Gemayel expresses his confidence

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lebanese President Amin Gemayel says he is confident his country's problems will be solved, but increasingly frustrated because U.S. policy-makers say the solution is in Syria's hands, not Lebanon's.

Gemayel, on his third visit to Washington in 14 months, was meeting with President Reagan at the White House today. He also scheduled meetings with Vice President George Bush and Secretary of State George P. Shultz, who greeted him upon his arrival Wednesday evening.

Gemayel arrived a short time after Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir left Washington for New York City following a three-day visit that produced a strengthening of U.S.-Israeli military ties and a joint resolve to prevent Syria from extending its control over all of Lebanon.

In a brief arrival statement, Gemayel said he came with "a sense of confidence" that the Geneva talks on Lebanese national reconciliation will be successful in helping "build a new Lebanon responsive to the aspirations and the needs of all its communities."

"Despite the present difficult situation in my country, I am here with a strong sense of hope rather than of uncertainty, of resolve, rather than hesitation, of accomplishment, rather than inertia," Gemayel said.

He called for an early agreement for a withdrawal of all foreign forces from his country and "the implementation of the May 17 accords," referring to the Lebanese-Israeli troop withdrawal agreement.

Acting at the direction of the Geneva negotiators, Gemayel is on a mission to explore new possibilities for getting Syrian, Israeli and Palestinian troops to leave Lebanon. The Geneva talks are in recess during Gemayel's mission.

But U.S. officials say the reality of the situation in Lebanon belies Gemayel's expressions of optimism. Fighting around Beirut on Wednesday was the worst it has been in months, despite a ceasefire, and there are no indications Syria is any more willing to withdraw its forces than it has been previously. The Syrians control up to 60 percent of the country.

In their past meetings here, both Shamir and Reagan reaffirmed their commitment to the May 17 agreement, which provides for an Israeli troop withdrawal. They interpret the agreement as providing that the Israelis don't have to leave until the Syrians agree to also pull out.

The Israeli-Syrian link, however, is contained in a separate side letter — signed by the United States and Israel, but not Lebanon. The agreement itself, which Lebanon signed, does not name Syria. Lebanese officials have in the past insisted that Israel should leave regardless of Syria's actions.

Democrats may revive aid question

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democrats, angered by President Reagan's killing of legislation to tie military aid for El Salvador to its progress on human rights, are vowing to revive the bill when Congress reconvenes in January.

Reagan doomed the bill Wednesday night by withholding his signature as a midnight deadline for signing it passed. Since Congress is not in session, the legislation dies in what is known as a "pocket veto."

In killing the bill, Reagan rejected the advice of his secretary of state, George P. Shultz, who favored signing it to avert a confrontation with Congress and a possible reading of the decision in El Salvador as a slackening U.S. commitment to human rights, administration officials said.

Leading Democrats promptly attacked the veto and said the bill would be resubmitted when Congress returns Jan. 23. Congress has approved $64 million in military aid to El Salvador for the current fiscal year.

"We will not stand by to see U.S. military assistance being poured into a nation that on its own has not demonstrated a will to undertake basic reforms and to end a policy of abuse of the human rights of its own people," said Sen. Claiborne Pell of Rhode Island, ranking Democrat on the Foreign Relations Committee.

Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., charged that Reagan's "ill-advised veto sends a significant and dangerous message to Salvadoran security and military forces: 'U.S. military aid will continue regardless of human rights abuses or involvement in right-wing death squad activities.'"

Dodd authored a 1981 law that required a cutoff of military aid to El Salvador unless the president certifies every six months that the Salvadoran government is making a "concerted" effort to respect human rights, achieving progress on political and land reforms, trying to bring to justice the killers of eight Americans and seeking an end to the civil war.

Although critical of the requirement, the administration has issued four certifications under the law, which expired Sept. 30. The bill vetoed by Reagan on Wednesday would have extended the certification requirement.

The bill was sent to Reagan on Nov. 17 after a virtually unanimous voice vote by the Senate. The House approved the bill Sept. 30.

In announcing the veto, White House spokesman Larry Speakes said the administration remains "firmly committed to the protection of human rights, economic and political reforms, the holding of elections and progress in prosecuting the cases of murdered American citizens in El Salvador."

Speakes said the certification process spelled out in the bill "would not serve to support these endeavors."

Speakes said that even without the law, the administration would provide periodic reports to Congress on the "political, economic and military situation in El Salvador." But he did not say that such reports would specifically incorporate the human rights issue.

He also noted that the recently passed resolution providing stopgap funds for government programs contains a restriction barring the spending of 30 percent of U.S. military aid until a verdict is returned in the case of four American churchwomen allegedly slain by Salvadoran soldiers in December 1980.

According to an agency of El Salvador's Catholic Church, more than 40,000 Salvadoran civilians have been killed since 1979, most at the hands of Salvadoran security forces or related paramilitary groups. During that time, the Salvadoran government has been fighting a leftist insurgency.

The decision to veto the certification bill was the second time in two days Reagan had overruled the State Department, said administration officials who spoke on condition they not be identified. On Tuesday, they said, Reagan rejected the department's recommendation that visas be granted to Tomas Borge, a leader of Nicaragua's leftist government, and Roberto D'Aubuisson, the rightist president of El Salvador's Constituent Assembly.

Rep. Gerry Studds, D-Mass., a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, called Reagan's veto decision "an insult to Congress."

Oil leases sell a little too easily

By DAVID C. SODAMANN
Business-Energy Editor

Oil and gas leases on University Lands sold like hot cakes at an auction Wednesday, but that's not necessarily a good sign. The more than 150 tracts were sold in just over two hours time, largely because of a lack of interest.

"Overall, I'd say this is not one of our better sales," said Laddie F. Long, manager of oil, gas and mineral interests, University Lands. "The total bonus paid was $7,006,200. "That's the lowest bonus we have received since June, 1976. Still,we did do fairly well on our per-acre average, about $205 an acre on average.

At the auction, oil and gas operators bought the right to explore lands belonging to the Univeristy of Texas System. The university holds two million acres scattered throughout the Permian Basin region. Income derived from the lease of the lands — both surface and mineral interests — becomes a part of the Permanent University Fund. Mineral interests are periodically auctioned as the Board For Lease, which overseas the lands, decides. Wednesday's auction was the 72nd. The last auction was conducted in February 1982.

"The results of the sale fluctuated radically," Long said. "The hot areas went very well, the cold areas went not at all or poorly. A lot of our tracts seemed to be going for very near the minimum price."

Long pointed out some tracts sold for very good prices. At the top of the list is a 322.55 acre tract, number 80 on the sales list, located in Pecos County, which went for $2,542 an acre, for a total selling price of $820,000. Bidding on the tract opened at $32,300, the minimum price. Robert B. Ross & Associates, Midland, bought the right to drill the parcel.

"The most indicative thing to me of the whole sale was one-third of our tracts had no bid whatsoever," Long said. "This is a little disturbing.

"In most of our sales we sell very close to 100 percent of the tracts we put up. Not always, but a minimum of 80 to 90 percent of our tracts we nearly always sell. This time we only sold two-thirds of our tracts."

There were no bids offered on all of the unsold third but one, which the Board for Lease withdrew from the sale because there has been a question about the title to the land and the board thought it best to withdraw the tract until the matter is resolved.

The University Lands lease auction has historically reflected activity and attitudes in the oil and gas industry. Auctions net sizable sums when the industry is strong or strengthening; auctions results are poorest when the industry is waning to flat.

"We've always been pretty well able to tell how it's going by the results of our land sales," Long said. "I don't know where we are right now, but we're not at the top that's for sure.

"We've always been pretty good about establishing the trend. When you look back at our sales results, you can tell exactly when the boom years were.

"I would say this was in the doldrums still. But its a good time to drill because drilling prices are down, and a lot of good stable independents are still eager to drill. Things are still suppressed."

Newlyweds caught in web of red tape

By ALAN FRAM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — It was love that drew Christopher and Marcelina Soprenuk into matrimony.

But now that their Mexican honeymoon is over, it might take more temporal forces — like the efforts of three nations and a New Jersey congressman — to get them back together again.

After a week in idyllic Cancun, Soprenuk, a 33-year-old intern, is back in the Garden State, putting in his shifts at Methodist Hospital in Brooklyn, N.Y.

His 30-year-old bride is spending her days at the Yucatan Peninsula resort, hoping that she can be back in this country by the end of the year.

The couple left for Cancun shortly after their Nov. 12 marriage. Soprenuk said Wednesday that his wife, a citizen of the Philippines who has worked as a nurse in this country for 5½ years, was assured by Mexican and American officials that her work visa was the only travel document she needed.

But when the pair tried leaving Mexico Nov. 21, authorities told her she did not have the proper papers to come back to the United States. Soprenuk returned four days later and has been fighting to get her back ever since.

"It's incredible, it really is incredible," Soprenuk said from Emerson, N.J., Wednesday. "I speak to her practically every day, giving her news about what is going on."

With the help of Rep. Robert Torricelli, D-N.J., Soprenuk is trying to speed the processing of needed documents, including clearance by the FBI and the Mexican government and a check by Manila police.

"It could be two or three weeks, I hope," said Lynne Hurwitz, who is in charge of constituent services in Torricelli's Hackensack, N.J., office. "Or it could be longer."

Soprenuk said that to save money, his wife is staying at a $7-a-day hotel, rather than the $80-a-day resort where they stayed during the honeymoon.

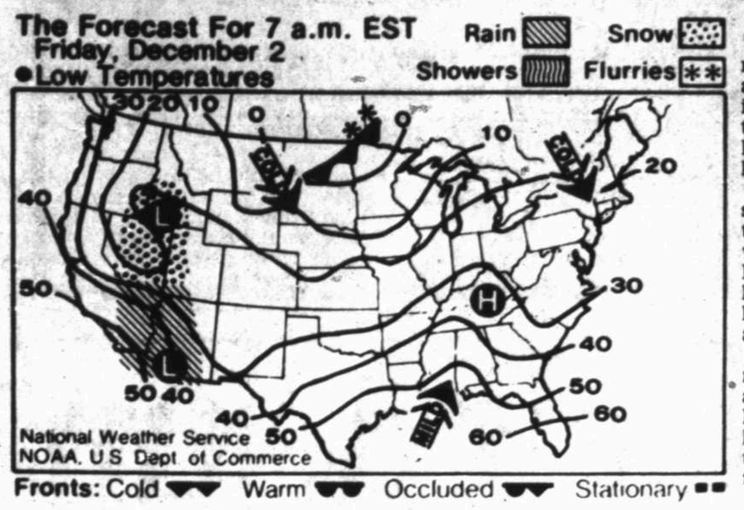
WEATHER SUMMARY



AP Laserphoto Map

Rain is forecast through Friday for the southern Rockies, changing to snow over the central Rockies, according to the National Weather Service. Colder weather for most of the country and milder temperatures in the Southeast also are expected.

Cool, cloudy weekend forecast

Cloudy skies, cool temperatures and a 20 percent chance of light rain will continue through the beginning of the weekend.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, temperatures are expected to drop into the lower 30s tonight, climbing only into the upper 50s Friday.

Winds will be from the southeast at 10-15 mph tonight and Friday.

Wednesday's high of 47 missed the record high of 81, set in 1946, by 34 degrees. The overnight low of 32 was 13 degrees warmer than 1979's record low for that date of 19 degrees.

Druse legal authority assassinated

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A gunman with a silencer-equipped pistol assassinated the top legal authority in Lebanon's Druse community today, pumping several bullets into his head in the victim's west Beirut home, police sources said.

A French soldier was killed by a sniper in a separate shooting near the Green Line dividing Moslem west and Christian east Beirut, and Beirut airport remained closed following a Druse threat to resume heavy shelling unless Lebanon's army cleared out.

The police sources said a preliminary investigation indicated the assassinated Druse official, Sheik Halim Takieddine, a moderate, may have known his assailant and that the sheik's maid was being questioned.

One police official said the maid admitted the man to the house in the Sanayea district of west Beirut "because he was familiar to her. The assailant asked the maid to fix him some coffee, and when she returned to the living room a few minutes later, she found the sheik dead and the man gone."

Takieddine, 60, was the highest legal authority of the secretive Druse faith, an offshoot of Islam. He set the rules for such things as marriages, divorces and wills.

Takieddine was second to the spiritual leader of the Druse, Sheik Mohammed Abu Shakra.

Takieddine was considered a political moderate and had always called for peaceful Moslem-Christian coexistence in this war-torn nation.

He had also asked Druse leaders to show more flexibility when negotiating with Christian Pesident Amin Gemayel's government for an end to the country's almost nine years of civil warfare.

Gemayel was in Washington for meetings today with President Reagan and other U.S. officials to discuss ways of removing foreign troops from his country.

The Progressive Socialist Party of leftist Druse leader Walid Jumblatt listed as its first demand "a final and permanent cease-fire" in the fighting between warring Lebanese factions. A cease-fire was declared Sept. 26, but it has been violated almost daily since, and an outbreak of heavy shelling Wednesday forced the airport and many schools to close.

The French soldier was killed when his patrol was fired on this morning by an unidentified gunman along the "green line" that divides Beirut into predominantly Christian and Moslem sectors.

Lt. Col. Phillipe de Longeaux, a spokesman for the French peacekeeping force, said the patrol came under small arms fire as it drove through the Tayyouneh neighborhood on the southern edge of Beirut.

The patrol returned fire, but de Longeaux did not say whether the assailant was hit.

The French contribute 2,000 soldiers to the 5,800-man multinational peacekeeping force.

Since the first units of the force arrived in September 1982, 246 American, 77 French and two Italian soldiers have been killed, with most of the U.S. and French deaths occurring in twin truck bombings Oct. 23. Britain, the fourth nation contributing to the force, has lost none of its soldiers here.

The Druse party, among its other demands, asked for an end to shelling of Lebanon's central mountains and the Kharroub region just north of Israel's defense line along the Awali River.

The Druse maintain they have shelled Christian areas only after having been fired on, while the Christian Phalangists and Lebanese army claim it is the Druse who start the firing.

The Druse also charged that state-run Beirut radio reports, which continually blame the Druse for the start of exchanges of artillery fire, are incorrect and demanded fair treatment by the government media.

The party also demanded an end to the Phalangist militia checkpoint along the coastal highway from Beirut to Israeli-occupied southern Lebanon, and fair treatment of Druse government employees, especially at Beirut's port.

Several shells were lobbed into the port Monday, and sources say this amounted to a demand from the Druse that Christian officials running the port withdraw threats to fire Druse workers.

A committee made up of representatives of the Lebanese army and the warring factions was to meet today to discuss violations of the Sept. 26 cease-fire and ways to reopen Beirut airport. The ceasefire ended a three-week war between the Druse and Shiite Moslems on one side and the army and militiamen of the right-wing Phalange Party on the other.

In northern Lebanon, a cease-fire generally held today between rebels and loyalists in Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization. The state radio reported that Arafat set several conditions for his bowing to the rebels' demand that he leave Tripoli, the port city 50 miles north of Beirut that is his last base in the Middle East.

The government radio and the independent Beirut newspaper An-Nahar said Arafat wanted his loyalist troops evacuated.

Jewish 'festival of lights' celebration begins in Israel

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Jews worldwide have begun celebrating Hanukkah, the Jewish festival of lights, marking a 2000-year-old victory which led to the founding of a Jewish state in the Holy Land.

The eight-day holiday commemorates the victory of the Jews over their Greek and Syrian rulers in the second century B.C., and the rededication of the Temple in Jerusalem after the war.

In Jerusalem, Ashkenazi Chief Rabbi Avraham Shapiro lit the first candle at sundown Wednesday at the Western Wall, the only visible remnant of the Temple. Ashkenazi Jews trace their heritage to middle and northern Europe, in contrast to Sephardic Jews whose ancestors settled in Spain and Portugal before the Inquisition.

The lighting preceded a swearing-in ceremony for recruits in the army's elite Golani Brigade, one of Israel's modern descendants of Judah the Maccabee's fighters.

According to Jewish tradition, the Jews liberated Jerusalem in 164 B.C. under the leadership of Judah the Maccabee. Their success followed a three-year war to overthrow the Syrians, who tried to convert the country to the Greek religion and put Jews to death for practicing Judaism.

When they had cleaned all the Greek idols out of the Temple, the Jews wanted to relight the eternal flame burning there but found only enough oil to keep it going for one day. Miraculously, the oil lasted for eight days, long enough for more oil to arrive.

Jews have celebrated the liberation and the miracle ever since, in the Festival of Lights — lighting one candle or oil lamp the first night and one more every night until the number reaches eight. The "shamash" (Hebrew for "servant"), a ninth candle, is used to light the others.

The special candlestick, called a "hanukkiyah" and used only for this purpose, is made in hundreds of ornate designs to add splendor to the occasion.

Tire fire continues to provide 'big job'

WINCHESTER, Va. (AP) — A stinking, smoldering fire in a heap of 9 million tires is now a month old, and it has scientists "writing the textbook" on how to extinguish such a blaze while recovering thousands of gallons of oil oozing from the mess.

"I usually determine how big a job it is by how many phones and portable johns they have on hand," said Tom Massey, the on-the-scene coordinator for the federal Environmental Protection Agency, said Wednesday.

There are 16 telephones and four portable toilets here, making it, in Massey's book, "a big job."

Bumper stickers and T-shirts up proclaiming "I Survived the Fire of 83" have popped up in this northern Virginia town since the arson blaze, on 5 acres of private property, broke out Oct. 31, sending black smoke wafting a mile in the air over a 50-mile radius.

The smoke has diminished, as has the crowd of scientists who at one point numbered 240 from 30 separate agencies. A crew of 19 is now on hand, including members of the Coast Guard's Atlantic Strike Team monitoring for pollution.

"I brought in all the king's horses and all the king's men on this one," Massey said.

"Some experts indicated it could burn as long as a year and other experts have advised us it could be out in another two months," said Massey, who called the blaze "the largest tire fire ever."

Two trailers form a command post on the property of Paul Rhinehart, who had been collecting the used tires since 1972 when a local ordinance forbade their burial in the Frederick County landfill. About $1 million from the EPA's "superfund" has been spent so far on ensuring that the fire's discharges do not harm the air or water.

Advice on handling the fire has been scarce.

"We even searched internationally for similar type incidents that we could compare notes with, but unfortunately, nobody turned to page 84 and said 'tire fire, this is what happens," said Massey.

"We are writing the textbook on this one."

Navy personnel brought in a "super-duper" pump which can pull up to 3,000 gallons of water a minute from specially built containment ponds where liquid collects as the tires burn down.

Oil is the other major by-product, and Massey said more than half a million gallons — with a commercial value of 20 to 40 cents a gallon depending on purity — have been saivaged so far.

"All our oil will be recycled and used as a blending agent for heating fuel," said Massey, adding it would be "up to the lawyers" to decide who will profit.

Off-duty members of the county sheriff's department stand watch around the clock along the dirt road leading to the site to keep unauthorized visitors out. A hand-lettered carboard sign reading "Tireville" has been posted nearby.

Braniff representative at work in Midland area

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

A representative from the reorganized Braniff Airlines was in Midland Wednesday afternoon to begin working out a plan for starting service here March 1, according to Aviation Director Victor White.

When Braniff rolled out its new colors Tuesday, the company also unfolded plans for serving several Texas cities, including Midland and Odessa.

Braniff had served Midland Regional Airport since March 15, 1979, when it filed for bankruptcy in May 1982 and ceased operations. It has been struggling to reorganize since then and now is working with Chicago-based Hyatt Corp. to get off the ground.

White said he heard about the renewed Midland service last week from a Dallas newspaper story and contacted Braniff. "They confirmed it was true," he said.

A meeting with representatives of all airlines at Midland Regional Airport had been scheduled for Wednesday and Braniff was invited. Attending was Walter Perry, director of customer services for Braniff, said White.

Purpose of the meeting was to begin negotiations with the airlines on their leases with the city since all expire at the end of December. White said he is working on a study to determine actual costs of running the airport and the leases won't be renegotiated until after that study is completed.

Also appearing at the meeting, he said, was a representative of Continental Airlines, which also is planning to resume service to Midland although no date has been announced.

White said there is a problem with Braniff resuming its Midland service since there is no counter space available at the airport. Braniff's original ticket space was released by the bankruptcy judge and has been taken over by other airlines. Continental's space is tied up now because of that airline's bankruptcy problems and can't be released to other airlines, according to White.

"Their (Continental) representative said they're looking at any option they can to get back in here," said White.

He noted the airport must provide space to a carrier wanting to serve that city. Braniff could sublease from an existing carrier, the city could build additional ticket space or Braniff could pay for construction of an addition to the terminal.

But, White added, the city is not in a financial position to pay for an extension, nor is Braniff.

University Lands leases sell too easily

Some conclusions can be drawn from Wednesday's auction results, Long said. "I'm afraid it tells us one of two things," he said. "One, the economic recovery is not quite as far along as we may have thought it was."

Secondly, Long explained, is that the sales terms may have kept many bidders away.

"The Board for Lease changed the terms of the lease pretty radically this time," Long said. They went from five-year leases to three-year leases. They went from a minimum acceptable bid of $31 an acre to $100 an acre. And they increased the annual rentals and minimum royalty payments considerably. This may have kept quite a few of the local independents away from the sale, Long said.

"I had been told by quite a few people around town that these terms are a little too stiff."

Long said he suspects the Board for Lease will give some thought to reducing the terms of sale at future auctions.

The new lease terms didn't keep the larger operators from bidding, however, Long said.

"The people who were ready and eager to get the acreage and do the drilling while drilling prices are down, I don't think were affected greatly by changes in the lease terms," Long said. "This is mostly the bigger independents and the majors who, of course, if they're ready to do something, the sky's the limit.

"For the smaller independents, three-year leases, $100 an acre minimum, along with the already established one-quarter royalty makes the terms a little difficult to handle. With the resulting lack of competition in the sale, I think we got a bunch of minimum bids awarded on tracts that normally would not have gone for that."

Wednesday's auction was one of the briefest in recent years."It did move very fast," Long said. "The sale went a lot faster than we're used to — mainly because the competition wasn't there. It started at 10 a.m. and it was over by 12:20 p.m. Of course, with that many passes, it really does take off."

Another reason the auction flew by, is the Board for Lease decided to offer fewer tracts Wednesday than it has offered at other auctions.

"We did hold it to about half of what we would normally have put up," Long said.

"The Board for Lease felt like this time, being unsure of the economic conditions and climate out here, that maybe they ought to restrain themselves on this sale and hold it down and only put up tracts more advantageous for the university to sell."

Although Wednesday's auction wasn't anything to brag about, the results didn't subdue Long's optimism.

"I imagine if we had another sale six months to a year from now," he said, "we would see some minor improvement. I think things are slowly improving."

A future sale wasn't discussed, Long said, "but I'm sure it will be as soon as the results of this sale are studied. I'm sure the board will give some consideration to when we should plan on having the next sale. I'm sure within the next six weeks they will make some sort of decision as to whether to delay the next sale, or have another one right away.

"Of course they have the option to call or delay a sale whenever they want to."

Panama trip seen as 'pressure'

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — U.S. officials say special envoy Richard Stone's visit to Panama today is aimed at increasing pressure on Nicaragua's leftist government by getting anti-Sandinista rebel factions to work together.

Administration officials in Washington said Stone, President Reagan's envoy to Central America since last summer, would serve as mediator in meetings with leaders of at least three anti-Sandinista groups. There were indications he might meet today with some of the rebel leaders and try to resolve differences among them.

When he arrived here Wednesday night, Stone said he met earlier in Miami with Costa Rican President Luis Alberto Monge. He declined to answer questions about a possible meeting with Nicaraguan insurgents.

The State Department's only official comment was that Stone planned to be in Panama today for discussions related to Nicaragua.

Adolfo Calero, head of the anti-Sandinista Nicaraguan Democratic Force based in northern Nicaragua, said in an interview he would try to meet with Stone and with members of the Contadora group, whose meeting starts here today.

The group — Mexico, Venezuela, Colombia and Panama — is drawing up a peace plan to be signed Dec. 21 by foreign ministers from Nicaragua, El Salvador, Honduras, Costa Rica and Guatemala.

The 21-point plan's provisions include removal of foreign military advisers from the region and commitments by all countries to not provide bases for rebels attacking other countries.

The officials in Washington said Stone also was expected to meet with Alfonso Robelo, a leader of the Democratic Revolutionary Alliance which operates in southern Nicaragua.

In recent weeks, Nicaragua has lifted some restrictions on press freedom and moved to ease differences with Roman Catholic leaders.

Move over, Jane Fonda! President shares fitness tips

NEW YORK (AP) — From pumping iron in the Secret Service gym to "pumping firewood" at his California ranch, President Reagan is sharing his tips for fitness, which include horseback riding and a hair-raising backwards dive in the White House pool.

The 72-year-old president said he augments these exercises with manual labor which "gives you the right attitude."

The calisthenics and weight lifting he started as therapy after the assassination attempt by John W. Hinckley Jr. in March 1981 have been so effective, "The doctors say I am now in better shape than when I came to the White House," said Reagan in an article titled "How to Stay Fit" written for the Dec. 4 issue of Parade magazine.

He also swims laps in a pool and performs a "back jack" dive that "makes Nancy nervous and gives hives to my agents," but said he misses the body surfing he used to do in the ocean.

He called on Americans to "get out there and enjoy some exercise."

"Over the years, I have learned that one key to exercise is to find something you enjoy," he said. "The other key is to keep the exercise varied."

And if the exercise also can be productive, like putting up a 400-foot fence on the ranch, so much the better, Reagan added.

"It was tiring, heavy work, but the exertion felt good," he said. "It would do a world of good for more people in Washington to do that sort of manual labor now and then. It gives you the right attitude."

Reagan said he also goes for variety in his gym work, doing different exercises on alternate days and increasing the amounts of the weights instead of the time spent. He said he watches television now while working out on a treadmill.

"I'm also thinking about a trampoline," said Reaga. "So if you go by the White House and see someone going up and down in the second-floor window, that's me."

He goes horseback riding daily with his wife, but said, "The trouble with riding now is that with all the agents and comunications people that have to follow me, a romantic ride with Nancy turns into a big stampede."

Reagan said he also watches his diet — "the key here is moderation" — and only occasionally indulges in favorites like macaroni and cheese, lasagna or the White House Thursday lunch special, a Mexican meal.

Hikers threatened by dope growers in California

EUREKA, Calif. (AP) — Hikers and horseback riders in the Northern California wilderness have been threatened by marijuana growers onto whose plantations they have strayed, and at least 12 murders in three years have been linked to pot cultivation, a state official says.

Attorney General John Van de Kamp told a legislative hearing earlier this week that growers, often on federal land, are so protective of their crops that they guard their territory with vicious guard dogs, electric fences, pungi sticks and other booby traps.

The violence "has become a way of life" in the Northern California counties where an estimated $1 billion of potent sinsemilla marijuana is grown each year, Van de Kamp said.

He was reporting to the Senate Judiciary Committee on an informal survey his office made in the 14 counties that participated in the 1983 Campaign Against Marijuana Planting.

The attorney general told the committee he hopes to triple the concentrated federal-state-local anti-cultivation program next year and is lobbying for $3.6 million in federal funds.

He said the survey found that an estimated 80 percent of the marijuana growers are armed during the summer growing season and nearly all carry guns at fall harvest time.

"Citizens who happen upon marijuana gardens are often threatened by growers, and assaults among growers themselves are increasing," he said.

Humboldt County District Attorney Terry Farmer said the high profits have drawn a big-league, violence-prone grower to the area.

"Commercial marijuana cultivation has brought a new class of outlaw: One who demonstrates little respect for public or private property rights, one who oft-times trespasses on remote forest and ranch lands and then uses booby traps, dogs and automatic weapons to protect his illicit crops," Farmer said.

Van de Kamp said a Humboldt County sheriff's deputy who was hunting was confronted by growers "carrying automatic weapons who warned him to stay out of the area."

In Santa Cruz County, the sheriff received 20 reports "from hikers and horseback riders who had been threatened by growers," Van de Kamp said. U.S. Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management employees have also been threatened on public land, he said.

Agents who raided pot plantations during the CAMP program confiscated more than 80 guns and 20 booby traps, he said.

The CAMP program netted about 64,000 plants worth an estimated $130 million, perhaps 10 percent of the state's 1983 harvest.

Van de Kamp told reporters before the hearing that the $1.6 million CAMP program in 1983 had only put a "dent" in California's marijuana cultivation.

"It is only a beginning," Van de Kamp said. "We did not dream we would eradicate all the marijuana in the state this year."

He said he hoped to triple the size of the program to $3.6 million in 1984, start it earlier in the marijuana growing season, remain in the field later in the year, and triple the number of raiding teams from four to 12.

More suspects sought in Heineken kidnapping

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) — Police hunted today for three more suspects in the kidnapping of millionaire brewer Alfred Heineken and his chauffeur after freeing the two men and arresting 24 people — all related to each other — in simultaneous raids.

A 25th suspect was arrested at Schiphol airport near Amsterdam after arriving on a flight from London late Wednesday night, authorities said.

Police refused to identify any of the suspects, in line with Dutch practice, but said at least 24 of them were related by blood or marriage.

The first 24 arrests came Wednesday in a coordinated pre-dawn sweep of homes in Amsterdam and two other cities. Police also recovered several million dollars of ransom money.

Heineken, 60, and his longtime chauffeur Ab Doderer, 57, were found by a police search party in a secret room concealed behind a false wall in a portside warehouse. The two were unharmed but manacled with chains to the walls of separate concrete cells.

After an on-the-spot examination by a physician, the two were driven to Heineken's seaside villa south of Amsterdam for a reunion with their families. Doderer has worked for Heineken for 40 years.

They were kidnapped by five gun-wielding assailants on the evening of Nov. 9 as they left Heineken's Amsterdam office.

A ransom, reportedly in the range of $10 million to $11.6 million, was paid Monday. It is reputed to be the largest in Dutch crime history.

On Wednesday police raided sites in Amsterdam, the suburban village of Zwanenburg and the port city of Den Helder, picking up 24 suspects including three who are believed to be ringleaders in the plot.

The climax of one of the nation's biggest dragnets came when 10 policemen searched the warehouse, which had been under surveillance for several days because of an anonymous tip, and discovered a false rear wall.

Inspector Geert van Beek, the leader of the search team, was tapping on the floor-to-ceiling segments of hardboard when one gave a little, revealing a vertical separation at headheight, police spokesman Klaas Wilting said.

The secret door, whose hinges had been placed on the other side, was not locked and opened easily, revealing the prison where Heineken and Doderer, clad in pyjamas, were being held.

Using metal cutters, police cut the chains that had bound the two to their cell walls for three weeks.

Vatican releases statement on sex

VATICAN CITY (AP) — The Vatican today issued a major statement on sex which calls sexual relations outside marriage a "grave disorder" and urges court control of mass media to curb "permissiveness and pornography."

The Holy See also repeated its stand that parents remain primarily responsible for sex education and praised virginity for rendering "the heart more free to love God."

The teachings are contained in a document called "Educational Guidance in Human Love." It is the product of a study initiated by Pope John Paul II and conducted by the Sacred Congregation for Catholic Education.

The 36-page manual is designed for use as an outline for sex education and guidance for the world's more than 790 million Roman Catholics.

Chinese pilot honored for defection

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — A Chinese navy pilot, who said he ate wild plants to survive as a child in the 1950s, today received a reward of $1.3 million in gold for defecting to Taiwan in his MiG-17 last month.

Wang Xuecheng, 28, also was commissioned a major in the Nationalist Chinese air force at a ceremony during which he renounced his membership in the Chinese Communist Party.

Wang flew his jet fighter to Taiwan, the seat of the rival Nationalist Chinese government, from a Chinese military air base on Zhoushan island, 360 miles northwest of Taiwan on Nov. 14.

Colombian account missing money

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — More than $13 million has disappeared from a bank account kept by the Colombian government in London, and Colombia now says "international gangsters" are to blame.

Finance minister Edgar Gutierrez says the missing money, $13.5 million, was transferred from Colombia's bank account at the London branch of Chase Manhattan Bank of New York on the strength of a phony telex authorization.

The money was withdrawn from the account in May, but the loss was not announced by the government until mid-November.

Sudan to perform public amputation

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — The government will carry out the first public hand amputation of a convicted thief on Dec. 9 under recently imposed Moslem law, the official Sudan News Agency reported today.

Quoting Internal Affairs Minister Ahmed Abdul-Rahman Mohammed, the agency said preparations for the amputation of the thief's right hand at the wrist have been completed.

Missile meetings continue

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — U.S. and Soviet negotiators met today at the Soviet compound to continue their 17-month effort to reduce long-range nuclear weapons — the only remaining forum for superpower talks on nuclear arms.

The meeting between Soviet Ambassador Viktor P. Karpov and chief U.S. negotiator Edward L. Rowny began at 11 a.m. It is the second session of the Strategic Arms Reduction Talks, known as START, since the Soviet Union walked out of parallel medium-range missiles talks Nov. 23, suspending those two-year-old negotiations on nuclear forces in Europe.

However, speculation has diminished that the Soviets might also break off the START talks on long-range weapons before an expected recess next week.

After a three-hour session Tuesday, Karpov said the talks would go on. But he added, "There is no progress up to now and as I have stated many times, the position of the American side is not for agreement."

Moscow also has continued to criticize the stationing of new U.S. medium-range missiles in Western Europe, saying the deployment alters the East-West strategic "balance."

Soviet Ambassador to Italy Nikolai Lunkov said in a television interview Wednesday in Rome that the arrival of new U.S. cruise and Pershing 2 missiles in Europe has made resumption of the medium-range talks "unrealistic and impossible."

"The start of their deployment has in fact created a new strategic and military reality, which we cannot fail to take into account," the diplomat said.

The statement was the latest in a Soviet propaganda offensive which includes letters from Soviet President Yuri V. Andropov warning the leaders of Britain, West Germany and Italy against accepting the new missiles.

The Soviets walked out of the medium-range missile talks after NATO began deploying the first of 572 cruise and Pershing 2 missiles slated for five European countries. The walk-out came as the West German Parliament approved deployment of the missiles on German soil.

North Atlantic Treaty Organization nations said they would start deploying the new missiles this month if no agreement was reached in Geneva.

Police find surprise in abandoned motorhome

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Police found a surprise when they were called to move a motorhome that was blocking a driveway.

Inside, among the usual furnishings and appliances, were nine large bales of marijuana and 10 two-ounce bags of cocaine.

A resident called Metropolitan Police early Wednesday, complaining he could not move his car out of the driveway because the motorhome was in the way.

Two officers arrived and found all doors locked, but saw the keys in the ignition of the recreational vehicle. After several tries, they managed to retrieve the keys and open the motorhome.

While looking for something that would indicate who owns the motorhome, one of the officers tripped over a bale of the marijuana. A further search uncovered a total of nine bales, each weighing between 25 and 35 pounds each.

Civil Rights Commission recreated nation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights is back on the books after a one-day lapse, but the Justice Department says the new panel never should have been created, independent as it is from the three branches of government.

The commission, which so far has only one of the eight members provided by law, was recreated Wednesday when President Reagan signed a compromise bill that dilutes his power over the body he once sought to control and — when that failed — tried to abolish.

The original body, created 26 years ago during the Eisenhower administration, expired Tuesday as Reagan waited until virtually the last moment to sign the legislation establishing a new commission that may prove difficult for anyone to control.

Reagan appointed the original commission's last chairman, Clarence M. Pendleton Jr., to serve on the reconstituted panel and said outgoing staff director Linda Chavez should resume her position, although her appointment is subject to concurrence by the full commission.

"ALL SEEM to agree that the commission's best and most productive years were its earlier ones," Reagan said in a written statement issued after he signed the bill.

In an indirect reference to the battle he fought with Congress for control of the commission, Reagan said, "The bill I have signed today is, of course, a product of negotiation and compromise."

Although he said he was "pleased that the commission has been recreated," Reagan attached to his own brief statement another by the Justice Department arguing that the bill does not put the commission "clearly within any of the three branches of government created by the United States Constitution."

"Agencies which are inconsistent with the tripartite system of government...should not be created," the department statement said. "Equally unacceptable are proposals which impermissibly dilute the powers of the president to appoint and remove officers of the United States."

Reagan, frustrated by the Senate's refusal to confirm his choices for commission membership, provoked Congress last month by firing three Democratic members of the six-member panel. That left it without a quorum and legally powerless to meet. The firings infuriated members of the House and Senate alike who accused Reagan of trying to thwart congressional will.

TO HEAD OFF a move that would have established the commission as an arm of Congress, Reagan agreed to a compromise that expands the commission to eight members, who will serve staggered, six-year terms. But the president, who previously had named all members of the panel, now may appoint only four. The speaker of the House and president pro tempore of the Senate each will name two.

Reagan also was forced to surrender his authority to fire any commissioners, except for malfeasance or neglect of duty.

The 218 career employees of the commission, which for a quarter century has prodded the nation to keep its promises to victims of discrimination, kept their offices open Wednesday to distribute a "final" report and await Reagan's action, which had been expected since his approval of the compromise.

In reviewing the course of civil rights during the commission's history, the panel said, "Most of the legislation necessary to guarantee civil rights to women, to the nation's racial, ethnic and religious minorities and to its older and handicapped persons has already been enacted," with the notable exception of the Equal Rights Amendment.

But it called for continued vigilance by the federal government, saying the consequences of the government's failure to enforce the Constitution and civil rights laws after the Civil War "continue to haunt this country today."

WHEN THE PANEL expired, it consisted of Pendleton and Vice Chairwoman Mary Louise Smith, both Reagan appointees; Blandina Cardenas Ramirez, Mary Frances Berry and Rabbi Murray Saltzman, the three Reagan sought to fire; and Jill Ruckelshaus.

The commissioners Reagan sought to fire were temporarily reinstated by a federal court order after Ms. Berry and Ms. Ramirez challenged the president's authority to dismiss them. But the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia threw out the case Wednesday, saying the death of the commission made the issue moot.

Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., said when the compromise was struck that Reagan would reappoint Pendleton and Mrs. Smith and would name John Bunzel and Maurice Abram, two of the nominees who were unable to win confirmation. Congressional leaders, Biden said, will reappoint Ms. Berry, Ms. Ramirez and Mrs. Ruckelshaus.

Jewel courier robbed

NEW YORK (AP) — A courier carrying $600,000 worth of jewels for his brother's business was forced into a van, beaten, and robbed of his cargo at LaGuardia Airport on Wednesday night, police said.

Jacob Binson, 29, a courier for Binson Manufacturing Co. of Manhattan, had flown from Boston into LaGuardia on Eastern Airlines and was walking to his car in when two unidentified men, one brandishing a gun, ordered him into a yellow van, said police spokesman Officer Anthony LaGrutta.

Binson was told to be quiet and then was beaten about the head and chest with the gun and a nightstick before being relieved of an attache case full of jewels and $10,000 in cash from his pocket, LaGrutta said.

He said the case contained gold chains, 150 loose diamonds and emeralds, and 400 gold earrings.

Binson was shoved from the van near an airport motel after the robbery, said LaGrutta. He was treated and released at a local hospital.

People fix state's mistake

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — A state welfare official says she finds it "touching" that more than 1,600 people have sent back food stamp overpayments to the state even though they weren't required to.

About 11,000 welfare recipients around Oregon got an unexpected bonus in October when a computer error caused them to be overpaid. Some people got up to $80 in additional benefits, officials said.

But because the mistake was made by the state, the state could not force anyone to return the extra amounts, said Carol Wisner, spokeswoman for the state Adult and Family Services Division.

Even so, Ms. Wisner said that as of this week, about 1,640 people had sent the overpayments back to the state.

Motor burns

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fire trucks were called to the White House for the second day in a row after a kitchen motor overheated in the basement.

The fire burned in an electric ventilator motor that had been installed to replace one that sent smoke into the White House mess on Tuesday, fire officials said.

THE BETTER HALF

"A hug . . . the strongest pain reliever you can get without a prescription!"

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Friday, December 2, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: French painter Charles Seurat, circus executive Charles Ringling and soprano Maria Callas were born on this date. Also sharing your birthday: Gen. Alexander M. Haig Jr., tennis' Tracy Austin, publisher Randolph Hearst and actress Julie Harris. Better business trends and greater financial support are featured in the months ahead. You find that a romance is not as serious as you thought. Postpone making any major personal decisions. Your heart may not tell you the same thing your head does! Be cautious about investments and legal maneuvers. Experts help you stay on the right track. Family ties grow stronger. Confide in older person.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The work load is heavier than usual today. Your skill at delegating responsibility helps you get everything done. Dress your best. A raise or promotion is a real possibility.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The emphasis today is on remaining calm and collected. Domestic matters try your patience. Postpone signing a contract or taking a business trip until more information is available.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A practical approach will help you solve a difficult work or financial problem. Creative ventures bring wonderful results. Be more determined in romance and you will find the right partner.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your energy impresses someone at the top. Back your enthusiasm with hard work and you are on your way to riches. Take more initiative in your personal relationships.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): An excellent day for those involved in the arts. Make new contacts and get the facts. Your old-fashioned values serve you well in both romance and business. A newcomer trusts you implicitly.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Doing your work in a professional manner will impress authority figures. Small social gatherings have greater appeal than large ones this weekend. Be more understanding of someone who seems driven.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A romance with a newcomer sets your spirits soaring. You benefit from acquiring items already used by others. Find new outlets for your organizational skills. Answer letters promptly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A money-making idea begins to take shape. A job hunt proves very rewarding. Catch up on your shopping or gift wrapping this evening. Speak from the heart in romance.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Fresh financial gains are possible. Catch up on routine tasks. You develop new rapport with a difficult member of the opposite sex. Romance could be somewhat rocky.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A letter or phone call buoys your spirits. A creative project or entertainment plan begins to take shape. Enjoy the social scene this evening, but do not expect too much from romance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Steer clear of any get-rich-quick schemes. You get what you want in a new relationship. Romance ignites. A banner day for your career aims or business interests.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Make inquiries regarding a debt payment. A financial burden eases. New faces and places add glamour to your social life.

Movie looks at hooker

By FRED ROTHENBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — In tonight's CBS movie, "An Uncommon Love," a marine biology professor falls in love with a student who does more in bed than curl up with a good textbook.

"You're a prostitute?" says the prof, played by Barry Bostwick, in the heat of revelation. She nods affirmatively. "You have sex with men?" She answers yes. "Every day?" She squirms a bit. "Four days a week," she says.

Despite the short workweek, this working girl's life is filled with mental torment and excessive violence. That's what comes with the job for Cynthia Malcolm (Kathryn Harrold), a hooker with a brain who's torn between respectability by day and vulnerability by night.

Television has come a semi-long way from the days when it stripped every hooker and found a heart of gold. Earlier this season, NBC had Veronica Hamel in "Sessions," offering a well-intentioned but lifeless psychological profile of a top-dollar prostitute.

"An Uncommon Love," although flawed by standard dialogue, is a sometimes interesting and insightful movie that examines whether there is life after punch-the-clock sex. "It's like mopping the floor," says Cynthia, protesting that her job doesn't impede a normal relationship.

Of course, that isn't the case. TV won't allow a hooker to go away unscarred mentally or socially. So the relationship between Steve and Cynthia is jeopardized by external pressures — his own negative reactions to her work and those of his friends and university colleagues.

One friend doesn't want her at his wedding. The dean of the junior college suggests that Steve's affair could endanger his chances for the vacant department chairman's position. Even Steve's ex-wife criticizes him for letting their young daughter meet Cynthia.

But the strongest obstacles come from Cynthia herself. Unlike other Hollywood hookers, she owns a heart of steel, her defense against dealing with her present and past, which included nine years as a prostitute and an adolescence ravaged by her father who raped her and paid her a dollar for it.

The emotional approaches and avoidances inherent to the relationship between Cynthia and Steve are what helps elevate "An Uncommon Love" beyond the networks' standard sappy, fluffy love story. The script was written by Seth Freeman, former producer-writer on "Lou Grant."

Opening lead: Jack of ♠.

There are many ways to handle the diamond suit in today's hand. How you tackle the suit cannot be determined until you know more about the hand.

After North stretched to jump raise spades, South's hand was worth a full ace more than a minimum opening bid. Therefore South launched into Blackwood and contracted for a small slam when he discovered that his side wasn't missing two.

West's club opening lead attacked declarer's soft spot. The jack was covered by the queen and king and won by the ace. A study of the hand showed that, if trumps were 3-1, it would not help declarer to play for a 3-3 diamond split, even if he took a winning finesse — a defender would ruff the fourth diamond while declarer still had a club loser. But before declarer could tackle diamonds, he would have to find out which defender, if any, held the third trump.

Declarer cashed the king-ace of trumps. Had West showed out on the second round of trumps, only one diamond holding would allow the contract to succeed — East would have to hold four low diamonds and West Q-9 doubleton.

When West showed up with the long trump, declarer could make his slam only if East held precisely the queen doubleton of diamonds. Declarer finessed the ten of diamonds and cashed the king. He crossed to the board with the ace of hearts to cash the ace-jack of diamonds, discarding two clubs from his hand as West followed helplessly. On the fifth diamond, declarer discarded his last club, and the defenders could get no more than one trump trick.

Note that declarer must end up in dummy after the second trump trick. If he does not, he is an entry short to set up and run the diamonds.

Whale's second calf gives scientists hope

BOSTON (AP) — A 45-ton right whale that has churned her way up and down the East Coast brought a second calf north with her this fall, giving scientists new hope for the future of the breed.

Scott Kraus, the head of a New England Aquarium research team that has studied the whales for the past three years, said earlier this week it is the first time scientists have seen a second calf born to a right whale.

The species, so called "because they were the right whales to kill," is the most endangered of the large whales, Kraus said in an interview before presenting a paper on the group's findings at the Fifth Biennial Conference on the Biology of Marine Mammals.

"You can catch up to them in a rowboat," he said. "They're slow, they float when dead and they yielded the most amount of oil and baleen, which was most important for the corset industry."

Hunting decimated the population of right whales in the North Atlantic, Kraus said, and there are only about 200 of the animals left, making any birth important.

"It's significant and encouraging that one of the known females has given birth to two calves," he said.

Scientists estimate only four or five right whales are born in the North Atlantic each year. There are more right whales in the Southern Hemisphere, but the animals spend the summer so far offshore that scientists cannot study them.

Unlike gray whales, which were close to extinction in the North Pacific but have bounced back to a population of 16,000, right whales off the East Coast of the United States have not done well, Kraus said.

Part of the reason may be that the shiny black mammals are friendly and roam near shore. "As a result, they may be the most vulnerable to human intervention and habitat alteration," Kraus said.

Scientists aren't sure how and when right whales mate, how long the cows are pregnant, or when the whales reach maturity.

So it meant a leap in knowledge when they spotted the whale, which the scientists dubbed Fermata, swimming with a second calf this summer off the Massachusetts coast.

"It suggests at least a hint of a birthing interval," Kraus said.

The last time the female had been seen with a newborn calf was in 1979, off the coast of Jekyll Island, Ga. Four months before that she was seen alone off the Maine coast.

"It's the first evidence we have of a long-distance migration," Kraus said. "...It suggests that this population goes somewhere along the south Atlantic U.S. coast to breed or at least give birth."

Kraus' team works out of Lubec, Maine, the easternmost point of the United States, and hopes to begin following Fermata and other right whales farther south. The research is financed by the World Wildlife Fund and the National Marine Fisheries Service.

The team hopes determine what factors are necessary for the survival of the rotund species. Full-grown right whales are about 50 feet long and weigh about a ton per foot.

Commuters call 'Sharon A. Ride'

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Commuters now have a friendly computer named Sharon to call when they're trying to link up with a carpool.

To come up with the name for the electronic wizard that does the matching within seconds over the telephone, free of charge, the Pima Association of Governments Ride-Share Program ran a contest.

Entries included Robert Matchum, Johnny Unite-us, the Lone Arranger and R-U-1-2.

But the winner was Sharon, or more formally, "Sharon A. Ride."

You can rest assured it's the best!

Action too late

We're as glad as anyone in West Texas that Congress has released millions of bushels of government-owned corn to help offset ravages of one of the worst droughts experienced in recent years. Unfortunately, we recognize the absurdity of the situation, just as cattlemen throughout this region do. The cavalry's just getting to the top of the hill in time to see the Indians slaughter the settlers.

This drought-relief debacle is vivid confirmation to the ranchers in this area that, just as they feared, the wheels of Congress are similar to the wheels of justice: slow, if they turn at all.

It isn't as though the drought in West Texas and other parts of the nation suddenly appeared. In fact, there are parts of West Texas in which extremely dry conditions have plagued ranchers for close to four years. The drought has taken its toll — in cattle herds that were sold off earlier this fall because feeding became too expensive a proposition and in ranchers who called it quits because this drought was just a little too much.

That's tragic. A lot of ranchers were looking to the federal government as their saving grace. For some, the government's help still will be the difference; for a lot of others it's too late.

This should serve as a lesson. If the machinations of the federal government are so slow that it cannot be depended on to respond to an obvious need in one segment of the population, there's room for doubt about whether it could respond if the entire population were threatened.

Actually that's the situation this time around because the effects of this drought will be felt throughout the nation eventually. It's impossible to experience such a widespread and long-term drought without it being felt. And the saddest part is much of it could have been avoided had the government responded quickly.

Certainly the government should take steps to ensure that in similar situations in the future the need for help is recognized as soon as possible and action is forthcoming in a matter of days, not months as it was in this case. It can mean the difference between ranching and not ranching for some people — and our ranch heritage is one thing we don't want to watch die.

'Chicken' on the sea

It's at least unsettling if not downright chilling to learn that a Soviet naval frigate collided with an American destroyer in the northern Arabian Sea when the Russian ship steered too close to the U.S. carrier Ranger.

It was the first time in years that Soviet and U.S. warships have come too near to a potentially serious incident, but it may not be the last. Pentagon officials say Soviet ships have stepped up such close approaches and apparent harassment of U.S. vessels.

Although Russian intelligence ships routinely have shadowed American carriers and their escort ships, the buildup of the Soviet and U.S. fleets in the Indian Ocean has created a greater likelihood of incidents. The American destroyer had sought to intercept the Soviet frigate's course near the Ranger when the two ships grazed hulls, causing minor damage to the destroyer but no injuries.

It's unlikely that such incidents would cause a shooting war between the superpowers. But in the present Cold War atmosphere even pinpricks can escalate into something serious.

The surest way to avoid that occurring is to eliminate encounters that resemble nothing so much as teenagers playing "chicken."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Reagan urged to take war stance

WASHINGTON — Behind closed doors, President Reagan's advisers are bitterly divided over U.S. policy toward the 3-year-old war between Iraq and Iran. Advocates are calling for a "tilt" toward one side or the other.

Jack Anderson

This would pull the administration away from its declared policy of neutrality in the Persian Gulf conflict — a conflagration that could ignite the oil fields that pump 8 million barrels a day.

At this time, the pro-Iraq forces in the State Department and the Pentagon may be winning the secret debate. But there is strong opposition on Capitol Hill and within the administration to any deviation from the official policy of "a plague on both your houses."

Those who favor a tilt toward Iraq have the heat of emotion on their side. Long-standing anti-Iranian sentiment has been fanned to a white heat by the strong suspicion that Ayatollah Khomeini was behind the slaughter of American Marines in Beirut. No less than President Reagan has privately blamed the massacre on the Iranian Shiite Moslems supported by the ayatollah.

The president's more militant advisers, such as Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, for one, favor a pro-Iraq policy as retaliation for the Beirut bombing.

But the neutralists and pragmatists argue that emotion is a poor guide for national policy, and insist that Iran's strategic importance far outweighs revulsion over its revolutionary leadership and the desire for revenge. They also point out that Iraq's President Saddam Hussein is no better than Khomeini.

In a sense, a slight tilt toward Iraq is already in effect. As far back as the spring of 1982, with scant warning, the State Department removed Iraq from the list of nations that support international terrorism. This facilitated sales to Iraq by U.S. suppliers.

Last December, the Iraqis were allowed to buy 60 Hughes helicopters without so much as an export license or a State Department review. Since then, intelligence reports indicate that the choppers may have been modified for military use.

Although the helicopter sale occurred nine months before the Beirut airport bombing, there was no apparent cause-and-effect connection between the two events. It's not that the Iranians are immune to the virus of revenge, a source explained to my associate Lucette Lagnado, but simply that there were plenty of other reasons for Iranian terrorists to strike at the U.S. presence in Lebanon.

One form the pro-Iraq tilt could take, short of open support, is a cutoff of arms and spare parts to Iran. Many spare parts — necessary for Iran's huge stock of U.S. weapons dating back to the shah's regime — are sold to Tehran by such U.S. allies as Britain and West Germany. The Iranians have also been able to buy parts on the black market, and even some from American companies while the administration looks the other way.

Members of Congress are understandably leery of being considered pro-Iran, but Sen. Alan Dixon, D-Ill., has prepared an amendment to the Export Administration Act that would put Iraq and Iran on the list of terrorist-supporting countries.

The pro-Iraq tilters in the State Department are so desperate to block Dixon's amendment that they have attempted to clean up Hussein's image. A cable from U.S. diplomats in Baghdad — which surfaced on the Hill — reported an interview in which Hussein claimed to have ended his support for Palestinian terrorists.

But when I checked into it, I found that the cable had omitted Hussein's reason for ending his support: "because of Iraq's financial situation," not from any change of heart.

EYE ON THE ECONOMY: Several times a year the Federal Reserve Board invites academic experts, including its critics, into the Fed's august chambers for a critique of its performance. At one such off-the-record meeting recently, a consensus was reached on two points: The international debt crisis is still a serious threat to the world economy, and the Fed should not resume the policy of rapid money growth it abandoned last August. Fed Chairman Paul Volcker said little all day, but did reveal at one point that he's worried about recent wage settlements he sees as inflationary.

— Increasing reliance on robots is supposed to usher in the "Second Industrial Revolution" — and, like the first one nearly 200 years ago, it will be painful for many human workers. "Large-scale labor dislocations could occur in several geographic areas," a House Small Business Committee working paper notes. "New skills and knowledge requirements would arise, working times could be revised, new relations between work and income could evolve .... Such strains would complicate the solutions to the persistent problems ... of social and business equity."

— Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., tried to cut the federal deficit by as much as $150 billion through a combination of tax increases and benefit reductions. Why did he fail? While any tax increase is difficult in an election year, I'm told the real reason was that Dole's plan would have given the president authority to cut Social Security cost-of-living benefits. Once Congress put the onus on the White House for cutting benefits, the plan was doomed. President Reagan's political advisers are already worried enough about his image as a millionaire who is insensitive to the plight of the poor.

Only the computer blinked!

I have to apologize for being so late with my think piece about the TV film "The Day After," but I've been thinking so much about it I haven't had time to do anything else.

Art Buchwald

ABC, which produced the picture, went out of its way not to take sides as to who was responsible for trashing Lawrence, Kansas. They spent $7 million showing us what could happen after an area was mushroomed, but not one buck on what caused the holocaust in the first place.

I think they owed us just one scene between a few survivors discussing the why of it all.

The scene could have taken place between Jason Robards, who played the role of a doctor, and the last political science professor alive at the University of Kansas.

The men, covered from head to foot in atomic ash, are sitting on a pile of rubble that was once a nursery school.

"What the hell do you think happened?" Jason Robards asks the political science professor.

"Nobody blinked," the professor replies.

"What does that mean?"

"Well, it all goes back to the Cuban missile crisis. Remember when Dean Rusk said the Soviets and the U.S. came eyeball to eyeball, and the Russians blinked first? Ever since then our foreign policy was based on the premise that the Soviets would always blink before we did."

Robards says, "I guess we miscalculated."

The professor, looking over the desolation, says, "That would be a fair statement. What the people in Washington refused to take into account was the Soviets considered the missile crisis the biggest defeat they suffered since World War II. They booted out Khrushchev and vowed they would never blink again."

"Do you want an orange?"

"No, for some reason I feel nauseated. In order not to blink, the Soviets started an unprecedented nuclear arms buildup. Soon, the military on both sides insisted the other side had nuclear superiority, so the arms race was on. The thinking in Washington and Moscow was the more deterrents they had, the less chance there was of someone starting a war."

"Why didn't it work?" Jason says.

"It worked for a while. But then the arms talks came, and both sides engaged in playing the numbers game. We promised not to put any cruise and Pershing missiles in Europe if the Soviets reduced the SS-20s. The Soviets said we had to include British and French missiles in the talks, and we refused. When neither side would blink, we started deploying our new missiles, and the Russians walked out of Geneva."

"Why the hurry?"

"Because our credibility was at stake. Had we not gone ahead with the threat, the Soviets would have said Reagan blinked. If they hadn't walked out, we would have said Andropov blinked."

"And that's when the missile race began in earnest?"

"You could say that. They surrounded us with all their nuclear warheads and we surrounded them. We got ourselves in a spot where any spark could set off Armageddon."

"Didn't both sides realize this?"

"The leaders were assured by their experts that the other side didn't have the guts to use their nukes because they knew they would also be wiped out in the process. The only way to keep the peace was to build more horrifying weapons until the other side came to its senses."

"So why are we sitting on the rubble in Lawrence, Kansas, full of gamma rays?"

"I guess we'll never know," the professor says sadly. "It might not even have been a human decision. With a response time of only six minutes to react, the whole thing could have been started by a faulty computer that wouldn't stop blinking."

Another View:

Socking Uncle Sam

With good reason, the Treasury is urging Congress to place stricter limits on the issuance of tax-exempt bonds by local governments. The privilege of using such bonds has been widely abused in recent years, at the Treasury's expense.

While some municipalities have issued the bonds only for legitimate purposes such as the modernization of water works, other communities have resorted to tax-exempt bonds as a source of capital for private industry, financing even such non-civic enterprises as hamburger outlets. The volume of tax-exempt bonds issued each year has risen from $24 billion in 1973 to $78 billion in 1983.

This doesn't cost the municipalities anything, but it costs the federal Treasury a great deal — in foregone income taxes on the bond purchasers' investments. In effect, the cities are playing Santa Claus and sending the bill to Uncle Sam.

Even when tax-exempt bonds are used for a socially beneficial purpose, they may be an inefficient way of providing the intended help. While the tax exemption permits bonds to be sold at lower interest rates than they would be otherwise, some of the saving is absorbed by underwriters, brokers, investors and lawyers. The Treasury says it loses $3 in taxes for every $2 of interest saved.

Congress needs to examine the subject thoroughly and develop a policy that confines the use of tax-exempt bonds to truly public-interest projects.

'Baby Jane Doe' refining law

WASHINGTON — The case of "Baby Jane Doe" has become an occasion for saying that "hard cases make bad law." That child has three problems: spina bifida (an open spinal column that surgery could close), an abnormally small head and excessive fluid on the brain. Her parents are refusing life-sustaining surgery. The government is seeking information to determine if the child's rights are being violated. A hard case? Certainly. But it is a case; there is a law.

George F. Will

Several doctors guess (most prognoses in such cases are just guesses, and err on the pessimistic side) that without surgery the child will live two years; with surgery she will live perhaps until 20, paralyzed and "severely" retarded. Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 prohibits discrimination on the basis of handicap. The government has asked for the child's hospital records because the doctors' prognoses may be self-fulfilling.

The potential 504 violation is this: Because of a handicap — spina bifida — the child may be the victim of discriminatory medical decisions that will aggravate other handicaps. Excessive brain fluid is a normal, correctable consequence of spina bifida. But because the child has spina bifida, routine procedures are not being taken to prevent pressure that will aggravate the retardation and may cause death. (Because of the delay in this case, infection may already have made a pressure-relieving operation impossible.) Surely it is not frivolous to argue that this is discrimination based on handicap.

Richard Gross, a professor of surgery, says of the prognosis for such children, if treated: "It varies. It depends a great deal on the family. If they have a good, intact family unit that's very supportive and has resources, they can do very well ... some families are ennobled and some are destroyed."

That is exactly right. But where does that leave the law? Gross has been asked: If a decision to conduct life-sustaining procedures turns (as to some extent it must) on the prognosis for the child's life, and if that prognosis depends on the family's resources, emotional and financial, then is not a handicapped child's essential right — to life — conditional, varying with family fortunes? Gross replies: "That's life. That's true. That's the way it is right now. You can see families without means who aren't getting medical care..."

Again, Gross is correct. But, again, where does that leave the law? There are indeed serious inequities in the nation's allocation of health care. But some are more serious than others and none are more serious than those that cause the ultimate irreparable injury, death.

Gross is not advocating social Darwinism — the survival of the fortunate. He argues, unassailably, that if it is to be national policy to insist on life-sustaining treatment at the beginning of a life, the federal government acquires a duty to provide policies that enhance the child's prognosis throughout life.

But where does that moral truth leave the law? Surely the law should not say: A handicapped infant's right to survival should be contingent not only on neonatal guesses about the long-term evolution of handicaps and on guesses about the family's long-term emotional and financial resources, but also on guesses about future social programs. Gross is right: It is wicked (attention, conservatives) for public policy to mandate a serious, continuing private burden for families, unless public policy is continuously supportive with services. But it would be untenable to argue that an infant's right to survive should be abridged because society may not adequately fulfill subsequent obligations.

Today, government policy concerning such cases is unformed, evolving, tentative and moderate. It is not to seek heroic medical measures for every child, however handicapped — not for a child born dying, or for one whose prognosis is for almost immediate death, or for one where the consequence would be a pain-wracked or vegetative existence. All the government has thus far asked for in the Baby Jane Doe case is information, a request hor ored by all 48 hospitals involved i previous cases such as this.

The extremists in this debate ar those doctors and editorialists wh deny that the federal government has any responsibility, regardless of civil-rights obligations, or any right, even to information. The extremists are those who demand an unfettered parental right to condemn any handicapped child to death, without federally mandated procedural safeguards, stipulated standards or an appeal process. The extremists are those who — normally so ardent about "openness" and so opposed to secrecy — even praise a hospital for suppressing information about a child's changing condition.

"Hard cases make bad law"? Hard cases like this one are indispensable to the making of law. Cases like this shape society's mind, of which law is a distillate.

TODAY IN HISTORY

One year ago: Democratic Sen. Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts said he would not run for president in 1984 because he did not want to expose his children to the pressure of another campaign.

Today's birthdays: Actress Mary Martin is 69. Comedian Woody Allen and singer Lou Rawls are 48. Comedian Richard Pryor is 43.

Thought for today: "Use it up. Wear it out. Make it do. Or do without." — New England adage.

Fraud gripes citizens

LUFKIN (AP) — The most criticized area of operation for the Texas Department of Human Resources is welfare payments to the needy; more specifically, food stamps.

The criticism comes about not because people are against helping the needy, but because many people are not sure that the ones who are getting them are truly needy.

"I think that's the bottom line," said East Texas DHR fraud investigator Herman Hearne. "People are just real skeptical about who gets food stamps and they get real upset when they realize that it's their tax dollars that are going to support somebody who may be getting them illegally."

Hearne is one of 80 investigators working in Texas to, among other things, catch those who illegally obtain food stamps.

THE MOST common type of fraud is unreported income, where someone will apply for food stamps and lie about their employment.

"They'll say they don't have a job when they do, or else they'll go to work, then not report the income and keep getting the food stamps," Hearne said.

To catch these people, Hearne says it takes the cooperation of a lot of people, especially the employer.

"We're going to find out about it," Hearne said. "It may take us a couple of months, and we may have a little harder time building a case, but we'll eventually find out about it through computer checks. We'll match everybody on welfare to everybody that's employed, so it's just a matter of time."

Hearne said that employers can help cut down on this type of fraud by cooperating with investigators by providing information, such as when a person started to work and what their salary is, to catch people getting the food stamps illegally.

"WE COULD grand-jury subpoena the work records, but the voluntary cooperation of the employers is really the key to our success," Hearne said.

The second most common offense is referred to as a "composition of household" violation, whereby people are reported as living in a household when they actually aren't living there.

"We rely a lot on the public to help out in catching these types of violators," Hearne said. "Once we have a name and some idea that they are violating the law, then it often comes down to just plain old surveillance."

Hearne said that one positive program in stopping food stamp fraud has been the DHR's hotline, whereby citizens can call in suspected violators.

"We've already seen this program work with a number of referrals," Hearne said. "People will call in and report that this well-dressed lady came into the grocery store, bought the most expensive cuts of meat in the store and then got into her Cadillac and drove off.

"THAT'S WHAT really gripes people, and it gripes me too, but that's also the area where we need the public to cooperate with us and help us," Hearne said.

Hearne said it is not enough to see the abuse and comment about it and do nothing, saying that people need to let somebody know, who can do something to deter it in the future.

"They can find so many ways to beat the system, but on a positive note, we are always finding new methods to stop it also," Hearne said.

Hearne thinks he's earning his keep, as he has made 134 fraud cases during fiscal year 1983, with 104 of them already disposed of through felony theft grand jury indictments, with an average of $850 worth of theft per case.

Panthers expect hard fight from Rebels

Mojo '83 wants to place its mark on sign of tradition

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Next to the Odessa Permian football practice field there is a huge bill board that reads "Home of the Permian Panthers, State Champions Football AAAAA 1965, '72, '80."

Below that legend is a list of Mojo accomplishments on the grid iron divided into five other categories: district, bi-district, regional, quarterfinals and semifinals. Under each heading is the year in which Permian came away a winner.

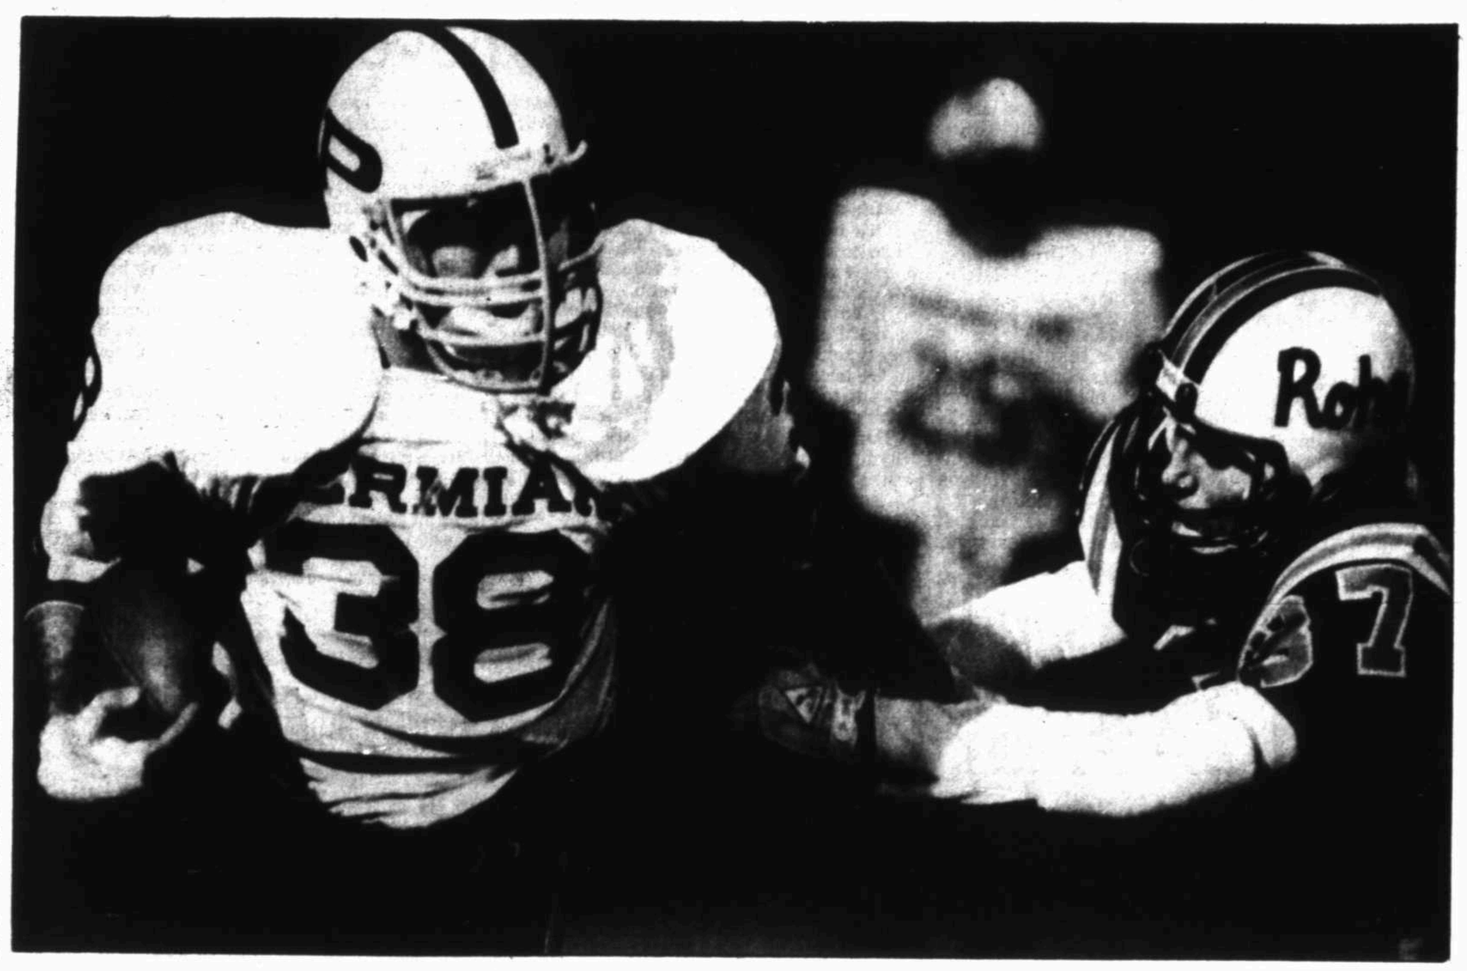
Odessa Permian won its first district title in 1960 and has won a total of 14 crowns since, including each of the last four years. The Panthers won their first bi-district title in their first state championship year, 1965, and have added 10 others.

They've also claimed nine regional titles, including the 1983 version which has yet to be posted; eight quarterfinals crowns and have won six semifinals which produced the three state championships.

As the day which can produce another mark on that sign draws near — the quarterfinal meeting with fellow District 4-5A member Midland Lee in Texas Tech's Jones Stadium — Permian players can look upon it if any additional inspiration is needed.

"That's what we're working for, to leave our mark behind on that sign," said Permian fullback/linebacker Britt Hager. "We can come back years later and it will still be there. That sign represents a lot of tradition in this school."

"I feel like our tradition will be a factor," said offensive guard/defensive end Gerald Carmen. "We know we're not going to quit."



AP Laserphoto

Odessa Permian fullback Britt Hager runs hard against Wichita Falls Rider defender Scott Cory (87) during Friday's regional game in Wichita Falls. Permian won, 28-0, and now Hager and company are preparing for Saturday's game against Midland Lee.

THE PERMIAN players also realize it will take more than tradition to add another mark to their sign. They have tremendous respect for Midland Lee and know the winner of Saturday's 1:30 p.m. game will have been in a tough, hard-fought fight. They also understand how big this game can be.

"This will definitely be our toughest game in the playoffs," said Hager whose team has rolled easily through the first three games, as has Midland Lee.

"It's a big game, one of the biggest of our lives," said wide receiver/cornerback Keith Metcalfe. "It's a big challenge because we respect them. They are a great team and they stand in the way of a state championship. We have to beat them to get there. You've got to have respct for such a great team like that. We really can't worry about what they will do. We just have to prepare ourselves."

"I feel Midland Lee has a team that's well balanced and if they execute properly they will be tough to beat," said Carman. But, on the other hand, we seem to be in the same boat and when it comes down to it, it'll be who ever wants it the most. This is probably the biggest game we've played in our lives."

Linebacker Gary Homsey added, "The game is important so we can keep playing. We got beat by them in district and we'd like to get back at them. They're a good team and we're a good team. I think it'll be a good game. Everybody is excited about it."

Excited, and ready to play.

"I'm well, I'm ready," said Hager who is completely recovered from an early season foot injury. "Get after it!" Everybody is looking forward to the game. We lost the first time and I think it's still in the back of our minds but I don't think revenge is a factor. I'm ready to play and the team's ready. It will be a grinding game, a hard-rock-mining game as they say.

"This game proves how strong District 4-5A is," continued Hager. "Two teams from the same district meeting that crushed all opponents in the playoffs. I'll give it all I've got like I know the rest of the team is going to give all they've got. I'm proud to be in this game. It's the first quarterfinal game I've ever played in."

THE PANTHERS know the difference between the styles of the two teams and they know what they have to do to stop Lee. For some, like Hager and Metcalfe, it's playing on both sides of the ball.

"It can get tiring but I've been doing it for a long time (going both ways)," said Hager. "I'd rather be out there in the action all the time because it's kind of hard to sit and watch offense or defense from the sidelines."

While Hager plays a key role in Permian's offensive rushing attack, Metcalfe is important to the Panther passing game at his wide reciever position, a passing game that Lee doesn't have.

"Our passing game complements our running game and vice versa," said Metcalfe. "We feel we throw people off their guard with our passing to open up our running game.

"I think this will be a defensive game, a hard hitting game," Metcalfe continued. "We've seen films of Lee and they really get after you on defense. They also have a great offensive line and we have to control that line and contain their speed. It's a big game, pressure packed. I think the team that wins this will have a real good chance in the push to the state championship. Both of these towns are among the best in the state."

"We're more balanced than they are," said Carman. "We throw the ball, run the ball. They use a running attack behind an oustanding line."

"They don't pass much, they're mainly a running team," said Homsey. "I think our defensive line has to get them in third-and-long situations because they don't pass. Our defense has to stop them. We can't get blown off the ball. We have to contain them. We are a pretty balanced team. I guess our offense is our strength because we can throw as good as we run. Our defense has played a lot better the last few weeks since we lost to them."

THAT LOSS, 20-7 seven weeks ago, is the only loss Permian has sustained in district play since 1979 when they lost to Abilene Cooper. It has been a major topic of conversation for the football fans in Midland and was a cause of dismay for those in Odessa.

"It left a lot of doubts in the fans and the people releated to the game," said Carman. "Was it a fluke or not? Nobody really knows but we get to play it again."

And this one has the makings of an even bigger and better game than the first because so much more is at stake. There's more than area pride, there's also a date in the semifinals against the winner of the Klein-Plano game next week. Beyond that...

Chaps open WJCC road schedule at Clarendon

CLARENDON — Midland College, the team that once was seemingly invincible on the road, but has suffered all three of its losses this season away from the friendly confines of the Langford Chaparral Center, plays its first Western Junior College Conference game in hostile environs tonight.

The Chaps face the Clarendon College Bulldogs here at 8 p.m. tonight. Clarendon lost its WJCC opener to Odessa College, 71-59, a team MC beat 94-91 in overtime in the finals of the Chaparral Classic.

OC later lost to Cisco, a team it had walloped in the season's opener and a team that MC twice has beaten.

After winning over Western Texas College, 82-62, Monday, the Chaparrals are 9-3 for the season. For most of the first half it was touch-and-go. Coach Jerry Stone is accustomed to seeing his teams turn a game around with a pulverizing scoring burst. Monday Midland blew out the Westerners with their defense.

IT WAS 31-31 with a little under three minutes to go in the half. The Chaps limited the Westerners to one field goal over an eight-minute stretch and went into the final 13 minutes of play with a 52-37 lead.

Midland returns home Monday for its final pre-Christmas appearance at the Center. South Plains College, one of the preseason favorites to finish among the WJCC leaders, will supply the opposition. MC will journey to Hobbs, N.M., to face New Mexico Junior College in its final game before the break next Thursday.

Monday's game will feature the "hatching" of the new Chaparral mascot, a feathered creature that's expected to be born full-grown and full of fight. The Chaparral mascot is a project of the Student Activities office.

AS FOR tonight, Coach Jerry Stone won't tell whether he plans to retain the two-platoon tactics that proved so successful against WTC. The Chaps returned home 3 a.m. Sunday from the three-day Amarillo tournament and Stone feared fatigue might be an ugly foe Monday, hence the every-five-minute platoon.

It kept the Chaps fresh and the big players—Tevinn Binns, Mike Woolley and Jackie Phinnessee out of foul trouble. Woolley and Lawrence Chumbley played inside on the starting unit and Binns and Phinnessee were inside on the second wave.

If Stone continues the two-platoon system, fans might have to come jp with nicknames for the platoons, like the LSU Chinese Bandits, the defensive specialists of yore.

Battered Black Hawks fight back

By The Associated Press

The Chicago Black Hawks were a most unlikely winner.

Before their 4-0 National Hockey League victory over the New York Rangers Wednesday night, the Black Hawks had every reason to be demoralized. They were 0-4-2 in their last six games, 0-10-2 on the road for the season, had five forwards on the sidelines and were coming off a loss Tuesday night to the hapless New Jersey Devils.

"The pressure was getting worse every day and some of us weren't talking to each other," nine-year veteran Bob Murray said.

But Chicago overcame all the psychological and physical obstacles as goalie Murray Bannerman posted his sixth career NHL shutout.

NHL

DENIS SAVARD has a spine injury, Al Secord pulled a stomach muscle, wingers Troy Murray and Curt Fraser have knee problems and Tom Lysiak was on the second game of 20-game suspension, leaving Black Hawks Coach Orval Tessier shorthanded and desperate.

"We have five forwards representing 150 goals sitting in the stands," Tessier said. "And (Darryl) Sutter is playing with three broken ribs and is wearing a flak jacket. They are our three top centers and our three top left wings."

Chicago's victory was its first on the road since last March 13 and for Bannerman, the triumph broke a nine-game winless streak of eight losses and one tie.

"The difference was our skating. Last night, we couldn't get an attack going against New Jersey," Tessier said. "Tonight our goaltending was solid and the rest of the guys played well."

Sutter, Rick Paterson, Steve Larmer and Steve Ludzik scored the Chicago goals.

Canucks 6, Whalers 2

At Hartford, Darcy Rota scored three goals to supply all the offense Vancouver needed in support of goalie Richard Brodeur, who stopped 36 shots.

Stan Smyl, Garth Butcher and Ron Delorme had the other goals for the Canucks, who connected on three of 11 shots in the second period after a scoreless first.

Maple Leafs 5, Red Wings 3

Rick Vaive scored the tie-breaking goal in the third period and Dan Daoust got two goals as Toronto won at Detroit.

Steve Yzerman tied the score for the Red Wings at 3-3 with a goal at 6:19 of the third period before the Maple Leafs went ahead again when John Anderson's pass across the goal crease deflected off Vaive's skate.

Flyers 3, Oilers 3

At Edmonton, Paul Coffey's goal with 49 seconds left in regulation pulled the Oilers into a tie with Philadelphia, and the deadlock held through the five-minute overtime.

Bobby Clarke gave the Flyers a 3-2 lead with his second goal of the game with 3:15 to go, but Coffey scored in the final minute after Edmonton goalie Grant Fuhr was pulled for an extra attacker.

Wayne Gretzky scored his 30th goal of the season for the Oilers.

Boston College survives scare from Maine

By The Associated Press

There's nothing like a little scare to test a man's mettle.

Boston College's 15th-ranked Eagles got that scare Wednesday night when they trailed unheralded Maine 35-32 at halftime of their college basketball game. Rallying behind Jay Murphy, the Eagles pulled out a 73-61 victory despite being rebounded 16-7 in the first half.

"I think it's good to have a scare like this early in the season," B.C. Coach Gary Williams said. "They forced us to become a better rebounding team."

Boston College, 2-0, grabbed 22 rebounds to 12 for the Black Bears in the second half and also forced Maine into 16 turnovers after intermission. Murphy scored 22 points, and Michael Adams had 18. Jeff Wheeler and Jeff Topliff had 14 points apiece for Maine.

College Basketball

"We needed something to overcome that rebounding margin in the first half," Williams said. "I have tremendous respect for (Maine Coach) Steve Chapelle and the job he's doing."

In other games involving ranked teams, No. 3 Georgetown defeated Morgan State 91-38, fourth-ranked Memphis State beat Middle Tennessee 74-47, No. 8 Houston beat Mississippi State 68-62 and 16th-rated DePaul downed Ohio University 69-45.

Top Ten

Reggie Williams, a freshman forward, scored 20 points, including 12 in the first half, to lead Georgetown to an easy victory. The Hoyas, 3-0, led 44-18 at halftime, outscoring Morgan State 14-0 and 19-1 over six-minute stretches in the first half. David Wingate added 12 points and Patrick Ewing had 10 for Georgetown.

"Reggie's so versatile that he is going to do a lot of different things for us," Hoyas captain Gene Smith said. "He's a gifted player, so he has to accept that responsibility."

Keith Lee scored 24 points and Bobby Parks and Phil Haynes keyed a first-half romp that led Memphis State over Middle Tennessee. With the Tigers leading 18-12, Parks and Haynes accounted for the game's next 10 points and Memphis State's next 16. Over a six-minute stretch, the 3-0 Tigers took a 36-18 lead.

Lee also grabbed 15 rebounds in helping Tigers Coach Dana Kirk earn his 200th coaching victory.

Michael Young scored 19 points, and Houston took an 18-point lead in the second half before holding on to beat Mississippi State. Using a tight zone defense, Mississippi State held 7-footer Akeem Olajuwon to nine points and 10 rebounds before fouling out.

Second Ten

The Blue Demons led by as many as 21 points in the first half as Ray Meyer earned his 699th coaching victory in his 42nd and final season at DePaul. Freshman Dallas Comegys led the way with 17 points, and Kenny Patterson scored 12 while leading DePaul, 2-0, with nine assists and three steals. John Devereaux led Ohio with 10 points.

Unranked

Steve Reid scored 11 of his 17 points in overtime to lead Purdue over Louisville, 90-83. Ricky Hall topped the Boilermakers with a career-high 24 points, and he added seven assists and seven steals, two in overtime.

Broadcasters honored with Sports Emmies

NEW YORK (AP) — Dick Enberg, John Madden and the coverage of the 1983 World Series were among the winners Wednesday night when the National Sports Emmy Awards for excellence in sports television were announced.

Enberg, one of the top announcers at NBC who has handled such events as the Super Bowl and the Wimbledon tennis tournament, received the award of "Outstanding Sports Personality: Host."

Madden, a former coach with the Oakland Raiders of the National Football League, who has turned TV color man for CBS football games, was the recipient of the award of the "Outstanding Sports Personality: Analyst."

The 79th World Series between the St. Louis Cardinals and Milwaukee Brewers, meanwhile, was voted the "Outstanding Live Sports Special" for its performance on NBC.

The awards, presented by the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences, represented outstanding achievement by producers and individuals in national network and syndicated sports programming during the period 1982-83.

Among the other program winners were: CBS Sports Presents The National Football League as the "Outstanding Live Sports Series"; Wimbledon '83 as the "Outstanding Edited Sports Special" and The American Sportsman as the "Outstanding Edited Sports Series-Anthologies". In addition, ABC's Wide World Of Sports, PBS' Football In America, ABC's The American Sportsman and ABC Sportsbeat were cited in a "special classification of outstanding achievement."

Also, ABC was given an award for "innovative technical achievement" for a microwave transmission from the summit of Mt. Everest on the American Sportsman.

Among the individual winners for writing were George Bell, Jr., for ABC's "The American Sportsman - A Retrospective of William Holden's Africa" and Steve Sabol and Phil Tuckett for "Wake Up The Echoes: The History of Notre Dame Football" on an independent network.

Raiders, Charges just love beating each other

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Anytime, anywhere, under any cirumstances, the San Diego Chargers just love beating the Los Angeles Raiders. And the Raiders feel the same way about the Chargers.

"Every time we play them, it seems like the divisional championship is on the line," said Raiders Coach Tom Flores.

Only one of the teams is chasing a title, but that won't diminish the enthusiasm on either side for tonight's nationally televised National Football League showdown. Kickoff is scheduled for 8 p.m. for the 47th meeting between the clubs in a series the Raiders lead 27-17-2.

Los Angeles, 10-3 and riding a four-game winning streak, can clinch the American Football Conference's Western Division title with a victory or a tie.

"We've got some momentum going and we want to keep winning," Flores said after a 27-12 thumping of the New York Giants on Sunday. "The first thing is to win the division championship. Next is the home field (advantage for the playoffs). We're not going to pull in our horns."

There'll be no horn-pulling in San Diego either, says tight end Kellen Winslow, who relishes the idea of delaying a Raider victory party.

"It gives us a chance to spoil the Raiders' season and give us some pride at the same time," said Winslow.

The Chargers are only 5-8 after a 31-7 shellacking of Denver last Sunday, so there will be no Super Bowl rings for San Diego this season.

Chargers Coach Don Coryell admitted that "we are embarrassed about our season. We can make excuses, but excuses only last one day. All people remember is the score.

"The fact is we have a losing season (but) . . . it doesn't mean we can't come out of the season with a good feeling," Coryell added.

A couple of weeks ago, the Chargers had every reason to dread a faceoff with the Raiders. But the return of quarterback Dan Fouts after five weeks on the sidelines with a shoulder injury proved a balm for the team. San Diego's systematic dismantling of a Denver team that was trying to clinch a playoff spot gave the Chargers hope for a fast finish.

Los Angeles' standout cornerback, Lester Hayes, sees the game as "our mini-Super Bowl. I've been watching films of (Chargers receivers) Wes Chandler and Charlie Joiner for six or seven months."

Since 1977, the clubs have split 12 regular-season decisions.

Wrestler out to prove it's never too late to win gold

IOWA CITY, Iowa (AP) — Sweat ran down the side of his face as he sat against the wall, underneath a sign that read "champions" in huge print.

It was an appropriate place for Russ Camilleri to rest. Thirteen times he has won a national wrestling title, six times in freestyle and seven times in Greco-Roman (above-the-waist-only holds are allowed).

He has competed in two Olympics and four World Games.

But all of that was a long time ago, especially as one measures athletes.

Camilleri didn't really blossom as a wrestler until after San Jose State, when he competed for the Air Force and in open tournaments. He won his first AAU national title in 1960 at 174 pounds. He won his last 11 years later at 180½ pounds.

Now, at age 46, Camilleri is back at it again after an absence of nearly 12 years. He's making his comeback at one of the toughest spots possible — the University of Iowa wrestling room.

"I'm just an old man chasing a fantasy," said Camilleri, a slight smile on his craggy features.

"It's been hard because I have to measure my gains in inches. When I came here, it was a million-to-one longshot. Now, it's down to a thousand-to-one.

"I came here at 220 pounds, or just under. I'm down around 184 or so now. I'm not trying just to make the Olympic team in '84, because I've been on Olympic teams. I want to try and win the gold. I'll never have another chance."

Dan Gable, coach of Iowa and the 1984 Olympic team, said whether Camilleri can make the team — much less win the gold — is fairly shaky.

"He really has just one goal in mind — to be the gold medalist in L.A."

Camilleri has competed in six official matches since his comeback began several months ago and has lost all six. He has been in the matches to the very end, but has lost most of them due to disqualification for not enough activity.

"He has no sense of position on his feet right now," said Gable. "He has a good feel for the mat, but standing wrestling is so different than it was 20 years ago. What's happening is that it is 0-0 in his matches with about two minutes left to go and he gets disqualified for stalling. He just can't get anything going on his feet.

"If he's going to continue, he's going to have to spend almost 100 percent of his time on the mat."

But time is a factor. The Olympic trials begin in April, with regional competition at eight sites. The final tryouts are May 18-20 in Iowa City, with the final camp June 17-23 in Grand Rapids, Mich.

Camilleri raises feeder pigs and beef cattle on a 206-acre farm near Richland, Mo., about a six-hour drive from Iowa City. He has been living in Iowa City Monday through Thursday, and returning to the farm each weekend. He and his wife, Becky, have four children, daughters age 23 and 19, and sons age 27 and 3.

Camilleri's decision to try for the Olympic gold is a family one, he said.

"My wife really covers for me," he said, with a trace of pride.

"We admire him for what he's trying to do, but some of the guys wonder why he's doing it," said Lou Banach, a former Iowa NCAA champ. "It takes a lot of courage to do what he's doing."

Even if he fails, Camilleri said he feels his efforts will not have been in vain.

"Dan is a wrestling genius," he said. "I can go home happy for just having met Dan and all the rest of these guys."

Kansas placed on NCAA probation

MISSION, Kan. (AP) — The NCAA ended a 19-month investigation of the University of Kansas on Wednesday by handing the Jayhawks a two-year football probation that includes only one year of sanctions.

The penalties, which were reported almost two weeks ago by the Lawrence, Kan., Journal-World, were not as harsh as many expected in the highly publicized case.

Sources told The Associated Press that the NCAA Infractions Committee took into account the fact that most of the principals in the case are no longer at Kansas. The fact that Kansas' football program has not been successful in recent years also may have been a mitigating factor.

Under the terms of the probation, the Jayhawks will not be eligible for a post-season football appearance after the 1984 football season and will not appear on television that year.

In addition, a former assistant football coach — who was not named — must remain separated "from any involvement in the university's intercollegiate athletics program for a period of three years beginning Nov. 21, 1983," the NCAA said.

VIOLATIONS CITED included offering large amounts of money and other benefits to prospective players, providing prospects with expense-paid visits to the campus, providing employment to athletes and filing false statements that Kansas was in compliance with NCAA rules. The infractions occurred during 1979-82, the NCAA said.

"None of the athletics department staff members who were involved in the significant violations in this case remain associated with the university's athletics program at this time," an NCAA news release said.

"In considering this case, the committee's primary concern was the recruiting approach utilized by certain former members of the university's coaching staff," Frank J. Remington, chairman of the infractions committee, said in the release.

"Specifically, the statements reportedly made by these coaches while recruiting certain prospective student-athletes were found by the committee to have caused the prospects reasonably to believe that they would be provided certain improper financial benefits if they attended the University of Kansas."

A KANSAS spokesman also declined to identify the former assistant football coach who cannot be involved in Kansas athletics for three years.

"The university has accepted the findings and recommendation for a penalty of the NCAA committee on infractions," the university said in a joint statement by Chancellor Gene Budig and Athletic Director Monte Johnson. "The months during which this matter has been pending have been difficult ones for members of the university community and our alumni and friends interested in our athletic program. We appreciate the continued interest and support.

"We are committed to operating our athletic program in compliance with the Big Eight Conference and NCAA rules. We have undertaken additional efforts within the athletic department to ensure compliance with those rules."

Kansas ended the 1983 football season under first-year Coach Mike Gottfried with a 4-6-1 record. The Jayhawks' 2-5 Big Eight mark tied them with Colorado for sixth in the conference.

Gottfried succeeded Don Fambrough, who was fired after the 1982 season along with his entire staff.

Bob Marcum, the athletic director who hired Fambrough, left Kansas before the NCAA investigation started to become athletic director at South Carolina.

John Hadl, the former Kansas All-American who was Fambrough's offensive coordinator, resigned shortly after the probe began in April 1982.

Nuggets' Moe fined $5,000, benched for two

DENVER (AP) — Denver Nuggets Coach Doug Moe says "I knew what I was doing" when he angered National Basketball Association officials to the tune of $5,000 and a two-game suspension — but Moe insists there was "nothing wrong" with calling off his team's defense.

Moe made the comments from his Denver home Wednesday night, after NBA officials fined him and suspended him from coaching in Milwaukee Wednesday night and Saturday against Seattle. The penalties came after he ordered the Nuggets to stop playing defense near the end of a 156-116 loss to the Portland Trail Blazers on Nov. 22.

Scotty Stirling, NBA vice president for operations, stated in a letter to Moe that "It is clear from your own admissions, from the statements of the game officials and (Portland) Coach Jack Ramsay and newspaper accounts that you did, in fact, take a 20-second timeout with 1:12 remaining in the game and instruct your team to stop playing defense and let the Portland team 'have it,' meaning the (Blazers) points record."

The Trail Blazers scored five layups in the final 72 seconds to surpass their team scoring record of 150 points.

"Our defense was getting so tenacious there, I was afraid they weren't going to get 150," Moe was quoted as telling the Denver Post after the loss to the Trail Blazers. "I really was scared."

He also was quoted as telling his players during the time out: "Let them have it. You understand what I'm saying, don't you?" The Nuggets took defensive positions on the court but didn't try to stop the Portland players from driving for their baskets.

"There wasn't much difference between that defense and the way we were playing before," he said.

In his letter to Moe, Stirling said Moe's direction in the Portland game was "contrary to the very essence of sport, which demands a full effort for the entire length of a game.

"To simply allow a team five uncontested baskets is to make a travesty of the game and to seriously tarnish the image of the NBA, your team and your profession."

Moe said he could understand the NBA's viewpoint. "I can understand why they'd be upset over it. The way it was written up in the press, it looks bad. They (the league) had to do something," Moe said.

But he added, "as far as the act itself, that I find there's nothing wrong with. I knew what I was doing . . . I know what I did, when I did it, from what perspective. It was for our ballclub and our ballclub only," he said.

"You just go on and do the best you can. If it doesn't work out, it doesn't work out," Moe said.

But Ramsay and some officials of the Nuggets called the penalties harsh, while some team members termed it "unusual" and "one of those things."

Dallas Maverick Kurt Nimphius puts a shot over Houston Rocket Ralph Sampson during the fourth quarter in Wednesday night's game in Dallas.

Mavs perfect at home

By The Associated Press

Things are going so well for the Dallas Mavericks that Coach Dick Motta was willing to predict they would win all six games in a homestand. Thanks to Mark Aguirre, the forecast came true.

"He must be a fortune teller," said Aguirre, who had 39 points, seven rebounds and seven assists to lead the Mavericks to a 113-102 National Basketball Association triumph over the Houston Rockets Wednesday night. The triumph left Dallas 10-0 at home.

Aguirre got the Mavericks, who have never made the playoffs but are 11-4 this season, off to a good start by hitting eight of his first nine shots and scoring 19 points en route to a 39-22 lead after the first quarter.

"Mark is up there with the great small forwards I have seen in my 16 years in the league," said Motta. "He still has some refinements to make, but if he stays on schedule he will make all pro."

Aguirre, who is averaging nearly 27 points per game, credited his teammates, especially point guard Brad Davis, for his high point total.

Celtics 130, Spurs 106

At Boston, Larry Bird broke out of a six-game slump with 23 points, 14 rebounds and 13 assists as the Celtics whipped San Antonio.

Knicks 113, Nets 104

Bernard King helped New York stay on top at New Jersey after the Knicks lost most of a 19-point lead.

Cavaliers 112, Trail Blazers 105

Cleveland, 5-12 overall, improved its home mark to 5-2 as World B. Free scored 34 points and Geoff Huston added two breakaway layups down the stretch against Portland.

76ers 122, Hawks 110

Andrew Toney scored 18 of his 24 points during a 32-8 third-quarter onslaught that turned a close game into a rout at Philadelphia.

NBA

Atlanta led 61-59 with 2½ minutes into the second half, but before the third period ended the 76ers were ahead 91-69. Eddie Johnson led the Hawks with 25 points, while Julius Erving had 24 for Philadelphia, which has won six games in a row.

Kings 120, Suns 118

Larry Drew's layup with two seconds left lifted Kansas City past the Suns at Phoenix.

Drew, who scored 25 points, also had tied the game at 118-118 on a jumper with 38 seconds left. Eddie Johnson led all scorers with 29 points for the Kings, while Maurice Lucas and Walter Davis had 24 apiece for Phoenix.

Bucks 139, Nuggets 122

At Milwaukee, the Bucks beat Denver for their fourth straight victory as Sidney Moncrief scored 25 points and Marques Johnson 21.

Milwaukee scored 43 points in the second period to take an 80-64 halftime lead and coasted from there.

The Nuggets, who got 26 points from Kiki Vandeweghe, played without Coach Doug Moe, who was serving the first game of a two-game suspension for ordering the team not to play defense in the closing moments of a blowout loss.

Jazz 117, Clippers 115

John Drew scored 27 points, including a tie-breaking three-point play with 37 seconds remaining, to help Utah win at San Diego.

After Drew put the Jazz ahead 116-113, Bill Walton, who led the Clippers with a season-high 25 points, made two free throws with 14 seconds left. Jeff Wilkins completed the scoring by hitting a free throw with eight seconds to go.

Adrian Dantley scored 37 points to lead Utah, which trailed by as many as 13 points early in the fourth quarter.

Cougars beat Bulldogs, 68-62

STARKVILLE, Miss. (AP) — Michael Young poured in 19 points and Alvin Franklin added 16 Wednesday night to lead the eighth-ranked Houston Cougars to a 68-62 victory in intersectional basketball play.

Mississippi State took the early lead in the game before Houston went ahead for good at 6:46 of the first half, when Franklin scored to put Houston ahead 22-21. The Cougars made the halftime score 32-25 when Derek Giles swished a 30-footer at the buzzer.

In the second half, Houston outscored the Bulldogs 17-6 during an eight-minute span to take control of the game. The Cougars longest lead was 18 points at the 7:43 mark, when the scores was 53-35.

The Bulldogs rallied late in the game, led by a couple of reserves. But Houston, now 2-1, converted on seven straight free throws to hold off Mississippi State.

The Bulldogs, now 1-1, played much of the game in a tight zone defense, which limited Houston's 7-foot center, Akeem Olajuwon, to only four shots from the field in the game. Olajuwon finished the game only 9 points in 10 rebounds before fouling out in the second half.

Greg Carter, Eugene Seale are SLC picks

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP) — North Texas State quarterback Greg Carter and Lamar University linebacker Eugene Seale have been named the players of the year in the Southland Conference, the league office announced.

Carter, a 5-10, 170-pound senior, was credited with being the major factor in the Eagles' turnaround from a 2-9 team in 1982 to an 8-3 mark in 1983 and a share of the league title in North Texas State's first season of conference competition.

The Fort Worth, Texas, native led the league in passing efficiency with a rating of 122.0 and also threw more touchdown passes than any one else in the league with 12. He was 93-185 for 1,275 yards passing, plus 80 yards and four touchdowns rushing.

Seale, a 5-8, 215-pound sophomore, was the first player in league history to ever be honored five times as a player of the week.

The Jasper, Texas, native finished the season with 170 tackles for the year.

Playing with a knee problem that required arthroscopic surgery after the season finale, Seale had 85 solo tackles for the season, including 22 tackles behind the line of scrimmage resulting in 60 yards lost.

Seale also came up with three pass interceptions, recovered five fumbles and forced five more fumbles.

Bass Institute changes name, expands scope

Indiana State University's Bass Fishing Institute, the heralded angling course that has captured the attention and interest of anglers, will have a new name and look in 1984.

Bass fishing will still be the main educational thrust of the two-day institute, it will henceforth be known as the American Fishing Institute, in keeping with its broader aims of the future.

The two-day-pay-to-learn course on fishing, conducted through ISU's continuing Education Department, is taught at colleges and universities. The course teams up well-known anglers and tackle experts, multi-media visual peresentations and classroom instruction.

In 1983, more than 4,000 attended the five institutes. Of the total enrollment, 12.6 per cent were women and 20.7 per cent youth. Some 53.2 per cent of the enrollees had fished more than 20 years and 91.4 per cent planned to attend another bass fishing institute.

Of the total respondents, 69.1 per cent expressed interest in learning about panfishing, 66.2 wanted to learn striped bass angling and 44.9 wanted to learn how to catch walleyes.

The AFI's lone Texas session will be Feb. 25-26 at Richland College in Dallas. Cynthia Stone (12800 Abrams Road, Dallas 75243) is in charge of the session...

Doe hunts coming up

The board of directors of Operation Orphans has selected Dec. 3, Dec. 10 and Dec. 17 for doe hunts during the whitetail deer season.

Saturday's hunt will be for boys. An "Exotic Hunt" will be held in January of 1984, but no date has been set.

This is the 23rd year of Operation Orphans and 7,384 orphans have participated in the hunts, harvesting 6,462 deer. Gene Ashby, a state game warden, started the program after realizing there was an excessive deer population and the necessity of removing a large number of anterless deer, primarily in Mason and Llano counties.

Hill Country ranchers have supported the program and backing from sportsmen's clubs throughout Texas helped purchase a 320 acre tract of land on the North bank of the Llano River in Mason County. Donations helped build a 42 by 86-foot bunkhouse, which can house and feed 200 youngsters.

Though the annual deer hunts are the most popular activity, the camp isn't idle the rest of the year. It is used periodically by other non-profit, social and religious organizations for summer camps.

This year's hunt is hoped to be the largest ever. However, this is dependent upon the number of ranchers who participate. The orphans will be brought to Camp Gene Ashby from homes throughout the state on Friday preceeding the hunt.

Fish-Wildlife may tax watchers

By ROLLA WILLIAMS
Copley News Service

Are most outdoor enthusiasts freeloaders, or are they willing to support their special recreations with cash?

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, taking note of the fact that almost all species of fish and wildlife are supported totally by Pittman-Robertson and Dingell-Johnson excise taxes, collected only from hunters and fishermen, is considering expanding its tax base to include birdwatchers, wildlife photographers, sightseers on national wildlife refuges, backpackers, campers and others who use but do not pay directly for their sport.

Under the banner "Who Pays Wildlife's Way? Fish and Wildlife Service Studying Sources of Money for State Non-Game Programs," the assistant secretary of interior for fish, wildlife and parks, G. Ray Arnett, suggests: "It's time that Americans who do their hunting with binoculars instead of shotguns be given the opportunity to shoulder part of the financial responsibility for conserving fish and wildlife."

HIS LETTER was mailed Nov. 8 in the form of a news release from Fish and Wildlife regional headquarters in Portland, Ore.

Arnett, former director of the California Department of Fish and Game, adds: "Sportsmen have been quietly paying the excise taxes for state conservation programs for years — to the tune of more than $1.5 billion since the federal aid programs first began in the 1930s."

It is sometimes overlooked by critics, but the hunters and the fishermen asked that they be taxed, demanding only that the funds collected be plowed back for the betterment of fish and wildlife.

"People who don't hunt and fish but enjoy wildlife in other ways, from backyard bird feeders to outings on the National Wildlife Refuge System, must realize that their pastimes need their financial support, too."

WHO MAKES these things possible? Who checks you in and out? Who finances the after-you-leave cleanup? Who stocks the catfish? Who oversees sanitary requirements lest pollution result?

He pointed out that the 1980 National Recreation Survey, conducted by the Bureau of the Census, estimated that $6.6 billion is spent each year by non-hunters and non-anglers on equipment, travel, and related expenditures for fish and wildlife activities.

Of that total, Arnett says, nearly $1.2 billion is spent for binoculars and photographic equipment, plus $517 million for bird-feeding.

The money from Pittman-Robertson and Dingell-Johnson comes back to the states, which add matching funds (collected from hunters and fishermen) and apply the totals to "enhancement" of fish and wildlife in the state.

The species affected are not just game species. Nearly 3,700 wild vertebrate species, most of them "non-game," not sought by sportsmen. Chipmunks and porcupines, the report notes, are included, along with herons and songbirds.

Arnett noted that in 1983 some $140 million was returned to the states and territories under the excise tax programs, which bolstered the $484 million that fishermen and hunters paid, in addition, for state licenses and permits.

Plastic worm declared key

BUFORD, Ga. (AP) — Two of the area's top experts say a plastic worm will be the key to winning the $100,000 top prize in the Super B.A.S.S. II tournament which began Wednesday on Lake Lanier.

Pre-tournament favorite Ken Cook of Meers, Okla., winner of Super B.A.S.S. I, will miss the tournament after breaking his arm this month.

Most of the better fishermen will get their seven-fish limits every day — and the one who gets the biggest fish on his stringer will collect the $100,000, said Bill Vanderford, host pro for the Bass Anglers Sportsman Society event.

"I'd say, develop a pattern on the lower end of the lake in 10 to 25 feet of water, stick to plastic worms until you get a limit, then go to a bigger bait, like a jig and pig, and try to get some bigger fish," said Vanderford, chief guide at Stouffers Pine Isle Hotel on Lake Lanier Islands.

Spotted bass make up 75 percent to 80 percent of the bass population in Lake Lanier, a 37,000-acre impoundment on the Chattahoochee River northeast of Atlanta. The lake record for spots is 7-pounds, 9-ounces and 3- and 4-pounders are common.

"The lake has some excellent largemouths in it," said Cliff Craft of Sugar Hill, a local guide and tournament pro who finished fourth in the first Super B.A.S.S. tournament in April in Florida. The lake record is 17-pounds, 9-ounces.

Vanderford said he expects to see one of those 10-pound largemouths caught before fishing winds up Saturday. He said silver is his fall worm color, while Craft said green ones are the best bet.

Nelson named as SLC coach

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP) — Second-year coach Corky Nelson, who brought North Texas State from a 2-9 team in 1982 into an 8-3 co-champion this year, was named Southland Conference Coach of the Year, the league office announced Tuesday.

In his second collegiate head coaching position, Nelson led North Texas to a tie with Northeast Louisiana for the conference title in its first year of league competition after eight years as an independent.

North Texas State's six-game improvement was the best among Division I-AA schools heading into the national championship playoffs, where NTSU received a first-round bye.

Nelson came to North Texas State after an eight-year stint as defensive coordinator at Baylor, helping the Bears to three bowl appearances during that time.

The Eagles were picked to finish no higher than fourth in the SLC, but made people take notice in the early going, losing to Division I-A powers Oklahoma State 20-13 and second-ranked Texas 26-6, after leading the Longhorns 6-2 at the half.

Roswell meets Clovis for 4A title

New Mexico Prep Football

By The Associated Press

It was springtime four years ago and Jim Bradley was getting his first good look at a group of freshmen football players that were to grow up to be Roswell High School heroes in the fall of 83.

"They were quality," says Bradley, "even back then I knew they were a good bunch. They had ability, a decent attitude and good grades."

The freshman contingent that year included Jimmy Miller, Odie Rodriguez, Tooter Lara, Eddie Glenny and Daron Robertson, all starters and standouts on this year's Roswell team that Saturday will take on two-time defending state champion Clovis for the Class AAAA title.

And Roswell, which is 11-0-1 going into the title showdown with the Wildcats, is within a victory of fulfilling Bradley's prosphesy to those freshmen four years ago.

"I told them that before they left here, they were going to have a state championship," Bradley said. "They have stuck together and they've accomplished a great deal."

IN ESSENCE, the growth of Roswell High School football has paralleled that of Bradley and his players. The Coyotes went 4-7 in Bradley's first year at the helm but since then have posted records of 8-2, 7-3 and this year's 9-0-1 regular season mark.

Miller, a free safety his freshman and sophomore years, moved over to quarterback and is now rated the best in the state at that position. A made-to-order option quarterback, Miller has rushed for 1,193 yards this season and teams with Robertson and Rodriguez to give the Coyotes the state's most solid backfield.

Robertson, who according to Bradley matured a little slower than his teammates, has run for 1,065 yards this year and possesses excellent speed. Rodriguez, the fullback in the bone, has bulled his way for 651 yards and doubles as a linebacker on defense.

Lara has been a three-year starter at wide receiver while Glenny has been a mainstay in the defensive secondary.

But to win the school's first football championship since 1955, Roswell will have to beat a Clovis team that thrives on tradition and pressure.

COACHED BY Eric Roanhaus, the Wildcats have won back-to-back state championships and are in the finals for a fourth straight time. Clovis has won four state championships since 1977 and the Wildcats have built a reputation of playing their best when it means most.

As usual, the defense has been Clovis' knockout punch this season. The Wildcats have given up just over six points a game this season while building an offense around talented quarterback Brian Ainsworth and halfback Fred Baston.

The Clovis secondary is especially tough with Anthony Stevenson, Peter Gutierrez and Dramaine Bunton the big play specialists.

Ainsworth carried the team through much of the season with his running and passing. Baston, sidelined with injuries part of the year, has put together five straight 100-yard plus games as the Wildcats have forged a 9-1-2 mark.

The title game will pit the two teams that finished atop The Associated Press rankings at the end of the regular season. Roswell was ranked No. 1 with Clovis No. 2. The two are both members of District 4AAAA and battled to a 7-7 tie during the regular season.

To get to the title game, Roswell rolled over Manzano 42-12 and Gallup 56-8 while Clovis edged Eldorado 17-14 in overtime and Del Norte 14-3.

Clovis will be at home in Leon Williams Stadium, where the Wildcats rarely lose. But Bradley says at this point, there's no such thing as a homefield advantage.

"When you get to a state championship game, the better team is going to win," says Bradley, "it doesn't make a difference if you play it in a bowl or in a cow pasture."

The game, which will be televised statewide, is scheduled to kick off at 2 p.m.

DEFENDING CHAMPION Artesia and defensive-minded Portales will collide Friday night in Artesia's Bulldog Bowl to decide the AAA title. Both teams have been there often over the course of the last 10 years.

Artesia, 7-5 going into the championship game, has won the AAA title six of the last nine years while Portales took the title in 1979 and 1981. Only Socorro, which won in 1977, has been able to break through the Artesia-Portales domination in AAA.

The Bulldogs have been especially tough in pre-season play. Artesia has won 12 state titles in football and has lost only once in a championship game. Under Coach Mike Phipps, Artesia teams have posted a combined record of 95 wins, 27 losses and one tie.

Portales, which edged Artesia 8-6 during the regular season, got to the finals with impressive wins over Silver City, 12-0, and St. Pius 22-7. The Rams broke St. Pius' 10-game winning streak in the semifinals.

Cubs return Enright

George Enright, who managed the Midland Cubs in 1981, will return as the team's pilot this summer, according to Bill Schammel, Cubs' general manager.

"Tommy Harmon will not be back with Midland this year. Tommy is leaving baseball for a career in the construction business in Austin," said Schammel. "I'm looking forward to George coming back to Midland. I got along well with him when he was here in 1981 and feel really good about his decision to come back to Midland.

"It's going to be a good situation since George coached last summer with the Cubs' Class A farm club in Salinas. He knows the young talent and we should be getting some of those players. He knows most of the kids and has worked with them."

Schammel also announced that Glenn "Goose" Gregson will return to the Midland Cubs this summer as pitching coach. Gregson coached with Harmon last season.

Wright joins USFL

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The San Antonio Gunslingers of the United States Football League have signed former Midland Lee quarterback Brad Wright, who had been on the roster of three National Football League teams, club officials announced Wednesday.

The 6-3, 209-pound quarterback still holds several records at New Mexico, including the most total passing yardage in a single game — 452 yards in a 1978 game against Texas Tech.

After 28 years, kicker makes team

By JIM COLEMAN
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — It was late in the fourth quarter when the Valley College Monarchs scored against Los Angeles City College. Gerald Broderson trotted onto the field to attempt the extra point.

Judging from the tension, you would never have guessed it was 50-6 in Valley College's favor. Players and fans chanted "Bro-die! Bro-die!" as the teams lined up.

Broderson stepped off his usual four paces, awaiting the snap. His heart was pounding as the weary, soiled players glared at him from across the line of scrimmage.

A lot was riding on his kick. It was the culmination of a year of hard work and dedication.

It was the first, and so far the only, appearance in a game by the silver-haired, 53-year-old father of four, a man who originally tried out for the Valley college team in 1955 — long before his fellow teammates were born.

THE SNAP came. Broderson kicked. The ball sailed true and, as he remembers more than a month later, "all hell broke loose." His teammates mobbed him with high and low fives. "It was probably the most exciting moment of my life."

Broderson, an inventor and aspiring actor, was a 5-foot-9, 190-pound fullback when he first tried out for the Monarchs squad three decades ago.

"I had 18-inch calves," he said. "I was a real monster."

Unfortunately, he ran into a bigger monster one day in practice, lost two teeth and broke a thumb. By the time he was healthy again, he had gone from first string to fourth and was placed on the junior varsity.

Broderson did not go out for football the following year, opting instead to start a family. Three wives, four children and a host of jobs later, the Hollywood resident found himself back at Valley College last year, majoring in theater arts. He did not see any reason why he should not try out for the football team again, although he had put on his last pair of shoulder pads 27 years earlier.

"I THOUGHT I could get it right this time," Broderson said. "But I'm not the same football player, obviously."

Coach Chuck Ferrero had no use for a running back in his 50s, and he refused to allow Broderson to try out last year. "So I decided to learn how to kick," Broderson said. "That way, if someone hit me, it would cost them 15 yards."

He bought a pair of kicking shoes and began practicing every day. Winter was soon finished, but Broderson was not. He came out this past summer and trained alongside the Valley College players. But Ferrero's answer was still no when Broderson tried to come out for the team again this year.

"He did everything to stop me," Broderson said. "I guess he didn't want me to get hurt or didn't want to be bothered by the situation it might create. I had to go through the affirmative action board to get on the team. And I had to pay an extra $350 to get a medical release."

Ferrero explained that he "didn't want the publicity to take away from the efforts of the other kids."

Against his better judgment, the coach, with a little push from the college district, finally agreed to give Broderson a shot, so long as he followed the same rules as the other players. And old No. 81 has, running, lifting weights and exercising along with everybody else.

"HE'S BEEN absolutely no problem," Ferrero said. "I think he'd do anything in the world to help this team. He's in tremendous condition. He's here every day. He shags balls. He runs the sprints — he's behind everybody else, but he runs them. If he wants to come out next year, he's more than welcome."

The players had to shed some initial astonishment before they could respond to Broderson. "Most people were shocked, amazed or surprised he came out," said Dennis Hochman, the Monarchs' first-string placekicker. "The coach told him we had five 50-yard place-kickers coming out so it would discourage him.

"Most of the guys look up to him. They like him."

Hochman, a freshman, is one of them: "We get along great. I look at him as a father figure and ask him for advice about my problems. I respect him a lot."

Hooper beats Simonsson in Australian Open first round

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — American Chip Hooper was an impressive winner today over Sweden's Hans Simonsson in straight sets in the first round of the rain-plagued $400,000 Australian Open tennis tournament.

Hooper, of Sunnyvale, Calif., adapted better to the grass surface. His serve was much stronger and he was quick to follow it up by coming to the net in a 6-3, 6-2, 6-3 victory.

American Roscoe Tanner and Aussie Mark Edmondson advanced with victories earlier in the day. Tanner defeated Aussie Kim Warwick 7-6, 6-2, 3-6, 6-3 and Edmonson handled American Charles Strode 6-3, 7-5, 4-6, 7-5.

In one of the toughest matches of the day, American Peter Fleming had trouble in Australian Craig Miller, who matched him stroke for stroke most of the match. Fleming won 7-6, 7-6, 4-6, 6-4.

American Matt Anger, who won his way through the qualifying rounds, upset Miloslav Mecir of Czechoslovakia 7-5, 6-3, 6-1.

Simonsson preferred to play from the base line, but his ground strokes were not deep or strong enough to upset Hooper.

Hooper took an early lead in the first set and, after a brief Simonsson rally, regained control. Simonsson never threatened thereafter.

Heavy rain this week has put the tournament nearly two days behind schedule.

The odd-colored card wins in Three Card Monte, a confidence scheme resembling the old pea and shell game. But the odds are you won't be able to pick the winner any more often than the con artist allows you to pick it.

Con artists operating in area, police believe

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Have you received a phone call from the "FBI" or a "bank examiner"? Have you been approached by a stranger displaying a large amount of cash? Was he soon joined by a second or third stranger?

Have you observed or participated in a game involving three cards? Have you been asked to "show good faith" by obtaining money you have in the bank?

Did the stranger accompany you to the bank? Has someone approached you saying he or she has found a large sum of money, requesting that you put up a matching amount in case the owner shows up?

If the answer to any of those questions is yes, chances are you were the victim or intended victim of a con game. If you have been a victim and not reported it to police, they ask that you do so immediately.

Midland and Odessa police have made several arrests in the past few weeks and have recovered property believed taken in various confidence schemes.

"Many people are too embarrassed to report having been the victim of con artists," said Det. Sgt. Bob Miller of the Midland Police Department. "They're embarrassed to admit that they can be so easily taken.

"This is part of the con artist's overall plan, and failure to report increases his chances of getting away with it. It's happening all too frequently — especially this time of year when people carry a lot of Christmas shopping money."

A favorite scheme is Three Card Monte, which usually works along these lines:

You're approached as you leave a bank or shopping center and asked for a ride to an address written on a piece of paper. Once in the car, the passenger — who may act like a country bumpkin — produces a large roll of money and likely offers to pay you $100 or more for your trouble.

"Dummy" may then ask to stop at a pay phone so he can call the party he wants to visit. At the pay phone, a second stranger comes strolling by and is asked by the dummy for directions. Whereupon the second stranger gets into the car and directs you to another location, often a motel room.

Along the way the dummy flashes his money around and the second stranger warns against doing so.

After arriving at the location, the dummy leaves the car on some pretext and the second passenger remarks how easy it would be to tap him for his roll.

The second stranger then shows you how to play Three Card Monte, which is similar to the old "shell and pea" game. He builds your confidence by demonstrating how he can pick the winning card for you to bet on.

You may win a hand or two and be urged to up your bet. Other strangers might "happen by." They're known as shills or boosters, and their job is to arouse enthusiasm for the game. Of course, the hand is faster than the eye and you wind up the loser.

"Two Odessa victims lost a total of about $15,000," said Miller. "The average loss per victim is about $5,000. One suspect told me he could make up to $200,000 a year — and it's all tax-free."

One Midland victim's watch, jewelry and money have been recovered, but police can't return the property because the victim's identity isn't known.

"Victims often believe they've lost their money gambling," Miller added. "They're unaware it was a con game and don't report it."

Victims of any con game are urged to contact police. In Midland, call Miller at 683-4281. In Odessa, call Det. Bianca Brister at 333-3641.

MMH takes delivery of new scanner

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

The arrival of an expensive piece of equipment will not only increase diagnostic capabilities and support work being done at the Allison Permian Basin Cancer Center, but it also will provide a base for cooperation between Midland Memorial and Parkview hospitals.

The $1 million CT Scanner, a sophisticated piece of equipment that provides cross-sectional X-ray images of the head and body will replace an outdated machine, said MMH President Ray Branson during a monthly new conference Wednesday morning.

"There's not a more advanced CT Scanner," he said of the General Electric 9800 CT Scanner.

The certificate of need application to replace a second generation scanner with the fifth generation piece of equipment was approved in September by the Texas Health Facilities Commission in Austin. The THFC must approve all equipment, services and expansions which exceed $600,000.

The new scanner will provide more accurate images faster than the old one, which will be traded in to General Electric, according to Branson. "We can't justify having two."

However, two hospitals will be using it, he said, explaining that the machine will be available for Parkview patients.

The competition between the two hospitals escalated during the last couple of years at hearings before the THFC on Parkview's request for a $17.5 million 110-bed replacement hospital and MMH's request for a $15.1 million 77-bed expansion. MMH's application was approved and Parkview's amended application for a $17 million 100-bed replacement facility is expected to be ruled on early this month.

MMH directors voted not to oppose the amended facility, which would be named the Doctor's Hospital of the Permian Basin.

"I'm looking for there to be a good working relationship with Parkview — and the Doctor's Hospital if it's built — to the advantage of both hospitals and to the community itself," Branson said. "I don't think an adversarial relationship, whether real or implied, in the health field does anybody any good."

He added, however, that a strong, competitive nature between facilities in the medical community does have its benefits.

According to Branson, the CT Scanner and management services will be shared by both hospitals "in an effort to reduce the costs."

The new CT Scanner and renovation of the area to accommodate it totaled $1.25 million. Two million dollars in junior lien revenue bonds were approved to finance the project, plus a two-story parking garage. A $531,800 bid on the garage, to be built on the east parking lot, was awarded to J.W. Cooper of Odessa. Clearing of the lot is expected to take place within two weeks and the project should be completed in March.

The MMH Foundation Board of Governors presently is trying to raise funds to finance the junior lien revenue bonds.

Construction of the 77-bed expansion is expected to begin in February 1984, Branson said, and completion of the new building will require about 18 months. Expansion of the present building will require another six months, he said.

Requests for a proposed partnership on MMH's chemical dependency unit have been sent to several companies "in the business of providing chemical dependency and psychiatric services," Branson said. Replies are due in a couple of weeks and will be reviewed by an ad hoc committee at that time.

According to Branson, MMH officials are seeking a company that will "build and basically own it but not without (MMH) having some say-so abut how it is governed."

The 50-bed drug treatment center would be built on a 10-acre tract of land, worth about $1 million and donated by Scharbauer Brothers and Co.

Expert testifies to draw's nitrate levels

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A Midland County consultant said he did not know how much nitrate levels along Monahans Draw were affected by effluent from two water reclamation plants in Odessa, as a hearing on the renewal of waste discharge permits continued Wednesday at the Texas Water Commission.

The city of Odessa seeks to renew waste discharge permits for the South Dixie Water Reclamation Plant and the East Water Reclamation Plant, but the case is being opposed by the City of Midland and Midland County.

"I don't know the original (nitrate) concentrations in the wells" along Monahans Draw, said Joe Reed, president of Ed L. Reed and Associates, who testified of high nitrate levels caused by effluent from the plants.

"We looked at a cross-section of wells" near the draw, he said. "There's a definite band of high nitrate concentration along the draw."

Although Reed said he did not know the originial concentrations of nitrates in the area, he noted such high magnitudes could only be caused from the effluent. Testing revealed levels of nitrates ranging from 45 milligrams per liter to 99 milligrams per liter in the wells, he said.

"It's coming from the sewage effluent, which is high in ammonia, which converts to nitrates," Reed said. "I don't know of any other source."

Under questioning from attorneys from Odessa, Reed said he did not know how many septic tanks it would take in the area to affect the water.

GOP hopeful focuses on social problems

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Rob Mosbacher talks of setting up child care and housing projects, which may sound like a departure from typical conservative Republican philosophy.

But he is a party-line Republican with one exception. He calls himself a "sensitive" candidate — one who looks for private sector means of solving social problems left behind on the cutting room floor.

Mosbacher, 32, is a "behind the frontrunner" candidate for the Republican nomination to the U.S. Senate seat being vacated by John Tower at the end of his fourth term.

On Wednesday, he was in Midland — a Republican stronghold — setting up his organization and gathering support for the race. Getting a feel for the territory was his wife, Catherine, formerly an attorney with Senate Legislative Counsel. She and her husband will travel different roads next year in the campaign.

During a luncheon, he focused on getting the private sector involved with social problems and on his attempts to "reach out to Texas."

"People are not used to a Republican candidate talking about child care," said Mosbacher, who launched into two social programs initiated in Houston.

Grain will help, says Ector County agent

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Ector County ranchers, plagued by a two-year drought as have other West Texas cattlemen, may find some relief in a new government grain program, says Ector County Extension Agent Jim Mazurkiewicz.

The program, designed to sell damaged corn at 75 percent of the government's floor price, was signed into law by President Reagan Tuesday as a provision of a dairy and tobacco price support bill.

"It'll help," said Mazurkiewicz, who believes the 30-40 ranchers in the program. Those ranchers have been faced with poor grazing conditions on rangeland all year long, as only 3.41 inches of precipitation fell through September — 30 percent of what is normally received.

Mazurkiewicz said the program "would be a cheap way to feed cattle, instead of ranchers inputting the cost all themselves...I don't see why they wouldn't (use it)."

The extension agent said the Texas Department of Agriculture contacted him recently and asked for input on how the program best could be implemented. Mazurkiewicz said he suggested the corn be cubed so it could be fed on the ground, "the way ranchers here feed their cattle."

"I don't know if they're going to or not," he added. "It would be for ease of feeding instead of having it loose on the ground. There would be less wasted."

The area Farmers Home Administration office in Stanton, which will assist in implementation of the program in Ector County and elsewhere, has not yet received word from the federal government on details of the program.

"I've heard nothing official," said FHA county supervisor Ron Bruton.

Bruton added that it is not certain yet how widespread the use of the program will be.

"There's been so many that've alreay sold their cattle, there's no way of knowing," he explained.

Federal officials say 83 million bushels of qualified corn — grades 4, 5 and sample — lie in storage in 27 states, 21 million of it in Texas. Livestock producers in counties that have been declared disaster areas due to drought will be eligible for participation in the program.

More than 20 West Texas counties were declared drought disaster areas earlier this year.

Vestiges of Orwell's '1984' already upon society

You don't have to wait until 1984 for 1984 to get here.

Its vestiges already are upon society.

It's stealthily been around for awhile. It just gets so familiar that it becomes almost unobstrusive. It's insidious.

And once you're aware of the sneaky Medusa that is 1984, it's almost too late. You're frozen in helpless horror. If it were a game, it would almost be like playing one of those frivolous but intense computer games, such as PacMan. The encroaching forces are after you — the target on the screen — and invariably they'll snarl and consume you. But you and they return to battle again. It's ego against a machine.

1984 is Ego against ego.

In George Orwell's 1984 and in the real (whatever that is) world, it's not so simple. Big Brother is always watching; the gestapo of the totalitarian society abhors freedom, liberty, individualism, love, truth and, of course, privacy. Nothing is free. The exercise of freewill is constantly censored.

Today, there's encroachment. There's no escape. But don't surrender; it's no fun being bound if there's no struggle. Besides, there's no escape if you don't try.

Survey your bondage and the constant surveillance about you.

At home, there's absolutely no escape. The spouse is out to get you firmly planted in your rightful place. That's totalitarianism.

If you rebel, you split the property; you'll get the outside of the house and the spouse will be the inside. That's 50-50. What's unfair about that?

At the bank and in the stores, hidden cameras record your ever move. Suspicious guards and sleuths watch you as if you were the embodiment of the Boston Strangler and the Dalton Gang.

At retail stores, which are eager to get your money, often tend to question your integrity. The unwitting clerks are agents of Big Brother.

Unquestioningly, they'll take your plastic credit cards, frown on a fold of bills, and sometimes treat a bank check as if it were counterfeit and you were a fraud. On the chance that the check might be converted to money, the cashier may accept the draft on which he or she will make notations from you plastic credit cards and other identification.

All the while, you're being watched.

You might check the elevator and alleys for sleuths and secret cameras and bugging devices. Check your car, your bedroom and study, and the church pews.

At work, Big Brother is on the prowl. He's ever watchful for any sign of rebellion within his dictatorial domain. If you stay within the ranks and keep in step, you may be spared the rod. If you escape, you may be out in limbo or in management, where you'll become one of Big Brother's lieutenants.

Now, the really big Big Brother is within the maze of government and the corporate conglomerates which court it. Once Big Brother really gets organized, figures out what he can do with a malleable and often submissive public, he can take control of what is already at his command. He just can't yet figure out what to do with himself and you...yet.

When Big Brother subtly and treacherously gains control of the airwaves and feeds his propaganda via intelligent and gibberish means, he's got his subjects contained like cattle in a slaughterhouse feedlot.

What Big Brother would want with the masses all in unison is without reason, logic and thought.

It has something to do with an insatiable desire for power.

One is a child care program for latch-key children — those whose parents are at work when they go home after school. Mosbacher said the plan has been developed with the Houston school system and the private sector to provide educational care for these children. It is funded by contributions of parents whose children are in the program and by the private sector. The school system contributes the space and pays the utility bills.

"No taxpayers' money is being used," he said.

Then there's the substandard public housing project on the edges of downtown Houston. Developers were eyeing the prime land eagerly although the black residents clung to it because it held a place in their history. Mosbacher said that area was settled by slaves freed during the Civil War.

An agreement was worked out with the people in that neighborhood, the Houston Housing Authority and developers. One part of the housing project will be demolished, the land will be sold at a premium price to developers and that money will be used to construct more housing nearby. The city has agreed to improve streets, sewage and public transportation at the new location, he continued.

"The only government money involved is in subsidizing the rents of those people," said the candidate.

Mosbacher, who has held no public office but worked six years for Sen. Howard Baker, sees himself as No. 2 in the Republican primary. He places himself behind U.S. Rep. Phil Gramm of College Station and in front of Rep. Ron Paul of Lake Jackson.

But in his travels around Texas, Mosbacher said he's found the Republicans "are taking time to make up their minds," and he feels that may help his bid. In addition, he is trying to pull over Democrats who claim they want someone "who could understand the problems."

Mosbacher admitted he has a problem with name identification in the state whereas Gramm has that sewn up with the publicity he gained as a Boll Weevil Democrat and then in switching parties last year.

In fact, the names Mosbacher has been called give his traveling staff a laugh. He's been introduced as Rob Mosback, Rob Mosmumble-mumble, or Mobbacker. In one town he finally resorted to putting the letters on a marquee himself after someone else misspelled the name three times.

Mosbacher has set up a statewide steering committee of persons experienced in government and Republican politics. Included are Midlanders Bobby Holt and Caddell Smith Liedtke. But there's also Michel T. Halbouty, chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Halbouty Energy Co.; Polly Sowell, former top aide to Gov. Bill Clements; Roger Wallace, organization director for Tower's 1972 senate campaign and phone bank chairman in 1982 for Clements; and Ben Love, chairman and CEO of Texas Commerce Bancshares, Inc.

If Mosbacher could take the lead from Gramm, he sees his strongest Democratic opponent being U.S. Kent Hance of Lubbock. But he also predicted Hance won't win that party's nomination.

"Hance has a tremendous name ID problem to overcome. What makes him attractive in West Texas — support of President Reagan's economic program and the energy business — makes him unattractive in East Texas," said Mosbacher, giving the nomination to former congressman Bob Krueger.

The Republican said he has raised about $275,000 for the primary, which should end with a price tag of $2 million.

Convicted armed robber gets eight more years

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Richard Lee Uptain, who was sentenced to 10 years in prison for an April 27 armed robbery in Midland, this week was meted out an additional eight-year prison term for the same robbery.

In both trials, he had pleaded guilty to the offense but opted to have jurors set punishment.

Co-defendant Gerald Fred "Jerry" Chapman, 34, likewise pleaded guilty to the robbery after he had rejected a 25-year sentence offered in a plea-bargain agreement and chose to let a jury in 142nd State District Court set his punishment. He got a 20-year sentence.

Janet Copeland, Midland County assistant district attorney, said the state wasn't satisfied with just the 10-year sentence the jury awarded Uptain.

"We felt that the facts, the situation, warranted more than a 10-year sentence," said Ms. Copeland, who was joined by an another assistant DA, Michael Williams, in prosecuting the case. "The other defendant (Chapman) got 20 years for the same offense, for the same facts. Since the other defendant got 20 years, we felt he (Uptain) deserved 20, too."

The eight-year prison sentence handed Uptain in his second trial may run concurrently with the initial sentence or be "stacked" to gross the 34-year-old man an 18-year prison term. Whether the sentences run consecutively or concurrently is up to the presiding judge, Vann Culp, in Midland's 238th State District Court.

Uptain, Chapman and a third defendant, 44-year-old Joe Lee Corbin, each was indicted on three counts of aggravated robbery, a first-degree felony which is punishable by up to 99 years or life imprisonment and the imposition of a $10,000 fine.

They were accused of holding up Canton's Decorating Shop in west central Midland. At the time, the defendants reportedly were unemployed and had traveled to Midland to find work but were unsuccessful in job hunting.

Uptain and Chapman reportedly were armed with pistols when they allegedly robbed, taped up and threatened to kill Tom Canton, 48; his daughter, Robbie Haynie, 23, and Harmon Duke Smith, 38, a Canton employee, if they resisted the robbery.

Approximately $56,000 in cash, jewelry and other valuables were taken in the holdup.

The third defendant, Corbin, allegedly was driving the get-away car.

In their statements to police, Canton, Ms. Haynie and Smith said the two robbers had used foul language during the holdup, bound them, and threatened to kill them if they resisted or if they got unbound and tried to follow them. Despite the warning, Canton and Smith broke loose of their bonds. Canton got a pistol from a desk drawer, rushed out the door and fired at the fleeing car.

Minutes after the robbery, Uptain, Chapman and Corbin were pursued by Midland police, ducked into Midland Park Mall to avoid the officers but were arrested there.

The second trial of Uptain, an employed construction worker from Phoenix, Ariz., doesn't constitute double jeopardy, since he was indicted three times — for robbing Canton, his daughter, and Smith.

Corbin has yet to be tried.

Police seek armed robber

Police are searching for an armed robber who held up the Lexington Motor Inn on South Midkiff Road Wednesday night.

A clerk and the assistant manager told officers a black man in his 20s entered the motel shortly before 10 p.m. and said: "This is a robbery. I want all your money."

He was carrying a pistol under his coat and escaped withn an undisclosed amount of money.

Man says $50,000 stolen

ODESSA — Police are investigating a report made by an Odessa man Wednesday night that $50,000 in cash was taken from a key-lock safe in his apartment.

Preliminary investigations found no sign of forced entry into the safe or apartment of John A. Alderman, 36, of 3720 Tanglewood Drive in Odessa.

Hightower providing ranchers with options

Jim Hightower

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower says his department is providing drought-stricken West Texas ranchers with a list of options to get federal corn to their livestock at the lowest possible cost.

"Our role is simply to put buyers in touch with sellers, trying to grease the skids a bit so the corn can move as quickly as possible, at the lowest market price available," Hightower told a news conference Wednesday.

He said he had been trying for five months to get the U.S. Department of Agriculture to release federally owned corn from storage in the Panhandle so ranchers can save their herds.

On Nov. 1 the state filed a lawsuit to get the corn released, but recently Congress enacted legislation to turn it loose. Hightower said the USDA estimates 10 million bushels are stored in one grain elevator.

Asked if the state would pursue the suit, Hightower said, "No, we're not going to pursue that case on that basis. What we wanted was the corn released, and I think we now have it."

Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox said, however, he would wait until the surplus grain is actually released before seeking dismissal of the suit.

"We're talking survival here," said Hightower. "This is not anything that's really going to make it a profitable year or anything like that."

He said if the federal government allows proper discounts for damaged corn, ranchers ought to be able to buy it for 25 cents to $1.80 per bushel, compared with a market price of $3.10. But the rancher would still have to pay for transportation and, in some cases, processing.

"Even at these prices this is expensive," Hightower said. "It's like getting half price off on a Mercedes — you've still got to be able to afford the other half."

Hightower said his department will offer a referral service for ranchers to arrange low-cost transportation and processing of the corn.

"We have compiled a list of addresses and phone numbers of all truckers in the area who hold a permit to haul this corn, we have a list of the railroad companies that can move it, and we have put together a list of processors the ranchers can use," he said.

Barefoot granted another stay

EL PASO (AP) — Texas death row inmate Thomas Andy Barefoot, who was scheduled to die by lethal injection Dec. 14, has been granted a stay of execution by a federal judge — the second stay the convicted murderer has received this year.

Barefoot, 37, was sentenced to die for the 1978 slaying of a Central Texas policeman.

U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton of El Paso, however, on Wednesday "granted the stay because there are two cases regarding the death penalty before the U.S. Supreme Court," said Steve Rogers, an attorney for the judge.

Rogers said all Texas death cases will probably have to wait until the Supreme Court decides a California case involving the proportionality question and the appeal of another Texas death row inmate, James Autry.

Barefoot first was scheduled to die in January, but the Supreme Court granted a last-minute stay, saying it intended to use Barefoot's case to decide how federal courts should handle emergency death penalty appeals.

Rogers said the high court has ruled on that issue, which he labeled a "procedural matter."

But he said the two death penalty cases pending before the Supreme Court are "really substance matters. The Supreme Court is deciding in death penalty cases whether the penalty is proportional to the crime committed and whether it is proportional to other sentences."

Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox said the stay was "not totally unexpected."

"I guess what we are going to have to do now is just wait until the Supreme Court decides that California case and then make a determination of what impact its got on our Texas statutes and procedure," Mattox said.

NTSB investigating Trailways bus accident

LIVINGSTON (AP) — Federal investigators today sought to determine why a Continental Trailways bus that police think was speeding rammed a truck and careened 40 feet into a creek, killing six passengers and injuring the driver and six other riders.

An eight-member task force from the National Transportation Safety Board arrived late Wednesday from Washington "to try to determine factually what happened" in the predawn accident, spokesman Steve Blackistone said.

The federal team will also "make safety recommendations if appropriate," Blackistone said.

The wrecked bus was kept overnight at a collision shop in nearby Huntington and will probably be taken to a Trailways facility in Dallas, perhaps today, said state Trooper Melvin Hughes.

Trooper David Sandlin, who is heading the investigation for the state Department of Public Safety, said it appeared that the driver of the truck had been operating properly.

"The bus was traveling at, in my opinion, an excessive speed," Sandlin said. "It didn't fall down into the creek like a heavy bus like that would — it flew over the top of it."

The bus, bound from Shreveport, La., to Houston with 11 passengers aboard, clipped the rear of the empty flat-bed trailer-truck, rammed through a guardrail over Milton Creek, then vaulted the creek before slamming into the muddy embankment.

Four people crawled or were thrown from the wreck, said Corky Cochran, fire chief in this southeastern Texas town about 75 miles north of Houston.

"There was a lot of confusion, a lot of moaning," he said. "It's understandable. There you are, upside down in the dark."

Troopers said two people — one of them driver Ed Perry of Houston — were pinned in the mangled wreckage for 90 minutes as rescue workers cut the top off the bus.

Ex-DPS officer trying to get his job back

AUSTIN (AP) — James Wade of Vidor says his troubles all began about two years ago when he was a Department of Public Safety highway patrolman and complained to his sergeant about a "ticket quota."

"We were expected to write so many tickets per routine day," Wade testified Wednesday.

Before that he was a respected law officer, known affectionately by citizens in his territory as "Uncle Jimmy." Today, he has no job, suffers stress-related health problems, and he says he is battling persistent rumors of homosexuality.

Wade, 38, asked the Public Safety Commission on Wednesday that he be reinstated with all back pay and benefits. He was dismissed in May after he refused a transfer from Beaumont to Garland, a transfer he argues was part of a campaign of harassment against him by Beaumont district DPS supervisors.

The three-member commisison, the policy-making board of the DPS, said it will decide Wade's appeal on Dec. 7.

Wade, who has also filed an $18 million damage suit against certain DPS officials in federal court in Beaumont, testified he was a respected officer without medical problems until he complained to his sergeant and his captain about what he said was a daily required quota of 10 traffic citations per day.

After Wade complained about the "quota system," he said his relationship with his sergeant deteriorated, and he was later accused of making homosexual advances by a man at a roadside park.

Wade, a 15-year DPS veteran, said the park was a homosexual hangout that patrolmen frequently had to check, and he said his accuser made up the charge apparently to retaliate against the police checks.

The accusation led to an internal hearing at which Wade, married and the father of two sons, was absolved. He said his accuser never testified against him, and Wade passed a lie detector test, but the rumors persisted, adding to his stress.

Accident victims listed

LIVINGSTON (AP) — Here is a list of people killed and injured in Wednesday's Continental Trailways bus accident:

Students capitalize on disease

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Some students at Trinity University are trying to capitalize on a recent campus typhoid outbreak by printing T-shirts reading, "Typhoid Fever — catch it."

Eight people have been confirmed as having the infectious disease, health officials said Wednesday.

Student Duke Maines put 40 typhoid T-shirts on the market Monday and immediately sold out — at $7.50 each. By dinner, he said, he had 30 more orders. The phrase on the shirts is a parody of a slogan in a major league baseball promotion.

Captain Courteous, left, played by Mrs. J.K. "Kip" Boyd, and Pretty Polly, far right, played by Mrs. Jerry Barden, show Grabby Greg, center, played by Mrs. Steven Melzer, and other pupils in the skit sharing is good manners. The program is presented to MISD first and second graders by the Junior League.

'Manners matter' is moral of story

By DIANE BOOTH
Lifestyle Writer

There are some words in the English language that can never be used enough — excuse me, please, thank you and you're welcome.

That's what more than 100 youngsters from Long, Travis and Santa Rita elementary schools learned recently during a series of skits about good manners presented by the Junior League of Midland.

"Mistress Mannerly", dressed appropriately in a black suit, pillbox hat, white gloves and spectacles, was introduced by a clown. Both players told youngsters seated at the Santa Rita school cafeteria about the "golden rules" for good manners.

"It doesn't matter if you are a boy or girl, man or woman," Mistress Mannerly said. "Good manners help us to get along with one another. These rules are very, very important."

Mistress Mannerly introduced the "Polite Partners," who work together to help people improve their manners. "Captain Courteous", leaped onto the stage in his purple cape, red top, tights and visor. His partner, "Polite Polly," appeared in pigtails, skirt and apron, ready to combat bad manners wherever they may have lurked.

The proponents of good etiquette burst into a song with a polite message, "It Matters If You Have Good Manners."

During three different sketches Miss Mannerly and the Polite Partners stressed the importance of good manners. Whenever the captain and Polly were needed, the children were encouraged to yell for them to come to the rescue.

Captain Courteous and Polly showed the children how to make the classroom a nicer place for everyone by teaching "Grabby Greg" to share his crayons and to ask politely when he wanted to use other people's things.

"Messie Bessie" learned good table manners at lunch time with the help of Mistress Mannerly and her two cohorts. The crowd of children yelled "Good Manners" at the encouragement of Mistress Mannerly when Messie Besie used her napkin, removed her elbows from the table and politely asked for seconds.

At recess "Pushy Paul" learned how to take turns sharing his new basketball, play according to the rules and not to quit if he lost the game. When Paul violated the code of manners, Mistress Mannerly froze the impolite youngster in his tracks with a shake of her tambourine.

Polite Polly waved her magic wand and when Pushy Paul resumed his game, he remembered his manners.

The cast concluded the show by singing its theme song and walking throughout the audience shaking hands and singing.

Junior League members who starred in the play were Mrs. Charles Younger, the clown; Mrs. Mark Leaverton, Mistress Mannerly; Mrs. J. K. "Kip" Boyd, Captain Courteous; Mrs. Jerry Barden, Polite Polly; Mrs. Steven Melzer, Grabby Greg; Mrs. Ron Rosignol, Pushy Paul; and Mrs. Richard Dulaney, Messie Bessie.

The play is presented as part of the league's cultural arts program to all first and second graders in conjunction with the Midland Independent School District.

The program is one of many funded by the league's Next to New used clothing shop.

The organization's annual Christmas Bazaar will be from 1-4 p.m., Saturday at The Next to New Shop, 509 E. Illinois. Holiday toys, decorations and clothing will be sold and Santa Claus is expected to make a brief appearance.

Some religious value to children's books

Hearst Feature Service

Before we're overwhelmed with Christmas tinsel, glitter and erzatz sentiment, let's take a look at children's books with true religious values.

"The Writing on the Wall" is a magnificent retelling of the happenings at Belshazzar's feast from the vantage point of a small kitchen boy. The language is powerful: "He spooned up strawberries as bright as blood, and poured on cream as thick as pride," and only occasionally descends for effect to "ugly great idols covered all over with pearls and rubies, like high-class measles."

In this interpretation by Leon Garfield and Michael Bragg, Daniel adds a coda for the kitchen boy — God punishes the greedy, not the needy.

It's interesting to compare this version with Daniel 5 in "The Illustrated Children's Bible." David Christie-Murray uses clear and direct language to effectively recount the biblical texts, Old Testament and New.

"The Writing on the Wall," Lothrop, Lee and Shepard.

"The Illustrated Children's Bible," Grosset and Dunlap.

AT WIT'S END

Holiday turkey seems eternal

By ERMA BOMBECK

Is anybody out there still eating turkey?

Or am I the only one who is growing plumage on her chest and strutting when I'm called?

We've been eating off that bird for seven days now and we still have two legs, two thighs and 15 pounds of white meat to go.

A turkey is kinda like split pea soup. You only have to make it once in your life and from there on in you just keep adding water. Chili is like that too. You can feed a single person off it or you can feed 300. It all depends on how often you want to experience a piece of hamburger.

But back to turkey.

No one will ever convince me a turkey does not have life after Thanksgiving. It's his ultimate revenge for the indignity he suffers at the hands of cooks all over the world. First, we neuter them with surgery. Just when they look good minus a few pounds, we stuff them up with dressing until they burst. After hours in a hot oven, we poke at them with forks before we transfer them to a platter where they sit in a compromising position with their legs falling apart like divining rods.

That's why, immediately following dinner, they begin to grow.

If finishing off turkey leftovers doesn't pull your family together, nothing will.

"Mom, I have to fly back to L.A. I can't sit here and finish off your turkey. I have a job."

"No one leaves this house until the turkey is gone!"

"Mom, you know I'm a vegetarian and can't eat meat or poultry."

"EAT!"

Throughout the years, we've had leftover turkey glazed, molded, fried, creamed and barbecued.

I've put it on a bun, in a salad, a pie, soups, casseroles and stuffed it into pockets of bread.

I've arranged it on skewers, pounded it into fillets, stir-fried it, and married it to rice and broccoli.

I've broken my own rule and made it into dishes I can't even pronounce: tetrazzini, ramekin, cassoulet, florentine, kiev, piccata and strata.

I've made turkey chip cookies, filled in cracks with it and carved phone messages into it.

Usually, I throw away no leftover before its time, but with a turkey, do it within a week or you have a dependent living with you for the rest of your life!

Robots star in new children's books

Hearst Feature Service

Haven't you sometimes dreamed of owning a robot who would wash windows, clean ovens, and do whatever tasks you'd rather not face? For many children, a robot is probably a better way to get their rooms clean than a visit from the good fairy.

Young Jack not only has a robot, but a robot who is his identical twin in "Omega Station," by Alfred Slote. Oh, there are some differences: Danny One, the robot, is stiff-at-the-knees and smarter in arithmetic. This is an exciting, fanciful tale for 7-10 year olds who enjoy space flights and high adventure involving codes, tooth radios and mad scientists. Every cliche is here, but the book is done in such high humor that it works.

R2D2 and C3PO captured everyone's imagination in "Star Wars," and the two androids figure prominently in "Return of the Jedi." It must be difficult to isolate a story in print from the sound and action that form so much of a movie, but this adaption by Elizabeth Levy results in a wooden, graceless text that is embarrassingly close to the tedious old primers we all make fun of. The illustrations, color photographs from the movie, are so ill-chosen and badly reproduced that they detract rather than add.

Sad, too, is the unattractive cover of "The Isis Pedlar," by Monica Hughes. This is a good example of the "don't judge a book by its cover" rule. Boys and girls 12 and up will like this tale of a 15-year-old saddled with an irresponsible con-artist father.

Group claims children aspirin warning stalled

WASHINGTON (AP) — A consumer group claims that because of aspirin industry pressure, the Reagan administration is holding up a campaign to warn parents against treating childhood chickenpox or flu with aspirin, which some experts think is linked to Reye's syndrome.

But a Public Health Service spokeswoman says that although some components of the campaign have been delayed, the message remains the same and will be delivered in January.

"We certainly are not giving up letting parents know there is a suspected association between the use of aspirin and Reye's syndrome," said Shellie Lengel, the spokeswoman.

The accusation was made on Tuesday by Dr. Sidney M. Wolfe, director of Public Citizen's Health Research Group.

Wolfe noted that officials from the Public Health Service and the Food and Drug Administration met with aspirin industry representatives in October. Shortly afterwards, he said, a decision was made to discard 500,000 consumer leaflets that were to be given away in grocery stores. A radio script containing the warning has not been distributed to 5,000 stations who were supposed to get it, he added.

The group has been urging the department to require warning labels on aspirin packages saying children with influenza or chickenpox should not take aspirin because of its association with the disease.

Wolfe said a decision against warning labels on aspirin products combined with the delay in distributing the leaflets means "the Reagan administration is willing to condemn American children to death or brain damage from Reye's syndrome in order to please the aspirin industry."

Wolfe noted that the department began its public information campaign during the 1982-83 flu season after pulling back from a plan to require warning labels while further research on the link between the drug and the disease was conducted.

Youngsters attracted to books' sound

GENEVA, N.Y. (AP) — Young children who beg their parents to read stories aloud are attracted more by the cadence of the voice than by the story line, a professor at Hobart and William Smith Colleges said.

"Kids come into tune with the music of the language well before they comprehend the plot," according to Charles Temple.

Although children don't grasp the plot until the age of 2 or 3, the simple act of reading aloud can create a "fantastic association" that can start a lifelong love of books, Temple said.

DEAR ABBY

Daughter offers tips on being great mom

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: The younger generation was asked to submit 10 tips on how to be a good kid, right? Well, I'm a 15-year-old girl who put together 10 tips on how to be a great mom. Here they are:

— Don't yell at your kids in front of everyone. (Wait until you get home.)

— Don't compare your kids to other siblings. ("Joe never did that at your age" and "Karen always got A's in math.")

— If your teen-agers are at a party, roller rink or the movies, and the curfew is 11 p.m., don't run in screaming at 11:05 to tell them they're late.

— Don't take things away for the wrong reason. Example: If your son didn't mow the lawn, don't take away his concert ticket; make him mow the lawn.

— Don't make your kids wear clothes they hate. It's embarrassing to be different from their friends.

— If you don't like your kids' friends, don't try to keep them apart. It will just make them more determined to get together.

— Don't snoop around in your kids' rooms, reading diaries or personal letters. (How would you like them to do that to you?)

— If your children have messy rooms, don't tidy them up — let them do it, and if they don't, they will have to live in them — not you.

— Don't say "yes" to something one day and "no" the next. It's embarrassing for us to tell our friends that Mom has changed her mind.

— Tell your children that you love them. They need to hear those words. — TERRI ON LONG ISLAND

DEAR ABBY: The holidays are closing in. Please ask your readers not to send magazine subscriptions as gifts without first checking to see if they are desired or perhaps duplicates.

My mailbox is cluttered with such. Later come the follow-ups asking me to re-subscribe to magazines I didn't want in the first place.

A subscription to the daily newspaper or one's hometown weekly is a welcome gift.

It bothers me to know that a well-meaning friend has spent money on a gift that is unread, then tossed out. — L. IN SEATTLE

DEAR L.: I read you. And I hope my readers read you (and me), too.

DEAR ABBY: Is it characteristic of all old men to talk back to the TV? It is most upsetting because when my husband watches TV, it sounds like there are three people in the living room — when it's only him.

When I am talking on the phone, the party I'm talking to always asks, "Do you have company?" I'm ashamed to admit it's just my husband talking to the TV.

Abby, is my husband senile, or is this a form of insanity? Don't use our name. He is retired and everybody thinks he's normal. — TALKER'S WIFE

DEAR WIFE: He may be perfectly all right, so unless you have other reasons to question your husband's mental well-being, don't worry about it. Thank your lucky stars you have a man who's alive, occupied and entertained. But it might be good for him to get out of the house and talk to some "real" people occasionally.

(If you put off writing letters because you don't know what to say, send for Abby's complete booklet on letter-writing. Send $2 and a long, stamped (37 cents), self-addressed envelope to Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Holiday wardrobe can be easy

By BETTY W. KINSER
Copley News Service

To make a splash at each and every one of those holiday parties, you do not need a head-to-toe brand-new outfit for each one.

All you need are a few pieces that you can mix, match, rearrange and camouflage. You'll be the belle of the ball.

The following is only one way to put together a holiday wardrobe.

The foundation of your wardrobe can be either a long skirt, short skirt, long culottes or even a basic dress. The color should be dark neutral such as black, brown, gray or navy.

In a light color (ivory, white, cream or icy pastel) choose a silk or silklike blend "dressy" blouse.

For topper choose a splashy vest in a bright color and a spiffy cardigan.

The colors you select for your "toppers" would, of course, depend on the colors of your other pieces. Each piece should coordinate with each of the others.

Dog wheels around with cart

JONESBORO, Ark. (AP) — Shan, a 3-year-old Pekingese, is going to need some new wheels soon because his tires are bald.

Shan gets around with the aid of a small cart-like device built by his owner, Hayden Cooksey. The cart became necessary when Shan, apparently struck by an automobile, was paralyzed in his hindquarters.

"We came home one day," Cooksey said, and found Shan "in his pen in back and he couldn't get up." Cooksey said a veterinarian told him the dog's spinal column had collapsed.

Shan can get around so well, Cooksey said, that bandages have been wrapped around his back paws. In the device, the back paws tend to drag on the ground and can be hurt if not properly cared for, Cooksey said.

Meteor showers, eclipse to occur

December 1
Sunrise 7:31 a.m. Sunset 5:44 a.m. Moonrise 4:29 a.m. Moonset 4:03 p.m.

December 2
A thin crescent moon will rise two degrees below Saturn in the southeastern morning twilight.

December 3
Mercury sets one hour after sunset. Venus is three degrees north of Virgo's bright star, Spica, in the eastern morning sky.

December 4
New moon. Earliest sunset at 5:44 p.m. (the latest sunrise is on January 5).

December 6
Thin crescent moon one degree north of Mercury in the southwestern evening twilight.

December 7
Look for Mars 18 degrees to the upper right and Saturn 10 degrees to the lower left of Venus in the southeastern morning twilight.

December 8
Watch Venus and Saturn get one degree closer each day.

December 10
Venus and Saturn now seven degrees apart, will pass in one week.

December 12
First quarter moon rises at 1:27 p.m. and sets at 12:19 a.m.

December 13
Mercury now sets one and a half hours after sunset in the southwestern evening twilight.

December 14
The Geminid Meteors, debris from an unknown comet, radiate from a point near the bright star Castor in the constellation Gemini.

December 15
The Geminid Meteor Shower continues with up to 100 meteors per hour expected. Sunrise 7:41 a.m. Sunset 5:46 p.m. Moonrise 2:52 p.m. Moonset 3:05 a.m.

December 16
Venus is one degree above Saturn and appears 60 times brighter.

December 17
Venus passes one-sixth degree north of Saturn as they rise three hours ahead of the sun in the southeastern morning sky. This is 1983's closest conjunction of visible planets.

December 19
A penumbral lunar eclipse occurs tonight. Look for a slight shading of the moon's southern limb at 8 p.m. Full moon rises at 5:35 p.m., sets at 7:17 a.m. and passes nearly overhaed at 1 a.m.

December 21
Gemini's two bright stars, Castor and Pollux, rise five degrees ahead of the moon in the northeastern evening sky.

December 22
The Ursid Meteor Shower radiates from the cup part of the Little Dipper. These meteors, from the Comet Tuttle, will be in the sky all night, but so will the moon.

December 24
Moon passes three degrees above Leo's bright star, Regulus.

December 26
The last quarter moon rises at 12:15 a.m. and sets at 1 p.m.

December 27
Mars is midway between the moon and Spica in the morning sky.

December 28
Moon is six degrees north of Mars in the morning sky.

December 29
Moon is one degree above Saturn in the morning sky.

December 30
Moon is one-tenth degree south of Venus in the morning sky.

December 31
Mercury moves into the morning sky and this is the only day in 1983 when all of the planets are in the morning sky together. Sunrise 7:49 a.m. Sunset 5:54 p.m.

Planetarium events planned

December 1
Midland Archeological Society meets at 7:30 p.m.

December 4

Ancient men 'gourmets'

Hearst Feature Service

Whitefish in mustard sauce sounds like nouvelle cuisine. Actually, it's ancienne cuisine. In fact, neolithic.

Archeologists Rolf Rottlander and H. Schlichtherle of the University of Tubingen's Institute for Prehistory in West Germany have found a way to extract traces of baked-in food — fat residues — from the tiny pores found in almost all pottery except fine porcelain, no matter how prehistoric.

When combined with water, the food's fatty-acid composition can be chemically analyzed to find out what was once cooked in the pot. Our previous knowledge of Stone Age delicacies came only from the charred but recognizable remnants of grains, bones or seeds that are unearthed at digs.

Recently, the two researchers found traces of fish fat and mustard-seed oil in neolithic shards uncovered on the shores of Lake Geneva. Astonishingly, whitefish in mustard sauce is a popular Swiss delicacy, even today.

Vitamin C preferred cold remedy

Hearst Feature Service

Vitamin C may have replaced chicken soup as the preferred home remedy for colds, but a recent study suggests that taking megadoses of the vitamin may have some dangerous side effects. People fighting off colds with vitamin C may run a higher risk of iron deficiency or anemia if the supplement is taken in high enough doses, according to a study by Oregon State University researchers.

The study, reported in the American Journal of Clinical Nutrition, showed that ingesting vitamin C in amounts 25 times the recommended daily allowance caused copper levels to drop significantly in the bloodstream.

Copper, found as a trace element in the body, is necessary for the normal "recycling of iron" in order to make new red blood cells, said Dr. Florian Cerklewski, an assistant professor of food and nutrition at Oregon State. Small doses of vitamin C provides a "very beneficial nutrient," Cerklewski said. But he warned those who use megadoses:

"Don't abuse vitamin C with gram quantities (1,000 mg or more per day) and expect there to be no risk."

Millions of Americans take vitamin C, or ascorbic acid, to ward off colds and flu. A recent Gallup Poll showed that 37 percent of Americans take some form of vitamin supplement, with vitamin C far and away the most popular.

Phobias not fears, states of mind

Hearst Feature Service

You take an elevator to the top of a skyscraper and look at the city below. Suddenly, you're overcome with terror; your heart races and you break into a sweat.

Scientists are no longer saying that such intense fears are psychological — merely states of mind. There is new evidence that irrational, paralyzing phobias are inherited biological disorders and the way your brain is organized may predispose you to them.

The brain has two hemispheres that, while physically connected, generally have different functions. The left half is in charge of rational thought and verbal concepts; the right handles nonverbal ideas and emotions. In most men and in right-handed people, the division of labor is pronounced; in women and lefties, however, the brain's halves share many duties. Noting that about 95 percent of people with animal phobias are women, psychologist Claude Chemtob, of the Veterans Administration Hospital in Honolulu, recently noted that about 95 percent of people with animal phobias are women.

He and his colleagues decided to check the possible connection by looking at the frequency of left-handedness. Two groups of women were recruited through a newspaper ad. One group met the diagnostic criteria for having a phobia — for example, a fear of snakes or spiders. The other had similar fears but were not phobic. Both groups were then compared to "normal" women. It was discovered that although there were no more lefties in the phobic group than in the other, the phobics did have the highest percentage of left-handed relatives.

Worm lizards once far-flung travelers

Hearst Feature Service

Strange, nearly blind, nine-inch "worms" with forelegs are found in three separate places in North America. Plate tectonics theory may explain how they got there.

The two-legged animal is actually a reptile (genus Bipes), says herpetologist Theodore Papenfuss of the Museum of Vertebrate Zoology in Berkeley, Calif. "Worm lizards use their feet to dig burrows and live underground, surfacing only in floods. They eat beetle larvae, termites and other small insects they find near tree roots." There are only three species — one found on the remote Baja peninsula, the other two in different parts of Mexico, 500 miles to the southeast.

How did these close relatives get so far apart? They certainly didn't raft across the water, says evolutionary ecologist Benjamin Dial of Texas A&M. "The worm lizards crawl very awkwardly. Moreover, prolonged exposure to salt water would kill them." Other scientists have proposed that Bipes migrated from Baja around the Gulf of California. But no trail of fossils has ever been found.

Plate tectonics theory — which holds that earth's crust is made up of sections that shift independently of one another — provides the most likely explanation: The three populations began as one and were split by plate movement.

"Fifteen million years ago, there was a single population of Bipes in southern Mexico," he says. "Then part of Baja broke off and moved north toward California, and the Sierra Madre del Sur rose on the mainland, yielding three populations."

U.S. cancer survival rates improving

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than half the patients being diagnosed for cancer will live five years and most of those survivors will live at least another five years, the director of the National Cancer Institute said.

Officially, the cancer institute estimated that 48 percent of the patients diagnosed between 1973 and 1979 will live at least five years unless their death is caused by an unrelated factor, Vincent DeVita told the government's National Cancer Advisory Board.

"But this is a very conservative estimate as of 1980," said DeVita, who based his updated estimate on more recent reports from leading cancer centers. "I am convinced that the survival rate is already over 50 percent."

Eighty-five percent of patients who survive for five years will live another five years, the report said.

The five-year survival rate among patients diagnosed from 1960 to 1963 was 38 percent, he said. For patients diagnosed from 1970 to 1973, the survival rate was 42 percent, he said.

DeVita called the increased survival rate "a landmark achievement" helped in part by the a tenfold increase during the last decade in the number of oncologists, doctors who specialize in treating cancer. In 1970 there were 500 oncologists and now there are at least 5,000.

The annual estimate of cancer survival rates was based on reports of all cancers from cities and states that make up 10 percent of the nation's population.

Gladys Knight tastes success again

ENTERTAINMENT

By DENNIS HUNT
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

HOLLYWOOD — Things have not been going that well for singer Gladys Knight since the mid-'70s. She has suffered through a second divorce, financial problems and a slumping recording career that, in turn, diminished the demand for live engagements.

But the slump may be over. Gladys and the Pips have a Top 40 album, "Visions," and a modest hit single, "Save the Overtime for Me." These successes are not on a par with the Top 10 albums and singles they had earlier in their careers but certainly are a marked improvement over the flops they've had in recent years.

Now 39, Miss Knight is a 30-year show-biz veteran who started out winning $2,000 on Ted Mack's "The Original Amateur Hour" when she was 7.

"When you've been in this business as long as I have you don't get too pushed out of shape by anything," she observed matter-of-factly. "Hard times are part of this business. I just sing the best I can and don't worry about it. There are a lot people that still like what we do. We can always get by."

Miss Knight, who lives in Las Vegas, was briefly in town working in a studio on the theme song "Here's That Sunny Day" for the coming feature film "The Buddy System," starring Richard Dreyfuss. She took a break from an afternoon recording session for an interview.

SHE WAS warm and likable, with no trace of toughness. But, she cautioned, "Don't let this pleasant manner fool you: I can be plenty tough when I have to be."

Right away Miss Knight began talking about the "Visions" album. To her, the most significant thing about it is that it was co-produced by a team headed by herself and her brother Merald Knight (one of the Pips). "With one or two exceptions, we've co-produced all the records we've ever done," she pointed out.

"Even back when we were at Motown in the '60s and they were giving us these raggedy, hand-me-down songs from the Temptations and Diana Ross to sing, we were still doing a lot of the producing. But we never asked for any credit — until now. We were naive. We've stopped being naive."

As co-producers, the group takes credit for the successes, but it also must share the blame for the failures. Miss Knight and the Pips have always emphasized middle-of-the-road R&B ballads, both slow and medium-tempo. In the mid-'70s their sound was fine, but now it seems stodgy and outdated.

The key to the success of "Visions" is merely updating the group's sound, making it livelier and punchier. The group can't take all the credit for rejuvenating its sound. Part of it should go to co-producer Leon Sylvers and CBS Records Vice President Larkin Arnold, who also was the executive producer on the LP. Both battled with Miss Knight frequently during the recording sessions.

DISREGARD ANY rumors you have heard about this group breaking up. Miss Knight and the Pips (brother Merald and cousins William Guest and Ed Patten) have never split. Nor do they have any plans to do so.

The rumors grew out of a nasty legal battle over royalties that helped sidetrack their career in the late '70s. Miss Knight sued Buddah Records, the label the group signed with in 1973 after its bitter departure from Motown. As a result of the suit, she and the Pips were legally barred from recording together.

During that time, she recorded a solo album and the Pips made two albums without her. To many observers, this constituted a split. But Miss Knight and the Pips, however, merely regarded it as an opportunity to work separately for a while.

"Some people still don't realize that we legally couldn't record together," she said. "That separation was forced on us, and it was only temporary. We knew as soon as the suit was settled, we'd be back working together."

In 1980, the suit was settled out of court. The group has been recording for Columbia Records ever since.

Many industry observers thought Columbia and Arnold were crazy for signing what a lot of people considered a has-been group. Because of their age — two are nearly 40 and two are just past 40 — some cattily called them Gladys Knight and the Fossils.

UNTIL RECENTLY, it did appear that Columbia had signed a dud. But the success of "Visions" proves there's even room in the contemporary market for "fossils" — if they're playing the right kind of music.

A failing career was not the only trauma Miss Knight faced in the late '70s. Her second marriage, to Barry Hankerson, also was failing. She filed for a divorce in 1981, but it was only settled recently.

The marriage started to sour when Hankerson, a Detroit community activist who later branched into politics, decided to move into the business operations of Miss Knight and the Pips. He reportedly stirred up conflict in the close family unit.

The death blow to the marriage was the disastrous movie "Pipe Dreams," produced by Hankerson and starring Miss Knight. "They kept running out of money on the movie, and they kept coming to me to get them more money," she explained. "I'm still paying for it today. I'm over $4 million in debt from that project."

When she started talking about sinking into a financial abyss, sunny Miss Knight turned into stormy Miss Knight. "I'm not rich, but I should be," she said, fuming. "I have to work every day to get by. I know everybody else works every day too, but they haven't gone through the amount of money I've gone through."

MISS KNIGHT has three children — a 6-year-old son from the Hankerson marriage and a son and a daughter, both college students, from her first marriage. Still, she has never asked either ex-husband for child support.

Theater company's dream comes in seven shades of green

By TIM KLASS
Associated Press Writer

SEATTLE — A dream has come true in seven shades of green and a red neon sculpture for the Seattle Repertory Theater.

The world premiere of Michael Weller's "The Ballad of Soapy Smith" at the $10 million Bagley Wright Theater Center marks the completion of one of the nation's biggest residential professional theater construction projects.

"It's the perfect production to open the theater," says artistic director Daniel Sullivan, "the frontier spirit all up and down the (West) Coast, both positively and negatively."

The tragicomedy of an Alaska con artist in 1897, with 30 actors in 25 scene changes, would have been impossible in the nearby Playhouse, the Rep's home since the theater was founded in 1963.

Producing director Peter Donnelly says it is "one of the most complete production houses for a resident professional theater...one of the most ambitious for one company, no doubt about it."

Designed by Narramore Bain Brady and Johanson, the theater is situated on 2½ acres at the northwest corner of the Seattle Center, site of Century 21 World's Fair in 1962.

From a well-manicured lawn with a view of the Seattle Center fountain and Space Needle, the Bagley Wright rises in a jumble of curves and corners, with thin red lines the color of madrona bark separating seven increasingly darker horizontal bands of green ranging from sauterne to Granny Smith apple.

Atop the facade over the entrance is a Stephen Antonakos sculpture consisting of disconnected angles, curves and lines in red neon.

Inside, the design is far more traditional — "sort of a classical 18th century proscenium theater, except it's a contempory version of it," Donnelly says.

The stage is seen through the rectangle-shaped opening in the wall without an orchestra pit or stage apron.

Rather than an arena stage for "theater in the round," or a thrust stage extending into the audience, the effect is that "the audience extends into the stage," he said.

With 864 seats, just 26 less than the Playhouse, the new theater has a balcony that extends to within 29 feet of the stage. A sweeping convex ceiling avoids a claustrophobic feeling, and prevents "dead" sound areas beneath the balcony.

Standing in the footlights, Donnelly gestures at the empty house with unabashed glee.

"You're within touching distance of the audience. You can command the whole audience with your eyes," he said.

That intimacy is "the thing that has made me happiest," Sullivan said.

The Playhouse had no space for the welter of support activities a theater requires. Shops, offices and rehearsal areas were scattered for miles around the city. Even the administrative offices and box office were in different buildings.

Forty actors can be accommodated in the dressing rooms, each of which is within 30 seconds of the stage and has a toilet and shower. The entire theater is accessible to the handicapped.

From the airplane hangar-sized set shop, Donnelly says, "you can drive a 45-foot semi right up to the stage."

The push for a new theater began in 1974, but a city bond issue that included the project was rejected by voters the next year.

In 1977, voters passed a scaled-down Seattle Center improvement bond issue with $4.8 million for a new theater.

The theater's namesake is a 58-year-old developer and art collector whose financial projects and philanthropy have left an indelible mark on the city's cultural, physical and economic landscape.

Charles Bagley Wright Jr., a Georgia native whose father was president of Cannon Mills, left his job as a Newsweek business researcher in New York and moved west in 1956 after he married timber heiress Virginia Bloedel.

Woman says prison 'makes no sense'

NEW YORK (AP) — In her third year behind bars for killing Scarsdale Diet doctor Herman Tarnower, Jean Harris says she survives a prison life that "makes no sense" because she knows the difference between conviction and guilt.

The brilliant, brittle woman who once discoursed to the daughters of the wealthy at an exclusive girls' school now expounds on the shortcomings of the prison system.

Prison life is "so stupid," she said in a recent broadcast interview at the Bedford Hills Correctional Facility. "Being here makes no sense...Everyone in here isn't a criminal forever."

Although in prison possibly for life, the former headmistress remains as strong-willed as ever. She has been the subject of three books, a television movie and a Barbara Walters interview, and has waged a vigorous, now-desperate legal battle to gain her freedom. In recent months, she has become deeply involved in inmates' rights.

"Being convicted and being guilty are two very different things," she said. "I think that's why I've survived in here."

Now 60, Mrs. Harris is serving a sentence of 15 years to life for shooting Tarnower to death at his Purchase, N.Y., estate on March 10, 1980, in what prosecutors said was a jealous rage over another woman.

She contended the shooting was an accident that occurred as she was trying to kill herself over her failed 14-year affair with Tarnower and other personal problems. However, the gun went off five times, and the jury convicted her of murder.

"I have to live with the fact that there are always going to be a lot of people who think I drove four hours, walked into Hi's bedroom and pumped five bullets into him," Mrs. Harris said.

The former headmistress of the Madeira School in McLean, Va., commented to WPIX-TV and WMCA radio recently as a state appeals court was deciding whether to give her a new trial.

Previous appeals, all the way to the Supreme Court, have been exhausted.

"I don't think about my future. Never, never, never," she said, shaking her head. "If did, I'd be a very despondent woman. The only thing that offers any future is to have a retrial and to have justice done."

The appeals court has agreed to hold a hearing on the issue of a new trial on grounds she was physically and mentally disturbed and could not assist in her trial defense.

And, during an interview on WMCA, one of her jurors called to say she felt something was "wrong" with the original verdict and that Mrs. Harris deserved a new trial.

But Mrs. Harris is not idly waiting for the prison gates to open.

She is putting her teaching experience to work, helping inmates with basic skills. She is on the committee that serves as a liaison between the inmates and administrators. She speaks out on prison reform and is compiling a book of letters between children and their incarcerated mothers. She reads and studies.

Some things have not changed. There are still signs of the woman whose penchant for Chanel-style suits, pearls and fur hats made her something of a fashion plate at her murder trial. Her hair is longer, for example, but she still adorns it prep school-style with barrettes and headbands.

And while she contributes to prison life, it is evident that she still sees herself apart from it.

Peace Corp volunteers vulnerable to rabies

ATLANTA (AP) — Federal health researchers say rabies protection among vaccinated Peace Corps volunteers in Africa "is not as good as we thought it was," but the reason is unknown.

A Peace Corps worker in Kenya died of rabies in August, the first person to contract the disease from an animal after being immunized with human diploid cell rabies vaccine, first offered in 1980.

After her death, health researchers began studying rabies immunization levels in other Peace Corps workers in Kenya, and found rabies protection significantly lower than expected, the national Centers for Disease Control reported last week.

"Clearly in the Peace Corps' Africa experience, something is not as good as we thought it was," said Dr. William Winkler, a top rabies researcher at the Atlanta-based CDC. "What is causing that, we don't know."

In its Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report, the CDC said many factors could be involved in the lower antibody levels, including immunity suppression brought on by multiple vaccines, the method of vaccine administration, or taking malaria vaccine at the same time as the rabies vaccine.

Pre-exposure vaccines, the CDC stresses, do not necessarily prevent rabies, but are intended to make any necessary post-exposure treatments much easier. The woman who died had not sought treatment after her dog bit her.

The federal health agency said blood tests were conducted on 25 Peace Corps workers in Kenya who had received rabies immunization at least 45 days before testing. Five had antibody levels below the CDC's recommendation for adequate rabies protection, and one had no detectable antibody at all.

The CDC recommends a serum dilution ratio of 1:16 — meaning the patient's blood could be diluted 16 times and still protect against rabies.

Hospital issues birth certificates for dolls

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa (AP) — A hospital is extending help to parents frustrated in their search for Cabbage Patch dolls.

It's not offering to treat the wounds inflicted by stampeding shoppers, but it will issue a real birth certificate for any doll — and for free.

"When our birth center people heard that certain children were disappointed by not being able to adopt a certain brand of doll, we thought we could help a little and let them adopt any doll," said Myrt Bowers, vice president of nursing at St. Luke's Hospital in Cedar Rapids.

The Cabbage Patch Kids come with birth certificates and adoption papers. They're the hottest item in the Christmas toy line this year, with demand far exceeding the supply.

Long queues of shoppers, some of whom have proven unruly, have been reported all over the nation. Most consumers leave empty-handed.

Instead of going through all that trauma, Ms. Bowers said, why not let St. Luke's help?

"We will complete and send a real birth certificate for any doll to any child or parent who requests one," she said.

To get a birth certificate for any doll to be "born" on Christmas, you must send a request to the hospital before Dec. 15.

The hospital will need the name of the "baby," the young parent's name, a birth weight, date of birth and doctor's name — and of course, your name and address.

Failed cartoonist began revolution

By SHARON COHEN
Associated Press Writer

CHICAGO — First came the bunny. The failed cartoonist. And the sex symbol.

The year was 1953. A war in Korea was ending. A new peace at home was beginning. And Hugh Hefner was preparing to start a revolution against buttoned-down America.

He called it Playboy, an entertainment magazine for upscale men featuring words and wit, clothes and causes, and most of all women — bare bosoms, bottoms and all.

It shocked. It scandalized. Preachers denounced it. Theologians debated it. And the public bought it — even though they often hid it.

Now, as Playboy celebrates its 30th anniversary with its December issue, the magazine has long since moved out of the closet and onto the coffee table.

In three decades, Hefner's brainchild — started with less than $7,000 — now sells 4.25 million copies a month, according to the Audit Bureau of Circulations. That volume brought in $122 million in fiscal 1983.

The Playboy empire, run by Hefner's daughter Christie, includes the magazine, also published in nine foreign countries; a cable channel, video cassettes, private clubs, licensed products and more than 1,500 employees.

"We were once a rebel," said Nat Lehrman, Playboy's associate publisher. "Now we're part of the establishment."

Playboy's rise to the "establishment" has been reflected by the contributions of famous writers — William Buckley, Norman Mailer, Gore Vidal, Isaac Bashevis Singer and others — to the magazine's pages.

World leaders from Fidel Castro to Jimmy Carter to Lech Walesa have revealed their private thoughts in interviews.

And thousands of women — beginning with Marilyn Monroe, the first centerfold, in December 1953 — have revealed just about everything else.

That picture of Miss Monroe curled up on a red satin backdrop came at a time when nudity was considered naughty and the stuff of peek-a-boo "girlie" calendars and barbershop walls.

In fact, Monroe's picture was a calendar shot bought from a Chicago company by Hefner, who once dreamed of becoming a cartoonist. For the first year, Playboy's "Unpinned Pinups" were standard calendar shots.

The now-ubiquitous Playboy "bunny" logo, however, was an original, dreamed up in a few hours in 1953 by Arthur Paul, then Playboy's art director.

And so was the Playboy philosophy, an editorial credo about sex and individual rights developed by Hefner and printed in 25 installments beginning in the magazine in 1962.

Years before that, in 1955, Hefner introduced another concept — nude photos of women who could easily be regarded as the girl next door.

He featured Playboy's subscription manager, Janet Pilgrim, the only woman to appear as a centerfold three times. She recalls that Hefner allowed her to bring her first test photos home to show to her mother.

Since then, Playboy's Playmate centerfolds — for which women are paid $15,000 — have evolved into features of pouting, sultry women sprawled nude on silk sheets in softly lighted boudoirs.

Even Ms. Pilgrim — the name is a pseudonym — says she isn't sure she would pose these days. "You're talking about the difference between semi-nude and total nudity, which is something I don't know I could do today," she said.

Even with total nudity, Playboy's centerfolds — chosen by Hefner — now seem almost tame in comparison to the graphic, gynecological details shown in other men's magazines.

"People no longer regard it as a source of outrage and scandal," said Bernard Beck, sociology professor at Northwestern University. "It's been outflanked in the extremes by other publications."

AP Laserphoto

Marilyn Monroe graced the cover and "centerfold" of the December 1953 first edition of Playboy magazine. In three decades, Hugh Hefner's brainchild, started with less than $7,000, now sells 4.25 million copies a month for a total of $122 million in fiscal 1983.

Those at Playboy say they never intended to compete in the erotic wars, though they concede the raunchier magazines cut into their readership, which was nearly 7 million at its peak in the early 1970s.

"We created the conditions for our own competition," Lehrman said. "We made it possible for a host of others to come around and take business from us."

Still, Playboy's ability to move up the ladder of respectability has been rewarding, too. Advertising, which was scarce in the early days, grew and peaked in 1977, Lehrman said. But some major American corporations — such as General Motors — still won't advertise.

Yet, national figures and Nobel Prize winners have lent their names and faces, sometimes creating a sensation. In 1976, then-presidential candidate Jimmy Carter shocked many in the country when he confessed in a Playboy interview that he'd looked on "a lot of women with lust" and "committed adultery" in his heart many times.

Carter's appearance in Playboy shouldn't be surprising because the magazine is often seen as an effective channel to a liberal audience, said Arthur Kretchmer, Playboy editorial director.

Playboy has been a voice of the left in other ways, crusading for civil rights, the Equal Rights Amendment and a woman's right to an abortion. It challenged sex laws and drug laws. It spoke out against the Vietnam War.

Residents of U.S. Northeast pay most for heating homes

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new study of home energy costs shows residents of the Northeast paid almost as much for heating in 1981 as homeowners in the West spent on everything from heating and air conditioning to stereos, televisions and hot tubs.

But while Northeasterners paid more for their energy than residents of other regions, costs everywhere were going up. Nationally, home energy bills rose 14 percent from 1980 to 1981, even though consumption did not rise.

From 1978 through 1981, home energy costs increased 53 percent nationally, far outpacing the 30 percent inflation for the economy in general, even though consumption dropped by 10 percent during the same period.

The study by the government's Energy Information Administration showed households in the Northeast paid $675 for home heating during the survey year and $1,426 for all household energy. The average Western household spent only $226 for home heat and a total of $721 for all household energy.

It was the fourth straight year that the Northeast recorded the highest energy cost, reflecting colder temperatures in the region and a reliance on fuel oil rather than less expensive natural gas.

J. Erich Evered, head of the statistical agency, said in releasing the report that energy costs in the Northeast were particularly affected by sharp increases in fuel oil prices in the region. Those prices have risen 124 percent over the four years the agency has been studying home energy use.

Unlicensed drivers may be grounded

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. (AP) — Since license suspensions don't keep drunken drivers off the road, a traffic safety expert has proposed electronically preventing the offenders from starting their cars.

The goal, Pennsylvania State University professor Frank Haight said earlier this week, "is to devise a system whereby a person legally prohibited from driving could not operate any vehicle, not even to move it in his or her driveway."

Haight, professor of statistics and transportation, is director of the university's Transportation Institute.

He presented his proposal earlier this month to traffic safety experts from around the world at the International Conference on Alcohol, Drugs and Traffic Safety in San Juan, Puerto Rico.

Under the plan, drivers would be issued magnetic cards that would be the only way to unlock and start their vehicles.

The cards would be coded to prevent people whose licenses had been revoked or suspended from operating their cars.

Haight said figures show that drivers with suspended or revoked licenses are involved in large numbers of accidents, particularly those in which a driver was drunk.

Republic First to seek more time to buy loans

By JULIE FAUBEL
Business-Energy Writer

RepublicBank First National Midland, sucessor of failed First National Bank, will again ask the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. to give the new bank 30 more days to buy back FNB's loans.

Republic was given the right to buy FNB's loans, which the FDIC assumed, Oct. 14 when the old bank failed. At that time, Republic was given 30 days to buy the loans. Unable to complete transactions in the alotted time, the bank asked for, and was given, an additional 30 days. that extension will expire in mid-December.

Joseph R. Musolino, RepublicBank Corp. vice president, Dallas, told the Dallas Morning News earlier this week, that the Midland bank will ask the FDIC for another 30-day extension.

A spokesman for the FDIC in Washington told the Reporter-Telegram it is in the FDIC's best interest to give RepublicBank First National Midland as much time as possible to review the loan portfolio of failed FNB.

Alan Whitney, FDIC spokesman, said, as a general rule, the FDIC would give RepublicBank as much time as was needed to review and purchase loans from the portfolio of failed First National Bank. However, the FDIC could not say whether or not the extension would be granted unitl a request is recieved and studied.

Giving Republic First additional time would, Whitney said, "Eenables them to make the kind of analysis that they feel they have to make of the total portfolio, which in turn, results in the bank taking on a larger part of the portfolio, which is certainly to our advantage.

"It is in our interst for RepublicBank to pick up as many loans as possible. It then makes sense that we would cooperate in these kinds of request to the extent we can to enable them to do that."

Whitney added, the request was not unusual, "When you consider the size of the loan portfolio we're dealing with. I can't say this happens in most cases but on the other hand, there is nothing out of the ordinary about it."

Tom Wageman, RepublicBank First National Midland's president, said he'd like to have more time.

"It's a big job and it's an important job and I don't want to rush it. If you rush it, generally you'll be conservative. We're trying to take as many loans as we can and we've got thousands of them to review."

Wageman said there were no particular problems with the loan portfolio but time was needed to thoroughly review it.

"A lot of the credits are obiviously energy credits and they depend on production and we're reengineering a lot of that production and that takes time."

Wageman compared the process to buying a used car.

He explained, "If you were buying a used car, you might take it to a mechanic to have him take a look at it, even though you knew the people who were selling it, just to find out what you were buying. The oil business has changed a heck of a lot in the last two years. Values have changed and that takes time to review.

"I'm trying to do the best job that can be done and to take back the most loans that we possible can take back. I'm no different than anybody else — I'd like to have as much time as I can have to get the job done right. There isn't anybody around here that would like to have the loans bought back more than I would becase those are earning assets that are earning for the FDIC not for me."

Wageman would not say exactly how many loans RepublicBank has bought back. He did say "we've approved an awful lot but there's a lot to go."

Wageman said he did not anticipate any problems with getting another extension from the FDIC.

"It seems to me that they want to be sure we do a good job as well. They'd like to have it over with too and so would the town and so would we so we can all go about our business," he added.

Whitney said the FDIC did not have a formal policy governing the amount of time a bank could take in this situation because each case was different. Whitney said he did not know if any specific date had been set for RepublicBank to complete its task.

First National was declared insolvent Oct. 14 and the FDIC was appointed receiver of FNB's $1.2 billion loan portfolio. RepublicBank purchased the deposits of FNB and has since been studying the bank's loan portfolio to determine which loans it will buy back from the FDIC.

Home sales seasonally slow

Residential housing sales in Midland totaled 78 for the month of October.

Speaking Wednesday at the monthly board meeting of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, Laura Maunlik, president of the Midland Board of Realtors, said the city's housing market is currently in a seasonal slump. While there were many people looking, she said, most were hesitant to make a move because of current interest rates. Manulik said she, along with all area realtors had hoped for better interest rates soon. She said interest rates have been "holding steady" for the past six weeks.

Manulik said 15 new homes were sold in October with an average selling price of $106,000 and 63 existing homes sold with an average selling price of $88,744.

In comparing real estate sales in previous years, Maunlik said, 1981 was the best year. In terms of dollar amounts in 1982, she said, Midland realtors sold 91.23 percent of the '81 total. As of June, she reported, realtors had sold 78 percent of 1982s total and through October sales are 77.9 of the previous years total.

Nancy Sharp, representing Clean Midland, said it had been a very successful first year. Sharp said although there was still a lot to be done, early indications show a significant reduction in the amount of litter in Midland this year. The organization has sponsored several workshops and clean-up campaigns. As a result, Sharp said, the community is becoming more involved in their efforts to have an attractive city. Sharp also introduced Jane Leslie who will become the new excutive coordinator for Clean Midland in January.

Penny Angelo, representing the education committee, told board members the committee would again be coordinating the free enterprise program next summer. The program is designed for school teachers who are interested in learning about the free enterprise system. During the summer these teachers will attend classes at the University of Texas in Austin and work for a Midland business. Angelo said the program was depending on Midland business to sposor this program. Angelo said the cost of sponsoring one teacher is $2,200.

The Small Business Council will sponsor a business trade fair Feb. 29 - Mar. 1. The fair will be in Midland Center. Amy Stewart, representing the council, said 60 booths would be available for the show and 20 have already been purchased.

ACIR may debunk infrastructure alarm

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The widely accepted claim that much of America's vast infrastructure is on the verge of collapse may be a false alarm.

A prestigous federal commission is about to challenge the much-publicized view that a national "infrastructure crisis" is around the corner and that substantial federal funds are needed to fix decaying and neglected highways, falling bridges and broken-down buses and subway cars.

The Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations (ACIR) is expected to endorse next week a staff study insisting that crumbling highways and bridges, leaking water mains and backed-up sewers are local problems and "manageable."

The study will further contend that, for the foreseable future, the federal government will be confronted with huge deficits and not likely to provide large funds needed to rejuvenate the physical infrastructure. It suggests that any money for repairs will have to come from state-local tax sources and user charges.

During the past few years the public has been treated to a drumbeat of warnings that America's infrastructure — its highways, bridges, prisons, water and sewer systems, port facilities, mass transit systems and railroads — is wearing out faster than anyone can do anything about it.

One recent highly-publicized study estimated that local, state and federal governments would have to spend from $2.5 trillion to $3 trillion this decade — slightly more than all planned defense outlays in the same period — just to maintain today's level of service from public facilities.

However, the soon-to-be-released study by the national bipartisan commission established by Congress to monitor intergovernmental relations will argue that there is "currently no nationwide crisis affecting the physical infrastrucuture in general, nor does one appear imminent."

"Localized infrastructure problems in specific functional areas, even if individually severe, do not make a national crisis," the study contends, adding: "nor do they require either major new federal actions or uniform state-local actions but are manageable with existing financing mechanisms."

The study, which will be discussed at the commission's Washington meeting Dec. 8 and 9 points out that federal, state and local officials are already taking "corrective actions to address the most important infrastructure problems."

These include the federal Surface Transportation Act of 1982 which is pumping in an additional $6 billion per year into the federal highway system, raising the total federal infrastructure spending to $25 billion in fiscal 1983.

In addition, in sharp contrast to the federal budget, most states and localities are expected to end their fiscal 1983 budgets with larger surpluses than usual. Except for New Hampshire, all states are required to balance their budgets.

Also, since 1981, some 34 states have increased motor fuel taxes, 19 thus far in 1983, with receipts earmarked mostly for transportation.

New York voters, for example, enacted earlier this month a $1.25 billion state bond issue for constructing and maintaining roads and bridges.

From the ACIR's perspective, the most serious potential threat to future financing of public physical infrastructure comes from changes in the tax-exempt capital market and federal tax laws.

The commission is also likely to recommend that Congress correct aid formulas which call for constructing new facilities rather than supporting maintenance of existing facilities.

The study concedes that public capital investment in recent years has fallen off due partly to the taxpayers' revolt and high interest rates.

It also agrees that many facilities built after World War II may be in need of major repair or replacement.

Simmering feud boils over

By The Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The long-simmering feud among top officials and directors of the U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corp. that has crippled the government-funded agency's efforts to launch a domestic synfuels industry has developed into a bitter power struggle over selection of a new president, according to sources.

The showdown over a successor to Victor A. Schroeder, who resigned under pressure three months ago amid charges of mismanagement and improprieties in office, may determine the future of Chairman Edward E. Noble, who has been accused of running the $16.5 billion corporation as a "family business."

Noble, who had installed Schroeder, a longtime associate, as president and chief operating officer, would like to see him succeeded by Leonard C. Axelrod, who recently was promoted to executive vice president and given some of Schroeder's former responsibilities, according to sources.

But several outside directors are insisting that the new president come from outside the corporation.

Gordon F. Ahalt, a longtime oil industry executive and energy consultant who was widely rumored to be the leading candidate to become the agency's first chairman in 1980, has surfaced again as the leading contender for the No. 2 job.

While a showdown could come at a two-day corporation board meeting this week, sources said that a final choice probably will not be made until the January board meeting.

"But we are very cognizant of the fact that the corporation cannot wander around without a president," said John B. Carter Jr., an outside member of the board and chairman of its search committee.

Some of the Synfuel Corp.'s directors, sources said, are increasingly concerned about the 3-year-old agency's failure so far to award even 1 percent of the $13.2 billion it was given to help start large synthetic fuels projects.

The corporation, which has made tentative commitments involving $2.7 billion, is expected to indicate this week that it supports other projects, including expansion of Union Oil Co.'s shale oil plant in Garfield County, Colo.

But sources said that, contrary to earlier plans, no new contracts are expected to be signed before the end of the year. That would leave a $120 million price guarantee granted last summer to a coal gasification plant in Daggett, Calif., as the corporation's sole award to date.

With a number of bills pending in Congress to eliminate the agency or to cut back its funding, many supporters say they feel that its failure to move more aggressively has placed it in jeopardy.

"The real question is whether we are going to get someone in here who can get things moving and help establish a policy for government aid to synfuels for the future, or whether we are going to keep threshing around until Congress folds our tent and takes away our remaining money," a source said.

The struggle over the corporation's presidency, however, is only the most visible part of an internal power struggle that has resulted in four of the corporation's 10 top officers leaving this year and strong signs that a fifth officer may be ousted shortly.

"For the past year, the program has been immobilized by the internal soap opera going on over there," a congressional staffer said.

While Noble, a mild-mannered Republican business executive from Oklahoma, has had the backing of the majority of the corporation's seven directors on most critical decisions, sources said that his position has eroded since Schroeder resigned his $135,000-a-year job on Aug. 18.

"What Noble seemed to fail to recognize at the time was that only part of the opposition to Schroeder was directed at his personal actions. Noble seemed to miss the fact that some of the directors who forced Schroeder out were unhappy at how things were going generally," a source said.

Schroeder stayed on as an outside director, and reportedly is less than happy about the support he got from Noble while he was under fire. Sources say that Noble may find it difficult to line up a majority of the board to support Axelrod.

Carter, C. Howard Wilkins Jr. and Robert A.G. Monks, a leading critic of Schroeder who has emerged as the most influential outside board member, reportedly are opposed to promoting Axelrod.

"It simply isn't right to try to run this as a family business and keep moving somebody like Axelrod up because he makes you comfortable," a director said. "This is an important job, and there are some very good people available out there."

The corporation, which has been criticized for paying executives higher salaries than those paid top government officials, has been telling candidates for the presidency that the post will pay $110,000 to $120,000.

The other outside candidate who reportedly enjoys some support among board members is John Latz, a deputy director of the Interior Department's Bureau of Land Management.

Coal committee found no wrong

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of a commission that reviewed Reagan administration sales of western coal reserves says the panel found some procedural "looseness" but no wrongdoing in the Interior Department.

David F. Linowes, a University of Illinois economics professor who headed the federal commission, said the panel looked closely at the department because of congressional studies charging that former Interior Secretary James G. Watt had sold vast quantities of coal at "fire sale" prices.

"We were very concerned, very suspicious" because the studies showed the lease sales cost the government tens of millions of dollars in lost revenue, Linowes said.

"But we found no wrongdoing. ... There was a determined effort to perform a difficult job here," Linowes said. "The intent was good but the execution was inadequate," he added, citing "some looseness in the procedures."

Linowes made the comments in a telephone interview with The Associated Press shortly after the panel released its preliminary recommendations Wednesday. The commission plans to take public comments on its report for several weeks before voting on final recommendations to Congress. A moratorium on coal leasing is in effect until 90 days after the report reaches Congress.

The 39 recommendations, many of a technical nature, suggested changes to improve administration and increase competition within the coal industry.

In one key area of dispute — the amount of coal to be offered for leasing — the commission made no firm recommendation, saying instead that size of offerings should be considered with other public goals in mind, such as efficient land use and environmental impacts.

However, it also said the government "should not seek to raise the price above the competitive market level by limiting the amount of coal that federal leasing policies make available to the market."

Watt was criticized for offering vast amounts of coal on a glutted market, reducing the government's income by assuring low bids.

The National Coal Association said the report confirmed the "fundamental soundness" of the program. "We are heartened by the preliminary recommendations and optimistic the commission's final report to Congress will justify lifting the present temporary moratorium on leasing," said Carl Bagge, the association's president.

But Karl Gawell of the National Wildlife Federation said the commission "has sidestepped the very issue that brought it about."

"They have made some good recommendations about the department's procedures," he said. "But they have very adeptly sidestepped many of the controversies surrounding Secretary Watt. ... They seem to have spent an inordinate amount of time questioning the wisdom of Congress rather than questioning the proprieties of Secretary Watt."

The Interior Department declined immediate comment on the recommendations.

The panel itself was the source of the Watt comment that led to the former secretary's resignation.

In a Sept. 21 speech, Watt referred to the advisory commission's members as "a black, ... a woman, two Jews and a cripple." He resigned Oct. 9 in the uproar that followed.

New opportunities for Gas discussed

By STEVEN EISENSTADT
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30 — Natural gas companies do not live by natural gas alone anymore.

Faced with lower consumer demand for the fuel and bound by government regulation, many natural gas companies are branching out into safer, non-regulated, but related, businesses.

How successful those moves have been was debated Wednesday as the American Gas Association concluded a two-day conference here.

Some executives who spoke at the conference hailed the new strategy as a corporate savior that has turned withering natural gas concerns into thriving energy conglomerates.

BUT ANOTHER INSISTED that a natural gas company does not have to venture into businesses such as oil or gas to maintain its financial health.

The dispute was part of lingering debate on the issue among natural gas executives, who are grappling with uncertainty over removal of government controls on the fuel and unprecedented conditions that are hurting the ability of gas companies to compete in the energy market.

Deregulation — if it will occur, to what extent and when — and the fact that the era of scarce but cheap gas has given way to one of relatively abundant gas and severe competition from other fuels have put the industry in turmoil.

The problems come at a time when recession and mild winters have drastically reduced consumer demand for gas.

Despite the problems, gas companies have had different reactions to the idea of diversification as a way to solve them, said William Laub, chairman of the Southwest Has Corp., a natural gas distributor based in Las Vegas, Nev.

"SOME REFUSED TO jump. Some tested the waters with petroleum. And some jumped in all the way," said Laub, whose company chose the third option. "The results were as varied as the swimmers themselves.

"We distributors became involved in such diverse activities as local airlines, pecan orchards, finance companies, thrift companies ... You name it we tried it," he added. "I even considered getting into gambling casinos, but mu board of directors rejected the idea."

One company that jumped headfirst into diversification as a way of averting a corporate tailspin — and succeeded — was ENSERCH Corp. of Dallas, the parent firm of Lone Star Gas Co.

Natural gas transmission and distribution used to be the company's sole business. But in 1982, Lone Star's profit of $112 million accounted for only 30 percent of ENSERCH's growth, taking a back seat to the company's other ventures — oil well servicing, engineering and construction.

WHY?

Lower consumer demand for gas and government regulation of the industry "have made growth difficult for natural gas utilities," explained Sanford Singer, senior vice president of ENSERCH. "And consequently, many gas companies have found it desirable to diversify into non-regulated, but related businesses."

Another firm that has supplemented its gas business is Texas International Co., an exploration and production concern based in Oklahoma City, Okla. "We had no choice," the company president James Kishpaugh said.

The gas industry's pitfalls hit Texas International so hard that the company has had to cut its work force by half to stay afloat, Kishpaugh said.

"We cannot really afford to to explore in the places and in the right quantity for the prices we are being offered," he said.

Also, "the producing segment has been horrified by the talk and action on price decontrol," Kishpaugh said. "These kinds of ideas cut at our very fabric, and I can tell you it has fostered a very strong reluctance to explore in anticipation of future needs."

THE COMPANY MAINTAINS its gas business, but puts more emphasis on its recently-started oil ventures.

But Othal White, a vice-president of Northern Natural Gas Co. in Omaha, Neb., disagrees that diversification is the answer to the industry's problems.

"It isn't the only way our industry can maintain its fiscal health, said White, whose firm owns gas pipelines. "The company that survives and the one who prospers is the one that implements innovative plans."

White said his company is forsaking diversification for a strategy of controliing and reducing corporate expenses and an agressive, national marketing scheme.

A MESSAGE TO OUR SHAREHOLDERS

Gulf®

YOUR CHOICE, YOUR VOICE, YOUR VOTE.

We are gratified by the overwhelming support we have received from our shareholders and our employees. We appreciate your confidence in us.

For those of you who haven't voted yet, please remember that we must receive your proxy by this Friday, December 2. This is a crucial vote for all Gulf shareholders. Your vote is vital. It gives you an opportunity to help enable your Company to continue in the sound strategic direction that Gulf has been pursuing—a strategy that has led to 10 consecutive years of increases in dividend payments.

You have a choice, a voice, and a vote. But you must act quickly.

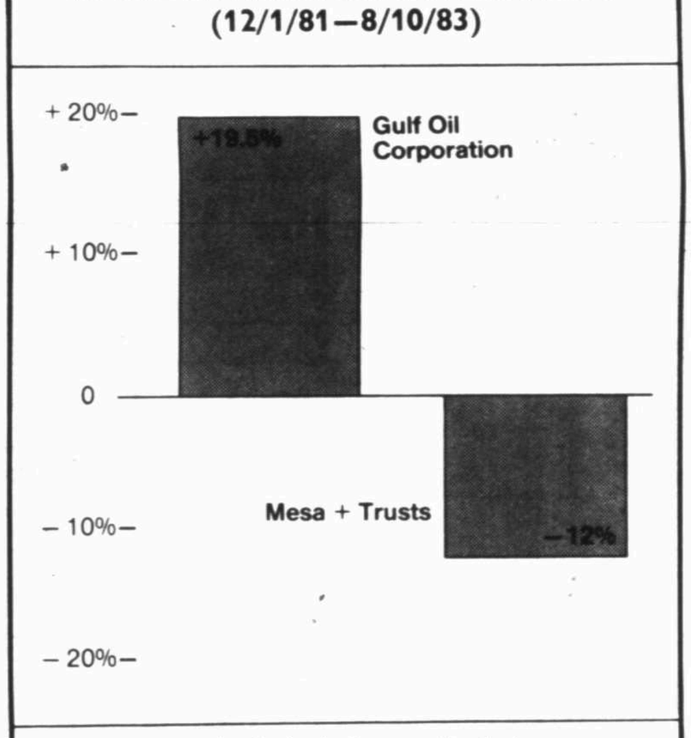
In this proxy contest, the Mesa Group—headed by T. Boone Pickens, Jr.,—has sought to convince you that their interests are the same as yours. We don't believe it.

Remember what Mr. Pickens said as recently as October 19... after his group had bought a substantial number of Gulf shares... "I just work for one crowd; that's the Mesa stockholder."

Let's look at the recent record—ours and theirs.

The chart that follows shows the total return on Gulf stock from the time I became Gulf's chairman (December 1, 1981) until the Pickens Group began purchasing our stock. Gulf's total return is up approximately 19.5%; Mesa's total return (including both royalty trusts) is down approximately 12%.

TOTAL RETURN ON INVESTMENT*
(12/1/81—8/10/83)



*Price appreciation plus dividends plus trust distributions to a person who purchased on December 1, 1981 one share of Gulf stock or four shares of Mesa stock and one share of Mesa Royalty Trust (equivalent to one share of Mesa prior to the distribution of the Mesa Royalty Trust) at the closing price on November 30, 1981.

IF YOU DON'T VOTE, IT'S THE SAME AS A VOTE AGAINST.

We believe our solid record of accomplishment deserves your support and your vote FOR management's proposal. But you must also know that abstaining from voting is the same as voting against the proposal, since approval requires that more than 50 percent of the company's outstanding shares be voted for it.

EVERY VOTE COUNTS

Your latest dated proxy is the only one that counts. Even if you have previously signed a Blue opposition proxy, you can still change your mind.

Please express your support of Gulf's proposal by signing, dating, and mailing the WHITE proxy card. And please do it now. While you still have a choice. And a voice. And a vote.

James E. Lee
Chairman of the Board and Chief Executive Officer

IMPORTANT

Because time is so short before the December 2 Special Meeting, we have arranged for you to vote, if you wish, by sending a Datagram. The procedure is simple and costs you nothing:

1. Call Western Union toll-free 1-800-325-6000 any time day or night (in Missouri only, dial 1-800-342-6700)
2. Tell the operator you want to send a prepaid Datagram charged to I.D. #F7082
3. The operator will have a complete copy of the WHITE management proxy card.
4. Tell the operator how you wish to vote your Gulf shares. Gulf management recommends a vote FOR the proposed reorganization. Give the operator your name, address and telephone number. If you are not a record owner, tell the operator your authority to send the proxy.
5. Instruct the Western Union operator to send to Gulf on your behalf the complete Datagram reflecting your vote.

If your shares are registered in "street-name" with your brokerage firm or bank, only they may vote your shares, and only upon receipt of your specific instructions. To ensure that your shares will be voted, please instruct the party responsible for your account to execute a WHITE proxy on your behalf immediately.

If you have any questions or need assistance in voting your shares registered in broker name, you are encouraged to call D. F. King & Co., Inc. at (212) 269-5550 in New York, (312) 236-5881 in Chicago, or (415) 788-1119 in San Francisco. Please call collect.

If you have any questions or need assistance in voting your shares registered in bank or nominee name, you are encouraged to call Georgeson & Co. Inc. at (212) 440-9800 in New York. Please call collect.

Gulf has also established the following toll-free numbers: 1-800-255-4853, and for Pennsylvania residents only 1-800-222-2152. If you cannot get through on the toll-free lines, we encourage you to call collect on the D. F. King & Co., Inc. and Georgeson & Co. Inc. telephone numbers.

Playing Santa Claus challenge to handicapped Odessan

Bobby Brown

ODESSA (AP) — Bobby Brown has swapped his wheelchair for a sleigh.

Brown, 45, is a paraplegic who has been hired by a shopping mall for what he considers the perfect job — being Santa Claus.

He got the job with the help of the Texas Employment Commission and Permian Mall marketing director Laura Ingram.

"Permian Mall needed a Santa Claus," Brown said. "I told them (about) the condition I was in, and (Ms. Ingram) told me she'd be really pleased" to hire him.

"I felt a lot of dedication from him," Ms. Ingram said. "He really wanted to be a Santa Claus."

Brown lost the use of his legs when he fell from a derrick on an oil field construction job.

"It's a challenge to prove to myself that I don't have to be confined to a wheelchair and sit in the house and do nothing," Brown said. "In a nutshell, it's the season for love. What is Christmas if not for kids and elderlies?"

Brown said there were some "bitter" times after the accident.

"I've been a paraplegic since 1979, and I stayed in the hospital...two years," he said. "I know what it is to be laid up."

Tears occasionally welled in Brown's eyes as he talked about the job, which he said would help him "pay something back to my community."

"Through the grace of God, I'm alive," he said. "I know what love is."

Brown also plans to take his holiday cheer to local nursing homes.

"I'm 45 years old and I've got a heart like a kid. And I like kids," he said. "But sometimes, even the elderly get just like kids, and I think we all like Santa Claus."

Brown said that, starting with a Dec. 12 visit to Westview Manor nursing home, he plans to cap off his daily 2-6 p.m. shift at the mall by taking baskets of fruit to the elderly and infirm.

His concern stems from a deep, child-like love for Christmas, he said, mixed with a little empathy.

"Even when I was married...I told my wife I'd like to get a basket of fruit and go" to nursing homes, he said. "But it never came."

But this year, the lure of the bright red suit proved stronger than procrastination. With all the initiative and industriousness of one of Santa's elves, he began soliciting donations to cover the estimated $280 cost of taking fruit, nuts and candy to about 320 elderly Odessans in nursing homes.

"There's 320 people in this town that each have got a dollar. But there's so many crooked people," Brown said, acknowledging that such Scrooges often make would-be donors leery of holiday fund-raising.

Archeologist prepares study of vessels shipwrecked in bay

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — Looking out on placid Mobile Bay, it's hard to conjure up the nearly 300 shipwrecks concealed by the murky waters that flow into the Gulf of Mexico.

But somewhere in the bay mud is the rubble of a French vessel that went down in 1725, a schooner that sank in the 19th century, the steamboats and sloops that died in the winds of the hurricane of 1906.

Only 73 of the wrecks have been salvaged or removed. And now, in a rare publication, scholars have compiled a list of the ships that went down in the bay vicinity, based on a survey of some 2,000 linear miles of the bay and research into journals that document the sinkings.

Some wrecks are well known, like the Civil War ironclad, Tecumseh, lost in the Battle of Mobile Bay. It was never raised and its location is marked. The Union vessels USS Milwaukee and USS Rodolph were both sunk in shallow water and may have been raised for salvage after the war, although no documentation to this effect has come to light, the study says.

Other wrecks were hapless victims of the 1906 hurricane, piloted by unknown navigators and listed in the publication among the many sunken steamboats, oystering schooners and sloops claimed by the storm.

Archeologist Tim Mistovich of Moundville said the shipwreck study was the most comprehensive of its kind.

Mistovich, who works for the University of Alabama, said the study had been prepared for the Army Corps of Engineers, which required it before deepening the Mobile shipping channel. The government wanted to know if any shipwrecks were threatened by the project.

The earliest recorded wreck is the Bellone, a French merchant vessel that sank near Dauphin Island in 1725.

The study, "Cultural Resources Survey of Mobile Harbor," has proven so popular that a second printing is pending.

Diving continues in the bay vicinity and government archeologist Dottie Gibbens said looking for the shipwrecks was "like looking for a needle in a haystack."

"We've finished in the upper bay and divers are now working between Fort Morgan and the Intracoastal Waterway. The results have been pretty disappointing," she said.

What divers have found so far is "modern debris" — cables, derricks and metal objects tossed into the bay by Hurricane Frederic in 1979. And it's doubtful that an ancient shipwreck could be raised because of the expense.

Mistovich said none of the wrecks threatened shipping traffic.

Prediction leaves Midwesterners out in the cold

WASHINGTON (AP) — Already the victims of two intense snow storms, many Midwesterners were left out in the cold by the National Weather Service's winter forecast of warmer-than-normal weather for the East and West.

Below-normal temperatures through February were forecast for Kansas, Oklahoma and a zone from northern Minnesota to northern Michigan, according to the weather service's 90-day forecast issued Monday. Very changeable weather was also predicted for much of the Midwest.

But chances are good that many parts of the nation will enjoy warmer-than-normal readings — although the warmth may not equal last winter's temperatures, the mildest in 25 years.

"We are expecting something looking a little more normal than last winter," said Donald L. Gilman, chief of the weather service's Long Range Predictions Group.

That means the storms that battered California's coast last year will likely return to their normal track of coming ashore in Oregon and Washington — making for a wet winter in those states.

Some of the storms that are usually directed south into the United States by high pressure in Alaska may follow different routes this year.

The high-pressure area has shifted westward into Siberia, which could mean some of the storms will pass across Canada north of the border, while others will move south into the central part of the country, Gilman said.

That will lead to "a big mix of all kinds of weather in the center of the country," he said.

The chance of warmer-than-normal weather is 60 percent for the Appalachians and 65 percent along much of the East Coast from Florida to Massachusetts. The odds climb to 70 percent for warmer-than-normal weather in the area between South Carolina and Long Island.

At the other end of the country, warmer-than-normal readings are considered likely everywhere west of the Continental Divide, rising to 60 percent in Nevada and 65 percent along the California-Arizona border.

Gilman called for above-normal precipitation in the Northwest, Midwest and lower Mississippi valley. There is a small area of below-normal precipitation stretching from the Big Bend in Texas to south-central Arizona.

Last year, Gilman was one of the few meteorologists to correctly predict the unusually warm temperatures over large parts of the nation, although he did go awry in calling for unusual cold in the Rocky Mountains.

In general he said the long-range predictions issued by his office have about a 65 percent chance of accuracy based on past experience.

Some years the predictions are more accurate than others, he said. "Unfortunately we don't know in advance which years those will be."

Demographers find goldmine in U.S. Census data

WASHINGTON (AP) — Most Americans know that New York has the most people of any U.S. city, but there is less notoriety for Sandy City, Utah, with the youngest and most married population, or Bethesda, Md., which has the most educated residents and the highest household income.

Besides being most populous with 7,071,639 people in the 1980 Census, New York also has the most blacks of any city and the most Hispanics, according to American Demographics magazine.

The magazine, which reports on population trends and statistics, has compiled rankings of the top American cities of 50,000 or more people in a variety of categories, based on Census figures.

The overall 1980 population totals are generally well known, although experts consider it likely that some of the rankings have changed since the national head count.

New York topped that list by a wide margin, but Chicago and Los Angeles were neck and neck for second with 3,005,078 and 2,966,850 people respectively. Los Angeles was growing faster than Chicago, though, and likely has moved into second place by now.

And the same situation may also prevail in the fourth and fifth places, with the 1980 list showing Philadelphia fourth at 1,688,210, and Houston fifth at 1,595,167.

Besides the overall population totals, here are the top five cities in American Demographics' other rankings:

—Black population: New York, 1,788,377; Chicago, 1,197,174; Detroit, 758,468; Philadelphia, 638,788; Los Angeles, 504,301.

—Percent black: East St. Louis, Ill., 95.6 percent; East Orange, N.J., 83.2 percent; Compton, Calif., 74.9 percent; Gary, Ind., 70.8 percent; Washington, D.C., 70.2 percent.

—Hispanic population: New York, 1,406,389; Los Angeles, 815,305; Chicago, 423,357; San Antonio, 421,808; Houston, 280,691.

—Percent Hispanic: East Los Angeles, Calif., 94.1 percent; Laredo, 93.0 percent; Brownsville, 83.8 percent; Pico Rivera, Calif., 76.1 percent; Hialeah, Fla., 74.3 percent.

—Highest median age: Miami Beach, Fla., 65.7; Pompano Beach, Fla., 50.6; Largo, Fla., 47.7; Clearwater, Fla., 44.1; Hollywood, Fla., 43.2.

—Lowest median age: Sandy City, Utah, 20.2; East Lansing, Mich., 21.4; Orem, Utah, 21.5; West Valley, Utah, 21.7; Provo, Utah, 22.2.

—Percent of college graduates in population: Bethesda, Md., 51.5 percent; Columbia, Md., 48.2 percent; Palo Alto, Calif., 46.7 percent; Brookline, Mass., 40.4 percent; Lower Merion Township, Pa., 39.6 percent.

Upper Voltan ruler tries to moderate radical policies

OUAGADOUGOU, Upper Volta (AP) — Capt. Thomas Sankara, the paratroop commander who seized power in a coup last August, has set a populist, radical course for his revolutionary government but so far he has been moderate in applying his policies.

Sankara, 34, makes no secret about his affinity with like-minded governments in Libya and Ghana. But he takes pains to avoid any direct criticism of the United States, France and other Western countries that contribute millions of dollars in aid to his impoverished nation.

Sankara took power Aug. 4 in Upper Volta's third military coup since November, 1980. Supported by a contingent of about 300 commandos, he overthrew President Jean-Baptiste Ouedraogo, a comparative moderate who had seized power himself in November, 1982, from Col. Saye Zerbo.

About 20 people were killed and Ouedraogo, who had dismissed Sankara as prime minister a few months earlier, was placed under house arrest. Zerbo, former President Maurice Yameogo and two former prime ministers also have recently been arrested.

Sankara, who once taught French to U.S. Peace Corps volunteers here, proclaimed his takeover "a victory over international imperialism and its allies" and announced the start of a "popular and democratic revolution."

"The revolution in Upper Volta," he said in an interview, "is not the revolution which took place in Libya or Ghana or Cuba or Iran. It's different from all other revolutions. There is no model."

Its goal, he has said, is "the construction of a new, free, independent and prosperous Upper Voltan society — a society free of social injustices and free from the century-long exploitation of the people by international imperialism."

In trying to fulfill that vision, Sankara faces daunting domestic obstacles linked with Upper Volta's crushing poverty.

More than 90 percent of the 7.1 million people who live in the Colorado-sized country are illiterate. The same number are engaged in subsistence agriculture, many of them farming land that is threatened by the ever-encroaching Sahara Desert.

With an annual per-capita income of $240, the country is heavily dependent on Western aid — $240 million this year, half of it from France, the former colonial power here.

Sankara's government, said a Western diplomat in this sweltering, dust-choked capital, "is on the horns of a dilemma. They really want a revolution, they really want to help the little guy, but they have almost no resources to do it.

"They just don't accept that the place is terribly poor. So they find it much easier to say that someone's been ripping them off all these years."

Sankara, who invariably makes his public appearances in dark green camouflage fatigues and a red beret, insists that his revolution "has produced a magic effect."

French government clamping down on right-wing publisher

EDITORS NOTE: France's Socialist government has introduced an anti-trust law that would break up the publishing empire of one of its harshest critics, Robert Hersant. In a rare interview, Hersant blasted the Socialists and talked about French attitudes on money and success.

By GREG MacARTHUR

PARIS (AP) — Robert Hersant, the most powerful newspaper publisher in France, is about to get stepped on by the most powerful institution in France — the government.

No one doubts the Socialist administration will get its proposed newspaper anti-trust law, introduced more than a week ago, through the National Assembly, probably by early 1984. And few people believe the government's target is anyone other than its harshest news media critic, the arch-conservative Hersant, publisher of Le Figaro.

"In the logic of Marxism I am considered an enemy of the people, who the government alone believes it is qualified to represent," he said at his Paris office.

For years Hersant has been circumventing France's existing 1944 press statute, which forbids one person from owning more than a single daily newspaper. Other publishers have done the same.

But, preventing the "concentration of press ownership" was one of President Francois Mitterrand's campaign pledges before the 1981 elections. The only question was when the government would act and how deep the law would cut.

"The Socialist-Communist coalition wants no political alternative," Hersant said in an interview. "And they'll do everything they can to approach the (1986) legislative elections with a strong hand — even if they have to take anti-democratic measures," he said at his Paris office.

The proposed law forbids any chain from owning more than one nationwide daily newspaper and two local or regional dailies. Hersant owns three national dailies, including the influential Le Figaro, and 15 regional papers. Most, but not all, reflect his anti-leftist views.

His Socpresse holding company, with reported annual sales of 4 billion francs ($500 million), is the only newspaper chain of significance in the country. One in five French newspaper readers buys a Hersant paper.

The government, which has a monopoly on national radio and television broadcasting, says the law will ensure "pluralism" of opinion by protecting smaller, independent papers from being absorbed by large chains.

But virtually everyone outside the administration, including pro-government newspapers who support the legislation, is calling it the "anti-Hersant law."

The Communist press, which controls the national daily L'Humanite and several regional dailies, would not be affected by the law.

Improved economy means less pilferage, study shows

By The Associated Press

'Tis the season of increased retail theft by shoplifters and sticky-fingered employes, but the economic recovery may mean less stealing this year.

"As retailers begin a new holiday shopping season, they must contend with a problem that drives up costs and ultimately affects the prices will all pay," said Errol M. Cook, head of the national retail group of the accounting and consulting firm of Arthur Young.

A survey by Young of 180 retail organizations with 36,000 outlets and sales of nearly $100 billion, shows pilferage and other shrinkage last year represented 2.2 percent of sales, up slightly from 1981. That means that $2.20 of every $100 you spend at a discount, department or specialty store disappears to theft, loss, etc. (Some surveys show losses ranging up to 7 percent, but they show a broader range of outlets, including things like supermarkets.)

Stephanie Shern, retail industries director of accounting and auditing for Arthur Young, said there are several reasons for the increase in theft at Christmas time. "Between now and right after the holidays, there are more customers in the store," she said. And more customers make it harder to watch shoppers. Mrs. Shern said the last quarter of the year may account for up to 75 percent of sales and 50 percent of profits for a successful retailer.

Contrary to common belief, the Young survey said, most shoplifters are not unemployed; 62 percent of the men and 51 percent of the women apprehended by retailers reporting to Young had jobs.

But the recession has had an impact, nonetheless. "People in 1982 were hurt by the recession," Mrs. Shern said. "People were trying to maintain their economic status. To keep up with what they'd had, they had to go out and steal something."

Richard Hersh, president of the National Mass Retailing Institute, which commissioned the Young study, is hopeful. "This year's economic upturn could have a positive effect in somewhat lowering the pilferage rate," he said.

When Hersh talks about pilferage, he doesn't mean only shoplifters. The problem of employee theft is even more serious. An estimated 50 percent of total "shrinkage" or losses is due to employee stealing. Thirty percent is due to shoplifting, and the rest is blamed on poor paperwork control.

Stealing — from inside or out — not only adds to shoppers' bills indirectly, it also boosts costs by requiring stores to spend extra money on security.

Jewelry repair centers busy in Asheville

ASHEVILLE, N.C. (AP) - Is your necklace catchless? Brooch broken? Pearls unstrung? Send them to Asheville, a major center of the jewelry repair industry.

Jewelry flows into Asheville from across the United States. Packages come from Washington state, thick brown envelopes from Arkansas, a small box from Kentucky.

Fine stores across the nation send their customers' jewelry here for repairs. Rings that need to be resized, lockets with broken hinges, pins with catches that no longer work. Anything and everything from a stickpin to a 3-foot candlestick.

"There is something going on all the time," says Joseph Cottrell of Cottrell & Greene. "It's year-round. We're busy all the time."

Cottrell, his wife, Mae, son Joe Cottrell Jr. and their staff of four are tucked away in the Miles Building. Within a stone's throw of the Cottrells are a half dozen other jewelry makers and jewelry repair operations. And outside this area lie still others. They can repair your jewelry or make a custom design from scratch.

Joe Cottrell Sr. says one of the big items today in the jewelry repair trade is gold necklaces. The lighter they are, the more easily they snap.

Paul and Lucia Greene and son Michael operate Wick and Greene. Michael, the third generation jeweler in the family, says the original shop begun by Ernest Wick 50 years ago at the rear of the present location was so small "you had to step into the hall to change your mind." Today, Wick and Greene has 11 employees, including seven jewelers. The complex has rooms full of metal-bending equipment, lacquer spray booths and room to handle even large religious altar pieces.

"We have one man, Brad Harris, who repairs between 80 and 90 neck chains a week," says Michael Greene. And ring sizing, he adds, is always in demand.

Tucked away in the Miles Building is Judy Pallai, who learned the art of restringing pearls from one of the oldest and largest of the Japanese pearl companies. Today she carefully matches, strings, knots and weaves hundreds of pearls into new necklaces. She works under contract to the Cottrells in an industry that is more like an extended family than fierce competiton.

John Sherwood of Sherwood Forest Ltd. is also in the Miles Building. He is prepared if somebody waits too long about having a ring stretched.

If the ring won't come off, Sherwood has a small ring cutter that will cut through a tight ring without nicking the owner. The tool looks a little like a pair of small pliers with a cutting wheel on one side of the jaws.

Sherwood and his wife, Patricia, specialize in jewelry salvage, furnishing parts to the repair industry.

Not everyone is outgrowing his or her rings. Mae Cottrell says sometimes people want rings made smaller.

"It's a happy time for them. They are losing weight. Sometimes, we will size a ring twice as they continue to lose."

Prongs holding gemstones become loose and worn. And the best way to protect yourself, Michael Greene says, is to have your jewelry checked twice a year.

The business of repairing jewelry has its lighter side. Many repairers say they spend part of their time telling customers whether or not their jewelry is real.

Costume jewelry makes up a surprisingly large part of the jewelry repair business. The owners know the jewelry isn't worth the price of the repair. But they do it anyway.

Michael Greene says: "Milestones are marked in a person's life by jewelry. These things always have value."

Joe Cottrell Jr. agrees. "Most of the time jewelry is a gift from someone else. If you received it for a special occasion, then you want to have it repaired. How much the jewelry itself is worth really doesn't enter into it."

One gift Mom is sure to enjoy is a gift of jewelry, reports the Jewelry Industry Council.

Quiz helps determine watch style

Here is a quiz from the Jewelry Industry Council to help you choose a watch for the man in your life for Christmas.

Dr. Lee Steiner, noted psychologist and author of many books on psychology, helped the Council devise the following quiz to reveal your man's timepiece preferences. "How a man relates to his watch is very revealing in regard to his personality...therefore by knowing your man's personality you have a good idea about the kind of watch he likes," said Dr. Steiner.

To find out if he likes a practical, utilitarian watch, the latest fashion in watches or a classic gtimepiece, check off the statements that most fit his reactions below:

Whenever he has an appointment he is usually: a) ahead of time. b) invariably late. c) on the dot.

When it comes to his wardrobe does he: a) usually wear what everyone else is wearing? b) manage to be the first one in his group to wear new fashions? c) select classic, understated clothes as a rule?

When he is going on a shopping trip for clothes does he: a) often take you along to help him pick out things or at times have you select his apparel? b) tend to be very independent in his selections, buying what he thinks is new and exciting? c) Have definite tastes in clothing, with pronounced likes and dislikes?

Temperamentally he is: a) usually pretty easy going, but when he does get angry has good reason. b) apt to be unpredictable; what may upset him one time he might overlook next time and vice versa. c) usually on an even keel, but when he does get angry he is the strong and silent type — often you don't even know why he is angry.

Add up your score and determine which group your man fits into. He can be a combination of two groups or even reveal a touch of all three. But there will be one group he more nearly fits. In the event he has two answers each in two groups, then you know he is a combination of both groups, thus widening your gift choices.

The group A type man will probably be very happy with any watch you give him, and you will find a wealth to choose from: sports watches, dress watches, calendar watches, digital, automatic and quartz watches to name a few. He might appreciate a stopwatch or a waterproof watch if he is the leader of the local Boy Scouts or baseball team.

The group B man will probably defer to your taste in watches but if you want to make him happy remember he is a fashion forerunner. So if you buy him the very latest in slim quartz watches with a smart looking band, he will be delighted. He would also like a watch that tells him what time it is in Tokyo or Djakarta. Or give him a watch that will remind him when the time is up on his parking meter by sounding a little alarm. He will love a "conversation piece" pocket-watch, cased perhaps to look like an antique or one that features beautiful enameling and gives the phases of the moon.

The type C man favors tasteful accessories so look for an elegant timepiece. He will like slim cases and watchbands coordinated to set the watch off well. He will want a watch suited to his attire. For business that could be a dignifed, tailored watch; for sports a practical, sturdy watch; and for dressy occasions perhaps a watch dial with lapis, coral, onyx or even diamond pave. The key here with type C is make it attractive, elegant and in all ways in good taste.

Ring in the holidays with this sparkling crystal bell. Decorated with a hand-etched design of pine cones and boughs and encircled with two bands of precious platinum, this crystal ornament has the year 1983 permanently etched as a part of the decoration. A red satin bow is looped through a circle of crystal for secure hanging on a Christmas tree.

Jewelry special

Looking for something extra special for Mother this Christmas? A gift of fashionable jewelry is just the thing, according to the Jewelry Industry Council.

Jewelry makes an ideal gift for there is no problem in selecting the right size when it comes to earrings, necklaces, pins or pendants. Jewelry is a gift that she can treasure all year long. It is not fattening, it doesn't wither and time cannot dull its beauty or the love in which it was given.

There is an infinite variety of jewelry designs and styles to choose from, and nothing quite says "I love you" like a piece of jewelry in gold or silver with diamonds, colored stones or pearls. For today's busy mother who often runs the home as well as holding down a career job, nothing could be more welcome than a beautifully designed quartz watch with its split-second accuracy. More than just a timepiece, today's watches are true works of art, and add fashion frosting to any woman's wardrobe.

Buy jewelry from reliable dealer

If you are like most consumers buying fine jewelry means relying on the integrity of the dealer you are dealing with. To find a reputable jeweler keep the following in mind from a current Family Circle magazine article, "Trade Secrets: Jewelers' Money-Wise Guide to Buying Gold, Silver & Gems."

Jewelry industry pros advise asking around for recommendations, consulting the Better Business Bureau and relying on members of one or both of the major professional associations: The America Gem Society (AGS) and Jewelers of America (JA).

Both organizations enforce a code of ethics. The 12,000 JA stores feature the "JA" logo on their windows and doors. The AGS is a smaller group with stricter rules.

Protect fine jewelry from dirt, scratches

To protect your jewelry and keep it gleaming, here is what the pros advise in a current Family Circle magazine article, "Trade Secrets: Jewelers' Guide to Gold, Silver & Gems:"

— Avoid scratching jewelry by storing it separately in tissue paper or in compartments in a fabric-lined case.

— Pearls — the softest gems — should be protected from sharp objects, alcohol and acids and wiped with a soft cloth after wearing.

Decorate hair with combs

Decorative combs help keep stray hair in place. For upswept hairstyles secure two matching combs at the back of the head, and two on the sides. To keep combs in place secure a bobby pin across the comb's teeth.

Unique jewelry gift ideas for Christmas

Susan Reinstein and Dr. Stephen Paul Adler, designers for Byzantium, created this outstanding, one-of-a-kind, hand-fused rope of 22-karat gold with granulation detail caps and side clasp. This piece was awarded a Certificate of Merit in the Gold Jewelry Design Competition sponsred by The Gold Information Center.

One of the most original ways to make this year's Christmas gifts exciting and personal, without spending beyond your budget, is to buy an accessory that enhances the jewelry gift you gave last year, according to the Jewelry Industry Fashion Advisory Committee, a group of jewelry industry leaders and experts.

Some of the ideas offered by the committee are:

— Gold "jackets" that will change a pair of diamond stud earrings from tailored to ornate to classic. Those diamond studs, set into jackets, can have a different personality to suit each occasion.

— Pearl "enhancers" — clasps designed in pearls, gold, diamonds or colored stones that can be used as shorteners, or pendants, or simply attached as dramatic eye-catchers.

— A matching accessory to fine jewelry she already owns such as a bracelet to match her favorite necklace or a pearl necklace accessorized by a pearl bracelet, earrings or ring.

There is a wide range of jewelry gift styles available for Christmas, according to the committee's report.

Men's jewelry accessories are more versatile and adaptable than ever before. Cufflinks are still the favorite, especially with the renaissance of French cuff shirts for the business man. For the man with the button cuff shirt, gold button covers are stylish, give the look of a cuff link and can be less costly.

Other ideas for men include lapel pins, tie-tacks, collar bars, rings and money clips. They are designed to suit everyone's taste, in gold, with stones or without stones, and there is something for every pocketbook.

What is new in women's jewelry? A great deal, according to the committee.

Pearls are being combined with diamonds and colored stones. With the surge in black and white fashions, black pearls are truly in vogue. Too costly? Look at the beautiful black onyx jewelry for a "today" look.

The gold bracelet with channel-set diamonds running all the way around is this year's favorite. And the gold bangle is back, bigger than ever.

Pave diamond jewelry is popular this year. It offers the opportunity to give an opulent look for less money.

Where to look, how to select — there is so much that is new and available. The committee was unanimous in its advice to deal with a local jeweler that is established in the community. In addition to having a wide selection, a jeweler can advise and even customize according to your specific needs.

Jewelers of America (JA), the national organization representing more than 12,000 jewelers across the country, has distributed to its member-stores a number of informative brochures designed to help consumers understand more about fine jewelry. Anyone interested in receiving these booklets free of charge can write to Jewelers of America's Consumer Information Department LS, 1271 Avenue of the Americas, New York, N.Y. 10020.

Knowledge of gems pays off

Purchasing a real gem of a jewel without stripping your savings can become quite a heady task for the unprepared buyer. Unless you know where to go, what to look for and who to trust, it is difficult to know what you are really getting or if you are really getting taken.

The value of a particular gem is determined by specific qualities and the established price of a gem that is based on those qualities can vary dramatically. Even expert jewelers admit that they sometimes misjudge the value of a gem. Therefore, the more you know about selecting a gemstone the better able you will be to at least give the jeweler the impression that you know what you are doing and can perhaps insure yourself the best possible deal.

The criteria that experts depend on in judging a gem include hardness, color, sparkle, luster, clarity and rarity.

The hardness of a stone is rated according to the Mohs scale, ranging from one to 10. Diamonds are the hardest natural substance and score a 10. The higher the number on the Mohs scale, the tougher the stone, and the less susceptible it is to scratching. Mineral gems such as rubies and emeralds are on the higher end of the scale and are considered hard gems. If a stone rates below 5-1/2 it is considered soft. Pearls, ivory, coral and amber all range between two and four, and these organic substances can be easily scratched, which destroys the stone's beauty.

The intensity of color is another important aspect in judging a gem's value. The richer the color the better the stone. Of course the richer the color, the higher the price of the stone, too.

If you are puchasing a gem as a potential investment rather than simply something pretty to wear, size is important. Buy at least one carat to increase your chances of trading or selling the stone later on. Good color and few flaws are the next most important factors when buying as a investment.

Before buying any fine gemstone insist upon receiving a certificate verifying the gem's properties. This certificate should be provided by an independent testing laboratory. You should also have them appraised independently by a member of the American Society of Appraisers.

The setting that you select for your stone is an important consideration. Gold is the most popular metal and 18-karat gold is the best quality setting for jewelry. While 24-karat is pure gold, this is most impractical as it is very soft and would wear out quickly.

Gold of 18-karat is a mixture of gold with some other metals (commonly copper and zinc) to provide durability, but the high content of gold allows for the richness of the yellow color.

When choosing the style of your setting, fashion plays an influential part. It is a good idea to discuss the fashion changes in setting styles with your jeweler. If you are purchasing the jewelry with the intention of selling it later on, you probably will want to select a more conservative setting that will not be subject to the whims of fad and fashion. However, you might prefer to choose something personally appealng or striking if the jewelry is meant to be kept and treasured.

Whatever your individual tastes, purchasing that worthwhile piece of jewelry can bring you lifelong pleasure.

Whatever size or color, pearls provide 'glow'

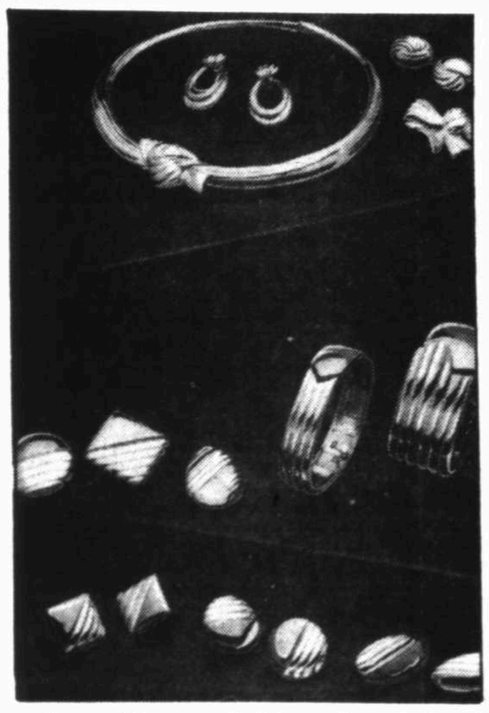
Once upon a time when every young lady wore white gloves and sometimes even a hat, it was an absolute necessity to have a perfectly matched single strand of pearls with matching earrings.

It is only today that the American market has learned what the world has known all along — that pearls need not be milk-white and perfectly round, reports the Jewelry Industry Council. In many countries colored pearls are prized much more highly than white pearls, and baroque pearls are coveted for their unique shapes.

Fashion today is teaching us that there is beauty in odd-shaped pearls and pearls with tints of color, such as the delicate pink of fresh water Chinese pearls and the silvery grey hue of Japanese fresh water pearls. In fact the Council points out, today's designers use the color tones and asymmetric shapes of the pearl itself to create unique and one-of-a-kind jewelry.

While today's string of pearls may not be evenly matched or carefully graduated in size, they are still the "go-with-everything, flatter-every-woman" fashion they were years ago. And that goes for wearing them with everything from evening gowns to blue jeans, particularly the designer-fashioned jeans.

Pearls go to all lengths to please, in single and multiple strands for eye-appealing neckwear, and in handsome pins, rings and earrings. Pearls combine with gemstones either on the same necklace or mixed with gemstone necklaces. The black and white motif is seen in necklaces of pearls with onyx or serpentine stones. Pearls are used on gold station chains and in delicate lariats. Often one large baroque pearl, set in gold, is worn on a gold chain.



An exciting new twist on clean, tailored silhouettes is this two-toned collection of fashion jewelry with the textural mix of ribbed and polished surfaces and the sweeping lines of modern sculpting.

Christmas glitter not all on tree

Christmas is all that glitters — colorful glowing lights, glistening silver tinsel, gleaming, wistful eyes.

Yuletide is our brightest, most sparkling season. Small wonder that now more than any other time of the year, people try to capture that seasonal sparkle by buying dazzling diamonds and glittery gold. More jewelry, particularly diamonds, is acquired during December than in the other 11 months combined, according to a survey of professional jewelers.

"Diamond jewelry is our most popular Clhristmas item by far," said Bill Harris, vice-president and director of marketing for Zale Jewelry Division of Zale Corporation. "With so much to celebrate and so much emotional feeing during the holidays, people want to give their loved ones something to express these sentiments. Gold and diamonds are lasting symbols of love, affection and warmth."

Harris added that people buy jewelry during the holiday season for more than just Christmas gifts. "A surprising number of people get engaged and married at Christmas time," he said.

And three out of four women choose a diamond to seal their vows, he said. "Perhaps it is because no two diamonds are alike, just as no two relationships are alike. Or perhaps it is the fct that because of their hardness diamonds don't wear out, just as true love doesn't wear out. In any case, millions of young women will be hoping for a diamond this Christmas."

The Christmas season puts shoppers in the mood to buy jewelry. Many shoppers are stumped when it comes to deciding what to buy. Sheppers should examine the lifestyle, tastes and characteristics of those who will receive the gift, Harris said. "For example a large diamond cluster ring wouldn't be practical for a woman who uses her hands a lot. If a man has a large build a lightweight neck chain could seem too delicate in proportion. A woman with short fingers may be overpowered by a wide ring band. If you stop to think about it there are many considerations when choosing jewelry."

Shoppers should also pay attention to jewelry and accessories shown in fashion sections of newspapers and magazines, he suggested. "A new dimension in jewelry this season is the big, bold design. Big cuff bracelets, multi-strand pearl chokers set with big pendants and over-sized earrings complement the sweaters and casual suits which emerged this fall."

A popular new design for both men's and women's rings is the "channel-set" mounting, in which a row of diamonds is wedged cleanly into the setting. The diamonds may cover only a portion of the mounting or completely encircle the band.

Diamonds blessing

If you have ever wondered why a gift of diamonds seems so precious, the Jewelry Industry Council thinks you will be interested in this ancient Hindu legend.

It was believed that a diamond's magical powers, such as its endowing its wearer with strength, courage and clear judgement (to name but three), were lost when the stone was acquired with money.

Only when the diamond was received as a gift would its multiple powers manifest themselves. Apparently the spirit dwelling in the stone was offended at being bought or sold and would leave the gem, thereby robbing it of its special powers. But if the stone were given as a pledge of love, the "spirit" would gladly transfer his powers from one owner to the next.

Build jewelry wardrobe for lasting Christmas gift

Help someone you care about build a karat gold jewelry wardrobe. Not only is this one of the most beautiful and personal ways to say "Merry Christmas," but it is a gift that lasts not just for the Christmas season but for every season of the year.

"Gold jewelry is designed in so many forms that you can find something perfect for everybody," said Michael D. Roman, chairman of Jewelers of America (JA), the national association offering consumer information about fine jewelry. "Gold jewelry is suitable for men, women and children...and it's available in prices to fit virtually every pocketbook."

Helping someone build a karat gold jewelry wardrobe is helping that person build his or her own lasting investment in beauty and versatility, according to Roman. When you give a classic gold jewelry item you are giving a gift that can be mixed and matched with other gold jewelry. It fits any and every occasion and makes a fashion statement for the person wearing it.

There are several basic, versatile categories of gold jewelry:

— Chains and necklaces: Neckchains are the most basic type of karat gold item in a gold jewelry wardrobe. A collection of neckchains should include a choker-length chain (15 to 16-inches) and a medium-length chain (18 to 20-inches). Also popular is one very long versatile chain which can be adapted for many looks by looping it two or three times around the neck or wearing it full length. One or several strands of karat gold beads are another fashionable choice for a collection. There are many styles to choose from, whether they have been handcrafted or machine-made. Some best sellers include the serpentine, herringbone, cobra and "c" -chain, all of which are available in a variety of lengths, gauges and prices.

— Earrings: No one has too many earrings. The basic karat gold jewelry wardrobe should include several pairs of earrings suitable for work or play, day or evening. A gold stud is the most basic. Expand a collection with a classic gold hoop in whatever size is most flattering, or perhaps a gold "drop" earring. One of the classic fluted or feathered shapes would be another good choice. To give additional mileage to a wardrobe think of gold earring "jackets" to give a totally different look to a tiny diamond, pearl or other pierced stud.

— Bracelets: Karat gold bracelets are fashion items that add that extra "touch of class" to every woman's wrist. Some favorites include gold chain or link bracelets worn alone or in mulitples, with or without charms, and I.D. bracelets, whether delicate or bold. Gold bangles also enjoy steady popularity.

— Rings: A gold jewelry wardrobe should contain at least one gold ring. Choose from a variety of wide bands, wires, domes or "stackables" (which are really several slender rings worn together). Karat gold stackable rings are very popular and versatile. You can start with one and build up a collection. "Stacks" can be rearranged or worn one or two at a time. Other favorite karat gold ring styles include interlocking rolling rings, signet rings, initial rings and the popular heart motif. Rings are perhaps the most cherished and personal karat gold jewelry basic.

— Pins: On a lapel, a collar, a hat, every woman's jewelry wardrobe should include at least one or two karat gold pins or brooches. Bar pins and stickpins are versatile and affordable as are small scatter tacks. Favorite motifs include hearts, flowers, bows and geometrics. Pins can be worn in clusters or singly. Two or three karat gold pins provide dozens of witty, romantic and dramatic touches to accent a gold wardrobe.

Where should you purchase karat gold jewelry? "For the best selection and the most professional advice, it's vital to go to your local jeweler," Roman said. "He can answer your questions and help you find that right piece of gold jewelry that will say 'Merry Christmas' with love and lasting beauty."

Try stocking stuffers with style

Try these items for some stylish stocking stuffers:

— Geometrically styled earrings, bracelets, necklaces and other revamped Art Deco designs made popular during the 1920s and 30s.

— Tri-colored gold bracelet, necklace and earring sets.

— Men's diamond jewelry in understated masculine designs that reflect flair, not flash.

— "Channel set" diamond rings, necklaces, bracelets, in which a row of diamonds is snuggled into the gold mounting.

— Earring jackets, from simple to ornate, which can change the look of a single pair of diamond or colored gemstone studs.

— Accessories such as cuff links, collar bars, business card holders and money clips to add flair to conventional business looks.

Cultured pearls: Christmas magic

Christmas — the word alone is magic. And while children's sleep is filled with visions of sugarplum treats and delightful toys, the child in every adult dares to hope for something they would never dream of finding under the tree.

So powerful is this season's enchantment that often wishes do come true on Christmas morning. This year why not let the beauty of cultured pearls work their special magic? Their lustrous sheen is sure to delight every woman when she opens her gift of a luminous strand of cultured pearls. And during this season of holiday parties and get-togethers cultured pearls add an enchanting glow, making every woman look her beautiful best, lending a touch of magic to rich winter velvets and silks.

Along with the various strand lengths of cultured pearls, which range from the classic choker (14- to 15-inches) to a rope or sautoir (longer than 36-inches), other gifts might include cultured pearl earrings, rings or brooches.

For the fashionable man a cultured pearl tietack or pair of cuff links adds polish and sophistication to the finest dresswear.

Before purchasing a gift of cultured pearls there are a few things to be aware of because cultured pearls are graded according to their qualities at the time they are harvested. The following factors will determine their value:

— Lustre: The deeper the lustre and iridescence characteristic of the cultured pearl the more precious it is.

— Size: Generally the larger cultured pearls are more valuable and more costly as they are scarce and difficult to grow. However a smaller cultured pearl may be of equal value to a larger one if it has a superior orient.

— Shape: Symmetry determines value. Although round pearls are popular other forms include pear shape, tear shape and oval. Baroque pearls have irregular and asymmetrical shapes.

— Surface perfection: The best cultured pearls are satiny smooth and have no perceptible blemishes. Less costly pearls may be lightly spotted.

— Rarity: The rarer the jewel the greater the value. Cultured pearls are rare jewels by nature as they can only be grown in a few areas around the world and take quite a number of ears to grow. To find a "perfect pair" of cultured pearls is extremely rare as few cultured pearls are identical in lustre, size, shape and color.

Cultured pearls may be white, pink cream, rose-pink, silver, green and black, and with the vast range of styles and types of jewelry from which cultured pearls are made, you are sure to find just the gift that will capture the heart of someone special with its magical beauty.

Red diamond rarest of 'fancy' diamonds

The mere mention of a tinge of color in a diamond can send gem fanciers into a tizzy. But when jewelers speak of the color of a "fancy" diamond, they are apt to be exultant, says the Jewelry Industry Council.

"Fancies" are diamonds with a pronounced and attractive body color — so rare that they are almost priceless. Among the most famous colored diamonds are the deep blue Hope diamond, the apple green Saxony Dresden and the Earth Star, a warm glowing brown.

While diamonds are found in such colors as pink, sapphire, gold and even black, the red diamond is the very rarest — as scarce as the proverbial hen's tooth.

Gold jewelry for men elegant gift

There is something to be said for a man who wears gold. In keeping with the elegance of the '80s karat gold accessories are a "must" for today's man, his mark of success no matter what the occasion. And they are an appropriate gift he won't forget — a lasting remembrance he will be proud to own for many Christmases to come.

Gold jewelry for men is a tradition as old as history itself. Why not make a little history of your own this holiday season by "gifting" him with something that really suits his many moods and modes. The Gold Information Center makes these suggestions:

— Something suitable: For the man who frequently wears a suit and tie, polish his professional image with gold accessories that mean business. Gift options include tie and collar accessories such as gold collar pins, collar bars, tie bars, tietacks and stickpins — practical enhancements for the well-suited look.

For on-the-sleeve elegance give him cufflinks of gold for his French cuff shirt or surprise him with gold "button covers" which add a touch of class to ordinary buttons on barrel cuff shirts.

For a traditional expression of his heritage why not tuck a handsome signet ring into his stocking. Have the ring engraved with his initials, a personalized symbol or an ancestral coat-of-arms for a gift that is especially memorable.

As a functional accent to fine leather consider a tailored belt buckle in gold. For carrying his daily "essentials" give him a gold money clip or key holder.

— Something sportive: For casual elegance open-necked shirts call for gold neckchains, worn with or without pendants, a fashion popularized by sports stars. A bola tie fashioned of real gold makes a great gift for advocates of traditional Western wear.

For sporting good looks choose from the many chain link bracelet styles. Or give him a gold I.D. bracelet, personalized with his name or initials.

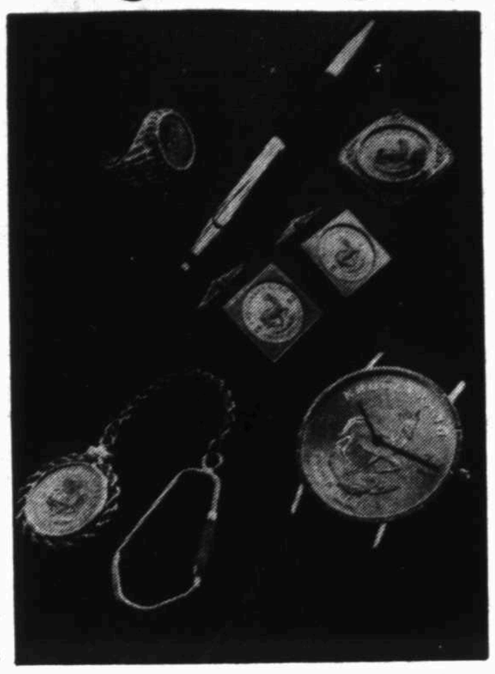
For a fashionable "investment" choose from the wide range of men's gold fashion rings and rings set with cold coins.

— Something black tie: For that special holiday party he will feel particularly debonair in a new pair of karat gold cufflinks or stud set to complement his black tie attire.

After-six accessory options include a gold case to hold business and credit cards, a gold money clip and perhaps a gold lighter or cigar clipper.

There are golf collar stays for the man who doesn't feel the need to flaunt his success, gold swizzle sticks and gold toothpicks for the man who does.

Gifts of gold for men are available in an endless array. Visit your local jewelry store for a range of styles and prices. Make this a Christmas he will never forget with a gift of gold jewelry he will always remember.



Invest in gold accessories that mean business.

For after-six elegance give him a handsome pair of karat gold cufflinks. These of 18K gold and onyx are a GOLD '83 award-winning design by Michael Bondanza.

Jewelry gifts please everyone

When all the presents are opened on Christmas morning the ones that bring the greatest pleasure are usually the ones most carefully chosen with care and love, said the Jewelry Industry Council. It is the gift that is personal that means the most, such as the elegantly slim quartz watch or the handsome onyx desk set. Sure to please the very young ladies are delicate gold-filled pendants with real gemstones and cultured pearls.

Look for out-of-the-ordinary gifts for your favorite host and hostess — a silver wine bottle holder or an elegat little silver snail that holds colored toothpicks for the finger foods whipped up by a gourmet cook.

Fashion jewelry is a favorite, especially the new designer necklaces so popular today. Big, bold and dramatic, they will be a welcome addition to her holiday accessories, setting off colorful holiday finery.

The best thing about jewelry and jewelry store merchandise is that you can practically shop for your whole Christmas gift list at your favorite jeweler's with easy one-stop shopping. Even diamonds can be within your budget range in new earrings, pins and pendants. And what woman was ever disappointed with a gift of diamonds? Men get a break as well this Christmas with new pocket jewelry, rings, tie pins and studs featuring a touch of diamond glitter.

Pearls are a surefire pleaser as they flatter every complexion and are a welcome addition to any woman's jewelry wardrobe.

There is a wealth of other gift ideas at the jeweler's — bar ware, holloware, cigarette boxes and lighters, pocket jewelry, birthstone rings, crystal, china, etc. Personal jewelry will please anyone on your list.

Happiness is a gift of jewelry on Christmas morning. There is a gift from the jewelry store that is sure to please everyone on your list, whether it is a new slim quartz watch, a set of designer-fashion jewelry, a handsome desk set, gold-filled jewelry, pearls, colored stones or gold.

Men's jewelry good gift for 'extra special' men

If you are looking for something extra special for the men in your life, whether dad, brother, husband or boy friend, make it the gift of love — jewelry.

Because a gift of jewelry is a highly personal gift and something that continues to give pleasure for years to come, it is a favorite at Christmas time. You don't have to worry about his sock size, neck or sleeve measurements, or his preference in fabrics or colors when you select something from the jewelry store. And you have a wealth of gift ideas to choose from.

It could be coin cufflinks, gold tiebars, engraved money clips, a handsome karat gold pendant with his birth sign, initial, favorite sport or animal in karat gold. Choose a set of gold-filled buttons for his treasured blazer as a novel gift.

Then there are bar ware items for the perfect host, as well as handsome silver desk accessories such as stamp dispensers, letter openers and the new elegantly styled writing implements on onyx or marble desk stands or a pen/pencil set for his pocket.

The very newest item for that special man "who has everything" is the jewelry tie. It is similar to the bolo but has a precious metal chain of karat gold or sterling silver, with a "knot" decoration that often sports a diamond or other impressive stone.

Don't forget that it is possible to have many jewelry store items engraved with his name or initials.

This Christmas make it personal and a special gift — a gift of jewelry.

Variety of watches for gifts

The celebration of Christmas, although international, varies significantly throughout the world. In Belgium and the Netherlands gifts are exchanged on Dec. 6, the feast day of St. Nicholas, while Christmas Day is marked by quiet family gatherings. In Mexico "Posadas," a nine-day religious ceremony where different families re-enact the Christmas story, highlights the holiday season. In contrast Christmas in Brazil is celebrated with lively summer festivals resembling American carnivals.

One custom that knows no cultural bounds is the exchanging of gifts. Among the timeliest of presents are watches. There are wind-up models, quartz with hands and digital quartz. For the best of both worlds — a watch with a digital readout and traditional dial with hands — consider a two-in-one timepiece which offers both. These water-resistant "combo" models feature an alarm, hourly chime, chronography and day/date readout.

For the sports-minded there is a wide collection of durable, water-resistant designs with lap-timers, net-timers and start/stop signals. Some can even withstand water pressure to 300 feet below sea level — perfect for the water sports enthusiast. There is also a lightweight digital stopwatch which is great for amateur or professional sportspeople.

There is a smart grouping of men's and women's styles for business or dress affairs.

Care of watch commom sense

You don't have to pamper your watch to keep it in top condition. Just follow these common sense rules suggested by the Jewelry Industry Council:

— Avoid exposing your watch to sudden extremes of heat or cold.

— Keep it away from powder, perfume and loose tobacco.

— Although many watches are equipped with shock-protection devices, it is wise not to subject your watch to overly vigorous treatment.

— Unless the degree of water resistance was clearly specified when you bought your watch don't risk wearing it into the shower or swimming pool.

— If you own a mechanical watch, wind it once a daily, preferably in the morning. Take it off your wrist so that it can be wound with thumb and forefinger.

This gold and leather belt is a new, sophisticated and geometric approach to accessory design. Corrigated steps of pewter are double dipped in 14-karat and 18-karat gold. The one-inch soft tie leather strap is interchangeable.

An evening to remember is practically guaranteed with this softly draped long dress of black matte jersey. The girdle of blazing bugle and caviar beads encircling the waist give a jeweled look to the entire outfit.

Diamond folklore, facts fascinating

Here are some little-known facts and fancies about diamonds:

Diamond folklore

— Diamonds were first discovered in India between 600 and 700 B.C.

— Diamonds are considered harbingers of victory and emblems of fearlessness and invincibility.

— A brooch worn in 270 A.D. by Queen Zenobia, ruler of a kingdom in Asia Minor, is the first recorded reference to diamonds as jewelry.

— Diamonds are believed to drive away ghosts when worn on the left arm.

— King Henry VIII had a vast collection of diamond jewelry including 556 diamond buttons.

— The word diamond is taken from the Greek word "adamas" meaning invincible or unconquerable.

— Diamond is the gem of reconciliation and is believed to enhance marital love.

— People in the 16th century believed that diamonds glowed when worn by the virtuous but dulled when worn by sinners.

— Though wearing diamonds is believed to protect against poison, powdered diamond dust has been used as a poison.

Diamond facts

— More diamonds are sold at Christmas than any other time of the year.

— Diamond is the hardest known natural substance on earth, crystallized carbon.

— Diamonds possess the greatest light-bending power of any known substance, a property giving them their brilliance.

— Typical diamond deposits contain one carat in every five tons of rock. Only 20 percent is gem quality and half is lost in cutting, so 100 tons of rock must be mined to produce one carat of cut diamond.

— Diamond value increases with size, absence of color, purity and correctness of cut.

— Diamonds vary from colorless to gold-yellow, blue, green, pink and amber.

Jeweled hair

To give hair a jeweled look for holiday parties, try sprinkling your hair lightly with glitter, available in numerous colors at most stationery stores.

Jewelry emphasizing shape is a new fashion trend. Here necklaces in black take an octahedron shape and are co-related with a free-form rigid bracelet.

Geometric style newest look in jewelry fashion

Jewelry and geometrics may seem an odd pair, but that is the latest look in jewelry fashion, according to the Jewelry Industry Council. New necklaces and bracelets, rings and pins emphasize geometric shapes in triangles, squares and cubes. Curvilinear shapes are used in new neckplates, often in contrasting colors such as a red crescent with a black crescent or white and black.

Bracelets take on free form shapes with angular edges as compared with the familiar circular bangle and rigid bracelets. Pins tend to be larger and more colorful, as do earrings. Big news is that necklaces will either be very short — dog collar or choker length — or long. Most of the new necklaces will be 20 to 30 inches long.

For dressy wear, opera length or rope necklaces will be popular, as will carefree lariat necklaces. There is a strong trend back to pearls as a staple in every woman's jewelry wardrobe, and the three strand choker length pearl necklace will be popular.

In longer pearl necklaces, jet beads, crystal and chain serve in stations to lengthen the look.

New pendants show large, imposing geometric centerpieces, and the heart shape is gaining in popularity for pendants. It is new jewelry with a bold look, and it promises to add pizzaz to many wardrobes, the Council reports.

Tips for buying jewelry given

For better jewelry purchases, try the following tips:

— Always buy from a reputable jeweler.

— Make sure gold jewelry is stamped with the gold content.

— Choose a piece because of the stone. Settings are faddish and can hide chips or other imperfections.

— Keep in mind a diamond's four key qualities: cut refers to the shape and to the skill and precision of cutting the rough stone to reveal its ultimate beauty; color or rather the absence of color makes one diamond more precious than another; carat weight indicates the size of a diamond; and clarity refers to a diamond's freedom from flaws.

— Ask questions. Your jeweler is more than happy to help.

Estate jewelry investment

In this day of modern technology, gemologists are able to treat stones with laser and radiation. They also are able to drill and take out carbon spots so minute that only a high powered gem scope can detect it. It is possible to have doublet and triplet stones. They can cut stones in various ways no play down defects in the chips. They are also making some colored stones that even the Gemological Institute of America are inconclusive as to the stone's origin. Stones can be heated and radiated to deepen, change or totally recolor them. These stones will fade as the years go by.

All original and antique jewelry is a good investment. While you are having fun hunting ans searching for that "right" piece that is just for you, look for a dealer that you can trust. One very important factor in selecting a dealer is to see if they guarantee their jewelry one hundred percent.

You need to know the different cuts of stones, round American brilliant, radiant, marquise, pear, emerald, kite, triad, oval and baguette. The older stones have such cuts as the European brillient cut and the rose cut. One must also consider the difference between modern cut diamonds cut on a high speed cutting wheel and the older stones cot on a dop stick leaving an open culet (a culet is the back point of a diamond where all of the facets come together).

If your estate piece is before 1940 and all original, you will have a stone that has not been treated, altered or colored. As early as 1890 there were reconstructed and doublet or triplet stones but these can readily be detected with a refractometer.

One of the best features of estate or antique pieces is the quality and uniqueness of workmanship. If you get individual and designed pieces or the designs of Cartier, Tiffany, Van Cleef and Arpel, J.E. Caldwell, Monique, David Webb or some of the French houses, you will have something very different and out of the ordinary. The Art Nouveau, Deco and filigree work between 1900 and 1935 is very hard to copy or duplicate.

The last and probably the most important factor is that if you shop wisely you can buy these pieces at a fraction of their current value. Because of the rarity of most of these stones they will increase in value more rapidly than their modern day constituents. They can also be marketed at the larger East and West coast auction houses for a good profit.

Considering all of these factors, go out and have some fun and go treasure hunting.

Bulova tradition over 100 years old

For 110 years Bulova has been the most respected and dependable name in American watchmaking.

The company which was started by Joseph Bulova in 1874, when he opened a small jewelry store on Maiden Lane near Wall Street in New York City, is still a leader in the development of new watch and clock technologies and fashions which appeal most to the American public. The firm continues to follow the principles set by its founder — "to produce only quality timepieces to be displayed in a dignified setting by knowledgeable professionals."

Bulova Watch Company was the first mass marketer of fine quality watches in the United States and Canada. Joseph Bulova and his son Arde started importing pocket watches in volume from Switzerland in 1907. By 1911 they built their first American plant and started producing watches on a scale never attempted before. Through mass production they made reasonably priced watches available to everyone, instead of a luxury for the few.

During World War I Bulova pioneered the concept of men wearing wristwatches (they were considered women's jewelry until then). Realizing that men carrying weapons could not reach for pocket watches and that they needed accurate time to synchronize trench and artillery warfare, Bulova mass produced wristwatches for the American Army.

After the war the company was the first to offer a wide selection of men's wristwatches. It followed in 1924 with a complete line of women's wristwatches with diamonds and jewels. Men's wristwatches soared in popularity when Charles Lindbergh flew the Atlantic for the first time in 1927. His only timepiece was a Bulova wristwatch. Bulova sold more than 50,000 of the "Lone Eagle" style wristwatches during the next few years.

The greatest advance in timekeeping since the invention of the balance spring in 1658 was the first electronic wristwatch developed and introduced by Bulova in 1960. Their "Accutron" tuning fork watch set the standard of accuracy for watches by guaranteeing perfect time within one minute a month.

Over the years Bulova continued to expand its Clock Division and play a leading role in presenting technlogical and design innovations. The company produced the world's first clock radio in 1928 — it was part of a grandfather clock which stood six feet tall. The company later introduced tabletop clock radios, pocket clock radios and mini clock radios. The first electronic wall and mantel clocks were introduced in 1931, followed by cordless transisterized and electronic models in the 1960s.

By 1970 Bulova was producing quality Accuquartz travel alarms with calendars, day and date indicators. The following year they introduced a desk clock which showed the time in any of 24 time zones around the world. Bulova expanded its collection of clocks to more than 200 models when it organized its new Clock Division in 1971.

With the introduction of its new "Dimension" collection of the thinnest wall clocks ever produced, Bulova continues to be a leader of the American watch industry with new advances in design, technology and marketing concepts.

The Gold Pan offers gold nugget jewelry

Did you know a one-ounce gold nugget is now more rarely found than a five-carat diamond? The Gold Pan offers you natural pure gold nuggets, something very rare. Less than 1 percent of the world's recoveries are in nugget form. Every year nugget discoveries become more rare.

The Gold Pan gives you the opportunity to own such a rare treasure. Authentic gold nuggets possess the required gem stone qualities of beauty, rarity and durability. Natural gold nuggets are remarkably close to total purity, containing slight traces of silver, platinum or copper. Assay value is generally between 21 and 22 carats, significantly purer than the gold normally used in the very finest jewelry.

Most jewelers do not offer gold nugget jewelry simply because the extreme scaricity of natural nuggets limits their distribution to a small number of fine jewelry stores like The Gold Pan throughout the world.

The Gold Pan offers you an assortment of fine gold nugget jewelry along with an extensive line of 14K gold jewelry and distinctive gifts. If you have something particular in mind, come share it with us. Custom orders are welcomed.

Police forum spawns new crime-fighting techniques

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The computerized cop of the future will likely use satellite photos of the city to chase his suspect.

When the crook is caught, he'll be identified with a 3-D holographic mugshot and could be sent to an island penal colony or put in a deep-freeze for his sentence.

Upon release — or thawing — authorities will keep track of the parolee through a tiny radio transmitter beneath his skin.

These were among the scenarios for law enforcement in the 21st century being discussed at the monthly sessions of Forum 2000, the Los Angeles Police Department's hedge against future shock.

At the meetings, police personnel from clerk to police commissioner learn about new crime-fighting technology, sociological changes and other factors that will affect tomorrow's law enforcement.

Similar meetings a decade ago spawned the department's new Emergency Command Control System, a master command center that automatically relays calls and information to the officers nearest the scene of a crime.

Computer terminals have been installed in each of the department's 800 patrol cars to process incoming calls. They can also provide access to records from local, state and federal agencies.

"It is the largest, most sophisticated communications system of its type in the world," said Deputy Chief Clyde Cronkite, who presides over the Forum 2000 sessions.

"It is the kind of brainstorming in Forum 2000 that allowed this thing to happen, and this brainstorming will allow some of the other ideas mentioned in the forum to happen 10 years from now," he said recently.

At one recent Forum 2000 discussion, Cronkite spoke of an era in which officers wear Dick Tracy-like wrist radios and disable the ignition systems of cars they chase.

But a guest speaker, professor Selwyn Enzer of the University of California, noted that while advanced technology will help catch criminals and keep them behind bars, it will also be a double-edged sword.

"You're going to have information on everybody? They'll jam your information or put in phony information. You'll be arresting each other," Enzer said. "You're going to stop their cars? They'll stop yours."

The use of advanced technology will depend in large part on community acceptance, Cronkite said.

"We've discussed having a satellite that takes pictures of the city every few minutes. We had a policeman shot two months ago — if we had the satellite, we could have blown up a picture of that intersection to see who was there," he said.

"But it depends. Does the community want the kind of system that continuously takes pictures of the neighborhood?"

AP Laserphoto

Los Angeles Police Department Dep. Chief Clyde Cronkite sits at a computer terminal inside of one of the 800 LAPD patrol cars. The cars are equipped as part of the technological wave in crime fighting. The terminals process incoming calls and provide officers easy access to data from local, state and federal agencies including complete criminal records on suspects.

Money is also a challenge. The Emergency Command Control System, for example, cost $40 million.

The department is currently seeking approval for an extensive word-processing system that would cut down on police paperwork, but they'll probably have to give up five staff positions to get it.

"Some people may see our investment and discussion of the future as cold and impersonal. I don't," Cronkite said. "These devices and procedures would get rid of some of the routines that take up a police officer's time and give him more time for fighting crime."

Meanwhile, the forum, now into its 15th month, continues its prognostication and keeps Chief Daryl Gates informed of its progress. Even if the sessions result only in ideas, Cronkite feels they will have been valuable.

Gator gets kicked out of Army

FORT LEWIS, Wash. (AP) — Fed up with his constant fighting, biting and insubordination, the Army has discharged its meanest recruit — Pvt. Al E. Gator, mascot of the 3rd Squadron, 5th Cavalry.

Just to stay on his good side until he's gone, however, the Army presented the 4-foot-long alligator with the Army Commendation Medal along with a one-way ticket home to a Louisiana bayou.

Over beer and potato chips, the 3rd Squadron, 5th Cavalry toasted the departure of the 4-foot reptile last week during a soggy field day party tossed by Gator's superior officer, Maj. Henry Ruth, troop commander.

Al, no respecter of rank, attempted to chew off the hand of the major on occasion. But Ruth harbors no ill feelings and says he's going to miss the critter.

The alligator was a gift from the Louisiana National Guard four years ago, Ruth said. He found his way into every formal parade and inspection, tucked beneath the arm of some brave soldier, and dined well on mice, chicks and rabbits.

His off-duty hours were spent in a special water container in the headquarters basement next to the boiler where heat lamps keep the temperature a constant 78 humid degrees.

But Al became too cantankerous for the Army, and soldiers called area zoos to see if they would accept a gator. No luck.

Finally, Ruth said, they called Louisiana Fish and Wildlife Department officials. They agreed to provide Al with some basic jungle survival training and turn him loose.

The unit passed the hat for a ticket to Louisiana and built a special padded box for the trip.

Machine fails test

AURORA, Colo. (AP) — A combination video game and Breathalyzer was kicked out of a bar because patrons were using it to keep score on how drunk they could get, the tavern's manager said.

For 50 cents, the Sober-Meter lets drinkers measure their blood-alcohol content, and if it's too high, players are supposed to stop drinking or call a cab to take them home.

But Steve Ortiz, manager of Bennigan's Tavern, said watching how patrons used the machine convinced him to get rid of it.

"It wasn't being used as a tool by people who cared about their drinking," he said. "They used it to see how high they were."

Ortiz said he also began to worry about the legal problems that might arise from having the machine in his bar. He said he asked a lawyer if his business would be liable if a Bennigan's employee saw a drunk patron fail the test and leave, only to be involved in a serious auto accident.

The lawyer said that Bennigan's might be liable, and Ortiz decided to have the machine removed.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Germs may live in cracked eggs

Dear Dr. Solomon: Is there any harm in buying eggs that are cracked? One place I shop at sells them at a much lower price than the other eggs, and I could save some money this way. Can they be used? — Ms. W.L., Bryan, Texas

Dear Ms. L.: The answer to your question is a qualified "yes." Since cracked eggs may contain harmful bacteria, they sould be thoroughly cooked — as, for example, by hard boiling them — before they are eaten.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Is there any way to avoid the morning sickness that comes with pregnancy? I know that it's not all in the mind. — Mrs. M.S., Washington D.C.

Dear Mrs. S.: There's no guarantee, but some women find it helpful to eat a few soda crackers or some dry toast when they first wake up, and then to rest quietly in bed. Others find that eating smaller meals more often, and not drinking fluids with meals, also helps.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I don't know all the details, but my niece may have to have an operation because she is anemic. I don't understand the connection and would appreciate an explanation. — Mrs. G.D., Newark N.J.

Dear Mrs. D.: Since you provide only limited information, I have to make certain assumptions. One assumption is that your niece may be experiencing a problem with bleeding. Most of the iron in the body is contained in the red blood cells, and substantial amounts may be lost as the result of heavy menstruation or hemorrhaging. This may lead to a condition known as iron deficiency anemia.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Every time my mother goes to her doctor and gets a prescription, I have to telephone the doctor to find out what my mother is supposed to do with it. When I ask my mother why she doesn't get the information before she leaves the doctor's office, she says she doesn't know what to ask. What information should a person get when she gets a new prescription? — Adele, Harrisburg, Penn.

Dear Adele: The National Council on Patient Information and Education suggests that patients obtain the following information about prescription medications: The name of the drug and what it is supposed to do; how, when, and for how long the drug is to be taken; any foods, drinks, other medications, or activities that should be avoided while the drug is being taken; and the possible side effects of the drug and what to do if they occur. In addition, patients should ask for any written information about the drug the physician might have.

As I have mentioned previously in this column, I and many other physicians try to anticipate our patients' questions and encourage them to ask questions.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I'm usually a lot more active when I'm on vacation than I am during the remainder of the year, and I suppose that means I can get along with less insulin for my diabetes. Is there any rule of thumb I can use to determine how much insulin I will need? — Bill, Scranton, Penn.

Dear Bill: Dr. Stanley Mirsky, of the Mount Sinai School of Medicine in New York City, says that a patient who is more active while traveling than he is at home should lower his insulin dose by about 20 percent while having an equivalent diet that he has home. A tennis player or skier, for example, can decrease his morning dose of insulin by 20 percent or eat about 50 percent more carbohydrate. As an alternative, he can take his usual dose of insulin and eat about 10 extra grams of carbohydrate.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have been diagnosed as having rheumatoid athritis, although the symptoms that I have right now are not very bad. What I would like to know is whether they always get worse. — Alex, Macon, Ga.

Dear Alex: The best hope of preventing the serious consequences of rheumatoid arthritis is early diagnosis and treatment, and apparently your condition was diagnosed at an early stage. In some patients, the early indications of the disease are comparatively mild and may therefore be overlooked. I assume that your physician has prescribed medication, and I would urge you to follow his or her instructions.

For Dorothy, Kansas City, Mo.: The fact that some portions of your mother's blood tests fell outside the range that is considered to be normal is not necessarily a cause for alarm. Normal ranges for blood values are usually established on the basis of test results in children and young adults, and may therefore not be applicable to older people. This may account for the physician's apparent lack of concern.

Alabama town shaken by incident

ANDALUSIA, Ala. (AP) — Was it a bird? Was it a plane? Was it a lighter stump?

A lighter stump?

Whatever it was, it set Andalusian dogs howling, windows rattling and furniture shaking in this south Alabama town one afternoon earlier this week. Some people called the National Weather Service in Birmingham, thinking it was an earth tremor.

The official explanation was that soundless pressure waves created by airplanes flying out of Eglin Air Force base in northwest Florida sent vibrations rippling through Andalusia.

The National Weather Service in Birmingham said the National Earthquake Information service reported no detectable earth motion.

The Covington County Emergency Management Agency turned to the sky for an answer, according to Director Pat Woodham.

"We called air traffic control people who told us they had been flying out of Eglin for two days," said Woodham. "They said it was possible for vibration pressure waves to occur without any sound. This is what we contend happened."

Woodham said the police department received anxious calls from 2:28 p.m. to 3:28 p.m.

"We had several calls to police reporting the house shaking, the chairs folks were sitting in shaking and dogs howling as far up as Red Level," about eight miles away, Woodham said.

However, Walter Johnson, a dispatcher and jailer at the Covington County Jail, said he felt the tremor and explained it differently.

"I figured it was just a lot of people blowing up lighter stumps," he said. A "lighter stump" is a pine stump which, Johnson explained, makes very good kindling when unearthed.

Homes' value up 26 percent

The average non-farm home in Canada increased in value by about 26 percent between 1971 and 1981, according to the latest census information. The range was from a low of $38,610 in New Brunswick to a high of about $100,000 in British Columbia.

Mayor wants to ban caroling

BELLEVUE, Ky. (AP) — The mayor says he's considering a ban on outdoor Christmas caroling as part of this Ohio River town's effort to stop a recent rash of home burglaries.

Mayor Willard Hundemer said earlier this week he will decide on imposing the ban within several days.

If he adopts the ban, the mayor said, he would exempt large caroling groups from churches and other organizations. He said his aim is to prevent would-be burglars in small groups from posing as carolers to find out whether people are at home.

"I don't want to be Scrooge, but unless we blow this wide open and put some people in jail in the next week or two, I don't think we should have any Christmas carolers unless they're in bona fide large groups," Hundemer said.

Cabbage Patch fever still ravaging nation

By DANA FIELDS
Associated Press Writer

Police had to keep order outside a Louisiana store jammed by more than 100 would-be purchasers of the hard-to-find Cabbage Patch dolls, but a Pennsylvania store decided the fairest way to distribute its allotment was to give them away at local hospitals.

And in Milwaukee, a radio station's gag announcement that a B-29 bomber would drop 2,000 dolls Wednesday into Milwaukee County Stadium brought out about two dozen believers desperate to fulfill their children's Christmas wishes.

The homely objects of Cabbage Patch mania are yarn-haired, one-of-a-kind dolls born in the imagination of a Georgia mountain craftsman named Xavier Roberts. He called them "Little People" and made just 150,000, selling them for "adoption fees" of $125 to $1,000.

Now they are mass-produced and are selling out faster than they can be made at Coleco Industries Inc. of West Hartford, Conn., where a computer designs each one. Each doll comes with a birth certificate and "adoption" papers.

The price is $18 to $25 — officially. But a New Jersey firm, Rowe-Manse Emporium of Clifton, is advertising that it will sell them for $50 — if enough people are willing to give up mint-condition dolls for $40 via the company's "Cabbage Patch Trading Post."

A huge crowd gathered Wednesday morning outside the Circus World toy store in Alexandra, La., where nine dolls were for sale.

"People were barging through the gate," said Pam Austin, assistant store manager. "We had to call and get the cops to let us in."

Just a few months ago the store had 36 of the dolls, "and they just kind of sat around," Ms. Austin said. The demand is now so high that there was no fair way to distribute them, and "we had to have a drawing for them," she said.

Five people, including one woman who suffered a broken leg, were injured Sunday when nearly 1,000 shoppers packed a Zayre's department store in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., hoping for one of 240 dolls.

To avoid a repeat, Hess's Department Stores Inc. in nearby Allentown pulled its 82 dolls from the shelves and dispatched a Santa Claus on Wednesday to five hospitals to give them away in pediatric wards.

"The kids were thrilled," said Sacred Heart Hospital's Chris Boyer. "Some boys chose the dolls over boy-type toys like trucks. I don't know what the attraction is, but they sure love them."

It was a wind-chilled 7 degrees below zero Wednesday afternoon as more than 20 people entered Milwaukee County Stadium on Wednesday and searched the skies for the promised B-29 which some anonymous soul was supposed to have flown overhead.

Announcers Bob Reitman and Gene Mueller had said on their WKTI-FM show Tuesday morning that buyers should bring catcher's mitts and hold their American Express cards up high so the bomber could take aerial photographs of their account numbers.

The station was deluged with hundreds of phone calls from listeners, and ran disclaimers later in the day — but it was too late.

One of the believers was Lee, a 32-year-old man who said he was trying to fulfill the Christmas wish of his 2-year-old daughter. He asked that his last name not be used.

"I'm here to investigate the reported parachuting of Cabbage Patch dolls," Lee said. "When I heard it on the radio I thought, 'Far out.' I thought some rich guy wanted to give them away ...

"It's not that far-fetched. It could be possible that somebody could do it for a publicity stunt," he said.

Artificial heart implanted one year ago tonight

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — One year ago tonight, Dr. William C. DeVries began a pioneering operation to replace Barney Clark's diseased heart with an artificial one that kept the Seattle dentist alive 112 days.

Now, DeVries is "very enthusiastic" to try for a second time, preferably with a patient in better health than the dying Clark was when he underwent the surgery that was completed Dec. 2, 1982.

Meanwhile, Clark's widow says she doesn't regret the operation but recalls much that she "wouldn't care to live over again."

Since Clark's death March 23, ethical and medical questions have been scrutinized, and the University of Utah heart team is hoping to receive the go-ahead this month to find a second patient.

NEW YORK (AP) — Long-limbed Judith Jamison and "jazzy" ballerina Natalia Makarova feted Alvin Ailey on the 25th anniversary of his American Dance Theater in a balloon-bedecked program that ended with 68 dancers bopping to "All Night Long."

The gala program at City Center on Wednesday included excerpts from 15 dances tailored for the company, including black heritage numbers, balletic pieces, modern, experimental and jazz dances, and reunited former and current Ailey dancers.

Ms. Jamison, who left the company for "Sophisticated Ladies," introduced the three-part "Cry," which Ailey choreographed for her.

Ms. Makarova, who won the Tony Award for her part in the Broadway musical "On Your Toes," said, "Thank you, Alvin, for the elegance, beauty and excitement you have created all these years."

She reminded him how stiff she was when she first danced in his "The River" at American Ballet Theater. "I'm very jazzy now," she said. "Alvin, what are you waiting for?"

LEVITTOWN, Pa. (AP) — A group of developers headed by comedian Joan Rivers has dropped a plan to turn 87 acres of Pennsylvania farmland into a $100 million studio, but the development group will continue its court fight against Northampton Township officials.

Miss Rivers, her husband, Edgar Rosenberg, and developer Tom Pileggi announced the cancellation Wednesday. Rosenberg said the move will not affect a plan to build 300 condominiums on the land or a lawsuit filed in May seeking to have the tract incorporated as a new borough known as Two Ponds.

The suit was filed in Bucks County Court on May 10 to circumvent the township's refusal to rezone the site, located along Almhouse Road in Ivyland.

The land was bought by Pileggi at a 1976 auction for $200,000. Two years later, he was granted permission to subdivide the land and the idea for the studio was born.

NEW YORK (AP) — Linda Ellerbee, who will be without a television program after "NBC News Overnight" ends its nearly 18-month run early Saturday, says she won't sign on with "First Camera."

Ellerbee

"It's not the right thing for me to do right now," Ms. Ellerbee, 39, said Wednesday of her decision not to climb aboard the low-rated newsmagazine show. "I've already turned it down."

However, she said NBC News President Reuven Frank asked her to give the matter more thought, and "I said I would think it over some more."

Her contract with NBC News runs through May.

"NBC News Overnight" is being taken off the air with low ratings and heavy losses.

LONDON (AP) — Queen Elizabeth II presented the Queen's Gallantry Medal to a British diver who twice entered the sunken wreck of the HMS Coventry, lost in the South Atlantic during the battle for the Falklands, to retrieve Royal Navy secrets.

Petty Officer Michael Harrison, 33, received the medal in a ceremony at Buckingham Palace Wednesday.

The citation told of Harrison's experience as one of 26 divers. He had squeezed through a hole hacked in the side of the wreck under 300 feet of water and searched for hours in the ship's operations room for codebooks. He found two sets but as he was leaving snagged his umbilical line carrying safety rope, breathing mixture, communications and hot water to warm him in the icy Atlantic. It took an hour to get him free, but still he made a second eight-hour dive to recover a TV-sized piece of equipment, the citation said.

"It made the old heart jump a bit," Harrison recalled.

Also honored at the ceremony was British poet Sir Stephen Spender, who received his knighthood.

NEW YORK (AP) — Judy Woodruff, Washington correspondent for the "MacNeil-Lehrer Newshour," will anchor "Frontline," public television's weekly documentary series.

Woodruff

Jessica Savitch, who died in a car crash earlier this fall, was the anchor on "Frontline" last season.

Ms. Woodruff, 36, will anchor the program through May and then cover the 1984 election campaigns for "MacNeil-Lehrer," according to an announcement Wednesday.

The second season of "Frontline" begins Jan. 16.

Douglas

BOSTON (AP) — The widow of U.S. Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas will marry James Stone, former Massachusetts insurance commissioner, in January, a newspaper reports.

Cathleen Heffernan Douglas, 40, of Portland, Ore., married Douglas, then 67, in 1966. Douglas died in January 1980.

Stone, 35, is president of the Plymouth Rock Insurance Co.

LONDON (AP) — Soviet veteran Vassily Smyslov won the fifth game against Zoltan Ribli of Hungary in the world chess candidates semifinals.

The victory Wednesday night was Smyslov's second over Ribli and produced the most exciting chess of the nine days of the semifinals so far. Ribli has won one game and two were drawn, so Syslov now leads the match 3-2.

A win counts one point and a draw one-half point. The first player to reach 6½ points wins the match.

Ribli, 32, resigned after Smyslov's 41st move with the white pieces. He fought desperately against a surprising attack by the 62-year-old Smyslov, who is noted for quiet positional play and not for taking the offensive.

The other semifinalists, Soviet defector Victor Korchnoi who plays for Switzerland, and Gary Kasparov of the Soviet Union, had a rest day Wednesday.
