Thunderstorms Deposit Rain Over County

Scattered thunderstorms rained over Bailey County Monday and Tuesday evenings leaving a moderate amount of moisture in the area.

The official measurement Monday night in Muleshoe was .37 after a storm blew into town bringing high winds and sand.

Tuesday night, a thunderstorm moved into Bailey County from the northwest and the official weather bureau placed Bailey County under a severe thunderstorm warning for about two hours. Only a slight amount of moisture was received early in the evening, but a spectacular electrical storm accompanied the storm. Large hail was reported from this storm in Clovis and surrounding areas, but no hail was recorded in Muleshoe.

Rain fell off and on during Tuesday evening and another thunderstorm moved into the area in the early morning hours Wednesday dropping more moisture on the county.

Local School Board Members Attend Texas Tech Workshop

The issue was "Leadership or Abdication?" for the approximately 150 members of school boards who attended their annual workshop at Texas Tech University Wednesday afternoon, April 25.

Three local board members attended the workshop. They are Don Harmon, Aubrey Heathington and superintendent Neal Dillman from the Muleshoe School Board.

The School Boards Workshop was sponsored by the Texas Association of School Boards and the College of Education at Texas Tech University. The workshop began at 1 p.m., continuing through 6 p.m., and was held in the Ballroom of the University Center.

The workshop is one of several over the state. The one at Texas Tech is designed for members of school boards in 23 West Texas counties most of them on the South Plains.

The program was built around a textbook, "Leadership or Abdication," developed by the Texas Association of School Boards for use in the workshops.

Purpose of the workshop and the textbook was to provide board members with current information on topics relevant to contemporary education.

The topics included were intended to highlight information and techniques that suggest possible alternatives answers to many questions raised by board members and their constituents.

The principal address was delivered by Cecil Rush, executive director, Texas Association of School Boards.

The Friends of the Community Center had an organizational meeting Monday night, April 23, at the XIT Steak House. Present at the meeting were representatives of various civic clubs and organizations in the Muleshoe area.

Dr. Jerry Gleason presided at the meeting. This meeting was called after a meeting last Thursday night in which members of the Beta Sigma Phi Sorority, Kiwanis and Jaycees met to discuss plans for building a new community center in Muleshoe.

Beta Sigma Phi will use the community center project as their service project for this year.

Dr. Gleason reported at the Monday meeting that people in this community have been working on a community center-show barn for the past several years. He stated that the building could serve any number of purposes from family reunions to county livestock shows to affairs attended by hundreds of people.

The group decided to hold a Muleshoe area - wide meeting next Monday night, April 30, at 8 p.m. in the Muleshoe High School auditorium.

All of the civic and community organizations in this immediate area will be contacted and urged to attend the meeting as well as all interested persons in this area.

"Every club, organization and individual can be a contributing factor to the combined success of the project," stated Gleason.

A group of interested men have gone to several area towns and looked at various community centers.

In Hereford, the townspeople have a community center in the form of the Bull Barn in which many different activities are held including professional wrestling.

In Friona, they are planning a community center which will be 150 x 150 square feet with a floor that is concrete on one half and dirt on the other half that can be used for a stock show ring.

Other area community centers were also inspected and Henry Stoneham reported to the group on the various aspects of different community centers in regard to size, construction, features and costs.

After discussing the needs of the community in regard to size of the building needed, the group elected a nominating committee which will nominate nine persons to be submitted for election at the area-wide meeting. There will also be nominations heard from the floor and then the group will elect nine members to serve on the board that will be heading the Friends of the Community Center.

The five men elected to the nominating committee are Henry Stoneham, Kerry Moore, Jeff Smith, Dr. Jerry Gleason and Wayne Williams.

Money will be raised by the community for the building. Several members of the Friends of the Community Center will meet next Wednesday, May 2, with the Bailey County commissioners court to see about attaining Revenue Sharing Funds allotted to the county.

The city of Muleshoe also has an uncommitted $60,000 bond that has been voted on by the people, but not committed to any specific use.

The location of the proposed building is still to be decided on. Several locations were discussed at the Monday night meeting.

All interested persons are urged to come to the area-wide meeting next Monday night and help Muleshoe in getting a community center.

The Sandhills Philosopher

Editor's note: The Sandhill Philosopher on his Johnson grass farm views the Watergate affair from a distance this week.

Dear editor:

I don't know how many hundreds of thousands of words have been written and spoken about the celebrated Watergate affair, more than I was able to read and more I suspect than some high-placed people in Washington wanted to hear, but through it all nobody has paid any attention to one of the most striking and unsettling things about the illegal bugging.

It's the gross incompetence of the experts.

Here you had a highly trained, educated ex-C.I.A. man with 20 years' experience in the super-secret intelligence gathering agency of the U.S. Government, the outfit that's supposed to know how many guided missiles Russia has, what the Viet Cong had for breakfast yesterday, how much sugar cane Castro harvested last month and other things too secret to mention, and he and his bugging partners, including an ex-F.B.I. man, flubbed the whole thing. Caught by a night watchman.

Why, any burglar who failed to learn the rounds of a night watchman in any small town in America wouldn't even have the respect of his fellow burglars. Be the laughing stock of the underworld.

I'll tell you, we may have gotten used to a certain amount of incompetence in this country, you see several million automobiles recalled to replace defective parts or have a refrigerator or washing machine or T.V. set break down in the fourth month and you grow accustomed to the idea, but to see men who had outstanding records with the C.I.A. and the F.B.I. fall flat on their face trying to eavesdrop on a political headquarters located down the hall. . . it makes you wonder if anybody in high places in this country knows for sure what's going on in the world. Somebody better recount those Russian missiles and see if Castro is using saccharin in his coffee.

I've always said if you give the experts enough time and money they'll eventually find out what a lot of people have known for years, but I have to take that back. What they'll do is wind up in jail. A thing like that undermines a man's confidence.

Yours faithfully,
J.A.

Farm Bureau Recommends 1970 Agricultural Act Be Extended

WACO--(Sp1)--Farm Bureau is recommending to Congress that the Agricultural Act of 1970 be extended with some significant modifications, according to J.T. (Red) Woodson, president of the Texas Farm Bureau. The 1970 Act is due to expire at the end of this crop year.

The state farm leader said that American Farm Bureau Federation President William J. Kuhfuss gave the organization's proposals Friday, March 9, in a statement to the Senate Agriculture Committee.

Woodson said that Farm Bureau is pleased with prices for most agricultural commodities at present, but wants safeguards written into law in the event surpluses build up again and depress prices.

The head of the 137,000-member Texas Farm Bureau said the organization is proposing a government farm program for wheat, feed grains and cotton that will "gear into operation when adjustment is needed and gear out when demand is sufficient to provide satisfactory prices in the market place."

Under the present program cooperators are paid income supplements and also for taking unneeded acreage out of production of a particular commodity. Woodson said Farm Bureau proposes to shift this to a total cropland adjustment program, with the percentage of land retired determined by the Secretary of Agriculture based on guidelines established by Congress.

"Under the program we are proposing, government payments, based on agriculture's need for adjustment and the individual farmer's contribution to that adjustment through participation in the set-aside," he said.

This transition would be made over a period of years if current market prices did not justify going directly to the new system, Woodson said.

"In the case of cotton, application of the principle of paying only for adjustment may require some interim adaptations to take into consideration the economic conditions peculiar to this commodity," he said.

The TFB president said that under the proposed system, a farmer, after complying with the set-aside, would have the privilege of producing the products that are best suited to his resources with regard to past acreage history.

"This will permit the users of farm commodities to guide production through prices in the market place," Woodson said.

"As an interim step, pending the shift of the current set-aside program to a cropland basis, it may be desirable to base the set-aside temporarily on the total acreage actually planted to feed grains, wheat, and cotton."

Woodson said Farm Bureau's program is designed to move to a market-oriented agriculture. "Farmers may need a mechanism to assist in making adjustments when market demand falls below our capacity to produce at reasonable prices, to produce at reasonable prices," he said. "If circumstances indicate an actual or threatened overproduction, the Secretary of Agriculture would have the authority to help farmers make needed adjustments through a set-aside program."

The farm leader said that the program, "coupled with a trade policy that will continue to expand exports, will work and will serve the best interests of farmers, consumers, and taxpayers."

FT. ORD, CALIF. (AHTNC) MARCH 16--Army Private Galen D. Bock, 21, son of Mr. and Mrs. Melvin L. Bock, Earth, Tex., recently completed the first phase of training under the modern voluntary army program at Ft. Ord, Calif.

The program combines basic and advanced individual training (AIT) into an average 16-week program, depending on the AIT the soldier receives after completing basic. Decentralized instruction at the unit level and a reduction of formations and inspections give the soldier more time to train and increased off-duty. Fewer restrictions on off-duty travel and improved living facilities are other benefits of the program.

We're proud our seeds have earned the trust of farmers like these...

Johnie Prater recorded a yield of 7000 pounds on 25 acres of Pioneer brand 8417. "Good standability and easy threshing," please. Johnie Prater, Rt. 5 Box 1A, Muleshoe, Texas.

Lawrence Shankles made an outstanding yield of 10,391 pounds on 50 acres of Pioneer brand 3306. An outstanding corn for grain or silage, 3306 "stands well and was ready to thresh when I expected it to be," says Lawrence Shankles, Rt. 2, Muleshoe, Texas.

Because we were the first company to commercially produce hybrid corn and with 17 years of work on sorghum, we know a lot more about hybrids and how to make crosses that really yield. We've had longer to test and re-test our varieties. We've stuck with some of our early crosses, and we keep developing new ones to fit every growing condition imaginable.

For the Southern Panhandle and Plains area we recommend these sorghum, corn and forage hybrids...

Pioneer brand 846—excellent drought resistance—consistent high yields—MDM and smut resistant—medium maturity.

Pioneer brand 820—good yield under stress—outstanding with plenty of water and fertility—MDM resistant—full season.

A History Of Bailey County Pioneer Families

Mr. and Mrs. A.C. Gaede

A.C. Gaede, born in Germany on September 21, 1877, came to Muleshoe on an excursion train with the Coldren Land Company, arriving in November, 1907. Gaede recalled that he was attracted to the area by an article from "The American Magazine". The article was about the Plains country, Bovina and the broken-out land of the XIT Ranch back on 1907. He was most attracted by the part of the article that read "... 40 bushels of wheat an acre on summer fallow land".

Gaede returned to Kansas to get his family and bring them here. Mr. and Mrs. Gaede with their sons, Raymond and John, arrived in what is now Bailey County from Enterprise, Kansas, on March 1, 1908. Gaede's father, Fritz, came in November of 1913 on an immigrant car with all of the family's household goods.

Three other Gaede sons were born in Bailey County, then unorganized. Frances B. Gaede, born November 8, 1908, was the first male child born in what is now Bailey County. The younger two boys born here are Wilbur and Woodrow. One event recalled by the Gaede family was the day Francis, then two years old, got lost. Gaede had gone to Bovina and his wife was putting pumpkins on the mule-drawn sled. Frances, helping his mother, followed her out into the pumpkin field, strayed and got lost. Arriving home and finding his son missing and not answering his mother's calls, Gaede procured the help of the neighbors, Ashton, Harry and John Witterding. They walked the prairie with lanterns, searching for the boy.

Then, because of high grass, the men took up their search on horseback and continued it all night. The only sounds they heard that night were the lonely baying of the coyotes and lobo wolves and the sound of the cattle. About sunup, some three or four miles from the Gaede home, Francis popped up, red cap and all.

The story goes that young Frances had "just strayed up the cow trail, then gotten sleepy, laid down and fell asleep in the midst of the cattle". Dottie Witterding said that morning that the cattle had protected the boy, along with the young calves, from the lobo wolves and coyotes.

The Gaedes were instrumental in the establishment of the Methodist Church in Bailey County and were charter members of the First Methodist Church.

This is one in a series of historical biographies of Bailey County pioneer who arrived prior to 1930.

Exhibit Scheduled At Baker Gallery

The forthcoming show Sunday, April 29, at The Baker Gallery of Fine Art, 13th and Avenue L, Lubbock, from 1 to 5 p.m., will be of general interest with the showing of the contrasting works of Mondel Rogers of Sweetwater and Ford Ruthling of Santa Fe, New Mexico. This will be the second show for Rogers, and the third show for Ruthling at The Baker Gallery.

Mondel Rogers is fast establishing a reputation as an historian of facts in painting and recording the minute details of well known ranches and historical landmarks of the early major ranches in the Southwest. His use of the difficult medium of egg tempera and dry brush watercolor communicates to the viewer Rogers' own special excitement and enthusiasm for the nostalgic life of the bygone days as well as present day ranch life.

Ford Ruthling has a distinctive style, characterized by a translucent surface in which natural objects meet in totally unexpected relationships. His entire life has been a preparation for his painting. During his five years in the Air Force, he found time for intensive study as well as practical experience, by painting approximately 300 portraits of his Air Force friends.

From 1961 to 1964, Ruthling was the curator of exhibitions at the International Folk Art Museum in Santa Fe. He has been painting full time professionally since 1967. A few years ago, he added print making.

Market Report

COLLEGE STATION--Citrus fruits and green leafy vegetables highlight produce counters this week.

"Navel and Valencia oranges, tangerines, grapefruit, collards, mustard, turnips and greens, and cabbage are in good supply at the most economical prices," Mrs. Gwendolyn Clyatt, consumer marketing specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, Texas A&M University, noted.

Other produce values include apples, bananas, potatoes, acorn squash, carrots, rutabagas, broccoli, dry yellow onions, radishes and green onions.

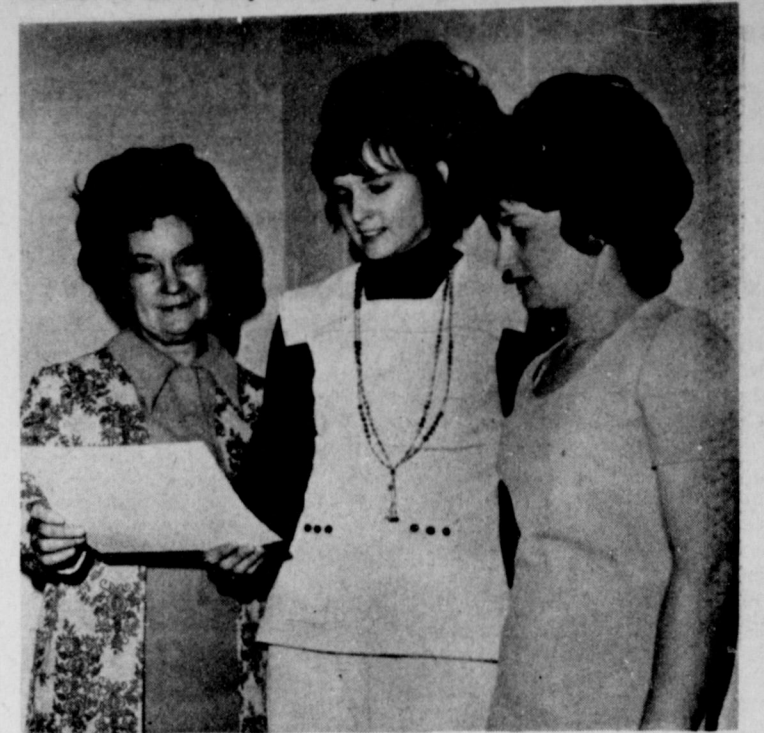

"Although fryer chicken prices are up considerably, they remain a good meat buy considering quality, price and nutrition," the specialist maintained.

"Egg supplies seem adequate for demand--with large sizes in best supply. Grade A large-size eggs remain the best combination of quality and economy for the money."

"Beef prices, on the other hand, are about the same as the past couple of weeks--with most markets featuring some cuts at special prices," Mrs. Clyatt added.

In general, look for best values on chuch roasts and steaks, round steaks and roasts, ground beef, and beef and calf liver. Mrs. Clyatt also reported pork prices steady at the past few weeks' higher level.

"Best buys consist of end-cut loin roasts and chops, sliced quarter loins, should roasts and steaks, hams and picnics."

CONGRESSMAN

Bob Price

18th Congressional District

This week, the House of Representatives voted on two bills which have generated a great deal of interest in the 13th Congressional District.

On Monday, the House considered H. R. 6168, the amendments to this act which proposed a roll back in the prices of all industrial and agricultural products to January 10, 1973 levels, stimulated a great deal of alarm--and rightly so. In my Washington Office alone, I received over 500 letters, telegrams and phone calls protesting the passage of a rollback amendment. As reported from the House Committee on Banking and Currency, H. R. 6168, presented the wrong answers to the highly complicated problems of inflation and foreign trade that our country is now experiencing. At a time in our Nation when American farmers and ranchers have increased their productivity more than any other industry in order to meet rising consumer demands, a price roll back and freeze would have crippled farm and ranch operations by not allowing the farmer and rancher the ability to recover their losses incurred by increases in the cost of production. Luckily, sufficient strength was mustered on the House Floor to defeat the rollback and other damaging amendments and pass a simple one year extension of the Economic Stabilization Act of 1970. The citizens of the 13th Congressional District of Texas may be assured that while I am placing my efforts behind straightening out our country's financial problems, I will always fight against those attempts, such as H. R. 6168, which can only result in the loss of great sums of money and possible bankruptcy for some, the loss of jobs and decreased production that could lead to even higher prices and perhaps a black market.

Thursday, the House voted on another issue which has long been of interest to the 13th District, the Federal Aid to Highways Act. Once again the House was successful in defeating those amendments to this Act which would have diverted funds from the highly successful and necessary Highway Trust Fund for use in urban mass transit projects. While I clearly recognize the plight of the urban areas, I could not and will not support measures which in the long run only serve to take from rural America. If people are to return to the farms and small towns, one of the most essential requirements must be the existence of a comprehensive and modern highway system by which goods and persons can be efficiently transported and economic development encouraged and made feasible. A conference between Members of the Congress will now be held on the House and Senate passed versions of this bill. I will continue to support rural America by opposing any attempt to permit the breaking up of the Highway Trust Fund.

After being "out of circulation" for the past several weeks as I have continued to recuperate from the mild coronary which landed me in the hospital, it feels great to be getting back to the office and climbing "back into the saddle."

The many hundreds of thoughtful get-well cards, letters, and messages have been strong medicine to me, and I shall always be grateful for the concern expressed by so many friends for my recovery. Although the doctor is still holding back on the reins a bit, I am looking forward to getting back to a full schedule and the business at hand before the Congress.

To the many citizens of the 13th Congressional District who contacted my office these past several weeks, I wish to acknowledge and express my appreciation to my competent staff who carried on the duties of my office during my absence. I look forward to the opportunity to be in touch with all my constituents in the months ahead and hope that each of you will always feel free to call upon my office whenever I may be of service.

RURAL WATER AND SEWER BILL

On Tuesday, April 10, the house voted to sustain the President's veto of H.P. 3298, a bill to restore the rural water and sewer grant program under the Consolidated Farm and Forestry Act and voted to override the President's veto because I feel that the water and sewer grant program has brought the benefits of modern plumbing and conveniences to the people of small towns and rural areas, benefits which are essential if rural America is to grow and attract new industry, jobs, and people for the future. I believe this program represents an investment instead of an expenditure and would in the long run wind up costing Government and the taxpayers less by easing the pressures and skyrocketing costs associated with urban growth.

In a message to the Congress this week, President Nixon announced his intent to submit to the Congress the Criminal Code Reform Act aimed at providing a comprehensive revision of existing Federal Crime laws. This act proposes needed changes and closely reflects the thinking of the citizens of the 13th Congressional District who recognize the need for more effective law enforcement and criminal prosecution. The need to reinstate the death penalty, the need to halt the frequency of criminal acts and the need to take positive action against drug offenders are three of the most widely voiced views appearing in the letters received by Congressman Price. The President's Criminal Code Reform Act would be a step in the right direction toward restoring respect for the law and bringing an end to the recent era of permissiveness.

The Criminal Code Reform Act acknowledges the death penalty to be a valuable deterrent to crime and would dissuade individuals from taking the lives of others in the course of committing another crime. As proposed, the death penalty would be imposed for war-related treason, sabotage, espionage, and when the death of an innocent person has been caused due to serious offenses such as kidnapping and aircraft piracy. The act also provides for stricter penalties for narcotic pushers. Under the new act heroin or morphine pushers would receive higher mandatory sentences with second offenders who are convicted of trafficking in more than four ounces of heroin or morphine receiving a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment without parole. Those charged with trafficking in heroin or morphine would also be denied pre-trial release. The President has also urged that marijuana not be legalized. It is time that the loopholes surrounding criminal acts be plugged -- it is time to insure that our laws and system of criminal justice work, not only to insure the rights of the criminally accused, but also the rights of society and the innocent victims of crime.

This week Congressman Bob Price publicly criticized the current national meat boycott as "an effort by special interest groups to confuse the public about the economic facts of life." Price's charge came at a time when wages for union workers have reached an all time high while America's farmers and ranchers are just beginning to achieve a profitable and equitable return from their efforts. "It appears," stated Price, "that while union wages continue to rise along with the cost of equipment used by our farmers and ranchers, who make up approximately 6% of our total population, those in agribusiness are somehow expected to carry the burden alone in the battle against inflation."

It is believed by many authorities that the price of live cattle and hogs had reached its peak for the year prior to action by the President to freeze meat prices and the concurrent meat boycott. Meat prices have been rising because of a number of factors including the increasing demand for meat as opposed to the available supply. For instance, in 1951, 155 million Americans were eating an average of 56 pounds of beef per person while in 1972 we find that our population of 205 million Americans is consuming an average of 114 pounds of beef per person. While Americans have been increasing their yearly intake of beef our farmers and ranchers have been trying to increase their supply of beef to meet the consumers' demands. However the task of boosting beef supplies takes anywhere from 3-5 years and supplies have to equal or surpass demand before prices can go down.

Price expressed his hope that the meat boycott would not discourage beef production thereby having the effect of lowering even further our meat supply and creating a situation which would only serve to drive prices higher and possibly lead to rationing.

Today Americans spend approximately 17% of their income for food, the lowest percentage of any modern nation. Before they complain about the cost of food, perhaps they ought to ask themselves how they are spending the other 83% of their family income.

An individual isn't hopeless until he loses his desire for knowledge.

WASHINGTON REPORT BY

Lloyd Bentsen,

United States Senator

Through the years, the Federal Bureau of Investigation has remained aloof from partisan politics. As a result, it has enjoyed a reputation of impeccable integrity.

For 48 years, under J. Edgar Hoover, the FBI was never the partisan of any national Administration, although it served eight Presidents faithfully. And it was never accused of taking sides, directly or indirectly, in political campaigns.

FBI has been so far above reproach that many Americans have taken its integrity for granted. Many have simply assumed that it would always remain aloof from the political arena.

But that has not always been true of Federal investigative agencies. The Federal Bureau of Investigation was itself created, back in 1924, to replace the old Bureau of Investigation which had become riddled by corruption and political involvement.

The last director of the old Bureau resigned in the middle of the well-known "Teapot Dome Scandal," under fire for converting the agency into a private police force that did little more than gather evidence against enemies of the Harding Administration.

J. Edgar Hoover was well aware of the problems and the stigma, and he agreed to head the new FBI only under certain conditions. Hoover said, "The Bureau must be divorced from politics and not be a catch-all for political hacks. Appointments must be based on merit," Hoover continued, and "promotions will be made on proved ability."

The FBI that J. Edgar Hoover left behind when he died last year was by no means a one-man organization. Once he became director, in 1924, he quickly weeded out the political appointees, and instituted a system under which the FBI appointed agents on the basis of merit and promoted them on the basis of ability.

And today, the Federal Bureau of Investigation is composed of almost 20,000 individuals, each qualified and dedicated to carrying out the awesome responsibilities of this organization.

Regardless, though, of the qualifications and talent of the individuals who serve the FBI, the work of the Bureau is greatly hampered when the confidence of the public is shaken in the institution itself.

The FBI, for example, is a part of the Justice Department, which has been drawn into political controversies in recent years.

I admired the late President John F. Kennedy, and many of the things that he did. But, I believe it was a mistake for him to name his brother, Robert Kennedy -- who had served as his political campaign manager -- to be U.S. Attorney General, head of the Justice Department.

By the same token, I have supported many of the Policies and actions of President Nixon. But he, too, I feel, was wrong to name his political campaign manager, John Mitchell, to be Attorney General of the United States.

Under this legislation, the FBI would continue to function as an investigative agency of the United States Government, but it would be shielded from the controversies of partisan politics.

I firmly believe that the most important asset of the FBI -- even more important than its high degree of professional competence -- is the confidence of the American people; confidence that the FBI is incorruptible and beyond political influence; confidence that it is an institution which serves no master but the enforcement of our nation's laws.

The action I propose would reaffirm and strengthen the confidence. And it would enhance the integrity of the FBI by insuring that it is able to remain aloof from the political arena.

Washington, D.C. --Senator Lloyd Bentsen today introduced legislation providing for phased de-regulation of natural gas prices.

"I believe this bill is a moderate solution to problems caused by a regulatory system which was never intended by the Congress when it enacted the Natural Gas Act of 1938," Bentsen said.

"This regulatory system has maintained artificial price ceilings which have resulted in depressed exploration and development of new natural gas reserves," he continued.

"The artificial ceilings have encouraged the wasteful consumption of natural gas in boilers, just because it was cheaper than coal."

"In addition, today, this system allows domestic producers to receive only 20-25 cents per thousand cubic feet for natural gas, while we are importing gas and paying foreigners six times that price," the Senator added.

Senator Bentsen's bill would remove Federal regulation of the price interstate pipelines pay producers for gas newly dedicated to interstate commerce or gas from wells drilled on or after April 6, 1972.

It would not alter existing provisions in long-term contracts between interstate pipeline companies and natural gas producers. But, when these contracts expire, the new price would be set by competitive market rather than direct regulation.

Gas producers affiliated with the pipelines to which they sell would remain subject of Federal Power Commission regulation. However, the regulated price would be based on prices paid non-affiliated producers in the area of the sale.

Bentsen pointed out that there is growing support for a program of phased de-regulation, such as his. He noted, for example, that all three Commissioners of the FPC favor such a plan.

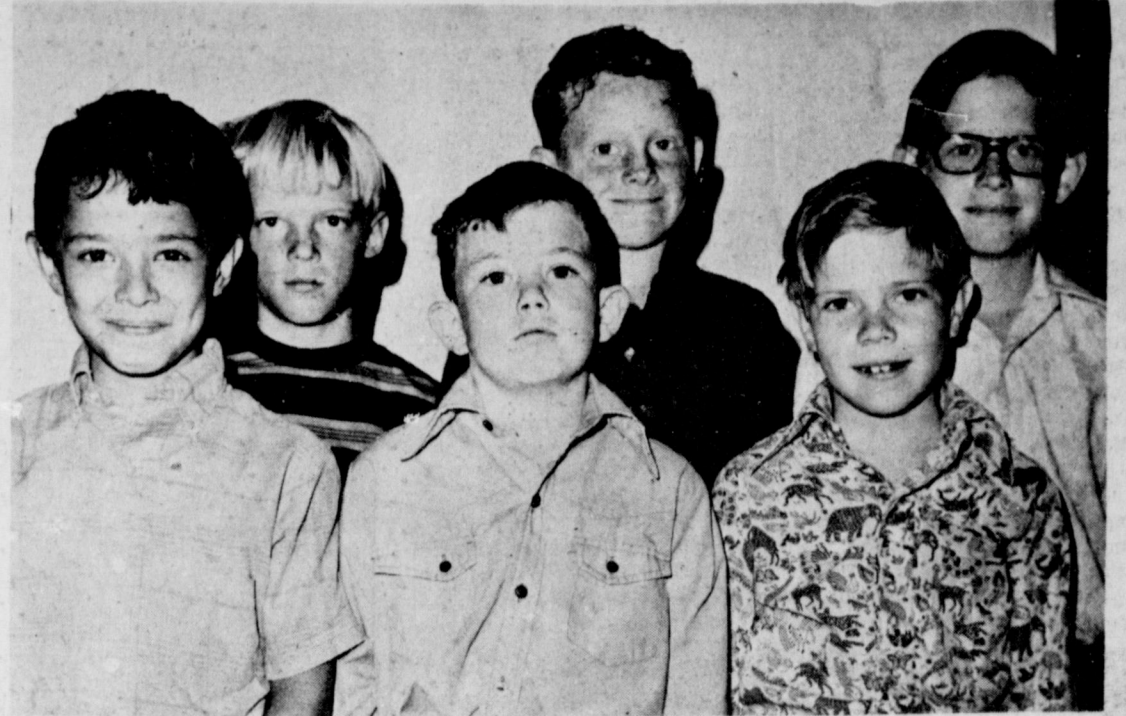

"Our current policy of regulation was intended to protect the consumer from high prices, but instead it has contributed to a shortage of natural gas that will result in even higher prices," Senator Bentsen concluded.

REVIEW OF INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS--I am co-sponsoring a bill to insure that the people, through their elected representatives, are able to review and approve any agreements between the United States and a foreign power.

Since World War II national Administrations have tended to rely more and more on executive agreements and less and less on treaties in their dealings with foreign nations.

The difference is this: Our Constitution requires that all treaties be ratified by a two-thirds vote of the Senate before they go into force. But executive agreements are not submitted to the Senate for ratification.

Not only are fewer international arrangements being presented for ratification as treaties these days, but those presented are largely non-controversial.

As a result, the people are aware when the U.S. signs a minor treaty dealing with such things as the migration of birds or with international health matters.

But, all too often, they are not made aware of the executive agreements, not reviewed by Congress, through which we establish military bases on foreign soil or commit ourselves to the defense of alien power.

This trend is undoubtedly due in large measure to the more active role the U.S. has played in world affairs since the Second World War.

PEOPLE MUST HAVE SAY--In this high-speed, modern age the executive branch of government must have some flexibility and initiative in the area of foreign policy. But it would be disastrous to our form of Government if we prevent the people from having a say in the shaping of its policy.

When they wrote the Constitution, our founding fathers wanted to insure that no single branch of Government would be invested with excessive power.

They tried to make certain that the wishes of the people would be carried out in our dealings with foreign nations. So they provided that the people--through their elected representatives in the Senate--would have an opportunity to examine all proposed agreements with foreign powers.

The men who framed our Constitution did not foresee the coming of the executive agreement. They mentioned only one kind of international agreement--the treaty. And they fully intended for both the executive and legislative branches to have a say in all of those agreements.

CONSTITUTIONAL PRINCIPLES STILL IMPORTANT--I firmly believe that this bedrock principle is no less important in this age of rapid change and computerization than it was in those simpler times when the Constitution was written.

All too often today, the people of the U.S. learn of international arrangements only after they are already in existence. They find out about them only when Congress is asked to appropriate money for them.

And the Congress is told that, if these funds aren't provided our country will be violating an agreement with a foreign nation.

My legislation would overcome this problem by giving the people, through the Congress, what amounts to veto power over any executive agreement.

The bill would require the executive branch to submit all such arrangements to the legislative branch. And it would prohibit any agreement from going into force until 60 days after it is presented to the legislature.

If Congress takes no action during that 60 day period, the agreement would automatically become effective. If, however, both Houses of Congress approve a Resolution opposing it, the agreement would never go into force.

In this way, the measure would insure that the elected representatives of the people approve all agreements that any Administration proposes to make with a foreign power.

Yet, the legislation would give the executive branch enough flexibility to maintain a viable, workable foreign policy. We live in a complex, fast-moving world and our foreign policy must be able to change as conditions warrant. But we must also continue to hear the voice of the people and heed the will of the people.

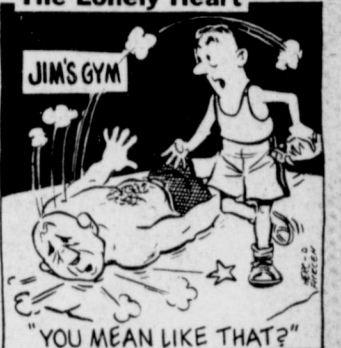

By requiring this review of all executive agreements, we can reach both goals.

The ceiling on beef, pork and lamb prices, placed there by an Administration ostensibly championing a free market economy for agriculture, "makes no sense at all," according to Ray Joe Riley of Hart, Texas. Riley is President of Lubbock-based Plains Cotton Growers, Inc., and a feeder of both cattle and lambs.

Just recently Secretary of Agriculture Earl Butz told the House Committee on Agriculture that the Administration favors a farm law phasing out income supplement payments to farmers over a three year period "as we depend on a growing market demand to maintain farm income."

"How," asks Riley, "is a growing market demand going to maintain farm income if the Administration imposes price ceilings to keep that demand from increasing market prices?"

Cotton, feed grains and wheat, the three major commodities covered under present farm programs, are not affected, directly, by the meat price lid. "But it should be obvious that stockmen can't continue paying high prices for cottonseed meal and grain to fatten meat animals that must be sold under a ceiling," Riley said.

"Nor do we have any assurance," he continued, "that the Administration won't yield to political pressures, as it has done in the case of meat, and impose ceilings on prices of other farm commodities if those prices should reach levels of offering a fair return to producers."

Are the interests of the public served by price controls on meat? "Definitely not," says Riley. "What will happen is that existing plans for increased livestock production to meet increasing demand will be abandoned, because investors won't gamble on a high risk enterprise that offers little or no chance for profit. Supplies will shrink, and unless demand subsidies to the level of supplies, meat prices will remain as high as the law allows and eventually the housewife will be looking at empty shelves in the market."

Farm programs since the 1930's have helped to stabilize farm income, thereby assuring an abundance of agricultural commodities available to the public at much more reasonable prices than would have been possible otherwise, Riley points out.

"But if the Administration's thinking on future farm programs should prevail, and if the price ceilings on meat are an example of policies the Administration has in mind to maintain farm income through greater market demand, then both agriculture and the consuming public in this country will very shortly find themselves in a very unhappy situation."

Processing of raw fiber into yarn by the relatively new "open end" spinning process holds distinct possibilities for increased usage of High Plains cotton, according to Ray Joe Riley of Hart, President of Plains Cotton Growers, Inc., Lubbock.

Laboratory studies and commercial experience have shown, first, that the open end system is best adapted to the formation of the coarser yarns for which shorter, lower micronaire cottons are suited, and second that short staple, low micronaire cottons cause far less problems on open end spinning frames than in the conventional ring spinning process.

There is also evidence that yarns produced from low micronaire cottons on the open end system actually have greater strength and better uniformity than like yarns from the same system using higher micronaire cottons. These results came from a study supervised by the Textile Research Center at Texas Tech University in a North Carolina pilot plant.

By the end of this year the Tech Center expects to have its own open end spinning frame in operation to conduct additional research.

There now are only about 15,000 open end spindles in the United States, an infinitesimal percentage of this country's 19 million spindle total. "But more and more mills have plans to move a portion of their operations from ring spinning to open end spinning," Riley says, "and as the movement accelerates there can be significant benefits for High Plains cotton and cotton farmers."

The open end system has a number of advantages in the production of coarser count yarns. Labor requirements are less than half of requirements for ring spinning. Lower qual-

Services Set Thursday For Neva Lloyd

Neva Lloyd, 57, died at 6:15 a.m. Tuesday in the West Plains Memorial Hospital after a lengthy illness.

She was born June 5, 1915 in Rocky, Oklahoma. She had lived in Muleshoe for the past nine years, moving from Midland.

Mrs. Lloyd was a member of the Baptist Church and was formerly a nurses aid at Midland Hospital and a former cashier at Piggly Wiggly in Muleshoe.

Funeral services will be held Thursday, today, at 2:30 p.m. in the Singleton-Elis Funeral Home Chapel of the Chimes with Rev. Doug DaBose, minister of the First Baptist Church of Muleshoe, officiating. Burial will be in the City of Lubbock Cemetery.

Survivors include one son, James W. Patterson of Livermore, California; one daughter, Mrs. David Murray of Slidell, La.; four sisters, Mrs. Fern Warren and Mrs. Lena Bell Thomas of Muleshoe, Mrs. Susie Smith of Andrews and Mrs. Versie Fillmore of Wichita Falls; five brothers, Estill Smith of San Angelo, D.H. Smith of Burkburnett, E.G. Smith of Clinton, Okla., Jimmy Smith of Salt Lake City, and Irvin Smith of Muleshoe; and five grandchildren.

ity, less costly raw materials can be used at production rates three to three-and-a-half times that of ring spinning. Dust and noise levels are far below ring spinning. Elogation and evenness are higher than in ring-spun yarn and there are fewer neps and other imperfections.

It is generally believed that open end yarns are from 10 to 20 percent weaker than their ring spun counterparts. And this is true when cotton in the 3.5 to 4.9 "normal" micronaire range is used. But preliminary tests recently have indicated that yarn made on the open end system from low micronaire cotton, in the 2.8 to 3.2 readings, is just as strong as that spun in the conventional manner.

Another criticism of open end spinning has been that the greater twist requirement causes fabrics to feel harsher and stiffer. And this, too, Riley says can be at least partially overcome by the use of low micronaire cottons.

Riley and other cotton officials on the Plains believe the economic advantages of open end spinning can be maximized by a mill located on the High Plains near the source of the raw material best suited to the system, and point out there is more than a little interest in establishing a plant in the Lubbock area.

"And at PCG we are gearing up to cooperate fully with the Textile Research Center at Tech, machinery manufacturers and commercial companies to encourage that interest," Riley says.

Utah Symphony Will Perform In Clovis

The Utah Symphony will bring its 75 member orchestra to Clovis, New Mexico this coming Saturday, April 28, for the first time.

The Symphony, internationally recognized as one of the great orchestras of the world and listed in the top 12 in the nation, will perform at Marshall Auditorium at 8:00 p.m. (MST).

The Orchestra serves as a regional and international standard of musical good will as it presents its concerts each season. Having completed a concert tour of Europe where it was hailed as a great orchestra and a recent tour throughout Latin America where it consistently received standing ovations for its performances, the Symphony plans over 140 concerts in the western region this year in addition to its scheduled season in Salt Lake City.

Maestro Abravale, Musical Director and Conductor of the Symphony since 1947, is the major key to the Symphony's success. "He is a superior conductor more interested in music than in himself," according to New York Times critics.

Ticket reservations for the Clovis performance may be made by calling 505-763-7019 and can be picked up at the door.
