Jet lands safely after panel rips off wing

By CLARO CORTES
Associated Press Writer

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — A panel ripped off the right wing of a United Airlines jumbo jet over the Pacific Ocean on Saturday, but the plane returned safely to Manila and none of the 357 people aboard was injured.

The Boeing 747 landed at Ninoy Aquino International Airport about an hour after departing for Tokyo and San Francisco.

The accident did not affect the plane's ability to fly, the airline and the U.S. Federal Aviation Administration said.

Passenger Jonathan Miller, a 50-year-old aircraft engineer from Torrance, Calif., said the plane began to vibrate after a 10-foot-by-3-foot strip of the right wing blew off above the flaps near the fuselage.

"First, I felt a bump, then the plane began vibrating," said Miller, who was seated near the wing. "I saw a foot of the starboard wing peel off and then other pieces followed. You can clearly see through the hole."

But Rob Doughty, a United spokesman in Chicago, said the portion of a fiberglass panel that fell off was only five feet long and three feet wide.

He said there were other panels beneath it and that the accident did not leave a hole in the wing. "It's not a hole at all," he said in an interview.

Fred Farrar, an FAA spokesman in Washington, told The Associated Press the panel that flew off "was strictly there for streamlining."

He said it was "not structurally significant" and that there was "no compromise to the structural integrity of the airplane."

Doughty did not know how high the plane was flying when the accident occurred, but Miller said it was probably about 35,000 feet above the Pacific Ocean at the time. Miller said there was "very mild panic" inside the craft when the passengers learned about the torn wing section.

Maria Rowena Pizarro, a Filipino passenger traveling to Chicago, said she felt the plane vibrating but assumed it was wind turbulence. "I knew something was wrong when we saw some of the passengers seated near the wings frantically waving at the stewardesses and pointing at the plane's wings," she said.

Mrs. Pizarro said a crew member emerged from the cockpit, looked at the wing and announced the plane was returning to Manila.

"We were assured by the crew that everything was OK," she said. "And since we were not instructed to take any emergency procedures, I knew we were safe."

Rudy Flores, supervising air traffic controller at Manila's airport, said the crew discovered a fiberglass section of the wing tore off about 30 minutes after the plane took off from Manila.

Flores said the pilot radioed the airport's tower that the damage was considered minor and emergency assistance would not be needed.

"Nobody was hurt," Flores said in a telephone iterview. "But because of the damage, the flight has been canceled."

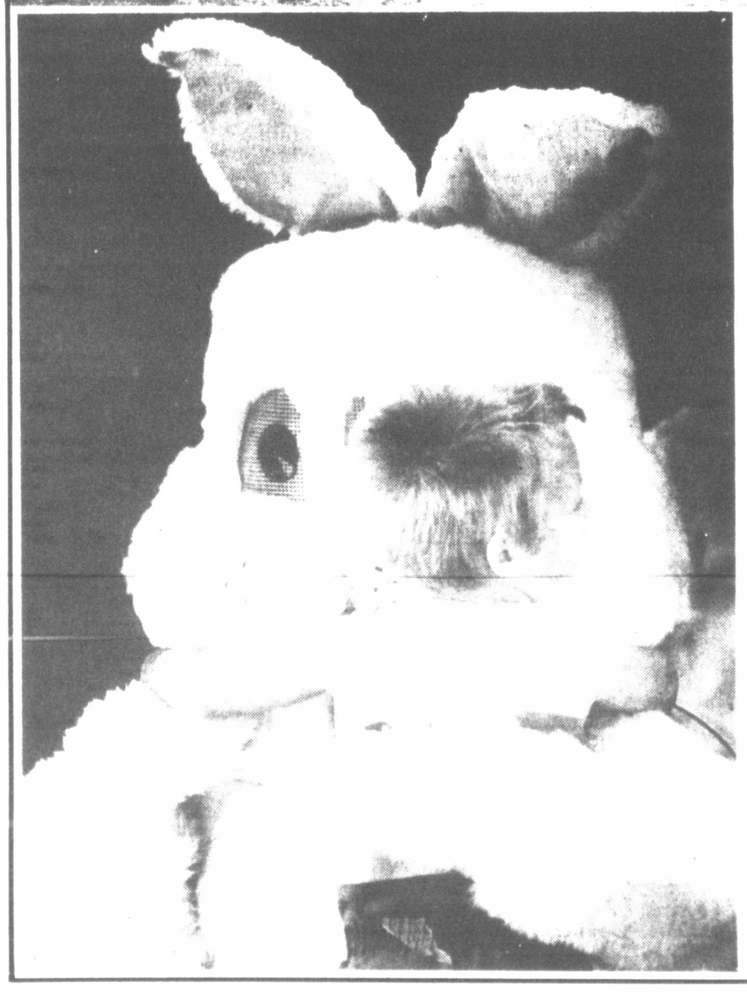

Dr. Edgardo Francisco, the airport doctor, said one passenger showed symptoms of a heart attack but recovered after taking sedatives.

A United official in the Philippines said the plane's 340 passengers and 17 crew members would be flown from Manila on Sunday.

Doughty said the Boeing 747-100 was delivered to United in Nov. 28, 1970. "It's too early to tell what the problem is, and to jump to the conclusion that it was age of the airplane at his point is irrelevant," he said.

Bring on the eggs

City attorney rules Dixon can run for commissioner

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

After conferring with attorneys for the Secretary of State's office, City Attorney Don Lane has ruled that Robert Dixon is eligible to run for the Ward 3 City Commission seat.

Dixon's late filing, which was not completed until 5:02 p.m. on Wednesday, was the subject of a three-day controversy at City Hall.

City Secretary Phyllis Jeffers had originally not allowed Dixon to file because his application was not filed in a timely fashion, which is interpreted by lawyers with the Secretary of State's office and the city as being 5 p.m.

But the reason it was not completed by 5 p.m. was that Dixon did not know his voter registration number. Lane said the city has always interpreted wording in the city charter requiring candidates to be qualified electors as meaning they must be registered to vote.

That decision was changed after Dixon appealed the denial of his application and Lane checked with attorneys for the Secretary of State on the matter.

In an inter-office memo to Jeffers, Lane wrote in part, "This issue has never been raised before nor am I aware of any case authority. But it is my opinion that the application of Mr. Dixon to be placed on the ballot ... should be accepted since it was tendered prior to 5 p.m."

In the last paragraph of the memo, Lane also asks Jeffers to make sure everything else on the application is legal and correct. He adds that, pending such approval, Dixon must be placed on the ballot.

Lane said since the charter uses the wording "qualified elector" in stating who can run for office, but does not interpret that as meaning the person is registered to vote, the city should give Dixon the benefit of the doubt.

Jeffers' actions regarding Dixon's application are reviewed in the memo and it is clarified that everything she did was in accordance with the city's best interpretation of the law.

Lane said, in an interview, that if anything else but the voter registration number had been missing from the application, he still would have been turned down, no matter whether it was one minute after 5 p.m. or 20 minutes.

"There's got to be a cut-off point, and 5 p.m. is it," Lane said. He further stated that comparisons between being in line to vote at 7 p.m. and still getting to vote, and being in the election office but not completing a ballot application by 5 p.m. were not valid.

Those comparisons were made by Dixon during a story that appeared in The Pampa News on Friday.

Lane emphasized that election laws are very specific about when the cut-off time for registering to appear on a ballot is. He said rules about being in line to vote in an election are covered by other election laws and the two are not comparable.

Jeffers said the drawing for position on the ballot between incumbent Ward 3 Commissioner Joe Reed and Dixon will be conducted at 8 a.m. on Monday.

She said all ballots have been held up at the printer's pending the outcome of the drawing for position.

Dixon said Saturday he was pleased that he was being permitted to run for the commission post.

He said a city policeman Friday afternoon had hand-delivered a notice of the Monday morning ballot-position drawing to his house.

Jesse Jackson issues Easter call for freeing hostages in Lebanon

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent

CHICAGO (AP) — The Rev. Jesse Jackson is sounding an Easter call for renewed humanitarian efforts to gain freedom for American hostages held in Lebanon, saying that "we should go on the offensive, the moral offensive."

"Renewed effort and hope must replace futility," Jackson said. "It's time now to roll the stone away."

Nine Americans are held hostage in Lebanon, as are six people from other foreign nations. Longest held is Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, who was kidnapped on March 16, 1985.

"We are concerned about all of those who are held captive, whether they are Lebanese or French or British of American," Jackson said in an interview on the hostage situation.

"We are concerned that a whole nation is held captive to these continued shellings and bombings. In a sense, Terry and the others are prisoners of war."

Anderson had covered Jackson's 1984 mission to Syria, which led to the release of a Navy lieutenant whose plane was shot down during a U.S. raid over Lebanon. The Navy man was held for a month, then released to Jackson. Anderson himself was seized by gunmen in Beirut little more than 15 months later.

Jackson said it is important that the Lebanese Moslems holding U.S. hostages know that Americans are concerned about the rebuilding of that country, about children in refugee camps, about bombing and shelling.

"We are concerned about that," he said. "So was Terry."

"We should not take the position that Lebanon is a no man's land cursed with eternal and perpetual war," the black civil rights and political leader, twice a Democratic presidential candidate, said in the interview. He said the United States should make clear that it is prepared to help rebuild and restore Lebanon, just as Europe was rebuilt after World War II.

Fire Department collecting point for harmful extinguishers

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

The Central Fire Station of the Pampa Fire Department is being used as a collection point for a brand of fire extinguishers made in Canyon that have been ruled as potentially deadly.

The state Attorney General's Office and the state fire marshall are taking legal action against the Mist-A-Matic Fire Control Co. for selling liquid fire extinguishers that contain a chemical known as Halon 2402.

The extinguishers are shaped like a snow cone and are beige in color. The brand name is listed on the outside of the container.

Pampa Fire Chief Robert Young said he has received information the extinguishers, if set off by a fire, may emit "vapors that may cause dizziness or suffocation. Contact with liquid may cause frostbite. (Contact with fire) may produce irritating or poisonous gas."

Young said the White Deer Land Museum in Pampa had purchased at least 150 of the Mist-A-Matic brand extinguishers, which they were going to be turning over to the Fire Department.

"We just got a call out of Follett, too," Young said. "Some guy up there has 24 of them. He said they cost him $2,000. He wanted to know if he could drop them off here."

Young added that, in his opinion, the manufacturers, in addition to making a potentially harmful product, were also guilty of grossly over-charging for them.

"I bet they didn't cost $1.50 to $2 to make. With the chemicals, they may have cost $10. There's a high mark-up in those," Young said.

The extinguishers were allegedly designed to work by emitting the Halon 2402 on the fire when heat tripped a fuse on the bottom of the cone-shaped device. If the fire got hot enough, according to Pampa Fire Department officials, the cone was to drop, bursting on the fire.

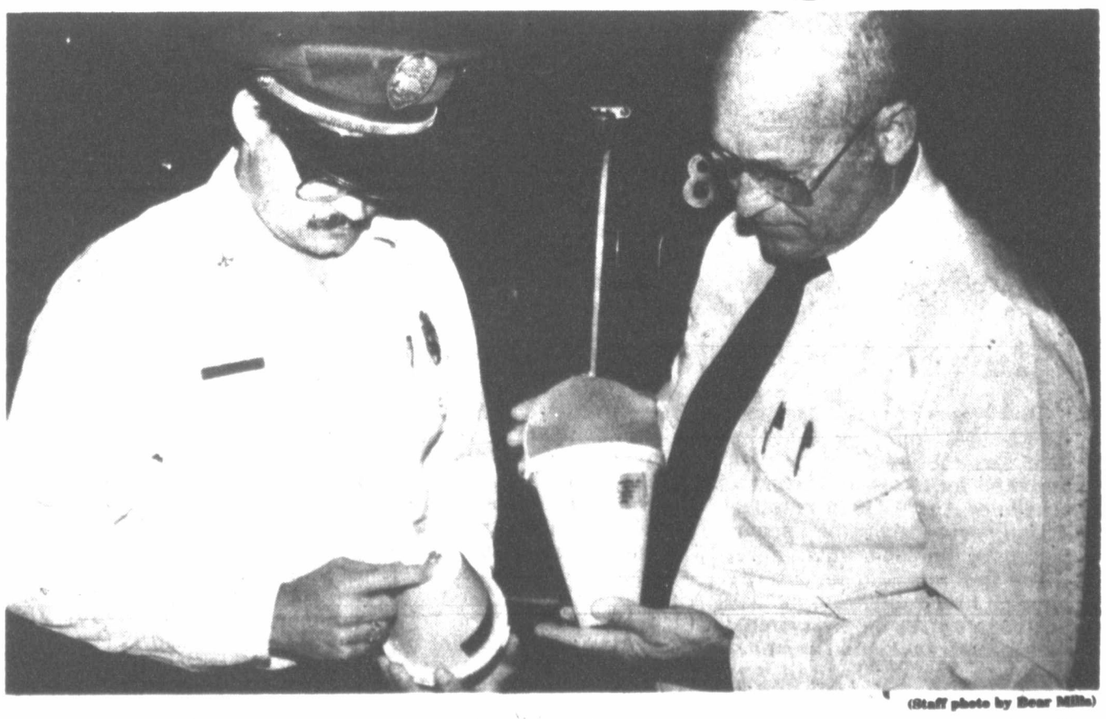

Young said the contents of the extinguishers are not listed and that the only wording on the cones is Mist-A-Matic and "Contains no carbontetrachloride."

In addition to selling the 150 to the White Deer Land Museum and the 24 in Follett, it is believed the owners of the company, Jesse and Melba LeBow of Canyon, have sold a number of the devices to area residents.

State and local officials urge anyone who may have purchased a Mist-A-Matic device of any kind, or any other extinguisher sold by the LeBows, to turn them in to the Pampa Fire Department, since they are extremely dangerous and should not be used under any circumstances.

The LeBows are scheduled to appear in front of 251st State District Court Judge Pat Pirtle on March 30 to hear charges against them.

Buyers of the extinguishers may wish to contact the Lubbock office of the Consumer Protection Division of the AG's office to have their names added to a list of those the state is seeking refunds for on purchases of the devices.

Gramm agrees to pay penalty

By JENNIFER DIXON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Phil Gramm announced Saturday his 1984 campaign committee has agreed to pay a $30,000 penalty to settle a five-year dispute with the Federal Election Commission.

Although errors made by his first Senate campaign committee were "unintended and in no way benefitted the campaign ... they were errors," the Texas Republican said.

"The FEC does not contend that anyone in the campaign committee consciously sought to violate any FEC reporting requirement and the committee is now in total compliance. They were technical reporting errors and they in no way benefitted my campaign," said Gramm, who intends to seek re-election in 1990.

In a statement, Gramm said he rejected suggestions that he take the FEC to court to fight the penalty as "unfair and unjustified" because a lawsuit would cost many times the $30,000 penalty.

Donald R. White, treasurer of the "Friends of Phil Gramm" 1984 Senate campaign committee, said the FEC accused the group of failure to make timely reports and failure to supply adequate documentation of campaign contributions.

According to White, the FEC questioned the campaign's handling of contributions from husbands and wives on joint checking accounts. The FEC has found that $15,000 of $690,000 in potentially excess contributions was outside the limit of $1,000 per person, per election.

After the committee provided documentation on the questionable contributions, the FEC decided $675,000 was within the limits. The remaining $15,000 will be donated to charity, White said.

Also, the FEC questioned whether the campaign fully reported primary debts, which White said was accurate, although most of the debt had not been billed to the campaign by the time original reports were to have been filed. The FEC also determined that $9,708 in corporate funds were erroneously accepted. The money has been refunded, White said.

The FEC complained that contributor identification data such as addresses and job title was not aways available in a timely manner and not all funds wee deposited within 10 days of receipt. White said both assertions were correct in "scattered" instances, and that complete information on each contributor was provided to the FEC.

Finally, the FEC complained the campaign overpaid its share of a joint fund-raiser at the 1984 Republican National Convention in Dallas. White said a campaign audit found the complaint to be accurate and has agreed to seek a $506 reimbursement from the only remaining co-host, the National Republican Senatorial Committee.

"In no way did the failure to obtain written allocation of funds on joint checking accounts, the failure to report debt in the primary, the overpayment of the committee's share of fund-raising costs or any other reporting error in any way benefit the Gramm campaign," White said.

White said the volume of $10 million in contributions was overwhelming, even though the campaign twice contracted with outside firms to provide accounting and reporting services.

Easter sunrise service planned

Pastor John Denton was to bring the message "Hope and Life."

Pampa woman killed in accident

ABILENE — A 79-year-old Pampa woman died Friday afternoon at the scene of a two-vehicle accident near Hamlin.

Helen Wagoner, 79, of 2224 Evergreen, was traveling south on U.S. 83, 1.6 miles north of Hamlin, when the 1984 Pontiac she was driving reportedly sideswiped a 1977 Ford truck pulling a trailer, a Department of Public Safety spokesman in Abilene said Saturday.

Mrs. Wagoner was pronounced dead at the scene by Jones County Justice of the Peace John Howard, he said.

DPS Trooper Max Shaw of Anson said in his report of the accident that Mrs. Waggoner's vehicle crossed the center stripe into the left northbound lane of the roadway at about 3:20 p.m. Friday.

The truck, driven by Bernardo Casanova of Hawley, veered to the left to avoid a collision, but Mrs. Wagoner's Pontiac struck the left rear of the trailer. Casanova was not injured in the accident, the DPS spokesman said.

Private graveside services for Mrs. Wagoner are to be at 1 p.m. Monday in Fairview Cemetery with Dr. Max Browning, pastor of First United Methodist Church of Pampa, officiating.

A memorial service is set for 2 p.m. Monday in First United Methodist Church with Dr. Browning officiating. The body will not lie in state. Arrangements are by Carmichael-Whatley Funeral Home.

Mrs. Wagoner was born June 6, 1909 in Normal, Ill. She moved to Pampa in 1951 from the Grandview Community. She married W.A. "Bill" Wagoner on June 6, 1936 in Bloomington, Ill. He died in 1972. She was a member of First United Methodist Church and the Friendship Sunday School Class. She was secretary of the Pampa Knife & Fork Club for many years.

Survivors include two sons, James A. Wagoner of Denver, Colo., and the Rev. John W. Wagoner of Merkel.

The family requests memorials be to First United Methodist Church of Pampa or First United Methodist Church of Merkel.

Hundreds arrested in abortion protests

By The Associated Press

Pro-choice activists called the leader of an anti-abortion group "Ayatollah Terry" as he and his supporters led demonstrations around the country in a Holy Week campaign that resulted in several hundred arrests.

Nearly 300 people were arrested Friday in Philadelphia and Albany, N.Y. In Long Beach, Calif., police refused to arrest any of the 350 Operation Rescue protesters at a sit-in outside a medical building although they defied an order to disperse. Police made no arrests because the building was closed, said Police Chief Lawrence Binkley.

In Philadelphia, 180 people were arrested following demonstrations at two clinics. The protests came three days after a federal judge barred all such disruptive demonstrations by abortion opponents at clinics.

The demonstrators gathered in rain and gusting winds outside Planned Parenthood and the Elizabeth Blackwell Health Center for Women, chanting and singing. Only protesters at Planned Parenthood were arrested.

Members of abortion-rights groups said they decided to show up also to press their side.

"We knew in advance and we got organized," said Marcy McCook, a worker at Planned Parenthood. "People are afraid they're going to lose their rights."

Pam Rizzo, president of Northeast Pro-Life, said people "who didn't want to see babies die" showed up to demonstrate, but Good Friday also gave people added incentive to protest.

The clinics were opened after minor delays.

One of the larger gatherings was in Long Beach, where those opposed to legalized abortion held Bibles and photos of aborted fetuses and sang hymns.

More than 400 pro-choice activists, including actress Morgan Fairchild and comedian Elayne Boosler, toted signs and chanted slogans like "Read 'em their rights and take them away."

Randall Terry, leader of the Binghamton, N.Y.-based Operation Rescue, was reluctant to answer reporter's questions as pro-choice demonstrators surrounded him yelling "Ayatollah Terry."

"I'm not talking because this is not a war of words, it's a war against butchering babies," Terry said.

Following the Long Beach protest, the administrative offices of Planned Parenthood in Los Angeles received a bomb threat, prompting an evacuation and police search that found no evidence of any explosive device, said executive director Joan Babbott.

In New York, anti-abortion protesters in Albany and Syracuse were carted to jail in wheelchairs and converted passenger buses.

In Albany, police said more than 115 people were arrested at the downtown office of Upper Hudson Planned Parenthood.

In Syracuse, police used wheelchairs to haul away 56 protesters who packed inside the Planned Parenthood Center.

Pampa ISD chosen again for arts program

Pampa public schools again have been selected for the Arts Education Initiative program by the Texas Commission on the Arts.

The Commission will be bringing programs to two elementary schools here in the first part of April.

The programs are designed to help students and teachers recognize the importance of the arts to basic education and to comply with the Texas Education Agency's mandate to instruct pre-kindergarten through 12th grade students in the art.

Understanding the long-term benefits to the Commission's immediate constituents, the many arts and cultural organizations and their audiences in Texas, the Commission has joined with the TEA to implement the intent of the Texas State Legislature regarding arts in basic education.

A visual arts program, with Commission representative Debra Dobbins, will be held at Travis Elementary School beginning April 3 and lasting for two weeks.

A Theatre Arts Workshop will be held at Horace Mann Elementary School from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Saturday, April 1, presented by Robyn Flatte, executive and artistic director for the Dallas Children's Theatre Inc. She will be training teachers to use creative tools for classroom presentation of theatre arts.

The theatre arts program will continue for one week at Mann beginning April 3.

During their visit in Pampa, Dobbins and Flatte will be actively involved in classroom instruction with the students and in teacher training.

Connie Stockard of Austin is the statewide coordinator of the Arts Education Initiative program. Arranging the program here in Pampa is elementary school coordinator Arlene Gibson.

Gibson said it is "quite an honor" for the Pampa Independent School District to be selected for this program, especially for the second time. Last year the district was chosen to receive artists Stefani Lea Job and Kay Thomas for a two-week appearance at Lamar and Austin elementary schools in March.

Only a few selected school districts are chosen each year for the Commission's program, she noted.

Texas is the first state in the nation to mandate a conceptually-based program for all public school students. Mastery in the "essential elements" is required at each grade level, with teacher and student resources provided.

The Arts Education Initiative program is an attempt to provide professionals to help teachers and students acquire more knowledge and training in the arts toward helping students reach the desired mastery levels.

The program grew out of a comprehensive Arts Education Seminar convened by the Commission in Austin in December 1986 and including professionals from throughout the state from both the arts and education fields.

During the seminar, the Commission identified three ways to assist the TEA in fulfilling the legislative mandate to further arts education in Texas schools:

- First, through the direct funding of the development and production of a Comprehensive Curriculum Guide to be distributed to all 1,100 school districts in Texas.
- Second, by providing funds for the development of modules for the training of teachers and administrators in the use of the curriculum guide.
- Third, by developing a program through which artists who are employed in the Texas Commission on the Arts/National Endowment for the Arts in Education Program to be trained to provide similar training services in the school districts.

In 1988, the emphasis was on the visual arts. This year the emphasis in on the theatre arts through the Creative Drama Network. Flatte is a member of the Creative Drama Network.

The program also seeks to encourage and train local artists who wish to provide arts education activities for the schools.

An egg tree?

Vicki Williams, 6, and her sister Angie, 3, received quite a surprise Friday afternoon when they arrived at their grandmother's house. The girls' grandmother, Joyce Williams of 1540 Hamilton, had decorated a bare tree in the front yard with colorful Easter eggs hung from branches. Vicki and Angie are the daughters of Victor and Patti Williams of Pampa.

Roberts County Health Fair set for April 6

MIAMI — Roberts County residents will have a chance to check up on the latest health information when Miami United Methodist Church sponsors the Roberts County Health Fair on Thursday, April 6.

The health fair will get under way at 10 a.m. that date, with free educational exhibits and free health test screenings at the church lasting until 3 p.m.

Already more than 30 hospitals, medical associations, health and human service agencies, law enforcement agencies, nursing centers and others have signed up for booth space at the fair.

And more exhibitors are invited to sign up for spaces to distribute educational literature, show films or slides, provide free health test screenings or otherwise inform area residents about health-care related activities and services.

Miami UMC Health and Welfare Chairman Dot Wilson says the fair is "shaping up to be a real humdinger."

The range of health interests covered will provide beneficial health services and information for farmers, cattlemen, parents, students and older citizens.

"We have tried to provide something for everybody," Wilson said.

Those wanting to sign up for the booth spaces can contact Wilson between 9 a.m. and noon during the week at 868-3001.

The church will provide a noon meal for booth workers and help to unload and set up exhibits.

The church also will provide local transportation in Miami for those wanting to attend but unable to provide their own transportation. Arrangements can be made by calling Wilson at 868-3001 between 9 a.m. and noon or by calling Mickey Clark at 868-5401.

There will be no charge to the public for admission to the health fair, and most health screenings will be free of charge.

Participating agencies and services that have already signed up for booth space include the following:

American Diabetes Association, American Lung Association, American Cancer Society, Alzheimers Association, Cowbelles, Hospice of Pampa, Multiple Sclerosis Society, Muscular Dystrophy Society, Planned Parenthood and Ronald McDonald House all will provide educational information.

Also providing educational information will be King's Manor Nursing Center, High Plains Epilepsy Association, Texas Commission for the Blind, Texas Department of Agriculture, Texas Department of Health, Texas Department of Public Safety, Tralee Crisis Center, Turning Point Alcoholic Recovery Center and Wheeler Care Center.

Others participating and offering more than educational information are Belltone Hearing, free hearing test; Coffee Memorial Blood Bank, collecting blood from donors; Hemphill County Hospital, free health test on pulmonary functions; and High Plains Food Bank, collecting cans of food for the Miami Ministerial Alliance Food Bank.

Also participating will be Lions Club/High Plains Eye Bank, free glaucoma test; Miami Emergency Medical Services, ambulance and equipment display; Pampa Nursing Center, free test for blood pressure and glucoscan (blood sugar testing for diabetes); and Panhandle Community Services, free blood pressure test and glucose blood sugar test.

Others include Roberts County Sheriff's Department, drug paraphernalia display; Shepherd's Crook Home Health, home health services information; Shriners, Crippled Children's Hospital information; and National Home Health of Amarillo, medical supplies information and medical appliances display.

In addition, the Texas Department of Health will provide a cholesterol health test for $1. It also will give a 90-minute AIDS education presentation from 10:30 a.m. to noon, with a one-hour slide show followed by a lecture and a question-and-answer session. The AIDS presentation will be open to high school students.

Judge bars abortion testimony

AUSTIN (AP) — A judge barred key testimony in the defense of four protesters charged with trespassing at recent anti-abortion demonstrations, but allowed the defendants to tell why they blocked the entrances to the local abortion clinics.

In a pre-trial hearing Friday, Travis County Court-at-Law Judge Steve Russell said he would let the four men take the stand in their April 10 trial on criminal trespass charges to testify that they blocked the entrances because they are opposed to abortion.

Assistant County Attorney Mike Denton asked Russell not to allow discussion of abortion because the charges concern trespassing.

But Russell would not let attorney Bob Phillips of Georgetown place Dr. Steven Hotze of Houston on the stand to testify as an expert medical witness during the trial. And, he would not permit certain testimony by Carol Everett, a former abortion clinic employee.

About 70 supporters crowded the courtroom during the daylong proceeding, which was the first pre-trial hearing for protesters arrested in the sit-ins outside Austin clinics.

More than 350 anti-abortion protesters have been arrested in Austin since December, according to a spokeswoman with Austin Rescue, an anti-abortion group.

Environmentalists say Alaskan oil spill disaster

VALDEZ, Alaska (AP) — Millions of gallons of crude oil spilled when a tanker ran aground spread across a wildlife-rich area of ocean Saturday while crews briefly tried to pump out some of the oil remaining in the ship's holds.

The biggest oil spill in U.S. history created a slick 8 miles long and 3½ miles wide in Prince William Sound. The Coast Guard said only Reef Island and the western edge of Bligh Island had been touched by the slick.

The effect on wildlife had not yet been assessed but commercial fishermen who depend on the sound for a catch worth millions of dollars were outraged and said a key herring spawning area had been polluted.

"The whole food chain could be affected by the spill," said Alan Reichman, ocean ecology coordinator for the environmental group Greenpeace, in Seattle.

"There's a high concentration of sea otter, waterfowl, sea birds and pink salmon in that area," said Steve Goldstein, a spokesman for the Interior Department in Washington. "Some birds have already died, and we are doing our best to try to save the fish by containing the oil to the area where it presently is and by trying to skim it."

Some 270,000 barrels — or 11.3 million gallons — of crude oil from Alaska's North Slope spilled early Friday when the 987-foot tanker Exxon Valdez ran hard aground on Bligh Reef, about 25 miles outside Valdez, where it had taken on a total cargo of 1.2 million barrels.

Pumping operations to transfer some of the remaining oil from the Exxon Valdez to another tanker started early Saturday, but were halted after about an hour, the Coast Guard said.

Coast Guard Lt. Ed Wieliczkiewicz said he was unsure why the pumping was stopped.

Exxon wants to pump 200,000 barrels of the stricken ship's cargo onto the Exxon Baton Rouge, in hopes that would remove enough weight to let the ship float free of the jagged reef, said Tom Cirigliano, a spokesman for Exxon Shipping Co. Inc. He said the unloading would continue for a number of days.

The Port of Valdez remained closed to tanker traffic. North Slope crude oil is shipped 800 miles through the trans-Alaska oil pipeline from Prudhoe Bay south to Valdez for shipment aboard tankers to refineries outside Alaska.

The Coast Guard said the Exxon Valdez struck the reef when it maneuvered outside normal tanker traffic lanes to avoid icebergs.

Friends help re-enact student's disappearance

MATAMOROS, Mexico (AP) — For five hours, the three young men walked, posed, laughed and drank as they re-enacted their friend Mark Kilroy's bizarre disappearance for a Hollywood film crew.

But as Bradley Moore, Brent Martin and Bill Huddleston stood in front of an ordinary one-story red and gray brick building early Friday morning, their mood shifted.

It was the spot where the 21-year-old University of Texas premed student from Santa Fe, Texas, had vanished.

"It's really tough being here like this," said Huddleston, gripping the building wall and shaking his head.

Moore, talking to film crew member Kim Davis, looked concerned.

"Don't get me wrong," he said. "I'm not mad at you. But we've been having fun all night, and now this is the point where we lost him." A pained look came over his face. "Recreating it is hard."

Fox Television's America's Most Wanted was recreating the events of early March 14 when Kilroy, on a night-clubbing jaunt over the border with his three pals from high school, vanished from a street crowded with other U.S. college students.

The segment will air Sunday on the program seen by 23 million people nationwide, its producers said.

The last person to see Kilroy, Huddleston remembers an Hispanic man standing in the shadows against the building, possibly motioning toward Kilroy. Huddleston's memory, fogged by his condition that night, is a key in reconstructing the scene.

Director Gary Rose coached Todd Roberts, a Plano teen-ager playing Kilroy, and Juan Garcia, a free-lance production assistant playing the man in the shadows, on how to do the scene, the Houston Chronicle reported.

Behind Rose, cameraman Scott Judy and sound man Brian Bidder readied their equipment. The ever-present thud-thud-thud of rock music, blaring from nightclubs on all sides, was relentless.

U.S. Customs Service agents Robert Gracia and Lupe Alderete, who came along to provide security, routed spring break students around the set. The students, most of them drunk, yelled and waved as they walked by.

The footage filmed here was to be rushed back to Fox's Washington, D.C., studios and edited into a five-minute segment for the show, which highlights cases involving wanted fugitives and missing people.

The filming was just part of the party to the other college students passing by. Most had heard of Kilroy's disappearance, but few seemed worried or even considerate. Rose patiently put up with questions and occasional outbursts in front of the cameras.

The crew filmed in the two bars — Sombrero's and the Hard Rock Cafe — where Kilroy and friends had spent most of their evening. They also filmed on the sidewalks and at the Gateway International Bridge.

The pastiches of nighttime shots will be edited with interviews with the three friends, law officers and Kilroy's parents.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Soviet visit to Iran reveals true goals

The contract put out on author Salman Rushdie has been portrayed as a free-speech issue, but it's more about power politics. If the Ayatollah Khomeini at first used his death warrant to rally internal support for his flagging Islamic revolution, he now is reaping some curious foreign-policy benefits as well.

Sentencing Rushdie to die for what many Muslims believe are blasphemous passages in his book, The Satanic Verses, has severely strained the ayatollah's relationship with the West. But it has brought a renewed alliance with the Soviet Union.

Before Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze traveled to Iran this month, Britain had asked him to reason with the ayatollah's regime about the death warrant. Born in India, Rushdie is now a British citizen. British officials hoped Moscow would join with the 12 members of the Common Market who have withdrawn their ambassadors from Tehran in protest against the Iranian threat. But Shevardnadze instead used his trip to forge new ties with the ayatollah's regime.

Said the Soviet foreign minister: "Our conviction is that conditions are ripe for relations between our two countries to enter a qualitatively new stage of cooperation in all fields." Khomeini replied, "Of course, we want relations to develop too," which would help counter "devilish acts of the West."

Perhaps the great popularity of Soviet boss Mikhail Gorbachev in Western Europe, where surveys claim he is the most popular world leader, fueled British hopes of Soviet good intentions. But Gorbachev and the Kremlin are more interested in getting on the good side of Iran and other Islamic nations. With the Red Army now pulled out of Afghanistan, the Kremlin is most concerned about containing unrest amidst the restive, and growing, Islamic peoples of the Soviet Union.

Despite Gorbachev's glasnost campaign, it's clear that Soviet notions of free speech are only so much window dressing for getting subsidized Western grain harvests and bank loans, and can be easily discarded when necessary. The fact that some Westerners thought otherwise is yet another sign of our moral confusion.

Simplistic solutions often best

Walter Williams

"Williams, you're being too simplistic," is a frequent charge to my debates, columns and public lectures. But who cares — simplicity is virtually always better than complexity. Let's look at it.

George Bush wants to be known as the education president. Does that mean we should spend more money for Head Start and other education programs? I say no. No matter how much money we pour into education, there will be zero benefits until schools develop a learning environment.

Daily life in many inner-city schools consists of assaults, rapes, and even murder of teachers and students, high absentee rates and gross property destruction, requiring the use of guards and metal detectors.

Now you tell me. Do we need experts to tell us what must be done to improve education? It's simple. Demand law and order in the schools, and get rid of the troublemakers. The liberals will say, "What do we do with the troublemakers?" Who knows. But we don't allow them to destroy education for everyone else.

Producing good education is no more complex than removing a brain tumor. But, if you're going to perform the surgery in downtown Beirut, you've got a problem.

Jack Kemp, the new secretary of Housing and Urban Development, is faced with a housing issue. Does he need an expert study to find out how to ease the crunch? You tell me. Thousands of units of housing are destroyed through outright property destruction, vandalism and arson.

A visit to our big cities, where housing is most critical, would reveal boarded up, burnt-out buildings and vacant lots. Neither God nor Ronald Reagan destroyed the housing. Williams' simplistic solution is to catch, stop and prosecute those people who destroy housing.

Then there are federal and local laws which hamper housing development, such as the Davis-Bacon Act and rent controls. The Davis-Bacon Act drives up wages on federally financed construction, and rent controls stifle builders' and landlords' incentives to build and maintain housing. Short of aerial bombardment, rent control is one of the best ways to decrease the housing supply.

Solving our housing problem is simple: Repeal rent control laws and the Davis-Bacon Act, then confront the Beirut-like complexity of how to build housing while others are hell-bent on destroying it.

How about crime? People whine about the $20,000-a-year cost of keeping a criminal in prison compared with the $18,000 to send someone to Harvard for a year. First, the average criminal isn't interested in Harvard, and second, jailing criminals is a bargain. A single criminal can easily cost society a million dollars a year in losses from numerous auto thefts, burglaries, holdups, rapes and murder. So which is cheaper, putting him in jail for keeps, or playing rehabilitation games?

In Chicago, a teen-ager might be arrested 17 times before he gets a jail sentence. Give me those odds and I'll become a bank robber. The job of a judiciary system is to protect law-abiding citizens from criminals.

My simplistic solution is to arrest the criminals and give them a fair trial. Then if they are convicted, put them away. But you say, "Our jails are overcrowded now; where are we going to put them?" Ship them off to a penal colony somewhere in the Pacific with Gov. Michael Dukakis as their warden.

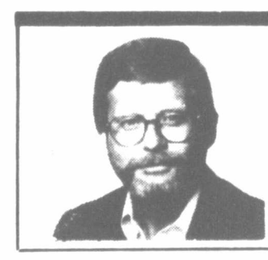

What about poverty? Like many Americans — black and white — I grew up poor. Most Americans escape poverty through one of the greatest anti-poverty programs around — hard work, sacrifice and prudent behavior. The program still works.

According to the Dallas-based National Center for Policy Analysis, the poverty rate among blacks who graduate high school, marry and stay married, and work regularly at any kind of job is 4 percent.

Life is quite complex, but common sense will go far in helping to ease some of its problems.

Hard workers now suffering

Lewis Grizzard

Larry Ayers went to work for Eastern Airlines as soon as he graduated from high school in Atlanta.

He was 18. The first thing Eastern did was transfer him to Melbourne, Fla., where he worked six years as a customer services agent.

"That means I did everything that needed doing," he said.

Then he was transferred back to Atlanta where he put on a red coat and helped Eastern passengers find their airplane. His last assignment was in sales.

But January 1, after 26 years with Eastern, Larry Ayers retired at age 45.

Currently he is working for himself, restoring furniture.

"I loved my job with Eastern," he said. "But I couldn't afford to work there anymore."

Larry was not a member of any union. When hard times hit the airline, he agreed, with other non-union employees, to give up 20 percent of his salary to help keep Eastern in the air. He received no raise his last 10 years.

In his final days with Eastern, he also lost free parking at work and was going to be asked to contribute to his own insurance plan.

So, he walked. And he might as well have. The mechanics' strike against Eastern has virtually shut down the airline, and many think it may have been shut down for good.

After 26 years with the company, Larry Ayers has some ideas about what went wrong with Eastern. He offered the following points:

- Eddie Rickenbacker, who guided Eastern during its early years, didn't think jets were Eastern's future and initially stuck with Lockheed Elecktras. That set the company back as air travel entered its boom years.
- Frank Borman, Eastern's president for 17 years, expanded the company beyond its resources.
- Frank Lorenzo, the current owner, doesn't give a damn about his employees.
- Members of the pilots' and flight attendents' unions also joined non-union employees in giving back part of their wages to save the company. But members of the mechanics' union didn't. How that must have affected company spirit.

"They (members of the mechanics' union) never gave up anything," Larry Ayers said. "In fact, they even flaunted their raises to other Eastern employees."

But Larry says he isn't so bitter about the mechanics and their strike. It's the other members of the same union — baggage handlers, fuelers, cleaners and stock clerks — who irk him.

"The mechanics did their jobs, but not the others. They were hated," he explained.

"You couldn't get them to work. They just didn't give a damn.

"I saw it a lot when I was a Red Coat. A plane would come in and need unloading and cleaning and refueling, but the people who were supposed to do that were watching television or playing cards.

"The rest of us were giving up so much but these people were the ones getting the raises."

Five thousand non-union Eastern workers, the soul of the company, were laid off with nothing because, if you listen to Larry Ayers, a good many do-nothings and foot-draggers who haven't been mistreated nearly as badly are on strike.

Eastern's fall is a story of greed and complacency. But those who tried the hardest seem to be the ones who now are suffering the most.

The Wings of Man. What a joke.

President Bush shouldn't be the fall guy

Vincent Carroll

George Bush is discovering, as did Jimmy Carter years ago, how instinctively the media gravitate toward a congressional point of view.

Worse luck for the president, there is no way he can satisfy contradictory expectations laid down by cynical members of Congress. No matter how he proceeds, he will be assailed for either doing too little or too much — and sometimes, remarkably, for both at once.

On one hand, the president is expected to lead. Presumably that means stepping out front on issues. But he must never question established practice, either, for to do so riles powerful members of Congress, who must at all costs be appeased.

Lead the country, but say and do nothing unexpected.

Bush's treatment of the savings and loan crisis offered early evidence of this Catch-22. The easy fix, politically, was always to conscript taxpayers into bailing out the industry. And that is indeed the route Bush eventually chose. But the administration also floated a more interesting idea early on to offset part of the bill: Impose a fee of 25 cents for each $100 deposited in banks, in exchange for federal insurance on the money. The concept is hardly new: It's called a user fee.

Not only did Congress dismiss the idea out of hand, many commentators quickly rose to admonish Bush for lack of political "realism" for even entertaining the idea.

How dare he expect Congress to tell the public that government benefits (in this case, deposit insurance) actually bear a cost?

How dare he disagree with Congress at all, for that matter. Consider the John Tower fiasco. Virtually no one — probably not even Sen. Sam Nunn — expected the nomination to explode when it was first launched. Yet no sooner had the candidacy staggered than dozens of writers scolded Bush (or John Sununu) for failing to foresee the unforeseeable.

Bush's real sin, in each case, was to have ruffled congressional feathers, nothing more.

According to this Capitol-centric view of Washington, a president's first duty is to "get along" with House and Senate leaders. Never put them on the spot or question their judgment. Never expect them to risk a speck of popularity in the national interest.

It is no longer news, for example, when Congress skirts the touchy issues of deficit reduction. We indulge or even excuse congressional cowardice, concluding it is ordained by nature. Yet when the president ducks the same deficit issues (as George Bush has), our understanding wanes and eager critics prime their guns.

The president has become America's all-purpose fall guy, accountable for everything, while Congress plays hooky in the park.

Ironically, however, there is opportunity in such a hopeless presidential role. After all, if a president will be savaged whether he acts decisively or not, why not act decisively? As George Bush scurries about trying to inject momentum in a presidency that never possessed any, he might consider the liberating wisdom of Margaret Thatcher.

"Do you think," she once tartly told a questioner, "you would ever have heard of Christianity if the apostles had gone out and said, 'I believe in consensus?'"

She meant that if you want to make a difference, you trust your beliefs and follow them, come what may. If you're president, your actions will sometimes goad other members of the political establishment into angry fulmination. Well, so be it. Remain resolute, ignore your fainthearted friends, and head for the center of the ring.

Letters to the Editor

She has confidence in Peeples, Sweatt

To the editor:

I read with mixed feelings about Superintendent Rex Peeples' decision to leave Groom for McLean.

On one hand I cannot imagine calling Groom School without having the chance to hear Rex enthusiastically talk about what's going on in his neck of the plains. His work with the Groom Economic Development Committee shows his dedication to his community as well as his school.

Through his leadership, the district took what can best be described as a hand-to-mouth budget and produced an educational program that is as good as — or better than — districts with twice the financial backing and three times the staff.

Through enthusiastic encouragement and strict discipline — the district is one of few with a tough dress code — Peeples helped many Groom students develop a desire to learn and succeed, not to mention such rare qualities as courtesy and respect. Such an education is far more valuable than one which can afford the most impressive buildings, the most provocative text books or the most up-to-date science labs.

But on the other hand, Groom will not be lost by Peeples' departure. Rex leaves a committed staff of educators, namely Principal-Superintendent Kenneth Sweatt, business manager Joyce Hutsell and teachers like Janetta Lamb. In McLean, Peeple's predecessor, Jim Ruthorford, built an equally committed and responsible staff.

Business managers as sharp as McLean's Shirley Johnson are few and far between. They should work well together.

I sense that Peeples is leaving Groom in an effort to save it. Such a sacrifice and devotion is an inspiration to us all. Mr. Sweatt and Judy Babcock have a troublesome task before them. Cutting into athletics and band is a sure way to make enemies (although replacing the band with a choir may be feasible — it certainly hasn't hurt Lefors.)

As with most small Panhandle districts, the quality of education at Groom and McLean are threatened by a slack economy. But dedicated leadership should — for now — avert the threat. Peeples and Sweatt both have my vote of confidence.

Abortion also is a child sacrifice

To the editor:

Thanks to the diligence insight, and courage of you and your staff, our city has become more aware of the threat that the secret practices of Satan-worshippers impose upon our community. This torture, abuse and sacrifice of human lives for the sake of something called "the right to worship" is a gross perversian that should be utterly exposed and recognized for what it is.

However, I am wondering about another type of sacrifice that is happening here in our city that seems to be ignored by those of us who should be speaking out the loudest. Human lives are being sacrificed day after day by those people whom we call "respectable" and "kind," in institutions that were built for the purposes of healing and restoring life. Human beings, right here in Pampa, whom we call "religious" and "good" are blindly sacrificing their own children, their tiny unborn children, on the altars of gods whom we mildly call "Convenience" and "Human Rights."

Actually, if the truth were spoken, they are gods of Self and Greed and Death. Is this perversion of worship and truth any less corrupt than open Satan-worship itself? And, if we refuse to repent, will the judgment from the hand of God upon our city for this sin be somehow less severe because it is called by a nicer name?

Is there one godly person in this city who would stand and watch one new-born child be slain in a satanic rite? Why are we allowing the violent, merciless murder of thousands of our children, and calling it merely "unfortunate," and not risking our very lives in order to stop it? We who should be sacrificing our own lives for the sake of our children are, by some deceptive twisting of our consciences, murdering them for our sakes.

We would do well to remember the warnings given to us in the records of the dealings of God with those who committed similar atrocities against Him ...

"They worshipped their idols, which became a snare to them.

They sacrificed their sons and their daughters to demons.

They shed innocent blood, the blood of their sons and daughters, whom they sacrificed to the idols of Canaan, and the Land was desecrated by their blood.

They defiled themselves by what they did; by their deeds they prostituted themselves.

Therefore the Lord was angry with his people and abhorred his inheritance."

Sheriff's office deserves praise

To the editor:

When I read the article on Mr. French in the Friday, March 10, issue of The Pampa News I felt compelled to write this letter. As a former law enforcement officer of some 28 years of collective service, and 15 years as a private investigator, I feel there are certain facts that should be brought to light.

First, in larger jurisdictions certain law enforcement agencies will not accept a missing person report until the person — man, woman or child — has been missing at least 24 hours following their disappearance.

Some of Ms. Vise's expressed feelings and statements did a disservice to our local law enforcement officers. I do not know nor have personal knowledge of the actions of the Pampa Police Department in reference the search for Mr. French, but I have met Chief Eberz, Det. Sgt. Neal and some other members of the department. I do know their jurisdiction ends at the city limits. I have always found Chief Eberz and the members of his department to be officers of the highest quality with deep feelings of obligation towards duty and their service to the public.

In my present line of work I have had the opportunity to be in almost daily contact with the Gray County Sheriff's Office and I do have personal knowledge of some of the actions taken by Sheriff Jim Free and members of his department in reference to the search for Mr. French.

On the Tuesday night when the S.O. received the report on Mr. French, deputies Cox and Minatree were out on the east side of Gray County looking for Mr. French.

On Wednesday and Thursday the deputies performed their many other law enforcement daily duties with the missing Mr. French foremost in their minds, and looked for him while on patrol.

Friday Sheriff Jim Free, his deputies and numerous concerned citizens conducted an extensive search for Mr. French using their personal horses, vehicles, airplanes, etc. All to no avail. On Saturday, not discouraged, they reformed again, and conducted another extensive search. The Carson County S.O also assisted. Numerous officers from all surrounding jurisdictions entered into the search at the request of Sheriff Free. Everything was done that could possibly be done under the circumstances.

I think Sheriff Jim Free and his deputies went beyond the normal search patterns in their efforts.

I have deep feelings for the French family as I have conducted and/or investigated many of these type cases in the past, but some of Ms. Vise's interjections concerning the search operations undertaken are of a critical nature, and I do not think Sheriff Jim Free or his deputies deserve the undue criticism in reference to this case.

I was taught to never criticize another man until you had walked a mile in his moccasins.

As a concerned citizen my thanks go to Sheriff Free, his deputies for their actions in reference to this matter, and to the many, many concerned citizens who helped in this search.

Let's not be unduly critical; let's give credit where credit is due.

Uncertain that rent issue was 'refuted'

To the editor:

To rebut something is to oppose it; to refute something is to prove it wrong. After reading the lead story in the Sunday Pampa News, under the headline "City commissioners refute Peet on rent issue," it seems the mayor and three city commissioners did a lot of rebutting, but there was no evidence that anything was refuted.

I don't know Commissioner Peet personally, nor did I vote for him. I do, however, find his philosophy of holding elected officials and government employees accountable for how they dispense the taxpayers' money a refreshing change from the "soak the taxpayer" mentality that seems so prevalent.

Commissioner Peet's detractors seemed very eager to shift the discussion from whether taxpayers' money is being squandered, to that of "personality," "management style" and "larger issues at stake." It seems that Commissioner Peet hinders their ability to spend money in private without the scrutiny of a public vote. Why would the commissioners fear the voters knowing how their tax dollars are spent?

Hopefully, Mr. Chaney will use more discretion in the spending of tax dollars in the future than he did in his choice of a rent house. As a newcomer to Pampa, Mr. Chaney should be given the benefit of the doubt. In this time of a housing glut in Pampa, and because even Commissioners Reed and Sutherland agreed that the rent seemed out of line, why didn't The Pampa News state that it was former City Manager Bob Hart who owns the house that the city is renting? (It took me a phone call to directory assistance and about a minute with a city directory to find that out.)

If Mayor McDaniel and Commissioner Hupp don't feel $650 a month is too much for the city to be paying for a rent house, then they are out of touch with most Pampa taxpayers.

'Why?' should be asked more often

To the editor:

After seeing so many "smear" efforts raised against Richard Peet, I think it is about time to think the situation through and see what has really gone on. In the March 19 issue of The Pampa News, I read a totally dissatisfying article in which Mr. Peet was portrayed as a liar and exploiter. He was accused by almost all the rest of the commission and the mayor as exploiting half-truths for his own gain. He was accused of having information leaked to The Pampa News, and using that information to try and discredit Mayor McDaniel.

For all these accusations, however, there is no proof. Who is exploiting half-truths?? Peet or McDaniel?? Mr. Peet made absolutely no accusations in the article, but merely raised a legitimate concern about the way in which money was being disbursed without a vote of the commission.

Typical. In all the stories I've read concerning flare-ups in the City Commission, it always turns out that a large fuss is raised because Peet asks the question which is taboo for so many of our other commissioners: "Why??" I know that is a strong statement, but I believe it to be true. When was the last time any of the rest of the commission raised a legitimate concern about the taxpayers' money? I can't remember any. I know that to infer that the rest of the commission has no concern about the money which is spent would be ridiculous, but after reading what I've read and hearing what I've heard, it would not be very difficult to convince me.

This situation is very ironic because in all schools, public or private, the best students are the ones who ask that dreaded question "Why??" and do not merely accept things as fact. Mr. Peet taught my high school government class, and quite often he would discuss his job as a commissioner. Never once did he slander a man. Never once did he raise a question which was not legitimate. One thing he ALWAYS did, however, was share his concerns with his class:

a) Why do we pay for a budget award?

b) Why is that award always conferred when errors totalling in excess of 1 million dollars exist in the budget?

c) Why was he (Peet) the only one to notice such errors?

d) Why was the budget still passed by the rest of the commission with the errors still in it?

These are just examples of the questions I can personally remember him raising in class about the budget two years ago. They are not really relevant to the question at hand, but serve well as examples of how Mr. Peet has not sat on his left hand while his right was helping him sign checks which he knew nothing about. Again, I am not accusing anybody of anything, I just want the facts to be known.

Citizens of Pampa, I know for a fact from having talked with Mr. Peet in and out of class that he is deeply concerned with the way our tax-money is spent. He refuses to be a "rubber stamp" and let things go by without a second glance. I, for one, am glad that he's asking "Why?", and I sincerely pray he never loses the courage to stand in the face of such character-smearing lies and accusations.

Center offering training for air controller exams

The Federal Aviation Administration is gearing up to give the Air Traffic Controller Exams all of the United States.

Air traffic controllers make from $24,000 to $62,000 annual salary, says Dave McGrew, spokesman for Advanced Training Center.

Area residents have a real advantage over their competitors because Advanced Training Center teaches exam preparation courses locally, McGrew said.

"Applicants for these high paying jobs are not required to have previous experience, but it is almost impossible to pass the exam without preparation.

"The qualifying exam is an aptitude test that can be easily passed once you learn the vital tricks, strategies and techniques we teach," McGrew claims.

"In fact we guarantee a 90 percent or better on the exam for all our graduates or money is refunded."

Advanced Training Center's next course will be offered in Amarillo on Wednesday, April 5, at La Quinta Motor Inn, 1708 I-40 E., from 5 to 11 p.m. The tuition fee is $130.

For further information call 1-719-471-8188.

Bookseller opens read-a-thon

NEW YORK (AP) — Schoolchildren joined dozens of best-selling authors and publishing executives to start a nationwide literacy program sponsored by the nation's largest bookseller.

"Team Read," a program organized by Waldenbooks, will ask children to read, write their own stories and raise money for teaching other youths to read.

The bookseller will conduct, among other events, a "read-a-thon," with sponsors agreeing to pay a child for each book completed, and a writing contest, with $1,000 savings bonds awarded to the authors of the best stories and poems.

Among the authors at last week's national kickoff of the program were animal rights activist Cleveland Amory, children's book writers Stan and Jan Berenstain, mystery writer Mary Higgins Clark, former basketball star Walt Frazier, Muppeteer Jim Henson, historian James McPherson, and Bob (Captain Kangaroo) Keeshan.

Soviets to hold contested elections today

By JOHN IAMS
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — Thousands of people attended an outdoor rally Saturday for Boris N. Yeltsin, the maverick Communist Party member who has promised to reduce party privileges if he wins a seat in the new Congress of People's Deputies.

Soviets vote today to fill 1,500 seats in the 2,250-member congress, a new chamber created last year in broad electoral reforms championed by President Mikhail Gorbachev. It will be the first contested election in about 70 years.

More than 10,000 people, chanting political slogans and waving placards and posters, attended the rally Saturday in a large parking lot next to Lenin Stadium.

The demonstrators, echoing a central theme of Yeltsin's election campaign, demanded an end to privileges for the Communist Party elite, such as special food stores and chauffeured limousines.

"Do away with special privileges for politicians and bureaucrats," said a typical placard that one demonstrator held aloft on a ski pole. "Servants of the people should have to stand in line," said another.

About 5,000 people streamed into the parking lot under partly cloudy skies before the noon rally, and the crowd swelled to more than 10,000 an hour later, forcing police to hold people back from a roped off area.

Hundreds of police lined the entrance to the parking lot outside of the former Olympic stadium, and scores of officers waited in dozens of buses parked nearby. Around a bend in the road, hidden by trees, 50 military trucks packed with soldiers stood by in the event the rally got out of control.

Rally organizers, from three Moscow political action groups, obtained permission for the three-hour rally after convincing authorities it would be better than having an illegal demonstration such as the one last Sunday in downtown Moscow in which thousands of Yeltsin supporters gathered and marched.

Yeltsin is running against Yevgeny Brakov, director of the ZIL auto factory that supplies limousines for the Kremlin leadership, for the right to represent all of Moscow in the new congress.

The 58-year-old Yelstin was ousted as head of the Moscow Communist Party Gorbachev in November 1987. Yeltsin and his supporters have accused the party of trying to discredit him with critical articles in the official media.

Brakov, 51, is running a low-key campaign on the issue of ending chronic Soviet food shortages. "I am for a speedy decision on the food problem, development of food and processing industries," he said in an article written for the newspaper Economic Gazette.

Yeltsin supporters at the rally said they believed their candidate, who did not appear at the rally, would win the votes of 5 million of Moscow's 6.5 million eligible voters.

About 190 million of the 280 million Soviets are eligible to vote, according to the Central Election Commission.

Voting precincts ranging in size from 20 to 3,000 people will be set up throughout the Soviet Union, including at polar research and mountain stations as well as on navy ships at sea, Tass said.

The 750 seats in the new assembly that will not be contested in the election were filled by the Communist Party and other officially sanctioned groups ranging from labor unions to an association of stamp collectors.

More than 80 percent of the candidates for the 1,500 seats that are up for grabs in the election are party members.

'Party 'til you drop' is spring break rule

By RON WORD
Associated Press Writer

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Life in the fast lane moves at 10 mph on the "World's Most Famous Beach," where the unofficial mottos during spring break are "party 'til you drop" and "sun your buns."

Some half-million college students have invaded the resort for the 85-degree weather and the opportunity to watch scantily clad members of the opposite sex burn lobster-pink in the bright sunshine.

"This is the largest crowd to ever hit Daytona Beach. Traffic is snarled. Every parking space on the beach is taken, plus all the private and public parking near the beach," said Beach Department Chief John Kirvin. "At times, you can't even find any sand."

Sightseeing is one of the most popular activities.

"I came here to look at the boys ... I mean men ... to look at tanned chests," said Michelle Abbott, a junior at the University of Kansas.

And to remember their days on the beach when they return to college, both men and women aren't the least bit shy about photographing the opposite sex.

"I'm on my second roll (of film) today and and I've got four more after that," said Larry Turner, a botany student at Southern Illinois, as he focused on a young woman strolling down the sand.

Some men carried signs urging young women to take off their bikini tops. One group of women carried a sign urging men to drop their trunks.

"If their parents only knew what their daughters were doing," said a beach police officer who asked not to be identified.

The "party 'til you drop" action moves from hotel pool decks onto the beach in early afternoon, Kirvin said.

He estimated that some 200 people have been arrested on the beach, most for disorderly conduct and alcohol-related offenses.

Alcohol is not allowed on the beach, but if students follow an officer's warning to get rid of it, they are not charged.

There is no way, he said, that his 36 full-time officers and 15 part-timers can stop everyone drinking on 40 miles of beach.

"We try to curb it with selective enforcement," he said. "Most of the kids are super and very cooperative."

CPAs to provide free tax advice during TV broadcast

CPAs will provide free income tax help on a live statewide broadcast today from 3 to 4:30 p.m. on KACV-TV, public television for the Panhandle.

Viewers will be able to call collect from anywhere in Texas and consult with one of more than 40 individual CPAs.

In its fourth year, the program features a panel of four CPAs who answer tax questions on the air while a phone bank of five CPAs in the studio handle calls from individuals.

On-air panelists will be Armando Palos, Fort Worth; Lynn Ramsey, Wichita Falls; Rondi Tabbert, Dallas; and John Welch, Amarillo. Phone bank volunteers represent the 20 CPA chapters in the state.

CPAs on Call is a public service program designed by the Texas Society of CPAs to assist people who complete their own tax returns. The program will be broadcast via satellite from KUHT-TV, Houston's PBS station, on the PBS network and cable access channels.

"We have dedicated a separate phone line for calls coming from outside Houston, so we expect an increase in the number of calls this year," says Cullen Duke, Houston CPA and chairman of the taxpayer education committee that produces the program.

During the 90-minute program in 1988, the panel took more than 50 questions on the air while 500 other calls came in to the phone bank.

The Texas Society of CPAs is a nonprofit organization dedicated to promoting professionalism among its more than 29,000 members. Headquartered in Dallas, the Texas Society is the second largest CPA organization in the nation.

Michigan rips Virginia

By JIM O'CONNELL
AP Basketball Writer

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Glen Rice made nine of 10 shots in the first half as Michigan, the team with the interim head coach, jumped to a 19-point halftime lead and advanced to the Final Four with a 102-65 victory over Virginia in the Southeast Regional championship game.

The Wolverines, who last reached the Final Four in 1976, started their improbable run to Seattle after losing head coach Bill Frieder less than 48 hours before the tournament. Under interim coach Steve Fisher, Michigan played loose and relaxed in all four games, none quite like the one that got the Wolverines to the Final Four.

Michigan, 28-7, will meet the winner of Sunday's Midwest Regional championship game between Illinois and Syracuse next weekend at Seattle.

On pace to break the NCAA season mark for field goal percentage at 57.3, the 10th-ranked and third-seeded Wolverines shot even better than that at the outset against fifth-seeded Virginia, 22-11, making 10 of their first 14 shots on the way to a 24-12 lead.

Rice, a senior averaging 25.2 points, had scored 23, 36 and 34 points in his first three NCAA games, the first three in Fisher's head coaching career, which began when Frieder signed to coach at Arizona State next season. Frieder was not allowed to coach the Wolverines in the tournament, and Fisher, his assistant for seven seasons, was promoted to the head job.

Michigan's chances to reach the Final Four appeared to diminish greatly when the coaching change took place so close to the tournament, but Rice stepped forward to carry the load.

He finished with 32 points on 13-of-16 shooting to lead the Wolverines in the fifth greatest regional championship victory ever. Duke beat Connecticut 101-54 in the East Regional title game in 1964, the largest margin ever.

Rice made his first seven shots of the game Saturday, and while he was doing that, Virginia's top shooter, senior guard Richard Morgan, missed his first seven and finished the half at 2-for-10.

Michigan held the Cavaliers, the lowest seeded team in the round of eight, scoreless for two four-minute periods in the opening half, and the halftime margin was the largest lead of the opening 20 minutes.

Michigan took away Virginia's other strength besides Morgan to dominate early. The Cavaliers had grabbed 17 offensive rebounds in their regional semifinal victory over top-seeded Oklahoma, outrebounding the Sooners 38-26.

The Wolverines held Virginia to five offensive rebounds in the first half and that helped to hold the Cavaliers to a 10-for-28 shooting performance in the first half.

Sean Higgins added 31 for the Wolverines, who led by as many as 42, 98-56. Higgins had 18 in the second half, including four 3-pointers in a 2:10 span.

Morgan led the Cavaliers with 15 points, finishing 5 of 18 from the field.

Seton Hall earns first Final Four trip

By BOB BAUM
AP Sports Writer

DENVER — Andrew Gaze scored 19 points and helped ignite a 14-0 Seton Hall second-half outburst Saturday as the Pirates beat Nevada-Las Vegas 84-61 to win the NCAA West Regional and earn their first trip to the Final Four.

The Australian Olympian's outside shooting and the strong inside play of the Seton Hall front line turned the game into a rout in the final 14 minutes.

The 11th-ranked Pirates, 30-6, play the winner of Sunday's East Regional final between Georgetown and Duke in the Final Four semifinals next Saturday in Seattle's Kingdome.

The 15th-ranked Runnin' Rebels, who finished the season 29-8, couldn't hit the outsie shots like they did in their 68-67 upset over No. 1 ranked Arizona Thursday night.

They were only 29 percent from the field in the first half but still were behind only 34-30 thanks to 12 Seton Hall turnovers against Nevada-Las Vegas' pressure defense.

The Rebels pulled within 46-45 on David Butler's inside basket with 14:09 to play.

But the Pirates, who finished tied for second in the Big East, scored the next 14 points, making it 60-45 on Gerald Greene's three-point play with 9:26 to go. Gaze had a 3-pointer and a 15-foot two-pointer during the burst.

The Seton Hall surge didn't stop there. The Pirates outscored the Rebels 29-6 over an 8½-minute span, taking a 75-51 lead with 5½ minutes to play. The six nevada-Las Vegas points came on a pair of 3-pointers by Greg Anthony, who played despite a sprained left knee and sprained right ankle.

Darryl Walker scored 12, Anthony Avent 11 and Michael Cooper 10 for the Pirates. Anthony scored 16, including five 3-pointers, and Butler had 15 for the Rebels.

Georgetown's John Thompson and his Hoyas erupt after win.

No surprises this time in East, Midwest Regionals

By The Associated Press

The surprises that marked the NCAA Southeast and West regional tournaments did not show up in the East and Midwest, so Sunday's finals will match the No. 1 and 2 seeds for the championships.

In the East at the Meadowlands in East Rutherford, N.J., top-seeded Georgetown, 29-4, will face Duke, 27-7, and in the Midwest at the Metrodome in Minneapolis, No. 1 Illinois, 30-4, trying to reach the Final Four for the first time since 1952, meets Syracuse, 30-7.

Georgetown will be trying to duplicate the national championship it won in 1984 at the Seattle Kingdome, the site of this year's Final Four. Duke is seeking its third Final Four berth in four years — the other two coming with victories at the Meadowlands.

Georgetown, also the losing finalist in 1985, and Duke, however, haven't met since 1933, when Duke won 35-30.

"I'm surprised we haven't run into each other in a tournament somewhere along the line," Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said.

The game will match two of the nation's outstanding players — Charles Smith of Georgetown and Danny Ferry of Duke.

Smith, the Hoyas' leading scorer with an 18.6 average who collected 34 points in a second-round victory over Notre Dame, was used mainly as a decoy in Georgetown's 69-61 victory over North Carolina State Friday night. Smith, who had missed two days of practice because of a fever, took only two shots from the field and scored one point.

"We just put Charles out there and it makes everyone feel better when he can't be as active as he usually is," Georgetown coach John Thompson said.

With Smith below par against North Carolina State, Dwayne Bryant and Jaren Jackson took over the scoring slack, hitting 21 and 17 points, respectively, and combining for eight 3-point field goals.

Just as Duke is concerned with Smith, Thompson is worried about Ferry.

"We have to keep Danny from controlling the game," Thompson said. "He can control a game with more than shooting. He's like a point forward or a point center because he can set up a lot of baskets with passing and defense."

In the Midwest semifinals Friday night, Illinois relied on quickness and the solid play of Nick Anderson in beating Louisville 83-69, while streaky Syracuse used a 16-0 run in the second half in edging Missouri 83-80.

Rich Daly, Missouri's interim coach, has faced both teams this season and he's reluctant to make a prediction.

"It's hard to put anybody in that spot," Daly said. "When we played Illinois (in December), I thought that they would be awesome. Syracuse fools you. You think you see a weakness, but it's not really there. They have two or three really outstanding players."

The seedings and rankings notwithstanding — Illinois is ranked third and Syracuse seventh — Syracuse coach Jim Boeheim feels that his team is supposed to win.

"People expect Syracuse to win," Boeheim said. "If we were playing the (Los Angeles) Lakers Sunday, they'd expect us to win."

Anderson scored 14 of his 24 points in the second half and sparked a key 10-3 run that sent Illinois past Louisville. The Illini won even though Louisville blocked 13 shots and starters Kenny Battle and Lowell Hamilton were limited by injuries.

"We won a key game against one of the top teams in the country with two starters out," Illinois coach Lou Henson said. "They've got guts. They won't die. You have to beat them."

Sherman Douglas scored 27 points and freshman Billy Owens had 25 to lead Syracuse, which lost to Indiana 74-73 in the 1987 national championship game.

"The reason we're still playing is because Sherman's got a big heart," Boeheim said. "He took over and made the plays that needed to be made."

Sixth-inning explosion lifts Lubbock Estacado past Pampa 10-5

LUBBOCK — A three-run homer by Anthony McGee in the sixth inning sparked District 1-4A leader Lubbock Estacado to a 10-5 win over Pampa Saturday afternoon.

With the score deadocked at 5-all after 5½ innings, the Harvesters had high hopes for an upset. But the Lubbock bats came alive in the sixth to shatter those hopes. The Matadors ripped four straight hits in the sixth, including McGee's blast over the center field fence.

The Matadors are now 5-0 in district action while the Harvesters dropped to 2-3.

Estacado led 2-0 after two innings and Pampa closed the gap to one with a run in the top of the third on James Bybee's RBI double.

Estacado added two more in bottom of the third and Pampa put another run together in the top of the fourth on Mark Aderholt's RBI groundball.

Pampa tied the score at 4-all in the top of the fifth on an Estacado error and a pair of singles by Matt Brock and Tory Peet.

Estacado's Greg Ross gave the Matadors a 5-4 lead in the bottom of the fifth on a groundball that scored a run. Estacado hurler Kevin Ruth experienced control problems in the top of the sixth and walked the first three Pampa batters he faced. However, the Harvesters could manage only one run, that coming on Bybee's base hit.

Bybee (3-2) took the loss on the mound for the Harvesters, who are now 3-5 overall. The junior righthander yielded 11 hits while striking out three and walking six.

Pampa had six hits with Bybee's double and single leading the way. McGee and Ross had two hits each to lead Estacado.

Ruth went the distance to pick up the mound win for Estacado, which has a 10-4 overall record.

Pampa was charged with four errors and Estacado had two.

Pampa travels to Canyon for a non-district game Tuesday afternoon. Starting time is 4:30 p.m. The Harvesters won't play at home again until March 31 when they host Perryton at 5 p.m.

White Deer track teams place third at Gruver Relays

By SONNY BOHANAN
Sports Writer

Despite losing a few track athletes to spring break and Easter weekend, the White Deer Bucks and Does each placed third overall in the ten-team Greyhound Relays Saturday at Gruver.

The Bucks amassed 74 points, finishing behind West Texas High, which won the team title with 138 points, and Boys Ranch, second overall with 104 points. The Does went one better and compiled 75 points. Panhandle won the girls' division.

"I was real pleased with the way we finished, considering the competition we faced and the fact that we were short-handed," White Deer coach Gary Richardson said.

Bart Thomas won three events, including the 200 (22.99), pole vault (14-0) and long jump (21-11¾). Thomas cleared 14-7 in the pole vault last week at Sunray, but missed three tries at 14-9 on Saturday.

He also picked up the bronze in the 100 (11.4) and was a member of White Deer's third-place 400 relay (Daniel Gillespie, Troy Cummins, Chris Luster and Thomas).

"Jason Marlar and Bryan Waitman, who usually run the sprint relay, were both gone," Richardson said. "Gillespie and Thomas, our regulars, were there, but we ran sophomore Chris Luster and Troy Cummins, and we still ran a 45.1, which is within .6 seconds of our best time."

Cummins, in his first stab at the long jump, placed fourth with a leap of 19-11¾. "I thought that was good for his first jump," Richardson said. "If we can get him over 20 feet, he should be able to get second in district."

The Does, making their first entry in the 800 relay this season, clocked in at 1:54.8 to take the gold medal in that event.

Jill Brown captured first place in the 100-meter hurdles in a time of 16.2. "She hit a hurdle early in the race and still came back and won it," Richardson said. "It's not her best time, but first place is first place." Brown owns a personal best of 15.9.

Traysha Wells cleared 5-0 to win the high jump and was second in the triple jump (31-8). Brown soared 15-8 to pick up the silver in the long jump.

Wheeler boys take the gold at Miami meet

By SONNY BOHANAN
Sports Writer

MIAMI — For the Wheeler Mustangs, the team title in Saturday's Warrior Relays came right down to the wire. With one event to go, Wheeler led the Booker Kiowas, 120-116, in team points, and all the Mustangs needed to capture the overall title was to finish ahead of the Kiowas in the 1600-meter relay.

Wheeler did that and more, finishing in 3:44.62 to pick up the gold medal, three places and seven seconds ahead of Booker. The 1600 relay win brought Wheeler's point total to 140 and clinched the Mustangs' first team title of the season. Booker, fourth in the relay with a 3:51.37 clocking, finished second overall with 124 points.

But the final race was a test of the Mustangs' mettle as three of Wheeler's members — Ike Finsterwald (freshman), Kelly Aderholt (sophomore) and Michael Kenney (junior) — had earlier competed in the 400, and anchor Chad Bentley had won the 800 and just ten minutes before taken second in the 1600.

"With only ten minutes between races, you've got to have good conditioning," Wheeler coach Ronnie Karcher said. "I thought they (Booker) might have run better in the relay since they didn't have anyone in the quarter."

Bentley covered the 800 meters in 2:10.54 to pick up the gold for the second consecutive week, then finished the 1600 in 5:11.64 behind Jason McGhee of Follett (5:02.59).

"The wind just killed us," Bentley said of the 800. "That's about six seconds slower than I should be running." He clocked in at 2:05.7 last weekend.

Bentley, who ran a 55-second split time, had all he could handle in holding off Kevin Mayfield of Lefors in the final leg of the 1600 relay. The Wheeler senior started with a 25-yard margin that Mayfield had reduced to five at the finish line. Lefors, which finished fourth overall with 55 points, captured the silver in the 1600 relay in a time of 3:45.46.

Aderholt notched his second consecutive 400-meter win in 54.60, almost two seconds off last week's 52.9, while freshman teammate Ike Finsterwald was second with a time of 55.55. Again, running into the stiff wind took its toll.

"There was hardly any wind at all last week," Aderholt said. "It was real still."

Kenney of Wheeler cleared 6-2 to collect the gold in the high jump, and the Mustangs' 400 relay team also took first place.

Lefors made a strong showing at Miami, finishing ahead of all other six-man schools and edging out McLean by two points, 55-53. Dusty Roberson and Kevin Mayfield tied for first place in the pole vault with jumps of 10-10, and Roberson picked up third in the 400 (56.37). Jarrod Slatten covered the 300 hurdles in 45.27 seconds to take third place.

Sid Brass of McLean was second in the 800 (2:12.88), and McLean took third in four events, including 1600 relay (3:48.39), long jump (Brass 19-2½), 800 (Calle Holwick 2:21.85) and 100 (Tres Hess 11.68).

Miami compiled 13 points to take eighth place overall.

The meet was not without its downside, however, as two runners went down in the distance events. Alfredo Gonzalez of Wheeler collapsed on the third lap of the 3200 and was taken by ambulance to Pampa's Coronado Hospital. From there he was rushed to the emergency room in Amarillo with what is feared to be a stroke.

"He ran and and worked out hard all week," Wheeler coach Ronnie Karcher said. "When he came around to start the third lap, I hollered at him to get off the track because I could tell something was wrong. He collapsed when he got around the corner."

Ashley Flowers of Miami suffered a hip injury while running the 800. Her status was unknown at press time Saturday.

"She'd been having trouble with her hip," Miami coach Joel Blasingame said. "She came around that corner and put excess pressure on it and it popped, she said."

The team title in the girls' division was also a fight between Booker and Wheeler, although as the 1600 relay began, the Mustangettes trailed 124-103 and had no chance of overtaking the Lady Kiowas. Booker won the 1600 relay in a time of 4:37.29 to capture the team title with 144 points. Wheeler finished second in the relay (4:40.39) and second overall with 119 points.

Wheeler was second behind Booker in both the 400 and 800 relays as well, with 55.11 and 1:58.69 clockings, respectively. Mustangette Tammy Helton took the gold in the long jump with a leap of 16-9¼.

McLean placed fifth overall with 44 points, led by Darla McAnear, who was first in the 100 hurdles in a time of 17.10, and Coleman, who triple-jumped 33-11¾ to capture first place.

Alane Dinsmore of Miami won both the 3200 (14.39.91) and the 1600 (6:49.87) to pace the Warriorettes, who were sixth with 41 points.

Carrie Watson of Lefors hurled the discus 105-0 to take the silver, and Lefors and Darrouzett tied for seventh place overall with 18 points apiece.

Following are team and individual results.

SHOT — 1. Redelsperger, Follett, 34-4¾; 2. Kuehler, Wheeler, 31-0¾; 3. Brandy, Merritt, 30-7¾.

Reds' Rose denies flashing signals

By JOE KAY
AP Sports Writer

PLANT CITY, Fla. — Pete Rose on Saturday described as "ridiculous" a report that he flashed signals relating to baseball betting to a friend in the stands at Riverfront Stadium.

The embattled Cincinnati Reds manager also denied some other gambling allegations made about him, and he warned of possible legal action because of some of the reports.

Rose, in his first interview about the substance of allegations contained in a Sports Illustrated story last week, questioned the credibility of sources named by the magazine.

"They talked with four guys: two of them go to jail, the other says he's a bookie, and the other one's my friend; they didn't say nothing about him," Rose said.

During an interview with reporters from The Associated Press, The Dayton Daily News, The Columbus Dispatch and The Cincinnati Enquirer, Rose touched on many of the gambling allegations. But he declined to say whether he has bet on baseball.

"I'm not saying anything about that," Rose said. "I'll have my chance to talk. Now my best comment is 'no comment' because no comment can help me right now."

Sports Illustrated quoted an unnamed source as saying that while in the dugout at Riverfront Stadium, Rose exchanged signals somehow relating to baseball betting with Paul Janszen, a bodybuilder friend now serving a six-month sentence in a Cincinnati halfway house for tax evasion.

"That's ridiculous even to ask me a question like that," Rose said. "It's totally ridiculous."

Rose said he is troubled about the media reports about his alleged gambling links and large debts.

"We'll sit down when this thing is over and we'll read evything that's been written," Rose said. "If there has to be some things done, there will be some things done. People better know what they're writing, better have substantial proof."

While the commissioner's office said it is investigating serious allegations involving Rose, it has not been specific about the subject of its probe. Other sources have said the investigation is into the possibility that Rose bet on baseball games. If it is found that he bet on games other than those involving the Reds, he could be suspended for a year. Proof that he bet on Reds games could bring a lifetime ban.

Sports Illustrated described Ron Peters, a Franklin, Ohio, restaurant owner, as Rose's "principal bookmaker" in its March 27 issue. Asked whether Peters was his principal bookmaker, Rose said, "Not mine."

The Dayton Daily News reported last week that investigators found betting slips at Peters' restaurant that led them to Rose. Asked whether Peters had betting slips naming him, Rose said, "I don't know what anybody's got."

Pampa High girls third after first round of District 1-4A golf

The Pampa High girls golf team is in third place after the opening round of District 1-4A play last week at Plainview.

The Lady Harvesters shot a 403, two strokes behind second-place Hereford. Borger is the first-round leader at 389.

Pampa's junior varsity team, led by freshmen Diana Pulse and Monica Hokit, was fourth at 409. Pulse shot a 94, only one shot behind second place in the medalist standings. Hokit was right behind Pulse at 95.

"They really got it going. It would have been nice to have had them on the varsity, but you never know who's going to play well and who isn't," said Pampa coach Frank McCullough. "If you did, you wouldn't be coaching golf. You'd be reading the future."

Kelley Harris led the Pampa varsity with a 96.

The Pampa girls compete in the second round of district next Saturday at Levelland.

■It's bad when an airline strike tears up your travel schedule as the problems at Eastern and Continental are now doing. Those problems brought back memories of one which affected an entire football team.

It was in the 1970s, I believe 1973, when Gene Mayfield's West Texas State Buffaloes were scheduled to play Saturday night in Denton against Hayden Fry's North Texas Eagles. Thursday night, fire destroyed much of the WT football dressing rooms. Most of the playing gear, though smoke-filled, was salvaged. The team flew to Dallas Friday afternoon as schedulled. In the dual role of athletic director, Mayfield remained behind to meet with insurance adjustors and plan hurry-up repairs so facilities would be available for workouts the next Monday. He came down Saturday morning in time for team meetings.

It was just the precursor to the weekend. NTSU blew the Buffs off Fouts Field by 3-4 TDs in a lengthy ballgame. That meant problems, for Braniff was holding a regular 10 pm flight, which had an intermediate stop at Lubbock before finally getting to Amarillo. For the approximately 80-plus travel party, the airline was overly accomodating to the discomfiture of other passengers.

When the Buffs two chartered busses arrived at Love Field, it was 11:40 pm. Assistant coaches Jerry Behrens and Ronnie Mankin were on the sidewalk waiting and shouting. "Hurry up! Run! Run! The stewardesses are going on strike at midnight. We've got to get rolling before then!" Security waived everybody through, no checks of any kind. The Herd thundered up the stairway, down the corridors, a hard right to the end of the hallway and onto the waiting aircraft. Even the unhappy Lubbock-bound passengers cheered: they were finally going to get home.

Amazingly, everyone was buckled in a seat and the clock said 11:50 pm. But the stews had their minds made up. They weren't about to fly. They dilly-dallied checking equipment, closing luggage compartments, checking seatbelts. At midnight they were nowhere in sight. At 12:03 am the inplane public address system came to life.

"This is your pilot. There will be a slight delay. The stewardesses have gone on strike. Please remain seated."

At 12:10 am, a Braniff official boarded, picked up the microphone and intoned: "Ladies and gentlemen. The pilots have joined the flight attendants on strike. Please deplane and wait in the lounge area for further instructions. We anticipate the problem will be solved quickly."

A hundred-plus unhappy campers — tired, thirsty, hungry, aching — led by the Lubbock passengers, groused back to find seats and pace corridors.

Shortly before 1 am the roar of band music woke everyone up. It was the SMU Mustang marching band, clad in nightshirts and nightcaps, coming to welcome the Ponies home from a big win at Oregon State. They had gotten airborne before the strike began and were arriving at our gate.

Shortly before 2 am we were informed the strike had been settled. Reboard, and we'll be off, we were told. After other lengthy delays, while we awaited a round-up of some stewardesses to meet FAA flight rules, we finally got rolling, and to the drop-off of passengers in Lubbock about 3 am.

The wait on the ground in the Hub City seemed interminable. Fifteen minutes, 20 minutes, 25 minutes. Had the strike renewed? Surely it shouldn't take this long. Then a Braniff official came aboard, sought out Coach Mayfield, and asked him to accompany him off the plane in the cold darkness of the night. We knew it was going to be a case of everyone deplaning and boarding busses for the final leg of the journey back to the Panhandle.

The problem, however, was something else. In removing the Lubbock passengers' baggage from the underbelly storage compartment of the plane, handlers smelled smoke. The odor was strong enough to convince the workers something was burning. They had been searching, but could find nothing ablaze. However, they had traced the bitter odor to the pile of player equipment bags belonging to WTSU.

Mayfield was called to consult with them about the problem, and the cause. Then it was finally realized what had happened. The uniforms, pads, bags and everything else was still smoke-infested from the Thursday night fire. The soggy, sweat-filled uniforms had been piled aboard hurriedly after the game, and were stacked in one heap in the plane. And now that smoke smell had intesified over nearly four hours time. Mayfield got another member of the travel party to help convince the ground officials, as well as the flight crew, that there was no fire danger, explaining what he though was the problem. Though perhaps a bit doubtful, the authorities finally agreed to let the plane make the final jaunt to Amarillo, arriving about 4 am.

All told, the trip could have been made much faster, cheaper and more conveniently by bus, with no smoke worries.

This was just another case where the trip was definitely more exciting and interesting than the football game.

Autographs big business

BOSTON (AP) — Kids still gather outside locker rooms, near dugouts and at player entrances seeking autographs.

But this little piece of Americana has also become a business.

Baseball players, present and former, now get appearance fees for their signatures at baseball card and memorabilia shows.

And, they sign more than just pieces of paper. They autograph baseballs, jerseys and even gloves, and thereby increase the value of the item.

"It's 95 percent baseball players," participating in such events, said Tom Mortenson, editor of Sports Collectors Digest.

"Some people not involved in the hobby are shocked and think all the money is going to the player," Mortenson said in a telephone interview from Iola, Wis., where his weekly magazine is published. "But the show promoter sets the price to cover his costs, including a player's appearance fee, air fare and hotel."

The bigger the name, the higher the fee.

Roger Clemens of the Boston Red Sox drew flak when it was reported that he earned $8.50 per signature during an appearance at a memorabilia show in nearby Worcester.

But Randy Hendricks, half of the Texas-based b other team representing Clemens, said don't misjudge his man.

"Roger gets a one-time appearance fee, so he doesn't get any of the $8.50," Hendricks said in a telephone interview from his office in Houston.

He compared the fees received by players to "politicians giving speeches and getting honorariums."

"Nobody makes anyone come to those shows," Hendricks said. "And Roger tells me that everyone is happy he's there. They bring in bats, T-shirts and other things they wouldn't normally be able to get signed."

"Nobody ever hears about the hundreds of autographs Roger gives at the ballpark, and he also gives $25,000 in tickets to kids who otherwise wouldn't be able to attend games."

Not all baseball players take money for appearances in exchange for autographs.

Orel Hersheiser of the Los Angeles Dogers, Don Mattingly of the New York Yankees and Dale Murphy of the Atlanta Braves have called the practice repugnant. They sign autographs for free.

And don't think that money earned at autograph shows goes unreported.

Baseball Commissioner Peter Ueberroth recently announced he had hired a former executive with the Internal Revenue Service to advise players about the need to report their outside income.

Often former big league stars have turned to memorabilia shows to earn extra income that may have eluded them during their playing days, Mortenson said.

Penders gives SWC a lift

An AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS — The Southwest Conference once again fell short of NCAA basketball's "Sweet 16," but it was a run-and-fun season thanks to Texas' Tom Penders.

When Texas 3-point-bombed the Atlantic Coast Conference's Georgia Tech 76-70 in the first round of the NCAA playoffs, it was a look at SWC basketball in the 1990s.

Arkansas, of course, has played an up-tempo style of basketball since Nolan Richardson arrived. His ability to recruit talented athletes ensures Razorback fans of title contenders for years to come.

Loyola-Marymount of Los Angeles, which has set NCAA scoring records, got burned 120-101 when it played Arkansas in the first round of the NCAA playoffs. That's the kind of firepower the Hogs can muster.

Texas was a sad sack excuse for a basketball program under Bob Weltlich. Fans abandoned the Special Events Center in droves except when Jody Conradt's Lady Longhorns were playing their national championship brand of basketball.

The Longhorns made the "Super Drum" a good place to take a nap with their slow-down, pattern offense under the disciplinarian Weltlich.

Finally, athletic director DeLoss Dodds had to sack the man he hired. Then Dodds hit a homer by hiring Penders, who had just engineered NCAA playoff upsets of Syracuse and Missouri. Penders brought his bubbling personality and Gatlin-gun offense to Austin from Rhode Island.

He opened up practice to the fans who had been banned under Weltlich's dictatorial rule. (Remember how Weltlich had his players practice taking charges?)

Penders quickly made friends with all the alienated alumni groups. He dug Jerry Jeff Walker's country music and Tex-Mex at El Rancho's and stuffed jalapenos.

The Freeman File

Penders built up the confidence of his players.

The only time he chewed one out was if he passed up an open shot.

He installed a pressing defense which churned out turnovers to feed his offense.

"It was a shock to some guys on this team who had been used to playing slow-down ball for so long," said guard Joey Wright. "Some of them never could adjust."

Penders paid dividends for the 'Horns both on and off the court.

The cash registers are still ringing. Texas will have to split some of the $250,000 it earned for being in the NCAA's first round with SWC bretheren.

But the 'Horns averaged almost 5,000 fans per game more than they had under Weltlich.

The bottom line could come close to $500,000 more earned under Penders than Weltlich.

CBS-TV did a five minute feature before the 108-89 loss to Missouri, praising the upswing in Texas basketball. It would be difficult to put a money tag on that kind of free advertisement.

The season record of 25-9 is the third best in school history.

Texas had four players — Wright, Travis Mays, Alvin Heggs and Lance Blanks — who scored more than 500 points in one season — a first.

The 'Horns established a school record by scoring 100 or more points in 10 games.

They set an SWC record in points per game and were fifth in the nation with a 95 point average.

Junior Travis Mays scored 743 points, a school record for one season.

From a 16-13 team in 1988 under Weltlich, the Longhorns jumped to 25 wins and their first NCAA playoff appearance in a decade.

All that's missing for Texas is big inside men who can run, and Penders is working on it.

Newcomers next year include 6-8 forward center Gerrard Houston of Atlanta plus Benford Williams, a 6-5 kid who can jump like he's 6-9. Corey Lockridge, a 6-9 player from Abilene, also could help.

"It was the most fun season I've ever had in basketball," said Heggs. "Coach Penders makes the game fun and you win. I wish I was a freshman starting out again under him."

Landry Day on April 22

DALLAS (AP) — The daylong celebration in honor of fired Dallas Cowboys coach Tom Landry has taken on an international flavor with guests from other countries, including ambassadors, planning to attend.

Organizers of the April 22 event said Friday they have been getting inquiries from around the world for the Tom Landry Appreciation Day and Parade.

"We've got something like 40 ambassadors coming in from other countries," said John Weekley, the event's executive producer.

"The reading I got from talking to the Cowboys, the mayor and Landry's friends is that the Cowboys are popular in England, Japan, Mexico and anyplace else they've played," he said.

Organizers have even hired translators for guests and foreign media representatives. The translators speak Arabic, Chinese, French, German, Hebrew, Italian, Japanese, Korean, Russian, Spanish and other languages, said Weekley.

Landry, 64, was ousted as Cowboys head coach when Arkansas businessman Jerry Jones purchased the National Football League team in a deal with owner H.R. "Bum" Bright.

Jones, an oilman, named University of Miami coach Jimmy Johnson to replace Landry. League owners could vote on approval of the Cowboys' sale within two weeks.

The only coach in the Cowboys' first 29 years, Landry led the team to two Super Bowl victories in five appearances.

"The goal as stated to me by Major Annette Strauss ... was to try to give back to Tom Landry an expression of appreciation and affection and to reflect the sense of pride he has given us as a region," said Weekley. He added the event's theme is "Hats Off to Tom Landry," who is famous for his headgear.

Landry's Saturday begins with a 10-kilometer run from City Hall at 8:30 a.m. CST, followed at 10:45 a.m. by a downtown parade beginning at Union Station. More than 100,000 people could watch the hour-long parade, said Weekley.

"I wouldn't be surprised at any kind of number. We are preparing for as large as the last Cotton Bowl Parade — over 100,000 people," he said. "It looks like it will be nice weather."

The center of attention, Landry, has not been left out of the festivities. He has agreed to hold a news conference in Dallas City Hall at 1:30 p.m., following ceremonies at the building's plaza at noon, said Weekley.

Landry will also attend the parade and a Pro Football Legends Classic at 4 p.m. The teams are comprised of former Cowboys and Washington Redskins stars. A Kenny Loggins rock concert follows the game at 7 p.m. along with a Mayor's International Ball.

"The Cowboys have drawn extremely large crowds and very large media attention," said Weekley. "I wouldn't be a bit surprised at getting more foreign attendance here than we have predicted. We will try to be prepared for anything, welcome them and make their visit memorable."

Incaviglia slides in for a score during a recent exhibition contest.

Rangers Incaviglia sets '89 goals

By TONY DeMARCO
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

PORT CHARLOTTE, Fla.— Pete Incaviglia says his 1989 goals are to hit .300 and drive in 100 runs and that if he reaches them, the Texas Rangers could win the American League West.

"I don't care how many home runs I hit," Incaviglia said. "I'm going to hit homers. I'll hit 25 by accident. But I want to hit .300 and drive in 100 runs because I know we'll be very, very close to winning (the division) if I do — and that's important to me."

Incaviglia has made drastic changes in a swing that has produced three-year averages of .257, 26 home runs, 74 RBI and 169 strikeouts.

Manager Bobby Valentine said Incaviglia shortened his stride from 36 to 16 inches, allowing him to keep his head still, pick up the ball quicker and see it longer.

'He looks like a legitimate, nice, pure hitter," Valentine said. "He's not there, but he's getting closer every day.

"The way he hit before, I thought was one of the most remarkable athletic feats — when he hit the ball. He did so many things. He had a 36-inch stride. His head moved half that distance forward and down. To still be able to hit the ball like that was remarkable."

Incaviglia's best average was .271 in 1987. His best power figures were 30 homers and 88 RBI in his rookie season.

"I don't care how many home runs I hit. I'm going to hit homers. I'll hit 25 by accident. But I want to hit .300 and drive in 100 runs because I know we'll be very, very close to winning the division if I do."

— Pete Incaviglia

Last year, he slipped to .249 with 22 homers and 54 RBI in 116 games, many of which he played with lower back pain. Despite missing 46 games, he still managed to tie Milwaukee's Rob Deer for the league strikeout lead with 153.

After three years of resisting change, Incaviglia finally succumbed last winter. Beginning just after the holidays, he worked on the adjustments almost daily with Valentine.

"I went to Bobby and said, 'This ain't gonna work anymore,'" Incaviglia said. "I'll always be able to hit 30 homers and drive in 80 runs, but I want to hit 40 and drive in 120.

"Bobby said, 'Why not cut down the stride, cut down the swing, see the ball better and cut down strikeouts?' Basically, overstriding caused me to see the ball too late. Now, I'm seeing the ball a lot longer.

"I put too much (emphasis) on hitting home runs. I never thought about (hitting) .300, or any of the little things like hitting the ball the other way with a man on third."

Tuesday, Incaviglia hit his second homer in three days, his first round-trippers of the spring. His 1-for-4 day left him at .250 for the exhibition season in 44 spring at-bats. He's also produced key singles and doubles.

Valentine said Incaviglia has been getting "very quality at-bats, quality swings, quality takes. He's doing the things he's supposed to be doing. It (.300) is realistic."

Brown replaces Moss at Sam Houston State

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Sam Houston State officials said today that South Alabama assistant Larry Brown has been named men's head basketball coach at the Texas school.

Ron Randleman, SHSU athletic director, made the announcement at a news conference. Brown replaces Gary Moss, who was fired Jan. 7 after being slapped with stiff penalties by the NCAA for infractions committed while he was head coach at West Texas State.

The 41-year-old Brown has a successful and extensive coaching experience at four Texas high schools and helped USA to the Sun Belt Conference championship and a 23-9 record last season as assistant to Ronnie Arrow, SHSU officials said.

The Jaguars defeated Alabama in NCAA tournament first-round action before falling to Michigan.

Brown, before moving to Mobile, Ala., spent one year at Howard County Junior College in Big Spring. He coached Howard to a 14-15 record, its best in three seasons. The Hawks defeated Midland, Tyler, Lon Morris and McLennan.

Randleman said Brown guided Bryan High to consecutive Class 5A championships in 1983-84. As Vikings' head coach, he compiled a 185-71 record over seven seasons and was voted Texas High School Coach of the Year after both titles.

Striding toward State

By L.D. STRATE

The Pampa High girls' track squad appears right on schedule for their fourth consecutive visit to the Class 4A state meet.

The Lady Harvesters continue making rapid strides for Austin after winning their fourth meet of the season Thursday at Guymon, Okla.

"The girls have made up their minds to reach personal goals and they did. They're improving every week and hopefully they will keep setting their goals higher," said Pampa head coach Mike Lopez.

Michelle Whitson won both the 800 and 1600 while both the 400 and 1600-meter relay teams came in first for Pampa.

"Right now our sprint relay team has the best time in the area and both relay teams had personal bests," Lopez said. "Whitson really performed well."

Pampa dominated the shot and discus events. Joyce Williams, Staci Cash and Traci Cash finished 1-2-3 in the shot with Staci having her best-ever toss of 37-11.

Williams, a senior, is coming on strong since her fourth-place finish in the shot at the Amarillo Invitational Feb. 25. She hasn't lost since then.

Another first came from Treva Samuels in the discus with a throw of 106-4. Teammate Tara Hamby came in second.

Kelli Winborne captured the 300 hurdles while Crystal Cook continues to improve in the long jump. Her 16-6 was a personal best.

"I'm just really pleased at this point in the season. We have everyone contributing. "We don't have to rely on just one girl," Lopez said.

Pampa hosts the Top of Texas Relays next Saturday at Randy Matson Field.

"It's going to be a tremendous meet. It's going to be one of the top ones in the area this year," Lopez said.

The Pampa girls are the defending Class 4A state champions.
The Lady Harvesters also won state in 1986 and finished runnerup in 1987.

"Lord willing, we'll be right back at the state meet again," Lopez added.

Unforgettable Lupe Flores

Strate Line

By L.D. Strate

●In my young mind, Lupe Flores was the best baseball man that ever existed.

Lupe was my little league baseball coach and there was no one quite like him. He was a barrel-chested fellow who stood just slightly over five-feet tall and he may have been the first baseball coach to practice psychology without a license. Lupe was a Mexican-American who would have made an english teacher proud, but purposely spoke punctured phonetics to grab the attention of his young charges.

"You can't hit zee ball when you stand there like treez. Treez don't get meeny hitz," Lupe would yell during batting practice.

Lupe was a firm believer in being aggressive, both at the plate and in the field. If you didn't swing the bat with authority or be willing to dive for a hot groundball, Lupe would have a seat reserved right beside him on the bench.

"You cannot play beesball the right way when you stand around like treez. You have to charge the beesball when it is hitz on zee ground."

If a player didn't have much natural ability or was too much on the timid side, Lupe would use mind power to try and get the most out of him.

"You don't sweng at zee ball, you sweng through zee ball. You don't throw at zee glove, you throw through zee glove."

If a hitter was scared of the ball, Lupe thought he had an answer to the problem. He would bring tennis balls to practice and toss them at the hitter. "This kinda bell will not hurt you if it heetz you on zee head. Step to me and heetz zee thing."

I guess the idea was to get the youngster to relax and gain some confidence at the same time. Sometimes it worked. Sometimes it didn't.

Lupe loved the squeeze play. If you could lay down a bunt, you were his favorite player.

"You don't heetz zee beesball with thee bet. You catch zee beesball with thee bet. Joost preetend the bet is your arm and you're going to ceetch the beesball with your hand."

Lupe, who worked for the railroad when he wasn't at the ballpark, must have known what he was doing because his teams always won more than they lost. His players seemed to hit and throw the ball harder than the opposition. A Lupe-coached team always looked like a bunch of orphans after a game because their uniforms were dirtier.

"You can stand around like treez and look preety, but treez don't win many beesball games." Lupe had this thing about treez. He must have lived out in the woods at one time.

One of the older fellows told me Lupe had played professionallyin the Mexican League in his younger days and a back injury had forced him from the game. I don't know if that's the whole truth or not, but Lupe did know his baseball.

When Lupe thought a bad call was made, he would quickly let the umpire know about it in errorless grammar. "That pitch was a little low wasn't it umpire?, or "Doesn't that plate have corners?" Only when he spoke to his players, would he revert to: "You never geet a heet if you never swing zee bat. What do I have, a teamful of treez?"

I thank the fans got the biggest kick out of Lupe. Ripples of laughter would roll from the stands when Lupe poked fun at the english language.

I don't know whatever happened to Lupe, but I'm still waiting for another one like him to emerge. I may have a long wait.

Dangerous drug ring sold cocaine to Mavs' Tarpley

DALLAS (AP) — An interstate drug ring linked to two slayings sold cocaine to Dallas Mavericks forward Roy Tarpley, a Dallas County prosecutor said.

Tarpley did not know that the people he bought drugs from were so dangerous, Assistant District Attorney Cecil Emerson told The Dallas Morning News.

"When he heard about the murders, he started gasping. He almost fell out of his chair," Emerson said.

Emerson said Tarpley, who has been suspended from play since Jan. 5 for violation of the NBA's drug policy, met voluntarily with the district attorney's office Thursday. He returned to Dallas from a California treatment center last week.

Tarpley's name surfaced during an investigation of a cocaine ring believed to be operating out of Dallas, Detroit and Milwaukee, Emerson said. No charges will be filed against Tarpley, the prosecutor said.

"He had no connection to these major drug traffickers except for being a user," Emerson said.

Prosecutors also do not plan to subpoena Tarpley as a witness for any trials or grand jury hearings connected to the cocaine traffickers, Emerson added.

"The man turned himself in," Emerson said. "He's trying to change his life. ... The evidence is insufficient to charge him with anything."

Tarpley was accompanied at the meeting by his lawyer, Jay Ethington; NBA director of security Horace Balmer; and local NBA representative Ben Nix. The 24-year-old forward, who won the Sixth Man Award in 1988 as the NBA's top reserve, admitted buying and using cocaine while playing for the Mavericks, even after he first sought help for alcohol and cocaine dependency in July 1987, Emerson said.

Tarpley could not be reached for comment by The News and the Mavericks have asked that reporters not talk to him while he is recovering from the latest drug incident.

Tarpley's agent, George Andrews, said Friday: "I don't feel it would be fair to comment, and I don't know why the DA's office would say anything for publication anyway."

Investigators said Tarpley's drug suppliers were believed to be mid-level distributors in an interstate drug ring that has been under investigation for almost eight months.

DePaul grabs fifth

AMARILLO (AP) — Patrinda Toney scored 20 points, including 5-of-6 free throws in the final 1:12, to lead Radford past DePaul 91-83 Saturday for fifth place in the Women's National Invitational Tournament.

Radford finished at 25-7 as it made its first-ever postseason appearance.

Radford led 74-52 with 8:05 left, but DePaul pulled to within three, 82-79, on Karen Ehrhardt's 3-pointer with 1:27 remaining.

Strawberry paces Mets past Astros 5-3

PORT ST. LUCIE, Fla. (AP) — Darryl Strawberry hit his second home run in two days, and fourth of the spring, leading the New York Mets past the Houston Astros 5-3 on Saturday.

Strawberry, who in his first at-bat was hit by starter Bob Forsch, 1-1, later drove in a run with a sacrifice fly. Left-hander Sid Fernandez earned the victory by pitching seven innings, his longest outing this spring, allowing five hits and three earned runs.

The Mets made it 1-0 in the second off Forsch. Kevin Elster singled, took second when Fernandez reached on an error, and scored on Len Dykstra's single. New York added three runs in third, beginning with Strawberry's one-out solo homer deep over the right-field fence.

Forsch walked Gary Carter, then Dave Magadan and Mackey Sasser singled to load the bases. Elster's fielder's choice got one out before second baseman Steve Lombardozzi threw the ball wildly to first allowing Magadan and Sasser to score.

The Astros reached Fernandez for two runs in the fourth. With two outs, Kevin Bass singled and took second on an error. Glenn Davis singled Bass home, then scored on Cesar Cedeno's single.

The Mets took a 5-2 lead in the fourth on consecutive singles by Keith Miller and Gregg Jefferies, and Strawberry's sacrifice fly.

Rangers topple Phillies

PORT CHARLOTTE, Fla. (AP) — Cecil Espy tripled home two runs and scored the third in the sixth inning, and Charlie Hough became the first Texas pitcher to go seven innings this spring as the Rangers beat Philadelphia 4-2 Saturday.

The Phillies' Curt Ford tied the game with a home run in the sixth, but the Rangers came back and broke it open with three runs off Phillie reliever Alex Madrid in the bottom frame.

With one out, Steve Buechele and Chad Kreuter singled ahead of Espy's triple. Espy scored on Bobby Meacham's second squeeze bunt of the spring.

Bruce Ruffin pitched five innings for the Phillies, giving up one run on four hits and five walks.

Hough helped himself out in each of the first two innings, picking Tommy Herr and Ron Jones off first base.

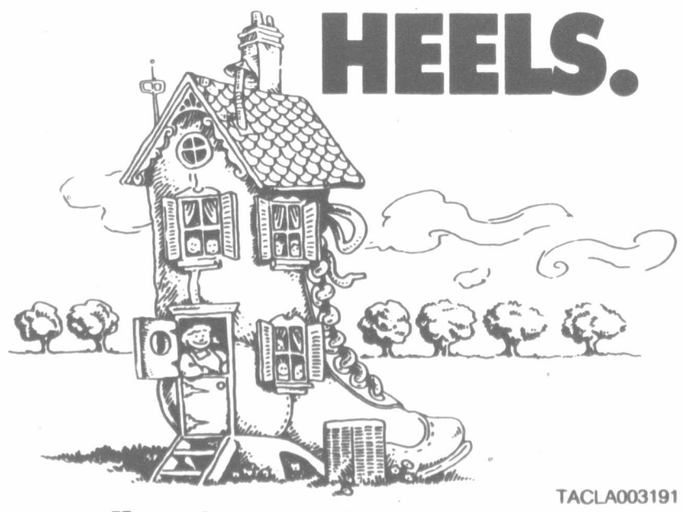

Rangers designated hitter Buddy Bell continued his hot streak, going 2-for-2, giving him eight hits in his last 13 at-bats.

Before the game, the Rangers sent seven players to their minor-league camp, reducing their spring roster to 33 players.

Shortstop Rey Sanchez and outfielder Kevin Reimer were assigned to Class AAA Oklahoma City.

Man kept alive by electric blood pump for record 107 days

By MARCIA DUNN
Associated Press Writer

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Jack Fisher broke a record Saturday as the person to live longest on an electric blood pump to help his ailing heart. More than anything, though, the 46-year-old bond salesman hopes for a transplant.

"It's not a record I want to break," he said, grinning.

But he said he didn't mind being a medical pioneer. He talked while relaxing in his hospital room with his wife, Edie, 39, and four of their five daughters. The girls arrived Thursday from the family's home in Rumson, N.J., to spend the Easter weekend with their father.

Surgeons at Presbyterian-University Hospital of Pittsburgh implanted a Novacor left ventricular assist device into a dying Fisher in an operation that ended Dec. 9. Saturday was his 107th day with the device while awaiting a transplant.

He had been diagnosed 3½ years earlier with cardiomyopathy, a disease of unknown origin that damages heart muscle.

The 1½-pound, polyurethane pump was implanted behind the muscle of the front abdominal wall as a temporary means of helping the left ventricle, which does 85 percent of the heart's work.

Unlike the Jarvik and other total artificial hearts, the Novacor and other assist devices do not require removing the patient's own diseased heart. They are intended to keep people alive while awaiting transplants, although eventually a long-term device may be developed.

The Novacor is the only one of the devices to be driven by electricity, making it less bulky than the air-driven models.

A heart-assist device driven by electricity, rather than compressed air, allows the patient awaiting a transplant more mobility and reduces the risk of infection, said Dr. Peer Portner, president of the California-based Novacor division of Baxter Healthcare Corp.

Thirteen-year-old Alison also has mixed emotions about her father's feat.

"I'm upset that he's sick and everything, but I'm happy he's alive," she said.

A tube protruding from Fisher's abdomen carries electrical wires that feed into a tiny white box on his lap. The box, in turn, is connected by 20 feet of cable to a 440-pound console and computer that control the pump and monitor his heart rhythm. A technician pushes the equipment beside him on his daily strolls down hospital hallways.

Ever present is the loud, constant click of the pump as it distributes blood through Fisher's body. The noise doesn't bother him, and the pump is painless.

"If this stops clicking, I'm in trouble," he said.

Since the first Novacor implant in 1984 at Stanford University, 41 of the pumps have been used on people awaiting transplantation, Portner said.

Eighteen of the 41 patients went on to receive human hearts and were still alive, Portner said. Of the remaining 23, Fisher and three others were still on the device, 15 died while on the Novacor, and four died after getting a transplant.

Until Saturday, the record for the most time on a left-ventrical assist device was 106 days, set in January by a 64-year-old patient at Methodist Hospital in Houston who spent that long on a Novacor before receiving a human heart. The transplant was not successful and he died three days later.

The survival record for a total artificial heart is much longer: William Schroeder of Jasper, Ind., lived 620 days on one before he died in August 1986. But artificial heart patients have all had a variety of complications, and use of the devices as permanent replacements for diseased hearts has been largely suspended.

River rafters to file charges in sniping case

BIG BEND NATIONAL PARK (AP) — Mexican authorities Saturday awaited the filing of a complaint by three American rafters who said they were shot at by a sniper on the Rio Grande.

The three men planned to fly to Ciudad Acuna, across the river from Del Rio, to file a formal complaint that would allow the Coahuila State Police to officially open an investigation into the incident, believed to be the second sniper attack on the Rio Grande in the last five months.

In November, a 40-year-old Eastland man died shielding his wife from the bullets of snipers shooting from cliffs on the Mexican side of the river. Four teenagers were arrested and are awaiting trial in connection with the incident.

Three Coahuila State Police investigators on Friday flew to the scene of the latest shooting, about 250 miles from Del Rio in a part of the national park called San Vicente canyon. Border Patrol agents and Mexican authorities found no shell casings and few other clues, officials said.

However, authorities have two suspects in the case, Big Bend National Park spokesman Roy Given and Coahuila State Police commander Manuel Marquez said.

The three rafters — Reuben Saage II of Alpine, James Gentry of Houston and Russ Alexander of Riesel — say they were fired upon Wednesday afternoon. No one was injured.

"I'm pretty calm about it now," Gentry, 29, told the Houston Chronicle. "When you think about it, it kind of shakes you up, that you came real close to death. But I'm OK."

The three men told authorities they carried .45-caliber and 9mm pistols and fired at least five rounds into the air after being shot at from a canyon rim on the Mexican side of the river Wednesday, Big Bend National Park spokesman Roy Given said.

Carrying weapons in a national park is illegal, Given said, adding that officials had not yet decided whether to file charges.

The men said they armed themselves because they were going into one of the most remote regions of the park.

Photos by Duane Laverty

Story by Dee Dee Laramore

Area artists, including Pampa sculptor Gerald Sanders, will display their work for a good cause April 8 and 9 at the High Plains Epilepsy Association's Benefit Art Show and Sale in the Sheraton Inn of Amarillo.

Participating artists each donated an original work for the auction set for April 8 and also give 20 percent of the proceeds from anything they sell in show to the HPEA. These funds are used to provide medical and educational services for persons with epilepsy.

HPEA serves more than 1,000 people each year in the 26 counties of the Texas Panhandle. HPEA is a United Way organization headed by Betty F. Brown of Pampa.

Artists who plan to show their work that weekend, in addition Sanders, include Manuel Franco, a watercolorist from Dumas; Amy Gormley, pastel landscape artist of Amarillo; James Haney, acrylics, also of Amarillo; Daryl Howard, woodblock prints and collages, of Austin; Donna Howell-Sickles, mixed media drawings and oils, of Dallas; Ed Morgan, master engraver, Taos, N.M.; Phil Poirier, master gemcutter and goldsmith of San Cristobal, N.M.; Bill Tipton, oil portraiture, Durango, Colo.; and Jerry Jordan, oils, Taos, N.M.

Other events scheduled for the weekend include a Cowboy Supper for the artists, HPEA staff and hosting couples April 7 at the Tom Christian Ranch on the rim of Palo Duro Canyon.

Abreakfast for the newly organized Friends of the High Plains Epilepsy Association set for the morning of April 9 is to be chaired by Ed and Margaret Sweet of Pampa.

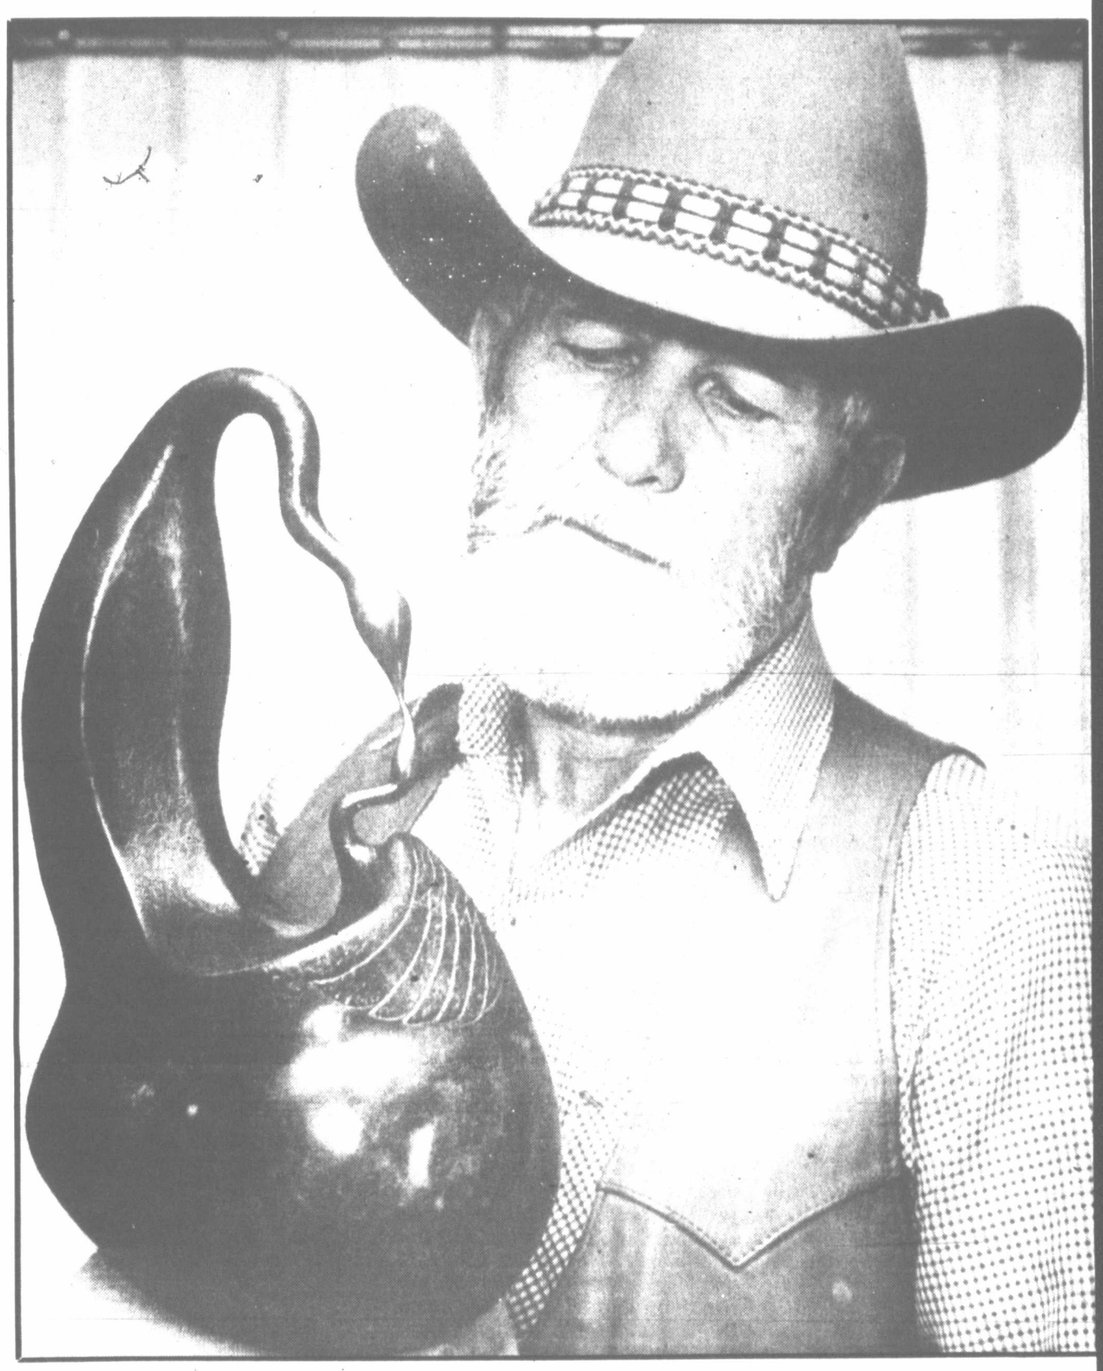

For more information on tickets to the art auction the evening of April 8, contact Mrs. Russell Robinson at (806) 353-2607.

This year, portraitist Bill Tipton will accept commissions for portraits as his schedule allows. All artists who are attending the show are well-known throughout the Southwest. Most are award-winning and show their works in galleries throughout the United States.

Ed Morgan, the first artist to become involved with the HPEA fund-raising event, owns a nationally-known gallery in Taos, N.M.

A special feature of the show and sale is the fact that all the artists are bringing works that are affordable for the novice attracted to Southwest art as well as for the knowledgeable collector.

The art show is free to the public. Show times are 11 a.m. to 5 p.m., April 8 and noon to 5 p.m., April 9.

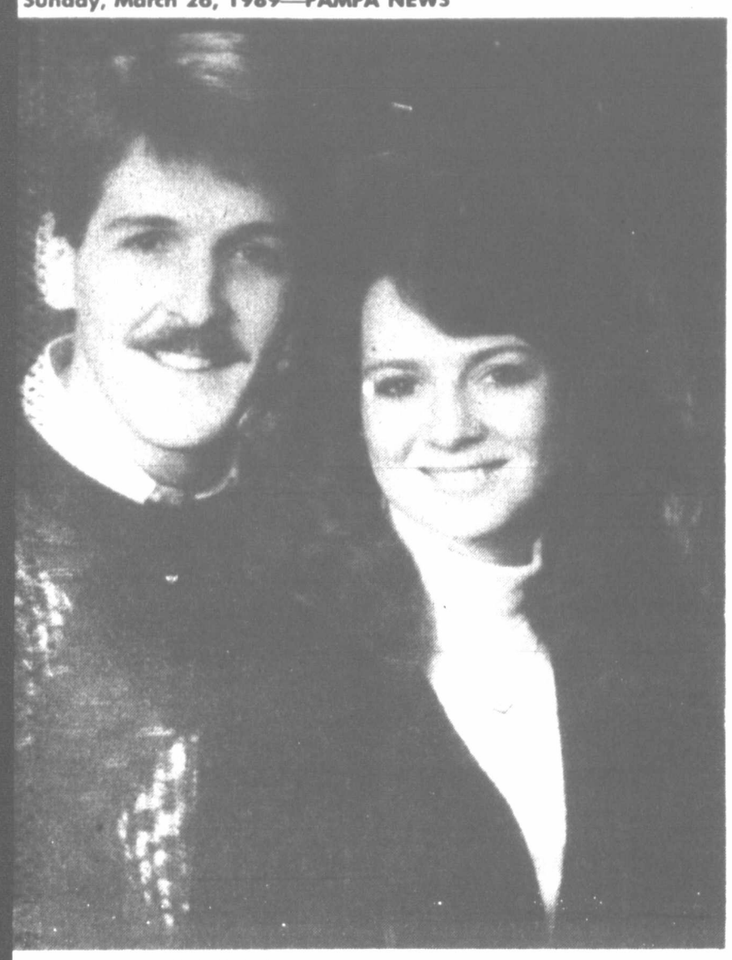

Pampa sculptor Gerald Sanders is shown with a piece he is donating for the HPEA auction to be held the evening of April 8. Sanders will be among the featured artists showing their work in the benefit art show and sale April 8 and 9 at the Sheraton Inn of Amarillo.

Ed and Margaret Sweet test table arrangements for the Friends of the High Plains Epilepsy Association Breakfast set for April 9. The Sweets, co-chairmen of the breakfast, have been HPEA volunteers for 12 years.

eview by BILL HALEY

Pampa Community Concert ssociation recently presented uintet of the Americas, a group f five woodwind musicians hich is something of an oddity in usic circles, in a concert at .K. Brown Auditorium.

Quintet of the Americas consts of a flute, bassoon, clarinet, boe and French horn. The roup, originally from Bogata, olumbia, strives to present usic by American composers nd works with a government ureau in New York City which eeks to promote American usic — both North and South.

Monday night was a forbidding ne with snow and blustering nds. It's effect was very noticeable inside the auditorium. Attendance was the smallest in Community Concert history here.

However, Pampans would have been smart to brave the devilish weather because the evening's performance throughout was most impressive and rewarding. The sounds produced by the musicians with regard to intonation, voicing, and shading, were a genuine listening pleasure.

Particularly exciting was Selections from 'Porgy and Bess' wherein the overture and excerpts from the opera were creditably recreated — a sizeable feat considering these works were originally written for full orchestra. Also on the program were Overture to the 'Magic Flute' by Mozart, a fantasy from Bizet's Carmen and about eight other compositions.

Among small chamber groups, the string quartet is firmly ensconced in music's heraldry with most of the art's illustrious figures bowing to it.

The woodwind quintet and similar ensembles, by contrast, must be regarded as outsiders. The influence of the latter however is growing, and if the success of the Quintet of the Americas is any indication, we may be hearing more of them.

Conference on aging set April 23-26 in Austin

AUSTIN — Texas Department on Aging and four other aging-related organizations will sponsor the eighth annual Texas Joint Conference on Aging April 23-26 at the Austin Hyatt Regency Hotel.

Theme for this year's conference — one of the state's largest annual gatherings of professionals in the field of aging — is "On-Line in '89." It reflects the growing importance of computer technology in all areas of the aging services network, from accounting to actual service delivery.

This year's conference will not only feature workshops in traditional formats, but will also have many "hands-on" workshops involving computers.

Austin's selection as host city for the JCoA insures that delegates willhave plenty to see and do during the conference. The Hyatt Regency is located on the shores of Town Lake, and a few of the sights and activities located within a few minutes of the hotel are colorful Sixth Street, the State Capitol, Barton Springs, Zilker Park and the LBJ Museum.

Hotel facilities include two dining rooms, a pool and easy access to hiking, biking and jogging trails along the shores of Town Lake.

Renowned humorist John Henry Faulk will deliver the banquet address.

In addition, there will be a Riverboat Cruise on the lake and sightseeing tours to the Governor's Mansion, the State Capitol and elsewhere.

Activities held concurrently with the JCoA will include the State Senior Citizens Spelling Bee championship and a legislative breakfast honoring Texas lawmakers.

Co-sponsors with the Department on Aging include the American Association of Retired Persons, the Texas Association of Senior Centers, Texas Association of Area Agencies on Aging and Texas Association of Nutrition and Aging Services Programs.

For more information on the conference, call Ann Ammons at the Texas Department on Aging, or write to Ammons care of the Texas Department on Aging, P.O. Box 12786, Capitol Station, Austin, TX 78711.

Exhibition to feature local decorative painter

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Staff Writer

Theresa Maness is to be featured as Heritage Art Club's Artist of the Year in an exhibition of her decorative paintings April 1-2 in the Lovett Memorial Library auditorium.

Maness' work will be on display for the public from 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m., April 1, and from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m., April 2. An invitation-only showing is set for 6:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m., March 31.

Theresa Maness - Heritage Art Club Artist of the Year

Heritage Art Club is celebrating its 10th anniversary this year. The club began in 1979 with 10 charter members. Four of these original members are still actively involved in the club. Maness has been a member of the club four years.

"Color fascinates me," Maness said. "It lets my feelings show. Right now, blues and mauves are my colors."

Maness said she prefers to paint flowers and fruits because of the many color possibilities these subjects have.

Mary Jo Leisure, a master decorative artist who has published several books on decorative and tole painting and editor of a decorative painting magazine, has been her greatest influence, she said.

"First I paint for the enjoyment of it," she said. "For any reason, I can paint!"

Maness said she was thrilled to be named Heritage's Artist of the Year, a first-time experience for her.

She had never had participated in a one-man show before, she said, although she had had her work exhibited in the museum at Fritch.

These past months have been spent painting and preparing a number of items for next week's show, Maness said.

She plans to exhibit her decorative painting on furniture pieces, such as several end tables, a quilt stand and a magazine rack. She expects her Christmas display to be the most spectacular of her show.

But Maness is also proud of her painting on glass, wood, tin, and duck decoys. Her fabric painting will also be displayed in the show.

"That is the thing most in demand right now," she said.

Although best known for her decorative painting, Maness says she will also show several of her canvas paintings.

"I want people to know I do paint canvases, too," she said with a laugh.

Maness owns the Little Ol' Painting Corner, a business that began with three shelves of items in a corner of her husband's business, Archie's Aluminum Fab. She's since moved the business into its own building and conducts painting classes there.

"I try to instill new ideas and new techniques in my students," she said. "I want them to know that painting is never boring, that it's always a learning experience."

Maness' own experience with painting began to blossom when she was in the seventh grade, the year her art teacher first introduced her to color.

Her artistic talents did not develop much more during the next few years, however, as she moved often with her family. While Maness' father, Joe Key, a civil service employee, was overseas during World War II, she lived in Vernon. The Keys all moved to Pampa when she was a freshman in high school.

"The tole and decorative painting came lots of years later," she explained with a smile.

Her son Raymond was a baby when Maness and several other budding artists began to meet and study painting. "We'd critique each other which was probably the worst thing in the world to do," she quipped.

These first painting experiences led to Maness' "corner" in Archie's and eventually into a passion for art, evidenced by the many examples of her work displayed throughout her home.

Examples of Maness' decorative painting talent

Maness teaches painting classes at her business and conducts at least two workshops each year. She is active in the Golden Spread chapter of Decorative Painters where she has held several offices and served on many committees.

"We just completed a show in Amarillo in March, where I had a booth and was teaching," she said. "That's the first time I did both."

Maness has recently launched a line of her own design patterns that she htpes to have distributed nationwide. She has designed a series of 10 cookie jar lids for the seasons and holidays, a series of six pot pourri boxes with lids that are interchangeable and eight placemat designs with fruit and ribbons on them.

She has also designed patterns for fabric dyes, casserole holders and furniture pieces, Maness said.

"I'm working with two distributors that I hope will pickup the line, but I don't know if they will yet," she said.

The Manesses are the parents of four children and grandparents to six. They have been married for 40 years and have lived in Pampa all that time.

"We also have a dog Stormy that rules the household," Maness added.

Pre-Easter activities abound

Peeking at Pampa

By Katie

"Happy Easter!" to everyone. Activities of the pre-Spring, pre-Easter week went something like this.

A group of 30 members of the Mary Ellen and Harvester Church of Christ attended the 14th annual Soul-Winning Workshop at the Fair Park Coliseum in Tulsa. They will be home in time for church today.

Three of the Harvesters 4 Paul Searl, Billy Lemmons and Wyatt Earp manned a booth of their albums of gospel music. A penny says they sang a few numbers. Marvin Carlton, co-director of the Education Department, coordinated the trip.

Belated 80th birthday wishes to James Steward, affectionately called "Shorty" or "Hoot." There was a family birthday dinner followed by birthday cake and gifts Saturday evening at the Girl Scout House. Mickey Lee on the banjo and Danny Gamble on the guitar played and sang with an occasional chiming in by other grandchildren. The family gathered in a large circle while each child and grandchild shared a "Grandpa and I" memory. A video tape was made.

On Sunday morning 38 members attended worship services in a body at Mary Ellen and Harvester Church of Christ. Attending the memory-making week-end were James and his wife Audrey; their three daughters and families from Pampa and some from the Metroplex area were Belle and Lacy Lee and children Doug and Kellie Lee and family, Mickey Lee of Abilene, Jenny and Donnie Gamble and family, Andy Lee, Linda and Marvin Carlton; Jo Rawls and family; Dave and Michelle Rawls, and family, Sherry and Jeff McGilvray and child; Ruth and John Jordan of San Angelo, Polly Onsted and children, Ben Strickland, Lubbock, Susie and Randy Marshall.

His sister Sue Bellis came from Winslow, Ark. James and Audrey have three daughters, 15 grandchildren and 24 great-grandchildren. James came to Pampa 60 years ago on March 17. In July they will celebrate their 60th wedding anniversary. Sounds like 1989 will be full of memories for the Stewards.

Kind words of appreciation to the Hospice of Pampa volunteers. Dorothy Neslage, who recently returned from Austin from taking special courses for her visual problems, lost no time in resuming visitiation of the homebound members of her church and participating as a Hospice volunteer. Hazel Barthel, coordinator, Evelyn Haiduk and Jean Bratcher deserve much special praise, too.

Twentieth Century Cotillion will host its 27 annual Antique Show and Sale April 7 an 8, 10 am to 8 pm and April 9 from 1-5 pm at M.K. Brown Auditorium. Co-chairmen are Susan Tripplehorn and Jessie Lee Vanderberg. Fifteen dealers are expected from Pampa, Fort Worth, Dallas, Houston, Oklahoma and maybe as far away as Connecticut. From the net of $62,000 made and loaned to college students, $321,000 has been generated to help 97 students through the Opportunity Plan. Do give your support to this worthy project.

Dr. Don McClary will be moving his medical practice in ear, nose and throat and allergies to Carlsbad, New Mexico at an unnamed date. His wife Sandra, business manager of his office, and daughter Teresa will be moving, too. Best wishes to the family with assurance that all three will be missed.

Two more longtime Pampa doctors, Drs. Frank Kelley and J. Foster Elder, will be closing their offices April 1 in favor of a well deserved retirement.

A good guess says that Dr. Frank will be playing lots of golf, staying physically fit, and doing exactly what he wants to do. He is frequently seen walking at an energetic clip with earphones of his Walkman shutting out noise and cares of the day. His medical practice that began with his father the late Dr. J.H. Kelley in 1940, spanned nearly 50 years in Pampa. In his early practice his wife Mary Ann was his medical lab technician and more recently his business manager.

There willbe a combination of tears, handshakes, hugs and worlds of good wishes by friends and patients and medical associates at a reception in his office on March 31 from 9 a.m. to 12 noon. Hostesses for the cake and punch affair will be the office staff of Teresa Edmison, his daughter Patsy Smith, Tricia Smith, his wife Mary Ann. You're invited, too!

Foster Elder began his medical practice in Pampa in November, 1948, 40 years ago. He, too, is an avid (!) golfer with farming interests to keep him busy. He and his wife Rae will become grandparents in the next few weeks when their daughter Jan becomes a new mom. Their best plans include being able to forget about a regular schedule and to visit their four children, all of whom were born in Pampa.

Both doctors will be greatly missed by their patients. Happy retirement wishes!

Mary and Carl Hills spent two wonderful weeks in California and Arizona.

For the second time Rev. Norman Rushing conducted a revival at a Baptist church in Willow, Alaska.

Charles and Patty McKinney, former Pampans, now living in McKinney are spending this weekend visiting with John, Susan and Kelley Tripplehorn. It's always nice to get back to Pampa for visits...

Tracy Rice Magnus and little Ann arrived in Pampa from Germany to awit the arrival of Tracy's second baby. Her husban Karl will be here in a few weeks. The greeting party at the Amarillo airport consisted of Tracy's mom Joy (Ronnie, her dad, was in Odessa), Darrin and Ron Rice, Jessie Lee and Fred Vanderberg and Chris Hite. Little three-year-old Ann, who speaks both English and German calls Joy and Ronnie by the German names of Omah and Opah. (Sp.?) The cute little redhead is described as a doer,

'Spring Fling' to transform auditorium into cruise ship

Pampa's Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Pampa board of directors are in the final planning stages for their largest fundraiser — Spring Fling. On Friday evening, April 14, the M.K. Brown Auditorium will be transformed into a cruise ship, U.S.S. Horizons.

According to Charles Buzzard, executive director for Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Pampa, this gala event will follow a casino night format. Winnings at the end of the evening will buy entree' into more prizes featuring a 3-day Carribean cruise, a trip to Las Vegas, Texas' only cruise on the ship Le Mistral, as well as a host of others.

Refreshments and food will be available to all partygoers while they roll the dice. Following the awarding of prizes, live entertainment will continue to play for those still light on their feet. Price for a boarding pass is $30 per person which includes a bag of casino chips to wager throughout the evening.

The Spring Fling will be an important fundraiser for Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Pampa.

Money raised will be used to finance the programs of the agency. Big Brothers/Big Sisters is a preventative social service agency.

Caring adult volunteers bring needed friendship, guidance and love to children from single-parent homes. The local agency carefully screens and matches these volunteers with the children who are best able to benefit from their friendship and counsel.

Throughout the time the children are matched, the staff remains in contact with the children, their single-parents are the volunteers.

Staff monitors the progress of the matched Big and Little Brothers and Sisters and provide ongoing training, workshops and monthly activities for them.

Buzzard said, "Currently, we have twelve kids and seven adult volunteers at various stages of the screening process. We hope to be able to make our first matches at the end of this month."

Because the Spring Fling will be such a large task and an important fundraiser, the Board of Directors are needing volunteers to help out while enjoying a night of entertainment for a great cause. All persons interested in volunteering for the Spring Fling should contact Charles Buzzard at 665-1211.

Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Pampa looks forward to seeing everyone there, Friday, April 14, 7 p.m. to Midnight at the M.K. Brown Auditorium.

scene from 'People of Holland'

Holland subject of Rotary travel film

Frank Mugno will be narrating the next Travel Film Series sponsored by the Pampa Rotary Club. People of Holland will be shown March 28 at 7 p.m. in the M.K. Brown Auditorium.

Step into the daily lives of the people of Holland. Learn about life inside a windmill and life on a canal boat. Be the guest for a close-up of Holland's culture through personal communications with Holland's best cultural emmissaries, the people who live there.

Holland's crafts are world renowned for good reason. Look over the shoulder of the master craftsmen fashioning chinaware in Delft and Makkum. See how wooden shoes are made, a process unchanged for generations. Hear the story of how farmer's cheese is made while visiting with the farmer who made it!

Take a look at the sports, old and new, that give the country character. Step back into time at the jousting tournament at Westkapelle where "knights" on huge draft horses vie for the silver ring. Windsurfing is another more popular sport in Holland. See an exciting windsurfing contest.

Cities and villages of Holland like Rotterdam, Delftshaven, Marken and Volendam have a flavor that is charmingly old world while remaining surprisingly up to date. Explore glorious Amsterdam by canal boat. See the marvelous architecture and learn the story of the city while gliding along. Visit Anne Frank's house and recall the sad but hopeful little girl in hiding.

Watch the sparkle of diamonds at the Amsterdam Diamond Factory. Visit Rembrandt's home, the VanGogh Museum and enjoy lunch at an Indonesian "Rijstaffel" restaurant.

Experience the color and spectacle of the famed Alkmaar Cheese Market and the flower auction at Aalsmeer.

Holland's most important resource is her people, and "The People of Holland" become our friends during this film journey.

Divorce is like a death, words of comfort help

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: When my husband left me and our two children for another woman, I was devastated. My family and friends made comments such as, "You're lucky to be rid of him."

Abby, I loved my husband, and although I know that my family and friends thought they were comforting me, they weren't. If a spouse dies, everyone assumes that the wife is grieving, and no one would dare to say, "You're lucky to be rid of him" — regardless of how terrible he was. But when you're separated or divorced, everyone assumes you hate him, and that isn't always true.

I'm sure there are others in my circumstances who would welcome a few kind words of sympathy after their marriage breaks up, so please pass this along to your readers. There are so many marriages failing these days, it's almost like a death in the family.

RECOVERING IN OHIO

DEAR RECOVERING: In a way, the end of a marriage IS a death. It's the death of many hopes, dreams and promises that were expected to last a lifetime. The loss of a spouse by divorce is still a loss, and a period of adjusting to that loss is sure to follow. Even those who are "lucky to be rid of him" (or her) cannot escape the pain of closing the book on something that was once good.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I associate mostly with other couples, and when we dine out we each pay our own share. Occasionally we are invited by widows to their homes for dinner. I have been told that because we are two, we should reciprocate with two invitations. However, I read somewhere that a widow should consider herself as a pair! I must add that when my husband and I attend something together with a widow, my husband does all the driving and pays for the parking. (Most women do not drive at night.)

Abby, if I have to have each widow twice, I will be mostly entertaining widows, which my husband does not particularly enjoy. We do associate with a few widows whose company we really do enjoy, but we prefer to associate with couples.

Please tell me what our responsibility is as a couple after accepting an invitation from a woman alone.

CHICAGOAN

DEAR CHICAGOAN: Nowhere is it written that a couple who has been entertained by a single person "owes" that person two invitations.

A single person is considered a "family" — so it's actually one family entertaining the other. And friends who count don't count.

DEAR ABBY: I quit my job at the local grocery store because the assistant manager's hobby was taking candid pictures. He also had this thing about girls' behinds and was always taking pictures of mine.

I got tired of this sick little camera game and quit my job. The reason I am writing is to let all working women know that they have rights and should stand up for them. I didn't realize it at the time, but I was actually a victim of sexual harassment. If I had known then what I know now, I would have filed a complaint to the labor board and gotten his job instead of quitting mine.

SMART TOO LATE IN ALABAMA

DEAR SMART: It may be too late for you, but writing as you did may help many of your sisters who presently are where you were then. Thanks for writing.

DEAR ABBY: I'm an average person, except that I don't like "socializing."

I am running out of excuses and do not want to lie — but I don't want to offend people who are kind enough to extend an invitation that means nothing to me, but much more to them.

Can you suggest an appropriate, diplomatic, all-purpose response?

ANTI-SOCIAL BUTTERFLY

DEAR ANTI-SOCIAL: Try this: "Thank you very much, but I have other plans." While this may not be the gospel truth, neither is it a bald-faced lie; you could plan to wash your undies, read a book, watch your favorite TV show, or just get a good night's sleep.

Hot Licks

APOLLONIA
Apollonia

It's hard to find just the right words to describe this album, but we'll try.

How about boring? Repetitious? Silly? Unimaginative? Insipid?

No, none of those are fully descriptive of the complete waste of studio time and tape this effort encompasses.

And that's a shame. This Prince protege has the looks and voice to go places. But since breaking with the Minneapolis

Apollonia

Flash, she has become just another disco diva.

With so many female dance acts hot on the charts (Madonna, Samantha Fox, Sheena Easton, Paula Abdul, etc.), it would seem competition would bring out the best in this woman. No such luck. She's content to juxtapose.

Encapsulating the moronic nature of this "1, 2, 3, 4, play the synthesizer a little more" tragedy is a cover of the Yardbird's classic, "For Your Love."

Songwriter Graham Goldman should sue for malpractice.

It's hard to understand how someone as talented as Apollonia ever got roped into this goofball record. Her work as leader of the pop/funk band Apollonia 6 proved she can meet the soul standard of the 1980s.

Combine that with her fashion-model looks and marginal ability as an actress and you should have a winning combination.

But production master (of disaster) Julie Barri so overloads the instrumentation that Apollonia's vocals come across as almost an after-thought.

The only glimmer of hope on this whole mess is the sax solo on "Ay Ya Yai." But then the liner notes, which mention every brainless drum programmer or keyboard player who contributed to this miscarriage, fail to mention who offered up the one bright spot with the saxophone.

Don't tell me; there probably wasn't any sax at all. It was probably somebody on the keyboards faking it. While the sax (or whatever) wails on, Apollonia out moans Donna Summer, sounding a little like a cat in heat.

The lyrics on "Ay Ya Yai" are in Spanish, which is probably a blessing to those of us who don't habla Espanol. However, when she does break into a line of English it is, "You make me so hot. Gracias."

Oh, brother.

This is the kind of muck that spawned the phrase "Disco Sucks." Grade: D–

WESTERN BLOOD
The Sandmen

This band from Denmark has gone virtually unnoticed by the album rock crowd. Too bad. They carry a spark reminiscent of early Stones.

The music is sharp, clever and accessible. Vocalist Allen Vegenfeldt presents a stellar performance that at times verges on awesome.

Think of the way John Fogarty used to do it with Credence Clearwater Revival and you get the idea behind Vegenfeldt's power vocals.

"House in the Country" is a pleading rock counterpart to Dave Loggins' "Please Come to Boston." The title track, on the other hand, carries the terse grandeur of U2 or Echo and the Bunnymen. "Say Yes" has enough Dire Straits influence to let you know they've been affected by Mark Knopler-itis.

Overall, it's the kind of meshing that will satisfy the avant-garde crowd while not alienating the rockers.

There is an engaging presence here that goes right for the jugular.

But instead of feeding off the listener, as so many relentlessly belligerent bands do, this group provides a quick IV full of rock nutrition via solid musicianship and lyric-penning.

Don't look for knee-jerk immutability here. There are enough bands that are satisfied with only meeting the status quo. This is better than that. Grade: A

Schenck conducts a destroyed symphony

By MARY CAMPBELL
AP Newsfeatures Writer

American classical music isn't as well-known as it should be, in America or abroad, says conductor Andrew Schenck.

"There's a lot of substantial music out there that deserves for us to take another listen, call our own and be proud of." He adds that some of it, which has been out of fashion, is now back in style.

Schenck has made a new "another-listen, back-in-style" recording, with the New Zealand Symphony. It's of Samuel Barber's Second Symphony, which was commissioned by the Army Air Force and premiered by the Boston Symphony in 1944.

There's a pretty dramatic reason it hasn't been heard lately — its composer tore it up.

"It's a splendidly crafted symphony," Schenck says. "It's a major piece by one of America's giants. As the century ends, we can look back and see somewhere in the middle of it we had a real symphonic golden age of American composers — Aaron Copland, Samuel Barber, Virgil Thomson, Roy Harris, William Schuman. I think their music needs a vast re-examining and re-recording. We've got the technology and orchestras that can do it."

But what happened to Barber and his Second Symphony?

Schenck says: "Barber's publisher told me that about 20 years after the symphony was written he said to Barber, 'All of your works have lasted so well. But we can't seem to get the Second Symphony off the ground.' I don't think there was a pun intended.

"Barber replied: 'The reason is simple. It's not a good work. Let's go back to your office and destroy it.' They did so. They tore the parts up personally."

Schenck, who is 48, made his first recording in 1984. It was an all-Barber record with the London Symphony, with Ted Joselson playing Barber's Piano Concerto. Joselson organized that recording, after he and Schenck had an exciting collaboration on the concerto while Schenck was guest conducting the Pasadena, Calif., Symphony Orchestra.

"I thought the logical thing to do was follow that with another Barber project, even though I consider myself a non-specialist. As I talked with people about what repertoire to do, the story of the Second Symphony came up. It piqued my curiosity."

Schenck delved into the history and found good reviews. He says: "Barber was a corporal in the Air Force. He appeared at the symphony's premiere in uniform. He had flown around, apparently, and soaked up inspiration for the symphony at various Air Force bases.

"There was speculation about what he was trying to say related to the Air Force. The most intriguing was the electronic signal generator created for the second movement by Bell Labs. After the premiere, he revised the piece. He took the generator out of there. He wasn't terribly comfortable with the speculation that this part of the symphony was supposed to be describing an air raid.

"He must have felt if the symphony was too linked with the military, somehow it would denigrate its artistic merit. He wanted it to be accepted as a work of art in its own right.

"Interestingly, after the symphony was withdrawn, the second movement was published separately with the title Night Flight. He did something else interesting. He lifted a portion from the beginning of the symphony and stuck it into his opera Antony and Cleopatra. He wrote a vocal text over the orchestra part. I was astonished when I heard it for the first time."

Schenck continues: "Our perceptions change over time. Twelve-tone and chance music were in style in the early '60s. Among the musical literati at that time, descriptive music was taboo.

"I think people now are thinking it is not such a terrible thing to write descriptive pieces with major chords and melodies. The trend right now is the neo-romantic style.

"Leonard Slatkin and the St. Louis Symphony just came out with a disc of Barber's three essays for orchestra. It was never recorded before. All of this is coming back."

Schenck never met Barber, who died in 1981. He corresponded with attorneys for Barber's estate, who gave permission for him to record the Second Symphony.

Schenck says: "I had bought a score of the work in the early 1960s. My original thought was I would have to have parts (for each musician) made from my own score. Then fate intervened. (Music publishers) G. Schirmer located a set of parts at its London branch."

The conductor had been engaged by the New Zealand Symphony for a month of concerts and 20 hours of recording time. So, for Stradivari Classics, they made the recording of the symphony, which Barber once wrote that the Boston Symphony found difficult. Schenck says that the New Zealand Symphony did a magnificent job.

"I was bombarding them. We also did Barber's First Symphony in concert. It's a very different piece, much shorter, in one movement." Schenck says, "I'm excited about doing American music, particularly in other parts of the world."

He and the New Zealand Symphony also recorded three chamber orchestra works by Respighi for Stradivari Classics. The company is negotiating recording dates for him in Eastern Europe.

Schenck has been music director of the Nassau Symphony on Long Island, N.Y., for a year. After he received a master's degree from Indiana University and spent a year in Germany on a Fulbright grant, he was associate conductor of the Baltimore Symphony for seven years. Then he founded and directed the Baltimore Chamber Opera Theater for two years, free-lanced in New York, and was resident conductor of the San Antonio Symphony for two years.

He was born in Honolulu, where his grandfather was a minister and his father director of the Academy of Arts Museum. His father later was director of the Brooklyn Museum.

In December, Lois Schenck published a cookbook, The Desperate Gourmet, compiled while entertaining artists and symphony board members. One of the couple's two sons is a Tufts University sophomore, while the other is a high-school senior spending a year at Oxford in England. Are they musicians?

"No," says their dad. "They're normal people."

Turkey prepares for Bob Wills Day

One of the biggest parties ever held in the Panhandle or South Plains of Texas will see its 18th anniversary celebrated when Bob Wills Day returns to Turkey on Saturday, April 29.

The event is an annual reunion of the musicians who played with Wills, a native of the town, as well as thousands of his fans, who come from several states to be at the citywide party.

Bob Wills

As many as 30 former members of the Texas Playboys, Wills' back-up band, are expected to be at the celebration.

The weekend event will officially begin Friday night, April 28, with a dance at the Bob Wills Center. A parade at 10:30 a.m. will begin the main day of festivities. There will also be a barbecue at 11 a.m. and an old fiddlers contest at noon in the city auditorium.

At 2:30 p.m. the old football field, located "east of the center," will be the sight of the Texas Playboys reunion. It will be hosted by Dr. Charles Townsend, a professor at West Texas State University and an expert on Western Swing music, which Wills helped to establish.

There will also be areas to view a variety of motion pictures and TV programs in which Wills either starred or was featured.

There will also be a number of souvenir stands with all of Wills' music and other Texas Playboy memorabilia.

Turkey is located directly south of Clarendon on Hwy. 70 and is only six miles from Caprock State Park, another tourist attraction in the area.

Don't get me wrong. I think taking care of your eyesight is just as important as the next guy. In fact, that's why I went to Dr.'s Simmons & Simmons in the first place . . . to see about disposable contact lenses.

I know a lot of stores have them. But I figure for something as important as my eyes, I needed an eye-care specialist to make sure I get the best fit possible. And besides, I got a thorough examination, the right type of lens for me, a good fit and check-ups to make sure I'm getting the best wear possible.

Now that I've got my disposable contacts from Drs. Simmons & Simmons, I've got more interesting things to do with my time than worrying about my eyes . . . see what I mean?

Hobbyist's Doppler radar helps provide tornado warnings

By ROBERT G. WIELAND
Associated Press Writer

CORSICANA (AP) — When towering thunderstorms threaten North Texas, Lloyd Huffman fires up the Doppler radar he built from military surplus parts, giving forecasters a look at developing thunderstorms.

Unlike conventional radar, Doppler can detect the speed and direction of raindrops within a storm, allowing Huffman to spot rotation that could indicate the formation of a tornado.

"It just kind of grew over the years," Huffman says of the radar station, which he has been tuning up in anticipation of the April-through-June tornado season.

With a few differences, Huffman's S-band Doppler is like the NEXRAD system being tested at the National Severe Storms Laboratory in Norman, Okla., and planned for nationwide installation in the coming decade.

Huffman asked the laboratory for the plans to build his Doppler.

"After they believed us, they gave us the information we needed," Huffman said. He doesn't know of any amateur operations similar to his.

Huffman built his first radar station in 1976, using World War II surplus Army and Navy equipment and putting the antenna on top of the local hospital.

In 1979, he began work on the present facility, which became Doppler capable in 1985.

"It's a lot of fun," said Huffman, who had been interested in radar since childhood. "I just couldn't do anything about it then," he said.

"I'm very interested in thunderstorm structure — what goes on inside them," he said.

Huffman, 42, has a degree in physics from North Texas State University. After working as a communications systems designer for Motorola in Dallas, he returned to his hometown in 1974 and started his own communications business.

A non-profit corporation runs the radar station he built there.

Huffman and his crew staff the station whenever severe weather is possible. He's in microwave link with WFAA-TV in Dallas and talks by radio with National Weather Service meteorologists in Fort Worth.

"We get a good look at the Dallas-Fort Worth metroplex," 50 miles northwest, he said. The radar can detect rain intensity for several hundred miles, but can only process Doppler information for about 150 miles, he said.

The radar pulses abcut 1,000 times a second, sending a beam about 1½ degrees wide. The receiving information is sorted into "range bins" each 150 meters deep.

The computer remembers and compares the location of raindrops, allowing it to determine the speed and direction.

"The speed of rotation is the rate of change of phase angle — that's the velocity," Huffman explained. The computer assigns a color to each velocity, allowing it to paint a picture of the storm.

Hues of red indicate movement toward the station. Greens indicate movement away.

The right combination of the colors on the southwest corner of a thunderstorm provides a "meso-cyclone vortex signature," indicating rotation.

After several minutes of observation and tilting the radar beam up and down, Huffman might spot elongation into a cylinder that could mean a tornado.

Huffman then makes sure the National Weather Service knows about it and uses police-band radios to notify authorities in surrounding counties.

Whereas the federal government is spending millions for development, Huffman has spent only about $50,000 since 1976.

"We get a lot of stuff donated and all of us are volunteers," he said.

The NEXRAD system also will differ by having built-in computer programs called algorithms that will compare data with regional models and then issue an automatic warning of the likelihood of having a tornado.

But Huffman enjoys being able to interpret his data by himself.

"They'll never completely replace the man in front of the radar screen," agrees Weather Service severe storms specialist Al Moller in Fort Worth.

"We have to strike a balance in technology, research and training of people responsible for issuing watches and warnings," Moller said.

Huffman would like to upgrade his system, speeding up the computer and adding more memory.

He has the money, but that's not the problem.

"It takes a lot of time," he said. "It's a mechanical, electrical, electronic and computer project — a little of everything involved in in it."

Many people have worked on the system, which he called "a good community thing to do."

The project is funded by the Navarro Community Foundation, money set aside by wealthy families that profited from the region's two previous oil booms.

Operating expenses are covered by Dallas TV station WFAA, which shows the radar during weathercasts.

The station sits on an acre of land provided by the Corsicana Independent School District. A donated 80-foot oil derrick supports a 25-foot diameter Fiberglas dome containing the 16½ foot dish antenna.

"It took us a year to make the dome," said Huffman, who explained it was cast in sections in handmade molds.

At the base of the derrick is a building that houses the radar unit and the computerized processing and display equipment that makes it different from conventional systems.

The station is cluttered with maps, weather reference material and donated parts. A TV monitor sits on a large wood packing crate. The large eyes of two radar screens stare across the room.

Amarillo probably will be first to get Doppler radar

WASHINGTON (AP) — Amarillo probably will be the first Texas city to get a NEXRAD Doppler radar station, the National Weather Service said.

Thirteen of the $2.5 million systems will be deployed in the state over the next decade, said NWS spokesman Don Whitten.

Overall, the NWS plans to spend about $1 billion to improve forecasting, including launching at least three satellites and setting up 1,000 automated weather reporting stations.

Whitten said the tentative schedule for Doppler in Texas is:

Amarillo, October 1991; Central Texas for the Air Force, May 1992; Dyess Air Force Base near Abilene, July 1992; Dallas-Fort Worth and Austin-San Antonio, March 1993; Lubbock, April 1993; Houston-Galveston, June 1993; Laughlin Air Force Base, near Del Rio, February 1994; El Paso, August 1994; Corpus Christi, Brownsville and San Angelo, September 1994; and Midland-Odessa, October 1994.

In addition to weather service forecasting, Doppler will be used by the Federal Aviation Administration to detect downbursts or wind shears.

Such an abrupt vicious wind shift has been blamed for the Aug. 1985 crash of a Delta Air Lines jumbo jet at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport. The crash killed 137 people.

There will be a definite market for the knowledge and expertise you have acquired over the past three years. When your talents are applied properly, your rise in status will be rather rapid.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Errors are possible today if you base your judgments upon cursory information or first impressions. To be on the safe side, take ample time to reason things out. Major changes are ahead for Aries in the coming year. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions today. Mail $1 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Think twice today before spending for things that are outside of your basic needs or requirements. Don't let extravagant impulses take control of your credit card.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Guard against making impulsive commitments or promises today, because if you act too hastily you might get yourself into something from which you won't be able to wriggle out.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) It looks like you should be able to manage a business matter to your advantage today, but there are also indications you might create hard feelings because of the way you'll do it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) It's extremely important that you keep your priorities in order today or else you might waste too much time and energy on situations that do not advance your personal interests.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Things may not go in complete accordance with your game plan today, so you must be prepared to adjust to shifting circumstances. Success could be dependent upon your flexibility.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Don't let yourself be jockeyed into a position today to where you have to defend insignificant aspects of your plans instead of focusing on their attributes.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Financial or commercial dealings must be managed in a prudent, realistic manner today, or else advantages that you should gain may be chipped away a piece at a time.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Associates might not be as sold on your suggestions today as you think. Don't be too pushy about trying to implement them until you are certain of their support.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) In order to gain what you want for yourself and others today you must not back off if you sense resistance building. To be successful, boldness and tenacity will be required.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) You're not likely to feel too comfortable today in the company of domineering or strong-willed individuals, so seek out compatible companions who don't take themselves or life too seriously.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) This can be a very rewarding day for you if you concentrate your efforts on your most meaningful objectives. Ignore unrelated interests that have no bearing upon this goal.

Agriculture Week targeted at city people

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — National Agriculture Week, which ended Saturday, is in step with the arrival of spring, a time when farmers are supposed to forget last year's drought and have good thoughts about the season ahead.

It's also a time when city people are asked to think about their food, where it comes from and to have good thoughts about farmers.

Agriculture Secretary Clayton Yeutter, this year's honorary chairman, called National Agriculture Day (and the week-long observance) a time "to recognize America's agricultural providers for their enduring contribution to the nation and the American people."

National Agriculture Day is always on the first day of spring, which arrived on Monday. Since March 1981, it has been an official national observance created by Congress and presidential proclamation.

Many of the plain facts of U.S. agriculture are repeated each year at this time by farm leaders and politicians from the agricultural heartland. It's an impressive litany, backed up by Agriculture Department statistics and many other government figures.

For example, a new booklet by the American Farm Bureau Federation shows that there are about 2.2 million farms in the United States, spread over more than a billion acres, based on 1987 figures. The value of those farms' production was more than $136 billion.

American consumers spend about 11 percent of their net income on food, the lowest among 22 countries listed. That compares to Canada, the next lowest, at 11 percent; the United Kingdom, 14.5 percent; and Australia, 15.5 percent. In the Soviet Union, food spending is about 25.6 percent of income.

The booklet also shows how farmland prices declined during much of the 1980s, the size of debts, the shrinking of farm assets, the crunch on income.

Among the booklet's features is a listing of significant dates in agricultural history, beginning with 8000 B.C. with the domestication of animals and grains in the Middle East, which was "the birth of agriculture."

In 1493, Columbus brought calves, goats, sheep, pigs, hens, citrus, melons and many kinds of vegetables to the New World. And in 1585, the potato was taken from South America to Spain.

Other events are summarized through the centuries, including the first attempt to spread pesticide by airplane in 1918, and President Woodrow Wilson's decision that year to fix the minimum price of wheat at $2.26 a bushel. (The federal support for 1989 is $2.06 per bushel).

In 1930, the federation's booklet says, six to eight man-hours of labor were required to produce one acre of corn, and three to four man-hours for an acre of wheat. By 1980, the work was down to three hours for corn and 1.25 for wheat.

The booklet's list goes on with benchmarks each year or two through the present. But 1930 may be a year to look at a little more closely — with some attention to the current situation and last year's drought.

The Great Depression was in gear and would worsen before it improved. Herbert Hoover was president, and his secretary of agriculture was a native Missourian and former governor, Arthur M. Hyde.

In a 1931 review of U.S. agriculture, Hyde said "the worst drought ever recorded in this country" hit farmers in 1930, greatly reducing production.

"Wells failed, water for stock was scarce, and in some places sewage disposal became an acute problem," he said. "Hydroelectric plants on large streams did not suffer, but some plants on the smaller streams had to shut down."

Hyde's report also noted that despite a drop in wheat production, the "difficulty is not a sudden emergency, but a cumulative overproduction" of grain. The answer to overproduction, he said, is less production.

"Crops must be balanced as nearly as possible with market demands and offered only in such quantities as can be sold at prices covering the farmers' cost of production plus a profit," he said.

Hyde added: "The final measure of agriculture improvement must be a rise in the average net farm income. There is no other satisfactory criterion."

SCS office has video on windstrips projects

A new video designed to be loaned to farmers who have home recorders has been produced by the USDA Soil Conservation Service. The video is Windstrips — A Simple Way to Reduce Wind Erosion.

Lee McDonald, district conservationist for the SCS at Pampa, said he has a copy for loan.

"We will loan the show to anyone who wants to take it home and preview it," McDonald said. "People can pick it up here at our office, or we can mail it. They can return it in person or by mail."

McDonald said he will probably have to maintain a waiting list for those wanting to see the video.

Windstrip cropping has proven to be a very effective way to reduce wind erosion on sandy and sandy loam soils. The video shows how farmers from South Texas to Comanche to the High Plains to Wisconsin and California use windstrips to protect fragile land and tender crops.

Farmers featured in the show include Sonny Lupton of Lubbock, Coy Franks of Matador and Ron Thuett of Post.

Farmers who grow crops on highly erodible fields have until Dec. 31, 1989 to have a conservation plan approved if they are to maintain USDA benefits. Windstrips are an alternative many farmers are choosing to include in their conservation plans, McDonald said.

WHEAT SAGA CONTINUES

The last hard freeze around March 4 has definitely dealt some wheat a killing blow. There are some fields and/or areas in fields that do not have any green wheat showing. I really think this wheat is gone for good.

There are some other areas that are showing a little green, but it is very weak. This wheat is on its last leg and definitely needs a good rain — if none is received soon, then it is all over with, I think.

On the other hand, there are some good fields of wheat that look surprisingly good considering all of the hard knocks they have received.

In some cases, the difference between dead and alive wheat fields seems to be moisture conditions that can be traced back to date of sowing, method of sowing (type of drills) or method of plowing last summer (sweeps compared to disc plow).

Sometimes one of these cultural practices made the difference in wheat survival at least to this point of the growing season.

However, moisture is desperately needed for all of our ag production.

RESEARCH NEWS REPORT

Field bindweed can be controled in two to three years using a combination of sweep tillage at three week intervals and the herbicides, 2,4-D, Banvel or Tordon during fallow periods in a wheat-sorghum-fallow crop rotation.

That conclusion was based on four years of research by Monty Schoenhals and Dr. Allen Wiese, Texas Agricultural Experiment Station Weed Scientists at the USDA Research Laboratory at Bushland. The experiments were located on a heavily infested field two miles north of Bushland.

Schoenhals announced these findings on Feb. 8 to 800 members of the Weed Science Society of America in Dallas.

The two researchers compared sweep tillage at three week intervals in a no-tillage system where Landmaster was sprayed at monthly intervals to control all weeds including bindweed in a wheat-sorghum-fallow rotation. Untreated check areas were sweep plowed every six weeks during fallow periods.

In the no-tillage system using Landmaster, atrazine was applied to wheat stubble, and Glean was sprayed in April following sorghum harvest. In the sweep system, 2,4-D was sprayed four to five weeks after the last tillage about two times a year when there was enough soil water to cause lush growth of bindweed.

In two additional treatments, the 2,4-D and sweeping was supplemented with either Banvel at two pounds per acre or Tordon at 0.2 pounds per acre sprayed in October during the first fallow period.

Banvel and Tordon were sprayed also in the no-tilage system. Weeds in wheat were sprayed with Glean, and atrazine was sprayed postemergence to sorghum. Bindweed was controlled in sorghum with 2,4-D.

After one 11-month fallow period prior to planting sorghum, bindweed control was 66 percent where 2,4-D and sweep tillage were used, and 100 percent where Banvel or Tordon were sprayed in October.

Control was a little less with the no-tillage systems. After three fallow periods, control was 100 percent when Banvel or Tordon were used with sweep- or no-tillage. Control with sweep tillage and 2,4-D was 78 percent.

In 1986, after one fallow period, sorghum yield was about 1600 pounds per acre for all sweep treatments and 1000 pounds per acre for no-tillage. Untreated areas that were plowed every six weeks produced only 200 pounds per acre.

After three years of fallow and good rains in the spring of 1988, all sweep treatments produced 3000 pounds per acre. No-tillage was better and averaged 3400 pounds per acre, according to Schoenhals.

Bindweed control after one year of fallow prior to wheat planting was 66 percent or less with all treatments. However, after three fallow periods, all treatments eliminated bindweed.

It was a very poor wheat year in 1986 after one year of fallow and the untreated check produced 5 bushels per acre. Control treatments yielded about 9 bushels per acre.

Wheat grown after two years of fallow had much more rain, and the untreated check and the sweep/2,4-D treatment produced 25 bushels per acre. Yield was 30 bushels per acre with both sweep and no-tillage where Tordon or Banvel were used.

According to Schoenhals, bindweed reduced wheat and sorghum yield by competing for soil water. Soil samples to four feet showed that bindweed reduced soil water storage during an 11-month fallow period by about two inches.

"This is enough soil water to produce from 500 to 700 pounds per acre of sorghum," the researcher said.

In dry times, like the fall of 1988, the difference was even greater. Available soil water stored from wheat harvest in June 1988 to December 1988 was zero inch on untreated bindweed and three inches where bindweed was controlled.

Schoenhals summarized by stating bindweed could be controlled in three years with combinations of 2,4-D and sweep tillage at three-week intervals or the new no-tillage system he devised. Control time could be reduced to two years when Banvel or Tordon were sprayed in October of the first fallow period.

He said, "Control measures developed prevented bindweed from competing with wheat and sorghum for soil water. This doubled or tripled yields which easily paid for the cost of treatment."

Mass graves hold victims of Stalin

MOSCOW (AP) — A government commission has concluded that thousands of people buried in a mass grave outside Kiev were killed during Stalin's repressions, not by Nazi soldiers, Tass reported.

The commission's conclusion supports the testimony of elderly witnesses in the nearby village of Bykovnia, who said they saw trucks dripping blood rumbling to the site in the 1930s, before the Nazis occupied the area.

Unofficial estimates say the grave contains 200,000 to 300,000 bodies.

Villagers in Bykovnia broke five decades of silence to accuse Josef Stalin's secret police after the Ukrainian government erected a monument in May 1988 blaming Nazi occupiers for the crime. The villagers in December forced Ukrainian authorities to establish the commission, saying three previous investigations had covered up the truth by blaming Nazi troops.

The report by Tass, the official Soviet news agency, did not mention the earlier investigations.

Viktor Kulik, head of the investigating commission, told Tass that panelists found family names engraved on some objects in the grave.

"Examination of the archives later confirmed that the victims were 'people's enemies' charged in the 1930s with counterrevolutionary and nationalist activity, espionage and conspiracy," Tass said.

"Official confirmation has been given to the version that in the Darnitsa Forest near the village of Bykovnia outside the Ukrainian capital of Kiev are buried victims of the repressions of the 1930s," Tass said.

Western historians estimate 20 million Soviets were killed under Stalin, particularly during the Great Purge of the late 1930s. But Soviet officials ignored the dark side of Stalin for most of the past 50 years.

The examination of Stalin's crimes began briefly under Nikita Khrushchev and was revived in 1987 under President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's policy of glasnost, or openness.

Earlier commissions blamed Nazis for the Bykovnia killings even though villagers insisted the bodies already were there when the Germans occupied Kiev in September 1941. Several villagers told The Associated Press they dug up the graves on orders of the Germans.

A local man, Mikola Lysenko, discovered the bones and skulls in 1987 after grave robbers uncovered them and set out on a personal crusade for the truth.

He located witnesses in Bykovnia and won support from the Ukrainian Writers' Union and the newly formed Memorial Society, which is dedicated to baring the truth of Stalin's crimes.

Lysenko was unavailable for comment today as he does not have a telephone.

Nuclear fusion claim generates hope

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Two scientists say they have produced controlled nuclear fusion through basic chemistry, a claim that has evoked skepticism from other researchers.

But some also expressed hope that a long-sought source of clean, abundant energy may be on the horizon.

Martin Fleischmann of the University of Southampton in England and B. Stanley Pons, chairman of the University of Utah chemistry department, said their electrochemical process has produced a surplus of energy for periods of up to 100 hours.

They cautioned that more research is needed to determine whether the process will work on a large scale.

"What we have done is opened the door of a new research area," Fleischmann said. "Our indications are that the discovery will be relatively easy to make into a usable technology for generating heat and power."

Hoping that will be the case, the University of Utah has applied for patents.

Edward Teller, director emeritus of the Lawrence Livermore Laboratory and "the father of the hydrogen bomb," said he initially was skeptical, feeling that it could never happen, but, "I am extremely happy now because I see a very good chance that I was completely wrong."

Robert Sherman of the Los Alamos National Laboratory, a fusion researcher for 14 years, said: "Based on the sketchy information I have, there's nothing to indicate they've really accomplished anything."

In fusion reactions, the nuclei of two heavy hydrogen atoms are combined to become the nucleus of a helium atom. The process releases a tremendous amount of energy.

Fusion occurs in the sun and in hydrogen bombs. But Pons said the new process can be carried out in simple glass flasks at room temperature.

Heavy water — water containing heavy hydrogen or deuterium — circulates between a negatively charged palladium metal rod and a positively charged platinum cylinder.

Three Mile Island residents still anxious ten years later

By ANITA C. HUSLIN
Associated Press Writer

MIDDLETOWN, Pa. (AP) — The four cooling towers looming above the treetops south of this Pennsylvania town are a constant reminder to residents of the crippled giant in their midst.

Until 10 years ago, vapor billowed from all of the 350-foot-tall, concrete towers at the Three Mile Island power station. Now, plumes rise from just two, the only exterior sign of March 28, 1979 — the day of the nation's worst commercial nuclear accident.

"I never gave one thought about an accident because we were always told that they had backups to backups and that there could never be an accident," recalled Mayor Robert Reid, who was in his second term at the time.

"But when the accident took place, the people didn't know how to deal with it. And the people started to use their imaginations, and their imaginations ran away with them," Reid said. "The first thing that most people probably thought was nuclear ... nuclear bomb ... the plant will blow up just like an atomic bomb."

An atomic explosion wasn't the danger. A combination of errors drained protective cooling water from the plant's Unit 2 reactor, causing half of the radioactive core to melt and releasing some radioactive gases into the atmosphere. For a time, the core threatened to melt through the reactor and spew large amounts of radioactive material into the air.

General Public Utilities Corp., the New Jersey utility that owns the plant, assured residents the released radioactivity posed no serious health threat. Post-accident studies said the most radiation any individual within 50 miles of the plant could have received was about 70 millirem, less than what a person receives over a year from natural background radiation.

But some Middletown residents, who had watched as repeated reassurances from the utility's executives were proved wrong, remain unbelieving. Some have moved away and others say they would leave if they could afford it.

Some people feel their lives have been as irreparably damaged by the accident as was the reactor. Others say they have put the accident behind them.

Dr. James F. Rooney, associate professor of sociology at Penn State University, has surveyed residents to chart changes in feelings about the accident.

In a 1983 study, they indicated nuclear power and control were their third most important concern behind unemployment and war. Two years later, residents had dropped nuclear power to 12th on their list of concerns.

When residents were asked in 1985 to rate the anxiety, anger, depression and physical problems they had experienced since the accident, the results showed their symptoms were two-thirds more prevalent than those of the general population.

Fran Cain, whose home is on the east side of the Susquehanna River near Three Mile Island, says the accident changed her outlook on life.

"I hate it here," she said. "If I hit the lottery I'd walk out tomorrow and leave everything behind."

Her anxiety about possible health effects has not eased, Mrs. Cain said. "We went through an awful lot, and anybody can say don't worry, but I'm very nervous and I worry."

"You can never escape it," she said, gesturing to the cooling towers visible from her home. "You look out the side of my house and it's there. You look out the back and it's there. I try not to think of it because I get very upset. But I can never forget it completely because it stares me in the face every day."

Fear is not part of the picture for John Garnish.

He speaks bitterly about the financial losses he has sustained because he cannot sell his property here and had to sell a home in Florida because he could not afford two houses.

It has been easier for others.

Greg Kupp has the same job he was working the day of the catastrophe: slinging hamburgers, home fries and omelettes and dishing up home-made stews, pies and hot coffee at his family's diner.

"I think the news people blew things out of proportion," said Kupp.

Astronaut resigns for Pentagon post

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Astronaut Frederick "Rick" Hauck, the Navy captain who commanded the first post-Challenger shuttle mission, says he is leaving NASA to work at the Pentagon.

Hauck, a veteran of three shuttle missions, already had announced after the historic Discovery flight last fall that he had made his last space flight, but he did not specify what he would do next.

He announced his resignation from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration late last week.

"My 11 years with NASA have been extremely rewarding," Hauck, 47, said in a statement. "I am looking forward to continuing my career in the Navy and to the new challenges it provides."

Hauck leaves NASA April 3 and will become director of Navy Space Systems on the staff of the chief of naval operations in late May.

After the 1986 Challenger explosion, Hauck worked in Washington as the NASA associate administrator in charge of congressional relations. But he returned to Houston to train for his next shuttle mission.

Hauck commanded the Sept. 29 launch of Discovery, which marked NASA's return to manned space missions. That five-man Discovery crew, all veterans of previous shuttle flights, had been named nearly 1½ years before the actual launch.

Hauck also commanded a 1984 shuttle mission and was a pilot during his first shuttle flight in 1983.

Rivera's explosive style mirrors his off-camera personality

EDITOR'S NOTE — Geraldo Rivera figures he's the most scrutinized person on national TV, and he may be right. He likes to think of himself as an innovator, and he's certainly that. Whatever one thinks of the controversial talk show host, Geraldo has a growing following, capitalizing on an age-old fascination with criminals, deviants and misfits.

By NANCY SHULINS
AP Newsfeatures Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — We come to you today from the stage at Times Square Studios in Manhattan, where we'll be bringing you one of the most provocative pop culture phenomena of our time.

Geraldo Rivera has been called the "P.T. Barnum of talk show hosts" and "the Peck's Bad Boy of television news."

People magazine called him "insufferable." The Washington Post denounced his last special as "teleporn." Los Angeles Times critic Howard Rosenberg says he doesn't believe a thing he sees Geraldo do.

Tell us briefly, Geraldo, in your own words: What is it about you that so affronts so many in your profession?

"I think envy and jealousy plays a part. There's a feeling that I somehow gypped my way to the top. I've gone too far, gotten too big. I've defied all their notions. I should've failed a dozen times by now."

He should have failed, but in the 19 years since his television debut, he has earned more than

'Everything I say, everything I do, is X-rayed nine ways to Sunday.'

150 prizes, including three Emmys and a Peabody, and his popularity with viewers has never flagged.

"The thing about Geraldo is that he's passionate about what he does," says Suzanne Falter-Barns, a free-lance writer in the audience during a recent studio taping of his syndicated daily talk show, Geraldo.

"There's no passion on TV anymore. Everything is canned, processed, fake entertainment. Geraldo's show is kind of fascinatingly morbid."

Not so, says critic Tom Shales of The Washington Post. "He's an emotional cheerleader who tries to sway audiences in a very facile and sleazy way. I call him The Great Panderer because he keeps searching for cheaper, more sordid, more sensational topics. At best he is embarrassing."

Despite the reviews, the Investigative News Group he formed in 1986 with his wife, brother and one employee has grown to 30 people. With Tribune Entertainment, it produces his live specials and his talk show.

The fastest-growing program in syndication, Geraldo jumped 67 percent in the national Nielsen ratings over the past year, capitalizing on an age-old fascination with criminals, deviants and misfits.

Geraldo also is developing a weekly series, The Investigators, and has just announced plans to buy up TV stations with five other prominent Hispanics.

Yet he remains the punch line to an industry joke: Heard about the Geraldo Rivera Home Game? A life-size cardboard cutout of Geraldo and a folding chair.

Geraldo's law degree has proven invaluable. Much of his career has been spent defending himself against charges of distorting the news; of using drugs; of denying his heritage by calling himself "Jerry Rivers" or, conversely, of changing his name to Geraldo Rivera to cash in on ethnic hiring trends.

He pleads innocent to all counts.

"I'm the most scrutinized person on national TV. Everything I say, everything I do, is X-rayed nine ways to Sunday.

"No story is worth a career. Not only is my own honor at stake but it's the knowledge that everything I do is examined."

He's convinced that the fuss concerns style, not substance, and that one day, "some biographer — probably someone not yet born — will show me as a person who brought innovation to television."

The Geraldo style — explosive, confrontational, the antithesis of the detatched professional — mirrors his off-camera personality. Long after the guests have gone home, Geraldo is still "Geraldo," a Hispanic Dudley Do-Right, a real-life Equalizer.

Other men walk the dog. Geraldo "patrols the bowels of Central Park" with a black Labrador named Spike.

"These are not postures," he says. He wishes he could wear a sincerity meter.

"It was always there — the self-assuredness, the cockiness," says Marty Berman, executive producer of Geraldo. They met at New York's WABC-TV, which persuaded Geraldo to trade poverty law for the Eyewitness News.

Berman became his film editor in 1970. "Nobody else wanted to work with him." Not only was he arrogant, Berman says, "he was fearless. He'd walk into a shooting gallery in the Bronx like you'd walk into a coffee shop. He's still very difficult, very demanding. But now he's running a grown-up organization."

C.C. Dyer, a Geraldo producer, is his fourth wife — "fourth and final," Geraldo says. The one-time notorious womanizer has finally removed the sign that had long been a fixture on his bedroom door: "Abandon hope all ye who enter here." For the first time he's wearing a ring.

Geraldo is Puerto Rican and half Jewish, one of five children of Lilly Friedman and Cruz Rivera, cafeteria workers who married over her parents' objections.

He speaks fondly of his mother, who lives in a house he bought her in Florida, and reverentially of his father, who died in 1987.

He grew up in a blue-collar section of Long Island, "a social politician." His compulsion to prove himself is rooted in childhood: "When I fought, I was proving myself to the street kids. When I did well in school, I was proving myself to the smart kids."

He's now a proud father himself, of a 9-year-old son by his third marriage. Gabriel Rivera lives in California with his mother. He and Geraldo spend every other weekend and all summer together.

Geraldo hopes to have another child. He and C.C. live in Manhattan but are house-hunting upstate. They started after a pregnant doctor was murdered at Bellevue Hospital. "I said, this is too much."

Of course, the Geraldo show, with its lineup of neo-Nazis, hookers, and adolescent murderers, isn't exactly a romp in the park.

"Geraldo is good people, but I don't know how long I'll be able to do this," says Alexander Johnson, a thoughtful young producer who's screening hours of kiddie porn for an upcoming show.

Geraldo understands. Too many seamy stories and "the world becomes a place held together with wire hangers, spit and chewing gum. That's not an accurate view of the world. But some of it sticks to you, even after the shower."

He makes no apology for crying on camera, a habit that dates back to his early days at WABC where, less than two years into the job there, he tackled the biggest story of his life. He shed many tears before he was done.

It began with a call from Dr. Michael Wilkins, an acquaintance who had just been fired by Willowbrook State School on Staten Island, then the nation's largest institution for the mentally retarded.

"He had a key. He knew what time the guards changed, when I could get inside. I asked what I would find. He said, 'Children being abused.'"

That night, Wilkins accompanied Geraldo and a cameraman to Willowbrook, where they filmed five minutes inside one of the 30-odd buildings. Then the cameraman went outside and threw up.

"Geraldo said, 'I am not going to give this up. I am going to come back and come back and come back until this is cleaned up,' " Wilkins recalls.

Fifteen years and countless stories later, Willowbrook closed.

Geraldo's reporting on Willowbrook won him the George Foster Peabody Award and catapulted him to the ABC network. He joined the entertainment division, then the staff of 20/20.

In 1985, Roone Arledge pulled a 20/20 segment on Marilyn Monroe's relationship with the Kennedys, and Geraldo threw a tantrum. A less impulsive man might have stopped to consider that he had not yet signed his new contract before publicly mouthing off at the boss.

"I died of massive, mostly self-inflicted wounds," he wrote in the April 1986 issue of Esquire.

His obituary was premature. He soon attempted a comeback as a free-lancer with The Mystery of Al Capone's Vault.

The gangster's vault, opened with much fanfare on live television, came up empty. Mortified, Geraldo went into hiding, setting off on what was to be an epic voyage aboard his 44-foot sloop, the "New Wave."

He came ashore in a hurry after learning that Al Capone's Vault was the highest-rated nationally syndicated show of all time.
