How's That? Crickets

Q. Is there a reason for the recent increase in crickets?

A. Yes, according to County Extension Agent Don Richardson. "We have had an exceptionally good cricket egg hatch due to the wet weather. And there has been an abundance of food and cover available this year. Crickets are primarily night feeders and they have reached maturity that's why we are hearing and seeing them more. They should disappear in a month to six weeks," said Richardson.

Another hurt when hit by a motorcycle

About 24 hours after a pedestrian was struck and killed by a motorcycle this weekend, another pedestrian was hit by a motorcycle, but was not seriously injured.

Oscar Jackson III, 21, 910 N.W. Fourth St., was treated and released from Scenic Mountain Medical Center, a hospital spokeswoman said.

He was injured in an accident at Scurry and Eighth Streets at 9:03 p.m. Saturday.

The motorcycle operator, Benjamin F. Deanda Jr., 23, 400 N.W. 11th St., also was treated and released from Scenic Mountain Medical Center, the spokeswoman said.

The accident occurred almost 24 hours after Refugia Torres Moncada, 87, 3208 W. Ninth St., was killed at 9:19 p.m. Friday as she was crossing the 3100 block of West Highway 80.

The Scurry and Eighth streets accident occurred when Deanda was driving a 1982 blue Honda motorcycle north on Scurry Street in the dark without headlights, police reports said.

He struck Jackson, who was walking on the east side of the road, the reports said.

Deanda was arrested on charges of driving while intoxicated, no motorcycle endorsement on his driver's license, no liability insurance, no vehicle registration, and defective headlights, police reports said.

Prison plan progresses after visit

By STEVE REAGAN
Staff Writer

City Councilman Johnny Rutherford and developers of a proposed privately-owned detention center in Big Spring are convinced a similar facility in Columbus, S.C., is the kind needed locally.

"It was very enlightening," Rutherford said of their visit to the center last week. "I was very, very impressed with the facility." He considers the Columbus center "state of the art" and the kind of facility wanted for Big Spring.

He said the prison had a campus appearance, but with higher security features, such as electronic fences and surveillance equipment.

Ed Davenport and Roy Burnes, partners in the plan, will meet with designers in Dallas Friday to discuss construction plans for the facility.

Estimates of construction costs are between $10 million and $12 million, Rutherford said. No date has been set to begin construction, but "everything's on track" for the project, he added.

Rutherford said he would meet with City Manager Mack Wofford and officials of McMahon-Wrinkle Airpark today to begin the process of leasing the land for the project.

He said land probably will be leased on a per-diem basis, with the city receiving a fee for each detainee assigned to the center — a figure Rutherford estimates will be $180,000 yearly if the facility is at capacity.

About 30 acres will be leased from the city, and the partners are planning on constructing four or five buildings of about 25,000 square-foot size, he said.

"If most people could see the Columbus facility, they'd definitely be in favor of this," Rutherford said.

"It's a matter of getting the plans drawn now," Davenport said this morning. "We're about a month away from getting a general contractor (for the project)."

He and Burnes will meet with officials of Pricore, Inc., in Dallas Friday. Pricore is the Nashville, Tenn. firm designing the Big Spring project.

Davenport said the purpose of the meeting is to determine a general contractor for the project, whether it be Pricore or some other firm.

"Everything's still on go for the project," he said. He said they are being careful in selecting a contractor because "not everybody can build one of these things."

Davenport noted that Pricore has estimated construction would take 10 months to complete. A better estimate should be available after the Friday meeting, he said.

City to check if all leaks fixed at pool

Renovation continues at the Comanche Trail Park swimming pool and should be finished by early November, said project coordinator City Councilman Johnny Rutherford.

In the 30 days since the renovation began, old equipment and water circulation lines have been removed from the pool, and the remaining lines have been pressure tested, he said.

The electrical system, which operates the pump and lighting, has been replaced with a more modern one, Rutherford said.

Workers expect to partially fill the pool for several days to check for remaining leaks, he said.

When all leaks are repaired, they will begin installing new plumbing, circulation lines, filters and automatic chlorinators, Rutherford added.

The pool was closed this summer to allow the city to use $35,000 in operations and maintenance money to match a state grant for the renovation.

Jose Ruiz Ruiz, left, David Hill and Mark Hoefs, inmates at the Big Spring Federal Prison Camp, form a pile of removed masonry at the Comanche Trail Park swimming pool Friday afternoon. Repairs will include replacing piping and the pumping system.

Anti-drugs task force receives county OK

By KERRY HAGLUND
Staff Writer

Howard County commissioners today signed a resolution supporting a 17-county Permian Basin drug task force.

Commissioners also discussed appointing two people to a 911 emergency board, accepted heavy equipment bids and were advised of a rise in prices for birth and death certificates.

The resolution authorizes the Howard County Sheriff's office to participate in the task force with the goal of reducing crime and apprehending drug offenders.

The sheriff's office will participate in the program in conjunction with the Criminal Justice Council of the governor's office, according to the resolution.

Howard County Sheriff A.N. Standard said today he has met with law enforcement representatives from Big Spring, as well as Borden, Glasscock and Martin counties concerning the task force.

Big Spring Police Chief Joe Cook was named to represent the four-county area at Midland task force meetings, the sheriff said.

The Permian Basin Planning Commission is seeking support from 17 West Texas counties before applying for a state grant to operate the task force, Standard said, adding that area counties appear to be pledging their support.

The sheriff's office may need to provide vehicles and manpower if COUNTY page 2A

Businesses facing asbestos issue

DALLAS (AP) — The U.S. Environmental Protection agency is expected to release a report in October that could trigger liability lawsuits over the use of asbestos in public and commercial buildings, observers say.

Industry observers say the report could lead to an EPA order forcing property owners to follow the same standards set for schools.

Until recently, the attack on asbestos focused on workers, manufacturers, schools and public buildings. Now it includes private offices and other privately-owned areas used by employees and the public, the Dallas Times Herald reported Sunday.

The EPA estimates about 735,000 buildings nationwide contain asbestos, and that removing it could cost as much as $100 billion during the next 25 years.

Asbestos is a fibrous mineral that is mined and used in many construction materials and other products. Between 1900 and 1980, an estimated 30 million tons of asbestos was used in the United States, primarily in building construction.

The material has been linked to various maladies, including asbestosis — chronic lung disease — and lung cancer.

Current law states commercial building owners only must remove or reduce asbestos when demolishing or renovating a building.

But shifting federal and real estate market attitudes could change that.

In 1982, the EPA required public and private schools to inspect their buildings for certain types of asbestos. Last year the agency required schools to locate all asbestos materials and remove or seal them. A number of school districts have sued manufacturers for recovery of the removal costs.

The lawsuits raise the possibility that owners of private buildings containing asbestos also could become the subject of asbestos lawsuits.

Meanwhile, market forces are putting pressure on the owners of buildings that contain asbestos.

Boys with virus begin class despite threats

ARCADIA, Fla. (AP) — Three hemophiliac brothers carrying the AIDS virus braved death threats and a boycott to return to class today under a court order as police patrolled their elementary school.

"The boys are excited to be back in school. They're under enormous pressure," said Bill Earl, an attorney for the family, who accompanied the brothers to Memorial Elementary School.

Ten-year-old Ricky, 9-year-old Robert and 8-year-old Randy Ray had been barred from school since last fall after testing positive for acquired immune deficiency syndrome, meaning that they had been exposed to the deadly virus.

The family arrived 45 minutes early in two cars for classes starting at 8 a.m. EDT, and one of the boys ran into school. Parents Louise and Clifford Ray, Earl and Principal Donald Knoche escorted the boys to their classrooms while plainclothes DeSoto County sheriff's deputies patrolled the corridors and grounds.

No protesters were present, and Knoche said he had no immediate figures on how many of the 700 children enrolled in the school were kept home because of a boycott called by a parents group, Citizens Against AIDS in Schools.

The group had called for a weeklong boycott to protest a federal judge's ruling Aug. 5 that reinstated the Ray children.

Clarence Champney took his son Carl, 10, to school. He said he discussed the boycott with his son, who will be in class with Robert Ray.

"It worries me, but it doesn't worry him. I have doubts and fears. I just had to go with what my child wanted," said the 33-year-old factory worker.

Delores Bush brought her four children, who are in kindergarten BOYS page 2A

Daily bread

A bakery in Johannesburg, South Africa, dumped 120,000 loaves of bread Monday on an open site where welfare agencies and pig farmers went to collect it. The loaves were dumped after the bakery was unable to deliver them because of an illegal strike by 350 workers who walked out of wage negotiations last week.

Employer cited on new INS law

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service has cited a swimming-pool chemical supply company for employing illegal aliens, the first such action under the new immigration law, officials said.

Because the citation issued Friday was only a warning, immigration officials declined to identify the firm.

INS investigators arrested nine illegal aliens at the suburban San Gabriel Valley firm, including at least three hired in violation of the employer sanction provisions, said INS agent Don McDole. The company employs 25 people.

"In future cases, if we conclude that a business is willfully violating the law, we can skip the warning and notify them that we intend to seek a fine," said Ernest Gustafson, director of the INS Los Angeles district. "We're looking for cooperation."

"We want employers to understand their responsibilities under the law," said INS Western Regional Director Harold Ezell. "We're dead serious about making this law work."

Employers are prohibited from hiring undocumented workers after Nov. 6, 1986, the date the immigration law went into effect. But the INS didn't begin enforcing the law until about three weeks ago. Businesses violating the law can be fined.

Texas man finds siblings after 57 years

PUEBLO, Colo. (AP) — How do you find two brothers and a sister whom you haven't seen in 57 years?

You go door to door, of course. Anthony Martinez, 57, of San Antonio, Texas, did just that, knocking on strangers' doors in the tiny community of Wattenburg. Later, he found himself at a south Denver intersection waiting for a contact.

On Friday, he was embracing long-lost siblings at the Pueblo home of Adrian and Jessie Martinez.

Steve Martinez, 71, of Denver, who welcomed Anthony at his home Wednesday, turned to his wife, Henrietta, the next morning and said, "Do you really think he's my brother?"

She responded: "He (Anthony) is the picture of your dad."

Steve said during a reunion with other relatives in Pueblo Friday that "it's like it isn't true. You see and hear it happen to others, but you ask yourself, 'Did it really happen?'"

The last time Adrian, 75, of Pueblo saw Anthony, he was a child, crawling on the floor at home in Wattenburg. Now, Adrian is retired after 35 years of civil service employment.

The family split occurred when their father, Gorgonio Martinez, separated from his second wife, Maria, who took Anthony and two other sons, to San Antonio.

Gorgonio's first wife, Victoria, kept Adrian, Steve and Juanita in Colorado.

Anthony had tried unsuccessfully three times over the past 28 years to locate his long-lost family. The fourth time proved to be the charm.

"I knew they existed, but I had never seen them before," he said. "We didn't know who to look for."

His Wattenburg search turned up Frank and Marcie Galicia, who knew people who might remember the Martinezes after more than 60 years.

Anthony, his wife, Margaret, and son were told to go to a Denver intersection where they met the people who took them to Steve.

The whole reunion started out as a Martinez family vacation in Estes Park. Anthony went to Wattenburg to locate his father's grave, an unsuccessful hunt.

"It's a load off my back and the end of a reoccurring dream to bump into my brothers — with a happy ending," he said.

Anthony's sister, Juanita Najer of Pueblo, maintained that she would have found him someday, anyhow. "If I had seen his face in a crowd I would have talked to him because of his resemblance to my father," she said.

Clifford Ray, center, leads his family into Memorial Elementary School this morning in Arcadia, Fla. Children, left to right, Robert, 9, Candy, 6, Ricky, 10, and Randy, 8, behind Candy, returned to school for the first time in a year following a federal court ruling. The three brothers test positive for AIDS virus anti-bodies.

Boys

"I don't think I have a decision to make. Everybody needs an education," she said.

The Rays kept their sons in seclusion Sunday after the family received four threatening telephone calls. One hysterical caller said, "Your children will die," and another threatened to burn down their house, according to Ray.

About 500 people attended a boycott rally Friday night. Group members said, however, they would not picket Memorial Elementary School or make any show of force when classes resumed.

"We want to bring about change in a constructive way," said Danny Tew, president of the group. "There is an immediate danger in our classroom. The school board has been out there working for us, but their authority has been usurped by the federal court system."

DeSoto County school officials banned the boys from classrooms last fall after the youngsters tested positive for antibodies to the virus that causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome. The Rays moved to Bay Minette, Ala., but when the records caught up to them, they returned here.

Doctors believe the brothers, all hemophiliacs, were exposed through plasma-based medication they take to clot their blood. They do not have AIDS or symptoms related to the disease.

Their parents went to federal court in Tampa claiming discrimination and asking a judge to resolve the highly emotional issue.

After listening to medical testimony, U.S. District Judge Elizabeth Kovachevich earlier this month ordered tests to see if the boys' parents or their 6-year-old sister Candy, all of whom are in close, personal contact daily, tested positive for AIDS exposure.

Kovachevich forced the school system to admit the boys when classes resumed. She also ordered a private tutorial summer-school program so they wouldn't lose ground academically.

The ruling renewed fears in this central Florida community of 10,000 that children attending school with the Rays would be exposed to the deadly, incurable disease.

The school district last week began workshops to try to ease concerns. Doctors and state health experts told parents that their children were not at risk through casual contact.

"Unless there's blood-to-blood contact or sexual activity, there's no risk," Dr. Jim Yarnes of the Florida Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services told about 100 people at a workshop Thursday.

Milton Kirby said County Attorney Tim Yeats has agreed to serve.

Big Spring, Coahoma and Forsan city councils are expected to discuss Tuesday the appointment of two more to represent the three cities, Dorton said.

In addition, one non-voting member will be appointed to represent area telephone companies, he added.

The board is expected to petition the county clerk to place the 911 issue on the Nov. 3 ballot.

County Clerk Margaret Ray advised commissioners the cost of birth and death certificates will increase from $5 to $7.50 Sept. 1.

City experiences doctor shortage

FREEPORT (AP) — Freeport officials say they're hopeful a New Orleans doctor will set up a family practice in the city which has seen no new physicians relocate there for 38 years.

After enlisting the aid of Brazosport Memorial Hospital officials for a search for doctors, Mayor Mark Vandaveer said the city of about 13,000, which has only two family practitioners, will give their new doctor a warm welcome.

After preliminary negotiations are completed, Dr. Nick Giannone, 34, who currently practices in New Orleans, will move to Freeport and could be practicing by mid-September, Vandaveer said.

Officials have had difficulty attracting doctors since the hospital in Freeport closed four years ago, said Dr. Gerald R. Perryman, 64, who runs an industrial clinic as well as a general practice.

Perryman said he has too many patients and is forced to turn many away.

Reference angers Hispanic leaders

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Some Hispanic leaders are upset that an article in Newsweek about Hispanics' preparations for Pope John Paul II's visit mentioned beer-drinking and barbecues instead of pious activities.

Cruz Chavira, District 15 director of LULAC in San Antonio, said he does not think Hispanics will be drinking beer and eating barbecue.

Pollution threatens space crafts

HOUSTON (AP) — An ever-increasing amount of space junk from dead satellites and rockets poses a threat to new craft placed in orbit, researchers say.

NASA scientists always have built spacecraft to withstand damage they might sustain from natural orbiting debris, such as small meteorites, but a proposed $31 billion space station is being designed to survive encounters with space trash for the next 20 years.

"The very term 'space' tends to conjure up an image of emptiness, distance," says Joseph Loftus Jr., the Johnson Space Center's assistant director for plans. "The notion you've got a debris problem in space sort of took a while to sink in."

Loftus says billions of tiny particles — byproducts of exploded rocket stages, such as paint chips — pose the greatest threat to man and machine in space. A window in the shuttle Challenger was replaced after a paint chip smashed into it during a 1984 flight.

Toxic waste plan angers residents

LONE STAR (AP) — A plan by this east Texas city's namesake and largest employer to build a hazardous waste incinerator on the southern outskirts of town has angered many residents.

Proponents say 100 jobs would be created from Lone Star Steel's construction of the facility, a significant number in an area of the state where one in four adults is unemployed.

The project, an $18 million to $25 million incinerator that would consume 75,000 tons of waste each year including solvents, pesticides, acids, waste oils and PCBs — could also breathe economic life into Dallas-based Lone Star Technologies Inc. It has been losing money since 1983.

But many residents of the area — a collection of small towns in the piney hills north of Longview — plan to fight the granting of state and federal permits. Three hundred are expected to attend an organizational meeting in a high school auditorium this week, says project opponent Earl Jones of Daingerfield.

Drug traffic frustrating police

TEXARKANA (AP) — Drug traffic along the Texas-Mexico border is well documented, but the trade along Texas' northern borders is no less frustrating to narcotics officers.

Law enforcement officials in a city that is part Texas and part Arkansas are hampered by a lack of money and manpower and say they are losing the war against trafficking.

"The problem with Texarkana is that it is so close to Dallas, Little Rock and Shreveport that you have small-time dealers that can go to Dallas to pick up an ounce of the dope and bring it back here and double their money," said police narcotics supervisor Willie Huff.

"We don't have a kingpin here that does all the dope dealing in Texarkana. But we've got a thousand people that are dealing dope that can go to Dallas and in two days, double their money."

Law clamps down on city speed traps

CLUTE (AP) — A new law limiting the amount of fines that municipal courts can retain on state highway speeding violations has some cities scrambling.

House Bill 581, which goes into effect Sept. 1, was passed in the regular session of the Texas Legislature as a means of removing the incentive for small cities to maintain speed traps as a major source of revenue.

Jones Creek City Secretary Anita McCoy said it is hurting cities like hers, which need the revenue to maintain law enforcement to protect residents.

"I think it's outrageous," McCoy told the Brazosport Facts newspaper. "We don't know what we're going to do. Right now we're looking at a way of surviving."

Specifically, the law allows municipal courts to keep $2 for every mile per hour the driver exceeded the speed limit. The law applies only to violations on state highways. The state treasurer is to receive any penalties in excess of the $2-per-mile fine.

For example, if a person were fined for going 10 mph over the speed limit, no more than $20 of the fine could be kept by the municipal court. The rest must be sent to the state.

The state keeps $10 of each fine for speeding now and will continue to collect the $10 plus any additional amount collected by cities exceeding $2 for each mph the speeder is going over the speed limit.

McCoy said she was told that the law is targeted at cities with a population of less than 5,000, "but that's the cities that need the money the most."

West Columbia Police Chief Earl Winebrenner said the law will have a significant effect on the amount of revenue West Columbia is allowed to keep from speeding fines.

However, Surfside Mayor Burt Strouse said Surfside will not be affected much by the new law because most of the speeding fine revenue that Surfside gets comes from County Road 257, which is not maintained by the state and therefore does not qualify as a state highway.

Brazoria Police Chief Theresa Guidry also said the law would not affect Brazoria's revenue much. But she said the reason was because little of the city's revenue is generated by speeding tickets.

However, Richwood Police Chief Glenn Patton said the law could really affect Richwood's speeding ticket revenue.

An analysis of the bill by the House Research Organization said the bill will primarily affect cities with less than 5,000 residents.

The analysis said speed traps exist all over the state, but "attention has been focused on the practices of certain police departments in counties adjacent to Harris County."

One of those cities, Splendora, a small town in east Montgomery County bordering U.S. 59, is reacting to the bill by shutting down its police dispatch unit, warrants division and municipal court.

A total of eight paid police officers will be laid off, leaving only two paid and two unpaid reserve officers.

Corporate raider adopts new strategy

DALLAS (AP) — T. Boone Pickens Jr.'s reputation was built on takeover attempts in the oil and gas industry.

Now, after puzzling Wall Street with forays into defense stocks, the Amarillo oilman and his Mesa Limited Partners, are taking aim at a mining company with oil and gas interests.

A few weeks after Mesa unitholders amended their partnership agreement to allow Mesa to pursue business activities outside the oil and gas industry, the group in June filed notice that it intended to acquire more than $15 million of Seattle-based Boeing Co.'s common shares.

Mesa also sought permission to buy as much as 15 percent of the aerospace and defense company's stock. Boeing made the disclosure public in late July.

This month, Mesa also filed notice under the Hart-Scott-Rodino antitrust act that it wanted to buy $15 million of Singer Co., a Stamford, Conn.,

aerospace electronics and consumer products maker. It also

"It was pretty much following Boone's strategy of looking for an undervalued stock, generating interest, getting the price up and then selling when it's up," said Janet Dzwierzynski, an analyst at Duff & Phelps Inc. in Chicago.

asked permission to buy up to a 15 percent stake.

"I was very surprised at the recent developments, particularly in Singer and Boeing," said Michael W. Lamb, president of Wealth Monitors, a Kansas City, Mo., investment research firm.

"I find it very difficult to understand what he's doing there other than trying to capitalize on his own notoriety," said Lamb.

"Generally, his style is one (target) at a time," said Lamb. "For him to go after Boeing and then suddenly go after another company in the defense industry and then another — there's a pattern that isn't consistent with the past."

Analysts believe that Mesa made the Boeing and Singer investments for short-term gains and wasn't really interested in takeovers. Many analysts considered the stocks of both companies undervalued and have touted them as takeover candidates.

She said that strategy took Pickens outside the oil industry because "most energy stocks are overvalued, if not fully valued."

Boeing and Singer stock soared after the disclosures that Mesa had taken shares in the companies.

Most recently, Pickens led a new general partnership called Ivanhoe Partners in taking a 9.1 percent stake in Newmont Mining Corp. of New York. The partnership is owned 45 percent by Mesa; 30 percent by NRM Energy Co. LP of Dallas; and 25 percent by Harbert Corp. of Birmingham, Ala.

The investor group last week boosted its stake to 9.95 percent, raising Wall Street concerns that Pickens and the other companies may be making a takeover run at the firm.

Newmont has interests in gold, coal, oil and gas and other natural resources. Analysts said the company is a traditional type of Pickens target.

Opinion

Views of other Texas papers

Here is a sampling of editorial opinions from around the state.

Saragosa thefts may create stigma

Apparently, Saragosa did not escape vultures in the wake of a May tornado that virtually wiped out the small West Texas community.

But the birds of prey appear to be the human kind.

Unconfirmed reports of missing donations have been circulating since truckloads of food, furniture and clothing started pouring in.

Only recently have those rumblings become loud enough for the general public to hear.

The thought that a person or people would be callous enough to steal goods intended to ease the suffering of tornado victims is appalling.

But the long-term effects of such thefts could have even more impact.

The thousands of Good Samaritans who came to the aid of Saragosans couldn't be blamed for having doubts about the fruits of their efforts. It would be easy to say "why bother" the next time tragedy strikes...

A thorough investigation of missing donations — by an outside agency — is in order. By getting to the bottom of the apparent thievery, officials can remove a stigma from a community that has suffered enough.

Mexican inflation seems unaltered

In one of those smoke and mirrors presentations in which the Mexican government specializes, the treasury secretary announced that the government remains committed to holding the line on price rises — while simultaneously admitting that inflation will exceed forecasts this year.

Since the inflation rate projections were already painful to consider — 75 to 85 percent — that means another round of extreme suffering for the incredibly patient

Mexican people.

Obviously it means suffering — more suffering — for Mexico's population. It means increased pressure to cross into the United States. It means additional difficulties for border businesses in this country.

The United States should offer its assistance, of course — but without fundamental change within Mexico, there is little chance lasting improvement can be made in the condition of the Mexican people.

The Paris News

Says MHMR lacks care and concern

After 13 years of foot-dragging, the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation finally has been put on notice that it must get its act together.

U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders held the department and the Fort Worth State School in contempt of court for failing to provide adequate care for retarded patients.

He ruled that more state funding is needed, but he noted that supervision of residents has been woefully inadequate.

Money is a large part of the problem at the Fort Worth State School and at other institutions operated by the MHMR department.

But the tragic truth is that care and concern also are lacking, as evidenced by the poor leadership and lax supervision by the state agency. Judge Sanders should issue stern orders to the agency to carry out the reforms it agreed to long ago.

Dallas Times Herald

Forgetting can be part of healing

Rudolf Hess was the last of the major Nazi leaders and for more than 20 years the only prisoner in Spandau prison, built to hold 600. His death should mark the end of an expensive dispute — between France, Britain and the United States on one side and the Soviet Union on the other — on the aging, expensive prisoner. More importantly, it is both a time to remember and a time to forget.

Hess was properly convicted for his role in planning and conducting Nazi aggression. We must always remember that insane, murderous regime and the crimes it committed and be steadfast in our determination never to let it happen again. But it can be an occasion to put behind us the hatreds that resulted.

If we can do both, perhaps we can make this a better world.

The Houston Post

Calls budget amendment needless

President Reagan, who has never submitted a balanced budget during his two terms, continues to press for a constitutional amendment requiring one and goes so far as to suggest that if Congress doesn't produce an amendment there could be a constitutional convention.

That's two bad ideas in one breath. Fortunately, there are signs that people are beginning to understand that. It would still be best if states that have indicated support for a convention would repeal their support.

Reagan's balanced budget amendment is unnecessary. All any president has to do is submit a balanced budget, yet he has never done so and it is becoming clear that the reason is that he doesn't want to.

He really believes one can spend his way out of debt... The amendment push is a dodge to obscure his incredible spending spree.

Austin American-Statesman

Expense of hearings is scandalous

Ollie North & Co. diverted $3 million, a tidy sum, from the Iranian arms sales to the Nicaraguan rebels, but investigators of the Iran-Contra affair have already spent more than $4 million, and their total is still rising.

The $4 million-plus sum, reached last month, does not include such extras as hiring guards for the congressional hearings, building a special rostrum for committee members to sit on and printing transcripts from 11 weeks of testimony.

The House panel has a $1.95 million budget and expects to spend "the bulk of the money." The Senate committee projects its final cost at $2 million.

The Iran-Contra matter is often called a "scandal," and it may be one. However, the same word can be applied to the way the probes are going through the public's money.

Japanese firm took secrets of U.S. technology for years

By JACK ANDERSON and DALE VAN ATTA

WASHINGTON — A principal culprit in the sale of Toshiba propeller-milling equipment to the Soviet Navy — C. Itoh & Co. — has a history of leaking Western military technology to Moscow.

A spokesman for C. Itoh, one of Japan's biggest international trading companies, insists it didn't realize the Toshiba transaction was illegal until contacted by Japanese investigators. Evidence we have gathered from the Japanese press and other sources raises serious doubts about this claim.

We reported, for example, that C. Itoh had been identified three years ago in a secret CIA report as one of five Japanese firms suspected of illegal high-technology sales to the Soviets. The CIA said C. Itoh and the other four should be monitored closely for such illicit but highly profitable deals.

Japanese authorities have identified C. Itoh as Toshiba's intermediary in the $17 million propeller-milling equipment sale. The equipment enables Soviet submarines to operate so quietly they're extremely difficult to detect, and overcoming this advantage could cost U.S. taxpayers billions of dollars.

While Toshiba has drawn severe punishment from the U.S. and Japanese governments, C. Itoh has escaped with nothing more than a three-month ban on sales to the Soviet bloc.

Although it's becoming clear that alarm signals were ringing in Japan for nearly three decades about C. Itoh, it was only recently when Sen. Alan Dixon, D-Ill., got wind of them.

An internal memo in Dixon's office, reviewed by our reporter Gary Clouser, reveals that a confidential source of the senator's reported that "the Soviet Union has had a long history" of working with the Japanese trading firm to obtain Western secrets.

Jack Anderson

Additional information, primarily from Japanese press accounts, was provided to Dixon. It includes the following allegations:

• In 1959, a 30-page classified document describing a Boeing ground-to-air missile was taken from the Japanese Air Staff Office. The Pentagon had sent the document to U.S. allies to promote sale of the missile.

An official Japanese investigation resulted in an admission by C. Itoh that one of its top executives had "privately borrowed" the document and made three copies. The Soviets subsequently obtained a copy of the classified document, though C. Itoh never admitted responsibility for that.

Two Air Staff officers were forced to resign as a result of the incident — and both were hired by C. Itoh or a subsidiary.

One of them was an Imperial Army Military Academy classmate of Ryuzo Sejima, the C. Itoh managing director in charge of military sales at the time. A memo written for Dixon identifies Sejima as the executive who "borrowed" the classified missile document.

• In March 1968, a Japanese military officer was charged with giving C. Itoh a classified document on electronic communications, and was suspected of delivering other classified military information to the company.

• Sejima himself, though a

"very close friend" of Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone "and a member of his kitchen cabinet," according to the Dixon memo, has come under intense scrutiny for alleged ties to the Soviet Union.

One story on Sejima, in the Japanese monthly Bungei Shinju, implies he may have collaborated with the Soviets when he became a prisoner of war at the end of World War II.

Dixon's investigation of C. Itoh has led him to sponsor legislation that would indirectly penalize C. Itoh or any foreign firm that sells restricted technology to the Soviet bloc.

ASBESTOS AFTERMATH — The danger of airborne asbestos as a possible cause of cancer has been so widely publicized you'd think no one would be unaware.

Incredibly, according to the Environmental Protection Agency's inspector general, the agency's own inspectors apparently don't take the warnings about asbestos seriously. Not only did some EPA inspectors in a six-state region around the Great Lakes fail to supervise asbestos removal strictly in a recent six-month period, they didn't even wear adequate protective equipment.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Superpower status often requires a certain degree of patience with the impertinence of international troublemakers, but the Hezbollah religious fanatics have been pushing their luck lately.

During a recent demonstration in Lebanon, the Iranian-backed fundamentalists recently shouted well-rehearsed anti-American slogans such as "You are threatening us with your fleet; remember the burial ground of the Marines in Lebanon."

Someone should remind the rousers of this rabble that earlier tyrants — Adolph Hitler comes to mind — learned that American patience is not limitless.

LA LA land gunfights no surprise

By LEWIS GRIZZARD

You may have been wondering why people in Los Angeles have started riding around on freeways shooting at one another.

It really should be no puzzle. For one thing, there are more crazy people in Los Angeles than anywhere else in the country.

For another, you know how people are out West. For years they rode around on horses and shot at buffalo. When the buffalo were all gone, they started riding around on horses shooting at Indians.

When the Indians were all shot up, they started riding around on horses shooting at each other. Automotive gunplay was bound to happen sooner or later.

All over the rest of the country people get mad at other people while driving on the freeway, but the rest of us are able to vent our anger without the use of firearms.

We curse other drivers, we use the universal digital expression of displeasure and we occasionally go so far as to pull over to the side of the road and get into a fist fight.

But we rarely get involved in gunfights at the Asphalt Corral. That, however, may not last.

You know where most of the trends start in this country, don't you?

California, of course. These are the people who gave us eating raw fish and electing Ronald Reagan to public office.

Who is to say freeway shootouts won't be the next bit of ingenuity to make its way east from LA LA Land.

In the event that should happen, you will want to know how to keep yourself from eating lead while driving over to your mother's house for dinner.

The best way to do that is to learn to avoid those drivers who might be out for an evening's shoot.

These include:

- Anybody driving a four-wheel vehicle that is jacked up over those huge tires that look like they came off a 747.

- You have to be a little strange to drive anything like that in the first place, and you have to wonder if the reason somebody purchased such a vehicle was because it's easier to hit a target when you've got the high ground.

- Anybody driving a vehicle with any of the following bumper stickers: When guns are outlawed, only outlaws will have guns. I'll give up my gun when they pry my cold dead finger off the trigger. Or, Confirm Judge Bork.

- Anybody with one of those silly yellow signs in their back window that says, "Baby on Board." Gun nuts get very close to their guns. Baby could be an AK-47.

- Anybody driving while wearing a camouflage outfit, a tattoo on any part of the anatomy that says "Born to Kill" or underwear that is too tight.

If we're lucky, of course, somebody will ride in L.A. in a silver Porsche and shoot it out with these crazies and clean up Dodge before any of this spreads.

This person would need to be brave, bold, innovative and know where to lay his hands on some heavyweight firepower.

Ollie North for marshal.

Joan Rivers continues

NEW YORK — Joan Rivers says she doesn't want any sympathy because of her husband's suicide and is planning to resume work next month at the Emmy awards.

The comedian said she should have seen the warning signs that preceded the suicide of her 62-year-old husband, Edgar Rosenberg, who killed himself with Valium and alcohol on Aug. 14.

In an article in the Aug. 31 issue of People magazine, she said she'll resume her work Sept. 20 as a presenter at the Emmy awards. She is signing with "Hollywood Squares" and has 18 months more on her contract with Caesars Palace.

"I don't want a warm hand on my shoulder," she said. "I don't want sympathy audiences."

Fat removal debated

HOUSTON — Housewife Patsy Howell wanted to look slimmer in a bathing suit. Lawyer Lannis Temple wanted to get rid of fat deposits around his waist.

After undergoing liposuction, or fat removal surgery, Temple was pleased with the result. Mrs. Howell was dead of a massive infection.

Temple now is representing Mrs. Howell's family in a lawsuit filed against the doctor who performed her surgery.

"It is a safe operation if you follow safe procedures and have been treated properly," said Temple, who had the operation done in a plastic surgeon's office.

Man executed for rape

ANGOLA, La. — An accountant who raped and murdered his secretary because he feared she would expose his embezzlement of $84,000 was executed early today in Louisiana's electric chair, professing his innocence.

Sterling Rault, 36, was pronounced dead at 12:16 a.m., according to C. Paul Phelps, secretary of the state Department of Corrections.

"I would like the public to know that they are killing an innocent man at this time," Rault said before becoming the eighth person executed in Louisiana this summer and the 15th to be put to death in the state since it resumed executions in 1983.

He blew a kiss to Sister Mary Rault, his aunt who is a Roman Catholic nun and was one of his spiritual advisers. She bowed her head through the execution.

After he was strapped into the chair, he looked toward her and gave a thumbs-up signal. He held the signal until the first jolt hit at 12:10 a.m.

16,000 miners lose jobs

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The Anglo American mining conglomerate fired 7,000 black strikers today for defying back-to-work ultimatums, and the death toll in the 15-day-old walkout rose to six.

The mass firings at the No. 2 and No. 3 shafts of Anglo's Western Holdings gold mine in the Orange Free State raised to about 16,000 the number of miners dismissed during the National Union of Mineworkers' strike. All were fired in the past five days.

Anglo, the largest of the six companies targeted in the strike for a 30 percent wage increase, said "a significant number" of the roughly 12,000 strikers threatened with dismissal at two other gold mines and two coal mines had returned to work.

Three strike-related deaths were reported today, including one in a pre-dawn clash between supporters and opponents of the strike at Anglo's President Steyn gold mine in the Orange Free State.

Bobby Godsell, director of industrial relations for Anglo, said nine miners were injured in the fighting, including six when mine security fired rubber bullets to disperse the combatants. He called on the union to resume talks that broke off last week on reducing violence.

Johannesburg Consolidated Investments said a strike supporter was killed Sunday night at its Western Areas gold mine in western Transvaal province by "disgruntled workers who had become thoroughly disgusted at attempts to prevent them from working."

A company spokesman, J.J. Nel, said another miner was killed at Western Areas late Saturday when he tried to break up a fight between workers and strike supporters. Nel said 14 miners were injured.

Three previous deaths have been linked to the strike — a striker killed by security officers and two miners who authorities say may have been killed for defying the strike. The union says more than 320 strikers have been injured and 300 arrested.

although they are allowed under South African labor law, reported one other clash Sunday night. It said at least six strikers were injured when mine security fired rubber bullets and tear gas into a hostel in an attempt to force men back to work at the Kinross gold mine east of Johannesburg.

Gencor, the company which operates Kinross, denied this account and said tear gas was used only to "stave off attacks by strikers on employees that indicated they wished to return to work."

Godsell said Anglo viewed the decision by some strikers to return to work as "evidence that the strike has gone on long enough."

He called on the union to return to negotiations, but refused to say whether mine owners would talk about the wage issue.

Hess buried secretly

BERLIN — Former Nazi deputy fuhrer Rudolf Hess was buried secretly, his family confirmed today shortly after British officials said the 93-year-old prisoner hanged himself.

Also today, the Hess family lawyer said that Hess' 49-year-old son had suffered a stroke and was hospitalized.

Andrea Hess, the former Nazi leader's daughter-in-law, told The Associated Press today from her home in Munich, "I can confirm that the burial of Rudolf Hess has taken place." She declined to say where or when.

She was reached for comment after Karl Walter, mayor of Wunsiedel, the Bavarian town where Hess was to have been buried, said Hess had been buried in a secret location.

Motor launch capsizes

DHAKA, Bangladesh — A motor launch carrying at least 80 passengers capsized after smashing against a bridge column in a flood-swollen river, police said today.

Police and rescue officials told The Associated Press that about 12 people swam to safety and four were rescued by Chinese technicians working on construction of the Friendship Bridge on the Buriganga River, two miles from Dhaka's river port of Sadarghat.

"But some passengers may still be trapped inside the hull of the launch," they added.

Fire brigade officials working on salvaging the single-deck launch said the vessel had run out of fuel when it approached the bridge, and was smashed against the columns by the strong current in the flood-swollen river.

Churchgoers weep

HUNGERFORD, England — Hundreds of churchgoers wept and prayed Sunday for the victims of Britain's worst mass murder and for the quiet local man who turned into a killer on a sunny summer afternoon.

The Anglican, Roman Catholic and Methodist churches were packed as this small market town 60 miles west of London united in grief and remembered the victims of Michael Ryan's massacre Wednesday.

At the largest service, in the Anglican Parish Church of St. Lawrence, Trudy Pihlens read out the list of 16 victims killed and 14 wounded and then added: "And Michael Ryan, may God have mercy on his soul."

Relatives of some of those shot down clung to each other and almost everyone wept or fought back tears. A young woman, not related to any victim, collapsed and was helped from the church. A London Broadcasting Co. radio reporter said one member of the congregation cursed when Ryan's name was mentioned.

Fashion designer takes ABC camera crew to hometown

By the Associated Press
VICKSBURG, Miss. — Internationally known fashion designer Patrick Kelly brought an ABC "Good Morning America" camera crew home with him to Vicksburg. Kelly returned to Vicksburg on Friday to a celebrity's welcome from friends and family members at the home of his grandmother, Ethel B. Rainey. The royal treatment included dinner on the grounds with barbecued ribs, butter beans, corn, chocolate cake and watermelon.

The "Good Morning America" crew videotaped Kelly as he sat on the front porch of the house sketching designs, much as he began as a teen-ager. Ann Reynolds, producer of the segment, said the porch footage will be edited into tapes of a recent Paris fashion show and an upcoming show in New York City. The show will be telecast in September.

Since graduating from Vicksburg High School in 1972, where he was voted most popular, friendliest and best dancer, Kelly has seldom ventured back to his hometown. For the past seven years he has lived in Paris and worked in Japan, Germany and Italy.

His company, called Patrick Kelly, recently became part of Warnaco, a conglomerate which handles such clothing lines as Chaps, Christian Dior and Speedo.

HONOLULU — Cliff Robertson is in Hawaii to put the finishing touches on a script to a sequel of the 1969 film, "Charly," for which he won an Academy Award as best actor.

What's "Charly II" about? "I'm not going to tell you," he told a Honolulu newspaper reporter. "Suffice to say that we re-meet Charly, many years later, back in a playground, playing with a new generation of children."

"The first movie began and ended in a playground, symbolizing the central character's movement from mental retardation to near genius and back again. He has vague memories of that one year in his life."

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Steve Sanders, the newest member of the Oak Ridge Boys, says he's having a good time with the country-gospel music quartet.

"All of my dreams and fantasies I've had about this opportunity don't even come close to matching the great times I've already experienced as one of the 'Boys,'" Sanders said.

"I thought it would be tough at first, but it's been like gangbusters," he said.

Earlier this year, Sanders replaced veteran group member William Lee Golden, who was voted out of the foursome.

NEW YORK — Actor Mickey Rourke is distancing himself from his soon-to-be released movie about former IRA member Martin Fallon, saying he is "disappointed and ashamed of it."

Rourke, in a telephone interview with Irish America Magazine, said the American producers of the film, "A Prayer for the Dying," turned his character into a one-dimensional caricature.

The 34-year-old New York native, whose ancestors came from Ireland, said he worked long and hard to prepare for the part of Fallon, a disillusioned Irish Republican Army member who became embroiled in the assassination of an English gangster. Rourke said he even hired a native from Belfast to act as his technical adviser.

"He lived with me for four months. I really had to work on the accent. It's a kind of sing-song," Rourke told the magazine. "But I really wanted my character to sound like a Belfast man."

DEAR ABBY: With the recent concern about AIDS, I need to know the answer to this question: We women can use our common sense when choosing to have a heterosexual affair, but how do we tell the difference when it comes to a bisexual man? They are very difficult to recognize.

What are the signs to look for? Are there some specific behavioral patterns? How can one tell the difference between a homosexual and a bisexual man? Thank you.

NO NAME
DEAR NO NAME: I sought the advice of renowned psychoanalyst Dr. Judd Marmor, who has long been my chief psychiatric consultant. He said: "There is no consistent or dependable way to distinguish bisexual persons from heterosexual ones. They do not necessarily look different, or behave differently. They can even be good lovers."

"There is, however, one difference between bisexual and exclusively homosexual males. Exclusively homosexual men are usually unable or uninterested in responding sexually to a woman."

DEAR ABBY: Thank you for referring to whistling as "a joyful sound." I was shocked and dismayed at the number of readers who hated whistling. The complainants might be interested in knowing that many people who are renowned in other musical art forms are also whistlers.

For example, Patrice Munsell studied whistling as a child. She gave a whistling recital when she was 12, and at 14 it occurred to her that she might be able to sing as well as she could whistle.

Luciano Pavarotti is another fine whistler. He whistles his operatic scores to "warm up" before appearances.

I, too, am a whistler. There are many of us far less renowned who take whistling very seriously, and devote many hours of practice to whistling. We also invest a great deal of time and money to travel to distant locations to perform for people who appreciate superb whistling, and to promote whistling as an art form.

For your readers who want to whistle with the "whistling greats" or hear great whistlers perform, there are two large whistling conventions and competitions held annually: the National Whistlers Convention in Louisville, N.C., in April, and the International Whistle-Off in Carson City, Nev., in August. I love to whistle and have been whistling since I was 5. My favorite composer is Puccini.

DEAR ABBY: As a single mother who has just recently begun to date again, I am wondering if it is appropriate to assume that the gentleman who has asked me out will pay for my baby sitter. As my finances are very limited, not knowing could be the deciding factor as to why I may have to turn down the date. Do I dare to just ask him?

LOW ON FUNDS
DEAR LOW: Don't assume anything. And don't ask a gentleman if he plans on paying for your baby sitter. A sensitive man should offer to pay the baby sitter if he suspects that it will be a financial hardship on the lady to do so, and if he can better afford it. After a few dates, both parties should be able to talk candidly about such matters.

Kids Xchange an alternative for divorced parents

DALLAS (AP) — Without fail, at 6 p.m. every first, third and fifth Friday of the month, Bill Turner pulls up in a blue convertible to a house filled with toys and posters proclaiming "Kids Are People, Too."

Waiting inside is his 9-year-old daughter, Jennifer, who was delivered to the place by her mother, Pat, and stepfather, John Curtis, at 5:45 p.m.

Here, on the front porch of an old, two-story house in Oak Lawn, the children of divorced parents wait to be picked up by mothers and fathers who don't want to see, speak or be at the same place within 15 minutes of each other.

At Kids Xchange, everyone is on neutral ground.

"It's better than pulling into my ex-wife's driveway because I could always anticipate something tense happening," says Turner, a salesman for Tel Plus Communications. "We'd exchange a few words. Sometimes it would get nasty and emotional. It wasn't easy for Jennifer, either."

Turner and his ex-wife — who has custody of Jennifer — were married for five years when they divorced in 1979. Jennifer was barely a year old at the time. The couple has been using Kids Xchange — the only service of its kind in Dallas — for the past seven years. The cost is $30 for each exchange.

Pat, who remarried six years ago, says "the tension got severe" when her ex-husband used to pick up Jennifer at her Dallas home for a weekend visit. Worse, Jennifer would witness those confrontations between her parents, Pat says.

"It wasn't good for any of us. Not for me, not for Bill and most importantly, not for Jennifer. Through Kids Xchange, Jennifer has peace of mind and we all can carry on with our own lives," she says.

Ed Rodela, 43, the center's director and a psychologist, says children are often caught in a power struggle between divorcing parents. It was for that reason that 36-year-old Sarah Griego-Rodela, Rodela's second wife, started the Kids Xchange in 1982. Sarah had been having visitation problems with her ex-husband, Rodela explains.

Together the Rodelas have built their service, and added a second in Austin, into an agency that today gets referrals from divorce attorneys and family law judges. More than 200 divorced parents — several who live outside Texas and have to travel to Dallas to pick up a child for a visit — use the service in order to avoid words and fists during the exchange of a child from one ex-spouse to another.

Such confrontations witnessed by a child could lead to psychological problems for the youngster, Rodela says. "A child in such a case could start getting bad grades in school, develop behavioral problems and discipline problems. I remember a 4-year-old child who developed ulcers, another who had suicidal tendencies and several who became depressed," he says.

Because of the service's growth, the Rodelas moved Kids Xchange out of their home and into its own headquarters last February. The house has two playrooms to accommodate the 40 youngsters between 18 months and 17 years of age who are dropped off and picked up by divorced parents each weekend. In most cases, a child waits for 15 to 20 minutes before a parent arrives.

Kids Xchange also handles court-ordered controlled visits — cases in which the visiting parent is permitted to spend up to four hours with the child, but is not allowed to leave the premises. A kitchen is provided for parents to cook a meal.

Bill Turner leaves the Kids Xchange center with his nine-year-old daughter, Jennifer. The center offers ex-spouses a neutral place to exchange children without confrontation.

In supervised visits, a counselor accompanies the parent and child on trips to the zoo, a movie or McDonald's. Fees are $12 an hour with $3 tacked on for each additional child. The center also offers counseling to parents and children by one of three trained staff members.

"We're not a babysitting service or a day-care center," Rodela says. "We're neutral ground for parents who can't get along. There are no fights on our front porch and no put-downs are exchanged because our parents don't run into each other. If they do, they ignore each other or say 'Hello' and are on their way."

"Our main concern is always to protect the interests of the child. That's number one. We want to see the child react to a parent in a very warm, positive way," says Rodela, a former counselor with the Dallas County Family Court Services, which deals with cases involving parental conflicts over child visitation.

Almost all of the children dropped off at Kids Xchange are there because of court orders by judges or attorneys who recommended the services to parents involved in visitation disputes, Rodela says.

Judge Catherine J. Stayman of the 305th District Court says, "It's tragic that the service is essential, but we're living in a day in which there are so many custody arrangements being made between separating or divorcing parents who are in a volatile situation and the child is trapped in the middle. The nature of the service is one that is very valuable to the court system."

Judge Merrill Hartman of the 303rd Family District Court agrees. He has ordered the use of the Kids Xchange in many cases.

"When the parents are divorced the most frequent occasion to see each other is around the exchange of the children. If there's a history of violence between the parents and the parents are using the exchange of children to torment each other, then we order them to use the service. It's a very effective remedy. It's sort of like not having a cat and a dog in the same room," he says.

When ordered by the court, Kids Xchange will be used until both parents agree "they've got their anger in control," Hartman says.

Linda Hahn, manager of the county's Family Court Services, an agency that handles evaluations of custody and visitation disputes for the courts, says Kids Xchange keeps parents' tempers cool.

"In one family I worked with, there was extreme physical violence throughout the marriage. And during the couple's separation, the violence continued," Ms. Hahn says.

She says on more than one occasion, when the ex-husband went to his ex-wife's house to pick up his children for a visit, he dragged his ex-wife by her hair out of the house and then beat her on the front lawn in front of the children.

"The woman feared for her safety if he had any contact with her. So we set up a situation where he picked up the children from the Kids Xchange. It not only protects the adults, but also the children," Ms. Hahn says.

Robert McDermott and his ex-wife mutually agreed three years ago to use the service to exchange their 5-year-old son, Dillon. Since then, McDermott has picked up Dillon every other weekend. Before Kids Xchange, there was inconsistency in visits, he says. There also was a spat or two between the couple, he says.

"Both of us were experiencing bad feelings of the divorce every time we came into contact with each other and that was having an effect on Dillon," says McDermott, national marketing and sales director for Enviro-Med Clinics Inc.

"Using the place to exchange Dillon has been wonderful in that those feelings have been eased. I like the consistency and the lack of conflict."

Houston nurse hostage recalls forced marches

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Houston nurse held hostage with five other missionaries and a toddler for more than three months by rebel forces in Mozambique says what she'll remember most about the ordeal was the forced marches at night.

But Kindra Bryan, 27, said in a bylined account in The Washington Post that the group never was mistreated by the rebels, members of the Mozambique National Resistance known by the Portuguese acronym RENAMO. In fact, she said, they carried some hostages when they were too weak to walk.

"They were very gentle with us," said Bryan, a volunteer for the Hawaii-based Youth With a Mission organization. "They never threatened or shoved us with their guns."

The three-month trek ended last Tuesday when the hostages were freed to cross the border into Malawi.

RENAMO has been waging a guerrilla war against the government, known as Frelimo, since the mid-1970s and occasionally has kidnapped missionary workers in the combat zones and then freed them. "We always traveled at night," she said. "Walk and walk until you started to hallucinate."

The group included Australians Roy and Patricia Perkins and Zimbabweans Joan Goodwin, Philip and Victoria Cooper and their 19-month-old daughter, Abigail.

"The worst was crossing the swamp in the dead of night. We had to wade waist-deep through thick, putrid mud that smelled like wet manure. Clouds of mosquitoes buzzed around our heads. ... I couldn't see one inch in front of me, and I was afraid of slipping and falling under the ooze," she wrote.

The hostages ate whatever the soldiers could kill as well as maize meal, and the soldiers gave little Abigail "their food first," she said.

Goodwin and Mrs. Cooper became so sick and pain-racked that the soldiers carried them on litters, Bryan said, adding that they also carried her for a few hours when she suffered heat stroke. She said she resumed walking "because I felt sorry for the soldiers."

All seven suffered from dysentery and got worms in their feet, and everyone except Abby, Cooper and Goodwin got malaria, she said.

The hostages heard repeated speeches about RENAMO's cause and its claim that Mozambique's Marxist government had ruined the country.

The soldiers, she said, seemed to "have a good relationship with villagers, who in turn seemed to recognize them as the government...."

Bryan said the soldiers could get excited talking about their cause, "but I got the feeling they were tired. There was a real sadness about them, a weariness."

Censorship has left public in dark with espionage trial

QUANTICO, Va. (AP) — Marine Sgt. Clayton Lonetree has been tried and convicted of espionage and faces life in prison, but unlike civilian trials government censorship kept the public ignorant about much of his court-martial.

Lawyers for the former Moscow embassy guard weren't even allowed to ask one witness who he was.

From the moment the trial opened July 22 until Lonetree's conviction Friday, the proceedings at Quantico Marine Base were time and again closed to the public, while CIA and State Department attorneys were said to be in the courtroom.

Those agencies declined comment on their role in the case of the first Marine to stand court-martial for espionage. Lonetree, 25, of St. Paul, Minn., was found guilty on 13 counts, the most serious of which alleged he gave CIA identities and floor plans of the U.S. embassies in Moscow and Vienna to the Soviet KGB.

Authorities said the investigation began Dec. 14 when Lonetree went to the CIA station chief in Vienna and said he had become involved with a Soviet agent, Aleksy Yefimov, after falling in love with a Soviet translator at the Moscow embassy, Violetta Sanni.

Ms. Sanni had introduced Yefimov to Lonetree as her Uncle Sasha, investigators said. Lonetree was interrogated by the CIA for several days in Vienna before being taken to London by Navy investigators who obtained two sworn confessions.

Defense lawyers contended that Lonetree was tricked and coerced into implicating himself, but were unable to get the confessions thrown out. They argued that Lonetree turned over nothing of value and was instead a scapegoat in a bungled investigation of spying in the Moscow embassy.

Reporters covering the trial were not allowed into the courtroom or even to stand on the sidewalk outside to question people entering and leaving. They were confined to a nearby building where they could watch on closed-circuit television, except when government censors turned it off.

Defense lawyers Michael Stuhff and William Kunstler protested, saying the censorship was imposed to create an illusion that important secrets were being discussed in a shoddy case. They were themselves under a court order that prevented them from describing what happened during censored sessions and from even mentioning the CIA.

They gave journalists a vague idea of what was going on by frequent references to a "certain intelligence agency."

"This Star Chamber procedure, actively orchestrated by the anonymous intelligence agency, which has a number of its attorneys overseeing all stages of this court-martial, has resulted in lowering an unnecessary and deliberately prejudicial secrecy curtain over all stages of the proceedings," a defense statement said.

Following the verdict, Kunstler said, "We shall appeal and we shall fight this to the end, and we hope, in the end, justice will prevail."

During the court-martial, the journalists' two-set television hookup did not always work. Some reporters noted that the technical difficulties never occurred while the chief prosecutor, Marine Maj. David L. Beck, was stating his case.

During what was supposed to have been an uncensored portion of Kunstler's closing argument, the sound on both television sets and the picture on one cut off when Kunstler began talking about a State Department official's ties to the Soviet agent who took information from Lonetree.

The defense theorized that Lonetree may have been set up by the State Department to pass secrets to the Soviet agent so the man could maintain credibility with the KGB while actually working for the United States as a double agent.

The Soviet's State Department contact, Foreign Service Officer Shaun Byrnes, testified that he obtained secrets about the inner workings of the Soviet Central Committee from the man.

After Kunstler's closing arguments moved to another topic, both television sets began working again.

The proceedings were censored by court order when two spies, identified in court as "Big John" and "Little John" and believed to be CIA men, took the stand. Journalists were detained at the Quantico gate one morning before the spies took the stand, and were allowed to enter the base only after everyone involved in the case was in the courtroom.

Marines explained the detention as a mistake, although at least three conflicting accounts were given.

Another witness who testified behind closed doors was not even identified by the government. The defense was not allowed to ask "John Doe" who he was, what his background was or where he was when he allegedly was able to corroborate portions of two sworn confessions made by Lonetree.

"For the first time in American jurisprudential history, an anonymous witness will be permitted to take the stand and, because of another of the military judge's rulings, not be subjected to any searching cross-examination as to his background and credibility," the defense said.

In addition to the portions of the trial that were closed by court order, censorship often was clamped down with no court order, often when someone in court said "CIA." Reporters were unable to learn who had control over the switch.

Governor plans freeway violence effort

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Gov. George Deukmejian on Saturday announced a $29 million plan to fight freeway violence by adding 180 people to the California Highway Patrol and doubling the force's emergency overtime funds.

"This increased financial commitment will enable the Highway Patrol to respond more quickly to traffic incidents and to discourage unlawful and violent driver behavior," the Republican governor said in a weekly radio address. "It will also enhance our ability to arrest and prosecute those who are responsible for these tragic incidents."

The proposals are subject to approval by the Legislature.

Deukmejian's announcement came as violent incidents continued on California highways and in Detroit and Pittsburgh.

On Friday night, a teen-ager suffered a fractured skull after she was hit in the head by a rock dropped through a windshield of a pickup truck which was traveling on Interstate 15 in San Diego.

In another incident Friday, a motorist got out of his car and fired two shots at another driver at the top of a ramp off Pacific Coast Highway and shattered a headlight, police said.

No arrests were made in either case.

Brazil wins basketball gold on last day of Pan Am games

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — In the end, the one gold medal the United States counted on was not theirs.

The Pan American Games, which shut down Sunday, were punctuated throughout the 16-day run by American winners in practically everything from archery to yachting. But on the last day, the U.S. men's basketball team ended things on an exclamation point. They lost!

Right there in Market Square Arena, 12,000 people — mostly startled Hoosiers — watched Brazil chew away at a 14-point halftime deficit and beat the Americans 120-115.

Oscar Schmidt took the biggest bites, scoring 46 points, 21 of them from long range.

When it was over, the camera panned to a sobbing Schmidt, lying flat on the court under the basket. There were more weeping Brazilians hugging each other and a few doing a victory lap around the arena, their flag raised high.

Then there was Danny Manning sitting on the bench, staring straight ahead.

It was hard to believe this was the same team that beat five others by an average of nearly 30 points. It had its hands full with Puerto Rico, but still won by five points.

The U.S. women fared better, beating Brazil 111-87 Sunday for the gold.

But for the U.S. men, the loss was not only devastating, it was historic. The Americans haven't lost at the games since 1971, when Brazil won. They owned eight of nine Pan Am golds and a 34-game winning streak.

If U.S. Coach Denny Crum didn't exactly put the loss into perspective in terms of international basketball, Latin Americans didn't waste time doing so.

"In all the history of world basketball, no one has done anything like this to beat the Americans in their own house," said Jose Medalha, a Brazilian assistant coach. "Americans will never forget it."

A trainer with the Peruvian team, Fernando Paz, took it a step further.

"It is another Pearl Harbor for the Americans. It is an historic triumph for Brazil. ... It is glorious for all Latin Americans," Paz said.

The United States took a 77-62 lead with 17:16 to play on a rebound dunk by Robinson. But on the play he was assessed a technical foul for hanging on the rim.

With Robinson, who finished with 20 points, on the bench, Brazil went to its basic offense — Schmidt.

The United States had its last lead at 96-95, on two free throws by Keith Smart with 7:41 to play.

Marcel Souza then connected on a 3-pointer and Brazil never trailed again.

In the medal race, the United States never trailed anyone.

The final count: 369 medals — more than double the medals of runner-up Cuba, which finished

Tomczak makes move in Bears' rout of Steelers

By The Associated Press
Doug Flutie and Jim Harbaugh had their moments. But it was Mike Tomczak who took the biggest steps in the battle to be at least the stand-in quarterback for the Chicago Bears.

Tomczak, a one-time free agent in his third NFL season, played just a third of Chicago's game with Pittsburgh Saturday night. But it was a near-perfect third — he completed eight of his nine passes for 134 yards and two touchdowns as the Bears routed the Steelers 50-14.

Miami at Denver 7 p.m. tonight

"Tomczak showed me a lot of confidence and poise," said Coach Mike Ditka, who is preparing for the regular season on the assumption that regular Jim McMahon will not be fully recovered for shoulder surgery.

Tonight, Miami plays Denver. The game will be televised on ABC, beginning at 7 p.m.

Harbaugh and Flutie succeeded Tomczak with Harbaugh throwing a 25-yard fourth-quarter touchdown pass to Glen Kozlowski. "Both of them had their moments," Ditka said.

Eagles 19, Patriots 13
Junior Tautalatasi scored on a 4-yard run 3:11 into overtime, capping a 79-yard drive and a Philadelphia comeback over New England.

Rams 23, Chargers 21
Mike Lansford kicked a 30-yard field goal, his fourth of the game, with four seconds left, lifting Los Angeles over San Diego.

Quarterback Mark Vlasic completed a 48-yard touchdown pass to wide receiver Jamie Holland less than three minutes earlier to put the Chargers ahead 21-20.

Washington Redskins' cornerback Barry Wilburn upends Packer wide receiver Pat Scott during the two teams' exhibition game Saturday at Camp Randall Stadium in Wisconsin.

Giants 24, Browns 10
Jeff Rutledge was 7-for-7 for 108 yards and threw two second-half touchdown passes to lead the Giants to their second straight win.

Rutledge entered the game with 1:42 left in the third period and drove New York 80 yards in just a 1:25 for the go-ahead touchdown. It came on a 24-yard pass to Ottis Anderson.

Cardinals 28, Seahawks 21
Neil Lomax threw a 26-yard touchdown pass to Roy Green and Stump Mitchell ran for two touchdowns for the Cardinals.

Lomax completed 12 of 19 for 101 yards while Mitchell ran for TDs of six and three yards as the Cards improved to 1-1 and Seattle dropped to 0-2.

The game marked the first professional game for linebacker Brian Bosworth of Seattle, who signed two weeks ago for $11 million over 10 years.

Redskins 33, Packers 0

Doug Williams and Mark Rypien each passed for a touchdown and Green Bay quarterbacks threw five first-half interceptions as Washington improved to 2-0 and Green Bay fell to 0-2.

Lions 23, Bengals 9

Eddie Murray kicked three field goals, Bobby Watkins returned a fumble 81 yards for a touchdown and backup quarterback Joe Ferguson tossed a 42-yard touchdown pass to rookie Gary Lee for the Lions, 1-1.

Bucs 29, Jets 27

Steve DeBerg threw a 7-yard touchdown pass to Phil Freeman with 3:38 to play as the Bucs evened their record in a game in which the lead changed hands four times, three times in the fourth period.

Vikings 37, Colts 13

Wade Wilson passed for 283 yards, including a tie-breaking 53-yard "Hail Mary" touchdown pass to Buster Rhymes at the end of the first half for the Vikings, 1-1.

Oilers 16, Saints 13

Tony Zendejas kicked three field goals, including a 52-yarder to break a fourth quarter tie. Zendejas' other field goals were from 23 yards and 34 yards in the second quarter.

Bills 7, Raiders 3

Frank Reich threw a 5-yard touchdown pass to Bob Williams with 28 seconds remaining to give the Bills their victory.

The Raiders' Rusty Hilger played the first half and completed 10 of 20 passes for 154 yards. Marcus Allen led all rushers with 60 yards on eight carries.

Kansas City 13, Atlanta 10

Nick Lowery kicked a 48-yard field goal with 12 seconds left to give the Chiefs their second victory in three starts.

Is cancer stalking Giants?

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — When Dan Lloyd, a linebacker for the New York Giants, was diagnosed as having lymphoma in 1980, it was viewed as one of those freak tragedies of nature — a young, healthy athlete randomly stricken with cancer.

When the Giants confirmed Saturday night that offensive tackle Karl Nelson had Hodgkin's disease, making him the fourth member of the team in seven years to contract cancer, it raised more questions than answers. A spokesman for the National Institute of Health termed it "highly unusual." To Giants players and officials, it was an improbability that defied random statistics.

"I wanted a trade and considered retiring," linebacker Harry Carson, the captain of last year's Super Bowl winner, said. "I didn't like the things that were happening, starting with Dan Lloyd. When I signed my last contract, I considered it to be hazard pay for where we played."

"The towers, the landfills, the pollution, that's the environment. I don't think it's healthy to spend any more time there than I have to."

Giants Stadium, where the team practices and plays, was built in 1976 atop a swamp that had also been used as a landfill and garbage dump.

Robert Mulcahy, executive director of the New Jersey Exposition and Sports Authority, which runs the Meadowlands sports complex, called any hint the environment is to blame "outrageous speculation." Both Mulcahy and Giants President Wellington Mara said tests conducted more than five years ago found nothing wrong with the ground water.

But several players noted that water coolers were moved into the locker rooms last year and Mara, who has always been deeply involved with his players, conceded Saturday: "Of course I'm concerned. After all, I work here, too."

Lloyd, the first member of the team to contract cancer, survived and unsuccessfully attempted a comeback with the Giants. He eventually played briefly in the USFL.

Doug Kotar, a running back at the end of a nine-year career with the team, was diagnosed in 1982 as having a brain tumor. He died a year later. In 1984, a tumor was found in the shoulder of another running back, John Tuggle, and he died last year.

Giants team physician Dr. Russell Warren said there is a "90-95 percent" favorable prognosis for the 27-year-old Nelson, whose problem was discovered in a routine X-ray when he entered a New York hospital for shoulder surgery. Warren, who said he thought the 6-foot-6, 285-pound Nelson could resume his career next season, said there was no relationship between the shoulder injury and the cancer.

Warren also said he saw no relationship between Nelson's cancer and the other three cases.

"Hodgkins is a disease that tends to occur in males in their third decade," Warren said. "When you have 100 or more young men coming in and out each year, there's a statistical probability that this will occur."

But that statistical probability doesn't extend to the rest of the NFL.

Another NFL player, J.D. Maarleveld of the Tampa Bay Bucs, was diagnosed while in college as having Hodgkins disease. He grew up in Rutherford, N.J., a community of 21,000 adjacent to the Meadowlands, where 32 cases of leukemia were diagnosed in 1978.

In addition, Carl "Spider" Lockhart, a former Giants safety, died of leukemia last summer at the age of 43. Lockhart, however, retired before the Giants moved to the Meadowlands in 1976.

Another NFL team, the San Francisco 49ers, faces a similar medical mystery. Linebacker Matt Hazeltine, running back Gary Lewis and quarterback Bobby Waters — teammates on the 1964 team — subsequently contracted amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, also known as Lou Gehrig's disease. The illness, a neuromuscular disorder, strikes only 1 of 50,000 Americans.

Cowboys win, sigh with relief

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys played like a team reborn in their rejuvenating 13-3 exhibition win over the San Francisco 49ers on Saturday night.

To be sure, this was a different Dallas than the one that went down 29-0 against the San Diego Chargers only a week earlier.

"It was an entirely different attitude on the field," said the Cowboys' Danny White. "We're improving and that is the important thing."

Dallas Head Coach Tom Landry seconded the motion. "We've come a long ways," Landry said. "We came off a cycle last year where we lost seven of eight. We need to reverse that and this will help us."

Against San Diego, the Cowboys' offense totaled 208 yards. After one period Saturday night, Dallas had a 16-18 yardage advantage and a 10-0 lead over the 49ers.

The Cowboys held their lead with the help of three interceptions, including two by Everson Walls, of passes thrown by Steve Young in the second half.

"I was trying to make something happen — to put some points on the board. I'm not real happy about tonight's performance," Young said.

In the first half, the 49ers' Joe Montana had an 0-for-7 passing start and completed only five of 16 for 46 yards.

Tony Dorsett of the Cowboys rushed for 50 yards, going 17 and 24 on his best two runs, and scored from two yards out to end a 70-yard touchdown drive in the ninth minute of play. Dorsett then left the game with a bruised calf muscle.

White passed for 92 yards in the opening quarter and 123 in the half he played.

The 49ers had won their first two exhibition games rather easily.

"We obviously need to go back to work," said 49ers Head Coach Bill Walsh. "I'm sure we needed this to show us what direction we need to go."

Weibring edges Norman, Nelson to take Western

OAK BROOK, Ill. (AP) — D.A. Weibring has a dandy date ahead of him — in the World Series of Golf — after leaving behind an unhappy phrase of his career.

"Now, at last, maybe they'll stop writing and saying, 'the only thing he ever won was Quad Cities,'" Weibring said.

Weibring, 34, whose career has been slowed by nagging injuries, wiped out that identifying tag on Sunday when he outlasted Greg Norman and PGA title-holder Larry Nelson in the Western Open. It was a golf tournament that very nearly didn't get started and wound up as of the more bizarre events in PGA Tour history.

None of that mattered to Weibring.

"I don't care if it was a 54-hole tournament. I don't care if it was played on two different nines on two different golf courses. I don't care if I had to wait two hours," Weibring said. "This was worth it. This is something very special."

So, in a peculiar way, was the tournament.

It began with a flood that set the scheduled start back one day, to Friday. Then another thunderstorm came along and the start was pushed back to Saturday.

But portions of Butler National remained unfit for play. Nine holes — two from the front and seven from the back — were strung together.

Drum roll gets louder as Molitor extends streak

By The Associated Press
Paul Molitor is chasing Joe DiMaggio, Pete Rose, George Sisler and Ty Cobb. He's still not sure just how significant that is.

Molitor lined a fifth-inning single off Kansas City left-hander Charlie Leibrandt to extend his hitting streak to 38 games, and Bill Schroeder and Greg Brock each drove in three runs, leading the Brewers to a 10-5 victory over the Royals Sunday.

After hitting fly balls in his first two at-bats, Molitor led off the bottom of the fifth with a single to left, giving the Brewers' designated hitter the fifth longest streak in modern major-league history.

After the single, Molitor was given a two-minute standing ovation by the 33,887 at County Stadium.

Cobb with a 40-game streak in 1911, Sisler with 41 straight in 1922, Rose with 44 straight in 1978 and DiMaggio with 56 straight for the Yankees in 1941 stand ahead of Molitor.

Cobb, Sisler and DiMaggio are in the Hall of Fame, and Rose will be someday.

"It's nicer the higher you go, naturally," Molitor said. "But when you talk about in comparison to what the record is and everything else, it's really not that significant."

On Saturday night, Molitor equaled Tommy Holmes' streak of 37 in 1945 for the Boston Braves.

On Sunday, in his fourth at-bat in the sixth inning, Molitor walked and he struck out in the seventh to finish the game 1-for-4. He is 67-for-160, a .419 average, during his streak with seven homers and 33 runs batted in.

Molitor will try to make it 39 straight Tuesday night when Milwaukee plays host to Cleveland. Ken Schrom is scheduled to pitch for the Indians.

Detroit Tigers' fans have a little fun at the expense of Minnesota Twins' pitcher Joe Niekro after Niekro was removed from last Thursday's game with the Tigers after the Tigers took a 4-0 lead in the fourth inning. The day, he will not be able to escape the attention his streak has created.

"I'm really looking forward to a day off," Molitor said. "We've had a tough stretch since the All-Star break. This will only be our second day off. It will be nice to get away from the park for a day."

Molitor's streak continued to draw large crowds to County Stadium, where he has hit in 23 straight games. Friday and Saturday night's games with the Royals drew more than 37,000 each night, and the crowd Sunday was 33,887.

"It was an emotional one, like watching the Babe Ruth story or something," Milwaukee Manager Tom Trebelhorn said after Sunday's game. "It had to do with the particular chemistry of fans that made up the crowd and the type of ball game."

White Sox 8, Rangers 1
Floyd Bannister pitched a seven-hitter and Greg Walker hit his 22nd home run as Chicago defeated Texas at Arlington.

Bannister, 9-10, walked none and struck out three en route to his seventh complete game of the season.

Red Sox 6, Twins 4
Don Baylor hit his 12th career grand slam and Dwight Evans followed with a homer in the fifth inning as Boston rallied to beat Minnesota and send the Twins to their sixth straight loss — all on the road.

The Twins took to a 4-0 lead on homers by Gary Gaetti, Roy Smalley and Kent Hrbek, but Steve Carlton was unable to hold the advantage as he tried for his 330th major-league victory.

Tigers 4, Indians 3
Jack Morris pitched a five-hitter and Kirk Gibson hit a three-run homer as Detroit defeated host Cleveland. The victory gave the Tigers a one-game lead over Toronto in the AL East.

Morris, 15-6, struck out seven and walked five en route to his 10th complete game.

Angels 5, Blue Jays 2
Kirk McCaskill pitched six-hit ball for 6 2-3 innings and Wally Joyner hit a two-run homer as California defeated Toronto at Anaheim, Calif.

In the bottom of the inning, Bill Buckner homered off Dave Stieb, who lasted 5 1-3 innings as his personal seven-game winning streak ended.

Yankees 4, Athletics 0
Rick Rhoden and Tim Lincecum combined to check Oakland on two hits and New York broke a three-game losing streak.

Rhoden, 15-8, left the game after five innings with stiffness in his right shoulder. He did not allow a hit until Carney Lansford singled with one out in the fifth inning. Stoddard pitched the final four innings for his sixth save and struck out six.

Orioles 6, Mariners 5
Ken Dixon pitched three-hit ball for six innings and Larry Sheets and Mike Hart hit home runs as visiting Baltimore ended Seattle's three-game winning streak.

Dixon, 7-8, was sent to the bullpen earlier in the year and spent a month in the minor leagues. But the right-hander is 4-1 since being called up from Class AAA Rochester on July 20.

Dixon allowed two singles and a triple.

Rose calls meeting after Cards sweep

By BILL BARNARD

AP Sports Writer

Pete Rose, baseball's Mr. Hustle, sees a decided lack of hustle in the Cincinnati Reds. After the St. Louis Cardinals completed a three-game series sweep of Cincinnati with a 12-6 victory Sunday, the Reds manager held a closed-door meeting with his team.

"I just tried to tell them what's in front of them, how many games are left and what they have to do. It's getting late," Rose said. "I just saw what I thought was a lot of guys going through the motions ... I don't like to see guys going through the motions."

The Cardinals, who were shut out twice in one week after scoring in their first 111 games, got back in a groove with 17 hits off Reds' pitching, which also surrendered seven walks.

Cincinnati's fifth loss in a six-game homestand knocked the Reds two games behind first-place San Francisco in the National League West. But Rose said the team can stay in the race with its current roster.

"If we can't, we're in trouble," Rose said. "That's what we've got ... That's the same team that opened a five-game lead before we went to San Francisco."

Tom Herr knocked in three runs and Smith and Terry Pendleton drove in two apiece for St. Louis.

The Cardinals, who now lead the East by 4½ games over second-place New York, sent nine men to the plate in both the first and fifth innings. They scored three runs in the first and five in the fifth off starter Bill Gullickson, 10-11, who lost his fifth straight decision.

Danny Cox, 9-4, was the winner, allowing three runs on nine hits in five innings. Three relievers finished the game.

Giants 5, Expos 3
San Francisco stayed in first place in the West, beating Montreal with a four-run seventh inning.

Mike Aldrete, who homered for the Giants' first run, started the seventh with a single, went to second on an infield out and scored the tying run on a single by Candy Maldonado off Bob Sebra, 6-14.

Bob Brenly and Chris Speier followed with RBI singles, making the score 4-2, and Jose Uribe's suicide squeeze brought in the final San Francisco run.

Kelly Downs, 10-8, making his first major-league relief appearance after 39 career starts, pitched the sixth inning for the victory. Don Robinson worked the final three innings for his 16th save.

Astros 4, Cubs 2
Houston, a half-game behind the Giants, broke a 2-2 tie with Chicago on Billy Hatcher's two-run triple with two outs in the seventh.

Cubs starter Rick Sutcliffe, 15-6, got the first two batters out in the seventh before pinch-hitter Terry Puhl doubled and Gerald Young walked. Hatcher then tripled past diving center fielder Dave Martinez.

Ken Caminiti knocked in the first two Astros runs with a bases-loaded walk and a single.

The Cubs erased the deficit in the sixth on Leon Durham's two-run homer off Rocky Childress, who replaced Nolan Ryan after a walk to Martinez. Ryan, who had a blister on his right index finger, allowed two hits and seven strikeouts in 5 1-3 innings.

Jeff Heathcock, 3-1, pitched two innings of hitless relief for the victory.

Mets 9, Padres 2
New York avoided a three-game sweep by San Diego as Dwight Gooden picked up a rare daylight victory with the help of Darryl Strawberry and Howard Johnson, who each hit his 31st home run.

Gooden, 11-4, gave up two runs on seven hits in 6 1-3 innings to improve his record in day games to 19-13, compared to 50-10 at night.

The Mets broke open a 3-2 game with five runs in the seventh, keyed by Rafael Santana's two-run single.

Gooden scored the tiebreaking run in the fifth inning after a bizarre double error by Padres outfielders.

Braves 6, Pirates 2
Atlanta won its fourth straight game for the first time this season behind David Palmer's four-hit pitching for seven innings against Pittsburgh.

Dodgers 5, Phillies 1
Orel Hershiser allowed seven hits while pitching his eighth complete game as Los Angeles broke a three-game losing streak and snapped Philadelphia's five-game winning spurt.

Hershiser, 13-12, who also had lost three straight, struck out eight and walked two. The Phillies scored their only run in the ninth on a groundout.

Big Ten wants records of Walters and Bloom

ATLANTA (AP) — The Big Ten Conference reportedly will ask a federal judge this week to order sports agents Norby Walters and Lloyd Bloom to reveal the names of any Big Ten athletes they sign to contracts.

While the signing of college athletes to representation contracts before their eligibility expires violates National Collegiate Athletic Association rules, the Big Ten will not question the right of agents to sign those players, The Atlanta Constitution reported in Monday's editions.

But the conference will question the right of the agents to keep the signings secret from the athletes' schools. The Constitution quoted Big Ten attorney Byron Gregory of Chicago as saying.

"It's relatively simple. Our position is that the 10 universities have the right to conduct their programs free of jeopardizing their position by the action of these agents," Gregory said. "The key here is the concealment issue. The agents have signed student-athletes with the intent to mislead the universities and conference into believing that these students are eligible athletically when they in fact are not."

A grand jury in Chicago is investigating the actions of Walters and Bloom, who have admitted signing players with college eligibility remaining. They claim they have broken no laws.

A half-dozen athletes from around the country already have lost their senior year of eligibility for signing with Walters and Bloom.

Johnson will play for Odessa

DALLAS (AP) — Former Dallas Skyline High School basketball player Larry Johnson has decided to attend Odessa College rather than enroll at Southern Methodist University, where he would have to sit out a year.

Johnson will be eligible to play for the Wranglers this season, but cannot transfer to a four-year school for two years.

Johnson, regarded as one of SMU's best-ever recruits, began to reconsider his November signing when school officials questioned a 300-point increase in his Scholastic Aptitude Test scores.

Johnson said he also considered Navarro and McLennan junior colleges, but chose Odessa because he wanted to play with his best friend, former North Dallas star Tony Jackson.

Johnson said he will consider attending SMU when he leaves Odessa. He will have two years of eligibility remaining.

Bryant wins bodybuilding title

Gary Bryant won the heavyweight title and then the overall title at Spring City Bodybuilding Championships Saturday night at the Big Spring High School Auditorium.

In the heavyweight division, Kirby Sams and Robert Zanette finished second and third. Jeff Shaw defeated second and third place finishers Jerry Hicks and Eric Nelson to win the light-heavyweight title.

Nate Green was the top middle-weight, defeating Ciriaco Valdez and Mark Gerloff in the finals. Robert Jones was judged the top light-weight over finalists John Cantu and Reginald Figgs.

Sharon Canady won both the middle-weight and the overall title in the women's competition. Cindy Phillips and Lesia Young finished second and third among the middle-weights.

Laverta Scott was judged the top light-weight, over Chandra Armstead and Belinda Perez.

Edberg blasts Becker in ATP

MASON, Ohio (AP) — Sweden's Stefan Edberg beat Boris Becker 6-4, 6-1 with a dazzling serve-and-volley display Sunday afternoon to win the $75,000 Association of Tennis Professionals Championship.

The tournament victory should give Edberg the No. 2 seeding in the upcoming U.S. Open. He earned $48,000 for the victory Sunday.

Pittman will play for Cowboys

HOUSTON (AP) — Johnny Pittman, a 7-foot-1 center from Rosenberg, Texas, will attend Oklahoma State on a basketball scholarship after he was denied admission to the University of Kentucky, KRIV-TV reported Sunday night.

KRIV-TV quoted a source close to the player as saying Pittman would sign with Oklahoma State.

Pittman averaged 19.6 points last season and appeared in the Texas High School Coaches Association All-Star game.

He had planned to attend Kentucky but the Southeastern Conference ruled him academically ineligible.

with 175, or Canada, which had 162.
The United States had 168 gold, 118 silver and 83 bronze; Cuba had 75 gold, 52 silver and 48 bronze; Canada had 30 gold, 57 silver and 75 bronze.

The Pan American Games' torch was passed to Cuba Sunday night as the hemisphere's largest athletic event of the year ended on a festive note to the Latin rhythms of the Miami Sound Machine. Unlike some of the athletic events during the 16-day competition, there were no demonstrations and no incidents as Jose Ramon Fernandez, Cuban minister of education and sport, raised the Cuban flag and play host to the 1991 games in Havana.

The Cubans remained seated while other athletes danced and rushed the stage during the Miami Sound Machine's performance. Cuba had complained about organizers hiring a band featuring two Cuban exiles.

Though it didn't win its cherished basketball gold, the United States' haul on the final day wasn't bad.

In women's basketball, Katrina McClain of Georgia scored 30 points and grabbed 11 rebounds, giving the United States its sixth gold medal in nine Pan Am Games.

In gymnastics, Kristie Phillips, Kelly Garrison-Stevens and Melissa Marlowe took individual apparatus golds. Earlier, Sabrina Mar had won the all-around and led the United States to the team title. Total haul: 10 of 14 golds.

In boxing, Kelle Banks of Chicago was the only U.S. gold winner.

The U.S. men's volleyball team outlasted Cuba 15-12, 15-7, 15-17, 10-15, 15-7 for the gold.

BASKETBALL

U.S. Coach Jody Conradt marched her women's basketball team in to the locker room and didn't waste time.

"At halftime I wrote the number 50 on the blackboard," she said. "That's how many points they had. The Boston Celtics shouldn't score 50 points on us in a half."

Brazil scored 37 points in the second half and the United States got a gold medal.

McClain revved up in the final 20 minutes, scoring 23 of her 30 points and grabbing 11 rebounds. The defending gold medalists used their inside strength to dominate the backboards in the second half, outrebounding Brazil 35-14 for a 53-30 overall advantage. The United States also shut down Brazil's high-scoring duo of Hortencia Marcari and Paula Silva, who had a combined 37 points in the first half.

BOXING
Banks saved the U.S. boxing team the embarrassment of a gold medal shutout, but Cuban fighters won everything else.

The Cubans left with a record 10 gold medals in boxing, with five more Cuban fighters winning Sunday to seal their complete dominance of the Pan American Games.

It was the lowest gold medal total for U.S. fighters since 1951.

Banks, the reigning world champion at 125 pounds, beat Emilio Villegas of the Dominican Republic to salvage the only U.S. gold medal.

Cuba, meanwhile, finished with five more wins, including a decision victory by Candelario Duvergel over Todd Foster of the United States, to capture 10 of the 12 gold medals — the most ever by TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Keep that promise you've made to your mate, even if belated, and be cheerful about it. Have confidence in yourself.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Home matters requiring special attention can be cleared up, provided they're given sufficient effort.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to Jul. 21) Stop putting off important communications, but consider your position first. Be wary of reckless drivers.

LEO (Jul. 22 to Aug. 21) A family friend has excellent advice concerning your financial situation. Listen carefully to this, and follow it up.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Gather the data necessary to help you work more efficiently. Accept an invitation from a close friend.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Consult an expert about an interest which fascinates you, and you'll find the best way to make it operate successfully.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Permit a good friend who has excellent judgment to suggest where your energies should be placed.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Follow all rules and regulations which apply to you. If you ask a superior for a favor, do so confidentially.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Become more active and you can be more successful. You have much ability, so don't keep it dormant.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Be alert to an opportunity to do something in public which will please your mate. Use your talents.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) It would be best to postpone a discussion with an associate until you have a chance to check the facts and figures.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY... he or she may be a little slow learning to read and write, but once a desire for knowledge is acquired, it will be all-consuming. Teach your child the basics of business, since talent as an entrepreneur is indicated. He or she will also be a wonderfully dedicated family person.

VA hosts service officer seminar

The Big Spring VA Medical Center hosted a County Service Officer's Seminar July 21, attended by 23 Service Officers and six staff members, according to Tom Balderach, Public Information Officer.

County Service Officers assist veterans and their dependents in applying for disability compensation, pension, education and home loans, and hospital care. They also assist in providing transportation for veterans to and from the medical center, Balderach said.

Topics discussed during the seminar included the VA Follow-up clinic in Abilene; eligibility regulations pertaining to hospitalization, outpatient treatment, domiciliary care, and recent changes in beneficiary travel regulations, he added.

A question-and-answer session followed the discussion, Balderach said.

Crisis seminar planned in Midland

MIDLAND — Youth ministers, counselors and others who work with young people will have an opportunity to learn counseling techniques, along with gaining insight into signs of crisis Thursday, at a free seminar sponsored by Glenwood Psychiatric Hospital.

The seminar, which will be held in the auditorium of Texas Tech Regional Academic Health Center, 800 W. Fourth St., Odessa, will begin at 2 p.m. It will feature professional staff members of Glenwood Hospital, including Dr. Jose Iglesias, chief of child and adolescent psychiatry.

It is open to parents and youth workers, and questions will be encouraged, according to information from the hospital.

For further information, contact Dr. Tom Turnage or Lois Barry at Glenwood, phone 563-1200.

Low-cholesterol diet tips offered

AUSTIN — The American Heart Association Diet can help create a lifestyle that is aimed at reducing one of the major risks of heart attack — high blood cholesterol — according to an Association report.

The body can get all of the cholesterol that it needs by making it, but people also ingest cholesterol directly from foods of animal origin such as meat, poultry, seafood and dairy products, the report states.

The Association recommends foods low in cholesterol, saturated fat and sodium as part of its diet. The first step to a heart-healthy diet is variety, the report adds.

Eat at least three servings of fruit, vegetables or real fruit juice every day. They are high in vitamins, minerals, potassium and fiber, but low in fat, calories and sodium — and don't contain cholesterol.

The only fruits and vegetables to avoid are coconut and palm oil; avocados and olives should be eaten only occasionally, the report warns.

The report also advises to drink lowfat milk, and to look for milk products labeled "fortified with vitamins A and D." Avoid cream, nondairy cream substitutes and cheese with more than two grams of fat per ounce, the report continues.

Good sitting posture eases aches

LUBBOCK — It may come as a surprise to know that 40 hours of sitting can put more strain on a person's back than 40 hours of standing, or even lifting, according to Julie Reecer, Public Relations Officer of Methodist Hospital.

This may make a person a prime target for the Monday-to-Friday Syndrome: Backache and fatigue from slouching over your desk all week, she said.

The Injury Prevention Library at the hospital offers four suggestions for saving the back from the everyday strain of sitting:

- Begin with good sitting posture.
- Shift your position frequently throughout the day.

Methodist hospital to open center

LUBBOCK — Methodist Hospital, in conjunction with United Blood Service, will open its own blood donation center in the hospital's laboratory Sept. 1, according to Julie Reecer, of the hospital's Office of Public Relations.

The center is open to anyone who wishes to donate blood and is convenient for those who wish to donate blood for a patient at the hospital, Reecer said.

Under the direction of UBS, the center is staffed with two phlebotomists who will draw blood and are trained and certified by UBS under Food and Drug Administration regulations, she added.

Donors will be asked to provide general background information and answer health-related questions, Lisa Pearson, donor resources manager said. The information will help spot any possible at-risk donors, like those who might have been exposed to malaria or AIDS viruses, she said.

Every unit of blood drawn is then tested. The tests determine blood type and Rh factor and test for syphilis, hepatitis, and the HIV antibody commonly found in AIDS patients, Pearson said.

Because of the length of time necessary for proper processing, it may take from two to five days for a unit of blood to be ready for distribution, she added.

There are three basic types of donations, she said. They are: Donations to a community supply, recipient-specific donations and autologous donations. Autologous donations are ones a person makes for his or her own use during a scheduled surgery, Pearson said.

The center will be open Monday through Friday, 8 a.m. until 5 p.m. For more information, call (806) 793-4252.

A&M tests radon sets

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Radon detection kits purchased by the public are being tested in an engineering experiment station laboratory at Texas A&M University, officials say.

Nuclear specialists studying the natural radioactive gas for the Texas Engineering Experiment Station say commercially available test kits are the only accurate way to measure indoor levels of radon.

Nuclear engineer Milton McLain, the university's radiology safety officer, has set up a laboratory on campus that measures radon concentration using activated-charcoal radon detectors. Consumers purchase the containers and expose them to indoor air for a short period of time. The canisters then are resealed and sent to the lab for measurement.

"This gives us access to a large data base of radon measurements ...," McLain said Wednesday. "We will catalog the results according to ZIP code and get a better understanding of radon concentrations in the state."

If a radon problem is found, more sophisticated tests can be performed and often, simple, inexpensive steps can alleviate the problem, he said.

Chiropractor takes natural approach

By STEVE REAGAN
Staff Writer

Bill Chrane, a local chiropractor, defines his wellness philosophy this way: "If your spine is in line, then you'll feel fine."

In an effort to keep his patients in line and feeling fine, Chrane will open what he calls "the finest chiropractic center in Texas," Aug. 31. Located at 1409 Lancaster St., he said the 2,400 square-foot facility will offer the latest in chiropractic services.

Unlike traditional medical doctors, chiropractors take a natural — or holistic — approach to medicine. Chrane believes that wellness can be achieved without drugs or surgery, saying chiropractic is dedicated to providing a system of "getting well and staying well."

Chrane is quick to state that he doesn't malign the medical community.

"M.D.s are the best in the world in what they do — treating trauma and related injuries," he said. "That's not our line of work."

He believes, however, that a natural approach to treating patients is best. He said he tries to do his part in keeping the person's spiritual, mental and physical forces in harmony.

"I believe that if God is smart enough to make a body, then He's smart enough to maintain it," he said.

Chrane graduated from Big Spring High School in 1945. After receiving his bachelor's degree from Trinity University in San Antonio, he attended Texas Chiropractic College in that city.

Upon getting his chiropractic degree, he returned to Big Spring, where he opened a practice in 1957. In 1968, he temporarily quit his practice, and opened Chrane Auto Sales.

Opening the new clinic marks the return to a practice that has been in the family for years, he said, explaining that his father, uncle and a cousin also are chiropractors.

As a practitioner, he sees four major health problems facing the public today: smoking, alcoholism, cancer and drug abuse. Any of these contribute to a breakdown of a person's health, Chrane added.

"People seem to believe cancer happens by itself," he said. "That's not the case. Certain body functions contribute to the problem."

These problems eventually manifest themselves in spinal problems, causing nerve interference and dysfunction, Chrane said.

Pressure on the nerves can cause of nerve pressure and loss of height among some people as they age, he explained.

He compared the treatment process as being similar to an orthodontist. Just as an orthodontist gradually straightens crooked teeth, a chiropractor — through a series of treatments — can gradually strengthen the cartilage, he said.

Such services, Chrane believes,

"I believe that if God is smart enough to make a body, then He's smart enough to maintain it."

either restrict their functions or can exaggerate them, he said, citing arterial restriction as an example.

Chrane performs spinal manipulations on his patients to address such problems. The end result is proper alignment of the spine, which usually assures better health, the chiropractor said.

He described the Chrane Condyle Upper Cervical Adjustment and Alignment treatment, which concentrates on the atlas and axial vertebrae in an attempt to lengthen and bolster the cartilage, Chrane said.

Cartilage erosion is a major have served to change the image of chiropractors. For too long, he and his fellow practitioners have been regarded as quacks.

Chiropractors today spend as much time in college, training and internship as medical doctors, he said, adding that his profession is constantly upgrading its status and ability.

Another service that Chrane will offer is an auditorium adjacent to his clinic. Designed to seat over 100, it is available for rent to business and health-related seminars, Chrane said.

The facility formerly housed the Knights of Piuteus.

Cancer society moves headquarters

DALLAS (AP) — An American Cancer Society committee ended a four-month, eight-city competition when it recommended moving the organization's national headquarters from New York to Atlanta, officials say.

The society's national office location committee overwhelmingly chose the Georgia city during a meeting in Dallas Wednesday, ACS said in a news release Thursday. The society's board of directors will meet Sept. 1 in Chicago to vote on the recommendation.

The committee had also considered sites in Dallas; Houston; Baltimore, Memphis, Tenn.; Indianapolis, Ind.; Denver; and St. Louis, Mo. Dallas and Atlanta had been named finalists last month.

The non-profit organization, which has a headquarters staff of 300, has been searching for a new location since April, when its board announced intentions to leave New York because of high operating and rental costs.

Anchoring the Atlanta proposal was a private donation of land adjacent to Emory University's medical school, and plans call for a headquarters building to be constructed on a four-acre site near Emory and the U.S. Centers for Disease Control.

William J. Todd, Emory's assistant to the vice president for health affairs, said the Robert W. Woodruff Foundation would help the university pay for the $2.5 million parcel of land. Emory then would sell the land to the society for $1, he said.

The Woodruff Foundation, named for the late Coca-Cola Co. baron, also has offered the cancer society $1 million to help pay for the move from New York, where the organization has been based since its founding 73 years ago.

Drug slows muscle deterioration

Dallas Times Herald Bureau

DALLAS — Researchers who have used an anti-inflammatory drug on children with severe muscular dystrophy announced Wednesday that the treatment slows muscle deterioration and can delay the need for a wheelchair for as long as three years.

The news offers hope to children with Duchenne muscular dystrophy, the most common and most severe childhood form of the disease, which until now had no treatment.

Researchers stressed that the drug, prednisone, is an experimental treatment, not a cure. Because the drug results in serious side effects, its use should be limited to carefully controlled experiments, researchers said.

"We're cautiously enthusiastic," said Donald Wood, director of research for the New York-based Muscular Dystrophy Association.

The news was welcomed in Dallas as Muscular Dystrophy Association officials and more than 1,000 grocery stores in Texas unveiled a campaign to raise $250,000 in the annual "Jerry's Kids" fund-raising drive for muscular dystrophy.

Until Sept. 19, more than 120 products on grocery-store shelves will be marked with blue tags, indicating that a percentage of sales receipts from those items will be donated to the non-profit organization led by actor Jerry Lewis.

"Although this can't be considered a treatment in the conventional sense of the term, it is the first drug shown to have any effect at all on dystrophy, and, therefore, represents a potentially tremendous research advance," said Paul Schieffer, president of the Greater Dallas MDA chapter.

Two studies published in the current issue of Archives of Neurology show that prednisone improves muscle strength and respiratory functions and delays from two to three years the need for a wheelchair.

"Every patient showed improvement," Wood said. "But every patient, without exception, experiences side effects. Some people cannot tolerate the drug whatsoever, under any circumstances."
