U.S. Plans To Launch Space Station In 1973

CAPE KENNEDY (UPI) — The United States plans to launch its first space station in 1973 and may assemble a larger, more permanent station in orbit over a period of several months about 1980.

Plans for the second generation space station were outlined at the eighth annual Space Congress in nearby Cocoa Beach Monday, only hours after the Soviet Union launched what appeared to be the start of the construction of the world's first space station.

The initial U.S. station is called Skylab. It is a 185,000-pound, two-story structure that will be launched intact with enough oxygen, water and other provisions to support three three-man crews over a period of eight months, from May through December, 1973.

Skylab, however, is not considered permanent because its oxygen and other supplies cannot be replenished. Space Agency officials consider a permanent station one that can be used in orbit for at least 10 years with periodic resupply flights from Earth.

SHELL HEAD SAYS

Oil, Gas Becoming Increasingly Expensive, Hard To Find In U.S.

HOUSTON (UPI) — The President of Shell Oil Co. said Monday the company may never know what caused the fire on its offshore well in the Gulf of Mexico.

The fire began last December and lasted for 137 days before it was tapped out last week. The explosion which started the fire killed four persons.

Shell President Dennis B. Kamball-Cook said the company was investigating the fire and should make its findings known "shortly." But he said the company may never know what caused the explosion and fire. Kamball-Cook said the company's domestic expenses will not be affected by the $35 million spent fighting the fire.

"There is no reason to believe we won't be as active as we were last year," Shell's president told the third annual Off-shore Technology Conference. He did say, however, Shell will be spending more money to import oil instead of trying to locate it within the United States.

"Oil and Gas is becoming increasingly expensive and difficult to find in the United States," he said. "I think the nation will be coming increasingly an importer of oil and gas. I think you are going to see Shell become more active outside the U.S. We have been active in Canada for a number of years."

iner, chairman of an advisory group studying the law of the sea for the Department of Defense, rejected a National Petroleum Council proposal recommending the United States extend control of mineral resources to the abyssal depths of the ocean. Rattner urged oilmen to reconsider their positions on offshore controls.

President Nixon wants to limit the national control of continental shelf waters to a depth of 200 meters but allow coastal states to have trusteeship over mineral development to the base of the continental slope. Beyond that, international control would take over, according to the Nixon plan as outlined by Rattner.

House OK's Historic Liquor Bill To Let Texans Buy Mixed Drinks

By ROLAND LINDSEY
AUSTIN, Tex. (UPI) — Saloon doors that were slammed shut in Texas 32 years ago were pried open again Monday by a historic 103-44 house vote for a bill immediately allowing Texans to be served liquor by the drink on a local option basis.

The senate sponsor of the drink bill, Sen. Joe Christie, D-E Paso, predicted the Senate would send the measure on its final journey for the governor's signature today.

Should the Senate concur with House changes in the bill, and the governor sign the measure in the next few days, Texans could be publicly drinking cocktails by early June.

Voters in all or part of 46 counties would vote on the local option question in the constitutional amendments election May 18. But the House sponsor of the liquor bill, Rep. Dewitt Hale, D-Corpus Christi, said there will be a delay of two to three weeks after that vote before the first legal cocktail is pushed across the bar.

"I think about June 15 would be about the earliest date any place could open for mixed drink sales," Hale said. "There is a mechanical problem of getting a permit, getting the proper licenses and getting in business that will take several weeks."

Hale's liquor bill got the necessary 100 House votes to put it into immediate effect Monday only after Speaker Gus Mutscher used all his political muscle to break a deadlock sparked by a small handful of liberals who withheld their votes on the issue in hopes of bargaining for their own legislative proposals.

On the first vote for final passage, the measure passed 95-51—five short of the two-thirds majority needed to put it into immediate effect and get the local option question on the May 18 ballot.

But 10 minutes later, Hale asked the House to reconsider the vote, and seven House dries switched their vote in favor of the measure. Mutscher broke into a wide grin as he announced the final vote of 104-44 in favor of the bill. A confirmation of the vote by dries lost one of the "ayes," and final passage came on 103-44.

"I am proud to say that I did not bargain with anyone to get this bill passed," Mutscher said. "I just simply refused to deal on a piece of legislation this important. We had the mandate from the voters and I felt we had to vote on its merits."

Rep. Neil Caldwell, D-Alvin, one of the dries who switched on the second vote, told House members "We can't change the outcome, we can just prolong the agony and in my opinion cost the state some money. I am still opposed to liquor by the drink, but I'm voting for immediate effect" to avoid the costs of having to call special elections on the mixed drink question in those 46 counties. Hale estimated that cost at $1 million.

Rep. Billy Williamson, D-Tyler, led a determined fight by House dries to defeat the bill, or at least to prolong its effective date. But the House turned back Williamson's attempts to amend the bill, and rejected arguments of Rep. Tom Bass, D-Houston, the measure raised constitutional questions.

Williamson said he has written Gov. Preston Smith asking the governor to veto the bill. But sponsors say the governor has already agreed to sign it immediately.

The bill authorizes the local option sale of mixed drinks any governmental subdivision which approves it. Permits for the sale of cocktails will cost bar and restaurant owners $5,000 over the first five years, and $500 a year thereafter.

It's Russia's First Air Installation In Non-Red Area

By ROBERT TAYLOR
COLOMBO, Ceylon (UPI) — The Soviet Union has begun setting up a jet fighter base in Ceylon at the request of the government of Prime Minister Sirimavo Bandaranaike, diplomatic sources said today. The military installation in non-Communist Asia.

The sources said Soviet crews arrived in secret the past weekend and are staying in a remote hotel five miles from Colombo's military and civil airport where the MIG17 base will be located.

The first of the Soviet jets were expected to arrive immediately, the sources said. Diplomatic circles were uncertain of the details of the Moscow-Colombo agreement and whether the base was permanent or temporary.

Not was it immediately clear what role the Soviets would play in the Ceylon's student uprising which Mrs. Bandaranaike's government was struggling against. Several other foreign countries have already sent arms and equipment to Ceylon to help put down the rebellion.

But it was known that one of Ceylon's most pressing needs was air support for the island nation's ground forces. Air support so far against the two-week-old rebellion has been limited to a handful of Indian helicopters and sorties by old Ceylonese cargo planes from which crewmen loss dynamite.

The MIG17 is an obsolescent fighter plane. Most of Egypt's MIGs, for example, are MIG21s. Recently Egypt has been reported to be receiving the new and revolutionary MIG23s as well.

Premier Lon Nol, Cabinet Officials All Resign Today

PHNOM PENH (UPI) — Cambodian Prime Minister Lon Nol, who helped lead the overthrow and then suffered a disabling stroke, resigned today along with his entire cabinet.

Lon Nol's brother, Col. Lon Non, said the resignation was little more than a formality and probably would not be accepted.

Political sources said Lon Nol and his cabinet submitted their resignations at the office of Chief of State Chen Heng today. However, there was no immediate official announcement.

Lon Nol and Cheng Heng led the bloodless coup against neutralist Prince Norodom Sihanouk March 18, 1970. Sihanouk was out of the country at the time and has since set up a government in exile in Communist China.

Special Election Necessary For Liquor By Drink

If the Texas Senate concurs in yesterday's House-passed liquor by the drink bill, an election would have to be called to make mixed drinks, available across the bar in Gray County.

Concurrence by the Senate was expected without too much difficulty.

Gray County as a whole voted dry in last November's statewide election on the liquor by the drink issue.

County Judge Don Cain said today he had not yet read details of the bill but understood, when it is finally approved, any sub-division of the county would have to petition the commissioners court to hold an election on the liquor by the drink issue.

Pampa, in Precinct 2, currently is the only wet area in Gray County.

There would not be sufficient time, Judge Cain said, to hold an election on the liquor issue at the same time the Constitutional Amendment election is held May 18.

Rep. Phil Cates of Lefors was one of the 44 state representatives who voted against the liquor by the drink bill yesterday in the House.

Pampa School Trustees Set Date To Discuss Budget And Deficit

By WANDA NIEBURGER

After canvassing trustee election returns and reorganizing the board Monday night, Pampa school trustees set a budget analysis date and heard a request from Pampa Classroom Teachers Association to re-evaluate Pampa teachers' salaries.

Trustees will meet at 7:30 p.m. May 3 at Carver Center to discuss the 1971-72 school budget and decide how to eliminate the district's $150,000 deficit.

Trustees were told with the Aug. 31 payroll, the district faces a $150,000 deficit if it maintains the same level of spending. To balance the budget another year, maintain the same spending level, and to raise teachers' salaries to last year's $700 above state level, the district will have to have more money, according to a report by Supt. Dr. James F. Malone.

Mrs. Doty Warner, PCTA representative, presented a detailed analysis of teachers' salaries in Texas and compared Pampa salaries with basic salary schedules for classroom teachers in schools in the Pampa area.

In the 1970-71 budget, trustees allowed Pampa teachers $500 above the state salary schedule, a drop of $200 from the amount previously paid. This meant this school year, a teacher with a B.A. degree could receive from $6,500 to $8,170 and one with an M.A. degree, $7,100 to $9,300, depending upon the number of years experience.

Five schools in the Pampa area, Panhandle, Sanford, Stinnett, Canyon, and Dalhart, pay the same as Pampa but Sanford allows $150 more for six hours above the bachelor's degree and six hours above the master's degree, Mrs. Warner said.

Twenty schools in this area pay more than Pampa and range from Midland's $7,450 to $9,190 for a B.A. Degree and $8,000 to $10,660 for an M.A. to Dimmitt's $6,600 to $8,270 for a B.A. Degree and $7,200 to $9,480 for an M.A. Degree.

"In a survey conducted by the National Education Association, Texas ranks 29th among the states in average salaries paid all teachers this year," Mrs. Warner said. "The current Texas average is estimated by the Texas Education Agency at $8,325, which makes Texas $940 (See PAMPA SCHOOL, Page 2)

Court Issues Major Decisions Upholding School Integration

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Supreme Court issued four major decisions today upholding busing to achieve school integration and establishing up-to-date new guidelines for the courts to follow.

The decisions were unanimous. All were written by Chief Justice Warren E. Burger.

The key opinion came in a North Carolina case where the state had challenged a federal district judge's order that busing be increased in the Charlotte-Mecklenburg area to bring about racially balanced schools.

Burger said transfers were an integral part of many desegregation plans and "to be effective such a transfer arrangement must grant the transferring student free transportation."

The court also upheld zone pairings and a certain amount of deliberately imposed "racial balance" if needed to eliminate

"all vestiges of state-imposed segregation."

"School authorities have wide discretion in formulating school policy," Burger wrote, "and, as a matter of educational policy, school authorities may well conclude that some kind of racial balance in the schools is desirable quite apart from any constitutional requirements."

"However," Burger said, "if a state-imposed limitation on a school authority's discretion operates to inhibit or obstruct the operation of a unitary school system or impede the desegregation of a dual school system, it must fall."

"State policy must give way when it operates to hinder vindication of federal constitutional guarantees," Burger ruled.

The court discarded the administration's assertion that school assignment plans should be "color blind."

promise of (the original school 1954 desegregation decision).

In the North Carolina opinion, the court upheld in its entirety the district court's orders requiring the busing of 23,000 more children than had been transported the previous year. He had been reversed on busing younger pupils by the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

"The remedial techniques used in the district court's order were within that court's power to provide equitable relief," Burger said. "Implementation of the decree is well within the capacity of the school authority."

The opinion noted: "An objection to transportation of students may have validity when the time or distance of travel is so great as to risk either the health of the children or significantly impinge on the educational process."

District courts, it added, "must weigh the soundness of any transportation plan" in light of today's guidelines.

FLOOR DEBATE SET

State House Committee Okays Record Budget For Next 2 Years

AUSTIN (UPI) — The House spending bill, a good deal smaller than the one approved by the Senate, should be ready for a vote either Thursday or Friday, according to the chairman of the House Appropriations Committee.

The committee approved the bill Monday for floor debate and chairman W. S. Heatly, D-Paducah, predicted when it would come before the full House. The bill is a record $6.9 billion budget requiring $597 million in new taxes over the next two years. It is $87 million smaller than the version approved last week by the Senate.

Like the Senate bill, it only provides funds for the Welfare Department for half of the two-year fiscal period.

Differences Cited
Most of the difference in the House and Senate budget bills is in the fields of higher education and state administration, which includes all state agencies. The House budget writers have allocated $56 million less for higher education than the Senate and $30 million less for state administration.

But the House bill has $14 million more for welfare medical assistance.

Even though it is smaller than the Senate bill, the House budget bill is $472 million more than the current budget.

Gov. Preston Smith asked the legislature to only provide funds for one year to the Welfare Department in hopes it will be taken over by the federal government by then. Both the House and the Senate appear to be going along with this plan.

Other Provisions
The House bill also includes: A $2,000 a year raise for district judges and a $4,000 a year raise for appellate judges;

A two step for higher level classified employees. But the House bill includes no pay raises for state administrative personnel.

An increase of $6.9 million over current spending for salary increases, chronic respiratory disease hospitals in San Antonio and Harlingen, and crippled children's programs with in the Health Department; Mental Health Money A $21.6 million for mental health and mental retardation, including construction funds for centers in El Paso and in the Dallas-Fort Worth area;

And an increase in the formula under which state aid to junior colleges is calculated.

The House bill does not include $21.9 million which the Senate allocated for faculty pay raises for instructors in state supported colleges and universities.

San Angelo—which got as much as six inches of rain to help begin filling their dry reservoirs last Thursday and Friday—got another quarter of an inch Monday.

More than an inch of rain fell in Cotulla, as well as in other sections of South Texas.

The rains which struck the Panhandle, even if they were associated with tornadoes, were appreciated.

Glad for Moisture
"We'll take rain anyway we can get it," said Glynn Burrell of Amarillo. "We still need at least a good two-inch soaking rain—not spotted showers—and anytime you get that kind of rain out here you have a good chance of violent weather."

Bill Nelson of Amarillo, a farmer and executive of the area's Wheat Producers Association, said residents of the area were used to drought and used to violent weather and they were resigned that they seldom could have something in between.

"It's kind of like war," he said. "You don't have to choose. You just have to be ready to face the challenge when it comes."

"Wheat farmers have learned to use the same equipment to control erosion from the wind and dust as we do for erosion from heavy rain. We try to be ready for whatever happens—but you're never ready for a tornado."

The extended forecasts released today indicated Northwest Texas might be in for another round of thunderstorms by Friday, but there was little chance for additional rain throughout the rest of the state before next weekend.

Cool Front Brings Heavy Rains And Low Temperature To Texas

A cool front which tossed tornadoes at the Texas Panhandle early Monday brought rain and autumn-like temperatures to much of Texas today.

Marfa, in the Davis Mountains of West Texas, recorded an overnight low temperature of 19 degrees, Laredo, 400 miles from Marfa, had a high temperature of 96 degrees—hottest in the nation.

Showers fell throughout West Texas in association with the front Monday and Monday night, and began to fall in the eastern half of the state Monday night and early today.

By dawn the front had moved to a line from Texarkana to Victoria and westward to Eagle Pass, with the heaviest showers coming along with just behind that line.

Clearing Trend Follows
The clearing trend following the front moved into West Texas today, with skies clearing as far east as Childress.

Except for Monday's tornadoes—the most damaging of which caused $2.5 million damage in Hereford—there was little violence associated with the front as it moved through Texas. There was just much needed rain.

San Angelo—which got as much as six inches of rain to help begin filling their dry reservoirs last Thursday and Friday—got another quarter of an inch Monday.

More than an inch of rain fell in Cotulla, as well as in other sections of South Texas.

Farmers Need More Rains, Not Tornadoes

By JAMES R. KING
United Press International
Thunderstorms, hail and even tornadoes are the risks Frank Simms of Panhandle, Tex., is willing to take if it means rain for his wheat.

"I've been hailed out before," he said Monday. "I know what it means. But after this long dry spell—I'll take my chances if I can get the rain."

Simms said he was sorry to hear about scattered twisters throughout the Panhandle overnight, injuring more than 40 persons, but "it's just the way this country is."

Glynn Burrell of Amarillo agreed, saying the seven-month drought has not been broken yet.

Need More Moisture
"We'll take rain anyway we can get it," Burrell said. "We still need at least a good two-inch soaking rain—not spotted showers—and most anytime you get that kind of rain out here you have a good chance of violent weather."

Bill Nelson of Amarillo, a farmer and executive of the Wheat Producers Association said he could not choose between the extremes of a drought and violent thunderstorms.

"It's kind of like war—you don't have to choose. You just have to be ready to face the challenge when it comes."

"Wheat farmers have learned to use the same equipment to control erosion from the wind and dust as we do for erosion from heavy rains. We try to be ready for whatever happens—but you're never ready for a tornado."

Large Losses Reported
Nelson said many wheat farmers have already suffered large losses from the dry spell no amount of rain could correct, especially around the Texas-Oklahoma border.

"Besides that, there's the loss from leasing wheat crops for grazing. But anyone living in this area knows what extremes there are. Part of our way of life is to be able to meet them," Nelson said.

A Dalhart man who did not want to be identified said he'd rather have it stay dry than to have to put up with tornadoes.

"I don't know if anything makes this kind of weather worth it—if you go out there and see the area that has been hit by this morning's tornado," he said. The twister hit before dawn Monday, causing rural damage and injuring one woman.

NASH WORSENS
BALTIMORE (UPI)—Poet and humorist Ogden Nash, who once claimed the couplet "candy is dandy but liquor is quicker" would be his only lines to survive him, remains near death today at the Johns Hopkins Hospital.

Admitted to a hospital here March 13th for abdominal surgery, Nash, 68, took a turn for the worse over the weekend. He was transferred to Hopkins yesterday for treatment with a machine designed to take over the work of his kidneys—which a hospital spokesman said temporarily had failed. His condition still was listed as critical.

rash of storms Sunday night and Monday. Measured amounts ranged from .01 of an inch at Aspermont to 1.43 inches at Paducah, but were generally a third or a half of an inch.

"We're thrilled to have the rain," said Magann Reynolds of Hereford, hardest hit by Monday's tornadoes.

"It scares you to death if you see it, but if you get out with your life, you're glad to get the rain."

A GRIEVED CITIZEN
SACRAMENTO, Calif. (UPI)—Assemblyman Robert G. Beverly has heard from one concerned citizen on a proposed bill to legalize prostitution.

Postmarked from Santa Monica and signed by "a voter," the letter asked him not to support the bill because "I have a number of girls working for me and if they try to leave me I always threaten them with police arrest. I could not do this if it were made legal."

U.S. High Court Reduces Sentence For Texas Convict

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The U.S. Supreme Court Monday ordered the state of Texas to reduce James Lee Marion's sentence from death to life in prison or give him a new trial.

The high court allowed a lower court decision to stand ordering the new sentence or trial. Texas had asked the high court to reject the lower court ruling.

Marion was convicted and sentenced to death March 21, 1964, for the murder of Mrs. Fred Turner in her Midland County home in 1963.

Marion appealed on ground he was denied right to counsel. The Supreme Court refused to consider the case in a decision handed down on Feb. 20, 1967.

Wall Street Chatter

NEW YORK (UPI)—investors who have been waiting for solid evidence of economic recovery apparently are the main contributors to the stock market's advances at this stage, Spear & Staff, Inc., says. While first-quarter earnings reports are not up to the mark set by the Nixon administration, they indicate an expansionary economic phase is getting underway, it adds. Investors are now looking ahead to 1972 when dramatic improvement is expected, Spear observes.

A basic uptrend in the market currently is being supported by cheap money, improved consumer spending and anticipation of eventual production gains, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute. The market's current high volume reflects heavy institutional investing, encouraged by the failure of a wider consolidation phase to develop, the investment adviser suggests.

This is a good time to downgrade stock portfolios, "concentrating on the good companies still near their crash lows," James Dines & Co. observes. The market is not only bullish, but is due for a "fantastic spurge" by latecomers, "who finally take the big plunge and get in—right at the top," the firm says.

The market decline, to a low in May 1970, was too drastic, even based on the very high cost of money and the indicated lower economy, according to International Statistical Bureau. Most experts were "dumb-founded" that it went so low at the time and few expected it to make the recovery that it has so soon, the bureau says. At present levels, the firm notes, the market has not discounted the economic prospects and more favorable earnings for 1972, and it would be unrealistic to expect it to discount the more favorable tendencies a year and a half in advance, the firm adds.

Supreme Court Dismisses Appeal Of Texas Inmate

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The Supreme Court today dismissed the appeal by a Texas boys school inmate of his conviction under the Texas sodomy law.

The court's brief order rejected the appeal of Johnnie Pruett of Austin from a Nov. 25, 1970, decision of the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals that the state law was unconstitutional.

The court said the case does not present "a substantial federal question."

Pruett was convicted by the district court of Coryell County on Sept. 3, 1969, after he admitted he forced another male inmate of the Gatesville school for boys to submit to an unnatural sex act on April 11, 1969.

In appealing the criminal appeals court ruling that upheld the district court conviction, Pruett's attorney claimed the "overbreadth" of the state law could lead to invasion of the privacy of a married couple practicing unnatural sex acts and therefore was unconstitutional.

Pruett's attorney also said "since the only purpose served by (the law) is to outlaw sin, it hardly supplies a basis for the classifications made in the statute."

Weatherford Quartet To Appear At Fellowship Baptist Wednesday

The Weatherford Quartet will appear at the Fellowship Baptist Church Wednesday at 7:30 p.m., according to the pastor, Rev. E.D. Maddux. The public is invited to attend the program which will be conducted in the sanctuary of the church at 622 E. Francis.

The Weatherford Quartet is recognized as one of the finest and foremost groups in the gospel music field today. For more than twenty years they have been leaders in this field of music, and wherever gospel quartets are discussed, the Weatherfords are always mentioned as unique in sound and style. It is evident in their selection and treatment of songs both old and new, that their desire is to convey the song's

Take a year, almost any year since the end of 1957, and you will find that someone tried to assassinate "Papa Doc," Francois Duvalier, lifetime president of Haiti.

Yet in an atmosphere of unrelieved violence and intrigue he has managed to continue to survive and as he observed his 64th birthday on April 14 seemed in a fair way to beat the odds and die peacefully in bed with his boots off.

At 64 Papa Doc already had nearly doubled the life expectancy of most of the other 4.5 million persons living under the harshest dictatorship in the Americas on the western third of the island of Hispaniola. The other two-thirds is occupied by the Dominican Republic.

In the first 10 years of his regime, Papa Doc survived nine invasion attempts by small guerrilla bands and as many bomb plots.

Health of Importance
It was small wonder then that on his birthday the subject of his health should be of paramount importance among his subjects. A signal, it was said would be his appearance or lack of it on the reviewing stand for his birthday parade.

He did not appear. Instead stood his 20-year-old son and proclaimed heir, Jean Claude. The watchers decided it meant the dictator was in bad shape from a stroke presumably suffered in March.

Day-to-day decisions, it was said, were being made by his 29-year-old eldest daughter, Marie Denise Dominique, herself a survivor of the intrigues surrounding her father.

In June, 1967, her husband, Col. Max Dominique had been sentenced to death with 19 others for plotting against the regime. Dominique's companions were executed but he was pardoned by his father-in-law and later became ambassador to Paris.

Now he and his wife are back at the center of power.

Duvalier Clears Way
Early this year, Duvalier cleared the way for his son's ascent to power after his own departure.

It is doubtful that he did the rotund Jean Claude any favor. Jean Claude had early experience with the acrid smell of gunpowder from the muzzles of assassins' guns. In 1963, gunmen killed four bodyguards escorting Jean Claude and his sister, Nicole, to school. The children fled into the school unharmed.

'PAUL REVERE, WEST TEXAS STYLE'

Sheriff Warns Sleeping People With Siren Of Tornado Attack

By CHARLES A. RICHARDS
Editor, Hereford Brand
Written for UPI

HEREFORD, Tex. (UPI) — Deaf Smith County Sheriff Travis McPherson Monday paid honor to the ancient tradition of law officers.

"I don't know what kept me up last night. Maybe it's that old ideal of the West that a lawman is supposed to protect his people," McPherson said.

For whatever reason, McPherson took heed of a tornado warning in his city Sunday night. He drove to the south side of town to check out a hazy report from a resident that a funnel cloud was in the vicinity.

And he found a tornado, a huge, white cloud, spinning 100 feet off the ground, moving slowly toward Hereford.

Got Sirens Going
McPherson said he sat a moment trying to understand the twister was really there, then he radioed his office to blow the civil defense sirens. Next McPherson raced down the main street of Hereford, blowing his siren as an additional warning.

The tornado tore into his city, dealing $2 million damages and injuring 40 persons, five seriously. There were no deaths.

After it was over, McPherson was able to reflect on his night ride.

"At first it was hard to believe. You know it's there, but you're just not expecting it. Then you make sure which direction it's moving and you alert the Civil Defense.

Feared for Worst
"I can't believe there wasn't anyone killed. When I saw that thing go over me I would have sworn there would be several dead by morning," he said.

McPherson, 29, has been in law enforcement for seven years, as a deputy under two sheriffs for two years in Hereford. He became sheriff of Deaf Smith County eight months ago.

His wife and two children, a boy 7 and girl 10, were in the family home just a block away from the eventual tornado path.

Directly in Path
"When I first saw it I was directly in its path and before I was able to turn (out of its path) it was within a block of me. I saw it hitting the highline wires and saw it touch down. It was a big white funnel.

"When it started to hit the town I began to worry. Especially with my family clear across town.

Manson, 3 Girls Sentenced To Death In Gas Chamber

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Charles Manson and the three young women he sent out to commit the Tate-LaBianca murders were formally sentenced today to death in the gas chamber at San Quentin Prison.

All four took the pronouncement by Superior Court Judge Charles H. Older calmly and with no show of emotion.

Manson told the judge just before the sentencing that he looked upon the court "as my father" and that he accepted its judgment.

Manson was ordered sent to San Quentin to be held pending appeal of the sentence, which may require three or four years.

Susan Atkins, Patricia Krenwinkel and Leslie Van Houten

"The local people were confused and scared at first. I guess about 500 gathered at the courthouse. They didn't know where to go. They were just looking for safety.

Lot of Cooperation
"I'm proud of them. Once the shock was over, they pitched in and we've had a lot of cooperation," he said.

McPherson said it seemed like only seconds from the first to the last.

"When I went into law enforcement I never dreamed that some night I'd be a Paul Revere, West Texas style. I was last night, but I hope never again."

HEREFORD, Tex. (UPI) — Coy Mullins, whose house trailer was thrown on top of another trailer and smashed by a tornado Monday, doesn't know yet much about his next house, but one thing is certain.

"It will not be a trailer," Mullins, his wife and their 2-year-old son Terry all suffered injuries in the pre-dawn twister, but they have no intention of deserting West Texas where tornadoes strike frequently.

"We'll buy another house and stay here. We're going to get something permanent," Mullins said.

The three were among the five persons hospitalized, initially in serious condition after the storm. Two other women were admitted to the hospital, both with heart attacks.

The Mullins' were listed in satisfactory condition at Deaf Smith County Hospital later Monday. Mrs. Mullins, the most severely hurt of the three, suffered bruises on her face and two swollen eyes.

"I'd been up about 15 minutes before it hit. I heard the roar and knew what it was — but just didn't have time to do anything about it."

Mrs. Mullins was asleep. When the trailer was lifted into the air she tried to get to her son's room. Something hit her in the face. That's all she remembers.

"It seemed like two seconds," Mullins said.

The ring of the telephone in the kitchen woke me up. I thought it might be another call from the sheriff's office about the weather and I tripped over a chair on the way to the phone.

It wasn't the sheriff's office. It was a newspaper reporter from another city, asking me to confirm that Hereford had been hit by a tornado.

"What" I asked him. "That's what the weather bureau told me," he said.

It was 1:20 a.m. I hit the wall light switch without luck. The power was out.

Heard Sirens
I pushed open the sliding glass door to our back yard and for the first time I heard sirens, wailing out an alarm from a far-away location. Everywhere I looked, these were cars, their headlights standing out against the stark blackness of the homes and streets.

I awoke my wife and we put our two kids on a mattress on the floor. Then I called the sheriff's office. It took about a minute before I could get a dial tone. The woman dispatcher at the sheriff's office told me, "Yes, a tornado hit on South Main, and it's in the north part of town now. No, we don't know if there are any injuries yet. I can't talk to you anymore. I suggest you come down to the sheriff's office."

We live in the north part of Hereford. I tried to find a funnel but couldn't. I called the newspaper back and told them what I had learned and finally we pieced together that the twister had hit about 12:45 instead of 1:20 and that it had already moved out of the area.

Saw Emergency Cars
I was looking to the east and half way, on the northeastern to my left, about a mile and edge of our city of 13,000. I saw a flashing red vehicle and then another.

I groped in the dark for my clothes, found a flashlight to leave for the wife and kids, and left the house. At 1:30 in the morning, Hereford has probably never been so lively. But more important, 45 minutes earlier, at 12:45, everybody was home in bed.

But both are incentive plans. For either Heine or Citibank to make profits, the mm p ers' accounts must grow.

Heine believes his approach to the smaller investment account will spread. So does John Terry, who manages First National City Bank's Investment Selection Plan for accounts as small as $25,000. Citibank charges the client only one per cent a year on market value of the assets with a minimum of $250. Citibank doesn't assume quite as much responsibility as Heine's plan. It merely recommends securities to the client, whereas Management Asset takes responsibility for all buying and selling.

Business Today

By LeROY POPE
UPI Business Writer

NEW YORK (UPI)—In feudal China the family physician was paid regularly so long as all the family remained healthy. If somebody got sick the doctor was docked until the patient got well.

"That's the way investment advisors and money doctors ought to be compensated in the United States today," said Leonard M. Heine, Jr., 46-year old president of Management Asset Corp. of New York.

Not long ago, Heine was a stockbroker earning as much as $100,000 a year in commissions. But he decided that there was an inherent flaw in the Wall Street system by which a stockbroker advises his customers but makes his own income by a turnover of stocks.

"This creates a serious conflict of interest for the stockbroker," Heine said. "It seemed to me that the dilemma could only be solved by removing the incentive for more activity and creating an incentive for performance as the feudal Chinese gave their doctors an incentive to keep the family well."

So Heine gave up brokerage and created an investment counseling firm that makes its living out of a fee of 2 per cent of the customers' gross portfolios yearly.

If the client's portfolio goes up in value, Management Asset Corp. makes more; if it goes down, it makes less. The company makes nothing out of turnover although, of course, the client must pay the usual fees to a broker when buying and selling is done.

Heine believes his approach to the smaller investment account will spread. So does John Terry, who manages First National City Bank's Investment Selection Plan for accounts as small as $25,000. Citibank charges the client only one per cent a year on market value of the assets with a minimum of $250. Citibank doesn't assume quite as much responsibility as Heine's plan. Truteens Raise Funds To 'Send Mice To College'

Pampa Truteens, an organization of Pampa High School girls, has made it possible to send 258 mice to college.

Sending the rodents to college is a national effort to provide mice for cancer research.

It costs approximately 27 cents to obtain one mouse and send it to the research laboratories.

Royce Laycock, president of the Gray County Unit of the American Cancer Society, said today the Truteens joined in the project and raised $69.75.

Julie Johnson is Truteens president and Sandy Hedgecock was chairman of the "send a mouse to college" project.

Laycock also issued a reminder that the Gray County annual house-to-house Cancer Fund Drive is scheduled for Tuesday, April 27.

RAILWAY EXPRESS SUES

NEW YORK (UPI)—The Railway Express Agency has filed a $5 million damage suit against the striking clerks union, and said it will increase the suit by $1 million per day until the walkout is settled.

About 25,000 employees were involved in the strike Monday by the Brotherhood of Railway and Airline Clerks (BRAC) over a dispute involving 17 new highway runs in the northeastern United States.

REA President Tom Kole said the strike was illegal and said the BRAC refused to "participate in good-faith bargaining."

Rep. Menton J. Murray, D-Harlingen, made the remarks in his first report back to the House since the general investigating committee was formed. Murray said the group has met twice—both times behind closed doors.

The Harlingen Democrat, who also headed a 1961 investigating committee that looked into a Jefferson County scandal, said the panel will follow guidelines laid down by House members in the investigation.

CHOPPER SERVICE comes to the Soviet Union, where a crew from Aeroflot, the government airline, stands in front of its MI-3 helicopter after a landing in the mountainous Krasnodar region on the Black Sea. According to Aeroflot, helicopters are increasingly used in servicing such out-of-the-way points.

DESPITE HOUSE CRITICISM

Investigator Vows To Conduct Fair Inquiry Into Stock Fraud

AUSTIN (UPI)—The chairman of a House investigating committee created to look into legislative implications in a state-wide stock scandal Monday vowed to conduct a conscientious inquiry into the matter despite criticisms from some House members and newsmen.

Rep. Menton J. Murray, D-Harlingen, made the remarks in his first report back to the House since the general investigating committee was formed. Murray said the group has met twice—both times behind closed doors.

The Harlingen Democrat, who also headed a 1961 investigating committee that looked into a Jefferson County scandal, said the panel will follow guidelines laid down by House members in the investigation.

No Advance Pitches
"We intend to comply conscientiously with your instructions and to report back to you as the occasion requires, consistent with good investigating principles," Murray said. "We do not intend to 'telegraph our punches.'"

He said the committee hopes to have "shortly" a reply from the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission concerning any evidence the commission has of alleged payoffs of state officials.

Attorney General Crawford Martin last week asked the SEC to send him any evidence it has that would support allegations that several top Democrats were given lucrative stock deals in exchange for favorable action on legislation.

Seeking Information
"We are hopeful that any such information will be forthcoming shortly from the Securities and Exchange Commission," Murray said.

He said the committee met Monday to discuss "policy and personnel matters."

"We shall continue to meet as often as pressing legislative duties will permit," he said. "There are only six weeks left in this legislative session and we feel priority must be given to consideration of pending legislation."

Murray said the committee will implement legal counsel it plans to hire to help the attorney general in gathering and evaluating evidence.

Answer to Previous Puzzle

(Newspaper Enterprise Assn.)

The Lighter Side

By DICK WEST
WASHINGTON (UPI) — Picked up a phone the other day and dialed a number. Don't remember the digital combination, but let's say it was 555-5555. At any rate, nothing happened. No busy signal. No squawking noise. Just dead air.

There may be another explanation for that type of phenomenon, but it is my belief that somewhere on its premises the telephone company maintains a large dead air machine.

The company, as you know, leases circuits to the television networks, where dead air is abhorrent. So it uses the machine to pump out any dead air that might be in the TV lines.

Occasionally, this dead air backs up into some of the other circuits and when that happens, you might as well dial again. Which I did.

A Pregnant Pause

The second time I dialed the number there was a pregnant pause, by which I mean a pause long enough for the operator to have a baby, and then a female voice said: "What number are you calling please?"

Beautiful. The telephone company has some of the most sophisticated, computerized equipment known to man, yet there are times when it can't keep track of a simple seven-digit figure.

"555-5555," I replied. Clicking noise. Another pregnant pause followed by a recorded announcement saying, "The number you have just called 5-5555 is in service. Please hang up and dial again."

Dialed again. Got busy signal. Progress! Dialed another time. Heard squawking noise. Figured must be closing in on it. Redialed, and rejoined the pregnant pausing operator. "What number are you ..."

Whereupon was reconnected with recorded announcement which advised me that 555-5558 was still in service.

Knew it was Wrong, But ...

So I dialed 555-5558 instead of 555-5555. I knew it was the wrong number but when one is in the clutches of a couple of robots bent on destroying one's sanity, one is grateful for any contact with the outside world.

All of which is why I am not in agreement with certain congressmen who recently have criticized the FBI's wiretapping operations. By me, the more wire-tapping the better.

Federal Land Bank Announces Interest Cut

J.E. Gunn, manager of the Federal Land Bank Association of Pampa, announced today the Federal Land Bank of Houston will reduce interest billing rate on variable rate loans to 7 1/2 percent.

The reduction will be effective on installments maturing on or after June 1, and affects more than $110 million in variable rate loans to over 3,200 Texas farmers and ranchers," Gunn stated.

The variable rate loan, which was introduced by the Houston Bank in July 1969, lets the interest rate "float" over the variations in the money market. This is the second time, since Jan. 1 the billing rate has been reduced and the third such reduction in the past year.

"The action is in line with the bank's policy in providing farmers and ranchers credit at the lowest possible cost consistent with sound business practices," Gunn said.

The Federal Land Bank of Houston makes long term real estate loans on farm and ranch lands throughout Texas. The bank has over $540 million in volume of loans outstanding. The local association makes and services loans in three counties. Members of the local board of directors are: W.B. Jackson, president; Paul Bowers, J.L. Andrews, Wayne Maddox, and Virgil Brock.

WHO'S TO DOUBT that spring is here when teen-agers get so literally all wound up? The double flip was snapped by the cameraman in Omaha, Neb.

Television In Review

By RICK DU BROW

HOLLYWOOD (UPI)—"Justice In America," a three-part investigative series focusing on the nation's courts, begins on CBS-TV tonight with an impressive human hour about legal treatment of the poor and other disadvantaged groups.

"Some are more equal than others" is the name of the hour, and it is a program well worth making time for. In addition, followers of this season's television lesson will undoubtedly note the lesson of how a professional journalistic effort can be "relevant" in a much more effective way than entertainment series handling the same subjects.

Part of "some are more equal than others" deals with legal service offices—some times known as neighborhood or storefront, law practices—which, of course, aid needy persons who can't afford attorney fees, or at least very much. And video watchers will naturally recall that two and "The Young Lawyers"—were built around similar legal help offices.

The difference, of course, is that these series, which failed when viewers rejected message-laden "relevance" offered by scriptwriters, unfortunately had to fall back on numerous dramatic cliches to be salable. This diluted the effect of what was good and true. Documentaries like tonight's "Justice In America" are immediately more trustworthy.

It is ironic, though, that the premiere episode of "The Storefront Lawyers" dealt effectively with a man threatened with loss of his home because a minor bill was escalated exorbitantly by parasitic middlemen — and tonight's documentary touches on the same subject. If "The Storefront Lawyers" hadn't tried to be "Mod Squad Goes To Law School"—and had been more adult in the way of "The Defenders" rather than crassly aiming at the young audience, it might have been a fine series. It finally changed its title to "Men At Law," but that didn't help much.

BUICK BARGAIN DAYS ARE HERE

Buick Bargain Days are saving days.

A bargain price on a stripped-down car is no bargain. But a Buick or Opel at a bargain is something else again. Because we're not selling some special stripped-down model. We're selling Buicks and Opels, the same great cars we've sold all year.

With one difference. The deals have never been better. Which means that you can move out in a new Buick or Opel at a price that's hard to believe. When Buick talks about a bargain, we give you something to believe in.

Opel 1900 Sport Coupe. With a 1.9 liter engine that operates efficiently on low-lead or no-lead gasoline. Automatic valve lifters for quiet engine operation, power front disc brakes and more.

Skylark Custom. With Buick's exclusive nickel-plated engine exhaust valves for smoother operation on today's cleaner fuels. Comfort-Flo ventilation system and more.

Your Buick-Opel dealer will give you better reasons to buy a new car now than anybody else.

The business of auto safety.

Auto safety is everyone's concern. But it's our business. And we think the attention that's being paid to auto safety now is a good thing. Because it will result in better driving for everyone. And, frankly, better driving for everyone means better business for us. We say Buick is something to believe in. That's why we're trying to make it easy to be safe by putting in safety features that work by themselves. You don't have to do anything to make them work. Like side guard beams. And the energy absorbing steering column. And the cargo guard, absorbing the trunk and back seat. They start "working" even before you get in the car. But two safety features, two of the most vital, are worthless unless you do something first. Seat and shoulder belts. Unfastened they do nothing. And you've seen enough statistics to know what a difference they can make. So, use them. But that's not all you can do. Because the most effective safety feature of all can't be added to our cars or anybody else's. That feature is you. And the way you drive. Which should be defensively. And rested. And sober. We're all in this together. And together, we can solve the auto safety problem once and for all. And the time is now.

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Two questions. Why does a wife want to know if there is another woman? Isn't the old fashioned way better? (I mean, not knowing.)

I suspected by husband had somebody else, so I investigated and found out I was right. She's a coworker. Not young, but middle-aged like us. When he knew I was wise, he told me it didn't mean anything, and he begged for my forgiveness and understanding, and said it was all over.

I took him back and believed him. I am not fat or ugly, and I always worked hard at being everything a good wife should be. After what happened, I tried even harder. I got on The Pill and turned on the sex appeal. I thought I had him back again when I accidentally found a love letter in his pocket. Now I know it wasn't me who had him so turned on.

He still stays with me, but I know he is seeing her, too. I was happier not knowing. Now I'm sorry. I ever tried to find out. It does help to write to you, Abby. There is no one to talk to.

—SADDER BUT WISER
DEAR SADDER: Don't blame yourself for "finding out." Your intuition told you. Your investigation merely confirmed it. If ignorance is bliss 'tis folly to be wise. But ignorance is never bliss. A woman wants to know where she stands, even if she's standing outside. The truth hurts, but a lie hurts more.

DEAR ABBY: Please don't use my name, but do print this because I think it needs an airing:

I recently sent out invitations which read, "Cocktails and Buffet, 7 p.m."

I thought this clearly indicated that we expected our guests to stay for the evening. Everything went fine through the cocktails, then suddenly there was a couple-by-couple exodus, with the following excuses: (1) We have to play bridge later; (2) We have to go to a company party; (3) We left our children home alone; (4) We promised to stop by at another party; (5) We didn't know you meant for us to stay the whole evening.

By LINNIE CHANDLER

There were 64 Senior Citizens present Thursday afternoon at the Memorial Library for the weekly meeting.

Sponsoring Altruists present were Miss Jay Flanagan, chairman, Mmes. Louise Sewell, Ruth Sewell, Lalar Wilkerson, Olive Hills and Lena Pearl Hobbs.

Red Cross Volunteers were Mmes. Libby Shotwell, Ann Patrick, Lelia Clifford, and Margaret Wilkerson.

Door prizes were awarded Mrs. Lelia Olney and P.J. Crumm. Refreshments were served by Mmes. W.R. Hardin, M.R. Spencer, J.G. Kinclaw, Bruce-Harvey, Ruth Riehart, and members of the PEO Lodge.

G.W. Gordon of Leedy, Okla., visited his sister, Mrs. Libba Lewis last week. Joe Shelton visited his daughter, Mrs. Bobby Skeen in Clovis, N.M. last week. Mrs. Lucy Hale

Those who remained felt measy. We feel deserted, I think people should choose between invitations and no try to double up at the hostess's expense. What do you think?

—LET DOWN
DEAR LET: I agree with you. If one has a conflict, he should telephone the hostess in advance and ask permission to leave early. But to accept an invitation and exit prematurely is rude.

DEAR ABBY: I am a widower who is engaged to marry a woman who has been widowed twice.

She has my picture sitting on her mantle right between the pictures of her two deceased husbands. She says that after we are married, if I want to put a picture of my deceased wife up there, it will be all right with her.

I don't see the point of having such a gallery, but if you think it's okay, I'll go along with it.

—PUZZLED
DEAR PUZZLED: Those pictures are displayed there is matter of personal preference. If it gives your lady a feeling of comfort or pleasure to have the likenesses of The Old Guard around, and if it's okay with you, then it's okay with me!

DEAR ABBY: I'd like to tell "HATES PIANO" who is 13 years old something. I'm 15, and I've taken piano for 10 years. My parents forced me to take lessons, too, and I hated it and begged to quit. I really didn't hate piano. I hated my teacher. She made me sit on a hard bench and kept saying, "Don't watch your hands—watch the music!"

After fighting with my folks and crying a lot for six years I changed teachers. That was the turning point of my musical education. I loved my new teacher, and I realized I loved music, too. Now I could kick myself for ever wanting to quit.

I keep hearing older people say, "I'm sorry I didn't stick with my piano lessons." Now I know what they mean because I'm glad I did.

—"LOVES PIANO" ... and Chopin and Beethoven, and Mrs. Harris visited friends in Borger Easter Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Van Bibber of Dumas visited her mother, Mrs. T.J. Baldwin over the weekend.

Mrs. Murial Kingery is home from the hospital. Mrs. Edith Morse is visiting her daughter in Mountain Aire, N.M.

Mrs. Ann Eckroat visited her daughter, Mrs. Leona Hay in Syracuse, Colo., hospital on Easter Sunday, and was accompanied by Mrs. W.L. Eckroat and Cindy Eckroat.

Miss Lucy Herlacher spent Easter holidays in Groom and Spearman visiting friends and relatives.

Visitors in the James Beasley home on Easter Sunday were Tommie Beasley and family, Archie Hardin and family, Jess Jennings and family and Jerry Cobb. Mrs. Jessie Van Huss has returned from a visit to Houston, Tyler and Dallas. Mrs. Linnie Chandler also visited several East, South and Central Texas cities, and reported Texas was blooming with Blue Bonnets, Dogwood Trails and azaleas.

Mrs. J.C. Moseley and daughters, Mrs. Mavis Converse and Mrs. Cleo Vaughn of Amarillo took her sister, Mrs. Jewell McCampbell to her home in Midland last week.

Kansas Physician Doctors Mayas To Serve As Medical Missionary

By HELEN HENNESSY

NEA Women's Editor
NEW YORK (NEA)—The stocky, blond man gaped at the towering buildings in midtown Manhattan. Attache case in hand, he waved with pseudo aplomb as he set out for a televised interview.

Dr. Carroll Behrhorst was in New York to seek help needed for his work among the Cakchikil Maya Indians in Guatemala. And the way had been paved for him by author Edwin Barton who made Behrhorst and his Indians known across the country in his book entitled, "Physician to the Mayas."

Behrhorst, a successful physician in Winfield, Kan., went to Guatemala in 1959 as a medical missionary. To gain the trust of the Indians, he literally became part of the scenery, sitting every day on a park bench, making no overtures unless the children came to him. And it took two months of sitting before he gained even a toehold. But once accepted, the Cakchikels let him treat their sick and he became part of their village.

"When my assigned time was up as a missionary to the church, I went back to Kansas," he said, "to see if money could be raised to make it possible to establish a permanent clinic for the Indians. It couldn't. So I decided to try it on my own."

He moved with his wife and children to Guatemala City, rolled up his sleeves and went to work in the nearby village of Chimaltenango. With his own money and what little he took in as patient fees (hospital charges are 50 cents a day, including medicines) he established a clinic, hospital and community health and agricultural-nutrition programs.

"When I went to Guatemala in '59 as a medical missionary," Behrhorst reminisced, "The Cakchikels were distrustful of the white man. And we were going about trying to help them in the wrong way.

"Their thinking is so different from ours and until you can think in their terms, you can't identify with them."

When the doctor went back to Guatemala in 1962, he went as a physician and not as a missionary.

"One reason missionaries often fail to make friends of the Indians," he said, "is that the Indian has tremendous dignity and self-respect.

The very teaching of the organized church makes you debase yourself, start at the bottom, consider yourself a worm who must climb up the ladder. Whereas actually a human being starts in the middle and can go up or down. It's up to him. You must have self love before you can believe you can help others."

On his first trip to Guatemala, Dr. Behrhorst learned that the Indians shunned the free government hospitals because their families couldn't stay there with them and because they didn't want charity. In the Behrhorst hospital, families bring bedding, supply food and help take care of the patient. And the fact that they are permitted to pay, however little, adds to their trust.

Today the Behrhorst Clinic employs many Indians as nurses and medical assistants

— all trained by the doctor. He works an 18-hour day but sees his children more often than he did in Kansas. "They're in and out of the clinic all the time," he admitted.

During his first year of practice in Guatemala he saw that the health needs of the Indians ran much deeper than the need for modern medicine.

"It isn't right," he said, "to save a baby's life with penicillin and then to see him starve two years later from protein deficiency."

So he brought in an agricultural expert and proceeded to teach the Indians to grow protein-rich food.

His achievements became widely known and he is now being helped by members of the Peace Corps, the American Friends Service Volunteers and medical students who come to help and learn.

"In 1964," said author Barton, who is Director of Student Activities at Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons, "I went down there and had to wait four hours to see him to find out if I could get some of our students down to work with him. But if his kids need anything, the patients wait." The clinic now treats over 30,000 patients.

When his park-bench vigil became lonely and long, Behrhorst often doubted the outcome. "Then I would remember how Alfred Schweitzer had to wait for six months to get the first African woman to have her baby in his hospital. And a few months of waiting seemed insignificant."

Today the Behrhorst Clinic employs many Indians as nurses and medical assistants

Lady Welder Helps Make Space Rockets

HONOLULU (UPI)—Beneath the face shield, helmet, heavy denim shirt and pants is a blonde welder named Desira.

For the last 18 years, Desira Brooks has welded everything from the booster rockets in the initial Apollo space flights to torpedo tubes and luxury yachts.

The only female member of the Hawaii Chapter of the American Welding Society advises women planning to join the ranks that the occupation and femininity do mix but only with a lot of work at both.

"Welding takes strength and fortitude," Mrs. Brooks said. "These qualities plus the heavy clothing make it easy to forget you're a woman." Strength is particularly important in states such as Hawaii which have no law regulating the maximum weights women may handle.

"I've found myself at one end of a 500-pound rail with a man at the other, both of us lifting it," Mrs. Brooks said.

Takes Real Effort

"Mrs. Brooks, married recently, said "it takes a real effort not to become brazen and hard. You have to keep reminding yourself you're a woman and behave like one."

There's a trim figure under the leather jacket she often wears to keep the sparks off when welding. She pulled off her helmet, face mask and gloves and revealed flattering blonde hair, green eyes and nails manicured and polished.

"I have to shampoo about every three days or wear a wig," she said.

Mrs. Brooks, who now makes railings for Island Steel 1 Welding Ltd., came to Honolulu in 1955 after extensive experience in California, including the work on the booster rockets at Rocketdyne at Canoga Park where she worked in the research and development division.

Mechanically Inclined

"I've always been mechanically inclined," she said, "but I didn't plan on becoming a welder. When I couldn't find a clerical job 18 years ago, an employer asked me if I could learn to weld. I figured I could do anything anyone else could do, and I've been at it ever since."

To the girl who's looking to be a welder, Mrs. Brooks warned that male colleagues aren't always enthusiastic about a woman on the job.

"On a construction job one of the guys almost fell off his tractor into a quarry when he saw me," she said. "I know I have to work harder and do a better job. When I apply for a job, I stress my qualifications and experience, not the fact I'm female."

Cotillion Members Aid College Fund

Twentieth Century Cotillion Club met in the home of Mrs. Jack Pape at 1717 Duncan on Tuesday at 2 p.m. for its regular meeting as the business meeting was presided over by Mrs. Ben Sturgeon, club vice president.

Mrs. S. Gene Hall, chairman of the March Antique Show, announced the show's door prize was won by Mrs. Jane De Fever of 1912 N. Christy. The club presented Harvey Allan, president of the Opportunity Plan Inc., with a check for $2,200 representing proceeds from the sale of tickets and donations.

Milton "Buff" Morris, executive vice president of the Opportunity Plan, was also present and introduced one of the students who is now in school on the student loan plan that the club sponsors.

Cheryl McCarthy, who plans to go to nursing school next year, explained to the club members how a student gets the loan, sets up a budget and makes payments back to the Opportunity plan.

Morris stressed the only security provided by the students borrowing money on this plan is their own signature. Payments back to the plan begin as soon as the student finished school and each case is handled differently or as the individual's need arises.

Less than five per cent of all the money loaned over the past 20 years on the Opportunity Plan has been lost by non-payment. Since each student is responsible for his own loan, the sense of responsibility and accomplishment go hand in hand as encouragement to him to fulfill his obligations and enable someone else to go to school who might not be able to if the money were not available.

The Opportunity Plan Inc., Morris and his staff at W.T.S.U. provide opportunity to students in this Tri-State area to continue their education.

Mrs. Pape served refreshments to the 15 members present and their three guests, following the program.

CHECKING HER MAGNETISM? Faye Walker examines her image in mirrorlike surface of a magnetic recording disk—10 times smoother than a woman's hand mirror—which permits faster access to recorded material than conventional reels of tape.

First Lady's Image Maker Speaks Out

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Connie Stuart, the First Lady's staff director is becoming as quotable as lively Martha Mitchell on the Washington scene.

But she has the familiar complaint when she reads her sizzling wide swinging statements. She was misquoted or her words were taken out of context.

She's still telling White House newsmen that she did not call them "leeches" in a speech before a women's club in Ridgewood, N.J. She insists that wherever she was reported as deriding the press, she actually meant "politicians" on Capitol Hill.

That has not made the congressmen happy—especially at a time when President Nixon is attempting to pursue the high road of "bipartisanship" to put his program across.

The red-haired Mrs. Stuart came on like a ball of fire when she was appointed in October, 1969. She was billed as a first lady "image-maker."

But it does not seem likely that she was reflecting Pat Nixon's sentiments when she spoke last Saturday to a seminar on careers in communications before the American Women in Radio and Television, Inc.

She was quoted as telling job seeking women to "lie a little" on their resumes.

"I didn't say 'lie,'" said Mrs. Stuart when contacted later. "I said they could stretch the truth a little."

With such practical philosophy, Mrs. Stuart, at the age of 32 is the youngest first lady press secretary in history—and the highest paid, more than $30,000 a year.

Despite the pitfalls of the credibility gap—suffered greatly by the previous administration—Mrs. Stuart seems not to worry in advising others to "stretch the truth" when they're looking for a job.

Does she practice what she preaches? Mrs. Stuart runs a taut ship at the White House. Most of the time her staff is uptight. She refers to the press as "the enemy" behind the scenes and often lays down the law: "I am the boss."

She has high praise for Mrs. Nixon. "I love my boss," she said. "I've never worked for a woman before but Mrs. Nixon is one of the best employers I've ever had."

Mrs. Stuart and Mrs. Mitchell have had a feud for sometime, and while they are both vivacious outspoken women, the wife of the attorney general calls them as she sees them. Rarely does she tell reporters she has been misquoted.

Sale Of Italian Drug Forbidden

NEW YORK (UPI)—A recent injunction granted by a federal judge in Miami forbidding sale of an Italian-made drug for infringing an American firm's patent could have far reaching effects in the global pharmaceutical industry.

According to the London Financial Times, growth of the free world's medical drug industry has been slowing down because of skyrocketing research costs and diminishing patent protection.

In the eyes of big pharmaceutical firms in other countries, especially the United States, Italy has been the chief offender in breaking down patent protection.

Policeman's Lot May Be Safer With New Plastic Armour

NEW YORK (UPI)—The policeman's lot may become safer if not happier because of a new lightweight plastic body armor.

It also might be used by infantry soldiers as protection against mortar fire, the largest single cause of battle casualties.

For years, makers of law enforcement equipment and the defense industry have been trying to produce an effective body armor light enough so policemen and soldiers could wear it without losing mobility and agility.

Now, Imperial Protector Co. of Compton, Calif., says it has perfected such an armored vest made of polycarbonate produced by Rowland Products Inc., of Kensington, Conn.

The vest weighs only three and three-quarter pounds and can be worn under clothing without discomfort. It is being tested by 80 police departments in California and by the Army.

Imperial Protector says the vest is effective against all pistol fire except a high velocity magnum, and few criminals use magnums.

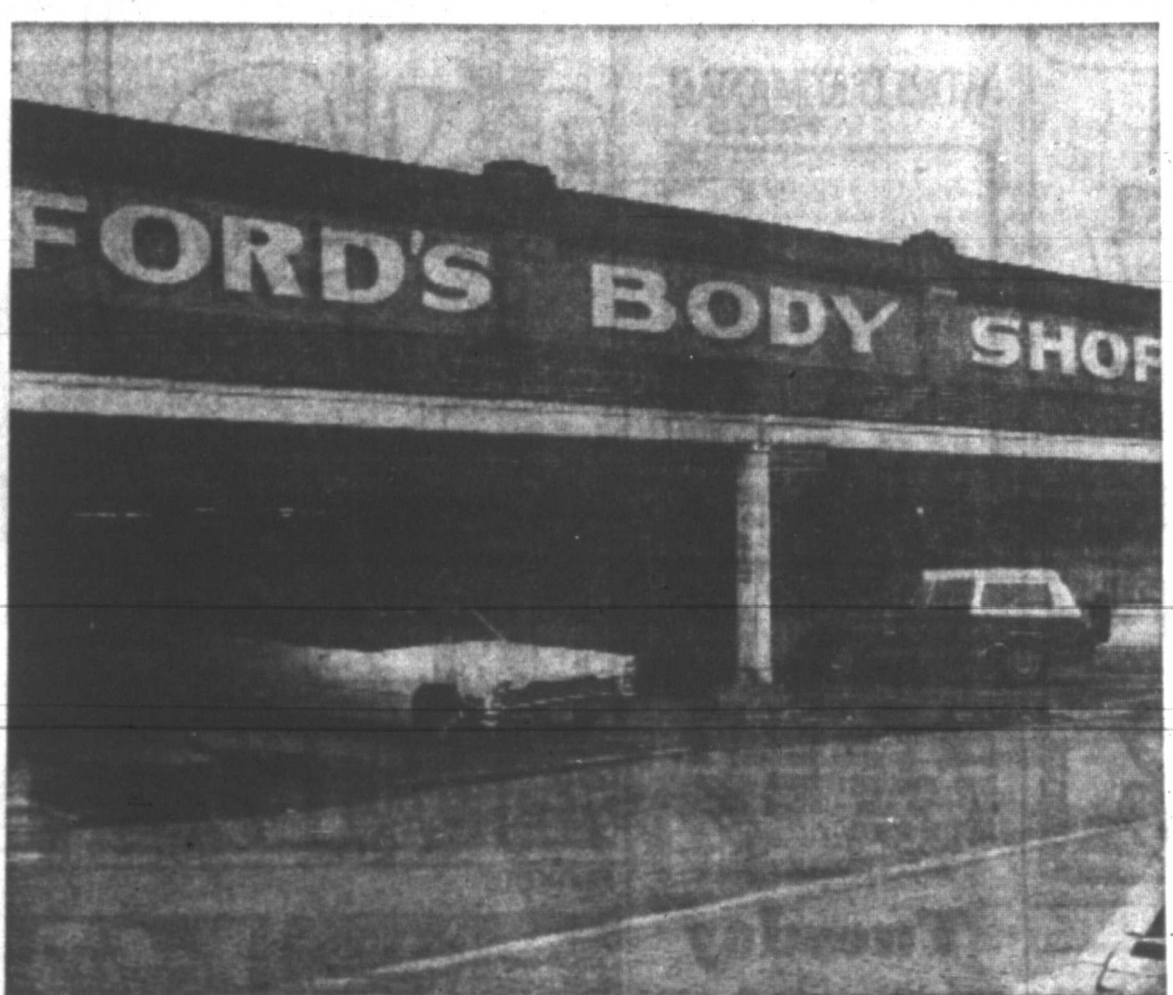

"The vest can stop up to five bullets landing close together without harming the policeman," said Henry Nagahori, president of Imperial. The vest costs less than $50.

According to Federal Laboratories division of Erezee Corporations at Saltsburg, Pa., and Bangor Punta Corp., major marketers of law enforcement supplies, police departments are concerned about getting an effective lightweight body armor.

The firms presently sell laminated steel vests weighing seven to 38 pounds and complete armored suits for bomb demolition squads. The steel armor costs $75 to $350. It will stop even magnum bullets but a cop can't run very fast or grapple with a suspect easily if he's burdened with 10 to 30 pounds of armor. Consequently sales of steel body armor are not large.

Pinkerton's, Inc. has come up with a lightweight bomb suppression blanket made of fireproofed high-tensile nylon guaranteed effective against almost any kind of bomb made by amateurs. It weighs 23 pounds and sells for $150.

Pinkerton's has sold it to manufacturers, retail stores, hospitals, universities, police departments, schools, airports and even a racetrack. Since there were more than 5,000 bombings in the United States last year, Pinkerton's foresees a good market.

Ford's Body Shop Is Center For Expert Repair Service

Coyle Ford, owner and manager of Ford's Body Shop, 111 N. Frost, believes in telling it like it is when it comes to newspaper advertising!

Telling it like it is, is saying that Ford's Body Shop is the best place in town when it comes to repair work on automobile exteriors.

Ford's Body Shop employees are there to do the job and do it like it should be. Every effort is put into each job. The customer's satisfaction is the most important phase of the operation. Every employee likes his particular line of work, and that means a lot, Ford says. Pride in professional work means better service for the customer.

Ford says, "My company provides a complete line of body work and has a wrecker service." A tiny dent in a fender, or a task of repairing major damaged to exteriors is given the same priority by Ford's.

With the summer storm season approaching, car owners should realize that hail damage can occur in the area. When and if your automobile sustains such damage, remember Ford's is the place to go to have the dents repaired and a new paint job applied.

The highest degree of professional skill will be employed in setting a damage repair estimate and in executing the physical repair.

Call day or night or weekends when wrecker services are required. Daytime telephone calls can be dialed at 665-1916 and the night number is 665-1610.

San Francisco Broadcaster Dies Of Heart Attack

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI)—Russ Hodges, who broadcasted New York and San Francisco Giants baseball games for 22 years, died Monday night at the age of 61.

The rotund veteran sportscaster was dead on arrival at Marin General Hospital after suffering a heart attack in his home in Mill Valley, across the Golden Gate from San Francisco.

Hodges retired from fulltime sportscasting last November and moved up to the Giants' front office as an assistant in the public relations department but continued to broadcast part-time.

One of Hodges' broadcasting trademarks was the phrase, "Bye bye, baby!" whenever a Giant hit a home run. Up until his retirement, he witnessed every one of Willie Mays' homers.

Hodges' most memorable broadcast was the National League pennant in 1951 when Bobby Thomson's home run won it for the Giants.

For fully two minutes afterward, Hodges screamed into the microphone: "The Giants win the pennant! The Giants win the pennant!"

In announcing his retirement last year, Hodges said, "The traveling, the constancy, the physical and mental punishment of play-by-play just caught up with me."

Harvester Title Hopes Placed Against Sandies

The Pampa Harvesters set their title hopes on the line this afternoon as they play host to the Amarillo Sandies. The Harvesters will start play against the cellar dwelling team at 4 p.m. in Optimist Park.

Last week the Harvesters were stung by the Palo Duro Dons as they were downed 14 to 2. The Dons had lost their first two openers, before bouncing back and winning the next two games in a row.

Pampa had been sailing on a three win no loss record before meeting the Dons.

Amarillo has yet to win an outing but could be a tougher team than Pampa expects. The Harvesters are presently in a three way tie for first place in District 3-AAAA baseball. All have a three win, one loss conference record.

The race for first place tightened with the Palo Duro victory over the Harvesters as now the Pampa team almost have to win the remainder of their games.

Borger and Tascosa, the other leaders, are squaring off in Amarillo on Tascosa field. There is no favorite in that, air off as each team is capable of the win.

Today's games will finish the first round of the double round robin eliminations.

Probable starting pitches for the Harvesters will be either Jeff Hogan or Larry Knuteson. Hogan had pitched the Harvesters to their first three conference victories while Knuteson was being primarily used for relief duties.

Ricky Harris was the losing pitcher in the Palo Duro game with Knuteson and Mike Edgar being used before the final inning.

Pampa has shown a lot of promise this season and should go the distance for the district crown, if they can overcome a few basic mistakes and can rely on a strong pitching staff.

ONE MORE AUTO NEW YORK (UPI)—Sport magazine announced Monday that it will follow the practice it has adopted for pro football, baseball and basketball by awarding a new automobile to the Most Valuable Player in the final round of the National Hockey League playoffs.

Surprise Ending For NBA Rookie Of Year

NEW YORK (UPI)—Dave Cowens of Boston and Geoff Petrie of Portland, two players who didn't make the All-America college team but became surprise stars in the pros, finished in a tie for the National Basketball Association Rookie of the Year award.

In the balloting announced today, Cowens and Petrie each received 36 votes from sportswriters and sportscasters in the 17 league cities.

Pete Maravich, who had problems adjusting to the pro style of play after being the leading scorer in college at Louisiana State for three straight years, finished third with 21 votes. Calvin Murphy of San Diego got four votes and Bob Lanier of Detroit had just one.

Cowens and Petrie were the first players ever to tie for the award which was inaugurated in 1963 and has been won by such stars as Elgin Baylor (1969), Wilt Chamberlain (1960), Oscar Robertson (1961), Willis Reed (1965), Rick Barry (1966), Earl Monroe (1968), Wes Unseld (1969) and Lew Alcindor (1970).

Petrie was a college star at Princeton but seldom got much recognition outside of Ivy League ranks. He also had the disadvantage of playing for Portland, an expansion team. But he became the seventh rookie in NBA history to score more than 2,000 points as his 2,031 ranked him seventh in the league with a 24.8 average.

"The whole year was unbelievable," Petrie said. "I couldn't have dreamed it any better."

He admitted he was "surprised, really surprised" that he tied for the rookie award. "I thought Cowens might get it because he got off to such a great start."

Cowens played his college ball at Florida State and he had the sizeable task of playing the center spot that was occupied on the Celtics for 13 years by Bill Russell. At 6-foot-8½, he also gives away many inches to most of the other centers in the league but he made up for his lack of height with hustle.

And his spirited play was one of the main reasons why the Celtics improved by 10 games this season. They were 44-33 this year compared to 34-48 last year when they first had to adjust to Russell's absence.

"Because I give away some height, I try to use my quickness," Cowens said, "and one of the things I had to learn was that I have to get my position earlier."

Red Auerbach, one of the shrewdest judges of talent in the league, was impressed with Cowens' play and lobbied for him all year for the rookie award.

"Talking about kids coming to play, Cowens is all over the court," he said. Auerbach first spotted Cowens' talents in a college game against Dayton. "When I scouted him, he was so good that I kept hoping he'd make a mistake. There were half a dozen other scouts there. I figured if they saw the same potential in Cowens that I did, he wouldn't be available to us."

But Cowens was available when Boston picked fourth in the draft and Petrie was available when Portland picked eighth.

Those selections turned out to be two of the best of last season.

Bullets Knock Out Knicks For NBA Title, Milwaukee Is Next

BALTIMORE (UPI)—Baltimore said Earl Monroe, who scored more than 26 points for Baltimore, including the go ahead basket with 2:34 remaining, as Baltimore dethroned the defending National Basketball Association champion 93-91 Monday night.

"He picked it just right," Monroe added, "The two games the Knicks won in New York, the pair we took in Baltimore and the other results."

Carter shrugged off his "good fortune" by calling the fall of the cards "sheer coincidence." "Carter is a card sharp," although it neatly worked with Philadelphia, too, when I said we'd win four in a row and we only won three straight."

Coach Gene Shue says, with a smile: "Me, I pray to God. That's where I get my strength."

Shue did some tall praying during the last 11 seconds of the game when the Knicks called time out to plan their strategy for a tying basket.

"I reviewed the game with the team during the time out and told them we've worked darn hard all season to get where we are," Shue said. "I said 'We have a two-point lead, let's not lose it now.'"

The Knicks planned to have Willis Reed set up a pick for Dick Barnett or Walt Frazier, but Wes Unseld broke it up and partially blocked Bill Bradley's last shot.

Shue said the Bullets, trailing 47-43, had "to come out strong for the third quarter. Reed was doing a remarkable job despite playing with great pain and he was the cohesive factor in putting the Knicks ahead."

A foul shot by Jack Marin Wes Unseld's tap-in and Carter's unopposed lay-up down the middle gave Baltimore a 48-47 margin with 10:38 gone in the third quarter. A foul shot by Reed with 8:11 remaining gave New York a 53-52 edge, but Unseld got that back immediately with a turn-around over Reed's left side.

Baltimore retained the lead until Barnett drove down the lane for a layup that sent New York in front 88-87 with 2:44 remaining in the game. The lead lasted exactly 10 seconds before Monroe's soft jumper from the key put Baltimore in front for good at 89-88. Carter's 19-footer for a 93-89 lead proved to be the decisive basket as the Knicks could then only muster Frazier's field goal that provided the final score.

Dave DeBusschere's shot with 33 seconds remaining and Bradley's off-balance attempt were the Knicks' dying gasps. "It was a heck of a struggle and it was remarkable we were able to win with Gus Johnson and (Kevin) Loughery hurt," said Shue. "The series could have gone either way. I sincerely can't describe how pleased I am for the players and myself. It was a grueling defensive game. Our players really overcame a lot this year and I know the Knicks have, too. But our club was magnificent."

Shue told Monroe to take charge and "that we were going with him right down to the buzzer." Monroe responded with his recently acquired "Gung Ho" attitude that first destroyed Philadelphia's playoff hopes and then vanquished the Knicks. He expects to continue in the same fashion against Milwaukee. The Bucks-Bullets best-of-seven title series opens in Milwaukee Wednesday night.

"Tonight's win makes up for a lot of things and also puts money in our pockets, said Monroe. The teams play for a record winners' purse of $90,000. The losers get $60,000. Last year, the divvy was $48,000-$32,000.

The Knicks think Baltimore can go all the way. The Bullets overcame Barnett's 26-point final game performance and a 24-point effort by Reed and that's enough to set New York players thinking Baltimore is unstoppable.

"Monroe made the big difference in the Baltimore victory," said Bradley in pointing out the fact that "Earl the Pearl" was a gem in the rough. "At one time you could count on Monroe passing off only about five per cent of the time. You can't double team him now because he's passing off a lot more."

Monroe finished the game with six assists, tops for both clubs. Reed, who courageously bore up under pain of a sprained front for good at 89-88. Carter's 19-footer for a 93-89 lead proved to be the decisive basket as the Knicks could then only muster Frazier's field goal that provided the final score.

Dave DeBusschere's shot with 33 seconds remaining and Bradley's off-balance attempt were the Knicks' dying gasps. "It was a heck of a struggle and it was remarkable we were able to win with Gus Johnson and (Kevin) Loughery hurt," said Shue. "The series could have gone either way. I sincerely can't describe how savoring this victory."

Yarbrough Moves To Formula Car Racing

NEW YORK (UPI)—Leroy Yarbrough, a frustrated star on the Southern Stock Car Circuit, has joined the rich United States Auto Club championship trail with the goal of someday fulfilling "a lifelong dream I've sort of always had to win the Indianapolis 500".

One of the biggest names on the National Association for Stock Car Racing's southern circuit, Yarbrough was frustrated in attempts to find a suitable car to drive ever since the major manufacturers pulled out their support of the sport at the end of last season.

Yarbrough joined another former NASCAR star, Cale Yarborough, who made the switch earlier this year.

The News believes each and every person would get more satisfaction in the long run if he were permitted to spend what he earns on a volunteer basis rather than having part of it distributed involuntarily.

The Opulent Society

It was in 1958 that economist John Kenneth Galbraith first characterized America as "the affluent society."

Since then, two population censuses have been taken, and on the basis of the most recent one a writer now suggests that for a vast number of American families — current inflation and recession notwithstanding — the affluent society appears to have become "the opulent society."

In the past decade, noted Jack Rosenthal in the New York Times, the average family's earnings increased from $6,900 to $9,400. These are "real" dollars, after adjustment for inflation.

According to the Census Bureau, Americans used this money to buy a wide array of consumer goods. Many, if they already had one item, bought two.

For example, since 1960 the proportion of families with one car rose from 75 to 80 per cent. But the proportion with more than one car nearly doubled, to about 30 percent.

As a result, more American families now have two cars than have none.

The proportion of families with one television set rose from 90 per cent in 1960 to 95 per cent in 1970, which is almost exactly the proportion of families with indoor toilets.

Families with two or more television sets went from 17 to 29 percent. The average family now has five radios, compared with three in 1960.

Comparable ownership gains were recorded for other appliances, from home hair dryers to electric carving knives. As Rosenthal points out, however, such gains tend to mask the deep poverty that endures among 10 per cent of American families.

Consider that while 96 per cent of families with incomes over $15,000 have at least one car (63 per cent have two), only 41 per cent of families with incomes under $3,000 have cars.

Among the over-$15,000 families, 85 per cent own their own homes; among the under-$3,000 families, 50 per cent do.

And while nearly 92 per cent of all American families own a washing machine, only about half the under-$3,000 families do.

The census figures also obscure poverty in other ways. They do not reflect the age of appliances nor the fact that many poor people are dependent upon those provided by landlords. The appliances used by the poor are often old and in deteriorated condition.

Yet Americans who are still not affluent and are a long, long way from opulence also made gains. The 10 per cent of families classified as poor represents a sharp drop from the 1960 poverty total of 18 per cent.

Not A Second To Spare

For the first time in history, the average person can afford a watch that will keep time more accurately than the average person will probably ever want to keep it.

The advent in 1960 of a wrist watch using a battery-powered tuning fork in place of the conventional spring-driven balance wheel was the first major technological innovation in several centuries. The fork vibrates 360 times a second, 144 times the rate of a balance wheel. That's more than 31 million times a day.

They've gone about as far as they can go. Or have they? "The whole history of timekeeping," observes watchmaker Harry Bulova Henshel, "has been man dividing time into smaller and smaller intervals — and for more and more purposes."

An example is the precise time measurement needed in spacecraft, such as devices that cut off rocket fuel.

Henshel's company, which developed the first tuning fork watch, the Accutron, marketed a watch last year with a quartz crystal that vibrates 8,192 times a second. You can have it for $1,325 (plus tax).

His company has also experimented with a tuning fork clock that is corrected every four hours by a satellite passing overhead.

The satellite electronically reads the clock on the ground, compares the reading with the time its circuits say that it should be over the spot on earth, and then beams back any necessary correction. It is not inconceivable that personal watches in the future could be kept in time the same way.

The satellite clock has an accuracy of 86 one-millionths of a second. Nuclear physicists, of course, fool around not only with millionths but billionths of a second.

But the really exciting field of the future, thinks Henshel, is somehow to tap the body's own biological "clock."

"Everybody has experienced this clock," he says. "Animals live it, too. And sometimes it's amazingly accurate. You decide when you go to bed that you're going to wake up at seven in the morning — and you do."

How does the body's built-in timepiece work? What internal processes are involved? Would it be possible to hook an external dial to it? If so, might the watchmaker of tomorrow also be a neurosurgeon?

Time, undoubtedly, will tell.

Selective Non-Service

The United States Supreme Court made an important decision when it ruled that conscientious objection to a specific war only is not sufficient cause for exemption from military service.

With only one dissent, the Court held constitutional the protested congressional action which ruled out "selective" objection, and authorized exemption only for those who were "conscientiously opposed to participation in war in any form."

The dissent was from Justice William O. Douglas, and seemed to miss the point in question, says California Feature Service. Douglas argued that whether an individual's abhorrence of killing is a product of religious faith or individual conscience, the First Amendment's guarantee of freedom of religion should shield him from conscription into a war that he believes to be unjust.

One is inclined to wonder how an individual who abhors killing could find any war just. Which is actually the point made by the Congress and the court majority.

For example, one of the two defendants involved in the decision claimed CO exemption on the basis of the war in Vietnam being unjust; but admitted he would fight to defend the United States or in a peace-keeping effort by the United Nations. He would, in other words, trust the United Nations' morality more than he would that of the United States.

Q—Why is the holly tree so sensitive to injury?

A—It has no true outer bark so its smooth gray surface is very sensitive to injury and sunburn.

Q—Does the Bible mention rice?

A—No, but ancient records show that the Greeks learned of it around 326 B.C., when Alexander the Great invaded India.

It is not without significance that in the weeks preceding the massive "peace" demonstrations planned for this month and next, the Federal Bureau of Investigation has come under especially heavy attack from the New Left's political allies and ultra-liberal elements in the media. The FBI is the nation's principal agency for uncovering criminal, subversive activities. If the FBI is inhibited, the revolutionary organizations that mask as "peace" groups will have a much greater opportunity to achieve their objectives.

For months, the nation's most respected law-enforcement agency has been the target of abuse from spokesmen for the "peace" movement. Those who oppose indictment of persons charged with conspiracy to kidnap presidential aide Dr. Henry Kissinger have been especially noisy in their condemnation of the FBI. Life Magazine, in its April 9 issue, adopted the position of the "peace" militants, deploring FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover's "preoccupation with the surveillance of student groups" and saying that the Bureau's function is "under serious question."

The FBI isn't being questioned by millions of Americans who rightly regard the Bureau as the model law enforcement agency and a bulwark against bombers and protesters seeking to terrorize the United States. Atty. Gen. John Mitchell undoubtedly spoke for law-abiding citizens when he said attacks on Mr. Hoover consist of "slandering falsehoods and the most vicious kind of name-calling."

An example of vicious commentary on the FBI is an article by Tom Wicker, Associate Editor of The New York Times, in Life. He wrote that "it now seems likely that they (FBI officials) did almost as much to create the threat (of internal communism) — in the public mind as they did to root it out in the courts."

Contrary to what Mr. Wicker suggests, the revolutionary threat is real. Certainly, there is nothing unreal about the bombing of the U.S. Capitol and the Army Mathematics Center at the University of Wisconsin.

Equally menacing — and equally in need of FBI surveillance — are the "peace" protests scheduled to begin April 24 and climax May 1, the traditional communist day of celebration, and May 2, anniversary of the Kent State riot.

These demonstrations were planned by a meeting of leftists at Ann Arbor, Mich., Feb. 5-7 of this year. This spring offensive by the radicals is likely to be on a scale far beyond anything the United States has experienced. The thrust of the May Day protests will be to demoralize the U.S. government and people and produce instant capitulation in Southeast Asia.

It is important that the FBI be strongly supported in its vital surveillance of the New Left. These intelligence operations are the only way of preventing the spread of urban terrorist warfare against the American people.

The country needs something more, of course. It needs a coordinated campaign by the federal government to reveal the statements and objectives of those who have organized the spring offensive. If President Nixon went on Television to tell who planned the offensive and describe the political and psychological objectives of the New Left, the effectiveness of the radical war from within would be greatly reduced.

Unless President Nixon takes action to neutralize the radical offensive, the United States is likely to suffer more strife.

U.S. In Danger Of Losing Advantage In Technology

By BRUCE BLOSSAT

WASHINGTON (NEA) — This country is in some danger of losing its world advantage as the possessor of the highest technology among all its principal trading competitors.

For those who currently see "technology" as the enemy of the environment and of life, the question may be, "So what?"

The answer is just as simple as the question. We need our superiority in technology to keep healthy economically as a nation.

Obviously we, and other countries as well, now must find a way to eat our cake and have it, too. We can no longer consider technology apart from its possibly harmful environmental effects. We must spend the resources required to make and keep air and water clean.

Yet we cannot treat technology as some hated adversary. It is a key element in our economic growth — and growth we must have. Otherwise we might reach a point where we could say our waters are not stagnant any more — but we are.

If this has the ring of primaeval, so does the war against technology.

By volume, we are by far the greatest trading nation on earth. Exports mean more in percentage terms to West Germany, Britain, Canada, France, Japan and others than they do to us. But our present yearly total upwards of $38 billion is at once enormous and of major significance to us.

Our agriculture and some of our industries must sell a sizable part of output abroad to stay in solid shape. Moreover, we are inevitably a heavy importing nation, and we have to sell to keep some kind of rough balance with our trading partners.

Foreign economics experts point out here that our selling advantage has been greatest where high technology has played a decisive role. In agriculture it permits us to produce immense quantities of generally good quality foodstuffs at less cost than others. In the electrical, electronic, machinery and chemical fields, to name a few, it allows us to produce sophisticated things unmatched by most others.

To Europe, and most particularly to economically disadvantaged eastern Europe, our incredible advances in computers have been the symbol of superiority. They are envied as "door-openers" — as the means of access to many other crucial economic advances.

Nevertheless, though we continue to bedazzle other lands with our 70,000 computers, our margins in high technology are diminishing. Jerome Wiesner, president of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, warns that West Germany and Japan may be catching and surpassing us in some fields.

agricultural lands today are pushing into low technology industries and carving out a piece of the market.

This, say the experts, has a double impact upon us. Plainly, to maintain a solid world trading position, we have to emphasize high technology products more than ever.

But the pressures that are taking away our markets for less-sophisticated goods and giving them to the "developing" nations are also at work upon countries like Japan and West Germany. They, too, feel the heat. Understandably, their response is to push harder in high technology fields, and this puts them in stiff competition with us.

Warnings like Wiesner's may indicate we are breaking out of our complacent, self-congratulatory mood. At stake is not our being able to keep on saying "We're No. 1." The issue is our need to maintain a healthy economic potential which is critical to all our hopes of eliminating poverty, easing sickness and lifting the blight on our cities.

Three senators are trying to crack the sex barrier — they want Girls! Girls! Girls!

Senators Javits, Harris and Percy each named girl pages months ago but they can't get sworn in because the Rules Committee hasn't authorized it.

The situation remains in limbo — so the three wise men are going to take the matter directly to the senate floor for a vote on the girl page boys.

There is little doubt the measure will add a new twist to the senate and will inveigle more senators to be on hand for roll call in the future. Think of the pretty lassies, sitting on the Senate Podium steps in miniskirts....

How many drooping eyelids of the senators will snap open wide when the girl pages are started by the pounding of the chairman's gavel?

Imagine the by-play, with three girls sitting amongst the 27 teen-age boys on the podium, waiting the beck and call of their particular senator for a drink of water to wet parched lips....

And where will the young girls live, coming from Illinois, Oklahoma and New York? At a salary of $7,380 per year, which ain't hay for a 16-year-old miss, I imagine they can find a place....

Increased Work Enlarges Heart

Dear Dr. Lamb—What causes an enlarged heart? And what should one do if he already has one. Is there anything that can be done to prevent a person from developing an enlarged heart?

Dear Reader—The heart is enlarged if there is an increased amount of heart muscle or the volume of the heart chambers is increased.

Anything that increases the work of the heart or its volume will increase its size. Sometimes this is associated with good health, for example, an endurance athlete who competes in long distance running often has a slow resting heart rate and the volume of the heart is very large. We think this kind of enlargement of the heart is healthy.

The heart can also be enlarged when the rate slows because of a defect in its normal electrical mechanism. This is usually caused by diseases in the arteries to the heart muscle. High blood pressure or any defect in the heart valves that causes the heart to work inefficiently, can cause it to enlarge. The heart muscle is stretched or increased in size in heart failure. The most common cause for heart enlargement is the same disease of the arteries to the heart muscle that causes heart attacks — fatty deposits in the walls of the arteries.

Now — What to do about an enlarged heart if you already have one? Well, if you are an endurance athlete training for the Olympics, you should be glad, you might make the team. Heart failure can be treated with medicines that help to restore normal strength to the heart and reduce its size. Decreasing high-blood pressure may decrease heart size. If there is disease in the arteries to the heart, it is not too late to start a preventive program to prevent any further change and perhaps get some improvement in the condition that already exists. This means weight reduction and restriction of the amount of fat and calories in the diet.

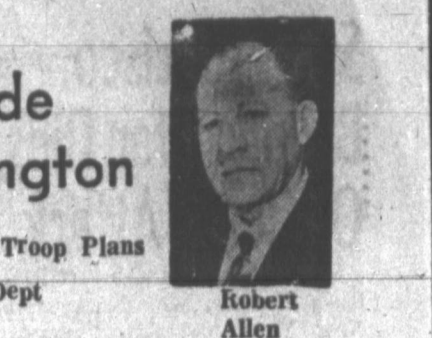

If the heart is enlarged because of damaged heart valves, you have to depend on your doctor's recommendation. In selected cases, surgery might even be advisable.

How do you prevent developing an enlarged heart? The best practical approaches are the things I have stressed repeatedly — don't smoke cigarettes, don't get fat and if you are fat, get rid of it and do plenty of regular exercise.

Enlarged hearts with damaged valves from rheumatic heart disease are less common today because rheumatic fever is well-controlled by the proper treatment of streptococcal infections like "strep throat" with penicillin. So get proper medical treatment for a severe sore throat or strep throat when it occurs.

Nixon Based Troop Plans On In-Di-Dept

WASHINGTON — President Nixon's troop withdrawal announcement was based, in part, on an exhaustive review of the war-making resources which can be made available to North Vietnamese units in Cambodia and South Vietnam in months ahead.

The three-week review began with an attempt to establish what resources were actually available to the North Vietnamese in the past year. Estimates were included for supplies and equipment which had been landed at Sihanoukville and procured locally in Cambodia, as well as those brought down the Ho Chi Minh trails.

Then the coming year's availabilities were projected, using data on supplies and equipment destroyed by the strikes in Cambodia and Laos. Of course, the projections for the coming year reflected no procurement in Cambodia and no materials reaching Vietnam through the Cambodian port city.

The review assumed that the Ho Chi Minh trail network will be fully available to Hanoi until the end of May (a very generous estimate of the beginning of the rainy season). It assumed, also generously, that the oil pipelines in the trail area, which were cut during the Laos strike, will be fully available to Hanoi.

One finding of this post-Laos review was that North Vietnam will have to replace many thousands of tons of guns and ammunition which had been brought to South Vietnam through Sihanoukville and additional thousands of tons of food and other supplies which had been obtained in Cambodia.

Generally, the review concluded that, even under the stated assumptions favorable to North Vietnam, Hanoi can make available only those resources needed to continue a protracted warfare strategy in South Vietnam and Cambodia during the months ahead.

HIGHS AND LOWS—That does not mean, in the view of White House sources, that the North Vietnamese effort will everywhere subside into small unit guerilla tactics. By skimping on supplies for some areas, the North Vietnamese can generate military high points in other areas, and they are expected to do so.

One rule of thumb which has proved serviceable in Vietnam is that insurgency operations—operations in which Viet Cong and North Vietnamese live off the land and fade away with daylight—cannot continue effectively when an area is considered 75 per cent or more under government control. Most of the provinces in the III and IV Corps areas of South Vietnam, in the southern portion of the country, are now listed in the 75 per cent category. So the major effort of the North Vietnamese is expected in the northern part of South Vietnam in the months ahead.

However, another conclusion of the post-Laos review is, as noted, that Hanoi will not be able to mount a sustained general offensive in those northern provinces this year, as it could have done had there been no drive into Laos.

Finally, it was concluded that if the North Vietnamese wanted to mount a major offensive in 1972—an offensive which would precede the presidential election here—then Hanoi will have to spend much of the next dry season building up its stocks and caches to support such a general offensive.

UNDERSTATED IN PAST—President Nixon and his advisers are well aware that the resources of the North Vietnamese have often been underestimated by U.S. policy makers. The post-Laos review, which contributed to the President's troop withdrawal decision, is not being touted as more than the best available judgment.

It is being privately stressed, however, that the review does represent the best reasoned view of what is ahead—based on the best available current estimates. There is good reason to believe that the review was very carefully conducted to avoid the distortions of rose-colored spectacles.

Mr. Nixon knows that each withdrawal of U.S. troops from Vietnam leaves a smaller U.S. contingent for use there. With each withdrawal decision there is a greater risk incurred if the abilities of South Vietnam prove to be overestimated and North Vietnam's are underrated. Mr. Nixon knows that better than anyone.

So the President, whatever his critics may say about his reading of the future, is investing very heavily in it. White House sources say the setting everywhere subside into small unit guerilla tactics. By skimping on supplies for some areas, the North Vietnamese can generate military high points in other areas, and they are expected to do so.

Whatever the doubts of his detractors, Mr. Nixon does believe the time is drawing measurably near when South Vietnam can face up to North Vietnam alone and have a reasonable chance of survival as a free nation. He is acting on that basis, and risking far more in the process than his critics.

How About That Moondust?

By PAUL HARVEY
Our moonships are kicking up a cloud of moondust and it's settling all over you!

For example: Science, learning to monitor from a distance the heartbeats of spacemen, is now able, from a distance, to check your heart — with a similar gadget attached to your home telephone.

Doctors developed a device to distribute a man's weight for practice moonwalking; now that device enables cripples to relearn earthwalking.

When a big rocket lifts off from Cape Kennedy it looks like a lot of money going up, in smoke. It isn't. The money it takes to build that bird is in the pockets of American workers in Seattle or Fort Worth or San Diego.

In the hospital when a tracheotomy tube clogged, you used to strangle to death. Now, instead, an alarm sounds and help comes. Our space medics divided the integrated circuitry which sounds that alarm.

Now there is an electric switch operated by the movement of the eyeballs. Developed for spacemen, adapted to make the helpless paraplegic less helpless.

Next time you hear some demonstrator demand that "the money we waste on space be spent helping poor people," remember the poor guy in that wheelchair.

A living-cell analyzer designed to detect any life on Mars has been applied to counting blood cells, improving life on earth.

Laser beams, another byproduct of space research, allow painless, bloodless eye surgery.

Where do you think you got that ultrathin, high-strength aluminum foil you are now using in your kitchen? That's "moondust."

And the aluminum plastic developed for superinsulation up there is already in use down here for pocket-size blankets, rescue windbreaks, water containers.

For the second stage of the Saturn 5 we had to learn how to make a perfect weld automatically, and with 100 per cent penetration. We did. Now earth machinery is made that way.

Glass fabrics developed by the Apollo program now provide unburnable theater curtains.

Lightweight plastics, metal adhesives, improved tire tread, infrared photography, fuel cells, communications satellites — all these have been adapted and adopted for earth use.

And hundreds more products and techniques you will be using tomorrow are being perfected today on the way to the next mission.

How you like all that moondust? Neil Armstrong's first step for man was indeed a giant step for mankind!
