Flu arrives early

SAN ANTONIO — A particularly virulent influenza strain, diagnosed in a Central Texas child, is one of the nation's earliest appearances and could signal a rough flu season ahead, health officials said. The type-A flu strain, which normally appears in December, will be tested further by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta to determine whether a new vaccine is needed. "Every year, the first influenza strains found in the United States are looked at to see if they are similar to those protected against in the current vaccine," said Jeff Taylor of Austin, director of the Texas Department of Health's infectious diseases program. "Mid-September is very early for the influenza virus to be circulated."

Soviets top U.S. cuts

Gorbachev offers more nuclear reductions

■ The Soviet plan includes warhead destroying more warheads than require under the new strategic arms treaty.

By Serge Schmemann
N.Y. Times News Service

MOSCOW — Responding to President Bush's recent of sweeping cuts in nuclear arms, President Mikhail S. Gorbachev on Saturday announced the elimination or reduction of a range of tactical weapons based on land, sea, and air.

Gorbachev also announced that the Soviet Union would exceed the requirements of the latest strategic arms agreement, pledging to cut the number of Soviet strategic warheads within seven years to 5,000, instead of the 6,000 required by the new strategic arms treaty.

He said Soviet strategic bombers would stop being on ready-alert status, matching a move made by Bush. He also announced a halt in all nuclear testing for one year and a cut of 700,000 troops from the Soviet armed forces' total of about 3.7 million.

Announcing the moves in a late-evening televised address, Gorbachev said the measures also reflected the thinking of Boris N. Yeltsin, the president of the Russian republic, and the leaders of other republics.

Reflecting concerns that have arisen in the West and in the Soviet Union over future control of the Soviet nuclear arsenal as republics become increasingly independent, Gorbachev announced that all strategic weapons were being placed under one command and in a single branch of the armed forces.

Reading from a prepared announcement, Gorbachev said he had just spoken with Bush by telephone to

Bush: It's 'good news'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush said Saturday that Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev's announcement on nuclear arms reductions was "good news for the whole world." He said U.S. officials were sitting down to talk over details with their Soviet counterparts.

"It's very positive," Bush told reporters after talking with Gorbachev by telephone. "They've come a long way."

In response to Gorbachev's call for a superpower summit on arms control, Bush indicated he was amenable to the idea but that "there's work to do before we sit down at a summit."

Warbirds bring back memories

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

These are the times to remember both the good and the bad: the attack on Pearl Harbor and the end of isolationism, the Swing Era's big bands and Frank Sinatra, "My Buddy" and "I'll Be Seeing You," zoot suits and battle gear.

It was 1941.

America was ready for war ... and Midland, too.

And, this week, 50 years later, it is a time to commemorate and to celebrate.

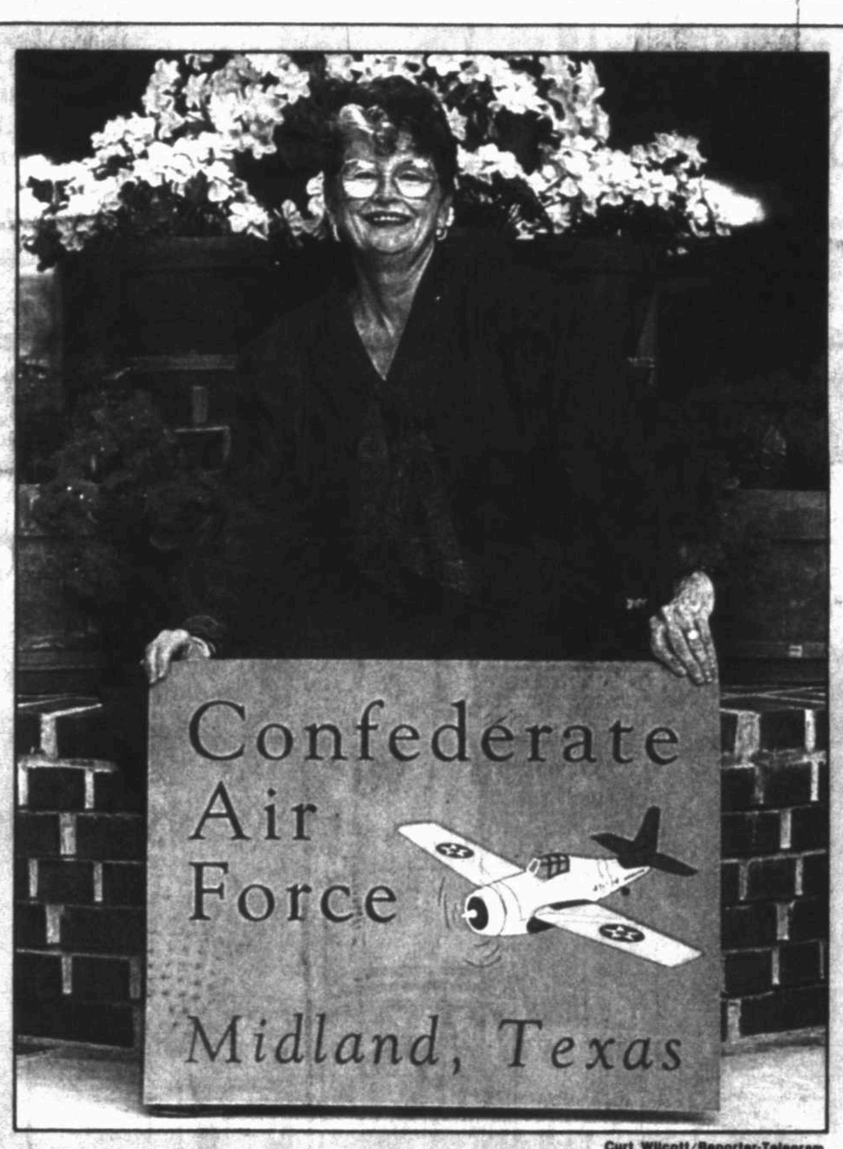

The Confederate Air Force's Airsho'91 will be held this Saturday and Sunday at Midland International Airport. Hours will be from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. both days.

Admission to the event is $8 for adults and $4 for children between the ages of 7 and 12.

The air-power demonstrations will re-enact the famous World War II air battles, including the Dec. 7, 1941, Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, the Battle of Britain, the Battle of Midway, the Battle of the Coral Sea, the D-Day Invasion, and selected other acts in leading up the Allies' victory in Europe and victory over Japan in defeating the Axis powers in 1945.

Midlander hopes to air CAF sign on TV

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

All Midlander Ann Estes needs now is a little luck.

As a visitor to Nashville Monday, Mrs. Estes is planning to publicize Midland and the Confederate Air Force on national television.

She's hoping to make a spontaneous appearance on "Nashville Now"to give the city and the CAF some publicity for the December opening of the group's headquarters and museum. Her only prop will be a brightly colored sign emblazoned with "Confederate Air Force — Midland, Texas."

Mrs. Estes and her husband, Russell, are in the country music capital attending a reunion of the 320th Bomber Group, an organization of several squadrons of World War II Air Force pilots. Appearing in the audience of the live television show is part of the reunion activities.

"On the show, the emcee goes into the audience and people can say hello to someone. Or if you're holding up a poster, he might ask you what it's about," Mrs. Estes explained. "I'm going to be holding mine up, way up."

Now comes the part about luck: she must be chosen out of the audience of hundreds.

Just in case she is asked to come forward, though, Mrs. Estes has her plug planned.

Officials seek out Milken's millions

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — While Michael R. Milken's lawyers and family wage a public campaign to overturn his conviction and restore his image, the federal government is still waging war against the former high-flying Wall Street innovator.

Federal authorities are pursuing a $6 billion civil suit against Milken, and say they are trying to track billions of dollars in assets that they believe he may have hidden away.

If they can trace the money, federal officials said, it could be used to repay investors who lost money in the savings and loan collapse.

Milken's attorneys say they have turned over records of all his holdings to the government. They say it is "ridiculous" to suggest that Milken has money or assets stashed in hidden accounts.

"We made a very full disclosure (of his holdings)," said Dan Murdock, a New York attorney who represents Milken's partnerships and his former accountant in a $6 billion suit brought by the federal government.

Murdock declined to disclose the value of assets held by Milken in the partnerships that are the focus of the federal court suit, terming the information "proprietary."

But he said it would be "very unusual and unnecessary" for the government to launch a search for suspected hidden assets.

Milken, a resident of suburban Encino who was the head of junk bond trading at the Wall Street firm of Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., pleaded guilty last year to six felony counts related to securities trading and paid $600 million in penalties.

He began serving a 10-year term in March at a prison near the Northern California city of Pleasanton. Since then, his family and lawyers have launched a public campaign on Milken's behalf.

Cityline Community Pulse

Medical advances are stretching the limits of life, but at what cost?

"Final Exit," a how-to book on suicide for the terminally ill raced up the national best seller charts this summer as fear of becoming a victim of life-prolonging medical technology has superceded the fear of death for many people.

So-called "living wills" — which anticipate and authorize family decision-making in such situations — are becoming more popular, but are by no means universal — and are especially rare in cases involving accidents.

Patients can be sustained with life support systems and respirators, but at some point should family members be authorized to suspend "heroic efforts" and allow those systems to be removed?

Tell us what you think. Call the CITYLINE COMMUNITY PULSE at 560-2400 and press 7655 when asked for your category number. You may also leave a comment, if you choose.

The COMMUNITY PULSE will remain open until midnight Wednesday and results of the poll will appear in Friday's edition.

Fire damages apartment units

Staff Report

Midland firefighters Saturday night battled a blaze at the Windscape Apartments, 3609 Caldera Blvd., that damaged at least four apartment units in Building 8 of the complex.

The apartment building is located just east of the intersection of Loop 250 and Midkiff Street and flames could be seen by persons driving on Loop 250 shortly after 8 p.m., witnesses said.

Police officers diverted traffic from the area.

"I called the fire department about 8 p.m.," said James Chase, 30, a resident of apartment 244 in Building 8.

"I think the fire started across from my apartment," Chase said. "I saw the smoke before I smelled it. It just came right through my wall."

Chase said the heat was so intense he noticed plastic melting before he vacated the apartment.

"My phone was hot," he said. "From what I can see, I've lost everything." Chase said he had no insurance to cover his loss.

Several firefighters entered the building through a second story patio while others used chainsaws to cut through the roof as smoke billowed around them.

Residents fled from their apartments quickly and there were no injuries, a fire fighter said.

Cause of the blaze was still under investigation at press time.

California condors begin return to freedom

LOS ANGELES (NYT) — Two young California condors will be released into an enclosure on a rugged clifftop in the Los Padres National Forest, the first to be freed under a program that pulled the ancient vultures from the brink of extinction.

Their return to the wild Thursday — four years after the last wild California condor was captured — marks a turning point in the captive-breeding program launched 10 years ago in a desperate attempt to save the endangered vulture.

"We're ecstatic about being in this position today, actually putting birds back out in the wild," said Michael Wallace, curator of birds at the Los Angeles Zoo and a longtime member of the Condor Recovery Project.

"It's a small start, but next year we're hoping for four to six birds to go out," Wallace said. "In four years or so, we're looking at having 15 to 20 birds out each year."

The two California condors headed for a new roost atop the Arundell Cliffs in the Sespe Mountains — in Ventura County — are closely linked to the land through their heritage, said Robert Mesta, condor program coordinator for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in Ventura.

Xewe — pronounced "gay-we" and meaning "To Cast A Shadow" — was fathered by AC-9, the last California condor to fly in freedom, Mesta said. Xewe was born April 8 at the Los Angeles Zoo.

"AC-9 was the last brought in from the wild, so it's almost a fitting tribute to him, for his trials and tribulations, that one of his offspring should be among the first to be released into the wild," Mesta said.

Chocuyens — meaning "Valley Of The Moon" — was hatched by AC-8, the last wild female condor captured, Mesta said. Chocuyens was born May 29 at the San Diego Wild Animal Park.

The birds now weigh about 20 pounds and have wingspans of almost 8 feet, about 80 percent of their full-grown size, Wallace said.

Shortly after sunrise Thursday, the two California condors — whose gender has not yet been determined — will be taken from an enclosure at the Los Angeles Zoo and placed in portable kennels like those used to transport pets by plane.

Two young Andean condors — rare but not endangered like their California cousins — will also be readied for the journey and will be released along with the California birds. The birds have been kept together for the last few months at the Los Angeles Zoo.

At the clifftop enclosure, the birds will be penned in until January, when they will be released to fly above the wilderness of the Sespe Condor Refuge, Mesta and Wallace said.

"It's really important that they get this social bond established," Mesta said. "We had to make sure that they were compatible, because the worst thing you could have would be a condor who was a social outcast."

Two helicopters will handle Thursday's operation, with each aircraft carrying one California condor, one Andean condor and two veterinarians, Mesta said.

"We're transporting them in separate helicopters, just in case of an emergency, so nothing could happen to both (California) birds," Mesta said.

Wallace said that even if something should happen to the two California condors, the breeding program is strong enough now that the species would survive the loss.

The California condor population has grown from 27 when AC-9 was captured in 1987 to 52 at present. To ensure a healthy and diverse gene pool, a decision was made to keep in captivity the first five offspring of each breeding pair of condors.

Xewe and Chocuyens are the sixth offspring of their respective parents, and thus were eligible for release, Mesta said.

As the condor population in the Sespe Condor Refuge is built up over the next few years, wildlife biologists will begin preparing a second condor habitat, possibly in the Grand Canyon, where California condors once flourished, Wallace said.

Andean condors, which scientists released and studied in the Los Padres National Forest in recent years, could be released in the Grand Canyon sometime next year, he said.

Of the six Andean condors that biologists had released in Ventura County, only two remain today, and they will be captured and returned to Columbia before the young California and Andean condors are allowed to fly from their enclosure in January.

Mesta estimated $25 million has been spent on condor-recovery efforts, including purchasing the land for the Sespe Condor Sanctuary.

Wallace cautioned against assuming that the California condor is saved from extinction simply because the birds are being returned to the wilderness.

The World

By Clyde Haberman
N.Y. Times News Service

JERUSALEM — Club-swinging police officers on horseback charged into surging crowds of ultra-Orthodox Jews on Saturday in the most severe clashes over Jewish religious sensibilities that this battle-tested city has experienced in several years.

Several thousand demonstrators, virtually all men in black hats and caftans, took to the streets in Jerusalem's Hasidic neighborhoods of Mea Shearim and Beit Israel to protest a new road that runs alongside their neighborhoods. Orthodox Jews are forbidden to drive on the Sabbath, and they regard the new thoroughfare as violating the sanctity of their observance of the holy day.

As the demonstrators' numbers grew, they knocked down police barricades in an attempt to march about 100 yards onto the multilane road. Dozens of regular police officers and paramilitary policemen charged back, including some on horseback who swung at demonstrators with their clubs. Some of the Hasidim retaliated with a barrage of stones, most of which landed ineffectually on the pavement.

Hasidic rabbis used morning services on Saturday to call on their congregations to protest, but appealed to them to avoid violence. Emotions spilled over nonetheless. Scuffles led to at least 10 arrests and a scattering of injuries on both sides. As the police waded into the crowds, they were greeted by taunts of "Nazis!" and "Anti-Semites!"

"You're a Jew — how can you do this to Jews?" shouted a bearded man, one of many wearing tan caftans and round fur hats.

The fighting added to tensions that were already running high in a city that, even at its calmest, is hardly a model of insouciance. Numerous violent demonstrations have taken place in years past over whether automobile traffic may pass through religious neighborhoods and whether movies may be shown on Friday nights.

The mass protest on Saturday by religious Jews became virtually predictable when national and local officials formally opened a new ribbon of highway earlier in the week. The road runs north to south, slicing through the city almost precisely along the so-called Green Line separating western Jerusalem from the eastern sector that Israel annexed after its victory in the 1967 Middle East War.

The purpose of the road is to connect the central city to northern neighborhoods and to the occupied West Bank, but it also enables Israeli motorists to race past Arab neighborhoods, where their cars have sometimes been stoned during the four years of the Palestinian uprising. In avoiding the Palestinian sections, however, they must now drive near ultra-Orthodox neighborhoods, where many people are prepared to defend their religious rights.

High walls were built at the edge of Mea Shearim and Beit Israel to help keep the offending traffic out of sight.

Fall feeling fills the air

Today's forecast is for clear skies with a high near 70 and winds from the east at 5-10 mph, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Tonight is predicted to be fair with a low in the mid-40s.

Monday's forecast is clear with a high in the mid-70s.

Saturday's high was 69, compared to the record high of 96, set in 1937. The record low for today's date is 38, set in 1970.

STATE

A cool front brought rain to South Texas when low temperatures mixed with hot air from the Gulf of Mexico Saturday. More than an inch fell as showers persisted all day.

Highs were in the 70s, 20 degrees lower than Friday's temperatures. Winds whipped the region at 30 mph.

West Texas had sunny skies with varied winds of up to 15 mph. Highs were near 70. Lows dipped to the upper 30s.

North Texas was cool and dry except for a few high clouds. North to northeasterly reached 15 mph. Gusty winds reached 20 mph in central and east North Texas.

Sunny skies are forecast for West Texas through Monday. Lows are expected in the 40s with highs in the 70s, reaching the mid-80s in the Big Bend river valleys.

NATION

Showers and thunderstorms developed along a cold front stretching from the Gulf Coast to the Mid-Atlantic states Saturday. Gale-force winds whipped through the Great Lakes region.

Showers associated with the same front also stretched over the Rio Grande Valley in Texas. Rain was reported through Florida and the Carolinas into Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

Heavier rainfall totals by midday included nearly 3 inches at Wilmington, N.C., and Monroe, La., 1½ inches at Jackson, Ky.

BUSH: Time for talking

(From 1A)

He declined to comment on specifics of Gorbachev's announcement Saturday, including whether he would be willing to reverse U.S. policy and join Gorbachev's one-year moratorium on nuclear testing.

"There's plenty of work to do between each side," he said, noting that a team of U.S. officials, led by Undersecretary of State Reginald Bartholomew, had arrived in Moscow Saturday to discuss the proposals by each side.

"We have some areas we need to iron out," he said when asked about the test-ban proposal.

Overall, however, he stated, "We feel this is very good news for the whole world."

People around the world, he said, were giving "a vote of gratitude to the Soviet leadership for their approach. ... I feel very good about it. I think something positive is happening in the world."

Bush made the comments upon returning to the White House from the presidential retreat at Camp David, Md., Saturday evening for a previously planned Italian-American dinner honoring his wife, Barbara.

On Gorbachev's call for a summit, Bush said, "At some point that's clearly in the cards, we'd be agreeable to that, but there's work to do before we sit down to another summit."

skies and on sea and land, the aircraft evoke sentiment, nostalgia, pride, patriotism and a historical perspective in many aviation buffs who view the rare and restored remnants from the past.

The CAF is dedicated to finding, restoring, maintaining and flying those rare and endangered combat airplanes from World War II.

Though mostly American, the CAF's Ghost Squadron of 150 warplanes includes other Allies' airplanes, notably British and Canadian, and some Axis powers aircraft, including German and Japanese warplanes.

Following this week's Airsho'91 festivities, the CAF and the American Airpower Heritage Museum (AAHM) in December will host the symposium, "Prelude to Pearl Harbor: The Interwar Years," from Dec. 3 through Dec. 6.

The CAF's International Headquarters at Midland International Airport will be dedicated on Dec. 7 to coincided with the 50th anniversary of the Japanese attack of Pearl Harbor in 1941.

And the CAF's "Tora! Tora! Tora!" aerial act, which portrays history's account of the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor on Dec. 7, 1941, will be re-enacted this Dec. 7 in Midland.

Prior to Airsho'91, revelry will be in vogue.

There will be dancing, singing, and merriment on Thursday night in a USO-style dinner dance in the CAF Hangar at Midland International Airport.

A parade of 1930s' and 1940s' civilian fashions and military dress will be staged by models on a runway at noon Friday in the Midland Holiday Inn.

Midland has much to celebrate in successfully luring the CAF and its museum to West Texas from the Rio Grande Valley where "the outfit" was founded in 1957.

"I think it (the CAF) will settle in fast," said Midland's Joe Mabee, the CAF's chief of staff and an ardent pilot and collector of restored World War II aircraft. "Everybody is comfortable. West Texas has got good, friendly people. I think the CAF people will work in very, very well out here."

And Midlanders have much to be proud of in their roles in rallying to "the cause" — to subdue the evils of war and to bring peace to the world by manning instruments of destruction: warring airplanes and other victory tools in the war.

Midland was home of Midland Army Air Field, the world's largest bombardier school. Its first class of cadets in 1942 had viewed themselves as "The Hell From Heaven Men."

Today, 46 years after the war's end and almost 50 years after the United States plunged into the world's most violent and destructive conflict, there is a return to remembrances of the war that brought unity to the nation and its people out of the Great Depression.

Some called it the "last good war" because it had tested the mettle of a nation and its people. The overall results were heroic even though the tragedy of shed blood caused unprecedented heartache and grief.

Camaraderie was at its zenith. There was harmony in effort.

For many Americans, the end of the war meant that good had triumphed over evil.

It was a time to celebrate.

That time has come again. Only, there is more to laud than the grand feat of bringing forth peace.

One prize is the Confederate Air Force, that enterprising outfit, so dubbed by its founder, Lloyd Nolen.

The 8,000-member CAF is dedicated to preserving, in flying conditions, examples of those great American airplanes, including trainers, fighters, and bombers, that play major roles in restoring peace to a world in turmoil.

"You can see the nostalgia building up," Mabee said. "I think it will get stronger and stronger."

"I grew up in World War II," said Mabee, a 60-year-old Midland rancher, oilman, aviator and philanthropist. "I could see and hear them (airplanes fly over.) We were all very patriotic in those days."

Following is a list of this week's activities. (Additional information on the events may be obtained by telephoning 685-0427.)

USO Dinner Dance

Thursday: USO-type (United Service Organizations-type) dinner dance in the one-acre CAF Hangar at Midland International Airport at 7 p.m. Dinner music will be provided by the Tommy Dorsey Orchestra, which will be playing Swing-Era songs, including some of those popularized by Tommy Dorsey and Frank Sinatra: "Daybreak," "Stardust," "Blue Skies," "I'll Be Seeing You," "Whispering," and "I'll Never Smile Again." Joining the band will Kay Starr, whose songs include "Wheel of Fortune" and "Side By Side," and a Sinatra-sounding crooner.

Per-couple ticket prices to the dinner-dance are $700, which includes Airsho'91 VIP benefits, and $250. Single admission is $125.

The CAF Hangar's World War II motif, keyed to the U.S. Army Air Corps, the U.S. Army Air Forces, and U.S. Navy, Marines and Coast Guard aviation, will include combat aircraft and trainers.

Runway Memories

Friday: Runway Memories. The 11:30 a.m. luncheon-style show in the Midland Holiday Inn will feature the music and fashion, both military and civilian, of the late 1930s and early 1940s. Tickets are $35 each. A sponsor's table, which will seat 10 people, is $500.

m

CAF Colonels

CAF members, colonels all, will hold a membership meeting in the CAF Hangar from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m.

A West Texas barbecue supper for Airsho'91 participants and hosts will be held at 6:30 p.m. under sponsorship of Schlumberger.

The Airsho'91

Saturday, Oct. 12, and Sunday, Oct. 13: The CAF's Airsho'91 begins at 10 a.m. and concludes at 4:30 p.m. both days at Midland International Airport. Gates open at 8:30 a.m. Tickets at the gate are $8 each for adults and $4 for children ages 6 through 12. Children under age 6 will be admitted free. Airsho'91 headquarters are at the CAF Headquarters just off Wright Drive in the northwest quadrant of Midland International Airport.

The more intense segments of the show will begin about noon both days when CAF "warbirds" will re-enact major World War II air battles. American, British, German and Japanese combat aircraft will be flying in the various stages of the show: The Battle of Britain; Claire Chennault's Flying Tigers; Pearl Harbor and the CAF's "Tora! Tora! Tora!" aerial-combat demonstration; Jimmy Doolittle's "Thirty Seconds Over Tokyo" raid; Battles of Midway, Coral Sea and Wake Island; Russian Front; Ploesti; Marianas Turkey Shoot; D-Day; Victory in Europe; Victory in Japan.

Aircraft in combat-like maneuvers are to include the P-40 Warhawk, the P-38 Lightning, the P-47 Thunderbolt, the P-51 Mustang, the P-39 Airacobra, the F4F Wildcat, F6F Hellcat, B-26 Marauder, the B-25 Mitchell, the F4U Corsair, the B-17 Flying Fortress, the B-24 Liberator, the B-29 Superfortress, the British Spitfire, replica aircraft (Zeros, Vals, Kates) of the Imperial Japanese Navy and a restored Mitsubishi A6M2 Zero, the German Messerschmitt Bf 109, the Heinkel He. 111 and other warplanes.

Special attractions both day are to include aerobatic pilot Julie Clark in her Beechcraft T-34 military trainer; Otto-the-Clown Helicopter; aerobatic sailplane pilot Steve Powell; a sky-diving act; and other aerial demonstrations.

At 4:30 p.m. Saturday, a "Western Stomp" barbecue and dance is to be held under sponsorship of Premier Travel.

A "Survivors Party" is set for 5 p.m. Sunday for Airsho'91 participants and hosts under sponsorship of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce.

MILKEN: Officals seek concealed accounts to national publications defending her son and complaining about prison conditions, saying he was not getting enough exercise or the proper nutrition.

Milken's newest lawyer, Harvard professor Alan Dershowitz, has been openly critical of the government's allegations against Milken — breaking an earlier precedent by Milken's lawyers who did their only talking in court.

"My style of approaching a case tends to be somewhat more confrontational and more aggressive," Dershowitz told reporters last month.

Dershowitz joined Milken's legal team in July to help with the appeal of his 10-year sentence and a variety of civil lawsuits against him.

Milken's lawyers also are fighting the bankruptcy settlement of his former employer, Drexel Burnham Lambert, which under its reorganization plan is trying to obtain money from Milken and others who the company says are liable to the firm.

Separately, Milken faces civil lawsuits in Los Angeles and New York filed on behalf of federal thrift regulators who blame him for billions in losses at dozens of savings and loans through allegedly fraudulent junk bond sales.

The $6 billion lawsuit filed in New York by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Resolution Trust Corporation targets a complex network of Milken partnerships, along with several of his former business associates.

The FDIC and RTC, charged with oversight of the savings and loan bailout, claim that Milken's marketing of junk bonds through the partnerships contributed to the failure of at least 53 financial institutions.

The government lawsuit, filed last January in federal court in New York, claims that Milken manipulated the market and distorted the value and marketability of high-yield junk bonds which were sold to the S&Ls.

The government claims that Milken, 22 former associates and 276 partnerships involving Milken participated in a massive scheme to sell fraudulent securities to 53 savings and loan institutions that later collapsed.

The government contends in its suit that the Milken partnerships, which also include trusts and corporations, were used to stash money obtained through "market manipulations" and other "fraudulent schemes and illegal conduct," including bribes, kickbacks, mail fraud and a pattern of racketeering.

The government contends Milken and his associates "orchestrated a systematic campaign of deception" designed to mislead the savings and loan institutions about the value of junk bonds marketed by Drexel.

While the lawsuit does not specify the value of losses suffered by the thrifts, it claims that the 53 institutions bought at least $21 billion in Drexel-marketed junk bonds between January 1982 and August 1989.

And while the suit also doesn't estimate the amount of Milken's holdings that might be used to pay restitution, federal authorities are said to be convinced that billions of dollars may have been stashed away in the partnerships, which were based primarily in California.

"Nobody really has a clue (how much money is out there)," one source said. "They have a little bit of a window into only a few of the partnerships. It's certainly billions of dollars. It could be $1 billion or it could be $12 billion. It's hundreds of millions of dollars at the very least."

Trial in the case is scheduled to begin in a year.

SIGN: Midlander pursues television time

federate Air Force is opening in Midland Dec. 7 and everyone's invited,' " she said.

The CAF provided Mrs. Estes with a brightly colored, hand-lettered sign and additional publicity information about the group.

"Nashville Now," which features country and western musicians, will air live Monday at 8 p.m. on the Nashville Network.

"I'm nervous," she said. "If you'd known me as a youngster you wouldn't believe I was going to do this."

It seems Estes is unsure about his wife's plan.

"He was talking to our daughter on the phone about it the other night, and he said, 'She's doing it. I'm not.' " She jokes that he may sit on the next row.

Luckily, Mrs. Estes has a fearless friend in the bomber group who has volunteered to help her hold up the sign. As a regular viewer of the program, she thinks she has a leg up on the competition.

Aiding in her ploy to get discovered, Mrs. Estes plans to sit near members of the bomber group who will have a large banner of their own.

"I love the show," she said. "I just feel like I've got an advantage. They can't help but notice my sign. I don't see how they can miss me, there'll be so many of us."

Although Nashville is the last stop on the couple's trip, Mrs. Estes said earlier it was the part she most anticipated.

The city famous for country music culture was part of an 11-state tour the couple had planned in advance of the bomber group reunion. They met the bomber reunion in Louisville, Ky. and took an extended trip with other members to Nashville.

Traveling is one of the Esteses' loves, and they go almost everywhere by car. Mrs. Estes keeps a diary of each trip, including scenery, historic places and vital information. When she returns home, she types the notes and files them in specially marked folders.

"Every year we go someplace," she said. "I've been to every state except Hawaii and Florida, and we're going to Florida sometime soon."

The annual bomber group reunions, held in a different part of the country each year, are always enjoyable, Mrs. Estes said.

"We see all these friends, we just love it," she said. And a television appearance?

"Well, that would be fun, too," Mrs. Estes said.

ARMS: Soviets unwrap nuclear weapons cuts

outline Moscow reciprocal steps. "We had a good exchange of views," he said. "From the side of the president of the U.S.A., I heard a positive assessment of our proposals and satisfaction with our approach to the resolution of the most important problem of world politics."

The major package of steps announced by Gorbachev, as by Bush, dealt with tactical weapons, whose broad distribution among virtually all Soviet republics has made them the more immediate object of concern. Gorbachev announced the following reductions in tactical weapons:

—All nuclear artillery shells and nuclear warheads for tactical rockets, as well as all nuclear mines, will be destroyed.

—Nuclear warheads will be withdrawn from anti-aircraft missiles and collected at central bases, and some will be destroyed.

—All tactical nuclear weapons will be withdrawn from ships, submarines, and land-based naval aviation, and stored in centralized locations. Some will be destroyed.

"Thus, on the basis of matching actions by the Soviet Union and the U.S.A., radical measures are being taken that lead to the liquidation of tactical nuclear weapons," Gorbachev said.

Pressing beyond Bush's initiative, Gorbachev proposed that both sides eliminate all naval tactical nuclear weapons, presumably including those based on land, and that both sides withdraw all nuclear weapons from forward-based tactical aviation to central storage depots.

The American initiative proposed to maintain these latter weapons.

(Story may end here; additional material follows.)

Gorbachev also called on other nuclear powers to join the American-Soviet initiatives.

He said he agreed with Bush about the need for a quick ratification of the treaty limiting strategic offensive weapons. In response to the American initiatives in this area, Gorbachev said the Soviet Union would undertake these steps:

—The Soviet Union will join the United States in taking its long-range bombers off alert status, by which they were kept loaded with nuclear weapons and ready for immediate take-off, and in putting their nuclear weapons in storage.

—The Soviets will stop modernizing short-range nuclear missiles for heavy bombers, as well as mobile, low-yield intercontinental ballistic missiles, or ICBMs.

Croatian president issues call to arms

ZAGREB, Yugoslavia (AP) — Croatia's president issued a desperate call to arms Saturday after the secessionist republic and federal forces failed to agree on a truce during a day of raging battle across the republic.

President Franjo Tudjman in a broadcast shortly before midnight urged all Croatians to "fulfill their sacred duty" and join in Croatia's defense, saying Serbians had launched an all-out attack on his secessionist republic.

"This requires us to mobilize all our forces for the defensive war," Tudjman said.

He appealed to all Croatians owning weapons to report voluntarily to the Croatian defense forces.

Witnesses said roadblocks were being erected in Zagreb, and the Croatian capital fell under darkness of a blackout for the second straight night.

Earlier Saturday, federal troops advanced on the Adriatic port of Dubrovnik and redoubled efforts to seize Croatian strongholds in the east of the republic, where hundreds have died since independence was declared on June 25.

Meanwhile, the four pro-Serb members of Yugoslavia's eight-member federal presidency who have taken control of the government ordered special military courts to deal harshly with any draft-dodgers or other offenders against the army.

Serbia's ruling Socialist Party also appealed to all Serbs to join federal forces, whose ranks have been depleted by desertion.

Federal Defense Minister Gen. Veljko Kadijevic and Tudjman failed to agree Saturday on the implementation of a cease-fire worked out Friday by the European Community and Yugoslav leaders.

Kadijevic appeared to insist that the Croats first lift their blockade of federal garrisons, according to the Croatian news agency HINA. Tudjman reiterated his desire for a simultaneous cease-fire, but accepted Kadijevic's offer of a meeting in Sarajevo on Monday to discuss details.

Indonesian military plane crashes killing all aboard

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — A military transport plane crashed shortly after takeoff Saturday, killing all 132 people aboard and at least one guard at a government building destroyed by the flaming wreckage, officials said.

The C-130 Hercules plane was carrying airmen who had just participated in an Armed Forces Day ceremony, said a military statement.

The plane exploded and plowed into a Department of Labor training center. A rescue official said a security guard was killed, but it was not immediately known if anyone else was in the building.

The four-engine turboprop aircraft, carrying 120 passengers and a crew of 12, was bound for Bandung, about 75 miles southeast of Jakarta, said a rescue official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The official said one of the plane's engines caught fire right after takeoff and another engine failed. The official government announcement said the cause of the crash was being investigated.

Witnesses said wreckage was scattered 1,500 feet from the crash site, about two miles south of a military airfield.

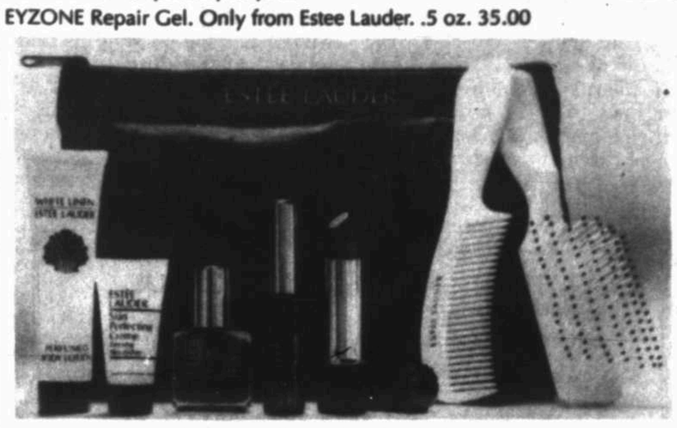

Emergency crews put bodies in brown bags. One worker, speaking on condition of anonymity, said many of the bodies were badly mutilated.

A doctor at an army hospital said the pilot, identified as Maj. Samsul Ilham, was brought to the hospital alive but badly burned. He died a short time later, said the doctor, who also spoke on condition of anonymity.

Aristide may be allowed to return, general says

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Haiti's army chief on Saturday held out the possibility of President Jean-Bertrand Aristide's return to power if the army received unspecified guarantees.

Brig. Gen. Raoul Cedras also claimed to be confident the week-old crisis caused by Aristide's ouster in a military coup Monday could be solved soon, saying the U.S. ambassador was helping.

However, confusion arose later when the Army High Command issued a statement that seemed to contradict Cedras.

"Aristide's return is not negotiable," said the statement released on state-run radio. "It is a serious rumor that has angered the whole army."

The army statement came hours after Cedras summoned foreign journalists to army headquarters to discuss his position on meetings he held Friday and Saturday with envoys of the Organization of American States.

A member of the OAS team, Foreign Minister Guido di Tella of Argentina, said he held out "great hope" of a peaceful solution. However, he said outside military intervention could not be ruled out to return Haiti's first freely elected president to power.

Cedras complained that some of the diplomats were exerting too much pressure to reverse the week-old coup, accusing them of overstepping their diplomatic mission.

Asked if he was referring to U.S. Ambassador Alvin Adams, who is known to have a close relationship with Aristide, Cedras: "I think Ambassador Adams is a wise man ... who is helping us now to find a solution to the crisis."

Cedras also indicated that Aristide might be allowed to return as president under special circumstances.

"If he would now return, it would be after a consensus by all sectors of the country," Cedras said. "There would have to be guarantees from one sector to another."

He did not say what sectors he had in mind, but presumably he was referring to military, political and business leaders.

There is widespread hostility to him among business leaders and in the National Assembly, and some observers speculated that Cedras may believe they could never reach a consensus over Aristide's return.

Many legislators have accused Aristide of going beyond his constitutional authority, and business has alway been wary of what they see as his socialist agenda.

"I'm in favor of Aristide's return provided he be put in a constitutional straitjacket," said Jean-Claude Roy, a center-left politician.

Cedras said he was "confident" a solution could be found, but played down the army's role in finding it. "This is not for the army to decide," he said.

In a subsequent denial that any negotiations were under way, the Army High Command accused Aristide supporters of spreading rumors. The contradiction with Cedras could indicate a split within the military hierarchy.

Earlier Saturday, Prime Minister Rene Preval, who was appointed by Aristide, and members of Preval's Cabinet emerged from hiding for talks with the OAS mission and Cedras.

The OAS has called on all organization members to cut trade, financial, military and diplomatic ties with Haiti.

At his news conference, Cedras repeated his contention that the army had not taken over government.

"That is why when they say there was a coup d'etat, I say, no it wasn't. It is a correction to the democratic process," he said.

Smith, accuser have problems, doctor says

The Nation

MIAMI (AP) — Both William Kennedy Smith and the woman who claims he raped her are emotionally insecure, and Smith may be "sexually dysfunctional," according to a psychologist hired to evaluate the woman.

Those emotional problems likely have colored their perceptions of the Easter weekend incident, David Rothenberg told The Miami Herald in a story published Saturday.

"They are both victims of an emotionally deprived and depressed childhood," said Rothenberg, a veteran trial witness who was asked by defense attorney Roy Black to review the woman's statements to police.

His assessment backed up a 24-page defense filing that argued the 30-year-old woman made up the rape story because of a history of sexual, physical and emotional abuse.

Rothenberg said he basically agrees with the defense document, but he said the woman appeared sincere.

"I'm sure she thinks she's telling the truth. My question is, whose truth?" Rothenberg said. The sexual interlude with Smith, he said, probably brought back "echoes" of being sexually assaulted as a child.

"Then with Willie, she has this pleasurable experience and realized she's not supposed to be enjoying sex," he said. "So the way she disavows this feeling of pleasure is projecting Willie's image on the image of the man who abused her. Willie then becomes the man who assaulted her."

Smith, nephew of Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., met the woman at a Palm Beach nightclub March 30. They drove to the Kennedy estate, where she says he tackled and raped her on the lawn behind the mansion.

Defense attorneys present Smith as an earnest young doctor, but Rothenberg said Smith also has problems.

Smith is a loner, Rothenberg said, an underachiever in a superstar family who is "content to linger in the shadows." Emotional insecurities may have prevented Smith from performing sexually, leaving him "sexually dysfunctional."

The poor self-images shared by Smith and his accuser explain why the pair were initially attracted to each other, Rothenberg said.

Italian-American group presents award to Barbara Bush

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Italian-American Foundation at its annual dinner Saturday presented first lady Barbara Bush with its lifetime achievement award for humanitarian service.

Rep. Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., who chaired the black-tie event attended by some 3,000 prominent Italian-Americans, said Mrs. Bush was "the unsurpassed leader on literacy in America and indeed the world. ... She is an inspiration to our country."

Mrs. Bush, who attended the dinner with President Bush, has been an active promoter of literacy since entering the White House.

Among others at the dinner were actors Sylvester Stallone and Ernest Borgnine, comedians Dom DeLuise and Joe Piscopo, Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia, former Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro, Palm Springs Mayor Sonny Bono, NFL Commissioner Paul Tagliabue and Italian Foreign Minister Gianni De Michelis.

Stallone, Tagliabue and De Michelis also received awards from the foundation.

Mrs. Bush spoke of the importance of family values, referring to the movie "Moonstruck" and its final scene where the Italian family sat around a table and toasted family life. "Well, we Bushes feel the same way."

Airline doesn't let wheelchair-bound man on board

■ For the second time in two months, handicapped Bush assistant denied by commuter airline.

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — For the second time in two months, a commuter airline affiliated with Northwest Airlines has refused to let a member of a presidential committee board because he uses a wheelchair.

Rick Douglas, executive director of the President's Committee on the Employment of People with Disabilities, said Friday that he was blocked from boarding a commuter aircraft in Manchester, N.H., on Thursday night.

Douglas, who has multiple sclerosis, said he was told by the employees of Precision Airlines that he could not get on the plane unless he could walk.

Officials of the airline acknowledged that Douglas was barred from the aircraft, but said they were required to do so by federal law.

"If you can't walk up and down the stairs, you are a danger to yourself and a safety hazard," Douglas quoted the airplane's pilot, Ernest Marino, as having said.

Douglas was trying to fly to Boston to connect with a Northwest Airlines flight to Washington. Instead, he flew by United Airlines, although this flight arrived at Dulles Airport, in suburban Virginia, rather than National Airport close to downtown Washington.

"I'm still stunned," Douglas said.

In August, Justin Dart, chairman of the president's committee on disabilities, and an assistant were barred from a commuter flight operated by Masaba Airlines in Minneapolis.

In both cases, the commuter airlines were operating under the name Northwest Airlink and had agreements with Northwest Airlines to provide service between small airports and larger regional hubs.

John Gallichon, executive vice president of Precision Airlines, said by telephone from his company's headquarters in Manchester that federal law forbids airline personnel from carrying a disabled person by hand onto an aircraft that seats 30 passengers or fewer.

He added many commuter aircraft are boarded by way of a stairway built into the door that often cannot support more than one person.

But Gallichon appears to be misinterpreting a federal law that forbids commercial airlines from refusing to fly people with physical and mental disabilities, said Diana Lundie, director of industry activities for the Regional Airline Association, a trade group for commuter airlines.

While the law does not require that disabled passengers be carried onto aircraft that fly 30 passengers or fewer, neither does the law forbid such assistance, she said.

The exception for the smaller aircraft stands only until hydraulic lifts and wheelchairs that can fit on smaller planes become commercially available.

The aircraft that Douglas sought to board was a Dornier 228, which seats 19 passengers. More than two-thirds of the 1,917 commuter aircraft flown in the United States last year carry fewer than 30 passengers, according to the Regional Airline Association.

House backers forsee battle on family leave bill

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — House supporters of a bill that would grant many workers unpaid leaves for family emergencies say the Senate's overwhelming approval of the measure last week will strengthen their cause. But they still foresee an uphill struggle to pass a veto-proof version of their own.

The House proponents say they are sure they can improve on the 237-to-187 vote that passed a similar bill last year, a margin that fell far short of the two-thirds approval necessary to override a veto. To attract more votes, they say, they will adopt compromises reached in the Senate that decreased the number of part-time workers and senior-level employees covered by the leave benefit.

The bill would require employers of more than 50 workers to grant their employees up to 12 weeks of unpaid leave a year for the adoption or birth of a child or for a serious illness suffered by the employee or an immediate family member. Workers would be guaranteed their jobs back upon returning to work.

The legislation, which would cover 46 million people and is vigorously opposed by business groups, is to come before the full House in two or three weeks. The Senate passed the compromise measure on Wednesday, 65 to 32, with three Democratic supporters absent, but President Bush has said he planned to veto the measure, just as he vetoed last year's bill.

House Democrats have been savoring the uncomfortable position that their Republican colleagues were left in by the president's promise of a veto. They said that while Bush might be able to withstand political damage caused by opposing abortion rights, increased unemployment benefits, and family leaves, Republican members would be forced to take the brunt of their constituents' ire if they continued to back the president.

"The president is losing some of his soldiers on this one," said Rep. Pat Williams, a Montana Democrat who is chairman of the House Education and Labor Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations. Still, he expressed doubt that the House could pass the Senate version by a veto-proof margin.

Williams said he and other supporters of the legislation would try to work with the White House and Republican lawmakers "to determine whether or not we can pass a bill and get a presidential signature."

Rep. Marge Roukema, of New Jersey, the most active House Republican supporter of the legislation, said the margin of the Senate victory would "send a powerful message to the rank and file here." But she added that while her rough estimate of the current House vote spread was more favorable than last year's tally, "it's not good enough."

"We still have to do an education job on why the business community has no legitimate complaint and why you can't keep saying no to American working families," she added.

Ms. Roukema suggested that Bush still might eventually drop his opposition to the family-leave bill without major modifications, but Marlin Fitzwater, the White House spokesman, put a damper on such hopes by insisting that businesses should not be forced by law to provide the benefits.

Fitzwater dismissed the bill as a partisan Democratic effort to make Bush look insensitive to the needs of families, although 15 Republican Senators voted to pass it. "This bill points up very dramatically the kind of political season that is upon us here," he said.

Sen. Christopher J. Dodd, the Connecticut Democrat who is the principal sponsor of the legislation in the Senate, is seeking a compromise with the White House despite Fitzwater's comments, according to a Senate aide.

Supreme Court's docket offers little chance to overturn precedents

By Dan Freedman
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — The curtain rises on the Supreme Court's 1991-1992 term this Monday with another justice poised to join the court's conservative majority that, for now, faces a docket that provides few chances to overturn liberal precedents.

On Tuesday, the Senate is expected to confirm federal appeals court Judge Clarence Thomas, a conservative who will become the nation's second black justice. Critics and some supporters say Thomas will vote with Chief Justice William Rehnquist and the five other conservative justices, further cementing their iron grip on the high court.

Thomas would replace the nation's first black justice, Thurgood Marshall, who stepped down after 24 terms as the last of the liberals who dominated the court of Chief Justice Earl Warren in the 1960s.

Before announcing his retirement on June 27, Marshall issued a stern warning that the court's growing conservative majority is threatening to extinguish as many as 17 precedents, including the court's Roe v. Wade decision legalizing abortion.

"Power, not reason, is the new currency of this court's decision-making," Marshall wrote in a dissent against six conservatives who that day had overturned two liberal death-penalty precedents.

But the court's docket early in the term shows that the justices will have few opportunities to remake the legal landscape.

For example, the only abortion case on the docket so far deals with whether women can use federal civil rights laws to obtain injunctions against demonstrators who block the doors of abortion clinics.

Lower courts upheld patients and workers at the Alexandria, Va., Women's Health Clinic in their effort to prove the demonstrators were guilty of "invidious discrimination" against women.

However, a direct challenge to Roe v. Wade is looming on the horizon. One case now working its way through the federal appeals court involves a Pennsylvania law requiring among other things that women contemplating abortions notify their male partners. This case could come before the high court later this year.

Next year, the court might consider cases from Guam, Louisiana and Utah, all stemming from laws banning abortion except in cases of rape or incest or when a woman's life is at stake.

Steven Shapiro, who supervises Supreme Court litigation for the American Civil Liberties Union, said of the upcoming term, "We know this court is chipping away at civil liberties. But what remains to be seen is how fast the chips will fly out of the foundation of constitutional law."

Another perspective on the new term came from conservative legal scholar Bruce Fein who said the current court " will behave no differently than the Warren court in terms of precedents breached rather than honored, but I don't see anything necessarily wrong with that."

Ironically, Marshall's retirement buttressed the conservative wing by giving President Bush the opportunity to nominate Thomas, a black conservative appeals court judge. Only Justice Harry Blackmun, 82, and 71-year-old Justice John Paul Stevens, both GOP appointees, are left to hold down the once-dominant liberal wing.

FDA panel votes against home Pap test

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Food and Drug Administration advisory panel has recommended against approval of a home test kit designed to detect cervical cancer.

The panel of experts voted 4-2 Friday against approval because they said the study data on the test showed an unacceptably high rate of false negative results, said FDA spokeswoman Susan Cruzan.

But she said the panel encouraged the manufacturer of the Pap test to try to improve the product and continue its studies.

The FDA often seeks an independent panel's advice before acting on new products, but the advisory panels' decisions are never binding.

The test pack, made by Medtech Inc., of Bohemia, N.Y., includes an instrument which a woman would use to take a sample of her cervix tissue to be sent to a laboratory for analysis.

It was designed for women who don't have regular access to a physician. The two panel members who recommend approval wanted to restrict its use to women in that category, theorizing that it was better than nothing, but said it should not replace examination by a doctor for women who get regular medical care.

Senate panel head appreciates Gates' role as 'team player'

By Ruth Sinai
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Robert Gates' past is at once his greatest asset and greatest handicap.

He owes his mercurial rise and achievement at the CIA to the late William Casey. But to win Senate confirmation as director of the CIA, Gates had to put as much distance as possible between himself and his mentor's controversial legacies, especially Casey's contempt for Congress.

And he had to convince legislators that he has grown from a consummate subordinate to an independent director capable of leading the U.S. intelligence community.

"We have to make a decision as to whether or not Mr. Gates, who has been quintessentially a staff person, is capable of making that very large step," said Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., whose Senate Intelligence Committee concluded three weeks of turbulent confirmation hearings on Friday.

The committee will take two weeks to mull over all it has heard from critics and supporters, but Gates is expected to be confirmed barring some explosive disclosure between now and the Oct. 18 vote.

Gates had "a staff member's attitude as opposed to a whistleblower's approach," Boren said, referring to the nominee's failure to probe indications of wrongdoing in the Iran-Contra affair.

But it is Gates' record as a "staff person" and team player that made him attractive to Boren, too.

Boren described himself as one traumatized by the Iran-Contra affair, in which the White House — aided by the CIA — diverted money from arms sales to Iran to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua despite a congressional ban.

The scandal broke just as Boren was assuming the chairmanship of the intelligence committee in November 1986. Shortly before, Gates had also gotten a new job — acting director of the CIA to replace Casey, who had fallen ill with a fatal brain tumor.

Boren, determined to probe the scandal and ensure such a breach of trust between Congress and the CIA never recurred, turned to Gates.

"And I can tell this committee, there was no single person in the intelligence community, without exception, that supported the efforts of this committee to get access to information ... (more) than the nominee," said Boren.

The next CIA director, Boren said, must be someone "who believes in the oversight process and understands that it is at the core of effective checks by the people themselves on what the most secret agencies of government are doing."

Not stated but strongly implied was that the next director must be someone totally unlike Casey, viewed by many on Capitol Hill as the most obstructionist CIA director in recent memory — one who misled Congress about the Iran-Contra diversion and allowed his strong anti-Soviet views to cloud intelligence reporting to Congress.

Gates was his protege. Soon after Casey took over the agency in 1981, Gates was brought to his attention as a bright analyst and skillful organizer. And within less than a year, he catapulted the 39-year-old Gates above the heads of dozens more senior to place him in the agency's fourth-ranking job as director of all analysis operations.

The next year, Gates was given an additional portfolio: chairman of the National Intelligence Council, which writes intelligence analysis for the president. And in 1986, Casey named him as deputy CIA director.

In his own testimony, Gates has underscored his record of cooperation with the committee and promised that if confirmed he would maintain and strengthen that relationship. He also went out of his way to distance himself from Casey.

The nominee made it clear that rather than confronting Casey when he thought he was wrong, he tried to fix his mistakes.

Under questioning from Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., Gates conceded he thought Casey's strong opinions about the Soviet threat had contributed to an impression that intelligence analysis was being slanted.

"Did you ever express concern to Casey that he should be careful?" pressed Bradley.

"I told him several times that he should make sure analysts' views are reflected ...," Gates answered.

Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., said Gates is tainted both by his past ties to Casey and his current close ties to President Bush, whom he has served as deputy national security adviser since 1989.

"You did too good a job for Bill Casey and it's felt keenly" at the CIA, Hollings said. "And that crowd over there (at the White House) — (chief of staff John) Sununu, the president, and everybody else — thinks they own you."

Dallas police test pepper grenades, tear gas bullets

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas police are considering new non-lethal weapons that officers can use against dangerous or suicidal people without having to engage in hand-to-hand fighting or use their firearms.

Dallas Police Chief Bill Rathburn announced the proposal Friday at a meeting with Hispanic leaders. The non-lethal weapons include a cayenne-pepper grenade and a gun that fires tear gas-filled cylinders to knock down suspects and temporarily blind them.

The meeting was called by some Hispanic leaders after Dallas officers last week shot a Hispanic man who was wielding a machete.

Rathburn promised the group that his department is committed to finding weapons for officers to use as alternatives to pistols.

Monday, officers shot and seriously wounded George Buckaloo as he allegedly charged at them with an 18-inch machete. Buckaloo's relatives said they believed that the 40-year-old man was suicidal but did not pose a threat to others.

Rathburn's meeting focused on the need for alternative weapons in such confrontations, said Michael Gonzales, president of the Hispanic Citizens Council.

"We don't expect officers to stand there and get their heads cut off," Gonzales said. "We just want the officers to have something to use other than their nine millimeters," the department's standard pistol, he said.

"We talked about alternatives like the Taser or a new chemical," Rathburn said after the meeting. "We want to find a system that can be a very effective deadly force alternative."

The Taser gun, which fires a dart at the suspect and then delivers an electrical charge through a hair-thin wire, is politically unpopular right now, the chief said.

In the videotaped beating of motorist Rodney King by Los Angeles police last March, one of the officers used such a weapon to keep King down while other officers beat him, reports said.

Dallas police bought Taser guns several years ago under former police Chief Mack Vines, but the guns were never issued for testing and remain in storage, officials said.

Several of the department's units are testing a new tear gas called Cap-Stun, a chemical irritant made of cayenne pepper. Unlike regular tear gas, which lingers for hours and has numerous side effects, Cap-Stun dissipates in about 20 minutes and can be washed off with water.

"We used it on a barricaded person a couple weeks ago," said tactical unit commander Capt. Doug Kowalski. "Within 30 seconds he came out covered with the stuff, and he didn't much care for it."

State board places doctor on probation

AUSTIN (AP) — A state school doctor has been placed on five years probation for failing to follow proper medical procedures in the case of a mentally retarded man who eventually went blind.

Dr. Kiran Parikh, 38, a pediatrician at Richmond State School, was placed on five years' probation by the Texas State Board of Medical Examiners and ordered to enroll in 50 hours of continuing medical education, the Austin American-Statesman reported Saturday.

The medical board's order says Parikh "demonstrated extremely poor documentation and charting" for the patient. She also "failed to refer patient to an ophthalmologist in a timely fashion," the order said.

However, Richmond State School Superintendent Gerry Brunette said Parikh will remain on staff because she is an excellent doctor.

"We feel like Dr. Parikh is an outstanding physician who has a great deal of empathy for the people we work with and a great deal of competency," he said.

The case about the patient's care is also the focus in a whistleblower's lawsuit against the state.

Nora Longoria, a former investigator in the Texas attorney general's Medicaid Fraud Unit, says her boss barred her from interviewing the doctors in the Richmond State School case.

The unidentified patient cannot talk or walk. He lives in the facility's infirmary because of multiple health problems, officials said.

Ms. Longoria says she was fired last year after questioning practices in the Medicaid Fraud Unit, including the quick end to the Richmond investigation.

The fraud unit was contacted by the blind man's father, Ms. Longoria said.

Feds reject Houston council districts

HOUSTON (AP) — The U.S. Justice Department has rejected Houston's proposed City Council election boundaries on grounds they are unfair to Hispanics.

The ruling, which occurred Friday and said the city apparently drew the district maps to protect white incumbents, throws the Nov. 5 city elections into a legal whirlwind, the Houston Chronicle reported Saturday.

The Southwest Voter Registration Education Project coordinated a protest to the federal government about the city's approach to redistricting.

"It's sweet. Very Sweet," said Lisa Hernandez, executive director of the Houston office of the Southwest Voter Registration Education Project. "Latinos knew all along that the plan proposed by the city was discriminatory toward our community," she said.

While the decision doesn't automatically stop the election, it does set the stage for Hispanic voter advocates to seek a court order that delays the voting until the boundaries are redrawn.

The Justice Department, which reviews election plans in several states under the Voting Rights Act, essentially agreed with Hispanic activists that Hispanics should make up the population majority in a second council district.

City Attorney Clarence West and Steve Bickerstaff, an Austin lawyer hired by the city to defend its proposed boundaries, contended no one has devised a plan that would create two majority-Hispanic districts within legal constraints.

The city . . . can appeal the ruling to the Justice Department or federal court, postpone the entire election until districts are redrawn or hold the entire election using 1989 maps — and risk that the results will be voided by a federal judge.

The lawyers said they will meet with the City Council early next week to decide the next step.

The city might conduct elections for mayor, controller and the five at-large council seats on schedule and delay filling the nine district seats, Bickerstaff said.

The city, however, has several other alternatives. It can appeal the ruling to the Justice Department or federal court, postpone the entire election until districts are redrawn or hold the entire election using 1989 maps — and risk that the results will be voided by a federal judge.

"The foremost concern of the city at this point is to minimize the confusion of the voters and minimize the inconvenience of the voters," Bickerstaff told the Chronicle.

Mayor Kathy Whitmire said the city will work with the federal agency to resolve its objections.

Hispanic activists, however, said that unless the city agrees immediately to reconfigure the districts, they will probably go to court Monday seeking a halt on balloting in any municipal contest.

The first and only Hispanic on the council is Ben Reyes, whose District I runs from downtown through Houston's east end. He was elected in 1979.

The Justice Department ruling, announced in a letter to city officials from Civil Rights Division chief John R. Dunne, notes Houston's Hispanic population has risen from 17.6 percent of the city to 27.6 percent since 1980.

The population shift, however, "does not appear to have been reflected in any significant increase in the past decade in the opportunity of Hispanic voters to elect candidates of their choice to the City Council," Dunne wrote.

Besides Reyes, the council is made up of five blacks, eight whites and Whitmire, a white.

Texas sets bungee insurance

AUSTIN (AP) — State insurance regulators have designated bungee jumps as amusement rides that must have $1 million in liability insurance coverage and pass annual safety inspections.

PARENTING TEENS SEMINAR

Conducted by GARY GRADY, D. Min.
Minister of Family Life of the Golf Course Road Church of Christ.
Survivor of his daughters' teen years.

Adolescence may not be an illness but it can certainly be a period of storm and stress. This seminar is designed to help parents understand WHY that is true and WHAT they can do about it. Barriers to good parent-teen relationships will be discussed as well as the opportunities that the teen years bring to families.

September was too close to call.

The entire staff of associates at the Hilton has made an extraordinary thing happen.

Based on guests' comment cards in August, we have exceeded Hilton Hotel Corporation's high performance standards in 36 of 47 categories.

We rated higher than Hilton's national average in 77% of these important areas of customer satisfaction: courtesy, cleanliness, prompt service, value, check-out efficiency, and others.

Our two-year association with Medallion Hotels, Inc. has resulted in a newly renovated hotel and a newly rejuvenated attitude. We couldn't be prouder.

Jury convicts ex-FBI translator

HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston federal jury has convicted a former FBI translator of passing government secrets about a Chinese spy to the Taiwan government in what he claims was his own anti-Communist campaign.

Douglas Tsou, 67, told jurors in U.S. District Judge Lynn Hughes' court that he exposed a Red Chinese spy, code-named "Gatemaster," who had turned himself in to U.S. authorities, because he feared the man was still working for the Communists.

Jurors deliberated about 90 minutes Friday before convicting Tsou.

He faces up to 10 years in prison and a $250,000 fine when he is sentenced by Hughes on Jan. 21.

Tsou, a Chinese native who fled to Taiwan after the Communist invasion in 1949, worked as a Chinese translator for the FBI from 1980 to 1986, serving first in San Francisco and later in Houston. A naturalized U.S. citizen, Tsou spent his FBI career working in foreign counterintelligence — the monitoring of spies working in the United States.

He was fired after the agency learned that a letter revealing classified information had been sent in March 1986 to Yu-chu Chen, who then headed the Houston office of the Coordination Council for North American Affairs, the unofficial representative of Taiwan's interests in the United States.

The United States does not recognize Taiwan as a separate country.

Defense attorney George J. Parnham said Tsou admitted mailing the letter, but argued that the information was not classified.

"There's no question that he sent this letter. But what we are in disagreement about is his intent," Parnham told the seven-woman, five-man jury. "He did not intend to violate the law by passing classified information affecting the security of the United States."

But prosecutors said the letter represented "the tip of the iceberg" of what Tsou gave Taiwanese officials during his FBI tenure.

Texas A&M names investigation team

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Texas A&M University has appointed a eight-member team to investigate sexual discrimination charges leveled against its Corps of Cadets.

The panel includes three administrators, two professors, two students and a co-chairman who is a psychologist in private practice in the Bryan-College Station area.

The Corps has been under fire since a female cadet charged two weeks ago that she was assaulted by three cavalry unit members who threatened her with further injury unless she withdrew an application to join the units.

In the aftermath, four more women came forward to allege that such harassment of women by male Corps members is rampant, and President William Mobley called for an investigation.

Braves are West's best

Atlanta clinched its third divisional title in franchise history Saturday.

Atlanta goes from last to first and wins first divisional title since '82

Associated Press

ATLANTA — Believe it! The Braves are best in the West.

Atlanta, the team that refused to lose, completed one of the most amazing turnarounds in baseball history Saturday, clinching the NL West title with a 5-2 victory over the Houston Astros.

Behind John Smoltz's pitching and Ron Gant's hitting, the Braves won their season-high eighth straight game. And when second-place Los Angeles lost to San Francisco 4-0 just 3½ minutes later, the last pennant race was over.

The Braves, whose 65-97 record last year was worst in the majors, joined Minnesota this season as the only teams to rebound from last place to first. Atlanta will start the NL playoffs Wednesday night in Pittsburgh.

"It's just a great moment for all of us," outfielder David Justice said. "It was a matter of how we matured and jelled together throughout the season. It's a lot of relief. It's been so great just to share this success with our fans."

Atlanta made up 9½ games on the Dodgers since the All-Star break, compiling the best record in the majors the second half at 55-27 while winning 21 of 28 down the stretch.

Atlanta dueled the Dodgers down the stretch and went into the final weekend tied. The Braves won Friday night while

Cooper stops MHS

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

It may be too early to start talking about playoff possibilities in District 4-5A volleyball, but Abilene Cooper took a big step toward that goal Saturday with a 15-12, 15-6 road win over Midland High at the MHS gym to take over sole possession of second place.

The win gives Cooper a 4-1 first half record while MHS, fighting for three consecutive games to keep second place, fell to 4-2. Abilene High climbed to 5-0 Saturday with a 15-1, 15-4 win over 1-4 Midland Lee.

It is beginning to look like Abilene High is in a league of its own with only one first half game remaining, but the battle for second place is a wild chase. Odessa Permian beat winless San Angelo, 15-8, 15-5, to climb to 3-2 to stay in the hunt.

MC netters sweep Rolex

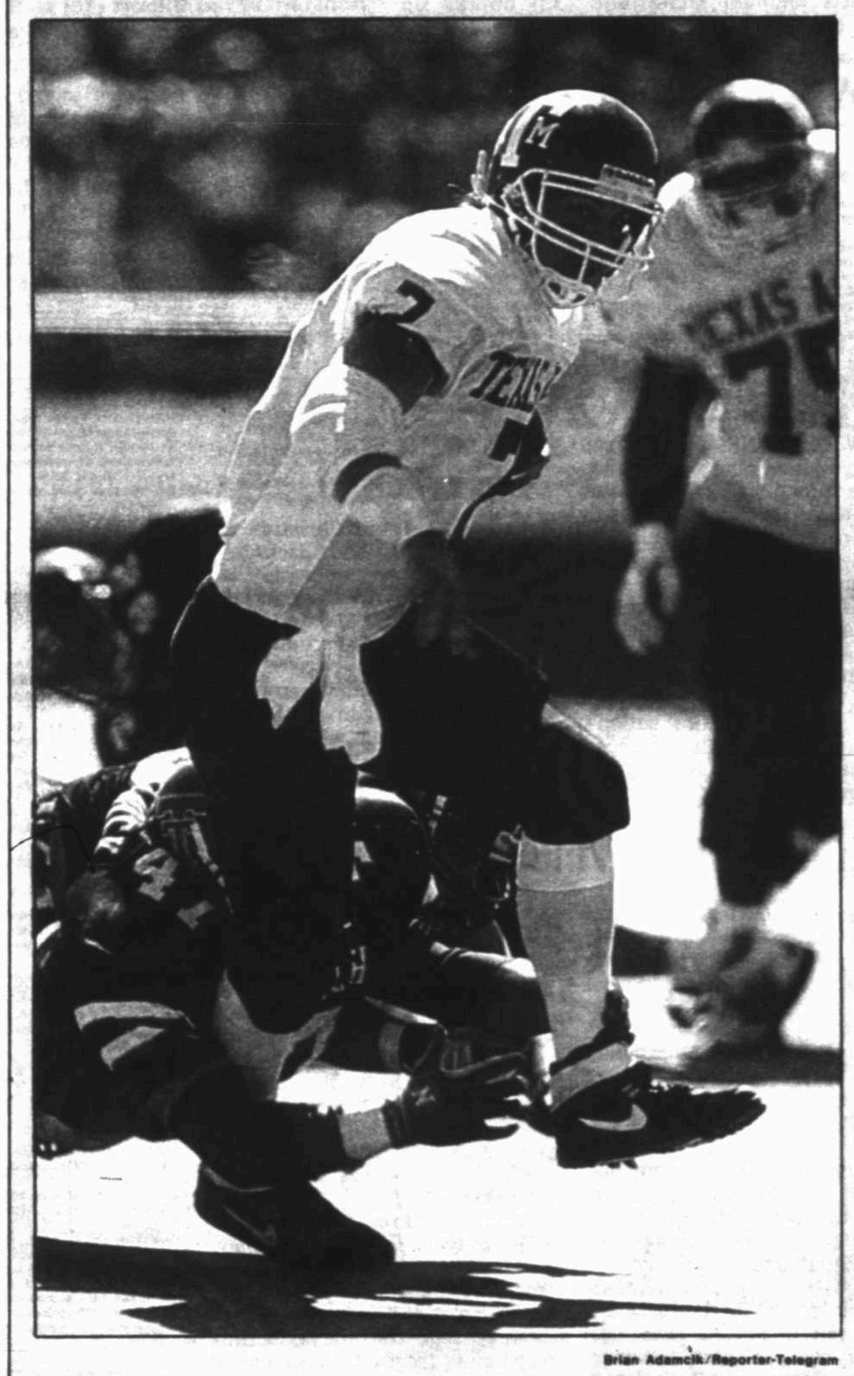

By Joe Wyatt
Staff Writer

The Midland College tennis team pulled off a clean sweep Saturday in the final rounds of the Rolex Intercollegiate Tennis Coaches Association Small College Regional, qualifying two singles players and a pair of doubles teams for the next Rolex step, Nov. 1-3 in Corpus Christi.

Top seeded Chaparrals David Draper and Lucie Ludvigova won the men's and women's singles titles, respectively. And Robin Van Beveren teamed with Glen Highfield for the men's doubles title, while Adriana Isaza and Boba Tzvetkova captured the women's doubles crown at the MC courts.

Aggies clobber Tech

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Despite being sidelined briefly for an injury, Texas A&M quarterback Bucky Richardson, center, scrambled for three touchdowns against the Red Raiders Saturday.

■ The largest Jones Stadium crowd in 14 years witnesses the Texas Aggies slowly pick apart a largely unproductive Red Raider team, 37-14.

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

LUBBOCK — Texas A&M had plenty of old memories to deal with when it faced Texas Tech here Saturday.

Suffice it to say, the Aggies now have a clear conscience after a 37-14 disassembling of the Red Raiders in front of a Jones Stadium crowd of 50,577, the largest since 1977.

A&M had lost two in a row here dating back to 1987, and had not beaten Tech by more than three points in Lubbock since 1977. Those facts now go the way of Tech trivia buffs.

Also made old history by the win was A&M's shameful 35-34 loss to Tulsa Sept. 21. Though the Aggies are starting just two seniors on offense and four on defense, their 1-0 Southwest Conference record and 3-1 overall mark has them talking Cotton Bowl.

"Coach (R.C.) Slocum pounded it into us after the Southwest Louisiana game (a 34-7 A&M win)," said running back sensation Greg Hill, a redshirt freshman who ripped the Raiders for 137 yards on 24 carries. "He said we were really going to go down to Texas Tech and win. We knew Coach Slocum wanted it more than anything."

Hill now has 543 yards through the first four games for the Aggies. He gives plenty of credit to his offensive line, but right guard John Ellisor has another version.

"Man, our backs are thoroughbreds," he said. "They make us look good. You give them a little crease and they're 14 yards down field."

While Hill was making Tech tacklers grab for thin air, quarterback Bucky Richardson moved into second place on the all-time list for SWC quarterback rushing yards with 1,772. His 76 yards on 12 carries put him behind only Texas' Marty Akins (1,974).

JIMMY PATTERSON

America: The home of the Braves

A few short years ago, words like "pathetic", "sorry", "miserable", "pitiful", and "wretched" were adjectives commonly used to described the Atlanta Braves.

Patterson

Ted Turner often spent night upon night sulking over the sorry ratings his Braves were achieving for his Superstation.

Times, boy have they changed.

Instead of bemoaning the reprehensible play of the once perennial cellar-dwelling Braves, America has charged to the fore and is roundly supporting Team Tomahawk.

Today, it's a beautiful October Sunday. It is the last day of the regular season for America's Pastime. There's a chill in the air which no doubt means CBS will soon begin covering baseball on a decent, reliable basis.

But still, there is something quite wrong.

The Braves in the playoffs?

It became official just yesterday.

Fans of the Braves are far and wide, for everyone loves a winner. And the Braves have become just that, beating not only the odds, but Otis Nixon's drug problems and the arrests of two others in the late going.

Does fate have a hand in the Braves? Or is it the power of the people?

Can the Braves ride their enormous surge of popularity into the World Series? (Hold on, an expert answer is forthcoming).

It's amazing how winning will bring fans out of the woodwork. It's quite easy, albeit expensive, to declare oneself a Braves' fan. Hop on down to your nearest sports accessory shop, plop down $18.95 and buy yourself a cap with a big ol' "A" in the middle. Oh, what the heck, while you're there, shell out another $40-$80 and buy yourself a uniform jersey, T-shirt, and maybe even a coffee cup so you can rejoice in the good times even while sipping an eye-opening cup a' joe at 6 o'clock in the a.m.

Anyone can — and virtually everyone has — become a Braves' fan. It's so easy even Tommy Lasorda could do it.

The influx of Atlanta backers prompted one coworker around the office last week to openly root for the Dodgers because, he said, he was sick of seeing all these fair-weather Braves fans come crawling out of the woodwork.

Another opinion, this from a national sports writer, hinted that an Atlanta appearance in the playoffs would be "good for baseball and everyone in the south."

(And the South needs as much help as it can get these days what with the reviews of the "Gone With the Wind" sequel. Why, pray tell, did Scarlett leave Georgia for Ireland? Quite likely no one gives a damn there, either.)

Being a Braves' fan enables ordinary every day people to boast of certain things they wouldn't ordinarily be able to boast of. For instance, new fans in Midland — or anywhere in West Texas for that matter — can proudly proclaim that they are close, personal friends with Mike Stanton, bullpen ace and MHS grad.

Braves fans who also happen to be expectant parents will have a new idea of what to name their kid — Homer, ala Homer The Brave.

And of course, everyone out there can claim to have had dinner with Skip Caray on a nightly basis during the Summer of '91.

Like Scarlett, the Braves' popularity is likely to be gone with the wind in about a week, after the Pittsburgh Pirates (remember them, the team that clinched its division back in May?) do away with America's Team in about four games.

I'm so sure of this, you ask?

Certainly. For it was I who boldly predicted in 1984 that Madonna would be a flash-in-the-pan, that red, white and blue basketballs would eventually replace the traditional orange ones, and that Cincinnati would lose in four to Oakland last year.

I've just got a feel for certain things.

Bears finally pay back Coogs

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Quarterback J.J. Joe opened Baylor's bag of tricks and accounted for three touchdowns, while the 11th-ranked Bears intercepted three passes and recovered four fumbles in a victory over Houston.

The victory ended three years of frustration for the Bears against Houston. Houston (1-3, 0-1 in the Southwest Conference) had beaten Baylor by a combined 124-49 over the past three years, including 66-10 in 1989. But Joe triggered the Bears' option offense with trick plays and key passes for a 17-14 halftime lead.

Baylor (5-0, 2-0) turned opportunist in the second half, using an interception by Brian Hand and a fumble recovery by Albert Fontenot to take a 31-21 lead in handing the Cougars their third consecutive loss.

After Hand's theft, Joe ran 9 yards untouched into the end zone on an option keeper.

AUSTIN, Texas — Texas, punchless for two games, scored on runs by Adrian Walker, Shane Childers and quarterback Peter Gardere, who also threw his first touchdown pass of the season as the Longhorns defeated Rice in the Southwest Conference opener for both teams.

Texas' first victory after losses to Mississippi State and Auburn, extended its winning streak over Rice to 26 games and set up the annual clash with No. 5 Oklahoma next week at the Cotton Bowl.

Freshman Josh LaRocca relieved starter Greg Willig with Rice (2-2) trailing 21-0 in the third quarter, and guided the Owls 80 yards for a touchdown on a 26-yard pass to freshman Jimmy Lee.

NEW ORLEANS — Dan Freiburger, a junior quarterback making the second start of his career, threw three touchdown passes as Southern Methodist beat Tulane in a battle of winless teams.

Freiburger completed 27 of 36 passes for 310 yards in relief of Mike Romo, who is out for the rest of the season after tearing a ligament in his right knee last week against Baylor.

SMU (1-3) ended the nation's longest major-college losing streak at 13 games. Tulane (0-6) has lost seven in a row.

Arkansas 22, Texas Christian 21

FORT WORTH — E.D. Jackson's 3-yard touchdown run with 5:36 left capped the Arkansas Razorbacks' rally from a 21-0 deficit as they upset previously unbeaten Texas Christian.

Arkansas increased its record to 3-2 overall and 2-0 in the Southwest Conference while TCU dropped to 4-1 and 1-1. TCU had hoped to go 5-0 for the first time since 1942.

Jackson scored after a 71-yard drive, with the big play coming on a 29-yard pass from Jason Allen to Ron Dickerson to the TCU 4.

TCU worked the ball to the Arkansas 21, but the ball was stripped away from Gary Cullors and Arkansas' Henry Ford recovered to beat back the Frogs' final threat.

TECH: Aggies tougher when on a roll, Dykes says

young, we can play a tough team on the road. We've only won here twice in the last 10 years, so getting ready was something we really couldn't avoid," said Richardson, who also scored three touchdowns.

Just how tough Tech is, though, is a question that is being asked more often in Lubbock these days.

Though the Raiders have been disabled by early season injuries to receivers Lloyd Hill and Rodney Blackshear — who for the first time since the opener against Cal State-Fullerton played in the same game — they are still 1-4 overall and 0-2 in the conference.

The Raiders were held to eight net rushing yards, and lost starting quarterback Jamie Gill on their second possession, when a sack by Sam Adams registered a deep bruise in Gill's left shoulder.

Robert Hall, the sophomore from Dallas Carter, took Gill's place and was ineffective in the first half.

While A&M rolled to a 24-0 halftime lead, the Raiders did mount something of a comeback attempt in the third quarter.

The Aggies opened the second half by taking the ball on their own 20-yard line, and drove downfield on the strength of six Hill carries for 24 yards and three Richardson pass completions. The drive ended with a 27-yard field goal by Terry Venetoulias that put A&M on top 27-0.

The Raiders took their first possession of the third quarter at their own 35 after Venetoulias' kickoff went out of bounds, and on the first play Hall completed a 22-yard pass to Byron Hooper.

Hall then completed a 17-yarder to Lloyd Hill as Tech eventually drove to the Aggie 11, where Lin Elliott put a 28-yard field goal through the goal post. However, A&M was offside and Tech deicided to go for it on fourth-and-four.

Hall's corner pass to Hill was incomplete, but interference was called on Aggie Derrick Frazier. That set up a two-yard TD dive by Louis Sheffield.

Still behind 27-7, Tech converted an on-side kick and made it to the Aggie 18 before Elliott missed a 34-yard field goal try.

If that was not the icing on the cake for A&M, which led Tulsa 28-10 at half time only to lose, Anthony Lynn's fumble on the Raiders' next possession was, because Marcus Buckley recovered for the Aggies at the 50.

The Raider defense held for all of three plays before Hill exploded for a 42-yard TD run. Tech's last score came late in the fourth quarter against the A&M second-string defense, as Hill caught a 42-yard pass, then fumbled the ball into the end zone, where Blackshear recovered it.

"A&M played real well. They are a Top 25 team and when you play a team like that and catch them with a hot hand, it can be tough," said Tech coach Spike Dykes.

"They took the line of scrimmage away from us and we had a totally non-productive first half. As unproductive as we were in the first half, we had a chance in the third quarter with a lot of momentum behind us.

"When we missed that field goal, you could see the blood running out of our faces."

Texas Colleges

ABILENE — Tom Enloe led Hardin-Simmons past Austin College with two touchdown runs and two touchdown passes.

Enloe ran 17 times for 188 yards and completed 12 of 27 passes for 161 yards as the Cowboys (3-2) improved to 2-0 in the Texas Intercollegiate Athletic Association.

The Kangaroos, who pulled to within 17-16 in the third quarter on a 2-yard run by Jason Johnson but couldn't take the lead, fell to 2-3 and 0-1.

Enloe's 60-yard TD run in the second quarter put Hardin-Simmons on top 14-0.

E. Texas St. 51
Cent. St., Okla. 21

COMMERCE — Second-stringer Mike Meador threw for 355 yards and four touchdowns as East Texas State thrashed Central (Okla.) State and racked up a school record 660 yards of offense.

Meador replaced Bob Bounds, who was 4-of-6 passing, in the first quarter and connected on 15 of 22 passes with one interception. He also rushed for 43 yards and a TD.

The Lions, defending Lone Star Conference champions, improved to 3-2 and 1-0 in league play.

Howard Payne 29
Sul Ross St. 28 (OT)

BROWNWOOD — Keith Crawford cradled a low pass from Scott Lichner for a 2-point conversion and an overtime victory over winless Sul Ross State.

Lichner hit Royal Kyle with an 11-yard touchdown to set up the do-or-die snap. Howard Payne improved to 3-2 and 1-1 in the NAIA Texas Intercollegiate Athletic Association. Sul Ross fell to 0-5 and 0-2.

In overtime, in which each team gets the ball on the opponent's 25-yard line with one series to score, Camacho ran in from a yard out and Joel Baker added the PAT for a 28-21 lead.

NE Louisiana 17
SW Texas St. 8

SAN MARCOS — Greg Robinson rushed for 159 yards and scored two first-half touchdowns, leading Northeast Louisiana to a Southland Conference victory over Southwest Texas State.

Northeast (4-1, 1-1) overcame an 8-0 deficit to defeat the Bobcats (2-2, 1-1) for the fifth time in six tries.

Tarleton St. 18
SW Kansas 7

STEPHENVILLE — Jimmy Hering threw two touchdown passes as Tarleton State shocked previously unbeaten SW Kansas.

Tarleton (1-4) held Southwestern (3-1), which entered the game ranked No. 8 in NAIA Division II, to 266 yards of total offense, well below the Moundbuilders' season averages of 500 yards and 50 points.

Tarleton led 6-0 in the second quarter before Joe Piper tied the score on a 61-yard run.

E. New Mexico 32
Abilene Christian 20

ABILENE — Landrum Hale ran for 136 yards and two touchdowns and Mario Smalls returned a punt 65 yards for a touchdown as Eastern New Mexico beat winless Abilene Christian 32-20 Saturday night.

Hale scored on 1-yard runs in the first and last quarters, and Small's punt return gave ENMU a 21-7 lead in the second quarter.

The Greyhounds improved to 3-2 and the Wildcats fell to 0-5. The game was the Lone Star Conference opener for both teams.

Texas Southern 14

HOUSTON — Ronnie Toliver's 7-yard touchdown pass to Will Moore capped a 92-yard drive that helped Texas Southern grind out a tie against Alabama State in the Southwestern Athletic Conference.

Alabama State (4-0-1, 3-0-1) jumped to an early lead when Ricky Jones scored on a 1-yard run with 12:27 left in the first period.

Texas A&I 30
Cameron 7

LAWTON, Okla. — Rayford Bloom returned a blocked punt 2 yards for a touchdown and Darrell Owens returned a punt 77 yards for a score as Texas A&I beat Cameron in the Lone Star Conference opener for both teams.

Texas A&I (4-1) had 288 total yards on offense, 134 of that passing, while holding Cameron (1-3) to just 100 offensive yards.

Brinkley's blocked punt return gave Texas A&I a 13-0 lead late in the first half.

Washington, Mo. 19
Trinity, Tex. 14

SAN ANTONIO — Aaron Keen passed for two touchdowns, including an 18-yarder to twin brother John, as Washington (Mo.) University defeated Trinity University.

Washington (2-3), which snapped a three-game losing streak, took an early lead when Voters wielding this hammer!

That Oklahoma cowboy wit, Will Rogers, was known for timeless commentary on many facets of life, but one of his favorite targets was the politician. Once he remarked, "This country has come to feel the same when Congress is in session as when the baby gets hold of a hammer."

Rogers was talking about politicians in the early part of the 20th century, but no quote could better describe the mood of the American electorate today, more than 55 years since Will died in a tragic airplane crash in Alaska. Some things just don't seem to change.

As they prepare for the 1992 election year, both political parties are making plans to capitalize on voter anger. But that could be easier said than done. In fact, recent Wall Street Journal-NBC News and New York Times polls showed that 55 percent of the respondents believe the country is on the "wrong track." The polls also verify that President Bush has a huge lead in the race for the Oval Office.

It could be a year of major change in Congress, officials concede. In fact, party leaders say the Republicans could pick up more than 30 seats in the U.S. House of Representatives, although Democratic officials do not agree with that assessment.

"People are . . . just mad, mad at Congress — there is a strong anti-incumbent mood out there," noted Tom Cole, who heads the National Republican Campaign Committee.

Of course there's ample reason for that mood: congressional overspending along with the additional taxation that it entails, sneaky salary increases for the members of Congress during a difficult economic period, continued revelations of official misconduct on the part of some elected officials. And more. All in all, it doesn't bolster voter confidence.

It isn't likely that the nation's voters are going to be kind to incumbents at the polls next year. The politicians have already carried this good thing much too far.

When next year rolls around and the voters head to the polls, the politicians will realize that the voters actually holds the hammer Will Rogers was talking about and are not afraid of using it!

Flashy Texas sunset needs a little work

The Western myth dies hard in Texas. In a state that nearly elected Clayton Williams governor, citizens still take pride in wide open spaces where animals roam, water runs clear and air smells clean.

Yet, in reality, land, air and water in this emerging industrial state are increasingly polluted and hazardous.

The Houston ship channel, raw sewage in the Rio Grande and the depleted Ogallala Aquifer in northwest Texas are as real as the Davis Mountains at sunset.

A recent issue of Fiscal Notes, put out by the state comptroller's office, gave an overview of environmental problems Texans must deal with in the coming years. A Green Index that measures the health of all 50 states based on 256 indicators ranked this state 46th.

Cleanup is necessary, and prevention is even better.

The work is just beginning. Even as the state deals with crises in education, prisons and human services, the environment continues to cry for attention as well.

If West has food it must assist Soviets

Teople of the collapsing Soviet Union are like wanderers finally finding their way from a cavern. Part of what they feel is joy, and part is fear. A collapsing economic system, a disappointing harvest, a bad market for Soviet crude oil: There seem to be many wolves waiting on the winter fields.

Of those, none is more frightening than hunger itself. The drastic fluctuations in the amount of food aid being sought by Soviet officials in recent weeks is an indication of something like panic.

Whatever is really needed, we feel strongly that food aid is a vital mechanism by which the West must extend its hand to this vast region of refugees from the economic nightmare of communism. Experts say the needs being described by Soviet officials are easily within the excess productive capacity of western farmers. When the West finds exactly what is needed and how to send it, then food aid must begin.

These will be our friends. They have always been human beings. If they are hungry, and if we have food, we must feed them.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Oct. 6, the 279th day of 1991. There are 86 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

One hundred years ago, on Oct. 6, 1891, Charles Stewart Parnell, the "Uncrowned King of Ireland," died in Brighton, England.

On this date:

In 1683, 13 families from Krefeld, Germany, arrived in present-day Philadelphia to begin Germantown, one of America's oldest settlements.

In 1863, the first Turkish bath in the United States opened.

Keating Five trial ends with hung jury

WASHINGTON — In a Los Angeles courtroom, former savings and loan tycoon Charles Keating is now standing trial on securities fraud charges in connection with junk-bond sales at the Southern California branches of Lincoln Savings and Loan. It may be the first of several criminal and civil trials for Keating.

Anderson

But another "trial" on Capitol Hill has resulted in the congressional equivalent of a hung jury. The Senate Ethics Committee last January concluded 26 days of public hearings into the role that five U.S. senators played in intervening for Keating with federal regulators after he gave them and their causes nearly $1.5 million in political contributions.

While the Los Angeles jury is still hearing the case, the Senate Ethics Committee seems hopelessly stalled nearly two years after the curtain lifted on the sordid Keating Five scandal. The panel is still drafting the final report that will serve up the ultimate judgment on the conduct of five senators — whether or not they improperly ran interference for Keating while he was running up the tab on the taxpayer's credit card. For Keating's Lincoln Savings and Loan, the bailout bill will come to nearly $3 billion.

Sens. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz. and Alan Cranston, D-Calif. — two members of the so-called Keating Five — made the most heroic efforts to intervene with federal regulators and save the Keating empire. The other three in the lineup — John McCain, R-Ariz.; Don Riegle, D-Mich.; and John Glenn, D-Ohio — played less aggressive roles.

Senate Ethics Committee Special Counsel Robert Bennett concluded during the Keating Five hearings, "He (Keating) made tremendous demands on Sens. Cranston and DeConcini, and it appears from the evidence . . . that most of the time, but not always, they complied with his demands."

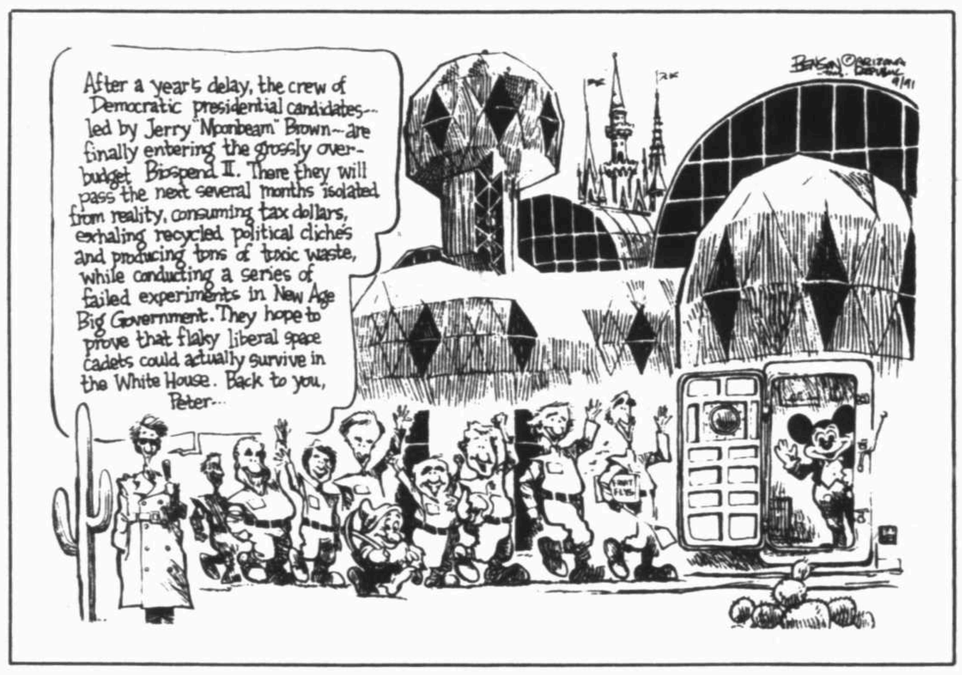

Sources told our associate Michael Binstein that DeConcini, in particular, has been working behind the scenes to shape the ethics panel's final report. DeConcini has been lobbying committee chairman Sen. Howell Heflin, D-Ala., to water down the section of the final report that deals with DeConcini's role. Heflin has seemed sympathetic to DeConcini's plight, at times fighting DeConcini's battles for him and against the special counsel Bennett.

"Bennett and the committee are estranged. It's incredible that they treat the guy that way," one committee source told us. "Heflin wants sort of a nothing report, very short and no details."

DeConcini defended himself during the proceedings primarily by attacking Bennett personally, charging that Bennett was biased because his brother is a prominent Republican, former Education Secretary William Bennett.

A former amateur boxer, Robert Bennett's style is to come out swinging. Senate decorum dictated that he hold his punches. But after DeConcini dragged William Bennett into the ring, Robert Bennett reportedly put DeConcini and Hamilton on notice that if they wanted to play dirty, they should at least air out all the charges in public. According to sources, Bennett suggested a public airing of all information — including that DeConcini may have been too aggressive, perhaps even inappropriate, in lobbying members of the ethics panel who are supposed to be impartial judges.

Bennett refused to comment. A DeConcini spokesman said he was unaware of any lobbying that had taken place between DeConcini and Heflin.

Plans 'gang aft agley' in scheme of things

Dreadful news! There was a mistake in this column on Sept. 7. What the poet Robert Burns really said was that the best-laid "schemes" of mice and men gang aft agley. We had Burns saying "plans" instead of "schemes," and of course we regret the error.

Who, you ask, are these erring "we" who don't know their Robert Burns? They are the column's literary staff, whose task is to keep the column looking awesome to professors of literature and prevent it from looking stupid on days when the columnist is distracted, as he was when this deplorable "plans" for "schemes" mistake occurred.

Baker

The thousands who have written to complain about misquoting Burns may be mollified to learn that severe punishment is even now being suffered by the literary staff. They have been ordered to re-read Marcel Proust's "Remembrance of Things Past" and hand in book reports on it by Dec. 31, 1999.

There is talk among them of hauling the columnist before the National Labor Relations Board on a charge of cruel and unusual labor practices. This columnist welcomes the threat. These wretched bookworms have apparently been buried so deep in the Harvard Classics that they still don't know Reagan and Bush have had the NLRB fired for being beastly to large corporations and replaced it with the National Corporation Protective Agency.

I shall of course ask the NCPA to spare my literary staff their well-deserved flogging with water-soaked birches, the customary punishment for employee insolence.

Being literary, they overdramatize everything. I don't want them sitting around sobbing when they should be digging up apt quotations from Goethe, de Tocqueville, James M. Cain, Barbara Cartland et al. to give tomorrow's column a more learned look.

All employers will instantly recognize the problem here, of course. You simply cannot get decent help anymore. Ten years ago this column had the finest literary staff in the business. That staff not only read "Remembrance of Things Past" in its seven-volume entirety in only 17 years, but was always alert to correct the boss when he attributed "Veni, vidi, vici" to Cato the Elder or "Portnoy's Complaint" to Aldous Huxley.

And what happened? They wanted more time off. Wanted to go on the 30-day month except in April, June, September and November when they wanted the 29-day month, and February when they wanted the 27-day month. They wanted some time to see their families, they whined.

Yes, I almost yielded to them too, until my colleagues said it would disgrace the Columnist's Club. Ever since President Reagan had busted the air controllers' union, every man of importance had to prove the importance of his manhood by busting his union, or face disgrace at the club.

After all the great corporate execs had busted unions, it was the great columnists' turn. Not that we had union help. We had the kind of help that was too good to join unions and could read "Remembrance of Things Past" cover to cover. They considered themselves too remarkable to flip hamburgers for minimum wage.

GEORGE WILL

Schroeder's move shows need for term limits

DENVER — What ails American government? Patricia Schroeder, for one thing. And a few thousand other career legislators like her.

The congresswoman from Denver is intelligent, witty, well-meaning and warmhearted. Alas, she also is something we simply no longer can afford. She is too costly in money and institutional distortion.

Will

Proof that she proves the wisdom of term limits for legislators is her legislative embrace of an admirable idea. The idea is midnight basketball leagues, which have been praised by this columnist.

Such leagues in Chicago and other cities take young inner city men off the streets and into gyms for basketball and counseling during hours when they might otherwise be getting into trouble. Now, at Schroeder's behest, the House Judiciary Committee has voted to include almost $3 million (a pittance, but such things grow) in the crime bill to subsidize midnight basketball leagues.

The Department of Housing and Urban Development (et tu, Jack Kemp?) already had its nose in that tent, with some subsidies. Now Schroeder speaks the four-letter word Washington adores: "More." She favors federal funding for new leagues in suburban and rural areas experiencing youth-related problems.

The mentality of Washington's entrenched incumbents is one of the reasons they are entrenched: Every good idea out there in America must become a slice of federal pork. Let us stipulate that Schroeder is public-spirited. She also is, strictly speaking, deranged (Oxford English Dictionary: "thrown into confusion") as a result of living too long in Washington. Elected in 1972, she has spent most of her adult life in Congress and probably cannot fathom how anyone could find anything odd about Washington funding a nice thing like midnight basketball.

She is just doing what people do here and in other legislatures. They get up in the morning, shower, shave or apply their makeup, commute to work, pour a cup of coffee and start spending other people's money. Invariably, they can convince themselves they are not "really" spending anything. "It (the antecedent of the pronoun can be almost any program) will pay for itself." As in: "It is cheaper to buy basketballs than prison cells."

Edward Crane of the Cato Institute rightly argues that in a town where the tone of life is set by a ruling class of career legislators, the prevailing mentality makes people — strictly speaking — weird (OED: "out of the ordinary, strange, odd, fantastic"). Most of the people legislators associate with are involved in regulating other people's lives and spending other people's money. Furthermore, microphones are constantly being shoved at them, and soon they believe their preferences are so wise they should be codified.

After prolonged immersion in Washington's culture of ruling, there is not a dime's worth of difference between (as The Wall Street Journal puts it) Democrans and Republicrats. That is why the House recently passed appropriations bills funding a study of the handling of manure ($37,000), a Stuggart, Ark. fish farm ($542,000), a recycling facility in Susquehanna, Pa. ($1 million), the Institute of Peace ($8.3 million), Houston's "Better-Bus" system ($15 million), a study of Afognak Island, Ark. ($250,000) and thousands of other projects that could conceivably be defensible if the federal government had enough revenues, which it does not, and if it were not supposed to acknowledge some limits to its reach.

Nine decades before Dr. James Naismith hung a fruit basket in the YMCA gym in Springfield, Mass., and invented basketball, President Jefferson saw today's folly coming. He said to Congress: If you guys get into funding even things as basic as roads and canals — if you say the government's "implied powers" (as distinct from those explicitly enumerated by the Constitution) are infinitely elastic — well, sooner or later you will even be subsidizing games hither and yon.

OK, he didn't say that in so many words, but that was his gist, and a glance at the federal budget proves he was right.

We have come a long way, a lot of it downhill, since Jefferson fled the Federal City for the sanity of Monticello, and there is no going back to Jeffersonianism. However, it is reasonable to suppose that term limits compelling the rotation of offices would have two salutary consequences.

If people served in legislatures only briefly, going to them from other careers, to which they would soon return, they would have less incentive to shovel out pork. And if they were not too distant, for too long, from normal citizens and normal life in normal communities, they might retain the ability to discriminate between appropriate and inappropriate functions for the federal government.

Bill Mims' family appreciates letters

Thank you so very much for the calls, visits, letters, flowers and personal condolences you have given me after the death of my beloved brother, Bill Mims. Bill loved Midland and invested much of his life to serve our community.

The establishment of the Bill Mims Scholarship Fund at Midland High School warms my heart. Bill was very positive and did much to help others, and this is such a fitting tribute to him.

Editing an obituary shows religious bias

It may not have occurred to you that your editing of an obituary submitted to the paper may be religiously offensive to the family, can and does show religious bias. We refer to our Mother's/Grandmother's Sept. 29th obituary (Kathleen A. Doell). To us the most important accomplishment of our Mother's/Grandmother's life as a Missionary was the statement, "Her life was an inspiration to all who knew her and she led many people to a personal relationship with Jesus Christ" — this was totally deleted. Why? We are wondering if our Mother/Grandmother had been a school teacher and a statement such as "She was an inspiration to her pupils and led them to great academic achievements," was included in the obituary, would that statement have also been deleted? We seriously doubt it.

In the copy submitted to you, the word "survivors," was purposely avoided. Instead, we said, "She leaves behind." The reason for omitting survivors was twofold, first, we believe in eternal life and will follow her to heaven at some future date; next the word survivor is most commonly used in connection with tragic events such as plane crashes etc. — as Christians we do not view natural death as a tragedy.

We realize it is a courtesy of the paper to run obituaries, but we feel that the copy submitted by the family should not be significantly edited without giving them the option to approve it. What we really wanted said about our loved one was edited out.

Friends of Library seek new home

The Friends of the Library desperately need a new place to call home. For years, they have moved from one location to another, never having a place to call home. The workers have endured freezing cold, extreme heat, dead pigeons, flooded floors, no utilities or conveniences, and uncertainty as to how long they could count on being in residence at the same place.

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has been kind enough to let the Friends camp out in part of a warehouse on the corner of Weatherford and Illinois; however, future plans do not include housing our organization.

With all the empty buildings in Midland, one would think a place would be easy to find. Our book committee has been looking in vain for the past three years for a permanent residence. If you know of someone who has an empty building, please put in a good word for the Friends. We need at least 1,500 square feet to sort and store books that come in through the year (we're open every Wednesday 9-12) and a place to collect and sort oil material. The location should be as convenient to the public as possible since we depend upon donations.

If you have a suggestion, please contact Mary Mann (697-3041) or Forrest Underwood (683-6128).

SPEAKING OUT

CAF deserves welcome as wide as West Texas

By Joanne Langston and Bobby Holt

For over two years we have promised a West Texas-wide welcome to the Confederate Air Force (CAF) and have eagerly anticipated the incredible asset that the organization will be to the Permian Basin's economy, growth, tourism and international recognition.

Already we are receiving many benefits from the organization's move to Midland: 200-300 jobs during the $4 million first phase of construction of its new headquarters and museum; the creation of some 35 new jobs in the organization; the recruitment to the area of 20 employees and their families; and the addition of many new retirees who moved to Midland, or Odessa because of their interest in the CAF.

But this week we can really begin to experience the full impact of the CAF's relocation. Thousands of visitors from throughout the United States, 150 from Australia, and others from England, Denmark, Germany, France, Japan and Switzerland will start arriving for the October and December Airsho and Grand Opening events.

Now it is up to us to provide that promised West Texas-wide welcome and we encourage everyone to be a part of it. Make plans to attend many or all of the Airsho-/Grand Opening festivities.

This week's events begin Thursday evening on the most festive of notes: a USO-type dinner/dance featuring the legendary Tommy Dorsey Orchestra and the inimitable Kay Starr. This promises to be THE gala of the year (or decade!) with its nostalgic World War II setting in the CAF hangar midst equisite, restored 50-year-old aircraft, bold patriotic decorations, fabulous music, a smattering of handsomely uniformed guests, and a gourmet dinner prepared by chefs flown in by Mission Dorado Country Club. Everyone is invited; come and enjoy! Even if you are a non-dancer, a single, or too young to have experienced World War II, you'll love Kay Starr's hour-long show and you'll forever remember the wonderful Tommy Dorsey sound.

Joanne Langston and Bobby Holt are co-chairs of the Confederate Air Force Grand Opening Committee. Ms. Langston is president of Langston Realtors. Holt is president of Holt Cattle Corp.

The October festivities continue Friday with "Runway Memories," a luncheon fashion show. Styles from World War II, researched at the Smithsonian and longingly remembered by many of us, as well as contemporary fashions, will be featured.

And then, there's the Airsho 91! Grounds will open at 8:30 Saturday morning to an anticipated 50,000 or more who will view 80-90 World War II vintage planes as well as many of the sleek, menacing aircraft we first glimpsed in the Desert Storm news coverage. To see these planes up close, soaring overhead, or re-enacting World War II air battles is immensely exciting. A barbecue/dance and a "Survivors Party" are also scheduled during Airsho weekend.

The second round of grand opening events begins Dec. 3-8 and includes a symposium, a nostalgic presentation of "Christmas '41" by the Midland-Odessa Symphony featuring vocalist Judith Dow, a commemoration of the 50th anniversary of Pearl Harbor, an elegant luncheon honoring grand opening dignitaries, and of course the opening ceremony itself with viewing of the new museum and headquarters, and a barbecue served by the Odessa Chuch Wagon Gang.

You'll be hearing more about the December events later, but for right now, pick up the phone and call (915) 685-0427 weekdays for tickets and additional information. Join us this Thursday through Sunday for the first set of exciting, memorable "Welcome, CAF" events, and then plan to come back in December!

Airport expansion

Midland does not need new terminal

After reading the first page of the Midland Reporter-Telegram on Oct. 1st, and then proceeding through the newspaper to the ad section, I am convinced that I need to check into Memorial West for extensive treatment for surely I have lost my mind, but alas I can't afford to.

On Page 1 I see "'92 rig (our main industry) forecast is bleak." Further I read "Airlines oppose terminal plan, passenger fee." In that article I read that although we only have two functioning airlines at our big international airport, Mayor Thomas and Mike McGregor imply that our city will pursue "with its proposal for a new terminal despite the airlines' written statement of opposition to the project." Does this not mean, and we all know, the airlines are having financial problems? We are all taxed to death one way or another. We have already seen several airlines leave Midland and go elsewhere or broke.

According to the Reporter-Telegram article, the proposed terminal will be paid for by a $3 per passenger fee called a "user fee" by Mayor Thomas. Ron Ricks, Southwest Airlines vice president, calls the fee a "tax in disguise." Who cares what it's called — we don't need a new airport terminal with five to eight gates to house the two airlines we have left nor a big restaurant no one can afford to eat in!

I wonder if Mayor Thomas or McGregor, deputy city manager, haven given thought to the possibility that since they choose to ignore the needs of the airlines that we could lose them altogether to Lubbock or elsewhere.

The Reporter-Telegram states that the charge, if approved, will start in 1992 and continue for 20 years. Do you know of any tax or fee that ever stopped or went down?

Where is the stopping place on what we all have to pay for someone else's ideas who do not even live in our town? We want people to believe that this is a good town to retire in and it well could be, but who is going to be able to afford to live here?

Thank God for the Confederate Air Force. They may be our only hope for survival.

Old statement, but true — I'm mad too, Eddie!

City must entice another airline

I have just finished the Oct. 1st article concerning the expansion of the Midland International Airport. As an airline pilot, I would wholly support an expansion of our airport if in fact that expansion was indeed needed.

But need is something that our city council and airport board have just set aside in order to satisfy their wants. There are a number of larger airports around the country, in which I transit on a regular basis, that have gone through expansion programs only to see the new gates stand empty to no new traffic. What Midland does need to do is try to entice some more carriers into the Midland International Airport. With the loss of America West earlier this year, there is one gate at Midland International that receives little or no use at all from the existing carriers that now serve Midland.

Let us make use of what we have before we go and spend unnecessary money for a "white elephant" that is definitely not needed at this time. For one our city fathers should listen to what the existing carriers that now serve Midland have to say about a subject in which they are experts. We need to see the number of boardings increase significantly before we build a larger facility to serve the carriers that we don't have yet.

I would carry this subject a step further with regard to Stephen B. Aikman's letter in the same edition of this newspaper. I agree with Aikman in that David Jones has no business as a consultant for the city with regard to the airport expansion or parking lot rates. What does a former banker know about airports and the activities that surround them?

Having been a pilot in Midland for the past 11 years, both as a corporate pilot and as a business owner and operator, I feel that I am somewhat qualified to comment on this matter. Wake up and smell the coffee, Midland leaders! Most people would like to know something about a horse before they place a bet on it; let's see some growth in airport traffic along with another carrier before we spend millions of dollars on an unnecessary expansion program.

John S. Bumpers

Former banker not parking consultant

In order to alleviate confusion created by media reports that a parking consultant, David N. Jones, had been hired by the City of Midland to undertake a study of the parking "problem" at Midland International Airport, I wish to respond that an airport consultant has not been hired.

The mayor and the city council were considerate and courteous in allowing Jones to present his suggestions in the briefing session prior to the city council meeting. The city council created the Permian Basin Airport Board composed of representatives from outlying communities that use Midland International Airport. Representatives to that board are given the opportunity to present their suggestions to the City of Midland Airport Planning and Development Board in regard to the overall operation and development of the airport. The parking situation has been discussed in sessions of both boards.

However, neither board has had the opportunity to meet with Jones or any other parking consultant. No parking consulting consultants have been hired by the City of Midland for their services.

Officials ignore Midland's needs

Well, I see by this morning's (Oct. 1) article about the airport that our city employees continue to be as heedless as ever as to the wants/needs of their customers.

I quote your quote of employee Mike McGregor concerning the displeasure of both our servicing airlines with the city's planned $3 per passenger charge for enplaning passengers — "We, of course, would have preferred their support, but as long as we justify our project to the FAA, that's the important part," McGregor said.

We're down to only two airlines serving us now — what do you bet we build the unneeded new terminal, raise the parking fees, and find we have no airlines left to stick with the bill! Of course, we could use McGregor's salary.

Lala T. Butler
Midland

Officials should listen to airlines

According to our local newspaper, both Southwest and American Airlines oppose the proposed airport expansion program. They pointed out that we have lost 100,000 boardings since 1982 and boardings for 1991 are projected to be down 3 percent, making airport expansion unnecessary.

We all know that the expenditure of funds for expansion, regardless where those funds are obtained, eventually comes from the taxpayer's pocket.

It may be that our local air carriers are trying to tell us something. Maybe the mayor, city manager, and some of our city fathers should wake up and take note.

W.L. "Boots" Goode
Midland

Expansion may lead to pitfalls

Most of us have read in the Midland Reporter-Telegram the great reports as to how the proposed $22 million-plus new airport terminal will bring wealth and prosperity to our Midland city. Needless to say, no mention was made of the fact that we will raise travel costs, landing rights, additional city debts, etc.

Let's be realistic, we now have a fly-out, fly-in home folk travel passenger schedule except for a few flights to the West.

Inform the locals of certain pitfalls we can face by jumping too quickly to enlarge our plant and face more taxes.

Patriot targeted by some members of Congress

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — One of the most incredibly shortsighted reactions to President Bush's astounding plan to save humanity from nuclear catastrophe was the desire among some leading members of Congress to virtually scrap the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) program and scuttle development of an antimissile missile system.

Hearst

Among their targets is the Patriot weapon that prevented widespread destruction of Israel and Saudi Arabia in the Persian Gulf War.

In the president's historic announcement that the United States will unilaterally withdraw and destroy all land-based short-range tactical nuclear weapons based in Europe and South Korea as well as from Navy ships and submarines, and will offer to join with the Soviet Union in eliminating all land-based ballistic missiles with multiple warheads, Bush called on Congress to give him all the money he has requested for continuance of the SDI program and the Patriot.

The president also wants to modify with Moscow the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty (ABM) to enable both countries to install non-nuclear antimissile missiles around their respective territories. The 1972 treaty limits each country to one deployment.

Democratic Senate Majority Leader George J. Mitchell's immediate response was that the SDI and Patriot programs "will and should be cut." The Democratic-controlled House of Representatives has threatened to slash funds for SDI.

These politicians and their media pundits are the same elements who opposed the so-called "Star Wars" program at the very beginning of that plan to defend America against nuclear attack. It was technology developed by SDI research that produced the Patriot missile. Its radars, computer software and fusing systems all benefited from SDI research. This research is also facilitating development of a new U.S. Arrow missile capable of intercepting Scud-type missiles at longer ranges than the Patriot.

History will record how President Reagan was castigated for launching the SDI in 1983. Critics nicknamed it the "Star Wars" fantasy, thus unnecessarily frightening the world. Reagan's purpose was twofold: to develop a space system to defend America against nuclear attack in case of all-out war with the Soviet Union, and, more immediately, to break the deadlock in nuclear arms reduction talks with Moscow.

The Soviets would not even discuss SDI with U.S. officials on the grounds that it would be tantamount to acquiescing in the American space-based defense scheme. Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev was warned that the Soviets could not hope to match the cost of duplicating it. In September 1988, Gorbachev agreed to have Soviet negotiators be secretly briefed in Geneva by Gen. James Abrahamson, chief architect of the SDI program. That led to the beginning of the nuclear arms reduction agreements that have prompted Bush to move toward elimination of many offensive nuclear weapons.

It is difficult to understand why congressional Democrats lacked an understanding of the vital role that SDI and its offspring, the Patriot, could and did play in virtually ending the nuclear arms race between the two superpowers. Within a year of the time SDI technology had started development of the Patriot, the House of Representatives voted to slash the Patriot budget from $92 million to $15 million. In 1987, House Democrats voted to cut all funds out of the Patriot budget. Fortunately, the Senate saved the program. Bush has asked for $5.2 billion for SDI and $170.5 million for the Patriot in the 1992 budget, but he is likely to get considerably less.

What particularly worries the president is the probable proliferation of nuclear weapons by Third World and other countries ruled by ruthless despots such as Saddam Hussein. The CIA estimates that by the end of this decade between 15 and 20 developing countries will possess ballistic missile capabilities. At least six developing countries probably will have ballistic missiles with ranges up to 1,800 miles. At least three may develop intercontinental missiles.

Sen. John W. Warner, ranking Republican on the Armed Services Committee, recently wrote in the Washington Post that "many of these countries are currently developing, or will soon have the ability to develop, nuclear, chemical or biological weapons for possible delivery on ballistic missiles."

We must also bear in mind that disintegration of the Soviet empire has left ICBMs (intercontinental ballistic missiles) with multiple warheads in various republics, and some might fall into irresponsible hands, which could lead to accidental or unauthorized launching.

That is another reason Bush intends to retain some of our strategic weapons and such defensive systems as SDI and the Patriot missile.

However, Bush's amazing proposals for virtually rendering the United States and Soviet Union incapable of waging all out nuclear war against each other as well as providing protection against nuclear threats by second- or third-echelon countries greatly heightens hope for a safer world. This is the president who is habitually accused by political partisans and liberal critics of lacking vision.

Former Angel Bichette continues hot-hitting

Associated Press

BOSTON — Greg Vaughn and Darryl Hamilton drove in three runs apiece as the Milwaukee Brewers bashed the Boston Red Sox 13-4 for their fourth straight victory.

Dante Bichette extended his hitting streak to 11 games with a single, double and triple for the Brewers. Paul Moltor also had three hits, giving him 214 for the season.

Rookie Mike Ignasiak (2-1), who replaced starter Dan Plesac with no outs in the fifth, pitched two hitless innings for the victory in his fourth major-league appearance.

AL Roundup

Athletics 12, Rangers 5

ARLINGTON — Rickey Henderson stole four bases to take the American League lead and had a three-run homer among three hits as the Oakland Athletics got 15 hits in a victory over the Texas Rangers.

Dave Henderson also had three RBIs for the Athletics, who swiped six bases. Rickey Henderson, who broke a tie with Toronto's Roberto Alomar and reached 57 stolen bases, hit his three-run homer in the ninth inning.

The Texas defense contributed three errors.

Twins 3, Blue Jays 1

MINNEAPOLIS — Scott Erickson became a 20-game winner and Minnesota stopped Juan Guzman's 10-game winning streak as the Twins beat the Toronto Blue Jays in a preview of next week's AL playoffs.

Erickson (20-8), who will start Game 3, pitched six shutout innings. He allowed four hits, walked four and struck out two.

Orioles 7, Tigers 3

BALTIMORE — The Orioles capped a day of nostalgia with an old fashioned comeback, as Chito Martinez hit a two-run homer in the sixth inning to help Baltimore beat Detroit.

With a crowd of 49,289 on hand to watch the second-to-last baseball game at Memorial Stadium, the Orioles fought back from a 2-0 deficit to snap a five-game losing streak.

Angels 5, Royals 1

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Left-hander Jim Abbott concluded his finest season in the majors with his 18th victory as the California Angels beat the Kansas City Royals.

Lance Parrish and Junior Felix homered in support of Abbott (18-11), who reduced his ERA to 2.89 with a nine-hitter in his fifth complete game. He beat Kevin Appier (13-10).

Abbott has gone the distance for a victory only twice, however, including a 7-0 triumph May 16 at New York.

Indians 7, Yankees 5

NEW YORK — Mark Lewis doubled home two runs in the 12th inning, giving the Cleveland Indians a win over the New York Yankees and ending a long day in the rain.

Rookie Bernie Williams got a career-high five hits for the Yankees, including an RBI single that made it 5-all in the ninth. Reggie Jefferson's two-out, two-run single in the top of the ninth put the Indians ahead.

With one out in the 12th, Luis Lopez doubled into the left-field corner off Darrin Chapin (0-1), the third Yankees pitcher. After a walk to Jose Gonzalez, Alex Cole grounded into a force play, setting up Lewis.

Steve Olin (3-6) pitched three innings for the victory and Doug Jones pitched the 12th for his first save since June 2.

The game was delayed by rain for 52 minutes in the first inning and for another 31 minutes after the seventh. It rained again in the later innings, but the game kept going.

MHS: Unforced errors spell doom for Lady Bulldogs

(From 1B)

But Cooper has the edge now and the win over MHS was a big relief to Cougar coach Beth Willis.

"This was a very big win for us with second place on the line," Willis said.

Cooper now has MHS at home in the second half, but Willis doesn't know if that will be an overall advantage.

"I can't explain it, but we've played a lot better on the road this year than at home, so I don't know if playing Midland at home in the second half is going to be an advantage or not," Willis said.

Junior Aimee Goble, Cooper's standout against the Lady Bulldogs, said, "This was an important game and we had hopes of coming in here and getting second place. Now we've got to get ready for Permian."

MHS was its own worst enemy in the first set, committing 10 unforced errors in the net game when point situations were on the line. That very fact left MHS coach Sonja Pittman more than unhappy.

"I don't want to take anything away from Cooper because they played a solid game, but they just sat back, did their job and watched us self-destruct," Pittman said. "They played very well and we didn't come to the game."

Pittman had some words for her charges after the game.

"I told them that I'm sick and tired of finishing third in this district. It's like kissing your sister," Pittman said. "It only gets worse from here. Next Saturday we are at Lee and they have nothing to lose. Abilene High gave us a real clinic there and it took our best match of the year to beat Permian in Odessa."

MHS and Cooper were tied at 7-7 in the first set, but Cooper ran to a 14-9 lead from that point. In the second set, Cooper broke a 3-3 tie and never looked back behind Goble, Tanrika Wigfall, another junior, and senior Darby Davis.

Mich Neatherlin, Sally Gibson and Donna Eaden kept MHS in the game early, but all the Lady Bulldogs made too many mistakes in scoring opportunities.

In junior varsity action, MHS lost to Cooper 16-14, 15-10 and Lee lost to AHS, 15-4, 15-8.

CHAPS: MC takes top honors in all categories

(From 1B)

And it was not just the outcome of the finals that were dominated by the Chaps. It was the finals themselves, as two of the four MC victories were turned in against Chaps.

Ludvigova got by teammate Tzvetkova 6-2, 6-2 in a hard-fought women's final.And Van Beveren and Highfield dropped teammates Fadel Berthe and Berhe Serekebrhan in a see-saw battle, 6-4, 2-6, 6-3 to secure the doubles crown.

"I just tried to keep the ball in play, and she (Tzvetkova) made a lot of mistakes," Ludvigova said. "I was pretty pleased with the style of my play, except for my backhand."

Draper, who claimed the men's title without losing a set, knocked off Arturo Martinez of Odessa College, 6-2, 6-2 in his finale. Draper held a 5-0 lead in the second set before letting Martinez close the gap a bit.

Tzvetkova and Isaza got their victory over Cooke County Community College teammates Jennie Del Valle and Mercedes Fernandez, 6-2, 6-2.

All six of MC's winners earned the right to advance to the Rolex National Small College Championships in Corpus Christi, where they will be joined by MC sophomore Myriam Berthe, who won the 1990 women's singles title at the inaugural Rolex National Small College "Super Bowl" in Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Berthe, a native of Senegal, participated in the African Games and missed the regional tourney at MC.

Winners at the Small College Championships in November, which includes JUCO, NAIA and NCAA Division II and III players, earn the right to advance to this year's Rolex "Super Bowl" — Feb. 6-9 in Minneapolis.

"The junior college division has pretty much proven that it's stronger than the NAIA or the NCAA Divisions II and III," said MC tennis coach Joe Williams, who chairs the ITCA Junior College selection committee for at-large bids.

"We should do well at Corpus Christi."

Six regional tourneys supply the Small College Championships with one representative in each of the men's and women's singles and doubles brackets, but there is room for eight entrants in each draw, meaning Williams will have to produce at-large players across the JUCO board.

Some of those players will come from Williams' own stable. The MC women are the defending National Junior College Athletic Association champions, while Draper and Toby Curtis teamed last year to win the No. 2 doubles crown at the NJCAA tourney.

"We've got some players on our team that certainly have opportunities for at-large spots," Williams said. "David Draper and Toby Curtis, I'm sure, will get one in doubles.

"Seiko Ichioka (who missed the regional with an ankle injury) has an opportunity, and Myriam Berthe, who won the whole thing last year, will get one in doubles and play with Lucie Ludvigova.

"Of course all the at-large candidates must go before the committee," he said. "But their rankings all pretty much give them good shots at making it."

Here are the results from play Saturday at the Rolex ITCA Small College Regional Tournament played at Midland College

"In my business, trust is everything. And I trust my Texas National Bankers."

Franz Weis
General Manager,
VDS Racing Engines

Not too many Midland companies have a customer list that includes A.J. Foyt; Mario, Michael and John Andretti; Al Unser, Jr. and Bobby Rahal. But Franz Weis does. VDS Racing Engines, the Midland-based company he manages, builds racing engines for an impressive list of drivers who race in the Indy 500 and other major car races around the world. VDS is one of only two companies authorized to build, rebuild and maintain Chevrolet racing engines. Franz expects the same kind of performance from his banker as his professional racing clients do from the engines they buy from VDS. So it's no surprise that Franz Weis banks with Texas National. He knows that his bankers are as professional as his clients. That's why we're Franz Weis' banker. And why we're Midland's Banker.

NL: Giants achieve goal of keeping Dodgers from playoffs

(From 1B)

Los Angeles lost, and then wrapped up the third NL West title in their 26-year history in Atlanta, and first since 1982.

"This club is so much better than last year. Our hitting, our pitching and our defense," Braves manager Bobby Cox said.

As soon as Justice caught the final ball in right field, the Braves gathered on the field to watch the end of the Dodgers-Giants game on the scoreboard. Their wait was a short one, setting another celebration for the players and the sellout crowd of 44,994.

"All the way down our lineup, we have people who picked us up at one time or another," Braves catcher Greg Olson said. "Minnesota went from last to first and now the best team, the Braves, have gone from last to first. This might give us a little mental edge, but Pittsburgh has the experience edge. But, we didn't buckle under this pressure, so I don't think we will in the playoffs."

The fans began chanting, tomahawk-chopping and beating drums in the first inning as the Braves took a 2-0 lead off Mark Portugal (10-12).

Smoltz (14-13) won his sixth straight decision, allowing eight hits with two strikeouts and no walks.

Like the Braves, Smoltz made a remarkable comeback, too. He is 12-2 since the All-Star break.

"I can't even explain how great it is," Smoltz said. "I really can't."

Lonnie Smith led off the Atlanta first with a single, Mark Lemke followed with another and Terry Pendleton singled for a 1-0 lead. Justice reached on an error and Gant hit a sacrifice fly. Smith doubled home a run in the second for a 3-0 edge.

Giants 4, Dodgers 0

SAN FRANCISCO — The Dodgers' dream of a pennant died Saturday at Candlestick Park.

Los Angeles lost to its long-time rival for the second time in less than 20 hours and was eliminated from the NL West race with a 4-0 loss to the San Francisco Giants. The amazing Atlanta Braves clinched the division with a 5-2 victory over visiting Houston.

The Giants were determined not to let the Dodgers celebrate on their turf and Roger Craig managed like it was the World Series.

Trevor Wilson (13-11) held the Dodgers to two hits and did not allow Los Angeles a runner from the third until the ninth, as the Giants eliminated the Dodgers, who had held first place for 134 days.

Gary Carter singled in the third inning and Kal Daniels doubled with one out ninth off Wilson. Darryl Strawberry fanned for the the second out of the inning and Eddie Murray grounded out to end the game and the Dodgers' hopes.

The Giants turned a 1-0 advantage into a 4-0 lead with three runs in the sixth inning as Carter appeared to misjudge home plate on one play and had the ball kicked out of his glove on the next.

Willie McGee began the sixth-inning rally with a one-out single off Mike Morgan (14-10) and a steal of second before Will Clark was walked intentionally. Williams then hit a soft liner just beyond the reach of a diving shortstop Lenny Harris, scoring McGee.

McGee was called safe at home by home plate umpire Jim Quick even though Brett Butler's throw clearly beat McGee. Replays showed that McGee stepped on the plate just before crashing into Carter.

After Kevin Bass was walked intentionally, Robby Thompson flew out to left fielder Daniels, whose throw to the plate was in time to retire Clark. Carter lunged attempting to tag Clark but was thrwarted when Clark kicked the ball out of his glove. Williams was able to score before the ball was retrieved in front of the Giants dugout.

The Candlestick Park crowd of 42,712 saluted the Dodgers with a relentless wave of Tomahawk chops, the symbol of the Braves' unexpected pennant drive, in the middle of the eighth inning as the song "Louie, Louie" cascaded through the stadium.

Phillies 1, Mets 0

PHILADELPHIA — Terry Mulholland pitched his third shutout of the season as the Philadelphia Phillies beat the New York Mets to clinch third place in the National League East.

It's the Phillies' best finish since 1986 when they were second.

Mulholland (16-13) gave up eight hits, struck out four and walked none for his eighth complete game. It was his first career victory over the Mets after six losses.

The Phillies scored with two outs in the fifth inning off rookie Anthony Young. Dale Murphy walked, moved to third on Darrin Fletcher's single and came home on Braulio Castillo's double.

Young (2-5) gave up four hits in six innings.

Howard Johnson, who struck out four times and stranded nine runners on Friday night, had a fourth-inning double, but also struck out three times and stranded three more runners.

Cubs 3, Cardinals 2
Cubs 7, Cardinals 5

CHICAGO — The Chicago Cubs swept a doubleheader from the St. Louis Cardinals at Wrigley Field for the first time since July 1972 as pinch-hitter Joe Girardi singled in two runs to help win the second game.

Hector Villanueva's run-scoring single broke a tie in the eighth inning of the opener to give the Cubs a 3-2 victory.

With the score 2-2, Ryne Sandberg led off the eighth with a walk from Willie Fraser (3-3) and moved to third on Andre Dawson's single to set up Villanueva's hit.

Bob Scanlan (7-8), the fourth Chicago pitcher, worked 1 1-3 innings for the victory. St. Louis starter Ken Hill gave up two runs in seven innings.

The Cardinals tied the score 2-2 in the eighth after Shawon Dunston fumbled pinch-hitter Craig Wilson's grounder for a two-base error. Gerald Perry, batting for Hill, singled home Wilson.

In the nightcap, the Cubs drew nine walks and six of them scored. They had only three hits.

Trailing 4-3, Chicago rallied for three runs in the sixth.

Pirates 4, Expos 3

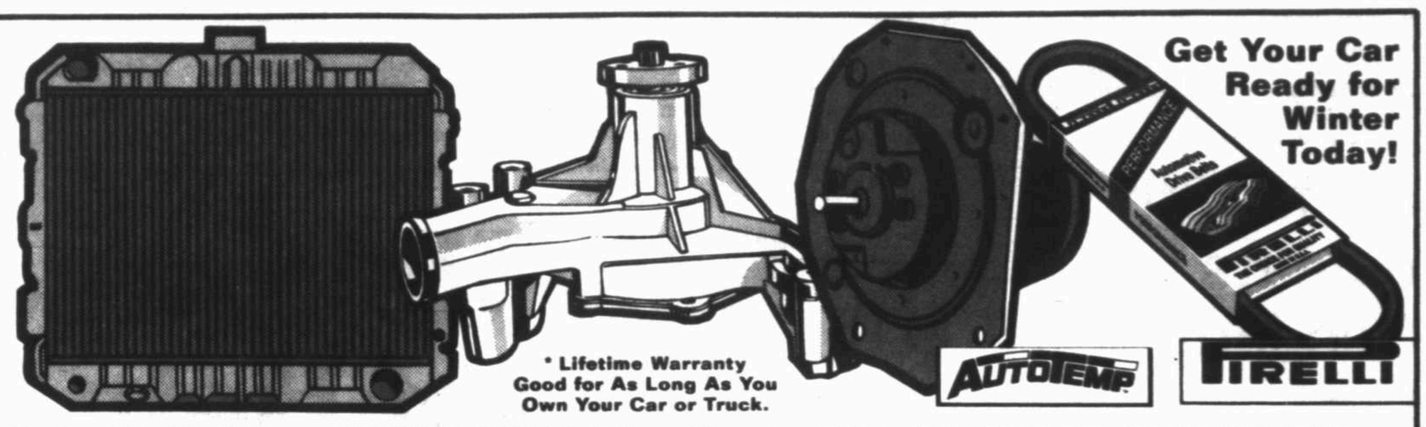

PITTSBURGH — Barry Bonds' run-scoring single capped a three-run eighth inning that included Bobby Bonilla's 100th RBI and carried the Pittsburgh Pirates past the Montreal Expos.

Bonds' RBI was his 114th, tying the career high he set last year. Bonilla tied the score with a single, his 100th RBI. He and Bonds became the first Pirate teammates to ever have consecutive 100-RBI seasons. Bonilla reached that level for the third time in the last four years.

Jeff Fassero (2-5) started the inning by giving up a pinch single to Gary Redus and hitting Lloyd McClendon with a pitch. Jay Bell singled in the first run and both runners moved up on a fly ball. Bonilla and Bonds followed with singles.

Bob Walk (9-2) pitched three scoreless innings for the win. Stan Belinda worked the ninth for his 16th save.

Mike Fitzgerald and Andres Galarraga hit home runs in the first two innings off Zane Smith. Fitzgerald's first-inning homer was his fourth and followed Spike Owen's triple. Galarraga led off the second with his ninth.

Braves' astounding year defies description

Associated Press

ATLANTA — The Atlanta Braves, NL West champions. Who would have believed it?

Worst to first. Team of destiny. The impossible dream and more.

It all happened. It's no dream. Braves' fans are still pinching themselves. So is the rest of the baseball world.

It all became reality late Saturday afernoon when the Braves beat the Astros, 5-2, while the Dodgers were losing 4-0 at San Francisco.

The Braves made their run after the All-Star break. At that point Atlanta was 39-40 and 9½ games behind the Dodgers. After that, the Braves were the best team in baseball.

From Aug. 10 until the end, no more than 2½ games separated the two teams. The Braves had a chance to fold in the final 10 days, but went on a six-game road trip to Houston and Cincinnati and won them all, coming home for the final three-game series against the last-place Astros tied for the lead.

Some may say the NL West was ordained to rest in Atlanta.

Consider Aug. 21. The Braves are down 9-6 to Cincinnati with Ron Dibble pitching. Rarely used Francisco Cabrera, batting because Atlanta is out of left-handed hitters, hits a three-run homer to tie the game. The Braves win it in the 13th 10-9.

On Sept. 11. Kent Mercker, Mark Wohlers and Alejandro Pena combine on a no-hitter in a 1-0 victory over the San Diego Padres.

How about Oct. 1? The Reds scored six runs in the first inning, but the Braves chip away and David Justice hits a two-run homer in the ninth inning for a 7-6 victory. The victim — Dibble again, who had given up only four home runs and blown only four saves all season.

"I think somebody wants us to win this thing other than our teammates," catcher Greg Olson said.

There were many heroes on the playing field, but much of the credit goes to general manager John Schuerholz, who was hired away from Kansas City last October.

"We're tired of being the laughingstock of the league. We know people are snickering under their breath as if we have a stranglehold on last place," Schuerholz said in January. Last winter, he went on a spending binge and signed several free agents, including third baseman Terry Pendleton, first baseman Sid Bream and Rafael Belliard, catcher Mike Heath and pitcher Juan Berenguer.

Schuerholz emphasized the present from the start. "I'll leave the five-year plans to Gorbachev," he said.

"When you haven't won your division in nearly 10 years, and when you've finished last four out of the past five years," he said, "this isn't happening too fast."

When Berenguer was lost for the year with a stress fracture of his right forearm, Schuerholz went out and acquired Pena from the New York Mets. Pena was 2-0 and 11-for-11 in saves for the Braves down the stretch.

Schuerholz also traded a minor leaguer for Otis Nixon at the end of spring training.

Pendleton wound up having a career-year as well as becoming the team leader. Belliard became a starter and the glue to the infield and Berenguer, the stopper in the bullpen with a career-high 17 saves until his injury. Nixon was leading the league with 72 stolen bases and hitting a career-high .297 when he was suspended for 60 days on Sept. 16 for failing a drug test.

In addition, the young pitching staff finally came of age. Tom Glavine won 20 games and became the leading candidate for the Cy Young Award. Steve Avery, only 21, was 18-8. John Smoltz won 13 and veteran Charlie Leibrandt 15.

Ron Gant had his second consecutive 30-30 year in homers and stolen bases. He also had 21 game-winning hits. Justice, the 1990 Rookie of the Year, managed to hit 21 homers and knocked in 87 runs despite missing 57 games in midseason with a strained back. Bream also contributed although missing 50 games with a bad knee.

Rookie first baseman Brian Hunter filled in for Bream and hit 12 homers and knocked in 49 runs. Deion Sanders, the Atlanta Falcons cornerback, also contributed, most notably a three-run homer in his farewell July 31 that helped beat the NL East champion Pittsburgh Pirates 8-6. He returned for the final two weeks after Nixon was suspended to give the Braves a base-stealing threat.

"We knew what we wanted to do, but I can't tell you that anybody, even myself, was so certain it was going to work this quickly and this successfully," Schuerholz said.

But it did. A team that had finished last three years in a row, including 65-97 a year ago, 28 games behind, had gone from last to first, the first team in National League history to accomplish the feat.

Alamo 8th defeats Goddard

Staff Report

Alamo beat Goddard 26-14 Saturday in an all-Midland matchup in the Midland-Odessa eighth grade football conference to highlight junior high action.

In another M-O Conference game, San Jacinto rolled over Bowie by a 34-6 margin. In Thursday games involving Odessa schools, Nimitz defeated Bonham, 34-14, and Ector nipped Crockett, 8-6.

In the eighth grade City Conference, Goddard got a little revenge with a 14-12 win over Alamo and San Jacinto fought Trinity to a 6-6 tie.

In the seventh grade American Conference, Goddard pulled off two victories with White beating Alamo Scarlet by a 22-6 margin and Red taking a 36-6 win over San Jacinto Green. In the other game, Alamo Grey won a 12-0 decision over San Jacinto White.

In the seventh grade National Conference, San Jacinto took two victories with the Green team winning a 12-0 verdict over Goddard Red and White ripping Alamo Grey by a 36-0 count.

In freshman school action, Midland Freshman split a pair of games with Purple taking a 36-20 win over Odessa Bowie and Gold losing to Odessa Hood, 22-13.

Weldon leads Seminoles over Syracuse

Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Casey Weldon passed for a career-high 347 yards and three touchdowns as top-ranked Florida State routed No. 10 Syracuse 46-14 Saturday, extending the nation's longest winning streak to 11.

The Seminoles (5-0) scored the final 39 points after Qadry (Missile) Ismail's 95-yard kickoff return put Syracuse (4-1) ahead 14-7 late in the first quarter.

Florida State rolled up 642 yards against one of the nation's stingiest defenses, a unit that was giving up only 12 points and 291 yards per game. It was the most yards ever allowed by the Orangemen, topping the record of 587 by Florida State in 1978.

Syracuse beat Florida 38-21 two weeks ago, but couldn't pull off a Sunshine State sweep against the Seminoles, who are off to a 5-0 start for the first time since their perfect 1979 regular season.

The Seminoles, who led 17-14 at halftime, broke it open in the third quarter on a 1-yard TD run by Edgar Bennett and a 50-yard scoring toss from Weldon to Shannon Baker.

MIAMI — If Carlos Huerta had to miss an extra point for the Miami Hurricanes, he picked a good time to do it.

Huerta's NCAA record streak of successful PATs ended at 157, but Miami still breezed past winless Oklahoma State.

The kick, which Huerta pushed wide to the right, came with the Hurricanes leading 30-0 late in the second quarter. It marked the first time the Cowboys had stopped Miami, which scored four touchdowns and a field goal on its first five possessions.

Miami improved to 4-0, with a showdown looming at home next Saturday against 12th-ranked Penn State. Oklahoma State fell to 0-4.

No. 5 Oklahoma 29, Iowa St. 8

AMES, Iowa — Cale Gundy threw three touchdown passes and continued his rapid climb up Oklahoma's career passing charts as the Sooners opened Big Eight Conference play with a victory.

Atoning for two consecutive disappointing performances against Iowa State, the Sooners (4-0) kept the Cyclones (2-3) out of the end zone and limited them to 253 yards.

A swarming Oklahoma defense logged eight sacks, including seven of Chris Pedersen, who had engineered Iowa State's 33-31 upset of the Sooners last year. The year before, Iowa State had burned

Georgia 27, No. 6 Clemson 12

ATHENS, Ga. — Freshman Eric Zeier threw two touchdown passes to Andre Hastings and Georgia's defense overshadowed Clemson.

Zeier's scoring passes covered 8 yards with 13 seconds left in the first half and 7 yards less than two minutes into the final quarter as the Bulldogs snapped Clemson's eight-game winning streak over two seasons.

The Tigers (3-1) had the nation's best total defense, but it was Georgia that came up with the big plays.

Georgia (4-1) came up with three interceptions and two fumble recoveries to help the Bulldogs avenge a 34-3 loss at Clemson last year and snap the Tigers' three-game winning streak in the series which Georgia now leads 37-17-4.

No. 7 Michigan 43, Iowa 24

IOWA CITY, Iowa — Elvis Grbac threw three touchdown passes, two to Desmond Howard, and little-known reserve Jesse Johnson ran for 168 yards and two scores to lead Michigan past Iowa.

Johnson had seen little action this season. He came into the game with 7 yards on two carries. Against Iowa, he ran wild, gaining 168 yards on 22 carries.

Up until the Iowa game, Howard had been the bulk of the Michigan attack. He had scored eight of the team's 11 touchdowns.

Iowa coach Hayden Fry said the entire Michigan running game, which ground out 371 yards, 173 more than its average, was impressive.

No. 13 Florida 16, LSU 0

BATON ROUGE, La. — Shane Matthews passed for 220 yards and a touchdown and Arden Czyzewski kicked three field goals to lead Florida over LSU.

It was the first time since 1985 that LSU was held scoreless, and Florida did it that time, too, by a score of 20-0.

Florida (4-2 overall, 3-0 Southeastern Conference) was favored by 23 points, and LSU (1-3, 1-2) had never been a bigger underdog.

Matthews' 220 yards included a 35-yard touchdown pass to Harrison Houston in the third quarter. It was the 37th touchdown pass of his career, third-best in Florida history and one ahead of his coach, 1966 Heisman Trophy winner Steve Spurrier.

No. 14 Ohio St. 31 Wisconsin 16

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Raymont Harris ran for two touchdowns and OSU's defense shut down Wisconsin's rushing game before the largest crowd in Ohio Stadium history.

Harris opened and closed the scoring for the Buckeyes, who are 4-0 for the first time since 1984, on touchdown runs of 1 and 6 yards.

Terrell Fletcher ran for 29 yards on Wisconsin's second play of the game, but the Badgers (3-1) were limited to minus-1 yard on 17 rushes the rest of the day in the Big Ten opener for the teams.

Neither starting quarterback or first-team offense was effective. Jay Macias came in to direct Wisconsin's two touchdown drives in the final three minutes.

S. Mississippi 10 No. 16 Auburn 9

AUBURN, Ala. — Reserve cornerback Vernard Collins broke up a 2-point conversion pass with 1:33 to play and Southern Mississippi upset Auburn for the second year in row.

Auburn (3-2), which floundered at crucial times all day, drove 58 yards for its only touchdown — a 6-yard pass from Stan White to a leaping Fred Baxter — after a couple of screen passes got the Tigers in position to score.

Coach Pat Dye, known as "Pat Tie" because he has played for ties in the past, elected to go for the win this time.

No. 17 Pitt 24, Maryland 20

PITTSBURGH — Alex Van Pelt threw for 353 yards and two touchdowns and freshman Vince Williams scored the go-ahead touchdown on his first career carry as Pittsburgh held off Maryland.

The Terps trailed 24-14 in the final period, but Jim Sandwisch connected with Marcus Badgett on a 58-yard scoring pass play. Sandwisch then drove Maryland to Pitt's 20 in the final minute before Doug Whaley intercepted at the 1-yard line on fourth-and-10 with 23 seconds left.

Withstanding a succession of botched scoring opportunities for the second consecutive week, Pitt improved to 5-0 — its best start since opening 7-0 in 1982 — as Van Pelt opened up the offense for the first time this season.

California 27, UCLA 24

PASADENA, Calif. — Doug Brien kicked a 47-yard field goal with 30 seconds remaining to cap a fourth-quarter California comeback over UCLA.

The win was the second straight for Cal over UCLA after the Bruins had beaten the Bears 18 consecutive times dating back to 1971.

After a UCLA punt, the Bears (4-0) moved from their own 40-yard line to the UCLA 29 before the drive stalled.

No. 3 Washington 54, Arizona 0

At Seattle, the Huskies continued to roll. Mark Brunell replaced starting quarterback Billy Joe Hobert — who had replaced him this season while Brunell recovered from a knee injury — and threw two touchdown passes to Mario Bailey.

Washington (4-0) had seven takeaways and sacked George Malauulu six times. Malauulu was intercepted twice and lost four fumbles.

It was the worst defeat for the Wildcats since 1949, when they lost to Michigan State 75-0 at Tucson. It was the Huskies' biggest victory since a 55-0 win over Texas-El Paso in 1982.

Hobert was lost with a neck injury and Brunell came on to hit five of seven passes for 93 yards.

Consumer Credit Counseling Service

Non-Profit, Confidential Debt Relief for Overspenders or Hard Times

Americans have had a long and growing love affair with credit, many embracing the buy-now, pay-later lifestyle. It has never been easier to acquire—and abuse—credit purchases. By the time many people with financial difficulties seek aid, they are deeply in debt to creditors. Often, the only alternatives seem to be bankruptcy, drastic changes in lifestyles or voluntary repossession of assets.

No matter how bleak your financial future looks, Consumer Credit Counseling Service (CCCS) is available to provide assistance and counseling. Located at 2500 North Big Springs Street, Suite 290, in Midland, they are experienced in all phases of credit and finance. A nationally certified counselor will sit down with you and help you compile a workable monthly budget and repayment plan. Many consumers qualify for a "debt management program" in which this non-profit agency will negotiate for reduced payments with the creditors. The debt clearing process can be a lengthy procedure, but with professional assistance from CCCS, you can overcome those credit difficulties.

Good credit is one of the most valuable assets an individual can possess. When you need assistance with financial problems, give CCCS a call. With the right help, debts can be repaid and a good credit record may be re-established over time. Contact CCCS at 561-5540 in Midland or 1-800-541-2227 in west Texas, for a free initial counseling session.

Improving Pokes tackle reeling Packers today

Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — The last time they met in 1989, the Green Bay Packers were on the way back and the Dallas Cowboys were starting over.

The Packers, behind quarterback Don Majkowski, beat the Cowboys twice in a 10-victory season and then just missed the playoffs. Certainly, the post-season couldn't be far off.

The Cowboys, meanwhile, were suffering through a 1-15 season that could only leave room for improvement. Their rebuilding under Jimmy Johnson would take some time, even though rookie quarterback Troy Aikman showed the promise that had made him the top pick in the draft.

But Sunday when the teams meet again at Milwaukee County Stadium, it's the Cowboys who appear closer to a playoff team than the Packers.

■ Dallas Cowboys vs. Green Bay Packers, noon, CBS (Cable Ch. 8).

Dallas (3-2) is coming off a 21-16 victory last week over the defending Super Bowl champion Giants.

"It's one of the biggest wins since we've been here. It really gave our guys some confidence," said Johnson.

"It's let us know, kind of reaffirms, that we are headed in the right direction," said Aikman.

Aikman, the center of the Cowboys comeback, could have been a Packer. Green Bay beat Phoenix in the final game of the 1988 season, giving the Cowboys and not the Packers the first pick in 1989's draft. Dallas took Aikman and Green Bay got Tony Mandarich, who was a disappointment in his first two seasons.

"I have thought about it on occasion and it's really kind of strange the way the whole situation unfolded," said Aikman. "I wanted to play here (Dallas) mainly because I'm from Oklahoma and this is close to my hometown and my family is able to get here and watch me play.

"I think (Green Bay) Coach (Lindy) Infante has done a good job there and it's really difficult to predict what would have happened. I know Majkowski was all-pro the following season and I might have been sitting on the bench had I been there."

Aikman didn't let the disappointment of his first season slow his progress. Dallas improved to 7-9 last season, just missing the playoffs. Now the Cowboys have taken some of the pressure off Aikman with a running game featuring Emmitt Smith.

"My rookie season we didn't have much of a running game at all. And it makes it real difficult on you when teams know that in order for you to beat them, you have line up and throw the football," said Aikman.

Majkowski and the Packers are learning that lesson, as well. They've had little or no running game for two years and are averaging just under 70 yards rushing in five games this season. All the pressure is on the quarterback and it's one reason the Packers are 1-4.

In fact, Smith's 517 rushing yards are 168 more than the Packers have as a team. The Cowboys' running game is better and so is Aikman, who completed 20 of 27 passes for 277 yards last week against New York.

"Troy's a very special player but the biggest improvement in Troy is that we have upgraded his supporting cast," said Johnson.

"Troy's going into the time of a quarterback's career where they tend to blossom," said Infante.

"I think he has steadily gotten better. He's impressive. We knew that when he was coming out in the draft three years ago. I felt, working the guy out, that he was a can't-miss quarterback."

The Packers' offensive problems go deeper than the lack of a running game. Their defense has played well, despite the absence of holdout linebacker Tim Harris, who was finally traded to San Francisco last week.

Majkowski hurt his left shoulder running for a touchdown last week in a 23-21 loss to the Rams. Coming off rotator cuff surgery on his right shoulder, he's struggled, completing 78 of 153 passes with two touchdowns and seven interceptions. He's also been sacked 16 times. Blair Kiel will start Sunday in his place.

"We are not suffering from an incurable disease here. What we have to do is take the cure," said Infante.

With Elway calling plays, Denver has new outlook

Associated Press

HOUSTON — John Elway has a new toy — the Denver Broncos' playbook.

Sensing that some of the thrill had gone from the game for Elway, Coach Dan Reeves offered the gift in preseason, thinking calling his own plays might add zing to the game for his star quarterback.

He was right.

"I thought it might get him excited about the game again," Reeves said. "He was going through the kind of syndrome of doing the same old thing again and wasn't having any fun doing it.

"Training camp was a drag, more like work than fun. It was the same routine that he'd being going through nine years."

Elway's play calling skills have helped the Broncos rebound from a 5-11 record last year to a 4-1 record going into Sunday's game in the Astrodome against the Houston Ojlers.

"I just felt he was qualified and it was just if he wanted to take the time and accept the added second-guessing," Reeves said. "The quarterback is second-guessed anyway and you add another dimension of second guessing if you call your own plays."

Elway has completed 77 of 139 passes for 1,054 yards and four touchdowns and had one intercepted this season, giving him the No. 3 ranking among AFC quarterbacks. The interception was the first in 140 passing attempts.

■ Denver Broncos at Houston Oilers, noon, NBC (Cable Ch. 9)

Elway didn't ask to call his own plays, but he was willing to give it a try in preseason.

"It allows me to call the plays that I have confidence in, especially in tough situations," Elway said. "The toughest thing was whether I'd be able to get the right personnel in the game because we do so many different things with personnel.

"I wasn't sure I'd be able to handle it all."

The improved Broncos defense and the running of newcomer Gaston Green have been a large part of the turnaround.

Green leads the AFC and ranks second in the NFL with 518 rushing yards. He gained 158 yards in Sunday night's 13-9 victory over Minnesota, his third 100-yard performance in five games.

Green replaced holdout Bobby Humphrey.

"He's given us a dimension that I don't think Bobby had and that's the tremendous speed to go all the way at any time," Reeves said. "Bobby was a great runner but he was limited as far as all-out speed and that's the best thing about Gaston."

Denver's defense has held opponents under 20 points in all five games this season and opposing quarterbacks have completed less than 50 percent of their passes in four of the five games.

The Broncos have an NFL-leading nine interceptions including three each by safeties Steve Atwater and Dennis Smith, which ties them for the NFL lead.

The entire mix has keyed the turnaround.

"We're making big plays this year instead of going out and finding ways to lose," Elway said. "I think we led in 14 of the 16 games at halftime (in 1990) and we ended up losing 11. So I think we're playing 60 minutes this year."

Archer's takes lead after front side 29

Associated Press

Seniors Vantage

CLEMMONS, N.C. — George Archer had a brief flirtation with the 50's, but had to settle for a share of the course record and a one-stroke lead Saturday in the richest event on the Senior PGA Tour.

Archer said the thought of a score in the 50's crossed his mind after he'd played the front side at a rain-dampened Tanglewood course in 7-under-par 29.

"But you just go with it and laugh at it," Archer said. "Golf is a fun game, and it's not meant to be played when you're uptight.

"I didn't want to get uptight, thinking about a 59."

Any realistic chance he had disappeared with a bogey on the 13th hole and he finished with an 8-under-par 64 to tie the course record set by Gary Player in the 1974 PGA Championship.

With a 36-hole total of 135, 9 under par, Archer was a stroke ahead of Dale Douglass and Simon Hobday with one round to go in the $1.5 million Vantage Championship.

Douglass and Hobday shot 67 and were at 136. Douglass capped his effort with a last-hole birdie and Hobday, using his elongated putter, birdied the last three.

Jim Colbert and Gibby Gilbert were next at 138. Gilbert shot 68, Colbert 70.

They were followed by Jim Dent, Ben Smith, Al Kelley and Mike Hill at 139. Dent and Kelley had 72's, Smith 71 and Hill 69.

Lee Trevino came back with a 67 and was at 142. Arnold Palmer had the same total after a 72.

Don January had to overcome a fit of anger and mount a rally to salvage a 69 and win the Vantage Classics, a separate but simultaneous competition for players 60 and over.

January collected $30,000 after completing the 36-hole competition at 140. It was his second straight Vantage Classic title.

Texas Open

SAN ANTONIO — Blaine McCallister started slowly, but went on to shoot a 1-under-par 69 and led the Texas Open by one stroke Saturday despite charges by John Cook and Gary Hallberg.

Cook's 66 and Hallberg's 65 pulled them into a tie for second at 10-under-par 200 after 54 holes. Hallberg finished second behind Mark O'Meara at the Texas Open last year after bogeying the final hole.

McCallister started Saturday's round on the par-70 Oak Hills Country Club course leading by four strokes at 10-under, but bogeyed three of the first six holes.

"I get to 10-under, and all of a sudden I'm feeling invincible," McCallister said. "Golf is an amazing thing. Every time you think you've got it mastered, it'll jump up and bite you in the butt."

McCallister managed to get back in control of his game on the seventh, making a 25-foot putt for a birdie. He went on to birdie the next two holes.

"I didn't get myself out of the tournament," he said. "I kept saying to myself I didn't get to 10-under by hitting it bad."

On the back nine, McCallister parred until the 18th, when he made a 15-foot putt to finish with a birdie.

"Luckily, I went out and I played the golf course and didn't get caught up in what everyone else was doing," said the Texan from Fort Stockton. "Hopefully I'll come in tomorrow with a bottle of champagne and a big grin."

But McCallister said the $900,000 tournament, which pays the winner $166,000, could be captured by several contenders.

"This is no three-man tournament," he said, referring to himself, Cook and Hallberg.

Franco brings home consolation prize

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Julio Franco can finally make the Texas Rangers a winner in something on Sunday.

The Rangers not only have never won a pennant, but they haven't even had a batting champion in 19 years in Arlington.

Franco could bring them the American League batting title Sunday. With two doubles in four at-bats Friday night, Franco all but put in his claim for the silver bat which goes to the batting title winner.

He raised his average to .341 while Willie Randolph of Milwaukee went 0- for-3 and was .329.

Boston's Wade Boggs didn't play and was hitting .332.

Franco's batting average has never been so high.

"It would be a special feeling," Franco said. "It's something I've always wanted to do. It's one of the biggest honors you can have."

However, Franco said he doesn't have it done yet.

"It's not Sunday and baseball is a crazy game," Franco said. "But I don't want to win it by sitting on the bench. I came here to play baseball and not to sit."

Mickey Rivers hit .333 in 1980 for the Rangers all-time hitting record. Should Franco prevail, he would become the first AL second baseman to win the batting title since Rod Carew in 1975.

Franco would become only the third right-handed batter to top the AL in hitting in the last 21 years. The others were Carney Lansford in 1981 and Kirby Puckett in 1989.

"He's an amazing hitter," said Texas general manager Tom Grieve. "He has an unusual style. You would think he uses too heavy a bat. And the way he loops the bat over his head you wouldn't think he could bring it consistently back into the strike zone. But he does and he's consistent."

Franco's previous highest major league average was .319 for Cleveland in 1987. Franco hit .306 for the Indians in 1988.

Franco led the Rangers in hitting with a .316 average in 1989. Last year he hit .296.

He went into the season with a lifetime major league average of .297.

"Ain't nobody gonna catch Franco," said Texas manager Bobby Valentine. "Franco will win it and he will win it with honor. It would have been easy for him to sit down and take it easy. But he's playing because he wants his team to win."

"I've got my money on Franco," Grieve said.

19th-ranked MHS tennis falls

Staff Report

ABILENE — Midland High's unbeaten status in District 4-5A team tennis took it on the chin here Saturday as Abilene High beat the Bulldogs by a 16-2 margin.

MHS went into the match ranked No. 19 in the state while AHS was No. 6. It only gets worse. The Bulldogs face No. 2 ranked Abilene Cooper this Saturday.

MHS will have to beat Cooper to stay in the state team tennis playoff hunt. If the Bulldogs can pull it off, the league will face a three-way tie for first place.

Midland High's Brett Shannon did win in the No. 5 slot to remain unbeaten in singles play this year. Bonnie Terrazas won the other singles match for MHS.

Harwell hangs 'em up today

Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Ernie Harwell, who broadcast the first game at Memorial Stadium in 1954, will close out his 32-year career as the voice of the Detroit Tigers on Sunday in the final game at the stadium.

"It's a schedule quirk, I guess," Harwell said Saturday. "I did the first game in 1954 and the last in 1991, and somewhere in between I got a little bit of a career going."

Harwell, 73, was honored at Memorial Stadium on Friday night.

He left as Orioles broadcaster in 1959 for the Detroit job.

"They offered a little more money, and the Tigers franchise at that time was a little more respected," Harwell said. "My sponsor here wouldn't match their offer, so I moved."

Harwell said he had no immediate plans.

"After this is over, I'll look and see what's out there, to see if I want to quit or I want to work," he said.

Lee netters gain first league victory

Staff Report

The Midland Lee tennis team won its first District 4-5A team tennis match of the year Saturday with an 11-7 victory over Odessa High.

Lee is now 1-3 in team play while OHS is 0-4.

The Rebel boys dominated Odessa High, winning all nine matches and losing only one set in the entire match. The Lee girls, however, won only two of nine matches, but it was enough to give Lee the victory. Lee's Mabry Kniffen won a singles match while Monisha Poudyal and Kristi Petteway took a double crown to put Lee over the edge for victory.

Lee's Raymond Streeter, Ben Bacon, Scott Beaubien, Jereme Gooch and Mark Moore all won in straight sets for Lee as did Streeter-Bacon, David Stark-Beaubien and Gooch-Mike Pena in doubles play.

Housing assistance programs seek homes

■ The Emergency Housing Repair and Homeownership Incentive programs are ready to begin a new fiscal year.

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

Two housing assistance programs for low-income Midlanders are ready to help, except for one problem: they're homeless.

The Emergency Housing Repair and Homeownership Incentive programs — funded with the city's Community Development Block Grant — should be ready to begin a new fiscal year by the end of the month. More than $78,000 has been allocated; all they lack is an administration and a place to call home.

"What we'd like is an organization or agency that can run the programs out of their office," said city planner Sylvester Cantu. "We'll contract with an organization on a reimbursement basis."

Last year, Emergency Repairs — then in its first year — was run by the local social service organization Casa de Amigos. Homeownership Incentive was part of Midland Neighborhood Housing Services' offerings.

Due to changes in federal regulations, however, the city must seek administrators through the bid process — although officials say it is very possible the same organizations could end up running them again.

Groups must submit proposals for administration of the programs. City officials will likely consider the organization's experience and overall capability to handle the task in awarding the bid.

"We really don't know how it will go (or) who will come back with proposals," Cantu said. Bid advertisement is currently under way, and Oct. 15 has been set for opening bids.

Chris Markestad, director of social services at Casa, said the repair program served 24 households last year.

"We had some problems getting started. Because of some staffing changes, we weren't able to get going until March," she said. "But we managed to use up all the money allocated in that time. It went extremely well, and we want to do it again."

Cantu said rules of the repair program have remained much the same this year. A homeowner who has problems with sewer or gas lines, water heaters or heat-

Bust brings police officer, teen together

■ A teen and narcotic officer become strong family unit, after a fierce battle over drugs.

Associated Press

WHITEHOUSE (AP) — Two years ago, Chris Kimble and Mark Gagliardo were on opposite sides of the law. Kimble made his living selling drugs, Gagliardo arrested drug dealers as a narcotics officer in Whitehouse.

Today, Gagliardo, 26, is Kimble's legal guardian, and the two form an unusual but strong family unit. Kimble, 18, believes he would be dead without Gagliardo's help.

In an attempt to say "thanks," Kimble nominated Gagliardo for the Texans' War on Drugs 1991 State Award for Law Enforcement.

Gagliardo, Kimble, Whitehouse Police Chief Mike Pratt and Officer Jerry Awtry formally accepted the award..

When Kimble discovered his nomination was successful, both men were floored by the news.

"I was surprised. Then I told him, and all he could say was, 'Nuy-uh, nuy-uh,' " Kimble said.

"One law enforcement officer out of the entire state — I can't believe they chose me," Gagliardo said, shaking his head.

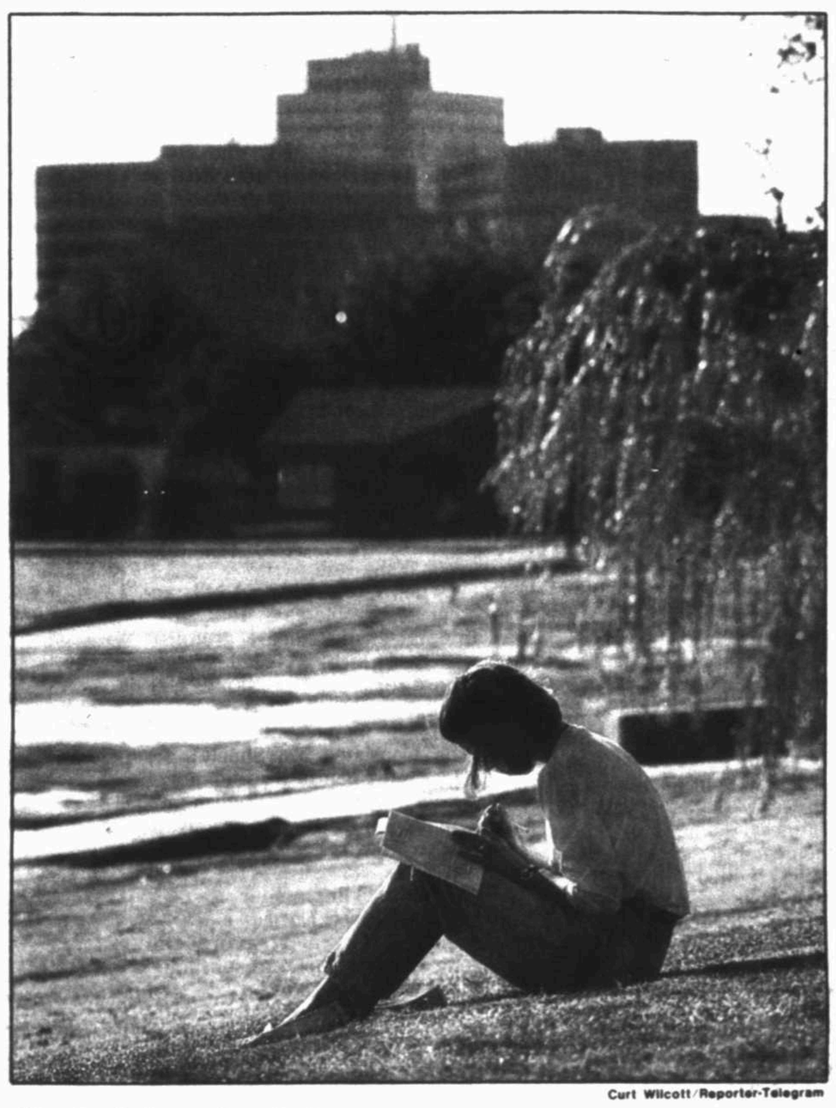

All those involved in the nomination, including Pratt and Smith County Court-at-Law Judge Randall Rogers, who both wrote letters of recommendation, believe Kimble's letter detailing how Gagliardo helped him start a new life away from drugs swayed the panel of judges.

Kimble was 11 years old the first time he tried marijuana, an experiment he said began a "downhill spiral" that included using cocaine, methamphetamines, LSD, pills, and alcohol. He said he used heroin once, "by accident."

By the time he moved from Houston to Whitehouse in 1985, Kimble was selling drugs as well as using them.

"During those years my life was clouded most of the Midland follows trend in marriage, divorce

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

For every two marriages in Midland — and throughout Texas — last year, there was at least one divorce, according to recently released statistics by the Texas Department of Health.

"We probably consider it (rate of divorce) typical, but I consider it pretty unhealthy," said Jim Huggins, president of Family Services in Midland.

"I think it shows that our society is too transient," Huggins said, adding that people are too committed to themselves and are not willing to sacrifice.

"Good marriages are built on forgiveness and sacrifice ... not just love and romance," Huggins said.

In Texas during 1990, there were 178,613 marriage licenses issued and 93,850 divorces granted.

And Midland and Ector counties were both representative of state figures.

In Midland County last year, 1,071 couples tied the knot while 614 couples ended their wedded bliss.

In Ector County, there were 1,317 marriages compared to 898 divorces.

Actual divorce figures may be even higher — up to about 10 percent — than the statistics released, according to a Gary Rutenberg, assistant director of the Statistical Services Division of TDH Bureau of Vital Statistics. That's because the number of divorces reported to the Texas State Judicial System historically have run about 10 percent higher than given to Vital Statistics.

Huggins added, however, that many of the once prevalent causes for separation are now among the least common — specifically problems with finances and in-laws, Huggins added.

Causes of divorce vary, but some of the more common, according to Huggins, include: couples who have different goals and want to seek them individually, couples who don't have time together because of work and busy schedules, and unfaithfulness.

Whatever the reason, though, it apparently is not because people don't like the idea of married life.

"Most people who get divorced get remarried," Huggins said. "People are committed to family."

To find and keep that commitment the first time down the aisle, Huggins said partners need to be aware of what marriage entails and talk about their differences and problems with each other — before matrimony.

"Premarital counseling would be an extremely productive thing to do," Huggins said.

But if things don't work out and both spouses agree, divorce is al-

Seminar helps youths do the right thing

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Several Midland youngsters performed a skit Saturday which portrayed the following situation. A young girl asked her friend for help with a math problem. The friend couldn't help her. The girl then asked her mother for help. Her mother brushed her off and said she was too busy to help. The next day the girl skipped math class.

"Who was wrong here?" asked Lygail Rabb, a Project Blueprint member.

"The mom!" more than a dozen children shouted gleefully.

"Was it right for the daughter to skip a class?" Ms. Rabb asked.

"Weeeeeeeelll, no," a youngster replied. "But, her mother should have helped her."

The dialogue between youngsters and adults continued in the "dealing with parents" session. It was one of many sessions offered to 73 Midland youths at "Youth Explosion," a day-long seminar offered by Project Blueprint, a United Way organization.

"Youth Explosion was a project of the 10th graduating class of Project Blueprint," said Shirley Howard, project chairman. "Project Blueprint introduces minority volunteers into the community. Each class chooses one community project and we decided to focus on youth."

Ms. Howard said youth of all races were selected to attend by invitation.

"Invitations were sent to organizations like the Boys and Girls Club of Midland, Casa de Amigos, Big Brothers, Big Sisters and to children targeted in certain neighborhoods," she said.

The youth who attended — ranging from fifth through ninth graders — heard adults discourse on such topics as gang rivalry, dealing with parents, sexuality, drug abuse, and resources to avoid negative peer pressure.

"If you make the right choices then you can do the right thing," said Pat Sheely, a member of Project Blueprint and one of the many motivational speakers at the seminar.

Ms. Sheely used the example of the movie "Boyz-N-the-Hood" to discuss the impact of negative peer pressure on youth involved in gang warfare.

Ms. Sheely said the film "is loaded with people in gangs and people who are a bad influence."

"But the film still has a good

United Way to conduct campaign report briefing

Staff Report

United Way of Midland will conduct the first "battlefield report briefing" in its 1991-92 campaign at 11:30 a.m. Thursday at Centennial Plaza.

"Allied Forces have been waging the war against hunger, homelessness, illiteracy, abuse and the youth at risk since the D-Day Invasion on Sept. 25," campaign officials said. Following the theme, "Allied for Victory — the United Way," the forces are heading toward a goal of $2,753,000. That money will help fund 17 agencies who fight the battles every day.

A secret weapon that is being used to get to the goal faster is a $50,000 matching challenge grant offered by Parker & Parsley Petroleum Company. For every new dollar or for each increase over last year's contribution, Parker & Parsley Petroleum will match it up to $50,000.

The pilot campaign raised $635,201, or 23.1 percent, of the overall goal.

Thursday's report briefing will feature Supreme Commander Gen. K. Michael Conaway of Texas Commerce Bank and Emcee Bill Dingus of Exxon Co., U.S.A.

Lunch is free and the public is invited.

Today's politicians have lost charm, spontaneity of past

Ott

It's getting to be that time of the year again. You can almost smell the aroma in the air. You can definitely hear it. The sound, indeed, is unmistakable. You can try to ignore it — many do, in fact — but it will do you no good. It will not go away. No indeed. It will linger. It will lurk in the shadows. It will prance. It will flirt. It will even sashay down the street in a provocative manner, hoping to turn heads and arouse expectations, not unlike the infamous painted ladies of the night.

It is everywhere.

Yes, dear friends, presidential politics is back in the news. And it will remain there until November of next year.

So get ready. The race is on. There can be no turning back now.

The early action, quite naturally, has been on the Democratic side, the party out of power. One by one, would-be presidents are leaping into the frying pan. There's Paul Tsongas, Douglas Wilder, Bob Kerrey, Tom Harkin and Bill Clinton.

I caught Clinton's announcement speech the other day on TV. It was pretty routine by today's standards.

See if this sounds familiar to you:

The candidate, with boyish good looks, was standing on the steps of the old State House in downtown Little Rock, Ark. His attractive wife and young daughter were at his side. When he took to the podium, supporters cheered his every word and waved signs that read, "Clinton for President." The speech was smoothly delivered and contained just the right number of catch phrases. He talked about fighting for "neglected middle-class Americans" and being an "education president for all children," regardless of race, color or creed.

It was a good, well-rehearsed presentation. You couldn't help but get the feeling "his handlers" were pleased, and rightfully so. When you turned on the national news that night, there he was again in living color. The TV cameras had captured his speech with perfect 15-second sound bites, meaning, of course, the event — which had been staged for the news media in the first place — could officially be considered a success.

And that's precisely why I am becoming increasingly bored with presidential politics. Everything is staged, prearranged, orchestrated. There is no spontaneity.

As a result, politics has lost much of its old charm.

You don't see the colorful characters like you did in the past, men who were roly-poly, had bald heads, sported great nicknames and smoked big, expensive cigars. Their suits were ill-fitting and they had distinctive accents, no matter which part of the country they came from. Many of them wore hats and smelled like they had just stepped out of a barber shop on Main Street U.S.A.

Today's politicians are different. They are tall and good-looking. They almost all have a full head of nice wavy hair with just the right amount of gray sprinkled in to make them appear distinguished, or, better yet, scholarly. Their suits are tailor-made and they gave up smoking years ago, about the time they took up jogging and started drinking mineral water for lunch. They hire speech coaches to rid them of even the slightest hint of a regional accent.

They have, in effect, become clones of one another. And excruciatingly boring.

This became especially evident the other night while I was watching a TV special on Lyndon Johnson, the long tall Texan who was uglier than an old droopy-eared hound dog but, nonetheless, possessed a peculiar charisma that kept attracting people to him. No matter what their political persuasion, chances are most every Texan in the 1940s and '50s had some kind of an opinion on ol' Lyndon.

The TV special depicted many of his whirlwind campaigns across the state, back in the days when he would take a helicopter from one small town to another, each time hopping from the copter onto the courthouse grounds where he would hug each man, woman and child present.

With his best Texas drawl he would urge the people to send him to Washington so he could be their voice against the big boys, even though he was the biggest of the big boys. Corny little songs — often accompanied by grown men playing a banjo or ukulele — were performed before and after he spoke.

This was before every home in America had a TV set so it was imperative that a politician — be it LBJ or anyone else — contact as many people as possible in person. The handshake was still a crucial campaign tool. So was the kissing of babies. And whistle-stop train tours.

You had to pound the pavement and press a lot of flesh.

Politicians were part showman. They had to be. Without prearranged TV appearances, they were on their own. The Madison Avenue whiz kids had not yet invented the 15-second sound bite.

Some say the politicians back then were crooks, that they wheeled and dealed in smoke-filled back rooms. It has been suggested that they passed on favors to their personal cronies and that entire elections were sometime stolen by old-styled political bosses.

History would tend to bear that out.

Yeah, maybe they were crooks.

But weren't they fun to watch?

DEATHS

Edward R. Mathews

Memorial services for Edward R. Mathews of Midland are set for 9:30 a.m. Monday at St. Luke's United Methodist Church with the Rev. Jarrel Sharp, pastor, officiating. Additional services will be held in Durango, Colo. Ellis Funeral Home will handle local arrangements.

Mathews

Mathews died Friday morning at his residence.

He was born Jan. 12, 1924, in Palestine, where he was raised. He graduated from Palestine High School in 1941. He entered the U.S. Army in 1943 and was stationed in the South Pacific in New Guinea, Moroati and the Phillipines. He was with the 2nd Photographic Squadron, serving as a nose gunner on 28 combat missions.

Following his discharge, he attended college in Oklahoma and received a degree in drafting. He joined Mobil Oil in Durango during the early 1950s.

He married Rosalee Cheney, and they lived in Durango and later in Wyoming. They then returned to Durango and in 1968 he joined Union of California.

Mrs. Mathews died in Durango in 1971.

He later met Lucille Phillips Callaway and they were married on June 6, 1974, in Cedar Hill, N.M., on the banks of the Animas River.

Mathews was transferred to Midland in 1975, where he became head of the drafting department for the Midland office. He retired from Union of California in 1986.

He was a member of St. Luke's United Methodist Church.

Survivors include his wife, Lucille Mathews of Midland; four daughters, Carol Simpson of Humble, Tina Mathews and Vicky Moore, both of San Antonio, and Ann Callaway Garcia of Vancouver, Wash.; one son, Phillip Callaway of Philomath, Ore.; one sister, Claudia Bell of Malakoff; one brother, Chesley Mathews of Palestine; four grandchildren and several nieces and nephews.

He was preceded in death by one son, John Callaway, in 1978.

The family requests memorials be directed to the American Heart Association or the American Lung Association.

Ted Phillips

BIG SPRING — Services for Ted Phillips, 78, of Big Spring will be at 2 p.m. Monday at the East 4th Street Baptist Church in Big Spring with the Revs. Bob Underwood and David Harp officiating. Interment will follow at Trinity Memorial Park with Nalley-Pickle & Welch Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

Pallbearers will be Doyle Rice, Bud Brown, Lester Adams and Fred Painter.

Phillips died Friday at a Big Spring hospital.

He was born Jan. 29, 1913, in Westbrook. He married Hazel Acuff on Feb. 1, 1971, in Odessa.

Phillips moved to Howard County at the age of 6 with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Wesley Phillips. He graduated from Big Spring High School and attended West Texas State University in Canyon for three years.

He taught school in Howard County for two years and then opened Phillips Tire Company in 1938. He was still operating the business at the time of his death.

Phillips had taught Bible studies in many places. He was a member of Phillips Memorial Baptist Church.

He served in the National Guard during World War II.

Survivors include his wife; six sons, Joe Acuff of Odessa, David Phillips and Doyle Phillips, both of San Rafael, Calif., Nathan Phillips of Austin, Tommy Phillips of Midland and Wesley Phillips of Fort Pierce, Fla.; two daughters, Debbie Burgin and Lila McAdams, both of Midland; one sister, Mrs. Truett (Kathryn) Thomas of Big Spring; three brothers, Cecil Phillips, Roy Phillips and Edgar Phillips, all of Big Spring; 16 grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

He was preceded in death by one daughter, Luan Phillips.

James Grimes

Graveside services for James Volley Grimes, 80, of Midland will be at 2 p.m. Monday in Zephyr Cemetery in Zephyr. Davis Morris Funeral Home will be in charge of arrangements. Ellis Funeral Home handled local arrangements.

Grimes died Saturday at his home.

He was born Nov. 23, 1910, in Eden and he was reared in Zephyr, where he graduated from high school in 1928. He lived there until 1943.

He then moved to Olton and later to Denver City. He went to work for El Paso Natural Gas Co., in 1952 and two years later he was transferred to Midland. He retired in 1973 from the Midkiff plant.

He married Lucille Crawford on Oct. 16, 1937, in Snyder.

He was a member of Wilshire Park Baptist Church and the Odd Fellow Lodge.

Survivors include his wife; two sons, Wayne T. Grimes of Euless and Ronald H. Grimes of Midland; one daughter, Gwena Mae Hand of Midland; one brother, T.H. Grimes of Denver City; eight grandchildren; two great-grandchildren and several nieces and nephews.

Ann Anthony

Services for Ann Anthony, 88, of Midland are set for 10 a.m. Monday at Holy Trinity Episcopal Church with the Rev. Allen Whitman officiating. Ellis Funeral Home is in charge of arrangements.

Mrs. Anthony died Friday at a local nursing home.

She was born Oct. 8, 1902, in Nyack, N.Y. She married Wesley Nosher Anthony in 1924 and lived most of her life in New Jersey, Boston and Long Island, N.Y. They moved to Brownwood in 1966.

Mrs. Anthony's husband died in 1972 and she moved to Midland. She was a member of Holy Trinity Episcopal Church and had been a member of the hospital auxiliary and other volunteer organizations.

Survivors include one daughter, Barbara Schatz of Midland; four grandchildren; six great-grandchildren and two nieces.

John Mitchell

Graveside services for John L. Mitchell of Midland will be at 2 p.m. Tuesday in Resthaven North with Gerry Hagler officiating. Ellis Funeral Home is in charge of arrangements.

Mitchell died Thursday at his home.

ers, can receive money for repairs on an emergency basis.

Casa staff screens clients for income eligibility and other factors.

"Basically, we're helping the elderly and handicapped — it's doing some good," Ms. Markestad said. The program has been allocated $28,600 for the coming year.

Assistant City Manager Rick Menchaca, a supporter of Homeownership Incentive, said the program has helped 61 families buy homes in the first 21 months of its existence.

The program helps low-income buyers make down payments to buy reasonably priced houses in the city.

"But the loan is still approved based on the buyer's credit," Menchaca said. "They qualify on their own merits and the home will be theirs."

Most of those assisted by the program have an income slightly above the poverty level according to income and family-size requirements, he said.

"There are single parents, people in their 20s and up to 65 (years of age)," Menchaca said. "We know there are people out there who could buy a home but they just can't get that nest egg together to pay the down payment."

Supplementing nest eggs this year will be a grant of $50,000. The homeownership program comes with one change officials say will make it easier for some people to find a home, although buying it may be slightly more difficult.

"A difference is last year, the home had to be within the (south and east Midland) target area," Menchaca said. "Now it could be anywhere in the city limits. That increases the selection of homes."

But financing has been restructured so that in some cases, buyers may have to have more money saved. The program can pay 50 percent of the down payment this year, whereas last year it could pick up a percentage of down payments and closing costs as well as pre-paid taxes, interest and insurance.

Homeownership Incentive will implement a new educational process this year as well. Homebuyers will attend classes on protecting their asset with regular maintenance.

"We had $1.8 million dollars loaned for homes last year," Menchaca said. "We think it has helped with the housing market."

The repair program, too, has served a need in the community, supporters say.

"It's very worthwhile," Ms. Markestad said. "We hope to be able to get started again right away."

FINDINGS: Marriages outnumber divorces

ways an alternative — and many times rather simple.

"The majority of divorces we hear are uncontested," said Judge Dean Rucker of the 318th District Court. Obtaining an uncontested divorce is "relatively easy," he added.

In Texas, no-fault divorces have been allowed since 1973. Prior to that, most reports on the subject indicated grounds for divorce were often manufactured by the couples, Rucker said.

Other marriage/divorce findings by the TDH included: a breakdown of age groups most prone to taking vows and breaking vows, the most common length of marriage before divorce, and when and whether children were involved in divorces.

The largest age group of Texans who married in 1990 was 20-24 years old for both men (48,657) and women (51,970).

Those getting divorced, however, were a little older. Divorces were most common among 25- to 29-year-old men (18,306) and women (20,399).

Most of the marriages that ended in divorce last year — 32,488 or 35.6 percent — occurred after less than five years of living as husband and wife.

And when it came to children, almost half (44,794 or 47.7 percent) of the divorces in 1990 did not involve any offspring while about one-fourth (23,132 or 24.6 percent) of divorces included only one child.

Total number of children whose parents divorced last year was 85,674.

lesson," she said.

"When one 17-year-old kills another 17-year-old does that solve anything?" she asked a group of students which included several teen-agers in the same age bracket.

Project Blueprint member Bea Pena translated Ms. Sheely's remarks into Spanish for students in the class with limited English proficiency. Translators were available in each session.

While Ms. Sheely warned against buckling under to peer pressure, Robert Dorn (in a nearby classroom) warned against the dangers of alcohol and substance abuse.

Dorn ticked off popular beer slogans and named animal mascots seen in beer commercials. The youngsters joined him and named off an impressive amount of beer slogans.

Dorn noted that television commercials and magazine advertisements intend to present a "fun image" of cigarette smokers and beer drinkers.

"Beer commercials show you the good times, and they are not all good times," Dorn said. "How many of you see commercials of people with their heads in the commode being sick the next morning, people at Alcoholic Anonymous or a drunk driver after he has just run over a child?"

Dorn also discussed abusing over-the-counter medicines or prescription drugs.

The speakers also mentioned resources, or adults children could go to in order to get help when they had problems with peer pressure, parent relations or homework.

"Don't give up until you get help," Ms. Rabb said.

time, and school was definitely a joke," Kimble wrote in his nomination letter.

Gagliardo said he remembers watching Kimble at basketball games.

"Chris would sit at the end of the bleachers away from everybody else. He was watching me more than he was the game," the officer said.

"I guess I was paranoid," Kimble said.

Chief Pratt said he and his officers knew Kimble because of his reputation as a drug dealer and the trouble he caused at school.

"Chris...I would have put him in the penitentiary. He was a thorn in our side," Pratt said.

"My seventh and eighth grade years, if I didn't come to school I was expelled; if I did I was in SOS (on-campus suspension)," Kimble said.

Driver dies after car accident

Staff Report

An Odessa man died Saturday morning from injuries sustained in a car accident.

Frederico Garza Jaquez, 48, of Odessa, was pronounced dead at the scene at about 8:30 a.m. by Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe.

Garza, the driver of a 1990 two-door Ford, drove his vehicle off of Interstate 20, approximately seven miles west of Midland about 7:30 a.m., according to Department of Public Safety reports.

He was driving eastbound on I-20 when his vehicle ran off of the road on the right side, crossed the south service road of I-20, crashed through a fence and came to rest in a pasture, the reports stated.

Garza was wearing a shoulder harness safety belt.

Midland High School kicks off homecoming Thursday

Staff Report

Midland High School will celebrate homecoming Thursday and Friday.

The 1991 homecoming parade will begin at 6 p.m. at Bowie Elementary School, 805 Elk Ave. It will proceed down "A" street and will turn right onto Illinois Street before ending at the MHS parking lot.

Honorees named to the Hall of Honor are Mark Craig (Class of 1966) and Robert Payne (Class of 1937). Both of the former MHS students are employed by NASA.

Following the parade, the bonfire will be lit in the student parking lot.

The homecoming court and Bulldog football team will be honored by the MHS band, cheerleaders, packbackers, booster club and Golden Girls.

The homecoming queen will be crowned during halftime at the Midland-Odessa football game.

All former students are invited to attend homecoming activities and to visit the school Friday.

The MHS Student Council will sponsor a homecoming dance 10:30 p.m.-12:30 a.m. Friday at the Midland High School Youth Center, 1001 W. Illinois.

Tickets to the dance are $3 per person or $5 per couple.

Commended Scholars named

Staff Report

Eleven Midland Independent School District students — seven from Midland High and four from Lee High — have been named Commended Scholars by the National Merit Scholarship Corporation (NMSC). They did qualify as National Merit Semifinalists.

Of the 1.8 million participants nationwide and 80,000 statewide who participate in the Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test/National Merit Scholarship Qualifying Test, only 35,000 students nationwide earn this honor.

Letters of commendation from their school and NMSC are presented to the outstanding test participants.

Locally, some of these students missed National Merit Semifinalist status by less than 10 points.

This year's honorees include Amit Agrawal, Lee High School; Kevin Barrett, Midland High School; Amy Behrends, Midland High School; Danielle Brune, Midland High School; Erin Brunson, Midland High School; Jenny Butts, Lee High School; Lisa Cochran, Lee High School; Valinda Dozier, Midland High School; Skipper Hollar, Midland High School; Robert McKinney, Midland High School; and Monisha Poudyal, Lee High School.

EDUCATION IN BRIEF

William E. Tucker, chief executive officer of Texas Christian University, will speak at a noon luncheon Friday at the Midland Country Club.

Tucker

Tucker, who has been the university's CEO for 13 years, has earned two academic degrees from Yale University. Under his leadership, TCU's endowment has increased from $53.6 million in 1979 to $282 million in 1990. Enrollment has increased from 5,930 to 6,538 (the university has elected to limit enrollment to 7,000) and faculty salaries have more than doubled in the last decade.

Tucker has served as moderator of the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) in the United States and Canada. He was also named to a two-year term on the Presidents Council of the National Collegiate Athletic Association. He is a member of the boards of directors of Tandy Corporation, Justin Industries and the T.J. Brown and C.A. Lupton Foundation. He was named Man of the Year by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

Friday's luncheon is sponsored by the TCU Permian Basin Association. Cost of the luncheon, which includes a buffet lunch is $13 per person. Reservations must be made by Wednesday. For reservations or more information contact members of the TCU Permian Basin Association or call (817) 921-7810.

Hearst was great admirer of Churchill

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Churchill was the greatest international figure I ever met. He and my father had been lifelong friends, so he always welcomed me. Contrary to those who believe great leaders must be saints or sinners, Churchill was a man in the middle. Perhaps that is why he understood the world so well. The wartime prime minister was known as a man of extraordinary leadership and eloquence. But I believe he would not have attained this stature without his most basic quality: shrewdness.

I've been writing a Sunday editorial column called "Editor's Report"for nearly 40 years. Frank Conniff originally assisted me in preparing the column, while Joseph Kingsbury-Smith has done so in later years. The datelines have ranged from New York to New Delhi, from Paris to Beijing, from the Middle East to Moscow.

In 1952 I began twice-a-year news trips to Europe and elsewhere, interviewing heads of state, important political figures, military leaders, U.S. ambassadors in various countries, and others from all walks of life.

Churchill was the greatest international figure I ever met. He and my father had been lifelong friends, so he always welcomed me. Contrary to those who believe great leaders must be saints or sinners, Churchill was a man in the middle. Perhaps that is why he understood the world so well. The wartime prime minister was known as a man of extraordinary leadership and eloquence. But I believe he would not have attained this stature without his most basic quality: shrewdness. Churchill saw through to the core of issues and men. In my chats with him, he had an uncanny knack for getting quickly to the heart of a problem and into the minds of those involved. That's what made him great.

I'll never forget a 1961 lunch that I had with Churchill and his attractive eldest daughter, Diana, in the oval dining room of their penthouse suite at the famous Hotel de Paris, overlooking the harbor at Monte Carlo. Churchill greeted me in his sitting room, nattily attired in a gray worsted suit and waistcoat. We chatted over an aperitif. He had read the morning newspapers over his cafe au lait, and just finished a prolonged argument with his valet over trimming his hair. So Sir Winston was well informed and feisty. We discussed his day. He planned to go for a long drive after lunch, then spend several hours on his voluminous mail, don his black tie and jacket for dinner, and play the roulette wheel in the nearby casino until God knows when. Sir Winston had just celebrated his 87th birthday and said he was now slowing down in his retirement. I burst out laughing. What slow down! What retirement!

The Churchills served filet mignon and a lovely French wine. Sir Winston then poured several shots of 100-year-old brandy. His hand was as steady as a surgeon's. I was about to collapse under the table from the effects of all his hospitality, when Churchill presented me with his a very expensive-looking cigar. I rarely smoke and didn't know what to say. "Go ahead," Sir Winston said, urging me into even more dangerous waters. "It's the perfect complement to a good lunch."

I took the cigar, lit up, and looked out on the beautiful harbor. Paradise itself seemed to be drifting before my eyes. The sun shone brightly in a clear, blue sky. Watching the pale smoke climb into the vast expanse, I instinctively knew that I'd remember the moment for years. I would be able to tell my grandchildren that I had smoked one of the famous Churchillian stogies in the company of the great man himself.

Some international leaders so totally repelled me that I never cared to meet or interview them. The Ayatollah Khomeini was one. The Iranian leader was a madman who cloaked his fanaticism in the robes of religion.

Charles de Gaulle was another. Although I met the French leader casually on a couple of occasions, he projected such arrogance that I found it impossible to suffer through his pomposity. De Gaulle cut an aristocratic and impressive figure nevertheless, and he rated very high with me as a genuine French patriot.

Jawaharlal Nehru also deeply disappointed me. I interviewed the Indian prime minister once and was completely turned off by his racist tenor. It was our first and last meeting. Nehru seemed obsessed with race. Nehru was imperious, arrogant, and perhaps even more conceited than de Gaulle. He came across as a pompous, petulant little boy.

After Churchill, the three most memorable leaders I met were West German chancellor Konrad Adenauer, Israeli prime minister David Ben-Gurion, and Irish prime minister and, later, president Eamon de Valera. All played the same role as George Washington — fathers of their countries.

I shall never forget an interview that Joseph Kingsbury-Smith and I had with Adenauer in 1955. For one solid hour he looked us directly in the eyes — never deviating — while saying over and over to us: The Soviets hoped to wean West Germany out of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and away from the West.

I first interviewed Israeli premier David Ben-Gurion in 1955. It was obvious, merely looking at and listening to Israel's legendary first leader, that he was a man of exceptionally strong will.

Ben-Gurion taught me a lesson: No man can truly be a leader without total commitment. That seems like an easy cliche in the abstract, but it becomes charged dynamism when carried out in human character. That dynamism is often unexplainable until one feels it in a simple setting. That was what made Ben-Gurion a leader. He communicated greatness and strength of will in ordinary human contact. His personality transformed a simple moment into an unforgettable experience.

I interviewed Eamon de Valera on numerous occasions.

I visited de Valera as much to know the man himself as to discuss Irish issues. He was a studious, old-world gentleman who was prime minister three times, for a total of 21 years, and president for another 14 years. He thus led Ireland for 35 years, and would have continued longer if he had not gone virtually blind.

De Valera was a deeply religious man, charitable and very forgiving. The Irish leader spoke softly, with great personal charm and not a little subtlety. I never heard him voice a single criticism of anyone. Not even the English! De Valera had a secret source of personal magnetism and power. It was an exceptional sense of loyalty — to his wife and seven children, his church, and his country.

I met many other world leaders — Israel's strong-willed Golda Meir, Egypt's ambitious Gamal Abdel Nasser, and a farsighted Anwar Sadat. Saintly popes like John XXIII and Paul VI. And such widely different individuals as Indonesia's Sukarno (a perennial playboy) and Kenya's stable Jomo Kenyatta; Italy's studious prime minister Amintore Fanfani, France's Georges Pompidou, thoughtful Francois Mitterrand, and Britain's "Iron Lady," Margaret Thatcher; South Vietnam's dedicated Ngo Din Diem, Taiwan's ill-served Chiang Kai-shek, and China's ill-advised Deng Xiaoping.

I still try to keep up with Mitterrand and Mrs. Thatcher (even though she has resigned), because their grasp of world events, particularly in Europe, is first-rate. Mitterrand has steered French socialism to the free-market economy, a very significant feat, and has proven to be an excellent intermediary between Washington and Moscow on certain issues.

During my 1990 interview with Thatcher in London, she said that Iraq's Saddam Hussein must be forced to withdraw completely from Kuwait. She added that, if necessary, she would join Britain's military forces with those of the United States to drive Hussein from Kuwait. She, and her successor, John Major, kept her word and the U.S. and British forces performed magnificently.

As I was standing to leave, Thatcher put out her cheek for a kiss. I froze. My mind darted back to a ceremony in Grosvenor Square four years earlier, honoring the American Eagle squadrons. After Thatcher had unveiled a statue, I tried to give her a peck on the cheek, but she instinctively pulled away. Now she offered it. I gave her a good buss and we smiled. Perhaps she remembered my futile attempt that rainy day, perhaps not. But I was very moved. It's not often that an American gets to kiss a British prime minister!

Of all the world leaders I have met, I wish I had studied Deng Xiaoping longer and better. I recall visiting him with my wife and family and Joseph Kingsbury-Smith, in 1980, during a five-week trip of interviewing Asian leaders.

Quick-witted and good-humored, Deng said that China's feet had been unbound, and he was going to modernize his country with Western technology, investment, and internal free-market changes. I was captivated. Here was a soft-spoken, charming individual who would right the wrongs that had left China behind in the twentieth century.

I left Beijing convinced that the brutal rule of terror, instituted by Mao Tse-tung more than three decades earlier, had been buried with the late dictator. History shows how wrong I was. Deng — no different from Mao — ordered young protesters calling for limited freedoms, some of which already had been promised, shot down in cold blood in Tiananmen Square on June 3-4, 1989. I grieved for them.

Today the diplomatic word coming out of China is that Deng privately admits his assault was a mistake, and that it set back China's economic plans and future for years. I would like to hear that from his own lips. Perhaps it would ease some of the pain I have felt from being so completely taken in by Deng's statements about freedom. I'm not sure that I'd believe him, but at least I would like to see his face when he admits his mistake.

Mathematician thinks he has solved orange-stacking problem

By Keay Davidson
Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — A mathematician at the University of California at Berkeley has apparently found the solution to a geometric puzzle that's gone unsolved for nearly four centuries: What's the best way to stack oranges?

A mundane question, huh? Surely it's easier than the mind-bending math you wrestled with in high school, right?

Wrong. For 380 years mathematicians have struggled with "Kepler's sphere-packing problem," named for 17th century scientist Johannes Kepler, who solved mysteries of planetary orbits.

Kepler sought the most efficient way to pack spheres (like oranges) in a non-spherical box, not because he planned to make a killing in the orange market but rather because mathematicians enjoy theorizing about such things. Kepler also hoped his work would help explain why crystals (such as snowflakes) "pack" into the shapes they do.

But the problem stumped Kepler and generations of geniuses since. Sphere-packing has been called "one of the hardest unsolved problems in geometry" by English mathematician Ian Stewart.

But UC-Berkeley mathematician Wu-Yi Hsiang says he's cracked the mystery: The best way to stack oranges is the way they're stacked in the grocery store.

That is, each orange should sit in the depression formed by three other oranges. That way the stack is most stable and mostly compact. There's simply no better way to stack oranges as Kepler suspected, grocers know and Hsiang recently proved in a 100-page report.

At this point you may ask: "Wait a minute. Mathematicians have spent almost 400 years trying to figure out something that is common sense to grocers?"

But "common sense" is a poor guide to the true nature of the universe. For example, Albert Einstein's revolutionary physical theories defied the "common sense" of 1905.

Hence mathematicians seek mathematical "proof" of ideas that others take for granted, to locate key flaws that point to new concepts of nature. After all, those who discover such concepts may win Nobel Prizes.

Besides, "it's really fun," as Hsiang says.

"This problem is more beautiful and more natural than other (mathematical) problems. The more you think about it, the more you feel attached to it and excited by it," said Hsiang, 54.

If Hsiang is correct, then he "will have achieved one of the most astonishing successes in the entire history of mathematics," Stewart writes in the July 13 New Scientist.

The finding also could yield practical insights for the study of crystals and solid-state physics.

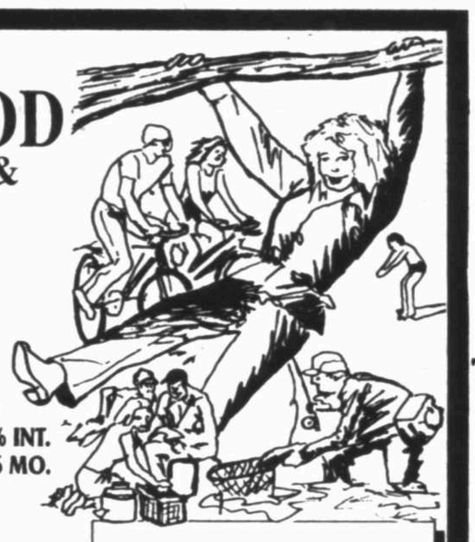

Hsiang became interested in Kepler's problem more than a year ago, when he started teaching a class on classical geometry.

"This problem has been around so long it's sort of an embarrassment to mathematicians," Hsiang said.

"A computer can compute some definitive computation real fast," Hsiang said. "But a computer is a machine that has no mind; the human brain has a mind."

And the mind, he said, can intuitively find answers to the sphere-packing problem, which has so many possible solutions that "it's impossible to compute them all."

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Midland College hosts 'A Texas Romance'

By H.A. Tuck

Midland College is cooperating with Midland Community Theatre and Texaco in the presentation of a new play, "A Texas Romance."

Tuck

Written by Texas author Ellsworth Schave, the comedy-drama is set in a small Texas town in 1928. It's about a younger man who "comes calling" on a widow who's older.

MC student Stephen Madrid plays the young suitor.

The play is being presented in MCT's Mabee Theatre II, with performances on Oct. 11, 12, 18, 19, 20, 24, 25, and 26. Prices are $7 and $9. Call 682-4111 for reservations.

If you're currently enrolled in any English class at MC, you are eligible to enter the fourth annual Hilda Simmons Levitt Poetry Contest. Entries may be submitted to any English instructor or the Chaparral Composition Center.

The contest was established by Midlander Stanley Levitt in memory of his late wife, who was a journalism graduate from LSU and a frequent student at Midland College.

Prize awards are $500, $200, and $100 cash for the top three winners, plus plaques.

There should be some tickets left for the Oct. 12 concert by Reba McEntire at Chaparral Center. Since this is written several days before publication, tickets may be scarce. They are priced at $18.50 for the 8 p.m. concert, which also features top acts of Aaron Tippin and Restless Heart. All seats are reserved. Tickets are available, cash only, at Chap Center or Endless Horizons. They also may be purchased by credit card at Chap Center or by calling 685-4584.

Coming to Chaparral Center on Oct. 19 is the annual Shrine Circus.

Then there's a rather unique concert on Oct. 26 when country-western singer Michael Martin Murphy performs with the Midland-Odessa Symphony.

Chaparral golfers play in their second tournament of the season Monday and Tuesday. This one is the Odessa College Invitational, being played at The Club at Mission Dorado.

Collegiate golfers require stamina as well as skill, since they must carry their own clubs and walk during their round. To make this one even tougher, they'll play 36 holes on Monday and 18 holes on Tuesday.

At the recent Texas A&M invitational for junior colleges, four of the top five teams were from this conference, so spectators can see some of the best collegiate golfers in the country at this event. There's no charge, so come out and watch the action.

It was one of those grand experiments which just didn't work. The shuttle service, designed to transport students from the Chaparral Center parking lot to other buildings, stopped operations Friday afternoon.

There was a lack of demand for the service on the part of students, according to C.C. Dakil, dean of students. The shuttle was designed to help alleviate parking problems in the morning hours.

However, for special meetings which are held on campus the shuttle service may be requested by calling Dakil's office at 685-4502 or campus security at 685-4734.

For a panoramic view of art and artistic trends, be sure to see the 14th annual Midland Arts Association's Fall Juried Show, which is being displayed at McCormick Gallery. The show may be seen daily without cost.

McCormick Gallery is located in the Allison Fine Arts Building. Hours are 1-5 p.m. Sunday, 8 a.m.-10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Friday, and 9 a.m.-5 p.m. Saturday.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director at Midland College.

VOLUNTEERING

The Volunteer Center of Midland serves over 90 nonprofit agencies in Midland. Here are just a few of the volunteer opportunities currently available.

■ A band instructor is needed to instruct a beginner brass band. This growing band is an enthusiastic group of teens and adults needing your special guidance and expertise. Call the Volunteer Center today for more details.

■ A agency dedicated to the well being of children and families needs a receptionist-secretary immediately. Duties include answering phones, tying, filing, and working with a fun group of people. Hours are flexible to accomodate your schedule.

■ Approximately 150 little girl dolls need a special touch to get dressed so they can be given to needy children for Christmas. These dolls will then be displayed the first week of December at Midland Park Mall. If you or your club or group would like to help dress these dolls or assist with the mall display, call the Volunteer Center today for more information.

■ A local senior citizen's agency needs volunteers to call or visit homebound elderly individuals. This is a very flexible volunteer opportunity and the need is great. Call a friend and team up for this enjoyable volunteer opportunity.

■ 697-HELP. The only number you need to remember when you have a question or problem and do not know where to find the answer. Call Information and Referral Midland. 697-HELP.

For more information on how you can volunteer, please call the Volunteer Center of Midland 697-8781.

Staff Report

Fall dates for the AIMS Aptitude Testing Program on the Midland College campus will be Nov. 22-24 and Dec. 13-15.

AIMS (Aptitude Inventory Measurement Service) offers a program which is appropriate for high school and college students faced with choosing colleges and college majors, as well as adults unhappy with their present occupation or situation.

AIMS, which has been hosted by Midland College since 1976, is offered several times during the fall and spring semesters. It now is conducted in the Student Center's counseling center on the Midland College campus.

Testing is administered on a Friday with the interpretation of scores on either Saturday or Sunday. Fee for the entire program is $550, which includes the entire battery of tests and the evaluation. Written materials include a report specifically for the examinee. An audio tape of the conference also is provided each client. Enrollment space is very limited, so interested persons should call the AIMS office in Dallas at (214) 234-8378 soon to reserve space in one of the next testing dates or to obtain more information.

The AIMS program involves tests which measure aptitudes. Such aptitudes are an individual's inherent, natural abilities. Although interest, personality and vocabulary tests also are given, the AIMS staff places more emphasis on the aptitudes of an individual because these attributes remain stable over time and do not change as one's interests generally do.

The important consideration is that there is no good or bad score on any of the aptitude tests. Each score, high or low, indicates a certain aptitude or lack of aptitude. In many cases a weak aptitude is as essential for job satisfaction as a strong aptitude. For example, accountants with strong creative aptitude frequently are frustrated in their jobs.

"The goal," explains John Gaston, director of AIMS, "is not to score high on all of the tests, but to find a satisfying outlet for the unique pattern of talents which you happen to possess."

Following the testing, there is a one-to-one session to review the results and make recommendations based on the scores. The information from the testing can be used to determine appropriate colleges and suitable majors or careers for which a person might be best suited.

Younger people, in particular, can use the program quite effectively.

Brenda M. Smith, a Senior Staff member with AIMS, says that a high school student could be provided with good information and avoid aimless wandering in college.

EDUCATORS:
TAKE THIS TEST!

1. Do you want to pay less tax now but have more spendable income? ☐ Yes ☐ No
2. Do you want to save money and not pay taxes now on the amount saved? ☐ Yes ☐ No
3. Do you want to earn interest on money saved and defer taxes on that interest? ☐ Yes ☐ No

If you answered "yes" to all of the above, we have a Tax Deferred Annuity [403(b)] program that will provide these tax advantages.

The chart below compares tax deferred savings with conventional after-tax savings. You can see the difference.

	Conventional Savings Plan	Tax Deferred Savings Plan
Your Income	$25,000	$25,000
TDA Contribution	0	2,500
Taxable Income	25,000	22,500
Estimated Federal Income Tax	4,280	3,580
After Tax Savings	2,500	0

College offers short courses

Staff Report

The Midland College Department of Continuing Education will offer nine short courses beginning the week of Oct. 14.

Boo Bucket will be taught by Renee Tassin on Monday, Oct. 14 from 6:30-9:30 p.m. Students will learn how to make a colorful change to trick-or-treat bags. Boo Buckets are simple and fun to make. Supply list is available at the Department of Continuing Education. Course fee is $10.

Rebecca Bell will teach Telephone Courtesy and Customer Service on Mondays from 5:30-7 p.m., Oct. 14 through Oct. 21. The class is for anyone who answers the phone, and will sharpen customer service skills. It teaches the importance of telephone techniques in providing quality service and explains customer wants and needs. The workshop will also focus on how to manage difficult customers. Course fee includes instructional materials. The course fee is $10.

Aerobics will be taught by Becky Speight on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 7-8:30 p.m., Oct. 15 through Nov. 21. It is a complete physical fitness program of easy-to-learn exercises designed to condition and tone the body. Course fee is $37.

Infant and Child CPR will be taught on Tuesday and Wednesday, Oct. 15 and 16 from 6-10 p.m. Infant and child rescue breathing and cardiac compressions will be covered as well as obstructed airway prevention and rescue techniques. Students will practice on mannequins. To receive certification, students must successfully complete a performance exam. Course fee is $25.

Financial Planning will be taught on Tuesdays from 7-9:15 p.m., Oct. 15 through Nov. 5. This class is designed for students who are seeking knowledge in investments and financial planning and desire to develop strategies to achieve financial goals in life, i.e., mid-life, pre-retirement, and retirement. Topics to be included are: college funding, insurance, asset allocation, investment types and strategies; and effects of inflation, taxation, and compound interest on income and asset growth. While working with a Certified Financial Planner, students will use concepts to develop a personal financial plan. Notebooks and materials are included. Course fee of $35 covers all materials and registration for either one person or a couple.

Alfred Johnson will teach Lunchtime Lotus on Tuesdays and Thursdays from noon-1 p.m., Oct. 15 through Nov. 21. If you don't have time to take a normal class, then why not spend your lunch hour two days a week for six weeks learning Lotus 1-2-3? Spreadsheet, graphics, information management, organizing and sorting are amomg the topics covered. The required text, Student Edition of Lotus 1-2-3, is available at the Midland College Bookstore. Course fee is $30.

CPA Continuing Professional Education will be taught on Tuesday, Oct. 16 from 7:30-9:30 p.m. Midland College is registered with the Texas State Board of Public Accountancy as a sponsor of continuing professional education for Certified Public Accountants. A two-hour seminar/workshop is offered the third Tuesday of every month to help area CPA's meet their continuing education requirements. These seminars are led by a Certified Financial Planner and cover current business topics and trends. For more information or to receive monthly mailers, call 685-4518. Course fee is $10.

Jean Roberts will teach Advanced Quilting on Thursdays from 7-9:30 p.m., Oct. 17 through Nov. 21. A continuation of Beginning Quilting, students will learn how to quilt more complex patterns and pieces. Supply list is available at the Department of Continuing Education. Course fee is $31.

Lotus 1-2-3 will be taught by Chris Cunningham on Saturdays from 9 a.m.-noon, Oct. 19 through Nov. 23. Students will learn the feature of the Lotus 1-2-3 program through this course. Spreadsheet, graphics, information management, organizing and sorting are among the topics covered. The required text, Student Edition of Lotus 1-2-3, is available at the Midland College Bookstore. City council plans public hearing

Staff Report

The Midland City Council is expected to conduct a public hearing on the city's draft Comprehensive Housing Affordability Strategy (CHAS) about 10:45 a.m. Tuesday.

The hearing, planned during the council's regular meeting, will allow local residents a chance to give their opinions of the plan, which details Midland's housing problems and attempts to find solutions.

Major problems found in the city's housing situation include a lack of renter assistance, low quality of available homes and housing for the homeless. The city hopes its five-year CHAS will garner federal Housing and Urban Development money administered by the state in a new program.

Copies of the document are available for the public to read at the city planning office and city secretary's office in City Hall as well as both branches of the Midland County Public Library.

NASA changes definition of 'The Right Stuff'

By Marcia Dunn
Associated Press writer

SPACE CENTER, Houston — Used to be astronauts were chosen for The Right Stuff, independent, tough test pilots who could surmount the unknown hurdles on the way to the moon.

With the first seven Mercury astronauts that boiled down to a sterotype: white, small-town, male.

All that has changed.

Now astronaut judge Duane Ross presides over files of candidates, 1,971 of them, filed alphabetically in cabinets in a small converted warehouse.

They represent the young and the old, men and women, engineer and space novice, scientist and space buff, all of whom share one thing — they want to be astronauts. Early next year, 12 to 19 of them will be.

Explanations always vary about what it takes to enter this esteemed circle. These 21st-century explorers, whose hobbies include classical flute, dance, bridge, needlework, baking and literary criticism, still have The Right Stuff, to be sure, but the definition has changed.

"In the Mercury program, the job was to get there and get back in one piece," says Ross, manager of NASA's astronaut selection office at Johnson Space Center in Houston. "The thing you were asking these people to come and do was really scary business. You had to have the right kind of person to deal with that kind of thing.

"There is still some of that (risk-taking) involved just because of the nature of the program. So, from the standpoint of courage, what it takes, I guess there's still some of that stuff involved. But it's certainly more research and scientific and engineering in orientation now than it was in the past."

NASA's senior spaceman, John Young, says today's astronauts are better educated, as they should be. Young, a former Navy test pilot and moonwalker, was in the second group of astronauts chosen in 1962, following the seven famed men of Mercury by three years.

He is, at age 61, still an astronaut and still enthralled with space.

"Shoot, when we were picked, I didn't know how to spell 'astronaut' because I didn't know what the thing was," Young says. "Some of these candidates have wanted to be an astronaut ever since they were born almost. They've pointed their careers toward becoming an astronaut.

"It's changed a lot, but I think the motivation is pretty much the same."

Alan B. Shepard Jr., America's first space traveler, is 67 now and a millionaire businessman in Houston.

"All of us were there because we believed in what we were doing," Shepard says. "Today, astronauts still believe in what they're doing. It's a very personal challenge."

Astronaut Group 13 reflects NASA's learned look. Eight of the 23 candidates selected in 1990 have Ph.D.s. Another two are M.D.s. All but two have at least a master's degree.

They all got their silver astronaut wings July 29 after completing the required year of training at the Johnson Space Center. Their induction brought to 195 the number of Americans accepted over the decades into this elite group.

But still, America's astronauts are overwhelmingly male, white and aviator-skilled. Of the current 97 astronauts:

■ Seventeen are women, including four of the six who broke the sex barrier in 1978. Astronaut Jan Davis considers it a good representation given the fact that fewer women than men have the necessary backgrounds. "We're all there because of our qualifications. We're not there as token women. That is more important than looking at the numbers," says Davis, 37, who has a doctorate in mechanical engineering.

■ Five are black. One of them — physician Mae Jemison — is a woman. She says there are plenty of qualified blacks, but many simply do not apply. "We have to make sure minorities and women know they are welcome in the astronaut program, they are welcome in space exploration and they are welcome in science," says Jemison, 34, who joined NASA in 1987.

■ Three are Hispanic.

■ One is Oriental.

■ Fifty-six are military, including Air Force Maj. Eileen Collins, who last year became the first woman to be named a shuttle pilot candidate. Barring injury, she will become the first female shuttle commander. The remaining 41 are civilian engineers, physicians, physicists, chemists, astronomers and geologists.

Jemison expects a boom in the number of astronaut-scientists — and thus a boom in women and minorities — as NASA gets closer to building a space station and sending crews to the moon and Mars.

"It's a necessity," Jemison says.

Unlike some of their predecessors, today's astronauts see themselves as ordinary folk. They range in age from 31 to 62; the average age is just under 41. Most are married with children. A few are married to each other.

Davis and husband Mark Lee will become the first married couple to fly in space next year.

"It probably helps since we understand each other's schedules and demands. Other than that, it's really no big deal," Davis says.

Astronaut M. Rhea Seddon sees Davis and Lee's flight as a natural step in normalizing space travel. Seddon is married to spaceman Robert "Hoot" Gibson. They live in the Houston area, as do all astronauts, and have two sons.

"We're not like the Right Stuff guys, who were really different," says Seddon, 43, a physician and one of the first six female astronauts.

Astronauts no longer must endure the grueling physical tests that were required of the Mercury men, who were chosen for their stamina, size, skill. Nonetheless, qualifications are stringent.

Applicants must be U.S. citizens with at least a bachelor's degree in engineering, biological or physical science, or math, followed by at least three years of related work experience or 1,000 hours of jet-flying time.

They must be no shorter than 4-feet-10½, no taller than 6-feet-4, have uncorrected eyesight of at least 20-50 for pilots and 20-150 for mission specialists, correctable to 20-20.

The starting salary is about $45,000 a year. Top scale is $80,000.

Just about anybody can apply to be an astronaut, and just about anybody does. Recent applicants have included a professional football player, a television news celebrity and a half-dozen or so prison inmates.

The football player had the right degree — engineering — but lacked experience as an engineer. The news celebrity had the wrong degree. The prisoners had, well, prison records.

Some applicants cite space travel experience. Ross identifies them as "the people who can stop the Earth from rotating through telekinesis, the people who have already been to the moon."

There were 2,235 applicants for the Class of '92 by the July 1 cutoff date, far less than the record 8,079 for the Class of '78.

Ross and 19 others — mostly senior astronauts — spent July and August paring the qualified group of 1,971 down to about 300 "highly qualified" contenders. Of these, about 100 will be brought in for interviews starting in December.

Recommendations will be made. Background checks will be run. And, in February or March, 12 to 19 will be approved.

Dreyfuss to play Bacchus during Mardi Gras parade

NEW ORLEANS — Richard Dreyfuss will star as Bacchus, god of wine and merriment, in one of the splashiest parades of New Orleans' Carnival season.

The actor will lead 850 riders on 27 floats in the March 1 parade.

Dreyfuss

Previous Bacchuses include Danny Kaye, Bob Hope, Jackie Gleason, Charlton Heston, Kirk Douglas, Billy Crystal and Dennis Quaid.

"Richard Dreyfuss has exactly the right flair and appreciation of revelry to be a wonderful Bacchus," Owen Brennan, head of the Bacchus parade, said in a story Saturday in The Times-Picayune.

Dreyfuss has appeared in more than two dozen movies, including "Jaws," "Close Encounters of the Third Kind" and "The Goodbye Girl."

NEW YORK — Actress Laura Dern said she rarely dates her leading men and is tired of the media reporting otherwise.

The 24-year-old daughter of actors Diane Ladd and Bruce Dern said reading that she dates her leading men "really depresses me until I realize: Hey, wait a minute — I don't do that."

Dern

Dern conceded in an interview in the Oct. 17 Rolling Stone that she dated Kyle MacLachlan after meeting him while filming "Blue Velvet."

But she said "we waited until almost the end of filming to get together, even though we knew we wanted to be, earlier, because it felt so different than anything we had felt before."

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Country singer Eddie Rabbitt said rock 'n' roll music videos exploit sex.

"Whatever happened to songs about love and romance?" he asked in an interview in the October issue of Closeup, the Country Music Association magazine.

"Every video you see is a bunch of girls with nothing on and a bunch of rock 'n' rollers singing about sex," he said.

Rabbitt's hit records include "Drivin' My Life Away" and "I Love a Rainy Night."

BOSTON — Rosalyn Carter is touring the nation, urging mothers, doctors and politicians to do their part to ensure every child is vaccinated against measles.

The former first lady has lobbied for immunization since her husband, Jimmy, was governor of Georgia. Mrs. Carter's new program is called "Every child by 2," reflecting her goal to have every child in the United States immunized and into primary health care by age 2.

Friday she toured Upham's Corner Health Center in the city's Dorchester section.

She plans to spend at least three years on the effort.

LOS ANGELES — British actress Patsy Kensit said she was depressed by a recent screening of her movie "Twenty-one" because it reminded her of sadder times.

In the film, which opened Friday, Miss Kensit plays a precocious 21-year-old Londoner named Katie, who is dealing with her father's death and a deteriorating relationship.

During filming, Miss Kensit said she, too, was mourning the death of her father and coping with her failing marriage to musician Dan Donovan.

"Watching myself on the screen reminded me of a time in my life when I thought I'd never be happy again," Miss Kensit said Saturday.

"I look ill and miserable in that movie, and that's exactly how I felt," she said.

Miss Kensit, 23, has completed four films since "Twenty-one," including the upcoming "Blame It on the Bellboy" with Dudley Moore.

Smiles and hugs

Joan Love hugs Midland City Secretary Bill Clanton after he swore in the board of directors of Habitat for Humanity Saturday night. Josie Davis (right), also a director, looks on. The organization is an ecumenical Christian housing ministry aimed at eliminating sub-standard housing by making decent homes available to low-income families.

Black men's group plans fall reception

Staff Report

The first Coalition of 100 Black Men fall reception is set for 7-9:30 p.m. Friday at the Midland Hilton.

Since its inception in June of 1991, the Coaltion of 100 Black Men has been "predicated upon the principles of mentoring to provide strong African American male role models for African American youth," according to a press release provided by the organization.

"The group is also committed to addressing the salient problem areas of the African American community such as drug abuse, high school retention and higher education," the releaae stated.

The general public is invited to attend. A $3 donation from each person will be requested. Refreshments will be served.

Firefighters to be handing out towels

ADDISON (AP) — If they don't throw in the towel first, Addison firefighters will begin distributing them.

As a money saving measure, city officials in this North Dallas suburb announced last week that some firefighters would be handing out towels and helping the staff at the city's upscale recreation center.

The plan is to have firefighters helping out at the center seven hours a day, at least five days a week. Scheduling details are still being worked out.

"It's really just a slap in the face to professional firefighters to use them in that manner," said Dan Wood, president of the Addison Firefighters Association. "We wonder what we are going to do next — pick up trash or help clean the streets?"

Some firefighters believe safety will be compromised if they are forced to work at the center.

City Manager Ron Whitehead met with firefighters last week to outline their new duties. He said he understands that firefighters are not thrilled with the idea. But he said the budget crunch has forced many departments to take on new tasks.

"We are asking all employees to do more and some different things they haven't done in the past," he said. "We are all having to do different things that are non-traditional."

Whitehead said he had to balance the city budget by cutting $1.6 million and eliminating 29 positions.

State NAACP branches elect officers

KILLEEN (AP) — Seven new state NAACP officers were elected Saturday at the Texas State Conference of National Association for the Advancement of Colored People branches.

Gary Bledsoe of Austin was elected president of the Texas NAACP over Frank Burns of Houston, Bledsoe said.

The new first vice president is Robert Starr of Fort Worth. Ivory Moore of Commerce will serve as second vice president and James Roberts of Orange will fill the third vice president slot.

Temple resident Myrtle Captain is the new secretary and Mae Kindred of Waxahachie is assistant secretary. Joycie Burns was elected treasurer.

All the officers will serve two-year terms.

About 400 members from 150 branches of the NAACP chapters in Texas gathered in Killeen for the five-day conference which ends today.

In addition to election, NAACP members approved a resolution opposing the nomination of Clarence Thomas for the U.S. Supreme Court.

Another resolution was approved requesting a postage stamp honoring Lt. Henry Flipper, the first black American to graduate from the West Point. The group also seeks the Congressional Medal of Honor for Dorie Miller, a black Navy cook who shot down several planes during the attack on Pearl Harbor during World War II.

CLEARLY

Sunshine flows through rows of gloriously arched, high windows. Bright white walls, plush champagne carpeting and white marble accents all take part in the sparkling light show. It continues playing from the entry to the far reaches of this delightful Polo Park home.

Standing on the marble-floored foyer, a visitor looks straight ahead to the main living area. Palladian windows line one wall, a fireplace ensconced amid built-in cabinets and shelving dominates another. High ceilings accentuate the feeling of light and space.

To the right of the entry stands an elegant dining area. Again, the dominant feature is a large, spectacular arched window. Picture-frame paneling and chair railing lend elegant texture to the walls.

A glance out of the main living area's windows presents a view of a covered patio, a delightful warm-weather retreat.

A left turn from the living area leads to a huge, dramatic, well-appointed kitchen, family room and breakfast area. The kitchen has an appealing enlongated octagonal shape, which adds to the visual impact. It features a large wrap-around bar that opens to the family room. Cabinet space is plentiful and superbly organized. The large pantry includes a work center suited for small appliances. Large appliances include double oven and microwave.

The family room is warm and inviting. A brick fireplace flanked by windows is its focal point. The breakfast area, complete with built-in kitchen desk, is spacious enough for a large table. A laundry room, with sink, lies just beside the kitchen.

A right turn into the hall past the living area leads to the master bedroom. Its coffered ceiling adds to the already existing sense of spaciousness.

The adjoining master bath is huge — with plenty of plant space between walls and dramatically high ceilings. A welcoming marble tub is situated under a window. The shower is separate. A long vanity with double sinks tops an abundance of cabinet space.

A delightful guest bedroom is situated toward the front of the house just down the hall from the dining area. A large, ¾ bath adjoins. The walls are covered in a delightful rose-color paper that sports delicate pink flowers.

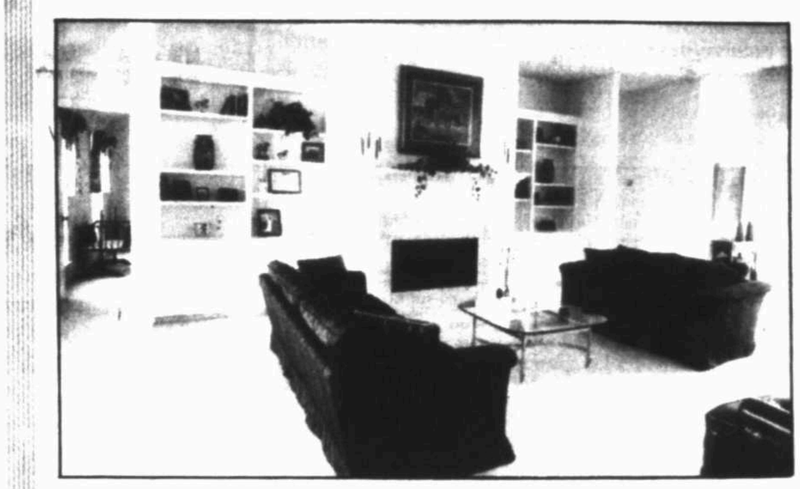

To the right of the entry lie two smaller bedrooms, just perfect for children. They are connected by a Jack and Jill bath.

The home boasts about 2900 square feet of space. Other amenities include a security system with floodlights, ceiling fans in den and bedrooms, zoned air conditioning, custom draperies and mini-blinds.

Also a decked attic, pegboard three-car garage, intercom system, beautiful landscaping, outdoor lighting and an automatic sprinkler system.

Because the home is situated in Polo Park, owners have access to a pool, clubhouse and tennis courts. The community also has a babysitters' co-op, a women's association and several small special interest groups.

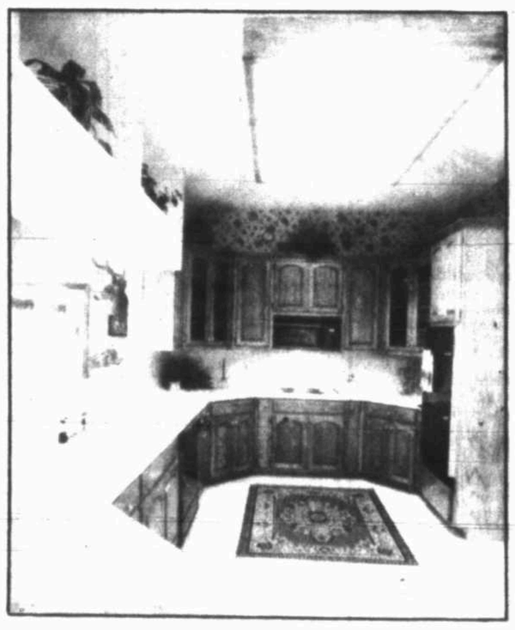

The home is being offered at $155,900 by The Prudential, Ruth Young realtors.

The formal living area's fireplace creates a feeling of warmth.

A dramatic arched window dominates the formal dining area.

A delightfully spacious kitchen opens to a cozy family room.

The master bedroom's coffered ceiling adds to the sense of spaciousness.

Midland Board of Realtors extends Lifeline

Midland Board of Realtor members present a donation for the purchase of lifeline equipment to Lutheran Social Services lifeline coordinator Cyndi Aycock. They are (from left) Joyce Smith, Sandy Scott, Cyndi Aycock and Gloria Lott.

The Midland Board of Realtors recently presented $3500 to Lutheran Social Services for the purchase of lifeline equipment. The equipment is designed to alert police, fire and medical personnel to emergencies in the homes of the elderly and handicapped. The equipment will be donated to area residents who fall into these categories.

One the prime reasons the elderly move from their homes is declining ability to promptly alert proper authorities to medical and other emergencies. The purpose of the lifeline equipment donation from the Midland Board of Realtors is to enable individuals to continue living independently by remaining in the comfort of their own homes for as long as possible.

The money for the equipment was raised by the Board's very successful fund-raiser, Las Vegas Night, held last September. This is just one of many such community services the Midland Board of Relators sponsors in the course of the year.

John Muldrow, Realtors join ERA network

John Muldrow, Realtors recently joined Electronic Realty Associates, Inc. (ERA), the nation's second largest real estate network. The new name of the company is ERA John Muldrow, Realtors and the office is located at 3328 West Ilinois in Midland.

"We chose ERA over the many other franchise real estate networks because I felt it would help me and the other sales associates best meet the needs of our clients," broker John Muldrow said. "It was important to me to join a network that offered a strong home protection plan for buyers and sellers and had excellent relocation services.

"I'm also excited about the ongoing training programs offered by ERA. Within the next nine months, I will be actively seeking new sales associates to join the firm — with or without previous experience — and look forward to having available comprehensive training for us all."

Each ERA franchise is independently owned and operated.

"By remaining locally owned, we can tailor our services to be responsive to the unique needs of our client," Muldrow said.

Muldrow, a Midland native, has six years experience in the real estate business and has owned and operated John Muldrow, Realtors since January, 1990.

The ERA network was established more than 20 years ago and for the last three years has been ranked as one of the top 15 franchise organizations of all types in Entrepreneur magazine. ERA is headquartered in Overland Park, Kansas and has 34,000 member brokers and sales associates in over 3000 offices world-wide.

Playing detective pays off for home buyers

The area or neighborhood in which your home is located is one of the most important factors in selecting a potential home. Researching different neighborhoods is an important aspect for potential home buyers before making a commitment.

This is the advice of Dene Kelly, President of Dene Kelly, Inc. Realtors, a Midland real estate broker who specializes in relocation services.

Dene Kelly, Inc. Realtors is a member of RELO/The International Relocation Network, headquartered in Chicago. The RELO network has approximately 1400 member companies and provides transfer-related real estate services, including rental and commercial real estate services, to meet the relocation needs of transferees and their corporations in the U.S., Canada and other countries. In 1990, members of the RELO network reported over $60 billion in total residential sales, making RELO the largest independent real estate network in the country.

Kelly said, "A visit to the destination city before making a definite decision about relocating is often a good idea for homeowners who are in a position to accept or reject a transfer. Public libraries and real estate brokers in that city are often the best resources on finding out about different neighborhoods or areas in the new location."

She also recommends that potential home buyers take a "light" first trip to their potential destination city if possible — taking the time to really examine the educational, cultural and recreational offerings, without the pressure of finding a suitable home.

"Of course, some home buyers will have severe time limitations, so it's important for transferees to locate a quality real estate broker quickly and easily. The RELO network is designed to assist these homeowners by servicing their individual needs on a timely basis," Kelly said.

She also recommends that potential homeowners looking into various neighborhoods take a look at:

■ Local shopping centers and supermarkets. What kind of services are offered and how conveniently they are located to the neighborhood will play an important factor in everyday life.

■ Neighborhood homeowners will be able to tell you everything about the neighborhood — including quality of the school system, history of the area and even potential issues relating to the home, such as development in the area, sewer systems and property taxes.

■ A personal visit to local schools will be of interest to potential home buyers with school children. Talk with counselors about special classes, athletics and other extra-curricular activities. Also look to see how well the hallways and other facilities are maintained.

"Oftentimes transferees are pressed to find a home quickly — and neglect to examine important facets of the community. A quality real estate broker can help these families by showing more than just the home. How well a family adjusts to a new neighborhood often depends on these 'neighborhood' factors which involve daily activities," Kelly said.

She also said that these are only a few suggestions for selecting a new neighborhood. The lifestyles of area residents, a neighborhood's overall appearance and proximity to public transportation and the workplace will also be issues of importance when choosing a new area.

Check the Time

Have you ever wondered whether now is the "right" time to buy a home? You may be surprised to learn that the perfect time to buy is when it is right for you, not at some specific date on the calendar.

There is almost always an ample supply of homes available at fair prices. Mortgages are plentiful too, although interest rates do rise and fall periodically. How do you know if now is the right time for you?

Begin by selecting a real estate company and agent to assist you in the decision. You may expect to be treated fairly and with honesty. Real estate companies generally represent home sellers, thus they are familiar with homes currently available, as well as mortgage financing.

Once you select an agent, ask for an appointment to discuss your home purchase plans. Don't expect a tour to look at available homes on your first visit. The agent will want to know what type home you want, and locations which may interest you. After your appointment, the agent will begin a search of all available homes to locate a selection for you to inspect.

Ask the agent to set up a prequalification interview with a mortgage lender too. This will allow you the opportunity to determine the maximum mortgage for which you qualify, and can result in your receiving a conditional mortgage commitment.

Next, with information on your preferences as well as your financial abilities, the agent can select suitable homes for your inspection. Homes which do not meet your requirements will be eliminated, saving you much time. Then, armed with knowledge of available homes, their prices and financial requirements, you can make an informed purchase decision.

Once you make that decision, the agent will assist you with the necessary paperwork, the application for a mortgage loan, and will keep you informed until the transaction is completed. Home ownership provides financial and family security. Learn the details today!

Langston Realtors Speak . . .

Executive home and commercial sales signal area growth

Joanne Langston

Recent activity in the upper third of the real estate market (properties listed or sold at $300,000 or more) and in commercial certainly signals strength in this area of the market. But, more important, because this top third of the market is the first to fall off in a depressed economy and the last to gain strength in a recovery period, these recent sales and contracts on upper executive properties definitely indicate to us that the residential real estate market in our city is alive, well, prospering!

This is confirmed by MLS statistics, at least in the residential area, that indicate escalating average sale prices, sales volume and number of homes sold with corrresponding decreases in inventory and days on the market. In fact, the current number of homes for sale through MLS is approximately 25 percent fewer that at this time last year!

But back to the encouraging activity in the upper executive market: since May 1 at least 14 homes listed at $300,000 or over have either closed or been put under contract — many of them within 36 days or less. And, we are proud that Langston agents were involved in 11 of the transactions.

These sales become even more significant when one considers that no sales in the over $300,000 price range occurred during this same period last year!

In spite of the activity in this price range, there are many exceptional properties currently still on the market, additional ones being listed and an extremely qualified group of builders custom building really lovely homes.

Some of the properties within our office include: One of the most fabulous city, yet suburban, properties ever on the Midland market. It includes a beautiful, spacious home, pool, tennis courts, 17 acres, guest house, employee house, stables and seven heated/air conditioned garages! Just listed at $997,600.

A property in the highly coveted and restricted Saddle Club North area with a pool, tennis court, cabana, second stroy decks offering fabulous views of the city and our Midland sunsets. A stunning six-bedroom with two pools in Racquet Club. Separate family and entertaining areas make this one of the most liveable homes on the market, and the style makes it one of the most desirable.

We've many other properties in this top executive market. We would invite your call.

RANDY'S TIPS ON SMOOTHER HOME SALES...

In today's market, 99% of all home sales include a pre-purchase inspection. It is a very thorough and comprehensive examination of mechanical and structural elements in your home by a state licensed inspector. When should it be done? The earlier the better would alleviate any fears a prospective buyer might have and perhaps bring a quicker sale without the hassle of negotiating for "unknown" repair items that will cost the seller much more. Have your home inspected today, list it for sale tomorrow, and it will make your home sale much smoother and beneficial to you.

Recycled oil

HOUSTON (AP) — About 3,000 Exxon Co. U.S.A. service stations nationwide will collect and recycle used motor oil in a program to begin in November, company officials said.

Exxon, the nation's biggest oil company, said its program is similar to one begun by Mobil Corp. nationwide and by other large oil companies on a regional or test basis.

Participating dealers will allow do-it-yourself oil changers to dispose free of up to 5 gallons of used motor oil per visit, no matter where it was purchased, Exxon said Wednesday. The oil can be in any unbreakable container.

All company-operated stations with service bays will participate in the program and independent Exxon dealers with service bays will be invited to participate, Exxon officials said.

"Exxon encourages people who change their own oil to help reduce pollution and to conserve energy by taking their used oil to Exxon for recycling," Gord Thomson, Exxon's vice president for marketing, said.

Rig numbers

Above, a West Texas rig accents a sunset. The number of working rigs in the Permian Basin continued to decline last week, while the U.S. and Canadian rig counts showed a slight increase.

The total number of rigs working in the Basin declined from 92 to 81 for the week of September 27, as Texas took the biggest drop in the national count. A year ago the local rig count stood at 126 rigs.

The U.S. rig count this week was 775, compared to 1055 last year. Eddy with 14 rigs running and Lea with 12 rigs were the leading counties for drilling in the Permian Basin.

PROFILE OF A PIPELINE

Amoco Pipeline Co. turns 75 years old

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

Editor's Note: This is the first in a series articles profiling the oil industry. The articles, which will appear on an unscheduled basis in the Oil Report, are designed to foster a better understanding of the various sectors of the industry, among those within and without the oil business.

Pipelines are the arteries of the oil and gas industry. Without them the moving of oil, natural gas and products would be slowed to a trickle.

There are at least 20 major crude oil pipeline systems operating in the Permian Basin, not counting natural gas pipelines. No one knows for certain how many miles of pipeline there are in the Basin, but it is in the tens of thousands of miles.

Pipelining is like living in Lukonbach

One of the largest systems is Amoco Pipeline Co. which celebrates its 75th anniversary this year. Beginning with a single line (Sinclair-Cudahy) in Northeast, Oklahoma in 1916, Amoco Pipeline Co. today gathers and transports oil and gas throughout the U.S. in nine regions. Operations are monitored by satellite from a control panel in Tulsa.

Amoco is the largest oil producer in the Permian Basin and it is probably no coincidence that the largest system for Amoco Pipeline Co. is the sprawling Levelland Area, which extends from Artesia, New Mexico on the west to Bowie, Texas on the east, and from Clayton, New Mexico to Eldorado, Texas on the South. The system is comprised of 1,285 miles of trunk line and 1,059 miles of gathering line.

"The Levelland area accounts for about 55 percent of the gathered oil in the Amoco Pipeline System," says Prentiss Rhyne, Amoco Pipeline Co. area manager in Levelland. "If the Levelland area was broken off as a separate company it would the 22nd largest pipeline in the nation."

Traveling at an average speed of three miles an hour, approximately 190,000 barrels daily moves through the system, most of it destined for Cushing, Oklahoma. "It costs about 57 cents to transport a barrel of oil by pipeline to Cushing," said Rhyne. "To move it on to Whiting, Indiana would up the cost to $1 per barrel." He said pipeline tariffs are based on expense and not necessarily milage.

It is the low cost of pipeline transportation from the field to the market that makes pipelines essential to well-being of the Permian Basin.

In addition to the crude oil pipelines Amoco Pipeline in Levelland also operates 218 miles of 20-inch pipeline to move carbon dioxide from the Bravo Dome field of northeastern New Mexico to the Permian Basin. Completed in the late eighties, the $60 million pipeline brings carbon dioxide from the Bravo Dome field near Clay-

Oilpatch gets global position

■ New satellite technology promises to be a major advance in oilfield land surveys.

By Melia McEwen
Staff Writer

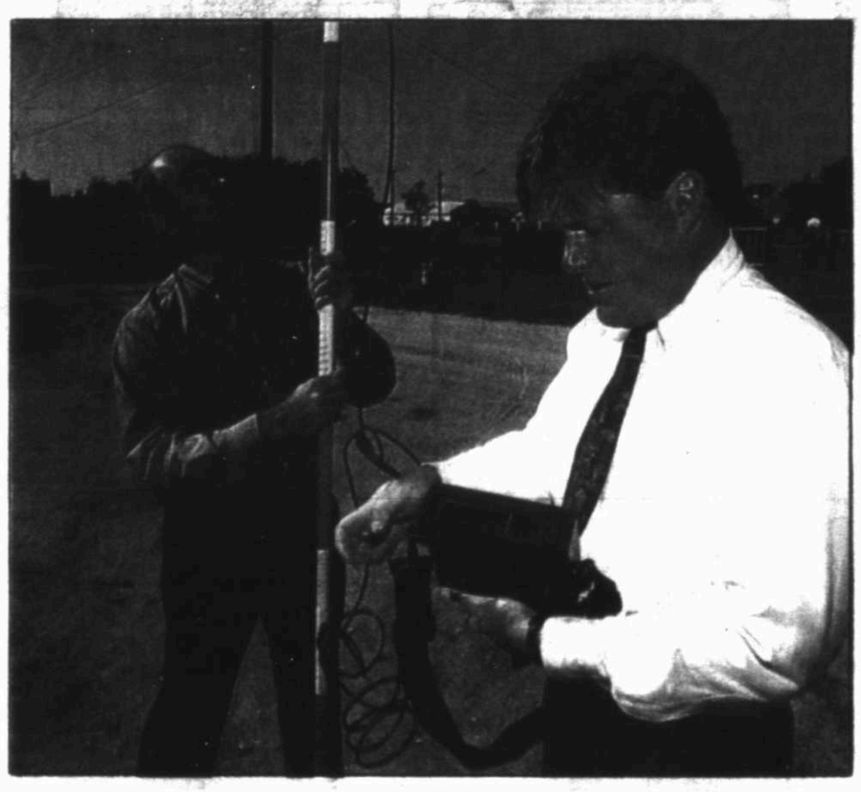

For a device that carries such great potential, the Global Positioning System receiver looks disarmingly simple. It looks similar to a car stereo, and the antenna like an oversized twirler's baton.

The brain child of the Department of Defense, Global Positioning System (GPS) has only recently been available for commercial use, but it already promises to radically change the way the oilpatch spots well locations, plots waterflood fields and surveys right-of-ways.

GPS utilizes a "constellation" of 21 satellites orbiting the Earth that communicate with receivers via radio waves. The system works by measuring the time lag between a radio signal sent by the satellites and a simultaneous signal within the receiver. Distance can be calculated from this time lag, and by communicating with at least four of the satellites overhead at the time, the unit can calculate its specific location on Earth.

One of the companies using the new technology is Topographic Land Surveys in Midland. The company has an antenna mounted on the roof at the back of their office building which in turn is hooked

Oryx regroups slashes payroll

■ Facing a quarterly loss, Oryx will sell assets and slash staff.

DALLAS (AP) — Following a pull out from the Permian Basin to Oklahoma City earlier this year, Oryx Energy Co., expecting a net loss from operations of about $40 million for the third quarter, says it plans a company-wide restructuring program including a significant workforce reduction.

The Dallas-based company says it plans to raise approximately $400 million through asset sales and cut costs by $100 million per year.

"We have decided to accelerate our debt reduction plans and at the same time further concentrate our operations into key areas," Robert P. Hauptfuhrer, chairman and chief executive officer of Oryx, said in a prepared statement.

The company will focus on key areas, including the U.S. Gulf coast, the North Sea, Indonesia and other worldwide prospective areas, he said.

"These are areas where we can exploit our advanced technological capabilities. We are shifting away from the onshore U.S. basins which

Are days numbered for methanol fuel?

Pitts

Is methanol ready for the fuel graveyard? It appears that fate is becoming more likely for the once-touted fuel.

In the late 80s, the state of California invested millions into methanol research and prototypes and hailed it as the fuel that would eventually bring clean air to smog-shrouded Los Angeles County. California officials were joined by key officials of the Bush Administration in touting methanol as a Methanol, its fans say, offers an efficient way to reduce the ozone pollution that fouls car-congested regions from Los Angeles to the surburban sprawl of Connecticut. But not all the experts share their enthusiasm.

Some see methanol as an environmental free lunch, because much of the natural gas now being extracted in the Persian Gulf and the Soviet Union is an unwanted byproduct of oil production, that could be converted to methanol. This gas is now flared at the wellhead, worsening the greenhouse effect, say environmentalists. But with a guaranteed American market for methanol, it would pay to convert this waste gas to the alcohol fuel.

On the other hand, U.S. oil producers and some politicians point out that this is all America needs is to become dependent on the Middle East for yet another component of our energy needs.

Methonal has also come under fire as a highly toxic hydrocarbon, but the American Petroleum Institute disputes claims that methanol is no more toxic than gasoline.

API also questions the validity of studies showing that methanol vehicles would be less polluting than gasoline-powered ones equipped with sophisticated emissions controls.

Now on top of all this controversy over methanol comes two new study that adds an even more depressing view of this fuel. A study conducted by the U.S. General Services Administration flat out reports that methanol vehicles are not yet ready for sale to the public. In addition to testing natural gas powered vehicles, the GSA has also tested a fleet of 65 flexible fuel vehicles that burn gasoline, methanol or a combination of the two fuels. The results are not encouraging for methanol.

Allan W. Beres, Assistant Commissioner of the U.S. General Services Administration, recently told Congress that the cost of buying, servicing and eventually selling a methanol-powered vehicle would cost an estimated $8,000 more than a conventional gasoline vehicle.

The federal agency estimates that original purchase price of the methanol vehicles would be $6,3000 more than a conventional vehicle. Even though mass-produced methanol vehicles could be produced for only $300 more than conventional vehicles. The higher cost of fuel would add $1,080 to operating costs. More frequent oil changes would add another $360, and because of limited demand, resale value would fall another $450.

This study is in line with a private study conducted by the Department of Energy's Lawrence Berkeley Labs (LBL). Over a five year comparison of methanol and gasoline vehicles, LBL found that far more labor and mainteton, New Mexico to the Permian Basin where it is injected into mature fields in an effort to recover more oil.

What does it take to keep such a complex pipeline system operational?

One might think hundreds — or even thousands — of employees, but actually it takes only 74 employees. Only four employees and a supervisor are required to oversee the 218-mile Bravo system, bringing out the stark efficiency of pipelines compared to truck hauling. Amoco employs an additional 25 contract transport drivers just to collect crude oil from remote oil leases where it is uneconomical to build pipelines.

Like the plumbing in a home, pipelines, once placed in the ground and set in motion become efficient, dependable systems that will work for decades with a minimum of attention.

"It all depends on how well the systems are designed and maintained," said Prentiss, 55, an engineering graduate from Texas Tech University in Lubbock. We have dug up pipe that had been in the ground 40 years and we were still able to see the mill marks on the inside."

He notes that Amoco Pipeline Co. at Levelland spends hundreds of thousands of dollars each year on a Safety & Integrity program that identifies potential flaws and weak spots long before they fail.

This requires an extensive cathodic protection program on the outside of the pipe and a comprehensive "pigging" program on the inside.

Pipeline pigs are rubber or foam scrapers used to clean the pipe. "Smart pigs are used to detect flaws in the pipe," said Rhyne. He said they are called pigs because they'll "squeal like a pig" when they get stuck in the pipeline.

Trunk lines are cleaned once a month, but in some gathering lines where there is a build-up of paraffin pigs may be run twice a month.

One of the biggest problems facing pipeline companies is corrosion. Bury a piece of steel in the ground and cathodic problems are bound to occur. Although pipelines are coated before they are buried, two employees continually patrol the pipelines taking voltage readings on every mile of trunk line to make sure that moisture in the ground does not react with the steel to corrode the pipe. An electrical cathodic protection programs prevents this type of corrosion.

To make certain leaks are caught in the nick of time, two pilots flying Cessna 172 airplanes patrol the entire trunk line system once a week to check for leaks. The gathering system is checked for leaks every two weeks.

Pipeliners like to think of themselves as a different breed — a small, close community — within the oilpatch. They are quick to distinguish that they are Amoco Pipeline Co. and not just Amoco.

"Nearly everybody in the pipeline business knows everybody else. It's a very close knit bunch," says Rhyne.

Because pipeline operations are fairly stable and routine, and because those who work in it are given larger areas of geographical responsibility and authority to act immediately, it has fewer levels of corporate bureaucracy. "I manage an area that takes in a big chunk of Texas and New Mexico, responsible for moving millions of dollars daily in oil, but two men down from me are hourly field workers. Two men up from me is the president of Amoco Pipeline Co.," Rhyne explained.

Because pipelining is something akin to a fraternity, Rhyne said it is a job people tend to stick with. "At a recent awards banquet, we had employees honored for 40, 44 and 50 years service. We have had two brothers honored for over 50 years service. That's uncommon in the oil business."

Said Rhyne: "Pipelining is sort of like living in Lukenbach, Texas — everybody is somebody."

Oceans of production

A view of the Hendrick's field, near Wink, sometime around the late thirties. Back then there was little concern for ground water contamination, and produced water was not hauled or re-injected, but was simply pumped on to the open ground. It flowed to the lowest spot and dikes were built to contain it. One pioneer has described the view from the air as resembling a "small ocean." Later, canals were dug and the water collected and transported to a draw north of Wink. The draw, known as the Wink Lakes, became a popular recreation spot for picnicing and swimming, even though one would have to bath to remove an oily film after swimming.

PBPA plans environmental seminar

Staff Report

The Permian Basin Petroleum Association, along with the Midland office of the University of Texas System, will present its second annual Environmental Issues seminar, entitled "What a Difference a Year Makes."

The seminar will be at the Holiday Inn Country Villa Convention Center Nov. 7 beginning with registration at 8 a.m.

Looking back over the past month, when the petroleum industry appeared to be in a spider's web of environmental constraints, mass confusion and about to be engulfed by the over-demands of governmental and pressure groups that appeared to demand the sacrifice of the petroleum industry to save the environment.

The PBPA Environmental Issues Committee, working with the University of Texas System, the New Mexico Oil Conservation Division and the Texas Railroad Commission has made great strides in seeking a realistic balance between the two Ps: Protection and Production.

The upcoming seminar will discuss the industry's initial accomplishments, such as 80 percent compliance with netting and screening to pits, ponds and tanks, and address new and recurring needs and bring together a variety of industrial leaders, educators, government officials and grass roots staff and field people with hands-on experience with the Production-Protection balance.

The keynote address will be given by Ray Galvin, senior vice president, exploration, lands and production at Chevron -U.S.A.

Among the issues to be discussed are Normally Occurring Radioactive Material, the Clean Air Act, Resource Conservation and Recovery Act, environmental audits, and the American Petroleum Institute's perspectives.

A panel discussion on environmental issues will feature Judith Espinosa, secretary, New Mexico Environmental Department, Bill Fisher, director, Bureau of Economic Geology, Ray Galvin, and Lena Guerrero, chairman of the Texas Railroad Commission.

Cost of the seminar is $25 before Nov. 1 or $30 after that date.

PITTS: End of the line?

(From 1E)

nance was required for the methanol vehicles even though they were driven only half the distance of their gasoline counterparts, according to API.

To be exact, the methanol cars required 97 hours of maintenance for every 1,000 miles driven, while the gasoline vehicles required only six hours.

Test drivers also reported that the methanol cars tended to stall more frequently than gasoline vehicles.

The final verdict may not be in on methanol, but it can't be too far away. Unless something happens to radically change the picture, it doesn't look like methanol will be in it.

John Paul Pitts is the business/oil editor of the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

ORYX: Cuts

(From 1E)

Oryx estimates it will raise approximately $400 million by the summer of 1992.

The company expects to slash operating and administrative costs by $100 million per year from current levels. The size of the workforce reduction is dependent on the results of ongoing studies.

Hauptfuhrer said weak gas prices, disappointing gas volumes, lower crude prices and high expenses are contributing factors in the estimated third quarter net loss from operations of about $40 million.

OPEC spat could send oil prices lower

By Anne Pearson
Hearst News Service

GENEVA – A confrontation between OPEC's two largest producers at the group's meetings earlier in the week could make it difficult for the cartel to keep oil prices from slipping next spring, some ministers and delegates say.

At a meeting behind closed doors Wednesday, Saudi oil minister Hisham Nazer made a thinly veiled threat to drop out of the cartel if Iran continues to press for production cuts to boost the market price of crude, OPEC sources said.

The dispute makes little difference today, when the world is consuming all that OPEC can produce. But it could become a problem if consumption takes a seasonal drop in the second quarter, or if Iraq and Kuwait are able to resume significant exports.

Senior OPEC officials and industry consultants suggested Nazer's stance may be a bit of theater designed to garner a bigger share of OPEC production.

But if Saudi Arabia intends to maintain peak production through the spring, the cartel's next two meetings could be even more contentious than the one that ended Wednesday.

Iranian minister Gholamreza Aghazadeh, who wants wealthy Saudi Arabia to produce a little less so Iran and its other poor OPEC brothers can earn more for their oil, was critical of the Saudi oil minister's attitude.

"Nazer was not flexible at all at this conference," Aghazadeh said Thursday.

He made that uncharacteristically frank remark a day after the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries gave its 13 members carte blanche to produce whatever they want through the end of the year.

Iran had hoped for a more restrictive agreement that would have ensured a $21-a-barrel price for OPEC crude – the equivalent of about $24 a barrel for light, sweet U.S. crude – throughout the fourth quarter.

But as the biggest and richest producer by far in OPEC, Saudi Arabia doesn't have to compromise, and it has little to fear in the way of economic or political consequences if it angers the other members of the group.

The Saudi "position cannot be challenged," said consultant Antonio M. Szabo, president of Bonner & Moore Management Science of Houston. "The others have to be kind of nice to the Saudis, because the price could worsen later."

Saudi Arabia's power comes from its control of about 15 per cent of the world's production capacity and more than a third of OPEC's capacity. Its reserves total more than 250 billion barrels of oil, enough to keep the United States supplied at today's rate of consumption for nearly 45 years.

Szabo said he believes Nazer's tough talk early in the week about producing 8.5 million barrels a day whether the others like it or not was aimed mainly at Saddam Hussein.

A year ago, Saddam Hussein was pushing everyone around with the threat of an attack on Kuwait, the country he blamed most for spoiling oil prices and starving Iraq of money to develop its economy. Now that the balance of power in OPEC has been restored to the Saudis, Szabo said, they are pushing back at Saddam.

The Saudis have flexed their muscle before.

When some OPEC members defied Saudi Arabia's warnings in 1985 to tighten their output, the kingdom put them in their places by flooding the market with oil. The result was $10 oil.

Saudi Arabia has been running a government budget and current account deficit since 1982, and it needs money. "Their pockets are deep, but not that deep," Zanoyan said.

OPEC may not have all that much to fear from the Saudis next spring anyway, said consultant Ed Krapels, president of Washington-based Energy Security Analysis.

"We think demand (for OPEC oil) will be up 1 million barrels a day for all of next year, from about 23 million and some change, to 24 (million) to 24.5 million barrels on aver age for the year," said Krapels, who has been bullish on prices for more than a year.

As long as Hussein is in power, Krapels said, the United Nations is unlikely to let him resume full exports. Krapels also questioned whether Kuwait will be able to rebuild its oil fields as quickly as it had hoped.

"We see second-quarter 1992 demand at around 23.7 million barrels," he estimated, about the same amount OPEC is producing now.

Consultant Vahan Zanoyan of Petroleum Finance Co. believes the Saudis will produce a little less next spring, as long as the Iranians, the Venezuelans and perhaps the Nigerians do the same.

Krapels admitted prices may not fare so well if his assumptions about Iraq prove incorrect. Krapels has been forecasting prices will reach $24 a barrel in the fourth quarter.

"If you change the scenario, and Iraq comes back full strength, you're going to have a hell of a problem," he said.

Corrosion symposium set

Staff Report

The Permian Basin section, National Association of Corrosion Engineers will sponsor its 23rd biennial corrosion symposium Oct. 16-18.

The symposium will be at the Midland Center. The theme is "Corrosion Control for Pipeline & Production."

Technical topics such as material selection, pipeline reconditioning, corrosion inhibitors, corrosion monitoring, cathodic protection, and coatings will be covered at the symposium, and vendors will display a number of different services related to the corrosion control industry.

Keynote speaker at the noon, Oct. 17 luncheon will be General Richard "Ish" Ingram, USAF (Ret) and chief executive officer of the Confederate Air Force. In addition, the Wallace J. Frank award will be presented to the member who ha served many years in an active leadership role and who continues to serve.

Cost is $60, $15 for full-time students. The funds support the Permian Basin section's scholarship fund.

RRC schedules hearing on natural gas production

Staff Report

AUSTIN — The Railroad Commission has scheduled an early-October hearing in Austin to hear industry testimony on whether it should change natural gas production rules to prevent waste of the energy resource.

The Commission has set the hearing for Oct. 9 and 10 at the Commission headquarters in Austin.

"In the past few weeks I have received numerous communications from people who are concerned that waste is occurring in the production of natural gas," Guerrero said. "This is a serious matter to me. I'm keenly aware that one of my primary duties as a Railroad Commissioner is to prevent waste of oil and gas. I believe these allecations of waste should not be taken lightly. Therefore, I think it appropriate for the Commission to call a hearing to determine whether or not waste is occurring in the production of natural gas; and, if so, what options we should consider to precent further waste from occurring."

Commissioner James E. (Jim) Nugent believes the Commission's rules for regulating natural gas production are too complex and out of step with the realities of today's gas marketplace. He advocates a streamlined set of rules that give producers equal opportunity to market their gas.

"Out present rule structure is a briarpatch that entangles many producers, hindering them from producing and finding markets for their gas," Nugent said. "We need to clear away the regulatory underbrush and implement a system that will give everybody a fair and equal opportunity to produce and sell their gas."

Commissioner Robert Krueger said, "Everyone concerned for future gas supplies - producers, pipelines, comsumers and city officials - fears that much Texas gas today is selling below our replacement cost. If so, it may be prompting waste of our cleanest, most precious, most enviromentally desirable fuel. We want to hear from all parties to help us in planning an intelligent gas strategy that meets the needs of future generations of Texans."

The ROTAFLEX*
Proof is in performance

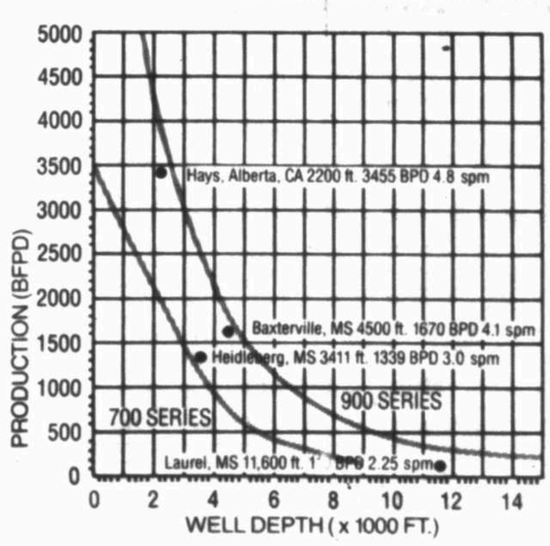

COHO RESOURCES, Laurel, MS.

The first proven application of 100% mechanical, long, slow stroke pumping technology. And from actual well performance data, the ROTAFLEX proves high volumes of fluid can be rod pumped from shallow wells and efficiently pumped from deep wells.

In a typical ROTAFLEX installation, torque demand reduces from 1,230,000 inch pounds of a 1280 sized conventional unit, to 190,000 inch pounds. And at 2 to 5 strokes per minute, the ROTAFLEX will prove you can produce more fluid from a wider range of wells, and lower equipment and long term work-over costs.

But the real proof of the ROTAFLEX is how well it can perform for you. Send us your well conditions and let's run a computer predictive. We know the ROTAFLEX can take you where no rod pump has gone before.

Maxus sells Rocky Mountain properties

DALLAS (AP) -- Maxus Energy Corp. has sold about 390,000 acres of oil and gas properties in the Rocky Mountains to Equitable Resources in a $64 million deal, the company announced Monday.

The property, with 400 wells, is located primarily in Wyoming, Montana, North Dakota and Utah.

"The sale of these properties further enhances our U.S. strategy of focusing our efforts on the Texas Panhandle and Gulf of Mexico regions," Steve Crowell, senior vice president for North American exploration and production, said in a statement.

Dallas-based Maxus Energy is an independent oil and gas exploration and production company.

ACTIVITY HIGHLIGHTS

Reagan gains horizontal producer

Staff Report

A horizontal recompletion in Reagan County has given the Big Lake field its second Fusselman producer.

MARATHON OIL CO. recompleted the No. 6 University "BL", a former Ellenburger producer, to flow 12 barrels of 45 gravity crude and no water on a 19/64 inch choke from open hole interval (middle depth) 8,470 to 9,035 ft.

Originally drilled to 9,250 ft. vertical depth, where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, the well was plugged back to 8,566 ft., vertical depth. It was scheduled as a 9,038 ft. wildcat workover.

Location is 1,000 ft. from south and 660 ft. from west lines of Section 12, Block 2, ULS survey, one mile northeast of Texon.

Reagan producer

Marathon has recompleted an Ellenburger producer in Reagan County as a horizontal Fusselman producer.

Lea County yields Yates gas discovery

A Yates-Seven Rivers gas discovery has been completed in Lea County, N.M.

SEAY EXPLORATION INC. tested the No. 1 Corrigan for a calculated absolute open flow of 907 Mcfd on various chokes with flowing tubing pressure of 592 psi. The well flowed from perforations 2,846 to 3,109 ft., which had been acidized with 3,500 gallons of 15 percent NeFe acid and fractured with 37,000 gallons of gel and 77,000 lbs. 12/20 sand.

Drilled to 7,710 ft., the well was plugged back to 3,460 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 3,490 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 3,569 ft., include the Yates at 2,846 ft., Seven Rivers at 2,954, San Andres at 4,250, Blinebry at 6,030, Tubb at 6,595, and Abo at 7,128 ft. Pay was topped at 2,846 ft.

Location is 1,980 ft. from north and 990 ft. from east lines of Section 14, T20s, R38e.

Lakewood activity extends Howard field

The C.C. Gunn (Canyon Reef) field of Howard County has gained a new producer and southern extender.

LAKEWOOD EXPLORATION tested the No. 2 Armadillo to flow 111 barrels of 51 gravity crude, 97 Mcfd and no water on a 16/64 inch choke. The well flowed from perforations 7,541 to 7,557 ft. with flowing tubing pressure of 370 psi. The producing interval was acidized with 250 gallons of 15 percent HCL acid. Gas-oil ratio is 874:1.

Permitted as a 7,700 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 7,557 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 7,541 ft.

The well topped the Wolfcamp "B" at 6,509 ft., Pennsylvanian Shale at 6,863, and Canyon at 7,539 ft. on ground elevation of 2,407 ft.

Location is 1,128 ft. from north and 495 ft. from east lines of Section 14, Block 25, H&TC survey, 20.5 miles northeast of Big Spring.

Pecos field producer pumps 36 barrels oil

SHARP IMAGE ENERGY INC., Big Spring, has completed a new producer in the Huber (Detrital 5150) field of Pecos County, 10.3 miles northeast of Bakersfield.

The No. 1 Birdpoint was completed to pump 36 barrels of 40 gravity crude, 89 Mcfd, and 140 barrels of water from perforations 5,195 to 5,226 ft. The interval was acidized with 1,500 gallons of 15 percent acid. Gas-oil ratio is 2,472:1.

Permitted as a 6,000 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 5,293 ft., where 4 1/2 inch casing was set.

The well topped the Wichita Albany at 3,976 ft., Wolfcamp at 4,894, and Detrital at 5,190 ft. on ground elevation of 2,267.3 ft. Pay was topped at 5,192 ft.

Location is 470 ft. from north and 660 ft. from east lines of Section 10, Block 12, H&GN survey.

Sojourner adds well to Kent County field

SOJOURNER DRILLING has added a new well to the Maben field of Kent County.

On potential test, the No. 2 Godfrey pumped 24 barrels of 36 gravity crude and 25 Mcfd from perforations 5,679 to 5,727 ft. The interval was acidized wity 1,250 gallons of 15 percent NeFe acid.

Permitted as a 7,600 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 5,950 ft. and plugged back to 5,880 ft., where 4 1/2 inch casing was set.

The well topped the Tannehill at 5,167 ft. and Cisco Sand at 5,677 ft. on ground elevation of 2,199 ft.

Location is 1,667 ft. from south and 1,200 ft. from east lines of Section 105, Block 1, H&GH survey, Abst. 521, 17 miles west of Girard.

Tom Green field gets eight barrel producer

The Hall field of Tom Green County has gained a new San Andres producer as DOUBLE S ENERGY completes activity in the area.

The No. 1-A Los Ninos was tested to pump eight barrels of 32 gravity crude and four barrels of water from open hole interval 792 to 804 ft. The interval was acidized with 750 gallons of acid.

Permitted as a 1,500 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 804 ft. with seven inches at 792 ft.

Location is 1,250 ft. from north and 960 ft. from east lines of Section 61, Block 5, H&TC survey, Abst. 900, 2.5 miles south of Water Valley.

SURVEYING: Technology reaching 'next generation' to a computer and a base station, which is not much bigger than the GPS receiver.

Bill Keating, GPS manager at Topographic, says the receivers can communicate with four satellites about 16 hours a day, and predicts that in about a year, after additional satellites have been launched, that capability will be available 24 hours a day.

His brother Robert, president of Topographic and in town from Oklahoma City for a visit, noted that "We're looking at it for mapping survey — mapping pipelines, oil wells, roads. We're not really looking at it for boundary surveys."

The receiver, which has a built-in antenna or can use an external antenna attached to it, can be used in a boat, a car or an airplane. As the Keatings explain, surveyors mapping out a potential pipeline can use the receiver to mark the best spot for crossing a river, or drilling a well or setting up a waterflood. The Keatings point out that a few years ago, Exxon used GPS technology to survey the city of Midland.

By entering the points in the receiver, the receiver can then be used to navigate the user back to that point at a later time, or navigate someone out in the field back to his vehicle. Robert notes that this technology could be the basis for a generation of "smart" computer-generated automobiles, airplanes and boats. It holds up to 999 points, which can be stored on a disk for later use. Or the data can be put into a computer and run through an auto CAD program and printed out as a map.

"One advantage is it works in latitude and longitude, which we can convert to state plains coordinates," says Bill, who adds that his company has digital land grids, which allow someone who, for example wants to map out a pipeline, to lay out the pipeline's route, determined by GPS, over the grid and see what sections it crosses.

Because it utilizes satellite communications for measurement, Bill notes that the GPS needs only visibility of the sky to work, as opposed to conventional surveying, which requires line of sight.

One major advantage of the GPS is its low cost. The Keatings estimate they could rent the unit out to a company for about $500 a month, or $40 a day if the operator wanted to do the surveying himself and let Topographic process the data.

"Oil companies, pipeline companies have things they keep track of — where the wells are, where they might want to put wells, waterflood, where the pipelines are. In most cases, maps are not that accurate," says Robert. "And it's expensive to send surveying crews out. With this, they can take the receiver and drive around and mark the points they need."

As useful as the system can be for the oilfield, the brothers note that it has other applications, such as with ambulances, police cars and fire trucks.

"People in the GPS field are calling this the next utility, like electric generators, telephones, and cable television. This will be that prominent. And I don't doubt that it will be — maybe in 10 years or so," says Robert.

Chimes in his brother: "Maybe instead of street addresses, we'll have longitude and latitude."

Their father, John, shares their vision. "My feeling is this will change the way surveying is done in the next generation. Shooting off satellites has many uses. And we feel GPS will be the way surveying is done in the next generation."

He adds, with a smile: "When I started in surveying, we used the same equipment George Washington used, with some changes. And then we had aerial photography, and now satellites."

WHEN YOUR TARGET IS THE PERMIAN BASIN

The Permian Basin is an oil and gas producing empire of 100,000 square miles with an oil well for every square mile. Comprised of 54 counties in Southeast New Mexico and West Texas this far flung industry, accounts for roughly 20 percent of the nation's total oil production.

Yet, a long standing problem has been the lack of a single newspaper to serve the thousands of companies and over 40,000 workers involved in exploration, land production, drilling, oil field service and supply, pipelines and construction, refining, and transportation.

But now The Permian Basin Oil Report , published weekly by the Midland Reporter-Telegram, has become the information source for the Permian Basin oil industry.

Packed with information and articles about oil and gas people, products, companies, issues, events, drilling, exploration and production. The Oil Report will appear each Sunday as a section of the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Additionally, it will be mailed to every producer , operator and oilfield service company throughout the Permian Basin.

If the Permian Basin is your target market, the Permian Basin Oil Report is the way to reach it. For advertising rates and information about the Permian Basin Oil Report please call: Sam Bakke at (915) 687-8873.

MEETINGS

SPE chapter to host Chevron reservoir engineer

Saleri

The Permian Basin section, Society of Petroleum Engineers, will meet Oct. 15 at the Ranchland Hills Country Club beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Guest speaker will be Nansen G. Saleri, who will speak on "The Art and Science of Predicting Reservoir Performance."

He notes that recent advances in reservoir characterization and simulation promise to significantly enhance the capability of predicting reservoir performance. Or do they? He will offer a post-mortem perspective on several Chevron-affiliated fields in West Africa, Middle East and the Far East via comparisons between mid-1980s forecasts and actual performance.

Saleri is manager of reservoir engineering in Chevron Exploration and Production Services Co. in Houston. His responsibilities include overseeing Chevron's worldwide reservoir engineering projects and directing the company's reservoir management training activities.

Reservations should be made by Friday by calling 686-7329.

Microcomputer users to discuss new DOS.5

The Midland Microcomputer User's Association will meet Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. at the Permian Basin Graduate Center.

Guest speaker will be Ted Windecker, an engineer, computer consultant and president of Windecker Computers for Business, who will discuss the pros and cons of the new DOS.5. He has taught computer applications at the PGBC for several years.

Further information is available by calling 686-9691.

Waterflood surveillance topic for SPE group

Thakur

Ganesh C. Thakur will be the guest speaker at Thursday's meeting of the Reservoir Study Group of the Permian Basin section, Society of Petroleum Engineers. The group will meet at the American Legion Hall beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Thakur will speak on "Waterflood Surveillance Techniques - A Reservoir Management Approach." he is principal consultant reservoir engineer with Chevron U.S.A. Inc. in Midland. He develops and implements reservoir management programs and supervises reservoir activities in the area. He previously worked at Amoco Production Co.'s Research Center and Scientific Software-Intercomp Inc. developing reservoir simulators and providing consulting services. He also taught graduate level courses in petroleum engineering at the University of Houston and University of Texas of the Permian Basin and in the MBA proram at Houston Baptist University. He is serving as an SPE Distinguished Lecturer for 1991-92.

Cost is $8 per person.

Geophysicists to discuss vibroseis advances

The Permian Basin Geophysical Society will meet Wednesday at the Midland Center beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Guest speaker will be Gary Crews, director of land quality control in geophysical operations for Arco. His talk will be "Some Recent Advances in Vibroseis" and discusses the steady advances over the past two years made to vibroseis technology that improve seismic data quality and waveform stability for the interpretative geophysicist. He also addresses changes that will occur to vibroseis equuipment in the near future.

Cost is $8 per person and reservations can be made by calling 682-7356.

Grace acquires rigs

DALLAS — Grace Drilling Co., has announced the addition of five rigs to its Southwestern Division's fleet, based in Odessa. The rigs acquired are in the medium- top medium-deep-depth class and are located in Lea and Eddy counties in New Mexico; this brings the Southwestern Division's total number of available rigs up to 24. The rigs were acquired through a swap of idle rigs and rig components.

MCT PRESENTS

The wacky sisters of "Nunsense" are back up to their song-and-dance tricks at the Yucca Theatre.

"One of the things that we always try to do is please our audiences," said Don Bachmann, executive director of Midland Community Theatre. "This is one of the most requested shows that we've ever done."

The production, complete with the cast from last season, opened Friday and will continue at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday through Oct. 19.

"It's pure musical comedy entertainment," Bachmann said. "If you like to listen to good music and laugh one heck of a lot, this is the show to go see."

"Nunsense" is not the only Midland Community Theatre nonsense going on this autumn.

The theater has just closed "Quilters" and still has three productions in addition to "Nunsense" set before 1992 arrives, including "A Texas Romance," opening Friday in Mabee Theatre II at Theatre Midland; "Other People's Money," in November; and the farce "Lend Me a Tenor" in December.

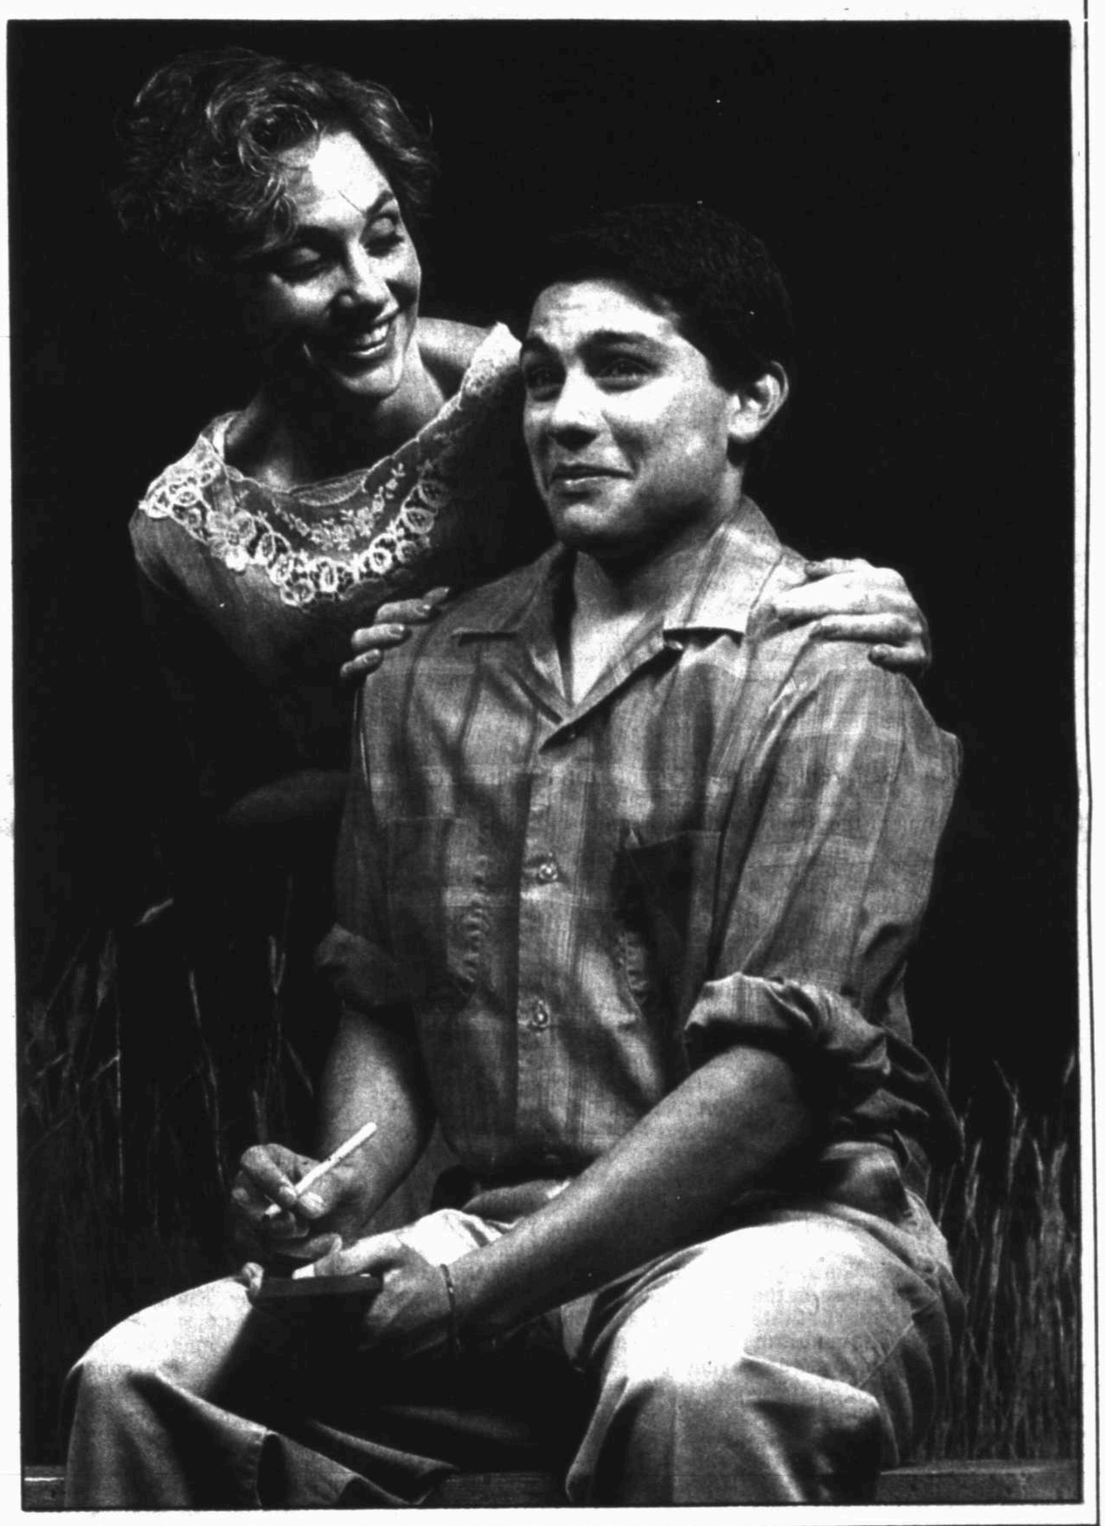

"I was very pleased at the attendance for (Quilters) because it's a musical drama and

His pants were unzipped, and he didn't know it.

But the audience gathered at the Swap Shop in Florida knew it.

Guitarist Greg Jennings of Restless Heart laughed as he recalled how he didn't know his dilemma until his guitar tech told him.

"After I remedied the situation, everyone applauded," Jennings said. "Everyone in the band has fallen down one time or the other. I've gone on stage one time with my pants unzipped. One time only. I check in the middle of the show now just to be sure."

people seemed to really warm up to it," Bachmann said. "The attendance was well over 90 percent of capacity. Usually we gauge a success as being 85 percent."

"Quilters" and "A Texas Romance" both come from regional theater.

"Part of our mission is to present the broad body of dramatic literature and to give newer, more contemporary plays an opportunity to be seen," Bachmann said. "Some of the most innovative plays coming out are being done in regional theater. So, we're looking more and more to regional theaters than we are to Broadway.

"There's only really eight or nine professional productions up on Broadway at any point in time. If an agent produces continuously, you run out of top-notch plays fast," Bachmann said. The Midland production of "A Texas Romance," co-produced by Midland College and Texaco, marks the play's amateur premiere. The playwright, Ellsworth Shave, will be in Midland Friday for opening night. "A Texas Romance" was originally produced at Austin's Live Oak Theater.

"Currently, it's being revived there," Bachmanm said.

"It is a character comedy where the humor comes through the characterizations. It is a gentle sentimental piece."

Set in a small town in Texas in 1928, "A Texas Romance" tells the story of a young man's love for an older woman.

"When I heard about it, I kind of had some reservations, but I went in and picked up the script," said Stephen Madrid, who has been cast as Garland, the young lover. "The more I kept reading it, the more I fell in love with the characters. They were real people. I could actually sit there and pick out people who somewhat resembled them, including myself."

Bonnie Boulton, who plays the sister of Garland's romantic interest, also was attracted to the characters in "A Texas Romance."

"I've always had a great love for the theater, old movies, live plays, and I can relate to the characters in this story from my own experience," said Ms. Boulton, a fifth grade teacher at Bowie Elementary. "It feels very comfortable."

Ms. Boulton's previous stage experience includes MCT's production of "Fiddler on the Roof" and being a member of MCT Singers.

"I decided this year one of my goals was to take a little heavier part. I had no idea it was going to be this heavy, but it's a wonderful experience," she said, identifying "one of her better critics" as son Chad, age 13, who attends Goddard Junior High.

For Ms. Boulton, acting is something she always dreamed of doing but never found the time and opportunity to do until three years ago. She began by taking an acting class at MCT.

"Being a teacher, I feel like I'm on stage all the time, anyway. I also have a great love for sharing with the community, and there's just something special about seeing those smiles on people's faces. I enjoy that a lot."

Madrid is no newcomer to the stage.

This 1990 graduate of Midland High who is a sophomore at Midland College has been in such productions as "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," directed by Bob Fennell; "I'm Not Rappaport," coproduced by MC and MCT; and MCT's production of "Inherit the Wind," in which he played Betram Cates.

"I've had an interest in theater since day-care," said Madrid, who works for Community Services of Texas. "They had this hollowed out TV and I liked to get inside this TV and goof around and act crazy by myself and sometimes with my friends. I think that's where it all began.

"My long term goal is to teach theater, but you have to do it before you can teach it," said Madrid, who credits his parents, Ruby and Terry Madrid, with having been there to "back me up and keep me going."

Madrid, the recipient of MCT's Madeira Shaner scholarship in theater arts, described the character he plays in "A Texas Romance" as "very cautious about his decisions, but once he makes them he stands by them. He's very determined. I believe very much that love will conquer all, that he's quite aware and constantly reminded of all the obstacles in front of him, but yet he's determined to stay with what he's chosen."

Margaret, the older woman Garland loves is described by Kimberly Young, who is playing the part, as "a 30-something widow whose husband has been killed.

"It's set back in 1928 so she could be doomed to a life of widowhood, but she's not your typical widow and is looking forward to getting back out into society.

"She's blunt, very outspoken, doesn't hide behind being too nice," said Ms. Young, who works for Wagner & Brown. "She doesn't do what people expect her to do. I guess probably the word they used back then, although they don't use it in the show, is forward. Jane (Burgess), our director, said that she was a typical flapper."

It's been more than a year since Ms. Young auditioned for a part in a MCT production.

"I'm always watching for a play that they might be having that might have a role for me," Ms. Young said. "This one seemed to fit me about as well as any they've had."

Two things attracted her to the role.

"It was so funny, and she had a Texas accent so I didn't have to pretend like I didn't. It's hard to fight that off."

When asked how it feels to act opposite someone who is much younger and with whom she is supposed to be in love, Ms. Young said, "Stephen's very special. He's got a lot of special qualities, so you don't think of him as a boy. Then it dawned on me one night that I was playing opposite someone who had just gotten out of high school, barely.

"But, it's very much like the play — the actual circumstances of our age and lifestyles. I'm 33, and he's 19. In the show, he's 21, and I'm 30ish.

"He is living at home right now for the time being, and I am out on my own and not married. That makes it easy to identify with the characters, although we're probably not going to fall in love and get married."

Of the playwright and his romantic comedy, Ms. Young said, "He's written a lot of very funny dialogue, and it moves very quickly. I think it's something that a lot of people will like."

ODESSA — The Presidential Museum, 622 N. Lee St., is opening an exhibition Tuesday of the works of George Tames.

Many of the memories, the images, Americans have of official Washington D.C. were photographs Tames took for 40 years for The New York Times.

"His photographs demonstrate the workings of the most influential government in the world at the height of its power," said a release from the museum.

"You've got to bring out the egos of the powerful to make it believable, let them be what they are," Tames said. "They're human first, before all else."

Tames will be giving a lecture and slide presentation from 4 to 5 p.m. in the Community Room of the museum Thursday. A reception in his honor will be held from 5 to 7 p.m.

The exhibit will remain through Nov. 16.

In addition, an exhibit entitled "Through the Perilous Night" opens Thursday in the main gallery. This exhibit is being held in cooperation with Airsho '91 and the opening of the American Airpower Heritage Group museum at Terminal. It will remain through the end of December.

Both exhibits may be viewed during the museum's standard working hours of 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday. No admission is charged. For more information call 1-332-7123.

■ Nose art displayed

ODESSA — On display at the Art Institute for the Permian Basin is an exhibition of World War II nose art from the collection of the American Airpower Heritage Museum.

"The Classy Chassis: World War II Nose Art" will be shown in the Rodman Gallery of the Institute through Nov. 3. The exhibit, which is in honor of the Confederate Art Force and the AAHM, includes other war memorabilia, such as ration books, victory letters, knitting patterns of warm clothes for the battlefield and selected items of clothing and popular music from the war period. The pieces of nose art will be in the collections of the Confederate Air Force following the exhibition. The memorabilia has been collected from various members of the Permian Basin community.

The pieces of nose art in the original collection were salvaged from planes after the war and eventually were donated to the CAF and housed in Harlingen. The phenomenon of nose art has its roots in ancient history when chariots and even ships were given personal names and often had a work fo art painted on them to personalize them.

During WWII, flight crews painted the names and pictures of movie stars, their sweethearts back home or copies of Vargas Girls from Esquire magazine on the nose of their planes, on their flight jackets, on tanks and nearly every other instrument of war. The practice was continued during the Korean War but discontinued by military order during the Vietnam War. Recently, however, some examples of nose art have reappeared on American planes in Europe.

Hours at the Institute are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. For more information call 1-368-7222.

■ Arts, craft show set

KERMIT — The 19th annual October Affair Arts and Crafts Show is set for Oct. 19 and 20 at the Winkler County Recreational Center, north side Winkler County Park.

The show will include works by around 65 artists and craftsmen. The event also features a food bar, barbecue by the Tumbleweed Chefs, a show choir concert Oct. 20 and a cakewalk by the band.

A babysitting service is available. Hours are 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Oct. 19 and 12:30 to 5:30 p.m. Oct. 20.

■ USO dance announced

A USO style dinner dance featuring the Tommy Dorsey Orchestra is set for 7 p.m. Thursday at the Confederate Air Force hanger at Midland International Airport.

Buddy Morrow, conductor of the Tommy Dorsey Orchestra, is perhaps best remembered for his hit recording of "Night Train." Albums to his credit are "Big Band Guitar," "New Blues Scene," "Impact," "Double Impact," "Campus After Dark" and "Night Train."

The orchestra repertoire includes not only the classics of the original Tommy Dorsey Orchestra but popular music from Dixieland rhythm and blues and intricate ballads to progressive jazz and current rock tunes as well as familiar songs from the 1940s big bands.

Soloist with the orchestra will be Kay Starr, who has sung with, among others, the Grand Ole Opry, Bob Wills and his Texas Playboys, Bob Crosby and the Glenn Miller Orchestra.

Cocktails will be served beginning at 7 p.m. Dinner is at 8 p.m. Admission is, for the dinner dance only, $125 per person. Call 687-5377 for tickets and more information.

■ MC to host festival

Junior college students from across the state will be on the Midland College campus Oct. 16-19 to participate in the Texas Junior College Choral Festival.

The festival will be held in the Allison Fine Arts Building, MC campus.

This year's festival clinician will be Dr. Joseph Flummerfelt, director of choral activities at Westminister Choir College, Princeton, N.J. He is chorus master for the New York Philharmonic.

MC's Division of Fine Arts and the Texas Junior College Choral Festival are sponsoring the 8 p.m. concert Oct. 18 in the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium. The concert is open free to the public.

■ Opera to be presented

Midland Opera Theater has received a contribution from The Shell Oil Company Foundation to assist in the production of Verdi's "La Traviata" at 8 p.m. Oct. 30 at Midland High School Auditorium.

"La Traviata" will be performed by the Western Opera Theater, the professional touring company of the San Francisco Opera Center. This company currently is celebrating its 25th anniversary. During the celebration to date, performances have been given in 38 states including Alaska and Hawaii. The troupe was the first professional opera company from the United States to perform in the Peoples Republic of China.

■ Festival set for today

GARDEN CITY — St. Lawrence Fall Festival is set for today at the Parish Hall, 10 miles south of Garden city on Highway 33 and five miles west on Highway 2401.

Dinner will be served from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. The meal includes homemade German sausage, barbecue and trimmings and homemade cakes and pies. Tickets, priced at $5 for adults and $3 for children under 12, will be sold until 1:45 p.m. Plates to go will be served at the noon meal only.

Sausage sandwiches, dessert and tea will be served from 5 to 7 p.m.

Uncooked sausage will be sold at $3.50 a pound starting at 10 a.m.

The booths open at 10:30 a.m. and close at 4 p.m. and include Spin-a-Wheel, Grab Bag, balloons, Coke Ring, Toss, Sucker Tree and the Kountry Kitchen, featuring handcrafted items and homemade baked goods. Candy and cokes will be available in the concession booths.

Bingo begins at noon and ends at 4 p.m.

Bales of hay donated by members of the St. Lawrence community and other items donated by various businesses will be auctioned at 2 p.m.

The event closes with a country western band, Tomahawk, performing from 7 to 11 p.m. Admission is $5 per person.

■ Booth space available

MCCAMEY — The Christmas bazaar set for Dec. 7 at the McCamey Park Building, 212 W. 7th St., is now accepting applications for booth space.

Booths are $15 and food booths are $20. Booths with peg boards run $20 and $18.

For more information or to apply write Debbie Jones, P.O. Box 942, McCamey, Texas 79752 or call Terry Melton, 1-652-8202, or Aileen Waters, 1-652-3687. The annual event is sponsored by the McCamey Rebekah Lodge.

■ Jazz artist to perform

Doc Cheatham comes to Midland for an 8 p.m. performance at the Midland Petroleum Club Nov. 19.

The event is sponsored by the West Texas Jazz Society. For more information on either event, call 682-4283.

■ Audition dates set

The Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale is conducting auditions Oct. 14 and 15 at the Symphony Rehearsal Hall, 3100 LaForce Boulevard, Terminal.

The symphony is auditioning for the position of associate principal second violin and for players for the substitute list in all sections.

Auditions will conducted in the evening hours. For times and more information call 563-0921.

■ Cook-off to take place

The Permian Basin Cook-Off Inc. (PBC) will host its seventh annual "Feed for Need" chili, brisket, fajita and pork rib cook-off from 11 a.m. to midnight Oct. 19 at the Midland County Exhibit Building, Highway 80 East.

All entries in the event must be postmarked by Oct. 15.

Trophies will be awarded in first through fourth place for cooking teams, showmanship and cook pit or trailer. Special trophies will be awarded to media cooking and unique camp gourmet.

"In the past six years, the PBC has donated more than $65,000 to local charities," said a release from Judy Makowsky, president of PBC. "Our success is attributable to our cookers, sponsors, volunteers, members and ticket-holders who support us each year."

All proceeds from the PBC are distributed within the Permian Basin. This year the primary recipients will be The Epilepsy Association of West Texas, Make-A-Wish Foundation and Allison Cancer Center Look-Good Feel-Good Shop. Developmental Disabilities Center also will benefit.

For more information or to receive an entry form call Mike Thornton, 684-5531, or Ms. Makowsky, 686-4613, or write PBC, Inc., P.O. Box 2419, Midland, Texas 79702.

Entry fee is $50 per first team entry and $25 each additional class entered.

Being held in conjunction with the event is the fourth annual Red Hot Chili Pot Trot, which features an eight and two mile race, a two mile fitness walk and a children's mile race. The courses are TAC certified. This event is sponsored by the PBC, Inc., the Permian Basin Roadrunners Club and Golden Corral Family Steakhouse. For more information call Alex Rose, 689-1595 days or 694-4271, or Carla Warden, 697-1066.

'Paradise' succeeds as teary-eyed melodrama

By Dolores Barclay
Associated Press Writer

Some day, one of those Hollywood movie geniuses will decide that a new, improved more contemporary version of "Lawrence of Arabia" or "The 400 Blows" should be made. And studio bosses will quickly dispatch an array of studio hacks to carve out a tepid screenplay and grab an unsuspecting director to lead the team to defeat.

The latest brainstorm in this questionable practice of rewriting foreign films is Touchstone Pictures' "Paradise," written and directed by Mary Agnes Donoghue and based on Jean-Loup Hubert's charming 1988 film, "Le Grand Chemin" ("The Grand Highway").

"Le Grand Chemin" was a delightful awakening into the terrors and joys of life, lyrically directed by Hubert with lovely performances from its two child stars, Vanessa Guedj and Antoine Hubert. "Paradise" is slow and almost painful, an indulgence by the writer-director with little regard for the story's flow or the movie's cinematic virtues.

But despite its flaws, "Paradise" does succeed as the kind of melodrama that forces a tear or two. And that success is owed to four sturdy performances.

Melanie Griffith and Don Johnson portray a troubled wife and husband who have shut out one another because of the death of their son. Their catharsis — and the rebirth of their relationship — happens through the visit of a young boy, played by the very wise Elijah Wood.

Griffith handles her role with quiet restraint; Johnson's job is somewhat more complex because he's asked to slowly build to his emotional climax. The couple do surprisingly well.

The Scott Kroopf and Patrick Palmer production was filmed in South Carolina near Charleston. It is surprising that Donoghue made little use of the area's inherent charms and had to construct an old cemetery rather than use one of the real ones on location.

MUSIC: Restless Heart celebrates seventh anniversary

From 1F

Restless Heart perform live Saturday at Midland College's Chaparral Center. Performing at the same venue will be Reba McEntire and Aaron Tippin. Showtime is 8 p.m. Tickets, priced at $18.50, may be purchased at Endless Horizons and Midland Center.

Despite the fact that music is his first love, when Jennings went to college, he didn't pursue a musical career.

"I went to Oklahoma State University and spent four and a half years of my parents' money trying to be an accountant," Jennings said in a recent telephone interview. "Music was always my first love since I was 9 or 10 years old. My dad always had a bunch of music around. He was sort of an amateur guitarist."

Jennings was not turning his back on music, he was simply being practical.

"I went to college totally with the idea of getting a backup career. I chose accounting. I finally realized how strenuous both professions were. One day I found myself at the crossroads of being not a very good accountant or not a very good musician, all at the same time. I had to make a choice and specialize in one or the other field."

No doubt Restless Heart fans as well as the four other band members are pleased with Jennings' career choice. The five-member band has received numerous award nominations and was awarded the Academy of Country Music's Vocal Group of the Year honor in 1990.

Restless Heart is celebrating its seventh anniversary and fifth album with the release of "The Best of Restless Heart: Heard It On The Radio." The hits collection, which will be released Oct. 20, contains seven of the group's No. 1 songs plus two new songs, including "You Can Depend On Me."

Restless Heart members are Larry Stewart, lead vocals, guitar and keyboards; Dave Innis, keyboards, vocals and guitar; Paul Gregg, vocals and bass; John Dittrich, vocals and drums; and Jennings, vocals and lead guitar. All of the members sing, write songs and are former recording session musicians.

When Jennings made the decision to pursue a career in music, he went to Nashville with Scott Hendricks, a college friend. The two joined another friend, Tom DuBois, who had moved there the year before. Jennings worked at Opryland for a few years. DuBois pursued songwriting and Hendricks pursued engineering.

"Through the contacts of both of those guys, I started doing some sessions around town. And one day Tim decided he had an idea to put a group together."

At the time, Gregg and Dittrich were in a band called The Boys Band and Innis and Stewart were working in another band.

"We all gathered in a little rehearsal studio one night and sang and played some tunes. We noticed there was a real chemistry vocally; the vocals really blended in a special way."

DuBois fronted the money for demo tapes.

"We shopped it around to some labels around town, and RCA decided they liked what we were doing, and they signed us.

"It really came amazingly quick," Jennings said. "We showcased for about four different labels, and the deal came very, very quickly. We had never played a live show together when we were signed by the label, (but) everybody had years of doing other things which led up to this."

Fans mean something to Jennings and Restless Heart.

"They're making our dreams come true. This is what we've always wanted to do: to make music, travel and have people really appreciate our music. The fact that they buy albums and come to our concerts makes it for us."

Jennings said cutting videos is difficult and boring, but realizes they are important in a market filled with performing talent. "It's a lot of hurry up and wait, stand around and set up two hours to do a 15 second shot."

He said videos help listeners identify performers' names and faces with their songs because "not everyone can attend a concert. Most everyone these days has a TV with a cable."

Success in the music business carries a price tag, he said.

"It takes up a major amount of time. All the other four guys except me are married and have families. I know it drastically affects their home lives. We're on the road 180 days a year. People have 18-month-old and 2-year-old children they miss a lot of. Just the group itself is time consuming," said Jennings, who added that he knew this career would call for hard work.

"I had no idea that the rewards would be as great as they would be, but on the same token, I had no idea the sacrifices would be as big as they are.

"It's all-consuming. You start out just wanting to do music, make your own music. That sounds simple enough. All of a sudden it turns into a big business, and that's a machine you have to feed. Doing interviews and doing TV shows and dressing right and meeting the right people almost supersede writing songs and playing music. That's the downside. Imaging a position seems to be as important if not more than actual music."

Air Force Band makes Midland appearance

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

The United States Air Force Air Training Command Band, formerly known as the Band of the West, performs 7 p.m., Oct. 14, at Midland High School auditorium.

"Due to recent reductions in our military budget, the United States Air Force Air Training Command has been forced to reduce its band program, leaving ours the only remaining band squadron in ATC," said a release from Tech Sgt. Julia R. Schembre, ATC band chief of publicity. "We are honored to have been selected ATC's Command Band and are currently undergoing a name change to reflect our new status."

Special soloist for the Midland performance will be Airman First Class Stephen R. Shininger, percussionist. This Air Force band performed in Midland in October of 1989.

The 1989 performance as well as the upcoming concert are sponsored by the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Tickets are free and may be picked up at participating area merchants including Pages and Prints Bookstore, Foods Fantastic, Daily News, Baldwin Piano, Mainstream Music and Athletic Supply.

Conductor for the band is Major Daniel L. Schmidt of Omaha, Neb.

Schmidt's early musical training included playing in the Omaha Youth Symphony and the Central High School band and orchestra. He earned a bachelor of music in education degree from the University of Nebraska in 1971.

While completing his senior year in college he was featured as a soloist with both the Omaha and Lincoln symphony orchestras. He joined the Air Force in 1971 as a solo cornetist with the United States Air Force Academy Band, Colo.

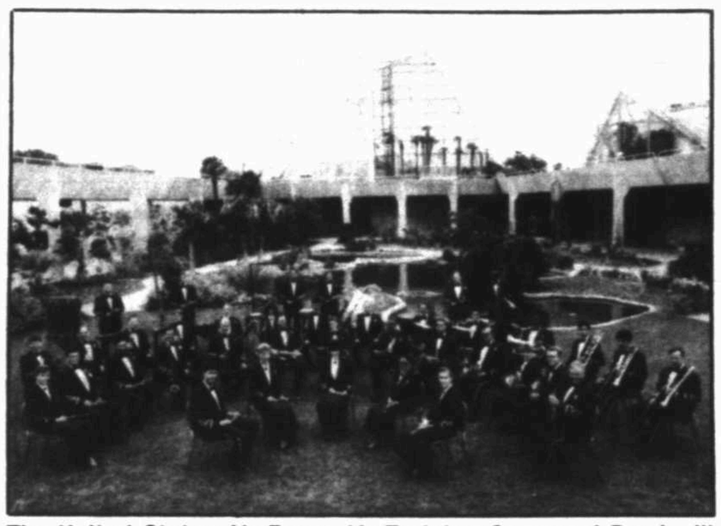

He received his commission in 1974 and was assigned as Commander of the 15th Air Force band at March Air Force Base, California. While he served there, Schmidt worked with Bob Hope, Jimmy Stewart and the Los Angeles Philharmonic. He participated in the roll-out of the first space shuttle and the B-1 Bomber.

Schmidt has conducted many bands in the Air Force program. Prior to his present assignment he was commander of the Air Force Band of the East, McGuire AFB, N.J.

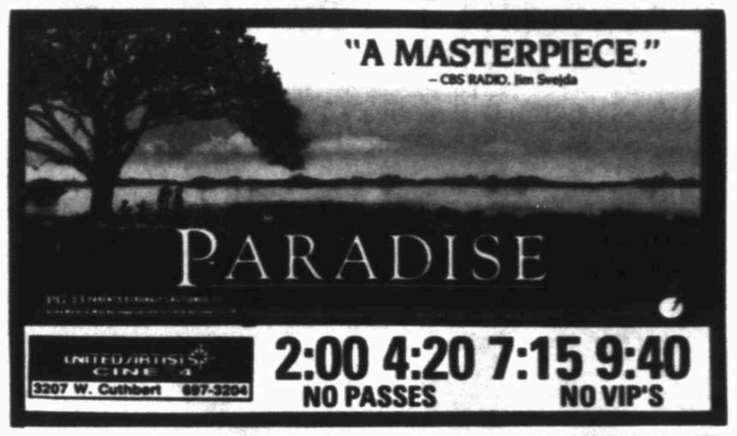

While there, his band performed in the 200th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence in Philadelphia, President George Bush's inaugural parade in Washington, D.C., and a special request concert at the foot of the Washington Monument for "Up With People."

Schmidt has performed for every president from Nixon to Bush and has been awarded the Meritorious Service Medal with three oak leaf clusters and the Air Force Commendation Medal.

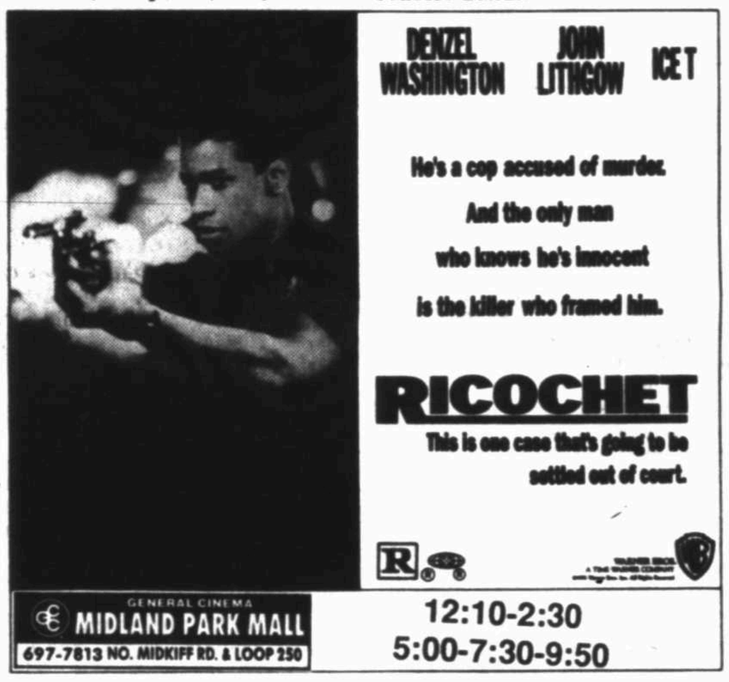

The Air Force Band of the West performed for a memorial service for the astronauts killed aboard the Space Shuttle Challenger in January of 1986 in Houston, and received, on April 18, 1989, the Colonel George S. Howard Citation of Musical Excellence for Military Concert Bands.

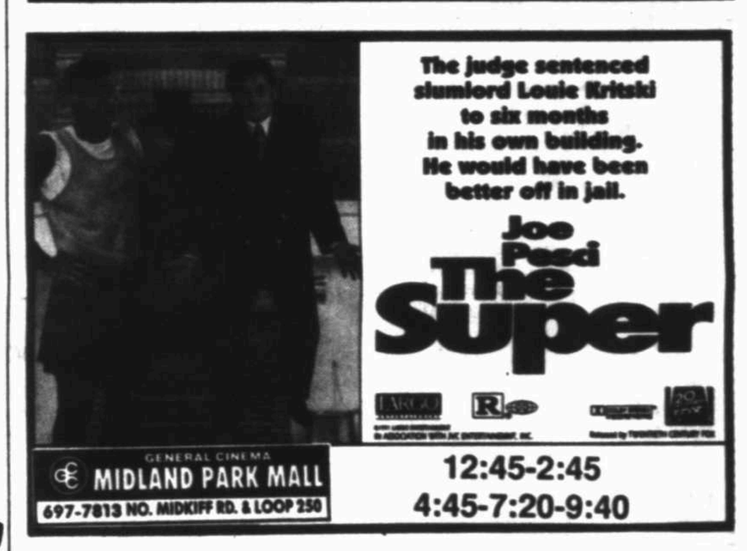

The United States Air Force Air Training Command Band will present a free concert Oct. 14 at Midland High School auditorium.

HOROSCOPE

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Business success will depend on your ability to mend broken fences. A positive attitude leads you up the ladder of fame and fortune. Consolidate recent gains in November and December, then forge important new alliances in January of 1992. Travel and good luck go hand-in-hand next spring. Be firm with those who try to distract you from your goals. A summer romance looks promising.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Britt Ekland, author Shana Alexander, explorer Thor Heyerdahl, actress Janet Gaynor.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Spending more time outdoors will give you fresh inspiration. Visit loved ones living at a distance. Include an older relative in more of your entertainment plans.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You are very bright but not always right. Try to be more open-minded. Sharing is the key to lasting romantic happiness. Let your mate know how much you really care. Share your dreams.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Stop racing your motor and let others take the lead for a while. Regular exercise and better eating habits will give you new energy. Be especially careful not to overindulge at parties.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A good day to see relatives and old friends. Listen to their views on world politics and other serious questions without arguing. Keep your hopes realistic in romance.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do what you can to cheer up your loved ones as well as yourself! Accept an invitation to attend a religious service or other interesting event. Weigh your words carefully.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Take all obvious precautions against wasting your energies as well as your financial resources. If you decide to spice up your love life, know the risks involved. Avoid taking unnecessary chances.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Not a good day for traveling or making major changes on the home front. Loved ones may not be willing to cooperate. Bide your time. Direct confrontations should be avoided at all costs.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Do what you can to help a loved one develop more self-confidence. Hand over to a relative a longtime family responsibility. A religious service gives you food for thought.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your plans involving joint funds reap a quick response today. Be wary of strangers who come to your home. Postpone making any major domestic changes. Keep family secrets under lock and key.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): This is no time to act shy or sheltered. Unexpected and delightful experiences await you in an out-of-the-ordinary environment. Be more affectionate with your loved ones.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Getting away from your home environment could be good for you now. Bridge the many miles between you and a pal with a phone call or letter. Soft-pedal a family dispute.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Set your sights high. Valuable allies are rooting for you; the doors of opportunity swing open. People at a distance give you a new idea. Romance looks thrilling. Put your best foot forward.

The bidding:

3 NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ◇

There are bridge players who would not indulge in falsecarding for all the tea in China. Then there are others who would rather try a bit of larceny than rely on a legitimate line.

North's raise to two no trump was justified by the reasonable five-card club suit. With 17 points, almost all prime, South had just enough to accept.

West led the jack of diamonds, and declarer won in dummy with the king as East followed with the three. There were only eight fast tricks to be had, and the best shot for a ninth would be to lead a heart at trick two. If the ace was with East, there was a reasonable chance the defender would follow low. And if either defender took the ace immediately, a spade shift might not be clear.

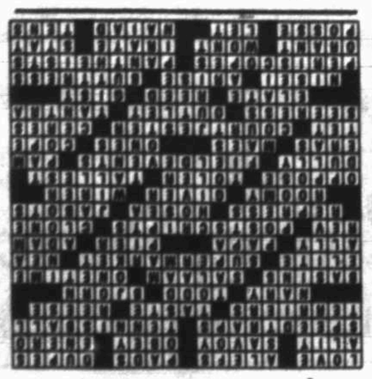

However, declarer was one of those characters who like nothing better than to hornswoggle the defenders. So at trick two, declarer led a spade from the table and put in the nine!

West won the queen and continued with a diamond, again won on the board. Now declarer tried a heart to the king. West took the ace and, blind to what was happening, persevered with diamonds. Declarer wasted no time in cashing five club tricks and the queen of hearts for the contract.

We hope West learned a lesson from this. When declarer doesn't try to establish a long suit in dummy, it is usually because there is no need to—the suit is running. Therefore, West should have concluded that, if declarer held the ace of spades, the contract couldn't be beaten. The only chance was if East held the ace of spades and there were enough tricks in the suit to sink the contract. So West should have ignored declarer's bit of deception and, after winning the queen of spades, continued with king of spades and another.

'Alien 3' to open Memorial Day

NEW YORK (AP) — Twentieth Century Fox's "Alien 3," starring Sigourney Weaver and directed by David Fincher, will open nationwide on May 22, 1992, to cash in on the lucrative Memorial Day weekend.

In "Alien 3," Sigourney Weaver reprises her role as Warrant Officer Ripley, who in the new film finds herself stranded on a remote penal colony which lacks the high-tech weaponry needed to combat the rampaging Alien. The supporting cast includes Charles S. Dutton, Charles Dance and Lance Henriksen.

Weaver made her starring debut in "Alien" (1979), and she received an Academy Award nomination for best actress for its sequel, "Aliens" (1986).

'The last thing out of the closet'

Mental Illness Awareness Week: Oct. 6-12

LINDA ANDERSON

JOI D. WILLIAMS

The families call it "the last thing out of the closet," but mental illness is not uncommon. In fact, it strikes one in four families, according to information from the Texas Alliance for the Mentally Ill.

Mental Illness Awareness Week is marked each year during the first full week in October — this year the week is today though Saturday — in an effort to "increase public awareness of the causes, symptoms and treatments for mental illness," according to Chase's Annual Events. In spite of this and other widespread educational efforts, mental illness is still feared by the general public.

Because of this, the women who agreed to talk about how mental illness affects their families for this article chose not to use their real names.

According to Laurie Flynn, executive director of National Alliance for the Mentally Ill as quoted in a booklet, "Serious Mental Illnesses Myths and Realities," presented by DuPont, "Mental illnesses are no-fault brain diseases. They're not the fault of a family that doesn't know how to take care of its family members, and they certainly don't reflect a character flaw."

"It's a brain disease," agreed Sue, the mother of Roxanne who has been diagnosed with chronic schizophrenia. But "people who get this disease are doomed, not only by their illness but by society."

THE BRAIN, like any other organ of the body, can suffer from disease; but because brain disease affects how people think and act, the prejudice against those with this illness is great.

Roxanne, 26, said, "My illness began when I was 18. I was in my first year of college. It started slowly, but in a matter of weeks I was out of it."

She began having what she called "bizarre actions and thoughts. And I talked constantly. I had weird thoughts, weird religious beliefs. I had visions, hallucinations. I was scared — I believed my brain was playing tricks on me."

In spite of her fears, Roxanne said she linked her growing confusion to a case of hypoglycemia she had two years earlier. "I told myself it was because of low blood sugar," she said.

Her parents believed differently. "My family could tell something was wrong," Roxanne said. "I went to our family physician's office. I hadn't slept for almost a week and my legs were very weak. I was really tired — I thought I had polio."

Roxanne's parents were notified. "The doctor's nurse called," Sue said. "She was sure she Roxanne needed to be in a mental hospital."

The family contacted Mental Health Mental Retardation (MHMR). A psychiatrist there put Roxanne on a program of medication. "She was one of the fortunate people," Sue said. "In less than a month she started becoming stable."

At first, "I didn't realize the drug was making me feel better," Roxanne said. "I started believing I was being poisoned."

She stopped taking her medication and ended up in the hospital emergency room. What helped her most in her recovery from this setback was that her mother insisted she take her medicine. Roxanne said, "I wanted to get better so I surrendered to what people thought was best for me. I believe there would be something really wrong with me if I ever

Programs help open door

Although both the cause and the cure of mental illness are still unknown, many changes have been taken in the last few decades to find treatment for patients and their families, and help improve their lives; many programs have been initiated for this purpose. And one of those programs is Friendship House in Midland.

Fran Hoerster, coordinator of Friendship House, said the program is a "daytime club ... that strives to help those who suffer with chronic mental illness to have the fullest life possible."

"We look upon ourselves as a wellness program," she said. "We stress the positive rather than dwell on the illness — but we do have to take that illness into consideration."

A branch of Permian Basin Community Centers for Mental Health Mental Retardation (MHMR), Friendship House can help its members learn new skills and give them "vocational choices, because our ultimate goal is to return them to a functional life," Ms. Hoerster said.

"Generally, we are one of many arms in the community for an on-going program."

Families who need help in coping with the effects of mental illness are advised to first seek the advice of MHMR, which has an intake process for families in this situation, Ms. Hoerster said. "Depending on the circumstances, the family would pick up either a case worker or a case manager." Also, she added, "there is some family counseling available at MHMR."

Mental illness terms defined

Mental illness is an umbrella term used to define several medical conditions.

According to information in a brochure from the Texas Alliance for the Mentally Ill, "Mental illness is a term used for a group of disorders causing severe disturbances in thinking, feeling and relating. They result in substantially diminished capacity for coping with ordinary demands of life. Mental illnesses can affect persons of all ages and they can occur in any family.

"The causes are not well understood, although it is believed that the functioning of the brain's neurotransmitters is involved in a biochemical disorder.

"There is no effective prevention at this time, likewise no cures for mental illnesses. However, an expanding range of medication is available which reduces symptoms markedly for most people."

One of these mental illnesses is schizophrenia. The brochure continued:

"Unfortunately, there are many myths

Wine and hors d'oeuvres were served to the large crowd, which turned out for the opening.

Among these seen at the gala event were Sally and Bill Reeder, Sandra and Smith Ray, Carole Steele, Marjorie and James Hill, Ann and Jim Walton, Betty and C.C. Tull, Mitzi and Byrne O'Neill, Betty Lynch, Betty and Bill Grimes, and Betty (Mrs. W.D.) Barnes.

This exhibit will hang through Oct. 25. Library hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

CONGRATULATIONS to Sandy Faulkner, who recently celebrated his Big Four-Oh.

His wife, Diane, hosted a surprise party at the Yucca Theatre to mark the milestone event. A host of friends enjoyed visiting, dancing and sharing birthday cake.

Amonsg these present were Sandy's mother, Pat Faulkner; his sisters, Sue Faulkner of Odessa and Cindy Blair and her husband, Jim of Midland; his brother and sister-in-law, Jim and Terry Faulkner of Arlington; Mimi and Tom McKnight, Esta and Cary Geron, David Daniel, Dean and Steve Thompson, Ann and Joe Hathaway, and Dr. Roberta Case (her husband, Richard, called from a business trip to Florida during the party to offer birthday wishes).

We are told there would have been two more guests present, Julio Delgado and Gary Waits, had they not arrived mistakenly a week early all the way from San Diego, Calif., to help ease their longtime friend "over the hill."

CELEBRATING THEIR 44th wedding anniversary, Katrena and Bob Cain recently traveled to Honolulu, Hawaii, where they were honored guests at a Change of Command Ceremony on board USS Worden at the U.S. Naval Station, Pearl Harbor's Bravo Pier.

Capt. James D. Brotherton, the husband of the Cains' niece, Nancy Fry Brotherton, took command of the guided missile cruiser, which was part of Operation Desert Storm.

Following the ceremony, the Cains were guests at the reception honoring Commanding Officer Brotherton and the former Commanding Officer, Capt. William B. Hunt, and their families at the Naval Station Tea Garden. Among the many Hawaiian delicacies prepared by the ship's chefs were smoked salmon, salmon pate, Rumaki, fresh fruit skewers and the Captain's cake.

While on the island of Oahu, the Cains were given a private tour of the USS Worden by Captain Brotherton. They also were guests of the Brothertons and children, Melissa and Peter, for Sunday brunch, and that afternoon they enjoyed the Pacific Ocean at Bellows Beach, with the family.

Katrena was included in the Worden's Officers' Wives luncheon at the Mariana honoring Commanding Officers' wives, Nancy Brotherton and Penny Hunt.

The Cains also enjoyed walking the beach at Waikiki early each morning and scenic drives around the island, where they viewed the lush greenery, such as the banana tree and coconut palm farms.

They also enjoyed a tour of the Dole Pineapple Plantation and returning to places visited on previous trips to the Hawaiian Islands, such as the Punch Bowl, the national cemetery, where the history of the Battles of World War II, the Korean War and Vietnam are vividly pictured on maps.

LAST: Families affected by illness

chose to get off medication.

"It's more important than food," she said.

Jean's son was not so lucky. "No medication helps him," she said.

Now 38, her son has had his affliction since he was 19 — half his life. "In high school he was a popular kid," an athlete with better-than-average grades. But he hadn't been in college long when he was "asked to leave," she said. He joined the military and was honorably discharged a short time later as "unfit for military service."

HE WAS diagnosed as having chronic schizophrenia. "His quality of life is so poor," said his mother. "His friends no longer associate with him. ... He would have as many as 22 jobs a year." He has been hospitalized for his illness 11 times.

The family's hope now, Jean said, is for her son to be given a new medication he hasn't tried before and which may help him. "It costs $9,000 a year. ... The only hope we have left is for him to get on that drug on SSDI (Social Security Disability Insurance)."

Liz's son, who is now in his early 20s, was "originally diagnosed when he was 16," she said. Until then, he had shown no signs of an impending problem. "He was a honor graduate, gifted in certain subject areas, had always been an excellent student. He was on no drugs that we knew of," although he had started drinking in small amounts.

His disease led him to threaten suicide, become abusive to his parents and somewhat abusive to himself, she said. During this time, he was hospitalized three times.

He called the police and told them his parents were beating him up, his mother said. The third time the police came to the family home, her son tried to grab the police officer's gun.

Her son has been in a state hospital, private hospital, treatment center and halfway house for the chronically mentally ill. His treatment has progressed to the point that he "is now going to college and being successful in school," Liz said. "He was diagnosed manic-depressive while he was in the halfway house. He now takes lithium," and will for the rest of his life.

Now, she said, he is "progressing very well."

ANNA SAID she thinks her son had childhood schizophrenia. "He didn't become uncontrollable until he got in the ninth grade and started using drugs. He got into drugs pretty heavy — he wanted to be accepted by somebody and the drugs made him feel better.

"When he was real little he was so delightful and learned things so quickly," Anna said. "We used to laugh and say he minded real well once you got his attention. (We didn't know) he was off in another world. And he couldn't stand noise."

Anna's son was admitted into the hospital for his illness when he was 17. The diagnosis was juvenile depression and adolescent adjustment, but it got worse.

"He got in trouble with the law in 1987," she said, and is now in prison. "His lawyer has a copy of all his medical records."

For a while his parents were able to afford a private physician and medication for their son, but he stopped taking the medication because the side effect — called tardive dyskinesia, or constant and uncontrollable motion similar to that of Parkinson's disease — were so severe.

Anna isn't sure where this illness will lead their family. "You can't work through the grief when you know it's not over," she said. "If my child had died I could accept that. It's a daily worry about what will happen to him when we're gone. He'll go straight to the homeless street people."

The families worry about who will take care of their disabled children when they die. "No one in the family wants to be responsible" for him, Anna said.

Lynn said her son's problems also began when he was in his early 20s. He had always been a good student, she said, "above average in intellect ... He went off to college on a scholarship."

His illness developed while he was in college. "During that time he was going to college and was within a year of graduation," she said. "He didn't complete anything the last semester."

The family's doctor recommended that he see a psychologist, who in turn recommended he be taken to a psychiatrist who could prescribe medication for him.

"Since that time he's seen at least four psychiatrists and four psychologists and been hospitalized six or seven times," Lynn said. "He did have a problem with alcohol. I've been told by different doctors that that's part of the way of numbing what they are going through. (But) self-medication creates a second problem in dealing with anything."

SINCE THE disease first hit, Lynn's son has completed a couple of college courses, she said. "He needs something to do."

But he no longer lives with his family. He "was with us off and on," Lynn said, but "it was too difficult to stand for very long. He wanted his freedom but our fears for him made it difficult. His younger siblings at home didn't understand the nature of (his) illness" and his parents were afraid that "if we withdrew financial aid ... he would end up totally on the street."

Families of mentally ill patients tend to focus on the ill member, and Lynn's son, who she said "has been called manic depressive ... with symptoms of schizophrenia, ... doesn't like to be the focal point of the family. But he's not able to function in the way that goes along with his age. His behavior is not that of an adult."

Because of the illness, their children's growth — emotionally and mentally — is stunted, the women agreed.

Mental illness in any member of a family is a major upheaval, they said. "It's very difficult on a family, on a marriage, and hell to pay on siblings because they feel left out because all the attention is focused on the sick member," Liz said.

Jean has three other children who watched their brother's illness progress. "It was very difficult on our youngest daughter to cope," she said. "We moved him out when he was about 26. It's an upheaval in the whole family. We (the families) need more help. It (mental illness) isolates the family. I wish there were things available to help these people."

"No one in my family knows the full story of what's going on," Lynn said. "They wouldn't be able to understand what all is going on."

"These people are people," Liz said. "They need more understanding."

They also need more financial aid because many of them are unable to get and keep jobs.

"Many can't be covered on their parents' insurance if they are above a certain age," said Liz.

"UNLESS PEOPLE have good insurance, they can't begin to afford a private physician," Lynn said, so most families have to resort to such government programs as Supplemental Security Income (SSI), SSDI and Medicaid in order to pay the financial costs of mental illness.

To qualify for government-sponsored financial aid programs, applicants must meet strict qualifications, the women said.

"We supported him," Jean said. "Now we can't give him anything or he'll lose (SSDI). We have to account for every penny. I keep all his receipts."

"I haven't been able to keep a job, so my best option was to qualify for SSI," Roxanne said. "We've been persistent in filling out those applications" and have even gone so far as to "hire a lawyer to present a legal case" about her qualifications for government financial-aid programs.

"I've been living independently for the last seven months," she said.

"My husband and I are getting older," her mother Sue said, "and we're not going to be able to provide for this daughter for the rest of her life."

"I was told our son was unemployable," said Anna, who doesn't believe it. "I feel if he could get a job where he could use his brain for four hours a day, he'd be a very capable employee. If they get someone (employer) who understands and is patient with them, there is hope for employment ... They have no self esteem to begin with."

Liz's son is in a work-study program at college. She said that projections figure that every dollar spent on him now will be returned in multiples because he will be rehabilitated and be part of the work force.

Mental illness is so misunderstood, according to the women, that many people believe it is synonymous with violent behavior or split personalities.

"Schizophrenia does not mean a split personality," said Anna. "It's a chemical imbalance that makes them do weird things."

And instead of being violent, "the mentally ill tend to be more distant, more withdrawn than a normal person," added Lynn.

EVEN THE diagnosis of mental illness is inexact. Some of these women's children had received conflicting diagnoses. "The doctors don't always agree with each other," Sue said.

"Sometimes the doctors don't spend enough time with the patient," added her daughter Roxanne.

Lynn said her son has lost faith with his doctors, but she doesn't know if "the doctors haven't helped (him) or if he's not doing his part."

Understanding for the mentally ill is a top priority for these women, who are not only worried about the present for their loved ones, but also for their futures. "Studies show that over half the street people are schizophrenic," Liz said. "We probably have less than half the (hospital) beds in public care than we did 20 years ago."

In order to promote understanding of the mentally ill, all these women are members of Texas Alliance for the Mentally Ill, a support and advocacy group for friends and families of the mentally ill, and part of the National Alliance for the Mentally Ill. Locally, the group meets 7:30 p.m. the second Monday of each month at Our Saviour's Lutheran Church, 3309 Neely. For more information call 684-6709.

"We want to be able to be honest with others," Sue said, and "help get this illness out of the closet."

PROGRAMS: Emphasis is placed on 'wellness'

(From 1G)

Many mentally ill individuals also have a problem with alcohol or drug abuse; in those cases they should enter a substance abuse program before coming to Friendship House.

Mental illness is not a character defect or the result of poor parenting. It is a brain disease that has been linked to genetic causes and chemical imbalances. However, Ms. Hoerster said, "a genetic predisposition (to mental illness) can be triggered by drugs. We've never found out just what it is that triggers it."

The type of mental illness called schizophrenia most often strikes young people between the ages of 17-29, Ms. Hoerster said. "It is rare for a person over 40 to get this illness. The claim is that this is the (brain) illness of the young, and Alzheimer's is the brain disease of the old."

Schizophrenia varies by individuals too. About one-third of those diagnosed with schizophrenia will have one burst of the disease and recover; "about one-third will have it off and on; and in one-third it's chronic," she said.

"Friendship House helps them learn their patterns, and helps them keep it under control;" helps the mentally ill "manage their symptoms," Ms. Hoerster said.

Many mentally ill individuals improve to the extent that they qualify for a program of "independent living set up through MHMR," Ms. Hoerster said. Because some mentally ill persons can be taught to successfully live on their own without resorting to living homeless on the street, "... independent living programs are so important."

Many of these people can find "supported employment, with coaches," she added.

Families of mentally ill patients feel a lot of "frustration, pain and fear of the future," Ms. Hoerster said. "They need some help but are afraid to hope too much because that hope may be dashed."

That's where programs like Friendship House come in, she said. "That's why we call it a 'wellness program.' There's always room to get better and better."

about schizophrenia. Persons with schizophrenia do not have a 'split personality' and are not prone to criminal violence. Their illness is not caused by bad parenting and is not evidence of weakness of character. Their illness is due to a biochemical disturbance of the brain not unlike the chemical changes that can cause an illness such as diabetes. Just as diabetes can be controlled with medication, some of the symptoms of severe mental illness can be helped by proper medication."

In a brochure titled "Mental Illness: Information for Writers," the National Alliance for the Mentally Ill has defined mental illnesses as "a variety of relatively severe mental disorders that interfere significantly with people's abilities to live and work. ... Mental illnesses are not the same as mental retardation, which involves deficits in learning ability and intellectual process."

The brochure defines the following mental illnesses:

- Schizophrenia is a brain disease that most often strikes people between the ages of 16-25. It interferes with thought processes, focus of attention and grasp of reality. Some people with this disease have hallucinations (in which they see or hear things that aren't there) and can't determine what is real and what isn't. Causes are still unknown but are believed to be biological, sometimes involving genetics. A projected 2 million Americans or more will have schizophrenia during their adult years.
- Depressive illness is a severe and persistent biological disease. Two most common types of this disease are uni-polar, which is characterized by deep, prolonged depression; and bi-polar or manic-depression, which is characterized by cycles of deep depression and inappropriate highs. Scientists believe this illness can be genetically transmitted. Although depressive illness is treatable, only one-third of the people who have this illness have been treated. Nearly 10 million Americans will experience major depression during their adult years, and 1.3 million will have manic depression.

Violence is not a common trait in the mentally ill. More often they are the victims of crime instead of the criminals, according to the brochure.

Families of mentally ill persons face financial, emotional and practical problems of living with someone who is seriously ill. Nearly 40 percent of people with schizophrenia live with their families.

Both the families and patients suffer from the stigma attached to mental illnesses — negative attitudes, stereotypes and misunderstandings. Many try to deny the mental illness in their families and avoid getting treatment.

Treatment for these afflictions can include medication, counseling and therapy. With treatment, many mentally ill people can work at responsible jobs, have families, attend school and enjoy life.

Several booklets provided by TEXAMI and NAMI list some symptoms that may indicate mental illness. If these symptoms persist for several weeks, qualified medical opinion is needed:

- Changes in personality or mood
- Withdrawal from social contacts or abnormal self-centeredness
- Confused thinking; strange or grandiose ideas
- Persistent depression, apathy or extreme mood swings
- Excessive anxieties or suspicions; tendency to blame others
- Denial of problems; resisting help
- Suicidal words or thoughts
- Many unexplainable physical ailments; severe changes in sleeping or eating patterns
- Out-of-proportion anger or hostility
- Hallucinations, delusions, hearing voices
- Alcohol or drug abuse

Protect home from lightning

Associated Press

In 1752, Benjamin Franklin flew his kite during a thunderstorm, proving lightning is electricity. Soon after, he invented lightning rods to safeguard residential and commercial buildings.

Lightning protection systems available today work on the same principle, reports Better Homes and Gardens Building Ideas magazine.

Lightning, like all electrical energy, seeks the shortest path to the ground. The purpose of a lightning protection system is to intercept lightning before it can travel through the house and possibly cause damage to electronic equipment, appliances, or electrical circuits — or even start a fire.

When lightning strikes, it is attracted to rods placed on the chimney ridges, antennas, gutters, and flashings. From the rods, the lightning's electrical current is carried by heavy-gauge copper or aluminum cable to a pair of copper-clad ground rods driven into the earth at opposite ends of the building.

Grounding the electrical current keeps a house safe. Trees that stand taller than the home and are located within 10 feet of it are similarly treated, not to protect them, but to prevent lightning from jumping from the trees to the house. Antennas and outbuildings that extend higher than the house should also be protected.

Before installing any lightning protection system, be sure it meets the standards of the National Fire Protection Association and Underwriters Laboratories. Also arrange to have an expert check the system every few years to ensure that all connections are intact.

For people who think their home or outbuildings may be susceptible to lightning strikes because of size or location, the cost of a lightning protection system may be worthwhile just for their peace of mind.

SEEDS FOR THOUGHT

Yard fences can be frame for flowers

By Deborah A. Benge

Are you getting full benefit from the fence in your yard? Of course, a fence provides a boundary, gives privacy, keeps children and pets in bounds, or screens an eyesore. But a fence can do much more. Clothed with blossoming vines, a fence becomes a beautiful backdrop for your flower border or a colorful focal point to view from a picture window or patio.

Benge

If vegetables are your cup of tea, a fence can increase growing space. Some crops can be grown vertically, supported by a strong fence. At harvest the vegetables are a convenient height for picking and almost blemish- free because they are off the ground. Vegetable foliage on a fence is a refreshing background for both vegetable and flower gardens, or a pleasant green divider along property lines.

There are many quick- growing annual vines that can be grown from seed. Generally they can climb fences fast and burst into a curtain of color. In the landscaping plans you may be doing this fall, make plans to use some of these annual beauties next spring or early summer.

Two popular vines are morning glories and moonflower. "Heavenly Blue" morning glory welcomes the day with bright sky blue flowers. Other attractive colors are shiny-white, "Pearly Gates," and vibrant crimson "Scarlet O'Hara." Introduced in recent years, the "Early Call" series of morning glories in blue, rose and a mixture of colors, extends the season of bloom. They start flowering earlier than most other varieties, yet keep right on blossoming until frost.

Morning glories greet the day whereas moonflowers open at dusk, with a shimmering display of large, pure white, fragrant flowers. Plant some of each along your fence for a morning and evening show of bloom. Invite your friends and neighbors over for a moonflower party. It's fun and exciting to watch the moonflower buds spring wide open like parasols before your eyes, as if by some magic command from mother nature.

Hyacinth bean is a beautiful vine that has broad, oval leaflets found in threes. Sweet pea-shaped flowers are purple or white and hang in a loose cluster on long stems that stand out from the leaves. The flowers are followed by a velvety, beanlike pod that shares shades of the flowers.

Canary creeper is dainty and graceful, with beautifully cut and finely fringed, rich canary yellow, nasturtium-like flowers. Speaking of nasturtiums, don't overlook this old-fashioned favorite. They are excellent for scaling fences or trailing over a compost pile or bank.

For a more refined look with respect to flower and foliage there is the unusual and attractive cypress vine. The flower is much smaller than the morning glory but the same type of flower and is a beautiful red in color. This climber has rich green, fern-like foliage — a perfect foil for the trumpet-shaped flowers in white, rose, and red shades.

If you need a dainty little climber or trailer for a small gardening area or patio, you'll want to take a look at thunbergia, the black-eyed susan vine. This winsome beauty climbs or trails about five feet and blooms mostly in shades of orange, sometimes with dark eyes. One type is pristine white.

For a tough vine, you might try the perennial sweet pea. It is a vigorous trailer, with sweet pea-like flowers of pink, white, and purplish red flowers from June to cold weather. It may take a year or so to get Lathyrus established and blooming. After that, it's a tough grower that can endure difficult conditions. Be sure to locate it where it won't crowd out other plants.

Although not grown for their flowers, gourds are also attractive vines. Their foliage makes a nice green background in summer, and their fruits are interesting to watch as they develop many shapes and color patterns. The mature gourds are ready to harvest just before frost and great to use for decorations or craft projects.

All of the flowering vines just mentioned need well-prepared soils that drain well. Canary creeper and thunbergia like partial shade and the rest like full sun. Plant when all danger of frost is over and the weather is warm and stable; this is especially true for the morning glories, moonflower and thunbergia. It is helpful to soak the seed of morning glory and moonflower for 8 hours in warm water prior to planting or cut a nick in the seed coat with a file to hasten germination.

In addition to fences, climbers are also attractive on lamps, sign posts, trellises, arbors, and open pargolas.

Deborah Benge is the extension horticulture agent for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in Midland and Ector counties.

Doctor believes distress about toddlers' toes may be pointless

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — When a toddler's toes point anywhere but straight ahead, parents may begin to worry.

Children's toeing-in or toeing-out resolves itself 98 percent of the time, says Dr. Peter Pizzutillo, director of Pediatric Orthopaedic Surgery at Thomas Jefferson University Hospital. "If motor development is moving along fine, there is probably nothing serious going on," Pizzutillo says. The earliest cause of toeing-in, also known as pigeon-toed, arises from overactive muscles around the foot and should resolve itself within one year, he says. When the cause starts in the lower leg, there should be a resolution by 3 years of age; in the hip, by 7 years of age. On rare occasions, pathological problems are the cause of maladjusted feet and rehabilitation or surgery will be needed, Pizzutillo says.

Study proves 'old wives' tale' false

By Daniel Q. Haney
Associated Press

Contrary to generations of advice, a study shows that having a drink just before nursing fails to help infants breast feed better.

The research found that the equivalent of one beer actually can have just the opposite effect: Babies eat less.

"The message is that there is no scientific basis to prescribe alcohol to nursing women," said Dr. Julie A. Mennella, who directed the study.

Nursing mothers are frequently advised to have a drink a half hour before breast feeding. According to lore, this improves the flow and production of milk and relaxes mother and child. Texts from first-century India recommend wine for good lactation.

Mennella and Dr. Gary K. Beauchamp decided to put this ancient advice to the test at the Monell Chemical Senses Center in Philadelphia, a research institute devoted to studying taste and smell. Their results, published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine, showed two main points:

■ Babies who suckled after their mother had a drink consumed 23 percent less milk than usual.

■ Mothers' milk smelled — and probably tasted — like alcohol after just one drink.

The researchers could not be sure why the babies took in less milk. They said it could have been because the babies did not like the taste or because the alcohol itself had some effect on the baby or the mother.

"Whatever the mechanism, this study shows that alcohol consumption by nursing women alters the flavor of milk and the interaction with the infants during breast feeding," said Mennella.

Beauchamp said many tastes, not just alcohol, are passed through breast milk, depending on what the mother has been eating. "The world of the breast-fed infant is one of a variety of flavors, unlike what has long been thought, which is that breast milk is bland," he said. "Bottle feeding really is bland, and bottle-fed infants miss an experience that is common to all mammals."

In an accompanying editorial, Dr. Janine Jason of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control said the results imply that doctors should be "circumspect" about advising nursing women to take a drink to ease the difficulties of breast feeding. However, she said this is just part of a larger issue of guarding against passing unwanted substances to babies in breast milk.

"Physicians should review with breast-feeding mothers the transmissibility in breast milk of any drugs they may be taking, both prescription and non-prescription," she wrote. "Alcohol is only one of many drugs that have potential effects on the breast-feeding infant."

The study was conducted on 12 nursing women and their infants on two days. Each day, the mothers drank either straight orange juice or juice laced with a dash of alcohol. The spiked drink contained about as much alcohol as a can of beer.

The infants sucked more frequently during the first minute of feedings after their mothers had the alcohol. But they ended up consuming significantly less milk.

The researchers also subjected the mothers' milk to a sniff test. A panel consistently found that milk smelled stronger or more like alcohol if the donors had recently been drinking.

Mennella said more research will be necessary to learn whether mild drinking has any bad effect on babies' overall nutrition.

The amount of alcohol that reaches a baby through mother's milk is tiny — about 1 percent of what the mother drinks.

Even recession can't spoil weddings

By Rachel Powell
N.Y. Times News Service

When Shannon and Gregg Scott of San Diego got married in May, it was not the best time to spend $25,000 on a wedding. She is an interior decorator, he a construction executive, and business was not exactly booming.

Though both sets of parents helped with the costs, the couple still spent most of their savings on an elegant wedding ceremony and reception for more than 240 guests.

"If times were to get worse for us, we wouldn't have our cushion," said Ms. Scott, who is 25. "But even from a money perspective I don't regret what we spent at all. We did things exactly the way we always dreamed they would be."

The Scotts' approach to their wedding day is typical of the way most couples approach marriage. Weddings are marketed as the event of a lifetime. Although couples are more careful about how they spend their money now that there is a recession, they are still spending nearly as much as before the recession began.

In 1990, more than 2.4 million couples tied the knot. Bride's Magazine, the most widely read publication in the field, estimated that for its readers — generally middle class and upper-middle class — the average wedding cost $16,000. Bride's, which is published by Conde Nast, estimated that the total wedding market reached $32 billion last year, once the honeymoon and all the wedding gifts, were figured in.

"This market is so steady, so solid, so consistent. It's like death and taxes, only much more fun," said William Bondlow, the publisher of Bridal Guide, a fashion and advice magazine published by Globe Communications Inc.

THE MOST encouraging trend in the eyes of the industry is that large, expensive formal weddings remain fashionable, even as the homespun 1990s replace the glitzy 1980s.

A recent survey of 2,000 readers of Modern Bride, another magazine aimed at those planning weddings published by Cahner's Publishing Inc., found that 59 percent were planning formal black-tie affairs.

The most efficient way for retailers and service providers to reach people planning weddings is through the bridal magzines. Three magazines dominate the market, although there are some small regional publications as well.

The circulation and advertising of these publications vary over the course of the year. December through May is the prime season, since 50 percent of all weddings take place in the spring and summer. June is still the biggest month, followed by August.

The recession-related drop-off in advertising expenditures that has affected the magazine business in general, has hurt the bridal magazines, but only minimally.

Between January and April, the Publishers Information Bureau reported that Bride's Magazine saw advertising revenues rise a scant 1 percent over 1990, to $23.1 million, while Modern Bride's revenues dropped 2.4 percent, to $16.6 million. The organization does not follow Bridal Guide, a relative newcomer to the field, but Bondlow says advertising revenues are ahead of last year.

"THE RECESSION has certainly slowed things up. It has proved that the bridal industry is not totally recession-proof," said Bondlow. But he and others characterized the economic damage as temporary and light.

"Businesses indigenous to the bridal market such as home furnishings, apparel and travel rely on us as a way to do business," said Howard Friedberg, publisher of Modern Bride. "While those industries may be affected by the recession, the bridal magazines are the last place that they want to cut advertising."

Not surprisingly, clothes for the bridal party are one of the single biggest wedding expenditures. Although no exact figures are available, of the $16.4 billion spent on wedding cermonies last year, a sizable portion was for apparel for the wedding party.

Though wedding mini-dresses are becoming more common in advertising layouts, most brides are still wearing the quintessential floor-length white satin gown.

According to a Bride's Magazine survey of its readers, the average cost of a wedding dress and veil was $960 last year, though prices vary widely depending on the style, designer and amount of alteration necessary for a custom fit.

"They absolutely do not want to skimp on their gowns," said Deborah Harding, editor of Bridal Guide. "The dress is one of the highest priorities."

BUT SOME skimping does take place. Probably the place where most of it happens is at the reception. Guest lists are long, with a large wedding defined as one with 150 to 200 guests or more. But rather than trimming the number of guests, couples are cutting the menu.

"People aren't necessarily cutting their budgets, but they're looking at their finances more carefully," said Marcy Blum, a wedding consultant in New York. "A reception for 250 guests might become a four-hour cocktail party rather than a sit-down dinner with five courses."

Catering costs for a lavish sit-down dinner average about $150 a person in New York and in other major cities, while cocktails and hors d'oeuvres cost just $50 a person.

"The most important thing that the recession has brought is that people are looking for value. They are more likely to shop carefully and be good consumers," said Barbara Tober, editor of Bride's.

The recession-resistance of the wedding business may even have helped to shore up at least one sagging industry. Even though travel as a whole has suffered in the last nine months, honeymooners have kept their plans intact.

"The recession has had no effect on our honeymoon business. It's held up very well, as good or better than last year," said Steven Heydt, a senior vice president in charge of marketing at Liberty Travel, a privately owned chain of 168 travel agencies.

MODERN BRIDE estimates that honeymoons make up $3 billion of the overall wedding market. Full-service hotels and resorts in Hawaii and the Caribbean are by far the most popular destinations.

"The honeymoon is not a cheap sale," said Heydt. "They want deluxe hotels and the best rooms but the least expensive air fare."

Cheap air fare or not, Bride's readers said they still spent an average of $3,200 on the vacation of a lifetime.

"It is a pie that is lucrative and important. The honeymoon business is far more reliable than business or meeting travel," said Friedberg of Modern Bride.

Study shows subliminal message tapes don't work

By Paula Monarez
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Soft music fills your ears. In the background, the sound of trickling water soothes you. Underneath, a subtle message repeatedly tells you to stop smoking, or cut out binge eating, or reduce the stress in your life.

Thousands of Americans purchase message tapes, hoping the inspirational words and music will help them kick whatever horrible habit or vice has lead them to seek audio help.

However, a recent report says people are wasting their time and money. Subliminal audio tapes don't work, according to a report by the National Research Council, an affiliate of the National Academy of Sciences.

"There isn't any experimental evidence or theoretical reason to believe that they would accomplish changes in someone's behavior," said Robert A. Bjork, chairman of the study committee and a psychology professor at UCLA. "Sure there are plenty of testimonials out there, but it's not scientifically proven."

In fact, researchers using techniques for finding subliminal messages embedded in tapes discovered that some of the commercial tapes contained no detectable message, Bjork said.

But tape users and publishers vow they are great for motivating people. Rachel Wynter, an avid self-help tape listener, said she she lost 60 pounds by using tapes.

"I do believe the tapes help you as much as you believe they will," said Wynter, 29, manager of Alexandria II, a new-age bookstore in Pasadena, Calif. "I also think that you have to want to do whatever it is you are doing. The tape isn't going to work if you don't want to stop smoking. But it does motivate you. I don't think there is anything wrong with that."

LIFESTYLE POLICIES

Policies for publication of announcements in the Lifestyle sections of the Reporter-Telegram are:

Information for Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Monday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the information is to be published.

Engagement announcements must appear at least two weeks before the wedding date. Wedding announcements must appear within one month of the event. Anniversary announcements — 25th or higher — must be published within one month of the anniversary date.

All articles must be submitted in writing. Forms for weddings, engagements and anniversaries, only published Sundays, are available in the Lifestyle office. All materials must include the signature and telephone number of the person submitting them.

We cannot mail forms to persons in Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication. To have a photo returned by mail, include a self-addressed, stamped envelope. Unclaimed photos are discarded after a month.

Photographs may be submitted with wedding and engagement announcements, and anniversary announcements of 50 years or more, but are not required. A portrait of the bride-elect or of the future bride and bridegroom together may be submitted with engagement announcements. Portraits of the bride only or of the wedding couple may be submitted with wedding announcements. A different photo must be submitted for the engagement and wedding announcements.

Following a wedding trip to Austin, the couple will live in Odessa.

ANNIVERSARIES

Smyres celebrate 50th anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Lynn E. Smyres of Midland celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary with a reception 2-5 p.m. Sept. 21 at the North "A" Church of Christ service building. The reception was hosted by the couple's children and grandchildren, assisted by Willene Smyres, Billy Dressler, Iris English and Brenda Smyres.

Smyres and the former Louise Patton were married Sept. 20, 1941, in Midland. They have two children, Ronald L. Smyres of North Little Rock, Ark., and Donna G. Reardon of El Paso, along with two grandchildren and one great grandchild.

The couple moved to Carlsbad, N.M., in 1943 and returned to Midland in 1944 where they lived until 1982. Following retirement, they moved to Kimble County near Roosevelt on the North Llano River, and since 1988 have divided their time between there and Midland.

The Smyres' are members of North "A" Church of Christ. Smyres retired from Texas

Mr. and Mrs. Lynn E. Smyres

Electric Service Co. in 1982 after 37½ years of service. After 20 years, Mrs. Smyres retired from Sears, Roebuck and Co. in 1982.

Special guest at the celebration was Mrs. Smyres' mother, Mrs. Carrie Patton of Huntsville, Ark.

Plastic 'peanuts' can be recycled

N.Y. Times News Service

What to do with those insidious plastic packing peanuts that spill out of gift boxes and invade the house during celebrations and holidays? They can trip adults and are a hazard to children and pets, who might swallow them. The answer: recycle or reuse them.

After you have gathered them up, checking under sofas, chairs and beds for strays, you can send them to a growing number of recycling centers that now accept the foam pieces, along with other plastics made of polystyrene. Some shipping companies will also reuse or recycle the plastic peanuts.

The packaging company Mail Boxes Etc. has set up drop-off boxes for consumers at its 1,500 franchises nationwide. To find the nearest location, call (800) 828-2214.

A plastics manufacturer in Redwood City, Calif., Free Flow Packaging Corp., suggests that the foam can be covered in sturdy fabric and turned into pillows and cushions.

Elopement is romantic, inexpensive

By Nick Ravo
N.Y. Times News Service

Shortly after her engagement last year, Letechia Shevik was overwhelmed by a feeling familiar to many brides-to-be.

Terror.

"I just couldn't handle it," said Mrs. Shevik, who is 29, lives near Chicago in Buffalo Grove, Ill., and works as an administrative assistant at Clairol Inc. "All that stress, the planning, the walking up the aisle, turning around and seeing everyone looking at me.

"People I know who got married usually say that if they could do it over again, they would have eloped. So, that's what we did."

To many Americans, the notion of eloping may sound anachronistic if not mythical, a vestige of a romantic time when impetuous Romeos climbed ladders to bedroom windows and stealthily swept away their beloveds for impromptu private weddings, sometimes in another state.

Never mind that the deed was probably inspired by a premature pregnancy, parental disapproval or an under-age bride.

Nowadays, thanks to a rising number of older brides and grooms, a spate of second marriages, a steady stream of immigration-related "green card" weddings and the new 1990s cheap-is-chic ethos, elopements of one sort or another are almost as common as the traditional ceremonies in churches and banquet halls.

INDEED, FOR many contemporary couples, one of the first lines they might hear at their wedding service would come not from a minister ("Dearly beloved, we are gathered here....") but from a city clerk ("Next in line, please. Hablas Ingles?")

Even Martha Stewart, the high priestess of home entertaining whose many life-style bibles include "Weddings," has noticed the trend away from giving a $50,000 celebration, which is how much an average ceremony and reception for 200 costs in Manhattan.

"Instead of paying runaway prices," she said, "people are running away."

Of course nuptial purists may quibble about the word "elopement," which is derived from the word "lope," as in loping away. They would never use the word for small civil ceremonies or jaunts to exotic locales that are designed merely to merge the wedding into the honeymoon. To elope, they argue, the service must be shrouded in secrecy and scandal. "I can't recall the last time I heard someone say 'elope,' " said Cele Lalli, the editor in chief of Modern Bride magazine.

Others believe that it is only the term, not the activity, that has fallen out of favor. "I don't think people call it eloping anymore, but what else would you call it when someone pulls up and gets married in the back seat of their limousine, or someone flies in from Los Angeles and then turns around and flies back?" asked Charlotte Richards, a minister who owns four Las Vegas wedding chapels, including the famous Little White Chapel, which features a drive-in window.

"Just yesterday I had 20 people who came in and said they came to Las Vegas to get married and didn't want the big wedding," added Ms. Richards, who is often referred to as the Wedding Queen of the West because, she says, she has performed more than 500,000 weddings in the past 30 years. "I'd call that eloping."

STATISTICS ON the subject are as elusive as the perfect spouse. Figures from the National Center for Health Statistics in Hyattsville, Md., however, suggest that a growing number of couples are abandoning the concept of formal weddings in favor of what, loosely speaking, would be considered an elopement.

For example, from 1973 to 1988, the number of weddings held in states where neither the bride nor the groom resided increased by 4 percent in the 41 states from which the center obtains such records.

Moreover, in the same period the mean age of bridegrooms has risen to 31.3 years from 28.8 years, and for brides to 28.2 years from 25.5.

This, in all likelihood, raises the chances that the parents of the bride will decline to pick up the wedding tab.

For couples still struggling with their finances, the specter of paying for their own wedding can be an amazing incentive for an elopement.

If more proof were needed, of the approximately 2.4 million marriages performed each year in the United States, 46 percent in 1988 involved either the bride or the groom remarrying; the figure was 35 percent in 1973.

According to the National Center for Health Statistics, anyone remarrying is much more likely to have a civil rather than a religious ceremony. Indeed, the percentage of civil ceremonies rose to 31 percent in 1988 from 26 percent in 1973.

SOCIOLOGISTS LIKE Andrew Cherlin at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore believe that a decline in religious ceremonies among people who are remarrying might be attributed to the bride and groom having less in common with each other than they would if they were marrying for the first time.

"A lower percentage have the same religion, education or are the same ages," he said.

Ms. Lalli said that the growing diversity in American culture probably increased the pressure to elope, especially when people from different ethnic groups or economic classes were marrying.

"When you try to put a symbolic rite of passage together and you can't because the backgrounds are so dissimilar, one of the solutions is to have a private, simple ceremony," she said.

A no-wait, no-witness, one-minute wonder performed by a civil servant seldom matches the extravaganzas of the blessed affairs depicted in newspaper society pages or in bridal magazines.

Sometimes the brides approach the altar in business suits, blouses or blue jeans instead of gowns, and sometimes the grooms wear ancient blue blazers, leather jackets or sweatshirts instead of morning coats.

Sometimes, the couple doesn't even verbalize a vow of love and commitment. In some quickie states, like Maine, saying "I do" or "I will" isn't required, making the ceremony even less interactive than registering to vote, which at least demands that one hand be raised.

AND FOR THOSE who are eloping to satisfy immigration officials, the ceremony can be even less romantic.

The marriage clerk at the New York City marriage chapel in the Municipal Building, Laurence A. Israel, estimated that 30 to 50 percent of the ceremonies performed there (60,700 in 1980, 71,000 in 1990) are designed solely to obtain a green card.

How can he tell? "They don't have a ring; they don't kiss; sometimes they don't even speak the same language," Israel said, noting that he can perform a ceremony in 16 languages.

Israel said that the resurgence in elopements is obvious in his chapel, where the ceremony costs $25, in addition to the $30 fee for a marriage license.

"A lot more are coming in not just for the license but the ceremony, too," he said. "They're coming in and after the ceremony saying, 'Now, don't you tell anyone.' "

Of course, not all the weddings performed in city clerks' offices are conducted to appease the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Tight budgets are another popular reason. "If I had the money for a big wedding, I wouldn't be here," said Luis Ramos, 33, an unemployed postal worker from Staten Island who last week married Lourdes LeBron, 23, in a ceremony performed by Israel. "But we're planning on having a big party sometime later on."

Denise Shaw, a graphics artist from Manhattan, said she married Espen Fjermeros, a computer salesman from Norway, in New York's marriage chapel because she had been married previously.

She also was turned-off by the "money-making aspect" of a large ceremony. "I prefer not to have a big wedding," she said.

THEN THERE ARE couples like Ms. Shevik and her husband, Gary, who eloped last December to Cancun, Mexico, not only because of stress over the ceremony but because of the bride's aversion to her hometown.

"I've lived in a lot of neat places — San Francisco, Atlanta, Greenwich, Connecticut," she said. "I don't want to get married in Rockford, Illinois. Why get married in a boring little town?"

The Sheviks even found a service, Far Away Weddings of Dallas (800-882-9337), that arranges elopements. "My clients want a memorable and romantic wedding experience without the complications involved in planning a traditional wedding," said the director of the four-year-old company, Pamela Robinson. "Mexico, the Caribbean and Hawaii are popular, as are places in Europe."

Elopements do raise a new set of questions about etiquette. What about presents? (Couples should still expect them, along with gracious notes of congratulation, said Letitia Baldrige, the author of "Letitia Baldrige's Complete Guide to the New Manners of the 90s.") Announcements? (Ms. Baldrige suggests hand-written letters to family and friends.)

Are apologies ever called for? (Yes, if the couple elopes after either family has been preparing for a large wedding.) Who gives the party afterward? (Preferably, the family and friends of the couple, but the bride and groom may do it themselves.)

FOR ENGAGED couples considering elopement, Ms. Lalli added a cautionary note. She said that one of the most requested ceremonies these days is the reaffirmation, whereby married couples spend a great deal of time and money giving a highly ritualized mock wedding, replete with bells, gowns and lavish receptions.

A sizable percentage of those couples, she said, eloped the first time around.

"They say that they wished they hadn't," Ms. Lalli said.

Men's movement bangs drum warily

Men, women learning about feelings, ea ch other, is what it's all about

By Renee Tawa
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — First she burned the bra, now he's banging the drum — and both women and men are waiting to see if ever the twain shall meet.

Women have had their bra-burning "I am woman, hear me roar" days. Men, in turn, are having a movement of their own, letting down their guard in workshops on the male experience and beating drums in primal wilderness retreats.

But it's a men's movement with a twist — women are jumping aboard, too. The men's movement is about male bonding, debunking Superman myths and nurturing relationships — women are starting to say hallelujah and asking what can they do to help, counselors say.

There are parts of the men's movement that leave some women confused, however. Naked drum beating in primal wilderness retreats, for instance.

"I think what's behind it, the concept of it, is very important," said writer and public relations director Teddi Sanford, 50. "I think men do need to get their emotions out. I do wonder, though, if the average guy is going to do it beating tom-toms in a manner that the core movement of the men's movement suggests."

THE MEN'S MOVEMENT can be jarring to women, said Sanford, a resident of the San Fernando Valley community of Studio City who attended one lecture on the subject.

"I think it can be a little unnerving and frightening to some women," she said. "Most women are conditioned, I was even conditioned this way, for a man to be strong and not to show any fears or uncertainties. Women are threatened by this. The roles are changing. The roles of the sexes are going to be blurred."

Kinder, gentler men might take some time to get used to, said Dr. Stephen Johnson, director of the L.A. Men's Center.

"I think it's important for women to know when to step back and when to step forward," he said. "There are times when women should take an active role in assisting their men and times when they need to step back."

Active role or not, women are attending men's workshops in large numbers. In Santa Monica, Calif., at philosopher Sam Keen's recent lecture on his book, "Fire in the Belly: On Being a Man," half of the approximately 500 audience members were women.

Four years ago, counselor Jim Sniechowski used to put on workshops for men only, but women began clamoring to get in — they wanted to know what men are thinking and feeling. So Sniechowski, 49, and his wife, Judith Sherven, 47, opened the Menswork Center in Los Angeles last October in response to a growing demand for workshops on the men's movement for men and women, singles and couples.

"Whatever the issue they've been talking about, the women always leave saying, 'I had no idea that men were suffering like this,' 'I guess I've been so caught up in the women's liberation issues, it never crossed my mind that men might have issues on their own,' " said Sherven, the only woman in Southern California and one of a few in the country who helps women learn about the men's movement.

THE MEN'S MOVEMENT caught fire after the publication of Robert Bly's 1990 book, "Iron John: A Book About Men," a best seller for more than 30 weeks, in much the same way that Betty Friedan's groundbreaking book, "The Feminine Mystique," stirred women to action after its 1963 publication.

But during the height of the women's movement, men seldom attended women's workshops and rallies. That was a time when men were snubbed, said Fred Roth, outreach director at the Long Beach, Calif.-based Phoenix — A Center for Men.

"The feminist movement had touches of anger in it toward men," he said. "The men's movement — that's not what it's about. The men's movement is the ability of men to look inside themselves and say wait a minute, I don't have to work 60 hours a week to show my manliness."

That self-awareness can't happen until women let go of their fantasies of who and how men should be — Mr. Right, Prince Charming, head-of-the-household, Sherven preaches in her workshop.

"What we're finding," Sherven said, "is that the vast majority, I would say 95 percent, no matter where we are in the country, no matter what her age, still harbors and believes in the fantasy that a man will make her life.

"At the core of that is a real unwillingness that women have in seeing men as deeply troubled, deeply lonely and in a lot of pain."

NOT ALL WOMEN see men as victims.

"I've always found it fascinating within the men's movement that they're saying it's the women's fault because of their fantasies and expectations that they've been trying to meet for 2,000 years," said Tammy Bruce, president of the Los Angeles chapter of the National Organization for Women. "I find that insulting.

"I think what's behind it, the concept of it, is very important. I think men do need to get their emotions out. I do wonder, though, if the average guy is going to do it beating tom-toms in a manner that the core movement of the men's movement suggests.'

— Teddi Sanford
writer and public relations director

"The women's movement has stressed responsibility. It's not women adjusting to how the boys are going to have to change. The boys are going to have to see what women have done."

Men are finding out about themselves and about women, too, said musician Marco Benjoya, 38, a men's workshop participant.

"I think one of the things I've learned is when I'm feeling whatever I'm feeling, the other person didn't cause it," said Benjoya, a Los Angeles resident. "I've learned to take more responsibilities for my feelings and not to be blaming it on the other person. Another really big thing I've gotten from working with them is the concept of partnership between a man and woman, as opposed to some of the old ways."

It is not an experience that Benjoya wanted to go through alone; his girlfriend, Nila Neukum, also has attended the men's workshops.

Neukum, 35, said she wanted to go through Benjoya's growth process with him and do what she could to help.

"The main thing is that it's like stepping back and allowing the person to be who they really want to be rather than who they are expected to be — the powerful, the breadwinner," she said. "He can be those things, but if he doesn't meet all those requirements every second of his life, he's not a failure."

LOS ANGELES resident Judith Montgomery, who grew up with six brothers, found she had a lot to learn about men.

"I thought I had an inside track," said Montgomery, an actress in her 40s. "I had just gained so much insight (after the men's workshops). There's a whole heritage that a modern man has never tasted. The kind of closeness that men can have, the kind of nurturing they can provide each other was simply absent from our home."

Jennifer Lehman, 38, said she learned as much about herself as she did about men. In men's workshops, women learn that men are tired of the aggressor role.

"I used to be the kind of woman who took whatever came along, I let the man be the leader in a relationship," said Lehman, an acting coach in Burbank, Calif., who recently started a relationship. "It's been the most different relationship out of learning what I learned. I am an initiator of communication. I'm saying this is what I want. Before I wouldn't do that out of fear he'd run away."

Other women see the men's movement as a threat. In Louisiana, a female television anchor in her mid-40s confronted psychologist Sherven.

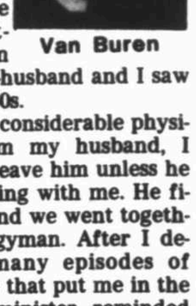

"Her whole body bristled, and her face contorted, and she said, 'The men's movement, is that good or bad?' " Sherven recalled. "I said, 'I think you're going to find it's real good,' and she cut me off and said, 'I have my husband whipped into shape, and I don't want any back talk now.' "

Dear Abby

Wife escapes from her abusive husband

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: It hurts to be criticized for not having left an abusive mate after the first time the abuse occurred.

Van Buren

You consistently advise your readers to seek help from their minister, priest or rabbi. It is my sincere hope that the counselors in the church are more enlightened today than the one my ex-husband and I saw in the late 1960s.

After taking considerable physical abuse from my husband, I threatened to leave him unless he sought counseling with me. He finally agreed, and we went together to our clergyman. After I described the many episodes of brutal beatings that put me in the hospital, my minister reminded me that the Bible said, "Turn the other cheek."

Abby, this minister had one of the largest congregations in this country. Of course, my husband continued to beat me, thinking it was his right as the head of the household, and I was convinced that the church knew best. Thank God, I finally came to my senses and divorced the bully. — NO NAME OR TOWN, PLEASE

DEAR NO NAME: Obviously, you no longer subscribe to the biblical injunction to "turn the other cheek." There is hardly a passage in the Old or New Testament that hasn't been interpreted in more ways than one.

I would never advise turning the other cheek if the first one was black and blue. Nor would MOST clergy in the 1990s.

DEAR ABBY: The enclosed appeared in the South Bend (Ind.) Tribune's editorial section titled "Voice of the People." It was good for a chuckle in the newsroom; perhaps your readers also might find it amusing. It was submitted by James R. Inwood of South Bend. — KAREN MURPHY, INDIANAPOLIS STAR

DEAR KAREN: This exchange of letters typifies the particularly subtle form of communication that parents and children often share:

DEAR DAD: Thing$ are pretty good here at $chool, but they could be better. $ome thing$ are needed mo$t de$perately. I hope you can gue$$ what I mean and $end $ome $oon. — Your loving $on

DEAR SON: NOthing is new here. I kNOw that you are doing better NOw than you have been. Write aNOther letter soon. I want to get this off in the NOon mail, so I'll sign off NOw. — Love, Dad

CONFIDENTIAL TO LOST AND HELPLESS, THE 14-YEAR-OLD GIRL WHO WROTE FROM TORONTO, CANADA: You have done nothing wrong, so, please, do not be embarrassed to tell your parents — or a school nurse! At Wit's End

Busy writer requests 'just the fax, ma'am'

By Erma Bombeck

I suppose you're all wondering how our fax machine is working out. You know, the one we installed last June that was to bring the world to our doorstep.

Bombeck

Well, I want you to know there is not a day goes by that we don't fax someone. My husband faxed a chain letter to 15 people, and we even faxed an interview to my German publisher. We are faxing ourselves to death.

The only problem is that we can't receive anything yet. I don't want to get too technical, but it has something to do with the phone line.

Columnist Art Buchwald's secretary, Jeannie, called last Saturday and said she was faxing a message to us. I had a bad feeling about it from the beginning. People are supposed to fax us something only when our secretary is in the office on Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays. That's a rule.

Sure enough, Jeannie tried four times, and I could hear beeps and belches, but no message.

On Monday, Art called and said he didn't want to spend another $930 in phone calls to send a simple note. I told him everything was in place now and he should go ahead and send it. Nothing came through.

When he called back he said, "Do you have to put a quarter in your machine or what?"

I said: "You sent it too fast. This time wait until I have my secretary on the other line and she nods her head. Then you tell Jeannie to punch us in or whatever."

We both hung on the phone in silence and waited. Nothing. Finally Art said, "You're pathetic. What would happen if Ed McMahon tried to fax that you had won the sweepstakes?"

"Ed McMahon never faxes," I said. "He comes to your house in person with a million-dollar check and a camera crew."

Art said, "I've talked to people about you and they say you should go back to Western Union ... better still, sell your house and start off with a fresh fax machine."

"So, since you've wasted three phone calls, tell me the message."

He said, "The message is, 'If you receive this fax, send me six signed bookplates for your new book. If you do not receive this, we are buying six copies of Geraldo Rivera's new book instead.' "

Maybe I'll give Ed McMahon a call this afternoon. Just in case he tried to fax me something.

Researchers study way self-esteem develops

By Anjetta McQueen
N.Y. Times News Service

"I'm glad I'm a girl because ..."

"I can wear a lot of different types of clothes."

"I mature faster."

"I can be a doctor."

Those weren't the answers Michon Duncan was hearing from the teen-age girls in her Fort Worth YWCA programs.

"I was startled to hear them say 'because I can have boyfriends,' "she said.

Or babies, another popular answer from the dozen or so teen-age girls from Fort Worth's North Side High School and Butler housing development who meet with Duncan regularly in a couple of YWCA teen clubs.

"I use self-esteem as a base," said Duncan. "If you build self-esteem, the other things will come into play."

At a time when special training and schooling is being proposed for boys at risk, some researchers and child advocates are looking to renew studies and programs focusing on the self-esteem and development of girls.

"There is sufficient evidence that at adolescence, bad things happen to self-esteem in a substantial number of girls," said Dr. Susan Shenkel, a clinical psychologist and author in Cambridge, Mass.

Skill mastery is a significant ingredient in self-esteem in males and females, said Shenkel, whose book "Giving Away Success: Why Women Get Stuck and What to do About It" looks at the cultural inhibitions women have about achieving.

SHENKEL SAID in a recent telephone interview that such reluctance to succeed could be attributed to the fact that as girls reach puberty, their looks are emphasized while their skills are deemphasized.

A private 1990 study commissioned by the American Association of University Women found that self-esteem lost in adolescence was more dramatic and longer-lasting for girls. In the survey, 2,400 girls and 600 boys, ages 9 to 16, responded to general self-esteem statements, such as "I am happy the way I am," to specific questions about career and school subjects.

Sixty percent of the girls in elementary school strongly agreed with the statement, which shows high self-esteem. The degree of self-esteem was just 29 percent in high school girls. Sixty-seven percent of younger boys reported high self-esteem, but the level fell to 46 percent by high school.

Other studies also found that girls' self-confidence decreases at a faster rate than boys.

At the YWCA, Duncan works with so-called at-risk girls. The risk for these Tarrant County girls — as identified by the various local social service agencies and neighborhood activists who recommend the girls for membership — is pregnancy.

Some research has linked sexual activeness in girls to low self-esteem. Dieting, eating disorders and other preoccupation with physical appearance can be linked to self-esteem.

IN THE AAUW survey, girls were twice as likely as boys to mention a physical characteristic as what they liked most about themselves, and as they got older they became more negative about physical changes, while older boys were more positive about the changes in their bodies.

Self-esteem comes from people's perceptions of how others see them, said Dr. Marie Fuller, professor of sociology at Texas Woman's University in Denton.

For example, a child might hear negative statements coming from a parent, even though that parent may love that child, she said. But the child's self-esteem could be lowered by what he or she thinks the parent is feeling.

And many perceptions come from the images we see.

Throughout history there has been pressure on women to be pretty and charming, and that pressure has increased, Shenkel said. Easy access to videos and magazines that feature beautiful actresses, and the technological advancement of beauty treatments, have multiplied our emphasis on a pretty face, she said.

"To the extent that we perpetuate that, we increase the girl's pressure of external appearance," Shenkel said.

"If I was a boy, I could ..."

That was Duncan's next fill-in-the-blank for the girls in her program.

"I could have more than one girlfriend."

"I couldn't have periods."

This is what the girls had to say about being boys.

BUT BOYS might not be the solid rocks of emotion these girls think they are.

Dr. Wendy Wood, a psychologist at Texas A&M University in College Station, acknowledges that studies have indicated women are more extreme in their expression of emotions. She is studying whether women actually experience more-extreme emotions.

First, subjects take a standard self-report test. Then they are shown slides of a variety of images, from babies to gory mutilations, during which researchers collect physiological data, such as blood pressure and heart rate. Then the two reports are compared.

"It's possible that men and women are experiencing the same level of emotions, but men might not be publicly expressing them — and there might be some exaggeration in women," she said.

Some psychologists who question whether self-esteem is that much lower in girls also offer new ways to define and measure it.

"The concept is defined by whoever is defining it," said Elizabeth Friar Williams, a San Francisco-based feminist therapist and spokeswoman for the Association for Women in Psychology. "In the most general terms it is feeling good about yourself and choosing positive phrases to describe yourself.

"Well, you can feel good as a cute girl and still get depressed. It's the people who feel empowered who have a much deeper self-esteem."

Williams offers her own definition of self-esteem: the feeling of control over one's life and goals.

RESEARCHERS ALSO differ on the variables that are used in the study of self-esteem.

"There is much in research that rings true for women and girls, but there is not a lot of empirical data to back that up," said Dr. Roberta Paikoff of the Institute of Juvenile Research in Chicago.

"I don't think we know enough about gender differences and how best they can be measured."

Cultural differences also are important factors in such studies, Williams said.

Many narrowly defined studies "show very little understanding of powerful female images in the African-American culture," Williams said.

And other studies might fail to take into account the cultural pressure on Hispanic girls to remain in more "traditional" roles, she added.

In the AAUW study, the self-esteem of African-American girls dropped 7 percent from elementary to high school, while that of white girls dropped 33 percent. The decrease was greatest in Hispanic girls — 38 percent.

Duncan said that after further discussion the girls in the YWCA program began to think about their individual qualities and interests.

"I tell them this helps you see why you like yourself," she said. "If they hear it on a consistent basis, it means more."

But what a girl goes home to can affect her self-esteem. Many of the girls come from homes where they are abused or ignored, said Duncan.

"A great deal of them are raising themselves," she said.

A study measuring family impact on self-esteem led by Susie Lanburn at the University of West Florida found that children raised in authoritative (strong, yet balanced) homes reported higher self-esteem than children raised in authoritarian (tightly controlled) or permissive homes.

"EARLY CHILDHOOD experiences are important. It (low self-esteem reported in adolescence) started forming long ago," said Fuller, who teaches aging and research at Texas Woman's University. "The point is not to change the past but look to what we can do to change the existing level of self-esteem."

An increase in skills and knowledge can do just that, Fuller said.

"It's not the perception you work at, it's skill-enhancement and knowledge," she said.

Resolution of low self-esteem in both sexes is crucial, most researchers agree. But there are gender differences that need to be recognized, some say.

"Self-esteem is generally low in adolescence, but the sexes resolve it in different ways," Williams said. "Boys might compensate by identifying with macho power status figures, such as athletes, and, unfortunately, sometimes criminals."

On the other hand, girls might try to boost a low self-esteem by seeking approval from boys, particularly using their looks, she said.

And for the most part, boys and girls simply ingest the images they are fed. The positive images girls might be shown are more superficial and passive, while boys are shown active role models.

"There are no simple answers, but girls need to be encouraged to be active and mastery-oriented," Williams said.

WHEN BRIGHT girls do poorly in math and science they are not encouraged and might even be actively discouraged, she said.

"They might hear 'Don't worry about it if it's too hard, dear. We don't want you to hurt yourself.'

"They need to set goals outside the social realm. It's nice to be pretty or have a baby, but there are things that matter internally as well."

"The concept (self-esteem) is defined by whoever is defining it. In the most general terms it is feeling good about yourself and choosing positive phrases to describe yourself. Well, you can feel good as a cute girl and still get depressed. It's the people who feel empowered who have a much deeper self-esteem.'

Sometimes praise can backfire

Associated Press

ROCHESTER, N.Y. — Praise given in the right way can encourage effort, according to a psychology professor at the University of Rochester.

Delivered in the wrong way, however, it can have unintended effects.

For example, if students bring home a paper with an "A", and parents say "I always knew you were smart" the parents are attributing the accomplishment to their intelligence rather than their effort, says Professor Richard M. Ryan.

Praise that focuses on specifics is a better motivator, says Ryan.

A parent could say instead, "it looks as if reading those magazines helped you come up with interesting examples for your paper."

Balloon trading cards make debut at this year's Albuquerque festival

By Sue Major Holmes

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Patrick O'Hea figures it's a great marriage — the fascination people have for vivid hot air balloons and the ever-popular idea of collectible trading cards.

"Balloons are the perfect subject for cards because they're so different, every balloon is different," says O'Hea, who with his partner Danny Edwards is introducing balloon trading cards to this year's Albuquerque International Balloon Fiesta.

Both balloon memorabilia and baseball trading cards have proved popular over the years, with collectors setting the value at ever-increasing heights.

"The first balloon patch, for example, some people are getting upwards of $500 for the first balloon patch they paid $1.50 for," O'Hea says.

O'Hea and Edwards have 100 different balloons depicted on their inaugural set of cards, being released during the fiesta's 20th anniversary.

The partners are offering a collectors set of all 100 cards, which retail for $23.50, and what the trade calls "hot packs" — sets of 12 cards, randomly sorted by computer so each is different — which sell for $2.50. The cards are the standard baseball card size of 2½ inches by 3½ inches.

THE CREATORS ordered 20,000 sets in the initial printing; another 10,000 are on reserve should those move well, O'Hea says.

The cards are on sale in Albuquerque convenience stores, grocery stores, gift shops and trading card shops. The cards — an official product of the annual fiesta — also will be sold on the fiesta grounds through Oct. 13.

O'Hea expects to need the second order based on advance sales.

He and Edwards estimated they'd sell 7,500 collector sets, but O'Hea says they sold out before they arrived for distribution.

Now plans call for 11,000 collectors sets and the remaining 9,000 sets to be turned into hot packs, O'Hea says.

"We have people wanting to be distributors, and people wanting one or two sets for their grandkids," he says. "We have businesses who want to give them out to visitors. We were surprised by hotels that want to give them out to VIPs here for the balloon fiesta."

O'Hea would not say how much the partners invested in the cards, but did say, "The first year is going to be tough on us, but we will make money this first year."

The balloons pictured range from very colorful hot air balloons to special shapes balloons — such as a stork with a baby or a cow jumping over the moon — to balloons with some historical significance, such as the Double Eagle II helium balloon that made the world's first Atlantic crossing by balloon in 1978.

On the back, in the best trading card tradition, are statistics on the balloon, such as size and date of manufacture, and biographical information on the pilot, including any ballooning awards he or she has won. The information was gathered from the pilots, O'Hea says.

THE COLLECTION includes the Magnum Tractor special shape balloon, a huge balloon shaped like a tractor. The back of the card describes it as the world's largest special shape balloon — which O'Hea says he didn't know until he read the information.

The Double Eagle II card is "kind of a tribute card," with pictures of the three pilots, who were all from Albuquerque, superimposed onto the metallic area of the balloon envelope, he says.

O'Hea says many pilots whose balloons are part of the set have asked O'Hea and Edwards for cards of their balloon to give out to spectators and the children who always seem to be present when balloons come down.

"We overprinted a certain amount so they can give out them out instead of pins," O'Hea says.

Cards have advantages over balloon pins: they cost a pilot 15 cents instead of $1.50, and they tell something about the balloon, he says.

O'Hea, 33, and Edwards, 29, each came up with the balloon trading card idea independently and were introduced by a mutual friend who knew of their interest. That led to a collaboration.

The cards were designed from beginning to end on a computer, then printed at a major card manufacturing company in Wisconsin, O'Hea says.

O'Hea, a graphics artist, brought his design and computer background to the project, while Edwards, a bartender, brought his expertise as a buyer, seller and trader of baseball cards, O'Hea says. While O'Hea did the design work, Edwards figured out what information would interest collectors for the reverse side and taught O'Hea the importance of such matters as the print quality and the cut of the cards.

THE PARTNERS, who aren't balloon pilots themselves, worked from April through August signing up balloonists for the project, gathering information and photographs, designing the cards and putting them together, O'Hea says. The cards were printed about the first of September and were sent out last week, he says.

The partners chose balloons on a first-come, first-serve basis, with some limits thrown in for the quality of the photographs sent to them, since they didn't have time to get their own photographs taken of each balloon, O'Hea says. However, they didn't dismiss less-than-perfect pictures of balloons that have historical significance.

"On one card, on the world's altitude record for a woman, there was only one old photograph, kind of faded, but we did with it what we could," O'Hea says.

The partners already are planning a another set of cards for 1992, with more balloons included and the pictures taken by a professional photographer.

Edwards took his first balloon ride earlier this month, but O'Hea has been involved with the fiesta since he and his brothers rode over on their bicycles to see the first one back in 1972, when he was in junior high.

"We helped inflate the balloons and get them off the ground and I fell in love with it," he says.

Favorite recipes get lighter, leaner look

By Beverly Bundy

FORT WORTH (AP) — The American Heart Association marked its Food Festival this year with the message that you don't have to be a hermit to be healthy.

With some simple modifications, favorite dishes can fit into a heart-wise diet, an eating plan low in fat and sodium. To demonstrate the point, we've changed dishes from some Tarrant County notables to substantially cut the fast without trimming the taste.

The Kimbell Art Museum is almost as famous in these parts for its soup as it is for its art. Shelby Volk, director of the museum's buffet, describes this soup as one of the "fastest and bestest" that it serves.

Noticing that her customers are moving toward leaner items, she's now making this soup by omitting the butter and using half-and-half instead of heavy cream.

GREEN CHILES AND RICE SOUP

2 tablespoons butter
½ cup chopped onion
1 garlic clove, minced
2 cups chicken stock
1 cup milk
½ cup uncooked rice
2 (4 ounces each) cans diced green chiles, rinsed and patted dry
2 cups heavy cream
½ cup (2 ounces) shredded process American cheese
Salt, cayenne, and ground cumin to taste
Diced tomatoes, avocado slices, tortillas chips and chopped cilantro for garnish

Saute onion and garlic in butter over low heat for 10 minutes. Add stock, milk and rice, and simmer for about 20 minutes.

Add remaining ingredients and heat through over medium heat. Taste for seasoning. Makes four servings.

Nutritional analysis per serving: (with heavy cream) 738 calories; 62 grams fat; 1,000 milligrams sodium. (with half-and-half) 481 calories; 31 grams fat; 1,000 milligrams sodium.

LIGHT GREEN CHILES AND RICE SOUP

1 teaspoon liquid corn oil or margarine
½ cup chopped onion
1 garlic clove, minced
2 cups low-sodium chicken stock
1 cup ½ percent milk
½ cup uncooked rice
2 (4 ounces each) cans diced green chiles, rinsed and patted dry
2 cups ½ percent milk
1 tablespoon flour
½ cup (2 ounces) shredded low-fat Monterrey Jack cheese
Cayenne and ground cumin to taste
Diced tomatoes and chopped cilantro for garnish

Saute onion and garlic in corn oil or margarine over low heat for 10 minutes. Add stock, milk and rice, and simmer for about 20 minutes.

Dredge shredded cheese with flour; add 2 cups milk. Slowly add the milk and cheese mixture to the warm liquid, stirring constantly. Add chiles.

Return mixture to low heat; stir until cheese is melted. Add cayenne and cumin to taste. Makes four servings.

Nutritional analysis per serving: (with ½ percent milk) 272 calories; 6 grams fat; 500 milligrams sodium.

John Giordano, music director of the Fort Worth Symphony Orchestra, first sampled this dish while working in Bilbao, Spain. There, this Basque stew is made with the catch of the day, but Giordano says the dish translates well anywhere in the world. With a simple adjustment of the salt and olive oil, the dish is at home on a healthy table.

SARDINHAS DE CALDEIRADA

2 pounds fish (cod, haddock, shellfish or a combination)
¾ teaspoon salt
1 clove garlic, minced
2 onions, chopped
½ cup olive oil
1 (1-pound, 3-ounce) can whole tomatoes, crushed with a fork
1 (8-ounce) can tomato sauce
1 teaspoon crushed red pepper
Pinch each of thyme and oregano
½ bunch parsley, chopped
½ cup white wine
1½ cups water (add more if needed)
Salt and pepper to taste

Salt fish and let rest in refrigerator for a few hours if you are using fresh or frozen fish. Rinse and drain fish, and cut into large chunks. Meanwhile saute onion and garlic in oil until onion is slightly limp. Add tomatoes, tomato sauce, crushed pepper, thyme, oregano, parsley and wine. Cover and simmer gently for about 30 minutes.

Taste and add salt and pepper if desired. Add all fish and simmer again until fish flakes when pricked with fork. Don't overcook fish. Serve hot in bowls over a slice of French bread.

Nutritional analysis per serving: (using cod or haddock without French bread) 486 calories; 24 grams fat; 864 milligrams sodium. (using shrimp without bread) 475 calories; 25 grams fat; 975 milligrams sodium.

LIGHT FISHERMAN'S STEW

2 pounds fish (cod, haddock, shellfish or a combination)
1 clove garlic, minced
2 onions, chopped
2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
1 (1-pound, 3-ounce) can whole tomatoes, crushed with a fork
1 (8-ounce) can no-salt added tomato sauce
1 teaspoon crushed red pepper
Pinch each of thyme and oregano
½ bunch parsley, chopped
½ cup white wine
1½ cups water (add more if needed)
Pepper to taste

Rinse and drain fish, and cut into large chunks. Saute onion and garlic in olive oil until onion is slightly limp. Add tomatoes, tomato sauce, crushed pepper, thyme, oregano, parsley, wine and water. Cover and simmer gently for about 30 minutes.

Taste and add pepper if desired. Add all fish and simmer again until fish flakes when pricked with fork. Don't overcook fish. Serve hot in bowls over a slice of French bread.

Nutritional analysis per serving: (using cod or haddock without French bread) 343 calories; 7 grams fat; 578 milligrams sodium. (using shrimp without bread) 332 calories; 9 grams fat; 689 milligrams sodium.

TCU football coach Jim Wacker is like a lot of all-American males. He doesn't cook, but he loves to eat. And this spaghetti recipe, one of his favorites, is also all-American. Where but in America would we take spaghetti from Italy, combine it was Cheddar cheese from England and mix in a can of soup, the "modern" American contribution to 20th-century cuisine. And with some American know-how, this is an easy recipe to revise without giving up taste.

JIM WACKER'S CHICKEN SPAGHETTI

2 to 3 tablespoons margarine
1 cup celery
½ cup chopped onion
¾ cup green bell pepper
1 tablespoon flour
1 cup chicken broth
1 cup milk
1 (10-ounce) can mushroom soup
Sliced pimentos
½ cup margarine, melted
1 cup chicken, diced
3 to 4 cups cooked spaghetti
Grated Cheddar cheese
Cracker crumbs

Melt 2 to 3 tablespoons margarine in skillet. Saute onion, celery and bell pepper in margarine. Add flour, chicken broth and milk.

Add mushroom soup, pimentos and melted margarine. Simmer for 20 minutes.

In 9x13-inch casserole, layer sauce, spaghetti and chicken. Repeat layers. Top with grated cheese and cracker crumbs. Bake at 325 degrees about 45 minutes or until bubbly. Makes 12 servings.

Nutritional analysis per serving: 376 calories; 22 grams fat; 669 milligrams sodium.

LIGHT CHICKEN SPAGHETTI

3 tablespoons chicken broth
1 cup celery
¾ cup chopped onion
¾ cup green bell pepper
1 chicken bouillon cube, unsalted if desired
4 cups skim milk
4 tablespoons flour
2 packets Butter Buds
¾ pound fresh mushrooms, sliced
Sliced pimentos
1¼ pounds cooked chicken breast
3 to 4 cups cooked spaghetti
1 cup grated reduced-fat Cheddar cheese
½ cup salt-free cracker crumbs

Saute onion, celery and bell pepper in non-stick skillet in 3 tablespoons chicken broth.

In separate non-stick saucepan, combine milk, flour, Butter Buds, pimentos, bouillon and fresh mushrooms. Over low heat, stir until thick. Add sauteed vegetables.

In 9x13 inch casserole, layer sauce, spaghetti and chicken. Repeat layers. Top with grated low-fat cheese and cracker crumbs. Bake at 325 degrees about 45 minutes or until bubbly. Makes 12 servings.

Nutritional analysis per serving: 276 calories; 4 grams fat; 368 milligrams sodium.

Balloon testing is called 'poor man's space program'

FORT SUMNER, N.M. (AP) — Helium-filled balloons that are big enough to hold a football field and can fly higher than airplanes give scientists an inexpensive way to get their projects into space.

"This is a poor man's space program," says Don Gage, a manager at the National Scientific Balloon Facility here. "It's a lot less expensive to do it this way than to send it up on a rocket."

Scientist Bob Golden of New Mexico State University in Las Cruces launched a 6,000-pound payload on a balloon here Sept. 23 to further his research on antimatter in the cosmic rays.

The balloon was 28 million cubic feet in volume, about 600 feet in diameter, and ascended to about 118,000 feet, he said.

In comparison, the Goodyear Blimp is about 202,700 cubic feet.

It was during a flight in 1979 that Golden made the first observation of antimatter. That balloon was much smaller and the technology less advanced, he says.

This year's 24-hour flight, which was engineered by Golden's group and researchers from Italy and Germany, expanded on the discovery and enabled researchers to test equipment for a future flight.

"We hope someday to fly it on a satellite, but that's probably nine or 10 years off," Golden says.

THE NSBF is a service agency under contract with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration to help with the launching, tracking and recovery of balloons, Gage says.

Its predecessor, the Scientific Balloon Facility of the National Center for Atmospheric Research, was established in Boulder, Colo., in 1961 under the National Science Foundation. The facility was moved in 1963 to Palestine, Texas, and was designated the National Scientific Balloon Facility in 1973.

The Fort Sumner site opened in 1987 after the population around the facility's headquarters between Dallas and Houston grew, forcing a reduction in the number of launches that could be made from there.

Over the years, the NSBF has launched more than 1,700 balloons for 35 universities, 23 other research agencies and 33 foreign groups. The launches take place at sites around the world, depending on the subject of each flight.

A crew will travel to Greenland this fall to launch a balloon for an ozone layer study, and an experiment in Canada this summer examined cosmic rays, Gage says.

The balloons also have been used to study supernovas, said Keith Koehler, a spokesman for the Wallops Flight Facility in Virginia, which works on balloon projects with NASA and Goddard Space Flight Center.

MANY SCIENTISTS use balloon experiments to prove their projects before trying to get them on a space shuttle or satellite, Golden says.

The flights also enable researchers to immediately gather and interpret data through computers.

"It costs at least a million dollars to get a rocket up in space, and we can do it for a tenth of that," he says.

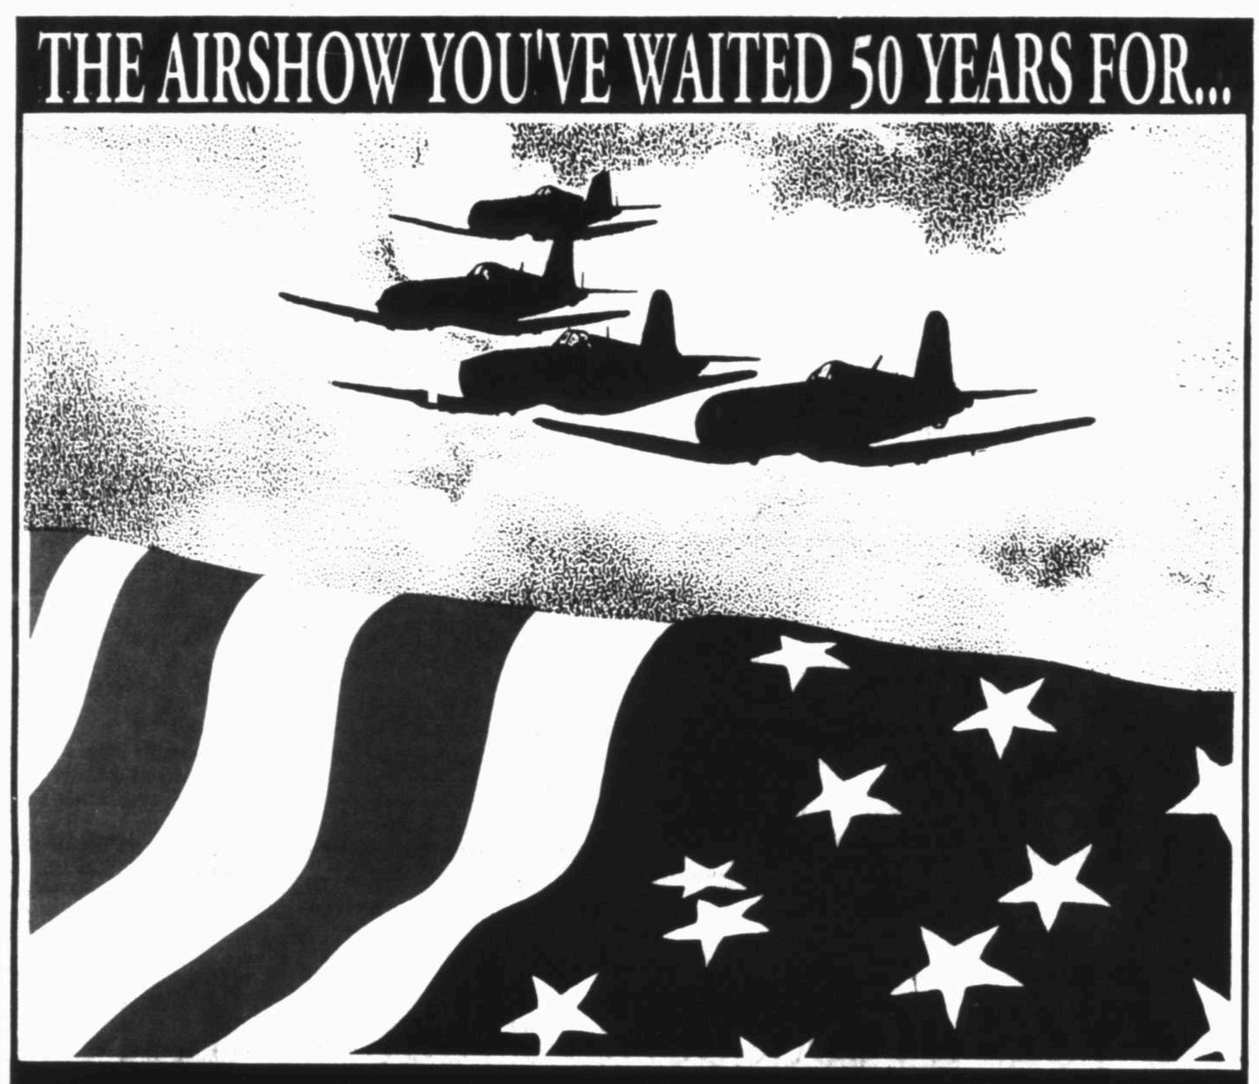

The balloons are made of polyethylene, a see-through material that is about fives times thinner than an average trash bag, Gage says.

During preflight preparations, the long balloon, sometimes 600 to 800 feet, is laid out on a tarp and the top one-tenth of it is filled with helium. It is then released, inflating as it ascends.

The experimental equipment, including the computer, is in a box connected to a parachute, which at the end of the flight inflates and guides the equipment to the ground. The balloon deflates when a radio signal is sent from ground control that separates the chute from the balloon and activates a command to rip out a panel of the balloon.

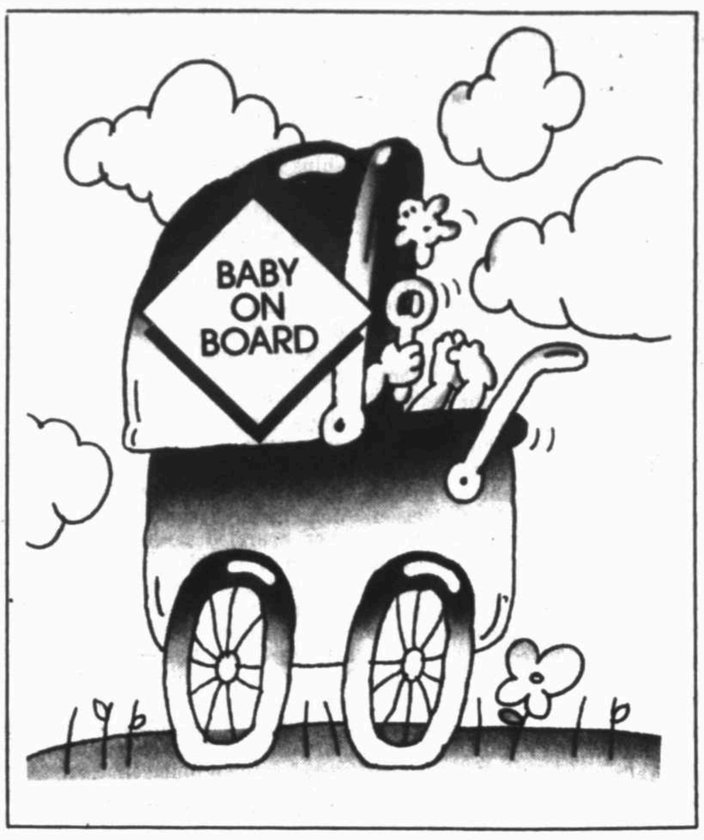

Weather is critical because the early morning flights cannot take place when it is windy, Gage says. Many flights have been postponed.

Once a balloon is up, the giant ball floating overhead often causes calls from curious residents.

Poll finds many parents are feeling frustrated

By Torri Minton
N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Susan Brown has read about 15 books on child-rearing. She has a degree in psychology. She quit the best job she ever had — as an executive secretary at a weight-loss clinic — to take care of her new daughter, Vivian, 9 months old.

Yet the 28-year-old Cupertino mother gives herself a C grade as a parent.

A San Francisco Chronicle Poll found that seven in 10 Bay Area residents, parents and nonparents alike, give parents a C or worse.

Brown says she can't do everything while her husband is away at work — she sometimes doesn't do the dishes or make the beds — and she had plans she hasn't been able to carry out because her daughter has been sick, such as taking her along to do volunteer work.

It's a common case of greater expectations, part of a growing dilemma for parents in the '90s.

Some 84 percent of those polled say raising children is harder now than it was for their parents, according to the poll of 600 Bay Area residents by Mark Baldassare and Associates.

"THERE'S A bigger gap between what we think we should do and what we can realistically do," says Baldassare. "There are more demands outside the home, and there are higher expectations for what you should do to be a good parent inside the home. This is really a new situation for the American family."

Only 3 percent give parents an A; 24 percent a B; 50 percent a C; 13 percent a D and 5 percent an F. Five percent had no opinion.

Parents are trying to resolve everything from having less time with their children to the changing roles of mothers and fathers to heightened worries about how to be the best they can be. They are deluged with information about the good — and bad — effects they can have on their children, information that was not as available to previous generations.

Many parents, particularly fathers, are frustrated by the lack of time they spend with their children, the poll found.

Just 39 percent of fathers were "very satisfied" with the amount of time they spend with their children, compared with 54 percent of mothers.

Seventy-nine percent of mothers and even 74 percent of fathers said they would sacrifice career goals, such as a higher-paying job, to spend more time with their children.

"They need to change the clock to make a 30-hour day," says William Darby, 48, of San Pablo, an auto-body repairman with two grown children. "There's not enough time in the day for the kids."

TOM AND Cheryl Fraser of San Francisco work so much they take care of their son in shifts.

Tom, a 31-year-old attorney, does the morning 1½ hours and trip to day care. Cheryl, a 32-year-old accountant, does the evening 1½ hours and walk back from day care.

"Family," in the traditional sense, starts when Dad returns to their Sunset District home. It lasts about 1½ hours, sometimes as many as three. That's it. Then 18-month-old Robert goes to bed.

"It's a big devotion of all our spare time," says Tom Fraser. "Our lives are his now."

Studies by two University of California at Berkeley psychologists show that indeed it is harder to be a parent these days, and it's more than a matter of a time crunch. Philip and Carolyn Pape Cowan have been studying 96 couples since 1979.

Parents have more work demands. The divorce rate is climbing. Extended families that used to help care for children are scattered. Even grandparents, if they live nearby, might be working. Add to that a lack of decent child care for many families, they say, and families are stuck trying to figure how to juggle it all.

"It is clear to us that the families we are studying now are not feeling the support they need, and they're very stressed," says Carolyn Cowan, an associate research psychologist.

WHEN ASKED in the Chronicle Poll, "In what area are you in most need of help?" child care topped the list (27 percent), followed by finances (24 percent), household chores (18 percent), emotional support (9 percent) and child-rearing advice (7 percent). Only 12 percent said none.

The Cowans say the most dramatic finding of their studies is that when couples become families for the first time, strain on the marriage is increased and satisfaction tends to go down. Less-responsive parents can affect the child's studies and peer relationships.

"We're saying their own relationship needs some time, too, and if that's on track it will be better for the children," says Philip Cowan.

Parents say it is harder now to raise children because of things such as drugs, violence and fears of abduction. They remember being able to walk home from school alone, something they will not let their own children do.

ASKED IN the Chronicle Poll to name the biggest problem facing parents today, residents overwhelmingly named drugs and alcohol (31 percent). Next were lack of money and lack of time (9 percent each); the child's boredom (8 percent); poor schools, poor discipline and morals, crime and gangs (6 percent each); peer groups (5 percent); and television, rock and movies (2 percent). Only 7 percent of all adults said there is nothing for parents to worry about in their city.

'Gimme' attitude distressing

By Lawrence Kutner
N.Y. Times News Service

Children who are old enough to know what they want, but not yet aware of how much things cost, sometimes become angry and confused when their parents cannot afford to buy things their friends have. Their innocence allows them to ask questions and make statements that can upset parents or make them feel guilty.

Sandra Bou-Assi remembers the confused look on her 8-year-old son Bashir's face this summer. They had invited another boy to their home in Arlington, Mass., to play. The boy refused because they did not own a Nintendo game. "I told Bashir that his friend is the one who's missing out because we do a lot of fun things here," said Ms. Bou-Assi, a single unemployed mother of two sons whose budget is stretched to the limit.

Her sons have been asking for separate bedrooms; they do not understand that she cannot afford higher rent. They also refuse to eat the free breakfast and lunch the school provides because doing so will encourage their classmates to tease them. "It's difficult for them because children can be vicious," Ms. Bou-Assi said. "When their friends go to Disneyland, they want to go, too. I tell them that they'll get there eventually, but they'll have to wait."

To understand why children are so envious and demanding at certain ages, parents must consider a child's stage of development, the values of their household and the symbolism involved.

Preschoolers' demands are likely to be transient. A 4-year-old who sees a particular doll or toy for the first time may insist, with great melodrama, that she has wanted it "all her life!"

"Often the best thing you can do is to avoid impulse buying," said Dr. Martin E. Ford, a developmental psychologist and an associate professor of education at Stanford University. "If you wait a few days, the child's desire will often go away by itself."

In elementary school, children are much more interested in comparing themselves to their peers, and have a much greater desire to fit in. As with adults, money takes on a more symbolic value.

"Adults use money to buy security, affection, power and recognition," said Dr. Kenneth O. Doyle, a psychologist at the University of Minnesota specializing in the psychology of money, who added that children learn the value of money from their parents.

He has found that what bothers many children is not being poorer, but standing out from the crowd.

"When children interact, poorer children can feel ashamed, unloved, isolated or weak because they don't have or do the things other children can," Doyle said. "But richer children can feel tainted by money because it might cause them to be rejected by their classmates. Deep down, they're convinced that their family must have done something bad to have gotten it."

Psychologists stress the importance of looking beneath the surface to learn why a child wants something expensive.

Children can be helped to understand those reasons and explore alternatives. For example, a child who insists on buying expensive athletic shoes may just want to belong to a particular social group at school. He views the shoes as a ticket to acceptance, but may not see other ways to fit in with the same crowd.

Tips can help parents to determine child's needs

N.Y. Times News Service

Having your child ask for something you cannot afford or prefer not to buy can be very distressing. Here are some ways to find out what the child's real need is:

- Take your child's emotions seriously. "Don't minimize your child's disappointment, even if you disagree with what he wants," said Dr. Rita P. Underberg, a clinical professor of psychiatry at the University of Rochester Medical Center. A request for something extravagant or unusual is often a sign the child is feeling rejected by other children. If you ignore those feelings and desires, the child will feel even more rejected and may conclude that you are not a safe person to talk to since you are rejecting him as well.
- Try to keep your own emotions out of it. Remember that money is often a symbol for something else, although it probably symbolizes different things to you and to your child.
- "Be matter-of-fact in stating that you cannot afford something, rather than weighing your child down with your own anxieties over finances," advised Dr. Kenneth O. Doyle, a psychologist at the University of Minnesota specializing in the psychology of money. "Talk about ways you might be able to save enough to do it in the future or do something else instead."
- Remember that preschoolers often interpret a rejection of their ideas as a rejection of themselves. "Try not to convey the attitude that they're bad if they ask," Dr. Doyle said.
- Talk to your children about the values portrayed on the television programs they watch, as well as the commercials.

Many programs offer an unrealistically high standard of living. Commercials tout the social and practical benefits of products without mentioning the costs. Children do not have much perspective on either.

"It makes many children feel that Mom and Dad aren't successful because they don't live like most of the families on TV," Doyle said. "That breeds shame and resentment."

- Consider offering your child a "matching grant" for an item she wants. If your child wants something that is only a bit out of your normal price range, think about whether she might combine money she saves with money you contribute. This has two advantages: It delays the purchase, so the child may decide it is unnecessary. And children tend to be much more critical shoppers when their own hard-earned money is involved.

'Crashworthiness' certification for bicycle helmets sought by experts

By Ira Dreyfuss

WASHINGTON (AP) — In an accident, will a bike rider's helmet stay in place well enough to protect his head? You'll have to rely on your best guess — agencies that certify crashworthiness of helmets have no standard to guide you.

A private certification organization, the American Society for Testing and Materials, is developing a safety test on what's called roll off.

ASTM would be a third entry in the helmet certification field. But neither group that now sets voluntary standards, the Snell Memorial Foundation and the American National Standards Institute, has a rule on roll off. Certification of roll off protection is a long way off.

An ASTM task force hopes to have a draft testing procedure approved at its December meeting, Dean Fisher, task force chairman and senior vice president of Bell Sports Inc., said from the helmet manufacturer's offices in Norwalk, Calif.

"A roll off test will undoubtedly be a part of all standards eventually," Fisher said. "The only reason it's not right now is that there haven't been enough people working with it."

One problem is determining exactly what happens to a helmet in an accident.

"No police department gathers that data in a way that anybody could use," said Randy Swart, director of the Bicycle Helmet Safety Institute in Arlington, Va. "You have to go by anecdotal evidence. What you're hearing is that sometimes helmets do come off."

SOME COUNTRIES have roll off standards, but their tests vary.

Canada checks whether a helmet will be dislodged by a constant tugging, such as might occur as a rider scrapes the ground after impact, said Greg Makowiecki, engineering technologist for the Canadian Standards Association, a private organization in Toronto. This could offer protection against abrasion.

The possible ASTM standard, however, is more concerned with the risk that the helmet may be jerked out of place, exposing a rider's head to impact, as he is banged around in an accident.

Consumers Union official Donald L. Mays said the ASTM has a better approach.

"Abrasion heals pretty readily — brain damage doesn't," said Mays, who heads the product testing agency's recreation and home improvement division in Yonkers, N.Y. "Protecting against impact is what you really want the helmet to do."

Rule makers also differ on how much movement should be allowed. The Canadian standard regards a helmet as unfit if it moves enough to bare a significant amount of head. The possible ASTM standard would not reject a helmet unless it comes off.

As a result, helmets that could pass one standard could fail another. The Consumer Product Safety Commission put six helmets through the procedures used in Canada and proposed by ASTM. It found all passed the possible U.S. standard, but four failed the Canadian test.

ANOTHER QUESTION is whether the tests will allow for the varied shapes of human heads. Headforms could test basically whether the helmet would stay on an average head, Fisher said.

So, even when a standard is developed, it will still be up to the consumer to make sure his helmet fits. "Fit is the most important thing that a consumer does when he chooses to put a helmet on," Swart said.

"In general, if you can't get it off your head, you're going to be safe," Fisher said.

Consumers don't have the advantage of CPSC test equipment. But they can strap on a helmet according to manufacturer's directions, and try to force it back and forth with your hand, said Scott R. Heh, a mechanical engineer and author of the CPSC test report.

Consumers Union used a test much like that when it rated helmets for the May 1990 edition of its magazine, Consumer Reports. It found four helmets could be pushed out of place on headforms or human heads, no matter how the retaining straps were adjusted.

Stockholm hotels offer ship-shape stay

By Jennifer Merin

STOCKHOLM (AP) — Sweden's beautiful capital city covers 14 small islands linked by a lace-like network of handsome bridges spanning waterways so clean and fresh you can fish in them.

Stockholm's islands lie between the scenic Baltic Sea to the east, and Lake Malaren to the west. Many public ferries ply routes between them and thousands of personal pleasure craft are moored at their shores.

It's hardly surprising that nautical themes prevail in the decor of several Stockholm hostelries.

Among the most exclusive is the charming Victory Hotel, named for the famous flagship of British naval hero Lord Horatio Nelson. The 48-room hotel is at Lilla Nygatan 5, in Stockholm's historic Gamla Stan (Old Town). It occupies two adjoining 17th-century townhouses whose foundations date back to the 13th-century.

An original letter from Lord Nelson to his beloved Lady Emma Hamilton, dated 1801, is prominently displayed in the lobby. The admiral's words, hastily scrawled in now-faded brown ink, confess to his being "more than half sea sick" and spell out his tender feelings for the lady.

This and other nautical memorabilia give Victory Hotel a marine ambience. The hotel was established in 1987 by Gunnar Bengtsson. Now it accommodates transients while permanently housing much of the owner's collection of Nelsoniana and nautical antiques. Shiny glass-and-brass cases in lobby, corridors and stairways display antique dolls in seamens' dress, pipes and humidors, nautical instruments, telescopes, clocks, flags and other sea-worthy items.

ROOMS ARE named for Swedish seamen who captained sailing ships from the mid-1800s to early in this century. Captains' portraits are displayed outside the rooms, along with paintings of their ships.

Room 401, for example, is a suite-like domain named for Kapten John Aberg (1874-1946). He's depicted as a misty-eyed man wearing a high collar and bowler hat. The room has two single beds, a convertible sofa, desk and antique chest with handpainted floral motifs.

The most luxurious suite is Room 109, named for Kapten A.G. Johansson, a stern-faced captain who presided at the helm of the Jacob of Stockholm. This is a spacious two-roomer, featuring high ceilings with handpainted beams and antique furniture that includes a rare 19th-century square piano. The suite also has its own jacuzzi and foot massager.

Gunnar Bengtsson collected the captains' portraits and other personal memorabilia by searching archives and antique shops along the Swedish coast. Hotel employees offer more lore about captains and tell the stories of specific antiques. And whenever possible, they assign guests to rooms named for captains with the same surname.

WEEK-NIGHT RATES range from $273 per night for singles, $359 for doubles. Weekend rates are from $145 for singles, $205 for doubles. Breakfast is included.

Visitors who want to overnight on the water can bunk aboard the M.M. Malardrottningen (Queen of Lake Malaren), permanently moored at Riddarholmen (Knight's Island), near Gamla Stan. This "boatel" is a luxury yacht that once belong to heiress Barbara Hutton. It offers 59 small but comfortable, well-appointed cabins priced from $134 for singles or $206 for doubles, including breakfasts. All rooms have private phone and TV. The luxurious owner's cabin (about $350 per night, double) is particularly popular with honeymooners.

Stockholm's Af Chapman, a floating youth hostel open to adults of all ages, is a real bargain for budget travelers. It's a beautiful, full-rigged merchant sailing ship, built in 1888 and now permanently moored at Skeppsholmen (Ship's Island), near Stockholm's art school. It was converted to a hostel in 1949. A total of 136 bunks are arranged four or seven per cabin. The cost: $19 per night, five-night maximum stay. Paper sheets cost $4, or you can use your own. Guests have free use of cooking facilities and showers. Af Chapman is so popular most beds are booked months in advance, but the manager reserves 15 to 20 beds per night for those who simply show up and want to stay. Closed Dec. 17 through March.

Airline seat should fit passenger

By Jennifer Merin

NEW YORK (AP) — When it comes to airplane seats, you can never be too rich or too thin.

The rich head for first class, where seats measure about 20 inches across.

Thin passengers fare better than others when packed into coach, where seats are a mere 17 inches wide.

What to do if you're neither rich nor thin? Request a seat that suits your personal preference.

Obviously aisle seats offer more room for stretching, while window seats provide better viewing. But there are other considerations.

Comfort is effected by differences in seat width, degree of seat recline and distance between seat rows. The latter, measured from the front of one seat to the front of the seat behind, is called pitch. Coach and first class seats vary in width, pitch and recline from aircraft to aircraft, airline to airline and, to some extent, within a single airplane.

Consider American Airlines' seating plan for its 727-200 airplanes features 150 seats, 12 in first class and 138 in coach. In first class, seats are 20¼ inches wide, with a pitch of 37 inches. Coach seats are 17¼ inches wide, but pitch varies. Rows six through 13 have a pitch of 32 inches, and rows 14 through 30 have a pitch of 31 inches, except for over-the-wing rows 16 and 18 with a pitch of 33 inches and row 29 with a pitch of 53 inches.

The obvious choice for leg room is row 29. But that's at the back of the plane, which means when you get there you'll be the last off.

On 727s and most other aircraft, preferred coach seats are immediately behind the wall that separates coach from first class. These bulkhead seats often provide slightly more leg room, have no reclining seats in front of them and are located near the front of the aircraft for easy boarding and deplaning. But you can't remove the armrests.

Armrests in other rows lift up so if the seat next to yours is empty you can stretch out, or if the entire row is clear, you can lie down — and just might be more comfortable than if you were in first class.

Some airlines won't assign bulkhead seats until airport check-in. Then the handicapped, families with infants, unaccompanied minors or other special passengers are given priority. If you do manage to get a preassigned bulkhead seat, you may be asked to move.

Another comfort factor is the location of seat legs and supports. Placement, determined by tracking built into the aircraft, may result in uneven distribution of underseat space. Leg room under window seats may be reduced by the aircraft's curved side wall, or by obtrusive supports. This occurs more frequently on narrow-body planes, such as the 727 or MD-80, than on wide bodies, such as the 747 or DC-10.

How can you get seating information for your flight? Airline reservationists usually know aircraft type, but getting details about leg braces and pitch is like pulling teeth. Some haven't heard of pitch. Others can't access the information. Others put you on hold and never come back. Call again and ask for customer relations. If you're insistent, you'll get the information.

Maybe.

More certainly, try a copy of the September issue of Consumer Report Travel Letter. It features a five-page diagram rating airlines' seat comfort by width, pitch and configuration.

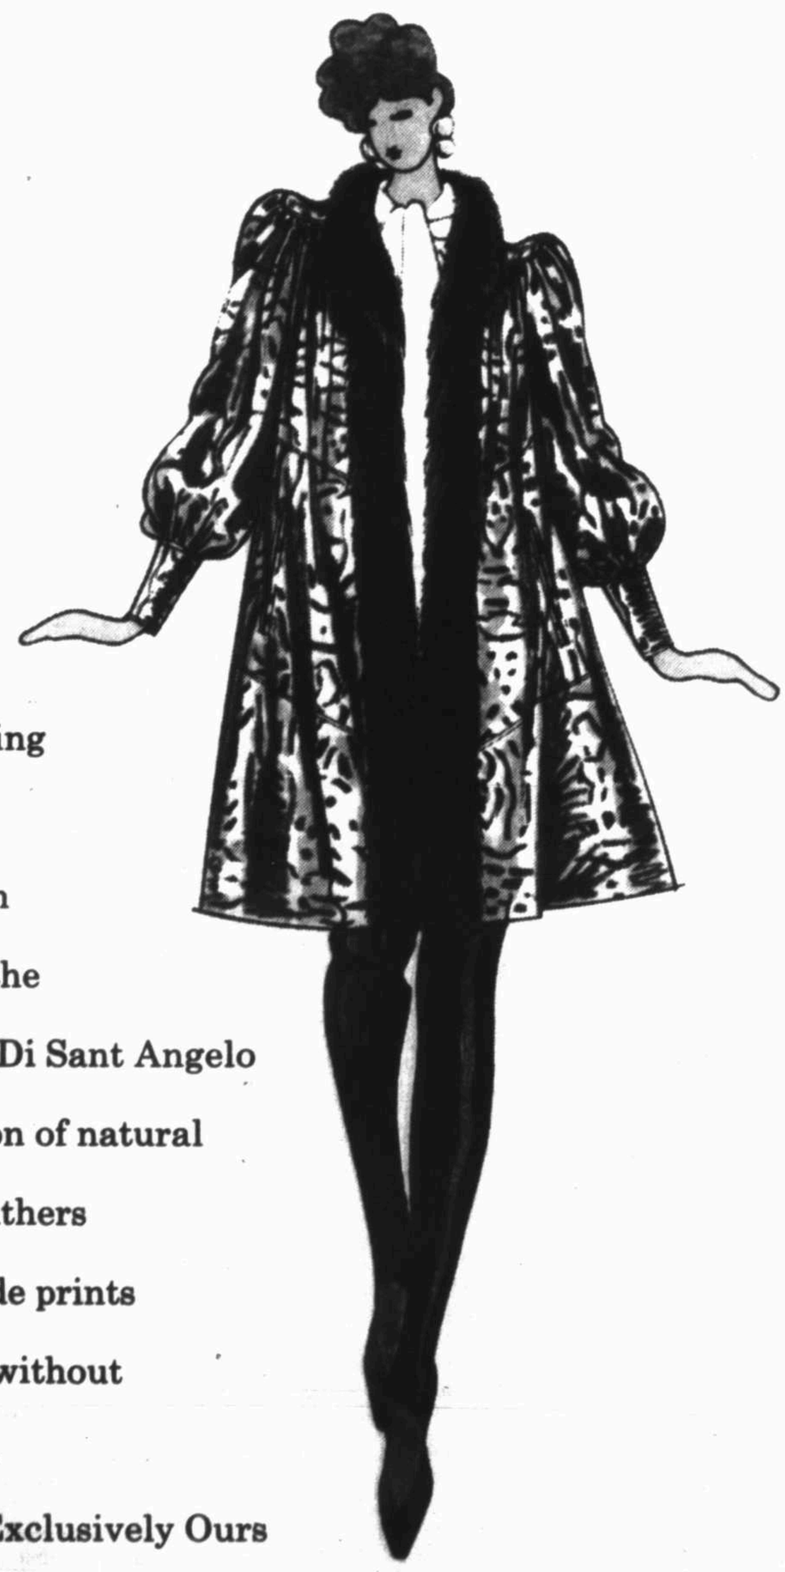

Interiors are also diagrammed in Carlson's Airline Seating Guides, published four times yearly in U.S. and overseas editions. While diagrams indicate non-reclining seats and show proximity to lavatories, galleys and exits (where there is often more leg room), they don't specify pitch or width.

New Mexico's Turquoise Trail beautiful but quirky

By Jayne Clark
N.Y. Times News Service

The Turquoise Trail, which runs from Albuquerque north to Santa Fe, is the perfect scenic drive for people bored by scenic drives.

Oh, it's beautiful, all right. This ribbon of highway unfurls over a sun-dappled landscape of cholla cactus and juniper. It climbs through evergreen and aspen groves and sidles along the back side of the purple Sandia Mountains. But there are other sights along the trail — and not all of them natural, either — guaranteed to divert attention and upset the best-planned itineraries.

The road slinks through resilient, dog-eared towns that have survived a dozen incarnations. It winds past quirky roadside attractions. Its inhabitants are both refined and rough around the edges.

D.H. Lawrence described New Mexico, where he lived and worked for a time, as being like comic opera played with solemn intensity.

Hit the Turquoise Trail for continuous performances daily.

The route begins where Highway 14 veers north off Interstate 40 toward Cedar Crest, about eight miles east of Albuquerque. This alternate route to Santa Fe won't take much longer, but travelers concerned with speed and efficiency should stick to Interstate 25. Those looking for an excuse to dawdle, couldn't find a better way to go.

THE FIRST excuse presents itself at Route 536, a national scenic byway that winds 14 miles to the 10,700-foot peak of Sandia Crest. About a mile up the road, a sign commands "Hit Those Brakes!" And who could resist? You've never really experienced the brilliance of New Mexico's legendary sunlight until you've seen it bouncing off the 36,000 bottles Ross and Carla Ward have used to build the structure that houses this truly classic roadside attraction.

Their bottle house contains an animated, miniature W western village called Tinkertown, which consists of 5,000 tiny wood-carved items in a 50-foot-long glass display case.

In a room nearby is an equally intricate hand-carved "Amazing Miniature Circus," created by Ward's skilled hand and rich imagination. Ward, a commercial artist, began carving Tinkertown about 30 years ago, his wife explains, and "It just kinda grew and grew."

The artist remains modest about the achievement.

"I did it while you were watching TV," he likes to tell people.

Tinkertown is open from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily April 1 to Nov. 1. Admission is $2 for adults and 50 cents for children.

Sandia Crest rises among the aspens and evergreens of the Cibola National Forest. Route 536 leads to the summit, but you can also stop at the Sandia Peak Ski Area and ride the chair lift to the top. The lift operates from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Thursdays through Sundays from July 4 until Labor Day.

AN OBSERVATION deck on the peak looks out over Albuquerque and the Rio Grand Valley, stretching below like a vast brown ocean. There's a snack bar nearby that serves strictly nacho-burrito-corn dog fare.

Or make the 1½-mile hike down a well-groomed path to the High Finance Restaurant. (Most patrons reach the restaurant via a tram that travels up the other side of the mountain.) The restaurant has a steak and seafood menu priced from $14 to $29. Summer hours are 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. or later. Call (505) 243-9742 for reservations.

Retracing tracks to the Turquoise Trail, you encounter the tired old town of Golden, 11 miles north of the Sandia Crest turnoff. In 1825, the town became the site of the first gold rush west of the Mississippi. But the promise of riches implied by its name tarnished long ago.

'What do people do here? Nothing. Nothing of real permanence or profit. They say they're potters and artists and glassblowers. But they don't make any money off it. They survive here. It's a microcosm of a city in a low-key kind of way.'

— Harvey Emslye
retired physicist and resident of Madrid, N.M.

'I think the state should promote these scenic roads, but I think they ought to have a rest stop. Seems like everyone who comes here, all they want to use is my outhouse.'

— Todd Brown
Casa Grande Trading Post-Turquoise Mining Museum-Live Animal Petting Zoo in Cerrillos, N.M.

The only commercial enterprise is the Golden General Merchandise Store (closed Sundays and Mondays), unless you count the Turquoise Trail Shop, a dilapidated curio shop full of battered stuff and shut tight. A bleached cow skull crowns the doorway and a Coke machine faded pink by the sun stands sentry outside. Inside, display cases are crammed with dusty bottles and assorted rocks. Rusty tools dangle from the ceiling.

Next door, an unseen artist has arranged old Mason jars and wine bottles to create a dazzling free-form sculpture on a patch of weedy ground. Blue, green and purple glass shimmer amid the dirt and rocks. More colored glass is draped in daisy-chain fashion atop a fence made of aspen limbs.

What this all means is anyone's guess. Figure it as just another oddity along the Turquoise Trail.

THE 1800S coal mining town of Madrid (pronounced MA-drid) lies 12 miles beyond Golden. The mines went bust in the 1950s and the town was abandoned for two decades. But in the 1970s, the lure of cheap housing, spectacular sunsets and the mild, dry climate drew people back to town. A mixed bag settled in Madrid, eventually boosting the population from 12 to its present total of 400 or so.

In the '70s, miners shacks went for as little as $750 and "you could come to town with $100 in your pocket, throw a beer party and still have cigarette money left," said Rich Tatro, a 13-year resident of the area. "Now if you could get a house for $50,000, you'd be lucky."

The town is home to many artists, or at least people who claim to be.

"What do people do here? Nothing. Nothing of real permanence or profit. They say they're potters and artists and glassblowers. But they don't make any money off it," said Harvey Emslye, an 85-year-old retired physicist who originally came to New Mexico to work on the Manhattan Project, which developed and built the atom bomb. "They survive here. It's a microcosm of a city in a low-key kind of way."

Some of the town artisans and entrepreneurs would probably take exception to Emslye's assessment. There are a number of enterprises here that appear to be quite successful. Most visible is the row of stores on Main Street's elevated boardwalk, which include a couple of shops that sell good Santa Fe-style furniture and crafts.

THE OLD COAL Mine Museum exhibits old drills and gears and allows visitors to climb aboard a 1906 Baldwin steam engine. Tours of the coal mine, which closed in 1956, are conducted daily from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. during the summer. Admission is $2.50 for adults and $1 for children.

And in the center of town, the Madrid Country Store stocks a little bit of everything, including malts and milkshakes served at its old-fashioned soda fountain.

Emslye prefers a seat in the Mine Shaft Tavern. It's a classic Old West establishment with a moose head mounted over the fireplace and a massive old bar populated by regulars who look as if they haven't budged in a few years.

"I'm not an alcoholic, but I like the bar life," said Emslye, a grizzled old man with mottled skin, a tangled gray beard and the clipped speech of an aristocrat. He's a well-traveled, educated man who regales fellow bar patrons with stories of Asian kings, shipwrecks and a local murderer. ("Great guy, beautiful man, no good," he said, summing up the killer.)

"I really came here to die. But I didn't. Can't figure out why," he mused, taking a sip of bourbon on ice, a drink the tavern has dubbed a "Harvey" in Emslye's honor.

"The miners were all drunks," he concluded. "That's why this bar is so long."

CERRILLOS IS a classic, sleepy New Mexican village that lies about 15 miles south of Santa Fe, and a mile off the Turquoise Trail. Its unpaved streets are lined with adobe houses, old churches and tall shade trees. Even before the Spanish arrived in the 17th century, turquoise from the area was being traded as far away as Mexico.

The present village has existed since 1879 and, in its mining heyday in the late 1800s, supported 21 saloons, four hotels and a population of about 2,500.

Today, there is considerably less action in this community of 200. Most of it is centered at the far end of town, which in tiny Cerrillos is about a block from the near end of town. Here, a sign reading Casa Grande Trading Post-Turquoise Mining Museum-Live Animal Petting Zoo, only hints at the entrepreneurial fervor of proprietor Todd Brown.

He collects rocks, raises honey bees, cultivates plants, sells antiques and is the author of several self-published works, including a book on children's gardening that comes with seeds glued to the text. ("That way, when you finish reading it, you just bury the book," he reasoned.) And he built a 29-room adobe to contain it all.

"I don't know why I do it," he said, then quickly corrected himself. "Yes I do. I have six kids. You try feeding six kids. You'll do anything."

Brown, a 38-year-old with shoulder-length hair, who dresses in worn jeans and moccasins, looks like a refugee from the 1960s. And in fact, he arrived in New Mexico 21 years ago searching for a commune. He never found the commune, but he did find Cerrillos and he fell in love with the village.

OTHERS WHO travel the Turquoise Trail will, too, Brown believes.

"I think the state should promote these scenic roads, but I think they ought to have a rest stop. Seems like everyone who comes here, all they want to use is my outhouse."

Ghirardelli Square wants residents too

By Michael Bauer
N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — In a city where so many attractions compete for the attention of the 13 million tourists who visit each year, Ghirardelli Square is turning its sights to the locals.

Trendy, top-notch restaurants are the weapon it is using to capture upscale local customers.

Recently, McCormick & Kuleto's Seafood House and Cafe Oritalia opened and plan to cater to locals.

Pat Kuleto, who designed the seafood house, says locals will get priority seating by identifying themselves when they enter or make reservations. He also created two separate areas: the regular restaurant and the casual Crab Cake Lounge overlooking the plaza, which should appeal more to tourists.

Merchants say a whole new attitude has been generated by the openings and the recent permanent lighting of Aquatic Park.

Now lit are the Balclutha, an old ship at Hyde Street Pier; the large cypress trees and gas-style lamps on the water's edge, and the half-moon-shaped municipal pier.

John Mendelsohn, the president of MMI Realty Services, the leasing agency for Ghirardelli, has been quietly orchestrating this change since he took over in 1987. He sought out Kuleto, the designer of such popular San Francisco restaurants as Postrio, Kuleto's, Splendido and Fog City Diner. Kuleto transformed the space that was vacated by Maxwell's into the elegant, bustling McCormick & Kuleto's.

"WHAT WE'VE tried to do is bring unique restaurant operations by locals for locals," says Mendelsohn. "We want to provide a haven for the locals, and the high-class tourists will follow."

As part of this master plan, Mendelsohn also persuaded Nori Yoshida to launch a branch of his ultra-chic Oritalia, an East-West restaurant that has found a following in its three years on Fillmore Street.

Ealier this year, Bay One Cafe opened on the top floor of the Mustard Building. The California-style cuisine and casual decor has an informal, neighborhood ambience.

These new entries are enhanced by a healthy stable of veterans that have been around more than a decade: the Mandarin (Chinese), Gaylord's (Indian) and Paprikas Fono (Hungarian and Czechoslovakian).

To dispel the notion that Ghirardelli is difficult to get to and impossible park near, Mendelsohn has refurbished the 400-car garage and lowered the rates to $6 for 12 hours and free parking with validation.

In addition, the new restaurants offer valet parking, he says.

Ghirardelli Square was born when the chocolate factory moved to the suburbs in 1963. The historic complex of brick buildings was converted into a multiuse shopping complex that became the model for other urban renovations such as Faneuil Hall Market Place in Boston.

WHEN IT OPENED in November 1964 it attracted a local crowd. During the early 1980s the tide turned, and surveys showed that as many as 80 percent of the patrons were tourists.

Also during that time many of the unique boutiques closed.

Mendelsohn thinks the locals became alienated when the New York branch of Maxwell's Plum opened in 1981, replacing the locally owned Senor Pico, which was operated by "Trader Vic" Bergeron.

Another popular Italian restaurant, Modesto Lanzone, closed in 1988, when Lanzone decided to concentrate his efforts on his Opera Plaza location.

The longest survivor is the 23-year-old Mandarin. This groundbreaking Chinese restaurant, opened by Cecilia Chiang, is credited with bringing Sichuan and Hunan cooking to the United States. She was the first to sell the now-popular Peking duck, sizzling rice soup and pot stickers.

Last year, when her partner died and local business began to wane, she retired and sold the business to an employee, Julian Mao.

Chiang thinks the changes in the center are positive. "Ghirardelli is higher class, much higher class (than Fisherman's Wharf), but it was being run as if it were the same," she says.

"I asked them (the management): 'Do you want to compete with Fisherman's Wharf or what?' ".

The answer today is clearly no. With Kuleto and Oritalia, Mendelsohn hopes to attract other first-class retail operators.

NOW THERE are 64 retail shops; about 20 percent are national stores, according to Barbara Fountain, the square's general manager. Those include the Nature Company, Sharper Image, Aca Joe, Crabtree & Evelyn and Ann Taylor. There are only seven empty spaces, she says.

In addition, Mendelsohn is trying to bring in a moderately priced cafe-style restaurant, and he hopesing to turn the 8,000-square-foot theater area into a dining and shopping complex.

Yoshida had projected that his half-million dollar investment, Cafe Oritalia, would attract 80 percent tourists. But after 10 days in business he's found that it's an equal mix.

To survive, he says, he will have to pull in the locals. "I'm pretty sure we can make it," he says. "I'll know in three or four months."

Kuleto admits that his venture is "a big wild card." Yet he has a long history of success.

He is one of a rare breed who can command a percentage of the restaurants he designs, but McCormick & Kuleto's is the first in which he owns a major percentage (50 percent). He and partners Bill McCormick and Doug Schmick, who own 10 seafood restaurants in the Northwest — including McCormick's in Seattle — sank $3 million into the space.

Their challenge is to fill 350 seats a night, more than twice the number of seats at Stars, 140 more than Postrio and 40 more than Scoma's, the Fisherman's Wharf restaurant, which consistently ranks as one of the nation's top moneymakers.

TO HELP ensure success, Kuleto spearheaded the drive to light Aquatic Park.
