The incredible shrinking bond proposal

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Combining a magic show with a juggling act, the Midland City Council on Tuesday slashed the proposed bond issue total from $48 million down to $7 million, but all the proposals haven't disappeared.

During its regular meeting in City Hall Council Chambers, the council selected from its $48 million wish list the following items to include on an April 3 bond election: $3 million for street improvements, $2 million for new fire substations, and $2 million for improvements to City Hall, the police station and municipal garage. The $2 million for the last three items will be separated into separate issues, putting five propositions on the ballot. The election will be called at the council's Feb. 23 session.

If approved, these will be paid through general obligation bonds.

Now comes the juggling act. At the Jan. 26 meeting, the council also had included on the list $18 million for a sewage disposal system, $15 million for improvements and expansions at Midland Regional Airport, $6 million for water and sewer improvements, in addition to the street work, fire substations and public building work. This pushed the total up to $48 million.

If the council's juggling act doesn't crumble and the disappearing act works, the city still will be getting the entire $48 million package. It's just that the voters' approval isn't needed and that money for the work will come from other means.

UNDER THE PLAN discussed Tuesday, the city will allow the Colorado River Municipal Water District to sell $23 million in bonds for the sewage disposal plan and water and sewer projects. This will be broken down into $20 million for a system to pipe treated waste water to J. "Timber" Floyd's land southeast of the city, and $3 million for specific water and sewer line additions.

Another $3 million for unspecified water and sewer projects will come from revenue bonds, which don't need the voters' approval. And the $15 million projected for Midland Regional Airport will come from certificates of obligation.

In sizing up the possible sources of money, the city's bond counsel Joe Smith advised the panel that Midland has been upgraded on its bond rating from AA to AA-1. But the city didn't have enough income from the airport to cover $15 million in revenue bonds. He mentioned certificates of obligation as a way out and also as a means to get a lower interest rate.

Overall, Smith advised against revenue bonds, noting they require a higher interest rate than the C.O.'s or general obligation bonds.

Muse-Air gets city's 'ticket'

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Muse-Air was given the green light Tuesday by the Midland City Council to build its ticket counter space at Midland Regional Airport in preparation for its scheduled April 25 startup date.

Also approved during the regular meeting in City Hall were an ordinance changing requirements for freight loading zone permits, two annexation requests and a plan for more school crossing guards. Delayed until the Feb. 23 meeting were decisions on a seven-story office building in Petroleum Center and a proposal for emergency vehicle lights.

Col. Wilson Banks, director of aviation for the city, explained Muse-Air had asked for ticket counter space but that all available space at the airport is leased. The airline, which started flights between Dallas and Houston on July 15, is planning six flights daily Monday through Friday, three on Saturday and five on Sunday.

Muse-Air, the country's first non-smoking airline, plans to use DC-Super 80s, which were described by a representative as 85 percent quieter and 10 percent faster than current planes and 35 percent more fuel efficient.

THESE WOULD FLY into Dallas and link up with service to Tulsa, Okla., and Houston, according to Buck White, staff vice president of station operations.

White presented a plan which would allow Muse-Air to utilize the southern end of the terminal building and add on a 500 square foot building to accommodate the airline's needs.

Cost of the work is estimated at $42,500. While the city would pay for it initially, the cost would come back in Muse-Air's rent, according to Banks.

What concerned the council was not the airline's plans for adding to the terminal, but the need to proceed with a major expansion in the near future.

"Are we just closing the door at this point and saying we can't take any more airlines?" asked Councilman Tom Sloan.

"If we get another one, we'll have to start adding on to the building. Muse-Air fully understands that sometime in the not too distant future they may have to scrap this idea and go to the city's Master Plan," replied Banks. He mentioned another airline had indicated it would want to start service in October, but failed to name the airline. He also said Frontier Airlines has filed to provide service to Midland "but they haven't been to see us. Other airlines have filed and have been approved, but never appear on the scene."

Questioned further by Sloan about proceeding directly with the Master Plan extension, Banks answered, "We're talking about extending it 40 or more feet. We're talking about a lot more in construction and costs than this."

AFTER GETTING the council's approval, White said work on the ticket counter and office space would start "as soon as I can get to a phone."

The only opposition to a proposed freight loading ordinance came in the form of a letter to the council, but the panel approved the changes on first reading.

Those changes include switching to a permit sticker system and instituting charges of $25 for the first permit and doubling the cost for each one thereafter. Thus, fee for three permits would total $175.

The opposing letter came from Reynolds Brothers and it stated: "The taxpayers of Midland shouldn't have to pay for permits." It continued by pointing out all its delivery vehicles were clearly marked by signs on the sides.

But Buddy Kniffen of Merchants Freight Lines said, "We consider approval of this (ordinance) essential.

22-year-old man charged in shooting at restaurant

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

One man is dead and another has been jailed after gunfire broke out at an Andrews Highway restaurant late Tuesday night, marking the third city murder this week.

Pronounced dead at the scene by Justice of the Peace Robert Pine early this morning was 31-year-old Rick Jackson, no known address.

He had been shot at least twice in the neck with a .22-caliber pistol that was recovered outside The Pizza Man restaurant at 4322-B Andrews Highway, where the shooting occurred shortly before midnight.

Police said when they arrived at the scene, two witnesses were standing on the parking lot yelling, "The man inside the pizza place is shot."

Officers said they found Jackson lying face down in a large pool of blood near a restroom door. His body was taken to the Thomas Funeral Home.

Arrested at the scene was 22-year-old Jeff Ronald Thomas, a carpenter who gave police an address of D Street and Cuthbert Avenue. Judge Pine set bond of $50,000 on a murder charge and Thomas was returned to the city jail late this morning.

Police said the shooting resulted from a two-week feud between the suspect and victim, the details of which weren't immediately known. Both men were patrons of the restaurant.

Sunday night, the bodies of 44-year-old James Edward Warren and Eugene C. Jones, 30, were found in the front yard of a home at 509 S. Adams St. They died in a shootout between themselves following an argument over a woman. Both men suffered multiple gunshot wounds.

Funeral arrangements for Jackson, who may have been from Phoenix, Ariz., are incomplete.

Beating the bushes

Vice President George Bush returned to Texas to defend the president's New Federalism program against what Bush called the "great liberal soothsayers and chatterboxes" who are still "harping over the bankrupt ideas of the past." Bush spoke to the National Cotton Council convention Tuesday in Dallas and then flew to Houston, where he addressed 10,000 Republican contributors. Most Americans support the turnover of power to the states, Bush said.

Reaganomics reaffirmed

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan today reaffirmed his determination to drive high inflation out of the economy for good despite the pain that recession and high unemployment are inflicting upon the nation.

In a written economic report the president is required to send to Congress each winter, Reagan also held to his prediction of a "vigorous economic recovery" this year despite record budget deficits and persistently high interest rates.

"I am convinced that our policies, now that they are in place, are the appropriate response to our current difficulties," Reagan said a statement accompanying the report prepared by his Council of Economic Advisers.

But his report also warned that more suffering may lie ahead before the nation reaps the benefits of permanently lower inflation.

"The decision to end inflation over a period of several years will be sustained by this administration, even though short-run costs will be suffered before long-term benefits begin to accrue," the report declared.

Acknowledging a "short-lived trade-off between unemployment and the rate of inflation," the report said, "This means that policies designed to reduce inflation significantly will temporarily increase unemployment and reduce output growth.

"Reversing the trends of the past is not an easy task. I never thought or stated it would be," Reagan said. "The damage that has been inflicted on our economy was done by imprudent and inappropriate policies over a period of many years; we cannot realistically expect to undo it all in a few short months."

The president's economic forecast predicts 1982 will witness the highest sustained rate of unemployment in the post-World War II era, but the forecast also shows a steadily declining rate of inflation from nearly 10 percent last year to less than 5 percent by 1984.

"We hope 1981 will be described as the watershed year in which the more than decade-old rising trend of inflation was finally arrested," the report said. It added that costs of enduring the rising inflation rates the nation experienced during the 1970s are greater than the costs of moving toward a successful policy of non-inflationary growth.

Reagan is counting on the Federal Reserve Board, the nation's central bank, to wage the main fight against inflation by severely restricting the growth of the nation's money supply. The result thus far has been high interest rates that have triggered a recession and significant unemployment.

Previous administrations also have used recessions to dampen inflation, but once healthy growth resumes, inflation heats up again. The difference this time, Reagan's chief economists say, is that the government will not accelerate money growth to reinvigorate the economy at the cost of another surge of inflation.

Oil price declines could reach pump

NEW YORK (AP) — Crude oil prices are tumbling in the United States and abroad, and analysts say the trend probably will mean lower prices for consumers.

The Egyptian government oil company announced Tuesday it cut the price of its various crudes between $1 and $1.50 a barrel. Also this week, Iran and Britain dropped their oil prices as much as $1.50 a barrel.

"I don't see how this can help but lower pump prices," said Alvin Silber, who follows the oil industry for Dean Witter Reynolds Inc., an investment firm. "It won't be dramatic, just a drifting."

The decline in oil prices was due mainly to an oversupply on world markets caused by recession in the industrialized West and extensive conservation. Analysts also said major oil companies are depleting the high inventories they built up late last year.

Those events have taken the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries somewhat by surprise. The cartel's president said he was considering calling a special meeting before OPEC's regular May session.

Mana Saeed Oteiba, the oil minister of the United Arab Emirates as well as president of OPEC, said Monday he was meeting with oil ministers from Saudi Arabia and Kuwait about "adopting decisions suiting current conditions in the oil market at an emergency OPEC conference," the Gulf news agency reported.

On Tuesday, however, Saudi Arabia's oil minister, Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani, told reporters a special OPEC meeting was unlikely.

Yamani said after meeting with Oteiba and Kuwait's oil minister that the three "see no reason for calling an emergency OPEC conference at the present time."

Few experts foresee a collapse of OPEC's basic pricing structure that rests on Saudi Arabia's price of $34 a barrel for its top-grade crude. Instead, analysts think OPEC will cut production to match the slack level of demand.

Even that strategy is in question because many OPEC members — most notably Iran — want to increase production to boost their hard currency reserves. Iran needs revenue to finance its war with Iraq.

Larry Goldstein, an economist at the Petroleum Industry Research Foundation, said he expected some OPEC members to continue offering discounts in order to sell their oil. But he said Saudi Arabia, the world's largest oil exporter, could protect its $34-a-barrel benchmark price by reducing its production that is estimated currently at about 8 million barrels daily.

Many attend long MISD board meeting

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Lengthy deliberations on recommendations pertaining to child care hardship transfer applications and to the implementation of half-day kindergarten programs resulted in an unusually large public turnout and a long, drawn-out meeting Tuesday for Midland public school trustees.

According to Dr. James H. Mailey, Midland Independent School District superintendent, the greatest amount of movement between school districts has come from the child care hardship transfer program. Mailey said that because of a high number of such transfer requests, school administrators and trustees designated the task of granting approval as an administrative duty several years ago. Before this action was taken, people requesting child care hardship transfers were required to petition the board in the same manner as other persons requesting transfers.

SOME 400 TRANSFER cases falling under the child care hardship policy were approved administratively last year.

According to Mailey, the board said that if a student requested a transfer for any of five reasons, and if room was available at the desired school, the transfer would be approved administratively, thereby eliminating time-consuming deliberations by the board.

"The board said these kids could be moved — if room was available," Mailey said.

"Our elementary schools are full."

Mailey also said that due to the constant flow of people into Midland, at a rate of some 20 new students per week, it was difficult to determine during the July approvals of these requests if classroom space would be available during the upcoming school year.

Board President Parker Humes assured confused citizens in the audience, "We're not doing away with hardship child care transfers, but we are deliberating on if it will have to come before the board."

Trustee Joyce Sherrod asked board members if the approval of such transfer requests could be re-established as an administrative duty once the proposed new elementary schools were built, thereby alleviating much of the present overcrowding.

MAILEY SAID IT was possible, adding that the child care hardship transfer policy is one that had always been considered a temporary policy. Trustee Ann Page questioned board members about students who have already been granted a transfer request. According to the policy, if a student was granted a transfer from one grade school to another, that child may remain in the same school through the third grade. After the initial approval, the transfer would be granted administratively, meaning the child would not have to appear before the school board.

"What about those other kids who have already transferred?" Mrs. Page

Chance may offer explanation for tragedy

By CAROL KRUCOFF
The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Nov. 19, 1966, was one of the best and worst days of Harold Kushner's life. Twelve hours after his wife, Suzette, gave birth to their second child — a daughter they named Ariel — their pediatrician told them their 3-year-old son Aaron had a rare disease called progeria, or "rapid aging."

"We learned that our happy, outgoing son would look like a little old man while he was still a child," recalls Kushner in the quiet, controlled voice of a man who, although he has told the story countless times, still feels the pain anew.

"We were told that Aaron would have no hair on his head or body; he would never grow beyond three feet in height and he would die in his early teens."

THIS NEWS would be difficult enough for any parent to handle, but for Kushner — then a young, inexperienced rabbi who had just left his first congregation in New York to lead a 600-family synagogue in a Boston suburb — it was particularly devastating.

"What I felt most that day," he says, "was a deep, aching sense of unfairness. I had been a good person and always tried to do what was right. More than that, I was living a more religiously committed life than most people I knew — people who had large, healthy families.

"I had assumed my side of the bargain, so how could this be happening to my family? If God existed, if He was minimally fair, let alone loving and forgiving, how could He do this to me?"

OUT OF those churning emotions — anger, betrayal, bewilderment — says Kushner, one major question emerged: "Why do bad things happen to good people?"

"Virtually every meaningful discussion of God and religion," says Kushner, 46, "either starts with or eventually gets around to this question. In all of theology, it is the only question which really matters."

Kushner pondered this dilemma as he watched his son grow to old age. At 10, Aaron was physiologically in his 60s, at 12 he bought his clothes in the toddlers' department, at 13 his bodily systems were so weak that, in order to breathe, he often had to stand leaning against his bed all night. Two days after his 14th birthday Aaron died in his mother's arms. He weighed 25 pounds.

After Aaron's death, Kushner stayed away from his congregation for 30 days to deal with his "grief, frustration and rage." Eighteen months later he sat down to write his answer to the question.

"WHEN BAD Things Happen to Good People" (Schocken Books, 149 pages, $10.95), is, he notes, "obviously the book of a rabbi. But it is not just for Jews." It is meant, he says, "for all those people who want to go on believing, but whose anger at God makes it hard for them to hold onto their faith."

It is a personal book, "written out of my own need to put into words some of the most important things I had come to believe and know. I knew I would write the book, almost from the beginning ... to redeem my son's death from meaninglessness."

The most common explanation for why bad things happen to good people is that "we deserve," says Kushner, "what we get." Considering misfortune a punishment for sin stems from "our tremendous need to see the world as making sense," he says. "And most of the time it does. But when it doesn't is when we get into trouble.

"People stunned by tragedy immediately look back to see where it was they went wrong. They may conclude that 'If only I'd observed this holiday, then my mother wouldn't have gotten sick.' It creates guilt even where there is no basis for guilt. It makes people hate God, even as it makes them hate themselves."

And most disturbing of all, "It does not even fit the facts."

The problem with other common explanations for tragedy — "It teaches us a lesson," "God has a purpose we can't comprehend," "It makes one a better, more sensitive person" — is that they "aren't really meant to help the sufferer," he says, but "meant primarily to defend God ... and transform bad into good and pain into privilege."

Instead, says Kushner, "Consider that maybe the suffering happens for some reason other than the will of God." Such as "bad luck, randomness." Aaron's illness, concludes Kushner, was "the result of a blind genetic accident."

Surviving a tragedy, he concedes, requires courage. The most helpful survival tools, he says, are "the ability to forgive" and the "ability to love." Ordinary people can do extraordinary things, he says, if they can "forgive and accept ... a world which has disappointed them by not being perfect ... (and can) reach out to the people around them and go on living despite it all."

Price of stop along way less as fare wars continue

By JAMES PELTZ
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The current airline price war on coast-to-coast flights has come down to one question: How much is a quick stop along the way worth?

Most transcontinental carriers had just lowered their non-stop, round-trip fares up to 52 percent, to $298, when Continental Air Lines, United Airlines and American Airlines decided to go a step further.

The carriers announced Tuesday they will charge only $258 on flights that make a stop in a hub city such as Denver, Chicago or Houston.

Continental said it initiated the lower rate because it does not fly non-stop from the East Coast to California and needed added incentive to attract passengers. United and American do fly non-stop and will keep that fare at $298, but they will match Continental on flights involving a stop, they said.

Other transcontinental carriers, such as Eastern Airlines and Pan American World Airways, were studying the latest reductions.

Only four months ago many carriers were praising the end of another transcontinental fare war, with some emphasizing that prices were unrealistically low and damaging for all the airlines involved. Another fare war over New York-to-Florida routes should abate March 1, when the carriers said they will raise one-way fares to $120 to $135 from $77 to $79.

Explaining the latest cut, spokesman Bruce Plowman said Continental is "not a transcontinental carrier by design" — it serves less than 10 percent of the market — since it mainly flies people from one of the coasts to Denver or Houston. Hence, he said, enticing people to continue through one of those cities to the other coast "provides incremental revenue for us," and "we can afford" the discount fare.

"We do not understand why the major transcontinental carriers insist on coming down to match us," Plowman said. "The only people they're hurting are themselves because they are diluting their fare structure."

In Chicago, United spokesman Chuck Novak agreed that "these discount fares are not generating the traffic that would be required to justify that fare. But it is a matter of survival in the transcontinental market. You need to maintain your competitiveness and you cannot give away a large discount to any one carrier."

Continental said the new fares do not carry any purchase restrictions, but travel must begin by March 31 and no extended stops may be taken in those cities where the flight temporarily stops. Novak said United's new fares probably will include the same flying restrictions.

American spokesman Al Becker said the carrier plans to raise its round-trip fare by $60 beginning April 1.

Many carriers also have said their one-way, non-stop, coast-to-coast economy fares will rise from $149 to $169 on April 1 as seasonal traffic increases.

Price wars in some markets were among factors cited for the substantial losses posted by many of the major carriers in the 1981 fourth quarter and full year.

In the final quarter Eastern lost $29.4 million, TWA lost $46.9 million and United Airlines, a unit of UAL Inc., lost $73.9 million. Pan Am reported a fourth-quarter operating loss of $125.2 million.

All expected to go smoothly for Kissinger heart surgery

BOSTON (AP) — Although there are some risks, former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger says his doctor told him open-heart surgery shouldn't slow him down a bit.

"He told me I would be stronger than ever afterward — which is the most terrifying news my associates have ever received," Kissinger, 58, joked Tuesday.

Kissinger, scheduled to undergo surgery this morning at Massachusetts General Hospital, was reported in good condition and resting comfortably early today.

"This is not an event of great significance," the 1973 Nobel Peace Prize winner told reporters at a news conference outside the hospital. "It is something they do 1,200 times a year here at Mass General...I think I'm lucky I got up here and had the correct diagnosis made."

Kissinger said his doctors concluded "that I do have a heart and...that it is in need of repair.

"They are mumbling something about my weight and I wish them luck in their efforts," he said with a smile. "My understanding is that I can continue my lifestyle."

The former diplomat in the Nixon and Ford administrations said he hoped to leave the hospital in about two weeks and planned to limit his schedule for the next six weeks.

Kissinger, who had no previous heart problems, first entered the hospital one week ago complaining of shoulder pains. He was released Friday after a general checkup, but returned Sunday night.

A coronary angiogram taken Monday showed a blockage in the circulation around his heart, Kissinger said. His surgeon, Dr. W. Gerald Austen, said one artery is fully blocked and two others may be partially blocked.

Austen, the hospital's chief of general surgical services, has been Kissinger's personal physician for almost 10 years. He said the four-hour operation "probably" would be a triple bypass and he predicted a full recovery.

Fat is 'choice' issue in beef controversy

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Cattlemen, feeders and meat packers lined up against restaurant owners, and grocers were divided as the U.S. Department of Agriculture opened hearings Tuesday on proposed changes in meat grading.

The hearings, which now go to Atlanta Thursday and then to Washington, Des Moines and Dallas, are on the USDA proposal to reduce the amount of marbling, flecks of fat within the lean, required in the prime, choice and good grades. Standard grade would be eliminated.

Similar changes were made in 1976.

Restaurant owners contend reducing the marbling reduces the tastiness and tenderness of the beef, while the cattlemen contend it would make no significant change.

The cattlemen and their allies contended the amount of marbling required for choice should be reduced even further, but, to make sure the animals have been on feed, .3 inch of fat cover should be at the 12th rib and the color of the fat should not be too yellow.

Nearly 90 percent of the graded beef sold is choice. Most meat that doesn't meet choice standards is sold ungraded, but has still passed federal inspection.

The only grocers' representative to testify, Jim Olsen, president of the Utah Retail Grocers Association, said the association was unable to take a "clear-cut stand."

"Those grocers who sell strictly prime and choice grades are opposed to the changes because they feel there is a good selection and variety of grades presently on the market," he said.

Grocers in favor of the proposal feel "the average consumer doesn't know the difference. Most of the grocers in this category have already moved away from strictly the top grades and have gone to leaner cuts."

Cattlemen want the marbling requirements reduced to cut the time cattle spend on expensive feed. They say cattle often become too fat.

"If cattle could grade choice with slight marbling, it would not be necessary to feed those last few days where so much fat is produced," said William D. Farr, Greeley, Colo., representing the National Cattlemen's Association.

"A majority of the weight gain in the final finishing phase is fat. Research has shown that it requires more than twice as much energy to put on fat than it does to put on muscle protein," said John Ferry, Corinne, representing the Utah Farm Bureau Federation.

He said the proposed standards would save about $450 million per year in cattle-feeding costs.

Edward O. Elliott, Mount Victory, Ohio, representing the National Restaurant Association, and Hersh Ipaktchian, Salt Lake, of the Utah Restaurant Association said customers demand marbling.

They contend the choice category already encompasses too wide a spread of quality, and the grading system is being eroded. They say restaurateurs have trouble obtaining high quality beef, and there are increases in customer complaints.

"Credibility of beef quality had eroded. Our biggest problem today...is the unreliability of the system to deliver consistent grade quality," Elliott said.

"The bottom half of the present choice grade is so inconsistent in eating satisfaction that it drives consumers away from the beef counter," he said.

"The public cannot be fooled. They know what they want and no amount of labeling changes can alter it," Ipaktchian said.

The restaurateurs called for a return to pre-1976 standards and creation of a committee with representatives from throughout the beef chain to study the grading system.

They also spoke favorably toward a suggestion, which originated with cattlemen and the USDA but is not part of the proposal under consideration, to create a new grade, "select" out of the good and bottom of the choice grades.

Cattlemen contend consumers are moving toward leaner meat, and they cite increased sales of ungraded beef.

They also cite studies at Iowa State and Texas A&M that found "palatability will not suffer markedly," under the USDA proposal.

Opponents of the grading change contend the beef served people in the tests was cooked in ovens instead of broiled. They say broiling heightens the difference in tenderness in the different grades.

Albert Levie, president of Gulliver's Restaurants in California, said, "Research at Iowa and Texas may not reflect the palates in New York, Chicago, San Francisco and Los Angeles."

Cotton workers claim changes amount to 'betrayal of rights'

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a move assailed by the textile workers union as a "betrayal of workers' rights," the Reagan administration is reopening the door to changes in the cotton dust safety standard.

Eric Frumin, health director of the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers, charged that OSHA's decision to review the standard was precipated by a recent study by the American Textile Manufacturers Institute. The study maintained that less than 1 percent of cotton mill workers are suffering from byssinosis, commonly known as brown lung disease.

Susan Fleming, a spokeswoman for the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, says that's not so — that "there's quite a bit of new data" on the health effects of breathing cotton dust fibers.

Frumin said any move to revise the 4-year-old safety standard represents "a flagrant attack on worker safety."

If OSHA "were as zealous in developing new standards...as it is in attempting to weaken or wipe out those already in effect, it would be possible to anticipate a decrease in the continuing toll of occupationally injured, ill and dead workers, which remains a reproach to our nation," said AFL-CIO health and safety director George Taylor.

In an advance notice of proposed rulemaking Tuesday, however, the job safety agency said the aim is "strengthening its standard limiting worker exposure to cotton dust."

Some 600,000 American workers are covered by the cotton dust standard, formulated in 1978 by Eula Bingham, then-director of OSHA. The regulation was imposed on the textile industry in May 1980, but has been the subject of protracted litigation.

In a decision seen as having a major impact on future government rulemaking in the job safety and health field, however, the Supreme Court held last June 17 that nothing in the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970 requires federal regulators to weigh the costs of a proposed worker safety rule against its benefit to workers.

OSHA Director Thorne G. Auchter called for public comment on possible changes in the rule designed to protect workers against brown lung disease, a crippling respiratory agent, saying the existing standard "has many difficult and complex issues...which need to be resolved."

Two plead guilty to embezzlement

A clerk for a Midland savings and loan association and an Odessa bank loan officer have pleaded guilty in federal court in Midland to embezzling more than $175,000 from the financial institutions.

The two, Darla Jean Rogers of Midland and James Kenneth Carter of Odessa, pleaded guilty in arraignments in the wake of an FBI probe into suspected fraud at institutions, according to Ronald A. Hoverson, special agent in charge of the FBI's El Paso Division.

Ms. Rogers, 20, pleaded guilty to a one-count information alleging that she embezzled more than $25,000 from the Citizens Savings & Loan Association in Midland from March through September 1981 while she was a tax and insurance clerk there.

The FBI's probe at the association began last Oct. 22 when the Citizens Savings & Loan Association complained of missing funds.

Carter, 35, pleaded guilty to a two-count information which alleges he made fictitious or fraudulent loans from Feb. 15, 1979, to April 21, 1980, while he was an installment loan officer at The First National Bank of Odessa. The loan loss to the bank exceeded $150,000, according to Hoverson.

Ms. Rogers could be fined up to $5,000 or sentenced to five years in prison. Carter, who is faced with a two-count information, could be doubly punished.

McCright says he will seek re-election

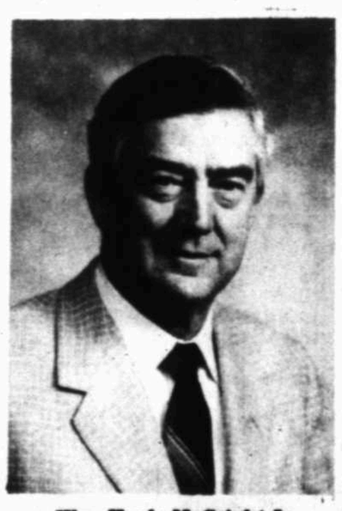

Wm. Hoyle McCright Jr. today announced his intentions to seek re-election to Place 4 on the Midland College Board of Trustees in the April 3 election.

McCright has been a member of the nine-member board since 1973, when the Midland Junior College District was created. Board members do not receive a salary for their services.

"Serving this community as a Midland College trustee has been one of my highest honors, and a duty which I take most seriously," McCright said in a statement released this morning. "There have been numerous changes since those first days. The campus has been completed with two building programs to accommodate the tremendous number of local and area residents who avail themselves of the many educational opportunities that Midland College offers.

"We are excited about the new leadership of President Dr. Jess Parrish and the innovative ways in which we can continue to serve the academic, vocational, basic education and continuing education needs of this area. Our growing population makes the continued development of Midland College even more important," McCright said.

"With my pending retirement (as executive vice president of The First National Bank) I will be able to devote even more time and energy to the board's responsibilities as representatives of this community's residents to assure the solid growth and development of the college."

Davidson files for Council re-election

Steve Davidson, 33, filed Tuesday for re-election to Place 4 on the Midland City Council.

A lifelong resident of Midland, Davidson is engaged in oil and gas investments.

In announcing his bid for a second term on the council, Davidson expressed his appreciation to the citizens of Midland "for the opportunity to have served during these exciting and challenging times."

His objectives for the next two years, said Davidson, are centered on maintaining a good quality of life for all citizens of Midland and continuing to constructively plan for the city's continued growth. He added that this growth of Midland "will require a serious effort by all of our citizens to meet these challenges."

Davidson resides at 3101 Stanolind with his wife, Jan, and son, Chris.

asked. "Are they going to have to go back to their home cluster?

"If they've been there four years, I think they ought to stay."

After lengthy deliberation by the board, Trustee Ed Runyan made a motion stating that the student who had been granted a child care transfer and was presently in the first, second, fourth, fifth or seventh grades would be allowed to remain in that present school or cluster without having to apply for a transfer. Those students entering the first, fourth or seventh grades would have to apply to the board for a transfer. The motion was approved unanimously.

The hardship child care transfer policy was somewhat carried into a recommendation calling for the implementation of half-day kindergarten classes at Burnet, Long, Rusk and West elementary schools. The recommendation, made by Mailey, was based on an attempt to recover some space in the overcrowded elementary schools.

According to Mailey, by implementing half-day kindergarten classes instead of the full-day programs presently in operation at the four above schools, 5½ rooms would be opened.

MRS. PAGE MADE a motion, which was approved unanimously, to accept the recommendation with the addition that all children who had been granted a transfer in the four schools for the K-1 through K-3 program reasons would be allowed to remain in their cluster. Only those children who will be entering the fourth, fifth and sixth grade, or those who are currently enrolled in the third, fourth or fifth grades will have to take their transfer requests to the school board.

Several citizens in the audience complained about the elimination of the full-day kindergarten, citing the success of the program as an early incentive of school attendance.

One mother of a kindergarten student enrolled in Rusk Elementary's full-day K-1 class said the program allowed her child to progress at his own rate of learning. If her child was put into a traditional kindergarten class, she added, he would be taught things he already knew. She said elimination of the full-day K-1 program would give many high achieving kindergarten students a boring first taste of school life.

According to Dr. Joseph P. Baressi Jr., MISD deputy superintendent, half-day kindergarten programs currently in operation at other elementary schools are designed to implement the results of diagnostic testing, allowing students to be taught according to their level of learning.

"THE SKILLS ARE as advanced for the half-day classes as they are for the full-day ones," Baressi explained. "Admittedly, in half-day classes there is less time for socialization, less time on the playground and no time for lunch. And technically speaking, less time for instruction — but there is equal time in basic instruction."

The only schools that will be allowed to continue the full-day kindergarten programs are those considered disadvantaged, or Title I schools. The policy states that a student who possesses limited English proficiency, who qualifies for the free lunch program, or who is receiving special education services requiring a full-day program, may attend full-day kindergarten classes.

Schools to continue the full-day programs are South, Travis, Washington, De Zavala, Crockett, Pease and Milam elementary schools.

Students who are enrolled in half-day kindergarten programs and are eligible for full-day programs will be provided transportation to the full-day programs on cluster buses.

In other action, trustees approved the recommended school boundary changes pertaining to De Zavala, Crockett, Milam, Pease, Emerson and the new school, commonly referred to as Northwest Elementary School.

Along with the boundary changes was a reassignment of rural buses to Milam from Bowie, effective August 1982, and to the new school, effective August 1983.

TRUSTEES ALSO approved the recommended budget allocation to be used in preparing the 1982-83 budget. According to Donald Furgeson, business manager, the allocations reflect a 10 percent increase in supplies and materials per student, and a 10.5 percent increase in student enrollment.

Increase from the total budget amount for 1981-82 of $796,546, and the total budget per recommendations for 1982-83 of $962,592, reflects a 21 percent increase on a dollar basis.

The designation of March 22-26 as public schools week, termed "MISD Spotlight Week," was requested by City Council PTA and was approved by board members.

Trustees also approved several revisions of course offerings, adoption of the school calendar for the 1982-83 school year, bids for a public announcement system at Burnet and Rusk elementary schools, a flail mower, athletic tickets and the replacement of a cooling tower for Lee Freshman High School auditorium.

Calling for the election of trustees also was approved by the board. The positions held by Humes, Runyan and Mrs. Sherrod will be up for election April 3. Mrs. Sherrod has announced her intentions to run for re-election, while Runyan announced that he would not seek another term on the board after serving six years.

Trustees are elected for three-year terms. Deadline for candidates to file is March 3.

Zoning, annexation issues considered

The proposed ordinance will allow legitimate carriers in delivery vehicles to perform their services. It's a small price for us to pay to better serve the citizens of Midland."

Also approved during their first public hearing were two requests for annexation. One concerned a 322-acre tract northwest of the intersection of Midland Drive and Green Tree Boulevard. The second came from the opposite end of the city and concerned a 93.34-acre tract east of Lamesa Road and south of Garden City Highway. The latter would be used for a mobile home park.

AFTER A LENGTHY hearing on an appeal from Harrell Feldt for a zone change in Petroleum Center office complex to allow a seven-story building, the council delayed a decision until Feb. 23. By that meeting, Feldt is to obtain a representative from the Federal Aviation Administration or a written response concerning the office building's location in relation to Air Park.

The seven-story structure would sit in the heart of the eight-building office complex developed by I. David Porras. The first four floors — the first one underground — would be a parking garage while the top three floors would house offices, explained Feldt.

The city's argument, pointed out by the council and Director of Planning and Community Development Richard Hennessy, was that the building would sit too close to Air Park. This, they added, would damage future chances of obtaining federal funds for upgrading that airport.

But Feldt argued for permission to bring an FAA representative to Midland. "Give me the opportunity to get some sort of approval from the FAA that you're not going to labor under that threat (of funds being eliminated)." He was given until 2:45 p.m. Feb. 23 to get either an answer from the FAA or a representative.

Additional crossing guards were approved for Sam Houston, Emerson, Jones, Bonham, Rusk, Alamo and West elementary schools.

A SYSTEM THAT involves sensors on top of emergency vehicles to change lights down the street to green was reviewed, but the council delayed a decision until Feb. 23.

A contract for seven new MidTran mini-buses went to a California company which bid $280,229. Although not the lowest bid, it was listed as "the lowest responsible bid."

A condominium project west of the Permian Basin Petroluem Museum, Library and Hall of Fame was approved on first reading. The units will range from one to three bedrooms. Starting selling price is $45,000, according to Feldt.

A portion of Tolbert Park was sold for $9,450 to Midland YMCA and the piece of land on which sits the old law enforcement academy downtown was switched for another tract owned by Midland Southwest Corp.

Fred Baker, director of public works, informed the council that the bridge on Ward Street should be completed in 10 days and the contractor working on Wadley-Barron Lake should have it and three other projects done by March 10.

Muse Air, which will begin service to Midland Regional Airport April 25, will fly DC-Super 80s. Muse will offer flights into Dallas, with connections to Houston and Tulsa, Okla.

Proposed bond issue, but not project list, shrinking on the bond market," he said in reference to high interest rates the city would have to pay.

The stipulation with certificates of obligation, Smith pointed out, is that the city must have a contract for a specific job before selling C.O.'s. Under G.O.'s the city could sell the entire $15 million and parcel out the money as bids for various parts of the work were accepted.

After the council mentioned going to CRMWD for the sewage disposal project, Smith suggested the city add some of the water and sewer improvement bonds if they had any designated for specific projects. Fred Baker, director of public works, said that half of the $6 million could go that route.

"The more we can pare this down, the better chance we have to sell it to the voter," said Councilman Tom Sloan as he recommended the $7 million list of five projects for the public bond issue.

Councilman Gordon Marcum II noted Sloan's plan deleted the $3 million in revenue bonds for undesignated water and sewer projects. "You want to change the philosophy of the council and not let the people vote on it?" he asked.

"It's not going to increase their taxes," replied Sloan.

The law requires voter approval to sell G.O. bonds and these are funded through a general tax increase. At this point, noted a city official, it isn't known if a tax rate hike will be needed. Revenue bonds are paid out of income in the water and sewer departments. Therefore, water and sewer rate charges may be increased to cover the bonds. C.O's are issued on the basis of that city's tax rate and a lien against the revenues, thus no requirement for voters' approval.

SMITH NOTED THE city will "get a better interest rate with C.O.'s on the airport than with revenue bonds." And Col. Wilson Banks, director of aviation, said there might be a slight chance that a federal grant system that had been utilitized in the past for paying part of the improvements might be reactivated.

Congress allowed the Airport Development Assistance Program, which is built up through taxes charged airline passengers, to lapse. In past years, money had been doled out for improvements to airports.

Banks explained the tax is paid by airport users and general aviation and the fund should be built up to $6 billion by now. ADAP is set up on a five-year basis and it expired in 1980.

"We've had a lot of help in the past years" with grants from this fund, said Banks, who noted that as much as 90 percent of a project had come from ADAP. If this fund comes through, he said, the city would have to sell a smaller amount in C.O.s and would be in a better position to repay it.

John Lowe, director of public utilites, said after the meeting that the Colorado River Municipal Water District obtained the authority during the last session of the State Legislature to sell bonds for specific water projects. Going this route, he said, "will be less of an upset on the voters' minds."

Looking at the $7 million figure in comparison to the original $48 million, Mayor G. Thane Akins remarked, "We (the council) had our own feelings that $48 million may be too much for one issue. We'll get better interest rates by spreading it around in this manner."

The CRMWD board of directors will meet Friday in Big Spring to decide if it wants to proceed with Midland's project, and Akins said a representative of the council will be there to explain the city's view.

Akins added he didn't expect much opposition.

Sherrod announces she seeks re-election to MISD board

Joyce Sherrod Tuesday announced her intentions to run for re-election for place 7 on the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees, Tuesday. Trustees serve three-year terms and receive no pay for their services.

Mrs. Sherrod, who has 17 years of experience in the teaching profession, served for 13 years as a special education teacher in MISD. She is currently an instructor at the Permian Basin Graduate Center.

During the last three years, Mrs. Sherrod helped establish the gifted and talented program, according to a statement she issued during the regular meeting of the board of trustees Tuesday.

"I have enthusiastically supported the on-campus suspension centers and the introduction of computer science into our high schools," the statement continued. "I have been responsible for investigating and informing the board of future developments in education, facilities and teaching methods that will affect education in future years.

"Midland faces unparalleled challenges in a rapidly expanding community. Our educational system must keep up," she stated in the press release.

Joyce Sherrod

"I intend to participate in and contribute to the high level of education Midland has always known. My experience as an educator and school board trustee will contribute to answering these challenges."

Weather is factor in six deaths

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — Depression caused by harsh winter weather was a factor in six suicides reported in Toledo since heavy snowfalls hit the area last week, Coroner Harry Mignerey says.

"Sure it's the bad weather. At least the weather is a factor," Mignerey said of the suicides, which included four teen-agers. Three of the deaths occurred Tuesday.

"It's depressing. I don't know whether you see the results, but we certainly do. Three suicides in one day — that's pretty unusual," he said.

Midland Postal Service to see some staff cuts

The Midland Postal Service's 35-strong administrative staff will be cut in half by Feb. 20 in a measure designed more to shift administrative duties rather than to economize, Postmaster David Holster said today.

Currently, the U.S. Postal Service's Sectional Center in Midland handles mail for 68 post offices in the West Texas area but carries out detailed administrative work for 168 offices.

The massive mail flow will continue though the Midland center, Holster said, but the administrative work will be shuffled to management sectional centers at Waco and El Paso.

"Basically, it's an administrative and an internal change," he said, "and will affect the mail in no way. We'll lose about 18 people" at the administrative level. Some will be transferred to administrative offices at Waco and El Paso, and others may fill vacant slots in area offices or go into retirement.

The administrative work affecting the Midland area will be carried out in El Paso, while comparable work for the Abilene, San Angelo and Brownwood areas, which heretofore has been handled in Midland, will be shifted to Waco, Hoslter said.

The Midland Sectional Center, which opened in 1971, absorbed the administrative work of the San Angelo post office in 1972 and then took control over similar duties of the Abilene and Brownwood sectional centers.

"It's not necessarily an economical move," Holster said of the status change in the Midland Sectional Center. "It's a (change) in span of control."

More farmers faced with sad truth

Credit not easy to come by — or keep up with

By BOB FICK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jerry Hurley had worked his South Dakota grain farm with general success for more than 40 years until poor weather, rising interest rates and high production costs put him in a financial hole.

With the situation compounded by a heart problem, credit had dried up and Hurley sold his machinery to meet some debts and quit farming.

Then, according to his congressman, Democrat Thomas Daschle, the Farmers Home Administration called in its note and Hurley was faced with liquidating the 1,000 acres he had hoped to turn over to his son.

"Now, in his mid-60s after major heart surgery, he's driving a truck to enhance his income" to keep up with the FmHA loan so his son will eventually inherit the farm, Daschle said.

A young couple who had been farming several hundred acres for six years across the border in North Dakota was hit by the same weather, interest rates and production costs. Rep. Byron Dorgan, D-N.D., said they were finally told by FmHA to sell out. With no credit available elsewhere, they've started that process.

"They were good managers — I checked around — but they came in just petrified, and there's nothing I can do for them," Dorgan said. "There's just dozens and dozens of stories like that."

Charles Shuman, administrator of the FmHA, tried to reassure Daschle, Dorgan and other House Agriculture Committee members Tuesday that the government's farm credit arm is doing all it can to see that farmers stay on the land.

"The credit situation in agriculture is drastic," Shuman said, "but the Farmers Home Administration is continuing and has been trying to provide credit."

Shuman said, however, that in just the last three months of 1981 more than 750 farmers with FmHA loans have either involuntarily or voluntarily turned their farms over to the government because of the credit squeeze.

The 189 "involuntary conveyances" were only 10 less than occurred during the previous 12 months, he said. There are no previous year figures for the voluntary conveyances. They totaled 570 from October through December.

Shuman said those involuntary liquidations, viewed as one step short of foreclosure, are in addition to actual foreclosures on FmHA borrowers, which are expected to run about 300 for the entire fiscal year that began Oct. 1. That's about the same as in past years.

Nearly 600 delinquent FmHA loan holders have been told since Oct. 1 to immediately pay off their outstanding debt because of their obviously unsound financial condition, he said. That is nearly 25 percent of all the outstanding "acceleration" proceedings in the FmHA loan portfolio. Shuman said an "acceleration letter" is the first step toward foreclosure.

"There will be times when it is necessary to protect the interests of the federal government and the taxpayers," he explained, citing those statistics against the overall FmHA loan portfolio of some 300,000 loan accounts. That is about 11 percent of all farm credit and includes generally those who can't qualify for commercial credit.

The farmbelt lawmakers have been looking for hard statistics on farm liquidations for months, many contending the situation is being understated by the FmHA in light of extremely depressed market prices and high interest rates and production costs. They want the government to begin disbursing $600 million in economic emergency loans that could keep credit-strapped farmers in business.

Their interest was heightened several weeks ago when they obtained information from a Nebraska group suggesting that the FmHA has a plan to force thousands of its borrowers out of business because they're behind in loan payments. Top Agriculture Department officials have said that claim is false.

To bolster his case, Shuman said the FmHA has modified its policy to permit carrying borrowers who are delinquent because market prices are depressed.

He said he advised local FmHA officials last week of that change, telling them that the agency "will do everything it can within sound lending practices to assist present borrowers."

He said the agency will reschedule loan payments, renegotiate them, defer them or even carry borrowers delinquent as long as those farmers have acted in good faith, apply sound management practices and "have a reasonable chance" to cover payments on any 1982 operating loans they get.

But he added that soaring land values in recent years and the added loan collateral they provided probably "encouraged some farmers to increase and leverage their situation beyond what would be prudent."

As for economic emergency loans, Shuman only said that the situation is being reviewed.

No developments seen in investigation of shooting in Odessa early Tuesday

ODESSA — The Ector County Sheriff's Department today reported no developments in a shooting early Tuesday morning that left one man dead and his wife hospitalized.

Deputies were called to the Henry Clay Carroll Jr. residence in rural northwest Odessa about 3 a.m. Tuesday and found Carroll, 37, dead of a gunshot wound to the head. His 38-year-old wife Barbara Bates Carroll had been shot in the abdomen.

She underwent surgery at Medical Center Hospital and was listed in stable condition this morning.

Mrs. Carroll's 16-year-old daughter was not injured. Deputies said the woman and girl locked themselves in the daughter's bedroom after the shooting, which occurred when an intruder broke into the house and shot the couple as they slept.

No gun was recovered, but it is believed a .22-caliber weapon was used. The intruder apparently left through a rear door. A sheriff's deputy said today an investigation is continuing.

Judge rejects suit based on Tut's curse

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A Superior Court judge has rejected the lawsuit of a policeman who claimed he was a victim of the curse of King Tutankamun.

Judge Richard Figone rejected a suit Tuesday by Lt. George E. LaBrash, who claimed he suffered a mild stroke because he was guarding the ancient Egyptian king's golden funeral mask while it was on display here in September 1979.

LaBrash, 56, sought $18,400 in disability pay on grounds the stroke was job-related. The suit noted the curse has been blamed for the deaths of a dozen people connected with the display of Tut artifacts or the discovery of his tomb.

But the judge said, "The spectators who attended the exhibit may just as well have disturbed the remains of the deceased (Tut). Officer LaBrash, if anything, prevented desecration of these remains."

Book fair attendance may signal Arab acceptance of Egypt

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — President Hosni Mubarak's hope of playing peacemaker between Israel and the Arabs has registered some modest gains at the 1982 Cairo Book Fair.

For the first time since the Arabs rejected the 1979 Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty, nine Arab nations showed up at the same fairgrounds as the Israelis, although not under the same roof.

The presence of the Arabs at the 14th annual government-sponsored event was seen here largely as a goodwill gesture to Mubarak, who has asked the Arabs to forget their animosity toward the late President Anwar Sadat's peace initiative and restore normal relations with Egypt.

But in the context of Saudi Arabia's hints of willingness to recognize Israel, Egypt's book-fair diplomacy may be seen as a modest gesture toward Arab acceptance of Israel.

Private booksellers from hard-line Syria and from Saudi Arabia, Morocco, Kuwait, Tunisia, Sudan and war-torn Lebanon were among the 35 nations and 500 booths at the fair. Iraq and the moderate United Arab Emirates sent observers, said the fair's director, Samir Saad Khalil.

He added that there had been no problems between the Arabs and Israelis this year, and expressed the hope more Arab countries would come next year.

Last year, Sadat had to intervene to insure Israel a place in the fair exhibit of an Egyptian book distributor. This led to a squabble between the Israelis and their neighbors, a Lebanese childrens' book publisher named "House of the Arab Struggle," which has done work for the Palestine Liberation Organization.

This year, the same Lebanese, wearing the familiar white and black checked headdress of the PLO and displaying the flag of Palestine, were with the other Arab publishers in buildings several hundred yards away from the Israeli exhibit.

The only complaint against the Israeli presence this year was a four-page pamphlet of Egypt's small Communist Party that was distributed to the press. It said: "Do not let yourself be lured into the Israeli wing of the fair because it is a false representation of the will of the Egyptian people. We oppose cultural normalization."

But both the Israeli and Arab exhibits attracted large crowds of Egyptians.

"I think our exhibit is better this year than last because it's bigger and the atmosphere is better," said Elie Laniado, the press attache of the Israeli Embassy here. "We appreciate all the help the Egyptians have given us."

He said 40 percent of the 600 books in the Israeli display were in Arabic, and noted that many Egyptian books have been translated into Hebrew and a play by the Egyptian Naguib Mahfouz was being performed now in Haifa, Israel.

The peaceful co-existence at the book fair appeared to be consistent with Mubarak's position that Egypt's relations with the Arabs will not be normalized at the expense of Egypt's ties with Israel.

Mubarak has str. repeatedly that Egypt wants to bring more Arab states, and especially the Palestinians, into the peace effort.

Egyptian officials have called on the Arabs to demonstrate good will toward restoring relations with Egypt, and many Arab newspapers have called for the return of Egypt to the Arab fold.

Bank loans called risk

By BERNARD KAPLAN
Hearst News Service

PARIS — American and West European bankers who loaned enormous sums to Poland, Romania and other shaky borrowers in Soviet Europe knew from at least the mid-197Os onward that they were throwing good money after bad, according to one of the bankers involved.

So did the U.S. and other governments that guaranteed a large proportion of the loans against the possibility of default. But according to an executive of a major Middle Western U.S. bank, who by his own reckoning made a "couple of dozen" visits to Eastern Europe in the '70s to "sell money," the danger was deliberately ignored. The lending game went on, not only undeterred but more feverishly.

As a consequence, the Soviet bloc governments now owe the West at least $7O billion in debts which, as the American banker Felix Rohatyn pointed out last week, may be largely uncollectable.

The U.S. may have to pay to U.S. banks $1.9 billion to cover guaranteed loans that cannot be met by the Warsaw regime.However, as the international banking community is uncomfortably aware, that is not the entire tale of woe. Poland's $28 billion in outstanding debts has attracted the greatest attention, but Romania's $11 billion, Czechoslovakia's $7.5 billion and even the Russians' $2O billion-plus may prove hard to collect. In the view of many experts, the situation could bring about the biggest crash of credit in history.

THE MIDDLE Western banker, who asked not to be named, said a belief that they were prodded by governments pressing for East-West detente into making loans that were little better than gambles was a myth.

"The political line in Washington and Bonn certainly favored detente," he said. "But most of the time it was the banks who went to their governments and sought guarantees, not the governments who offered them. The bankers were getting nervous but didn't want to stop lending, whatever happened. The governments were afraid that if they didn't help the banks extend the loans, their exporters would lose business to their competitors. So they gave the guarantees with little serious reflection of what might occur if things turned sour."

In the 1970s, he explained, who loaned the most to the eager communist regimes became a matter of the fiercest rivalry.

"The big banks had unprecedented amounts on deposit because of recycled petro-dollars and one was told at every executives' meeting that it had to be put to work," he said. "Young, ambitious bankers, usually lacking a real knowledge of the economics or politics of the communist countries, were sent there to make deals. They didn't have to be told that if they let a deal slip by — if a competitor made the loan instead — it was a black mark for their career.

"The whole idea was to clinch the deal and not worry too much about the terms. Literally billions were loaned that way."

Catoico celebration train has history of own

By DEBORAH MASHBURN and JENNIFER RAMSEY

Saturday evening, Catoico Queen Patricia Kay Murphey will be wearing a train as full of tradition and history as the Catoico celebration itself.

In 1929, a French dressmaker hand-embroidered the train especially for James H. Chapple, then Miss Victoria Fabrega, the queen of the "Celebration," a Panamanian Mardi Gras Festival.

Later, Miss Fabrega married the young intern who escorted her to the Celebration, Dr. James H. Chapple, and the couple moved to Midland in 1936. Mrs. Chapple allowed Midland High School to use her train in its annual Catoico Celebration.

IN 1950, Mrs. Chapple's daughter, Toya Chapple, now Mrs. Charles R. Moncrief, was elected Catoico Queen by her fellow students. When her daughter became the 1950 Catoico Queen, Mrs. Chapple generously donated the train to MHS for use in all of our Catoico Coronations. The train has been worn by every queen since.

The student council of Midland High School would like to thank Mrs. Chapple and Mrs. Moncrief for their cooperation and understanding during the preparation of the 1982 Catoico celebration. Both ladies have graciously helped in making this Catoico the best one in MHS history.

At the 8 p.m. Coronation Saturday, class favorites will be presented. Entertainment will be provided by volunteer students and a special presentation by a group of social studies teachers. Following the coronation, a dance will be held at the Youth Center. Music for dancing will be provided by the 15th Street Players from Lubbock. Tickets for the coronation are $1 for students and $2 for adults. Dance tickets are $4 a couple.

National Honor Society held its annual Valentine's Sale Feb. 1-9. The sale took place during both lunches and cost $1 for "aloud or singing" greetings and $1.50 for red or pink silk roses.

SPANISH Club members will attend Quaternian in Seminole Feb. 20. They also will go to San Antonio to participate in a workshop and convention Feb. 25-26. Members will be wearing T-shirts designed especially for the event.

Selected for All-Region orchestra are MHS band members Ted Bernard, Emily Goodfellow, Carolyn Mitchell and Ann Geddes.

All-Region band tryouts were held Jan. 30 at Lee High School. Members chosen are Carolyn Mitchell, Elaine Reese, Leslie Fort, Karen Green, Marta McNabb, Beth Butter, Kim Watson, Ginger Rains, Ted Bernard, Shawn McCarter, Emily Goodfellow, Kevin Locklar, Keith Cofer, Steve Baskin, John Dalton, Wade Frost and Susan Baker.

Qualifying for All-State band are Wade Frost and Leslie Fort.

Future Farmers of America has been participating in stock shows around the state. Members were in El Paso last Friday. Upcoming events include stock shows in San Antonio Feb. 22-23, San Angelo and the big one in Houston. Members also are planning an FFA Week.

FEB. 7-13 is national Future Homemakers Association Week and the girls will be doing something special every day of this week. On Tuesday, members gave a coffee for the teachers, especially honoring all vocational education teachers because this is also National Vocational Education Week. A rose ceremony is scheduled tonight at 7:40. There will be a Valentine's Party at 7 p.m. Thursday, following by a "Valentines for the Elderly" service project Friday and a Family Day Saturday in which FHA members will do something with or for their families. On Feb. 20, FHA members will travel to Permian High School for the area FHA convention. Caroline Brady, president, will serve as a delegate from Midland.

Honors were substantial at a recent Speech & Drama tournament at McCamey High School. First place honors were taken by Candy Baimbridge, dramatic and humorous interpretation; Don Stroud, oratory and a third place in humorous interpretation. Karen Price placed second in dramatic interpretation. The duet of Paige Parker and Molly Franklin reached the finals. Paul Kowert placed third in boys' extemporaneous speaking, while Kay Stringer placed third in girls' extemporaneous speaking. Terri Thomas qualified for state in extemporaneous.

The cross-x debate team of Kowert and Thomas achieved a fourth ranking at Lubbock Monterey. Paige Parker and Leslie Reed were finalists in poetry; Stroud, second in humorous; and Stringer, third in Lincoln-Douglas.

FEB. 15 is the date for pre-registered prospective engineers to take the NEA Test in Room 232 from 7 to 10 p.m. Feb. 15 is also the deadline for JETS to apply for JETS scholarships.

JETS is now planning a meeting of seventh through 12th grade students to promote interest in its GAS Project. A guest speaker will address the meeting.

The A&M Conference is on March 11-12 and the nine JETS attending plan to compete in pocket calculators and physics contests.

Major layoffs avoided

ATLANTA (AP) — Federal budget cuts will mean dismissal for some temporary employees at the national Centers for Disease Control, but widespread layoffs have been avoided, the director of the centers says.

"Things are not as flexible as we would like, but we can keep all of our major programs and nearly all of our permanent employees," CDC Director William Foege said at a staff meeting Monday.

"We will have to go program by program now and see how the budget works out. We have to do some program-juggling, and that might mean losing some people in specific places — but widespread layoffs have been averted," he said.

The CDC received $111 million for its various research programs in the fiscal year which ended Sept. 30. Under a temporary budget plan, the CDC was to receive $90 million, a cut of $21 million for the year.

Night of Hyatt collapse remembered well

EDITOR'S NOTE — Two sky walks plunged into the lobby of Kansas City's Hyatt Regency Hotel last summer, killing 113 people and injuring nearly 200. The physical injuries have been slow to heal, but as AP Writer Mark Peterson reports, psychological wounds heal even slower.

By MARK PETERSON
Associated Press Writer

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — It was hot and muggy the night of July 17. Women in light prints and men in cotton sport coats cooled themselves on exotic drinks and danced in the brassy Hyatt Regency Hotel lobby.

But the mellow jazz ended abruptly and summer fun turned to unimaginable horror when a storm of concrete, steel and glass poured down on the Friday night tea dance, killing 113 people and injuring nearly 200.

Almost seven months later, Bill Allman is haunted by many visions of that night, but one plagues him as if the sky walks had fallen yesterday.

"I can still feel the blood hitting me all over my clothes and boots as the legs and arms were cut to get at the people still alive," said Allman, a construction worker who, on that July night, was a rescuer.

For many, the worst disaster in Kansas City history has blurred, and it is business as usual at the hotel. But for some, the memory has not softened. They simply cannot forget.

"There are some people who will never get over it," said Fred Grossman, a clinical psychologist who has counseled several victims. "Their lives have been changed drastically, unalterably."

"They're angry," he said. "They're angry at their God. They're angry that their lives are so vulnerable."

"It never entirely goes away," said Richard Gist, director of consultation and education services for Comprehensive Mental Health Services Inc. The ability of victims to cope with that fact varies.

Norm Zammar, who was standing on one of the walkways when they gave way, can't sleep. He wakes up hearing the carefree laugh of a woman he met and joked with briefly. She was crushed to death selling tickets at the lobby's bar.

ZAMMER PUT his thoughts to a poem. It begins, "For 10,000 days and 40 years, I'll still remember. I'll shed more tears."

A middle-aged senior account executive for a communications firm, Zammar said he receives psychological counseling regularly. So does Allman, who spent 10 hours clutching a jackhammer he used to break through the fallen concrete and spent the next two months in a hospital being treated for mental anguish.

"I'm not like I used to be," he said. "I'd go out, you know, and have a good time. I don't want to do that much anymore."

Airline introduces Texas Pass

Texas International Airlines has inaugurated an unlimited travel "Texas Pass," with set fares of $149 or $249, providing substantial savings for frequent flyers in 11 Texas cities, including Midland, and New Orleans, La.

The program has two options. A passenger may purchase a seven-day "Texas Pass" for $149 or 30-day "Texas Pass" for $249 good for unlimited travel between all 11 Texas cities served by TI or any Texas cities and New Orleans.

The Texas cities are Midland, Amarillo, Austin, Brownsville, Corpus Christi, Dallas-Fort Worth, Houston, Laredo, Lubbock, McAllen and San Antonio.

According to Ron Woestemeyer, TI vice president of marketing programs, the pass is good only for travel on TI, in accordance with the particular plan purchased, either at travel agencies anywhere or at TI ticket counters.

Passes are not transferable and positive identification, such as a valid driver's license with picture, will be required at the time boarding passes are issued for an eligible flight.

"Passes may be purchased by mail," Woestemeyer said, "and we urge passengers to call their local TI reservations office for details and instructions."

Doctor testifies he suspected insulin injection

By JEFF BARNARD
Associated Press Writer

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — The doctor who worked to save Martha "Sunny" von Bulow's life when she went into a coma testified he ordered tests to check the insulin level in her blood, but forgot tests that would tell if the hormone was natural or had been administered.

Prosecutor Stephen Famiglietti and defense lawyer Herald Fahringer planned more questions today for Dr. Gerhard Meier, the German physician who treated the wife of Claus von Bulow after she was rushed to Newport Hospital in a coma Dec. 21, 1980.

Meier testified Tuesday in the attempted-murder trial of von Bulow, who prosecutors contend tried to kill his heiress wife by giving her insulin overdoses.

Meier said he immediately suspected Mrs. von Bulow had been injected with insulin.

He said he had already been suspicious that a previous coma Mrs. von Bulow suffered was caused by an injection of insulin, so ordered blood tests after she fell into the second coma.

He said the blood tests showed an abnormally high level of insulin, but he "forgot" to order a test that would have shown if the hormone was administered or manufactured naturally by Mrs. von Bulow's body.

Meier said he recognized Mrs. von Bulow when she was admitted comatose to the emergency room because of a chance conversation he had with a specialist who treated her condition the year before.

"I said to him, 'If you cannot prove any one of your diagnoses, one diagnosis you can also think of is the surreptitious administration of a medication,'" Meier said.

He added he did not mention insulin by name, feeling it would be obvious to the endocrinologist, who did not note the possibility in his report.

Under cross-examination by Fahringer, Meier acknowledged he felt the injection that caused the current coma could have been made by Mrs. von Bulow or another person.

Von Bulow, 55, a Danish-born financial consultant, is accused of twice injecting his wife with insulin, triggering two comas suffered by her during Christmas visits to their Newport mansion in 1979 and 1980.

The state claims he was motivated by love for another woman and impatience to inherit half of his wife's $30 million utilities fortune.

Alhough she recovered from the first coma, Mrs. von Bulow remains unconscious in a New York City hospital from the 1980 episode. Doctors give her little chance of recovery.

The defense contends Mrs. von Bulow caused both comas by taking drugs and aggravating her low-blood sugar condition by consuming sweets and alcohol.

Under questioning by Famiglietti, Meier said he noted on hospital records, in order of probability, three possible causes for the coma: an overdose of a central nervous depressant or secret administration of drugs, severe loss of body heat or a dramatic lowering of blood sugar.

The defense contended the blood test, which showed a high level of insulin, was performed on blood taken after she was treated with glucose, which would have made Mrs. von Bulow's body manufacture a large amount of sugar-controlling insulin.

"In a healthy person given that load of glucose, it is perfectly possible the insulin would rise to that level," Meier said.

Meier, however, maintained he ordered the blood drawn from Mrs. von Bulow before she was treated with glucose to raise her dangerously low blood sugar.

Dr. Gerhard Meier, the physician who treated Martha "Sunny" von Bulow on her arrival in the emergency room at the Newport Hospital, testifies in Newport Superior Court.

When Mrs. von Bulow arrived at the hospital, Meier said he quickly looked for needle marks on her skin, but because of the urgent need to keep her covered to raise her body temperature, he did not have a chance for a thorough examination.

Shown by Famiglietti a sealed hypodermic needle similar to the one the state claims von Bulow used in the alleged attempt on his wife's life, Meier noted the needle was so small it probably would leave no noticeable mark on the skin.

Five men arrested for trying to illegally enter U.S.

By JOHN C. GIVEN
Associated Press Writer

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Criminal charges have been filed against two men from Northern Ireland and three others from Canada for allegedly trying to enter the United States illegally.

The five, believed by U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service officials to be on an arms-buying mission for the outlawed Irish Republican Army, were in INS custody after appearing before a federal magistrate Tuesday.

John Molloy, attorney for the men, said Edward Howell, 34, and Michael Wier, 35, both of Belfast, Northern Ireland, were each charged with trying to use another person's passport.

The other three, William O'Neill, 29; James Kelly, 41, and William Gilroy, 36, all of St. Catharines, Ontario, and all formerly of Belfast, were charged with knowingly trying to bring aliens into the United States, he said.

At Tuesday's proceeding, no plea was entered before U.S. Magistrate Edmund F. Maxwell, Molloy said. Since their arrests the five had been held by the INS on civil charges.

After the U.S. attorney's office decided to press criminal charges, the five were turned over to U.S. marshals.

Maxwell ordered that the five be released on $10,000 personal signature bonds for the criminal charges and returned to the INS. They were returned to the Erie County Correctional Facility in Alden.

INS District Director Benedict J. Ferro said exclusion and deportation proceedings generally follow criminal proceedings. He said the five would not be released on bond.

The five were arrested Saturday night at the Whirlpool Bridge in Niagara Falls, N.Y., on the Canadian border.

Ferro said INS officers seized a shopping list of arms and ammunition, about $9,600 in British and Irish currency, and casting dies resembling those used by the Irish government to validate passports.

Also seized were notebooks containing names and addresses linking those arrested to an international pipeline that smuggles IRA activists into the United States, Ferro said.

On Jan. 21, two Irish nationalists, including a member of Britain's Parliament, and two Canadians were arrested on similiar civil and related criminal charges.

Owen Carron, 29, who has refused to take his seat in Parliament, and Danny Morrison, an editor of the weekly newspaper of the IRA's legal political wing, the Sinn Fein, were deported Jan. 27.

Supreme Court to review ban

CHICAGO (AP) — An Illinois Supreme Court Justice agreed to bring a Circuit Court lawsuit challenging the constitutionality of the nation's toughest gun control law before the full seven-judge panel.

Justice Seymour Simon said Tuesday that he will ask the full court to consider the constitutionality of the Morton Grove handgun ban, bypassing a state appellate court.

Simon heard arguments by attorneys for both sides, who have said they would appeal any ruling made by the appellate court.

The lawsuit was dismissed Jan. 29 by Cook County Circuit Judge Albert Green. Green ruled the ordinance in the Chicago suburb did not violate the use of "police power" granted to the Morton Grove trustees under the Illinois Constitution.

Scout does good deed

GILBERT, Ariz. (AP) — Nine-year-old Jeff Udall found a wallet with three $100 bills in it and turned it over to Gilbert police.

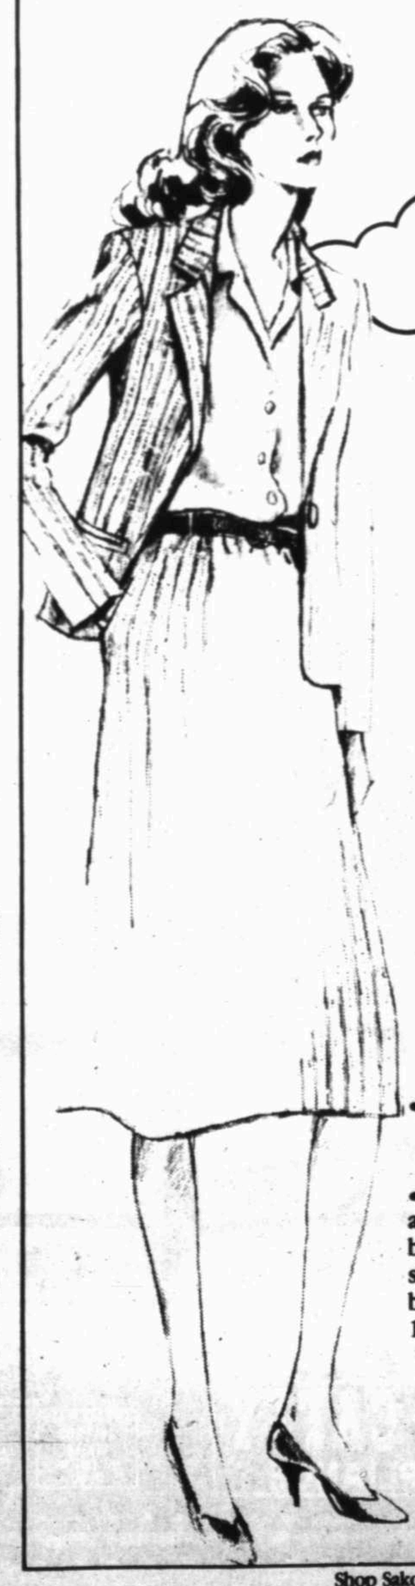

"I'm a Cub Scout, and I think that was the honest thing to do," he said.

Udall was on his way to school Tuesday with two friends when he found the wallet, looked inside and saw a $100 bill, police said.

Detective Russ Kimball said the wallet, which belonged to David L. Duffy, 26, of Phoenix, actually contained three of the big bills.

"I'm ecstatic," Duffy said. "I just couldn't believe it had been found. I didn't think there were any honest people left in the world."

Duffy, an excavation contractor, said he intends to give Jeff a reward. He said he lost the wallet Monday evening while visiting his girlfriend in Gilbert.

Tommy Manotoc, who says he was held by communists 41 days in mountains east of Manila in the Philippines, told reporters that military intelligency officers freed him Monday night. Here Manotoc is reunited with his sister, Patricia, who said, "I can't believe this is happening. I can't believe Tommy is alive."

Manotoc unclear on marriage fate

By DAVID BRISCOE
Associated Press Writer

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Freed sportsman Tommy Manotoc met with his bride, Imee Marcos, today, his parents said. But it was unclear if he would try to save the marriage opposed by his presidential father-in-law.

Manotoc, who said he was held by kidnappers for 41 days in the mountains east of Manila, met with his 26-year-old wife until early this morning at the presidential palace, his mother and father said. But they refused to give any other information about the reunion.

Manotoc at a news conference Tuesday refused to discuss his marriage, saying the relationship was a personal matter. And his wife, the daughter of President Ferdinand Marcos and his wife Imelda, has made no public statements about the kidnapping or the future of her marriage.

Imee's parents said the secret marriage Dec. 8 in Arlington, Va., was invalid because Manotoc's divorce from his first wife, former beauty queen Aurora Pijuan, is not recognized in the Philippines, where Roman Catholicism is the dominant religion. Manotoc was divorced in the Dominican Republic.

The 32-year-old former golf champion and basketball coach said he wanted to meet with the president "to set the record straight" about his family's allegations that the Marcoses had him kidnapped. But a source at the presidential palace said the request had not been granted.

Manotoc, echoing the government line, told the televised news conference Tuesday that military intelligence officers freed him Monday night from five Communist guerrillas holding him in mountains east of Manila. But a woman identifying herself as a spokesman for the communists called The Associated Press to deny communist involvement in the kidnapping and said it was a demonstration of Marcos' "whimsical and arrogant power."

The Manotoc family declined to retract their charges that the Marcoses were involved but said they wanted to wait before saying anything more. Manotoc's father, Ricardo, 65, said his son would not meet with reporters again until Thursday because he needed rest.

Manotoc told the news conference he was abducted at gunpoint as he was returning home after having dinner with his wife. He said they kept him blindfolded or facing a wall, gave him poor food, forced him to write ransom notes and dinned communist doctrine at him.

Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile said one kidnapper was killed and four fled, but the dead man had not been identified.

Meanwhile, officials said 13 Filipinos accused of urban guerrilla bombings in Manila in 1980 pleaded guilty today to charges of attempting to overthrow the Marcos government and were sentenced to prison. However, Judge Rodolfo Ortiz of the Quezon City court gave them credit for the 16 months they spent in jail while the case was pending, and prosecution lawyers said all would be released in a few days.

Fund for employee takeover of Daily News considered

NEW YORK (AP) — Officials of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey are exploring ways to help a proposed trust fund that would allow employees of The New York Daily News to buy the paper if its owner decided to stop publication.

The tabloid, with a 1.5 million daily circulation that makes it the largest daily general-interest paper in the nation, has been put up for sale by the Tribune Co. of Chicago.

Labor lawyer Theodore W. Kheel, at the request of 11 unions seeking to save most of the News' 3,800 jobs, said at a news conference Tuesday he had established the News Employees Stock Ownership Trust and had asked Port Authority officials to join the effort.

Alan Sagner and Peter C. Goldmark Jr., respectively chairman and executive director of the authority, confirmed that Kheel had asked them Friday to see what they could do to save the financially strapped newspaper.

"It's no big, formal study like the study about the Convention Center," Thomas Young, spokesman for Goldmark, said. "But, yes, we are looking into it. There's no target date and we don't have anything to report back yet."

Richard A. Kahan, president and chief executive officer of the New York State Urban Development Corp., also said he had conferred with Kheel on Monday and was looking into ways of helping assure the future of the News.

The Urban Development Corp. has a variety of tools for helping private developers in the public interest, including powers to condemn land, obtain initial construction funds through legislative appropriations and set favorable loan repayment terms.

Stolen paintings found

MUNICH, West Germany (AP) — Eleven of 13 valuable paintings stolen from a museum in central Poland last year were recovered in West Germany, Bavarian police reported today.

Police detained two people for suspicion of having received stolen goods. They were identified only as a jobless 30-year-old painter and his 49-year-old wife from Cologne.

The paintings and a bronze sculpture, valued at more than $850,000, were stolen from the Lodz museum last July 12.

Police said they received a first tip about the whereabouts of the art on Jan. 13 when an unidentified woman took two of the pictures to an art gallery for estimates.

Volcker's solution: Keep monetary policy, cut deficits

By ROBERT FURLOW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker is showing no sign of budging from the Fed's tight-money policy despite arguments that monetary restraints coupled with huge federal deficits will stifle economic recovery.

Volcker does not disagree with the basic assessment, but rather with those looking to the Fed to bend. He says the solution is simple: Keep the monetary policy and cut the deficits.

That's the message Volcker has been sending Congress and the Reagan administration and the one he was expected to renew today during a formal presentation of the Fed's money-growth targets for this year.

The main target — relatively spare 2½-to-5½ percent growth in cash and checking deposits — was given all but final approval by the board months ago and Volcker has given no indication of any changes recently.

Time and again, he has said that flooding the financial markets with more cash would only bring new inflation. And he has vowed to avoid that course.

Instead, Volcker tells critics, if you're afraid Fed policies won't leave enough money to finance both soaring federal deficits and economic recovery, then lean on the president and Congress to cut federal spending much more.

A growth range of 2½-to-5½ percent for cash and checking — the money measure known as M-1 — is slightly under last year's target of 3½-to-8 percent, representing a bit more tightening, at least on the surface.

But calculating the money supply can be very complex.

For example, last year's equivalent of this year's M-1 grew only about 2.2 percent, well below the bottom edge of the target range. And Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan and other Reagan officials have contended that such slow growth — as well as a somewhat erratic growth pattern during the year — contributed to the recession.

But some other analysts say that, as a practical matter, monetary growth was higher than it seemed since many Americans were using non-bank accounts — not included in M-1 — for checking. One example of that would be a money market fund with check-writing privileges.

A wider question, and one that both politicians and professional economists have been asking, is whether a restricted money supply will be enough to finance economic recovery at the same time the government is borrowing vast sums.

Clearly aware of the situation — though denying that it is necessarily a problem — Regan has said several times recently that the Fed ought to aim for the top part of the 2½-to-5½ percent range this year, rather than the middle or lower end.

Earlier this week, the president proposed a budget calling for a $98.6 billion deficit this year and $91.5 billion in fiscal 1983. Many private analysts say the red ink will be even greater — putting more strain on private lenders.

Some say that strain alone will drive up interest rates, since heavy demand for any limited item — including credit — tends to make that item more expensive.

Others add that big deficits tend to make lenders think inflation will stay high in the future, giving them incentive to raise interest rates to protect themselves against future price increases.

Although the Federal Reserve does not directly affect the availability or cost of credit, it does try to keep the supply of money within a certain range by adding to or diminishing the reserves it requires financial institutions to maintain.

Schweiker says on way to solving Medicaid problems

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reports that Health and Human Services Secretary Richard S. Schweiker was excluded from the planning process for President Reagan's new federalism proposal "aren't really accurate," he says.

And, while acknowledging he initially had noted some problems with the Medicaid portion of the president's plan, Schweiker says, "I didn't have any disagreement at all in principle."

"I simply expressed some insight in terms of the financial problems involved and I think we are on the way to solving those problems," he told reporters on Tuesday.

"All I did say was that there were some problems that obviously we have to work out. But that's my job, and we're doing it."

Schweiker said that at first he was concerned about gaps in the amounts that states have been willing to pay for medical services for the poor. The disparities from state to state are so wide that either of the two obvious ways of closing them would generate opposition.

"Specifically, you have to either put people off the Medicaid rolls in the high states or you have to pay about $14 billion in additional costs to people to give everybody the same benefits as New York, California and Michigan get," he said.

"Whether you have that dilemma or whether you can go in with a national program with state standards which might solve the problem is what we are considering right now," Schweiker said.

Reagan's new federalism plan calls for states to assume responsibility for the basic welfare program, Aid to Families with Dependent Children, and for food stamps. In exchange, the federal government would become solely responsible for Medicaid, the health program serving poor people. More than 40 other programs also would be transferred to the states over an eight-year phase-in period.

AFDC and Medicaid now are joint, federal-state ventures. The federal government pays about 54 percent of the cost of Medicaid and AFDC and allows the states wide discretion in setting payment levels.

The food stamp program is paid for with federal dollars.

General Accounting Office opposes federal pay proposal

WASHINGTON (AP) — The General Accounting Office opposes the Reagan administration's proposal to pay federal workers only 94 percent as much as comparable workers elsewhere.

Congress has said that the pay for government workers should be computed by a formula comparing it to what non-federal employees make for the same jobs.

However, the administration has proposed making pay raises 94 percent of what earnings increases are outside the federal government. The proposal would not involve cutting any federal salaries.

The administration has argued that waiting lists for federal jobs show their attractiveness, and federal workers have other benefits, including job security and the ability to relocate without changing employers.

"We disagree with the proposed method for adjusting federal compensation," said Milton J. Socolar, acting comptroller general, in the report released Tuesday. "We do not believe that the administration has adequately demonstrated that a change in the federal compensation standard is justified."

The GAO report was requested by Rep. Mary Rose Oakar, D-Ohio, chairman of a House Civil Service subcommittee.

In its report, the GAO said that the administration should also consider the time lag between the annual study of what non-federal workers are making and their pay increases.

This lag means that federal workers wait about six months to catch up with what comparable workers earn elsewhere, the GAO said.

The federal government employs about 2.2 million non-postal civilians at an annual cost of about $57.5 billion for pay and benefits, GAO said.

New trade bill unveiled

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of the Senate Finance international trade subcommittee is proposing legislation designed to force U.S. trading partners to open their markets to American products, services and investments.

Sen. John C. Danforth, R-Mo., planned to unveil his bill, the "Reciprocal Trade and Investment Act," at a news conference today.

The measure was expected to require the president to identify barriers to U.S. trade, assess their impact on the American economy and proposes action to eliminate or offset them.

Danforth's proposal was expected to rely as much as possible on enforcement of existing trade agreements, such as the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

But if necessary, his legislation would allow the United States to impose import duties or withdraw concessions granted to other countries.

Danforth, viewed as a hard-liner on trade largely because of his efforts last year to limit Japanese auto imports, has said he wants to make equal access to markets a basic principle of U.S. trade policy.

That means the U.S. market would remain open to foreign goods only as long as each foreign country gives American businessmen "substantialy equivalent" access to its markets.

While the legislation would apply to all nations, it is seen as being aimed principally at Japan, the United States' second-ranking trading partner.

Protecting 'boat people'

Syndicated columnist Colman McCarthy has performed a public service by reminding those who forget too easily that atrocities are still being committed against helpless Vietnamese refugees by Thai pirates in the Gulf of Siam.

Tragically, this is an old, old story. Thai pirates have been robbing, raping, and murdering Vietnamese boat people for years. The toll of victims may never be known, but it surely numbers in the tens of thousands.

Surveys by the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) show clearly that hundreds of boats carrying thousands of refugees were attacked last year alone. The accounts given by the terrorized, brutalized refugees who have survived bespeak hideous ordeals.

Countless women and young girls have been gang raped, sometimes in the presence of their families. Adults have been mutilated or killed for the gold in their teeth, or the wedding rings on their fingers. Husbands and fathers have been bludgeoned, stabbed, shot, or thrown into the sea for trying to protect their wives and daughters.

Entire boatloads of refugees have drowned after their frail vessels were rammed by pirates unwilling to risk letting witnesses live. The Thai government has argued that it lacks the resources to police even that country's territorial waters, let alone the vast stretches of the Gulf of Siam. While that is true enough, the suspicion lingers that the Thai navy and maritime police haven't tried very hard to protect refugees that few Asian countries have welcomed in any case.

But the Thai government, which deserves credit for sheltering hundreds of thousands of Indochinese refugees since 1975, shouldn't have to shoulder all of the blame for an inadequate effort to protect boat people on the high seas. The industrialized countries, including the United States, haven't met their responsibilities either.

Last year, the Reagan administration contributed $2 million for the purchase of two spotter aircraft, a patrol boat, and communications gear for the Thai maritime forces. The UNHCR is now soliciting contributions in the amount of $3.7 million to expand and continue Thailand's anti-piracy patrols.

Australia and a few Western European countries have contributed, and the Reagan administration has pledged another $600,000. But the fund is still well short of the minimum $3.7 million needed.

Meanwhile, several thousand South Vietnamese boat people continue to flee each month. Simple decency demands that they be afforded a measure of protection. All civilized nations have a responsibility to join in the effort to bring that end about.

Speech worth recording

When people work, or fight, or love or die, they sometimes use profanity. Writers record human speech accurately, to give breath and taste and feel to characters. The reader benefits from contact with people who inhabit the page. And if a passage offends, he can always skip it. That is the freedom of literature.

But when a person prevents another from reading, or bans a book, this is censorship. More and more books are now being banned by schools in America. A parent or student objects to a passage and the school finds it easier to ban the book than to risk a suit. Authors have long stood in silence while their books were banned.

Studs Terkel, author of "Working," is different. He went to Girard High School in Girard, Pa., where his book was banned, and told the student body what the book was, and how he wrote it, and why it contained profanity. He received a standing ovation.

We applaud, too. When writers can no longer accurately record human speech, there will likely be little speech worth recording.

ART BUCHWALD

Consumers have to buy American!

"There is only one way the country is going to get on its feet," said Baleful.

"How's that?" I asked as we drank coffee in his office at the Baleful Refrigerator Company.

Art Buchwald

"The consumer has to start buying American," he said, slamming his fist down on the desk. "Every time an American buys a foreign refrigerator it costs one of my people his job. And every time one of my people is out of work it means he or she can't buy refrigerators."

"It is a vicious circle," I said.

Baleful's secretary came in, "Mr. Thompson, the steel broker, is on the phone."

My friend grabbed the receiver, "Thompson, where the hell is that steel shipment from Japan that was supposed to be in last weekend? ... I don't care about bad weather. We're almost out of steel and I'll have to close down the refrigerator assembly line next week. If you can't deliver when you promise, I'll find myself another broker."

"You get your steel from Japan?" I asked Baleful.

"Even with shipping costs, their price is still lower than steel made in Europe. We used to get all our sheets from Belgium, but the Japanese are now giving them a run for their money."

The buzzer on the phone alerted Baleful. He listened for a few moments and then said, "Excuse me I have a call from Taiwan ... Buster, how are you coming with those door handles for the Mark Four? Look R & D have designed a new push-button door handle and we're going to send the specs to you. Tell Mr. Chow if his people send us a sample of one and he can make it for us at the same price as the old handle, we'll give his company the order."

A man came in with a plastic container and said, "Mr. Baleful, you said you wanted to see one of these before we ordered them. They are the containers for the ice maker in the refrigerator."

Baleful inspected it carefully and banged it on the floor a couple of times. "What's the price on it?"

"Hong Kong can deliver at $2 a tray and Dong-Fu Plastics in South Korea said they can make it for $1.70."

"It's just a plastic tray. Take the South Korean bid. We'll let Hong Kong supply us with the shelves for the freezer. Any word on the motors?"

"There's a German Company in Brazil that just came out with a new motor and it's passed all our tests, so Johnson has ordered 50,000."

"Call Cleveland Motors and tell them we're sorry but the price they quoted us was just too high."

"Yes, sir," the man said and departed.

The secretary came in again and said, "Harry telephoned and wanted to let you know the defrosters just arrived from Finland. They're unloading the box cars now."

"Good. Any word on the wooden crates from Singapore?"

"They're at the dock in Hoboken."

"Thank heaven. Cancel our order from Boise Cascade."

"What excuse should I give them?"

"Tell them we made a mistake in our inventory or we're switching to fiberglass. I don't care what you tell them."

Baleful turned to me. "Where were we?"

"You were saying that if the consumer doesn't start buying American this country is going to be in a lot of trouble."

"Right. It's not only his patriotic duty, but his livelihood that's at stake. I'm going to Washington next week to tell the Senate Commerce Committee if they don't get off the stick there isn't going to be a domestic refrigerator left in this country. We're not going to stay in business for our health."

"Pour it on them," I urged him.

Baleful said, "Come out with me into the showroom."

I followed him. He went to his latest model, and opened the door. "This is an American refrigerator made by the American worker, for the American consumer. What do you have to say to that?"

"It's beautiful," I said. "It puts the foreign imports to shame."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

FBI may be last victim of Mel Weinberg

WASHINGTON — After the last ABSCAM appeal has been heard and the prisons have swallowed up the erring congressmen, there may be yet another victim of Mel Weinberg's celebrated sting operation.

Jack Anderson

He conceived and masterminded the FBI's ABSCAM investigations. Now the FBI itself, which hired the con man, may turn out to be his final victim.

In hours of taped conversations, his late wife, Marie Weinberg, tells how he did it. "He conned the FBI; he conned everybody," she alleges.

By her account, Mel Weinberg seduced FBI agents with valuable gifts. They even helped him crate gifts that he extorted from ABSCAM defendants. Then he reversed the con game and secretly recorded the agents' compromising conversations. "He was taping all the agents ..." relates Marie. "He says, ah, ah, 'I'll get insurance.'"

The FBI agents were supposed to control Mel, but Marie says it was the other way around. He persuaded his watchdogs to take off and have a good time. If their superiors called, he would cover for them. "None of them guys were here," she says. "They'd all go over to Singer Island. Mel would get rid of them, because Mel may have been doing something on the side ... He didn't want them around. Right?"

One time, agent Bruce Brady flew all the way to Colorado on a romantic escapade. "Now Bruce went to Colorado and got back," Marie recalls. "(Chief ABSCAM agent John Good) did call. And (Mel) said, 'Oh, he's out right now. And I'll have him call when he comes in.' And it worked out beautiful."

Another time, Mel wheedled money from the FBI by pleading that his wife needed an operation. Recalls Marie: "He says, ah, 'I spoke to John, and I told him you're very sick, and you need a hysterectomy' ... I said, 'What?' He said, 'Well they won't give me the money. But if they find you sick — they all like you — they'll feel, hey, I need the money for medical bills.'" It was, of course, just another scam.

But Marie didn't blame the FBI agents for succumbing to Mel's gruff charms. He was incorrigible but ingratiating. "You can't help liking him," she says.

The agents autographed a book for him with endearing sentiments. "The best in the business and a good friend," wrote John Good. The agent who posed as the phony sheik, Richard Farhardt, added this inscription: "To my good friend. One of the most interesting people I have ever met."

Agent Ernie Haridopolos: "To my courageous and generous friend." Agent Jack McCarthy: "We did have some fun. Thanks for the experience." Agent Margo Denedy: "Remember the beginning and don't forget all the good times."

Not only FBI agents but newsmen were taken in by the irrepressible Mel Weinberg. They portrayed him as a romantic figure, a living legend, who skins the rich and scams the powerful in the Robin Hood tradition.

The truth is less flattering. He is a scurrilous swindler, cheat and criminal who has kept out of prison by squealing on his best friends. He testified against his own lawyer, Vince Cuti, who had scraped together the bail money to keep Mel out of jail.

More than that, Marie describes Mel and Vince as drinking buddies and inseparable carousers. "All the guys were in a group," she explains, "like a rat pack." Yet Mel didn't hesitate to turn against Vince Cuti to save his own skin.

Mel also put his own welfare ahead of any concern he may have had for his wife and son. He placated them, meanwhile, with presents and endearments. In a note to his wife, he wrote: "To my darling wife Marie. I do love you very much, and we are rich beyond our greatest dream by having our son J.R. Your loving husband."

The note was appropriately dated April 1, 1981 — April Fools Day. For a few miles away, Mel was keeping a mistress in an apartment he had decorated exactly like the condominium where he lived with his wife.

Marie later discovered the love nest and confronted her husband. She describes the moment: "He said, 'So I got caught.' He said, 'I always said I was the world's biggest liar.' And he threw his hands in the air and walked out."

Marie was devoted to her son and protected him fiercely. She took pains to shield him from the glare of the ABSCAM spotlight. For example, my associate Indy Badhwar spent three months interviewing Marie and checking out her story. In all that time, she would never discuss the scandal in front of her son.

Yet within hours after Marie's death became known, Mel Weinberg was busily creating another of his scenarios to cast the tragedy in the most favorable light for himself. He set up interviews and prepared affidavits for his grieving son, thus dragging him into the mess.

Shortly before her death, Marie cried and said: "I have 19 years with him, and he has pulled all these lies. Now the blinders are off. Now I can connect things ... The only way he gets his kicks is by manipulating people. He's the mass manipulator. He is orchestrating everybody."

MARK RUSSELL SAYS

The Supreme Court says the sky's the limit on campaign contributions by political action committees. Gee, it'll be just like old times and what a fitting way to celebrate the 10th anniversary of Watergate.

• • •

And what a great time to open up a Mexican laundry.

• • •

The PACs may give a candidate 144 zillion dollars but must expect absolutely nothing in return. Of course. Oh, maybe a nice souvenir White House ashtray would be all right.

• • •

Or a teensy little package of windfall legislation in your choice of colors.

• • •

The court says the PACs unlimited spending comes under freedom of speech. Don't you love the way lobbyists invoke Thomas Jefferson as if he had just addressed their convention at Caesar's Palace?

• • •

From now on, money will be the only criterion in campaigns. And the truly honest candidate will be the one who says, "I know I can win because my fat cats are fatter than my opponent's fat cats."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, Feb. 10, the 41st day of 1982. There are 324 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On February 10, 1763, France ceded Canada to England as the Treaty of Paris was signed, ending the French and Indian War.

On this date:

In 1828, South American revolutionary Simon Bolivar became ruler of Colombia.

In 1943, the British 8th Army reached the Tunisian border in World War II.

In 1971, Cambodian head of state Lon Nol suffered a stroke, reportedly paralyzing his right side.

And in 1979, the Iranian revolution neared a climax as civilians joined mutinous Air Force cadets in pro-Khomeini fighting.

Ten years ago, American bombers and fighter planes made almost 100 strikes in a single day against targets in Vietnam.

Five years ago, a United Nations report accused the Soviet Union and four East European Communist countries of secretly buying goods from Rhodesia in violation of a U.N. embargo.

One year ago, vire swept through the Las Vegas Hilton Hotel, killing eight people and injuring about 200.

Today's birthday: Opera singer Leontyne Price is 55 years old.

HEMISPHERE REPORT

Soviet bloc nations in Caribbean jealous of Castro's Cuba

WASHINGTON — Few nations of the world may feel they have reason to be jealous of Communist Cuba, but some of the Caribbean republic's fellow members of the Soviet bloc think they do.

William Giandoni

According to Lawrence H. Theriot, an international economist, "A key spark to Polish unrest was reported to be the discovery by dock workers of meat shipments bound for Havana in containers labeled as vegetables."

He brought the point out in a recent speech delivered to the American Society in New York City in which he analyzed the economic realities, specifically the limits of Soviet aid, facing Cuba in the 1980s.

Time is running out for the Cuban economic experiment, Theriot, deputy director of the Commerce Department's Office of East-West Policy and Planning, said.

Fidel Castro's Cuba has labored hard to prove the Soviet model of centralized economic planning could be imposed on a developing country in the Western Hemisphere. But, despite massive transfers of resources from Moscow, some $13 billion, not including military aid, in the last decade, Cuba has failed to take off.

Now, "in the 1980s, for the first time Cuba will also confront the limits of Soviet generosity."

Theriot sees "little evidence for optimism about the capacity and willingness of the USSR to supply economic aid at levels that do more than meet Cuba's most basic subsistence needs."

Actually from 25-30 percent of Cuba's trade still is oriented to the West. But wide swings in world sugar prices, which earn the dollars Cuba needs, are reflected in sharp changes in imports from non-Communist countries. "After reaching $1.6 billion (70 percent from sugar) in 1975, hard currency exports declined to a low of $800 million in 1977 before again equaling $1.6 billion in 1980."

Hard currency earnings remain a critical determinant of Cuba's economic performance. A third of Cuba's foods, the quality consumer goods Cuba needs to spur labor productivity, and many essential raw materials must be paid in hard currency. The same goes for the quality technology and machinery not generally available from the Soviet bloc, and for service on Cuba's debt to the West, estimated at $2.6 billion the end of 1980.

The U.S. trade embargo of the last two decades was and is an impediment to Cuba's earning dollars it needs for improved economic growth and living standards.

But Castro brought that on Cuba.

"Cuba's aggressive international profile, emphasizing close identification with violent revolutionary struggle in the Third World and its close association with Soviet foreign policy objectives, have prejudiced relations with the United States and many other countries," Theriot explained.

Now, Cuba is confronted "with a leveling off of Soviet assistance."

Theriot doubts that Cuban trade with Moscow will really double by 1985 or that Moscow will be able to deliver the 61 million metric tons of crude oil and refined products Castro says it has guaranteed.

For one thing, the economist notes, the Soviet Union itself relies on exports of petroleum for over half of its own hard currency earnings. Also there is the possible decline of Soviet oil production in the mid-1980s. And there is "increased demand for oil by more important Soviet allies" than Cuba, especially Poland and including Vietnam.

As for non-energy imports, already "the Soviets supply the bulk of Cuban food imports either directly (e.g., dry milk) or from Third World countries on Soviet account (e.g., wheat and flour from Canada). Faced with the increased need to spend hard currency to import food for its own population, Moscow is likely to resist Cuban demands for more food aid ... Eastern Europe is also far more likely to resist new exports to Cuba," Theriot said.

He also speculated that "Moscow may also be increasingly concerned that Cuba is absorbing a disproportionate share (of Soviet aid) and thereby retarding the development of Soviet trade relations and influence in other Third World countries."

The survival of the Cuban revolution in the decades ahead will be determined by Havana's success in handling its foreign economic relations, Theriot concludes.

MENTAL HEALTH UPDATE

Effects of 'Angel Dust' unpredictable; It may produce chronic mental disorder

By KENNETH H. WOLF, MSSW, SP

QUESTION: What is "Angel Dust?" How dangerous is it?

ANSWER: "Angel dust" is one of the street names for the drug phencyclidine, also known as PCP. It is a quite dangerous drug in that its effects on the user are quite unpredictable, and it may produce a chronic state of mental disorder. Some of its typical effects including feelings of panic, depression, delusions, explosive violence, and flashbacks after use is discontinued. There have been reports of such bizarre behavior as jumping off high buildings because the user believed he could fly and self-mutilation.

PCP is often manufactured in "home laboratories." It is therefore impossible to know the strength of any given dose of the drug. It is also impossible to know whether or not other toxic substances have been used in the manufacturing process. Often unscrupulous dealers have been known to purposefully substitute such compounds as arsenic in the manufacturing stage.

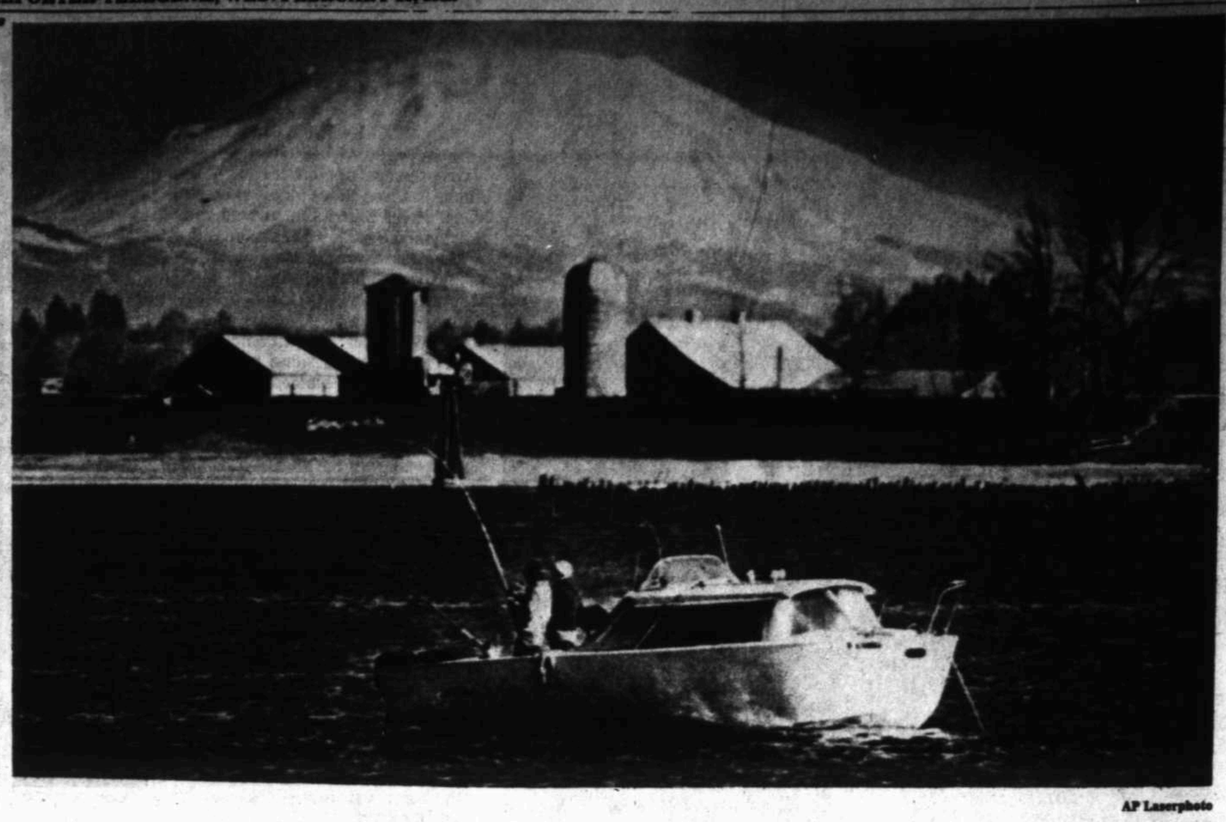

Most users of the drug tend to be young and very inexperienced in the useage of the drug. They fail to realize its dangers and often yield to peer pressure to try the drug. PCP comes in powdered, liquid, and tablet form. It is often added to other drugs such as marijuana or tobacco cigarettes and may be used along with alcohol or other tranquilizers as well. Such combinations of drugs may have deadly results for the user. Part of the unpredictability of PCP is that a dose of known strength may produce widely different effects in different users.

The drug affects the central nervous system, first as a stimulant, then as a depressant. The user may experience flushed skin, heavy perspiration, numbness, rapid heart beat, nausea, restlessness, loss of coordination, uncontrolled eye movements, euphoric mood, feelings of separation from reality, delusions, hallucinations, and tunnel vision. First effects occur within a few minutes of taking the drug. The "high" may last four to six hours. It usually takes one to two days for the effect of the drug to wear off completely. Aftereffects may persist from several days to several weeks. Evidence shows that the effects and aftereffects of the drug get worse with continued use.

PCP has been described as one of the most dangerous drugs which can be used. While all drug abuse should be avoided, PCP is especially dangerous because of its highly toxic (poisonous) and unpredictable nature. Prompt medical care should be sought if a person is intoxicated from PCP use. Follow-up psychotherapy and counseling is also indicated to help the person avoid future use of the drug.

At least three Tijuana businesses sustained $2 million in damages when a fire broke out on the city's main street, Avenida Revolucion, Tuesday. An import store and restaurant were gutted and six firemen were injured fighting the early-morning blaze.

Greenpeace protesting in three states

By The Associated Press

Greenpeace demonstrators perched atop smokestacks in three states today, protesting industrial emissions which contribute to acid rain. Authorities said they would be arrested as soon as they came down.

The protests began Monday at power plants in Conesville, Ohio, and Madison, Ind., and on Tuesday in San Manuel, Ariz. The Arizona protest targeted Magma Copper Co., which officials said was in compliance with federal and state emissions regulations.

Discharges from some power and manufacturing plants have been blamed for causing rain to become acidic, killing fish and causing other environmental problems.

In Conesville, authorities said misdemeanor criminal trespass charges have been filed against two men who climbed the 805-foot smokestack at a Columbus & Southern Electric Co. plant.

Coshocton County Sheriff David Corbett said deputies intended to arrest the climbers when they descend. But one of the climbers, 25-year-old James Greager, said by radio Tuesday the two were packing enough supplies "to take us a week."

Plant manager Tom McClimans said Greager, of Ann Arbor, Mich., and Bob Jacksy, 26, of Toledo, Ohio, had draped a banner from the top of the stack. He said the banner had been shredded by the wind, but believed it read: "People should speak now or forever hold their breath."

McClimans said the utility was taking no action to get the climbers down, but that two men were posted at the bottom of the smokestack to prevent any escape. Operations weren't affected by the protest, he said.

In San Manuel, protesters Claire O'Brien and Davis Stewart remained on a platform midway up a 500-foot Magma smokestack.

The demonstrators entered Magma's smelter about 30 miles northwest of Tucson early Tuesday — "illegally," said Magma Vice President Warren L. Parks — and were not noticed until a contractor inspecting the stack couldn't open a trap door to the platform.

Parks said the two were being allowed to remain as long as they wanted, but would be arrested on a warrant for criminal trespass when they came down.

Jolyon Western, a spokesman for the Washington-based environmental group, said Miss O'Brien, 31, of Los Alamos, N.M., and Stewart, 31, of Denver, hoped to remain on the smokestack until Magma agreed to remove up to 90 percent of the sulfur dioxide emissions currently released into the air from its smelting.

State officials said Magma has met all state and federal regulations for air quality control in emissions of sulfur dioxide and particulates and will be making equipment modifications over the next several years to cut pollution substantially.

In Madison, a lone protester remained on a 650-foot smokestack at the Clifty Creek coal-fired power plant.

Jeff Pettersen, 27, of Wilmette, Ill., climbed the stack early Monday. Police arrested a companion who descended after a few hours and say they will arrest Pettersen also.

James Stiles, 28, of Medford, Mass. was arraigned Tuesday on a charge of criminal trespass and released on a $1,000 bond. He said Pettersen was equipped with a tent, two sleeping bags and foul-weather gear.

Stiles said he came down after he and Pettersen decided the equipment was not adequate for two people.

Indiana-Kentucky Electric Corp. spokesman Everett Schwarm said there were no plans to bring Pettersen down by force.

Shuttle preparations days ahead of schedule

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The fast pace to prepare the space shuttle for its third mission is continuing, and a NASA official says preparations are now four days ahead of schedule.

The original rollout date for the Columbia from the huge Vehicle Assembly Building to the launch pad was Feb. 21. But time gained in the hangar and in the VAB, where the shuttle now is, means rollout could take place Feb. 17, Kennedy Space Center spokesman Mark Hess said Tuesday.

"It doesn't look, at this point, as if we'll have any trouble making the 17th," said Hess. "We've had very few problems. So far, all have been (the result) of ground support equipment or minor things quickly resolved."

Blastoff for the seven-day mission is set for 10 a.m. March 22.

The testing of all power and communications links between the orbiter and its two major auxiliary components — the huge external fuel tank and twin booster rockets — is expected to be completed early Thursday.

Three mission simulations are scheduled for Friday and Saturday in the VAB.

Astronauts Jack Lousma and Gordon Fullerton will conduct two of the mock missions. A backup crew, Vance Brand and Bob Overmeyer, will conduct the third, said Hess.

Ken Mattingly and Hank Hartsfield, assigned as the main backup crew for Lousma and Fullerton, will be on hand for all three tests.

Because of a training schedule conflict at the Johnson Space Center in Houston, Lousma and Fullerton will not be here for the Friday simulation involving a launch, ascent into orbit and orbital maneuvers, he said.

Lousma and Fullerton will carry out a simulated flight emergency necessitating a return to KSC and a descent and landing mission. Both are set for Saturday.

There is an 18-hour delay between the end of the current subsystems testing and the beginning of the mock missions because "we have to change all the computers around," Hess said. "It takes time to arrange the software for this special testing."

The astronauts will climb into Columbia's crew compartment, turn on many of the systems used in flight and maneuver the shuttle. Computers will provide the same data as during a regular mission.

"Of course we don't operate the auxiliary power units or fuel cells," Hess said, "but it's good training for the actual thing."

Cody announces retirement plans

CHICAGO (AP) — Cardinal John P. Cody, leader of the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Chicago, will retire on Christmas Eve — his 75th birthday, an official of the archdiocese says.

The cardinal, who has been ailing in recent months, will submit his resignation to Pope John Paul II, said Marion O'Neill, a spokesman for the Diocesan Presbyterial Senate.

O'Neill said the announcement of Cody's retirement plans was made by the Rev. Msgr. Francis A. Bracken, vicar general of the diocese, at a meeting of 80 diocesan senators Tuesday.

Bracken said there will be no new subscription drive to The Chicago Catholic — the archdiocese weekly newspaper — at Christmas time, as is customary, because Cody "expects to retire on Dec. 24, 1982."

Cody, recently released from the hospital for treatment of an irregular heartbeat, is recovering at his home. He has a history of heart trouble and diabetes.

A federal grand jury is investigating whether Cody misused church funds to benefit a long-time personal friend, Helen Dolan Wilson. The cardinal has denied any wrongdoing.

Cody, spiritual leader of nearly 2.5 million Chicago-area Roman Catholics, was named archbishop of Chicago on June 16, 1965.

On Dec. 13 he celebrated his Golden Jubilee Mass, marking his 50 years as a priest.

Soviets offer plan for reducing nukes

MOSCOW (AP) — The Kremlin has outlined a six-point plan for reducing the nuclear missile threat in Europe that includes reducing the number of weapons by about two-thirds and freezing new deployment while talks are underway.

The official Soviet news agency Tass presented the plan Tuesday in a 3,500 word dispatch that detailed a position put forward last week by Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev. Tass urged the United States to accept the plan to break what it called a two-month deadlock at the missile talks in Geneva.

Tass also said President Reagan's plan to reduce the missile threat "is a unilateral and one can even say absurd position."

Reagan's so-called "zero option" proposal states that the United States will forego deployment of 572 Pershing 2 and Cruise missiles in Europe if the Soviets dismantle their SS-rocket series of missiles capable of reaching Western European targets.

The proposal has been submitted as a draft treaty at Geneva talks on reducing nuclear weapons in Europe. The Americans have rejected the Soviet approach.

The Soviets insist there is a rough parity of medium-range nuclear weapons in Europe between the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the Warsaw Pact. NATO says the Soviets are rapidly building up superiority with deployment of new SS-20 missiles.

Tass repeated Brezhnev's offer to withdraw some of its SS-20s if the United States agrees to a moratorium on the planned deployment of new missiles while the Geneva talks are underway.

Airplane forced back

BOSTON (AP) — A New York Air DC-9 jet bound for Washington with 46 passengers aboard had to return to Logan International Airport when smoke filled the cabin, but completed the trip after a defect was fixed, authorities said.

A malfunctioning air conditioning system, which caused the smoke, was repaired Thursday night before Flight 65 resumed after a delay of about 90 minutes, said Jo Ryan, a spokeswoman for the Massachusetts Port Authority.

Passengers were evacuated safely from the jet, and all but six reboarded the aircraft when the flight took off again, Ms. Ryan said.

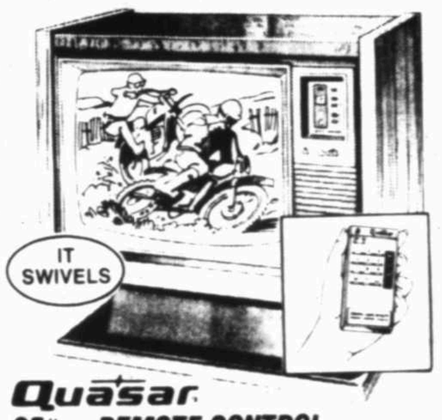

The six passengers who declined to return to the flight left for their homes or took rooms in hotels, Ms. Ryan said.

The plane took off from Logan shortly after 8 p.m. and landed at 8:22 p.m., she said.

She has trained and placed 50 new volunteers and has been in charge of the bookkeeping and financial records for the auxiliary for the past 12 years.

Mrs. Hobbs was appointed as the Texas representative and was one of 20 women to study the Christian mission in the Caribbean with two weeks of intensive study in Jamaica.

Upon her return, she presented programs on missions to 14 local and regional Methodist and Presbyterian churches. She is serving as president of Church Women United for the 1982 term; treasurer and membership chairman of Historical Society of the Southwest from 1979-1983; and was appointed by the mayor of Midland to the Midland Civic Center Advisory Board from 1979-1981.

Mrs. Hobbs is also a longtime member of the Symphony Guild, Ballet Guild, Museum of the Southwest and Midland Woman's Club.

WILMA MALEY was nominated by the Trinity Towers Auxiliary.

Save money, energy by learning your laundry's capabilities

By SHARON A. HILLIS
County Extension Agent
Home Economics

Energy savings that stem from laundry-room tactics can be dramatic, but laundry mistakes can become a pocketbook tragedy. Know your laundry's performance capabilities and limits before trying to save energy — at your own expense.

COOLER-WATER WASHING

Energy conservation in the laundry room starts with lower temperatures for the washer, but don't switch to cooler temperatures until you know how to use them. In water below 60 degrees F., detergents become ineffective. Also, lower water temperatures affect a granular detergent's ability to dissolve. The colder the water, the slower a powder will dissolve. So use a liquid detergent — or predissolve a granular one — if you want to use lower water temperatures.

You can't always use cool temperatures for the best effect, either. For removing certain soils, such as oily or greasy stains, hot water at about 140 degrees F. is a must. Otherwise, heavily soiled laundry may become gray and dingy if you wash it in cool or cold water several times.

Cool-wash cycles definitely have their place in today's complex world of textiles and advancements in treatments for them. Many washes require warm, cool or cold water because of color, fiber content or finish of fabrics.

GIVE CLOTHES "ELBOW ROOM"

Another energy conservation tactic sometimes focuses on cramming washers and dryers too full of laudry items. Don't allow your clothes "standing room only" — they need "elbow room" so enough wash water and dry air can reach them. If you crowd them, clothes won't wash clean, and some may not dry enough. Also, excessive abrasion of clothes can occur when a washer is overloaded or when too little water is used, and this can cause "pilling" or balling up of man-made fibers on clothes.

"EASY" WITH THE BLEACH

Bleach is another possible disaster in the laundry room as consumers use more of it to help overcome the "dingies" that result from using too little detergent or too cool water. Some polyester/cotton blends and 100 percent cottons have chemical finishes that actually grab and hold chlorine bleach. These fabrics should warn you of this. Read labels and follow instructions so you don't ruin them by trying to use bleach. For most all other fabrics, overuse or misuse of bleach will result in damage such as rips and tears. Again, read labels — especially the one on bleach containers.

ALWAYS dilute bleach before it comes into contact with clothes.

When using a bleach dispenser, add bleach before loading the washer with clothes to avoid accidentally spilling bleach on dry clothes.

LAUNDRY A FAMILY AFFAIR

Finally, make learning the ropes about laundry — and energy savings — a family affair. With more women working outside the home, laundry often is done by husbands and children, so all family members need to know about laundry "do's and don'ts."

Next week: "Making Your Clothes Dryer Energy Efficient."

Jayceettes observe special week

Jayceettes from across America are celebrating the week of Feb. 7-13 as United States Jayceette Week.

The Jayceettes, a young women's leadership training organization with membership in excess of 59,000 in 50 states, is currently the fastest growing women's organization in America.

The group invloves women between the ages of 18 and 35 in leadership training and individual development which are attained through community service.

Linda Hood of Orrington, Me., president of the organization, indicated "that through involvement in community service, the members grow personally in such areas as public speaking, human relations, time management, financial planning and goal setting."

"Last year we raised over $1 million," said Mrs. Hood. "The foundations which we support are St. Jude Children's Hospital, Cystic Fibrosis, Juvenile Diabetes, Muscular Dystrophy, March of Dimes and the Rocky Mountain Multiple Sclerosis Facility in Denver, Colo."

The Midland Jayceettes are members of the U. S. Jayceettes and have been an active chapter in the community for over 32 years.

The Executive Board of the Midland Jayceettes includes Karran Martin, president; Shelley Baggett, vice-president; Carolyn Peterson, recording secretary; Karen Shelton, publicity secretary, Pattie Cowan, treasurer; Rebecca Fouts, internal director; Darla Smith, external director; Barbara Barnett, state director; Patsy Gallagher, historian; and Sylvia Garay, chaplain.

Perk up a pale room

By BARBARA HARTUNG
Copley News Service

Q. My daughter has moved into an apartment of her own and I want to convert her room into a guest room.

The room is small, has a twin bed and several bookcases. The closet is fitted with drawers so I don't need much other furniture except perhaps a desk.

She liked very dainty things and light colors and has a pale apricot colored carpeting. However, I'd like to have something more dramatic. Please give me some suggestions. — R.P.B.

A. Why don't you wallpaper your room in a dramatic print — a bright blue, navy blue, apricot and cream would be a possible choice.

Lacquer your daughter's bookcases in navy blue. Top your bed with a tailored, quilted solid light apricot. Accessorize with the brightest blue and cream.

Deep colors such as navy blue can be a refreshing change from pale, soft pastels.

Q. I have a dull kitchen that needs something done to it quickly. The cabinets are a medium-dark walnut and the floor is an off-white and medium brown pebbled vinyl.

I just painted the walls a light beige. But the room is terribly drab. I don't think new kitchen curtains will be enough although they will help.

What else can I do? — Y.M.

A. Do you have a soffit in your kitchen — a space between kitchen cupboards and the ceiling? If so, cover this area with a very bright, colorful fabric that you can staple or glue into place. Repeat the fabric in the curtain or laminate the fabric to a window shade or shades for the windows.

If you have no soffit, consider covering with fabric some of your kitchen wall. Fabric is easy to use because it can be stretched around irregular spots where paper would tear.

Q. My daughter's bedroom has two windows on her bed wall. Awkwardly spaced and different sized. To add to this problem the view is not good.

I have thought about blocking them off entirely but the cost rather restrains me. What solution might take care of the problem short of going to the expense of constructing a new wall? — C.H.

A. You might completely ignore both windows if you don't need them for light or for ventilation.

Cover them over with a shirred fabric for a delicate, luxurious look. This is easiest done by hanging a traverse rod at the ceiling height on the wall and attaching fabric.

This will give you a pleasing, unbroken wall and can be highly attractive with pretty fabric.

Electric paint remover safer than blowtorch

By GENE GARY
Copley News Service

Q. Our home was built 45 years ago, so it had many coats of paint. My husband has been using a blowtorch to remove the paint down to the bare wood, in order to start the painting all over.

There are paint removers on the market, but we understand it would be difficult to remove as many coats of paint as there are on the house. Do you know of any other way to remove the paint that would be easier, and still not harm the wood itself?

Our house and garage need painting and we would like to get it done soon. — Alma V.W.

A. An electric paint remover is much safer to use for paint removal than the blowtorch. The tool, which can be rented, is placed on the coated surface, then pulled over the coating slowly, followed with a scraper to remove the softened paint. The heating element is the same as in an electric appliance. It is also excellent for removing paint from small surfaces such as window sashes and frames.

Another possibility: You could have the exterior walls sandblasted, which would be a more expensive paint removal process.

Removal with conventional or regular commercial paint removers would do the job, but for a large area, such as for repainting the exterior of a house, it would be a long, hard, tedious process.

Q. I want to put a bar on the side of my ceramic tile bathroom, next to my tub.

I would like to know how I could locate the 2x4 to anchor the grab bar with screws. The tiles, as mentioned are ceramic. The bar is 16 inches. — Francis S., Phillipsburg, N.J.

A. Usually the studs are 16 inches apart. Measure from the corners over to the area you wish to install the bar.

Also tap lightly along the wall with a padded hammer. The difference in sound will locate the studding.

If you have any problems, ask a friend who may be experienced, or a carpenter to help you with this task.

Q. Can you tell me which will last the longest underground — pressure-treated fir or redwood? I am thinking about 2x10s and 2x6s. I will appreciate any information you can give. — Earl B.S., Poway, Calif.

A. Properly prepared, pressure-treated Douglas fir is the best choice and will last longer, so builders tell me. But by proper treatment, the wood must be thoroughly dry, with no sap remaining.

Redwood also is good, so builders say, provided again that it is clean and dry enough to be entirely free of any remaining sap. However, another builder says the California Division of Highways always uses pressure-treated Douglas fir for such pole installations along highways where part of the pole is underground, "and if they have found out that it is good enough for them, it is good enough for me."

Q. Is there a way to recondition clay flowerpots? I have some nice clay pots which have white stains all over. I assume these stains are due to mineral seepage. My scrubbing is to no avail. — J. Elke E.

A. The pots can be renewed by scrubbing with muriatic acid, mixed in a solution of one part acid to nine parts of water. This should remove the stains, caused by efflorescence.

Unless the inside of the pots are coated with a water repellent, the spots may appear again. For the inside of the pots, use a product which professionals use after pruning trees to coat large cut areas. This product is available at nurseries.

Another caution: Be very careful in your use of muriatic acid. It is very dangerous. Use goggles to protect the eyes and rubber or heavy gloves to protect the flesh.

Q. Would you consider it a good idea to replace my asphalt shingle roof with a permanent material such as clay tiles or slate? — Lloyd M.S.

A. I really do not think so. Both tile and slate, while a much more permanent roof than asphalt shingles, are heavy and your roof framing may not have been engineered to accept such a heavy load.

In addition, other roofing surfaces offer quite acceptable life terms for the investment.

Questions on building, home maintenance and repair may be sent to Here's How, P.O. Box 190, San Diego, CA 92112.

Woman wins first prize

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — An almond-filled cookie cake baked by a Connecticut woman took the $40,000 first prize in the Pillsbury Bake-Off.

Elizabeth Meiger, of Danbury, Conn., who said the recipe reflected her husband's Dutch heritage, won a $15,000 category prize and a $25,000 first prize for her pastry-like entry in the flour category.

The cookie-cake was adapted from a pastry recipe from Holland, where she and her husband lived while he was serving in the Royal Netherlands Army, she said.

Competing in the $109,000 bake-off, which got underway early Monday, were 100 cooks. The prize money was shared by 16 finalists.

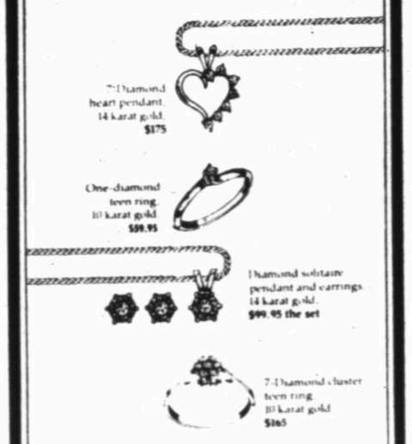

Contestants ranged in age from 10 to 70 years old and included two mother-daughter teams.

Karen Lee, a high school junior from Laverne, Calif., won a $15,000 prize for her Italian-inspired pastry, sugar-crusted biscuit puffs.

Betty Doll, of St. Louis, Mo., also won a $15,000 prize for here Italian sour cream cake and Marjorie Hooper of Lakeland, Fla., was awarded the same amount with her praline cresent dessert.

The 12 winners of $2,000 each included; Marilyn Blanshien of Clintonville, Wis.; Vesta Frizzell of Independence, Mo.; Janet Hill of Rodeo, Calif.; Susan Pajcic of Jacksonville, Fla.; Jay Friedman of Montclair, N.J.; Leona Moler of Mount Orab, Ohio; Barbara Hodgson of Elkhardt, Ind.; Phyllis Wolf of Salem, Ore.; Phyllis Wagner of Yale, Ill.; Edna Eastman of LaGrange, Ill.; Margaret Kramer of Forestville, Wis., and Joanna Yokum of Isabella, Calif.

Recollections of a Sopwith flying ace

By JOHN PLATERO
Associated Press Writer

PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — It was a clear day early in 1917. The Sopwith Camel was cruising at 14,000 feet, in search of enemy fighters behind German lines near Arras, France.

The pilot, silk scarf snapping in the slipstream, hunched forward scanning the skies between his twin Vickers machine guns. Suddenly, heading north across his path he saw the famous bright red German Fokker.

Its pilot — Manfred von Richthofen, the Red Baron!

"If he didn't have his 'umbrella' with him, I'd have attacked him," remembers Donald Paton, one of the dwindling number of living World War I flying aces. "I went after him, but didn't get close enough to fire. With the cover he had, it would have been foolish to stay there."

The Red Baron's 'umbrella,' Paton explains, was an escort of 40-50 German fighters that always accompanied him on patrol.

"The secret was to get on top so you had the advantage. Richthofen generally flew at about 17,000 feet, and when he spotted an unsuspecting British or Canadian plane, he and part of his cover would swoop down and knock them out of the sky."

The London-born Paton vividly recalls the 2½ years he served as a fighter pilot with the Royal Flying Corps in Europe. At 82, records indicate he's the youngest living World War I ace — a title first given in that war to pilots who destroyed at least five enemy aircraft.

Paton says he saw the Red Baron again a few months later under similar conditions.

"Both times he was about three miles away. Any of us would have risked almost anything for a chance to bring down Richthofen."

Still strikingly handsome with gray hair and a thin mustache, Paton lives a quiet life in retirement with his wife, Shelagh.

Many of his war momentoes were destroyed in a fire years ago, but he still has his tunic, helmet, goggles and the most treasured garment of those war pilots of yesteryear — the white, silk scarf.

"It kept you warm, but it was also a badge of honor," he says.

Most of the pilots, Paton adds, had the scarves special-ordered from a fine haberdashery in London.

"There was a spirit of nobility among pilots in those days. It was a gentlemen's war in the air and dogfights were a sort of duel."

The famed Sopwith biplane, says Paton, was tricky. "It was very sensitive. If you had a clumsy fist, you wouldn't make a good pilot in the Camel."

With 7½ hours in the 110 mile-an-hour Camel, he was sent to the front as a lieutenant. He was later promoted to captain and made flight commander of a group of seven planes.

Paton remembers when he first experienced fear in combat, before he had scored his first "kill."

"It was close. I turned and saw this German coming after me. I went into a dive and he followed me down. Suddenly, I swung to the right and he whizzed past me, his guns going where I would have been."

Aerial combat was in close encounter, he says. Planes fired at each other while only feet apart. "You'd get in the middle of a dogfight and discover several of the enemy swarming around you."

Paton became a double ace, totaling 13 kills — 11 confirmed and two probable.

He was awarded several medals including the Distinguished Flying Cross — one of Great Britain's highest military honors.

In January 1918, his plane was hit by ground fire near Bapaume, France. He crashed into a shell hole and was hospitalized for 10 months with multiple injuries.

After the war, Paton went to South Africa, where he was involved with experimental agriculture until 1926. He then moved to the United States and became general manager of five plush New York City hotels. He retired in 1970.

Plastic is a pipe cinch to work

By AL CARRELL

There are a lot of folks concerned about the fact that we have so many plastic things in the world that we may eventually not have enough room for us folks to live on the planet because plastic doesn't ever go away. It lasts forever. That's bad as far as the plastic garbage we have to contend with, but it's good when it comes to plumbing pipe. Plumbing pipe is something you wish would last forever.

One of the big advantages with plastic plumbing pipe is that it is so easy to use. I suspect that this may have been a reason for many plumbers being against the stuff in the beginning. They may have been afraid there'd be too many do-it-yourselfers who'd start doing their own plumbing work. This has happened, but all the good plumbers I know are still being offered more work than they can handle, so it hasn't hurt them. In fact, wherever code permits, most plumbers are also using plastic pipe.

The only real disadvantage in most cases to the use of plastic pipe is in the fact that some local codes prohibit or restrict its use. Before you rush out and buy a bunch of plastic, be sure what you want to do is code approved. If it is, don't be frightened by the fact that it's not acceptable somewhere else. Soil or water conditions may make other types of pipe more desirable somewhere else.

Rigid plastic pipe for water supply lines is available just about everywhere in two types: PVC (polyvinyl Chloride) and CPVC (Chlorinated polyvinyl Chloride). PVC will handle cold water only, while CPVC will handle both cold and hot. For drain-waste-vent (DWV) lines, the most widely used is ABS (Acrylo-nitrile Butadiene styrene), and PVC is also used for drains.

I mentioned that using the pipe was easy. Let's see just how easy it is. First, it can be cut to any length using just a hacksaw, and this takes just a matter of seconds. It can be joined using easy to find, easy to apply fittings that are held together by a brush-on cement called a solvent. It's a very lightweight material which makes it easy to handle.

The easy steps in joining are: (1) Cut the pipe to length using the hacksaw and an inexpensive miter box to insure a straight cut. (2) Remove the burrs. It's a good idea to hold the end downward so no particles go into the pipe. (3) Dry fit the pieces to be sure the pipe goes all the way into the fitting until it touches the shoulder. (4) Mark the position, using a grease pencil mark on both the pipe and fitting because when you apply the solvent, you don't have much time to fiddle around. (5) Be sure the surfaces to be joined are clean. Use the recommended solvent cleaner. (6) Apply the recommended solvent to all surfaces to be joined. Quickly put the fitting in place while making about a quarter twist to distribute the solvent cement. When the pieces are lined up, just hold it steady for about a half minute. That's all there is to the solvent weld method of joining plastic pipe.

You will want to wait a couple of minutes before installing pipe into the other end of the fitting, and you do want to wait the prescribed time before subjecting the lines to water pressure. This will be on the label, and in fact, so will other suggestions that you should follow.

Another advantage you'll find in the use of plastic pipe is that it can be joined to almost any other type of plumbing. There are adaptors for connecting it to copper, galvanized, and other plastics.

After the plastic pipe is joined, there are some definite advantages. Plastic will not rust or corrode as metal may. For hot water pipes, plastic is often less likely to lose the heat as water travels through it. It's still best to insulate hot water pipes of any sort if they travel through an unheated area. Lime and scale deposits are much less likely to collect on the inside walls of plastic pipe than with some other types.

Even with all the advantages, make sure that anything you do that's connected with plumbing is acceptable according to the local building code.

Electronic snitch watches students

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — The modern truant officer is now hiding in a computer.

To keep tabs on students who skip classes, high-school teachers in some districts fill out a computer "scanning" sheet which is sent to the school's central office.

The sheet is entered into a scanning machine connected to a large computer system, which reports back that same day to school officials the student's name and time of absence. Parents are then asked about a child's absence.

One of the first districts to install the system is the Oakland Unified School District in California where a Honeywell system covers some 24,000 junior and senior high-school students.

In addition to class attendance, the computer system is used for a variety of other tasks, such as adding or deleting students from classes and making program changes.

DEAR ABBY

Blue television commercials make reader see red

DEAR ABBY: I just can't stand to see another TV commercial showing a lot of fannies wiggling around in jeans so tight there is no way a person could sit down in them! This goes for men as well as women.

That bra commercial in which a man measures a curvy blonde's dimensions was bad enough, but a new low in vulgarity was reached when some swivel-hipped gal bragged that the underwear she was wearing under her clothes made her look like she wasn't wearing nuthin'! Disgraceful!

Please tell me where to write to complain about such tasteless commercials. If enough people object, maybe the commercials will be taken off the air. – DISGUSTED IN TULARE, CALIF.

DEAR DISGUSTED: Write to: Action Line, Direct Mail Marketing Association, 6 East 43rd St. New York, N.Y. 10017. Also send a copy to the president of the company that manufactures the product. If enough complaints are received, the advertising agency that's responsible for the commercial will be told to shape up or ship out.

DEAR ABBY: I did the most terrible thing a mother-in-law could do. I told my daughter-in-law right in front of my son that it didn't look good for her to let their best friend (I'll call him Joe) in the house while my son was at work. I live next door and this has bothered me for two years, and I finally said it to her face to ease the pain of keeping my mouth shut for so long. My daughter-in-law's reputation wasn't very good before she married my son, if you get my drift.

Well, she got mad at me and told me if that's what I thought about her I was no longer welcome in her house. It's my son's house, too, but he sat right there and didn't say a word. Yesterday I called my son and asked him to bring their baby to my house so I could see him. I told him I was sorry about what I said to his wife, and he said that was something I would have to straighten out with her.

Abby, how do you reckon I should go about making up with my daughter-in-law? – FEELING BAD

DEAR FEELING: For openers, you could apologize to her.

DEAR ABBY: I'm thinking seriously about seeking psychological or psychiatric help, but I'm worried about how it might look on my record when applying for a job. I'm 20, and if I did get professional help and was later asked if I'd ever been under the care of a psychologist or psychiatrist, I would answer truthfully, but I don't want to risk losing a job because of it.

I guess I really owe it to myself to get professional help, but I don't want to have to choose eventually between being honest and getting a job. I'd appreciate your comments. Sign me ... STUMPED

DEAR STUMPED: If you need professional help, it would be a serious error to avoid getting it for the reason you have mentioned. Millions of people are receiving, or have received, psychotherapy. Many of them occupy positions of great responsibility – lawyers, judges, doctors, government officials, corporation executives, etc.

Your ability to get a job in the future will depend much more on your record and on how you present yourself than it will on that single question, even if it were asked. If it is asked, answer it honestly, adding that you have benefited from it. (You will be respected all the more for it.) You are under no obligation to go into detail about why you sought help.

(Getting married? Whether you want a formal church wedding or a simple "do-your-own-thing" ceremony, get Abby's new booklet. Send $1 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped (37 cents) envelope to: Abby's Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Return address labels make address book nicely neat

DEAR HELOISE:

My address book looks almost perfect. My bad handwriting doesn't matter because I save the return address labels on my mail and tape them into my address book.

Only have to write in a very few by hand! — Reader

+++

Smart! Easy to replace an address too should it change. — Heloise

IMITATION MARBLE

Dear Heloise: Regarding the lady's problem with her new imitation marble bathroom sink...

If she and each member of her family will wipe the sink dry after each use (the faucet too), she will find that it will stay shiny-new.

If rust in the water should yellow it a bit, a liquid rust remover will clean it. Carefully follow the directions on the container.

I've had one of these imitation marble sinks for at least four years and it still looks like new. — Marjorie Keller

STATIC CLING HELP

Dear Heloise: How can I eliminate the apparently permanent static cling of my brushed nylon flannel nightie? The fabric is still soft with a good nap.

Thank you for any help you can supply. Love you and your valuable hints! — Lorraine Fieber

Dip the nightie in water to which you've added a generous amount of liquid fabric softener. Squeeze out the excess water and let it drip dry. Don't put the gown in the dryer as that compounds the static problem.

While this fabric seems to be naturally prone to clinging and twisting despite your best efforts to prevent it, the above procedure will greatly reduce the static cling. — Heloise

MOVING TIP

Dear Heloise: When my mother had to move to another city, she took her hometown telephone directory with her.

Everyone's address and phone number right at hand! — Jon

KEY HINT

Dear Heloise: When I lost my keys some time ago, they were returned because I had written my name and address on the tab inside the key case.

Of course, I was happy to see the keys but suddenly realized how foolish I had been. It could have been a thief who found them.

Now I put my work address on the card as I don't carry keys to the office. Your name and the address of any church or civic club in which you are well known would serve as well — the key being that you don't carry keys to the club on your chain. — J.E. Ellis

A housekeeping problem got you stumped? Write to Heloise, P.O. Box 32000, San Antonio, Tx. 78216, and enlist her help. She can't reply to your letter personally but she'll solve problems of general interest in her column.

MS victim claims snake venom helped symptoms

By LINDA ROCKEY
Hearst Feature Service

SEATTLE — Richard Urness doesn't like to be seen in public because he believes people think he's drunk as he staggers to keep his balance, stares to see beyond his blurred double vision and occasionally slurs his words.

But the 52-year-old man says he would do just about anything "to cure this lousy disease" that short-circuits the flow of messages from his brain to his nervous system — multiple sclerosis.

That's why Urness, who lives on a modest fixed income, borrowed $2,000 from relatives in 1980 and traveled to Florida for snake venom injections, the latest in a long series of unproven treatments touted for MS, a disease whose cause and cure remain a mystery.

Urness returned from Florida as an enthusiastic convert. Relatives told him he was walking better. He thought he could hold a cup more firmly and his vision seemed better.

Nearly a year-and-a-half later, Urness isn't so sure the venom helped. He can't walk without staggering and falling down. He can't cook without burning himself.

"I can't even trim my fingernails or wash my hair," he said. His vision is the worst it's been in his 25-year battle with MS.

And he is broke.

He worries that if he makes any waves, the federal government will take away his $482-a-month disability payments. "If they cut off Social Security, I'm done," he said.

Under pressure from relatives, he is thinking of going back to snake venom.

"With MS, somebody else has to tell you (if it helps)," he said of his relatives' assessment. "You don't fall down as much," they have told him.

After his Florida trip, Urness continued to obtain the venom, at $105 a syringe, although use of the venom is illegal outside the state of Florida.

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration recently obtained a court order prohibiting the production and marketing of "PROven," the snake venom mixture, by a Miami serpentarium, which has supplied MS victims.

The National MS Society emphasizes that there is no scientific evidence that snake venom helps the disease. It cautions that serious side effects have been reported by the FDA, including at least one death. After treatment in a Florida clinic, a 32-year-old Texas woman died of massive bleeding in the brain, a side effect of the venom noted in laboratory animals.

Dr. Robert J. Slater, director of medical programs for the National MS Society, cautions that it's important for MS patients "not to be chasing rainbows and burning out finances. It's especially important with chronic illness to keep your financial resources."

But he is sensitive to the desperation felt by MS patients.

"People are annoyed that we don't put money into these treatments," he said of the snake venom. The MS Society tried to organize a scientific study of the venom, but the Florida physicians peddling it "refuse to cooperate," he said.

A scientifically-controlled study is the only way to determine whether the venom really works, according to Slater. The patient may simply feel better because of the "placebo response, one's normal propensity to get better, based on having faith that the doctor will help you," he said.

Housing program threatened by fires

HONG KONG (AP) — A staggering number of fires in squatter villages is threatening to tear apart Hong Kong's ambitious re-housing program.

In 1981, more than 30,000 squatters, mostly new arrivals from China, were made homeless by about 60 fires — a number described by officials as a record — compared with 2,950 squatters and 19 fires in 1980.

The Hong Kong government, this colony's biggest landlord providing cheap housing for more than 2 million of Hong Kong's 5.1 million population, plans to build 35,000 apartments each year for the next few years.

Housing officials say they are now hard put to settle the thousands made homeless by the fires.

The Housing Authority is exploring various options to give them temporary accommodations, including converting old single-story housing units to taller structures and making use of former Vietnamese refugee camps.

Dr. Denny Huang, operation committee chairman of the Housing Authority, said: "Never before have the authorities had to cope with such an enormous rehousing commitment."

Hong Kong's most devastating single fire broke out on Christmas Day in 1953 when a single flame from an overturned kerosene stove turned into a sea of fire which rendered almost 60,000 people homeless.

It was that fire which prompted the Hong Kong government to launch a massive multi-billion-dollar rehousing program.

Despite its efforts, Hong Kong's public housing is far from adequate.

Advisory group recommends genetic research guidelines

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Even though genetic research appears relatively safe, some guidelines should be maintained because the field is so new, a government advisory group says.

The Recombinant DNA Advisory Committee, reconsidering an earlier vote to make most genetic research guidelines voluntary, thus recommended that mandatory restrictions be relaxed but not abandoned.

Members of the committee, which advises the National Institutes of Health director about genetic engineering research, said they decided to reconsider last year's vote after receiving comments from scientists and the public.

"Reactions to the proposal indicate scientists and other people want changes in the guidelines, but not setting aside the mandatory nature of the guidelines," said Dr. Elena Nightingale of the National Academy of Sciences.

Ms. Nightingale also said there is concern that making the guidelines voluntary would stimulate different and confusing local regulations around the country.

Committee members stressed that most evidence to date indicates past concerns about the safety of the research were overstated. But they said there still are enough unanswered questions to keep some restrictions.

Recombinant DNA, or gene-splitting, research involves taking the genetic material of one organism and adding it to another to give it characteristics it would not normally have.

Most of the work has been with bacteria, giving scientists the ability to produce large quantities of rare compounds, such as drugs, hormones and vaccines.

Initially, a major concern was of the possibility of creating virulent disease organisms from which man, animals and plants had no natural defense.

That concern subsided as scientists performed subsequent tests and gained more experience.

Dr. Susan Gottesman of the National Cancer Institute, who proposed the changes the committee adopted, said, "There are kinds of experiments we still have questions about or very little experience with.

"We want methods to bring these experiments to NIH and to be looked at by expert groups beforehand," she continued.

Dr. James O. Mason of the Utah State Department of Healt predicted guidelines will eventually become voluntary, but h said the public still has doubts about the research.

"The public is not yet ready," Mason said. "We need to gai more experience in some areas first."

Dr. David Baltimore of the Massachusetts Institute of Technol ogy, who backed all-voluntary guidelines, said most scientist know gene-splitting is no more hazardous than most conven tional work with disease organisms.

Calling the NIH guidelines "a mockery," Baltimore said it wa intellectually dishonest for scientists to favor restrictions wher they know most of the evidence indicates the research poses n greater risk than other similiar work.

NIH established tight safety guidelines about six years ago when scientists and others raised questions about the safety of genetic engineering research.

The rules became mandatory for all government-sponsored research, and industry agreed to follow them voluntarily.

The guidelines have been scaled down several times since they were initiated, and almost 90 percent of recombinant DNA work has been exempted.

Congressional redistricting due soon

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A federal judge says the U.S. Attorney General's office has made the "unwelcome function" of drawing congressional boundaries an even messier task than it should be.

Judge Sam Johnson of the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said Tuesday he and two other federal judges would rule next week on lines for the state's 27 congressional districts.

The judges are working with a plan drawn by the Legislature, challenged by minority plaintiffs and rejected by the U.S. Justice Department.

Assistant Texas Attorney General Rick Gray asked the judges Tuesday to approve the plan rejected by the Justice Department. Any changes should be limited to the two South Texas districts cited by federal officials as violating the U.S. Voting Rights Act.

On Jan. 29, the Justice Department rejected the plan because of problems in two South Texas districts. Johnson said that decision, handed down two days before the Feb. 1 filing deadline for congressional candidates, further "frustrated" the process.

Johnson complained "the elective process in the state of Texas is very seriously impeded by the position of the attorney general of the United States."

"This court was put in the position of waiting until two days before the last filing deadline...before it heard via the news media of the action of the attorney general disapproving the plan," he said from the bench.

The Feb. 1 filing deadline for 16 districts was moved back to Feb. 22.

Gray told the judges Tuesday that several Hispanic leaders from the Lower Rio Grande Valley had asked the Justice Department to reconsider its rejection of the plan. The South Texas leaders favored the plan drawn by the Legislature because it kept Cameron and Hidalgo Counties in the same district.

Attorneys for black and Hispanic plaintiffs in the case asked for widespread changes in the plan approved by the Texas Legislature and rejected by the Justice Department. The plaintiffs want changes in Dallas, Harris, Bexar and Tarrant counties, in addition to South Texas.

The three-judge panel said it would wait until noon Monday to hear if the federal officials had reopened the case. If no reconsideration is approved, the court will hand down a map, perhaps as early as Monday.

Johnson said the court would act as quickly as possible to make sure the May 1 primaries do not have to be delayed.

"The court is prepared to do its best to expedite this matter," said Johnson. "This court is not satisfied that the elective process has been anything but frustrated by delays on the part of the (U.S.) attorney general."

The late ruling from Washington puts the judges in an "awkward position," he added. Nevertheless, the judges will take on the "unwelcome function" of setting the districts, Johnson concluded.

The three-judge panel also includes U.S. District Judges Robert Parker of Beaumont and William Wayne Justice of Tyler.

Also Tuesday, Secretary of State David Dean asked the Justice Department to approve sections of the congressional and legislative redistricting plans which did not draw Voting Rights Act objections.

A three-judge federal panel in Dallas is drawing lines for the legislative districts. The Justice Department also vetoed those plans because of Voting Rights Act objections.

"If we get a favorable response," Dean said, "it will give the courts more latitude and allow them to focus only on the problem areas. This will allow the courts to move to a final plan in a timely and expeditious manner ensuring the holding of the state's primary elections on May 1."

Dean said Justice Department approval of parts of the plan could allow the courts to draw permanent plans, instead of interim plans that would stand until the Legislature reconvenes next year.

"There is no reason to go back through the complete redistricting hassle one more time in 1983 which will probably end up once again in the federal courts," said Dean.

Incumbent applauds try at keeing district intact

WASHINGTON (AP) — South Texas civic leaders working to keep the lower Rio Grande Valley intact as a congressional district are doing the proper thing, said the district's incumbent.

"Those counties, their compatibiliy is such that they're almost inseparable. Anyone that has heard anything about it doesn't like it — Chamber of Commerce officials, mayors, everybody," said Rep. Kika de la Garza, D-Texas of Mission.

The Justice Department rejected the Texas congressional redisticting plan on Jan. 29 on grounds that a newly created district in South Texas had too few Hispanics.

The plan was returned to Texas officials with suggestions that Hidalgo and Cameron counties, which now are in de la Garza's 15th district, be split, with one of the counties going into the new 27th district.

San Benito Mayor Cesar Gonzales and Harlingen City Councilman Tony Gutierrez met with Justice Department lawyers Monday to lobby against the split.

"They don't want to split Cameron and Hidalgo, or part of Cameron County," said de la Garza. "They want to keep the district as it is, with the counties intact. Everything is regional down there, and to treat it only as numbers on a map may not be the best thing to do."

The Justice Department said much of the valley's population increase since the last census occurred in Cameron and Hidalgo counties. To keep them in the same congressional district, the department said, would just compound the problem in the future.

Eroy Brown

Inmate testifies in his own defense

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — Prison inmate Eroy Edward Brown says his knowledge of illegal activities by Texas Department of Corrections officials almost cost him his life.

Brown, serving a 10-year sentence for burglary at the TDC unit in Huntsville, is on trial for capital murder in the April 4, 1981, drowning of Ellis Unit warden Wallace Pack. Prosecutors say they also may try Brown for the shooting death of prison farm manager Billy Max Moore.

Two fellow prisoners testified they saw Brown shoot and kill Moore and chase Pack into a nearby drainage ditch, where the warden was later found dead.

But Brown, 31, of Waco, testified he acted in self defense after the two officials threatened to kill him for speaking out about alleged illegal activities by Moore.

"I'll splatter your brains out all over the place here," Brown recalled Pack saying as the warden raised a gun to the inmate's head and cocked the trigger.

"I had the feeling he was going to kill me. When he cocked it I thought the warden was going to shoot me. I was scared," said Brown.

Brown said he knocked the warden's hand down and the gun discharged, hitting Brown in the foot. He said Pack started to raise his hand a second time and he knocked the pistol away and another shot fired.

The inmate testified he knocked the gun out of Pack's hand and the two men scrambled for a few minutes, until Brown got the gun and backed away from Pack and Moore.

Brown said earlier that day he commented in the presence of other inmates about helping Moore in alleged illegal activities.

The inmate said Moore had ordered state-owned tires to be put on his personal vehicle and vehicles of his friends. He also said that supervisor William Adams Jr. would take left-over tires and tubes and trade them in for money.

The inmate said he falsified records to show the tires and auto parts were being used on TDC vehicles, "because Mr. Moore asked me to."

Narcotics officer may bolster defense

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Defense attorneys say they will call a state narcotics officer to bolster their arguments three former McAllen policemen charged with beating a prisoner were provoked by a man difficult to subdue.

Robert Longoria, a Texas Department of Public Safety narcotics agent, was a state trooper in Hidalgo County at the time of the alleged brutality incident.

Defense lawyers indicated they will ask Longoria if the prisoner, Pedro Dennett, was difficult to subdue and provoked officers when transferred from McAllen to the county jail in Edinburg.

Special Prosecutor Ross Connealy of Washington, who rested his case Tuesday, has argued former officers Tom Carter, Jaime Contreras and Alfredo Saldana brutally and unnecessarily assaulted Dennett on Oct. 23, 1978.

White fighting GM's rebate plan

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — General Motors' "Let's Get Moving" rebate plan is headed to state court because Attorney General Mark White says it's a phony.

In a lawsuit filed Tuesday, White claims the rebate plan offered since Feb. 1 actually results in a savings of only 75 percent of the advertised rebates of $500, $750 or $2,000.

The attorney general said State District Judge Jerry Dellana had signed a temporary restraining order barring GM from discontinuing the plan in Texas in order to avoid the lawsuit.

Texas firms to share weapons contract

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two Texas industries will share in $2.7 billion in military weaponry contracts scheduled under President Reagan's proposed budget for the 1983 fiscal year that begins next Oct. 1.

General Dynamics of Fort Worth would make the airframe for the F-16, a single-seat, fixed-wing, high-performance fighter aircraft powered by a single F-100 engine.

Pratt & Whitney of East Hartford, Conn., would build the engine.

The multi-mission fighter, also known as the Falcon, is a light-weight multi-purpose fighter capable of performing over a broad spectrum of tactical air warfire tasks.

Federal jury says INS guards innocent

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Three Immigration and Naturalization Service guards charged with civil rights violations have been found innocent by a federal court jury.

The jury took three hours Tuesday to decide that INS guards Marcus Hopkins, Frank Gutierrez and Arturo Guzman did not deprive Cuban refugee Diosdada Ariosa-Ariosa of his rights in a beating incident July 1, 1980, at the INS detention center in El Paso.

McKnight feels Temple can win race

TYLER, Texas (AP) — Railroad Commissioner Buddy Temple is the "only man" who can raise the funds needed to defeat Gov. Bill Clements, says state Sen. Peyton McKnight.

McKnight, who withdrew from the gubernatorial race last week, said Temple could get the millions of dollars he was unable to raise.

"Money is the bottom line in the election and that is why I got out," he said. "I feel Buddy Temple is the only one who can win the election. He can raise the necessary funds."

Polish man denied visa to visit A&M

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — A Polish official scheduled to present his views on Poland's labor crisis to a Texas A&M student forum was denied a visa by the State Department, a university spokeswoman said.

Longin Pastusiak, deputy director of the Research Institute on Contemporary Capitalism in Warsaw, had accepted an invitation to speak at the university Friday, said Terry Quirk, chairwoman of A&M's Student Conference on National Affairs.

Farrah Fawcett fights for share of home she shared with Majors

Fawcett

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Farrah Fawcett says the $2.5 million home she lived in with actor Lee Majors during their marriage is joint property, even though he bought it before they were wed.

Testifying Tuesday in the estranged couple's court battle over who will get the home near Beverly Hills, the blond actress chronicled the early years of her Hollywood romance with Majors.

Miss Fawcett said she and Majors were discussing marriage within three months after they met in 1968, but it took them five years to make up their minds.

"We discussed whether we should or shouldn't spend our lives together, and where we would live was a major issue," she said.

Miss Fawcett said the couple invested $1.7 million on improvements to the home Majors bought months before they married.

Majors, who testified briefly to say the marriage has crumbled and no reconciliation was possible, contends he bought the house as a single man and it is his.

But Majors says he should have a share of Miss Fawcett's income from a $1.675 million contract with Faberge cosmetics. Miss Fawcett did a series of commercials for Faberge during the marriage, but the matter is complicated by the fact that the contract continued after the couple stopped living together.

The couple have been separated for nearly two years and have no children.

Miss Fawcett, star of NBC's movie "Murder in Texas" and the now-canceled "Charlie's Angels" series on ABC, and Majors, star of ABC's "The Fall Guy" and "The Six Million Dollar Man," seek assignment to a judge for the trial of a property settlement dispute, which is the last roadblock to final dissolution of the marriage.

Lawyers estimated the trial would last four days.

Carter

ELLIJAY, Ga. (AP) — Jimmy and Rosalynn Carter are building a log cabin in the northern Georgia mountains, according to a long-time friend and neighbor of the former president.

The home is alongside Turnip Town Creek, with a view of waterfalls and rapids, which Mrs. Carter loves. She also enjoys rhododendrons and mountain laurel, which are abundant in the area, said John Pope of Americus, who is in charge of construction.

Pope said the cabin is being built of hand-hewn logs.

The main floor will include a large living room, dining room and kitchen, all in one open room, and one bedroom with a bathroom.

Upstairs will be a sleeping loft for children, with a bathroom.

Also on the 20-acre tract will be a second building to house Secret Service agents who guard the Carters.

Asner

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — A plan promoted by Screen Actors Guild leader Ed Asner to unite SAG with the Screen Extras Guild was the subject of a protest by about 500 actors, including Charlton Heston and Robert Conrad.

The actors who picketed outside the SAG building Monday night claimed the merger will not help actors or extras and will hurt stunt men.

Asner, star of television's "Lou Grant," emerged from the SAG building where he was attending the weekly board meeting to talk with the protesters about the proposal.

The measure, which will be submitted to a vote soon, "would upgrade the extra to an actor's status," Asner said.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Archibald Cox, fired as President Richard Nixon's special prosecutor during the Watergate scandal, is retiring from full-time teaching at Harvard University because he is nearing 70, the school's mandatory retirement age.

Cox, who will be 70 on May 17, is a specialist in constitutional and labor law. He will continue to teach part-time at Harvard Law School this spring, the unuiversity announced Tuesday.

"I expect to keep busy," said Cox, who is also chairman of Common Cause.

Cox was fired as special prosecutor in the so-called "Saturday night massacre" on Oct. 20, 1973. On that night, Attorney General Elliot Richardson and his assistant, William D. Ruckelhaus, resigned after they refused to fire Cox.

Nation's music educators gather in San Antonio

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — An anticipated 5,000 delegates convene today at the 75th Music Educators National Conference to discuss declining resources and shrinking enrollments in the nation's music classes.

Conference president Mary Hoffman, a professor of music education at the University of Illinois, said a major topic of the four-day convention will be promotion of music as a lifelong learning process.

"Heretofore, music educators have been trained to teach the 5 to 18 year olds; to do that teaching in the classroom and within the schedule limitations of public and private schools.

Premier has more than he can handle

By GILLIAN WHITTAKER
Associated Press Writer

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Premier Andreas Papandreou has sought to put a nationalist stamp on his foreign policy during his first three months in office. The Socialist leader has abandoned, however, some of the more radical plans, both foreign and domestic, he had outlined before his election in October.

A widely shared sentiment among political analysts is that Papandreou, eager to take personal charge of every major reform effort, found himself overextended and the tasks too formidable.

Foreign policy changes made by the new government, swept into power with 48 percent of the vote, included openings to the Arab world, which Papandreou has courted with promises to act as its spokesman in Western Europe.

It has granted diplomatic status to the Athens office of the Palestine Liberation Organization and Papandreou warmly greeted PLO leader Yasser Arafat in Athens.

Papandreou also opened a Greek Embassy in Havana and, in an overture to the Eastern Bloc countries, has refused to condemn the Soviet role in Poland or endorse the European Common Market's resolution asking for sanctions against the Soviet Union and Poland.

He also has agreed to resume servicing Soviet naval supply vessels — a practice severely criticized by the United States in the past.

But the premier found himself either dropping or revising his major foreign-policy objectives.

Papandreou had campaigned on a platform to seek Greece's withdrawal from the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, hold a referendum on the country's continued membership in the Common Market and demand the gradual dismantling of U.S. military bases in Greece.

His performance at the NATO Defense Ministers meeting in December in Brussels, Belgium — where he dramatically demanded guarantees of Greek borders — was warmly applauded by the Greeks. Greece's relations with neighboring Turkey remain cool.

But the performance also drew charges from political foes that Papandreous was simply trying to score political points. Former conservative Finance Minister Miltiades Evert commented, "You can't have a foreign policy for domestic consumption."

It seems clear that Papandeou no longer intends to pull Greece out of NATO. His call for an referendum on Common Market membership has run into the opposition of President Constantine Caramanlis, the man who engineered Greece's entry into the community and who has the contitutional power to call such a vote.

The U.S. bases issue has not even come to the negotiatng table, amid reports that neither side is pushing for talks.

The premier's major foreign policy headache remains the country's relations with NATO-member Turkey, which have worsened to the point of openly expressed fears of war. The premier attempted to calm such fears last year by accusing the news media and Turkey of creating a crisis atmosphere.

Attacking Papandreou's stand on Turkey, the leader of the opposition conservative New Democracy Party, Evanghelos Averoff Tositsas, said the premier was "playing with fire."

Other opposition politicians accused the premier of using foreign policy issues to distract public attention from the slow progress in the domestic economic and social reforms he had promised.

The premier has granted wage increases and inflation-indexed salary adjustments to the lower-income brackets. At the same time, he has been obliged to offer various incentives to the business world in an attempt to revive flagging investment.

But his much-heralded "socialization" policy to put certain key sectors of industry under stringent state control has fizzled. Instead, he has appointed committees of union representatives and local authority members to monitor board decisions.

Critics have said there isn't much left to nationalize in a country where 90 percent of the banks, 60 percent of insurance companies and most public utilities already are under state control.

The major changes of these early months of Papandreou's premiership have taken place in internal administration. He has systematically restructured the public administration, security forces and key public sectors in an effort seen by political analysts as being aimed at assuring himself of political and military support.

Califano: federalism is threat

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr. says President Reagan's proposed new federalism is a serious threat to race relations.

Reagan's plan to turn over most of the federal government's health and social programs to state and local governments is "a wolf...hidden in sheep's clothing," the former Carter administration Cabinet member said Monday at a Women's National Democratic Club luncheon.

Proposal is under fire

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's renewed proposal to eliminate the federally funded Legal Services Corp. is under fire from the president of the American Bar Association.

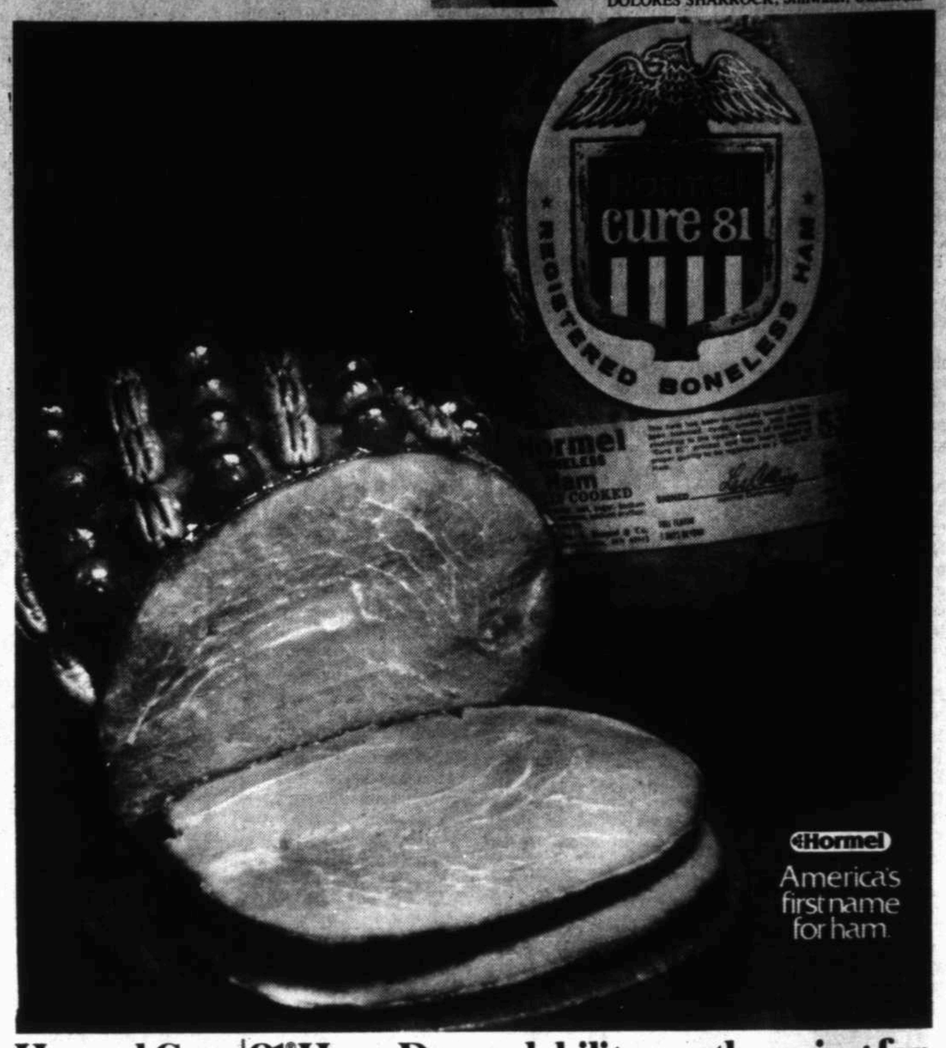

"That would effectively deny access to justice to the bulk of this nation's poor," David R. Brink said in a statement Monday.

Reagan asked for the phase-out of the legal aid program for the poor in the budget plan unveiled over the weekend. He made a similar request last year, but Congress agreed only to reduce the program's funds.

Books help afficionados beat video game blues

By RICHARD T. PIENCIAK
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — There's trouble in Video Game City — code books. Memorize the manual and you'll get hours of playing time for just one quarter.

More and more video buffs have been exchanging techniques for pattern playing, sending arcade owners, who grossed an estimated $5 billion last year, to the edge of financial hyperspace.

Now the owners face a new problem — a growing number of best-selling paperbacks by video game wizards that serve as how-to manuals.

"Of course it's going to hurt business," said Irving Tauve, co-owner of Manchester Music, a New Hampshire company that owns about 700 video games. "The longer a person plays on a quarter the less quarters I get."

THERE ARE at least five paperbacks on the market: Signet's "Mastering Pac-Man" by blackjack expert Ken Uston; Bantam's "How To Master the Video Games;" Pocket Books's "How To Win At Pac-Man;" Simon & Schuster's "How To Beat the Video Games;" and Warner Books' "Scoring Big at Pac-Man."

The books range in price from $1.95 to $3.95.

"Theoretically, you could have a user's manual for each of these games," Uston said.

The original press run on Uston's book was 500,000, and according to Signet spokeswoman Fern Leiber Edison, store orders before the book was released required printing of another 250,000 copies. After two weeks in bookstores, Uston's book has climbed to No. 5 on B. Dalton's mass market best-seller list.

Bantam's entry, written by 19-year-old New Yorker Tom Hirschfeld, has sold about 650,000 copies and recently appeared on The New York Times mass-market paperback list.

Pac-Man has received so much literary attention because it lends itself to more thorough analysis than attack and reflex games. Uston said maze games like Pac-Man require "the most skill, about 90 percent, and only 10 percent hand-and-eye coordination." Attack games range from 90 percent hand-and-eye coordination to 50-50, he added.

Uston turned his attention to Pac-Man while awaiting the outcome of court appeals on his banishment from casinos in Atlantic City. He is an expert blackjack "counter" who can calculate the chances of a high or low card turning up after several decks of cards have been played.

Uston's book is the most elaborate on Pac-Man, still one of the most popular of all arcade games. He provides diagrams of patterns for the original arcade games, gives advice on how to handle new programs and tips on how to play the various table models, some of which look, sound and play like the larger arcade versions.

"The manufacturers are so worried that everyone's going to master these games," said Uston, during an interview conducted recently over a Pac-Man board at a Broadway arcade.

"But look, I just messed up," he said as his Pac-Man was caught by a pursuing monster. Until he was distracted by a crowd which had gathered around his board, he had effortlessly reached a score in excess of 50,000. Novices have to scramble to get 15,000.

USTON, WHO is writing a second book on arcade games, doesn't consider himself an expert at playing, just at analyzing. At a recent arcade party held to promote Coleco's new line of portable, self-contained games, including Pac-Man, Uston brought along Raymond Chan, a 20-year-old college student from San Francisco.

HUMOR IN UNIFORM

What's in a name?

Special from Reader's Digest

When I worked for the Navy at North Island, San Diego, we were instructed to answer the phone with our divison name followed by our own surname. One day, just around noon, I answered my phone: "Avionics Division, Eaton." A man apologetically replied, "Oh, I'm sorry. I guess it IS lunchtime," and quickly hung up.

As a young Navy bride during World War II, I soon became accustomed to my gung-ho mate calling the floor the deck, the walls the bulkheads, etc. The magic spell was broken, though, one night in a very intimate bedroom scene when I suddenly complained of a cramp in my leg and he asked, without hesitation, "Port or starboard?"

I was in the Army and stationed in Mainz, West Germany. One day, I noticed a short article in the newspaper Stars and Stripes entitled "Hell Freezes Over."

A few days later, I saw the same article on the company bulletin board with a note attached that read: "The re-enlistment sergeant would like to see all the men who promised to re-up when hell froze over."

My next-door neighbor, a retired Marine Corps gunnery sergeant and a combat veteran of World War II, Korea and Vietnam, is a staunch conservative Republican. His college-age son, a liberal Democrat, was gently chiding him about his political views. "You mean the Democrats just don't send you,?" the son needled.

"Quite the contrary," replied the old sarge. "Roosevelt sent me to Okinawa, Truman sent me to Korea, and Kennedy and Johnson sent me to Vietnam."

As a WAF assigned to recruiting duty in Atlanta, I was fortunate to find living quarters in a beautiful Southern home. The aristocratic elderly lady who owned the house lived alone and seemed to have limited communication with the outside world. However, she was always on hand to look me over and wave goodbye as I left for work. Conscious of her watchful eye, I was careful to keep my WAF uniforms well-pressed.

When the second month's rent was due, I handed her a check, which she promptly handed back. "But why?" I asked in panic. "Do you want me to move?"

"Why, no, honey," she answered warmly. "It's just that I've watched you go to work for an entire month wearing the same dress, and it's about time that you had a new one. Take the rent money and splurge."

The men going through basic Army training in Louisiana found daily conditions and practice maneuvers very strenuous. On one occasion, as a large group inched their way along, flat on their bellies, through wet mud and high weeds, the air above them was raked with simulated gunfire. One man suddenly leaped to his feet and started to run.

The sergeant in charge screamed, "Cease fire!" and bawled to the private to halt. "Do you realize those could be REAL bullets?" he railed.

"Maybe sir," came the quick reply. "But," the private added, pointing a shaking finger at his former position, "that was a sure-enough real live snake!"

"The mall" is the store and the observation comes directly from the pages of the Tri City Times. Mrs. Penland, a 43-year-old grandmother, is a correspondent for the paper.

In another column, she told the public: "It snowed plum up to Bobby Slaton's fruit of the looms in Anniston Wednesday night."

WASHINGTON — The White House announced Tuesday that Edwin W. Thomas will leave his post as assistant to presidential counselor Edwin Meese III on March 1.

Thomas, 50, will move to San Francisco, where he has been named administrator of the General Services Administration region 9 offices.

Thomas says he intended only a brief tenure in Washington.

"Basically, I have put in my year here. California always has had a greater pull for me than the power of Washington government," he said Monday.

Thomas, a long-time associate of President Reagan, is the second San Diegan to leave a top White House job. The first was Robert M. Garrick, deputy counselor to the president, who left late last year.

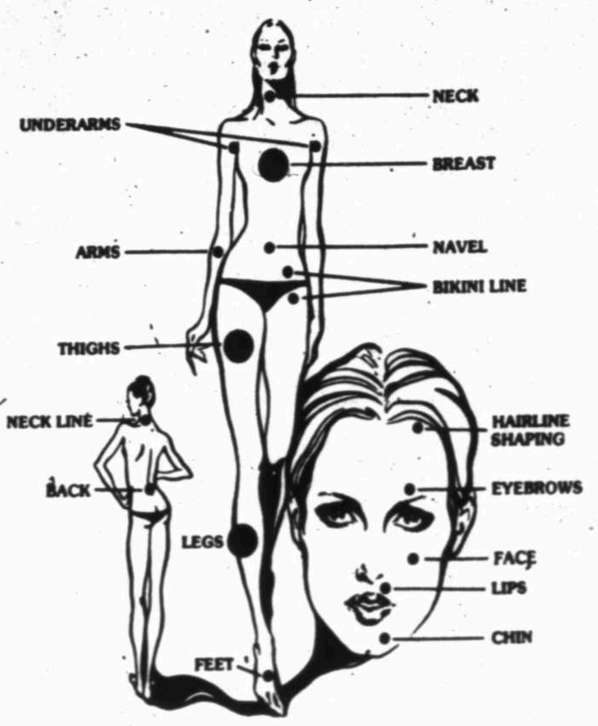

Both Thomas and Garrick were hired by Meese.

Only Marvelous Marv missing from Banquet

BY TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Three-time Indianapolis 500 winner Johnny Rutherford told Al Unser he'd have to wait another year before he could get his fourth 500 victory...Texas Rangers outfielder Billy Sample was still moaning that one-time Midland Cub Kurt Seibert got "all my bonus money"...master-of-ceremonies Bobby Bragan reminisced about the good old days when his teammates included San Diego Manager Dick Williams and Chicago Cub farm director Gordon Goldsberry...

John Cox, assistant to Chicago Cub GM Dallas Green, was presented a latch to the infamous Cubs Stadium cooler in memory of his days as Midland GM...Ernie Stautner, the Doomsday architect who urges such mild-mannered characters as Randy White, Ed Jones and Harvey Martin to get mean, promised the Cowboys would be back and adds they'd never been away if John Dutton hadn't missed that last game...Williams kept asking if anybody had heard anything new on Ozzie Smith...

The only thing missing was Marv Throneberry moving in from the wings at the evening's end to steal the show. But it wasn't one of those lite beer commercials after all. The fourth annual Midland Sports Banquet at Green Tree Country Club Tuesday night just seemed like it.

THE CELEBRITIES were all there and so was another capacity crowd to rub elbows. The only no-show was Houston catcher Alan Ashby, who begged off because of emergency surgery to his brother, but the Astros couldn't have sent a better pinch hitter than batting instructor Deacon Jones, the first Black in Cooperstown, baseball's Hall of Fame, who provided one of the evening's high points.

Danny Darwin, who may be the Rangers' answer to Rich Gossage, was there and so were the customary unannounced celebs...Houston running back Earl Campbell paying a return visit, St. Louis Cardinal center Tom Brahaney, former TCU-Philadelphia Eagle great Don Looney, Longhorn Team owner Bobby Hillin and Seibert and Mark Holtz, the new voice of the Rangers broadcasting team, which will be seen and heard in West Texas this year.

One liners were a dime a dozen...most of them delivered by Bragan, the former major league manager who said "I've been fired so many times, I keep getting calls from Remington and Winchester."..."The latest Aggie joke...Jackie Sherrill"...On John Cox's many duties in his years with the Chicago Cubs as assistant GM, farm director, assistant to the president, special scout..."Now they says he's Dallas Green's caddy."..."Midland and Chicago have been associated 11 years. They deserve each other."...

RUTHERFORD on last year's forgettable year for the Chaparral team, "Last year we discovered to finish first, you must first finish."...Al Unser on his wait until next year warning from Johnny, "I've got a surprise for him (Rutherford)"...

Deacon Jones on rumors that pitcher Don Sutton, acquired from Los Angeles prior to the 1981 season, "cheated" by doctoring the ball. "I always thought so too, but I found out he doesn't cheat when he came over to our side."...

Good field, no-hit first baseman Goldsberry, "I remember Bragan always told his pitchers, 'don't hit the ball to him, but don't walk him.'"

Rutherford said he and Chaparral designer Jim Hall made a special effort to make this year's Banquet, because that's the way they started 1980, the year the team won Indy, all the other 500s and the racing championship for the year. Rutherford, Hall and Unser made a special trip in from Phoenix where they are getting ready for the season's first big race in late March.

BACK WHEN Sample was a collegian at little James Madison in Virginia and Seibert was one of the east's big stars at Clemson, Billy recalled Kurt "was all we ever heard about. Then he was drafted in the third round and I was drafted 10th and he got all my bonus money." Then, he grinned, "but I got to the majors first."...

Cox will never live it down, his first year with Midland as GM when in midwinter he checked to see if the lock on the Cubs Stadium cooler was fixed and locked himself inside for five hours, to be discovered and rescued only because he was missed from a 10 p.m. sports telecast...This time it was Bragan who blew his cover after John had prepared Goldsberry on the flight to Midland by reminiscing about his "masterful publicity stunt" as Midland GM.

Abilene, Permian keep pressure on San Angelo

Abilene High and Odessa Permian are both keeping the pressure on District 5-5A's second half basketball leading San Angelo Bobcats after victories Tuesday night.

Abilene High, the one the Rebels and Bulldogs of Midland fear the most, ran over Odessa High 80-62 behind the one-two punch of Shannon Daniel with 19 and Brett Enzor with 18. Odessa High's Tommy Stahl led all scorers with 25 and Jimmy Gilliland had 14. AHS is now 3-1 in the second half and Odessa High is 0-4.

Permian, also 3-1 and just one step behind the 4-0 Bobcats, won a narrow 42-40 decision over Abilene Cooper, who fell to 2-2 with the Lee Rebels. Mike Woolley led the way with 22 points. Scott Youngblut pace Cooper with 10 points.

Bulldogs fall to Angelo

Midland loses 4th in last 5 games

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Ever since the end of the first half of the District 5-5A race, Midland High has been in a tail spin that has seen only one victory. Tuesday night the Bulldogs dropped their fourth decision in their last five games, a 67-62 loss against San Angelo at Chaparral Center.

It was a close contest from the first quarter tipoff until the final buzzer with the score knotted 10 times. But, despite the closeness of the battle, there were only two lead changes the entire night.

The Bobcats and Bulldogs alternated buckets for the first four minutes of play with MHS tying the score for the third time at 6-6 with 4:10 left in the quarter. San Angelo then slowly built up the biggest lead of the half, 17-11 with 40 seconds remaining. The Bulldogs cut the advantage by two with a pair of free throws by forward Don Sharnowski, two seconds away from the end of the frame.

The Bobcats struck first in the second quarter on a 15-footer by guard Tal Jackson to return to the six point edge but lost it when Bulldog postman Preston Robertson scored from under basket to tie the game for the fourth time at 27-27.

Both teams added two buckets before the half came to a close with the game tied at 31-31.

Seventeen seconds into the third quarter, the Bulldogs took the lead for the first time on a 15-foot shot by postman Jim Gunnels. San Angelo answered with tie No. 7 when Jack Casner hit one from 15 feet to bring the score to 33-33. From there on, the Bulldogs took the edge and had it as high as six points, 45-39, with 2:20 left in the frame.

Before the third quarter came to a close, San Angelo managed to tie the game when San Angelo's Casner canned a long shot with 11 seconds remaining. Bulldog guard Barr Bolger hit the tie-breaker from 18 feet for a 49-48 score.

In the first minutes of the fourth quarter, the Bulldogs seemed to be on their way to victory as the two-point lead increased to five, 55-50, when Doug Hixon came in to shoot a pair of free throws for Robertson who was injured while being fouled.

Hixon canned both shots with 4:03 left to play. Ten seconds later the game was tied. San Angelo's Lorand White broke loose on a fast break to make it 55-52 with 3:57 and in the process Casner was fouled. Casner hit his first free throw, but missed the second. Bobcat Hercules Miller came away with the rebound and was fouled and cashed in with two more free throws to tie the game for the ninth time.

For nearly two minutes the match remained in limbo. The Bulldogs broke the tie when Robertson returned to the game to can a five-footer with 3:35 left to play and left the game for good 23 seconds later when he collected his fifth personal foul.

San Angelo took the lead with 2:01 left to play at 59-58 and didn't look back from their as the Bobcats went on to win by the 67-62 count.

Bobcat Lorand White led all scorers with 21 points while teammates Jackson and Miller added 13 and 12 points respectively. MHS got 20 points from Robertson and Gunnels and added another 10 from Sharnowski.

The loss, for all practical purposes, eliminated the Bulldogs' hopes of winning a portion of the second half crown, yet, in a way, may have helped them in the long run. A victory over San Angelo would have left the Bobcats and Abilene High, an 80-62 victor over Odessa High Tuesday, in a tie for the title. A tie between San Angelo, AHS or Midland Lee, would eliminate the Bulldogs from the playoffs.

If San Angelo can hold on and win the outright title, or tie with any team other than Midland Lee or Abilene High (the two teams that tied MHS for the first half conference title), then there will be a playoff at the end of the regular season to determine the 5-5A representative to the State Playoffs. If AHS or Lee should tie for the second half title, then Midland High is eliminated.

San Angelo (67): Tal Jackson, 4-5-4-13; Hercules Miller, 5-2-3-12; Lorand White, 8-5-3-21; Jack Carsner, 3-3-3-9; Jeff Kasner, 4-1-4-9; Augie Alcala, 0-1-1-1; Henry Green, 1-0-0-2; Robby Jenkins, 0-0-0-0. Totals: 25-17-18-67

Midland High (62): Raymond Parker, 1-0-4-2; Marc Noland, 0-0-4-0; Barr Bolger, 1-2-1-4; Don Sharnowski, 3-4-0-10; Scott Louderback, 0-0-4-0; Preston Robertson, 9-2-5-20; Jim Gunnels, 8-4-4-20; Dave McFarland, 0-0-0-0; Doug Hixon, 2-2-2-6; David Stockton, 0-0-0-0. Totals: 24-14-24-62.

Rebels nip Steers, 61-60

BIG SPRING — In the space of six seconds here Tuesday night, Midland Lee's Steve Cherryhomes played the role of goat and hero, but fortunately for the Rebels it was the latter name that Cherryhomes brought home after a 61-60 cage victory over the Big Spring Steers.

With six seconds left in the game and Lee down by two points, Cherryhomes went to the line, sank the first charity toss, but missed the second, leaving the Rebels behind 60-59. However, Lee's Alvin Dunson and Big Spring's Robert Rubio were called for a tie ball on the rebound.

Dunson won the tipoff, but it went deep in the corner to Andre Van Buren, who had to make a desperate long shot as the clock wound down. The ball didn't go in, but Cherryhomes was there for a tip-in to preserve the victory for Lee as the 18-10 Rebels evened their District 5-5A record to 2-2 and kept their hopes alive in the second half race. However, San Angelo still owns a two-game lead over Lee after a win over Midland High Tuesday.

"I thought Steve Cherryhomes did a great job off the bench," said Lee coach Paul Stueckler. "It was not so much his last shot, but his defensive play. And Olen Smith really gave us a lift when he came in for Kenneth Brown, who had fouled out."

Van Buren led Lee with 17 points and Dunson canned 15. Brown, despite fouling out in the fourth period, added 10 to the cause. Cherryhomes had only four points in the game, but he got the last three for Lee and that was the difference in a close game with the Steers, who now are 1-3 in the second half despite playing nearly everyone close.

Jearald Wrightsil, who fouled out with four minutes left to play, led the Steers with 16 points while Kevin Watson had 12 and John Green 10. Watson's free throw with 18 seconds left in the game gave Big Spring a 60-58 lead.

Lee led by one point, 28-27, at the half, but the Steers went on a 20-point scoring binge in the third period to take a 47-40 lead. Dunson, who scored 11 of his 15 points in the second half, helped to bring the Rebels within distance and Cherryhomes then became the man in the right place at the end.

Lee connected on 24 of 54 shots from the field while Big Spring hit 26 of 55, but Lee won it at the charity stripe with 13 points while Big Spring had eight.

Lee now enters the meat of its schedule as they end the second half against Odessa Permian, Abilene High and Midland High, but all the games are at Chaparral Center. Lee would have to win all three of those games to equal their first half record of 5-2.

Last Friday, Lee lost to Abilene Cooper on a last second shot, so now Lee has its lucky shoes back on.

Midland Lee (61): Barry Blackwell, 1-2-4; Randy Pepper, 2-0-4; Alvin Dunson, 6-3-15; Andre Van Buren, 7-3-17; Kenneth Brown, 4-2-10; Olen Smith, 3-1-7; Steve Cherryhomes, 1-2-4. Totals: 24-13-61.

Big Spring (60): Robert Rubio, 3-2-8; Blake Rosson, 3-1-7; Kevin Watson, 5-2-12; Jerald Wrightsil, 8-0-16; John Green, 5-0-10; Tony Randle, 1-0-2; Jinx Valenzuela, 1-2-4; Garry Harris, 0-1-1. Totals: 26-8-60.

Coach rebutts accusation

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Florida State basketball Coach Joe Williams rebutted an allegation by a former Seminole Tuesday that he arranged for the player to receive a "going-away" present when it became apparent his career might be ended by an injury.

Pernell Tookes, appearing before a special university committee investigating allegations of medical mistreatment in the FSU basketball program, said that he quit the team in January after Williams told him to lie about the seriousness of a knee injury.

Williams said he did tell Tookes that the owner of a clothing store wanted to see him, but he said he didn't know why the man wanted to see the player.

Tookes was the second FSU senior to leave the team within a month, saying that their injuries had not been handled properly. The five-member committee was formed after the first, James Bozeman, left the squad saying he had been given drugs so that he could play despite being hurt.

Tookes alleged that he had received incompetent care for a pre-season knee injury and that when it appeared that he might not play any more, Williams arranged for Tookes to receive a business suit the player claimed to be wearing at Tuesday's hearing.

"He knew I wasn't coming back so he was gonna get me a suit for a going-away present," Tookes told the committee. "Besides that, he wanted me to lie about my leg, saying the doctor said I could no longer play on it."

Williams, who also appeared before the committee last week, listened to a tape of Tookes' accusations Tuesday and then responded to the former player's statement.

Smith agrees to trade

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Shortstop Ozzie Smith has agreed to sign with the St. Louis Cardinals, completing a deal that sends Garry Templeton to San Diego, according to a published report today.

As part of the deal, Smith, the Padres' All-Star shortstop, has waived his no-trade provision in the one-year contract he signed a year ago.

In turn, the Cardinals will continue his no-trade clause, allow an arbitrator to decide whether Smith should get $450,000 or $750,000 and the Padres will make General Manager Jack McKeon available for questioning during arbitration, The San Diego Union said in today's editions.

By getting Smith to agree, the two clubs complete a series of conditional deals made Dec. 8-9 at the winter meetings in Florida.

Smith, 26, was to fly to St. Louis today with his attorney Ed Gottlieb to finalize the contract.

On Dec.8, the Padres sent right-hander Steve Mura and minor league left-hander Alan Olmsted to St. Louis for Sixto Lezcano, a right-handed, power-hitting outfielder, and Luis DeLeon, a rookie right-handed reliever.

Only one starter missing from 1980 champs...

But departed Griffith big difference

An AP Sports Analysis
By JOHN NELSON

It may henceforth be known as the "Case of the Missing Ballplayer."

Two years after his departure to professional basketball's Utah Jazz, the University of Louisville still misses Darrell Griffith.

The cause of Coach Denny Crum's woes has been found. It can't possibly be anything else. Griffith, who scored 2,333 points in his four years at Louisville, is the only starter missing from the Cardinals' 1980 national championship team.

Derek Smith, Rodney McCray, Wiley Brown and Jerry Eaves remain, but Darrell is gone, replaced by a hard-working sophomore named Lancaster Gordon.

Case closed. The mystery has been solved.

"Look at the best teams around the country," Crum says, pointing to some very impressive circumstantial evidence. "DePaul has Terry Cummings. Virginia has Ralph Sampson. North Carolina has James Worthy and Sam Perkins. All of those teams have a superstar. Even Indiana had Isiah Thomas.

"IF YOU have that kind of superstar, like a Darrell Griffith, it makes everybody else on the team that much better. They give other players confidence, make them loose and relaxed.

"The players all know they have somebody that can carry them over the hard spots."

And it has been painfully apparent in the two years since their national title that the Louisville Cardinals have been unable to replace Griffith, an All-American guard.

A pattern of hard evidence supporting the "Missing Ballplayer" theory began to accumulate last season, when Louisville lost five of its first six games and seven of its first nine. Crum made some lineup changes and went on to a 21-9 season that included a stretch of 15 consecutive victories. The Cardinals won the Metro Conference tournament, earning an automatic NCAA playoff berth, but they lost in the first round to Arkansas 74-73 on a 50-foot shot by U.S. Reed at the buzzer.

With five games left on the schedule this season, the Cardinals have a 13-8 record and are in much worse shape than a year ago, when they already had begun their turnaround. They could earn an automatic NCAA tournament berth by winning the conference tournament again, but this year it's at Memphis, Tenn., instead of Louisville. The alternative is an at-large bid to the playoffs, a distinction usually granted only to 20-game winners.

"THE NCAA is using that computerized system to pick at-large teams now," Crum says. "If you play at DePaul, for instance, and lose, it's supposed to count more than beating Podunk University at home. And there's nobody in the country that's played as tough as schedule as we have."

Besides playing highly regarded Metro Conference rivals Memphis State and Virginia Tech this season, the Cardinals' schedule also has included Oregon State, DePaul, Missouri and Virginia. Unfortunately for Louisville, they all have been losses.

"Look at Indiana. They went to the tournament with nine losses last year and won it all," Crum says. "Unless we just completely fall apart at the end, we have a good chance to get in there."

The remainder of Louisville's schedule includes conference games at Cincinnati and St. Louis and another at home against Memphis State. The Cardinals wind up at home against Cleveland State and Marquette.

The Cardinals have lost four of their past six games, including losses to Virginia Tech and Virginia on consecutive nights, a loss at Florida State and an overtime defeat at Memphis State the night before beating St. John's, N.Y., at home last Sunday.

"Sometimes you mix up a cake, and it doesn't taste quite right, and you can't tell why," Crum says. "I felt I had our best players in the game, but we just weren't winning."

CRUM PUT Brown back in the starting lineup at center against Tulane last Wednesday, while Scooter McCray sat down.

"Wiley doesn't choke. He doesn't feel pressure. He just plays hard. He may not have the statistics of another player, but we just seemed to play better as a team with him in there," Crum says. "For sure, we've played better defense.

"We've played very well our last three games. We played well at Memphis State (a 74-65 overtime loss) and could have won in regulation with some free throws at the end. Our most serious problems this year have been inconsistency off the bench and free throw shooting.

"I guess this is one of the things that's so misleading about team sports," Crum says. "The best players don't always make the best team. Someone else might blend in. Someone else might have that one ingredient, like enthusiasm or leadership, that won't show up in the statistics."

You mean, someone else might be a player like Darrell Griffith?

Rogers: Not necessarily goodwill envoy

By RANDY GRAY
Copley News Service

The new unofficial U.S. golf ambassador is not one to seek out ways to spread good will.

Bill Rogers would not win a popularity contest in Australia, for instance. If he goes back there this year, he might have to play the part of villain, a role he seems ill-suited for.

It was in last year's Australian Open that he charged down the stretch to seize the title from Aussie hero Greg Norman.

In fact, Rogers took almost half of his $50,000 in purses last year out of foreign countries, as he won seven tournaments on four continents, leaving a trail of local victims along the way.

ROGERS HAD the lack of diplomacy in a series of exhibition matches with Japanese star Isao Aoki to beat him in Japan and lose to him in the Philippines, instead of the other way around.

Even in the United States, he has been criticized for traipsing around the globe, neglecting business at home.

"People around the world want the British Open winner in their tournament," Rogers says. "I'm in it for the money. It's not because I want to win titles all over the world; it's not that I want to be a globetrotter or an international star. Basically, it's the financial benefits.

But Rogers is also a believer in international golf and variety in formats. One of his most cherished accomplishments is making the U.S. Ryder Cup team, which competes against Britain. And he's helping develop a similar competition against Japan.

"We've become spoiled here, and we don't realize they play good golf in other countries, too," he says. "You've got to play well to win anywhere.

"Here, we go from the Phoenix Open to the Byron Nelson and get a different winner each time and keep going and going and going and going.

"We need more variety on the tour."

ROGERS ADMITS he has no love for TPA commissioner Deane Beman, who, he says, is against change of any kind. Beman has even made efforts to scrap the Tournament of Champions, which brings together only the winners of the previous tournaments.

Rogers didn't become a star overnight, but when he started closing in on it, it didn't take him long to arrive.

He won it once, the Bob Hope in 1978, before last year, where he finished fifth in the money winnings and was voted PGA and MONY player of the year.

This despite the fact he missed five straight cuts early in the year.

"My grip was out of kilter and I didn't realize it," says Rogers. "When I changed back to the way I'd been holding the club before, my game started coming around.

"In this business, we've got to make the adjustments or starve."

Kentucky's Bowie sits out season

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — University of Kentucky center Sam Bowie, one of the nation's top college basketball players before a leg fracture sidelined him last summer, said Tuesday he would not attempt a comeback this season.

"It looks like the season's gotten away from me," the 7-foot-1 junior said. "I don't think there's enough time for me to come back and get into the flow of the game."

Fem boxer sidelined

MARQUETTE, Mich. (AP) — A federal judge on Tuesday refused to order officials of the Lansing Golden Gloves boxing tournament to allow a 19-year-old Ionia County woman to fight. In an eight-page opinion released in Marquette, U.S. District Judge Wendell Miles dissolved a temporary restraining order issued earlier.

The flyweight competition had been suspended until after Jill Lafler's attorneys had a chance to argue her case in court. Miles said there are differences between male and female anatomies and "it is unrealistic to believe that women could enter the sport of boxing and operate under the same rules with no detrimental effects on the safety of the participants."

Colleges busy inking WT gridders

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Writer

Four Midland football players were in the process of joining the rolls of college football teams today during the national signing date of high school players, and another is expected to sign Thursday or Friday.

Midland High's Wally Kleine signed with Notre Dame after his decision last week while Midland Lee was sending three players to the colleges. Lee fullback-defensive end Calvin Riggs chose Texas Tech, but the formal signing was not due until 4 p.m. today. Lee wide receiver Kenneth Brown opted for Oklahoma State 8 a.m. today while Lee linebacker Terry Thompson signed with the Aggies of Texas A&M at noon.

Those were the only locals who were on the dotted line today, but Midland High's giant defensive guard Joe Goebel will sign with UCLA in the next day or two. Midland High's Wesley Williams has already signed with Navarro Junior College.

On the area front, Andrews' quarterback Keith Brooks, one of the state's blue chippers, inked with Southern Methodist today in a noon signing.

Kleine, the 6-8, 245-pound tight end at MHS, was an All-District choice this year while leading his team in receiving. Kleine was recruited by many schools including Penn State and Texas.

Riggs was one of the most versatile players in District 5-5A, earning All-District honors on both offense and defense. Riggs rushed for over 1,700 yards in the last two years at Lee. Last week Riggs had narrowed his college choices to Tech and Oklahoma State, but ended up with the Red Raiders.

Thompson, 220, was another All-District defensive pick and was widely sought. His choice came down to A&M and Texas in the final week with the Aggies getting the nod.

Brown, a lanky 6-6 wide receiver who also plays basketball, was a unanimous All-District offensive choice. He was also a defensive safety at Lee. Brown chose the Cowboys of Oklahoma State over Rice.

Goebel, another All-District defensive choice, has not formally signed, but has committed to UCLA. He will sign probably Thursday or Friday, depending on UCLA's flight commitments.

Williams, 5-5A's leading rusher and All-District pick, signed earlier with Navarro Junior College. Junior College athletes are not bound by NCAA signing dates.

There are several other Midland athletes who are expected to join the college ranks at smaller schools in the near future.

Andrews' Brooks was highly sought by the college ranks after setting several records for the Mustangs.

Teaff hopes to cash in today

By The Associated Press

Baylor football coach Grant Teaff, a born-again Christian who teaches at a church-affiliated school, doesn't figure to know much about poker. But Teaff hopes to have a good-sized stack of blue chips at his disposal before today is over.

These blue-chips, however, have nothing to do with cards — they are high school seniors generally considered the best football players in the state. And today is national signing day, when those players are allowed to commit themselves to a college beginning at 8 a.m.

Teaff may not sign large numbers of blue-chippers today, but two of the state's best schoolboy quarterbacks have already said they want to play for the Bears next year.

Angleton's Tom Muecke and Cody Carlson of San Antonio Churchill both were listed on the Dallas Times Herald's Blue Chip roster, picked by the nine Southwest Conference coaches, and were ranked one-two at quarterback.

Flatlanders pass out Ski Week awards

By HERR ENG BOEN

The Flatlanders Ski Club will divide the spoils of Texas Ski Week 7:30 p.m. Wednesday at the Midland-Odessa Symphony Hall at Air Terminal after bringing home 36 silver and bronze Nastar medals from Copper Mountain.

Some 56 Permian Basin participants help win the medals and it marked the fourth straight year the Flatlanders have come home from Ski Week slopes bedecked with honors.

Fourteen Texas clubs and 1100 Texans competed with the Flatlanders placing third in the small club division of the Texas Cup Race, a competition designed so that even beginners can run the course.

Flatlander Tomy Casbeer was rated the Most Improved Skier during Texas Ski Week...

AFTER SKIING on 45 inches of snow at Taos a couple of weeks ago, the snowstorm encountered between Espagnola and Clines Corners on the retreat to Texas was a dandy.

It was one of those where you keep they guy in front of you within 50 yards so you know where the road goes. It was so bad we would have stopped at Santa Fe, if the roads hadn't been sanded and clear in spots. Presumably the worst was over. A few miles out of Santa Fe, too late to turn back, it was discovered the worst was yet to come.

We vowed if we ever reached Clines Corners, we'd wait out the storm, no matter how many days it took. Five miles before Clines Corners, it actually did clear up. And, naturally, it was presumed the storm wasn't really all that bad until the New Mexico ski report came in last Thursday. The 45 inches at Taos was now 89 inches, which is good news for skiers.

In fact, most ski resorts in NM and southern Colorado seem to have respectable numbers as the season heads into its stretch months.

SIERRA BLANCA is up over 60 inches, Wolf Creek has surpassed the 100-inch mark and Purgatory and Telluride should have good skiing, excellent if there's a topping of powder.

Still, Utah seems to be the top spot for skiing in the Rockies with several ski areas going well over 100 inches. One ski vagabond at Taos informed that in an area adjacent to Park City, the powder snow was so deep, "They were actually had to use snorkel so they could see their way." Of course, the inform dropped dead before reached the top of the lift. But would a dying man lie?

The first visit to Taos in two seasons revealed some changes. An enlarged restaurant and menu services the Kuchina Basin on the backside and the hidden resort that shunned publicity and crowds is getting ambitious.

There are still no long lift lines, even on a busy weekend, but there's talk of expansion and the Ski Valley is expanding. Then, too, there's the helicopter service between Taos, Red River and Angel Fire on weekends...

Nuggets in trouble

DENVER (AP) — Two owners of the Denver Nuggets franchise say the club's finances concern them, and while they believe the Nuggets will be in Denver next year, they say the time has come for the National Basketball Association to lend a hand to some of its franchises.

"There's at least a half-dozen franchises in difficulty and Denver is one," said Bill Newland, a Denver businessman.

Newland did not name the other franchises that are in trouble. but it has been reported that franchises in Utah, San Diego, Houston, Cleveland, Kansas City, Indianapolis and Washington are feeling the pinch of high operating costs and low attendance figures.

In championship bargaining

Broker power counts as much as punch power

An AP Sports Analysis
By ED SCHUYLER JR.

"It hasn't even come down on me yet," said Davey Moore, the newest of professional boxing's 27 world champions.

Moore was explaining that the realization of being a champion hadn't hit home.

There are others who feel he shouldn't even have gotten a title shot in his ninth pro bout. But he did, and he took full advantage, knocking down Tidashi Mihara of Japan four times and stopping him in the sixth round to win the World Boxing Association's junior middleweight title Feb. 2 at Tokyo.

Moore's victory underscores the influence of boxing's power brokers. It's doubtful Moore would have been ranked among the top 10 junior middleweights if he wasn't tied to promoter Bob Arum, who has a say with the WBA. He wasn't ranked by the World Boxing Council, which designates junior middleweights as super welterweights, but he could have been if he were connected with Don King, who holds a key to the WBC.

BUT HOORAY for Davey Moore. He got a break in a game where breaks often are as important as ability ... and he cashed in.

Moore is a 21-year-old New Yorker, who has had two years of college and intends to get a degree in business administration. He doesn't seem to be fooling himself about boxing, a game which attracts it share of fools.

Ask Moore, who is managed by Leon Washington, about his connection with Arum, and he says: "True, true. It helps. I will say that."

Moore signed with Arum promotionally, along with several other young fighters, after the 1980 Olympic Trials in which Moore, who had a 90-6 amateur record with 50 knockouts, was beaten in the welterweight final by Don Curry.

Others in that group, which Arum promoted on television as "Tomorrow's Champions," are junior middleweight Tony Ayala, junior welterweight Johnny Bumphus, middleweight Alex Ramos and heavyweight Tony Tucker, all manageed by Lou Duva and Shelly Finkel. Duva's son Dan is showing signs of becoming a major fight promoter.

Duva, Finkel and Arum are involved in litigation with Arum, and Ayala, Bumphus, Ramos and Tucker are denied important television exposure until it is settled. Ayala, one of the best young fighters in the world, is ranked third by the WBA and No.8 by the WBC. Bumphus is rated No.4 by the WBA and seventh by the WBA.

ONE THING about many good young pros like Moore today is that they had extensive amateur careers. But Moore knows that professional boxing is a much different game that the amateur variety, and he understands that there are still things to learn about the trade.

"I'll fight four more years at least," he said. "Maybe two or three years will get me to my peak. I haven't fulfilled my potential yet."

Another thing pointed out by Moore's title victory is the willingness of the WBA and WBC to create weight divisions and champions for the benefit of television, which, with cable and pay TV coming into their own, wants more and more boxing. Of course, title fights are preferred.

There are 15 divisions, and many of the lower weight classes are separated by only three or four pounds. Are the junior flyweight (108 pound limit), junior bantamweight (115) and junior featherweight (122) really needed? Isn't it enough just to have flyweights (112), bantamweights (118) and featherweights (126)?

Currently there 27 champions for the 15 divisions.

And it was Bragan who revealed that Jones and not Jackie Robinson was the first Black to make Cooperstown, "for his feats as a Legion ball player." In talking about today's .240 hitters with the million dollar salaries, Deacon asked Williams what he thought Ty Cobb would hit today if he were still alive. Williams deadpanned, "No doubt about it. He'd hit around .395 or so...and he'd be 92, wouldn't he?"

On the long association between Midland and Chicago, Bragan admitted he was a little envious. "The Texas Rangers have had been in four AAA cities in four years. That will be changed under Eddie Chiles, but it's a relationship like Midand and Chicago that provides a good foundation for building a baseball program."

Hogs to tighten Barnhill security

(Compiled from R-T wire services)

Steps have been taken by the University of Arkansas to improve secu rity at Barnhill Arena, but Coach Eddie Sutton said Darrell Walker, ejected for hitting Texas' Ray Harper Saturday night, was being made a scapegoat. Sutton claims Walker, Texas coach Abe Lemons, the Hogs' Scott Hastings and UT's Virdell Howland should share the blame. With Arkansas leading by five, Hastings was fouled by Howland on a dunk attempt. Walker then hit Harper. That brought Lemons on the floor, but before returning to his bench, Lemons stopped at the Arkansas bench. "He came down to our bench and told me, 'I'm going to leave," Sutton said. "He congratulated us on winning and started to walk away. Then he turned back and used some very strong obscenities toward Darrell."

Sutton said films show Darrell "was acting instinctively in defense of a teammate...the film shows Ray Harper shoved Scott Hastings prompting Walker's action. That's not to excuse Darrell. However he received proper punishment when ejected from the game."...Lemons said after the game that the SWC should suspend Walker. He said fans spit on his team and that Doug Smith, the UT assistant SID, was struck in the stomach. "I would say our relationship is pretty well severed as far as I'm concerned," Sutton said, responding to a question on how Lemons' remarks would affect their relationship. "Our program is built on integrity and we try to be truthful with players, coaches and people we deal with and I think that's all that needs to be said."

To avoid future trouble, the visitors' dressing will be moved from the northeast corner of Barnhill to the northwest corner and the area will be roped off and manned by ushers to make certain the visiting team can get on and off the court without being impeded by fans. The PA system set up in the band area will be dismantled...

Nice Guy Bossy named NHL MVP

By GORDON BEARD

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — It was a National Hockey League All-Star game, so it figured to be cleanly played.

But in view of all the furor over recent dirty tricks on ice, it was perhaps fortuitous for the NHL that nice guy Mike Bossy was the Most Valuable Player as the Wales Conference defeated the Campbell Conference 4-2 Tuesday night.

Bossy, the New York Islander who'd rather score than fight, pumped in the winning and insurance tallies to give the Wales Conference its sixth triumph in the seven years of the current All-Star format.

Losing coach Glen Sonmor, whose Minnesota team is pushed around frequently during the regular season, took special note of the way the game was played.

"At this tempo," Sonmor said, "we showed hockey to its best advantage. It was an excellent example of so many of the best parts of our game, instead of the nonsense."

Wayne Gretzky, the high-scoring whiz from Edmonton who had one of the Campbell goals, added something along the same line.

"You come to a game like this to have fun and you keep in the back of your mind, sportsmanship," Gretzky said. "A game like this helps hold all that other stuff back."

Only five minor penalties were called, one leading to a power play goal by Raymond Bourque of Boston, pulling the Wales into a 1-1 tie at 12:03 of the first period.

That matched a goal by Rick Vaive of Toronto, on the first shot by the Campbells, and Wales went ahead 2-1 at 13:27 on a goal by Marc Tardif of Quebec.

Gretzky's breakaway goal forged a 2-2 tie after 26 seconds of the second period, and then Bossy took charge.

His tiebreaker, at 17:10 of the second period, came on a backhanded shot which was deflected past goalie Gilles Meloche off the skate of Craig Hartsburg, a Campbell defenseman.

Then, at 1:19 of the third period, a perfect pass from the corner to mid-ice by Montreal defenseman Larry Robinson got Bossy in the clear for a breakaway goal.

"I think I played a good hockey game besides the two goals I scored," Bossy said. "I like to be recognized as a complete hockey player, and I did some things out there that I hope prove that."

In addition to scoring on their first shot on goal, the Campbells outshot the Wales 17-8 in the first period but trailed 2-1.

Missouri staves off KU, 42-41

By Associated Press

For more than eight minutes in Kansas, Missouri couldn't do anything with the basketball. But for more than 17 minutes in New York, Cain was able to do anything he wanted with it. Manhattan's Tim Cain, the "confidence man," that is.

Missouri, countering Kansas' zone defense with a slowdown game, didn't score a point in the final 8⅛ minutes Tuesday night. But the fourth-ranked Tigers' defense allowed just three points in that stretch, swiping the ball in the closing seconds to preserve a 42-41 victory over the Jayhawks. It was the only game involving a ranked team.

CAIN, A 6-foot-7 freshman forward, scored Manhattan College's first 19 points in the second half as the Jaspers, trailing 23-20 at the intermission, ran away from Princeton 52-39.

Missouri's Ricky Frazier, recovering from the flu on his 24th birthday, scored a game-high 20 points — including 10 of the Tigers' 12 in the second half.

"This team doesn't like to make excuses, but Ricky Frazier has been sick for 10 days," Missouri Coach Norm Stewart said, explaining the Tigers' 67-51 loss, their only one, to Nebraska last Saturday night. "He has had an upset stomach and he didn't even practice yesterday."

"We wanted to keep them (the Jayhawks) away from the basket so that we'd have a little more opportunity to get it to the basket," Stewart said of the slowdown. "When they stood packed in there 15 feet from the hole, we're not going to get the good shot."

The game's biggest play belonged to Missouri's Steve Stipanovich. As the Jayhawks looked for the potential winning shot in the waning moments, the ball was slapped away and, after a scramble, Stipanovich came up with it just seconds before the final buzzer sounded. Missouri is 20-1 overall and 9-1 in the Big Eight Conference. Kansas is 12-9 and 3-6.

CAIN, who finished with 28 points, hit all seven of his shots from the field and 10 of 11 free throws in the second half. He made nine of 12 from the floor for the game. In one span, while Princeton was in a seven-minute scoreless drought, Cain scored nine consecutive points to give Manhattan a 35-27 lead.

The performance was even more remarkable considering his first shot of the game bounced off the side of the backboard.

For you, 1982 promises to be a year of conquests and favorable publicity. Career and business are affected by a wonderful streak of good luck. Certain ideas may have to be revised to get the results you really want. Go ahead and push that project you have backed for the last two or three years. It just might get the green light this time around! Although romance takes a back seat to work at most times, it will still be satisfying.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Associate's actions could make you feel insecure. Stick to priorities. Someone from past asks an important question. Money could be involved. Seek facts, figures before giving answer.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Someone influential is willing to share a confidence, opening new doors for you. Exert more effort at work. Loved one thinks you attractive and witty. Capitalize on a romantic mood!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A capricious mood could result in extravagance! Guard against reckless spending. You could find a new romantic partner today. Reassess your job goals.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Work goes well now and confidence soars. Keep domestic relationships harmonious by being tactful and affectionate. Your illusions about love are replaced by a more realistic view.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Extra money is available for those willing to work longer hours. Delegate more authority to an important colleague. Flights of fancy are fine so long as no money is involved.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Long-term agreements can be successfully concluded today. Take care of any details that require special attention. Enjoy the turn for the better that romance takes!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Distant affairs are somewhat puzzling, especially if relatives are involved. A long-distance journey could bring you a new love. The financial picture looks promising.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Too many sacrifices can be defeating. Look for other ways to solve career or financial crisis. Socialize. You glean information that will bring solution to your problems.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Everything goes smoothly at work today but a personal relationship could prove disappointing. A change of scene adds pleasure this evening. Be discreet around new romantic partner.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Someone who will work behind the scenes on your behalf is an invaluable ally. Your popularity soars with that someone special. You could be ready to pop the question.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): An old friend sheds light on a problem. Seek new outlets for creative talents. Forget schemes that promise something for nothing.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Assess your attitude. You could figure out why things are not going smoothly. Member of opposite sex finds you very attractive. Keep your mind on your work!

Opening lead: Jack of ♠.

Bridge players have learned from the ancient Greeks — the gifts they bear may often be tainted.

North's decision to raise to five hearts does not impress us. If South needed no more than the scant values North could offer to make the slam, he would have found some bid other than four hearts at his second turn. Once North issued the invitation, however, it would have been churlish of South to refuse.

West led the jack of spades, and declarer was not thrilled with his prospects. Dummy's king took care of his spade loser, but he was faced with a loser in each minor and no place to put them. If spades were 3-2, the suit could be set up with a ruff, but there was no entry back to the good spades. Not even dropping a singleton ten of hearts would help, for though this would provide declarer with an entry to the table, the defender with the third trump would be able to ruff the next spade lead.

If power would not work, declarer had to resort to guile. Bridge players have a predilection to win tricks cheaply, so declarer decided to give an avaricious defender the chance to help him.

Declarer won the ace of spades, led the spade king and ruffed a spade with the nine of hearts. West could not wait to overruff with the ten, and that was the end of the defense. West shifted to a diamond, but declarer was in full control. He won the ace, cashed the ace of hearts and entered dummy by leading the four of hearts to the seven, drawing the last of the defenders' trumps in the process. Dummy's good spades took care of declarer's minor suit losers, and the slam rolled home.

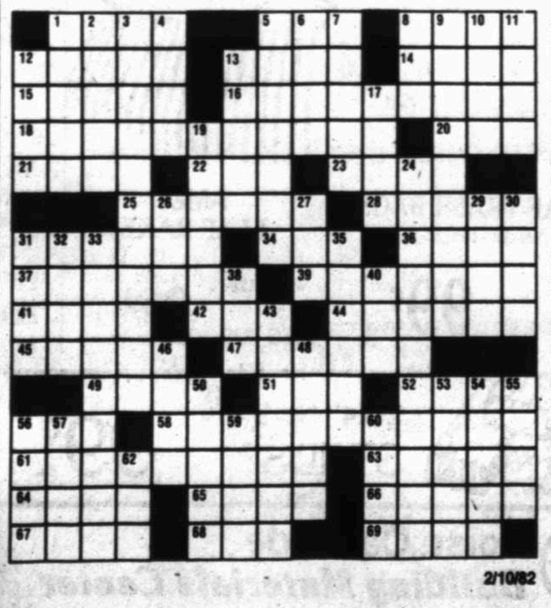

Would you believe that South's only loser on this hand was a trump trick?

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Obese people dislike their bodies

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have a niece who is at least 30 pounds overweight, and apparently has no desire to do anything about it. At least she isn't doing anything to try to reduce. Is it possible that part of the reason many heavy people stay that way is that they think they look better when they are heavy? Otherwise, I'd imagine they'd be doing something about it. — Mrs. T.P., Birmington, Ala.

Dear Mrs. P.: There is some logic to what you say, but the evidence indicates otherwise. According to a study conducted by Dr. Godfrey D. Pearlson and his associates at the Johns Hopkins Hospital, obese people, especially women, dislike their bodies. However, this has nothing to do with whether they will lose weight.

There are, of course, cultures in which what we would consider excess weight is looked upon as desirable. But in the United States, apparently, not liking one's body does not mean doing anything about it.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My obstetrician has recommended that I take iron during my pregnancy. Is this a good idea? I thought if I ate properly, I wouldn't need anything else. — Suzanne, Clearwater Beach, Fla.

Dear Suzanne: Many physicians believe that daily iron supplements are beneficial for pregnant women. Mr. Meredith C. Simon, a family physician, reported to the College of Family Physicians of Canada that the amount of iron provided by a typical diet in an industrialized nation is inadequate for most women of childbearing age. A pregnant woman requires more iron than if she were not pregnant.

Many women do not take iron supplements during their pregnancies with no apparent ill effects. However, if you are using a particular obstetrician, it makes sense to follow his or her advice. Of course this does not mean that you should not feel free to discuss with you doctor this or any other issue that might arise.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My friends make it a habit of trying foods from different nationalities when we go out. This is a problem for me because I have diabetes. Is there any way I can eat Italian food, for example, and still stick to my diet? Gladys, Topeka, Kansas

Dear Gladys: There is no reason why you should not be able to treat yourself to some ethnic dishes, provided you take the necessary precautions. Before making a selection, find out what types of food are used in the preparation of the dish, and how they are prepared.

You can include Italian foods in your diet as long as you bear in mind that pasta is a staple of the Italian diet. Similarly, you can try Mexican dishes as long as you realize that they are generally rich in starch. Being aware of the characteristics of these ethnic dishes will help you get some variety in your diet, and at the same time enable you to remain within the limits imposed by the diabetes.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as any questions as possible in his column.)

TAX TIPS

Travel expenses are tax deductible

This is the last in a series of tax tip articles sponsored as a public service by the Texas Society of Certified Public Accountants.

Q. What travel expenses may I deduct when I am away from home on business?

A. When you are away from home on overnight business trips you may deduct all reasonable travel expenses. This would include plane, bus, taxi and other transportation fares. Meals, lodging and hotel expenses such as tips, telephone, laundry and other travel-related costs are also included. You may also deduct your automobile expenses if you drive, including driving to and from the airport or bus station. These expenses are also deductible if you are temporarily living and working away from your regular tax home. To claim these expenses, use IRS Form 2106 if you are an employee or Schedule C if you are self-employed. Accurate and detailed record-keeping is essential.

Q. As an employee, may I deduct miscellaneous expenses related to my job?

A. Miscellaneous job-related expenses may be deducted only if you itemize your deductions. These expenses include professional dues and publications, uniforms, union dues, supplies and tools, certain education expenses and costs of maintaining an office in your home. Travel and lodging expenses for overnight business trips may be deducted whether or not you itemize your deductions. All of these expenses are reported on IRS Form 2106, which is then attached to your Form 1040. Accurate and detailed record-keeping is essential.

For more information on this and other income tax questions, attend the "You and Your Income Tax" class sponsored by the Permian Basin Chapter of the Texas Society of Certified Public Accountants. The class, scheduled for Thursday from 6:30 to 10 p.m., is presented as a public service.

Classes will be held at Midland College in the Allison Fine Arts Building. A $2 per person fee will be charged. Participants are encouraged to pre-register, although walk-ins will be accepted.

She overcame odds to represent her people

By PHYLLIS MENSING
Associated Press Writer

BEMIDJI, Minn. (AP) — As a child, Peggy Treuer never dreamed of becoming a lawyer. She was an Indian and a woman, and the odds were against her.

Today she has her own law firm in her native Bemidji area. Her arguments in appealing an Indian discrimination case in autumn were successful before the Minnesota Supreme Court.

She is a slender 38-year-old woman who wears braids and large glasses and has a calm demeanor. She built her career on intelligence and determination, encouraged by her husband Bob, whom she met in 1961 when he was her teacher.

Indian clients make up 75 percent of the business for Mrs. Treuer's law firm, Treuer & Day, which has offices in Bemidji and Cass Lake.

"Unfortunately, Indians don't have a lot of money," she says. "But I think they feel more confident coming to us, who know what they've been through.

"They have the same kind of problems everybody else does," she says. "We get a lot of family law, personal injury and some criminal cases."

She also has been working with national groups concerned with Indian housing problems. Roughly 60 percent of all Indians live in substandard housing, she says.

When she was in high school, Peggy Treuer recalls an atmosphere with "a lot of very subtle racism." Few of her Indian classmates graduated.

"I didn't know anybody who'd gone to college except the school nurse," she says. "Most of the girls I grew up with thought about marriage and children."

In her senior year she met Treuer, who had come to the United States from Vienna after the Nazis took over in 1938. After several years as a labor organizer, he turned to teaching and community action work.

"The Indian dropout rate at Cass Lake High School was 65 percent," Treuer remembers. "The white dropout rate was around 35 percent. "But Peg was so smart. I felt she could handle professional challenges."

She studied nursing, but wasn't excited by hospital work. So she took a job with the Leech Lake reservation, retraining needy Indians. "I became something of an expert on federal grants," she says.

She went on to help the Red Lake reservation get a comprehensive health grant. While working for Red Lake, she renewed her acquaintance with Treuer, who also was working with Indian programs. They were married in 1968.

They have four children, ages 12, 11 and 3-year-old twins.

Shortly after their marriage, Treuer took a job in Washington, managing federal grants, and Peggy accompanied him there. She lobbied for the Menominee tribe in its struggle for congressional recognition. And she decided law was her career.

A nursing diploma isn't considered solid preparation for law school, but Catholic University in Washington admitted her on probation. There she earned her first degree.

Bob Treuer also had dreams, to be a published writer, and Peggy helped him pursue them.

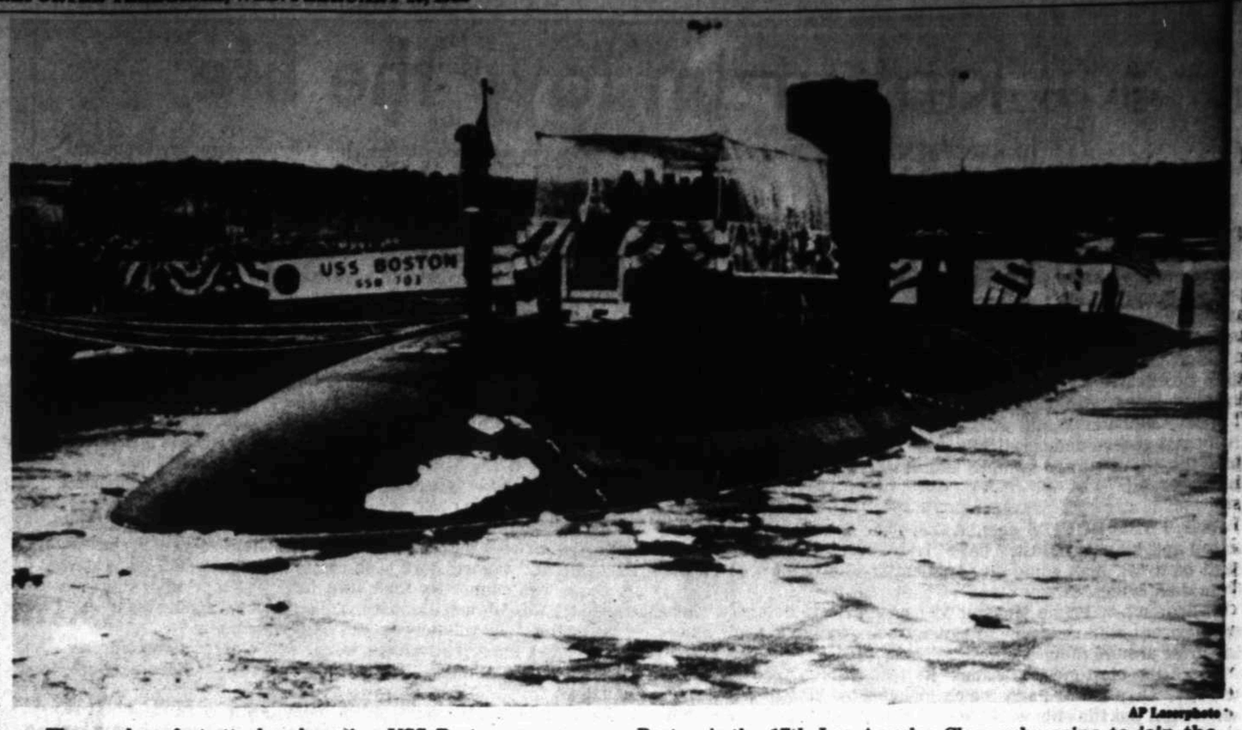

"Now and then I had sold a short piece, but nothing big," Treuer says. "Peggy got me going again." Since then, he has written two books and a newspaper column.

About three years ago, the Treuers decided to return to the 200-acre tree farm Treuer started some 20 years earlier near Bemidji. "Those pine trees are my candles," he says.

Peggy Treuer started her law firm with a partner she had worked with as a court clerk. Now, she says, "we're doing what we feel is a comfortable business. We've paid for things as we went."

The Minnesota Supreme Court agreed with her arguments in the case of Joseph Lamb vs. the city of Bagley, in which Lamb, an Indian, charged that an Indian police chief had discriminated against him.

The case is important because the court defined an Indian, Mrs. Treuer says. "Most of the time, the courts had gone by the blood question and tribal membership. In our case they said those things were not totally relevant. An Indian can be anyone with cultural ties."

York proves he is his father's son

By DEAN FOSDICK
Associated Press Writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Ramrod straight, Andrew Jackson York stood at the firing line along with the other park rangers and aimed his revolver at the paper silhouette in front of him.

He fired once. A bull's-eye. Again. Another bull's-eye. On a firing range where it takes 70 points to qualify out of a possible 100, York proved once again that he was his father's son. He shot a pair of 99s.

York's late father, Sgt. Alvin C. York, was described by Gen. John Pershing as "the greatest civilian soldier" to emerge from World War I. The senior York killed 25 Germans, captured 132 others and silenced 28 enemy machine guns during the battle of the Argonne in France in October 1918.

A crack shot, he used a .45-caliber pistol after running out of rifle ammunition.

The quiet, religious mountaineer from Pall Mall, Tenn., who had registered as a conscientious objector with the draft board, was awarded the Medal of Honor for his exploits and given a ticker-tape welcome in New York City upon his return to the United States.

Andy York, 51, one of seven York children, told a reporter that his father had said very little about the war.

"He'd never talk about it much," York said. "He'd just change the subject. Said it wasn't him that done it.

"He told me if he didn't have the one above him, he couldn't have done what he did," the tall, gray-haired York said. "He didn't want to go to begin with."

York is the second member of his family to be a state park ranger. In 1972, he replaced his late brother, Thomas Jefferson York, as ranger at the family farm, museum and grist mill in the Valley of the Three Forks of the Wolf River, near the Cumberland mountain community of Pall Mall.

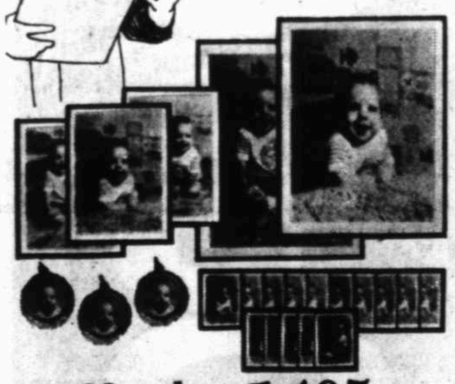

"Along with being a ranger, he was a constable, a deputy sheriff," he said of Tom. "He was taking a prisoner in but he overlooked a gun in the boy's boot. They killed each other."

Israeli kibbutzim love the life

By KEN KUSMER
Associated Press Writerr

RAMAT HAKOVESH, Israel (AP) — When a kibbutznik comes home after a day at work, he no longer sits in crowded quarters discussing Zionist ideals. He plops down in front of the television, goes to pottery classes, plays a game of tennis.

"You do not have to suffer to be a Zionist," says Kelly Solomon of kibbutz Ramat Hakovesh. "By being there and working the land, we are still accomplishing one of those Zionist ideals."

Ramat Hakovesh, a quiet settlement of some 650 people, lies 15 miles northeast of Tel Aviv. Its rolling hills produce cotton, citrus fruits, potatoes, peanuts, bananas and avocados.

Today's kibbutzniks still work cooperatively, own property collectively and govern democratically. Like their parents and grandparents, they have turned swamps and deserts into orchards and cotton fields.

BUT THE PROFITS earned from the growth of the settlements and kibbutz industry have given kibbutzniks a higher standard of living than some city-dwellers — and charges of elitism from their critics.

In September, Prime Minister Menachem Begin described them as "arrogant millionaires" lounging in their swimming pools, ignoring those around them.

The Begin blast met criticism of its own. Shimon Peres, leader of the opposition Labor Party which includes the kibbutz movement, said Begin was the only world leader who didn't respect the kibbutzim and their achievements. Angry kibbutzniks sent telegrams to Begin's office.

At Ramat Hakovesh, it was dismissed as party politics.

"There's no way to fight against it, because we are all brothers," Solomon says. "We don't take it seriously.

"Although we are only 3 percent of the country, we are 40 percent of the army officers. We are the only part of society with goals working to build the country," Solomon adds, citing the kibbutzim's border defenses, absorption of immigrants and contributions to Israeli agriculture.

Preceded by private farming ventures, the kibbutz began in the early 20th century as a productive way to organize Jewish immigrants to Palestine, most of whom believed strongly in physical labor as a way to reclaim the land. Kibbutzim played an important role in channeling Jewish immigrants into places where they built communities, often in isolated locales or on frontiers. The kibbutzniks became the nucleus of the Jewish army, as members formed and joined rural defense forces to guard against Arab attacks.

TODAY, MANY OF the kibbutzim employ cheap Arab labor to help with the workload, introducing a thorny corollary to the kibbutz ideal of collective work and management by the workers.

At Ramat Hakovesh, Arabs have been used to help with the harvest. This year, the kibbutz added eight of them, paying by the amount of crops they pick, says Yossi Gal, manager of the harvest.

"We only hire people to help with the picking season. It's still against the philosophy, but we have to pick those oranges.

"You can't stick to the philosophy of 70 years ago. The world changes. We have to move forward."

Israel Sapphire, now 73, joined the two-year-old kibbutz in 1934. The small family of kibbutzniks lived in tents, dined in a converted barracks and showered with water falling from an overhead barrel, he recalls.

"There was nothing here," Sapphire says, glancing out his picture window at the rows of apartments, tree-filled lawns and farm fields beyond.

"We dug for two years to find water. We came to establish a Jewish state, but we could only do it through work," he says.

Today, Ramat Hakovesh sprawls across 1,125 acres. A store, laundry, post office, carpentry and electrical shops serve daily needs. The men and women work in th communal dining hall that caters to those who cannot fix their own food. For diversion, there's a movie theater, library, gymnasium, disco and swimming pool.

All of this, they will tell you, was built with sweat.

"The most important value is work," says Yaakov Even Nur, secretary of the kibbutz. "If you work OK, you will be accepted equally."

The members and candidates for membership work eight hours a day, six days a week, plus an occasional Saturday. The children work during vacations from school. The old people work until they die.

THE OLD, unable to farm, man the machines at the rubber factory, and even the blind and bedridden trim excess rubber from rings.

The kibbutz tradition of rearing children in special houses and freeing the parents for work has attracted criticism from the outside, and some kibbutzim are bringing the children back home. At Ramat Hakovesh, however, the young still go to the children's houses a few months after birth and stay there until they go into the army.

"I think what's good for the parents is good for the children," Solomon says. "We find it more convenient for the parents to keep them in the children's houses.

"We spend a love hour with them in the morning, and then again from 4 to 8:30 in the evening, and of course on weekends. I don't think any child in the city gets to see that much of their parents," Solomon adds.

To many St. Louis residents who have had to dig out from under two feet of snow dumped on the area over the past eight days, parking spots have become prized possessions. Signs, barricades and other devices were used to let potential interlopers know that a parking place shoveled by someone else could lead to trouble. No violence was reported as most drivers respected the warnings.

Nixon to appeal ruling on access of tapes

By LARRY MARGASAK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Richard Nixon's attorney says he will appeal a court ruling giving the public eventual access to the former president's White House tape recordings.

R. Stan Mortenson said he is not certain whether he will take the issue to the Supreme Court or ask the full U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington to review Tuesday's ruling by a three-judge appellate panel.

Mortenson said he will pursue the appeal "so non-Watergate related tape recordings receive at least comparable treatment" with tape recordings made by former Presidents Lyndon B. Johnson and John F. Kennedy.

The appellate court ruled that government archivists may continue listening to the Nixon tapes to separate those that can be released from those that must be kept from the public. The tapes may be made available in 1984.

The tapes that will be sealed to the public include those dealing with personal matters and those on national security subjects. Nixon will receive tapes that focus on his personal life.

The Nixon tapes are being prepared for release under a 1974 law dealing with the custody and disposition of the ex-president's White House recordings. No such laws apply to the disposition of tapes made by Johnson and Kennedy.

Jill Merrill, a spokeswoman for the National Archives, said the Johnson tapes will not be turned over to the Archives for 50 years. That restriction was imposed by a former Johnson assistant when he gave custody of the tapes to the Johnson Library in Austin, she said.

Ms. Merrill said she is unaware of any time restrictions on the Kennedy tapes, which will be reviewed by a special screening committee of the Kennedy Library in Boston.

Until a new law was passed in 1980, presidential papers or tapes were considered gifts, and there was nothing to prevent restrictions from being imposed on public access.

The new law, which would apply first to the Reagan administration, ends the tradition of private ownership of presidential papers. It gives the government the ownership, possession and control of the presidential records.

In the case decided by the appeals court Tuesday, Nixon had challenged the the General Services Administration's rules for public release of the tapes, contending the regulations violated his right to privacy and presidential confidentiality. The GSA is the parent agency of the Archives.

Nixon proposed several restrictive alternatives to public access, including making public only transcripts or synopses of the recordings.

The appellate court, in a ruling that upheld a lower federal court, rejected the argument and said the regulations were constitutional.

Lists open to public

The Selective Service System is continuing to make available for public inspection lists of registrants and their tentative local board assignments. This is in keeping with the intent of Selective Service that its procedures be open to the public.

The list may be viewed at the Midland County Courthouse, according to Phil Bustamante with the Selective Service System.

The lists cover registrations processed through September 30, 1981, and include men born in 1960, 1961, 1962 and 1963.

Local board assignments are arranged by ZIP code based upon the registrant's permanent address.

The requirement to register applies to U.S. citizens and to aliens residing in the U.S., born on or after Jan. 1, 1960. Men born in 1960 and 1961 were scheduled to register during July 1980; men born in 1962 were scheduled to register in January 1981; those born in 1963 were scheduled to be registered during 1981. Men born in 1964 are required to register within 30 days of their 18th birthday. They may do so at any U.S. Post Office.

On Jan. 7, 1982, President Reagan announced his decision to continue peacetime Selective Service Registration. In announcing his decision, the President declared a grace period during which late registration would be accepted without penalty. That grace period extends through February 1982.

Anyone who was scheduled to register previously but has not yet done so is encouraged to register immediately at any U.S. Post Office in order to avoid any possible penalty.

For further information on this subject, contact Paul D. Aikin, state director for the Selective Service System in Texas. He can be reached at telephone number 214-784-7583.

Three wildcats staked; three completed

Three wildcats have been staked in Loving and Scurry counties.

Also, a gas discovery and two oil discoveries have been completed in Reeves, Andrews and Winkler counties.

LOVING WILDCAT

Champlin Petroleum Co., Midland, will drill the No. 1 University "30", a 7,000-foot wildcat, 14 miles east of Mentone.

The location is 1,980 feet from the north, and 1,320 feet from the west line of section 30, block 20, University Lands survey.

It will be drilled in a little tested area, about 2,000 feet deeper than some nearby dry holes.

SCURRY SEARCHERS

Murchison Oil & Gas Inc., Dallas, will drill the No. 1 Lacy Turner, a 5,800-foot wildcat, 13 miles east of Snyder.

It is 1,888 feet from the north, and 467 feet from the east line of section 240, block 97, H&TC survey, abstract 2406.

The drillsite is 1/4 mile north of Spartan's No. 1 Langford, an 8,202-foot project, dry and abandoned Jan. 30, 1950.

••••

Trans-Western Exploration Inc., Dallas, will drill the No. 1-391 R.A. Beaver, five miles south of Fluvanna.

The scheduled 8,200-foot wildcat is 1,320 feet from the south, and 660 feet from the east line of section 371, block 97, H&TC survey.

It is 3/8-mile south of Liedtke's No. 1 and 1-A Beaver. The No. 1 was junked and abandoned at 3,741, and the No. 1-A was dry and abandoned at 8,400 feet, Sept. 28, 1959.

The information available to us suggests Trans-Western may have planned originally to drill this well about 1/4 miles northwest of the current drillsite in section 370.

REEVES GAS FIND

Union Texas Petroleum Corp., Midland, has completed the No. 2 Chaparral "A", as a Delaware Sand gas discovery, 18 miles south of Pecos.

The well flowed 4,626,000 cubic feet of gas through a .375 inch choke. The gravity of the gas was .726 and the gas to liquid ratio was 26,006 to 1.

Calculated absolute open flow was 10,010,000 cubic feet of gas per day.

Production was through perforations between 5,202 and 5,250 feet, which had been acidized with 2,400 gallons, and fractured with 15,000 gallons and 2,700 pounds of sand.

It was drilled to 7,050 feet and plugged back to 5,300 feet, with four inch casing set at 6,929 feet.

The site is 1,667 feet from the west, and 1,867 feet from the south line of section 8, block 49, T-8, RPRR survey.

ANDREWS OILER

Bass Enterprises, Midland, has completed the No. 5 Elizabeth M. Armstrong as a Clearfork discovery, 11 miles northwest of Andrews.

The well pumped 19 barrels of oil plus 445 barrels of water in 24 hours.

Production was through perforations between 6,444 and 6,561 feet, which had been acidized with 3,600 gallons.

It was drilled to 6,632 feet, with seven-inch casing set at 6,632 feet and plugged back to 6,590 feet.

The wellsite is 770 feet from the west, and 600 feet from the north line of section 18, block A-34, Public School Land survey.

WINKLER DISCOVERY

Clements Energy, Oklahoma City, has completed a Penn Detrital oil discovery, 14 miles southeast of Kermit.

The No. 1 F.H. Hogg flowed 268 barrels of 41 gravity oil, plus 30 barrels of water, through an unreported size choke in 24 hours.

Producing through perforations between 8,254 and 8,813 feet, which had been acidized with 26,850 gallons, the well was drilled to 9,205 feet. Casing of 4 1/2 inches was set on bottom and plugged back to 9,205 feet.

It is 990 feet from the south, and 990 feet from the east line of section 5, block 9, Public School Land survey.

Court shoots down part of oil, gas shelter deals

By JIM LUTHER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Tax Court has shot down part of a system used by high-income investors trying to reduce their taxes by putting their money into oil and gas deals.

The decision, announced Tuesday, does not eliminate oil and gas tax shelters. But it will make it more difficult for many investors to claim the immediate tax deduction that makes such deals so attractive.

Judge William A. Goffe ruled that six couples who bought into a oil and gas deal could not claim a deduction for the half of the project that was financed by a no-risk loan.

In other decisions, the court:

—Ruled that for tax purposes, an APO address is equivalent to a foreign address if the coded APO number shows a location outside the United States. The ruling went against the Internal Revenue Service, which contended that even though Henry M. and Barbara J. Brown were living in Saudi Arabia, their address was domestic because it included the New York APO center.

The issue was a major one because the law gives someone at a foreign address 150 days after the IRS mails a tax defieciency notice to file suit contesting the deficiency, while someone at a domestic address has only 90 days.

—Turned down Steven A. Meiers of Los Angeles, who, because his law firm required him to drive to work, tried to deduct $629 in parking fees paid in 1977. Unless Meiers could prove that he would not have driven to work except under orders from his firm, the court held, the parking fees were nothing more than non-deductible commuting expenses.

The oil and gas case involved six couples who invested in a "turn-key contract" under which an independent driller furnishes all labor and materials and prepares a well for production. For tax purposes, an investor's short-run payoff is in being able to deduct immediately certain expenses called "intangible drilling costs."

Court records showed the investors put up 50 percent of the $390,000 that bought them into the venture; the promoter obtained bank loans for the other half and posted certificates of deposit as collateral.

After the loans were repaid, according to the contract, the promoters could sell the investors' interest in the venture and take half the selling price.

The court said the arrangement showed clearly that the only part of the $390,000 the investors really had at risk was the $195,000 cash they put up.

Therefore, the court said, the investors' share of the intangible drilling costs was only half what they claimed. Their original deduction claim was based on a $390,000 investment.

"When a promoter can offer a deduction against ordinary income in the taxable year of the investment which is almost twice the amount of the investment, the promoter will undoubtedly be successful," the judge wrote. "To uphold such a ploy as a justifiable business reason would be foolhardy."

Court files identified R.L. Burns Corp. as promoter of the venture. The decision went against Richard L. and Joyce C. Burns, Stanley L. and Phyllis Ross, C. Hayden and Ruth Atchison, and Harry L. and Elizabeth G. Hawkinson, all of California, and Raymond G. and Lois S. Larson and William T. and Fiona D. Stokes, of Texas.

Offshore shallow water lease sale tops billion bucks

By BILL CRIDER
Associated Press Writer

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Drilling space in shallow water drew top dollar in Tuesday's sale of federal oil leases on the Gulf of Mexico seabottom — but oilmen gambled on some deep-sea tracts, too.

In all, the some 800 oilmen gathered in a meeting hall at the Superdome offered $1.251 billion on 137 of the 234 tracts up for sealed bids.

The richest tract was 5,592.51 acres just outside the state jurisdiction of Alabama south of Mobile. It drew a bid of $55.119 million from a combine of Mobil Oil, Conoco Inc. and Getty Oil Co., or $9,855.86 an acre.

Mobil already has struck oil on a nearby tract in Alabama state waters.

Of 17 tracts offered in the warm and shallow waters just south of Mobile Bay, 14 brought in top bids totaling $216 million.

Two Mobile tracts drew no bid. One was withdrawn from the sale by the Department of Interior because of a dispute with Alabama over the exact location of the line between state and federal jurisdiction.

It will be a couple of weeks before the Department of Interior decides which top bids were acceptable.

The sale included six tracts in what is called the Green Canyon area of the Gulf. They lie 120 miles south of Grand Isle, La., and under water 4,100 feet deep — a sale record.

At that depth, it takes exertise from the frontier of exotic offshore technology just to drill, much less put down production facilities. The tallest production platform anywhere towers on steel legs in the Gulf in water just over 1,000 feet deep. Yet, three of the tracts in 4,100 feet of water drew bids.

Three oil company combines submitted bids on one Green Canyon tract, with top money offered by Conoco Inc. and Getty Oil — $17.8 million.

Conoco offered $5.8 million on a second tract. A bid of $1 million was offered on the third by a combine headed by Atlantic Richfield.

"As the technology catches up with the deeper water, the companies keep moving out," said Harry Sieverding, assistant manager of Interior's Bureau of Land Management office in New Orleans.

"There may not be any more monster fields out there, but the Gulf is still the best game going," he added.

Another popular shallow area at the sale lies south of Matagorda Island area off the Texas coast.

A big plunger in the Matagorda area was a combine of Shell Oil Co., Florida Exploration, Fluor Oil & Gas, Crown Central and Apache. It offered $53,488,000, or $9,286 an acre, for a tract 20 miles off the beach due south of the entrance to Matagorda Bay.

An adjoining tract drew a bid of $46,765,000 from a combine headed by Amoco Oil.

Administration considers further pipeline restrictions

By BARTON REPPERT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration will decide "very shortly" whether to impose tougher restrictions on European companies manufacturing U.S.-licensed equipment for the Soviet Union's massive Siberian gas pipeline project, a Commerce Department official told Congress Tuesday.

Lionel H. Olmer, undersecretary of commerce for international trade, acknowledged that such restrictions could raise legal questions over extraterritorial application of U.S. law and would be likely to prompt "great concern" among some NATO governments.

Nonetheless, Olmer said, "we would strive mightily to achieve voluntarism on the part of our allies" regarding enforcement if the administration decides to go ahead with the broader technology controls.

Asked when this decision could be expected, Olmer said: "I believe it will be made very shortly, within the next week or so."

He testified at a hearing before the House Science and Technology investigations and oversight subcommittee dealing with the impact of U.S. technology on Soviet energy development.

In the wake of the Soviet-supported martial law crackdown in Poland, President Reagan in late December imposed tight controls on U.S. exports to the Soviet Union of oil and gas equipment and technology.

American officials also said they had received assurances that the NATO allies would not undercut the U.S. sanctions by providing government subsidies for sales of European-made items sought by Moscow to replace American equipment being embargoed.

However, this has left open the possibility of increased European cash sales of equipment and technology for the Soviet pipeline.

The expanded restrictions currently under consideration would deal with this loophole by seeking to bar sales to the Soviets of certain critical items — such as turbines and compressors — manufactured by European firms under U.S. patents and licensing arrangements.

American officials in recent months have voiced strong concern about major Western involvement in the pipeline, which is to stretch from natural gas fields in northwestern Siberia to link up with an existing European pipeline grid. When the pipeline is completed, about one-quarter of Western Europe's gas supplies will flow from the Soviet Union.

Olmer told the House panel that the Reagan administration "remains convinced that it is not in the West's long-term interests to increase dependence on Soviet energy supplies."

MGF Corp. signs acquisition; joint exploration agreement

MGF Oil Corporation has announced the signing of an acquisition and joint exploration agreement with Sunbehm Gas, Inc. and Deka Minerals, both of Minot, North Dakota, for the acquisition of 59,600 gross (21,600 net) acres of undeveloped oil, gas and mineral leases from Sunbehm Gas, Inc. and Deka Minerals, covering lands located in McKenzie County, North Dakota for $15 million.

R. O. (Jack) Major, president of MGF, said that the acreage is located six miles from the eastern flank of the prolific Mondak trend area of the Williston Basin. He added that MGF now owns 209,360 gross (122,852 net) acres in the Williston Basin. Major added that MGF will continue to aggressively explore the Williston Basin in 1982. "A large part of our exploration and development budget will be spent in the Williston over the next five years."

Major said that the acreage acquired in this latest purchase is in close proximity to existing producing fields that have production from five different horizons — Red River, Duperow, Three Forks, Mission Canyon and Charles.

Gerald and Leonard Behm, officers of Sunbehm, said that MGF Sunbehm and Deka plan to conduct an ongoing exploratory program within a designated area of mutual interest encompassing all of their joint leasehold acreage. The exploratory program will be for a period of three years which can be extended at the option of the parties for an additional two years.

Program may offer cover for repeat criminals

By HENRY FUENTES
Copley News Service

Criminals given fabricated identities in exchange for testimony under the federal Witness Security Program are using the program to escape prosecution for new crimes.

And the government offers the new victims little hope that anything can be done about it.

Courts have ruled that the government cannot be held responsible for the crimes of its protected witnesses, and the victims of those crimes often can find no way to trace and prosecute the criminals because of the cover they receive from the government.

Giving the informers false identities and guarding them from exposure to local police sometimes has startling results:

— A day after a deputy U.S. marshal provided one protected witness with the address of a prominent La Jolla, Calif. attorney, the lawyer was beaten to death in the doorway of his townhouse. The witness was linked to the murder within a few days but was not charged until several months later.

— Another protected witness, snug in the knowledge that his San Diego, Calif., address and true identity would not be revealed by U.S. marshals, started a racket of pressuring area pet stores to buy his smuggled exotic birds. When he was caught smuggling and arrested, he made one phone call — to the U.S. Marshal's Service — and was promptly released and never prosecuted.

— A FORMER Chicago mobster, living in San Diego under the federal cloak of secrecy, swindled scores of people out of more than $3 million in several frauds, including a scheme involving worthless mining stock.

— In Richmond, Calif., Robert Salmeron, an oil company worker, returned home to find that his two children had been kidnapped from his mother's back yard. He had sole legal custody of the children and suspected his former spouse but was unable to find her or the children because they were living with her boyfriend, a protected witness who had been an informer in a Hell's Angel prosecution. The witness passed off the woman as his wife and federal agents never bothered to check on the woman's custody rights before taking the children. Nearly two years after the kidnapping the children were returned to Salmeron.

— In Fort Smith, Ark., a convenience store clerk was killed. Four days later in Colorado two convenience store night clerks were gunned down in separate robberies within two hours of each other. A protected witness was later charged with all three murders, plus the murders of his wife and a Mississippi bank clerk.

— THE BODY of a 17-year-old girl, her throat slashed, was found near Golden, Colo., in January 1981. A suspect, who might have been effectively removed from society had his record been known, was acquitted of the murder. Only after the trial did prosecutors learn that the man was a protected witness with three prior felony convictions. Had they known that, the prosecutors would have pressed for a conviction on an accessory charge that probably would have put the witness away for life. Believing, however, that they were dealing with an individual with a relatively clean record, the prosecutors opted for the less solid murder charge as the only hope for gaining a lengthy sentence. They lost the case and watched the witness walk away.

Informants routinely are relocated and provided new identities in exchange for their testimony, usually against organized crime figures. In effect, the informant ceases to exist and a new individual is born, complete with fabricated records on that individual's birth, medical history, education, military background, job and credit history, references and driving record.

THE FEDERAL government even steps in with job placement assistance, all the while shielding the true identity of its witness from local authorities. The program is administered by the U.S. Marshal's Service.

Since 1978, hearings before the U.S. Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs have resulted in a 60-page report that makes no mention of the problems encountered by the victims of protected witnesses.

EPHRAIN Margolin, a San Francisco attorney who represented Robert Salmeron in his efforts to regain custody of his two children, is preparing a lawsuit challenging the program. Margolin's anger stems partly from a government stipulation that the children would be returned to their father only if he agreed to take no legal action against those responsible.

That amounts to extortion, Margolin says.

Even though Salmeron agreed to the conditions, Margolin argues that it was obtained under duress because "we would do anything to get the children back."

Margolin said the U.S. Marshal's Service indicated it had no responsibility in the matter, and that numerous promises of help by other government officials were continually broken.

"I THINK that the whole program is an outrage," Margolin said. "I would like to think of my government as something more than a common criminal."

The Bay Area attorney says there are as many as 40 cases in the Witness Security Program where the government is guilty of "the most outrageous conduct."

"The absolute discretion given to the U.S. attorneys and to the marshals, the lack of coordination between them, and the callous disregard by both of any responsibility ... are appalling. We cannot believe that Congress intended this," wrote Margolin last summer in Forum, a legal journal.

Warren R. Williamson, a former Federal Defenders trial attorney who represented many informants charged with crimes under their new identities, also voices concern for the victims' plight.

"There's a tremendous temptation for a person who is inclined to cheat others to use this great new identity, this official shield that the government gives them.

Alabama redneck talks turkey

DALLAS, Texas (AP) — Ben Rogers Lee talks turkey. In fact, he talks the language of the gobblers so well people seek him out to learn his secrets.

But Lee says it's no secret. It's all in having the right equipment combined with a certain element of style.

The 37-year-old Alabaman will outfit any enterprising hunter with the right equipment — a variety of custom-made turkey callers — but it's up to the hunter to develop style.

Lee, a self-professed redneck from Coffeeville, Ala., has built a business out of his talent for fooling turkeys. He quit a job as a custodian at a chemical plant seven years ago to hit the streets with his wares.

At a recent gun show in Dallas, Lee told of how he got started in his own business and demonstrated his unusual talent for turkey talk.

"I always worked the night shift so I had days to go hunting and build my calls. I used to give them away. My wife and I made them on our kitchen table.

"But it just got to where, with all the word-of-mouth advertising, I was getting so many letters and calls from people wanting them, I just had to start charging and go into it full time," he explains.

Hunters flock to seminars and demonstrations to hear Lee putt, gobble, keek and click his way through the entire turkey vocabulary.

He tells his audiences, "A man that's going to turkey hunt needs two things. He needs a real good wife, or he's going to lose her, and he needs one heck of a good job or a good foreman, because it's a disease. Once you start turkey hunting, you're going to do it until you die."

Governments going used car route

By HERBERT J. VIDA
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Like many money-short motorists these days, government agencies in growing numbers are taking a look at the price of new automobiles and buying used cars instead.

"I never expect to buy another new car for our regular pool — it just wouldn't make any sense," said Richard C. Pennock, the city of Pasadena, Calif.'s administrative services director. The city has purchased 100 used cars in the last two years.

The nationwide trend is yet another setback to the beleaguered American automobile industry, which suffered its worst year in two decades in 1981.

Sales of new cars to government on all levels has long been a strong outlet for the automobile industry, and particularly welcome when sales to individual buyers lag. But now such cities as Houston, Baltimore, Dallas and San Francisco are buying used cars, mostly from such car rental companies as Hertz, Avis, National and Budget, which offer them with a warranty.

HERTZ, THE MAJOR SELLER of used cars to government groups, said that in California alone it has sold its cars to 14 state agencies and departments, 23 school districts, two transit districts and 88 cities.

"It's mushrooming now and we're expanding across the country," Al Sunseri of Hertz said.

Marty Levine, manager of fleet marketing for American Motors, said he has noticed the trend.

In the short term it definitely will have a negative impact on us," he said. "It also means we'll be selling more new cars to the rental agencies."

He believes the sale of used cars to government was created as a marketing venture by car rental firms that found themselves with excessively large fleets.

"I definitely feel it is a short-term problem," he said.

The surge of used car buying by government groups follows private buyers' move in the same direction. Nationwide, the purchase of used cars from new car dealers jumped 10 percent last year. The Motor Vehicle Manufacturers Association, the voice for the nation's major new car and truck companies, reports that in the first 10 months of 1981, dealers sold 6,240,309 used cars. In the same period of 1980, they sold 5,719,751.

THE MANUFACTURERS association said there was a marked drop in new cars sold to the federal government in 1981, 7,223 cars in the first 10 months, compared to 15,983 in the same period in 1980.

Houston recently bought 501 used cars, spending $2.6 million.

"I figure we got these for $1,800 to $2,000 below what we would have had to pay for a new car," said Joseph E. Kelly of the city's purchasing department.

Most of the cars had six cylinders, power steering, power brakes, radio, air conditioning, outside trim and colors other than white, the standard for a Houston city car. A decal of the city emblem was added.

"Primarily we bought them because of economics and availability and expect they'll have a life span of three to four years," Kelly said.

Joseph Pippen of Dallas said his city bought 128 used cars.

"IT WE BOUGHT new cars we would have gotten only half the number we needed," he said.

New cars are still considered the only acceptable vehicles for use as police patrol cars. But even before cities began to buy used cars for their motor pools, they often purchased them as vehicles for police undercover work.

When the soaring price of new cars forced cities to think about replacing worn-out autos for less, the idea of buying some new cars and some used was tried successfully and generated interest in other strapped communities.

All those interviewed who have bought the used cars have said they have been happy with the results.

"The program has been good and most likely we will continue with it," said Richard Lockwood, equipment superintendent for California's Santa Barbara County, which just bought 30 used autos. "I believe that government has found a way that is reasonable and practical to buy cars.

"If we keep the money we would have spent for new cars in the pockets of the taxpayer, they'll go out and buy new cars."

How cities should go about buying used cars is explained to city purchasing directors by Robert G. Edwards, retired fleet administrator for the state of California and now a part-time consultant for Hertz who also conducts seminars at university extensions on fleet administration.

Victims of war

These two children are part of the results of the war between guerrillas and the United States-backed civilian-military junta in control of El Salvador. Relief workers caring for displaced Salvadoran families claim that the guerrillas can now move freely through 10 of the country's 14 provinces. The leftist guerrillas recently took their 2 1/2-year-old battle into the countryside, displacing many villagers, who have fled to avoid the fighting. These two children, from Suchitoto, have little food since their families left their homes ahead of the fighting.

The Reagan administration last week pledged $55 million in aid to the Salvadoran government, adding to an already-promised $26 million okayed by Congress last month.

Salvadoran villagers fleeing to avoid fighting

EDITOR'S NOTE — Renewed violence in El Salvador's civil war has become a controversial issue in Washington since the Reagan administration decided to provide additional aid to the ruling civilian-military junta. AP correspondent Richard Boudreaux has been traveling in El Salvador's countryside and filed the following report.

By RICHARD BOUDREAUX
Associated Press Writer

EL TRANSITO, El Salvador (AP) — Despite increased U.S. aid to the Salvadoran government, leftist guerrillas are making headway in their war against the junta, and relief workers estimate the insurgents can move freely through one-third of the countryside.

The guerrillas have taken their 2¼-year-old hit-and-run battle to scores of communities that lived quietly until a few months ago.

On Monday the insurgents reached into the capital, attacking 22 city buses, and on Tuesday announced their intention to increase the assaults, particularly in the evening.

President Reagan's administration, committed to support the civilian-military junta, announced last week it was sending $55 million in additional military aid to El Salvador after one guerrilla attack on a military base destroyed 15 warplanes and helicopters, more than half the junta's air force.

THIS SUM WAS in addition to the $26 million approved by Congress a month ago. Assistant Secretary of State Thomas O. Enders said the aid was needed to prevent the guerrillas from overthrowing the junta, which hopes to defuse the war by holding elections for an assembly March 28.

As now planned, the assembly will decide how and when to hold elections next year for president and other leaders. Leftists have refused to participate, claiming there are no guarantees their candidates could run.

Apparently intent on showing muscle before the elections, the 5,000 guerrillas of the Farabundo Marti's National Liberation Front have been occupying tiny farm villages and attacking strategic targets far from their traditional strongholds in northern Chalatenango and Morazan provinces near the Honduran border.

As a result, the war now is more widespread than during a nationwide offensive the guerrillas mounted in January 1981, which failed for lack of popular support.

The position of the junta's armed forces, numbering 20,000 men, is now worse than a year ago, according to a Western diplomat who asked not to be identified for policy reasons.

Relief workers caring for refugees uprooted by the fighting concur with the diplomat's estimate and say guerrilla bands can now move easily through parts of 10 of the country's 14 provinces, although they are not in control entire provinces. The workers asked not to be identified by name for fear of reprisals.

"The guerrillas could overrun this place anytime they want," said Adelio Masferrer, a worried shopowner in Berlin, a town near here in the southeastern province of Usulutan. He said 30 security-force men loyal to the junta guard Berlin's population of 20,000.

THE GUERRILLAS HAVE captured few towns so far and held none for more than 10 days.

But in a spectacular raid Oct. 15, they destroyed the Golden Bridge spanning the Lempa River, cutting the country's major East-West highway. And on Jan. 27, they attacked the Ilopango Air Base outside the capital, San Salvador, crippling the junta's air force. The United States last week sent six helicopters to replace the destroyed aircraft.

Last week, guerrillas staged rare daylight shelling attacks against police and army posts in Usulutan City, the provincial capital, and burned more than 30 buses and trucks on a six-mile stretch of highway to El Transito.

Saturday, the rebel regional commander, Juan Antonio Medrano, held an unusual news conference at a guerrilla hideout just a mile from Usulutan, saying his men had just completed a six-day "pre-insurrectional" operation to train for urban warfare — a tactic to bring the war to the cities and town.

Medrano said the operation had "demonstrated our combat ability to the masses." He said 25 government soldiers and four rebels were killed in the skirmishes.

So far, the guerrillas have avoided extended face-to-face combat with the army. Reported casualties were relatively low during the second half of 1981 — 160 rebel deaths by their own count, and 800 army troops dead or wounded by government estimate.

In the same period, according to El Salvador's Human Rights Commission, government soldiers and rightist "death squads" have killed 6,387 civilians. It estimated the 2¼-year-old war so far has claimed 35,000 lives out of a total population of five million.

THE LEFTISTS, TOO, have been accused of murdering civilians — the army last week claimed guerrillas massacred 150 peasants in the northeastern village of Nueva Trinidad. The claim could not be confirmed.

As the war quickens, more and more refugees from the fighting move through the countryside. They are mostly peasants, traveling on foot or by oxcart along dusty roads winding around heavily forested volcanos in this agricultural nation.

A trip through the eastern provinces of San Vicente, San Miguel, Usulutan, Morazan and La Union, where the fighting has been heaviest recently, revealed a growing population of refugees. Twenty-thousand were crammed into the 16 cities on the tour — a tenth of the estimated total of people displaced by the war.

More refugees arrived each day, straining the facilities of these once-quiet farm communities.

Last week alone, 50 refugee families turned up in El Transito, a palm-shaded market town in San Miguel province near the Pacific Coast, 75 miles southeast of San Salvador. El Transito's 11,000 residents have taken in 3,000 refugees.

Until the guerrillas shut off the water and power supply all the month of August 1981, El Transito had not felt the war. An uneasy four months followed, and 2,000 apprehensive townspeople moved elsewhere. Those that stayed on started stockpiling fuel and canned food.

The refugees started arriving in early January. By their accounts, two boatloads of guerrillas landed at Espino Beach, 12 miles away, took over that town's three-story resort hotel as a command post and fanned out across inland farming communities.

SINCE THEM, EL Transito's water and power have gone out again for 18 days and the bodies of 15 assassinated people have appeared on the streets. Last week, after guerrilla attacks between here and Usulutan City, the army imposed an overnight curfew.

"Sure, people are worried about all this, but they refuse to be paralyzed," said Mayor Saul Quintanilla, an affable man who keeps pigs in his house and sleeps in a hammock. As he spoke last Saturday, the townspeople shopped or played billiards in cafes while artillery boomed a few miles away.

Quintanilla, a member of Junta President Jose Napoleon Duarte's Christian Democratic Party, said he expects a large turnout for the March elections.

In San Agustin, 25 miles from here, and in 10 other towns in the area, there may be no voting at all. The guerrillas have surrounded them.

More than 4,000 refugees have settled into San Agustin's school, church, city hall and some private homes. The town had 20,000 people, but many of them fled elsewhere after a guerrilla attack in 1980.

The only road to San Agustin is controlled by the guerrillas, who allow only relief agencies to go in with food. The guerrillas have cut off water and power supplies for nearly two years.

ONE EVENING LAST month, while old men played cards on a sidewalk there and children picked grapefruit from a tree overhead, guerrillas seized a coffee plantation near San Agustin, killing 15 soldiers who tried to defend it, residents said.

Solidarity deputy to be tried

By THOMAS W. NETTER
Associated Press Writer

GDANSK, Poland (AP — Miroslaw Krupinski, the deputy chief of the Solidarity labor federation, is to be put on trial before a military court for organizing a national strike committee after martial law was declared, the Gdansk provincial prosecutor says.

Krupinski, second only to Solidarity chairman Lech Walesa in the hierarchy of the independent union, will be the highest union official brought to trial for violating martial law decrees.

Prosecutor Bronislaw Medejski spoke in response to questions from foreign reporters who were allowed to visit Gdansk, the major port and industrial center on the Baltic coast, on Tuesday for the first time since martial law was imposed Dec. 13.

The prosecutor said military prosecutors were preparing their case against the union leader, but he could not give the date of the trial.

AFTER MARTIAL LAW was declared, Krupinski was one of the leaders of a sit-in strike at the big Lenin Shipyards in Gdansk, the headquarters of the strike movement in 1980 that resulted in the formation of Solidarity and the liberalization movement that martial law was imposed to check.

He and other union leaders were arrested after police broke through the shipyard gates on Dec. 14 and crushed the strike.

Krupinski, who is about 49, was later reported hospitalized with heart trouble. Medejski said he did not know where he was being held now.

Walesa was interned shortly after martial law was declared, and there has been no indication that any charges would be brought against him.

Col. Juliusz Petrykowski, director of Polish prisons, told The Associated Press in Warsaw that 4,057 people remain in 24 internment camps.

This marked the first time that the number of camps the Polish military regime maintains thorughout Poland was officially disclosed.

Petrykowski also rejected reports circulating in Warsaw that prison conditions for Walesa had been tightened.

ASKED ABOUT THESE reports, Petrykowski said Walesa was allowed "regular" visits by members of the church and from relatives.

His wife had made use of this facility and talked to her husband "on numerous occasions," Petrykowski said.

He did not disclose the whereabouts of the villa in which he said Walesa was the only person detained.

Solidarity sources said the villa is just south of Warsaw.

Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. told reporters at the European Security Conference in Madrid that "never before has there been such unanimity of view achieved within the NATO alliance" as there has been over the Polish crisis. The allies have repeatedly condemned the Polish crackdown.

At the Vatican, Polish-born Pope John Paul II told Polish pilgrims that human dignity "can never be taken away at any time, anywhere." The pontiff later continued talks on strategy toward the Polish regime with Poland's Roman Catholic prelate, Archbishop Jozef Glemp.

U.S., Oman said working together

By ALY MAHMOUD
Associated Press Writer

MUSCAT, Oman (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said today Oman and the United States will work together to defend the oil-rich Persian Gulf region.

"Oman is beset with threats and is prepared to work with the United States to face these threats," Weinberger said before departing for Jordan.

Weinberger did not specify the nature of the perceived menace during his two days of talks with Omani officials.

Oman adjoins the Strait of Hormuz, through which two-thirds of the world's ocean-shipped oil passes.

The nation has been locked in border skirmishes with neighboring South Yemen, which Information Minister Abdul-Aziz al-Rowas said has become "a Soviet colony complete with military bases and airfields...constituting a threat to the entire gulf region."

Last week Oman accused Marxist-ruled South Yemen of plotting with the Soviet Union, Libya and Ethiopia to destabilize conservative governments in the gulf.

The information minister said both Oman and the United States were keen on maintaining security in the Hormuz Strait, but he denied that the Americans have any military bases in his country.

The Americans have a permanent task force of four frigates and one command destroyer near Omani waters, in addition to a presence in the Indian Ocean.

Weinberger's visit climaxed with a five-hour inspection of the U.S. Navy's Indian Ocean task force, aboard the aircraft carrier Constellation.

His trip followed increasing statements by Persian Gulf leaders about the necessity of "removing the area from the sphere of big power conflicts."

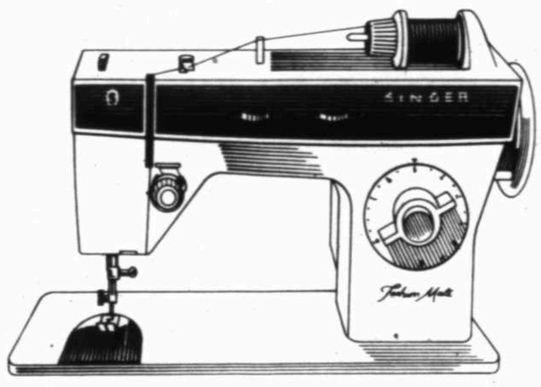

However, Weinberger on Tuesday announced the establishment of a joint military committee with Saudi Arabia after four days of talks with Saudi leaders and said details of the AWACS sale to Riyadh had been finalized.

The airborne warning and control system planes reportedly will be used as the nucleus of a Persian Gulf air defense blanket for Saudi Arabia's allies in the Gulf Cooperation Council.

The other members are Oman, Qatar, the United Arab Emirates, Kuwait, and Bahrain.

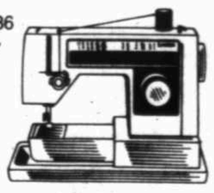

Iran has claimed that the nine-month-old council was formed at "U.S. prodding and provocation."
