for less than it's worth, then sue for the difference.

DEATHS

Leonard F. Thomas

Services for Leonard F. "Tommy" Thomas, formerly of Midland, were to be at 2 p.m. today at the Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Revs. Earl Ball and Ross Payne officiating.

Interment will follow at Fairview Cemetery under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Thomas died in Truth or Consequences, N.M., last Friday.

He was born in Taylor, Ark., and reared in Smackover, Ark. After graduation from high school, he enlisted in the U.S. Navy.

During World War II he served in the Pacific Theater of Operations and was involved in several battles, including the Battle of Midway.

Following his discharge from the Navy, he worked as a journeyman lineman in various cities across the southwest. He retired in Tucson, Ariz., in 1972.

Thomas married Nona Truelove on Jan. 24, 1948, in Odessa. He was a member of the First Baptist Church of Truth or Consequences, N.M., and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 769.

Suvivors include his wife of Truth or Consequences, N.M.; one daughter, Patsy L. Jensen of Wilcox, Ariz.; four brothers, J.R. Thomas of Conway, Ark., C.C. Thomas and Jim Thomas, both of Russellville, Ark., and Jack Thomas of Smackover, Ark.; one sister, Betty Jo Black of Silsbee; and four grandchildren.

Pallbearers were to be Pete Simmons, Dell Truelove, Dozier Truelove, R.C. Cauble, E.J. Walden and Dub Lynch.

Honorary pallbearers were to be Ray Burrow, Bill Mayfield, Charles Nichels, Henry Conder, Dutch Mayfield, Jim Truelove and Joe Truelove.

Carleta 'Corky' Parnell

BIG SPRING — Carleta "Corky" Parnell, 62, of Big Spring, died Saturday at her residence.

Funeral services will be at 2 p.m. Wednesday at Nalley-Pickle and Welch Rosewood Chapel with the Rev. James Wilborn officiating.

Burial will be in Trinity Memorial Park in Big Spring.

She was born Oct. 21, 1926, in Carbon. She married Shelby Parnell Dec. 8, 1945, in Stephenville. He died Feb. 25, 1987.

She was a member of Wesley United Methodist Church. She moved to Big Spring with her husband in 1957 from Ranger.

She worked as a nurse at the Big Spring State Hospital and also had worked for Webb Air Force Base as a nurse.

Suvivors include two daughters, Shelane Roberts of Big Spring and Duanne Stockton of Midland; two sons, J.I. Parnell of Belton and Greg Parnell of Los Angeles, Calif.; her parents, Carl and Iantha Elliott of Big Spring; one sister, Marleece Vay Kendrick of Albuquerque, N.M.; seven grandchildren and three great grandchildren.

The family suggests memorials be directed to the Big Spring Humane Society or the Wesley United Methodist Church.

Mary Dell Davis

Services for Mrs. Mary Dell Davis will be at 1 p.m. Wednesday at the Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. John Wilson, associate pastor of St. Luke's United Methodist Church, officiating.

Interment will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

She died Sunday night at a Midland hospital.

Mrs. Davis was born Sept. 7, 1931, in Eldorado, Ark. She moved to Midland with her family in 1940. She was a 1947 graduate of Midland High School and married Bill B. Davis in Midland that same year.

They moved to New Mexico in 1951, then to Lubbock in 1959. They returned to Midland in 1966.

She was a member of St. Luke's United Methodist Church.

Survivors include her husband of Midland; two sons, Billy Davis of Hobbs, N.M., and Ben Davis of Midland; one daughter, Debbie Davis of Midland; one brother, Billy Dillon of Chula Vista, Calif.; and three grandchildren.

The family requests memorial be directed to the American Cancer Society.

Pallbearers were to be Bob Reimers, Dick Gregory, Tracy Clark, Charlie Andrews, Norman Newman and Dean Cox.

Ricardo Ramirez Jr.

KERMIT — A rosary service for Ricardo "Junior" Ramirez, 18, of Wink was recited Monday in Wink. Funeral services were to be at 11 a.m. today at St. Joseph's Catholic Church, with the Rev. Jose Ramirez officiating. Burial was to follow in the Kermit Cemetery under the direction of Cooper Funeral Chapel.

Ramirez died Sunday from injuries he sustained in an automobile accident near Kermit.

He was born May 14, 1971, in Mexico and was a Wink High School student. He had lived in Wink for the past nine years and was a member of the Catholic Church.

Survivors include his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ricardo Ramirez of Wink; three brothers, George Ramirez, Cesar Ramirez and Armando Ramirez, all of Wink; two sisters, Rosa Rodriquez of Kermit and Ruby Ramirez of Wink; his maternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Salvador Saenz of Ulato, Mexico; his paternal grandfather, Francisco Ramirez of Midland.

'Jug' Shelton

Funeral services for "Jug" Shelton, 61, of Lampasas, will be held at 2 p.m. Thursday at the Briggs-Gamel-Wilcox Funeral Home in Lampasas, with the Rev. Reid Schaub officiating.

Shelton, who died Monday at a Lampasas hospital, will be buried in Oak Hill Cemetery.

Born Dec. 11, 1927, in Groesbeck, Shelton was a 12-year Lampasas resident and former owner of Shelton Tire Co., Lone Star Drilling of Phoenix, Ariz., and Kingsland, and the S Bar 5 ranch. He was a former Texaco distributor, an AMVETS members and Lions Club member. He married June Alvey on July 3, 1947, in Hobbs, N.M.

He is survived by his wife of Lampasas; two daughters, Sandra Ashlock and Mitzi Shepard of Lampasas; one sister, Hazel Hellums of Midland; and two grandchildren, one stepgrandchild, one niece and two nephews.

The family asks that donations be sent to the American Cancer Society.

Thula Dean Cox

Thula Dean Cox, 63, of Midland, died Friday at her home following a brief illness.

Services will be at 10 a.m. Wednesday at the Fairmont Church of Christ with Ralph Gates, pastor, officiating. Burial will be in Resthaven Memorial Park with Thomas Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

Born May 25, 1926, in Santa Anna, Mrs. Cox had been a Midland resident since the late 1940s. She was preceded in death by her husband, Elzy Cox.

She is survived by one son, Glen David Cox of Midland; one daughter, Joan Cox Bonneau of Midland; and four grandchildren.

Doris LaVelle Banks

Funeral services for Doris LaVelle Banks of Midland were to be today at 3 p.m. at the First Baptist Church sanctuary.

Interment was to follow at Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Pallbearers were to be George Hemenway, Jack Barnes, David Hemenway, Bryon Johnston, Ted Hemenway and John Swanson.

Compromise AIDS bill finally hammered out

AUSTIN (AP) — A compromise on AIDS legislation reached with only minutes remaining in the 1989 regular legislative session is not perfect, but is the best that could be done, one lawmaker said.

"History will suggest that we have risen above our own shortcomings ... perhaps above our fear of each other," said Sen. Craig Washington, D-Houston.

"We worked hard for months ... almost two years" on the legislation that seemed doomed until the final hours of the session Monday, said Sen. Chet Brooks, D-Pasadena.

"We thought this issue was dead ... that differences couldn't be resolved," Sen. Chet Brooks, author of the Senate AIDS legislation, told senators before their vote just minutes before the midnight deadline.

But, he said, with the legislation, lawmakers succeeded addressing "the most critical health problem facing this country and facing our state." The legislation now will be sent to the governor for review.

Rep. Mike McKinney, a co-author of the House legislation, blamed delays in adopting a compromise measure between House and Senate proposals on special interest groups, who he said were advancing political causes rather than fighting the deadly disease.

But after the measure passed, McKinney, D-Centerville, said, "It's a good bill. It will address the problem" of acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Rep. Brad Wright, a House co-author, said agreed changes in the bill include allowing community organizations to pay for education materials and programs about acquired immune deficiency syndrome with one-third of their grants from the state.

The House previously had not devoted any of the $18 million state appropriation for AIDS to education, prevention or risk-reduction. All the money was to be used for services to people with AIDS.

Under the plan, the Texas Department of Health would be required to hold a public hearing before issuing AIDS grants over $25,000. It also would prohibit grants to organizations promoting political causes or candidates or illegal activity, including sodomy and illegal drug use.

House OKs bill making damage to places of worship a felony

AUSTIN (AP) — It would be a felony to destroy or damage a place of worship, cemetery or community center under a bill sent to Gov. Bill Clements by lawmakers.

"The situation arose in Dallas, where there were synagogues that had been destroyed by skinheads, and it's designed to address that issue," said Rep. Steve Wolens, D-Dallas, after the bill was approved Monday.

Community centers would fall under the bill if they offer medical, social or educational programs.

The crime would be punishable by a maximum of two to 10 years in prison and a $5,000 fine if the loss was less than $20,000. For greater loss, the maximum punishment would be two to 20 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

The current penalty is a misdemeanor carrying a maximum penalty of incarceration for a year and a $2,000 fine.

The House approved Senate changes and sent the measure to the governor after concerns were raised about whether the bill would apply to abortion protesters.

Rep. Charlie Hartland, R-Houston, urged lawmakers not to approve the bill, saying he wanted to be sure it would not apply if protesters caused a clinic to lose money.

Wolens said the measure only would apply in cases in which a building was destroyed or damage, not when profits were lost.

In other action, a legislative maneuver saved a bill that would make it easier for people to gain access to government records.

A bill making the Open Records Act changes died under House rules when it failed to get a vote in that chamber before midnight Friday. But Sen. Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, added the changes to another bill that was returned to the House and approved.

"Any time we improve accessibility for people to have access to open government, I think that's an overall improvement. I'm extremely happy," said Rep. Orlando Garcia, D-San Antonio.

Under the bill sent to the governor for consideration, limits would be set on how much governmental entities could charge for copies of documents. Among other changes, the bill also would state that governmental records held by private contractors are subject to disclosure and give people access to government records that are kept on them.

Jay Rosser, deputy press secretary for Clements, said the governor would review the bill. He added, "The governor has been known as a staunch supporter of open records legislation."

Also Monday, a bill continuing the Commission on Human Rights was sent to Clements.

As initially approved by the House, the bill would not have allowed the commission to investigate complaints of discrimination based on AIDS or on addiction to alcohol or drugs.

SESSION—

The bill applies to someone whose home or other property is foreclosed on and sold. If the lender sued in an attempt to recoup the difference between the sale price and the debt, the debtor could go to court to try to prove the property was worth more than the sale price.

COLLEGE ATHLETICS

Gov. Clements, who apologized two years ago for his role in the pay-for-play football scandal that rocked Southern Methodist University, signed a measure making it a crime to offer financial incentives to an athlete to persuade him to attend a specific university.

Backers said it was needed given the state's national reputation for football problems and with six Southwest Conference schools having been disciplined in the last three years.

CAPITOL RESTORATION

Lawmakers also approved a plan to improve their surroundings.

A $154 million program was OK'd to restore the Capitol and add a four-story underground annex that will include new offices for many members of the Legislature.

CRAZY—

"I don't know whether it's indicative of what he thought we were doing or not," said House budget leader, Rep. Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, who distributed the porkers to his colleagues.

In previous years, Montford has given the budget committee members hatchets and miniature logs, representing "log-rolling," said Rudd, who was sporting a button saying, "Every so often an innocent man is sent to the Legislature."

And Rep. Al Edwards, D-Houston, whose proposal to cut off the fingers of drug offenders never reached the House floor, proposed a resolution to have the state study the idea.

House members refused to consider the suggestion, however, after Edwards displayed his "finger guillotine" while trying to persuade them.

Blaze which damaged home may have been set

From Staff Reports

A fire that heavily damaged a Midland home late Monday may have been intentionally set, Fire Marshal Jerry Petree said today.

No injuries were reported in the blaze, which broke out just before 8 p.m. in the home near the intersection of Humble Avenue and Tarleton Street, five blocks south of Lee High School.

"It is going to be investigated as an arson, I am sure of that," Petree said. "Other than that I don't want to say anything about it right now."

The fire started in the living room area of the one-story, two-bedroom home at 2002 Tarleton St., then spread to the den and kitchen, Petree said. The home is occupied, but is temporarily vacant while some remodeling work is done, he said.

The living room, kitchen and den was heavily damaged by fire, with heat and smoke damage reported to the rest of the house, according to reports.

After the fire was reported at 7:42 p.m., four units and 10 firefighters responded. The last unit returned to its station at 9:26 p.m., according to reports.

Japan seeks European support

Europe urged to fight U.S. policies

By STEVEN GREENHOUSE
New York. Times News Service

PARIS — Japanese officials are hoping to use a gathering of the industrial world's economic and finance ministers here Wednesday to rally European countries against U.S. trade policies.

Last week the United States cited Japan, India and Brazil for unfair trade practices and threatened retaliation unless certain import barriers were removed. The countries were cited under a provision in trade legislation enacted by Congress last year.

The annual ministerial meeting of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development is expected to discuss the American action, which has been strongly criticized by the countries affected.

In an interview, one Japanese official said, "The Europeans agree with us that the world trade system can be hurt by such unilateral measures."

The concern about trade protection will give the two-day session a different focus from last year's meeting, when economic officials expressed grave concern about the lingering American trade deficit and the stubborn Japanese and West German trade surpluses.

U.S. raises stakes in trade war with Japan

By CARL IRVING

SAN FRANCISCO — The United States has raised the stakes in its unending efforts to force Japan to stop unfair trade practices.

An analysis

Pressed by welling anger in Congress, the Bush administration chose last week to point fingers at Japan for closing its doors to U.S. products, specifically supercomputers, satellites and forest products.

The act is tantamount to publicly humiliating an ally highly sensitive to such gestures, a country on whom America now depends for investments

New home sales leap 11 percent in April

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sales of new homes rose 10.9 percent in April after declining during the previous two months, but the pace of sales still was running well behind that of the past two years, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said sales of new single-family homes rose to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 620,000 units in April after dropping 10.4 percent in March and 10.9 percent in February.

While April's 10.9 percent jump in sales was the biggest increase since a 13.9 percent surge in February 1988, the pace of sales still was well behind the 676,000 new homes sold in 1988 and the 671,000 sold in 1987.

For the first four months of the year, new home sales were 4.7 percent lower than in the same period a year earlier.

The housing industry has been among the sectors of the economy hardest hit by the Federal Reserve's campaign to push up interest rates in an effort to slow economic growth and thus restrain inflation.

Fixed-rate mortgages in April averaged between 10.99 percent and 11.11 percent, down only slightly from a peak of 11.22 percent in March, according to a weekly national survey by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp.

April's partial rebound in home sales was concentrated in the West, where sales rose 31.3 percent to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 193,000 units after falling 26.1 percent during March. Sales also rose in the South, climbing 21.2 percent in April to a rate of 234,000 units after dropping 16.8 percent in March.

Sales were down last month elsewhere in the country. In the Northeast, sales fell 17.2 percent in April to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 96,000 units after surging 33.3 percent in March. In the Midwest, sales dropped 6.8 percent to a rate of 96,000 units after falling 3.7 percent in March.

The increase in sales was accompanied by a $9,000 drop in the median price of the homes sold, the first decline since last November. The April median price for a new home was $117,000.

Pemex forms affiliate to export oil

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The government oil monopoly Pemex has formed a new international affiliate for the export of crude oils worldwide, the company announced.

In a statement released in Mexico City Monday, Pemex said the new affiliate will be known as PMI Comercio Internacional, S.A. de C.V. and will "be charged with bringing to the world market Mexican petroleum products ... with the goal of being more competitive and agile."

The statement said the announcement was initially made in Tokyo by company director Francisco Rojas, who is in Japan to renegotiate a 10-year contract to continue exporting Mexican petroleum to the Asian nation.

BMW outselling Mercedes Benz

New York Times News Service

MUNICH, West Germany — Eberhard von Kuenheim, the chairman of Bayerische Motoren Werke AG, exudes confidence as he contemplates the automobile business from his office atop the company's distinctive high-rise headquarters here.

These are prosperous times for the company, which makes BMW cars and motorcycles.

The booming European car market shows few signs of cooling, and BMW's market share climbed to 2.9 percent last year, from 2.7 percent a year earlier.

The company's new, more expensive models are selling strongly, and earnings are rising.

Even in the slumping United States market for luxury imports and the difficult Japanese auto market, it is besting its West German rivals.

But undoubtedly the most satisfying development for von Kuenheim is BMW's success in toppling archrival Daimler Benz AG, the producer of Mercedes-Benz cars, from its position as the European market leader in high-powered luxury automobiles.

BMW has replaced Mercedes Benz as European market leader in high-powered luxury cars.

"For over two years, we have sold considerably more cars of our 7 series than Mercedes has of its S-class here in the Federal Republic," he said in an interview.

The BMW 7 series of cars, which includes the flagship 750iL model with a V-12 engine, competes against

New York Times News Service

Many business leaders, worried that in the long run they may be hit with the cost of health care for millions of uninsured people, are beginning to advocate a greater role for the federal government in extending coverage to all Americans.

As many as 37 million people in this country have no medical coverage, according to the Employee Benefit Research Institute, a non-profit group in Washington.

And the ranks of the uninsured are growing as government programs and employers tighten eligibility standards, squeezing out part-time employees and other low-income workers and their families.

"There is grudging recognition among a hefty majority of our members that health care has moved to being a right," said Willis B. Goldbeck, president of the Washington Business Group on Health, an association of 180 large companies.

The fear among leaders of business groups is that the denial of care to those now falling through the cracks may provoke a political backlash that will increase the financial burden on industry.

As a result, many argue that, despite previous opposition to greater government involvement, any expansion of benefits needs to be financed by the nation as a whole.

"I never thought I would be in favor of a government health policy, but there are things that government must do," said Robert E. Mercer, who retired recently as chairman of Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. and is still a board member at four other large companies. "We have to spread the burden."

"No matter how the system is designed, we're all going to pay for it," said Richard E. Heckert, chairman of the National Association of Manufacturers.

However, he said, "Running those costs through industry and business is one of the dumbest things we can do if we want to be internationally competitive."

Employers are expected to spend more than $140 billion this year on medical care for active and retired employees and their families.

Government spending on health care is projected to exceed $230 billion.

Because of the enormous expense of these programs, the government and most employers have tried to temper explosive growth in medical spending by tightening eligibility requirements for beneficiaries.

But, in an unplanned consequence, the number of people without health insurance grew by seven million between 1980 and 1987.

The 37 million total includes 10.8 million full-time workers, 7.6 million part-time employees and 12.2 million children under age 18.

In 1986, 13.5 million people said they had been unable to obtain medical care for financial reasons.

Economists say hospitals and physicians have shifted the cost of most services for the uninsured to employers — by raising fees.

Moreover, hard-pressed hospitals, already squeezed by federal spending constraints, have absorbed $7 billion annually in free care and unpaid fees.

Physician and hospital groups want to start negotiating before dissatisfied employers and the government impose radical solutions.

"I'm hopeful we can sit down with the NAM, the Business Roundtable and small business groups and work out some solutions," said Dr. James H. Sammons, executive vice president of the American Medical Association.

"We just need to get very serious — the payers, government and providers — and begin to seriously address the holes in the system," said Carol McCarthy, president of the American Hospital Association.

Dick Wardrop, director of health care management at the Aluminum Company of America and chairman of the Washington Business Group on Health, said that group was seeking answers to "the intertwined problems" of access, quality of care and getting costs under control.

"We want to address all three at the same time," he said.

"We don't think the country would allow our companies to solve our problems and ignore the access problem."

The issues are also getting attention in Congress, at labor union bargaining tables and in small-business groups.

Crude oil posted price still split

From Staff and Wire Reports

The posted price for West Texas Intermediate remained split today with 10 crude oil buyers holding at $19.25 and nine dropping prices to $18.50. The price split evolved Friday before the Memorial Day weekend.

A spokesman for Permian Corp. said the company intended to hold for awhile, even though the pressure on prices is downward.

Crude buyers holding firm on the $19.25 price received help today from the New York Mercantile Exchange as July contracts for West Texas Intermediate gained 12 cents to stand at $19.64.

The crude gained four cents Friday to close at $19.52 a barrel. Prices one year ago stood at $17.45. The Exchange was closed Monday for the Memorial Day holiday.

Dollar up slightly; Gold down

LONDON (AP) — The dollar rose in early European trading today, but eased slightly following the Deutsche Bundesbank's announcement of central bank intervention in the market. Gold prices fell.

Foreign currency dealers said trading remained thin following Monday's holidays in the United States and Britain.

The West German central bank confirmed it sold dollars in the open foreign exchange market early in the session, and said it was joined by the Bank of Italy and the Bank of England.

The Bank of Japan intervened in earlier Asian trading and said it will raise its official discount rate by 0.75 percentage points to 3.25 percent on Wednesday.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar rose 0.22 yen to a closing 143.10 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at 143.45 yen.

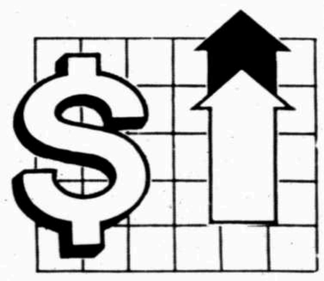
- 2.0105 West German marks, up from 2.0101
- 1.7570 Swiss francs, up from 1.7550
- 6.8070 French francs, up from 6.8025
- 2.2683 Dutch guilders, up from 2.2625
- 1,453 Italian lire, down from 1,454
- 1.2078 Canadian dollars, up from 1.2047
- In London, it cost $1.5655 to buy one pound, compared with $1.5710 late Monday in Europe.



Gold prices drifted lower in response to the dollar's continuing strength, bullion dealers said.

"The market is very quiet with little investor interest," said one dealer, explaining why the precious metal hadn't encountered greater selling pressure from the dollar's buoyancy.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $362.40 a troy ounce, down from $363.75 late Friday. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $362.10.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell 43 cents to close at a bid $362.73.

Silver was quoted in London at a bid price of $5.21 a troy ounce, down from Friday's $5.27.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Kinder-Care Inc. announces restructure

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — Kinder-Care Inc., the nation's largest operator of day-care centers, announced a restructuring that will separate its day care and education operations from its financial and retail division to reduce its overall debt.

A key part of the restructuring will be the distribution of shares of Kinder-Care Learning Centers to Kinder-Care shareholders, Perry Mendel, the Montgomery-based company's chairman and founder, announced Monday.

NEW YORK (AP) — The price of Avon Products Inc. stock bobbed up again on word of Mary Kay Corp.'s interest in the cosmetics company.

Speculators bought Avon stock on the possibility that Mary Kay or another suitor might engage in a relentless pursuit of Avon, which rejected a $2.1 billion takeover bid from Amway Corp. earlier this month.

Vacationers will drive more this summer

Vacationers are expected to drive more this summer than last despite the recent jump in gasoline prices but will take shorter trips, according to travel industry groups.

Motor vehicles will account for nearly 83 percent of all summer travel, with 273 million vacationers expected to travel the nation's roads and highways in the 14-week period between Memorial Day and Labor Day, a 4 percent increase over 1988.

Singer barred from selling its assets

WASHINGTON (AP) — Singer Co. has been barred from selling any of its assets or paying stock dividends pending a lawsuit over claims that a former subsidiary defrauded the government.

The company, named as a co-defendant in a civil suit against its former Link Flight Simulation Division, was also ordered not to incur any new debt or make any payments to investor Paul Bilzerian, the Florida financier who acquired the company last year.

Agency 'good to the last drop' dropped

NEW YORK (AP) — General Foods USA has fired Ogilvy & Mather as the advertising agency for its Maxwell House coffee brand, which Ogilvy has touted for 31 years as being "Good to the last drop."

The food company said Friday that following a review of several months it was awarding the account valued at more than $50 million to D'Arcy Masius Benton & Bowles, another New York-based ad agency.

The time for Texas is now.

Every state in the union wanted the Supercollider. We got it.

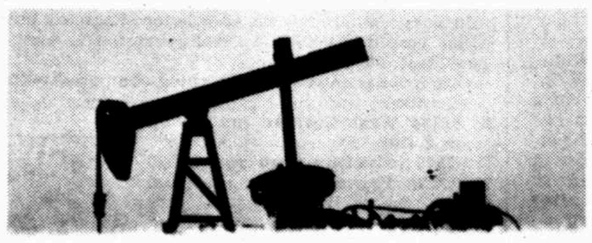
The Austin to Dallas corridor is quickly becoming a magnet for high-tech companies. Sematech, the research consortium recently created in Austin, is a giant step forward.

South of Houston, the Johnson Space Center is thriving as the hub of the expanding U.S. aerospace industry.

We're the number two state in foreign trade. We export $26 billion worth of products a year. Of the 10 most popular U.S. exports, 8 are manufactured here.

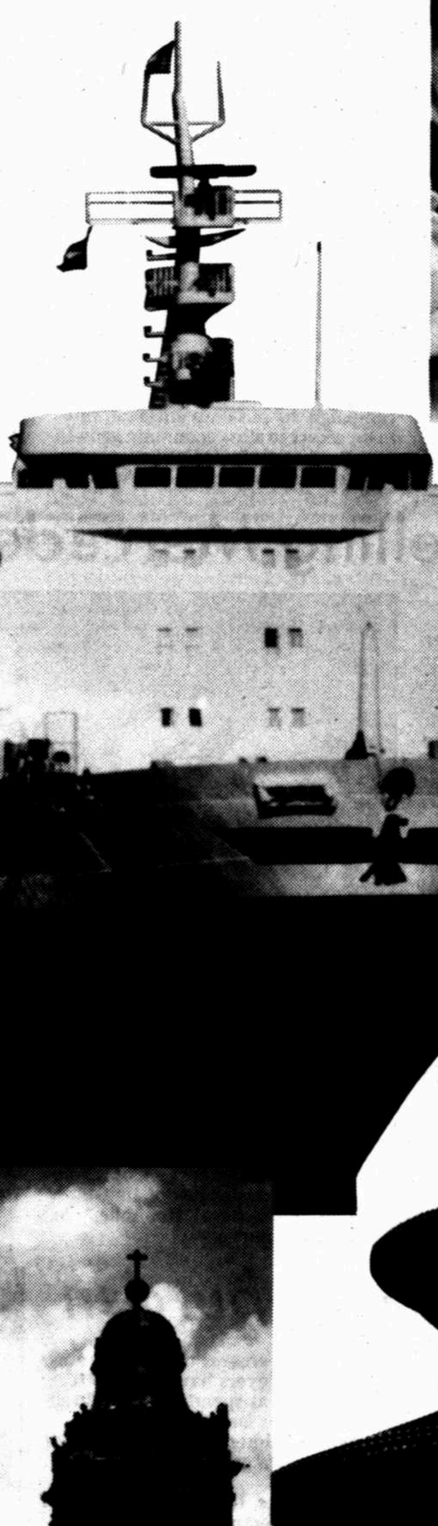
This year, Texas will do over $300 billion worth of business. If we were an independent country, that would put us among the 10 leading economic powers in the world.

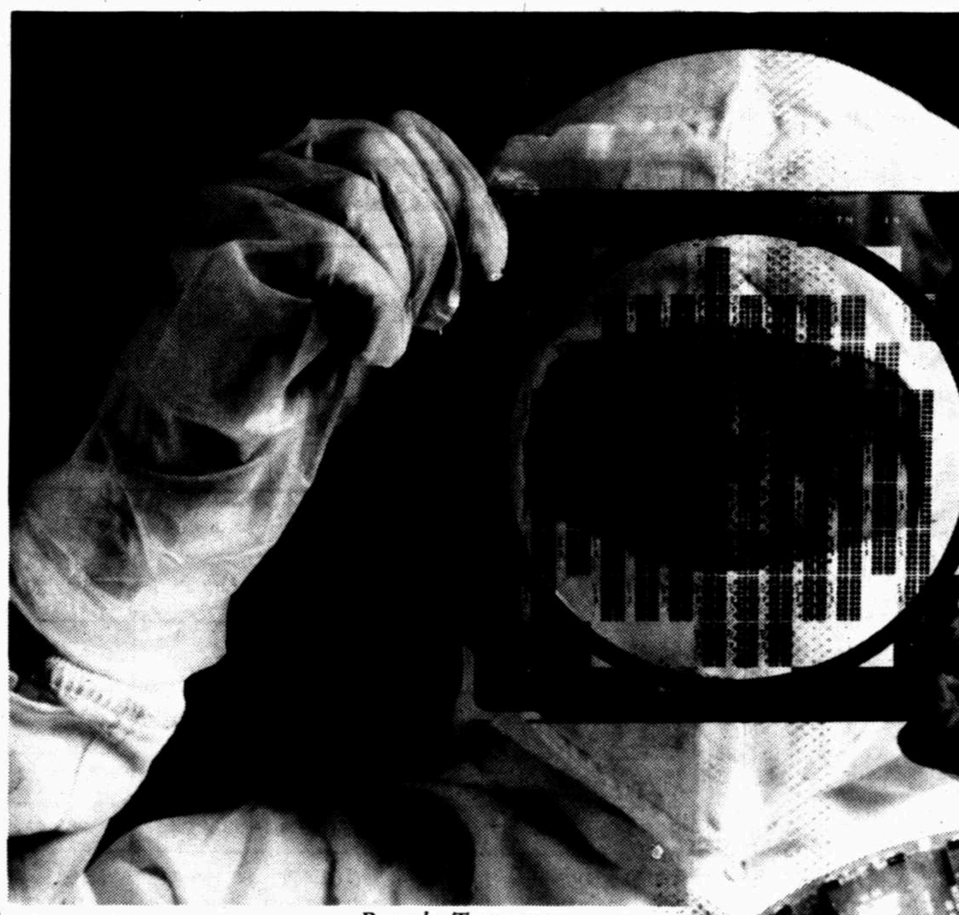
Clearly, the time for Texas is now.



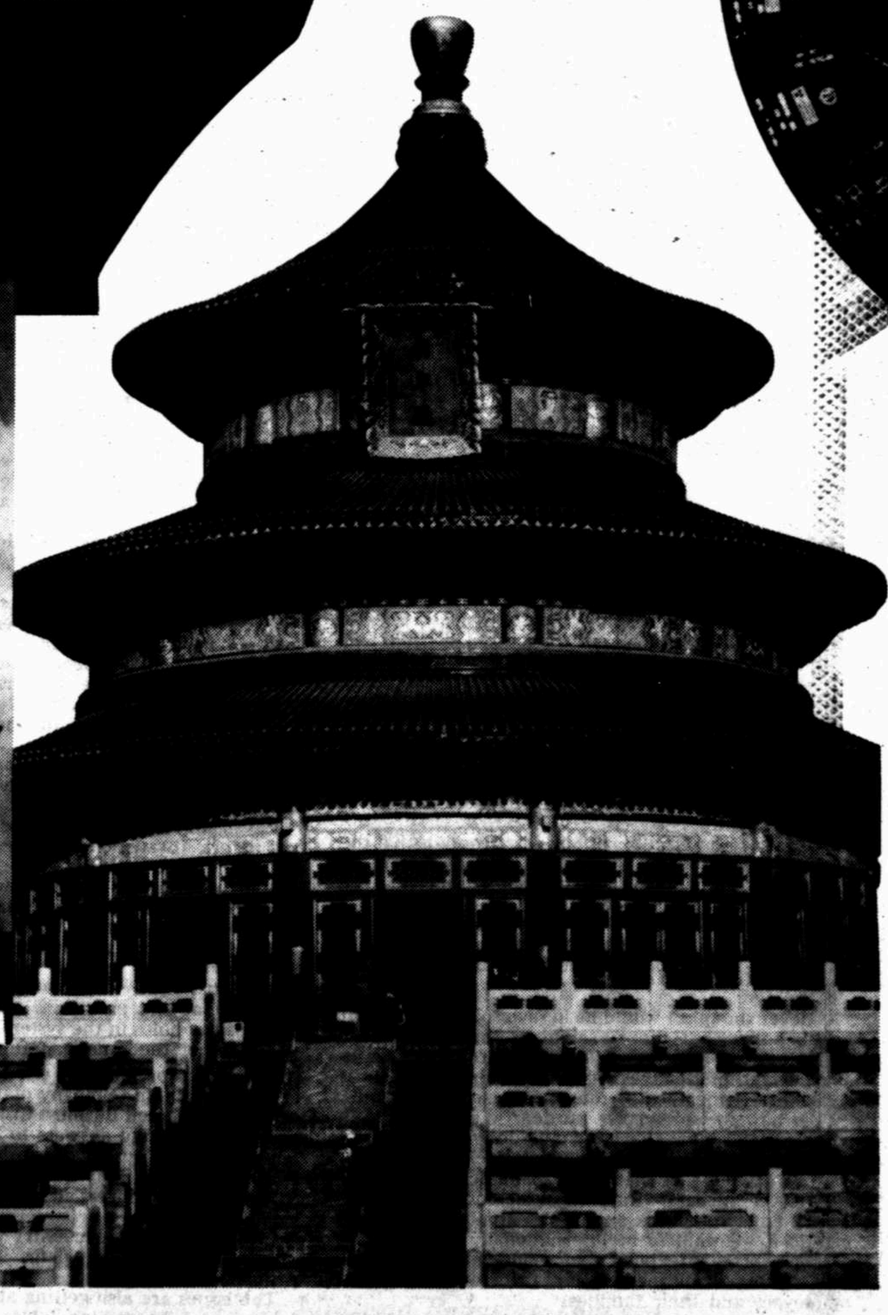
While some see energy as part of the problem, we at First City see it as part of the solution. Last year, we made $300 million in new reserve-based energy loans.

In 1988, the Port of Houston handled more foreign goods than any other port in the country.





Recently, Texas was chosen as the site for both the new research consortium, Sematech, and the giant new Supercollider project. Besides confirming our position as a growing high-tech center, they'll also bring in thousands of jobs and millions of dollars.



By helping Texans establish trade relationships as close as Mexico and as far away as China, First City has become a window to the world for Texas business.

The bank for Texas is First City.

For more than 120 years, First City, Texas has been Texas-based, Texas-owned, and strongly committed to the growth of Texas business.

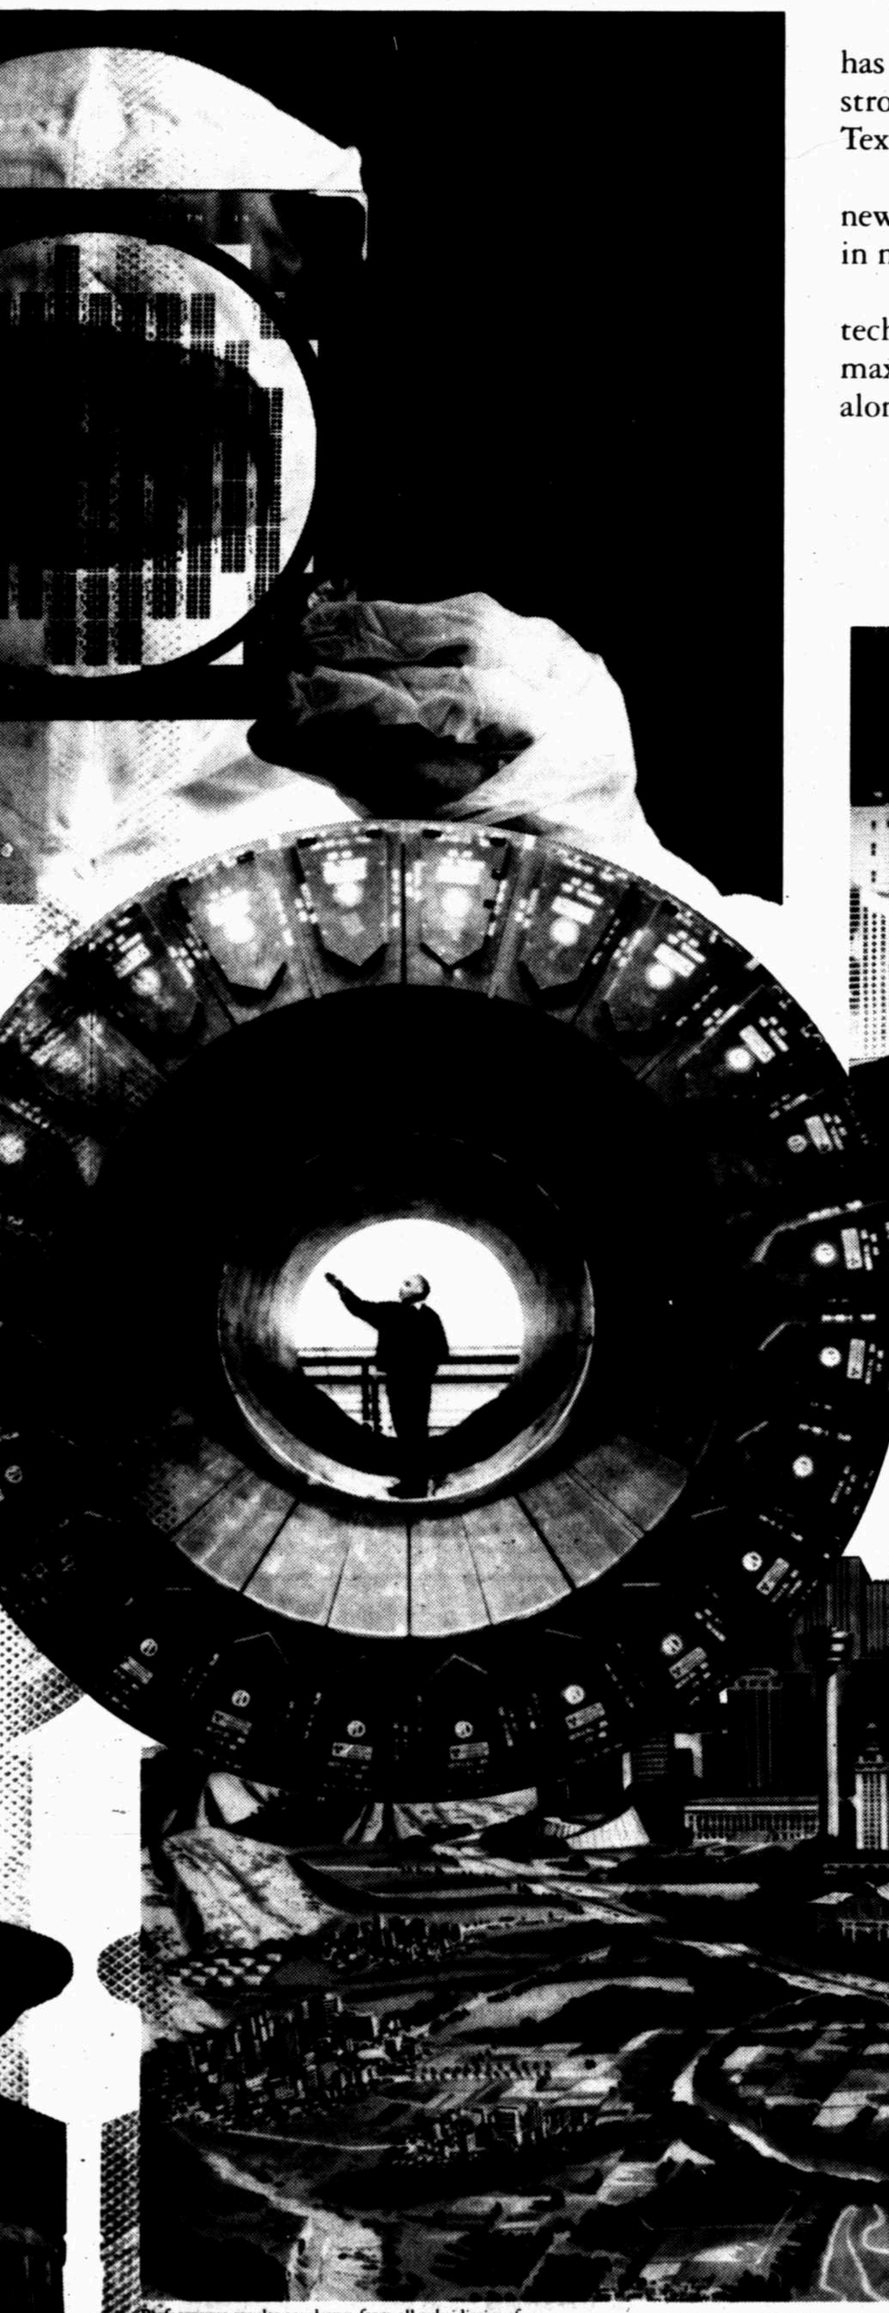
This past year, we made over $1 billion in new commercial loans. Including $300 million in new reserve-based energy loans.

Our leadership in cash management technology offers businesses the ability to maximize their resources. In lockbox services alone, we process 13 million items a year.

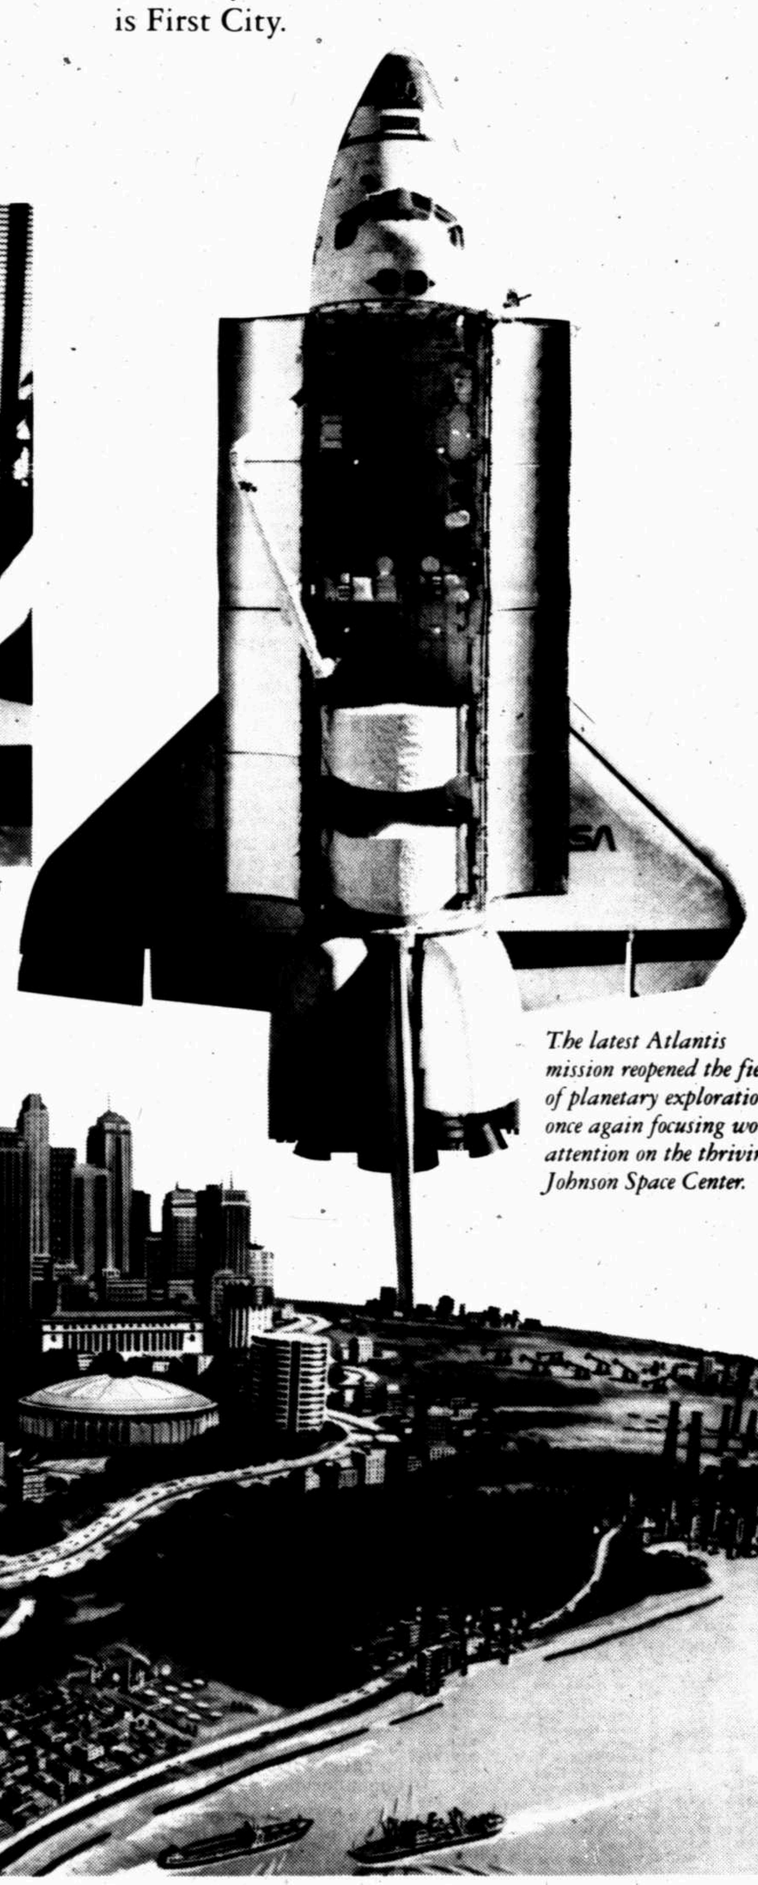
We've enabled Texas business to establish international trade relationships as close as Mexico and as far away as China.

In fact, we have wholly-owned offices or correspondent bank relationships in over 125 foreign countries. So no matter where you do business, we're the only bank you need.

If you want a strong, independent Texas bank, one that understands and supports Texas business, the bank for your business is First City. Because the bank for Texas is First City.



Last year, First City helped spark the Texas economy with more than $1 billion in new commercial loans.



The latest Atlantis mission reopened the field of planetary exploration, once again focusing world attention on the thriving Johnson Space Center.

Japan expected to raise discount rate

New York Times News Service

TOKYO — Japan is expected to raise its discount rate on Tuesday for the first time in seven years, ending an era of loose money policy here that fueled Japan's economic boom through this decade.

The change, which Japanese news reports say would be an increase of 75 basis points, to 3.25 percent, from 2.5 percent, has been triggered by fears of inflation and the surge of the U.S. dollar. A basis point is one-hundredth of a percentage point.

In Tokyo trading Monday, the dollar jumped again, closing at 142.88 yen, up by 2.48 yen from its close on Friday.

Broad intervention from the Bank of Japan, which reportedly spent $800 million to support the yen, did not succeed, and currency traders said the market had already adjusted for the expected increase.

Low interest rates here — especially the 2.5 percent discount rate, a post-war low figure — are regularly credited with making Japan's huge industrial expansion possible.

But now some small signs exist of inflation and a dramatic labor shortage in Japan.

The discount rate is the interest the Bank of Japan charges on loans to commercial banks.

Bank of Japan officials faced unusual criticism here in recent days that they have waited too long to act.

Now, speculation has arisen that the increase may do little to stop the weakening of the yen, unless there is action by the United States and West Germany.

One reason for the delay, government officials here say, is that the rise in the discount rate has become enmeshed in Japan's current political chaos, brought on by the scandal involving the Recruit Co., an information-services concern.

The scandal has already forced the resignation of many national leaders, including Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita, whose replacement is expected to be announced this week.

While it has no legal role in the decision to change rates, the governing Liberal Democratic Party has historically had a large voice in monetary policy.

And in recent weeks, shaken by the prospect that the stock-and-influence peddling scandal could devastate the party in elections for the upper house of Parliament this summer, party leaders voiced concern that any move to make borrowing more expensive would anger the business community here.

Business groups finance the Liberal Democratic Party. Their support, especially these days, is critical to the party's recovery.

"It's a politically very hot issue here," a senior member of the party said last week, "and we cannot afford to make a mistake."

In the end, Japanese officials apparently decided that a further advance in the dollar would worsen the trade gap with the United States and must be stemmed with a Japanese rate increase.

A higher dollar makes U.S. exports more expensive in overseas markets and makes Japanese goods less expensive.

Toyoo Gyohten, the vice minister of finance for international affairs, repeated that concern Monday in a lecture delivered in Tokyo, and said that central banks are required to "engineer" a delicate balance between economic growth and the prospect of renewed inflation.

He suggested that the United States would soon conclude that a high dollar would choke efforts to close the trade deficit with Japan.

Gyohten's comments come amid concern here about how long Japan can sustain its current growth rates.

Most economists say the economy is expanding at an annual rate of about 9.5 percent in this fiscal quarter.

Some fear serious rifts.

"Each time the Japanese reaction is a little bit stronger and it worries me that we are seen as forcing them into a corner," said San Francisco attorney Robert Brown, a specialist in U.S.-Japanese trade.

The Japanese last week promptly heightened trade tensions, announcing they wouldn't have anything to do with the negotiations called for by the United States.

Some Americans argue that the U.S. government has its priorities wrong. Influence with Japan would grow, it's noted, by focusing on federal and trade deficits, and by becoming more competitive in world markets.

"Certainly the Japanese have restricted trade access in many critical fields, but we are in a race not only with Japan but with a number of other countries climbing up the ladder of technology," the noted Asian scholar Robert Scalapino of UC-Berkeley points out.

There's also concern that the ever wealthier and more secure Japanese eventually won't respond to the U.S. trade demands.

"We feel the only persuasive way is to pull out the big guns and say 'you've got to do this,'" said one San Francisco trader who wanted to remain anonymous. The Japanese government encourages this so it can call on its markets to open up to exports "and bow for the benefit of the entire society.

The OECD, which was formed in 1960, is a Paris-based group of 24 industrial democracies that seeks to promote economic growth and cooperation.

At a news conference on Monday, OECD officials said the ministers would focus less on trade imbalances this year because the U.S. trade deficit has been declining, albeit slowly, and because West Germany and Japan have adopted many measures aimed at reducing their surpluses.

In addition, senior OECD officials acknowledged that there was less urgency this year because economic growth has been strong and financial markets have, for the most part, regained confidence and stability.

As in previous years, OECD officials said the main cause of uncertainty was the large American trade deficit, which they said has left the foreign exchange markets nervous and has helped push up long-term interest rates.

In projections released Monday, the OECD said the U.S. economy would grow by 3 percent this year and 2.25 percent in 1990, compared with 3.9 percent last year. It projected that Japan's economy would grow 4.75 percent this year, and Western Europe's 3 percent.

The OECD said the American current account deficit would fall to $123 billion this year from $135.3 billion last year, while the Japanese surplus would inch up to $80 billion from $79.6 billion last year.

the top Mercedes-Benz cars, all of which have an S in their model designations.

"For over 30 years, Mercedes had a near-monopoly in the top-of-the-line luxury car market here in Germany and elsewhere," von Kuenheim added. "And everyone thought it would stay that way forever."

Last year, however, BMW sold about 20,000 of its 7 series models in West Germany, compared with 13,700 for the S-class Mercedes-Benz.

In the United States, however, Mercedes luxury cars still outsell BMW's.

Few in the auto industry expect BMW to go unchallenged in its current position.

Daimler Benz is preparing new models to challenge BMW's larger cars in performance and technology. And the top Japanese auto companies are developing large, expensive cars that may provide competition for both in the future.

"We take the Japanese challenge very seriously," von Kuenheim said, "and we will take them on in the market. But we are not afraid of them. We already are where they want to be, and we are not standing still."

Von Kuenheim is also anticipating a fresh counterattack from Stuttgart, where Daimler Benz has its headquarters.

Edzard Reuter, Daimler's chairman, announced recently that Mercedes would bring out a new model each year for the next five years.

Nevertheless, BMW's current prosperity is in sharp contrast to the situation only three years ago.

At that time, sales were slipping and BMW's management was being criticized for staying too long with outdated car models.

Meanwhile, Daimler Benz had scored a major success with its smaller 190 model, and the corporation was growing by acquisition into a high-tech conglomerate.

While Daimler was adding aerospace and electronic properties, BMW remained confined to the cyclical automobile business, and some analysts wondered whether the company could continue as a relatively small independent in an industry dominated by giants.

Von Kuenheim said he was not worried.

"Sheer size is no measure for the efficiency of a company," he argued. "What is decisive is that it is fast, productive, effective. Automobile production has changed. The big don't eat the little, the fast eat the slow. The bigger a company is, the more inflexible it is."

Analysts said BMW has been able to react more quickly than Daimler to changes in the market by bringing out specialty models like a 3 series convertible. The company's design and engineering appear to be faster as well, they added.

Notwithstanding such views, it looked three years ago as if it would be BMW rather than Daimler pushing aggressively into aerospace.

Franz Josef Strauss, the late minister-president of Bavaria, tried to get BMW to take the controlling stake in Messerschmitt-Bolkow-Blohm GmbH, the aerospace firm that Daimler Benz is now attempting to acquire.

Managers find challenges after leveraged buyout

New York Times News Service

Managers at companies that have been involved in a leveraged buyout face a degree of risk but also a challenge that can be valuable to their development, executives at management recruiting firms say.

A leveraged buyout typically involves the purchase of a company for relatively little cash but a large amount of debt, using the company's assets as collateral.

Such situations provide fine opportunities for managers to broaden their training, said Carl Menk, chairman of Canny Bowen Inc., a management recruiting firm.

"I am thinking in terms of chief executive officers, but this is good training for younger managers," Menk said.

He explained: "The managers have to capitalize on core strengths. They have to take a look at acquisitions the company has made and determine if any should be spun off."

Companies that have gone through a leveraged buyout typically bear heavy debt loads, requiring high interest payments, which shorten the managerial decision-making process.

"Managers cannot sit around waiting for information," he said.

"Making no decision is usually the wrong decision in the case of the LBO."

Furthermore, managers in such companies have lean staffs, often requiring intensive work and long hours, he said.

LBO's need managers who have the walk-around, hands-on style, willing to make decisions partly intuitively," Menk said.

Similar managerial needs sometimes apply to a company that escapes takeover.

Menk said managers of CPC International Inc., a food conglomerate that avoided a takeover attempt in 1986, told him, "We are a much better company today and now can make ourselves even more profitable."

He urges young managers to start with a good, large company, learn advanced management techniques and then move to a smaller, troubled company that needs help.

Working in the top management of companies that have gone through a leveraged buyout is "a wonderful opportunity," said Herbert Mines of Herbert Mines Associates Inc., a management recruiting firm that specializes in retail and apparel.

Managers in a takeover situation are pressed to produce results, maximizing the short term, he said.

"However, I want to stress that LBO companies do not recruit much," Mines said.

"If the buyout is done by an outside organization, then it might put in new people."

He said managers in such companies need to be entrepreneurially oriented.

"It doesn't seem to be a matter of age," he said.

"They also have to be more dependent on people skills."

Robert L. Smith, a management recruiter who heads Johnson Smith & Knisely Inc., called leveraged-buyout situations a risky environment but said, "I think it can be a fantastic experience and closest to being an entrepreneur."

Because of the risks, he suggests that middle managers interested in such companies take jobs only with well-known ones.

If the manager has been involved with a small, little-known company, he has to spend a lot of time justifying himself when he searches for a new job, Smith said.

He said he had spoken recently with the manager of a concern that had been spun off by Beatrice, which was involved in a leveraged buyout in 1986.

The manager told Smith he now makes decisions differently because he no longer has to explain and justify a decision to top management.

Welcome

Brigadier General

James S. Allen...

Paul Erdmann, President of the IAC Chapter 71, has requested the presence of Brigadier General James S. Allen, Commander of the 833rd Air Division Tactical Air Command, Holloman Air Force Base, to attend Air Show '89. General Allen has accepted and will swear in the Air Force recruits from the Permian Basin area. This will be the second year for General Allen to attend. Motown mows down Michael, Bulls

Detroit defense stops Jordan in Game 4

By DIRK JOHNSON
New York Times News Service

CHICAGO — The Chicago Bulls needed more 11th-hour heroics from Michael Jordan on Monday, but they didn't receive any. Instead, the Detroit Pistons outmuscled the Bulls, 86-80, to tie the four-of-seven game Eastern Conference championship series at two games apiece.

The heroics came from the Detroit defenders, who held Jordan to 23 points, and from the Pistons' point guard, Isiah Thomas, who scored 27 points and grabbed 10 rebounds. In all, the Pistons outrebounded the Bulls, 56-40. Joe Dumars added 15 points for the Pistons, and James Edwards, the reserve center, scored 13. Dennis Rodman added 18 rebounds for Detroit.

"We played with seventh-game intensity today," said Chuck Daly, the Pistons' coach. "If we don't play as hard as we can play, I don't think we'll win this series. If we do, I think we will win it."

"Isiah was a lot more aggressive," he added. "We need him to be that way if we're going to win."

The closest Chicago came in the fourth quarter was 64-62, but Thomas hit a jumper to start a 15-7 run. Another basket by Thomas made it 79-69 with 4 minutes 38 seconds left, and the Bulls got no closer than 5 after that.

The Pistons, who swept six games from the Bulls in the regular season, came into this series heavily favored. But each game has been a bruising, down-to-the-wire contest. The Detroit victory Monday means Los Angeles, which won the Western Conference final Sunday by sweeping the Phoenix Suns, will rest for more than a week before the championship series begin.

With the victory Monday, the Pistons regained the home-court advantage: Game 5 will be in Detroit on Wednesday, then the teams will return to Chicago for the sixth game Friday. Game 7, if necessary, will be played Sunday in Detroit.

"We just ran out of juice," said Doug Collins, the Bulls' coach. "They can throw so many guys at you. And they just keep coming."

Several defenders contributed to containing Jordan, but it was Rodman who gave the Bulls' star the most trouble. The Detroit defenders trapped and double-teamed Jordan from the start on Monday.

"People don't realize that Chicago is a great team," Rodman said. "To slow down Jordan, you have to get as much help as you can and stay in front of him."

The Pistons' first lead came at the buzzer that ended the first half, as Thomas hit a 3-point shot to give Detroit a 42-39 lead at intermission.

In both Detroit victories, Thomas has been outstanding: In Game 2, he scored 33 points. But he has played poorly in both Detroit losses: he had just 5 points in the Pistons' loss Saturday.

"The longer we play, the better we are going to be in this series," Thomas said. "The key to our winning is going to be our defense, not my scoring."

The Pistons led by 44-39 in the first minute of the second half, but the Bulls' Scottie Pippen scored 9 points as Chicago outscored Detroit, 16-6, over a five-minute stretch to take a 55-50 lead.

Detroit regained a 4-point lead by the end of the third quarter, and the Pistons built their lead to 10 points midway through the fourth quarter.

Trying to rally, the Bulls turned to Jordan on almost every trip down the floor. But he did not respond, shooting only 30 percent from the field and grabbing just two rebounds. Only 11 of his points came after the first quarter.

Pippen had 17 points after three quarters, but could manage only a point in the final quarter.

A case for Jordan as world's best athlete

By DAVE ANDERSON
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Ever since King Gustav V of Sweden told Jim Thorpe, "You, sir, are the greatest athlete in the world" in 1912, the Olympic decathlon champion has been accorded that unofficial title.

Bob Mathias, Milt Campbell, Rafer Johnson, Bill Toomey, Bruce Jenner and Daley Thompson have basked in the golden glow of that description. But quick, who is the reigning Olympic champion?

But is Christian Schenk really the best athlete in the world? That depends on the definition.

Some people might prefer to judge the "best athlete" by solo performance in the Olympic decathlon's 10 events. But another definition is required to judge Michael Jordan and Bo Jackson, each of whom deserves to be considered as the best in the world.

Is the best athlete always a decathlete who competes primarily against a stopwatch, a distance and a height?

Or is the best athlete someone who not only performs superbly but also succeeds within a team concept against determined opponents while controlling a ball or a bat or both, and with muscular and mental skills applicable to other sports?

The preference here is for the latter definition, if for no other reason than to justify the candidacy of Michael Jordan and Bo Jackson.

Of the two, the vote here is for Jordan.

Jackson is an established big-leaguer in two sports: a slugging outfielder for baseball's Kansas City Royals and a breakaway running back for pro football's Los Angeles Raiders. But for all his versatility, Jackson has not climbed to the top of Mount Everest in either sport.

Now in the playoffs following his fifth National Basketball Association campaign with the Chicago Bulls, Jordan is already atop basketball's Mount Everest, arguably as good as anyone who has ever played the game.

In recent years, some people have insisted that NBA players form the world's best group of athletes. And of all those players, Jordan is the reigning athlete.

Theoretically, basketball is a non-contact sport. But in the NBA, it's a collision sport — sometimes with another player, sometimes with the hardwood floor. And a basketball player isn't wearing protective equipment.

All that contact is a test of an athlete, a test that doesn't exist in the decathlon. But it exists for Jordan in basketball just as it exists for Jackson in football and, occasionally, in baseball.

Another test is the ability to control an object, such as a ball or a hockey puck. For all their strength, speed and endurance, decathletes never have to dribble a basketball, hit a baseball, catch a football, kick a soccer ball or shoot a puck.

In the decathlon, coping with the tension of the Olympics is as demanding as the pressure of the NBA playoffs, the World Series or the Super Bowl. But a decathlete is out there all alone, as much a minus as a plus.

The team-sport player is out there not only straining to excel, but hoping to inspire those around him to excel. That's the test that Jordan finally passed in these NBA playoffs.

But as incomparable as Jordan is in basketball, the fun of assessing him as an athlete is to wonder what he might have accomplished had he concentrated on another sport.

Phillies' Mike Schmidt announces retirement

Associated Press

Baseball lost one of its brightest stars Monday when Philadelphia third baseman Mike Schmidt retired, and the people of the game knew it.

"Michael Jack Schmidt was one of the best third basemen to ever play this game," said Yankees manager Dallas Green, who was the skipper of the World Series champion Phillies in 1980. "He is one of the best players, and one of the best athletes I've ever seen. He has achieved so many great things.

Schmidt finished his career with 548 home runs, seventh on the all-time list.

"Everything he did was professional," said Yankees coach Pat Corrales, also a former Phillies manager. "He had a knack that every home run was never wasted. It always seemed that every home run he hit came in the eighth or ninth inning when we needed it."

Schmidt retired in an emotional farewell to the game Monday in San Diego.

"If that's what he wants to do, he knows what's best for him. Everybody has to take that uniform off eventually," Green said. "For so many players it's a struggle to take it off because of the money and goals they might have, and they go out less than gracefully."

Phillies second baseman Tom Herr echoed the thought.

"I respect him for the timing of his decision, and the decision itself, because it takes a lot of courage to come to the realization that you're not the player you once were and step away," Herr said.

Schmidt was batting .203 with six home runs in his 17th major-league season.

"I hate to see him retire because he still has a lot of baseball left in him," said Cincinnati manager Pete Rose, a former teammate. "I know he's not off to the start he wants. I think he would have been better off coming over here this season (to the Reds). I think he needs to be on a good team. I think he needs to be on a team that could win.

"He's definitely a first-ballot Hall of Fame player."

Rose thinks he helped make Schmidt a better player after Rose signed as a free agent with Phillies in 1979.

Knicks' Pitino expected to move to Kentucky

Associated Press

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — New York Knicks coach Rick Pitino has tentatively agreed to become the University of Kentucky's basketball coach, according to two reports.

Pitino, 36, was expected to announce his decision Thursday at a news conference in Lexington, the Courier-Journal in Louisville and WCBS-TV in New York reported.

WCBS sports reporter Rock Rote said Pitino told him Monday night that he had "agreed in principle" to take the Kentucky job.

"He said he would meet with the Knicks tomorrow and if everything goes well, he expects to make the announcement on Thursday," Rote told The Associated Press.

The AP could not reach Pitino for comment. Rote, who hosts Pitino's weekly show on WCBS, and Knicks spokesman John Cirillo declined to give out the coach's unlisted home phone number.

Cirillo said Monday night that he didn't know if Pitino had made a decision.

"We have no announcement to make," Cirillo said. "I know he was thinking about it over the weekend, but we have no indication either way."

Kentucky athletic director C.M. Newton and university president David Roselle would not comment Monday on whether Pitino had accepted the job.

The Courier-Journal said the report in its Tuesday editions was based on two unidentified sources.

The newspaper said the Kentucky Athletics Board would have to approve Pitino's hiring before it could be announced. Kentucky sports information director Chris Cameron said Monday no meeting of the board had been scheduled.

Pitino, after visiting the university last week, was offered the position held for four seasons by Eddie Sutton. Sutton resigned in March in the midst of an NCAA investigation that resulted in three years' probation for the Kentucky basketball program.

Pitino has coached the Knicks for the past two seasons, but has expressed the desire to get back to the college level.

UT Longhorns bound for 25th trip to Series

Associated Press

Needing just one victory to clinch the NCAA Division I Midwest Regional, Texas coach Cliff Gustafson considered saving ace Kirk Dressendorfer for a possible second game.

A late snack helped change his mind.

"I was pondering whether to or not," Gustafson after the Longhorns' 9-3 victory over New Orleans on Monday. "But it came to me about midnight last night when I was having my milk. It kept coming back to me that he is the guy that I wanted out there."

Dressendorfer, a sophomore, struck out 11 and scattered eight hits in leading Texas to its 25th trip to the College World Series, which begins Friday in Omaha, Neb.

Gustafson has made the series 15 times in his 22 years with Texas.

"I always thought we had enough talent to get there," said Gustafson, who won his 1,100th game Monday. "I think right now we are a lot better ball club than we have been all year. We deserve it."

Arkansas, Long Beach State and Wichita State also earned berths in the College World Series on Monday. Arkansas won the Northeast Regional with a 6-5 victory over LeMoyne, Long Beach State beat Arizona 10-3 to take the West I championship and Wichita State downed Michigan 9-5 to capture the West II title.

Florida State, Miami, North Carolina and Louisiana State advanced to Omaha with regional victories on Sunday.

Angels return home

From Staff Reports

When the Midland Angels left Tulsa last week after taking the series from the Texas League East Division leaders three games to two, the California Angel farmhands appeared to have a tight-fisted grip on first place in the West Division with a 4½ game lead.

After Arkansas finished with the Halos Saturday night, Midland was a scant game in first over Wichita's fast-closing Padres.

Now in a fight to the finish, Midland opens a six-game homestand at 7 p.m. today against the San Antonio Missions as the first-half race heads into its final three weeks.

Even Midland's stingy bullpen couldn't avert the sweep by Arkansas, which completed the job, 2-1 and 5-3 Saturday night. Tim Burcham lost for the first time in four decisions in the opener, which went eight innings. But it took a freak hit off the first base sack by Rod Brewer to chase home the winning run from second in the opener.

Dave Martinez, 4-3, was the nightcap victim.

Midland now faces 12 of its last 18 first half games at home with El Paso coming to Midland for six games starting June 11. In between San Antonio and El Paso here, Midland will play a six-game showdown series at Wichita.

Buss-Dotson squeak out Sportsfest golf title

From Staff Reports

Curtis Buss and Allen Dotson combined for a one shot victory Monday in the first-ever Sportsfest golf tournament at Hogan Park. Buss-Dotson's score of 65 was a mere one stroke better than the 66 racked up by John and Bill Lupardus in the combination 9-hole best ball, 9-hole Chapman tourney.

Douglas Wiseman and Dave Holloway finished third, three strokes out with a 68.

Fourteen teams competed in the tournament which was part of the first-ever SporsFest celebration, a five day extravaganza which also featured softball, auto racing, triathlons and bowling.

Buss-Dotson picked up $70 prize money for their efforts while second and third place awarded $60 and $50. Individual awards paid $10.

Aside from winning the tournament, Dotson also was awarded the longest drive; Closest-to-the-pin honors went to Tommy Everhart.

Interestingly enough, while Dotson played on the winning team, Everhart and partner Tommy Tuck finished last, despite Everhart's closest-to-the-pin award.

Alexander helps NY end skid

By HILLEL ITALIE

With 46-year-old Tommy John facing retirement, and 42-year-old Nolan Ryan allowing three Baltimore home runs, it was up to 38-year-old Doyle Alexander to retain the honor of baseball's senior pitchers.

Alexander shut down the Chicago White Sox on three hits in seven innings, leading the Detroit Tigers to a 4-2 victory Monday night and snapping a personal four-game losing streak. The right-hander has allowed just one earned run in his last 22 innings.

"Up to this point, I've probably pitched as well as I ever have before," said Alexander, who lowered his earned run average to 2.88. "I've had one bad start, and other than that, I've pitched pretty doggone well."

Alexander, 4-4, had retired the last 10 batters he faced, but told Manager Dick Tracewski to take him out after the seventh inning.

"It was my decision to come out," Alexander said. "And, no matter what would have happened, I would have stayed by it."

Orioles 6, Rangers 1

Nolan Ryan struck out 10 batters in six innings, but gave up solo homers to Mickey Tettleton, Larry Sheets and Cal Ripken.

Brian Holton, 2-4, allowed no runs on five hits in 5 2-3 innings for his first win in six major-league starts. Holton has made 120 relief appearances. Mark Huismann, Kevin Hickey and Gregg Olson finished up.

Ryan, 5-3, struck out 10 or more batters for the sixth time this season and 187th time in his career, the major-league record.

Yankees 6, Mariners 3

While New York was informing John that he had 24 hours to decide between retirement and release, Richard Dotson helped his own struggling career by beating Seattle for the first time in five years.

Dotson, 2-2, allowed nine hits and three runs in 6 2-3 innings, his second-longest outing this season. He had lost his previous two starts, allowing a total of 10 runs and 17 hits in 10 innings.

Toronto starter Mike Flanagan, 3-5, allowed three runs on five hits in two innings before leaving with a sore shoulder.

Angels 12, Brewers 3

Claudell Washington's two-run single capped a five-run third inning and Lance Parrish went 4-for-4 to lead California's season-high 18-hit attack.

Wally Joyner and Johnny Ray had three hits apiece and Dick Schofield drove in three runs as the Angels moved percentage points ahead of Oakland in the AL: West.

Paul Molitor had four hits for Milwaukee.

Bert Blyleven, 5-2, scattered nine hits in seven innings. Greg Minton and Bryan Harvey finished up. Mike Birkbeck, 0-4, failed for the ninth time to pick up his first victory.

Red Sox 3, Athletics 2

Marty Barrett celebrated the signing of a new contract by singling home the game-winning run in the bottom of the 10th inning as Boston beat Oakland.

Barrett, who before the game signed an extension through the 1991 season, singled with one out to score pinch-runner Randy Kutcher from second.

Royals 7, Twins 1

Bo Jackson doubled and tripled as Kansas City battered Minnesota's Frank Viola for seven runs in five innings.

The Royals jumped on Viola, 3-7, for four runs in the third and three in the fifth. Viola, last year's Cy Young Award winner, allowed 12 hits in five innings and now has an ERA of 4.63. He had won three of his previous four starts.

Astros grab fourth straight win

Associated Press

Bob Knepper allowed two runs in 7 1-3 innings as the Houston Astros beat the St. Louis Cardinals for their fourth straight victory.

It was also the Astros' eighth straight road victory, equaling the club record set in 1971. Houston is 15-7 on the road.

St. Louis rookie Ken Hill, 2-4, didn't allow a hit until Terry Puhl's ground single to center with one out in the seventh. Second baseman Jose Oquendo fielded the ball in short center field but Puhl beat the throw to first base by a wide margin.

Knepper, 3-6, left the game with one out in the eighth after allowing five hits.

With the Astros leading 3-0, Oquendo reached on a force play in the eighth and moved to third on Jim Lindeman's pinch double. Vince Colemen then singled in a run to chase Knepper. Larry Andersen relieved and and Ozzie Smith hit a sacrifice fly.

Braves 2, Cubs 1

Rookie Derek Lilliquist allowed one run and seven hits in seven innings as the Atlanta Braves beat the Chicago Cubs.

Lilliquist, 3-3, struck out three and walked none. Paul Assenmacher pitched one inning and Joe Boever got the last three outs for his seventh save as the Braves finished with a combined nine-hitter.

NL Roundup

Pirates 12, Reds 3

Barry Bonds' two-run homer capped a four-run second inning after center fielder Eric Davis dropped an apparent inning-ending fly ball as the Pittsburgh Pirates beat the Cincinnati Reds.

Bob Walk, 5-3, shut out the Reds on three hits over six innings until being lifted in Cincinnati's three-run seventh. Bob Kipper finished for his first save as the Pirates snapped a three-game losing streak.

Giants 3, Mets 2

Brett Butler, embarrassed by a "bonehead mistake" on the basepaths, used his arm and bat to salvage the day and give the San Francisco Giants their fourth straight victory Monday.

Butler drove in two runs with sacrifice flies and scored another on Will Clark's double as the Giants beat the New York Mets to move a game ahead of Cincinnati in first place in the National League West.

The game began on a sour note for Butler after the Mets took a 1-0 lead in the first. Butler led off with a single, moved to second on a grounder, but was doubled up when he raced to third with one out on a popup to short by Kevin Mitchell.

Expos 3, Dodgers 2

Andres Galarraga's run-scoring single snapped a ninth-inning tie and gave the Montreal Expos a victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Wallace Johnson led off the ninth with a pinch single and Rex Hudler, running for Johnson, was sacrificed to second by Dave Martinez. Tom Foley walked and Alejandro Pena relieved starter Tim Leary, 5-4.

Padres 1, Phillies 0

Bruce Hurst and Mark Davis combined on a four-hitter as the San Diego Padres beat Philadelphia, hours after Phillies third baseman Mike Schmidt announced his retirement.

Yanks tell John he's no longer needed

By RONALD BLUM

NEW YORK (AP) — Tommy John, the 46-year-old whose surgically-rebuilt arm extended his career by 15 years, was told Monday he would be released by the New York Yankees within 24 hours unless he retired.

John, the oldest player in the major leagues, has a 288-231 record. He's been trying to reach 300 victories, a goal achieved by only 19 pitchers, but the Yankees told John he faced a Tuesday release deadline. His quest of No. 300 will continue.

"I'm not retiring," John told The New York Times in a telephone interview Monday night. "If I retire, it will be later on. I'll keep working out and throwing. You never know. Some ball club might be looking around and saying, 'For $46,000, we can get a cheap insurance policy.'"

John had been scheduled to pitch Tuesday against Seattle, but will be replaced by 25-year-old Jimmy Jones, who was sent to Class AAA Columbus of the International League at the end of spring training. Jones was 20-21 with San Diego from 1986-88 and 4-3 with 3.86 earned-run average this season with the Clippers.

"We have to prepare for the future, and the future is younger pitching," New York manager Dallas Green said.

John, who beat Minnesota 4-2 on opening day, is 2-7 this season with a 5.80 earned-run average.

"It's a tough call when you have the class of a Tommy John," said Green, who had been deliberating the move for several weeks. "I think that he desperately wants 300 wins and it's our opinion it'll be difficult to get."

Before the game, Green indicated the move was imminent. He said later the Yankees had spent the afternoon attempting to trade the left-hander, who is making $500,000 this year.

"He's no dummy. He saw the handwriting on the wall, the way we were going about it," Green said. "We were trying to place Tommy, see if there was anyone in baseball who would give him the opportunity to pursue his goal."

John left immediately after the game to consult his wife, Sally, on his his future. He asked through a club spokemsan that he be left alone until Tuesday to make his decision.

The only other club that may be interested is the Chicago White Sox, whose manager, Jeff Torborg, is a former Yankees coach and a friend of John. He indicated that Chicago probably would not make an offer.

"It's very hard for me to comment on somebody who is such a good friend," Torborg said "But, the way for the White Sox is with youth. Other than that, I just don't want to make any statement."

Green said John took the news calmly.

"Does he think he can pitch? I'm sure he does. He didn't rant and rave or pull a Stanley Jefferson," Green said, referring to the outfielder who blasted the manager after he was sent down.

"I care about people ... This guy gave his heart and soul to baseball, and I think that's important," Green said. "TJ will probably be able to pitch until he's 60. Whether he can get people out is another question."

Then, is a remark clearly aimed at others on the team, Green said, "If all baseball players were as professional as Tommy John, baseball would be a hell of a lot better for it. Tommy's a professional. He's a lot more professional than a lot of people around here."

John has given up 87 hits in 63 2-3 innings. Opposing batters are hitting .336 against him.

Two other bids were to be determined Monday night. Long Beach State met Arizona in the West I final and Wichita State played Michigan for the West II championship.

Dressendorfer, 16-2 this season, defeated New Orleans for the second time in four days. On Friday, he stopped the Privateers on two hits as Texas won 2-0. He is now 31-4 for Texas, with 25 complete games in 36 starts.

"I'm tired right now," Dressendorfer said. "I felt like I was going to faint out there in the eighth inning. But I wanted to finish. I had to."

Leading the four teams which made the tournament Sunday were traditional powers Florida State and LSU, both making their third World Series trip in four years.

Florida State goes to Omaha with a 52-16 record. LSU, which eliminated to-ranked Texas A&M from the tournament, is 52-15. North Carolina is 41-16-1 and Miami — making its 11th World Series appearance under coach Ron Fraser — is 48-16.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 31, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Fresh demands on your energies are likely. Have courage! The results will improve your finances and propel you to new professional heights. Do not hesitate to make your needs and desires known to partner; lasting relationships are built on consideration. New business opportunities are linked to projecting the right image. Invest in an updated wardrobe.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: comedy star Fred Allen, actor Don Ameche, superstar Clint Eastwood, author Norman Vincent Peale, poet Walt Whitman, actor Denholm Elliott, football's "Broadway Joe" Namath, singer Johnny Paycheck, Monaco's Prince Rainier, folk singer Peter Yarrow.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your labors prove very fruitful. Extra cash is headed your way. Get in touch with relatives or friends at a distance, but postpone travel a while longer. Make reservations well in advance.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Be prudent and spend more time at home. Go out of your way to avoid arguments this morning. You find new enjoyment in your work. Rest is an excellent tonic.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Develop a game plan that you know will work. Progress is assured when you pull out all the stops. A long-term relationship needs to be re-evaluated. Recognize your own weaknesses and strengths.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Hard work is good therapy, helping you forget any personal worries. Stash away cash for future fun. A dream vacation will more than live up to your expectations. Consult partner before answering an invitation.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your intuition is right on target. If you heed your instincts, you will emerge a winner! Replace questionable habits with beneficial routines. Loved ones support your efforts to turn over a new leaf.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your attention to detail will pay off handsomely by the end of the day. Save time and money wherever possible. Go easy on spending for entertainment. Have a few friends over instead.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Someone you thought to be an opponent turns out to be an ally. Teamwork boosts profits improving your chances for a raise or promotion. Take a chance on love.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Financial security means more to you after you witness a tragedy. Investigate new fads, but stick to the tried-and-true at work. Make sure your expectations are realistic where romance is concerned.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Try to fit in with a group important to loved one. Be receptive to new ideas and willing to take a small risk. Romantic partner needs more encouragement and affection. Show tenderness.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan 19): New financial benefits are available to you now, thanks to the way others feel about you. Transitional activities are difficult but necessary. Count your blessings! Influential people are in your corner.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be more daring! Back up your ideas with plenty of facts and figures. You can improve your image by taking a stand when the chips are down. Others eagerly follow where you lead.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): The pieces of a puzzle begin to fall into place. A promotion or bonus boosts your spirits and expectations. A personal relationship needs more delicate handling. Tread softly when asking for favors.

When an expert comes up against a player he does not know, he is ripe for the plucking. His ego won't allow him to acknowledge that a seemingly average player is trying to pull a fast one. Consider this case from the Epson Worldwide Pairs event, which won the "Best Hand" award for Joan Burgess of Nottingham, England.

South was one of the finest women players in Europe. Despite her diamond holding, she elected to balance in a three-card suit—the auction had made it clear she would find at least four-card support in her partner's hand.

While the contract might have left a good deal to be desired, as the cards lay 10 tricks could be made thanks to the 3-3 heart break and lucky trump layout. But look what happened.

Declarer won the opening diamond lead in hand, discarding a club from dummy, and elected to go after hearts immediately. A heart to the queen won and on the low heart return, East's ten was enough to win the trick. Had that happened, declarer would have been able to ruff the diamond return in dummy, ruff a heart low (West would have been marked with the ace), and declarer would have lost only one trump, one heart and a club.

But Burgess, sitting West, deceptively overtook her partner's trick with the ace and returned a diamond for dummy to ruff. Declarer continued by ruffing a low heart with the ten of trumps, expecting to be overruffed. She was resigned to losing two trump tricks, and hoped for a winning club finesse. But West produced a heart, and the defenders were now assured of at least two trump tricks and a club for a one-trick set. In practice, declarer was so rattled by this turn of events that she lost control and went down several tricks.

Duffy, Keach, Jackee confess to spinning fish stories in order to land coveted roles

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) — Julie Duffy lied about her bra size, Stacy Keach tried to convince producers he could sing and Jackee pretended to be an expert dancer, all in an effort to beat the competition for coveted parts.

Keach, the actor who plays Mike Hammer, convinced producers of "Barnum" he could sing while walking a tightrope, and Estell Getty, of NBC's "Golden Girls," has been fibbing for years about being 5 feet tall when she's actually shorter. She still won't specify her height, the Radnor-based magazine says.

Jackee, of NBC's "227," inflated her resume for a part in the Broadway musical "New Orleans" to say she took eight years of dance with Alvin Ailey and two years with Frank Hatchett, Gregory Hines' teacher.

"I figured they wouldn't check," she said.

They didn't have to, especially after they saw her try to dance. But her sense of comedy ultimately landed her the role.

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — Bob Hope claimed he was doing what his fans loved most when he dedicated a sign for an exit to Bob Hope Drive.

"It's appropriate," Hope said in a one-liner prepared for the California Department of Transportation event on Memorial Day. "What audiences always liked best about me was my exit."

Hope

The name of a short street beside NBC Studios in Burbank was changed to Bob Hope Drive a year ago. And for many years travelers in the Palm Springs area have had a chance to exit Interstate 10 to another Bob Hope Drive in Rancho Mirage.

Hope, who also celebrated his 86th birthday Monday, said he occasionally can shoot an 18-hole score below his age on the golf course. "But when I played yesterday, I shot my license plate number."

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Opening with the song "Let Me Try Again," singer Connie Francis returned to the Las Vegas stage and thanked fans for helping her overcome a series of personal tragedies.

"You've always let me know you were there, in good times and bad, and for that I'll always love you," she told a cheering audience at the Aladdin Theatre for the Performing Arts Saturday.

The crowd gave her several standing ovations as she reeled off gold record hits such as "Who's Sorry Now," "Where the Boys Are," "Stupid Cupid" and "Lipstick on Your Collar."

Career problems, three failed marriages and the death of her brother, who was gunned down in the driveway of his New Jersey home, led to emotional problems that required occasional hospitalization.

"I've had the kinds of problems that almost everyone in the world has had at one time or another, whether it's divorce, or mental illness, violent crime or a death in the family," the 50-year-old singer said in a recent interview. "Thank God it's made me a strong person."

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Walter Cronkite was the honorary sailing master as the Star of India, an iron-hulled ship built in 1863, set sail on the open seas for only the fourth time since 1923.

Cronkite

"She's a beauty. I could take her out every day," said Cronkite, an avid yachtsman and former CBS network news anchor.

Hundreds of spectators gathered Sunday at the downtown Embarcadero to give the oldest iron-hulled ship still afloat a rousing send-off on its seven-hour voyage through San Diego Bay to the Pacific Ocean and back.

The Star of India, which has been in San Diego since 1927, carried passengers and cargo between England and India in the 1860s.

The ship's only previous voyages to sea since it was retired in 1923 were in 1976 to help celebrate the nation's bicentennial, 1984 and 1986.

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) — Friends are the "chosen family" of talk show host Oprah Winfrey, who says she was abandoned by her blood relatives and abused as a child.

Winfrey

In an interview in the latest issue of TV Guide magazine, Winfrey said she was a child of a broken home, was shuttled from caretaker to caretaker, raped by a distant cousin at age 9 and repeatedly sexually abused by family friends.

"I'm generous to people I know and to some people that I don't know, if I feel that their cause or their purpose has true meaning, and that they will benefit from the money," she said.

The TV talk host's friends include several young women who work for "The Oprah Winfrey Show." For Christmas last year, Ms. Winfrey flew four young female producers from Chicago to New York for a massive shopping spree, spending thousands of dollars in a couple of hours.

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W.Va. (AP) — Country music star Little Jimmy Dickens says he'll never forget his roots.

Following a performance Sunday at the Dandelion Festival in Greenbrier County, Dickens accepted an engraved copy of a resolution passed by the West Virginia Senate, citing him for his 40 years as a country music star as well as for being the only West Virginian elected to the Country Music Hall of Fame.

"I'm proud to be a West Virginian. I've carried the name of West Virginia all over the globe," he said.

The marriage Monday was the first for Hamlisch, 44, who has won three Academy Awards and a Pulitzer Prize, as well as Grammy, Tony and Golden Globe awards. Two of his Oscars were for "The Way We Were," and one for "The Sting."

It was the second marriage for Blair, a native of Columbus, Ohio.

Lakers waiting for chance at history

By WALTER BERRY

PHOENIX (AP) — The Los Angeles Lakers, with a record 11 straight playoff wins behind them, now can make a little more history by becoming the first team in 23 years to win three straight NBA titles.

"Every year, we get a little angrier because we feel we don't get enough respect," says guard Byron Scott as the Lakers, seeking their sixth title of the decade, head into the finals for the eighth time in the '80s.

"Everybody's always writing us off. Last year, some people were saying we would get to the conference finals and lose. This year, they said we wouldn't even get there. I think we've shown everyone we're all a little hungrier this year. We have a lot of pride and we just want to keep on winning."

Los Angeles got its third straight playoff sweep by beating Phoenix 122-117 Sunday to capture the Western Conference championship. Last year, the Lakers needed seven games to beat both Utah and Dallas in reaching the finals, where it took seven games to dispose of Detroit.

"We're real confident we can win every game," said Mychal Thompson. "Last year, we took the scenic route through back alleys and side streets. This year, we've taken the short cut."

Scott scored a career playoff-high 35 points in Game 4, Magic Johnson had 21 points and 20 assists, setting an NBA playoff record for most assists in a four-game series with 57.

Now the Lakers await the winner of the Detroit-Chicago series as they bid to become the first team to win three in a row since the Boston Celtics won the last of a record eight straight titles in 1966.

Los Angeles, which previously swept Portland in three straight and Seattle in four, is now an 11-0 in the playoffs this season; 13-0 in post-season dating back to last year's postseason and 16-0 counting the last five games of this regular season.

The last team to reach the NBA Finals undefeated was the 1982 Lakers, who beat Philadelphia in the finals.

Detroit had the best regular-season record this season and were favored going into the playoffs. But the Suns can't see beyond Los Angeles.

"Right now, I can't see anybody beating the Lakers," said Eddie Johnson and Tom Chambers added:

"I've never seen them play better. We were outplayed by a team that is unbelievable. They were awesome. Incredible. They don't take bad shots. They don't make mistakes. They're like a machine."

"We hadn't lost four games in a row all year until now," said rookie Dan Majerle. "They came into our building and won two straight. We only lost six games here all year and one in the conference."

"They're the best half-court team in the NBA," Phoenix coach Cotton Fitzsimmons said. "You'd think they'd slide once and we'd win one game. Not the Lakers. They have the experience and they exploited every mistake we made. We came up against the best team in basketball."

"The guys have stepped things up a little bit," said Coach Pat Riley.

"The character of this team is showing. I think we've opened a few eyes. Some people have knocked us, but this is our eighth trip to the finals in 10 years. That's pretty consistent. When you do what we've done, you should get respect. We don't get it always. In a subtle way, I think we're motivated by that."

The Lakers say they don't care who they play next.

JORDAN

Growing up in Wilmington, N.C., he played both positions. At a leanly muscular 6 feet 6 inches and 195 pounds, think of him hitting home runs and roaming center field, perhaps as smoothly as Joe DiMaggio and Willie Mays did.

If he had remained a pitcher, think of him peering down from the mound while gripping a baseball with the right hand that holds a basketball as if it were a grapefruit, not unlike Dwight Gooden.

In football, think of Jordan as a quarterback, football's version of what he is in basketball, a point guard. Think of him as a running back swerving through tacklers.

Or if he didn't quite have a quarterback's arm or a running back's upper-body strength, think of him as a wide receiver soaring high to catch passes or as a cornerback surrounding an opposing wide receiver with his long arms.

In tennis, think of Jordan serving from on high and then covering the court the way he covers the basketball court.

In golf, think of him growing up with a tutored swing instead of shooting in the mid-70s without really knowing what he's doing.

In boxing, think of him flicking left jabs.

In gymnastics, think of him as the lord of the rings.

No matter what the sport, it's easy to think of Michael Jordan as the best. Especially in the decathlon.

Trade shocking to Spurs

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — The San Antonio Spurs' trade of popular guard Alvin Robertson and forward Greg Anderson for Milwaukee forward Terry Cummings surprised Spurs fans and players.

"It surprises me because Alvin has been a mainstay with San Antonio," said Spurs reserve Scott Roth after the deal was announced Sunday.

"They traded two quality players for one player who may be over the hill in two or three years," said guard Willie Anderson. "This trade will upset a lot of people. I didn't expect to lose two quality players like that in one trade."

Cummings has led the Bucks in scoring each of his five seasons with the team, averaging 22.9 points. But he and Robertson were also disappointed by the deal. Both hoped to stay with their team for several more years.

"I wanted to finish my career here. This is the best group of people I ever played with and the best organization I ever played for," Cummings said.

Robertson said he looked forward to being with the Spurs when David Robinson joined this fall. Robinson, the Navy superstar who was the first player picked in the 1987 draft, is a 7-foot-1 center who had to complete a two-year commitment to the Navy before turning pro.

Robertson, a three-time NBA All-Star, averaged 16.2 ppg, 5.4 assists and 2.9 steals for the Spurs. His stature grew in San Antonio during his five years there. Many fans viewed him as the team's biggest star since George Gervin, the Spurs' leading scorer.

"I expect there to be a day in Alvin's career, either on-court or off, when he will be back in the San Antonio community," Spurs' owner Red McCombs said.

"I hate to see Alvin go. He was one of the few stars we had," said Fernando Rochina, a member of the Baseline Bums, the Spurs' cheering group. "I guess Cummings is all right. He's a seasoned player and he'll help. But I don't know about getting rid of Alvin."

"I thought Alvin could be great when he wanted to, and he played with a lot of spirit," Jack Pitluk, a former Spurs investor told the San Antonio Express-News.

Ruidoso measures big attendance

From Staff Reports

RUIDOSO DOWNS, N.M. — Attendance and handle figures for Memorial Day weekend 1989 were up drastically at Ruidoso Downs in comparison to 1988.

Attendance was up 30.4 percent over the weekend. A total of 21,581 attended over the four-day weekend with wagers totaling $1,996,706. In 1988, that figure was 16,545. The handle was also up over 1988's figure of $1,728,140.

For the season, the average attendance is 3,992 compared to 1988's 3,498. The figure is 14.1 percent better than 1988. The 1989 average handle is $367,529 compared to 1988 $355,303, that is a three percent improvement over 1988. There is a twin-trifecta carryover of $39,988.50 for Friday's races.

Straight Reality won Monday's $12,775 Memorial Day Handicap. The colt got up in the last jump to win by a nose. He paid $19.00, 9.60, 4.80 under jockey Mike Lidberg. It was Lidberg's second win of the day. Fly Dragoness was second and paid $13.20, and 6.60. Suzy Sundance, who was coupled with Fly Dragoness was third and dead-heated with Everoneknowsmyname, 2.40.

Lidberg has been aboard for all five of Straight Reality's 1989. This was his second stakes of the year. Earlier this year, he won the Sunland Derby. He was disqualified from second and placed third in the Riley Allison Derby.

"He's the best three-year-old colt I ride," said Lidberg. "He'll be a killer going longer."

Straight Reality has won four of his 11 career starts.

"The more he matures, the better he gets," said winning trainer Vicki McCabe, who owns the horse with Victor McCabe and Ann McCabe. "This six furlongs probably surprised him. We'll probably run in the Jockey Club Handicap next."

Fittipaldi revels in victory after committee makes it official

By MIKE HARRIS

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Emmerson Fittipaldi planted a kiss on A.J. Foyt's forehead. Or was that Al Unser?

The crowd laughed as the winner of Sunday's Indianapolis 500 leaned across the car that carried him to the biggest victory of his life and kissed the Borg Warner Trophy, a monstrous silver cup covered with faces of winners since 1911.

He drove a very fast car Sunday, leading 158 of 200 laps and setting a race single-lap record of 222.469 mph — an incredible jump from the previous fast race lap of 209.154 by Rick Mears in 1988.

Al Unser Jr., who finished second despite crashing after bumping wheels with Fittipaldi just three miles from the end, and Michael Andretti, whose engine failed while he led in the final 100 miles, were also over 220 at times. They were the only real challengers.

Fittipaldi won a record $1,001,604 for his victory in the race from a total purse of more than $5.7 million, the largest prize package in auto racing history. Prizes were announced Monday night at the annual Victory Dinner.

Fittipaldi's winnings for the Patrick Racing team broke the former first prize of $804,853 won by Rick Mears last year. The former record purse, also last year, was $5.02 million.

Runner-up Unser Jr. earned $390,453 and third-place Raul Boesel won $306,603. The smallest prize was $101,903 to Gary Bettenhausen, who finished last in the 33-car field.

The rookie of the year award, also announced Monday night, went to ninth place Bernard Jourdain and 10th place Scott Pruett. Jourdain earned $145,153 and Pruett received $136,053.

"I was very surprised by the speeds," Fittipaldi said. "We talked before the race and thought the top speeds would be maybe 215. But the conditions were just right — a cool track, the new surface and good cars."

Still, the speed surprised even his crew.

"We thought about telling Emmo to slow down, but the car was just running so well," team manager Jim McGee said. "It's a tribute to the Chevy engine because we definitely ran it harder than we should have.

"We geared the car for top laps of 215, thinking the average race laps would be 210-212. It was amazing to see what was going on out there," he said.

After all that, it was still a lucky break in the third turn that allowed Fittipaldi to win. The thud of wheels at over 200 mph sent Unser's Lola hurtling into the wall and Fittipaldi's Penske on to the checkered flag.

"The situation was a coincidence," Fittipaldi said. "We hit traffic and Al Junior was blocked behind this traffic coming out of Turn 2. He had to back off. I was able to get side by side with him. And when we got into Turn 3, he got some more traffic outside and squeezed me down toward the grass. It was a sequence that happened. It was just coincidence.

"That's just part of the show that is Indianapolis. It's very dynamic. We were both racing to win and it just happened that way. There is no blame. This time I win."

Fittipaldi took the glamorous Formula One world by storm in the early 1970s, winning 14 races and earning championships in 1972 and 1974. But, even then, he dreamed of winning at Indy.

"It's great to wake up today and realize I have just won Indianapolis," the 42-year-old driver said, a wide smile lighting up his tanned, handsome face. "It's a very special feeling for me.

"When I woke up, I remembered 1970 when I had just joined the Lotus Formula One team and had dinner with Colin Chapman, who owned the team. He won here with Jim Clark in 1965 and he told me, 'Someday, we will go back with you to Indianapolis.' "

Other seeds advancing on the opening day included, on the men's side, No. 3 Stefan Edberg of Sweden, No. 6 Jakob Hlasek of Switzerland and three Americans.

Jimmy Connors, No. 9, started his 11th visit to Roland Garros by outslugging Martin Strelba of Czechoslovakia 6-2, 2-6, 6-4, 6-3; No. 7 Tim Mayotte confidently adapted his grass-court game to clay by thrashing Mark Kratzmann of Australia 6-1, 6-2, 6-3; and No. 14 Aaron Krickstein rallied to beat Czechoslovakia's Richard Vogel 4-6, 6-3, 5-7, 6-2, 6-0.

Other women to advance were No. 4 American Zina Garrison, 6-2, 6-2 over countrywoman American Louise Allen; No. 5 Helena Sukova of Czechoslovakia, No. 10 Helen Kelesi of Canada and No. 15 Mary-Joe Fernandez of the United States.

Two seeds were beaten on the opening day, both by French players, and a third was forced to pull out.

Miloslav Mecir, the eighth men's seed who has just returned to the circuit after a back injury, was ousted 2-6, 6-4, 6-1, 6-3 by Thierry Tulasne; No. 13 woman Claudia Kohde-Kilsch of West Germany lost 4-6, 6-2, 8-6 to Karine Quentrec, a wild card entry.

Sweden's Kent Carlsson, No. 10 among the men, failed to recover from a knee injury and had to pull out of the Grand Slam event he had the best shot of winning.

Wilander, who began his 1989 slump by losing in the second round of the Australian Open, said he was far more positive on Monday than at any time this year.

"There is more of a set-up schedule in these tournaments, you know you play every second day and have a rest day in between," Wilander said. "Here you have the time to reload."

PITINO —

"I'm a college coach living on borrowed time," Pitino said last week.

It could not be determined what Pitino's contract length or compensation would be at Kentucky, the Courier-Journal reported. Various reports have placed it from five to seven years at $600,000 to $1 million a season.

The Knicks said Friday that they would ask Kentucky to reimburse them for the cost of hiring a new coach if Pitino leaves. Newton said he wouldn't pay, but Pitino said he would pay out of his own pocket if it came to that.

Pitino guided the Knicks to a 52-30 record this season, their best since 1972-73. New York was eliminated from the playoffs in the second round by the Chicago Bulls.

Before becoming the Knicks coach, Pitino led Providence College to the Final Four in 1987.

Kentucky went 13-19 last season, its first losing record in 62 years. The NCAA penalties announced earlier this month include a ban on postseason tournament play for two years and a ban on live television for next season.

SCHMIDT—

"When I went over there, he was the best player in the league three days a week. When I left, he was the best player in the league seven days a week," Rose said.

"I told him there was more to baseball than just hitting home runs, that you have to do other things, such as play defense and help the club in other ways."

Phillies coach Larry Bowa, who also played on the 1980 championship team, said Schmidt was the "quiet link" on that squad.

"He just went out and hit homers," Bowa said. "It was quite an honor to play next to what I consider the greatest third baseman ever. It made my job much easier. The game is going to miss Mike, but he came in with a lot of class and he's going out the same way."

New York Mets third baseman Howard Johnson said Schmidt was his boyhood hero.

"He was a big idol of mine when I was a kid," Johnson said. "I think maybe it's best for Schmitty that he does it now and goes home and enjoys the summertime that he's never enjoyed before. He's had a great career."

Schmidt, with many teammates and coaches watching, needed several minutes to compose himself after starting his tearful farewell announcement and Phillies president Bill Giles stepped to the podium.

"In my opinion you are the greatest third baseman of all time," Giles said. "I don't think Mike Schmidt ever cheated us one day in effort. Michael worked his tail off throughout his career."

Sunglasses are either hot or cool

By WOODY HOCHSWENDER
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Sunglasses have their fashions like anything else. What looked dowdy or ridiculous a few years after it was in style begins to seem amusing and smart again 10 or 20 years later.

For example, a modified John Lennon look is the newest old thing. Alain Mikli, the French designer eyewear store at Fifth Avenue and 15th Street, sells big 60s versions, with thick round rims, almost like Pop Art. Smaller models resemble goggles, and make you look as if you're about to swim the English Channel.

Once upon a time, many women, especially those working in offices, had a imperious cat look.

That 50s feline shape is back, with or without rhinestones, as worn by Daryl Hannah and Marlee Matlin, impersonating Eve Arden, at the Academy Awards. Lunettes, a line of fashion glasses sold at Macy's, has a very attractive version in blue plastic with metal trim that makes you feel like chewing gum and snapping, "Can I get you a cuppa coffee or something?"

Shade has a serious side. Last summer, for instance, you really needed sunglasses. It was like walking around in a greenhouse. Who knows how thick sunglasses will be in the future?

"The destruction of the ozone layer does bring in more ultraviolet light," said Dr. William McCarty, the president of the New York State Society of Ophthalmologists. "Theoretically it can cause damage to the eyes, making it more important to wear sunglasses."

To determine the shapes of shades in the future, Dr. McCarty said, "they will have to do a lot more studies."

Futuristic designs tend to subvert the basic purpose of sunglasses, which is to provide something to hide behind, and add useless appurtenances.

A pair of strange metallic folding glasses from Marithe Francois Girbaud — something Robocop might wear — fit into a little zippered suede pouch with a belt hook. Others are so odd you cannot wear them most places, except around the house when you want to scare your parents.

Sunglasses are more like furniture for the face. Function is more closely related to form than in other kinds of fashion. Sporty, athletic sunglasses remain popular, although for most people, sun safety is less important than making a statement.

Revo and Serengeti are two sunglass brands that emphasize both anti-glare lenses and fashion shapes. Revos, with their colorful reflecting surfaces, have made a splash on the cover of Elle magazine.

Body Glove, the surfer supply company turned fashion house, makes a neoprene sunglass in neon colors that you can sit on without breaking, for $24.

Gaultier's sunglasses, like his clothes, use odd industrial-design elements to bind the parts, for example, a copper coil to bridge the nose in his modified granny glasses, $195.

For people who can't handle daylight, Ms. Karan's glasses are big and dark enough to blot out the world. They make you look like a star even if you aren't. Unfortunately, they weigh a ton, another burden of stardom.

Anna Wintour, the editor in chief of Vogue, wears sunglasses indoors at fashion shows, perhaps as protection from photographers' flashes.

Ms. Wintour buys hers from Better Vision Optical, for 41 years at Spring Street in SoHo, recently relocated at 439 Canal Street near Varick Street. "I don't handle designer sunglasses, outside of Ray-Bans," said Bernard Winter, the store's owner.

Some people wear sunglasses to survive. "See behind" sunglasses have become a very popular item among young people in New York.

These have lenses mirrored on the inside corners, so one can see what's happening in back, including who's following you. They sell for $8 at newsstand vendors in Times Square, an area where they can come in handy.

Water essential for beauty

By LISA LEBOWITZ
Copley News Service

Summer showers and baths bring blooms to the cheeks and contribute to an all-over body glow. Water is an essential part of beauty. It functions as a marvelous cleanser, softening skin as it cleans. An integral part of the moisturizing process, water hydrates skin and plumps cells, making skin look dewy and youthful. Moisturizers then seal in water, which is why it's important to apply creams or lotions immediately after bathing or washing.

While "tissue-off" cleansers that don't require water rinsing are sometimes recommended for dry skin — particularly in winter — there are alternatives. A water-soluble milky cleanser good for all skin types, such as Lancome's Galetee, or a gel cleanser, such as Ablutia Gel Moussant, also from Lancome, cleans skin gently without stripping.

And skin derives extra benefits: Warm water opens pores, allowing cleansers to remove dirt more effectively. And a vigorous splashing washes away residue and stimulates circulation so skin glows.

Note: Warm water is kindest to skin. Water that's extremely hot causes broken blood vessels. Water that's too cold causes chapping.

Bath and shower temperatures also should be moderate to protect body skin. Clean thoroughly but luxuriously with foaming cleansers that are less drying than traditional soaps.

CLARINE PLANT Shower/Bath Concentres contain botanical extracts that are gentle on skin. In three formulas — firming, contouring and relaxing — these cleansers rely on the foaming properties of coconut to cleanse and moisturize. Added directly to bath water, the concentrates create a mild, foamy bath.

Baths not only relax and clean, they also can be curative. In the case of a mild sunburn, the experts at Lubriderm recommend bathing in cool water, or using cool compresses to relieve discomfort.

Another time-tested measure for sunburn relief: Add milk to the bath water. It's naturally soothing. Follow up with a water-based moisturizer such as Lubriderm Lotion, and be sure to drink water to replace lost fluids.

Lately, science has been researching better means of delivering vital water to skin. A new crop of ultra-hydrating moisturizers now exist that hydrate and seal in moisture.

Elizabeth Arden's Micro 2000 Stressed Skin Care Concentrate approaches the water issue in a creative way. By studying the size of openings in the top layers of the ski. , scientists found that the oil and water particles in existing skin creams were too large to penetrate. Instead, water in traditional products lies on the skin's surface, where it quickly evaporates.

By mixing the Micro 2000 concentrate at an extremely high speed, the scientists at Arden were able to produce miniscule water particles, .003 microns in diameter, that are said to penetrate the stratum corneum.

From Clinique comes Moisture Surge Treatment Formula, a lightweight gel that delivers moisture into the skin and helps retard evaporation. It's a multipurpose product: Applied generously, it forms a five-minute hydrating mask. Used lightly under makeup as a supplement to your regular moisturizer, it firms and refreshes skin.

MOISTURE SURGE also can be used to spot-treat thirsty areas on the face, such as crow's feet, tiny dryness lines above the lip, throat skin. As with all Clinique products, it's allergy-tested and fragrance-free.

The cabin air in planes parches and dehydrates. Have you ever noticed how thirsty you become on long plane trips? Skin also suffers from the dehydrating climate conditions. One solution, a 1.7-ounce Evian Mineral Water Spray in travel size, can be used to replenish moisture. Minerals in the spray nourish skin. Apply after morning cleansing, or during the day to refresh your makeup finish.

Water, so vital to healthy skin, occasionally can undermine the appearance of your hair. If you live in an area where tap water is hard (shampoo doesn't lather well, and soap leaves a pronounced bathtub ring — good indicators), hair may look dull. The water may be depositing calcium and magnesium on your locks, creating a lackluster appearance. To restore shine, try switching shampoos.

Soft water can produce other hair problems. Because the calcium and magnesium contents are low, hair never feels "squeaky clean." You may overrinse hair and counteract the benefits of your conditioner. In places where water is soft, a minute to a minute and a half of rinsing should be sufficient.

Beware the effect of water on hands and nails, as well. Red, rough dishpan hands and cracked or split nails do result from too much immersion. If a dishwasher isn't an option, try the old reliable one: rubber gloves. They protect hands and keep manicures looking better for longer periods of time. And even when you wear gloves consistently, moisturize hands when you're through with the dishes. Heat from the wash water dries delicate skin, even through gloves.

THERE'S A tired old refrain: Drink six to eight glasses of water daily. It's great advice from a beauty standpoint. In order for skin to look its best and function at optimal levels, it needs to hydrate on the cellular level. Drinking plenty of water ensures that the understructure of skin will have water available in ready supply.

Modular eyewear offers options

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — People who tire of wearing a single pair of glasses daily (and who can't afford multiple pairs) should check out Optic Studio's affordable eyewear option — scores of looks from a single pair of frames.

The company's metallic frames — in gold, silver and black, as well as enameled colors — sell for between $29.95 to $39.

The versatility begins when you attach any one of the 50 or so plastic coatings onto the frames.

The plastic wraps sell for $5 apiece, as do the packs of wraps with screws. For more information about the eyewear, call 10/10 Optics in New York City, (212) 753-7733.

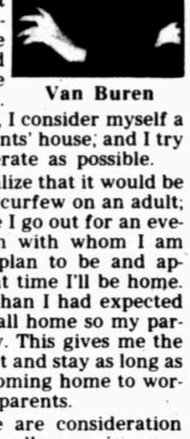
DEAR ABBY

Curfew question answered

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN



Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I have seen several letters in your column concerning the problem of curfews imposed upon college students when they visit home. My parents and I have found a good way to handle this situation. When I go home, I consider myself a guest in my parents' house, and I try to be as considerate as possible.

My parents realize that it would be silly to impose a curfew on an adult; therefore, before I go out for an evening, I tell them with whom I am going, where I plan to be and approximately what time I'll be home. If I'm out later than I had expected to be, I always call home so my parents won't worry. This gives me the freedom to go out and stay as long as I wish without coming home to worried and angry parents.

The keys here are consideration and trust. I am a college senior now, and this system has worked for four years. If you pass this along to your readers, it may help others. — JEAN IN URBANA, ILL.

DEAR JEAN: Your consideration and trust policy should work in every home. When parents know where their children are, regardless of the hour, they are far less likely to worry. (They may not approve, but at least they won't be walking the floors and wondering if their kids are in a ditch or, God forbid, in a morgue.) More students should follow your lead.

DEAR ABBY: The letter from "Michael's Girlfriend" described exactly the kind of man I married. Unfortunately, I didn't realize he was a "heavy girl watcher" until after I married him. He never overcame the habit of staring at girls. One day, in the grocery store, he was in such a trance staring at a girl that he ran the cart over my foot!

He never initiated sex. I had to beg for it. (He was the one with the headache.) I felt empty, worthless and inadequate. He put me on a guilt trip by saying, "You're just like your mother — you don't have the capacity to be happy." I finally divorced him after 25 years of misery.

Thanks for advising Michael's girlfriend not to marry him. I hope she takes your advice. — BEEN THERE IN HOUSTON

DEAR BEEN THERE: So do I.

DEAR ABBY: The letter about the father who considered leaving his very young child alone for a "few minutes" while he ran out to pick up a pizza prompts this letter. First, thank you, Abby, for saying that no one should leave a child unattended for even five minutes.

Here's my story: I am the mother of two daughters, ages 1 and 2. My 2-year-old was sleeping when I had to drive to town to do a few errands. I put her pillow and sleeping bag in the backseat to let her sleep, and took my 1-year-old into the store with me just to pay a bill and run back out. There were a few people ahead of me, so I waited in line for maybe five minutes. Then someone yelled, "There's a car on fire with a child inside!"

I ran outside, and saw it was my car! The door was locked and all the windows were rolled up. The car was filled with smoke. I unlocked the car and felt around in the backseat — screaming my daughter's name. I couldn't see her with all that smoke. I could hardly breathe. She was backed into the corner. I finally grabbed her and pulled her out. Her hair was singed, and she was black and coughing and crying. Never in my life have I felt so guilty, knowing that my child could have died because of my neglect.

An ambulance arrived and took her to a hospital. She was placed in an oxygen tent and treated for smoke inhalation. Thank God, she lived! Abby, the only part of my car that didn't burn was that one corner I pulled my child out of.

I learned a lesson I will never forget. Please print this as a warning to others who may be tempted to leave a child unattended for "only a few minutes." — A MIRACLE IN ANOKA, MINN.

Abby's favorite recipes are going like hotcakes! Send your name and address, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Abby's Cookbooklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Schools may be minus math teachers

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

As if we don't have enough to worry about, I read a story the other day that said this country will need 20,000 new math and science teachers next year and no one knows where they're coming from.

As a woman who once wrote the bank a check to cover an overdraft, I don't even understand the question.

I think what we've got in this country is a math crisis. We've got people who win a lottery and have no idea how many zeroes they've won. We have people running around with a full deck of credit cards with not a clue as to how much interest they have to pay on the unpaid balance. We're inundated with news programs that talk about health and drug statistics, $2.4 trillion budgets, and savings and loan deficits. There's an entire Eastern seaboard full of people who can't figure out that when they call someone in the Mountain Standard time zone, they have to subtract three hours.

My husband is pretty good at math. Before we were married, we sat around and talked about the genetic nightmare of any children we might have together. The worst scenario we could imagine was: What if our daughters had his legs and my math ability? What if our sons had his hairline and my math ability? We nearly broke off the engagement.

Our worst nightmare materialized. I watched in horror one day as I asked one of the kids to divide a cupcake equally with his brother. On one side of the knife were two crumbs that he shoved grudgingly across the table. The genes had been passed.

Math wizards are always telling us how much fun numbers can be. If it is so much fun, then how come I thought the film "Wall Street" needed subtitles? If Charlie Sheen and Michael Douglas can't make numbers look like fun, no one can.

I think what we have to do is to bite the bullet and get back to the basics of mathematics. We must learn how to factor in $2.4 trillion with "read my lips." We must learn how to pronounce Isaac Asimov. We should let the dollar fall BEFORE we make our vacation plans. Since IRS people never have the same answer, we should shop around until we find the lowest estimate. When our children charge us more interest on a loan than the credit union, we should cut their allowances.

Where have all the financial wizards gone? When I asked my husband that question, he said, "Most of them are serving time."

Enjoy outdoors, sun, but use a sunscreen

By BARBARA DELANEY
Hearst News Service

ALBANY, N.Y. — She didn't have to say a word. Her lightly tanned face was evidence enough that she had been out in the sun.

"Yes, I was," admitted Dr. Judith Mysliborski, a specialist in dermatology. However, as she advises her patients, Mysliborski took precautions on her recent island vacation near the equator, where the sun's rays are the strongest.

"I did not go out in the sun between 10 a.m. and 2 p.m., did not sunbathe, and when I did go outdoors, I used a sunscreen....frequently," she said.

"Just because the sun is shining doesn't mean you have to live in a closet with a brown bag over your head. Enjoy the outdoors. But protect your skin as much as possible by using sunscreens, hats, visors and protective clothing."

Otherwise, Mysliborski said, you're subjecting your skin to premature aging, wrinkling and leathering. More importantly, you could become a candidate for one of several forms of skin cancer caused by the sun's ultraviolet rays, which, she said, have been traditionally known as "tanning rays."

"I tell my patients that sun damage is like money in the bank. Every time you expose yourself to the sun, you make a deposit. But this is an account you would like to see poor," she said in her analogy of the cumulative negative effects of exposure to the sun.

She recommends that parents protect their children from the sun from the time a child is 6 months old. "Don't wait till your child is in the third or fourth grade. By that time, his or her habits are formed, and they may be hard to break," she said. "Just as you teach your child to brush his or her teeth, you should teach them to apply sunscreens before going outdoors."

"Just one serious childhood burn doubles your chances of developing skin cancer," Mysliborski said. Whose product you use is not important. What matters is the SPF, or sun protection factor.

The SPF ratings on sunscreens range from 2 to as high as 50, according to the American Academy of Dermatology. These numbers refer to the product's ability to screen out the sun's burning rays. For example, a "2" rating means it will take two times longer than usual for a person's skin to turn red when exposed to the sun.

Mysliborski said that for most people, an SPF rating of 15 was adequate protection. But the lighter your skin, the greater the need for a higher SPF.

If you forget to use a sunscreen and find yourself with a burn, remember that it can be dangerous.

First-degree sunburns cause redness and will heal within a few days, with some peeling. They can be painful and are best treated with a topical cream, ointment or spray to calm the soreness and redness. Aspirin may be taken to delay the development of a sunburn.

Second-degree sunburns blister and can be considered a medical emergency if a large area is affected. If the burn is that severe, accompanied by a headache, chills or a fever, seek medical help right away. And be sure to protect your skin from the sun while it heals.

While many people think of skin cancer as a disease of the elderly, Mysliborski said, there is an increasing amount of skin cancer in younger people because their suntanning habits "are particularly unhealthy."

"They must not think of themselves as immune to skin cancer since it takes an accumulation of 10 to 20 years of sun exposure to cause the disease. They are in that range right now," she said.

Other possible causes of skin cancer include genetic factors, immune system deficiencies, tumor-causing viruses and chemical carcinogens.

According to the Skin Cancer Foundation, the chances of getting melanoma are 10 times greater today than they were 50 years ago.

One reason, according to the foundation, may be the deterioration of the ozone layer surrounding the earth. This results in more ultraviolet rays getting through – all the more reason to use a sunscreen.

The American Academy of Dermatology says melanoma can be cured, when detected early.

The organization recommends a regular self-examination of the skin to detect changes in its appearance, especially changes in existing moles or blemishes. Additionally, you should see your doctor at least once a year for a head-to-toe skin examination if you have a large number of changing moles.

"And don't forget your lips," cautions Mysliborski. "Their skin is thin and sensitive and should also be protected by a sunscreen," she said.

Dimension Cable summer sports, music programming sizzles

What do golfers, tennis enthusiasts, music lovers and country music fans have in common? They are sure to enjoy a number of special Dimension Cable highlights scheduled for the month of June. You can beat the heat this summer by calling 694-7721 to view some first-rate programs right in the comforts of your own home.

ESPN will present exclusive coverage of the U.S. Open Golf Championships on Thursday, June 15 and Friday June 16, said Doug Smith, Dimension Cable Services general manager. One of the premier golf events, the U.S. Open Golf championships will air from noon to 4:00 p.m. on both days. ESPN is located on Dimension's Channel 12.

Celebrating its seventh consecutive year of cablecasting three of the four grand slam golf events, ESPN will present its coverage of the championships live from the Oak Hills Country Club in Rochester, New York. Viewers will see such well-known golf pros as Jack Nicklaus, Curtis Strange, Greg Norman and Ray Floyd compete in this world famous sporting event.

Home Box Office will present the cable-exclusive same-day weekday coverage of Wimbledon '89, Smith continued. Celebrating 15 years of carrying the world's most prestigious tennis tournament, HBO will air Wimbledon '89 daily from Monday, June 26 through Friday, June 30. Scheduled daily at 4:00 p.m., Wimbledon coverage will be followed by special highlights from 6:30 to 7:00 each evening. HBO is located on Dimension's channel 22.

Arthur Ashe and Billie Jean King will guide viewers through the early matches–often the most exciting–where current champions can stumble and future champions can be discovered. Home spectators will get all the side court action as cameras cut to tie breakers or upsets in progress. In addition, in a new segment, "Wimbledon News Update," host Jim Lampley reports on up-to-the-minute breaking stories.

Music and dance fans will enjoy the return of "American Bandstand" to television. The longest running variety program in television history has found a new home on USA Network, Smith said. America's original and most popular dance program joins USA's weekend schedule, airing on Saturdays from 11 a.m. to noon on Dimension's channel 24.

Dick Clark, the host of "American Bandstand" for more than three decades, has turned over his microphone to the show's permanent new emcee, David Hirsch. Hirsch was discovered at the offices of Dick Clark Productions while working as a segment producer for "USA's Camp Midnight," a late-night talk show also airing on USA Network. Clark now serves as executive producer of the new "American Bandstand."

Finally, The Disney Channel will present Loretta Lynn and Crystal Gayle in "Loretta and Crystal: Going Home," concluded Smith. The newest installment of the "Going Home" musical specials for adults, this program marks a first–never before have the sisters performed together on television. The program will premiere on The Disney Channel on Sunday, June 11 at 8:00 p.m. Other playdates include June 20, 24 and 29. The Disney Channel is located on Dimension's channel 18.

The hour-long special includes a concert performance at the Grand Ole Opry in Nashville. In addition, viewers will meet Loretta Lynn and Crystal Gayle in personal interviews.

With this in mind, you'll want to be able to explore all the exciting programming options for June. To upgrade your cable services, just give the Dimension Cable customer service representatives a call soon at 694-7721.

The technical associates of Dimension Cable, who bring you the sharpest, clearest picture possible invite you to view great June programming.

Larry Marquez, owner of Core Craft, Etc., 1118 N. Big Spring, invites you to browse for creative core and mineral gift ideas for those on your Father's Day and graduation list.

If you are looking for a truly one-of-a-kind Father's Day or graduation gift, look at Core Craft, Etc., 1118 N. Big Spring. Here you will discover a unique selection of enhanced geological treasures, such as core lamps, core desk accessories, fossil clocks and semi-precious stone jewelry.

Owner Larry Marquez, a Midland geologist and lapidary expert, has combined his two interests into providing Midlanders with distinctive Permian Basin art, and no two items are exactly alike. He specializes in oil core-crafted items and related services.

Excellent Father's Day gifts from Core Craft, Etc. include core paperweights, clocks, desk name plates, letter holders, business card holders, pencil holders, mineral specimens, lamps and bookends. Choose from a variety of colors, diameters and Permian Basin stratigraphic formations.

Graduation or teacher gift ideas include engraved pen sets, key chains, letter openers and beautiful core or agate bookends. Agate bookends come in dramatic hues of greens and blues, and would make a striking addition to anyone's desk or bookshelf.

Geodes and Permian Basin core art make good gifts for those who are leaving the area and desire a memorable souvenir.

Marquez does all the core polishing and cutting in the shop. As a geologist, he is extremely knowledgeable about products. He points out that because of core rarity, most crafted products retain or even increase in value with time. Special orders are welcome, and Marquez can handle special cutting and polishing services with no order too large or too small.

Core Craft, Etc. carries a big selection of jewelry in all ranges of colors of semi-precious stones. Choose from necklaces, bracelets, pendants and earrings in lapis, amethyst, malachite, rose quartz, agate and more.

Those who enjoy crystals will find a big selection of crystal pendants, spheres and other related items.

Special agate items include bookends in a big selection of colors and sizes, night lights, windchimes, clocks, pen sets and jewelry boxes.

Fossils, always interesting and unique, include ammonites, trilobites, and fish. These make good paperweights or decorating tools. Fossil fish wall clocks are especially distinctive and, like all Core Craft, Etc. items, no one is alike.

Core Craft, Etc. is now taking orders for engraving, including trophy plaques and name plates. Large orders for sports teams and tournaments are welcome. Most engraving is done in one day.

In addition to gifts, Marquez provides quality oil well core services, including core polishing, drilling and slabbing.

For a truly rare gift, shop this very different gift shop. Debbie King handles sales and will help you make a memorable selection. Core Craft, Etc. is open Monday through Friday from 11:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. and Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Call 687-1631 for more information.

DIMENSION CABLE INFORMATION SERIES
"Your Opinion Counts"
The most important voice in all decisions about programming on Dimension Cable is that of our customers. We're here to serve you, and it's your voice we listen to above all others.
Each year, we conduct a major customer programming survey. Customers are contacted at random by telephone. During a 20 minute interview, we ask questions about different kinds of programming. In addition, we regularly conduct less detailed surveys, which consist of random five minute interviews. Based on these surveys, along with information provided by the Nielson Media Research Company, we select the program services which will best satisfy customer needs.
This careful consideration of each programming decision is just one more part of our continuing effort to provide you with the very best cable service possible.

Abortion-consent law a growing issue

RELIGION

By IKE FLORES

TAVARES, Fla. (AP) — The 15-year-old girl was defiant.

"Just because you tell me I can't have an abortion doesn't mean I'm going to go home and tell my mom," she told the judge. "I'm going to another court."

The teen-ager was preparing an appeal with a legal services lawyer but was spared the fight when an appeals court overturned the state's abortion-consent law in a case involving another central Florida girl, identified only as T.W.

After hopscotching up to the U.S. Supreme Court and back, T.W.'s case is now before Florida's highest court for a June 27 hearing on whether the state can constitutionally require unmarried minors to get parental or judicial consent for an abortion.

T.W. is believed to have received an abortion after the law was put on hold, but neither she nor her lawyer, Jerri Blair, would discuss her condition.

The new Florida law has focused attention on teen-age pregnancy and on the difficulties in adding legal restrictions for minors' abortions.

Ruth Arick, director of the Birth Control Center in Orlando, used the case of the defiant 15-year-old girl to illustrate those difficulties.

That girl and a 16-year-old who got an abortion the same day had been denied under-age "waivers" by judges, Ms. Arick said.

"We had told them that with all the ups and downs in the courtrooms to just hang in there," said Ms. Arick, who described the younger girl as "very persistent," an only daughter whose parents had considered her a perfect child who could do no wrong.

"She felt that if they found out about her pregnancy, they would not trust her ever again and limit her activities the rest of the time she was in that house," Ms. Arick said.

Dr. Alfred H. Moffett, who delivered babies in nearby Leesburg for 16 years until quitting obstetrics earlier this year, said teen-age pregnancy is "a major problem, both here in Lake County and in many areas of the state. ... Everyone who practices obstetrics sees 12-, 13- and 14-year-olds having babies."

Moffett said 25 percent to 30 percent of the indigent patients he treated at Leesburg Regional Medical Center were minor, unmarried girls.

That is in line with estimates from abortion-rights activists, who say minors received about a third of the 75,000 abortions performed in Florida last year.

"Teen-age pregnancies are on the rise," Moffett said. "We don't need all kinds of statistics to know that. We need to teach these young ladies what to do. That's why sex education in the schools is so terribly important."

The primary reason for young pregnancies, Moffett believes, is a lack of guidance at home, church and school.

"They don't know how or what to do and how to keep from getting pregnant," he said. "The moral implications are up to the family and the church. But someone needs to teach them the mechanics."

In a report released May 24, the Southern Regional Project on Infant Mortality said the South has a higher rate of teen-age pregnancy than the rest of the nation and called for an intensified education campaign aimed at boys as well as young girls.

"When our children have children, we all lose," said Mississippi Gov. Ray Mabus, co-chairman of the group.

The report said Southern girls under age 17 accounted for 47 percent of the nation's 178,000 teen-age births in 1985 although the region was home to just 37 percent of the girls in that age group.

Florida's consent law, which was enacted in February, required a girl under 18 who did not have her parents' consent for an abortion to go before a judge and convince him that her parents were unreasonable in withholding consent or that she feared physical or emotional abuse if she requested help from parents or a guardian. Before that, a girl legally did not need anyone's permission, although many hospitals, clinics and doctors required some type of parental authorization.

Barricaded nuns still await word from Rome

MORRIS TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — Four nuns who locked themselves in a monastery infirmary eight months ago to resist liberalizations in their austere lifestyle are frustrated at the Vatican's inaction in resolving the dispute, supporters say.

"It's been a long time, too long," Betty Sutton, a spokeswoman for the nuns, said Monday. "It's tiring, but they're still hanging in there and holding their own. They're not going to give in."

The four nuns and another sister barricaded themselves in the infirmary at the Most Blessed Virgin Mary of Mount Carmel on Oct. 4. They said they feared eviction because of their protests against a loosening of the cloister regime.

Sister John of the Cross, one of the nuns, left the infirmary earlier this year because of poor health.

The nuns are tired of waiting for the Apostolica Signatura, the Vatican's highest court, to rule on the dispute, said Mrs. Sutton, a private benefactor who has taken up the nuns' cause.

"They've kicked this thing around for almost a year now," she said. "We're going to start making some phone calls and try to light a fire under them."

The Vatican has declined to comment on the case.

Tim Manning; a spokesman for the Paterson diocese, where the monastery is located, said church officials would allow the nuns to remain barricaded until they hear from Rome. He said he was surprised at the length of the dispute, but added that disagreements within the church are studied carefully before any resolution is reached.

"My understanding is that their operating procedure is very deliberate," Manning said. "When they have an answer, they'll send it, but they don't issue progress reports."

The nuns are protesting the decison of their prioress, Mother Teresa Hewitt, to introduce candy and television into the monastery.

SHUT UP.

Or learn to say it right.

The Toastmasters program will help you learn to communicate your ideas. The other members of your Toastmasters club are learning to do the same thing and they'll be glad to help you. The program was designed by professionals and there's no limit to how far it can take you in your self-development. Give communication and leadership a try. After 50 years of development, the Toastmasters program has to be good. More than a million participants thought so.

LEGAL NOTICE

In accordance with provisions of Section 9 of the Urban Mass Transportation Act of 1964, as amended, the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission (PBRPC) is proposing to request $40,000 from UMTA to be matched with $10,000 Planning Commission funds for a total planning project cost of $50,000.

The proposed 1989-90 Program of Projects for the Midland-Odessa urbanized area is:
1. Administration
2. Data Collection and Analysis
3. Routine Review
4. Long Range Planning
5. Transportation System Management
   a) Continue to coordinate with private transportation providers.
   b) Continue transportation services monitoring and evaluation and possible transportation coordination
   c) Continue to accumulate data for a transit study update
   d) Participate in the Census Bureau /MPO Cooperative Assistance Program for the 1990 Census.
6. Transportation Improvement Program
7. Elderly and Handicapped Planning
8. Documents

A detailed spending plan for those projects is included in the proposed 1898-90 Unified Planning Work Program; a copy of the UPWP and the Program of Projects can be reviewed at the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission offices between 8:00 AM and 5:00 PM, Monday through Friday. The PBRPC is located 2514 Pliska Drive, Midland International Airport.

The PBRPC will submit the Section 9 application to the Urban Mass Transportation Administration on or about June 16, 1989. Persons desiring that a public hearing be conducted to obtain the views of citizens on the proposed program of projects should contact the PBRPC at (915) 563-1061 prior to 5:00 PM, Friday, June 9,1989. For any additional information regarding the local transportation process, ask for Jerry Tschauner.

VA REAL ESTATE

Now Available to Veterans or Non-Veterans

30 YR. FIXED-RATE FINANCING AVAILABLE

NOTICE

All properties are sold in their "AS IS" condition and the VA makes no warranties expressed or implied, in respect thereto. For inspection of the following homes and assistance in submitting an offer, see your local real estate broker.

Renters wishing to accomplish home ownership, regardless of prior credit experience, should consult a broker. You may qualify for vendee financing to complete the purchase of one of these homes.

CLOSING DATE FOR RECEIPT OF OFFERS IS 4:30 PM JUNE 7, 1989

PM NUMBER	ADDRESS/CITY/ZIP	PRICE	DOWN PMT	BED/BATH/ GARAGE	STATUS/B
368525	2003 Northrup Dr., Midland 79703	56,000	2,800	3/2.0/0	SR1, SR14

SR-1 Qualifies for GI/FHA financing or VA will repair to qualifying condition. VA will also repair defects in the plumbing, heating and electrical systems if reported to the VA Management Broker within 30 days of loan closing.
SR-2 No repairs by VA. Strictly "AS IS." NOT ELIGIBLE FOR GI/FHA FINANCING.
SR-3 VA will make no repairs to swimming pool/hot tub or related equipment.
SR-5 Flood insurance required.
SR-6 Water serviced by well. VA does not warrant water or well equipment.
SR-7 Sewer service - septic tank. VA does not warrant system.
SR-8 Liquefied petroleum gas service. VA does not warrant system.
SR-9 Property is condemned and does not meet city code. Property must be repaired to code or demolished.
SR-10 Maintenance assessment to be paid to homeowners' association, not included in mortgage payments. (Information in listing)
SR-11 Water service is by community system. Purchaser must pay all fees, deposits, etc.
SR-12 _____ will be reinstalled at sales closing.
SR-14 On term sales only, for owner occupied properties, seller will contribute 5% down payment on behalf of buyer if offer is submitted at or above listed term price.
SR-15 _____ believed inoperable and VA will not repair.

The offer which best serves the interest of VA will be processed for acceptance. The name of the successful offeror and sales broker will appear in subsequent publications. VA will accept cash offers up to 10 percent below the advertised term sales price. VA also will pay reasonable loan discount points and buyers' closing costs on cash offers when requested on the Cash Sale Addendum to Offer to Purchase. However, the combined loan discount points, buyers' closing costs to be paid by VA and the discount for cash may not exceed 10 percent of the term list price. Offers must be submitted at term listed price when buyers request a new GI loan with $1.00 move-in. Interest rate of available financing is 10 percent (APR 10.1 percent).

Purchase offers requesting VA vendee financing (Term Sales) must have VA Form 26-6705B, Credit Statement of Prospective Purchaser and Verification of Employment/Income, as outlined in Sales of VA-Acquired Properties Manual, attached to their VA Form 26-6705, Offer to Purchase and Contract of Sale. Effective June 8, 1988, all credit underwriting for purchase offers requesting VA vendee financing is being referred to Miller and Davis PC. All brokers are reminded to refer to PM letter #17-88 dated May 25, 1988, outlining these new procedures. Purchase offers not accompanied by the required employment/income verification WILL RESULT IN REJECTION OF THE PURCHASE OFFER.

Prior approval will be required by VA for the transfer of a property secured by a vendee loan if the loan is not paid in full as part of the transfer. Public Law 100-689 also permits VA to charge a one-half of 1 percent funding fee for the transfer as well as a fee for processing the approval of the transfer.

VA has properties for sale statewide. If you desire to purchase properties in other areas, please contact any sales broker located in the area in which you are interested.

FORFEITURE OF EARNEST MONEY DEPOSIT

Prior to signing the offer, broker must deposit in broker's trust account the $500 earnest money deposit. The Earnest Money Agreement (Exhibit "H") must be signed by the purchaser(s) and submitted along with the VA Form 26-6705, Offer to Purchase and Contract of Sale, on all offers. The $500 earnest money deposit will be remitted to Miller and Davis PC upon acceptance of the offer. Once a purchase offer has been accepted for processing by VA and subsequently cancelled at the request of the purchaser, the earnest money deposit WILL NOT be refunded and the purchaser will be required to forfeit the earnest money to the VA as liquidation expenses. There will be no exception to this policy. Therefore, the VA suggests that all brokers interview their buyers to assure they want the property prior to submission of an offer to purchase. VA pays 6% sales commission. Offers are subject to the provisions of VA Form 26-6705, Offer to Purchase and Contract of Sale, on which all offers must be submitted. VA Form 26-6705 must be submitted in duplicate to:
