Decision could be 'windfall,' oilmen say

From Wire Reports

A federal judge's decision calling the so-called windfall profits tax unconstitutional is "way past due" and will be a boon to the oil and gas industry if the ruling holds up through the appeals process, Texas oilmen and state officials say.

U.S. District Judge Ewing T. Kerr in Cheyenne, Wyo., on Thursday ruled that the tax — which specifically exempts oil produced in Alaska — violates a constitutional requirement that all taxes be applied uniformly.

Texas was among 30 parties who intervened in the case, filed in October 1980. The suit pitted a small Colorado oil company and three Wyoming oil royalty owners against the federal government.

Kerr said he ruled the tax unconstitutional because it exempts new oil produced above the Arctic Circle in Alaska, excluding the giant Prudhoe Bay field.

The U.S. Constitution requires all federal taxes to be uniform throughout the United States, Kerr said, but the Alaskan oil is specifically exempted from the Crude Oil Windfall Profits Tax of 1980.

"The windfall profits tax ignores this requirement," Kerr wrote. "The act, on its face, says that one state, Alaska, is not subject to the same tax at the same rate as all the other states. This is a clear violation of the constitutional requirement of uniformity."

Kerr said he couldn't just strike down the Alaskan exemption because that would amount to judicial lawmaking. If he invalidated only the Alaskan exemption, Kerr said, the windfall profits tax would be extended to all the crude oil produced in Alaska.

The judge said the government should repay the windfall profit taxes paid by the Calvin Petroleum Corp. of Fort Lupton, Colo., and other plaintiffs between March and December 1980.

Kerr added, however, that the government should continue to collect the tax until "a higher court has had occasion to pass upon the correctness" of his decision.

Article I, Section 8 of the Constitution gives Congress the right to levy taxes but adds that "all duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States."

The intervenors included Texas, Louisiana, the Washington-based Independent Petroleum Association of America (IPAA), the American Farm Bureau Federation, independent oil companies, royalty owners and the Mountain States Legal Foundation, formerly headed by Interior Secretary James Watt.

The government began levying the tax in March 1980 and had collected an estimated $38 billion between March and December 1980. Mountain States Legal Foundation President Roger J. Marzulla said last year the windfall profits tax could bring the federal government $227.3 billion by 1988.

Kerr said the more than 30 plaintiffs in the suit should get back the windfall profits taxes they paid between March and December 1980, but added the government should continue collecting the tax until a higher court reviews his decision.

The federal government will have the option of appealing the case either to a federal appeals court or directly to

Although Midland oilmen are delighted with a ruling by a federal judge that the windfall profit tax is unconstitutional, they are not predicting it as a boom, but rather a shot in the arm for Midland.

And while one congressman and senator were pleased, the mayor sees the action as "the first sane thing that's been done."

Ed Thompson, executive vice president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association, said this morning the ruling is "what we've been hoping and working for all these years and of course we are delighted. If it comes through it will be a boost for the area."

The PBPA joined the Independent Petroleum Association of America — along with some 30 other parties — as opponents of a multi-billion dollar windfall profits tax on oil production. The suit was filed in October 1980.

"We were hopeful about the suit," Thompson said. "We believe the tax is unconstitutional because it is selective, but our arguments have been turned down in other courts. This is the first step."

If the ruling is upheld, more than 30 plantiffs in the suit should get back the windfall profit taxes they paid between March and December 1980, according to Kerr.

Thompson said that more than likely the ruling will be appealed.

"The government has 60 days to appeal the ruling and if they don't, it will probably hold up, which means it will be a boost. We've been taxed $7 a barrel right off the top," Thompson said.

Bomb search

ODESSA — Ector County Sheriff's Department personnel closed the courthouse here early today and evacuated about 139 inmates from the county jail after a "serious" bomb threat that apparently proved to be a false alarm.

Sheriff Bob Brookshire asked employees of courthouse offices to stay away from the structure until bomb squads determined whether a bomb was in the courthouse. The sheriff said the threat indicated the bomb was to explode at 10:30 a.m. today; however that deadline passed peacefully.

First notification of the possibility a bomb was in the courthouse came from an informant about 6 p.m. Thursday, Brookshire said, while additional information — from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms office in Lubbock — was received about 10 p.m. The sources led the sheriff's department to consider the threat serious, the sheriff said.

About 9:30 a.m. today, 82 of the county jail prisoners were transferred from the jail on the courthouse's top floor to Midland County Jail. Another 40 were transferred to Monahans and Odessa Police Department took 17 of the jail inmates, Brookshire said. The prisoners were transported in Ector County Independent School District

Area community colleges, UTPB begin cooperative effort

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

After years of moving in different directions, the Permian Basin's three community colleges and the University of Texas of the Permian Basin will cooperate in an effort to provide a complete baccalaureate program for Permian Basin residents seeking an educational degree.

The Permian Area Cooperative Plan (PACAP), developed to study and improve the future relationship of UTPB and area community colleges, is to be implemented immediately with some programs expected to begin as early as next fall. A citizen's advisory committee and an administrative committee were appointed in October by the UT-System Board of Regents following pressures from "Friends of UTPB," a citizen-group advocating four-year status for the upper-level institution.

Early reports from the regents' meeting Oct. 8 in Arlington were confusing and contradicting as "Friends of UTPB" claimed a victory for four-year status and presidents of area community colleges stated four-year status was not an issue nor was it approved by regents.

ACCORDING TO James Powell, president of the board of regents, during a press conference at Midland College Thursday, regents appointed the two committees during the October meeting to strengthen the original two-plus-two concept. The plan calls for joint efforts by UTPB and area community colleges to provide a "first-rate four year college and university experience, leading to an appropriate variety of bachelor's degrees, for young people who desire to receive their undergraduate education in the Permian Basin area."

Dr. Bryce Jordan, vice chancellor of academic affairs for the UT-System, said that while a cooperative concept with community colleges is successful at other upper-division institutions, none have a plan as thorough as the one developed for the Permian Basin. Under PACAP, seven major areas of cooperation will be implemented by subcommittees of the administrative committee, which met Wednesday and consists of the presidents of Midland College, Odessa College, Howard College and UTPB and superintendents of Midland, Ector County and McCamey independent school districts.

The various areas of the cooperative effort between the community colleges and UTPB include jointly developed curricula, joint student recruitment in the area high schools, joint student services such as academic advisement and admissions, joint student activities, joint faculty appointments, linkages with the public schools and community relations.

AN EXECUTIVE committee will confer with the subcommittees on a week-by-week basis, according to Powell. The executive committee, chaired by Dr. Jess H. Parrish, MC president, consists of OC president Phil Speegle, UTPB acting president Dr. Donald T. Rippey, Howard College president Charles Hays and MISD superintendent Dr. Joseph P. Baressi.

"The subcommittees will be given specific tasks in implementing the philosophies," Jordan explained. He said,

Nation's jobless rate shatters post-war records

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's unemployment rate climbed to 10.4 percent in October as joblessness among blue-collar and full-time workers shattered the post-war records set only a month before, the Labor Department said today.

Nearly 300,000 people joined the jobless rolls last month, swelling the unemployment total to 11.6 million.

Overall, the department reported, seasonally adjusted unemployment rose 0.3 percentage point, from September's 10.1 percent to 10.4. Since the economy fell into recession in the late summer of 1981, some 3.7 million people have lost their jobs.

Blue-collar workers, hard-hit by business failures, plant closings and slumping sales, registered a 15.9 percent unemployment rate, up 0.3 percentage point from September and the highest since such figures were first compiled in 1948.

Joblessness among full-time workers spurted from 10.1 percent to 10.5 while the rate for part-time workers stood at 10.1, down from 10.5 percent.

"We have never had the rate for full-time workers exceed that for part-time workers," noted bureau analyst Deborah Klein. "I think that's clearly a sign of the recession and its impact on the durable goods (manufacturing) sector."

The jobless rate among construction workers alone reached 23 percent, a new high.

For other population categories, new jobless peaks were reached for:

—Adult men, 9.8 percent, up from 9.6.

—Adult women, 8.6, up from 8.3.

—Whites, 9.3, up from 9.0.

—Hispanics, 15.2, up from 14.6.

—Married men, 7.6, up from 7.3.

Teenage unemployment rost 0.3 percentage point, to 24.0 percent, matching previous record highs.

At the White House, spokesman Larry Speakes said President Reagan is "sympathetic and concerned about the difficulties of those who are unemployed" but does not intend to alter his economic policies.

Speakes said Reagan believes his program of tax and spending cuts "will bring results in unemployment in the in the near future. ... We are confident that unemployment will begin to come down."

But Massachussets Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, ranking Democrat on the Senate Labor Committee, said the new figures "refute the convenient claim that prosperity is just around the corner. As our first priority when Congress returns to session later this month, we must renew our effort to enact an immediate job program to put people back to work."

Local unemployment down slightly

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Unemployment figures for Midland, released by the Texas Employment Commission last week, showed a decrease from 4.8 percent in August to 4.7 percent in September, according to Charmian Carl, TEC employment supervisor. But even with the slight decrease, lines are still long around the Midland agency.

"Yesterday we were swamped," Mrs. Carl said today. "This morning we're swamped. Yesterday, when we opened the doors there were close to 20 people waiting to file claims."

Although October estimates for the Midland area won't be released until Nov. 22, Terence Travland, assistant chief of the economic research department of TEC in Austin, said figures released this morning show actual statewide unemployment in October at 7.6 percent, reflecting unemployment for 554,900 Texans. The figure is down from the 8 percent recorded in September.

"But it really doesn't say very much about any significant changes in the economy," Travland cautioned. "This (slight decrease) typically happens between September and October. The situation hasn't improved all that much, nor has it worsened. Nothing much has happened."

Another group of figures, called seasonal series, show statewide unemployment at 8.3 percent in October, down from 8.4 percent in September, Mrs. Carl reported.

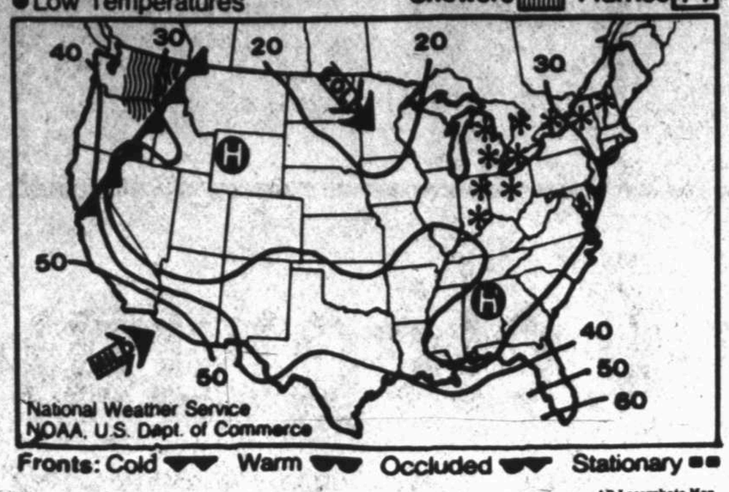

According to Travland, the seasonal figures are "a statistical manipulation which attempts to discount seasonal impact, the idea being that if you could remove the impact of seasonal fluctua-

'Windfall' decision favored by oilmen

IPAA is the major Washington lobbying organization for approximately 12,000 independent producers of oil and gas, many of which are in Texas.

The association filed the suit on grounds that the windfall tax, enacted in March 1980 as a major component of President Carter's energy program, violated the Fifth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

Rep. Kent Hance, a Lubbock Democrat whose bill to repeal the windfall profits tax is pending in Congress, cautioned that the oilmen's fight is far from over.

"Now we reach the second stage," he said. "You know the government will appeal it, and if we continue to win, you know there's going to be members of Congress that will re-introduce the windfall profits tax to apply it to all states, including Alaska.

"Then comes the true colors of President Reagan, who campaigned in Texas that the tax should be abolished. Because if a new law is passed by Congress, he will have an opportunity to veto it. And I would hold him to that promise," he said from Austin, where he was attending a dinner.

Julian Martin, executive director of the West Texas Oil and Gas Association, which is involved in the suit, said the ruling is "a realization that the tax is an unfair special excise tax."

"We welcome this as great news. Lifting the tax will release money for exploration and development at a time when we really need it," he said.

Midlanders see 'boost' if ruling upheld

certainly would" put some Permian Basin rigs back in operation and it "would put $5 to $10 a barrel back in the producers' pockets."

"This would keep more money here locally, rather than sending it to Washington, which would mean more money for the producers to use for exploration," McPeters said.

Thompson also speculated that the ruling, if upheld, will put more money back in the operators' hands, opening up more jobs in the Permian Basin. But he cautioned that "we won't see any effect because there is nothing final."

"It's the first step back," he said. "We did get a favorable ruling out of a federal court," Thompson said.

Arden Grover, chairman of the PBPA, said the association is reviewing the court decision before making any official comment on the effect it would have in the Permian Basin, "but we are naturally pleased by this initial development. It's too early to determine whether the government will appeal this decision, but we anticipate that they will."

Thompson said because of the 60-day time period allowed for an appeal, the Permian Basin will not be affected before the first of the year.

"I would say it won't be until Jan. 4 before we see any effect, but if they (the government) haven't appealed and the ruling is upheld, it's just possible we can get this stopped and start seeing the checks roll in," Thompson said, adding that refunds could take six months or more after a final ruling.

Mayor G. Thane Akins, learning of the judge's ruling late this morning, remarked, "It's probably a lone voice crying in the wilderness. The whole tax has been idiocy."

Akins, a petroleum engineer, explained the tax never made sense. It was imposed at a time that the United States was trying to become independent of Middle Eastern oil.

"It's not a question of whether or not it's fair," he said of the WPT. "It came at a time we need to be plowing that money back into searching for more oil. The tax was sheer stupidity from an economic sense."

That tax cut into profits of the oil companies and the firms ended up spending more than twice their profits searching for more oil. Also, this left the companies with little money for investing.

"It'd be wonderful" if the judge's ruling is upheld, remarked Akins, adding that he doubts if the ruling will hold.

Congress has become accustomed to that large amount of revenue flowing into the federal government's coffers. And with the country already operating on a budget with a large deficit, Akins said he expects the tax to be reimposed by Congress.

"Rather than cut back on spending, Congress will try to come up with another source of revenue," he said.

The judge's ruling will mean a "tremendous boom" for the oil industry in terms of money to be spent on searching for oil and gas "instead of sending it to the IRS. It would be a tremendous help to our area."

However, the mayor said he doubts if Midland would go through a boom like it did in the summer of 1981. "There is still lots of room for good, steady growth if the government would get off our back."

And Tom Loeffler, congressman who represents Midland in the 21st District, this morning reiterated his feelings that the WPT is the "most heinous and ridiculous tax ever levied" and said the federal judge's decision "is one step toward relief from such an ill-conceived tax."

But he was disappointed that the judge chose to address only the disparity of the Alaska exemption and not the other two questions raised by the plaintiff — especially the due process issue.

"I believe levying such a severe tax on just one segment of our economy, which already pays billions of dollars of federal, state and local taxes, is unfair. It penalizes the producers, royalty owners and ultimately the consumer."

The congressman, who on Tuesday was re-elected to a third term, pointed to a need to encourage production of domestic oil and gas in light of consumers' cries that oil and gas prices are too high.

"It's past time that America realizes that without a Windfall Profits Tax, and without the market dislocations and price disparities of the Natural Gas Policy Act, there would be sufficient quantities of oil and gas at a fair price. If these aberrations of the free market were eliminated, we would not see a downturn in domestic drilling activities as has occurred in the past."

Although pleased to hear of the judge's ruling, Loeffler was cautious in his optimism and pointed out the ruling may not be upheld if taken to a higher court. "And we must not lose sight of the complexion of the new Congress which will convene next year which could be more hostile to our energy industry. For starters, however, I salute Judge Kerr's decision."

U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, who was attacked by his opponent Jim Collins in the senate race that ended Tuesday for pushing up the tax, said today in a statement released from his office, "I have opposed the Windfall Profits Tax from the beginning. The district court ruling is a step in the right direction in the legal process toward getting rid of this tax.

"As I have said all along, the Windfall Profits Tax has proven to be a disincentive to production of crude oil in the United States," he concluded.

Joe Liberty senior vice president of Rauscher Pierce Refsnes in Midland, said if Thursday's ruling is upheld, "That'll really take the lid off these oil stocks."

Oil industry stocks have enjoyed improved performance as a result of the recent market rally, but have lagged behind the market as a whole.

However, Liberty noted, oil stock performance was only slightly improved this morning. "The market's not saying 'wow this has turned it around on a dime.'"

Overall, Liberty said, the court ruling is a very positive sign. "It's still more evidence the pendulum is swinging back the other way," he said. "One more reflection of a trend toward more conservatism."

Bruce Burrow, president of B&G Energy Corp., one of Midland's smallest independent operations, predicted an increase in drilling activity if the ruling is upheld. Without a Windfall Profits Tax to pay, Burrows said, oilmen will have 18-20 percent more money to invest.

"You'll se an upswing in drilling and an upswing in Midland," Burrows said.

However, Jack Thornton, exploration manager of Conquest Exploration in Midland, expects the ruling to have little effect.

"The way we look at it," he said, "it would improve it a little, but there would be no great big boom."

Thornton said changes in the tax laws have done more than anything else to reduce the amount of money available for drilling and exploration, and although repeal of the WPT would return some money to the industry, it won't be enough to overcome the effect of the tax laws.

Ector County jail prisoners are loaded on an Ector County Independent School District bus in preparation for transfer to the Midland County Jail after a bomb threat forced the evacuation of the county jail in Odessa. Eighty-two prisoners were transferred to Midland, while others were taken to the Odessa City Jail and Monahans. The prisoners were expected to remain in Midland only until this afternoon, according to a spokesman for the Midland County Sheriff's Department.

Brookshire praised Midland County Sheriff Dallas Smith for his assistance during the incident, saying, "He sure is cooperative."

Shortly after the bomb threat had been received, an Ector County reserve deputy, Max Emmert, flew his private plane to Dallas to pick up a bomb expert from the ATF office there.The ATF officer, Cpl. Ron Barzyk of Dallas, began searching the courthouse about 5 a.m. today with a bomb-sniffing German shepherd named Bo.

The flight to Dallas by Emmert avoided what would have been a three-hour delay in getting the bomb squad to Odessa on a commercial flight, said the sheriff.

However, two exterior and top-to-bottom interior searches turned up only a .22-caliber shell casing that apparently was used in some construction work.

"You're always in the dark in a situation like this," Barzyk said. "It's variable; you're trying to read somebody else's mind."

Brookshire estimated that 12-14 Department of Public Safety officers, 10-15 Odessa police officers, about 20 reserve Sheriff's officers and 20-25 regular Sheriff's Department officers were working at the scene.

All prisoners were evacuated by 9:30 a.m. and shortly thereafter officers began moving onlookers and media personnel behind barricades one and two blocks away from the courthouse. Officers also evacuated everyone from businesses near the courthouse.

The courthouse and jail, located on Grant Street in downtown Odessa, are currently undergoing an expansion, with construction equipment and scaffolding around the east side of the building on Texas Street.

"National figures, in fact, did go up," Travland added. Seasonal figures show national unemployment up from 10.1 percent in September to 10.4 percent in October, an increase that has risen to the worst level in four decades, according to private economists.

Travland said the national "actual series," which do not take into account the seasonal fluctuations common between September and October, indicate the 9.7 percent unemployment rate increased from September to 9.9 percent in October.

Midland's 1982 September percentage of 4.7, reflecting unemployment for 2,900 Midlanders, is down from the September 1981 figure of 5.7 percent, which reflected unemployment for 3,550 people in Midland, Mrs. Carl said.

"Apparently, we're in very good shape compared to Odessa and El Paso, those areas," she added. In Odessa, the September unemployment figure stood at 7.2 percent compared to 3.9 percent the previous September.

"They have very nearly doubled," she pointed out.

According to Travland, the ruling that the Windfall Profits Tax is unconstitutional has provided optimism for some people.

"If it (the ruling) holds up, most of the people I've talked with in the oil business say it would be helpful," he said. "But that type of ruling typically goes through several courts. Those kinds of things can go on for some time."

Area colleges to cooperate with UTPB

for example, that in studying joint curricula, the subcommittee would try to develop a "program absolutely tied together, flowing a student through two years of community college and two years of UTPB in order to get a baccalaureate degree."

Jordan said that if community colleges and UTPB can approach the recruitment of high school students by emphasizing that there is a way to obtain a degree with "absolutely smooth sailing through the curriculum," of both community and upper level campuses, recruitment should be more successful than in the past. One idea that might be produced from the subcommittee could be to retain certain "lower division courses" on the community college campus, he added.

Other possibilities include assigning a student an academic adviser that would continue with that student through all four years at both schools and the joint appointment of personnel, he said. By jointly appointing certain faculty members, the Permian Basin would be able to obtain more quality instructors with different areas of specialty, he pointed out. He added that there is a possibility that a community college instructor could be positioned at the UTPB campus, or vice versa.

"THE PURPOSE IS to produce an integrated type of college experience while leaving all four institutions with their own identity and their own government," he said.

PACAP, which also aims at broadening the scope of graduate offerings at UTPB, "will require expanded efforts on the part of both the area community colleges and the University of Texas System," Powell said. "If we are successful, the Permian Basin area will have an appropriately broad range of educational opportunities beyond the high school, including applied science and engineering."

Although the main thrust of the program is to offer Permian Basin students and residents a means in which to obtain a baccalaureate degree without leaving the area, Jordan pointed out that students from other communities will be attracted to the two-plus-two concept as courses of study expand and improve in quality.

While such cooperative plans with community colleges are in existence on a lesser scale at other upper-division institutions, Jordan pointed out that PACAP is scheduled to be implemented more quickly. "Largely, those (cooperative plans at other institutions) have grown over a long period of time. We want this to move more quickly."

He added that the first interim subcommittee report is expected Dec. 7.

WHEN ASKED ABOUT the possibility of four-year status for UTPB on down the road, Powell replied, "Our effort is to provide baccalaureate degrees and graduate degrees for citizens and students of the Permian Basin area. Our first attempt to coordinate with area community colleges will become an evolutionary process. We are at the beginning and I can't tell you how it will end up. I think it will progress over the next three or four years but I can't tell you how long it will be before we have a final project and I don't know what the final project will be."

"The way I see it is from this point on, the ball is in the educators' court," said Midlander Johnnie Warren, co-chairman along with Odessan Steve Late of the advisory group.

The citizen's advisory group is made up of five Midlanders, five Odessans and five residents from area communities, Late pointed out.

"We're all in this together. We are the Permian Basin. We're all one and the same," Late said. "There has been a lack of cooperation between the (community) colleges and the university for a number of years. But the end result will be a tremendous gain for the students."

Christopher the condor at core of California controversy

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

VENTURA, Calif. — Christopher the California condor floats lazily over the dry grass hills of Tulare County. He looks for a choice cow carcass to nibble and cares not at all that the hopes of a million-dollar federal program ride on his nine-foot wingspan.

Bureaucrats have been harassing other bureaucrats, the Sierra Club has been plotting against the Audubon Society, all because of the uncertain fate of Gymnogyps californianus, the California condor, largest land bird in North America. With fewer than 30 of the huge creatures still left alive in the steep mountain crevices and light brown hills of Central and Southern California, it is also the closest to extinction.

From a little yellow house in this city 70 miles northwest of Los Angeles, a joint project of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the National Audubon Society has taken unprecedented steps in the past year to save the bird from oblivion, and in the process ignited a passionate debate throughout the American environmental movement. Several nesting condor couples in the Los Padres National Forest northeast of here have been placed under the sort of intense, long-range surveillance usually reserved for dishonest congressmen. One condor chick has been rescued from neglectful parents, and plans have been made to steal an unhatched egg next year.

Now, in the most crucial step, project biologists using a complex net-and-cannon device have captured an almost full-grown condor. A radio transmitter the size of a cigarette lighter was attached to each wing, and the bird has been set free to unlock the secrets of the condor's comings and goings, and its mysterious decline.

This bird is Christopher, named because he was trapped the day after Columbus Day. With a 4-year-old's gray head that will turn an adult reddish-orange in a year or so, Christopher has a flair for long, fast trips aloft. Audubon biologists Jesse Grantham, Bruce Barbour and Pete Bloom and pilot Larry Riopelle had to scramble when the bird suddenly traveled 50 miles north a few days after being released, but they and project directors John Ogden and Noel Snyder stayed in contact. Christopher has shown so few ill effects from the capture and the attachment of the transmitters that the California Fish and Game Commission is now considering lifting its ban on the trapping and radio tagging of full-grown condors.

Tab Ogden, the Audubon senior staff biologist leading the project with federal biologist Snyder, the California condor "is symbolic of the wilderness, of the California that was." Conservationists sometimes say people only seem to get excited aboutsaving a "heroic mammal," such as a grizzly bear,nbut Ogden said the condor seems to generate this same excitement — even in James G. Watt's Interior Department.

This is not a universal view, particularly when the federal government is spending $275,000 a year and the Audubon Society $100,000 to save the bird after an initial $1 million federal investment the first two years. A woman living in Ojai, not far from the condors' principal roosts, wrote the Los Angeles Times recently: "Why are we so obsessed with bringing back the condor in the United States? Let's accept the fact that they are not attracted to what is left of our wilds. After all, there are plenty of them in South America so there is no danger of them becoming extinct."

As a flock of later letters to the Times pointed out, the Andean condor of South America, Vulture gryphus, is quite a different bird. They share the title of world's largest vultures, to be sure, enjoying a meal of carrion or perhaps a sick lamb or two, but the Andean bird has a distinctive white color and the two cannot interbreed.

When University of California biologist Carl Koford began his landmark study of the California condor in the late 1930s, there was one canyon where as many as 36 birds could be seen at once. That well-protected area has long since been abandoned, for reasons no human understands. According to Audubon regional representative John C. Borneman, who has been watching condors for two decades, "if we see two or four now, that's really something."

Koford became almost a cult figure among many environmentalists, and insisted until his death in the late 1970s that the condor be left alone. If an area was carefully sealed off and the newspapers not told about it, Borneman said Koford reasoned, the birds within it might survive.

Test will be tested

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A competency test for future teachers will be given next spring to some students seeking education degrees, but the scores will be used only to set a passing mark for the test.

The test was mandated by the Legislature because of criticism of teachers without such basic skills as reading, writing and computation, said Marvin Veselka, associate commissioner for professional support at the Texas Education Agency. Students will be required to pass the test before they can enter teacher education programs in two years.

After May 1, 1984, students admitted to an approved teacher education program must "achieve a satisfactory level of performance" on the test, according to the law. The satisfactory level of performance has not yet been determined, said Veselka, who added about 2,000 students would be given the test next semester in order to assess a grading system.

Once the test, developed by the Educational Testing Service of Princeton, N.J., goes into offical use, it will be administered largely to first- and second-year undergraduates as an admissions exam, Veselka said. The three-hour exam contains reading, writing and mathematics sections designed to measure basic skills in those areas.

THFC vote due today

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Health Facilities Commission has set an application by Crane Memorial Hospital, Crane, for a certificate of need to construct a replacement hospital for the THFC's voting session today.

The replacement facility, to be located adjacent to the existing facility, will continue to offer all services currently provided by the existing facility, THFC says.

The project includes the addition of one surgery room, one labor room and the replacement of a diagnostic unit.

Chile suffering from economic ills

By TOM FENTON

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — When President Augusto Pinochet's military government took power in 1973 the inflation rate was 508 percent. It has since hammered the rate down to 5.6 percent, one of the lowest in the Western world — a feat that brought Chile praise as a sparkling example of economic success.

But unemployment lines lengthened as inflation plummeted and now a record 23 percent of the people in Chile's work force are out of jobs.

Crime and street-begging are on the rise.

Thus, an about-face has been ordered.

The conservative economic policies that throttled inflation are being scrapped and the government is spending more public money in hopes of getting people back to work. The result could mean upward swing again in inflation.

The radical change in economic policy appears to spell the end of the tight-fisted, free-market, survival-of-the-most-efficient strategy espoused by the University of Chicago-trained Chilean economists who have guided economic policy here since 1975.

The shift is reflected in a series of economic measures beginning with the Aug. 5 decision to float Chile's peso. Other measures, with inflationary undertones, include:

—Plans to increase the money supply by at least 12 percent this year and possibly much more.

—Government funding for 1,100 public works projects expected to provide 100,000 jobs at a cost of about $7 million a month.

—Increasing the $21-a-month salary of about 200,000 workers on the government's Minimum Employment Plan to $33 a month and opening the program to anyone over 18.

—Plans to offer $250 million worth of soft loans to Chilean businesses otherwise facing interest rates in excess of 50 percent a year at local banks.

—Tax reductions and a program expected to provide low-cost housing for 180,000 families.

—Creation of a two-tiered currency exchange system to help Chileans pay off dollar debts in the wake of the float.

To finance the program and to avoid depleting its reserves the government is seeking $800 million worth of credits from the International Monetary Fund, the United Nations-affliated organization based in Washington.

The Inter-American Development Bank agreed in August to lend Chile $231 million. The government said a team from the bank will be back in September to consider another request for an additional $500 million worth of credits.

Pinochet said the new measures are needed "to end unemployment, reactivate the economy and allow the nation to return to growth rates similar to what we had before 1982."

Pinochet's Chicago Boys, as they were known here, gave Chile six good years: growth averaged in excess of 7 percent from 1976 through 1981 and inflation was pared from the 508 percent at the time the military overthrew the civilian regime of Marxist Salvador Allende to 9.5 percent last year.

For 12 months ending in July, Chile had 5.6 percent inflation, an incredible accomplishment by Latin American standards.

Their critics argued, however, that much of the growth was fueled by foreign loans that one day would have to be repaid. They also complained that the Chicago Boys' policies of low tariffs for imported goods and tight money would bankrupt local industries.

The bubble popped early this year as the flow of foreign loans dwindled along with prices for Chile's exports.

Unemployment shot up and a record 362 bankruptcies were reported in the first six months of this year.

The government has not put a total price tag on its new policies, which are bound to rekindle inflation. The government insists inflation will be controlled.

Asked how much inflation will be acceptable, Central Bank President Miguel Kast replied: "That question will be relevant when unemployment is no longer at 23 percent."

The long-time treasury minister and head Chicago Boy, Sergio de Castro, was fired April 22, apparently after Pinochet grew impatient with de Castro's policy of trying to force prices and wages down instead of devaluing the peso.

De Castro contended a devaluation would only fuel inflation, but the result was that many businesses simply went under.

Pressure on Pinochet to take a more direct roll in combating the recession grew from within the military and without as ranks of street vendors, beggars and trash pickers began swelling.

Street crime also increased, a disquieting phenomenon for a nation that prides itself on the effectiveness of its military and national police, the Carabineros.

The Carabineros said 2,086 robbery or theft reports were filed in Santiago during July, up from 1,365 in January.

The telephone company said 320 pay phones were robbed in the same month, another record.

Business became so bad that many companies were unable to make loan payments and the entire banking industry was threatened with collapse.

Under Chilean law overdue loans must be reported to the government when they reach 30 days past due.

Queen Elizabeth shows signs of strain

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
European Correspondent, The Hearst Newspapers

LONDON — For the first time, Buckingham Palace insiders are seriously worried about the health of Queen Elizabeth II who has been under a nervous strain for months as a result of an almost non-stop series of personal security and family scandals.

Speculation has been renewed she may turn over a larger part of her "job" to the Prince of Wales, her heir apparent, or even — in a move that would be contrary to British royal custom, though not that of other European dynasties — retire on her 60th birthday.

This week, when the queen performed her traditional duty of opening a new session of parliament by her "speech from the throne" — the address in which she outlines the government's legislative proposals — it lasted an unprecedentedly brief nine minutes.

Informants reported the brevity was deliberate, intended to spare her unnecessary exertion. To those watching the ceremony, she looked tired and older than her 56 years.

"The queen has been subject to serious strain and isn't showing her former resilience," according to a source close to the palace. "I suspect she feels that a great many people have let her down recently."

Observers here said there had not been a time since King Edward VIII's abdication 36 years ago that the throne has been at the storm center of so many disturbing and embarrassing incidents as in the past few months.

These began last summer with the astonishing intrusion into the queen's bedroom before breakfast by a drifter named Michael Fagan who, as it turned out, had made it a habit of breaking into the supposedly tightly-guarded Buckingham Palace.

Her sangfroid in dealing with him until help arrived — which took quite some time — won widespread admiration. But the incident led to revelations of almost unbelievably casual security arrangements inside the palace, especially since the monarch and her family are considered likely targets of IRA terrorists. (Earl Louis Mountbatten, her uncle, was killed by Irish assassins two years ago.)

Immediately on the heels of this episode came the disclosure that her longtime chief bodyguard, a senior London police detective, was a homosexual who was being blackmailed by a male prostitute. Its tragically sordid nature aside, the case again seemed to point to a serious official lapse in security procedures surrounding the queen.

"The queen was badly shaken by these affairs," according to Rachel Beaumont, a writer on royal matters. "For the first time, her personal life was impinged on, both literally and figuratively. That is something she simply never faced before."

As if that wasn't enough, embarrassing family peccadilloes started hitting the headlines.

It is no secret in British society that the marriage of the queen's sometimes tempestuous daughter, Princess Anne, and her husband, Mark Phillips, is close to the rocks. One informant here described it as held together "by the queen's sheer personal willpower; she won't hear of separation or divorce. Her sister's (Princess Margaret) divorce was one too many as far as she is concerned."

Then came the involvement of yet another royal offspring, Prince Andrew, home from the Falklands War, with an American-born starlet who has appeared in soft porn movies. The bold, brassy British popular newspapers had a romp with the affair. But it wouldn't have been too serious in itself in these permissive times if it had not come on top of everything else.

"This latest business of Andrew and Koo Stark disturbed the queen because she feels another member of the family has proved irresponsible at a particularly bad moment," Mrs. Beaumont said.

Even the Princess of Wales, the hitherto sacrosanct "Lady Di," has been wrapped over the knuckles in the press here lately for spending extravagant sums on her clothes in this economically depressed era — a kind of transatlantic version of U.S. media criticism of Mrs. Nancy Reagan.

Thatcher can teach Reagan

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
Hearst Feature Service

LONDON — Little more than 12 months ago, President Ronald Reagan was basking in a near-record level of popularity among Americans while his transatlantic clone, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, was seeing her standing with British voters headed for an apparently irreversible decline.

The American chief executive, pondering the mid-term election results, may be able to draw some solace from recalling that, because today their situations are close to being reversed.

If Reagan is currently a target of widespread dissatisfaction as a consequence of his economic policies, Mrs. Thatcher has experienced something resembling political rebirth. The polls are unanimous that she and her fellow Conservatives would win hands down if a national election were held now. The augurs are so good that many observers expect her to dissolve parliament and call new elections in 1983, instead of holding onto office for another two years as she is constitutionally entitled.

Mr. Reagan almost certainly is studying Mrs. Thatcher's fortunes with keen interest since she has managed to achieve this turnabout without significant alteration of a program that has been described as "Reaganomics with an Oxford accent."

Yet, Thatcherism, like Reaganism, has been dogged by an almost total lack of short-term successes, except in the vital matter of slowing inflation.

Improved Latin relations sought

By O.C.DOELLING

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The Reagan administration is moving to improve relations with Latin America, fearing pro-Soviet regimes are capitalizing on anti-Yankee sentiments aroused by the Falkland Islands war.

On Thursday, the United States joined the General Assembly majority in voting for a resolution aimed at pressuring an unwilling British government to go back to the negotiating table to settle the "sovereignty dispute" with Argentina over the remote South Atlantic archipelago.

This was a turnabout from U.S. support for Britain during the April 2-June 14 undeclared war over the British colony, 250 miles east of Argentina's southern coast.

Sponsored by Argentina and 19 other Latin American states, the resolution was adopted 90-12 with 52 abstentions. Like all General Assembly resolutions, this one was non-binding.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher was reported by aides in London to be "dismayed and disappointed" by President Reagan's support of the resolution.

Reagan, who personally authorized the "yes" vote, departs Nov. 30 on a five-day goodwill tour to three Latin American countries which were among the resolution's co-sponsors — Brazil, Colombia and Costa Rica. U.S. officials have called the trip a fence-mending effort inspired by the Falklands dispute and trade conflicts with Brazil.

In the interim, the administration has been taking a more critical look at the right-wing government in El Salvador, which is viewed with suspicion by Latin American moderates as well as leftists and is supported by U.S. military aid.

Pope beatifies 20th-century Spanish nun

SEVILLE, Spain (AP) — Pope John Paul II, standing under a solid-silver, 15th century altarpiece, beatified a Spanish nun today and lamented government inattention to the "urgent problems" of the world's rural poor.

Sister Angela de la Cruz, the early-20th century nun elevated by John Paul in a ceremony rarely held outside the Vatican, founded an ascetic order that ministers to the poorest of the poor, like that run by Nobel Prize-winner Mother Teresa of Calcutta.

The pontiff has conducted only one other beatification, the first step toward sainthood, outside the Vatican. In February 1981, he elevated the 17th century missionary Lorenzo Ruiz in Manila.

Sister Angela, who died in Seville in 1932, was elevated during a Mass celebrated by John Paul for a half-million people at a fairground in Spain's fourth-largest city.

Looking drawn and sounding slightly hoarse on the sixth day of a busy, 10-day tour, John Paul stood under a silver altarpiece from the days of King Ferdinand, who made Seville headquarters of the exploration of the new world.

He said the nations of the world today must do more to address "the urgent problems of the agrarian sector."

Speaking in an area wracked by unemployment, John Paul said the "very sad picture" of farm families has improved "in the whole world and in Spain, but agriculture continues to be the Cinderella of economic development."

The southern city of bullfights and flamencos put on a glittering display for the pontiff, complete with the clicking castanets and tapping heels of flamenco dancers.

Hundreds of women donned white-and-black lace mantillas usually worn on feast days. The Countess of Barcelona, mother of King Juan Carlos, had the seat of honor on the 69-foot-high altar.

The king's wife, Queen Sofia, and her two children canceled their scheduled appearance. No official reason was given, but it was believed connected with Thursday's terrorist killing of a Spanish general in Madrid.

For the beatification, John Paul waived the usual requirement of two acts certified by the church as miracles. Sister Angela's followers credit her with one miracle — curing a dying nun through prayer.

Nuns of the order founded by Sister Angela work 36-hour shifts, aiding the sick and scouring their cities' refuse for supplies. They are forbidden from eating meat, and make their morning coffee from grounds discarded by bars.

The nuns sleep on a wooden chest with a wooden box as a pillow, clutching a wooden cross in their hands under a single woolen cover, in the cold of winter and the heat of summer.

Seville is the site of Spain's largest cathedral — third biggest in the world after St. Peter's in Rome and St. Paul's in London. Many historians say Christopher Columbus is buried in the cathedral, although others say the remains of the explorer are in Cuba or Santo Domingo.

Spain foresees no problem withself-proclaimed 'pope'

SEVILLE, Spain (AP) — Roman Catholic officials welcoming Pope John Paul II to this southern city anticipate no problems from Gregory XVIII, the blind ex-seminarian who proclaimed himself "pope" and named Christopher Columbus a saint.

Clemente Dominguez Gomez, a 36-year-old former accountant and one-time student of theology, proclaimed himself pope in 1978 as the cardinals of the church were meeting at the Vatican to elect a successor to Pope Paul VI.

Dominguez said an apparition — the most recent of some 50 he claimed to have seen — told him to declare himself "chief of the Catholic Church and the only vicar of Christ on earth."

He followed his proclamation by issuing a long list of new saints including Columbus and the late Spanish dictator Gen. Francisco Franco.

Dominguez's "elevation" would likely have been dismissed by the Vatican as the act of an eccentric — except that the would-be pontiff, who is fond of being carried on a portable throne like the popes of old, had been consecrated a bishop in 1975 by an actual bishop of the church.

Minorities, labor votes pivotal

By PEGGY SIMPSON
Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — Major efforts to register and turn out black, Hispanic and organized labor voters proved to be pivotal factors in dozens of close congressional and governors' races in Tuesday's elections.

Although there were notable disappointments for blacks in the loss of Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley to become the first black governor and the outright loss of a black congressional nominee in Mississippi, the huge black vote made a key difference in at least five other tight congressional races and in the apparent victory of Democrat Mario Cuomo as governor in New York.

There will be an increase of four blacks, all Democrats, in Congress, for a new total of 21 in the Congressional Black Caucus, including Alan Wheat of Missouri and Katie Hall from Indiana who had considerable support in their minority-black districts from labor and feminists. In Brooklyn, Edolphus Towns and Major Owens won.

In Memphis, J.O. Patterson, a black, scored first in a four-person special election for mayor but was forced into a runoff.

Blacks and labor were key blocs in working with Democratic Gov. James Hunt in North Carolina in one of the shockers of the 1982 race: the defeat of five Republican candidates for Congress, including two incumbents, who had been supported by New Right Sen. Jesse Helms. This was widely perceived, as GOP Rep. Guy Vander Jagt of Michigan put it, "to be the opening shot in the 1984 campaign between Helms and Hunt for the Senate seat."

HISPANICS WON NOT ONLY the governor's seat in New Mexico, with a tight race finally won by Toney Anaya, but the 11 congressional seats in which they had nominees, for an increase of three in the Hispanic Caucus.

An unprecedented mid-year turnout of Hispanics was key to Democrat Mark White's upset victory over Texas GOP Gov. William Clements, who had spent nearly $1 million in Spanish-language advertising to try and crack the Hispanic Democratic voting bloc in South Texas.

The sagging Texas economy thwarted Clements' efforts, along with formidable get-out-the-vote efforts in San Antonio and Corpus Christi by Hispanic politicians.

"I consistently underestimated the turnout," said William Velasquez, executive director of the Southwest Registration and Voting Rights Project in San Antonio. "We had projected a 29 percent turnout of Hispanics. Instead, it was an estimated 40.6 percent turnout."

In most areas, White got more than 80 percent of that vote — and it soared to 91.5 percent in the South Texas area where state Sen. Carlos Truan and congressional candidate Solomon Ortiz crusaded for White.

Ortiz is one of three new Hispanics elected to Congress, along with former White House Hispanic advisor Esteban Torres of California and Bill Richardson of New Mexico.

TWO OTHER HISPANIC coups were the surprisingly easy election of Rep. Marty Martinez against GOP Rep. John Rousselot in their combined Southern California district and the reelection of California Supreme Court Justice Cruz Reynosa who had come under attack from California conservatives.

Hispanics also were a big part of electoral forces in the New York, Illinois and California governors' races— although controversy remained as to whether Hispanics had backed Bradley or the GOP nominee, George Deukmejian.

"This election, probably more than any other in my 17 years in elective office, showed a strong influence from the Hispanic vote," said Rep. Bob Garcia, D-N.Y., chairman of the Hispanic Caucus.

Organized labor had registered 3.5 million new voters and its leaders had taken unusually activist roles in trying to bring labor voters back to their traditional Democratic base. This worked, judging by television network exit polls which tallied more than 70 percent of their sample of union members voting Democratic, at least 8 points above the average and well above the 1980 Democrat labor vote.

There were major disappointments for labor, also, especially with the loss of New Hampshire Gov. Hugh Gallen and the close-but-losing margin of Harriett Woods in the Missouri Senate race, who had relied heavily on union support in the early days when the country and her own Democratic Party ignored her.

"BUT WE DON'T CONSIDER that a defeat. She came out of nowhere and to have run that well against an incumbent is very good. We think she has a good future," said AFL-CIO spokesman Murray Seeger.

Overall, labor counted 24 winners among its 34 governors' candidates and had 20 winners from among the 33 senators — a sharp contrast to 1980, which labor considered a disaster for its supporters.

The Sun Belt victories of Democratic candidates for governor in Texas and Arkansas were important for potential organizing efforts. The re-election of Democratic Gov. John V. Evans in Idaho was key because it should forestall a pending anti-union ballot referendum. The Democratic win in New Jersey's senate race by Frank Lautenberg also was helped by heavy labor participation.

"A Democratic governor in New Hampshire could have helped us a lot in the presidential primary in 1984 and giving that back to Republicans will hurt," Seeger said. "But, ideologically, we made gains."

Reagan not fond of Washington

By JAMES GERSTENZANG

WASHINGTON (AP) — There's something about Ronald Reagan that says he doesn't like Washington.

Of course, he has only been here for two years, and it can be hard making new friends when no on else lives on your block. But a sampling of his opening remarks as he traveled around the country last week in a final bid for support for Republican candidates revealed a deep-seated dislike for the nation's capital:

In Omaha, he said "there's one big difference between Nebraska and Washington — you've got your priorities straight."

At the Natrona County Aiport in Casper, Wyo., with a silhouette of a cowboy on a bucking bronco behind him: "It's great to be back here in Wyoming, back where farmers and ranchers and workers and small businesspeople dream big and toil hard to make dreams come true. You all live in a world that Washington will never quite understand — the real world."

In the Las Vegas Convention Center, he told several thousand people at a Republican rally: "It's a pleasure to breathe deep and know that Washington is thousands of miles away."

And at a sunny airstrip in Roswell, New Mexico, he said "it feels good to be here in the land of enchantment and away from that land of disenchantment called Washington."

It was in Las Vegas that the president's speech was preceded by a patriotic version of a Las Vegas entertainment spectacular led by Wayne Newton.

Newton was backed up by three female vocalists, garbed in low-cut dresses. For a finale, they performed a jazzed-up version of "America the Beautiful."

To the lyric "God shed his grace on thee," Newton chimed in "yes He did."

And it was in Las Vegas that the president saluted "the pioneer spirit."

"Quitting wasn't something that our forefathers dwelled upon," he said. "And although the going was rough — sometimes the mountains were steeper and the deserts were hotter than expected — they weren't the kind of people to turn back. And that same spirit still thrives out here on the Nevada plains."

Having said that, the president called it a night, climbed into his limousine, and headed for his quarters in one of the plush hotels on the Las Vegas strip.

The president's political aides sought to get the most mass media mileage out of their star campaigner last weekend, even though he spent the final weekend before Election Day at Camp David, Md.

A week before the voting, he videotaped a five-minute speech and on Saturday, he broadcast, live, a weekly message to the nation, via radio.

White House aides arranged to make a text of the television speech available to reporters, with the understanding that it would not appear in print until Monday.

Also born on this date: the late great Polish pianist and statesman Ignace Paderewski. In the months ahead, you become a stronger and better-rounded person. Business and financial trends aid your efforts to move forward. A decision regarding education proves difficult, but you make the right choice. Partnerships work better now than in the past. Children bring a new dimension to your life just as you enrich theirs. Learn from your mistakes. With greater effort, romance can be richly rewarding. Consult mate on all major decisions.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Something that happens today will change the course of your life. You develop a new attitude about a person relationship. Start on an adventure with your loved ones and friends.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Promote a relaxed atmosphere at home. You enjoy playing the role of the "good guy" today. Get to know those family members who have been away for a while.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Romance gets top billing this weekend. Some couples decide to have more children. Watch your credit card use. A cash shortage may inspire you to charge more than you can handle.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A family member does something to increase your confidence. Do not let a money matter disrupt a family gathering. A sudden change in plans leaves romantic partner upset.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): An absence makes you even more sure of a new love. Loans are repaid. Do not fritter cash away on items you do not really need. Athletic events hold special appeal.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Families need to plan things that they can do together. Attend a community event. An old love returns to town. You have mixed feelings about resuming your romance. Go slow.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Abandon a project that is going nowhere and invest your energies in something that will be more rewarding. Handle financial transactions promptly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Peace of mind makes this a happy weekend. Drop hints if you want to resume an old romance. Small risks lead to lucky investments. Check with a family member who knows the stock.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A couple on the verge of divorce realize they have something worth saving. Do not be afraid to show your vulnerability to loved one. Stay away from meddlesome relatives.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): An ideal weekend for writing projects, studies. A May-December relationship flourishes. A total break is best for two people who are attracted to each other but have very little in common.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Travel enjoys favorable influences, but its high cost could stretch your budget out of shape. Loved one responds when you are completely honest. A sense of humor wins you points with mate.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Hidden resentments between parent and child need to be brought into the open. Your self-image could be on the line. Your loved ones will give you any help you ask for.

South had the choice of one of two finesses for his contract. He made his slam because he took neither!

North-South conducted an orderly auction to reach their slam. Note that South did not resort to Blackwood to check on aces. Once it was clear that North's four diamond bid was a cue-bid in support of spades, South knew that his side was missing the ace of clubs.

The defenders lost no time in completing their book when East won the first trick with the ace of clubs and returned the suit. Declarer won and drew trumps in three rounds. All that was left to do was avoid a loser in hearts.

It might seem that declarer simply has to guess which way to take the heart finesse. He should lead a low heart to the jack if he thinks West has the queen, or else run the jack from dummy if he feels that the lady is with East.

However, there is another option—declarer can take the diamond finesse and then discard his heart loser on the ace of diamonds. Which finesse should South rely on?

The answer is neither—yet. Declarer can combine his chances to give himself considerably better odds than the straight 50 percent offered by either finesse. Almost 30 percent of the time, one of the defenders will have either a doubleton or singleton queen of hearts. That is the extra edge declarer can give himself.

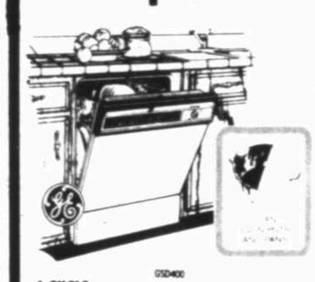

Declarer should first cash the king and ace of hearts to see if the queen drops. If her majesty appears, declarer can claim. If she does not, declarer can still fall back on the diamond finesse.

Think about the voters

Voters throughout the United States have once again been subjected to some of the worst campaigning witnessed in recent years. Campaigning for the election just passed truly fell to an all-time low.

Those rough-and-tumble campaign tactics don't seem to be reserved any longer for only the highest offices; even local elections, in Midland in some cases, left something to be desired.

Some of the better examples of unquestionably distasteful campaign tactics included Texas Atty. Gen. Mark White's insinuation that he could lower Texans' utility bills when in reality he can't and a campaign ad for Republican attorney general nominee Bill Meier that pictured a handcuffed Jim Mattox, Meier's Democratic opponent.

That ad was in particularly bad taste and The Reporter-Telegram was among many major Texas newspaper which published it.

These are only a couple of examples from the campaign in Texas. But reports from a number of other newspapers around the nation reveal that the "dirty politics" aura was not restricted to the Lone Star State. In fact, those publications indicate that this type of campaigning is becoming prevalent at all levels of American government.

It almost seems as though politicians believe it's acceptable to do anything or say anything that is necessary to get elected. That's sad because if there is any time voters need the truth it's when they're attempting to determine the qualifications of their future leaders. Clouding that process only will result in voters becoming disillusioned with the entire political process.

The news media has a responsibility to provide voters the most complete and accurate information possible on political candidates and in most instances that is the result. But voters should realize that the news media is limited when it comes to ascertaining if every claim espoused by candidates in every campaign is fact. In the latter stages of campaigns, in fact, some of the information provided to voters by the media should be taken with a hefty dose of salt.

Hopefully, this year's campaign will spark attention on three fronts in future elections:

— Voters should make every effort to ascertain what is fact and what is merely innuendo;

— The news media should examine its own standards and guidelines as far as distasteful advertising is concerned;

— And candidates should be more concerned than they have been about just what their tactics can do to voters' opinions of our political process and our politicians.

A champion of peace?

That great champion of peace, Libyan dictator Moammar Khadafy, sent an emissary to the United Nations recently to call for Israel's expulsion on the grounds that it is not a peace-loving nation.

Given the representation in the Lake Success assemblage of all those other peace lovers from, for example, Iraq, Iran, the Sudan, Morocco, Vietnam, etc., etc., Khadafy's proposal no doubt fell on receptive ears. We assume that the Libyan strongman's preoccupation with Israel's sins has not diverted him from his other peaceful pursuits; i.e., arming, training and financing various cadres of peace-loving terrorists dispatched around the world on missions of brotherly love.

Brezhnev's address

President Leonid I. Brezhnev's speech to a gathering of top military commanders was a highly unusual, and in some ways ominous, event. But the Kremlin mood that the speech appeared to reflect may offer opportunities for improvement of U.S.-Soviet relations once the Soviet leadership transition is completed. The Reagan administration should shape both its policies and its rhetoric with that possibility in mind.

There is nothing unusual about top Kremlin officials addressing military gatherings. But the deliberate publicizing of Brezhnev's remarks to the generals was unusual, as were some major points of his speech.

He accused the Reagan administration of "rude" behavior, and of pursuing an "aggressive policy" backed by "unprecedented" military preparations. He promised a "further strengthening" of the Soviet armed forces, apparently signaling larger-than-normal increases in the already bloated military budget. He also made a point of emphasizing the Kremlin's "sincere" desire for normalization of relations with China.

Potentially most significant of all, Brezhnev suggested great concern over the danger of falling further behind the West in military technology.

It is impossible to assess the implications of the Brezhnev speech with any certainty; the task is made more difficult by the fact that the power struggle to succeed Brezhnev is already under way.

The tone of the Soviet leader's remarks, however, did seem more defensive than belligerent. He was at pains to reassure the generals that the military establishment continues to enjoy the full moral and material support of the political leadership, while at the same time suggesting uneasiness over the danger of a military-technology gap. A lag in this area, he said, "is inadmissible."

Brezhnev's concern may be centered on the Reagan administration's plans for modernization of both the strategic nuclear deterrent and the deployment of medium-range missiles in Europe.

But it is more likely that his remarks reflected alarm over the shockingly poor performance of Soviet anti-aircraft missiles against Israeli planes in Lebanon, or concern over the enormously important strides being made in military electronics by the United States and its allies.

Whatever the case, Brezhnev may have been putting the Soviet people on notice that further sacrifices are in the offing, and preparing the military for a possible reduction of troops on the Chinese border in order to release resources for high-priority work on military technology.

There is a growing feeling among U.S. experts that the Soviet economy is in serious trouble and that pressures are increasing for restraints on military spending. Brezhnev's speech suggests that the Soviet leaders are still determined to find other means of relieving the strain on resources. But the pressures for de-emphasis of military spending will continue to grow.

If the Soviet leaders are indeed uneasy over a military-technology gap, that should increase the attractiveness of arms-control agreements — agreements that, if carefully negotiated, are also in the U.S. interest.

Toward that end, the Reagan administration would do well to avoid the kind of rhetoric that it has used in the past — rhetoric that, by seeming to reflect contempt for Soviet leaders and the Soviet Union's status as a world power, could make it more difficult for the Kremlin to do the wise thing.

Soviet Union originated 'freeze' push

Those useful idiots, the ultra-liberals, are up to their old smear tactics again. Let any decent American utter in the most judicous terms any suggestion that Communists play a role in the nuclear freeze movement, and there are hysterical screams of "McCarthyism!"

Charley Reese

President Reagan and Sen. Jeremiah Denton, R-Ala., are the latest victims of this reverse-McCarthyism. Tom Wicker frothed in his New York Times column because the president stated a simple fact: To wit, many sincere, honest people are being duped by people whose real purpose is to weaken the United States. The Washington Post's Colman McCarthy smeared Senator Denton by falsely accusing him of smearing another senator's wife when he did no such thing. He merely pointed out that an organization she had joined was being manipulated by leftists.

The Soviet Union is not merely involved in the current nuclear freeze movement; it originated it. If you care about truth, you can visit your public library and read, in the May issue of "Commentary," a lengthy article by Vladimir Bukovsky, a Soviet dissident now living in England which documents the Soviet origin and planning of the current peace movement.

Planning for it began in 1979 in Moscow. As Bukovsky points out, why would the Soviets plan such an elaborate peace movement to be kicked off in 1981 back in 1979 when detente was still in full bloom? Because they knew they were going to invade Afghanistan.

What they planned in 1979 was the World Peace Conference in Sofia, Bulgaria, which was held in September, 1980, and attended by 2,260 "peace-lovers" from 237 countries. These included 200 members of various national parliaments, 200 trade-union leaders, 129 leading Social Democrats, 150 writers and poets, 33 representatives of various liberation movements, 18 representatives of United Nations organizations and the World Council of Churches.

What you are seeing unfolding today in the United States and Western Europe is all according to the plans arrived at in Bulgaria. The year 1981 was chosen to be "the springboard of the 80s, a year of decisive offensive of the peace force to achieve a breakthrough in curbing the arms buildup."

People have short memories. Bukovsky details the history of the Soviet use of peace movements. Lenin used peace slogans to make a revolution. When Stalin and Hitler signed their infamous mutual aggression pact in 1939, Soviet-directed Communists in the United States and Western Europe "waged peace" in behalf of Nazi Germany, using strikes and demonstrations to keep the democracies from defending themselves. American Communists inveighed against Roosevelt, calling him a warmonger. Of course that peace offensive ended when Hitler double-crossed Stalin and invaded the Soviet Union. Overnight, Communists around the world became patriots in favor of the war against Nazism — again on cue from their Moscow bosses.

The third Soviet peace offensive came in the 1950s when the Soviet Union was far behind the United States in military strength. The current one comes just as the American people have awakened to their peril and decided to repair the damage done to our military strength by a decade of stupidity.

The sole purpose of the current nuclear freeze movement is to stop the United States from catching up with the Soviet Union by building and deploying the B-1 bomber, the cruise missiles and the new pershings.

Bukovsky, having suffered 12 years in Soviet prisons, describes American dupes less kindly than Reagan does. He writes: "Just as in the 1950s, the movement today probably consists of the same odd mixture of Communists, fellow-travelers, muddle-headed intellectuals, hypocrites seeking popularity, professional political speculators, frightened bourgeois, and youth eager to rebel for the sake of rebelling. There are also the inevitable Catholic priests with a mission and other religious people who believe that God has chosen them to make peace on earth right now. But there is also not the slightest doubt that this motley crowd is manipulated by a handful of scoudrels instructed directly from Moscow."

There is also plenty of other evidence of Soviet participation. "Readers' Digest" editor John Barron outlines the direct participation of the Soviet's KGB in the peace movement in an article, "The KGB's Magical War for Peace." John Reese (no relation) has been detailing all of the organizations involved in the peace movement planning in Intelligence Information Digest.

The truth is there. Those who turn their backs on it brand themselves.

Memories, migraines from stadium souvenir

WASHINGTON — To judge by the reaction of a high Justice Department official, I've apparently stumbled onto the greatest scandal since Watergate. It involves a $26 seat from the right field of the late Yankee Stadium.

Jack Anderson

If that seems like small potatoes, just remember it was a "third-rate burglary" that toppled a president.

But any story that can incite a four-page, single-spaced letter from an associate attorney general of the United States has to be hot stuff. Especially since the letter was in response to initial inquiries from my associate Tony Capaccio.

Maybe you can figure out what was so upsetting about the story. Here it is:

Associate Attorney General Rudolph Giuliani is a devoted fan of the New York Yankees. One of his earliest memories is of being dressed up by his father in a pinstriped Yankee uniform. He can rattle off Bronx Bomber statistics till your eyes glaze over.

In his Justice Department office are two treasured souvenirs of the Yankees' glory days — a baseball autographed by Yogi Berra and a small wood-and-cast-iron stadium seat, its blue paint peeling, from the House that Ruth Built.

The little seat bears only the number 15 stenciled on it in black, but its saga is as complicated as that of Citizen Kane's equally beloved "Rosebud." The point at issue is exactly how the seat got from the old Yankee Stadium to Giuliani's Washington office.

In his four-page letter to me, Giuliani says he got the little seat in 1973 or 1974 as a gift from a law student who had worked for him in the U.S. Attorney's Office in New York. He unaccountably left it behind when he came to Washington for a government stint in 1975. But two years later, after he had returned to private practice in New York, another former student assistant lugged the seat uptown to Giuliani's office at 30 Rockefeller Plaza. No problem so far.

On Aug. 25, 1981, Giuliani, by now a Justice Department bigshot, went to New York City on official business and dropped by his old office with Chief Inspector John Walsh of the U.S. Marshals Service. He "had never seen a big law firm," Giuliani explained. "During the tour Walsh saw my former office and the chair. Mr. Walsh then offered to bring it to Washington for me. I told him not to do so."

But within a week, Walsh did just that. He claimed he picked the little seat up in Giuliani's old Justice Department office, neglecting to mention that he had to go 68 blocks uptown to fetch it.

Walsh brought it to Washington, on government time, as checked baggage on the Eastern Airlines shuttle, and took it with him to the U.S. Marshals' headquarters in suburban Virginia. There, on Sept. 3, 1981, the little seat was presented to a grateful Giuliani on an inspection of the marshals' office by Howard Safir, a Marshals Service official.

In a closed-door meeting last August, a now-retired marshal, Elliott Williams, complained that Walsh had fetched the seat on government time and at government expense to curry favor with Giuliani, who oversees the Marshals Service. Present were Giuliani, Deputy Attorney General Edward Schmults, White House Counsel Fred Fielding, Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., and several Senate aides.

Giuliani and Schmults assured Thurmond they would investigate Williams' charges. "They both agreed they would look into it," said a source who was at the meeting, "but no one has contacted Williams as far as I know." Williams confirmed this.

Giuliani and Walsh insist that the delivery of the little seat involved no government expense. Walsh said he was coming to Washington on official business anyway.

"It was my idea to bring it down," he said. "I felt it meant a lot to him. I thought it would be a nice gesture."

Footnote: Needless to say, I will not disclose the identity of my source. I call him Deep Rightfield.

NUCLEAR POWER PLAY: The law forbids government agencies to lobby for or against legislation Congress is considering, except through official channels, such as congressional testimony. But a dozen consumer and environmental groups charge that the Energy Department was doing just that when it held an "educational forum" on a controversial nuclear waste-disposal bill.

The forum took place in a Washington hotel the day before a conference there of the Edison Electric Institute, a pro-nuclear-power industry association. DOE officials acknowledged that the timing was deliberate, in hopes of encouraging utility company consumer-affairs specialists to attend.

The forum's panelists were all government officials and representatives of the nuclear and power industries, with one exception: Douglas O. Lee, chairman of Americans for Nuclear Energy.

Asked about the stacked panel, a DOE spokesman said: "There were some dissenting views on the floor. Does it matter whether the dissenting views were expressed on the panel or on the floor?"

As for the charge of illegal lobbying, DOE officials said the forum was strictly educational — and anyway, when they scheduled it, they figured the bill would already have become law.

WATCH ON WASTE: Five years ago, the Defense Personnel Support Center in Philadelphia ordered 50,000 field packs for the military from a disadvantaged small business. A few months later, they doubled the order. Progress payments were made as the years rolled by — a total of $1.4 million. Despite this largesse, the company went bankrupt after delivering exactly one field pack, and that was deemed unusable.

INSIDE REPORT:

2 races could determine Reagan's course

WASHINGTON — Just what course President Reagan stays for the next two years may depend on how the White House interprets the two most fascinating campaigns of the mid-term election: Republican losses for governor of New York and Michigan.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Lewis Lehrman and Richard Headlee defied conventional forecasts by nearly winning races they were supposed to lose ignominiously. They did so by imitating Reagan's 1980 tone, well to the right of his homogenized 1982 Republicanism. While the president was urging Americans to stay the course, Lehrman and Headlee took a hard right-populist turn: Cut taxes to induce prosperity.

That their ideology contributed to near wins has not dawned on the doggedly non-ideological men who run the White House. But if they focus on New York and Michigan, a way might be found out of the political dilemma that threatens to engulf the Republican Party in rancor, without sparing Reagan himself.

The way out, suggested by critics of the White House: Abandon crunching astronomical figures of David Stockman's budgets and concentrate on restoring prosperity, as did the Lehrman and Headlee campaigns. That would mean fighting budget deficits by a commitment to low interest rates and economic recovery.

Despite chief of staff James Baker's professions that a 26-seat House loss did not destroy the president's coalition, senior aides here have begun wrestling over how to react to just that destruction. Characteristically, Baker would accommodate the new congressional reality through compromise — a course favored by Republican leaders in Congress.

Conservatives on the White House staff, closet and otherwise, prefer a veto war against Congress with Reagan going to the country for confirmation in November 1984. That is also Ronald Reagan's choice but insiders no longer bet against Jim Baker getting his way with the president.

Neither of these courses, however, comes to grips with the recession that suffocated Reagan's 1982 hopes. Neither school even argues that economic recovery is possible before the next election; both rely in 1984 on Democratic bungling and The Gipper's popularity — a view not discouraged by Tuesday's Republican losses.

Enter New York and Michigan. Five days before the election, Democratic pollster Pat Caddell had Lehrman trailing by 12 percentage points but feared the Republican's rhetoric would catch hold. It did, beginning Saturday morning. Lehrman's finish five points behind agonized Caddell.

Lehrman, elegant and scholarly, had earned the respect of ideological antagonists. But insurance man Headlee is a New Rightist reviled by Michigan's moderate GOP establishment and considered a political basket case in a state ravaged by recession. Doggedly preaching tax reduction, Headlee finished only six points down.

Lehrman and Headlee contrasted with beleaguered Republican candidates, who, fearful of Reaganomics, retreated to campaign banality. Democrats just attacked Reagan and relied on unemployment. The upshot was an election good enough not to frighten the White House into change but bad enough to pose the compromise-or-confront dilemma for the president.

The way out glimpsed by White House realists is to finesse dangerous tinkering with the budget. All budget options — tax increases, Social Security tightening, defense and entitlements cuts — are politically suicidal and economically smothering. Thus, farsighted White House aides see in the Lehrman-Headlee rhetoric hope for a worried nation.

Nothing important has happened in the White House this year without Jim Baker's approval. He is neither a visionary nor ideologue, but a practical man accustomed to dealing with today's, not tomorrow's, problems. Nevertheless, the demonstrated popular appeal of two right-wing visionaries dismissed as hopeless cases conceivably could influence him at this turning point for the Reagan presidency.

Hightower to work for new policy

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Jim Hightower, agriculture commissioner-elect, says his administration "will hit the ground running" after he takes office by working for a new national farm policy and helping improve Texas farm markets.

Hightower said he got 63 percent of the vote, over Republican Fred Thornberry, and carried all but 17 counties.

Jim Hightower

"To me this was a loud message the voters have sent saying they want us to do something, they want to get this department active, they want to get state government active on the economic problems our people are having," he said Thursday.

Hightower said he had talked with current Commissioner Reagan Brown, who was defeated in the Democratic primary, and was working on transition plans.

He said his first efforts as commissioner would be to work for a new national farm policy and to beef up marketing efforts by the State Department.

Hightower said he would go to Washington if necessary when the new farm legislation comes before Congress to work for a moratorium on farm home foreclosures and for a new farm bill that includes higher target prices for crops and higher loan rates.

A small staff would be set up in the commissioner's office to keep up with federal legislation and work with Texas' officials in Washington, he said.

Hightower said another staff would be developed to work on finding new international markets for Texas farmers and ranchers.

He said he considered farm workers a part of his "constituency" and would work to help them, "along with family farmers. We will do everything we can to get together the majority of farmers in the state."

Part of the transition would be to look at every department and every employee of the Texas Agriculture Department, Hightower said.

Tower 'disappointed' to be lone Republican

DALLAS (AP) — U.S. Sen. John Tower, who in January will be the only Texas Republican holding a statewide office, says he isn't surprised to be alone, although he is "terribly disappointed."

In the Nov. 2 election, Bill Clements, the first Republican Texas governor in 105 years, was trounced by Democrat Mark White; U.S. Rep. Jim Collins of Dallas, who hoped to join Tower in the Senate, was smashed by incumbent Democrat Lloyd Bentsen; and so on down the list.

John Tower

"I'm terribly disappointed we didn't re-elect our governor," Tower said Thursday in an interview with The Associated Press. "And I'm very disappointed about the others. I think we had the finest slate of candidates we've ever had.

"It was a setback," he conceded. "But it wasn't a major setback. I think we'll continue to organize, continue to grow. We'll raise money and recruit good candidates. I don't think we'll have to rebuild.

"I had hoped to have a lot of company," he said. "But no, I wasn't surprised that Collins lost. Bentsen has been senator for 12 years, and he's perceived by most Texans as pretty well reflecting their views."

He said he had spent the last 3½ weeks campaigning for Republicans, and had not had time to analyze the results to see exactly why Republicans lost, although he noted that Democrats were well-organized this year, and the traditionally Democratic black vote turned out in large numbers.

"They (Democrats) were somewhat better organized than we were, they did a little better job of getting out the vote. In some areas, they were better at reaching their people than we were," said Tower.

Tower is used to being the lone Republican. He came out of almost nowhere: a 35-year-old Wichita Falls government professor and former disc jockey who won a special election from a field of 71 candidates in 1961 to fill Lyndon Johnson's empty Senate seat when Johnson became vice president.

Tower then was the first Republican to win statewide office since Reconstruction. The only other office he had ever held was that of Republican precinct chairman.

Many Texas Democrats didn't take him seriously at the time. The liberal Democratic bi-weekly, "The Texas Observer," urged its readers to vote for Tower over his run-off opponent, Dallas millionaire Democrat Bill Blakely.

The theory was that Blakely was unacceptable — he was more conservative than Tower — and Tower would be easy to throw out in the next election.

He held on. Fiercely. Now Texas' senior senator, he's the chairman of the powerful Armed Services Committee and a realist about his party's effort to establish itself in the traditionally conservative Democratic state.

Republicans don't have a long history in Texas, which even now is not a true two-party state, he said.

"The modern Republican Party in Texas dates back to 1952, when we started to broaden ourselves a little bit," Tower said. "And we're definitely a minority party, still. People who identify themselves by party are about 2-to-1 Democrats.

"We lost statewide visibility in this election, but we did win those county offices. The grassroots level is important. You can't just build a party from the top, down.

"We weren't destroyed; we just lost an election. We'll come back, just like the Democrats did this time."

10,000 mourners expected at Roloff funeral

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Funeral services for evangelist Lester Roloff, who battled the state to avoid licensing his homes for wayward youth, were scheduled in a coliseum here today to accommodate the 10,000 mourners expected.

Roloff, 68, died Tuesday when a plane he was piloting crashed near Normangee, killing him and four women accompanying him on a fundraising tour of the Midwest.

A preliminary investigation into the crash showed that wind tore the plane apart in midair, said Leon County Sheriff Royce Wilson.

Investigators "found one of the wings approxiately a mile from the main wreckage," Wilson said. "My opinion is that the plane hit some turbulence and one of the wings came off and hit the tail and he just flew a straight line into the ground."

Federal Aviation Administration spokesman George Burlage said that line of thought sounded reasonable.

"You'd think that some force such as turbulence caused it to break up," Burlage said. "It was a known fact that there was some pretty bad weather in the area."

Roloff's 2 p.m. funeral service will be held in the bayfront Memorial Coliseum, said The Rev. Mike Rios, an assistant pastor at Roloff's Peoples Baptist Church.

The church offices have been swamped with telephone calls "in the thousands...from all over the world," Rios said.

Roloff operated a 600-acre complex for wayward youth and young adults near Corpus Christi and a nursing home in the Rio Grande Valley. He recently bought land in Arizona to establish a rehabilitation home for Indians, church officials said.

He battled the state of Texas for nearly a decade over the licensing of his homes.

The state charged that some youths living in his three homes for 180 girls and 100 boys were being beaten and were underfed. The state charged that girl residents were subject to lashings and solitary confinement.

Roloff denied most of the charges and said discipline could save souls.

Libel judgment overturned

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A $2 million libel judgment against a former Dallas Morning News reporter and the corporation that publishes the newspaper has been overturned by a state appeals court.

J. Newton Rayzor, a wealthy Houston businessman and North Texas State University booster, said he probably would appeal Thursday's decision by the 2nd Court of Appeals.

"I'm extremely disappointed and surprised," he said.

Rayzor filed suit against reporter Earl Golz and A.H. Belo Corp. on Dec. 17, 1979 over two news articles concerning fiscal irregularities at NTSU.

Substance abuse: Drugs, alcohol traping growing number of American youth

By ZENIA CLEIGH
Copley News Service

Has your teen-age son or daughter inexplicably become secretive and moody, spending long hours away from home with an entirely new group of friends? Is his or her interest in school waning? Have grades begun to slip? Do you catch either lying, even stealing, perhaps coming home with red eyes or a staggering gait?

If so, chances are that your child is one of a growing number of adolescents with a drinking or drug-abuse problem.

According to Harve Meskin, director of Adolescent Intervention Rehabilitation Services in San Diego, a program specifically designed to treat teen-age substance abusers, more than 80 percent of all high school seniors in the country "have at least semi-regular contact with alcohol."

It is alcohol, not marijuana, that is the substance-abuse problem of the younger generation, Meskin said, although the two tend to be used together.

Since most people addicted to alcohol or other drugs begin this lifelong pattern between the ages of 14 and 16, and since the cure rate for adult alcoholics is a dismal 20 percent, Meskin believes it is crucially important to reach teen-age drinkers early.

How can they be helped?

You can help your child yourself by using some of Meskin's advice.

The most important thing to remember, said Meskin, who has a Ph.D. in counseling psychology and is a licensed marriage, child and family counselor, is that "the actual high with substance abuse is not the actual gain. The real gain is a sense of identity. A teen-age kid doesn't really know where he or she fits in. They're too old to be a kid and too young to be an adult. Their responsibilities and limitations are poorly defined.

"So when the question 'Who am I?' arises, there are a lot of stock answers but very few individual responses. If I don't know who I am, I can say, 'I'm a preppie, I'm a surfer, I'm a jock, or I'm a loadie (a substance abuser).' That's an identity."

Meskin feels that almost every teen-ager is going to experiment with drugs or alcohol at one time or another and this is to be expected. Problems start when the habit begins altering the adolescent's behavior, causing a drop in grades or the ending of relationships with friends who don't use drugs and a shutdown in communication with parents.

The psychological problem with chronic drinking or pot smoking is that a teen-ager learns to hide anxieties and avoid facing responsibility or taking risks, Meskin said.

So what do you, as a parent, do? In a nutshell, help your son or daughter deal constructively with the self-image problems and the feelings of inadequacy that are really bothering them. There are specific suggestions for dealing with such teen-agers:

— When you find out that they are drinking or smoking marijuana heavily, don't take an accusatory point of view with them, Meskin said. This only creates blocks to communication. Instead, express your own feelings.

Say this, for example: "I see your grades changing, you won't let me meet your friends anymore and you don't come home when you say you will. I feel frightened. I feel confused. I don't understand what's going on with you. Is there something we need to talk about?" This will help create rapport.

— Focus on the positive things your teen-agers do. Parental behaviors such as thinking that children should be seen and not heard, not listening to your children or discounting what they say is damaging.

"We're a negatively skewed society," Meskin said. "A kid who sits there coloring in a book gets no attention but she does when she colors on the wall. Don't just pay attention to your kids when they're acting inappropriately. If that's how they get attention, that's what they'll do.

— Express your love for your teen-age son or daughter. Touch them. Tell them you love them. Let them know you think they're worthwhile. Let them have some input in family decisions. Said Meskin, "If you don't have any input, how can you develop a positive self-image?"

— Set aside one night a week as family night. Take turns deciding what you are going to do, but require the whole family to be home. This will build trust and let your teen-agers know you care.

— Don't try to heavy-handedly prevent them from drinking or using drugs. "If you tell a kid to do one thing, he'll go in the opposite direction," Meskin said. Model appropriate behavior yourself. Play down the mystique of drinking or taking drugs, the attitude that doing so lends one importance. According to Meskin, the proper attitude to have is: "Drinking is OK. Being drunk or out of control is not."

— Focus on building responsible behavior. To do this, set limits and be consistent within them.

Thus, if your teen-ager exhibits poor behavior, perhaps they will lose some allowance, car privileges, or television watching time.

Precaution urged in work with immune deficiency

ATLANTA (AP) — Health care workers should guard against possible infection by an unknown agent that destroys the body's ability to fight deadly diseases, the national Centers for Disease Control said Thursday.

Scientists believe that a transmissable agent may be responsible for acquired immune deficiency syndrome, or AIDS, a newly-identified breakdown in the body's immunity that allows deadly infections to set in, the CDC said.

The syndrome afflicts primarily homosexual males, but has been reported in three other major groups — people who inject illicit drugs, Haitians living in the United States and hemophiliacs.

"We have gotten many inquiries from people in hospitals — doctors, nurses and laboratory technicians — asking what precautions they should take," said Dr. Richard Selik, the medical officer in charge of AIDS surveillance.

The CDC published a list of precautions Thursday in its Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report.

The precautions include wearing gloves when handling specimens, washing hands, labeling containers, using disinfectants and guidelines for handling needles and syringes.

"There is presently no evidence of AIDS transmission to hospital personnel from contact with affected patients or clinical specimens," the federal health agency said in its report.

Between June 1981, when the CDC began keeping figures on the syndrome, and Oct. 28, 1982, there were 691 cases of AIDS reported in the United States and 52 cases reported from abroad, Selik said.

The CDC receives reports of 40 to 60 cases per month of the syndrome, which breaks down immunity to such diseases as Pneumocystis carinii pneumonia, a rare cancer called Kaposi's sarcoma and a number of other life-threatening infections.

The syndrome has had an overall mortality rate of 40 percent, but the death rate climbs as high as 68 percent for cases that were diagnosed more than two years ago, Selik said.

The mortality rate may be slightly inflated, however, because the syndrome, by definition, comprises only the most serious manifestations, he said.

Of the 691 cases, 75 percent involved homosexual males, 13 percent were drug abusers, and 6 percent were Haitians living in this country, Selik said. Three cases involved hemophiliacs.

Most cases were reported from New York, San Francisco, Miami, Newark, N.J., Houston and Los Angeles.

Tall City football teams shoot for playoff berth

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

With one eye cast westward and hearts ripping off beats to the countdown drum, the 22nd football meeting between Midland High and Midland Lee approaches today's 8 p.m. Memorial Stadium blastoff.

District 4-5A puts its final 1982 chapter into the history books tonight and probably no final night in the history of the league holds so many in lingering possibilities. Five of eight 4-5A teams still entertain playoff hopes with only Odessa Permian owning a rock-hard playoff invitation.

The fact that the University Interscholastic League has issued two playoff invitations this year has left this loop in a hungry survival battle heading into this final game. Both 3-2 MHS and 4-2 Lee have playoff shots and this is the first meeting between the two schools that both enter this game with playoff hopes on the line. Odessa High (4-2) and San Angelo (3-3) also have hopes of a playoff berth.

THE BIG doings before a near sellout throng in Odessa tonight determines how all the rest fare. If Odessa High can defeat unbeaten and No. 1 state-ranked Odessa Permian, the Bronchos own the playoff shot. If the Bronchos lose, as is expected, the "tumble down" rule goes into effect. That's where both Lee and MHS come into the picture.

If OHS loses and Lee defeats the Bulldogs, the Rebels are in the playoffs by virtue of an uncontested 5-2 district record. If OHS loses and MHS defeats Lee and San Angelo loses to Big Spring, the Bulldogs are in the state playoffs by virtue of regular season wins over both OHS and Lee. If the above holds and San Angelo wins, there will be a four-way tie between Lee, OHS, MHS and San Angelo and a coin flip at Memorial Stadium following tonight's game will determine the second place team.

It's a monumental night for District 4-5A and both the Rebels and Bulldogs hope to cash in on the final thrilling episode. "Who is second?" Well, that has been the month long question in this Permian dominated league. The answer comes in some form tonight.

Since the OHS-Permian result holds the key for all concerned, eyes of all 4-5A fans will take their first glance there. Then comes the local returns from Lee and MHS. Election '82 never had this kind of excitement.

STILL, NEITHER Lee coach Spike Dykes or MHS boss Pat Culpepper can afford to worry about what is going on in Odessa. The business in the Tall City is enough to worry about.

"The only way we would even want to know the score in Odessa is if we are trailing Midland High 7-6 late in the game. Then that score in Odessa could be important in our decision to go for one or two points," noted Dykes.

Culpepper countered, "If we are going to represent this district, we have to prove it with a victory. That's the bottom line for us, so we can't be worried about the outcome in Odessa."

Lee owns an 11-8-2 lead in the city series and a six-game winning streak. Midland High has not won since 1973. The teams played to ties in 1974 and 1975. But during the current six-game streak by Lee, the Rebels have not won by more than 14 points. City pride has always counted in this one and now there are playoff hopes by both to add fuel to the fire.

Both coaches see this one as another rough and tumble affair.

"Lee is strong from tackle to tackle, but the speed of their linebackers is the most impressive thing. Offensively, the Rebels have speed that everyone would like and none of the Lee fans go to get a coke during kickoffs and punts with Luther Johnson back to return them. Nobody is better at the kicking game than Lee," notes Culpepper. "To beat them, we are going to have to use some skills like getting off the blockers and making the plays. That is the total key for us."

"We've got to move the football against them to win and no one in this league has done that effectively against their defense. You have to give Midland High and their coaches a lot of credit. They were written off as dead when they were 1-4, but they showed a lot of character in turning things around. Midland High is a good football team," says Dykes.

LEE ENTERS the game with a 7-2 record, one victory shy of matching last year's mark, while MHS is 4-5. However, both have won three of their last four games.

"It's going to be a typical MHS-Lee football game," Dykes said. "It's important for both teams and there is a lot at stake. If we don't win, it doesn't really matter what happens anywhere else. We don't want to back into the playoffs. That would take a lot away from the playoffs."

"We have an opportunity to win this game and get into the playoffs. I think our kids have learned over the last few weeks how to win. It should be a great game," Culpepper said. "This game has never been a bad blood thing with the two teams. It's more like looking forward to playing one another. Our kids know their kids and they know us. I'm sure that both teams will play loose and both will be ready to give their best effort of the year."

Lee owns the second best offense in the district with almost 2,000 yards rushing and another 700 passing. Lee has also scored 10 touchdowns this year with the pass. MHS, on the other hand, counters with the second best defensive unit in the league, giving up a mere 1,308 rushing and 510 passing this season.

The Lee defense ranks sixth in the eight-team league, giving up 1,122 yards rushing and 1,009 passing. But the MHS offense ranks seventh overall, managing only 1,211 rushing and 529 passing.

THE LEE ranking is a little misleading since the Rebels have given up only 98 points this year while MHS has given up 107. Lee has outscored MHS by a 215-70 margin this season. The Bulldogs have given up 65 points in district play while Lee has given up 68.

At first the Rebels were tagged with the "No Name" moniker because they had no returning starters back from last years 8-2 squad. Dykes made sure the name stuck through the season, but for a different reason. It is a team of

Bulldogs capture bi-district volleyball crown

MHS gains Area playoff by thumping Tascosa

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

After Midland High posted a 15-11, 15-8 volleyball bi-district victory over Amarillo Tascosa Thursday night and after the ear-splitting triumphant roar from all points in the gym had dimmed to a tolerable level, Bulldogs Denise Lanz, Laura Sherman and Jency Johnson were hugging and patting each other on the back, passing along their congratulations.

When they were asked how they felt about the game, they all replied as one: "it was great, good hustle..." said Johnson, "good hustle, great play...," said Sherman, and "it was a team effort and Laura's spike was the greatest...,"said Lanz.

It was like that all across the floor, teammates, coaches, parents and fans were mobbing the players after their surprisingly easy victory over District 3—5A's Tascosa Rebels.

THE SPIKE Lanz was referring to came on match point against two Rebel defenders at the net. She went up for the hit, they went up for the block and she unloaded. The Rebels were able to block it but it came down in front of them and all efforts to keep it off the floor were in vain. Midland High had the victory and the celebration was about to begin.

It was spikes like Sherman's, mixed with dinks, strong serving and a tremendous defensive effort by the entire team that set up the win for the Bulldogs. Sheila Christian and Penny Griffin were dominant at the net, combining their spikes and dinks enough to keep Tascosa off balance; Melinda Raschke sending floating, spinning serves across the net to trouble the Rebel defense; and Lanz handling center field duties in defensive formation.

The defense played an exceptional game, making an effort on nearly every Amarillo shot by keeping the ball in play to send back over the net, sometimes in saving attempts, sometimes with authority.

The first moments of game one belonged to neither team. Tascosa went up 2-0 only to see the Bulldogs come roaring back with six unanswered points for a 6-2 edge which was quickly followed by a Rebel rally to give Tascosa a 7-6 lead.

Trailing by one point, the Bulldogs began to assert themselves. Four consecutive points were scored for a 10-7 lead before Tascosa got the ball back and it was 12-7 before the Rebels could pick up two points to pull within 12-9.

Spiking, whether for the kill or not, became the name of the game for Midland High at that point as Griffin smashed one home to stop the Rebel run and then added a second spike after the serve to give the Bulldogs a 13-9 edge. A spike by Lisa Coldeway, who was a leading Midland High front line player with an overall excellent performance, and then one by Griffin were both long to bring Tascosa to within 13-10. A Griffin attempt at clearing the net hit didn't quite make it and the ball fell in the Bulldog court to pull the Rebels within two, 13-11. It was as close as Tascosa would come.

With the Rebels serving, Griffin came up with her best play of the night. The Midland High deffense came up with a dig and a set to Griffin who faked a spike and did a back-hand, left-handed dink to bring the ball back to Midland High's court.

A Tascosa serve return went into the net for a 14-11 score and then Christian spiked the game away for a 15-11 win.

THE PATTERN of the second game was the same as the first with the scoring close through the first few points, including ties at one, two, five and six before the Bulldogs could break away. Once Midland High made its move, the points came flooding in: six consecutive points off six consecutive serves for a 12-6 advantage.

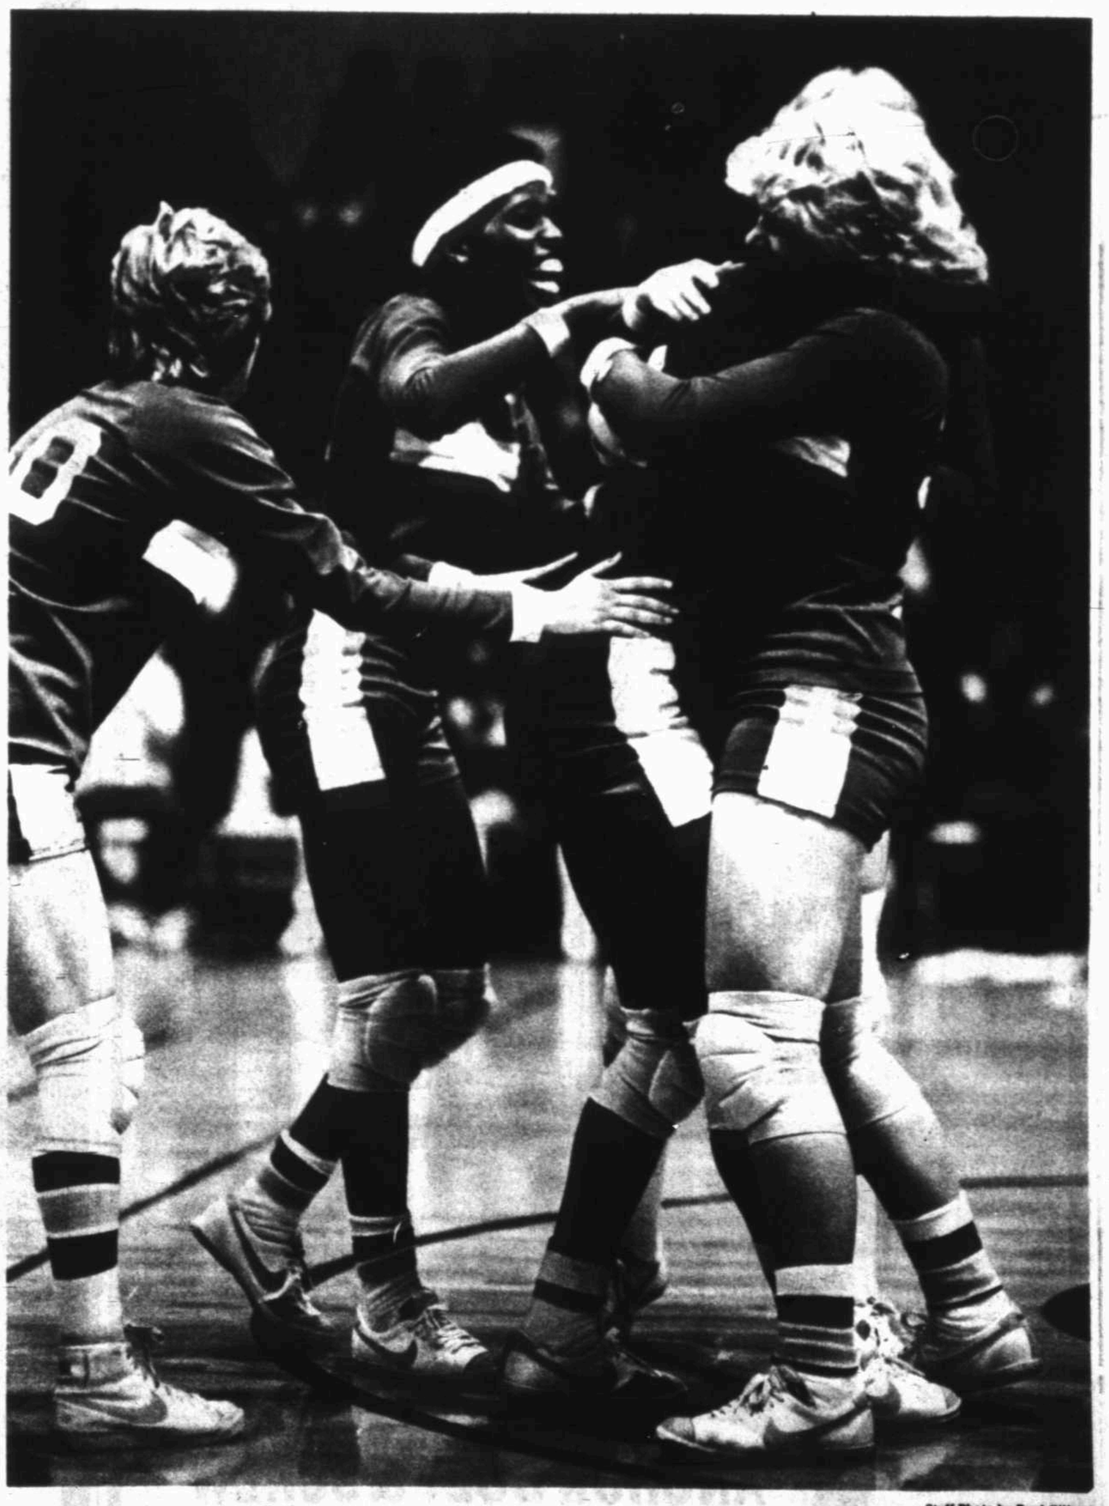

Down the final stretch Tascosa was only able to come up with two points, 12-8 before the Bulldogs pointed on their final three serves, ending the game on Sherman's successful spike.

COLDEWAY, GRIFFIN and Christian echoed their teammate's "great" statements about the match and added a few extra comments.

"It was great," said Coldeway, "we played the best we've played all year I think..."

"It's a great feeling," said Griffin. "They were not what we expected them to be, not as good as we thought they were. They were good when we played them before, but I think we've

UIL reverses football ruling

GRAND PRAIRIE, Texas (AP) — Principal Phil Farris didn'ttobject when students at Grand Prairie High School "went crazy" and ran screaming and yelling through the hallways after he made an announcement on the public address system.

His message — that the Grand Prairie Gophers were 8-1 again after being ordered earlier in the week to forfeit all their victories — triggered a wild celebration Thursday afternoon that spilled out of classrooms and to an outdoor patio for a riotous pep rally that lasted over an hour.

"It's okay, because we wouldn't have gotten anything done in the classrooms anyway," Farris said. "This is a momentous occasion and we're going to savor it to the fullest."

About the same time, bedlam broke out almost simultaneously a few miles to the northeast when Irving Nimitz principal Arlen Cray got on his P.A. system for a similar announcement: the district executive committee had reversed an earlier ruling that took six victories and a tie away from the Nimitz Vikings.

"It's unbelievable," Nimitz head coach Mike Farda gasped on learning that his school's 8-0-1 record would be restored, giving the Vikings their first district championship in the school's 14-year history.

"I really and truly don't know what to say. We knew it was a hope and a prayer, then all of a sudden it comes true. They say the UIL has no heart. That it's too harsh. But they know right when they see right. I'm not going to knock the UIL," Farda said.

Both rulings came out of the District 8-5A executive committee, which met in Grand Prairie Thursday, following a decision in Austin Wednesday by the University Interscholastic League.

The UIL decided that a new regulation that was used to rule a Nimitz player ineligible after he transferred from Frankston was too vague.

And UIL president Bailey Marshall told district officials that the UIL had no problems with a Grand Prairie athlete who had moved one-half block out of the school's attendance boundaries, so long as the school had an existing policy giving him the same rights as any other student.

The district committee had ruled Nimitz ineligible for the district crown last week, and had taken its action on Grand Prairie this past Monday night.

few stars. Dykes uses as many as 15 running backs in a game.

Lee quarterback Paul Cox is the leading Rebel rusher with a mere 317 yards while halfback Clarence Smith has 308. Still, the Rebels own five other backs (Darrell Fennell, Scott Ackroyd, Isaac Garnett, Leonard Freeman and Tommy Joe DeWitt) who have rushed better than 100 yards this year. They come in waves.

The Bulldogs promoted the "Junk Yard Dawgs" tag because of their rock-hard defense, but after a 1-4 start they became known as the "Graveyard Dogs," with one foot in the grave all season. They still haven't shaken that tag, but they never died either and victory tonight would probably give the Bulldogs new life.

Midland High's two I-backs, Ricky Madrid and Raymond Chambers, both own better rushings statistics than any of the Lee rushers. Chambers has 393 yards and Madrid 355. They are the brunt of the offensive attack behind the blocking of fullback Alex Mata.

In the passing department, Dykes has gone with two quarterbacks all year with Cox and Mike Mercurio. Mercurio has chunked seven passes for TDs, completing 16 of 29 for 270 yards overall. Cox has thrown for two TDs, both coming last week against Cooper, and has completed 14 of 41 aerials for 268 yards.

Luther Johnson, the league's leading receiver with 17 catches for 339 yards and three touchdowns, is the Rebels' most potent passing weapon. However, tight end Mike Barton has caught 11 passes for 155 yards for five TDs. Barton leads the team in scoring with 32 points this year. Damon Polk has caught only two passes this year, but both have gone for touchdowns of 35 and 41 yards.

Midland High's Mark Page has done all of the quarterbacking for MHS this year, completing 44 of 109 passes for 529 yards and three touchdowns. He is coming off his best effort of the year where he completed over 100 yards in passes against Abilene High without an interception. He has thrown 14 interceptions this year.

Page's main target this year has been tight end Chuck Dickenson, who has 18 catches for 227 yards. Sophomore Alan Foret, a late season bloomer, has six catches for 111 yards. He was outstanding against Abilene with over 100 yards in receptions, including a TD. Todd Shiplet has 12 receptions for 98 yards and has been another late season thrill.

The Lee linebacking corps of Reggie Ellis, Freeman and Garnett have been superb this year as have ends John Denton and Ackroyd and rover Kevin Taylor. Ellis had 22 tackles last week against Cooper.

The Bulldogs have lived and died with their eight-man front defense this year. Ends John Hibbitts and Mata have been sterling sliver. Linebacker Gary Russell is a big plus as has tackles Chad Hughes (145 pounds) and Bobby Hillin.

But now it's up to Odessa Permian and the Midland team with the most heart. The final gun is only hours away and the playoffs loom in the mist.

Bucs sign Thompson

PITTSBURGH (AP) — First baseman Jason Thompson has a new five-year contract reportedly worth at least $1 million a season, and the Pittsburgh Pirates don't have to worry about finding another power hitter.

Thompson, 28, a seven-year veteran who averages 21 homers and .266, said Thursday that he took a "very generous" offer from the financially struggling Pirates to end speculation he might bolt to become a free agent.

Thompson, beaming but still shy at all the attention, said the signing was "one of the happiest days of my career."

"It was very tempting, no doubt about it," Thompson admitted. "But I really wanted to stay in the National League. I enjoy it. And I also wanted to play in a place where I feel comfortable. And, in 1982, I felt very comfortable in Pittsburgh."

Thompson said "faith in me" by Pirates management, teammates and fans helped convince him to stay in Pittsburgh.

But Thompson's agent, Detroit attorney Alan Miller, conceded Thompson didn't want to take the chance other major league clubs might not pay as much as the Pirates.

Many successful players often are tempted by free agency only to "come running back with their tail between their legs," Miller said.

Lee's Brigade blanks Bullpups, 39-0

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

The final junior varsity game of the 1982 season showed a bright promise for the future of the Midland Lee football program and left the Midland High Bullpups with a lot to think about.

The Stonewall Brigade pounded the Bullpups 39-0 in a mistake-riddled game.

Actually Lee's JV won its portion of the game 32-0, the halftime score, before the Lee sophomores took over in the fourth quarter and outscored the Bullpups 7-0.

Turnovers, which led to three of Lee's five first half touchdowns, stopped the Rebel offense from running up the score in the second half. Three times when Lee was inside the Bullpup 25-yard line they turned the ball over.

Lee fumbled five times, losing three while Midland suffered two interceptions, two bad center snaps in punting situations, one of which led to a blocked punt, and lost three of six fumbles.

MIDLAND STARTED the game going in reverse. After recieving the opening kickoff on the 25-yard line, the Bullpups lost five yards on their first two carries. Senior Jeff Alsup dropped back to pass and threw the ball into the hands of Ricky Jackson, who returned the ball to the 14. Four plays later Tyron Thurman scored from six yards out.

On Midland's next possession, a bad snap forced punter Ariel Elliot to take a four-yard loss and gave Lee the ball on the Bullpups' 34.

Six plays later, quarterback Dennis Matta, who was 2-for-2 passing for two touchdowns and 55 yards and was the leading rusher with 82 yards on five carries, threw a six-yard scoring strike to Willie Long. It was the second time the Matta-Long duo had put the ball into the end zone on the short drive, the first being called back on a procedure penalty.

On their third possession, the Bullpups finally got off a clean punt. In the long run, it didn't do much good.

On first down, Andre Mayfield gathered in a Matta aerial and scampered into the end zone for a 49-yard touchdown.

Despite the bad snap and blocked punt, Midland High had better luck at stopping the Rebels when they didn't punt than when they did.

On their next possession, Elliot got away a booming 46-yarder, putting Lee on its own side of the field for the first time. It gave the Stonewall Brigade their worst field position of the night, their own 35-yard line.

But first down proved to be the only one Lee would need as Matta kept the ball on the option play, wiggled his way through the defense and ended his 65-yard trek to the end zone.

For the Bullpups, the first quarter ended much too late with the score 26-0. Midland had a total of three net yards in offense, one interception, and a bad snap from center. Lee, on the other hand, had four touchdowns and 158-yards of offensive production.

Lee showed depth and versitility, using three quarterbacks and 12 running backs in the contest, including an all-sophomore defense and offense in the final five minutes of the game.

Midland finally stopped Lee's scoring machine on its first possession of the second quarter. The Stonewall Brigade was forced to punt and cheerfully gained thirty yards as MHS fumbled the kick away.

Midland held its ground, stopping Lee eight yards from pay dirt. After moving the ball out to the 24, the Bullpups suffered another bad snap on fourth down and this time Thomas Manley blocked the punt, giving the Rebels the ball on the 11.

The story was the same for the third time in a row, it was first down and touchdown. Thurman's carry put the Rebels up, 32-0.

The Bullpups started the second half much like they played most of the first. They turned the ball over on fumbles on their first two possessions.

But this time Lee returned the favor, giving up the ball inside Midland's 35 three times.

Then it was the Bullpups turn to be generous as they gave up one more fumble and threw their second interception of the game.

With an all-sophomore team on the field, Earl Davis stepped in front of a James Welborn pass and returned it 41 yards and Craig Kamradt added the point after to close out the scoring.

improved more than they have..."

"It was an excellent game, everything was really great," said Christian. "They thought they'd come in here and beat us and we proved them wrong."

MHS head coach Linda Jolly was extremely proud of her girls and their efforts saying, "I think they just played excellent. I know I keep saying this, but they're fighters, they really are. All my girls were really hitting the ball."

"They played well, excellent," said Tascosa coach Dana Hatch. "Midland controled the match almost the entire night. A couple of times we were able to pull back in it but most of the time we were playing their tempo. Defensively, they killed us. They kept playing off the net, saving the ball and making it good."

LIKE IT was in Big Spring Monday night after the Bulldogs defeated San Angelo to break the two-way tie for first place. Coach Jolly was involved in another coin flip to determine site. The only difference was she allowed El Paso Bel Air (Midland High's next opponent in the Area playoff round) Coach Mary Thompson to make the call.

Thompson called "tails" and it came up heads which started another congratulations routine among the throng of players and fans who watched the flip.

Winning the coin toss gives the Bulldogs the home court advantage against Bel Air Monday night at 7 p.m. in round two of each team's quest for the state tournament.

Indians tab Yankees' Ferraro as manager

CLEVELAND (AP) — Mike Ferraro says he didn't mind waiting in line to become manager of the Cleveland Indians.

The former New York Yankee coach was Cleveland's second choice to replace Dave Garcia, who has retired after 3½ years as manager. The Indians first sought Billy Martin, fired last month by the Oakland A's, but were unable to sign him.

"I think it might be a little bit of a tribute to be considered for the same job Billy was considered for," Ferraro said Thursday after receiving a two-year contract with the Indians. "Billy's a tremendous manager."

Ferraro, 38, coached third base and first base for the Yankees the past four years. A former New York player, he also managed in the Yankees' minor league system for five years, finishing first three times.

"As a matter of fact, I gave him his first managerial job at Oneonta in 1974," said Indians President Gabe Paul, who was formerly president of the Yankees. "I was thrilled to see a Class A team, the lowest class team, execute fundamentals as well as any team in the major leagues. At that time, I put in the back of my mind that here was a future major league manager."

Paul characterized Ferraro as a "firm disciplinarian."

"I hope I can bring enthusiasm and a little bit of discipline to this team," Ferraro said. "One of the gripes I have with players today is they sign long-term contracts. If they go 0-for-4, they don't get upset. If they have a little stomach problem, they don't play. In my day, if you went 0-for-4, you got upset. I think the money players make today should motivate them."

Ferraro received national attention during the 1980 playoffs, when he was coaching third base for the Yankees against Kansas City. Yankee Willie Randolph was thrown out on a play at home plate after being waved in by Ferraro, and Yankee owner George Steinbrenner was angered enough to move Ferraro from third base to first base.

"He's the owner. He had a right to get upset," Ferraro said.

NFL players refuse offer

NEW YORK (AP) — Jack Donlan rang the dinner bell. "Come and get it!" he hollered.

Ed Garvey checked the menu and said, "No thanks; I'm not that hungry yet."

On the 45th day of the National Football League strike, Donlan, the owners' chief negotiator, waved a $60-million carrot in front of the 1,500 striking players, an attempt to induce them to approve a collective bargaining agreement immediately.

The players across the country will never get a first-hand look at the carrot. Garvey, the union's executive director, waved it aside with disdain. "We have no interest in this proposal whatsoever," he said.

But Jim Kensil, president of the New York Jets and a member of the owners' executive committee, warned the union to think twice before saying no. "I guess you could call this an effort to save the season," he said. "I don't know of any other offer we're prepared to make."

Except for the timing, the offer wasn't much different from management's Sept. 8 "career adjustment bonus" — the one the union called a bribe.

"You would think that seven weeks into a strike they would learn what we're striking for," said Joseph A. Yablonski, the union's chief counsel.

What they are striking for is more than money. "I hope the people in the NFL don't get the idea that putting a certain amount of money on the table will solve all of our problems," said union president Gene Upshaw. "When we started this process we started it in an atmosphere of fairness, one in which we were out to gain our dignity. We're still on that course."

"As a practical matter there is no difference between this offer and the last one," added Yablonski. "Nobody thought it would be as inadequate as this."

The money on the table, beyond the yet-to-be-determined salaries for this fractured season and the owners' $1.31-billion package for 1983-86, is worth $60 million.

For any vested player — one on the roster three games or more into his fourth season — the payoff for approving a collective bargaining agreement is $60,000. For rookies it's $10,000; second-year players $20,000; third-year vets $30,000.

What the Sept. 8 proposal offered was $10,000 for each year of service, up to $60,000. The difference between this one and that, therefore, is an additional $20,000 for a fourth-year player and $10,000 for one in his fifth season.

The management council entitled it: "Money Now." As far as Mark Murphy was concerned, it could mean less money later.

Dunleavy saves Spurs

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Mike Dunleavy's belief in the three-point goal was vindicated Thursday night.

He made a 26-foot field goal shot with seven seconds left in overtime to give the Spurs the three points they needed for a 108-107 National Basketball Association victory over the Portland Trail Blazers.

Dunleavy said later, "I believe in the three-point shot. I always have ... It is a devastating weapon if you use it right. But if you overdo it, it can turn on you."

Mychal Thompson of Portland made a tip-in with 18 seconds left in regulation to send the game into overtime at 95-95. He finished with a team-high 22 points.

San Antonio took a 34-22 lead in the first quarter then remained ahead until the final period.

Mustangs, Arkansas risk spotless records

By The Associated Press

Second-ranked Southern Methodist and fifth-ranked Arkansas risk spotless records on the road Saturday against downtrodden opponents who could make their seasons with an upset.

SMU was a 24-point favorite over the winless Rice Owls in Houston while Arkansas rated a 12-point pick over Baylor in Waco. The Bears have won just twice this season.

In other games, Texas was an eight-point choice over Houston in the Astrodome and Texas Christian rated a three-point nod over Texas Tech in Fort Worth.

Rice played Arkansas tough in Fayetteville last weekend before falling 24-6, and Owl Coach Ray Alborn promised the same kind of effort against the Mustangs.

"It is a great oportunity for us to play a top team like SMU," Alborn said. "I believe our guys wll play hard as they did at Arkansas, and play with a lot of pride. SMU is a great team or they wouldn't be where they are today."

Alborn said SMU is not as fast as Arkansas on defense, but added the Mustangs "are very big and physical and just say 'Let's line up and see if you can move us.' Nothing fancy, but plenty physical."

He said offensively the Mustangs are the class of the conference.

"With Eric Dickerson and Craig James and that little guy running them at quarterback (Lance McIlhenny), they are tremendous," Alborn said. "I don't want to make ol' Eric mad so if his mother wants to come sit in a nice box seat on our side, that is fine with me ... Maybe Eric

Canadian strike could ruin Chrysler

TORONTO (AP) — Chrysler Chairman Lee Iacocca says a strike called for today by its 10,000 unionized Canadian workers could put America's No. 3 automaker out of business.

"This is a deadly serious matter and we want you to have the facts before you begin a strike which will cripple the company and, perhaps, ruin it," Iacocca said in a letter sent to the homes of Chrysler's Canadian workers on the eve of a walkout set for 10 a.m. EST.

Union leaders on both sides of the border are demanding pay increases for workers whose salaries have been frozen since 1979, disputing Chrysler's claim that it cannot afford raises.

Chrysler's U.S. workers voted last month to postpone further negotiations until January rather than begin a strike during the Christmas season.

But the traditionally more militant Canadian branch of the United Auto Workers Union rejected a similar proposal.

"It makes no sense from our point of view," Canadian UAW chief Robert White said.

Negotiators met Thursday night to settle non-money matters and local plant disputes. But the economic gap was so wide that no full-scale bargaining session was scheduled until an hour before today's strike deadline, and neither side held out much hope of a settlement.

"We're certainly heading for a strike," White told reporters Thursday. "I think its almost impossible to avoid a strike now, but if the company were to surprise us and make an economic offer, we could work to make it (a strike) a short one."

Because the company's U.S. and Canadian operations are tightly linked, Chrysler officials say a strike in Canada would force immediate layoffs for 6,000 U.S. workers and eventually idle the entire workforce of 43,000.

UAW leaders south of the border say some of their members are angered by the prospect of being laid off by a Canadian strike.

"They're upset, needless to say," said David Wilkins, president of Local 1226 in Indianapolis. "They want them (Canadians) to put (the negotiations) off until January like we did."

During recurring crises beginning in 1979, Chrysler workers agreed to forego or roll back pay hikes while the company sought aid from both the Canadian and American governments, at times lobbying heavily in Congress before winning U.S. government loan guarantees.

"Chrysler Corp. is at the crossroads," White told reporters. "They have paid the banks, they have paid suppliers, and they have to make up their minds to spend some money on workers."

Iacocca noted in his letter to the workers that Chrysler lost $156 million "building and selling automobiles" in the first nine months of 1982.

In response, UAW leaders pointed to the company's $266.4 million profit announced for the same period. Chrysler said the discrepancy is explained by sales of some divisions, cash management policies, and tax advantages stemming from earlier losses.

Iacocca also noted that government funds pledged to help Chrysler avoid bankruptcy could not be diverted to pay raises without approval from a board that is not likely to give its okay.

"We will take a strike if we must, even though we are aware it could put us out of business," Iacocca wrote. "We are determined to keep our labor costs under control. Only by doing so can we save this company — and your jobs."

The average hourly wage for a Chrysler assembler is $9.07, paid in the local currency to both U.S. and Canadian workers.

The Canadians, whose earn $7.48 an hour at the current exchange rate, say Chrysler can afford to begin raising their wages toward "parity" with Ford and General Motors workers, who make about $3 an hour more.

Chrysler's offer to the union, presented Tuesday night, was effectively the same proposal rejected by U.S. workers, with no pay increase but a cost-of-living adjustment in December.

The Canadian UAW bargaining council unanimously rejected the offer, calling it "insulting."

Chrysler has six plants in Canada — two near Toronto in the suburbs of Ajax and Etobicoke and four in Windsor, just across the border from Detroit.

The New Yorker and several other models are produced exclusively in Canada. The immediate U.S. layoffs will be at plants that supply Canadian production. If the strike persists, nearly all U.S. jobs will be threatened because the Ajax plant makes interior trim needed to complete all Chrysler cars.

October mortgage rates down

WASHINGTON (AP) — The average interest rates charged Americans for new mortgages declined to a 1½-year low of 15.73 percent in October, continuing a three-month downward drift, the government says.

"The drop in mortgage rates reflected the decline in capital market interest rates that began in late summer," the Federal Home Loan Bank Board reported Thursday.

The new average effective commitment rate on long-term, fixed-rate mortgages fell 0.45 percentage points early last month from the 16.18 percent of September. The rate was 17.01 percent in August and 17.23 percent in July.

It reached a record of 18.17 in October 1981 and was 16.12 percent in May 1981.

The rate is quoted by major lenders for newly built single-family homes with a 25-year conventional mortgage that makes up 75 percent of the purchase price.

The report said 75.5 percent of major mortgage lenders were offering commitments on conventional mortgages last month, about the same as in September.

The average effective interest rate on home loans closed by major lenders fell to 14.85 percent last month, down 0.36 percentage points from the September level, the report said.

Capital spending cut planned

NEW YORK (AP) — U.S. business plans to cut capital spending by 2.1 percent next year, to $316.9 billion, because of weak sales this year that resulted in excess plant and equipment, according to a survey by the economics department at McGraw-Hill Publications Co.

A 7 percent rise in capital goods prices also is expected next year by the companies responding to the survey, which was released Thursday.

If both projections prove correct, inflation-adjusted plant and equipment spending would fall 8.5 percent next year — which would be the first time since World War II that real spending fell two years in a row, McGraw-Hill Publications said.

Plant and equipment spending this year is expected to drop 4.5 percent, it said.

The unit of McGraw-Hill Inc. cautioned, however, that in past surveys taken "in years marked by capital spending downturns, projections for the following years were overly pessimistic."

Investors made $50 billion Wednesday

By ARELO SEDERBERG
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Investors in stock made $50 billion Wednesday. All they had to do was sit tight and not call their brokers. But what's new about that? They've made $410 billion since August 13, when the biggest bull charge in Wall Street history started.

Call it a buying panic. All investors had to do was not to sell. And all they also had to do is not read the financial pages. Because those pages would have told of rising unemployment, record federal budget deficts, a crushed auto and housing market, a deep trade defict and a general economy so sluggish its gains are hardly measurable.

One would think the market should not go up. It has few reasons to go up. Sure, interest rates are down from their lofty levels, but they are still high by historic standards; of course inflation has receeded, but it still is at a level which in the past resulted in price freezes. But there the stock market is — not only up, but astoundingly up.

The market soared to an all-time high on the Dow average Wednesday, leaping 43.41 points to 1065.49. That beats the previous record of 1051.70 on Jan. 11, 1973 and the daily gain of 38.81 last August 17. Since the rally started, the Dow has gained 290 points. Almost all other averages have crept up.

What's happening? Analysts are as confused about it as everyone else, but they try to offer some explanations. The national elections showed that Americans are not ready to toss out the administration's economic policies. Interest rates may come down some more and perhaps even stay down. The battered American economy in the doldrums since 1978 may be bottoming out and ready to rise. After all, the analysts point out the stock market usually moves six months ahead of economic trends.

"The president will have less of a cheering section," said Dean Witter's Robert Stovall. Monte Gordon of Dreyfus Corp. said: "I don't think the public repudiated Reagan."

That may explain Wednesday but it does not explain the action since Aug. 12 which has seen a couple dozen days of higher stock volume than brokers used to see in a year.

All the analysts could say is that the momentum was there. And the panic-buying psychology was there. The institutions continued to plunge in; the water seemed pleasant and warm. Some analysts noted that the Fed indeed is loosening its tight rein on money. Another cut in the discount rate, which would be the sixth this year, is anticipated soon. And declining interest rates, if they continue, could spark the dead auto and housing industries.

How long will it last? How far will it go?

Martin Zweig, publisher of the Zweig Forecast, points out that the nine prior bull markets since World War II showed a seven-month advance before the first real correction (10 percent or more) and the average advance lasted 11.7 months. The Dow had an average gain of 43 percent in the first leg of the bull.

Is it a true bull market, one whose primary trend in up? Most non-believers are coming around to true believers, even if the gain may seem to be constructed of tissue paper sealed with moth wings.

"Anybody who was a doubter about the force of this market has to be a believer now," said Michael Metz of Oppenheimer and Co.

How about Joesph Granville, who's superbearish forecasts dumped markets in the past? Well his Oct. 30 letter contains a familiar phrase, "sell all stocks."

Granville admitted he'd missed the turn, however, in a speach last month. "Look, my name is Joe Granville, not God," he said. "I made a mistake but I'm not about to compound it. If I didn't say buy stocks in August I'm certainly not going to say buy at over 1,000 on the Dow. This rise increases, rather than decreases, the odds in favor of a major smash to follow."

He'll also remind you that following the crash in October 1929, the stock market started a rally in November that carried the averages up about 50 percent. But that was an entirely different situation.

The market had dropped 50 percent prior to the rally. And after the rally ended, it began a descent into the basement and into the depression. It took over 30 years to recover.

Top dogs get bigger bones

NEW YORK (AP) — Average earnings of chief executives of the nation's large manufacturing companies rose to $407,000 last year, up 24 percent from 1979 levels, the Conference Board reports.

But the business-financed study group noted a special survey it conducted earlier this year indicates the trend was halted this year. It had reported 9 percent of the 531 manufacturing firms it surveyed this year had cut salaries of their executives, most of them by 5 percent to 10 percent.

In a study released Thursday, the board analyzed the compensation of the five highest-paid executives in 1,171 corporations last year.

It said a rapidly growing number of companies offered annual bonuses to spur executives' performance as well as higher base salaries.

S&Ls may have to pay more

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal regulators are considering a plan to make poorly managed savings and loan associations pay more for the federal insurance that backs up savers' money.

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board on Thursday asked for public comment on the plan that would make it more costly for riskier S&Ls to have federal insurance coverage.

The Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. insures depositors' money up to $100,000 in about 3,400 savings and loans. For that protection, the institutions pay a flat-rate premium of one-twelfth of one percent of their insured deposits. The fund is an arm of the bank board.

But the bank board is considering assessing an additional premium to bolster the fund and then giving back part of the premium to institutions based on a risk-sensitive index that evaluates their condition and operations.

Record number drew unemeployment in Ocotber

By The Associated Press

A record number of Americans drew unemployment benefits last month and retailers reported sluggish sales as the nation's economy showed more discouraging signs and the stock market's historic rally stalled.

Some 4.69 million Americans drew jobless checks in mid-October, the highest number since the benefits program was enacted in the 1930s, government figures released Thursday show.

The Labor Department today was scheduled to release its unemployment statistics for October. The nation's jobless rate in September was 10.1 percent, the highest since World War II.

Investors greeted Wall Street with its busiest day in history Thursday as 149.35 million shares traded hands on the New York Stock Exchange. The previous record, 147.07 million, was set Oct. 7.

Despite the activity, stocks ran into a late selling wave and the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials tumbled to 1,050.22, down 15.27 points from the record 1,065.49 it reached the previous day.

The late selling was attributed mainly to investors cashing in to take advantage of the market's spectacular performance in recent weeks — gains that analysts said reflected investors' optimism that interest rates will keep falling.

Consumers were not as enthusiastic about spending money last month, and the poor October sales posted by the nation's major retailers extended a sluggish trend that began in June. The latest reports prompted analysts to revise downward their projections for sales in the crucial Christmas season.

Three of the top four retailers reported small sales declines last month, while industry leader Sears, Roebuck & Co. reported a small 3.8 percent gain.

The results were even worse than they appear because they were compared with the particularly weak sales of October 1981, said Monroe H. Greenstein, an analyst at the securities firm Bear, Stearns & Co.

While consumers may not be spending more money, the value of the U.S. dollar itself keeps climbing in relation to other major currencies.

The dollar reached record highs against the French franc, Italian lira and Norwegian krone in European trading Thursday. It also hit six-year peaks against the West German mark, Swiss franc and British pound, and was mostly higher as well in U.S. trading.

But the dollar's strength is helping lift the U.S. foreign trade deficit, which widened to $13.1 billion in the third quarter from $5.8 billion in the preceding quarter, the Commerce Department said.

The shortfall through September was $24.8 billion, and at that pace, it would be about $33 billion by year's end, just short of the 1978 record of $33.8 billion.

A strong dollar makes imports more attractive to Americans while making U.S. exports more expensive for foreigners.

In other economic news:

—Home mortgage interest rates fell from early September to early October and reached their lowest level since May 1981, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board said. The average effective rate offered by major mortgage lenders on a conventional, 25-year loan fell to 15.73 percent from 16.18 percent in early August, it said.

—Assets of the nation's money-market mutual funds advanced for the fourth consecutive week, rising $1.3 billion to a record $231.2 billion, the Investment Company Institute said. The increase for the seven-day period that ended Wednesday resulted in a four-week gain of $6.6 billion.

—Indefinite layoffs reported among U.S. autoworkers this week rose to 251,490, their highest level in seven months, from 247,767 the previous week, the five major domestic automakers said. Meanwhile, an industry trade journal, Automotive News, said the automakers' October car production was 416,675 units, down 22 percent from a year earlier and the lowest for the month in 12 years.

—U.S. business plans to cut capital spending by 2.1 percent to $316.9 billion, because weak sales have left companies with excess plant and equipment, according to a new survey released by McGraw-Hill Publications Co. The unit of McGraw-Hill Inc., in surveying 450 companies, found that business also expects a 7 percent rise in capital goods prices next year.

ATT may transfer some assets

WASHINGTON (AP) — American Telephone & Telegraph Co. will be allowed to transfer more than $5 billion in assets and capital needed by its new American Bell Inc. subsidiary to begin selling telephone equipment to the public.

In another decision, the Federal Communications Commission also requested public comment on what standards are needed to govern the installation of telephone wiring in homes and small businesses.

The commission is deregulating the provision of such on-premise wiring, breaking down what in most states has been a monopoly service provided by the local telephone company. Depending on how the FCC resolves the question of standards, consumers might be able to perform such wiring themselves.

Thursday's approval of AT&T's asset transfer plan had been expected, since the giant telephone company is facing a Jan. 1, 1983, deadline for a new unit to take over the sale of newly manufactured equipment from the Bell System companies.

The commission and AT&T both stressed the total does not represent a new financial burden for AT&T, since the company is merely transferring the job of handling new equipment to American Bell.

The transfer of assets will set the stage, however, for a major change in the way consumers obtain their equipment. After Jan. 1, anyone who wants to buy a brand new telephone will have to turn to American Bell or one of its competitors instead of their local telephone company.

Money funds' worth climbs

NEW YORK (AP) — Assets of the nation's money-market mutual funds climbed for the fourth consecutive week, rising $1.3 billion to a record $231.2 billion.

The increase for the seven-day period that ended Wednesday resulted in a four-week gain of $6.6 billion, the Investment Company Institute said Thursday.

The trade group said the assets of 151 general purpose funds increased $264 million to $72.6 billion, the assets of 68 broker dealer funds rose $555 million to $113.8 billion and 45 institutional funds were up $479 million to $44.9 billion.

The Washington, D.C.-based institute said the number of funds rose to 264 with the addition of five new general purpose funds.

Analysts are lowering Christmas sales projections

NEW YORK (AP) — Analysts are lowering their projections for the crucial Christmas retail season after the nation's major retailers posted poor sales again in October.

Three of the top four retailers posted small sales declines last month, extending a sluggish trend that started in June. Industry leader Sears, Roebuck and Co. reported only a small increase.

Several months ago analysts predicted industry sales would rise an average 7 percent to 8 percent for the season from Thanksgiving to just after Christmas compared to year-earlier sales. But analyst Monroe H. Greenstein now sees a gain of 4 percent to 6 percent.

Jeffrey Feiner, a retail analyst with Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc., said he reduced his forecast to the same range, now projecting a "gradual improvement, not ebullient."

The October results that prompted the gloomier predictions are even poorer than they appear because they are compared with the particularly weak sales of October 1981, said Greenstein, who is with the securities firm Bear, Stearns & Co.

A. Brennan, chairman and chief executive of the Sears Merchandise Group, said one bright note last month was a strong gain in sales of big-ticket items. In particular, he said, washers and dryers, microwave ovens, refrigerators, televisions, video cassette recorders and games did well.

Sears, which is based in Chicago, said its October sales inched up 3.8 percent to $1.593 billion from $1.535 billion in the same month last year. For the first 39 weeks of 1982, sales were up 2 percent to $14.32 billion from $14.05 billion last year.

K mart, the No. 2 retailer, said its sales dipped 2.1 percent to $1.183 billion from $1.208 billion a year ago. K mart, based in Troy, Mich., said its 39-week sales were $11.63 billion, up 2.3 percent from the year-ago $11.37 billion.

J.C. Penney Co., the New York-based retailer that ranks No. 3, said its sales dropped 2.4 percent to $809 million from $829 million. Penney said that so far this year its sales totaled $7.19 billion, up 0.3 percent from $7.17 billion.

F.W. Woolworth Co., No. 4, said its sales were down 2 percent to $521 million from $532 million. Woolworth, also headquartered in New York, said the sales for the first 39 weeks were $5.1 billion, up 1.4 percent from $5 billion.

Dollar mixed, gold unchanged

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar, bolstered in recent days by a surge on Wall Street, turned in a mixed performance in early foreign trading today. Gold prices were little changed in Europe.

The dollar reached record highs in relation to the French franc and Italian lira in morning dealings, but fell back from six-year peaks against the West German mark and British pound.

Currency dealers said they did not expect any high-volume trading as investors worked to tighten their positions at the end of the week.

Investor confidence in the dollar has been boosted this week by a record rise on Wall Street, but European traders said there was continued uncertainty over the future of U.S. interest rates.

At the start of the business day in Tokyo, the dollar eased to 277.20 yen from Thursday's 277.25 yen. The close was slightly lower than last Friday's finish of 277.40 yen.

In London, the British pound moved up to $1.6690 from the previous day's rate of $1.6655.

Other dollar rates compared with late Thursday included:

2.5725 West German marks, down from 2.5735

2.2225 Swiss francs, up from 2.2207

7.2565 French francs, up from 7.2540

ARCO oil yield up

DALLAS (SWN) — Atlantic Richfield Company said today that its Arco Alaska Inc. subsidiary increased its share of oil production from Alaska's Prudhoe Bay field by about 55,500 barrels per day to approximately 322,500 barrels daily (exclusive of condensate), as a result of an interim redetermination agreement with the other major interest owners.

The agreement, among Exxon Corporation, Sohio Alaska Petroleum Company, BP Alaska Exploration Inc. and Arco Alaska is an interim step pending final redetermination of equity ownership in the Prudhoe Bay unit.

The interim agreement, effective Oct. 1, increased Arco Alaska's equity interest in the unit oil reserves from 20.382 percent to 21.661 percent and its interest in the natural gas cap reserves from 42.242 percent to 42.611 percent.

Yates Petroleum drills in wilderness, may be breaking rules

By ELEANOR RANDOLPH
Los Angeles Times
Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — In what may be the first test of Secretary of the Interior James G. Watt's wilderness policy following the midterm elections, an independent oil company has cleared land and started drilling in a New Mexico wilderness area in apparent violation of federal rules.

Government officials said Thursday that Yates Petroleum Co. of Roswell, N.M., has paved a road through the wilderness in southeast New Mexico and moved in equipment to drill to a depth of as much as 4,000 feet in a search for oil and gas.

The drilling began Nov. 1 and, as a result, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has issued a notice of trespass violation that normally carries a $500 fine. Tom Smiley, spokesman for the service in New Mexico, said Yates operators stopped briefly after receiving the citation and then began drilling again after communicating with their headquarters.

"We are now in the process of looking at other possible options (to stop the drilling)," Smiley said in a telephone interview. He said officials were considering possible actions ranging from a permanent shutdown of the operation to asking a judge for a temporary restraining order.

"This is too little, too late," Timothy Mahoney, wilderness specialist for the Sierra Club, said. "The environmental damage is done and we cannot help but wonder if this was carried out in such a way as to avoid being an issue in the New Mexico elections."

Smiley and Harmon Kallman, a Department of the Interior spokesman here, said Yates had a peculiar double lease. A state lease allows the company to drill for minerals below the surface, but the company has no federal authorization to cross the surface of the land except on foot, they said.

Alexander Good, associate solicitor at the Department of the Interior, said he wrote Yates in late October saying that, while the federal government saw no legal problems with allowing access to the wilderness area, Congress had cut off all funds for regulation of drilling in wilderness areas.

Asked whether that letter could be construed as telling Yates that the company could proceed even without permits, Good said: "Categorically no."

The wilderness question, which became a hot political issue in the West before this week's election, is expected to be considered by the new Congress next year. The House voted this summer to ban drilling in wilderness areas. But the Senate has put off taking any action until studies are completed on whether millions of acres are suitable for wilderness classification. If the government decides these acres are not suitable, they can be developed for other uses.

"This case demonstrates that Secretary Watt either does not have the will or hasn't the ability to protect these areas unless Congress passes a law protecting them," Terry Sopher, public lands specialist for the Wilderness Society, said.

Government officials said Yates had to show that it intended to drill on the land before Nov. 1, otherwise the company's 10-year-old state lease would expire. Smiley said that a Yates official walked to the site Sunday night and dug a hole by hand to prove that some activity had begun. Then, the company moved equipment over federal land beginning the next day, Nov. 1.

Yates officials could not be reached immediately in New Mexico.

Suspects given lawyers

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal magistrate has agreed to appoint attorneys for two men indicted in a $15 million extortion-bomb plot after dissuading one of the men from acting as his own lawyer.

U.S. Magistrate Frank Waltermire chose a lawyer for Michael Worth, 34, Thursday and promised to find one for John McBride, 46, after agreeing that neither could afford to hire counsel.

A third defendant, Theodore McKinney, 45, told Waltermire he already had retained a lawyer.

The three Durango, Colo., men are among five people indicted on charges they tried to extort $15 million from Gulf Oil Chemicals Co. by threatening to blow up a refinery.

McBride, the alleged mastermind of the extortion attempt, first asked to be allowed to represent himself. But he accepted Waltermire's offer to appoint an attorney.

"The technicalities involved in the federal rules of evidence ... are burdensome for some very good lawyers. I hope you will consider that," Waltermire told McBride.

He then asked McBride if he would accept an attorney.

"Very definitely, your honor," McBride said.

The magistrate kept the bond for each of the trio at $1 million each.

Two other Durango residents — Timothy K. Justice, 30, and Jill Renee Bird, 34 — are charged in the 12-count indictment.

McKinney's lawyer, John Ackerman, said he thought his client would plead innocent but he added that he had met McKinney only an hour earlier. He also said he expected to ask for a bond reduction.

Justice pleaded guilty Monday to two counts — illegally transporting explosives across state lines and using long distance phone calls to promote a felony. The FBI said Justice has admitted cutting the security fence at the Gulf plant and placing the explosives inside.

Sentencing for Justice is set for Dec. 14, the same day Ms. Bird's trial is to begin. Ms. Bird was released on $200,000 bail after pleading innocent last week.

Her lawyer said prosecutors reneged on an agreement to give her immunity in exchange for information from McBride, her common-law husband, about the location of five bombs in Colorado. But prosecutors said the agreement was not binding because it was made under duress and McBride was not completely truthful.

Gulf shut down its Cedar Bayou chemical plant eight miles north of Baytown for about five days at a cost of about $5 million after receiving a six-page extortion letter Sept. 28.

The letter said 10 bombs were hidden at various places in the plant and that the refinery would be destroyed unless $15 million were paid within 120 hours.

Five bombs were found in the plant. One exploded harmlessly while being disarmed and the other four were defused with no explosion.

Federal study says mine accidents don't just happen

By MERRILL HARTSON
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Coal mine accidents don't just happen, a government agency has concluded after comparing operating procedures at mines having good safety records with those plagued by mishaps.

In a statement Thursday describing the results of the study entitled "Factors Associated With Disabling Injuries in Underground Coal Mines," the Mine Safety and Health Administration said the "relatively safe" mines had significantly different operating procedures than the accident-prone mines.

Assistant Secretary of Labor Ford B. Ford, who heads the mine safety agency, said the research team "found that clearly established procedures, top management support for safety, effective safety training programs and good communication between management and the miners can make a real difference in the operation's safety record."

The study assigned 21 of the 40 mines to the "least safe" group and 19 to the group having low injury incidence rates. Neither the mines nor the companies that operate them were identified in the statement.

John McGrath, an agency spokesman, said, however, that all 21 mines falling in the "least safe" category were unionized mines, while five of the 19 in the relatively safe category were non-union mines.

There have been 110 coal mine fatalities so far this year, three more than at this time in 1981. Last year, 153 people perished in coal mine accidents.

The study showed that the safer mines had:

—Highly effective miner training programs using up-to-date, relevant training materials tailored to meet individual miner needs.

—Standard operating procedures that were clearly understood and practiced by supervisors and workers.

—Even-handed enforcement of established policies concerning absenteeism, job assignments and operating procedures.

—Support by top management of the mine's safety department in terms of staffing and funding for the safety program.

—Effective two-way communications of formal safety and health policies and safety concerns throughout the workforce.

The study noted that all mines surveyed shared adverse conditions such as "excess liberation of potentially dangerous methane gas," fragile, unstable roofs and excess water in roadways and steep grades.

It said the operators of mines with good safety records took stronger measures to deal with such hazards.

"Morale problems appeared to arise less frequently at the safer mines than they did at mines in the group with high injury rates," the agency said.

"Interviews with miners showed that managements in the safer mine group were quick to identify morale problems and to do something positive to resolve them," it said.

Director makes series success

NEW YORK (AP) — Belinda Lang, who plays Beth Powlett-Jones in "To Serve Them All My Days," says characterization — and more precisely, casting — was largely responsible for the series' immense popularity in Britain.

"I think I know why it worked," says the actress, whose prior TV experience was a single play called "The Imitation Game" for the British Broadcasting Corp. "It was because of the director, Ronnie Wilson. He's a very sensitive man, who chooses very carefully what he wants to do with a character or scene.

"I didn't realize that while I was working with him, but when I saw something he did later, 'Frost in May' by Antonia White, I suddenly saw the reason for his success. He will take a scene where nothing happens," Miss Lang says, "and make it absolutely riveting.

"And his characters have a lot to do with that," she says. "For the main characters, he will take people who give exactly the right feeling, so in the end, nobody is acting their socks off. And for those who play the supporting parts, he gets some very classy people."

"To Serve Them All My Days," adapted from the novel by R.F. Delderfield, continues its 13-week run on public TV's "Masterpiece Theater" with Part 5 Sunday night.

The miniseries from the BBC and the Australian Broadcasting Commission has been roundly applauded by critics in this country.

It's the story of life in a boy's school in England between the world wars. David Powlett-Jones is a Welsh miner's son who suffers from shell shock and is discharged from the army before the war is over. He takes a job teaching history at Bamfylde School in Devon, and, in due course, meets and marries Beth Marwood, a young nurse.

John Duttine plays Powlett-Jones, and England's Best Television Actor of 1981 is ideal in the role of the embittered ex-soldier, unsure of his qualifications as a schoolmaster but absolutely convinced of his ability to teach.

Frank Middlemass is perfect as the headmaster, Algy Herries, and Alan MacNaughton as Howarth, Neil Stacy as Carter and John Welsh as Cordwainer are excellent examples of the near-flawless casting of secondary roles.

Miss Lang was recommended for her part by a BBC talent scout and, the actress says, "I didn't know whether I was right for it, actually. I thought maybe it was a bit unsophisticated for the kind of things I had been doing."

Wilson thought otherwise, Miss Lang remembers, and soon she found herself in the company of some very prominent British actors. "I was the only one in the cast I'd never heard of," she says.

She says she also found Beth more appealing as her work progressed.

"I thought at first she was a goody two-shoes, and she made me sick. But when you start playing someone, often you begin to emphathize with the character. Still," the actress says, "she's a foil for David, and she never really develops beyond her relationship with him."

Miss Lang, who studied at the Central School of Speech and Drama, has spent almost all of her career on the theater stage, beginning in the mid-1970s at the Manchester Library Theater — as Sandra in "Straight Up," Dorreen in "Live Like Pigs" and Marion in "There's a Girl in My Soup."

Her credits since then include parts in repertory theater productions like "The Merchant of Venice," "Threepenny Opera," "Carbaret" and, in 1981, "Present Laughter" at the Vaudeville Theater in London.

"I have been on a kind of treadmill," she says of her acting career, "for five years, going from one thing to another, working in all these places I had heard about, and wanted to work at."

'One Shoe Makes Murder' livens up Saturday night

By FRED ROTHENBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — Saturday night came too fast. I had nowhere to go, nothing to do and nobody to do nothing with.

It had been like this as long as I cared to remember. So I decided to take a chance. Why not? Life's too short for a reason.

I poured some slow scotch and juiced up the TV. It'd been a long time since this thing was making music on a Saturday night.

I turned on "One Shoe Makes Murder." There must have been something about the movie that spoke to me.

I didn't just stumble onto CBS that night. I knew the score. That black kid, Arnold, was on one channel. That midget and his boss were on another. PBS had the guys in leotards.

ENTERTAINMENT

"One Shoe" was my kind of company. I knew it right away. With Robert Mitchum, old stoneface, it had to be right. He'd never been in a TV movie before. He was too good for that trash.

It seemed as if I'd known his character all my life. He'd been my companion with every glass I'd emptied.

His name was Schill, a good cop gone bad by booze and a wife who dropped him for some garbage.

He walked in on them. The next thing he knew, his gun was staring them down. He couldn't decide which one was worth the bullet, so he turned the barrel around. "I tried to kill myself, but I missed" was the way he put it.

Poor Schill. Hard luck. Harder drinks. Hardest on himself. "Failed cop, failed suicide, failed drunk," he said.

Some chain-spangled mobster named Carl pitied Schill. Mel Ferrer played the casino owner. Ferrer also produced the movie. The owner hired Schill to find his wife. She was missing along with some casino cash.

A real cop would have to follow leads everywhere. An ex-cop could be paid to stop sniffing when the job's done.

Schill agreed. Who'd pass up easy money?

And who'd pass up a night with a doll like Angie Dickinson? Schill did. Sort of. He said things didn't stir for him anymore.

Angie played the golden floozy named Fay. Good local talent, she came with the bar. Life hadn't tossed her any aces either. She didn't like being a solo act, so they shared his sheets anyway. She wore her emotions on her sleeveless nightgown. His emotions were in storage. You just knew they'd be magic together.

Queries about Andrew's exploits: Bad taste or good journalism?

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK — Is it bad taste or good journalism to ask Prince Charles about the amorous adventures of his brother, Prince Andrew?

Last week, Diane Sawyer of the "CBS Morning News," Jane Pauley of NBC's "Today" and Joan Lunden of ABC's "Good Morning America" interviewed Charles, who was in the United States for the dedication of the United World College of the American West, one of his favorite causes.

During their separate 10-minute interviews, only Miss Sawyer broached the subject of Andrew, who has been involved in much-publicized trysts with American actress-soft-porn star Koo Stark.

Within the boundaries of good taste, were questions probing his reactions appropriate?

There are newspaper editors who would go crazy if their reporters didn't ask Charles questions that many Americans wanted to know about.

And you just know that ABC's Barbara Walters or CBS' Mike Wallace would have found ways to turn the discussion toward Andrew and the reports that Charles' wife, Diana, is buying gowns galore, and their marriage is undergoing the inevitable stress any marriage goes through.

Miss Pauley made a "conscious decision" not to risk turning the prince off. Miss Lunden felt it wasn't her place to ask.

Miss Sawyer asked. Very delicately. After Charles commented on Andrew's character test during the Falklands war, she asked: "Would you think me altogether unredeemable if I asked you if there's anything else you'd like to say about your brother?"

"No, I mean, what else can I say, except that he's a jolly good chap."

It was a gentle foray, not at all scandalous, into the realm of princely behavior. Andrew's activities had been widely reported here, and Miss Sawyer did not bluntly request gossip. She sought a brotherly reaction about the behavior of a member of the royal family.

The question also was framed so Charles could run as far as he wanted with it. He chose not to run.

It also enabled Miss Sawyer to follow with a question about who's to blame for media attention on Andrew and reports of "a conflict in your marriage."

SAID CHARLES: "You blame the readers who buy the newspapers or watch the programs."

Should Miss Lunden and Miss Pauley also have raised a subject that many Americans clearly wanted to know about?

Miss Lunden said she wasn't tempted to ask about Andrew, but said her interpretation of the interview ground rules restricted it anyway. And she was influenced by what she saw as Charles' irritated reaction during the interview with Miss Sawyer.

As the guard changed from CBS to ABC, Miss Lunden was ushered into the interview by Charles' press secretary, Vic Chapman. "He said that Diane's question wasn't proper. He told me: 'Whatever you do, stick to the school questions.'

"I felt it incumbent upon me to win this guy over," Miss Lunden added. "I wasn't interested in Randy Andy and Koo Stark, anyway. I didn't think it was in good taste. That's not what I pick up the papers to read."

It was clear that Charles was making himself available to American TV to talk about the school. In these situations, the journalistic practice is to honor that subject, then go on to other areas.

THE THREE WOMEN MET separately with Charles' press secretary the night before the interview. They were given similar initial instructions, but CBS later apparently pushed harder for a clarification that enabled Miss Sawyer to feel she had a free hand with Charles.

Miss Sawyer would not comment on those discussions. CBS' news standards prohibit restricting the specific subject matter in a given interview.

Miss Lunden said her understanding was that "anything political or personal was a no-no." "GMA" is not a news program. The most successful morning program, "GMA" is part of ABC's entertainment division.

"Today" is a news program with more entertainment features than the "CBS Morning News." Miss Pauley said NBC News does not accept preconditions on its interviews.

"An interview with Charles is relatively rare, and I took the high road, rather than go down a dead end,"

COMMENTING ON HER interpretation of the preinterview instructions, Miss Pauley said: "It was a strange situation. There were no hard-and-fast rules. Vic Chapman said we could ask: 'How's the wife and child?'"

So Miss Pauley asked some sharper questions about the school than the other two. Through her research, she knew that an Israeli student had been rebuffed by two Jordanians, and that two Argentine students had pulled out of the school.

Husband, wife risk much to make miniseries

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Producers Wilton Schiller and Patricia Payne went out on a $6 million limb to produce a miniseries without an American broadcast commitment.

Backed by financing from Australia, the American husband-and-wife team wrote and produced a 6½-hour version of the Australian novel "For the Term of His Natural Life."

They filmed it in Australia with a largely Australian cast, although such well-known performers as Anthony Perkins, Patrick Macnee, Samantha Eggar and Diane Cilento have major roles. Australian actor Colin Friels plays the central character, Rufus Dawes.

The film was adapted from the 19th-Century novel by Marcus Clarke, which tells the saga of a young Englishman wrongfully sentenced to be transported to the penal colony in Australia. It spans the years of his toil in the prison camps, his escape, his re-capture, another escape, and his ultimate vindication.

It's a rousing cliff-hanger adventure and romance, and it's beautifully photographed and acted. It will be broadcast in Australia, but as yet there is no American buyer, an essential in recovering the cost of production.

"Are we taking a chance?" asks Miss Payne, a native of Australia. "The answer is, 'Yes and no.'"

Says Schiller, "First, you have to have a little faith. You might worry if you feel you're going to do it badly. Most people would do it this way if they had the money. We were one of the few production companies 100 percent financed.

"If you go to a network," he says, "they figure they have to pay you two years in advance. With interest at 22 percent you don't get as much as you need. And, of course, they'll worry that you may not do it right."

Miss Payne adds, "We obviously had to have faith. We pulled ourselves off the market for several years to write this on spec. We made a great investment in this."

The potential markets for which the producers are negotiating include the three American commercial networks, the Operation Prime Time ad-hoc network, the cable and pay television networks, and syndication. They say they felt the presence of names familiar to American viewers would help its sale.

The venture was made possible under new taxation legislation in Australia. "The investors get a 150 percent writeoff and no taxes on the first 50 percent return," Schiller says. "We had 147 investors put together by Filmco Ltd."

Miss Payne says she had studied the book, which is now in public domain, while in school in Australia. "I've wanted to do something with it since I was 14," she recalls. "The characters are very colorful."

Fakers may get nervous

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — "Get Nervous" is the name of Pat Benatar's new album, but it's also what the folks at her record company hope will happen to would-be counterfeiters of the album and cassette.

The reason is a new anti-counterfeiting system being inaugurated for recordings by Chrysalis Records on Miss Benatar's release. The Light Signatures system, already in use with Levi jeans, uses computers and high-intensity light to make a record of the unique fiber configuration on an extended cardboard label on every cassette and a postcard inside every album.

Ninety-seventh Congress to be long on words, short on action

By WALTER R. MEARS

Actually, there will be a lot of words, and virtually no action, before it expires and the 98th begins at noon on Jan. 3. The House and Senate reconvene in post-election session on Nov. 29, supposedly to do what they didn't get done before the campaign.

That session will have an ample cast of lame ducks. Twenty-four Republican House members and three Democrats were defeated in Tuesday's elections. Two other Republican incumbents trailed in races so close that it will take the official vote canvass to certify the outcome. Two senators were defeated and another three are retiring.

There are another 50 congressmen who won't be around next year, 10 due to primary election defeats, 40 retiring.

Lame-duck sessions of Congress are notorious for what they don't do. This one doesn't look like an exception. There's a built-in incentive for the party that gained strength in the elections to stall on anything significant. All the winners have to do is wait a few weeks and the measures involved will come up again, in a new Congress, when they have more votes.

It worked that way two years ago, when Republicans came out of the election in command of the Senate and with 33 added seats in the House. The lame-duck session that followed produced just about nothing, and adjourned on Dec. 16 after approving stopgap measures to keep the government from running out of money.

The then-Democratic Senate did approve severance pay for the aides who were losing their jobs because 18 members were leaving office and Republicans were about to take over.

The 1982 shift is not so dramatic. Party lines held in the Senate, 54 Republicans, 46 Democrats. The new House will be two dozen seats more Democratic than the current one.

But that's enough to make it worthwhile for the Democrats to wait until next year on anything big. President Reagan won his major economic victories on the strength of a coalition of House Republicans and conservative Democrats. That coalition is going to be far more difficult to assemble in the new Congress. Reagan's men say they can do it, but they, and the president, say it will take compromise.

Reagan set an ambitious agenda for the lame-duck session in his nationally televised economic address three weeks before the election. He said he wanted Congress back at work "as quickly as possible to continue the work of recovery," on a five-part list of "must" measures.

He said he wants action on a dozen appropriations bills, which were supposed to have been passed before Oct. 1, then threatened to veto them if they exceed his budget.

There may be action on defense appropriations, but not without a fight. Democratic leaders, and some Republicans, want increases in defense spending held below the levels the administration seeks.

But the rest of the appropriations are likely to be shelved until next year, with the government financed by resolution. That's usually the outcome. It, too, could produce a partisan fight, unless spending levels are held well within budget boundaries. It was just such a resolution Reagan vetoed to send the government into a brief, make-believe shutdown about a year ago.

Reagan also said the lame-duck session should reconsider a constitutional amendment seeking balanced budgets later in the decade. The amendment cleared the Senate but failed in the House earlier this year. Democrats are not about to call it up again.

The president asked for action, too, on regulatory reform, a Republican plan for "enterprise zone" incentives to promote economic development, and passage of an overhauled air pollution control act.

CBS launches its own 'Star Wars'

By FRED ROTHENBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — It was like watching "Star Wars."

CBS' new graphics, unveiled during Tuesday night's election coverage, were straight out of a science fiction movie, but they were real. In fact, so real, they almost looked alive.

Computers talked to computers, and the result was a map of the United States, which then turned three-dimensional, added different colors to Democratic and Republican states, twirled and became horizontal bar charts showing data for the individual races and overall election breakdowns.

Art Bloom, director of CBS' coverage, had promised that CBS was going to "enter the computer graphics era in a big way." He was right.

Van Gordon Sauter, president of CBS News, said the graphics advanced the art that came out of the network's National Football League coverage.

"We're doing more innovative graphics," said Sauter. "They're colorful, clear and they move. The information also comes up very quickly."

Despite the financial problems at CBS News, there evidently was no scrimping election night. Ed Joyce, executive vice president of CBS News, said there were no cutbacks for the effort. "Election night is the most important statement that a news organization makes," he said.

It also leaves a major impression with viewers, and the CBS graphics were one of the memorable aspects of TV's vote-count coverage.

NBC had a huge computer-generated scoreboard behind co-anchors Roger Mudd and Tom Brokaw. ABC, which brought news into the world of arcade-like graphics under news president Roone Arledge, was less glitzy than CBS, offering a large cast, including co-anchors Frank Reynolds, David Brinkley and Ted Koppel.

"The best video is the sight of three fine minds at work," Robert Siegenthaler, ABC News' vice president for production, said before the telecast. "Graphics should not be wagging the reporting."

Cocaine may be pain-killer

Dear Dr. Solomon: I don't believe in using any drugs except those prescribed by a doctor. But marijuana has been found to have some use in medicine, and I'd like to know if this is true of cocaine as well. Is anyone studying the use of cocaine as a medicine? — Roy, Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Roy: An experimental study suggests that cocaine may be useful as a pain-killer. Researchers at the Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons report that cocaine was more effective than a placebo in the treatment of chronic pain in 16 male volunteers. But there are many medicines better than cocaine to use as pain relievers.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My son was born with a heart problem. He is now eight years old and my pediatrician says he can do pretty much what he wants. Wouldn't it be dangerous to let a boy who had a heart condition play ball and run around as much as he wants? — Mrs. V.L., Richmond, Va.

Dear Mrs. L.: There is heart disease and there is heart disease; some conditions may require rigid restriction of a child's activities, while other conditions give no cause for concern. What is important is that the child's activities should not be restricted unnecessarily. There's nothing to be gained in making an invalid of a child for no reason.

Whether or not a child should be limited depends on the diagnosis. Dr. Kenneth G. Zahka, of the Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore, notes that children with congenital heart disease, for example, are not all the same. Some are perfectly healthy, while others are only moderately affected.

I assume that your pediatrician's recommendation is based upon a complete physical examination and other appropriate tests. The suggestion that your son's physical activities not be restricted is not unusual.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I heard you on the radio give eight tips on how to prevent foot and ankle injuries. I would like to pass these on to my children. Could you please list them in your column? — Mrs. D.W., Lansing, Mich.

Dear Mrs. D.W.: Here are the eight tips on how to prevent foot and ankle injuries. This information was obtained from the American Podiatry Association:

1. Wear the correct shoes for the event. Good walking shoes provide more comfort and better balance.
2. Wear hiking shoes or boots in rough terrain.
3. Different sports activities call for specific footwear to protect feet and ankles. Use the correct shoe for each sport. Don't wear any sports shoe beyond its useful life.
4. Use steel toe-cap shoes for occupations which threaten foot safety. Be certain they are fitted properly.
5. Always wear hard-top shoes when operating a lawn mower or other grass-cutting equipment.
6. Don't walk barefoot on paved streets or sidewalks.
7. Watch out for slippery floors at home and at work. Clean up obviously dangerous spills immediately.
8. If you get up during the night, turn on a light. Many fractured toes and other foot injuries occur while attempting to find your way in the dark.

Awards will be given to museums for exhibits

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — New honorary awards will be given next year to museums across the state which interpret history through special exhibits or educational programs, says a spokeswoman for The Museum and Field Services Committee and Awards Committee of the Texas Historical Commission.

Though nothing definite has been established yet for the awards, Glenda Morgan, an administrative assistant to the committee, says the Texas Historical Commission feels special recognition should be given to museums providing some historical emphasis.

The development of rules and regulations for presentation of the awards is being worked on by committe members, who hope to have them established sometime in January, Morgan says.

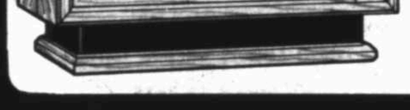

No award honoring Texas museums for historical work has been established before, she adds.

Program stimulates 'delayed,' 'high-risk' children

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Each child develops at his own pace, but if he is "delayed," parents may want to consider visiting a physician or enrolling the child in Midland's infant stimulation program.

The free program has been in existence at the Permian Basin Community Centers for Mental Health-Mental and Retardation since 1979, but Melba Seth, the program coordinator, said some physicians and the public do not know about the service.

Ms. Seth explained "delayed" children, or high-risk children, as those who may be speech- or hearing-impaired, emotionally disturbed or mentally retarded. It also includes children who have been verbally or physically abused and battered children.

"We hope that either the parents or the doctor will see that there is a problem with the child," Ms. Seth said, adding that the parents can call MHMR or have their doctor refer them to the program.

"Through a team consisting of the program coordinator, a psychologist, a speech pathologist and an occupational therapist, we can do a developmental screening to pinpoint the child's delay," she said.

The Denver developmental screen test, which provides a scale to determine the child's development, includes monitoring the child's personal and social developments, motor skills and language skills.

"A child should attempt to sit up by the fifth month, according to the Denver test," Ms. Seth said. "If the child is not attempting to sit by the ninth, tenth — and certainly by the eleventh — month, I'd wonder if the child is delayed."

"Through a team consisting of the program coordinator, a psychologist, a speech pathologist and an occupational therapist, we can do a developmental screening to pinpoint the child's delay."

After the child is screened, a team member will make weekly home visits. During the first visit a 90-day goal will be established for the child.

"If the child is mentally retarded, and can't hold a cup, we'll help him hold the cup and by 90 days the child should hold it himself," Ms. Seth said.

"We like to start with this type of child from birth," she said, adding that children from birth to 3 years old are eligible for the program.

"If we can get early identification and intervention of the exceptional children, this can influence and determine their lives as citizens," Ms. Seth said.

A Midland pediatrician, commenting on the infant stimulation program for the retarded child, said, "The more you stimulate the kid, the better he'll be in the long run — he's going to have a better chance. But where the program will really work is for the child who is developmentally delayed because of deprivation in the household and environment."

Ms. Seth said some young mothers — in their teens — may not have wanted a child, or have no idea how to play with the infant. This lack of stimulation can cause a developmental delay in the child, she said.

"Some young mothers tend to leave their babies in the crib, resulting in lack of motor and social skills which delays the child's development," Ms. Seth said. "We like to teach them (parents) playing skills. The important thing is to play with the child and talk to the child."

And because parents are the most effective teachers and the child is more cooperative in the home, the program is designed to teach the parents how to stimulate the child in the home environment.

Parents concerned over cluster system

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Only three of the seven board members of the Midland Independent School District were present to hear public concerns pertaining to changes in the cluster system, elementary school boundaries and bus routes during a two-hour meeting at Houston Elementary School Thursday night.

The public hearing was held to share information with concerned parents and citizens about the recommendations being made to the school board, answer questions and receive input from the public, according to superintendent Dr. Joseph P. Baressi.

Dr. James H. Mailey, MISD consultant for school planning and construction, explained the basic concept of the cluster system, a desegregation plan established in 1976 which groups Midland's 19 elementary schools into six groups of three schools. Travis Elementary, deemed "naturally integrated," stands alone, although sixth graders from the school attend Washington Elementary in order to meet other students with whom they will attend junior high school, Mailey said.

The recommended changes in the system, suggested in order to open two new elementary schools next fall, rearranges the present Cluster 5 of Long, Houston and De Zavala to include the new Quanah Parker school, Houston and De Zavala. A new seventh cluster would be added to the district to include Long, the new "Bluebird" school and Travis.

Most of the concerns on the revised cluster system voiced by the 40 citizens attending the meeting pertained to the grouping of "Bluebird," the most northern school, with Travis, located in far south Midland. About a 13-mile bus route separates the two schools.

Administrators explained that the schools were grouped in order to achieve racial balance and that the sizes of three schools in each particular cluster should be comparable.

Bus time between the two schools via Loop 250 is similar (about 28 minutes) to that of through-city routes between other schools, administrators said, although several persons pointed out that with increasing traffic as the Loop opens up, the length of time students spend on buses will increase.

Another point of objection voiced was using north-east Loop 250 as a boundary between "Bluebird" and Parker. Persons in the Northgate addition are closer to Parker, although if the recommendations are approved, their children will have to attend "Bluebird."

Mailey explained that with the increase in traffic on Loop 250, the thoroughfare would be difficult and dangerous to cross; therefore, the Loop was being recommended as a boundary.

"The danger of the Loop doesn't seem that great since you're going to be busing our kids on it all that way to Travis," a Northgate woman complained.

Several Crestgate residents, whose children will attend "Bluebird," objected to not having bus services due to the fact that Crestgate is just barely under the two-mile guideline. According to Mailey, the Texas Education Agency reimburses districts for busing to schools two miles from the resident unless there is a hazardous situation. While Crestgate is located some 1.9 miles from the new school, parents were concerned about students having to walk through fields and along busy streets without sidewalks. Mailey assured them that the matter would be taken into consideration.

Other objections included reports of irresponsible bus drivers. According to some residents, one bus driver allegedly stopped at a convenience store during his route to pick up matches, another to pick up a six-pack of beer. Assistant superintendent of administration Garland Chapman was immediately on his feet demanding bus numbers.

"Those can be chased down," Chapman promised, adding that all complaints on drivers are added to the driver's records and that "we have been known to let a few off."

"We want to furnish transportation the best we can," Chapman said. "We want it to be safe and we want the best drivers. Here again, those drivers are human beings and they're subject to mistakes. But every complaint we get on a driver is recorded."

Other ideas offered by the public included the following:

—Clustering elementary schools that are located closer together.

—Looking into the broad range of future boundary changes, due to another

Businesses consumers too, according to state law

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

ODESSA — About 20 business people learned during an educational seminar at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin Thursday that when it comes to the Texas Consumer Protection Act, businesses are consumers too.

The seminar, sponsored by the Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin and provided for the education of BBB members, was keynoted by Zoleta Courtney, assistant attorney general in the attorney general's office consumer protection division.

Ms. Courtney explained that the act, also known as the Deceptive Trade Practices Act, has been in effect since 1973. Since then, she said, many business persons have misconstrued the consumer protection division's role, picturing it as a group of wild-eyed liberals "trying to put free enterprise out of business.

"You probably will be surprised to find out that you are a consumer too, your business," she told the group, explaining that under the act a consumer is anyone who buys or leases a product or a service for use.

She said sec. 17.46 of the act contains a "laundry list" of 23 broadly defined provisions, the violation of which constitutes a deceptive trade practice.

In general terms, the act prohibits misrepresentation of a product or service in regard to quality, source, price, advertisement, guarantee and approval by an outside agency.

For example, a merchant or individual cannot misrepresent a product as new if it is used. A merchant cannot advertise a "distress" sale — a going-out-of-business sale for instance — without actually intending to liquidate the business.

Zoleta Courtney

In many of the 23 provisions, the Legislature sided with the consumer and eliminated a requirement that the consumer prove the misrepresentation was intentional, she said.

"Intent, except in very few instances, has nothing to do with whether there will be a judgement against you," she said. "The burden of proof when you have intent is much greater. That's why the legislature took the requirement of intent out of most of these provisions."

She said the consumer protection division is empowered to sue violators of the act provided it can prove the violation occurred and if a large number of people are subject to the illegal act and legal action would be "in the public interest."

The attorney general's office, after filing suit, can either seek to recover damages from the defendant or stop the illegal activity with an injunction, she said.

Ms. Courtney said the consumer protection division receives about 10,000-11,000 complaints annually concerning alleged violations of the act. She said misrepresentation occurs quite often, many times inadvertently.

"Everything you say may come back to haunt you, so be careful," she said. "Let's not wait till they happen; let's use some preventative measures so they don't happen."

Ms. Courtney urged those in attendance to familiarize themselves with the act, and other pieces of consumer-oriented legislation.

Finally, she said the election of Jim Mattox as attorney general may be good news for the consumer protection division, since he campaigned on "a consumer-oriented platform."

She said Mattox has pledged to boost salaries and staff in the consumer division, one of 16 divisions within the attorney general's office. The attorney general maintains five regional offices around the state and employs about 20 lawyers in the consumer division and about 200 attorneys in all.

Jerry Lopez, an attorney with West Texas Legal Services, also reminded the group that businesses are consumers. But he warned them that his wardrobe contains several $500-$600 suits courtesy of businesses that violated the consumer protection act.

Jerry Lopez

Lopez explained that "disclosure" in business agreements can be crucial when attempting to stay within the act's boundaries.

In contracts and agreements with consumers, Lopez said businesses should take pains to disclose all terms, including interest charges, security interests, and the right to repossess.

Christmas trees may be cut down in New Mexico forest

Tired of a technological Christmas in which tinsel has replaced snow flakes and metallic limbs the branches of the traditional tree?

If so, then consider what Lincoln National Forest is offering: an opportunity to cut — or dig up — your own living Christmas tree.

Application forms for permits are now available at the Midland Chamber of Commerce. Processing of applications will begin Monday at Lincoln National Forest headquarters in Alamogordo, N.M., and trees may be cut any time between Nov. 20 and Dec. 20.

Issued strictly on a first-come, first-serve basis, the permits at $5 apiece are limited to one per household. Some 5,150 trees have been pegged for personal Christmas tree use in the New Mexico forest's four ranger districts — 1,500 in Guadalupe District near Carlsbad, 1,200 in Smokey Bear District at Ruidoso, 1,800 in Cloudcroft District and 650 in Mayhill District.

In previous years, tree cutters have inflicted damage to the forest — cutting or topping large trees, abandoning felled trees, indiscriminate and careless off-road vehicle use, littering. "Those individuals who ignore the few simple rules of our Christmas tree program are jeopardizing the future of the program for everyone," said James Abbott, Lincoln National Forest supervisor. "If the Christmas tree program is to continue, it will be because the participants care enough to make the program an asset rather than a liability."

Specific rules governing the cutting or digging up of trees are printed on the applications, which also are available from Lincoln National Forest Supervisor's Office, Federal Building, 11th and New York, Alamogordo, N.M. 88310.

Persons trekking to the New Mexico forest in search of Christmas trees may wish to take advantage of fall recreation spots in the area, including Lower Sleepy Grass Campground near Cloudcroft, the recently-stocked Bonito Lake north of Ruidoso, or Sitting Bull Waterfall west of Carlsbad.

Fishermen should take note that good fishing is reported on the Penasco River on the Mayhill District, in which James Canyon Campground is open for overnight stays. Those more inclined toward the brutality of wilderness adventure, meanwhile, may check out Dog Canyon Trail east of Alamogordo. A volunteer group will be doing trail maintenance in the historic canyon on Sunday.

Wood assassination plot allegedly hatched in Midland

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Jamiel "Jimmy" Chagra's alleged plot to assassinate Federal Judge John H. Wood Jr. supposedly was conceived in Midland on April 2, 1979, when Wood, known among lawyers and in the underworld as "Maximum John" due to the severe sentences he meted out to convicted drug traffickers, refused to disqualify himself as the presiding judge in Chagra's drug-smuggling case.

Chagra, 39, purportedly hired a hitman to kill Wood, since he felt he could not get a fair trial under the judge, Chagra's younger brother, Joseph, testified in San Antonio this week.

The drug case was subsequently moved to Austin, where Chagra was convicted for criminal enterprise and sentenced to 30 years in prison.

In the meantime, Wood was shot to death outside his San Antonio home on May 29, 1979.

And in the San Antonio trial, convicted hitman Charles V. Harrelson bragged about shooting Wood in the back with "a clean shot" from a high-powered rifle.

Joseph Chagra, an El Paso lawyer who has pleaded guilty to murder conspiracy, said his older brother admitted hiring the hitman to assassinate Wood. Harrelson allegedly was paid $250,000 to kill the judge.

In a pre-trial hearing in Midland 3½ years ago, Jimmy Chagra allegedly told his brother he "was never going to get a fair trial" under Wood and asked him if he should try to get the judge killed.

"I told him he should," the brother testified.

Jimmy Chagra

Court records in federal court in Midland indicate that Wood granted — sometimes conditionally — about a dozen of Charga's 30 motion's but denied most.

Among motions denied were:

—That Judge Wood disqualify himself from trying Chagra and step aside.

—That the court suppress oral or wire communications. Government said it had none.

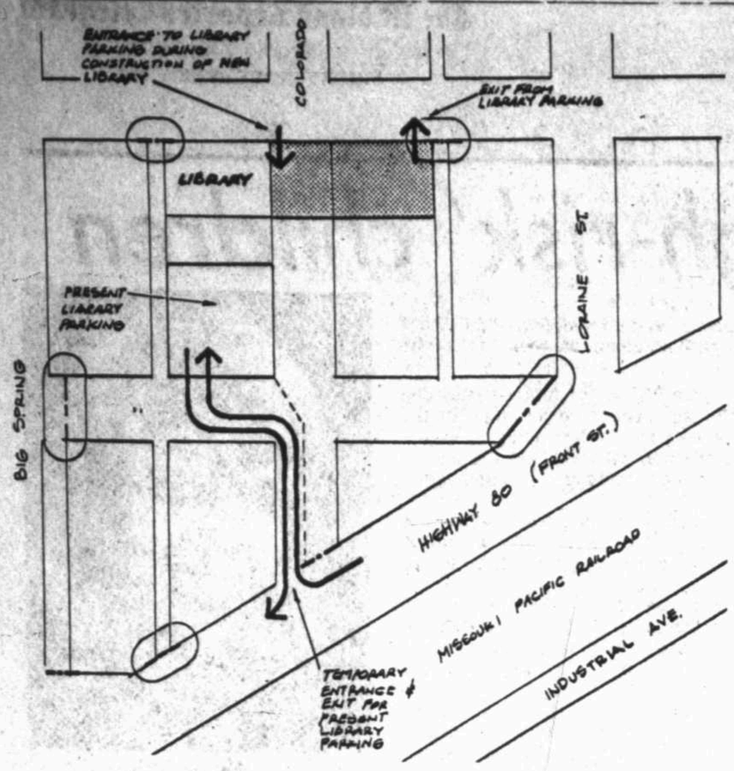

—That court compel the government to reveal procedures in testings.

—That the defense be given a list of property seized. Government said it had none.

—That statement of co-conspirators be excluded.

—That defense counsel be present at any future identification procedure.

Getting to library parkinglot a pain

And the rubble is growing.

The debris about the downtown library is in preparation for construction of a new library and for The First National Bank's envisioned skyscraper in its Eagle Plaza Super Block North.

While debris about the library is in a mess, noted Deats, trying to find and to get to the library parking area can be a pain. For now, library parking, as in the past, is just south of the library in the 300 block of West Missouri Avenue. But getting there can be a chore, since the regular routes to there are closed. About the only way to get to the now-temporary parking lot is to drive on Front Avenue, watch out for the detours, debris and dusty roads, and drive onto Colorado Street to the parking site.

Later in November, a 45-car library parking lot will be built at Missouri and Colorado and immediately east of the library, Deats said.

"It's kind of a mess, but we think we can live with it," he said.

Convenience store robbed

ODESSA — A man wearing a white stocking mask and wielding an automatic shotgun robbed the Merit Gas Station-Convenience Store at 721 W. County Road of an undetermined amount of money late Thursday.

The store's clerk, Eldon Dean Reed of Midland, told police he was in the process of closing the store and was counting the money in the cash register about 10:35 p.m. Thursday when the robber came in and demanded money.

Reed said he complied with the robber's request and the robber left the store on foot, heading in a westerly direction.

Reed described the robber as a white male in his middle 20s, 5 feet, 6 inches to 5 feet, 8 inches tall and weighing 150 to 160 pounds. He wore denim jeans, a denim jacket and a brown plaid shirt. The man had medium length, dark hair, Reed told police.

Theft of silver, credit cards investigated

Midland police this morning were investigating a burglary report detailing a mid-October burglary in the Tall City that resulted in the loss of more than $10,000 worth of personal items.

Stayner A. Dugan of 1900 Sparks told police the burglary occurred at that address between Oct. 15 and Oct. 17. Taken was $530 in currency, an assortment of silver that had been in Dugan's family for many years and that he valued at $10,000, a number of credit cards and checks.

Police reports indicated there was no sign of forced entry into the Dugan residence. The investigation is continuing.

Jurors in Brown trial hear contradictions

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — Jurors in the trial of an inmate accused of killing two prison officials have heard two contradictory accounts of the slayings from the prosecution's sole eyewitness.

The panel heard recordings Thursday that were made in two interviews with former inmate Levi Duson.

Eroy Brown, 31, of Waco, is being retried in the April 4, 1981, drowning of Wallace M. Pack, warden to the Texas Department of Correction's Ellis Unit. He also is charged in the shooting death of prison farm manager Billy Max Moore, but he has yet to be tried.

Brown contends he killed the two men in self defense.

His first trial ended in a mistrial in March when the jury deadlocked 10-2 for acquittal.

Duson admitted under cross-examination Wednesday that there were several conflicts between his earlier statements and his testimony during the current trial.

Fit, color mark Blass fashions

By NINA HYDE
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — "We've had too many seasons of floppy clothes and dour colors. The eye gets tired of seeing the same thing, for God's sake," said designer Bill Blass in his sleek, gray showroom as he prepared for his showing of spring ready-to-wear.

Racks of clothes included bright red plaids, suits in Lifesaver colors, silk print gowns and an entire group in pink with brown. Hats came with huge, cartwheel brims; pumps, often in two colors.

Fit, for Blass, means clothes that show off the waist, clothes that are slim but not tight. "Nothing is uglier than a skirt that cups the rear. I never like that," said Blass, as a model turned to show off a straight skirt eased with low pleats.

The new, narrow clothes, according to Blass, have revived the slim reefer coat (Nancy Reagan already has bought a version for winter) and have brought new attention to lapels that sometimes appear to be a (one lapel can be higher than the other), often in a color that contrasts with the coat or suit. Narrow clothes also have brought back military details, right down to brass buttons and bullion embroidery on sleeves and contour belts. "When things are precisely tailored, military details seem natural," said Blass.

Blass is still the master of evening clothes; he has chosen extraordinary prints from Abraham in Switzerland and Gandini in Italy. For Blass customers, the exit will be as significant as the entrance with as much going on in the back of the dress — marvelous ruffles, cutouts, pleats, poufs — as in the front. One slim dress bisected in black and white has a huge pouf to one side that one sees only as the model leaves.

Blass wanted all the models in his show to have short hair but relented on Jerry Hall, Mick Jagger's girlfriend, whose trademark is long hair. But he wouldn't agree to the demands of another model, Isabella Rosselini, Ingrid Bergman's daughter, whose fee would have been $5,000 to model in Blass' shows this week (Rosselini wasn't in the show).

The cost of the clothes, because of boosts in labor and fabrics costs, also concerns Blass. "There is a point where it is almost excessive," he says, but won't be specific about just where that point is. "But that's when I absorb some of the costs myself."

Researcher urges new look at career options

By CAROL DEEGAN

NEW YORK (AP) — As the American society and economy changes, and a large part of the population grows older, the need for career planning becomes increasingly important, says career researcher Anita Gates.

Government statistics indicate that 64 million infants were born between 1946 and 1961. These "baby-boomers," now between the ages of 20 and 35, make up nearly one-third of the U.S. population today.

Ms. Gates notes these "baby-boomers" will affect almost every segment of American society, increasing the need for new products and services — and also increasing the competition for jobs.

"You can't even glance at the 1980s job market without seeing the influence of the 'baby-boom' generation," she said. "Already, many of the fastest-growing fields are those that supply products and services to older, more mature customers: insurance companies, real estate agents and banking.

"The health care field, destined to be the decade's No. 1 growth industry, is expanding to take care of a lengthening list of complaints and to supply the solutions — from eyeglasses to heart tests."

Ms. Gates says employers can literally pick and choose their employees today. That's one reason, she adds, why it's important to know where the jobs will be in future years, and to have the right education and training for these jobs.

"Most of us could be choosing our careers more intelligently, based not only on our talents, preferences and education, but on a realistic view of the job market and the way it's expected to change," she said.

For example, Ms. Gates points out that economic recession creates jobs for accountants and bill collectors. A rising crime rate increases the need for security officers. And, she says, there is less of a need today for products; American society is becoming more technological and more service-oriented.

Ms. Gates has written a book, "90 Most Promising Careers for the 80s," based on information and research by the Bureau of Labor Statistics and on interviews with various employment experts.

"A career that is promising is a career that is likely to have a greater percentage of new jobs in the 1980s as compared to the others," she said. "It's a career that you can count on not to die on you during your work life, as much as you can count on any career, because this is statistical fortune-telling and it's educated fortune-telling."

She cited, as an example, the field of broadcasting. Although it is a growth industry, because of the development of cable television, it is not a promising career "because the competition is tremendous.

Ms. Gates said there are many career "myths" that may cloud a job-seeker's view of promising career opportunities.

"People said computers are the hot careers for the '80s, and they are. But the competition is already growing so much, and there are so many people out there saying computers are the great careers for the '80s, that I'm afraid people who rely just on computer knowledge may end up a little bit like teachers did 10 years ago, because everybody who wants to change careers is going into computer programming and systems analysis," she said.

Ms. Gates has done career research work as a consultant to the Business and Professional Women's Foundation in Washington, D.C., and is currently a free-lance writer and consultant in New York City.

At New York showing, Lauren discards Americana; Herrera is elegant as ever

By ILONA ROSS
AP Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Remember those sleeveless shifts from the 1960s, narrow but not skin-tight, showing lots of arm and shoulder, and whose charm lay in their clean lines and lack of froufrou?

Almost everything shown at Lauren's spring collection Thursday came in solid black and white linen, emphasizing the clothes' spareness. But by no means were they boring.

Sharp V and square necks and even some halter tops draw the eye to their boldness, offsetting the simplicity of the straight-cut, knee-length lines. When the neck is rounded, the sleeves are in a wide kimono style that seems to be shaping up as next spring's look, when a sleeve is used at all.

He showed plenty of clean, classic suits, with hip-length single-button blazers over straight skirts or wide pants cut off at the ankle. The suits, often worn with no blouse underneath, came in pale blue, lavender and pink, and, of course, black and white.

Apart from the suits, the only color in the show was a handful of wide pants and blouses in small pastel florals like those on antique wallpaper prints.

Also for those who prefer a softer look, Lauren offered some pretty, hip-length schoolgirl smocks in black or white linen to be worn over trousers and caught at the neck with a big bow, preferably in red satin ribbon.

Only one fashion group appeared impractical for regular use — a collection of white linens so sheer they can't be worn during the day, yet too casually-shaped to be worn for evening. They were loose shifts, devoid of decoration except for touches of white embroidery, and belted at the hip with white rope. They left one with the impression that had they been in brown, they would have made it as a Franciscan monk's summer uniform.

Elsewhere, Lauren printed a small pastel bouquet in the front center of a few blouses, a carryover from his fall sweater collection. The other update was his tailored, double-breasted coat-dress, which he designed in wool for winter and now does in black and white linen for spring.

Although the hems were unpressed and a safety pin caught the light here and there, it was clear that when the clothes are ready for purchase they are the quintessence of elegance for the mature woman.

Herrera has always avoided unnecessary frills, relying instead on square cuts for day dresses and suits and sensuous draping often caught at the shoulder or derriere for evening.

'Philosopher at Large' into television

Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — C'mon, admit it. Anyone who has the chutzpah to write books entitled "How to Read a Book," "How to Think About War and Peace" or "How to Think About God," well, you have to love him.

For nearly 80 years, Mortimer J. Adler has relished his self-appointed role as "Philosopher at Large" — which happens to be another of his book titles — and a scrappy, controversial life that has earned him the sobriquets, depending upon who is conferring the labels, of intellectual gadfly, goad, elitist, bully, yenta, stimulus, thug, inspiration and pain in the Sitzfleisch.

Accepting them all without demur, Adler now strolls imperturbably into what is probably the most public of his varied intellectual adventures — a six-part series for public television with journalist Bill Moyers, exploring "Six Great Ideas."

This week's segment — poet John Keats would nod in approval, wherever he is — dealt with "Beauty," and subsequent installments, every Monday through Nov. 29, take up the themes of "Goodness," "Liberty," "Equality" and "Justice."

"Six Great Ideas" derived from Adler's 1981 book of the same name, in which Adler sought to ventilate what he regards as the foundation stones of civilization. According to Adler, those building blocks divide into two pairs of three: truth, beauty and goodness, which define how we judge the world around us, and liberty, equality and justice, which define our relations to each other.

The TV series was filmed in the summer of 1981 at the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies in Colorado — founded 30 years ago by Adler.

AN INTERNATIONAL GROUP of men and women from academia, art, law, industry and philosophy kicked the topics around while the cameras whirred and Adler played Socrates, now and then taking a break to walk with Moyers in the exhilarating Aspen landscape to assess where the discussions had led.

"I was amazed at what Moyers was able to do with the series," Adler said on a visit here the other day. "Altogether we shot 250,000 feet of film in eight days. Then it took 13 months to edit it down to 60,000 feet. Bill is a marvelous editor, really wonderful. Somehow he managed to perfectly capture the essence of the general discussions and then intersplice them with our conversations with each other in a way that seems so natural and right."

Adler, who will be 80 on Dec. 28, shows no sign of flagging in a lifetime of intellectual vigor and aggressiveness.

Just two months ago, in a characteristically wholesale manner, he proposed — nay, demanded — complete reform of public education in "The Paideia Proposal: An Educational Manifesto."

HE HAS LONG excoriated vocational and specialized training and quotes his longtime collaborator Robert Maynard Hutchins: "The best education for the best is the best education for all."

"The failure of vocational training has never been so clear as it is today, in this technological age," Adler said. "A person with a specialized education simply cannot keep up with the rapid changes of today's technology. He has to be re-educated every few years. Unless, of course, he first had the general academic education that enables him to know how — not what, but how — to think."

Adler's "Paideia Proposal" was received in educational circles with a mix of enthusiasm, outraged defensiveness and the inevitable inertia, but has led, nonetheless, to his next project: a pilot program to be based on a sequel yet to be written. By any odds, it could be entitled "How to Educate the Human Race."

ADLER WILL SERVE mainly as overseer of the sequel, which actually will be rendered into "How to ... " form by associates, who are developing the pilot program for school systems in Chicago, Dallas, Atlanta and — Adler hopes — areas of Southern California.

Adler is accustomed to criticism over the years, including the indictment that he is not a particularly original thinker, on the one hand, and that he is an elitist, on the other.

"All my life I've wanted simply to transmit to the widest possible audience the basic concepts of our civilization," he said. "I think it's important for everyone to have a basic grasp of the major ideas that shape our lives."

As to elitism, Adler said, "Of course I'm an elitist. But the point is, I want only the very best for everybody." To achieve that aim, Adler said, "I have finally begun to learn how to write. Altogether I have written maybe 30 books in my career, but I think it was about when I was 70 or 71 that I finally began to learn how to write short. Short sentences, short paragraphs, short books."

GETTING THE WORK out and before the public in the most accessible possible language has been a hallmark of Adler's crusty career from the beginning, more than half a century ago.

In 1929, at Hutchins' invitation, Adler joined the faculty of the University of Chicago as a professor of the philosophy of law. He subsequently became chief editor of Encyclopaedia Britannica and in 1946, with Hutchins, founded the Great Books Program, a plan in which reprints of the classics of Western Civilization became the focus of discussion groups throughout the country.

All through his writing career, Adler said, his books have almost always come fully formed, all written in the mind, straight from his typewriter in a steady, methodical fashion. No, he never had the experience of agonizing and maturing his way into something he could not have said at an earlier age.

"I generally produce one book a year," he said. "And yes, I could have written several of my books in different order. I have a clear idea of what I want to say about this topic and that, and when I've finished with one, I just go on to the next order of business."

The purposeful entrepreneur of ideas grew momentarily whimsical at just what his next order of business might be. "Well," he said, "I may do a book titled 'Six More Great Ideas,' and then 'Six Further Great Ideas,' and then 'Six Additional Great Ideas.' Or maybe 'Six Not-So-Great Ideas.'"

Now good time for home buyers

By JAMES M. WOODARD
Copley News Service

The size of the average new home has been steadily shrinking during the past three years. At the same time, average monthly payments on home loans have been increasing.

However, that trend may soon change, as interest rates on home mortgage loans settle down to a more livable level.

A recent study focused on homes purchased by families with an annual income of about $35,000. In 1979, the average size of those homes was 2,200 square feet; in 1980 it was 2,000 square feet; this year it is 1,800 square feet.

The study, conducted by Runzheimer and Co., showed the size of those newly purchased homes decreased by 18 percent since 1979. During that same period, the interest rate on home loans increased 65 percent.

Also, even though the size of the home's living area was shrinking, the average monthly payments (debt service) increased — from $660 in 1979 to $910 in 1982.

The message here is clear. Families in the same income level have been accepting smaller and smaller homes simply as an economic necessity. The increasing cost of financing has forced the squeeze play.

However, now that interest rates are declining, the tide may turn. Buyers may soon realize they can afford more house — in size and amenities.

Many prospective home buyers, and even some real estate professionals, are now fearful that home prices may shoot upward again, in the wake of the availability of more favorable financing. But this probably will not happen in the immediate future.

The reason is based on "supply and demand" pressures. The super-high interest rates have slowed sales down to a trickle for some time. Thus, a sizable inventory of unsold homes must be whittled down before prices increase significantly.

Considering current and projected factors in the real estate market, this is a particularly good time to buy a home. Interest rates are lower and prices have not yet entered a new phase of increases.

Q. Is is true that real estate syndications are becoming an increasingly popular form of real estate investing?

A. Definitely. Real estate syndications this year are expected to reach $18 billion to $210 billion, according to Ken Gain, president of the Real Estate Securities and Syndication Institute. That's an increase of nearly 25 percent over last year's volume.

Q. Aren't there too many office buildings being built?

A. Apparently. The vacancy rate in rental office space jumped from 5.4 percent to 7 percent during the past quarter. It's now at its highest point in four years.

Q. Do most people prefer a variable-rate or fixed-rate home mortgage loan?

A. About 53 percent of home owners and renters say they still prefer a fixed-rate mortgage, it was revealed in a recent study by the Federal National Mortgage Association.

Inquires are invited and may be answered in this column. Write: James M. Woodard, 6862 S. Zephyr St., Littleton, CO 80123.

Low light levels may be harmful

By JOANN RODGERS
Science Writer
Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Ordinary daylight and other low light levels long believed harmless to the eyes may in fact seriously damage them, medical eye doctors warned.

In reports to a meeting of the International Congress of Ophthalmology recently, the specialists expressed fear over reflected sunlight at the seashore and on ski slopes, light concentrated in telescopes and even the lights doctors shine into the eyes to examine or operate on them.

"The human retina is a well-designed light collector," said Dr. Martin A. Mainster of Harvard Medical School. "But just as the ear is vulnerable to excessive (ordinary) sound levels, we now know that the retina is vulnerable to excessive light levels."

Scientists have long known that the heat of intense sunlight can damage the retina and clear lens of the eye by burning them. Mechanical damage has also been documented with high energy pulses of light from lasers. And invisible light, such as ultraviolet rays, are also well-known villains.

Recent experiments in monkeys, Mainster said, show that photochemical injury is caused by prolonged exposure to light levels found in the normal environment that would probably be harmless in brief exposures.

Worse, there is evidence that such injuries to the light-sensitive retina tend to occur in the the macula, the area of retina critical for central vision.

In a paper prepared for the Congress, held jointly with the American Academy of Ophthalmology, Mainster said the animal studies provide "a growing body of evidence" to support changes in both medical instrument and environmental light sources for humans.

The eye's susceptibility to photochemical damage is recognized by federal safety standards for laser and welding arc exposures.

But Mainster claims that the standards don't always account for long-term exposure. The "safety margin is often small" for medical instrument light sources and may be even smaller if disease or abnormalities make the eye more sensitive to light.

Mainster urged eye doctors and others who examine the eyes with lighted instruments filter out infrared and other short-wave, visible blue light wavelengths and to use "the minimum amount of light required" to assure safety for the patient.

He said video display terminals produce too little light to be a hazard, but warned that until further studies shed more light on photochemical damage, "it is prudent to warn patients in high risk groups about potentially hazardous light conditions."

These include patients who have had a lens removed in a cataract operation, those with retinal disease and those who spend large amounts of time outdoors in bright light for work or play.

Dr. Mark Tso, a Chicago ophthalmologist reported animal studies which show that prolonged exposure to low doses of light energy gradually kill light sensitive cells by upsetting the activity of certain chemicals in the eye. A Pennsylvania eye doctor, Joseph L. Calkins warned that light from operating microscopes caused scars in monkeys after "a short period of time," and said no truly safe surgical light sources are available at present.

A military ophthalmologist working at the Aberdeen Proving Ground in Maryland also noted that sunglasses may inadvertently increase the chance of light damage to the eye.

Most pleasure from least calories

By TRISHA YEAGER
Copley News Service

One reason that sushi is so popular is that it's an aesthetic cuisine, providing pleasure through the artistry of preparation and the beauty of the ingredients.

I've been a sushi aficionado for years and have noted two facts. One, sushi eaters dine slowly and with obvious enjoyment but they seldom overeat; and two, most are not overweight.

There are several conclusions to be drawn from these observations if one is so inclined (and I am, in an occasional frivolous moment). The most obvious conclusion is that sushi eaters cannot afford to overeat, the average bite costing twice as much as a Big Mac. However, the influence that I like best is that sushi lovers have learned to trade quantity for quality.

It's possible, I believe, to consume fewer calories and at the same time increase your eating pleasure. How? By swapping caloric pleasures for non-caloric ones. Specifically, by learning to increase the amount of pleasure derived from sight, sound, smell, touch and self-esteem, while decreasing the number of calories consumed.

As an example, I've put together this meal: Broccoli soup with carrot-cream swirls; broiled salmon with dill; julienne of jicama; and orange flower ice. The meal is visually exciting in colors of green, orange and white (which can be carried through with flowers and table accessories), tasty and nutritious. And the contrasting flavors and temperatures, accented with subtle fragrances, appeal to the other senses. The soup is thick and satisfying, the salmon richly delicate and the orange flower ice a tantalizing surprise. Best of all, the whole meal is less than 500 calories.

BROCCOLI SOUP WITH CARROT-CREAM SWIRLS

Green mixture: Cook a bunch of broccoli (2 cups) in 1 cup chicken broth until tender. While it's cooking, saute 4 tablespoons chopped onion in 1 teaspoon butter. Then combine onion, broccoli with broth, 1 teaspoon chopped fresh rosemary (or ½ teaspoon dried), ¼ cup chopped parsley, a sqeeze of lemon, and salt and white pepper to taste. Blend until creamy and keep warm.

Orange mixture: Peel 4 to 5 carrots, chop, and cook in 1 cup chicken broth until tender. Then add ½ cup unflavored yogurt, 4 tablespoons frozen orange juice concentrate, ½ teaspoon nutmeg, ½ teaspoon grated ginger, and a bit of salt and white pepper. Blend until smooth and creamy.

To serve: Pour green mixture into four bowls. Then pour orange mixture into the middle of each bowl, making a swirl or design with a knife. Top each with a dollop of cold yogurt. (Ideally, the green mixture is hot, orange is warm, and yogurt is cold.) Serves 4, at 135 calories per person.

BROILED SALMON WITH DILL

Brush four 4-ounce salmon filets with 4 teaspoons melted butter. Cover both sides with fresh baby dill and put inside a grill basket or fish grill. Broil over coals until salmon is barely cooked through. Remove large pieces of dill and serve with wedges of lime and parsley or watercress garnish. Serves 4, at 210 calories per person.

ORANGE FLOWER ICE

In a small pan place 1 teaspoon unflavored gelatin, 2 tablespoons orange flower water, 3 tablepsoons sugar, 3 tablespoons lemon juice (from 1 large lemon), and cup water. Stir over medium heat until solids are dissolved. Then add 1 tablespoon orange curacao (optional), a dash of bitters and 1½ cups orange juice. Pour into freezer tray and freeze until lightly set. Beat with electric mixer until smooth. Freeze until firm. Serves 4, at 92 calories per person.

Ignorance often reason behind child abuse

By BRENDA FINE
Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — The number one killer of American children is not disease. It is maltreatment. And each year the number of abuse cases reported goes up.

The rising figures can be interpreted as reflecting increased awareness of the problem and a willingness to get involved, according to spokesmen from various federal and private agencies dealing with child protection.

Not everyone agrees with that optimistic interpretation. And new research into child abuse indicates that parents of such children must be better understood before any treatment of the problem can be effective.

Recent studies conducted at the University of Rochester's Mt. Hope Family Center have shed new light on the characteristics of the abusive adult.

"Parents who mistreat their children often lack basic knowledge of child development, which leads them to hold unrealistically high — or low — standards for their children," explained center director Craig Twentyman, an assistant professor of psychology. "Abusive parents conclude that 'my kid's rotten, he's just a bad kid.'

"There was one young mother who spanked her six-day-old child who wouldn't stop crying on command. The mother told us that 'my kid's crying on purpose because she knows my boyfriend's over and she wants to get back at me for having fun.' "

— "A one-year-old can usually feed himself without spilling his food."

"As knowledgeable professionals, we might label 'neglectful' the mother whose two-year-old drowned unattended in the tub. However it was clear that she had no idea that a child that age was incapable of bathing himself," said Twentyman.

Conversely, the same study shows that some abusive parents actually expect less of their children than do non-abusers. These parents, quick to condemn, usually dismiss any good the child does as accidental or unimportant. This can result in delayed intellectual, social, and emotional development, leading to further parental disappointment and abuse.

The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act passed by Congress in 1974 did more than define terms and assign culpability. It also broke ground in its determination to preserve the family unit. Rather than place the abused child into foster care, professionals were charged with mending and strengthening the family structure whenever possible.

This goal spurred the formation of family centers and clinics to treat all involved. The Mt. Hope program, for example, provides day-service care for children aged 3-5 as well as a 12-month Parent Effectiveness Training Program for abusive adults

But at the moment of crisis, often the best help is a sympathetic ear — someone to listen and offer on-the-spot counseling. Such is the initial service of Parents' Anonymous, a nation-wide organization offering around-the-clock contact for potential abusers.

While almost all 50 states have their own toll-free 800 numbers, anyone can call the national number — 800-421-0353 — for immediate referal to local or state self-help groups.

Leigh Ehresman, executive director of New York State's Parents' Anonymous, reports that the number of calls to her hot line is up 64 percent over 1981. She offers an unexpected interpretation of this increase:

"I used to feel optimistic, that the increase indicated increased awareness. But, with today's economic hardships, I sense overwhelming hopelessness and desperation. I'm not so optimistic right now," she said.

Harder for child to diet

By CECELIA GOODNOW
Hearst Feature Service

SEATTLE — It takes more than a few potato chips to create a seriously obese child, and the process of shedding those excess pounds is even more complex and time-consuming than for overweight adults, according to University of Washington nutritionists.

"A lot of times these kids are over-eating because they don't feel good about themselves or their relationship with the rest of the family," said Kathleen Mahan, who specializes in nutritional problems of children under 13. Mahan is part of a weight-loss team at UW's Child Development and Mental Retardation Center that examines factors that may cause a child to become overweight. The team includes psychologists, social workers and physicians as well as nutritionists.

"We don't just look at what they eat," Mahan said, adding that the evaluation is based on interviews with the entire family, including brothers, sisters and even grandparents, if they share the child's home.

In Mahan's private practice, she often sees children with only moderate weight problems, thanks to early referrals by pediatricians and school nurses. But by the time children reach UW's program, they often have developed extreme problems, according to nutritionist Jane Rees, who works with adolescents.

WHILE EMOTIONAL PROBLEMS may trigger overeating, the child's own genetic makeup may contribute to the problem.

"There are physiological reasons for people being heavy," Rees said. "They inherit certain traits from their parents. We teach them how to deal with their weight, so they do the best they can with what they've got."

Genetic factors, Mahan explained, are at the heart of two theories about why some people accumulate excess poundage. One theory holds that weight gain may be triggered by an enzyme called LPL, short for liporotein lipase, which sits inside blood vessels next to fat cells. The enzyme apparently grabs food as it passes through the bloodstream, converts the food to fat and shuttles it off to the adjacent fat cells.

"Research being done here shows that people who are overweight have more of this enzyme than people who are of normal weight," Mahan said. "The disturbing thing is that when they lose weight, the level of LPL stays the same."

Persons predisposed to gain weight also may be affected by the thermogenesis theory, which holds that "the body burns up calories just to get rid of them," Mahan said. Certain individuals don't burn the calories as fast, and lingering fat may result.

THE EXISTENCE OF LPL and thermogenesis is well-established, the nutritionists said, but how they operate is not fully understood. Persons in the genetically heavy category may need to set higher weight goals, but it is important that they not resign themselves to a lifetime of being overweight.

Rees said one effective way to overcome these weight-gain mechanisms is through hard exercise that revs up the heartbeat. A 20-minute walk three times a week may be sufficient for a heavy person, she said.

Girls 9 to 11 are especially vulnerable to weight gain because of hormonal changes that prepare their bodies for puberty, they said. As girls mature, their body-fat content rises from 15 percent to 24 percent, while boys' fat content only rises from 15 percent to 18 percent. In addition, the emotional turmoil of preadolescence may cause overeating.

Regardless of why a child is fat, treatment should be slow and methodical to protect the child's health and ensure that weight loss is permanent. While a loss of one or two pounds per week is considered sensible for adults, it may be far too rapid for a growing child, according to Rees and Mahan.

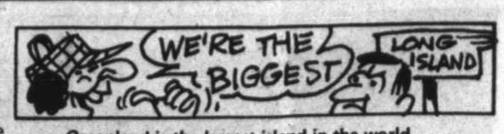

Parents of overweight children can help in a variety of ways, depending on the age of the child, Mahan and Rees said. An overweight child under age 5 usually reflects a poor food environment created by his parents; the solution is to banish junk food and change the entire family's eating pattern.

PARENTS HAVE LESS CONTROL once children start school, but they can help by boosting their children's self-esteem. "Often," Rees added, "there's a power struggle over food and the parent ends up as a watchdog. It doesn't work; it tends to drive the kid to food more."

The standard for success with overweight children is more subtle than the yardstick employed by mass-market diet programs — and more lasting, the nutritionists believe.

"When we look at the success rate for adolescents," Rees said, "we're not just talking about the pounds lost. It's how they are functioning in their everyday lives."

"The two greatest stimulants in the world are youth and debt." Benjamin Disrael

Children's friendships now fastened with safety pins

By MARY KAY ROTH

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Good buddies are sticking together more than ever this fall as a new ritual of childhood sweeps the elementary schools and kids pledge their everlasting friendship with safety pins.

Some mothers say it's better than a dead frog.

In one of the strangest symbols of young camaraderie yet — the friendship pin — young pals are giving one another bead-strung safety pins and sticking the sparkly things on their tennis shoes and belts.

Teachers don't get apples any more. They get friendship beads. Lincoln area stores are selling out of safety pins and stocking up on plastic beads. Meanwhile, parents are laying down the law: no more friendship-pinned tennis shoes in bed.

"It's a happy kind of exchange," says Dean Kuhns, principal of Prescott Elementary School in Lincoln. "It simply means: 'You be my friend.'"

Some children boast they have more than 100 pins, while a few budding young capitalists are beginning to sell the ready-made product in school.

But most kids make their own, devised out of good old-fashioned safety pins, strung with tiny beads and stuck through the shoelaces. Little boys also wear them on their belt loops as a "macho" sign.

Hill Street teacher Jan Blumer of Lincoln says children have even created a code of meanings for the colors. Red means a friend. Blue signals a good friend. Orange signifies a buddy. And green is attached to an enemy — so much for friendship.

No one seems to know how the rage got started, but the pins began appearing on kids' feet about a week after school started this year and a mysterious code of protocol developed, totally alien to the adult world:

— Girls are to wear them on their shoes, some all the way up their shoelaces and even onto their socks. Boys can wear them on shoes, but they are preferred on belt loops.

— If a girl gives one to a boy, it does not have any romantic implications. It just means they are friends.

— Smaller pins are the choice ones, but it's OK to give larger ones.

— And even when someone you don't like gives you one, you must give one back.

Religion offers 'soul travel'

By JIM WOOD
Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — As soon as Harry Keeble saw the words "soul travel," he knew ECK was for him.

A Londoner who always felt his true home was on other planes, Keeble liked the idea that it wasn't necessary to die to experience soul travel. He went to a meeting, and seven months later joined Eckankar, a world movement claiming three million followers, which expects 5,000 participants at its annual meeting in San Francisco this month.

Bill Daniels, who works for the Department of Health and Human Services in Washington, had been sampling from a spiritual smorgasbord since his bar mitzvah at 13. By the time he was married and into yoga in 1973, he wasn't sure where he was heading until his guru told him to relax. Daniels carried out the order so well he fell asleep and began to snore.

"The guru told me not to come back," he laughs now. His wife, who had been raised as a Lutheran, continued to attend, however, and one night met the guru's nephew, who put her in touch with a book about Paul Twitchell, the modern day founder of ECK.

Daniels read the book, called "In My Soul I Am Free," and was deeply moved. "A soul was on its way home," Daniels says.

Greg Scott, a Camden, Del., sociologist, grew up as the son of a Baptist minister, but as he reached adulthood he tried atheism and Rosacrucianism. Then he picked up a book on ECK that said the world around him was not the only reality, that there were levels of heaven and that he could prove it for himself.

"I tried using ECK techniques, and the light and sound of God was immediately available," he says. "Once you have an experience like that, no one can take it away from you."

He wrote, hoping to reach Paul Twitchell, only to learn that the ECK author, the 971st in a continuous line of ECK masters and the modern founder of ECK in 1965, had "translated" — died to a non-ECKist.

ECK, a tax-exempt religious foundation based in Menlo Park, Calif., says it has an international following of 50,000 members. Members say they firmly expect that ECK will be one of the major world religions soon. They point to members like Banjamin Anyaeji, a Nigerian physics and math teacher, as proof of the international character of the movement. Speakers at the gathering are expected to come from Malaysia, Hong Kong, Gabon, Norway and Canada.

German flautist Bettine Ware recalls that when she was 16 she was in an automobile accident in which a friend was killed. Ware says that she experienced the sensation, often reported by victims of severe accidents, of leaving her body and watching the accident as if from above. The feeling of peace that she experienced then, she says, made it easier to cope with her friend's death.

Eight years later a friend called and described a simple way of achieving that out-of-body experience. "What you do is sit on a chair and chant the word HU," (pronounced Hugh), the friend said.

DEAR ABBY

Widow wishes will to deserving

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am a well-to-do widow who has been doing a lot of soul-searching lately. I am in fairly good health for a person my age, but I want to "put my affairs in order" and revise my will.

I have 14 grandchildren and great-grandchildren who really don't deserve the windfall they would get were I to leave them a considerable fortune.

My late husband worked hard and invested wisely to accumulate a sizable estate. None of our grandchildren have evidenced any special qualities to indicate that they deserve or could judiciously handle a large inheritance. It might even reduce their incentive to work and damage their characters.

On my demise, I would like to use my estate to better humanity. What are your recommendations? — SECOND THOUGHTS

DEAR THOUGHTS: In my opinion, the most rewarding gift is helping people to help themselves. ("Give a man a fish and he can eat for a day. Teach him to fish and he will eat for a lifetime.") Support scholarship programs and make education available to students who are eager to learn and qualify scholastically but lack the funds.

Support agencies for independent living so that physically disabled people can live independently in society without being institutionalized. Support medical research. We need to know more about lupus, diabetes, kidney disease, liver disease, arthritis, heart disease, Alzheimer's disease and cancer. The list is endless.

And please don't forget one of the most deserving and least remembered charities of all — the animal shelters.

DEAR ABBY: What do you do when you receive a thank-you note for a gift you sent, and were thanked for the wrong gift?

Do you keep quiet and be glad you received a thank-you note at all, or let the person know that a mistake was made? — WONDERING IN PHOENIX

DEAR WONDERING: Let the person know. Obviously at least two mistakes were made. The wrong person was probably thanked for the gift YOU sent.

DEAR ABBY: In connection with a funeral service, what lies in state — the body or the casket? Our local newspaper and radio station seem to favor the word casket. — E.R.P., ATCHISON, KAN.

DEAR E.R.P.: The BODY lies in state, but it cannot lie in state without a casket. Neither can an empty casket lie in state without a body.

Book educates children about improper touch

By CECELIA GOODNOW
Hearst Feature Service

SEATTLE — Tears still well in Frances Dayee's eyes when she recalls the day six years ago that her 4-year-old son was sexually assaulted.

"It just rips you apart," she said. "I blamed myself and thought what a rotten mother I was."

Studies indicate that one in four girls and nearly one in 10 boys will be sexually assaulted by age 18, and Dayee (a pen name) reasons that it's far better to prevent an assault than to try to repair the damage.

Spurred by the memory of her son's experience, the Seattle mother has written a small, illustrated book to help parents prevent similar episodes with their own children. "Private Zone" explains in simple language that parts of the body are private and cannot be touched or examined by other people unless a valid reason exists. The book, aimed at children 3 to 9, is designed to be read aloud by parents as a launching pad for further discussion.

THE BOOK ADVISES that though parents may need to touch your "private zone," and doctors might need to touch you sometimes, other people must have your permission. It urges children to tell a parent, teacher or babysitter if anyone touches their private zone, even if the offender says, "It's our secret."

Her book cautions parents to react calmly in the presence of the child and to assure him he was right to tell about the incident. There also is a list of symptoms that may indicate the child has been sexually assaulted, such as sudden personality change, behavor problems, unusual shyness or moodiness. If several symptoms occur simultaneously, she suggests that parents delve into the reasons.

Even very young children may be able to repel unwanted advances if they understand they have the right to say no to a sex offender, Dayee said. "Statistics show that offenders are not generally violent," she said. "If children say right out, "This part of my body belongs to me; don't touch it,' very often this will save them. If the person is violent, it doesn't matter what the child says or does."

Assaults often are committed by an adult the child trusts, as was the case when Dayee's son, Troy, was assaulted. But it is difficult to explain to small children that a family friend or a relative might be the person they need to fear most.

In Troy's case, warnings about friendly strangers missed the mark.

"I HAD TOLD ALL my children all the stories parents always tell their kids: 'Don't take candy from strangers; don't get into cars with strangers,'" Dayee said. "It turned out that the person who assaulted him was a very dear friend of ours who lured him out of the backyard to see some kittens."

Dayee had left her son in her friend's care while she ran inside to tend a daughter's skinned knee. Five minutes later, she returned to the empty backyard and began to search anxiously for her son.

"I finally decided to call the police," she said. It wasn't until I started asking questions that he began to become concerned.

"I was lucky; they just compared notes," she said, adding that the situation might have gone farther if her son had not resisted Carl's request that the boy touch his penis.

"He said that Carl helped him put his pants on and told him, "This is our secret.' I almost collapsed; I just could not believe that anyone we care that deeply about could do such a horrendous thing."

DAYEE SAID THAT she was more upset than her son, but she could not bring herself to press charges, as police suggested. She confronted the man and persuaded him to enter treatment.

"He broke down, cried, said it had never happened before and would never happen again," Dayee said. Finally, she and the man's wife succeeded in getting him into a treatment program, which apparently was successful.

Dayee was especially upset that her son believed he had done something wrong. Troy's feelings of guilt surfaced one day when she asked him if he would be willing to talk to the police about what had happened.

"He looked down, shuffled his toe and said, 'Yes, but will they put me in jail, too?' " Dayee recalled, wiping away tears. "I said, 'Honey, I don't want to put Carl in jail. I just want to help him.' Troy said, 'I want to help him, too.' "

During the cold winter months, a lot of time is spent indoors in a dry, heated environment. This results in a lack of moisture in your home. Jerry Riel, owner of Jerry's Sheet Metal, says a humidifier works together with your furnace in maintaining a comfortable indoors temperature. The dry, heated air in your home steals moisture from everything in it. That includes the wood framing around doors and windows. The wood shrinks, resulting in gaping spaces that permit cold air to infiltrate your home, lowering the inside temperature and requiring more heating. Proper humidity helps prevent this shrinkage and keeps cold air out. This is an important energy saving feature. No matter what size your home is or what type of heating system you have, Jerry's can supply you with an Aprilaire humidifier designed to provide the humidity you need. Call 684-4495 for a no-obligation recommendation for your home.

Do migrants threaten Lone Star State's ways?

By WINSTON CAVIN
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

DALLAS — You don't need the U.S. Census to tell you that Texas has become home for many a migrant.

And it doesn't take many outsiders, with all their outsider ways, to get some hard-core, native Texans fearing for the purity of the Lone Star State's culture and image, its gene pool and such hallowed institutions as the Texas chicken-fried steak.

But for now, at least in sheer numbers of people, the migrants are far from taking over. At least that's what the 1980 U.S. Census reports.

In the Dallas-Fort Worth areas, for example, the census shows that native Texans compose 66 percent of the population. The percentage of non-Texans in the Dallas-Fort Worth population increased 2 percentage points between 1970 and 1980, when the Sun Belt boom and the promise of prosperity began luring throngs of newcombers to the state.

The same trend occurred statewide. The census shows native Texans composed 68.6 percent of the state's 14.2 million population in 1980, a 2 percent change from 1970, when native Texans accounted for 70.8 percent of the state's 11.2 million residents.

But to some Texans, the real question is how the newcomers will affect Texas' culture.

BELLWETHERS OF CHANGE abound in Texas' metropolitan areas such as Dallas-Fort Worth. New York-style delicatessens have sprouted in the shadow of chili parlors. Bilingual signs in drugstores and laundromats are common, as are Spanish-language menus in fast-food restaurants.

Out-of-state license plates and "I Love New York" bumper stickers are signs of the times on local freeways. Baseball teams from cities such as Chicago, Detroit and Milwaukee seem to have almost as many rooters in the stands at Arlington Stadium as do the Texas Rangers.

The newcomers' impact on Texas is attracting attention on broader fronts as well.

Take politics, for example. Republican candidates are winning elections in a state where voting anything but Democratic for years was a "sin against humanity," says University of Texas history professor Joe B. Frantz.

The newcomers are influencing the economy, too. Union officials say the flood of unemployed blue-collar workers moving to Texas in search of jobs is contributing to the state's near-record unemployment rate.

"It's a replay of the Grapes of Wrath," said Jim Murry, executive secretary of the Montana AFL-CIO.

The migrants are even changing the lifestyles and social attitudes of the Lone State State. Police and sociologists speak of a possible link between the increasing numbers of displaced, rootless people in major Texas cities and the steady increase in crime and divorce rates.

While real Texans might fret about these social and political trends, the newcomers might respond to their fear and provincialism with questions of their own: What is the special flavor of Texas anyway, and why is the Lone Star State so high and mighty in the minds of so many?

SOME OF THE STATE'S leading students of Texas history and culture disagree about how much truth underlies the Tall Texan image. But they agree the flood of newcomers from other states and nations will change Texas and its people.

"By the 200th anniversary of Texas independence (2036), this will be an entirely different state," predicts Jack McGuire, director of Institute for Texas Culture.

While the new settlers will influence Texan culture, Frantz said they won't obliterate it. In fact, he said, the newcomers are perpetuating what he calls "the Texans myth."

"Some of these newcomers are going to be more Texan than Texans," Frantz said. "They feel a need to conform to the myth. They buy boots and a cowboy hat and blue jeans. They learn to chew tobacco. We won't see the so-called Texas culture going by the wayside."

Whether the newcomers dilute the Texas culture or perpetuate it, academicians and other observers are concerned about the potential long-term effects of the invasion.

"To what extent Texas keeps its own identity is going to depend on what the power structure of Texas wants," said University of Texas history professor Tuffly Ellis.

Moravians still force in Pennsylvania

EDITOR'S NOTE — The little town of Bethlehem — the one in Pennsylvania — was settled by Moravian missionaries in the 18th century. Their religious heritage is still strong in the area, but religion was not the only legacy they have passed on.

By JILL LAWRENCE

The General Economy is long gone, the missionary zeal has tempered and music has become the domain of all America. But a special tie still binds the 4,000 Moravians in Bethlehem to their 453,000 fellow worshippers scattered around the globe.

"We have a worldwide feeling of belonging," says Jeanette Zug, director of the Moravian Museum here. "Wherever we go, we immediately start out as brothers and sisters. We share so much."

Moravians originated in Czechoslovakia, Poland and Germany, but their missions have taken them all over the world. Since the first 1732 trek to the West Indies, they have fanned out to Greenland, Tibet, Africa, Labrador and South America.

The word they spread was based on the Bible, with an emphasis on religious feeling and experience over dogma. To be Christian, they believed, was to be diligent, frugal and engaged in good works.

"AS MY FATHER SAID, 'Don't preach, Kate. Live it out. Let them see what God has done for you," says Kate Hettasch, 77, recently retired after more than 40 years as a missionary in Labrador. She sighs and smiles. "My heart is up there and always will be."

North America's unchurched Indian population proved a compelling draw to the Moravians, who had split from the Catholic church in 1457 — 60 years before the Reformation — over demands for a more populist approach to communion and liturgy.

After a false start near Savannah, Ga., the early missionaries carved a permanent settlement in the rolling Lehigh Valley here. Later they spread across central Pennsylvania, south to North Carolina and west to Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin.

Count Nicholas von Zinzendorf, a German nobleman with intense religious commitment, named the first Moravian town during a 1741 Christmas visit to what was then its only building — a community house.

Christmas still is an elaborate ritual in Bethlehem. The Moravians begin preparations in August, when they start hand-dipping 10,000 beeswax candles.

In a corner of downtown Bethlehem centuries removed from the nearby steel mills, the oak log Gemein-Haus — site of that first Christmas celebration — is a museum bearing witness to a sophisticated colonial lifestyle.

"THE SETTLERS WERE cosmopolitan," says Richard Schantz, director of music at Moravian College here. "They were dedicated to transplanting the best of their European culture to this country and to doing it as fast as possible."

While most Americans wrote and sang simple tunes, the Moravians composed orchestrated hymns, anthems and arias that have enriched many other religions.

They ate buns and coffee at celebratory lovefeast services made up entirely of hymns. For recreation, they played string quartets and symphonies painstakingly copied and brought from Europe.

There were many musical firsts: the first amateur musical societies in America; the first American performances of many oratorios and symphonic works by Bach, Haydn and others; the first violin made in America; the first chamber music composed in America.

The settlers — fewer than 25 to start — were able to focus on missions and music largely because of the General Economy, which lasted from 1744 to 1761.

"THE MORAVIANS SHARED everything," says Edwin Kortz, a Moravian bishop. "It wasn't each family struggling to maintain itself. They were working together. That would allow them more time for the cultural things."

The community was divided into home and pilgrim congregations. Those at home farmed, traded and ran businesses — inns, mills, stores, a tannery and the nation's first municipal water works — to support the missionary travelers.

The groups were fluid since so many people were anxious to be missionaries. By the 1750s, amid the French and Indian War, children were learning reading, writing, arithmetic and Mohawk — to prepare them for missionary activities among the Indians.

At any given time, 10 percent of the community — about 100 people — would be off on missions. The number dropped after the General Economy was disbanded in 1761, when families had to fend for themselves and travel became more difficult.

But even with the introduction of private enterprise, Bethlehem remained a church-controlled Moravian enclave. For more than 100 years, the church owned all land and leased it only to business projects it had approved. All residents had to be Moravian and church permission was needed to move away.

WHEN THE CHURCH FINALLY opened Bethlehem to outsiders in 1844, the town's 1,000 population soared along with the fast-growing zinc, iron and railroad industries; and 1899 saw the birth of a holding company called Bethlehem Steel.

"The Moravians developed a nice little scenic town that worked pretty well until about 1830," says Moravian minister Vernon Nelson, curator of the Moravian Archives.

"Then south Bethlehem almost became an industrial boom town," he says. "In the 1920s, Bethlehem was a wild town — speakeasies, brothels, gunfights and a lot of bootleg liquor."

Moravians have shrunk to a tiny minority in modern Bethlehem, but Nelson says they still wield some influence — if only because of the past.

"No one would get away with tearing down Central Moravian Church for a highway," he says. "But that's not because Moravians have so much power. It's because history does."

12 Keys to the Future

Let's Talk. The telephone. Today you can touch a few buttons and talk to someone across the street. Or around the world.

But what about tomorrow? What kind of things will you be in touch with when you touch those same 12 keys? The possibilities are endless.

Already some consumers are using the telephone to dial up news and weather maps. Shop from department store catalogs. And compare supermarket specials, right on their own television sets.

Soon, local utilities will be able to monitor a home's energy usage, taking remote readings of gas and electric meters.

What would happen if Americans could vote by phone? Only half of American voters went to the polls in 1980. What would happen if almost everyone were to vote at home by phone?

What if you were able—just by touching a few buttons—to get information from computers located anywhere in the world?

Tomorrow all these services may be an everyday reality. And the telephone network is the key.

As a result, Southwestern Bell will become more important than ever before. Simply because Southwestern Bell is the gateway to The Information Age—the link between your telephone and a whole world of knowledge and services that will be at your disposal.

We know you have questions about what's happening in our industry. We want to make it easy for you to get answers. So call us. And let's talk.

A U.S. Navy honor guard folds the American flag over the coffin of Petty Officer William Braxton Jackson, who died in the Vietnam War in 1967. The funeral was held Thursday in Jackson's hometown of Stockdale, Texas. The remains of Jackson and two of his helicopter cremates were released by the Vietnamese only recently.

Drug bust links 'mob' with heroin trade

NEW YORK (AP) — Bail has been set at $1 million to $3 million for three alleged leaders of a heroin ring that federal officials say is the first demonstrated connection between organized crime and the heroin trade.

The $3 million bail was set Thursday by U.S. Magistrate Leonard Bernikow for William "Crazy Willie" Irizarry, 56, of Manhattan.

Oreste "Ernie Boy" Abbamonte, 34, of Port Washington, N.Y., who allegedly threatened the life of the government agents who arrested him, got $1.5 million bail and Lorenzo "Enzo" Di Chiara, 43, of Brooklyn, was ordered held in $1 million bail.

Di Chiara was described by authorites as an illegal alien with a record for armed bank robbery in Italy.

Bail was set in lesser amounts for ten others arrested Wednesday after an investigation that began in August, 1981. Officials said $20 million worth of heroin was seized and a "major blow" dealt to the heroin trade.

FBI director William H. Webster, at a news conference in Washington Thursday, described some of those arrested as members of organized crime families, which officials said included the old Joe Bonnano and the late Thomas "Three Finger Brown" Luchese mobs.

The FBI director supervises the Drug Enforcement Administration, which conducted the current undercover crackdown. Webster said the bust "immobilized" traffic in heroin smuggled in from the "Golden Crescent" area of Southwest Asia.

Bruce E. Jensen, special agent in charge of the New York division of the DEA, said nine kilograms of heroin, or 19.8 pounds, was seized in the operation Wednesday night and early Thursday. The heroin, he said, was at least 77 percent pure.

Jensen said since the start of the investigation his men had made numerous purchases from the dealers. Two weeks ago, Jensen said, agents purchased six pounds of heroin, paying $150,000 and promising $390,000 more.

Jensen said that the suspects had demanded a rental car in which the heroin was to be delivered. He said dealers and agents met at a spot on the West Side of Manhattan Wednesday night, and the agents displayed $1.9 million in cash — about $1.5 million for the Wednesday purchase, plus the money owed from the transaction two weeks ago.

Jensen said the dealers then told the agents to go to the southeast corner of 55th Street and First Avenue in less than a half hour to claim the drugs in the trunk of the rental car.

At 11:30 p.m., when the transaction took place — and two arrests were made — 30 agents and police officers were nearby, including Jensen.

"When I got $1.9 million on the street, I like to be out there and make sure it's safe," he said.

Arrested at the scene were Abbamonte and Joseph "Joe the Crow" DelVecchio, 39, of 47 Birch St., Englewood Cliffs, N.J. The others were arrested at their homes and elsewhere.

Kevin Gallagher of the DEA said the drug bust "is going to be felt in the streets of New York." It was said to have interrupted the flow of some 25 kilograms of heroin per week, which officials said will affect many addicts. The DEA said a kilogram of 95 percent pure heroin can sustain up to 19,000 hard-core addicts for one day.

Body of Texas city's first Vietnam War casualty finally laid to rest

STOCKDALE, Texas (AP) — The city hall flag was draped to half-staff and stores closed in mid-afternoon as residents paid their final respects to the first serviceman from this South Texas city to die in the Vietnam War — and the last to come home.

The body of Petty Officer 2nd Class William Braxton Jackson was released recently to the United States by the Vietnamese government — over 15 years after he died during a helicopter rescue mission on July 19, 1967.

Jackson was one of four crewmen who died while trying to save a pilot downed over enemy territory. Jackson's helicopter was hit by a surface-to-air missile, the crew of another helicopter reported.

Jackson was never heard from again, but his loved ones knew he was dead.

"We knew he was killed in a helicopter crash," said his widow, Jan Jackson of Imperial Beach, Calif. "Our thinking was just that there were no remains."

Shortly after Jackson disappeared, memorial services were held in both Stockdale, located about 45 miles southeast of San Antonio, and Imperial Beach, where a church library was named in Jackson's honor.

His mother, Ella Jackson Hawk of Stockdale, said she was thankful for the honors accorded her son, but remained uneasy because his body had been deprived of a Christian burial.

"We prayed for it," she said Thursday. "I thought if we just got his body back it would be so much easier. After that many years, you almost think it's the end."

On Oct. 14, Navy officials informed Jackson's relatives that the bodies of three of the four crewmen from the ill-fated helicopter were being returned and there was a possibility Jackson was among them.

"I couldn't have stood it if they came back and said his was the body that was not found," Mrs. Hawk said.

But Jackson was identified and the residents of Stockdale turned out once again Thursday to honor him.

Jackson was a career Navy man who joined the service in 1953 at age 17, according to Mrs. Hawk.

"He wanted to go when he was 16, but we wouldn't sign the papers for him," she said.

After Thursday's service at the First Baptist Church of Stockdale, Mrs. Hawk said, "It seems like it's over now. We've got him back."

But a woman who alighted from a car bearing a POW-MIA sticker said, "Too bad they all aren't."

Companies have up to three months to change packages

WASHINGTON (AP) — The non-prescription drug industry says it is moving "as fast as humanly possible" toward tamper-resistant packaging, but some firms may not be able to meet the government deadline.

The standards for packaging were issued Thursday by Health and Human Services Secretary Richard S. Schweiker. The requirement followed seven deaths in the Chicago area from Extra-Strength Tylenol spiked with cyanide, and dozens of subsequent product tampering incidents.

John T. Walden, a vice president of the Proprietary Association, which represents the $5 billion industry, said the new packages probably will cost consumers between 2 cents and 10 cents more per item.

The government projected that the cost would rise between a penny and 2 cents.

"The estimates are very soft, but the best we have are from 2 cents to 10 cents per package," Walden said.

"We think it's a very prompt attempt by government to provide a national response to what is clearly a national concern," Walden said. "The general approach gives us the flexibility in many ways we will need. But there are problems with some of the times set down," he added.

The government wants capsules and liquids to be sold in tamper-resistant packages within 90 days. Tablets and suppositories would have a 180-day transition period. Some cosmetic items like mouthwashes would have 90 days. But most products applied to the skin's surface are not affected.

Schweiker said 200,000 to 400,000 products would require new packaging because of the regulations, at an overall cost of between $20 million and $40 million.

Henson

NEW YORK (AP) — Jim Henson, the Muppet man who gave the world Miss Piggy and Kermit the Frog, has come up with a new magazine for readers who have outgrown Sesame Street.

The first issue of Muppet Magazine, starring the Henson characters who appeared in "The Muppet Show" on television, was launched Thursday at a party in Manhattan.

The glossy quarterly publication sells for $1.50, and is billed as a humor magazine aimed primarily at children ages 8 to 12. About 500,000 copies will be distributed for newsstand sale and subscription, according to publisher Donald Welsh.

SOUTH KINGSTOWN, R.I. (AP) — A speech professor says Sen. Edward M. Kennedy has improved his speaking style since 1980, when he sounded like he was "letting the air out of a balloon," but needs more work on his delivery if he wants to run for president again.

L. Patrick Devlin of the University of Rhode Island said Thursday that the Massachusetts Democrat must avoid see-saws between tub-thumping brilliance and fuzzy thinking that marked his failed 1980 bid for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Devlin's 20-page critique, based on a two-year study of the Massachusetts senator's stumping style, will be published in this month's edition of the Quarterly Journal of Speech, a publication for professors of speech communications.

"Listening to Teddy in 1980 was like letting the air out of a balloon," Devlin said in an interview. He said the candidate would "walk into a school gym filled with Iowa farmers and he'd put them to sleep. Then he'd get frustrated and start shouting."

In this year's campaign, Kennedy avoided shouting "and cut down on the 'uhs' that are so characteristic," Devlin said.

Kennedy would not discuss his presidential aspirations after winning another Senate term Tuesday, but aides have freely acknowledged that he is laying the groundwork for another run for the White House.

Friedan

PARIS (AP) — Betty Friedan, mother of the women's liberation movement in the United States, has brought her feminist cause to France, the nation that coined the phrase "vive la difference."

"In many ways, you in France are more advanced and have gone farther," Mrs. Friedan told a group of about 150 women at a promotional appearance Thursday for her latest book. "In the United States, women earn 59 cents for every dollar a man earns. In France, women earn about 70 percent of what men make."

The 61-year-old American feminist is in Paris to promote "The Second Stage," which has just been published in French. Her first book, "The Feminine Mystique" became a catalyst for the women's liberation movement when it was published 19 years ago.

CHARLOTTE AMALIE, St. Thomas (AP) — Former Vice President Walter Mondale and his wife, Joan, have arrived in the U.S. Virgin Islands for a week's vacation.

During an interview Thursday at Harry S. Truman Airport, Mondale said he was in the Caribbean to "sit down for a week" at Caneel Bay in St. John, part of the Virgin Islands group.

Following the Democratic Party's success in picking up more than two-dozen House seats in Tuesday's election, Mondale said he was "obviously thinking about running for president" in 1984.

As he has on other occasions, however, the Minnesota Democrat said the decision was not definite.

Clarke

LONDON (AP) — Science fiction writer Arthur C. Clarke and filmmaker Stanley Kubrick plan to meet this weekend to discuss producing a sequel to their epic movie "2001: A Space Odyssey."

The meeting was announced Thursday by Clarke's publishers as his sequel to "2001," called "2010: Odyssey 2," went on sale in Britain.

Clarke, 64, who lives in Sri Lanka, said Thursday in an interview with The Times of London that he found he couldn't keep a pledge made five years ago to retire from writing. He has published more than 60 books, selling 20 million copies worldwide.

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Sen. Barry Goldwater, recuperating after triple-bypass heart surgery, is expected to be released from a Phoenix hospital within 10 days, his surgeon says.

The 73-year-old Arizona Republican was admitted Wednesday to St. Joseph's Hospital. His operation Thursday lasted about 90 minutes.

Goldwater was expected to remain in intensive care for several days and be released from the hospital within seven to 10 days, said his surgeon, Dr. Ted Diethrich.

Two of Goldwater's arteries were 90 percent blocked and a third was 85 percent blocked before the operation, Diethrich said.

"Before the surgery, the senator was definitely in a life-threatening situation," he said.

Diethrich, head of the Arizona Heart Institute, said Goldwater's heart was in good shape.

"There has been no muscle damage; there has been no heart damage," he said. "I don't anticipate any problems."

Dunne

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The boyfriend of actress Dominique Dunne, in custody on an attempted murder charge, was booked for investigation of murder when the dark-haired performer died six days after being choked.

Miss Dunne, 22, who made her film debut this year as the older daughter in the Steven Spielberg film production, "Poltergeist," died Thursday in the intensive-care unit at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center, hospital spokesman Larry Baum said.

Within an hour, her former live-in boyfriend, John Sweeney, 26, was re-booked on a murder charge in the Los Angeles County Jail, where he has been held since Saturday on an attempted murder charge.

She was still on life-support systems when her heart stopped about 11 a.m., said a hospital official who asked not to be identified.

"The loss of Dominique is tragic and incomprehensible," Spielberg said in a statement released with "Poltergeist" co-producer Frank Marshall. "She was a treasure of natural ability. Our hearts and prayers go out to her family."

An autopsy was scheduled today.

CAMBRIDGE, England (AP) — Edward H. Carr, whose comprehensive "A History of Soviet Russia" is considered one of the most important works by a British historian this century, has died at the age of 90.

Carr died in Cambridge on Wednesday, his family announced today.

He began his working life as a diplomat in the Foreign Office and from 1941-1946 was assistant editor of The Times of London.

The study covers the period 1917-1929, although in 1979 Carr added a sequel entitled "The Russian Revolution: Lenin to Stalin."

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — John A. Vietor, founder of San Francisco and San Diego magazines and heir to the Jell-O fortune, died Tuesday at the age of 68 aboard a cruise ship in the Chinese port city of Xingang.

Tiny girl adjusting to big world

GONZALES, Calif. (AP) — Mindy Wells is learning to live in a world she must always look up to, but the doll-sized 5-year-old can now sleep easy in a scaled-down bed to match her Lilliputian dimensions.

Mindy — just 31 inches tall and weighing only 15 pounds — suffers from a rare birth defect that will keep her a dwarf forever. She must use a stool to climb onto her parent's furniture.

But a civic group helped her family buy a home where one room could be modified for Mindy, and enlisted an amateur woodworker to build a diminutive four-poster bed.

When she first saw the bed, Mindy climbed on top, crossed her arms and hugged herself. "It's her little gesture of saying, 'This is mine,'" said her mother, Pat Wells.

"She sits on it, stands on it, pulls the bedspread off.... She really understands that it was built for her," Mrs. Wells said.

Mindy, who is unable to speak and attends a school for handicapped children, suffers from a chromosomal disorder called "46 XX 4R," that affects about one child in a million. The disorder is a form of dwarfism, and the few known sufferers tend to be among the smallest dwarfs, said Dr. Luigi Luzzatti, director of a birth defects program at Stanford Medical Center.

Mindy uses a primitive sign language to communicate, and her mother says the girl understands much of what she hears.

"We don't know whether she'll ever be able to talk, but you can tell what she wants just by looking at her face," Mrs. Wells said. "And she studies peoples' faces, she reads people really good."

Mindy graduated from crib to bed three weeks ago, at the same time her parents moved into their new three-bedroom home in this community about 14 miles from Salinas in northern California.

Unable to convince their landlord to modify part of their rented house for Mindy, Pat and Mike Wells began thinking about buying a home last year.

But Wells, who operates a forklift seven months a year during lettuce season, could not qualify for a loan because of his seasonal earnings. Mrs. Wells has not been able to work since Mindy was born because the little girl requires full-time supervision.

But the Salinas Lions Club found a government-assisted mortgage program, "helped arrange papers and cut through some red tape," Mrs. Wells said.

Others have donated small furniture to match, and some well-wishers sent stuffed animals that loom over Mindy's tiny bed.

Mindy also has a tiny rocking chair made by a relative and lots of step-stools so she can reach normal-size furniture. "She's learning to adapt herself to larger things, and she'll try anything once," her mother said.

Donated liver flown across nation in effort to save infant

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Officials said a donated liver was being flown from Salt Lake City early today for 11-month-old Jamie Fiske, who doctors said would die within weeks if she doesn't get a transplant.

If the liver was found to be a match for Jamie, it would be transplanted immediately, said Mark Sands, a spokesman for the University of Utah Medical Center in Salt Lake.

The liver was taken Thursday night from the body of a brain-dead accident victim, Sands said.

A team of doctors from the University of Minnesota Hospitals and Clinics left Salt Lake City at about 4 a.m. EST in a leased jet. The flight was expected to take about three hours, Sands said.

The liver was removed in a three-hour operation that concluded at about 3 a.m., Sands said. It had to be transplanted within six hours of removal, he said.

To fit into the body of Jamie, who suffers from liver disease, the donated organ must come from a child who weighed 15 to 17 pounds. Also, the donor baby must not have been diseased and the blood type must match.

Jamie is the daughter of Charles and Marilyn Fiske of Bridgewater, Mass., and has waited at the Minneapolis hospital since Sept. 15 while a donor was sought. Fiske appeared before about 400 doctors at a New York meeting of the American Academy of Pediatrics late last month to describe the plight of his daughter, who suffers from biliary atresia.

He asked the doctors to "keep your eyes and ears open for the possibility of a donor for my daughter."

Fiske, reached at his home today before leaving for Minneapolis, said he knew little about the suitability of the donated liver, but called surgery "the only option Jamie has."

"One of the things we've never done is try to get involved in the medical decision-making," said Fiske, who is an administrator at the Boston University School of Medicine. "They (hospital officials) are the ones making the medical decisions."

Jamie was brought to Minneapolis after two operations for biliary atresia at Children's Hospital in Boston. Neither operation corrected the disease, in which bile backs up into the liver due to malfunctioning ducts.

Victims of the disease die from an inability to digest food, a buildup of toxins in the blood or clotting failure. The disease occurs once in 10,000 births and usually kills by the end of the first year. Jamie was born last Thanksgiving Day.

The parents of the Utah accident victim, whom Sands declined to identify, had seen news reports of Fiske's search for a donor, he said.

"Obviously, we're deeply grateful to the parents of this accident victim," he said. "The child was declared brain-dead and the parents requested that doctors check out the possibility of the donor request.

"Our Intermountain Transplant Center got involved and started checking and made arrangements for the Minneapolis team to get here," he said.

Sands declined to give any details on the donor's death. The child died in a Salt Lake City hospital, he said.

"The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 97/8% 1% loan to value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 147/8% for first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6months Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment, schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7-½ maximum increase can be more if the original loan principle exceeds +25%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATES 16 7/8%
