Checking out the shrubs

The durable mesquite easily survives droughts, guzzles water and is a nuisance to ranchers and farmers. Conservationist Dick Hagelstein examines one of the hardy shrubs.

Mesquite shrubs rob West Texas land of precious water

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The rancher's plight means far more than dreaded drought, impatient creditors, low cattle prices, short grass and bad water.

There's mesquite. It's hardy, bothersome, unwanted, and it won't go away.

The thorny and twisted shrub is competing with range grasses and pastures in the battle for water. Unlike native pastures, the survivable mesquite can endure the drought.

"The theft of millions of gallons of water occurs each year in Texas," said Dick Hagelstein, district conservationist for the U.S. Soil Conservation Service (SCS) in Midland County. "This thief is silent (and) has an insatiable thirst that is literally pumping our underground reservoirs day by day."

"Mesquite is the culprit," said Hagelstein. "This well-adapted noxious plant is estimated to rob (Texas) farmers, ranchers and city dwellers of more than 3 quadrillion gallons of water each year."

Farmers and ranchers have tried to rid this country of mesquite. They've grubbed it, root plowed it, and poisoned it with kerosene, diesel fuel and the controversial defoliant 2,4,5-Trichlorophenoxyacetic acid or "Dioxin." They all control this ubiquitous tree of the West Texas plains. But nothing so far has killed out the mesquite.

THE MESQUITE apparently has been a nemesis on the grazing lands since the 1800s, although early cowboys reported tall native grasses on the plains and hardly noticed any major mesquite infestation.

"The mesquite is one of the most widely spread of trees ranging from the Atlantic to the Pacific," a plains observer wrote in 1895, "along the entire Mexican border, and from the Indian Territory, through Texas and Mexico to South America."

When Bethel Graham began farming in Midland County in 1925, mesquite wasn't so much of a problem.

"It was a lot more shrubbery looking (mesquite) — just barely two feet sticking above the ground," he said. "There was a bunch of wood under the ground."

Graham recalled chasing coyotes in a Model T Ford on his land back then. There was no problem running over the little shrubs other than getting flats from thorns and patching the tires.

C.M. Edwards, who started punching cattle at age 16 in 1930, vividly recalled the mesquite here.

"THERE WAS quite a few but they was real small," he said. "Now, south and west of here, they were a little larger." Edwards said the "mesquite weren't knee high" when he first moved between Midland and Stanton in 1922.

"Every now and then, you'd see a big tree that survived the drought."

The pasture land was good then and was about "the same as it is now."

"Down in the low places, the grass would get deeper, such as in the draws," he recalled of riding the plains on horseback. "It would come up to your stirrups."

Back then, mesquite wasn't much of a nuisance unless it had to be grubbed.

"In fact," said Edwards, "it's no real problem, either." In these dry times, the cattle feed on the mesquite leaves and beans. "That's pretty good cow feed," he said. "It's not bad, I'll tell you."

Edwards recalled in 1923 when his family paid help $1 to $1.50 per acre to grub and shovel mesquite to convert pasture land to farm land.

Today, on his place east of Midland, there's plenty of 10- to 12-foot high mesquite trees.

"You can't ride horseback through it," Edwards said.

THE WATER-THIEVING mesquite soaks up 37 percent of the rain that falls in Texas, said Hagelstein.

"This amounts to 10 million acre feet of water. This is water that is lost to the underground aquifers or for the production of range grasses."

"Control of this plant is an endless and expensive task," noted the conservationist.

An early chemical used to control mesquite was sodium arsenite, but the chemical's toxicity to man and livestock discouraged popular use of the chemical, according to a Texas Agricultural Experiment Station (TAES) report on the mesquite. Kerosene and diesel fuel were poured around the base of mesquite to control the tree. But retreatment usually is needed within three to five years.

In 1945, TAES began researching the effectiveness of 2,4,5-T.

"Beginning in the mid-1950s," said Hagelstein, "ranchers began to treat mesquite by using a chemical herbicide (2,4,5-T). The chemical did not kill the trees, only suppressed them temporarily."

Hagelstein said a 30 percent to 40 percent root kill was considered normal.

"As mesquite continues to spread and costs continue to rise, fewer acres are treated," he said. A 1973 survey indicated that "excessive brush" covered 54 percent of Texas's 167 million acres of land. Per-acre cost of spraying mesquite ranges from about $7 with 2,4,5-T to $12 or more with more specialized chemicals.

LIKE THE RANGE and farm land, mesquite, too, is suffering from the drought.

"Couple the mesquite problem with a lack of grass cover due to dry conditions and over-grazing," Hagelstein said, "and the loss of the valuable resource is astronomical."

Though somewhat controlled, the mesquite spreads across the country as cattle move from one location to another. Cattle eat the beans, and undigested seeds are dropped. They are rooted and crop up through cow patties.

"Mesquite is the most adaptable plant that we've got," he said. "It'll adapt to extremely deep soil or shallow soil. The mesquite prefers alkaline soil."

The mesquite's root system spreads out or goes deep to get the water.

"There's no end to the amount of moisture that it uses."

When the West was being settled, mesquite was scarce in West Texas, Hagelstein surmised.

"Of course, at one time we didn't have brush. There was an endless sea of grass, you might say. There was so much grass, the settlers, I assume, figured we never would be out of grass. But they proved to be wrong."

In the early days, Indians and bisons "went where the rain was. The land was periodically rested."

Eight-year-old boy found hungry, in good condition

ROAN MOUNTAIN, Tenn. (AP) — An 8-year-old "city boy" missing for a week in rugged mountains along the Tennessee-North Carolina border was found Saturday, hungry and apparently hallucinating but otherwise in good condition.

The boy ate a half-dozen candy bars, drank two soft drinks and ate an apple just after being found. At a hospital he downed roast beef and mashed potatoes for lunch and asked for hot dogs for supper.

A six-man search team found Michael Eugene Reel of Hickory, N.C., about 8:30 a.m. CDT in a blackberry thicket on Roan Mountain. He was only 1½ miles from where he disappeared, but rescuers said they believed he had wandered around the mountain.

Although Michael's feet were wet, tender and swollen and he had several scratches and insect bites, "he appears to be in excellent, excellent shape," Carter County Sheriff William Crumley said.

MICHAEL WAS taken briefly to Roan Mountain State Park where he was reunited with his mother, Patricia, then to Carter County Memorial Hospital in Elizabethton for observation. He was listed in satisfactory condition and doctors said he would be kept overnight and released today.

"He should not have any physical long-term effects from this," Dr. Dennis Laug said after examining the boy. "He should be running and playing and acting normal in two or three days.

"It's unbelievable the shape he's in for what he's been through. I think it's amazing that he has survived this ordeal."

Laug said the boy "was mainly scratched from the twigs, mostly around his ankles."

"He walked right into us," said Jimmy Doyle, one of the men who found him about 30 feet into the woods off a field.

Ambulance rates may be raised

Council to consider proposal

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

"We try to stay up with them (Odessa). We haven't raised our rates since 1979..."

— James Roberts, deputy fire chief

Midland doesn't like to be running behind its neighboring cities. That is one reason the Fire Department will present a proposal Tuesday to raise rates for its Emergency Medical Services, known to the layman as the ambulance.

Proposed rate hikes for several categories will be reviewed by the Midland City Council. That body can agree, change the rates or decide not to charge an increase.

James Roberts, deputy fire chief, explained that Odessa recently raised its rates. "We try to stay up with them. We haven't raised our rates since 1979," he said. And that had been the first rate increase since the ambulance service was instituted in 1976.

Another reason for the new rates, he said, is that Midland may be getting back into the non-emergency transfer cases, which involves persons being transferred from the hospital to a nursing home. A firm called Alert, based in Odessa, used to do this but is dropping Midland, according to Roberts.

Roberts and Dean Williams, EMS chief, figured Midland's proposed rates after studying what other cities were charging.

The proposal calls for $65 for an emergency or transfer within the city limits. Roberts said the current charge is $50. The charge for outside the city limits would be $65 plus $1.50 per mile. Waiting time will be $40 an hour. And to transfer a patient back to the point of origin is $30. "We give you a price break if you make a round trip," joked Roberts.

The waiting charge will be assessed in cases where an ambulance is used to transport someone from a house or nursing home to a doctor's office and back. "It's being done at our expense. We have to charge something to cover our cost."

By comparison, Odessa charges $60 for non-emergency transfers; Dallas, $85. San Angelo's cost is $53 plus $1.60 per mile outside the city limits. Lubbock charges $110 plus $1.50 per mile plus $15 past the first eight miles plus $25 for a monitor plus $35 for drugs administered.

In the report going to the City Council, Roberts and Williams point out that transferring a patient from Midland to Lubbock costs the city $221.52. The city is charging $193.75.

"We don't make money on the ambulance service," said Roberts. "Compared to other cities in the state, these charges are still low."

Texas Tech 'raids' school

GRAND FORKS, N.D. (AP) — Texas Tech University has raided the University of North Dakota School of Medicine for a new obstetrics-gynecology department.

The Lubbock, Texas, school has lured all three professors to jobs at a new university branch opening in Odessa.

"They raided us," said School of Medicine Dean Thomas Johnson. "It happens all the time in academia."

Department Chairman Robert Carter has resigned effective Sept. 1 to be chairman of the department at the Odessa campus. Daniel Braun and Carol Bergquist, the other two professors have also said they are leaving for Odessa, Johnson said.

The new job will put him at the head of a larger department at a larger school, Carter said. Odessa is a city of about 90,000.

"It's a good career opportunity," he said. "It's a bigger campus and a bigger department. Here there's just three of us covering the whole state. There we'll have four or five covering one city."

About 150 first- second- and third-year medical students will be affected by the move, Braun said.

The move came as a result of a departmental lecture presented last spring at UND by Wayne Heine, department chairman at Texas Tech's Lubbock campus.

"He told us he was opening this department," Braun said. "Then he invited us down to look at the campus. Then he invited us to take the job."

Johnson said he has lined up a nationally known obstetrician to serve as UND's interim chairman.

Mother gets probation for allegedly selling child

HOUSTON (AP) — A woman who prosecutors say sold her 3-year-old daughter for $800 to defray her moving expenses has been sentenced to seven years' probation.

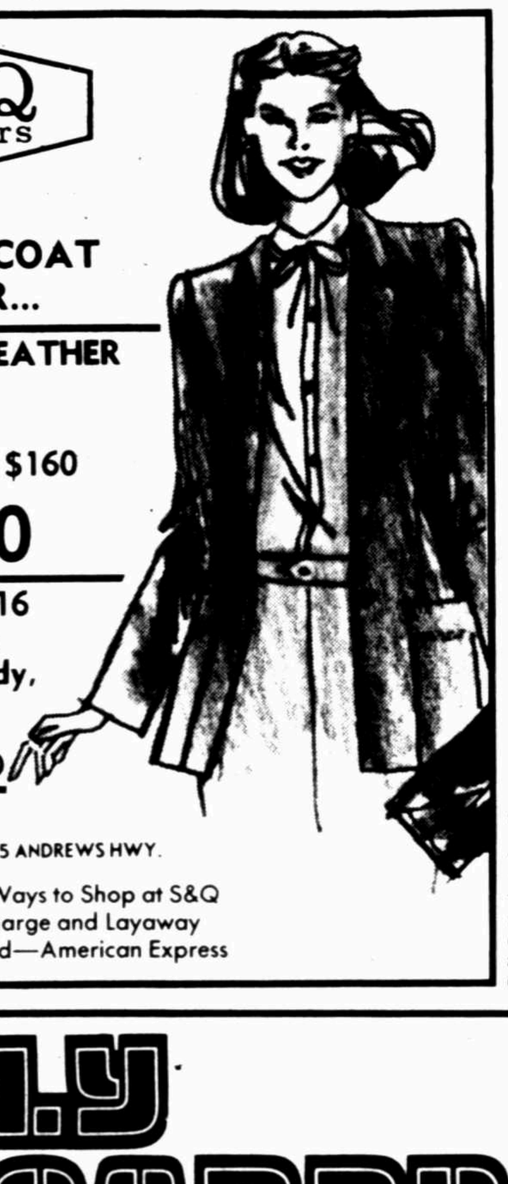

Rebecca Lynn Munroy, 28, pleaded guilty Friday and was given the probated sentence by State District Judge George Walker. She could have been sentenced to 10 years in jail and fined $5,000.

Ms. Munroy was arrested June 14 after she allegedly sold her daughter to another couple living in the same apartment complex, police said. The couple gave $150 to Ms. Munroy and promised to pay the remaining $650 later, police said.

Ms. Munroy told neighbors she needed the money because she was moving, police said.

The little girl and her younger isister have been placed in foster homes, said Gene Daniel of the Harris County Child Welfare Unit.

Board to establish grade

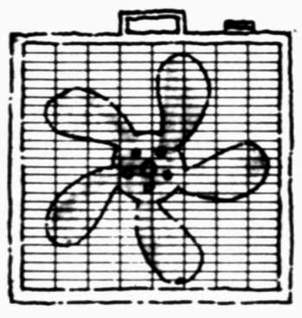

AUSTIN (AP) - The State Board of Education took over the job Saturday of determining what should be the passing grade for Texas public school teachers in reading, writing and 'rithmetic.

The board action, without extended discussion, was taken after a board committee heard Friday that a test of 1,269 college students wanting to be teachers showed many would fail.

State Board of Education Chairman Joe Kelly Butler, Houston, told the Committee on Teacher Preparation and Support Services it had as long as it want to recommend a passing grade for all new Texas teachers.

The test scores presented the board from 1,269 students at 59 of the 64 colleges and universities that train teachers will be reviewed by the presidents of the schools and various advisory committees.

Kentucky Club: Juarez bar where stars were like trophies

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — Stars such as Clark Gable and John Wayne once crossed the Rio Grande to drink at Juarez's Kentucky Club, a roaring Mexican bar that aficionados claim is the most famous sipping site on the U.S.-Mexico border.

Gable, an Army captain at the time, visited the Kentucky Club during World War II, taking time from his Fort Bliss duties in nearby El Paso to drink Tequila and Mexican beer at the 80-foot-long mahogany bar and listen to the jukebox tunes of Glenn Miller.

"Gable was a wonderful guy, just wonderful," Kentucky Club owner Francisco Montez said. "My, those were the days. All of Juarez was a fair."

Back then, Fort Bliss soldiers and minor league baseball players from Phoenix to El Paso flooded the bar, named by the sports-loving Montez for the Kentucky Derby horse race. "Kentucky just stuck in my mind," he said.

An unknown minor league baseball player named Billy Martin, author Tom Wolfe and former heavyweight boxing champion Jack Dempsey dropped in to sample local beers, bet on horse races and size up the Mexican nightlife two blocks inside the border on Avenida Juarez.

Wayne would hang his hat in the club when filming Western movies south of the border in Durango.

The club, opened in 1933, is festooned with the century-old, six-arch mahogany bar, mirrors, Mexican chandeliers and a blue-tile gutter filled with water at the foot of the bar for spitters and smokers.

About 60 can sit in five booths and at the bar. Standing-room only crowds from the old bullfights and boxing matches in Juarez sometimes forced patrons into the street.

Ringing the walls are photos of prominent boxers — such as Jack Johnson and Gene Tunney — and minor league ball players, many of whom frequented the bar when the Juarez Indios — then owned by Montez — belonged to the American Association in the 1940s and 50s. A young Billy Martin peaks out beneath the bill of a Tucson uniform.

"I've known Billy since he was a boy," Montez said. "He's a very good guy, but he always was nervous when he played ball."

Baseball Hall of Famer Joe DiMaggio also used to visit the Kentucky Club during spring training, Montez said.

"There have been so many famous ones who came here that I can't remember their names," Montez, 75, said without boasting.

The club recently has lost some luster because tourist traffic has dropped since the economic troubles of Mexico started two years ago. Three peso devaluations also cut the Mexican trade.

"This is an incredible bar," Stokes Taylor said, sipping a 66-cent drink. "I brought my father here, and he has traveled the world. He called this one of the world's class bars."

Chihuahua City student Javier Estrada called the Kentucky Club "a nice place to have a drink. The wood bar is something unique."

Montez, 75, bought the bar, then known as Sloppy Joe's, 50 years ago from an American whiskey distributor in the aftermath of Prohibition's repeal.

Americans owned 40 percent of the Juarez clubs during the Prohibition days of 1918-33, the Juarez Chamber of Commerce reported.

Owners were backed by whisky distributors who moved their plants from Kentucky to Mexico during Prohibition so they could manufacture booze. Those traveling to and from California on the railroad often stopped in El Paso and went to Juarez for a legal drink, historians say.

After Prohibition, distributors sold their clubs — with names such as the Jockey Club and Central Cafe — to Montez and other Mexican entrepeneurs.

Montez's nine employees have spent decades in his service. Lorenzo Hernandez, sporting a gray mustache behind the waist-high bar, has worked at the Kentucky Club since 1947. "This is a good bar. You won't find many to top this," he said.

Jukebox tunes of Glenn Miller at three plays for a quarter waft out for patrons: "Tuxedo Junction," "Stardust," and "Missouri Waltz." They are among the 200 selections that compete with Elvis Presley, Bobby Darin and Willie Nelson songs.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Bullock: A politician with respect

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Recently, Rep. Wayne Peveto of Orange said he's planning to seek the Comptroller's office in 1986, "if Mr. Bullock doesn't run."

Those five words say a lot.

Notice, for example, that it's "Mr. Bullock," and not just a plain unadorned "Bullock" or even "Bob Bullock."

Now Mr. Peveto is a pleasant, mannerly gentleman who likely would be courteous in referring to anyone.

But it's probably a good policy to be pleasant toward the incumbent comptroller in any event, particularly for legislators, if one isn't prepared for a tongue-lashing by a man who can combine the vocabulary of William Buckley and the temperament of a Marine drill instructor.

And even more to the point, the statement is conditioned on the comptroller not seeking re-election.

There probably aren't many folks in Texas who would want to take on Mr. Bullock in the event that he does seek re-election.

But Peveto knows that Bullock (we're not being impolite — just following style) already has announced that he will be running for governor, although he's not made a formal announcement.

But, Bullock has said, "I have definitely made up my mind."

In fact, Bullock was telling reporters he'd made up his mind even before Gov. Mark White took the oath of office as governor.

Didn't he think it was a bit premature, Bullock was asked at the time, for him to be gearing up for a campaign to unseat White even before White had been sworn it?

"Oh, I think he ought to be sworn in," Bullock responded.

And sworn at, perhaps.

Bullock has attacked White as an "old fool" (White is 10 years younger than Bullock) and chaffed him continually over budget matters in the legislative session.

There are two schools of thought regarding Bullock's chances for winning a gubernatorial spot, and the views involved are diametrically opposing ones.

One is that Bullock will manage to self-destruct, losing votes due to his abrasive style and (how should one say it?) unorthodox activities — unorthodox for a gubernatorial candiate, at any rate.

The other view is that Bullock will pick up votes because of that very unorthodoxness, from voters tired of neatly packaged, predigested candidates.

"I simply can't see people voting for Bullock for governor...He doesn't look like a governor; he doesn't act like a governor," says one long-time observer.

That does depend, of course, on what one thinks a governor should look or act like.

But admittedly Bullock doesn't act like many recent governors, although his tough, salty talk is like that of former Gov. Bill Clements.

Some observers have argued that Clements' abrasive style was a factor in his defeat.

Probably it didn't endear him to some folks but Texans often had indicated at least an acceptance of, if not a preference for, leaders who have known how to tell, in the old idiom, "how the cow ate the cabbage."

In that sense, Bullock is heir to a grand political tradition, including the likes of Lyndon B. Johnson and Sam Houston.

Bullock's problem is likely to be more what he does, or has done, than what he says.

This spring, the comptroller was stopped north of Austin by a Department of Public Safety patrolman and was cited for speeding — 106 miles per hour in a 55 m.p.h. zone.

Bullock indicated that he was trying out his new BMW.

Women's caucus chief says Reagan dangerous for American women

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The chief of the National Women's Political Caucus — a Republican — urged President Reagan on Saturday not to seek a second term, saying he is "a dangerous man" for American women.

"Mr. President, one term is enough," Kathy Wilson said in a speech. "For the sake of American women — Republicans, Democrats and independents — please step down. Do not seek the Republican nomination.

"Four years is enough. As a matter of fact, it is entirely too much."

In another speech, Pat Bailey, a Republican member of the Federal Trade Commission, accused the Reagan administration of fostering bigotry because of its response to women's demands.

"I have never doubted that the president is a nice person," she said. "But benign bewilderment in response to the women's revolution is license to bigotry at all levels and at all corners of the land."

Ms. Wilson's speech was a break with caucus tradition. The group has not previously become involved in presidential politics.

Her statement also was surprising because she has been one of the few leaders of a national women's group who has maintained good relations with the Reagan White House over the past two years.

Ms. Wilson was the first of a series of mostly Republican leaders to address the caucus sessions Saturday.

Sen. Robert Packwood of Oregon, a Republican known as a strong advocate of women's rights, said he hopes his party returns to the traditions of Abraham Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt.

"Either the Republican Party will change or expire," Packwood said at a news conference after speaking at a convention luncheon.

HE WARNED THE FEMINISTS THAT the battle to preserve a woman's right to an abortion is not over, saying that those who seek to outlaw abortions are "implacable."

Four of the six announced Democratic presidential candidates — former vice president Walter Mondale and Sens. John Glenn of Ohio, Gary Hart of Colorado and Alan Cranston of California — also were to arrive to seek support among the women activists. Sen. Ernest Hollings of South Carolina was to arrive Sunday in time for the caucus members to question the five on their stands on women's issues.

The women's caucus has 77,000 members, about 35 percent of them Republicans. The organization is known as the "practical politician" wing of the women's movement, giving both Democratic and Republican women the services of a political party — recruitment, training and money.

Ms. Wilson attacked Reagan both personally and for his policies.

"Ronald Reagan is the only American president ever to be elected on the basis of an ideology that has been frozen in his head for a quarter of a century. The underlying backwardness of that ideology is concealed from us by Mr. Reagan's unremitting congeniality," she said.

"But these engaging superficial performing skills cannot conceal the hard fact that for American women Ronald Reagan is a dangerous man."

Ms. Wilson attacked Reagan's programs since he took office in 1981.

"Aboard this administration's economic Titanic, there seems to be a new notion of women and children first," she said, pointing to Reagan cuts in programs for children and poor women.

"And it doesn't stop there. Ronald Reagan stripped my party's platform of the Equal Rights Amendment where it had been for 40 years, and despite all this talk about government intervention, he's given his wholehearted support to right-wing efforts to nationalize our bodies," she said, referring to Reagan's opposition to abortion.

Ms. Bailey, who was appointed to the FTC by Democrat Jimmy Carter and whose term has four more years to run, said women should thank Reagan for "creating a climate that exposes the shallowness of our nation's commitment to equality."

Gardens renamed

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — San Antonio is restoring the original name of its botanical gardens — the Japanese Sunken Gardens — in honor of a Japanese family that was driven out of the city after the attack on Pearl Harbor.

Kimi and Miyoshi Jingus had cared for the gardens for more than 25 years when officials ordered them to leave the city on Dec. 8, 1941, one day after the bombing of Pearl Harbor, said City Councilman Van Archer, who headed the drive to restore the name.

"They refused and two hours later, the city shut off their electricity and water," Archer said. The same day, the gardens were hastily renamed the Chinese Sunken Gardens, which they have been called ever since, he said.

One of the Jinguses' sons, James, was awarded a Purple Heart for valor while serving in the Japanese-American 442nd Regimental Combat Team during World War II.

Renaming the gardens will "serve as at least a small and symbolic reparation for the wrongs suffered by an American minority group caught in the madness and hysteria of war," Archer said.

Michael Reel poses with his parents, Patricia and Ernest Reel after he was found Saturday morning. The 8-year-old youngster wandered around the mountains on the Tennessee-North Carolina border for a week after he disappeared from a campsite.

Boy found in good condition

"I JUST happened to be at the right place at the right time," Doyle said. "He was just standing there. I said, 'Who are you?' and he said, 'Michael.' I said, 'Michael who?' and he said, 'Michael Reel.' "

Doyle said Michael appeared to be "clean and his hair pretty well groomed ... But his shirt was in rags and his pants looked like he had been wallowing in the the mud."

"I'm just in shock because they found him," Mrs. Reel said at the hospital. "He told me he was going to get some water and the next thing he knew he was lost."

"I figured he'd be hurt pretty bad before they found him. I knew they would find him but I thought he would be in shock or something," she said.

Rescue squad members said the boy talked of having spent time watching television with his grandfather, but they believed he had hallucinated. Doctors said he was alert and oriented by the time he reached the hospital, but because of the boy's confusion, authorities hadn't been able to learn how he spent the past eight days.

CRUMLEY AND Forest Service ranger Jerry Wilson said they had been skeptical about the boy's whereabouts and his comment about his grandfather.

But they said doctors convinced them there was nothing suspicious about Michael's disappearance and said tests showed he hadn't eaten for several days.

"The doctor assures us that it is possible for that 8-year-old boy to stay out in the woods and be in as good a shape as he's in," Crumley said.

As for Michael's remark about his grandfather, Crumley said, "He's trying to block all this out of his mind and relate to something familiar."

Mike Sellers, chief deputy in Carter County, said the boy told him he had "rolled up in a little tight ball and slept under the trees" and had eaten three apples and berries during the ordeal.

TOURISTS HAD reported seeing the boy last Sunday near Roan Mountain's flowering rhododendron, and said he appeared to be hiding.

But Mrs. Reel said Michael told her he didn't think he'd been around the rhododendrons.

Michael's father Ernest, of Marion, N.C., was in the mountains looking for his son when he was found and went to the hospital at mid-afternoon.

Michael, described by his father as a shy "city boy," disappeared from his family's campsite on July 2, and hundreds of searchers with bloodhounds and helicopters combed the 6,285-foot mountain in Cherokee National Forest.

Searchers included sheriff's deputies, state and federal forest rangers, Tennessee and North Carolina Civil Air Patrol members and Army paratroopers from Fort Bragg, N.C. About 30 soldiers from Fort Bragg were called in Thursday and used special "night vision" devices to hunt through the dense undergrowth.

Since the boy's disappearance, his parents, who are separated, had maintained vigils near the searchers' mountaintop command post.

Aide says he knew about book

He didn't urge that it be returned

WASHINGTON (AP) — Richard V. Allen, a high-level Reagan campaign aide in 1980, said Saturday he was aware that the campaign had Jimmy Carter's debate briefing book and thought it was ethically wrong, but could not recall urging that it be returned.

Allen, however, said he did not regret receiving separate documents during the 1980 campaign from an unidentified source on the National Security Council staff of the Carter White House. Allen later served as President Reagan's national security adviser until he was forced to resign in January 1982.

"Oh, no, not at all," Allen replied, when asked if those materials should have been returned. "What I received was unsolicited, unclassified, innocuous, useless and of no redeeming value at all."

He said he had no idea what happened to the security council documents, and had "no contact" with the person who supplied them, although he knew the source's name.

Allen, now a senior counselor to the Republican National Committee on foreign policy and national security, said he never actually saw the briefing book that was drafted to help President Carter prepare for his crucial, nationally televised debate with Reagan on Oct. 28, 1980, in Cleveland.

White House officials say they have no idea how the briefing material fell into the hands of some of Reagan's highest campaign aides, but the president has ordered the Justice Department to investigate.

Reagan administration sources, who spoke only on the condition that they not be identified, said Saturday that FBI agents had interviewed three of the president's top aides about the briefing book and possible political espionage by Reagan campaign workers. A fourth was to be interviewed soon, but the sources did not say who.

The four are budget director David Stockman, White House communications director David R. Gergen, White House chief of staff James A. Baker III and presidential counselor Edwin Meese.

Allen, interviewed by Cable News Network, said he was "vaguely aware" that the Reagan campaign had the papers, although "I didn't see them."

An Allen campaign associate, William R. Van Cleave, told The Associated Press he remembered seeing what was purported to be the Carter debate briefing book. Van Cleave said it was likely that Allen showed him the book because they shared an office and worked together closely.

Allen resigned under fire after discovery of $1,000 in his safe that came from Japanese journalists who interviewed Nancy Reagan the day after the president was inaugurated. He also had accepted three watches from Japanese friends, and errors were found in his government financial disclosure forms.

Although Reagan said that Justice Department and White House investigations had uncovered no evidence of any wrongdoing by Allen, the White House said both men agreed that Allen should leave the White House because of the political controversy surrounding the incidents.

Allen said in the TV interview that it was "rubbish" to think the senior Reagan campaign staff had an organized network to get information from the Carter White House.

But, he said, he could "easily imagine, however, that some self-starters at the bottom reaches of the campaign could have been involved in such an undertaking."

Allen was asked, in light of reports that Baker was involved in Allen's depature from the White House, if he would like to see Baker resign. Baker has said he received the briefing book from campaign manager William J. Casey.

"Revenge is an unworthy motive," Allen replied. "All things in their time will come to pass."

He said he would "like to think that no one would wind up losing his job for this," but that it "seems as though that is the minimum demand that's being put upon the administration by the press ..."

When he became aware that the Reagan camp had the Carter papers, Allen said, "I can remember my reaction to it...I think immediate revulsion would be a fair way to put it....It was really wrong, unethical."

Asked whether he offered that opinion to his campaign colleagues, Allen replied: "I don't recall if I did or not. In a campaign you're strapped for time ..."

Allen, who advised Reagan on foreign policy during the campaign, said that if he had seen the Carter papers, he "would have probably taken the action of sending them back or urging someone to send them back."

Allen said Reagan's code of ethics would have been violated if his campaign had used the materials "in any way, shape or form for that debate, in my subjective judgment."

Stockman, who took the role of Carter while helping prepare Reagan for the debate, has said he found the briefing book useful.

The Washington Post quoted unnamed administration sources Saturday as saying that some "innocuous" Carter documents, including a copy of a memo already released by the Reagan White House, had been found among Reagan campaign papers at the Hoover Institution at Stanford University.

Congressional sources had told The Associated Press last week that Hoover archivist Molly Tuthill thought she had found material that might be useful to the investigations, but wasn't certain.

Van Cleave, now a professor at the University of Southern California and a senior fellow at the Hoover Institution, had advised Reagan on defense issues during the 1980 campaign.

He said in a telephone interview from his home in Idylewild, Calif., that the briefing book he saw was "thoroughly useless."

"My problem was what my positions and policies were going to be. I knew their policies," he said.

Van Cleave said he had no idea where the book came from. "I don't recall anybody using the book," he said.

Customer ransoms purloined python

NEW YORK (AP) — A purloined python was back in its pet shop pen Saturday after a customer paid a $20 ransom to rescue the 15-foot snake from kidnappers.

The 100-pound reptile named Rubert was a bit edgy after the three-day ordeal, refusing even its favorite dinner of jumbo rat, said Raymond Ablan, manager of Bronx Reptiles, where thieves had plucked Rubert from a display window.

"We're trying to calm him down, mostly handling him once every couple of hours...trying to feed him and let him rest," Ablan said.

For Rubert, a 2-year-old Burmese python valued at $550, the trouble began Wednesday night when someone smashed the front window of the store in the Riverdale section of the Bronx and took the snake away in a duffel bag.

On Friday, the snake-napping made local news reports. A few hours later, an unidentified Bronx Reptiles customer who had read about the case saw some teen-agers in a park poking and beating Rubert in his duffel bag.

"He went over and said, 'How much do you want for it?' and they sold it for $20," Ablan said. "He brought it back in the duffel bag. We reimbursed him for it," the store owner said.

Rubert was unharmed.

The thieves haven't been arrested, but police detective Robert Benedict says he has some good leads. He thinks it was a prank that got out of hand when the thieves didn't know what to do with a cranky Rubert.

"What I'd like to do is put them in the same cage with the snake," Benedict said. "I'm sure they'd confess."

New charges handed down against Skelton

ODESSA (AP) — A businessman sentenced to death for the bombing death of a former employee faces new indictments alleging that he tried to buy the murders of two other ex-business associates.

A state district court jury deliberated for about an hour Friday before ordering the death penalty for John C. Skelton, 54, in the death of Joe Lee Neal. The new indictments were handed down by an Ector County grand jury a few hours later.

Neal, 46, was killed in April 1982 when he turned on the ignition of his pick-up truck, setting off a bomb that had been rigged to the vehicle.

The latest indictments charge that Skelton tried in November 1981 to hire two men to kill former business associates Bob Fowler and Glen Danielson. Fowler and Danielson testified for the prosecution during Skelton's capital murder trial.

Conviction on the capital murder solicitation charges carries a maximum penalty of life imprisonment.

In testimony during the sentencing phase of the trial Thursday, Fowler said he and Neal worked as salesmen for Skelton's firm until 1981.

Fowler described Skelton as a man who became obsessed with his business competitors and that he made threats against Fowler and Neal after they resigned and went to work for a rival firm, and against Danielson for selling equipment to them instead of to him exclusively.

Fowler said he and Neal went to the Ector County sheriff's office three months before Neal was killed to complain about threats Skelton had made against them.

Since Neal's death, Fowler said, "I'll never start a vehicle without wondering whether it'll blow up under me."

"He just didn't make idle threats," Ector County District Attorney Mike Holmes told the jury Friday. "He acted on those threats and he's made other threats."

The jury deliberated less than three hours Wednesday before convicting Skelton of the capital murder charge.

Mesquite shrubs rob West Texas land of water

That has changed.

Though mesquite does sap the rain water, it's no real competition with grass.

"There's very few things that can compete with grass until it's misused and abused," Hagelstein said, "and Mother Nature, I'll guarantee you, is going to put something down."

In at least one case where the mesquite was uprooted and controlled, springs began flowing again, Hagelstein said.

"Years ago, there were springs up and down the creek," he said of the Rocky Creek watershed near San Angelo, "and it just went dry over a period of years."

Then mesquite in the watershed was root plowed and sprayed, reducing its numbers.

"In 1975, the creek started flowing again. It's still flowing as dry as it is."

Despite efforts to control it, the mesquite will survive, Hagelstein speculated.

"Ever seen a mesquite die from drought conditions?" he asked. "You never will."

Hagelstein doesn't know the origin of the mesquite, which can be just a knee-high scrawny shrub or, if there's plenty of water, can grow to three feet in diameter and tower like a nice shade tree.

"Wherever it came from, I wish it'd go back."

Little People of America in Boston

BOSTON (AP) — Managers of the Marriott Long Wharf Hotel are making special preparations so this week's convention guests will feel at home, with mini-stairs and platforms for reaching keyholes and registration desks.

About 500 members of the Little People of America — dwarfs who average about 4 feet in height — are expected at the hotel for seminars on medical problems and family planning, a fashion show, an outing at Fenway Park and a pickup softball game in Boston Common.

At the hotel, five portable 32-inch flights of stairs and mounted platforms on 25 boxes borrowed from the catering department will make keyholes, doorknobs, toilets and wash basins more accessible. Extra chairs will be provided so convention members can stack two or three to sit comfortably in the dining rooms.

Actor Billy Barty, who founded the organization nearly 30 years ago, said 21 members attended the first convention in Reno, Nev., in 1957. "Now we have 2,500 members across the country and chapters have also been formed in the British Commonwealth, Germany, Japan, Israel, India and the Netherlands."

However, he said there are still thousands of potential members the organization has yet to reach.

Ruth Ricker, 24, a Northeastern University senior who is this year's convention chairwoman, said there are some "physical problems associated with being a little person because of our bone structure."

"But there are also many myths that have developed over the years — that we're mentally inferior, that we live in dollhouses, or that by nature we're mean," she said.

"Some people tend to shut themselves off from the world," said Albert Staples of Somerville, who with his wife, Celeste, is on the convention committee, "and those are the people we hope hear about us and join our group."

"Little people have their own medical and social issues to deal with," said Dr. Charles I. Scott, chairman of a medical advisory board that works with the organization. "But in the final analysis, they're people. Their self-determination — and their national organization — has helped them realize that."

The Matterhorn: A hill of dreams

PRAIRIE DELL, Texas (AP) — Phillip Fry's dream of a big amusement park and the world's largest roller coaster begins where Frank Weise's dream was foreclosed — at a 70-foot stucco mountain of a curiosity along Interstate 35.

Right now, "The Matterhorn" is a man-made hill between ideas. Weise went broke trying to make it a 31,000-square-foot restaurant. Fry bought it from the bank and is at work on Prairie Dell Lake Amusement Park.

"I'm excited for him," said Weise, who has never met Fry. "I'm just in hopes he can complete the dream that he has. It so parallels mine."

Weise, 46, opened The Matterhorn in 1979. He later added buildings and attractions at the site, about 18 miles south of Temple, and wound up with something billed as "A Family Adventure."

The Central Texas mountain was inspired by Weise's 1978 look at the real Matterhorn, a 14,700-foot mountain on the Swiss-Italian border.

AN APPRAISER ONCE SET THE Bell County property's value at $3.6 million. The business went downhill, however, when a spring tornado churned through in 1980, peeling the stucco skin off part of the mountain.

Repairs were never completed and Weise's cavernous restaurant was foreclosed by the bank.

"The tornado hurt the business. It certainly had a great impact on it," he said. "But the reason it didn't work out for me is because the Lord had different plans for me and my life.

"If the Lord wanted a hot dog stand to work out there, it would've worked," said Weise, whose religious fervor was ignited by the failure. "If the Lord had let that be a success, which He could have, I probably would have lost my life, my soul."

It was not Weise's first frustration in the restaurant business. For about 10 years he ran El Chacho, a Mexican restaurant near downtown Temple. Several people who saw it remembered it as "very unusual." But city officials closed it in August 1978 citing violations of building codes.

After that, he operated The Matterhorn until it failed in 1980.

Fry, 39, came from Ohio, where he supervised mobile home park development and dealt in amusement rides.

From I-35, where an average of 14,200 vehicles pass a day, The Matterhorn is a peculiar break in the monotonous landscape. Fry was among the 55 mph passers-by who gave it a curious glance.

"Driving on the freeway I was never impressed from seeing the place on the outside. It doesn't have curb appeal from the street. I didn't know what was here," he said.

Fry and his backers were looking to buy a San Marcos-area tract on which to build the amusement park he says the "I-35 corridor" lacks. He came to The Matterhorn to look at the two trains that were for sale. He liked the trains, and everything else he saw.

The deal was closed in June — lock, stock, mountain, trains, lake, 75 acres, 36 buildings and all. Prairie Dell Lake Amusement Park was born in Fry's mind.

Where Weise failed with a mountain restaurant, Fry says he can't miss with an amusement park.

"Everyone understands it's good to have the only business of its kind in a population center," said Fry, branding the region as one of only three population centers in the nation without an amusement park (the others are Phoenix and Seattle).

Here's the Fry formula for the park's success:

There are close to 2 million people in the I-35 corridor, stretching from Waco south to San Antonio. He says it will take 2,000 to 5,000 people a day — at $5 each — to make money.

HIS GROUP OWNS 25 "FIRST CLASS rides," now stored in Austin. Other rides at the park will be run as concessions. The park's highlights will be the mountain and a 3.3-acre lake that will serve as the centerpiece.

Fry's "Projection Number One," included on a promotional sheet, shows the park drawing 1,436,000 people a year.

Prarie Dell Lake Amusement Park, now a weed-cluttered shadow of Weise's dream, will open "when it's ready," according to Fry. That could be as early as next month.

"It has to look nice. You go to an amusement park to escape reality. If you come here and there's weeds everywhere, that's not escaping reality," he said.

The optimistic plans include raising the $7 million Fry needs to build the world's largest roller coaster. Such an attraction would guarantee the park's success, and produce $54,000 in daily revenue at a ride price of $1.50, he said.

Tax fraud trial filled with intriguing testimony

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The tax fraud trial of Eugene and Betty Jo Tafoya has out-Bonded James with talk of mercury-filled bullets, money-belt bras and a supporting cast that includes Libyan dictator Col. Moammar Khadafy, guerrillas in Chad and soldiers of fortune.

The list of locales casually dropped during testimony reads like an exotic travelogue: Tripoli, Kuwait, Zurich, Sudan, London, Chad, Geneva, Malta — and Buffalo, N.Y.

The man most often mentioned, former CIA agent Edwin Wilson, already is serving a 17-year prison term for smuggling 21 tons of explosives to Libya.

The Tafoyas are accused of vastly underreporting their gross income on their tax returns for 1980 and 1981. They reported a total income of about $14,000 for the two years.

Tafoya also faces Canadian charges filed in 1979 in Kitchener, Ontario, in the firebombing of the car of a former Wilson associate.

The government says Tafoya made tens of thousand of dollars, much of it handed over in wads of $100 bills, working for Wilson.

Tafoya, a former Green Beret, was convicted of misdemeanor assault in the 1980 shooting in Fort Collins, Colo. The student, Faisal Zagalli, was shot twice in the head but survived.

Judge has no legal authority

HOUSTON (AP) — A Harris County judge hearing arguments on a motion to remove Probate Judge Pat Gregory from the case involving the billion-dollar estate of the late oil baron Hugh Roy Cullen says he has no legal authority to resolve the dispute.

Gregory is presiding over a case in which brothers Enrico and Ugo di Portanova, grandsons of Cullen, are seeking a larger share of the Cullen estate. The brothers each receive about $14 million a year from trusts set up for them by their grandfather.

Gregory, however, has been accused by New York attorney Roy Cohn, who is representing the brothers, of arranging a partial out-of-court settlement in the lawsuit. Attorneys for the Cullen family point out that any agreement would have to be signed by all lawyers in the complex case, and that no settlement has been signed.

Gregory has declined to comment on the charges against him but asked Probate Judge Jim Scanlan to consider the motion seeking Gregory's removal.

On Friday, Scalan left the matter in limbo, saying he had legal standing to intervene because state civil laws on seeking removal of a judge do not cover probate judges.

"It's a gray area, it's uncharted," Scalan said. "The attorneys have a lot of thinking to do now."

Scalan's decision was appealed Friday to the Texas Supreme Court, which refused to intervene.

Attorneys in the case were uncertain where the controversy over Gregory and the Cullen estate stands. Gregory declined to comment.

The di Portanova brothers and InterFirst Bank Houston, guardian of Ugo's estate, are suing to determine whether they were denied stock in Quintana Petroleum Corp., the Cullen family corporation. The suits contend other Cullen heirs eliminated their mother, the late Lillie Cullen di Portanova, from her share of stock. After her death in 1966, the stock would have passed to her two sons.

Inmates violently protest move

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — El Paso County Jail inmates who set fires and attacked guards wanted to "give us a farewell parting shot" before being transferred to a new facility, Sheriff Mike Davis says.

The prisoners barricaded themselves inside their cells, set fires to mattresses and battled with jailers during a three-hour disturbance Friday night, officials said.

At least five guards and 11 inmates were injured when trouble broke out as the prisoners were being moved to a new jail across the street, authorities said.

Infant losing against disease

HOUSTON (AP) — Doctors battled to stop the bleeding they say could kill an 8-month-old Beaumont girl suffering a liver disease that can only be cured by a transplant, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Courtney Davis was in critical condition Saturday in Texas Children's Hospital's pedicatric intensive care unit, said hospital spokeswoman Hazel Haby. The infant's health deteriorated slightly overnight, Ms. Haby said.

The girl's father, Butch Davis, told the Beaumont Enterprise that she was suffering from new bleeding which endangered her life and her candidacy for a transplant, if a donor can be found.

Families file claims against EPA

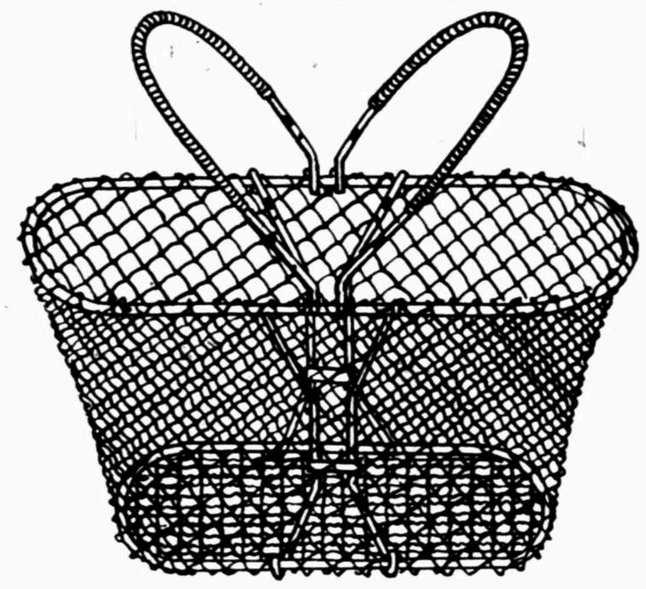

DALLAS (AP) — Nearly four dozen families who say they have suffered health problems from exposure to lead have filed claims seeking more than $50 million from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

The 42 families, who live near the RSR Corp. and Dixie Metals Co. lead smelters here, allege in their claims that exposure to lead from the plants has caused them "various neurological, psychological and physiological illnesses."

"EPA knew of the hazard and was in a position to correct same, yet failed to protect the health and safety of claimants," the claims allege.

The largest of the EPA claims, which were filed Wednesday, was made by Particia and Johnnie Coleman and their four children for $3 million.

Recovery gathers too much steam

By KINGSBURY SMITH
National Editor, Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's economic recovery program is moving so fast toward a business boom that speculation is rife in Washington steps will soon be taken to slow down the momentum in order to avoid a bust in 1985 or 1986.

The Washington Post reported Thursday that Federal Reserve officials, fearing recovery could speed out of control and cause inflation to flare up again, would tighten credit conditions next week and let interest rates rise.

Federal Reserve spokesman Frank O'Brien told the Hearst Newspapers that "The Washington Post does not know what the FOMC (the Federal Reserve's Open Market policy-making committee) will do at its meetings next Tuesday and Wednesday, I do not know, and neither do any members of the committee at this point."

However, it is no secret that Federal Reserve officials and the president's economic advisers are concerned about the unexpectedly brisk pace of the recovery movement and the rapid expansion of the money supply that has accompanied it. What the president and the Federal Reserve officials want is a moderate but steady improvement in economic growth that will bring about sound recovery. What they don't want is a premature business boom that could abort the recovery and plunge the country back into a grave recession, or depression, in 1985 and beyond.

Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan and Martin S. Feldstein, chairman of the president's Council of Economic Advisers, are among those who have been advocating Federal Reserve action to slow down the pace of the recovery.

Feldstein told reporters recently he felt interest rates would have to go up to curb the growth rate of M1, the money supply measure which includes currency in circulation, checking deposits at financial institutions and travelers' checks. M1 rose in May at an unprecedented 26.3 percent annual rate.

Short-term bank rates have already risen more than a full percentage point since mid-May. Long-term rates, including those for home mortgages, also are rising.

According to the Washington Post, the Federal Reserve is likely to increase by at least one-half percentage point the 8½ percent discount rate the central banks presently charge commercial banks for money it lends them.

Some financial analysts foresee the prime bank rate moving from 10½ percent to 11 percent within the next few months. The Wall Street Journal reported this week that home mortgage rates may climb back to 14 percent or above by summer's end.

The drop in mortgage rates earlier this year to below 13 percent from 17¾ percent in August last year led to an increase in home buying that was a major factor in accelerating the pace of the president's recovery program. During the first five months of 1983, builders were starting new homes at the average annual rate of 1.6 million units, the highest level since 1979.

A surge in consumer spending, a big increase in auto sales and a decline in the unemployment rate were other developments which caused the recovery to move ahead more rapidly than even the president or his advisers anticipated.

Late June sales by the big three U.S. automakers of domestic cars were 55.2 percent ahead of last year.

Unemployment was down from 10.8 percent early this year to 10.1 percent in May, with predictions by such economists as Alan Greenspan, former CEA chairman, that the rate would be down to 9 percent early next year. Other analysts forecast an 8½ percent jobless rate by the end of 1984.

These were the kind of encouraging signs that led President Reagan to say June 28th that the economy was "beginning to sparkle," and prompted Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige to declare "recovery is moving ahead at full steam."

In fact, it was getting under full steam much sooner than had been expected. In January, the president was forecasting an economic growth rate this year of 3.1 percent. In June the nation's economy (goods and services produced, or gross national product, GNP) grew at a 6.6 percent annual rate, and the administration revised the projection for the year to 5½ percent.

Good weather helps firefighters tame blazes

By The Associated Press

Firefighters in Utah contained two new lightning-sparked brush fires Saturday after taming a 250,000-acre blaze, while good weather in Montana helped crews get the upper hand over a rash of fires that consumed several homes.

Over the past week, more than 350,000 acres in Utah, Montana, Idaho, Arizona, Oregon and California were charred by dozens of fires touched off by lightning and spread by dry winds.

In Utah, crews Saturday contained a 2,300-acre fire in the south Hansel Valley and another 2,000- to 3,000-acre blaze north of the Great Salt Lake, fire information officer Frances Johnston said.

No injuries or damage to buildings were reported from the fires, which were both caused by lightning, she said.

More than 170 Bureau of Land Management firefighters and 14 pumper trucks succeeded Friday night in containing the 250,000-acre Springfield-Wesson fire, which had burned for two days, said Barry Wirth, spokesman for the Utah Interagency Fire Center.

A dozen brush fires burned a wide swath from the eastern Cedar Mountains to Dugway Proving Ground in the sparsely populated western desert. Wirth said the BLM planned to begin releasing firefighters Saturday and were optimistic that the fire would be controlled by evening.

Tiny baby beats odds, goes home to parents

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — A girl who was one of the world's smallest surviving babies, weighing little more than a pound at birth, has been allowed to go home after four months in a hospital.

Doctors said Carmen Hoxie had less than a 20 percent chance of survival when she was born about three months prematurely March 8 at St. Marys Hospital Medical Center.

But on Friday her parents, Diane and Thomas Hoxie of Morrisonville, were allowed to take their 4-pound, 7-ounce child home and doctors said she can now be cared for like any full-term baby.

Dr. Willard Blankenship, the hospital's director of perinatal medicine, said Carmen will probably lead a completely normal life.

During a combination news conference and "going-home" party for the baby, Mrs. Hoxie said her emotions have ranged from very "scared" at Carmen's birth to just "a little nervous" Friday.

She said she took a short course in cardiopulmonary resuscitation "in case something" should happen. But she said doctors told her Carmen is now normal and healthy and does not require any extraordinary care or life-saving equipment.

"She has a temper," Mrs. Hoxie said. "She's real demanding. The nurses have spoiled her and we'll take over where they've left off."

Reagan attacks media

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, responding to charges that his budget cuts hurt the poor and needy more than they do wealthy people, said Saturday his administration "is committed to fairness" and criticized "the drumbeat of gloom and doom from misery merchants in some of the media."

The president also announced in his weekly radio address that his administration this week will seek to strengthen fair housing laws to toughen bans against discrimination in housing.

In the Democratic response, Rep. Bob Mrazek, D-N.Y., said the biggest problem the country faces is record deficits of $200 billion or more.

"No amount of political rhetoric or partisan name calling can change that," Mrazek said.

Reagan, speaking from the presidential retreat at Camp David in the Maryland mountains, said that "contrary to propaganda blasts you hear, America is heading in a better direction today than before."

The president cited a litany of improving economic indicators which he said are "ignored by the big spenders who claim to carry the banner of fairness and compassion."

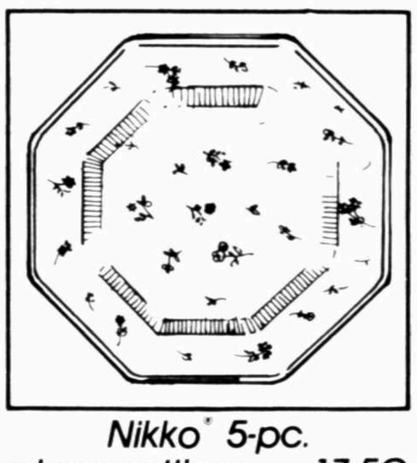

Although he did not name his critics, a number of recent polls have shown that there is a perception in the country that Reagan's economic policies are designed to aid the rich more than the poor — a so-called "fairness issue" that worries administration political officials.

Reagan said his budget cuts have "been nowhere near as Draconian as critics charge."

"We're committed to fairness and we'll continue to take actions to bring it about throughout our society," he added.

He said Congress will be asked to put "real teeth" in fair housing laws, such as civil penalities against landlords and enabling the Housing and Urban Development Department to seek Justice Department suits in cases of alleged discrimination.

U.S.M.C. Col. Tim Geraghty gives a farewell embrace to General Bill E. Goat in Beirut, Lebanon, before the goat's fateful trip to the U.S.

Girl wants another goat

SAN DIMAS, Calif. (AP) — An 11-year-old girl who'd planned to take care of the Marines' goat mascot — until it was killed by airport inspectors upon arrival from Lebanon — says she's asking President Reagan to help find a replacement.

The goat, named Gen. William E. "Billy" Goat, was a mascot of U.S. Marines in Lebanon, and was being sent to California by the Army-Navy '83 Foundation.

Roslyn Caldwell of San Dimas, 25 miles northeast of Los Angeles, was to keep the goat, which would be used at the Army-Navy football game in Pasedena in November.

But the goat was put to death Wednesday by U.S. Department of Agriculture veterinary inspectors in New York because it came from a country where hoof-and-mouth disease is believed to exist.

"I'm going to tell him (Reagan) about the goat. They said I'd get it, but I didn't get it," Miss Caldwell said Friday. "I want to see if there's anything he can do."

She also is considering a Pasadena firefighter's offer to give her a 4-month-old pygmy goat, but says she'd prefer a goat from Lebanon.

"We have friends from Lebanon and it would be a great honor to get a goat from their country," she said. "I just want any goat from Lebanon that I can take to the Army-Navy game."

NOW protest draws 300 to White House

WASHINGTON (AP) — About 300 people unhappy with President Reagan's policies toward women demonstrated outside the White House Saturday in a rally sponsored by the National Organization for Women.

"This is only part of our total program to oppose Ronald Reagan," NOW president Judy Goldsmith told a brief news conference while the demonstrators chanted "ERA Now" as they walked along Pennsylvania Avenue.

Reagan was spending the weekend at Camp David, the presidential retreat in the Maryland mountains.

The rally was part of a 10-mile "walkathon" here that NOW officials hope will raise about $50,000 to support the group's efforts to win approval for the proposed Equal Rights Amendment.

Similar "walkathons" were being held in 40 other cities across the country and would raise about $200,000, the NOW officials said.

"I think there are people in the White House who are worried about the 'gender gap,' but I'm not sure that the president takes it all that seriously," said Ms. Goldsmith.

North Carolina Senate race will be major contest of 1984

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Neither man has declared, and the election is 16 months away, but the expected bid by North Carolina Gov. James B. Hunt Jr. to unseat Republican Sen. Jesse Helms is already shaping up as one of the major confrontations of 1984.

The contest is turning North Carolina into a battleground for competing national interests. The Republican right wing is intent on keeping the Senate warrior, while Democrats hope to topple Helms, taking with him his multimillion-dollar political empire and perhaps control of the U.S. Senate.

In recent weeks Hunt, a moderate Democrat in his second term, has been to Washington, New York and Atlanta in search of money.

Last Tuesday Helms, also in his second term, flew across North Carolina with Moral Majority leader Jerry Falwell to kick off a campaign Falwell said was aimed at getting "millions of conservative Americans registered to vote."

"If he were not to be re-elected next year," Falwell said of Helms, "the whole nation will be set back in my opinion five to 10 years in the battle to return this country to moral sanity."

A poll by the Charlotte Observer released over the July 4 weekend showed Hunt leading Helms 50 percent to 31 percent. Helms' chief political strategist, Raleigh lawyer Tom Ellis, acknowledges Hunt is ahead, but he says the margin is about 7 points.

In a stream of advertising since April, Helms has attacked Hunt's record and associated him with "out of state radical leaders." Among those pictured in the ads are Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., black leaders Jesse Jackson, Julian Bond and Harold Washington, and union leaders.

One ad pictures Hunt with Jackson in a 1982 meeting and a more recent comment by Jackson that he hopes to register 200,000 black voters in North Carolina. "Ask Yourself: Is This a Proper Use of Taxpayer Funds?" Helms' ad says.

Another ad shows striking teachers, mostly black, and cites Hunt's support for a bill allowing payroll deductions of dues to a teachers association.

The Winston-Salem Journal, in an editorial, called the ads "evocative of the worst kind of politicking seen in this state in the past 30 years."

"...the quotes were deliberately jumbled to imply, with all the subtlety of a burning cross, that 'taxpayer funds' are being used to buy black votes for Hunt..." the newspaper said.

"They are mudslinging in its worst sense," Hunt said of the ads in a recent interview. "I think they appeal to the worst. They do appeal to fear."

"Who's the racist?" responds David Flaherty, chairman of the state Republican Party. "That guy out trying to register black votes so they can elect him to the Senate, or the guy who's just saying what's going on?"

Republicans have objected to Democratic campaigning, too. When Helms and his colleague, Sen. John East, cast surprising votes in favor of a bill raising the tax on cigarettes last year, the Hunt-controlled Democratic Party took out full-page ads dubbing them "Tobacco Tax Twins," a stinging label where tobacco is a billion-dollar crop and a sacred cow.

Bloomingdale's mistress 'manipulated people'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Vicki Morgan, who made headlines as Alfred Bloomingdale's mistress and again with her violent death, casually used people to gain the riches she craved, says the man accused of killing her.

"She loved to manipulate people," said Marvin Pancoast, 33, who police said confessed to bludgeoning Miss Morgan, 30, in her rented $1,000-a-month condominium.

"She was very good at it — from her lovely mother to poor Alfred to me," he said in an interview late Friday with The Associated Press in the hospital ward of the Los Angeles County Jail.

"Vicki couldn't control her own life," he said. But "she could control everyone around her."

"I never said it to Vicki, but I began calling myself her little slave boy...I was mesmerized by Vicki," he said.

Pancoast was booked for investigation of murder Thursday after he led police to the former model's bloody, nightgown-clad body in the Studio City condominium from which she planned to move that morning. He is scheduled to be arraigned Monday, said Al Albergate of the district attorney's office.

Miss Morgan died a year after she filed a more than $10 million lawsuit against Bloomingdale, in which she said she was mistress, sex therapist and confidante to him during their 12-year relationship. He died of cancer at age 66 last August.

The major part of her suit was thrown out by a judge, including a $5 million claim for breach of oral contract for lifetime support and a $5 million claim against Bloomingdale's wife Betsy.

Still pending was a breach of contract claim for $10,000 a month for 24 months and part of a business owned by the department store heir.

Pancoast said he had spent time with Bloomingdale, a confidante of President Reagan, and Miss Morgan. Bloomingdale was far from close-mouthed, he said, and talked politics with Miss Morgan.

Miss Morgan's former attorney, Marvin Mitchelson, said after her death that "she's taking a lot of secrets about the Reagan administration with her."

Pancoast, who said he and Miss Morgan met in 1979 when both were hospitalized for depression, said her ambitions were well-defined.

"Money. Money and material things," said the former copy machine operator at the William Morris Agency, whose clients include show business figures.

Even though her relationship with Bloomingdale brought her up to $18,000 a month, Miss Morgan's extravagant tastes meant that she died penniless, Pancoast said.

"She spent it all. She'd spend every dime of it. Every month she'd run over her budget Alfred gave her and she'd ask for more."

He said they planned to move into an apartment together and that he intended to support her until a book she was writing on Bloomingdale was published. He said they were friends but not lovers.

Pancoast said a baseball bat owned by Miss Morgan's son Todd, 14, was the weapon he used to batter her when she wouldn't stop desperate chatter about her uncertain future. The boy now is staying with his grandmother.

"I didn't want to kill her," he said. "I just wanted her to go to sleep. I just wanted her to be quiet for a while. I was tired."

"I feel real bad about Todd. I took his mother away," he said.

"I don't know what to do," said Pancoast. "I'm afraid I'm going to the gas chamber. I lay in that (infirmary) bed and think about it. I can hear the gas."

Laid-off workers may have to drop out of program

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Many laid-off workers in a computer retraining program praised by President Reagan will lose their unemployment benefits before graduation, forcing some to drop out, students say.

"I can't financially afford to continue school, so I'm going to have to quit and try to get a job," Glenn Holmes, 28, an unemployed steelworker from suburban Mount Oliver, said Friday.

The students at Control Data Institute took a survey and found that 52 of about 135 students will be without unemployment benefits before graduation in November. Benefits for at least five, including Holmes, expire Sunday.

Man accused of killing Jews faces deportation from U.S.

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — The U.S. Justice Department has begun deportation proceedings against a 75-year-old man accused of killing Jews and anti-Nazi activists in Lithuania in World War II.

Antanas Bernotas of Waterbury participated in the forced labor, beating and killing of Jews and Nazi resisters in the city of Siaulial from 1941 to 1944, during the Nazi occupation of Lithuania, according to papers filed Friday in Hartford's U.S. Immigration Court.

The Justice Department claims Bernotas, who lives with his sister in Waterbury, illegally gained entry to the United States in 1949 by falsely claiming he had been a teacher in Lithuania.

Man files class-action suit

FRESNO, Calif. (AP) — A class-action lawsuit has been filed on behalf of all mobile-home owners in California, claiming that use of formaldehyde in constructing the units endangered their health.

The action, which seeks $1.2 billion in damages, was filed in Fresno County Superior Court on Friday by Jimmy Emerzian of Selma, Calif., who bought a mobile home for his son three years ago.

The suit asks that more than 300 mobile-home manufacturers and 12 formaldehyde producers be forced to pay for testing, monitoring and installation of ventilation systems to remove fumes from 600,000 mobile homes in the state.

Gay International buys hotel

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — San Francisco-based Gay International, a firm made up almost entirely of homosexuals, has bought a 26-room hotel in Salt Lake City, calling it the forerunner of an international chain catering to gays.

The public corporation, which has published gay directories and is expanding into other businesses, paid $400,000 for the Wishing Well Hotel, attorney Robert L. Hunniecutt said Saturday.

The purchase is the start of a chain of bed-and-breakfast facilities, with two dozen acquisitions contemplated in the United States, London, Paris and Munich, he said.

Maine tribe seeks recognition

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) — The Micmac Indians, the only Maine tribe not included in an $81.5 million land claim settlement in 1980, are seeking the governor's support for federal recognition of the tribe.

The Micmacs say federal recognition — already extended to the Penobscot Nation, the Passamaquoddies and Maliseet Indians in the area — would entitle them to legal, health and education benefits.

Two teachers' unions lecture each other

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A beaming, triumphant Albert Shanker concluded the annual meeting of his teachers union, the American Federation of Teachers, with an understatement: "I think we sensed, felt, believed, that this was not just another convention."

"Some conventions mark great turning points," he continued, and the 2,340 delegates and much of the American public knew exactly what he meant.

The AFT, long a Democratic stronghold, had welcomed President Ronald Reagan as a speaker, whose educational policies are held in such low esteem by the union that Shanker gave the president a grade of "F-plus."

The AFT, whose 580,000 members and leaders have preached against merit pay for outstanding teachers as unfair and unworkable, passed a comprehensive education reform resolution with language that described the kind of master teacher or merit proposals the union could accept.

And Shanker, who 15 years ago practically invented teacher union militancy with prolonged strikes in New York City and elsewhere, gave a stern lecture to delegates that those days were over.

"If we have a big wave of strikes next year, that is going to move the public to say, 'to hell with those public schools, those teachers are always on strike,' " he said.

Of equal significance, Shanker escalated his long-standing war of words with the rival teacher union, the 1.7 million-member National Education Association, which also concluded its annual convention last week in Philadelphia.

The two unions — which traded barbs all week, pausing only briefly to pass a joint resolution opposed to tuition tax credits — seemed keenly aware that they were engaged in a public relations battle of immense significance, both for themselves and for the current public dialogue on education reform.

That dialogue, sparked several months ago by a landmark report by the National Commission on Excellence in Education appointed by Reagan to diagnose the nation's public school ills, turned the spotlight on these two teacher conventions as never before.

The stakes: which union would be most influential in setting the national agenda for educational reform, and which would then be in the more powerful position to gain local victories and new teachers in their ranks.

Shanker contended that his union is in far better shape to win the confrontation than the NEA. The AFT, he said, had emphasized quality in education for years, had not opposed teacher testing and was prepared to be open-minded on merit pay proposals. The NEA was on the other side of those issues.

He sponsored, and the delegates ratified, resolutions accusing the NEA of promoting propaganda in the classrooms by backing curriculum guides on nuclear war by the Union of Concerned Scientists, and a guide on racism and the Ku Klux Klan by the Council on Interracial Books for Children.

Panel recommends anti-tumor device

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A device that attacks cancer by heating — and shrinking — tumors with microwave radiation has won a federal panel's endorsement for more extensive use, adding to hopes that it may someday become a common treatment for the disease.

"It has the potential to be a major new modality in treating human tumors," Dr. John Thompson of LDS Hospital said Saturday of the hyperthermia machine. On Thursday a government advisory panel recommended approval of the device by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration.

Thompson and other hyperthermia-cancer researchers stress that although the therapy is still in its infancy, it has shown enough promise that — with more technical development — it could join surgery, radiation and chemotherapy as a treatment for tumors.

"Its place in the whole scheme of treating tumors is still up in the air," Thompson said. But researchers' high hopes have "a good chance of being borne out in time."

The $175,000 BSD 1000 Hyperthermia System, the first such device to be recommended by the FDA's Radiological Devices Panel, is marketed by BSD Medical Corp. of Salt Lake City. Since 1979 it has been used in tightly controlled clinical trials at 16 medical facilities in the United States and seven in Europe and Japan.

The device uses microwaves — like in microwave ovens — to raise the temperature of cancerous cells without damaging normal tissues.

The technique, which means "high temperature," has been tested in humans with incurable cancers, but only under rigid FDA guidelines and reporting requirements. FDA spokesman Chris Smith said "the feeling is that the FDA will approve it" for more widespread use in patients with advanced-stage tumors.

"It will just be much easier to use," said Lewis F. Stripling, president of BSD Medical Corp.

Researchers point out that hyperthermia does not cure cancers. But studies have shown that many surface growths or tumors within two inches of the skin surface have shrunk when treated with a combination of hyperthermia and radiation.

Stripling said hyperthermia raises the temperature of cells in a tumor core because cancerous cells have poor blood flow and are less able to shed heat.

He said that allows hyperthermia to raise the temperature of tumor cells to 109 to 111 degrees Fahrenheit — "a thermal damaging temperature for tissue" — while keeping surrounding healthy tissue at around 100 degrees.

"The heat makes the tumor more sensitive to radiation therapy, and tumor cells are more sensitive to heat than are normal cells," Stripling said. He said hyperthermia also is promising because it does not have the cumulative-dose and toxicity problems of radiation and chemotherapy.

A small percentage of patients have received superficial burns from hyperthermia treatments, usually given twice a week for five weeks.

States face second payless week

By The Associated Press

A second week without state welfare, unemployment, disability and salary checks began in California and Pennsylvania as stalemates over state budgets dried up payments and prompted lawsuits.

Payments for nearly half a million people in the two states have been withheld since the new fiscal year began July 1.

In Sacramento, Calif., Democratic legislators recessed for the weekend to study a new proposal by Republican Gov. George Deukmejian for an extra $100 million in school money. The plan would slightly reduce the $1.2 billion the governor wants to slice from an unbalanced $27.2 billion budget.

Democrats want to bridge the gap with tax increases and have refused to vote for the budget until Republicans approve a measure limiting Deukmejian's budget veto powers.

Reagan hails Sudanese rescue

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — President Reagan on Saturday hailed the skill of Sudanese commandos who rescued two American missionaries and three other Westerners from Sudanese guerrillas, the official SUNA news agency said.

In a message to President Jaafar Nimeiri, Reagan also expressed sorrow for the killing of one Sudanese soldier and the wounding of two others in the rescue Friday. Eighteen guerrillas were reported killed in the raid.

The U.S. and other governments whose nationals were among the hostages said they were not told of the commando raid plan in advance. Diplomatic sources also said the United States and the others had urged restraint.

SUNA said the rescued hostages were "in very good health" in Juba, a regional capital in southern Sudan.

They five were missionary John Haspels, 36, of Lyons, Kan.; missionary pilot Ron Pontier, 29, of Clermont, Fla.; missionary pilot Martin Overduin, 32, of London, Ontario; Willem Noort, a Dutch male nurse; and Alois Pscheidt, a West German mechanic.

An anti-terrorist squad of the Sudanese army freed the hostages, who were kidnapped June 24 and June 25. Their abductors, the Liberation Front of Southern Sudan, held them in Boma, a remote area in southeastern Sudan.

Western diplomatic sources in Kenya, Nairobi, said the rescuers used five helicopters to flush out the captors from a riverside guerrilla camp. High grass and swamps apparently made a ground assault impractical.

The Sudanese military command said "foreign forces were behind the outlaws' operation. Information received so far show contacts between the group and the Libyan government."

The communique said two of the rebels had been trained by Cuban troops in Libya. It also said that two people speaking Arabic with Libyan accents were heard during radio negotiations to free the hostages.

Sudan has repeatedly accused Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy of trying to overthrow the Nimeiri government.

The guerrillas, who say they are fighting to free black, Christian southern Sudan from the domination of Arab Moslems in the north, seized 11 people initially but six of them were released June 27.

Envoy Stone remains out of public view

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — U.S. special envoy Richard Stone was not seen in public Saturday, adding to speculation he planned to meet with leaders of leftist guerrillas fighting to topple the U.S.-backed government in El Salvador.

Stone arrived Friday in the Costa Rican capital from San Salvador after the Salvadoran government asked him to seek the participation of leftists in elections scheduled for December. He refused to tell reporters at the airpoirt if he planned to meet with the rebels.

In Washington, the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, Jeane Kirkpatrick, said Friday she thought Stone would meet with the leftists, but only to discuss their possible participation in the election.

Reports circulated here that Ruben Zamora, a leader of El Salvador's Democratic Revolutionary Front, or FDR, made up of illegal leftist parties, had arrived in Costa Rica to meet Stone.

"Everything indicated that the meeting between Stone and members of the FDR was going to take place last night. But the meeting was suspended," the San Jose newspaper La Nacion reported Saturday without giving the source of its information.

No spokesman was available at the U.S. Embassy to discuss Stone's plans, but a U.S. Embassy spokesman in San Salvador said Stone would spend Saturday here and return to El Salvador on Sunday.

After meeting with Costa Rican Foreign Minister Fernando Volio on Friday, Stone told reporters he could not comment on possible discussions with the leftists and refused to give his agenda.

In a communique distributed Thursday in San Jose, the leftists said they were "interested and willing to initiate a process of dialogue" on "substantive matters."

While in San Salvador, Stone met with President Alvaro Magana and Defense Minister Eugenio Vides Cassanova. Salvadoran officials indicated they hoped Stone would make some contact with the rebels.

"Above all, we would like to talk to them about participation in elections because that is the ideal way to have peace," said Francisco Jose Guerrero, a top Magana aide.

When Stone was in Mexico City at the end of his "get-acquainted" tour of Central America last month, he received a letter from the coalition of Salvadoran leftist factions inviting him to talk with their leaders.

American girl visits Communist youth camp

YALTA, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Samantha Smith, the 11-year-old girl from Maine who feared the Soviet Union might start a nuclear war, arrived at the Black Sea Saturday for four days of living like a Young Pioneer at a communist youth camp.

She was welcomed to the Artek Pioneer Camp by an estimated 1,000 Soviet youngsters sitting in a light rain on bleachers in an amphitheater by the sea. One group of children held a sign reading in English, "We welcome you to Artek."

Samantha was escorted around the camp by a group of girls and one addressed the crowd while greeting the American guest.

"On behalf of all pioneers at our camp, I would like to welcome you to our tiny grounds. We were looking forward to meeting you and we hope you'll enjoy your visit to our camp," she said, handing Samantha the traditional Russian welcoming symbols of salt and bread.

Samantha will stay in a brick building housing 20 other children. Her parents, Arthur and Jane Smith, accompanied her to Artek and are guests at a small hotel on the camp grounds.

They flew from Mosocw on an Aeroflot jetliner to the Crimean city of Simferopol. From there they were driven 60 miles over a mountain highway to the coastal resort of Yalta, where Josef Stalin, President Franklin D. Roosevelt and Prime Minister Winston Churchill held their historic conference during World War II.

Artek, a camp reserved primarily for children of Communist Party members and other privileged families, is set in tree groves on the outskirts of Yalta.

Samantha's trip to the Soviet Union was arranged after she wrote a letter to President Yuri V. Andropov expressing concern that the Soviets wanted to conquer the world. In his letter of reply, Andropov said the Soviet people wanted only peace and he invited her to visit and see for herself.

Samantha has said she hopes to meet Andropov, but there has been no word if that will be arranged during the family's two-week visit paid for by a Soviet organization.

The Smiths arrived in Moscow Friday and spent the night at the Sovietskaya Hotel, which is reserved for honored foreign guests.

Samantha began her first full day in Moscow Saturday with a VIP tour of Red Square and the Kremlin. At precisely 9 a.m. a chauffeur-driven black Chaika limousine arrived with the Smiths at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

Samantha's father, an English instructor at the University of Maine, placed a wreath of red gladiolas near the eternal flame.

The official Soviet news agency Tass reported that the "American schoolgirl ... was pale with emotion as, together with her parents, she was laying flowers to an eternal flame."

Surrounded by Western journalists and television crews, the Smiths and their guides and security escorts then walked 300 yards across the cobble stones to the granite mausoleum of Vladimir I. Lenin. Her father was handed another wreath of gladiolas which he placed at the tomb's entrance.

Charges called absurd

MOSCOW (AP) — The Kremlin on Saturday denied Mehmet Ali Agca's claims that KGB agents trained him to attack the pope, calling the charges "threadbare propaganda" and "nothing more than absurd insinuations."

Bulgaria also denied Agca's accusations that its agents were involved.

The Soviet news agency Tass said Italian investigation of previous allegations of Bulgarian involvement "has shown that there are absolutely no facts to bear out, directly or indirectly, the socialist countries' complicity in the heinous crime."

Tass accused Western news agencies of playing into the hands of "ideological saboteurs" who "need this (reports of Agca's charges) to prevent world public attention from focusing on the true organizers and inspirers of acts of terrorism, who are closely linked with neo-fascist circles and the American CIA which, as has been proved conclusively, has sponsored the fabrication about socialist countries' complicity in the assassination attempt on Pope John Paul II."

Agca made the claim in Rome Friday

The Soviet Union came under suspicion last November with the arrest of Sergei Antonov, the Rome chief of the Bulgarian state airline. Antonov was taken into custody apparently on information given authorities by Agca.

Political front urges end to martial law

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Poland's only government-backed political front called Saturday for the communist authorities to completely lift martial law and grant amnesty to political prisoners.

Although not binding, the request by the Patriotic Movement for National Rebirth prepares the way for the Polish Sejm, or Parliament, to end military rule.

The front urged the government to "lift martial law and pass regulations to make it possible for those convicted of violating ... martial law and people in hiding to return to work and civic life."

It did not suggest a date for lifting martial law, which was declared Dec. 13, 1981, and "suspended" seven months ago. Military rule was decreed to crush the independent Solidarity labor union, which was outlawed by Parliament last October.

The front is backed by both the government and Communist Party. Members include party and government officials and others loyal to the state.

Its statement gave support to reports that martial law might be lifted soon following last month's tumultuous visit by Polish-born Pope John Paul II, who met twice with the Polish leader, Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski.

Government officials have said privately that Jaruzelski may address Parliament on July 20 or July 21 and ask for a lifting of martial law, but no firm date has been set.

The formal decision to lift martial law would have to come from the powerful Communist Party Politburo, which is still divided, according to sources close to the party leadership.

The front issued a similar call last November, but Parliament merely "suspended" martial law the following month. New laws were enacted to cement many elements of martial law.

Western diplomats view a full lifting of martial law as largely cosmetic, since Parliament already has passed tough legislation banning demonstrations and unauthorized strikes and eliminating opposition groups such as the old unions of actors, artists and students.

In a session scheduled for Thursday, Parliament is expected to pass a press law that official sources say is one of the last remaining obstacles to lifting martial law.

The new press law would put on the books censorship restrictions in force since December 1981.

Several speakers at a meeting of the front Saturday, including Deputy Premier Zenon Komender, said the papal visit had "beneficial consequences for church-state cooperation," the official PAP news agency reported.

It said the leaders saw a "revival of the economic situation and the growing stabilization of ... society."

John Paul asks U.S. Catholics to attend Mass

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II called Saturday on U.S. Roman Catholic bishops to encourage Americans to go church on Sundays and receive communion more frequently.

"May the people of God in America be led to an even greater conviction of the sacredness of the Lord's Day," the pope told a group of visiting U.S. prelates.

John Paul urged the bishops to encourage Roman Catholics to worship on Sundays and the holy days "despite changes in society and life and different types of pressures."

"For all members of the church, the Eucharist, and especially the Sunday Eucharist, is the source and the summit of all Christian living," the pope said.

The pope, who recently expressed "grave concern" over dwindling ranks of American Roman Catholic nuns and priests, called on the bishops to strengthen religious orders in the United States.

"I ask Him (Jesus Christ), by power of his resurrection, to sustain you all in the hope of your calling to strengthen your priests, religious and laity," he said.

The pope addressed his remarks to Monsignor Arthur J. O'Neil, bishop of Rockford, Ill.; Monsignor Michael F. McAuliffe, bishop of Jefferson City, Mo.; Monsignor Edward O' Rourke, bishop of Peoria, Ill.; Monsignor Raymond W. Lessard, bishop of Savannah, Ga.; Monsignor John N.Wurm, bishop of Belleville, Ill.; Monsignor Theodore E. McCarrick, bishop of Metuchen, N.J., and Monsignor Roland P. Du Maine, bishop of San Jose, Calif.

Rebels attack house

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Leftist rebels burned down a customs house on the Honduran border and in a separate attack killed eight rightist "death squad" members, the guerrillas' clandestine Radio Venceremos reported Saturday.

Venceremos said insurgents attacked the Salvadoran customs station at El Poy in Chalatenango province, 62 miles north of the capital, and captured seven weapons and 8,000 rounds of ammunition.

Venceremos also reported that rebel forces killed eight members of a paramilitary death squad in Nueva Granada, 65 miles east of San Salvador in Usulutan province, in an attack Friday.

Ice, snow, rocks kill climbers

CHAMONIX, France (AP) — An avalanche of ice, snow and rocks killed five mountain climbers and injured five others early Saturday, officials in this French alpine resort said.

The avalanche occurred after several days of hot weather. Officials said the climbers were at an altitude of about 9,800 feet when the avalanche swept down the Chardonnet peak.

Brothers accused of sending bombs

LONDON (AP) — Two unemployed brothers were accused Saturday of sending letter bombs to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Prince Charles in 1981.

During a five-minute court hearing, Patrick A. Smythe, 25, and Anthony F. Smythe, 27, were charged with attempting to cause grievous bodily harm to the prime minister and the prince.

They were ordered jailed pending another hearing July 12.

The letter bomb addressed to Mrs. Thatcher at her official 10 Downing St. residence was intercepted and defused on Jan. 7, 1981. The one addressed to Prince Charles at Buckingham Palace was defused on May 5, 1981.

Demonstrators protest dumping

SANTIAGO DE COMPOSTELA, Spain (AP) — About 16,000 protesters gathered in the Galicia region of northwestern Spain Saturday to demonstrate against ocean dumping of radioactive waste by Britain.

The British cargo vessel Atlantic Fisher is due to dump more than 4,000 tons of waste Monday in the Atlantic 750 miles north of Galicia.

Three small cargo ships with 60 ecologists on board were headed to the area in an effort to prevent the dumping.

Boys drown after car plunges

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Two Swiss boys aged 6 and 10 drowned early Saturday when the car they were riding in with their parents plunged from a dock into the Adriatic, the Tanjug news agency reported.

The accident occurred in the town of Karlobag when the car hit a mooring pillar and fell into six-feet-deep water, the report added. The parents were saved.

Chinese officials to study new book

PEKING (AP) — Officials in the Peking municipal Communist Party organization will take time off from work to study the new book by China's top leader, "Selected Works of Deng Xiaoping," the Peking Daily said Saturday.

The paper said officials would take turns leaving work, with the first study group starting Monday and the entire program to be completed by the end of the year. It did not say how many officials would be involved.

The book, which contains major speeches Deng made between 1975 and 1982, has sold more than 190,000 copies in Peking since it went on sale July 2, the official Xinhua news agency said.

Festival brings out food lovers

TOKYO (AP) — The third annual two-week Hotel du Pont culinary festival featuring American dishes such as barbecued leg of lamb, baked flounder and blueberry upside down cake has attracted hundreds of food lovers.

The festival, which ends Thursday, is held jointly with two chefs from the Hotel du Pont of Wilmington, Del., working with Japanese chefs from Tokyo's Imperial Hotel.

Ferdinand Wieland, general manager of the Hotel du Pont, is in Tokyo with chefs Hanspeter Bernet and Joseph Murphy.

Defecting Soviet musicians leave for New York

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Soviet violinist Victoria Mullova and her accompanist Vakhtang Zhordania, who defected during a concert tour in Finland, have been granted asylum in the United States and left today for New York, Sweden's national news agency said.

Police at Stockholm's Arlanda International Airport confirmed the defectors left on a Northwest Orient Airlines flight that was expected to arrive in New York at 4:40 p.m. EDT.

From New York the couple was going on to Washington, where they were to be met by an exile organization called The Tolstoy Foundation, the Newspapers' Telegraph Agency said.

The agency said U.S. authorities granted the Soviets asylum for "humanitarian reasons."

Miss Mullova and Zhordania told a news conference Wednesday that they defected because they had too few concert opportunities in the Soviet Union and expected better career prospects in the United States.

American officials were unavailable for comment because the U.S. Embassy was closed, but the news agency said the pair was accompanied at the airport by two embassy officials and by Gert Crafoord, concert master of the Stockholm Philharmonic.

Miss Mullova, a promising 23-year-old, won the 1980 Sibelius violin competition in Helsinki and shared first place last year in Moscow's Tchaikovsky competition. Zhordania, 40, was conductor of the Kharkhov Symphony Orchestra in the Ukraine.

They defected last weekend in Kuusamo, in east-central Finland near the Soviet border. Miss Mullova left a priceless 300-year-old Stradivarius violin, on loan from the Soviet government, on her hotel bed.

Crafoord loaned Miss Mullova his Stradivarius for practice during her stay in Stockholm. The Newspapers' Telegraph Agency reported that an unidentified Swedish friend loaned her a valuable 18th-century instrument made by Guarnetius del Geus to take to the United States.

New PLO leaders have roots in revolution

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — The new leaders of the Palestine Liberation Organization, under Col. Said, or "Abu," Musa, have their roots in "Black September," the bloody 1970 attempt by renegade PLO soldiers to topple King Hussein and take over Jordan.

They also are irrevocably committed to the destruction and elimination of Israel as a Jewish state. As Abu Musa said last week, "Ours is a policy of no reconciliation, no recognition and no negotiation" with Israel.

U.S. intelligence analysts, asked to provide a who's who of the new and more radical PLO, said that the rebel movement was born in the immediate aftermath of Yasir Arafat's humiliating retreat from Beirut last summer. That created the pysochological conditions for the revolt that took place in early May.

The officials said there already are signs that the Soviet Union, through its Syrian proxy, will have more direct control over the guerrilla group. They said that Russia not only rebuffed an Arafat effort to visit Moscow but also helped Syria get rid of the unshaven, gregarious PLO leader.

The sources said that on June 28, Syria, with Moscow's full backing, had sent an ultimatum to Arafat serving notice that henceforth he would have to share power with Abu Musa and Nimr Saleh (Abu Saleh) or resign. The ultimatum was delivered just prior to the PLO executive committee meeting in Tunisia.

If Arafat balked, the Syrian message said, the rebels under Abu Musa would declare themselves the legitimate representatives of the PLO and take over control of all military cadres in Lebanon's Bekaa Valley. The Syrians also checked with Moscow to see if Abu Musa could be invited on an official visit.

BUT THE TURNING point in the demise of Arafat, the officials said, came on June 17, when Gen. Ali Duba, the chief of Syrian intelligence, met with Abu Musa and Abu Saleh in Damascus and gave them maps and other details on the precise location of troops still loyal to Arafat.

The Syrians recommended tightening the noose around Arafat's own headquarters at Dier Zanoun in the Bekaa Valley. Arafat himself was on a desperate mission to Saudi Arabia and Kuwait to persuade his two key allies in the Arab world to rescue him. But that, too, seems to have failed.

At the heart of the revolt, the analysts said, is a marriage of convenience between the Syrians, who don't want to withdraw their 50,000 troops from Lebanon, and the PLO rebels, who charge that Arafat sold them out once before and will do so again. They see the Syrians as their protectors.

"We know that Arafat wants to leave Lebanon," Abu Musa said in an interview last week, charging that Arafat's real aim is to disperse the guerrilla fighters into various Arab countries as he did last summer after the evacuation of Beirut.

Soviets sentenced for hijacking

ZONGULDAK, Turkey (AP) — A criminal court in this Black Sea city sentenced three Soviets of German descent to long jail terms for hijacking a Soviet jetliner on a domestic flight last November.

Vitali Schmidt, 27, and his brother Boris, 23, were sentenced Friday to eight years and four months each, and Arthur Schiller, 30, to nine years and two months on the additional charge of possessing and using a knife.

Stanton has big time at Settlers Reunion

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

STANTON — It was a crowd of gray hair and children in pigtails, gimme caps and straw cowboy hats that packed into the Martin County Community Center in Stanton Saturday afternoon.

As fiddle contestants ran freshly rosined bows across their strings in chaotic chorus, the crowd also warmed up, chattering and catching up on the year gone by — or, to be exact, the last 50 years.

"Old Settlers Reunion is always a big day for us," one not-so-old-timer remarked to a friend. "It starts early and ends late."

With school reunions joining classmates who graduated as far back as 1933, the 50th year celebration was special.

Along the dusty and crowded sidewalks of downtown Stanton, faded black and white photographs of Martin County ranching families looked out on the festivities in the street.

At the corner of St. Anna and St. Peter streets, a group sat in folding chairs outside Susan's Flowers and Gifts. Children scampering by stopped to lean over their mothers in the shade for a few moments before dashing off to determine the winners of several contests, sponsored by the Martin County Jaycees.

A crowd full of babies in strollers, kids in jeans and sneakers and parents in red Martin County jail restoration T-shirts gathered around watching contestants vying in the street for certificates in cow chip chunking, tobacco and watermelon seed spitting and bubble gum blowing.

One by one, participants were eliminated from the egg toss contest. They walked back with hands dripping with yellow yoke as friends scattered from them in good-humored disgust.

As the distance stretched half a city block to the front of Higginbotham-Bartlett Co., the tosses were wilder. Last year's champions were defeated in the finals when an uncontrolled throw threatened innocent bystanders standing against a building on the sidewalk.

While adults munched on sausages on a stick, nachos, barbecued turkey legs and sandwiches, a group of children eagerly selected small horned toads from a cardboard carton. They hesitantly handed them to a judge, who marked the tiny bellies with felt tip numbers, and watched protectively as the toads were placed back in the box.

Following a tight race with a few runaways escaping to nearby gutters, a winner was declared.

"If anybody wants their horney-toad back, he may be in the box — and he may not be," the judge said with a grin and wink to adults who gingerly stepped back as children clawed into the carton.

When the plastic bags of cow chips were removed and everyone had toad in hand, the crowd dispensed for an hour and a half lunch break.

Some headed directly to the Stanton View Manor where box lunches were on sale; others moseyed along the emptying streets, browsing at sidewalk sales; two old-timers sought shade sitting on the windowsill in front of the deserted Stanton Variety Store.

Festivities resumed with the fiddlers contest, sponsored by the Texas Old Fiddlers Association, and more contests.

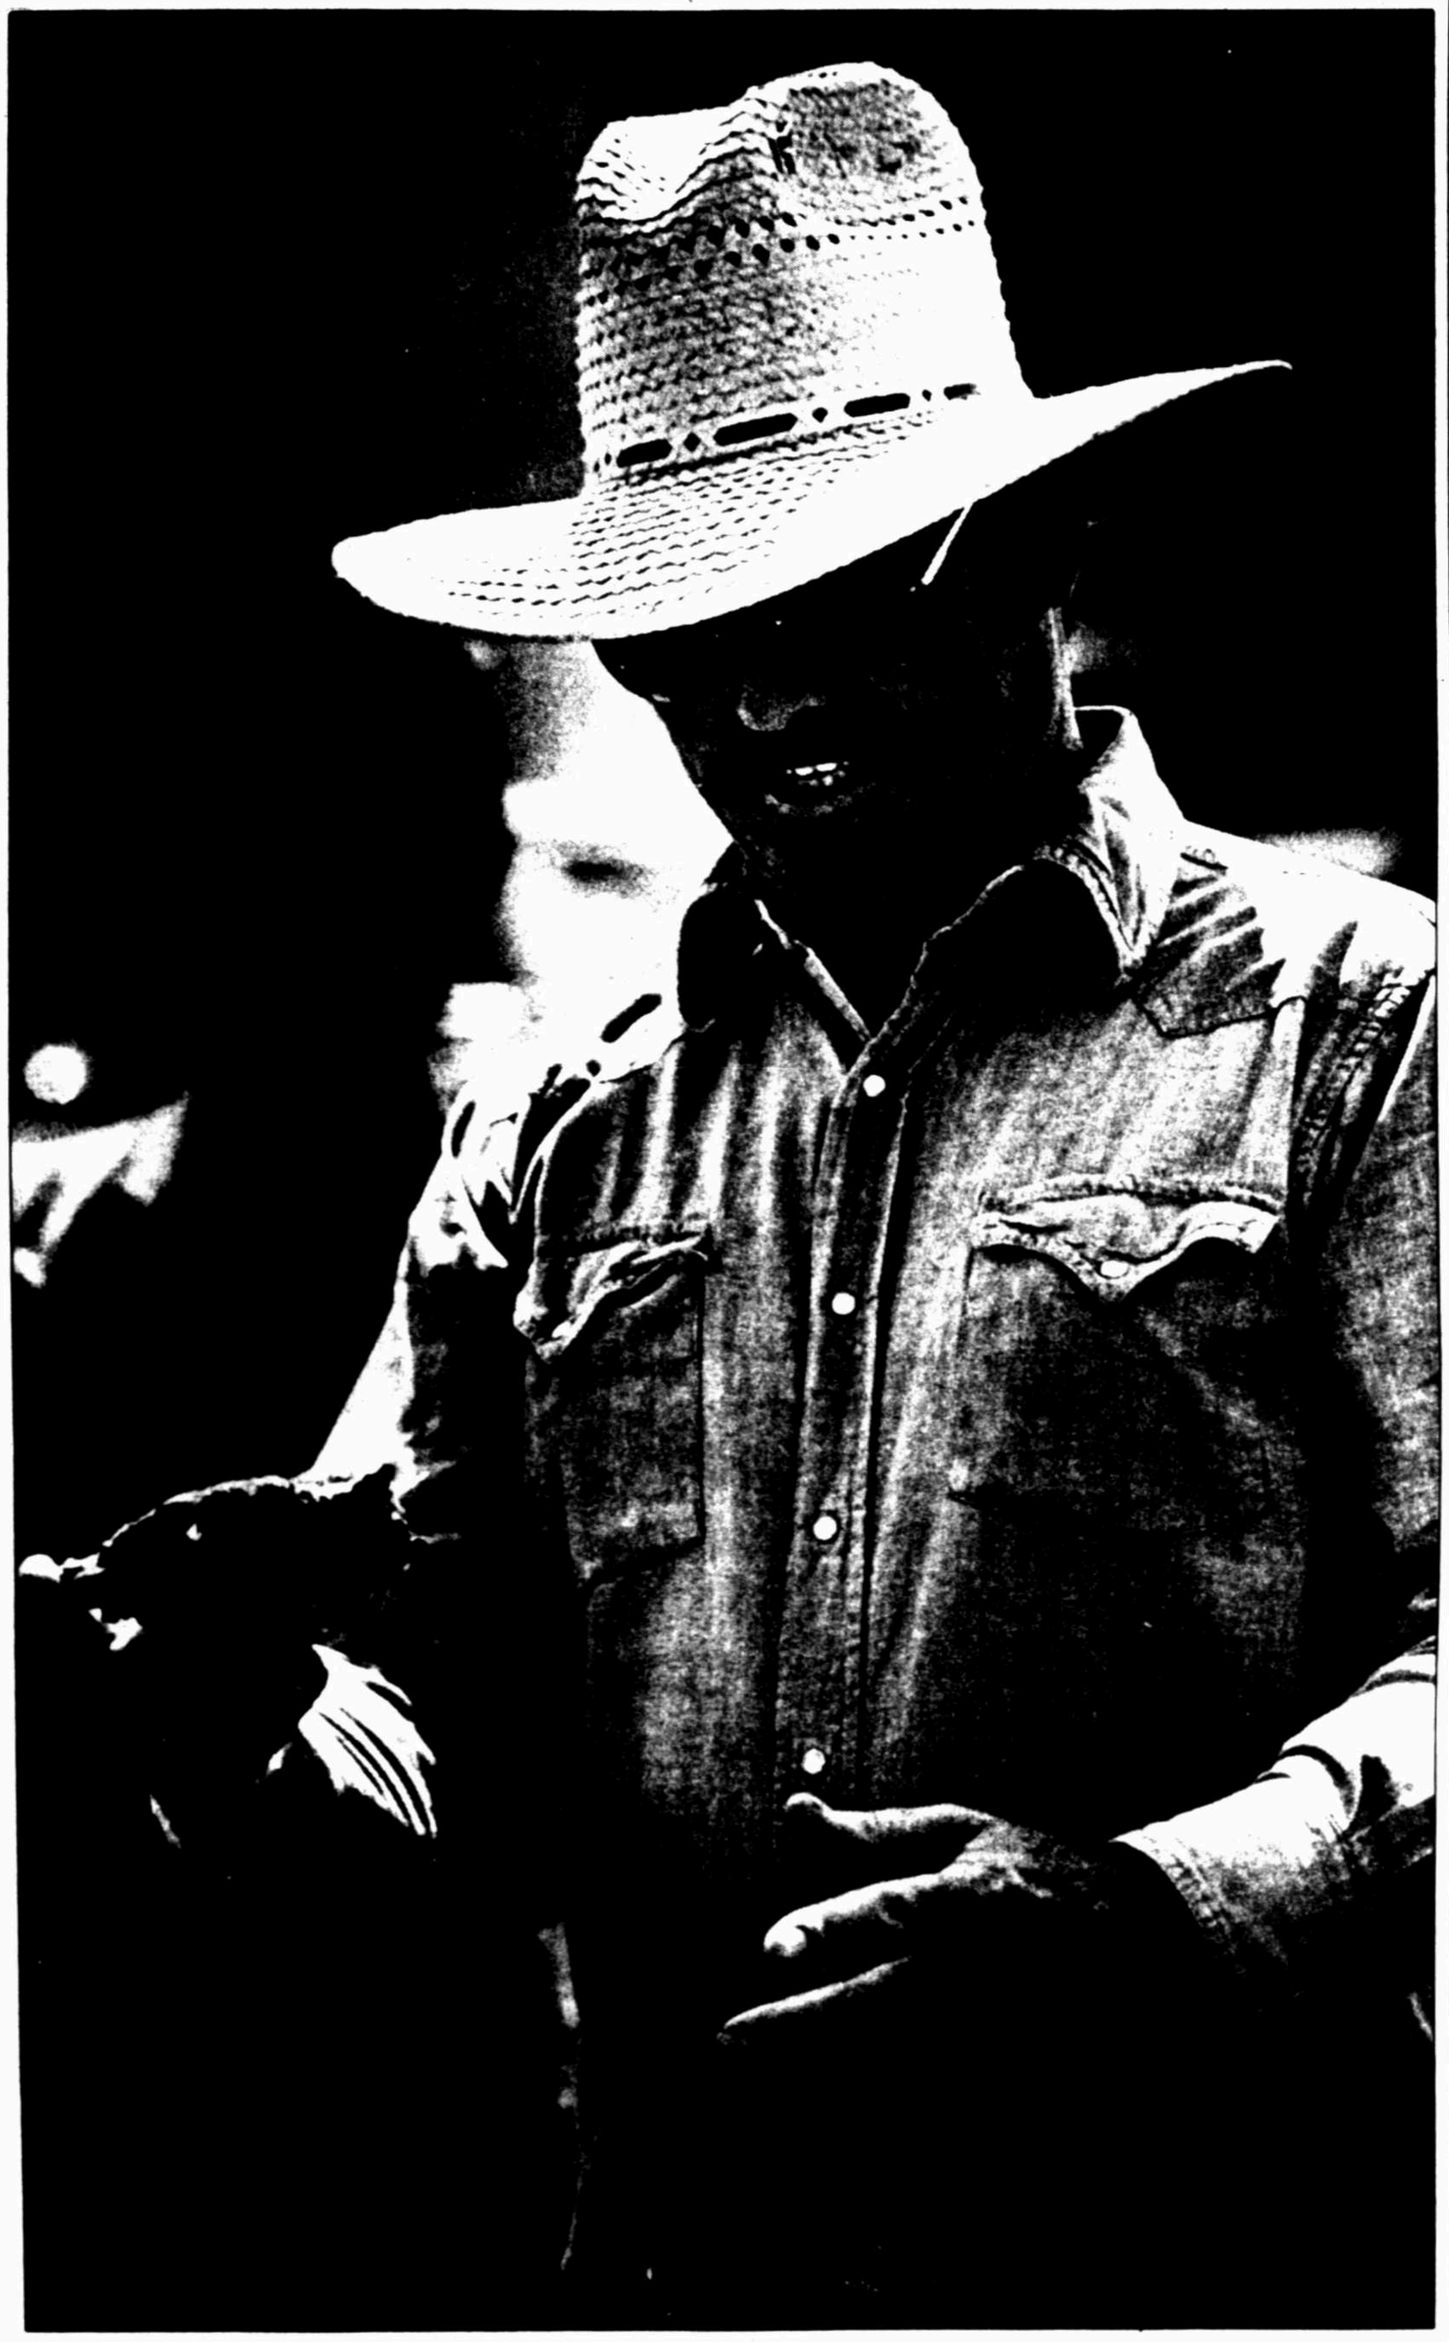

Twenty-one jalepeno peppers were jammed down the throats of the two winners in a hot pepper eating contest.

"They weren't so bad going down," one said grinning, "It's coming out that's gonna hurt."

From the morning parade portraying Martin County in the 1930's to the dinner and dance Saturday night, memories of the Depression and the years to follow floated along downtown streets. With wide grins on sweat-soaked faces, the Stanton "soreheads" relived rougher days, with the camaraderie and friendliness that has characterized them throughout the last 50 years.

'Oh, the odor!'

Grimacing at the scent of a pungent cow chip as he readies for the cow chip chunking contest is Darr Huckaby, above, of Stanton. He checks both sides to see which is the top or bottom of the cow chip. Tooling along in their 1924 Ford pickup, above left, during the parade are Mr. and Mrs. C.R. Pierson of Monahans. The parade opened the Old Settlers Reunion at Stanton, which looked back on the past 50 years. Blind luck helps Donna Mashburn, bottom left, of Stanton as she scrambles to catch this egg thrown to her from 90 feet away during the egg tossing contest at the Old Settlers Reunion.

Dogs guzzle beer; Cats sip white wine

It is now 11:45 p.m. on a Friday and I'm struggling to come up with an idea for this column. Making matters worse, this is the first of what is supposed to become a weekly endeavor on my part so the pressure to excel is greatly intensified.

What to write about?

The possibilities boggle the mind.

Should I be witty? Charming? Cynical? Or all of the above?

No, in this case I think it best to harp back to some valuable advice I learned in journalism school. When in doubt, the theory stated, be controversial.

Or in the words of my professor: "Make them mad. They'll always come back for more."

With that in mind, today's topic is: Pets.

Or, more specifically: Which are better, dogs or cats?

Everyone taken sides? Good. The correct answer is cats.

Want proof?

Fine. Dogs are mindless. They jump up and down and drool on your new trousers. They meet you at the front door and won't let you rest in peace until you gag them and lock them in the garage. Dogs are like the fat kid in junior high school who was always hanging around where he wasn't wanted. The kid, like dogs in general, was harmless enough, I suppose, but a nuisance nevertheless.

Cats, on the other hand, are sophisticated. They have style and grace. Cats don't attack when you enter a room. They merely smirk and sharpen their claws on the furniture. Cats also have a sense of humor. Instead of reciting Aggie jokes, they ridicule the Rovers of our society.

There are other differences, too. For example:

Dogs love midget wrestling. Cats prefer the finals at Wimbledon.

Dogs inhale supper at 6 o'clock sharp. Cats nibble at dinner sometime after dark.

Dogs guzzle beer. Cats sip white wine.

Dogs jog for exercise. Cats lounge around the country club pool.

Dogs gawk at Hustler magazine. Cats browse through Playboy.

Dogs voted for George Wallace in '68. Cats lean toward any wine and cheese candidate.

Dogs never miss a Burt Reynolds flick. Cats attend foreign film festivals.

Dogs are Baptists. Cats are members of the Presbyterian church.

Dogs spend a weekend at Six Flags. Cats tour Europe.

Dogs flunk out of junior college. Cats graduate with honors from SMU.

Dogs drive pickup trucks. Cats wouldn't be caught dead in one.

Dogs live in Odessa. Cats reside in Midland.

Dogs listen to Merle Haggard. Cats are partial to Mick Jagger.

Dogs stare blankly at the networks. Cats view PBS.

Dogs shoot pool. Cats engage in a friendly game of billards.

Dogs honeymoon at Niagara Falls. Cats spend a week on the Caribbean and marry a year later.

Dogs identify with Archie Bunker. Cats are not surprised.

Colleges graduate Midlanders

Several colleges graduated Midland students during spring graduation ceremonies. Robert E. Franz, 2801 Auburn, earned a bachelor of science degree in accounting, business administration from the University of Denver in December.

Elaine Allison Karcher, 1200 Princeton Ave., was awarded a bachelor of science degree in advertising from The University of Texas at Austin. Valerie Van Pelt, 1602 Gulf, graduated with honors from UT with a bachelor of science in education.

At Dartmouth College in New Hampshire, Randal Spears, son of Robert and Marian Spears, 2004 Seaboard, received a degree in engineering sciences; and Carrick Eggleston, son of David and Helen Eggleston, 1605 Tennessee, was awarded a magna cum laude degree in earth sciences.

Eric Pokky, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arny H. Pokky, 3304 Maxwell, was awarded a bachelor of science degree in pharmacy from the University of Houston.

ACU graduates area students

Eight students from the Midland area graduated from Abilene Christian University during spring commencement exercises. Larry Clint Belcher, son of Mr. and Mrs. Larry Belcher, 107 Thornridge, received a bachelor of business administration degree in accounting. Kevin Davis, son of Mr. and Mrs. Don Davis, 3012 Moss, earned a bachelor of arts in history. Donna Lynn Garrett, daughter of Mrs. Frances Garrett, 1602 Manor Court, was awarded a bachelor of arts degree in public relations. David Bryan Green, son of Mr. and Mrs. Bill Green of rural Midland, was given a bachelor of business administration in finance.

Mary Tom Hale, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tommy Hale, 2604 Maxwell, earned a bachelor of business administration in marketing, cum laude. Shelley Jean Hall, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lee Roy Hall, 3611 Shell, received a bachelor of business administration in marketing. Karen Nelle Kreidel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter E. Kreidel, Brazil, was given a bachelor of science in home economics education. Kimberly Kay Rix, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. James Rix, 2200 Gulf, received a bachelor of business administration in finance.

Midlander on Wayland honor roll

Anthony Craig Easley of Midland was named to the spring Dean's Honor Roll at Wayland Baptist University in Plainview. Easley posted a 3.5 grade point average on a 4.0 scale, the minimum requirement necessary to be named to the list.

Midlanders on TCU honor roll

Texas Christian University in Fort Worth named four Midland students to its spring Dean's Honor List. They were Stephen Alan Lamkin, son of Mrs. Birdie T. Lamkin; Patricia Kay Murphey, daughter of John W. Murphey; Karen Elizabeth Price, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Price, 2503 Cimmaron Drive; and James Scott Stovall, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jimmy R. Stovall, 4512 Pasadena.

MC adds real estate finance course

A course in real estate finance has been added to Midland College's summer session curriculum. It will be taught from 6-8 p.m. Monday through Thursday and began Thursday, but persons may register late for second session courses through Wednesday at the Office of Student Services in MC's Administration Building.

MC setting registration record

With three days of late registration still ahead, Midland College has already set a new second summer registration record.

On Thursday, 727 students began classes — a 27.3 percent increase over last year's 571 students who were registered the first day. And it even exceeds the 702 total student count at the end of late registration in 1982.

Persons wishing to register for second summer session classes should go to the Office of Student Services in the Administration Building between 7 a.m. and 8 p.m. Monday through Wednesday.

Information about classes being offered is available by calling 684-7851, extension 166.

Resignation of MISD teachers decreases

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Staff Writer

Students returning to Midland schools this fall will see more familiar faces than usual — not among their peers but their teachers. An unusually low number of instructors resigned their jobs at the end of the 1983 school year.

Whereas last year 173 resignations were received by the Midland Independent School District, this spring that number was reduced to 49. MISD Superintendent Dr. Joe Baressi said in typical years about 100 teachers left their jobs.

Ector County Independent School District faces a similar situation. Although exact figures could not be obtained, Superintendent Bill Holm said about 50 teachers have said they will not return in the fall. In past years the figure has been triple that amount. "We've had retirements this year, but not many resignations because jobs are more difficult to get," Holm said.

Baressi also cited the economy as the reason behind the decrease. Although in the past most teachers left because a spouse changed jobs rather than because they accepted a position in another school, Baressi said a nationwide decrease in hiring was probably responsible for the low number of resignations this year.

Apparently fewer teachers and/or their spouses are being hired for jobs in other cities. And in these economic times, even if one finds other employment they may feel they cannot move if both are not guaranteed jobs.

Baressi said the situation was advantageous to the school district. "I think the less turnover you have the more continuity you have and the better your program is overall. More staff people will be familiar with Midland and our program."

Although MISD enrollment grew by 9 to 10 percent last year, projected growth for this year is only 2 to 3 percent, Baressi said. Because of that and the low number of resignations, few new positions are open. That comes despite two new elementary schools — Santa Rita and Quanah Parker — are opening this fall.

"But there is still a large number of applicants," Baressi added. "We are not having a teacher shortage in Midland."

However, the district is being cautious about hiring. "In past years we would hire teachers subject to assignment in the fall," Baressi explained. "Now we are not hiring until vacancies open."

Odessa is not quite as fortunate. With a 5 percent decrease in enrollment last year, little or no growth expected this year, and desegregation which has resulted in the closing of Ector High School and some consolidation, Ector County trustees have had to reduce the teaching force. Holm said the district is doing little hiring, and not all of last year's teachers have received assignments for the upcoming year.

He expressed hope that the number of resignations received by the end of summer would allow all those teachers to return to work in the fall.

Youngsters can enter frisbee-throwing contest

Midland area youngsters who spend hours whirling their fabulous, flying disks through the air can put their acumen to a test on Thursday by competing in the World Junior Frisbee Disc Contest.

The event will take place at 2 p.m. in Dennis the Menace Park on South Garfield St.

And to bone up on the event a clinic will be held Tuesday at 9:30 a.m. at Dennis the Menace Park.

This contest is one of the longest-running national youth activity programs.

Youngsters will compete in two age categories: 11 and under and 12 to 15. Girls and boys who achieve qualifying scores advance to sectional and regional finals. This year's world finals will be held at Sea World in Orlando, Fla.

Local and state competition will feature throwing for accuracy and distance and various catching techniques. However, disc golf, maximum time aloft and freestyle will be added at the world finals.

Co-sponsoring the event with Wheaties is the Midland Parks and Recreation Department. Entry forms may be obtained at the YMCA's recreation centers and the Parks and Recreation office, 300 Baldwin St. For more information call 683-4281, extension 316.

Banana's roots go back to Asia

The banana, said to be North America's No. 1 fruit, is not grown commercially in the United States or Canada. South America supplies the bulk of the fruit to us, but its roots go back to Asia. The Malay Peninsula is regarded as the birthplace of this possibly most ancient fruit.

Jennings died Friday in a Big Spring hospital.

A Baptist, he was a retired diesel mechanic.

Safe deposit boxes contain trash, treasure

AUSTIN (AP) — Beneath the ground, in a Diebold Power File locked behind a great vault door, is a collection of items and papers — some valuable, some not — forgotten, ignored or abandoned by generations of Texans.

Over the years, the state treasurer's office has collected the contents of 134 abandoned safe deposit boxes. Many more are on the way. Some will come from Washington, where boxes from national banks that folded in the Depression are stored.

Many, perhaps thousands, will come from state banks as a result of a new law requiring the banks to pass the abandoned goods on to the state. Two Dallas banks each have said they'll have about 2,000 boxes to pass on, said Larry Schroeder, the Treasurer's Department employee in charge of the boxes.

"Most of the time, it's just pure garbage," said Schroeder.

But sometimes, it's pure gold. A box passed along by Alamo National Bank in San Antonio yielded $53,000 worth of contents, including gold coins, watches and chains.

"Everything you can think of that's gold is in here," said Schroeder.

The box belonged to Joseph Springer, but that's about all Schroeder knows about it. The bank pulled the box in 1975. Some of the jewelry and coins was accompanied by receipts showing it had been purchased in New York early this century.

Schroeder has had no luck in tracking down Springer or his offspring. It's a winding trail, he said. The San Antonio box included a key to a Laredo safe deposit box, which also produced no clues.

Richard Paul, spokesman for Treasurer Ann Richards, said the boxes come here when the banks give up. Inside, officials have found insurance policies, jewelry, love letters, $3 million worth of stock and anything else Texans have stashed away.

"The banks can sell the contents to collect back rent, but that's kind of bad public relations. A lot of times they don't do that, which means this stuff just sits around in their vault," said Paul.

Boxes are abandoned for several reasons. Paul said some boxholders tell no one — not even spouses — that they have a safe deposit box.

There are other reasons for secrecy. Schroeder had some luck finding information about the owner of a Coronado State Bank of El Paso box that held precious stones, including about 15 pounds of low-grade emeralds.

"His last known address was the El Paso jail, and the name he used was an alias," he said.

The stones and some of the other items will be sold by the state at auction later this year, according to Paul. If the owners ever show up, they can collect whatever the state gets for the goods.

Larry Schroeder of the Treasurer's Department in Austin displays a jewel case of valuable rings found in a safe deposit box turned over to the state treasurer as "abandoned."

The Texas Historical Commission also will get a shot at some of the items, said Paul. Anything deemed of historical value to the state will go the commission. That might include the two books found in Capt. Richard Bassett Jr.'s box at Alamo National.

"Harper's Pictorial History of the Great Rebellion," found in the abandoned box, is a two-volume account of the Civil War.

"Apparently, this guy named Capt. Richard Bassett Jr. had put them in there in 1937. The story is he walked into the bank and the president was a good friend of his and he said, 'Here, hold on to these for me.' Then he left. Never came back," said Schroeder.

Tracking Bassett has been fruitless.

"We could look up military records I guess — but a captain of what? Army, Navy, Air Force, fire department?" he said.

So far Schroeder has tracked down the owners of about 20 boxes stored here.

"Some of them had been looking for their boxes. They knew that they existed, but they didn't know where," he said.

One box contained hundreds of dollars in U.S. Savings Bonds. Another held J. Frank Dobie books autographed by the famous Texas author.

The contents of some of the boxes is headed nowhere, said Schroeder.

"We don't have any clue of any sort. No names, no nothing. We don't even know who had the box," he said. At one time, there were no individual boxes, just a bank vault where valuables were stored.

Also headed nowhere, and of no apparent value to anyone other than its owner and perhaps a man named Ben, is the single sheet of paper found in an abandoned box in Fannin National Bank in Houston.

The note says: "I was two months pregnant when I met Ben, so Charlie the baby is not his and I will not claim any child support from him."

Bullfighter doesn't take defeat lightly

HOUSTON (AP) — David Renk does not take defeat lightly.

Renk, 20, the only active American matador, proved that when he got up recently and killed the bull that had just gored his left calf.

To make his point absolutely clear, Renk, wearing a tourniquet, later killed a second opponent.

Renk, born in the border town of El Paso but now a resident of the Houston suburb of Cypress, said earlier this week he decided to take three weeks off after he was injured again last Sunday in a charity performance at Reynosa.

His first injury, the goring of his leg, occurred June 26 in Matamoras, Mexico.

Renk began bullfighting when he was 14, following the footsteps of his father, Fred Renk. He was declared a full-fledged matador de toros four years later.

The elder Renk blamed overconfidence and a tough bull for his son's first serious injury.

"It was a tremendous animal and it charged long and well," the elder Renk said.

Council to hear school zone study

Few items and even fewer public hearings illuminate the agenda when the Midland City Council meets at 10 a.m. Tuesday in City Hall Council Chambers.

A school zone study prepared by the traffic division will be presented. The study assesses each school zone crossing as to whether the lighting and signals are adequate. Two new school crossings are being recommended: one at Indiana and Jackson streets and the other at Lamesa and Spruce.

An outline on raising prices for ambulance service will be given to the council to study.

Change orders for remodeling for the Public Safety Building will be considered. The council will consider seeking bids for a computer system for the Police Department, housed in that building.

Relocating pipelines and other lines in Section 12 southeast of Midland on the site of the new effluent disposal system will surface again. The city is ready to advertise for bids on land preparation and construction of the reservoir for that disposal system on J. "Timber" Floyd's land.

Zoning requests include:

—1:35 p.m. public heaing for a specific use permit for all alcoholic beverages at Zentner's Daughter restaurant near Loop 250 and Midland Drive.

—1:40 p.m. public hearing for a specific use permit for a veterinary clinic at Illinois Avenue and Midland Drive.

—1:55 p.m. a public hearing on appeal by Jabur and Morris for a zone change from 1F-1, single family district, to PD, Planned District, for an office center and housing development on 15 acres north of Andrews Highway and 400 feet west of Midland Drive.

—2:15 p.m. hearing to amend the zoning code to permit private elementary and secondary schools in all districts.

MISD Board of Trustees

At Tuesday's regular school board meeting, Midland trustees may end months of debate over eligibility requirements for students involved in extracurricular activities.

The meeting starts at 1:30 p.m. in the school administration building, 702 N. N St.

A month ago trustees agreed that students receiving two F's during a six-week period should be placed on probation and be made ineligible for activities if grades were not improved by the end of that period. During Tuesday's meeting trustees will vote on whether or not an unsatisfactory grade in a course taken pass-fail should be regarded as an F for eligibility.

In other action board members will study a policy for leaves of absence without pay. Changes have been proposed for classification and terms of maternity leave, parental leave and temporary disability.

Trustees also will be asked to approve the 1983-84 salary schedule, hear a follow-up survey of 1982 honor graduates, make preliminary plans for Rusk Elementary School expansion and appoint two new principals.

County Commissioners

Midland County Commissioners' Court is to consider an 18-item agenda in its 9 a.m. Monday meeting in the Midland County Courthouse.

Among other considerations, the commissioners are to:

—Consider bids on roofing the courthouse.

—Discuss getting a new refrigerator for the jail.

—Listen to Dan Brown and Daniel Brown of Brown's Permian Electric Co. present their case for an energy-management package.

—Consider community development rehabilitation applicants and discuss applying for additional rent-subsidy units.

—Listen to Ken Easterwood of SP Realty & Development Co. present a development proposal.

—Discuss a voter registration workshop.

Four people injured in two-vehicle wreck

Four out-of-state residents, including three children, were injured in a two-vehicle traffic accident on Interstate Highway 20 about three miles west of Midland early Saturday morning.

Listed in serious condition Saturday at Midland Memorial Hospital was the driver of one of the vehicles, 35-year-old Carol Dean Nay of Eldorado, Ark. She suffered head and back injuries.

Also in serious condition with head and facial injuries was 15-year-old Deana Marie Nay. In fair condition with cuts and abrasions was Corbin Leroy Goodman, 13. Released following treatment for minor injuries was 10-year-old George Thomas Goodman.

All of the children are from Eldorado and were passengers in Mrs. Nay's 1966 Volkswagen van, according to the Department of Public Safety.

There is a certain city councilman who has a trap set up in his yard to catch neighbors' cats so that they can be picked up by the police and disposed of. Is this legal, or is there something that can be done to stop this? — D.M.

ANSWER: Dalton Byerly, director of Midland Animal Control, says the Animal Control Center has approximately 40 cages now being used by Midlanders to trap cats. These humane-type cages are the only method of controlling the cat population in Midland, Byerly states. The procedure is absolutely legal, and currently there is a waiting list for obtaining the cages.

Byerly points out that there is an ordinance, Section 622, stating that dogs and other animals are not to be allowed to run at large. The procedure with cats is the same as with dogs. When an unlicensed cat or dog running loose is caught, Animal Control is notified and the animal is picked up and taken to the center. They are kept for three days or a period up to six working days, and every effort is made to locate the owner. The cat owner must pay an impoundment fee just as the dog owner to retrieve a pet.

Byerly says that when cages are checked out for use, the persons requesting them are asked to let their neighbors know they have the cage. Hopefully, if a neighbor's cat is missing he will check with the person having the cage to see if his cat has been caught.

I am told that I have incurable cancer and I want to settle my affairs as well as I can. How long will it take before my wife will be able to collect on my life insurance policies? If there is a delay before she contacts the company, will interest be paid? — J.D.

ANSWER: A recent industry survey of life insurance companies found that three in four claims are paid within five working days after receiving proof of death and more than nine in 10 are paid within two weeks, says The American Council of Life Insurance.

All the companies surveyed reported that they pay interest on death claims, usually from the date of death, whether the claim has been delayed or not.

I would like to know why "lite" beer is more expensive than "regular" beer? Is it because the "lite" seems to be increasing in popularity? — J.M.

ANSWER: Ralph Bivens, Midland sales manager for Miller's, says lite beer is more expensive because of the extra cost of brewing it. The same goes for sugar-free soft drinks which cost more because of the preparation, Bivens adds.

Recently I was getting gasoline at a self-service station in Midland. While I was there, a station attendant came out to the ramp and was smoking a cigarette. I would like to know the meaning of the "No Smoking" signs posted at all service stations. — G.S.

ANSWER: Smoking by any person where "No Smoking" signs are posted, whether it be gasoline stations, department stores or wherever, is in violation of the city's fire code and state laws governing flammable substances, says Jerry Petree, Midland fire marshal.

Fire Marshal Petree points out that the Midland Fire Department should be notified of any violation, and steps will be made to correct the situation. The attendant should not be smoking nor anyone else on a station ramp. With self-service stations, it is difficult for the law to be enforced because attendants are in the office transacting business and unable to see every customer driving in for service.

Religious beliefs survey conducted

HOUSTON (AP) — People who take the Bible as literal truth tend to be poor and not well-educated, believe a nuclear war can be won and favor traditional family lifestyles in which the father works and the mother stays at home, according to a survey of religious beliefs of Houstonians.

The conclusions were drawn by sociologist Stephen K. Klineberg in a study of 474 Houstonians randomly selected and interviewed in Rice University's 1983 Houston Area Survey. Klineberg's findings were published Saturday in the Houston Post.

In recent years, several surveys have suggested the strong influence of religion on the attitudes and opinions of Americans. But Klineberg said the attitudes were misinterpreted because they failed to isolate the effects of fundamentalism.

Klineberg separated fundamentalists from other believers.

The survey indicated about one of every three Houstonians, or 32 percent, agrees with the statement: "The Bible is the actual word of God, and it should be taken literally, word for word," Klineberg said.

Houston utility requests rate hike

AUSTIN (AP) - State District Judge Herman Jones has taken under consideration the appeal of Houston Lighting & Power Co. to approve a surcharge that would raise the company's rates by $154.4 million.

Jones said after a Friday hearing he would study attorneys' briefs and the record before issuing a ruling.

HL&P is appealing the Public Utility Commission approval in 1982 of a $182.6 million rate increase. HL&P attorneys Friday asked Jones to order the commission to approve the surcharge which would give HL&P the $336 million hike it sought originally.

In approving the revised rate increase, PUC said it was penalizing HL&P for mismanagement of the South Texas Nuclear Project and the Allens Creek Nuclear Project.

The city of Houston also is appealing the PUC ruling, contending that the commission should not have allowed HL&P to recover any of its investment in the Allens Creek project.

HL&P attorney Hugh Rice Kelly contended Friday that the PUC had overstepped its legal authority by penalizing HL&P for mismanagement. "Nothing in this record suggests HL&P failed to live up to a prudent standard of care for managing nuclear plants," he said.

Assistant State Attorney General Fernando Rodriguez said HL&P was appealing the PUC decision because of litigation concerning the South Texas Nuclear Project, involving Brown & Root Co.

"They are afraid that Brown & Root is going to take these findings by a government agency and use them against the company in the lawsuit (over STNP)," Rodriguez said. "The fact that the company has filed a lawsuit is evidence that something improper has occurred at STNP."

Now is time to treat lawns for infestation by white grubs

We have had many calls this week concerning control of white grubs in home lawns. Now is the critical treatment period for these lawn insects. Heavy grub infestations can destroy grass roots, causing the area to become spongy, allowing the mat of turf to be rolled back like a piece of carpet. Check your lawn very carefully and when more than four grubs per square foot of grass sod are found, lawns should be treated for control of this major lawn insect pest. Timing of insecticide treatments when grubs are less than ½ inch in body length and located near the soisurface is critical for adequate control. Now until the first week in August is the opportune time to treat this pest.

Check lawns for white grubs by cutting a 1 square foot section of sod and examining the roots and soil to a depth of four inches. Several lawn samples (at least two 1 square foot sections per 1,000 square feet of lawn area) should be taken to make certain an infestation justifies treatment. After examination, soil and sod should be replaced, pressed down and watered.

Insecticides suggested for white grub control in home lawns in West Texas are Diazinon and Dursban. Liquid or granular formulations of these insecticides may be utilized to treat lawns for grub control.

Before treating lawns for grub control the following practices should be done: (1) Mow the lawn; (2) remove all grass clippings; and (3) irrigate.

"Citizensihp" will be the focal point of the 1983 Texas 4-H Congress. Some 600 4-H members ages 15 to 19 from across Texas will be attending this year's Congress in Austin, July 19-21, which will focus on individual responsibilities for citizenship. Congress headquarters will be the Sheraton Crest Hotel.

Theme of the 10th annual Congress is "Celebrate Citizenship." 4-H'ers attending from Midland County include Damon Six, Kelin Jones, Kelly Woolard, Andrea Graham, Pam Mims, Stacey Hillis and Earnest Kiker, Midland County Agriculture Program Leader with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, Texas A&M University.

Highlighting this year's Congress will be tours of the State Capitol, actual participation in the Texas Legislature, and special "Citizenship in Action" seminars.

Featured speakers will include Dr. Zerle L. Carpenter, Extension service director, and Ola Madsen, president of Adventures in Total Development, Nicholasville, Ky.

Each Congress delegate will actually be sworn in as a state senator or representative and will take part in developing and passing legislation.

A special 75th 4-H Anniversary Celebration the last evening will include the Congress program.

Texas 4-H Congress is the highlight of the 4-H careers of many older youth. It is held in a different Texas city each year to allow the use of various unique educational aspects.

Klan plans to continue Dallas marches

DALLAS (AP) — The Ku Klux Klan will continue to hold marches in Dallas as long as the city council maintains an anti-Klan position, Grand Dragon Charles Lee told a news conference here Saturday.

Lee said a city council resolution opposing the Klan's planned march next Saturday was "discriminatory."

"They (the council members) don't want us to come to town," Lee said. "If they keep enforcing an anti-Klan theme, we'll have to come back once a month."

The council passed the non-binding resolution June 22. It expressed the council's preference that the Klan not march in Dallas.

Police officials granted permits to the Klan and an anti-Klan group. The anti-Klan protesters have said they will try to change their permit so they can march right after the Klan instead of hours later.

Mayor Starke Taylor said Saturday that continued marches by the Klan would be useless.

"It's a free country and they have their constitutional rights," Taylor said. "It (additional marches) won't accomplish anything. It will just upset people."

Glenn's words anger feminists at convention

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Democratic presidential hopeful John Glenn, who arrived Saturday to woo members of the National Women's Political Caucus, says he'll watch his language from now on when referring to married couples.

In answering a question at a news conference, Glenn used the phrase "man and wife" — a term that angers some feminists because it implies men and women are not equal partners in marriage.

But the Ohio senator, when questioned on his use of the phrase, said the topic was a new one for him.

"I am usually very careful to make certain I say men and women. When you talk about a married couple though...I don't know. What's the preferred term these days so I'll know what to use?"

The phrase "husband and wife" was volunteered.

"All right, husband and wife," Glenn said. "I'm sensitive to these nuances that are important these days and I wasn't aware that one was a major issue now.

"But if it is, I'll be careful not to transgress again because I don't want to indicate any quality and I know the sensitivity with which it is held."

Texan builds his hobby out of bricks

COPPERAS COVE, Texas (AP) — Mel Garlick scavenges for bricks, trade bricks, talks bricks and even gets Christmas cards engraved on bricks.

In all, he has 1,400 bricks lining the walls of two rooms, embedded in the steps and pavement at his house, scattered in his backyard and piled in his pickup truck.

To Garlick, bricks are the building blocks of history, relics from the past and treasures from far away places.

Bricks from Egypt, Scotland and England are displayed with those from the United States in a room he calls Mel's Museum.

Some of his favorites are from the Treason House, where Benedict Arnold made plans to betray the American Revolution, from the 1983 World's Fair and one made by Illinois inmates and used in the first Scott and White Hospital in nearby Temple.

"Saving bricks is like preserving history," said Garlick, who started his collection in 1974. Every brick has a story, he said.

Garlick said brick collecting is becoming more and more common as a hobby. In fact, last January, the International Brick Collectors Club was formed with more than 100 members.

Besides putting out a quarterly newsletter, the club will hold annual brick-trading meets. Such a meet has been held in Oklahoma City for the last three years.

"Brick meets are like a big Chinese fire drill," said Garlick. "Bricks are placed in the back ends of our pickup trucks and everyone runs everywhere just trading away."

These conventions also enable brick collectors to meet and share brick-talk with one another. In fact, it is at one of these meets that Garlick met a friend in Kansas, who sends him a Christmas card each year engraved on bricks.

Trading is the method in which brick collectors discover their greatest finds. Garlick also recommends scavenging about in sites where houses are being torn down and at landfills.

The only bricks that are worth anything are those with words or symbols on them. The majority of these bricks were made before 1950. But Garlick suspects that his bricks are only worth the wholesale price of used bricks.

However, he recommends the hobby to anyone who wishes to start. In fact, he'll even help beginning brick collectors get started by donating some of the trading bricks he has piled up in his backyard.

"I got four collectors from Austin started," said Garlick, "and now they're sending me bricks."

"It's an easy hobby," said Garlick, "and besides that, it's just good straight fun."

Men caught smuggling equipment

BROWNSVILLE, (AP) — Three people have been charged with violating federal export laws by trying to smuggle $300,000 worth of industrial machinery to Cuba, U.S. Customs agents said.

Alejo Qintero Peralta, 43, and Salvadore Ramirez Preciado, 44, both of Mexico City, and Albert Anthony Volpe, 58, of Toronto, Canada, were ordered held in lieu of $100,000 bond each Friday under the Exports Control Act and the Foreign Assets Control Act, agents said.

The 31 crates of equipment, components for a sugar refinery, were being loaded aboard a jet at the Harlingen airport Thursday night when customs officials arrived, said Charles Conroy of the Customs regional office in Houston. Also seized was $70,000 cash, he said.

Texans pay more than they receive, survey shows

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas' state and local governments are only getting back one dollar for every $1.59 that its taxpayers send to Washington, a research group says.

Last fiscal year, the federal government provided about $3.7 billion in grants to the state and local governments in Texas, for everything from agricultural and education programs to health and community services, urban renewal and welfare.

That amounted to about $252 per person, less than in any other state, government figures show.

But Texas residents paid more than $5.9 billion in federal taxes used for such aid, according to the Tax Foundation Inc., a non-profit research organization which keeps track of such things.

That works out to $1.59 paid for every federal aid dollar received, the highest such ratio of any state in the nation, the foundation reported.

Next in line was Connecticut, which paid $1.40 in taxes for every dollar of such aid received last fiscal year, which ended Sept. 30, according to the foundation.

At the other end of the scale was Vermont, which paid only 57 cents in taxes for each federal aid dollar to its state and local governments.

Further, Texas' federal tax burden relative to the grants it receives has been increasing in recent years. In fiscal 1980, the state paid $1.40 for every dollar in such aid, and in 1981 that jumped to $1.46, according to Tax Foundation calculations.

However, the state itself is partly responsible for the situation, according to Dr. Elsie Watters, an economist and director of research for the foundation.

Ms. Watters said that for most of the federal grant programs, a state must come up with matching funds. The less a state is willing to produce in matching funds the less federal aid it can attract, she said.

And Texas, she said, "has traditionally been very conservative about its public spending."

"Many of (the programs) depend on a state's willingness to spend out of its own funds," she said. "So I think (Texans') appetite for the services financed by those matching federal funds is lower (than elsewhere) relative to their income and federal taxpaying capacity."

And that income and taxpaying capacity is relatively high in Texas, because of its large population and the wealth generated by the state's oil production, Ms. Watters said.

Of course, aid to state and local governments and the taxes used to pay for it are only part of the overall tax and spending picture.

Last year, federal expenditures of all kinds — salaries, procurement contracts, direct assistance to individuals and a host of other expenditures — totaled more than $32 billion in Texas, up from $31.6 billion the year before, the U. S. Census Bureau calculates.

That made Texas the third largest beneficiary of federal spending behind California and New York, according to Census Bureau figures.

Of the Texas total, a good chunk came from defense spending. According to the Census Bureau, more than $6.7 billion in Defense Department procurement contracts were awarded in Texas last year, and another $3.4 billion in salaries paid to active duty military personnel and Defense Department civilians in the state.

However, in terms of federal expenditures per resident, Texas still lagged behind most other states because of its large population. Federal expenditures of all kinds in Texas last year totaled only $2,174 per person, placing the state 37th among the 50 states.

And using Tax Foundation calculations, that still left Texas residents paying more in federal taxes than was returned to the state in federal expenditures of all kinds.

The total federal tax burden on Texas residents, including the $5.9 billion that went for state and local aid, was about $41 billion last fiscal year, up from $36 billion the year before, the foundation calculated.

Per person, that worked out to about $2,732, a level that ranked 15th among the states, according to the foundation.

However, in its own comparisons, the foundation prefers to deal neither with a state's total federal tax burden, nor with the total amount of money that flows into the state from the federal government.

It focuses only on federal aid to state and local governments, and the portion of the federal tax load that goes to pay for such aid.

Ms. Watters said this is because it is more difficult to reliably track other kinds of federal funds to their ultimate destination and produce an accurate state-by-state breakdown.

The Census Bureau itself points out that some federal spending simply cannot be broken down by state, and the data it does provide is carefully qualified by several pages of footnotes.

Further, in calculating tax burdens, the foundation does not use figures for the amount of taxes actually collected in each state because it considers these misleading.

For example, most of the federal tax on cigarettes is collected in three or four big tobacco producing states, said Ms. Watters. But the actual tax burden is spread across the country, where the cost of the tax is passed on to consumers, she said.

So using a complex formula, the foundation attempts to calculate the actual tax burden on residents of the various states, rather than using the amount collected in each state.

In terms of actual collections, the Internal Revenue Service reported that it received more than $50 billion in taxes from Texas last fiscal year, up from about $48 billion the year before.

However, using its formula, the foundation arrived at an actual tax burden on Texas residents of about $41 billion last year.

"Many of (the programs) depend on a state's willingness to spend out of its own funds. So I think (Texans') appetite for the services financed by those matching federal funds is lower (than elsewhere) relative to their income and federal taxpaying capacity."

Teen-ager finds love in foster home

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Kimberly finally has her own home.

Not a house, but a home with a mom, dad, two brothers and a sister.

Seventeen-year-old Kimberly is a foster child. She has been in foster care for three years.

It took three moves, but Kimberly found a place filled with love.

"I'm not ashamed of being in a foster home," Kimberly said. "Most of my friends know.

"I was scared when I met with the people," she added, referring to her first experience in a foster home.

"I still wanted to be with my mom. Now I feel very comfortable."

In fact, Kimberly said it was the comfort that allowed her to call Mrs. Pilkington "mom" the day she moved in seven months ago.

Kimberly doesn't display any of the stereotype traits of some children who are placed in foster care. She doesn't "act" out her anger — demonstrating rebellious behavior, such as smoking, drinking or using drugs.

"In a foster home I don't have to worry where my next meal is coming from, where I'll sleep or where my mom is.

— Kimberly

INSTEAD HER foster mother sees Kimberly as a "normal" teen-ager. She needs privacy. She likes to dance, roller skate and go to the mall. Her favorite movie is "Return of the Jedi."

Nevertheless, the petite blond has felt rejected. Kimberly wouldn't discuss the events that led to her foster care. She only said her mother's lifestyle was different.

"I was mad at my (natural) mom for letting this happen, but I was thinking about myself," Kimberly said. "Now, I feel that my mom and I made the right decision.

"In a foster home I don't have to worry where my next meal is coming from, where I'll sleep or where my mom is.

"She's my mom," Kimberly said, looking toward Mrs. Pilkington.

This is the Pilkingtons' first experience with a foster child. And their first experience with a teen-ager.

"For years we talked about having a foster child," Mrs. Pilkington said.

"I WENT THROUGH a lot of the 'I don't know. Would it take away my privacy?' Then, we met Kimberly through our church."

Mrs. Pilkington and Kimberly agree their religious beliefs have helped them through the adjustment period.

"Kimberly is very active in church," Mrs. Pilkington said. "I don't know if it would have worked out as well — because of my (natural) children — but Kimberly believes in the same things we do.

"I don't regret the intrusion. Our lifestyles just changed a little. We didn't have the problems we anticipated — not with a foster child, but with a teen-ager. There aren't any of the discipline problems that other parents talked about."

Kimberly said she doesn't feel different from any other teen-ager. There are house rules and regulations to follow. But it did take some time to adjust to her new brothers and a sister. She went through a transformation at the Pilkingtons. Kimberly, who has a natural brother and sister, was the youngest.

"At first I thought I was going to go crazy," she said, laughing. "It was hard to cope with the noise. I went from the youngest to the oldest and I'm not the baby anymore."

Mrs. Pilkington said she's noticed a change in Kimberly during the last seven months.

"I can see a difference from when she first came," Mrs. Pilkington said. "She used to pout a lot when she didn't get her way.

"SHE HAS TO be the pickiest eater I've ever seen. If she doesn't like what we're having, she doesn't have to eat. She's old enough to know what she's doing to her body, but I didn't want to make a scene in front of the younger children."

Kimberly, smiling, added "I like starchy foods — bread, potatoes and corn, not green beans and carrots."

Mrs. Pilkington said the "problems" — if any — have all been minor. It took time to adjust to the lifestyle, but now Kimberly is part of the family. She's loved.

"Kimberly got very upset with me one night," recalled Mrs. Pilkington. "When she first came, all her clothes were purple.

"I TRIED TO GET her to wear another color. She got upset. She ended up going to her room at 6 p.m. and stayed there. The next day everything was O.K.

"This may sound like a little thing, but it was a real big thing to Kim. And now she understands. In fact, I even made her a purple bathing suit this summer.

"None of these things are because she's a foster child, but because she's a teen-ager."

Kimberly plans to stay with the Pilkingtons after she turns 18. She wants to go to college and then on a "mission" for her church. Then, maybe, marriage.

"I want kids," Kimberly said. "I know what the problems my (natural) mom had. I wasn't abused. I won't abuse my children. Maybe, I'll get married when I'm 24 or 25."

Mrs. Pilkington leaned toward Kimberly, adding: "I'm too young to be a grandmother."

Kimberly can talk to the Pilkingtons. She loves them.

"It (the love) grows," she said. "I don't have any doubt this will be permanent. To me I think a foster home is a place a child can stay and be loved. They don't have to worry about mom screaming or dad coming home drunk."

"We treat her as one of our own kids, not the maid or babysitter. We love her," Mrs. Pilkington added.

"To me it's not a foster home, a foster child," Kimberly said. "To me it's a home."

It takes special people to be foster parents

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Kimberly isn't an ordinary foster child. The 17-year-old has learned to accept her experiences.

"I haven't worked personally with Kimberly, but I know that she's had a lot of work — good caseworkers," said Jeannie Hunt, a foster home recruiter.

"Caseworkers spend a lot of time with the foster parents and child," she added. "The foster parents need to be flexible. We ask them not to judge the natural parents in front of the foster child, but to understand."

It's not easy to be foster parents.

Foster care means taking care of a child who is separated from his parents. The child may be afraid, confused and lonely. The foster parent opens his home, knowing the child must leave someday.

"Kimberly's case is unusual," Ms. Hunt said. "She's in permanent foster care. Most children who are in a foster home are returned to their natural parents. It's a temporary home until things can be worked out with their natural parents."

Ms. Hunt said the reasons for foster care range from a divorce to abuse, but "usually it's a life-endangered situation.

"Our first concern is to place the child in a home. We have a need for homes that will take teen-agers, minorities and the handicapped. It's easy to get the children from zero to 5 years old placed."

Ms. Hunt said change is upsetting. But it is especially difficult for "children who have not been shown the right way to live.

"Not all foster children act out (their problems)," she said. "We've had many foster parents who say they can see a definite improvement."

The foster child must adjust to their new homes, families. They must familiarize themselves to different routines, habits.

Sometimes when a child is placed in a foster home, he may be angry, Ms. Hunt explained. His feelings may affect his behavior.

"Sometimes they can't trust or open up. We depend on the foster parent to be patient. We ask them to understand the natural parents were probably like the child, but they weren't found."

Single parents are eligible to become a foster parent, but not all parents can be foster parents. It takes a full-time commitment.

Ms. Hunt said character and integrity are required, backed up with three references. All family members are interviewed. Natural parents are not told where the child is staying, but they are allowed and encouraged to visit their child at the Texas Department of Human Resources.

According to Ms. Hunt, the department must certify a home to become a foster home. A foster home worker does a home study, which includes visits and discussions about the family's readiness to provide foster care. The department pays foster parents room and board for all foster care — $8 a day. Medical, dental and clothing allowances are furnished.

"It takes a special person to become a foster child, but the rewards are great," Ms. Hunt said.

She added the potential foster parent must go through rigid questioning, "but no tougher than you'd ask for the protection of your own children in someone else's home."

Midland has nine "active" foster homes — "We need 30," Ms. Hunt said. "Because of the lack of foster homes in Midland, many children are placed outside the county. If we don't have a foster home and it is a life-endangered situation, the children can stay at the Odessa Emergency Center for 30 days."

Kelview Heights minister finds joy in his work

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

Midlander in Profile

Two men. A few women. A handful of children. And $9 in the offering.

It was grand opening of Kelview Heights Baptist Church in 1961, and Frank Johnson had just ascended the podium as pastor. A rookie preacher fresh out of Arlington Baptist College, he had heard through a friend that a few families in Midland wanted to start an independent Baptist Church; his inquiry had brought him here.

He was destined for a long stay.

Today, 22 years later, Johnson still serves as pastor, and he no longer ministers to the needs of a few; Kelview now boasts more than 4,000 members.

"Very few people in the world get to do what they'd rather do than anything else in the world and get paid for it. I do, so I'm fortunate," said Johnson, who says he's "past 50."

A native of southeastern Oklahoma, Johnson found himself in his mid-20s living in Houston with a wife and children but without the Lord.

"I wasn't brought up in a Christian home, but I had two little boys and I wanted my wife to start taking them to Sunday school," he recalled. "She started, and she trusted the Lord and she got me to go with them. I saw it wasn't something the boys needed; it was what Daddy needed. And I trusted the Lord."

But while filling a void within him, salvation also created a yearning that seemingly could not be fulfilled. He tried teaching Sunday school, spending all his days off working with the church, groping for the solution.

Then it came. In 1957 he surrendered to the ministry.

"I tried everything that you could do for the Lord to satisfy the longing I had in me and nothing worked," he said. "When I said, 'Lord, I'll preach,' that took care of it."

He gained formal training at Arlington Baptist College, and, after assuming the Kelview pastorship, obtained a bachelor's degree from Baptist Christian College and a master's from Baptist Christian University.

Having stayed at one church 22 years, Johnson has been in a position to watch lives develop and mature.

"I've watched a generation that was 10 or 12 years old when I came grow to almost middle age," he said. "Now, their children are becoming teen-agers. I've had a chance to have a part, hopefully, in all the lives. Helping people — there's nothing else like it. Experientially, it's more blessed to give than receive. There's nothing like seeing people that you've had a part in, living well-adjusted, happy lives."

Being in the "people business," as Johnson is, is a tough job sometimes. "Every walk of life and every profession would have its difficulties," he said. "In my case...there are very, very difficult times. You have to bury people that mean more to you than anything in the world. Two years ago I preached my dad's funeral...I was afraid I couldn't make it through, but the Lord had given me grace and He helped me.

"I love people and I grieve with people and grieve for people. Manual labor is not what tires you out; it's emotional exhaustion that gets to you. You can lie down and rest from manual labor, but for emotional exhaustion many times there isn't any rest."

But Johnson believes any disadvantages to being a pastor are far outweighed by the advantages.

"There's probably more joy than in any of the other (professions)," he said. "Like anyone else, we all have our problems. We have personal problems, we have family problems, we have occupational hazards. But it's for the most part a joyful life."

Part of the reason that Johnson can cope with the emotional stress is because of his hobby — golf.

"Eight years ago I had a little physical problem and went down through Scott and White Hospital and a doctor told me if I'd play some golf or do something for a break I'd be a lot more well-adjusted. 'He said, 'If you don't, in 15 years you're going to be an old man.' "

Johnson took the advice and now plays as often as he can.

"It completely captivates me. When I'm looking at the golf ball and swinging at it, my mind is there and no place else. Different things do this for different people, but golf does it for me. My wife says I'm a different man when I play golf."

As one who says he has long been concerned with preacher schools, Johnson has just accepted the presidency of Pacific Coast Baptist College in San Dimas, Calif. On alternate weeks during the school year he will be at the 300-student college, preaching chapel and handling administrative duties.

"In a 100-mile radius of the school there are 10 million people," he noted, "so it's just a tremendous opportunity for us to start churches in that area where they're needed badly."

But even with his new duties, he will continue his ministry at Kelview, where, he believes, some of the friendliest people in Midland are members.

"Very few people in the world get to do what they'd rather do than anything else in the world and get paid for it. I do, so I'm fortunate."

— Frank Johnson

Miss San Antonio crowned Miss Texas

FORT WORTH (AP) — Dana Marie Rogers, Miss San Antonio, was crowned Miss Texas Saturday night and will represent the state at the Miss America Pageant in Atlantic City.

Cynthia Green, Miss Duncanville, is the first runnerup; Stephany Samone, Miss Greenville, is the second runnerup; Tamara Lynn Hext, Miss Hurst-Euless-Bedford, is the third runnerup; and Sonna Warvell, Miss Lubbock, is the fourth runnerup.

Miss Rogers, 22, is a brown-eyed blonde from Boerne. She is a senior and a radio, television and film major at the University of Texas. She is a singer and hopes to become a sucessful entertainer.

Besides the trip to the Miss America Pageant, the new Miss Texas will receive a one full-year scholarship to Texas Wesleyan College, three additional years of tuition scholarship, a wardrobe, an automobile, a $1,000 award, a color television, jewelry, a $500 gift certificate and a personal home computer.

All the runnersup receive a choice of scholarships, a cash scholarship to the college of their choice and a gift certificate.

Miss Green, 20, who has green eyes and dark brown hair, is a senior pre-med major from Dallas at Texas A&M University. She is a pianist who said her ambition is to attend medical school.

Quadruplets born

HOUSTON (AP) — Quadruplets were born Saturday to a Bellaire couple, officials at St. Luke's Episcopal Hospital said.

The two boys and two girls were born at about 11 a.m. to James and Ann Powers, both 33, said hospital public information director Hazel Haby.

Ms. Haby said the babies were in stable condition at Texas Children's Hospital's newborn intensive care unit. The babies each weighed between three and four pounds and were delivered by Caesarian section, she said.

Beer sales approved

LOS YBANEZ — Residents of this tiny Dawson County community on the outskirts of Lamesa have voted to allow over-the-counter beer sales.

In a controversial local option election Saturday, residents passed the measure by a vote of 52 to one, according to County Clerk Billie Bingham.

But a lawsuit challenging Los Ybanez' validity as a municipal entity is pending in 106th State District Court and officials say the beer issue is still in limbo.

Filed by two Dawson County landowners, the suit alleges Los Ybanez Mayor Israel Ybanez and his wife Mary established the town of 300 residents solely as a means to sell beer.

"The defendants and other persons conspired and adopted a scheme by which they intended to obtain a license for the sale of beer," says the suit.

It further alleges that the site, known as the Labor Camp, never was a town and is not one now.

Last December, District Judge James Clack ruled Los Ybanez was illegal because of a surveyor's error in defining its boundaries.

Mayor Ybanez could not be reached for comment Saturday.

A Review

In "Stroker Ace" Burt Reynolds teams up with some old and some new friends to make yet another "road" movie. Only this time the asphalt that gets burned is on any oval track on the NASCAR circuit.

A three time NASCAR champ, Reynolds as Stroker learns his "stand on it" style as a kid, fleeing from revenuers who are hot on the trail of his good-natured moonshining pal and pa, Doc and Dad Seegle (John Byner and Frank O. Hill). Shot in sepia tones, this opening sequence suggests something more than "Stroker Ace" can deliver and quickly jumps from there to one hot pants-clad racetrack bunny and race track title after another until Stroker finds himself without a sponsor.

Ned Beatty comes through for him as the Southern fried chicken franchise king who is just smart enough to get Stroker to sign, unread, a contract that amounts to servitude. What follows in "Stroker Ace" is little more than Stroker's attempts to break the contract and win the girl (Loni Anderson as the public relations director for Beatty's chicken concern).

If the plot sounds weak, it is only challenged by the acting for first place. Reynolds, long since established as a top box office star, has been down this road before ("Cannonball" and "Bandit" movies) and just plain runs out of gas as Stroker. Before we could always count on a twinkle in his eye as a cue for a joke to follow, but even in the movie's outtakes (sequences left out of the final version usually due to flubs) that roll under the credit list, the mistakes are not funny.

Running on empty as well, is Loni Anderson as the innocent, virginal Pembrook Feeney. A vision in lavender, Miss Anderson puts on a simpy, soft, little-girl voice and goes about setting up foolish and embarrassing publicity gimmicks for the chicken franchises (the chicken suit act has been done before and better by Richard Pryor and Gene Wilder in "Stir Crazy"). Known for her stylishly cool wisecracking secretary role in the TV series "WKRP," Miss Anderson deserves better — and so do we.

Jim Nabors as Stroker's ace mechanic, Lugs, doesn't have too far to stretch in "Stroker Ace" and even gets to ply his mellow vocal tones in several scenes. Ned Beatty reprises his dumb good ol' boy routine for the umpteenth, and now tiring, time. But it is Parker Stevenson as Stroker's prime competition on the track who is a caricature of a caricature and utterly ridiculous.

This leaves only John Byner and football great Bubba Smith as Arnold, Beatty's chauffeur, for any support in the supporting cast and they play it straight, showing that laughs aren't always preceeded by a wink of the eye.

On hand to make the racecar angle believable are driving legends Cale Yarborough and Neil Bonnett, who share credible one-liners. And there are plenty of long lens track sequences for fans complete with crashes, both real and staged.

Directed by "Cannonball & Bandit" director, Hal Needham, and based on the novel "Stand On It" by Robert K. Ottum and William Neely, "Stroker Ace" screeches to a stop shortly after getting the starting flag and would probably have been better had Reynolds stuck with the moonshining angle and given Miss Anderson the part of a modern day Daisy Mae. As it is, the laughs are few, the characters are weak, and the story is going nowhere.

Rated PG, "Stroker Ace" has some fast talking Charlie Daniels music that sounds like the fifth verse of his latest hit, while keeping the wholesome formula of the previous Reynolds movies. There is no doubt that there is a need for movies the family can see together, but with "Stroker Ace," it's time Reynolds hung up his heavy-leaded shoes.

Auditions for MCT's 'Little Foxes' set

Auditions for Midland Community Theatre's production of Lillian Hellman's 1934 masterpiece "The Little Foxes" are set for July 24 and 25 at 7:30 p.m. in the Redfern Room at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Roles are available for six men, ages 20-60, and four women, ages 20-45.

Male roles include three brothers, Ben, Oscar and Leo Hubbard, who connive to gain power and wealth; Horace Giddens, their brother-in-law and Regina's wealthy husband; William Marshall, a northern businessman; and Cal, the Giddens' black butler.

Female roles include Addie, the Giddens' black maid; Birdie Hubbard, Oscar's wife; Alexandra, Regina's daughter; and Regina, one of the best roles written for a woman in modern American theater. This role was played on Broadway by Tallulah Bankhead and Elizabeth Taylor, and on screen by Bette Davis.

The production will be directed by Michael Spicer, MCT's children's theater director. For more information call Spicer, 682-2544.

Museum of Southwest has new exhibit

ENTERTAINMENT

The Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., recently installed a new exhibit — "Molas from Collections in the Midland Community." The exhibit will be up until Aug. 14.

Molas are decorative panels on blouses worn by Cuna Indian women. The Cuna are one of the three distinct Indian groups presently found in Panama. Most inhabit the San Blas Islands of the Atlantic Coast. Cuna women are the only people in the world known to make molas.

Mola designs are balanced bilaterally. Both sides of a mola panel are typically symmetrical, but there are slight variations in color and design. Those on display at the museum are on loan from 10 private collections, including those of Midlanders Kay Coffee, Morgan Gafford, Amy I. Gross, Suzanne Y. Herbert, Mayme Kroenlein Martin, Mrs. William C. Morrow, Mrs. Bruce Pearson, Mrs. Hal Rachael, Mrs. Edwin J. White and Mrs. Max E Wright.

Also on display at the museum are the exhibits Progressions and Contemporary Lithography from Tamarind.

Progressions, on display until Aug. 24 in the Stables Gallery, is an exhibit of recent work by the winners of last year's juror awards for the Southwestern Area Art Show. This annual exhibit affords the museum an opportunity to display works by regional artists. Each year the juror gives cash prizes for the best works in the show.

Bill Peterson, editor of Artspace Magazine, was last year's judge for the Southwestern Area Art Show. From the 56 pieces in the show, he selected six artists whose works were "created more in the spirit of pioneering and adventure, than traditional paintings that deal with western themes," to receive juror awards.

Recipients were Jimmy Green of Midland, Suzette Young-Fulesday of Odessa, Mark Lavatelli of Irving, Rick Williams of Austin, Future Akins and Ken Dixon, both of Lubbock.

On display until Aug. 14, "Contemporary Lithographs From Tamarind"is a representation of the quality and diversity of recent work from the Tamarind Institute in Albuquerque, N.M.

The goal of Tamarind, established in 1960 through the support of the Ford Foundation, is to serve as a center for training master printers, who are experiencing with new printing techniques in collaboration with artists.

The 10 prints on display represent the achievements of Tamarind and the significant contributions of contemporary lithography to the art world. Works by Philip Pearlstein, Fritz Scholder, Roy DeForest, Kenneth Price, Paul Brach, Jaune Quick-to-See Smith, Nathan Oliveira and Deborah Remington are different in their expression and subject matter.

Also on display at the museum is the Hogan Collection of works by the Taos Society of Artists, the 17th annual Southwestern Area Art Show and selections from the museum's permanent collection.

Hours are Monday-Saturday 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday 2-5 p.m. There is no admission charge.

Pickwick Players stage 'Dirty Work'

The Pickwick Players are staging "Dirty Work at the Crossroads" at 1:30 p.m. Saturday, July 17, 23 and 24 at the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave.

"Dirty Work" is a classic melodrama. Adam Oakland (Josh Jones) is engaged to Nellie Lovelace (Lynn Granberry) until that dastardly villain, Munro Murgatroyd (Stuart Williams) intervenes, assisted by the nefarious Ida Rhinegold (Jennifer DeLong). The day is saved by the faithful, though not too bright, Mookie MaGuggins (Stan Williams).

Others in the production include Elaine McKinney as Mrs. Asterbilt, Maria Bakke as Leone Asterbilt, Julie DeLong as Fleurette, Christi Irish as Little Nellie and Sharon Graham as the Widow Lovelace. Scott Innes is the stage manager.

Soft drinks and refreshments will be sold in the lobby, novelties will be on sale and booing of the villains is encouraged. Tickets, priced at $3, are on sale at Theatre Midland. Reservations may be made by calling Theatre Midland's box office, 682-4111.

Art show on display at MC

The 1983 Texas Watercolor Society Show, which includes 80 works by present or former residents of Texas, is on display at Midland College's McCormick Gallery through July 28.

The touring show was selected by Lawrence Calcagno from more than 500 slides submitted for consideration. Fifteen of the 80 works chosen were given awards.

One of the award winners is Midlander Warren Taylor, art instructor at MC. Taylor is a Fellow of the American Watercolor Society.

For this show, the McCormick Gallery, located in the Allison Fine Arts Building, will be open from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Midland College instructors receive awards for artworks

Midland College art instructors John Harmon and Warren Taylor recently received awards for their work.

Harmon, who works primarily in ceramics, has work included in the "Survey of Ceramic Art in Texas," an invitational show in San Antonio. He also is a major award winner in the 17th annual Southwestern Area Art Show on display at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave. In addition, his work was selected for the 22nd annual Tri-State Art Show in Beaumont.

Taylor, a Fellow in the American Watercolor Society, received awards for paintings in the Rocky Mountain National Show in Denver, Colo., and an award at the Jefferson-Washington National Painting Show in Pittsburgh.

Taylor's works are included in Watercolor U.S.A. in Springfield, Mo.; the National Watercolor Society Show in Palm Springs, Calif.; the Texas Fine Arts National Exhibition in Austin; and the mid-year exhibition of the Butler Institute of American Art, Youngstown, Ohio.

One of Taylor's watercolors was a major award winner in the Texas Watercolor Society's 34th annual exhibition, the touring part of which is on display at McCormick Gallery, Allison Fine Arts Building, on MC's campus. He also took an award at the Austin Contemporary Visual Arts Exhibition.

During the latter part of the summer, Taylor will instruct in watercolor technique at the Chautauqua Institute, Chautauqua, N.Y.

'El Vaquero' exhibit on display at Midland's First City National

The hot, dusty world of vaqueros is captured in "El Vaquero: Genesis del Cowboy Texano," on display at First City National Bank of Midland this month.

"El Vaquero," a traveling exhibit from the University of Texas Institute of Texan Cultures at San Antonio, consists of more than 100 photographs and the text, in English and Spanish, presents an intimate view of Mexican vaqueros, and their everyday work on a large ranch in northern Mexico.

The exhibit's striking photographs, taken by William D. Wittliff, document the everyday reality of the vaqueros' life on the range. They were taken when Wittliff lived and traveled with a group of vaqueros on a roundup.

The exhibit is in the bank's main lobby. For more information call Cindy Ford, 685-5439.

Star rally 'blitzters' Chi Blitz

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — All Kelvin Bryant could think of was "hang onto the ball" as he dodged into the end zone to lift the Philadelphia Stars to a 44-38 overtime victory over the Chicago Blitz in the first United States Football League semifinal playoff game Saturday.

"I was just trying to squeeze it, hang onto it, just get over," Bryant said after he and other players were doused with champagne in the jubilant Stars' locker room.

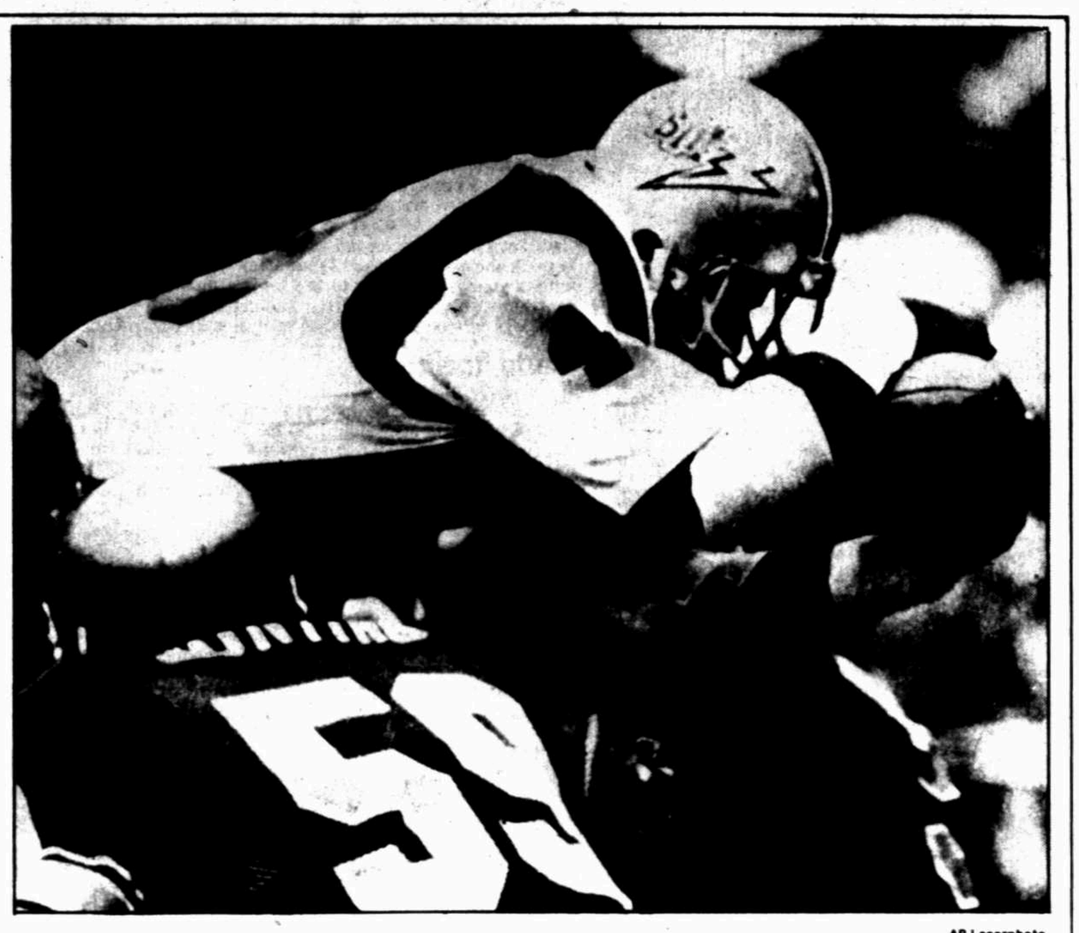

Philadelphia came from a 21-point deficit, overcoming 84-degree temperatures and six turnovers that led directly to Chicago scores. The Stars tied the game at 38 with 50 seconds left in regulation play on quarterback Chuck Fusina's 11-yard pass to Tom Donovan and David Trout's extra point. Then they marched from their own 27 on 14 plays to win 7:02 into overtime on Bryant's 1-yard run.

"It would have been easy to get down on myself," said Fusina, who was intercepted four times and fumbled the ball away once. "But nobody on the team got down on me. They just kept saying we've come from behind before, we could do it again."

Chicago Coach George Allen called it "one of the best games in history."

"It's the first time in my coaching career that we took the ball away seven times and still lost," he said. "But the Stars got their momentum going and we just couldn't stop them."

Jim Mora, coach of the Stars, remembered that his team had trailed Chicago by 14 points in a game in May but came back to win 31-24.

Chicago Blitz' Kevin Long leaps over Philadelphia Stars' defenders for first TD in USFL playoff game Saturday.

"So, today, we knew we had a shot," he said. "The key was execution, coming up with the big plays and great calls by (offensive coordinator) Joe Pendry. We didn't make any of the mistakes we had been doing earlier in the game."

The Stars will meet the winner of Sunday's Michigan-Oakland game next Sunday in Denver for the first USFL championship.

Bryant, named the USFL Player of the Year this week, finished 142 yards rushing on 24 carries.

The Stars trailed 38-17 before mounting the fourth-quarter spurt, capped by Fusina's short pass over the middle, which Donovan carried into the end zone. It was Fusina's third touchdown pass of the game.

Philadelphia's other fourth quarter points came on TD passes by Fusina of 17 yards to Scott Fitzkee and 2 yards to Jeff Rodenberger, plus a 42-yard field goal by Trout.

After a 42-yard Chicago punt, the Stars steadily moved the ball downfield from their own 30 with 2:46 left before Fusina hit Donovan.

In their last meeting, the Stars stormed back for a 31-24 victory over the Blitz, using three Chicago turnovers for the decisive scores.

Chicago quarterback Bobby Scott passed for two touchdowns as the Blitz intercepted four passes and recovered three fumbles by the Stars, turning six of those plays into points.

Big D-to-MC connection keys Chaps' success

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the last article of a two-part series dealing with Midland College basketball coach Jerry Stone: his philosophy of coaching and a look at some of his former players.

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Midland College can date its basketball success back to the hiring of Jerry Stone as head coach in 1977. In his first year, the Chaparrals compiled their worst record in his six-year tenure, 16-14.

For the next three seasons things steadily improved. The Chaps posted records of 21-11, 27-6 and 30-3, respectively, before reaching their peak: The National Junior College championship in 1981-82 with a mark of 30-3. MC almost repeated last season with a 31-4 record. JUCO champion San Jacinto eliminated the Chaps in the first round of tournament play.

A big part of the success Stone and the Chaparrals have had can be attributed to Dallas, or rather to graduates of the Dallas High School system.

"In 1977-78, the whole thing started with Cullen Mayfield of (Dallas) South Oak Cliff," said Stone. "He was 5-foot-7 and had as much speed as Spud (a 5-6 Chap star the past two seasons) but was not as quick with the ball. We persuaded him to come out here when the Midland program was a little shaky. That got our Dallas Connection started.

"Looking back, Cullen is about the only player on the team that could have played for us now. The others were good players, but not exceptional ones."

After leaving MC, Mayfield went on to finish his playing days with NAIA's Midwestern in Wichita Falls.

"He broke his leg at the end of his second year here and I think that hurt his chance at a Division I school," said Stone.

THE FOLLOWING year the Chaps signed 6-3 guard Robert Tate. "He was one of the best shooters we've ever had here," said Stone. "He was a lot like Nate Bufford (a 1982 MC grad) only a much better jumper — he could stuff it — only he wasn't as good a ball handler.

Tate went on to play for Idaho State in the NCAA Big Sky Conference and was picked by Milwaukee in the late rounds of the NBA draft after his senior year. He didn't make the cut.

THE FIRST local boy to star for Midland College came in 78-79, 6-5 forward-post Charles Johnson, a graduate of Midland High.

"He was the best hustler we had every day.," said Stone. "The guy didn't know how to loaf. He loved the game. He was the first All-American first team player we had a Midland College."

Johnson was named All-American in his sophomore year, the year MC was ranked No. 1 most of the season and was eliminated from the JUCO race in Regional competition. He went north to Lubbock after leaving Midland and played for Texas Tech's Red Raiders until he got into trouble his senior year and was kicked off the team.

The Chaparrals picked up two other players that year, Chucky McGill, a 6-4 high post from South Oak Cliff and Kenneth 'Big Time' Young, a 6-5 forward from Houston Wheatley.

"He (Young) introduced the slam dunk to Midland," said Stone. "Kenneth wasn't a complete player but was an exciting crowd pleaser. He got some slams that were unbelievable. He was a good rebounder."

McGill and Young graduated to Baltimore University of the NCAA.

THEN CAME national notority with McGill, Young and Johnson back for another year.

"In 1980-81, we were ranked No. 1 all year and ended up 30-3. We lost to Cooke County in Regionals and I think they finished sixth in the nation," said Stone. "That was the year we found out what pressure was. It was the first time we were favored to win the Region and everything. Everybody was trying to beat us and we didn't know what to think.

"I was really proud that year because the two teams we lost to (before Cooke) beat us here back-to-back and we went on to avenge those losses on their courts. I think it proved we were a good team."

Though nobody likes to lose a game, especially a team favored not to, Stone felt those losses were important.

"We needed those losses to wake us up, but who likes to get beat," he said. "Once we got beat (the first time) it shocked us and we turned around and lost the next one.

"I remember that year in a way of not being much fun. I was dealing with a bunch of guys who had forgotten how they got where they were and I learned how to handle a winning streak. It's like how you handle a losing one only it isn't as painful. But, it was a worrisome year. How to keep them up for games? How to keep practice interesting?

Two players that joined the Chaps that year became instrumental in the Chaps drive for the JUCO title in 81-82: 6-3½ Puntus Wilson (again from South Oak Cliff) and Lance McCain (Andrews).

"WILSON AND McCain were the only two players we had back," said Stone, "but Spud, Chester (Smith), and Jerome Crowe joined the show. From day one it was a Cinderella story.

Webb (5-6 guard) and Smith (6-6 post) were teammates at Dallas' Wilmer-Hutchins and Crowe (6-4 forward) came down from South Garland, Okla.

Things didn't start out well. We had 17 players at the start of the year and when we got back from Christmas break there were only nine."

Nine players! Not even enough for practice scrimmages, but enough to become champions.

Jackson extends Cub slump to six in row

JACKSON — Jackson pitcher Roger McDowell pitched a complete game shutout and allowed only five singles in a 4-0 win against the Midland Cubs Saturday night.

The Cubs, eight days ago atop the standings in the Texas League West, have dropped six straight. Anemic hitting has plagued the Cubs in the slide.

In fact, against the Mets, Cub batters couldn't get the ball out of the infield. McDowell fanned eight, one Cub was picked off base, and the remaining outs all came on ground balls. There were zero Met outfield putouts.

The Cubs' slump was dramatized in the second inning. Tom Lombarski walked to start the inning and Mike Anicich was beaned by McDowell. But after a ground ball out by Trey Brooks, Randy LaVigne hit into a rally-stopping double play.

In the sixth, Anicich and LaVigne were at the corners with one down when Cub catcher Don Hyman went down on a called third strike. Hyman, arguing the call, was ejected by umpire Tom Sayad. A.J. Hill bounced to short to end the threat.

Jackson scored one in the third and picked up two more in the seventh.

For Midland, the road to recovery is a rugged one today against Mets' pitcher Joe Georger. Georger, a TL All-Star selection, is 9-1 and has notched five straight wins. Stan Kyles(5-8) will be on the mound for Midland.

Grant Teaff
...Baylor job labeled Grant's Tomb

Baylor not end of road

It was at a press conference during the 1972 Cotton Bowl festivities that they introduced Emory Bellard Texas A&M's new football coach.

The press people wouldn't let Emory go. They wanted every detail. He had been one of the state's outstanding high school coaches at Breckenridge and San Angelo. His Bobcat teams dominated West Texas' District 3-4A, now 5-4A, during the 1960s. His teams probably would have dominated the state as well, only Gene Mayfield's teams kept getting in the way, first at Borger and then later Gene ended Emory's "Little Southwest Conference" strangehold by developing Odessa Permian into a state power.

Bellard eventually won his state title, despite Permian.

THEN, AS an assistant for Darrell Royal, he invented or resurrected the Wishbone, which ever version of the story you prefer, a development that made Texas the scourge of the nation.

Envious rivals flocked to the strange looking T attack. Bear Bryant sought an audience with Royal to learn the secrets of the Wishbone. Oklahoma adopted it in mid-season. Suddenly the Sooners, who had been in a rare football doldrum, snapped out of it and Jack Mildren, who played his high school football at Abilene Cooper, became a national hero as the prototype Wishbone quarterback.

IT WAS little wonder that when Bellard got on center stage that day in Dallas they wouldn't let him off. He, obviously, had been groomed to be the SWC's next glamour coach. He was a natural. Few of Texas' legendary coaches had the Lone Star background of Bellard. And, too, Texas high school coaches every where had to be pulling for one of their own to make it big on the big time college level.

When they finally let Emory go, they brought on the other new coach in the SWC. The press stifled a yawn and one guy summed it up, "Just another Baylor coach..." got up and left. Despite his Snyder, McMurry, Texas Tech, Angelo State upbringing, Teaff wasn't detained for long. He was an after-thought, quickly questioned out of token courtesy and dismissed.

TED BATTLES BATTLE SCENE

Despite compiling the best record at College Station since the national championship year of 1939, disenchantment soon set in at A&M and Bellard, sensitive to the critical barbs, quit in mid-season. He later became head coach at Mississippi State, where he has been quite successful with a program that had been the Northwestern of the Southeast Conference.

TEAFF is still at Baylor, two SWC championships behind him and looking for a third. Since Teaff became head coach at Baylor, there have been 23 SWC coaching changes. Grant is the Dean of SWC coaches. What kind of odds would you have gotten on that in 1972? It smacks of a Believe It Or Not scenario.

Grant remembers the early days well. Even he wondered what he was stepping into. Baylor had become more than a coaching Dead End. It was a Graveyard. Fifty years without a SWC title.

Grant's predecessor, Bill Beal, was something like 1-19.

"Baylor had only five players when I came in who could have made my Angelo State team of the year before," says Teaff who can talk about it now. "The Bears were the butt of jokes. The team was down mentally."

"Rudy Feldman, the coach at New Mexico, took the job and then after a first hand visit, gave it back. And New Mexico wasn't any grid power."

In an interview, someone asked Teaff what it felt like to be a second choice.

"I told him I wasn't even a second choice, they had asked every coach in the country before they got to Feldman. I was a last choice."

"Dead end? Graveyard? Once I took over, they referred to the Baylor job as Grant's Tomb."

Don't get the idea that it has been easy. Over the years there have been bitter disappointments between the successes. You just don't win every year at a Baylor, so the victories have to be savoured when they come, like the unexpected title in 1974. And even success hasn't been without its thorns...the Cotton Bowl losses to Penn State and Alabama, the latter a real embarrassment. That's the next step, a stature-gaining win in the Dallas post-season game.

While Baylor doesn't have the mass support of a Texas, A&M or Tech, the Cotton Bowl folks can't be too unhappy when the Bears win. Their fans are loyal. In 1974, says Athletic Director Bill Menefee, "we sold more adult tickets to the Cotton Bowl than any other SWC school had ever sold. And in 1980, we broke that record."

McWilliams 2-hits LA

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Larry McWilliams fired a two-hitter to pitch the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 3-0 victory Saturday night over the error-prone Los Angeles Dodgers.

McWilliams, who faced only two batters over the minimum, gave up only a bunt single in the third inning by Dave Anderson and a single in the seventh by Dusty Baker as he pitched his third shutout of the season and handed the Dodgers their fifth straight loss.

McWilliams, 6-5, struck out nine and walked one. In his two previous shutouts, the Pirates left-hander pitched a one-hitter against San Francisco and a two-hitter against Houston.

Alejandro Pena, 7-4, was the victim of another poor showing by the Dodgers' defense. Los Angeles committed three more errors, a total of 95 for the season to lead the National League.

Pooley leads by one stroke

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Dolf Pooley shot a 4-under-par 68 Saturday for a one-stroke lead over Wally Armstrong after three rounds of the $250,000 Milwaukee Open Golf Tournament.

Pooley, 31, birdied two of his first three holes and finished with only one bogey as he established a 54-hole total of 205, 11 under par over the 7,010-yard, par 72 Tuckaway Country Club course.

Pooley started the third round tied for the lead with Mark O'Meara, at 137. O'Meara slipped to a 75 Saturday and was seven strokes back at 212.

Tied at 207 were Mark Calcavecchia, who shot a 66 Saturday, along with Dan Pohl and Ronnie Black, both of whom shot 67s.

Pooley, who has made the cut in 16 of the 18 tournaments he has entered this year, birdied his second and third holes to begin his break from the pack.

He bogeyed his last hole, but retained the lead when Armstrong played his 18th in par.

Armstrong, 38, plans to quit the tour after this season in order to spend more time with his family. But before that, he wants to cushion his bank account.

"That was the hardest decision of my life," Armstrong said. "I thought, 'Why do I have to spend $60,000 and break my head just to break even?' I just don't feel that at this point in my life that I want to pay that price."

Calcavecchia, 23, credited his hot round to a set of irons borrowed from fellow tour member Ken Green. But he said tee shots are the key here.

"The key to success here is four tee shots — the four par-5 holes," Calcavecchia said. "I've played them two-under in three days, which isn't too bad."

Don in birdie burst

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Don January's birdie barrage Saturday — including six in the first nine holes — and his second 6-under-par 65 in three days, gave him a two-stroke lead after three rounds of the $150,000 Greater Syracuse Seniors Pro Golf Classic.

En route to a nine-hole course record 29, January recovered from a disastrous 75 on Friday and set the stage for his third straight Professional Golf Association Seniors tour championship and fourth in seven events.

His 54-hole total of 205 was two strokes better than second-round leader Jim Ferree.

January set records Thursday for the Bellevue Country Club and the second-year tournament with a seven-birdie, one-bogey round of 65.

His round Saturday was identical in the number of birdies and a bogey on his finishing hole, but he was even more on target — with a 20-footer his longest birdie putt.

Ferree double-bogeyed the 18th hole of the par-71, 6,604-yard course to finish at 207, while Billy Casper shot even-par 71 and Gene Littler a 70 to share third place three shots behind January.

Trevino increases edge

BOISCHATEL, Quebec (AP) — Lee Trevino shot a 3-under-par 69 Saturday and increased his lead to four strokes after three rounds of the Canadian Professional Golfers Association champpionship.

Trevino, who shot a 65 in the rain Friday, was one of 10 golfers in the field of 75 to better par on the 6,525-yard Royal Quebec Golf Club course Saturday. Trevino's 69 gave him a 201 total, 15 under, and four ahead of Tommy Nakajima of Japan.

Nakajima, who started the day at nine under, shot a 70 to move 11 under for the 54 holes.

Dave Barr was at nine under until a double-bogey six on the par-4 17th sent him to one over for the day and seven under for the tournament.

Dan Halldorson, who started the day 10 under, struggled to a 76 to slide to six under.

Halldorson, who watched several putts lip out on the front nine, got into tree trouble when he took a triple-bogey seven on the second hole, and shot a 40 on the front nine.

Graham Gunn, who had a hole-in-one on his way to a 65 on Friday, was off-target Saturday. He shot a 75 to slip to five under.

Daniel Talbot came in at even-par 72, also five under after 54 holes.

A's deck Tigers, 3-1

Lansford hits decisive homer

DETROIT — Carney Lansford slammed a two-run homer to snap a 1-1 tie and Steve McCatty scattered seven hits in 5 1-3 innings to lead the Oakland A's to a 3-1 victory over the Detroit Tigers.

Davey Lopes led off the Oakland sixth with an infield single and scored when Lansford slammed a 1-1 pitch from Detroit starter Jack Morris, 8-8, into the lower deck in left field for his fifth home run of the season.

Detroit took a 1-0 lead in the first on back-to-back doubles by Lou Whitaker and Enos Cabell, but the A's tied the game in the fifth on Rick Peters' sacrifice fly.

McCatty, who owns a 5-2 lifetime mark against Detroit, walked one and struck out one to pick up his second straight victory and even his season mark at 3-3.

Tom Underwood worked the final 3 2-3 innings for the A's to pick up his third save.

Mariners 3, Orioles 2

BALTIMORE — Pinch-hitter Rick Sweet snapped an 0-for-21 slump with a run-scoring single in the 10th inning, giving the Seattle Mariners a 3-2 triumph over the Baltimore Orioles.

Jamie Allen opened the 10th with a bad-hop single off the glove of shortstop Cal Ripken, stole second as Dave Henderson struck out, and scored on Sweet's single under the glove of first baseman Eddie Murray.

The loser was Sammy Stewart, 2-3, the fourth Baltimore pitcher. Bill Caudill, 2-5, pitched the final two innings to notch the victory.

The Mariners, held to two hits through the first eight innings by Scott McGregor, scored two runs in the ninth to forge a 2-2 tie.

Spike Owen singled with one out and scored on a two-out double by Al Cowens for the first Seattle run. Tim Stoddard then relieved McGregor and walked Richie Zisk on a 3-2 pitch before yielding a run-scoring single by Steve Henderson.

Seattle's Glenn Abbott had shut out the Orioles for five innings, extending the Orioles' scoreless streak to 20 consecutive innings before Ripken's RBI single snapped a scoreless game in the sixth. Ken Singleton gave the Orioles a 2-0 lead in the seventh with his 10th homer in the seventh.

Abbott allowed six hits in eight innings.

Coach Chuck Cottier served as acting manager of the Mariners for the second straight game, in the absence of Del Crandall who was attending his son's wedding in California.

White Sox 8, Brewers 3

CHICAGO — Rookie Ron Kittle hit a two-run homer and Greg Luzinski had three hits and drove in two runs Saturday to lead the Chicago White Sox to an 8-3 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

Kittle's 19th homer, a 425-foot blast after Luzinski doubled in the fourth inning, erased a 2-1 Milwaukee lead.

The White Sox scored three more in the fifth off loser Don Sutton, 6-5. Jerry Dybzinski reached on an error and Rudy Law doubled. Julio Cruz singled in Dybzinksi and after Cruz stole second, Luzinski singled home both runners.

In the eighth, Kittle doubled and scored on a single by Tom Paciorek, who stole second and scored on shortstop Robin Yount's error.

Jerry Koosman, 7-1, was the winner but needed seventh-inning help from Dick Tidrow, who notched his fifth save.

The Sox took a 1-0 lead in the first when Law singled, stole second and scored on Greg Walker's single.

Milwaukee went ahead in the second as Don Money doubled and later scored on a single by Ned Yost. Jim Gantner tripled in Yost.

Koosman sailed through the next four innings but ran into troulbe in the seventh. Ed Romero doubled and scored on a single by Yost. Gantner also singled before Tidrow came on to get Paul Molitor to hit into an inning-ending double play.

Twins 3, Indians 2

MINNEAPOLIS — Tom Brunansky smacked a tie-breaking, two-run single in the eighth inning and Ken Schrom allowed five hits in 8 2-3 innings to give the Minnesota Twins a 3-2 victory over the Cleveland Indians Saturday night.

Schrom, 7-3, struck out five and walked four before getting relief help in the ninth from Ron Davis. The reliever gave up an RBI single to Pat Tabler before posting his 13th save.

Schrom and Rick Sutcliffe, 10-4, were locked in a pitcher's duel before Brunansky snapped a 1-1 tie in the eighth with his 10th game-winning hit.

John Castino led off the eighth with a single and moved to second on Gary Ward's sacrifice bunt. After Kent Hrbek grounded out, Randy Bush was intentionally walked. Sutcliffe then walked Gary Gaetti to load the bases and was relieved by Bud Anderson. Brunansky, who entered the game hitting .199, then singled over first base to score Castino and Bush.

The Twins tied it 1-1 on Ward's two-out single in the fifth. Ray Smith led off with a double and later scored on Ward's single, his 54th RBI of the season.

The Indians took the lead in the first on two consecutive hits to start the game. Alan Bannister opened the game with a single and scored on Manny Trillo's double.

Red Sox 10, Angels 3

BOSTON—Carl Yastrzemski drove in five runs with a two-run homer and a bases-loaded double, Dave Stapleton added a solo homer and Glenn Hoffman went 4-for-4 as the Boston Red Sox routed the California Angels 10-3 Saturday.

Yastrzemski's two-run homer, his fourth of the season and 446th of his career, gave Boston a -1 lead in the second inning. His three-run double came during a six-run inning that boosted the Red Sox lead to 8-2.

Boston had 18 hits in all.

Luis Leal raised his record to 9-6 with eighth-inning help from Lee Roy Jackson.

Kansas City's U.L. Washington spins around and drops bat to avoid a close pitch.

Thon hits two as Astros win

NEW YORK — Dickie Thon belted a pair of solo home runs and Terry Puhl also homered as the Houston Astros beat the New York Mets 7-3.

Joe Niekro and Frank DiPino combined to stifle the Mets on six hits. Tom Seaver, 5-9, took the loss before a crowd of 49,596.

Puhl hit a one-out homer in the first inning, his third of the season, and Thon followed with his 11th home run. One out later, Jose Cruz walked, stole second and scored on Ray Knight's single for a 3-0 lead.

Houston scored two more runs in the fourth as Cruz came home when shortstop Jose Oquendo misplayed Luis Pujols' grounder for an error. Omar Moreno then had a run-scoring infield single.

The Mets scored twice in the bottom of the fourth on a two-run homer by Keith Hernandez, his sixth of the season.

Thon opened the fifth with a home run into the left-field bullpen, marking the third time this season he has homered twice in a game. Houston made it 7-2 in the seventh on Pujols' suicide squeeze.

Junior Ortiz had a run-scoring single in the seventh inning that chased Niekro, 6-7. DiPino allowed one hit the rest of the way to pick up his eighth save.

Cubs beat Giants

SAN FRANCISCO — Ron Cey lined a two-run homer during a four-run sixth inning and four Chicago pitchers combined on a four-hitter as the Cubs downed the San Francisco Giants 4-2.

Giants rookie Mark Davis, 0-3, had a one-hit shutout through five innings before getting into trouble by walking winning pitcher Chuck Rainey, 9-7, to start the sixth.

Gary Woods and Ryne Sandberg then singled to load the bases with no outs. Rainey scored as Bill Buckner's grounder forced Sandberg at second and Woods came home when shortstop John LeMaster threw wildly to first trying to double up Buckner. Cey then hit his 10th home run of the season and his 20th career homer at Candlestick Park to give Chicago a 4-1 lead.

Rainey left with the bases loaded and one out in the seventh after giving up his third hit, a single to Milt May, and two walks. Reliever Mike Proly struck out Joel Youngblood but walked Tom O'Malley to force in May. Craig Lefferts then came in and got Darrell Evans to ground out and end the threat.

Reds 2, Phillies 1

CINCINNATI — Johnny Bench's one-out single in the bottom of the ninth inning scored Dave Concepcion from second base with the winning run, lifting the Cincinnati Reds to a come-from-behind 2-1 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies.

Concepcion scored when Bench singled on a 0-1 pitch from reliever Willie Hernandez, 3-1, who took over in the ninth for Steve Carlton, who had earlier moved ahead of Houston'a Nolan Ryan in their neck-and-neck race for the all-time strikeout lead.

Carlton struck out six to jump ahead of Houston's Nolan Ryan as the all-time strikeout leader. Carlton's 3,575 career strikeouts put him two ahead of Ryan, who fanned 12 batters on Friday night to grab the lead for a day.

Braves 8, Expos 5

MONTREAL — Pinch hitter Randy Johnson's two-out single snapped a 10th-inning tie and Rafael Ramirez added a two-run single as the Atlanta Braves defeated the Montreal Expos 8-5.

A two-out error by Expos third baseman Tim Wallach opened the door for the go-ahead run. Biff Pocoroba followed with a single off reliever Bryn Smith, 1-4. Johnson then drove in Glenn Hubbard with a single to left.

Brett Butler followed with a single off Dan Schatzeder to load the bases before Ramirez singled in two more runs.

Terry Forster, 2-2, earned the victory with one inning of scoreless relief while Steve Bedrosian worked the 10th for his 12th save.

The Expos made it 5-5 in the bottom of the eighth when Andre Dawson and Al Oliver singled. Wallach then grounded into a double play, but Warren Cromartie followed with a run-scoring double, his fourth straight hit.

The Braves took a 5-4 lead in the eighth when Dale Murphy singled and took third on Bob Horner's single, chasing starter Steve Rogers. Jeff Reardon relieved and got one out before Hubbard followed with a sacrifice fly, tying the score. Horner then stole second and scored on Pocoroba's single.

Bonnell's homer dooms Rangers

TORONTO — Barry Bonnell stroked a two-run home run in Toronto's three-run fourth to lead the Blue Jays to a 5-1 victory over the Texas Rangers.

Luis Leal, who was relieved by Roy Lee Jackson in the eighth, scattered eight hits and boosted his record to 9-6. It was the third straight loss for Texas.

Toronto erased a 1-0 deficit in the fourth against Charlie Hough, 7-7, with the help of a throwing error by Texas shortstop Bucky Dent. With one out, Lloyd Moseby and Ernie Whitt walked and Dave Collins followed with a grounder to second. Dent got the force at second but his hurried relay to first bounced up the line, allowing Moseby to score.

After Collins stole second, Bonnell drilled his fifth homer of the season.

The Jays added two runs in the seventh. Collins led off with a single and moved to third on Bonnell's double. Alfredo Griffin drove in Collins with a sacrifice fly and Damaso Garcia added an RBI single.

George Wright put the Rangers ahead 1-0 in the top of the fourth with his eighth home run of the season.

Australia II wins Cup trial

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — First-place Australia II roared to an open water win over countrymen Advance in America's Cup trials Saturday after spotting the winless boat 27 seconds at the start.

"We jumped the gun at the start by a couple feet and had to turn back," said Warren Jones, manager of the Australia II syndicate. "But we tacked up behind her and finally caught her before the first mark. We've just got the faster boat."

The other two races in the second round-robin series produced like results. Third-place Challenge 12 of Australia chalked up a win when fifth-place Canada I withdrew with broken rigging and second-place Victory '83 of Britain sailed past sixth-place France 3.

Azzurra of Italy had the day off and dropped to fourth after sharing third with Challenge 12.

In the first race off the mark, Australia II tactician Hugh Traherne suffered his first early start in 20 races, giving Advance the advantage. But at the end of the first 4.5-mile windward leg, Australia II was 51 seconds ahead.

Australia II extended the lead to 1:58 at the fourth mark. Continuing to show difficulty downwind, Australia II's lead dropped to 1:42 at the fifth mark, but spread to 2:09 at the finish.

JIM MURRAY

TV at long last discovers Vin

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

It took baseball in its wisdom 10 years to turn Babe Ruth, the most perfect hitting machine of all time, from a pitcher into a slugger.

It took football seasons to figure out Marcus Allen wasn't a blocking back and to hand him the football.

And it took network television forever to get the message that Vin Scully should do major league baseball and stop fooling around.

It wasn't that Scully was inept at other sports. It was just that he was miscast. It was like Errol Flynn playing a faithful old sidekick. Scully could do golf and do it well. Rembrandt could probably paint soup cans or barn doors, if it came to that. Hemingway could probably write the weather. Horowitz could probably play the ocarina. But what a waste!

Nobody understands baseball the way Vin Scully does. He knows it for the laid-back, relatively relaxed sport it is. Scully is the world's best at filling the dull times by spinning anecdotes of the 100-year lore of the game. He can make you forget you're watching a 13-3 game, as we were last Wednesday night at Chicago, and take you with him to a time and place where you are suddenly watching Babe Ruth steal home. He is like a marvelous raconteur who can make you forget you're in a dungeon. He can make baseball seem like Camelot and not Jersey City.

HE KNOWS baseball fans are ancestor worshippers, like the British aristocracy, and he can invest a game with allusions to its gaudy past which give meaning to the present. We suddenly see knights in shining armor out there carrying on a glorious tradition instead of two rival factions of businessmen trying to land the order.

Football requires screaming. "They're on the five and it's second down and goal to go!" "They're on the three and it's third down and there's 29 seconds left to play!" Baseball requires humor, deft drama, a sprinkling of candor, mix well and serve over steaming hot tradition.

Scully knows the sport as few do. He learned it at the knee of Branch Rickey at the time he was most impressionable, a young, ambitious, career-oriented student out of Fordham. Scully will tell you why a batter should try to hit to right with a man on first and none out. ("The first baseman has to stay on the bag to keep the runner close, the second baseman has to cheat a step toward second in the event of a steal or a double play. There's a hole there you could dock ships.")

But, finally, the pairing of Scully with Joe Garagiola was an inspired piece of casting, not quite like Burns and Allen or the Sunshine Boys but a matchup quite as important to baseball as Ruth and Gehrig or Tinker and Evers and Chance.

IT WAS originally thought that was a lot of ego for one stage, or one microphone, but the two have locked into place like tongue in groove, or, in this case, tongue in cheek.

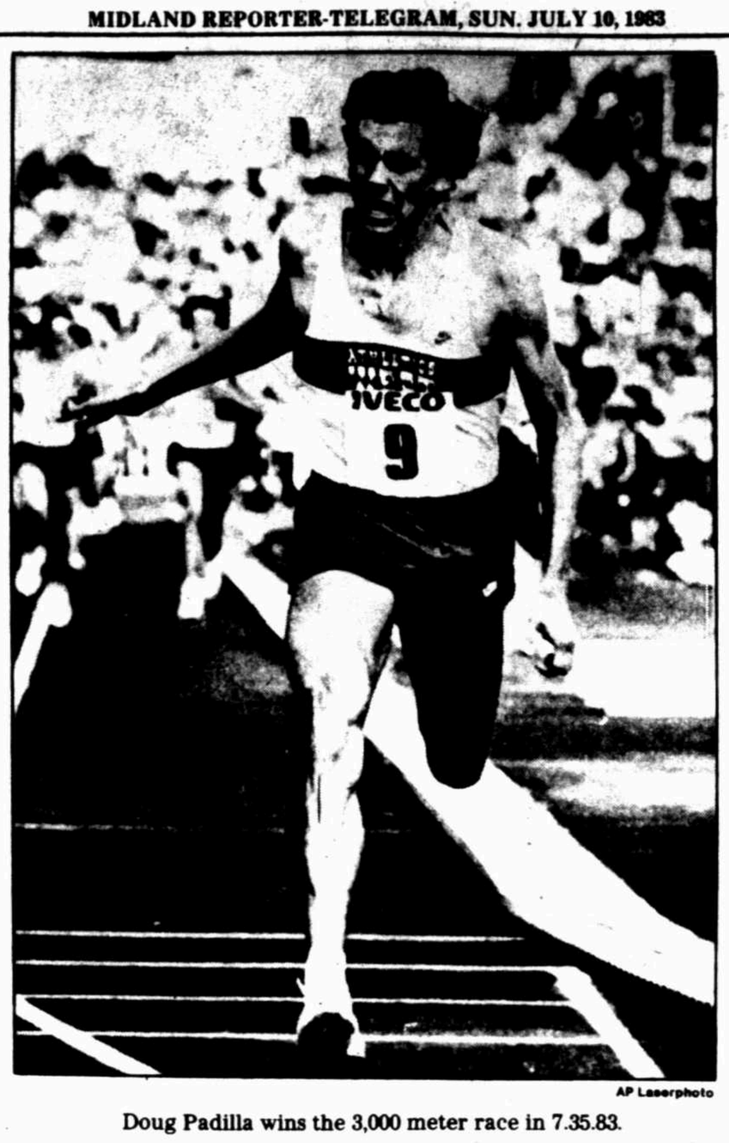

Garagiola is the locker-room wit, the jokester from the team bus. Scully brings out the best in him and he brings out the best in Scully. When the ballgame starts with the pitcher throwing two balls out of the infield and the third baseman following suit in the bottom half of the first, Garagiola pronounced it "a real Halloween inning" and later suggested that the ritual disclaimer, "This game is the property of major league baseball," be waived since presumably nobody in the big leagues wanted to claim this game.

Later, when Scully noted that a certain pitcher had "retired 53 of 58 batters who faced him," Garagiola wondered, "Why wouldn't you try to sign those five guys?"

WHEN A pitcher built along the general lines of King Kong took the mound, Garagiola observed, "He's an 8 on the seismograph. His birthday is Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday." Later, Joe said of a pitcher with a roundhouse, hanging curve, "He throws an American Legion curveball."

Later, when Scully said that a bearded infielder "looks as if he fell off a box of cough drops," Garagiola noted: "If he shaves, he only weighs 91 pounds." When a pitcher wearing more gold chains than a wine clerk appeared, Scully noted that "he looks as if he just came from Westminster Abbey."

It was all good clean fun. They brought out the best in each other. No one noticed the game was boring. Because it wasn't in the broadcast booth. That's one of the things that made this game great all along.

Lopez misses record

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Carlos Lopez of Portugal missed setting a world record for the 10,000 meters by less than a second Saturday night with a time of 27:23.44 at the Oslo Games international track and field meet at Bislett Stadium.

Steve Scott of the United States failed by 2.15 seconds of bettering the one-mile record as he won the "Dream Mile" race in 3:49.49, ahead of countryman Jim Spivey.

In last year's Oslo Games here, the 36-year-old Lopez also was the 10,000 meters winner in 27:24.39 — less than two seconds behind the world record time of 27:22.5 set by Kenya's Henry Rono in Vienna June 11, 1978. Lopez's winning times on both occasions were Bislett Stadium records.

Scott also won the mile race here last year in 3:47.69, only 0.36 seconds behind the listed world record of 3:47.33 set by Sebastian Coe of Britain in 1981.

Doug Padilla of the United States won the men's 3,000 meters race in 7:35.84 — a world best time this season.

Another Portuguese, Fernando Mamede, placed second in the 10,000 meters in 27:25.13 and Nick Rose of Britain was third in a field of almost 40 runners. Rose's time was 27:31.19.

Patrick Sjoeberg, an 18-year-old Swede, broke the Swedish national high jump record twice Saturday, winning the event in 7 feet, 7¾ inches. He cleared the hight in his second try.

Former Heisman winner arrested

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Former Louisiana State University football star Dr. Billy Cannon Sr. was arrested on counterfeiting charges Saturday, federal authorities said.

U.S. Attorney Stan Bardwell said federal agents seized more than $2 million in counterfeit $100 bills in connection with the arrest.

Cannon, 46, winner of the Heisman Trophy in 1959 and a 10-year veteran of the American Football League, was scheduled for arraignment at 5:30 p.m. CST.

"The complaint charges Dr. Cannon, Charles Whitfield, also known as Oscar Olsen (of Baton Rouge), and Timothy Melancon, of Thibodaux, La., with knowingly conspiring to possess and deal in counterfeit $100 bills."

Bardwell, in a prepared statement, said Whitfield and Melancon were arrested Friday night. Details of the arrests were not immediately available.

The $2 million in counterfeit currency was seized in the search of Asian International, Ltd., a Baton Rouge business, Bardwell said.

"These arrests are the result of a eight months of intensive investigation by the Secret Service and the office of the U.S. Attorney...into the printing and distribution of counterfeit United States currency in this area," Bardwell said.

The prosecutor said the case would be presented to a federal grand jury within the next 10 days.

"The grand jury has been investigating counterfeiting in Baton Rouge since November, 1982, and has previously issued indictments which have resulted in three convictions and the seizure of three vehicles and over $200,000 of counterfeit money," Bardwell said.

Dallas pipeline key to Chaparral success

"What happened was everybody decided that he had to do his best or we were going to get embarassed. They had to do their jobs," said Stone. "They became the most unselfish team I ever had at Midland. They'd hang together because they knew they'd hang separately. I think that's what coaches and sports writers call chemistry. It was out of necessity. We had to be unselfish.

"The team was clicking like clock work and was taking it for granted we'd win." said Stone. "You have to have goals and ours was to win nationals with this team. If you don't believe it, it won't happen."

When the Chaps won the Western Junion College Athletic Conference (their third straight title) that year and went on to Regional play, the big questions were: How long will it last? Can they go all the way?

There weren't many who believed it possible. They'd make a good show of themselves but with only nine players...

Stone believed it.

"I go to nationals every year even though I can't recruit there," he said. "I'd watched Texas Western win it one year and I pictured what I was going to say, how I would act when we won it. I'm not trying to say I know all the answers, but that it was how I felt."

At season's end, Wilson, the second straight All-American for MC, was picked up by Arizona.

LAST SEASON the Chaps recruited Bufford (6-2 guard) from Auburn, Ala., and Jackie Phinnessee (6-5 forward) from Bolivar, Tenn. Stone called it "the most interesting year. It's not often you have the chance to coach the defending national champions, about as often as you win the national title.

"For awhile during the year we had to start all over and ultimately I thought our team ready to go in March. In regionals we went back to role play and everybody did his job. I felt good about the team even though we didn't make it back to Hutch (Hutchinson, Kan., for the final 16).

"During the year the attitude wasn't real bad, but it wasn't real good either. We were dealing with a bunch of guys 18 years old who had won nationals and they felt they would do all right when they had to."

They did all right until they ran into the eventual champions: San Jacinto.

Though most of last year's Chaps have used up their eligability, Midlanders still have the possibility of seeing one of them play on national television this winter with NCAA defending champion North Carolina State: MC's third straight All-American, Spud Webb. Head coach Jim Valvano needed a ball-handling guard because of graduation and Webb seems to be his man.

Smith and Ernest Harris (6-9 from Memphis, Tenn.) are both off to the University of Alabama-Birmingham for their final years of play; Bufford is going to Southern Illinois and Crowe is off to Northeast Missouri.

Who knows where upcoming Chaparral players may end up. Midland College just might become a major recruiting stop for the big name schools, especially if Stone keeps his standard of coaching as high as it is now.

Alas, he too could follow his players down the road.

"I have a plan of being at a big school some day," said Stone. "I could live and die here in Midland and still be happy, but I do have a goal in the back of my mind."

If/when that goal comes about, best of luck. If not, Chap fans won't be doing any crying if you stay. They've come to love a winner.

Cowboys offer help in coke probe

DALLAS (AP) — Four members of the Dallas Cowboys — Tony Dorsett, Harvey Martin, Larry Bethea and Ron Springs — volunteered to cooperate with federal authorities after their names were mentioned in a cocaine investigation, team president Tex Schramm said.

"I have no indication that they are suspected of any illegalities," he said. "We've been aware of this. It's not a new situation. We're aware of it.

"I was told about it by our National Football League security people in New York, and that four players, through their attorneys, had talked to authorities on the basis of 'tell us what you want to know,'" Schramm told The Associated Press in a telephone interview Friday night.

The New York Times said Saturday that, according to federal law enforcement officials, the four players had been mentioned on an FBI wiretap as users of small amounts of cocaine and that their lawyers had been negotiating, and perhaps plea-bargaining, with authorities.

"I have no direct knowledge of the story," said Schramm. "I do know that the four players have been in touch with the authorities because their names were mentioned in some case."

Coach Tom Landry told the Dallas Morning News that he had talked with the players about allegations of drug use, but that "I don't know what was done as far as plea-bargaining."

The Times said it was not clear whether the players were named or heard on the wiretap. But U.S. Attorney James Rolfe of Dallas said that none of the four Cowboys was mentioned on the recording.

"There was a Title III electronic surveillance authorized by a federal court, but to my knowledge the (four Dallas Cowboys) were not involved in it," Rolfe told the News. "No member of any professional sports team has turned up on any electronic surveillance."

Schramm said he had not talked with the four players. "I don't intend to, because I hadn't heard anything I didn't know."

However, Schramm told the Dallas Times Herald that team officials earlier had advised the players to retain attorneys.

Thomas C. Kelly, special agent in charge of the Dallas FBI office, told the Times Herald earlier that some Cowboys were being investigated as a result of information gathered in two cocaine cases.

Martin's name has been linked to another drug matter.

He and Cowboys wide receiver Tony Hill were subpoenaed Wednesday to appear as defense witnesses at the Dallas trial of Lauriberto Ignacio, who was indicted by a federal grand jury in April for allegedly conspiring to smuggle cocaine from Brazil to Texas.

Ignacio, 39, is scheduled for trial Aug.1.

Martin and Dorsett were questioned during the past year by federal drug agents, the Dallas Times Herald reported Friday. Martin's name and that of teammate Ed "Too Tall" Jones were mentioned in court testimony earlier this year involving convicted cocaine dealers.

U.S wins over Cuba

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — Devin Durrant scored 25 points and Karl Malone added 24 as the U.S. men's basketball team raced past Cuba 119-91 Saturday night to capture the bronze medal at the XII World University Games.

The Americans were upset by Canada in Friday night's semifinals. Canada and Yugoslavia met for the gold medal following the U.S.-Cuba game.

In a no-defense game that resembled a National Basketball Association contest, Ed Pinckney and and Malcolm Thomas each scored 18 points for the Americans, who were in front 59-43 at halftime. The Cubans could get no closer than 11 points in the second half.

Moon's desperation pass beats Cats for Eskimos

HAMILTON, Ontario (AP) — Warren Moon threw a 48-yard desperation touchdown pass to Brian Kelly with 36 seconds remaining to give the Edmonton Eskimos a 35-32 season-opening Canadian Football League victory over the Hamilton Tiger-Cats Saturday night.

Kelly's reception came just 22 seconds after Hamilton's Bernie Ruoff's second field goal of the fourth quarter had given the Tiger-Cats a 32-28 lead.

Edmonton defensive back Gary Hayes opened the door for Hamilton to take the lead late in the game when he dropped Ruoff's punt on the dead run. Howard Fields recovered for Hamilton and quarterback Tom Clements took the club to Edmonton's seven-yard line.

After two incomplete passes, Ruoff came on to kick his first field of the season, a 14-yarder that erased Edmonton's 28-26 lead and put Hamilton ahead by one at 10:29.

The Edmonton offense sputtered on its next possession and the Tiger-Cats promptly moved from their 51 to Edmonton's 31 on six running plays before Ruoff added a 38-yard field goal for a 32-28 lead with 58 seconds left to play in the game.

After Edmonton's winning touchdown, Hamilton took over on their 28, but Clements' pass intended for running back Johnny Shepherd was picked off by cornerback Larry Highbaugh. The Eskimos then killed the clock to seal the victory.

The other Edmonton touchdowns were scored by Neil Lumsden, Tom Towns, Jim Germany and Waddell Smith. Dave Cutler added four point after touchdowns and Paul Hickie added a 64-yard single.

Rent It or Own It

by Bob Howle

Do you have work to be done in the higher reaches of your home? Sectional scaffolding can be rented to help with the job. These easy-to-assemble sections are cross-braced to insure a stable platform from which to work. The result will be better than if you were to attempt it from the dangling position of a ladder. Walkboards are also provided for the top section. The towers can be rolled for easy moving and built-in ladders are provided for solid footing. Sectional scaffolding makes ceiling work much easier and much more efficient.

A workman is only as good as his tools and the final result of any job displays the quality and knowledge of such a person. Now you can do the job using the same equipment that the professionals do. Rent what you need from BOB's RENTAL CENTERS INC., 2700 Rankin Hwy., 685-1271 & 2909 N. Big Spring, 684-8294. When you rent it from us you will not only receive helpful hints on its operation, but you will also be assured that the equipment has been maintained in proper operating condition. Come in and see us soon--the professionals do. Open 8-6 Mon.-Sat.

Royals edge Yankees in 11

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Pat Sheridan singled with two out in the 12th inning and came around to score when catcher Butch Wynegar's throw sailed into left field on his steal of second, lifting Kansas City to a 3-2 victory over the New York Yankees Saturday night.

Rich Gossage, 5-3, took the loss on the unearned run, and the victory went to reliever Dan Quisenberry, 4-1.

Sheridan singled just out of shortstop Andre Robertson's reach to set up the wild finish and blot what had been a pitching duel between New York's Dave Righetti and Bud Black of Kansas City.

Gossage entered the game with one out in the 11th inning, relieving Dave Righetti, whose first appearance since his July 4 no-hitter went into the books as a non-decision despite a superb performance. Righetti struck out seven and walked only two while giving up seven hits and two runs in 10 1-3 innings. Righetti has now surrendered two runs in his last 28 1-3 innings, and seven hits in 18 1-3.

Quisenberry relieved Bud Black starting the 10th. Black matched Righetti pitch-for-pitch, giving up six hits and two runs through nine innings.

Righetti ran his streak of hitless innings to 12 and scoreless innings to 19 by setting down the Royals in order in the first. But Hal McRae tripled on the first pitch of the second inning and scored to make it 1-1 on Frank White's RBI single.

The Yankees had taken a 1-0 lead in the first on walks to Don Baylor and Winfield, a long fly ball that sent Baylor to third, and Butch Wynegar's RBI single. Baylor singled in the fifth, went to second when Graig Nettles walked, and gave the Yankees a 2-1 lead on Winfield's single.

Willie Aikens tied it at 2-2 for Kansas City with his seventh home run leading off the seventh.

INTRODUCING THE CAR THAT WILL MAKE ALL CARS PERFORM BETTER.

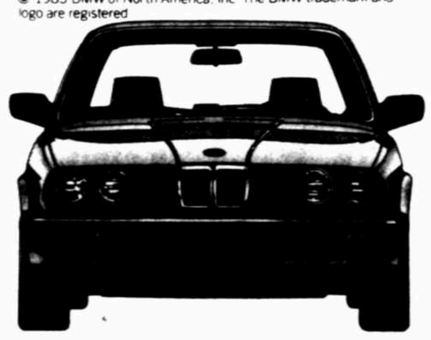

AutoWeek magazine called it "The finest quality car available." Car and Driver used the seldom-used words "magnificent," and "lovely." "New levels of refinement," agrees Autocar.

Just what new car are they referring to? The BMW 318i. A sports sedan whose engineering is so technologically advanced, we fully expect it to inspire the next generation of "technological breakthroughs" in competitive models.

For a thorough evaluation of the sports sedan that will send the automotive community scurrying back to their drawing boards, contact us for a most exhilarating test drive of the BMW 318i.

A number of abandoned motor vehicles now being held in custody by the Chief of Police, City of Midland, Texas will be offered for sale at public auction to the highest bidder for each piece of property separately, and all sales shall be for cash.

The right is reserved to accept or reject all or part of any offer and to accept the offer most advantageous to the City of Midland, Texas. All offers to buy must be "as is, where is". Two weeks will be allowed for removal of these vehicles. Any vehicle not removed during this time will be subject to storage at the rate of $4.00 per day from the date of sale.

All buyers will remain at the auction site at the end of the sale to pay for any vehicles purchased. Buyers will be issued a cash receipt at time of purchase. Auction sales receipts will be mailed to the buyer within two weeks of sale. Buyers may obtain "certificate of title" from the State of Texas with auction sales receipts.

This Public Auction will be conducted July 23, 1983 at 10:00 A.M. Place: Motor Vehicle Impounding Area at 1603 Orchard Lane, Midland, Texas. The impounding area will be open for inspection of vehicles at 8:00 A.M. July 23, 1983.

For further details covering this sale contact the Traffic Division, Police Department, City of Midland, P.O. Box 1152, Telephone, 683-4281 Ext. 381

I'm a lonely 3 bedroom, 2 bath, 1 year old home with a nice kitchen with built in appliances, nice wallpaper and miniblinds. My living room is large with cathedral ceiling, ceiling fan, skylights, custom drapes and mini blinds and a nice fireplace. My master bedroom is big enough for king size furniture with hip ceiling and walk in closet. My yard is green and manicured. I even have a 2 car garage. Come live with me.

at home with

BENOIT

Benoit Pouchelon came to Midland two years ago to work at Lionel Daury's.

Fresh vegetables take less time to cook than if they are four or five days old.

Benoit has spent years learning the perfect amount of "pinches and dashes" of spices to create a fine dish.

Poulet a la Basquaise, one of Benoit's French favorites, has been perfected by "always watching and learning" from chefs. Recipe, page 2E.

Text by Lisa Gerlock

Benoit Pouchelon, manager of Lionel Daury's French restaurant, spends 10-12 hours a day, six days a week, supervising operations and making friends with customers.

At home, he occasionally dabbles in the kitchen.

Complete with the traditional white flared chef hat, he sips on a Coors Light and puffs on an English Rothmans cigarette, as he steps back to admire the dinner he has just prepared in a friend's kitchen.

"Poulet a la Basquaise" for eight guests was the highlight of the Sunday evening entertainment.

Though he has spent his entire career in restaurants, he has never made a profession of being a chef. Nonetheless, he is not at a loss when it comes to being a wizard in the kitchen.

Benoit says he has cooked in restaurants before. He once fired his chef at a restaurant in France and had to cook for 400 people.

He says he must know the ways of the kitchen in order to do his job. His job as a manager includes supervising the various functions of the restaurant. One of those functions is to know what the chef must to to meet management's standards.

"I am always learning new and different ways to cook," he said.

One of his dinner guests, absorbed in the delectable taste of the meal, insisted the dish had potential to be over-seasoned. "But you, Benoit, did it just right...it's just perfect."

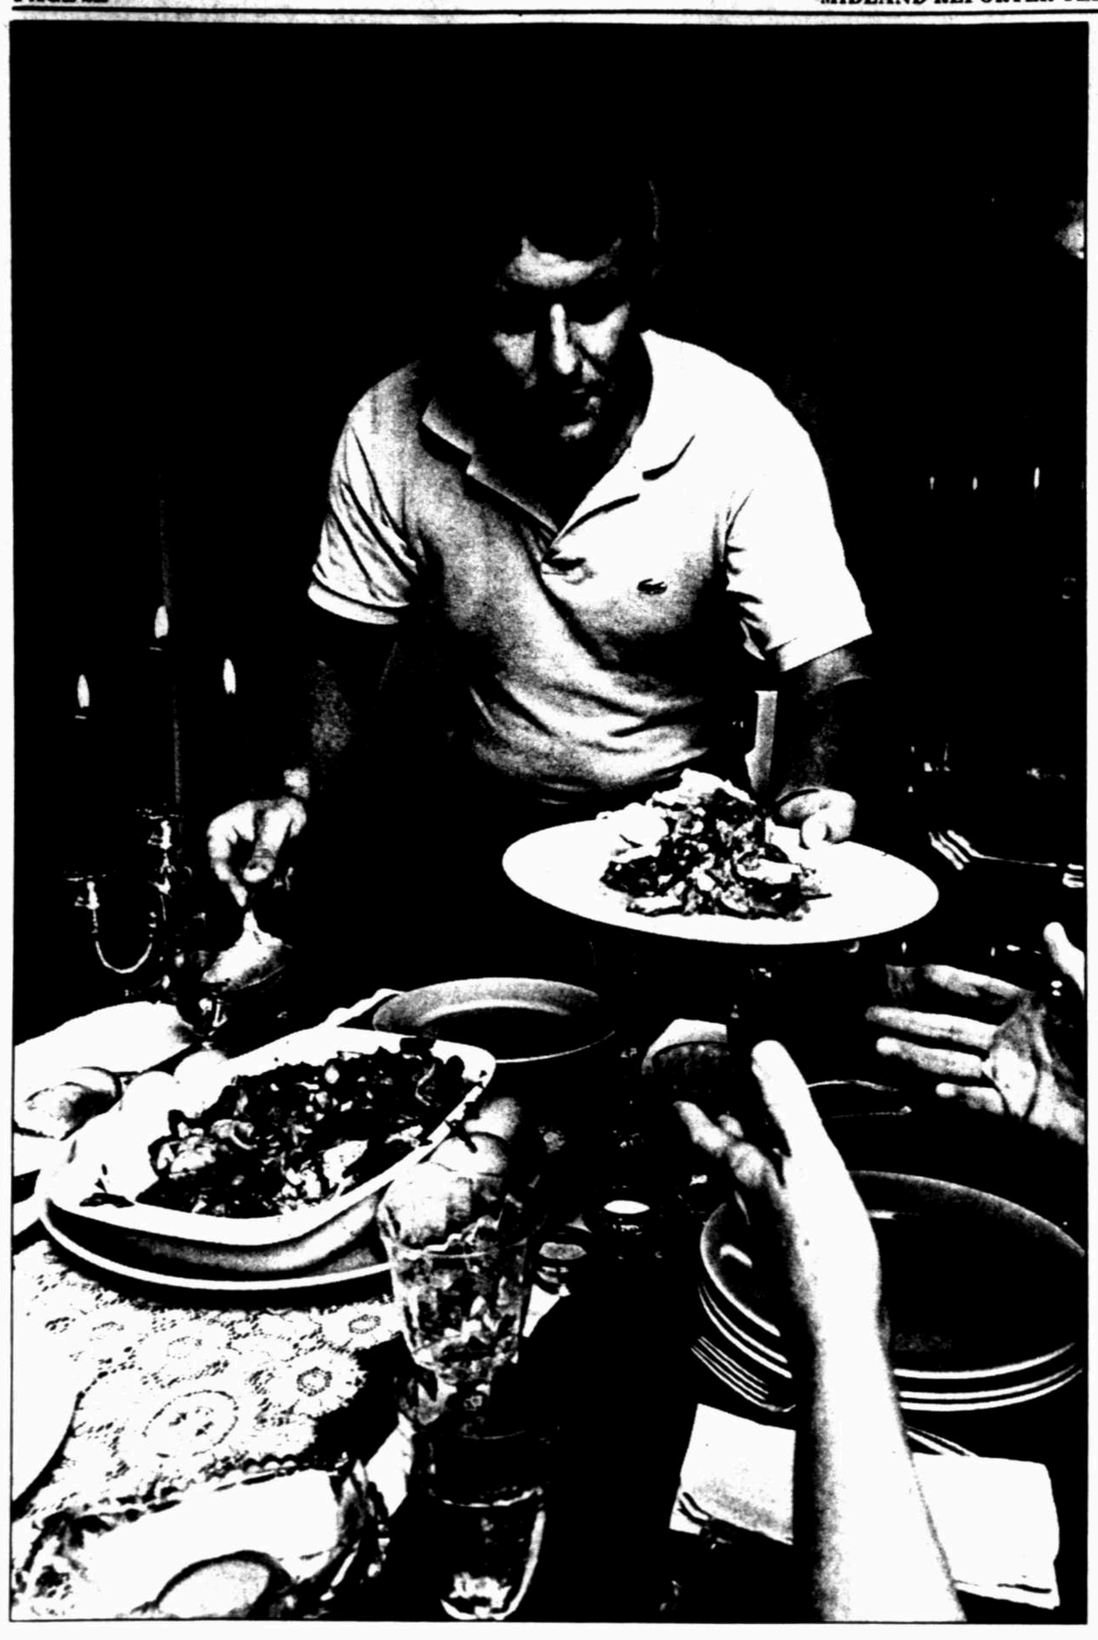

The rest of the crowd joined in praise for a job well done.

After dealing with chefs in his career, it was probably fate that led Benoit Pouchelon to be the star home chef he's become.

You must actually live in a country to understand its language, he says. And by the same token, he adds, to understand food you must actually spend time in the kitchen.

(See BENOIT, Page 2E)

Poulet a la Basquaise

Benoit Pouchelon, manager of Lionel Daury's, enjoys cooking for guests in his spare time. A native of France, he specializes in gourmet French foods.

Rice and French bread are suggested to accompany the menu. Benoit serves both red and white wine with this dish: Macon Village (white) and Cote de Brouilly (red).

Suggested desserts are "Opera," (cake with coffee buttercream) or a strawberry or pear tart, which Dominique, Lionel's pastry chef, can whip up on 24-hour notice.

Poulet a la Basquaise
(Recipe, courtesy Benoit Pouchelon)
Serves 8-10

2 eggplants
4 zucchini
10 tomatoes
2 onions (large)
2 bunches scallions (5-6 per bunch)
4 red peppers
4 green peppers
18 pieces chicken
10 bay leaves
Thyme (used thoughout recipe in measurements of "pinches")
One 6-oz. bottle of Pompeii olive oil
Salt and pepper to taste
One bottle white wine, very dry (Inglenook Navalle Chablis suggested)
2 oz. brandy

VEGETABLES

In a large pot (short and wide, 3-4 gal.) sautee eggplant in vegetable oil and remove from pot. Repeat with onions and zucchini, sauteed separately. Add tomatoes (do not sautee).

Add 5 bay leaves, scallions, salt, pepper, "2 pinches" of thyme and "a little bit less than 1/2 bottle of olive oil."

Simmer vegetables for 45-90 minutes. Amount of time depends on freshness of vegetables used. Fresh vegetables cook much more quickly than vegetables four or five days old.

Cook them very slowly, just below boiling temperatures.

CHICKEN

In another large kettle (about 1 gal.) sautee chicken pieces in vegetable oil on a fast fire. Once chicken is sauteed, remove it from pot. Do not drain the sauce. Skim grease from around edges of pot with a dry napkin (using a wet cloth alters the flavor, says Benoit.) Put chicken back in pot with sauce. Add 2 oz. brandy and flambe.

After flame has died, add 1/2 bottle white wine, 5-6 scallions, one bunch of parsley, salt, pepper and 2 "pinches" of thyme. Simmer for 15-20 minutes. (Parsely and scallions are used only to enhance flavor and should be removed before mixing chicken with vegetables.)

Remove chicken from sauce. Let sauce cook for 2-3 minutes and add a "dash" of olive oil.

Mix vegetables, chicken and sauce. Garnish with fresh parsley and serve.

Benoit...

Part of his love and talent for cooking can be traced to his home environment. He spent much time watching his mother cook for his family — one brother and three sisters.

"I love to eat.," he said with a big grin.

His love for food began "the day I was born. At three months I ate roquefort; at six months I ate beef," he said laughing.

When he moved from his native France, he mastered many of the recipes he has learned from the different restaurants in which he has been involved.

He carries his sense of humor into the kitchen. It's apparent Benoit cooks for fun and for the love of cooking.

"In France, we do something funny. The chef puts a little wine in here, the kettle, and a little in here, his mouth."

His arrival in Midland was the result of "a very old dream " to come to the United States. And his first impression of Midland was a good one, "because it is in the United States."

Two years ago, he left his job as general manager of "La Porte Jeune," a restaurant in Paris to come to this country.

He came to Lionel's after seeing a want ad in a restaurant trade journal. He contacted Lionel, owner of the restaurant, and after some persistence, finally convinced Lionel he was the one for the job.

Along with him, he brought eight years of English lessons he took in the French school system, though he had never spoken the language outside of his country. He had also studied Spanish for three years and Latin for two years.

The language barrier has been a problem on occasion, he said. For example, one customer of the restaurant had a difficult time understanding him one day as he tried to describe the house dressing.

"I kept saying Ranch. He thought I was saying French."

Since most of the personnel at Lionel's are French, they speak their native language in the kitchen. Benoit said it would be easier to learn English if he had to speak it all the time.

Before his two years as general manager of "La Porte Jeune," he spent five years working for a catering company where he was promoted to commercial manager. The catering company served 3,000 people a day at four different restaurants.

The 28-year-old bachelor cooks "sometimes." But he especially enjoys "cooking for guests."

When he is away from food, he indulges in tennis, racquetball, swimming and reading the works of French writers. He also enjoys horseback riding. But since leaving France, he hasn't been able to do much riding.

"Midland is very friendly. They are not friendly in France. It is very different. In Midland you can talk to people."

Benoit is the kind of friend everyone wishes they had. If you're lucky enough to be invited as one of his guests, don't pass it up. You may never know the fine talents he possesses — or the delicate taste he imparts to chicken.

But despite the magical meals he creates, he does not consider himself a great cook: "For me, I am not the very best cook. Lionel is a better cook than I am."

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

It was "Old Home Week" at the Summer Mummers opening night this year. To mark the Mummers' 35th season, a gala birthday party was held, with invitations going out to a dedicated group of individuals who worked with the Mummers in the past.

Before the curtain rose on the first performace of "Ripsnorting on the Roaring Fork," a huge three-tiered birthday cake decorated with typical melodrama scenes and candles was brought on stage, and three of the four men who instigated the Mummers back in 1949 were introduced to the audience. The three, Art Cole, former long-time Midland Community Theatre executive director, now of Boulder, Colorado, Bill Pennebaker and Bill Pomeroy, shared the stage with Mac Jones of Aurora, Colorado, author of this year's script. Missing was Norris Creath of San Angelo, who had a previous engagement.

Besides Art and Mac, other former Midlanders who came in for the birthday bash included Fred Reiter of Littleton, Colorado; Walt Gusky of Richardson, Vernon Peppard of Dallas, Mary Pennebaker of Fort Worth and Grace McWhorter LeMonds of Lubbock.

Following the show, Liz and Bill Pennebaker opened their home and backyard for a party and reunion for what they jokingly call "The Sasparilla Gang," or in other words, those associated with the Mummers in its earlier years. They were assisted by Douthea and Bill Shaner in hosting the event.

Besides all the out-of-towners, a number of Midlanders were there, including John Meyer, Morris Bassham, Bebe Fisher, Tom Fisher, Neal Larson, Douglas Heck, Bill Heck, Sally (Mrs. Martin) Mogford, Gloria (Mrs. George) Eng, Julie (Mrs. Malcolm) MacCurdy, Flo and Dick Vivion, Florence and Phil Whealdon, Liz and Bill Adam, Hank Shaw, Shirley Ireland, Neal Larson, Alice Moxey, Norman Gould, Betty King, Tom King, Harry Harrison and Bill Larkin, along with a host of others.

Not only were there lots of "Remember whens?" among the guests, but much talk and excitement about the renovation of the historic Yucca Theatre (home of the Summer Mummers) to its former glory. It was a fun evening, and those present can take pride in knowing they played a big part in making the Mummers the success and Midland institution it is today.

MARY ELIZABETH and Frank Ittner met their daughter and son-in-law, Yvonne and Charles Hays of Dallas, in Bad Nauheim, Germany, for a three-week trip through Switzerland, Germany and Austria. They admired the many beautiful flowers, seemingly as many as in Hawaii but of a different kind, and the forests and stretches of cultivated fields that looked like parks.

Highlights of their trip included staying at St. Gilgen on Lake Wolfgang, which was dotted with sailboats, and at Hotel Schloss Durnstein on the Danube an early baroque castle converted to a hotel; visiting Rothenburg, a medieval walled city, and seeing the ballet, "Giselle," in Vienna.

GAYLE AND JAMES "DOC" DOTSON and daughters, Kelly and Jamie, accompanied by Gayle's mother, Mrs. D.K. McMullan of San Angelo, and Mrs. Ralph O'Bryan of Austin, recently attended the National Athletic Trainers' Association's convention in Denver. Doc was recognized at the convention banquet for his 25 years of service in the association and presented a handsome plaque.

They also visited with friends, Nancy and Wes Hill, formerly of San Angelo, at their mountain home in Nathrop, Colorado, and enjoyed tours of the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs and Cripple Creek before returning home.

RUIDOSO IN JUNE has become a tradition for two Midland families, who have celebrated several special events together for the past four years. After attending the week-long Summer Music Festival there together, Harriet and Gene Motter and their children, Mary and Frank Sims of Shawnee, Oklahoma, entertained Ginger and Jimmy Floyd and daughters, Renee and Angela, with a gourmet dinner party at their Ruidoso home. The group observed the Motters' wedding anniversary and Ginger's and Angela's birthdays, along with Father's Day. A shopping excursion to Juarez, Mexico, was enjoyed as a side trip.

Then more recently, Angela was honored with a very special 14th birthday party when she took seven friends to Ruidoso for the weekend. Her guests, Trisha Boudreaux, Faye Daugherty, Kelly Dodson, Shannon Fergeson, Amy Furgeson, Kathy Kleine and Lisa Rocha, enjoyed shopping, swimming, horseback riding and miniature golf. Ginger was assisted by her daughter, Renee, and Edna Hibbitts in chaperoning the party.

LEE HIGH GRADUATE Susan Lane Pickering was honored at a recent luncheon given by Frances (Mrs. Jim) Highsmith at Ranchland Hills Country Club. Guests were the honoree's mother, Delane (Mrs. Tom) Pickering; her grandmothers, Mrs. Marg Thomas and Betty (Mrs. J.L.) Pickering; her aunt, Tricia (Mrs. Tommy) Roberson, and classmates and friends, Ann Moore, Mindy Moss, Kelly Carlisle, Karan Long and Cindy Linton.

Susan plans to attend Southwest Texas State University at San Marcos this fall.

Economist to speak

Dr. Michael E. Williams, vice president and manager of the funds management department of the First National Bank of Midland, will be the luncheon speaker for the Permian Chapter of Professional Secretaries International Tuesday at the Hilton Hotel.

His topic will be "Economics in the Permian Basin."

Before joining First National Bank, Dr. Williams was staff economist at InterFirst Corporation, a multibank holding company, and senior economist at Criterion Inc., an economic consulting firm. From 1976 to 1979, Dr. Williams served as economist for Texas Instruments.

Dr. Williams received his Master's degree in economics in 1976 and his doctorate in 1980 from Southern Methodist University.

Treatment may help childless

For some childless couples, properly treating an infection caused by a bacterium called T mycoplasma may enable them to have children, according to "Family Circle".

The symptoms of the infection are often so mild that people don't know they have it.

A study at New York Hospital-Cornell Mecical Center, New York City, found 161 cases of the mild infection in childless couples.

Treatment of both husbands and wives for four weeks with an antibiotic, doxycycline, eradicated the infection in about 80% of the cases. And the three-year rate of successful pregnancy for these couples has been 60%.

Parade winners receive ribbons

Baby's birth medical first

Hearst Feature Service

BALTIMORE — Seated in the obligatory wheelchair, Trinese White Jones, 25, rode out of Johns Hopkins Hospital and into medical history this week as she carried home the baby no one thought she would live long enough or stay strong enough to bear.

"This was a miraculous birth and for the mother, a combination of miracles," said her heart specialist, Dr. Kenneth Baughman.

Mrs. Jones, of nearby Joppatowne, Md., is believed to be the first person with her kind of congenital heart defect to reach adulthood and give birth.

She was born at Hopkins in 1958 with an abnormality in the left coronary artery that nourishes the heart muscle, preventing sufficient oxygen from reaching the pump.

The defect is extremely rare, occurring in only three of every 100,000 live births. An estimated 85 percent of children born with the condition die before their first birthday and most of the rest by age 30.

"No adult we know of has ever had her history and recovered enough to have a child," Baughman said.

In the normal heart, the left and right coronaries originate in the aorta, the main trunk artery, to supply red, oxygen-rich blood to the heart. In her case, the left coronary arose from the pulmonary artery which carries "blue," or unoxygenated, blood the heart.

The rare defect was diagnosed three months after her birth when she suffered a heart attack.

STATE WATER HEARING

The Executive Director of the Texas Department of Water Resources has scheduled public hearings in Lubbock and Abilene, Texas to receive comment on the Department's draft planning report, Water For Texas: Planning for the Future. Upon receiving the public's comments, the planning report will be revised as necessary in light of the information received. The planning report will then be submitted to the Texas Water Development Board for consideration of adoption as the amended Statewide water conservation, water quality protection, and water supply development plan for Texas.

Individuals and local officials are urged to attend either of the public hearings and make their views known relative to the planning report. Written testimony will be included in the record. The hearing record will be open through August 26, 1983 to allow written statements and information to be sent to the Department.

Degrees bring in less cash

Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — The benefits of enlightenment provided by a college education don't register in the cold calculations pouring out of national computer-aided studies lately. Instead, they show college diplomas bringing in less cash.

It will come as no surprise to recent graduates that Stephen Dresch, a Yale Ph.D. who heads the Institute for Democratic and Economic Studies in New Haven, Conn., found that the number of new jobs requiring degrees has not kept up with the growth in the number of college graduates. The products of the postwar baby boom came of age in the '60s and '70s, and devoured all the additional jobs, leaving a surplus of trained people. Demand had overtaken supply.

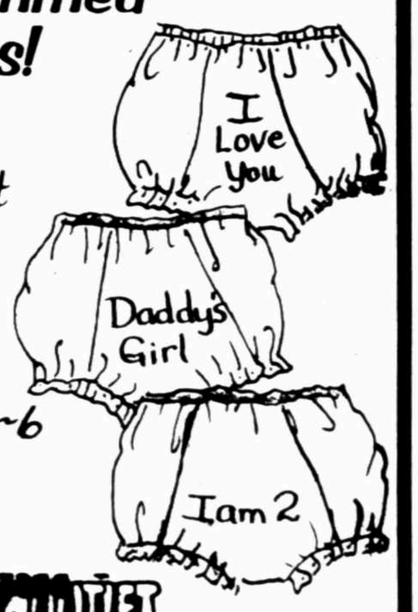

Moreover, Dresch found that except for physicians and others in health-related occupations, inflation took a serious whack at incomes for all jobs held by college grads.

While the real income of doctors from 1967 to 1977 — before the recession began — went up about 30 percent, average incomes in 19 professional management categories dropped 10 percent to 15 percent. Lawyers' real income dropped 30 percent during the same period. Only non-college teachers — usually protected by union contracts — managed to keep up with inflation, along with blue-collar crafts workers, salespeople, and others in occupations that don't require college degrees.

Dresch found the gap between the starting salaries of high school and college graduates narrowing rapidly: from 47 percent in 1968 to less than 25 percent in 1979. Looking ahead, he sees no change in the trend. Government employment, which soaked up many of the surplus college grads, especially women, has been flat and even shrunk in some areas.

New kinds of jobs aren't going to provide a solution either, Dresch predicts. "You can talk about the high tech and computer revolutions, but in raw numbers the effects will be trivial," he said. "Long-term prospects for college graduates are not significantly better than for their high school counterparts."

Old houses saved

That rundown eyesore down the block may no longer be a candidate for the wrecker's ball. Since the late 1960s, urban renewal has been replaced by urban preservation.

"Rehabilitating an old building usually costs considerably less than demolishng it and building a new one of the same quality," said James Nathan Miller in the July Reader's Digest. But this is just one reason why rehabilitation makes sense.

In 1966 Congres got on the preservation bandwagon by passing the National Historic Preservation Act. To keep track of buildings worth saving, the Department of the Interior drew up a National Register of Historic Places. This official recognition has been instrumental in motivating citizens' memory, attention and concern towards old buildings in their own neighborhoods and spurring further rehabilitation and repair.

Cooper anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Carl R. Cooper Sr. recently celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary with an open house at Carl R. Cooper Jr.'s home in El Paso given by their children.

The former Blanche Dessie Freeman married Carl Cooper Sr. June 23, 1933.

They now have five children, Ida Cooper Wells of Midland, Birdie Cooper Fioretti of El Paso, Mary Cooper Foster of Dell City, Carl R. Cooper Jr. of El Paso and Patty Cooper Rust of Canutillo. The couple also has 12 grandchildren and seven great-grandchildren.

Beets make picnic treat

PICKLED BEETS

Two 1-pound cans sliced beets
¾ cup cider vinegar
¾ cup sugar
10 whole cloves
2-inch piece stick cinnamon
1 teaspoon ground allspice

Drain beets; save liquid. In a medium saucepan bring beet liquid, vinegar, sugar, cloves, cinnamon and allspice to a boil; boil 2 minutes. Pack beets into a 1-quart jar; pour boiling liquid and spices over top. If there is not enough liquid to cover beets make up the rest with boiling water. Chill for several days to allow flavors to blend before serving—(AP)

This Cottage Cheese Snack Tray is perfect for light summer eating. Serve these treats along with Frosty Cafe Au Lait drinks in chilled glasses for cool entertaining on the patio.

Cottage cheese tray for light snacks

There is an elusive quality about appetites in summer, a sort of "catch me if you can" feeling which may play havoc with nutritional needs.

Just how do you cope with this? There are several ways: make the foods cool, refreshing and delightful; keep the servings small so they stimulate rather than overwhelm; garnish simply, naturally and attractively.

Whipped Cottage Cheese Snack tray is a good example of those criteria especially when you'd like a light, appetizing refreshment. That often happens when you've been engaged in physical activity such as gardening, swimming or bicycling. You're hungry but the thought of something heavy is not appealing.

Cottage cheese, lightly flavored with seasoned salt and pepper, can be whipped to lightness and smoothness to be the focal point of the tray. Surround it with easy, simple condiments such as sliced green onion, chutney, alfalfa sprouts, finely chopped hard-cooked egg, cooked crumbled bacon, etc. for topping the cottage cheese spread on assorted breads.

After this light refreshment, you can splurge on the dessert beverage: Frosty Cafe au Lait.

WHIPPED COTTAGE CHEESE SNACK

2 cups cottage cheese
½ teaspoon seasoned salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper sliced green onion chutney
alfalfa sprouts
chopped hard-cooked egg cooked crumbled bacon sliced radishes
thinly sliced whole wheat bread, toasted and buttered English muffins, split, toasted and buttered thinly sliced French bread, toasted and buttered

Place cottage cheese, salt and pepper in small mixing bowl. Beat on high speed of mixer until almost smooth, about 5 minutes. Place in serving bowl. Surround with small containers of green onion, chutney, sprouts, egg, bacon and radishes. Place breads in a basket. Spread toasted bread with cottage cheese, then top with condiments of your choice. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

FROSTY CAFE AU LAIT

2 cups cold strong coffee
3 cups (1½ pints) vanilla or coffee ice cream, softened
¼ teaspoon vanilla extract

Place all ingredients in blender container and cover. Blend until smooth and frothy, about 1 minute. Serve immediately in tall chilled glasses.

'Tis the season for summer salads

Copley News Service

When the heat's on, and you could fry an egg on the sidewalk — but it seems like too much bother to fry anything in the kitchen — that's when a light, cool, summer salad comes to the rescue.

A tossed salad and a chilled soup make a nice hot-weather duo, while a cool fruit salad brunch can perk up wilting spirits.

Try packing a picnic basket with several different kinds of salad: a salad bar to go! In the sultry summer out-of-doors, even non-vegetarians will appreciate this light and refreshing meatless fare.

Be adventurous with tossed salads! There are so many kinds of greens besides iceberg lettuce. Try adding Bibb, romaine or Boston lettuce. Young and tender spinach leaves are nutritious and very popular with salad lovers. Remember to rinse well, but handle with care, as greens bruise easily. Do not separate lettuce leaves from the head until ready to use. Just rinse the head under cold running water, shake and turn upside down to drain. Refrigerate and pat dry before use, then tear into bite-size pieces — never cut!

YOGURT AVOCADO DRESSING

1 cup plain yogurt
2 ripe avocados, peeled and pitted
1 clove garlic, mashed fine
2 tsps. lemon juice
Dash paprika
Salt and pepper to taste

Mash avocado in bowl, add other ingredients and beat with rotary beate or in blender until thick. Makes 1¾ to 2 cups.

SESAME SEED DRESSING

½ tsp. salt
1 tsp. dry mustard
1 tsp. paprika
1 tsp. sesame seed
½ cup light corn syrup
¼ to cup vinegar
1 cup vegetable oil
1 tsp. grated onion

Combine all ingredients. Beat with rotary beater or in blender until well-bended and thick. Place in jar or covered container and chill several hours. Shake thoroughly before serving. Makes about 1¾ cups. Note: celery seed may be substituted for sesame seed.

Stuffed zucchini good main dish

6 small zucchini
3 tbsps. chopped onion
3 tbsps. chopped mushrooms
3 tbsps. chopped green pepper
½ cup chopped tomato
¼ cup chopped cooked ham
½ garlic clove, minced
½ cup chopped cooked beef
1½ cups soft bread crumbs, piled lightly
dash salt and pepper

Cook zucchini in unsalted water 5 minutes; cut in half lengthwise; remove pulp. Combine pulp with remaining ingredients; pile this into zucchini and bake in moderate oven 350 degrees for 30 minutes. Serves 6.

Potato pancakes tasty

2 large potatoes, peeled
1 medium onion, peeled
1 tbsp. matzo meal
1 egg beaten
4 tbsps. vegetable oil
½ teaspoon salt
sprinkle of pepper
pinch of nutmeg

Grate onion and potato. Drain liquid and put in stockpot to be used later in soups. Add seasoning, matzo meal and egg. Mix until combined. Heat oil in heavy pan and drop 2 tablespoons mixture in pan, flatten cakes, and cook until golden brown. Remove to a warm dish until ready to serve. Serve with apple sauce. Makes 12 pancakes.

Mrs. Craig Honey of Midland, the bride's aunt, was matron of honor. Mrs. Phil Howard of North Little Rock, Ark., the bride's aunt, was bridesmatron.

Best man was Paul Stone of Jacksonville, brother of the bridegroom. Richard Stone Jr. of Longview, brother of the bridegroom, was groomsman. Ushers were Larry Brown of Jacksonville, Michael Dunlap of Tyler, Alan Green of Dallas, Randy Swanson of Jacksonville and David Young of Tyler.

Following a honeymoon in Arkansas and Missouri, the couple will live in Tyler.

Italians switch to beer

ROME (AP) - Italians are switching from Bacchus to beer in numbers that alarm vintners in the country that is the world's largest producer of wine.

Italians are still the third largest consumers per capita of wine — behind France and Portugal — and imbibe nine times as much of the nectar of the gods as Americans.

But that is little comfort for vintners who have been struck by "wine wars" with other European producers, rising production costs and a glutted market.

In 1970, Italians drank 29.5 gallons of wine each. But that dropped 35 percent by 1981 to 19.2 gallons, according to the the Istitute Commercio Estero (Foreign Trade Institute) and the Office International du Vin.

Beer consumption, meanwhile, shot up 60 percent from 1975 to 1982 to 5.35 gallons per capita, according to the private statistic company SIGMA.

Official statistics for wine consumption in 1982 have not been released, but most vintners fear the drop will continue.

"It is alarming," said Raymond Lamonthe, an independent marketing consultant who used to head Chianti Classico's marketing research. "It's worrying people in the industry and could have an overall impact on the whole nation."

Lamonthe says there has not been a drop in total alcohol consumption, but a shift in tastes. For instance, he said, Italy is now the largest importer in Europe of hard liquor — whiskey, gin, vodka.

In addition, he said, "a two-year nationwide campaign has done wonders for beer sales."

But the most important single factor in the decline appears to be a change in lifestyles, according to Guido Scialpi, editor of the trade magazine Vini d'Italia.

He says many Italians are turning away from the traditional three-hour lunches at restaurants for hurried snacks at pizza parlors and once-rare sandwich shops that are popping up all over the country.

"Nowadays, people have working lunches and they prefer a quicker beverage like beer," he said in an interview. "They drink wine only at dinner

Scialpi says that while Italians are drinking less "we are drinking better."

Sales for cheap table wines, which make up nearly 85 percent of total production, have dropped but more expensive brands are doing a booming business — an indication that rising prices are not what's hurting sales, he said.

To help reverse the decline, Italian wine producers persuaded the government to let them sell wine in cans for the first time this year.

Producers hope the novelty of the cans — which they say are cheaper and easier to store than bottles — will entice new customers and win back ones lost to beer and soft drinks.

'Button' battery problem

The so-called "button" batteries which power everything from electronic wrist watches to hand calculators and toys, are being swallowed accidentally by an increasing number of small children.

Dr. Mary Ann Shirer, a health education specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension service, Texas A & M University, has noted this that little-known problem is actually a major health hazard for young children.

Each year between 500 and 800 button batteries are swallowed, according to Dr. Shirer.

Those batteries which aren't passed through the body can be a threat to a child's health and even his or her life.

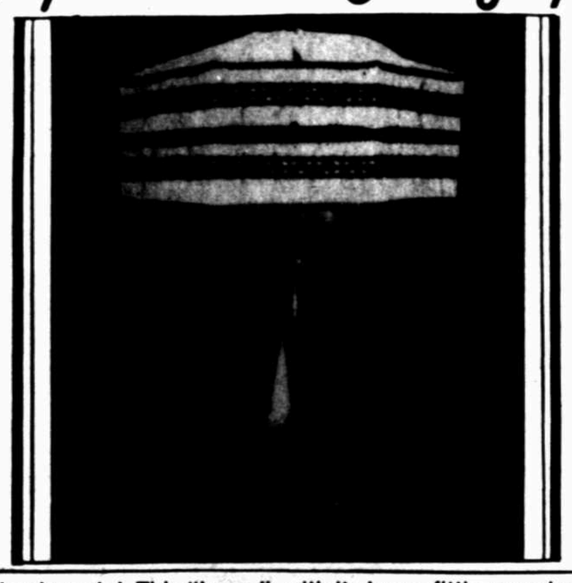

Shirer recommended treating button batteries like old medicine when it comes to disposal.

It is important to wrap and discard the batteries where they are not likely to be found by little hands.

Women's colleges produce high number of achievers

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

OAKLAND, Calif. — In the heart of this city nestled against the eastern foothills of the San Francisco Bay sits a tiny private college separated from its urban surroundings by a high barbed-wire fence. The fence encircles 127 acres of elegant old buildings and towering eucalyptus trees and serves the practical purpose of security, but it also stands as a symbolic reminder that this is a world apart.

Mills College is no ordinary educational institution. It is a college that has remained, throughout its 132-year history, for women only. It is one of a class of institutions whose graduates are likely to excel both academically and professionally at a rate far greater than is true for women graduates of coeducational colleges and universities.

STUDY AFTER STUDY over the past 10 years has shown that women's college graduates are more likely than their counterparts at coed schools to go to graduate school, to become scientists and doctors and to pursue other professional careers that have not historically been opened to women.

A list of the names of women's college graduates reads like a "Who's Who" of modern women. Actress Katherine Hepburn graduated from Bryn Mawr College in Pennsylvania. Margaret Mead graduated from Barnard College in New York. Mme. Chiang Kai-shek graduated from Wellesley College in Massachusetts. The late Washington Gov. Dixie Lee Ray graduated from Mills. Julia Child, Nancy Reagan and Gloria Steinem are all alumnae of Smith College in Massachusetts.

But during the past decade and a half, more than half of the country's all-female colleges have either closed, become coed or merged with neighboring men's colleges, almost all of which are now coeducational. Today, only 111 remain. They enroll 125,000 students — less than 2 percent of the nation's female undergraduate population.

THE COLLEGES THEMSELVES represent an extraordinary diversity: Salem, a Moravian college in North Carolina; Sweet Briar, an independent college in Virgina; Spelman, a four-year college in Georgia (founded in 1881 to educate slave women); Bryn Mawr, an undergraduate and graduate college in Pennsylvania; Pine Manor, a two-year college in Massachusetts; Barnard, a four-year college affiliated with Columbia University in New York. Nearly half are Catholic; a few are two-year; and two are public — Douglass College of Rutgers University in New Jersey and Texas Women's University.

Only three remain in California: Mills; Mount Saint Mary's, a Catholic college in Los Angeles; and Scripps, a women's college in the Claremont college consortium just outside Los Angeles.

THE DECISION BY THESE colleges to remain exclusively for women has not been easy. Over the past decade most, if not, all have struggled with enrollments in one way or another. Although the best-known of the women's colleges saw no drop in actual applications, they have lost some of their better students to Princeton, Yale and the other formerly male institutions that began accepting women during the wave of coeducation that swept the country in the late 1960s and early 1970s.

In recent years the situation has begun to improve, although considerable skepticism still lingers among students and their families about the role a single-sex college plays in a world where most sex barriers have been battered.

Many students who are now at women's colleges say that they came despite the all-female environment. They say that they stay, however, because of it.

"When I decided to come to Mills, I thought, 'Oh, great, I'm going to be going to school with a whole bunch of cheerleaders," said Lisa Ellerbee, a junior at Mills from Fairfield, Calif.

"THE FACT IS, I'VE made a lot of women friends here. And I've learned a lot about myself."

"From here," said Becki Ledbetter, a sophomore at Wellesley College, near Boston, "you can get a really clear view of the world because you are not in it. I'm glad I'm here now, and I suspect I'll be even more glad that I was here when I leave."

Among some students the prejudice against women's colleges is fading. Mount Saint Mary's, for example, reports that its applications for the fall are up 30 percent.

At Scripps, applications also have reached record levels — up 27 percent from last year.

"For the first time, we are beginning to see students coming to us because we are a women's college," said John H. Chandler, president of Scripps.

To many observers, however, women's colleges are simply anachronisms, places where young ladies of upwardly mobile aspirations learn the genteel ways of drinking tea in the afternoons, attending operas in the evenings and generally preparing themselves to become Junior League volunteers.

ANOTHER VIEW IS THAT women's colleges are refuges for social misfits and political extremists. It is a view that gained particular credence recently when such national publications as Newsweek and Harper's suggested that women's colleges had become hotbeds of lesbianism.

The image of women's colleges as finishing schools has been fairly easy to combat, for, while they graduate a fair number of Junior League presidents, the evidence is clear that women's colleges also produce more than their share of corporate executives.

The view of womens' colleges as places dominated by lesbians has been more difficult for campus officials to handle. Although they have been quick to point out that their colleges are no more apt than any other to attract students of any one ideological, social or political persuasion, officials of women's colleges have been uncertain how to respond to the allegations.

THEY FEAR THAT IF THEY protest too loudly, they will appear intolerant of women's lifestyles, which they do not want to do, and if they acquiesce too quickly, they will seem overly permissive, which they know could hurt their credibility with their more conservative clientele.

"Lesbianism at a women's college," said Richard Johnson, professor of English at Mount Holyoke College in South Hadley, Mass. "is like a rumor of foot and mouth disease on a farm. It could put you out of business, whether it's true or not."

According to Lorna Blake, director of admissions at Smith College in North Hampton, Mass.,"It's gotten so bad that you find yourself uncertain how to act.

"A kid runs up to you on campus and says, 'I got into Harvard Medical School,' and you put your arm around her and kiss her. But then you turn and look around your shoulder and wonder what people will think."

Their legal status is another problem women's colleges have had to deal with.

For example, many presidents of women's colleges have been strangely silent on an issue that presumably is dear to their hearts — the equal rights admendment. Privately, they admit they have been afraid to speak out in favor of the passage of the ERA for fear of what such legislation might do to institutions such as theirs which clearly discriminate on the basis of sex, which the amendment explicity forbids.

ONE LAW THAT DIRECTLY addresses the issue says that their policies are permissible. Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 banned discrimination on the basis of sex in colleges and universities, but in last minute legal maneuvers, colleges that were historically single-sex were exempted. Their graduate programs were not exempted, which led some woman's colleges that offered some form of graduate education to stop doing so.

So far, the Women's College Coalition, a Washington-based consortium of 70 women's colleges, knows of no man who has sued to gain admittance to a regular undergraduate program in a woman's college, but there have been at least two legal battles challenging the policies of those institutions.

THE FIRST INVOLVED a tax dispute in 1981 between Smith College and the town of Whately, Mass., which challenged the all-women's college tax-exempt status on the grounds of sex discrimation. The town lost the case, but the issue of disrimination was never settled.

In another case, which reached the Supreme Court last year, a man sued the Mississippi University for Women for refusing to admit him to the university's all-female nursing program. Although the university decided to begin admitting men to all of its programs, the court left open the question of the university's overall admission policy, saying simply that that the nursing program had to be coeducational.

SUCH ARGUMENTS CERTAINLY did not apply when women's colleges were founded.

In the early 17th century, when American colleges were first established, women were excluded from higher education altogether. It was not until the end of the 18th century that girls were even permitted to attend public elementary schools.

When Mary Lyon founded Mount Holyoke College in 1837 as a female seminary to prepare teachers and missionaries, her idea about the task women had before them was clear, Elizabeth T. Kennan, Mount Holyoke's current president, said. "Go where no one else will go,' " Lyon had said. " 'Do what no one else will do.' "

In 1852, Mills was founded, and dozens of similar colleges were in operation all over the United States. By the turn of the 20th century, 4,500 women were graduating from college; more than half of them were being educated in all-female institutions.

Today, all of that has changed. Women now comprise more than half of the college population and, with the exception of only a handful of tiny, little-known colleges that have remained all-male, women with strong enough academic credentials can go wherever they like.

Garvey touted as symbol of skating's new image

CNS Photo

Debbie Garvey, right, mixes up with Darlene Langlois de la Chapelle. Both women are star roller skaters of the Los Angeles Thunderbirds of the International Roller League.

Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — Debbie Garvey is petite and pretty, a blue-eyed blonde whose smile is even sweeter than that of the famous first baseman with the same last name. She is wholesome enough to star in a milk commercial.

But try to pass her on the high side of the banked track and the 5-foot-3 Garvey is likely to bury an elbow in your chest that packs the wallop of a kicking mule.

This small-town girl from Iowa is a mother of two who puts her family first — just ahead of roller games. She takes her sport seriously — I have a purplish reminder of that around my solar plexis.

Garvey makes a living blocking and dodging and racing around a 90-by-60-foot plywood track on roller skates. She stars for the Los Angeles Thunderbirds of the International Roller League and is touted as the symbol of the sport's new image.

"It takes a special person, someone who will truly dedicate herself to it," she said demurely. "I can be aggressive and still keep my ladylike image. I have my own personality — I don't change when I get out there, I don't put on a mask and go out and start drilling people. That's how it USED to be."

MOST PEOPLE HAVE the wrong idea about roller games, said Bill Griffiths, who founded the "T-Birds" in 1962 and is president of the league. The old roller DERBY (changing the name was fundamental to building a new image) was a tasteless spectacle when he decided in 1975 to take a few years off and revamp the event, Griffiths said.

Begun in 1935 during the heart of the Depression, roller derby was the brainchild of Chicagoan Leo Seltzer, who improvised on the era's dance marathons, often despicable contests where desperate men and women would push themselves to exhaustion in hopes of winning a promised pot of gold.

"It was Damon Runyon who suggested to Seltzer, 'Hey, why not put it on a track and get a little body contact' and it all evolved from there," said Griffiths.

The result was roller derby, which has enjoyed its share of popularity over the years, particularly in the smokestack and shot-and-beer towns of the East Coast and Midwest. The event was always more spectacle than sport, and its grimy image casts a long shadow that Griffiths is trying hard to escape.

IN THE OLD DAYS roller derby could be found on TV during the interminable Saturdays between January and March when football had ended and baseball hadn't yet begun. It would compete for air time with cartoons and old Westerns because no REAL sports were available.

Flip the channel selector and there would be women and men on roller skates kicking and scratching and biting their way to some vague glory.

It was matched only by professional wrestling on the scale of posturing and pulled punches. This was cartoon violence, to be sure, and the only thing frightening about it was considering that somebody watching out there might take it seriously.

Most popular during the 1960s, roller derby saw its attendance wane by 1975, and many of the fans were as seedy as some of the performers in the circus-on-the-track. Griffiths decided it was time for a change.

He built a new team from savory and good-looking young men and women (average age is 25) — some of whom, like Garvey, had never before laced on skates. Training became disciplined. Antics, like managers mugging opposing players, and other contrived situations were eliminated.

AFTER SLOWLY getting back into the spotlight through skating exhibitions in 1978 and 1979, Griffiths invited four other like-minded teams to join his new league and competition began in earnest in 1980.

"The event has everything without having to gloss it up," said Griffiths, who likens roller game to an "80-minute movie chase scene."

"It has speed, contact and all of the natural action and excitement anyone would want. We just don't feel we have to engage in that sort of overkill anymore."

How far it has come is impossible to tell. Sports purists may have a point in insisting that any league sport that doesn't at least appear in agate type among the newspaper box scores can't be taken seriously. But Griffiths insists his intentions are in the right place and his league is rolling in the right direction. He claims attendance averages in the 8,000 to 10,000 range and players earn between $20,000 and $50,000 per year depending on experience and status.

The five teams play a 65-game schedule, barnstorming to cities like Detroit, Chicago, New York, Pittsburgh and, of course, Los Angeles. A team has two squads, five men and five women, who take turns skating.

Anti-anxiety drug may have few side effects

After 20 years of testing a variety of drugs, a distinguished specialist in psychiatric research cautiously suggests that a new anti-anxiety drug currently being reviewed by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) may be the medication researchers have been seeking.

Karl Rickels, MD, Professor of Human Behavior and Professor of Psychiatry and Pharmacology at the University of Pennsylvania told psychiatrists attending a symposium that the efficacy of buspirone, has been shown to be as effective as drugs currently widely prescribed for patients suffering from generalized anxiety. Moreover, Buspar has demonstrated a potential for fewer side effects.

The panel of researchers on the symposium program summarized that in therapeutic doses Buspar appears to be non-addictive, less sedative, does not interact with alcohol or produce the abuse potential of anti-anxiety drugs available to date.

The symposium was presented at the beginning of the annual meeting of the American Psychiatric Association, supported by an educational grant from the Mead Johnson Pharmaceutical Division.

Based on a large clinical drug trial headed by Dr. Rickels, he said buspar appeared to be more effective than diazepam (valium).

Her cooking brings praise

PITTSBORO, N.C. (AP) — When Edna Lewis was growing up in the tiny farming community of Freetown, Va., the aromas of Southern cooking came from a detached kitchen behind her family's log and clapboard house.

Bread baked three times daily, sweet peas in cream sauce, her mama's locally famous fried chicken and fresh Virginia ham lured family members from their work in the fields. Pies made from homemade applesauce were stacked and cut three layers thick for dessert.

As a young girl more than 50 years ago, she helped prepare meals on a wood-burning cookstove for her parents, brothers, sisters and visiting kin.

Today, stainless steel ovens have replaced the old cookstove, and electrical appliances fill the shelves of Ms. Lewis' kitchen at the Fearrington House Restaurant.

But the aromas of her youth linger in her cooking and the memories remain.

"In the South you didn't have to be rich," said the 67-year-old Ms. Lewis. "There was always something good to eat."

In Freetown — so named because it was settled by freed slaves, including Ms. Lewis' grandfather — the year was broken up by special events calling for family feasts.

Some of those rituals were hog butchering, the cutting of ice in winter, Christmas and the gathering of spring's first green vegetables.

A morning-after-hog-butchering breakfast included black raspberries and cream, eggs sunny-side up, oven-cooked bacon, fried sweetbreads and biscuits with wild strawberry preserves.

The older children helped with the cooking, while the younger children gathered berries, picked corn and cut wood. "But you saw what was going on in the kitchen," Ms. Lewis said. "I guess it was inevitable that you'd end up cooking."

But when she left her family at the age of 19 on a train bound for New York, Ms. Lewis didn't know she'd end up chef at one of the city's most popular restaurants.

"I guess I was naive ... thought I'd go there and make a lot of money," she said.

Ten years and several odd jobs after her arrival in New York, Ms. Lewis joined antique dealer John Nicholson in opening Cafe Nicholson.

Innovative books prompt decisions

Summer is a season when students are more likely to pore over a paperback by the pool than sweat it out over a textbook late at night.

"It's a popular time," said John Deats, Midland County Librarian. "You have high reading and more recreational reading."

With the increased leisure time most people enjoy during the summer months, many turn to books to give their minds a vacation along with their bodies.

Midland County Library is busy this summer. Its adult department alone loaned out 13,774 books last month.

Last year, June was the biggest circulation month and July is the second biggest for the library. In contrast, the winter months of December and January were the slowest ones last year. There was more than a 30 percent decrease from that June to last December.

"WE HAVE more children in lower elementary ages borrowing," Deats said, which contributes part of the summer increase. One reason for this, he said, was because of the library's participation in the Summer Reading Program sponsored by the Texas State Library.

If a child signs up with the program and reads at least 15 books during the summer, he is awarded a certificate. At the beginning of the program they are given bookmarks and a small booklet containing simple games to play along with a space to list the books they read.

The program, which concludes at the end of July, now has approximately 600 Midland children signed up. This year's theme is "Reading Rodeo," but the youngsters are not restricted to that western theme or any other topic to read about.

Even though there have been some recent innovations in books for young people , many old favorites remain as popular as ever this summer.

"The old Nancy Drew and Hardy Boys mysteries are as big as ever," Deats said.

PAPERBACKS tend to be more popular with most summer readers because of their compact convenience, Deats said.

"Fiction is extremely popular now," he added. Last month the library's adult department loaned 2,368 more works of fiction than nonfiction. At the end of spring, Deats said, the fiction-nonfiction ratio is almost to even.

Nonfiction works in the applied sciences — which would include books on gardening, home repair, electronics and other hobby-related subjects — remain popular, however, with 2,069 of them checked out last month. In contrast, only 319 works on pure science were borrowed.

John S. Kelly, Midland, takes advantage of the reading material which lines the shelves of the Midland County Library. Limited shelf space restricts the library to providing books based on popularity.

Peggy McClay is one of the Midlanders who utilize the Midland County Library's services. In June, 13,744 books were circulated, making it the busiest month in 1983 so far.

"As soon as you scream, small figures claw their way on board and scurry toward you. The raft is alive with wriggling, chittering, squeaking bodies. Red eyes and long, sharp teeth gleam in the dim glow of Sandy's torch.

"'OH, NO! Swamp rats!' screams Sandy.

"'What can we do?' you yell in terror...

"1) 'We can jump into the river and swim for it,' you yell. If you choose this method, turn to page 73.

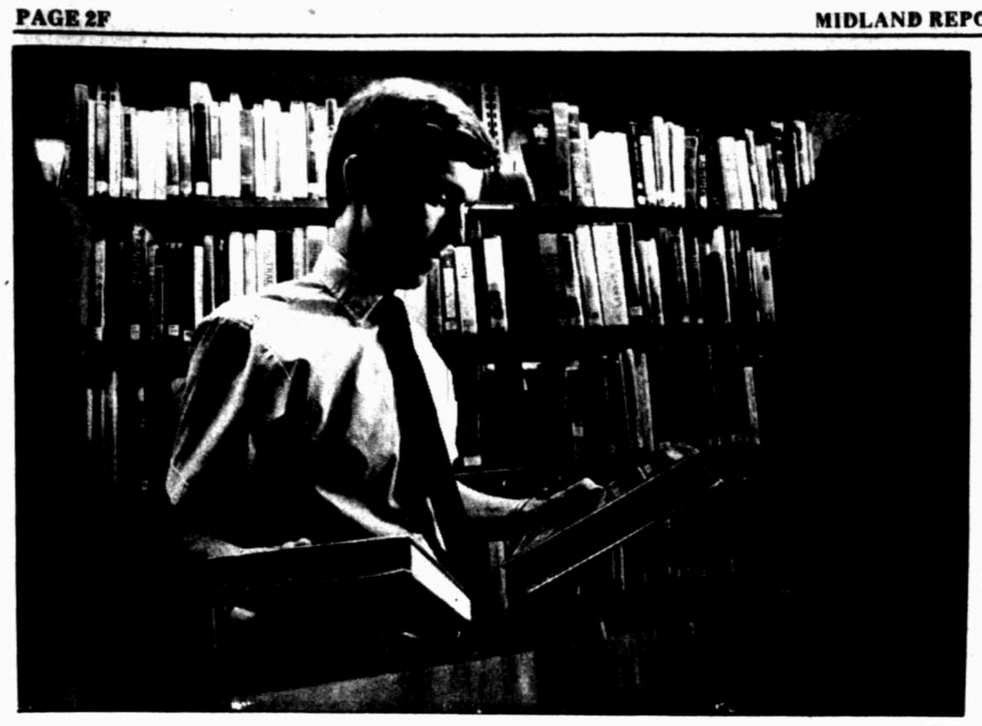

"2) 'I can try to scare them off with the torch,' cries Sandy. If you choose this method, turn to page 66."

A new trend in books this summer for youngsters, published under different series titles such as "Pick-A-Path to Adventure," "Which Way" and "Choose Your Own Adventure," allows the reader to become, in the words of one book cover, "the star of the story."

At various points in these books, which are written in present tense with the hero being "you", the reader is given a choice to make, such as the one above from "Revolt of the Dwarves" by Rose Estes, which can completely change the outcome of the story.

If the reader of the excerpt above decides to swim for the shore, he turns to page 73 where the story suddenly ends in less than a page with the hero surrounded by thousands of hungry swamp rats with little hope for escape.

(See BOOKS, Page 2F)

"Summer is a popular time," says John Deats, Midland County Librarian.

Library...

The library tries to strike a balance in the books available between fiction and nonfiction, bestsellers and serious studies.

"We try to be democratic," Deats said, although shelf space has become so restricted that any book which hasn't been checked out in five years faces the possibility of being culled out.

"We're down to a battle in terms of shelf space," he said. "There are very few books we can afford to keep two copies of on the shelf."

The culled books, which are judged mainly on whether or not they have enough popularity and quality to be saved, are given to the Friends of the Midland County Library for a sale in November to benefit the library.

This does not mean that older books are constantly being replaced by new ones, Deats said.

"Older books have their value," he said. "It's like having a time machine."

Books old and new can "stimulate people to think beyond their own little frontiers," he added.

For Midlanders who want to expand their frontiers, or perhaps simply give their imaginations a vacation, the Midland County Library's summer hours are Monday 9 a.m.-9 p.m and Tuesday through Saturday 9 a.m.-6 p.m.

The Reporter-Telegram publishes a weekly column in "West Texas Sunday" called "Checking Out the Library," which features additions to the library's collection.

Books...

If the reader chooses to scare the rats off with the torch, he escapes unharmed, which could be handy information, should one ever have to face a horde of swamp rats on a raft. After that episode, if the correct choice was made, the story continues from page 66 to page 70, where the reader has to make another decision to avoid tumbling over a waterfall.

"Revolt of the Dwarves" was originally inspired by the role-playing fantasy game "Dungeon and Dragons" and, much like that game, the book has the reader play an active role in the adventure. Role-playing is the basic concept in all of the multiple choice-type books.

At the conclusion of one reading, the youngster can explore other possibilities in the story by starting over and seeing how the story changes when different choices are made.

"The Third Planet from Altair" by Edward Packard, has 38 different possible endings. As the book's back cover says, "Depending on how you decide you could be captured by alien beings..., flung millions of years into the future through a time warp..., or you could witness the creation of the universe."

The reader actively participates in such a story and has to think about the choices he makes, County Librarian John Deats said.

A youngster can read the book the first time making very cautious choices, then can reread it acting as a bolder character "more like Luke Skywalker," Deats said.

"Maybe those books are not on the highest literary level," Deats said, but he pointed out that such books attract youngsters "into the realm of reading."

A fantasy such as "Revolt of the Dwarves," for example, could arouse a child's interest in medieval legend and lore enough that he will want to read non-fiction books on the Middle Ages, Deats said.

Even if it doesn't lead him to study history, at least a youngster can find out the best way of dealing with those pesky swamp rats.

Introducing DaVinci Aerobics

DaVinci Aerobics, a new concept in Aerobic exercise, is now a part of the Total Fitness Program at The Midlander. DaVinci Aerobics was recently introduced to instructors at a seminar conducted at The Midlander by fitness consultant Diane Peterson from the famous Golden Door Fitness Resort near San Diego.

DaVinci classes will be held at The Midlander on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays. The classes are offered at NO CHARGE for members. NON-MEMBERS may participate in any class offered during July and August for only $35 per month. Hurry and register though; this introductory program will be limited to the first 100 non-members to sign up. Ladies Only or Coed classes are available with nursery facilities available.

* DaVinci Aerobics is the concept of exercising with total body movements. Knees, back, ankles and shins are not stressed; exercise motions are free from excessive bouncing and jumping. This form of Aerobic exercise may be enjoyed in 2 different ways - in the Aerobic room or the swimming pool.

The Brooklyn Bridge, at left, framed by the rigging of a four-masted sailing ship in the South Seaport Museum, is 100 years old this year and New York is celebrating with a party lasting till October.

Antique bridge spans 100 years

Copley News Service

NEW YORK — "Hey buddy, wanna buy a bridge?"

It's slightly used, but at 100 years it isn't old anymore. Now it's an antique. It may be a bit shopworn in places, but it's being spruced up a bit and is as strong as ever.

And this year it's celebrating its 100th birthday with a party that lasts six months.

At that time it was the longest bridge ever built — over a mile in length — and its towers were the tallest structures in New York City — 276 feet. The main span was 130 feet above the water, high enough to let even the tallest masts of the greatest sailing ships of the time sail upriver.

When bridge-builder John A. Roehling first proposed building the colossal span connecting Brooklyn and Manhattan in 1852, people thought he was crazy. After all, such a monumental undertaking was impossible. But several years later, the visionary Roehling built a huge suspension bridge across the Ohio River in Cincinnati. (That baby Brooklyn Bridge still carries traffic across the river, and is a highlight of a visit to Cincinnati.)

It took $15 million and 13 years to do it, but the bridge was completed at last. It was dedicated May 24, 1883, a monument to engineering prowess and derring-do of the 19th century.

Its birthday celebration should be as big an event as the original dedication. It started out May 24 with a parade across the bridge, a re-dedication ceremony and a flotilla of military ships, fireboats, yachts and ferryboats sailing under the arching span. At night a fireworks display lit up the sky above the bridge.

There will be a variety of activities going on daily until October. One of these is a sound-and-light show at the bridge, beginning at 9 p.m.

The bridge itself is the stage for this 25-minute spectacle, featuring dramatic lighting and voices of actors portraying the valiant visionaries who designed and built the bridge.

There are viewing areas for the spectacle at both ends of the bridge. In addition, there is a centennial bridge exhibit under the dramatic arches of the bridge on the Brooklyn side, highlighting the social, architectural and technological significance of the bridge. Other exhibits can be found at City Hall and the Brooklyn Borough Hall, and pedestrians will be encouraged to walk across the historic span.

Within sight of the bridge is the South Seaport Museum, a collection of old ships and maritime memorabilia. The highlight of the outdoor museum's collection is the four-masted bark Peking.

Illegal to import, export shillings from Kenya

By 'GENE BURKE
Regional Director
Los Angeles
Passport Agency
Copley News Service

TRAVEL ADVISORY: KENYA — The State Department advises that it is illegal to import or export Kenyan shillings. Athough in the past some banks outside Kenya have sold Kenyan shillings to travelers coming to Kenya, it is illegal under Kenyan law for them to be brought into the country. All currency must be declared on arrival and currency conversions entered on a currency declaration form. Remaining Kenyan bank notes (except 80 shillings per person departure tax) should be exchanged for foreign currency or donated to a local charity before going through customs. Under no circumstances should the notes be destroyed, as offenders will be arrested and probably fined.

Q: Are records kept of U.S. citizens who are married abroad? My sister told me an American consular officer was present at her marriage in France.

A: Consular Certificates of Witness to Marriages are on file, but this record does not serve as a record of marriage. It merely is a certificate indicating that a consular officer was present at the marriage. Neither the Passport Office or any other office of the State Department maintains copies of foreign marriage records unless such records are submitted in connection with a report of birth abroad of a child born to a U.S. citizen parent or parents in order to assist in ascertaining the child's citizenship.

Q: The pages in my passport are filled with stamps and there is still a year left on it. It seems wasteful to have to apply for a new passport. What do you advise?

A: Send your passport to the Los Angeles Passport Agency requesting the addition of visa pages. There is no charge for this service. If you use your passport frequently, traveling to countries which require visas, we suggest you ask for a 48-page passport when you file.

Passport pointers provided

To lose or have a passport stolen is traumatic to say the least.

Legally, you cannot remain in a foreign country without it. In most countries, you'll find it difficult to cash travelers cheques without it. The American Society of Travel Agents offers some advice about what to do if your passport is lost or stolen while you are vacationing abroad.

First, notify the nearest U. S. Embassy or consulate. It can issue a replacement passport good for ten years at a fee of $42. Or the embassy or consulate could issue a temporary passport for the duration of your trip.

Being able to establish your identity and U.S. citizenship helps immeasurably.

Farm getaway relaxing work

By JAMES T. YENCKEL
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

A fact of life on the farm is that the cows have to be milked in the morning and they have to be milked again in the evening. Farm families call it "doing the chores." Nowadays, they are getting help from city folks, who are willing to pay for the privilege.

In Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, in the heart of Pennsylvania Dutch country, a number of farmers regularly rent out rooms and cottages to weekend or week-long visitors who want a glimpse of rural America. Over the past dozen years, the list of working farms in Lancaster taking in paying guests has grown to more than 20. A few days on the farm can be a fairly inexpensive family vacation.

"We let them get as involved as much as they like," says Joyce Eby, who with her husband Melvin runs Eby's Tourist Farm, an 81-acre dairy farm with 52 registered Holsteins near Paradise. "They can feed the calves with a bottle; they can feed hay to the cows, and they can watch the milking," which in these modern times is done by machine, though sometimes there's a chance to try one's hands at the old-fashioned way.

Morning milking begins at 5 a.m., but lazybones can catch a repeat in late afternoon.

For many city youngsters, a visit to a farm is their first chance to sample milk fresh and warm from a cow. "It's an opportunity to see that milk doesn't just come from a bottle," says Joyce Eby, who has been putting up guests in the family's 16-room brick house for the past 14 years. The house, built in 1814, has been in the Eby family for five generations. Double rooms rent for $15 to $18 a night, and an efficiency apartment is $30.

At the Landis Farm, another dairy farm just outside Lancaster, owners Earl and Evelyn Landis invite guests to help "make hay" several times during the summer. The hay, food for the milking herd of 50, is mowed and baled by tractor, but human muscles are needed to stack it in the barn. The Landises put guests in a restored 200-year-old stone house next to their own home. With a kitchen, two bedrooms and a private bath, it rents for $35 a night for a family of four.

Generally, the Lancaster-area tourist farms do not provide meals, and those guests whose accommodations do not include a kitchen usually try some of the many Pennsylvania Dutch restaurants in the area. However, at Rocky Acre, the 130-acre dairy farm in Mount Joy owned by Galen and Eileen Benner, morning begins with a hearty "farmer's breakfast".

Museum expansion

CHADDS FORD, Pa. (AP) — The Brandywine River Museum says it will build a $3 million addition to provide space for its growing collection of American art.

A section of the three-level structure is to be devoted to the art of Andrew Wyeth.

BETTY MARTIN

Since the time of the ancient Greeks, belts and belt carriers have been moving up and down fashion silhouette in an amazing variety of shapes and widths. If you are adding a belt to a pattern that does not already include one, plan carefully. To find the proper length, encircle your body, where the belt will be worn, with belting or interfacing in the desired width. Add seven inches to this measurement for finishing. Wider belts, extending above the waistline, require additional length. Pleats add a special swing to fashions by adding controlled fullness exactly where it is desired.

At LEGGETTS FABRICS you will find an amazing variety of fashions in our pattern books. We feature Simplicity, McCalls, Vogue and Butterick. Whether you are looking for something with or without a belt we know you'll find it. Of course, we carry a wide array of materials and notions. We are located at 1541 Parkway, Odessa, 362-8255 and in the No.9 Plaza Shopping Center, Garfield at Wadley in Midland, 683-3101. "Quality, Your Only Real Bargain". Open: Mon.-Sat. 10-6.

S.S. Rotterdam makes Alaska a Dutch treat trip

CNS Photo

Only the scenery is primitive on the S.S. Rotterdam, the largest ship to sail the waters of Alaska's Inside Passage.

Some cruise ships give passengers a taste of more countries than the ship visits.

This magic carpetry is accomplished gracefully by Holland America Cruises' S.S. Rotterdam through a melding of charming Netherland natives who are the ship's officers and delightful Indonesians who make up most of the crew.

The mix works well.

Thus, on a late-summer cruise from San Francisco to Canadian cities and Alaskan frontier communities, we sampled the ambience of four cultures.

The Rotterdam, at 748 feet long and 38,000 tons, is the largest ship to sail the sheltered and sometimes narrow straits of the Inside Passage, a waterway dotted with traffic all summer long.

The giant liner slipped away from Pier 35 at the urging of tugs in the late afternoon, glided past abandoned Alcatraz and toward the Pacific. It was my first view of the underside of the Golden Gate Bridge, a dull rusty red against an indifferent patchy-fog sky.

Vancouver, British Columbia, the first port of call, was 44 hours away, providing ample time to explore much of the spacious ship. She has more to offer in entertainment and activity programs than even the most energetic passenger would have time to indulge.

A daily program and a news bulletin was slipped under the door early each morning. Although the early birds had little to do before first coffee at 6:30 a.m., many were on deck long before breakfast, jogging seven laps or leaning on the rail studying seabirds, the jagged coast, maybe a sunrise and the fascinating water traffic.

Fishing boats were always on their way early. Pleasure craft usually lay at anchor, but tugs trailing great log rafts, small ferries and even rowboats holding a single fisherman were out at first light.

For its size, the Rotterdam is remarkably quiet. As we steamed along in mid-channel, overtaking a small tug puffing a quantity of smoke, the whistle sounded abruptly when the little tug failed to move. From the sudden sharp turn out of the path, it was obvious we had crept up on its unsuspecting captain, and startled him mightily.

Tiny villages, weather outposts and single cabins came into view as we progressed up the passage. Sometimes smoke from a breakfast cooking was the only indication that anyone lived on an island.

For rugged outdoorsmen, frontiersmen and individuals who delight in a pioneering kind of isolation, life along the Inside Passage must be good, even as they struggle for a living.

Those of us aboard the luxurious Rotterdam, by contrast, had far more to do than we could possibly accomplish. But sports, crafts, dancing lessons, games, contests, gambling, shopping, photography, swimming in an indoor pool (it was too cold for the outdoor pool), reading, watching movies, listening to lectures, eating and drinking were available all day long. After 7:30 a.m., that is. The last of the nightclub shows ended about 1 a.m.

On sunny days we photographed the striking pine-clad ridges that rose from the water's edge on both sides of the passage. On cloudy days we plopped in a deck chair and read about the next stop. On rainy days we retreated to our spacious cabins and slept. Part of the luxury of a cruise. Choices. Lots of them.

Historically, the Alaskan ports of call have much in common. The Rotterdam's final cruise of the summer, 12 days round trip from San Francisco, put in at Vancouver, a modern city of steel and glass, not unlike San Francisco. It retains pockets of its historic heritage, carefully preserved. It also has an outdoor museum with an impressive array of totem poles.

Prince Rupert, where we docked the following day, was all but locked up for Sunday. The bright sunshine brought out clusters of teenagers, uniformly clad in jeans and message-laden T-shirts, who sat on the low wall before the courthouse, or on park benches near the towering totem poles.

All the ports of call have at one time or other been centers of fur trade, lumbering, fishing and shipping. All are small (although Juneau, Alaska's capital, is trying to break out of its mountain-bound limitations), and are wedged between mountains and sea.

And every one of them has an outstanding collection of totem poles, one of the truly North American Indian art forms.

The same Capt. James Cook who explored (and discovered) many islands of the South Pacific, also was the first Englishman to set foot on much of this vast Northwest. Russians explored and settled enough to leave their onion-dome churches as landmarks.

Aboard ship, local produce meant fresh salmon was on the menu. The Dutch and Indonesian cooks produced many delicious concoctions. Fresh vegetables were purchased in several ports, and fresh flowers appeared daily in the dining rooms and in individual cabins.

While the scenery was strictly rugged Northwest, the ambience included both the thoughtful and courteous Dutch, and the happy-go-lucky Indonesians.

The formula is well proved. The ship was fully booked, and more than 60 passengers were repeaters. No wonder Holland America Cruises is expanding. The Nieuw Amsterdam has begun service and another luxury liner is on order.

Plan ahead. It may be as heavily booked as the Rotterdam, flagship of the line last year.

Hilo has Southern hospitality, Hawaiian-style

By GUS STEVENS

Hawaii has something for everyone. Travelers who prefer solitude may enjoy on of the waterfalls in Akaka Falls State Park outside Hilo on the Big Island of Hawaii.

HILO, Hawaii — Scraps from a traveler's notebook:

They say the Aloha spirit is dying in Hawaii. That's the spirit that is defined as showing a kindness with no expectation of getting anything in return except, perhaps, a good feeling. A naive spirit of goodwill.

News item. The Aloha spirit is alive and thriving on the Big Island. I would define it as Southern hospitality, Hawaiian-style.

I love the spirit on Mid Pacific Air, a puddle-jumper airline which serves the Hawaiian Islands, freighting passengers in flights lasting less than an hour each. Sure, Mid Pacific benefits from being friendly to passengers, but there is something more.

The airline is a delightful welcome to the islands as, during the 57-minute flight from Honolulu to Hilo, the steward chatters about landfalls all along the way: Diamond Head, Molokai, Maui and the cane fields and waterfalls of the Big Island.

He serves champagne and beer in unlimited quantities and the stewardess hands out little turkey sandwiches, with seconds and thirds if we wish. Both are Polynesian types, with all the charming naivete that implies. No brassy professionalism. Call that the Aloha spirit.

Hilo is my kind of town. When seen from across the bay, from our lanai at the Naniloa Surf, Hilo looks like Papeete with its tin roofs and Moana Kea's lower slopes as a backdrop. We are on the sixth floor, and towering coconut palms match our height. Below, the mynas squawk as they scrap with the jays for bounty thrust up from the sea. Little tan mongooses play tag on the grass.

Hilo is a collection of new and old. Shopping centers drain some of the vitality from downtown, but the central-area Japanese groceries and Chinese dry goods shops survive.

They will sell you picnic food, complete with plastic plates and free chopsticks. Or Aloha shirts and muumuus. Each shop will help you select the right picnic supplies and the right clothes for you or your friends on the mainland.

They wouldn't dream of approaching you with something you wouldn't want. Call it more Aloha spirit.

Tsuruko Toyama and her husband began raising anthuriums almost 50 years ago. They developed some of the varieties themselves. While bigger commercial nurseries protect their precious plants under plastic, the Toyamas, who run the Hawaiian Flower Gardens at Mountain View, in the Big Island highlands, shelter their plants with palm trees.

The Toyamas are old now and they want their son, Glenn, to take over. He is there running the place, having left his mainland job with Honeywell computers. I don't know. He looks like he'd rather be on the mainland and he says he can have his old job back anytime. He's pondering his future.

But who will raise the Toyama anthuriums? "We told our son if he doesn't stay we'll sell the place," Mrs. Toyama, a tiny Japanese-American, says. "This is our home. The people aren't spoiled here yet. That's why we like it. It's the nicest island."

Mrs. Toyama doesn't want to pose for a picture, but I talk her into it by suggesting that my wife would be proud to pose with her. She fusses with her hair and arranges pots of anthuriums. After I take the first picture, I wave my wife out of the way and shoot Mrs. Toyama alone with her flowers. "He's a sly one, isn't he?" she remarks to my wife.

Still, she chatters on for a half hour about her life, her flowers and the uncertain future of her flower farm. Another strong dose of the Aloha spirit.

At Kailua, the principal settlement on the western Kona Coast of the Big Island, an aged Hawaiian man takes us through the Hulihee Palace, the summer home of Hawaii's kings and queens until a century ago.

He is filled with ancient stories, one for each piece of furniture, for each china plate, for each warrior's spear. Then he has us gulping and wiping our eyes as he sings a traditional farewell song of the islands in a flawless, as yet uncracked, voice. Spontaneous. Just like that. In an upstairs bedroom.

"Aloha, until we meet again. ..."

As long as the old Hawaiian, Mrs. Toyama and the gentle shopkeepers of Hilo live, the Aloha spirit will survive.

Life moves at a gentle, dignified pace in Bermuda. The stocks in this picture are reminders of the island's colorful past.

Bermuda: Island's charm decked in dignity

By DENNIS FOLEY
Copley News Service

HAMILTON, Bermuda — Lying peacefully in the Atlantic, about 775 miles southeast of New York City, Bermuda is a collection of about 150 semitropical islands. The seven main islands are linked by causeways and bridges.

Spanish navigator Juan de Bermudez received credit for first sighting the islands in 1503, though some historians doubt he ever set foot on them.

For some unexplained reason, Bermudez did not follow the passion of the day and claim the land for his native country, but the name Bermuda stuck.

In 1593 Englishman Henry May was shipwrecked on Bermuda for five blissful months. Strangely enough, after his rescue he did very little back home to attract much interest in the islands. Finally, in 1609, Adm. Sir George Somers, whose flagship Sea Venture had become separated in a storm from six other ships headed for Jamestown, Va., crashed and sank on a reef off Bermuda.

THE REST, AS they say, is history.

In 1684 the British crown took over administration of the islands. The port grew in importance throughout the 19th century, and served as a center for blockade running for the Confederacy. The United States built naval bases there during World War I and again in World War II though Bermuda was a British dependency.

Bermuda today is a self-governed colony, one of the oldest members of the British Commonwealth with a crown-appointed governor.

Bermuda's economy is extremely reliant on tourists, with more than 500,000 visitors a year, mostly American.

The natural reserve exhibited on the islands makes a stay comfortable for the conservative. The administration works with clockwork precision. The population, inured to hundreds of offloadings at the port of Hamilton, Bermuda's capital city, is civil and courteous, except when rushed by those vacationers who perhaps forgot to leave their anxieties at home.

MANY PEOPLE THINK of Bermuda as Caribbean in nature, but its character is entirely different. Conservative. Cool. More formal in demeanor.

You can fly there from the mainland in just a few hours, but the best way to get there is by cruise ship from New York. Home Lines operates both the Atlantic and Oceanic of Bermuda on cruises of various lengths from April through October.

For Years Bermuda has been a magnet for visitors from both the United States and Europe. Its beauty and charm are the stuff of legends — with good reason:

The sun shines 350 days a year. The climate is nearly tropical with an average daily summer temperature of 85, cooled by Gulf Stream breezes.

Natural beauty thrives with an abundance of hibiscus, oleander and bougainvillea. Clean, if narrow, roads link pastel-painted homes with distinctive white lime roofs.

PINK SAND BEACHES and almost shell-free surf protected by reefs delight scuba divers.

Train ride across Peru's remote plains

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

COPACABANA, Bolivia — The remote plains unroll in all directions as the red and yellow train heads south toward the Bolivian border. The slow train stops at every town and village and wide spot in the Peruvian countryside between Cuzco and Puno, the end of the line.

At 13,000 feet, the altiplano — one of the world's highest inhabited regions — is a rolling plateau, a patchwork quilt of barren plains, tilled squares of land, stands of eucalyptus and evergreen trees, primitive huts and windswept terraces.

The Indians who live here till the soil by hand or, if wealthier than most of their neighbors, by a team of oxen. Men, women and children work the fields, tend their sheep and llamas, and trudge the roads with bundles of grain or wood heavy on their backs. There is little irrigation, even during droughts when the crops are dying, even when a river wends its way through a nearby canyon. And modern farm equipment seems to be non-existent. To eke out a subsistence-level life, family by family, tiny plot by plot, is the chief goal.

Most of the Indians are Catholic now, worshiping in churches that are the showcases of the region, in marked contrast to their homes of adobe with the thatched roofs and mud floors. But to this day they pray to the ancient rain god of the Incas and they burn dried llama embryos, coins, ribbons and other gifts to the earth god in hope of a bountiful harvest.

THEIR LAND IS one of great beauty and monotony. During our one slow day across the plain, it was swept by harsh winds, washed with brilliant white sunlight, covered in a blanket of gray clouds and pelted by grape-size hailstones.

The women all wear derby hats and carry their babies on their backs bundled in colorful blankets. Occasionally, we saw signs of 20th-century adaptation: a bicyclist tooling along a dirt path, a prized transistor radio in the grip of a young man.

On all sides the sweeping panorama is rimmed by glacier-topped mountain peaks that seem to put an effective end to the world. The train climbs above timberline through a bleak clay landscape, passes by gray rivers cutting through tree-lined valleys and looks out on ancient Incan agricultural terraces that still line the distant slopes.

At almost every stop on the 11-hour ride Indians rush toward the train, some to meet friends and relatives who are aboard, others to sell their handicrafts to the tourists who inhabit the first couple of cars (the first-class and dining cars are almost exclusively taken by tourists), and still others just to watch the action, the day's highlight.

The sales procedure is a fascination in itself. The Indians, almost always the women, crowd up to the windows to display their goods: alpaca blankets, brass icons, hand-knitted caps, pottery, fur rugs. If a traveler shows an interest, the item is thrown through the open window of the train and the bargaining begins. Back out goes the alpaca sweater at $25 (hand-spun, hand-woven, hand-sewn), back in it comes at $20, out at $20, in at $18, hovering on the sill at $18 ... down to $15 as the train pulls away and the passenger gropes for the bills and the vendor trots alongside, hand outstretched.

TRULY A TRANSACTION of mutual distrust, each side afraid of being cheated, and generally at the end each sure that it has got the best of the other: not entirely a happy process, but certainly one that can result in a trunkful of cozy woolens at a fraction of their value elsewhere.

The buffet car is the one recommended for most tourists. There one can relax in comfort, seated throughout the trip at little tables with checkered tablecloths. It is airy and clean, with large seats and plenty of leg room. Adventurous travelers or those on a budget often prefer the second-class accommodations as being more colorful and interesting. Certainly it is more crowded — with local people, their babies and chickens and bundles — than the more expensive cars.

THE TRAIN PULLS out of Cuzco at 8 in the morning, passing by pastel-painted adobe huts on the hillsides at the edge of town, backing onto switchbacks set by hand and climbing out onto the plateau, past the Rio Vilcanota, thick forests and out onto green pastureland.

One can get off the train at the longer stops, although it is best not to stray past the station platform as the stops are brief. San Pedro, near the base of the volcano Quimsachata, is noted for the remains of the Temple of Wiracocha with its hot baths, an example of Incan architecture. Then around the side of a mountain overlooking a gorge and on to Sicuani, past meadows strewn with golden poppies and lupine. Sicuani is the best place to bargain for llama and alpaca wool, fur caps and rugs.

At Marangani the river is wider, the fields even greener and groves of eucalyptus trees dot the landscape. At Aguas Calientes are steaming pools in the middle of the grassy plain, and a hot spring that bubbles to 104 degrees. Here Indians are able to give their clothes a rare hot-water washing (elsewhere cold river water suffices) and soak their cares away in a mineral bath. And the train climbs ever higher, topping off at a plateau of 14,000 feet.

ALL ALONG THE way are interesting foot bridges over the rivers, creeks and ditches. They swing or hang or arch over the chasms and are constructed of stone, wood or mud-packed straw.

The plain bleaches out at 13,000 feet, becomes colder, more barren. At Ayaviri adobe huts and dirt roads surround an incongruously fancy baroque church.

Real estate: Everything you touch

Patsy Bohannon is a bundle of ambition, patriotism and professionalism cloaked in a warm personality. She is high on living in Midland, working in real estate and being a citizen of the United States.

She owns a successful real estate firm here which keeps her working "24 hours a day," in her words. The business is always on her mind, she admits. There is no time for tennis, bridge or other pursuits.

"Real estate is everything you touch, really," she says.

Keeping up with legislative and legal matters affecting the profession is almost like a religion with her. Patsy is an active member of the Texas and National Associations of Realtors, and serves on their professional standards and legislative committees.

SHE FREQUENTLY travels to Austin or Washington to attend seminars and lobby for the industry. In 1984 she will be a vice president for the Texas Association; she has been a director since 1975.

She also serves on the Texas Real Estate Research Council since being appointed by Gov. Bill Clements two years ago.

"Our country is very important to me," Patsy explains. "I'm very patriotic and that's why I'm in the business I'm in."

That's also why she is so active in professional real estate organizations. Patsy says there is no one organized lobby or pressure group to look after private property rights. "By both our interest, and by their default, we Realtors must step in the breach and look after property owners in the legislative arena."

Citizens have the right to buy and sell property, and Patsy sees this as one reason for America's greatness. But she believes this right is beginning to erode. Legislative intervention is the primary cause.

"THERE ARE THOSE whose interests are not compatible with ours and they will, if not stopped, strip us of our rights (to buy and sell property)," she says.

"I'm of the opinion that zoning is not necessarily good — I don't think you should put a liquor store next to a school or church, but I do think you should be able to develop property as you want to." She believes the economics of a proposed location will determine its best use.

Economic realities in Midland during the oil industry slowdown are not as negative as some would think, she declares. Residential home prices are holding up fairly well according to the studies she has made. She feels there are still tremendous opportunities here for people employed in the real estate business.

The situation seems to be improving, in fact. At the beginning of 1983, for every house going under a sales contract there were four more coming on the market. Today that ratio has dropped back to around 2½-to-1.

"I work long hours and very hard. Real estate is probably one of the most stressful jobs you can have — you are dealing with emotions, you are involved with people's lives," she says.

"MOST REALTORS WHO are successful work 25 hours a day — it's just necessary." Real estate is kind of a game, Patsy says, especially for speculators who turn property over again and again hoping for ever-higher prices. In a bust situation, they are the ones left holding the bag more than individual home owners, she says.

Still, Patsy says she has been lucky. "I'm very fortunate. I have had a business at a time when you couldn't make a bad deal (you could make a better deal)."

Patsy attributes her confidence to a happy childhood and the influence of her father, a Baptist minister.

"He told me a long time ago I could do anything I wanted to do. I am the oldest of 10 children, so I've always been motivated to succeed. I have a very positive attitude and that's what's necessary."

HER EARLY TRAINING as a runway and television model for Bobbie Brooks clothing in Dallas also contributed to her confident demeanor. She laughs now at the memory.

"That was when I was very young and very thin and didn't know my legs weren't long enough — 'til someone told me they weren't.

"You can do anything until someone tells you differently."

Perhaps this is why she says she is not a woman's "libber;" never has been and never saw the need.

"I've never been denied doing something because I'm a woman — in fact, I think being a woman is an advantage in real estate. I have always been well received."

TRAINING AND updating are keys to her business success, she says.

Patsy worked for six years with Ebby Halliday, the largest residential real estate firm in Dallas and the nation during the middle 1960s. There she learned her trade and perfected her sales techniques.

More than anything, Halliday taught Patsy to crave knowledge, think big and be optimistic.

"I owe a lot to the training I got there," Patsy says. "She said to be sure my people were always protected and to keep up with all the legal changes. She believed in taking care of people and taking care of details.

"The biggest thing she taught me is you never look at the commission — you put your client first. You put their interest above everything else."

There are times when she has made a sale and received little or no money out of the deal, Patsy says, just as long as her clients were satisfied.

SHE WAS ALWAYS PAID back eventually through repeat business or word-of-mouth advertising from pleased clients. She acknowledges that the money is nice, and she has been in on some of the biggest transactions in Midland commercial real estate.

But to her, the professionalism of the job is important. It is here, in the arena of political and professional activism, that Patsy has dedicated much of her time.

"I believe the profession has been really good to me and that you should give something back to it. I really owe the associations a lot. The only way to be effective is to put yourself back in to it."

For a while Patsy left real estate, but not for long. Husband Bill was transferred to Midland in 1966. Patsy had to leave Dallas, a market where she knew the names, the faces, the places — and she was rising in the profession as a director of the Dallas Board of Realtors.

To some women, the move would have been a setback. Not to Patsy. She viewed Midland as a new opportunity.

"I planned to 'retire' in Midland, but by the time I did the League of Women Voters, the PTA, churchwork, duplicate bridge and taking care of three children, I was away from home as much as if I worked full time..."

SO, IT WAS BACK TO the real estate world and the long hours — the only way the ambitious Patsy knew how to work.

She joined Bunnie Kent Realtors and became active in the Midland Board of Realtors, holding all the offices and eventually serving as president. She also served on the Midland Board of Equalization.

In 1971 she and several partners formed the Carriage Company Realtors, a firm still active here today. Later, she dropped out of Carriage and decided she preferred a smaller, more compact operation.

In 1979 she created Patsy Bohannon Realtors. A year later, Bill retired from Lone Star Steel and joined her as a full partner in Bohannon Realtors.

"I really enjoy the freedom of just having the two of us, with no other brokers," she said.

"There are those whose interests are not compatible with ours and they will, if not stopped, strip us of our rights," she says. "I'm of the opinion that zoning is not necessarily good — I don't think you should put a liquor store next to a school or church, but I do think you should be able to develop property as you want to."

BOTTOM LINES

IKE LOVELADY (OTC: IKEL)

MIDLAND — The company reported June 30, 1983, unaudited results for the second quarter and first six months of Fiscal 1983.

For the three months ended April 30, revenues were $1,381,000 versus $1,592,000 in 1982. Net loss was $263,000 or $0.15 per share, compared to a loss of $9,000 or $0.01 for the same period in 1982.

Average shares outstanding in 1983 were 1,811,667 as to 1,721,367 in 1982.

For the six months ended April 30, revenues were $2,888,000 versus $3,304,000 in 1982. Net loss was $238,000 versus income of $260,000 for the six-month period in 1982. Net loss per share was $0.13 compared to a profit of $0.15 in 1982. Average shares outstanding were 1,811,667 as to 1,721,367 in 1982.

I.W. Lovelady, president, said revenues were affected by declining oil prices, even though production of oil and gas increased for the first half of the year compared to a year ago.

Lovelady also said the company has received and accepted a bank commitment letter to renew and extend on a long term basis its bank debt.

In addition, the company proposes an offering of convertible subordinated notes to certain trade creditors and others which would significantly improve the company's working capital position.

ELCOR (NYSE: ELK)

Elcor Corporation's board of directors announced a regular quarterly cash dividend of $.075 per share will be paid August 10, 1983, to shareholders of record July 15, 1983.

WESTERN COMPANY (NYSE: WSN)

FORT WORTH — The Western Company of North America said it expects 1983 second quarter results to be in the breakeven range. The company reported a loss of 20 cents per share in this year's first quarter.

At a meeting with security analysts in New York, John A. Fanning, president and chief executive officer, said, "Current quarter market conditions for the company's services are significantly lower than those of this year's first quarter. Despite reduced markets, Western's consolidated operating results will be about the same as those of the first quarter.

"However, due primarily to an absence of unusual provisions for doubtful receivables plus lower foreign taxes, second quarter company results are expected to be in the breakeven range, compared with the 20 cents per share loss recorded in this year's first quarter."

Fanning said, "There are indications that the U.S. petroleum pressure pumping market has bottomed, and that price discounting appears to be easing. We expect domestic new well drilling activity to rise gradually throughout this year."

PIONEER CORP. (NYSE: PNA)

AMARILLO — The directors of the corporation announced the election of a new chief executive officer and a new chairman of the board to succeed K. B. Watson, who is retiring from both of those positions.

C. David Culver, president of the Amarillo—based energy resources corporation, will assume the additional title of chief executive officer, and L. R. Jones, Jr., will become chairman of the board.

After his early retirement as an officer and resignation as a director, effective today, Watson will serve as a consultant to the corporation.

Midland building activity: A steady pace

By JIM PRESNELL
Business-Energy Writer

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION

Three projects over one million dollars' value helped push June building permits to $14.8 million in total building valuations. This is weak performance compared to last June's $48 million permits list.

Last year 255 permits were issued in June, compared to 200 permits issued last month. Fewer big permits, obviously, are included in the past month than in a comparable month in 1982, when out-of-town and in-town builders were still profiting from an unprecedented building boom.

In Midland, the effects of an oil recession have reduced building permits in this first six months wrap-up to half the amount in building value they had reached by June 1982.

To date this year, $90 million in permits for new construction and alterations were issued by the Midland Department of Inspections and Permits. The same period of 1982 produced twice that in construction values — over $186 million in building permits. Revenues to the city have also dropped — from $435,900 last year down to $245,000 during the last six months.

The effect this might have in the city's budget plans isn't clear, but governing forces continue to struggle with various budgets for Midland's next fiscal year.

In June: About $4.1 million in office construction was announced, one permit being part of The Forum, a Jack Hightower development that will cost more than $16 million to build.

Midland will gain a car wash, a private club, a pizza place, a convenience store, a restaurant, a bus barn, a parking lot and a doctors' headquarters out of the June building permits list.

During the week ended July 1, many other buildings were announced in a weekly permit list valued at $3.44 million.

Speed Fab-Crete of Fort Worth will build the Crestview Baptist Church's Family Life Center at 3300 Thomas. This commercial alteration to the church property will cost an estimated $1.25 million.

A half a million dollars will be spent for a medical facility, to be owned by Dr. Abdul Baluch and located at 305 Sunset. Local builders Bob Hinshaw Construction will perform the work.

Godfather's Pizza of Omaha, Neb. will build a $122,000 pizza restaurant through James E. Miller Builders. It will be located at 4410 N. Midkiff, B-1.

A&T Development is building a set of homes on Crockett in the $40,000 cost-range, and

J.A.R. Investors are putting up two residences on a lot in the 4500 block of St. Andrews for about $50,000 each.

Making Midland A Better Hometown

IRA AS MORTGAGE SOURCE

One of the fastest ways for the housing market to get a shot in the arm would be to suddenly inject billions of dollars into the mortgage money market. There is such a source sitting in individual retirement accounts (known as IRA's) which are collecting tax-free income until retirement-but that doesn't help the masses in need of housing money. I couldn't think of a better use for it.

Although total assets held in IRA accounts are conservatively estimated at about $50 billion, that figure should skyrocket due to the change in the tax law that allows individuals covered by employer pensions and profit-sharing plans to start their own IRA's.

Some observers believe that IRA's, a virtually untapped source of investment money, may now be ready to enter the real estate market in a big way and stand a good chance of becoming the primary source of future long-term mortgage funds. Why not let your shelter help acquire your shelter?

Quality is the name of the game at Troy Davis'

Owner Troy Davis stands before storefront sign located directly across from Gibson's. Visit Troy Davis at 3102 West Cuthbert in Midland or phone 689-0761 for information.

Troy Davis' Quik 1 Hour Photo Service, located directly across from Gibson's, has several new additons to its' home-owned phototography lab. One recent addition is a refrigerator freezer. Mr Davis explains, "many people do not realize that film in a camera, closed in a car in the West Texas summer heat, will spoil. The refrigerator arrests the aging process of the film, keeping it fresh. Film which is nearing its' expiration date will remain fresh if refrigerated."

Troy Davis offers film at cost at his photo lab through the purchase of a V.I.P. card. For example, the cost of one roll of Kodak film (24 exposures) is $3.59. With the V.I.P. card, the cost is reduced to $2.35: a savings of $1.24 per roll. All V.I.P. cards previously issued will be honored. Furthermore, each time the Troy Davis V.I.P. card is used, toward the processing of a 24 or 36 exposure roll of film, a complimentary mini-album is extended.

Passport pictures are now available which take "a whole three or four minutes", explains Troy Davis. Since the renewal of passports is now at ten year intervals this three or four minutes of time is wisely spent.

Midland's only home-owned lab is also offering reproductions of black and white photos. These reproductions are available when the original negative has been lost, misplaced or ruined. Antique photos can now be reproduced through a Kodak process at an affordable price.

Troy Davis' Quik 1 Hour Photo Service is the only lab in Midland which is open on Saturday until 6:00 p.m. This allows for "same day photographs" - one hour service. Processing is available six days a week: open from 7:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

Diamontrigue sets commitment to excellence

Painstaking care...at Diamontrigue, the emphasis is on quality. It is not unusual for our buyers to spend three hours in the selection of only five or six mountings, as only the finest, immaculately finished 14K plumb gold will do. We do this because we feel quality is very important when buying jewelry that lasts a lifetime, often passed lovingly through many generations. Those who have not worn Diamontrigue are sometimes concerned that the gem may not stand the test of time. No one undrstands this better than we do, considering the well-deserved reputation of the past diamond simulants. It is also important to know that while many sell the "finest" quality cubic zirconia, Diamontrigue goes one step further to insure that each gemstone is superior. Diamontrigue gems are selected by gemologists and chosen for cut, clarity, and fine, brillant color. The rigidity of the standards governing each gem's selection yields only a small fraction of the stones received for initial consideration. At present, 92% of the stones are returned, never to be sold in any of the Diamontrigue salons. We invite you to bring your fine diamonds and compare.

Wearing manmade gems is part of today's manmade world in which ultra suede, rayon, fake fur and oleomargarine are all highly acceptable. The difference is that people talk about ultra suede, rayon, fake fur and oleomargarine, but they don't talk about their Diamontrigue jewelry!

Eighty percent of Diamontrigue's customers ar affluent enough to buy genuine diamonds. Indeed, we find that the more you know about diamonds, the more you appreciate Diamontrigue. Mountings account for 90% of the total jewelry cost! Compared to genuine diamonds, a one-carat brillant cut Diamontrigue gem, for example, costs $80.00, but a one-carat genuine diamond costs $4,000.00 to $6,500.00 is slightly imperfect, or $7,000.00 to $9,000.00 is very slightly imperfect. A comparison of a one-carat total-weight earring shows the Diamontrigue pair at $175.00 (set in luxury-weight 14K plumb gold mountings. The only weight we market) while a comparable size genuine diamond pair will be priced at $2800.00 to $3600.00. A vast difference for a gem that jewelers need sophisticated testing equipment to detect.

At Diamontrigue, we have a new shipment of ear jackets to compliment your purchase of earrings, in both white and yellow gold, several set with the Diamontrigue gems. These jackets add infinite variety to your earrings and range in price from $21.00 to $430.00. For a gift selection, a new pair of ear jackets is an excellent choice for a gift that lasts!

Come by, see for yourself, bring your diamonds and compare. What sets us apart is our commitment to excellence; you don't have to be an expert to discern the difference in the remarkable Diamontrigue gemstone!

Our address is 2811 South Loop 289, by the new Furr's Cafeteria, in Time Square, between University and Indiana. Our telephone is (806) 745-7522. Also, in Odessa inside the courtyard, in the Market Place, University at Parkway. Telephone: (915)362-0056.

And remember, "If you Don't Tell, We Won't."

Hughes 300 helicopter now at Roadrunners

Roadrunner Charter Service maintains a fleet of five aircraft. Pictured here are the Hughes 300 helicopter, Cessna 414, Piper single and twin engine aircraft. For further information call (915) 563-2288 or (915) 563-2307.

Roadrunner Charter Service is an executive charter service located at the Midland Regional Airport. This 24 hour service maintains five aircraft for charters in the continental U.S. and North and South America.

Roadrunners, currently under new ownership and management, is proud to announce the addition of a helicopter to its' hangar. The helicopter, a Hughes 300 model, is available for flight instruction, sightseeing flights and aerial photography.

Flight instruction through Roadrunner Charter Service, with the Hughes 300, is offered at $130.00 per hour (dual instruction). This is available for private helicopter ratings, commercial helicopter ratings and helicopter flight instructorratings.

The Hughes 300 helicopter is also available for sightseeing flights. The flights, beginning and ending at the Midland Regional Airport, will circle the Midland limits in fifteen minutes for an exceptional price of $35.00. Seating capacity in the helicopter is three persons (one being the pilot).

"All pilots are rigorously trained at Roadrunner Charter Service", explains manager and chief pilot Jim Carlson. The three pilots must undergo recurrent training when not flying charters.

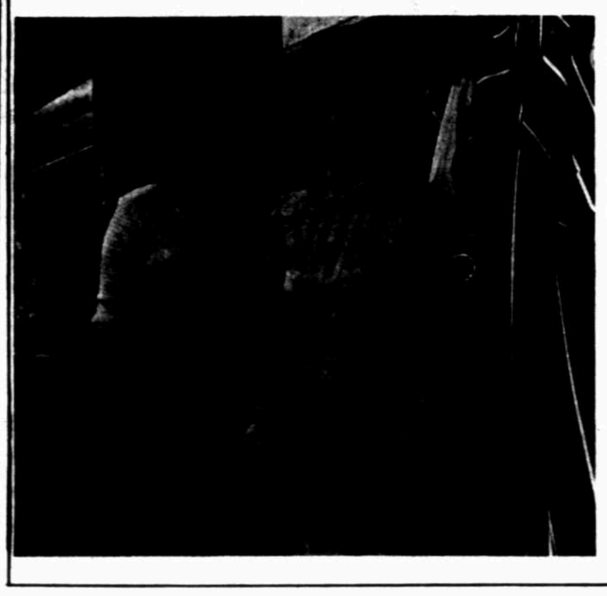

Jim Carlson brings extensive experience and expertise to this charter service. Jim, a retired army major, managed military flight training programs and instructed in the flying of aircraft and helicopters.

Since retirement in 1978, Jim has been active in corporate aviation as well as helicopter and airflight instruction and charter service.

Roadrunners is an executive charter service which maintains five aircraft. These include: a Cessna cabin class pressurized twin, Piper twin and single engine aircraft with club seating, a Lear Jet available through Davis Lear Jet Inc. of Midand and the Hughes 300 helicopter.

For further information regarding charter or helicopter services call Roadrunners at (915) 563-2288 or (915) 563-2307.

Manicure salon now open at Intimate Fashions

Intimate Fashions, a recent addition to the Imperial Shopping Center, is proud to announce the opening of its' manicure salon. An introductory offer is now in progress for each of the six types of manicures.

Intimate Fashions now offers standard manicures, nail wrappings, nail tips, nail silks, sculptured nails and pedicures. Interested people should call for an appointment at (915) 699-4051.

Owner Dorothy Fox and manager Carmen Murphey have added to their staff a professional color consultant, Ellen Christensen. Ellen is a "color analyst", trained to aid in the selection of colors for both make-up and clothing. Appointments with Ellen may be arranged by phoning Intimate Fashions.

The lingerie shop has also received a new shipment of merchandise since the opening in June. Recent additions include Keyloun patio-wear and robes, Brandywine patio-wear, nightshirts and sundresses, Bali bras and Hanes hosery.

Stop by Intimate Fashions, located at P9 Imperial Shopping Center in Midland. Any questions regarding manicures or color analysis should be directed to the staff at 699-4051. For elegant lingerie in Midland visit Intimate Fashions.

ClayDesta Plaza– The Excitement Is Building!

Nothing is better for a successful oil and gas business than being surrounded by other energetic, successful businesses.

And that's why so many independent operators and service companies are moving to ClayDesta Plaza.

Right now a lot of people are gloomy about energy. But we believe in those independent operators who are the backbone of this great industry. And we've got a business environment that reflects that positive attitude.

We've proven our value to more than 25 energy related companies that are already here.

Even the majors are coming our way. Sohio and Southland Royalty are already here. Cities Service and Sun will be in by early summer. And Gulf will occupy their new headquarters in early fall.

In all, more than six thousand people will be doing business by the end of 1983 in West Texas' first totally planned business development.

ClayDesta Plaza has lots of room. Free parking close to where you work. An extensive Petroleum Information Log Library. And Midland's only high-rise private business and social club.

More amenities are planned, like more great restaurants, shopping, and a major hotel.

The excitement is building at ClayDesta Plaza.

We're so proud of what we've built for Midland, that even if you're not looking for office space, we'd be proud to show you what we've done, what we're doing, and where we're going.

Call Bill Sandlin or Rexanna Heidelberg at 682-5379 for a tour.

You'll be excited, too, when you see what energy has built at ClayDesta Plaza.

Ford chairman may be ready to leave

DETROIT — As Ford Motor Co. prepares for the expected recovery, its board of directors later this year will begin examining candidates for chairman of the board and chief executive officer: Philip Caldwell turns 65 in 18 months and is expected to retire.

A quietly determined Ohio native and Harvard Business School graduate who is thorough to the point of exasperating some colleagues, Caldwell is beginning to get some credit for Ford's recovery. It was not long ago that he was the target of an apparent rumor campaign that had members of the Ford family plotting to get rid of him.

Caldwell first came to public attention as an unknown who suddenly shot past the redoubtable Lee A. Iacocca in the Ford hierarchy as a prelude to Iacocca's ouster. To this day, colleagues say, it irritates him when Iacocca wins praise for the recovery of Chrysler — and even when his own executives get their pictures in the newspaper.

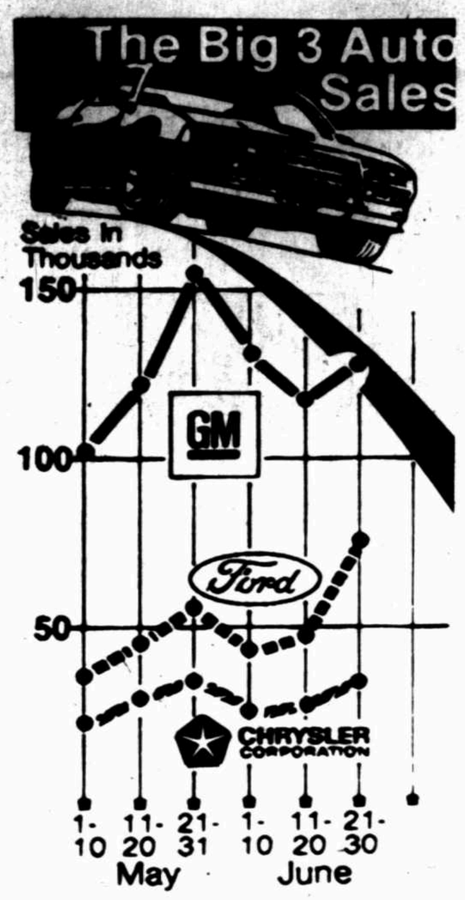

It is understood, for example, that Ford underlings have kept the wraps on Swiss-born Robert C. Lutz, a sort of European version of Iacocca who now heads Ford's international division, to prevent him from unwittingly upstaging Caldwell. Sources say Donald E. Petersen, the president, tired of the chairman's complaints, won't even grant interviews without Caldwell's OK.

Whatever his idiosyncracies, Caldwell has never been in jeopardy, directors insist. They credit him with Ford's new emphasis on quality and more enlightened approach to labor relations. Arjay Miller, onetime Ford executive and former dean of Stanford's Graduate School of Business, says Caldwell "has done a first-rate job. It has not been an easy time."

Chrysler trains a new leader?

DETROIT (AP) — Chrysler Corp. Chairman Lee Iacocca has set up a four-man management team, including himself, to run the company, and analysts speculate the group was set up to determine his successor.

"This certainly diversifies the top management and creates probably the best training ground for executives in the industry; it also prepares for the succession (of leadership)," independent Detroit analyst Arvid Jouppi said Thursday.

Touching a life

Thirteen-year-old Suzy R. lived a nightmare.

She suffered beatings almost nightly and was abused sexually time after time. Her tormentor was her father.

When case workers from the Texas Department of Human Resources learned of the nightmare, they took her from her home and had a physician treat her. He discovered her nose required major surgery; it had been broken so many times it was filled with cartilage.

Two-month-old Arturo J. was a precious baby with pitch black hair and hauntingly dark eyes. Caseworkers received complaints, investigated and picked Arturo up from his home. The infant had two broken bones — bones that hadn't even hardened because of his young age. Bruises covered his body — behind his ears, on the top of his head, the bottoms of his tiny feet.

Their names have been changed to protect their identities. Their ages are not accurate, either. But these two cases are typical of a growing tragedy in Midland County — child abuse. Oh, yes; it happens here. It happens here all too frequently. In fact, the local Department of Human Resources office received 526 reports of abuse and neglect cases in 1982. Through the first six months of this year, the office had already received 299 cases.

Last year, caseworkers picked up 66 children from Midland County homes. This year, it has already picked up 22. The department's workers are able to offer the children a better life through its foster home program, but that's where another problem surfaces: There aren't always enough foster homes available and in increasing numbers, Midland County's abused youths have to be taken to other areas for foster care.

Caseworkers attempt to work with families to resolve problems, says Midland foster home recruiter Jeannie Hunt, but take youngsters out of their home environment in life-threatening situations. The stay in a foster home can range from six hours to six years or more.

"I've had people tell me they don't think they could be a foster parent because they're afraid they couldn't give the child up when the time came," said Ms. Hunt "But when they realize that it's easier for them to give up the kids than for the kids to stay in a bad home environment, they recognize the importance of the foster home program."

Being a foster parent is a challenge, she says, because you're working with children from troubled homes who need your love and guidance. Keeping the foster home program alive is a job that never ends. Last year, the department certified eight homes in Midland and lost seven that same year.

No, being a foster parent isn't easy. It requires patience, time and inner strength. But before you say no to opening your home and your heart to these children, think of Suzy R. and Arturo J. Can you touch their lives?

If so, the Department of Human Resources' telephone number is 683-5411.

Another View:
No to tuition credits

There are so many things wrong with the idea of tuition tax credits that the Supreme Court's shaky 5-4 decision upholding a similar concept as constitutional hardly justifies their enactment by Congress.

The court's ruling in a case challenging a 28-year-old Minnesota law is not likely to settle the underlying issue, which has been argued before the high court 19 times in the last 35 years. With just the right case and a bit more enlightenment on the part of a single justice, the decision easily could go the other way.

But, as we have argued in the past: "Even if it did prove constitutional, it would be bad public policy to force all taxpayers — regardless of their religious beliefs, if any — to subsidize the particular religious education of certain children." More than 80 percent of the nation's private schools are church-related and exist for the purpose of promoting a particular religious viewpoint. Diverting taxpayer funds into that purpose, albeit indirectly, through tuition tax credits is patently unfair.

Consider other flaws in the concept:

— While easing the alleged burden of "double taxation" on private school parents who pay both tuition and public-school taxes, the tax-credit plan would impose a double burden on public school parents (many of whom are less affluent). They would be forced to subsidize the private schooling of children whose parents shun public schools.

— The tax credits would illogically aid both rich and poor families of private-school students. President Reagan has cut college-student loans for affluent families, saying the federal government cannot afford to subsidize them. Why isn't the same line of reasoning valid for tuition tax credits?

— The tax-credit scheme backed by Mr. Reagan would either add billions to the federal deficit over the next few years or else rob public schooling of its rightful share of federal education funds.

The last point is the most important. Tuition tax credits represent a serious, direct threat to the very concept of public schooling, which has been one of America's fundamental strengths. It is tragically ironic that Mr. Reagan would so endanger the financial foundation of public education just as he and most Americans are calling for improvement of the public schools.

In the face of all those arguments, the Supreme Court's latest ruling cannot justify enactment of tuition tax credits.

— The Milwaukee Journal

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Reagan richest 'iffy' candidate

WASHINGTON — It's 16 months till Election Day 1984, but we're already up to our keisters in campaign rhetoric. The time perhaps has come, therefore, to review the financial status of the candidates.

Jack Anderson

Though some critics deplore the disclosure of such financial data as unnecessary snooping by the press, I disagree. The voters have a right to know whether a politician who wants to be president is rich or poor — and how he got that way.

Income tax returns are a basic source of such information. No candidate in his right mind lies to the Internal Revenue Service. But tax returns are by law held confidential. So I had my reporters Lucette Lagnado and Laurie Siegel approach the likely 1984 candidates and ask them to make available their latest tax returns. Here are the results:

— Ronald Reagan, an undeclared but increasingly likely candidate, is the wealthiest of the possible contenders. The Reagans listed income of $741,253 for 1982, a jump of more than 75 percent over their 1981 earnings. They paid income taxes of $292,616 — or roughly 40 percent.

The blind trust that Reagan set up when he took office produced income of $230,000. The Reagans realized a substantial capital gain — taxed lower than straight income — on the sale of their Pacific Palisades home. They bought it in 1955 for less than $200,000 and sold it for $1 million.

— George Bush, the foremost candidate in the unlikely event that Reagan decides not to run for re-election, could not make his IRS records available. A spokesman explained that the wealthy vice president's blind trust, unlike Reagan's, is set up so that even Bush can't see either the income produced or the taxes paid. Only the trustee knows — though he'll presumably tell Bush if he's about to go broke.

— Reubin Askew is apparently the only candidate who has turned his IRS returns over to the Federal Election Commission. His total income in 1982 was $312,920,, on which he paid $90,109.96 in federal income tax. The financial statement he gave us listed $47,056.81 in "cash on hand" and bank accounts. The former Florida governor's big holdings, though, are in real estate: a house in Pensacola, Fla., worth $98,000, another in Lakeland worth $52,000, a third in Miami worth $225,000 and cemetery plots valued at $9,000.

The Askews claimed $101,148.58 in deductions; a whopping $70,000-plus was for medical expenses for the ex-governor's mother and his wife's mother.

— Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., listed income of $155,703 in 1982. He paid $67,830 in taxes. In addition to his Senate salary of $60,663, Cranston reported $99,676 in rent and royalty incomes, primarily from real estate holdings; $55,380 in honorariums for speeches and articles, and $49,900 in "business income" from real estate investments. The Alan Cranston Blind Trust reported a loss for the year, as did some partnerships and leases.

— Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, made his 1981 IRS return available; his 1982 return was still being prepared, after he was granted a routine extension.

The former astronaut's income was $442,598; he paid only $95,903 in taxes — about 22 percent. The Glenns claimed almost half of their income in deductions: $212,164. The income included dividends from Interstate Resort Co. ($60,932), Royal Crown Companies, the Syntex Corp. and other holdings.

Glenn drew $47,340 interest from Friendship Management, as well as from Bank One of Columbus, Ohio, and the Commitment Fund. Among his assets are some railroad car rolling stock worth about $250,000.

The senator's relatively low tax rate didn't come cheap: He paid out $26,800 (deductible) for "tax consultations."

— Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., refused to respond to repeated requests to see his income tax returns.

— Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., was the second biggest moneymaker in 1982 after the president — and No. 2 in taxes. He earned $695,906.02, and paid the IRS $287,552.25, after claiming $78,480 in deductions.

Hollings made $92,270 in speaking fees, but much of his income was from investments, including stock in Standard Oil of California and Pennzoil. He also drew income from real estate holdings, some of it inherited.

— Former Vice President Walter Mondale and his wife, Joan, listed joint income for 1982 of $432,679. They paid $161,541 to the IRS.

•Much of the Mondales' income — $403,575 — came from his lecture fees, writing and consulting. Mrs. Mondale also contributed some lecture fees, and $1,301 from her pottery business.

The Mondales' investments included Columbia Pictures, Control Data and the First Variable Rate Fund, a money market fund.

— Finally, the shoestring independent candidate, former Rep. John Anderson, R-Ill., and his wife, Keke, earned only $59,181 in 1982 and paid Uncle Sam $6,361 in taxes.

Anderson reported $14,500 income from lectures and writing. The Andersons deducted a charitable contribution of $266 in clothing and other items to the Salvation Army, and listed all 67 of the articles — including Keke's lingerie, black tights and "one white silk rose."

GEORGE F. WILL

High Court splitting hairs! Amen

WASHINGTON — When some Nebraskans pray, they ask God to afflict Oklahoma's Sooners with charley horses. The American Civil Liberties Union probably thinks this violates some constitutional requirement of a wall of separation between church and football, a distinction Nebraskans find unintelligible.

George F. Will

The prayer habits of Nebraskans recently preoccupied the Supreme Court, which held (6-3) that the Constitution does not forbid Nebraska's Legislature from beginning each session with a prayer by a chaplain paid by the state. A district court held that praying was permissible, but that paying the chaplain constituted "establishment" of religion. An appeals court agreed that both praying and paying were unconstitutional.

The appeals court's outcome was nutty, but the court was faithful to the three-part test the Supreme Court has concocted for detecting "establishment:" Government action does not constitute establishment if it has a secular purpose, if its primary effect neither advances nor inhibits religion and if it does not foster "excessive" entanglement of government with religion. Obviously the chaplain's prayers had a religious purpose, and it would have been rude for the appeals court to say that his prayers did not advance religion.

The appeals court noted that one chaplain, a Presbyterian, had served the Legislature for 16 years. That court evidently believes that Presbyterianism is Nebraska's "established" religion.

But the Supreme Court says that prayer at the opening of deliberative bodies is "deeply embedded" in American tradition. Writing for the majority, Chief Justice Burger notes that in 1789, three days after the first Congress authorized paid chaplains, it approved the language of the Bill of Rights, including the First Amendment's prohibition of "establishment of religion."

You might think that that should be sufficient, and in fact it is the core of Burger's opinion. But the Court is disqualified from being so reasonable. It has spent several decades splitting hairs and then splitting them again. (In one ruling it held that it is constitutional to use public funds to buy textbooks for non-public school pupils, but unconstitutional to buy other instructional material such as maps. This caused Sen. Patrick Moynihan (D-N.Y.) to wonder how the Court would feel about atlases — books of maps.) The splitting of split hairs brought the Court to the three-part test.

That test disregards the intentions of the framers of the Establishment Clause. That clause was designed to ensure only that government would be neutral between religions, not between religion and irreligion.

In the Nebraska case, the Court, eager to avoid coming to the conclusion the appeals court came to, disregarded the three-part test. The Court says "an unbroken practice...is not something to be lightly cast aside." True, few practices go back as far as 1774, when the Continental Congress began opening its sessions with prayers by a paid chaplain. But it is late in the day for the Court to allow its misconstruction of the Establishment Clause to be inhibited by considerations of the framers' intentions or reverence for traditions.

Justice Brennan, dissenting and joined by Marshall (Stevens dissented separately), notes that the majority "makes no pretense" of applying the Establishment Clause "tests" to Nebraska's practice. But Brennan should consider why. Common sense dictates the conclusion that Nebraska's chaplain is compatible with Establishment Clause language approved by Congress three days after Congress decided to hire chaplains. But this conclusion is incompatible with some of the Court's recent rulings. So the Court has, in effect, baldly asserted an exception to the Establishment Clause — or, more precisely, an exemption from the criteria the Court has foolishly spun to determine "establishment." Thus does the judicial activism of one decade produce a recoiling activism in another.

In another recent Establishment Clause case, the Court held (5-4) constitutional Minnesota's statute granting limited tax deductions for certain expenses incurred by parents of pupils in public and private schools. The Court held that the statute was "neutral" because it helped both public and private students — this, in spite of the fact that most of the relief went to parents of private school pupils, 96 percent of whom attended parochial schools. In this case, too, the Court seemed to be trying to evade, without repudiating, the three-part test.

In a firebreathing dissent in a recent Eighth Amendment case (the majority said about "cruel and unusual" punishment approximately what Justice Potter Stewart once said about pornography: we know it when we see it), Burger accused the majority of undermining the rule of law by disregarding a 1980 precedent. The confusion in constitutional law is now sufficient to cause one to say "amen" when the person says at the opening of proceedings in the Supreme Court and other courts, "God save the United States and this Honorable Court."

ART BUCHWALD

Avoiding all media isn't always easy

As a newspaperman I am constantly being asked by victims about their rights are when it comes to talking to the media.

Art Buchwald

I shall try to address the problem in question-and-answer form, though I may lose my journalistic license for doing so.

Q: When a reporter stops me in front of my house, or sticks a microphone in my face or telephones me in the middle of the night, what is my obligation to this person?

A: You have a right to remain silent, you have a right to shut the mike in the reporter's face, you have the right to hang up the phone.

Q: Won't that make me look bad? The correspondent says to me tonight, "Mr. Blue refuses to come out of his house to talk to us." The reporter writes, "Efforts by this newspaper to reach Mr. Blue were unsuccessful."

A: Not necessarily. The television viewer might conclude that Mr. Blue has been negligent by failing to return you to comment.

Q: What should I be worried about dealing with the media?

A: The friendly, sympathetic reporter with the heartbreaking story who calls you before your deadline and says he's only trying to get your side of the story, and the sweet little girl reporter who reminds you of your daughter. They will both use you in a story, compared to the hard-bitten, snarling old-timer, who has been making a name for himself and has no ambition to become another Woodward or Bernstein.

Q: Who are worse to deal with, the print people or TV reporters?

A: It's hard to say. I prefer to have more time with the print people before they write their story, but they can spend time with you themselves to save you. They can save you from your love of gore by admitting you know every TV news leader in Cleveland. TV reporters, on the other hand, are under pressure to get their tape to the studio, so they ask the toughest questions, and depend more on your facial reactions to them than your answers. Even if you do something, they'll still shove the microphone in your face, fighting your way to your automobile, while they scream questions at you.

Q: If I talk to the press, will they listen to my side of the story?

A: They'll listen to your side, but that doesn't necessarily mean it will appear in print. You could say the most important things and because of space limitations only three of them will appear in the newspaper. It's still better than TV, where only one of your statements gets on the air. If the TV people give you 15 seconds to defend yourself, you're a lucky person.

Q: How can I get more time?

A: By admitting your guilt. Then you'll get the full minute.

Q: Suppose I'm not accused of anything, but the media want to interview me about somebody who is. Should I talk to them?

A: It depends how much you want to get on the evening news or see your name in the paper. Obviously you have a better chance of making it if you have something negative rather than positive to say about the person accused.

Q: What if I'm an anonymous source?

A: You'll be quoted but not seen on TV. As far as newspaper people are concerned, they'd prefer to use your name, but they'll always settle with an anonymous source if they have to.

Q: Suppose a TV station or a newspaper or magazine calls me up and says they're doing a story on one of my friends. Is it okay to talk then?

A: It depends how much time you've got. The reporter will spend three hours with you, and then only use one quote, usually a negative one at that. People writing books are even worse because they have no deadlines.

Q: If everything you say is true, why do people still talk to the media?

A: Because of ego, fear, or they mistakenly figure they have nothing to hide. Then there are those who feel they can manipulate the story to their benefit.

Q: Is it true?

A: Not very often. I think it was one of our great vice presidents, Spiro Agnew, who once said, "You can manipulate some of the press all of the time, and all of the press some of the time — but you can't manipulate ALL of the press ALL of the time."

Reagan gives Democrats lesson in open field running

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST, JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — President Reagan didn't mince words following the July 4th holiday when he took the football of better education being fumbled by the Democrats and gave them a lesson in open field running. Some of the delegates to the American Federation of Teachers (AFT) meeting, which invited the president to speak, walked out on him in a huff.

Hearst

It was, I felt, an extreme act of discourtesy and makes me doubt whether these teachers are qualified to instruct students in manners and discipline as they lack the former and seem unable to behave themselves. But on the whole the delegates appeared to enjoy the president's remarks and gave him enthusiastic applause.

EDITOR'S REPORT

Some delegates who walked out of the meeting also belong to the AFT's rival union, the National Education Association, the nation's largest union after the Teamsters. Yet President Reagan's message was intended to emphasize common ground: Sound basics in elementary education to better pay for teachers proving themselves in higher grades.

Held in Los Angeles, the meeting had to be warned repeatedly by officials who make no secret of their pro-Democrat leanings to refrain from hissing or protesting demonstratively when the president appeared. Despite the early warning alert, at least 150 booed President Reagan and postured for TV cameras. President Reagan kept his cool and even exploited sourpuss losers' intemperate feelings with comments like this:

"IT HAS BEEN my experience that dedication, open-mindedness and initiative count just as much as size," observed President Reagan. "It seems to me that in all three categories, the AFT, like Avis, tries a lot harder."

President Reagan's remark, obviously meant to widen the gap even more in the longstanding feud between the NEA and the AFT, induced gales of laughter from pro-Reagan teachers who also gibed at NEA protestors as single-issue, selfish people. The president remembered that many members of the AFT and, indeed, NEA, voted for him in 1980 as did large sections of other trade union membership. Long gone are the days when unions could deliver big bloc votes.

In going on the offensive, President Reagan strongly implied that the NEA was "brainwashing American school children." He declared that the union, for decades identified with the Democratic Party, manipulated curriculum for propaganda purposes, i.e. nuclear war and racial problems.

I've had some firsthand experience with real unfettered methods of instruction and guidance originated by my grandmother, Phoebe Apperson Hearst, and Mrs. Alice McLellan Birney, a Washington, D.C., widow with two children. Through their joint efforts they created the Parent-Teachers Association from the National Congress of Mothers. The name change to PTA came in 1908. It has flourished in communities throughout America and has never been a political pressure group but a means for educational enhancement.

MY GRANDMOTHER taught school at the age of 19 in Missouri. She never lost the determination to improve the plight of poor students which was furthered by association with Mrs. Birney.

The achievements of the PTA are far too numerous to summarize, ranging all the way from the free school lunch program to child labor laws. It is pertinent to note, however, that the organization has long been accepted as an integral part of our nation's educational system and today has more than 13 million members in over 46,000 PTAs in the 50 states. Today, as in the beginning, its purpose is "to promote the welfare of children and youth in homes, schools, church and community."

That progressive and practical message has been lost in political shennanigans of the last 30 years. The Democrats, I fear, have been the worst offenders by offering to throw money at educational issues rather than seeking solutions. Presidential hopefuls in the Democratic campaign stirred up the education controversy by claiming President Reagan slashed spending in this vital field.

IN REBUTTAL, the president has asserted that the total budget for defense in 1982 was $179 billion and education obtained $216 billion. On student guaranteed loans, the president contends that spending has increased by 22 percent, from $5.9 billion to the proposed $7.2 billion for 1984.

The president's own campaign for education followed the release of a report prepared by his National Commission on Excellence in Education. It is regarded as an opening move of the 1984 election campaign in which Democratic aspirants offer assorted blueprints to renew the country's public school system. By appearing at the Los Angeles meeting of teachers, the president went a long stride toward his goal of turning education into a political plus for himself.

I thought that in his 20-minute speech, he struck many responsive chords among teachers and fellow Americans across the country. These include, for instance, the view that schools should not "permanently segregate" students with limited proficiency in English. He added that bilingual programs "should serve as a bridge to full participation in the American mainstream." Even critics can't possibly quarrel with that idea.

One of the most biting comments on education I heard in a long time came from Ms. Pat O'Brien on the CBS radio network in a program called "Spectrum." Author-journalist O' Brien in a commentary from Washington, D.C., concluded bluntly that the major problem involving school discipline is the increasing number of "incompetent teachers in the classrooms."

President Reagan let those ill-mannered teachers off easily.

Americans have reason to be proud

Dixie C. Mims is a native Midlander who attended Hardin-Simmons University in Abilene. She returned to Midland in 1976 and is self-employed.

By DIXIE C. MIMS

Once again our country has given us reason to be proud of her. The recent flight of the space shuttle Challenger, with America's first woman astronaut aboard, was virtually flawless. A few days earlier, the Pioneer 10 spacecraft sped past the farthest known planets, becoming the first manmade object to leave our solar system. And with it the longest long-distance call in history was made. The ship outlived its 21-month plan and kept going. It is, in fact, still working after 11 years. And in my heart and in the hearts of a good number of my fellow Americans the flame of patriotism burns stronger and brighter than ever before.

Where else does a country's citizenry have the right to trial by jury, the right to keep and bear arms and the right to representation and counsel in legal proceedings? Where else do even protesters have the right to carry their protest signs freely? In many countries they would be automatically executed, no questions asked. American advertisers can put up the signs they want to, while in Communist countries all advertising is censored.

Where else do the youth of a country have the right to go to school and study what they wish? In some nations the students are tested at an early age and then told what they are going to study and what they are going to do when they get out of school. Where else can children go to camp during the summer months? In Cuba and other countries the youth are expected to work when they are not in school, some building radios, some operating computers, but all doing something.

To what other nations do artists from Communist nations defect when they can?

Where else but the United States are 80 million people overweight, while in other parts of the world, such as Cuba and Poland, food is rationed and is precious?

The Salvadoran guerrillas are trained by Americans. Mexican women are crossing the border into Texas and neighboring states during the latter stages of pregnancy to have their babies here in hopes that when their children are older, they can help the parents obtain citizenship in this mighty land. The Mexican nationals who come to the United States to work and live gladly work hard in the hot sun all day so they can make a living for their families back home. When I was in Ecuador, one young girl begged me to take her back home with me. A waiter in Ambato, Ecuador, quizzed me as to how he could best learn English so he could come to the United States; everywhere I went, people asked me how they could get to this country.

Recently, I was asked to sign an oath of allegiance to the United States in order to go to work. In doing so, I knew that I was doing the right thing and that I was indeed fortunate to live here and that, in spite of all our problems, America is the best nation in the world.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Mall auction

To The Editor:

I want to address you concerning my feelings about the auction which took place at the mall Thursday night. I will try to do this as fairly as possible.

The positive aspects of the auction were very small. It was a good promotional stunt to get people to buy and Midland was helped. The idea of helping MARC was also good. That's all of the positive.

Even though MARC was helped, the auction was not billed as such. Therefore the rules changed just as the auction started. I would guess that between 75 percent to 95 percent of the money taken in at the mall comes from the average income people of the community. They were the ones who were abused Thursday night. They probably spent between $50 and $250. I personally spent $1583 and that included a major purchase.

I took down what the items went for. It was ridiculous. The parrot went for $9500, the dog for $3000. The car went for $7700 with the man using $4400 cash money. For his generosity he was given a diamond ring FREE. I was told by several people that all of the above purchases went to the same people.

All of the early bids came from the front. They were starting at $500 to $700 for a $100 item. Were people placed in the front to jack the bidding up? It sure looked like it. I also saw what looked like only certain people being recognized. One lady who won an exercise bicycle at the end said she had been bidding all night and had just been recognized.

I may be the only one who feels this way. Even if I am, I feel better by venting my feelings.

If anyone else feels the same way I do, please call or write the mall office. Please do so in a courteous and respectful manner.

Save the ducks

To The Editor:

As you know, there are ducks at A Street park, but there are not as many as there were. Not of old age but because people do not keep their dogs on a leash.

The other day my mom and dad and I were down at the park just watching and admiring how beautiful they were, then I turned around and looked down on the other side of the lake and I saw something white floating near the bank. So I walked down there and it was a big white beautiful duck.

It had been bitten to death by dogs. It was so pretty.

If they can put up "No Swimming" signs, why can't they put up "Keep Your Dog On A Leash?" I think the only ones who have the freedom are the dogs. And there have been many dogs down there that are not on a leash. And if the owner can't keep their dog on a leash I don't think they should even take their dog down there.

I wonder sometimes how would they like to be a duck and be down there and dogs coming out there trying to kill them. And there are even young ones that hatched and are trying to keep from getting killed.

So I am writing concerning the ducks. Let's keep the ducks safe and keep them as long as possible because the Lord didn't make them to be killed that way. So keep your dog on a leash and let's all enjoy A Street park pond and the ducks.

Two solutions

To The Editor:

With the problems of possible war in Central America, especially in El Salvador, I think that there could be a couple of ways of handling and solving this problem.

One would be to have President Reagan send troops into El Salvador or anywhere else in Central America that needed help. I am 19 years old so this decision isn't one I would like 100 percent, but, if war did break out I would be willing to go and fight and die for this country.

I would not do this unless war was declared by President Reagan.

In high school I wore camouflage fatigues to school to symbolize my willingness to fight for this country and even die for it if I have to! It is better to be cami(flage) than Commie.

Second plan could be to ignore all of what's happening in Central America and look the other way. Now I know people have been saying this could turn into a another Vietnam War, but these people are not thinking because Vietnam was clear aross the world whereas El Salvador is closer to Texas than the state of Maine.

Now I don't believe in all what the U.S.-backed Huerta government is doing, but I would rather have it than communism! If we allow the pacification that went on before Word War II to happen, then we could have another surprise in store for us as we had in Pearl Harbor.

If Americans allow the communists to take over Central America and then later on down the line possibly Mexico, then the Communists are clearly in our own back yard! When this happens, as surely as apple pie, hot dogs and Ford cars, we will lose our freedom.

Violated trust

To The Editor:

The Wall Street Journal recently reported an arbitrator overturning the discharge of two workers for not telling the boss that a third worker was stealing from the company. Instead, they were given 90-day suspensions for having witnessed the repeated thefts "without having done anything about it."

When one is in another's employ, one is a steward of the company's interests and property. These two employees violated a trust. In reducing their punishment, the arbitrator condoned their action, to some degree. Those who are silent are just as much accomplices to the crime as if they had been directly involved.

Traffic hazard

To The Editor:

I am writing this letter to call public attention to the traffic hazard at Andrews Highway and Louisiana.

As you know, or at least I assume you know, Louisiana Street proceeds from east to west and is a one-way street until it crosses Andrews Highway. Obviously, many people still do not know this because at least three times weekly, I have to dodge some "nerd" going the wrong way and coming right for me.

There are no signs at Andrews Highway showing that one is going the "wrong way." The "one-way" signs are set back from Andrews Highway and are not easily seen by the stranger in town. There formerly was a "wrong way" sign just in front of the Shell station. This sign was flattened by a confused motorist some weeks ago and has never been replaced by the city.

Do you suppose we can get this dangerous intersection made less dangerous by more signs? Please publish this letter. I am getting older and my "dodging" reaction is slower.

Cash for trash

To The Editor:

I just read "OK, Come Clean." I don't think you have the answer to the problem of dumping and littering.

I've also read in the paper Midland prides itself on a very high percentage of well-educated people. Education is wonderful: I'm all for it! Still, you see a lot of trash dumping in Midland.

I think a good solution worth trying would be to make the dumpgrounds available at no charge to the people of Midland and Midland County. Also you could try paying the people to dump in the proper place. Do not charge; do the very opposite! Pay a certain amount per pound or load of trash.

You have seen this work with cans, why not with trash? Our city would benefit and it would give people the incentive that works when civic pride doesn't move them. Money talks and people listen.

Where will the money come from? I don't know all the answers.

Legal pari-mutuel betting faces long odds in Texas

I've always had a knack for recognizing issues that stirred the public blood.

Bill Modisett

Growing up back on the farm, if anyone had casually said to me that the issue revolving around horseracing would stay in the Texas limelight for two more decades, I would have laughed — loudly! In fact, I would have bet legalized horseracing was just around the corner in the Lone Star State. That was in the early 1960s.

After all, what was evil about a common farm activity: A race to find out which horse was fastest, yours or your neighbor's. As brothers, sisters, cousins and fathers watched, you rode the track — up the pasture to the stock tank, around it and back to the finish, two times. There was plenty of betting, too. Soft drinks, a chew of tobacco, occasionally a couple of bucks. It was leisure-time activity to pass the hours on hot summer days.

THERE WAS NO thought of the possibility of evil. We raced horses, won a little and lost a little, and on Sunday, we went to church — prayer-meeting, as we called it — to cleanse our souls.

Now, two decades and a number of defeated legalization attempts later, horseracing in Texas remains a mere whisper of what racing enthusiasts want. Naivete kept me from seeing in the 1960s what millions of Texans already realized: Here was an issue to test the very soul of a state. Opponents already had lined up to battle to the grave. Well, it's two decades later and the long and winding road for horseracing in Texas isn't even a centimeter shorter.

Boy, can I pick 'em.

The camouflaged issue behind the horseracing duel isn't horseracing at all. It's legalized betting and all of the disastrous results that betting could bring: Further decay of the family structure because "Pop" is out at the tracks betting his weekly wages on his favorite steed instead of providing for "Mom" and "Junior," and creating a proper home life, complete with ample food, wholesome entertainment and rigorous church attendance and support.

That type of lifestyle certainly offers laudable advantages. But some Texans have wanted more — a taste of the unknown, maybe, or adventure spawned by chance — and they've kept the controversy alive for decades. Supporters of pari-mutuel betting measures said after this year's legislative session adjourned they were closer than ever to getting a referendum put before the voting public. Even if that's the case, pari-mutuel wagering in Texas isn't just around the corner.

CHURCH OPPOSITION remains strong and during this past session anti-crime organizations presented an insurmountable obstacle to racing supporters. If put to a vote, those groups would be out in force as past referendums in 1962 and 1968 proved.

As much as anything, the pari-mutuel wagering question asks whether Texans have the amount of self-discipline and restraint necessary to hold themselves in check if betting on horses was legalized again. It was authorized in 1933, but only existed four years before being outlawed.

Only the most naive — like myself 20 years ago — assume today that some of the spectators at horseraces in the Hill Country and elsewhere in Texas refrain from putting a couple of bucks on the horses. The money simply doesn't change hands in open view. And literally hundreds of Midland and Odessa residents attend races in New Mexico while thousands of other Texans go to races within driving or flying distance in other states.

But that isn't the same as Texas fully embracing legalized betting, opponents say. That step could be an open door to corruption, they claim.

PERSONALLY, I see nothing wrong with pari-mutuel betting — or horseracing — provided individuals approach the activity in the proper way and don't let it control their lives. But a lot of Texans don't think it's OK and that's where legalized betting's trouble comes in.

The argument by anti-crime organizations that legalized betting would attract organized crime elements to Texas won't hold water with me. What organized crime could earn in Texas through horseracing it could exceed — and probably already does — in illicit drugs.

No, the question of pari-mutuel wagering centers around moral opposition of religious groups to betting and the question of support for churches, just as it always has and always will. It also encompasses the question of restraint and freedom of choice, and whether temptation should be allowed so close to home.

Judging from past experience, this race isn't over. But my money is on the churches — if they want my support. Come to think of it, judging from my past ability to pick winners, they may not.

Rule changes help Texas credit unions compete

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Credit Union Commission has approved changes in requirements for chartering or expansion of state-chartered credit unions.

Those changes are intended to help state-chartered credit unions remain competitive with their federal counterparts and allow them to compete with other financial institutions.

Commission members agreed with Credit Union Commissioner John (Pete) Parsons and voted to rescind existing rules on charter applications and field of membership requirements. The change will allow Parsons to determine whether to grant applications for charter or expansion on a case-by-case basis.

TCUC member Walter Duncan, Richardson, who supported the changes, argued it is time for credit unions to "lay aside tradition" if they are to compete in the marketplace with other types of financial institutions.

"The function of credit unions has changed," Duncan said. "We're no longer a movement we're a business."

Unless state-chartered credit unions remain competitive, "we may not have a need for a state charter or a state department," he said.

Parsons told the commission "granting of fields of memberships of new charters, and expansions of existing fields of memberships, will be based on reasonbility and need to provide credit union services to various groups of Texas citizens..."

The new rules require the commissioner to make decisions within 90 days. They provide for an informal review process — in addition to the formal appeal process already provided - for appealing a decision by the commissioner.

The commission also created a "Charter and Expansion Review Committee," composed of commission members, to consider whether to sustain, overrule or modify the commissioner's decision.

The commission also reviewed the recent opinion by Attorney General Jim Mattox, in which he held that school district "activity funds" may be deposited in credit unions.

Mattox said the School Depository Act requires other district funds to be placed in a bank — with credit unions and savings and loan associations barred from acting as depositories — but said the Texas Education Agency has'nt required that "co-curricular activity" funds be placed in banks (although TEA has the power to require that by regulation).

State Board of Insurance has adopted an emergency rule saying that an insurance policy providing coverage substantially the same as provided by worker's compensation policies may not be written to cover an employer who is eligible to (but who has not) become a worker's compensation subscriber.

SBI said the "specific intent" of the worker's compensation statute, is to cover employees of eligible employers under those provisions.

"It is the board's opinion," SBI said in its order, "that an imminent peril to the public welfare requires that the rule be adopted on an emergency basis as such policies which are sold to evade the provisions...are void."

SBI's new rule is aimed at a blanket accident policy which it says is being sold mostly to small employers.

While there is nothing improper about the policy itself, SBI says, some companies have been selling such coverage rather than worker's compensation.

K—B Gas Company joint venture has completed the West Ballinger Gas Plant, a natural gas products plant located three miles west of Ballinger, Texas, on Northington land fronting Country Club road.

The K—B Gas Company joint venture gathers, processes and markets gas purchased from leases containing 2096 acres and situated within a three-mile radius of the plant site.

The West Ballinger Gas Plant is processing gas delivered from 30 wells producing casinghead gas and gas well gas from Capps, Jennings and Gardner formations in the Ballinger West, Big Ed and Big Ed North Fields.

The plant is served by a gas gathering system owned by K—B and comprised of seven miles of pipelines and gas purchase meter stations at each of the leases. It is a straight refrigeration type and includes equipment to treat the gas to pipeline specifications, extract the liquid gas products (propane, butane, etc.) and market both the dry and liquid streams.

The plant dry gas stream is sold to Lone Star Gas Company for their Ballinger Distribution system. The liquid gas products stream is marketed under contract with united L.P. gas Corporation.

The K-B Gas Company system was built in accordance with design specifications by BCC Engineering, Inc. of Midland and is designed to handle up to 5 million cubic feet of gas daily.

The main compressor, 3-stage ariel gas compressor unit with caterpillar 379 engine, was built by Compressor Systems, Inc. of Midland. The main plant equipment was fabricated in Odessa and trucked to the plant site.

Assembly, installation, piping, plumbing and start—up was completed by local sub-contractors under the supervision of Phil Hunt of San Angelo, Texas. Hunt is the plant and system supervisor for K-B.
