Model testifies at Barry grand jury

WASHINGTON (AP) — The one-time model who cooperated with federal authorities in the arrest of Mayor Marion Barry on a cocaine possession charge appeared today before a federal grand jury investigating Barry's activities.

Meanwhile, Barry aides, local union leaders and business officials sought to persuade Jesse Jackson to join the mayor's race in the aftermath of Barry's arrest.

The woman, Rasheeda Moore, who sources said called Barry to the hotel room where he was arrested Thursday night, entered the courthouse under tight security. The 38-year-old former model said nothing as she entered the building through the back door.

Amid the political maneuvering, Barry flew south on Monday and checked into a substance abuse treatment center in West Palm Beach, Fla., to be treated for alcoholism, according to his spokeswoman, Lurma Rackley.

Jackson is "getting a lot of pressure to run. I don't know if he's going to," said an associate of the two-time Democratic presidential contender.

"A lot of the pressure is coming from Marion's people," added the associate, who insisted on anonymity.

Ron Richardson, president of the local chapter of the Hotel and Restaurant Workers AFL-CIO, said he met with a variety of community activists and organizers about mounting a draft-Jackson campaign.

"We are going to plead with him to submerge his personal interests and help heal this city, which is what we need right now," Richardson said. "My indications are that people that I've been talking to — labor leaders, ministers, others — are overwhelmingly in favor of trying to get Jackson in the race."

Eric Easter, Jackson's press secretary, said the former Democratic presidential hopeful has been ill in bed since returning to Washington on Saturday and has met with no one regarding a mayoral draft campaign.

Jackson's move to Washington in April 1989 fueled rumors that he would run for mayor. But Jackson has repeatedly said he would never oppose Barry, a friend and former civil rights colleague.

Early surveys of public sentiment gave Jackson a wide lead over all other potential contenders, including Barry.

A local political organizer said 20 labor leaders, business officials and political activists from this heavily Democratic town met for more than four hours on Sunday to discuss a Jackson candidacy.

Collective bargaining opposed

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

A Midland Police Department spokesman today publicly denounced any intentions by other officers wanting to seek collective bargaining rights and a civil service commission.

Deputy Chief Ron Aaron, speaking before the Midland City Council this morning, said he and about half of the department's force, including Chief Richard Czech, oppose calling for referendums on the two issues.

Wielding a list of 68 fellow officers' signatures, Aaron said the public may have misunderstood recent comments by a Midland Fraternal Order of Police representative.

FOP President Leonard Hendon said two weeks ago that having collective bargaining power and a civil service commission would be the only way to get city officials to listen to police officers and firefighters' needs.

"I knew I didn't feel this way and I knew there were others," Aaron said. "We want to form a partnership between the city administration and the community."

Some of the 68 signatures were from members of the FOP.

Aaron said better communication lines between the department and city administration can be formed without collective bargaining and a civil service commission.

Voter approval for collective bargaining would mean city officials would have to enter negotiations with police officials over salaries, health benefits and other employment conditions.

A civil service commission would be the highest level in a municipal appeals process for employees who feel they were unfairly disciplined.

The committee would be comprised of three community members outside City Hall. They would be appointed by the mayor and confirmed by councilmen.

Instead of a commission, the city has an appeals board. After appealing to the city manager, a grievance can go to a board made up of two city councilmen and a mayor-appointed Midland citizen.

Hendon, who could not be reached for comment today, has said a civil service commission would be more objective in the employee matters.

Hendon has also accused the city officials of not living up to their promise of working closer with the FOP.

Towns push for landfill rule variances

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

The sands of time are blowing away for a group of West Texas city and county officials who are asking federal officials to ease up on recently revised landfill requirements.

The city of Rankin's municipal garbage dump closed last year, Iraan's is not far behind and Stanton's has about a year of life left.

Frustrated with new federal guidelines, representatives from a gradually growing cooperative of 60 West Texas cities and counties are scheduled to address a U.S. Senate subcommittee Wednesday.

They will express their support of bill sponsored by U.S. Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Texas, which would give small towns more elbow room in building and maintaining landfills.

In tiny towns such as Iraan and Rankin, burning was the primary disposal method for municipal trash until Aug. 31, 1989.

The 1988 Resource Conservation and Recovery Act, enforced by the Enviromental Protection Agency, banned burning the garbage and imposed stricter landfill construction and operation requirements.

But operating a landfill under the regulations can cost hundreds of thousands of dollars a year, Upton County Judge Peggy Garner said Monday.

It would be so costly that it could bankrupt small municipalities or inflict a heavy financial burden on their taxpayers, Ms. Garner said.

She said it is unreasonable for the West Texas towns, where the water table is sometimes 500 feet and other times nonexistent, to have to comply with the same regulations as Houston and New York City.

In late November officials began forming the Sparsely Populated Entities Coalition (SPEC), which has rapidly grown in membership to 36 counties and 24 cities. SPEC includes the cities of Stanton, Rankin, McCamey, Iraan, Big Lake and Andrews along with Ward, Andrews and Upton counties.

FBI searches junk shop in bombings

ENTERPRISE, Ala. (AP) — FBI agents investigating the mail-bombings that killed a federal judge and a civil rights lawyer searched the salvage business and home of a man who lost an appeal before a panel that included the judge.

A published report today indicated the agents may have been looking for a typewriter used in letters from the bomber. A relative of the man whose property was searched said FBI agents asked family members about an old typewriter, but the agents did not say why.

Robert Wayne O'Ferrell was questioned most of the day Monday, and agents with bomb-sniffing dogs searched his sprawling Enterprise junk warehouse, a smaller junk shop, and his home in nearby New Brockton, about 75 miles from Montgomery. Police and a bomb squad from a nearby Army base joined the search.

No charges were filed against O'Ferrell or anyone else, agent Chuck Archer of Mobile said. Agents suspended their search at about 10 p.m., and police sealed O'Ferrell's property.

The farms of O'Ferrell's father, Jay, and brother Buddy also were searched, according to a cousin, Jerry O'Ferrell of Mobile. He said he spoke with O'Ferrell's sister Monday night and "they're all shocked. He's not the type person who would do this."

O'Ferrell, 46, described by a neighbor as a former Baptist preacher who once sold insurance and took up the junk business about three years ago, was released after questioning and was back at his home this morning.

He told reporters he was cooperating in the investigation and may have a statement at an appropriate time. He then asked the reporters to leave his property.

Court records show O'Ferrell was involved in a case heard by U.S. Circuit Judge Robert Vance, killed last month when a package bomb sent through the mail exploded at his home near Birmingham.

O'Ferrell had sued Gulf Life Insurance Co. of Jacksonville, Fla., for firing him, disputing the company's claim that he held licenses with other insurance companies. O'Ferrell also claimed Gulf Life owed him commissions.

A federal judge in Montgomery dismissed the lawsuit in June 1988. Last April, Vance and two other judges on the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the lower court ruling in a one-page unsigned decision.

Local jobless rate drops

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Midland's unemployment rate dropped a full percentage point in December, according to figures released today by the Texas Employment Commission.

In December, the unemployment rate was 5.2 percent, down from 6.2 percent in November and from 5.3 percent in December 1988.

Odessa's unemployment rate was 6.2 percent, down from 7.6 percent in November and 6.7 percent in December a year ago.

However, there is some bad news hiding beneath the good, according to Labor Market Analyst Lorna Biar of the TEC's regional office in Midland. She said the improvement can't all be attributed to Christmas hiring, which usually lowers the rate in December.

"We're seeing a smaller labor force in December, which indicates people are leaving the labor market because they've become discouraged and are no longer seeking work," she said, adding that the same pattern was noticed throughout Texas.

Midland's total civilian labor force in December was 48,000, down from 48,600 in November and from 49,300 a year ago. Total employment dipped from 45,600 to 45,500 in December and from 46,700 a year ago. Total unemployed fell to 2[illegible]00 from 3,000 in November; it was 2,600 in December 1988.

Biar said the employment market was slow, despite an improving economy. "We don't see any new businesses coming in right now, or any expanding," she said.

In addition, she noted, "A pattern I've noticed in the past is that a lot of small businesses close their doors after the new year. They won't be hiring in December if they're going to close in January."

Midland's rate was good enough to rank it 10th among metropolitan statistical areas. Odessa was ranked 17th.

Bryan-College Station was first with 3.6 percent, followed by Lubbock with 4.3 percent and Austin with 4.4 percent. Amarillo and Dallas were tied at 4.6 percent; Victoria had 4.7 percent and Houston 4.9 percent. Next was Fort Worth-Arlington with 5 percent, and Abilene and Waco with 5.1 percent. McAllen-Edinburgh-Mission had the highest rate in the state, 16.8 percent.

The state unemployment rate was 5.8 percent in December, down from 6.9 percent in November and from 6.2 percent in December 1988. The state's labor force totaled 8,200,700 with total employment of 7,721,700, down 30,100. Total unemployment fell 96,000 to 479,000 from November to December.

Fair skies in forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

Fair skies are in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport, with the low in the middle 30s and winds from the northwest at 5-15 mph.

Wednesday is expected to be sunny and mild with the high reaching into the middle 60s and winds continuing from the northwest at 10-20 mph.

Monday's high of 71 was 12 degrees cooler than the record high of 83 set for this date in 1950. The overnight low of 53 was 46 degrees warmer than the record low of seven degrees set for this date in 1966.

STATE

A cold front moved southward across northern portions of the state, but was expected to produce very little rainfall and no significant temperature changes.

Some scattered showers were triggered along the front, but no significant rainfall was expected.

The front was located early today along a line from between Wichita Falls and Childress southwestward into the Permian Basin near Midland.

Forecasts called for mostly cloudy statewide through Wednesday except in the Panhandle where clouds will be decreasing.

Some isolated showers were reported during the pre-dawn hours in extreme South Texas. Some patchy fog developed early today along middle sections of the coastal plains.

NATION

Above-normal temperatures lingered in most of the nation today. Light snow fell from the upper Ohio Valley to central New England.

Rain today was forecast for Florida's southern tip and scattered across Arizona and New Mexico. By Wednesday, it was expected to be due east of the Appalachians. The Dakotas and Upper Great Lakes looked for snow.

Gusts up to 50 mph were expected along the eastern Rockies in Wyoming and Colorado.

A ridge of weak high pressure should churn through the Upper Midwest while a trough of low pressure shifts from the Rockies to the Plains, bringing clouds and precipitation.

Mild air from the Pacific was expected to keep temperatures in the heartland 10 to 20 degrees above normal, beneath cloudy skies.

Fog formed over valleys from California to Utah. An advisory for dense fog was in effect today for central parts of the San Joaquin Valley.

Monday was a placid mid-winter day. No major thunderstorms, heavy snow or record cold temperatures were reported.

In Florida on Monday, Hollywood tied the record high of 83 degrees and Miami's airport basked in its warmest Jan. 22 on record with 85 degrees.

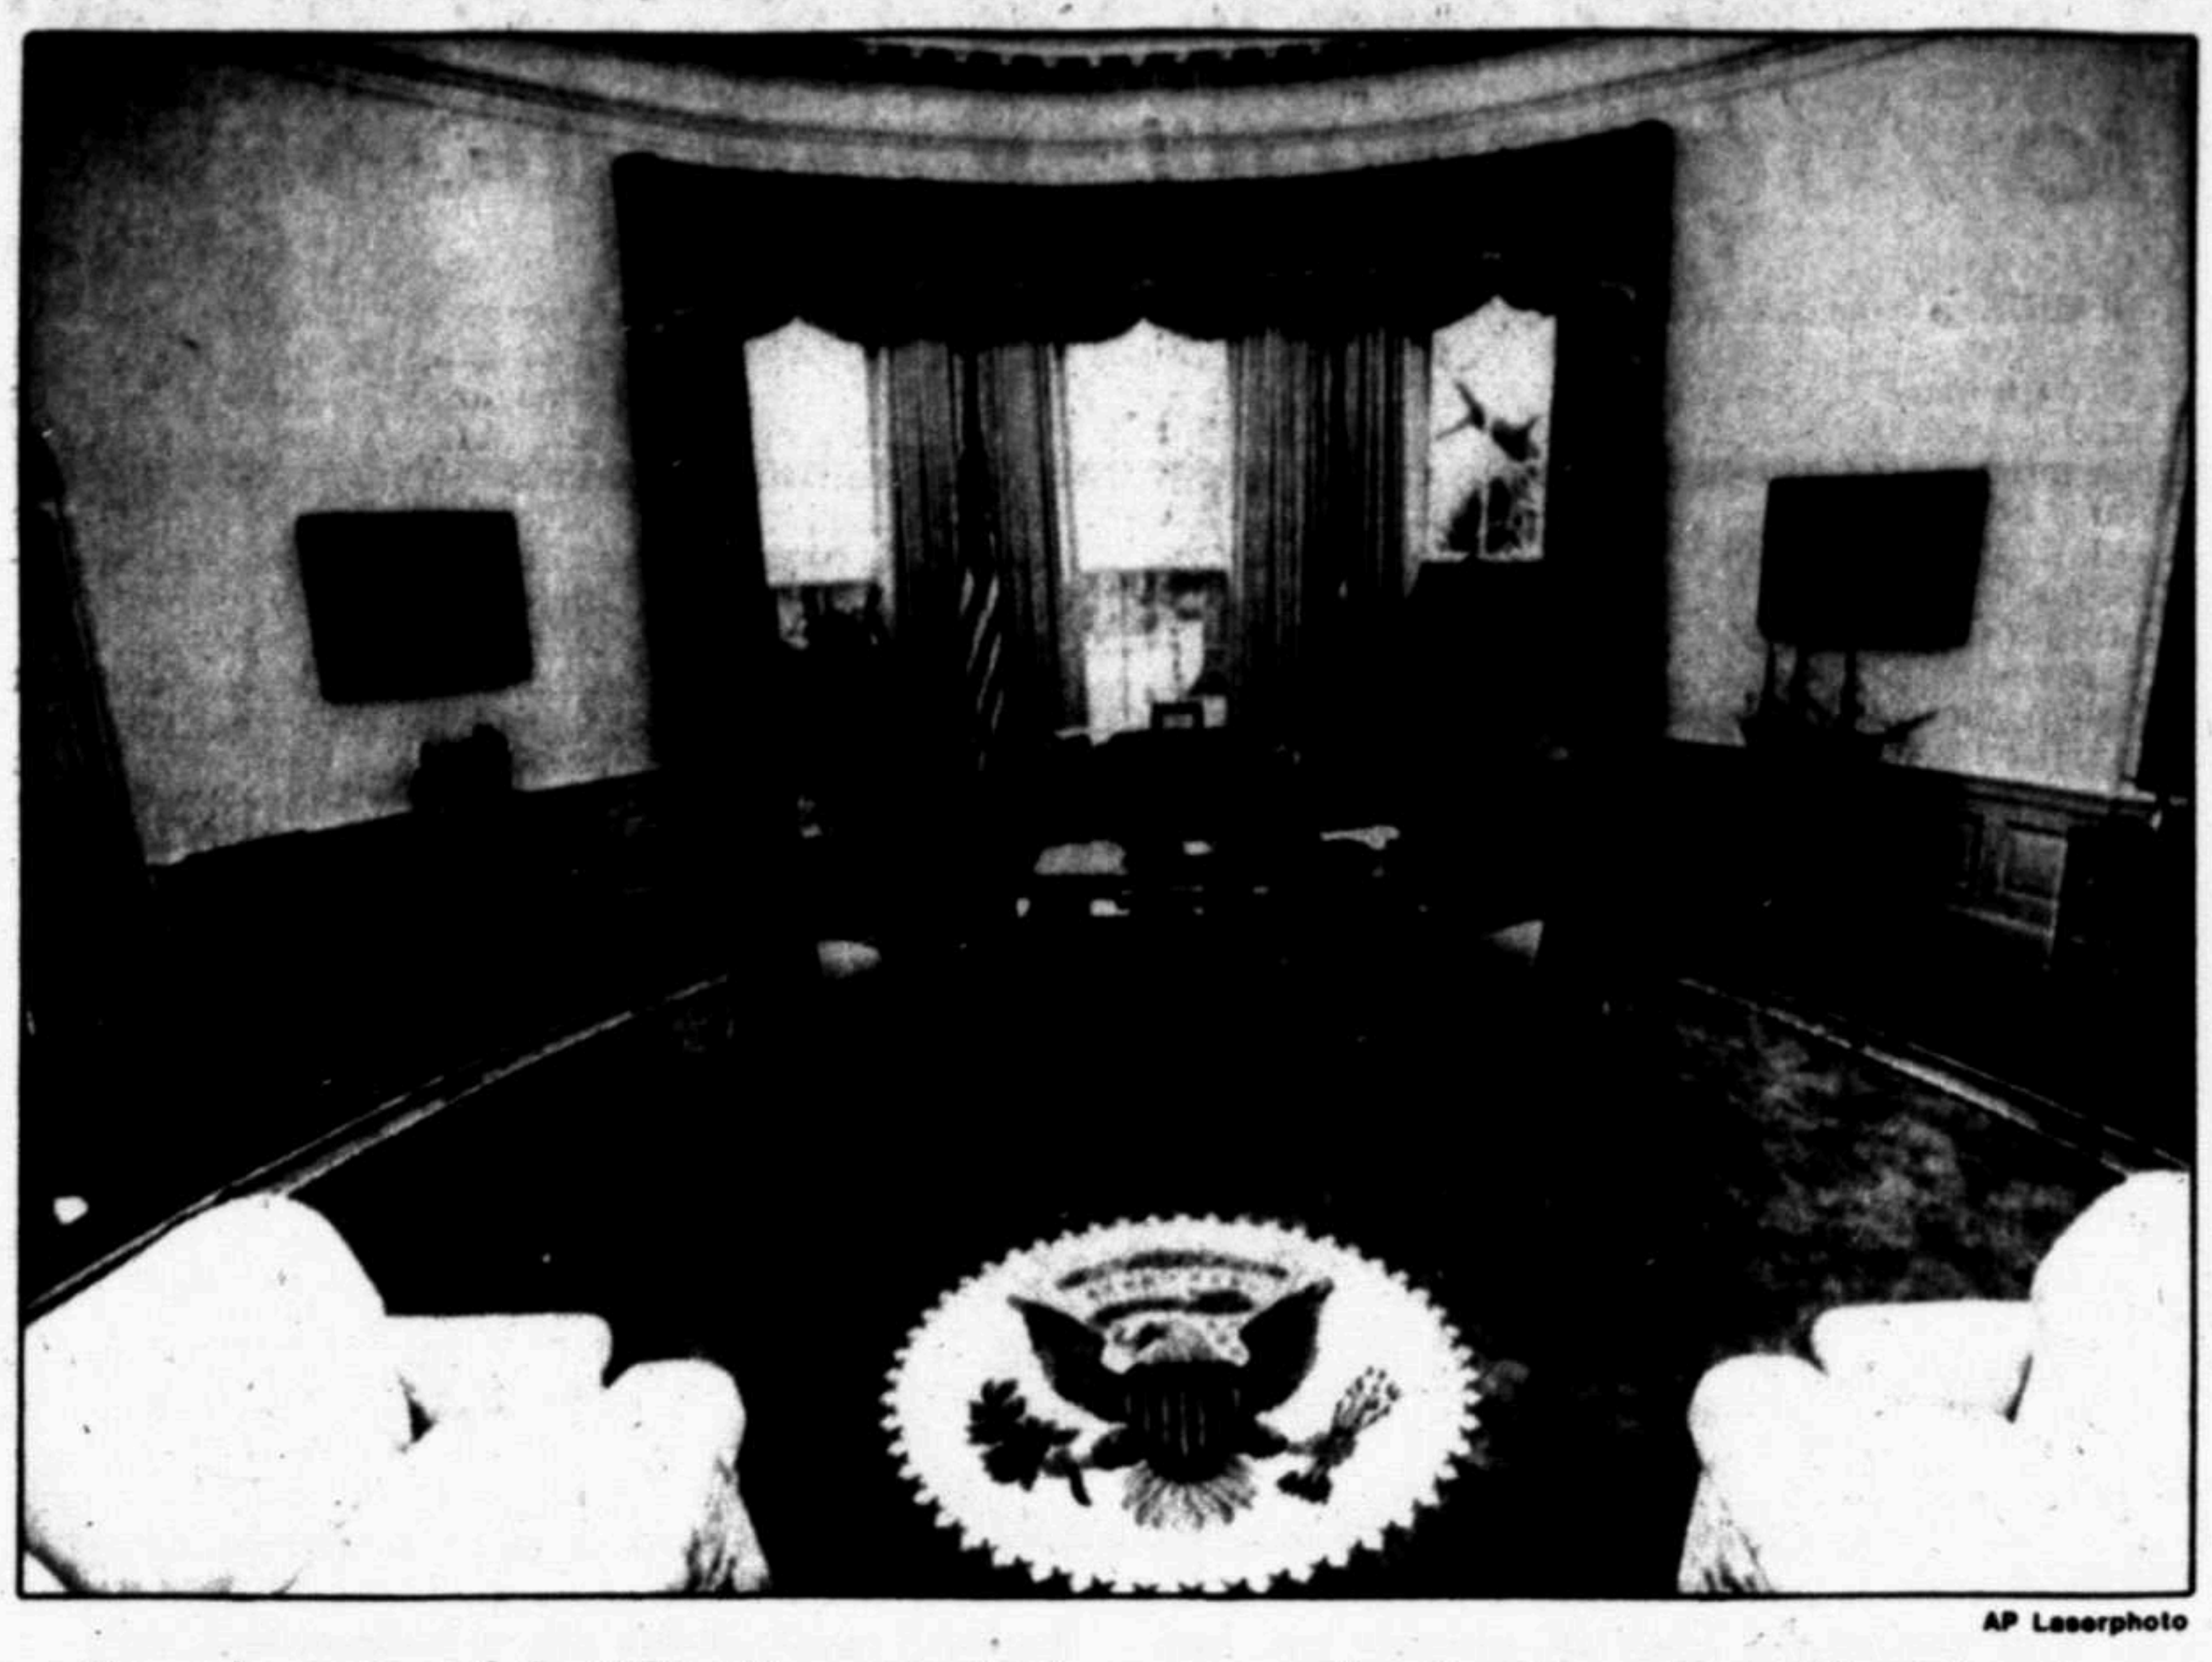
New rug tops Oval Office refurbishing



AP Laserphoto

The redecoration of the White House Oval Office has been completed with the installation of a new rug bearing the gold presidential seal, new draperies, a coffee table and two armchairs.

WASHINGTON (AP) — An expensive rug that Nancy Reagan helped design and left behind in the Oval Office as "an attractive asset" is now relegated to a government storeroom, supposedly because President Bush doesn't like it.

"It was not terribly attractive. The president did not like it," said Larry Hokanson, president of a Houston company that made a $28,550 rug as a replacement.

The new rug was installed on Friday as part of a $62,470 refurbishing of the Oval Office, which also included new draperies, a Chinese-style mahogany coffee table, reupholstered high-back armchairs and a pair of new, three-cushion sofas.

The funds were contributed by private donors.

The Reagan rug, two years in the design and making, had been purchased at a cost of $49,625 by an anonymous donor at Mrs. Reagan's request. The first lady had worked with the White House curator and White House Historical Association to design the rug and get a donor.

The rug, decorated with 40 custom-dyed colors with a predominant theme of peach, or coral, was installed in June 1988 while the Reagans were in Moscow. It replaced a 12-year-old rug.

White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater, the press secretary for both Reagan and Bush, had said 18 months ago that the Reagans "wanted to leave an asset to the White House and they felt this would be an attractive asset."

On Monday, Fitzwater said that Bush "is pleased with his new decorations ... I think they are beautiful."

"Most presidents put their own imprimatur on their office," said Alice Glen, White House deputy press secretary.

Mark Weinberg, a spokesman for the Reagans, declined comment about the replacement.

The new rug, made with the assistance of New York interior decorator Mark Hampton, measures 30 feet, 10 inches long by 23 feet, 5 inches wide. Like the old one, the new rug is oval.

"Normally, the designing process takes a couple months and the normal manufacturing time is about 16 to 18 weeks, but because of the prestige of this, we cut all that back to two weeks on designing and 2½ months on production," Hokanson said.

He said every stitch of the all-wool rug was done with a hand-guided, electric-powered needle and that 20 to 30 people were involved in the production and design.

The new rug has a gray-blue field that centers the coat-of-arms from the presidential seal, delineated in shades of gold on an ivory ground. There is a border of gold rods tied with blue ribbons, also on an ivory ground.

The White House statement said the border's design was "derived from the fasces, a classical Roman symbol of the governing authority which appears as the carved moldings above the Oval Office doorways."

After last November's salary referendum, where police officers and firefighters lost in their attempts to obtain a 10 percent pay hike, city officials agreed to seek more input from all city departments.

They recently visited the departments to field input on how to build morale and improve efficiency. Officials are considering a list of 20 suggestions for implementation.

Mayor Carroll Thomas at today's meeting commended the officers for their stand against collective bargaining and a civil service commission. Thomas also commended them for their work.

"We're very proud of them and we're very pleased," he said.

Thomas, though, agreed that there were many problems left to be solved.

"We're working very hard and diligently on those problems," he said. "We're going to have some solutions."

BARRY

When the meeting was over 14 of those present said their companies or groups would be willing to woo Jackson, while three others said they would support his candidacy if he enters the race, said the source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

And as Barry mulled his treatment options on Saturday, some of his closest political advisers and former assistants were meeting at the home of ex-city administrator Elijah Rogers to organize plans to get Jackson in the mayor's race.

Attending the meeting were Rogers, former Deputy Mayors Ivanhoe Donaldson and Alphonse Hill, former city official Courtland Cox and several others, said a source familiar with the meeting. Donaldson and Hill have served jail time for felony convictions in connection with their city government jobs.

Ms. Rackley said the mayor checked into the Hanley-Hazelden Treatment Center in West Palm Beach. She had said the day before that details about his health would be kept private but "the most serious problem is alcoholism."

The 60-bed Florida clinic is an affiliate of a Minnesota clinic that has treated more than 70,000 people since 1949, including Kitty Dukakis, wife of Gov. Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts. Its techniques were adopted by the better-known Betty Ford Clinic in Rancho Mirage, Calif.

The mayor was arrested Thursday and charged with misdemeanor possession of crack cocaine. He said Sunday he would take steps to "heal my body, mind and soul." Barry, who did not specifically refer to a drug or alcohol problem in his remarks, did not speak to reporters as he left home Monday accompanied by his wife Effi. She later left Florida.

Barry's plans to announce his candidacy Sunday for a fourth term as mayor of the nation's capital were abruptly canceled. He tested positive for cocaine in blood and urine tests administered after his arrest, officials said.

NAACP Executive Director Benjamin Hooks said Monday after meeting with President Bush that it appears to many blacks the Barry arrest was part of a pattern of singling out elected black officials for "selective enforcement of the law."

Meanwhile, the District of Columbia's non-voting delegate to Congress said Monday the drug charge against Barry deals a setback to the uphill fight to win statehood for the district.

But Del. Walter Fauntroy said Barry's arrest may ultimately work in the district's favor. "Members of Congress who would use a man who admittedly has a problem ... no longer have that excuse," he said.

Rep. Stan Parris of R-Va., a member of the House Appropriations subcommittee on the District of Columbia and a critic of the district government, said the mayor's arrest "cannot be beneficial to the statehood advocates. ... Clearly this sets that back."

Mail burned, driver killed in accident

GEORGETOWN, Texas (AP) — Austin postal officials today were checking to see how much mail burned in a fiery truck accident that left the driver dead.

The Williamson County Sheriff's office confirmed some mail on the rig, en route from San Antonio to Fort Worth, was destroyed Monday night.

State troopers say the north-south lanes of I-35 were closed today at Business Highway 81, after the crash.

The accident happened at about 9:30 p.m.

Investigators say the vehicle hit the center support of an overpass, just south of Georgetown. Officials say the recovered mail has been taken to Austin for examination.

The Atlanta Constitution, quoting unidentified federal sources, reported today that an agent reviewing files at the appeals court discovered correspondence from O'Ferrell that apparently matched typewritten letters from the bomber.

O'Ferrell's son-i-law, John Cauley, who lives with his wife on O'Ferrell's property, said agents asked family members about an old typewriter, but did not indicate why they were interested in it.

Cauley said he told them his father-in-law had several old typewriters at his business but none at home.

"They asked me all kinds of stuff, like if he knew about the letter bombs and if he was violent," Cauley said. "I told them he wasn't violent and that he couldn't hurt anybody."

Cauley said O'Ferrell never mentioned the mail-bombings when they happened.

Package bombs sent through the mail exploded and killed Vance on Dec. 16 and a black lawyer, Robert Robinson of Savannah, Ga., two days later. Other mailed bombs were defused at the 11th Circuit courthouse in Atlanta and the NAACP office in Jacksonville, Fla.

The FBI has said one or more white racists appeared to be behind the attacks. One agent said a possible profile of the bomber was a man in his 50s not connected with any white supremacist group. Wayne O'Ferrell's name is not in a file of white hate group members kept by the Klanwatch program of the Southern Poverty Law Center in Montgomery, director Morris Dees said today.

RULE

Officials from other parts of Texas are showing interest in SPEC, with representatives of Falls County near Waco saying they planned to join the coalition Monday, Ms. Garner said.

EPA officials were receptive when SPEC representatives traveled to Washington, D.C., two weeks ago to plea for variances in the regulations, she said.

"It went well," Ms. Garner said. "They said they were going to have to look at sparsely populated areas. They said they were going to look at some variances, but they didn't know what the population cutoff was going to be."

She said agency officials appeared to be leaning toward a population cutoff of between 5,000 and 10,000. However, Ms. Garner said 15,000 would be more ideal.

Possible revisions in EPA landfill regulations are not expected to be finalized until late April or early May, she said. State agencies then would have 18 months to implement the rules and use them as mandatory base guidelines for developing their own regulations.

But some municipalities are running out of space in their landfills, Ms. Garner said.

Rather than waiting almost two years for possible EPA revisions to be implemented, SPEC representatives are lobbying for the approval of Stenholm's bill.

The legislation would grant variances from the EPA guidelines and give state-level regulatory agencies nationwide more flexibility to deal with landfill permits on a case-by-case basis, Ms. Garner said.

Martin County Judge Bob Deavenport said if variances are not granted, SPEC members may consider building a regional landfill.

Officials have been discussing the idea since the EPA regulations were issued, Deavenport added.

"I think it's basically on hold," he said. "There's not any money available for a study. There are many unknowns."

It would cost more than $200,000 for a study of the landfill's construction and where it should be located, Deavenport said.

Meanwhile, Midland City Council already has approved allowing the city of Rankin to dump garbage in Midland's landfill for $11 a ton.

Assistant City Manager Keith Stretcher said between 12 and 15 tons of Rankin trash a week are deposited in Midland's landfill, which averages about 1,750 buried a week.

Stanton and Iraan officials also have expressed an interest in dumping here, Stretcher said. "Our landfill is going to last for some time," he said.

However, Midland officials may have to start turning away towns if too many of them want to use the city's landfill, Stretcher said.

Was human life just an afterthought?

Copley News Service

Life isn't getting any better, events don't happen for logical reasons and there is no such thing as progress.

That is the gist of Harvard biologist Stephen Jay Gould's recent speech on human superstitions at the University of California at San Francisco.

Gould says humans think all of history was just preparation for their arrival. What humans really don't want to hear, he says, is that we are simply an afterthought in the scheme of life.

And there is really no such thing as adaptation by a species, says Gould, not even with humans. Life, says Gould, is simply an explosive, mass introduction of species and then their extinction.

Guerrilla switches allegiance to Afghan army for money

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — With four wives, hashish-smoking bodyguards, a black beard and turban to match, Amir Said Ahmad doesn't look much like a general in Afghanistan's army.

Ahmad

Clutching a Soviet-made AK-47 automatic rifle, he resembles a Moslem guerrilla warrior. Two years ago, he wa one.

But after fighting the government and the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan for eight years, Ahmad switched sides and became a general in the forces he once fought.

Ideology was not the reason, he said. For Ahmad, it was a question of who was going to pay him the most and leave him alone.

"I don't go with anyone forever," he said in an interview in his expansive guest house in Kabul. "I only go with the one who works for my men. When that stops, I switch sides."

In exchange for his pledge of allegiance to President Najib, Ahmad was made a general in Afghanistan's military, a member of Parliament and given arms, food and hundreds of thousands of dollars a month for him and his 3,000 men. The government also promised that his militia group, which controls parts of Herat province in the west, could continue its business activities there.

A new Mercedes Benz car and the Kabul guest house were thrown in for good measure.

"I don't know how much money I have but I have too much," Ahmad said with a smile. A circle of heavily armed men surrounding the bearded general clucked approvingly. The chocolate-like smell of hashish filled the room.

Ahmad is just one of dozens of former guerrilla commanders who have left the U.S.-backed mujahedeen, as the guerrillas are known, and joined the government since Najib announced his "national reconciliation" policy two years ago.

The policy combines elements of a return to the traditional Afghan way of solving problems with the "united front" policy used by Communist parties in trouble.

In the traditional relationship, tribes pledged loyalty to a central government while retaining autonomy in their local affairs. The "united front" has been traditionally used by Communist parties that cannot control a country by themselves. With this strategy, they unite with whomever they can, gain control and then go after their old allies.

The policy is an about-face for the ruling People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan, which came to power in 1978 and attempted to exert central control over the country and institute a communist revolution.

In other areas as well, Najib's "national reconciliation" has halted Afghanistan's communist experiment. Government monopolies on fuel and sugar transportation were lifted recently and the state issued a plea to all private traders to help feed the people during the winter, when food is scarce because of the weather and the war. The government now denies it is communist. Kabul's mayor, hardline Marxist Abdul Hakim Misaq, recently said even that traffickers in stolen goods would not be prosecuted as long as they got the pilfered goods to the market.

Diplomats in Kabul, mostly from the Soviet bloc or non-aligned countries, said the government's attempt to placate the powerful militias by allowing them to keep their weapons might replace one problem, civil war, with another, lawlessness. Indeed, the Afghan tribes are no longer armed with flintlock rifles; heavy weapons fill their mountain strongholds.

"I have tanks, armored personnel carriers, rockets, mortars and bombs," Ahmad said with a great grin. "If things get difficult, I can get airplanes, fighter jets, you name it.

"In my territory, I am the boss."

In Herat, Ahmad is called Amir, which means prince or lord. His group owns several villages and the largest cement factory in the province, giving them an effective monopoly on the local construction industry.

They also man checkpoints on the main provincial road and, along with other militia groups, demand payments of food or money from trucks in exchange for safe passage.

In Kabul, an Afghan doctor said she treats dozens of gunshot wounds a month, many of them inflicted by militiamen.

"It's like your Wild West," said the American-trained physician, speaking on condition of anonymity. "These men all want to be cowboys."

Ahmad's family has lived in Herat for generations. After the 1978 revolution, the government attempted to break the power of local lords like the Ahmad family and launched a radical policy of land reform.

Many of the lords went to war. Ahmad joined the mujahedeen, which means Islamic holy warriors, in their fight to overthrow the government.

The bidding

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Five of ♥

If you empathize with these writers, you have an innate distaste for mathematics. While there are some bridge hands that require detailed calculation to find the best line, by and large you can get by with logic. For example, how would you plan to make three no trump on this hand?

It requires only elementary arithmetic to arrive at the right contract. North adds his 10 points to South's announced minimum of 16, and the total is enough to bid game, with the five-card club suit as a kicker.

After the opening lead of the five of hearts, you can count eight sure tricks. Declarer decided his combined eight-card club suit offered the best shot, so he won the heart in hand and finessed the nine of clubs. When that lost to the ten and a heart came back, West ducked and the contract had no play as the cards lay. As soon as declarer surrendered a trick, the defenders would be able to take three heart tricks to set the hand.

Even if West held the ten of clubs, the contract would not be guaranteed. That defender would have to hold at least one of the high clubs as well for the contract to succeed.

Now look at the spade suit. Suppose declarer were to win the first trick in dummy and immediately finesse in spades. West would take the trick and return a low heart. Declarer would win, cross to the table with a diamond and repeat the spade finesse. Since East holds the other honor, the contract is home.

Let's examine the cases rationally. For the club suit to yield a second trick quickly, declarer must find two cards right. For spades to work, one card favorably placed is all that's needed. Enough said.

Milli Vanilli, Randy Travis win 3 American Music Awards trophies

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The upstart dance music duo Milli Vanilli and country crooner Randy Travis topped the 17th annual American Music Awards with three trophies each.

Janet Jackson, Bobby Brown, Paula Abdul, M.C. Hammer, New Kids On The Block and Guns N' Roses won two awards each.

Nominees were compiled from year-end charts in the music industry trade publication Cash Box. Winners were selected by 20,000 members of the public chosen on the basis of age, sex, geographic location and ethnicity.

Milli Vanilli, an international duo with a lively pop sound capitalizing on dance trends crossing different music styles, beat stiff competition during the three-hour show broadcast live on ABC-TV Monday night at the Shrine Auditorium.

The duo won favorite new pop-rock artist over critically acclaimed rockers Living Colour and the all-star collaboration of The Traveling Wilburys.

They also upstaged Bon Jovi's "I'll Be There For You" and Gloria Estefan's "Don't Wanna Lose You" to win the pop-rock single trophy with "Girl You Know It's True."

Milli Vanilli, also the favorite new soul-rhythm & blues artist, dedicated their crystal obelisk trophies to the stirrings of freedom in Eastern Europe.

"We want to say that this is a symbol of freedom and peace in the world and for East and West Germany," Rob Pilatus, a member of the duo and a native West German, said backstage.

Travis claimed all three awards in the country category, defeating George Strait and Hank Williams Jr. for favorite male vocalist and besting Alabama's "If I Had You" and Strait's "Baby's Gotten Good at Goodbye" for favorite single with his "Deeper Than The Holler."

Travis' "Old 8 X 10" LP was the favorite country album.

Miss Jackson, sister of pop superstar Michael Jackson, won for her "Miss You Much" single in both the dance and soul-rhythm and blues categories.

Miss Abdul, the vivacious ex-cheerleader for the Los Angeles Lakers, won two of four nominations: female pop-rock vocalist and favorite dance artist.

Teeny bop sensation New Kids On The Block won the pop-rock album trophy for the "Hangin' Tough" LP and also were named favorite pop-rock group.

"Appetite for Destruction" gave Guns N' Roses the heavy metal album award. The group also was the favorite heavy metal artist. Favorite rap artist M.C. Hammer's "Let's Get It Started" was the top rap album.

Up against the fancy footwork of De La Soul and equally mobile Soul II Soul, the less flashy Tone Loc claimed favorite new dance artist.

Brown, whose slick and sexy vocals earned him five nominations, won two: male pop-rock vocalist and favorite soul-R&B album for "Don't Be Cruel."

Young M.C. claimed the favorite new rap artist award.

In other country music awards, Alabama was the favorite group, Clint Black won the new artist trophy and Reba McEntire won female vocalist.

Luther Vandross beat Brown and rock superstar Prince for soul-R&B male vocalist, and Anita Baker won female vocalist in that category.

Skid Row captured the award for new heavy metal band.

Prince won a special achievement award for influencing "the look and sounds of the 1980s" through writing, performing, recording and movies.

Singer and songwriter Neil Diamond received a special merit award recognizing "outstanding contributions over a long period of time to the musical entertainment of the American public."

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — Rock musician Frank Zappa, whose recordings include many cynical comments on American consumerism, carried a similar outlook to this former Communist capital.

Zappa

Asked by Czechoslovak television what he thought of communism after the dramatic democratic changes that have occurred in much of Eastern Europe, Zappa replied with acid brevity — "The same."

Zappa on Monday met a fellow maverick, Vaclav Havel, the formerly banned playwright who became president of Czechoslovakia last month.

Zappa, who has a cult following in Czechoslovakia, arrived Sunday at the invitation of Michael Kocab, a rock musician and member of Parliament.

NEW YORK (AP) — Mayor David Dinkins may take on the role of "a big-city mayor" in a cameo television appearance.

Dinkins on Monday said that two new series — "Law and Order" on NBC, starring Michael Moriarty, and ABC's "H.E.L.P.," starring John Mahoney — would be shot in the city.

"The producers of 'H.E.L.P.' have requested the services of a fledgling New York actor — and so I have agreed to make a cameo appearance in one episode of the series," he said.

Dick Wolf, producer of both series, said, "We had in mind a big city mayor. He'll be playing himself."

"H.E.L.P." is about the people who respond to 911 emergency calls. "Law and Order" tells how police establish a case against someone and then how it is handled by prosecutors.

MARIETTA, Ga. (AP) — Television evangelist Jimmy Swaggart preached and sang against "rotten filthy corruptness" to more than 1,000 people but urged the congregation not to pass judgment on AIDS patients.

Swaggart

During the 2½-hour service Sunday night at Gospel Harvester Church, Swaggart said that "all of us had spiritual AIDS."

Swaggart was invited by the pastor, the Rev. Allan Mushegan, who is managing a three-day Swaggart crusade scheduled for Atlanta in mid-February.

Before Swaggart's 1988 confession of immorality, his Baton Rouge, La.-based television ministry reached more than 2 million households. It now reaches about 800,000.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Entertainer Charlie Daniels says his song "Simple Man," which suggests lynching drug dealers and using child abusers for alligator bait, isn't a reflection of his convictions.

"Obviously I'm being facetious with the song," Daniels said in a recent interview at his ranch near Nashville. "I certainly don't think we should string anybody up from a tree or leave people out in the swamp."

The man who used to sing about being "stoned in the morning" and "drunk in the afternoon" said the song does reflect a change in his attitudes.

"The way I put it is, people tell me, 'Well, you used to be that way,' and I say, 'Yeah, you used to wear diapers but you don't any more,'" Daniels said.

Barry's arrest could help nation

With Washington, D.C. Mayor Marion Barry caught smoking crack, the capital city has finally achieved the "statehood" that it never dreamed would happen — as the nation's most publicized state of crime and corruption.

Barry's arrest puts statehood for the District on a long hold, perhaps for a generation and maybe longer. It even threatens the District's current home rule which has been struggling to survive severe criticism.

The New York Times wrote in a front-page news analysis that Barry's arrest "has solidified for Washington a reputation as unsavory as Chicago's 60 years ago in the era of submachine guns and bootleggers." The record-breaking numbers of murders and drug arrests continue to mount.

In his defense, it is said that Barry presided over economic growth in Washington. While that's correct, Washington has also grown because companies have moved staffs there since so much influence is for sale in the Congress. Congress is one of the major causes of more money and investment. Members have demonstrably been on the take for some time.

The drug-exporting nations of Latin America and elsewhere are right when they say America must clean up its own act.

We respond by invading Panama to seize Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, a drug merchant, and by attempting to station warships off Colombia, announcing a new military effort against drugs and creating a new drug-busting intelligence network. All were justifiable actions.

Much of this is public relations, suggesting we are acting quickly. The real road is the one which Barry apparently is choosing — to get treatment and education here at home. While that doesn't excuse his past actions, it at least points a way for the nation to deal more effectively with its own drug problem.

Barry wrecked his career, but he may have saved this country from its wrong path of placing so much emphasis on foreign sources. The cause, as Barry knows, is in our own hearts and bodies.

Another View:

First target, the sewer

When Congress reconvenes this week, it will have no more important task than to clean up financing of its election campaigns. Chastened by scandal, House and Senate leaders say they will act, and powerful remedies are available: tight limits on contributions and spending and public funding in place of special-interest millions.

Good. Excellent, in fact. But even if these reforms are enacted swiftly and completely, they will collapse into pretty piety unless the members reform something else first: sewer money.

SEWER MONEY. It sounds like an overheated editorial-page metaphor for what politicians blandly call soft money. But consider the phenomenon in question — big money from favor-seekers pumped into state parties to circumvent federal campaign limits, much of which flows back to benefit federal candidates. What else is a sewer but an underground pipe that drains off noxious wastes? Any system that permits sewer money to continue undermines itself.

The issue arose dramatically in the 1988 presidential race. George Bush and Michael Dukakis each received $46.1 million in public campaign funds. But each raised about $50 million in private contributions, much of it in amounts and from sources that federal law appears to ban. Ostensibly, the money was for generic "party-building," not for the national ticket, so the limp Federal Election Commission winks at the practice. But the sewer money paid for field operations and get-out-the-vote drives, freeing funds for TV ads. Sewer money would, just as surely, undermine reform of congressional campaign financing.

There's bipartisan reason to hope, finally, that Congress will act honorably. George Mitchell, the Senate majority leader, joining Sen. David Boren and other Democrats, has proposed a far-reaching reform that would bar sewer money in all federal elections. It's a solid start that challenges Senate Republicans to stop mumbling.

In the House, party roles are reversed. The Republicans, led by the minority leader, Robert Michel, are already on record in favor of a sewer-money ban. Speaker Thomas Foley and other top Democrats, meanwhile, have lagged in embracing a ban.

It's a situation in which President Bush could weigh in effectively. But he calls only for full disclosure and marginal reform. That means the energy for real reform must come from members tired of fund-raising and tired of the smell.

Bush's stand on Iran too wishy-washy

WASHINGTON — George Bush's Achilles' heel is Iran. A foray into Panama gives him the temporary aura of tough guy. But a dozen forays into banana republics won't change the fact that when it comes to Iran, Bush is a pushover.

Jack Anderson

He talks conciliation with Iran while that country continues its reign of terror. Last September, Iranian-sponsored terrorists blew up a French plane killing 171 people, including seven Americans, one of whom was the wife of a U.S. ambassador.

That is the most recent Iranian atrocity, but in terms of numbers, it pales beside the explosion of Pan Am flight 103, which killed 259 New York-bound passengers and 11 people on the ground in Lockerbie, Scotland.

In the more than a year since the tragedy, the Bush administration has amassed enough information to pin blame on a terrorist hired by Iran. But Bush is waiting for more proof. As a candidate, Bush promised to bring terrorists to swift justice. As president, Bush has let the months wear on while sending out the word that absolutely conclusive evidence is needed before he will even denounce those responsible for the downing of Pan Am 103, let alone bring them to justice.

For the families of the dead, this foot-dragging is beginning to look less like due process and more like political expediency, especially when the United States is paying money to Iranian families who lost someone in the accidental downing by the USS Vincennes of an Iranian airliner in 1988.

One anguished family member of a Pan Am victim wrote directly to Bush seeking answers. We have seen Bush's private response dated Nov. 22. It was an expression of sympathy and a whitewash of Iran.

"Unfortunately, the Pan Am 103 investigation has gone on for some time and is, by no means, completed," Bush wrote. "However, new and important information continues to be found. As a result, we are not yet ready to bring charges against anyone, and I am certainly not prepared to order government action based on the information we currently have. I wish it were otherwise, but such investigations take time, and we must take care in this important work."

Then came the apology for Iran, which hearkens back to the same excuses Ronald Reagan gave for trading arms for hostages. Bush wrote, "Regarding Iran, as I have said before, we are working to draw that country back into the community of nations from which it has excluded itself for the last decade. This is a gradual and deliberate policy. However, it can only be completed when Iran changes its behavior by securing the release of U.S. hostages and ending its support for terrorism."

This rhetoric has the odor of expediency. Bush says the investigation isn't "completed." But the secret communications between Bush and Iranian President Hashemi Rafsanjani may have something to do with how soon, if ever, it is completed. If Iran helps secure the release of American hostages, thereby signaling its return to "the community of nations," the Pan Am 103 investigation is likely never to pin the blame on Iran.

Bush's big problem is that the hundreds of living victims of Pan Am 103 will not go away.

Our own investigation has turned up more reason for the Pan Am families to mistrust their own government. We recently reported that Bush and British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher made a secret deal last spring to publicly downplay the evidence pointing to Iran because both agreed they could do nothing about it. They agreed to keep mum, and use as their excuse that the investigation wasn't completed.

For the families, that excuse is wearing thin.

MINI-EDITORIAL — The Bush administration has a short memory. Bush has appointed Richard Hohlt, the chief lobbyist for the savings and loan industry, to a paid part-time job on the board of the Student Loan Marketing Association. To refresh Bush's memory, Hohlt, in his job as an industry lobbyist, led the fight against reforming savings and loans when they were being run like federally insured casinos. The student loan agency needs Hohlt like it needs more defaults.

CHARLEY REESE

Common sense tells us handgun accidents low

More often than not Americans are propagandized rather than informed. One form of propaganda is simply endless repetition of a lie or false statement.

Charley Reese

One such example is the statement: people who purchase a handgun for self-defense are endangering themselves more than the criminal. This crops up endlessly among those leading the charge to deny Americans their constitutional right to keep and bear arms.

People with common sense could by logic see that this is false. Fatal gun accidents — all types of guns, all types and ages of people including cops, military and hunters — are such a small number, 1,645 in 1985 — compared to the number of privately owned guns (47 million handguns and 156 million guns of all types) that the statement could not possibly be true. Moreover, in recent years, as gun ownership has increased, the number of gun fatalities has decreased — absolutely, not just in relative terms.

Now we have a genuine social study by a genuine sociologist published in a genuine sociology periodical (Social Problems, Vol. 35, No. 1, Feb. 1988) to verify with scholarly research the common sense observation.

Let me print for you the summary of this lengthy article by Gary Kleck, a criminologist at Florida State University.

"Legal defensive violence by private citizens armed with firearms is a significant form of social control in the United States. Evidence indicates that private gun use against violent criminals and burglars is common and about as frequent as legal actions like arrests (and) is a more prompt negative consequence of crime than legal punishment and is often more severe.

"In 1980, about 1,500 to 2,000 felons were legally killed by gun-wielding civilians, about 8,700 to 16,000 were nonfatally wounded and guns were used defensively about one million times. Survey and quasi-experimental evidence is consistent with the hypothesis that the private ownership and use of firearms deters criminal behavior."

Kleck adds considerable statistics and details: people who defend themselves with guns against robberies and assaults foil the criminal and suffer fewer injuries than people who respond in any other fashion, including non-resistance.

Of course, the propagandists and the simple-minded idiots who are their faithful allies will ignore the facts and continue to repeat the lie. Lies, however, cannot be converted to truth by repetition.

Here again, common sense verifies the scholarly research, which includes many surveys and interviews. Crime is a personal confrontation between the criminal and the victim. If the criminal is armed and the victim is unarmed, then the victim will suffer whatever the criminal wishes to inflict — indignity, injury, rape or death, and that's that. If the criminal and the victim are unarmed, but the victim cannot physically overpower the criminal, ditto.

Defending yourself with a gun is not without risk, but it is a lot less risky than doing nothing. Kleck's study found that only 12 percent of gun resisters in assault and 17 percent in robberies suffered any kind of injury whereas of those who did not resist at all, 25 percent of the robbery victims and 27 percent of assault victims were injured.

The men who wrote the Declaration of Independence and the Bill of Rights were not fools, as are many journalists and lawyers today. They would not have argued that people have a natural right to life and liberty but no right to possess the means of defending both.

That's why the right of private citizens to keep and bear arms comes immediately after the right of free speech, press, assembly, petition and religion. One right protects the others. Ask the Panamanians and Romanians.

PEGGY ROBERSON

Bentsen, Martin learned about Congress together

WASHINGTON — Celia Hare Martin was a reporter on the McAllen Monitor in 1948 when her publisher suggested to newly-elected Rep. Lloyd Bentsen that he hire her to work in his Washington office.

Peggy Roberson

Bentsen hesitated, according to Martin, saying, "She has no experience as a secretary." The publisher may have clinched her appointment when he reminded Bentsen, "And you have no experience as a congressman, either."

The two learned about Congress together. At the beginning, the 26-year-old Texas Democrat was just a year older than the constitutional age requirement for House membership. Martin, a blonde widow with a small daughter, was two years older.

She served Bentsen until 1954 when he returned to Texas to go into business. Then she stayed on in the office, serving his Democratic successors, former Rep. Joe Kilgore, who continues to practice law in McAllen, and, for the past quarter of a century, Rep. E. "Kika" de la Garza, also of McAllen.

Martin decided to retire last year after spending three months confined to bed because of an unsuccessful hip operation.

In an interview last week at her spacious apartment — crammed with treasures collected on her travels and decorated in "early second-hand" with exquisite "scavenged" furniture — Martin talked about some of the highlights of her 41-year career as a top-level congressional aide.

When she came to Congress, few women held the top job on members' staffs, but Martin said she has always been the person in charge. In De la Garza's office, the white-haired and stylish Martin has been not only the administrative assistant, but also the press secretary.

Bentsen's first staff consisted of four persons — three "clerks" and Martin, whose title was "secretary." De la Garza now employs eight in his office and dozens more on the Agriculture Committee, which he chairs. Most members today have 18-22 people on their staffs with titles like legislative director, casework supervisor and computer-mail specialist.

"In the old days, you became acquainted with more people," Martin said. "But nowadays everybody has his own bathroom. You have no idea how those open bathrooms helped people get acquainted."

Then, people smiled and waved as they walked the marble halls outside her office. "Every evening this great big ol' boy would pass the office. One day he came in and said, 'Why is a good-lookin' Irish Catholic girl like you working for these Methodists from Texas?'"

She assured him that she "wouldn't leave Texas for anything!"

"'When you reconsider,' he said, 'come to see me. My name is Tip O'Neill.'"

Former Rep. Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill, D-Mass., who became speaker of the House, was "a big, lumbering Irishman, the cutest man on earth," she said.

During her first year here, Martin lived with relatives in Virginia and hitched a ride with a man who commuted to Baltimore so she arrived at the office before 7 a.m.

"This cute blond man would come by about that time every day," she recalls. "One day he came in to ask if I had a match. He asked if Bentsen made me come to work so early. I told him, 'Mr. Bentsen hasn't the slightest idea I'm here at this time.'"

He noted that she didn't have a Texas accent and she revealed that she had been reared in Michigan and was an adopted Texan. He said he was from Michigan, too, and worked for Jerry Ford. Martin asked him if Ford required him to come to work early.

"And he said, 'Jerry Ford is awful, a taskmaster, won't let you get by with anything, and I have to come to work early.'" She sympathized and said, "I didn't get your name." He replied: "Jerry Ford."

Ford wasn't the only future president Martin knew. Richard M. Nixon, a California representative, frequently was on her floor to visit Ford. "But he wasn't friendly."

"I walked to Mass regularly with Jack Kennedy, over to St. Peter's Church," she said.

Martin first met De la Garza when he was a newspaper delivery boy in McAllen. He came to Congress in 1965 and is "the nicest man anybody would ever want to know," she said.

De la Garza's constituents appear to believe that "Kika can fix anything," Martin said. But she added that her saddest memories are of desperate calls from destitute residents in the Rio Grande Valley whose crops had been frozen or flooded. Then, all De la Garza could do was ask for federal disaster aid on their behalf.

Martin, who never remarried after her husband's death, reared her daughter in Washington. Her daughter, who lives in Pennsylvania, has given her two grandchildren, "the greatest children on the face of God's earth."

In her Georgetown apartment, where she has lived since 1949, a maid prepares her meals, does her shopping and cleaning, and a hairdresser comes when called, along with friends and helpers who make her life pleasant. She hopes to be able to walk again in the near future.

Next Thursday, in her public speaking debut, Martin will address the members of the Texas Breakfast Club here. She plans to "hobble in" on her walker, "prop up" and talk about her adventures on "The Hill."

"A lot of people are critical of Congress, but they don't really understand it," she says. "They judge all of Congress by the bad actions of a few. But, for the most part, Congress is made up of people who work darned hard."

Yugoslav communists split; Slovenians planning new party

WORLD

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — The country's Communist leaders failed today to reunite their fractured party after delegates from liberal-minded Slovenia stormed out of a party congress and said they would form a new party.

The move threatened the unity of the ethnically diverse and economically troubled Yugoslav federation.

Slovenian party spokeman Peter Bekes said his republic's delegation would establish an "independent party on the basis of democratic socialism" at a regional party conference on Feb. 2.

The dramatic walkout came as delegates were preparing for a final vote on a reform document that would relinquish the party's 45-year monopoly on power.

But the vote never came and the congress was forced to adjourn late Monday — a day ahead of schedule — with no date set for a new session.

Leading Slovenian Communist Milan Kucan told journalists that the breakup of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia, the official name of the ruling party, "is the only possible consequence of this action."

In announcing the Slovenian decision, regional party leader Ciril Ribicic said the congress had failed to accept any of his delegation's proposals.

The delegates from the relatively prosperous northern republic wanted a declaration of greater autonomy for the country's six republics, a promise to end persecution of political opponents and greater cooperation with the West.

"We are not going to take part in the agony of the Communist Party in Yugoslavia," he said, and the entire Slovenian delegation grimly left the hall.

Slovenia is to hold the country's first multiparty elections in March and its moves toward democracy and tolerance of dissent are opposed by hard-liners such as the leaders of the Serbian republic, the country's most populous.

Serbia's president, Slobodan Milosevic, took the podium after the walkout and said the suspension of the congress would mean that "the party would be practically disbanded and decapitated."

He said this could have "grave consequences for the Communist Party and future of the country."

The Serbian leadership opposes doing away with central economic planning and Milosevic seeks to impose stronger central control on the republics. Some critics say he deliberately sought a showdown with the Slovenians to deflect attention from his economic and political failures.

The Serbians comprise 9 million of the country's 23 million people and many consider themselves Yugoslavia's ethnic core. Slovenia has a population of 2 million.

Party President Milan Pancevski, speaking to tired delegates early today after the party's leadership failed in a four-hour emergency session to end the crisis, called on regional party bodies to work for a solution.

The congress broke down after it cast a preliminary vote early Monday in favor of relinquishing the party's monopoly on power.

The Slovenians complained that hard-liners had watered down key reform points in the document. They criticized those who voted against abolishing all laws allowing the persecution of political opponents.

They also complained about delegates' scrapping of a statement that backed seeking membership in European organizations.

2 Azerbaijan soldiers, woman bystander killed in gunfire

MOSCOW (AP) — A military convoy was ambushed in Azerbaijan and two soldiers and a woman bystander were killed by gunfire, official media said today. The KGB said the republic was on the brink of chaos and anarchy.

Hopes for an end to 10 days of ethnic strife between Armenia and Azerbaijan arose Monday when Communist Party and government officials from the southern republics agreed to withdraw militias from border areas and end clashes between militants.

But Radio Moscow reported today the situation in Baku remained "complex" — a Russian euphemism that can signify widespread unrest. It said the military commander in Baku, Azerbaijan's capital, vowed that his troops would stop further attacks.

Anti-Armenian riots and killings in Baku on Jan. 13 ignited ethnic warfare between Azerbaijanis and Armenians. Azerbaijanis have since threatened to secede from the Soviet Union.

Soviet troops smashed their way into Baku on Saturday to quell the nationalist uprising, and Soviet officials said the assault left 83 dead, including 14 soldiers and members of their families.

On Monday, wailing, Azerbaijanis marched through the Caspian Sea port city of 1.8 million to mourn those killed when the Soviet troops moved in. Radio Moscow said anti-army and anti-Russian sentiments were being whipped up by "irresponsible people" sending threatening unsigned letters and making anonymous phone calls.

The radio, in a broadcast monitored in London by the British Broadcasting Corp., said troops sent to Azerbaijan came under fire four times Monday and overnight, including an armed attack on a convoy of recently demobilized servicemen also carrying women.

Baku Radio, also monitored by the BBC, said two soldiers and a woman bystander were killed in that attack.

"The extremists are thus continuing their criminal activities," Baku's military commander, Lt. Gen. Vladimir Dubinyak, was quoted by the Azerbaijani radio as saying.

The deaths brought the overall toll in the unrest to 170 killed since the Baku riots, with more than 600 wounded.

Azerbaijan's KGB expressed alarm in its appeal to residents of the republic for calm, Radio Moscow said.

"Azerbaijan is on the edge of the abyss, beyond which lie chaos and anarchy," the KGB warned.

Arif Yunusov, a spokesman for the independent Social Democratic Group political organization, said Baku was paralyzed today by a general strike.

All shops in the major oil refining center were closed, no morning newspapers were published and Azerbaijan's state-run television was off the air, said Sivinch Abdullayeva, an editor at Azerinform, the republic's official news agency.

Yunusov said fighting continued near Salyanskiye Barracks in Baku, with 263 Azerbaijani military cadets and more than 130 classmates of other Soviet ethnic groups opposing Soviet troops who have cordoned off the area.

Dubinyak told the Krasnaya Zvezda military daily there was still intermittent gunfire in the city but gave no details.

Hospital deluged with abortion requests

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — Awaiting an abortion, Florica Poptean sat calmly on a bed in Polizu hospital and recalled that five years earlier she was brought bleeding and unconscious to the same hospital after trying to end a pregnancy by herself.

During Nicolae Ceausescu's rule, abortion was strictly limited in Romania and illegal operations led to thousands of deaths and injuries each year.

Now at Polizu, the country's largest maternity hospital, doctors are performing 80 to 100 abortions daily.

Dr. Gabriel Bonceanu, who supervises the interns who do many of the abortions, says 60 of the operations are carried out between 8 a.m. and noon.

Mrs. Poptean was in a room with four other women who had just had abortions, or were awaiting the surgery. All five women said they simply asked to have an abortion and were given an appointment.

"We have the liberty now to make our own decisions on when we have children," said Mrs. Poptean.

The change came with the toppling of Ceausescu and the scrapping of a law that prohibited abortion for women under 45 unless their lives were in danger. The law was part of the dictator's effort to increase Romania's population from 23 million to 30 million by the end of the century.

Mrs. Poptean said that at age 36, with a 13-year-old son, she felt she was too old to cope with a newborn, especially with conditions still uncertain in Romania.

Five years before, she said, she was afraid to have another child because of her family's disastrous economic state, and could not afford an illegal abortion.

"I tried to induce it myself with a rubber tube," she said. "I started hemorrhaging and wound up being taken here unconscious."

Afterwards, she said, she was questioned by a panel that demanded to know who had performed the abortion or if she had done it herself. The panels decided whether women could have abortions and were said to include police and prosecution officials.

"I told them I had an accident," she said. "You had to have the courage to resist them."

Dr. Bonceanu said that last year more than 4,000 women were brought to Polizu hospital suffering from unsuccessful abortions, either self-induced or performed by others. In his hospital alone, he said, 17 women died and many others suffered permanent injuries.

An unofficial figure puts the number of women who died from failed abortions throughout the country at 800 to 1,000 annually, Dr. Bonceanu said.

Opposition leader seeks new elections

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Opposition leader Kim Dae-jung today announced a petition campaign for new elections in an effort to overcome a setback from the governing party's plans to merge with centrist opposition groups.

"We can see a harsh suppression prepared against democratic forces, but we are ready to crush any dictatorial regime," Kim's party said in a resolution.

President Roh Tae-woo said Monday that his conservative Democratic Justice Party would form an alliance with the two moderate opposition groups, the Reunification Democratic Party and New Democratic Republican Party.

Such a merger will isolate Kim's Party for Peace and Democracy, the largest opposition group, and limit its chances of gaining power. Kim describes himself as a liberal centrist, but others say he is more radical.

Roh also announced plans to change the government from a presidential system to a parliamentary one with a prime minister.

"We will have to begin a pan-national campaign to make Roh's government give in," Kim told a party caucus today as he announced the petition drive.

Two Americans nabbed

RESISTENCIA, Argentina (AP) — Police nabbed two U.S. citizens who tried to make off with a 37-ton meteorite that has become a landmark of northern Argentina, a newspaper reported Monday.

La Nacion said Jeffrey W. Smith, 31, and Robert Hagg, 33, of Tucson, Ariz., were detained Sunday after police, told by residents the meteorite was missing, became suspicious of a small convoy that included a heavy truck with a winch.

Telam, the government news agency, said the meteorite was inside another truck. It said Smith was a reporter and Hagg a photographer, and that both collected meteorites.

No charges had been filed by Monday afternoon, when the Americans were to answer the questions of a judge in Charata, west of Resistencia, said La Nacion's correspondent in this capital of Chaco province, near Paraguay.

Telephone calls from Buenos Aires to the provincial court in Charata did not go through and the telephone at the Charata police station produced a busy signal. Officials at the U.S. consulate in Buenos Aires said they knew nothing of the case.

Mexico to get $7.5 billion

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The World Bank will lend Mexico $7.5 billion as a result of Mexico's success in reshaping its economy, the bank's president said.

Barber Conable, the World Bank president, told the government news agency Notimex on Monday that Mexico will get an immediate loan of $900 million and the rest will come over the next three years.

With this loan, the World Bank is becoming the principal source of new funds coming into Mexico, Conable said. He said the purpose of his visit is to show the organization's support for Mexico's economic reforms.

Conable, who is staying in Mexico until Friday, is scheduled to meet with President Carlos Salinas de Gortari, Treasury Secretary Pedro Aspe and Mexico City Mayor Manuel Camacho Solis.

Bush's Cabinet still intact as administration begins second year

WASHINGTON (AP) — The moderate, pragmatic Cabinet members brought into office by President Bush are still at their desks as the administration begins its second year, but if history is any guide one or more of them will be leaving soon.

Critics have targeted Education Secretary Lauro Cavazos as the weakest link in the Bush Cabinet, and Attorney General Dick Thornburgh as probably its biggest disappointment.

Yet, such criticism is no barometer of staying power.

The surest bet at the start of Bush's second year is that his administration will not follow the pattern of the Reagan presidency when the first Cabinet official to depart was the secretary of state, Alexander M. Haig Jr.

Bush's secretary of state, James A. Baker III, is a long-time ally.

"There is no doubt that James Baker is the strong man of the Cabinet," said presidential scholar Stephen Hess of the Brookings Institution.

Year Two of an administration generally sees the first departures from the Cabinet.

Martin Durkin resigned as secretary of labor during President Eisenhower's second year. Both John Kennedy and Richard Nixon lost their secretaries of health, education and welfare in the second year: Abraham Ribicoff for Kennedy and Robert H. Finch for Nixon.

Jimmy Carter's original appointees, on the other hand, lasted from his inauguration in January 1977 to July 1979, when he shook up his Cabinet in a whirlwind game of musical chairs.

Thornburgh has been in his position longer than any of the others. He was named attorney general by Reagan in August 1988, and was kept on by Bush. He had been governor of Pennsylvania and, before that, an assistant attorney general.

"When he was appointed, I rejoiced," said Norman Ornstein, a scholar at the conservative American Enterprise Institute. "I thought at that time that he had the potential to be a great attorney general. He still has that potential."

But Ornstein and others said Thornburgh has not lived up to expectations.

"He had a good reputation as a really broad-minded person, but he has taken the narrowest perspective on national security," said Landis Jones, a professor of political science at the University of Louisville and former director of the White House Fellows program. "I am a former Pennsylvanian and I would have thought he might have been much better."

The attorney general has drawn criticism, particularly from liberals, for steps to tighten control on public information from his department and for legal moves he says are needed to protect state secrets in Iran-Contra cases. He also was accused of heavy-handed dealings with Congress in the unsuccessful fight to have William Lucas confirmed as his civil rights chief.

On the other hand, Gary Bauer, White House domestic policy adviser under Reagan and now head of the Family Research Council, said that "basically conservatives, and certainly our group, feel very good about him." And Amy Moritz, executive director of the National Center for Public Policy Research, told the Heritage Foundation in a recent survey, "It's good to have an attorney general with guts."

Justice Department spokesman David Runkel dismissed criticism of his boss as "a lot of inside the Beltway chatter by people who haven't taken the time to find out what's going on in the Department of Justice."

Runkel called assertions that Thornburgh has difficult relations with Congress "absolute nonsense."

"We got the biggest budget increase in the history of the department out of Congress," he said. "Congress doesn't give that kind of money to people they don't have respect for."

However, the budget increase for the Justice Department could be attributed to the congressional rush to support efforts to combat drugs rather than a particular endorsement of the attorney general.

Hess, a White House aide in the Eisenhower administration, said, "One would have thought that Thornburgh, not only as a person who has been an assistant attorney general in a previous administration but been a very successful governor who had the usual fine antenna of the politician, would have had a far less rocky first year than he has had."

While Thornburgh is one of the most politically experienced of the Cabinet, Cavazos, a former university president and medical school dean, is one of the least.

The Washington Post recently carried a front-page article headed "Cavazos Gets Low Marks" that quoted critical remarks by educators about the education secretary's effectiveness.

Cavazos responded by saying he remained "committed to helping George Bush be the education president," and White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater told reporters, "He has the job as long as he wants it."

Still, there have been suggestions that he could be the first to go.

"It is quite clear that Cavazos is the weakest in terms of political support," said Ornstein.

The low-key Cavazos suffers in some eyes by comparison with his flamboyant predecessor, William J. Bennett, now director of the federal drug control program.

Hess described the Education Department as "in many ways a very modest agency" but said, "You can, as Bill Bennett proved, turn it into a bully pulpit ... It just strikes me that this fellow doesn't have those sort of skills."

Bauer said, "The jury is still out on whether you are going to get the kind of attention that I think you need to get if you are going to put education on the front burner."

Bush's Cabinet consists of the heads of the 14 departments plus Richard Darman, director of the Office of Management and Budget, and Carla Hills, U.S. trade representative.

Bauer said conservatives, many of them skeptical of Darman because of his long association with Baker, "have been pleasantly surprised that he has held the line on things like taxes."

As for Baker, many conservatives have never liked him, and they still don't. In the Heritage Foundation survey, which asked five conservative leaders to give report card grades to the Cabinet members, Baker's marks ranged from C to D-minus.

Commissioners vote to rebid janitorial job

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland County commissioners have acquiesced to a group of small business owners who said a plan to contract county janitorial services out to a company with no less than 50 employees was discriminatory.

They also saw the first of many upcoming courthouse renovation sketches during Monday's regular meeting.

Commissioners in a unanimous vote rejected the offers of previous janitorial service companies and voted to rebid the project with new specifications provided by themselves and Facilities Management Director Bill Decker.

Precinct 3 Commissioner Louisa Valencia had pushed for a similar move two weeks ago when she described the bid specifications as "discriminatory against small business owners."

Mrs. Valenicia, who owns a small upholstery firm, claimed the requirements were too strict and immediately disqualified local small businessmen from competing in the bidding process.

In the specifications, the county demanded that eligible bidders have no less than 50 employees and furnish a resume containing a 10-year history of the company.

Elvia Hernandez of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce labeled the 50-employee minimum rule "ridiculous."

By contracting janitorial services, commissioners estimate they will save the county up to $79,913 annually, according to Decker.

Meanwhile, commissioners said they liked the two additional courtrooms and other architectural changes included in a proposed plan to renovate the interior of the 1929-vintage courthouse.

The construction should ease overcrowding in several county departments once the sheriff, constable and justices of the peace move to the new law enforcement complex, according to Precinct 2 Commissioner Guy McCrary.

Midland Architect Walter Pate said the refurbishing process could take up to 1½ years to complete and would cost between $500,000 and $600,000.

The other alternative would be to build a new courthouse at a cost of up to $20 million, Precinct 1 Commissioner Durward Wright said.

"In this day and time, we don't feel that this is a viable option," McCrary said. "I can't in good conscience go to the public and ask for $20 million of their money."

McCrary said most of the renovations would be paid for with monies set aside during a two-year budget process. The remainder would come from funds set aside in 1988 when commissioners issued $1.8 million in certificates of obligation.

Commissioners have not yet given their go-ahead on the refurbishing plan, but agreed to meet with Pate and other department heads and hear input on the final design.

Midland man says motorcyclist's death 'always in my head'

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A 30-year-old Midland man who admitted the drunken driving death of a friend told jurors deciding his punishment that he hasn't forgotten the accident.

"I think about it all the time," said Leodegario Amezcua with the help of an interpretor.

"It is always in my head."

Amezcua pleaded guilty to involuntary manslaughter Monday in front of 238th State District Judge Vann Culp. Jurors who will decide his punishment then began hearing evidence in the case.

Amezcua, a resident alien from Mexico, could receive up to 10 years in state prison.

The Sept. 19, 1988, accident occurred about 10:30 p.m. at the intersection of State Highway 349 and County Road 114. Robert Napoles was driving a 750 cc motorcycle east on CR 114 when he approached the intersection and slowed, according to Department of Public Safety Trooper Nick Rose.

Amezcua was behind Napoles, also traveling east on CR 114 in a 1973 Ford Mustang. The car rammed the motorcycle from behind, and Napoles' head struck the car's windshield at least once, Rose told jurors.

Napoles was pronounced dead at the scene. Amezcua, who was alone in the car, was uninjured.

Amezcua told his attorney Woody Leverett he tried to apply the brakes of the Mustang when he saw the stop sign, but he never saw the motorcycle.

"I tried to push the brakes two or three times," he said. "The brakes didn't work too good."

Amezcua was arrested and given a breath test. Prosecutor Wayne Frost showed the jury a videotape made after the arrest.

On the tape, the defendant admitted drinking, then denied drinking, and finally submitted to a breath test. His blood alcohol level was 0.14, according to Midland County Sheriff's Deputy Ray Meek.

According to Texas law, 0.10 is considered intoxication.

After Frost rested his case, Leverett called two managers at the downtown Petroleum Club, where Amezcua has worked as a waiter and bartender since 1982.

Amezcua, who also works at Midland Country Club, was described as a "jack of all trades," "very honest, very hard working," and a family man with a wife and two children.

Lorenzo Dominguez, dining room manager at the Petroleum Club, told the jury Amezcua stopped drinking after the accident.

"He wishes he could fix it, but there's nothing he can do about it," Dominguez said.

Amezcua told jurors he sold the Mustang after the accident.

Man honored for conservation of grasslands

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Alton Ray Bryant, who grew up ranching and farming on the Bryant home place just east of Midland, has been rewarded for his conservation work on New Mexico and Texas grasslands — part of the Dust Bowl of the 1930s.

Bryant has won the United States Forest Service "Chief's Award in Range Management."

Bryant, 50, is the Forest Service's district ranger who oversees the 134,000-acre Kiowa National Grasslands, part of the Dust Bowl in northeastern New Mexico and the panhandles of Texas and Oklahoma during the Great Depression.

Bryant

Today, the land is in tall grasses grazed by ranchers' cattle and monitored by Bryant.

For his role in the conservation of grasslands, Bryant will receive the Forest Service's national chief's award Wednesday in Washington, D.C., from F. Dale Robertson, chief of the Forest Service, which is part of the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA).

"Your pioneering efforts with the application of 'Time-Controlled Grazing' on the National Forest System have commanded respect through a multi-state area," Robertson said in announcing Bryant's selection for the honor. Robertson said Bryant's leadership contributes to keeping the Forest Service "on the cutting edge of technology and the application of natural resource management."

Robertson cited Bryant's "accomplishments in range management" and the "respect by your peers."

In 1988, Bryant was named employee of the year for the Cibola National Forest, which takes in the Kiowa National Grasslands, one of 19 national grasslands.

Bryant, son of Alvey and Virginia Bryant of the Greenwood community east of Midland, attended schools at the old Prairie Lee School, at Greenwood and Midland, and was graduated from Midland High School in 1957 and from Sul Ross State University in Alpine in 1961.

At Sul Ross, he majored in range-animal husbandry and was foreman of the University Ranch for two years.

"When I graduated, Sul Ross had not just won more national (rodeo) championships than any college," recalled Bryant, "but more than all of the colleges in the United States put together. That was quite a deal back in those days."

Sul Ross was a major force in organizing the National Intercollegiate Rodeo Association (NIRA) and had prepared rodeo cowboys for the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association circuit. Bryant had tried his hand at calf roping and bull riding.

"You had to work about four events to be on a team," he recalled, since a rodeo cowboy increased his odds at winning a championship by entering more than one event.

And he fondly recalled Sul Ross undergraduate academics, which he suggested were more difficult than his subsequent studies at four graduate schools.

"I made one 'A' at Sul Ross (in agricultural marketing)," he said, "but received nothing but A's at graduate schools. That made me appreciate Sul Ross," he said. He took many of his courses at Sul Ross from botanist Dr. Barton Warnock.

Later, he taught high-school science, including biology, chemistry and physics, at Garden City and then taught at Levelland.

In the mid-1960s, he joined the U.S. Forest Service initially as a Job Corps teacher in Arizona and then as deputy director in Colorado.

ODESSA — The flowing "headwaters" — sewage-treatment plants — fueling the Monahans Draw controversy that has pitted Midland against Odessa over wastewater disposal again will be on center stage Wednesday.

But the cast of debaters on the pros and cons may be off balance.

Texas Water Commission (TWC) Hearings Examiner Leslie Limes will hold a three-day hearing on Odessa's request for permit renewal to discharge treated wastewater — effluent — from the city's two plants into the draw.

The draw, in its eastward flow, cuts through Midland County and south of Midland.

Odessa, now operating on interim discharge permits, is seeking five-year TWC permits to discharge daily 9.8 million gallons of effluent from its South Dixie Water Reclamation Plant and 4.9 million gallons from its East Water Reclamation Plant east of Odessa but in Midland County.

The three-day hearing will begin at 9 a.m. Wednesday in Odessa City Hall's Council Chambers.

"It's not cut-and-dried," said Bill Lockey, TWC district manager in Odessa. "Just because someone has a permit coming up for renewal doesn't mean we have decided we are going to give it to them."

But Midland lawyer Paul Bohannon, representing Midlanders who are protesting the draw's effluent flow, has appealed for at least part of the hearings to be held in Midland.

The draw is prone to overflow and flood when runoff mixes with the wastewater.

Bohannon said that he and his 18 clients "will not participate to any significant degree" in the hearings.

"The reason is the apparent insensitivity of the TWC in its failure to schedule even a part of the hearing in Midland County," he said.

The East Plant is in Midland County but much nearer to Odessa than to Midland. The South Dixie Plant is in Ector County.

Bohannon said that some of his clients were "so upset" with the hearing location that "any participation on behalf of Midland citizens would be very limited in scope — should they participate at all."

Brandley likely to be released on bond

CONROE (AP) — Attorneys for Clarence Brandley filed a motion today asking that the death row inmate be released on $75,000 bond, and a prosecutor said he would not oppose the request.

The motion was filed this morning in state district court in Conroe, and State District Judge Lee Alworth was scheduled to decide on the request later today. Montgomery County District Attorney Peter Speers said he would not oppose the motion.

"If it's approved the judge can order his release," defense attorney Mike DeGeurin said. "And then we go pick him up. I contemplate we'll be picking him up" from prison.

DeGeurin has advised Brandley, who's been behind bars for some 10 years, to continue to be patient but he also indicated that the former high school janitor would be spending tonight with his mother.

Speers also was to announce today whether he intends to appeal the case to the U.S. Supreme Court. He has repeatedly indicated a retrial would be virtually impossible because of the time that has elapsed, lost evidence and what he terms corrupted witnesses.

Brandley remains on death row at the Ellis I Unit outside Huntsville.

"When I called Clarence, he was happy, but cautious and wants to wait and see what happens tomorrow," DeGeurin said late Monday. "It's been 10 years and a lot of things have happened."

DeGeurin won an early mandate Monday from the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, which essentially ends the appellate court's involvement on the Brandley case and returns jurisdiction to Montgomery County.

DeGeurin said the mandate was possible because Speers decided not to pursue further appeals through the state to keep Brandley behind bars. The ruling cleared the way for DeGeurin to seek bail for his client.

COUNTY

The last courthouse renovation was completed in 1974 when the county built a jail atop the four-story structure.

The outer deck of the courthouse was enclosed in recent months to add 8,000 square feet of additional office space and to prevent basement flooding during heavy rains.

In other business, the court discussed but took no action on County Judge Bill Ahder's proposal to ban smoking in the courthouse hallways.

Ahders has designated the second floor of the courthouse as a non-smoking area and suggested that commissioners pass a similar rule pertaining to the three remaining public corridors.

"I don't think there should be smoking around the courtrooms," Ahders said. He added that he would not oppose the creation of designated smoking areas.

Also, commissioners:

■ Awarded the outside audit contract to Grant Thornton Accountants and Management Consultants of Midland.

■ Awarded a bid for petroleum products to Eddins-Walcher Co. and West Texas Petroleum Co.

■ Awarded the bid for a coinless jail telephone system to Southwest Pay Telephone Systems Inc. of Corpus Christi.

■ Passed a resolution allowing NCNB to move pledged securities to the Federal Reserve Bank.

■ Allowed the county auditor to advertise for bids for concrete curbs, gutters and sidewalks at the law enforcement complex.

Lockey, however, noted that TWC policy is to hold hearings "in the area where the permit is to be granted."

"I've been to both plants myself," he said. "And they are a whole lot closer to Odessa than they are to the proximity of Midland. Since it is the city's permits that are up for renewal and their permit applications are being decided here, it is just customary procedure that we hold the hearings within the location of the permittee (Odessa) — not the people that are downstream 15 or 20 miles."

In a letter to the three-member TWC, Bohannon noted that his clients "under no circumstances wish to jeopardize the wastewater treatment system for Odessa.

"However, they want the system to work properly and with due regard not only to the environment but to the rights and private persons along the draw," Bohannon wrote.

The TWC commissioners, Buck Jim Wynne III of Dallas, Cliff Johnson of Palestine, and John Birdwell of Lubbock, "seem to be real conscientious about their position and the environment of the state of Texas," Lockey said.

HONOR

After the Job Corps program was cut back in the late 1960s, he became a Forest Service range conservationist in Colorado and eventually ended up on Kiowa National Grasslands in 1975.

"It has been real rewarding," Bryant said.

What is now the Kiowa National Grasslands was the "center of the Dust Bowl," Bryant said.

"All the country was blowing away in the 'Dirty '30s,'" he said. In the 1910s and 1920s, settlers could homestead 160 acres of land and do well, since rains were adequate, if not plentiful, during those times.

"That was period of wet weather," Bryant said.

But the drought set in during the 1930s, the land became a "Grapes of Wrath" setting, and the homesteaders pleaded for government help.

Many people were moved off the abused lands to new homes.

"It would could get so dark (from clouds of blowing dust)," Bryant said, "that chickens would go to roost in the middle of the day."

So, in the 1930s, homesteaders "couldn't make any crops, and they almost starved to death," Bryant said. "The local people petitioned the government for help. They just couldn't flat make it. There were too many people for the land to support."

Conservation programs and projects were implemented.

The Forest Service's grasslands program, Bryant said, is to "establish the soil," to keep it from "blowing" and to promote good grassland agriculture.

Bryant noted that his national award focuses on his grazing-management program on the Kiowa National Grasslands.

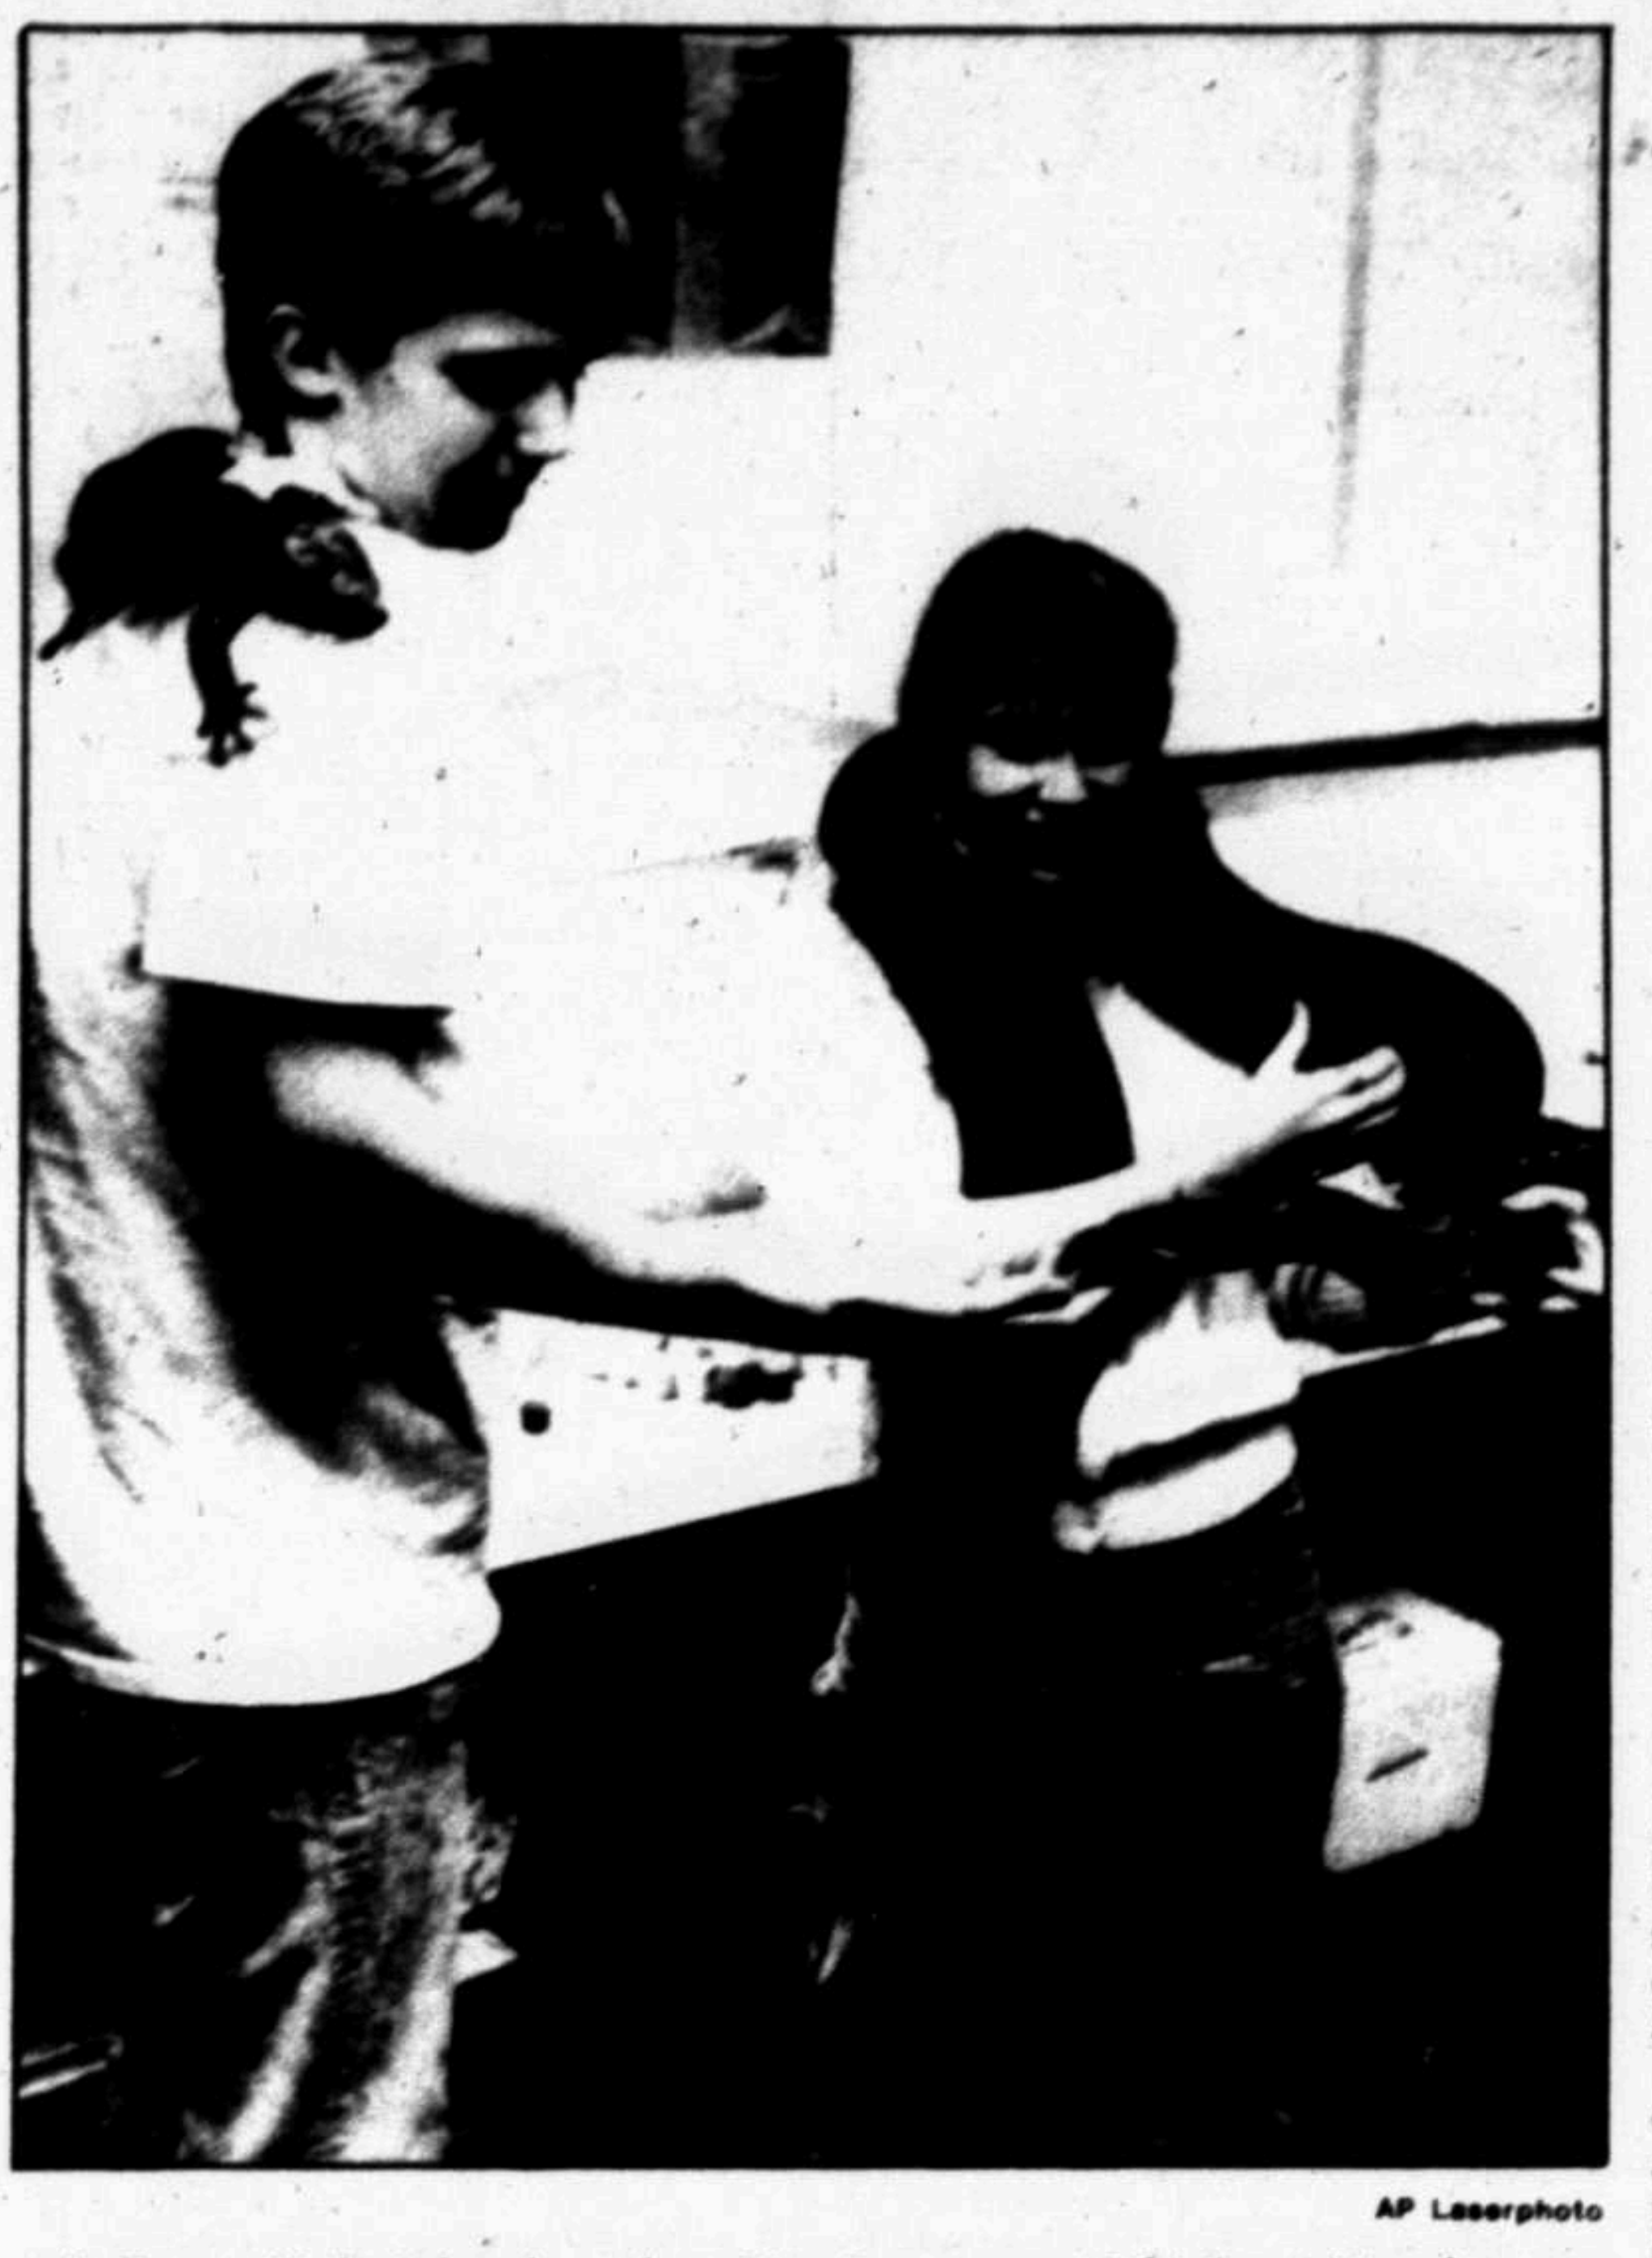
"My assistant (Jim Hall) and I have developed grazing plans for 70 ranches in nine states," he said.

Bryant, who is married to the former Judy Adams of Midland, has three sons: Darrell, 24, works for Texas Beef Producers on ranches in the Panhandle; Tim, 23, is co-owner of an Amarillo feed store; and Joel, 20, is a Clarendon Junior College animal-science student.

In referring to his national award, Bryant said that "the only reason I'm able to do what I do" is because of his office manager, Helen Gamblin, who "runs thing" so that he and Jim Hall "can go out and do what we do.

"They are the best there are. I'm kind of half embarrassed," he said. "They do the work, and I get credit a lot of times. Dad and mother raised me to have a little bit of humility."

Students learn from real animals



AP Laserphoto

LaPorte High School student Tim Petersen, 17, left, tickles the jaw of a red-tailed boa held by fellow student Sutumn Holland, 17, while a Samoan Islands skink keeps an eye on the snake. Outside in the school's courtyard are a monkey, pheasants, doves, a hawk, turtles, fish, alligators and other animals. Teacher Bob Miller uses both dead and live examples of animals described in textbooks for a hands-on experience of science.

By STEFANIE ASIN

LA PORTE (AP) — La Porte High School is a real zoo.

The wild animals are not students, but caged slimy, furry and feathered things. Students share their classroom space with these living science lessons. Outside in the school's courtyard, the feathered ones can fly, and the slimy ones can swim.

"This is a hands-on experience," said science teacher Bob Miller. "When I drew things on the board, it couldn't be recognized."

Miller, director of the La Porte Environmental Awareness Program, or LEAP, uses dead and live examples of animals described in textbooks. Instead of just reading about African monkeys and poisonous snakes, the students see and touch them.

"It's a nature laboratory right here," Miller said. "Not a day goes by when a student doesn't come by to tell me what's going on in the courtyard."

Three years ago, Miller released some turtles in the high school's open courtyard. After his anatomy students showed interest in the four-legged reptiles, his push for an animal sanctuary began. He envisioned an enclosed area, topped with a net and designed to display natural vegetation and animals.

With a $100,000 federal grant, he got his wish.

Miller hired 15 La Porte High School students to help build the courtyard. Now the zoo-within-a-school houses a monkey, pheasants, doves, a hawk, turtles, fish, alligators and other animals.

Students in a lab management class are responsible for cleaning and feeding the animals in the courtyard and inside the science classrooms.

Two years ago, Miller expanded his program in a way that saved the school district money. Instead of mail-ordering organisms for elementary school science classes, Miller grows, breeds and distributes them. Last semester, he saved the district $7,000.

His involvement in the LEAP program clutters his classrooms with aquariums and cages. Miller's collection includes 25 different species of snakes, 15 species of turtles, 15 species of lizards, mice and birds.

Miller, a former professional football player, lives on 10 acres in Crosby, a big enough space to collect a variety of animals. As a licensed wildlife rehabilitator, Miller is nursing an injured raccoon and a boa constrictor with a broken jaw.

Last year Miller was attending a science convention in San Diego and found two California king snakes. Knowing that airline officials would not allow the snakes on board, he wrapped them around his waist. Wearing an everyday shirt, he sat entangled with the snakes throughout the flight back to Houston.

The LEAP program expanded further last summer when Miller received a $28,000 grant to create an organism museum. Its cases are stocked with stuffed vertebrates and skeletons.

During the year, elementary school students tour the science classrooms, the courtyard and the museum as part of their science curriculum.

Science students also take four-day field trips, packing tents, snake sticks and pillowcases for their trip into the outdoor classroom. Occasionally, Miller will find an injured animal on a field trip to bring back to the La Porte High School makeshift animal hospital. Last year, the class amputated the wing of a laughing gull that later was killed in an act of vandalism.

"The students are getting practical applications for the future," Miller said.

Student Chris Starnes, 17, agrees. "I thought taking care of animals would be easy, and it's not," he said. "This class helps me realize how important science is."

La Porte area businesses have been supportive, with many of them involved in the district's adopt-a-school program, Project 2000. One company donated the use of a 12-acre wooded area near the school for a nature path.

Education secretary draws mixed reviews

By TAMARA HENRY
AP Education Writer

WASHINGTON — Education Secretary Lauro Cavazos is still drawing mixed reviews from the education establishment 16 months into his job, but his critics are showing signs of softening.

Cavazos

"We grade him somewhere in the 'C' range. We changed it from a 'C-minus' because of his announcement" of a report on the reading and writing performance of American schoolchildren, said Jeanne Allen, education policy analyst at the Heritage Foundation, one of his harshest critics.

Cavazos, the former president of Texas Tech University who became the first Hispanic Cabinet official in the waning days of President Reagan's administration, has drawn fire in President Bush's administration.

Opponents call Cavazos a government outsider whose low-key management style doesn't provide the vocal advocacy needed for education.

"I don't think he's hurt by it. It comes with the turf," said Lon Anderson, a Cavazos aide. "The secretary tells us, 'I've had a lot of praise too with my style. My style has been very successful for me. It has carried me a long way. I'm a Cabinet member.'"

"He'll be around for a while," said Anderson.

White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater recently dismissed reports that Cavazos might be on his way out, telling reporters, "He has the job as long as he wants it. Secretary Cavazos has done an outstanding job."

At the department, Cavazos has been credited with restoring a civil tone after the confrontational tactics that marked the tenure of his predecessor, William Bennett, now the national anti-drug czar.

From the first, Cavazos reached out to the education establishment that Bennett repeatedly attacked. He says he wants to work with teachers and others to solve the problems of the nation's schools. Where Bennett called press conferences, Cavazos calls private meetings, away from the cameras and eyes of reporters.

Some Education Department officials say Cavazos' approach is both a blessing and a curse. Although Bennett was publicly badmouthed for his combative style, he grabbed attention and made education a subject of national discussion.

"Bennett used the office as a bully pulpit," said Ms. Allen. "Cavazos should use it in the same way."

She said Cavazos' National Assessment of Educational Progress last year was an example of the effort that should be made more often to "make sure that the message is getting to the American people."

In speeches to education groups all over the country, Cavazos repeatedly has focused on his personal concerns: reducing high school dropout rates, expanding and improving early childhood education, and broadening opportunities for minorities, the disabled and the disadvantaged.

Cavazos dislikes comparisons to Bennett, said department officials. Instead, he sees similarities with the low-key Terrel H. Bell, President Reagan's education secretary.

"I appreciate that," Bell said in an interview. "I just think each of us has to stand on our own. I think he's doing a fine job under the circumstances."

Rep. Augustus Hawkins, D-Calif., chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee, isn't happy with Cavazos and has suggested the committee's ranking Republican, William Goodling of Pennsylvania, is one of at least four others who could replace Cavazos.

But Goodling believes that Cavazos has learned how to work inside the government.

"I view his performance as someone who has grown dramatically in the job. He had no political experience before coming to Washington, and positively no experience within the Beltway, which means you have about 100 strikes against you."

"He's not flamboyant, doesn't seek publicity," said Goodling. "The last guy (Bennett) did but didn't do anything for education. I think it's time to just let (Cavazos) alone and see if he can do the job. Give him the opportunity to do the job."

Outside Washington, Cavazos receives more positive assessments.

"One of the things (Cavazos) has been doing very quietly ... is bringing on good people," said Leonard Britton, superintendent of Los Angeles Public Schools. "He definitely knows where he wants to go in that regard.

"Cavazos is bringing back credibility, I think," he said.

He also gets high marks from some educators for emphasizing minority education.

Rita Esquival, director of the Office of Bilingual Education and Minority Languages Affairs, said, "the secretary of education has done more for language minority children than any other secretary. He comes from a background where he knows firsthand that it's important."

Mail burns up as truck hits overpass; One dies

GEORGETOWN (AP) — Most of the mail in a truck that hit an overpass support near here and burst into flames was damaged or destroyed, postal officials said today.

The driver was killed in the accident Monday night, investigators said.

Austin Postmaster Wayne Rogers said several hundred thousand separate pieces of mail were either "heavily charred or burned beyond recognition."

The items that were recoverable, but burned, will be sent on the address with a note indicating the mail was involved in an accident.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR VOLUNTEERS

A creative way to take off the winter chill would be to warm someone's heart by volunteering. Here are just a few of the opportunities available through the Volunteer Center.

■ Serve as a teacher's aide, a team leader or assistant with registration for this special event which helps K-6 grade children recognize dangers and respond to them appropriately. Choose a four-hour shift either a.m. or p.m. on Jan. 27.

■ Share the joy of a good book by lending your voice to an agency that produces professional quality recordings for the blind/visually impaired. Volunteers are needed to narrate material as well as to assist with operating equipment or reviewing recordings. Training is provided and a commitment of two hours a week between 9 a.m. and 1 p.m. is desired.

■ Your clerical skills can make a difference for an agency that provides services to senior citizens. It seeks clerical and telephone assistance. If you like people this one is perfect for you. This is a daytime opportunity for one morning a weekday.

■ Be a buddy. Young children at risk of having mild seizures would look forward to your spending a couple of hours a week with them just visiting or playing games. Orientation and training from the agency will be provided.

■ Influence the future of a young person. Adopt a student at risk of becoming a drop-out through the Mentor Program of a local agency. Share life experiences and listen to someone who needs a positive adult role model. Visit with a student in junior high or high school once a week for two hours and you could make a difference in their life.

For more information on how you can volunteer, please call the Volunteer Center at 697-8781.

From Staff Reports

A variety of new programs are being offered at the Alamo and Northeast YMCAs.

Getting in the swim is the object at daily lap swimming from 11:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. in February in the 50-meter indoor heated pool at the Northeast YMCA.

Enrollment is open for swimming lessons for individuals from 3 months to adult. No YMCA membership is required. Call the Northeast YMCA, located at Butternut Lane and Scharbauer Drive, at 682-8469.

Membership is not required for beginning ballet and jazz dance classes currently enrolling at Northeast. Half-hour jazz classes will meet Tuesdays and Thursdays at 4:45 p.m. followed by ballet at 5:15 p.m.

Specialized activity classes for older and arthitis-stricken individuals are on the schedule at the Alamo YMCA at 901 N. Midland Drive.

Enrollment is limited and pre-registration necessary for a four-week aquatic exercise class. Co-sponsored by the West Texas Chapter of the Arthritis Foundation, the program "is a recreational series of gentle activities in the pool and is open to anyone with arthritis. It is not necessary to know how to swim," explained YMCA marketing director Genie McCartney.

The 45-minute Monday-Wednesday-Friday classes will begin Feb. 5 at 1 p.m., 2 p.m. and 5:15 p.m.

On the same the days of the week the Alamo YMCA has initiated a "chair aerobics" class. The 50-minute class has been designed for senior adults interested in a low-impact aerobic workout using a chair.

The class, which is open to the public at a small fee, free for YMCA members, meets at 10:30 a.m. MWF.

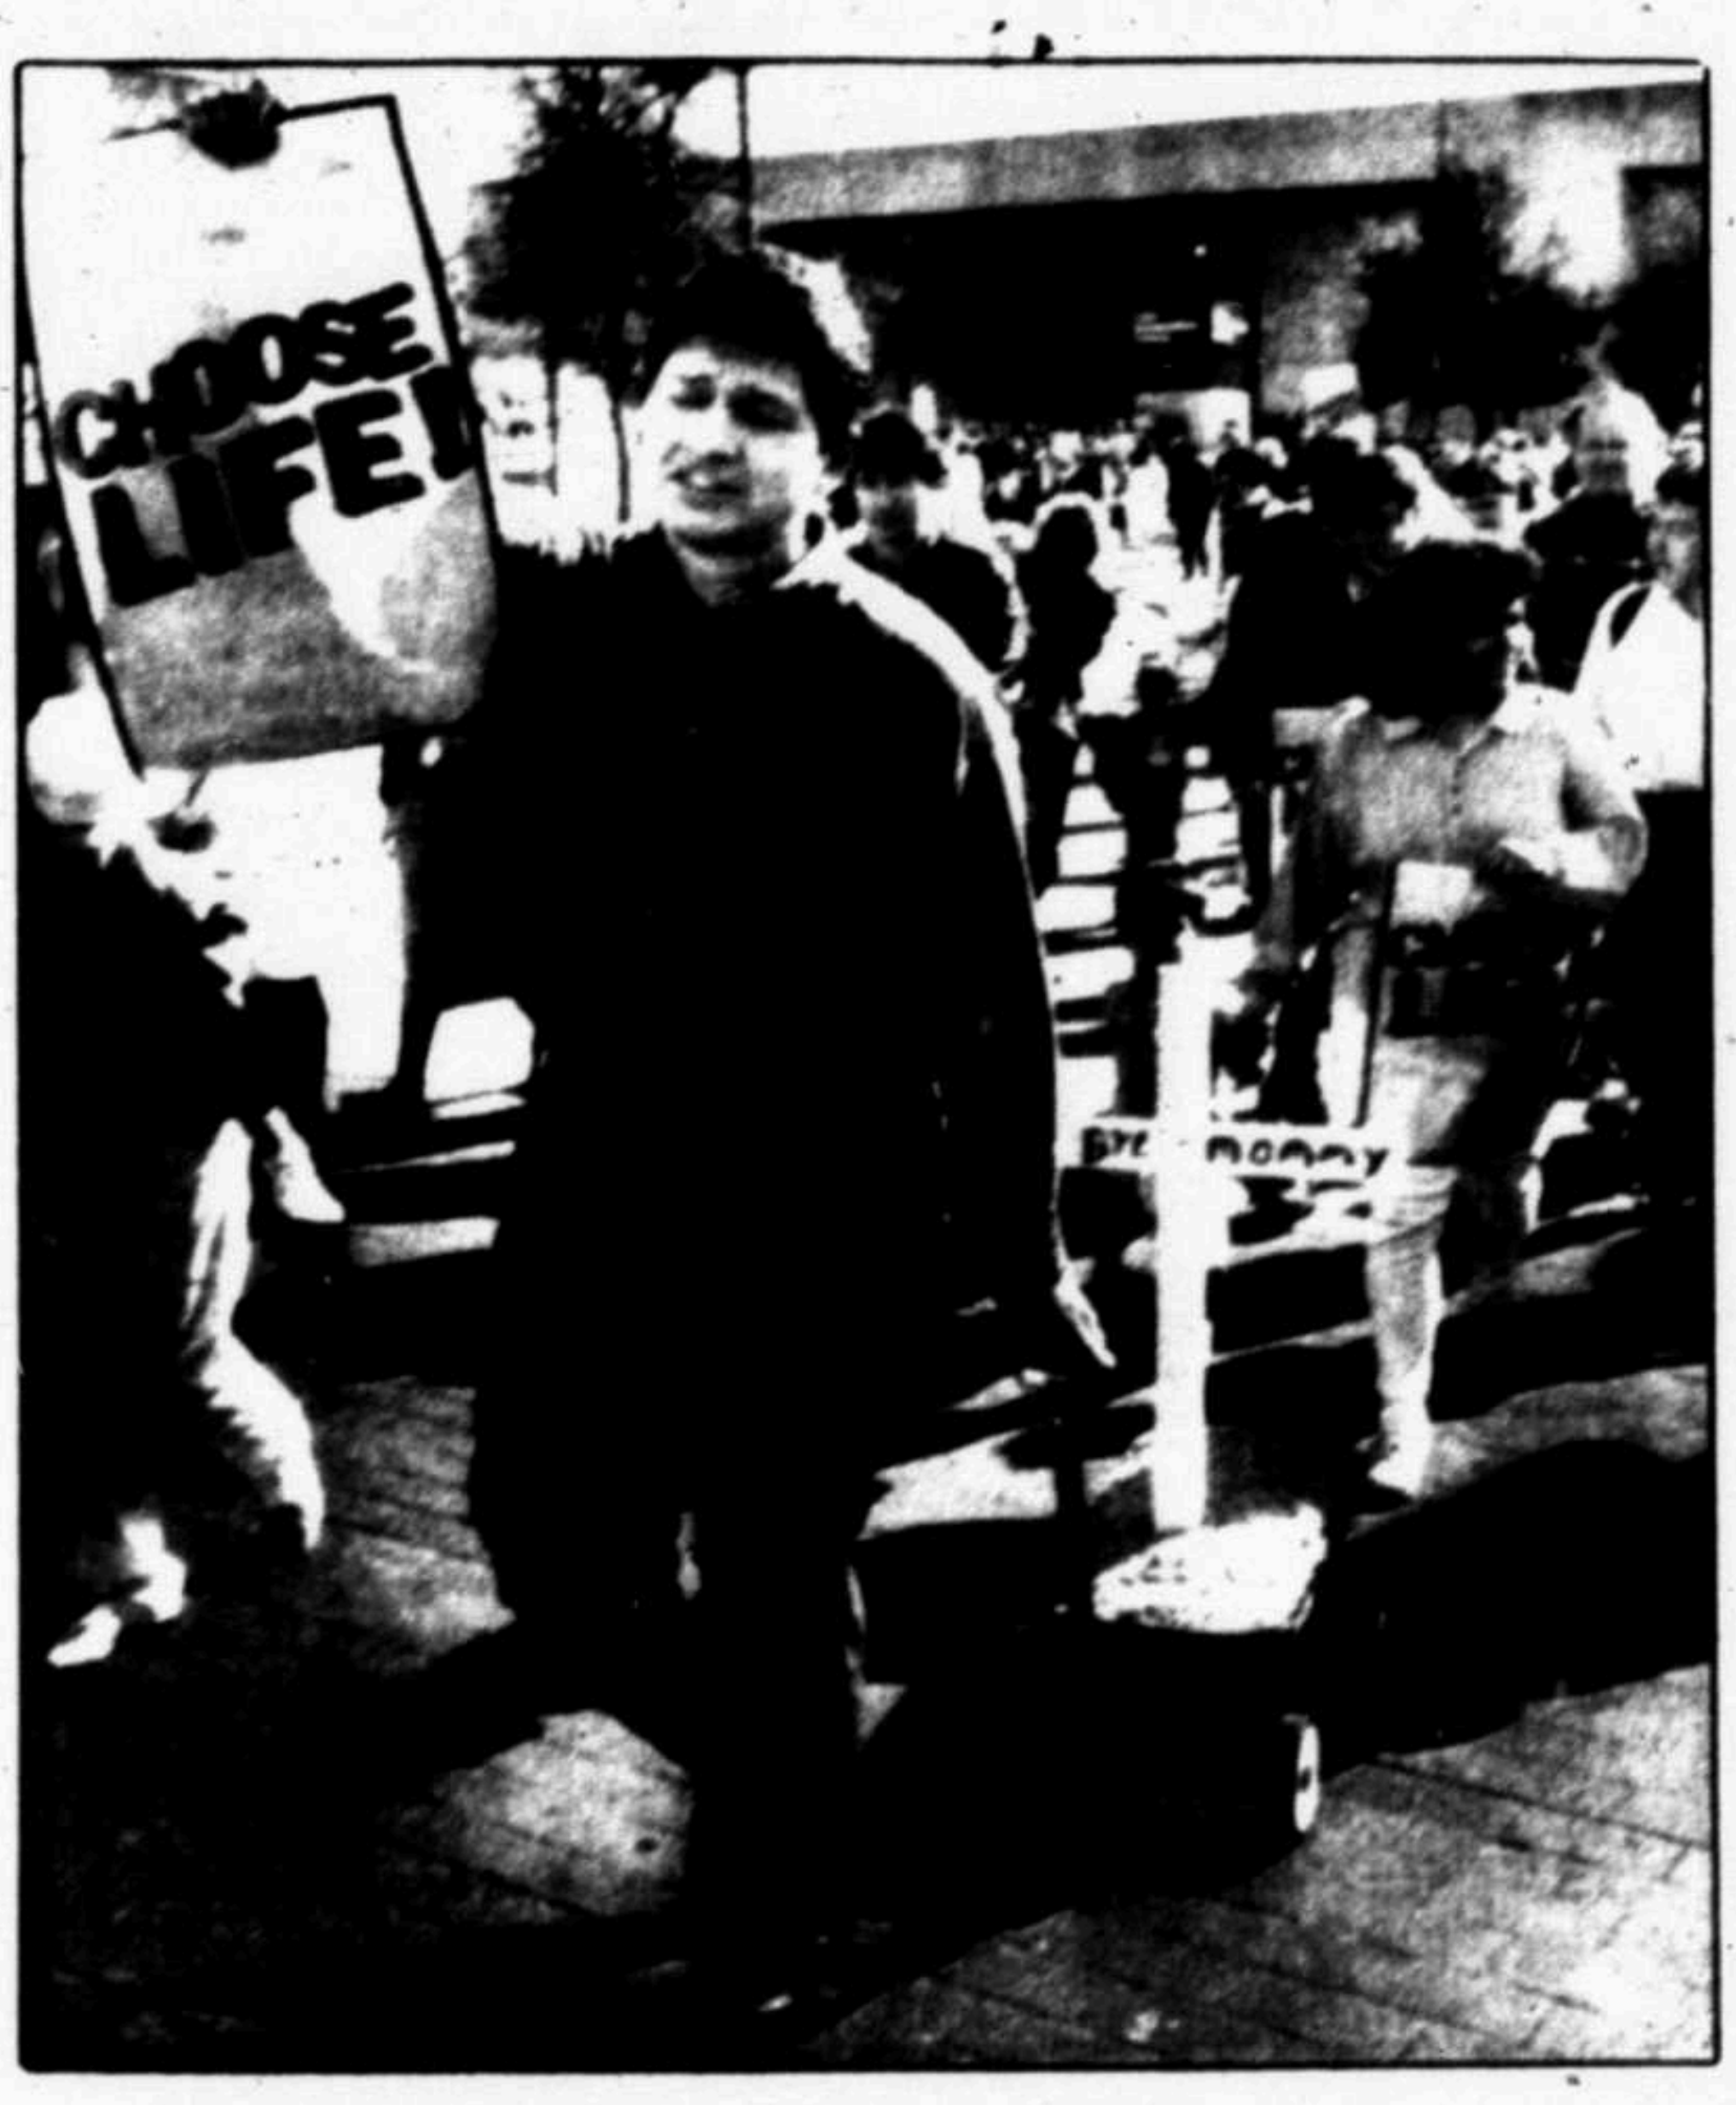
Below, Ruben Ramos, of Dallas, pulls a wagon filled with sand and bearing a cross during an anti-abortion rally in downtown Dallas Monday. The group marched from Dallas City Hall to the Federal Building. Monday marked the 17th anniversary of the Roe vs. Wade Supreme Court decision which essentially legalized abortion in the U.S.



CHOOSE LIFE!

Anti-abortion group to 'rattle' legislators

DALLAS (AP) — While anti-abortion activists urged Texans to send thousands of baby rattles to lawmakers, pro-choice forces used the anniversary of the U.S. Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion to say they haven't given up their fight.

Texans United for Life, announcing an anti-abortion campaign Monday that would "rattle the conscience of Texas," urged residents who want legal protection for the unborn to send baby rattles to elected representatives.

Hundreds of pro-choice advocates turned out in Austin for a rally on the 17th anniversary of Roe vs. Wade. Meanwhile, the attorney who argued the case said in Dallas that pro-choice forces are here to stay.

The baby rattles, to be made available by Texans United, will include the words, "Baby's Best Friend," the group's president, Bill Price, said in Austin.

The group is calling on all Texans "who want legal protection restored to unborn children to send hundreds of baby rattles to their elected representatives, both in Congress and the state Legislature."

"We are here to say we won 17 years ago today, and we will win again," attorney Sarah Weddington told pro-choice advocates at a breakfast in Dallas marking the anniversary of the landmark case.

The Texas case that Ms. Weddington argued cleared the way for legal abortions.

About 450 pro-choice advocates rallied at The University of Texas at Austin. Demonstrators also denounced the more recent high court ruling that allows states to regulate abortion.

Legislative and community supporters of the 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision said at the rally that last summer's Supreme Court ruling in the Webster vs. Missouri case poses a threat to a woman's right to have an abortion.

The Supreme Court's Webster decision in July 1989 opened the door for states to impose some restrictions on abortion.

Pro-choice forces have been mobilized by the Webster decision, said Danalynn Recer, president of the National Organization of Women at UT.

Ms. Recer said membership in approximately 100 local NOW chapters doubled, and in some cases tripled in the weeks after the Webster decision.

"There was a general belief that this couldn't happen in America. We don't have these fundamental rights taken away," said Ms. Recer.

State Sen. Hugh Parmer criticized U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm's anti-abortion stance. Parmer of Fort Worth is vying for the Democratic nomination to challenge Gramm, a Republican, in November.

"The people who believe, like Sen. Gramm, that they should impose their own quasi-moral, religious traditions on us, are never going to stop trying, so we've got to never, never stop fighting," Parmer told the rally.

Anti-abortion activists announced at a Capitol news conference they will gather Saturday outside the building to observe the "tragic" Roe vs. Wade decision.

"Since the Webster decision in July, we have renewed hope that the health and safety of women and children can once again be secured," said Lisa Salcedo, spokeswoman for the Texas Right to Life Committee.

Ms. Weddington said pro-choice forces will accelerate lobbying in Austin.

"In Austin, we're first going to try and prevent the introduction of bad legislation," she said.

"But if it's introduced, we'll certainly be there to try to kill it. Kill it in committees, kill in votes, kill it through filibusters, kill it in any way we need to."

Ms. Weddington told the inaugural meeting of the Greater Dallas Coalition for Reproductive Freedom, a coalition of 17 pro-choice groups, that women have a new energy in the abortion fight.

"The day after Webster was decided, I had a call from a friend who's in her 60s, and she said, 'Sarah, I'm tired of this; let's riot,' " she said.

Donor offers reward in series of attacks on children

DALLAS (AP) — Police say an anonymous donor has offered two $25,000 rewards for information leading to the arrest and indictment of those responsible for a series of attacks on children in two Dallas neighborhoods.

The reward was posted anonymously Monday morning, Deputy Police Chief Lowell Cannaday said at a news conference.

Two children were abducted as they walked to school in Oak Cliff last week and driven elsewhere, where they were raped. In each case, the assailant drove them back and let them off in the vicinity where they had been picked up.

An intruder has broken into four homes in far north Dallas late at night and abducted four young girls. In three of the cases, the victims were sexually assaulted.

"We're at the same place we were a week ago on the north Dallas case and we do have several leads were pursuing," Cannaday said.

Investigators say they believe the north Dallas and Oak Cliff attacks are unrelated.

The Oak Cliff assailant apparently has been driving a white pickup, said Cannaday. He said the girls have given investigators a partial license plate of "776."

The victims in the north Dallas attacks were all white, ages 7 to 10, and the victims in the Oak Cliff attacks in far south Dallas were all black, ages 10 to 15, he said. The most recent attack occurred Jan. 19.

Clothing made from leather fashionable

By VALLI HERMAN
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Through the millennia, man and woman alike have sought a fabric that conforms to the body, has the strength of Samson, the weight of wool and the sex appeal of silk.

It's here; it always has been. It's leather.

Leather has stepped beyond the boundaries of motorcycle jackets and handbags into innovative applications in women's dresses, men's slacks and designer ensembles.

Despite consumer apprehension about the longevity of the look, all indications say it is time to invest.

"People are afraid it's a fad," said Lynn Campbell, manager of Wilsons Suede and Leather in Glendale, Calif. "It was thought of as a thug-like thing, but that's no more. You can come into a store and find what fits your personality," Campbell said.

Even at the high end of fashion, such as at Westwood Leather Design in Los Angeles and the companion store, Leather Club in Beverly Hills, garments are made with permanence in mind.

"I think leather is an excellent investment, because it is so prominent. But, right now, the leather business is going back to classics," said David Merrill, Westwood manager. "At the most, 20 percent are 'window' items."

WHILE THE mainstay of the leather garment trade continues to be black bomber jackets for men and black knee-length and mini-skirts for women, shoppers can find feathered mini-capes, fringed skirts and suede ensembles in vivid colors.

With a selection rapidly bordering on the overwhelming, consumers may find themselves intimidated. Not to worry: Leather has built-in limits.

"You get what you pay for," Merrill said.

"My philosophy in leather is, it's better to overpay a little bit than to underpay and not get what you want," he said.

Naturally, $600 for a jacket or $225 for a skirt may seem outrageous to many, but maybe not over the long term. Consider the advantages.

"It generally doesn't wrinkle. If it's good, it doesn't stretch. It travels well — you can just roll it up and throw it in your suitcase," Merrill said.

The black lambskin pants Buddy Charles has worn for more than 10 years are proof that leather, like few other garments, can improve over time.

"That's the beauty of leather. It's real maintenance-free — wear it and forget it," said Charles, assistant manager of North Beach, a leather boutique in Los Angeles.

He said that when customers understand leather, they also understand why prices vary between a less-expensive skirt and one that may sell for $200.

"You could get a $30 leather skirt, but the fact that they are both leather is where the comparison stops," he said. Charles explained that shopping for leather involves comparatively little information.

The feel and look of leather will inform the shopper about the garment's quality, he said, showing a supple $215 red lambskin skirt. Yet, many don't know how to appreciate the finer points.

"If it is unlined, don't buy it. The lining is there so the leather doesn't stretch out of shape," Charles said.

FURTHER, GLUED hems and seam allowances add extra strength to a garment that will be pressured to stretch. Why stretch? New leather should feel tight but not too small.

"Leather cannot be let out. It can only be taken in," Charles said.

That fact inspires fear in some buyers, who think they are buying skirts and pants too small. Not always so, said the experts.

Merrill said a guide to buying leather is that it should "fit like a glove."

Charles added reassurance: "If it's a nice, soft leather, it should stretch to conform to your body in a half-hour," he said. Further, don't worry that your sitting wrinkles will crease the garment irreparably.

"Leather has a memory," Charles said. "You're going to put your own wrinkles in it anyway."

Creases and natural wrinkles of lambskin, cowhide and pigskin often concern shoppers, Merrill said, noting, "That's just a part of leather." The overall appearance of the garment should command the most attention.

Shopping for leather by its country of origin is useless. Italians are known as the world's best tanners, but not everything is guaranteed to be of high quality.

While leathers from Pakistan, India and Korea haven't earned a reputation among purists, Merrill said some of the Korean tanneries have excellent quality control.

LIKE ANY high-priced purchase, proper maintenance can determine the return on the investment. It can be hard to learn to leave leather alone.

"Cleaning leather is a crap shoot," Charles said. "We recommend that you don't clean leather arbitrarily. You spot-clean it and deal with it as it happens. If you dump a pizza on your lap, wash it off with soap and water," he said.

Leather lotion can replenish the luster of smooth leather.

The final measure of quality may come years after the purchase, according to Merrill, who said: "The longer you wear it, the better it looks. That's what a good piece of leather will do."

Leather garments need maintenance

By VALLI HERMAN
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Leather is tough, hard to rip and isn't fazed by ketchup stains.

Yet even the most elegantly constructed leather garments require routine maintenance.

To maximize the return on your investment, the International Fabricare Institute in Maryland offers the following care guidelines:

- Buy from a reputable store.
- Avoid a too-snug fit. Hides are stretched during tanning, and some shrinkage can be expected in cleaning.
- Choose light and pastel colors. They are less likely than dark colors to fade in cleaning. Dark black can be particularly vulnerable to color loss in cleaning.
- A garment with both light and dark shades may experience color migration in cleaning.
- With coats and jackets, wear a scarf to protect the collar from perspiration, makeup and body oils.
- To help remove surface oil from suede, brush frequently with a soft brush.
- If leather gets wet, allow it to air dry. Never expose it to direct heat.
- Always store leather and suede in a cool, ventilated area. Protect leather and suede garments — especially blues, greens and purples — from sun and artificial light.
- When having leather and suede garments cleaned, bring in all matching pieces for cleaning at the same time, and point out any stains or problem areas.
- Clothing with leather or suede trim must be cleaned with a process safe for both the fabric and the trim. The care label must recommend care instructions acceptable for all components of the garment.

Technique lengthens hair in hours

By KATHERINE ULLMER
N.Y. Times News Service

DAYTON, Ohio — Pam Barringer sits quietly as a blond-haired young woman standing above her points a small black gun at her head. The gun-toting woman promises to do the Xenia, Ohio, resident no harm, other than change her appearance, drastically.

The gun is a thermal adhesive gun and the drastic change is from short hair to long in just four hours.

"Usually if you want to make a drastic change you go from long hair to short, but this reverses it," says the gun-toter, Robin Vorpe, a barber/stylist at Danl's California Concept in Beavercreek, a Dayton suburb.

At 9 a.m. Barringer, a short-haired, 27-year-old cosmetologist, slips into the gray upholstered chair in Vorpe's small styling cubicle.

By midafternoon Barringer's chin length bob has turned into long curly blond locks flowing halfway down her back.

"To grow this long normally it would take about three years," Vorpe says. "Hair grows only about six inches a year."

Barringer can't get over the transformation and keeps fingering her long, wavy tresses, looking at herself in the mirror. "I haven't had it this long since elementary school," she says.

THE MAGIC Vorpe works is called hair fusion, a process of hair extension using heat and an adhesive developed about a year and a half ago in California.

Vorpe, 27, traveled to California last summer and to Washington, D.C., in November to learn the technique and how to teach it to other stylists.

"It's new here," she says, "but I think it is really going to take off."

Fusion differs from hair bonding, another hair extension technique, in that tiny strands of hair (50 to 75 strands each), rather than wide wefts of hair, are fused, Vorpe says. "These (fused strands) move more naturally than bonded hair and are semi-permanent, lasting three to six months (until hair grows long enough that the bond shows)."

While the bonds aren't supposed to loosen if taken care of properly, fused hair does require some maintenance, she says. It should be checked and adjusted after six to eight weeks. "Sometimes the hair loops and we have to reheat the bond and pull that down so the hair doesn't get tangled," she says.

Hair fusion can be used to add length, volume, texture or color to hair, she says, though it doesn't help in cases of complete baldness "because you need some hair to fuse it onto."

WHEREAS SOME people like a full-head extension (about 150 extensions or one-quarter pound of hair), others prefer partials to add volume, or tails or braids to create a dramatic effect.

The procedure costs $300 to $800 for a full- or partial-hair extension; $50 or more for an effect, such as a braid or tail, Vorpe says.

If you decide you don't want long hair anymore or it grows out, the removal fee is $65.

To attach a full-hair extension, Vorpe first combs Barringer's hair up onto her head creating a U-shaped line at the back of the head. She attaches the new hair in strands to the hair below this line about one-half inch from the scalp.

Thermal adhesive gun in hand, she applies two little beads of adhesive from the tip of the gun to the end of the strand she wants to attach. She presses this to a similar strand of Barringer's own hair a half inch from the scalp. Then she reheats the wax-like adhesive on the strand using the tip of the gun, forming a bond as she rolls and twists the strand at the point of attachment. The hair is immediately fused and the end result feels like a small waxed spot one-fourth inch long on the hair. This is hidden under the person's own hair and therefore not visible.

She repeats the process until all the strands are attached in a pattern best suited for the style and hair of the client. Once all the hair is attached, she cuts and styles the hair, blending the old with the new.

THE HAIR can be brushed and combed, though it does take some special precautions. "Heat is its enemy," she says, "as is oil," since both tend to break down the adhesive bond. For this reason, oily conditioners are not recommended. Those with naturally oily hair would have to wash it frequently.

A wide-toothed comb and brush should be used to avoid damaging the bond, Vorpe says, but otherwise the hair "can be treated just as you would your own. You can even use hot rollers as long as you don't get them right next to the bond."

Hair can be blow-dried on warm (not hot) temperatures but there's no sitting under hair dryers, she says. Sitting in the hot sun for long periods of time could also damage the bonds. "I'd wear it (hair) long in winter and cut it short in summer and then come back in," she says.

Some people who have it done don't want anybody to know, Vorpe says, though others can't wait to show off their new look.

"I'm going over to my mother's tonight to show my parents and maybe stop by a girlfriend's," Barringer says. "My husband will get his dream too. He's always told me he wanted me to grow my hair long, but I never had the patience."

Some styles have become fashion classics

By CARRIE DONOVAN
N.Y. Times News Service

Fashions come and fashions go. But some styles never fail.

What would a woman do, for instance, without her pearls, her black cashmere sweater and a pair of well-tailored black pants?

For that matter, how can a wardrobe work without a good white shirt, jeans, a batch of T-shirts and a trench coat, too?

In recent years, running shoes, a muffler and a big shawl have been added to the list of invaluables. Though the toe or heel shape may change, basic pump shoes are also indispensable.

Now you can add a slim black skirt that ends above the knee, a pair of well-cut boots coming to just below the knee and cowboy boots.

Sunglasses are a way of life today. Animal patterns are in for all foreseeable time. The most popular continues to be leopard spots or tiger or zebra stripes.

The little black dress has now shrunk to the shape of a slinky slip. This new version will probably stay a long while.

And never forget the black ribbon hair bow. Coco Chanel knew a thing or two when she started wearing hers in the 1920s.

DEAR ABBY

Grandma wants punishment to fit crimes

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am 58 years old, and raised my grandson from the time he was 2 years old until he was 7. "Alvin" is 11 now and living with his mother and dad.

Four months ago, they told me that I could have Alvin for the weekend, so I drove 35 miles to pick him up. After I had packed his bags and we were ready to leave, his father said Alvin couldn't go because he had cursed at his mother!

My contention was, "Punish the child, not me." I think his parents should have allowed me to take the boy, then punish him after he returned.

Well, it happened again. Last week, Alvin got a failing grade on a test, so his parents refused to let him come to spend the weekend with me.

I would like to know what you think of this. — DISGUSTED WITH THE PARENTS

DEAR DISGUSTED: Obviously you are being punished as much as (or perhaps more than) your grandson. Have a heart-to-heart talk with the parents and ask them to please find a way to punish Alvin without punishing you. But be aware that his parents will have the last word, and it's their prerogative to use the form of punishment they find the most effective.

DEAR ABBY: I have always heard that 13 at a dinner table was bad luck. Where did that superstition originate? — SUPERSTITIOUS IN WATERLOO, IOWA

DEAR SUPERSTITIOUS: I suspect it signaled bad luck for the hostess who had service for only 12 in china, stemware and flatware, and her finest tablecloth had only a dozen napkins — not to mention a dining-room set with 12 chairs. She had planned a formal dinner for 12 when a guest called at the last minute to ask if she could bring a friend.

Or perhaps it had something to do with the Last Supper.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are season ticket-holders of the San Francisco Opera and Ballet; we truly enjoy the magic of each performance. One problem has become increasingly irritating. The majority of women who attend apply offensive amounts of cologne or perfume. Often the fragrance clouds are so thick, one can taste them!

The strongest allergy pills are useless in preventing the fumes from penetrating and causing me to have highly uncomfortable sneezing fits. Echoing throughout the house, other poor unfortunate souls can be heard, afflicted with the allergic sneezing attacks.

Might I suggest that in consideration of others, a little dab of perfume on each wrist, or behind each ear, or on each ankle — but not all at once!

What do you think, Abby? For a fragrance to be effective, is it necessary to bathe in it? Please help. — AH-CHOO!

DEAR AH-CHOO: An overpowering fragrance on a woman (or man) defeats its purpose. An effective fragrance should cause others to come a little closer for a better whiff. Unfortunately, users of fragrances do not realize that in a crowded theater, the natural body odors of hundreds of people who had used only toilet soap would smell better than the costliest French perfume.

DEAR ABBY: My pet peeve is using "excuse me" instead of "pardon me." When I went to school, "excuse me" was used when someone wanted to leave the room. Now it's used for "I beg your pardon."

Please try to straighten out a few readers, Abby. The English language is being murdered: "Ya' know, ya' know," and "I go" and "he goes," instead of "I said" and "he said." Thanks a bunch. — JEAN MAURA

P.S. And for the same two-bit postage stamp: I notice that people are pronouncing the "t" in "often." When I went to school, the "t" was silent.

AT WIT'S END

Eating at home simpler than restaurant dining

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

I can't get too worked up over someone taping a phone call between my mother and me on a cellular phone. It would serve them right. The same goes for eavesdropping on my conversations with my kids' answering machines. Big deal. Every day it's the same message: "Make me a grandmother!"

What we really should be screaming about is how advertising is invading our privacy. In recent years we've all become walking billboards for designers. Professional athletes are as subtle as demolition balls. Hot-air balloons hover over us with corporate logos and billboards dot the countryside. I half expected Manuel Noriega to wave and shout as he left the plane in Miami, "I'm going to Disneyland!"

Now it seems the last frontier of privacy is about to be assaulted by commercialism — dining out. Someone got the bright idea that waiters and waitresses have nothing to do except introduce themselves, tell you about the specials not on the menu, announce the soup du jour and the catch of the day, take your order, deliver your drinks and bread, toss the salad, elevate the pepper mill like a chalice, set fire to your food, recite the litany of the desserts, serve coffee and disappear for two hours with your credit card. So, an ad agency is suggesting waiters and waitresses model clothes and fill you in on where to buy them and how much they cost.

Get real. I have more conversation with my waiter now than I've had with my entire family over the past two years.

There's more. Also under consideration is a magazine/menu that will run ads for food, beverages and banks (that makes sense) and offer food and drinks named for advertisers. ("Could I suggest starting off with a Lincoln S&L Lite Hemlock, sir?")

In my heart, I know it won't stop there. When someone is late for his reservation, he'll be awarded the "No Excuse Jeans Award." Strangers will sit down at your table and say, "I'm not a doctor, but I own a white coat and pretend I am when I eat out, and you need more fiber in your diet."

It will only be a matter of time before a rabbit with a drum and two Energizer batteries will march through your stall in the powder room.

It may seem like a little thing. First, a book of matches in the center of the table with the name of an insurance company on it, and the next thing you know, there will be a fax machine to place your order for Stud's (or whatever his name is) leather jacket.

I'm probably getting paranoid, but the other night in our favorite restaurant every waiter there looked like Ed McMahon.

Snip in time saves haircut, morale

SAN RAFAEL, Calif. (AP) — You can't do a thing with your hair so you race off to your hairdresser, pleading for relief.

He shampoos it, snips off maybe a half-inch, gives it a blow-dry, and you walk out happy.

How can so little do so much? For one thing, it reduces the weight and thus lifts the hair. It also gets rid of split ends and cleans up the hairline.

"Men and women suffer equally, but those with shorter hair might need only a quarter-inch trimmed while women with long hair might need up to an inch taken off," says Dan Garvey, who teaches stylists at 500 Supercuts salons around the country. "Taking off just one inch changes not only the shape of the hair, but also the design."

Watch industry unites against sales on street

NEW YORK (AP) — When you can be duped into buying a portable radio with no innards or a telephone filled with sand, a $50 watch that looks like $5,000 may seem a bargain.

But with a 10-yard or 10-minute warranty, whichever comes first, all of these products are useless, and the watch industry, at least, is fighting back.

According to Bill Shuster of Jewelers Circular-Keystone, a jewelry trade magazine, one in five luxury items sold is counterfeit. Most of the bogus wares are sold on street corners in major cities, but pawn shops, discount merchants and electronics stores also are among the guilty.

"Everyone wants a deal," says Steffan Aletti, president of the Jewelry Industry Council, "but watches on street corners are not a deal. You're buying a piece of junk for $50, which is what you might pay for an attractive, genuine, warranteed non-precious metal watch."

Counterfeit watches are exported illegally from the Orient, says Aletti. Once here, unmarked units are affixed with faces carrying a name brand. At this point, under various federal trademark and counterfeiting laws, they technically become stolen property subject to criminal and civil penalties.

Some watch companies have investigators tracking counterfeits to their source. Recently, the Watchmakers of Switzerland, the American Watch Association and Jewelers of America have created a toll-free counterfeit hotline: 1-800-333-FAKE. Through this number consumers can report suspected counterfeits anywhere in the United States.

'Coupon Connie' hopes to trade on contrite attitude

DALLAS (AP) — As her federal mail fraud and conspiracy trial winds down, a Florida woman has vowed never to clip another coupon.

"I have no intentions whatsoever of ever going back to what I was doing," Connie Arvidson said Monday night. "There's more to life than just coupons."

Final arguments, expected this week, were delayed Monday as U.S. attorneys recalled witnesses.

Mrs. Arvidson, of Boca Raton, Fla., is accused of mail fraud and conspiracy in a $2 million distribution of coupons prosecutors say were counterfeit.

The defendant said she was "addicted" to clipping and swapping coupons.

"Your wife would get hooked too," she warned.

She blamed coupon exchange magazines for promoting a scheme she learned later was too good to be true.

"You were learning to make money from other people's throwaways and I saw nothing wrong with that," she said.

Now, if she's acquitted, Mrs. Arvidson plans to begin a new career — perhaps as a nightclub singer.

"I've been told that I'm pretty decent," she said. "I like doing that and I don't have to go into Dumpsters and work hard like I did before."

She is charged with mail fraud and conspiracy, along with David Rees and James Floyd Richardson, both of San Antonio.

They and seven others were indicted last June in connection with a $2 million counterfeit coupon scam in which bogus coupons for food and other products were printed and distributed nationwide from Texas, prosecutors allege.

Seven others agreed to cooperate with the prosecution in exchange for leniency, and several testified during the trial.

If convicted, Mrs. Arvidson faces up to 30 years in prison and up to $1.5 million in fines.

But she remained optimistic, saying she never knowingly purchased counterfeit coupons.

"The evidence is not very strong — I've not done the things they are accusing me of," she said.

Mrs. Arvidson also said women on the jury appeared to understand her dilemma.

However, she added in a telephone interview from her motel room, "I'm not asking for their sympathy; I'm asking for them to be fair."

Danny Saenz of Austin is chained to a Greyhound bus at the Dallas terminal Monday afternoon to protest the lack of accessibility to the buses.

Disabled people protest lack of access to buses

DALLAS (AP) — Some participants in a wheelchair protest that disrupted bus service at a terminal here compare their struggle to the early days of the civil rights movement.

About 40 people in wheelchairs disrupted bus service at the downtown Greyhound terminal Monday. Some chained themselves to buses to protest lack of access to buses.

Members of American Disabled for Accessible Public Transportation protested for about an hour. The demonstration broke up when police arrested about 25 protesters for refusing to move from their positions in front of, behind and alongside incoming and departing buses.

"If they've got to arrest us, they're just doing what they have to do. I've been arrested before," Tom Pugh of El Paso said.

Protest organizers carried placards with slogans against Greyhound, which has lobbied against proposed federal legislation that would require them to install wheelchair lift devices on all their buses.

"It's the same as Martin Luther King. He knew his people would be arrested when they marched through Alabama or wherever. But the message has to go out, and this is one way of doing it," said Pugh.

Monday's protests followed a similar demonstration Sunday outside a meeting of the American Bus Association here.

Association members oppose the federal legislation requiring wheelchair lifts because commercial bus lines can't afford to install the lifts on all buses, said Michele Trull, spokeswoman for the bus association.

Authorities broke the chains of at least three people who had themselves attached to the wheels of buses. But two protesters threw themselves out of their wheelchairs and had to be carried by police.

Greyhound had tried to negotiate with the group in the past but was rejected, Liz Hale, spokeswoman for the bus line, said.

"For this group to claim that they represent all the handicapped groups is ludicrous. This is a very small radical group," said Ms. Hale.

"They want to ride their own wheelchairs onto our buses. They can't do that on the airplane," Ms. Hale said.

Those arrested would be charged with criminal trespass, a misdemeanor, said police clerk Walter McDonald.

Several buses were routed into nearby parking lots for people to board without interruption during the protest.

New congressman sentenced to 30 days for contempt

HOUSTON (AP) — Craig Washington, who was in Washington today to be sworn in as a congressman, was sentenced to 30 days in jail by a judge who accused him of leaving his clients "in the lurch."

The contempt of court sentence issued Monday marked the second time in two weeks that a judge has imposed a jail sentence on Washington for not heeding notices to appear in court on behalf of clients.

"I've done everything I know to get in touch with Craig, and he's done everything he can to avoid me. He had ample notice to be in the courtroom today. His client was there, and he has been for 2½ years," State District Judge Jim Barr said Monday, referring to the length of the case.

A 15-day sentence was imposed on Washington Jan. 16 by visiting state District Judge Bill Hatten for not appearing on behalf of a defendant in a 4-year-old manslaughter case. A show-cause hearing on that sentence is scheduled for April 30.

Barr scheduled May 18 for a similar hearing on Washington's citation for not appearing on behalf of a man accused of murdering his former common-law wife in late 1987.

Time marches on in Southwest Conference

Jack Crowe meets the press after Arkansas officials announced his appointment.

Razorback officials waste little time

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Jack Crowe is unlike other assistants who routinely trooped into the office of Arkansas athletic director Frank Broyles.

Every December, Broyles said Monday, assistants would ask for his help landing a job as a head coach. Crowe, he said, was the first who didn't.

"My time will come," Crowe told him.

It came Monday when Arkansas, on Broyles' recommendation, hired Crowe to replace Clemson-bound Ken Hatfield.

Crowe, 41, had never been a head coach on the major college level, but he was the offensive coordinator for the Razorbacks' potent wishbone attack, and that was a strong selling point.

"Most of you know that I put a lot of confidence and a lot of faith in a coach who knows how to call signals," Broyles said. "I've always thought that Lou Holtz was the No. 1 signal caller in the college game today. I now tell you that in my opinion our new coach is his equal."

With Crowe pulling the strings, Arkansas set a school record with 4,926 yards, including 627 yards in a 45-39 victory over Houston that Broyles called the "finest offensive game that I have seen played in the 33 years that I've been at Arkansas."

Crowe figured he had no chance at the Arkansas job and was preparing to follow Hatfield to Clemson. In fact, he had dug out his Clemson bag and was at the airport Sunday morning.

"There are 50 head coaches out there who would come here," he said.

Broyles said that when he learned of Hatfield's decision, he called Terry Don Phillips, president of the Razorback Foundation, from California and told him to find Crowe.

Ousted Metcalf gets the shock of his life

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Shelby Metcalf gave Texas A&M 27 years of the winningest basketball in the Southwest Conference. Then the school took his team away from him in the middle of a season.

"I gave half my life to this place," Metcalf said on Monday after being fired. "I'm shocked."

A simmering feud with athletic director John David Crow spelled the end for Metcalf, despite a career record of 438 victories, including 239 in the SWC. His teams won six conference championships.

Metcalf's assistant, John Thornton, will take over on an interim basis.

"It's the most awkward position I've ever been in in my life," Thornton said. "There is no one in the coaching profession in which I have more respect than Shelby Metcalf. I regret it happened this way."

So, too, did Metcalf.

He said he was told by Crow that he was being sacked for calling Crow "a liar."

"I couldn't believe what I was hearing," Metcalf said. "We're killed. It was a way of life for us (his family). It wasn't a job."

Metcalf, 59, met with his lawyer, Head Davis, then had a closed-door session with Crow.

"John David said I called him a liar in the newspaper, and I never did that," Metcalf said. "That was the only reason he gave. He didn't say anything about graduation rates or anything. My graduation rates have been good."

Metcalf has also been criticized for depending too heavily on junior college players but said, "John David never brought up junior college players. I've had some pretty good junior college players."

Metcalf had one year remaining on a four-year contract he received after winning the 1987 SWC's postseason tournament. The school didn't say what he would do under the "reassignment."

"The least they could do would be to pay me off," Metcalf said. "It doesn't show a lot of class to let me hang in the wind."

Crow said Metcalf "left me no alternative."

"He has chosen to take his ill feelings concerning his program directly to the media, bypassing everyone in a position of authority at Texas A&M," Crow said. "It was my intention to meet with Coach Metcalf following the season. Any public comments I have ever made to the media concerning the A&M basketball program were the result of direct questions and no time did I discuss any member of the coaching staff that I recall."

Shelby Metcalf

Metcalf said he was told to check with school president William Mobley about his new job.

"I guess I'm supposed to call him in the morning," said Metcalf, who makes a base salary of $77,000 a season plus about $5,000 in fringe benefits.

"It hit Shelby like a ton of bricks," an athletic department source said. "I saw him when he walked out of John David's office. He had a stunned look in his eyes. He looked up and said, 'They released me. They released me.' You could tell he didn't believe they would do it."

"All I can say is Shelby Metcalf doesn't deserve what came to him," guard Lynn Suber said. "I'm very surprised. We just have to pull together as a unit. We're 100 percent behind Coach Thornton."

"Metcalf is a fighter," guard Freddie Ricks said.

"I love Coach Metcalf. He's been like a father to me," Ricks said. "I'm just stunned right now. I'm glad to see Coach Thornton take his place if anyone had to do it. I really can't say that I'm happy that he's gone.

"We're just all shocked right now. I don't think any of us was ready for this. I know we weren't."

Metcalf said escalating public criticism of his program allegedly by Crow was "very disruptive" to his team, which was 8-11 overall and 2-3 in the SWC.

He accused Crow of "cussing me" during the recent NCAA Convention at Dallas.

"He (Crow) cussed me everywhere he goes," Metcalf said of Crow, who won the Heisman Trophy in 1957 when Bear Bryant was the football coach at A&M.

The situation reached a head Saturday when Arkansas defeated the Aggies 110-84, A&M's third straight SWC loss. After the game Metcalf expressed his doubts about his future with the Aggies.

"I could have kept quiet," he said, "but I talked to my family before the game and we decided not to."

Crow has been the athletic director since December 1988. Before that Crow was an assistant athletic director under Jackie Sherrill.

"Jackie Sherrill was good to me when he was athletic director," Metcalf told The Associated Press. "He gave me a four-year contract. Things were fine. Then John David came along."

Metcalf's teams were 239-158 in the SWC and 438-306 overall.

"Let me make it very clear that I along with countless others appreciate the dedicated work that Shelby has done throughout his 27 seasons at Texas A&M," Crow said.

Metcalf had a doctorate degree in philosophy which he earned at A&M in 1974. His dissertation was "Crowd Behavior at Southwest Conference Basketball Games."

Metcalf, who had 21 winning seasons in 26 years, said he would never go to another game in G. Rollie White Coliseum.

Mizzou earns top rank after mild upset

Top 25 Poll

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — To Norm Stewart, being ranked No. 1 is like coming into possession of the Hope Diamond.

"You don't really own it," the Missouri coach said. "You just hold it a while and then pass it along to somebody else to hold."

Stewart's Tigers, the only one of last week's top seven teams to post a weekend victory, took over the No. 1 spot in The Associated Press basketball poll Monday for the second time in school history.

Hanging in at No. 2 are the Kansas Jayhawks (19-1), who held the top spot for two weeks before losing 95-87 to Missouri on Saturday. The Tigers (17-1) jumped from fourth.

Missouri received 56 first-place votes and 1,562 points from the nationwide panel of sportswriters and broadcasters. Kansas, like Missouri a member of the Big Eight, dropped to No. 2 with four first-place votes and 1,481 points.

It was the first time two teams from the same conference were 1-2 since North Carolina and Duke of the Atlantic Coast Conference did it in January 1986.

Georgetown (14-1), which had a chance to move up one spot to No. 1 after Kansas lost to Missouri Saturday afternoon, instead dropped to third after losing to Connecticut 70-65 Saturday night.

The Hoyas were the only other team to receive a first-place votes, getting three on the way to 1,444 points.

The top ranking, fun as it may be, is still "a pretty intangible thing," Stewart said.

"Maybe they should make a trophy and pass it around so you could show it," he said. "It's intangible. But at the same time I'm beginning to like it more just from that standpoint. It's something that's passed around. So get it for a while and enjoy it and enjoy the things that go with it."

Louisville (14-2) jumped from 10th to fourth with 1,317 points and was followed by UNLV (12-3), which was ninth last week. The Rebels had 1,142 points.

Arkansas (14-2) jumped from 12th to sixth with 1,145 points, 24 more than Michigan (13-3), which dropped one place after losing at Iowa.

Duke (13-3) stayed eighth and had 964 points, 21 more than Oklahoma (12-2), which dropped from the ranks of the undefeated and to ninth in the poll with losses at Kansas State and Arizona.

Illinois (13-3), which also lost two games — Michigan and Purdue — dropped from seventh to round out the Top Ten with 858 points, 38 more than Syracuse (12-3), which dropped from fifth to 11th after losing to Connecticut and Providence.

Following Syracuse in the Second Ten were Indiana, Georgia Tech and Purdue — all tied for 13th — St. John's, Louisiana State, Oregon State, La Salle, Arizona and newcomer Connecticut.

The last five places went to Minnesota, Loyola Marymount, UCLA, Alabama and Xavier, Ohio.

Connecticut (15-3) was ranked for one week last season and this season is the fourth Big East team in the poll.

The Big Eight had three teams in the top 10 but the Big Ten had five in the rankings — Michigan, Illinois, Indiana, Purdue and Minnesota — meaning the Big East and Big Ten had more than one-third of the ranked teams.

North Carolina State (13-6) dropped from the rankings after being 19th last week. The Wolfpack beat Wake Forest and lost to North Carolina.

Stewart's 1982 Missouri team spent two weeks atop the poll and the veteran coach made no effort to mask his glee at getting back.

Bulldogs try to bite AHS Eagles

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

The Midland High Bulldogs will try to keep their playoff hopes alive with a win in Chaparral Center tonight against District 4-5A boys basketball leader Abilene High.

While MHS coach Jack Stephenson isn't saying that a loss tonight would have much effect on Bulldog playoff chances, common sense dictates that this is a big game nonetheless. Tipoff is at 8 p.m.

While Abilene, 5-0 in district play, took sole possession of first place in 4-5A with a 98-96 win over San Angelo, MHS, 16-9 and 4-1, moved into a second-place tie with San Angelo on the heels of an overtime win at Odessa High.

In other 4-5A boys action tonight, Midland Lee visits Abilene Cooper while Odessa Permian hosts San Angelo.

In 4-5A girls action tonight, Permian will try to pull within a game of district-leading San Angelo on the Lady Bobcats' home floor. San Angelo is 7-0 in district play, while second-place Permian is 5-2.

Locally, Midland Lee hosts Abilene Cooper in an 8 p.m. start at the Lee gymnasium. Also, Midland High travels to Abilene High. The Lady Bulldogs are just four days removed from snapping a 20-game district losing streak at the expense of Odessa High.

Stephenson said the MHS-AHS game should be high on anyone's excitement index.

"It will be the most exciting game of the year," he said. "Abilene plays like Hobbs, N.M., and so do we."

Clark sets pay record

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The San Francisco Giants like the way Will Clark swings a bat. They're willing to pay him $20,000 for every hit he gets.

The San Francisco first baseman signed a $15-million, four-year contract on Monday that makes him the highest-paid player in baseball history.

"When you play like a Hall of Famer, you get paid like a Hall of Famer," Giants general manager Al Rosen said in announcing the deal.

Last summer, manager Roger Craig called Clark "a hitter who comes along about once in a decade." He's also the most expensive one to come along since the Cincinnati Red Stockings began paying its players in 1869.

"Fifteen million dollars is an unbelievable number and I don't think you can feel any better than I feel right now," Clark said.

He batted .333 for the National League West-champion Giants in 1989 with 23 home runs and 111 RBIs, 104 runs and 196 hits. He was second in batting to San Diego's Tony Gwynn, third in RBIs behind teammate Kevin Mitchell and St. Louis' Pedro Guerrero, tied New York's Howard Johnson and Chicago's Ryne Sandberg for the NL lead in runs scored.

Clark's average was the highest for any Giant since Willie Mays batted .347 in 1958, and was the first Giant with consecutive 100-RBI seasons since Willie McCovey drove in 126 in 1969 and 1970. Through four major league seasons, Clark has a .304 average with 98 homers and 352 RBIs.

Niners on verge of history

Super Bowl

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — If this Super Bowl is about anything, it's about history.

And that isn't lost on Dan Reeves, whose Denver Broncos inch toward becoming two-touchdown underdogs in Sunday's game. He wonders just how pumped up the San Francisco 49ers will be.

"When you have within your grasp a piece of history — to win back-to-back Super Bowls, the pointspread doesn't mean a thing," Reeves says. "We know we're not going to sneak up on them."

As the 49ers and Broncos began practice Monday, everything seemed centered on how differently both teams were approaching the circus-like spectacle called the NFL championship game.

San Francisco is on the verge of winning the first back-to-back Super Bowls in a decade. A victory would also be the 49ers' fourth of the '80s, tying the Pittsburgh Steelers of the '70s for the best mark of the Super Bowl era.

A 49er victory would also drop the Broncos to 0-4, tying them with the Minnesota Vikings for the worst record.

And while the 49ers, at least, now concede that repeating has been on their minds since training camp, both teams claim to be unconcerned with the historical aspects of this game. The Broncos also claim not to care that San Francisco, which opened as 10-point favorites, is now favored by 13.

"That has nothing to do with how good the teams are," says Joe Montana, who already has two Super Bowl MVP trophies and could easily have won a third last year.

"That has to do with how the public perceives the teams. I know that because the league sends a security guy around each year to talk about gambling."

Public perceptions or not, the week began with two questions — one for the 49ers, "How can you lose?" and one for the Broncos, "How can you win?"

Netters fight extreme heat Down Under

Australian Open

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — There may be hotter spots on earth than center court at the Australian Open, but only fools would play tennis in them — unless they were getting a lot of money.

The court temperature rose to 140 degrees at this $3 million tournament today, transforming the stadium into the world's largest sauna and testing the fortitude of the top players.

Two-time defending champion Steffi Graf and 18-year-old American Mary Joe Fernandez passed the test and reached the semifinals, though not without sweating away several pounds in close matches.

Failing were Patty Fendick, who let a 5-2 lead over Graf slip away in the second set, and third-seeded Zina Garrison, broken twice while serving for the match against Fernandez. Stefan Edberg, third-seeded in men's singles, warmed up for Wednesday's quarterfinals against David Wheaton by playing a 3½-hour, five-set doubles match.

He might have saved his energy, since he lost anyway with partner Pat Cash against the top-seeded American pair of Rick Leach and Jim Pugh.

In an even longer doubles match — the longest in Australian Open history — South Africans Pieter Aldrich and Danie Visser outlasted Americans Scott Davis and Robert Van't Hof in a 5-hour, 29-minute match.

Aldrich and Visser's winning score was 4-6, 6-4, 7-6 (7-4), 4-6, 23-21.

The match, which began in the hottest part of the day and ended in the balmy evening, was 19 minutes longer than a five-set, 84-game marathon won two years ago by Andrew Castle and Roberto Saad against Glenn Michibata and Grant Connell.

The weather is expected to get even hotter on Wednesday, and so may the action, with men's quarterfinals pitting defending champion Ivan Lendl against Andre Cherkasov, No. 2 Boris Becker against Mats Wilander, and No. 12 Noah Yannick against Mikael Pernfors.

How hot is it? Hot enough to nearly cook Graf and make Garrison steam.

Graf had her toughest match of the tournament against the tenacious Fendick of Sacramento, Calif., but won 6-3, 7-5 to tie her career-best winning streak with a 46th straight victory.

Graf, who didn't drop a set in winning the last two Australian Opens, came close to losing her first this year when Fendick took a 5-2 lead and had a set-point on Graf's serve in the second set.

But Graf held and allowed Fendick only four points over the next four games to wrap up the match.

Fernandez sent Garrison out with a 1-6, 6-2, 8-6 upset and reached a Grand Slam semifinals for the second time.

Fernandez, the sixth seed from Miami who made the semis in the French Open last year, broke Garrison when she was serving for the match at 5-4 and 6-5 in the third set, then broke her again at love to win the match.

"It's pretty frustrating. I don't understand it sometimes," said Garrison, who appeared to have a clear run into the finals after an injury knocked out No. 2 Gabriela Sabatini.

"I work very hard, but I never seem able to make my breaks," said Garrison, of Houston, a semifinalist at last year's U.S. Open. "Until I do, I don't deserve to win. (This was) a match I think I lost. It was in my hands and I didn't take advantage of it. More than anything, I wanted to win. Sometimes you want to win too bad."

American amateur Angelica Gavaldon's fantasy ride into the quarters of her first Grand Slam tournament ended with a 6-4, 6-3 loss to West German Claudia Porwik.

Gavaldon, 16, beat two-time champion Hana Mandlikova en route to the quarters. As an amateur, Gavaldon can claim expenses, but won't collect the $24,000 prize for reaching the quarters.

Gavaldon said the money is tempting, but added, "I think if I keep doing well, the money will come."

"This is the type of thing that makes you want to turn pro, but I think I should wait a little longer," she said. "One tournament is not enough. I think I should play a couple of more tournaments and see how I do. I want to be really sure."

Porwik, 21, a quarterfinalist here in 1988, reached the semis for the first time in a Grand Slam event.

Clemson AD under guard after phoned death threats

CLEMSON, S.C. (AP) — Clemson athletic director Bobby Robinson is under 24-hour police protection after receiving death threats following the resignation of football coach Danny Ford, authorities said Monday.

The State Law Enforcement Division, Clemson campus police and Clemson city police have been guarding Robinson since Saturday, SLED spokesman Hugh Munn said SLED became involved at Clemson's request.

"There had been some threats made," Munn said. "I would assume that the threats are at least partly connected with that (Ford's resignation), but I have not been told. That's not normally something we would go into anyway.

"It is not a large number," the spokesman added. "It's serious enough that we can't take any chances, but we don't really expect any problems."

Ford resigned just two weeks after the NCAA accused the school of 14 rules violations involving illegal recruiting practices and playing players.

Players and fans held protests and candlelight vigils following Ford's resignation, calling for his reinstatement and the firing of Robinson and Clemson president Max Lennon.

When Arkansas coach Ken Hatfield, Ford's replacement, arrived on campus with this wife, Sandy, they were greeted by 200 jeering fans, some of whom wore T-shirts bearing Ford's likeness.

Robinson, meantime, said the threats are "so unimportant that it's not even worth talking about."

"Listen, Clemson people are the greatest people in the world," he said.

Spurs stay hot at home

NBA

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Zeroing in on the 2,000-mark for career steals, Maurice Cheeks worked on a different statistic Monday night.

An 11-point per-game scorer, Cheeks came up with a season-high 22, helping San Antonio defeat Washington 124-115 to win its 16th straight home game.

"I can't even remember the last time I scored 22," said Cheeks, whose previous best this season was a 19 points. "And it probably won't happen again, either."

The NBA's all-time steals leader added two more, giving him 1,997 for his 12-year career.

With David Robinson adding 28 points, Terry Cummings contributing 25 and David Wingate a career-high 11 rebounds, the Spurs moved within a victory of their all-time franchise mark of 17 straight at home.

Kings 136, Clippers 104

Sacramento shot a season-high 64.7 percent in their most productive game, getting 24 points from Kenny Smith and 22 from Wayman Tisdale in the lopsided win.

Suns 126, Magic 103

Phoenix won its eighth straight game behind 27 points and 17 assists by Kevin Johnson.

Rockets 116, Nuggets 104

Mitchell Wiggins scored 13 of his 21 points in a one-sided first quarter as as the Rockets won their ninth straight home game.

Tarpley comes back...again

DALLAS (AP) — Forward Roy Tarpley, reinstated to the Dallas Mavericks but still bearing two strikes in the NBA's anti-drug program, concedes that many fans have heard his story before.

"A lot of people ... were trying to help me and I think it's important for me to take responsibility for myself. And that's what I have done," said Tarpley, who resumes practice today. "I really don't expect you to believe me because you're probably hearing the same thing you heard before.

"I'll just have to make my actions speak louder than words," he said. "That's what I'm all about today is actions."

In addition to his latest suspension, which cost him more than $240,000 and forced him to miss 34 games, Tarpley has been treated twice for drug and alcohol abuse.

Red-hot Hogs differ on what rank means

SWC

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Arkansas, at No. 6, has its highest ranking this season, but just what effect that ranking had on Monday night's 100-89 Southwest conference victory over Houston, depends on who you talk to.

The Razorbacks (15-2, 7-0) battle Texas on Thursday for the conference lead. Houston fell to 12-6, 3-3 with Monday's loss. Texas is 6-0 in the league after beating Texas Tech Monday night.

"The ranking kind of affected the team. It gave us a little extra momentum," said Mario Credit, who, along with Ron Huery, each scored 21 points.

Then there's Huery.

"The ranking means nothing to me," he said. "We have to keep winning, get in the tournament and then show everybody how good we are."

Houston's Chris Morris, who hit nine of 10 from the field, led all scorers with 26 points. Byron Smith added 21 for Cougars.

Son knows best; Hoyas win; Johnson stands out for UNLV

Associated Press

Being the coach's son can have its advantages, like not having to do what the coach says.

So when Georgetown coach John Thompson designed a final play Monday night, Ronnie Thompson decided to do something different.

"He was talking to me when he was going to inbound the ball," the coach said. "He said, 'I'm going to throw it to Alonzo (Mourning).' I said, 'no, yes, be careful.' Alonzo was maybe our third option."

This time, father didn't know best. The son, it turned out, did the right thing when he passed to Mourning, whose basket with 18 seconds left lifted the third-ranked Hoyas over Villanova 70-69.

In other games, No. 5 UNLV topped Long Beach State 86-77, No. 6 Arkansas beat Houston 100-89, No. 8 Duke defeated William & Mary 109-76, No. 18 La Salle downed Loyola, Md., 89-69 and Wisconsin stung No. 21 Minnesota 77-75.

Georgetown (15-1 overall, 5-1 in the Big East) rebounded from its loss Saturday night at Connecticut. Villanova (11-9) has won its three conference road games, but lost all four at home.

The Wildcats rallied from an 11-point deficit in the final 10:18 and overcame a five-point margin in the last 69 seconds for a 69-68 lead.

Georgetown called timeout with 20 seconds left and Thompson inbounded from the right side, about even with the foul line. Mourning took the pass in the lane, spun and scored, and was fouled.

"It came down to the last pass, the last shot," Villanova coach Rollie Massimino said. "On that out-of-bounds play, we wanted to give (Rodney) Taylor help on Mourning to make them beat us with a jumper."

"But they threw it in and (Mourning) turned with his great athletic ability and made a big play," he said.

No. 5 UNLV 86, Long Beach State 77

Larry Johnson scored 30 points and Anderson Hunt added 22 as UNLV coach Jerry Tarkanian improved to 73-0 lifetime in games at Long Beach. He coached Long Beach State from 1968-73 and was 63-0 at home.

UNLV (13-3 overall, 7-1 in the Big West) won for the 10th time in 11 games. The Runnin' Rebels have won eight straight at Long Beach.

No. 8 Duke 109, William & Mary 76

Duke made 38 of 43 foul shots and, led by Phil Henderson's 25 points, won at William & Mary.

Duke (14-3) shot 18-for-20 from the free throw line in the first half and led 47-30. The Blue Devils pulled away in a game that matched Coach Mike Krzyzewski against one of his former assistants, Chuck Swenson.

No. 18 La Salle 89, Loyola, Md. 69

Lionel Simmons had 36 points and 14 rebounds as La Salle beat Loyola for the 26th time in 27 tries. He got 12 points during a 25-8 spurt as the host Explorers increased a 45-38 lead.

Wisconsin 77, No. 21 Minnesota 75

Patrick Tompkins caught an inbounds lob pass from Kurt Portmann and scored at the buzzer, leading Wisconsin over visiting Minnesota.

Official hopes to save track

BRADY (AP) — Richard Lerma runs a betting operation, and he's hoping that someone will take a gamble that the state's only betting horse track can recoup some of its losses this year.

Lerma, manager of G. Rollie White Downs, hopes to hear from a white knight investor or somebody else by Feb. 5, when the Texas Racing Commission will consider awarding 1990 racing dates to viable tracks.

The Brady facility opened last October. When racing stopped, in early December, the track was $1 million in debt to various contractors and suppliers, including a drug-testing laboratory and an advertising agency.

In spite of the debts, Heart of Texas Racing Inc. has asked the commission to allow horse racing to resume in Brady on April 14 and continue through September. The owners say they're trying to woo a new investor and stall creditors a little longer.

Rollie White Downs could be helped if other Texas tracks delay their own start-ups. If that happens, Rollie White would be the only track available for legal wagering when spring arrives.

"I don't know of any other track that realistically is going to open by April," Lerma said.

After a 52-year hiatus for legalized racetrack betting, the Brady track became the first in Texas to offer the wagering that voters approved statewide in 1987.

By late November, with colder weather setting in, the track opted to end its season several weeks early rather than run up more losses.

Costs, however, continued to roll in for harried start-up and unexpected regulatory costs.

"Any time you're rushing everybody who's working for you, it's going to cost you. You don't have time to get bids and you settle for what you can get," Lerma said.

Lerma also is hoping to find more investment money to complete the grandstand clubhouse.

CROWE

Broyles said the search committee interviewed Crowe for more than an hour on Sunday. The committee, Crowe said, "made it awful easy for me."

"I always knew I would be a head coach," Crowe said. "It was a big surprise how it happened, where it happened.

"It's been a quick 24 hours. Yesterday morning started off with a lot different direction. I would like to thank Ken Hatfield for bringing me to the University of Arkansas. I think watching him has taught me as much as anybody I have ever seen. I've been around some good football coaches ... but I really can say the time I've spent here has brought a lot of things together."

He said he entered the job knowing that the job is bigger than any one man. "The formula here works. It's worked with a lot of different faces and a lot of different personalities. It works because of the people of Arkansas. This is the people of Arkansas' program."

He promised integrity, academic excellence and winning.

"I will give the best people in this country, football players and coaches, an opportunity to see what Arkansas is and if they choose it, we'll open the door to them," he said.

Crowe said he didn't apply for the Arkansas job. Once he had it, he said, the first thing he did was contact strength coach John Stucky, to make sure he was staying. Stucky is.

He said he offered all of Hatfield's assistants a position, but only J.B. Grimes accepted the offer.

Crowe said he would like to continue to call plays.

"I realize the head coaching role is bigger than the role of offensive coordinator, but I know there are some things I can do for the team," he said. "After I get the scope of the whole job, I will have to make a very realistic decision about what I can do. If I can do, I want to do that. I cannot promise that I will do that."

He said his first priority is lining up a recruiting coordinator since national signing date is Feb. 14. Reportedly, he contacted at least one person about that position on Monday.

SUPER

Not only have the 49ers won three Super Bowls in the '80s, but they play in the NFC, whose representative has won five straight, four in one-sided games. The Broncos were the recipients of two of those shellackings — 39-20 by the New Yor Giants in 1987 and 42-10 by the Washington Redskins in 1988.

Moreover, the 49ers are on the kind of playoff hot streak that in 1985, '86 and '87 led to Super Bowl blowouts. Not only was their 14-2 record the best in the regular season by two games, but their playoff victories were both one-sided — 41-13 over the Minnesota Vikings and 30-3 over the Los Angeles Rams, with whom they had split two close games during the regular season.

To San Francisco coach George Seifert, who celebrated his 50th birthday Monday, the "How can you lose?" and "How can you win?" questions are irrelevant. His position: One game is one game and besides, the Broncos have won the last four regular-season meetings with the 49ers, dating back to 1979. The 49ers did win an exhibition game, 35-17, which Denver played without John Elway, who sat out because his knee brace had been misplaced.

"I think these are the two best teams in the league," said Seifert, only the third first-year coach to reach the Super Bowl. "If the Broncos were a team that year-in, year out we had beaten, our players might have reason to be overconfident."

The 49ers also regard Elway as the wild-card — suggesting that his free-lance tactics wreak havoc on any team.

Elway had a great first half in the 1987 game against the Giants, passing for 187 yards. Yet the Broncos led just 10-9 because Rich Karlis missed two short field goals and because they were stopped on four cracks from inside the New York 5.

The Giants came back and outscored them 29-3 in the first 25 minutes of the second half.

The next year, the Broncos led Washington 10-0 after a quarter, then allowed a Super Bowl-record 35 points in the second period.

Through Stephenson's eyes, Abilene looks a lot like another flock of Eagles that the Bulldogs are familiar with — the Hobbs Eagles.

"They are so much like Hobbs," Stephenson said. "They wear the same colors, they're both the Eagles, and their coach played there."

Both teams are led by a triumvirate of double-figure scorers.

Abilene relies heavily on sophomore post Tyrone Washington, fifth in district scoring with 19.4 points per game; shooting guard Shannon Garrett (18.2); and point guard Donald Hall (15.2).

Midland High's Scott Melzer had an off-night shooting against OHS, but still leads the team in scoring with an average of 20 points per game in district play and 17 ppg overall.

Other double-digit averagers for the Bulldogs include Michael Wright (15.2 ppg.) and Rodrick Hickey (14.0 ppg.), but Keith Gilbreath had a career-high 19 points against OHS to boost his season average to more than eight points per game.

Diminutive Albert Ray (4.6 ppg) is the other Bulldog starter.

CLARK

"With the signing of this contract, the demands aren't necessarily going to be easier, they're going to be tougher," Clark said.

Looking back to the World Series, which the Oakland Athletics won four games to one over San Francisco, Clark quipped: "You can't have any more pressure than Game Five, partnuh."

Clark's contract includes a no-trade clause, which the New Orleans native who received more than 1.8 million All-Star votes in 1989 said mattered more to him than money.

"First of all, I love the organization I'm in," he said. "I love the Bay area and the fans."

Clark said he and his lawyer, Jeffrey Moorad of Berkeley, debated with the Giants about various contract details and asked for $3 million in salary arbitration while the Giants offered $2.3 million. Clark said once the no-trade clause was agreed to, "things pretty much fell into place."

His contract includes a $2 million signing bonus, $1.75 million in 1990, $3.25 million in 1991, $3.75 million in 1992 and $4.25 million in 1993. Clark can make $100,000 if he is named the NL's MVP, $50,000 each for being named MVP of the playoffs or World Series and $25,000 for making the All-Star team.

It also calls for him to donate $20,000 to the baseball program at Mississippi State, where he attended college. He also is to give Jesuit High in New Orleans $10,000 for its baseball program, and will contribute $100 to an undetermined Bay area charity for each homer he hits in the next four years.

Clark, dapper in a black pinstriped suit, insisted his new wealth won't change him.

"My tastes are pretty limited," he said, describing himself as outdoorsman who enjoys hunting and fishing, and who now can afford to buy a few more guns.

MHS nabs second in Dallas

From Staff Reports

DALLAS — The Midland High soccer team came within an eyelash of the championship in the North Dallas Tournament of Champions, but Dallas Hillcrest cashed in on a fluke to beat the Bulldogs, 1-0, in the final.

Hillcrest scored the only goal of the match in the 24th minute on a long shot that caught MHS goalkeeper Bryant Mueller off guard. Mueller was perfect the rest of the evening, however, to keep the Bulldogs in the match.

MHS dominated the second half, but just couldn't punch anything across.

"We shot and shot and shot, but it just wasn't our luck," Bulldog coach Tom Esikhati said. "Other than when they scored, our kids played extremely well."

MHS center halfback Joe Dominguez was named to the all-tournament team.

The Bulldogs advanced to the final with a 1-0 win over College Station A&M Consolidated in semifinal action. MHS' Chris Lanning had the game's only goal on a penalty kick in the 55th minute.

The Bulldogs face Amarillo Tascosa in their home opener at 4:30 p.m. Friday on the Midland Freshman High School field.

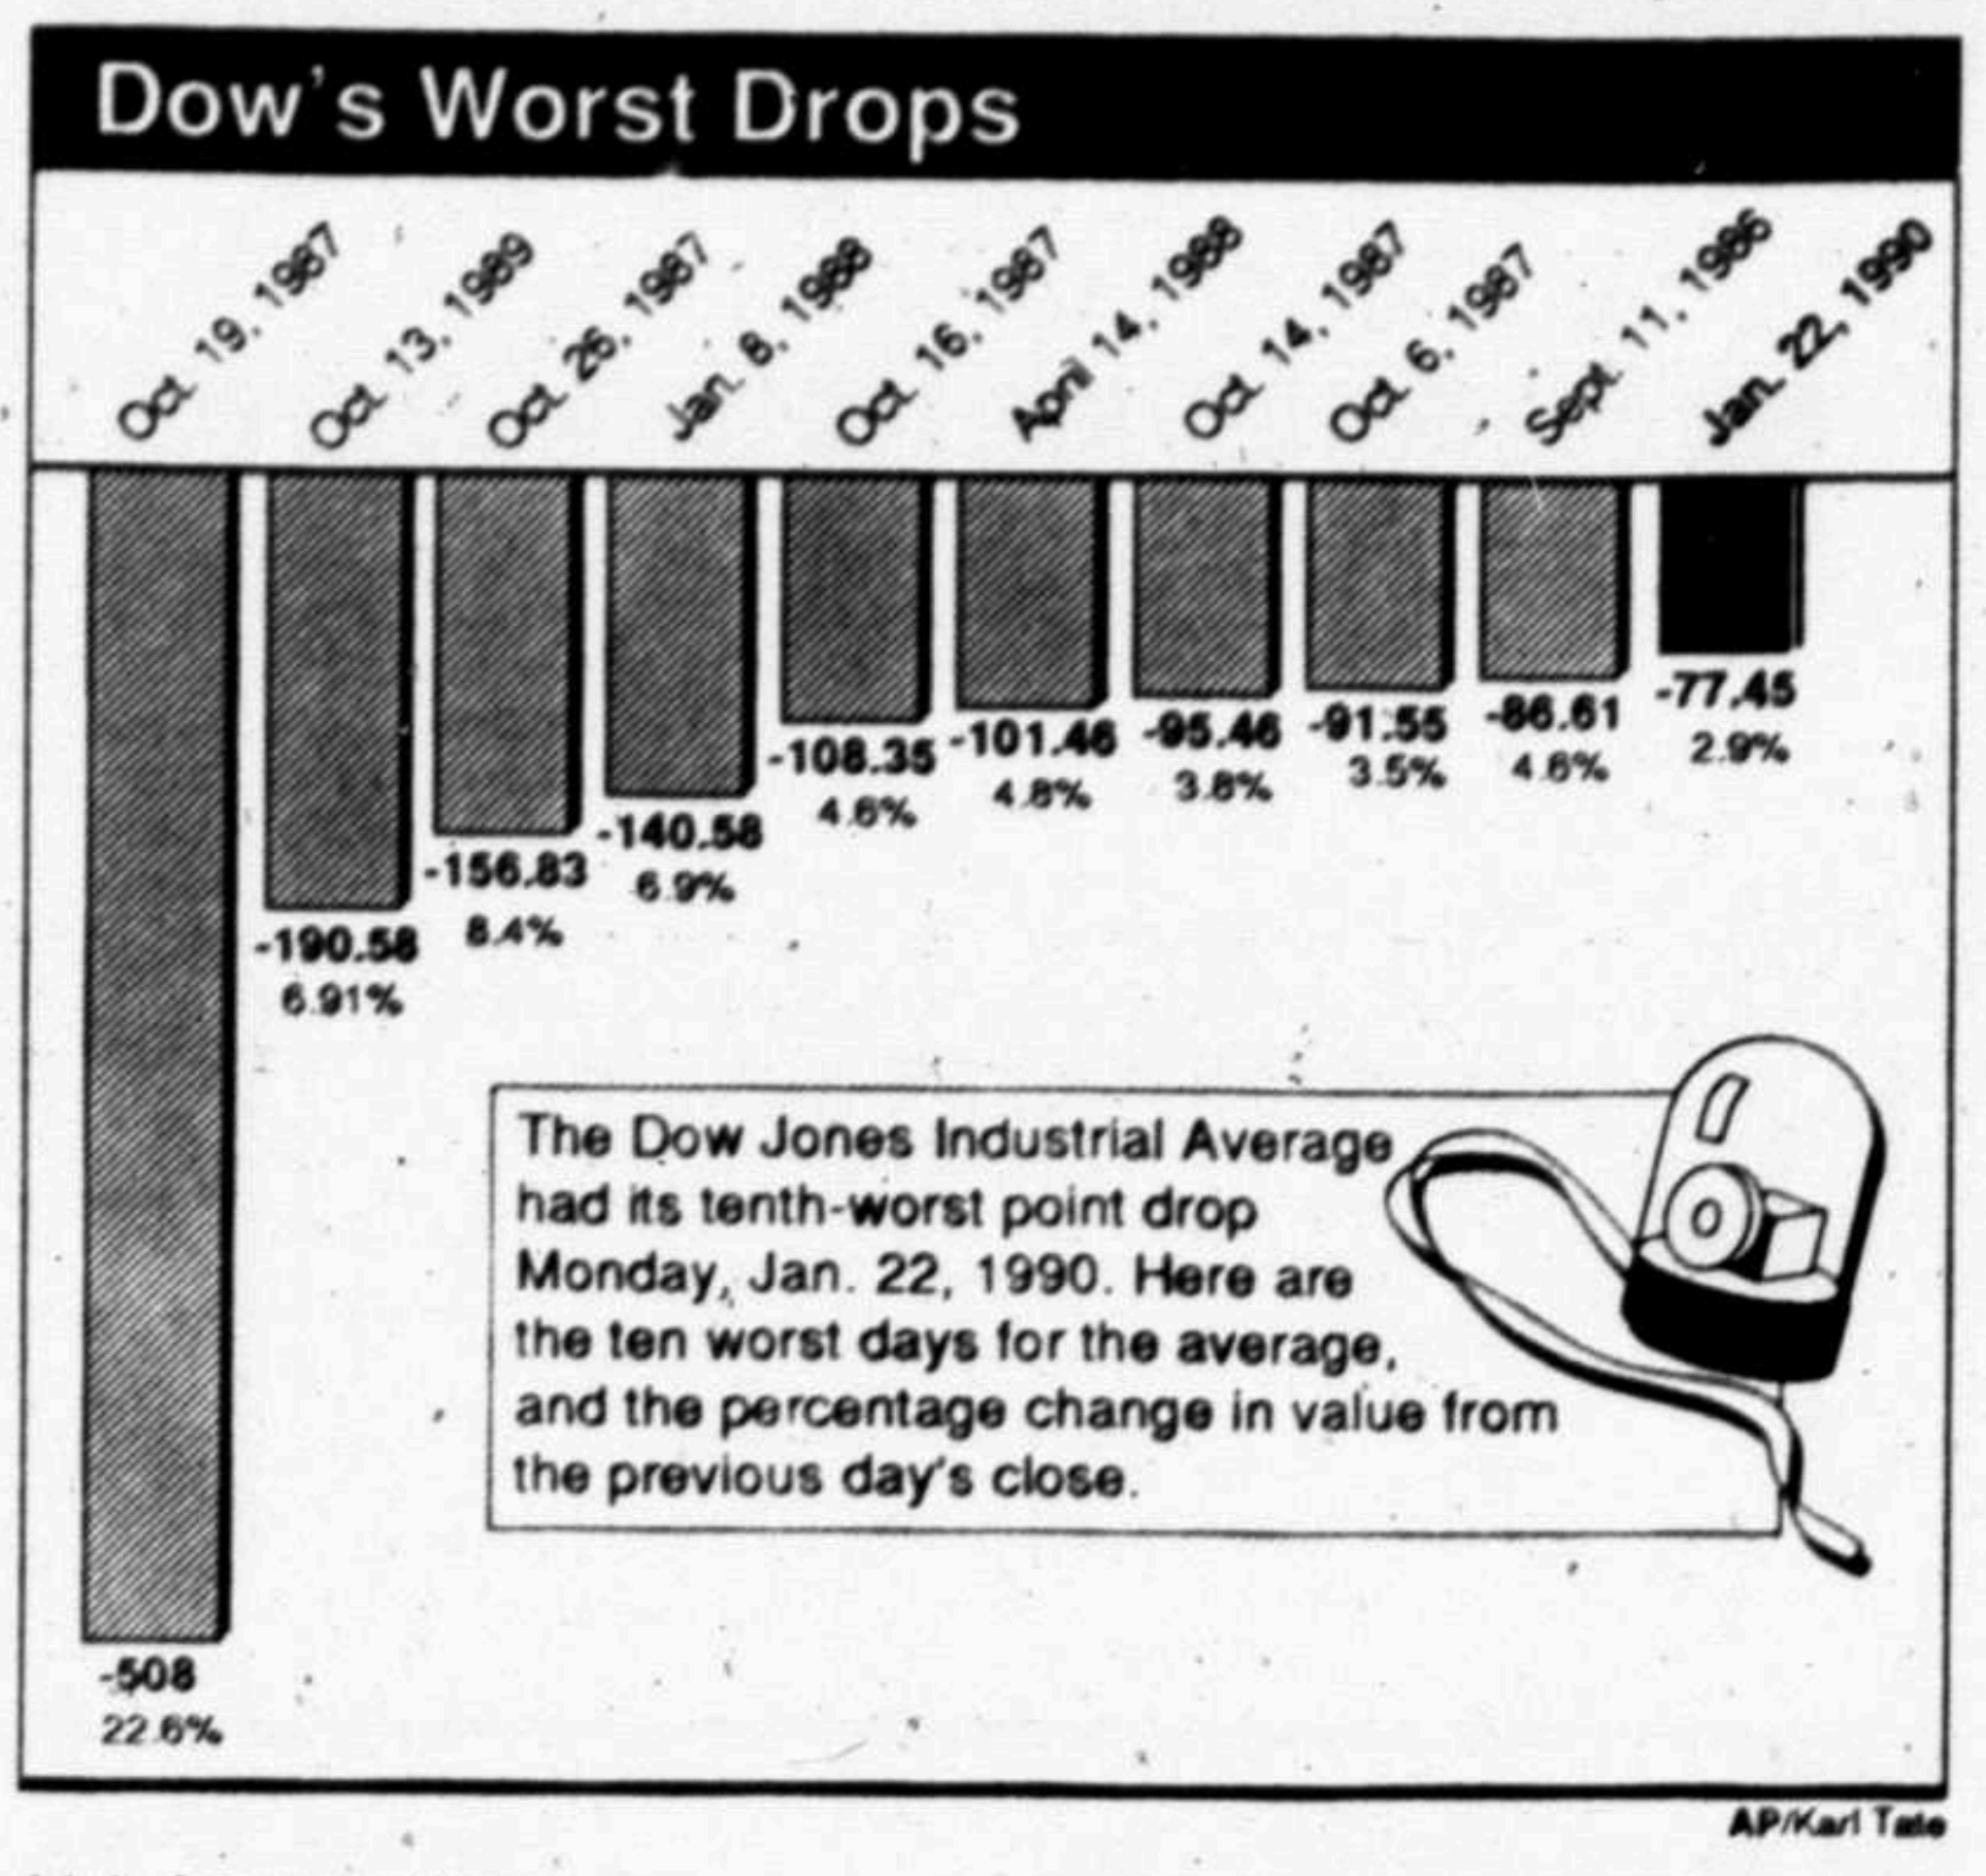
Stock market takes a nose dive

By H.J. MAIDENBERG
N.Y. Times News Service



AP/Karl Tate

NEW YORK — The stock market Monday posted its biggest loss since Oct. 13 as the Dow Jones industrial average lost 77.45 points, or 2.89 percent, to 2,600.45.

The Dow has not been below 2,600 since Nov. 7, three weeks after it plunged 190.58 points, or 6.91 percent, on Oct. 13.

But Monday's selloff was marked by low volume as many individual investors left the field to index futures program traders.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange was 148.4 million, down from 185.6 million on Friday.

The Big Board composite index fell 4.36 points, to 183.20.

Analysts attributed much of the selling to the flow of poor fourth-quarter corporate profits, as well to the older lament that the Federal Reserve was keeping interest rates too high.

"The fact is simply that the market has finally gotten around to paying attention to fundamentals," said Hildegard M. Zagorski, a market analyst at Prudential-Bache Securities.

"While we think the selling was overdone, the fundamentals that provoked today's selloff included poor corporate profits, a toppy Tokyo stock market and, indeed, the belief that interest rates will remain high for sime time."

Much action centered on program trading, involving the Standard & Poor's index of 500 blue chips and the spot March S&P 500 index futures.

At one time toward the close, the March futures were down 11.95, close to the 12-point limit that would have mandated a 15-minute halt in trading the contracts on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange.

But the March futures recovered to close down 10.80, at 331.50, avoiding the so-called circuit breaker mechanism.

Ms. Zagorski and other analysts were concerned that the spread between the March S&P 500 futures and the cash, or actual, index was abnormally close.

The actual 500 index closed at 330.38, down 8.77 on the day.

Normally, futures should trade at a premium to the underlying instrument or commodity.

How much of a premium depends on a number of factors, not the least of which is the remaining life of the contract futures.

The spot S&P 500 futures will expire on March 16, when all that month's index futures and options and individual stock options expire in what is termed the "triple witching hour."

If the program traders and other arbitragers feel the futures are inexpensive relative to the cash market, they will buy the futures and sell the actual shares.

Should the spread widen significantly in favor of the futures, they will do the reverse.

William M. LeFevre, a market strategist at Advest Inc., said the index futures changed little in the 15 minutes these contracts are traded after the close of the Big Board.

"You can be sure the program traders will be watching Tuesday morning to see whether the spread between the futures and cash indexes widens or narrows further," he said.

Hacker convicted for planting 'worm'

Robert Morris, Jr. leaves Federal Court Monday with an unidentified companion. He was found guilty of computer tampering laws in connection with a computer virus he created while a student at Cornell.

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — A jury convicted a one-time graduate student of computer tampering for unleashing a rogue "worm" that wiggled into a federal computer network and caused millions of dollars in down-time and damage.

Robert T. Morris, 24, of Arnold, Md., on Monday became the first person convicted under the 1986 federal Computer Fraud and Abuse Act. He could be sentenced to a maximum five years in prison and $250,000 fine.

Prosecutors declined to say what they would recommend. They also wouldn't say what effect the verdict might have on computer security or whether it would fuel a push for stronger laws against hackers.

Morris broke into the Internet computer system on Nov. 2, 1988. The worm did not destroy any data, but the one-day paralysis it caused cost as much as $15 million in lost time and protective work, according to prosecutors.

Morris' worm replicated wildy and immobilized an estimated 6,000 computers linked to Internet, including ones at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, military facilities and major universities.

The 12-member U.S. District Court jury considered the case for more than five hours before returning the guilty verdict.

Morris, who made no comment leaving the courtroom, was free on his own recognizance pending sentencing.

Morris' father, Robert Morris, the chief scientist at the National Computer Security Center in Bethesda, Md., said he did not believe the verdict was unfair but also did not view his son as a criminal.

"I have a great deal of faith in the American judicial system and yet I'm still disappointed in the verdict," the elder Morris said. "It should be obvious there's not a dishonest or fraudulent bone in his body."

Continental Chairman Frank Lorenzo jokes Monday at a press conference after applying for Houston to Tokyo service.

Continental seeks Tokyo connection

HOUSTON (AP) — Continental Airlines Chairman Frank Lorenzo announced Monday that Continental will ask for government approval to fly four non-stop weekly flights from Houston to Tokyo.

The Houston-based airline is among eight U.S. carriers seeking the Department of Transportation's approval to fly non-stop to Tokyo, Continental officials said at an afternoon news conference at a Japanese restaurant.

Despite the intense competition for 24 weekly non-stop flights to Tokyo, Lorenzo said he believes Continental's chances are excellent.

The 24 available flights are the result of an agreement signed by the U.S. and Japan last November.

Continental, a subsidiary of Houston-based Texas Air, wants permission to fly four weekly non-stop flights to Tokyo. It already has a request pending with the DOT to offer three weekly one-stop flights to Tokyo.

REAL ESTATE

California market begins to soften

N.Y. Times News Service

When John and Michelle Kaufman put their San Fernando Valley home on the market last week, they wanted to sell it fast — so to sweeten the deal they included a free recreational vehicle and tractor lawnmower.

"I know the market's tough, so anything that I can do to attract a buyer is a plus," John Kaufman said.

The Kaufmans, who bought their California home two years ago, plan to move in two weeks to a comparably priced North Carolina home. They hope the incentives will help the home sell quickly and prevent them from having to slash the $550,000 asking price, diluting or eliminating the profit they hope to realize.

But like most expectant home sellers trying to cash in on the annual double-digit appreciation of area homes during the last two years, the Kaufmans are finding that real estate has become a buyer's market.

Industry observers differ on what has caused the market to soften.

Some say the market simply is returning to normal after peak sales in 1988 and that home prices will continue to rise but at a slower pace.

"The L.A. area should have 480,000 (home) resales next year, which will put us back to the level we were at three years ago," said Leslie Appleton-Young, vice president of research and economics for the California Association of Realtors.

Others see the real estate slump in Southern California as a reflection of the nation's overall slowing economy and predict that at the very least prices will stabilize and could even decrease.

"Prices below $150,000 will continue to rise, but I wouldn't be surprised to see a 5 percent drop in value for higher-priced homes — those $350,000 and above," said Alfred Gobar, president of Alfred Gobar Associates Inc., a real estate economics firm in Brea, Calif.

Too many people are priced out of the market, he said.

Indeed, in Los Angeles County just 14 percent of the households could afford to buy the area's $224,625 median-priced home in November, according to the most recent figures from the California Association of Realtors. Twice as many people could afford a home two years ago.

But the median price in December — half of the homes sold went for less and half for more — for a single-family home in the San Fernando Valley was $240,000, down from $245,000 the previous month.

And sales of San Fernando Valley homes fell to 992 in December, down 27 percent from the previous month and 29 percent from December 1988, according to figures released last week by the San Fernando Valley Board of Realtors. Sales for the year dropped to 17,310, compared with 19,714 in 1988.

The stabilizing prices and slow sales are a good sign for first-time home buyers because interest rates are also low and a growing number will be able to afford a home, Gobar said.

The fixed interest rate for a 30-year mortgage fluctuated between 9.7 percent and 10 percent during the first half of January, according to the Federal National Mortgage Association.

Add to these conditions the increasing number of homes on the market, and a "bidding war" is created, according to David Woldman, a real estate financial broker for Quest

General Motors says it will recall all 244,000 four-cylinder Pontiac Fieros because of a nagging engine problem, which contributed to the company's decision to scuttle the plastic-body two-seater in 1988.

Oil prices fall in volatile session

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil futures prices are lower in midmorning trading, continuing Monday's trend.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, March contracts for West Texas Intermediate were down 25 cents to $21.55 in midmorning trading, the contract's first as the near-month spot contract. Monday the contract fell 31 cents to close at $21.77.

February contracts expired after a volatile session that saw it pass the $24 mark before tumbling $1.12 to close at $22.55.

Analysts said concern about a possible surplus of crude oil prompted a late selling spree on the final day before the February contract expired at the close of trading.

Among refined products traded on the exchange, No. 2 heating oil for February delivery fell 2.67 cents to 60.99 cents a gallon after trading in a wide range. The contract closed last week with a 0.94-cent gain after five rocky sessions.

The March heating oil contract lost 1.68 cents to settle at 58.00 cents a gallon while April ended down 1.32 cents at 55.50 cents.

Wholesale unleaded gasoline for February delivery declined 0.98 cent to 60.64 cents a gallon, March lost 1.37 cents to 61.32 cents and April slipped 1.49 cents to 61.94 cents a gallon.

"The focus was on the crude contract expiration," said Linda Simard, energy analyst with Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. "People heard there were plenty of sweet cargos available and crude fell out."

Buyers drove crude prices up late last week amid concern about possible tight supplies of light, sweet crude, which is sought by refiners to make gasoline.

Heating oil's decline Monday despite the return of wintery weather to many parts of the nation surprised some analysts. Heating oil prices hit record levels in December as cold weather drove up demand.

However, industry statistics last week suggested that inventories were climbing faster than many expected as imported oil ordered during the cold weather replaced depleted supplies.

LONDON (AP) — The dollar fell in early European trading today following a sell-off in earlier trading in the Far East. Gold prices rose.

Foreign currency dealers said the dollar was again propelled by news and rumors out of the Soviet Bloc and by market reactions that led to breaches of technical support points.

But they said the dollar's rise Monday was overdone, and that a strong round of profit-taking was sparked in Tokyo when rumors of calming tensions in the Soviet Union were received.

In Tokyo, the dollar eased 0.09 yen to a closing 146.33 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at 146.00 yen.

In London, the dollar fell against the British pound. It cost $1.6440 to buy one pound, compared with $1.6385 late Monday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $408.50 a troy ounce, up from $405.25 bid late Monday. At midmorning, the city's major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $408.60.

Stocks reel on economic concerns

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials fell 77.45 to 2,600.45, for its largest one-day point loss since it took a 190-point drop last Oct. 13.

Oil, auto, retailing, pharmaceutical and regional telephone issues all posted broad losses.

Helene Curtis fell 3½ to 19¼, for the biggest percentage decline among NYSE issues. The company said it expects to report a slightly smaller earnings gain for the fiscal year ending Feb. 28 than had been projected.

Delta Air Lines, which reported lower fourth-quarter profits, lost ⅞ to 65⅞.

First Executive Corp., the most active issue in the over-the-counter market, tumbled 3 to 4. The insurance holding company, which has a big investment in "junk" bonds, said it expects to post a substantial loss for the past year.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market lost $74.06 billion, or 2.25 percent, in value.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Controls on overseas technology sales eased

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration says it will end controls on overseas sales of computers and other technology readily available to the public, a move that will affect much of Eastern Europe immediately but not the Soviet Union.

Officials of the State Department, the Pentagon and the Commerce Department participated in the decision, which was announced by the White House on Monday. In addition, several U.S. officials have opened talks in London to prepare for joint steps by 17 nations to accelerate delivery of advanced technology to such countries as Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia.

Chrysler, Austrian firm plan joint venture

DETROIT (AP) — Chrysler Corp. plans to form a joint venture with an Austrian company to make a European version of the automakers' popular minivans beginning next year.

The move, announced Monday, is further recognition by Chrysler of the growing importance of the European market. Trade barriers among the 12 nations belonging to the European Economic Community fall in 1992, and will create a vehicle market larger than North America.

General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co. have had European manufacturing plants for years. Chrysler sold its European operations to Peugeot of France in 1978 as its financial crisis worsened, but in recent years it has been exporting some cars and minivans to Europe under the Chrysler nameplate, along with its Jeep brand sport-utility vehicles.

Merrill Lynch posts $362 million loss

NEW YORK (AP) — Merrill Lynch & Co. has announced a $362 million fourth-quarter loss, including a one-time charge of $470 million for a drastic restructuring at the nation's largest brokerage.

Merrill Lynch said Monday that for all of the firm lost $213 million, compared to profits of $463 million the previous year.

Merrill Chairman William A. Schreyer blamed the decline on Wall Street's hard times characterized by an exodus of small investors, a severe drop in the junk bond market, low return on some products and increased competition.

Although the Tokyo Stock Exchange's 225-share Nikkei average closed up a strong 420.47 points, or 1.14 percent, at 37,257.01, fears grew that the Japanese equities market was wobbly and that any sustained decline there would influence sentiment in the market here.

But LeFevre said many institutional investors were more concerned about interest rates.

"With the Treasury selling $5 billion of 40-year bonds on Tuesday as part of its savings-and-loan bailout, and with another $30 billion of refunding debt slated for sale in two weeks, the Federal Reserve is unlikely to reduce interest rates," he said.

"They will do nothing to discourage Japanese investments in these issues."

Consequently, LeFevre does not expect the yield on the Treasury's benchmark 30-year bonds to decline much below its current 8.30 percent.

Most individual investors, however, will continue to be more concerned with deteriorating corporate earnings, he continued.

"What they see is more quality companies, such as Quaker Oats and Monsanto, reporting lower fourth-quarter profits and the prospects of still weaker earnings this quarter," Lefevre said.

Quaker Oats fell 2 points, to 51, and Monsanto lost 3 5/8, at 107 5/8.

Among other blue chips, Du Pont fell 1 3/8, to 39 7/8.

Some analysts said a 3-for-1 stock split of Du Pont, which is one of the 30 blue chips in the Dow, may have caused a bit more volatility in that average.

Among the most actively traded blue chips, Philip Morris fell 1 1/4, to 38, partly in response to a mounting campaign against smoking; AT&T 1 5/8, to 40 1/2; General Electric 2, to 62 7/8; IBM 2, to 96 5/8; Union Carbide 1 5/8, to 20 7/8, and Citicorp 7/8, at 24 5/8.

Shares of major banks also weakened.

Chase Manhattan declined 3/4, to 31 1/8, and Manufacturers Hanover fell 3/4, to 33.

But the Bank of New England, which reported large losses, rose a point, to 3 3/4, and led the most-active list on the Big Board with a turnover of 5.1 million shares.

At the American Stock Exchange, the market-value index fell 5.20, to 360.88.

In the over-the-counter market, the Nasdaq composite index plunged 8.94, to 431.94, its lowest level since last May 11, when it stood at 430.63.

The verdict shocked some of Morris' friends, who said his intrusion was experimental and not malicious, and that it helped the computer community by pointing out weakness in networks like Internet.

"You don't want to see him scarred for life," said Dean Krafft, director of computer facilities for Cornell's computer science department, where Morris was studying when he transmitted the worm. "He's certainly a bright kid."

"It's time for the computer industry to take a hard look at itself," said Lance J. Hoffman, a professor of engineering and applied science at George Washington University. He said many research networks were "held together with chicken wire and bubblegum."

A researcher whose work was interrupted by the worm was happy with the verdict, however.

"This is important," said Ludivikas Bukys, lab manager for the computer science department at the University of Rochester. "If he had been acquitted, it would have been open season for other people to do similar things."

Morris' attorney, Thomas Guidoboni, said the worm was an intellectual experiment that went berserk because of a programming error.

"It's not the side effects, it's not the mistakes, but what he actually intended to do," Guidoboni said in closing arguments. "He never intended to prevent authorized access."

"There was no work lost, work was delayed. That's the bottom line," Guidoboni said.

Morris may not have intended his program to paralyze Internet, but it was no accident that the worm attacked the network, prosecutor Mark Rasch said in his summation.

"The worm didn't break in by accident or mistake. Robert Morris intended for the worm to break in."

Ellen Meltzer, another prosecutor, reminded jurors that testimony showed Morris deliberately stole computer passwords from hundreds of people so the worm could break into as many computers as possible.

Meltzer said at least six earlier versions of the worm were found on Morris' Cornell University computer accounts and that his own comments on the worm program used the words "break-in" and "steal."

It took several days to eliminate the worm from the Internet computers.

Nissan won't pull 'speedy' TV ad

WASHINGTON (AP) — Safety, insurance, medical and police experts have asked Nissan not to show a television fantasy commercial for its 300ZX Turbo sports car on grounds it promotes "excessive and unsafe speed."

The company on Monday declined, saying it believed the ad would never be taken for real.

In the dream-like commercial, set on an automotive speedway, the 300ZX Turbo outpaces a motorcycle, race car and jet plane as its driver murmurs: "Some have to dream. I'm in a Turbo 300 and these guys are after me — and they can't catch me."

Kemp: Ignore gloom, doom

Cox News Service

ATLANTA — In an effort to stave off a panic in the housing industry, Housing and Urban Development Secretary Jack Kemp assured builders meeting here that interest rates will drop, and economic rewards await entrepreneurs.

"A lot of the current doom and gloom is contrary to the facts. I don't believe housing is going to be America's next crisis," Kemp said Monday in a speech to the National Association of Home Builders.

Last week, the government reported that new housing starts were down 8 percent in December — a seven-year low.

Kemp, however, said the slump is not as bad as it appears, stating that a period of healthy increases preceded the December decline.

"There is understandable cause for concern," he told the crowd of 3,000. "But I believe that the '90s can be a period of continued growth for the national economy, with a robust housing industry leading the way. Those who believe that the housing industry is headed for a tumble are far from the mark."

Financial Group in Westlake Village, Calif.

There are currently 9,900 San Fernando Valley homes for sale, up a whopping 40 percent more than the inventory level in January 1989, the valley board said.

The victims of the battle are homeowners, who are losing expected profit that could help them trade up to a better residence or even losing part of their original investment.

When Armand and Joyce Gozlan put their San Fernando Valley home on the market six months ago, they asked $285,000 for the four-bedroom house, which needed "tender loving care," according to Joyce Gozlan.

They asked just $5,000 more than they had paid for the home in Chatsworth in 1979 because the home has no pool and needs new landscaping and other improvements.

About 12 brokers and prospective buyers toured the home at the first open house. When interest tapered off after three months, the Gozlans cut the price by about $10,000.

"We didn't even care if we lost money, we just wanted to move," Joyce Gozlan said.

She said the family was just happy to finally sell the home two weeks ago for $279,000 because their total monthly payment for first and second mortgages was scheduled to go up in February and they were ready to move.

TOKYO

"Continental is very excited to attempt to provide a very important service for Houston," Lorenzo said.

"There are just so many areas from which direct service from Houston to Tokyo will benefit," he said.

Lorenzo noted there are 125 Japanese companies with Houston offices, and 109 Houston companies that do business in the Pacific Rim.

Houston Mayor Kathy Whitmire and other civic leaders also attended the press conference.

"This is the time for Houston to have better air service to the Far East," Whitmire said.

Texas Air spokesman Art Kent said he expected a decision on the one-stop request to be issued sometime in the next few weeks. He did not know when the DOT might decide on the request for non-stop service.

Lorenzo said if both requests are approved, Continental could begin one-stop service in August and non-stop flights beginning in early 1991.

Free car wash with oil change at Chaparral Wash & Lube

Chaparral Wash and Lube Center customers are return customers because the service is consistently professional and friendly. From left are lube center technician C.C. Banks, customer Jackie Perry and Chaparral owner Leon Jeffcoat.

Although the recent rains were a welcome relief to a long dry spell, no doubt your car needs some professional cleaning and polishing. Combine that service with an oil change at Chaparral Wash and Lube Center and your car will look and operate almost like new again.

Additionally, with the ever present possibility of cold weather, it is extremely important to properly check your oil and antifreeze levels. Stop by 2300 N. Big Spring soon and let the car professionals shine up and maintain your car for winter driving.

Chaparral is well known for the best car wash Midland has to offer. A free car wash is offered with each oil change at Chaparral.

Chaparral owner, Texas Tech graduate and Midland businessman Leon Jeffcoat invites you in to measure the difference that this centrally-located wash and lube center has to offer. The friendly professionals at Chaparral Wash and Lube can help give your car the look and feel you want for cold driving weather.

Come by and pamper your car with some of the extra Chaparral services you can combine with your detail car wash. For a minimal charge, the staff can hand wax, add white wall cleaner, wire wheel cleaner, a polish wax, interior dash and door treatment, bumper and trim gloss, car freshener and a vinyl top treatment.

A full service car wash, which includes a wash by gentle cleansers, chamois brushes and soft water is just $7.95. Standard vans and Suburbans are just $2.00 extra. Each car is treated to a thorough wash down before is is cleaned gently by the brushes.

Vacuuming, hand drying and window cleaning are included in the low price. A discount is given with the purchase of Texaco gasoline.

A free car wash is offered with each oil change in the Chaparral lube center. Prices for the oil change and lube range from $16.50 to $22.50. Pennzoil, Quaker State, Havoline and other major brands of oil are available.

Jeffcoat recommends an oil change for your car every three months or 3,000 miles.

You get more than just an oil change and lube in the Chaparral lube center. Technician C.C. Banks enjoys a reputation for being friendly, knowledgeable and able to trouble spot car problems.

"C.C., in addition to being personable, has many years of experience in car maintenance," explained Jeffcoat.

You'll also get your battery, tires, belts and hoses examined. Your vehicle is checked for important proper fluid levels, including brake, power steering, transmission and windshield washer fluids. As a part of this service, these fluids are replenished, if your car needs it.

For an additional charge, Chaparral can install transmission oil, freon, light bulbs and windshield wiper refills.

Generally open on rainy days, Chaparral's lube center and gasoline pumps are at your service. With the purchase of gasoline or an oil change, if the clouds are threatening, you'll receive a rain check for your next car wash.

Chaparral Wash and Lube Center is conveniently located at the corner of Big Spring and Scharbauer Drive. Texaco, Visa, MasterCard, American Express and Discover cards are accepted.

Malsovit bread philosophy: Counting calories a waste of time

Malsovit bread offers a sound philosophy: "Eat yourself thin."

A revolutionary diet and health bread, Malsovit is baked fresh daily and is available exclusively at Happy Days Donuts, 815 N. Midland Drive, and Daylight Donuts inside the Kent Kwik at 2910 N. Big Spring.

The Malsovit philosophy is based on keeping your metabolism "revved up" while at the same time reducing your caloric intake.

Receiving the caloric intake from nutritional calories in combination with adequate amounts of dietary fiber and complete protein will cause the body to draw its additional energy from converted fat tissue.

This will allow you to "eat yourself thin" while maintaining balanced nutrition and a continuous feeling of fullness. This applies also to those who have no weight to lose. Malsovit is still a sensible (nutritionally sound) addition to their daily food intake.

In order to perform the regular bodily functions as well as for growth and development, the body needs a certain amount of daily energy. The term used to describe the energy value of the food we eat is called "calorie."

There are two kinds of calories: "empty" calories and "nutritional" calories. Empty calories are calories with little or no nutritional value, such as processed sugar and refined flour.

This is where many people go astray. Simply reducing the amount of calories consumed to obtain weight loss without recognizing the difference in calories may actually result in weight gain.

The human body needs the right amount of energy whether on a diet or not. For many people losing weight is indeed a nightmare, followed by the "after-the-diet weight gain." Their problem may well be in their metabolism, the body's "operating speed" which determines the rate at which calories are burned up.

As soon as a lesser amount of calories is consumed (as in low calorie dieting) the body will respond by slowing down the metabolic rate. This in turn will slow down the fat conversion as well as other bodily functions (i.e. the digestive process).

The Malsovit philosophy says that counting calories is a waste of time. Keep these points in mind as you change your eating habits.

- Don't count calories; eat good ones.
- One gram of fat equals nine "bad" calories.
- One gram of protein equals four "good" calories.
- One gram of complex carbohydrates equals four "good" calories.

The Malsovit Diet Plan is easy — it is based on consuming seven slices of Malsovit per day along with a wide variety of other foods. There is no time wasted on extensive food preparation or making separate meals for the dieter.

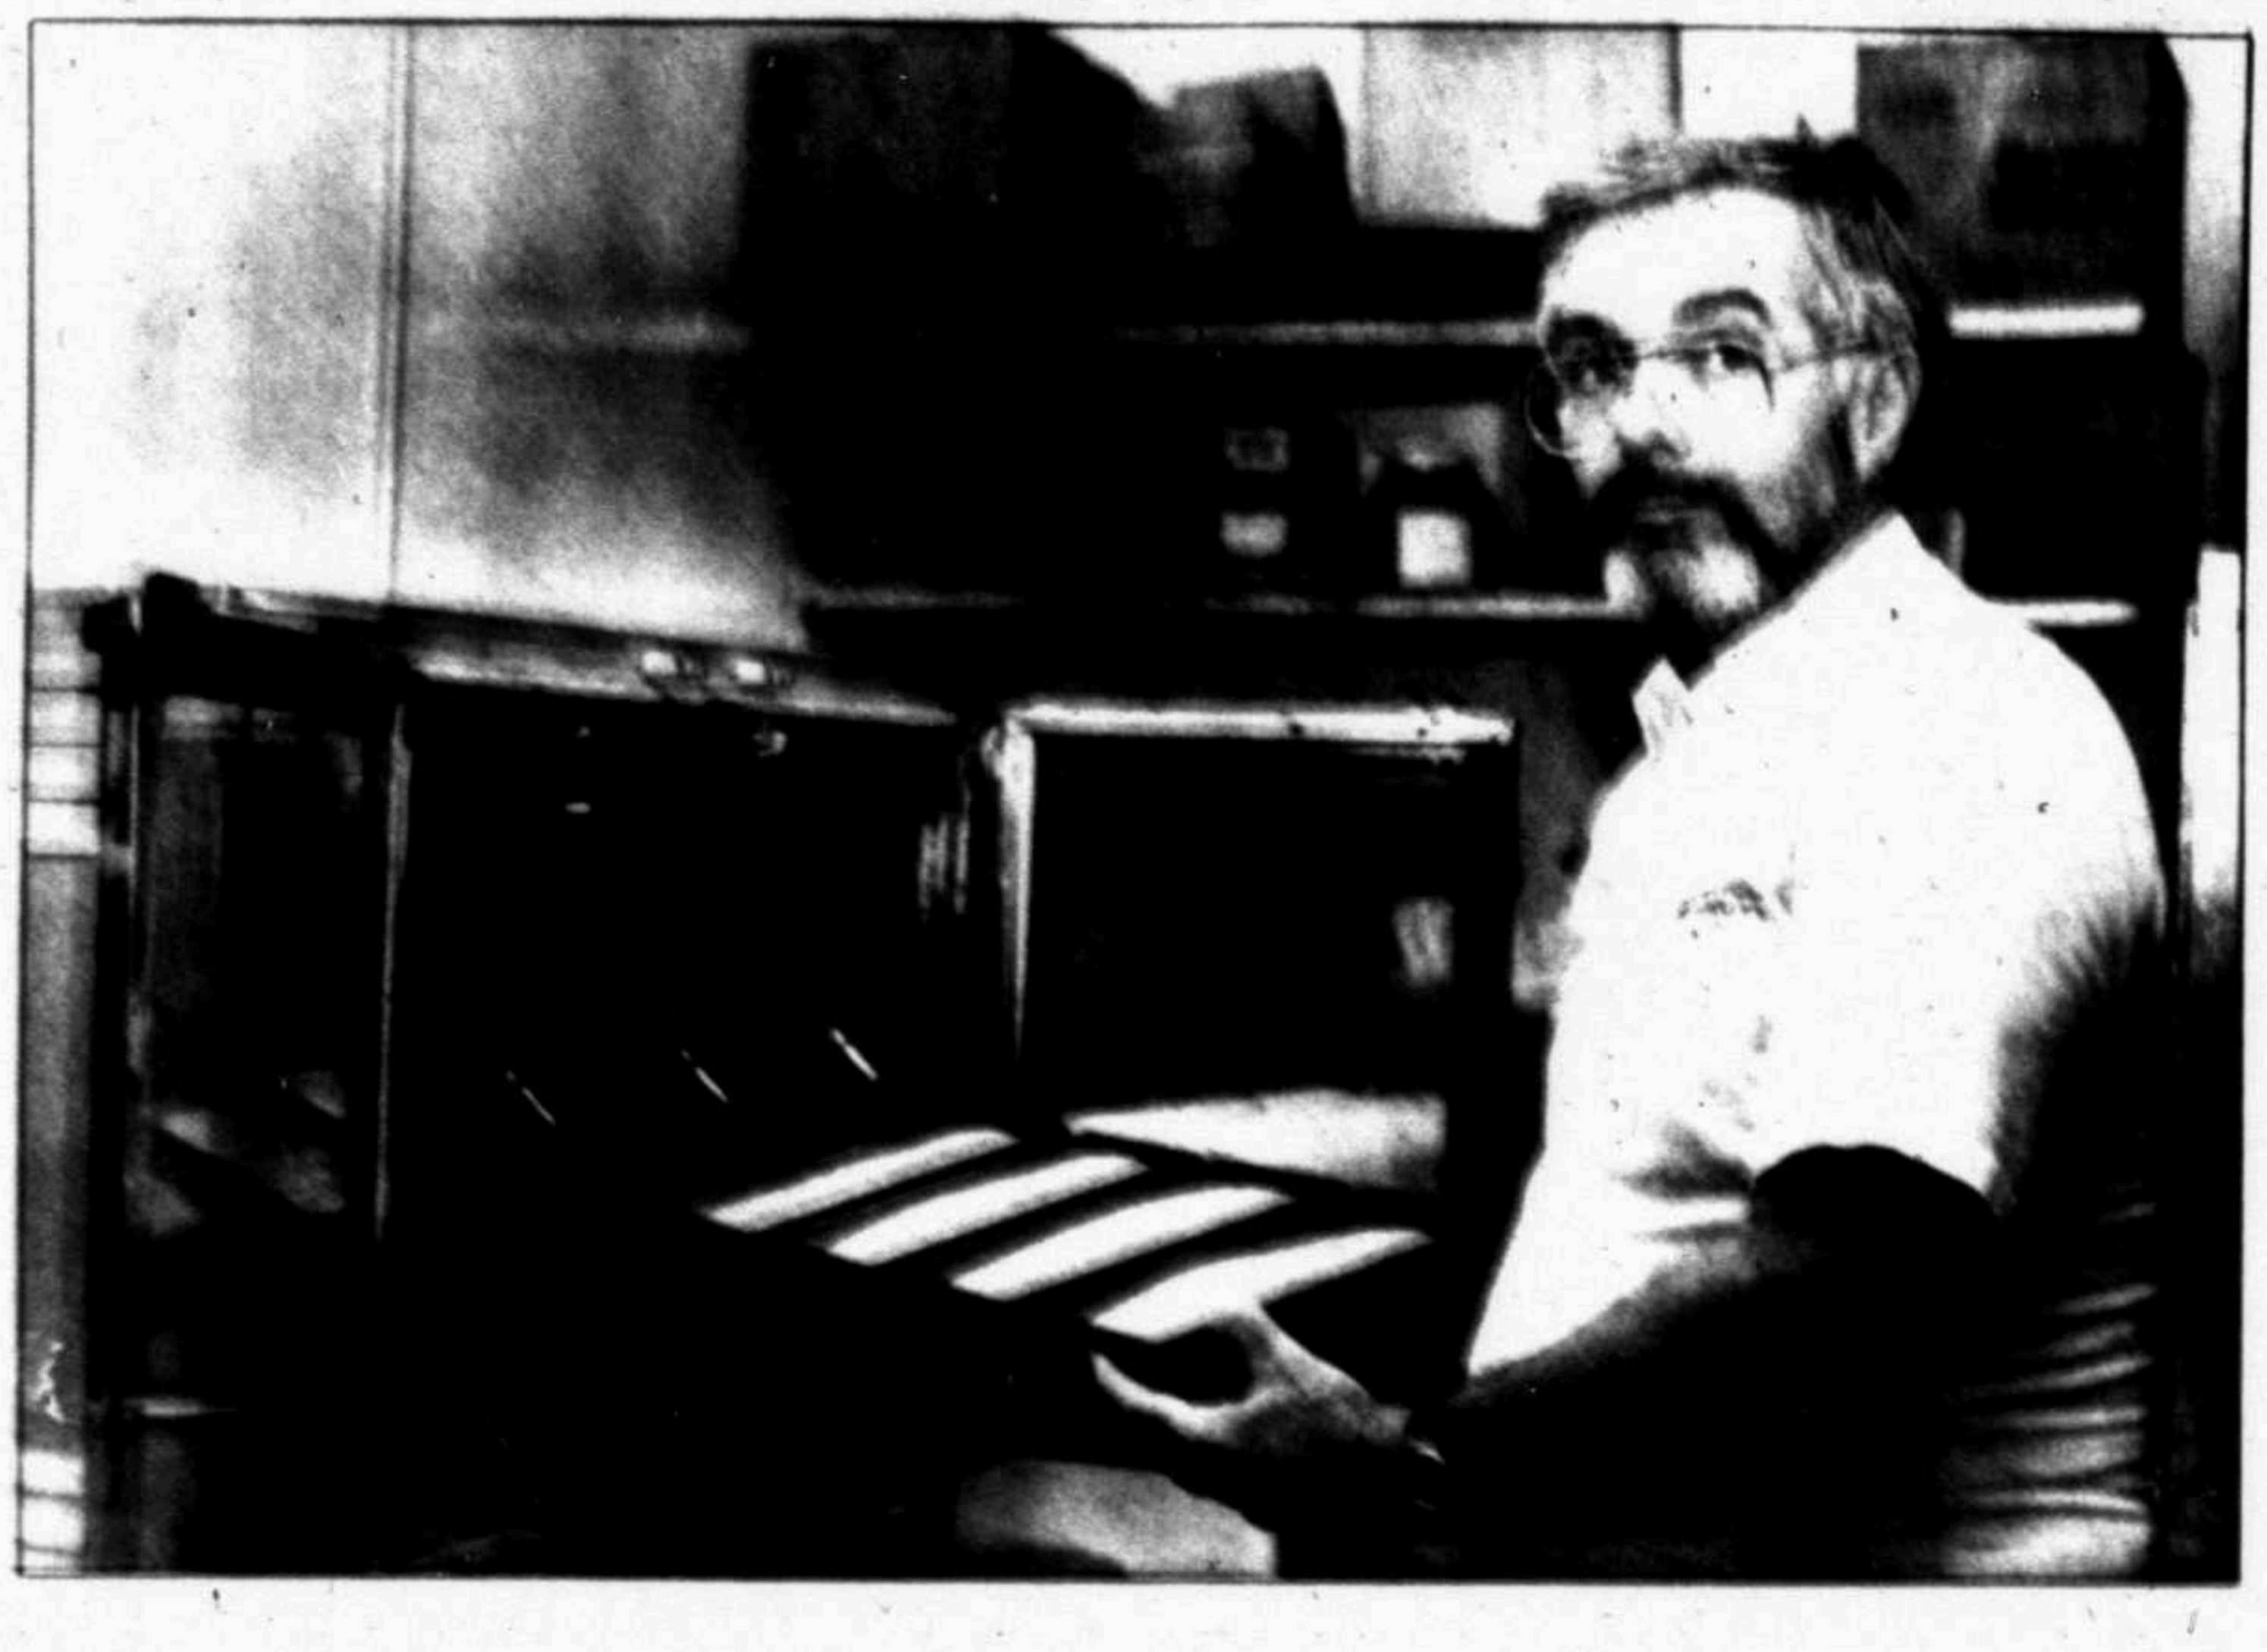
The cost of the bread or the handy wafers for those "on the go" is $3.25 per loaf or box.

The plan is designed for people to lose an average of two to six pounds per week. At this rate of weight loss, the body is allowed to respond comfortably to the "changing circumstances."

According to the new book The Dutch Diet by Dr. J.T. Cooper, Malsovit works because it is a complete protein product — a combination of grain and legume proteins in the flour.

Cooper writes: "There are no required medications, no powders to mix up, no starving or eating of unhealthy combinations of food, no ketosis and no magic herbal combinations. In short, the entire program is common sense at its best and it works."

Daylight Donuts is the area distributor for the book, which is priced at $8.95.



Eddy Willmon, owner of Daylight Donuts and Happy Days Donuts, bakes Malsovit bread fresh daily. The Malsovit Diet Plan encourages safe weight loss.

Congress expected to override veto of Chinese students bill

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress came together today for an election-year session, with leaders predicting a quick override of President Bush's veto of legislation protecting Chinese students in the United States from being forced to return to their homeland.

Republicans predicted Bush would get no more than a handful of votes in the House, where the veto override was expected to come up on Wednesday.

The House had approved the legislation, 403-0, last Nov. 19, and it was virtually certain that backers could obtain the two-third majority needed to put the bill into law over the president's objections.

Senate Minority Whip Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., who was supporting the White House, predicted the override would nevertheless pass in the Senate "like a dose of salts."

The issue is the first major fight of what promises to be a busy and potentially contentious year on Capitol Hill, further complicated by the partisanship that will arise as November elections draw near for all 435 House seats and 34 of the 100 Senate seats.

House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash., predicted the Democrat-controlled Congress will turn attention from the military and international problems he said have been government's focus for the past decade to "the domestic problems we face as a society — competitiveness, education, health, the strength of our economy and society."

Topping the agenda are new initiatives on clean air, child care and campaign finance reform, as well as the intractable budget deficit and decisions on how much to cut from defense spending and how much to give to emerging democracies in Eastern Europe and Panama.

Fights also loom on Bush's proposal to cut the capital gains tax and on competing Democratic proposals to cut Social Security taxes or revive tax-deductible Individual Retirement Accounts.

The veto override was the only substantive business before the House in its first week back after a two-month holiday recess. The bill Bush vetoed Nov. 30 would let some 32,000 Chinese students extend their stays and avoid political persecution stemming from last June's brutally repressed pro-democracy movement. A Senate vote is expected as early as Thursday.

"How can we, the United States of America, lead people on to talk about democracy and human rights and then when they speak out for it, say 'Don't look to us to protect you?'" said Rep. Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., the bill's sponsor. "I don't see Congress doing that."

"The president has simply made a mistake," said Rep. Mickey Edwards, R-Okla.

Backers of the Chinese students bill say the lifting of martial law in Beijing on Jan. 10 was little more than a cosmetic gesture. Students testifying at a Senate hearing today said they had been harassed by Chinese consular officials in this country, including veiled threats against family members still in China.

Republicans have joined in publicly criticizing Bush's veto.

"There's been no letup in the beatings and trials' of dissidents," said Rep. William Broomfield of Michigan, the senior Republican on the House Foreign Affairs Committee. To let the veto stand "would be obviously sending the wrong signal to the rest of the world about what took place just a few months ago," he said.

Members of Congress in both parties were angered by Bush's efforts to warm relations with Beijing in the absence of human rights concessions. They were particularly incensed by the president's secret dispatching of high-level emissaries to Beijing on at least two occasions since the crackdown, a move Bush said he made to prevent isolating China.

The administration is fighting the veto override in the Senate, where it needs to enlist 34 senators to block the attempt.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate leaders predict a lengthy and "at times contentious" floor battle as Congress works on opposing plans to clean up the nation's dirty and unhealthy air.

Senate Majority Leader George J. Mitchell, D-Maine, left, with Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., chairman of the Senate Environmental and Public Works subcommittee, address a news conference Monday on Capitol Hill in Washington.

A bill to tighten air pollution controls was being sent this afternoon to the Senate floor, where critics are expected to offer amendments aimed at lowering the cost to industry and easing the impact on automakers.

"This debate has been a long time in coming," Senate Majority Leader George J. Mitchell, D-Maine, told reporters Monday, predicting "long, formidable ... at times contentious debate."

A similar, although less stringent, clean air bill has yet to clear a House committee as congressmen watch the issue's progress in the Senate.

With more than 100 million people breathing air the government considers unhealthy and growing concern over the destruction of streams and lakes by acid rain, there is little disagreement over the need for tougher federal air pollution controls.

But there is sharp dissent between Senate Democrats and President Bush on how much of a burden industry should be asked to assume.

Last week Bush called the Senate bill too expensive, saying it would cost twice as much as the administration's clean air proposal — which is similar to the House bill — but would not provide significantly cleaner air. Bush said he would only sign a bill that "balances environmental and economic" considerations.

Mitchell and key sponsors of the Senate bill on Monday disputed Bush's cost figures and maintained the administration plan does not provide enough protection from urban air pollution and the health effects of toxic industrial releases.

The Bush proposal is "much weaker and doesn't do the job," declared Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., chairman of the Environment and Public Works subcommittee that crafted the Senate legislation.

Bush estimated the cost of his plan at $19 billion a year and said the Senate bill would cost $40 billion a year. Most of the increased cost is attributed to tighter standards after the turn of the century for automobile emissions and toxic industrial releases.

Mitchell said although the Senate plan might be "slightly more expensive," he disputed the White House's estimate. "A cheaper solution is often not the best solution," he told reporters.

Supporters of the Senate bill called it "a health bill" and suggested its costs are dwarfed by the additional health costs the nation will face if automobile and industrial pollution is not reduced over the next decade.

Fran DuMelle of the American Lung Association said the annual health costs associated with air pollution five years ago were estimated at $15 billion to $40 billion. Today, the $40 billion figure "has become a middle range" and the health toll continues to rise, she said.

All three proposals call for a 10 million ton reduction of acid rain pollutants, primarily by utilities in the Midwest where plants rely heavily on high-sulfur coal.

A major battle is expected to involve who will pay for expensive pollution controls on the dirtiest plants. Senators from many Midwest states where the plants are located, have argued in favor of a nationwide "cost sharing" plan. But the White House and senators from other states oppose any such distribution of costs.

The Senate bill also would impose stringent automobile tailpipe emission controls beginning in the year 2003. The administration says that plan would only marginally improve air quality but be costly to the auto industry.

Abortion ruling anniversary marked with demonstrations

Associated Press

President Bush assured 75,000 abortion opponents marching in the nation's capital he was their ally, and demonstrators on both sides held rallies around the country on the 17th anniversary of Roe vs. Wade.

In a telephone hookup to demonstrators across from the White House, Bush spoke Monday "of the self-evident moral superiority of adoption over abortion," and said he opposed the 1973 Supreme Court ruling that legalized abortion.

"Let me assure that this president stands with you on this issue of life," he said.

In Sacramento, Calif., a state senator prohibited by her bishop from receiving Communion for her stand in favor of abortion rights told a flag-waving rally of 1,000 not to be discouraged by the president's stand.

"We'll get our message all the way to the White House, where Barbara Bush sits in quiet support," said California Sen. Lucy Killea. "Mr. President, please, read your wife's lips."

Mrs. Bush has refused to answer interviewers' questions about her views on the abortion issue, but a report in this week's Newsweek magazine said she disagreed with her husband.

This year's commemoration of Roe vs. Wade carried special meaning because of a Supreme Court ruling last summer in a Missouri case that gave states greater latitude to impose restrictions on abortion.

The decision in Webster vs. Reproductive Health Services upheld Missouri's law banning abortions in public hospitals and stopped government employees from counseling women about abortions. It also required doctors performing abortions to first test any fetus over 20 weeks old to determine if it could live outside the womb.

It also led to speculation the high court would overturn Roe vs. Wade.

In rallies Monday from Spokane, Wash., to Boston, foes and supporters of abortion rights threatened political retribution against politicians who disagree with them.

"It will be a cutting edge issue in this year's elections," Sen. Robert Packwood, R-Ore., told abortion-rights supporters in Washington.

Sarah Weddington, the Texas lawyer who argued for overturning abortion laws in the Roe case, told a breakfast in Dallas: "We are here to say we won 17 years ago today, and we will win again."

In Atlanta, the Rev. Pat Robertson, the evangelical broadcaster who sought the 1988 Republican presidential nomination, shared the podium with Roman Catholic Archbishop Eugene Marino at a rally attended by 10,000 people to urge new state restrictions.

"This nation is on trial for its soul, and men and women and children who believe in life had better be concerned and had better let their voices be heard," Marino said.

But Rep. Charles Thomas, the chairman of the Georgia House Judiciary Committee, said the prevailing sentiment of most legislators is that they do not want to handle the topic during this election-year session.

In Nebraska, the Legislature chose Monday's anniversary to begin its debate on a bill that would require minors seeking abortion to notify their parents. Lawmakers adjourned for the day without voting.

In Dallas, Texans United for Life urged abortion foes to send thousands of baby rattles to lawmakers to "rattle the conscience of Texas."

In Charlotte, N.C., a Planned Parenthood chapter set up three mobile telephones for abortion rights advocates to pay $3 to call Gov. Jim Martin and Bush.

New York Gov. Mario Cuomo, at a conference of family planning advocates in Albany, said both sides could find common ground in promoting sexual abstinence among teen-agers.

Bush to tour Kansas City crack house

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush, saluting Kansas City families who helped shut down a crack house, says it will take a return to old values that taught right from wrong for Americans to win the war against drugs.

Bush was flying to Kansas City today to deliver his anti-drug message at a Baptist church, tour the former crack house and, in a speech before local law enforcers, send Congress another signal of impatience at its failure to enact his anti-crime package.

Bush is readying plans to announce the second phase of the national drug-fighting strategy he launched on Sept. 5. That will come sometime before the Jan. 31 State of the Union address to Congress, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Monday.

Bush was meeting at the Metropolitan Missionary Baptist Church in Kansas City with members of the Ad Hoc Committee on Crime, a grassroots group formed in 1977 by citizens alarmed by a series of unsolved drug-related murders.

Fitzwater said the committee includes volunteers from drug-ridden communities who work closely with the police, schools, courts, the media and the business community to fight crime and drug use. The president planned to visit a onetime crack house on Park Avenue, then was to address federal, state and local law enforcement officials at the Kansas City Municipal Auditorium.

"He'll talk about the spirit of local communities who take charge of their own lives and their own communities. He'll talk about local heroes in the Kansas City region who have done this job," said Fitzwater.

"He'll talk about the problems of crime that are caused by drug use ... and ask the Congress to finish the job they started in the last session" and pass his crime bill, which would require mandatory prison terms for firearms offenses and cut plea-bargaining with violent criminals, Fitzwater said.

Bush told a conservative audience Monday night that there is "no short cut to the victory line in the race against drugs and crime. ... It will take a partnership of people reaching into every neighborhood and every school."

"Our drug and crime problems go beyond government solutions alone," Bush told guests at a banquet for American Spectator magazine. "It will take a return to the values that have taught generations of Americans the difference between right and wrong."

But NAACP Executive Director Benjamin Hooks said Monday after meeting with Bush that to many blacks it appears the Barry arrest was part of a pattern of singling out elected black officials for "harassment."

Attorney General Dick Thornburgh emphatically denied that government prosecutors have targeted black officials, and said it would be "intolerable" if they did.

Bush, Thornburgh and FBI Director William Sessions met with Hooks and 16 other NAACP officials to hear firsthand their account of mail bombs and threats directed against the civil rights organization.

The NAACP leaders said Thornburgh indicated there were "some movements" toward tracking the bombs that claimed the life of an Alabama federal judge and a Savannah, Ga., civil rights lawyer.

Florida governor asks for $3.2 billion to save land

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Gov. Bob Martinez has proposed investing $3.2 billion during the next decade to save threatened beaches, mangrove islands, Everglades patches and other wilderness areas from rampant development.

An environmentalist said the plan would "change the face of Florida."

"It's time we move forward to safeguard our heritage, before these special lands are developed or priced beyond grasp," Martinez said Monday.

"We can greatly increase our land-acquisition capabilities, or we can continue to fall further behind every year."

Without the plan, only $650 million would be available for land acquisition during the next decade, Martinez said.

He said it was too early to project how much land the $3.2 billion might buy.

The plan must be approved by the Legislature, where the Republican governor said it has bipartisan support. It is being sponsored by Democratic Sen. George Kirkpatrick and Republican Rep. Tom Drage.

Charles Lee of the Florida Audubon Society called the plan "the single most significant proposal yet made to reach to the problems that are destroying the environment."

"After the next decade, when much of Florida is paved over in subdivisions, parking lots and shopping centers, there will be less and less opportunity to have an initiative such as this," Lee said.

Examples of land environmentalists want saved are the sandy beaches and forested tracts in the Florida Panhandle, freshwater springs in northern Florida, river wetlands in central Florida and mangrove islands in southern Florida.

The Everglades, a subtropical marsh covering much of southern Florida, also is a focus of ecological concern. It is bordered by an area of unprecedented development in recent decades, with the coast from Miami to West Palm Beach now estimated to have a population of 4 million.

Last month, President Bush signed into law a measure expanding Everglades National Park by 110,000 acres, bringing it to more than 1.5 million acres — but about six-sevenths of the Everglades remains unprotected.

The proposal arose out of recommendations from the 29-member Commission on the Future of Florida's Environment, chaired by Nathaniel Reed, an environmentalist and former assistant U.S. Secretary of the Interior.

"This, I think, is going to change the face of Florida more than any single thing that I can think of," Reed said. "I think there's an enormous amount of broad public support for this initiative."

The proposal calls for selling $300 million in bonds each year starting with the 1991-92 budget, using expected growth in a tax on real-estate transfers to repay the debt. That growth is expected to reach $30 million per year.

U.S. officials promise additional aid to Nicaraguan Contras

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. officials are assuring the Nicaraguan Contras they can count on additional U.S. humanitarian assistance regardless of the outcome of next month's national elections in that country.

A $50 million aid program is due to expire just days after the Feb. 25 elections, but legislative ground rules allow aid deliveries to continue through March. The upcoming expiration of the program has produced speculation that aid to the Contras may finally end after almost 10 years.

If the opposition coalition led by presidential candidate Violeta Chamorro wins the election, it is widely expected the rebels will return peacefully to Nicaragua from their base camps in Honduras.

In that event, renewed U.S. aid would be designed to help the reintegration process, said the U.S. officials, asking not to be identified.

But, according to the officials, if President Daniel Ortega and his Sandinista Front win — either through a fair process or through fraud — the Contras are expected to continue on as a fighting force. Many are said to be committed to resuming the armed struggle against the Sandinista Army in the event Chamorro loses, even if the process is honest.

Whether the Contras are able to pose a credible military threat is another question. They have received no U.S. military aid for almost two years and none from any other source, so far as is known.

At present, the U.S. program of providing food, clothing, shelter and medical services is reaching just less than 10,000 Contras based at camps in southern Honduras and about 50,000 family members living there.

The Contra leaders have been told there is a "political consensus" in the United States within the administration and the Congress that the basic needs of Contras must continue to be met even after the current aid allocation runs out, an official said.

The form of any future aid package would be the subject of discussions between the administration and the Congress over the next two months.

Members of Congress have had little to say on the issue lately because they have been in recess for more than a month. But it is expected Democrats will generally insist any new aid program be linked to a process of reintegrating the rebels back into Nicaraguan society. The administration, on the other hand, likely will favor providing aid with few strings.

The administration has expressed strong doubts about Sandinista intentions regarding free and fair elections, citing what it claims have been repeated instances of violence and intimidation against opposition candidates.

The Sandinistas argue the incidents have been isolated and exaggerated by the administration.

The nature of the Contra presence in Honduras has changed considerably in recent months. As many as 3,000 Contras have abandoned the main Honduran base location at Yamales and headed eastward through extraordinarily dense foliage to an area less exposed to potential Sandinista attacks.

The forces deployed in that forbidding region are being sustained by U.S.-sponsored airdrops of food and other supplies.

These rebels are worried not only about the Sandinista military but also about United Nations and Organization of American States officials participating in a commission set up to demobilize the Contras.

The five Central American presidents created the commission in August. Within weeks many rebels began fleeing eastward while others — up to 2,500 — redeployed inside Nicaragua.

As officials described it, these Contras want to give up the struggle according to their own timetable and not that of an international commission. They are not convinced it is safe as yet to return to Nicaragua despite Sandinista assurances that the current electoral process is genuinely democratic.

NATION IN BRIEF

Death threat shrugged off

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush's spokesman today shrugged off news reports that Colombian drug lords are plotting to shoot down Air Force One and voiced confidence in the Secret Service's ability to protect the president.

"The Secret Service says it can provide the president security and the president intends to go" to a drug summit in Cartagena, Colombia, next month, White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said.

CBS News reported Monday the Secret Service was checking the reports that Colombian drug lords were smuggling SA-7 shoulder-fired anti-aircraft missiles into Colombia for an attempt to shoot down the plane when Bush attends the meeting on Feb. 15.

But Fitzwater said his own inquiries on the matter had drawn a blank and that the Secret Service apparently also is unaware of such specific threats.

"Nobody here seems to have heard of missiles," Fitzwater said.

He said the Secret Service "has made several survey tours" to the summit site and is convinced it can protect the president.

Earlier, a Fitzwater aide, Alixe Glen, said the Secret Service was "always checking out threats" against the president, although she had no information on the most recent reports.

Tamales mistaken for drug

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. military now says 50 pounds of a substance it seized at a house used by deposed Panamanian leader Manuel Antonio Noriega turned out to be tamales instead of cocaine as the Army initially said, The Washington Post reported today.

In a dispatch from Panama City, Panama, the paper said military and civilian officials said that although 450 kilos of cocaine and assorted other drugs have been seized since U.S. troops invaded Dec. 20, none could be directly linked to Noriega or used in the drug-trafficking trial against him.

"It was just a mistake in the confusion of the moment," the Post quoted a U.S. officer in Panama as saying of the earlier report. The officer was not identified.

Noriega is awaiting trial in Miami on federal drug-trafficking and racketeering charges.

On Dec. 22, Col. Mike Snell, commander of a U.S. infantry task force, told reporters his troops had found 50 pounds of cocaine in a house frequented by Noriega, some of it wrapped in banana leaves inside a freezer. "We're sure it was cocaine," Snell was quoted as saying.

Man held in beating death

NEW YORK (AP) — A man who was returning from the movies with his son beat to death a homeless man after an altercation on a subway platform, police said.

Transit Police say the unidentified homeless man started the fight Sunday night by harassing, spitting at and hitting Rodney Sumter, 39, who was returning from the movies with his 3-year-old son.

After the homeless man fell, Sumter banged the man's head on the concrete platform and kicked him in the head, causing his death, witnesses said.

Sumter, who police said had no criminal record, was charged with first-degree manslaughter. That means he intended to cause physical injury, said Colleen Roche, spokeswoman for the district attorney's office.

Navy halts Iowa repairs

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — The Navy has halted repairs to the battleship USS Iowa's No. 2 turret amid speculation that the World War II ship would be mothballed.

Navy Secretary H.L. Garrett III ordered the work suspended this weekend after consultations with Defense Secretary Dick Cheney.

WE NEED YOUR HELP: VA welcomes comments concerning the condition of our properties. Any improprieties should be reported to the VA Regional Office at 817-757-6869.

The offer which best serves the interest of VA will be processed for acceptance. The name of the successful offeror and sales broker will appear in subsequent publications. VA will accept cash offers up to 10 percent below the advertised term sales price. VA also will pay reasonable loan discount points and buyers' closing costs on cash offers when requested on the Cash Sale Addendum to Offer to Purchase. However, the combined loan discount points, buyers' closing costs to be paid by VA and the discount for cash may not exceed 10 percent of the term list price. Offers must be submitted at term listed price when buyers request a new GI loan with $1.00 move-in. Interest rate of available financing is 9.5 percent (APR 9.6 percent).

Purchase offers requesting VA vendee financing (Term Sales) must have VA Form 26-6705B, Credit Statement of Prospective Purchaser and Verification of Employment/Income, as outlined in Sales of VA-Acquired Properties Manual, attached to their VA Form 26-6705, Offer to Purchase and Contract of Sale. Effective June 8, 1988, all credit underwriting for purchase offers requesting VA vendee financing is being referred to Miller and Davis PC. All brokers are reminded to refer to PM letter #17-88 dated May 25, 1988, outlining these new procedures. Purchase offers not accompanied by the required employment/income verification WILL RESULT IN REJECTION OF THE PURCHASE OFFER.

Prior approval will be required by VA for the transfer of a property secured by a vendee loan if the loan is not paid in full as part of the transfer. Public Law 100-689 also permits VA to charge a one-half of 1 percent funding fee for the transfer as well as a fee for processing the approval of the transfer.

VA has properties for sale statewide. If you desire to purchase properties in other areas, please contact any sales broker located in the area in which you are interested.

FORFEITURE OF EARNEST MONEY DEPOSIT

Prior to signing the offer, broker must deposit in broker's trust account the $500 earnest money deposit. The Earnest Money Agreement (Exhibit "H") must be signed by the purchaser(s) and submitted along with the VA Form 26-6705, Offer to Purchase and Contract of Sale, on all offers. The $500 earnest money deposit will be remitted to Miller and Davis PC upon acceptance of the offer. Once a purchase offer has been accepted for processing by VA and subsequently cancelled at the request of the purchaser, the earnest money deposit WILL NOT be refunded and the purchaser will be required to forfeit the earnest money to the VA as liquidation expenses. There will be no exception to this policy. Therefore, the VA suggests that all brokers interview their buyers to assure they want the property prior to submission of an offer to purchase. VA pays 6% sales commission. Offers are subject to the provisions of VA Form 26-6705, Offer to Purchase and Contract of Sale, on which all offers must be submitted. VA Form 26-6705 must be submitted in duplicate to:
