Small Divan Only Bit of Decoration in Bare Apartment

CHICAGO, June 6.—(AP)—Mrs. Charles G. Morris, wife of the secretary of the Central Trust company, today was found unconscious in the gas filled kitchen of her Evanston apartment. Hospital attendants said she might recover.

The insistent barking of her dog "Nigel" attracted the attention of neighbors who found her wearing only her dressing gown.

Mrs. Morris, who is 26 years old, was revived by a fireman after he had applied resuscation treatment for an hour with an oxygen machine. She was removed to a hospital by the police. It was reported that the police were not revealed.

A small divan was the only piece of furniture in the four-room apartment and neigbors said that Mr. and Mrs. Morris were estranged and that the rest of the furniture was moved ten days ago. A traveling bag filled with her clothing was near Mrs. Morris.

Mr. Morris formerly was an assistant secretary to vice President Charles G. Dawes, as president of the Central Trust company.

Texas Grads Should Believe in Christ

AUSTIN, June 6.—(AP)—Graduates of the University of Texas were expected to accept the recognized dogmas of the Christian religion and find in them a richer content instead of recklessly discarding these beliefs for something new, in the Baccalaureate sermon delivered at the Texas Memorial stadium Sunday by Rev. J. M. Dawson, D. D. pastor of the First Baptist church of Waco.

Platinum Shortage Is Seen at Capital

WASHINGTON, June 6.—Looks like a shortage of platinum wedding rings next month, if the crop of June brides is a record-breaker. At any rate, there will be no bargain prices on platinum rings or wedding trinkets the department of commerce coldly made known.

Women of Moscow Interested in Mode

MOSCOW, June 6.—Moscow is not yet a European fashion center, but as the prosperity of the country revives people, especially women, are beginning to pay more attention to what their neighbors are wearing. Some noteworthy changes in style are already visible.

The fact that a much larger proportion of women now work outside their homes naturally has its influence on their habits of dress.

Woman With Rifle Captures Thieves

VANCOUVER, Canada, June 6.—At the point of a rifle which Mrs. L. Komang declared she would use if he moved an inch, she captured a man who had been robbing her chicken house, and kept him standing at attention, with his hands high over his head, until the police arrived and took him over.

The thief had a quick way of killing the birds as he cut their heads off with a pair of large scissors before they could utter a squawk, according to the police.

Thermometer Begins To Climb Again as Need Of Milk, Ice Fund Grows

The thermometer started climbing again Sunday and tied the previous high record for the summer with a 98 degree temperature.

And just as it hit its stride again, so did suffering increase for those hapless youngsters who, their early lives shaped by circumstance over which they have no control, feel the need of fresh, cool milk.

A good start has been made on the Record News milk and ice fund which each year is devoted to the comfort of these babes. There are many of them in the city who through the fund are able to realize, sometimes at least, the invigoration that fresh milk, well cooled, brings.

In the past their lives have been brightened perceptibly because of the bounty of large hearted Wichitans who know that the long, Texas summer season is a rigorous and trying time.

A good start has been made on the fund already. It will continue to grow this week.

Checks should be made payable to the Record News milk and ice fund, and all contributions will be acknowledged by the Record News.

STAR ATHLETE RIVER VICTIM

Marlin High School Baseball and Basketball Player Drowns

MARLIN, June 6.—(AP)—Cecil Earl Connor, 19, senior in Marlin high school, was drowned in the Brazos river near here Sunday while on a fishing trip at a point about two miles north of the bridge on the Marlin-Chilton road.

Connor went on the outing with two other men when the accident occurred. According to the story told here, he and one of the other members of the party went to inspect the fishing lines, which were set from a high bank. While the other man was bending over to inspect the lines, the boy toppled over into the water and did not come to the surface until the body was recovered a few hours later, about 30 feet from the scene of the drowning.

Relatives declared they surmised the youth had been subjected to heart attacks or an attack of acute indigestion. The boy was an excellent swimmer, and the water where he drowned was not over four feet deep. The body was found in seven feet of water.

Connor was a star member of the Marlin high school baseball and basket ball teams.

Young Blade, 91, Elopes; Now He Is Suing for $260,000

PITTSBURGH, June 6.—William H. Goldie, who upheld the right of young blades of 91 to marry, has returned from Florida to his home in Wilkinsburg, where he is preparing to fight for the return of his quarter-million-dollar estate.

Goldie last August eloped to Washington, Pa., with Mrs. M. H. Hayes, 58-year-old widow of a Philadelphia surgeon. The elopement, it is understood, was accomplished after the nonagenarian had signed a paper which he supposed was a will, bequeathing his property, valued at $260,000, to his four children. It develops that the paper was a trust deep, and Goldie has begun an action to have this deed set aside.

"Beer" Captured

A Park street "choc joint" yielded the city bastile eight prisoners Sunday afternoon and thirteen half gallon jars of yellow, muddy looking "beer." The prisoners, seven negro men and the eighth, a negress, were locked up for the night to appear in corporation court this morning.

Officers participating in the raid were Laye, Carmichael, Ordonoez, Gonzales and Nauzman.

Sartin to Speal

A tentative speaking schedule for the next week as announced by County Judge B. D. Sartin, candidate for congress from this district includes addresses in connection with the county candidate speaking campaigns at Byers and Charlie next Saturday and a similar address at Vernon, Wilbarger county, Friday night.

Judge Sartin spoke Saturday afternoon before a large crowd at Petrolia in conection with an all-candidate rally there.

Wind, Flood, Fire, Rob Him of Home

MAYSVILLE, Ky., June 6.—Paul Learch, Boude's Ferry, added fire to his list of home wreckers, when his new two-story residence burned to the ground, with practically all of its contents.

Two other homes owned by Learch have been ruined, one by a tornado and the other by a flood. Learch lost his fire insurance policies in the flames.

Tourist Goes South Behind Goat Team

FREMONT, Neb., June 6.—"Easy" Smith, jovial crippled tourist of Scottsbluff, Neb., is headed south toward Florida.

"Easy" is traveling de luxe, perched on top the pile of luggage that overflows his small cart. The cart is drawn by Tom and Jerry, faithful goats. "Easy" is unable to walk.

RUM REBELLION DECISION DUE

Reform Federation Head Declares U. S. Must Declare Itself Soon

WASHINGTON, June 6.—(AP)—Congress must decide whether it will "submit to the rum rebellion or whether it will serve the general public," the Rev. William Sheafe Chase, superintendent of the International Reform federation, declared in a sermon here today.

Asking of congress, "which is overwhelmingly dry," was to be prevented from enacting dry laws "by a wilful minority which is wet," Canon Chase declared.

"If the rum business has more influence in congress than the dry platforms of both national parties three years ago, more influence than the sworn duty of each senator and representative to enact appropriate legislation to enforce prohibition, the decay of our American institutions impends."

Opposing any prohibition referendum, Canon Chase said that "the wets prefer a referendum to an election of legislators at the ballot box, for the same reason that they prefer a straw ballot. The wets know that a referendum is less accurate in revealing the will of the people, is less protected by election machinery from fraud and bribery and can be more easily misled."

Florida Voters Chose Nominees

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., June 6.—(AP)—Florida democracy will go to the polls Tuesday to select in a state primary nominees for one seat in the United States senate, two congressmen and several state offices.

Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owens, daughter of the late William Jennings Bryan, opposes W. Joe Sears for congress from the fourth Florida district.

Senator Duncan U. Fletcher has two opponents.

Thomas A. Yon, Tallahasse, opposes J. H. Smithwick, Pensacola, incumbent, for congress from the third Florida district.

Mrs. Owens has apealed to voters as the first woman candidate in Florida's history, while Senator Fletcher on the one trip he has made from Washington, appealed for support of his record.

Six Are Injured In Auto Accidents

FORT WORTH, June 6.—(AP) Six persons were injured in accidents here Sunday, one critically. The most seriously injured was Earl Christian, who drove his motorcycle into the curb at Forest park to avoid collision with an automobile. He suffered a basel fracture of the skull.

Frank Tipton, 15, of Alvarado and Rube Baker, 17, of Rbome, were injured Sunday when the automobile driven by W. Anderson, of Enid, Okla., collided with a street car in the downtown district. They were cut about the face and body by flying glass.

Anderson lost a finger.

LYNCH LAUGHS AT REQUEST OF MOODY TO QUIT

Appeal of Dan's Friends Meets With Smile of Candidate

RIDICULES "BET"

Declares Challenge of Ferguson could have been Met With Resignation

DALLAS, June 6.—(AP)—Lynch Davidson here today from his east Texas swing ridiculed the request of certain Moody supporters that Davidson resign from the gubernatorial race in Moody's favor.

"This is a certain sign of the Moody decline," said Davidson. "It is plainly ridiculous. Long before Moody was in the race I had Ferguson defeated. The Ferguson doom was sealed, when Moody entered the lists to split the Ferguson opposition. If Ferguson is retained in power one man in Texas and one only will be to blame, and 'Dan's the man.'

"When Jim Ferguson challenged Moody to bet his office on the outcome of the primary and Moody accepted, the young attorney general thereupon lost the first opportunity to rid the state of Fergusonism."

Davidson said if Moody really wanted to rid the state of Fergusonism he could have met the Ferguson wager with a challenge that both resign from the governorship race and that would have at once ended Fergusonism.

"Moody could then have and still can lay down the challenge that both of them withdraw their candidacy from the gubernatorial race. This would accomplish what Moody says is his only purpose—defeat of Fergusonism.

"If he had done this, it would have cleared Moody of any odor of attempting to further his personal ambitions, and would have placed Ferguson in such a position, in case he did not accept that his defeat would have been assured. Instead, Moody made an election bet, which he hoped would strengthen his own campaign, and let slip the real opportunity to save Texas.

The opportunity to rid Texas of Fergusonism before the primary is still open. The offices which Ferguson and Moody bet belong to the people, but the candidacies are their own. 'Dan's the man' to challenge Ferguson that they both withdraw."

Davidson said he had received letters from those reported to be financing the Moody campaign and that these letters convinced him these letters were nothing but political propaganda.

Orange Boy Scouts Entertain Hundreds In Night Concert

One of the enjoyable features of the spring was the concert given Sunday night at Bellevue park by the fifty members of the Luther Stark-Boy Scout-Rotary band of Orange, Texas which arrived in Wichita Falls late Sunday afternoon on their tour of the state, and journey to Denver, Colo., where they will play for the international meeting of Rotary.

The boys, 48 in number, and two girls, are in charge of Manager and Mrs. S. E. Ayers, director. James Moss is the assistant director and member of the band.

The Orange party arrived in Wichita Falls at 7:30 o'clock Sunday evening, and were entertained at Haven park. Supper was served by the local Boy Scouts in charge of Executive Frank B. Creighton under the auspices of the Rotary club through the boys' work committee of which R. E. Penick is chairman.

The band members spent the night at Haven park and were given breakfast there, also. The party will leave this morning. The band has been touring the country for the past five weeks, coming through various sections of the state. On their return from Denver, the boys will be at Kerville in the Presbyterian encampment there for 10 days.

The band was organized from a nucleus of eight members, and now has a membership of more than one hundred. To became a member of the band, the boy must meet the musical requirements, be a student in school, a Boy Scout making progress, an attendant at Sunday school and of church at least once a week, the director stated last night.

Austin Banks SOS To Pflugerville

AUSTIN, June 6.—(AP)—Austin, a city of 55,000 people and boasting six banks with estimated total resources of $25,000,000, and with $10,000,000 in state funds on deposit had to call on Pflugerville, a town of several hundred persons with a bank, a cotton oil mill, and a school as its major possessions for enough change to enable University of Texas students to get their library deposits for the term that recently closed.

SNYDER MAN ACQUITTED

S. C. Daugherty Found Not Guilty of Slaying Man.

SNYDER, Texas, June 6.—(AP) The jury in the case of S. C. Daugherty, charged with murder in connection with the slaying of Elza Smith Borden county, returned a verdict of not guilty here late Saturday after having deliberated about ten hours. Smith was killed on January 26, 1925.

John D. Gives $350,000 FOR Baptist Church

Philanthropist Furnishes Money For Completion of Edifice

CLEVELAND, June 6.—(AP)—John D. Rockefeller, Sr., and John D. Rockefeller, Jr., have given $250,000 outright and $100,000 conditionally to the Euclid Avenue Baptist church here to aid completion of the church's auditorium and Sunday school.

Announcement of the donation was made today at services in a theatre where the congregation temporarily is housed.

TIRED OF FOOT TO GET RELIEF

Dallas Sufferers Will Be Treated During Clinic By Chirpodists

DALLAS, June 6.—(AP)—Dallas citizens are to take their sore and tired feet to a free foot clinic during the Southern Chiropodists' association convention meeting here Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

The foot doctors have invited all who desire to submit their foot ills for treatment at the clinics which will be conducted by some of the ablest specialists among the profession.

The convention is a joint meeting of the Texas society of chiropodists, and of delegates from about 15 southern states who expect to form the Southern association.

According to Dr. Lee Austin of Dallas, a movement will be set on foot to withdraw from the national organization on the ground that the national association does not properly respresent the southern chiropodists.

One of the features of the convention is to be a barefoot parade by girls whose feet have been pronounced perfect. They will do the pigeon toed walk, which doctors state is a sure cure for foot ills, contending that nature intended man to walk pigeon toed because that posture throws the weight on the outside of the foot.

Many of the convention sessions will be taken up with scientific discussions on the foot.

Slayer Discovered After Six Years

BERLIN, June 6.—Six years ago Herr Otto Donner, a lawyer, of Niederlossnitz, Saxony, was found in a room in his villa dead with a shot through his head, and it was supposed that death was due to an accident.

A short while ago information was received by the Dresden police which made them suspect that there had been foul play. They learned that Frau Donner had had a love affair with a yo gardener, Otto Kronert, shortly before the death of her husband. They arrested the man who finally admitted to the slaying.

Iowa Voters To Nominate Today

DES MOINES, June 6.—(AP)—Iowa voters go to the polls tomorrow to select republican and democratic candidates for the United States senate, and in addition, the republicans will decide several primary contests for state offices.

Supporters of Sen. A. B. Cummins, who seeks renomination for an office he has held nearly a score years, declare the vote will be "an Iowa house cleaning," referring to the opposing candidacy of Smith W. Brookhart. On the other hand, Colonel Brookhart's adherents regard the primary as largely an expression of the voters on his recent unseating by the senate, as well as other issues raised by Brookhart.

London Meyer, N. Y. Socialist Is Dead

NEW YORK, June 6.—(AP)—Meyer London, former socialist representative in congress from New York died tonight in Bellevue hospital of injuries received today when he was struck by an automobile.

Born in Russia, Dec. 29, 1871, Mr. London came to the United States at the age of 20 and was admitted to the New York bar seven years later. He was in congress from 1915 to 1919 and from 1921 to 1923, and was active in the socialist and labor movements.

Turkey, England, Sign Mosul Treaty

(CONSTANTINOPLE, June 6.—(AP)—Turkey and Great Britain have signed the Mosul convention, which settles the dispute between these two countries over the control of Mosul, with its important untapped oil resources. The Mosul question came up before the league of nations and various soiutions were suggested. Eventually the present agreement was drawn up.

FARM RELIEF CLAIMS TIME OF U. S. SENATE

While House Passes Other Bills, Measure Goes Through Mill

PRIVATE HEARINGS

Good Roads Legislation to be Considered By Congress

WASHINGTON, June 6.—(AP) With adjournment date apparently as much in the air as ever, the senate will devote more time this week to farm relief legislation while the house is putting through a raft of unimportant measures.

Friends of farm legislation will continue conferences during the next few days in an effort to work out a measure which will stand some chance of approval by the house and finally by President Coolidge. Vice-President Dawes is participating in the meetings so as to be as helpful as possible in the solution of the biggest problem congress faces.

Besides the farm bill, the good roads measure is certain to be considered during the week.

The real stumbling block to adjournment now is the French debt settlement.

The senate finance committee will begin private hearings on this next Wednesday with a view to getting the bill of ratification in position for action by the senate. That will not come, however, until the French parliament has acted, and there is no information here as to when that will be.

Another senate inquiry to be put under way this week is that into senatorial primary and election campaign expenditures, with the special committee directing its attention first to the Pennsylvania republican primary in which reports have had it that several million dollars were spent.

The most important measure slated for house committee decision this week is that to create 12 additional federal judgeships. The measure to increase the salaries of the federal judges also may be taken up.

Barrel Organ Puts Player in Prison

MANCHESTER, Eng., June 6.—Four years ago a barrel with the popular melodies of the day—left the musical garage of its Italian proprietor in Manchester in charge of John Joseph Jones, a cripple.

Season followed season, popular songs succeeded popular songs, but the barrel organ, wheeled by John Joseph Jones through the streets of strange cities, continues to play the old songs, while its Italian owner waited its return and listened for the merry tinkle of the metallic voice that was gone.

And at last, with the homing instinct of its kind, the barrel organ returned to Manchester, still in charge of John Joseph Jones, who was charged at the city police court with abducting the instrument.

Four Terrorists Arrested, Uraguay

MONTEVIDEO, Uruguay, June 5. (AP)—Four alleged interantional terrorists, held in jail here, are charged by the police with having bombed the United States legation Friday. The police claim to have apprehended the authors of the bomb outrage through a confession obtained from another terrorist, who had been detained in the case.

Three of the accused men are foreigners and are said to be listed as terrorists in rogue's galleries at Buenos Aires and Rio Janeiro.

Revolvers, pieces of iron similar to those with which the bomb which exploded in the Legation was loaded, and printed propaganda for demonstrations in behalf of Sacco and Vanzetti, convicted by the Massachusetts courts of murder, and held prisoners in that state, are declared by the police to have been found at the house where the prisoners resided.

Disastrous Blaze Sweeps O'er San Francisco, Laying Waste to Dozens of Palatial Residences

SAN FRANCISCO, June 6.—(AP) Smouldering ruins of a dozen residences, partial destruction of 25 others, and Ewing Field, former Pacific Coast league baseball park, remained today as charred reminders of a conflagration yesterday which is described by authorities as "the most serious fire menace San Francisco has experienced since 1906."

The fire, starting at Ewing Field in the late afternoon, developed into a roaring giant of destruction that consumed approximately $200,000 worth of property; brought injuries and burns to 14 persons; made many families homeless, and called out nearly the entire fire fighting apparatus of the city before it was subdued. For a while the western residential section of the city was threatened.

A lighted match or cigarette, dropped through the seats of the grand stand during the progress of a baseball game, is believed responsible for the fire.

About three hours after starting the flames were under control But not before they had leaped the street to invade Clavary cemetery, and leave a trail of blackened tombstones, withered grass and scorched trees. The razed section is in the west-central part of the city, a few blocks north of the Panhandle of Golden Gate Park.

A fort mile wind added to the danger and brought a continnual barrage of alarms into various stations as burning embers fell upon roofs of houses, a mile away from the major blaze. Around 25 roofs were ignited in this manner with resulting damage of $75,000. At the same time fire broke out the Tubbs Cordage company, in another part of the city, which caused $100,000 damage before it was extinguished. Origin of this blaze was not determined.

Loot Man's Cellar Of $8,000 Champagne

WEST CHESTER, Pa., June 6.—A jury in the Chester county courthouse returned a verdict of guilty against Amos Sharpe of Philadelphia, charged with the theft of liquor valued at $8000 from the home of Dr. George Clymes Stout of Berwyn.

The state charged that Sharpe, who conducted a butler-and-valet service in Philadelphia, broke into the doctor's home while the family was away last summer and looted the wine cellar of a valuable stock of pre-war champagne. A courtroom poll of serious drinkers suggested a prison term of 175 years more than life as a punishment.

Toppist Thugs Stir Speaker to Wrath

NEW YORK, June 6.—Chief City Magistrate William McAdoo told the weekly gathering of Methodist preachers in their chapel that highwaymen and burglars no longer betrayed their "profession" by wearing rough clothes.

"Why, when I was a boy you could spot a bad character at once when you looked at him," he said. "But today the gunmen, murderers and robbers are suave, well-dressed young men who look like fashion plates. You cannot tell that they are dyed-in-the-wool crooks with guns in their hip pockets and dope in their vest pockets."

He denied that crime was attributable to "an expensive age with wealth on every side."

Abstractors Meet

DALLAS, Texas, June 6.—(AP)—More than 150 Texas abstractors are expected to be in attendance when President A. S. Moody calls the Texas Abstractor's association to order for their two-day convention at the Baker hotel here Monday. J. Grover Wells of San Antonio is secretary of the association.

Business matters will occupy the meeting until Tuesday night, when the annual banquet will be held. L. L. Bristol heads the local committee on entertainment.

Abilene Veteran Heads Texas U. C. V.

HOUSTON, June 6.—(AP)—General J. C. Foster, appointed recently to the office of commander of the trans-Mississippi department, U. C. V., Sunday afternoon announced that he had appointed General R. A. Miller of Abilene as his successor to the office of state commander of the Texas veterans.

General Foster who received his appointment at the annual confederate convention in Birmingham, was at the time Texas commander and also commander of Dick Dowling camp. He will remain in the latter office but has turned the duties of state commander over to General Miller, who will hold this office until the annual Texas convention at Port Arthur, Oct. 2.

Favor Tolerance

NEW YORK, June 6.— (AP) — Writing the "principle of tolerance" into the constitution of the Presbyterian church at the recent general assembly at Baltimore constituted "the greatest deliverance in a generation," Dr. A. Edwin Keigwin, modernist commissioner to the assembly said today in his sermon as pastor of the West End Presbyterian church.

"Crowing" over the dismissal of complaints brought against the New York presbytery in admitting to the ministry two candidates who would not state a belief in the virgin birth, would be out of keeping with the "friendly spirit of the assembly" he said.

RARE MINERALS FOUND IN IDAHO

Smithsonian Publication Reports Diamonds and Minerals in Western State

WASHINGTON, June 6.—The minerals of Idaho, including its rare diamonds and certain minerals not known to occur anywhere else in the world, form the subject of a recent Smithsonian publication.

The work, written by Earl V. Shannon, assistant curate of geology in the national museum, under Smithsonian administration, is an attempt to compile every whit of information on the mineralogy of the state.

To mining interests and to the practical miner, the book is of interest because of its valuable information on the occurrence of lead, zinc, gold, silver, copper and other economically important minerals in a state which has already contributed nearly a billion dollars' worth of minerals to world commerce.

The book describes four minerals not known to occur anywhere in the world. They are custerite, brannerite, owheeite and powellite. Brannerite is a radium-bearing mineral.

Powellite, incidentally, is named after Major Powell, the intrepid scientist long connected with the Smithsonian, who first navigated the Colorado river and who was later the chief of the bureau of American ethnology under Smithsonian direction.

Mountaineer, 74, Accused As Slayer

GRAYSON, Ky., June 6.—If Jerry Stidham, 74, mountain farmer in an isolated section of Carter county, did not murder his wife he is the oldest man ever to be accused of a slaying in this state, it was said here.

Stidham was indicted by the grand jury in session here and charged with killing his wife, 64, on the morning of last February 22. Stidham has steadfastly maintained his innocence and adheres to his original story that bandits slew and robbed his venerable bride to whom he had been married but a few months. She was his third wife.

Relics of China In Coast Museum

SAN FRANCISCO, June 6.—Rare and priceless speculchre relics from ancient Chinese dynasties—Tang, Sang and Ming—have been added to the M. H. De Young museum at Golden Gate Park.

The authenticity of the pieces is without question, as the commissioners of the Frederick Talbot estate, who purchased the collection, have made careful investigation.

Mail Sale of Dogs Brings Jail Term

GUTHRIE, Okla., June 6.—W. H. Giles, of Greenwood, Miss., has been sentenced to two years in the United States penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kan., following his conviction on a charge of using the mails to defraud in connection with his interstate sales of hound dogs.

Giles brought hounds for a few dollars and sold them over the country at fancy prices, representing that they were rabbit chasers by day and coon hunters by night, it was brought out in the trial.

Marry for Love, Her Advice at 86

ST. LOUIS, June 6.—"Mary for love, but don't marry too young, a girl at least, not before 21," Mrs. Hester A. Maxwell, 86, said at her 70th wedding anniversary.

She admitted she married when she was 16, but added "she was young and foolish."

Ex-Crown Prince Escapes Dutch Tax

AMSTERDAM, June 6.—On the plea that his sojourn in Holland was "involuntary," ex-Crown Prince Wilhelm has just won his legal battle for exemption from local taxation during the period he was in Holland.

The taxes he sought to escape had been imposed by the municipal council of the Isle of Wieringen where the ex-Crown Prince spent his exile.

Denver Man Shot Down in Office

DENVER, Colo., June 6.—A. A. Hall, prominent Denver stock broker, was shot and probably fatally injured in his downtown offices. He is in general hospital and not expected to recover as the result of a bullet wound in his liver.

Martin Durkin at Last Stands Trial in Chicago

Martin Durkin, for months the most searched-for man in America, has at last been brought to trial in Chicago for murder. Although Durkin has lost much of the swagger which characterized him at the time of his capture, he is still far from morose. As can be seen in the photo above of him, taken in court, he maintains his debonair attitude. In the group, above, are seen his mother, father and sister, with him in court. His three wives have dropped out of the case. He is charged with slaying Edwin Shanahan, a federal officer.

STOCK-A-DAY

The Canadian Pacific is the only large privately operated railroad in the Dominion. The others are operated by the government. It spans the entire continent with its network of 15,157 miles of owned, leased and operated lines from St. Johns, N. B., to Vancouver, B. C. In addition the company controls, through stock ownership, some 5,100 miles of road in the United States. It owns and operates a fleet of 59 coastal and ocean steamships with 21 vessels on interior waters.

The corporation owns and operates a country-wide chain of hotels, its own grain elevators, sleeping and parlor car lines and express, telegraph, and news services. Of this 25,000,000 acres of land grants it still has over 5,500,000 acres unsold. There has been a striking improvement in efficiency of operation in late years but charges have increased likewise.

Funded debt totals $317,286,531 of which $264,244,832 is in perpetual consolidated 4 per cent debenture stock. This partakes of the nature of a bond without maturity date and supersedes the preferred and common stocks in the event of a default in interest. Capital stock includes $100,148,587 outstanding in 4 per cent non cumulative preference stock of $100 par and $260,000,000 in ordinary shares of $100 par.

The present 10 per cent dividend rate on the common has been maintained since 1911 and is made up of 7 percent from operation of the property and 3 per cent from "special investment account," derived from non-railroad operations and investments. From 1918 to 1924 this dividend was not earned but in 1925 earnings were 12 1-2 per cent on the capital stock. Net operating income for 1925 was $40,154,775 with gross operating revenues of $183,356,006.

Aged Express Horse Saved From Auction By Station Master

NEW YORK, June 6.—An equine veteran and survivor of much hard work, old "Chubbie," a black horse in the service of the American Express company in Phoenix and Flagstaff, Ariz., for 25 years without a vacation or missing a day on account of illness, is here on its way to the Horse Aid Rest Farm, in Milbank, N. Y.

Although in the best of health, the American Express company was going to sell the animal at auction when, Thomas A. Stahl, railway agent in Flagstaff, and Mrs. Stahl intervened.

They rescued "Chubbie" from the auction block, but were unable to keep the horse themselves or to find any canatorium for aged and respectable horses in the west. Mrs. Jacob Ehrlich, president of he Horse Aid society, offered "Chubbie" the hospitality of the Horse Aid Rest farm and the invitation was accepted.

Science Studying Birds and Fish

GOTHENBURG, Sweden, June 6.—The mysterious ways of the birds in the air and the fish in the sea are now subjected to a systematic study by Swedish scientists.

What routes the birds of passage follow at the end of each season, and where the schools of fish come from as well as why they swim in certain directions, are some of the problems investigated.

HOW BURBERRY WAS NAMED

English Firm Built by Personality of Weatherproof Coat Inventor

LONDON, June 6.—The romance of an English firm built up by the personality of a man with an idea is recalled by the death of Thomas Burberry, inventor of the Burberry waterproof coat. He died at the age of 91.

The origin of the "Burberry" was a conversation Burberry had when a very young man, had with a doctor, stating that it was better for a man to get wet through than to be kept dry in a mackintosh. The doctor expressed the opinion that the ideal waterproof garment was one which would withstand wind and rain in a reasonable degree yet allow air to reach the body.

Mr. Burberry christened his invention "Gaberdine," and it was not known as "Burberry" until King Edward got in the habit of saying, "Give me my Burberry." The name stuck.

Youth Saves Life By Catching Buoy

LONDON, June 6.—Two boys who were caught by a sudden squall while fishing midway between the Isle of Wight and the mainland sought refuge on a navigation buoy five miles from land and were rescued after having spent the night there.

They are Edward Batt, aged 16, and William Wood, aged 18, both of Ryde, Isle of Wight. A sudden storm burst and they found a heavy tide and wind sweeping out into the open channel. They made fast to the buoy and took shelter in the iron dome. The buoy is only nine feet in diameter and is lighted by oyx-acetylene gas, which is highly explosive.

1818 Scott Letter Has Long History

FAYETTESVILLE, Ark., June 6.—A letter written by Sir Walter Scott, famous Scotch novelist and poet, is owned by Mrs. Antero Zazont, of Fayettesville.

The letter, dated December 7, 1812, was given to Mrs. Zazoni by her husband, who received it from Count Zori, a scholar, of Rome, whose father was given the letter by John Ross, publicity adviser of the great Scotchman.

Husband, Age 102, Has Wife of 101

LONDON, June 6.—John E. Taylor of Hillside House, Farnborough, Kent, recently became 102 years of age.

His wife, Lucy, will be 102 in August next, and both have been living for the past twenty years with a son who is 64. They are believed to be the oldest married couple in England.

They have a daughter aged 80 and another son aged 62.

Mr. Taylor was born in London. He was a carpenter and likes to recall that when workings on the buildings for the great exhibition of 1851 in Hyde Park he shook hands with the first Duke of Wellington.

He is a smoker, likes a glass of "something strong" and has no time for prohibitionists and anti-smokers.

MOVE TO BAR U. S. DRIVERS

Reckless Americans in Canada May Be Kept From Driving in Canada

CHATHAM, Ont., June 6.—A move has spread from Chatham throughout Ontario to bar all American tourists convicted of reckless driving in Ontario. American motorists who have convictions registered against them in local courts on charges of violating the traffic regulations will have difficulty in crossing the border in the future if Crown Attorney Smith has his way.

After the conviction of Charles Watson of Detroit in the county police court on a charge of reckless driving, which cost the Detroiter $22.50, the crown attorney announced that in the future he will request the provincial secretary to forward the license numbers of cars whose owners have been convicted to the border authorities, so they could be barred from re-entering the country.

SECOND LOVE

MALCOLM DUARD

COPYRIGHT 1926 BY EUGENE MACLEAN

SYNOPSIS OF PECEDING CHAPTER.

Marcie Allen, dark, beautiful, lively and very advanced in her views, has come to live with John Parrish and Audrey, his rich young wife. Her father has put her out of his house because of her free notions of what girls should be allowed to do.

In a fit of irritation because of his wife's frequent references to her own Parrish throws away an emerald pin she has given him. Marcie finds it, sells it, and then discovers from Parrish that the jeweler had consulted him about purchasing it from her—that Parrish had advised the sale, and had already recovered the pin. He tells her he was testing her moral character. She insists that he did it because he is interested in her, and hugs him. That night he asks his wife to send Marcie away.

NOW GO WITH THE STORY

(Names and situations in this story are fictitious.)

CHAPTER XI.

Audrey stepped into the bathroom. Parrish followed as far as the entrance, and stood talking through the narrow crack that she had left open, in the doorway.

"I think it would be better if Marcie went away," he persisted.

"Why?" came Audrey's voice from inside.

Parrish put his face nearer the opening.

"Having women around always made me nervous. You know that."

"Stuff and nonsense," she said, cheerfully. "Now shut that door and go way—I want to undress and go take my path."

He pulled the door to, and with his hands in his pockets moved out into the hall. He could her Marcie singing in her apartment. He stopped and listened. Then more slowly, he turned into his own dressing room.

Slipping off his coat and vest, he hung them over the back of a chair. Then he went to his closet, and fingered the garments that hung on the long brass rod that stretched from end to end.

There was his evening suit, purchased when he first knew Audrey, a little more than a year ago. Beside it hung a golf costume, little used. He grinned a little as he spread out the wide knickers, and looked at their striking plaid. The coat and vest and trousers adjoining were his "winter clothes," the suit that he wore daily until spring came. He had just hung part of his "summer suit" on the chair and was wearing the trousers that belonged to it. At one end of the closet was a morning coat, of the kind that is made to wear with a gardenia on the lapel. He felt of the heavy satin lining, and admired the highly tailored vest and trousers. The outfit showed no signs of use. Audrey had insisted on buying it fort their wedding. He had worn it once since then.

"Five suits, and I'll bet she's got 40 dresses," he said, half aloutd 40 dresses," he said, half aloud. "Oh, well."

He sat down on the chair, and pulled off his shoes. At an afterthought, he went back to the closet in his stocking feet. Fishing on the shelf, he drew forth a silk hat and a cap. He put these back an stood considering. Two pairs of shoes were on the floor of the closet, one of them a pair of high winter calf skins, the other lown evening shoes. The footwear he had just taken off was a pair of oxfords, a little run down at the heel.

Parrish ranged the three pairs of shoes together, looked at them with dissatisfaction, and put trem away.

Thereafter, his face expressive of melancholy, he went to his bathroom and truned on the shower.

Marcie did not go to work the following day. She appeared at breakfast in a flowing robe of deep brick red, open at the throat, wide and short in the sleeves, and through the fabric Parrish could see the complete outline of her undergarments.

Audrey had not yet come downstairs, and Parrish and Marcie were eating alone.

"Im not going to the darned old store," said the girl reaching for a slice of toast. Her motion showed her bare arm to the shoulder.

Parrish eyed her askance. Audrey had never moved about the house in negligee, and he was unused to the sight of coy ribbon knots and brief gauzy combinations through a girl's outer garment.

Womanlike, Marcie caught his thought.

"I'll bet Audrey doesn't go around undressed this way," she surmised.

"Well—I guess she doesn't," Parrish said. He averted his gaze.

"Don't be worried," she advised him. "Nothing to be shocked about. You really know what girls look like don't yo—skin and everything—arms, yo uknow, and legs—regular pattern?"

Parrish bowed his head and took a mountfule of coffee. Marcie laughed.

"You're embarrassed to death," she went on cheerfully. "I suppose I ought to be ashamed of myself. But I'm not—John dear."

Parrish stirred, in a movement of nervous aarm.

"Please don't call me 'dear' and 'honey boy,' and things like," he begged. "You mustn't you know."

"All right," she said. Then she added with tender smile—"my sheik!"

Parrish laid down his fork.

"Don't do that, Marcie," he said. "Don't call me those names."

The girl patted her hands together delightedly. "You called me, 'Marcie,'" she crowed. "You like me, don't you, John?"

"I suppose I do," he confessed. "You're Audrey's friend and I try to like the people she likes."

The smile had left Marcie's face, and her eyes were full of understanding. She put her hand on Parrish's. When he drew it away, she did not seem to notice, but left her own pink, tiny paw on the cloth where he had dropped it.

"You know, way inside yourself, it isn't because of Audrey that you like me," she said. It's because I'm me."

"I dont think 'that's so," he enjoined, in a tone of reasonable argument. "I think—"

"Hello, people."

It was Audrey's voice in the doorway. She came into the breakfast-room, dressed in a business-like canary yellow smock.

"Goodness, Marcie, aren't you late to work?" she inquired as she sat down.

"You bet," said her guest. "I've quit."

Audrey shook out her napkin and laid it on her lap. Pressing her foot on the bell button, she waited until the maid appeared.

"Just some muffins and coffee," she directed. Then, turning to Parrish, she said: "What's wrong? You look so flush and uncomfortable."

"It's my clothes," Marcie told her. "I thought he was going to run away when he saw this outfit."

"Perhaps," said Audrey, laughing, "he's seeing a little too much of you. You really ought to wear something under that, you know."

"This is pretty," objected Marcie. "And I have some clothes under it—you can see them for yourself."

"I'll bet Audrey doesn't go around, undressed this way," Marice surmised.

"We can both see them—or what there is of them," Audrey said. "John will be staying away from the table mornings if you don't cover yourself up more."

"I'll bet he doesn't," said Marcie, with mischief in the glance she cast at him.

"Don't tease Jim," Audrey buttered a muffin and nibbled it. "I always was a Puritan but John is worse than I am. Do you remember the girls in the bathing suits in that gymnasium, Joan, and how you kept your back turned toward them?"

Parrish figeted. He caught the amusement in Marcie's eye, and his wife was watching him as he replied:

"If I went around the house in no more than that, you wouldn't like it," he said.

"But we wouldn't be shocked," erplied Audrey. "Would we, dear? Nobody is ever shocked at what a man wears. So why shouldn't a girl be cool and comfortable if she wants to?"

"Women aren't as moral as men," Parrish thumped on the table, and appeared to Audrey "Are they? You saw those women who were always after your father. You know how they acted."

"I've seen him kiss them," said Audrey.

"It was because they positively demanded it," Parrish asserted. "The only reason women cover themselves up at all is because men expect them to. "Just as soon as these women's rights nonsense come along, what did women do? Took up one-piece bathing suits, and rolled down their stockings, and wore clothes so thin that you could see through them. Men never did that."

"Maybe," suggested Marcie, "it was because the women did not require it. Who's moral now?"

Audrey and Marcie both laughed, but Parrish's face was serious and intent.

"Men don't want their women to dress that way," he declared.

"Just other men's women," declared Marcie triumphantly. "What the other fellow's girl wears is all right—and the less, the better. Huh?"

Parrish took refuge in his food, and the two girls after a vain attempt to prod him into renewed discussion, set forth on a verbal review of the season's style in clothes.

After breakfast, Parrish dutifully kissed Audrey, and went out to the garage af his car. He was stopping to examine a loose bolt, when he became conscious of a human presence. He looked up and saw Marcie beside him, still in her airy robe.

"Audrey went upstairs, and I wanted to ask you something," she explained.

He straightened his back and looked at her.

"Aren't you just a little unhappy, sometimes, John?" she said, i voice low.

He cast his eyes down, and tapped thoughtfully upon the fender. ""Sometimes," he said.

"Then—" she came nearer to him, until her body touched his—"don't forget that I'll do anything I can to make your life happier for you."

HOME INSURANCE COMPANY MAKES MARVELOUS GROWTH

The Wichita Home Insurance company, through its president, Edgar P. Haney, has announced the purchase of Electra Mutual Protective Association, and the opening of an office in Electra. Since its organization four years ago, the company has taken over six large mutual insurance associations. During the last sixty days, more than 3,000 new members have been received and the amount of insurance in force now exceeds $5,000,000. The company is steadily building a reserve, and paying the face value of its policies. It's plan is life, health and accident insurance at cost. It eliminates the big annual premiums, the high salaried officers, stockholders dividends, collectors, commissions on renewal premiums. Texas insurance statistics shaw average yearly cost Old Line companies over $30.00, Mutual companies less than $12.00.

The Wichita Home Insurance company has earned a reputation for promptness in the payment of claims. Below is a list of a few of the several hundred claims settled in this vicinity.

JOSEPHUS DANIELS SPEAKS

JOSEPHUS DANIELS is a North Carolinian. He is the most prominent newspaper publishers of this state. His people in the long ago fought for the flag of the Sonthern Confederacy. Josephus Daniels has been prominent in the higher councils of the democratic party for more than 30 years. He served as a national committeeman for his tate for many years. He has served as a delegate to many national conventions.

He was secretary of the navy for eight years by appointment of Woodrow Wilson. He was closer to William Jennings Bryan than any southern democrat. He is not wedded to the barbarisms of the past. He is not wedded to the slaughter house rules of the past. He would remove the handicaps which have made it impossible for the people to control a national convention of their party.

He was invited by the democrats of Ohio to attend a great gathering of the followers of Jefferson, called for the purpose of revitalizing the party, putting new life into the organization and getting all shades of democrats to meet on common ground, in order to prepare for the great battles of the future.

Josephus Daniels did not hesitate or stammer in his address. He told the 10,000 democrats of the Buckeye state who had assembled in conference, that the two thirds rule and the unit were the handicaps which prevented party solidarity and party success at the polls. He declared that these two rules were the grade stone emblems, the two death heads, which for many years, both before and since the close of the Civil war, and made it impossible for success to come to the followers of Jefferson.

He struck straight from the shoulder. He advised that the two-thirds nominating rule should be thrown into the discard and the unit rule, which permits a state political boss to hog-tie delegates, should be banished from conventions of democracy and local self-government of the party permitted from the congressional district from the congressional district to the national convention.

Speaking for the democrats of a former slave owning state, this former secretary of the navy declared these two rules relics of ante bellum days and made it impossible for democratic harmony in national affairs, national nominations and national campaigns. This has been the contention of the American for years. And for years the American has appealed to the democrats of Texas and the nation to throw aside these two rules which are a reproach to the intelligence of democrats everywhere and make it possible for party harmony and party success.

Congressional districts should select two delegates and two alternates and these delegates should not be governed by the unit rule and a state convention should be powerless to instruct the delegates of a congressional district. If instructions are to be given, then permit the delegates of the congressional district that name two delegates and two alternates to a national convention to attend to the matter of instruction.

If the democrats of Texas are wise, they will insist upon the agrogation of the two-thirds nominating rule; they will insist upon the abrogation of the unit rule. They will abolish the handicaps, or relics of old slavery days and political conditions and permit the people to be the masters and they should have been all along in the naming of candidates for president and vice-president and in shaping the platform declaration of their party.

And wise, indeed, will be the democrats of Texas and other states if in the national campaign to come in 1928 they shall select their ablest, most patriotic and farseeing men and women to go to the national convention without instructions to name the most available man for president and the most available man for the second place on the ticket.

Josephus Daniels should be commended. He gave magnificient advice to he democrats of the Buckeye state, advice that should be heeded by the democrats of the states of the Union.

DARK SHADOW OF BORAH

CALVIN COOLIDGE and an eastern shadow, a very dark and threatening one until the republicans of Pennsylvania snuffed out the ambition of Gifford Pichot in the senatorial primary. Gifford Pinchot will not be a presidential aspirant in 1928 for the reason that he cannot win the delegates of his home state. Mellon and Vare put Pinchot away. He polled a large vote but the ran third.

Now the dark shadow of a man from the west is spreading itself over the president and the 1928 nomination. Borah has declared against a referendum on the prohibition question. Borah has declared for the policies of the late Robert M. LaFollette. Borah stood for Brookhart when Brookhart was cast aside for a democrat. President Coolidge and his closest senatorial advisers were for Steck the democrat, and smiled when Brookhatr was ousted from his seat.

Borah, the man from Idaho, has the presidential bee abuzzing near the base of his brain. He would like to be the republican presidential standard bearer in the year 1928. Walsh of Montana would like to be the democratic standard bearer. Walsh is as dry as a bat's cave. Walsh is opposed to a referendum. Walsh is for farm relief measures. Walsh voted to retain Brookhart in his seat and keep Steck on the outside.

Western republicans who do not take kindly to the administration may take kindly to Borah. Western democrats, including the McAdoo democrats, who do not take kindly to the eastern leaders of the democratic party, may pick Walsh as their leader for presidential honors. Walsh and McAdoo is closer than brothers. Walsh is a dry Catholic; Governor Smith's political opponents say that he is a wet Catholic.

Really the democratic party is not a religious organization and creed prejudices or rivalries should have no place in the wigwam of democracy. Thomas Jefferson, the immortal founder of the party, was not a church man. He was for civil and religious liberty for all mankind. He was for justice for all mankind. He was for equality before the law for all mankind. He believed a public office a public trust. He believed in the rule of the people, by the people and not by bosses, demagogues, temples of Mammon or wheels within wheels.

He believed that the least government is the best government and made for the happiness and prosperity for the people. He believed that the dollar of the taxpayer should be honestly and economically spent. He did not believe in a strong centralized government at the national capitol. He was for local self-government at all times and believed that the people are the source of all power, this at the bottom, and that the source of power was not at the tope of a government strongly centralized.

"Back to Jefferson," would be a very good slogan, for men and women who call themselves democrats. "Smash the two-thirds nominating rule and with it the unit rule," would be another slogan and the adoption of the principles by democrats everywhere would lead to a united party and success at the polls.

POPULATION OF HOUSTON

HOUSTON, or greater Houston, claims a population of 250,000. This estimate has been made by the Bell Telephone company on an actual count of families residing in the greater Houston territory. Dallas, greater Dallas claims the population of 265,000 based on the same kind of a census taken by the experts of the telephone company and estimates made by the experts of the publishers of the city directory.

There will be a real census taken in 1930. It will be taken by order of the federal government and by the enumerators employed by the federal government. It would be wise for the people of Dallas to take in or take over all their outlying suburbs in the county of Dallas, and for the municipal managers of all other Texas cities to adopt the same plan of procedure.

Texas' cities are growing at a rapid rate. Expansion is the order of the day, and the rule of the hour. Now why flourishing suburbs on the boundary line of the city, a proud ambitious city, like Austin for instance. Why suburbs?

DULL STUDENTS BARRED

YALE has decided to exclude dull students. Yale will bother only with men most likely to achieve success, and it is the Yale law school that has raised the bars. It is announced by the president of Yale that the general policy is definitely the limitation of the university's best efforts to the best men. Is this a respect for the dull man to hide out or find jobs where they will not block the marching procession of white collar brothers who trust to their brains and not their hands to win fortune and fame in the more inviting field of activity.

ABOUT FACE

THE board of education of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, has rescinded its order that the commencement frock of the sweet girl graduate should not cost more than $15.

The board issued the order, it explained, because it felt the daughters of the poor would be embarrassed if they appeared with those more modishly garbed. But a complaint was registered and the poor girls made the complaint. Protest meetings were held in several high schools and the board backed water.

Now that was that!

Tomboy Taylor's Mother Couldn't See the Raft

The Drum---By Britten Austin

He clapped his hands sharply together and a black soldier-servant came in with the supper.

The two men addressed themselves to the stew of bully-beef, washed down with whiskey and water. They talked little, but it was evident that they were glad of each other's company in the immense loneliness of their isolation in this African jungle swarming with hostile savages. To have a table-companied of their own race was a luxury sufficiently rare to both to be gratefully appreciated. Their natural tacitturnities accorded well together. Each respected the other as a man who knew his job. They had not yet been cooped up long enough in each other's unrelieved society for the emergence of those petty irritations which develop into hostility and hate.

They did not even know each other very well. Dr. Steevens was comparatively new to the service, had been sent up-country to deal with an epidemic which was decimating the natives. He had got into conflict with the witch-doctors—principally over the little matter of burying the dead under the hut-floor and the ceremonial sniffing of the corpse—and the witch-doctors had won. They had persuaded the disease-smitten, panic-stricken natives that the sole cause of the epidemic was the presence of white men among them. Dr. Steevens had only got into Bull's station, garrisoned by a detachment of native rifles, by the skin of his teeth.

Since then, for the best part of a week, both men had been perpetually alert, night and day, in a desperate defense tragically complicated by the outbreak of sickness in the post. Both men were feeling the strain more than they would have confessed. Without either one of them, the post was doomed.

Their supper was interrupted by a sudden barbaric din, startling in its propinquity, the feverish thudding of native drums—not the uncanny reverberation of the Juju drum, though that still continued, temporarily half-heard, from the distance—but drums close at hand, that beat in a quick monotony of rhythm to the weirdly-lugubrious wailing of native horns, to wild cries and howlings beyond the stockade. The black soldiers jumped up from their cooking-fires, stood petrified in attitudes of alarm.

"There's that confounded witch-doctor again!" ejaculated Steevens.

"Wait!" said Bull, with a grim smile.

For a moment or two longer the clamour continued—and then it was shattered by the ragged crash of a rifle volley, repeated again and again at the other side of the stockade. Shrieks and yells started horridly through the night air in the brief intervals between the volleys, while the soldiers, at sharp words of command, sprang to their fighting stations. There was an immediate multiplication of irregular detonations, of excited, exulting yells, of half-heard screams, while rifle flashes flickered like petty lightnings in the darkness beyond the tent.

The doctor glanced across at Bull, who went on with his supper like a general calmly confident that his orders are being obeyed his battle efficiently conducted for him. He smiled at the questioning glance.

"Ambushed him!" he shouted through the din. "I told you I had a little surprise for him!"

For a moment or two longer the pandemonium of deafeningly close rifle-fire, shrieks, screams and yells, continued at full height, then it faded, died away, with one or two last shots, into silence. The foot-crunch of a squad of marching men approached the tent, stopped abruptly at a native-mouthed vociferation of "Alt!" A gigantic negro, a sergeant's stripes on the sleeve of his uniform, stood framed in the opening of the tent. He grinned, his protruding lips splitting over white teeth from ear to ear, as he saluted and made his report in his uncouth language.

The officer nodded, satisfied, answered him with facile proficiency in the native tongue.

The sergeant turned, shouted to his squad in English the words of command.

"Quick—march! 'Alt."

In the triangle of the tent-opening appeared, his arms behind his back and held by two scared-looking privates, an immense and fantastically bedizened negro. The great plumes upon his head added to his height, dwarfing his captors, and the grotesque paintings upon his face and body, down to the ceremonial skirt of colored feathers, crudely juxtaposed in mystic patterns, took from him the similitude of a man, gave him the appearance of a demon of a nightmare. He had been dancing a devil-dance of sorcery and the frenzy of the incantation was still on him. His eyeballs were rolling like those of an epileptic and his mouth foamed over the paint which smeared his face.

The officer questioned him with a few sharply stern, gutteral words. The Juju-man, lost his trance-like, diabolic ecstacy, did not answer. Only on a peremptory repetition of the question did his epileptically rolling eyes come down to the two white men as though he then first perceived them. His expression underwent a sudden change. His face contorted horribly, his eye-balls protruded from his head, he seemed about to speak—then burst, instead into a horrid hysterical laugh of ghastly mirth.

Bull shouted at him angrily. But the maniac laughter did not cease. The negro shook with it as it came peal on peal from his painted mouth, hideously grotesque in an unholy glee for which there was no visible occasion. Then, wrenching one arm free with convulsive strength, he pointed to between the two officers, rattled off some rapid excited gibberish, and burst again into diabolical and mocking laughter.

The officer's face set hard. He snapped out a short order to the sergeant. The N. C. O. saluted, bellowed to his squad. The Juju-man was dragged away into the darkness. There was something blood-curdling, uncannily sinister in its unquenchable mockery, about that laugh which continued even after he had disappeared. It made the doctor shudder.

"You're going to shoot him?" he queried. Comparatively limited as was his knowledge of the language, he had understood his comrade's order.

"On the spot. I'll show 'em whether a witch-doctor can't be killed."

A minute later a volley crashed within the stockade.

"That's the end of him!" commented Bull, vindictively.

"What was that he said—when he pointed? I didn't catch it," asked the doctor, helping himself to some sweet biscuits out of the tin.

Bull shrugged his shoulders.

"Some raving nonsense. Said he saw a skull between us or something of the sort. Tried to put the wind up us—that how they do it with their own kind—just suggestion. Expects us to pine away now, I suppose—or rather fly at each other's throats like lunatics. That's what he hinted at. Fpreet it!"

DOROTHY DIX

Questions From the World of Love Answered by a Noted Authority

"Between the Miser and the Spendthrift I'll Take the Miser," Says Dorothy Dix, "At Least He Doesn't Prey on Others. But to Spend Your Income is the Meanest Sort of Stealing from Family and Friends Who Must Support You When You Are Old.

A man said to me the other day: "There is a golden middle course in the use of money that we should follow. We should neither hoard it, nor throw it away. But between the spendthrift and the miser, give me the spendthrift every time."

"Not with me," I replied, "of the two I will take the miser, because he, at least, does not prey upon his fellow creatures and force them to support him when he is sick, or out of a job, or gets too old to work.

"Furthermore, at the last, the money he has raked and scraped together does some good, for when he dies, he is bound to leave it behind him, and many a school, many an orphan asylum, many a hospital have been built with the dollars and dimes some tight-fisted old man or woman could not let go in life, whereas the waster's money has been frittered away upon a thousand foolish extravagances that have really benefitted no one except those who purvey to the self-indulgent.

"Understand me, please. I hold no brief for the tightwads. I think that no vice is more sordid than avarice. I think you can hold a penny before your eyes until it grows so big that it shuts out the vision of everything that is beautiful and sweet and tender and lovely in life. I think that the worship of money can harden a heart until no feeling of sympathy for misfortune, no cry from suffering, can even dent it, so that it is even impervious to what we call natural human emotions.

"I know men who care so much more for their pocketbooks than they do for their wives that they never give them a cent for their own use, who make of them unpaid slaves whose very food they begrudge. I know wives who tremble with fear every time they have to present a household bill to their husbands, and to whom the first of every month is a day of terror, when they have to go through scenes that humiliate them to the dust and that sicken their very souls.

"I know fathers who love their bank balance so much better than they do their children, that they deny their boys and girls the opportunities of education that would fit them to make successes in life, and the pretty clothes and little indulgencies that would make their youth happy and joyous, instead of being hard and bitter.

"And as I look at these men I wonder that they do not see what a wrong they are doing to their families and how cruel they are to themselves, for they are making their wives and children hate them by their stinginess.

"I think that men and women do a foolish thing who save every cent they possibly can and who deny themselves every comfort and pleasure. We pass this way but once. All the time we are sure of is just today, and if we do not get some enjoyment out of life as we go along we get none at all.

"For we can deny ourselves until we atrophy all of our desires. We can do without comforts, without good food, without pretty clothes until we no longer want them, and even if we had them they would bring us no pleasure.

"The thing that you want so badly now, and that would give you such joy to do or to possess, you may not want at all five or ten years hence. We can't say that we will be happy when we have accumulated $5,000 or $500,000, for the one thing that money won't buy is that subtle and elusive spirit that makes enjoyment.

Louisiana Shrine Is Mecca for Sick

DONALDSONVILLE, La., June 6. In the Teache country of Louisiana—that spot hallowed in literature as the home of the beloved Evangeline—there is a little rural shrine erected to St. Amico which is attracting wide attention as a Mecca for the sick, the afflicted and those otherwise in distress.

Supplicants at the shrine declare that many graces and favors and cures have been obtained here.

Most of those who claim to have been aided placed on the statue a piece of jewelry, ranging in variety from watch to ring, and so many of these offerings have already been made the statue is literally covered.

Measuring a Distance by Sight.

It is told of the Napoleonic wars that in the midst of a battle the Little Corporal suddenly decided to throw his left wing across a Russian river. The distance did not look great, but there was no bridge and it would be necessary to judge the distance before he could decide whether to have his men swim it, or stop to construct some rude sort of bridge. A young engineer was standing at attention beside him. "Lieutenant, how far is it across that river?" asked Napoleon. The question sounds unreasonable, as the lieutenant had no surveying instruments with him. But remembering the simple rule in geometry by which one may find the length of two sides of a triangle if one side and an angle are known, the lieutenant pulled his visored cap down over his eyes till it made approximately an angle of 45 degrees with his line of vision when he had fixed his eyes on the farther bank, and knowing his own height, he calculated for a second and promptly replied, "25 meters, Sire." "Good," said Napoleon and ordered his army to swim the river. Napoleon won the battle.

Now what do you know about that?

Answers to Saturday's questions:

1. The only trustworthy distinction between a cherry and a plum is found in the stone; the stone of a cherry has only one ridge down the side; the stone of a plum has a ridge on both sides of the stone.
2. Cranberries are grown on acid bogs.
3. The grapefruit is not a hybrid, but a natural species of citrus native in southwestern Asia.
4. The navel orange originally came from Brazil.
5. A jujube is a date-like or prune-like fruit of the Duckthorn family, native in Asia.
6. A wineberry is a Japanese berry related to and similar to a raspberry.

WHAT TODAY MEANS TO YOU

BY MARY BLAKE
GEMINI

Today's planetary aspects do not afford much encouragement for efforts of a constructive character, although they apparently promise to awaken keen emotions and to stimulate thought. It would be inexpedient, under such conditions, "to seek fresh fields or pastures new," and the best results can only be achieved by a strict attention to routine duty and daily obligations. Speculation will not be rewarded by success, and it is not a propitious opportunity for travel. In the evening, the aspects become overcast and gloomy, and these will tinge the feelings. In order to counteract disagreeable desires or unpleasant, ill-considered words, it will be necessary to establish poise.

Children born today, although they may have every characteristic of good health, will rather belie appearances, and will be subject to many ailments. Some of these promise to be of a grave character. If, by proper care and systematical nutrition, they will pass unscathed through the infantile period, there is every reason to believe that they will attain a healthy and vigorous adulthood. Their nature will be secretive, their disposition more morose than merry and their character will be flexible. Association with them will prove rather uncongenial, and their friends will be few. Underlying all, they will possess a great capacity for love and, for the object of their affection, no sacrifice will be too great and no effort too laborious.

If today is your birthday, you would be much happier if you could rid yourself of the chip on your shoulder which is always with you. It is ridiculous to think that you are the only soldier in the regiment that is keeping step. You are alert, resourceful, and able. Your eternal pugnacity is, however, your "Bete-noir." You resent without reason. Your sensibilities are touched, without cause. You seem to live in an atmosphere of thought that the hand of everyone is against you. This aspect of life, distorted and wrong, not only affects your career, but influences and mars your intimate associations. The great difficulty is that you cannot realize such a condition is responsible for your paucity of friends, or for your very mediocre success. If you could only "get wise to yourself," you have sufficient strength of will to assume an entirely different attitude—one that would breed congeniality and comradeship, and insure your welfare.

Successful people born this date are:

Edward Winslow, loyalist.
Alfred Pleasanton, soldier and railroad president.
John A. Darling, composer.
John Satterfield, oil operator.
Susan E. Blow, kindergarten.
John F. Goucher, clergyman and educator.

Courthouse Marked In His Geography

CHICAGO, June 6.—Nicholas Gangarspa, who, according to his wife, Nunsiata, defied her to bring him into court when he refused to buy a school book for his son, was in chastened mood when he stood before Judge John Lupe.

The school book episode, Mrs. Gangarspa said, was the culmination of much domestic difficulty over expenditures. Judge Lupe ordered Nicholas to pay his spouse $5 a week.

To Tom

So, Tom, it's your Commencement day,
You're starting on the world's highway
Equipped to make your mark, I know;
Success be yours as on you go!

The Card I Meant

So, Tom it's your Commencement day,
Long suffering teachers, so they say,
Fed up on having you in class
Have brought this miracle to pass!

To Earl
The Card I Sent.

Today brings Graduation, Earl,
The end of school! Now in the whirl
Of business you'll achieve success,
Be famous or I'll miss my guess.

The Card I Meant.

Today brings Graduation, Earl,
I've seen you with a different girl
Each week and bet you couldn't pass
A test in anything but jazz!

To Catherine
The Card I Sent

My warm congratulations, Kate.
Since you're a "Sweet Girl Graduate,"
I'm not surprised, I always knew
You'd make us very proud of you!

The Card I Meant.

My warm congratulations, Kate,
That such dumb-bells can graduate
Proves not so much a mind unclouded,
At that the schools are overcrowded.

His Opinion

AND HE DID!
By Louise Condon.

It was midnight, and Moses Washington shuddered as he reached the cross roads. On the other side of that white fence was the graveyard! Moses walked ahead briskly, trying to whistle a lively tune.

Suddenly he was paralyzed by a familiar voice—the voice of his Uncle Pete, long since dead. A specter stood before him, waving its long arms in the wind with a horrid, ghostly melancholy.

"Who dat?" quavered Moses.

"Ah am yo' Uncle Pete, an' Ah craves talk with you."

"Ah ain't in no mood foh talkin'," Moses trembled. "How does Ah know you is mah Uncle Pete—you don't look like him!"

"Ah am only de spirit ob your Uncle Pete," said the ghost in an awful voice. "Mah body has long since been dust!"

"Uh, hum," Moses yelled. "An' believe me, Mistah Spirit, Ah is goin' to show you some more dust, right now!"

POEMS THAT LIVE

It is not necessary to be a poet in the accepted sense of that word, in order to understand and appreciate poetry. The man who brings sympathy and comprehension to a great work of art is quite as much an artist in his way as the creator of the thing he admires. This old poem of Marlowe's is almost a test of one's taste. A song that will never die because its beauty is forever being passed on by one of the "passionate few."

Come live with me and be my love,
And we will all the pleasures prove
That hills and valleys, dales and fields
Or woods or steepy mountain yields.

And we will sit upon the rocks,
And see the shepherds feed their flocks
By shallow rivers, to whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals.

And I will make thee beds of roses
And a thousand fragrant posies;
A cap of flowers, and a kirtle
Embroidered all with leaves of myrtle.

A gown made of the finest wool
Which from our pretty lamb we pull;
Fair-lined slippers for the cold,
With buckles of the purest gold.

A belt of stray and ivy-buds
With coral clasps and amber studs;
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Come live with me and be my Love.

The shepherd swains shall dance and sing
For thy delight each May morning:
If these delights thy mind may move,
Then come with me and be my Love.

What Too Many Sweeties Did to the Swedish Noble

He Left Europe On One's Account, Married to Please Another and Went to Jail After a Romantic Episode With a Third.

Pretty Josephine Maertins, One of Baron Carl's Several Sweeties, Who Says She Will Wait and Follow Him Into European Exile If He Is Deported Upon His Release From Welfare Island.

At right: Hilda von der Hoven, the Sparkling Premier Danseuse of the Corso Cabaret in Vienna, and Cause of a Duel Between Baron Ascheraden and an Austrian Colonel.

Baron Carl Eric von Schoultz Ascheraden, the Handsome Young Swedish Nobleman, Whose Trail of Lost Hearts and Jobs Has Landed Him in the "Royal" Cell on Welfare Island.

BARON CARL ERIC VON SCHOULTZ ASCHERADEN came to this country to learn American business methods. He is now digesting his lessons in the penitentiary on Welfare Island, New York.

He has learned two curious facts about American life. First that even a titled friend of millionaires must pay his hotel bill. Otherwise an unromantic credit manager will send you to jail and hold the pink undies of your fair hotel companion.

The second lesson in American business methods taught Baron Carl is that occasionally it does not pay to advertise. He once made the mistake of writing to a paper, "Young European nobleman wants to share his crown with a pretty American girl." Since then life for the Baron has been just one fascinating lady after another —and also a dozen brands of mixed trouble.

According to Baron Carl, beautiful ladies have always been the flies in the ointment of his career. A few years ago the Baron occupied a high place in European society. A few months ago he had a job as a waiter, but lost it. The ladies kept swarming under foot and each time tripped him up.

In the old days Baron Carl was well known in both the courts of Russia and Austria. He had served as an officer in the Finnish Army, he held high decorations from foreign governments, including the Cross of St. George of Russia, and the first and second class German Iron Cross, and his father is one of the shipping magnates of Stockholm.

Baron Carl first fell into disgrace because of the Corso Cabaret in Vienna. Mademoiselle Hilda von der Hoven, premier danseuse of the cabaret and toast of the city's gay night life, smiled at him and he promptly fell in love with her. For perhaps three evenings the two young people were ideally happy. But then entered the villain in the shape of a colonel of one of Austria's smartest regiments. He had been the petite dancer's former flame. He returned to Vienna and found Hilda von der Hoven cold to his advances and with all her smiles saved for the young Viking.

A scene took place in the Corso Cabaret, a scene which started with a hot argument over the dancer's affections and which ended with drawn swords and a typical German duel. But alas for movie plots. Baron Carl now admits with a smile that Hilda von der Hoven must have suffered a change of heart as the swords were flashing. She caught his right arm for an instant and the Austrian officer ran him through the body.

Because of the prominence of the principals of the duel it created a nine days' sensation in European circles. Baron Carl was recalled to Stockholm by his fierce old father. He was charged with disgracing the family name. He was given letters of introduction to half a dozen of his father's business friends in America. He was given five thousand dollars and told to go to the new country and stay there until he had earned an American fortune.

When Baron Carl arrived in America and presented his father's letters to the New York shipping magnates they received him cordially. They invited him to their homes and saw that he was invited everywhere in Fifth Avenue society. But when the Baron spoke of a job and a chance to learn how to make money enough to support his social pretensions, they laughed and changed the subject.

Lady Diana Manners called him the most aristocratic looking man in America. The Baron calls Count Morner, one of Peggy Hopkins Joyce's flock of husbands, by his first name. He became acquainted with practically every woman of importance in smart New York society. But the Baron could not get a job and society girl friends are expensive playmates.

When practically his last cent was gone Baron Carl decided that he would never make his fortune out of society. So he dropped his smart friends and buckled to and took the first job open. It was as a plumber's assistant and promised in the years to come to lead to a Baron's income if he would only learn the trade. But here again the ladies got the Baron into trouble. They insisted on hanging around when he was trying to fix a leaky pipe. They got in the way of the boss and he finally told the Baron to try his charms in another line.

Other lowly jobs followed. The Baron secured a job as pantryman in a Westchester mansion. But again his blond looks got between him and fortune. The housemaids, serving maids and lady's maids would not stick to their work. The butler gave the Baron good references and a week's notice.

After the Baron had lost his next job, that of a waiter, because of his attractions, he had a sudden brain wave. "Ah!" said Baron Carl Eric von Schoultz Ascheraden, "since the American girls seem to like me I will solve the problem by marrying the prettiest and richest of them and settling down."

He had learned during his stay of the important part that advertising plays in American life. "I will tell the world of my plight," Baron Carl decided.

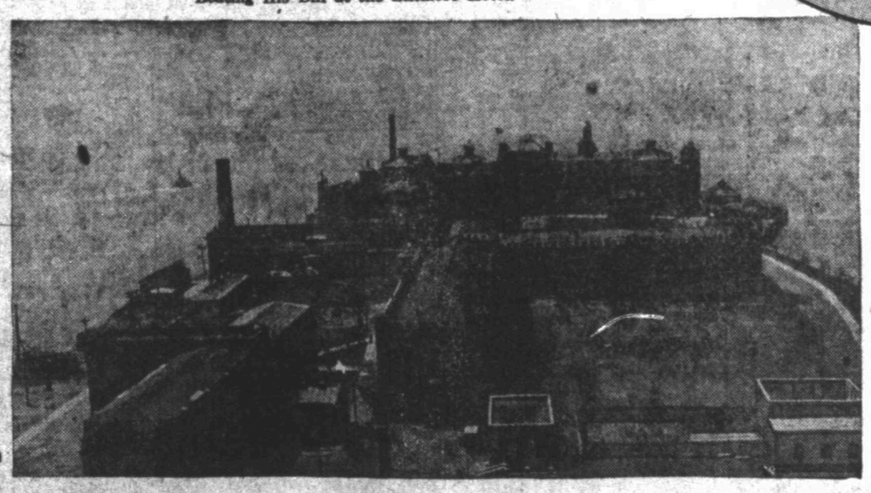

So he wrote: "Young European nobleman wants to share his crown with a pretty girl, if she will change his crown to American dollars."

According to Baron Carl, he had had some slight trouble with girls in the past. But once he had given his hopes to the world of print his mail resembled the census returns. Two hundred and forty-two letters came the first day by special delivery and four or five hundred letters in the ordinary way. And Below: Rhoda Winton, the Charming Fifth Avenue Perfume Manufacturer at Whose Establishment Baron Carl Claims He Worked for a Short Time.

A Birdseye View of Welfare Island in the East River, New York, Where the Noble Swedish "Sheik" Is Being Detained on an Indeterminate Sentence for Beating His Bill at the Biltmore Hotel.

A New Kind of Royal Estate.

ever since then when the Baron has been bored with life he fishes out one of the letters, reads it—and then something generally seems to happen.

The first letter that the Baron turned his attention to was of great importance in the Baron's financial straits and seemed to hold little romance. It was simply an offer of employment by a well-known young American business woman named Rhoda Winton.

Miss Winton had made a large fortune manufacturing and selling perfumes and she offered the Baron a position in one of her stores greeting the Fifth Avenue clientele and finding out their wants.

According to the Baron there was only one restriction on this job. Miss Winton told him that under no circumstances must he make love to his wealthy employer, that the job was given him because of romantic memories of another foreign nobleman she had known and who had had the greatest amount of trouble finding work in this country and not for any interest in Baron Carl Eric von Schoultz Ascheraden.

Perhaps the Baron's big heart got him into trouble again. Or perhaps he was just a poor business man. At any rate, while neither Miss Winton nor the Baron will state just why he did not become the perfume king of America, suffice that the Baron was soon looking for a meal ticket once more.

Other letters were opened and each seemed to the Baron to add to the complications of life. He went to Ridgefield, Conn., taking the job of waiter in the hotel owned by the father of one of the letter writers. The young couple soon found that they really loved each other. A runaway match followed and the Baron took his bride to a New York hotel for a honeymoon. But hotel bills cannot be paid with love alone. The Baron's new father-in-law answered his daughter's hurry call. He paid the hotel bill but carried back his daughter to Ridgefield. And now the Baron claims that his wife is planning to divorce him.

For a time the Baron nursed a broken heart. But gradually that familiar lonely feeling began to creep over him. He turned to his stack of letters and opened a few more. One of them stood out from all the rest by its striking phrasing and was signed Josephine Maertins.

The Baron obeyed the impulse and wrote that night. An answer came, a meeting followed and the Baron found himself once more in love.

They took up their residence at the Hotel Biltmore. For a week they were sublimely happy. They lived as the Baron had been accustomed to living in the old days. Money meant nothing to the young couple as neither had any. And their hotel bill mounted to $338.

It was then that the heartless credit manager stepped in. He wanted cash. In vain the Baron showed his medals and mentioned his millionaire friends. The hotel called in the police. They held the Baron's baggage, his piles of letters and most unfortunately of all the beautiful silk undies that Miss Maertins had brought to the hotel.

Miss Maertins returned to the bosom of her prominent family in Newark, N. J. They absolutely refused to help Miss Maertins get her sheik out of the financial hole. Three unsympathetic judges listened to the tale Probation Officer McNulty had to tell of his long investigation into the career of the nobleman and its trail of sweeties. They sent Baron Carl Eric von Schoultz Ascheraden to Welfare Island for an indeterminate sentence.

Spudders and Sports Don Batting Regalia, Then Score 56 Runs

74 Hits Made Sunday As Two Riotous Games Are Split 11-8; 26-11

Spudders Take First and Shreveport Comes Back in Second With Wild Barrage Of Ringing Smacks

BY BLONDY CROSS

Tarleton's astonishing Shreveporters exploded with a hurricane of base bumps in the ninth round of the first engagement in Sunday's double baseball melee at the Gardner orchard, socked Jim Roberts, the fire-ball thrower, seven salty punches and scored five runs. But this tornadic outburst fell short of overhauling a large Spudder advantage which had been amassed in the earlier frames at expense of the lefthanders, Charley Barnabee and Harry Thompson. Whereupon, the Louisiana outfit continued the drive in the second game with steam roller effect, the power growing with momentum as the Sports surged uphill to take a frenzied Spudder team into camp by a 26 to 11 score. Wichita Falls captured the initial tiff, 11 to 8.

Three Spudder pitchers were sacrificed on the greedy altar of Shreveport batting averages in the nightcap, a seven-inning affair that lasted two hours and five minutes. Shreveport artillery riddled Buster Ross; youthful southpaw sent the Spudders by Boston's Red Sox, turned on Tom Estell, the spitballer, with a devastating attack, and then completely disabled Fred Fussell, the veteran portsider and former Coast league hurler, smashing out the startling total of 28 base wallops over the seven-stanza span.

Everything Happened.

Everything happened to a pitcher in that game that shouldn't. Home runs and two-baggers proved the vogue. Nine baseballs were sent soaring into the unexplored regions. An even dozen full-length doubles were sprayed over the three pastures. The veteran Dutch Hoffman, Bonowitz and Brainard led the criminal attack on pitching arms. Hoffman clouted three homers for the day, two in the nightcap. Brainard and Bonowitz came through with a pair in the abbreviated tilt that in this instance was longer than the nine-inning opener. Nine homers in all went over the boards in the second affray, Benton, Turgeon and Kearns filling out the quota.

Never had such an orgy of base biffs been uncovered before the dilated optics of a bewildered Wichita Falls fandom. The teams slugged out a combined total of 74 clouts to virgin territory and scored 56 runs. Shreveport crossed the scoring pan 9 times in the third inning of the second game and then sallied forth to punch over ten runs in the sixth. But at that, our Spudders kept plugging away at a dangerous clip. They knocked Joe Cantrell from the mound in the fourth and followed up with a few unkind pecks at Grady Adkins, tabulating six runs for the round.

Pete and Choco Field Fluently.

Jim Roberts and the Spudders had all the better of the first game with exception of that cyclonic ninth-round comeback gesture made by the Sports. An unique feature about this encounter is the fact the game, in which 19 runs were scored, was played in the quick time of one hour and 35 minutes.

Home runs by Lamb and Lapan proved the undoing of the Sports. However, Turgeon, Jenkins, Brainard, DeFate and Distel came in with a series of pungent punches. Jenkins and Turgeon slammed three safeties each.

The high light of the encounter was a series of flossy fielding feats jerked off by DeFate and Turgeon, albeit Brainard and Distel held up their share of the infield duty.

The Sports swung off quite auspiciously, Benton larruping a lusty single to left. But Roberts ridded himself of Ormand with an aviation to Jenkins in center, struck out Bonowitz and fire-balled Taylor into bounding out at third. Then the Spudders whipped into Barnabee after Woehrs had chunked Lambie away at first. Bingles by Turgeon and Jenkins putting the former on third. Brainard stepped into a fast one and ripped a loud liner to deep center. Had the drive been to port it would have cleared the barrier with a margin to spare, but Bonowitz cantered to the rear and plugged the sphere in mid flight, pulling her down over one shoulder. Turgeon checked in after the catch. Jenkins was cut down at second on an attempted filch.

Hoffman Homers Easily

Hoffman opened the second round with a slam that swished over the score board in right center. Woehrs followed with a bingle and went to second when Kearns laid it down. DeFate's chunk at first was wide on Graham's flopping roller to short. Woehrs drew up at third and scored when Barnabee topped a hopping spinner past Distel, who was playing in. That composed the damage. Benton forced Barnabee and Ormand drew a pass. Then with the runways congested, Roberts relieved the tension by whiffing Bonowitz again. Spudder pride was injured, whereupon Peter Lapan followed Distel's pop single to right in the same round with a sturdy smash to the left field home run zone. The sock sailed high and straight over the barrier and with two of Gardner's outside ball snatchers in desperate pursuit.

A single and an error in the Sport third put Taylor three bases around. Hoffman walked and was tagged on the path by Turgeon, who scooped Woehrs' skidder and launched a double play. Chink checked in on the erasure, knotting the tabulation at 3-3. The deadlock failed to survive the inning, for Lamb led off in the domestic half with a thundering thump that cleared the west wall with space to spare. The clout was a tocsin sounder for the rest of the gang to lay on Barnabee with careful and studied rudeness. Base bingles fluttered to all points on the outer greensward and before the din subsided your Cousin Bob Tarleton rousted Charley and rushed another southpaw into the fracas. Turgeon followed Lucy's four-bagger with a rift past short. Jenkins advanced the runner with a sacrificial tap. Brainard outfooted a bounder to short and was forced at second when Hoffman came up with Metzler's dirty drive at the keystone. Turgeon scored. Then DeFate, Distel and Lapan punched vociferous singles in succession. Roberts coming through with the retiring putout, a pungent poke at Benton on short. Four runs, six hits and a new face on the pitching peak comprised the results of that inning's sturdy endeavor.

A line sock to left by Lamb followed by a trio of sacrificial efforts, a jingle heave at first and DeFate's board bust in center sent three more spudders scurrying around the hassocks during the fourth.

The remainder of the encounter was snappy, slick and scoreless until the latter portion of the eighth when Turgeon and Jenkins singled with two away and Brainard followed with a two-cushioner down the third base line, scoring Pete. Then Roberts slowed down in the ninth and the Sports unwrapped their surprise package of punches, batted around, slammed seven clouts to unprotected territory, including doubles by Benton, Ormand, Lennox, Kearns and Graham and sent five runners across the dish.

Red Sox Pull Triple Play To Defeat Chicago

Fodt's Four-play Swat Enables Boston to Beat White Sox

CHICAGO, June 6.—(AP)—Todt's home run drives in the eighth inning enabled Boston to defeat Chicago, 4 to 3, although held to six hits by Ted Blankenship. Zahnizer was hit hard by the White Sox, but poor base running and a triple play wrecked their chances of winning. The Red Sox staged their triple play in the eighth inning. With Collins on second and Sheely on first Falk lined to Herrera whose throw to Todt got Sheely before he could return to the bag and Todt's throw to Rigney retired Collins before he could return to second. Cubs Stopped

BEAUMONT, June 6.—(AP)—Fans Fillingim won his fifth straight game and his seventh out of eight this season when he stopped Waco with six hits for a 6 to 4 victory when the Exporters clouted Elliott deligently. Fillingim's passes were expensive, one of them, preceding Pratt's homer and another was directly in front of West's triple which was followed by a single for the Cub tallies. Yank Davis drove a terrific liner out of the park over the wall in deep centerfield. Oliver had a perfect day at bat with four singles. The game was the fastest played here this season.

Browns, Braves Stir Up Trouble

NEW YORK, June 6.—(AP)—Belief that the Boston Braves and St. Louis Browns would crop out as the trouble makers to the front rank contenders in their respective major circuits was justified by performances of the past week.

The outstanding reversal of form was that the Braves who won five consecutive games, three from National League leaders, the Reds, and two from Brooklyn. As a result, Dave Bancroft's club topped the week's standing in the National with five triumphs in six contests.

Guess Again, Shoe Sellers

Misinformed ring of the razzberry roughnecks over at a certain shoe emporium have crossed their wires again, like your average bunch of second-guessing boys eventually do.

Wise Isaacs up and make inconsiderate cracks about the writer anent recent report carried in these columns alluding to Alexander Stuart's victory week before last over Matty Matsuda, the Jap welter.

Stuart DID defeat Matsuda in El Paso. The bout was staged Wednesday before last.

Matty came back last Wednesday and turned the tables on the Scotchman although losing the initial fall. This match, also, was held in El Paso.

Would-be wisenheimers took note of the item carried in this newspaper referring to Matty's defeat in the first match, then stumbled across El Paso dispatch to a Fort Worth newspaper reporting the outcome of the second encounter which the Jap won. Whereupon the hair-trigger second guessers overlooked the fact The Record News story referred to a match that occurred more than a week before they read of the second tussle, and then further overlooked the fact reports of both matches were carried, one that Matty lost, one that he won. Then tried to tell the world the writer was stretching the truth. These boys ought to quit selling shoes and go into the ivory industry. Make lots more money with their wealth of natural resources.

Great Tom Eck Crosses Last Line

CHICAGO, June 6.—(AP)—Tom Eck, international sorts figure of a half century ago, has crossed the last finish line. The veteran athlete died last night at the age of 68, after four months of illness.

He had befriended hundreds of athletes in his time, financially and otherwise, and when taken sick was very dependent on the aid of his friends.

Himself a remarkable athlete and for years a familiar figure of the American turf, to which he contributed the revolutionary bike-wheeled sulkey, Eck achieved signal success in his later years as a trainer of track men. Since 1915 he had been track trainer at the University of Chicago.

Among the greatest of his pupils was Joie Ray, Chicago miler who until the coming of Paavo Nurmi, dominated the amateur middle distance field. Another was Helen Filkey, holder of several records and one of the leading girl athletes of the nation.

ELECTRICS WHIP MAGNOLIAS.

Behind the steady pitching of Stanley Herring and the batting of Wildcat Monte and Peyton Thurman the Jackson Tire company baseball team defeated Battery D Sunday afternoon by the score of 10 to 7. Thurman hit four for four and Monte three out of five.

MUNDEN PROTEST FACTORY WIN.

Carl Jobe's double in the ninth with one man on gave the Factory team a 2 to 1 victory over the Munden Cyclers and broke the Cyclers long winning streak. Only three chits were gathered off Al Prince, Cycler pitcher, and only five were combed from the slants of Roberts.

Herman Munden protested the game and claims that it probably will be played over at a later date. A decision on a hit was the cause of the protest.

Pinch Hitter For Speaker Is Unable to Swat

First Time in History Tris Sends in Substitute For Himself

CLEVELAND, June 6.—(AP)—New York evened up the series with Cleveland today, winning 6 to 5 in seven innings the game being stopped by rain and darkness. New York drove Smith from the box in the second inning but Karr proved an effective relief pitcher. Cleveland hit Hoyt rather freely and he was taken out in the seventh with the tying run on second base. He gave way to Braxton, a left hander and Speaker sent Uhle in to bat for himself, it being the first time in his major league career that a pinch hitter has been used for Speaker. Uhle flied out and the game was called. Ruth walked the first three times up and grounded to first the only time the pitcher would let him hit. Score:

Bambino Six Days Ahead in Homers

CHICAGO, June 6. — (AP)—The runaway race in the home run festival today found "Babe" Ruth six days ahead of the schedule of his 1921 record of 59 circuit wallops. Three four base blows last week gave him a total of 19, which brought his record for twelve years at bat to 328. His nineteenth round trip in 1921 was on June 12.

Jimmy Bottomley, of the Cardinals, with nine home runs, is "Babe's" nearest competitor.

EAGLES WALLOP BYERS.

The American Refinery pounded the Byers club heavers and captured a one-sided affair by the count of 19 to 5. Ronnie Glidewell, American ace, hurled great ball and was backed up by sensational hitting and fielding.

Pete "Ping" Martindale hit a home run over the deep center field fence in the third inning with two men on the bases.

Cats Take Third From Steers As Pitching Fails

Dallas Drops 7th In Row; Final Score Is 7 to 2

DALLAS, June 6.—(AP)—Fort Worth made it three straight over Dallas today, winning 7 to 2. It was the seventh straight defeat for the Steers.

Love, who started the game for Dallas, was yanked in favor of Manager Conley, who later gave way to Shuman. Walkup went the route for the Panthers and was never in danger.

Konetchy hit a home run in the fifth with Sears on base for the Cats. Score:

Water Boys Can't Get Texhoma Out, So They Leave

Oilers Go On Batting Rampage and Victims Have to Quit

The Texhoma Oilers went on a wild rampage in their Sunday battle with the City Water DOepartment baseball team, and when Hershell Johnson slapped one down the third base line with one man on base and then circled the paths, bringing the score to 15 to 1 in the last of the fourth, the Water Department team gave up the fight and walked from the field. Umpire Fat Mathis then had nothing to do but forfeit thte game to the Texhoma club by the score of 9 to 0.

Tom Richardson and Kiser were bit hard and often by the Texhoma swatsmith, while on the other hand Smoke Lupher was breezing through the ball game with no trouble at all. The only run made off the Texhoma artist was a smashing home run by Red Belcher.

Hershell Johnson played his first game with the Oilers and on his first trip to the plate hit a home run with one man on base. On his next trip he hit into a double play. On his third trip up he singled to left field. On his fourth trip he hit one down the third base line for a home run.

Dudley Skeen drew a walk, single, and home run in three trips to the plate. Dub Davis also had a perfect day with a double and two singles in three trips to the plate.

The Water Company could get only three scattered hits off Lupher, a double by Charley Hefner in the first, a single by Polly Woods in the second and a home run by Red Belcher in the fourth.

Castlebury, Sick, Gives Team Points To Assure Winning

CHICAGO, June 6.—(AP)—His team scored less than half the points which won the meet for Fort Collins, Colo., but the hero of the national scholastic track and field championships yesterday was the anchorman on the relay team from Vernon, Texas.

Ill from an infection in his neck, Castlebury had a high fever when the Texans arrived for the preliminaries Friday. By starting time for the finals in the two-mile relay, his condition was serious.

But Vernon holds the world's scholastic record for the event and to win would give the little band of plainsmen fifth place among the 190 teams entered in the meet. Castlebury refused to withdraw.

Scarcely able to see his lane, he ran the 880 gruelling yards which were his share, forced himself to a final spurt and collapsed. Vernon won.

The national title was captured for the second successive year by the sturdy youths from the Colorado foothills of the Rockies, who piled up their lead in the field events which saw a world's record broken.

Giants Romp Off With Easy 15 to 3 Battle With Cubs

Kelly Leads Sluggers With Long Homer Over Stands

NEW YORK, June 6.—(AP)—The Giants romped away wth the first game of series with the Cubs today, 15 to 3. George Kelly, New York first baseman, hit circuit drive that cleared the roof of the left field stands by two feet. Hartnett and Snyder, rival catchers, also bagged homers. Grimm, Chicago first baseman, was banished in the sixth for protesting a decision by Umpire McCormick. Freigau the Cubs scored from second base on an infield out in the second inning. Score:

NATURAL PROOF

When the weather gets unseasonably warm I deem the time suitable for reviving a story which I first heard at the republican national convention in Chicago in 1920. As will be recalled by those who attended that convention the entire country from coast to coast sweltered through the week under a blanket of terrific heat.

A delicate from California, in a half fluid state, fell off of a transcontinental train. A Chicago friend met when greetings had been exchanged, "is it as hot out west as it is here on the lake?"

"Is it as hot out west?" repeated the newly arrived one. "Say, don't make me laugh. You people here in the corn belt don't know what heat is. Say, listen, I'll illustrate to you just how hot it is on the other side of the Rockies. Coming across the Arizona desert day before yesterday I looked out of the car window and I saw a coyote chasing a jack rabbit—and they were both walking.

Biggest Air Signs Guides Aviators

SALEM, Mass., June 6.—This city has "hung out its shingle" for the benefit of aviators and, according to government air authorities, Salem's new aeronautical ground sign is the biggest in the country.

The words, "Salem, Mass." in white letters thirty feet high and ten feet wide, cover nearly one-sixth of a mile and may be identified from extreme altitudes. They will be illuminated at night.

More than 120 bags of cement and sixty bags of hydrated lime were used in forming the giant letters, the composition creating a cream color against the jet black of a tar and gravel roof.

16 Hens Lay 4803 Eggs During Year

CLEVELAND, Ohio, June 6.—Three hundred eggs per bird from sixteen Mottled Anconia hens in twelve months is claimed by H. Cecil Sheppard, a breeder.

The total for the flock was 4803 eggs. Two hens each laid 342 eggs, he said. Three others averaged.

CANADA'S FUR TRADE IS RICH

Millions of Dollars Are Represented in 2,000 Canadian Fur Farms

OTTAWA, June 6.—The fur trade was the main incentive of those early adventures who penetrated and explored Canada and for several centuries furs constituted the chief commodity of commerce in Canada. But today the value of the fur resources of Canada is of minor importance in comparison with the expanding industries of agriculture, lumbering, mining and fisheries, which have extended their frontiers over vast stretches of country once the domain of the trapper and fur trader. To those long overlooked resources may be attributed the attraction Canada holds for the millions of prosperous people.

Notwithstanding the advance of agriculture and other industries, the fur resources of Canada are still an important asset and continue to yield a leading contribution of high quality furs to the fur industry of the world.

Canada has anticipated the growing necessity and her pioneer efforts in the domestication and production of wild fur bearers, notably that of silver fox, is universally acknowledged. At least 2,000 fur farms are at present in operation in Canada and the total capital invested in them represents millions of dollars. The products of these fur farms are maintained at a high standard, and the output has become an important supplementary source of supply.

GOT ALONG SOMEHOW SMITH

He got along somehow, Henry did,
Got along somehow when a kid.
It wasn't much that the youngster had,
But he got along somehow, like his dad.
All his father had was a sandy farm,
And at Gettysburg he had left an arm,
And the crops were bad, and the babies came,
But he got along somehow, just the same.
And when Henry grew, and his dad was dead,
And that same sand farm he inherited,
He got along somehow just like him,
He wasn't much in the social swim,
And once in a while, when invited out,
Whether fork or spoon he was some in doubt;
His cup might spill and his knife might fall,
But he got along somehow, after all.
The boys in town sort of laughed at Hank;
But he got along somehow at the bank,
He got along more than they ever thought,
And a barn he built and a tractor bought;
And he married a girl with golden curls;
For he got along somehow with the girls;
Though the folks around couldn't understand,
Yet he got along somehow on that land.
Then the boys in town didn't laugh so much,
For he bought the bank and the mill and such.
They called him Got Along Somehow Smith;
But a certain awe now they said it with,
For he got along somehow right to where
He was sort of rural millionaire.
Then the panic came, and the crops were slim,
But they got along somehow, thanks to him.
And so one night he was asked to tell
How on earth it was he got along so well.
"Like this," he said; "When the times was bad
I got along somehow with what I had.
When I made some money, well then, I guess,
I still got along with a little less—
When things went right then I didn't go wrong,
And that's, I guess, how I got along."

Powers Surprised With New Car As Gift From Church

Dr. O. L. Powers, pastor of the First Baptist church, has found his transportation problems solved in handsome fashion.

The eminent clergyman, it seems, was in need of a new automobile of some kind, a need that reached the ears of his congregation. Saturday he was struck dumb when a brand new 7-passenger sedan of a popular make car was driven up to his door and keys handed over to him.

Dr. Powers has been pastor of the church here for the last nine years.

Hiking 1,000 Miles Without Food

One thousand miles without food. With New York a thousand miles away by road, George H. Johnson, a gymnast director of Chicago, left Chicago the other day to walk to New York, it being agreed that he would eat no food on the way. He plans to make an average of 33 1-3 miles per day, which means a month on the road—and nothing to eat. He is shown here leaving the Chicago City Hall in company with James H. Hocking, at the left, seventy year old former walking champion.

Oil Pollution of Ocean Waters Is Growing Menace; Great Powers Of World Plan Way to Combat Trouble

Bilge Water From Oil Burning Ships Driving Fish Further Out to Sea and Making Sea Bathing a Matter of Increasing Difficulty.

BY HARDEN COLFAX
Copyright, 1926, by the Consolidated Press Association

WASHINGTON, June 6.—Plans to keep the price of codfish within the reach of the most humble purse and to assure the beach bather that he will emerge from the surf at least as clean as when he entered the water, are in order.

Perhaps the men immediately concerned might not characterize their inspiration in these terms, but nevertheless these are some of the ideas which underlie an international meeting which will start in Washington next Tuesday with the title of preliminary conference of experts of maritime nations on oil pollution of navigable waters.

The $80,000,000 annual fish bill of the American people, plus the amount which other nations pay for such food, stand in fair way to be increased unless means are devised of preventing fishing grounds from being pushed further and further away. And it is no exaggeration to state that some beaches have become so polluted with oil that bathers have come from the water fit subjects for a dry-cleaning plant.

A Serious Matter

Oil pollution of costal waters, extending to some degree to territorial waters, when driven in by wind and tide, is a matter of real concern in every maritime nation. It is costing the United tSates bunded of thousands of dollars every year in depreciating property and fire hazard, not to mention the effect upon fish, and it is costing the people in the regions affected something in health, too, because of the deterrent influence upon sports which add to health.

Inland streams have their own pollution problems, what with increasing discharge of oil from garages and other factories, but that is another story.

Oil pollution, so far as it is a grave problem, is caused mainly by oil-burning ships and oil carrying vessels. In the span of a very few years, the commerce of the world has changed until now more than half the tonnage is transported by oil-burning vessels. Experts estimate that although tankers constitute only a third of the oil burning ships, they are responsible for more than half of the oil pollution.

Improved regulation, by law and by ship owners, who are inspired by economy as well as propriety, has reduced the pollution of navigable waters so that it is not as great this year as two years ago despite an ever-increasing number of vessels which consume oil as fuel. But it remains sufficiently serious to justify international consultation as to what to do about it.

Bilge Water Causes It

Most of the pollution from oil comes from bilge water or ballast water. A law enacted in 1924 in the United States prevents discharge of such bilges in territorial waters within three miles of the coast—while most foreign nations have similar laws. The trouble is that even though discharged far out at sea, the oil floats along the surface if light, or creeps along the bottom, if heavy, until it brings up against the shore line. The fish get away from there and stay away; the gay bather gets a nice tarry rim around his neck, and sometimes entwined in his hair, a highly inflammable deposit is encrusted on piers and docks, and other disagreeable things come to pass.

Under congressional authority half a dozen departments and bureaus have been cooperating in the investigation of the subject. An inter-department committee on oil pollution was organized to direct this work and made various studies and experiments. It reported to the secretary of state in March. As a result, this government feels it knowns something definite about oil pollution, its extent, cost, dangers, causes, effects and possible remedies. Hence the call to 12 foreign governments to send representatives to a preliminary conference, opening next week.

Although preliminary in nature, this international conference probably will recommend further definite steps, looking at least toward uniformity of action by the various governments.

And it may go further—for the bureau of standards has been testing and experimenting, with various types of separators, apparatus which separates the oil from the water, resulting in a saving which might nearly pay for the installation of such a machine on oil burning ships.

UNCANNY CLOCK TICKS WITH SUN

Remarkable Electric Timepiece Is Invented By Washington Man

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 5.—A remarkable electric clock with uncanny powers has been invented by a Washington oputhalmologist, Dr. J. C. Van Slyke, who has trained it to do some feats that even many humans are incapable of doing.

This clock can do these things:

Turn the parking light on your automobile fifteen minutes after sundown. Not at 5 p. m. or 6 p. m., but exactly fifteen minutes after the sun has sunk below the horizon, regardless of the daily variation in the time the sun sets and without adjustment at any time, except every four years, to account for leap year.

Turn that same parking light off again at daybreak the following morning in the same mysterious way.

Flash on the lights in your show window at sundown and turn them off again at daybreak or at any pre-determined hour after they are turned on, and do this important duty day in and day out for four years without winding, adjusting or other attention.

Egyptian Stone Age Relics Recovered

CAIRO, June 6.—The British school of archaeology expedition under Miss Clayton Thompson, which has been searching for flint implements in the northern Fayum, has made a most interesting discovery.

In the course of investigation of what is known as the Ghindi depression, about eight miles north of the limit of cultivation, the expedition has unearthed some twenty baskets and several urns. The baskets hre made of wheat stalks and one basket contained wheat blackened by age; another contained a woden sickle with three flints let in for reaping. The urns are of pottery and have not been opened. The baskets undoubtedly belong to the Libyan Flint Age, when the Ghindi depression was a series of lagoons.

Colony of Herons In Illinois Grove

PARIS, Ill., June 6.—Naturalists are interested in a colony of herons of the same species found in the Florida lagoons which has taken up its summer residence on the farm of William McCarty near Paris. The birds number abut 50 and have chosen for their abode a grove near a small stream.

The owner states that occasional birds have visited his farm for several years past. The birds are building nests and seem prefectly content with their surroundings. Many persons have called to visit the strangers, which seem very tame.

Reformed Burglar Is Advice Giver

ST. LOUIS, Mo., June 6.—Having determined to get out of the burglary business, following his arrest for 100 robberies, Al Roth feels free to give advice to housewives on how to prevent future losses. Roth's two most important "don'ts" to housewives are:

"Don't pull all the shades down when you go away for the day and leave the house unoccupied.

"Above all, don't leave a note pinned to the mail box or a post on the front porch, saying you'll be back in an hour."

CHEESE HEIR LANDS IN JAIL

Oscar Rossger Will Return To Sweetheart When Prison Term is Over

WASHINGTON, June 5.—On the eve of his elopement to Germany with an 18-year-old school teacher of Reading, Pa., Oscar Rossger, 21, a fugitive from the workhouse at Occoquan, was arrested in the Pennsylvania city. He was returned here recently by Headquarters Detectives Curtis Trammel and Robert Livingston.

Early this year he escaped. He was caught in Lansdale, Pa., but escaped again. Fleeing to Reading, he obtained employment. At the Americanization school there he met the pretty young teacher, of German ancestry. They planned to elope to Germany, where Rossger's father conducts a cheese factory.

Rossger told police here he would return to Reading for his sweetheart after finishing his prison term.

FANCY MEAL KILLS DEER

Buck Wheat Cakes With Sugar and Butter Prove Fatal to Animal

HANCOCK, N. Y., June 6.—High living and lack of exercise resulted in the untimely death of a buck deer on the Baxter farm at Horton, N. Y.

Four weeks ago, during a snowfall, a deer stalled in a snow bank on the Baxter farm and when rescued was exhausted. Taken to the barn, he seemed too weak to eat until Mrs. Baxter tried some hot buckwheat cakes with butter and sugar on them, and for these he "fell," and soon became himself again.

After four weeks of high living in the Baxter barn he was about the handsomest buck ever seen in these parts. After a four-course dinner, with fudge and bonbons for dessert, he spent a restless night and died at daybreak.

Palais de Justice Door Always Ajar

PARIS, June 6.—The Palais de Justice, a portion of which is to be devoted to a museum of revolutionary relics, has a curious custom associated with it.

Every night one of the doors is left ajar in obedience to an ordinance of March 4, 1618, wherein Louis XIII decided that it should remain perpetually open "so that my subjects may be able to seek justice at all hours of the day and night."

SUITOR SHOT BY GIRL'S PA

Irate Father Advises Daughter to Keep Ring For Next Man

CHICAGO, June 6.—Robert Polavina is a sadder but wiser man.

He wears a bandage about his head and he is minus the ring—the ring that he was to have given to Dragina Sokula.

Dragina is fourteen. Palovina is thirty-eight.

But it was not the discrepancy in ages that caused the trouble. Dragina's father, indeed, suggested that Polavina might wait until the girl was fifteen—only a short time now. But what Sokula insisted upon was that Polavine produce $1,000 more.

At least that much more, Sokula insisted, was necessary if Dragina was to be properly established in her own home. Polavina insisted that the money he already has saved, plus the ring, was enough.

"Of course it is," said Dragina.

"Of course it isn't!" cried Sokula.

And then there was an argument and Polavina was shot. The bullet grazed his scalp.

Sokula was taken to the police station. So was Dragina. So was Polavina.

"She loves me," Polavina declared.

"She does not!" asserted Sokula.

"No," agreed Dragina, 'I—I'm too young."

And she returned the ring.

Polavina gave it back to her.

"Keep it for the next man," he said.

BUILDING PERMITS

Number of Permits Drop. But Total Is More By $100,000.

Wichita Falls building permits, while dropping in number, exceeded in construction investment figures of the week before by more than $100,000. Thirty-three permits with a value of $284,275 were issued last week, against 72 permits with a valuation of $177,825 the week before.

The week's total brings the mark for the year, which is as yet four weeks short of being half over, to $5,147,548.50, or less than $760,000 under the figure for 1925.

The largest items in the week's list are those for construction of a new brick school house at 2200 Speedway to cost in the neighborhood of $60,000, and work on the grund floor and basement of the First National Bank building to cost $140,000.

Girl Bride Victim Of Family's Feud

PROVINCE, R. I., June 6.—Etta Lomastro, girl, died a victim to a family feud and Thomas Lomastro, her young husband, who killed her because he believed his relatives' insinuations against her character, is dying.

Lomastro and his bride were married two weeks ago in face of strenuous objection on the part of the man's relatives. Driven crazy by their remarks about his wife, Lomastro took the bride, his sister and his sister-in-law to a secluded spot in the Olneyville section, and after an argument, drew a revolver and shot the three women, and then turned the weapon upon himself. The sister and sister-in-law will recover.

He Liked the Army But Yet He Didn't

WASHINGTON, June 6.—Discovery has been made by the war department of what appears to be a new record in the matter of desertion from the army in the case of a man who originally enlisted at Fort Howard, Md., February 16, 1922, deserted two weeks later and had re-enlisted and deserted five times by July 24, 1922. Following his last desertion the soldier voluntarily returned to Fort Howard and surrendered. Meanwhile he had served for brief periods under five different names, and the military authorities are not certain which name is the right one.

Honolulu May Use Wind-to Light City

HONOLULU, June 6.—Edward A. Baals, in charge of the local weather bureau, has suggested utilization of wind power from the trade winds, which blow all year.

Baals calls attention to the great sweep of wind through the gap of the historic Nuuanu pali, and which if harnessed would furnish this island with practically free power for various industrial and lighting plants.
