Man shoots four

GARFIELD HEIGHTS, Ohio — A man arguing with his ex-wife shot three police officers and a tenant of an apartment building Sunday night, then held police at bay, authorities said. The tenant and one officer were killed. Authorities said the man had barricaded himself inside and might be holding hostages at the Hillcrest Apartments in suburban Cleveland. A Hillcrest resident, Sandra Priebe, 47, said the man was a former police officer.

Seoul offers North nuke power plants

■ South Korean outlines reunification vision; Pyongyang must open program to international inspection.

N.Y. Times News Service

SEOUL, South Korea — South Korea today formally offered to supply North Korea with modern nuclear power plants if the North opens its nuclear program to inspection.

The offer, made in a modestly conciliatory speech by President Kim Young Sam, comes two days after the United States and North Korea agreed on measures to settle the nuclear issue, and could be a major step toward realizing that goal.

Kim's speech, his first substantive remarks on relations with the North since the death last month of its longtime leader, Kim Il Sung, outlined his vision for reunification of the Korean peninsula.

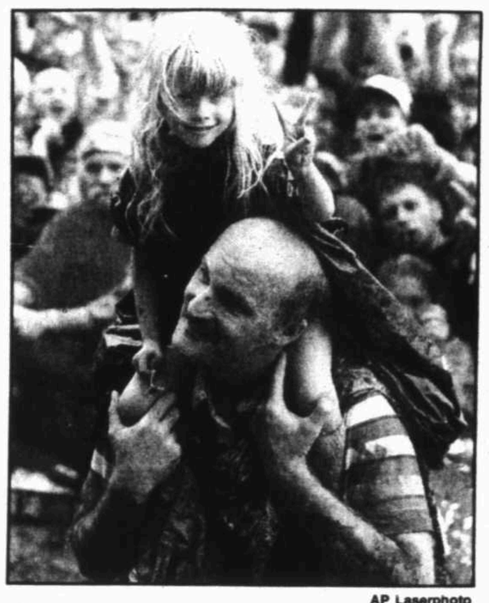

The tone of the speech, in which he calls for the two countries to "immediately stop slandering each other," and the offer of light-water nuclear reactors could help pave the way for the two Koreas to resume their dialogue, though it is not clear how the Communist government in Pyongyang will respond.

"If and when the North guarantees the transparency of its nuclear activities, we are ready to support their development of the peaceful use of nuclear energy, including light-water nuclear reactor construction, by providing them with the necessary capital and technology," Kim said, according to an English translation provided by the South Korean government.

"This could well become the very first joint project for national development — leading to the establishment of a single community of the Korean people," he said.

Friendly skies: Congress hops military aircraft for its VIP trips

By Jim Drinkard
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Last February, four members of Congress hopped aboard an Army helicopter at a hospital in Tacoma, Wash., bound for a news conference at the Boeing Co. plant in Seattle just 25 miles away.

The excursion took 40 minutes, about as long as it would to drive there in a car. But the cost was a lot more than gas money — $1,599, by an Army estimate.

The trip by Reps. Norman Dicks, Jolene Unsoeld and Michael Kreidler, and Sen. Patty Murray, all Washington state Democrats, was one of more than 500 trips taken by members of Congress or their staffs aboard military aircraft since early 1993, an Associated Press review of Pentagon records found.

Lawmakers have wide latitude to travel and get an annual allowance to do so. But when Defense Departments regulations allow, they often prefer a military aircraft because it conserves their allowances and frequently comes with VIP service.

On such trips, the Defense Department usually provides congressmen a military escort, meals, lodging and sometimes a car and driver to pick

House fire kills 8 left-alone children

■ Mother of three, babysitting others, may have been in bar, police say.

Associated Press

CARBONDALE, Ill. — Eight small children, left at home by themselves, died in an early morning house fire Sunday, police said. An 8-year-old girl escaped the flames unharmed.

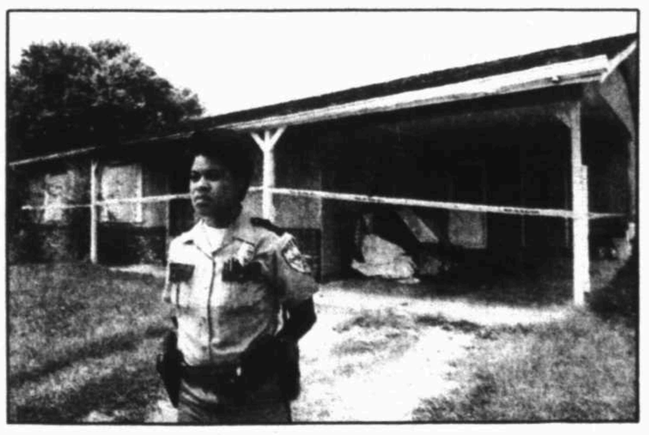

The victims, all relatives from 5 months to 7 years old, were found dead inside, said Assistant Chief Harry Threlkeld of the Carbondale Fire Department.

Camilla Foulks, 25, mother of three of the children, had been babysitting the others, who were left there by their parents, authorities said.

At a news conference Sunday, Police Chief Don Strom said Foulks might have been in a bar when the fire broke out.

"We have several reports to that effect. We have confirmed some of those and we're continuing to investigate oth-

O.J.-stirred domestic violence talk jams information highway

By Deborah Hastings
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — She is writing from Illinois on a warm summer night, pouring her heart into a computer but afraid to give her name.

"What I want to say is that I am also a survivor of domestic violence. The O.J. Simpson thing really hit home. Although I've been divorced for a year, my ex still harasses me every chance he gets. . . ."

Forty-five minutes later, from 1,500 miles away, a heartfelt reply comes from Prodigy user SMBCO4B, a k a Bonnie Cunningham.

"Hiya survivor. It's OK, you don't have to give your name. I understand everything you said, especially your fear. You're really having a rough time of it, eh? I'll bet you feel like you'll never get away from him."

Lawmaker Shin Sakurai resigns after stating that Japan's wartime occupation of Asian nations benefited those countries.

On 49th surrender anniversary, war accountability splits Japan

TOKYO (AP) — Japan today marked the 49th anniversary of its World War II surrender with solemn prayers, tearful remembrance — and controversy.

"The war brought tragic sacrifices beyond description to the people in Asia and many other people in the world," Prime Minister Tomiichi Murayama told a solemn crowd gathered at a Tokyo assembly hall, speaking before a backdrop of a huge rising-sun flag. "I express my condolences to them with deep remorse."

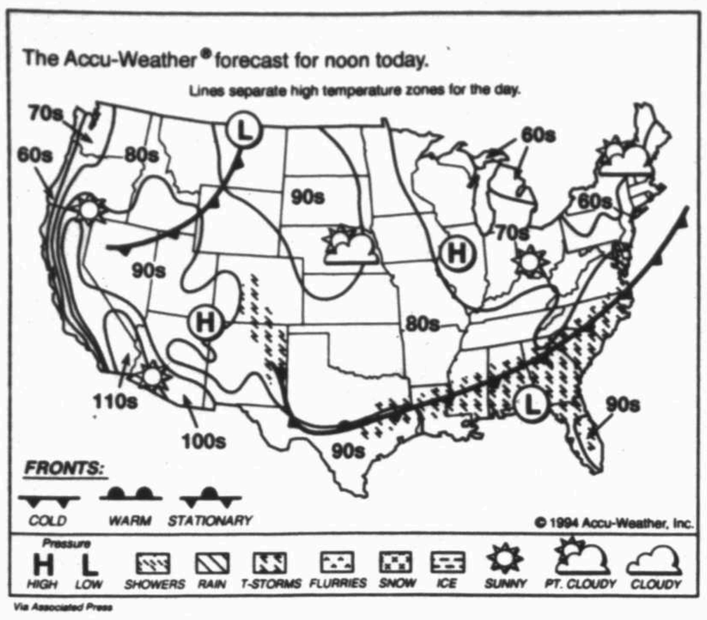

At the same ceremony, Emperor Akihito and Empress Michiko, flanked by a giant bank of white and yellow chrysanthemums, offered prayers for the dead. "I feel never-ending sorrow for many people who lost their lives," the emperor said.

But despite the carefully choreographed tributes, Japan has yet to truly lay the war to rest.

Chance of rain clouds basin

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a 20 percent chance of rain, a high near 85 and east winds at 5-15 mph. Tonight should be fair with a low near 65, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tuesday should be mostly sunny with a high in the lower 90s.

After an overnight low of 66, Sunday's high reached 96 compared to the record high for that date of 104 set in 1987. The record low was 60 set in 1940.

STATE

A cold front passed through West Texas Sunday, droping temperatures into the 60s and 70s in some parts of the region. Elsewhere across the state, conditions remained hot and muggy.

The front brought some scattered showers and thunderstorms to the central and northern portions of the Texas Panhandle. South of the front, skies were partly cloudy with temperatures in the 80s and 90s.

In North Texas, skies were fair to partly cloudy with temperatures ranging from 93 degrees at Lufkin to 99 degrees at Meachem Airport in Fort Worth.

Skies were mostly cloudy over the remainder of the state with scattered showers and thunderstorms occurring along the coast and in extreme South Texas. Temperatures across South Texas ranged from 78 degrees at Laredo to 97 degrees at College Station.

Forecasts call for partly to mostly cloudy skies over West Texas with a chance of showers and thunderstorms. Lows will be in the 50s over parts of the mountains and panhandles with 60s and 70s elsewhere. Highs today will be in the 90s to near 100 over the far west and along the Rio Grande Valley with 80s over the rest of the region.

Skies will be partly cloudy across North Texas with scattered thunderstorms. Lows will range from 67 to 72. Highs today will range from 87 to 92. It will be mostly sunny Tuesday with highs ranging from 88 to 94.

A cold front will move into the Hill Country late Sunday night and work its way south Monday, bringing a good chance of showers and thunderstorms to South Texas. Lows will be in the mid-70s, with highs today in the mid-90s. Temperatures will be in the 80s in coastal areas.

NATION

Violent windy storms stretched across much of the United States on Sunday and a tornado touched down outside Philadelphia as a strong cold front blew eastward from the Rockies.

In Upper Marion Township, Pa., a tornado downed trees and power lines Sunday afternoon.

Some homes in the Philadelphia suburb were hit by falling trees, but none of them collapsed and no injuries were reported.

The cold front stretched from the Rockies across the Central States and into the Texas panhandle.

Thunderstorms moving ahead of the front spawned heavy rain and severe weather. A tornado watch was issued parts of New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, the District of Columbia and adjacent coastal waters.

Torrential rain fell in Ohio Sunday, including 4.3 inches of rain in Westerville, 3.7 inches in Granville and 2.6 inches in Worthington.

For the six hour period ending at 1 p.m. CDT, 1.26 inches of rain fell in Pittsburgh and 1.06 inches fell in Mount Washington, N.H.

The Gulf Coast region had heavy rain, thundershowers and winds up to 30 mph as a tropical depression formed over the northeast Gulf of Mexico Sunday afternoon. A flood watch was issued for parts of Florida and a tornado was spotted in Cameron County, Texas.

Thunderstorms also rumbled across much of Colorado and a flash flood watch was issued for foothill areas.

Temperatures were unseasonably low in the north central states as cool air filtered in behind the front, with the mercury dipping into the 40s for record breaking readings in Nebraska and Iowa.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

JAMS: O.J.-spurred talk floods cyberspace

(From 1A)

In cyberspace, that great beyond of linked computers known as the information superhighway, domestic violence dialogue has flooded on-line networks.

The topic, thanks to O.J. Simpson's June 17 arrest on charges of murdering his ex-wife and her male friend, already had fresh prominence on billboards, the covers of newsmagazines and in speeches by President Clinton.

But the comments of these computer travelers are achingly poignant, painfully intimate. Cloaked in anonymity, separated by great distances, they receive immediate response and support.

It is not an answer, and it is not without criticism, but to Bonnie Cunningham, a former supervisor at a battered women's shelter who now volunteers as a Prodigy network expert, the exchange is a godsend.

"I get far more than I give," said Cunningham, 38, as she signs on by laptop computer to Prodigy's new domestic violence bulletin board, a subgroup of the network's Homelife board.

It went up shortly after Simpson's surrender and the release of legal records concerning his earlier violence against Nicole Brown Simpson.

Now computer networks are humming with shared tales of spousal abuse.Stacey Kabat of Battered Women Fighting Back, a Boston self-help organization, says her group's literature now mentions the networks.

But Kabat and others are quick to note that these networks are tools, not answers.

"The conversations on these bulletin boards is great," Kabat said. "Anything that gets facts out to people is great. But it's not a solution. How many battered women have access to on-line networks?"

Gail Pincus of the Domestic Abuse Center in Los Angeles says she fears batterers may learn to manipulate the networks to gain information about underground havens for battered women.

"You don't want it to go out over the Prodigy network how shelters work together to hide women," said Pincus, who trains police officers and offers expert witness testimony on battered women. "I'm just afraid that the wrong people are going to see it."

Cunningham, who dispenses encouragement and advice learned from running a Roswell, N.M., women's shelter, says she is careful and simply points people in the right direction — often to something as simple as the phone book.

"I don't offer counseling," she said. "I give them a shoulder to cry on, I let them know that they're not alone. And I tell them what they can do to get help."

Besides Cunningham, Prodigy's experts include two lawyers, a police officer and Anna Gregerson, who also has worked in a Bay Area women's shelter and on a domestic violence hot line.

In exchange for their services, the volunteers receive free network time. Prodigy charges $3.60 per hour, plus a flat monthly fee, to access its network.

Cunningham, seriously injured in January's Northridge earthquake when a fireplace fell on her, breaking her collarbone, is housebound. Her right arm is in a sling as she awaits federal aid for exploratory shoulder surgery.

Unemployed with no health insurance and facing a long convalescence, Cunningham was feeling more than a little sorry for herself when she began scrolling through Prodigy about three months ago. Now she spends about six hours a day at the screen.

"This has saved my sanity," she said.

A woman named Deanna in North Carolina writes a long e-mail to Cunningham, describing her husband's physical abuse of their 7-year-old son and the failure of social service authorities to intervene.

Deanna closes: "I'm trying to break the cycle of abuse, and everyone else is trying to break me and my little boy. WHY??????"

In an equally long reply, Cunningham says: "I am so sorry for you and your son's pain. . . . This will sound like a silly question, but do you have a Polaroid camera? They're perfect for documenting abuse. Incontrovertible proof, i.e. having to look at a picture of your son's black eye, might make a different impression on social services. . . . Counseling could be a great help to your son and you.

"Hang in there! Bonnie (a k a SMBCO4B)."

er potential witnesses that might have similar information," Strom said.

Jackson County State's Attorney Mike Wepsiec said Foulks was given a blood test to determine if she was intoxicated but results were not immediately available. Foulks was staying with relatives Sunday night.

"Because the investigation is ongoing, I won't preclude any charges from possibly being filed," Wepsiec said.

Strom said preliminary reports indicate all the victims had deadly levels of carbon monoxide in their systems. He said the cause of the fire had not been determined but arson was not suspected.

"The fire was contained in one bedroom — where seven of the victims were found. There was slight damage to another bedroom," said Threlkeld. "One victim was found in the living room."

Threlkeld said that when police and firefighters arrived about 1:30 a.m., no adults were present at the one-story, single-family wood house on the northeast side of the city — site of the main Southern Illinois University campus — 100 miles southeast of St. Louis.

The victims were identified as Lafesca Gates, 7; Antwene Sanders, 5; Sherice McDaniel, 4; Joseph McDaniel, 3; Elisha Fonder, 3; Clifton Simon, 3; Carlika Simon, 16 months; and Carlton Simon, 5 months, Threlkeld said.

The 8-year-old survivor was not identified. The other children were all cousins, nieces and nephews.

Foulks, mother of the three Simon children, had moved into the house only Wednesday.

On Friday, firefighters responded to a minor kitchen fire there, said Susan Metcalf, director of Good Samaritan Ministries, which manages the house for the federal government.

"She had some problems," said Metcalf. "She had a lot of support, counselors, people working with her on parental skills."

Metcalf said Foulks, a single mother, had been attending a basic adult education course at Southern Illinois University.

"She did a nice job setting up the house and kept the children clean and neat."

On Sunday afternoon, yellow police tape kept the curious away from the blue bungalow, located on a quiet, tree-lined street. The front three windows were boarded up, and two box springs and a bed frame — all charred — were dumped in the front yard.

A rusty sign in back of the house read, "You are welcome to play here but please be careful."

OFFERS: South Korean leader outlines vision

tween North Korea and the United States on Saturday in Geneva, the North said it would freeze or abandon activities that could lead to the production of plutonium, which can be used to make nuclear weapons. It also said it would remain a party to the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty.

In return, Washington said it would move toward establishing diplomatic relations with Pyongyang and would arrange to provide light-water nuclear reactors to replace North Korea's existing graphite-moderated reactors, which produce more of the type of plutonium that can be made into weapons.

In his speech today — on the holiday celebrated in both Koreas as the anniversary of the end of Japan's colonial rule — Kim made clear that South Korea wants to play a central role in providing the light-water technology to the North, provided that the North agrees to be open about its nuclear program.

While South Korea previously has expressed its willingness to supply the reactors, Kim's is the most direct and official offer.

Officials in Seoul said that the United States was now leaning toward having the reactors, which are expected to cost $4 billion, supplied by South Korea rather than by Russia, as had been initially envisioned.

Some analysts say the government wants to play down the Geneva accord because South Korea was not directly involved in the negotiations. And some see the Geneva talks as an attempt by North Korea to isolate the South by dealing directly with Washington.

"There is a sense of feeling left out," said Yang Sung Chul, a professor of political science at Kyunghee University in Seoul.

In his speech, Kim said he was ready for talks with the North but stopped short of calling for a rescheduling of the North-South summit meeting that was scheduled for July 25 but postponed after Kim Il Sung's death.

"Our doors are always open for dialogue with the North at any place and any time," Kim said. He said the two sides must "expeditiously build up military trust so that the state of military confrontation can finally be ended."

The president maintained that the reunification of Korea, which was divided after World War II, must be gradual.

SKIES: Congress often uses military planes

them up at home.

And no detail of comfort is too small for the military to consider for its VIP travelers, notations in the military records indicate.

For instance, on May 2, 1993, Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, visited Air Force bases in Florida and North Carolina, along with two aides.

A note to the crew suggests the senator is "not a big breakfast person" and adds: " likes chocolate chip cookies."

For a June 1-2 trip by Rep. John Murtha, D-Pa., chairman of the House defense appropriations subcommittee, the crew is reminded to provide food ("barbecue from Country's Barbeque," near Fort Benning, Ga.), beverages ("regular miniatures set" along with half a case each of Lite beer and Becks or Heineken) and reading material (Golf Digest, Golf Magazine, Golf Illustrated and newspapers).

Defense Department regulations say lawmakers generally may use military aircraft "only where the purpose of the travel is of primary interest to, and bears a substantial relationship to (military) programs or activities." Travel for certain non-military purposes also may be authorized by congressional leaders.

The Pentagon provides a plane or pays for commercial airline tickets if it has no aircraft available.

There has been plenty of publicity, and criticism, over the years about members of Congress using military aircraft for overseas fact-finding trips. But the AP review found lawmakers frequently hop Pentagon planes for domestic travel, as well.

Most of the domestic trips were clearly military in nature, such as visits to installations for hearings on proposed base closures.

In the case of the Seattle trip, Pentagon records state the purpose was "an overflight of congressional districts and participation in a public announcement of national interest."

The four lawmakers joined Vice President Al Gore that day to announce the sale of $6 billion in civilian aircraft to Saudi Arabia, a huge boon to the Boeing workforce.

George Behan, a spokesman for Dicks, said the lawmakers asked for military transport to allow them to stay a little longer at a conference in Tacoma.

"The vice president asked them to be there, and they wanted to do it," he said.

Behan argued that if the helicopter had not been flying lawmakers, it would be have doing something else, such as training, that would have cost just as much.

Other trips appeared designed to promote goodwill among lawmakers who control the Pentagon's budget.

The Air Force last December approved a request from Rep. Bob Dornan, R-Calif., for an orientation flight at Nellis Air Force Base, Nev., on an F-16 fighter jet that was part of the Thunderbirds air show. The trip for Dornan, a member of the House Armed Services Committee, and an aide cost $1,333.

A note in another file reflects internal debate over whether to spend the money to send an escort from Washington to accompany Senate Budget Committee Chairman Jim Sasser, D-Tenn., from his home state to Fort Campbell, Ky., for a change-of-command ceremony.

A colonel ultimately approved the trip because "he would like the face time . . . with chairman of Budget Cmte," the note says. The final two words are underscored twice.

But not all the trips had a military purpose.

The Army spent $2,277 ferrying freshman Rep. Cleo Fields, D-La., to speaking engagements at universities and with farm and civic groups in Louisiana and Mississippi on May 28 and 29, 1993.

Records indicate the trip was justified "to continue the established program of acquainting newly elected members of Congress with local military installations."

But aside from landing and taking off from Pentagon bases, Fields' trip had little to do with the military.

SPLITS: Japan hasn't put WWII to rest

(From 1A)

On Sunday, the anniversary's eve, a Cabinet minister resigned after causing a furor by stating that Japan's wartime occupation of Asian nations — historically acknowledged as brutal — had benefited those countries.

Shin Sakurai, who stepped down as head of the Environment Agency, was the second Cabinet minister since May to be forced out over remarks about Japan's wartime role. In May, Justice Minister Shigeto Nagano quit under fire after calling the notorious 1937 massacre of Chinese civilians in Nanking by Japanese soldiers a fabrication.

The resignations reflected a recurring pattern in Japan — one that underscores its ambivalence about the war.

On the one hand, some leaders — including Murayama and his predecessor, Mcrihiro Hosokawa — have expressed deep regret over suffering of the country's Asian neighbors.

On the other hand, a small but vocal minority believes Japan's wartime cause was just and that it has nothing to apologize for, although the war cost the lives of 3 million Japanese and 17 million other Asians.

"All Japanese were willing to fight to the last man because justice was on our side," said Futachinosuke Nagoshi, 71, a professor of American literature. "We were going to drive the white man from Asia."

Aug. 15, the surrender anniversary, is dreaded by Japanese leaders as a day of inevitable controversy. This year is no exception.

Murayama, the first Socialist prime minister in a generation, whose party has traditionally been ardently pacifist, ordered members of his coalition Cabinet to keep away from Tokyo's Yasukuni Shrine on the anniversary date.

The shrine, dedicated to warriors who died in the name of the emperor, has a museum glorifying the Japanese war effort, including an exhibit of kamikaze aircraft.

Despite Murayama's order, at least eight Cabinet members have announced plans to visit the shrine as private citizens. Officials estimate 100,000 people will pay homage at the shrine today.

Official visits to the shrine are criticized by those who believe they send the wrong message

Conflicting views of the war still strongly color public debate over a wide spectrum of issues.

They include the role of Japan's military under the country's pacifist postwar constitution; Japan's aspirations to diplomatic leadership, including a permanent seat on the United Nations Security Council; reparations for war victims, including Asian women conscripted as Imperial Army sex slaves.

Assault

A Midland teen-ager remained in critical condition at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center Sunday following an aggravated assault Saturday in the 1400 block of Butternut.

Isaac Loyd, 14, was taken to the hospital with severe head injuries, according to a police report. His 21-year-old brother Richard Loya was treated and released Saturday.

The two were walking home Saturday when a car pulled up and several people got out and assaulted the brothers, the report stated.

Police had released no further details Sunday.

Saturday

Burglary of a Building: L.G. Netherland reported an Owen 79 tandem axel trailer taken from 1500 Cotton Flat Road at 4:28 p.m.

Vandalism: Lisa Vanderzanden reported damage to a vehicle at 2528 Quail Point at 5:53 p.m.

Sunday

Burglary of a Vehicle: A vehicle burglary was reported at 3000 W. Illinois Ave. at 12:31 a.m.

Vandalism: Robert Poer reported vandalism at 1001 Neely Ave. at 7:10 a.m.

Vandalism: Howard Taitel reported damage to the front door at 506 Carter Ave. at 9:48 a.m.

Burglary of a Building: Allredge Gardens, 3300 N. Fairgrounds Road, reported two plants and possibly some tools taken at 11:22 a.m. Entry was gained by cutting a fence.

School aide battles to get life back after auto accident

By Mark England
Waco Tribune-Herald

WACO — Margie Matyastik rolled into Mountainview Elementary School with a shaggy burr, a long green dress and exclamation-point earrings.

It wasn't a fashion statement. More like a tribute to life.

It was the first day of work for Matyastik, 24, a health aide, since an April car accident in Robinson that burned her severely and forced doctors to amputate her legs.

"I just want to get back to the way things were," Matyastik said. "I figure the only way to do it is to do it. It's not like I've changed. I'm the same person. I just look different."

Maggie Matyastik drove her daughter to work last Monday and pulled the wheelchair out of the trunk. It was early, several minutes before 8 a.m., and the sky was overcast. But Margie Matyastik was upbeat and eager to get Mountainview's immunization records into working order before the first day of school.

Gliding her wheelchair toward the sidewalk, Matyastik effortlessly made her way uphill to a ramp. A man walking with her asked how she had adapted at home after her accident. Could she get a cup from a high cabinet, for example?

"I can reach most of my dishes," Margie said. "If I need to get to a higher cabinet. . ."

"Go on, tell him," Maggie Matyastik said.

"I get on the counter," Margie Matyastik said. "It works."

"She's ingenious," her mother said proudly.

It was a rare display of reticence on Margie Matyastik's part. For the most part, Matyastik has met her fate straight-on. Doctors at Parkland Memorial Hospital's burn unit in Dallas predicted Matyastik would be in intensive care for two months. When that date came, she was living by herself at her Waco apartment.

"I just want to get back to the way things were. I figure the only way to do it is to do it."

— Margie Matyastik

She didn't become a hermit, either.

Once back in Waco, Matyastik worked out daily at Figure World, visited friends and went to places like Richland Mall.

"Actually, it's funny," Matyastik said. "Not funny funny. But most people say, 'You look better than I thought you would.' Some people when I go out will ask my friends what happened. They won't ask me. One of my friends said, 'Oh, she got a bad haircut, and she hasn't been the same since.'"

Matyastik remembers nothing of the one-car accident. A man passing by dragged her out of the car. Her legs were on fire. Matyastik suffered third-degree burns on her legs, second-degree burns on her face and upper body. Her first memories are some three weeks later, mostly due to the morphine she was given to handle the pain.

"For a long time, it was all like a dream," Matyastik said. "A bad dream. It was all so vague. I can remember thinking I would wake up and it would be a bad dream. It became real when I was no longer on morphine. But I never asked, 'Why me?' I never blamed anybody. I didn't know who to blame."

The question she did ask was typical Margie, according to her mother.

"I remember one question, 'What do I do now?'" Maggie Matyastik said.

Maggie Matyastik asked her daughter if she was strong enough to go back to work at Mountainview, where she's been working since 1991. Before she had even gone through therapy, Margie Matyastik said, "I could do that work right now."

That was all Principal Raymond Weldon needed to hear. After getting a release from Matyastik's doctor, he held her job open.

"I've worked with Margie for almost five years," he said. "She's a very positive individual. We all knew she was coming back."

Last Monday, Matyastik reclaimed her job. Manuevering her wheelchair through the Mountainview courtyard, she rolled into her small office, complete with file cabinets, a couple of cots and, of course, a height-and-weight scale. Within minutes, she was going through immunization records.

Soon after she started, she sighed.

"A lot of these don't have the child's date of birth," she said. "So, I don't know if their shots are up-to-date or not. Some of these children are listed as being born in June, 1994. I know they're not sending them to school that early."

As she reviewed the shot records, Matyastik occasionally ran a hand through her shaggy burr. For someone who has always worn her hair to her waist, it is a source of irritation. Some people mistakenly think it was her decision, and not her doctors', to cut her hair — sort of a boot-camp statement on her part about the tough road she's been down.

But that's not Margie Matyastik.

The first movie she asked to see at Parkland was the unrepentantly upbeat "The Sound of Music." When she got home, Matyastik redid the message on her answering machine. It now says, "Sorry, I can't reach the phone from the floor right now. If you leave a message, I'll get back to you." And when friends ask her what she's up to, Matyastik says, "Oh, about 4 feet 10."

Her apartment features a duck motif. There are duck paintings, duck pictures, enamel ducks, a vase of cat tails (which any real duck would find homey) and even a duck envelope opener.

A duck seems the perfect symbol for Matyastik.

Despair and self-pity roll off her back like water off, well, a duck's back.

"I don't want a pity party," she said. "I can't stand for people to say, 'Oh, we're so sorry.' Hey, I'm alive. Don't be sorry."

Librarian Dorothy Buchanan leaned into the office to welcome Matyastik back. Just after the accident, Buchanan spent two days making a video. It featured staff, teachers and students wishing Matyastik a speedy recovery and asking her to return to the school.

"We wanted to give her something to look at besides her hospital room," Buchanan said.

Maggie Matyastik said the video did more than that for her daughter.

"She got a lot of cards and gifts," she said. "But nothing did more for her spirits. We showed her the video, and you could just see her perk up. It meant a lot to her."

As Margie Matyastik tried to work, people passing by in the courtyard would wave at her or knock on the window or pop in for a hug.

A lot must be on Matyastik's mind, such as future surgeries and her enormous medical debt (some of which her family hopes to pay off with a future tennis tournament), but she was smiling. She looks forward to seeing the children. She's not scared of how they'll react.

"When kids used to come in moaning because of a scratch, I would always say, 'I've seen worse,'" Matyastik said. "Now I can honestly say, 'I've seen worse.'"

Texas Guardsmen switch tactics in unsettled discrimination lawsuit

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Eighteen months after 31 Texas National Guardsmen filed a $200 million discrimination lawsuit that has yet to be resolved, several plaintiffs are changing their tactics.

Some have dismissed their attorney and are negotiating their own settlements or getting help from the American GI Forum, which first filed discrimination complaints in August 1991.

With San Antonio attorney Luis R. Vera Jr. no longer involved, the individual complaints will be settled sooner, said Gilbert Jasso, civil rights chairman of the GI Forum's Dr. Hector P. Garcia chapter in Corpus Christi.

Jasso told the Corpus Christi Caller-Times in Sunday's editions that he's dealing with the governor's office, which he says has vowed to expedite the negotiations.

Discrimination in the Texas Guard became a statewide issue after the GI Forum filed six complaints against the state militia in August 1991.

The complaints eventually blossomed to 31 and prompted a state and federal equal-opportunity investigation, which began in June 1992 and was completed a year later.

The probe found that nine Hispanic guardsmen were discriminated against and some were victims of retaliation for filing complaints. Investigators have recommended back pay, reinstatements, retirement benefits and correction of military records for some complainants.

The investigation also found that the Guard's complaint procedures allowed some grievances to go unanswered for months.

Although the equal-opportunity investigation was completed more than a year ago, only two complaints have been settled so far, according to Guard officials.

The state claims that settlements were slowed because of the lawsuit filed against the state.

In October, the state offered a settlement of the lawsuit that included specific recommendations for 15 of the 31 cases.

Vera disputes the claims he didn't do his job and he insists that he should still be paid if there's a settlement.

"They can dismiss me any time they want, but it doesn't affect my percentage of attorney's fees," Vera said.

Several of the upset guardsmen have sent letters and grievances to the State Bar of Texas complaining about Vera.

Accidents in San Antonio area claim eight lives over weekend

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — It was a deadly weekend on South Texas roads.

Eight people died in two accidents Saturday that left nine others injured.

The first accident occurred about 12:40 p.m. Saturday when a car collided with a pickup on Interstate 37 in Atascosa County. The collision sent the truck head-on into an oncoming van. Four people died and four others were injured.

About four hours later, four members of a San Antonio family died and five more were injured when the van in which they were riding rolled over on U.S. 90 near Uvalde, authorities said.

In the first accident, van driver Paula Saenz, 65, of Alice, died. Also killed were three people in the pickup: driver Jesus Maria Cervantes, 34, of San Antonio; passenger Michael Hernandez, 36, of San Antonio; and passenger Enrique Sarabia, 31, of San Antonio.

The driver of the car, Manuel Robles, 24, of Channelview, suffered minor injuries and was taken to Tri-City Hospital in Atascosa County before being arrested on suspicion of driving while intoxicated, the Texas Department of Public Safety said.

Robles' passenger, Guadalupe Pereyra, 20, of Channelview, was treated and released from Tri-City as was truck passenger Jose Hernandez, 46, of San Antonio, a hospital spokeswoman said Sunday.

Truck passenger Frank Hernandez, 46, of Castroville, was in stable condition Sunday at Wilford Hall Medical Center in San Antonio.

The victims of the second accident were identified as Elvira Garcia, in her late 70s; her daughter, Belen G. Vara, 45; and two grandsons, Robert Garcia, 12, and Andrew Garcia, 10, said DPS trooper Hector Luevano.

Elvira Garcia's sons, David Garcia, 43, and Juan Garcia, 30, were among the injured.

David Garcia and a nephew, Justin Garcia, 2, were taken by helicopter to Wilford Hall Medical Center in San Antonio to be treated for severe head injuries.

DEAR ABBY

Young father's mother wonders about her role

DEAR ABBY: My son, a college student, was accused of fathering a child last year. He had been seeing this girl casually. She claims the baby girl is definitely his. My son says, "It's possible" — however, he has no desire to see the child or be involved in her life. (I was informed by the girl's mother after the birth of this child.)

Van Buren

The young mother, who has two more years of high school, has opted — with the help of her parents — to keep the child.

What are my duties, rights and responsibilities — both to my son and to my grandchild? I would like to be involved in the child's life, but I do not want to alienate my son. I would like to hear how other grandparents who have been in this situation have handled it. — ON THE FENCE

DEAR ON: I admire your integrity and generosity; however, your son should first determine whether he is indeed the baby's father.

If he is the father, he should consult a lawyer to learn what his legal rights and responsibilities are. Then, you will have all the rights and responsibilities of a grandmother.

DEAR ABBY: You objected to that 15-year-old girl who wanted to pierce her nose, saying she would be left with an unsightly hole in her nose after the ring-in-the-nose fad passes.

You are wrong, Abby. I was 19 when I had my nose pierced. Now, many years later, the hole has grown over nicely, and nobody would ever guess that my nose was once pierced.

But I still wouldn't recommend telling a 15-year-old girl to pierce her nose. Even when I was 20, my mother wouldn't allow a nose ring in her house. Lucky for me, she never saw the one in my belly button! — PIERCED IN CLEARWATER, FLA.

DEAR PIERCED: Read on for some good news for people who want nose rings as a lark but not enough to take the piercing:

DEAR ABBY: Please inform your readers who are interested in wearing nose rings that it isn't necessary to have their noses pierced. There are clip-on nose rings available. I discovered them a few days ago in a jewelry boutique at a local mall.

They are relatively inexpensive (around $5 or $6) and are the perfect solution to a fad that may or may not be around next week. — DALLAS READER

DEAR READER: Thanks for the tip. My guess is that there are now many such "clip joints" where nose rings can be found!

DEAR ABBY: A recent column dealing with proper respect accorded the various doctoral degrees brings to mind an appropriate joke I first heard many years ago:

Two brothers, one a minister and the other a physician, each with the appropriate doctorate, strongly resembled each other. On one occasion, a young woman rushed up to the physician and said, "That was such an inspirational sermon you delivered last Sunday!"

"You have mistaken me for my brother," he replied. "He preaches; I'm the one who practices." — JACK H. STOCKER, PH.D., NEW ORLEANS

Dimmitt Police Chief Dewayne Haney poses by his car near a parking lot where the town's teen-agers often hang out at night.

Small towns join move to keep teen-agers off streets at night

By Jean Pagel
Associated Press

DIMMITT (AP) — This Texas Panhandle town, fringed by corn fields and bisected by train tracks, typifies any rural scene.

Banners across the main drag promote an annual harvest festival. Downtown boasts just one stop light and a myriad of giant grain elevators. Teen-agers congregate in Mr. Burger's parking lot.

Furthermore — in a move increasingly typical for Texas towns — Dimmitt police make those teens go home at curfew.

More and more places like Chillicothe (population 816), Sterling City (1,096) and McCamey (2,493) have implemented curfews in an effort to curb juvenile crime. Officials credit Dallas and Austin with paving the way.

And they insist that small towns need curfews just as much as cities do.

"There's nothing for them to do," police Chief Dewayne Haney said of the teen-agers in Dimmitt, population 4,400. "The only thing they can do is hang out. And when you've got two or three hanging out (late at night), that brews nothing but trouble."

Dimmitt and other towns that adopted curfews this year claim problems with teen vandalism — graffiti, in particular.

But Haney said vandalism has dropped markedly since March, when the curfew went into effect. It requires those age 16 and younger to get off the streets by 11 p.m. if they have school the next day, or by 1 a.m. if it's Friday or Saturday.

Dimmitt police have written 21 violation reports, Haney said. Teen-agers grumbled.

"They were wondering why if all we did was hang out and talk to each other, and we weren't doing anything wrong, why we had to go home," said Brad Beck, a 14-year-old sophomore.

Jay Jacobson, executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union of Texas, said small towns don't have the crime to justify curfews. He called them political gimmicks that snowball.

"Somebody in the next town sees it, and says that's an inexpensive way to say, 'I'm tough on crime,' " Jacobson said.

Teen curfews have even evolved into an issue in this year's race for governor.

Gov. Ann Richards' first TV campaign commercial debuted last week with this warning to Texas youth: "You're going to have to have a curfew. You're going to have to have a specific time when you're going to have to be home."

Richards has said she favors curfews statewide and would consider legislation if communities don't take action.

Her Republican challenger, George W. Bush, has said he believes in curfews but that they should remain a local option.

Taxes, towns top issues on ballots in Texas

Associated Press

From new taxes to new towns, Texans across the state went to the polls this weekend to give their opinions on several issues involving money, schools and the structure of local government.

Here's some of their decisions:

■ For the third time in five years, McAllen voters told city officials they don't want an extra cent added to their sales tax. The 2,047-to-1,559 vote means the city will have to find other ways to pay for various capital improvement projects.

"For me it's a sad day," McAllen Mayor Othal Brand said, adding that the city must use bond elections to fund proposed projects such as a new police station, a mass transit system and a library branch in South McAllen.

McAllen also was seeking seed money for a medical school, South Texas Community College and an alternative school.

■ An extra penny per dollar sales tax was approved by Roma residents. Half the new money will go to economic development and the other half is earmarked for new city projects. The raise jumps the tax to 8.25 percent, although the hike will come a half-cent at a time in two 1995 dates.

"It's going to give us a big advantage in terms of getting projects started," Roma Mayor Alonzo Alvarez said. "The initial monies should start coming in sometime in April."

■ Port Isabel voters said they're willing to pay an extra half-cent sales tax to generate $200,000 for needed services and tourism promotion.

■ Two separate plans to raise Pasadena's sales tax by a half-cent were rejected. Both involved citywide improvements and one also would've paid for more police officers.

■ Mission voters shifted the distribution of their sales tax, taking it away from economic development to instead spend it on a variety of projects.

"It wasn't really a big issue like it was in McAllen," Mission city secretary Mona Martinez said. "Ours was not an increase. It was just a change."

■ San Benito residents also decided against using a half-cent of existing sales tax money on economic development. They instead want the $450,000 the tax generates to go toward rebuilding the city's infrastructure.

"We can now spend the money to improve our streets and make improvements to water lines and sewer lines," San Benito Mayor Chuck Weekley said.

■ The half-cent sales tax in Oak Ridge North passed by only two votes, meaning there would have been a tie had one supporter voted against it. The anticipated extra $100,000 will go toward municipal improvements. Possible projects include a new city hall, community center, park facilities, sidewalks and a water plant.

■ More shifting of money comes from Plano, where voters decided to share its school tax dollars with nearby districts that are less well off. Rather than let the state distribute all of the $15 million is it required to share, the voters opted to send $2.5 million of that pot directly to 12 other districts in Collin County.

Police officer hits, kills 8-year-old on neighborhood street

GARLAND (AP) — An 8-year-old girl crossing a neighborhood street was struck and killed by a police car responding to a burglary, police say.

The incident occurred about 11:15 p.m. Saturday on a busy residential street in this Dallas suburb.

The girl was identified as Cynthia Rivas, according to the Dallas County medical examiner's office.

The girl was killed as she was walking home from a restaurant with her brother, her mother and a cousin, police were told.

Garland police officer Bryan Huschke, who was driving the car, swerved and slammed on his brakes when he saw the child but could not avoid hitting her, police Lt. Nathan Lashaway said.

But the girl's mother and other witnesses said Huschke was driving too fast and without lights.

"He was speeding: there were no lights, no lights at all," the girl's mother, Herminia Rico, said Sunday at the family home, a few blocks from where the accident occurred.

Two other witnesses to the accident also reported that the police officer was driving without lights, but police disputed the account.

Brothers Jose and Gustavo Huerte said they saw a police car speeding without headlights just before the accident.

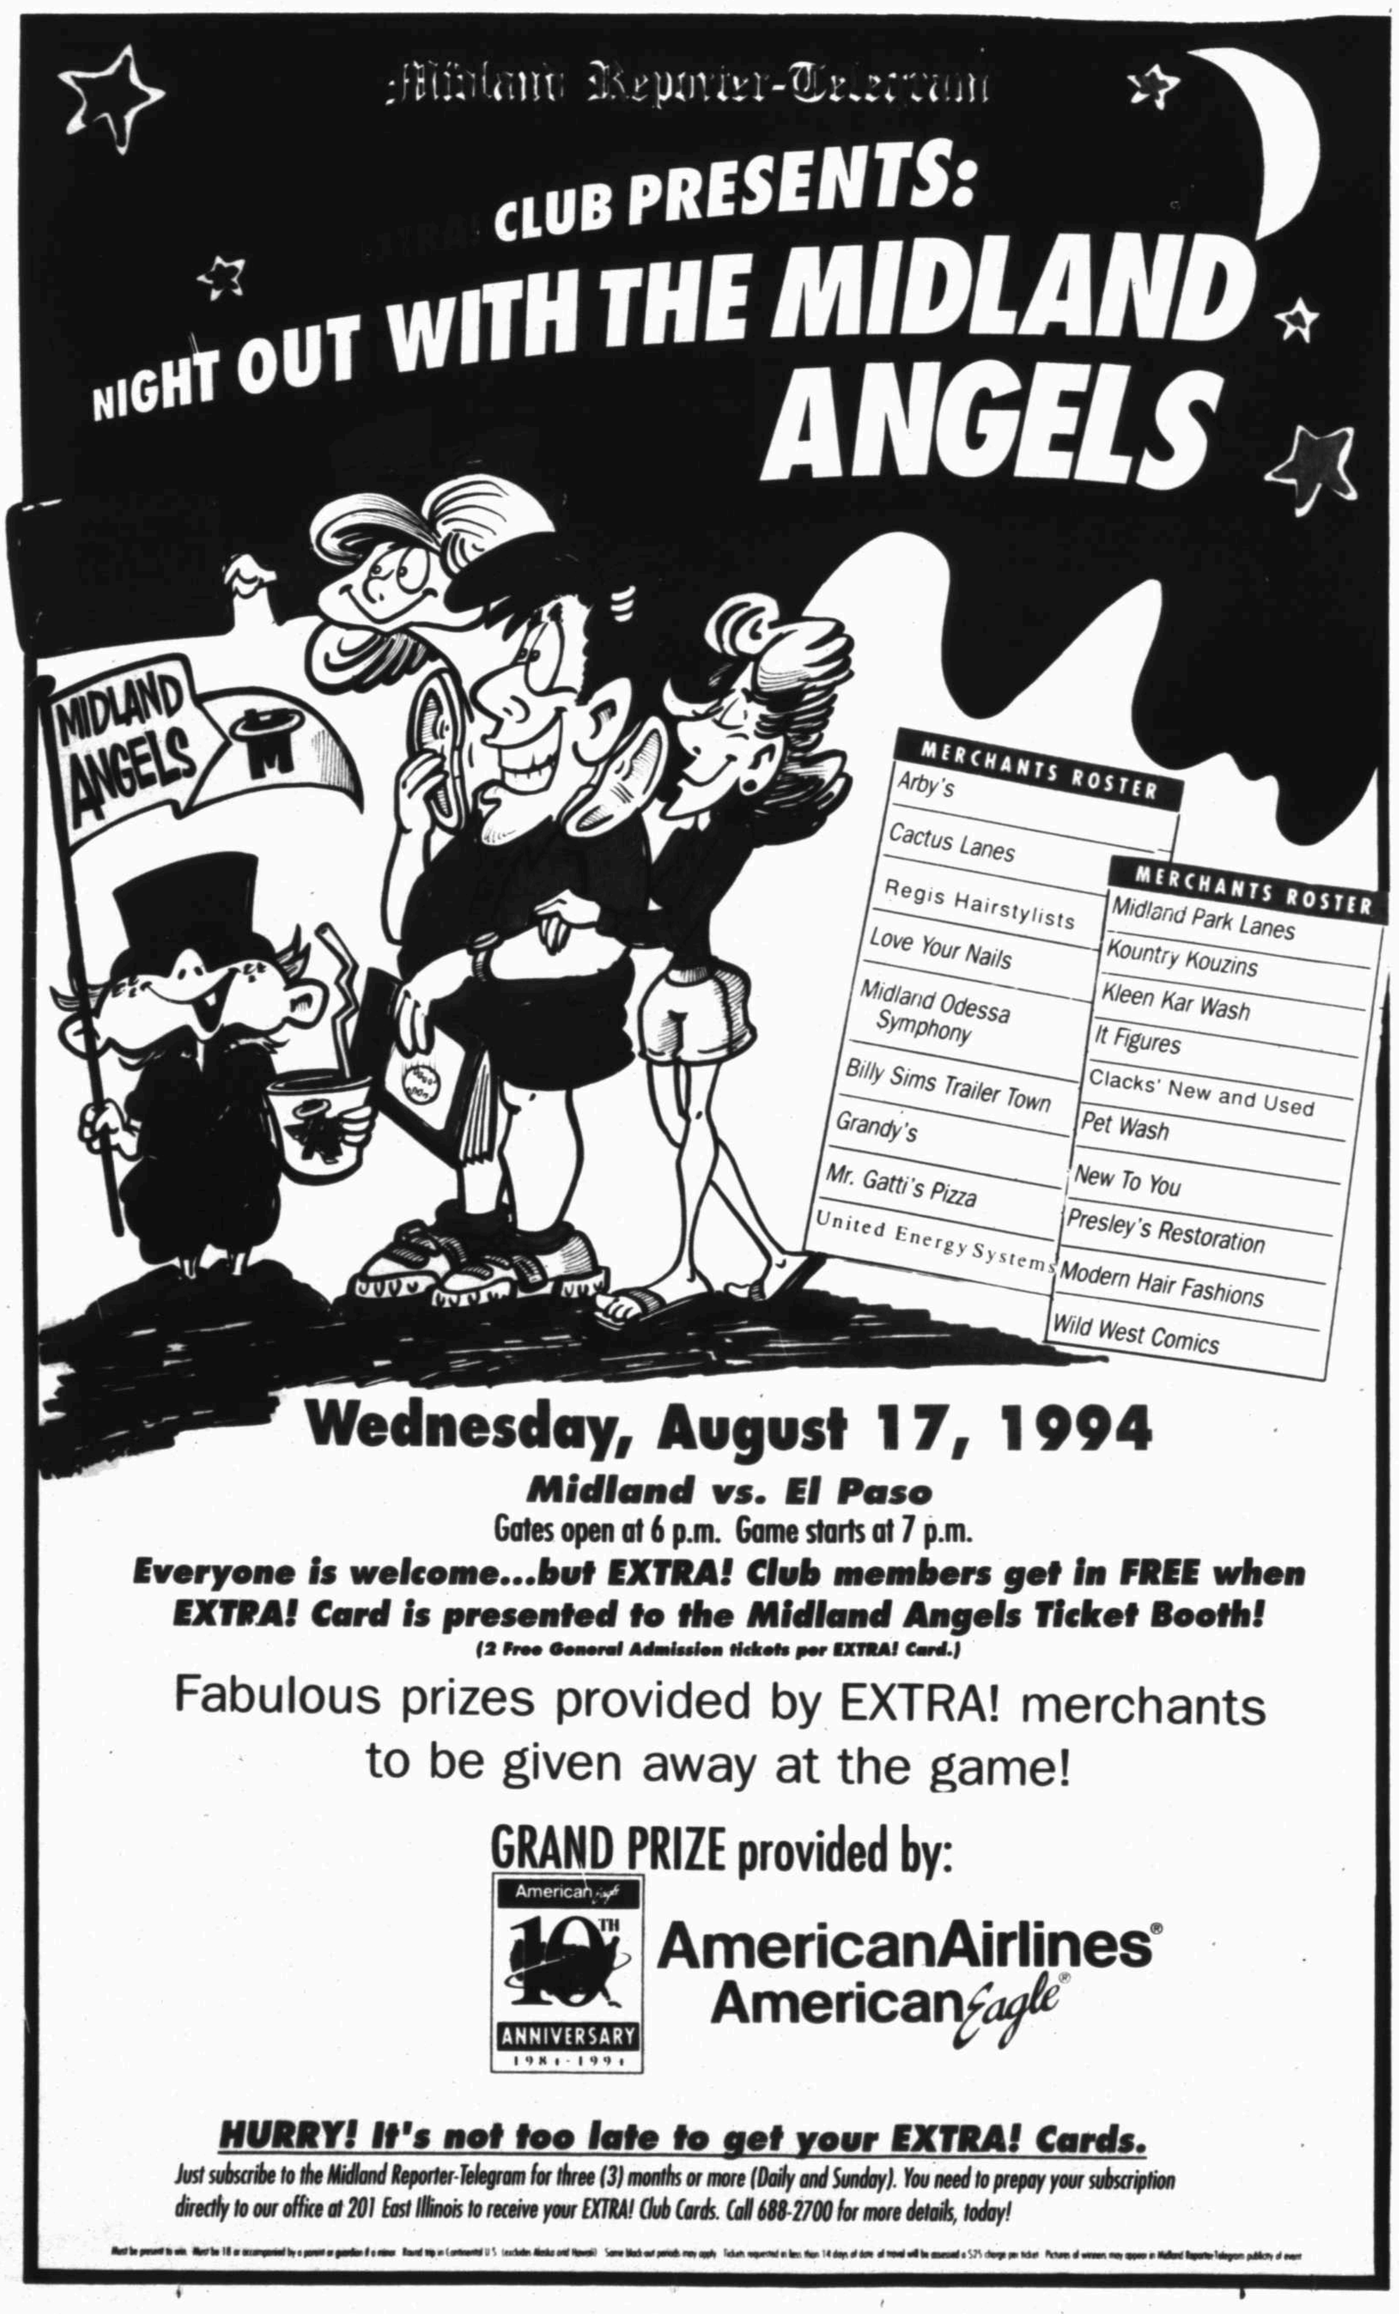

The Huertes said they didn't see the accident but heard the screams and saw the commotion. Jose Huerte said he was turning onto the street where the accident occurred when they saw the speeding car.

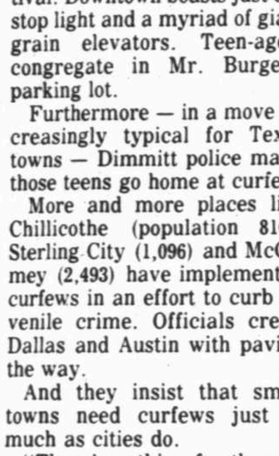

"We didn't think it was a policeman because he was coming so fast," Huerte said.

Interim Police Chief J.W. Barnett said the officer was driving with his headlights on but without his flashing emergency lights or siren. The emergency lights were not required for the sort of call he was on, Barnett said.

Lashaway said authorities were awaiting results from skid tests to discern how fast Huschke was driving.

Huschke, who has been with the department 2½ years, has been placed on administrative leave while the investigation is ongoing.

The World in brief

■ Bosnian Serbs sign anti-sniper pact

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — The government and Bosnian Serb leaders signed an agreement Sunday to end the sniper fire that has killed thousands of people, including hundreds of children, in Sarajevo.

The accord, which was to go into effect within 24 hours, was reached in negotiations brokered by United Nations officials.

U.N. officials, who are trying to reduce the tensions that have risen since the Bosnian Serbs rejected an international peace plan, said that a 24-hour grace period was built into the agreement so each side could inform its sharpshooters along the front line.

But there was little indication that the agreement would be any more successful than the dozens of earlier cease-fires also brokered by U.N. officials here. With a June 8 cease-fire still technically in effect, U.N. military observers tallied almost 700 violations in the 24-hour period ending Sunday morning, which they said was an average day.

For two nights running, Serbian forces who have dug in along the western edge of the capital's Jewish cemetery and government troops positioned among the graves have exchanged heavy fire. Serbian gunmen took aim at pedestrians on Sarajevo's main street Saturday night and, despite the agreement, the crack of high-powered rifles echoed from the cemetery area again Sunday night.

■ Floods in Taiwan leave 9 people dead

TAIPEI, Taiwan — Torrential rains battered southern Taiwan on Sunday, leaving nine people dead in the worst floods in 35 years. Rescuers in boats evacuated 3,600 people from their waterlogged homes.

The rains, which followed the passage of Tyhoon Doug on Monday, have picked up in the last few days. More than 10,000 houses have been swamped by waters up to 6 feet deep, and 100,000 others have been affected by power cuts.

The victims included seven people who were swept away in rivers and two who were electrocuted by fallen power lines, police said. The people were evacuated from Kaohsiung, 220 miles south of Taipei, the capital.

Officials estimated the floods have caused $74 million in damage. They were the worst since 1959 when floods unleashed by Typhoon Ellen killed at least 100 people.

■ Korean police break up pro-North rally

SEOUL, South Korea — About 7,500 riot police raided a Seoul campus Sunday and broke up a huge protest demanding the withdrawal of U.S. troops and unification of the Korean peninsula.

Violent clashes erupted when police fired volleys of tear gas and about 10,000 students and dissidents fought back with steel pipes and stones. No arrests or injuries were reported.

Before the raid, students at Seoul National University, defying a government ban, held ceremonies to mark the anniversary Monday of Korea's liberation from Japanese colonial rule in 1945.

The three-day anniversary celebration brings to a head a month of confrontation between the government and radical students it accuses of being North Korean sympathizers.

In a statement, students and dissidents claimed the presence of 36,000 U.S. troops in South Korea heightens tensions on the peninsula and blocks its reunification.

■ Moderately strong temblor hits Japan

TOKYO — A moderately strong earthquake rocked northern Japan on Sunday, but there were no immediate reports of injury or damage.

The earthquake struck at 6:07 p.m. local time (5:07 a.m. EDT) and had a preliminary magnitude of 5.5. It was centered near Ofunato, about 252 miles north of Tokyo, the Central Meteorological Agency said.

The tremor shook houses and toppled vases, but there were no reports of structural damage or injuries, Ofunato police said.

New disaster looms for Rwandan refugees

■ Rainy season to begin in September; relief officials try to prepare for long haul.

Associated Press

GOMA, Zaire — Too weak to hold her head up, 60-year-old Nyiramatabaro lay close to the red earth that will soon turn to mud, as black clouds foretold the oncoming rainy season.

"If it rains, I will die," she said simply.

After war, famine and disease, Rwandan refugees in the shadow of a stirring volcano face yet another disaster when the season begins in September. Pouring rain and hail on Sunday was just a sample of what's in store.

Relief officials, who have all but given up trying to repatriate the Rwandans before the rains, are scrambling to prepare for the long haul, asking for more shelter materials on the 20 daily supply flights.

Relief officials predicted a rise in chest-related illnesses, including pneumonia and bronchitis, among the already weakened refugee population of 800,000 as the weather turns damper and colder.

"Mortality will rise especially among the elderly," U.N. relief spokesman Panos Moumtzis said last week. "The rainy season . . . is one more hit on the health situation of the people."

AP Laserphoto

Rwandan refugees walk along a flooded street during a downpour in the Kibumba camp near Goma, Zaire, Sunday.

He said plastic sheeting was their main concern now, since only half of the refugees had any shelter from the rain. He vowed all the small thatched huts would have blue tarps with the initials of the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees by mid-September.

The situation was desperate in some camps, like the one that is home to Nyiramatabaro, who goes only by her family name because she was not baptized. As she coughed weakly, children played around her and mothers worried how to protect their offspring from the new threat.

"We're very worried. It rained yesterday and we got soaked," said Judith Nyiransabimana, 26, a mother of five. "We asked for plastic, but they didn't have any for us."

In a nearby camp, Frodoire Hitamungu, his wife and four children huddled under a tiny see-through thatched hut as they ate beans. Their fifth child died of dysentery. "With the rain, we'll get sick. We may not survive," he said.

In addition to the lack of shelter, sanitation "is a major disaster," Moumtzis said, because human waste does not get absorbed by the volcanic rock.

David Morris, a spokesman for the aid group CARE, said that without more latrines at the Kitali camp, where 300,000 refugees remain, "it will turn into a giant open, flowing sewer."

Food distribution and body removal were the priorities earlier.

"Now we're really trying to focus on the sanitation problem," he said. Only 2,000 of the 60,000 needed latrines have been dug by workers hampered by the same volcanic rock that slowed the mass burials of the 27,000 dead from disease and hunger in recent weeks, Moumtzis said.

CARE planned to bring in pneumatic drills and other hardware to pierce the stubborn surface, he said.

At the SOS camp for displaced children, workers were busy nailing and laying brick on Friday, building dormitories and a latrine for the youngsters in the teeming camp.

"We have to face the facts," Morris said. "Repatriation is the ultimate solution, but what we're really dealing with is a long-term problem."

Gas smuggling dries up on Haitian-Dominican border

DAJABON, Dominican Republic (AP) — At first light Sunday, hundreds of Haitian smugglers carrying plastic bottles scurried across arid fields toward the border with Haiti.

This week, many of the bottles were empty. The smugglers were disheartened and scared, their desperate risk rewarded only by cuts and bruises inflicted by Dominican border soldiers.

"If the soldiers catch you, they tie you up, take your money and leave you for the mosquitoes," one Haitian said as he paused in his dash for the border.

Another showed his cut and bruised leg, the result of a beating.

"I'm going back to Haiti and I'm not coming back," he said.

Only 10 days ago, gasoline poured into Haiti across the Massacre River, also known as the Dajabon, despite a U.N. embargo on trade.

Today, Rear Adm. Ruben Paulino Alvarez, commander of the northern sector of the Dominican-Haitian border task force, says he has cut the gas pipeline.

Dominicans in town confirm it.

The embargo has made gasoline a precious commodity in Haiti, which shares the island of Hispaniola with the Dominican Republic. For months, people on the Dominican side of the border have been more than happy to break the embargo to provide it.

The international community hopes that strangling Haiti's trade will force its military rulers from power and allow the return of deposed President Jean-Bertrand Aristide, who was ousted in a 1991 coup.

Some products and spare parts are in short supply, but gasoline, always rising in price, is still available in Port-au-Prince, the Haitian capital.

"I believe very little gas is going to Haiti over this border," said Paulino, who heads a special joint army-navy-air force group ordered to plug holes in the porous border.

About 15,000 Dominican soldiers are patrolling the frontier now, according to Paulino, soon to be joined by an 80-person multinational observer force.

"Perhaps there are a few gallons getting through, but it's very difficult," the admiral said. Any gasoline making it to Haiti in any quantity must be getting in by sea, he said.

Sellers of contraband gasoline in Port-au-Prince confirm that things have gotten tougher. Many complain that Dominican soldiers are severely beating Haitian smugglers when they catch them.

Soldiers patrol all along the river that marks the northern border between the two countries. Each carries a long stick to administer swift justice to would-be smugglers.

Gasoline in the Dominican Republic costs about $1.65 a gallon at the pump. Enterprising Dominicans sell it for about $4 a gallon to Haitians who ford the shallow Massacre River and elude army patrols.

The Haitians, mostly barefoot and in ragged T-shirts and shorts, race back with two, three or four gallons in plastic bottles and sell it for $5 dollars a gallon to transporters, who put it in 55-gallon drums and take it to Port-au-Prince, where it sells on the street for $9 dollars.

Russians rediscover art of etiquette, lost during Soviet rule

By Alessandra Stanley
N.Y. Times News Service

MOSCOW — "Do not spit out bones and other such things onto your plate."

"Do not describe your illnesses at the table."

"Do not boast about your expertise in art or technology."

These are just some of the social tips to be found in "Contemporary Etiquette and Business Protocol," a recently published Russian guide to good manners by Eduard Solovyov, a retired Soviet protocol officer who served in Afghanistan, among other places.

There is also a new etiquette program on the Russian educational channel titled "Bonton," which is French for good taste. And the word's growing usage is one of many signs that Russians are trying to rediscover the good manners that were stamped out by Soviet rule.

Russia is a disrooted society in search of a self, and its yearning for propriety is in some ways as telling as the revival of the Russian Orthodox Church or mass conversions to ultra-nationalism or cults. The novelty of freedom has long worn off. Today, most Russians crave order, but many are groping for rules that are dictated by decency, not dogma.

The pervasive image of Russians as louts who bang their shoes on the table to express displeasure outlived Khrushchev in the Communist heyday. But even many Russians complain that no sooner had Communism collapsed than the torch of rudeness was passed on to a new generation of mafia businessmen.

Some of them are even studying etiquette.

Suddenly, there are adult-education courses, magazines, books, brochures, home decoration shows and dozens of new cookbooks that concentrate not just on recipes but also on gracious living.

When Communism finally collapsed, one of the first banned books to be reprinted and sold on the streets was "A Gift to Young Housewives," by Yelena Molokhovets, a voluminous cookbook that was required reading in well-off families from 1861 to 1917.

Ordinary Russians now peruse in awed astonishment more than 3,000 recipes ranging from suckling pig in aspic to stuffed hazel grouse.

Etiquette intrigues the new rich, who eagerly read Domovoy, a glossy magazine that offers its readers advice on, among other things, how to treat maids, cooks and nannies who have a higher level of education than they do.

Official: Police find no evidence of plutonium buyers in Germany

BONN, Germany (AP) — Investigators have turned up no evidence that bomb-quality radioactive material seized in Germany since May was bound for terrorists, a top intelligence official said Sunday.

Officials have speculated that the nuclear materials ultimately could be bound for terrorist groups or such countries as Iran, Iraq or Libya.

But Bernd Schmidbauer, coordinator of the federal intelligence services, told the Hamburger Abendblatt newspaper for publication today there was no evidence that any state or terrorist group had tried to buy the material.

"There is evidence of supply, but not of demand," he said.

A sting operation turned up 100 to 300 grams, or 3½ to 10½ ounces, of plutonium-239 on Wednesday, Bavarian police said Sunday.

Three passengers on a Lufthansa flight from Moscow were arrested in Munich with a suitcase containing the plutonium. They had been drawn to Germany by an offer of millions of dollars from a police officer posing as a buyer.

Six people in Bavaria were arrested in June and July after .035 ounces of weapons-grade uranium-235 and 21 ounces of non-weapons material were seized. Police in the southwestern state of Baden-Wuerttemberg turned up .2 ounces of nearly pure plutonium-239 when they arrested a counterfeiting suspect in May.

Two pounds of fissionable plutonium theoretically would be enough to make a nuclear bomb, but a country lacking the most modern facilities probably would need 17 pounds, according to the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna, Austria.

However, just a few hundred grams could cause hundreds of cancers if attached to a bomb that exploded, raising the possibility that even small amounts could be used in blackmail, Physicians Against Nuclear War said Sunday in Berlin.

Mexican presidential candidate holds last big rally

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Frontrunner Ernesto Zedillo promised hundreds of thousands of supporters at his last major rally in the capital Sunday that he will win the Aug. 21 presidential election cleanly and decisively.

A Zedillo victory would extend the Institutional Revolutionary Party's 65 years of uninterrupted presidential rule.

"Here is our political strength," Zedillo shouted from a podium overlooking the crowd in Mexico City's main square.

"We call for democracy with dignity, for clean and legal elections, for a democracy in which attention is paid to the needs of the least fortunate," Zedillo said.

The crowd cheered wildly, and chanted, "Zedillo, we are with you!" A party banner hung from a 50-foot hot-air balloon.

Thousands wore Zedillo windbreakers, hats and T-shirts handed out at the rally.

"Zedillo is the only candidate," said Jesus Alvarez.

The pro-government network Televisa said at least 300,000 people crammed the square. Police had no independent count, although the gathering rivaled crowds at rallies Saturday for Zedillo's two main opponents.

Polls released last week show Zedillo with a lead of as much as 25 percentage point over his closest competitor, Diego Fernandez de Cevallos of the National Action Party. His other main opponent, Cuauhtemoc Cardenas of the leftist Democratic Revolution Party, trails in third.

But in this election, every vote will count: one in four voters are reported to be undecided.

Probe essential into death squads

For years the tiny nation of El Salvador preoccupied the United States, much as Haiti does now. During the 1980s a bloody civil war, exacerbated by cold-war rivalries, terrorized the country.

Paramilitary death squads kidnapped and murdered anyone who dared to question the right-wing government, from students to union members to the clergy, including the archbishop of San Salvador.

Since the war ended in 1992, U.S. attention has flagged; but the peace is fragile. While the guerrilla opposition, the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, or FMLN, laid down its arms and participated in elections earlier this year, there is continuing evidence that right-wing death squads have not been so happy to give up their old methods.

A Truth Commission established by the peace accords released a report in March confirming the participation of the military, the police and paramilitary groups in massacres, torture, political kidnappings and other crimes since 1980.

Leading FMLN members have been murdered this year. Cases of death threats, beatings and illegal detention, all apparently politically motivated, have been reported. Meanwhile, an amnesty law passed by the National Assembly allowed many reported perpetrators of brutal human rights violations to avoid prosecution.

A Joint Group, or Grupo Conjunto, was established by the government last year to investigate reports of such abuses since the war ended. Last week the group, made up of the human rights organization created by the peace accords, the U.N. observer mission and two government lawyers, released its report.

It is a cautious document, but it nevertheless confirms that the paramilitary death squads remain, though their structures have changed.

They have become more decentralized and have branched out into organized crime. Members of the current armed forces and national police are involved. The group has refused to make any names of suspects public but has released a separate, private annex to its report to government officials, naming names.

No true civil society will grow in El Salvador until its ordinary citizens can have confidence that they will not be killed, robbed, beaten or intimidated by people responsible for law and order.

One mandate from the peace accords, a thorough investigation of the death squad structure, still has not been fulfilled.

That — along with judicial reform, as recommended by the accords, the Truth Commission and the Joint Group — is the only way to cleanse Salvadoran society of its endemic official corruption. The United States needs to keep pressure on the Salvadorans until the job is truly done.

NRA will stand by big guns in Congress

WASHINGTON — A week before the House blocked President Clinton's $30 billion crime bill, Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee Chairman Vic Fazio, D-Calif., read colleagues the riot act during a closed-door leadership meeting.

Anderson

"Gentlemen, I know everyone has reservations, but we have to pass this crime bill, or we will not be the majority party next year," Fazio stated. As one participant later told us, "There was kind of a dead silence in the room."

In the end, 58 Democrats defied Fazio's warning and joined all but 11 Republicans in rejecting the bill, which would have banned 19 types of assault-style weapons, and authorized funding for police, prisons and prevention. Last week's vote, which was a procedural resolution that would have paved the way to final passage of anti-crime legislation, was condemned by Clinton as a "procedural trick" by the National Rifle Association and House Republicans.

Most of those 58 defecting Democrats refused to incur the NRA's wrath in an election year. There are two Democrats, however, who crossed the NRA but will remain in the gun lobby's good graces. That's because House Judiciary Committee Chairman Jack Brooks, D-Texas, and Rep. John D. Dingell, D-Mich., are usually the NRA's biggest guns on Capitol Hill.

Brooks and Dingell helped forge the crime bill conference report this summer, swallowing the unpalatable provisions dealing with assault weapons that they had voted against last May.

Despite their diehard opposition to gun control, Brooks and Dingell proved to be consummate deal-makers during this summer's negotiations. As a result, they extracted last-minute concessions for the NRA in exchange for their embrace of the conference report — concessions that did little to assuage the NRA on the issue of assault weapons.

Earlier this summer, when Democrats were convinced they had the votes to sustain the assault weapons ban, Democratic negotiators went "through the back door" to NRA officials, according to sources. The purpose was to consolidate support for the conference report by extending an olive branch to Brooks and Dingell.

Brooks mounted a good fight, but even he knew he couldn't rewrite the weapons ban. "They (NRA officials) told us they knew they couldn't win on assault weapons," said one source familiar with the negotiations. "We said, 'What can we do for you?' They gave us the pawnshop fix and the hunters' rights fix."

In the House-Senate conference report, members approved a measure that would exempt pawnbrokers from the background checks contained in the Brady law, which requires a waiting period on handgun purchases.

The so-called hunters' rights provision — added to the crime bill and strongly backed by Brooks — makes it illegal for animal-rights protesters to block a hunter from engaging in that sport.

Brooks and Rep. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., a crime conferee, were antagonists over the assault weapon ban. "On guns we go toe to toe and growl at each other," said Schumer, who is a vocal proponent of gun control. Sources say the relationship became so strained that they were passing proposals and counterproposals to each other through intermediaries.

Brooks and Schumer made their peace, and both voted for the crime bill last week. But that still left the Democrats 15 votes short.

Truth is forbidden for politically correct

Suppose that in some future madhouse society, it was decided, on grounds of political correctness, that wood, steel and plastic were essentially the same, and that any differences were merely superficial.

Reese

Consequently, it would be politically incorrect and illegal for an architect or engineer to make any distinction between the uses of wood, steel and plastic in construction.

What would be the result? Failed structures, naturally. Wood, steel and plastic have different properties and these differences are substantive and real, not subject to change by majority vote or political consensus.

But even worse than the failed structures would be the impossibility of correcting the failures. If the failure is caused by a difference in the properties of the materials but it is illegal and politically incorrect to acknowledge those differences, then no remedy is possible. Such a society would be doomed to suffer repeated failures. The real cause of the structural failure would have to be ascribed to something else — the incompetence of the workers or the phase of the moon or the malice of the universe — anything but the truth, which is forbidden.

Thus, we see the third consequence of politically determined reality. Not only do the structures fail, not only are the people unable to correct the mistake, but they are also forced to lie. Such a society becomes immoral as well as incompetent.

The combination of incompetence and immorality will destroy any society. The collapse of the Soviet Union is one example. America's collapse, if Americans don't change their ways, will be another, for the U.S. is making the same mistakes that were made in the Soviet Union. People are allowing politics to describe reality and to proscribe honest discussion of genuine differences.

Many people in this country have confused the concept of equal political rights with substantive equality. The more extreme feminists, for example, claim that aside from obvious anatomical differences, men and women would be the same, except for societal conditioning. That's not true. There are many significant psychological differences between men and women that have nothing to do with the social environment.

These differences mean, not that one sex is superior and the other inferior, but that in some situations either can function as well as the other while in some other situations women will function better than men and in other situations men will function better than women.

The characteristic of creation, as one writer put it, is profusion, not uniformity.

There are significant differences in intelligence -- roughly speaking, the speed at which the brain can process information. Unfortunately, Americans have decided that IQ is politically incorrect. That's insanity. If, in public education, for example, you set the curriculum and academic standards to suit the kids on the high end of the IQ spectrum, those on the low end will be hopelessly condemned to failure. If you adapt it to those on the law end, then the kids on the high end will be bored to the point of causing social disruptions.

The obvious answer is multiple track education in which standards and methodology of teaching are fitted to the students' capacities. Educators know this, of course, but too often when it's tried, someone hollers discrimination, and they retreat to the bureaucratic solution of dumbing down the curriculum. That's what so-called Outcome Based education is. The bureaucrats simply define away any need for measurable intellectual accomplishment.

To abandon reality for short-term political gains is a common practice, but the long-term consequences are always disastrous.

In nature, the choice is always get real or get gone.

Will Nigeria become only a bigger Rwanda?

Nigeria's military rulers have backed themselves into a box. They thought it a good idea to jail Moshood Abiola, the presumed winner of Nigeria's canceled presidential vote in June 1993, when he claimed the office two months ago. Abiola was charged with treason and held incommunicado. But behind bars he has become a symbol known to more people around the world than is Gen. Sani Abacha, the faceless soldier who currently presides over Nigeria's permanent government caste.

After Abiola was detained in Abuja, Nigeria's political capital, strikes and demonstrations paralyzed Lagos, the commercial capital. In a clumsy attempt to foil the pro-democracy campaign, the military then offered to release Abiola on condition that he not talk to the press or address political rallies. When he refused, his defiance proved contagious.

The normally unmilitant Nigerian Labor Congress joined in a general strike sparked by workers in the pivotal oil industry. Now Nigeria's biggest producer, Anglo-Dutch Shell, has cut back production, reducing national output by one-fifth. The response of the military rulers, mostly Hausas from the north, has been to blame unrest on radicals among Abiola's Yoruba peoples — risking the very ethnic polarization that led in 1967 to a calamitous civil war with the Ibos in Biafra.

The best evidence is that Nigerians are not buying. They know too well how their country has fared under corrupt and incompetent rulers who have squandered the country's oil wealth and presided over a decline in per-capita income.

On the whole, the Clinton administration has responded wisely. Most foreign aid has been suspended, and new military sales have been barred. The Rev. Jesse Jackson spoke up strongly for the pro-democratic campaign during his recent visit to Nigeria. More pressure is plainly in order to free Abiola and give civilians a chance to govern. Taking that course can help prevent realization of Jackson's dire prophecy that an upheaval in Nigeria, Africa's most populous country, might "make Rwanda look like a birthday party."

Non-voter to be 1st to whine when things get tough

I've never been bothered that droves of people don't vote. Not once have I ever written a column before an election urging people to exercise that right.

Royko

But what does bother me is when I'm forced to listen to some bore explain to me why he doesn't vote. Many nonvoters find something profound and important in what they don't do.

It happened again a couple of days ago. This time it was a man about 30 years old. Unmarried. Big-paying job. High-rise apartment. Cushy lifestyle. Self-ordained ladies' man.

"I'm not going to vote," he said, without being asked. "And I'll tell you why. It doesn't matter to me who wins because it doesn't affect my life. It has nothing to do with the way I live. It won't change my life in one way or another.

"It may be important to people in the news business because they make their living writing about elections. And it is important to people in politics because it has to do with their egos. But to most of us, it is irrelevant. Regardless of who is in office, nothing changes. At least nothing that affects me personally."

Well, I made a mistake. I tried to answer him.

I began to talk about the Vietnam War, and how we might have avoided or shortened that bloodbath had we given more thought to the kind of people we sent to Washington. Had there been more brain and less bluster in Congress, we might have been out of there sooner. Who knows how many lives would have been saved?

But then I remembered that, despite his age, he had managed to avoid being touched by the war. He came from that fortunate upper-middle-class background whose members were so adept at finding loopholes in the draft laws, the generation that left its social conscience behind with the abolition of the draft. Thus he, like so many of his peers, had spent those bloody war years increasing his knowledge of rock music and savoring the pleasures provided by the birth control pill.

So from his safe perspective, it wouldn't make much difference who held office then, since the war didn't touch him, as he said, "personally."

Then I began a small lecture about the '50s and the '60s, and how it mattered a great deal to the black people of this country which candidates happened to be elected to public office during those times. Not only to Congress and the White House, but to the state legislatures and even various sheriff's offices.

All of that monumental civil-rights legislation, a century overdue, wouldn't have come about if there hadn't been enough people in public office who believed in it. And there were times when it was a close call. One or two more boobs could have swung important votes back a few decades. Luckily, the right kind of votes were there. And this resulted in dramatic changes in the lives of millions of people.

But then I remembered that he wasn't black. He grew up in a wealthy family in a wealthy suburb, and his closest contact to blacks was when the hired help came to clean the house. And the closest he ever got to a place like Selma, Ala., or to people like Bull Connor was when they might have caught his eye on the color TV set that undoubtedly stood next to his teen-listing telephone in his air-conditioned bedroom.

So he was right. Those who held office in those years weren't significant to his lifestyle.

I didn't even bother to talk to him about things such as worker-safety laws that have been passed over the years, laws that make it less likely that a workman might have his hand chopped off by a factory machine, although we still have a long way to go in that direction. That, too, doesn't affect him personally.

In fact, I couldn't think of one argument I could give him for voting , because his reasons for not voting were unassailable. As he said, none of it touched him personally. He is part of the me-first, me-second, me-forever, me-me-me-me-me generation. The fact that the outcome of an election might affect others doesn't matter to him, because those people don't matter to him.

What I dislike most about these kinds of insulated me-me narcissists is that when things get rough, they are the first to whine that somebody ought to do SOMETHING to straighten things out. They're the first to look around frantically for somebody, anybody to take care of THEM.

But in the meantime, he's getting his, and what happens to others is of no concern. So he sneers that politics is outside the mainstream.

What he doesn't recognize is that he is the one on the outside. Hopefully, he'll stay there.

Clinton takes his plea for crime bill to church's congregation

■ President asks predominantly black members of Temple Hills, Md. church to pray for him, legislators this week.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Blaming the defeat of his crime bill on "petty political things and superficial divisions," President Clinton asked 3,000 churchgoers Sunday to pray for him as he tries to make the nation's streets safer.

"Our ministry is to do the word of God here on earth, and that starts with giving our children and our families a place in which at least they can be safe and secure," Clinton said in a hoarse, sometimes hushed voice.

"I ask you this whole week to pray for me, pray for members of Congress," Clinton told the congregation at the Full Gospel African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church. "Ask us not to turn away from our ministry."

The predominantly black congregation welcomed Clinton, punctuating his brief remarks with loud applause and an occasional "Yes!" As the congregation swayed to hymns sung by a choir decked in purple and pink robes, the Rev. John Cherry looked toward Clinton during the three-hour service and said, "If you feel like you can't sit there any longer, get on up!"

Clinton traveled from his retreat at Camp David, Md., to the church service in suburban Temple Hills, Md. He was accompanied by his wife, Hillary, and daughter, Chelsea.

Clinton's visit to the Full Gospel AME Zion Church was designed to court support among black voters. Many members of the Congressional Black Caucus voted to block his crime bill last week because it would not allow criminals who received a death penalty to appeal on the grounds that blacks are disproportionately sentenced to death.

"So often it seems that petty political things or superficial divisions keep us from doing in our heart what we know is right," Clinton told worshipers.

A member of the caucus who voted for the bill, Rep. Albert Wynn, D-Md., attended Sunday's service and is a member of the church.

Meanwhile, the merits of Clinton's $33 billion crime bill were debated in a more traditional Sunday morning forum: television talk shows.

White House Chief of Staff Leon Panetta told CBS's "Face the Nation" that lawmakers "ought to be ashamed of themselves," and insisted that Clinton will push forward on the bill. Its most controversial provision, a ban on certain assault weapons, won't be dropped, Panetta said.

A leading Republican, Rep. Newt Gingrich of Georgia, accused Clinton of loading the bill with social programs the Republicans say are a waste of money. Taking Clinton to task, Gingrich said: "There's pork in this bill. He knows there's pork in this bill. He ought to be honest with the American people."

Colorado fire tragedy haunts elite corps of smoke jumpers

By Steve Geissinger
Associated Press

REDDING, Calif. — Thinking back to July 6, as Mike Tupper often does these days, the forest fire looked routine, not like a hellish mass killer.

But when Tupper sent smoke jumpers parachuting from a plane to the fire that July day near Glenwood Springs, Colo., two would never return. The two, and a third jumper from another plane, were among 14 firefighters who died when overrun by flames.

Tupper hangs his head, his shoulder-length hair falling over an earring, his flashing smile and swashbuckling gait both gone. Even now, the 35-year-old smoke jumper from Fairbanks, Alaska, feels responsible, but knows he's not.

His job as spotter that day was to pick a safe parachute landing site. He did. The jumpers did not die until evening.

Tupper recalls the other jumpers' faces when they heard of the deaths. "You can tell when somebody is about to cry," he said during a recent rotation through the regional base in Redding, 200 miles north of San Francisco.

But none admit to crying, at least publicly. These are members of an elite federal smokejumper corps, each some mix of paratrooper, lumberjack, pioneer and adventurer. They describe themselves as boisterous, obnoxious, loud and funny, for starters.

They say their off-duty antics, often tied to drinking, are legendary with locals. Bars and restaurants name sandwiches after them and put memorabilia up on walls. Jumpers know each others' families. They attend each others' weddings and funerals.

During quiet, private moments — and never in front of one another — they admit to thoughts that they cheat death one jump, one fire at a time. Each summer, they parachute into dozens of lightning-sparked blazes in otherwise inaccessible mountains.

"To be a smoke jumper, you need a lot of luck," Tupper said.

He once was dragged behind a plane in snarled parachute lines, banging against the fuselage before dropping to a successful landing. "Two days later, it came to me: 'God, I could have died,' " he said.

> 'To be a smoke jumper, you need a lot of luck.'
> — Mike Tupper, firefighter

The recent deaths in Colorado were the first by fire suffered by jumpers since a dozen were killed by the 1949 Mann Gulch blaze in Montana.

After a jump, the firefighters fell trees, chop brush, and scrape grass with handtools and muscle for hours, or days. After encircling and quelling each blaze, they sometimes hike out many miles with hundred-pound packs bearing equipment that was dropped to them.

The main lure is excitement.

"I'm an admitted adrenalin junkie," said Ken Perkins, a 48-year-old veteran jumper who is recovering from shoulder, arm, neck and back injuries from a 1993 training jump.

"People aren't doing it for the big bucks at all," said Walt Smith, the 47-year-old Redding base manager, a 25-year jumper from Missoula, Mont.

The pay starts at $9 an hour for the standard daytime shifts, five days a week. It goes up at fires with overtime pay.

There are just 387 jumpers in the nation, and Dana Lucas, a first-year jumper, is one of only about 10 women.

"I'm doing what's unexpected for a woman," said Lucas, 24, of Richmond, Va. "When I'm keeping up with the guys, I also feel I'm working harder. I feel proud."

Most jumpers are not year-round federal workers. Some are students and teachers on break during fire season. Others leave jobs such as insurance agent and chiropractor. Some use jump money to finance winter activities, ranging from rock climbing in Mexico to selling art in Redding.

At the Redding base, hundreds of people applied this season for only nine openings.

Dole: President's lawyer hopes to intimidate Starr

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Minority Leader Robert Dole accused President Clinton's attorney Sunday of trying to intimidate Whitewater prosecutor Kenneth Starr, hoping the Republican lawyer will step down.

Bob Bennett, representing Clinton in two separate legal cases, has led a Democratic assault against Starr, who was appointed by a federal court panel of three judges. He says Starr should step down.

"My view is that Bob Bennett, the president's lawyer — they're trying to intimidate Starr, trying to make it impossible for him to do the right thing. I hope he stays," Dole said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

"That is partisan nonsense," Bennett responded in an interview. "All I want is fairness for my clients, whether they're Republicans or Democrats."

It was unclear whether Dole directed the remark only at Bennett or at Democrats and administration officials who have criticized the appointment.

In a related matter, Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell said Deputy Treasury Secretary Roger Altman damaged his credibility with his congressional testimony on Whitewater. Asked whether Altman should resign, Mitchell told NBC, "That's a decision for him and the president and the secretary of Treasury should make."

An administration official, speaking on condition of anonymity Sunday, said Altman is expected to resign sometime after he returns from a family vacation Monday. The official, who stressed that Altman has not made a final decision, said Senate Banking Chairman Donald Riegle, D-Mich., and his likely successor, Sen. Paul Sarbanes, D-Md., have told the White House Altman should leave.

The New York Times reported in today's editions that administration officials are saying Frank N. Newman, now the Treasury undersecretary for domestic finance, is an early favorite to replace Altman. The report did not identify the officials.

Starr is replacing another Republican, Robert Fiske, who had cleared the White House of any criminal wrongdoing in its contacts with the Treasury Department over the confidential Whitewater inquiry involving President and Mrs. Clinton. The court said Fiske's appointment by Attorney General Janet Reno raised the appearance of a conflict because she was appointed by Clinton.

Starr is an active Republican and was U.S. solicitor general in the Bush administration. He publicly criticized Clinton's claim of immunity in a sexual harassment lawsuit being handled by Bennett, and had agreed to donate his time to a conservative woman's group to prepare a legal brief on the issue.

"I want to know why Fiske was removed," Bennett said.

Drenching rains turn Woodstock rock festival into mud bath

SAUGERTIES, N.Y. (AP) — Rain turned the 25th anniversary rock festival of Woodstock into Mudstock II on Sunday, drenching fans but leaving them gleefully romping in the slime.

The rain — perhaps fitting since the original Woodstock turned into a mud bath — may ease the crush when this instant city disbands after Peter Gabriel's show early this morning, authorities said.

The second Woodstock Nation numbered more than 350,000 at its peak late Saturday, promoter John Scher said. "We still don't know how many tickets we sold, but it was a lot less than that," he said.

Tens of thousands of people crashed the gates Friday and Saturday as security at the $135-per-ticket event became lax.

People wrapped themselves in garbage bags or ponchos Sunday and walked gingerly through the mud. Many shucked their shoes — and more. Discarded soda, water and beer bottles were arranged in the shape of a peace sign near the north stage.

By nightfall Sunday evening, dry weather had thickened the mud into a consistency that sucked shoes from feet. The sky glowed orange in a sunset that preceded Bob Dylan's appearance on the main stage.

The day had produced some memorable music — from a chaotic show by punk band Green Day that ended in a mud fight between the band and audience, to an achingly intimate performance by Bob Dylan, ending with "It Ain't Me Babe."

But hundreds of fans gave up even before the chief attractions Sunday hit the stage.

"We just want to get out of here before the rest of these maniacs," Joe Iannotti of New York's Long Island said as he and his family headed for the exit.

For the most part, however, the fans took the elements bravely, cheering when thunder rumbled just after dawn and presaged a 90-minute shower.

"Nobody's going to stop us from enjoying this. They haven't chased us away yet," said Andre Florio of Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

The music kept on rolling Sunday, starting with unscheduled appearances by Woodstock '69 veterans Country Joe McDonald and John Sebastian. A fireworks show ended Aerosmith's set about 3:30 a.m. By noon, fans were already bobbing to the sounds of rap band Arrested Development's "Tennessee."

Vendors were running short of food and many merchants abandoned the special Woodstock currency established for the show in favor of real cash.

Four deaths were reported during the weekend. Two people were killed and two others injured when their car crashed on the New York State Thruway after the driver fell asleep Sunday morning, Trooper Robert M. Gillespie said.

Saturday evening, Edward Chatfield, 20, of Grove City, Ohio, died of a ruptured spleen for which he was being treated before coming to Woodstock. Another man died early Saturday of suspected complications from diabetes.

Police have made 14 arrests during the festival.

Surgeon wins record $8.5 million at slot machine in Atlantic City

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — A surgeon's penchant for cigars paid off in a big way with an $8.5 million jackpot, a record for this casino resort city.

Shunned from a non-smoking blackjack table in Bally's Grand Casino Hotel, Dr. Frank Oliveto moved to a $1 slot machine Saturday to play for a Megabucks jackpot. When someone drops a dollar in any of the 186 Megabucks slot machines in the city's 12 casinos, a pooled jackpot increases.

It had been accumulating since the previous record $3.9 million prize was paid out in November 1992, said Pam Sinderbrand, a spokeswoman for International Game Technology, which manufactures Megabucks machines.

Oliveto, 54, received the first of 20 annual checks for $427,275 on Saturday, Sinderbrand said.

"Smoking is bad for your health, but it's good for my pocketbook," said Oliveto of Port Jefferson, N.Y.

The orthopedic surgeon went to the Megabucks machine with $100 in dollar coins. He had played about $80 and won back roughly $35 before hitting the $8.5 million on a $3 wager.

While the winnings won't send him into instant retirement, Oliveto plans to fish, play golf, build a new house and pay some bills. He and his wife have three children in college.

"I've never taken more than seven days off in my entire life," he said. "I might even take a month to sit back and let this sink in."

Memories are stored in brain during sleep, research shows

■ Findings have implications for students cramming to pass exams, people learning new skills like skating and anyone trying to navigate through new surroundings.

By Sandra Blakeslee
N.Y. Times News Service

In separate experiments conducted on rats and humans, scientists have found the first direct evidence that memories are consolidated during sleep.

The findings, reported July 29 in the journal Science, have implications for students cramming to pass an examination, people learning new skills like skating and anyone trying to navigate through new surroundings. They suggest for example, that people learning to ski might improve their performance after a few nights' sleep.

In the rat studies, researchers found that when an animal moved through a somewhat familiar environment, a particular pattern of cells was activated in a part of the brain called the hippocampus. Soon after, when the rat was allowed to sleep, the same cells showed an increased tendency to fire at the same time. The researchers hypothesize that this occurs as the memories are being consolidated in the brain.

The human studies, conducted by another group of researchers, focused on a different type of memory, involving the learning of a new skill. When the subjects were allowed to sleep and then repeatedly roused to wakefulness when they entered a period of vivid dreaming called rapid-eye-movement sleep, it hampered their performance on subsequent tests of the skill. This provided the best evidence so far that memories are consolidated during sleep.

The animal experiments were conducted at the University of Arizona in Tucson by Dr. Matthew Wilson and Dr. James McNaughton. The human experiments were carried out by Dr. Avi Karni and Dr. Dov Sagi at the Weizmann Institute in Rehovot, Israel.

The Arizona group was interested in spatial memories. Animals have to know where they are at all times, so they can hunt, explore new territories and find their way home, said Wilson, who has just moved to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. In animals and humans, he said in a telephone interview, spatial memories are first formed in the hippocampus, a small structure in the middle of the brain. Humans also use the hippocampus to acquire and store so-called declarative memories, involving all the events with which a person is involved during waking hours.

Most scientists believe that the hippocampus is essential for processing and consolidating new memories, Wilson said. They suspect that hippocampal neurons somehow strengthen the links between neurons in other regions of the brain where various aspects of each memory are stored; when a memory is recalled, these links are activated simultaneously and the memory is perceived as a coherent whole.

According to this hypothesis, specific cells in the hippocampus would be primed by events to help encode a new memory. But just how the information held temporarily in the hippocampus is shuffled out to other brain regions for long-term storage is not known.

In a series of experiments, Wilson implanted electrodes into so-called place cells in the rat hippocampus. Each place cell is activated when an animal is in a certain region in its environment, Wilson said. A place cell that fires when an animal is in one position will stop firing when the animal moves to a different place.

As an animal moves through an environment, like an enclosed box with distinct features on the walls, different ensembles of place cells will fire to reflect the animal's movements through that space, he said.

Rats fitted with a lightweight multi-electrode array were placed in an enclosed box that they had been in before but that they did not know well. They were then allowed to explore, as the electrodes recorded the activity of their place cells. Next the rats were put back in their cage, where they fell back asleep. After five to ten minutes, Wilson said, the rats entered slow-wave sleep, which is dreamlike but does not contain vivid dreams.

Hippocampal place cells that fired together when the rats explored the box showed an increased tendency to fire together during sleep, Wilson said. Information about activity in the environment is preserved in the hippocampus with the same ensembles of cells, he said, and it is acted upon by the sleeping brain.

Exactly what happens next is not known, Wilson said. The leading hypothesis is that the hippocampus plays out the stored information to memory networks throughout the brain. During this reorganization and consolidation of memories, he said, the brain creates a more useful representation of information than what was stored during the actual experiences.

Humans also have place cells, Wilson said. When people learn to navigate through a new environment, they presumably form patterns in their hippocampuses which are later processed in sleep and stored throughout brain. Thus ability to find one's way around a new city should improve after a night's sleep.

The same may be true for students who cram for an examination. Experiments done in Canada show that students who get some sleep after studying for an exam retain more information than those who stay awake overnight. While short-term memory can hold a lot of information, it may be that sleep helps consolidate memories in ways that are more useful to the student.

Professor, students discover pygmy mammoth

VENTURA, Calif. (NYT) — A college professor and some students have discovered a rare pygmy mammoth skeleton, half-covered by a sand dune on one of the Channel Islands off the Southern California coast.

The rare creature is believed to have evolved from a giant elephant-like beast to an animal smaller than a pony.

"We're extremely excited," said Carol Spears, a spokeswoman for Channel Islands National Park. "This is the first known, complete pygmy mammoth skeleton ever found, anywhere. It will generate a lot of stir in the scientific community."

The pygmy mammoth is believed to be indigenous to the Channel Islands, and isolated bones have been discovered there before, Spears said. But now that a full skeleton has been unearthed, scientists can learn more about the creature's evolution, eating habits and environment, she said.

For security reasons, Spears would not reveal exactly where the skeleton was discovered. There are five Channel Islands.

The skeleton was discovered in July, half-covered by a sand dune, by Thomas Rockwell, a geology professor at San Diego State University, and some of his students, Spears said.

Extended income tax return deadline arrives

By Pamela Yip
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Getting a second extension from IRS is difficult.

Those of you who filed for an extension earlier this year to file your 1993 income tax returns have until Monday, Aug. 15, to get your tax records together and get those returns in.

While the extensions granted for the April 15 deadline were automatic, Uncle Sam won't be so accommodating for those who need time beyond the August extension.

"The second extension is saying, 'Why do you need this extension? Wasn't the first one enough?' " says Catherine Pemberton, spokeswoman for the Internal Revenue Service in Houston.

Basically, you need to have a good excuse to get the second extension, which can be up to two additional months.

"It's not like, 'My dog died' " will work, Pemberton says.

To apply for another extension, write a letter to the IRS or fill out IRS Form 2688, also called "Application for Additional Extension Time to File U.S. Individual Income Tax Return."

The form will ask you how much more time you need and whether you've filed IRS Form 4868, the application for the automatic extension time beyond the April 15 deadline.

IRS officials say they determine on a case-by-case basis what's a good excuse, but some common ones are a medical emergency, a death in the family, a loss of tax records due to fire or a natural disaster, or being out of the country.

However, don't expect to get by if you were vacationing overseas.

"That is not really a reason because vacations are normally planned," Pemberton says. "You can also plan to do your taxes before you leave, too."

If you haven't filed Form 4868, the IRS will grant your extension request only if you can explain your undue hardship.

"They would have to have a good reason why that first form wasn't filed," Pemberton says.

For example, maybe you didn't know that you had to file Form 4868.

"I've never had any trouble getting that second extension (for clients)," says Sheila Root, a Houston accountant. "As long as it's reasonable, I've never had it denied."

Just don't lie about why you need the second extension, because you could pay dearly. If the IRS has granted your request and later finds out that you put false and misleading statements on your extension request form, the agency will void the extension and hit you with a failure-to-file penalty.

That penalty is based on the tax unpaid by the due date (without regard to extensions). The penalty typically is 5 percent for each month or part of a month that a return is late but not more than 25 percent of your tax.

The IRS doesn't look kindly on people who fail to file a return, because that shows that you're not complying with the law.

"If you don't file, they have no idea where you stand," Root says. "They're just totally left in the dark as to what kind of revenues they're missing."

Remember that the extension to file is NOT an extension of time to pay your taxes. If you owe tax, you were supposed to have paid that by April earlier this year.

"People need to keep in mind that the extension does not stop interest from

Vacation home market strong

■ Rising interest rates haven't damped interest in vacation homes.

By Vivian Marino
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — As millions of vacationers relax on the beach, hike in the woods or explore distant cities, some are also doing serious sightseeing in the local housing markets.

Real estate professionals report a healthy interest in vacation homes this summer despite a runup in interest rates, and many predict steady growth in sales over the next several years.

"What's balancing it out for our industry is that the demographics are so good," said Tom Franks, president of the American Resort & Residential Development Association. "Right now, you're getting the aging baby boomers that are entering into the prime buying age for vacation homes.

"Their economic success in life is pretty well determined by now ... They're ready to look."

A recent survey by the Washington-based trade group found a rising number of households seriously considering such purchases in the near future.

About 44 percent of the 1,000 adults polled nationwide last year said there was a fairly good chance they'd buy recreational property within the next 10 years. In a similar 1990 survey, only 26 percent had such plans.

Most of the would-be buyers were in the thirty to fortysomething age group with household incomes of at least $50,000 a year, according to the poll. About half believed they would be spending between $25,000 and $100,000.

The most desired properties: a two-bedroom unit on the beach, with a home on the lake a close second.

With vacation homes — perhaps more so than with primary-home property — location is key in determining price. A small campground site (yes, they do sell them) might go for a few thousand dollars, while an oceanfront house can go for millions.

"Everyone would like to overlook the water," said Sandy Walter, a real estate agent for Coldwell Banker & Co., at Hilton Head Island, S.C. "(But) there's a tremendous difference in price between a unit overlooking the water and one with a view of the parking lot or trees."

Walter noted a two-bedroom condo on Hilton Head facing the beach might sell for $200,000, while the same unit across the hall, sans view, might go for $120,000. A two-bedroom unit a few blocks away from the beach would probably fetch well under $100,000.

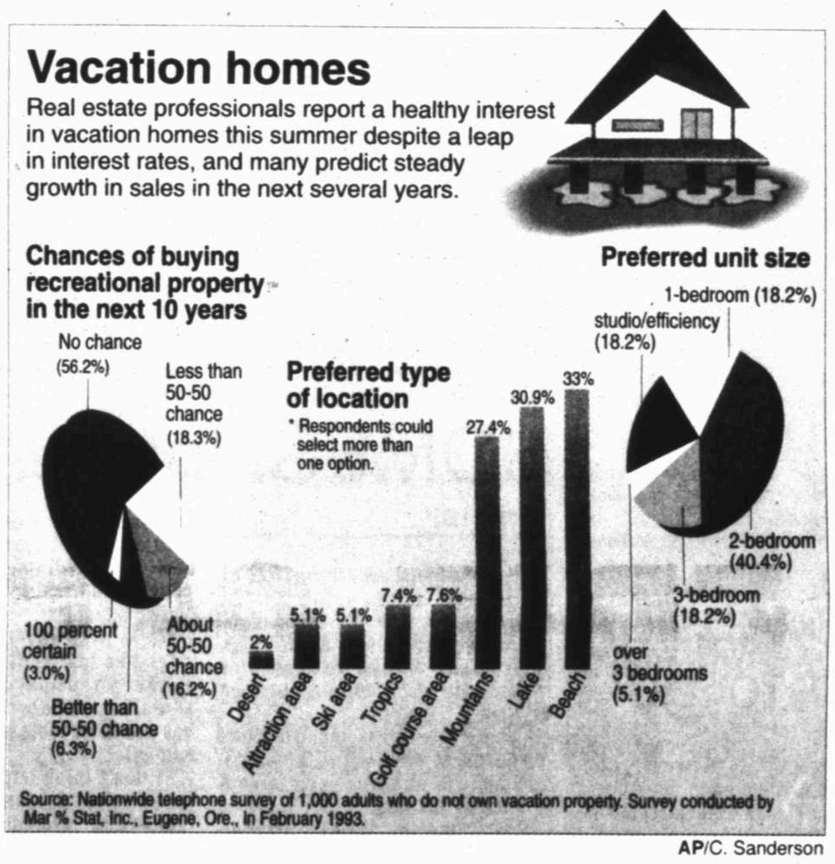

While good deals can be found just about anywhere for those who look hard enough, bargains are more prevalent in areas hardest hit by the recession or where overbuilding exists.

Parts of California and the Northeast, for instance, are still recovering from a sharp drop in housing prices.

California realtor Richard J. Rosenthal, who runs Rosenthal & Associates, which has offices in Venice Beach and Palm Desert, says newer homes in resort areas are maintaining their value, but some of the older ones, particularly condo units, are selling for about 25 percent less than they did in the hey days of the '80s.

Many investors eagerly snapped up condos in the last decade, only to dump them later when changes in the tax laws eliminated most of the tax incentives on second homes. Still others have had to let their vacation property go because of hard economic

'Reward' credit cards should be used with care

By Chet Currier
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Like boxes of cereal in days gone by, more and more credit cards now come packaged with the 1990s equivalent of a prize inside.

The inducements offered with these so-called reward cards come in a dazzling variety, from airline miles and discounts on consumer purchases to simple cash rebates.

Reward cards have grown so popular that many analysts say they are reshaping national patterns of consumer borrowing.

"Consumers love them," says the Institute of Certified Financial Planners, a professional association of advisers on money matters.

"They're using them to pay for groceries, fast-food lunches and even movies. Predictably, credit card debt is growing faster than consumer debt in general."

But for all their novelty and skillfully crafted appeal in a value-conscious age, many observers view these cards as nothing more than a new twist on a very old theme — the "something for nothing" illusion.

Its pulling power is already well known to banks and savings institutions from the times not so long ago when they used giveaways of toasters and other premiums to attract savings depositors.

In many cases, financial experts say, reward cards are harmless enough, and in at least a few instances savvy cardholders may be able to gain access to actual bargains.

Nevertheless, they urge anyone who uses them to regard them with a healthy measure of skepticism, and an awareness that whenever a free lunch is offered, someone somewhere has to pick up the tab.

"It's usually best not to take on debt unless you have to," the planners institute says in a recent bulletin on the subject. "Excessive debt —especially high-cost consumer installment debt such as credit cards — does more to wreak havoc with family budgets than anything else.

"If you already have debt problems or struggle to meet your monthly budget, the last thing you need is a credit card. But if you're in good financial shape and you already use plain-vanilla credit cards in a responsible, disciplined fashion, switching to a reward card might be worth it."

Even in those circumstances, the question needs to be asked whether the much-touted benefits obtained with a reward card are worth the more subtle costs you may pay for them.

Those costs often must be measured in terms of the difference in annual fees and interest rates imposed by a reward-card issuer, compared to the lowest costs available on a plain-vanilla card.

It's a dubious bargain, for instance, if you pay a $45 annual fee to qualify for, say, a $12 cash rebate at yearend, if you could have used a plain-vanilla card with no annual fee instead.

The same questionable economics can apply, in a less obvious way, if you carry month-to-month balances subject to interest charges on a high-rate reward card versus a low-rate card without the blandishments.

These days, there are increasing numbers of no-fee and low-rate cards to

Limitations on IRAs

Q: Can I contribute $2,000 to my IRA if I am not working and receive income only from Social Security and investments? Can I deduct my contribution from my income for tax purposes?
— Bernard Scher, Margate, Fla.

A: A taxpayer's annual contribution to an individual retirement account can be made only from earned income. The contribution is limited to the amount earned or $2,000, whichever is less.

"Social Security and investment income do not qualify as earned income," said Martin Leventhal, head of a New York accounting firm bearing his name. "Hence, no IRA contribution, whether deductible or nondeductible, may be based upon income from those sources."

Earnings up, shares down

Q: Why does a stock's price decline when a company does well in a quarter, but its reported earnings fall below analysts' predictions?
— Daniel Jacoby, E. Williston, N.Y.

A: The price of a stock typically reflects investors' perceptions both about the company's immediate prospects and long-term potential. Earnings that are positive, but below the consensus of analysts' estimates, are disappointing.

Some investors who have read news reports that earnings fell below forecasts may decide to shed their shares, as may some clients of brokerage houses whose analysts have reduced their ratings on the stock. Such selling, of course, depresses the stock price.

"Below-estimate earnings can cause price weakness because the anticipated earnings are probably built into the stock price," said Robert Stovall, president of Stovall/Twenty-First Advisers. "Investors worry about additional disappointments."

Investing for college

Q: Our 23-year-old nanny is saving money to be used in the next four years for her education. Would a conservative stock mutual fund be good, or would another type of investment be better?
— Lisa Matthews, Darien, Conn.

A: Each year, the stock market may go down, as well as up. At present, prices of stocks are high relative to dividends, and interest rates have been moving up. So people who will need money in a short time would be safer choosing investments with less risk than stocks.

If your nanny will need money in each of the next four years, she should predict her annual cash flow and invest so that money will be available as required to pay tuition bills and other costs.

"Invest your money to earn the highest interest for the longest time with little or no risk to principal," advised Madeline Noveck, president of Novos Planning Associates. "For example, money needed in one to three years might be invested in Treasury bills or short-term target maturity funds. For the money needed in four years, you may want to take more risk for the potential of higher return by investing in a conservative stock fund with good performance in down markets or preferably a global asset allocation fund."

Savings bonds good way to pay for college

By Bill Doyle

Q: I had always heard that U.S. savings bonds are good investments. So, after our three sons were born – on March 5, 1990; June 16, 1991; and Sept. 30, 1993 – we started to buy a $100 face value EE bond each month for their college education.

Are EE bonds still good investments for college? What formula can I use to determine the values of the bonds I have already purchased?

Doyle

A: Purchasing U.S. savings bonds has always been a good way to finance the cost of higher education. It has become even better during the time span in which you have been buying bonds.

That's because the interest on EE bonds issued after 1989 can be excluded from federal income if the redemption value of those bonds is used to pay tuition and fees at colleges, universities and qualified technical schools during the same year the bonds are cashed.

The "exclusion" applies to higher-education expenses of yourself, your spouse and any dependent. To qualify for the exclusion, the bonds must be bought by a person who is age 24 or older before the month of purchase.

As always when dealing with our federal government, there are other complications – too numerous to be spelled out here. Those details are explained in IRS Publication 550, "Investment Income and Expenses," which is available at Internal Revenue Service district offices.

You can learn the "redemption value" of every EE bond, E bond and U.S. savings note ever issued by writing to the U.S. Savings Bond Division, Department of the Treasury, Washington, DC 20226. Ask for Form PD 3600.

More detailed information -- including accrued interest on each month's bonds -- is available in "table of redemption value" booklets, each covering six months, sold by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, DC 20402. An E bond booklet costs $3; the EE version $1.

Q: When do EE bonds begin accruing interest, and when do they reach face value?

A: Interest starts to build up on an EE the first day of the month in which the bond is issued. And that is a very good deal for the buyer.

Let's say you stop by your bank Aug. 31, the last business day of the month, and place an order to buy an EE bond. Under the relatively new "regional delivery system," the bond would be mailed to you and arrive within three weeks. However, interest would begin to accrue on the "issue date," Aug. 1.

The EEs now being issued are guaranteed to reach face value 18 years after their issue dates. You pay $50 for a $100 face value EE, for example, and know it will at least double in value by its maturity, 18 years later, after accruing interest at an annual 4 percent rate.

In fact, many bonds do better, because they build up interest at "market-based rates," which usually has been higher than the guaranteed rate.

Q: How long do U.S. savings bonds accrue interest?

A: That depends on when the particular bond was issued.

E bonds issued before December 1965 continue to build up interest for 40 years. Newer Es, all EEs and savings notes accrue interest for 30 years.

Unlike Es, EEs and savings notes, Series H and HH savings bonds do not accrue interest. Instead, they pay out interest semiannually --for 20 years in the case of HHs and for 30 years in the case of the relatively small number of Hs still outstanding.

Trendy can trap mutual fund investors

NEW YORK (AP) — While they try to stay flexible in the fast-changing world of the financial markets, mutual fund investors have to be careful not to adapt themselves to death.

If they strive too hard to keep up-to-date by putting their money only in funds that supposedly fit the current investment climate, they can wind up chasing their own shadows, without anything resembling a long-term strategy.

That hazard has been plain to see this year as bull markets for stocks and bonds have faltered, giving way first to a sharp setback and then to a spell of aimless drifting.

Bond funds, so popular with investors in the past few years, are suddenly passe. Enthusiasm for many stock funds, especially traditional U.S. growth funds, has cooled as well.

Attention has focused instead on various alternatives, ranging from international emerging-markets funds and domestic funds with specialized bear-market strategies to plain old money market funds.

Marketing departments at fund organizations, trying to stay in step with their clientele, have taken to playing up funds and fund strategies that emphasize flexibility or "all-weather" appeal.

"Funds That Fit The Times!" proclaims one fund group, citing several of its funds that it says offer opportunities "even in volatile times."

The trouble is, these aren't volatile times, or at least they haven't been for the broad stock market averages since the early 1994 selloff bottomed out more than four months ago.

A similar flaw exists in any advertisement or recommendation that says a given fund is ideal for "periods of uncertainty." All periods are uncertain, and if some are more uncertain than others it's hard to tell which is which until afterwards.

To put all this another way, any effort to buy timely mutual funds is really just a form of market-timing — that is, an attempt to outthink shifts in financial conditions.

Market-timing is a pursuit with many enthusiastic devotees who insist they can do better than investors who merely buy and hold. But an equally large and vocal group of skeptics says there is no way the majority of investors can win such a game.

Even many advocates of market-timing say it can't be done successfully by following trends, but requires practicing a measure of contrary opinion if you are going to have any hope of buying low and selling high.

One way out of this box is to pursue an investment plan that is not timely at all — ignoring current market conditions and using your personal circumstances, goals and temperament as guideposts instead.

Since this approach is timeless, it can readily use diversification among a variety of types and maturities of investments — stock funds, bond funds, money funds — as a way to cushion against risk.

"With all the investment choices currently available, there's almost no reason to have a portfolio that's not properly diversified," notes the Quest For Value group of funds in a current newsletter.

Secondly, you can use a long-term approach, such as a regular program of systematic investment purchases and reinvestment of dividends, to minimize the effects of zigzags on the market charts.

In stock funds, for instance, "the way NOT to do it is to scour the performance rankings for the latest winners," says John Bogle, chairman of the Vanguard group of funds in Valley Forge, Pa. "The return achieved by a fund yesterday has virtually no predictive value for tomorrow."

"Instead," Bogle writes in a current bulletin to shareholders, "investors should first determine how much of their overall portfolio they wish to devote to stocks and then decide what primary investment style — value or growth — is best suited to their needs.

"I frequently say, 'Invest in the broad market, reinvest your dividends, and don't look at it for 20 years. You'll almost certainly be delighted, if not astonished, with the results.'"

Adjustable-rate mortgages on return trail

N.Y. Times News Service

After falling out of favor during the home refinancing boom of 1992 and 1993, adjustable-rate mortgages are making a comeback, thanks to their rather modest rate increases, a spate of new loan products and heightened competition among lenders.

Although fixed-rate mortgages are still more popular, the federal Housing Finance Board recently reported that 43 percent of the mortgages closed in June had adjustable rates, the highest percentage since June 1989, when it was 47 percent.

A steady increase in interest rates over the last nine months is largely responsible. The low initial rates on adjustable loans, sometimes only 3.5 percent, reduce the cost of buying a home, at least in the short term, and help marginal borrowers qualify.

Moreover, interest costs for fixed-rate loans have risen faster than for adjustable loans. In the nine months ended July 29, the average interest rate on an adjustable loan jumped 1.46 percentage points, to 5.59 percent, compared with 1.93 points, to 8.76 percent, for fixed-rate loans, according to HSH Associates, a mortgage tracking firm in Butler, N.J.

Several new types of adjustables, sometimes called hybrids, are also proving to be popular. Loans called 10-1's and 7-1's have fixed rates for 10 and 7 years, respectively, and then adjust annually. They have lifetime caps on rate increases of 6 percentage points, no cap on the first adjustment and an annual cap of 2 percentage points in subsequent years. Conventional adjustable loans have rates that adjust every year with annual caps of 2 percentage points and lifetime caps of 6 percentage points. The rates are generally linked to the one-year Treasury note.

"The percentage of ARM's being reported is distorted because it includes hybrids with a fixed rate," said Keith Gumbinger, a spokesman at HSH Associates. "The average interest rate now is better than at any time in the entire '80s, and that fact isn't lost on consumers, which is why they are still taking fixed-rate products."

The 10-1 and 7-1 loans carry an interest rate that is 0.375 of a percentage point to 0.5 of a percentage point less than that on a 30-year fixed-rate loan. Because most mortgages do not last more than seven years, the borrower essentially gets a fixed rate at a discount.

Not so new but increasing in popularity is a 7-23 loan, also known as a "two-step." Its rate is fixed for seven years, adjusts during the seventh year and then remains fixed.

Some loans adjust frequently, every six months, three months or monthly. Their rates can usually rise no more than a percentage point at a time and have lifetime caps of 5 or 6 additional percentage points.

These mortgages may be linked to Libor, or the London interbank offered rate, which is slightly less volatile than the six-month Treasury bill, or to the 11th District Federal Home Loan Bank's cost of funds index, which is even less volatile.

Because these loans adjust so often, the borrower takes on more risk and gets a low teaser rate, or initial rate.

Gumbinger warned that some of these loans adjusted the minimum payments only once a year but changed interest rates every 30, 90 or 180 days. A rapid rise in rates, he said, could lead to negative amortization, a high-risk situation in which none of the monthly payment reduces the amount owed.

HOMES: Interest rates don't slow sales

times.

Rosenthal has seen the effects of the housing slump firsthand. In 1985, he paid $120,000 for a two-bedroom Palm Desert home. This year, he saw a three-bedroom unit in the same resort complex sell for $112,000.

"There are good opportunities for people to buy well with good financing. As an owner you have a problem," he said.

Most financial advisers caution individuals from buying a second home with the idea of making money either in the resale or from rental income.

"Buy it purely for pleasure," advised Jonathan Pond, author of "The New Century Family Money Book." "The ultimate naivete is to buy property thinking you'll get enough rent to carry you through."

Experts agree that prospective buyers should consider more than just price when looking for a second home. For one thing, buyers should stick with property that can be reached within a day's drive. They should track local economic trends as well.

While a steady rise in interest rates has had some effect on the market for primary homes, several realtors and developers say that has not been the case for vacation homes.

"I don't think our buying public is as closely connected to increases in interest rates as the first-home buyers," said Jim Perry, a real estate broker and owner of Jim Perry and Co. in Kitty Hawk, N.C. "Second homes are a luxury. You don't have to have them. Most people who buy them use their discretionary income."

John Tuccillo, chief economist for the National Association of Realtors, agreed: "A good economy will overcome slightly higher interest rates."

The Federal Reserve had been pushing rates higher since the start of the year to help control inflation. Mortgage rates are now about 1.5 percentage points higher than last summer, averaging between 8.5 percent and 8.75 percent. Tuccillo predicts rates will hold steady through the rest of the year as the economy experiences slow, steady growth.

He and other experts, meanwhile, are forecasting a big demand in vacation homes by the next century as baby boomers enter their retirement years. (Family oriented resorts fit to retire at have been steadily springing up around the country, according to Franks.)

That was the reason behind Charles Sigmund's recent purchase of a $230,000 four-bedroom contemporary on Lake of the Ozarks, Mo. Though a bit beyond the baby boom age, the St. Louis eye surgeon and his wife, Sharon, would someday like to retire at the lake.

"We've been going there for years," said Sigmund, adding that he wasn't worried about the economy or interest rates any more.

TAX: Second extension sometimes hard to get accruing on what taxes they may eventually owe," says Paul Mueller, director of tax services at Mann Frankfort Stein & Lipp in Houston, an accounting firm.

The failure-to-pay penalty is one-half of 1 percent of your unpaid taxes for each month or part of a month after the due date that the tax isn't paid. The maximum penalty is 25 percent of the amount owed.

The penalty is added to interest charges on late payments. The current interest rate for underpayment of taxes is 8 percent a year, compounded daily. However, the rate could change each quarter.

If you do get an extension to October to file your return, make sure you get it done by then.

"That's the drop-dead due date," Mueller says. "If you don't get your return done by Oct. 15 (Oct. 17 this year because Oct. 15 is a Saturday), you are definitely late."

"In our experience, those returns are typically the most complicated returns we do because these people may be in certain type of investments that we're waiting on certain information," Mueller says.

REWARD: Use cards cautiously

choose among. "Generally speaking, to qualify for a low-rate card you need not be wealthy, but you must not be too deeply in debt on your current cards or have an excessive number of cards," says the nonprofit group Bankcard Holders of America in Salem, Va.

The greatest potential benefit on many reward cards goes to people who charge large amounts but pay off their full balances each month, and thus avoid interest charges.

That general rule doesn't apply, though, on some newer cards where the incentives paid are based not on amounts charged but on balances subject to interest.

In all types of reward cards, it pays to determine ahead of time that you will want and be able to use the profferred benefit.

"Airline cards, for example, often require the free mileage to be used within three years," says the planners' institute. "You need to earn enough within a specified time to take advantage of the offer."

Mean side of San Francisco can be avoided through caution, natives say

■ Try not to look like a tourist, don't be afraid to make a fuss if confronted and never, ever wear or carry anything you're not prepared to lose, streetwise San Franciscans say.

By John D. O'Connor
Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — A little practical advice from street-savvy San Franciscans: Try not to look like a tourist, don't be afraid to make a fuss if confronted and never, ever wear or carry anything you're not prepared to lose.

Hotel desk workers, bartenders, cabbies and a guy who said he'd been robbed three times in as many months offered the advice recently after the high-profile mugging of a visiting North Carolina state senator and his son near Fisherman's Wharf.

"I always carry a roll of quarters with me," said Leonard James, hawking flowers outside the Ferry Building. "You hit a guy with a roll of quarters in your hand and he'll go down and stay down."

James admitted he's never field-tested the quarter trick, but he finds the weight in his pocket reassuring just the same.

"Times are hard," he said. "I've been mugged for change on three separate occasions. People are desperate and they're doing desperate things."

North Carolina state Sen. Fletcher Lee Hartsell Jr. found that out the hard way when two armed men confronted him and his 18-year-old son, Lee, in the 700 block of North Point Street.

Neither Hartsell, a two-term Republican, nor his son, a recent high school graduate bound for Stanford University, was injured, but both said they felt lucky to be alive.

The robbers made off with about $6,700 worth of jewelry, including the senior Hartsell's watch and wedding ring. Their wallets were also taken, but were later recovered and returned by a good-hearted tourist.

Mayor Frank Jordan, who aides say was "very disturbed" by news of Hartsell's encounter with the city's criminal element, planned to present the visiting politician with a replacement watch.

"The mayor talked to him and conveyed his disappointment and concern about what had happened," said Jordan press secretary Noah Griffin. "The senator didn't want to make a big deal of it. He realizes these things can happen and seemed a little surprised by all the attention."

Hartsell might be putting on a brave front, but San Franciscans take these assaults upon their guests personally.

"It can be hard to accept, but we have some punks in this city and they will grab people's purses or push people around," said Deborah Carlton, a reservationist at the Hotel Majestic. "It's everywhere, really. You just have to be careful."

Carlton and other locals say they share their hard-earned knowledge about trouble spots and tips on how to keep from being a victim with wide-eyed visitors unused to San Francisco's unique culture.

"Anybody here for the first time from Boise or Podunk, Texas, or Crime Free Wherever can be a little intimidated," Carlton said. "When they ask me if a place is dangerous, I'm honest. Even though nowhere in the world is safe, I tell them not to carry large amounts of cash, don't flash your money and try not to look lost."

Rich Oka, a desk man at the Pickwick Hotel on Fifth Street, says he provides tourists who approach him with a basic outline of areas to avoid and an admonition to use their common sense when out on the street.

"I'm from Minnesota myself, and when I first got here I was kind off paranoid, too," Oka said. "You learn by observing, and I tell them what I've learned since I've lived here."

Of the tourists he encounters in the course of the day, Oka said, the Japanese are most concerned about crime — "they're afraid of getting shot" — while European travelers want to know which areas to avoid but generally are more sure of themselves.

Concern over public safety on city streets peaked after a series of well-publicized attacks on tourists in the Fisherman's Wharf area last year — including the shooting of an Irish woman during a botched robbery and the mugging of two Japanese tourists at the wharf cable car turnaround.

The story of Nathan: American teen who's living life on the edge

By Kevin Fagan
Hearst News Service

This real-life 'Everykid' has 1 foot firmly on straight and narrow path and another tapping on the highway to trouble.

PINOLE, Calif. — The late afternoon sun peeps through worn curtains and glints off the eight-inch switchblade that Nathan's buddy is swishing through the air. He clicks the blade in and out of the handle expertly while Nathan sits on the kid's bed and watches, eyes wide.

"And then when I'm going to a fight, I take this one and put it back here like this," the buddy says, tucking a second knife, an Army fighting blade, into his back waistband. He snaps the switchblade shut and hands it to Nathan.

"Nice blade," Nathan says, flicking it open and whistling through his teeth. He points the knife forward and scowls, blue eyes squinting tight and narrow, lips firm. Then, as his friend looks away, he drops his eyes to the blade's edge. They go wide again, but this time it is with another feeling. He looks scared.

Suddenly, he is simply a 12-year-old kid looking at a knife he knows could do big damage to his small body. He drops it and stands up quickly.

"I'm bored of this," he says cheerily. "Let's go play baseball."

Nathan's 13-year-old pal tosses the Army knife on the bed, and 10 minutes later the boys are at a school field, tossing the ball and laughing and pretending to be Mark McGwire and Barry Bonds.

Nathan lives in a trim tract of houses on the edge of Pinole, a tiny town nestled alongside the San Francisco Bay amid gentle hills. He looks like a typical seventh-grader: His blond flat-top is usually covered with a baseball cap and his round face seems to always be erupting into an impish smile at some joke, usually his own.

The boy is stocky — his 5-foot-7 frame still holds the vestiges of kiddie fat, but beneath it he's muscled enough to knock a baseball out of any park with ease. He is white but has friends of every color, snaps his fingers to heavy rap music and knows every Beavis and Butt-head MTV cartoon by heart.

His parents allowed him to be profiled and photographed as long as his last name was not published. But in a sense, you could call him Everykid. With one important distinction.

This Everykid has one foot firmly in the straight and narrow path — and another tapping on the highway to trouble.

On the straight side is a Nathan who plays right field for his Little League team, looks after his 8-year-old stepbrother, Montana, after school, and until recently got good grades. He has a deep reverence for God and a devotion almost as deep to sticky-sweet candy.

On the other side is a street-wise youngster who knows the local toughs and could join their gangs tomorrow. He occasionally splashes graffiti around town and has already had his first dabblings with sex and marijuana. He knows gun makes and their firepowers like some people know Fords from Chevys and can switch from pubescent happy chatter to cutting vulgarity without missing a beat.

Twenty or 30 years ago, a kid like Nathan might still be trying to sneak looks at girlie magazines hidden in his father's dresser and his version of a wild time would be hitting some cowboy-and-Indian movie with his pals. Innocent discovery — the traditional stuff of adolescence. But not anymore.

In the 1990s, kids at ages 11, 12, 13 — middle school years — are already grappling with the life-changing choices and mistakes other generations did not have to deal with until 15 or 16. It has become the crucial age for determining whether they are to be contributing assets to, or drags upon, society — for learning such things as if and when to have sex, drink alcohol, take academic interests, develop skills. And if, how and when to be violent.

Nathan knows he is staring at the crossroads to adulthood. And even though he has a good head on his shoulders and loving, attentive parents, what this Everykid sees around him and ahead of him is not just bleak.

It's frightening.

"Freddy Krueger isn't (bleep)," Nathan muses one evening, sprawled on his bed playing Mortal Kombat, his favorite video game next to Nintendo baseball. "I used to like all those violent movies, but I can't sit through them anymore. They're boring.

"Reality is the scariest thing about real life. Just watch the nightly news."

The boy's room is a preteen shrine to sports and modern adolescence: A baseball autographed by Jose Canseco sits beside his Little League game trophies and a messy bookcase is stuffed with video games, sports magazines and trading cards. A small stereo usually snarls rap music from one corner and a "Seedless Weedies — Breakfast of the Blunted" pot poster hangs behind the door. Two stuffed bunnies squat amid the magazines.

Nathan jerks his video joystick and Shang Tsung, his character, delivers a blood-splattering kick to his foe's face. The screen flashes, "Finish him!" and a grinning Nathan dispatches the loser with a blast of fire.

"Even this — it's just a game," he says as the video flickers off. "But real life. . . ." He pauses a moment, then sits up.

"There are a few things I know for sure, and that's it," Nathan says. "I want to be a sports star, and if that doesn't happen it will suck. The other is: I know I'm gonna die someday."

He adds brightly: "Most kids think they'll die young, but I'd like to get old. And maybe I will, unless I get shot or something."

Watching Nathan pet the family cat or laugh at afternoon cartoons, such a statement seems ludicrous. But his fear is forged by experience.

One afternoon a few months ago, a gang of Filipinos squared off with a gang of black kids in Pinole and Nathan, walking home from school, stumbled into it. He knew some of the kids from school so he stopped to watch.

"This Filipino guy took out a chrome 9 (millimeter), and everybody ran," Nathan relates excitedly one day to his mother, Cathie, as if he were describing a hit movie. "The cops came and broke things up."

"How could you possibly know the difference between a 'chrome 9' pistol and anything else?" Cathie asks, frowning.

"Aw, mom — everyone knows that," Nathan says, punching her playfully in the arm. "You can get 'em anywhere."

This is no real news to Cathie, who at 35 possesses an easy laugh and a steely gaze that misses little. She tries her best to keep life's darker side from her home, but she knows her son is aware of things she would never have dreamed of at his age.

"I wish this were a simpler time, but this is today," sighs Cathie. "And there's a real innocence to Nate still — inside I think he's still 8 years old in some ways. But in a lot of ways he's already grown up."

Split from Nathan's father from the time of his birth, Cathie — a manager at a doctor's office — raised the boy alone until four years ago when she met Rob, a soft-spoken 33-year-old technician at a paint factory. Both have been in alcohol recovery for many years; the only vestiges of addiction today are the countless cups of coffee they down. Their tempers sometimes flare and subside with amazing rapidity.

Having grown up working-class in the poorer parts of Oakland, San Pablo and other towns, the two are now committed to giving Nathan and Montana, Rob's son by another marriage, the best shot they can at stable lives. The ready symbol of their conviction is their house, a study in neatness and placidity.

Smiling portraits of their wedding and the family, and framed inspirational posters dominate a living room wall. One reads "May Our Home Always Be a Haven of Strength and Love." The family bookcase holds well-thumbed copies of "Born to Win," "Dare to Discipline" and other self-help books.

The neighborhood is just as tidy, and Nathan's school, Pinole Middle, is a neat, well-achieving melting pot of races and generally middle-class backgrounds.

But even the most determined parents cannot keep away the outside world at large.

Lisa Stanley takes Parker, left, and Aggie for their daily walk. Stanley says that her goal as a petsitter is to provide the same love and care for the client's animal as the client would. Both are Shetland Sheep dogs owned by Joe and Mary Lynn Young.

"It's so wonderful to go to work and everybody's (the pets) happy to see you."

In good hands

Local woman turns her dream into reality

Who says dreams can't come true? Lisa Stanley's did.

What began as a dream — literally — three years ago has today become a successful home business for this mother of four.

"You will probably laugh, but I got the idea from a dream I had," Ms. Stanley said of her in-home petsitting service.

In her dream Ms. Stanley needed to borrow some ingredients for a meal.

She went next door to her neighbor's house to borrow the missing ingredient. The door was open but no one was home.

Inside, she discovered that her neighbor's animals and house plants were all dead.

Her neighbor came home to the grisly scene and burst into tears. So Ms. Stanley began comforting her and reassuring her that it would never happen again.

From this dream Ms. Stanley began to see the need for a service that would provide loving care for pets in their home while their owners were out of town or vacationing.

TLC Petsitting Service was born.

After a little research Ms. Stanley launched out in faith and took out an ad in the local newspaper and from that received her first client.

"I kind of credit the Reporter-Telegram for getting me started because of the ad I took out," she said.

"We began small with one client but today we have 200 clients we service on a regular basis."

In the beginning Ms. Stanley made all the calls herself, often "making as many as 30 home visits a day."

Today, TLC employs three full-time employees.

"We offer our service year round, seven days a week," Ms. Stanley said. "We don't just run in and feed the animal and run out; we like to spend quality time with the animal as well as feeding and caring for it."

Many clients have specific routines and requests for their pets.

"We have one pet that likes to eat its evening meal in front of the television set with the set on," Ms. Stanley said. "And, it likes ice tea with sweet n' low."

"We try to maintain the pet's normal routine," Ms. Stanley added, "and we cater to the owner's request in caring for their pet."

No pet is too unusual either. TLC employee Mindy Pierce has a client that has two snakes, two cats, two dogs and a fishtank overflowing with fish.

"The snakes belong to my client's young son," Ms. Pierce said. "It took awhile to get used to holding them — they feel funny."

During her visit Ms. Pierce must separate the two snakes before feeding each of them a frozen baby mouse.

The job also has its perks, says TLC employee Donna Pollard, whose favorite pets to care for are cats.

"One of the cats I take care of, Kate the cat, once brought me a gift — a freshly killed bird," Ms. Pollard said. "It was Kate's way of saying 'thank you.'"

The thought of spending the day with animals is what appealed to Alicia Hanks, who was brought up in a small ranching and farming community near Brownwood.

"I'm a large animal person," Ms. Hanks said. "This came natural for me."

According to Ms. Hanks, TLC doesn't get many assignments for large farm animals, but "when we do, they call me."

Unlike many jobs, Ms. Stanley says hers "is never boring."

"It's so wonderful to go to work and everybody's happy to see you."

Above, Mindy Pierce handles a corn snake. The snake is one of two belonging to her client's young son. "It took awhile to get used to touching them," said Pierce who must separate the two snakes before feeding them.

Two dogs eagerly wait for lunch to be served by Pierce. This client has two dogs, two cats, a tank-full of fish, and two corn snakes that Pierce feeds and tends.

Deion race on

DAVIE, Fla. — The Miami Dolphins officially joined the Deion Sanders sweepstakes Sunday when coach Don Shula said he'd welcome the addition of "Prime Time" to his already star-studded roster.

Sanders, a three-time Pro Bowl cornerback and outfielder for the first-place Cincinnati Reds, has been shopping his football services since being waived and declared a free agent by the Atlanta Falcons in the off-season.

Sanders, who was born in nearby Fort Myers, Fla., had said he won't play football until the baseball season is over, but because of the players strike, that may be sooner rather than later.

"Any time an athlete like Deion expresses an interest we're going to explore that the best way we can," Shula said Sunday at his weekly press conference. "If something could be worked out (salary cap), we want to be in the competition."

Short strike?

LaPORTE, Ind. — Charlie Finley predicts baseball owners won't let the strike last more than another week because they can't afford it.

"There's a few clubs that have been sold recently or purchased for $100 million, $125 million, $150 million," said Finley, who owned the Athletics in Kansas City and Oakland from 1960 to 1981. "When they pay that much money those guys are leveraged to the hilt, and they have to make those payments.

"I foresee enough owners to be concerned about making payments on their clubs that they're going to have to give in at the end. They've done it so many times before."

Middle man

HOUSTON (AP) — Strictly speaking, Terry Collins falls into the category of management when it comes to the major-league baseball strike.

The Houston Astros manager, however, has day-to-day contact with his players and understands their point of view, too.

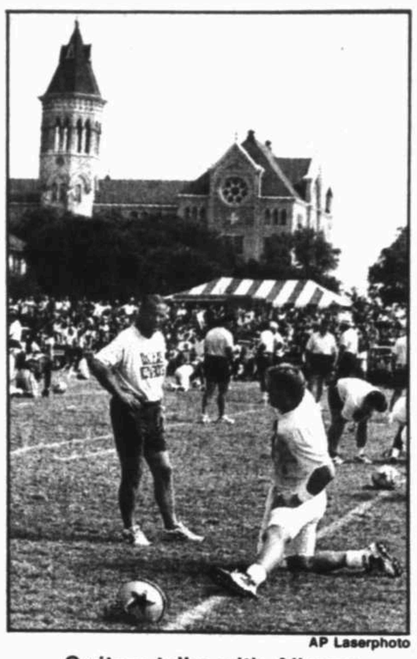

Collins agrees with San Francisco Giants manager Dusty Baker: During baseball labor wars, managers are the men caught in the middle.

"I've got my ideas on it, but it really doesn't matter what I think," Collins told the Houston Chronicle. "Plus, all I can do is make one side or the other mad by saying what I think about it.

"Dusty Baker was right when he said we're middle managers in this industry. That's where we are. Right in the middle, with both sides watching what we do and say. We're close to the players, and the benefits that players get, we get. But the owners sign our paychecks."

"My poor wife, she's probably going to try to find a Little League team for me to manage," Collins said.

Mexico proves love for Cowboys

By Michael A. Lutz
AP Sports Writer

MEXICO CITY — The Dallas Cowboys call themselves America's Team. They're Mexico's Team, too.

The Cowboys, popular in Mexico because of the Mexican kickers they have employed and their Super bowl status, play the Houston Oilers here tonight before what is expected to be the largest crowd ever to see an NFL game.

Some 108,000 tickets have been sold for the game, the last of four NFL exhibitions played outside the United States this preseason. Other games were played in Berlin, Barcelona, Spain, and Tokyo.

The attenadance record for a game involving an NFL team was set at Chicago's Soldier Field in 1947 when the College All-Stars played the NFL champion Chicago Bears before 105,840. The official capacity of Aztec Stadium is 110,000.

■ Cowboys vs. Oilers, 8 p.m., KMID-TV, Cabel Channel 3.

Aztec Stadium, used primarily for soccer, is at 7,347-feet, some 2,000 feet higher than Denver's Mile High Stadium.

"It's going to be big for NFL purposes, and it's a big trip because you're playing the world champions," Oilers wide receiver Ernest Givins said. "But remember, it's an exhibition game."

The Oilers will attempt to add to their streak of five straight preseason victories over the popular Cowboys, who have their own Mexican edition of the Dallas Cowboys Weekly newspaper and a local Cowboys Fan Club.

The Cowboys gained popularity in Mexico during the Tom Landry era when they had kickers such as Danny Villaneuva, Effren Herrera and Rafael Septien. Winning Super Bowls the past two seasons has also added to their appeal.

It will be the first NFL game played in Mexico City since 1978, when the Philadelphia Eagles played the New Orleans Saints at University Stadium.

Oilers offensive coordinator Dick Coury was a member of the Eagles staff in 1978 and doesn't anticipate players having any problems with the altitude.

"The more you talk about the altitude, the worse it gets," Coury said. "I don't think there will be any problems."

Since it's an exhibition game, there will be plenty of substitutions so players won't have the exertion of a regular season game.

"I wouldn't say it will be a no-holds barred deal," Oilers coach Jack Pardee said. "I hope we can look like a decent team and play well, but we want to look at a lot of personnel."

Back-to-back Price hold

Nick Price was the whole show in the 1994 PGA Championship, winning the title without a major push from an amazed field.

■ Nick Price becomes the first golfer since 1982 to win back-to-back major titles.

TULSA, Okla. — By any standard, Nick Price is the best golfer in the world. By his own definition, he is among the best ever.

Price completely dominated the PGA Championship at Southern Hills Country Club from start to finish, closing with a brilliant 67 that gave him a six-stroke victory over Corey Pavin.

It was so easy, so overwhelming and — by Sunday — so expected that it was obvious someone would ask Price how he would define the truly greats of golf and if he fits into that definition.

"To win all four major championships is one," Price said. "Another is for a certain amount of time to dominate the game."

That Price has done.

His rounds of 67-65-70-67 followed rounds of 69-66-67-66 in his British Open victory last month and extended an unbelievable run that started when Price won the 1992 PGA. Since 1992, Price has 16 victories — including three major championships — and 45 top-10 finishes in 82 tournaments.

"The British Open just squashed any negatives and doubts," Price said about his bubbling confidence.

"I've always wanted to be No. 1," Price said. And no one would argue that he isn't, not even the Sony rankings that until this victory had Greg Norman ranked as the best player in the world.

Price was so dominating on Sunday that only three players managed to pick up as much as a single stroke on him. His final-round 67 was bettered only by Nick Faldo, Brad Faxon and Ian Woosnam, all of whom shot 66.

The only challenges mounted against Price came early and were squashed quickly.

"I kept a sharp eye on the scoreboard," Price said. "I was really worried about Greg today. I thought he would shoot 63 or 64. I looked at the scoreboard on every hole and when I saw on No. 2 that Greg went birdie-birdie, I knew I

Martin tips a Bud

road course, Martin also gained his first victory of the season and the 13th of his Winston Cup career.

Martin, driving for Roush Racing, led 75 of the 90 laps and easily fought off a late challenge from Ernie Irvan, winning the battle of Ford Thunderbirds by 0.88 seconds — about four car-lengths.

Dale Earnhardt, the six-time and defending series champion, finished third, and held the 27-point lead he had coming into the 20th of 31 races this season.

Martin was cruising along with a lead hovering near three seconds when the fourth full-course caution flag waved on lap 81 after Hut Stricklin spun, hit a guardrail and stopped on the track, nearly blocking the racing surface at the exit to turn four.

Stricklin eventually got his engine restarted and drove slowly to the pits, but that yellow flag allowed Irvan to move right up to Martin's rear bumper for the restart on lap 85.

When the green flag waved, Irvan tried an inside move and an outside move as the leaders raced into the first turn. The cars nearly touched, but Martin steadily pulled ahead as they reached the long back straightaway.

"I hated to see that last caution because I knew Ernie was going to try everything he could think of to get by me on the restart," Martin said. "That's what happened and we just had to kind of plug him up in turn one. Once we got up and got trucking, we were able to get away from him."

Martin, who went on to win three more races in a row and another late in the season at Phoenix after breaking into the victory column at Watkins Glen International in 1993, said he knew his car would win this season.

"We've been so close, I just knew it had to come," he said. "It was meant to be today. You can't force a win. You just have to wait until it's your day to

Penske stages sweep

By Tim Puet

LEXINGTON, Ohio — Al Unser Jr. led a Team Penske sweep of the first three positions in Sunday's Miller Genuine Draft 200, which turned on a stop-and-go penalty against his teammate Paul Tracy.

and last year, was third. Robby Gordon finished fourth and Michael Andretti fifth.

Tracy, who had led all but one lap, was penalized by CART officials for passing Gordon under a yellow caution flag on lap 53. The penalty forced Tracy to make an extra pit stop, then immediately return to the race course.

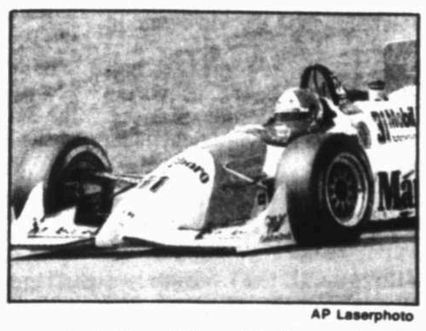

The pass occurred on the second turn of the track in a narrow area known as the keyhole. Teo Fabi, driving for the Midland-based Hall Racing Team had stalled his car and was off the course with a tow truck blocking part of the racing surface.

Tracy's brakes apparently locked when he tried to slow down. So did the brakes on Gordon's car, which slid sideways, allowing Tracy to get past him along the inside of the track. Gordon quickly recovered and got back into the racing line in front of Unser.

"I wasn't planning on passing him, but he locked up his brakes and almost slid off the track. What am I supposed to do? He slipped wide," Tracy said of Gordon.

Tracy said that he tried to talk with CART officials, "but they didn't want to hear anything about it."

Tracy held the lead until he made a regular pit stop on the 57th lap, when Unser took first place. Unser pitted one lap later, and Tracy made his penalty stop at the same time, allowing Unser to hold a seven-second lead.

Tracy, who qualified second, slipped past Unser on the first lap and, until the penalty, lost the lead only when he pitted on the 29th. Fittipaldi took first at that point, but pitted on the next lap to put Tracy back in front.

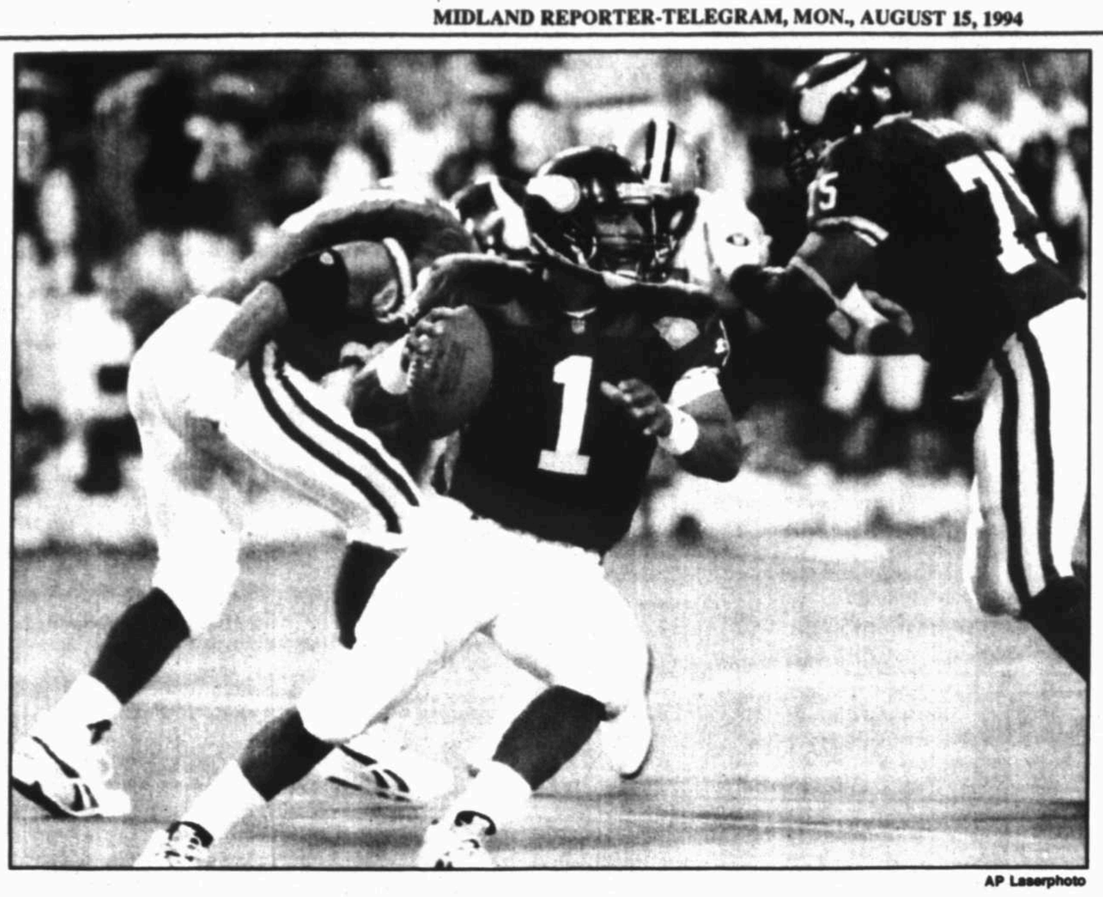

It was Unser's sixth victory in the 11 Indy-car races this season and his fourth from the pole position, with the others coming at the Indianapolis 500 and the Portland and Cleveland road races. It also was his first triumph in 12 tries at the Mid-Ohio Sports Car course.

In addition, it was the eighth triumph for the Ilmor engines of Team Penske. Tracy and Fittipaldi have won once apiece.

Unser averaged 110.387 mph for 83 laps, or 185.8 miles over the 2¼-mile, 13-turn road course. The race originally was scheduled for 89 laps, but was shortened to meet ABC-TV requirements, CART spokesman Dave Elshoff said.

Moon fits mold with Minnesota

Minnesota quarterback Warren Moon gets good protection in exhibition game Saturday night against New Orleans. Moon has moved to the Vikings from the Houston Oilers.

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Two old pros looking for fresh life in new cities got to take their first big steps toward the future with the Minnesota Vikings and New Orleans Saints.

Warren Moon's team got the victory. Jim Everett got the satisfaction. Both said they got a taste of what their new offenses will be like in the Vikings' 21-17 preseason victory Saturday night.

"It's coming along," Moon said. "They're starting to figure out the things I do best. I like the versatility and the balance we have. And there are a lot of things they do here that I had done before in the run and shoot."

Moon has never had a serious injury, still moves around well and has one of the strongest, most accurate arms in football, but was made expendable in Houston because of the salary cap. The Vikings are counting on Moon to give them the big-play, quick-strike potential they've lacked.

He did just that in the closing seconds of the first half against New Orleans.

In his debut with the Vikings, Moon showed the hometown fans why Minnesota could justify paying $2.7 million this season for a 37-year-old quarterback.

After throwing 11 incompletions on his first 16 passes, Moon completed four for 62 yards and a touchdown in the final 29 seconds of the half.

"That's classic Warren Moon," Coach Dennis Green said. "I guess vintage Warren Moon."

Everett, who back in the late 1980s was considered one of the game's great young quarterbacks, was made expendable in Los Angeles by losing records and a feud with the coach. Everett's problems with the Rams were so bad last season they considered cutting him before they traded him to New Orleans for a No. 7 draft pick in 1995.

Saturday night, Everett, 31, showed signs of justifying the Saints' belief that he still has the arm, size, smarts and heart to move the offense quickly and often.

"I felt pretty comfortable," Everett said of his first extended play with the New Orleans offense. He played one quarter in the first preseason game, the an entire half against Minnesota. "Things are starting to fall into place."

Everett completed two-thirds of his passes, 14 of 22 for 182 yards and two touchdowns.

After acquiring a reputation of spending more time watching for a rush than looking for receivers, Everett took his time finding receivers or scrambled around until he could throw.

"We had some extremely good pass protection against a team noted for its great pass rush," Everett said. "Our receivers made some excellent catches and I felt good about the good blocking I had. I was able to pick up my second and third receivers."

Playing with Everett gives the young Saints players a lot of confidence, said wide receiver Derrell Mitchell, a sixth-round draft pick this year.

Mitchell, 22, caught a 10-yard touchdown from Everett.

"It seems an older quarterback like that can teach me a lot in one huddle," Mitchell said. "He kept telling me to keep my head up, don't get down. It makes me feel good."

Everett's performance Saturday made Coach Jim Mora feel good too.

"He's starting to feel confident," Mora said. "You can see him getting better every day."

Tolliver leaves Tech influence

By Don Williams
Lubbock Avalanche-Journal

LUBBOCK (AP) — He left Lubbock a little more than five years ago, but on occasion, when his name surfaces, the stories still flow about Billy Joe Tolliver ... big-time quarterback, part-time golfer and full-time Huck Finn adventurer.

Anyone with a Billy Joe Tolliver story has nothing on Robby Cartwright.

"I always sat on the back of the bus with him going to games," says Cartwright, a new freshman recruit at Texas Tech.

Robby Cartwright elaborated at this point about how Billy Joe would fill his grade-school ears with ... oh, it's probably not stuff I should put in print. Let's just say Billy Joe was, well, as irreverent as his hair was red.

"He was kind of a wild guy back then," Cartwright said. "I'm sure he still is now."

Tolliver was the small-town hero from Boyd, so flamboyant as to be larger than life. Cartwright, when he was a little feller anyway, grew up under Billy Joe's wing.

Back in 1983, when Cartwright was seven, Tolliver gave Boyd a piggyback carry to the Class 2A state championship.

Naturally, Cartwright was thrilled to be along for the ride. And enlightened to be along for the bus rides. Even last year, when it came his turn to steer the Yellow Jackets through the state playoffs, Cartwright never lost the Tolliver influence.

"He was the first player (from Boyd) to go to a Division I school. The only time Boyd's ever won a state championship was his senior year," Cartwright said. "Everybody looked up to him as a hero.

"I was fortunate enough to know him a little better than everybody else since my dad was his head coach."

J.G. Cartwright did his best to polish Billy Joe before packing him off to a memorable career at Texas Tech. On good days, Tolliver would crack 400 yards passing. On the worst day, when Jones Stadium booed him in a 45-14 loss to Baylor, Billy Joe lamented that, "Even Betty Crocker burns a cake now and then."

Alas, a decade later, Cartwright accomplished almost everything Tolliver did at Boyd, except win a state championship, and his dad packed him off to Texas Tech.

Robby didn't even need Billy Joe around for advisement.

"I always liked Texas Tech after he went there," said Cartwright, who led Boyd to a 13-1 record last season that ended with a 7-6 loss to Pilot Point in the state quarterfinals. "I've always liked Tech, mainly because he came here first, and then I just kept on liking them. I never really talked to him about it (signing with Tech)."

The Red Raiders, of course, talked to Cartwright from the get-go about tracing Billy Joe's path to Lubbock. He's not as brawny — Cartwright reported to camp Monday at 6-foot and 177 pounds — and he lacks Billy Joe's rip-roarin' personality. Then again, doesn't everybody?

He showed the same knack, though, for getting things done on a football field, earning all-state notice at running back, quarterback, defensive back and punter. It's here where Cartwright will shed the Tolliver comparisons and go his own way. At Tech, he'll play safety, probably.

True, he worked last Tuesday morning at quarterback. But that was mostly because Matt Tittle was the only scholarship QB in the new class, and the Raiders needed an extra arm. When the varsity joins practice, Cartwright expects a return to the secondary.

"I feel comfortable there," he said. "I played there in high school four years on varsity. I really know it pretty well. I only played quarterback my senior year in high school. It's new to me still."

To be honest, Cartwright is playing nowhere at the moment. Third day in camp, and already he has a wrap affixed to his right knee, huge enough to suit Billy Joe.

"Some kind of insect bite," Cartwright said. "It's been about a week or so. Ever since I've been here, it's just been getting worse. My knee's just huge, and it's getting to the point where I can't really bend it."

As he walked stiffly out the door toward the trainer's room, Cartwright seemed unsure exactly how or where he picked up the bite.

That's the difference between him and Billy Joe, who might have told about a tromp through the underbrush and this nasty rattlesnake and ...

Ryan '46' holds, but offense dies

TEMPE, Ariz. — This time, Buddy Ryan's "46 Defense" came up with a zero. And so did the Arizona Cardinals' offense.

"To me it's unbelievable that we played 30 minutes of defensive football and did not get one turnover," Ryan said following a 16-0 loss to the Chicago Bears. "We had one sack, a couple of opportunity for picks ... but that was it.

"You can't win in the National Football League if you don't get turnovers."

Instead, Arizona turned the ball over, allowing the Bears to win their second straight exhibition game.

"The Bears are a good defensive football team, but that's no excuse for not scoring on them," Ryan said after the loss Saturday.

"You can pay your team to play but for them to excel it has to come from the heart. There wasn't a lot of heart out there tonight."

Ryan, whose defensive schemes helped the Bears win the Super Bowl in 1986, was coaching his second NFL preseason game for the Cardinals. He was happier with the first, a 17-7 victory over San Francisco last week.

Ryan's "46 Defense" came up emptyhanded after getting six sacks and scoring a touchdown off an interception in the win over San Francisco.

Instead, Arizona turned the ball over and the Bears converted some of their scoring chances. They got three first-half field goals from Kevin Butler and a 34-yard scoring run from Robert Green with 10:41 left.

"We knew it was going to tough," Bears coach Dave Wannstedt said. "We did what we wanted to. We knew we weren't going to get the big plays but we wanted to play smart, which we did."

The Cardinals committed 15 penalties for 100 yards to seven on 55 yards for Chicago.

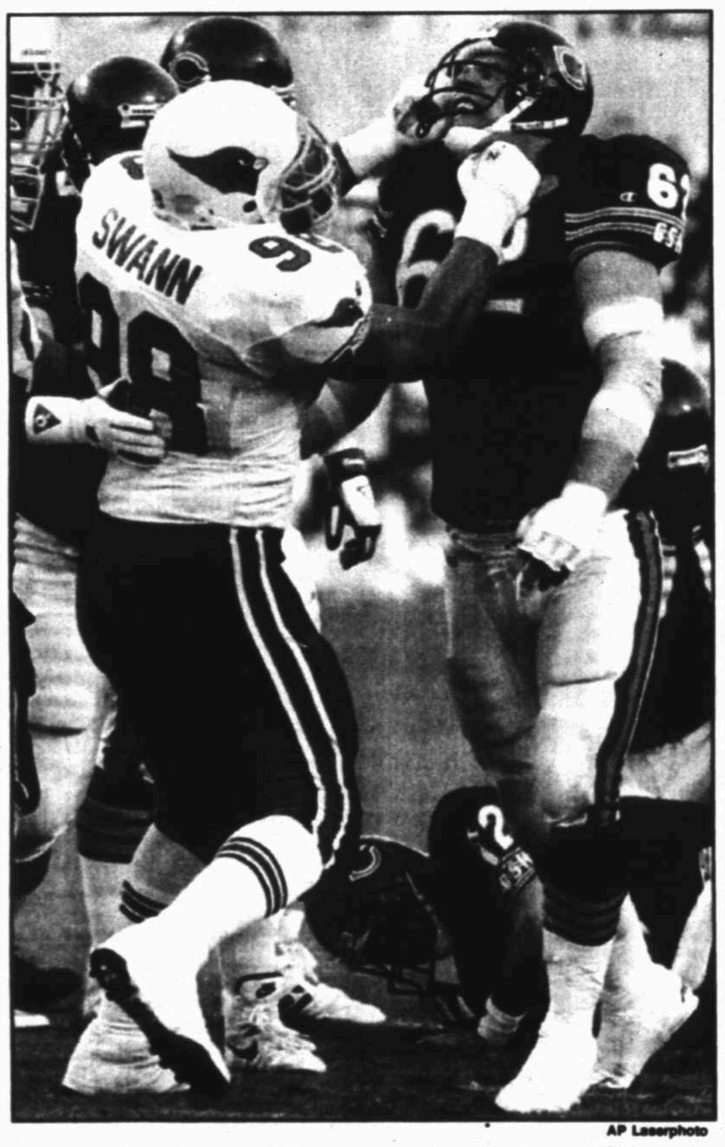

Green shined after being used mainly on special teams.

"This was definitely what I was waiting for," the fourth-year pro said. "It was good to just get in there and do what I'm used to doing. What's frustrating has been sometimes you know you can play but just because of the way things are you can't go in there and show it."

The Bears (2-0) also got help from a pair of pass interference penalties against Cardinals cornerback James Williams and two interceptions by Bear corner Donnell Woolford.

"Any time you can get them and hold them you've got to be happy about that," Woolford said. "Last year I was getting a handle on them but could not hold on so I had a lot of pass breakups, but not interceptions."

Butler hit field goals of 32, 44 and 22 yards, the last two coming after the Bears got the ball as the result of the Woolford interceptions.

Adams frets over UT ruling

DALLAS (AP) — There's little doubt about Mike Adams' physical ability as a football player. It's his actions off the field that have put the talented University of Texas junior at the center of so many controversies.

But the most serious attack on his character — which has left him charged with two counts of assault and off the football team for 60 days — is one major misunderstanding, says Adams, who has witnesses backing him.

"Basically," Adams told The Dallas Morning News in its Sunday editions. "I'm being suspended for no reason."

The incident occurred early June 25 when Adams and several friends noticed Amanda Lucarino, whom Adams used to date, standing outside a nightclub crying.

Adams and the others went to console her when Sgt. Leo Enriquez approached.

In his reports, Enriquez wrote that Adams was out of control, screaming profanities and threatening the officer. Enriquez said he sprayed Adams with pepper gas after he refused to back away as he had been told.

Enriquez wrote that Adams dropped to one knee after being sprayed, then screamed at Enriquez: "I'll kill your (expletive)!"

Several witnesses and Lucarino say Adams neither attacked the woman nor threatened the officer.

"He never hit me at all," said Lucarino, who blames her scrapes and bruises that night from a fight with another female.

"The thing about it was Adams was very calm," said Hal Cromwell, who was so close to the incident that mace sprayed on his clothing. "He didn't do anything threatening whatsoever."

Lucarino did not press charges, yet Adams was charged with third-degree felony assault on a police officer and assault with injury, a Class A misdemeanor. No court date has been set.

It's already led Texas coach John Mackovic to suspend Adams for 60 days, lasting through Aug. 28. Mackovic says he'll decide whether to reinstate Adams on that day.

But Adams has been involved in several dilemmas in a short time.

Just this year, he left school so he could work to pay off housing bills and he severely cut his hand when he was stabbed during a fight with a former UT basketball player. As a freshman, Adams was kicked out of his freshman dorm for an incident that began as a water fight.

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Nobody's ignoring Miami rookie running back Irving Spikes anymore.

Spikes, who signed with the Dolphins as a free agent after being cast aside on draft day, overshadowed Dan Marino's sharp performance in Miami's 31-24 exhibition victory over Green Bay Saturday night.

Spikes rushed for a touchdown and set up two others in his debut as a kick returner with runbacks of 71 and 51 yards. His own score came after he returned a third kick 24 yards.

"I can't say if I've made the roster yet," Spikes said. "But I have to thank my return guys. They had some great blocks. I just wanted to get noticed. It was great that coach (Don) Shula took a chance on me."

Spikes began the third quarter with a 22-yard kickoff return to the Miami 32. But Shula chose a re-kick when Green Bay rookie Dorsey Levins was whistled for offsides.

Spikes broke through for 71 yards to the Green Bay 15, setting the tone for a wild second half in which 41 points were scored.

"When you sign a free agent, you want to see him catch your eye," Shula said. "And he's certainly done that."

Spikes, who had the fourth-best rushing average in the nation (149.5) last year at Northeast Louisiana, provided Miami with the winning margin when he scored from three yards out to give the Dolphins a 31-17 lead with 13:59 remaining.

He now has 33 rushes for 152 yards and two TDs in the preseason. Saturday, he rushed 12 times for 32 yards.

Bernie Parmalee capped both of Spikes' big kickoff returns with short-yardage touchdown runs.

Reggie Cobb rushed eight times for just 18 yards, drawing boos from the crowd of 52,759 at Milwaukee County Stadium for the 45th annual Midwest Shrine game.

In two exhibitions, Cobb has 15 carries for 33 yards, a 2.2 average. He has a long run of six yards and no touchdowns.

Last week, general manager Ron Wolf urged patience for Cobb, who left Tampa Bay to sign a two-year, $2.2 million contract with the Packers.

"There's no shortcuts to a good running game," Green Bay coach Mike Holmgren said.

COWBOYS: Mexico City hosts American Bowl

outside the U.S. is diminished by the short flight from Austin and San Antonio, where the Cowboys and Oilers have their training camps.

"The great thing about this trip is it takes just 2½ hours to get there; it's like flying to New York," Cowboys coach Barry Switzer said.

NFL rushing champion Emmitt Smith could get his first playing time of the preseason and the Cowboys also want running back Lincoln Coleman to get plenty of work as he gets back into shape.

The starting quarterbacks, Dallas' Troy Aikman and Houston's Cody Carlson, won't get much playing time. It will be a game of spotlighting backups.

Cowboy backup Rodney Peete, who had an off performance Sunday against the Los Angeles Raiders, will try to rebound. And the battle for the Oilers' No. 2 quarterback will continue between Bucky Richardson and Sean Salisbury.

"Of course, we always like to beat the Cowboys. Plus, it being in Mexico and the biggest crowd and all that, it will be very exciting." Oilers quarterback Bucky Richardson said.

The Oilers have done well against the Cowboys in their recent meetings. Houston coach Jack Pardee is 5-0 in preseason and 1-0 in the regular season against Dallas since taking over the Oilers in 1990.

The American Bowl series started in 1986 in London matching the Cowboys against the Chicago Bears. Monday's game will be the 23rd in the series.

PGA: Price right again

had to play some golf," Price said.

And play some golf he did.

Price all but ended the tournament when he responded to Norman's challenge with birdies on Nos. 3 and 4.

"That made me relax a little," Price said. "But I didn't really believe I had it until the birdie on No. 16."

He could have believed it earlier. Price shot 32 on the front nine in what he said was "probably played the best nine holes of my entire life."

Although Norman, Faldo and Phil Mickelson made early noise, none was able to keep it going.

Pavin was the steadiest, making 17 pars and a birdie for a 69 and a 275 total.

Mickelson was 6-under at one point, but double bogeyed No. 16 and finished with a 70 and was third at 276, seven strokes behind Price.

"Nick just waxed us all," Mickelson said.

Faldo got to 4-under for the tournament at No. 14 but ran out of gas and finished with a final-round 66 for 3-under-par 277, eight strokes behind. Norman shot 70 and was also at 277, along with John Cook, who finished with a 70.

Tied at 2-under were Steve Elkington of Australia and Jose Maria Olazabal of Spain.

A missed 6-foot par putt on the last hole cost Price a share of the PGA record of 12-under-par. And that final-hole bogey kept him from tying Jack Nicklaus's winning-margin record of seven strokes set in the 1980 PGA.

Price's 269 broke the PGA stroke record of 271, 9-under, by Bobby Nichols in 1964. And it was the lowest stroke total ever in an American major championship.

Price crushed the morale of everyone with his early rush.

"It made it difficult to have hope out there," Pavin said. "He got off to such a great start we were all playing for second."

The victory, coupled with his British Open triumph, made Price the first player to win consecutive major championships since Tom Watson won the U.S and British Opens in 1982. And it made Price the first player to win two majors in the same year since Nick Faldo won the Masters and British Open in 1990.

No one had won the British Open and the PGA in the same year since Walter Hagen in 1924.

The victory by the 37-year-old Zimbabwean also meant that Americans won none of the four major golf championships this year for the first time.

Olazabal won the Masters and Ernie Els of South Africa took the U.S. Open.

Price never really gave anyone hope of winning the tournament. He made only seven bogeys in 72 holes and went 38 consecutive holes without a bogey.

Bowden seeks repeat

■ Florida State Preview

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — At the age when most college coaches have long ago retired, Florida State's Bobby Bowden is looking to repeat as national champion.

"We've reached the point now where we won't be satisfied with anything else," said the 64-year-old Bowden, whose 1993 team captured the school's first national title with an 18-16 Orange Bowl victory over Nebraska. "We've had a taste now."

Led by Heisman Trophy winner Charlie Ward at quarterback, the Seminoles finished last season 12-1 — their bid for perfection spoiled by a 31-24 defeat at Notre Dame.

The Irish, Miami and Florida again appear to be the major obstacles to Florida State's hopes of a repeat.

"We're going to have to stay healthy to get by that schedule," Bowden said. "They're all ranked number one in the nation in somebody's poll."

He also worries about his Atlantic Coast Conference rivals, who are anxious to halt Florida State's flawless 16-0 mark since coming into the league two years ago.

"And we still carry that target of being the defending national champion," said Bowden, whose 239 victories puts him fifth on the career list.

Bowden is counting on his defense, which was the toughest in the country to score against last year, to again be among the nation's best.

"This is probably the fastest team we've ever had, particularly on defense," he said.

Bowden ranks linebacker Derrick Brooks, cornerback Clifton Abraham and defensive end Derrick Alexander among the best players in the country at their positions. Brooks will miss the first two games of the season for accepting gifts in violation of NCAA rules.

Guard Patrick McNeil, a four-year starter, will sit out the first three games for a similar violation. He'll miss games at Maryland and Wake Forest that follow the Sept. 3 home opener against Virginia.

"We've not only lost some All-Americans in this deal, but it's really cut down on our depth," said Bowden, who will also be without senior running back Tiger McMillon the first two games.

A fourth player, starting offensive tackle Forrest Conoly, was suspended indefinitely for not cooperating with investigators looking into a shopping spree by some players last fall that violated NCAA rules.

Although Bowden lost the most prolific offensive player in school history when Ward graduated, he feels the Seminoles have a solid replacement in junior Danny Kanell.

The 6-foot-4, 215-pound Kanell was named the ACC's offensive player of the week in his only start a year ago after throwing for 341 yards and five touchdowns in a 49-20 victory at Maryland while Ward rested sore ribs.

"I feel very good with Kanell and the boys behind him," said Bowden, who has two other underclassmen, Jon Stark and Thad Busby, pushing for playing time at quarterback.

Kanell will benefit from the protection of an experienced offensive line.

"The offensive line could be the thing that saves us this year," Bowden said.

Receivers Kevin Knox, Matt Frier and Tamarick Vanover must be replaced.

win one of these things. Today was our day."

The winner, who earned $85,100 — including a $22,800 bonus from Unocal for winning from the pole — averaged 93.75 mph in a race slowed by caution for 12 laps.

Earnhardt had been battling with Wally Dallenbach Jr. through most of the race, but Dallenbach, driving in his last race for Richard Petty after a falling out with the team, had an off-course excursion on lap 89 and wound up slipping all the way to 14th.

Two-time Glen winner Rusty Wallace, third in the points, just ahead of Martin, also drove through the grass while running third on lap 86. He had to make a pit stop for tires and wound up 17th, the last driver on the lead lap.

Ken Schrader, who started alongside Martin on the front row, finished fourth, followed by two-time Glen winner Ricky Rudd, Terry Labonte, Darrell Waltrip, rookie Joe Nemechek and Jeff Gordon, the winner of the previous week's Brickyard 400.

Kyle Petty, the 1992 Glen winner, was out of the race early after being bumped by rookie P.J. Jones and sliding through the grass and into a tirewall.

There were numerous other spins and off-course excursions, but all of the drivers were able to continue racing or at least drive their cars back to the pits.

The race was run without delay despite rain throughout Saturday night and into the morning hours Sunday.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, AUGUST 15, 1994

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your exceptional intellect and ingenuity give you the opportunity to excel in many fields. Get to work! Making some overdue adjustments will eventually produce great rewards. Keep a watchful eye on financial investments. A love relationship becomes a powerful force in the months ahead, giving greater meaning to all your endeavors. Your sensitivity to other people's needs may result in a cherished dream.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: civil rights leader Vernon Jordan, chef Julia Child, actress Tess Harper, puppeteer Bil Baird.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Bold moves are taboo today. Dress and act conservatively when dealing with mainstream business types. A friend comes to the rescue when you need a helping hand.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A check arrives in the nick of time. Old friends and close relatives will provide strong support when you need it most. Romance takes on a new glow. Wear your heart on your sleeve.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A good day for tidying up your office or home. See a doctor if an ailment persists. Ignoring new symptoms would be a mistake. Championing the rights of the downtrodden and disenfranchised wins you allies.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Do not despair if you encounter a setback today. Persistence guarantees eventual success! Use a disappointment as a stepping-stone. The financial picture is favorable.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Keep a sharp lookout for real estate bargains. You should be able to make a nice profit! Clear up some domestic issues before tackling a time-consuming work project. Homemakers should try new recipes.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Avoid acting prematurely; the moment is not right for a favorable outcome. Be forbearing in the face of family disturbances. Love conquers all! Financial discussions should go well. Be aware of all your options.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Buying equipment that is easy to use will help you start ahead of the game. The neat look pays off on job interviews. Test an idea on an adviser to see if it will fly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Think about important appointments before committing yourself to other events. Taking responsibility for your mistakes will make you feel better about yourself. Someone influential will express their admiration. Put more zip into an exercise routine.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Money and romance are closely linked now. You will never know how easy it is to get results until you do the job yourself. An improvement in a parent-child relationship brings peace of mind.

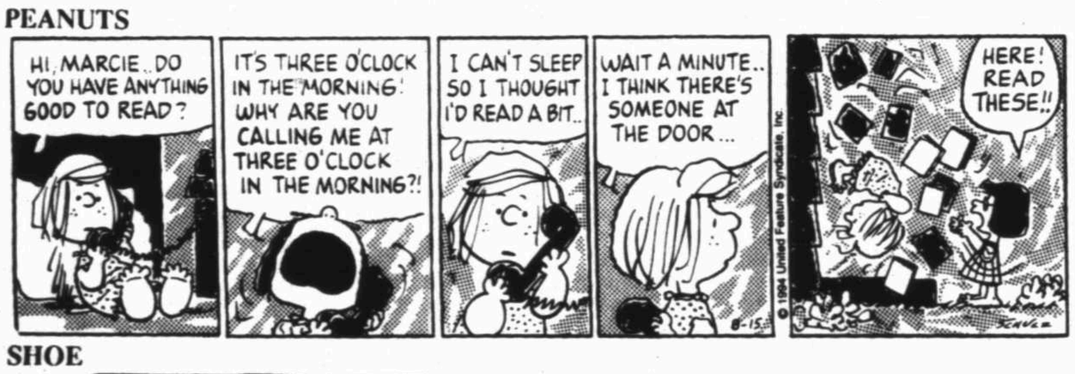

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): It is a whole new world for those willing to put in a lot of effort and time today. A student may have helpful money management tips for the whole family. Listen attentively.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Someone from your past could reappear. How you react could determine how good a day this is. Once you are comfortable with who you are, you will exude new confidence. Be patient with youngsters.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A decision you reach today may be irrevocable. Think twice before committing yourself to a costly venture. If you feel that something more can be done, give yourself additional time to think things through.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q. 1 - As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠Q 10 9 5 2 ♡A K Q 6 3 ◇Q 8 ♣6
The bidding has proceeded:

WEST	NORTH	EAST	SOUTH
1♠	1◇	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A - Even though partner could only overcall, we would be inclined to insist on game with this holding. To make sure partner doesn't stop short, first cue-bid two clubs then show your spades at your second turn. Naturally, you plan to introduce hearts next.

Q. 2 - As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠Q 6 ♡K 9 5 ◇Q J 4 ♣A Q J 6 3
The bidding has proceeded:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1♣	1♡	1♠	Pass

What do you bid now?
A - You have a sound minimum opening bid, but are not good enough to wax enthusiastic yet. Your choices are one no trump or two clubs. We think it more important to show a balanced hand with a stopper in the enemy suit than to rebid a good five-card minor. Bid one no trump.

Q. 3 - Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠10 9 7 3 ♡8 4 3 ◇A 8 7 ♣K J 9
The bidding has proceeded:

NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
1♠	Pass	2♠	Pass
3♣	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A - Partner's bid of three clubs asks you for help in that suit to bid game. You could hardly have a better holding (or hand, for that matter), so to bid anything less than four spades would be a dereliction of duty.

Q. 4 - Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A Q 10 7 6 2 ♡Void ◇A J 6 ♣A K 6 3
The bidding has proceeded:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1♠	2♡	Dbl*	Pass

*penalties
What action do you take?
A - What started out as a most promising hand has just fallen apart. With partner short in spades but long in hearts, your chances for game are practically nil. Since you are going to take four or five tricks in your own hand, pass and hope the penalty will be substantial.

Q. 5 - As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠7 ♡6 5 2 ◇K Q 10 6 ♣A K 7 6 3
The bidding has proceeded:

WEST	NORTH	EAST	SOUTH
3♡	4♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A - This is close. In theory, the hand is worth a try and, opposite a reliable partner, we would invite with five spades. At rubber bridge with a partner whose proclivities are unknown, we would take the sure profit by passing four spades.

Q. 6 - Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A Q 6 3 ♡A Q 8 7 ◇7 2 ♣K 9 5
The bidding has proceeded:

EAST	SOUTH	WEST	NORTH
1◇	Dbl	Pass	1♡
Pass	?

What action do you take?
A - Partner's simple response shows 8 points or fewer. Your hand has no 'body' so, even if partner is maximum, game will be a touch-and-go affair. To cater to all those hands where partner has a less-than-optimum holding, we would show a minimum double now by passing.

Chad Everett trades white coat for 'McKenna' wilderness series

BEND, Ore. — Chad Everett has traded in his white coat for the outfit of an outfitter to play the owner of a family-run wilderness tour company in the series "McKenna."

Everett loves working by Oregon mountains, sky.

Best known for the 1969-76 CBS-TV series "Medical Center," the 58-year-old Everett loves spending his working day beneath Oregon's soaring mountains and blue sky, even with the dust kicked up by horses and the pesky flies.

"When you're out with this panorama, everything's different," Everett said. "This isn't a job; it's a privilege."

Eric Close, 27, who plays Everett's son, says the adventure series, which ABC is putting up against "Seinfeld" on Thursdays this fall, is unusual in treating family as more important than action.

"Even during the action scenes they really incorporate the relationships," said Close, best known for the soap "Santa Barbara."

Bob Hawke, who was prime minister of Australia when Ronald Reagan was president of the United States, reveals in his memoirs — an excerpt was published Saturday in the Australia newspaper the Weekend — that he was "astonished" to discover that Reagan used cue cards at diplomatic meetings.

Visiting Reagan at the White House, Hawke made some comments about U.S. economic policy. "The president," he recalled, "with an ease which obviously came from long practice, thumbed through a number of cards held in the palm of his hand, found the appropriate one, read a couple of generalized sentences and then, turning to the Secretary of the Treasury, Donald Regan, said, 'Don, this is your area, perhaps you would like to respond to Bob.'"

When Hawke started to discuss foreign affairs, "Ron found the appropriate card, made a couple of broad observations, then passed the baton to George Shultz."

Hawke wrote that he was "astonished to see that he actually did operate this way."

TRUCKEE, Calif. — Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt got away from the heat in Washington, D.C., and went right up to a blazing 1,300-acre Sierra wildfire.

Babbitt joined the Tahoe Hotshots, an elite group of firefighters, Saturday morning and worked a 12-hour shift with them in steep, rocky terrain.

Dressed in full fire gear, including helmet, goggles and Smokey Bear bandana, he helped firefighters check around stumps for embers to mop up a fire contained only an hour before his arrival.

"It's important to make a statement to people out here risking their lives," Babbitt said. "These guys I'm with have worked a couple of 24-hour shifts in the last 50 or 60 hours."

Earlier this summer, Babbitt joined firefighters at blazes near Yakima, Wash., and Grand Junction, Colo.

"President Clinton told me once, 'I hope you're not getting singed out there.' I said, 'No, that only happens in Washington.'"

NEW YORK — It was only a matter of Time before a national poll would reveal that Americans think Michael Jackson and Lisa-Marie Presley-Jackson won't remain married long.

The biggest group in the Time-CNN poll released Sunday, 41 percent, said "less than a year." Fourteen percent said a year. Only 4 percent said "forever." Nine percent volunteered that they don't care.

The Yankelovich Partners poll of 600 adults has a margin of sampling error of plus or minus 4 percentage points.

BOOTHBAY HARBOR, Maine — Here's the yacht, where's the princess?

The 132-foot yacht that Princess Diana was staying on this week in Martha's Vineyard, Mass., was moored at Brown's Wharf Saturday. But a police dispatcher and other locals said there was no sign of the princess of Wales.

"It think it's just a rumor. The crew denies she's here. Usually, you would see someone poking around and I haven't seen anyone," said Timmy Brown of Brown's Wharf.

The Opal C. from London arrived at the summer resort town Friday evening and was expected to leave today, Brown said.

LEXINGTON, Ky. — The Kentucky Headhunters say they haven't forsaken their country roots while expanding their horizons by playing rock, blues, boogie, bluegrass, swing and honky tonk.

"We don't have a fiddle or anything, but we know how to use an outhouse," lead singer Mark Orr said in a recent interview.

In the past year, the five-man band released an album with bluesman Johnnie Johnson. And they will contribute a song on a 30th anniversary tribute album to the Beatles.

The group won the Country Music Association's Group of the Year citations in 1989 and 1990.

Angels end road trip with loss

Staff Report

SAN ANTONIO — Midland continued its desent in the Texas League Western Division Sunday by failing to hold a 3-1, sixth inning lead and falling to the San Antonio Missions 5-3. The loss ended the Angel's ten-game road trip at 2-8 and gives Midland a 19-34 second-half record, 53-68 overall.

Midland begins its final homestand of the season today at 7 p.m. when pitcher Dom Johnson (6-7, 4.60 ERA) goes against the West Division leading El Paso Diablos. Left-hander Ron Gerstein is the probable starter for El Paso.

Before a crowd of 5,735 in San Antonio, the Angels went out to a 3-1 lead in the sixth on back-to-back singles by Mike Wolff and Marquis Riley and an RBI hit by Larry Gonzalez. But Riley was thrown out at the plate on the play.

The Missions got four runs on six hits in the bottom of the inning to end the game's scoring. A double by Juan Castro and singles by Jay Kirkpatrick and Kash Beauchamp scored one run and chased Angel starter and loser Ryan Hancock (1-3) from the game.

James Martin then singled against Dean Locklear for a run and Ector Ortiz got a run scoring hits against David Holdridge.

The Missions Darren Dreifort allowed one earned run and struck out five over five innings. Reliever and winner Dan Hubbs (3-4) struck out four over three innings.

The Angels scored a run in the first on doubles by Riley and Tim Harkrider. In the third a Midland run scored when J.D. Ramirez was hit by a pitch, making it 2-1 Angels.

Midland's leader in on-base percentage, Chris Pritchett, missed his second game in a row as one of several Angels serving separate suspensions for an on-the-field melee in Shreveport last month.

Dream Team II earns expected gold medal

■ World Basketball

TORONTO (AP) — Dream Team II put the gold-medal game to bed early.

The United States made 16 of its first 17 shots and led Russia 42-16 Sunday on the way to a 137-91 victory that gave Dream Team II the World Championship of Basketball.

The Americans made a habit of slow starts in their first seven games of the 16-team, 11-day tournament, but there was none of that in the title game.

After scoring just 40 points in the first half of Saturday night's 97-58 semifinal victory over Greece, Dream Team II matched that just 8:19 into the final and went on to its highest point total of the tournament. Dream Team I's highest production was 127 points in the 1992 Olympics.

Russia, which lost to the United States 111-94 Friday night, was coming off an emotional 66-64 semifinal victory over favored Croatia, a game that ended just 15 hours before tip-off Sunday. The Russians also played without their best big man, Andrei Fetisov, who was not in uniform because of an injured right ankle.

Derrick Coleman, starting for just the third time, got the Americans going with a 3-pointer and a three-point play in the first minute of the game, and Joe Dumars followed with another 3-pointer for a 9-0 lead.

Coleman scored all of his 13 points during the 42-16 burst that started the game. After shooting 37 percent in the first half of the lackluster semifinal victory over Greece, the United States shot 71.8 percent (28-for-39) in the first half and led 73-40 at halftime.

Dominique Wilkins, the oldest American player at 34, led the United States with 20 points. Shaquille O'Neal, who finished as the team's leading scorer with an 18.0 average and was tournament MVP, scored 18 in the final game, although he missed three 3-point attempts in the late going.

Alonzo Mourning scored all of his 15 points in the second half, and Shawn Kemp finished with 14.

Sergei Babkov scored 22 points, Mikhail Mikhailov 19 and Sergei Bazarevich 17 for Russia, which finished 6-2 in the tournament, with both losses coming to the United States. The former Soviet Union handed the Americans their most infamous defeats in the 1972 and 1988 Olympics.

The latter loss, more than any other, led to the acceptance of NBA players into international competition. That vote by FIBA, the international governing body, led to the original Dream Team's appearance in the 1992 Olympics.

Will survives playoff bogey

Associated Press

■ Golf Roundup

BEAVERCREEK, Ohio — Maggie Will survived the first playoff hole despite a bogey, then birdied the second to beat Jill Briles-Hinton and Alicia Dibos in the inaugural Children's Medical Center LPGA Classic on Sunday.

Will, 29, of Whiteville, N.C., rolled in a 15-foot birdie putt to close out the playoff and collect $52,500 from a purse of $350,000.

It was the third victory in her six-year career and her first top-10 finish since 1992.

Her third straight round of 2-under-par 70 got her to 6-under 210 and into the playoff. She made a 24-foot, side-hill birdie putt on the 18th hole to jump into a share of the lead.

Briles-Hinton had a two-stroke lead heading to 18, but she bogeyed the hole while Will and Dibos, the 36-hole leader by one stroke, each birdied to force extra holes.

Beth Daniel, the tour's No. 2 money-winner, missed a 10-foot birdie putt on 18 that would have gotten her in the playoff. Her final-round 71 left her a shot back at 5-under along with Tracy Kerdyk, who had a closing 68.

On the first playoff hole, Dibos put her approach 30 feet left of the pin and in the first cut of rough. Will's approach was pin high but landed in a large sand trap right of the green. Briles-Hinton, after a huge drive, knocked a 7-iron to the back fringe.

Will blasted out to within 6 feet and missed the par putt. But she stayed in the playoff when Briles-Hinton and Dibos each three-putted, Dibos missing a comebacker from 4 feet and Briles-Hinton an uphill 8-footer.

It was Will's second bogey of the tournament. She had double bogeyed the 14th hole in the first round.

On the second playoff hole, Will drove into perfect position on the 368-yard, par-4 dogleg 10th and hit her approach to 15 feet.

Dibos' approach ended up in the front trap, and she blasted out to 5 feet. Briles-Hinton hit through the green and chipped back to within 5 feet.

Will ended the tournament by holing the 15-footer for birdie.

Judy Dickinson also had a 68 to finish alone at 4-under 212. Deb Richard, Ellie Gibson, Rosie Jones and Shelley Hamlin were all at 3-under 213. Richard shot 67, Jones 72 and Hamlin 73.

PGA Seniors

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. — Tony Jacklin, just five weeks removed from his 50th birthday and playing on a sponsor's exemption, shot a 4-under-par 68 and won the Senior PGA Tour's rain-shortened First of America Classic.

The event was shortened to 36 holes when rain washed out Saturday's round.

Jacklin, the 1969 British Open champion and 1970 U.S. Open winner, beat Dave Stockton by one stroke in only his fourth start on the Senior Tour.

It was his first win on U.S. soil since the 1972 Greater Jacksonville Open and his first professional win since the 1982 Sun Alliance PGA Championship.

Jacklin, two strokes off the lead when play began, finished with an 8-under 136 total. His second 68 included an eagle on the 513-yard, par-5 13th hole at Egypt Valley Country Club.

"This is great," said Jacklin, who earned $97,500. "I am just so happy. I can tell you I didn't expect to win this early."

Lee Trevino and Jim Albus shared fourth, two strokes behind. Trevino shot a 66 Sunday. Albus, who shared the first-round lead at 66 and was seeking his second straight victory, had a 72.

British Seniors champion Tom Wargo and Harry Toscano tied for fifth at 139, with John Paul Cain and Jimmy Powell another shot back.

Jacklin said a return to what worked for him in the past — and an accurate 2-iron — combined to give him his largest payday ever.

"I started working on some old swing thoughts last week in Boston," he said. "I was much smoother and much slower. I worked on my rhythm.

British Women's Open

WOBURN, England — Sweden's Liselotte Neumann, who won the U.S. Open on her first attempt six years ago, shot a final-round 72 to capture the British Open by three strokes.

Neumann's countrywoman, Annike Sorenstam, and Dottie Mochrie of the United States shared second place. Both shot 3-under-par 70s for four-round totals of 283 on the par-73 Woburn course.

"It's hard to say because that just kind of happened," Neumann said when asked to compare this triumph with her U.S. victory at Baltimore in 1988. "I feel like I am a much better player now and I have worked my way up to higher standard."

Neumann, whose 280 total was 12-under for the tournament, also was a three-stroke winner at the U.S. Open, where her closest competitor was Patty Sheehan.

Bowe escapes disqualification

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — It was a perfect punch — a short right uppercut.

It hit Buster Mathis in the face and ended the fight at 2:11 of the fourth round.

It also would have hit Riddick Bowe in the wallet if the former heavyweight champion had been disqualified for punching Mathis while Mathis was on one knee.

"We would have still gone on with the fight, but we would have had to readjust the contract," said Frank Maloney, manager of WBC champion Lennox Lewis, indicating that a disqualification would have reduced Bowe's purse of about $12 million for a challenge to Lewis.

"I think the commission did the right thing," Rock Newman, Bowe's manager, said of the no-contest ruling made by the New Jersey State Athletic Control Board after the fight ended. "It would have been outrageous to disqualify him."

Brian Lee, Mathis' manager, and a lot of the 3,024 fans in a Convention Center ballroom Saturday night, thought Bowe should have been disqualified.

"From our perspective, it was a delieberate foul, and it's not the first time it has happened with Riddick Bowe," Lee said. "In most states, that's a foul. A no-contest is certainly better than a loss."

Referee Arthur Mercante, a 75-year-old veteran of numerous championship fights, ruled the punch, which knocked Mathis onto his back, was deliberate.

Larry Hazzard, the board's commissioner, said disqualification was an option, but we determined in this particular case there should not be a disqualfication. The punch was intentional, but it was thrown in the heat of the battle."

"I went down on one knee," said Mathis, who was taking some hard shots from Bowe, especially a left hook to the body followed by one to the head. "Then everything went black."

"It was purely an accident, and I apologized for it," Bowe said.

Bowe, fighting for the first time since he lost the IBF and WBA titles in a rematch with Evander Holyfield last Nov. 6, won the first three rounds on the three official cards.

Another reason for ruling the bout a no-contest was "We felt we should not let Bowe win the fight because the referee ruled the blow was intentional," Hazzard said.

Mathis took the no-contest ruling calmly, simply saying he would like a rematch. Bowe said he was agreeable to a rematch.

"We have to see when the Lewis fight is going to take place," Newman said.

Although both Lewis and Bowe have agreed to terms, the match is anything but settled. First, Lewis must retain the title against American Oliver McCall Sept. 25 at London.

Also, the WBC must sanction the bout. The organization withdrew championship recognition from Bowe and bestowed it on Lewis after Bowe refused to defend against Lewis following his victory over Holyfield for the undisputed title Nov. 13, 1992. Before the WBC took its action, Bowe threw their championship belt into a trash can. Newman said Bowe no longer would recognize the WBC.

Newman now says he believe the WBC will sanction the match.

Chang routs old nemesis Edberg

■ ATP Championship

MASON, Ohio (AP) — Michael Chang won his second consecutive ATP Championship on Sunday, routing his former nemesis, Stefan Edberg, 6-2, 7-5 in a reprise of last year's final.

While Edberg was lethargic at first, Chang was relentless, winning the first 11 points and never letting Edberg back in the match.

"He's beaten me bad. He shows no mercy," Chang said. "If a guy's off that day, you take advantage of him."

Edberg, also a two-time winner at the $1.72 million ATP Championship, said he was mystified by his slow start.

"For some reason, I found it very tough to get going today," Edberg said. "He got the first set very easily, and you can't afford to do that against Michael."

Edberg called the first three games, in which Chang broke his serve twice, "a nightmare."

"I was frustrated, almost embarrassed," Edberg said. "But I kept going. Things got better. At least in the second set, things got better."

Each player held serve through the first 10 games of the second set. But Chang broke Edberg in game 11 and served out for the match.

Match point was a line call that Edberg disputed.

"You can see the mark on the court," he said.

But he did not argue the call.

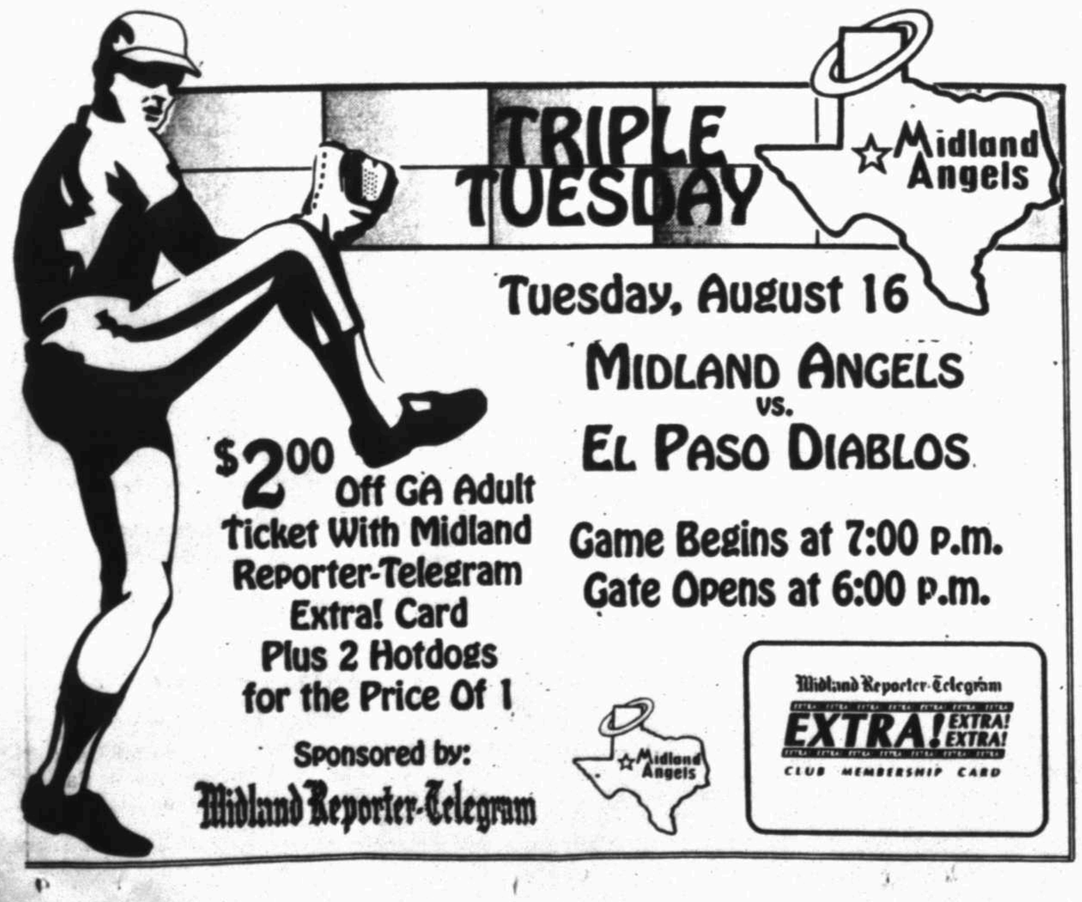

"The match was over," he said. "There is not a lot you can do. The guy in the chair isn't going to change the call from there."

For more than a decade, the ATP Championship has been a haven for Edberg. He's played the past 11 years and has never failed to reach at least the quarterfinals. He's been in the semifinals eight times, and Sunday's match was his sixth final.

Chang, a five-time winner on the ATP Tour this year, is the tournament's first repeat titlist since Mats Wilander captured the crown in 1983-84.

Edberg has an 11-6 career record against Chang, but Chang has won the past three meetings dating to last year's ATP Championship.

Edberg went into last year's final with little rest; after beating Pete Sampras in Saturday's semifinal, he played a doubles match that lasted well past midnight. He won that, and played two championship matches Sunday, losing both.

Baseball negotiators spend lazy Sunday

NEW YORK (AP) — Just another lazy summer Sunday as far as baseball negotiators were concerned.

Management leader Richard Ravitch played tennis and listened to music. Union head Donald Fehr went to his office and answered mail.

"It's a sad, lonely but peaceful weekend," executive council chairman Bud Selig said by telephone from his home in Milwaukee.

No new talks were scheduled. The sides said they intended to speak by telephone Monday but didn't know if it would result in a bargaining session.

"No communication across the planetary space," said Eugene Orza, the union's No. 2 official.

Forty-two games were wiped out on the first weekend of the baseball players strike. If the walkout continues through Friday, it would become the sport's second-longest in terms of canceled games.

Ravitch repeatedly says he will "leave no stone unturned" in an effort to arrive at a settlement.

Speaking of Stones, Mick Jagger even took time to comment on baseball's eighth work stoppage since 1972.

"We're the only stadium act that's not on strike," he said as the Rolling Stones played Friday night at Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, N.J.

Players, meanwhile, fanned out across the country. Many went to golf courses over the weekend and worked at their favorite leisure activity.

"I'd say the chances are better of me breaking 90 today than hitting .400," San Diego's Tony Gwynn said as the weekend began.

Organizers of a celebrity tournament next weekend in North Falmouth, Mass., said Cincinnati Reds manager Davey Johnson would play and hoped they'd be able to get Roger Clemens and Tom Glavine, too.

On Sunday night, Kansas City Royals were set to join their wives in a fashion show.

In Springfield, Ill., for a horse auction, New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner backed off from his statements earlier in the week that owners should join Ravitch at the bargaining table. Steinbrenner and Colorado Rockies owner Jerry McMorris both said management should have people at the table who have invested in the game.

Baseball parks, like this one in St. Louis, remained empty Sunday as major league players continue their walkout.

"It was merely a suggestion. That's Bud Selig's decision to make," Steinbrenner said. "I'm a trooper behind him."

Steinbrenner praised McMorris as one of baseball's best new owners and said he should be on the negotiating team if owners are included.

A former owner, Charlie Finley, predicted owners won't get the salary cap they're demanding from the union. He said owners will need cash to repay bank loans.

"I foresee enough owners to be concerned about making payments on their clubs that they're going to have to give in at the end," Finley said. "They've done it so many times before."

In Washington, Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell said he doesn't think the Senate should consider stripping the sport of its antitrust exemption.

"No, I don't believe so," Mitchell said. "We're dealing with health care and crime, which we're going to have to deal with, which will take all of our time."

Rice believes they traded up for Ken Hatfield

By Neal Farmer
N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — There are some things, at first glance, that do not appear to go together.

Examples: Mr. and Mrs. Michael Jackson, Russia and the United States, and highly successful football coach Ken Hatfield and victory-starved Rice University.

But, upon further review, things might work out well for all involved.

While Hatfield's success and Rice's struggles might seem to clash, football people think he'll fit in just fine here at Rice.

"Ken Hatfield is a good fit for anyone," said University of Texas coach John Mackovic, who was a student assistant at Army with Hatfield. "Kenny is a quality citizen who cares about his student-athletes, works hard and can be trusted."

When Rice athletic director Bobby May needed a replacement for coach Fred Goldsmith, he chose Hatfield because of what he stands for as well as what he has accomplished.

Hatfield lives his life on the high road, trying to make sure student-athletes follow the rules and graduate. His teams at Arkansas graduated more than 70 percent of their players. His players at Clemson, where he coached for four seasons, were on schedule to graduate at a similar rate. And he won conference championships at both schools.

Some Rice followers thought one of the school's darkest days was when Goldsmith, a former assistant under Hatfield at Arkansas, suddenly left Rice for Duke. Goldsmith had helped engineer back-to-back winning seasons at Rice for the first time since 1960-61.

Now, Rice officials secretly believe they traded up, switching Goldsmith, the student, for Hatfield, the teacher.

There is a precedent for Hatfield's presence at Rice. The Owls' greatest football coach, Jess Neely (with a 144-124-10 record from 1940-66), came to Houston from Clemson.

Hatfield's Arkansas teams finished second for four years in a row and won the Southwest Conference title the next two, and yet he left Arkansas — his alma mater, where he was an All-American — for Clemson.

He usually shies away from the subject, but relations between Hatfield and his former coach, Arkansas athletic director Frank Broyles, were growing more strained each year.

Razorbacks fans booed when his teams did not pass enough. Broyles told him to fire three coaches, which Hatfield refused to do.

"He still wanted to coach," Hatfield said. "But he didn't want the tough parts that go with it, like recruiting. I told him he ought to fire me and go back to coaching, but he never did. It was a frustrating time."

When he got to Clemson, Hatfield thought he had discovered heaven on earth. The fans, resources, facilities and location were the stuff of which he had dreamed.

"I really envisioned Clemson as the Penn State of the East Coast," he said.

But after winning an Atlantic Coast Championship and starting to see players graduate, he had a meeting with the university president, athletic director and board of trustees last November.

"We decided the wording would be a mutual separation — a no-fault divorce," Hatfield said. "I asked them to name one thing we had not done in the four years I was there that they had wanted. And they said nothing.

"Then, I asked them why they were faltering in their commitment to do the things they told me — and they couldn't answer and didn't answer."

Some have suggested Hatfield's hiring was a quick fix to stave off the NCAA wolves when Clemson was caught cheating under Danny Ford — who, ironically, is now head coach at Arkansas.

Listening to Hatfield is similar to listening to a Baptist minister; he is a master storyteller with lots of emotion and arm movements sprinkled throughout his talks, and a joke at the end that usually has a moral.

Hatfield started his television shows at Air Force and Arkansas with a brief Bible verse. He said he has no plans to use verses on his Rice TV shows and recoils at the suggestion that he is using coaching as a bully pulpit. While his beliefs are strong, it is because faith is the foundation of his life, he said.

Hatfield doesn't force players to attend church services or Fellowship of Christian Athletes meetings.

"The only thing I do is once a year, I share my own life," Hatfield said. "I tell them that when they go to college, they are going to grow physically, emotionally, spiritually and mentally. Take time to use this environment for new ideas and see what you really believe about these things. And grow."

His new team has a 28-game losing streak against the University of Texas. The Owls haven't beaten Texas A&M since 1980. Can Hatfield build excitement and improve the results at Rice?

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has an opening on one of its few "Special Allowance" routes. This larger route receives a $50 check each Friday in addition to the regular monthly route profits. The route is in the Washington Park area.

As with all newspaper distributorships, this opportunity requires a 7 day a week commitment (when you go out of town, you must arrange a substitute for yourself) and it is early morning work.

Newspaper distributorships provide great supplemental income for anyone willing to work early morning hours. These routes require a small deposit.

Apply in person or contact the Circulation Dept.

310 General Help Wanted

Distributorships Now Available

PART-TIME INCOME OPPORTUNITY

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has early morning routes which need to be filled with dependable individuals with reliable transportation. Often asked questions:

➡ Is it worthwhile for adults also?

YES! 95% of our Distributors ARE adults! Morning Routes are attractive for:

★ ADULTS who have fulltime jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job!

★ MOTHERS who can't justify a small job AND daycare, because as a Distributor, you don not need daycare!

★ COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!

★ SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added retirement income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends!

➡ How much money can I make as a Distributor?

Depending on the size of the route(s), from $350 to $800 monthly, in some cases...even more!

➡ OK...but how long does it take?

The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, depending on the size of the route(s). Also some time is needed each month to collect from subscribers. Many Distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in the subscribers' papers and having payments mailed to them. Some collecting in person will be necessary though, particularly on some routes more than others.

➡ When do the papers have to be delivered by?

Papers must be on the yards by 6 am Monday-Friday, and 7 am on weekend mornings.

➡ Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, most Distributors do take days off by finding a friend, family member, or another Distributor to substitute for them!

➡ What else?

A small deposit is required.
