WASHINGTON (AP) — The men and women of Desert Storm paraded proudly down historic Constitution Avenue Saturday, basking in a jubilant welcome-home from fellow Americans wearing ribbons of yellow and waving flags of red, white and blue.

Warplanes whooshed low over the National Mall. Tanks that once fought in the desert lumbered through the national capital. Battle streamers fluttered in the brilliant sunshine as Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf led more than 8,000 veterans of the Gulf War in parade as he had in battle.

"Great day," exulted President Bush, as he reviewed the parade.

"I had goose bumps down my body the whole time," said Army Sgt. Karl Van Norman, who rode the parade route in the same tank he drove in Saudi Arabia.

Constitution Avenue was awash in flags: flags clutched by toddlers in strollers; flags in straw sun hats, flags on buildings, wheelchairs, tow trucks and T-shirts.

The U.S. Park Police estimated the parade crowd at 200,000. However, by the time the fireworks were over shortly after 10 p.m., park police said the crowd had swollen to 800,000.

Heads craned skyward as the planes crossed over the Washington Monument, the Lincoln Memorial and all the panorama that the capital's skyline commands. In the lead was the F-117 Stealth Fighter, a dark wedge against an azure sky.

Daytime fireworks capped the aerial show — symbolic bombs bursting in air — as accompaniment to the singing of "God Bless America."

Amid the cheers were tears.

"War also deserves quiet remembrance," said the president as he laid a

What a mom!

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — A 61-year-old woman who is considered the world's most prolific living mother is expecting her 65th child, a government official says. The Guiness Book of World Records said in 1981 that Leontina Espinoza had 55 registered births. By 1988, four more births had been documented. Since then, she has given birth to a set of triplets and a set of twins for a total of 64, according to Juan Nunez, regional governor.

Travis' light

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Singer Randy Travis says President Bush, an enthusiastic country music fan, has taken a personal interest in the success of his song "Point of Light." Bush used the phrase "a thousand points of light" during the 1988 presidential campaign to symbolize volunteer efforts. At the urging of a presidential aide, two Nashville songwriters composed the song about Americans helping one another. Travis released the tune about eight weeks ago. He sang it for President Bush in March in a performance at Ford's Theater in Washington.

Congress is debating bills which would reverse last month's Supreme Court decision forbidding family planning agencies which receive federal funding to discuss abortion.

Do you think placing such restrictions on these agencies is appropriate? Call the CITYLINE COMMUNITY PULSE at 560-2400, to express your opinon. When asked for your category number, press 7655, then cast your vote and leave a comment, if you wish.

The COMMUNITY PULSE will be open until midnight Wednesday, and results of this week's poll will appear in Friday's edition.

City officials considering details of proposed bed and breakfasts

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

Some say bed and breakfasts would be about as disruptive to community life as having relatives over for a weekend, but others fear they would be a neighborhood black eye.

City officials are mulling over details of a proposal to allow single-family dwellings to become bed and breakfasts.

Supporters and opponents clashed over the idea at a Planning and Zoning Commission meeting last week, arguing over the location of the establishments and how they should be regulated.

Under current zoning rules, the establishments fall into the same category as motels and hotels, which are not allowed in single-family residential areas.

Becky Hamm, senior planner, said a zoning change, approved by the commission and City Council, is required before the facilities could operate in those zones.

The idea first hit City Hall in April, when homeowner Marilyn Johnson asked the commission for permission to convert her house into a bed and breakfast.

Ms. Johnson said the establishments would do a booming business after the Confederate Air Force museum opens here in December.

Ms. Hamm said last week that a three-tiered zoning proposal for bed and breakfasts will be presented to commissioners for approval June 17.

The proposal, she said, could go before City Council for first reading as early as July 9. If it does and is approved, a final reading would be July 23.

One type of bed and breakfast, known as a "homestay," would have only one or two guest rooms.

"It's just a small operation that would occur for perhaps a limited period of time," Ms. Hamm said.

The second level of bed and breakfasts would be those having as many as five guest rooms.

Local youths can no longer say, 'There's nothing to do'

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

School has only been out one week and some parents have already heard that dreaded litany of summer: "There's nothing to do."

Parents, take note: Before grabbing a pencil to mark off the days left until school starts, consider the flurry of summertime activities planned for restless youngsters.

Summer day camps abound offering activities as diverse as T-shirt painting, performing in a musical revue, gardening, foosball tournaments and even Foam Day at Lee Youth Center.

"Foam Day is when the Midland Fire Department comes out and sprays giant soap bubbles and foam on the front lawn. It makes the lawn into a giant Slip 'n' Slide," said Janet Swallow, executive director of the Midland and Lee Youth Centers.

Ms. Swallow noted that some of the center's activities are "good and messy," the kind of events which call for an old T-shirt and shorts.

"We have a new water balloon launcher, cream pie games and will build a birthday cake on someone's head if it's their birthday," she said.

Aside from wacky antics, there are activities to suit youth of any demeanor. The various courses offered by Midland youth organizations include computer classes,

BREAKFASTS: Supporter says establishments would boost tourism

(From 1A)

"It would be allowed in some residential districts," Ms. Hamm said. "It may just be zones in the multifamily, apartment districts. We haven't decided yet."

The third type would be a larger operation approaching the scale of a hotel or motel. Ms. Hamm said they would be permitted only in multifamily districts, office districts and other less-restrictive zones.

Other undecided factors include whether bed and breakfasts would be subject to the regular building, fire and health inspections that hotels and motels undergo.

Ms. Hamm said owners would have to obtain a special use permit from the city before opening their establishments. The owner would have to go through the commission and City Council and public hearings with both entities before acquiring the $100 permit.

"That would give the neighborhoods the opportunity to respond to the proposed bed and breakfast," Ms. Hamm said.

"I don't want my neighborhood degraded," said Moore, a retired 68-year-old. "I've lived here 40 years and I've seen the council allow neighborhoods to be degraded."

Moore said he fears the bed and breakfasts will go grossly unregulated.

"They say the zoning commission should be protecting a neighborhood," he said. "But they're not protecting it. They're tearing the heck out of it. The people of Midland don't know exactly what's happening."

Ms. Johnson, 45, a single mother and marketing coordinator for a local oil firm, said the establishments will provide an inexpensive alternative to hotels and motels.

"People will drive miles and miles out of their way to stay at a bed and breakfast," Ms. Johnson said. "It's only going to be for the betterment of Midland. It's going to bring more tourists into the city."

She said opponents here have a misconception of bed and breakfasts.

"They're not an intrusion in the neighborhood at all," Ms. Johnson said. "It's like having your sister or cousin over for the weekend. Unless you told your neighbor, they wouldn't even know you had a guest in your home."

She said she is not opposed to having her bed and breakfast subjected to fire, health and building inspections, but the scrutiny would be unnecessary.

Commissioner Evelyn Gould said commissioners will consider both sides of the issue before approving a plan for review by City Council.

"There has been controversy over whether it's a home business. It's one of being regulated versus simply having guests in your home," Ms. Gould said.

One point at issue, she said, is whether to allow bed and breakfasts in the city's historical district just southwest of downtown.

Although the area would be ideal for the establishments, Ms. Gould said some residents there are opposed to the idea.

'People will drive miles and miles out of their way to stay at a bed and breakfast.'

— Homeowner Marilyn Johnson

After conducting a survey of five other West Texas cities, the city found that none of them has bed and breakfast zoning codes. The facilities are considered hotels or motels in all cities surveyed except Lubbock.

Amarillo bed and breakfasts are found in multifamily, office, retail and commercial zoning districts, while those in Odessa are allowed in commercial zoning districts.

The establishments are considered boarding houses in Lubbock if there are fewer than 12 sleeping rooms. They are classified as motels if there are more than 12 sleeping rooms. Lubbock boarding houses are allowed in apartment zoning districts, while motels are allowed in commercial zones.

Bed and breakfasts in San Angelo are allowed in commercial districts. The city is studying the concept to determine whether to allow the establishments in other zones.

Victor Hardy, Midland Hotel-/Motel Association president, has said bed and breakfast competition likely would not put a serious dent in his lodging industry.

Polls show Yeltsin strong, but runoff possible

Despite his popularity, however, it's possible Yeltsin may not win a majority of the votes in Wednesday's balloting, forcing a runoff election between the top two vote-getters.

The still-powerful Communist Party is supporting four of his opponents in the six-candidate field, and allegations have surfaced of an anti-Yeltsin campaign being conducted across the largest of the Soviet Union's 15 republics. He has led Russia for a year as chairman of the republic's parliament.

Yeltsin's principal opponents are former Prime Minister Nikolai Ryzhkov and former Interior Minister Vadim Bakatin, both Communist loyalists who enjoy the party's support. Gorbachev has said he will not endorse a candidate.

In his low-key campaign, Yeltsin, 60, has relied on the populist platform of speeded-up reforms and a market economy that won him widespread popular support.

In February, following the resurgence of the Communist Party hard-liners that led to the military crackdown in the Baltics, Yeltsin demanded Gorbachev's resignation.

The next month, Yeltsin survived an attempt to oust him as chief of the parliament and turned the session to his advantage by winning approval in principle to hold the presidential vote.

Yeltsin then reached a political truce with Gorbachev in April, agreeing along with the leaders of eight other republics to the Soviet president's plan to preserve the country as a renewed federation. In return, Russia and the other republics will be able to control their natural resources.

In an appearance Thursday on state-run television, Yeltsin tried to present himself as a reformer who was able to cooperate with Gorbachev.

Asked about his support for devastating two-month coal strike this year, Yeltsin said it was the workers' movement that "stopped this strong attack" from party hard-liners.

"The leadership of the country quavered in front of this attack," said Yeltsin, referring to Gorbachev.

But he added that Gorbachev "reconsidered his positions and thought it necessary to lean on the left shoulder, as we say. Since that time, our relations have been normal, businesslike, and at least they do not prevent Russia from carrying out its radical reforms."

A poll appearing in Saturday's Rossiskaya Gazeta, a pro-Yeltsin newspaper, showed him with the support of 49.5 percent of the 3,260 people surveyed in 56 urban and rural areas of Russia.

Ryzhkov was supported by 13.4 percent and Bakatin 8.6 percent.

Guns seized before Pope's Warsaw visit

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Police arrested a group of people and seized a cache of automatic weapons two days before Pope John Paul II arrived in Warsaw on Saturday at the end of a nine-day visit to Poland, officials said.

The cache was among 23 weapons seized in the two months before the pope arrived for his fourth trip to his homeland, they said.

The pope's security has been a concern since his 1981 shooting in Rome, but has been exceptionally tight during this tour.

With Poland's European frontiers now open, Soviet-made automatic weapons can be obtained in many local markets.

Police spokesman Vlodzimierz Bartnicki said the group of people was arrested in Warsaw on Thursday, but refused to say how many were arrested, give their identities or say whether the arrests were connected to the papal visit.

The group arrested had "exceptionally efficient and dangerous firearms and excellent quality communications equipment," the official PAP news agency reported.

State television on Saturday showed Czech-made machine pistols, revolvers, binoculars, knives and garrotes and said a "very dangerous group of criminals" was detained. The broadcast said the group had a Mercedes-Benz, a Soviet-made Lada and several other cars.

Fog may drift into area

Staff Report

Shades of London fog may be moving into Midland during today's early-morning hours.

The weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport is calling for considerable low-cloudiness and fog this morning.

By this afternoon under partly cloudy skies, there is to be a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms. The high temperature is to be in the upper 80s. Winds are to be southeasterly at 10 to 20 mph.

Tonight, there is to be a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms amid partly-cloudy skies. The low temperature is to be in the lower 60s.

Monday's weather movements are to bring in a 20 percent chance of afternoon thunderstorms. The day's high temperature is to be in the mid-80s.

Saturday's high temperature was 85 degrees, and the overnight low was 66 degrees.

The record high temperature for June 8 is 104 degrees in 1964. The record low temperature for June 9 is 55 degrees in 1955.

STATE

Mostly cloudy skies and warm temperatures were reported across much of Texas Saturday, while rain dampened the southern and northwestern portions of the state.

Storms developed in Northwest Texas as a boundary of cool air produced by thunderstorms in the southern Panhandle moved southeast into the warm, moist atmosphere over North Texas.

Thunderstorm development was supported by a nearly stationary upper level disturbance that extended from Central Oklahoma into North Texas. Other showers dampened Southeast Texas, the Gulf Coast and Lower Rio Grande Valley.

Forecasters expected continued cloudy and humid conditions with high temperatures in the 80s and 90s Sunday. Scattered afternoon and evening thunderstorms.

NATION

Heavy rain washed out roads and flooded homes Saturday in southern Oklahoma and parts of Georgia got unseasonably cool temperatures.

Some 6 inches of rain fell near Tishomingo, Okla., during the 24 hours that ended at 1 p.m EDT, the National Weather Service said. About 60 miles north, near Tecumseh, a part of Oklahoma Route 9 was washed away by flooding.

Many homes in Durant were flooded and several roads in Marshall County were among those closed by rain, the weather service said. Low water bridges in Murray County were closed.

The flooding prompted some evacuations. No injuries were reported.

Forecasters said scattered thunderstorms were possible again today, with eastern Oklahoma probably getting the most rain.

At midday, rain and thunderstorms extended over the Texas Gulf Coast, from northern Texas across Oklahoma, eastern Kansas and northwest Missouri, and the eastern part of the Florida peninsula.

The Associated Press also contributed to this report.

Bush's voice choked briefly as he said Kuwait is free because "we dared risk our most precious asset, our sons and daughters, our brothers and sisters, our husbands and wives — the finest troops any country has ever had."

Families of some of the 376 American troops who lost their lives in the Gulf from the time the military deployment began Aug. 2 were at Arlington for the ceremony. Eyes moistened and tears flowed during the singing of the Battle Hymn of the Republic.

The daylong celebration began with the morning service at Arlington National Cemetery in honor of the war dead, and included a picnic for the veterans and their families, a USO show and, at dusk, what was billed as the biggest fireworks display ever to light up the skies of the nation's capital.

Twenty-two thousand servicemen and their families picnicked on the Ellipse behind the White House, consuming 25,000 hot dogs, 40,000 pieces of chicken, 50,000 pieces of candy and creating three tons of trash.

It was a day devoted to a celebration of victory.

This was the parade that was never held for the veterans of the Vietnam or Korean wars. It was, as Vietnam Veteran Alan Yeater said, "a parade for everybody."

"It's a lot better when people are throwing ticker tape than eggs," said Army specialist Ken Jones, 20, from Dayton, Ohio, who served in the Gulf.

The ticker tape comes on Monday when New York stages its own ceremonial welcome home for the troops.

Washington offered what it has — a president, and the historic setting known to all Americans.

When the parade reached the presidential reviewing stand, Schwarzkopf — dressed in desert fatigues — walked to the president and saluted. Both men, commander-in-chief and commander-of-troops smiled their delight during a proud moment.

Bush, coatless although his booth was air conditioned, leaned over to Schwarzkopf later and asked "Why don't these guys carry their rifles?" The reply was not heard.

Several blocks south of where Bush reviewed the parade, a bold little girl ran out into the middle of the street. She handed a small flag to Vice Adm. Stanley R. Arthur, who commanded American naval forces in the war zone and led Navy personnel in the parade. Similarly emboldened, another child ran up and handed him a yellow flower.

Before the parade had advanced another hundred feet, enough children had run up that Arthur's left fist clutched a brace of flags and flowers. Behind him, his four staff officers tried hard to look serious and not break stride as they accepted flowers and flags from still more children.

The cost of the day's celebration — parade, picnic, entertainment and fireworks — was running at $12 million, more than half of it from the Pentagon, and a million each from Kuwait and Saudi Arabia.

"This is good therapy for us, the parade makes us feel good about it," said Staff Sgt. Bob Collin from Bath, Maine, in a wheelchair because of shrapnel injuries suffered in the Gulf. "We'll remember this 25 years from now."

The troops, representatives of the 540,000 men and women who served in the Gulf, were dressed in battle uniforms. The shades of tan were enlivened by the bright colors of the unit flags they carried.

A few dissident voices were raised.

On the portable toilet behind the reviewing stand was a sticker read: "Come Celebrate Death, WARGASM, Washington, D.C., June 8, 1991."

The parade wound down Constitution Avenue then turned across the Potomac, over Memorial Bridge which was lined with flags, past Arlington Cemetery, ending at the Pentagon. In all, it was 2½ miles long.

In between the units were their implements of war. Crews stood up in tanks — some returning the cheers of the crowd — and saluted as they passed the reviewing stand.

A boxy 12-wheeled Patriot Missile Launcher, the scourge of the Iraqi Scud missiles, drew the biggest applause as it rolled by.

"It beats late-night in the motor pool," said Army Sgt. George Kelly of Fort Stewart, Ga.

Michael Wines of the N.Y. Times News Service contributed to this report.

SUMMER: Agencies plan activities

Camp Fire Boys and Girls is offering a father/youth overnight campout July 10 and 11 at Lake Nasworthy in San Angelo.

"This is our first father/youth overnight campout," said Gayla Stricklind, Camp Fire field director.

The campout is open to boys and girls kindergarten through grade 12, and their fathers.

"It will include swimming, cookouts, some outdoor skills like building a campfire, pitching a tent and knife safety," Ms. Stricklind said. "There will also be some fishing, and stars and stories — sitting around the campfire and telling stories."

When the dog days of summer loom, Camp Fire will usher in "Fun Daze of Summer" Aug. 6-9.

Fun Daze will feature day trips to Monahans Sandhills, Water Wonderland, Green Acres Miniature Golf Course and to the movies in Midland.

Kindergarteners who need to keep mentally — as well as physically — active can try Alamo YMCA's Kinder Kamp program, which begins weekly through Aug. 23.

Kinder Kamp offers such diverse activities as gardening, swimming, creative thinking workshops, ecological programs and Bible studies.

"The brain doesn't stop just because the school year ends said Vickie Vaughan, child care director for the YMCA. "Because of this, we will have 15-minutes of reading, creative thinking workshops, recreation and gardening."

As for the garden, Ms. Vaughan said that railroad ties have been placed in an outdoor area between several buildings in readiness for "day campers" to take seeds in hand.

She said the tiny tykes will plant vegetables. "Second graders will plant flowers, third graders, herbs; and fourth graders, the more exotic or unusual flowers and vegetables," Ms. Vaughan said.

The child care director said recreation for youth age 7-12 is "going really strong this year."

"We put the fourth, fifth and sixth graders together, because they are usually smaller in numbers," she said. "But this summer they are our biggest group."

Ms. Vaughan said programs for the students in the three consecutive grades "have similar experiences but at a more refined level for the older students."

Students who want to get into the swim of summer can sign up for swimming lessons at the City of Midland Swim Team, the YMCA or Camp Fire Girls and Boys.

COM Swim Team also offers a parent/tot swimming class for adults and babies 6 months old up to three years of age. Swim Team lessons are geared toward competitive swimming and concentrate on the skills and strokes used in competitive swimming. Cost of two-week sessions (30 minutes a day Monday through Thursday) is $38.

The Museum of the Southwest and Midland College are both offering mentally stimulating programs with an educational bent.

Midland College's "Teens on Campus" — designed for students who have completed the seventh and eighth grades — will offer classes from 1-5 p.m. July 8-11.

The two-hour classes ($20 per class) will include courses in cheerleading, pottery, computers, drama, baseball card collecting, social skills, performing in a musical revue, and even lessons in jam dancing which will include the steps the "Roger Rabbit," "Robocop," the "Running Man," and the "Moon Walk."

Museum of the Southwest will offer the courses "Museum Explorers" for children age 4 through kindergarten, "Touting our Totem" for first and second graders, and "Strike a Structure" (constructing buildings using boxes, toothpicks and other materials) for students in third and fourth grades.

The Boys and Girls Club of Midland has daily activities scheduled weekdays which includes weight training for teen-agers, swimming, cooking classes and basketball coaching. Fridays are "special event" days and will include activities such as carnivals, "water madness'," ice cream socials or trips to Water Wonderland. Membership fees for the club are $3 per child per year and most events, with the exception of day trips, are free of charge.

Lee Youth Center will offer Super Summer Day Camp from 9 a.m.-1 p.m. in four sessions beginning Monday through July 19. All sessions are $25 per student. Activities will include tennis, arts and crafts, cheerleading, gymnastics, soccer, baseball, basketball, volleyball, foosball, the Super Summer Olympics and Foam Day.

The Buffalo Trail Council will have summer camp sessions through July 30 at the Buffalo Trail Scout Ranch located near Fort Davis and Hughes Aquatic Base in Colorado City. Scholarships are available.

Camp Fire also offers Camp Monakiwa, three sessions of summer camp June 23-July 13 in the foothills of the Sangre de Cristo Mountains, 18 miles northwest of Las Vegas, New Mexico. Camp Monakiwa activities include horseback riding, archery, riflery and photography.

Camp Comanche Trails, a YMCA program, will continue through Aug. 23. The Midland day camp offers activities from 8:30 a.m.-6 p.m. on camp days.

For information on public pool schedules call the City of Midland Swim Team. For fees, schedules and brochures of summer activities call the sponsoring agencies.

Students invited to join 'Into the Night' at youth center

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

When the summertime day activities end Lee Youth Center is planning on taking teen-agers "Into the Night" June 24-29.

Students who have completed the seventh and eighth grades will be invited to learn to jitterbug, dance the two-step, participate in a scavenger hunt or play games which could end with a whipped cream pie in the face.

The weeklong activities, from 7-10 p.m. nightly, will culminate in an all-night "lock in" from 9 p.m. June 28 until 7 a.m. June 29.

All activities will be supervised, according to Janet Swallow, director of Midland and Lee Youth Centers.

"All activities will take place in the Lee Youth Center or on the campus of Lee High School, with the exception of a scavenger hunt that will take place within walking distance of Lee Youth Center," Ms. Swallow said. "Once your child has arrived and signed in, they will be accounted for at all times and will be unable to leave unless a parent comes to pick them up."

Admission for "Into the Night" is $30 per student. The cost includes soft drinks, food and supplies needed for various activities.

Dance instructors will give lessons on country and western dancing and the jitterbug.

"We will have something different every night," Ms. Swallow said.

"The high school students serve as great role models for the younger students," Ms. Swallow said.

Enrollment will be limited. For more information call 689-1675.

WORLD IN BRIEF

■ Kurds, Turks clash

DIYARBAKIR, Turkey — Four Kurdish separatist guerrillas and five Turkish soldiers were killed in recent clashes in southeastern Turkey, the regional governor's office said Saturday.

Guerrillas ambushed a military convoy near Cukurca township near the Iraqi border, killing two soldiers who were returning from a Kurdish border refugee camp that had been closed, said a statement.

It did not say when the attack occurred.

Kurdish guerrillas also attacked another group of Turkish soldiers on Friday in Sirnak province on the Iraqi and Syrian border, killing two, it added.

In separate incidents in Sirnak province, a guerrilla was killed on Friday after he opened fire on security forces, the statement said.

Three guerrillas and a Turkish soldier were killed in another firefight in the same area Saturday, the announcement said.

Kurdish guerrillas have been fighting since 1984 to set up an independent Kurdish state in southeastern Turkey. About 3,000 people — including civilians, security personnel and insurgents — have died in clashes since then.

■ Algeria to hold elections

PARIS — Army tanks and patrols were less conspicuous in the streets of Algerian cities on Saturday, and public places and shops opened for business for the first time since the violent clashes on Wednesday that led to the imposition of martial rule.

The easing of tensions came after the announcement that Islamic fundamentalists would end their strikes and demonstrations and that the government would hold elections for both a new parliament and a new president.

The government confirmed on Saturday that it had agreed to the Islamic fundamentalists' request to hold presidential and parliamentary elections before the end of this year.

A presidential election has been demanded by the leading Islamic fundamentalist party, the Islamic Front for Salvation, as a condition for ending strikes and demonstrations by its 100,000 adherents around the country.

The leader of the Islamic Front, Sheik Abassi Madani, told the French news agency Agence France-Presse that he was not interested in taking part in the current government.

But the Islamic Front, which has seen its standing with the public deteriorate over the last year, nevertheless believes that it has enough votes to elect a fundamentalist Muslim as president, possibly Abassi.

■ House kills weapons bill

BONN, Germany — The German government's effort to curb illegal exports of weapons suffered a setback this week when the upper house of Parliament rejected proposed legislation to tighten controls because it would have allowed customs officials to tap suspects' telephones and open their mail without a court order.

The vote on Friday was an embarrassing reversal for Chancellor Helmut Kohl's conservative coalition government, which introduced the new measures on Feb. 6 to counter growing international criticism of German exports of arms and military technology to Iraq.

The decision also highlights the shifting balance of parliamentary power in Germany.

After a series of victories in recent state elections, the opposition Social Democratic Party now has a majority of 37 seats in the Bundesrat, the upper house of Parliament, and can block legislation. The governments of Germany's 16 federal states appoint representatives to the Bundesrat, which has 68 seats.

The export control law had already passed the Bundestag, or lower house of Parliament, where Kohl's coalition still holds a solid majority. In rejecting the law, the Social Democrats said they supported tightening export controls, but were opposed to such a vast expansion of the customs service's power without judicial oversight.

■ Death sentence issued

KUWAIT CITY — The martial law court trying people accused of collaborating with Iraqi invaders on Saturday issued its first death sentence, to a 33-year-old man who never spoke to his defense lawyer.

Mankhi al-Shimmiri, a radar technician in the Kuwaiti air force, was charged with joining Iraq's Popular Army and providing information that hurt Kuwait's independence during the seven-month occupation.

The defendant's lawyer, Abdul Latif al-Seif, argued that his client enlisted in the paramilitary force out of fear.

He also said that he regretted that his heavy caseload had prevented him from visiting al-Shimmiri after being appointed his lawyer on May 25.

Al-Seif said that al-Shimmiri confessed April 23 to volunteering for the army, wearing an Iraqi uniform, and visiting his wife and children in Kuwait twice without trying to escape.

Al-Shimmiri argued that he had not fought in the army, was eventually interned in Iraq and escaped during an uprising in the south that followed the Persian Gulf War.

Officials suspect human error

'It was dark and almost everybody was sleeping. Suddenly, the whole train was shaking, just like an earthquake. People panicked.'

—Mohammed Iqbal, Survivor of train crash

GHOTKI, Pakistan (AP) — Railway officials said they suspected worker negligence was to blame for a train crash that killed at least 100 people and injured more than 200 early Saturday.

Pakistan's premiere express train was carrying 800 people and traveling 40 mph when it smashed head-on into a freight train parked at a small rural station in Ghotki. A dozen of the 18 metal express train cars derailed.

Hundreds of army soldiers and citizens worked throughout the day in blistering 110-degree heat to cut through the twisted wreckage to recover bodies and free the wounded, said railway officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

At least 45 survivors were in serious or critical condition, rescue workers said.

Rescue workers feared many passengers were still trapped inside the smashed cars as night approached, said an army spokesman, Maj. Saulat Reza.

Investigators, who spoke on condition of anonymity, could not say who was to blame for the crash. They did not rule out sabotage but said they suspected negligence by station workers.

According to witnesses, the driver told authorities he had the green light to pass through the station, then spotted the freight train as he rounded a blind curve. He applied the emergency brake but could not stop the train, the witnesses quoted the driver as saying.

The station master and four other station employees were suspended pending an investigation ordered by Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif, who visited the crash site later Saturday.

Lawmakers have argued recently that Pakistan's rail system badly needs to be modernized. They have complained that many employees are poorly trained and that the controls that shift tracks should be electronic, not manual as they are now.

At least 400 people died when a passenger train collided head-on with a freight train. An investigation later determined that station officials had pulled the wrong switch and sent the passenger train onto the track with the freight train.

The express train involved in Saturday's crash was traveling from the southern port city of Karachi to the eastern border city of Lahore and then to the federal capital of Islamabad, officials said.

The train is called the Taz Gam, which means "fast runner" in the Urdu language, and is considered the country's best and fastest train.

At the time of the crash, the freight train was stopped in Ghotki, about 400 miles north of Karachi in Sindh Province, to take on fertilizer before heading to Lahore.

"It was dark and almost everybody was sleeping. Suddenly, the whole train was shaking, just like an earthquake. People panicked," said one survivor, Mohammed Iqbal.

Officials said the crash jolted residents in surrounding villages. Many rushed to the station to help rescue workers from the army medical corps and civil agencies.

By mid-morning Saturday, one of the two tracks had been cleared, officials said.

Midland firefighter says delay of equipment hampers efforts

AHMADI, Kuwait (AP) — Firefighters are dousing an average of two oil well fires a day, and they could double the rate if equipment on order since November were at hand, one official said Saturday.

"If they want to get rid of the smoke, we'll get rid of it; bring us the iron — the equipment — to work with," said T.B. O'Brien of O'Brien-Goins-Simpson Inc.

The company from Midland, Texas, is coordinating the firefighting teams hired by the Kuwaiti government to put out hundreds of oil well fires set by Iraqi forces during the seven-month occupation.

O'Brien said a lengthy bidding process was responsible for the delays.

Three American and one Canadian firm began fighting the fires in mid-March, several weeks after the allies drove Iraq from Kuwait.

They have capped about 150 wells so far, but hundreds of fields are still on fire. Moreover, the original estimate of about 620 wells ablaze may be raised to as high as 750, said O'Brien.

O'Brien said the equipment was requested in November when the extent of the Iraqi mining of the oil wells became clear. None has arrived, however.

Firefighters are still waiting for heavy construction bulldozers, backhoes, cranes, more than 300 trucks and a host of specialized, smaller tools.

O'Brien said he could increase the number of men working from 1,200 to 2,500 once the equipment arrived, and put out four fires a day.

He blamed the delays on Bechtel Corp., which is working as the purchasing agent for the Kuwaiti Oil Co. He said Bechtel was going through a long bidding and testing process before ordering and shipping well-known equipment that could be had off the shelf in Dubai.

"In the meantime, about $40 million to $50 million in oil burns a day, but nobody looks at that," O'Brien said. "These things are not an emergency to them."

Bechtel would not comment on the problem.

Mohammed Abd al-Wahab, a spokesman for Kuwaiti Oil, said: "There is room for improvement. Somebody on the other side might not be fully aware of the priorities."

But he said Kuwaiti Oil was not upset with Bechtel's performance.

For the men fighting the fires, the initial rush of excitement has worn thin, especially as the approaching summer drives up the air temperature.

Three months of raging flames has heated the ground around some of the wells to 800 degrees. With the desert temperatures near 120, the firefighters feel increasingly drained.

"Normally you get excited about fighting a fire because you get to go home, said Raymond Henry, 47, of Houston, the lead firefighter for Red Adair Co. "Now you've just got another one across the road."

Firefighters said the pace will slow as the thermometer mounts and they move on to the wells in the south of the country, where the fires are much closer together.

The work there also involves heavy mine clearing.

Royal Ordnance, a British firm, has been exploding between 200 and 300 U.S.-made cluster bomblets a day as they sweep the fields.

Grazing dispute becomes violent

JERUSALEM (AP) — A Jewish settler from the West Bank killed an Arab during a quarrel over grazing rights and Palestinian activists hanged an Arab suspected of collaborating with Israelis, police said Saturday.

The settler from the Jewish settlement of Sousiya had asked a Palestinian shepherd from the nearby Yaata village to move his sheep off settlement land, a police report said.

When the Palestinian refused, the Jewish settler opened fire and hit a number of sheep, police said.

The Jew fired again, hitting Mahmoud Nawajah, 55, twice in the abdomen, police said.

In the Gaza Strip, Arab reporters said masked activists killed Ahmed Atullah Abu Matar, 23, from the Nusseirat refugee camp by hanging him in an orange grove.

Bell seeks increases in call waiting, directory assistance

The State

AUSTIN (AP) — Southwestern Bell is seeking a $31 million increase in the cost of some services, including directory assistance and call waiting.

The telephone company says the increases are needed and reasonable, but consumer groups say the request is an example of Ma Bell "nickeling and diming" ratepayers.

And the consumer groups accused the company of bad faith because last November the Public Utility Commission approved a $1.2 billion settlement that prohibits the company from seeking a rate increase for the next four years.

Southwestern Bell pushed for the settlement, which was opposed by the state's utility consumer office, consumer organizations and a coalition of more than 100 cities.

"They unbundle certain services from the basic local charge so that they can more readily obtain rate increases on a piecemeal basis," said Don Butler, an attorney who represented the coalition of communities that opposed the settlement.

"It's kind of like finding that one has to pay so much for the car, and so much more for the motor and so much more for the heater," he said. "In other words, it's nickeling and diming the public."

Bob Digneo, spokesman for Southwestern Bell, described his company's need for more revenue as "very real."

The increase for call-waiting is "very reasonable," he said, and the proposed hike in directory assistance is justified because the service "simply isn't paying for itself."

"It's a fairness issue — people who use it ought to pay for it. We estimate it costs us $5 million a year. Today we get zero revenue for that. That means that somebody else is having to pick up the $5 million tab," Digneo said.

Changes sought by the company before the three-member PUC include:

■ Charging 25 cents for directory assistance calls from pay phones. Such calls are now free.

■ Increasing the cost of directory assistance calls from 30 cents to 40 cents per call after the first three calls per household per month, which are free.

■ Increasing the cost of call waiting, which allows a customer to put someone on hold while talking to another caller. The company wants to increase the service from $2.10 to $3.10 per month.

Judge delays decision on boy's hair

McALLEN (AP) — A federal judge has postponed for two months a decision on whether a 4-year-old boy with long hair will be allowed to attend kindergarten classes in the Pharr-San Juan-Alamo School District.

U.S. District Judge Ricardo H. Hinojosa delayed until Aug. 9 his ruling on a motion to dismiss a lawsuit filed against the school district by Joshua Emmanuel Garcia's mother.

Sandra Garcia sued the district Feb. 6 in state district court after school officials said Joshua would have to cut his shoulder-length hair if he plans to keep attending his pre-kindergarten classes at Carnahan Elementary School in Pharr.

Jesus Ramirez, PSJA's attorney, moved the suit from state to federal court and asked Hinojosa to dismiss it.

Mrs. Garcia said she made a promise to God in 1987 not to cut Joshua's hair until the cancer he was diagnosed as an infant is completely gone. That could take up to five years.

Her refusal to cut his hair, based on First Amendment rights to religious expression, resulted in Joshua's expulsion from school last March. School trustees voted not to grant an exception to the dress code, which prohibits hair from growing below the collar.

The judge decided not to issue a ruling on the case until Edinburg lawyer Aron Pena, Jr., who represents the Garcias, can file legal briefs on the dismissal motion and bring sufficient evidence to satisfy the court that the Garcias do reside in the PSJA school district.

In the meantime, Mrs. Garcia says her son misses going to school and seeing his classmates.

"I try to teach him at home but he gets impatient with me sometimes and wants to go to class with his friends," she said.

Joshua does have one friend from school that visits him regularly, she said.

Mrs. Garcia says that if the court rules against her in the August hearing, she'll appeal her case all the way up to the Supreme Court.

Soldiers, spouses need time to readjust, counselors say

By John Mitchell

Operation Darnit, Start.

"When he's here, he takes care of the car and everything," she said.

The conflict intensified when the grass needed cutting, and she pulled and puffed in futile attempts to hand crank the mower. The machine had a broken recoil string, and Curry had tied rope around the motor as a substitute starter.

"He had it rigged the way he wanted it," she said. "I cut it one time but it was just too hard to pump."

Though more minor in scope than the imminent threat of death, the Gulf war also took its emotional toll on soldiers' spouses, challenged by the tests and trials created from the separation.

Taking over as sole disciplinarian of the children; being thrust into the role of checkbook balancer and bill payer.

The resulting changes in the unwritten family rules are typical in such a long-term military separation, but can lead to friction as a soldier re-enters home life.

"The vast majority experience only minor difficulty in readjusting," said Fort Hood Counselor Tammy Call, who helps hold reunion seminars to integrate returning military personnel back into family routines.

Some, however, are threatened by the newfound control their spouses gain, and can make a tough situation more volatile by storming into the household and "taking back the checkbook," she said.

"The wife thinks, 'What is he going to think when he comes back and I'm able to do all this stuff,'" Call said. "Some like it and don't want to give it up. It can take a toll on families."

Charlene Smith, chief of Fort Hood's Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program, said time, thoughtfulness and consideration by both returning soldier and spouse are key to an effective reunion and strain-free reintegration.

The simplicity in her statement is deceiving. Smith and Call have presented close to 40 seminars on healthy homecomings to about 2,000 people.

"I think most of the soldiers left knowing their families could take care of themselves," she said.

High expectations have proven to be the headiest obstacle to overcome for many returning soldiers. For their spouses, it has been making the transition from family leader back into a supporting position, Call said.

"The things they are experiencing are normal," she added. "It takes time to re-establish roles."

Cindy Oswald said her husband Sgt. Don Oswald, of the Tiger Brigade 2nd Armored Division, knew she could run the household after he deployed.

The two have been married 14 years. The seven months he spent in Kuwait City was not the first time military duty separated them, she added.

Her past experience, however, failed to make disciplining her two daughters easier.

"I never did that, it was his job," Mrs. Oswald said. "They would say, 'You wouldn't do this if dad was here,' or, 'We never have any fun since dad left.' I had to get real stern with them."

It also meant helping them with homework and long talks about dad being gone. She said the forced split made her stronger and helped the family grow.

"Everything popped back into place when he came home," she said.

Smith said families that weren't doing well before a spouse deployed generally aren't doing well now.

"They are going through some adjustment problems," she said. "Those that had a good foundation will survive and continue to grow."

Part of retaining that good foundation is in being patient through the adjustment process. It is a trait Smith said is in short supply, based on those who attended seminars.

"Everybody had high expectations for that first night back," she said. "Lingerie sales went up. One woman had these high expectations, and her husband fell asleep in front of the television."

Couples should not be disappointed if initial intimacy is not as perfect as they hoped, she said.

"The first night might not be a wedding night. It takes a day or two, that's OK," Smith said.

Call added that a number of families also pushed for immediate details of what their soldiers saw and experienced overseas.

"Spouses and kids have an awful lot of questions, especially teens," she said. "If they allow it just to stay inside, it's going to fester. That's the biggest lesson we learned from Vietnam."

But Mrs. Oswald said like others, her husband is not ready to talk yet.

"He saw some people getting killed," she said. "I kind of tiptoe around it. I'm not sure I can ask him a lot of questions at this point."

If the pressure on couples is intense, emotions can be more insufferable when children are involved.

Call said the role changes that take place during deployment add to the confusion.

Younger children tend to resent it when returning parents attempt to take back disciplinarian roles right away.

Typical reactions in re-entry include sons and daughters who pretend they don't care about the returning parent, and those who firmly attach themselves, excluding the parent already home.

Curry of the 181st Chemical Co., got back May 6. His 6-year-old daughter Sherrie Denise has not let him out of her sight.

"Every time I leave the house, it has a big effect on her. She thinks I'm going to leave and not come back," he said. "I tell her, 'I'm not going anywhere for a while.'"

She wants him to take and pick her up from school, his wife added.

"She doesn't worry about me," Mrs. Curry said, adding she does not mind. The personal time her husband and daughter share together is important.

Curry put the conflict behind him and came home to a wife more independent than he thought she might be.

"Everything was in order," he said. "I didn't have anything to come back and trouble me."

He said trust and flexibility are the reasons reunion proved so easy for the family. Curry even was open enough to let his wife start paying the bills regularly, telling her she did such a good job in his absence.

Ex-officials unveil tax proposals

■ Connally's plan calls for increase in gasoline tax and college tuition; Hobby's calls for state income tax and cutting property and sales taxes.

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Two competing tax increase plans for lawmakers to consider emerged Saturday from the camps of two powerful former state officials.

Connally

One proposal — pushed by former Gov. John Connally — would more than double the gasoline tax and double public college tuition.

The other plan — unveiled by former Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby — would install a state income tax coupled with cuts in property and sales taxes.

The Governor's Task Force on Revenue is expected to vote next week on its recommendations to the Legislature, which returns in July for a special legislative session dedicated to writing and paying for a state budget.

"No one is going to be happy when they face this tax bill," Connally, chairman of the committee, said. "It's not a situation that is appealing."

With the state facing a nearly $5 billion budget deficit for the next two years, Connally said Texans will pay higher taxes soon. The question is over which Texans and which taxes, he said.

Under Connally's plan, the state gasoline tax would increase from 15 cents per gallon to 35 cents. Tuition at public colleges and universities would double.

In addition, the motor vehicle sales and hotel-motel taxes would go up from 6 cents per dollar to 6.25 cents.

Connally also wants to replace the current franchise tax on business with a tax on gross receipts minus the cost of raw materials.

The proposal, authored by State Comptroller John Sharp, would place a greater tax burden on the growing service sector, while lightening the tax load on capital intensive industries, such as oil and gas.

Sen. Bob Glasgow, D-Stephenville, called it "an income tax by a different name." Sharp disagreed, saying it was driven by business activity.

Hobby proposed a 6 percent personal income tax, and 6.5 percent business income tax, coupled with reducing property taxes by 25 percent and the sales tax rate 16 percent, from 6.25 cents per dollar to 5.25 cents.

Hobby also called for expanding the sales tax to include most services such as legal, architecture, auto repair, engineering, bookkeeping, accounting, funeral, and veterinarian.

The personal income tax would be levied on income above $16,000 per year for a family of four, Hobby said.

Hobby argued his proposal is fairer because it is based on the ability to pay.

But Connally said many highly profitable businesses escape paying income taxes, and revenue generated by the levy fluctuates greatly from year to year.

"The way it operates is at times both volatile and unfair," he said.

'No one is going to be happy when they face this tax bill. It's not a situation that is appealing.'

— John Connally

A&M, USDA set traps for bees

VICTORIA (AP) — Blue boxes sitting in trees in Refugio County have drawn the attention of passing motorists, but scientists say the boxes are nothing more than a series of traps being installed to help detect the advance of the so-called killer bees.

Scientists with Texas A&M University and the U.S. Department of Agriculture began setting up the traps in May and they should be finished within the next 10 days. There will be five lines of traps across South Texas with three running east to west and two running north to south.

Texas A&M entomologist John Thomas said the traps resemble cardboard shoe boxes about 10 inches wide, 18 inches deep and 21 inches long with an entry hole in the bottom. They're wrapped in blue plastic to protect them from the weather.

The boxes are placed at least 8 feet above the ground along highways and roads.

Despite the effort being put into bee detection, officials say residents of South Texas shouldn't worry about the bees' arrival.

"It's really not a situation where the public should panic," said geneticist Anita Collins with the U.S. Department of Agriculture in Weslaco. "The probability that someone will get stung by an Africanized bee and die from it is very small. I compare it to the chance of being struck by lightning."

Ms. Collins said an average person can be stung more than 1,000 times by domestic or Africanized bees without being killed.

Emergency spacewalk put on hold, NASA reports

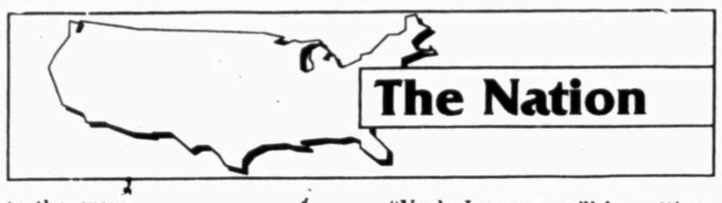
CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — NASA told Columbia's astronauts Saturday they will not have to interrupt their medical experiments for an emergency spacewalk to fix a loose seal in the cargo bay. And in an unusual public exchange, the shuttle's commander initially balked at the plan.

However, he later seemed more satisfied with the idea after analyzing test data and talking to Mission Control.

Engineers do not believe the seal will prevent the cargo bay doors from closing tightly for the return to Earth later this week. If there is a problem, the nine-day mission will be extended one day and astronauts James Bagian and Tamara Jernigan will be sent out to fix the seal, NASA said.

"I guess we are not all that sure that the door will be able to close" properly, commander Byran O'Connor responded, when told of the plan to wait.

"But we'll go ahead and read your message, and we can talk some more later," said O'Connor, a Marine colonel and former test pilot. He referred to written details of NASA's plans that were faxed to the crew.



Later Saturday evening, O'Connor spent several minutes discussing the seal problem with astronaut Marsha Ivins, who communicates with the crew from Mission Control. Afterward, Ivins asked if all his questions had been answered.

"Yeah. I guess you'll be getting back to us with some more information on how we're going to do re-entry day," he said.

Some changes will be made because one astronaut will watch the doors close while inside the scientific laboratory, and Ivins said the crew will be sent detailed plans well before landing day.

O'Connor later told Mission Control that the additional information sent to the crew "pretty much answered our big question" about whether the loose seal could prevent the doors from closing.

The two massive doors covering Columbia's cargo bay must shut tightly when the spaceship begins the fiery plunge through the atmosphere at the end of the flight. Otherwise, the ship could burn up. Columbia is scheduled to land at Edwards Air Force Base in California on Friday.

Between the technical talks, O'Connor said his crew was sorry they missed a message noting they would be over Washington on Saturday at the time of a victory parade for the Persian Gulf troops.

NASA flight director Randy Stone, when asked about O'Connor's earlier comments, said the commander was being "the typical engineer that we all are."

"We've had the opportunity to work with many individual experts on the door and the seals and the latches, and we have been convinced here on the ground," Stone said.

One dead, one missing

At least one of two people on the T-37, shown in this undated file photo, was killed when two antique military planes collided Friday, and the T-37 crashed and exploded near Lafayette, Ga., authorities said. The T-37, an old 2-seat military training plane, collided with an A-26 World War II attack plane, which was able to make a safe landing at a Cartersville, Ga. airport with only one passenger slightly injured, authorities said. Rescuers were still searching for the second person aboard the T-37.

NATION IN BRIEF

■ Escort service allegations lead to resignation

ORLANDO, Fla. — The president of a Florida university resigned after a newspaper reported Saturday that he called on escort services in at least five cities while on school business.

Steve Altman, president of the University of Central Florida, quit by telephone after The Orlando Sentinel said his use of escort services was not limited to several incidents in May 1990.

"He said it was in the best interest of the University of Central Florida and the state university system. I accepted it," University System Chancellor Charles Reed said of the resignation.

Reed began an investigation after police records released Thursday to the Sentinel and The Gainesville Sun showed Altman patronized Esquire Escorts in Tallahassee in May 1990.

The 45-year-old Altman, who's married, initially said he received massages from the escort service three times in 1990, but he kept his clothes on and there was no sexual activity.

He said he did not know the service was a prostitution ring until Florida Department of Law Enforcement agents interviewed him.

"Nothing improper happened," Altman said Friday, promising to stay on as president in a news conference attended by nearly 100 students and staffers in a show of support. "I have a lengthy history of receiving massage therapy for stress, fatigue and tightness in my back."

But the Sentinel reported Saturday that travel records show he also called on escort services from hotels in Tampa, Miami, Atlanta and Washington, D.C., while on university business.

■ Fund set up to help Néil Bush with legal fees

WASHINGTON — Former Rep. Thomas L. Ashley, an old and close friend of President Bush and a lobbyist for the banking industry, said Friday that he had set up a fund to help pay the legal fees of Neil Bush, the president's son.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. agreed last month to accept $49.5 million in settlement of their $200 million negligence lawsuit against Neil Bush and 12 other former directors of the defunct Silverado Banking, Savings & Loan Association of Denver.

Judge Michael Finesilver of U.S. District Court in Colorado has kept secret the details of the settlement, which he has yet to approve. It is not known how much Bush will be liable for. Finesilver is expected to make his decision within 10 days.

In April, federal regulators ended a 14-month inquiry by directing Bush to refrain from future conflicts of interest in his involvement with federally insured financial institutions.

It was the mildest penalty that could have been imposed by the Office of Thrift Supervision, which is overseeing the savings industry bailout.

■ Over five inches of rain hits Southern Oklahoma

More than 5 inches of rain inundated southern Oklahoma early Saturday, washing cars off roads, temporarily trapping three families in their homes and closing all highways in one county, officials said.

No injuries were reported.

Property damage included washed-out roads and a broken municipal water line in the Carter County town of Dickson and a chunk of roadway torn out of Oklahoma 9 in Pottawatomie County.

Forecasters said more than 5 inches of rain fell in 24 hours.

The water started rising in eastern Carter County by 5 a.m. and was waist deep in spots by 8 a.m., said Lone Grove Fire Chief Leo Potts.

"We get any more rain, we're going to be in trouble here," Potts said.

Forecasters said scattered thunderstorms were possible again Sunday, with eastern Oklahoma probably getting the most rain.

■ Students fear repeat of last fall's murders

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — The slaying of two University of Florida students has prompted fear in this college community that last summer's serial killings will be repeated.

Authorities say the latest slayings are unrelated to the five last August, but that hasn't calmed many nerves here.

"Everybody is kind of in shock," said Tom Hall, a senior. "They say it's not related to the other murders but to me that makes it worse. That means there's another killer out there."

The bodies of Eleanor Anne Grace, 20, and Carla Marie McKishnie, 22, were discovered Friday morning in the condominium they shared. Police said they were killed between Wednesday morning and Thursday morning.

■ Confederate soldier lies in state at Capitol

RICHMOND, Va. — An honor guard in Civil War uniforms stood by Saturday as tourists and history buffs filed through the state Capitol to pay their respects to a Confederate soldier whose remains were unearthed on a former battlefield.

The unidentified soldier, in a pine coffin draped with a Confederate flag, is believed to be the first rebel to lie in state in the former capital of the Confederacy since Gen. J. "Stonewall" Jackson in 1863, said W. Baxter Perkinson, deputy commander of the Sons of Confederate Veterans.

A relic hunter unearthed the remains earlier this month in rural Chesterfield County. Because of the body's location and the items found with it, historians believe the soldier died at the Battle of Ware Bottom Church in May 1864.

Student speaks for first time at graduation

CANTON, Mass. (AP) — Scott Putnam delivered his first speech at his graduation. In fact, it was the first time he had spoken.

Using a computer and voice synthesizer, Putnam addressed 26 fellow graduates Wednesday at the Massachusetts Hospital School's Brayton High.

Putnam, 19, has cerebral palsy, and can't speak or use his arms and legs. But that didn't keep him from thanking the teachers and counselors who drove him to overcome his handicap.

"I had some of my best times here, and some of my worst times," Putnam said via the synthesized voice. "I have seen people come and go and some of them have touched my life in different ways. If I could have one minute with each one of them, I would tell them thank you for whatever you did for me."

Putnam, wearing a maroon gown, sat in his electric wheelchair that he controls by using his head to activate five switches in the headrest.

He wrote his own speech, which was programmed into a computer system developed by Adaptive Innovations.

COULD YOU possibly expect a 58% RAISE in this DAY AND AGE?

Few things in life are as comforting as a good long-term investment.

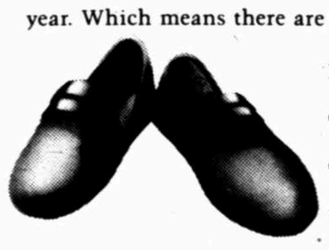
The 58% is roughly the difference between the after-tax income you're getting today by having your money in a short-term taxable investment and what you could be getting by putting your money in a long-term, tax-free Nuveen Texas Insured Unit Investment Trust.

You see, the rates on short-term investments like CD's and money market funds have been declining over the past year. Which means there are thousands of people rolling over their CD's out of habit, who aren't enjoying the lifestyle they were last year. On top of all that, of course, they're paying taxes on their short-term investments.



Our version of executive wing tips.

While we, of course, cannot predict future interest rates, the chart on the right shows a Nuveen Texas Insured Unit Investment Trust will give you 58% more annual income after taxes at today's rates than a six-month CD. And 60% more income than a money market fund.

And because each bond in these Trusts is insured* by the Municipal Bond Investors Assurance Corporation, the Trust is guaranteed to receive both the timely payment of interest and principal when it's due.

And if your tax-bracket is higher than 31%, your raise could be even greater. So ask your financial adviser about the benefits of a Nuveen Texas Insured Unit Investment Trust, or call us at the number below.

Cogitate, then call your financial adviser.

For more complete information on the Nuveen Texas Insured Unit Investment Trust, including charges and expenses, request a prospectus. Read it carefully before you invest or send money.

QUALITY TAX-FREE INVESTMENTS SINCE 1898.

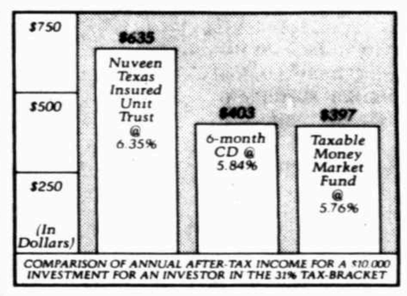
HOW MUCH OF A RAISE WILL YOU EARN?



COMPARISON OF ANNUAL AFTER-TAX INCOME FOR A $10,000 INVESTMENT FOR AN INVESTOR IN THE 31% TAX-BRACKET

This chart is based on the current national average rates for a $10,000 six-month CD (5.84%) and a taxable money market fund (5.76%) and shows the after-tax earnings for an investor in the 31% federal income tax bracket on 5/10/91. The Nuveen Estimated Current Return (ECR) shown is for a $10,000 purchase of Nuveen Texas Insured Trust 7 on 5/10/91. The Estimated Long-Term Return (ELTR) for this purchase of the Trust on the same date is 6.34%. ECR is computed by dividing net annual income, after annual expenses, by the public offering price. ELTR represents an average of the yields to maturity (or call) of the bonds in the Trust's portfolio under accepted bond practice, adjusted to reflect expenses and the Trust's maximum sales charge of 4.90% of the public offering price. ECR and ELTR calculations are based on the then current market value of the bonds in a Trust's portfolio and thus these performance measures will fluctuate with market changes or changes in the composition of the Trust's portfolio.

CD accounts, which are insured by an agency of the U.S. Government, are short-term investments that pay fixed principal and interest but are subject to fluctuating rollover rates. CD's are also subject to early withdrawal penalties. Money market funds are short-term investments, paying variable rates, which seek to maintain a consistent net asset value. The Nuveen Texas Insured Unit Investment Trust is a long-term investment with a fluctuating redemption value that pays a consistent, stable rate. The bonds in the Trust's portfolio have an average life of 25-30 years and may be called prior to maturity.

*Insurance relates specifically to the bonds and not to the units or to the market value of the units which will fluctuate with changes in market conditions. The Trust is not insured by the U.S. Government and no representation is made as to the insurer's ability to meet its commitments. Terms of the insurance are more fully described in the prospectus.

Study: Most maternal deaths could be prevented

WASHINGTON (AP) — At least 1 million women die each year and more than 100 million suffer disabling illnesses from childbirth, unsafe abortion and pregnancy complications, according to a study released Saturday.

Reproductive problems are the leading killer of women of childbearing age throughout the Third World, but Worldwatch Institute contends most of the deaths could be prevented with better access to health care and contraception.

"A deadly combination of high birth rates and little or no access to contraception, safe abortion and maternal care lies behind these numbers," the report said.

Jodi Jacobson, author of the report, said the annual number of deaths from reproductive causes will double by the end of the decade "without a reordering of priorities in health care and family planning."

Jacobson based her annual estimate of at least 1 million reproductive-related deaths worldwide on World Health Organization figures that show:

—A half million women die annually from pregnancy-related causes, all but about 6,000 in developing countries. A woman's chance of dying from a pregnancy-related cause is 1 in 21 in Africa, 1 in 54 in Asia and 1 in 73 in South America.

—AIDS claims 100,000 women's lives annually.

The estimate is considered conservative because it doesn't include deaths from pelvic inflammatory disease or a variety of sexually transmitted diseases for which there are no mortality figures, the report said. The report also did not estimate the number of maternal deaths from abortions.

About 75 percent of maternal deaths can be attributed to five causes, the report said: hemorrhage, infection, toxemia, obstructed labor and complications of unsafe abortion.

However, "the real causes of poor maternal health are rooted deeply in the social, cultural and economic barriers faced by females in the Third World," the report said.

In many countries, male dominance of sexual relations and the scarcity of contraceptives make it difficult for women to prevent disease and unwanted pregnancy, Jacobson said.

For example, in all or parts of Bangladesh, Ethiopia, India, Korea, Nigeria and Tunisia, husbands or senior members of the family decide whether a woman will seek medical care.

Women in some cultures are too inhibited to agree to be examined by a male doctor, the report said, and in some rural countries, women have no way of getting to a doctor.

Also, traditional practices — including female circumcision, which is common throughout much of Africa and parts of the Middle East — contribute to poor reproductive health, the report said.

Many maternal deaths could be prevented by reorienting programs to focus on women's health and family planning, the report said.

Presbyterians OK statement on equality

BALTIMORE (AP) — The Presbyterian Church adopted an historic statement of faith Saturday that places sexual equality and environmental concerns into the official church canon.

Commissioners to the 203rd General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) voted 412-40 to place "A Brief Statement of Faith" in the church's Book of Confessions, alongside such documents as the 4th century Nicene Creed and the 16th century Heidelberg Catechism.

After the vote, they stood up and cheered.

The statement — in the form of an 80-line prayer — that says in part that everyone is created "equally in God's image, male and female, of every race and people, to live as one community."

Another passage enumerates sins against God, saying people "exploit neighbor and nature, and threaten death to the planet entrusted to our care."

The denomination's first statement of faith since a 1983 merger united the northern and southern branches of the denomination was overwhelmingly approved by last year's General Assembly, and by 166 of 168 regional presbyteries that voted on it.

The vote was the last action needed to make the document the 11th statement of faith in the church's Book of Confessions.

In the short debate, one commissioner objected to the use of traditional masculine imagery of God as the father at the end of the document. But the whistles and applause that followed its passage indicated the majority enthusiastically endorsed the statement of faith.

"This is a point of central identity for us," the Rev. Jack Stotts, chairman of the committee that drafted the original statement, said Saturday. "This is really who we are."

The statement mixes contemporary concerns for the environment and sexual and racial equality with traditional Presbyterian affirmations of the divinity and humanity of Jesus and his resurrection from the dead, "delivering us from death to life eternal."

Within that traditional context, the document, which uses alternate images of God as mother and father, declares all people are created equal in God's image. It affirms that both women and men are called to all ministries in the church.

Women have been ordained in the Presbyterian Church since the 1950s, but two 16th century documents in the Book of Confessions forbid women from exercising public ministry.

"It was very important to us that we make clear the Holy Spirit is calling men and women to all ministries of the church as a theological statement, as part of a confession of faith," said Jane Dempsey-Douglass, Princeton Theological Seminary professor who helped draft the statement.

Sexual equality now transcends the level of church politics, said the Rev. Paul Leggett of Montclair, N.J. "It's an article of faith."

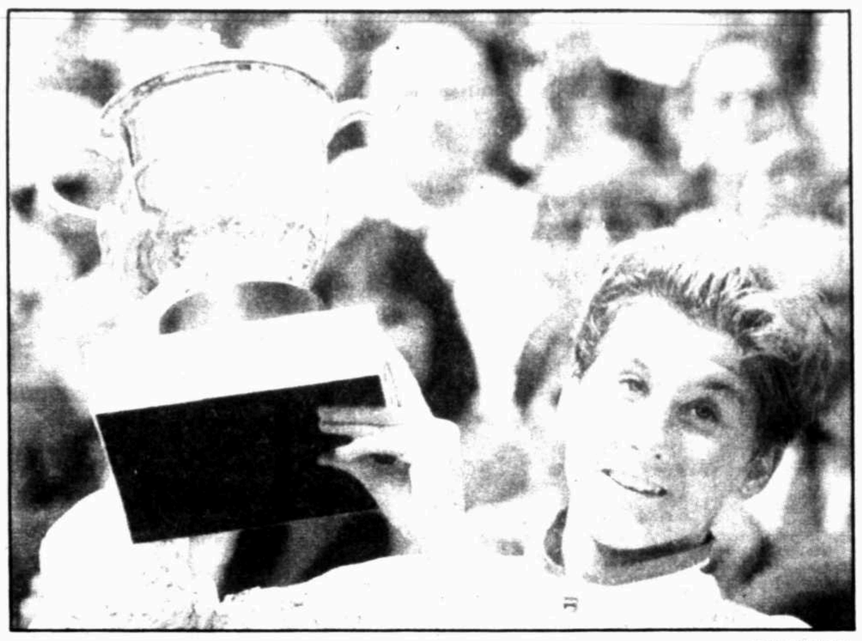
Seles upholds French title



AP Laserphoto

With a 1991 Australian Open title already in her possession, Monica Seles moved even closer to tennis' Grand Slam with a Paris championship Saturday.

■ Seventeen-year-old Monica Seles comes from behind in both sets to win her second consecutive French Open in Paris.

Associated Press

PARIS — Power overcame speed in the French Open women's final as Monica Seles won her second consecutive title.

Seles, who maintained her No. 1 ranking by defeating Arantxa Sanchez Vicario 6-3, 6-4, used her power to control the match and mixed in timely drop shots to keep the speedy Spaniard off-balance.

Seles fought back from early deficits in both sets, winning the last five games of the match,then throwing her racket high into the air on center court.

"This is incredible to me. I can't believe it's two in a row," the Yugoslav said, sighing audibly as she accepted her trophy. "I can't wait to come back."

Friends, past rivals meet in men's final

Associated Press

PARIS — Andre Agassi and Jim Courier, former rivals at a tennis camp in Florida, meet Sunday in the French Open for a title that for decades seemed off-limits to Americans.

After a 34-year lapse, Michael Chang broke the jinx in 1989. The last time two Americans met in the final was in 1954 when Tony Trabert beat Art Larsen. Trabert also won in 1955.

Now another American is guaranteed to win, as two products of the Nick Bollettieri Tennis Academy in Bradenton, Fla., meet for a Grand Slam title.

"I think it's great," Courier said. "To those who are asking where are the Americans, here we are."

"American tennis has gone up a step," Agassi said. "Maybe after us

Hansel strikes the gold

■ Hansel wins closest Belmont Stakes in 13 years with a nip-and-tuck doozy that goes down to the wire.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — There was no Triple Crown at stake but Hansel and Strike the Gold put on a championship duel Saturday in the Belmont Stakes.

Hansel, the Preakness winner, barely held off Kentucky Derby winner Strike the Gold, who stormed from far back, to win the 1½-mile final race of the Triple Crown series.

"It's a good thing he has a long neck," Hansel's trainer, Frank Brothers, said.

Affirmed beat Alydar by the same margin in 1978 and became the last winner of the Triple Crown.

Hansel's head is a golden one — the victory earned him the $1 million bonus for the horse that earned the most points in the three Triple Crown races. In another stride or two, perhaps Strike the Gold would have struck gold.

Jerry Bailey, who rode Hansel, said that while his colt was third, almost even with Corporate Report, going down the backstretch, he looked at Pat Day, Corporate Report's jockey, and said: "It sure is getting awful quiet up here."

At the time, Strike the Gold had not yet begun making noise.

The noise came in the stretch and the volume increased as Strike the Gold ate

James leads Angels to twin-bill sweep

■ Midland starting pitcher Todd James keeps his scoreless inning streak alive in the opener.

By Joe Wyatt
Staff Writer

Saturday was a pitcher's kind of night at Angels Stadium, but what left-hander Todd James called his best outing of the year was really nothing more than a continuation for the Midland ace.

James stretched his string of innings without giving up an earned run to 19 with 2-0 complete-game shutout over the San Antonio Missions in the first game of a double-header, then Don Vidmar and Mike Butcher pitched a combined five-hitter as the Angels completed the twin-bill sweep with a 3-1 victory in the nightcap.

The double triumph assures the Angels of no worse than a series split with the last-place Missions, who won the first two games of the set before dropping three straight. The sixth and final game is set for 7 p.m. tonight.

James (6-2) became Midland's first six-game winner, spoiling the performance of San Antonio's Pedro Martinez, who felt the sting of two unearned runs of his own making.

Martinez, brother of Los Angeles Dodgers hurler Ramon Martinez, committed two errors in the game, and the second one preceded a game-winning two-run double off the bat of Kevin Davis in the second inning.

James, meanwhile, continued to do

Byron Scott has shadowed him closely and received help from teammates when Jordan drives to the basket. Jordan made two of his first 11 shots in the second half Friday night.

jumper with 3.4 seconds left in regulation. He made two of his three shots in the extra period with 29 points as the Chicago Bulls won 104-96 to lead the series 2-1.

"He's the toughest guy in the world to guard because he's so talented, outside, inside, taking the ball to the basket," Los Angeles coach Mike Dunleavy said. "I thought we did a great job on him (Friday) night."

"We've just got to make sure that all of us have to guard him, get a piece of him," Lakers forward Sam Perkins said. "That's the only way to contain him because he's going to jump quicker than anybody, going to stay in the air a little bit longer than anybody, so you're just going to have to be very cautious and sense his presence everywhere he goes."

Trevino

Trevino leads Senior TPC

Associated Press

DEARBORN, Mich. — Lee Trevino shot a third-round, 3-under-par 69 Saturday and took a three-stroke lead over Dave Hill, Jim Albus and Don Bies in the Tournament Players Championship.

Trevino, seeking his third win of the season, had a 54-hole total of 206. He started the day at 137, two shots ahead of Hill and Bobby Nichols in the $1 million tournament over the new TPC of Michigan layout.

Trevino birdied the par-4 first hole. He then played steady golf through the next six holes before birdies at the eighth and ninth enabled him to turn at 10-under.

He started the back nine with a bogey at the par-4 10th, but got that back with a birdie at the par-4, No. 14, considered the most difficult hole on the course.

Hill began the third round at 5-under and turned at 7-under. He had two birdies and two bogeys on the back side, including No. 18 where he hooked his drive into a hazard. It was the second consecutive day Hill had bogeyed the finishing hole. He finished with a 70 for 209.

Albus, a club pro from Long Island, was the first-round leader and began the third round in a four-way tie for fourth after rounds of 66-74. He had three birdies on the front nine, lost a stroke with a bogey at the par-5 17th, but got it back with a birdie at No. 18 for a 69 and a 209 total.

Bies has five Senior victories, but none since 1989. He started the day six strokes behind Trevino, then had nine birdies, one bogey and a double-bogey for a third-round 66, also for 209.

Nichols bogeyed the second and fifth to turn at 3-under and finished with a 74 to fall to 213, 3-under for the championship.

Irwin hoping at Buick

Associated Press

HARRISON, N.Y. — The conditions, Hale Irwin said, were more common to U.S. Open championships than the Buick Classic.

And so were the results.

Irwin, exercising the patience and persistence that has gained him three U.S. Opens, outlasted a slow-moving field and overcame his own mistakes for a 4-under 67 that placed him on top going into Sunday's final round.

"It's the same situation I was in last year," said the 46-year-old Irwin, who is attempting to duplicate his 1990 feat of sweeping the U.S. Open and this event on consecutive weeks.

But he still has his work cut out for him.

"There are at least 10 to 15 players who can with the golf tournament," Irwin said.

Nine are within three strokes going into the final 18 holes at the Westchester Country Club.

ANGELS: Butcher saves finale

(From 1B)

what he's done a lot of lately — throw strikes.

"I'd say that was my best outing of the year," said James, who allowed four hits while striking out two and walking one.

"I just tried to go out there and keep the ball down in the zone and get guys in a hole. It's so much easier pitching when you're ahead in the count.

"That's the key. That's the way you win ball games," he said.

Midland designated hitter Ken Rivers provided the fireworks in the second game when his two-out smash down the first-base line caromed wildly off the bag for a single that pushed home Larry Gonzales and Kevin Flora with the go-ahead runs in the fifth inning.

That hit made a winner out of Don Vidmar, who lifted his record to 5-1 with five innings of four-hit work. Mike Butcher struck out three Missions in the last two innings to pick up his first save of the year.

San Antonio got in the board first in the second game as Brett Magnuson drew a leadoff walk, moved to third on a single by Mike White and scored on Braulio Castillo's double-play ball.

Midland scored all its runs in the fifth. Damion Easley singled to open the inning and stole second. He scored the tying run when Gonzales grounded one through Mission shortstop Tim Barker for an error.

Isidro Marquez, who then relieved losing pitcher Jimmy Terrill (0-4), walked Flora and Rivers came through with the winning two-run hit.

The Angels got both their runs in the first game when Martinez mishandled a potential double-play ball. Ramon Sambo singled to left with one out, and Terry Taylor then bounced one solidly back at Martinez. But the 19-year-old fastballer let the ball pop out of his glove and both runners were safe. One out later, Davis doubled into the gap in left-center field.

ANGEL DUST: Gonzales caught both games for Midland and nailed three of four Missions attempting to steal. The Angels lifted their record to 25-30 with the double wins, 3½ games in front of San Antonio's 21-33 mark. Tonight's pitchers will be knuckleballer Dennis Springer for San Antonio, who defeated the Angels 8-1 in the series opener. Midland will go with newcomer Fili Martinez, just out of the Angels Class A affiliate at Palm Springs to fill in for Mark Holzemer, who went on the 10-day disabled list effective Friday.

(From 1B)

Open in January and now is halfway toward a Grand Slam, overpowered Sanchez Vicario at times with her groundstrokes and came up with big serves when she needed them.

The quickness of 1989 French Open winner Sanchez Vicario, who returned balls most players wouldn't have reached, made the match closer than the final score indicated. She was ahead by a service break in each set, then faded.

"The match was very close," Sanchez Vicario said. "All the time we were moving the ball well. The only thing, finally, was that she won more points than me."

The final game epitomized the closeness of the clay-court match. It included 20 points and lasted 12 minutes, finally ending when Sanchez Vicario netted a backhand on Seles' fourth match point of the 89-minute match.

Seles led 30-0 in that final game, but said her hands started shaking when she realized she was only two points away from another title. By the time she steadied herself, Sanchez Vicario had evened the score at 30-30 in what was to become a marathon game.

The victory enabled Seles to retain the No. 1 ranking, which would have been taken over by Steffi Graf if Seles had lost.

The rankings reflect a player's results over the previous 12 months and a Seles loss would have boosted Graf into the top spot even though the German suffered the most lopsided defeat of her career in a 6-0, 6-2 semifinal loss to Sanchez Vicario.

Sanchez Vicario, 19, played two three-set matches Friday, losing in the semifinals of the women's doubles and mixed doubles, and seemed to run out of steam in each set Saturday on a cool, clear day.

She opened the match by breaking Seles' serve, then held serve to go up 2-0, but Seles broke back in the fourth game after Sanchez Vicario disputed a line call — slamming her racket on the net in anger. Sanchez Vicario quickly lost the next three points, making the score at 2-2.

Seles, settling down after early wildness, broke Sanchez Vicario's serve again in the eighth game to go up 5-3, then held her serve to end the set.

(From 1B)

there will be a drop, but it seems to go in cycles."

Agassi and Courier are meeting for the third year in a row at the French Open, but the first time for such high stakes.

Agassi is in his second consecutive French Open final. Last year, he lost in four sets to Andres Gomez, who did not return to defend the title.

Agassi thinks he is better prepared for the title match this time.

"Mentally, I am more ready for it," he said. "I'll make Courier have to earn it. I feel good about it."

The 21-year-old from Las Vegas, known as much for his flashy clothes as his tennis titles, has a 4-2 record against Courier. However, Courier won their only match this year.

Courier has played in only three finals, but won them all.

Although both worked with Bollettieri during the mid-1980s, they were never close friends.

"We get on much better," Courier said. "We don't spend any time together, but in the past we didn't even speak.

"Now we talk in the locker room and play a few exhibitions and that has helped. We've both grown."

Agassi was once thought to be more immature on and off the court. But after beating Boris Becker in the semifinals, he showed a kinder, gentler side.

"Every time we have met on the court it has been a battle and that has created mutual respect," Agassi said. "He has improved his game tremendously from the baseline. On any other day, it could have been different."

Agassi feels he has to win the final.

NBA: Chicago could take command with win tonight finds the open man for easy shots. That was Dunleavy's concern on the tying basket in the fourth quarter.

(From 1B)

Jordan dribbled all the way up court, guarded only by Scott, then hit a 14-footer as Lakers center Vlade Divac jumped out at him.

"I didn't even know we guarded as well as we did," Dunleavy said. "He barely got the ball over Vlade. Byron was on him and help came. He made a difficult shot."

With shooters John Paxson and Craig Hodges in the lineup, the Lakers had to be concerned about Jordan getting the ball to them.

"If anybody did go up to double team him," Perkins said, "it would have either been a layup or a 3-pointer" by the unguarded player.

Jordan jammed his right big toe when he landed after the tying shot and missed practice Saturday. Even that couldn't stop him. Chicago coach Phil Jackson said "he'll be effective" in Sunday's fourth game.

Scott has had the primary task of guarding Jordan and has done it well. But on offense, he's made just three of 14 shots for 14 points and was scoreless Friday night, when he missed all eight shots.

He and Dunleavy said the burden of guarding Jordan hasn't contributed to that.

Dunleavy said he wouldn't sacrifice Scott's quickness for Magic Johnson's size and switch Johnson onto Jordan ocassionally to keep the Chicago star off-balance.

"You've got to put your best matchup on him," Dunleavy said.

Jordan has hit 40 of his 70 shots in the series.

Hansel, right, with Jerry Bailey up, noses out Strike The Gold, ridden by Chris Antley, at the 123rd running of the Belmont Stakes Saturday.

STAKES: Hansel wins crown's last two legs

away Hansel's lead with every stride while trainer Nick Zito, seated in the stands, pumped his arm trying to drive his colt on. When the horses hit the wire, co-owner B. Giles Brophy held his fingers about an inch apart to show by how little Strike the Gold had missed Belmont glory.

"It was a great moment," Bailey said. "He may not have been a mile-and-a-half horse, but his heart got him there."

And Hansel got there without the benefit of Lasix, the diuretic on which he had raced his five previous starts since bleeding in February. Horses are not allowed to race on any medication in New York.

"His heart carried him the last eighth of a mile," Bailey emphasized.

"That's two good horses right there," Bailey said as he watched a replay of the finish.

One will not be mentioned without the other when the 1991 Belmont stakes is discussed.

The nine other 3-year-olds were along for the ride, but Mane Minister provided a thread that tied all three races neatly together.

He became the first horse to finish third in the Kentucky Derby, Preakness and Belmont.

Hansel, owned by Houston businessman Joe Allbritton, carried scale weight of 126 pounds over a fast track in 2:28 for his fourth victory in seven starts this year.

He returned $10.20, $6.40 and $5 as co-second choice in the betting.

Rangers lose sixth straight

Associated Press

AL Roundup

NEW YORK — Jesse Barfield's three-run homer — the first of four by New York — capped a five-run first inning as the surging Yankees beat Texas 10-7, handing the Rangers their sixth straight loss.

Wade Taylor (2-0), making his second major league start, got the victory — New York's 11th in 15 games — despite allowing eight hits and four runs over the first five innings. Mel Hall, Matt Nokes and Steve Sax also homered for the Yankees, who had 14 hits.

Steve Farr earned his fifth save by getting the final two outs after the Rangers — who got 16 hits — scored three times in the ninth.

Barfield's homer, his 11th, came off Mark Petkovsek (0-1), making his first major league start as Texas lost for the ninth time in 10 games after a 14-game winning streak. Barfield has 14 RBIs in his last nine games.

Roberto Kelly and Sax — who had four hits — opened the first with singles, and Kelly scored on Don Mattingly's double. After a walk to Kevin Maas loaded the bases, Hall scored Sax with a grounder. Barfield followed with his home run.

Red Sox 8, Athletics 1

OAKLAND, Calif. — Roger Clemens gave up one run and two hits in eight innings to win for only the second time in his last six starts as the Boston Red Sox defeated the Oakland Athletics.

It was Clemens' first appearance in Oakland since Game 4 of the American League playoffs last October when he was ejected by home plate umpire Terry Cooney.

Coming off five outings in which he went 1-3 with a 4.50 ERA, Clemens (8-3) allowed the A's little more than Dave Henderson's major league-leading 15th home run in the second inning.

Clemens, who opened the season by winning six in a row with an 0.73 ERA, including 30 consecutive scoreless innings, then gave up a ground-rule double to the next hitter, Ernest Riles, but did not allow another Oakland runner to reach scoring position.

After surrendering the two hits, Clemens retired 20 of the next 22 hitters. He struck out five and walked two before Dennis Lamp got the last three outs.

Joe Slusarski (2-3) lost, giving up five runs and seven hits in 7 1-3 innings. After Wade Boggs' leadoff single in the third, Slusarski retired 15 of the next 16 hitters before giving up consecutive singles to Steve Lyons and Boggs to open the eighth.

Twins 2, Indians 1

MINNEAPOLIS — Scott Erickson won his ninth straight decision as the Minnesota Twins got their seventh straight victory, over the punchless Cleveland Indians.

Chili Davis snapped a scoreless tie with a bad-hop double in the sixth inning as Minnesota continued its June boom, winning as many games this month as it did in its 7-21 June showing of a year ago. The Twins, who last won seven straight in 1988, have taken 10 of their last 11 games.

Blue Jays 8, Orioles 4

BALTIMORE — The Toronto Blue Jays broke a tie with six runs in the eighth inning, and beat the Baltimore Orioles as Jimmy Key won his fifth straight decision.

Joe Carter had three RBIs and Roberto Alomar stole a career-high four bases for Toronto, which came into the game having lost nine of 13. The victory enabled the first-place Blue Jays to cling to their half-game lead over Boston in the American League East.

White Sox 14, Royals 7

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Tim Raines had four RBIs as the Chicago White Sox got 18 hits and matched their biggest run production this season in a victory over Kansas City.

Every Chicago starter had at least one hit — including a three-run homer by Carlton Fisk — and all but Raines scored as the White Sox notched their first three-game winning streak since mid-April.

Tigers 4, Angels 3

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Lou Whitaker's three-run homer off Jim Abbott in the eighth inning gave the Detroit Tigers their fourth straight victory over the California Angels.

Whitaker's homer was his second in as many nights off a left-hander after he had gone more than a year without one. It made a winner of Walt Terrell (3-6).

Mariners 6, Brewers 2

SEATTLE — Alvin Davis hit a three-run homer, and Seattle's Rich DeLucia pitched well on short rest as the Mariners beat Milwaukee, sending the Brewers to their sixth straight defeat.

Alcott readies for Hall

Associated Press

SOMERS POINT, N.J. — The LPGA Hall of Fame is just 18 holes away for Amy Alcott, 18 great holes away.

LPGA

The highest honor in women's golf was within Alcott's grasp after she shot a 3-under-par 68 on Saturday and grabbed a one-shot lead over Jenny Lidback heading into the final round of the Atlantic City Classic.

If Alcott can hang on for her 30th career victory on Sunday, she would become only the 12th women to qualify for the Hall of Fame, joining the likes of Nancy Lopez, Kathy Whitworth, JoAnne Carner and Mickey Wright.

"I've thought about it," Alcott said. "This is one of few times where I'll tell you I thought about it. I think when it does happen, if it's this week or another week, it will be more of a feeling of relief rather than excitement."

The relief is because it's so hard to get into the Hall of Fame. There's no voting involved, as with other halls of fame. To enter the LPGA hall, a player must either win 40 tournaments, 35 tournaments including one major, or 30 tournaments with two majors.

Alcott, 35, has three majors among her 29 victories, so No. 30 would be her ticket. She had a 5-under-par 137 total after 36 holes on the par-71, 6,270-yard Greate Bay Country Club.

Doctors delay Farr's surgery

DENVER (AP) — Surgery to remove a tumor from the skull of golfer Heather Farr has been postponed.

Sharon Farr, the golfer's mother, said the surgery scheduled at University Hospital was put off because her daughter has a urinary tract infection, which will be treated with antibiotics.

Farr, 26, had been scheduled to have surgery on Friday for removal of a tumor that has survived radical chemotherapy, radiation and a bone-marrow transplant in April. The tumor was smaller six months ago, doctors said.

Farr was diagnosed with breast cancer when she was 24. A mastectomy and chemotherapy failed to stop cancer from showing up again, in her bones, last fall.

HoJo homers in 11th to humble Houston, 4-3

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Howard Johnson hit his 12th home run of the season to lead off the 11th inning to give the New York Mets a 4-3 victory over the Houston Astros.

Johnson, second in the NL in homers to Fred McGriff's 13, hit a 420-foot shot to center field on an 0-1 pitch from rookie Mike Capel (0-1). Capel was called up from the minors on Friday.

Alejandro Pena (2-0) pitched two innings for the victory and John Franco got the last three outs for his 12th save. The Astros loaded the bases on three singles in the bottom of the 11th, but Franco got pinch-hitter Rafael Ramirez to pop out to second to end the game.

The Mets rallied in the ninth for the second straight game against Houston, this time tying the score 3-3 with a run. New York scored six runs in its 6-3 victory on Friday.

Hubie Brooks led off the ninth with a single off Jim Corsi and then pinch-runner Garry Templeton scored on Daryl Boston's long pinch single to center. Boston's hit would have been for extra bases but he tripped while rounding first base.

Ken Camimiti's two-run homer in the sixth put the Astros ahead 3-2. Caminiti's fifth homer of the season was his second in as many games, and came off rookie reliever Rich Sauveur.

NL Roundup

Cubs 4, Dodgers 3

CHICAGO — Chico Walker's run-scoring pinch single and a bases-loaded walk to Mark Grace keyed a two-run rally in the seventh inning Saturday that carried the Chicago Cubs over the Los Angeles Dodgers.

The win was only the second in five games for the Cubs and snapped a three-game Dodgers winning streak.

Chuck McElroy (3-0) pitched two innings before giving way to lefthander Paul Assenmacher in the eighth. Dave Smith got his 14th save by pitching the ninth.

Rick Wilkins, who earlier had singled for his first major league hit, greeted Dodgers reliever Kevin Gross (3-5) with a double to open the seventh. Wilkins went to third on a bunt single by Shawon Dunston and scored the tying run on Walker's single.

Phillies 4, Reds 1

CINCINNATI — Jim Lindeman and Von Hayes each drove in two runs, and Jose DeJesus survived early control problems as the Philadelphia Phillies beat the Cincinnati Reds.

DeJesus (2-2) walked five in the first three innings, but twice the Phillies bailed him out with double plays.

Chris Hammond (3-5) lost his fifth straight decision, giving up eight hits and four runs in six innings.

The Phillies scored four runs in the fourth after Hammond gave up a single to Mickey Morandini, a double to Ricky Jordan and intentionally walked Dale Murphy to load the bases.

Padres 11, Pirates 0

PITTSBURGH — Mike Maddux, a last-minute starter when Adam Peterson was scratched with a stiff shoulder, allowed two hits in six innings and the San Diego Padres touched up Pittsburgh's staff

Braves 7, Expos 6

ATLANTA — Dave Justice hit a two-run triple in a three-run seventh inning as the Atlanta Braves held on to beat the Montreal Expos.

Montreal second baseman Delino DeShield's wild throw allowed Otis Nixon to score the first run in the inning and snap a 4-4 tie.

Nixon singled off reliever Tim Burke (3-3) with one out and stole his second base of the game and 26th on the season. Terry Pendleton then bounced to DeShields, who threw wildly to first, allowing Nixon to score.

Cardinals 3, Giants 2

ST. LOUIS — Third baseman Mike Felder's throwing error allowed Geronimo Pena to score from second base in the 10th inning as the St. Louis Cardinals overcame poor baserunning to beat the San Francisco Giants.

Pena led off the 10th with a single off Francisco Oliveras (1-2) and stole second. Bernard Gilkey then dropped down a sacifice bunt, but Felder made a wild throw to third trying to get Pena.

Cris Carpenter (7-1) pitched a scoreless inning for the victory.

The Cardinals made three baserunning errors in the fourth, but scored two runs.

Fernando big draw, but small hit

N.Y. Times News Service

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Fernando Valenzuela returned to the major leagues Friday night and was more successful at the box office than he was on the mound.

Valenzuela, now playing for the California Angels, gave up nine hits, including back-to-back home runs in the fifth inning, and four earned runs in five-plus innings, in a 5-0 loss to the Detroit Tigers before a season-high crowd of 49,997 at Anaheim Stadium.

"I was excited my first time to come back to the big leagues, really excited in the first inning," said Valenzuela, whose last major league appearance was last Sept. 30, with the Los Angeles Dodgers, who released him on March 28.

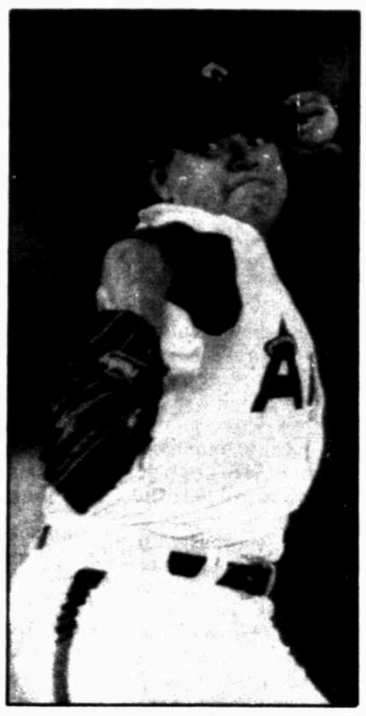
"I feel a little strange; it is hard for me to explain, but it's my first time to the big leagues now," Valenzuela said, referring to his American League debut.

Of the Tigers, he said: "They swing the bats pretty good. Everybody knows they have a lot of power hitters in their lineup."

Valenzuela gave up an unearned run in the first when Luis Sojo, the Angels second baseman, dropped a pop-up by Pete Incaviglia, the Tigers' second baseman. He worked out of trouble in the second, third and fourth, but in the fifth designated hitter Tony Phillips lifted a 3-and-2 pitch just over the left field fence.

Second baseman Lou Whitaker followed by hitting a full-count curveball over the right field fence.

"He spotted the fastball well, and the screwball," Angels catcher Lance Parrish said, "but he got hurt with curveballs and sliders.



Valenzuela

They got up and over the plate where the hitters can get good swings. It's just placement. His balls are acting well for him."

"I was encouraged," Parrish said. "He made believers out of all of us. He made a few mistakes, but he's still rusty."

Less sanguine about Valenzuela's return was Tiger pitcher Frank Tanana, the 37 year-old ex-Angel who completed a four-hit shutout for his 210th career victory.

"He's going to have to produce," said Tanana, who was banished to the Tiger bullpen for a month last season. "Past history and heroics, speaking from one who knows, don't make it. He has to produce."

Where Valenzuela did produce was at the turnstile. Three days after the Angels announced his start, 16,000 fans bought tickets, and an additional 9,356 turned up on game day.

But the fans were reserved in their greeting. It wasn't until Valenzuela was pulled after giving up two singles in the sixth inning, that the fans stood, applauded and gave in to Fernandomania, the term the southern California media has been resurrecting since the Angels signed Valenzuela to a minor league contract on May 20.

Dave Parker, the Angels' designated hitter, tried to explain Valenzuela's appeal. "He doesn't carry an athlete's stature," he said of the portly 30-year-old pitcher.

"He doesn't look like Atlas on the mound. They love him because he carries the appearance of an everyday guy. He's a hard worker, deliberate, and fun to watch."

"This first outing is not indicative of what he can still do," said Al Campanis, the former general manager of the Los Angeles Dodgers who signed Valenzuela in 1979 from the Mexican Leagues. "It's like the first date. A blind date. You wait to see what will happen."

Angels manager Doug Rader, who hopes that Valenzuela will become the fifth starter in California's pitching rotation, looked forward to the courtship. Getting to know Valenzuela, he said, would make him a stronger force for the Angels.

"We don't have a real good handle on his mechanics," Rader said. "There are certain keys to a pticher where you become aware that he is getting into trouble. The more we see of Fernando, the more we will be able to protect him until he is at full strength."

Bird leaves hospital after surgery

BOSTON (AP) — Larry Bird was released from a Boston hospital Saturday, just a day after undergoing surgery to repair back problems that kept the Celtics star out of 22 games last season.

Bird, 34, was in surgery at New England Baptist Hospital for two hours Friday morning to repair congenital and playing-aggravated problems.

Celtics physician Dr. Arnold Scheller said Friday a fragment from a bulging disc which had herniated was removed from Bird's back to relieve pressure on a nerve.

Scheller said Bird's rehabilitation will include wearing a brace and walking nearly 10 miles every day.

Offense leads LSU to crown

Associated Press

OMAHA, Neb. — It's no accident that Louisiana State rode its hot bats to the College World Series championship, Tiger coach Skip Bertman said Saturday.

CWS

After all, they'd been doing it most of the last two seasons.

A 6-3 victory over Wichita State gave the Tigers the national title.

LSU's four previous CWS appearances featured pitching. This year, LSU tied the series record of nine home runs and averaged a record 12 runs a game.

"Last year, we set a record in the SEC for hits and came in second in batting average as a team," Bertman said. "We've been good hitters. This year, we were supposed to be. But at the beginning of the season we just didn't hit.

"But starting in the middle of the season, we just started getting better and better and better," he said.

LSU tied the series home run mark set by Arizona State in 1981 and beat the runs-per-game mark set by Notre Dame, which averaged 11 runs per game in the 1957 series.

"If peaking means anything, we sure peaked at the right time," Bertman said.

Bertman said that in order to win a national title, a team has to have an average hitter come through. That happened Saturday, as Tiger center fielder Armando Rios went 2-for-3 at the plate, including a two-run homer in the second inning.

"I knew if we could swing the bats hard, we'd be all right," Rios said.

LSU had five hits and scored four runs on Wichita State ace Tyler Green, chased from the mound in the fourth inning.

"After Green went out, I knew it was over," Rios said.

Bertman said he is especially proud of catcher Gary Hymel, named the series' most outstanding player.

Hymel agreed that putting pressure on Green was a key to the victory.

"He had to come out and pitch every inning," Hymel said.

Winning pitcher Chad Ogea said Tiger players have waited a long time for the national title.

"This year we put it all together and did what we had to do and show people we're the best," Ogea said. "I don't know what to say. It's just unbeleivable."

Bertman said the atmosphere at the series, with hometown Creighton competing for the first time, was the best he's seen.

"I tell you what — I've been here 10 times. It was five with Miami, and five with LSU. This is the most exciting series I've ever seen," Bertman said.

Bertman was an assistant coach on the 1982 Hurricane team that won the CWS.

Graduation over, education isn't

Now that the final days of school are over and high school commencement exercises have been held, all the recent graduates walking around Midland face one of their most difficult decisions: Where to go from here?

One reality they cannot avoid is that today a high school diploma doesn't go as far as it did 30, 20, or even 10 years ago. American society has been growing increasingly technical during the past several years and nowadays it takes a better education not only to be capable of performing acceptably in a job but also merely to open doors to the job market. As a result, all the graduates should be thinking in terms of supplementing their diplomas with additional knowledge.

A four-year college education costs several thousand dollars now, meaning that even more care is needed in selecting which college a student will attend. Avoiding mistakes is crucial.

For decades, Midland has been a community that prides itself on quality education. It's not uncommon for Midland graduates to go to such schools as The University of Texas, A&M, Oklahoma University, or even one of the Ivy League schools on the East Coast.

Others seek an education at one of the fine West Coast colleges. In fact, were one to poll a segment of Midland's population there likely would be a wide range of favorite colleges represented in the results.

One of the colleges from out of state that finds healthy support in Midland is Hillsdale College in Hillsdale, Mich., which prides itself on being independent and taking no funding from the federal government. Hillsdale is a fine example of an institution with high commitment to principle and values that many young people from this region will find fulfilling.

Another option, of course, is study at Midland College for the first two years with the intention of completing the student's studies at another school. That's an option that many Midland students pursue successfully. Midland College has the advantage of being a hometown school which offers a fine basic education beyond high school.

The Midland College option has been further enhanced since the University of Texas of the Permian Basin in Odessa was voted four-year status by the Texas Legislature.

For some students, a four-year degree is not the correct goal and in that instance Midland College or one of several vocational schools can provide the needed knowledge.

The point is that an education beyond high school is essential today, more so than ever before. The 1991 graduates should be making plans for the rest of their lives at this time, and the place to start is in the halls of higher education.

OTHER VIEWS

Sharp's audit can help bring change

A massive audit directed by the Comptroller of Public Accounts shows promising signs that Texas, if its leaders are bold enough to take the initiative, can refashion state government to achieve not only more effective and efficient delivery of state services but also savings of $1.6 billion from its $4.7 billion deficit.

The preliminary report of the Texas Performance Review led by Comptroller John Sharp should serve as a comprehensive framework for change in how state government works. Trimming the deficit clearly has the highest immediate political priority, but any quick-fix savings will be fleeting unless government programs — and bureaucratic attitudes — are fundamentally streamlined and rationalized . . .

Rather than merely settling for the expedient of across-the-board budget slashing, every possible effort appears to have been made to improve services by identifying and evaluating particular areas within agencies that could be tightened up, refashioned or consolidated.

None of the ideas urged by the audit is new, including more privatization of services where appropriate, finding new ways to deliver services, improving financial and accounting systems and maximizing federal funds. Most of the proposals appear in reports that have gathered dust on agency shelves for years.

The task before the Legislature in its special session in July is to dust off the best of those proposals and provide Texans with the effective, efficient government that they should be getting.

High-speed rail offers state 'visionary' future

High-speed intercity rail service, recently given the green light by the Texas High Speed Rail Authority, stands to put Texas' future on the fast track. Grand in scale, ambitious in vision — this is a project worthy of the support of Texans. But with some words of caution:

■ Financing. Texas taxpayers must not be put in the position of directly or indirectly guaranteeing high-speed rail bonds. If for some reason the project does not succeed, taxpayers must not be left holding the bag. . . .

■ Intercontinental Airport service . . . Houston Intercontinental would benefit from being on the rail line no less than Dallas-Fort Worth Airport, which will be served. Local leaders should press to put Intercontinental on the line.

■ Federal help. . . . We urge the Texas congressional delegation to spare no effort in getting the bond ceiling raised and the grant money committed.

High-speed rail can be Texas' visionary future. But only with a firm grounding in financial reality and proper service to the state's largest city.

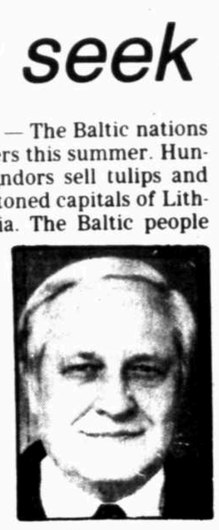
Baltics seek conditions on Moscow aid

VILNIUS, Lithuania — The Baltic nations are awash in flowers this summer. Hundreds of street vendors sell tulips and carnations in the cobblestoned capitals of Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia. The Baltic people give them to each other at the slightest excuse. And nowhere is the profusion of flowers more noticeable than on the memorials to unarmed pro-independence demonstrators who were crushed by Soviet tanks and shot by Soviet soldiers in January.



Anderson

These solemn memorials are the only excuse the people of the Baltics need to declare that American aid to the Soviet Union turns their stomachs.

They closely followed the debate in Washington over whether the Bush administration should give $1.5 billion in agricultural credit to Moscow. And they wonder why Americans, once fervently anti-communist, are now so eager to prop up a communist regime. In the minds of Latvians, Lithuanians and Estonians, the evil empire is not dead, and there are half a million heavily armed Soviet soldiers in those countries to prove it.

If the United States must be generous with its old Cold War nemesis, then the people of the Baltics would prefer some strings tied to that generosity. They applaud the suggestion of Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., that the aid not be sent in one lump sum, and that it be cut off if Mikhail Gorbachev again resorts to brutality to put down democratic movements anywhere in the Soviet Union.

However reformist Gorbachev looks to Americans through their rose-colored glasses, the Baltic people see him in the bright light of reality. And they wonder why Americans are so eager to throw a bouquet to a butcher.

We talked to political leaders and reformers in all three Baltic states. They insisted on speaking on the record, even though they face imprisonment, persecution and perhaps death. When the historians look back on what happened here, these people want it remembered that they said it would happen.

Outspoken Lithuanian President Vytautus Landsbergis is outraged that President Bush would even consider aid without conditions. "The Soviets would take this as almost an incentive to continue their repressive military acts against the Lithuanian people," he said.

Romualdas Razukas, president of the Popular Front of Latvia, told us America's aid to Gorbachev is a continuation of the U.S. habit of propping up dictators, including Anastasio Somoza of Nicaragua. And if the Bush administration persists in backing the central Moscow government, the result will be the same.

Estonian President Arnold Ruutel told us that only if conditions like Dole proposed are attached to the aid will the problem of the Baltics begin to be solved. "But if the economy of the Soviet Union is unconditionally restored with the help of Western money, then the Baltic states will never gain their independence again," he said.

The mere fact the Soviets can't survive without Western aid is proof enough that the Baltics should be cut loose, in the opinion of Tunne Kelam, chairman of the ruling Council of Estonia. "We are in the position of a drowning man who is tied by his hands and feet to a larger man, also in the process of drowning — the Soviet empire. The most natural thing we can do to save our life is to liberate ourselves, free our limbs, just be in a position to help ourselves, to start swimming and reach the shore. But now onlookers are giving us advice. Please be quiet. Please be calm. Don't irritate us. Don't rock the boat. You must wait. Yet people who are in the process of drowning cannot wait very long."

RUSSELL BAKER

Democrats stumble on without a candidate

The Democrats may not run anyone for president next year.

Former Senator Paul Tsongas has offered to run for them, of course, but that doesn't mean the Democrats will let him.

Baker

Tsongas, being a Massachusetts man of Greek-American heritage, reminds them too painfully of the 1988 campaign when a Massachusetts man of Greek-American heritage lost to the Stars and Stripes, Willie Horton and two promissory lips that all America loved to read.

There's ample evidence the Democrats have simply decided not to show up in 1992.

Example: With their convention scarcely a year away no one is seeking the wealth of the Indies which candidates must pay to lease the television industry's powerful thought-control emissions. Candidates normally start raising money two years before the convention.

Other evidence?

What about the congressional brethren rejecting Senator Moynihan's plan to give working folk a tax cut by reducing the regressive Social Security tax?

That's right, Congressional Democrats said, "No dice."

Friend, I ask you, what is the one subject on which Republicans have been bludgeoning Democrats groggy ever since you were in high school?

Of course. Taxes.

Thus the winning Republican line: Democrats tax and tax. Democrats love taxes. Elect Democrats if you want to know what tax pain is.

So if you are a Democrat and mean to go for the presidency, what is the one subject on which you remain silent?

Of course, those Demos who went to Cleveland may have thought their promise to tax only the rich would fetch the great unrich majority.

Alas, the mass mind doesn't work that way in this age of mass communications, which is to say when the mass political mind can be happily seduced by six-word slogans and 10 seconds of phonied-up TV film.

My own mind, which is as mass as the next mind, tells me, first, "There go those tired old Democratic taxers talking tax raises again."

And in the next split second: "Sure they'll tax the rich, but the rich will never satisfy them, so then they'll come after me, and then ..."

If you are a Democrat with plans to compete at White House level, you either cut taxes or you leave taxes alone.

On the chance the Democrats may show up for a campaign at the last minute, the Bush people are already busy locking up the race issue once again.

This has been theirs since the Nixon years when they discovered that if you aroused racial emotions, never hard to do in America, it was better to have the white vote than the black vote, if all you wanted was to win.

In Nixon's time this was called "the Southern strategy," though it worked as well for Republicans in the North as in Dixie, where race relations had become relatively civilized compared with places like Boston.

"Southern strategy" has been Republican strategy ever since, though it was renamed "white backlash" once it was seen to work everywhere.

In 1988 it turned into the frightening black face of the rapist-killer Willie Horton, Republican symbol for what Democrats meant when they said "civil rights."

Next year the Republican code word warning white America of Democratic intrigues for abusing the white population will apparently be "quotas."

Perhaps it's for the good of the country's soul that the Democrats seem eager to sit this one out. Yes, I know that's preposterous.

One principal attacks the '991' problem

CHICAGO — Ken Van Spankeren has gray streaks in his beard and strong opinions in his head, both the result of 16 years as principal of Orr High School where he is attacking the "991" problem of American education.

Will

Only 9 percent of the hours lived by young Americans between birth and their 19th birthdays are spent in schools, and the other 91 percent often subverts what schools do. This subversion occurs amid the distractions of affluent suburbs. It especially occurs where Orr is.

Seventy-five percent of Orr's students (who are 92 percent black, 8 percent Hispanic), live in poverty; 85 percent come from homes without fathers. They began falling behind most American children before kindergarten: They were not read to or even talked to enough, or played with or taken to zoos and libraries. (A visitor's question — "Are libraries within walking distance?" is considered quaint. There is no "walking distance" across turf contested by gangs.)

So some Orr students come to school early — 14 years early. There is an infant-stimulation program for some 6-week-olds. A few of them are children of the school's 90 or so unwed mothers, whose average age is 15 and who take classes in parenting. There also is child care for some neighborhood 3- to 5-year-olds who, because they enter a decade early, will someday present Orr with fewer remediation problems.

Classes begin at 8 a.m. but tutoring begins at 7:15 a.m. and on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays dropout prevention instruction continues until 9 p.m. A math teacher arrives at 6 a.m. to teach chess to children who never saw a set at home. The teacher's team recently won a city title.

With assistance from Continental Bank, Orr is bearing Chicago's burdens. But can schools do that and also educate?

Chester Finn, author of "We Must Take Charge" and formulator of the "991" problem, rightly argues that many schools spread themselves too thin and education becomes thin gruel. Every American passes through school at an impressionable age, so there is a perennial temptation to use schools for various ameliorative purposes — combatting AIDS and drugs, promoting racial harmony and environmental awareness, and animal rights and so on. These purposes often compete with learning.

Many schools unwisely chose to do peripheral things in the name of social reform. Van Spankeren says he lacks the luxury of choice. Problems of the streets and homes are central, not peripheral, to urban schools' missions.

Van Spankeren prefers teachers from the inner city, who understand that students start unreceptive to learning and cannot be taught by having them open a text, read a chapter and answer questions. "Urban kids," he says, "don't learn that way."

Orr's better students read Hemingway, Carson McCullers, Richard Wright, Maya Angelou. They particularly enjoy Hamlet. All reading is done in class. Teachers assume homework cannot be done by most students, who have family responsibilities, or jobs, or both, and whose homes are unquiet and may not even contain a table at which to work.

Most of Orr's most successful students are girls. The best boys face peer pressure not to "act white." But the best male students tend to be athletes: If you can get your wrist over a basketball rim, you can be a bit bookish.

When Van Spankeren arrived 16 years ago, Orr was too similar to the surrounding streets. Radios blared, caps and earrings were worn as gang indicators and drug dealers, pimps and gang members roamed the halls. Today the radios are gone; hats and earrings are removed at the front door; no one enters without an ID card; no one leaves the building during the school day.

SPEAKING OUT

Opportunity exists to uphold tradition by assisting library

By Pamela C. Allen

A 16-year resident of Midland, Pamela C. Allen is in her third year as a member of the Library Advisory Board.

Over 30 years ago a library was built to fit the needs of the people of Midland County. Not only has the population grown, it has become better educated, more diverse, and has increased its need for more information. Our library, in order to continue to meet those needs, has become one of the outstanding public libraries in the state.

It is exciting to envision the planned expanded and remodeled public library for Midland County. While Midland city and county have experienced tremendous growth in the last 30 years, the library, at 301 W. Missouri, has not. It is working with more materials, more users and more staff in the same 30-year-old space.

Last fall the county sold certificate of obligation bonds and the Friends of the Library and the advisory board have been busy raising funds to match the Abell-Hanger challenge grant of $300,000. The Friends are now down to the last days before the challenge grant deadline and money given to match that grant has not reached their goal (at this writing, $45,000 short). The official end of the fund raising will be June 24th.

The downtown facility, besides being crowded, has many pressing needs. The roof must be replaced. At this point in time we don't even have handicap accessibility to the second floor. Restrooms, drinking fountains and space between rows of books do not accommodate wheelchairs. Printed materials continue to be the library's most important resource, but the shelves have reached the saturation point. For every new book added, it usually means an old book is withdrawn. Gifts of materials are often judged on whether the library has space for them, not for their usefulness.

Today as in the past the library depends on the generosity of the people of the county it serves. The hard work and money of individuals and groups has given the library its unique character.

The Petroleum Department owes much to the West Texas Geological Society for a collection that rivals academic libraries. Few public libraries have a department to match the city directory and telephone book collection that began with the efforts of local land men. A recent issue of Texas Highways magazine cited John and Rosalind Redfern Genealogical Research Center as one of the better libraries to visit in the state. That collection depends heavily on donations. Just look at the book donor plates and notice the same names over and over. We can thank the Friends of the Library for many gifts to your library that are far too numerous to mention.

According to an editorial in the March 6 issue of the Waco Tribune Herald, from a study done for the Waco-McLennan County Library Foundation, "There is a tendency for some to think of a library as some kind of frill. That is a dangerous attitude for a community that hopes to attract business and industry. In fact, a good library is as essential as a firehouse, a school system, a hospital." Libraries reflect the progressive spirit and pride of the citizens. They are economic and cultural equalizers where all have access to information and enrichment.

Public support for worthwhile causes has been the hallmark of Midland County. The generosity of the people is legendary. We now have an opportunity to be a part in making our library even better.

Answers needed on crossing funds

The May 30th story, "Council considers axing crossing-guard funding," written by Brian Pearson seems to leave some questions unanswered:

■ Isn't Midland the only city in the United States that requires schools to monetarily contribute to the DARE program?

■ Presently, private schools also contribute to DARE, but are not provided crossing guards. Since no "trade-off" is available, will the private schools continue to contribute to DARE funding under the proposal?

■ Where is the analysis presented to the Midland Independent School District (MISD) board from the administration on this issue? It details the various obstacles faced in school district coordination of a crossing guard program.

■ Why haven't school volunteer coordinators been asked for their opinion? They would be the persons asked to recruit crossing guard volunteers.

■ School volunteers are mainly mothers with school-age children. These moms are busy picking up and dropping off their children at school, walking them to the bus stops, etc. Can anyone reasonably expect these people to neglect the needs of their own children to save the city money?

■ Who will be liable if a volunteer/volunteer's child is sick and a child is injured because the crossing walk is unmanned?

■ Aren't school volunteers best used by improving instruction (reading tutorials, raising money for computers, etc.)?

It seems that omission of information, either intentional or through a lack of investigative reporting, creates editorials, not news stories. Editorials are the right of a newpaper, but should appear on the editorial page. The news page should fairly and objectively provide both sides of an issue.

Misuse of 'self' gaining on 'at'

I have a nominee for the "Fingernails-Across-a-Chalkboard Grammar" prize for the decade. Coming down the stretch and gaining on sentences that end with at ("Where is it at?") is the misuse of the self pronouns.

As subjects:

Joe and myself will be there. (Joe and I will be there.)

As objects:

Call the chairman or myself. (... or ME.)

I'm fine. How about yourself? (How about YOU?)

Pronouns ending in self can correctly be used for emphasis: I myself believe it; or to show action that reflects on the subject: She hurt herself. They told themselves ..., etcetera.

"Beverly Hillbillies" English makes otherwise intelligent people sound ignorant. I don't care who they are or how many of them speak in this way.

Midland should have no ethnic divisions

I have just read Brian Pearson's article (Sunday, 6/2/91) about Michael De Vaughn, and must complain about the Midland Reporter-Telegram's continuing insistence on dividing Midland into two communities: Midland and "east Midland." If De Vaughn were white, would it be written that he came to town and "hit west and north Midland like a whirlwind?" I think not; the use of "east Midland" seems to be an effort at ghettoization (look it up).

If the people of Midland, who pride themselves on a sense of togetherness, are not bothered by this practice, what does it say about us as a community? Do we take it for granted that we are, in effect, two separate communities? Does it worry no one else that "Midland's eastside" and "east Midland" are used to flag stories that are assumed to be of concern to only a certain part of our citizenry?

It concerns me; worries me. And I think it ought to worry other Midlanders, too: De Vaughn may have been elected by those on "Midland's eastside," but the city council on which he will serve is that of Midland, which, as a city with no formal divisions, needs to be a city with no ethnic divisions.

Mockingbird's song silenced by a shot

All spring I have enjoyed the varied song of a mockingbird in my backyard each morning and evening. I have watched her daily fuss and swoop down on our cat protecting her nest, and babies perhaps, nearby. She became a friend, a source of enjoyment, and a daily remembrance that in this problem-filled world one can look for God's small gifts for something good and beautiful.

Monday evening as I swept the patio she was singing a variety of tunes as an air gun shot silenced her to my horror. Today, the silence is almost more than I can stand. How I miss that mockingbird.

In July, when my granddaughters visit they will not see that particular State Bird of Texas or hear her song that I had looked forward to sharing with them.

No, the gun was not the toy of a little boy who may not know about the state and local laws concerning the mockingbird, but an adult. Why?

Home is beautiful accomplishment

Regarding your article on Mildred Ford's home for unwed mothers, the picture accompanying the story is worth a whole book on the subject of "Mother and Child." How beautiful Mrs. Ford's accomplishment of it involved only this one family.

To think how many more she helps. Does Midland have its own Mother Teresa?

Interrupting speech greater disruption

Mr. Kelly's actions Thursday, May 30, 1991 at the Midland High graduation commencement were uncalled for.

Throw out the graduation students of 1991! Throw out the audience.

After 12 years of hard work these students deserve at least one or two tension releases. I realize the 1989 commencement got out of hand, but one should not assume every class will do or be the same. Interrupting the salutatorian's speech was more disruptive than the MHS 1991 graduates' actions.

Mr. Kelly should have given his little speech before the graduation even began.

Action should be taken against Mr. Kelly, he has overstepped his authority one too many times. It should not be overlooked this time

Principal's action was inappropriate

I traveled four hours from Junction to attend my niece's graduation. I had not seen a large graduation commencement such as Midland High School, Thursday, May 30th.

However, I was disappointed with the interruption by Principal Kelly threatening to remove the students and audience.

It was rude and inappropriate for him to interrupt the salutatorian at the beginning of her speech. After all these students have waited 12 years for their night to graduate and doing the "wave" did not disrupt the ceremony.

I've heard you had problems in the past, but what makes Mr. Kelly think every class will act the same?

Jo Zeiters

Mr. Kelly should relax and chill out

I would like to tell Mr. Kelly, principal of Midland High School to relax and chill out! It isn't going to kill anyone to do the "wave" during graduation. It is all in good fun.

You were the only disruption. Life is too short not to have any fun. You should be proud of those students who graduated. Some drop out and never go back.

Lending institutions hold key to recovery

EDITOR'S NOTE: The forum for Midland and Odessa is tentatively scheduled for Tuesday, June 11.

By Kay Bailey Hutchison

Hutchison

No single issue has a greater impact on the quality of our schools, the quality of our lives, the quality of our future than the strength of the Texas economy. There is absolutely nothing that a thriving economy cannot achieve.

As our economy continues its recovery from the depths of recession Texas banks and lending institutions must play a key role in fueling our economic growth by financing business and industrial expansion. How else can small business thrive, manufacturers expand their markets and payrolls grow?

I consider it among my most important responsibilities as the state's banker to encourage, assist and promote economic growth, expansion and prosperity.

In that role. I am particularly concerned at the rate of economic recovery in our state's small to medium-sized cities. I question whether enough attention is being paid to these communities which have been hard hit by the economic downturn. These cities lack the luxury of large regional or national companies to stabilize employment or provide a base for growth.

It is in these communities where local economies must literally pull themselves up by their bootstraps. Unfortunately, in many of these cities, there is a strong perception that economic recovery is being thwarted by the unavailability of capital.

During my travels across Texas, I have been told time after time that it's extremely difficult to raise capital for business expansion. Whether it's a high-tech consortium or a "mom and pop" grocery, I know first hand that it is tough to get started in business or to grow.

It troubles me to hear that credit is difficult to get. As a small business person, I know what that means. I have begun a dialogue with Texas bankers, explaining to them how vitally important it is to the business community that they fully participate in the recovery by freeing up credit.

The Texas Treasury, the Texas Department of Agriculture and the Texas Department of Commerce will hold forums in 15 communities in coordination with local chambers of commerce. We plan to discuss what type of local initiatives result in viable programs to create jobs. Examples are economic development sales taxes that have been passed by 47 cities in Texas.

We also plan to outline how banks can individually, or in combination, develop community development corporations to help bridge gaps in small business finance by forming equity and investment funds. Our aim is to develop individual formulas prescribing how communities can succeed in helping their markets and prospects grow.

At the Texas Treasury, we have developed several ideas and programs that we believe can benefit both borrowers and lenders in communities throughout Texas. By investing in guaranteed portions of loans, we can generate more capital to the small business and agriculture producers in our state.

Economic development is much more than any one program or activity. It isn't just banks making credit more accessible. It isn't just communities making better use of their resources. It isn't just doing a better job of educating our young people. It isn't just maintaining and improving Texas' attractive business climate. Economic development is all of these things.

Charting a course back to the prosperous times of a decade ago is an enormous challenge that will require considerable teamwork — from Lubbock to Tyler, from Amarillo to Corpus Christi. We can learn from each other. We need to bring our business and financial communities together with local economic development as the rallying cry. Only if we do will we ever have once again the freedom to build our businesses, create new jobs and contribute to the rejuvenation of our great state.

Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — With the Soviet Union facing economic and political collapse that could lead to civil war and an anti-American military dictatorship, President Bush has shown good judgment in striving to keep Mikhail Gorbachev in power without committing billions of dollars of aid that could go down the drain.

In the first of a series of steps to aid the Soviet economy and strengthen Gorbachev's position, the president has waived trade restrictions on the Soviet Union for another year. This will enable the Soviets to remain eligible for credits to buy U.S. agricultural products, which will be a great help to our farmers. Gorbachev has requested $1.5 billion in credits. If that much is approved, it is likely to be divided into three yearly grants of $500 million so that the credits could be cut off if Moscow stopped repaying its loans or stopped moving toward a free market economy. That makes sense to me.

A Kremlin delegation told the International Monetary Fund last month that the Soviet Union would need $250 billion in total Western financing over the next five years. While I doubt any such amount will be forthcoming, President Bush, who had the three Soviet delegates to lunch at the White House, said he had the impression Gorbachev was trying to move to a market economy and needed help along the way.

Bush is also planning to grant the Soviets most-favored-nation status, without which Soviet exports to the United States would continue to be taxed up to 10 times higher than those nations enjoying our lowest tariffs.

The president has also dropped his objection to Gorbachev meeting with the seven leaders of the industrialized world during the Economic Summit in London July 15-17. Gorbachev has appealed for the opportunity to describe his proposals for rescuing the Soviet economy and to plead for financial help. Vice President Dan Quayle recently said Moscow must first transform its "inefficient, bankrupt economic system" into a free market economy before it gets a large-scale bailout with direct Western financial aid.

The question in my mind is whether economic and political democratization can be achieved in the Soviet Union before there is chaos. Former foreign minister Eduard Shevardnadze, who resigned six months ago in protest against "those who dream of a return to totalitarianism," said his country is on the "brink of anarchy."

Gorbachev said recently: "The economy is coming apart. The institutions of power are paralyzed. The very foundation of our lives are endangered. We must put aside our feuds and prevent the country from sliding into catastrophe."

The Soviet leader is caught between impatient reformists like Russian Federation leader Boris Yeltsin who want instant democracy and the military-KGB hardliners. Vladimir Kryuchkov, head of the infamous KGB, or secret police, told visiting former President Richard Nixon: "We have had as much democracy as we can stomach."

There are those in Congress and the media who oppose any help to Gorbachev because he played an important role in the Communist Party hierarchy for more than 20 years. They ignore the beneficial results of his leadership, including the freedom of Eastern Europe, the agreements for sharp reductions in nuclear and conventional weapons and his close cooperation with President Bush in creating the United Nations coalition that led to Kuwait's liberation from Saddam Hussein's conquest and, now, in jointly sponsoring a Middle East peace conference. In his Nobel Peace Prize award lecture in Oslo Wednesday, Gorbachev said failure of the West to bolster his endangered reforms would jeopardize "a new peaceful period in history."

As the New York Times said editorially: "This is a historic opportunity for the West to change the very character of a nation that has posed a military threat for four decades. Give Gorbachev credit, with credits." I share that view.

One world or none

Ballet tempts Odessa actress

Brian Adamcik / Reporter-Telegram

By David Morris
Staff Writer

Like the character she played in Theatre Midland's recent production of "Nunsense," 14-year-old Amy Stice wants to be a ballet dancer.

Unlike Sister Mary Leo, however, Amy has no plans to enter a convent any time soon.

"I want to go to Russia — the Bolshoi Ballet," said Amy, an eighth-grader at Bonham Junior High School in Odessa. "That may sound like some little kid's dream, but it's my dream."

The dream of becoming a professional dancer is one she's been cultivating for a long time — ever since she her first ballet lesson when she was 4 years old.

So she can relate to' Sister Mary Leo, who also longs for a life on the stage.

A novice nun with a penchant for flamboyance not fully appreciated by the reverend mother at her convent, Sister Mary Leo spends a lot of time fantasizing about her dance career. But the life of a dancer is hard to reconcile with the life of humility mandated by the Catholic Church and her order, the Little Sisters of Hoboken.

For Amy, meanwhile, the life of a would-be ballerina has been hard at times to reconcile with the social life of a junior high school student. While her friends are watching movies or going to the mall, she's at the dance studio or taking piano lessons. Summers are spent at dance workshops in Fort Worth and Phoenix.

Even high school, that pinnacle of teenage social interaction, may end up sacrificed on the ballet altar.

"My parents won't let me drop out of school, but this summer I'm going to be looking for a place to move off to where they teach ballet," she said. "I want to go to the Houston Ballet or the Fort Worth City Ballet....One of my good friends moved last year after she went into the ninth grade to a ballet school in Washington, D.C., and she loves it."

The way Amy looks at it, it's better to leave now, before the social attachments of high school begin to form. In the end, she believes, the move will be worth the pain of leaving behind home, family and friends.

"I see it as a sacrifice and an opportunity, because it is very rewarding at the end," she said.

Being a professional dancer takes more than sacrifice, of course. It requires ability and talent that few girls possess.

Jan Collerd, Amy's dance teacher since Amy began dancing, thinks Amy is among those few. Of the students she has taught, Ms. Collerd said, only five ended up dancing professionally. Amy may be the sixth.

"She ranks with those who have gone professional," said Ms. Collerd, who choreographed "Nunsense" and also served on the casting committee. "She is a very dedicated, talented young lady."

Amy was right for the role of Sister Mary Leo, Ms. Collerd said, because her ability to dance was matched with an ability to pass herself off as older than 14.

"There was another one of my students who who could have played the part had she looked a little older," said Ms. Collerd, who encouraged members of her classes to try out for the part of the dancing nun.

"Overall, Amy was the best-rounded as far as being able to sing and dance and act," Ms. Collerd added.

Amy, who had never been in a musical before "Nunsense," said she was a little intimidated at first by the scope of the role.

"When I first auditioned, I was very nervous," she said. "I was competing with a bunch of people who were very good."

Two years of choir at Bonham have helped with the singing, she said. And her co-stars in the play, the last performance of which was Saturday at the Yucca Theatre downtown, helped make her feel comfortable in the role.

"The people I'm working with are wonderful, and the director, Don Bachmann, is a wonderful director," she said. "It's perfect to me. Everything's just like it should be.

"When I first got into it, I didn't like spending all of my time in Midland until 11 p.m. and working, working, working. But like I said, anything that is worth anything at all is always hard work."

So after five weeks of rehearsal and a month of performances, she's ready to hang up her habit and get ready for another summer dance workshop. Meanwhile, she's left her co-stars with a warm feeling about the youth of today.

"I was delighted to have her in the show," said Renee Spicer, who played Sister Mary Amnesia. "It's nice to have that youthful, energetic vigor.

"I know this is her first time to act and dance and sing, and I was quite impressed by her attitude and her willingness to work with us. I think she is a very talented young lady and I think she is going to go far."

And if she does realize her dream of becoming a professional dancer, Amy said, a lot of the credit will go to her parents, Don and Toni Stice. It was Mrs. Stice, a dancer herself, who introduced Amy to ballet 10 years ago.

"They support me 100 percent," Amy said. "They're behind me all the way in what I'm doing."

MHS reunion turns clock back to '41

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

For awhile this weekend, it was 1941 all over in Midland.

Midland High School's 1941 graduates returned 50 years after they set out for life's adventures — fighting a war, delving into careers, and raising families.

"It seems like nothing has changed," said Bobby "Bob" Preston, who was among the 66 graduates who joined in the reunion. In 1941, Midland High School graduated 108 seniors.

The personalities, though more seasoned and wiser from the wounds and healings of the years, are pretty well set even though "character lines," have made their marks.

The joshing was easy and friendly.

"We talked about how easy it was to pass the coach's geometry class if you were a girl or if you played football," mused Preston.

Louise Cox Scurlock who, said Preston, was the "most popular girl in the whole school ... because she was a lover of human beings," fared well in Coach L.W. "Bud" Taylor's class.

"I was the only girl in the class of football players," said Mrs. Scurlock, who now lives in Scottsdale, Ariz.

Taylor was a "good coach," said Clayton Upham of San Saba, "but I don't know about (him as) the math teacher."

Gordon Bigham, a retired United States Navy lieutenant commander who lives in Norman, Okla., said Taylor was "a good teacher. He was smart."

Bigham, now gray-haired, was "a heart throb and a star football player," recalled Preston, who has returned to Midland to live. During World War II, he was on submarine patrol with the U.S. Coast Guard.

Doing jail time works to inmates' advantage

■ County offers inmates a 'two-for-one' deal that's difficult to refuse.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Oscar Simmons enjoys working outside.

And when his work day is over, Simmons, 41, goes home — to his temporary residence at the Midland County Jail.

"I'd rather be out here working. You get fresh air, see people, and get to smoke a cigarette or two," said Simmons, a working inmate serving a nine-month sentence since May 23 for four DWIs.

"You're not cooped up in a cell looking at some ol' wall every day," said Simmons, sweating and dressed in prison garb while working on the grounds of the detention facility.

"There's nothing hard about the work," he added while planting grass seed.

"But when everything starts blooming and I pass by here, I can say I planted everything," he said as he looked over the newly seeded soil.

And the more Simmons works, the sooner he will be able to admire his work as a free man.

Capt. Richard Sexton, who oversees jail operations, said working inmates can get credit for as much as three days served for each day worked.

"We normally give them two-for-one but sometimes three-for-one depending on the work they are doing," Sexton said. According to state law, prisoners must serve at least one-third of their sentence.

In addition, fines and court costs incurred during sentencing may be reduced three to one for days worked, Sexton said. The state mandates a day is worth $50, he said.

Eligible prisoners are those serving time in the county jail on misdemeanor charges such a theft, DWI and driving with a license suspended. Felons, parolees and those serving time for misdemeanor drug charges may not work outside the confines of the prison.

"He (an inmate) can put in a request to become a trustee and if we need them, we go back and ask," Sexton said. But eligibility does not automatically insure being put to work, he added.

Those who are hired do such things as work on county grounds, wash county vehicles and work with the county roads and bridges department picking up litter.

"Its a savings to the county and the inmate is not idle and gets to get out of prison faster," Sexton said.

"We don't have to hire someone to do that work and have saved probably tens of thousands of dollars on car washes since we went to this program," Sexton said. "We are getting a job done by using an available resource."

Sexton said most the prisoners, like Simmons, enjoy the work as well.

"They take a lot of pride. Most of these people are excellent workers and had a misfortune and ended up in jail," he said.

GARY OTT

If greed and arrogance are music to the ears, count me out

I don't remember exactly when the thought first crossed my mind.

Yes, I do.

Ott

It was Thursday afternoon at approximately 2:45 p.m. I was flipping through the cable channels when suddenly I came to MTV, the rock video station. The music was blaring and four vampire-like figures with painted faces were screaming words at me I could not comprehend.

That's when the thought hit me.

It went like this:

"What would I be like if I were 18 years old?"

Think about it. Eighteen. You just graduated from high school and are getting ready to face the real world. In a few short weeks you'll be leaving the family nest for the first time. It will be you against the elements.

Scary stuff.

Growing up is never easy. My generation had the turmoil of the '60s. My dad's generation had the dangers of World War II. His dad's generation had the fears of a Great Depression.

Still, we all survived.

The world seemed a little crazy at the time, but we somehow cruised into adulthood with only a minimum of scars. We became a little more jaded, that's for sure. All in all, though, we turned out OK. The world moved forward and so did we.

But, what about today's young people? Will time pass as gracefully for them as it did for us? Will they have an identity to rally around?

If the rock group I witnessed on MTV is any indication then this generation is in real trouble. That's because music, and the people who make it, have always had a strong influence on young people. Musicians define an era.

In my day it was relatively simple. We had Bob Dylan, the Beatles, Joan Baez, the Rolling Stones, Crosby, Stills, Nash & Young, and the Grateful Dead. The message, more times than not, was one of changing the world. The lyrics were incredibly idealistic, but we took them to heart, nonetheless. They meant something to us.

My dad, on the other hand, speaks fondly of the big band sound that was so prevalent in his growing up years. He loves to rattle off the names. Benny Goodman, Artie Shaw, Glenn Miller, Duke Ellington, Lionel Hampton and Tommy Dorsey. It was happy music. America, both during and immediately after the war, felt good about itself. There was much dancing and singing. It was reflected in the music.

Now step forward, if you will, to the present.

With whom will today's generation identify? Screaming vampires? Madonna? Vanilla Ice?

In the early '50s, "America liked Ike." While not a youthful man, Eisenhower was a genuine war hero, a general, who, in a calm sort of way, represented stability. Eisenhower was someone the people, many of whom were returning to this country to raise families, could trust. He made an entire generation feel secure.

Before that, there was Franklin Roosevelt and Harry Truman. Their job proved to be a bit more difficult as they had to guide the nation through the war years. Some times people approved of their actions, other times they didn't. But no one questioned who was in charge. The country had confidence in its leadership, regardless of political affiliation.

The next generation, including people my age and slightly older, had John F. Kennedy to admire. In hindsight, his accomplishments were probably overrated, but at the time he represented freshness and excitement. There was something endearing about Camelot and the New Frontier.

Now, back to the present.

Dan Quayle? Dick Gephardt?

Stimulating, aren't they? No wonder our young people listen to screaming vampires. Who can blame them?

Finally, there's baseball players. For some reason American eras are closely identified with baseball players.

For example, my dad's generation had Ted Williams and Joltin' Joe DiMaggio. Everyone loved the stoic DiMaggio, while Williams — though a cantankerous type — was the epitome of excellence. No one ever hit a fastball better.

My generation also had legendary ballplayers. Two in particular were cut above the rest ... Mickey Mantle and Willie Mays. Old black-and-white film clips can still be seen capturing their great deeds. And, always, the camera focused on small children in the crowd. They looked on with awe. It was OK to worship heroes back then.

Today's baseball stars?

Try Jose Canseco and Rickey Henderson.

And what do they represent?

Greed and arrogance.

How's that for defining an entire generation?

Suddenly, growing old doesn't seem so bad.

(From 1C)

Mrs. Scurlock, considering the reunion and reviewing the 1940-41 school year, said "that was the neatest thing about this class: We all loved one another and still do."

Bigham, reflecting on the 1940-41 school year, reckoned that the "main thing" in the football season was the Midland High School Bulldog football team beating two powerhouses, Odessa and Wink. In the previous season, Jay Francis was the Bulldogs' star running back, who was "every bit the football player that (SMU's) Doak Walker was" at mid-century, recalled a '41 graduate, James Mims.

Bigham played blocking back in the double-wing formation.

Football coach in the 1940-41 season was Taylor. And the team's quarterback was Odie Kelly, who was among a third of the classmates who died before the 1991 reunion.

Kelly was a 22-year-old U.S. Army Air Corps radar-man and bombardier aboard the B-29 Superfortress when he was killed over Iwo Jima in May of 1945.

Bill Wyche, who served in the China-Burma-India Theater during the war, survived and ended up ranching "not close to anywhere" — between Goldsmith and Andrews.

In the war, he led pack mules laden with mortar shells for the war effort and occasionally flew "the Hump" — the Himalaya Mountains — in C-46 transports.

After high school, "I just planned to try to make a living," said Wyche. "I didn't have a chance to do anything but ranch. I wasn't smart enough to do anything else."

"The Class of 1939 was out overseeing the ('41) brigade," jested Nobles, a rancher, who graduated at age 16 in those days when the senior class was the 11th grade of school.

"They were anxious to get rid of him," teased his wife. "They wanted to better the school."

Nobles, old enough to be somewhat of a historian, recalled the economically-depressed mid-1930s when "oil was 10 cents a barrel, and cigarettes were a dime a pack."

R. Ken Williams, the 1941 salutatorian, most likely lived up to the class prophecy proposed by James Mims. Like some others, he delved into the oil business.

"This guy is rich enough to buy his own town," Preston, a landman, said merrily, "and name it after himself." He didn't say what size town his friend might "buy."

Tommy Flournoy and others recalled Midland in the late 1930s and early 1940s when the town was under 10,000 people, quite friendly and most safe.

"You could go anywhere you wanted to at night without being afraid of being mugged," said Louise Crocker, who was in the high-school choral group.

Reflecting on his youth, Flournoy recalled when Ed "Big Ed" Darnell, long before he became sheriff, "used to sell hamburgers for a nickel, and the meat was lapping over the bun."

And Flournoy, like others in the Class of '41, fondly recalled Professor W.W. Lackey, the school's superintendent and a poet who taught the classics, values and morality and who conducted a daily chapel-like assembly for the students.

"The American Civil Liberties Union and others would hang him by the yardarm if he were around today," surmised Flournoy.

"Look at the people (from the Class of '41) today," said Flournoy. "They are honest people. They were raised to be honest."

Today, he lamented, educators "don't teach respect for people's property. They don't teach respect for other people. They don't teach respect for God. It was never meant, by the Founding Fathers, to take God out of government."

Beverly Shilling/Reporter-Telegram

Pecos man driving wrong way on Interstate 20 dies in crash

Staff Report

A 25-year-old Pecos man, David Talamantez, died early Saturday after his pickup truck, traveling in the wrong lane of Interstate Highway 20 near Monahans, hit a tire of a trailer that was being pulled by a tractor driven by Roy L. Rose of Carlisle, Ark., about 2:45 a.m. Saturday, officers said.

Talamantez died of injuries at 7:30 a.m. at Ward County Memorial Hospital in Monahans.

The accident occurred eight miles east of Monahans when Talamantez's pickup truck was traveling west in the east-bound lane and veered into the back left tire of the trailer, officers said. After hitting the trailer's tire, the pickup traveled farther west and stopped in the middle of the highway.

Talamantez was not wearing a seat belt at time of the crash, according to a spokesman for the Texas Department of Public Safety.

The accident was investigated by DPS Troopers Doug Farber and Eric White, both of Monahans.

(From 1C)

"Every once in a while, we get one that doesn't want to work anymore ... but for the most part they want to do that rather than sit in jail," Sexton said.

Although it may appear putting inmates to work has rehabilitative qualities, Sexton said that is not necassarily the intention.

And what is to keep inmates from fleeing while outside?

"It's not worth his time to leave. He can go to the penitentiary," Sexton answered.

Escape from a penal institution constitutes a third-degree felony punishable by two to 20 years and/or a fine up to $10,000.

Working inmates are common throughout the jail system and prisoners have been on the job in Midland for about 10 years.

The working population of inmates in Midland is relatively few. The jail normally houses less than 10 misdemeanor prisoners at a time.

Police search for pair who roughed up store clerk, assaulted customer

Staff Report

Two men who stole two cases of beer from a 7-Eleven convenience store cooler early Saturday morning knocked the store clerk down in their haste to leave the store and assaulted a customer outside the store at Neely Avenue and Midland Drive in far west Midland, police said.

Midland police are looking for the men, both about 20 years old, 5-foot-8 in height, with black hair, and weighing about 170 pounds.

One of the men pointed a pistol at the customer who had tried to stop them just outside the store and threatened the customer.

The robbery occurred shortly after 4 a.m. Saturday.

Local youth prepare for work

Staff Report

School's out for Midland students — time once again for youth in the Job Training Partnership Act work-study program to receive their summer job assignments.

The 100 or so Midland youth participating in the program — which is in its third year — met Saturday at Midland College for the sixth semi-annual "Step Up To Success" conference sponsored by the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce.

The conferences are designed to prepare the youth for the jobs in which they will be placed in the community this summer, chamber executive director Elvia Hernandez said.

Program participants attended seminars on drug and alcohol abuse prevention, job performance, interview and resume techniques, money management and goal setting.

Speakers at the conference included Joe Rutledge, vice principal of Permain High School in Odessa, Clem Johnson of Mobil Corp., and JTPA and Midland Independent School District representatives.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

By H.A. Tuck

A whole bunch of folks registered last Monday for Summer I classes, but there are still a few openings and one day left to enroll. Final late registration day for Summer I is Monday from 7 a.m.-5 p.m. in the Student Services area of the Student Center.

Tuck

Three days of classes already have been held, but diligent students can make up the work. But it would be best to register as early as possible so you can attend classes on Monday and not miss any more.

There will be a second summer session. Early counseling and time-permit issuance begin on June 24. Registration is July 10. Classes begin July 11 and end Aug. 15. Summer classes meet Mondays through Thursdays only.

Although the entire process took just over five months, it seemed longer while the Board of Trustees sought and obtained the third president for Midland College. Dr. David E. Daniel will arrive in Midland about Aug. 1 and spend a period of time with Dr. Jess Parrish, who officially retires Aug. 31. Dr. Daniel will be talking with many community groups this fall in an effort to become acquainted quickly.

Congratulations to MC athletic dirctor/golf coach Delnor Poss, volunteer assistant coach Mike Stevens, the Chaparral Booster Club, and scores of other volunteers who helped make the national junior college golf tournament last week such a success. It was a great event, thanks to the cooperation of the members and professionals at The Club at Mission Dorado and Green Tree Country Club.

It is certain that Midland's hospitality and organization will never be surpassed. First, because it was planned and executed as a first-rate event. Second, because the NJCAA will have the Division I tournament separate from the Division II and III tournaments next year. After 33 years, some of the teams and their coaches won't be together again as the event has become rather unwieldy with three divisions. Division I, which includes Midland College and Odessa College, is returning to Scottsdale, Arizona, next spring. Scottsdale has been the tournament host several times.

Faculty, staff, and students have been dodging painting and carpet crews recently. This time, the folks in the Occupational-Technical Building have been trying to start Summer I classes while workers continue.

There are few weeks when some classes aren't in session. Graduation was held May 10, a three-week interim session followed immediately. Summer I began last week, with Summer II coming two days later. There's a week to prepare for the fall semester, get students registered, and it all begins again.

Anyhow, visitors will enjoy the renovations. Virtually all the carpet in the Occ.-Tech Building had been there since the campus opened in 1975 . . . and that's a lot of footprints as well as occasional anxious shuffling of feet by apprehensive students during tests.

We've not given a report from new head basketball coach Steve Green, but he and his staff have been busily recruiting and signing a lot of players. Steve says they still are looking for a couple of big players, but basketball coaches usually are looking for a couple more big players. Announcements about new signees probably won't be made until they arrive in late August. Some of the recruits change their minds about attending college, some are still waiting on results of college entrance exams. So, not all who sign may show up in Midland for classes. It's just one of the many hazards of the coaching profession.

The Continuing Education Department is listing three courses which will start this week. One is on Resume' Writing, which will meet Monday from 6:30-9 p.m. The fee is $10 for the one-night course. When the temperature is hoving in the 90-degree range, you might not be thinking about your next snow skiing trip. But from 7-9 p.m. Tuesday, that's exactly what you can learn: how to find bargains, ski packages, tours, etc. This class costs $5.

On Wednesday and Thursday you can take a First Aid/CPR course, from 6-10 p.m. each evening. Cost of this one is $25.

There are many others scheduled for later in the summer. To register or find out more, visit the Continuing Education Department in the Administration Building Monday through Thursday from 7 a.m.-5 p.m. or call 685-4518.

EDUCATION IN BRIEF

■ Registration for TEA conference ends Friday

The Texas Education Agency will host a statewide conference on year-round education June 23-25 at the Doubletree Hotel, 6505 N. Interstate Highway 35, in Austin.

The conference is co-sponsored by the TEA and the Texas Chapter of the National Association for Year-Round Education.

State legislators and superintendents from school districts with year-round schools will attend the conference.

Registration for the three-day seminar is $90, which includes the June 23 banquet. Deadline to register is Friday. For more information call (512) 463-9354.

■ Local students host shower for Casa kitchen

Midland Alternative School students enrolled in "Parenting for School Age Parents" hosted a kitchen shower for Casa de Amigos recently.

The students hosted the kitchen shower to garner utensils for the facility.

The course, "Parenting for School Age Parents," focused on food preparation, including techniques to add flavor and nutrition to convenience foods, according to class instructor Delia Diggs.

BUICK QUALITY NEVER ENDS, BUT THE INCENTIVES WILL.

So deal now on Regal Sedan, the car that's making the imports nervous. And check out the leasing opportunities on the beautiful Park Avenue. Motor Trend said: "Buick may have created the perfect car for the '90s."

* Buckle up, America.

Life isn't easy... now getting help is.

Glenwood provides comprehensive psychiatric counseling as well as inpatient and outpatient treatment for drug and alcohol addictions.

Two newly introduced programs at Glenwood now make getting help even easier. Our Day Treatment Program offers weekday help for those with emotional, drug or alcohol problems; leaving weekend and evening time free for friends and family.

And a new chemical dependency program, called STEPS AT NIGHT, offers evening care to adults who have daytime work or household responsibilities. This new program provides help without hospitalization, time flexibility, and reduced costs, too.

Hammer files $30 million libel lawsuit against The Globe

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Rapper M.C. Hammer has filed a $30 million libel lawsuit against The Globe, a weekly tabloid, claiming the newspaper knowingly published false information about his knowledge of an alleged rape.

Hammer

In its May 28 issue, The Globe reported a woman told Los Angeles police that Hammer was in a Los Angeles hotel room while she was being raped in March 1990. The headline read: "Rap King M.C. Hammer watched his brothers and eight goons rape me!"

Hammer, whose real name is Stanley Burrell, filed the suit against the Florida-based newspaper Wednesday in Alameda County Superior Court in Oakland, his hometown.

A 23-year-old woman, an employee of Hammer's production company, filed suit in May 1990 claiming she was raped by at least 10 men. The suit is pending against Hammer, his brothers Kenneth and Christopher Burrell, other individuals and the production company.

The woman's suit said neither Hammer nor his brother Louis took part in the alleged rape. In July, Hammer filed a countersuit, denying that the woman was raped.

The woman's attorney, Sara MacDwyer, said Thursday that her client never talked to Globe reporters.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Grace Robbins wants to end her nearly 28-year marriage to blockbuster author Harold Robbins, her attorney said.

Mrs. Robbins filed divorce papers Friday in Superior Court.

Her attorney, Ronald Jason Palmieri, said Mrs. Robbins' decision was prompted, in part, by a May 31 article in the Los Angeles Times that said Robbins, 75, was seen at the Robbins' Palm Springs home with a younger woman.

Another catalyst was a request by Robbins that his wife sign a transfer deed that would give him power over property the two own in San Juan Capistrano, Palmieri said.

Palmieri argued that Mrs. Robbins, who he said was in her 40s, deserves millions of dollars. Robbins' books including "The Adventurers," "The Lonely Lady," and "The Betsy" have sold more than 500 million paperback copies.

The court issued a general restraining order preventing Robbins from liquidating or transferring community property and put a more restrictive restraining order on gifts including diamonds and a valuable painting Robbins gave to his wife, Palmieri said.

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Billy Crystal learned the hard way that writing about fording an icy river in a cattle drive and actually doing it are two brrrry different things.

Crystal

"On the script page, crossing a river looks easy," said Crystal, in New Orleans for a preview of his new movie, "City Slickers."

"But you get to the edge and the water is 40 degrees," he continued. "There are rapids with sharp rocks underneath, and trout coming to the surface saying, 'I wouldn't go in there if I were you.'"

Still, Crystal said, he felt it was important to do the stunts himself because "audiences are too smart these days — they know when you're faking a shot."

Crystal wrote as well as played the lead in the film, which is about a 39-year-old New York City radio ad salesman who goes on a cowboy vacation with two of his best friends.

ATLANTA (AP) — Ted Turner says his Cable News Network would have broadcast from Nazi Germany under restrictions set by Hitler's chief propagandist, Josef Goebbels.

"I would, if it was my decision, because I'd want all the information we could possibly have," Turner said Friday at the annual shareholders meeting for his Turner Broadcasting System Inc.

CNN was criticized for keeping reporter Peter Arnett in Baghdad during the Persian Gulf War. Arnett's reports for a time were delivered under tight Iraqi government restrictions.

CNN President W. Thomas Johnson also defended Arnett's coverage.

"The reason we were there is because that's where the war was," Johnson said.

MacLachlan returned to the scene of the crime Thursday night when he spoke to the graduating class of his alma mater, Eisenhower High School.

He told the graduates to follow their dreams no matter how difficult things may sometimes seem.

PART-TIME INCOME AVAILABLE

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which need to be filled with qualified, responsible individuals.

OFTEN ASKED QUESTIONS:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current carrier force is already 90% adult and 10% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:
- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a carrier, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends.

How much money can I make as a carrier?

Depending on the size of the distributorship from $300 to $700 monthly! Some make even more!

How long does it take?

The actually delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many carrier's choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?

6 a.m. Monday - Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, carriers do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!

large bricked fireplace flanked by built-in bookcases creates a warm, hospitable atmosphere. Two wall-sized windows offer a delightful view of the large covered patio and landscaped backyard.

The kitchen and breakfast area, adjacent to the family room, continue to radiate the warmth and style found throughout the home. Lovely wallpaper coordinates beautifully with the oak cabinets and ceramic tiled splashback

A corner kitchen sink with a view of the entire family room, breakfast area and backyard does away with that "trapped in the kitchen" syndrome.

Amenities such as the built-in microwave, double ovens and walk-in pantry would delight any cook. In addition the kitchen cabinets have adjustable shelves making organization a snap.

Also conveniently located in the kitchen is a built-in desk with bookshelves above it. This is a great help to the meal planner of the household.

A spacious utility room with built-in cabinets offers plenty of room for an extra refrigerator or freezer.

Walk-in closets are featured in all four bedrooms.

The vaulted ceiling in the master bedroom adds to the already spacious atmosphere. A private entrance from the master bedroom opens onto the large patio. The newly redecorated master bath features his and her walk-in closets, an extra-large shower and a lovely garden tub. Opaque windows above the bath let the sunshine in while maintaining privacy.

A multipurpose room just off the formal living area is a great place for a study, home office or sewing room.

A three car garage with garage door openers offers extra space for a workbench and shelves as well as storage.

In addition to the large back yard, two side yards offer plenty of room for a garden and/or dog run.

Other amenities include an automatic sprinkler system with its own computer, zoned refrigerated air conditioning, five ceiling fans and double glass energy efficient windows.

Langston

We had no idea maps of Sunday afternoon Open Houses would be so well accepted. However, when six couples dropped by for a copy within the first 15 minutes of our Headquarters for Sunday afternoon Open Houses, we began to suspect we had a winner!

So the invitation is repeated today and will be repeated every Sunday for you to drop by between 12:30 and 5:00 at our Langston Realtors North Offices in the northeast corner of the Collanada at Loop 250 and Garfield (behind Chili's). We will have a map of all of the afternoon's Open Houses, a cool glass of lemonade, cookies and favors for the younger family members, and any other information we can provide! We will also have copies of our publication, This is Midland, self qualifying forms for mortgages, home buying and selling information, and brochures on organizations, arts, sports, etc in the city. Our Headquarters for Open Houses is our way of welcoming you to Midland's Sunday afternoon Open Homes and to offer our assistance. So whether you are a buyer, a seller, a shopper or just driving around, we hope you will stop by us first for a map and a "hello."

Incidentally, the new North Offices should formally be open within the next two weeks to provide additional space for our expanding number of sales associates, to give us more of a presence in the city's residential areas and t o offer extra convenience to our customers, clients and new agents. We'll also have a new Relocation Center, a Builder's Conference Center and extremely spacious training facilities for sales meetings and Pat Orseth's new agent, renewed agent classes!

While the summer sun beats down outside baking everything in sight, children can learn to cook up a storm inside with cookbooks written just for youngsters.

Now that school has been out for a week, parents are already hearing the infamous cry of summer: "I'm bored. I don't have anything to do." This phrase is usually followed closely by yet another infamous cry: "Can I (we) go to ----," or "Will you take me (us) to ----," — filling in the blank with any number of places, from the pool to the golf course to outside to play.

But during the heat of the day with the sun cooking everything in its sight, it is just too hot for children to be outside. So, while the sun is baking everything outside, why not help children learn to do a little baking inside.

For some, the notion of letting children loose in the kitchen is bound to conjure up images of mayhem. But there are several cookbooks designed just for children to teach them the culinary basics while having fun (and probably making a mess, but clean up is a part of most of the children's cookbooks' instructions).

A kitchen project for the kids could potentially benefit everyone. Not only would it keep the children out of the heat for a few hours, but after of few helpful hints from mom, dad or an older sibling, it could keep them out of your hair while they're staying inside. Learning basic cooking skills also could teach children to fix their own afternoon snacks, or even to fix a side dish, dessert or main course for dinner that evening, freeing the regular cook of the house from some of their work.

These cookbooks provide youngsters with a great learning experience beyond just learning to cook. The books explain proper measurement of ingredients — including how many teaspoons in a tablespoon, how many cups equals a pint or a quart and the like — cooking terms, good cooking habits and safety steps to always follow in the kitchen. Some of these books even include good nutrition tips and why it is important to include the basic four foods groups in the diet.

While using these cookbooks, children must read and follow directions (something some children would prefer not to do when not required by the teacher), while they learn a skill that will help them become more self-sufficient. During the projects, the children might even learn a greater appreciation for the work of the person who prepares meals in the home. You never know, it could happen.

Many children long to be a part of the adult world. They want to do everything mom and dad do, and learning some kitchen skills will allow them to do more than just set the table. And with the changing roles in society and couples waiting longer and longer to marry, it is just as important for a boy to learn how to cook as it is for a girl to know her way around the kitchen.

In actually preparing a recipe, children also can learn to use their senses in a new way. They have the opportunity to see the shapes, colors and textures of each ingredient, to feel the differences of dough or mixes as they are blended and then baked, they can experience the difference in taste of ingredients and finished products as well as the difference between raw ingredients and cooked items, and they learn the smells of spices, and things baking, broiling and simmering.

Festivities precede couple's wedding

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

When Blake Yowell became the bride of Steve Newman Saturday in Crestview Baptist Church, they were continuing a family tradition. Her parents, Brenda and Alton Yowell, were married there 30 years ago.

McKnight-Harrison

Additional parties included a bed and bath shower given by Frances (Mrs. Evetts, Jr.) Haley on the patio of her home; a "Honey-Do" shower and Mexican Fiesta given by Frances and Larry Stapp at their home, and a miscellaneous display shower held in the home of Sharri (Mrs. Jim) Ketcham and co-hosted by her daughters, Wendy (Mrs. Steve) Power and Michele (Mrs. Kevin) Renfro.

The groom's parents, Chris and Fred Newman, hosted a cookout at their home Thursday evening for the early out-of-town arrivals and the wedding party. That same evening, Blake's bridesmaids hosted a lingerie shower and bachelorette party at the home of the groom's sister, Holly Newman. Steve was given a bachelor party by his brother and best man, Jim Newman, and other wedding party members.

Blake, her bridesmaids and the couple's mothers were treated to a manicure party Friday by Gwen Thomas and the staff of Back Stage, where Blake worked last year. That noon, Donna (Mrs. Joe) Campbell and Sue Anne (Mrs. Dick) Campbell hosted a bridesmaids' luncheon in Donna's home.

The rehearsal dinner was given Friday evening at the Plaza Club by the groom's parents. Meanwhile, out-of-town guests were entertained with a buffet supper at the home of Ruby and Jim Caffery.

The bride's parents hosted the wedding reception in the ballroom of the Holiday Inn Country Villa.

After the reception, guests dropped by the homes of the newlyweds' parents for more visiting. Friends assisting were Jody (Mrs. Jerry) Green, Josie (Mrs. Joe) Birdwell and Barbara (Mrs. Clyde) Wilson.

AFTER A TOTAL of 33 years of teaching, Wanda Franke has decided it is time to "stop and smell the roses." May 30 was her last official day in the classroom. When asked about future plans, she told us that she plans to pursue some of her hobbies, including art, and is looking forward to getting better acquainted with her first grandchild.

The faculty and staff of Burnet Elementary School, where Wanda has taught fourth grade the past 12 years, honored her with a lovely retirement reception recently in the school library.

Among those dropping by to wish her well were MISD Superintendent Dr. Joseph Baressi and school board member Jackie Hamilton (Wanda previously taught both of their sons); Sue (Mrs. Fisher) Adams, who was one of her first students when she began her teaching career in Brownfield; Burnet principle Clyde E. Hobbs, school secretary Mary Lou (Mrs. Richard) Hennessy, and her twin daughters, Kim, a former student of Wanda, and Kathy. Wanda's husband, Ed, was a special guest.

Wanda has taught for 22 years in the Midland public schools, including DeZavala, Jones, Bowie and Burnet Elementary Schools, as well as one year at Trinity School.

TOMMY BLASE, son of Sherrilyn and Tom Blase, was honored with a pre-graduation party recently at the home of Patti and David DeFrance. Also hosting were Gayle and Tom Miller.

A graduate of Lee High School, Tommy will be attending the University of Texas-Austin next fall.

Friends from both Lee and Midland High Schools attended and enjoyed the evening's entertainment, a Polaroid scavenger hunt. UT colors were used for decorations and table settings.

Among the guests were Brandon Patton, Robert Teed, Holly Monroe, Teri Pullig, Jennifer Adkins, Mike Hopper, Randy Contreras, and Greg McCright.

RECENT MIDLAND HIGH School graduate Amy Williamson was honored prior to the milestone event with two delightful parties.

A mother-daughter ice cream sundae party was given for her on Mother's Day at the home of Diane (Mrs. Lonnie) Jordan. The other hostesses were Velva (Mrs. Patrick) Duffy and Cindy (Mrs. Jerry) Walton.

The hostesses had arranged a display table filled with memorabilia of Amy's school days, both at Trinity School and MHS.

Guests were church friends of Amy and her family.

On Baccalaureate Sunday, Amy was feted with a hamburger picnic on the grounds of the Racquet Club.

Host couples were Dyan and Frank Agar, Paula and Frank Cahoon, Betty Rae and Paul Davis, Joann and John Foster, Nancy and Richard Gibson and Sherry and Herschel O'Kelley.

The daughter of Karen and Roy Williamson, Amy plans to attend Southern Methodist University in the fall.

Staff Report

America's future lies in our youth, which is why Hasbro created the "G.I. Joe Search for Real American Heroes" program. The program honors and acknowledges children between the ages of 5-12 for their heroic deeds.

This year marks the third year of the Search in which 50 children — one from each state — are honored in special awards presentations and 10 of those children are selected to receive national acknowledgment for their accomplishments.

However, the deadline for nominations — July 5 — is just around the corner. Any adult can nominate a child who has performed a heroic deed sometime after Jan. 1, 1990. To do so, submit a brief paragraph, not more than 500 words, on an 8½x11-inch piece of paper describing the deed. Include the child's name, age and the date the deed took place, and include a witness account, newspaper clipping, orradio or television transcript if available.

Nominations should be sent to G.I. Joe Search for Real American Heros, P.O. Box 3701, Syosset, N.Y., 11775-3701.

A heroic deed can be: (1) a community service, such as recycling or environmentally-concerned activities, volunteering at a hospital, organizing social programs for the elderly or others in need, distributing canned/dry goods, or working with the less fortunate, (2) lifesaving feat, such as water or fire rescue, calling 911 in an emergency, administering first aid, preventing a crime or risking themself for others, or (3) personal achievement, such as overcoming a physical or mental handicap, beating the odds, tutoring children with special learning needs, or reaching goals in the face of unusual circumstances.

Nominations are reviewed by an independent judging organization. Provided that nominations are received from all 50 states, 50 state awards will be selected and winners will receive G.I. Joe Medals of Commendation and a gift from Hasbro.

From the 50 state award recipients, 10 children will be selected as national award recipients. These national winners will receive a three-day trip to Washington, D.C., where they will be honored in special ward ceremonies, meet government dignitaries and tour the nation's capital.

For more information, call the the G.I. Joe Search Hotline at (212) 598-3009.

(From 1E)

There are several cookbooks written specifically for youngsters.

One of these children's cookbooks is the new reprint of "My First Cookbook," for beginners ages 6-12. Over one million copies of the cookbook have been sent to consumers since it was first published in 1959. It is produced by the makers of Imperial Sugar, and was last offered in 1972. However, due to popular demand according to the company, another printing has been made available this summer.

"My First Cookbook," written by June Towers, Imperial Sugar's Director of Home Economics and author of several of the company's cookbooks, starts with "You Will Need" and goes on to "Work Plan," then "Serve" and "Idea."

"You Will Need" tells the child which ingredients and utensils are needed. "Work Plan" gives directions to prepare the recipe. "Serve" tells how and when to serve the dish and gives the yield. "Idea" contains variations and other serving suggestions. The ingredients are listed in the order they are used and the directions for preparing the recipe are in proper sequence using four basic steps.

The recipes are presented in an easy-to-read style to help the beginner chefs prepare the recipe with little or no adult supervision, depending on the child's age and ability.

To help make the cooking fun, many of the recipes include imaginative presentation ideas, such as the "Tiny Turtle Salad" which is a pear half dyed green and made to look like a turtle.

The 36-page, paperback book features 28 recipes and is divided into nine sections, including beverages, breads, eggs, main dishes, salads, vegetables, cakes and cookies, candy and other sweets that the author hopes children will enjoy preparing as much as eating.

Once the young helpers have mastered a few simple recipes, they can begin helping with the preparations of other items for a family meal, and eventually be able to master the preparation of an entire meal alone. In fact, they might even learn to help with the shopping and offer menu suggestions.

As a sample of the cookbook's set up, the following are two of the most popular recipes in "My First Cookbook." The "Animal Crackers" make a perfect afternoon snack, while the "Sugar-Paint Icing" can keep children occupied for hours creating icing designs on the cookies.

ANIMAL CRACKERS

YOU WILL NEED:
2¼ cups sifted flour
¼ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon soda
¾ cup granulated sugar
½ cup shortening
½ teaspoon vanilla
¼ teaspoon almond extract
1 large egg
Sifter, measuring cups and spoons, mixer or beater, knife, pastry board, rolling pin, cookie cutters, baking sheet and wire rack.

WORK PLAN:
Sift flour, salt and soda together. Cream sugar, shortening, vanilla, almond extract and egg. Mix the two mixtures thoroughly. Shape into a 3-inch roll, wrap in wax paper and chill. Slice in ½-inch slices. On lightly floured pastry board, roll each slice and cut with animal cutters. Bake at 350 degrees about 8 minutes. Cool on a wire rack.

SERVE:
Serve plain, with a tall glass of cold milk, or frost with Sugar-Paint Icing (recipe to follow).

IDEA:
Cut cookie in paper doll shapes and design clothes to be painted on with tinted icing.

SUGAR-PAINT ICING

YOU WILL NEED:
2¼ cups powdered sugar, sifted
4 teaspoons soft margarine
½ teaspoon vanilla
2 tablespoons milk

WORK PLAN:
Mix all ingredients and blend thoroughly. Use white; or divide icing into several small bowls and tint each batch a different color.

SERVE:
Decorate Animal Crackers, using clean pastry brush and clean watercolor brushes, if mother says you can. Slivers of gum drops, sprinkles (brightly colored cake decorations), colored sugar and chopped nuts are fun, too.

IDEA:
Make Animal Crackers and have a tea party for your friends. Cookie dough rolls may be kept in refrigerator for several days if they are tightly wrapped; you can bake a few one day and the rest another day.

A copy of "My First Cookbook" may be obtained by sending a $1 check or money order (to cover postage and handling) along with your address (zip code must be included) and a UPC symbol as proof of purchase cut from any Imperial Sugar package to Imperial Sugar, P.O. Box 560246, Dallas, Texas, 75356. Allow six to eight weeks for delivery. For more information call Richard Brown at (214) 931-9764.

Stress tests questionable

By Ira Dreyfuss

WASHINGTON (AP) — Just because you exercise regularly like you're supposed to, don't count on getting off easy: Your doctor may tell you to get a stress test anyway.

Ordering you to work out on a treadmill or stationary bicycle, with sensors stuck to your chest, will provide the doctor with information that could keep you alive.

Just the same, for some people, the tests may be a waste of time and money.

"Too many stress tests are being given without a clear-cut reason for why," said Dr. James M. Rippe, director of the exercise physiology and nutrition laboratory of the University of Massachusetts. The test is most helpful for people with some symptoms of coronary heart disease, such as a pressure feeling when they exercise vigorously, Rippe said.

Take a sedentary man over 40 who's apparently healthy but in what statistically is a prime heart attack risk group. He decides to get off the couch for the first time in his life, and take up vigorous exercise.

The American College of Cardiology says many of these people could benefit from a test. It can pick up such potential problems as ischemia — insufficient blood flow to the heart muscle — before the stress of exercise makes it show up as a heart attack.

HOWEVER, THE heart doctors' association has a number of qualifiers. One is that you have two risk factors in addition to being a middle-aged male. Among the possibilities: high cholesterol, high blood pressure, diabetes, a smoking habit or a family history of heart attack before age 55.

A woman's peak heart risk period begins later than a man's. The issue probably won't arise for a similar woman until 50, Rippe said.

If you know you're not in those categories, you may question the need for a test. However, some doctors order them to reduce the risk of a successful malpractice suit, said Dr. Samuel M. Fox III, director of the cardiology exercise program at Georgetown University.

A doctor who gives the test can always say he tried, even if the patient later has heart trouble, Fox said.

The cardiologists' guidelines say you needn't take a stress test unless the exercise you're planning is vigorous. Just walking wouldn't line you up for a bout on the treadmill. Jogging could.

If you know you are healthy and have no risk factors, experts say you can skip the test.

"If you've been exercising for 15 years, you have a pretty good idea of what your capacity is," said Dr. Robert F. DeBusk, professor of medicine at Stanford University School of Medicine in California.

The 1991 guidelines of the American College of Sports Medicine say you can take a pass if you watch yourself for signs of heart trouble as you slowly start an exercise program. It says moderate exercise, something you can do comfortably for an hour, should cause you no trouble.

AND STARTING athletes may be just as well off not shooting for their maximum. People who do that tend to give up on exercise because of the effort required. Research indicates people naturally prefer to work in about the middle of their intensity range, DeBusk said.

If you're starting and you want to know your baseline, you could spend the money so you can take another test later to see how much better you've gotten, DeBusk said. Tests typically run $200 to $300.

But the tests are not entirely reliable. There's a chance the test may not pick up heart trouble. And the results may indicate you have heart trouble when you don't, lining you up for even more expensive tests just to determine the first test was wrong.

Stone fruit trees need special care

By Deborah A. Benge

Dry conditions and hot dry winds are taking a toll on lots of plants, especially some fruit trees. The problem is similar to the situation last years, when the leaves and fruit of stone fruits trees suddenly shriveled up and many trees died.

Benge

Stone fruits, deciduous fruit trees with a pit in the center of the fruit, include peaches, apricots, nectarines, plums and cherries, all members of the Prunus family. These trees share many problems which make them not as long lived and hardy as trees need to be in the Permian Basin.

Some of these problems are peach tree borer, root knot nematodes and heavy fruit loads.

The peach tree borer attacks stone fruits trees, even ornamental peach and plum. This insect bores into the trees at the base of the trunk. Damage can appear as dark crumbly stuff or sap at the base of the tree. This damaging insect has more than one generaption per summer, and the last generation will spend the winter in the tree, damaging the vascular tissue of that tree. This causes the transport of plant foods, water and nutrients in the tree to be impeded.

Root knot nematodes have a weakening effect on stone fruit trees. These nuisances cause a root gall abnormality that interferes with the root system's water and nutrient uptake. Very little can be done about root knot nematodes, but extra good care will help a tree tolerate the pest.

Little things also can throw a stone fruit off. These trees are very susceptible to crown gall, a bacterial disease that causes large corky galls to form on the roots, the crown and sometimes on the trunk. Again, very little can be done to treat this problem. Give the tree good care and it will tolerate this slow, weakening pathogen for a while.

Stone fruits trees do not have the deep extensive root system that is so beneficial in West Texas growing conditions. Deep watering once a week may be needed for these fruit laden trees. Don't apply water just at the base of the tree trunk. The area under the canopy and drip line needs to be slowly watered with about three inches of water.

The ultimate stress for many stone fruit trees is heavy fruit load. Stone fruits, like many other fruit trees, tend to set a heavy crop — much more than it can actually fill. This stress, combined with dry growing conditions and maybe one or two of the other problems mentioned, above is enough to kill the tree.

Affected trees have leaves and fruit suddenly shrivel or appear extremely wilted. If your stone fruit trees are showing these symptoms, see if your watering is adequate. You also may want to thin or remove fruit to reduce plant stress.

Deep watering followed in a day or two with an early morning limb thrashing can help remove much of the energy consuming fruit. Check for borers and use preventative measures to avoid future attacks of this pest. Proper watering and good care can help your tree survive. And the next time your fruit tree blooms and sets lots of small fruit — thin, thin and thin some more.

Self-service laundries provide customers with no-smoking hours

By Tom Beyerlein
N.Y. Times News Service

You've spent two hours at the laundromat, getting your clothes "April fresh." Then the person next to you lights up, and suddenly your clothes are stogy stinky.

No more. Evincing the swing to a more smoke-free society, two self-service laundries in Kettering and Huber Heights, Ohio, are instituting no-smoking hours.

Candace and Jim Barnes, owners of the C&J Laundromats, decided to set up the non-smoking hours after getting a lot of requests in their suggestion boxes. The customers were requesting non-smoking sections, Mrs. Barnes said, but "smoke travels, so it didn't seem feasible."

The no-smoking hours are noon to 5 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays, 7 a.m. to noon Wednesdays and 5 to 10 p.m. Fridays.

Mrs. Barnes said she has been telling her customers about the impending change for a month, and the reaction has been favorable.

"Those who don't smoke are very pleased," she said. "Those who do smoke, most of them are already used to not smoking in public places. We've had one or two who have said, 'I'll smoke whenever I please.' I don't know how we'll handle that if they insist."

The customers on hand at C&J's on Monday liked the idea — but then, none of them was a smoker.

"Sounds great," said Pam Mills of Kettering. "Once I was at this laundromat and somebody lit up a cigar. A cigarette you can tolerate, but a cigar kind of lingers. It's pretty bad, especially when you're trying to get your clothes clean."

An electric drill is the first power tool that most people buy, and it is a wise choice.

This versatile tool can drill holes in metal, wood, plastics, glass and concrete or other masonry. In addition, it can take a variety of accessories for sanding, grinding, shaping, stripping, buffing, sharpening and cutting holes.

■ The size of a drill is described by the largest drill-bit shank that it will accept. A drill is called a ¼-inch drill, for example, if the drill's chuck will accept only bits that have shanks of ¼-inch or less in diameter.

■ The four common drill sizes are ¼, ⅜, ½ and ¾ inches. A ¼-inch drill is fine for light work, but a ⅜-inch model is likely to be more useful for the average home handyman.

■ A sturdy ½-inch drill may be a better choice if you plan to drill into masonry or other hard materials or if you use accessories, such as hole saw attachments, frequently. The ¾-inch model is used mainly by professional carpenters and masons.

■ A drill's power varies with size and make, but typically ranges from about one-third horsepower in the ¼-inch size to one and one-half horsepower in ¾-inch models.

■ Speed ranges from about 2000 revolutions per minute for the ¼-inch size to around 1200 rpm for ⅜-inch and 600 rpm for ½-inch drills. The slower the speed, the greater the turning power (torque). Larger drills provide the greater torque necessary for driving larger diameter drill bits and hole saws.

■ Variable speed control lets you select the best speed for the project at hand, such as a slow speed to drive in screws with a screwdriver bit.

Books help in search for job

Associated Press

Before you commit yourself to a career, you need to take a hard look at salaries, advancement opportunities and the market environments of fields you might choose.

■ If you want to go into any of the health care specialties — nursing, therapies, medical technology — you'll find the prospects are good. But if you want to be a doctor, be aware that there will be a surplus of doctors in the coming decade.

The possibilities are outlined in the new edition of "Jobs '91" by Kathryn and Ross Petras (Prentice Hall Press), a thick guide to thousands of fields that covers the long-term outlooks, salary ranges, requirements and other things you may need to know to get going on the career of your choice.

■ The realities of the workplace make it fairly certain that you will change not only jobs but careers over the course of your life, points out Daniel Moreau in his book, "Take Charge of Your Career" (Kiplinger Books). Moreau, associate editor Changing Times magazine, maps out how to survive dislocations in the wake of mergers, downsizing and layoffs and to take advantage of new possibilities. "In a sense, few times in industrial history have offered as much opportunity for the individual as the period we're in now," he writes.

FRATERNAL ORDER OF EAGLES AUXILIARY, PERMIAN AERIE #2982

Three candidates were installed: Gretchen E. Bell, Bonnie Day Noe and Dawn Marie Robertson. Guests Sandy Williams and Ed Adcock of the local Diabetis Chapter were presented a $200 check by Louise Carter and Jim McPherson.

Mary Brown read the thank you letter from Hospice, and Nora Whetstone was top membership producer in the state.

The new by-laws were approved by International. A $300 check from the International Golden Eagle Fund was received and then presented to the Midland County Public Library as a gesture of support to the library for its service to the elderly. Libraries receiving the grant are asked to purchase large print books for the elderly and visually handicapped.

Ms. House was initiated into the Past Madam President's Club. The meeting was closed with a prayer by Beverly Mills. Refreshments were served after the meeting.

NARFE, PERMIAN BASIN CHAPTER 1281

The National Association of Retired Federal Employees, Permian Basin Chapter 1281, met. Frederick Gertz presided. Lily Gertz gave the treasury report. Mel Goffieon read the minuets and gave the legislative report concerning life insurance. Grace Greggs announced the upcoming yard party.

Mr. and Mrs. George Fasters of Clyde were sent a congratualtions card for their 50th anniversary. They were former officers of NARFE.

Host couple for the meeting was Mr. and Mrs. Claude Roberts. Stamps commemorating the 70th anniversary of NARFE were given out.

PSI PHI CHAPTER, BSP

The Psi Phi Chapter of Beta Sigma Phi met in the home of Lisa Crawford. Attending were Sherrilyn Blase, Lisa Crowford, Patti DeFrance, Linda Fisher, Caroline Ganem and Sara Stumbaugh. Guests were Kathy Gressett and Susan Peery. The April social and service projects were discussed. New officers were installed. Ms. Gressett was accepted to the chapter as a transfer. Ms. Peerey will start pledge training.

Ms. Blase, Gayle Miller, Ms. Fisher, Ms. Ganem, Ms. DeFrance, Ms. Peery and guest Jackie Tibbetts attended Founders' Day. Ms. DeFrance was named Girl of the Year. Chapter members met at the home of Caroline and Rick Ganem for a Crazy Bridge/April Fool's Party. Tom and Gayle Miller, Patti and Dave DeFrance, Kathy and Doug Gressett, Michelle and Greg Mauzy, Sara and Monty Stumbaugh, and Caroline and Rick Ganem attended. Prizes were awarded.

BETA PI CONCLAVE OF KAPPA KAPPA IOTA

Beta Pi Conclave of Kappa Kappa Iota met a Rusk Elementary for their annual spring covered dish dinner. Hostesses were Evelyn Shelby, Maxine Robertson and Dorothy Sanders.

Kylene Bresenham presided. Kay Miller read the minutes. Linda Sherman, Pat Sutherland and Patricia Hopkins gave a report of the recent state convention in Brownsville. Ms. Hopkins was elected and installed as the Texas state secretary at the convention.

Members brought supplies and clothing for the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children. A donation was given to the National Philanthropic Project, the C. Henry Kempe Natioanl Center. for the Prevention and Treatment of Child Abuse and Neglect in Denver. A contributuion to the Texas state scholarship fund was made.

LaJuana Rathjen installed the officers. They are Terry Gaddy, president; Ms. Hopkins, president-elect; Pat Adams, vice president; Sharon Morgan, secretary; Evelyn Grant, treasurer; Dixie Burns and Tommie Hicks, historians; Ms. Southerland, reporter; and Ms. Bresenham, parliamentarian.

Ms. Hopkins, Ms. Sherman and Ms. Southerland were elected delegates to the National Convention to be in Albuquerque.

Ms. Gaddy presented Ms. Bresenham a hand painted China tray for her work as president. She announced the new officers would have an officer's workshop and salad luncheon the plan the upcoming year.

ALTRUSA CLUB

Altrusa Club of Midland had an installation banquet at Ranchland Hills Country Club. The invocation was given by Caroline Keisling and the welcome was extended by Francine Weaver.

Installing officer was Ms. Tidwell.

Yonalda Belazi was introduced as a new member and Ms. McCain received the Altrusan of the Year award. Guests were Anne Gunther, Edna Benninger, Hap Howard, C.E. McCain, Aubrey Reid. Harold Gillam and Henry Wurtz.

PRECEPTOR ETA UPSILON CHAPTER, BSP

Preceptor Eta Upsilon of Beta Sigma Phi met in the home of Cel Wiginton who presided. The budget for the coming year was approved. Alice Williams was granted a year leave of absence.

Summer activities were planned.

"A Time For Us" program was presented by Cherry Stover. Other members attending were Beverly Acker, Sue Adams, Jill Arthur, Peggy Brown, Virginia Earhart. Neva Garvin, Genelle Emerson, Jane Jiles, Donna Snyder, Ann Tayrien and Helen Tinnin.

TRINITY TOWERS

The Trinity Towers Birthday Party honored those with birthdays in May. Honorees included Velma Gist, Lizzie Lou Gibson, Beulah Zoller, Lessie Lu Greer, Anna Gilchriste, Eleanor Wheeler, Dr. Betty Moody, Della Elsas, Margaget Foster, Marjorie Clark, Hattie Hudson, Virginia Marton and Alice Mattix.

Guests included Marvin Zoller, Sue Solari, Debbie Solarie, Mr. and Mrs. Courtney Clark, D.C. Brooks and Jay Brooks.

The program was by Cleo Wolfe and Dr. Fred Cullen. Flowers were given by Trinity Towers Auxiliary. The cake was provided by Eva Dennis of the Circle L. Class at First Prebyterian Church.

DAUGHTERS OF THE REPUBLIC OF TEXAS

Pavilions rising for Spain's Expo '92

SEVILLE, Spain (AP) — Some 100 national and theme pavilions are rising on the Island of La Cartuja, the site of Spain's Expo '92.

About 4,000 workers are involved in creating the exposition facilities, which reflect a mixture of allegory, billboard and Barnum and Bailey showmanship.

The United States pavilion will feature a glass passageway which leads through an immense wall of water, representing the millions of individual immigrant voyages that built the nation.

DEAR ABBY

Woman asks how to marry her millionaire

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I have been going with the same man for three years, and we are talking about marriage in the future. My only problem is that he wants to marry me only if he has a million dollars in the bank.

Van Buren

I met him like he is, and I truly love him for himself, but all he cares about is money, money, money!

Abby, is he giving me excuses? Or does he really want to give me a better life than the one we share now?

I wish I could read his mind and his heart. — DETROIT NEWS READER

DEAR READER: Never mind his mind and his heart. Ask to read his bank statement to find out how close to a million dollars he is. If he's almost there, then I would say he has good intentions, but if he's in the neighborhood of $985,000 short, he's making excuses.

DEAR ABBY: "Lisa" and I have been best friends since high school. We even liked the same guy for a while. (I'll call him Bill.) Eventually, Lisa married Bill and I married someone else. I didn't see Lisa for several years, then one night I ran into Bill and he told me that their marriage was over, but Lisa wouldn't get a divorce because of how it would look to her family.

Not long after that, Bill and I had a one-night stand. We both felt so guilty, it never happened again. Then three months later, I saw the two of them together, and Bill couldn't look me in the eye.

Meanwhile, Lisa and I have become very close friends again, and every time we get on the subject of married people who cheat on each other, I want to tell her about Bill. I know if I tell her, I will lose her as a friend, but on the other hand, I wonder if I am being a good friend by not telling her. I'm willing to tell her, if she would just ask. Sometimes when we talk, I say something like, "I'd want to know if MY husband was cheating on ME," hoping she'll say, "So would I," but so far she hasn't.

I don't know what to do. I probably should tell her before someone else does. — LAURA'S FRIEND

DEAR "FRIEND": With friends like you, Lisa doesn't need any enemies. Are you sure you wouldn't like Lisa to end her marriage so you could have Bill? Please do Lisa, Bill and yourself a favor and don't tell Lisa (or anyone else) about your one-night stand with Bill.

DEAR ABBY: When you get an invitation to a wedding and you can't go, are you obligated to tell them why?

I received an invitation to a church wedding that is scheduled for 10:30 in the morning. It's a good four-hour drive from where I live, and that's too long a drive and it's too early.

Also, if you get money from relatives as a gift, are you supposed to tell them what you bought, or did, with the money? — PERPLEXED IN TUCSON

DEAR PERPLEXED: It is not necessary to state why you are unable to accept an invitation to a wedding — or to any other affair — but it softens the turndown if you can truthfully say that you are unable to attend due to a previous commitment or that you will not be in town.

When you receive a gift of money, you are not obligated to disclose how the money was used.

Family vacation strikes wrong chord for travel

By Erma Bombeck

I don't care what psychologists say about bonding, there is something unnatural about jamming five members of a family into a car and taking to the open road on a vacation.

Bombeck

Kids can kick the back of a seat just so many times. slap one another around for so many miles, hang their heads out of the window and make noises like a police siren for so many minutes, and throw up before they stop having fun.

The ultimate horror on these trips is when someone suggests you all sing songs to make the time fly. If you're the Jackson family, you can sing. If you're the Von Trapp family or the McGuire sisters, maybe. But if you're an average family with nothing in common but the same last name and mailing address, forget it.

Never is the generation gap more obvious than when you try to pick out a song that everyone knows. After 18 fast choruses of "Row, row, row your boat gently down the stream," that pretty well exhausts the repertoire of the Bombeck chorale.

My personal favorite is "The Impossible Dream," but I know only the first five words. Then my husband cuts in with, "It's a Long Way to Tipperary," and the three kids start in on a Beatles medley and the only thing we contribute is "Yeah, yeah, yeah." The adults counter with a few fragments from "We've Only Just Begun" and "You Ain't Nothin but a Hound Dog."

Every time someone yells, "I got one," we all live in hope that maybe there's a song we can all sing at the same time in the same key, but usually all we know is the title.

After a while the reality hits. My husband and I are the only people on this planet who know the verses to "Beer Barrel Polka" and "God Bless America," and our kids can do the complete version of "Scarborough Fair."

Next time you're whizzing along the highway and see a carful of people singing their brains out together, you can bet it's either a tour from "Up With People" or a family on vacation singing "Silent Night."

Older siblings adjust to new baby

By Lawrence M. Kutner
N.Y. Times News Service

Several months before the birth of their son in December, William and Kristi Sullivan began to prepare their 6-year-old daughter, Katie, for the event.

Katie had been begging her parents for a baby and was thrilled to learn that she would get one. But as her mother's pregnancy progressed and the prospect of having a new baby at home become more real, she began having mixed feelings.

"One morning before the baby was born, Katie said she was looking forward to holding him until he turned blue," said Mr. Sullivan, a fund-raising executive in Minneapolis. "That told me that she was having some concerns."

Parents are sometimes surprised by how their older children react to the anticipation and birth of a new baby.

Psychologists and psychiatrists who study child development and sibling relationships have found that some of the things that worry parents, like moodiness or withdrawal, may actually be signs that a child is adapting normally to the news.

Such normal but confusing behavior also provides new clues to how parents can help children who become depressed or jealous when there is a new baby in the family.

CHILDREN WHO already have siblings tend to be affected less by the introduction of another child.

"Ninety percent of all first-born children experience some anxiety, moodiness and regression after the birth of a new sibling," said Dr. Stephen Bank, an adjunct professor of psychology at Wesleyan University in Middletown, Conn., who studies sibling relationships.

For example, a recently toilet-trained toddler will often start wetting his pants. Or a child who has stopped sucking a thumb may begin again.

"Regression can be a good sign," Bank said. "It shows that the children understand that there's been a change. After three or four months, they surge ahead and feel proud of themselves for being bigger and older."

'Ninety percent of all first-born children experience some anxiety, moodiness and regression after the birth of a new sibling.'

— Dr. Stephen Bank
Wesleyan University in Middletown, Conn.

The age difference between the two children can affect how much the older child's behavior will change.

Most siblings are separated by two to four years. This means that toddlers and preschoolers are gaining new siblings at a time in which they are still struggling to feel comfortable when separated from their parents.

And their regression may be more dramatic.

"After a few weeks, expect your preschooler to ask when you're going to send the baby back," said Dr. Kent Ravenscroft, an associate clinical professor of psychiatry at Georgetown University in Washington D.C. "They don't always realize that it's a permanent change."

MUCH OF THE concern about having a new sibling has little to do with the baby. Children are angry and afraid of having to give up or share their parents' love and attention.

Simply talking about how much fun they will have, or how they will have new status as an older sibling, does not address those issues.

The Sullivans recalled how Katie never let her mother out of her sight a few weeks after her brother was born. "She told me she was feeling left out," said Ms. Sullivan, a medical technologist.

To help Katie feel special, Ms. Sullivan would occasionally say things to her newborn son within earshot of her daughter. "I would tell him, 'Now I'm going to spend some special time with Katie. It's your turn to wait,'" she said.

Children who have had a lot of love, attention and care from their parents may have particular trouble adjusting. Such children may have had little practice being self-sufficient and look to parents to meet nearly all their emotional needs.

"There are times when occasional doses of benign neglect are helpful," said Dr. Alberto C. Serrano of the Philadelphia Child Guidance Center and a professor of psychiatry and pediatrics at the University of Pennsylvania.

"For example, a child who's in a preschool program may have an easier time adjusting than one who's been cared for only at home," Serrano said. "The child in the preschool program has a space and people that he doesn't have to share with the new baby."

New breed of zoos provide updated image

By Bruce V. Bigelow
Copley News Service

The American zoo, once content to float along as a center of family entertainment, is rapidly becoming a lifeboat for wildlife in desperate straits.

"Most of us think of zoos as the places we take our children," said Benjamin Beck, associate director for biological programs at the National Zoo in Washington, D.C.

Now, however, zoos from New York to California "are trying to be more," Beck said at a recent meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

"We are recognizing that we have to be places of science education," Beck said.

"Many zoos actually resemble mini-universities."

BIOLOGICAL DIVERSITY is the term scientists use to describe the world's vast and stunning array of plant and animal life.

Yet the planet is finite, and each year more and more wildlife habitat is being destroyed. Today, many zoologists fear they are becoming the curators of a living museum of natural history.

"One of the rationales that's often cited for zoo breeding programs is the hope of reintroducing zoo-bred animals to the wild," Beck said.

During the past two decades, about 135 species of captive-bred species have been reintroduced to the wild, including peregrine falcons, red wolves and the Arabian oryx.

"It's a very romantic and appealing notion," he added, "but in some cases I think there has been over-optimism."

For zoologists, saving a species can be as frustrating as trying to kindle a fire from faint embers.

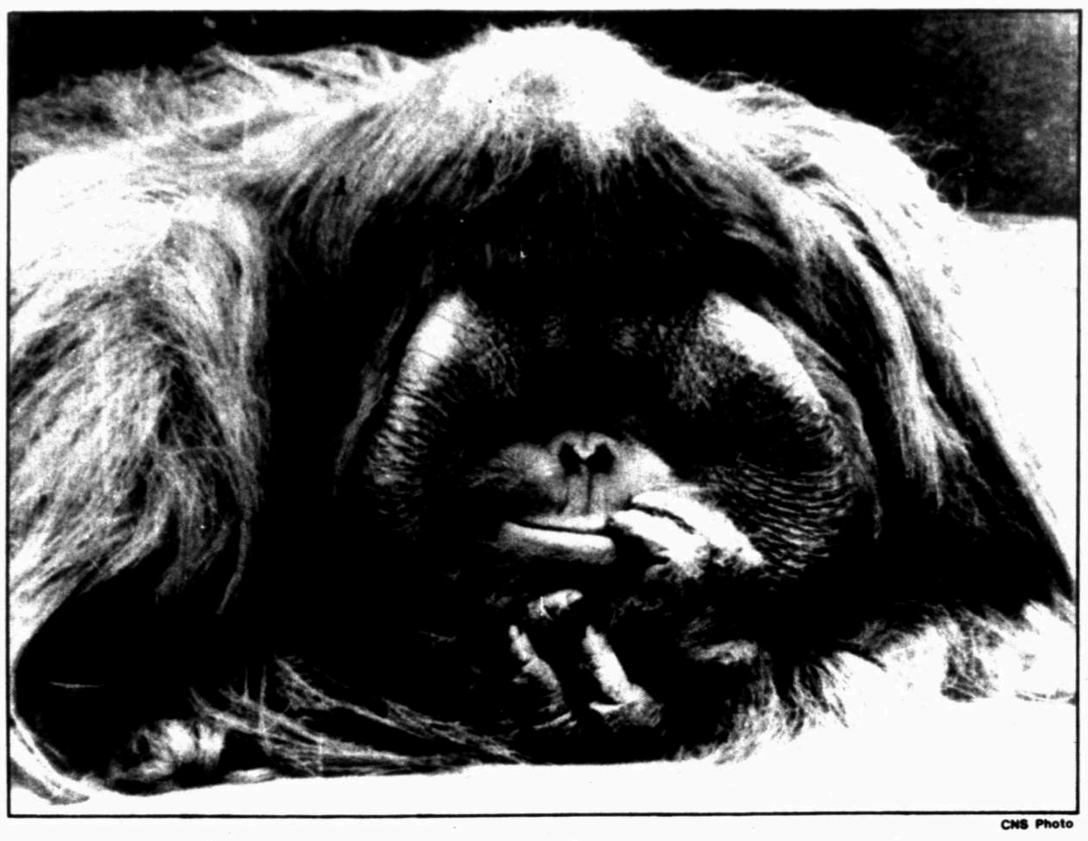
For example, Beck and others began reintroducing a small monkey, the golden lion tamarin, to Brazil's eastern coastal rain forest in 1984. Of the 89 tamarins released at a cost of $23,000 apiece, 35 have survived.

The mortality rate for reintroduced monkeys is two to three times the death rate among wild tamarins, Beck said. A number of zoo-bred tamarins also were stolen by Brazilian pet collectors.

The losses were offset by 51 births among the 35 survivors, but Beck emphasized that recovery programs are fraught with problems.

Scientists must carefully choose the habitat for the release. Local residents must be supportive of the idea.

Scientists also must determine if there is enough food to support the animals, how far they range and scores of other details that could tip the balance against survival.



CNS Photo

No longer just for family entertainment, today's zoos also manage breeding programs that save endangered species.

THE RESEARCH required is immense, yet programs to save vanishing species have become a major focus of work at zoos across the country.

In 1981, the American Association of Zoological Parks and Aquariums developed a cooperative plan to conserve vanishing wildlife.

Among the participants is the San Diego Zoo, which established its Center for Reproduction of Endangered Species in 1975.

The center uses both scientific and veterinary research to maximize the health, well-being and breeding potential of exotic animals.

Detailed computer records are kept on individual animals, and are used to avoid in-breeding.

Scientists also attempt to solve specific reproduction problems.

At the San Diego center, for example, Nancy Czekala has been comparing hormone levels among fertile and infertile female gorillas.

'One of the rationales that's often cited for zoo breeding programs is the hope of reintroducing zoo-bred animals to the wild. It's a very romantic and appealing notion, but in some cases I think there has been over-optimism.'

— Benjamin Beck
associate director for biological programs
National Zoo

The research required collecting the gorillas' urine from puddles for analysis, which Czekala said "isn't anywhere as easy as it sounds."

Czekala, an endocrinologist, found that infertile gorillas, like humans, can be given a supplemental hormone, progesterone, to improve the chances for a successful gorilla pregnancy.

She presented her findings to scientists attending a workshop in "Advances in Zoo Biology and Conservation."

THE SAN DIEGO Zoo has in recent years loaned its three western lowland gorillas to the Philadelphia Zoo as part of a national Species Survival Plan for the animals, which are an endangered species. The gorillas, Memba, Alvila and their baby, Jessica, recently returned to San Diego, where an $11.5 million African rain forest exhibit is being completed.

Perhaps the most widely known of all rare animals is the California condor, the largest land bird in North America.

A captive breeding program captured the last 27 condors in existence in 1987.

Condor breeding at the San Diego and Los Angeles zoos has brought the total to 40, and up to a dozen pairs may breed this spring.

Officials consider the program successful enough to make preparations for the first release of captive-raised condors later this year.

Fast food, modern life threaten French cafes

By Patrick McDowell

PARIS (AP) — The French cafe, that haven and debating club for generations of students, workers, poets and painters, is losing a battle with modern life.

Fast food, television and vending machines are chipping away at an institution as central to French tradition as freshly baked bread.

Before World War I, France had 510,000 cafes. Now, the number is 180,000 and declining by about 3 percent a year, according to industry figures.

"People have less and less need for us," said Robert Henry, who leads a campaign to revive the cafe's fortunes in an age when few people have time to philosophize at a sidewalk table.

He heads the cafe section of the National Union of Restaurateurs, Cafe-Keepers and Hoteliers. In February, it held a special convention intended to help cafes compete with new rivals.

Henry said these range from comfortable apartments with VCRs to hamburger joints — anything that entices people to stay home or eat and drink elsewhere.

"In the big towns, we have multifaceted competition," he said. "The biggest is fast food a l'Americaine."

McDonald's has opened 146 restaurants in France in 11 years, 36 of them in 1990, said company spokesman Jean-Francois Cancel. The U.S. chain appeals to families with young children, while many cafes are unofficial men's clubs.

"We have to stress our strongest point, our conviviality," Henry said, "and realize that the taste of our customers has changed."

COFFEE CONSUMPTION remains as high as ever in the cafes, he said, but sales of beer have fallen and many people prefer hamburgers to the bistro's toasted ham-and-cheese sandwich.

In recent years, cafes have expanded menus, added soft drinks and installed pinball machines in an effort to lure customers back.

"The cafe industry is in something of a crisis," said Jean-Francois Pecaut of Coca-Cola's French operations. "They have been obliged by their customers to sell more products."

Some people say the cafe declined because too much modernization killed a unique ambiance of cups clattering on metal bars, smokers flicking ashes on the floor and bow-tied waiters sweeping up change.

"About 30 years ago, they all started looking the same," said Alain Daniel, a university teacher who detests the decision by many cafe-keepers to install Formica bars.

"You go to a bistro first of all to have an atmosphere," he said. "Now the atmosphere has disappeared. It's all easy-to-clean, functional and cold."

Fast-food restaurants might be regarded the same way, but have their advantages, said Monique Gerfaud, a nurse.

"When I have to meet someone, I prefer to do it at Quick," she said, referring to a French hamburger chain. "At Quick, they have no-smoking sections."

WHATEVER ITS problems, the cafe lives. Millions still depend on it for morning cafe au lait and croissants.

"Someone who owns a well-located cafe can retire in his 40s," said Pecaut, who is trying to increase Coke's cafe sales. "You can make a lot of money."

Most closures have been in the countryside, small towns and decaying city neighborhoods, Henry said, and fewer new ones are opening. A modern high-rise is more likely to have a gym for residents than a cafe.

The Left Bank of Paris remains the temple of the cafe. Images of Hemingway and Fitzgerald carousing on the Boulevard St. Germain still dance in the heads of countless tourists.

Famous Left Bank cafes seem impervious to the industry's woes. At Les Deux Magots, a haunt of Sartre and Picasso, two wooden Chinese statues peer impassively at customers who pay $4 for a coffee.

Around the corner, however, workmen gut one more nondescript cafe that went out of business. A sign proclaims that it soon will be a pizza-pasta chain outlet.

Henry hopes salvation can be found in attracting talented people to the trade. Last summer, Henry's union and educational authorities introduced the first professional licensing course for cafe workers.

Students who enroll in the two-year program must master a foreign language and the geography of French wine regions. In addition to learning the proper way to load an espresso machine, they are given rudimentary business training.

CAFES HAVE been the social centers of villages and city neighborhoods, places of welcome where one could have an easy word with waiters, neighbors or friends.

In the 19th century, the rich urban middle classes showed off their wealth in ornate cafes, while humbler ones saw to the needs of everyone else.

By the turn of the century, the cafe had become a public living room where a starving artist could leave his garret and pass an evening for the price of a drink.

"I grew up in a garrison town with 1,400 people. We had 42 cafes," said Guy Ibert, a Paris businessman.

The army is gone from the town and the young people fled to the cities, Ibert said. Only one cafe remains, and its survival is precarious.

Fossils are nature's own time capsules

By Bruce V. Bigelow
Copley News Service

Scientific prospectors on a decade-long expedition in San Diego's back yard are amassing one of the largest and most diverse collections of marine fossils in North America.

Tapping into a fossil-laden layer of sandstone extending from San Diego to Tijuana, Mexico, they're unearthing a cache of relics. Tens of thousands of mineralized bones from walruses, dolphins, sea cows, sea lions, whales, fish, birds and sharks are being collected.

"I would say that San Diego is becoming the most important deposit to look at marine mammals that lived between 3 million and 5 million years ago," said Lawrence Barnes, curator of vertebrate paleontology at the Natural History Museum of Los Angeles County. The area's significance ranks in the top 10 for all marine mammals in North America, he added.

Among the recently discovered prizes is the nearly complete skeleton of a whale that swam in coastal waters covering San Diego County 3 million years ago.

FEW COMPLETE skeletons have been found. For example, no more than five whale skeletons have been unearthed, said Richard Cerutti, a member of Demere's scientific team. Skulls and jaws are especially prized for what they can teach scientists about evolution.

The whale, like many fossils in the museum's collection, was excavated from the site of a residential and office development, under construction since 1988.

"We knew that there would be fossils there," Demere recalled.

"But we never dreamed that it would be this much and that there would be so many new kinds of things."

At one site, workers found between 1,500 and 2,000 fossilized bird bones, he said. All together, more than 40 species of sea birds have been identified, including four species of flightless diving birds known as auks.

"It was the penguin of the Northern Hemisphere, so to speak," Demere said.

Scientists found a previously unknown species of now-extinct walrus — toothless except for its tusks — which Demere dubbed the "gummy walrus." They also found numerous fossils of a primitive dolphin with an extremely long snout. The animal closely resembles a dolphin now living in China's Chang River.

The bizarre forms of animals discovered "was the first indication that we've had some truly exotic beasts here, just in recent time," Barnes said.

THE FOSSILS date to the late Pliocene era of geological history, before the great Ice Age in North America and millions of years before mankind inhabited the continent. The climate was similar to today's, Demere said, although summer rains nourished pine forests covering much of the shore.

"We have elements of both fairly modern marine mammals and some really archaic things," Demere said.

"It's kind of a point in time where the new was taking over the old, which was going extinct."

The sandstone, officially known as the San Diego formation, once comprised the silt bottom of a coastal bay reaching about 10 miles inland. The sediment settled from rivers and streams that drained into the bay.

The sandy muck became the final resting place for dead whales, dolphins and other types of marine life. About three miles inland, scientists found a 120-foot pine tree, about 3 feet in diameter, covered with barnacles.

Occasionally even land animals washed out to sea. A single camel's leg discovered shows serrated teeth marks characteristic of sharks. It probably fell to the bottom while the rest of the animal was devoured, Demere said.

Scavenging by sharks could explain why so few complete skeletons have been found, although Demere said surf and storms also probably broke up carcasses.

Over time, geological forces gradually lifted the hardened sediments out of the ocean, subjecting the sandstone to erosion.

More recently, in the geological wink of an eye, the streets and buildings of Greater San Diego were built over much of the coastal graveyard.

ALTHOUGH SIMILAR deposits have been found near Antwerp, Belgium, and in western Italy, Demere says the San Diego formation is the richest source of late-Pliocene marine animals in North America.

"The rocks of this period in the Los Angeles basin are a thousand feet down," he said. In San Diego, the sandstone is so close to the surface that Demere often inspects roadcuts after rainstorms to see if any new fossils have been exposed.

The whale skeleton displayed at Sea World was discovered while an earth-mover as big as a dinosaur was scraping up about 6 inches of topsoil.

"It was what they call a big 6507E Caterpillar, with a dual engine and wheels that are about 8 feet high," said Brad Riney, a paleontologist hired to monitor the project.

The grader lopped off a piece of the whale's fossilized skull, and Riney said he instantly recognized the features of its ear.

Riney flagged the discovery, and the equipment operator shifted his work to another section of the development. Within a day, paleontologists had excavated and removed blocks of rock containing the 17-foot fossil.

Unlike some tales of desperate scientists vs. hostile developers, however, both sides say the degree of cooperation between the two in this situation has been exemplary.

THE DISCOVERIES have even piqued the interest of heavy-equipment operators, who have helped excavate and transport the fossils, Riney said.

"The developer owns the fossils and we collect and prepare them," Riney said.

Self knowledge key to exercise safety

Associated Press

Knowing your own level of fitness is an important key to the prevention of exercise injury.

"Occasional athletes, who have been sedentary for several months or years, are prime candidates for injury when they exercise," said Dr. Joseph Fetto, associate professor of orthopedics at New York University Medical Center.

The most common form of exercise injury is microscopic breakdown of bone and tearing within the muscles and tendons due to continual impact. Swelling and pain may occur as late as two days after the injury.

While exercise always carries some risk of injury, lacking the proper endurance, strength or flexibility may increase this risk.

Those who are not in good enough shape to jog should consider other, less intense impact exercises such as walking, rowing, or using a cross-country ski machine.

If you have been inactive for a while, start your workout at a level you know you can comfortably maintain for 15 minutes, Fetto suggested. Then, be sure to stretch and "cool down" for at least 15 minutes after the workout.

An important gauge of your physical boundaries is your cardiac status — the health of your heart. If there is any doubt about your cardiac status, a physician should be consulted. The American Society of Sports Medicine suggests that anyone over the age of 40 with a family history of cardiovascular disease should first undergo an exercise test prior to start of an exercise program. The same would apply to anyone who has "risk factors" for premature cardiovascular disease — high chloresterol, diabetes, or is a heavy smoker.

In general during exercise, you should keep your pulse between 60 and 80 percent of your maximal heart rate, Fetto noted. On average, a 30-year-old person is expected to have a maximal heart rate of 190 beats per minute. Therefore, such an individual should maintain a pulse between 115 and 150 beats per minute during the workout. This formula only works, however, if the individual is not on any medication — or has other conditions — that can alter the heart rate response to exercise.

Normal fatigue during a workout often causes a burning sensation in the muscle, but joint pain could be a sign of possible physical damage. Panting and dizziness also are signs that the workout may be too intense.

Another rule of thumb is that your pulse should return to its resting level within three minutes of finishing the workout.

Injury related to exercise tends to be more common in the spring because people who have been sedentary for many years suddenly desire to be active outdoors, Fetto said. These injuries generally heal by themselves within a few days, but the healing period may cause an even greater loss of flexibility, endurance and strength.

"Once you've lost the conditioning effect, you're even more vulnerable to injury, so you should return only gradually to your previous activity level..."

Injuries no obstacle for young dancer's dream

By Kari O'Brien

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — For most, Wichita Falls Ballet Theatre's Spring Gala last April was a night to remember. For 13-year-old Kaycie McKee, it was a night to forget.

A few hundred people sat in Memorial Auditorium enchanted by the delicate fairies, the evil witch and the poignant love scenes. But Kaycie, lost in the theater's darkness, saw the show through a cloud of tears.

She traced each step in her mind as she watched her comrades on stage, rarely missing a cue, never skipping a beat. She knew the program and she knew the music. She had even been promised a solo, before the operation.

Kaycie, who has been an avid ballet fan and performer for the past nine years, lost her shining moment that night to a foot injury that would not only tear her away from the stage for almost five months, but forced her to undergo a painful foot operation.

Only three months have passed since the surgery, but Kaycie said she is determined she will dance again.

IRONICALLY, IT was another health problem that propelled Kaycie onto the stage. Her doctor recommended ballet to cure a hip deformity she acquired at the age of 4.

The prescription worked. In no time, Kaycie's hips were straightened out, but in the process she became very sick — love sick. She fell in love with ballet, an addiction that would lead her to a lifetime of aching feet, long hours and a wonderful joy.

"When I started taking ballet in Wichita Falls, I was so excited. I liked it a lot," Kaycie said. "It was so beautiful to watch and so graceful."

As she rapidly climbed the ladder of success, Kaycie's dreams also took on a new dimension. Where she once envisioned herself someday dancing in the Nutcracker, she is now aiming for the Joeffrey Ballet.

"My dream is to go to the Joeffrey," Kaycie said. "I love ballet. I'm addicted to it."

Kaycie got into the Wichita Falls Ballet Theatre when she was 10. Her teachers are Gari and Patricia Boehm of Boehm Ballet Academy of Dance.

She has danced in the Nutcracker for five years, dancing every role from a snowflake to a doll, including a Russian dancer and a candied rose bud.

"It was really different dancing in the Nutcracker," Kaycie said. "It is the biggest dance we do all year."

UNTIL ABOUT two years ago, Candi McKee, Kaycie's mom, thought her daughter's ballet was just a passing diversion. But when Kaycie quit for three months in the seventh grade, Mrs. McKee realized her daughter's lingering depression proved ballet was more than just a fad.

"After Kaycie quit, I took her to see the Nutcracker. She bawled through the whole thing," Mrs. McKee said.

Kaycie went back to ballet with a new direction. No longer was it just for fun. It was serious. She had her mind set on a permanent career in dance.

"I used to think this was just a hobby. But now she eats, breathes and sleeps ballet," Mrs. McKee said. "I've really seen how dedicated she is since she went back."

'To go to the Joeffrey, that's my goal. Right now I just want to audition for different ballet schools until I get there.'

Unfortunately, Kaycie was set back slightly by her foot injury. She had about six bunions on her feet that had to be removed by surgery.

For a while, however, she ignored the pain and continued to dance, up on point for two to three hours each day.

"I went ahead and danced in the Nutcracker although it was painful. After that my feet were not the same," Kaycie said. "They were more infected and they were cherry red."

She finally had the operation in March. Afterward she endured bandages on both feet and crutches. "I crawled a lot," Kaycie said. "I couldn't put any weight on my feet."

But on March 10, Kaycie went to Dallas in spite of her injured feet and auditioned for New York's School of American Ballet.

She didn't make it, but she said the audition gave her more incentive to "keep trying."

"I knew I probably wouldn't make it, but I was kind of disappointed when I didn't," Kaycie said. "Still I think I made a cut."

KAYCIE SAID she plans to go back to the Wichita Falls Ballet this month. She said she will be "full out" by the time the Nutcracker rolls around again.

She said she will undergo vigorous training when she returns, probably increasing her dancing to about four hours each day five days a week.

She said her parents are very supportive. "She has decided this is what she wants to do for a career, and we are supporting her," Mrs. McKee said. "If that's what she wants and it makes her happy, then I want it for her."

Kaycie has no doubts about her future. "To go to the Joeffrey, that's my goal. Right now I just want to audition for different ballet schools until I get there," she said.

Wildflowers can be dream come true for lazy gardeners

By Martha Sheridan

DALLAS (AP) — If bluebonnet and Indian paintbrush blossoms along Texas roadways have you itching to have wildflowers in your home landscape, there's good news and bad news.

The bad news: Instant wildflower color in your yard will cost you. For example, a 4-inch pot of bluebonnet transplants sells for about $2, compared with a pack of seeds that you could have covered a lot of ground with last fall for about $1.

The good news: There's always next year. And there is a lot you can do right now to have wildflowers coloring your landscape next spring — and keep them coming back year after year.

Whether you want only a modest plot or your own wildflower meadow, making a plan now can keep costs down. And if you're committed to a meadow, spring is the time to plant buffalograss to keep your landscape looking good when the flowers fade.

There's more good news coming out of the National Wildflower Research Center in Austin. Current research about propagating wildflowers and other Texas native plants indicates they will be increasingly economical and successful for home gardeners in the years to come.

But for now, some common sense steps will help bring home the color of Texas wildflowers with a minimum of expense and effort.

First, make note of what you'd like to include in your landscape. The research center lists 42 annuals and perennials recommended for North Central Texas. Of these, center researchers note, 20 are commercially available:

ANNUALS

PERENNIALS

Yarrow (Achillea millefolium), Columbine (Aquilegia canadensis), Butterfly weed (Asclepias tuberosa), Purple coneflower (Echinacea purpurea), Engelmann daisy (Engelmannia pinnatifida), Maximillian sunflower (Helianthus maximiliani), Evening primrose (Oenothera missouriensis), Showy primrose (O. speciosa), Mexican hat (Ratibida columnaris), Mealy blue sage (Salvia farinacea), Cedar sage (S. roemeriana), Wedelia (Wedelia hispida).

Remember to consider the site the flowers will fill in your landscape when making your choices, says Elinor Crank, research horticulturist at the center. Many wildflowers require well-drained soil and lots of sun, such as Indian blanket and the beloved bluebonnet. Others prefer rocky, well-drained sites and part shade, such as the columbine.

If the spring wildflower show along Texas roadways has you dreaming of a wildflower meadow in the back yard, now is the time to start, says Annie Paulson Gillespie, resource botanist at the center. And there's more to be done than ordering wildflower seed for fall planting.

"Sometimes it takes time to prepare the ground," she says. "For a meadow, you want to plant buffalograss seed in spring and interseed with wildflowers in the fall. The wildflowers only bloom for a certain period of time, so you need a cover so that you are not constantly having to weed."

Buffalograss will not form a turf as dense as Bermuda, notes turfgrass specialist Dr. William Knoop in "The Complete Guide to Texas Lawn Care" (TG Press, $12.95). But the lazy-gardener advantage is that if you don't mow, it won't grow to more than 4 or 5 inches tall. "Buffalograss has no particular insect or disease problems. Its biggest enemies are, perhaps, overwatering and overfertilizing," Knoop writes.

BUFFALOGRASS PREFERS clay soil and lots of sun. In winter, the grass turns golden.

Choosing and tending wildflowers, buffalograss and native plants for home landscaping sometimes requires gardeners to change their attitudes, Ms. Crank notes.

"The center started (in 1982) because people were not looking at native species, " she says. Instead, Texas gardeners have traditionally relied on non-natives, such as azaleas, impatiens and assorted garden-center specials.

"So, we're completely manipulating the soil by fertilizing, by bringing in soil amendments. We know how to grow plants, but is all that extra work what we are wanting?"

People tend to resist the fact that many native plants and wildflowers require little to no care. The wildflower planting and care advice from gardening books and research center personnel is music to the lazy gardener's ears:

- Don't enrich the soil with organic material and plant food.
- Don't fertilize after planting
- Do break up hard clay soils by tilling and work the soil slightly, scratching in the seed, to give seedlings a head start.
- Supplemental watering rarely is needed. If there is no rainfall after planting, watering will help in germination and seedling development, notes John Thomas of Wildseed Farms, a wildflower seed producer who grows wildflowers as row crops for seed on a 700-acre farm in Eagle Lake.

"People are resisting the ease of these plants," said Ms. Crank. It doesn't make much sense to grow a low-maintenance wildflower in soils amended to be extra-rich, she says.

"In different soils, their growth habits change. A plant that normally grows to 8 inches may be 3 inches tall in fertile soil. And people need to be aware that a certain plant that normally would not be invasive may do more in fertile soil," Ms. Crank says.

ONE FACT that neophyte native gardeners may find frustrating is a shortage of plants, Ms. Gillespie notes. But acceptance of natives has been growing among nursery growers and managers in the past five years. Now is the time to start asking for these plants, Ms. Gillespie says, and let your supplier know that you are interested in buying natives.

Another stumbling block is that, in some cases, costs may seem prohibitive. For instance, one ounce of Indian paintbrush seed costs $52.50. Compare that to Texas bluebonnet, which costs $1.75 an ounce.

But the Indian paintbrush will be easier to grow and its seed should become more affordable in the future due to research at the National Wildflower Research Center.

The study's preliminary findings show Castilleja indivisa is a parasite, drawing water and possibly nutrients from surrounding plants. In her research, Ms. Crank made two plantings. One involved 100 Indian paintbrush seedlings planted together with 100 Texas bluebonnet seedlings; in the other, Indian paintbrush seedlings were planted alone.

The companion-planted Indian paintbrush averaged 8 inches tall and weighed 8 grams; the others grew to only 3 inches and weighed less than a gram.

Children grow to appreciate healthier foods

By Suzanne Schlosberg
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — If it happened to Paula Moskowitz, maybe, just maybe, it could happen to you: Your kid could ask for an apple.

It happened to Moskowitz at a mall recently, when she offered to buy her son Ethan a chocolate-chip cookie.

"No thanks," Ethan said. "I want an apple."

But not for Ethan.

"I just felt like having an apple," said the Van Nuys second-grader, also an avid broccoli fan. "I like healthy things. I don't like to eat that much junk food."

If that doesn't sound like your kid talking, you're not alone. For many parents, selling kids on healthy foods can be tougher than closing a deal on a house. Green looks good on a lawn — but it's usually not too popular on a dinner plate.

In light of a new federal report, however, local registered dietitians are urging parents to become more shrewd negotiators. The National Cholesterol Education Program issued its first guidelines for children, recommending a low-fat, low-cholesterol diet for everybody 2 years and older.

EXPERTS BELIEVE the diet — rich in fruits and vegetables, low on burgers and fries — has enormous potential for preventing heart disease, the leading cause of death in adults in the United States.

Heart disease won't mean much to a third-grader who considers the distant future to be the next baseball practice. But a detailed explanation isn't necessary, dietitians say. Just explain that healthy eating is important for growth.

"Children are really into the concept of growing," said Paulette Lambert, a Tarzana registered dietitian who counsels overweight children. "That's something important to them at the moment, not heart disease, which is 30 years down the road."

The easiest way to instill good eating habits in children is to start early, said Mary Felando, a registered dietitian at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center. Felando, who teaches cooking classes to heart patients, said most older patients aren't flexible.

"They want to eat just the way they were brought up — large portions of animal foods, small portions of vegetables," Felando said. "They want to saute things in butter and pour on the gravy."

Felando doesn't want her 4-year-old daughter to develop bad habits.

"My daughter has never tasted spaghetti with ground beef," she said. "We make it with turkey or tuna. To her, that's spaghetti."

MOSKOWITZ SAID her son Ethan didn't have any sweets until his first birthday, when he spit out the first bite of cake.

"I didn't raise my kids on sweets," said Moskowitz, who also substitutes ground turkey for hamburger. "In the long run, it has really paid off because they don't have the desire for it. When we go to Carl's Jr., they order their fish sandwiches on wheat bread. They don't know white bread at all."

What if your kids know white bread better than they know their own names? It's not too late for them to make new acquaintances, dietitians say. But parents must set the example.

"You can't expect your kid to eat healthy foods if you have a doughnut for breakfast, nachos for lunch and skip dinner," said Karen Borgie, a registered dietitian at Los Angeles Childrens Hospital. "The parents can't ask the children to do something they themselves aren't able to do."

If they try, kids will become resentful.

"I had a 12-year-old whose mom brought home pastries and wouldn't let the child have any," said Joan Levinthal, a Woodland Hills registered dietitian. "All that did was anger the child."

There's no need to rule out any foods completely, experts say. It's better to emphasize that certain items can be eaten more often than others.

"If you set something up as forbidden, people just want to have it. That's true at any age," Levinthal said.

Lambert agreed: "Desserts aren't necessarily bad, but everything has an amount that's healthy. Children are very agreeable, as long as we're not saying none."

That's fine with Ethan Moskowitz.

"I like to have dessert just once in a while, maybe on Monday and then on Friday," he said.

If children do stray, experts say, it's important not to punish them. "Rather than come down on them, you say, 'Next time, what else could you have instead?'" Levinthal suggested.

One important factor parents can control is the serving size. Many parents don't realize that children's portions should be about half of adult portions.

"I have little girls who eat like their fathers," Lambert said. "You don't give a child at 7 a whole sandwich and a bag of chips and fruit punch."

Parents also can help by making sure their kids eat breakfast.

"If they come home overly hungry, they're more likely to be out of control and eat a lot of high-fat and high-sugar things," Lambert said. "Half the kids I see don't eat breakfast."

Since some kids don't like traditional breakfast foods, Borgie recommends offering a wider variety.

"It could be a peanut butter and jelly sandwich or leftovers they can zap in the microwave," she said.

When 10-year-old Alyssa Hendrie was 8, she wouldn't eat anything but cheese sandwiches.

"We'd go to the store and look up and down the aisles for something she liked," said her father, Chris. "But she just wouldn't eat anything else."

Alyssa became so bored with the sandwiches that she was inspired to write a book about a girl who eats only cheese sandwiches. In the book, the girl goes to a cheese-sandwich factory, which explodes.

"There were so many cheese sandwiches that the sandwiches were blocking the roads, and people couldn't go to school," said Alyssa, who lives in Tujunga. "They invented cheese wipers to wipe the sandwiches off the cars."

When the roads were cleared and kids could go back to school, the girl fed her cheese sandwich to a mouse.

Upon completing the book; Alyssa decided she was ready for something new. Now she buys most of her meals at school.

"I like the pizza and the burritos and the hamburgers," she said. "And I like the corn, except I don't like string beans."

Alyssa's preferences are the same as most students in the Los Angeles Unified School District, said registered dietitian Pam Sase, a senior nutrition specialist with the district.

"Peas, string beans and mixed vegetables have never been popular and still aren't," Sase said. So the district often serves carrot, celery and jicama sticks with dip.

Over the years, Sase said, the school district has offered more raw fruits and vegetables and reduced the amount of fried food. Recently, they offered alternatives to fried chicken, such as barbecued and roasted chicken. Right now, they're experimenting with an unbreaded, unfried fish filet as an alternative to fish sticks.

THE DISTRICT is aiming to follow the new Cholesterol Education Program guidelines, which recommend that fat make up no more than 30 percent of total calories. Currently, the average district lunch contains 641 calories, 33 percent of which comes from fat.

A typical lunch would be a hamburger on a whole-wheat bun, five fried potato rounds, an apple and milk.

"Every year we're trying to gradually change the menus as science advances and we learn what the best diet is," Sase said. "We're making good strides. But you don't want to change over night and have them throw the food away."

One way to get kids more excited about healthy foods is to involve them in grocery shopping and meal preparation, dietitians say.

"Kids are much more willing to eat something they've helped prepare," Borgie of Childrens Hospital said. "Choose a new fruit or vegetable they've never tried before and make a big ceremony about it."

Parents shouldn't push too hard, though. Felando of Cedars-Sinai Medical Center said her daughter wouldn't try asparagus at first. But after she watched Felando and her husband eat the vegetable several times, she decided to try it.

"Now she likes them," Felando said. "But she discovered them herself."

Felando suggests introducing foods three or four times and placing small portions next to familiar items.

Paula Moskowitz said her two sons are "the best eaters in the world," but she could introduce zucchini 100 times and they still would refuse to eat it.

SO MOSKOWITZ hides the zucchini. Not in the refrigerator — in her muffins. She bakes zucchini muffins with cinnamon and raisins and doesn't tell the kids about the zucchini.

"If it comes out of the cupcake tin," Moskowitz said, "they like it."

Substitutes provide nutrition

Dietitians say the best way to interest kids in healthy foods is to provide alternatives. Instead of just saying no, parents should say, "Try this instead." The following suggestions were provided by local dietitians.

- Instead of Twinkies, try muffins with apples, bananas or carrots.
- Instead of potato chips, offer children slices made with half an apple and raisins in the middle.
- Instead of making sandwiches with mayonnaise, use a mixture of 1 or 2 tablespoons plain yogurt, 1 teaspoon mayonnaise and pickle relish, mustard and celery.
- Instead of a bologna sandwich on white bread, fix a sliced turkey sandwich with cranberry spread and lettuce on wheat bread or inside a pita pocket. Or turkey, string cheese and cucumbers in pita.
- Instead of an ice cream sandwich, have a real-fruit popsicle or non-fat frozen yogurt.
- Instead of frozen waffles with syrup, try peanut butter on raisin bread with sliced bananas.
- Instead of french fries for dinner, make oven-fried potato chips. (Thinly slice potatoes, put on a cookie sheet with fat-free cooking spray, sprinkle with onion seasoning or garlic power, bake at 400 degrees for 20 minutes.)
- Insead of creme-filled cookies, have low-fat pudding.

Cookbook offers tips for babies', children's meals

By Joan Cirillo

Her book, "Microwave Cooking for Your Baby & Child: The ABCs of Creating Quick, Nutritious Meals for Little Ones" (Villard Books, $13.95), teaches parents how to use the microwave oven and how to cook healthful but efficiently prepared foods, many suitable for the entire family.

"It's a cookbook but it's also a nutritional resource book," explained Behan in a telephone interview. Behan says she gives readers the same type of diet counseling that she offers families in her work as a nutrition consultant.

"I was like every other mother who is suspicious of the microwave," she says, explaining that the cookbook is an outgrowth of her own experience. Behan, the mother of two children, lives in Rye, N.H.

She said she combed reports on microwave safety to learn that oven microwaves are like radio microwaves that dissipate when food is cooked; that radiation leakage is not a threat if the oven is working properly.

Rather, she says, safety issues center around potential burns and bacterial growth from uneven heating. "The food must get hot enough to kill any of the natural bacteria," she says.

To prevent burns, she recommends what she calls the "clean finger test," inserting a clean finger into the food to be sure it is cool enough for children to eat. To kill bacteria, food should be stirred to distribute the heat and left to rest, which she allows for in her recipes.

Aside from efficiency and easy preparation and cleanup, a big plus in microwave cooking is the retention of nutrients due to the method's moist heat cooking, Behan says. Vitamins and minerals aren't lost in cooking water, and foods retain their colors and flavors due to the rapid cooking. The ability to quickly cook simple items like eggs, apples and other fruit is a big plus for busy parents, she says.

It was Behan's own experience as a first-time microwave user that led her to write her book. When her daughter Sarah, who is now 4 years of age, was 6 months old, Behan went looking for books on microwave cooking for babies — and found none.

She began to teach herself how to use the microwave and to keep a notebook of baby food recipes she developed. One and one-half years later, she found a publisher for her book — and gave birth to daughter Emily, now 2 years old.

"It was just one of those things that fell right in my life," says Behan about writing the book. She laughs when she recalls all the "little pots of food" that she would prepare and test out on her baby, toddler and husband.

As a result, Behan has come up with a wide range of recipes, skillfully combining her knowledge as a dietitian and cook. She devotes the first 63 pages of her book to basics: microwave safety, nutrition, pesticides in food, how and when to introduce babies to certain foods, and finger foods.

Included are several charts, such as an infant and toddler feeding guide that outlines basic requirements from the various food groups, when they should be introduced and how much should be given.

Book is how-to manual for parties

By Carol Deegan

The 144-page cookbook, illustrated with 60 full-color photographs, is divided into three sections: Life's Special Celebrations, Birthday Celebrations and Holiday Celebrations.

Each of the three main sections features eight to 10 theme parties, including menus, recipes and preparation timetables, plus suggestions for invitations, party favors and activities.

In the introduction to the Birthday Celebrations section, the Pillsbury editors tell readers: "Lively youngsters require adequate supervision, games suited to their age and skills, endurance levels and attention spans plus a menu featuring familiar and easily handled foods."

The Life's Special Celebrations section includes a Wedding Anniversary Seafood Dinner, Housewarming Tapas Buffet and Hearts and Flowers Wedding Reception. The Holiday Celebrations section includes a Labor Day "From-the-Garden" Get-Together, Thanksgiving "No-Time-to-Cook" Turkey Dinner and Hanukkah Supper.

Evening Shade, Ark., exists. It even exists twice.

The title was picked for a CBS-TV situation comedy because, as show creator and producer Linda Bloodworth-Thomason puts it, Evening Shade "has a wonderful sound when you say it."

There is an Evening Shade in Sharp County and another in Hempstead County, both in Arkansas.

The one in Sharp County, where film crews made location shots last year, has been enjoying an increase in tourism since the show began, according to the Ozark Gateway Tourist Council. It is even smaller than its television counterpart, with 400 residents, one bank, one downtown grocery store and a school with no football program. It's the smallest town in the state to have an official historic district — characterized by Victorian houses of the town's 19th century heyday as a booming lumber center.

Fayon Graddy, who runs the grocery store, says visitors come from all around the country. "Most are curious and want to see what the real Evening Shade is like," she says.

Weaving, pottery making, handmade furniture and other crafts common to the Appalachian people of the mountains of North Carolina have gained respect and legitimacy among art connoisseurs, and Asheville is one of the central places to find them.

The Southern Highland Handicraft Guild is here, as are a growing number of individual artists who create and show their work. There are dozens of craft galleries throughout Asheville and surrounding cities like Hendersonville, Saluda, Dillsboro, N.C., and Tallulah Falls and Clayton, Ga.

Quilting, that quintessential American craft, is one of the main attractions at Kalona, Iowa, an Amish settlement which hosts the Kalona Quilt Show and Sale. Americana plays big in Iowa, from historic restored villages like Amana, antique railroads that still ply Lewis and Clark territory, and paddlewheelers on the Mississippi. Some of the 800 historical sites, 1,000 landmarks and rail and river rides are included in Iowa's new visitors' guide. You want some outdoor hiking in mountain scenery around Glacier National Park but perhaps you're not quite in shape for a gung-ho experience? Try the Danny On Trail near Whitefish, Mont., an all-downhill path that starts with a ski-lift ride to the top of the 7,000-foot Big Mountain. The winding 3½-mile trail down goes through alpine and sub-alpine vegetation, including tall white beargrass, Indian paintbrush, penstemone, arnica, cedar, fir, hemlock, larch, mushrooms, and service berries. If you go in late August, you may have a chance to fill a bucket or two with huckleberries. The trail is a memorial to the late wildlife photographer, Danny On.

Just where the Glacier National Park begins, the Flathead Valley, an old west survivor, caters to tourists who want to capture a bit of cowboy life. The touring center for the valley is at Kalispell, which is celebrating its centennial this summer with western-style doings like the Northwest Montana Rendezvous and Cattle Drive, July 21-27. Participants will go on a 40-mile, four-day cattle drive and wagon train trip along the western side of Black Tail Mountain, over Wild Bill Ridge and along Smith Lake. Or you can stay in town at a guest ranch, go horseback riding, visit Moose's Saloon, and, on a Saturday night, witness a mouse race in the Palace Bar. (You can bet on your favorite mouse, too, because small-bet gambling is legal.) The Flathead Convention and Visitors Association, at 1 (800) 534-3105, has more information for both Whitefish and Flathead.

Mono County offers fun-filled weekend but leaves full wallet

By Karin Dominello
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Something fishy is going on in Mono County. Locals want tourists to pack up their families and drive up for a fun-filled weekend but leave their wallets at home.

Camping is free in Toiyabe National Forest, fishing is free, and so is the Eastern Sierra scenery and clean air. In these recessionary times, it's a deal too good to pass up.

Mono County is sponsoring a county-wide Fishing Festival Friday, Saturday and June 9 to coincide with National Fishing Week. County officials are trying to attract the first-time angler, who might find the thrill of hooking that first fish so enticing, he or she will want to return — this time with a full wallet.

The festival is slated to take place in four locations throughout the county — Walker, Bridgeport, June Lake and Mammoth Lakes. Each of these communities will sponsor their own schedule of events, but all are planning workshops, fishing ponds for beginners, demonstrations, movies and a Saturday night outdoor fish-fry.

On Saturday fishing fans can fish without a license. T-shirts are offered at all the fishing ponds, so children and first-time anglers can get a photograph of their first fish on a T-shirt that says, "I caught my first fish in Mono County."

Then if you really want to reel in the fun, "Magical Moonshine," a professional puppet company, will perform "Br'er Rabbit Goes Fishing" and other stories for kids and their parents at various times and locations.

For a schedule of events and more information, call the Mono County Arts Council at (619) 934-3342.

Eastern Germany now option for travelers

By Deborah Seward

POTSDAM, Germany (AP) - The menu is in German, but the accent is English at Cecilienhof, the elegant castle where the World War II allies negotiated the postwar order in the summer of 1945.

Cecilienhof and its lovely gardens were off limits for most western visitors during the four decades that followed the creation of communist East Germany in 1949.

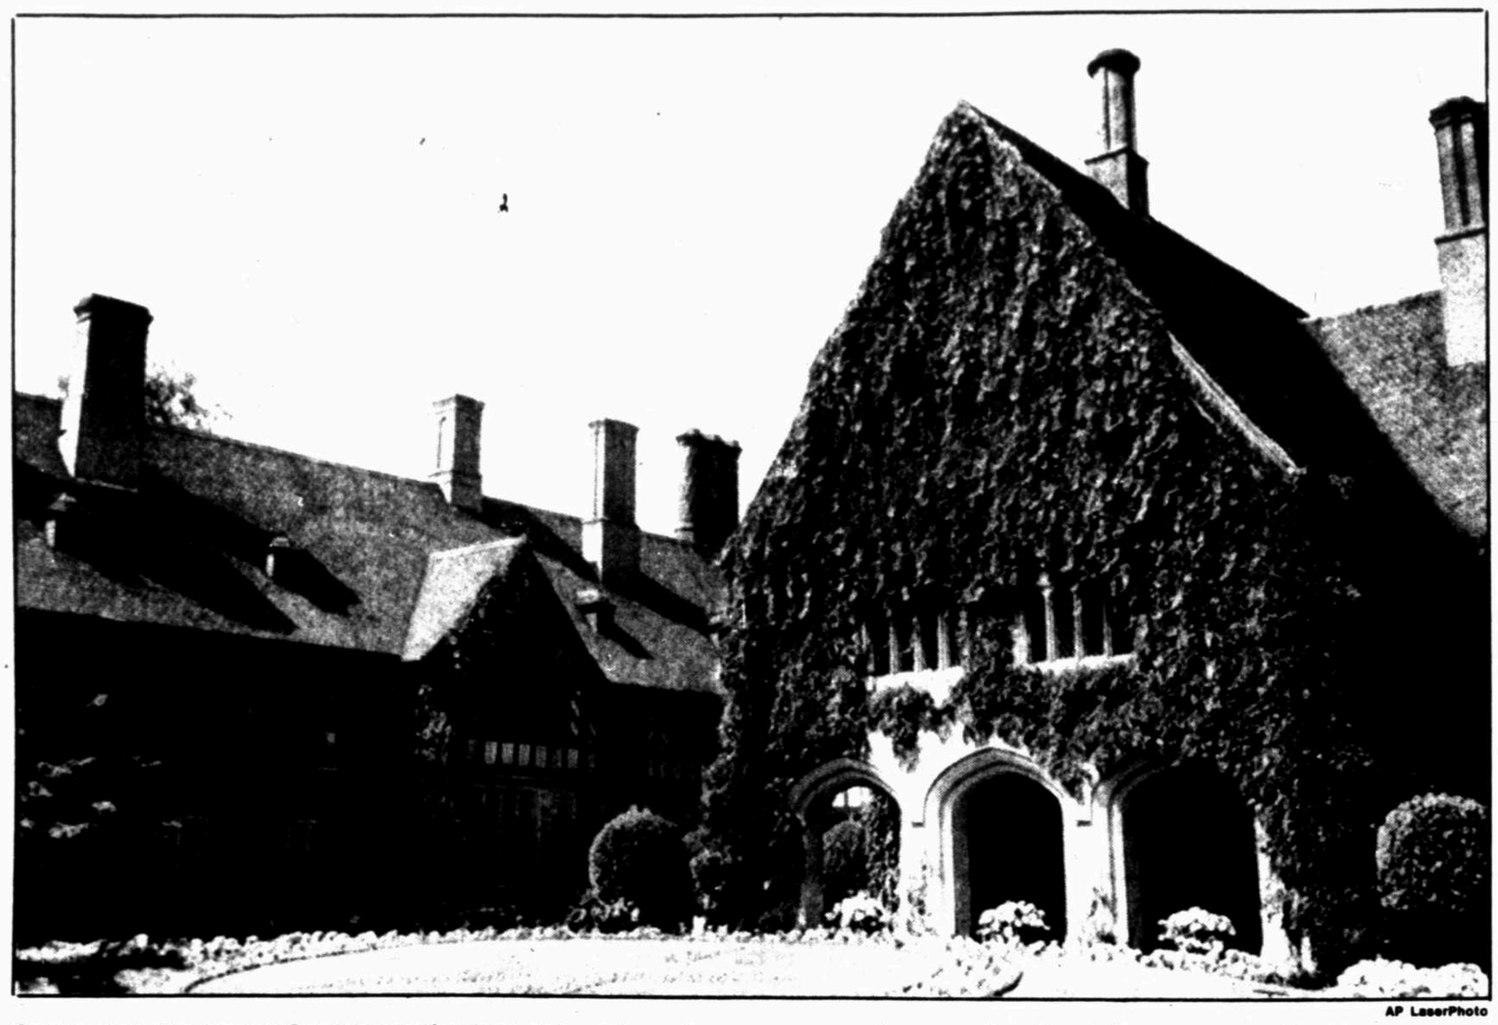
The unification of Germany on Oct. 3 returned Cecilienhof and many other tourist spots in eastern Germany long caught behind the Iron Curtain to western tourist routes.

"1991 will be a great travel year for Germany," said Volkmar Mair, chairman of Baedekers, Germany's most famous tour guide publishing company.

Cecilienhof is a perfect place for Americans to visit now that some of the traditional attractions in Berlin such as Checkpoint Charlie and the Berlin Wall have become part of history.

The castle, built from 1913-1917 for the Kaiser's family in the style of an English country house, overlooks a lake amid a gentle wood 18 miles from the center of Berlin.

The historic room where Harry Truman, Soviet dictator Josef Stalin and England's Winston Churchill negotiated the Potsdam Agreement on allied responsibilities in postwar Germany is now a museum.



AP LaserPhoto

Cecilienhof, the former German royal palace at Postdam where President Harry S. Truman, Prime Minister Winston Churchill and Premier Josef Stalin negotiated the 1945 post-World War II agreement, now caters to visitors as a combination museum, restaurant and hotel.

ANOTHER PART OF the sprawling wooden-and-stone castle has been converted into a hotel with rooms ranging from $90 for a single to the opulent Ceciliensuite at $620 a night.

The restaurant offers diners a view of the gardens, and the menu features three-course meals with German specialties and Rhine wines.

Visitors may find the area surrounding the castle exotic.

Big concrete panels of the Berlin Wall still border the grounds, and outside the gates it is common to see Soviet soldiers in uniform riding in military trucks around the city of Potsdam.

It used to be very hard for individual tourists to travel in East Germany where the communist government encouraged group travel.

Now Avis and Hertz have opened car rental offices throughout eastern Germany, making it easy to travel around the region that is the size of the state of Tennessee.

The Reichsbahn, eastern Germany's rail system, is also a bargain with ticket prices below those on the Bundesbahn, the western German train system.

From Potsdam it is just a short 55-mile drive to Wittenberg, where Martin Luther launched the revolution that split the Roman Catholic Church.

WITTENBERG HAS KEPT much of its old world charm, and like much of eastern Germany, its prices have yet to reach those in wealthy western Germany, making it a bargain for American visitors.

Some residents have opened up an extra room in their homes for tourists with prices far below those in hotels and comfort that often rivals commercial accomodation.

But Torgau also became famous as the spot where Soviet and American soldiers linked up, closing the allied fronts on April 25, 1945, just two weeks before the end of the war.

Known as the Florence on the Elbe, the city's reputation rests on the Baroque buildings built during the Renaissance and the later the 19th century Semper Opera.

Allied bombers delivered some of their most destructive payloads on Dresden throughout the night of Feb. 13, 1945. British and American planes devastated much of the city.

At least 35,000 people are believed to have died in the inferno, but the actual death toll has never been officially established, and some estimates put the number several times higher.

SIXTY MILES TO the west is Goethe's adopted town of Weimar, and just outside the city the remains of the Buchenwald concentration camp where some 56,000 people died.

Photographs made by Margaret Bourke-White at the camp of skeletal survivors brought home the horror of Nazi terror and remain powerful documents of the destruction of human lives.

The German Tourist Board will provide brochures and maps in English for visitors.

According to the German Tourist Board, nearly 95 per cent of the 1.2 million visitors to former East Germany in 1990 were Europeans, with the rest coming from other countries, including the U.S.

'Thru-hike' of Appalachian Trail requires preparation

JUNO, Ga. (AP) — A "thru-hike" of the Appalachian Trail, 2,150 miles from Georgia's Springer Mountain to Maine's Mount Katahdin requires physical, mental and financial preparation.

"You're going to have blisters. Even the best training doesn't prepare the feet for the pounding they are going to take on a long distance hike," says Daniel "Wingfoot" Bruce. "You've got to learn to treat them and bear the pain until they callus over."

Wingfoot, his trail name, is on his sixth hike up the trail.

His five previous trips included the Golden Anniversary Expedition in 1987.

"An even bigger problem is the bottoms of the feet get very, very bruised and sore," he says. "One thing a lot of hikers cannot adjust to is aching feet. A lot of the people who try to hike the whole trail and quit do it because they can't stand the pain in their feet."

A trip takes four to five months. Planning includes selecting gear and mailing food and supplies to post offices along the route.

"The cost of doing the Appalachian Trail can go as much as $5,000," says Steve Elkinton of the National Park Service. "It's not something you can do on a shoestring."

The trail takes hikers through parts of 14 states. They climb more than 400 mountains, and have to ford a river at the end to get to that last climb up Mount Katahdin. Most people start north in April and follow the spring north.

Wingfoot, a structural engineer from Conyers, Ga., has written "The Thru-hiker's Guide to the Appalachian Trail" for the Appalachian Trail Conference, based in Harpers Ferry, W.Va., which oversees maintenance of the trail.

Of those who start, "very few will finish. Most will fail because of a lack of will, not physical problems," Wingfoot says.

Brian King of the Appalachian Trail Conference said 1,200 to 1,500 people a year start the hike, and perhaps 160 make it.

The trail starts north like a roller coaster, up and down Georgia's 1,000-foot mountains, then into the higher ridges of North Carolina.

The worst stretch is 200 miles in Pennsylvania where the route is rocky and dangerous. At High Point, N.J., a few miles before the trail crosses the Hudson River at Bear Mountain Bridge, hikers can see the lights of New York City.

N.Y. Times News Service

They aren't saying why, but Yosemite National Park has an unexpected supply of tent cabins at Curry Village available on midweek nights this summer.

"It's unusual for so many tent cabins to still be available this late, said John Poimiroo, spokesman for the park.

Tent cabins are canvas-walled cabins with raised wooden floors, beds, maid service and central bath facilities. They sleep from two to five people. Tent cabins are $30 per night, double occupancy, $4 for an additional adult and $2 for an additional child.

Yosemite reservations can be made by calling (209) 252-4848 or through a travel agent.

Last year, 164 children needed the protection of foster homes and foster families...the kind of protection that you possibly could provide.

Becoming a foster family means you can help some very special young people through a crisis in their lives.

Tourists discover secret beauties of Warsaw

By Michael Lindemann

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Persuading bankers that people enjoy watching bisons and some of Europe's rarest birds is not easy anywhere. In Poland it's practically impossible.

Maciej Zimowski, a 24-year-old who is setting up Poland's first-ever wildlife tour service, wanted to sell one of Poland's best-kept secrets, but no Polish bank would give him the $5,000 he needed to do it.

The secrets include the Bialowieza Forest, the remains of the vast primeval forest which once covered most of northern Europe, and the Biebrza marshes, the biggest inland waterway in Europe, both offering a glimpse of the rich wildlife for which Poland has long been renowned.

Zimowski's company, Bird Service, (ul. Wyszynskiego 4B/84, 15-888 Bialystok tel: 885-21136) located in Bialystok near the Soviet border, has now been saved by Klaus Hermann, a young German consultant working at the privatization ministry in Warsaw.

Hermann got so hooked on the idea that he offered to put up his own capital to make the venture work.

Now the Bird Service schedules canoe trips through the marshlands and the unspoiled riverways of northeastern Poland as well as specializing in tailor-made trips for bird-watching enthusiasts.

ZIMOWSKI'S PROBLEMS crystallize the difficulties of tourism in Poland. Under the former communist system, few entrepreneurs ever dreamt of providing specialty tourist services.

But the economic stagnation visited on the Polish countryside by the old system has, ironically, preserved a natural beauty and vitality which is often hard to find in western Europe.

The country houses and palaces which dotted the plains of central Poland have been combined with another of Poland's age old traditions: horsemanship.

Weeklong tours of the landed seats of the Mazowsze area around Warsaw, home to Poland's flamboyant aristocracy, are organized by a Warsaw-based company, Starbright (48 47 03).

Riders visit the birthplace of Chopin, Poland's greatest composer, and the remains of an untold fortune in country houses, some still being carefully restored, as they wind their way through country lanes and tree-lined avenues.

Besides the rolling Polish countryside of wheat fields punctuated with horse-drawn carts and ploughs, there are Poland's more familiar sights which have long drawn tourists.

Krakow, the old royal capital of Poland and the only major city not destroyed during World War II, is a must for tourists. Wawel Castle, the Collegium Maius — heart of the fourteenth century university — and the town square trumpeter who has been sounding the hours since the Tatar invasions of 1241 are some of Poland's most priceless treasures.

AP LaserPhoto

The Market Square in Warsaw's Old Town is hardly crowded by western standards, but it's gradually being rediscovered by tourists in the post-communist era.

IRONICALLY THE courtyards and back streets of Krakow's Old Town — recognized by UNESCO as world heritage — have retained much of the renaissance atmosphere which over-eager restoration has destroyed in so many other European cities.

Gdansk, cradle of the Solidarity trade union, boasts a beautiful Old Town which testifies to its history as one of Europe's richest maritime cities.

The Polish state tourist agency ORBIS — which itself may be going private soon — offers a variety of packaged tours that include Krakow, Gdansk and other historic centers. Trips can be booked in New York at (212) 391-0844.

Just east of Gdansk, across the Vistula estuary, lies Mazuria, the Land of a Thousand Lakes. Rolling hills and pine forests, interspersed with a myriad of lakes, have long made this the favorite holiday destination for Poles.

As private enterprise once again becomes acceptable, much is being done to improve facilities for tourists.

Traveling the more remote Polish side roads to discover the countryside was sometimes difficult because gas stations were hard to find and often closed.

Small country hotels and boarding houses were also difficult to come by.

Now gas stations are more frequent, and even lead-free is available at many stations nationwide. Boarding rooms can be found in many villages and most larger towns have a central register with details (in Warsaw, the address is ul. Krucza 17).

CAMPING ALSO IS easy and simply involves asking permission locally.

Official currency exchange is no longer obligatory. Dollars and all major European currencies are best changed at shops or offices with a "Kantor" sign. It is not illegal to change on the street, but beware of being cheated.

All the major car rental agencies — Hertz, Avis and Budget among others — have offices in the principal cities, although it is recommended that arrangements be made before arriving in Poland.

Tourists wanting to see more of eastern Europe can now also rent a car in Warsaw and drop it off in any one of the other capitals.

History, beauty blend in classic English vista

By George L. Rosenblatt
Hearst News Service

YORK, England — The woods and meadows of the Yorkshire Dales undulate gracefully, providing a home for aesthetic treasures.

An especially fine example of such treasures is the Studley Royal estate, including the ruins of the Fountains Abbey. They stand near Ripon, perhaps an hour's drive northwest of here. And they offer a superb venue to stroll through the rich blend of history and beauty of the English countryside.

The abbey and the adjacent estate are administered under Britain's protective National Trust. What you see is the ruins of the ancient abbey, plus the gardens of the estate that eventually grew to encompass it.

Nature, of course, laid a wonderful foundation in the form of the tiny River Skell, trickling its way along the floor of the tiny valley.

The human factor started nearly a millennium ago, when Cistercian monks were at odds with the prevailing Benedictine order in York. The Cistercians sought a more Spartan lifestyle in line with their approach to serving God. Skelldale, as the valley is called, offered a site that, at the time, was remote and challenging.

Established in the early 1100s, the abbey grew for 400 years, until King Henry VIII had his marital spat with the Vatican. He dissolved English monasteries and started selling them.

Thus began the Fountains Abbey's journey into secular ownership.

In 1699, ownership was bequeathed to John Aislabie. Aislabie, writes Lydia Greeves in a National Trust document, decided "to invest in forestry and land improvement, and to make a garden in the wildest part of the park, based on the wooded valley of the River Skell."

A complicated scandal called the "South Sea Bubble" ruined his political career. Fortunately for posterity, Aislabie vented his misery by working on the landscaping.

Aislabie died in 1742 but his son, William, carried on. In fact, it was William who bought the abbey next door, and factored the ruins into the overall project.

"Between them," writes Greeves, "these two gifted amateurs created what is arguably the most important 18th century water garden in England."

Technical reasons may underlie the garden's importance. But an unusual balance of intensity and serenity pillar the extraordinary beauty of Fountains Abbey/Studley Royal.

What invariably grips the eye and the consciousness is the soaring magnitude of the ruins, with the sprawling magnitude of the gardens.

The tiny Skell, injected as a focal point, works like a tranquilizer. Indeed, it invites leisurely strolling alongside the calm flow of the Skell's cool water and a small fleet of ducks.

When you go: Contact the British Tourist Authority, 40 W. 57th St., New York, N.Y. 10019; phone (212) 581-4700.

Midland Travel Agency AT YOUR LEISURE

By Sue Snelson

As I've related in several of these columns, the big news in the past year (related to the travel business, of course) is the free-market changes occuring in the family of Eastern European countries. Previously we referred to these nations as Communist, or the Communist Bloc. These are no longer appropriate references, as those countries are moving (with varied amounts of success in each case) toward capitalism, free markets, and open economies.

Poland, Romania, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, Albania and what was formerly East Germany are the nations at the forefront of this capitalist revolution. After the collapse of the Berlin Wall, Lech Walesa's election as Polish president, and other political changes, questions still remain: how are these countries and their people managing the transition? What effect is this having on my intention to travel there? And more importantly, are the people embracing these changes?

I recently returned from Poland & Hungary after conducting a series of seminars on establishing free-market business. I was one of nine people selected from Texas to do these seminars, and naturally mine was on the value of establishing high-quality guest & tourist services in their respective countries.

So much is happening there! Hungary is by far the farthest along the road to capitalism. The shops, markets, and the storefront windows are full of food & clothing. The telephone system is one of the most modern--a phone call to the U.S. takes only 20 minutes. The people are happy & well-dressed. And many goods are still priced at rates similar to the previously government-subsidized levels. So it's a real bargain and a real treat for the American tourist.

Poland's having a more difficult time. Because there is no direct access to the West, transition is slower. But there is a vibrancy, an aliveness that wasn't there the last time I visited. I spent time in Warsaw and Torun, a small college town famous for being the home of Copernicus, the 15th century astronomer. The country's changing rapidly-new hotels & restaurants springing up all over. Markets are somewhat bare, communications are slow but the "Old World" charm is still there. NOW's the time to plan a visit to see the old & new Poland.

Let us help you plan a visit to these developing capitalist countries this summer. Call Midland Travel, 684-7428.

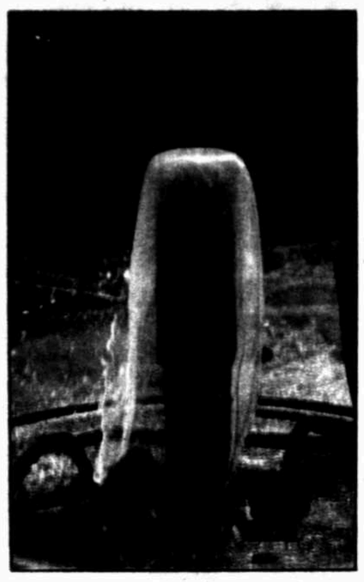
BRIEFING



Crude prices lose ground

Oil prices remained down this week because of large inventories and no surprises at the OPEC Vienna meeting. The futures market lost 80 cents on the week, while the posted price lost $1.00 over the week.

Fuels subsidy?

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Federal officials say it's unlikely federal funds will be used to subsidize any programs that encourage the use of alternative fuels, such as natural gas.

"It's a question of values," Steve Plotkin, senior analyst for the U.S. Congress' Office of Technology, said Wednesday at the Continental Conference on Natural Gas Vehicles. "The Canadians have put a lot of money into the program.

"That's not likely to be forthcoming from the federal and state governments because it's not there."

The conference, which ends today, was sponsored by the Canadian government, the U.S. Energy Department, the state of Oklahoma and the University of Oklahoma.

The university is hosting the conference, which involves discussions about technology, policies and regulatory issues concerning alternative fuels, particularly natural gas, said Barten Groten, executive director of the Sarkeys Energy Center.

Basin takes whack on rigs

The national rig count dropped 22 last week with Texas and the Permian Basin accounting for most of the loss. Texas dropped 17 rigs, while the Basin accounted for nearly half the national loss, dropping 11 rigs to 92.

OIL TRENDS

Industry shrinking

Staff Report

Now heavily dependent on foreign oil, the U.S. oil industry has slipped in stature, since the days when America ruled the petroleum world, and rural service stations like the Texaco station pictured here, staked out every crossroad across the nation, says a survey by the American Petroleum Institute.

According to API, between 1981 and 1989, some 134 refineries in the U.S. with a capacity of 2,493,988 barrels per day were shut down. Nearly half of the closings were in Texas and Louisiana. The largest refinery closed was the Dow Chemical Co. refinery at Freeport, Texas, with a capacity of 190,000 barrels daily.

While news of the survey comes on the heels of latest API reports which shows U.S. production increasing and oil imports increasing, the U.S. is still nearly 50 percent dependent on foeign oil.

Monitor to curb abuses

■ A computer monitor will keep close eye on saltwater disposal operations.

By John Paul Pitts
Business / Oil Editor

ODESSA — A computerized saltwater disposal monitor manufactured by an Odessa firm is expected to bring closer surveillance of disposal operations in the Permian Basin.

The monitor manufactured by Automated Well Control Systems Inc. of Odessa, is also expected to bring higher profits to disposal operators by putting an end to abuses associated with the business. The system is designed to:

- end the dumping of mud and bs into the sytem,
- stop unauthorized access,
- eliminate costly overflows and cleanups,
- do away with the need for 24-hour attendants,
- count loads or barrels disposed,
- list time and dates tanks were almost full,
- validate or invalidate any account or driver,

Brian Adamcik / Reporter-Telegram

Ken Cook poses with the disposal monitor his firm has introduced.

- control fresh and brine water sales,
- show time and date of bad product attempts.

"It is a substantial improvement over the old key control access, because all one has to do is enter a pre-assigned, three-digit company access code, a two-digit driver access code and the rest is automatic," said Ken Cook, president of Automated Well Control Systems. The system will then accommodate up to 999 accounts and 99 drivers per account.

Cook said the first unit was installed this week on the Bar-Bell Saltwater Disposal facility near Rankin and is performing as expected. He said the system is also designed to monitor saltwater and freshwater sales.

He noted that the system could save disposal wells great harm, because it would be able to detect who is dumping what product, product viscosity and the time. "Drilling mud, bs&w, drilling mud, lost circulation materials and even cement have often been dumped down disposal wells, messing them up in a hurry," said Cook.

Also, the tattle tale system will record who is dumping at the time of an overflow, and should put an end to costly overflows and please the Texas Water Commission, says Cook.

Technology heads SPE conference

■ Trends, training, systems among topics for Dallas meet.

Staff Report

The Society of Petroleum Engineers will hold a Petroleum Computer Conference and exhibition June 17-20 at the Dallas Loews Anatole Hotel.

This year's conference features a seven-session, 34-paper technical program and an exhibition of more than 40 manufacturers and service companies.

The conference gets underway Monday with registration and "Technology Preview" seminars where selected exhibiting companies make 10-minute presentations on computer programs and systems.

Tuesday, technical sessions will include "Systems Development & Integration" and "Operations." The keynote speaker at the welcoming luncheon will be Bruno Karcher, director of operations at Petrochemical Open Software Corp. in Houston. He will speak on "Opening the Way to the Future."

Wednesday, technical sessions include "Trends" and "Artificial Intelligence and Expert Systems." The keynote speaker at Wednesday's welcoming luncheon is Barry Coon of Conoco Inc., who will cover emerging trends in exploration technology. The day will conclude with a panel discussion on "Education and Non-Traditional Training for Petroleum Engineering."

The conference concludes Thursday with a continental breakfast and the technical sessions "Reservoir Engineering" and "Drilling Engineering." The exhibits will be open all four days.

Drilling waste big concern for drillers

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

The growing concern about the environment is causing increased concern among U.S. drilling companies.

Certainly, most individuals who work on drilling rigs are concerned about the environment. But what is also causing concern is the growing risk of financial and legal responsibility for waste generated by drilling activity.

That's why Grace Drilling Co. just sponsored a seminar on managing drill site waste, attended by representatives of a number of drilling and production companies.

It was presented by Grace's manager of environmental compliance, Jeff Haffner of Dallas.

Haffner

"Environmental laws require a higher standard of care," Haffner noted. "People who disposed of waste legally 20 years ago are now bankrupt or paying very high litigation costs."

The Society of Petroleum Engineers and the International Association of Drilling Contractors have both made efforts to keep their members abreast of federal and state laws regarding the environment and drill site waste, including publishing several papers on the subject. A recent paper covered seven of the more significant laws.

Oily gloves may haunt drilling contractors

By John Paul Pitts
Business / Oil Editor

One does grow weary writing about environmental overkill, but like a persistent nightmare, it seems to keep coming back.

Pitts

The latest nightmare involves drilling location waste, namely drilling mud sacks, oily rags, dope buckets and engine oil filters.

Simply put, a load of trash containing partially emptied mud sacks, one oily rag or a pair of oily gloves will be turned away from public landfills under strict new guidelines from the Texas Health Department.

Members of the oil industry have called the guidelines outrageous. "If you were to take all the oily gloves in West Texas and put them in a pile, you wouldn't have enough oil to change the oil in a truck. This is ridiculous," said one oilfield technician.

Said Harry Spannaus, executive vice president Permian Basin Petroleum Association: "This is just another example of environmental overkill that the industry is having to contend with."

The Texas Department of Health says that since oilfield trash haulers have been turned away from landfills, the phone has been ringing off the wall from drilling contractors, refuse haulers and oil industry spokesmen.

There appears to be some confusion as to who is responsible for the latest round of overkill. The Texas Health Department regulates landfills, but the Texas Railroad Commission regulates all refuse, other than office paper waste, generated at drilling and production locations.

While the edict to close landfills to typical drilling refuse comes from the Texas Health Department, that agency says it is only reflecting intensified environmental concerns at the Texas Railroad Commission, which has indicated a desire to more closely control this waste it regulates.

A Railroad Commission spokesman, however, says the crack down did not originate with that agency. "To my knowledge TRC rules have not changed and TRC made no request for a crack down," said Brian Schaible, a spokesman for TRC.

Schaible said it was agreed at a meeting this week between Texas Health Department and Texas Railroad Commission members that TRC would provide operators with a new list of guidelines that would help them satisfy THD requirements on the dumping of oilfield trash. "These are not Railroad Commission requirements, but we are just trying to inform operators and contractors about THD requirements."

He said that the crackdown on drilling site waste was being driven purely by Texas Health Department regulations, which in turn were picked up from the Environmental Protection Agency guidelines.

Mike Edmiston, a local representative of the Texas Health Department Office of Solid Waste Management says oilfield disposal companies may be able to dump drill site refuse if they secure the proper

Last of Tyler County oil industry leaves

SISTERSVILLE, W.Va. (AP) — The last remnant of the Tyler County oil industry is moving to Dallas, officials said.

Wiser Oil Co. will transfer gradually over the next 6 months, said John Wright, company president and chief executive officer.

Employees will be offered the chance to move to Texas and keep their jobs, he said.

Wiser Oil, which has 18 employees, opened its offices in Sistersville in 1907. Most of its operations now are in the Southwest, Wright said.

"This is the end of an era," he said.

Harken hunting elephant field in Persian Gulf

N.Y. Times News Service

DALLAS — Harken Energy Corp., which has operations in the Permian Basin, is a little Texas oil company dreaming of striking it big — very big — in the Middle East.

In oilpatch parlance, Harken is hunting for an "elephant" — a giant oilfield potentially holding a billion or more barrels of crude.

If Harken finds black gold in the tiny Persian Gulf nation of Bahrain, those enriched by the discovery would make up a surprisingly prominent cast.

They include the billionaire Bass family of Fort Worth, Texas, Harvard University and George W. Bush, son of the president and managing general partner of the Texas Rangers baseball team.

Bush became a major stockholder in Harken Energy when he merged his Midland-based Spectrum 7 oil company into Harken in the late eighties.

Analysts say a giant discovery would be a "company-maker" for Harken, a find that could boost its value tenfold or more virtually overnight.

As an obscure exploration company with no previous international drilling experience, Harken was extremely lucky even to get the chance to search for oil in a region surrounded by some of the world's largest petroleum deposits.

Now, the company is counting on its technical skills — and a continued run of luck — as it prepares to drill a series of wells in the Arab emirate of Bahrain, a group of islands just east of Saudi Arabia.

Under an agreement reached with Banoco, the national oil company of Bahrain, Harken plans to begin drilling its first well by Oct. 1 on the Jarim Reef, 25 miles north of the island of Bahrain.

The well will be a wildcat, drilled in a spot with no known oil or gas deposits. But within 50 miles are some of the world's largest petroleum fields, including the Ghawar field of Saudi Arabia, the world's largest, with recoverable reserves of 82 billion barrels of oil and 33 trillion cubic feet of natural gas.

Harken executive vice president Monte Swetnam is excited about looking for oil in a region where such copious quantities already have been found.

Dallas oilman Frank West, a member of Harken's exploration advisory board, calls the company's initial Bahrain drill site "a Class A wildcat, one that almost anyone would drill if they had the money. ... It's a real prize."

But Mikel Faulkner, Harken's chief executive officer, is quick to emphasize that the 90-employee, Grand Prairie-based company is drilling a wildcat well — and that is, by its very nature, a highly risky, unpredictable crap shoot.

Indeed, Houston oil analyst Chuck Strain speculates that Harken's common stock could skyrocket to 10 to 15 times its current price if the company were to discover a giant field of, say, 2 billion barrels.

Kuwait rebirth continues with U.S. companies

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — The cost of rebuilding post-war Kuwait may be $40 billion less than first estimated, according to U.S. consultants working for the Persian Gulf emirate.

Original estimates put the reconstruction of Kuwait at about $100 billion, but Saba on Tuesday said that estimate is being downgraded. About $20 billion would restore private structures and another $20-40 billion would rebuild public structures.

The physical destruction in Kuwait "is not like Dresden," say sources, referring to the German city leveled by Allied bombing near the end of World War II. On the other hand, while there's not a lot of structural damage to public buildings and homes, all have been ransacked and looted, he said.

The big question mark, in terms of expense, remains the burning oil wells. The Kuwaiti government apparently is willing to listen to new ideas for fighting those fires, even though several Texas companies, like Red Adair and Boots & Coots, working under the direction of O'Brien, Goin & Simpson of Midland have been relatively successful in extinguishing the fires.

Environmental damage resulting from the well fires and oil spills in the Persian Gulf has heightened awareness of many environmental issues in the region, and has resulted in new business opportunities.

Officials say the Kuwaitis and other Arab business interests are going to be looking for American companies interested in joint ventures rather than quick-money contracts, he said.

Goodwill toward their liberators was responsible for the United States getting about 70 percent of the first-phase contracts.

Phillips mulls refinery sale

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (AP) — Phillips 66 Co. said today it is considering the sale of its refinery in Utah if the company gets a good offer.

The Woods Cross refinery, located 10 miles north of Salt Lake City, has a processing capacity of 25,000 barrels of crude oil per day, which is 8 percent of the company's domestic refining capacity.

Phillips' two other domestic refineries are in Texas. The Woods Cross refinery serves Phillips' marketing operations in Utah, Idaho, Wyoming, Nevada and Oregon.

"A number of parties have expressed an interest in purchasing our Salt Lake City area business," said Charles Bowerman, vice president for petroleum products.

"We feel an appropriate response is to attempt to determine a true market value for the business, which is a profitable business with good growth potential," he said.

Other assets associated with the refinery include the Woods Cross truck loading racking, two product terminals in Idado of which Phillips owns 50 percent, and 12 retail outlets in the Salt Lake City area.

The company said it will take offers through October.

"If we have not received what we believe to be a fair market value, we'll keep it and maintain it as a first-class operation," Bowerman said.

Iraq says oil restitution revenues unreasonable

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Iraq's oil minister on Wednesday criticized an American effort to force Iraq to relinquish half its future oil revenues to victims of the Gulf War as "unreasonable and unjustifiable."

"Any percentage ... is going to affect the lives of the Iraqi people and their needs directly," the newly appointed minister, Osama Abdul Razzak al-Hiti, said in an interview.

U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar announced last week that no more than 30 percent of Baghdad's future oil profits could be used to pay compensation.

But the U.S. State Department rejected that figure as too low and said the loser in the Gulf War should surrender 50 percent of its earnings.

Al-Hiti, speaking after the summer conference of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, dismissed both.

"Personally, I think the 30 percent is unfair," he said.

Of the U.S. demand, he responded, "That's unreasonable and unjustifiable."

He said the Baghdad government asked for a five-year grace period during which it would not have to make payments. "We have lost billions and billions of dollars worth of materials, goods and equipment," he said.

Shortly after Iraq's invasion last August of neighboring Kuwait, the United Nations barred sales of its crude oil. Under a cease-fire resolution, the prohibitions are to be eased gradually as Iraq complies with tough conditions.

"We do need the ban to be lifted immediately because of the humanitarian situation in Iraq," al-Hiti said. "We have great shortages of food and medicine."

Before the crisis, Iraq was one of the largest crude oil exporters in the world.

Saudi Arabia and other exporters boosted production in August to make up for the loss of Iraqi and Kuwaiti crude.

Some have expressed concern there could be an oil supply crunch — and rising prices — this winter were Iraq still unable to export crude.

Al-Hiti, the first Iraqi oil chief to attend a cartel session since the crisis, said Iraq could produce 1 million barrels of oil a day within a month after the sanctions were removed.

It could reach its former output of 3.1 million barrels a day in the second half of 1992 — with a quick easing of sanctions and purchases of equipment to replace damaged items, he said.

Current production is about 500,000 barrels a day, with 55,000 barrels going to Jordan under a U.N. arrangement, he said.

Al-Hiti, a U.S.-educated petroleum engineer, said Iraq was clearing its southern oil fields of land mines and cluster bombs dropped by U.S. planes during the war. He also said crews were working "day and night" to repair oil facilities.

On Tuesday, OPEC ministers agreed to extend their production ceiling of 22.3 million barrels a day through the July-September period.

WASTE: Many laws confuse drillers

state or federal record keeping or reporting is required unless a company is out of compliance. This law has its own list of airborne pollutants.

■ The Water Pollution and Control Act or "Clean Water Act" was aimed at restoring and maintaining biological integrity of the nation's water resources. This law has its own list of contaminants, put in three categories: toxic, conventional (oil, grease, solvents, etc.) and non-conventional. Operators are responsible to either federal or state authorities for record-keeping.

■ The Toxic Substances Control Act, enacted in 1976, was designed to regulate commerce and protect human health and the environment. This law has its own list of toxic substances. One way it impacted the oil and gas industry was through asbestos, which the industry felt compelled to remove as a mud additive and from brake pads on drilling rigs.

■ The Resource Conservation and Recovery Act or "Hazardous Waste Act" was also enacted in 1976 to eliminate waste through recycling. Liability falls mainly on the waste generator, followed by the transporter, and this law has its own list of hazardous wastes. The oil and gas industry has exemptions for wastes produced in exploration and production operations, an exemption that does not apply to other environmental laws or products such as sacked and liquid mud or yard operations. Also of concern to the industry is the fact that this law defines when and how a company becomes a generator of hazardous waste.

■ The Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act, enacted in 1980, was designed to establish compensation for environmental damage, and put liability on the shoulders of the generator. This act also has its own list of hazardous substances, and Hoffner pointed out that liability rests not only with a company generating waste, but with any individual who knows or should have known waste was illegally disposed of.

■ OSHA Hazard Communication Act, enacted in 1984, was designed to inform employees of any chemicals they might be exposed to in the workplace. This law, too has its own list of toxic and hazardous substances, and requires both training and MSDS (Material Safety Data Sheets). Hoffner noted that these MSDS, rather than being a burden, could be a source of knowledge about what materials are at the drilling site. "You can use them to look at what's being ordered. Is there a non-hazardous replacement? Is there a less-costly replacement?"

■ The Superfund Amendment and Reauthorization Act (SARA Title III) was enacted in 1986 to inform communities on what amounts and types of hazardous materials are used or released by industries in their area. This act is developing a list of substances, and there is an extensive list of both federal and state commissions to report to.

Haffner stated that, with each law having its own requirements, its own list of pollutants, it's easy for the drilling contractor to get confused. In order to eliminate confusion, and ensure that waste — hazardous or non-hazardous — is handled properly by the workers at the drill site, Grace is incorporating environmental training into its safety meetings, and holds seminars for drilling personnel, from the drilling supervisor to the toolpusher.

Asked if there was much resistance from field personnel, he replied. "Not resistance. We're seeing a lot of confusion, and when there's confusion, there's going to be some resistance."

As state agencies tighten their enforcement of environmental regulations, it is becoming more difficult and costly to dispose of drill site waste. Haffner told of difficulties disposing of oil filters in the state of Louisiana — landfills won't accept them. And when officials were asked what drilling companies should do with their used oil filters, Haffner said, they replied "We don't know. We just know you can't put them in the landfills." The example drew some knowing smiles from members of the crowd, who have had similar experiences with the local landfills.

Haffner offered some words of caution: "Keep in mind that companies 20 years ago disposed of waste under proper procedures. Now, not only are those procedures no longer proper, those companies are liable for what was done 20 years ago."

He urged the industry to stand up for itself and "not let lobbyists do our work for us. Let's manage waste well and make a good impression on the public." He noted that the RCRA act is up for reauthorization, and if the industry loses its current exemptions, "we'll have a whole new set of rules and regulations as to waste at drilling sites."

SALT: Close look at wells

(From 1F)

"Some drivers if they have only a few barrels to go out of a load will deliberately overflow the tanks rather than wait, causing a mess at disposal facilities," he said. "This upsets the Water Commission."

One of the top attractions for disposal operators is the ability to eliminate a 24-hour attendants, who monitor sites to prevent unauthorized dumping and the dumping of bad products.

Cost of the computer monitors is $9,300 to $16,000, with an anticipated payout of 4-7 months on the units. Cook noted that where the honor system is used the barrel rate at disposal facilities could go up as much as 50 percent, once all the cheating is elimiated.

With 18,000 saltwater disposal wells in Texas alone, Cook says there is a big market for the system.

PITTS: An oil nightmare

permit, which can take from 60 to 90 days. Railroad Commission permits to dump oilfield trash, however, can be obtained overnight.

Edmiston told PBPA head Harry Spannaus that he had no idea what drilling contractors could do with their oily gloves until such time as they received their THD permit.

In the final analysis, however, all of the uproar may be over nothing, since most drilling additives might be considered non-toxic and harmless.

Joe Willmon, a technical services engineer for MI Drilling Fluids said that the additives in drilling mud were virtually harmless: "Barite is just a heavy dirt. Bentonite is clay, and potassium chloride is nothing more than fertilizer. As for nitrates — that's what they cure bacon with. And polymers — that's what they make Silly Putty for children out of."

Dr. Leonard Mormon, with THD Solid Waste Management, said he was unaware of the harmless nature of most of the chemicals used in drilling muds and that someone might have gone too far in interpreting policy.

WELL BORE DAMAGE?
ASPHALTINES?
PARAFFIN?

CALL THE ACIDIZING SPECIALIST FOR:
"THE SOLUTION"

- IS YOUR WELL PRODUCTIVITY DECLINING DUE TO FORMATION DAMAGE?
- ARE PARAFFIN AND ASPHALTINES LIMITING THE EFFECTIVENESS OF YOUR ACID STIMULATIONS?
- WOULD YOU LIKE TO REDUCE THE REMEDIAL EXPENSE AND WELL DOWNTIME CAUSED BY THESE TROUBLESOME DEPOSITS?

IF THE ANSWER IS YES TO QUESTIONS LIKE THESE, THEN YOU NEED
"THE SOLUTION...PENTOL"

PENTOL WILL DISSOLVE AND DISPERSE PARAFFINIC AND ASPHALTIC DEPOSITS, BREAK UP EMULSION BLOCKS, PREVENT SLUDGING, AND AID IN THE REMOVAL OF PROBLEM MATERIALS FROM THE WELL.*

PENTOL CAN BE EFFECTIVELY USED AS A PRE-FLUSH FOR DAMAGE REMOVAL, THEN FOLLOWED BY LARGER STIMULATION TREATMENTS.*

PENTOL IS FORMULATED TO CREATE A TRUE DISPERSION BETWEEN THE ACID AND SOLVENT PHASES. UNLIKE COMPETITIVE SYSTEMS, PENTOL CAN BE DISPERSED 12-24 HRS. AND LONGER UPON REQUEST.*

ACTIVITY HIGHLIGHTS

Eddy reentry yields Delaware discovery

Staff Report

A reentry has yielded a Delaware discovery in Eddy County, N.M., west of the Malaga West field.

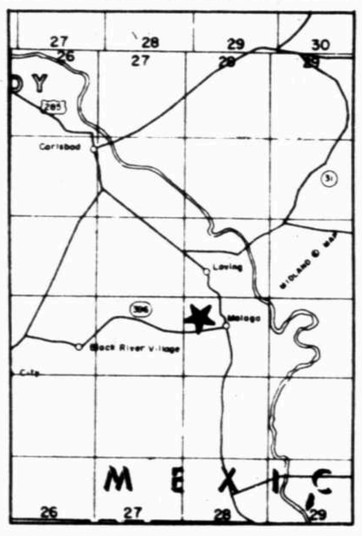
BIRD CREEK RESOURCES INC. reentered the No. 1 Ogden, testing it to pump 18 barrels of 37.8 graviry crude, 14 Mcfd and 116 barrels of water from perforations 5,721 to 5,881 ft. The interval was acidized with 2,500 gallons of acid and fractured with 29,200 gallons of gel and 75,000 lbs. sand. Gas-oil rátio is 778:1.

Permitted as a 5,250 ft. wildcat workover, the well was cleaned out to 6,000 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, and plugged back to 5,965 ft.

The well topped the base of the Salt formation at 2,444 ft. on ground elevation of 3,067 ft. Pay was topped at 5,721 ft.

Location is 430 ft. from north and 550 ft. from east lines of Section 7, T24s, R28e.

The well was drilled as the No. 1 Cotton Petroleum Co. by Dinero Operating Co. and abandoned at a depth of 7,250 ft.



Delaware discovery
A reentered abandoned well has yielded an 18-barrel Delaware discovery in Eddy County

Dual Eddy completion includes Atoka find

THE PETROLEUM CORP. OF DELAWARE has completed a dual well, the No. 9 Superior Federal, in Eddy County, an Atoka discovery and a Strawn producer in the East Burton Flat field.

In the Atoka, the well tested to flow 72 barrels of crude, 3.03 Mmcfd and no water on a 20/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 1,250 psi. The well flowed from perforations 10,961 to 11,233 ft., which had been acidized with 2,000 gallons of 15 percent HCL acid.

In the East Burton Flat (Strawn) field, the well was completed to flow 108 barrels of crude, 2.63 Mmcfd, and 12 barrels of water on an unavailable choke from perforations 10,624 to 10,824 ft. The interval was acidized with 7,000 gallons of 15 percent HCL acid and fractured with 10,000 gallons of gel.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 3,317 ft., include the Delaware at 3,650 ft., Bone Spring at 6,060, Strawn at 10,550, Atoka at 10,900, Morrow at 11,472, and Morrow Clastics at 11,610 ft. Pay was

WHEN YOUR TARGET IS THE PERMIAN BASIN

The Permian Basin is an oil and gas producing empire of 100,000 square miles with an oil well for every square mile. Comprised of 54 counties in Southeast New Mexico and West Texas, this far flung industry accounts for roughly 20 percent of the nation's total oil production.

Yet, a long standing problem has been the lack of a single newspaper to serve the thousands of companies and over 40,000 workers involved in exploration, land, production, drilling, oilfield service and supply, pipelines and construction, refining, and transportation.

But now, the Permian Basin Oil Report, published weekly by the Midland Reporter-Telegram, has become the information source for the Permian Basin oil industry.

Packed with information and articles about oil and gas people, products, companies, issues, events, drilling, exploration, and production, the Oil Report appears each Sunday as a section of the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Additionally, it is mailed to every producer, operator and oilfield service company throughout the Permian Basin.

If the Permian Basin is your target market, the Permian Basin Oil Report is the way to reach it.

For advertising rates and information about the Permian Basin Oil Report, or to receive it, please call: Sam Bakke at (915) 687-8873 (Midland) or 563-3140 (Odessa).

Signs of new geologic trend could spur oil exploration

Staff Report

New ideas on the hydrocarbon potential of central Texas are blooming like hill country wildflowers.

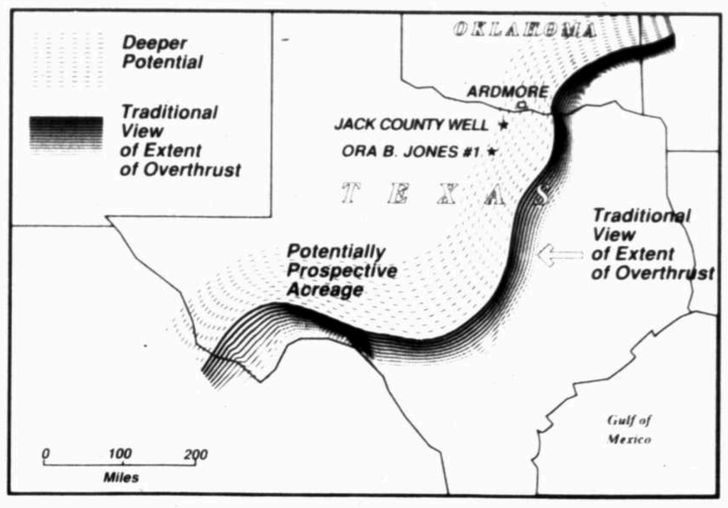
The notion that new, huge reserves of oil and gas may lie untapped below relatively shallow "basement rocks" has the oil community — independents especially — buzzing like bees after bluebonnets.

In a report in the June issue of the EXPLORER magazine of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists, consultant Dennis McMurdie of Austin is one petroleum geologist who is convinced that a thick column of untested Paleozoic-age sediment lies underneath a sheath of granite in a band that runs deep in the heart of Texas from southeast Oklahoma into eastern Mexico.

Traditionally, when oilmen hit granite — that's basement. And it's time to pack up the rig and move on. If you haven't tested any oil-bearing sediments by then, you've drilled a dry hole.

McMurdie believes, however, that the plate tectonics theory of continental drift and modern geophysical data suggest some rather radical refinements to the standard thoughts about the central Texas structure.

The present popular theory is that a band running through central Texas has a relatively thin crust of sedimentary rocks — the type in which oil and gas are usually found, above the granite basement.



McMURDIE SAYS that interpretation was a sound one, given the data available when it was compiled in the 1950s. He believes, however, that the central Texas basement is a false floor hiding thick wedges of potentially oil-rich sediments below.

If the controversial theory proves true, its implications for petroleum exploration are profound. It would open 15-30,000 square miles of prospective acreage to exploration for deeper oil and gas reserves.

"I've been trying to disprove this concept since 1984," McMurdie said. "But every investigation that I thought would prove the idea wrong has added evidence in support of it."

About 225 million years ago, the North and South American landmass plates had a grinding head-on collision that lasted for millions of years. The Ouachita Mountain range, a complex system of faults, layers of sediments and overthrusts were formed as the plates bore into each other.

About 180 million years ago, the plates began to pull apart, gradually moving into the positions they now occupy.

Evidence, he says, are several wells that have produced anomalous results that should not have happened under the traditional model.

In Eastland County Texas, between Fort Worth and Abilene, the Ora B. Jones No. 3 well surprised everyone in 1985 by blowing out a large flow of salt water followed by early daily flow rates of 12,000 barrels of high-quality crude, 12 million cubic feet of gas and 2,500 barrels of water. The operator of the well, Richey and Co. of Fort Worth, speculated the 3,378-foot well had penetrated a pinnacle reef. But McMurdie believes the well's spectacular producing rates and the oil's temperature — 30 degrees higher than surrounding production at similar depth — indicate that the well is fed via a fault or fracture from a deeper reservoir beneath the "basement." Otherwise, he says, where did all that oil, gas and water come from?

Among the wells contributing data to his thesis, McMurdie cites four other highly successful wells located along the same frontal edge as proof:

- Expanding Energy Co.'s 1987 well in Eastland County, Texas that had initial production of 10.8 million cubic feet of gas a day.
- Best Petroleum Exploration's 1987 Jack County, Texas well which produced 8,760 barrels of oil per day.
- CNG's Cottonwood Creek discovery and offset wells near Ardmore, Oklahoma in 1987 and 1988, both of which showed initial production of about 4,000 barrels of oil per day, along with substantial amounts of natural gas.

A TEST of the theory will soon continue. The "Crack In the Earth" well, located about a mile and a half from the Ora B. Jones well in Eastland County, drilled about 2,000 feet through the granite basement to a total depth of over 7,500 feet before mechanical difficulties halted drilling.

McMurdie, who is project consultant, said the well encountered imbricated layers of igneous (basement) rock with shale and quartz sands. Both gas and condensate were flared during drilling and testing.

"The well will be deepened another 500 feet to test the top of a major seismic horizon which we suspect to be associated with thrust movements," he said.

Negotiations also are underway with a large independent oil company to test a large faulted basement structure adjacent to the present well, he said.

Meanwhile, sophisticated geophysical testing methods used in Rocky Mountain overthrust exploration have been employed to get a clearer glimpse of the depths and has added to corroborative evidence of McMurdie's beliefs.

"Pieces of the puzzle just seem to keep falling into place. There's enough evidence now that I can feel confident saying there is definitely a thick sedimentary sequence below what has traditionally been considered basement in central Texas.

"AND IT'S my personal belief that someday somebody is going to discover billion-barrel oil fields in those sediments."

Texas marketed gas production falls

Staff Report

AUSTIN – Railroad Commission Chairman Lena Guerrero announced that Texas marketed gas production in February totaled 349,928,120 Mcf (thousand cubic feet) of gas, compared to the January production total of 388,610,113 Mcf. The February marketed gas production reflected a decrease of 2.08 percent compared to the February 1990 production of 357,363,067 Mcf.

In the first two months of 1991, Texas marketed gas production totaled 738,538,233 Mcf, a 2.53 percent decrease from the 757,735,548 Mcf total during the same period of 1990.

Total gas production in Texas in February was 423,233,910 Mcf, compared to the January production total of 469,490,036 Mcf.

Exports of Texas-produced gas in February totaled 152,203,625 Mcf compared to 173,845,874 Mcf in January. The February exports of Texas-produced gas reflected a 3.09 percent decrease when compared to the February 1990 exports total of 157,068,785 Mcf.

According to Guerrero, the state's top ten exporters of Texas produced gas in February were: Tennessee Gas Pipeline Co., 28,543,395 Mcf; Natural Gas Pipeline Co. of America, 25,411,084 Mcf; Transcontinental Gas Pipeline Corp., 19,146,855 Mcf; Texas Eastern Gas Pipeline Co., 16,370,093 Mcf; United Gas Pipeline Co., 12,866,432 Mcf; Transwestern Pipeline Co., 10,571,315 Mcf; El Paso Natural Gas Co., 8,382,657 Mcf; Trunkline Gas Co., 7,486,973 Mcf; Northern Natural Gas Co., 6,708,028 Mcf; and Arkla Energy Resources, 5,394,392 Mcf.

Operators reported a total of 293,374,100 Mcf of gas in Texas storage facilities in February, compared to the January total of 302,103,981 Mcf.

Guerrero said the state's top ten storage operations in February were: Natural Gas Pipeline Co. of America, Harrison County, 107,784,099 Mcf; Exxon Company, U.S.A., Harris County, 65,706,652 Mcf; Lone Star Gas Co., Henderson County, 23,842,145 Mcf; Houston Pipeline Co., Harris County, 16,036,544 Mcf; Delhi Gas Pipeline Corp., Hopkins and Franklin counties, 10,844,250 Mcf; Texas Utilities Fuel Co., Jack County, 10,209,197 Mcf; Lone Star Gas Co., Eastland County, 9,113,565 Mcf; Texas Utilities Fuel Corp., Jack County, 7,561,404 Mcf; American Gas Storage Corp., Gaines County, 5,727,838 Mcf; and Lone Star Gas Co., Clay County, 5,499,764 Mcf.

MEETINGS

Desk and Derrick to host computer expert

Paul H. Pause' will be the guest speaker at Thursday's meeting of the Desk and Derrick Club. The meeting will be at the Petroleum Club beginning at 6 p.m.

Pause' will speak on "The Present and Future Role of Computers in The Oil and Gas Industry." He is an independent geologist and president of the Permian Basin Graduate Center. He holds a bachelor's degree in geology from the University of California at Berkeley and master's degree in geology from the University of California at Los Angeles.

SPE computer users discuss graphics packages

The Computer Users Group of the Permian Basin section, Society of Petroleum Engineers, will meet Wednesday at Ranchland Hills. Buffet opens at 11:20 a.m. and the presentation will begin at noon.

There will be a panel presentation covering four different graphics packages. Speakers are Farhad Ghassemi of Conoco, discussing Harvard Graphics; Vu Dinh of Arco, discussing Quattro Pro; Bob Fant, Arco, discussing Excel; and Arthur Washington, Mobil, discussing Freelance Plus. The speakers will discuss the capabilities of the different software by using a given dataset.

Cost of the luncheon is $12 and reservations should be made by noon Monday by calling 686-7329.

PETROLEUM PERSPECTIVES

Energy rebound merely slows decline

By Harry Spannaus

Our 1991 domestic drilling pace has shown little progress from that of 1990. There was an average of 818 rigs operating in the U.S. in May 1991 as compared to 972 a year ago. Our Texas count was 297 rigs operating, which is 40 less than in May 1990. In the Permian Basin (New Mexico included) we had 103 rigs turning as compared to 126 a year ago. No matter what area you figure for a comparison, the rig count has dropped 14 to 18 percent across the nation from a like period in 1990.

Spannaus

Crude oil production hasn't done much better. For April 1991, domestic production averaged 7,362,000 barrels of oil per day, a 0.6 percent increase over April 1990. The gas scene is even worse as Texas marketed February 1991 production fell 2.08 percent over that of a like 1990 period. It's a simple fact, oil and gas have not and will not enjoy a substantial rebound this year but may improve over our current position.

The Independent Petroleum Association of America (IPAA) suggests that the rate of decline of U.S. oil production may ease up but still continue to skid lower. That's kind of like the best of two on-road catastrophes: A flat tire and a blow out. One is less severe than the other, but the end result is the same: There will not be substantial progress until the problem is solved, permanently.

While there is little hope that the lower 48 will increase production with the possible exception of offshore, there is now some light in the tunnel for increases in Alaska production, which was restrained in 1990 due to field and maintenance work at Prudhoe Bay. If it is any comfort, lower 48 crude production could improve slightly from the influence of increased horizontal drilling activity, but together all; the mini production improvements will only slow the decline process.

So what is the problem? Why isn't there a movement for a full-fledged recovery of the oil and gas business? An analysis of "finding costs" for the 30 largest oil and gas companies showed that exploration costs were three to four times higher 10 years ago. The costs for finding a barrel of oil was then about $16 to $20, compared to today's rate of about $6 per barrel. Current production costs average another $6 per barrel, yielding a pre-tax profit of about $6 to $9 from a field price of $17 to $20 per barrel. This should reflect satisfactory economic performance and if it is sustained, such margins could set records in economic returns. Based on this, one would think a price of $17 to $20 per barrel in 1991 dollars would encourage consumption, provide excellent returns for U.S. explorer-developers and yet not choke off sales growth of much lower-cost oil producers in the Middle East and elsewhere.

Natural gas is a horse of a different color. It's not a world commodity and it is used sporadically with much of its consumption related directly to the severity of winter weather conditions. But gas is a commodity of hope. It is a premium low-priced fuel that is environmentally acceptable and is destined to improve with age. It is probably a better long-term investment than oil and even at $1.60 to $1.70 per Mcf it can be a very lucrative business.

The real unknowns to the business is what extraordinary costs are producers to be faced with in the future, which would upset the economics of the oil and gas production business. Environmental costs could eat our lunches. While many areas of oil field operations are today exempt to environmental restrictions and constraints, the massive and many times illogical environmental movement suggests that oil and gas will be unmercifully taken to bear the majority of costs related to waste minimization and disposal and all avenues to clean air, clean water, ozone layer protection and toxic controls of any kind.

Regardless of our hopes, we should never count on the federal government to assist us in an industry recovery of any kind. Our public image remains poor and we are behind the eight-ball when it comes to the Congressional vote. With 10 major producing states representing oil and gas and 40 in opposition, there is little hope that Uncle Sam will have any influence in returning the U.S. to an energy self-sufficiency status, especially as long as the Administration's policy continues to be "Cheap Energy Regardless of the Source."

Don't expect state governments to help either. Our experience with the 72nd Texas Legislative Session, in which of 4,100 bills introduced, over 500 were of environmental flavor, suggest that oil and gas will be at the mercy of our state lawmakers from now on. Add to this our dismal state budget predictions and the scenario becomes clear that oil and gas will continue to pay more than its fair share to the state collection plate.

The negatives to the oil and gas business appear to be increasing, and we have got to continue to fight for what we believe is right for our industry and the best for our country. Our domestic industry is worth fighting for. If we all "hang tough" we can make it happen.

BOTTOM LINES

■ KERR-McGEE CORP. says first quarter earnings were up 10 percent from the same period a year ago. The company reported a net income of $29.7 million for the first quarter of this year, with sales of $786 million.

■ THE WILLIAMS COMPANIES, INC. report first-quarter earnings rose 35 percent, partly because the weather helped boost transportation and sales in its natural gas subsidiary. Williams, a $4 billion energy transportation and digital telecommunications corporation, reported a net income of $42.8 million, compared with $32 million in the first quarter of 1990. Revenues were $608 million in the first quarter, compared with $548 million from the same quarter a year ago.

■ HALLIBURTON CO. earned $27.4 million in the first quarter, a 24 percent decline from a year ago that the company blamed on lower operating income from its energy services group.

The 26-cents a share profit came on revenues of $1.73 billion. A year ago, Halliburton earned $36.2 million, 34 cents a share, on revenues of $1.59 billion.

■ EXXON CORP., exceeding the most optimistic Wall Street projections, said its net income in the first quarter rose 75 percent, to $2.24 billion, the highest of any quarter since John D. Rockefeller organized the company in 1882.

■ SUN OIL CO., the nation's largest independent refiner, said its net income fell 42 percent. Excluding a one-time gain caused by an accounting change last year, operating income was unchanged.

■ TEXACO INC., in a continuation of first-quarter profit gains among international oil companies, said that net income rose 26.5 percent. Both James W. Kinnear, Texaco's chairman, and Kenneth T. Derr, Chevron's chairman, referred in statements to tight supplies for refined products in the region.

■ CHEVRON CORP. reported a gain of only 17.8 percent. In the United States, Chevron profits in refining as well as oil and gas exploration and recovery units were mixed. Said Ken Derr, chairman of Chevron.

API doesn't see high oil profits continuing

Staff Report

WASHINGTON — The American Petroleum Institute released an analysis of the profitability of 19 leading oil companies during the first quarter of the year.

Because of unusual circumstances in foreign refining, marketing and transportation, the analysis said that the operating income of four of the 19 companies with significant international operations increased 54.3 percent during the first three months of the year compared to the same period of 1990. At the same time, however, operating income for the remaining 15 oil companies fell 14.6 percent.

Operating income is defined in the survey as net income before special and non-recurring items are considered.

Guerrero praises oilfield cleanup

Staff Report

AUSTIN — Railroad Commission Chairman Lena Guerrero hailed oilfield cleanup legislation approved recently as a joint effort between state government and industry that would pay big dividends to the Texas environment in future years.

Guerrero

At an Austin press conference, Guerrero said Senate Bill 1103 builds an industry-government coalition to raise money necessary to clean up onshore oilfield pollution.

Fees, penalties, and other payments collected from the oil and gas industry will support a $10 million oilfield cleanup fund which the Railroad Commission can tap for plugging abandoned wells and cleaning up pits and other pollution sites that responsible operators have abandoned, she said.

"The two main industry groups, Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners and the Texas Mid-continent Oil and Gas Association, worked side by side with us to ensure this legislation was strong and fair to everyone," Guerrero said.

Guerrero also praised the bill sponsors, House Energy Committee Chairman Robert Earley and Senate Natural Resources Committee Chairman Bill Sims, for their leadership in guiding the bill to passage.

The new bill expands sources of funds available to the Railroad Commission to tackle oilfield pollution problems. Companies applying for a permit to drill a new well will pay a fee ranging from $100 to $200, depending on the depth of the well, instead of the old $100 per well fee. The bill also levies production fees of 5/16 cents per barrel of oil and 1/30 cent per thousand cubic feet of gas. These fees will be collected until the balance in the fund reaches $10 million and then will be suspended unless the balance in the fund drops below $6 million.

Guerrero noted the cleanup bill also makes it tougher for problem operators to continue in business. "Producers must be in compliance with all state laws and Commission rules and must have paid all penalties and fines due before we will grant them new drilling permits," she said.

Union Pacific Resources lands L.A. gas contract

N.Y. Times News Service

FORT WORTH, Texas — Union Pacific Resources Co. of Fort Worth has landed a major new natural gas customer that could bring it tens of millions of dollars in additional annual revenues.

The company said Tuesday that it has reached a final agreement for a 15-year contract to sell natural gas to the Los Angeles Department of Water and Power, a municipally owned utility that serves 1.4 million electric customers.

Union Pacific Resources will produce the gas from wells in southwestern Wyoming.

Under the contract, the utility must purchase at least 35 million cubic feet of gas daily — and can purchase as much as 50 million cubic feet — from Union Pacific Fuels Inc., the natural gas marketing arm of Union Pacific Resources, the largest oil and gas exploration and production firm with headquarters in Tarrant County.

Even at current depressed gas prices, the contract could produce approximately $15 million to $25 million in annual revenues for Union Pacific Resources, one of the nation's largest and most profitable independent oil and gas firms.

If gas prices were to rise sharply, as some energy analysts forecast, the company could reap much-higher revenues from the agreement.

The gas is to be transported from Wyoming to Southern California through the Kern River Gas Transmission Co. pipeline system, which is under construction and scheduled to be in service by February of next year.

The price the utility is to pay for the gas will fluctuate, because it will be tied to the latest price trends on the spot market.

The gas will be burned to generate electricity. Union Pacific Resources will supply about 35 percent of the utility's current gas requirements, displacing more than 8,000 barrels a day of fuel oil now burned by the utility.

Gas will be a cleaner-burning fuel, reducing air emissions from the utility's generating stations in the Los Angeles area, said Donald W. Niemiec, president of Union Pacific Fuels Inc.

TIPRO sells environmental manual for oil producers

Staff Report

■ Manual will summarize complex environmental state and federal rules.

The Texas Independent Producers & Royalty Owners Association has published its first ever Environmental Reference Manual to help independent producers better understand the often complex federal and state laws and rules regulating the oil and gas exploration and production industry.

TIPRO's "Environmental Reference Manual" briefly summarizes current state and federal environmental laws to help determine which requirements apply to each producer's facilities. Each of the 23 chapters gives a synopsis of the law, includes relevant sections of the statute or regulations and provides informative numbers, addresses and additional reference sources. The Manual will be updated every two years.

The following is a sample of what statutes and regulations the manual outlines:

Clean Water Act, Resource Conservation and Recovery Act, Hazard Communication Standard, Endangered Species Act, Texas Railroad Commission's Water Protection Rules, Naturally Occurring Radioactive Materials, Texas Clean Air Act, and more.

Drilling permits decline in April

AUSTIN, Texas, May 10–A total of 1,204 drilling permits were issued by the Railroad Commission in April, according to RRC Chairman Lena Guerrero. In March, the total was 1,166. April 1990'S total was 1,241.

The April total included 707 permits to drill new oil and gas tests, 45 to re-enter existing well bores, 30 to deepen existing holes, 179 to plugback existing holes, and 90 for other wells. Operators were also issued 153 amended drilling permits.

Guerrero said permits issued for new oil and gas holes in April included 29 in the San Antonio area (District 1), 20 in the Refugio area (District 2), 49 in Southeast Texas (District 3), 52 in deep South Texas (District 4), 18 in East Central Texas (District 5), 68 in East Texas (District 6), 104 in West Central Texas (District 7B), 76 in the San Angelo area (District 7C), 87 in the Midland area (District 8), 80 in the Lubbock area (District 8A), 96 in North Texas (District 9), and 28 in the Panhandle (District 10).

UPR buys Santa Fe interests

Staff Report

FORT WORTH, TEXAS – Union Pacific Resources Co. has announced the acquisition of working interests in more than 80 vertical wells and 6,257 net acres of lease holdings surrounding those wells from Santa Fe Minerals Holdings, Inc. (SFM) of Dallas.

The properties, located primarily in Lee County near Giddings, Texas, have a gross daily production of 1,210 barrels of oil and 7.4 million cubic feet (MMcf) of gas. Production is from either the Austin Chalk or Buda formations. UPRC will succeed SFM as operator in the majority of the wells.

"Our acquisition of the SFM properties continues our strategy of focused exploration and development in the Austin Chalk trend," said Bill Adams, chairman of UPRC. "It allows us to add production and reserves with very little overhead due to our strong presence in the trend."

"The wells have good potential for stimulation, which may significantly enhance production," Adams said. "The undeveloped acreage acquired may be utilized for new horizontal drilling."

UPRC is one of the most active and successful producers in the Austin Chalk trend. In the first two weeks of May, Resources tested 10 new horizontal wells located in five different counties, from LaSalle to Brazos, with a total test rate of 11,900 barrels of oil and 12.1 MMcf of gas per day.

UPRC operates eight of the wells and has an average working interest of 82 percent.

As of May 14, 1991, UPRC had completed 101 operated horizontal wells in the trend and participated in 21 more, with net daily production of 19,000 barrels of oil, 48 MMcf of gas and 10,500 barrels of natural gas liquids. Resources has 15 operated rigs currently under contract for horizontal drilling in the Chalk.

Seismic count falls

The Society of Exploration Geophysicists reports that the number of seismic land crews and marine vessels searching for oil and gas in the U.S. and U.S. waters fell during April, the second consecutive decline. The land crew total fell one to 87, while the marine crew total fell one, for a total of 110. The April total represents a 2 percent decrease from March and a 12 percent decrease from April 1990.

Texaco Inc. has announced two promotions.

RONALD K. SANDERSON has been named manager of quality, human resources and training for the Midland producing division.

He will be resposible for the division's consolidated quality, human resources, personnel administration, and training functions. Prior to joining Texaco in 1990 as quality manager, he was a management consultant with United Research Co.

Sanderson

MAX D. WILLIAMS has been named human resources manager for the division. He joined Texaco in 1967 as an employee relations assistant. His most recent position was retiree relations manager in the corporate human resources department in Houston.

PHILLIP SANDERS has been named a safety and training specialist at Parker Drilling Co. He will assist in coordinating drilling rig safety programs in the field as well as at Parker's well control school, located at Partech.

Midlander LESLEY "LES" EASON has joined ProTechnics International Inc. a Houston-based energy and environmental services firm. He comes to ProTechnics from Computalog, where he was a sales representative.

Other officers elected include J. MICHAEL PARTY, first vice president; BRENDA K. CUNNINGHAM, second vice president, WILLIAM J. PURVES, secretary, and SALLY MEADER-ROBERTS, treasurer.

Iran now making overtures toward 'Great Satan'

By Anne Pearson

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON – Iran, the radical Islamic republic that referred to the United States in the 1980s as "the Great Satan," is softening its rhetoric in the '90s and courting some of the same U.S. energy companies it tossed out 12 years ago.

Mideast experts say it was a historic moment last week when Western oil company representatives came face to face with top Iranian decision makers at a conference in Isfahan, Iran – the first such meeting with Westerners since the fall of the late Shah of Iran in 1979.

Although many of the majors declined the invitation, a few attended, including Chevron. Experts say almost any of them would jump at the chance to go back to Iran – if the price is right and the political risks can be reduced.

With a major post-Iran-Iraq war reconstruction under way, Iran is flush with opportunities for construction, equipment and engineering companies.

U.S. firms are looking, but they expect to wait until the bad political blood between Washington and Tehran is resolved before jumping in, company officials and industry consultants say.

Washington wants its hostages out of Lebanon, and it is convinced that Iran can get them out. Tehran wants cash and assets; it claims the United States is still holding as much as $10 billion – a claim the U.S. Treasury says just isn't true.

Brown & Root, the Houston-based engineering and construction giant, is monitoring Iran but not chasing any work right now. The company is still trying to collect $20 million through the Iran-United States Claims Tribunal for pre-revolution construction work on an air base for the shah and the U.S. government.

Vice President Joe Stevens said his company would like to settle that claim before it takes on new jobs.

Atlantic Richfield got an invitation to Isfahan, but couldn't make it. Arco is the last major U.S. oil company that has yet to be paid for the oil rights Iran seized after the revolution. It is seeking $275 million from the tribunal.

Omer Adams, vice president of finance for Arco International in Dallas, said Iran isn't on Arco's "A list," but it hasn't been ruled out completely.

Irvine, Calif.-based Fluor Daniel received a $47 million settlement 18 months ago for a nearly completed refinery job for which it had not been paid after the revolution.

"The company is positive about Iran as a market," spokesman Rick Maslin said, but it's not ready to go back there yet.

Chris Rachwal, a London-based consultant with Gaffney Cline & Associates, a petroleum engineering firm with offices in Houston, London and Singapore, said the London office has put out a few feelers in Iran via diplomatic contacts. "People are a little bit nervous about piling in there until things are a little clearer (politically)," Rachwal said.

Iran is in the process of building two new refineries, and it currently has 20 rigs drilling onshore and another four offshore, said Andrew Young, geological editor for Geneva-based Petroconsultants. Drilling in Iran is up about 50 percent from last year, Young said.

U.S. rules governing the exports to Iran are fairly liberal, despite the strained political relations. U.S. companies can't sell anything that might be used for military purposes, but most other products are fair game.

Even so, U.S. exports to Iran are minuscule – $162.5 million last year, the highest level in seven years. Fertilizer accounted for one-fourth of those sales.

The moderate administration of President Hashemi Rafsanjani is trying to normalize ties to the West, but a still-strong radical faction is hindering its efforts, said Gholam H. Razi, a political science professor at the University of Houston.

Baker Hughes Inc., the Houston-based oil-field service giant, began selling to Iran again last year for the first time since the revolution, said Max Lukens, president of Baker Hughes Production Tools group. But the bill came to just $3 million.

Lukens said the main impediment is that the Iranians aren't rolling in hard currency. Companies like Baker Hughes want letters of credit to make sure they can actually cash the Iranians' check. Still, Lukens said he expects sales to roughly double in the next 12 months.

If Iran expects to reach its goal of raising daily oil production capacity from about 3.5 million barrels a day to 5 million and develop its gas reserves, Lukens says it will have to buy more from the United States.

Summer Mummers 'Just Say Neaux'

Braggarts, fools and traitors take to the Yucca Theatre stage as the curtain rises June 28 on Midland Community Theatre's 43rd annual Summer Mummers.

This year's story, "Midled Down the Mississippi" or "Just Say Neaux," has as its backdrop the battle of New Orleans during the War of 1812. Aside from the dates, which author Harry Harrison says are correct, the story bears little resemblance to historical record.

"It's loosely based on the events surrounding the Battle of New Orleans," said Rogers "Scooter" Tilley, director of this year's melodrama.

Of course no annual melodrama would be complete without a fair damsel in distress and a hero to rush to her rescue.

"There is a spy in General Jackson's camp who has been supplying information to the British and so the hero and the hero's sidekick have been sent out to find who this spy is. Along the way, they run into the heroine and the heroine's sidekick on the streets of New Orleans, who seem to have problems of their own as they have been evicted from their plantation.

"Throughout the quest to find the spy, they run into all these various unscrupulous characters who want to see the American Army destroyed and also try to destroy the British army. In the process, they turncoat on every one so that they can set up a pirate empire. But, in the end we all know that good does triumph over evil."

Currently, the volunteers working on this year's production are busy filming footage for the movieola portions of the melodrama. In addition to having written the script, Harrison is directing the film segments of the production. The process takes months to complete.

"Right after we pick a script, we usually sit down and start writing a movie script, and this will be in early April, usually. We'll plan our logistics and special props and things like that. As soon as the play is cast, we start filming, and we try to follow our storyline that we've written as close as possible," Harrison said.

He laughed, then added, "It's never possible, or it hasn't been, yet.

Creating the movieola involves around 80 to 90 people, counting the mob scenes. Harrison said.

"Moviemaking is terribly labor-intensive. It probably takes two hours on location to get 10 minutes of film down."

As the film's director, Harrison will be editing the footage.

"I'll do the rough editing," he said. "We might get some help on fine-tuning it. You can take mundane film, and if it's edited correctly, you can have a pretty amusing movie."

Harrison estimates that it will take "some lucky person" around 60 hours to edit the movie. "That's probably a conservative estimate, too," he said. "It takes a long time to edit a movie correctly."

Harrison has worked on Summer Mummers so long he can't pinpoint the exact year he began, except to say that it was in 1951 or 1952.

But he does recall that it has been some years since the melodrama included a female villain.

"The last female villain was Kathleen Turner," Harrison said, remembering when Ms. Turner — who is perhaps best known for her role in "Romancing the Stone" —served an internship at MCT. "She and Katie Heck were female villains, and I guess that was probably well over 20 years ago in a melodrama — called 'Plotting on the Planets' by Bill Davis. It was a science fiction thing."

Festival to show Texas 'more than cowboys and oil'

By Jennifer Dixon

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Kennedy Center is putting Texas on the cultural map this month with an 11-day celebration that Gov. Ann Richards promises will be "bigger than Dallas, hotter than a Labor Day picnic in Beaumont, and more fun than the Terlingua Chili Festival."

Hundreds of musicians and performers from El Paso to the Piney Woods will share the stage beginning Tuesday with movies and dramas about Texas during the Kennedy Center's first festival to celebrate the lively arts of one state.

There will be country and Cajun, folk and folklorico, ballet and the blues, symphonies, string quartets and swing.

"Texans have always known that there is a lot more to Texas culture than cowboys and oil wells — and the Texas festival is going to give us the opportunity to prove it to the world," Richards says.

The celebration at the nation's center for the performing arts kicks off with the presentation of a pair of armadillos to the National Zoo. Over the next 11 days, more than 400 Texans will share the spotlight and showcase the state's artistic heritage.

"Texas musicians deliver everything from Texas swing music to the Mariachi sounds of South Texas and the Cajun strains of deep East Texas. Our artisans are equally diverse and I just hope that the Kennedy Center is big enough to show off a little of everything," Richards says.

Texans will be showing off on stages large and small — from an intimate Texas roadhouse cafe setting to the Eisenhower Theater and the Concert Hall for performances by the Houston and Fort Worth ballets and the Dallas Symphony Orchestra.

"The diversity and the caliber of performers featured in the festival makes all Texans proud," said Texas Democratic Sen. Lloyd Bentsen. "It should be quite a show."

There will be also be a free fiesta open to the public, Texas-related exhibits at museums around town, and an invitation-only, cattle-baron style ball at the Lincoln Memorial on the Mall on Friday.

The evening's dress is Texas chic, from black-tie and boots or bolo ties and blue jeans for the men, to suedes, satins, silks or sequins for the women, says Leanne Kendrick, a Texan in Washington who has been the festival's local coordinator.

On the menu: fajitas and barbecue, German fare and Cajun shrimp, Pearl beer longnecks and Texas wines.

"It's a bit of a departure from (traditional) Kennedy Center programming in that we're a little bit looser than we normally are. We're trying to have as much fun as we possibly can ... from cuisine to pop music, we've done the whole bit," says Carolyn Reynolds, director of television and special projects at the Kennedy Center.

Reynolds said Kennedy Center Chairman James D. Wolfensohn wants to use the center to showcase arts around the country, and agreed a state arts festival would be a way to bring the cultural richness of a region to the national stage.

"Texas, because it is so diverse, and so big, with such a wealth of different traditions, particularly in music, was a pretty obvious choice," said Reynolds, who is directing the Texas Festival.

Having an adopted Texan in the White House and powerful Texans scattered in Congress and the Cabinet also helped give Texas the billing. President and Barbara Bush are serving as honorary chairpersons.

Texas Festival curator Jim Bernhard of Houston and state festival coordinator Jean Kahn helped the Kennedy Center assemble a list of some 800 Lone Star performers from which the final artistic selections were made.

"We're trying to showcase a wide diversity of artists who represent as much of Texas as we can geographically, and all of the traditions," Reynolds said.

New music doesn't deter O'Jays

By David Bauder

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Having lived through doo wop and punk rock, power pop and acid rock, the O'Jays aren't about to be intimidated by new jack swing and rap.

The veteran Ohio trio, its two founders both pushing 50, give the hot new styles a spin on an album they hope will help them re-create their hit-making heyday of the 1970s.

Critic Dave Marsh dubbed it "old jack swing." It's a marriage of rap and crackling percussion with the soulful harmonies the O'Jays most artfully displayed on such 1970s hits as "Love Train," "Back Stabbers" and "Used ta Be My Girl."

"If you're going to be in the record business, you have to compete with all of these people like the Guys and Leverts," said O'Jay Eddie Levert, dropping the name of the band led by his son, Gerald.

That means taking some of the new ideas and blending them with the styles the O'Jays feel comfortable with after more than 30 years in the business. Levert figures it's a two-way street.

"We think some of that stuff is very creative on the rap side," he said. "I think they need people like ourselves and the Gladys Knights and the Patti LaBelles to put some musical forms and song forms on what they're doing rhythmically. We can incorporate the things that we do best into today's music."

For all the talk of new styles, the album "Emotionally Yours" starts to click when the O'Jays embrace something older than themselves.

An EMI Records executive suggested the O'Jays try recording Bob Dylan's song "Emotionally Yours." Producer Narada Michael Walden envisioned a version that sounded like Marvin Gaye's hit, "Sexually Healing." The slinky "Emotionally Yours" was recorded for the new album.

Hanging out in the studio one day, a musician started playing "Emotionally Yours" in a slow, gospel style. The O'Jays joined in.

They liked the gospel "Emotionally Yours" so much that a second version was recorded and also put on the album. The gospel version features a backup choir that include Evelyn "Champagne" King, Keith Sweat, Cissy Houston, Phyllis Hyman and two of Levert's kids.

There's also an "inspirational" version of "Emotionally Yours" with more overt religious references than the gospel take. That's being used as a B-side on a single.

AP Laserphoto

The veteran trio the O'Jays has recently released a new album, "Emotionally Yours," which is a blend of old and new styles.

For those keeping score at home: That's three versions of the same song, two of which are on the album.

"I like Michael Walden and I think (his version) is great for radio and our fans, but I really like the gospel version," Levert said. "It just feels good. I get goosebumps."

The version hearkened back to the days Levert and partner Walter Williams sang gospel songs on the radio as teen-agers growing up in Canton, Ohio. Forming a five-piece band known as the Mascots, they recorded their first single in 1961. That year they changed the band's name to honor their manager, Eddie O'Jay.

Most of the '60s were spent struggling to make headway during a golden era in soul music. The O'Jays sang backup sessions for the Ronnettes and Nat "King" Cole and spent many years on the old black vaudeville circuit.

"Thank God for those places because that's where we learned to entertain," Williams said. "You had to do so many shows a day on the theater circuit. And nothing's better than repetition."

It wasn't until the O'Jays moved to Philadelphia and aligned themselves with producers Kenny Gamble and Leon Huff that the hits started coming.

Things dried up again in the '80s. They split with Gamble and Huff, and were criticized for a decision to tour in South Africa. Williams claimed ignorance of the political situation there and said he now regrets the move.

"Parts of the '80s were a downer because of the South African situation and not getting hit records," Williams said. "Our work ethic kept us in the business, being able to put on good shows. I thought I'd retire around 35. But at 35, I wasn't ready. Nor did I have enough money."

Williams, who met Levert when they were both starting elementary school, can brag of a musical partnership that's lasted nearly 40 years.

"What's kept it together since then is love and respect and giving a guy the room and space to be himself," he said.

With the onset of the '90s, the O'Jays are hoping for a pattern of alternate good decades in their career.

They're off to a promising start. The first single from the new album, "Don't Let Me Down," hit the top five on the rhythm 'n' blues chart. "Emotionally Yours," the Walden version, is heading in the same direction.

With "Don't Let Me Down," Levert had the strange experience of competing on the charts with his son. He proudly points out that the O'Jay's single reached No. 2, while Levert's "All Season" peaked at No. 3.

"It showed me one thing," he said. "I'm 48 years old, but it showed me that everyone wants to be No. 1. I don't care who they are. I don't care if it's your own baby. You want to be No. 1."

MUMMERS: Show has female villain

(From 1G)

Harrison and Tilley agree on the quality of this year's two casts. (Each role in Summer Mummers is double cast because the production is on stage weekends throughout the summer).

Harrison said this year's casts are "extremely strong, very talented and capable."

Tilley said the casts are "two of the most talented that we have had up there." He credits that to a balance between the production's old-timers and newcomers who bring energy into the show.

"It's so new to them, and they're so energetic about it, it kind of pumps up the whole production," Tilley said. He laughed, then added, "With Mummers, if you've done it for a year, you're considered an old-timer."

Tilley, who teaches for the Ector County Independent School District, has been involved in the annual event for eight years.

"I went and saw it one summer," Tilley said. "I had lived here for a long time and had heard about it, but had never gone to see it. As soon as I saw it up there, I knew I had to be a part of it. Even though we were having fun out in the audience, it looked like the actors on stage were having just as much fun with it."

This year marks Tilley's first time to direct.

"It's exciting for me," said Tilley, who is using techniques he learned from those who directed him — Ron Hughes, Harrison and Don Bachmann.

"I'm just hoping that, after seven years of being onstage, some of that has rubbed off on me, and I'm able to give it my best shot."

"When Harry directs the show — since he's played the villain so much — his major forte is with the villain," Tilley said. "And so this time around I am concerned mostly with heros and hero sidekicks because that's what I've played. So, I'm going to be a little bit more in tune with the good side of it instead of the dark side."

Tilley tells those who have never been to Mummers to "expect to become a kid again. Go in and just have a good time. Throw the popcorn.

"I always tell people don't dress up by any means. It's not a typical theatrical production where you would dress up in nice clothes because you' re invariably going to wind up with some kind of popcorn on you no matter what. It's just an evening to let your hair down and have fun.

"It kind of breaks all the rules of going to the theater or movie because you can make noise, you can cheer, you can boo, you can throw out lines with the audience and you can wear ridiculous looking hats and various amounts of headgear. It's just a party atmosphere."

Despite the party atmosphere, the cast, Harrison and Tilley are determined to stage a credible melodrama.

"I think more than anything, I want Mummers to get back to the way it was in what I call the 'glory days' when you had Ron Hughes and Art Cole and all of them. That's what I'm aiming for: the traditional way that Mummers has been done."

Tilley adds that some of the changes he has seen have been for the better, such as the improvements in sound in the Yucca.

"Since it's been in the Yucca, the emphasis is starting to go back to the show. I told the cast the first night of rehearsal that my main concern is the show that's onstage, the melodrama itself. If that's not good then everything else is hurt by it."

Tilley finds the Mummers organization impressive.

"No matter which area they're involved with, whether it's the movie or the olio or the selling of all the stuff out there, for the volunteers there, it's really a labor of love, a huge team effort, and everybody in there is pulling for the same thing."

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

■ Petroleum Museum to offer youth classes

Staff Reports

The Petroleum Museum is offering classes which concentrate on the natural sciences as well as the cultural history of early Permian Basin inhabitants.

This summer three Microscopes classes allow students to discover "hidden" treasures and "unseen" wonders.

Astronomers aged 7-12 travel to the stars as they learn about our galaxy.

Three Indian classes allow 5-6 year-olds, 7-8 year-olds and 9-12 year-olds to experience the daily activities of Indian boys and girls. The classes are filled with crafts and projects.

The younger geologists discover geology as they "see, touch and do" with rocks. The 7-8 year old students test, identify and collect rocks and minerals, while the older tycoons have fun drilling for oil.

Enrollment is limited to 12 participants in each class and will be on a first-come, first-serve basis. Tuition for museum members is $20 per child per class for the first class and $15 per child per class for each class thereafter. For nonmembers the tuition is $25 per child per class and $20 per child per class for each class thereafter.

Contact the Petroleum Museum office for registration forms. The museum is located south of downtown Midland at 1500 Interstate 20 West, east of exit 136. For more information call 683-4403

■ Ranch life depicted

The museum exhibition "Journey of Lost Images," which is comprised of 26 original oils by Gary Ernest Smith, is at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

The paintings in Smith's show were completed in the summer of 1989, after the artist spent a month reliving experiences of his childhood on his parents' ranch, capturing images in numerous sketches and oils.

"These canvases are more icons and symbols than mere representations," said Vern G. Swanson, director of the Springville Museum of Art and curator of the show.

The exhibit closes July 28 at the Museum of the Southwest. No admission is charged to view exhibits at the museum. Hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. For more information call 683-2882.

The classic drama "Inherit the Wind" will be presented by Midland Community Theatre June 21-30.

Based on the famous "Scopes Monkey Trial," this big-cast presentation will be in the Davis Theatre, Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Performances are at 8 p.m. with one 2:30 p.m. matinee June 23. Memberships, group rates and individual tickets are available. Call 682-4111 for more information.

■ Arts, crafts show set

HIGH ROLLS, N.M. — The annual Cherry Festival Arts and Crafts Show, sponsored by the Cherry Bowl Extension Club of High Rolls Mountain Park, N.M., will be held June 22 and 23 in High Rolls.

Applications are now being accepted from artists and craftsmen desiring to participate. Fees are $30 for booth space. Please contact the Cherry Bowl Extension Club, P.O. Box 464, High Rolls Mountain Park, N.M. 88325 or call 1-505-682-2420 for information or to reserve booth space.

■ Vocal school planned

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah — Applications are being accepted for the fifth annual International Vocal School at Utah's Promised Valley Playhouse.

The school, which will be held July 8-20, features intensive vocal instruction and several opportunities for performances.

The school also conducts an "Overture Class" for singers high school age and older.

Fees for the program are $300 for participants, $100 for the overture class and $50 for observers. In each case, the fee includes admission to all classes, lectures, public concerts and social events.

For more information write Promised Valley Playhouse, 132 South State Street, Salt Lake City, Utah 84111, or call 1-801-364-5696.

■ Petersen art displayed

Ms.Petersen has worked for a year on the paintings, a montage of West Texas history from 1530 to 1930.

Currently, plans are underway to increase the collection to include present day Ector County and those making tomorrow's history.

The exhibit also includes two banners of Ector County wildlife. One banner depicts plants and animals helpful to man.

The heritage of Odessa Foundation plans to have the entire collection travel throughout Texas and surrounding areas and then plans to permanently house the collection in a local gallery.

The reception for the Heritage of Odessa Paintings, to be held today from 3 to 4:30 p.m., includes authentic foods of the past 100 years cooked by area women. The flavor of Odessa Cookbook Committee contributed to the research and preparation of the menu. The cookbook will be available at the reception.

Prints and postcards of the "White-Pool House" and "A Sunday Afternoon," will also be available at he Art Institute Museum Shop during the exhibit.

■ Bluegrass festival set

CANYON — The Texas State Bluegrass Festival is set for June 18-23 at Trade Days Park.

The Legends of Bluegrass Show starring Bill Monroe, "the father of bluegrass," from the Grand Ole Opry and Living Legend Mac Wiseman will kick-off Garland's fourth annual Texas State Bluegrass Festival, ending with a free Gospel Service on Sunday.

■ 'Texas' opens June 12

CANYON — Beginning the second quarter century, the musical drama "Texas" opens its 26th season on June 12.

During the next 64 performances 100,000 visitors will discover the serenity, pomp and pagentry of the nation's most-attended outdoor drama that will play nightly except Sundays through August 24 at 8:30 p.m. in the state park located near Amarillo and Canyon.

This season, director Neil Hess has incorporated the 25th anniversary additions with a new and dramatic patriotic theme.

For reservations to "Texas," write P.O. Box 268, Canyon, 79015 or call 806-655-2181. Tickets are $12, $9, and $6 for adults, and $12, $4.50 and $3 for children.

An optional barbeque dinner is served by Sutphen's of Amarillo for an additional $6 per person prior to every performance.

■ MOSC receives grant

The Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale is the recipient of a grant from the National Endowment For The Arts (NEA). Only 187 orchestras were selected nationwide to receive NEA funding.

The quality of the orchestral performance is judged by a panel of music professionals. A cassette of several orchestral selections from the previous concert season is submitted, and the grant application is only considered if the performance quality meets NEA's high artistic standards.

The grant is in support of the 1991-92 season.

■ Pianist to perform

Heidi Tang, winner of the 11th-12th grade District I Texas Music Teachers' Student Affiliate Piano Performance Contest, will compete at the State Contest to be held during the Texas Music Teachers' Association Convention, June 14-18, in Austin.

Heidi will perform Ballade in G minor by Chopin. She is a piano student of Pam Bristol.

Heidi is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dar Yee Tang. She will be a senior at Lee High School and is a member of the National Honor Society, the recipient of three academic letters and is listed in Who's Who Among American High School Students. Heidi plays the flute in the Lee High School Band and Orchestra. For two years she has been chosen for the All-State Band and Orchestra.

Focus on Oil showing at Petroleum Museum

Staff Report

Focus on Oil '91 fills the Petroleum Museum's temporary exhibit gallery with a collection of photographs through July 7.

The Best-of-Show was awarded for Tripping Out, a black and white entry by Rick Carbo, from Washington, D.C.

Winners in the Black & White category are: 1st, Process Unit, Chevron, Port Arthur, by Norman C. Tolpo of Austin; 2nd, Headlee, Devonian 9-1 UTPB, by Karen Lanier of Midland; 3rd,an untitled print by Hazel Elder of Odessa.

Those who received honorable mentions are: Karen Lanier, Midland, for her infrared black & white Vantage Point on 191; J.M. McClurg, Midland, for her color Closeup of Redwood Tank Resi-due; and Angela Schlemeyer, Andrews, for her color print Sunset Reflection on Salt Lake.

Other honorable mention winners are Jack Stanley, Midland, for his black and white photo Tank Stairway and Bruce Wells, Washington, D.C., for his computer-enhanced color print Winter in Wyoming.

Skeet McAuley, a native of the Monahans oil patch judged this year's entries. He moved into the world of academia to teach photography in several universities. He is currently at North Texas State University as well as being a freelance photo journalist.

Focus on Oil '91 is the 13th year for the competition/exhibition.

The Petroleum Museum is open seven days a week: 9-5 Monday-Saturday, 2-5 Sunday. Admission is $3 per adult, $2.50 per senior citizen , school-age children are $1.50, preschoolers are free.

Moriarty says she's learned a lot

By Hillel Italie

NEW YORK (AP) — "I think I'm plain," laughs Cathy Moriarty. "I'm normal. I'm plain. I try not to stand out. I don't wear colors."

Moriarty

The woman saying this has platinum blond hair and a husky voice as lethal as a smoking gun. She's 5-foot-10 and couldn't stand out more if lights were flashing over her head.

Moriarty, the teen-age sensation of "Raging Bull," is a dead ringer for Faye Dunaway circa "Bonnie and Clyde." When she tips her head and smiles, you think her purse is stuffed with banknotes and that Warren Beatty's outside in the getaway car.

"Faye Dunaway should really get busy and write a book so I can do it," joked Moriarty during a recent interview.

"Everyone tells me I look so much like her. When they made 'Mommie Dearest,' they had a part for her daughter and I thought, 'Well, hey ...' But it turns out it was her adopted daughter."

The actress is laughing again, running her hands through her hair and shifting her feet, but the subject now is no joke: the long dry spell of the past decade that made you think her real name was, "What ever happened to Cathy Moriarty?"

"Raging Bull" came out in 1980,

EDITOR'S NOTE: As a popular singer who specializes in old standards, Tony Bennett doesn't think he's one of an endangered species. For one thing, he says, today's young people are starting to like all kinds of music again. Besides, over his long career Bennett has remained popular as pop music fads came and went.

By Mary Campbell

Bennett

Why does he still perform 200 dates a year as he approaches his 65th birthday?

"I like to entertain people," he says. "I like the whole process of entertaining. There's no greater challenge for me than getting out there and trying to knock the people out of their seats so they walk out saying they enjoyed themselves that night.

"It's a struggle; it has to appear effortless at the same time. It's a great joy when you're lucky enough to do something that comes out just right."

Bennett always has liked the best songs by the best songwriters, with great arrangements, played by high-quality musicians. As he got older, he gravitated more and more to jazz players. His next recording will be "One More Time," with the Count Basie Band. The cover will be by painter David Hockney.

"I try not to compromise," Bennett says. "I grew up during the Depression. My Dad died when I was 9. My Mom worked overtime at home, sewing dresses. She'd say, 'Don't give me a cheap dress to work on.' I feel like if I'm going to do a song it better be a good one. It's paid off. If you do a good song you're really starting out on the right foot."

Discussions of popular singing always include talk about phrasing and conveying the meaning of the lyrics. Bennett says, "To this day, Mabel Mercer is the only singer I ever heard who could make me cry or give me goose bumps."

But when he chose 80 cuts from recordings he made from 1950 to 1990 for "Forty Years: the Artistry of Tony Bennett," which Columbia Records will release in July, he did it by music not phrasing. "I chose all recordings that hit the pitch dead center," he says. "If it's very much in tune, the interpretation takes care of itself."

On July 4 Bennett will sing on the Capitol lawn in Washington, with the National Symphony. "I'll celebrate 40 years in show business," he says. Everybody brings picnic baskets and eats under the stars. I did a poster, because I paint also, of the Capitol, with fireworks.

He doesn't say that with regret. "You have a lot more to live for when you're older. You appreciate life more."

Bennett is twice divorced. His 16-year-old daughter, from his second marriage, asked if she could sing to him on a show he'll be doing Aug. 3, his 65th birthday, at the Universal Amphitheater in Los Angeles. "I said, 'Oh, yes. Terrific.' " He has two sons from his first marriage and four grandchildren.

Bennett is much in demand now but his start in show business was slow. Out of the infantry after World War II, he used the GI Bill to attend the American Theater Wing, where he studied voice and bel canto singing.

"Then came years of turndowns until I found myself and they found me," he says. "I started out as a singing waiter in Queens. I was singing in Greenwich Village when Pearl Bailey came in to look at the club where she'd been hired and heard me rehearse. She said, 'If you want me here next week, you keep this boy on.' She was that wonderful.

"I worked on her show. Bob

TEXAS: Hagman expected at Kennedy Center event

(From 2G)

Kahn said the idea for the festival dates back several years, when she was asked by Kennedy Center trustee Caroline Rose Hunt to help find a Texan to perform at the center. Hunt, a Dallas businesswoman, had promised to underwrite the Texas performer with the interest from the Rosewood Hotels-Crescent Endowment Fund she had established.

Kahn said the list of qualified performers, however, grew and grew, evolving into the idea of a festival that would celebrate the state's lively arts.

Kahn, who has spent two year working full-time on the festival as a volunteer, also helped raise about $2.6 million in cash and in-kind contributions worth thousands of dollars more to put on the show.

Exxon Corp. of Irving, the major corporate sponsor, kicked in $500,000, while an estimated $220,000 generated by the Rosewood Hotels-Crescent Endowment Fund is being made available to the festival.

Corporate heads from across Texas are expected at the festival. Actor Larry Hagman, who portrayed villainous oilman J.R. Ewing on television's "Dallas," is also expected, Kahn said. The Dallas Symphony Orchestra, Miss Hunt and her sister Margaret Hunt Hill are dedicating its performance to his mother, the late actress Mary Martin of Weatherford.

Also attending some of the festivities will be the lowly armadillo, the festival's logo, but animal rights activists say they are not pleased. The festival plans to present two armadillos to the National Zoo, and the invitation to the ball promises armadillo races.

"Armadillos belong on the vast Texas plains, not zoo enclosures in the middle of the city," said Siriol Evans, spokeswoman for the People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals. "Compassionate Texans would rather see armadillos roaming the Texas wilderness, instead of being used as publicity tools in Washington."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, JUNE 9, 1991

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Look forward to greater success with creative projects by late summer. An unexpected move in October could be linked to a sensational job offer or glowing romance. Power comes through influential friends and contacts in December. Community service will be rewarded in January 1992. A windfall next April will bring greater financial security. Plan a family reunion in May 1992.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Increased activity at home is pleasing. You feel a need to express yourself artistically. Someone you like has problems that make him less loving now. Exercise great patience and tact.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Peace of mind comes when you get in touch with people who need your assistance. Fun social arrangements can also be made. A spur-of-the-moment trip is one possibility.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A sermon hits home. Domestic changes involve rearranging your possessions. Giving a loved one more space will improve your relationship. Quiet pursuits bring the greatest rewards.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You should be able to do a lot in your area of expertise now. Partners and friends have much to give. You feel generous in turn. An older woman appreciates your assistance.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A younger person is a bundle of contradictions yet implicitly fascinating. Remain centered. Romance thrives when you put yourself in your mate's shoes. Be more spontaneous with your loved ones.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A romantic relationship is very complicated. You will need time to untangle your emotions. Someone may not want to do what you advise. Focus on creating beauty and you will accomplish great things.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Zestful pleasures take you out of yourself. Intellectual endeavors hold more appeal than just relaxing. Your charm wins you admirers of all ages. A generation gap will be bridged.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Partnerships require patience. Getting out of the house is a real tonic. Sharing a new experience with your friends is both exciting and revelatory. You are on the road to success.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You touch people's hearts in a direct and positive way. Make more public appearances. If you decide to spice up your love life, be aware of the risks involved!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A change of scenery will do you a world of good. Go somewhere far away or off the beaten track. Call or meet with people you want to have in your future.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Focusing on household or family matters could be somewhat upsetting today unless you keep your cool. Taking a new approach proves fruitful. Your special way with words will comfort your loved ones.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A period of quiet meditation gives you fresh insights. Do not try to change things too quickly. Remain on good terms with old friends. An enthusiasm for sports is shared by family.

Opening lead: Three of ♡

A kibitzer once sat behind Charles Goren for a session of duplicate bridge. At the end of play, the kibitzer was heard to remark: "He did nothing I couldn't do!"

"That," declared Goren, "is the greatest compliment I have ever been paid!"

We don't know what the kibitzer would have said had he witnessed this hand from a rubber-bridge game. North-South reached four spades after a normal auction, and all that remained was for South to reel in 10 tricks after a heart lead.

East won the first two heart tricks and continued the suit to declarer's jack. After cashing the ace of diamonds and the ace of clubs, declarer ruffed a club in dummy and then ran the jack of trumps to West's king. West had nothing better to do than return a club. Declarer ruffed, drew trumps and claimed the rest of the tricks.

Nothing to it—you could do the same. But would you? Did you notice that declarer made an expert play, without which the contract would have been defeated?

Notice that declarer did not try to cash two rounds of diamonds in an attempt to discard a club—that would have resulted in a defensive ruff and a one-trick set. But it was vital to cash one round of diamonds before ruffing the club.

Had declarer failed to take this precaution, West can exit with a diamond then in with the king of trumps, locking declarer on the table. When declarer tries to return to hand with a red-suit ruff, West will either overruff if South ruffs low, or the ten of spades will be promoted if declarer ruffs high.

True, an opening diamond lead would have sunk the contract, but South had to play skillfully to take advantage of the reprieve.

Institute to host exhibit

The Odessa Art Association's third annual Juried Art Exibition will open at the Art Institute for the Permian Basin until June 29.

The 49 works of art in various media were chosen for the show by juror Ann Templeton from works submitted by Permian Basin artists. Final judging for awards totaling approximately $1500 will be completed by Ms. Templeton. The awards will be presented to the winners at a reception at the Art Institute on Sunday afternoon, June 16 at 3 p.m.

Awards will be given for Best Show and in seven categories. Honorable Mention ribbons, Grumbacher Gold Medallion and Dick Blick awards will also be presented.

Ms. Templeton, artist-painter since 1969, is from Houston and Ruidosa, New Mexico. She teaches as many as 15 art seminars each year in many states and Mexico.

Odessa Art Association is an association for Permian Basin artist. The group meets each month at the Art Institute for artist demonstration and business meetings.

The Art Institute hours are Tuesday-Saturday, from 10 a.m.- 5 p.m. and Sunday from 2 p.m.- 5 p.m. No admission is charged.

Crystal's 'City Slickers' about friendship, trusting

By John Horn

Crystal

Three longtime friends (Crystal, Bruno Kirby and Daniel Stern) fritter away a few weeks every year taking a vacation-adventure together. Chased by the bulls of Pamplona, Spain, on one such jaunt, the three run for their lives.

Yet for all the legwork they really aren't going anywhere.

Mitch Robbins (Crystal) is stuck selling radio advertising time, and his marriage is filled with static. Grocer Phil Berquist (Stern) feigns catnaps to escape from his shrewish mate. Ed Furillo (Kirby), a sporting goods dealer, stands out as the cheeriest of the trio, and his happiness doesn't run too deeply.

At Furillo's and Berquist's insistence, Robbins joins his playmates at a dude ranch where guests pay to drive cattle. A series of mishaps leaves the three pretty much alone on the range, where they must confront not only storms and pregnant cows but their own insecurities and doubts.

"When I came up with the idea for the movie, it wasn't three funny guys hit the plains," said Crystal, who also served as executive producer and pitched the film's premise to writers Lowell Ganz and Babaloo Mandel ("Parenthood").

"It was to tell a story about friendship, and to tell a story about trusting. If friends are friends in good times, they are a better friend if they're there when you're not feeling so good.

"It's also about men and women at a certain age when they enter 'What If?' land, and 'I should have, could have' territories. You sort of forget your purpose in life. You get clouded over. And it's not just an age thing. It's a confusion — a confusion of priorities."

Audiences know Crystal more for his comic reflections than for his insights into the human condition.

Through his work in television's "Soap" and "Saturday Night Live" and the movies "Throw Momma From the Train" and "When Harry Met Sally ...," Crystal has avoided heavy issues in favor of light comedy. Nowadays, though, his jokes seem to carry more weight.

Along with Robin Williams and Whoopi Goldberg, Crystal helps feed, care for and house the homeless through the annual benefit concert Comic Relief.

"Sessions," a comedy series debuting this fall on cable's Home Box Office, explores the labors and laughs of a man in psychotherapy. And then there's "City Slickers."

"I wanted to make a 'Deliverance' with laughs, and I wanted it to be truthful," Crystal said. "If there's no pain in the movie, then I simply have a funny movie. That's OK, but there's so much more to tell."

Jack Palance co-stars in the film as Curly, a veteran cowboy whose prairie wisdom helps Robbins resolve his crisis.

"When Curly says, 'There's nothing like bringing in the herd,' it's a metaphor for the whole piece — finishing something that you set out to do: raising your family, honoring your commitments.

"It's not about cows. It's about yourself and your priorities in life."

"City Slickers" was filmed on location in New Mexico and Colorado. Crystal, Stern and Kirby all learned to ride for the film. Crystal liked his quarterhorse so much he moved him to Southern California after the movie wrapped.

"The movie, I think, has a real beautiful feeling of romance, and there's a simplicity about the West and the cowboys' attitude and point of view about life that helps me in my own life," Crystal said. "I loved being with these guys. I found myself just herding cattle in between takes with the wranglers and hanging out with them. It's simple. It's right to the point."

The film is dotted with small autobiographical details from Crystal's own life — the telephone calls from his mother, his first baseball game. Robbins' exact plight, however, does not mirror precisely the real-life predicaments of Crystal and writers Ganz and Mandel.

"We're not as confused as Mitch about where we're going, but there's a little haze there," Crystal said. "We all took turns talking about where we were at. It's all very real."

Crystal is, of course, far more successful than the mediocre salesman he plays in the film. Still, he knows what growing up — and growing old — is like.

"This is just my job," he said. "I'm a real person, with real problems. I've got a daughter in college, another one who's 13. I'm 43. The thought of being 45 is not my most pleasant thought.

"I choose to deal with it in my own ways — some private, some public. If I can write about it, and help somebody who's going through it to have a good time for two hours, then that's what I do. To anyone who says, 'So what does he know?' That's not fair."

CBS rates first

LOS ANGELES (AP) — CBS won the latest ratings battle, but networks continued to lose viewers during the summer rerun season.

For the second consecutive week, ratings released by the A.C. Nielsen Co. were in the single digits. According to figures released Tuesday, CBS finished first with a 9.6 average. Each ratings point represents 931,000 homes.

ABC was second with 9.4. NBC, hampered by lackluster ratings for its broadcasts of two National Basketball Association Conference finals games, was third with a 9 average. It failed to place any shows in the top 10.

Among the few non-reruns last week was the final episode of ABC's yuppie drama "thirtysomething." The network's recent cancellation announcement helped make May 28's closing installment the No. 4 show on television last week, the highest ranking in the series' four-year history.

The back-to-back CBS Monday night comedies "Murphy Brown" and "Designing Women" tied for fifth. ABC's "20-20" newsmagazine was seventh. CBS' reality drama "Rescue 911" was eighth.

ABC's Friday night hits "Family Matters" and "Full House" finished ninth and 10th respectively.

Videos, play pique interest in Will Rogers

CLAREMORE, Okla. (AP) — The video releases of Will Rogers' movies and the popularity of Broadway's "The Will Rogers Follies," have resulted in a resurgence of interest in the wry Oklahoma humorist.

"It's already had an impact on our attendance," said Joe Carter, director of the Will Rogers Memorial. "I see a lot of people who are obviously foreign tourists. They're hearing about it."

The Ziegfeld-style extravaganza about Rogers, who died 56 years ago, garnered six Tony awards last Sunday night, including best musical.

"Show business is big business. It's great business," an exuberant Carter said. "Even if you don't know who Will Rogers is you'd like the show. And as far as Oklahoma is concerned, it's just magic.

One of Rogers' sons, Jimmy Rogers of Bakersfield, Calif., said he was thrilled with the Tony awards.

"I'm a little biased, but I wouldn't hesitate to recommend it as a good show for anybody," Rogers said. "It had beautiful dancing, the routines were wonderful ... it has a little bit of everything for everybody."

"I think my mother would have loved it," Rogers said. "Dad would have liked it a lot better after he rewrote it. He was always rewriting things. Really, though, he'd have loved it. It was an excellent show."

Earlier this year, 20th Century Fox made available through video four of Rogers' hit movies from the 1930s. That, followed by the debut of "The Will Rogers Follies," has business booming at the Claremore museum.

Steiger says health, family more important than career

By Hillel Italie

NEW YORK (AP) — Rod Steiger was obsessed with movies for most of his life and there are moments on screen that make him sure it was worth it.

Steiger

His famous car ride with Marlon Brando in "On the Waterfront" is only the most obvious example. Steiger also cherishes the end of the "Pawnbroker," when he confronts the death of his young assistant, and the heart-to-heart he has with Sidney Poitier during "In the Heat of the Night."

He loves talking about the work that went into those films, but physical and psychological problems have since persuaded the actor to change his priorities.

In the late 1960s, not long after winning an Academy Award for "In the Heat of the Night," he went into an eight-year depression, touched off by fears of his own mortality. His third marriage, to actress Claire Bloom, broke up. He had bypass surgery a decade ago.

Steiger is now 66 years old and well aware the days of Oscar nominations are probably gone forever. But the actor insists he has no regrets. He considers himself lucky, appreciating the time spent with his fourth wife, Paula, who he's been married to for five years, and thankful he can work at all in a profession he loves.

"It took a bypass to make me wake up," said Steiger, in a recent interview.

"I finally found out that my health and the love of my wife and my family are more important than my professional status and success. When I was younger, nothing came before my profession. Now, I know what's more important."

A burly man with a gift for telling stories, the actor retains the round face and watchful eyes that were the only recognizable features of someone who looked different in every film.

He's played Napoleon and Al Capone, W.C. Fields and Mussolini. He's had dark hair, light hair and none at all. He's worn beards and mustaches, sunglasses and reading glasses. In the 1968 cult thriller "No Way to Treat a Lady," his aliases include a transvestite, a police officer, an Irish priest and a German plumber.

His latest film is an adaptation of Carson McCullers' classic novella, "The Ballad of the Sad Cafe." Vanessa Redgrave stars as the "powerful blunderbuss" Miss Amelia Evans and Keith Carradine plays the evil ex-husband who comes back to haunt her.

Steiger wears a white beard for his role as the Rev. T.M. Willin, who performs the wedding ceremony for Miss Amelia and also delivers a speech based on one of McCullers' most beautiful passages, about the differences between loving and being loved.

"I like it because I don't get many chances in my career to play nice people," Steiger said. "I played one of the nicest people who ever lived, I starred in 'Marty' on television, but then I did Jud in 'Oklahoma!' and he's the classic villain.

"Hollywood has a one-way vision. They put you into slots and now they're doing it with Anthony Hopkins, who's a friend of mine and was so wonderful in 'Silence of the Lambs.' He's the man you loved to hate, which I didn't like being."

Steiger was born in West Hampton, N.Y., in 1925 and after serving four years in the South Pacific during World War II, studied theater in Manhattan. He was a 55-year-old detective in his Broadway debut, a 1951 revival of Clifford Odets' "Night Music," and also appeared in hundreds of television productions.

"On the Waterfront," released in 1954, made him a film star and brought him the first of three Oscar nominations. He followed with "The Court-Martial of Billy Mitchell," "The Harder They Fall" and "Oklahoma!" among others.

His peak came a decade later. In 1965, Steiger starred in "The Pawnbroker," playing a Holocaust survivor who had become a miserly, embittered old man. He was again nominated for an Academy Award, and finally won it for "In the Heat of the Night" as the racist sheriff who needs Poitier's help to solve a murder.

What makes those films so special for Steiger is how much of himself he put into them, coming up with new dialogue and exploring his own feelings as a way of getting inside his characters.

The actor boils it down to three stages: believability, improvisation and something he describes as "building a concept," a level he thinks he reached in the "Pawnbroker" when he walked out of his shop and leaned over the body of his slain assistant.

"I knelt down and put my hands in the fake blood and I was thinking of my daughter (Anna) the whole time and also of a painting with a mother bent over her daughter," Steiger explained.

"I open my mouth and put my head back to scream. Now, this all happens in a millionth of a second. My intellect said to my instinct, 'Don't make a sound.' I have won money, I have people who say, 'You screamed in that scene,' and I'd say, 'I bet you $10 I didn't scream in that scene.' It's a very powerful moment.

"I remember 'The Godfather III,' when I saw (Al) Pacino open his mouth to scream at the end after his daughter was shot. He did the same thing. I could have killed him. I said, 'Wait a minute! Wait a minute!' "

BENNETT: Singer says he doesn't compromise

(From 3G)

Hope came in. He got a kick out of me being the only white guy on stage. He was at the Paramount Theater with Les Brown's band. He said, 'I'm going to put you on the stage.' He changed my name to Tony Bennett. He said Anthony Benedetto was too long for a marquee. We didn't know there would be an Engelbert Humperdinck."

That year, 1950, he also signed with Columbia Records. In 1951, one day, he recorded four songs in 3½ hours. Three of them, "Because of You," "Blue Velvet" and "Cold, Cold Heart," sold a million copies each. The other was "While We're Young," by Alec Wilder, which Bennett picked.

Producer Mitch Miller chose the country song, "Cold, Cold Heart," and put strings with it. Bennett says he got a call from its writer, Hank Williams. "He said, 'Thanks for ruining my song.' But I think he was happy he got all that money from it."

Then, in the early '60s, the Beatles came along and ballad singers were replaced by rock 'n' rollers. Bennett was able to keep singing. Why? He smiles, "Right in the center of that, 'I Left My Heart in San Francisco' came along, like a piece of grass coming up through cement."

It's still his biggest hit, the song that he can't leave the stage without singing.

Looking back, Bennett says, "A lot is different. After my first record hit I did seven shows a day at the Paramount with Louis Prima and Keely Smith. In the morning, it was teen-agers, afternoon, senior citizens, evening, married couples and lovers. Now everybody is on that demographic thing. It hits me strange. Nobody thought of how old Tommy Dorsey was or Sammy Davis or how old their audience was."

As a popular singer, Bennett doesn't think he's one of an endangered species. Mentioning people like Carly Simon and Linda Ronstadt who've made albums of standards, and Paul McCartney, seen on MTV playing jazz, he says, "Younger musicians are starting to cross over the bridge, to sustain their careers.

"Young people are starting to like all kinds of music again, which I think is very correct."

MORIARTY: Actress 'never gave up' and is regarded by many as the finest film of the decade. It won an Academy Award for Robert De Niro and brought Moriarty, a high school senior the year before, an Oscar nomination.

But that was a long time ago. After co-starring with John Belushi and Dan Aykroyd in "Neighbors," Moriarty disappeared. A car crash in 1982 required back surgery. In 1985, she was all set to star opposite Jack Nicholson in "The Two Jakes" but filming was canceled at the last minute.

There was also a stormy marriage to manager Carmine D'Anna and a stubborn, destructive pattern: wanting roles she couldn't get and disliking the ones she could.

"I learned a lot of things," she said, ticking off reminders to herself as if they were ribbons to tie around her fingers.

"Don't take anything for granted. If you don't believe in yourself, nobody else well. Have a little more confidence. Don't be so hard on yourself. Be a little harder on yourself. Learn from your experiences. Don't dwell on things. Get on with your life."

Moriarty can talk about it now because she's finally become what she always wanted to be: a working actress. Three years ago, she re-emerged in "White of the Eye." She was seen last Christmas in "Kindergarten Cop" and will be featured in the adaptation of the Pulitzer Prize-winning novel "The Mambo Kings Play Songs of Love," now in production.

She currently can be seen in "Soapdish," a parody of daytime soap operas, a cross between "Network" and "All About Eve." Sally Field stars as the aging Celeste Talbert, the much-honored "America's Sweetheart" who's all too aware her stardom could disappear at any time.

Among those looking forward to her downfall is Moriarty's character, the aptly named Montana Moorehead, Celeste's scheming co-star on "The Sun Also Sets."

"I had to audition on tape and I had to be wicked, yeah. I remember I wasn't supposed to do it until 6:30. I walked in the door at like 10 after 4, and they said, 'Can you start at 5:00 because people have to leave?'

"I was so cranky and so mad, maybe that helped. I was more nervous and more wound up. ... But basically," she said, quick to make the point, "I'm a nice person."

Moriarty is certainly determined. She first wanted to act at age 14 after seeing the Judy Holliday film "Born Yesterday" and soon began trying out disguises and fake accents.

She was attending high school in Yonkers when she got to know Joe Pesci, who played De Niro's brother in "Raging Bull." He suggested she try out.

Too young to be intimidated, Moriarity pushed hard, auditioning again and again and eventually getting the job five months later. The reward was being on a film set with De Niro playing her husband and Martin Scorsese behind the camera.

"Where do you go from there?" she asked. "Couldn't I do every movie with these people? I didn't want to work with anyone else. It took a long time to come back. I had nothing else to show. I did things in high school, but nobody ever showed up to see me in a play."

These days, Moriarty insists she can't stop smiling. She's 30 and thinks her time has arrived. Past troubles are dismissed as self-inflicted. Rejections are accepted as part of the business. She wants to rent "Raging Bull," a film she hasn't seen since it first came out, and remembered the day on "Mambo Kings" when she learned to face herself in a way she never had before.

"We had done one of the most important scenes in the movie and one of the actors says, 'Just look at the rushes for five minutes.' He knows I never watch what I've done, but I sat down and watched it — and it was OK.

"I've had a real good life, laughed a lot, and I had days where you don't go out of the house because you cried a little," she said. "But I'm a big girl now, all grown up.

"I stuck to my acting. I hung on. I did OK. I never gave up."

Thomas wants to be remembered for St. Jude's

By Ron Berthel

NEW YORK (AP) — For decades, Danny Thomas had been one of the world's great storytellers. His last story — and his best — is the story of his life, which he tells in "Make Room for Danny" (Putnam), the autobiography published only a month before he died on Feb. 6.

In one of his last interviews, Thomas said that a publisher had been after him to write a book years ago. He turned down the offer because "when I was a youngster, my mother told me that if I carried the burden of yesterdays around, I would be a hunchback by age 21. She told me, 'Forget yesterdays.' "

But, he said, he decided to finally write his book "before I do forget!"

He needn't have worried — his life was a pretty unforgettable one.

Thomas made his mark as a nightclub entertainer before achieving widespread fame as the star of the enormously popular "Make Room for Daddy" TV series. He began his book with the story of his modest upbringing as one of 10 children born to Lebanese immigrant parents in Deerfield, Mich., and carried it through to his efforts in raising millions of dollars for the St. Jude's Children's Research Hospital in Memphis, Tenn.

As Thomas told in the book, the turning point of his career and of his life came in 1940, not long after his first child, Marlo, was born. Thomas lived in Detroit then, and had aspirations of becoming a character actor in radio, but was stuck instead working as a master of ceremonies in nightclubs. "As much as I loved that type of work later, I grew to hate it at the time," he wrote.

Just when Thomas was at what seemed to be a hopeless point in his life, one of the nightclub patrons, who admittedly had had too much to drink, told him of how he had prayed to St. Jude, the patron saint of hopeless cases, to cure his desperately ill wife. Her tumor, the man related, had disappeared overnight. "The drunk staggered off," Thomas wrote, "but I couldn't get him and his story out of my mind."

The next day, Thomas went to a Catholic church, fell on his knees and prayed to St. Jude. "I blurted out those words, 'Help me find my way in life and I'll build you a shrine,' " he wrote. His career soon began to soar, and Thomas devoted much of the rest of his life — up to his last days — to keeping his part of the bargain he had made with St. Jude.

And not only did Thomas become a star himself, but he produced — in more ways than one — a number of other stars.

As a TV producer, following the 11-year run of "Make Room for Daddy," Thomas and his friend and partner, Sheldon Leonard, headed what one journalist labeled a "Comic Supermart," a production company that treated viewers to such classic fare as "The Real McCoys," "The Dick Van Dyke Show" and "The Andy Griffith Show."

And, as a father, he saw two of his three children make their own marks in the entertainment field. Marlo is a star who has appeared in several stage and TV productions following her 1960s hit TV series "That Girl!" And son Tony is an executive with a TV production company whose credits include such successes as "Soap," "The Golden Girls" and "Empty Nest."

Thomas, like Bob Hope and Jimmy Durante, owned one of the most famous noses in the entertainment field. In the book, he told how his prominent "honker," as he calls it, and his refusal to have it trimmed stood in the way — so to speak — of his chance of becoming a Hollywood leading man.

Thomas' book is warm and funny, nostalgic and inspirational. It is a humbly written story told by a gracious man whose rich, rewarding life would seem to have given him every reason to glorify himself, but who chose to glorify others instead.

In the interview, Thomas said that St. Jude's Children's Research Hospital "is the most important thing in my life. It's the reason I was born.

"If I'm remembered, I want it to be for St. Jude's."

Book in-depth look at Gehrig

from his very domineering mother. She encouraged her son to work hard and get a good education, and the youngster took any odd jobs he could find to help the family.

At Columbia University, Gehrig excelled in both football and baseball, but it was his ability to pound a baseball that excited scouts. One scout told Yankee owner Ed Barrow that he had found another Ruth.

Gehrig and Ruth became the most feared back-to-back hitters the game has known. In 1927, when Ruth hit his record 60 home runs, Gehrig hit 47 home runs, with a remarkable 175 RBIs and .373 average. Despite his success, Gehrig was constantly in the shadow of the flamboyant Ruth, who always provided newspaper reporters with a story.

The book reveals the often-overlooked fact that when Ruth hit his "called shot" home run off Charley Root and the Chicago Cubs in the 1932 World Series, Gehrig followed with a mighty clout of his own.

During spring training of 1938, Gehrig sensed that his reflexes seemed slower. It would prove to be an indication of the onset of amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, a progressive, degenerative disease of the nervous system. In spite of his illness, he hit .295, with 29 home runs and 114 RBIs — a great season for most players, but subpar for Gehrig.

By the following spring, his once-muscular body had deteriorated to the point where he couldn't hold a bat or tie his shoelaces without pain. After eight games at the start of the season, he removed himself from the lineup and retired, ending the Iron Horse's extraordinary record of having played in 2,130 consecutive games. He died in 1941, days before his 38th birthday, of the illness that is now commonly called Lou Gehrig's disease.

At a time when young people are searching for heroes, the world could use another Lou Gehrig. His manner on and off the field made him the true Pride of the Yankees. Fans of all ages will find Robinson's book enjoyable reading from beginning to end.
