For Military Draft...

Supreme Court Excludes Girls From Registering

WASHINGTON (AP) — Women can be excluded from military draft registration and any military draft, the Supreme Court ruled today.

By a 6-3 vote, the justices ruled that the Military Selective Service Act is constitutional.

Today's decision overturned a lower court's ruling that the act is an unconstitutional form of sexual discrimination against men.

The nation's highest court said Congress can require young men to register for possible military service and require them to serve even though young women face no such obligations.

Noting that Congress enjoys the greatest deference from the courts in matters of national defense, Justice William H. Rehnquist wrote for the court: "Men and women, because of the combat restrictions on women, are simply not similarly situated for the purposes of a draft or registration for a draft."

Rehnquist added that "the exemption of women from registration is not only sufficiently but closely related to Congress' purpose in authorizing registration."

"The fact that Congress and the executive have decided that women should not serve in combat fully justifies Congress in not authorizing their registration," he said, "since the purpose of registration is to develop a pool of potential combat troops."

Rehnquist was joined by Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and Justices Potter Stewart, Harry A. Blackmun, Lewis F. Powell and John Paul Stevens.

Justices William J. Brennan, Byron R. White and Thurgood Marshall dissented.

In a biting opinion, Marshall charged that the court "categorically excludes women from a fundamental civic obligation" and added, "The court today places its imprimatur on one of the most potent remaining public expressions of ancient canards about the proper role of women."

In a separate opinion, White said, "I perceive little, if any, indication that Congress itself concluded that every position in the military, no matter how far removed from combat, must be filled with combat-ready men."

Brennan signed both dissenting opinions.

A three-judge federal court in Philadelphia ruled last year that the 1949 law harbored unconstitutional sex discrimination. The ruling struck down the entire act, which includes provisions for induction as well as registration.

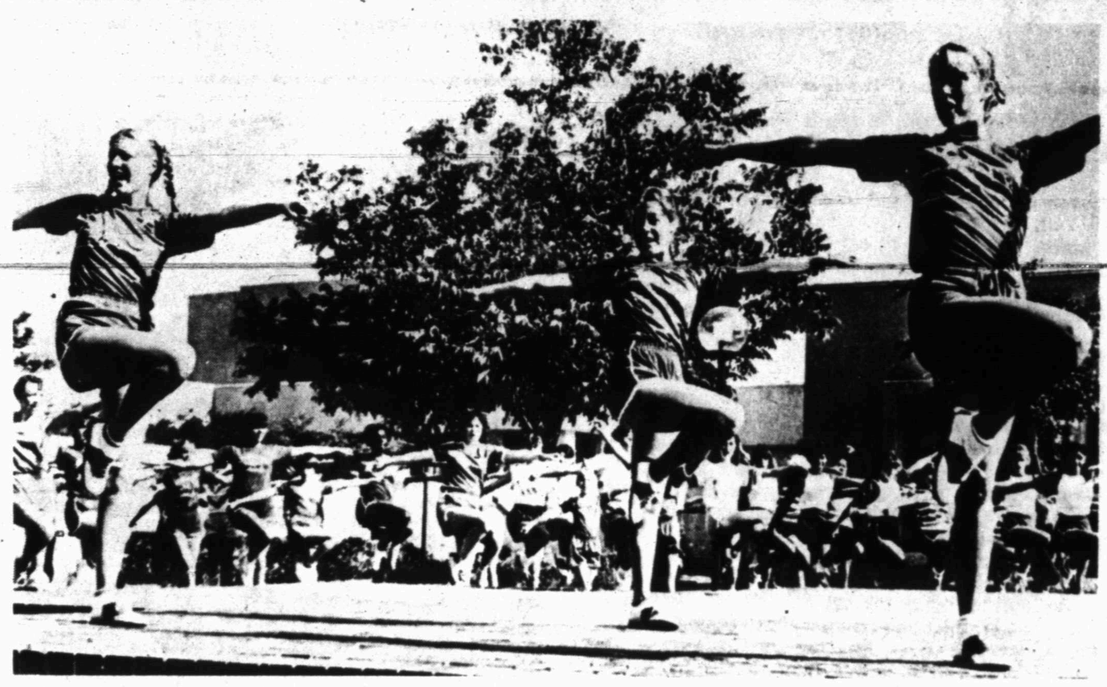

The original lawsuit challenging the draft dates back to 1971, when three young Pennsylvania men sued as a protest to the Vietnam war. The suit had gone virtually unnoticed in the federal courts for years but came to the fore when draft registration resumed.

The three men were able to keep their case alive by virtue of one portion of the act making men previously deferred from the draft eligible for conscription until age 35.

There has been no military draft since 1973. Draft registration was ended in 1975 but reinstated in July 1980 by then-President Carter in response to the presence of Soviet troops in Afghanistan. At that time, Congress flatly refused to include women in the registration.

More than 5 million young men have registered in the last year, after the government per-

Napa County Inferno Is Almost Under Control

NAPA, Calif. (AP) — The Napa County inferno that caused $36 million damage as it scorched 23,000 acres and 52 homes is almost conquered, nearly three days after it was ignited by an arsonist's matchbooks.

With the fire 90 percent contained and half extinguished, only 400 to 600 firefighters manned the lines Wednesday night, said Paul Schaden, spokesman for the California Department of Forestry.

"We'll probably continue to work the fire for a week and possibly longer" to douse lingering sparks and embers, Schaden said.

As many as 1,600 people, armed with everything from air tankers to wet burlap bags, battled the county's largest fire in 17 years as it raged across brush, oak and chapparal in the mountains forming the eastern boundary of the lush wine country.

Arson investigators continued to search for the culprit behind the blaze, which started about 1:30 p.m. Monday as four small fires set along the Silverado Trail. Lighted cigarettes inside matchbooks were used in at least two cases, officials said.

Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. declared a state of emergency in the area Wednesday and said the federal government would be asked to provide low-interest loans to help residents rebuild.

"That was quite a fire. What a blaze," said the governor. He circled the area for about 20 minutes in a plane and walked through thick ash at a burned-out home, viewing twisted wrought-iron chair frames and the chalky rubble of stucco.

Cooler weather and morning fog Wednesday helped firefighters tame the blaze, which had been driven by 50 mph winds over land tinder-dry from a nine-day heat spell.

The intense heat of the fire, which ate through 7,000 acres in its first hour, devoured homes in minutes as firefighters watched helplessly. Towering clouds of smoke colored the sunset for hundreds of miles.

The fierce winds also prevented what could have been greater disaster — they drove the fire away from the area holding some of the nation's most prestigious wineries and vineyards.

Although the fire came within feet of a few vineyards, none was reported damaged.

At least 120 structures, 12 automobiles and eight motorcycles were destroyed, officials said. Twelve people, including three firefighters, were injured, none seriously. The average value of the homes destroyed was $200,000, officials said.

The cost of fighting the blaze during the first two days was pegged at $717,314, not including food and fuel, Schaden said.

Hundreds of people fled their homes and flames blocked scores of others who tried to save their belongings. Deer, other wildlife and cattle were killed when they couldn't outrace the flames.

As homes burned in minutes, "We had to tell people, 'Sorry, we can't do anything. We must move on,'" said Fire Capt. Mike Edwards.

More Tax Relief For Some...

Demos Unveil New Plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Finance Committee is preparing to give President Reagan the tax-cut bill he wants, while House Democrats are unveiling a substitute offering more relief for persons earning less than $50,000 a year.

Despite their disagreements on most parts of Reagan's tax plan, House and Senate tax committees are both recommending tax incentives for savings. Both have voted to allow individuals to earn $1,000 tax-free in a special savings plan.

The Republican-controlled Finance Committee, which had to postpone final action on the president's plan Wednesday after members began pressing for special-interest tax breaks, headed for a final vote today.

And Democrats on the House Ways and Means Committee planned to offer details of their proposal for cutting individual taxes. Instead of Reagan's three-year, 25 percent, across-the-board reduction, Democrats are calling for a two-year plan focusing on extra relief for couples and individuals with annual incomes below $50,000.

However, the full committee is not expected to begin voting on personal tax cuts until after returning from the Fourth of July recess.

The Ways and Means Committee voted 29-3 Wednesday to allow individuals to avoid taxes on up to $1,000 in interest from a new one-year savings certificate. Couples could exempt $2,000. The certificates could be issued only during the year beginning next Oct. 1.

The Finance Committee approved similar legislation Monday. While the House plan permits only savings institutions dealing in home mortgages to offer the certificates, the Senate version would be available to any bank, savings and loan association or credit union.

The savings certificates would pay interest equal to 70 percent of the rate earned on one-year Treasury bills. If the Treasury-bill rate were 15 percent, for example, the special certificate could pay 10.5 percent. Since that amount would be tax-free, it would be attractive to anyone whose tax bracket is 30 percent or higher.

To pay for the new certificate, both committees agreed to change an existing law allowing a person $200 and a couple $400 in tax-exempt interest or dividends. Starting next Jan. 1, that exemption would apply only to dividends and at half the current levels.

In a second effort to spur savings, the Ways and Means Committee voted to liberalize tax-deferred Individual Retirement Accounts, just as the Finance Committee already has done.

The SDN Column

One of the items listed for special attention in federal tax laws this year is the so-called "marriage tax."

This is the penalty that married couples pay on April 15 each year for going through a marriage ceremony.

It could not have been devised anywhere except Washington, or perhaps it might be possible in Austin. And you can get all kinds of explanations, or excuses, as to why it came about. You also cannot find a politician in Washington who disagrees when you complain that it is unjust.

But so far, nobody has done anything about it.

If you doubt that the marriage tax exists, just get yourself an income tax form, pretend that you and your spouse are both employed and that your combined income is $20,000 per year. Fill it out, taking the standard deductions. Then, take the same form and pretend that you are single and making $20,000 per year. Fill it out in the same manner. If you didn't make an error on either of your returns, they should reveal that the married couples' tax on the $20,000 is $391 greater than that of the single person. And, of course the higher the income, the greater the discrepancy. This indicates that Uncle Sam figures two can live cheaper than one.

The big mystery, however, is why married couples have endured this ripoff for several years without marching on Washington, or at least raising their collective voices in vigorous protest. We read the other day that an Internal Revenue statistician had calculated no less than 38 million Americans pay the "marriage tax."

Its existence is blamed on short-sighted lawmakers. There was a time when single persons were paying higher taxes than married couples and they tried to solve that problem. As it developed, their efforts swung the pendulum the other way, and now the long-range cost of marriage has gone up at a time when many express concern over the divorce rate and the practice of couples living together without going through the formaily of a wedding.

There is some support for a sweeping change in the income tax laws, such as a flat 10 percent tax across the board without all of the mumbo jumbo on the present tax returns. But strong opposition comes from sources that might surprise you. Charitable organizations and churches have voiced opposition to across-the-board tax on gross income because they fear that their contributions would decline without any system of deductibles.

And, of course, such a system would probably put a lot of IRS personnel out of a job. It also would affect lawyers and those who make a business of making out income tax returns.

Queen's Contest Has Six Sponsors

Six organizations had notified the Snyder Chamber of Commerce this morning that they planned to sponsor candidates for Independence Day Queen.

The deadline for candidates to be entered is 5 p. m. today, and the complete slate of candidates will be announced Friday.

The queen will be determined on the basis of tickets sold for the annual July 4th celebration in Towle Memorial Park. The tickets cost $1 each and the candidate accounting for the most tickets sold will be crowned in ceremonies preceding the fireworks display on the evening of July 4. Proceeds for the contest will be used to help pay the expenses of the celebration, including the fireworks.

The chamber's July 4th committee also is seeking contributions of prizes to be given away at the annual July 4th tractor pull. Merchants who can contribute prizes have been asked to call the chamber office.

The tractor pull will be conducted on Friday and Saturday night, July 3-4, at the rodeo grounds west of town.

Man Hurt In Rig Accident

Joe R. Jones, 49, of Floydada is in serious condition at Highland Hospital in Lubbock following a drilling rig accident north of Snyder on a Chevron lease Wednesday afternoon.

Jones had been working for Rio Colorado, a company new to Snyder, for three days when the accident occurred. Vernon Venters, job supervisor, said Jones had just closed a pop-off (pressure release) valve when a pump was started up and the valve blew out of the well head hitting Jones in the leg.

He suffered a compound fracture to his leg, a concussion and possibly other injuries. He was taken by Scurry County EMS to Cogdell Hospital then transferred to Lubbock. Jones is in the Intensive Care Unit in Lubbock and is expected to have surgery today.

Rio Colorado has a contract here with Chevron for two drilling rigs which were brought in from Argentina. One rig, the one Jones was working on, just began operations. The second rig is expected to arrive in Snyder July 1.

State Sets Road Work In Scurry

Segments of both U. S. 84 and U. S. 180 in Scurry County are included in a massive rehabilitation program for highways and FM roads approved by the State Highway and Public Transportation Commission.

The entire program is expected to cost $213.6 million, and it will cover 5,478.3 miles of state-maintained highways. In all, there are 898 separate projects in 218 counties.

Some 70 percent of the work will be on U. S. and State-numbered highways in Texas, with the remainder on FM roads.

District Engineer Roger G. Welsch of Abilene said the Scurry County project on U. S. 84 will be a seal coat consisting of a layer of asphalt and aggregate on the northbound lanes from the Hermleigh business route to the Snyder business route.

The U. S. 180 project in Scurry county will be the same type of seal coat from the Borden County line to a point seven miles west of Snyder.

Thursday update

Back To Normal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Five months after top union and industry officials voiced hopes for strike-free contract negotiations and two strikes later, coal production in Eastern and Midwestern states is finally returning to normal.

Members of United Mine Workers construction affiliate have ended their three-month strike by voting by a better than 2-1 margin Wednesday to ratify a new contract with the Association of Bituminous Contractors.

The agreement took effect at 12:01 a.m. EST today.

The UMW headquarters here declared the contract ratified with virtually all of the big construction worker locals reporting.

Reaction Is Good

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas House Speaker Bill Clayton expressed a "pretty good" reaction to a congressional redistricting plan drawn by Rep. Martin Frost, House Majority Leader Jim Wright says.

Clayton was in Washington Tuesday and a third of Texas' 24-member delegation met with him about the plan during a closed-doors session.

Clayton indicated he'd be available for more one-on-one meetings with congressmen in Austin during the House's July 4 recess, which begins this weekend, Wright said Wednesday.

Executions Continue

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iran's revolutionary regime has executed five more supporters of fugitive ex-President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr and says it will hold the election to pick his successor on July 24.

Tehran Radio said four more followers of the outlawed Bahai sect also died before firing squads Wednesday, bringing the total number of executions announced this week to 43.

Thirty-four of these were linked to Bani-Sadr, seven were Bahais accused of spying and collecting funds for Israel, one was a journalist convicted of corruption and the other was described as a collaborator with SAVAK, the late Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi's secret police.

census reveals a lot

Most of the chatter about the 1980 census so far has dealt with the political implications of the shift of population from the Northeast to the Sun Belt and the West. But the Census Bureau not only tells us where people are living but something about how they live, and there is sobering news about changes in the condition of the American family.

The number of one-parent families in our population has increased tenfold during the last decade. Ten years ago, one out of 10 families had only a single parent as a result of divorce, death or births outside of marriage. Today the figure is one out of five. Fully one-half of black families are maintained by a single parent. The number of children living with mothers who never married now exceeds the number of children who have lost a parent through death.

The census can provide these statistics, but we must look elsewhere for signs of the impact on our society. It is not difficult to find a link between the breakdown of the traditional family and rising welfare costs or the incidence of juvenile crime. But there are also more subtle effects, and a recent study by the Charles F. Kettering Foundation and the National Association of Elementary School Principals sheds some light on one of them.

The study covered 18,000 students in 26 elementary and high schools in 14 states, a cross-section ranging from inner-cities to small towns and rural areas. The conclusion is inescapable that one-parent children on the whole do not do as well in school.

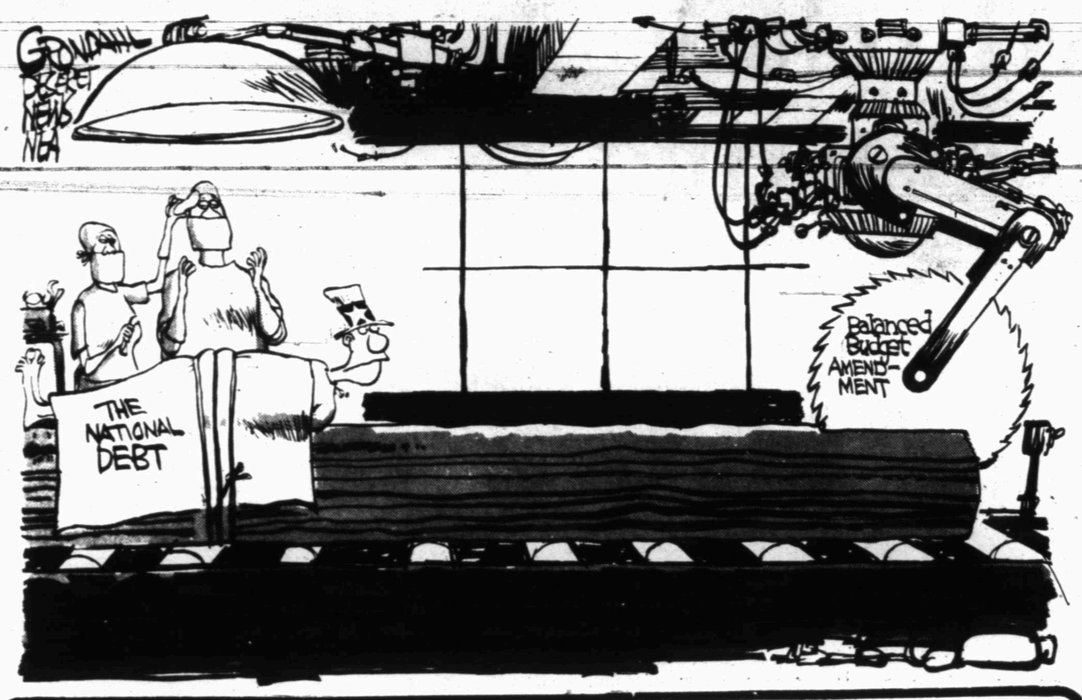

Thirty percent of children from two-parent families were ranked as high acheivers, compared to 17 percent of those from one-parent families. Look at it the other way, 40 percent of one-parent children ranked as low achievers, while only 24 percent of two-parent children were in that category.

Further, children from one-parent families were absent more often than those from two-parent families and were more likely to be late to school, truant or in disciplinary trouble.

These findings are a challenge to educators, whose approach to teaching may be based on false assumptions about the degree of support and encouragement children are receiving at home. With instability in the family, the Kettering study pointed out, school may be "the most important part of the child's life that stays relatively constant."

Psychologists will argue that the one-parent family should not be viewed with blanket disapproval--that failing marriages held together "for the sake of the children" can do more harm than good. They make the point that where parents are concerned, quality is more important than quantity, and there is no reason why a conscientious single parent cannot maintain a stable and supportive family life.

All true, but there is no denying that the sexual revolution, more liberal attitudes toward divorce, and other changes in moral and social attitudes affecting the family can handicap a child in school and on into adult life. While the Kettering study was conducted at the behest of educators who must deal with learning and disciplinary problems connected with the one-parent family, its message is for parents--together or separated--and for our society as a whole.

new look in education

The American system of education, once the envy of the world, fell apart in the 1960s when our objective became equity rather than excellence.

The objective was legitimate--more and better education for more of us.

But as with most cycles, the overdoers overdid.

Reformist zeal fed upon itself until the three R's were neglected, discipline eroded, test scores plummeted--until we were presenting worthless high school diplomas to a generation of unemployables.

Segments of a few communities resisted because the American majority continues to care passionately about the education of its children.

Now what traditionalism survived is coming back into style.

Education Secretary Terrel Bell urges "a return to basics to improve the quality of education in the United States."

He says the number one priority of our schools must become disciplined--good student behavior--rigid rules of conduct.

After that is accomplished our schools must resume teaching mathematics and English and howto write a good sentence.

He says we've become preoccupied with driver training, expressive dance, pep rallies and such.

We must, he says, resume teaching the subjects for which public education was created in the first place.

With cuts in the education budget it becomes increasingly urgent than any cutbacks cut back to essentials.

Chester Finn Jr.--author of three books on educational policy--urgently recommends focusing on developing skills, self-restraint, self-discipline; respect for such "old-fashioned" considerations as merit and accomplishment.

It's happening.

Even in such a bastion of mandatory equality as Washington, D.C., special schools are being established for the academically vigorous.

Secretary Bell's public utterances are helping everywhere to make educational traditionalism respectable again.

Even the National Education Association--which has made a quasi-religion of "equity" instead of "quality" is respectfully silent.

Secretary Bell says that public education in our nation does not have to die, but it is going to have to shape up.

And on its own, community after community is raising educational standards, dispensing with educational frills.

Teachers are being tested before they are hired.

Students are being educated before they are graduated.

Observations on Israel

JERUSALEM--Israeli women must serve in the army just like the men. But the romantic picture the world has of Israeli women soldiers rushing into combat with their brothers-in-arms, driving tanks or toting machine guns isn't quite accurate.

Only a few women perform these dangerous tasks, and those that do must first get their parents' permission.

If a woman in the Israeli Defense Forces applies for a paratrooper course, for example, she is handed a form for her parents to sign and she must obtain their approval in writing.

Most women soliers serve as medics, typists, file clerks or secretaries.

The stereotype of "woman's work" is so ingrained even in Israel that the Soldiers Welfare Committee, a civilian organization, gives every platoon commander's secretary a sewing kit, iron, set of baking pans and recipe book so they can "make the boys feel more at home."

Things are changing, however. The army's legal department recently ruled that no soldier (of either sex) can be required to make coffee unless he or she is on kitchen duty.

Some women have been assigned as drivers for staff officers since statistics revealed that men soldiers have more traffic accidents than women.

One woman army driver says the officer she drives for has only one complaint. When there is a flat tire, he has to change it. "Not that I couldn't do it," she says, "but he can't bear to watch me."

PEARL OF GREAT PRICE--Pearl Bailey was here to give a concert a few days before I arrived. My Israeli guide said she had offered to be Pearl's guide during her stay in Israel. Pearl turned her down.

"I don't need a guide," said the irrespressible American singer. "I know what's here. I just want to experience it."

Pearl patiently posed for pictures by Israeli news photographers but when one took too much time, she pointed to her knees and said, "Hurry up, the Ben Gay is wearing off."

DRIVING 'EM CRAZY--This is a country of horn-honkers--usually the mark of a bad driver. It's true in this case. Israel has the world's highest auto accident rate.

One Israeli journalist wrote recently, "If the Arabs want to take over the country, all they have to do is give every Israeli a car and we'll kill ourselves."

LEARNING TO LIKE BLACK COFFEE--Kosher hotel restaurants are the rule in Israel. (Kosher means sanctoned by Jewish dietary law.) Among other things this means you may not be offered milk with your coffee after a meal where meat has been served.

This is in keeping with one of the Old Testament dietary laws which forbids mixing of meat and milk.

The reason for many of these dietary laws is obscure. The best guess of Bible scholars is that the restrictions were ritualistic rather than hygienic. They were to keep the Jews "a people apart" who wouldn't be tempted to succumb to the attractions of the surrounding heathen cultures.

The dietary laws were so intricate that pious Jews could never eat with non-Jews, since the food of non-Jews could never meet the standards of ceremonial cleanness.

LIVING WITHOUT SMILING--I am enjoying myself immensely here and cannot understand why the Israelis seem to the visitor to be such a joyless people. They seldom smile. I notice this particularly among the shopkeepers. This is strange in a country where tourists are wooed as a source of income.

I mentioned this to an Israeli woman who comes from the United States and she said she had noticed it too.

"I don't think it is because life is harder here," she said, "although that may have something to do with it."

She said the Israelis, for their part, sometimes "wonder why Americans smile as much as they do."

For whatever reason, people like to play with telephones. Most people now have been around phones all their life, so it can't be that it's a novelty. Maybe it's because you can act silly or get revenge (by calling and hanging up at all hours) and no one can see your face.

Rejected lovers, lonely adults and bored kids continue to make what's called harassing phone calls. Some think no one cares enough about the harassment to call police. Others, because of TV movies, think even if someone does call the police, they won't get caught.

Boy, are they in for a rude awakening! There are at least two ways to get caught with your hand on the dial.

First, if someone suspects a particular person of making the calls, they can have a dial-a-pulse put on that person's phone. The dial-a-pulse makes a computer read-out of every number dialed on that phone. A man in Dallas suspected his son's ex-wife of calling his home so he called the phone company. On one particular day, 35 calls were made from the woman's phone to his phone.

Another way to get caught is with a telephone trap. Some way or another, a trap is put on the irritated person's phone, then when the harasser calls and hangs up, the callee doesn't. The phone company is then notified and are still able to trace the call even though the other party has already hung up and is probably well into another call.

Several people have already been caught in Snyder just since summer started. They face misdemeanor charges and the grim demeanor of the judge.

There are ways to play with the telephone legally. The game is called "Toll Free Numbers."

For fun or information, a person can get a list of bills that are being worked on when the state legislature meets for their special session. Then they can call the number for information on how those bills are progressing. That number is 1-800-252-9693.

Another one that can be fun is the Fox Photo number — 800-648-5311. A person can call them and describe all their camera woes. They can always sneak in a little bragging about the great shots they got on their last vacation.

Probably one of the more fun — and useless — numbers is 800-243-5305. Dial that one and you will discover how to make "Dad's Best Ever Barbecue Ribs," or some other such nonsense. The number is for Adolph's Tele-Butcher.

If someone would like to help confuse an already confused Internal Revenue Service Agent, they can call 800-492-4830. They can ask for help on their taxes and tell the one who answers that they spent three months working overseas during their earning period and that their tax extension is about about up. See how many different and conflicting pieces of advice a person can get on one call.

Sparrows were sold and eaten in biblical times. Matthew quotes the price as two for a farthing; and Luke, five for two farthings. It must have taken many to make a meal.

"Are not five sparrows sold for two farthings, and not one of them is forgotten before God... ye are of more value than many sparrows."

Ambush bidding

By Oswald Jacoby and Alan Sontag

One of the best known bidding ploys is what might be called an ambush bid. You act like you are defending desperately when in reality you want to get yourself doubled.

North had a good chance to use this bid with today's hand and his opponents fell right into the trap.

North expected that his partner could make five spades. He also was sure that his opponents could make a lot of hearts. North intended to buy the hand in spades if possible and maybe to get doubled. All that he wished for came to pass.

A clumsy North might have jumped to four spades over West's three hearts. A very devious North might well have passed and shown spade support later. This North took the median course and simply bid three spades.

East did not know about the trap and bid four notrump. If West could show two aces, East was going to six, but West showed just one ace so North knew that six was doomed to defeat.

If East had suspected what North was doing he might well have bid the heart slam. In that case North would have taken the phantom save at six spades. But poor East doubled five spades.

The defense scored their two aces. North and South scored game, rubber, honors, etc.

One Room School Has Nine Pupils

COPPER HARBOR, Mich. (AP) — In this village, if you leave a tip, the waitress calls after you, "Hey, mister, you forgot your change." It is that sort of village.

It is at the northernmost point of a finger of murmuring pines and hemlock jutting into Lake Superior. About 30 people live here year round, far fewer than reside in the town graveyard. If you look at a map, Copper Harbor is the dot at the tip of Michigan's Upper Peninsula's upper peninsula.

Spring arrives late this far up the global tilt. At the end-of-school picnic the other day, the kids played softball amid lilac blossoms. Lilacs in June.

Miss Howe played shortstop. She had to, and parents and friends and recent graduates played other positions, as ringers, because the kids actually celebrating the end of school barely numbered enough to make a team, let alone a team to play against.

Bobbi, Natasha, Johanna, Forest, Aaron, Darren, Jeff, Kristen and Danny constitute the Copper Harbor School student body. Miss Howe is the teacher.

One-room schoolhouses with one teacher once were commonplace in this country but that was before the nation traded remoteness and innocence for pavement.

All three yet survive — one-room schoolhouses, remoteness and waitresses who remind you to collect your change — though you might have to go to the end of the road to find them.

The road ends here. Education does not.

"My pupils take the same standardized tests as all the other pupils in the state," Miss Howe said, with pride. "They do well.

"I want them to excel. When they go on from here, to high school, the social adjustments will be hard enough for them without having to worry about their studies. I don't want anyone to fall behind."

When they do go on to high school they will climb into a bus and ride 35 miles, to Calumet, and 35 miles back, through winter snows that accumulate 200 to 400 inches. That's snow enough to cover the schoolyard flagpole. People here dig tunnels in order to shovel less.

It was Copper Harbor's isolation and severity that lured Marsha Howe, the schoolmarm, here a year ago.

She is a backpacker, a climber, a skier. She is 30. She is a fine shortstop and also, apparently, a fine teacher. After only one yer the members of the school board — who are also the parents of most of her pupils — granted her tenure.

"You can imagine how personal teaching is here," she said. "I don't prepare a year's study program for a grade. I prepare individual study programs for individual pupils.

"Next fall we get a new kindergartner, Amber Meadowcroft, and I will have 10 pupils," she said.

In a nation of interstate highways, resource centers and peer-group relationships, there remains, it would seem, something to be said for one-room schoolhouses, closeness and clean snow.

Not to mention lilacs in June.

Nixon Home Is Examined

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — The Secret Service is examining a $1.2 million Saddle River home purchased by Richard Nixon to see if changes are necessary to guarantee the former president's security.

"We've got people out there right now poring over every inch of the place to see what is needed," Special Agent James Boyle said Wednesday. "We don't want to be caught short."

The home, on four acres of land in one of the most exclusive communities in New Jersey, contains seven bedrooms, a pool and tennis courts. Nixon is expected to move there from his Manhattan townhouse in August.

The Secret Service — charged with protecting former presidents for the rest of their lives — is expected to recommend the installation of sophisticated electronic surveillance equipment and fencing around the property. Secret Service officials said they also will seek to build secure entrances, a checkpoint and a command post either outside the Nixon home or in one of its rooms.

"What we are trying to do is create a secure configuration that will prevent random penetration or access to Mr. Nixon," Boyle said.

Parmesan Puff Is Like Souffle

By Cecily Brownstone

PARMESAN PUFF

1 tablespoon butter, soft
Grated Parmesan cheese ¾ cup all-purpose flour ½ teaspoon salt ⅛ teaspoon pepper 1½ cups commercial sour cream
5 large eggs, separated

Rub the inside of a 2-quart baking dish (11¾ by 7½ by 1¾ inches) with the butter; sprinkle with 1 tablespoon Parmesan. In a medium bowl with a rubber spatula stir together the flour, salt and pepper; with the spatula, gradually stir in the sour cream, keeping smooth. Add the egg yolks; with a beater, beat until ivory color; stir in ½ cup Parmesan. In a large bowl, with the clean beater, beat the whites until they are so stiff they do not slip when the bowl is tilted; add the yolk mixture; with the spatula, fold in. Pour into the prepared baking dish. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until browned and puffy — 30 minutes. Serve at once, cut in squares, with a creamy French tomato sauce (Sauce Aurore).

Little Lady Wants A Place of Her Own

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1981 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: The mother of a friend is a lovely lady of 82. She is sweet, gentle, alert and is not ailing physically. She takes turns living with her children, who love her dearly, but she is very unhappy.

She feels that she is "in the way," but whenever she mentions going to a retirement home, her children insist that elderly parents belong with their families, not in "institutions with strangers."

The little lady appreciates everything her children do for her, but says she wants a place of her own, however tiny. She wants to feel independent.

Her children are well-to-do and could afford to keep her in a very nice retirement home, but they refuse to consider it.

Please comment, Abby. The elderly lady says her children read your column.

A FRIEND

DEAR FRIEND: Aging parents who are in good health and able to look after themselves "belong" where they want to be, if they have a choice. With most, independence means survival.

DEAR ABBY: Paul and I have been living together for two years and we're very happy. We have no intention of marrying because we both feel that we don't need a piece of paper to prove we love each other. We plan on being together for the rest of our lives, but we realize we could break up anytime.

I have three children from a previous marriage who live with us, and they are the problem. Paul's parents have accepted me, but they have never accepted my children. I am invited to all the family gatherings, but my children are excluded. If I refused to go, Paul wouldn't go either, and I don't want to be the cause of any arguments between Paul and his parents.

How can I make these people accept my children? Please don't say that Paul should speak to them. I've asked him to, but he finds one excuse after another and keeps asking me to give his parents more time. Well, I think two years is long enough, and I'm tired of having my children ignored and hurt. I can't handle it any longer. What do you suggest?

DISGUSTED WITH PAUL'S PARENTS

DEAR DISGUSTED: Paul's spineless attitude doesn't say much for Paul, so you will have to decide whether to continue having your children ignored and hurt, or insist that they be treated as part of your family. Paul's parents are obviously trying to discourage the relationship between you and Paul by ignoring your children. If he permits it, he is choosing his parents over you; if you permit it, you are choosing Paul over your children.

DEAR ABBY: Norma married George. George's sister Emma married Pete. George and Pete are brothers-in-law.

What is the relationship between Norma and Pete? Is Pete Norma's brother-in-law?

Please settle the argument.

C.S. IN LA MARQUE, TEXAS

DEAR C.S.: Yes. A brother-in-law is:
1. the brother of one's spouse;
2. the husband of one's sister;
3. the husband of one's spouse's sister.

Austin Man Is In Police Custody

DALLAS (AP) — An Austin man was in police custody today in connection with the deaths of two men who were found stabbed to death in their home here just minutes after one of them called a burglary alarm company saying they had been attacked.

The Austin man surrendered to Travis County authorities in Austin late Wednesday.

Dallas Homicide Sgt. Bill Parker said a pickup truck spotted near the slaying scene was traced to the Austin man who reportedly had done some plumbing work for one of the victims.

The Austin man was being held in the Travis County jail today pending arraignment, Parker said.

Police were dispatched to the north Dallas home after receiving a call from Sonitrol of Dallas. A alarm system monitor told officers that a man had called about 2:47 a.m. and told her he had been stabbed.

Federal Impact Aid Curtailment Considered

By CHARLES RICHARDS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Burkburnett, a small town in North Texas, has 3,382 students in school, almost 20 percent of whom live on federal property.

Since the school district gets no property tax from those students, the federal government has been reimbursing Burkburnett — and 239 other Texas schools — to offset the cost of educating the children of military families.

But all 240 of those Texas schools will have a crisis on their hands if Congress approves President Reagan's proposal that the federal reimbursement be stopped, an El Paso educator testified Wednesday before the Senate Armed Forces Committee.

"Under the president's proposal, Burkburnett will lose about $653,000," said James A. Francis, associate superintendent of the El Paso school district, arguing for a continuation of the aid.

"This loss will require the permanent residents to have to pay about $237 per child more money for the education of each of their own children in order that the military children can be accommodated in school along with them and that there will be no reduction in the quality of education."

Appearing with Francis before the Senate committee were two other Texas educators — Dr. Clarence Hamm, superintendent in Killeen, and Edmund D. Cody, superintendent at San Antonio North Side High School.

The committee chairman, Sen. John Tower, D-Texas, opened Wednesday's hearing by making plain his support of continued impact aid.

"The federal government has at the very least a moral obligation to provide states with financial assistance to offset educational costs generated by the presence of military installations and activities," Tower said.

"We cannot simply turn our backs on these school districts which without such tax revenues are, in many cases, simply unable to afford the additional costs of educating the dependents of Department of Defense personnel."

The real issue, Tower said, is not whether federal impact aid should be continued to the schools, but how much.

In Texas, the 240 districts received $32.3 million in such aid last year, but Reagan's proposal would reduce this to $9.8 million to only six school districts, Francis added.

Killeen is one of the six districts that would continue to receive some impact aid. The others are Del Valle, Franklin, Lackland, Fort Sam Houston and Randolph, and the last three are districts where boundaries are contiguous with the military reservation.

Killeen, located near Fort Hood, would lose about $2 million, Francis added.

The only alternatives a school will have, if it wants to keep its quality of education high, are to raise property taxes locally or to charge tuition to military families.

Of the 212 square miles in the El Paso school district, almost half of it — 101 square miles — is the Fort Bliss military reservation and therefore untaxable for educational purposes, Francis said.

Property taxpayers in Texas may be unable or unwilling to replace the funds lost by federal impact aid, he suggested.

"If they are called on to do this, and they do follow through, the raise in taxes is likely to be accompanied by resentment that will affect our highly positive climate for military populations," he said.

Extreme poverty exists in El Paso, he added. Among the school enrollment of 61,000 children are 36,827 who meet poverty guidelines and receive free or reduced-price lunches.

"This indicates that about 60 percent of our children come from families who are unable to adequately provide for the education of their own children. These same families are now being asked to pick up the educational costs of others," said Francis.

Soon, wherever military families are assigned in Texas, "their children are going to attend underfinanced schools, because the federal impact will so dilute community resources that an inferior educational program can be the only result," Francis added.

The El Paso educator said the Texas Legislature has just enacted legislation to allow school districts to charge tuition for a student who lives in military housing exempt from taxation by the district.

"Military pay is not adequate to afford this. Litigation would undoubtedly result, and this litigation would only be a further abrasion to the harmony that has existed between the military and civilian people in Texas," Francis said.

Letter Is Reincarnated

BOSTON (AP) — Sylvia Poulton got a chatty letter this week from her grandmother which started, "I was very glad to get your letter after so long. Why don't you write?"

But there wasn't much point in answering. Edith Allbone, her grandmother, has been dead for 10 years.

"I noticed the name on the back when I picked up the letter, thinking, 'That's strange because she's dead,'" said Ms. Poulton, a native of England. "Then I read the first paragraph and was shocked. It was a really eerie feeling."

The letter included news about Ms. Poulton's sister's pregnancy. Ms. Poulton's sister is now a grandmother.

Ms. Poulton said the letter, postmarked June 1961 in England, missed her when she moved to another apartment in Boston. The letter was stamped, "Return to Sender," and wound up back in England where it was apparently lost.

The letter reappeared and was delivered to Edith Allbone's address marked "Found in supposedly empty equipment."

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — What do Brooklyn, Kansas, Nigeria and Argentina have in common? They're all part of Pepsi's generation.

The Health Department, compiling the 159,000 birth certificates issued in Pennsylvania during 1979, discovered those were among the names given to babies that year, the latest for which the names were compiled.

There was a Sensation and a Bother, and, to go with the girl named Pepsi, there was a boy named Cola.

There were boys named Louise, Deborah, Patsy and Karen, but the most common name for boys was Michael, which went to 4,032 males.

Jennifer was No. 1 for females, with 2,977 girls getting that name.

Drilling Costs Skyrocket

DENVER (AP) — The cost for oil and gas drilling land in the U.S. has skyrocketed. One example is the Overthrust Belt, a very active exploration area in Montana, Wyoming, Colorado and New Mexico.

"In 1975, you would pay maybe one dollar an acre for good acreage in the Overthrust Belt," says Bill Coleman, land manager for Aminoil USA in the Rocky Mountain District. "Now, it would be more like $200 per acre."

Conviction Won't Stand In Court

JACKSONVILLE, N.C. (AP) — The parents of Marine Lance Cpl. Leman "Deacon" Hutchinson, sentenced to be executed Monday after being convicted last week of premeditated murder, say their 21-year-old son has not yet received a fair trial.

"Deacon's side has never come out," Lorraine Hutchinson said. "We hope that the discrepancies will be caught by some review away from the military."

The younger Hutchinson was convicted in the February 6 shooting death of Marine Pfc. Terry Gunter, 25, of Fort Worth, Texas. His conviction will go through a long appeal process, but if it's not overturned he may take it to the federal appeals system.

The Hutchinsons, of Brunswick, Ga., said they are convinced that their son will eventually be cleared.

"You don't see me and the wife upset, do you?" said Leman L. Hutchinson Sr.

He said he is eager for his son to have a civilian trial, contending that it is impossible for his son to receive a fair trial in the military.

Mrs. Hutchinson complained about the testimony of Hutchison's co-defendant in the case, Lance Cpl. William Haught, and said her son didn't testify before the military authorites because he didn't think it would do any good.

"It seems that it didn't matter what anyone said," she said. "They (prosecution witnesses) could lie and admit they had lied. Yet they were allowed to testify against our son."

Haught, giving the most damaging testimony against Hutchinson, said that Hutchinson lured Gunter to the Verona Loop Road area of the base and shot and robbed him. It was later determined that Hutchinson fired the fatal shot into Gunter's head.

Haught was given life imprisonment after pleading guilty to the same charges filed against Hutchinson. During his testimony, Haught also admitted that he lied to the Naval Investigative Service after he was arrested, telling agents that Hutchinson had fired all the shots that night.

In exchange for his testimony, Haught's sentence is expected to be reduced to a 50-year prison sentence, which will eventually make him eligible for parole.

Mrs. Hutchinson complained that Haught's testimony was accepted, even though he admitted that some of his previous statements were false.

She said Haught initially told NIS agents that Hutchinson forced him to the Verona Loop area at gunpoint. That allegation was never mentioned in court, but she claimed that it may have influenced agents and prosecutors to build their case against Hutchinson rather than Haught.

In another incident, the couple charged that NIS agents took Hutchison's wife, Carol, to the Naval Regional Medical Center at Camp Lejeune and gave her a shot that they reportedly said would "calm her nerves."

Lose excess fat first

By Lawrence Lamb, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I want to ask about my blood pressure readings. I have readings as high as 170 over 110 and 148 over 114. I am concerned about these as my mother was only 56 when she had a stroke and two heart attacks. My doctor doesn't seem to be worried as my pressure comes back down to normal within one to three hours, with readings around 130 over 80. I am not on any medicine for high blood pressure but feel I should be. Am I wrong or is my doctor wrong?

I work in a hospital and have been sent to the emergency room several times. I'm 35, weigh 170 and am 5 feet 3.

DEAR READER — You should be concerned. Your story is that of a vascular hyperreactor, today often called borderline hypertension. A lot of people who have labile blood pressure never have persistently elevated readings. It is a reflex response. When you get excited — and that can include while having your blood pressure reading taken — your arteries squeeze down and your heart rate picks up, pumping more blood than usual, which causes your pressure to rise.

When you relax the arteries relax and your heart slows down, causing your pressure to fall. This can all happen in a few minutes.

The trouble with treating people like you is that the medicines that tend to lower your pressure when it is high also lower it when it is on the low side. The end result often leaves something to be desired.

You need to understand more about blood pressure so I am sending you The Health Letter number 15-8, Your Vital Blood Pressure. Others who want this issue can send 75 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it to me, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019. Your type of problem is discussed there.

It is true that people who have persistently lower readings of closer to 115 over 75 have the best outlook in terms of the least risk of having a heart attack or stroke. For most people, and that would definitely include you, the first and best approach is adequate weight control. You could diminish your chances of heart attacks and strokes by slimming down. I prefer for people with blood pressure elevations to loose excess fat first, before taking any medicines. Do it the natural way if possible.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I am a 20-year-old woman and am considering starting a family within the next few years. When I was five I had an operation for a hernia on the right side of my abdomen. Will I have to deliver my baby by Caesarean section because of the scar from this operation? I have heard that doctors prefer to do a C-section on a woman who has had a C-section before to prevent a rupture. Is this because of fear of rupturing the abdominal wall or the uterine wall?

DEAR READER — The concern is that the scar in the uterus will rupture. Even so, not every woman who has had a previous Caesarean section will require one the next delivery. In some cases, such as a small pelvis that won't permit normal birth, the same indication for the first section will apply to all future pregnancies. Your hernia operation should not be a reason for a Caesarean section.

Titanic Search To Begin Again

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — Oilman Jack Grimm will leave in search of the Titanic Saturday, instead of July 3, and depart from Boston, instead of Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Grimm's former partner, Fred Koehler, had challenged the Abilene millionaire to a race to the site of the sunken ocean liner, but Grimm said his decision to leave early was not based on the race.

A spokesman for Koehler's public relations company in New York said Koehler will not search for the vessel this summer after all.

Koehler could not be reached at his home or business in Coral Gables, Fla.

Grimm says he has the edge over Koehler anyway, because he charted 14 potential locations of the wreckage during an expedition last summer.

"Yes, I believe we'll be there first," Grimm said.

The Titanic sank in 12,000 feet of water on its maiden voyage in 1912 after hitting an iceberg off the coast of Newfoundland. More than 1,500 passengers were killed.

Grimm said he will use a sonar sled to locate shapes on the ocean floor with acoustic signals and a magnetometer to detect metals.

Once in the general search area, Grimm said, "we are going straight to the different targets and we intend to pull our sonar and magnetometer sleds over each target at close range. The first one that shows to be the hull of a ship, we'll map in detail."

Grimm said he will try to identify artifacts and debris and cameras will then be lowered to the wreckage to determine the feasibility of returning later with a submersible.

Because both of the submersibles he had planned to use to enter the ship during the 19-day expedition were unavailable, Grimm had announced last week that he would have to delay the voyage until July 3.

The Seacopter, capable of diving to 20,000 feet and narrow enough to navigate the ship's halls, was developed by Koehler, who had announced his own plans to explore the ship.

The Aluminaut is available, but its owners will not allow its use before the sunken ocean liner actually is located. The Aluminaut, owned by Reynolds Aluminum, is the largest deep-diving submersible.

"If we can find the wreck and it's sitting on its keel or on its port side where we can gain access to the starboard side, then I expect we could probably come back with a submersible of some type," Grimm said Tuesday.

Braves 14, White Sox 10

The Little League Braves got two home runs and a single from Kenneth Pickering and some good relief work out of Chris McGee to exit the White Sox Tuesday. Pickering powered his third and fourth homers of the season to lead the league in that category. McGee, the eventual winning pitcher, struck out nine batters in four innings. Mike Wemken aided the cause with two doubles, while Kevin Dollins rapped two singles and Bobby Rico, Troy Burton, Tommy Gutierrez, Robert Gill and McGee added one apiece.

Kenneth Batchelor slapped two singles for the Sox, while Shane McCarter, Todd Odom and Bill Bell added one each.

The Braves are 6-6 on the season; the Sox are 1-11.

Rains Interrupt Several Matches...

Borg Keeps Up Pace At Wimbledon

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) - Bjorn Borg took another step toward his sixth successive Wimbledon title and then talked of how playing on the two show courts here has helped him.

The Swede has not had to play on an outside court at the All-England Club since he faced Australian Mark Edmondson in 1977. All his matches since then have been on either Centre Court or No.1.

"Centre and No.1 are much better," said the 25-year-old Borg after his 6-4, 6-1, 6-3 second-round crushing of Mel Purcell of the United States Wednesday afternoon.

"The ball bounces much better on those courts. It stands to reason. They are not played so much."

Center and No.1 are the enclosed courts at Wimbledon, with some 22,000 seats between them - all sold months before the tournament. They are carefully tended and kept exclusively for the championships.

There are 16 other courts, most of them free to spectators once they have paid their entrance money to the grounds. These courts are used all summer by All-England Club members.

Borg was one of the few player able to finish his second-round match Wednesday before Wimbledon's traditional enemy, the wet English weather, ended play prematurely.

Borg was particularly happy with his serve.

"I think I'm timing it much better when I throw up the ball," he said. "I had a much better feel. I was much more comfortable today."

John McEnroe, who Tuesday was fined $1,500 and warned about his future behavior following incidents in his opening match against Tom Gullikson, behaved faultlessly in his second-round match against Raul Ramirez of Mexico. McEnroe, the No.2 seed, led Ramirez 6-3, 5-5 when rain halted the proceedings.

Second-seeded Jimmy Connors won two tiebreakers to lead Chris Lewis of New Zealand 7-6, 7-6, 1-2 when the rains came.

While McEnroe managed to stay out of trouble, his close friend and doubles partner, Peter Fleming, took up where "Superbrat" left off Monday.

Fleming was given a warning for a time violation and then had a penalty point awarded against him in his second-round match against Tim Gullikson, Tom's twin brother.

Fleming was in trouble for leaping up and down in mock delight after a series of disputed calls.

"These officials are humorless," said the giant American after the match was interrupted at one-set all and 5-5. "The rules just weren't meant to be applied the way this guy (the umpire) applied them. These officials here are very sensititve and inflexible."

Chris Evert Lloyd and Martina Navratilova, two former women's singles champions, were quick enough to beat the weather as both moved into the round of 32.

Navratilova downed 16-year-old Susan Mascarin of the United States 6-0, 6-1, while Lloyd ousted Yvonne Vermaak of South Africa 6-1, 6-2.

American Pam Shriver, the No.7 seed, ousted Elizabeth Little of Australia 6-0, 6-3.

Umpires Get In On Act; Hearing Set For Friday

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - A Common Pleas judge issued a temporary injunction Wednesday blocking Lloyds of London from paying major league baseball team owners any of $50 million in strike insurance they were to have begun collecting, according to the attorney for the umpires.

Richie Phillips said Judge Stanley M. Greenberg issued the temporary order at 3:30 p.m. pending a hearing Friday morning on the class action suit filed by the Major League Umpires Association.

Greenberg could not be reached for comment, but a clerk in his office acknowledged that a hearing was set for Friday. She asked not to be identified.

The 26 major league owners paid Lloyds $2 million for insurance that would pay each $100,000 per date lost to the players' strike for approximately seven weeks after the cancellation of the first 153 games. The 153rd cancellation in the 13-day old strike took place Wednesday.

"The temporary restraining order was granted that restrains Lloyds of London correspondents from paying any monies to major league baseball or any member teams under their strike insurance policy," Phillips said in a telephone interview.

Phillips said the class-action suit was filed on behalf of the major league umpires and persons "similarly situated, namely those individuals or groups having contractual relations with major league baseball...municipalities, players, vendors, concessionaires."

The umpires are being paid for the first 30 days of the strike. "That means if they don't play the rest of the season, the umpires lose half a season, and of course, they won't be in position to seek other employment because they'll be on constant standby to go back to work," Phillips said.

Gym Classes To Be Offered

Interested parents are invited to contact the Continuing Education office at 573-8511, extension 240 to register their children.

Leonard Bout Held Tonight

HOUSTON (AP) - Sugar Ray Leonard shoots for a second world championship tonight and Thomas Hearns defends his portion of another crown. But in three months the two will be back in the same ring,...together.

Leonard, the World Boxing Council welterweight champion, is challenging unbeaten Ayub Kalule for the World Boxing Association junior middleweight title. And Hearns, who owns the WBA welterweight crown, puts his crown on the line against Pablo Baez.

Also on tonight's card are a pair of 10-rounders with ex-welterweight champion Jose "Pipino" Cuevas going against European welterweight champion Jorgen Hansen, and unbeaten Tony Ayala facing Jerry Cheatam in a junior middleweight bout.

Both Leonard and Hearns are heavy favorites and most of the fight crowd is looking ahead to a proposed Sept. 16 match between them in Las Vegas, Nev. In fact, there has been so much talk about that confrontation that Bob Arum, president of Top Rank, Inc., promoter of tonight's card, is threatening a lawsuit against Leonard.

Arum says his contract for this closed circuit show specifically bars Sugar Ray from pumping up a Hearns bout until after he's finished with Kalule. The promoter talked Wednesday about holding up the purses but that will be tough since Leonard's $2.5 million is in the form of a letter of credit, automatically released when the fight takes place.

Mike Trainer, Leonard's attorney, shrugged off Arum's bluster which seemed designed to stir interest in the show, reportedly lagging at the gate.

Meanwhile, the WBA spent Wednesday debating the fate of its heavyweight champion, Mike Weaver. After a long discussion, it ruled that Weaver must sign by mid-July for a Sept. 30 defense against James "Quick" Tillis.

Pro golfer Orville Moody won the Korean Open three times while serving in the United States Army.

Lester And Barry...

Where There's A Will...

By BILL MCCLELLAN

"Here, Madge. We can sit right up here. We can see fine from this spot. Save a place for Lester. I'll set this cushion here for Barry. They should be here pretty soon. Barry never misses one of Tommy's little games."

"If they don't hurry they're going to miss the first inning. What did they say they were going shopping for?"

"I don't know. Something about a phone, I think. Barry says I use ours so much I'm going to wear it out."

"It doesn't sound like the boys to go shopping for telephones."

"No, but... Hey, look! Tommy's team is coming to bat. That's the little Dodson boy up at the plate now."

"Gosh, Betty. Do the parents usually yell like this? The way some of them are screaming you'd think this was a major league game or something."

"It's embarassing, Madge. I just thank God Barry isn't like that anymore."

"You mean Barry use to act that way? Yell and scream at the umpires?"

"Yes. He was probably the worst one out here. But he can't anymore. One time he got so upset that he strained muscles in his throat or something and the doctor said if he kept it up he'd lose his voice for a long time."

"Really?"

"Are you kidding? That's the only reason I'm sitting up here. Before the doctor told Barry to quiet down I would park the car by the fence and watch Tommy's games from there. I was too embarassed to sit by Barry."

"Boy, I'll bet."

"He still gets mad at the umpire, but now if he starts up I just remind him of the doctor and he just sits there and steams. Ha ha. Hey, hey. Look, Madge. Tommy's up to bat! That's great. I'm glad he's getting a chance. Boy, I hope he gets a hit."

"Yeah. Look. Here comes the pitch..."

"Hey, hey! He hit it, Madge. He hit it! He's, he's...oh...rats."

"Aw. Gosh, Betty. I'm sorry he got out. At least he hit the ball."

"Well, maybe he'll get a single or something next time. Hey! Way to try, Tommy! Way to get after it!"

"Boy, if he had just hit it over to the left a little."

"Mmm."

"Look, Betty. Look at those two men over there. They're really giving that umpire what for. I don't think they liked the call."

"See? That's what I mean, Madge. There's no place at a kids' game for actions like that. I'm Tommy's mother and even I'd agree he was out on that play."

"Boy, they're still at it."

"It's just terrible, Madge. Look at that one on the left. He's got that megaphone practically stuck in the umpire's ear."

"Yeah. He's really... Uh...megaphone?"

"Why don't those guys go sit back in the stands and let the kids play ball. I tell you, they..."

"Uh...Betty?"

"...ought to be kicked out of the ball park. I'm going to give them a piece of my mind."

"Betty? What...What did you say the boys went to the store for?"

"What? A phone. Telephone, I think. Who cares? Hey, Mister! Why don't you sit down and shut up! Why..."

"Betty, Betty, wait."

"Hey! Hey you old goats! Why don't you go home! Leave the game to the kids!"

"Betty? Did Barry say telephone...or megaphone?"

"I don't know. I don't know. What differ...uh...telephone...megaphone. Megaphone! Madge, that's...that's...that's."

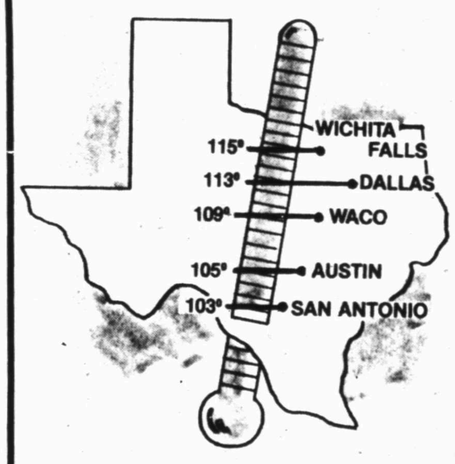

"I'm afraid so, Betty."

Tells Of Childhood...

Book Is Autobiography

NEW YORK (AP) — When Fannie Flagg was growing up in Alabama in the '50s, her life was safe, secure and innocent.

"We can't have that kind of childhood anymore; the world has changed," says the television, film and stage star who has captured those vanished days in her just-published novel, "Coming Attractions."

Daisy Fay Harper is 11 years old, living in Mississippi and starting the sixth grade in 1952 when she begins her journal that forms the book. Fannie Flagg was also 11 years old, living in Alabama and starting the sixth grade in 1952.

"It's as autobiographical as the work of anyone who writes about growing up in the South," the author said in an interview. "I tried to write about something I knew, but I moved it over a state to Mississippi."

Though she says she basically remembered what life was like in the '50s, she spent seven months researching, going through old newspapers to see what the fashions were, what movies were showing, what music was popular, what the language was like.

"Those were innocent times," she recalls. "I think that children really had no concept of anything bad ever happening to us. We had missed the war; we felt very safe and believed that America was the strongest and the best.

"Today's 11-year-olds are so different," she adds. "They've been exposed to war on television, to all the assassination attempts; they've been exposed to drugs, exposed to much freer sexual knowledge; they have a much better view of the world than I did at the age of 28."

Miss Flagg, a blue-eyed strawberry blonde, slim and attractive in a blue shirt, gray pants and lavender blazer, competed in beauty contests for seven years in pursuit of scholarships. She started in the Junior Miss pageant and went on to the Miss Alabama competitions, along the way winning a scholarship to the Pittsburgh Playhouse.

"I do have first-hand, inside knowledge of beauty pageants," she said with a smile, explaining that she let Daisy win the Miss Mississippi crown partly to make up for not ever having come in first herself.

Miss Flagg, unlike her heroine who has attained only the age of 17 at the end of the book, has reached the age of 39. She has been acting and writing for 31 of those years, having written, directed and starred in "The Whoopee Girl" in her school at the age of 8.

Since then, she has kept busy on network television shows, includng writing and appearing on "Candid Camera," as a regular on the "Dick Van Dyke Show" and "The Match Game" and is now in the series, "Harper Valley PTA." She starred on Broadway in "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas."

"I've worked in TV, radio, film, theater, written and performed in comedy albums, entertained at fairs," she says. "I've worked almost every end of the business — the only thing I haven't done is striptease. Although," she adds as an afterthought, "I did play one of the strippers in 'Gypsy.'"

And what does she like best?

"I enjoy what I'm doing at the time I'm doing it," she says. "Doing a series is boring but it doesn't have the pressure of the theater, where you really have to get into training. But of all the things I've ever done, writing the book has been the most fun."

Miss Flagg, who says she's always considered herself a writer, with acting coming second, was born Patricia Neal, but since there was already an actress by that name she had to pick a new one because of Equity rules.

She has already seen some enthusiastic reviews of her book, but is awaiting others with more trepidation than on theater opening nights.

"Because I don't have a college education and because I felt insecure in that I was competing with professional writers who have track records, I was afraid," she says. "When I found out someone actually read it and liked it I was knocked out."

Supreme Court

suaded Justice Brennan to setting aside temporarily the effect of the lower court's ruling.

The Reagan administration, despite the president's campaign-stated misgivings about draft registration and his commitment to an all-volunteer military force, urged the justices to salvage male-only registration.

The case also attracted much unsolicited advice in the form of "friend-of-the-court" arguments.

Eight members of Congress, the Orthodox Jewish Coalition on the Draft and a group of 16 women urged the justices to overturn the lower court's ruling.

Numerous women's rights groups, including the National Organization for Women, opposed the male-only law.

More than 9 percent of today's Army is female — about 62,000 out of 670,000 soldiers.

Under a landmark 1976 Supreme Court decision, laws treating men and women differently cannot stand if they do not serve "important governmental objectives" and are not "substantially related" to achieving such objectives.

Vandalism Case Is Under Probe

Pornchai Visapattana had two tires slashed on his 1981 Datsun while it was parked at Snyder Motel during the early morning hours Wednesday. Officer Buddy Kinney took the report.

At 9:04 a.m., Wednesday, officer Kerry Fritz arrested a 19 year-old man on an assault charge that allegedly occurred Tuesday at 2405 Ave. N.

At 1:12 p.m., a woman on Highland Drive called police and told Lt. Steve Warren that two people representing themselves as insurance agents and mentioning social security, made appointments to meet her later to talk to her about a policy that would pay all her hospital and medical bills. The agent was checked out and was legitimate, said police. But the woman didn't buy a policy.

A minor accident was reported to police at 1:48 p.m. Wednesday. In that, a 1978 Pontiac driven by Scott Clinton Conrad struck a tree in the 3000 block of Houston. Minor damage was reported to the vehicle. Taking the report was officer Fritz.

Sgt. Scogin investigated an incident at 3:43 p.m. that involved a six-month old child being bitten by a dog. Becky Franks, 2100 Ave. N, said a dog had bitten her baby and the dog was foaming at the mouth. The animal was taken to a local veterinarian who said the dog had epilepsy. The dog was put to sleep, but was not sent to Austin to be tested for rabies.

Burt Davis, 3101 El Paso, told officer Don Cheek someone had taken a grape ivy plant valued at $25 from his porch. Police received the complaint at 8:54 p.m.

A minor accident on the U.S. 84 access road was reported to officer Tony Pantoja at 12:10 a.m. today. In that, a 1977 Chevrolet driven by James Coats of Rotan hit a guardrail owned by the Texas Highway Department. Although only minor damage was reported to the vehicle, a wrecker was required.

William Morris, Canary Courts, told officer Kerry Fritz this morning that a few days ago someone had taken a hammer and a screwdriver and knocked holes in the bottom of a carburetor. There were reportedly several witnesses to the incident. Damage was pegged at $25.

The wreck was investigated by the Texas Highway Patrol.

Robbery, Murder Involved...

Chilean Scandal Is Unraveling

By TOM FENTON
Associated Press Writer

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — What began as Chile's biggest bank robbery and exploded into a case involving two grisly murders, a questioned suicide and the complicity of secret police agents has shaken the country's vast intelligence network.

It has also kept Chileans spellbound while they watch a real-life mystery as tangled as the plot of a good Agatha Christie novel unravel on the front pages of their daily newspapers.

Police say that on the night of March 10, in the desert town of Calama north of Santiago, a cashier and a guard in the local branch of the State Bank disappeared along with the equivalent of $1.15 million in pesos.

An all-points bulletin went out for Guillermo Martinez, 41, the guard, and Sergio Yanez, 24, the cashier. Capture seemed only a matter of time in heavily policed Chile, which stops drivers at numerous highway checkpoints and closely scrutinizes travel documents before citizens may leave the country.

But weeks passed and neither men nor money turned up. As the search went on, detectives realized certain aspects of the case didn't mesh.

For one thing, there was no evidence either man planned a getaway. Both left distraught families, and Yanez was said to adore his young wife and 3-year-old son.

Another factor was the loot. Chile's largest bill is 1,000 pesos, worth about $25; police estimated that $1.15 million worth of pesos would weigh 176 pounds.

On June 12 the case took a startling twist. Chile's secret police — known as The National Information Center (CNI) — issued a terse statement saying that two CNI agents had abducted the bank employees and stolen the money.

The announcement said the guard and cashier were taken into the desert east of town and shot to death. Dynamite was then exloded against the bodies. The remaining identifiable body parts were buried.

The announcement identified the agents as Eduardo Villanueva and Gabriel Hernandez, CNI chief in Calama. Police said Villanueva described leading the men into the desert on orders from Hernandez.

"First I shot Martinez in the head. Then I moved in closer and aimed at the teller. He asked me not to do it," police said Villanueva told them in his confession.

"He said, 'Please don't kill me,' then he started praying and I shot him. My major said they had to be eliminated," Villanueva told police, according to officers.

The CNI said the two agents led investigators into the desert where bits of bodies and clothing were recovered. A bale of money wrapped in plastic was found at the bottom of a ravine near the town of Arica.

"This double homocide has been completely cleared up," police pathologist Dr. Alberto Teke told the newspaper El Mercurio. Teke said all evidence dovetailed with the confessions made by the two CNI agents.

Court Verdict Okays Surgery

CORAL GABLES, Fla. (AP) — A neurosurgeon who was given court permission to operate on an infant despite objections from the parents says the girl's open spinal cord was enclosed without complications.

"This child may die (even) with all the things we've done today," Dr. Glenn Morrison said at a Wednesday night news conference after the delicate three-hour operation. "All we can do is make the best of the situation."

Twelve-day-old Elin Daniels was in stable condition at Variety Children's Hospital today. The infant was born with a particularly severe form of spina bifida called meningomyelocele in which the nerve endings of the spinal cord were tangled in a sac on the surface of the body.

To complicate matters, the infant also was suffering from hydrocephalus, commonly called water on the brain.

During the first part of the operation, Morrison inserted a flexible tube into the infant's body to inhibit the buildup of water pressure on the brain. The second half of the operation involved closing the protruberance on the girl's lower back to prevent infection.

Morrison said such operations should be performed during the first 24 hours of life, but he said Wednesday night's operation "was not medically different from the others. ... The only difference was in the notoriety associated with it."

The case attracted public interest after Albert and Jennifer Daniels, the girl's parents, said they did not want the hospital to operate. Hospital officials took the case to Dade County Circuit Court to ask that the child be turned over to the custody of the state so the operation could be performed without parental consent.

Judge Ralph Ferguson said in an opinion Tuesday that the child deserved a fighting chance. The Daniels, who awaited word of the operation at home Wednesday, said they would not fight the judge's ruling and signed the consent forms.

The Daniels had said prior to the court ruling they opposed the operation because they thought whatever happened to Elin should be allowed to occur naturally.

Nixon-Hughes Courier Case Under Review

NEW YORK (AP) — The presiding justice of the Brooklyn Appellate Division will review an investigation of Yonkers lawyer William Griffin who allegedly served as courier in financial dealings between Richard Nixon and billionaire Howard Hughes.

Justice Milton Mollen said Wednesday that early in 1976 Nixon refused to testify in a secret investigation of Griffin by a Westchester County lawyers' disciplinary committee. Nixon, who had moved to California following his resignation in 1974, argued that the panel lacked jurisdiction to compel his appearance.

Jaycees Promised Chance To Vote On Admission Of Women

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The 200,000 member all-male Jaycees service organization will get a chance to vote on whether women will be admitted to the group at the local level, says newly-elected national president Gene A. Honn.

"Our bylaws read 'young men 18 to 35' and my philosphy is the membership will make that decision (whether individual chapters can admit women)," said Honn, 30, after his election to the national office Wednesday during the Jaycees' 61st national convention.

Honn said prior to the convention, national officers agreed to allow a referendum at the local level on whether women could be admitted to the Jaycees.

He said the vote, scheduled for August and September, would be on whether to change the baylaws and admit women to membership in indivudal chapters. "If it fails, we will continue to operate as we are currently," he said.

He declined to say how he felt about the admission of women to the organization, but said he would abide by the outcome of the referendum.

Jaycee public relations officer Randy Kindy said the referendum, "is seen as a compromise, as a way to let each member to cast a vote," on the admission of women.

He said when the question of admitting women has been brought up at previous national conventions, it has been voted down by "only one or two percent" of the national membership that attends the conventions.

The referendum would allow women to have full membership status in local chapters, but Kindy said he did not know if the women would be allowed to vote in state and national conventions.

He said courts in at least two states have ruled against the all-male policy, but that the rulings were being appealed.

"Traditionally, the ones to challenge (the all-male membership) have been from the metropolitan areas where there are a lot of working and business women," he said.

Currently a women's auxiliary of the organization meets at the same time as the Jaycees convention, but the women have no votes.

Honn said his major priority for the coming year was "developing the leadership ability of the individual members to create greater impact," in individual communities.

Honn is an agriculture extension advisor for the University of Illinois, has served as national vice president of the organization the past year, representing Illinois, Idaho, Kansas, Montana and South Carolina.

An alumnus of Illinois State University and the University of Illinois, Honn is involved with the National Association of Country Agricultural Agents, the National Association of Extension Advisors, Farm Bureau, Future Farmers of America and 4-H.

He was elected by acclamation at the Wednesday evening session after Jay Brim, of Austin, Texas, and Dennis Snelson, of Independence, Mo., withdrew as candidates.

Time To Get Busy On Future Water Needs

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Railroad Commissioner Mack Wallace says the recent energy shortage should have taught Texans that it's time to get busy on water supplies for the future.

Wallace reminded the Texas Energy and Natural Resources Advisory Council — TENRAC — that the late Ernest O. Thompson had predicted a possible shortage of oil in 1953, yet nothing was done to avoid it.

On Wednesday chairman Louis Beecherl Jr. of the Texas Water Development Board told TENRAC the state is facing a water shortage, and Wallace said it would be "sheer folly" to ignore the warning.

"We're in exactly the same situation with water as we were with oil and gas," said Wallace. "As a practical matter you can live without oil and gas, but you can't live without water. We've got to have water for this state to survive."

Beecherl urged TENRAC, which includes Texas' top elected officials, to support a legislative proposal that would create a water trust fund for the future.

Beecherl got an immediate pledge of support from Gov. Bill Clements, who said, "I totally favor what you're trying to do here. I'm in total support of the concept of a water trust fund."

"Because of the lead time in solving these (water) problems, the crisis is now," said Clements.

"We've built all the easy reservoirs," said Beecherl. He estimated it would cost $11 billion in 1980 dollars to impound six million additional acre-feet that the state will need by 1990. In future dollars, he said, the cost could be $28 billion to $30 billion.

An acre-foot is 325,851 gallons.

With the federal government pulling back on water grants, Beecherl said, "We're going to have to go it alone more than we have in the past."

Beecherl said by 2010 Texas will need to import water from out of state or restrict water use and curtail growth.

He said using $100 million in a trust fund to guarantee $1 billion in bonds for local water projects would save taxpayers and ratepayers $400 million in interest charges on the bonds.

"I encourage you to support the passage of legislation dealing with a trust fund," he said.

Absent from the TENRAC meeting was Speaker Bill Clayton, who has proposed setting aside half of state treasury surpluses for water development.

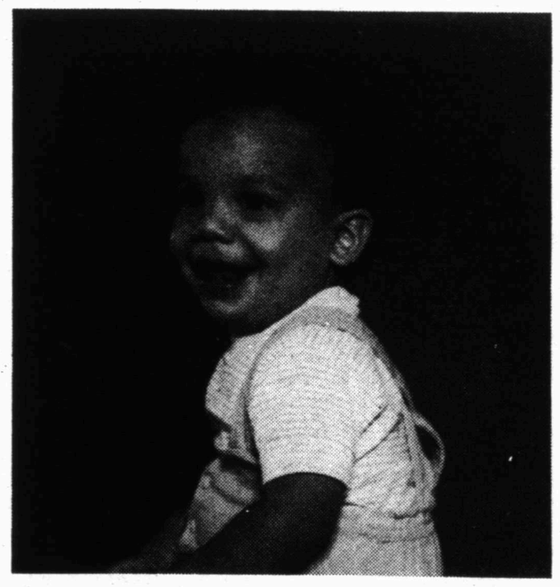

His proposal cleared the House during the regular session but was killed in the Senate on the final day, June 1, by a procedural point of order. Clements has submitted the topic for consideration by the 30-day special session, starting July 13.

In other action Wedensday, TENRAC urged the Texas congressional delegation to vote to repeal a provision in the federal Fuel Use Act that would require power plants fueled by natural gas to convert to coal. Dary Stone of the state-federal office in Washington said the conversion cost has been estimated at $30 billion.
