Sabotage feared in jetliner crash

259 on plane, 22 on ground killed

Rescue workers examine the nose section of a Pan American Boeing 747 that crashed Wednesday on Lockerbie, Scotland.

LOCKERBIE, Scotland (AP) — A Pan Am jumbo jet apparently exploded in the air before crashing and killing all 259 people aboard, and investigators focused today on terrorist threats to place a bomb on a Pan Am airliner.

U.S. embassies had posted warnings that a bomb threat had been made on a Pan Am jet flying from Frankfurt to the United States sometime in December.

The wreckage of the Boeing 747 bound for New York with Christmas travelers scattered bodies and wreckage over a wide area and ravaged Lockerbie village. The doomed Pan Am Flight 103 originated in Frankfurt aboard a different plane.

Twenty-two people died on the ground, most of them in cars hit by wreckage, said Desmond Park, deputy chief executive of the area's local council. He said the information was from other town authorities.

The plane smashed into the ground, destroying 40 houses, triggering an explosion at a gas station and engulfing cars in flames.

The death toll on the plane rose to 259 today when it was discovered that another flight attendant was on board, said Pamela Hanlon, a Pan Am spokeswoman in New York. The victims included U.S. servicemen, 38 students from Syracuse University and an Associated Press executive and five of his family members.

Neither Scottish Secretary Malcom Rifkind, the chief British official at the site, nor U.S. Ambassador Charles Price would speculate on the possibility of sabotage, but both the International Air Transport Association and the British Airline Pilots Association said that was the most likely explanation.

In Washington, a U.S. government source said the U.S. Embassy in Helsinki, Finland, received a telephone threat about two weeks ago from a person claiming to belong to the Abu Nidal group, a radical Palestinian faction that has been implicated in terrorist attacks.

The caller said a bomb would be placed aboard a Pan Am plane and that it would be carried by a woman, said the government source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The government source said that threat was the basis for posting notices at U.S. embassies.

In Moscow, the U.S. Embassy last week warned American diplomats that a bomb threat had been made against a Pan Am flight flying from Frankfurt, West Germany to the United States sometime in December. The warning left it to the diplomats' discretion whether to change travel plans.

Press Association quoted intelligence sources as saying the tip came from Mossad, the Israeli intelligence service. "It is believed the U.S. received the warning with some circumspection but advised all its embassies in Europe to post an internal memo on their noticeboards," Press Association said.

In Fankfurt, the airport security chief said officials stepped up security at Pan Am after receiving threats against the carrier earlier this month.

An anonymous male caller to The Associated Press in London claimed responsibility for the disaster and said it was in retaliation for the shooting down of an Iran Air Airbus by the U.S. Navy cruiser Vincennes in July. The Navy said the plane carrying 290 people over the Persian Gulf had been mistaken for an Iranian fighter. At the time, some Islamic extremists vowed revenge, but later Iranian officials said they understood the attack was a mistake.

"We the guardians of the Islamic revolution are undertaking this heroic execution in revenge of blowing the Iran air plane by America a few months ago and keeping the Shah's family in America. We are very proud," the caller said, then hung up quickly.

The group also claimed responsibility for a July 18, 1987, car bombing in London that wounded Amir Hussein Amir-Parviz, chairman of National Movement for Iranian resistance and a former Iranian cabinet minister under the Shah.

Iran's Prime Minister Hussein Musavi "categorically denied any Iranian involvement" in the crash. The denial came in a report by the official Islamic Republic New Agency, monitored in Nicosia, Cyprus.

Scotland Yard said the head of its anti-terrorism branch, Commander George Churchill-Coleman, had taken charge of the London end of the crash.

Some church leaders back judge

DALLAS (AP) — A group of church leaders who believe a Dallas judge has been wrongly criticized for what they consider a Christian stand will rally in his support today at the Dallas County Courthouse.

State District Judge Jack Hampton has already been the subject of rallies from those who are calling for his ouster following his disclosure that he gave a lighter sentence to a murderer partly because his two victims were homosexuals.

The Rev. Don Skelton, pastor at Fountain of The Living Word, said at least seven pastors have agreed to participate in a 5 p.m. rally supporting Hampton, which he expects to draw about 100 to 150 people.

"They're in favor of the stand the judge has taken to sodomy," Skelton said. "We're very much opposed to sodomy. It's against Texas law for one thing and God's law for another thing."

But on Wednesday, a coalition of other church leaders, some with large gay congregations, called on other religious leaders, judges and lawyers to join them in publicly criticizing Hampton.

"We ... deplore the mentality recently expressed by Judge Jack Hampton in the press, which suggest that all human beings are not of equal value and are not entitled to equal protection under the law," said the Rev. Howard Tyas, pastor of Bethany Presbyterian Church, reading from the group's statement at a news conference Wednesday.

Hampton's comments in a copyright interview last week in the Dallas Times Herald have agitated the gay community and equal rights activists to protest and to seek his removal from the bench. On Tuesday, elected officials, including State Treasurer Ann Richards and U.S. Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., joined protesters in criticizing Hampton.

Hampton told the newspaper that he sentenced Richard Lee Bednarski, 18, to 30 years in prison instead of a maximum life sentence on Nov. 28 in part because the two men Bednarski was convicted of killing were homosexuals.

The judge also referred to the two victims as "queers."

"We also have the concern of the repercussions that this could have on the community in the future, because by his statements what does this suggest to the criminal element?" said Ken Coulter, pastor of Grace Fellowship Church. "It seems it's saying to them that ... if they commit (crimes) against gay people, then the sentence may be less severe than otherwise.

Religious leaders who support Hampton say they strongly back his stance against sodomy, which is a misdemeanor under Texas law.

The act carries a maximum penalty of a $200 fine. A law forbidding sexual intercourse between homosexuals was challenged on constitutional grounds and was thrown out in 1982, but a federal appeals court reinstated it three years later.

However, the church leaders who criticized Hampton's statements said the issue was not homosexuality or sodomy, but equal justice.

"Every person has a right to equal justice under the law," said the Rev. Lou Arceneaux, pastor at Holy Trinity Catholic Church.

Response to boy's wheelchair wish overwhelming

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A letter to Santa Claus from a 10-year-old boy who wanted an electric wheelchair for his mother has elicited Christmas greetings and gifts from around the world — including one brand-new wheelchair.

"The Christmas spirit is incredible," said Denise Reusche, a clerk at the U.S. Postal Service in Palm Springs, in a telephone interview Wednesday.

The Postal Service in the desert resort 110 miles east of here annually processes about 1,000 letters to Santa each year. Normally, workers send a letter in return.

But when Ms. Reusche saw John F. Wonggoun's letter from nearby Banning this year, she decided to do something more for the boy, who along with his mother was partially disabled in a 1981 traffic accident.

His letter read: "The only gift I would like is an elecric wheelchair for my mom. She can't walk and her hands are too weak for the one welfair (sic) gave her 2 years ago. I would love to see her outside without help and watch me play. Can you help me with my wish?"

Ms. Reusche and her fellow workers contacted Fortress Scientific Co. of Palm Springs, a wheelchair manufacturer, and it donated a three-wheeled, motorized wheelchair for John's mother, Victoria Coslett, 39.

"The Christmas spirit is incredible."

— Denise Reusche, U.S. Postal Service clerk

Then the workers bought a bunch of gifts for John, food for Christmas dinner and established a wheelchair maintenance fund. They delivered the gifts on Monday.

Stories about John's letter were distributed worldwide by The Associated Press.

Ms. Reusche said in addition to the newspaper stories, the postal workers were featured on several television and radio interviews.

"We had a call from New Zealand for a radio interview. A Sunnyvale man is sending a letter of encouragement, a train set and a gift for the mom because he had the same background. A lady in Connecticut said a group of women was getting together to do something for John after Christmas was over," she said.

The traffic accident left Ms. Coslett with ruptured spinal discs. John was partially brain damaged and suffers recurring seizures and memory lapses. He also has juvenile arthritis.

Ms. Coslett, in a telephone interview, said she was shocked by the reaction to her son's letter.

"I couldn't speak. All I could do was sit there and cry. He's done so many things, for me and for the kids out here (in the apartment complex). If he earns money here and there, he'll go out and buy a toy for one of the kids. He's never selfish," she said.

"Nothing has changed. He's floating on a cloud. He's happy the wheelchair is coming and I can be out there and watch him play," she said.

White Christmas not likely for area, state

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

It will be a partly cloudy Christmas weekend, but perfectly clear where snow is concerned — none in the forecast.

White Christmas?

"If there was any chance of precipitation, it would rain, not snow, because it just won't be cold enough," said a spokesman for the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

But West Texas is hardly alone. According to NWS, the entire state will be basically snow free for Christmas and beyond.

The weekend forecast calls for partly cloudy skies, with highs in the upper 50s and lows in the mid-30s. From West Texas to Central Kansas, meteorologists say precipitation will be below normal, with temperatures above normal through Dec. 31.

That forecast is in stark contrast to what Midlanders experienced Christmas Eve and Day of last year, when .04 inches of snow was recorded at the airport along with .26 inches of precipitation.

In fact, last Christmas left Midland and the entire Permian Basin in a deep freeze that closed the airport briefly and made roadway travel treacherous.

But this year, the weather is more suited for golf than skating. "We don't know what the winds will be like, but the temperatures will be nice," said a weather service spokesman. "If you want snow, you're going to have to head to the mountains of New Mexico."

WEATHER SUMMARY

Fair, cold conditions anticipated

From Staff and Wire Reports

Midlanders can expect mostly fair skies and colder temperatures tonight with the low expected to dip down into the middle 20s, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. Winds will be out of the west-southwest at 15-25 mph and gusty, creating a possible wind chill factor as low as -7.

Friday will be fair during the morning, becoming partly cloudy by the afternoon. The high will be in the lower 60s, and winds will be out of the south-southwest at 10-20 mph.

Wednesday's high of 68 was 13 degrees cooler than the record high of 81 set for that date in 1981. The overnight low of 43 was 35 degrees warmer than the record low of eight degrees set for this date in 1983.

STATE

Warm, windy conditions were expected to prevail across Texas through Friday.

There is a chance of showers over Southeast Texas and shower activity that dotted Northeast Texas was expected to end tonight. It will be windy east of the mountains in West Texas and across most of North Texas.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 30s and 40s, ranging from near 20 in the Panhandle to the 50s in extreme South Texas.

Highs Friday will be in the 50s in the Panhandle and in the 60s and 70s over the rest of West Texas, in the 60s and 70s across North Texas and in the 60s over northern portions of South Texas and in the 70s in the rest of the area.

A few widely scattered showers were reported early today over North Central Texas and a few showers dampened southern portions of the Edwards Plateau and the western sections of the middle Rio Grande plains.

Some dense fog was reported along middle and upper sections of the Texas coast.

Early morning temperatures were in the 30s in western sections of the Trans-Pecos and in the 40s in the High Plains and in the 50s and 60s over the rest of the state except in the Lower Rio Grande Valley where readings are in the lower 70s. Extremes ranged from 33 at El Paso and Marfa to 73 at McAllen.

Other early morning temperatures around the state included 48 at Amarillo, 60 at Wichita Falls, 65 at Fort Worth and Waco, 67 at Austin and San Antonio, 66 at Houston, 70 at Brownsville, 61 at San Angelo, 44 at Lubbock and 52 at Midland.

NATION

Snowstorms moved from the Pacific coast across the mountains of the West today as the rest of the nation enjoyed relatively tranquil weather.

A cold front crossing the Rockies today brought 5 to 20 inches of snow to California's Sierra Nevada. A second storm was expected to produce heavy snow today and a third may bring more heavy snow this weekend.

Winter storm warnings were in effect for California's Mount Shasta, Siskiyou Mountains and northern Sierra Nevada, where 12 to 18 inches of snow were possible, and for higher elevations of southwestern Oregon.

North notebooks to be subpoenaed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The prosecution says it plans to seek a subpoena for former White House aide Oliver North's notebooks in which he took copious daily notes while he was a key operative in the Iran-Contra affair.

John Keker, head of the prosecution team in the North case, disclosed the government's intentions Wednesday during a hearing in which U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesell set a Jan. 31 trial date for North.

North is charged with conspiring with former national security adviser John Poindexter and arms dealers Albert Hakim and retired Air Force Maj. Gen. Richard Secord to illegally divert more than $12 million in U.S.-Iran arms-sale profits to the Nicaraguan rebels.

North through his lawyer invoked his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination last May in refusing to turn over to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee dozens of his spiral-bound notebooks.

As a National Security Council aide, North took extensive notes on a variety of topics during phone calls and in the course of daily business with people in and out of the Reagan administration.

The notebooks, some 2,848 pages in all, first came up in testimony before Congress in the Iran-Contra hearings last year and portions of them previously given to congressional investigators also are sprinkled throughout with references to drugs, drug traffickers, the Drug Enforcement Administration and the CIA. But large segments — committee aides said about half the contents — have been blacked out by Brendan Sullivan, one of North's lawyers, or by White House censors.

Keker said the prosecution would file a motion in the next few days for the notebooks in North's possession, which he compiled while running the program to give covert aid to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua.

Did document 'trade' operate freely?

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pentagon employees, contractors and defense consultants regularly deal in a "black market" of classified Defense Department documents, and the government has closed its eyes to the practice for at least five years, congressional investigators say.

A staff report of the congressional Joint Economic Committee, released Wednesday, said the Pentagon's internal investigators discovered the practice in 1983 and sought to bring it to the attention of Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and the Justice Department.

But efforts to sound the alarm were ignored by higher-ups, leading some subordinates to believe the practice was condoned, according to testimony at a hearing of the panel's national security subcommittee.

In a practice that strongly parallels the pattern in the current Pentagon procurement fraud case, outside defense consultants would develop sources inside the Pentagon who could furnish them with classified data, the report said. Documents included secret bid specifications for weapons systems and long-range defense acquisition plans.

It could not be determined whether Pentagon employees were paid for the documents, the investigators testified.

The consultants then sold the secrets to contractors who could use them to get an edge on their competitors, at the same time depriving the government of the cost-saving benefits of open competition, the investigation concluded.

Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., the subcommittee chairman, said at the hearing the practice is even worse than the procurement fraud scandal because it involves not just business information, but secrets that if revealed could damage national security.

The practice, which witnesses said involved at least two dozen defense contractors, is continuing, said Donald Mancuso, an assistant Pentagon inspector general.

John F. Donnelly, director of the Defense Investigative Service, told the hearing eight of them are still under investigation.

He identified those as Boeing Co., General Dynamics Corp., Litton Systems Inc., Martin Marietta Corp., McDonnell Douglas Corp., Northrop Corp., Sanders Associates Inc. and TRW Inc. The Pentagon is investigating seven of the contractors while the FBI is investigating the eighth, he said later.

In a related development, the inspector general's office announced a record 596 firms were barred in fiscal 1988 from doing business with the military, and more than 4,000 people, most in uniform, were convicted of contracting misdeeds in just the last half of the year.

The report to Congress suggested department auditors are becoming more effective at finding waste, fraud and mismanagement. But it also was a reminder that industry wrongdoing remains pervasive.

The Joint Economic Committee's report noted that Pentagon investigators unearthed the "black market" in secret documents in 1983 while investigating an employee in California of GTE Corp., a defense contractor. The documents were obtained outside normal channels through a private consultant. A similar investigation in Ohio involving the National Aeronautics and Space Administration surfaced at about the same time.

But when investigators went to Pentagon superiors for support in broadening their investigation, their requests were largely ignored.

Only the GTE case went to court, where it is still pending. Lawyers for the contractor have contended in their defense that unauthorized possession of classified program, planning and budget documents is widespread in the industry.

By 1984, the Pentagon investigators had linked Defense Department officials, consultants and 25 contractors suspected of trafficking in classified documents. A memorandum from Pentagon Inspector General Joseph Sherick said consultants, "acting as information brokers, sell these documents to a number of major defense contractors."

PLO official denies group's involvement in 747 crash

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — A senior official of the Palestine Liberation Organization today said it was "nonsensical" to link Palestinians to the Pan Am airliner crash in Scotland.

"It cannot possibly occur to the Palestinians or the Arabs to commit such an act," Mahmoud Abbas, code-named Abu-Mazen, told reporters when asked about reports that the plane may have been downed by sabotage. "Any attempts to draw the Arabs into this are nonsensical."

The crash Wednesday night of the Boeing 747 en route from London to New York killed all 258 people on board and a number of villagers in Lockerbie, Scotland where it crashed. U.S. and British officials said the plane probably exploded in midair before the crash.

Abbas is a member of the 15-man PLO Executive Committee chaired by Yasser Arafat. He spoke after meeting with Foreign Minister Esmat Abdel-Meguid.

In Washington, a U.S. government source said the U.S. Embassy in Helsinki, Finland, received a telephone threat about two weeks ago from a person claiming to belong to the Abu Nidal group, a radical Palestinian faction that has been implicated in terrorist attacks.

The caller said a bomb would be placed aboard a Pan Am plane and that it would be carried by a woman, said the government source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Arafat publicly renounced terrorism last week and accepted other U.S. conditions, leading Washington to open a dialogue with the PLO after a 13-year ban on contacts with the group.

CRASH

Transport Secretary Paul Channon told the House of Commons that searchers had recovered both the airplane's flight recorders, the vital electronic devices which monitor all flight data and conversation by the pilots.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Prince Andrew, the Duke of York, visited Lockerbie and talked to rescuers.

Rifkind, the British Cabinet minister responsible for Scotland, said the widespread wreckage of the plane indicated "the aircraft clearly experienced some form of explosion."

"It's clear that the accident happened in the air because parts of the wreckage are strewn over such a wide area," said Rifkind, who toured the crash site with Price.

Price also said the way the plane had split into several sections "would indicate a midair explosion."

Asked on NBC-TV's Today show about the reported bomb threats, Price said: "No, we did not have any specific information such as that in London."

When he was asked how many Americans were on board, he said he "understood that there were some 49 servicemen" on the jet.

Also on the jet was John Mulroy, 59, director of international comunications for The Associated Press.

Wednesday's crash, the worst in British history, occurred 54 minutes after takeoff from London's Heathrow Airport and followed an apparently routine climb to a cruising altitude of 31,000 feet, airline officials and traffic controllers said. The only cause ruled out was a collision with another plane.

Freddie Yetman, technical secretary of the British Airline Pilots Association, said only sabotage or structural failure could have destroyed the airplane at that height.

Carnegie hero recalls his jump into swamp

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Fred James Lalumandier says if he'd had time to think, he may not have leaped 40 feet from a highway bridge to save an accident victim barely keeping his head up in a murky Louisiana swamp.

"I was just scared out of my wits. You could see stumps sticking out of the water," Lalumandier said Wednesday after he and William F. Kessler, 25, of Houston were honored by the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission for saving the life of Robert H. Fordham, 40, of Columbia, S.C.

"I was scared I was going to end up a human shish kabob. It scared me bad," he said in a phone interview from Bryan, Texas, where he was home for Christmas from his marketing studies at Texas A&M University.

Lalumandier, 23, and Kessler were driving Aug. 11 on a bridge where Interstate 10 crosses the Atchafalaya Swamp near Grosse Tete, La.. Fordham's tractor trailer, hauling radioactive fuel rods from South Carolina to a nuclear power plant in South Texas, jackknifed in a rain storm and collided with several vehicles from a crash that occurred moments earlier.

Fordham, who weighs about 270 pounds, was catapulted through his windshield into the water, where he was floundering, unable to swim because of back, hip and head injuries.

"Everybody around me was screaming to help him. He was screaming. It all happened so fast. I thought if I didn't do it, this guy was going to die," Lalumandier said.

The two men towed Fordham about 40 feet to a steep bank, where they waited an hour with him until a man arrived in a small fishing boat.

Five of those named by the commission died while trying to save others. The commission distributed $50,000 in awards to the 20 latest heroes or their survivors.

The other acts honored Wednesday were:

■ Stephen Douglas Gragg, 8, and Chad Eugene Gragg, 12, of Buckner, Mo., fell through ice and drowned Feb. 4 along with their brother, Aaron, 11, who fell through ice on a small pond and called to them for help.

■ Robert L. Merrifield, 22, of Corpus Christi, Texas, and Miguel Rodriguez Jr., 38, of Bay City, Texas, entered a tank and like the co-worker they were trying to save were overcome and died in the oxygen-deficient air. The accident occurred Aug. 26, 1987, on a drilling rig platform at Sabine Pass, Texas.

■ Everett H. Williamson, 32, of Cleveland died in a house fire along with Jeremy Williamson, 9, his nephew, after rousing Jeremy, his two brothers and their father. The others escaped.

■ Four people: Lionel E. Hicks, 32, of Picton, Ontario; Lawrence A. White, 27, of Toronto; R. Paul Vidito, 31, of Picton; and Paul Nelson Bartlett, 28, of Consecon, Ontario, entered the basement of a building in Picton Jan. 11, 1986, to rescue patrons of a restaurant who were trapped by debris following a gas explosion. All survived.

In the meantime, the Department of Public Safety estimates as many as 66 people will be killed on Texas streets and highways during the Christmas and New Year's holiday periods.

While the number of annual traffic deaths has been on a decline since 1984, DPS said those numbers have risen slightly when compared to 1987, when 3,261 people were killed.

The National Safety Council has designated two 78-hour counting periods for Christmas and New Year's beginning 6 p.m. Dec. 23 and ending midnight Dec. 26 and again 6 p.m. Dec. 30 through midnight Jan. 2.

DPS estimates as many as 32 people will die in traffic accidents during the Christmas period, with another 34 fatalities estimated for the New Year period. A year ago, 81 people died on Texas roads over the combined holidays.

Locally, DPS Safety Education Trooper Awilda Cartagena, said the department will kickoff Operation Holiday beginning at 6 p.m. Dec. 30. "We'll have more troopers on the road keying on DWI and speeding."

Ms. Cartagena said the department will utilize troopers from the License & Weights, Drivers License and Motor Vehicle divisions.

"Motorists should use a little common sense when traveling, especially when making long trips without rest periods...they need also to be aware of weather conditions when they're traveling to different areas," she said.

In observance of the Mothers Against Drunk Drivers Red Ribbon campaign, DPS said its patrol cars will sport red ribbons to remind motorists that drunken driving kills.

At Midland International Airport, Deputy Director Larry Roman encouraged holiday travelers to arrive early for departing flights. "Flights here are pretty much booked up and we expect a lot of people to be on standby."

Earlier today, the airport reported four delays — three of which involved incoming flights because of heavy fog conditions.

Roman said an American Airlines flight scheduled for departure at 6:30 a.m., finally left at 9 a.m. Two incoming flights involving Southwest Airlines were delayed up to 1½ hours.

He said a fourth flight, involving America West, arrived about 1½ hours late from Lubbock.

South Africa agrees to give up Namibia

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — South Africa signed an accord today granting independence to South-West Africa, the continent's last colony, which will become the black-ruled nation of Namibia.

South Africa's foreign minister, R.F. Botha, signed the pact at U.N. Headquarters along with the foreign ministers of Cuba and Angola, who also pledged to send home 50,000 Cuban troops posted in Angola.

U.S.-mediated negotiations over the last year led to the accords, which were witnessed by Secretary of State George P. Shultz, U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar and other diplomats.

"The regional settlement concluded here today represents a momentous turning point in the history of southern Africa," Shultz said.

"With the independence of Namibia, Africa's last colonial question will have been resolved. As the guns fall silent across the borders of southwestern Africa, the world will look to the nations" of the region to resolve "their pressing internal matters through peaceful means," he said, referring to the civil war beween Angola's government and U.S.-backed rebels.

"The governments and individuals gathered in this place have truly given the world a special gift," said Shultz.

The agreement is for a one-year transition to independence for Namibia to begin April 1.

The pact calls for 3,000 Cuban troops to leave Angola by April 1, and for all of them to be gone by July 1, 1991. Half of the 50,000 soldiers are to pull out by Nov. 1, 1989, when Namibia is to hold its first free elections for a national assembly, under U.N. supervision.

Foreign Ministers Isidoro Malmierca of Cuba and Afonso van Dumen of Angola then signed an agreement under which 70 U.N. peacekeepers will monitor the Cuban withdrawal from Angola.

Cuba, Angola and the United Nations do not officially recognize that the two accords are linked. They have always insisted on Namibia's independence as a matter of principle, without conditions.

South Africa insisted on the Cuban withdrawal in talks mediated by Chester Crocker, the U.S. assistant secretary of state for African affairs.

One diplomat who had been expected to attend was Bernt Carisson of Sweden, the U.N. commissioner for Namibia, who was aboard the Pam Am jetliner that crashed in Scotland Wednesday night.

Carisson, 50, was flying from London to New York when the plane crashed. No survivors were reported among the 259 passengers and crew.

A decade-old Security Council plan for Namibia's independence calls for about 2,000 civilian administrators and military police to back about 7,500 U.N. peacekeepers as South African troops withdraw and a civilian government is organized.

The South-West African People's Organization, which has fought South African forces in Namibia for more than 20 years, was not part of the accords but said it will honor a cease-fire.

The organization is recognized by the United Nations as the legitimate representative of the Namibian people and holds non-voting observer status in the world body.

The guerrillas battling the Marxist government of Angola were also excluded from the accords.

Crocker told reporters Wednesday that UNITA — the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola — also supports the accords.

Crocker indicated Washington will not give diplomatic recognition to Angola unless it holds peace talks with UNITA.

Angola has refused to talk with the rebels.

Cuban troops went to Angola in 1975 to help it fight invading South African troops and the guerrillas.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Israel forms government

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel's two largest political blocs today joined forces in another coalition government, and Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir called the move necessary to withstand world pressure to accept a Palestinian state.

Shamir also called on the United States to reverse its recent decision to hold talks with the PLO, which Israel considers a terrorist organization.

The agreement between Shamir's right-wing Likud bloc and the left-leaning Labor Party headed by Shimon Peres comes more than seven weeks after deadlocked general elections Nov. 1.

The new 28-member Cabinet will take office immediately after an expected vote of confidence by the 120-member parliament, the Knesset.

Shamir said the new government would stick by its policy of refusing contacts with the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Sudan confirms coup try

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — Security men foiled an attempt to topple the fragile coalition government of Prime Minister Sadek Mahdi and arrested more than two dozen members of a previous administration, officials said.

Defense Minister Abdul-Maguid Khalil said the coup was attempted Saturday against the Moslem government, whose factions are quarreling over a proposed peace agreement with Christian and animist rebels.

He confirmed a report in the newspaper Al-Siyassa, which said security personnel arrested 25 retired military officers and former civilian officials from the former government of President Gaafar Nimeiri.

Nimeiri was ousted in a coup April 6, 1985.

The Al-Siyassa report was the third newspaper report of an attempted coup in Sudan in the past two weeks.

After the report appeared, about 300 demonstrators ignored an emergency government order, gathering in Khartoum's Liberty Square to demand government approval of a tentative agreement to stop Sudan's civil war.

Relief officials estimate at least 500,000 people died this year from famine due to drought and civil war.

Moscow denies rebel ties

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze said today Moscow does not support local Marxist rebels and will not seek to "drive a wedge" between Manila and the United States.

Shevardnadze, the highest-ranking Soviet official ever to visit this former U.S. colony, also invited President Corazon Aquino to the Soviet Union before departing for North Korea after a 24-hour stay.

Mrs. Aquino said a date for her trip would be set after Foreign Secretary Raul Manglapus visits Moscow next year.

During a luncheon meeting with Mrs. Aquino, Shevardnadze said he had come to the Philippines "to dispel the myth" of a Soviet military buildup in Asia and to stress the need for negotiations "to sort out our differences."

"We have to take a first step toward building new relationships in the Asia-Pacific region," he said.

Book of Psalms buried with child 1,600 years old

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Scholars have determined a book bound in wood and leather and buried under a child's head more than 1,600 years ago is the earliest complete book of Psalms and probably the oldest book of any kind.

"We have for the first time a complete book of Psalms dating from the second half of the 4th century A.D., making it the oldest complete book of Psalms ever found," museum director Gawdat Gabra said Wednesday.

"Never before have we seen such an early book in Egypt, and I can find no evidence of an earlier true book anywhere. This volume is a book in every sense of the word," he said.

Gabra, director of Cairo's Coptic Museum, first saw the book within days of its discovery four years ago and has studied it for the past 2½ years. He is an Egyptologist as well as one of the world's top experts in Coptic studies.

The book includes about 490 parchment pages, bound between wooden covers stitched with leather. The Psalms are handwritten in a dialect of Coptic, a now-dead language of Old Greek characters supplemented by seven hieroglyphs from ancient Egypt's late period.

Gabra said the text contains many Greek and some Coptic words never seen before. It is written in brown ink derived from iron except in a few passages, where words were written over in black carbon ink in apparent attempts to repair damage. Wear is obvious where fingertips turned the parchment pages.

The book's pages were stuck together when it was found in 1984. All but the last five, two of which are blank, have been separated.

A tiny key of life carved from bone was attached to the book by leather threads. The key, or ankh, is a symbol from ancient Egypt that was incorporated in the Christian cross.

"It is the earliest complete book of Psalms, at the same time written in a new dialect for scholars, ad we have its whole history," said Martin Krause, Coptic studies professor of Munster University in West Germany.

"I must stress that this manuscript is important not only for Coptic study but for all Biblical traditions," said Krause, who has studied the text for four months.

The book was discovered by Egyptian antiquities inspectors in a cemetery for the poor about 85 miles south of Cairo and 25 miles north of a Greco-Roman city called Oxyrhynchus.

"Nothing indicated much of historical interest in the cemetery," Gabra said. "Some bodies were buried with textiles, but there was little else to be found.

"Then workers found the grave of a little girl, about 12 years old, and under her head was this book with the tiny key of life."

He said it is not known why the child was buried there, because the value of the book indicates her family must have been rich. "They must have loved her very much. Perhaps she was an only child," Gabra said. "To put something of such an immense value indicates how they felt about her. This book would have taken a long time to copy and would have cost a lot."

Gabra said the book has immense historical value, especially because it was found in a grave and did not arrive via antiquities smugglers. He said everything about the book can be documented.

Polish communists re-evaluating stance against Solidarity

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — In an apparent bid to create a younger, more reform-minded leadership, Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski has overhauled the ruling Politburo and offered the clearest indication yet that Solidarity may be reinstated.

At Wednesday's meeting of the Communist Party's governing Central Committee, Prime Minister Mieczyslaw Rakowski announced that the party would reevaluate its attitude toward the outlawed trade union federation.

"We are saying clearly that we desire to discuss the future model of the trade union movement — different from the present — together with the OPZZ (official union movement) and moderate leaders of former Solidarity," he said.

Reached today at his home in Gdansk, Solidarity leader Lech Walesa called Rakowski's remarks significant, but said direct talks with the government were needed to make sure the authorities are ready to legalize the union movement.

"It is a pretty far-reaching statement, and we hope we are talking about the same thing," Walesa said by telephone. "To see if it is, we will still have to conduct direct talks. We believe it is the point, but we want it formulated in a clearer manner."

"It is a signal, but we are saying once again that without Solidarity, without relegalizing Solidarity there is no possibility of agreement," Walesa said. The movement was crushed by a 1981 military crackdown and outlawed the following year.

Rakowski told committee members Wednesday to return to local party units and poll members on the subject of Solidarity and on Walesa.

He told them to return to Warsaw in mid-January with their answers at the 230-member body's next session: "Your answer...will decide about what we will do. And what we do will decide the future of socialism in Poland."

In the leadership shakeup, Jaruzelski removed six hardliners and veteran members from the Politburo in favor of younger pragmatists.

Among those promoted to full membership was Stanislaw Ciosek, a liberal who has been active in conducting talks with Walesa. Ciosek was also given an important additional post of full party secretary, where he was expected to assume responsibility for propaganda.

In all, eight new Politburo members were appointed, increasing the Politburo's size from 15 to 17 members. Four members of the Secretariat, responsible for day-to-day operations of the party, were replaced by new blood.

The two-day meeting was capped by Jaruzelski's plea to the opposition to accept the party's offer for talks. He said it appears Walesa can be trusted to keep a moderate course.

Referring to the opposition's formation Sunday of a Citizens Committee intended to gather mainstream anti-government forces in one structure under Walesa's leadership, Jaruzelski said:

"One can freely create governments in exile or shadow Cabinets-...but the real reconciliation of Poles is the cause of supreme importance. Our party opts for it decisively and honestly."

The newly named Secretariat members were: Ciosek; Zygmunt Czarzasty, the Slupsk province party chief who developed a reputation as a strong advocate of pragmatic reforms; Leszek Miller, a young party chief from Skierniewice province, and Marian Stepien, a high-ranking party ideologist.

Among those ousted from the Politburo was Zbigniew Messner, Rakowski's predecessor as prime minister who resigned in a barrage of criticism of his handling of the economy.

Poland is in the throes of an economic crisis and strikes last summer calling for the Solidarity's reinstatement only aggravated the situation.

In an attempt to make the centrally planned economy more market-oriented, the government raised prices by more than 40 percent early this year. Wages have not kept up.

New Politburo members were: Ciosek, Gabriela Rebisz, Kazimierz Cypryniak, Iwona Lubowska, Zdzislaw Swiatek, Viktor Pyrkosz, Janusz Reykowski and Zbigniew Michalek.

Jaruzelski had said personnel changes were necessary for the success of party reforms.

U.N. assembly adopts budget by consensus

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The General Assembly has adopted a budget by consensus for just the second time in U.N. history and the fiscal plan includes financial reforms backed by both the United States and Soviet Union.

The budget adopted Wednesday allocates $1.76 billion for 1990 and 1991, about $22 million less than the revised figures for the 1988-89 budget. It does not include funds for several special peacekeeping operations.

"In real terms, what is happening is staff is being reduced, so personnel costs are going down, and all other costs are being held at zero growth," said U.N. financial spokesman Fred Eckhard.

A staff reduction of 15 percent had been sought by the United States, Japan, Western European nations and the Soviet Union. U.N. officials said they fell short of that goal, reaching personnel cuts of about 12 percent so far.

The last time the General Assembly achieved unanimity on the budget was during its first working session in 1946.

The Soviets blocked consensus in the first decades of the world body; and the United States raised roadblocks in recent years and withheld part of its dues to agitate for reform.

The United States abstained on the budget resolution last year.

A U.N. spokesman expressed hope that the General Ass mbly's action Wednesday will enco rage Washington to pay more of its arrears to U.N. budgets. The United States is assessed for one-fourth of the U.N.'s regular budget.

By September, U.S. arrears to the budget had risen to well over $500 million. They currently stand at $337.3 million for the regular budget and $96.1 million for peacekeeping.

U.N. spokesman Francois Giuliani said Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar would renew his pleas for full U.S. payment of its share of the U.N. budget in meetings today with Secretary of State George P. Shultz.

U.S. delegate Noel L. Gross lauded the assembly action Wednesday as "a major step forward in implementing the wide-ranging administrative and budgetary reforms approved two years ago."

Chinese have chance to get rich

NINGBO, China (AP) — China's decade-old economic revolution has brought sharp changes in people's ambitions, lifestyles and social mores.

Whether in rapidly modernizing coastal cities such as Ningbo with its hotels, discos and high-rise apartments, or in nearby towns where peasants still thresh grain by hand, Chinese are saying the changes in their lives go far deeper than mere gains in income.

The surge in economic activity has brought new opportunities, new risks and new rivalries as some people get rich faster than others.

One who epitomizes the new Chinese dream of success is Xu Kaya.

A former peasant and assembly line worker, he presides over one of the largest private companies in Cixi, a rural town outside Ningbo. His television parts factory will turn out 3 million yuan ($804,000) worth of goods this year, and he is a partner in a new chemical fibre factory being built.

He has a Toshiba color television set, a Nissan sedan and a maid.

Ten years ago, Xu was planting rice on a commune, his dreams of studying medicine thwarted by the shutdown of universities by Mao Tse-tung's 1966-76 leftist Cultural Revolution.

"I learned to overcome difficulties and developed a strong desire to get ahead," he said.

Now 33, he spends 12 to 13 hours a days at his factory. He has no time to think about joining the Communist Party, once necessary for success in China.

"I rely on my own ability," he said.

Nor does he fear political change.

"If they call me a capitalist, they'd have to call 70 percent of the population capitalists."

Jiang Yuenan, a young Cixi government worker, agreed. Local farmers, he said, are always on the lookout for a profitable venture and most have more than one source of income.

Some rent trucks to haul their produce 55 miles to Ningbo, a city of 1 million people, for the best prices, or to act as middlemen in business deals, or buy up raw materials in one town to sell for profit in another.

Such activities were politically suspect 10 years ago, but they are now part of daily life in rural China.

City dwellers are not far behind.

Zhang Hangtie, a barber, is one of 60,000 Ningbo residents who have opened private businesses in the past decade, and he revels in it both for the profits and the independence.

"I am my own boss," he said as he blow-dried a customer's hair in his tiny shop in the front room of a traditional two-story wood row house. "I wanted to get rich and now I can."

But not all Chinese are able to do that. Income differentials have widened sharply, creating new social tensions rooted in jealousy.

A Beijing newspaper reported the case of a woman factory worker who beat up a private tradesman on the street because she was angered by his flamboyant lifestyle. Private factory owners in several cities have been attacked and even killed by workers who accused them of exploitation for giving themselves higher salaries.

The World Economic Herald of teeming Shanghai, which is 125 miles north of Ningbo, said recently that many people's expectations have far exceeded what is possible, and "the general sense of frustration is threatening to snowball."

Some older Chinese say the new opportunities came too late for them, while they and others are reluctant to plunge into market competition and risk losing the guarantees of a state-run economy: lifetime employment, free medical care and subsidized food and housing.

Yu Jin, a 26-year-old city-employed translator, said he'd thought about setting up a private translation service for foreign visitors to Ningbo, but feared giving up his secure government job.

One large group left behind in the reforms are intellectuals, who survived decades of political suspicion in the Mao years and now find themselves surpassed in income by Zhang the barber and factory workers.

Chen Lianjun, the 41-year-old vice principal of the Ningbo high school, said she earns 180 yuan ($48) a month, including subsidies for food and books; Zhang earns 800 yuan ($214) a month. "It seems unfair," she said.

"If they call me a capitalist, they'd have to call 70 percent of the population capitalists."

— Factory manager Xu Kaya

"I am my own boss. I wanted to get rich and now I can."

Daughter says Pancho Villa 'worked for a good cause'

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Alicia Ayala never got to know Dad. He was always on the road after she was born. Not only on the road, he was frequently being chased by the Mexican army or chasing the army.

Alicia Ayala's father was the controversial revolutionary leader Pancho Villa.

"He had my mother kidnapped when she was just 16 and married her. She told me she cried when his men grabbed her and took her to him, but he called for a priest and married her. Then she really learned to love him," Ayala said.

Ayala's mother, Margarita, who died in April, was one of seven women that Villa married.

"She was proud of him, proud to be his wife," Ayala said. "Even though he had a harem."

The New Orleans resident said that she resented her father for years, thinking that he had abandoned her and her mother. She said that she finally came to believe that the revolution, and circumstances kept them apart.

After their marriage, Ayala said her mother traveled with Villa during the height of the 1910 revolution. When she became pregnant, however, Margarita returned to her mother's home in the southern Mexico town of LaBarka to await the birth.

After Ayala was born, she said her grandmother became ill and her mother stayed on to care for her.

"She always planned to rejoin him," Ayala said. "But something always happened. When I was very small we visited him a couple of times. He was always on the go. When he was ambushed he was on the verge of sending for my mother to join him."

Villa, who made peace with the Mexican government after the overthrow of dictator Porfirio Diaz and fellow revolutionary Venustiana Carranza, retired to a ranch in Durango Province where he was assassinated in 1923.

"What I remember about him is like in a dream. Maybe it was a dream. I have this picture in my mind of sitting on his lap."

Her mother told her she got her reddish hair and freckles from her father, she said. She also tried to explain Villa's actions which included kidnapping, killings, and even a raid of Columbus, N.M., that destroyed part of the town and left 16 residents dead.

"She said he had a big heart, but it was just circumstances that said he had to be stern and even evil sometimes, I guess. He was leading an army from a poor country and he had to have money to run this army," Ayala said.

Ayala said she got to know several of Villa's six other children and two of his other wives, and over the years she thinks she's learned to know her father.

"I've read so much about him and seen all of the movies they made about him. None of them do him justice. I think my father worked for a good cause. He fought the dictator who had kept the lower classes in slavery and kept them ignorant," she said.

She also remembers her mother crying the day she learned of her father's death.

"I asked her what was wrong and she said, 'Oh, they killed Villa.' And then I cried with her."

Grandson says glasnost must recognize Trotsky

By CANDICE HUGHES

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The grandson of Leon Trotsky sat in the room where one of Stalin's assassins killed the old revolutionary with an ax and pondered how far the new, more enlightened Kremlin would go toward making amends.

"If glasnost wants to have authenticity...it must recognize the proper place of Leon Trotsky" in history, Esteban Volkow Bronstein said, using the word denoting the more open Soviet policies of Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

The latest sign of change came Dec. 6, when Volkow received permission to visit his half-sister Alexandra, who is dying of cancer in Moscow. He has not been to the Soviet Union or seen his sister in 57 years, and learned only last month that she was alive.

"It's all part of Gorbachev's policy," Volkow said, and Trotsky has been emerging slowly from "the dark cave" of Soviet history since glasnost began.

"For 50 or 60 years the Russian public has been conditioned to think of him as almost the devil," his grandson said. "You can't change black to white in one day."

TROTSKY

Leon Trotsky, born Lev Davidovich Bronstein in 1879, was among the most popular leaders of the 1917 Bolshevik revolution — commander of the Red Army, commissar for war and foreign affairs, the right hand of Lenin. After losing a power struggle with Josef Stalin, he became a "nonperson."

Stalin exiled him in 1929 and Trotsky's name was stricken from Soviet history. Photographs and film were doctored to erase his image. Real and imagined followers were hunted down, and imprisoned or killed.

Trotsky's road ended on a summer afternoon at his desk in the modest house in Coyoacan, which in those days was a quiet village. Coyoacan is enveloped by the smog of Mexico City now, but in the house itself little has change since the assassin entered it Aug. 20, 1940, with a mountaineer's ice ax.

It has no plaques, polished display cases or uniformed guards, but there is a caretaker to greet visitors. He answers the bell, shows them through the rooms and hands them the guest book to sign.

"There was a terrible solitude, an emptiness here in the house," Volkow said, remembering the years after the assassination.

Volkow was born in the Soviet Union to Trotsky's daughter Zina and now is 62, a semi-retired chemical engineer.

Trotsky's house always has attracted a few Soviet visitors, he said, but more have come in the past year or so.

"They are opening windows in Russia," Volkow said. "They are turning on the light. There is a freshness."

Glasnost has not altered Trotsky's official status but his name sometimes is mentioned publicly and the Soviet Supreme Court rehabilitated a son, Volkow's step-uncle Sergei Sedov, who died in a Stalin purge.

In September, the Communist Party newspaper Pravda called Trotsky an "enemy of Stalin" rather than an enemy of "socialism" and the revolution.

"I believe that his heroic struggle, almost alone, against one of the most terrible, the bloodiest tyrannies in history is the stage of his life that is going to have the most historical importance," Volkow said.

A quiet river that ran behind Trotsky's house two generations ago has become a stream of vehicles belching fumes on a freeway, but in the shadowed rooms, behind thick walls, time seems congealed.

"It's curious. He didn't live here long...but he impregnated the house with his presence," the grandson said.

The bloodstains on Trotsky's chair have faded but bullet holes from an earlier assassination attempt still pock the bedroom walls.

He had the windows shuttered with steel and the gateway bricked up after the attack May 24, 1940, by Mexican Stalinists with machine guns.

Three months later, a Stalinist agent who had insinuated himself into the Trotsky circle attacked with the ice ax. When Volkow, then 14, entered the room his grandfather lay on the floor, bleeding, his wife at his side.

The assassin spent 20 years in prison but his identity never was confirmed. He was thought to be a Spaniard, Ramon del Rio Mercader, but also was known as Jacques Mornard and Frank Jackson.

Volkow said Trotsky treated each day after the May attack as a bonus: "Every morning after he got up, he would say 'Another day of life, Natalia. Another day of life.'"

Natalia Sedov, Trotsky's second wife, lived in the house for more than 20 years after the assassination. She died in Paris in 1962.

In the garden, a simple gray stone monument carved with a hammer and sickle encloses the ashes of Trotsky and Natalia.

A red flag flutters overhead.

Town wants to be known as home of hamburger

SEYMOUR, Wis. (AP) — This northeastern Wisconsin city is laying claim to national fame as the birthplace of the hamburger, and it's prepared for a beef with any city that thinks otherwise.

"We're going to establish Seymour as the national home of the hamburger," vowed Thomas Duffey, a member of the Home of the Hamburger Steering Committee.

The group was formed about two years ago to look into promoting the city as the 1885 birthplace of the hamburger.

Committee members think potential challenges to the title could come from St. Louis and New York City.

"We would welcome another city if they want to debate this," said Dick Tepp, committee chairman. "It would only help us."

He said no other city could match Seymour's research of the origins of the hamburger. The group even has asked the daughter of the supposed hamburger-founder Charles R. Nagreen to help.

Nagreen's sole survivor, Violet Gauerke, of Appleton, said her father was 15 years old when he coined the name of the hamburger to refer to the fried ground beef patties served at the Outagamie County Fair in Seymour on Aug. 14, 1885.

"He was well known as Hamburger Charley," she said.

Seymour expects to stake its claim as the hamburger capital next August during its annual Seymour Celebration Days.

Problems of cities need to get action

Five-second quiz: Who has held the position of U.S. secretary of Housing and Urban Development for the last eight years of the Reagan administration?

Don't be embarrassed if you don't know the answer. We had to look it up ourselves to be certain it is Samuel R. Pierce Jr.

Pierce's obscurity reflects the lack of federal attention to problems of the nation's cities during the Reagan years. Cities have sustained deep cuts in federal funds, and it shows.

Drug abuse and the array of other serious crimes it fosters have increased dramatically, the quality of many city schools has suffered and low-cost housing and public transportation as well as the urban environment have been woefully neglected.

The National League of Cities, meeting in Boston this week, is calling upon the forthcoming Bush administration to establish a new partnership between cities and the White House, as well as Congress. Bush should give the cities the attention they deserve.

League leaders acknowledge that the federal budget deficit will not permit the cash spigot to be turned on fully. That really wouldn't be a solution in itself anyway. Throwing federal dollars at a problem doesn't always constitute a remedy, but there are numerous ways the federal government can help cities that don't require direct financial aid. They include encouragement of child-care facilities through low-interest Small Business Administration loans; policies that promote new home rental and ownership programs, regulations that require new disposable products to be non-toxic and recyclable or biodegradable, and tax policies that stimulate development and maintenance of public transportation systems.

The nation cannot afford to let its cities and their many millions of citizens be neglected by the federal government for another four years.

Another View:

HUD's real leader

Jack Kemp, the old quarterback, knows a thing or two about rallying a debilitated, demoralized team. As secretary of housing and urban development, he will have ample opportunity to demonstrate those leadership skills.

HUD under Samuel Pierce has been moribund for the past eight years. Its budget has taken a larger hit, percentage-wise, than any other Cabinet-level agency. And Pierce, known as "Silent Sam" around Washington, has acquiesced in his agency's demise. He was so silent, in fact, he once had to be introduced to President Reagan.

The energetic Kemp won't be content staying on the sidelines of the new administration. This "entrepreneur of ideas," as he has been called, will shake things up rather quickly.

Kemp, a failed presidential aspirant and then a spurned vice-presidential hopeful, is leaving Congress after 18 years as a representative from Buffalo, N.Y. Throughout the Reagan years, he has been at the center of the debate on how to stimulate economic growth in this country. It was Kemp who popularized the term "supply-side economics." The tax-cutting plan bearing his name, which passed Congress in 1981, was the heart of Reaganomics.

Kemp also has preached that the Republican Party must expand its political base with the support of poor and minority voters. He has spoken of "empowering the poor." On Monday, he paraphrased the late Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., saying he had an "audacious faith" in the nation's ability to restore hope to "distressed inner cities and those who live in poverty and despair."

Kemp has proposed programs to encourage businesses to locate in depressed urban areas and to encourage housing revitalization in inner cities. He supports urban homesteading as a way to encourage the poor to own and rehabilitate abandoned housing, and he has pushed for the sale of public housing to tenants.

Kemp's urban-enterprise-zone proposal, designed to attract investment to inner cities, has never become federal policy, although 35 states have such zones. As HUD secretary, he will be in a position to propose incentives to encourage other states to follow.

Jack Kemp takes over at HUD at a time when housing for the poor is becoming more and more scarce and the problems of the inner cities are as intractable as ever. Kemp doesn't believe that the federal government alone can solve these problems, as President-elect Bush noted on Monday. But he won't shrink from problem-solving, and he will help keep a spotlight on pressing urban issues. HUD, once again, will have a real leader.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Dec. 22, the 357th day of 1988. There are nine days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Dec. 22, 1944, during the World War II Battle of the Bulge, the Germans demanded the surrender of encircled American troops at Bastogne, Belgium. Brigadier General Anthony C. McAuliffe gave his famous one-word reply: "Nuts!" The Americans were able to hold out until additional U.S. forces ended the siege four days later.

On this date:

In 1775, a Continental naval fleet was organized in the rebellious American colonies under the command of Ezek Hopkins.

In 1807, Congress passed the Embargo Act, designed to force peace between Britain and France by cutting off all trade with Europe.

In 1864, during the Civil War, Union General William T. Sherman sent a message to President Abraham Lincoln from Georgia, saying, "I beg to present you as a Christmas gift the city of Savannah."

In 1894, French army officer Alfred Dreyfus was convicted of treason in a court-martial that triggered worldwide charges of anti-Semitism. (Dreyfus was ultimately vindicated.)

In 1941, British Prime Minister Winston Churchill arrived in Washington for a wartime conference with President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

In 1963, an official 30-day mourning period for President John F. Kennedy ended.

In 1971, the United Nations General Assembly voted to ratify the election of Kurt Waldheim to be secretary-general.

In 1977, three dozen people were killed when a 250-foot grain elevator at the Continental Grain Company plant in Westwego, La., exploded.

In 1984, in a case that drew national attention, New York City resident Bernhard Goetz shot four black youths on a Manhattan subway, claiming they were about to rob him.

Ten years ago: In Guyana, a coroner's jury ruled that nearly all of the more than 900 people who died at the Peoples Temple commune in Jonestown had been murdered, with the exception of two that the jury said committed suicide, and one who may or may not have committed suicide.

Five years ago: PLO chairman Yasser Arafat, driven into exile from Lebanon by Syrian-backed Palestinian rebels, stopped in Cairo, Egypt, where he received a warm welcome from President Hosni Mubarak.

One year ago: The Reagan administration criticized Israel's handling of the Palestinian uprising in the occupied territories, particularly the military's use of live ammunition against civilians.

Today's Birthdays: Lady Bird Johnson is 76. TV personality Gene Rayburn is 71.

JACK ANDERSON

Nancy the beast in Reagan fairy tale

WASHINGTON — Helene von Damm invested 21 years of her life in Ronald Reagan — rising from his secretary to ambassador to her native Austria. Hers is a Cinderella story turned sour with a heroic president and a wicked queen by his side.

Jack Anderson

President Reagan keeps his Teflon coating in von Damm's soon-to-be-released autobiography, "At Reagan's Side," (Doubleday) — the first of the post-Reagan memoirs. Von Damm may have set the tone for Monday-morning quarterbacking of the Reagan era. The immensely popular president is portrayed as larger than life while the first lady takes the fall.

Von Damm claims that Nancy Reagan secretly forced her out of the adminstration in 1985 and plotted with moderate Cabinet members to soften the president's conservative agenda. The usual bad guys, Ed Meese and Lyn Nofziger, rate favorable observations from von Damm. But she rifles the normally bullet-proof reputations of George Shultz and James Baker.

Our associate Scott Sleek reviewed an advance copy of von Damm's book.

Von Damm was Reagan's secretary when he was governor of California, and she followed him to the White House. There she grew restless, saying that the president was "so undemanding he never even asked me to sharpen a pencil for him or get a cup of coffee." She admits Reagan had a lax management style and describes her boss as a kind man with a great sense of humor who never spoke ill of anyone and was oblivious to White House infighting.

Nancy Reagan was not oblivious. Von Damm paints her as unpredictable and power-hungry. Mrs. Reagan felt threatened by the influence of then-National Security Adviser William Clark, particularly his hard line against the Soviet Union. Von Damm claims the first lady and her allies, Shultz, Baker and Michael Deaver, smuggled the Soviet ambassador into the White House to see Reagan in 1983 without telling Clark. It was their attempt to move Reagan toward warmer relations with the Soviet Union, she suspects.

"I can't say what their motivations were," von Damm writes. "But I believe that Shultz was after the acclaim of the press and possibly a Nobel Peace Prize, while Mrs. R was hoping the summitry would prove popular with the public for her husband."

Von Damm drops some juicy anecdotes about sexism in the White House. Male Cabinet members referred to then-presidential aide Elizabeth Dole as "schoolmarmish." They were even less flattering to U.N. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick. "I remember how shocked I was, after Jeane had taken a particularly tough stand at a meeting, to hear the boys wondering if 'it was the wrong time of the month,'" von Damm writes.

Reagan promoted von Damm to be his personnel assistant, and then in 1983, he offered her an ambassador's post, but Mrs. Reagan stood in the way. She called von Damm in for a private chat and pressured her to turn down the post, saying Reagan needed her at home. "Apparently, in her eyes, my career had progressed far enough," von Damm writes.

Von Damm accepted the post in Austria, but that's where her carriage turned into a pumpkin. She divorced her husband and married an Austrian hotel owner. Von Damm said the circumstances surrounding her marriage gave Nancy Reagan ammunition to end her career. In 1984, Shultz told von Damm that the president wanted her to resign. Von Damm is convinced it was the first lady's idea, but she threw in the towel anyway.

CHAOS IN OPEC — U.S. intelligence reports claim that the OPEC oil cartel is breaking apart. Despite recent posturing by the cartel, our sources believe oil prices could dip to $10 a barrel by early next year — one-fourth the price in 1980. The oil-rich nations are cutting each other's throats over market share and that will drive the prices down. Low gas prices would give the Bush administration an excuse to step in with a gas tax which is now being discussed behind closed doors. The excuse would be that low oil prices pose a national security threat because the United States would become more dependent on oil imports.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Secretary of State George Shultz took his lumps for refusing a visa to Yasir Arafat. The Palestine Liberation Organization leader had to hold his soiree out of town — an inconvenience that was blown up into an international error. But Shultz was right to play hardball with Arafat. The PLO leader can't be trusted. The United States had to keep saying "no" to his overtures until Arafat was forced to renounce terrorism and recognize Israel in no uncertain terms. Now the United States must proceed with caution. Arafat is still a con man, but at least he's a con man who was forced to go on the record.

Reformed smoker 'heats up' smoking car

By mistake I took a seat in the smoking section of the Metroliner to New York the other day. I hadn't been in a smoking area of anything for five years so I was excited to be with so many dedicated puffers.

Art Buchwald

After I sat down, I glanced around me. The travelers in the section appeared to have a sallow look on their faces and bags under their eyes. I also noticed that there wasn't much chatter. Each person had his own cigarette and seemed to be deep in thought.

The man next to me was particularly gray. He pulled a Pall Mall out of a package and lit it with shaking hands.

I tried to make friendly conversation with him. "I used to be a smoker. I gave it up five years ago, but I don't mind other people smoking because I feel that what they do to their breathing organs is their own business."

He inhaled deeply and blew the smoke in my face.

"Some of my best friends are smokers," I assured him. "They're neat people, too, even though most of them have nicotine stains on their fingers. But I respect them for sticking up for their beliefs. It's not easy to light up a Camel these days and hear the roar of the crowd."

The man stared at his shoes.

"I was a cigar smoker," I said. "I must have smoked seven or eight a day, and nobody liked me because my clothes always smelled funny. So I said to myself, 'I have to change my way of life and become part of the human race, even if it means renouncing Monte Cristos and Upmanns.' It wasn't easy, but what choices did I have? The intensive care units of hospitals all over the country kept sending me brochures with discount offers."

The man looked out the window at Trenton and puffed smoke against the glass.

"What I find most interesting about smokers," I told him, "is that they never say much. They're mostly thinking. I have no idea what kind of thoughts you have, but you give the impression that you know something I don't. Whenever I see people smoking outside the building where they work, I say to myself, 'I wish I could get into their heads and find out what is really going on.'"

The man's cigarette was slowly burning down, and I could see smoke curling up into his nostrils. I was feeling a little woozy myself, but I was afraid that if I moved I would hurt his feelings.

I waited until we passed Princeton to engage him in further conversation, when he was on his fourth cigarette. "I like cigarette advertisements because they always suggest that cigarettes and sex go together. Do you smoke in bed with your wife?" I asked.

"Why don't you just buzz off," he said in what could have been interpreted as an angry voice.

"No offense," I said. "It's just that I haven't been in the smoking section for so long I have all these questions stored up and they just seem to pour out of me. By the way, you have burned a hole in your suit."

The man called over to the conductor, "This passenger is in a smoking section and he's not smoking."

The conductor lifted me up by my arms and said, "You go down to the other car, sonny, and stay there. These people have enough to worry about without being driven crazy by a troublemaker like you."

GEORGE F. WILL

Israel isn't dying for world's kind words

WASHINGTON — The world is weary. Vernon Walters says so. Walters is not merely U.S. ambassador to the United Nations. He presumed to speak in Geneva for the entire "international community." That grand assemblage was the "we" in this Walters' sentence: "We must tell them (Israel and her enemies) that we are tired of this conflict...."

George F. Will

Such fine impartiality between our ally and those bent on her destruction. U.S. policy is indeed that Israel should cooperate with the U.S.-PLO peace charade because the world is weary.

U.S. officials scripted the rhetorical sanitization of Yasser Arafat. They did so on the assumption that a murderer will not lie. By reading the script, Arafat presumably (the State Department's presumption) repealed the PLO charter. It says Palestine is "indivisible" and vows "the elimination of Zionism in Palestine."

The snowball of appeasement gathers momentum. The United Nations will henceforth refer to the PLO as "Palestine," and why not? U.S. policy has been reversed. It now de facto accepts the PLO as "the sole legitimate representative" of Palestinians, thereby shredding the U.S. "commitment" to direct negotiations between Israel and Jordan.

The administration says negotiation with the PLO does not involve recognition of a Palestinian state. But last Sunday, Assistant Secretary of State Richard Murphy was asked: If the PLO really has recognized Israel's right to exist, does he now expect so-called "moderate" Arab states to do likewise? His answer was that most of them "accepted explicitly Resolution 242 years ago. What happened this past week was that the PLO accepted 242 and thereby (sic) Israel's right to exist."

"Thereby"? The U.S. pretense has been that the PLO must meet three distinct tests — renunciation of terrorism, acceptance of Israel's right to exist and acceptance of 242. Now Murphy says the third requirement incorporates the second. Regarding terrorism, Arafat has renounced it before, has consistently lied about it, and now has been given preemptive immunity from blame for future acts of it. That is the consequence of U.S. officials saying in chorus that Arafat cannot control the "extremists" and is himself a potential victim because of his moderation. (This moderate gave the order, by telephone from Beirut, for the murder of the U.S. ambassador in Khartoum.)

In 1980 Ronald Reagan said, with uncontestable accuracy: "Israel and Jordan are the two Palestinian states envisioned and authorized by the United Nations." Reminded of that last Sunday, Murphy said: "We do not consider Jordan the (sic) Palestinian state." "We"? The Foreign Service? Has anyone told the President that he has changed his mind?

The inescapable logic of Murphy's language is U.S. support for a PLO state. So Rita Hauser, the Jews' Jesse Jackson said to have converted Arafat to peace in our time, had better catch up with Arafat's deputy, Abu Iyyad. He has not got the message. Last week he said in an Arabic language publication: "The establishment of a Palestinian state on part of the land of Palestine is a stage toward the final goal — the establishment of a state on all of Palestine."

For months before the unveiling in Algiers of the latest PLO peace tactic, PLO spokesmen assured Arabic-speaking audiences that it would be only a tactic of war — only a means of implementing the "Phased Policy" adopted in 1974. That "incremental" policy calls for shrinking Israel to indefensible borders as a precondition of ridding "indivisible" Palestine of "the Zionist entity." Abadallah al-Khouran, a member of the PLO executive committee, told an Arabic-language publisher, "The proclamation of the Palestinian state is the first step toward obliterating the new Zionist-Fascist state."

Ah, but the assumption of Western appeasers is that PLO officials are impeccably sincere when reading U.S. scripts and are nicely insincere when contradicting them. The "appearance" of extremism is "really" the prudence of the moderates. So last Sunday's New York Times Magazine contained this gem:

"Nowadays, PLO officials will tell you privately, (Arafat's) uniform and gun are something of an affectation, a bit of symbolism meant to reassure the PLO hard-liners....." The quantity of such private insights from unnamed "moderates" equals the quantity of Western gullibility. Luckily for Arafat, no hard-liners read such Western articles and discover the ruse.

The lame-duck Reagan administration, which is not lame enough, is limping out of town, sending a dangerous signal to our watching enemies: The United States gets tired. You can wait us out.

The whole wide world is tired — Walters, the international scold, says so — so Israel is supposed to jeopardize her survival to satisfy the "international community." But as Golda Meir said, Jews are used to collective eulogies, but Israel will not die so that the world will speak well of it.

CLARIFICATION: In a Sept. 4 column about an election race, I reported that Nevada Sen. Chic Hecht's press secretary said that Senate colleagues either ridiculed or ignored Hecht. Michael Miller, the press secretary, has since advised me that his quote referred to the news media, not to Hecht's colleagues in the Senate.

Blood center extends hours, seeks extra donors

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Hours at Midland's blood bank have been lengthened in hopes of attracting donors needed to offset a shortage of a crucial blood clotting component.

The Permian Basin Blood Center is in need of platelets, cells extracted from whole blood that are integral to the body's blood clotting function.

Accident victims often require platelets to help stop their bleeding, Heather Pregger explained.

Ms. Pregger, interim donor recruiter, said today if more blood isn't donated, the bank would have to turn to cities such as Dallas and Houston for help if it runs out of platelets.

While blood components are screened for the AIDS virus on an extensive basis, Ms. Pregger nonetheless said she'd rather have local donors than ones from cities in Texas where prevalence of the disease is high.

There is a shortage of platelets because the cells are not freezable and are good for only five days, she said.

Plasma and red blood cells, two other whole blood components, are good for a year and six weeks respectively, she said.

The donor recruiter estimated the Permian Basin Blood Center has enough blood platelets to last until Christmas Day.

She is pushing for 30 donors a day, a large number, but one that is required to meet the needs of Midland.

To donate blood at the bank, a person must weigh at least 110 pounds, be between the ages of 18 and 66, have good health, not be pregnant or have had hepatitis.

People taking medications are usually welcomed, though the bank discourages those currently taking antibiotics or cardiac medications.

A confidential questionaire is dispersed to initially rule out those who may be at high risk for AIDS, the fatal disease that renders the body's immune system defenseless.

There is absolutely no way a person donating blood can come into contact with the AIDS virus, she added.

The blood bank opens daily at 8 a.m. and will be open tonight, next Tuesday and Thursday until 7:30 p.m. On other days the bank closes at 3:30 p.m.

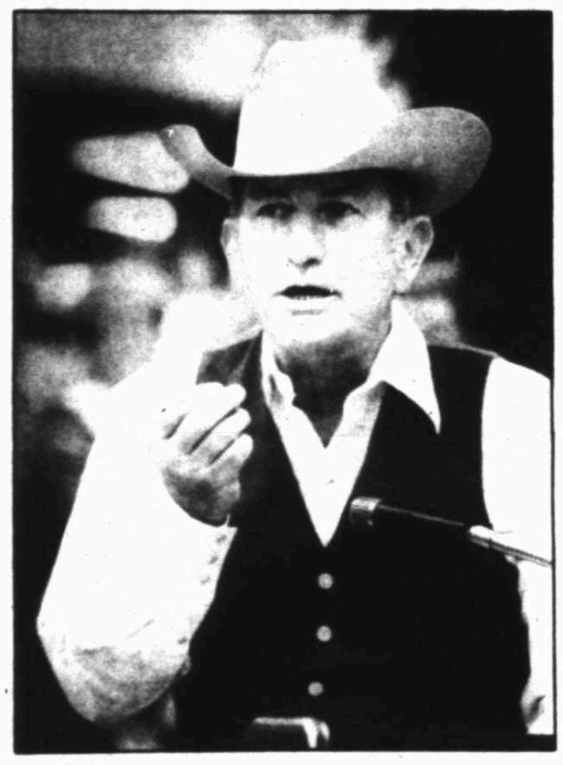

For more information on helping Midland with its need for blood platelets, call the Permian Basin Blood Center at 685-1636.

Town hopes jail museum draws visitors

SAN ELIZARIO (AP) — At a few minutes past midnight, one day early in the fall of 1876, Billy the Kid rode up to the two-room adobe hut that served as the El Paso County Jail in the village of San Elizario.

He had ridden more than 81 miles in six hours to break his friend, Malaquiades Segura, out of the old jail. And he did just that.

Now, 112 years later, some folks in San Elizario — which long ago lost its status as the El Paso County seat — hope to turn that old jail into a museum and gift shop and to use Billy the Kid's jailbreak to draw tourists to their poor and largely bypassed village 25 miles southeast of downtown El Paso.

"We want to build San Elizario as a tourist attraction because we are the oldest community in El Paso County," said Anne Enriquez, vice president of the Mission Trails Committee.

"We are an historical town, a true Old West community, and we need to find ways to improve our economic situation. I think the jail will attract tourists even more once we refurbish it."

The jail and the Kid are the foundation on which these hopes are built.

As the story goes, Billy, who had earned his notoriety in New Mexico, tricked a jailer into the opening the door. Then the Kid grabbed his sleeve and drew him toward a corner of the building. Billy kept the guard quiet by brandishing his revolver and persuaded him to hand over the keys.

Moments later, Segura was freed from the steel cell and helped shackle the two guards. They wound up in the cell while Segura escaped to freedom with the Kid.

It perhaps should be noted that the story of Billy the Kid's daring San Elizario jailbreak has been questioned by an occasional historian.

But Sheldon Hall, president of the Mission Trails Committee, insists: "Nobody can dispute that Billy the Kid actually did rescue Segura in 1876 from the San Elizario Jail.

"Pat Garrett, the man who actually shot and killed the Kid a few years later, wrote the book that describes the escape attempt."

The Mission Trails Committee is trying to lure tourists to El Paso's historic Lower Valley.

Odessan says public defeats pre-parole center plan

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The leader of a north Ector County neighborhood effort to block establishment of a commercially operated pre-parole release center at West 81st Street and West County Road North says public support defeated the plan.

Bill Lipham, 812 New Castle Court, who owns and operates BTS Enterprises Inc., a tire company at 7409 West County Road North, said, "We may never know how many people signed petitions, but those we got back had 600 or 700 names on them."

Lipham said he received word Monday that a public meeting scheduled for Wednesday at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin by the state Board of Pardons and Paroles had been canceled because the bid submitted by Volunteers of America had withdrawn its bid for a contract to accept as many as 75 pre-parole prisoners from the Texas Department of Corrections.

Arlington-based VOA had initiated negotiations to purchase the former industrial site and planned to establish a minimum security pre-parole release center.

Lipham said he first learned of the plan from a Dec. 10 newspaper legal notice announcing the Wednesday public hearing.

Having been involved in a effort nearly two years ago to block a project that called for converting an old motel on Andrews Highway into a minimum security rehabilitation facility, Lipham said he began contacting some of the same people who had been involved.

"About 25 people have been spending a lot of time" on this, he said.

Upon hearing of VOA's bid withdrawal, Lipham canceled a meeting of area residents that had been scheduled for Monday to organize protesters for the public hearing.

Gunman robs Murray's Delicatessen of between $1,000, $2,000

From Staff Reports

A man armed with a pistol and wearing a ski mask robbed a popular Wadley Avenue eatery of between $1,000 and $2,000 cash late Wednesday, Midland police said.

The man apparently walked through the back door of Murray's Delicatessen, 3211 W. Wadley Ave., about 10 p.m. and threatened a female employee with a .22-caliber pistol, Detective Sgt. Kenneth Moten said.

The man forced the woman to open a cash register, and left quickly through the back door with the money. Another employee who was in the restaurant at the time was not confronted by the robber, Moten said.

The front door of the restaurant was locked at the time, but the back door was open, the officer said.

The man was described as black, about 5 feet 8 inches tall, with a medium build. Along with the mask, he wore a red sweater, gray sweat pants and brown gloves, according to police.

Midland County Sheriff's officers are investigating a spate of crimes that occurred Wednesday.

At just after midnight Wednesday, several items valued at nearly $2,000 were taken from a storage yard at Jerry's Welding, near the intersection of County Road 137 and State Highway 349.

Among the items stolen were grinders valued at $500, oxygen regulators valued at $300, acetylene regulators valued at $450, torches valued at $338, a grinder case valued at $188, and a welding hose valued at $139, according to the report.

Officers were also investigating the burglary of a residence that resulted in the loss of items valued at more than $6,000.

Cameras and equipment valued at $5,000, a bolt-action .243-caliber rifle valued at $450, a 12-gauge left-handed shotgun valued at $350, a radio, tape player and speakers valued at $200, and two other firearms were reported stolen from the residence at 3906 South CR 1183.

The house was broken into through a front window between 9 a.m. and 11:30 p.m. Wednesday, according to the report.

In other reports, a videocassette recorder valued at $450, a 17-inch color television set valued at $350, a portable stereo valued at $200, and a 35 millimeter camera valued at $120 were stolen from a residence at 1710 West CR 130. The items were taken between 2 p.m. and 4:55 p.m., reports said.

For many families, Christmas time for homecoming

Todd

Homecoming Day is just ahead in the heart, mind and soul of many folks.

It's Christmas Day. But more practically, it's Homecoming.

Now, behind church doors, Christendom on Dec. 25 celebrates the birth of Jesus Christ, who brought to the world the promise of eternal life through the love and grace of the ever-living God.

But you might not know that based on the commercialization of this gift-giving season and the ubiquitousness of this phantom Santa Claus character, who, along with ruptured lines of credit, seems to dominate the Yuletide.

How and why secular and ecclesiastical cultures happened to put the images of the Christ child and the old-man Santa Claus on the same day and associated both with the evergreen tree is a scholarly curiosity.

But it's there.

The legend of Santa Claus evolved from Saint Nicholas, a kind-hearted Christian bishop of the A.D. 300s. In Europe, the bishop became known as Father Christmas — Christ's mass. Much later, American cartoonist Thomas Nast in Harper's Weekly magazine in the 1800s changed the Santa Claus image from a slender, stately fellow in a bishop's robe and mounted on a white horse to a rotund, jolly character riding comfortably in a sleigh towed by mysteriously flying reindeer. Secretly by night, the flying Santa Claus brought joys to children by stuffing toys in stockings hung over fireplaces.

Dear Santa Claus, it seems, heightened both joy and materialism in one big circular journey beginning atop the cold North Pole.

Discounting disputes on the "true meaning" of Christmas and how it should be celebrated, Christmas in retrospect seems to be designed for babes and other young children. Some people, of course, say Christmas is not to be celebrated by Christians and cite biblical authority to back up their case. Many others, however, joyfully sing the praises of Christ during the Christmas season and are rightfully inspired and moved by Handel's great accomplishment, Messiah, and the stirring Hallelujah chorus of grand thanksgiving.

Christmas. To the Williams family on Mother's side of the family and to the Todd clan, Christmas and Thanksgiving amounted to Homecoming.

Memories of the family gatherings and the loving fellowship live on. The best exchange was of love and friendship. As it turned out, who gave what to whom has, for the most part, been lost to fading memories. Just being together became of supreme importance.

And Christmas was no particular financial burden. Family members just drew names by lot from a hat. One person got one gift for another. And you could buy presents at the five-and-dime department stores. Back then, about the only "big" buying, and that was modest, was through the Sears, Roebuck & Company mail-order catalogue. Mostly, that was for gifts, such as needed clothes and shoes, a red wagon and a bicycle, for the children. Those gifts, of course, were compliments of Santa Claus and his friends.

In reflection, many fond memories of family gatherings on the homeplace farm in East Texas and then in rural communities come strongly into play. The grandparents and parents, who nurtured their children and gave them love and hope, are no longer among the living on this fair Earth. But certainly their spirits live on in the hearts of their children and their grandchildren.

And it is sure that each of the Todd-Williams children, now grown and away from the old "home," will, like the song says, be home for Christmas "if only in my dreams."

MCH board OKs issuance of certificates of obligation

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The Medical Center Hospital Board of Managers set the stage Wednesday for Ector County Commissioners to authorize issuance of $5 million in certificates of obligation to cover replacement and purchase of equipment.

In addition to approving a proposal concerning how the $5 million will be spent, the board awarded the Odessa construction firm of J.W. Cooper a contract calling for renovation and expansion of the intensive care unit at the county-owned hospital.

Cooper's base bid was nearly $64,000 below the next lowest bid.

The $5 million in certificates of obligation is part of the county's effort to help MCH achieve financial stability. The county also has agreed to assume responsibility for certain leases and insurance for the hospital.

In lieu of providing the nearly $6 million the MCH board and administrators earlier said was needed to overcome the hospital's cash deficit, Commissioners Court members have opted to assume responsibility for various MCH budget items as allowed under state law.

While this course of action does not provide immediate resolution of the hospital's deficit problem, it will allow administrators to realign the 1988-89 budget and utilize available funds in other areas.

Commissioners are also expected to approve a resolution to join the city councils of Odessa and Midland in seeking an extended telephone service area that would eliminate toll calls between exchanges the two

Burned driver not identified

SEMINOLE — The driver of a pickup truck who died in a fiery crash early today was burned beyond recognition and has not been identified, the Department of Public Safety reported.

The accident occurred at 1:45 a.m. today 20 miles west of Seminole on a gravel road in Gaines County, the report of the accident said.

The driver of the truck was westbound on the road when he approached a crane carrier driven by Manuel Jurado of Seminole. The carrier was parked on the north shoulder of the road facing east with the headlights on, the DPS said.

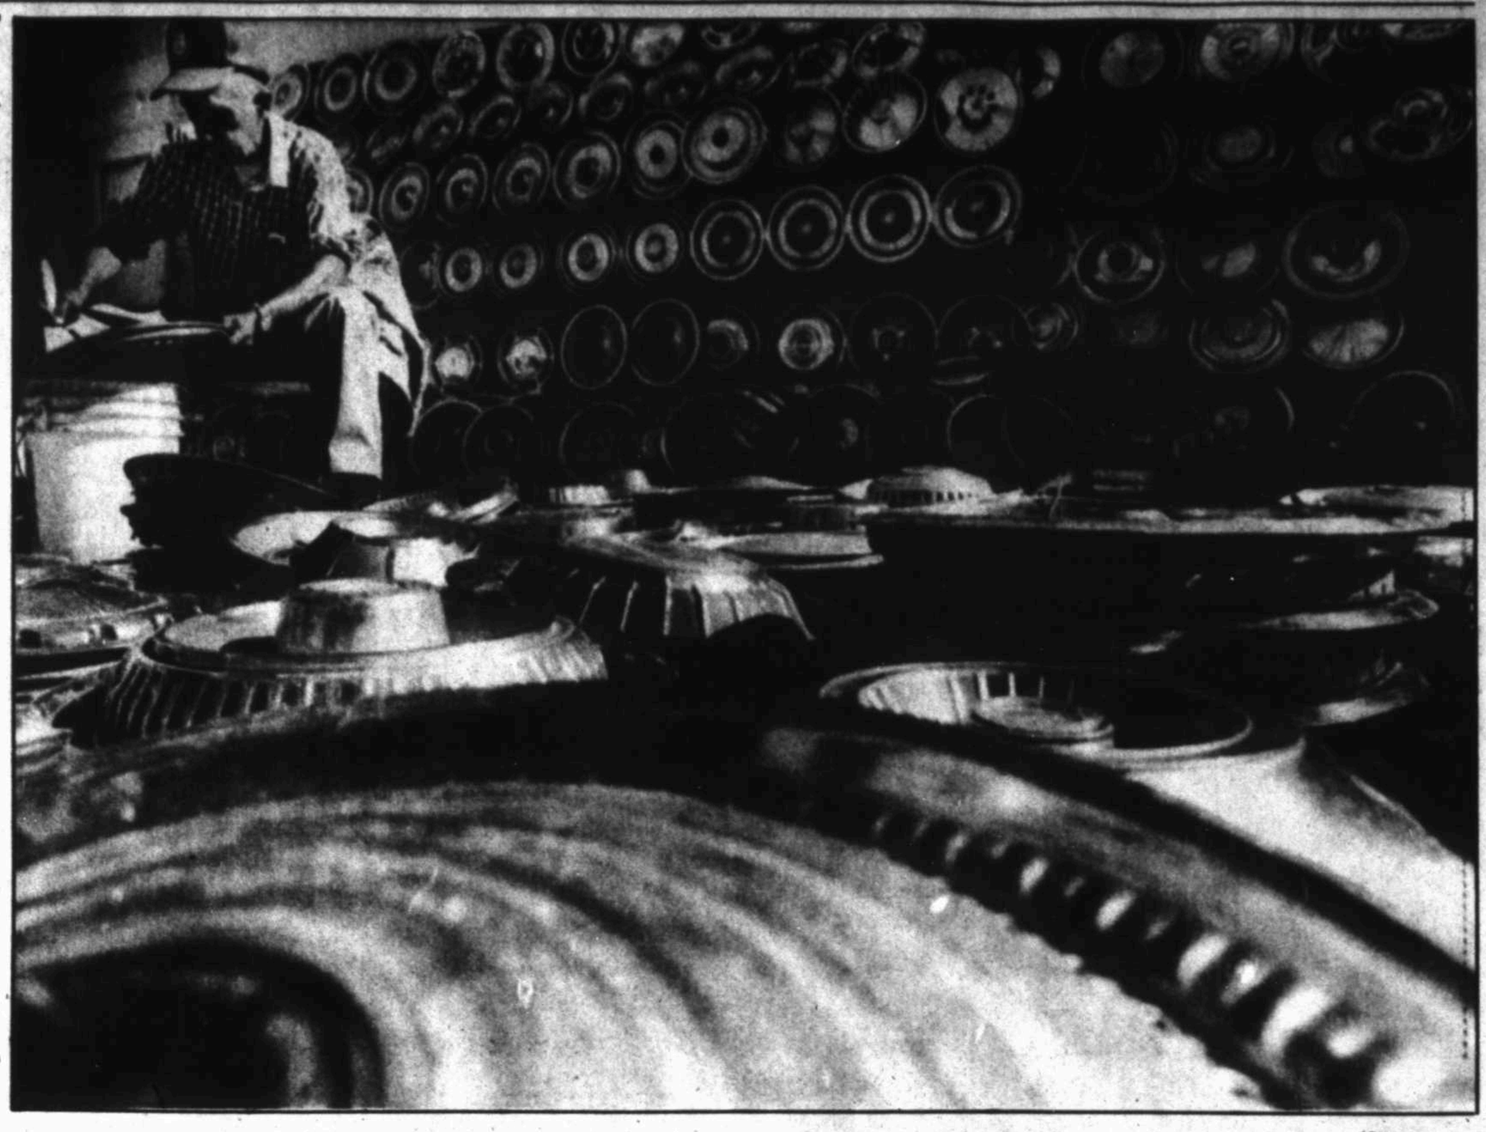

The truck struck the carrier, spun around and caught fire, according to the report. Jurado was not injured in the accident.

The driver, who was not wearing a safety belt, was pronounced dead at the scene at 2:52 a.m. by Gaines County Justice of the Peace Mary Parrott.

Illinois governor says SSC site 'nonsensical'

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — Gov. James R. Thompson, saying a decision to locate the superconducting super collider in Texas defies common sense, has urged President Reagan to put the huge project in Illinois.

"A decision to build a new facility, rather than building on Fermilab, is nonsensical," the GOP governor said in a letter Wednesday, referring to Fermi National Accelerator Laboratory west of Chicago, the site Illinois had proposed for the supercollider.

Thompson said the federal Energy Department erred in its selection of Waxahachie, Texas, as the preferred site, in part because of its failure to recognize the federal government's $1.2 billion investment in Fermilab.

"Fermilab is the premier laboratory in the world for high energy physics research," he wrote.

Energy Secretary John Herrington announced on Nov. 10 that Texas had been chosen as the site for the $4.4 billion atom smasher, beating Illinois and five other states bidding for one of the major scientific projects of the century.

Illinois' congressional delegation immediately denounced the decision, with the state's two Democratic senators, Paul Simon and Alan Dixon, suggesting that Texas, the adopted home state of President-elect George Bush, was chosen because of political considerations.

In his letter, Thompson said a failure to locate at Fermi would hurt efforts to attract foreign investment to the super collider project.

In addition, the governor said the process followed by the federal government's site selection task force was "fatally flawed," in that its rankings were inconsistent with the information that it had.

"The report correctly cites Illinois schools as outstanding, and Texas schools as average, and then rates both outstanding on community resources," Thompson said.

"How can Texas be outstanding when in this most important aspect of community resources — the quality of their schools — they are only average?"

Reagan is expected to make the final decision on the super collider site shortly before turning over the presidency to Bush on Jan. 20. Thompson said he was prepared to meet with Reagan to discuss the matter at the president's convenience.

Commission dismisses judges's complaint against fellow jurist

AUSTIN (AP) — The State Commission on Judicial Conduct has dismissed a complaint by Dallas appeals judge Charles Ben Howell against another judge and has also halted its inquiry into allegations against Howell, he says.

Howell on Wednesday released a copy of a confidential letter from the commission, which advised him that his "news release" of Dec. 8, 1987, "did not rise to the level of misconduct..."

The news release, sent to reporters, announced Howell's candidacy for the Texas Supreme Court and criticized as a "disgrace" the court's handling of the Texaco-Pennzoil lawsuit.

A Dec. 15 letter signed by commission executive director Robert Flowers said the commission had decided to close the file without further inquiry.

A copy of another Dec. 15 confidential letter from Flowers stated that the commission also had reviewed Howell's complaint against "another Texas judge in connection with your campaign for a position on the Supreme Court."

The letter said the commission, which did not name the other judge, was dismissing Howell's complaint "as being without merit."

Howell said the other judge was Supreme Court Justice Raul Gonzalez.

Gonzalez, a Democrat, defeated the Republican Howell in the November general election 56.9 percent to 41.5 percent.

"Whitewash," Howell said Wednesday of the commission's decision on his five-count complaint to reprimand or remove Gonzalez from the court. "At an Austin news conference on Nov. 4, I predicted that this 8-3 Democratic outfit would do nothing until after the election when they would apply a whitewash job. Now, they have done exactly as I said they would do."

> "...I predicted that this 8-3 Democratic outfit would do nothing until after the election when they would apply a whitewash job. Now, they have done exactly as I said they would do."
>
> — Judge Charles Ben Howell

Howell's complaints included an allegation that Gonzalez had accepted $27,500 from the Texas Medical Association political action committee, then voted in favor of the association on a medical malpractice damages case.

The commission letter said it had examined each of Howell's five points of alleged misconduct "and concluded that either the factual allegations were not well taken (for example the $27,500 contribution referred to in point number one was not contributed by a party to the suit), or on the alternative, if the facts were well-taken, the action was not improper."

Howell said, "I had other charges against Judge Gonzalez, but this gross implication of 'justice for sale' was the worst...As I read the decision, the commission has drawn a roadmap for fraud, graft, and outright judge-buying."

Flowers said the commission planned no comment on the letters.

Bexar County to fund meningitis vaccinations

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Federal officials will pay to vaccinate about 12,000 Bexar County children to halt the spread of a preventable form of meningitis that has killed one youngster and caused permanent nerve damage in two others.

Health authorities are stopping short of calling it an epidemic, but at least 30 babies and toddlers are known to have had the disease this year and seven other possible cases are being investigated in the San Antonio area.

There had been only 17 reported cases of the same disease last year.

The San Antonio Health District has received a grant of $132,000 from the national Centers for Disease Control to provide antiobiotics for youngsters who will be 18 months old during 1989.

The fee for the vaccination is $3, but no one without the funds will be turned away, health officials said.

At least four children are currently hospitalized with the disease, according to The San Antonio Light. The meningitis strain is characterized by a severe headache, high fever and can produce nerve-damaging swelling of the brain's lining and spinal cord.

A 17-month-old boy died from the disease in March, health officials said. Two others have confirmed permanent nerve damage and three others are being examined for possible mental retardation, earing impairment and other problems brought on by their illness.

"I don't think we have an epidemic but in the midst of so many other infections, we have to keep our clinical acumen really fine tuned to pick up subtle indications of more serious illness," said health district director Dr. Fernando A. Guerra Jr.

Thief steals lawmen's cookies

DALLAS (AP) — A car thief got more than he bargained for when he stole a Dallas woman's car from her driveway. He got enough cookies for a Texas-size Christmas party.

Cynthia Gammill said the 224 dozen cookies had been baked by members of the First United Methodist Church of Dallas to give to members of the Dallas County Sheriff's Office who have to work Christmas.

Sheriff's department spokesman Jim Ewell told the church women that there would be 600 people working on the holiday so the women began baking the 2,688 cookies right after Thanksgiving.

The church women had baked similar amounts of cookies the past two years for the Dallas Police Department and decided this year to present the cookies to deputies, jailers and others who have to work on Christmas.

The cookies were to be delivered on Wednesday morning, only hours after the thief stole Ms. Gammill's car from her driveway.

Ewell said he hopes the thieves will discover the cookies in the trunk and realize they were destined for lawmen and abandon the car because "they don't want to deal with it."

Lipham said that, while county and state representatives could do little officially, he was pleased at the support the protest effort had received from Rep. Gary Watkins and County Judge Jan Fisher.

"I understand their offices had hundreds of calls" from people opposing the proposal, he said.

Ector County Sheriff Bob Brookshire said he was pleased to hear of cancellation of the proposal. He said he was particularly concerned about how much supervision there would be of TDC prisoners placed in the center.

Critical of the concept generally, Brookshire said, if there was any question about whether prisoners could make it on parole, then they should be kept in prison until they were eligible for parole.

The sheriff said, "Instead of spending money on programs like this they ought to spend it building more prisons."

As to why she opposed the preparole release center, Lipham's wife, Sharon, said, "We just felt like it would put a bad element out in the area."

Masons removing cement from Alamo find arched doorway

Hearst News Service

SAN ANTONIO — The "lost" side door at the Alamo has been found.

Major preservation work under way at the Shrine of Texas Liberty here enabled officials to confirm the existence of the door on the south side of the chapel.

Officials disclosed this week that past research and old paintings had indicated there had been an arched doorway there during the mission period in the early 1700s and during the 1836 Battle of the Alamo.

The door was found when cement once used for repairs was removed.

It is believed the door was sealed by the U.S. Cavalry when the Alamo was used as a military depot in the 1850s.

Alamo curator Steve Beck said the door would remain filled in and not be re-created, but evidence of its existence has been reported to the state by the Daughters of the Republic of Texas.

"The door has been documented through photos and filed with the Texas Historical Commission," Beck said. "Mr. Long (former Alamo curator Charles Long) had first mentioned it to me, and I ran across it in research. It has also been documented in a painting by Theodore Gentilz. Now you can see where it was."

The restoration work is being done by Ross Hunt, a mason who specializes in historic preservation. His crew was hired to remove the cement and replace it with a softer substance to prevent the hard cement from ruining the original limestone by trapping moisture inside the rocks.

Cement was used for repairs through the 1960s, Beck said, explaining the softer mortar would allow the moisture to evaporate from the limestone, which naturally acts as a sponge.

Hunt said the process, called repointing, has to be done by hand and is a slow job because the masons are being extra careful to remove only the cement. The work, expected to take at least three weeks, required extensive research into the substances the Indians used to mix the original mortar.

"We are using a very soft lime mortar that closely resembles the original," Hunt said. "We had to search for the right kind of river sand so the grain would be just right.

Lubbock man new chairman of State Board of Education

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements on Wednesday appointed a former Lubbock school board trustee as chairman of the State Board of Education.

Monte Hasie, 51, of Lubbock, was elected to the 15-member state board last November. The November election marked a return to a publicly elected board after several years in which board members were appointed by the governor.

Hasie, a Republican, will serve a two-year term ending Jan. 1, 1991. He is replacing Jon Brumley of Fort Worth, whose term expired.

"Monte Hasie has demonstrated a long-standing commitment to public education in West Texas," said Clements in a prepared news release.

"That commitment, coupled with his solid budget and management skills, can help guide public education in Texas to new heights," he said.

Hasie currently is vice president of Thomas McKinnon Securities Inc., a securities firm. He has been with the company since 1970.

In his campaign in the West Texas board race in November, Hasie was highly critical of Ross Perot, who led the movement that brought sweeping school reforms in Texas in 1984.

But on Wednesday, Hasie told The Dallas Morning News he considers himself an admirer of Perot.

"I think Mr. Perot is a great man and outstanding citizen, but the people of my area did not feel the need to have his TEXAS committee come out there and tell them how to vote."

Perot's TEXAS group (Texans for Education, Excellence and Schools) supported Hasie's opponent in the race.

He served as a member of the Lubbock Independent School District's board of trustees from 1976 until this year. He was board president for seven years, beginning in 1979.

His appointment as board chairman does not require state Senate confirmation.

Gang member to be tried for shooting father

RICHMOND (AP) — A 15-year-old gang member who once told his probation officer he may try to kill his entire family will stand trial as an adult for allegedly shooting his father with a shotgun.

County Court-at-Law Judge Walter McMeans certified Richard Lankford to stand trial as an adult after a Wednesday hearing, then transferred the youth's case to state district court.

Lankford, described by his probation officer as "dangerous," was solemn during the lengthy hearing, but broke down in tears when his mother embraced him before he left the courtroom in handcuffs.

Lankford faces charges of attempted murder and conspiracy to commit capital murder.

The shooting of Winston Lankford Sr., who survived the shotgun attack after being shot in the head and side, was one of several attacks tied to the youth gang called the Wolverines.

The elder Lankford is one of three Fort Bend County parents allegedly attacked within three hours by members of the gang. Court testimony indicates at least five of the eight gang members planned to kill several parents and flee to another Texas city or to Mexico.

Two other Wolverines previously have been certified to stand trial as adults in the Sept. 20 attacks.

Michael Brandon Beaver, 15, is charged with the baseball-bat slaying of his mother, Rhonda Macha, 39.

Iva Candelaria, 16, is charged with conspiracy to commit murder, for allegedly planning her boyfriend's shooting attack on her mother. Her mother, also named Iva Candelaria, 44, allegedly was shot twice in the head and once in the arm by 18-year-old Eugene Lewman.

Another 15-year-old male also is in custody in connection with that case, but has not been certified to stand trial as an adult.

In the daylong hearing Wednesday, Juvenile Probation Officer Matthew Benbow said Lankford should be transferred to adult criminal courts.

"In October, he stated to me if he were released on bail or go home, it would be most likely he would attempt to kill his family and abscond," Benbow said.

A $1,200 pair of rhinestone-encrusted stars-and-stripes pumps is available for women who are attending George Bush's inauguration.

Neiman Marcus offering inaugural shoes for $1,200

HOUSTON (AP) — Women from President-elect George Bush's stomping grounds who plan to step out at next month's inauguration can step into a pair of specially designed inaugural shoes at $1,200 a pair.

Neiman Marcus, known for its sometimes outlandish gift selection, this week unveiled its red, silver and blue stars-and-stripes designer pumps in honor of the Jan. 20 event.

So far, no one has stepped forward with the cash, but the rhinestone-encrusted lady's pumps have caused a stir among customers at the Dallas-based retail chain's Houston and Washington, D.C., stores.

"Everyone is stopping and looking," said Phyllis Wehring, spokeswoman for Neiman's Houston store. "It's rather bright, so you can't miss it."

The shoes must be specially ordered through New York designer Stuart Weitzman, and delivery takes three weeks, Ms. Wehring said.

As of Wednesday there were no firm orders for the shoes, Ms. Wehring said, although there were "several ladies who were very interested."

Ms. Wehring said the $1,200 price tag is believed to be the largest ever for a pair of Neiman Marcus shoes.

Rate changes proposed

AUSTIN (AP) — The State Board of Insurance staff on Wednesday proposed a 0.3 percent overall decrease in automobile insurance rates, but that includes a 22.7 percent increase in the bodily injury liability insurance required by state law.

The staff is recommending a 1.8 percent decrease in the property damage liability coverage required by law.

The overall recommended reduction includes an 18.5 percent decrease in total physical damage coverage, along with a 14.8 percent increase in total liability.

The insurance industry, by comparison, has proposed a 6.5 percent statewide average increase in private passenger automobile insurance rates.

The industry recommendation includes a 31.5 percent increase in required bodily injury and 5.3 percent increase in required property damage liability coverage. It proposes a 23.7 percent increase in total liability and 14.2 percent decrease in total physical damage coverage.

The insurance board has scheduled a Jan. 5 hearing on auto rates.

Agents seize marijuana

DONNA (AP) — Border Patrol agents reported seizing nearly 2½ tons of marijuana, estimated to be worth about $5 million, from a group of vehicles in a rural area of the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

Officials said agents were tipped about the drug activity. They found the 4,840 pounds of marijuana in four vans traveling together near the Rio Grande Wednesday morning, officials said.

Because the marijuana was loosely packed in boxes, a Border Patrol agent said it may have been headed to an illicit distribution center for packaging.

Two men were arrested and expected to be charged in connection with the seizure, including a U.S. citizen and a Mexican national, officials said. Authorities were searching for others who fled the scene.

UT to get grant from GM

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp. has announced creation of a $500,000 fund to help minority students at five law schools, including the University of Texas.

GM Vice President Harry J. Pearce said Wednesday the fund represented part of the automaker's commitment to promoting the equal participation of minorities in the legal profession.

The automaker will award $100,000 grants to the law schools at Georgetown University, Howard University, the University of Michigan, Northwestern University and the University of Texas. The grants will be paid over five years.

TDA has Arbor Day packet

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Department of Agriculture is offering a free information packet to anyone interested in participating in Arbor Day activities.

Texas Arbor Day officially occurs on Jan. 20, 1989. However, tree planting and landscaping projects in observance of the celebration will stretch into spring, depending on local planting conditions, officials said.

Eight women to join hall of fame

AUSTIN (AP) — Eight women have been selected to join the Texas Women's Hall of Fame, including a Dallas woman who is spearheading a fight against a disease that claimed her sister's life.

Nancy Brinker, who founded an organization to fight breast cancer, and seven others will be inducted into the hall on Feb. 8 in Austin, said Ann Quirk, chairman of the sponsoring Governor's Commission for Women.

Those being inducted with Brinker are Olympic gold medalist Louise Ritter; Panhandle arts patron Margaret Pease Harper; restaurant entrepeneur Ninfa Laurenzo; Sam Houston State University educator Lane Murray; outstanding deaf athlete Ruth Taubert Seeger; mental health expert Bert Kruger Smith; and Houston city council member Eleanor Tinsley.

"We have completed again this year a thorough review process of applications for Hall of Fame inductees from throughout the state, and we are extremely pleased with the eight nominations for the Hall of Fame," Quirk said.

The hall was established in 1984 by the Governor's Commission for Women.

Ms. Brinker is the wife of Norman Brinker, the chairman of the board of Chili's, Inc., and has molded her own dynamic identity by serving a number of organizations in leadership roles. But she reserves a special effort for the Dallas-based Susan G. Komen Foundation for the Advancement of Breast Cancer Research. Ms. Brinker created the foundation in 1984 after her sister, Ms. Komen, died from breast cancer. Ms. Brinker is the chairman of the board of the thriving organization of 700 women who raise funds to advance breast cancer research.

Ms. Harper of Canyon founded the Texas Panhandle Heritage Foundation in 1961 for the sole purpose of sponsoring Pulitzer Prize-winning author Paul Green's musical historical drama "Texas," which focuses on the Texas Panhandle. More than 2 million people have seen the drama. She is the co-founder of the Lone Star Ballet, and helped create a musical dictionary for children.

Ms. Laurenzo is a Houston businesswoman who owns a large chain of Mexican restaurants in the Houston area and gave a speech that seconded the nomination of President-elect George Bush at the Republican National Convention. She has been featured in a number of national publications for her contributions to Texas business and the Houston community.

Ms. Murray of Huntsville was a high school teacher in Barstow and was the first female Texas A&M full-time faculty member in the College of Education before becoming a pioneer in prison education in 1969. In that year, she was named first (and only) superintendent of the Windham School System within the Texas Department of Corrections. Since 1978, she has been a professor of criminal justice at Sam Houston State University. She also has served on a national advisory council for adult education.

Ms. Ritter literally leaped into the headlines when she won the women's high jump at the Summer Olympics in Seoul, South Korea. A native of tiny Red Oak, she has since been named an assistant track coach at Southern Methodist University. Although her Olympic victory was considered an upset because she stunned the world-record holder in a jumpoff, she has long been considered the premier American high jumper and has been ranked No. 1 in the nation since 1983.

Ms. Seeger of Austin is another outstanding athletic figure who had a gymnasium named in her honor by the Texas School for the Deaf. She was a superior athlete and participated in a number of sports at Gallaudet College. Ms. Seeger organized the first Texas School for the Deaf track team for girls in 1963. As a coach, her girls won 27 medals at the World Games for the Deaf. She is a member of the American Athletic Association of the Deaf Coaches Hall of Fame.

Ms. Smith of Austin has been a special consultant to the Hogg Foundation for Mental Health at the University of Texas at Austin. Her advice has been sought by local, national and international organizations on a number of human services issues, particularly concerning the elderly and mental health. She has served on a number of state committees.

Ms. Tinsley in 1983 received the largest number of votes ever given a candidate for city office in Houston history and received more votes than any other candidate in 1987. She also has served on the Houston Independent School District board of trustees and served as its president in 1972.

Cooking contests blossom in winter weather

By LINDA ANDERSON

Anderson

Here we go again — notices for recipe contests are beginning to crop up in the mail. Maybe these competitions give food manufacturers something to do while waiting for spring:

■ Dessert lovers' recipe contest, otherwise known as the 1988 Planters Holiday Baking Contest, is accepting entries until Jan. 31. Information about the contest states: "Contestants can enter as often as they wish, as long as each entry is mailed separately. Judging criteria will include originality, creativity, ease of preparation, appearance, taste, availability of ingredients and clarity of instructions." Prize is $100,000 in savings bonds. Entry blanks are available at supermarkets or by writing Planters Recipe Contest, P.O. Box 1928, East Hanover, N.J., 07936.

■ Another contest accepting entries until Jan. 31 is the Quaker Corn Meal "Contemporary Classics" Recipe Contest. Recipes must "rely on Quaker corn meal for unique flavaor and texture," company information says. "The possibilities for using corn meal are endless." (Well, I'm not too sure about that ...) Prizes include a $5,000 grand prize, three $1,000 category first prizes and 100 runners-up prizes — something to do with corn meal. Each recipe must contain at least ½-cup of Quaker corn meal. Categories are (1) appetizers and snacks (2) breads (3) main dishes and stuffings (4) desserts. For a copy of the rules write to Rules, Quaker Corn Meal Recipe Contest, P.O. Box 11317, Chicago, Ill., 60611.

■ Pace Picante Sauce Young Cooks Recipe Contest is designed "for teenagers only," according to information from the company. High school and junior high school students (ages eligible are 12-18) can win up to $1,000 with their original recipes which contain at least ½-cup Pace picante sauce. Recipes will be accepted until March 30. Categories are (1) main dishes, (2) soups and stews (3) appetizers, snacks, side dishes and breads. For a complete copy of the rules, write to Rules, Pace Young Cooks Recipe Contest, 3484 West 11th Street, Houston, Texas, 77008.

■ OK, so it's not a recipe contest — it still gives kids a chance to show their creativity. The seventh annual Kentucky Fried Chicken-Good Housekeeping "All American Salute to Mothers" greeting card contest gives elementary school-aged children a chance to design their own Mother's Day card and win prizes at the same time. Themed "The Changing Role of Mother in the 20th Century," the contest is open to fourth-, fifth- and sixth-grade students. The card that wins the grand prize will be marketed as a Mother's Day card all across the country. Prizes include cameras and cash. To enter, write: Kentucky Fried Chicken Mother's Day Contest, 10866 Wilshire Blvd. Suite 550, Los Angeles, Calif., 90024.

So have fun, be creative — and let me know how the recipes turn out.

When giving seasonal donations, don't get taken

By IRENE GARDNER KEENEY
Hearst News Service

ALBANY N.Y. — Christmas is a time for giving — not only to friends and relatives, but to charities.

The number of charities seeking donations seems to have burgeoned in recent years. Organizations that monitor charities report they are inundated by inquiries from consumers who are being flooded with mail from charitable organizations.

The easiest solution to the problem of unwanted mail, says the Council of Better Business Bureaus' Philanthropic Advisory Service, is to decide in advance which charities you want to support and discard appeals from other groups. Don't feel guilty about not supporting all the groups writing you, the council says. They do not expect a donation from every person they solicit.

To help you give wisely, the council publishes a bimonthly list of charities generating the most inquiries to CBBB.

The summary of who meets and does not meet council standards costs $1 an issue. Copies can be obtained by writing the Council of Better Business Bureaus, Inc., 1515 Wilson Blvd., Arlington, VA 22209.

The National Charities Information Bureau (NCIB), a not-for-profit organization founded in 1918, also provides information about national agencies that solicit support from the public. Its guide summarizes evaluations of more than 400 charities and the standards it uses.

Free single copies of NCIB's Wise Giving Guide can be obtained by writing the National Charities Information Bureau, 19 Union Square West, New York, N.Y. 10003-3395.

The need for such guides becomes obvious when you consider that more than 240,000 charities are registered with the Internal Revenue Service, and the number continues to grow, says Kenneth L. Albrecht, president of the National Charities Information Bureau.

One of the newest approaches to raising money for charitable organizations is sweepstake mailings. Most of them are legitimate, but some need close scrutiny. If you receive such a solicitation, read the letter carefully, particularly the fine print.

Here are some tips on wise giving, culled from the guides:

■ If your only contact with the charity has been through a telephone call, a solicitor on the street, or a radio or television appeal, ask for information in writing.

■ Look for a clear statement of the organization's purpose, what it does, and for whom; an audited financial report that shows how much was spent on each of the organization's main activities, plus management and fund raising; a list of board members or trustees, preferably with some identifying information about each. You should be able to find all this information in the organization's annual report.

■ When you give, if possible, make your gift by check or money order.

■ State law requires that organizations which solicit funds for charitable purposes in this state be properly registered with the Office of Charities Registration and file annual financial reports.

■ Don't be fooled by a convincing name. A crooked charity often will have an impressive name or one that closely resembles the name of a respected, legitimate concern.

Above all, be a wise giver. Keep in mind you cannot contribute to an abstract "cause." Your gift will go to an agency run by human beings on behalf of a cause. Human organizations can vary as human beings do.

Telephone sales ringing in Christmas purchases

Hearst News Serivce

ALBANY, N.Y. — Is there anyone out there who doesn't take a beeper along on a nature hike? Anyone who owns a BMW that is not equipped with a cellular phone? Maybe someone who does not wish to own a waterproof cordless phone for the shower?

Phone mania is here, making it no surprise that telephones are one of the hottest gift items of Christmas 1988.

"One size fits all," beams Ed Drechsler, district manager of Radio Shack here. His stores are enjoying some of their biggest phone sales ever.

Drechsler says happy shoppers who want to reach out and touch someone on their Christmas lists are lining up to pay up to $79.95 for gold-accented boudoir phones and snazzy wedge-shaped Euro-style phones. They're plunking down $159 for cordless phones and as much as $1,499 for car phones.

"It's a status thing," Drechsler believes. "They want to one-up the neighbors. The neighbor gets a cordless phone, they've got to have a cellular phone. And today, people have to have a phone every place they go. They like that instant communication."

Kelly Sanvidge, vice president of John J. Sanvidge Funeral Homes of Troy, N.Y., talks about the joys of his company's portable cellular phone used by the funeral director on-call.

"We can be leading a funeral procession into a cemetery and be on the phone with a second family who just suffered a death," Sanvidge explains.

"People who have had a death in the family and haven't been through this before want to talk to a funeral director immediately. They're not in a state where they want to wait."

Were he alive to witness it, what would Scottish-born Alexander Graham Bell think of what those damn Yankees have done with his 19th-century invention?

Would Bell think us a bit daffy for shelling out $44 for a duck phone that quacks and whose eyes light up when it's called?

Phone fetishists know no bounds.

There are phones with interchangeable color plates for those who like to change their phone's hues as often as their own wardrobe's. We have neon phones now, clear plastic phones with exposed guts and tennis shoe phones, too.

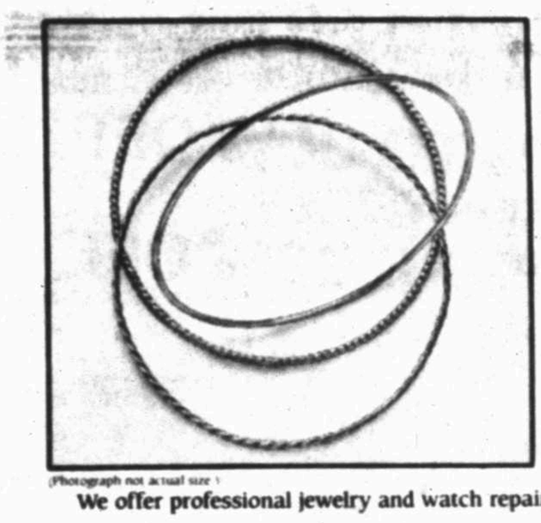

Mickey Mouse is a perennial favorite and Garfield (eyes open when the receiver is lifted) and Bozo (laughs when the phone rings) also have their fans.

At Telephones R Us, a sales and service phone company in Albany, the teddy bear phone is a lovable, cuddly novelty. "He's just so cute," says Diane Goca, general manager of the store. "The mouth and eyes move when you talk to him. He's adorable."

But is he $150 worth of adorable?

WE GUARANTEE SUCCESS.

In just a short time, your child will be reading at a full grade level better than he or she does now. Or solving math problems that right now seem incomprehensible. And, best of all, discovering how it feels to succeed.
Such striking progress involves no secret formula. Just patience, some hard work—and two hours a week for 18 weeks, at a Sylvan Learning Center.

HOW SYLVAN CAN GUARANTEE SUCCESS.

Remove the competition, the stress, and the fear of failure from education, and what happens? Children learn.
This simple approach has been tested and proven at Sylvan, where thousands of children have learned how to do better in school. Which is why we offer this unique promise: your child's math or reading skills will improve by at least one full grade level after just 36 instruction hours. Or we will provide up to 12 additional hours of instruction, at no further cost. Improvement will be measured by a nationally-recognized achievement test, given before and after instruction at Sylvan.

ENROLL YOUR CHILD NOW.

Remember, because we hold the line at just three students per instructor, enrollment is strictly limited. And the sooner your child begins, the sooner you'll see positive results reflected in his classroom work.
Sylvan offers flexible after school hours and requires no contracts or long-term commitments. You simply pay monthly tuition. Don't let this learning opportunity pass your child by.

DEAR ABBY

'How are you?' query gets varied response

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I read with interest the letter from the woman who was embarrassed because of her husband's detailed report of his physical ailments when someone greeted him with, "How are you?"

Some years ago I read about a lady who didn't want to lie about her condition, so when someone asked her in passing, "How are you?" she replied, "I'm better than I was, but not quite so good as I was before I got worse."

I thought the comment was so good, I often use it in my response to that greeting. It usually brings a chuckle. — "BETTER" IN TAVARES, FLA.

DEAR ABBY: Living in a retirement home where we're not supposed to discuss health or illnesses at the table, one of our residents has passed out copies of the enclosed. — TED IN CALIFORNIA

HOW ARE YOU?

When people ask, "How are you?"
It's just a salutation —
And common sense should bar you
From a lengthy explanation.
It's not the kind of query
That requires a diagnosis
Of each and every dreary
Reaction and neurosis.
It doesn't mean devising
An answer to the question
In which you're itemizing
What's wrong with your digestion.
If operations scare you,
Don't analyze and spell 'em
And when folks ask, "How are you?"
For heaven's sake, don't tell 'em!

DEAR ABBY: I work for a large company in a large office. One of my fellow employees insists on brushing his teeth often during the day.

I'm all for good dental hygiene, but this man starts brushing his teeth at his desk, then he walks past all the other employees on his way to the bathroom — brushing all the way!

He also flosses at his desk, which I find offensive. There is no way to avoid seeing this, as our office is set up with rows of desks in one large room with no partitions.

How should I approach this man to explain my objections? Or am I being overly critical? — REVOLTED

DEAR REVOLTED: Others may also be offended by this no-class man, so write him an interoffice memo — and make it a class-action project.

Christmas wonders seen best through child's eyes

EDITORS NOTE: Erma Bombeck is on vacation this week. This Best of Bombeck originally appeared 12/25/65.

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

There is nothing sadder in this world than to awake Christmas morning and not be a child.

Not to feel the cold on your bare feet as you rush to the Christmas tree in the living room. Not to have your eyes sparkle at the wonderment of discovery. Not to rip the ribbons off the shiny boxes with such abandon.

What happened? When did the cold, bare feet give way to reason and a pair of sensible bedroom slippers? When did the sparkle and the wonderment give way to the depression of a long day? When did a box with a shiny ribbon mean an item on the "charge"?

A child of Christmas doesn't have to be a toddler or a teen. A child of Christmas is anyone who believes that kings have birthdays.

The Christmases you loved so well are gone. What happened?

Maybe they diminished the year you decided to have your Christmas cards printed to send to 1,500 of your "closest friends and dearest obligations." You got too busy to sign your own name.

Maybe it was the year you discovered the traditional Christmas tree was a fire hazard and the needles had to be vacuumed every three hours, and you traded its holiday aroma for a silver one that revolved, changed colors, played "Silent Night" and snowed on itself.

Or the year it got to be too much trouble to sit around the table and put popcorn and cranberries on a string. Possibly you lost your childhood the year you solved your gift problems neatly and coldly with a checkbook.

Most likely it was the year you were so efficient in paying back all your party obligations. A wonderful little caterer did it all for you.

Children of Christmas are givers. That's what the day is for. They give thanks, love, gratitude, joy and themselves to one another.

It doesn't necessarily mean you have to have children around a tree. It's rather like lighting a candle you've been saving, caroling when your feet are cold, building a fire in a clean grate, grinding tinsel deep into the rug, licking frosting off a beater, giving something you made yourself. It's laughter, being with people you like, and at some time falling to your knees and saying, "Thank You for coming to my birthday party."

Best toys require children to use their imagination

New York Times News Service

WILMINGTON, N.C. — A hundred years ago, a child's only toy might have been a doll made from corn husks. Or maybe it was a dancing man that flailed his hinged wooden limbs when jostled at the end of a stick.

Today, a child can send "Perfume Giving Ken" over to "Barbie's Furnished Townhouse." If he's early, Ken may surprise Barbie in her "Bathroom Accents" set and be in for a long wait.

Barbie and Ken reflect their times. At best, they and other toys reinforce positive values and teach useful skills. At worst, they can dampen imagination and undercut moral values.

"In my opinion, it's a mixed effect," said Wilmington psychologist Bruce Baldwin. "The plus is that toys today are much more sophisticated than they ever were. Many have been designed to enhance motor skills, perception and creativity."

Socrates and Pre-Computer 1000 are examples of sophisticated teaching toys. Each is a computer with a variety of scholastically oriented programs. By adapting new programs, the machines remain useful to a child from preschool through high school.

Toy store shelves are filled with traditional teaching toys like chemistry sets, microscopes, telescopes, paint-by-number sets, weaving and knitting kits, coin banks and crayons.

Baldwin cautioned that toys should be toys first and teachers second.

"That educational component has been specifically built in," he said. "But it can be bad if the educational component overrides the fun component. There's so much pushing by some parents that it robs the child of childhood."

Toy weapons, especially those connected with children's television shows, are alarming to some. Stephanie Carr, owner of the Olde Wilmington Toy Co., fears the proliferation of toy weapons may create a generation of morally numb adults.

"I think the violence on television is very frightening," said Ms. Carr, a former teacher. "The more you see it, the less it affects you, and I wonder what that's doing to the moral fabric of society."

Ms. Carr maintains that not only can children be desensitized, they can be made unimaginative as well.

"I think that television has had a tremendous impact on children. In some ways, it's very positive, but in some ways, it's very negative because it doesn't require the child to do anything but sit there."

In her shop, which specializes in antique-style toys, Ms. Carr sells prop kits labeled "Paraphernalia for Pretending." The "office kit," for example, contains pencils, bills of sale, rulers and other scaled-down office supplies.

"Many children today do not have much of an imagination," she said. "We used to go out and collect stuff like this. Now it comes in a kit."

Until the middle of the last century, when mass production of toys began, most rural children didn't own more than one or two toys. And they were usually made of whatever material was handy. Colonial children played with Indian-style dolls made of corn husks. Later, slave children played with dolls of cast-off rags and yarn.

The New Hanover County Museum owns a collection of doll furniture made from cigar boxes. A wooden toy, made by a father or older brother, was a prize.

"I believe that 100 years ago, a lot of toys had more caring involved with giving them," Baldwin said. "They were made by parents and there weren't as many of them and it was a real sacrifice for a child to get one."

A common toy was a small wooden ball attached to a string at the base of a wood cup. The user swung the ball up, attempting to land it into the cup, said Bev Smalls, the museum's education coordinator.

Wooden spinning tops were common. Nineteenth-century children also played with jacks, which originally were scraps of metal shucked off by a blacksmith's hammer. The ball used in the game was wood, not rubber, so it took dexterity and speed to scoop the jacks up, Ms. Smalls said.

Army intelligence analyst arrested for selling 'highly sensitive' papers

SAVANNAH, Ga. (AP) — An Army intelligence analyst who boasted of spying for greed and a Turkish-born Floridian were arrested for selling "highly sensitive" documents to East Bloc agents over six years, authorities said.

Warrant Officer James William Hall III, 30, who is stationed at nearby Fort Stewart and served in West Germany, was arrested here Wednesday and taken to the base detention facility, said Lt. Col. John Chapala, an Army spokesman in Washington.

Huseyin Yildirim was arrested at his home in Belleair Beach, Fla., near St. Petersburg, and was scheduled to appear before a U.S. magistrate in Tampa, Fla., for a bond hearing this afternoon.

Yildirim, a 60-year-old Turkish native, was charged with conspiracy to commit espionage by giving agents of a foreign government national defense secrets, said Ed Dutko, an agent in the FBI's Savannah office. If convicted, Yildirim could be sentenced to life in prison.

Hall has not yet been formally charged, Chapala said.

"Hall, as a member of the military, can be charged with a similar offense by the military and court-martialed," Dutko said. "Yildirim is a civilian, so he faces civilian charges."

Chapala said he could provide nothing "on the classification or nature of the information allegedly provided by Hall or to whom it went."

But published reports today said the espionage inflicted serious damage on electronic spying efforts in Europe, although the damage was still being assessed.

Hall's home in Richmond Hill and Yildirim's home were searched Wednesday by FBI and Army intelligence officers, the FBI said.

The arrests followed a meeting at a Savannah hotel Tuesday night between Hall and an FBI agent posing as a Soviet intelligence officer, according to an affidavit FBI agent Charles B. Youmans Jr. filed Wednesday with U.S. Magistrate G.R. Smith here.

Hall told the unidentified agent "that he had been passing highly sensitive signal intelligence documents to both the Soviets and the East German intelligence services since late 1982," the affidavit said.

"Hall boasted of the important signal intelligence information he had passed, and admitted his motivation to be greed," the document said.

Hang up

Ruth Willis of Starkville, Miss., decided to hang her Christmas tree from the ceiling this year after seeing a tree mounted from a carousel upside down during a summer trip in Gulf Shore, Ala. A friend improvised the method of hanging the tree without using a carousel. Willis even thumbtack a tree skirt and a few packages to complete the new look. She said the tree takes up much less floor space this way.

Reagan claims budget can be balanced by '93

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan will leave his successor a spending blueprint which projects that the federal budget can be balanced by 1993, nine years later than the target Reagan set when he campaigned for the presidency in 1980.

Officials, who are putting the finishing touches on the administration's final budget, said it will call for a deficit of $92.5 billion for the 1990 fiscal year, which starts next October.

That would represent a decline from an actual deficit of $155.1 billion in the 1988 fiscal year that ended Sept. 30.

The narrowing of the gap between government revenues and spending was accomplished by optimistic economic assumptions which boost the government's tax take and a combination of spending cuts, increased user fees and $6 billion in sales of government assets.

The administration is projecting that its policies will result in a balanced budget by 1993 without the need to increase taxes.

The 1990 budget more than meets the $100 billion deficit reduction limit established by the Gramm-Rudman law. That legislation sets declining deficit targets for each year ending with a balanced budget in 1993.

Reagan's final spending plan projects meeting those targets each year, ending with a small surplus in 1993. When Reagan campaigned for the presidency in 1980, he promised to balance the budget by 1984.

Joseph Wright, head of the White House Office of Management and Budget, briefed Reagan, Vice President George Bush and other members of the Cabinet on the administration's final spending blueprint on Wednesday.

Officials said that all decisions have now been made on the budget, which the administration will submit to Congress on Jan. 9.

Reagan told reporters that his budget "will be in keeping with the Gramm-Rudman program leading toward a balanced budget."

Wright told reporters at a briefing that the administration had succeeded in reaching its deficit goals without touching Social Security or abandoning the president's goal of boosting defense spending by 2 percent above the inflation rate each year. Wright also said the budget would not include any new taxes.

While Wright would not reveal the actual deficit figure, an administration source, who spoke on condition that his name not be used, said Reagan's final budget would show a deficit of $92.5 billion.

This figure includes $6 billion in asset sales, the source said. These sales do not count toward meeting the Gramm-Rudman target. However, even with the asset sales discounted, the administration's budget would still be below the $100 billion target.

The administration's final budget is calling for spending of $1.15 trillion in 1990, an increase over projected spending of $1.10 trillion in the current fiscal year.

Without any changes in current government services, the administration projected the 1990 deficit would total $127 billion. However, this projection does not include about $9 billion in increased spending for defense, space programs, AIDS research and other areas where Reagan will seek increases rather than reductions from current projections of growth in government programs.

Wright said the administration would also ask for increased spending to rescue failed savings and loan associations, but he refused to provide any specifics of how much money would be involved.

However, the administration source said that the Reagan budget would project spending of $25 billion over the next two years by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board to close and merge failed S&Ls. The agency spent $8 billion in the 1988 fiscal year.

Critics have charged that the actual cost of resolving the S&L crisis could climb as high as $100 billion and should be one of Bush's top priorities when he takes office.

The administration has been accused of using overly optimistic economic assumptions to reach the deficit reduction goals. The Congressional Budget Office, using more pessimistic assumptions, is expected to project a 1990 deficit about $20 billion higher than the administration when it releases its own report early next year.

Wright said that Bush and his choice for OMB director, Richard Darman, have been kept informed of the work on the 1990 budget. Bush has indicated he intends to provide Congress with at least a blueprint of his own spending priorities but he has refused to say he will submit an entirely new document after he takes office.

It has been previously reported that the administration would seek to cut $5.2 billion from Medicare, the program that provides health care for 33 million elderly and disabled Social Security recipients. The reductions would be achieved by reducing payments to doctors and hospitals.

In addition, the administration is seeking savings of $1.1 billion in the Medicaid program which pays the health costs of poor persons.

Wright has also said other savings would be achieved through cutting farm subsidy payments and government pension benefits.

Mennonite-run group crafts sales for Third World artisans

By MARCIA DUNN

AKRON, Pa. (AP) — At this season of giving, a Mennonite-run group is offering handmade beads, baubles, baskets and other Third World crafts not with profits in mind but a chance for the poorest of the poor to help themselves.

They are gifts that give twice.

"Generally, if you're trying to make a business out of this, you're going to go and find somebody who already knows how to do this as efficiently as possible," said Doug Dirks, marketing director for Selfhelp Crafts. "You buy from them. That's what makes sense. Our objective is a little bit different."

"We don't care so much about what North American customers want to buy," agreed Selfhelp's Doris Daley. "We care more about finding this poor man in the slum of Calcutta and thinking, 'Well, maybe we can sell his wallets or help him along.'"

Patients at a leprosy rehabilitation center in Thailand who carve teak elephants, widows in Guatemala who weave scarves and belts, and Haitian refugees in the Dominican Republic who design greeting cards from banana tree bark — these are among the approximately 30,000 people making Selfhelp Crafts.

The tasks are taken very seriously, said Ms. Daley, citing a letter from Bangladesh that explained, "We're trying really hard to make the order, but please understand that we're a month or two late because our women are wading around in water up to their knees. The houses have all been flooded and it's real hard to sew bags. There are snakes all over."

For some, the jobs mean the "difference between eating and not eating. It's as simple as that," said Dirks.

For others, the work is a handhold to a new life.

"We're trying to give them jobs so they can earn their own money and they can spend it on a roof or medicine or schoolbooks or education for themselves, rather than sitting under a tree waiting for the relief truck to come rolling by," Ms. Daley said.

AP Laserphoto

Randy Plett, an employee of a Mennonite-run group called Selfhelp, stacks teakwood elephants in the group's warehouse in Akron, Pa. The elephants, carved by patients at a leprosy rehabilitation center in Thailand, are part of the Third World crafts sold by Selfhelp.

Selfhelp's mostly volunteer staff reaches out to its needier neighbors from its Akron headquarters and warehouse in eastern Pennsylvania's Lancaster County. The affiliated Selfhelp Crafts Canada, for which Ms. Daley serves as education coordinator, is based in New Hamburg, Ontario.

Both groups are run by the Mennonite Central Committee, a development and disaster relief organization of the Mennonite and Brethren in Christ churches, both part of the Anabaptist movement.

Like the Amish, Mennonites favor plain, peaceful living and oppose military service and the taking of oaths. Lifestyles vary among the world's approximately 740,000 Mennonites, however, ranging from those who wear black and ride in horse-drawn buggies to the majority who enjoy modern clothes and amenities, including cars.

Mennonite missionaries often are Selfhelp's link to the downtrodden in economically developing nations. Virtually all of Selfhelp's artisans live far from the tourist track and have no local market for their goods, crafted with centuries-old skill.

Selfhelp Crafts was begun in 1946 by Edna Byler, a Mennonite woman from Lancaster County who had traveled to Puerto Rico with her husband to visit Mennonite Central Committee volunteers. She was so impressed with local women's needlework that she took several items home to sell for them.

Unprepared for the demand, Mrs. Byler placed more orders to Puerto Rico. Within six years, she had added cross-stitched tablecloths made by Palestinian refugees and hand-carved Haitian woodenware.

"She would go to the bank or post office and people would wave her down and say, 'Oh, Mrs. Byler, what have you got in the trunk of your car today?'" Ms. Daley said. "We say that our first cash register was the pocket of Mrs. Byler's apron."

Mrs. Byler operated the project out of the basement of her home until the the Mennonite Central Committee took over in 1962 and expanded it to 10 countries under the name of the Overseas Needlework and Crafts Project. Mrs. Byler retired in 1969, and the name of the group was changed to Selfhelp Crafts the following year.

The first Selfhelp store opened in Altona, Manitoba, in 1972. Two years later, the first U.S. shop opened in Bluffton, Ohio.

There currently are 72 Selfhelp shops in the United States and about 40 in Canada, run by a staff of 7,000 volunteers.

North American sales exceeded $6 million in 1988, a record, and represented crafts from 33 countries, according to Dirks. Forty-seven percent of the retail price stays in the country where the product is made, about 25 percent of it going directly into the artisan's pocket.

"It's wonderful to be able to help them, but not only that. Their stuff happens to be quite good and their prices are excellent," said Sally Guaragna, director of merchandising and marketing for the Arthur M. Sackler Gallery, part of the Smithsonian Institution, one of the museum shops that also sell Selfhelp items.

Not everyone welcomes the opportunity to buy imported crafts.

"We have a number of persons who look at something that says, 'Made in the Philippines,' 'Made in Thailand,' then they walk out," said Ann Roth, manager of the Selfhelp store in the nearby town of Bird in Hand.

"On several occasions, I've had a chance to explain to them why we import the products. Sometimes those have turned around and become sales because they realize what we're trying to do."

Ideally, Selfhelp volunteers hope that someday they won't be needed. But they're realists. "Selfhelp is one big glorious Band-Aid," Ms. Daley said.

Homeless find very little cheer for Christmas

Associated Press

Home for the holidays for the nation's growing legions of homeless could be under a bridge in Oklahoma City, a cardboard box in Philadelphia, or the streets in the nation's capital for those with no bed of their own.

In New York City, the estimated number of homeless has increased 25 percent during the last year, with the total estimated between 60,000 and 90,000; in Portland, Ore., the number rose 10 to 20 percent each year this decade.

"The need doesn't stop with Christmas," said Salvation Army Major Raymond L. Peacock in Seattle, where he said there has been a 15 percent increase this year in the number of people seeking assistance.

A big holiday celebration in a heated tent is planned for the homeless in front of the U.S. Capitol on Christmas Eve, featuring entertainers, athletes, gifts for the children, and a special feast.

But the lack of beds is especially acute in Washington, D.C., where, despite the estimated 10,000 to 15,000 people living in the streets, there are only about 2,500 shelter beds, said Maria Foscarinis, an attorney for the National Coalition for the Homeless.

The coalition estimates there are as many as 3 million homeless nationwide.

"There are some communities who use our inability to count the homeless as an excuse not to provide services," said Mary Orton, executive director of Central Arizona Shelter Services in Phoenix, where estimates range from 6,000 to 9,000.

"The simple fact is, regardless of the exact number of people, they are there and they do need help," she said.

One hard-hit city is Oklahoma City, where the number is estimated at 17,000, according to Christine Byrd, regional director of the national coalition. She said a December report from a governor's task force put the total for the state at 35,000.

Ms. Byrd said 48 percent are families, and that is blamed on Oklahoma's central location. She said poor families traveling between the West and East coasts run out of gas or have car trouble there.

Ms. Byrd said homelessness in rural areas is increasing because of farm foreclosures, bank failures, depressed oil and farm economies. Neither the state or the city provides any aid to the homeless.

"People don't want to accept (a homeless problem exits) because it is a harsh reality that could happen to them, too," said Ms. Byrd, who works at the Jesus House shelter, which holds 350 people per night. The rest of those without shelter huddle in groups under bridges, sleep on sidewalks or stay in abandoned buildings or cars, she said.

Baloney Joe's, a Portland shelter for homeless men, is "so full we're stacking people on top of each other," said Gene Ediger of the Burnside Community Council, a private agency for the homeless. He said the number of homeless has gone up 10 to 20 percent each year this decade.

"There's been a steady increase of about 25 percent a year that hasn't changed in six years," said Keith Summa of the Coalition for the Homeless in New York City.

In Philadelphia, the city has started daily cleanups of a subway concourse where homeless people cart cardboard boxes, mattresses and blankets around Thanksgiving.

Mayor W. Wilson Goode said the cleanup was not an eviction. Police have not stopped homeless people from returning.

Writer wants to alter soap opera's WASPish nature

ENTERTAINMENT

EDITOR'S NOTE: Soap operas are not known for heavy social philosophy or ethnic diversity. So it was unusual, to say the least, for two Orthodox Jews to make an appearance on NBC's "Day of Our Lives." The explanation is Leah Laiman, and she knew whereof she wrote.

By NANCY SHULINS

NEW YORK (AP) — Leah Laiman's life would make a lousy soap opera.

She was raised an Orthodox Jew in Hamilton, Ontario, where she spent her weekends reading the classics. She moved to New York and attended a Jewish women's college. She did hang around Greenwich Village one summer, though she didn't exactly blend into the crowd. "I was the only orthodox kosher virgin beatnik in New York," she says — until her father showed up to take her home.

It is, therefore, no small irony that Laiman, a woman with barely a nodding acquaintance with life's seamy side, should wind up as the head writer for one of the seamier soaps, NBC's "Days of Our Lives."

Soap Opera Digest rated it the most violent soap on television. "Bad planning," Laiman explains. Murder and mayhem are simply "a cheap way to end a Friday. The show did go through a period where there was a lot of violence toward women. I'm sorry for that."

"And in a way, soaps are very moralistic. Yes, people do naughty things, but the bad people always get punished. The good guys always win and get lots of fan mail...I'm still shocked to this day that people respond to the show the way they do. They identify so totally with these people's lives, they see them only as these characters."

NBC's "Days of Our Lives"

OTHER THAN that, though, Laiman makes no apology for the violence and sex served up on her soap. "Sure, soap operas are full of sex and violence," she says. "But they are not like movies and they aren't rated 'R.' There is a limit to what you can do.

"And in a way, soaps are very moralistic. Yes, people do naughty things, but the bad people always get punished. The good guys always win and get lots of fan mail."

Salem, U.S.A., the show's fictional location, is a slightly more enlightened place than the "white-bread town" Laiman found when she moved over from ABC's General Hospital three years ago.

Like most soap opera settings, Salem remains overwhelmingly white middle class. "There are two blacks," she says. "And everybody's Christian."

Not quite everyone, it turns out.

Enter the first Orthodox Jewish characters in the soap opera's history.

"Some people who watch these shows probably don't know any Jews," she explains. "I just wanted to show they have no horns."

SHE CREATED Robin, a beautiful young doctor who just happened to be an Orthodox Jew. Robin fell in love with Mike, also a doctor and, as luck would have it, a Christian.

"Robin's father was a pharmacist. He wore a yarmulke all the time. Robin never ate out. In the (non-kosher) cafeteria at the hospital, all she could eat was salad."

Since intimate dinner dates are a soap opera staple, Laiman created a kosher deli and saw to it Robin stayed home on the Sabbath. On Friday nights, "she lit candles and wouldn't answer the phone or ride in the car unless it was a medical emergency."

Mike gave serious thought to converting, then realized he couldn't give up his heritage. Eventually, Laiman resolved the plot by having Robin and her father leave town.

Laiman regrets that their departure meant there were no more Jews in Salem. Still, the alternatives would have been worse. For Robin to marry a non-Jew or worse, to abandon her own religion, would be out of the question.

In charting the soap's plot, Laiman remains mindful of her influence over the audience. "I would never let a woman have an abortion and go crazy about it," she says. "I might not have an abortion myself, but it's not up to me to put that in the show and influence people."

AFTER SIX years in the soap opera business — she worked on "General Hospital" for three years before moving to "Days" — Laiman says, "I'm still shocked to this day that people respond to the show the way they do. They identify so totally with these people's lives, they see them only as these characters."

As head writer, Laiman's job is to map out the story, which is subject to approval by the network. Associate head writers break the plot down into daily segments. Dialogue writers fill in the daily scripts.

The show is filmed in Los Angeles, but Laiman prefers to stay in New York. She travels to the West Coast for meetings, but spends most of her time in the Manhattan apartment she shares with her husband, producer-director Ralph Toporoff, her stepdaughter, Melinda, 19, and her 15-month-old baby, Danielle. She also has a stepson, Ian, 23.

Writing a soap opera "doesn't require tremendous writing talent, though it does require skill and understanding of the medium," Laiman says.

"Soaps appeal to middle-of-the-road conservatives. Television is not about public service. It's about advertising dollars and ratings and not offending viewers."

Still, she keeps an eye out for ways to incorporate her values into the show, and to pass along responsible information whenever possible.

WHEN THE story line dealt with sex abuse, Laiman included a hotline number at the end of the episode. She also tried to "make it very clear that sexual abuse is not the victim's fault."

With Robin's departure, Salem is, for the time being, once again an all-Christian town. But Laiman says plans are already in the works to bring Robin back.

In the meantime, there are other ways to get her points across. Coming up: a love story involving a plastic surgeon who happens to be black.

Group plans museum devoted to Coca Cola

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — In 1899, two local businessmen went to Atlanta and acquired the first rights to bottle and distribute Coca-Cola — for $1.

That's how the world's first Coke bottling plant wound up in this southeastern Tennessee city, and that's why a retired Coca-Cola executive wants to open a museum devoted to the popular soft drink.

Sebert Brewer Jr. heads a group that's working on plans for The Coke Plant, a proposed $3 million to $5 million high-tech museum near the city's riverfront.

"We want to show the stages that Coca-Cola bottling went through from the beginning of the bottles all the way to the cans and the talking machines, all the ways it has reflected changes in the American life," said Sandy Wagner, a Boston consultant helping plan the project.

The museum would have a permanent collection of Coca-Cola memorabilia, show traveling exhibits from Coca-Cola Co. archives in Atlanta and give audiovisual presentations on Coke history, marketing and technology.

Brewer said, but the group will probably seek some funding assistance from local and state governments and private donations.

Last month, Coca-Cola announced plans to build a $10 million four-story museum in Atlanta called The World of Coca-Cola to chronicle the history of the 102-year-old soft drink company. That project is scheduled to open in 1990.

Nets drop Mavs

What's with the Lakers?

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — The Los Angeles Lakers are in their longest regular-season losing streak of the Magic Era, four games, and Magic Johnson, for one, is awfully depressed about it.

"Losing two in a row is not a good feeling," Johnson said after the Lakers were beaten 116-103 Tuesday night in Chicago by the Bulls. "Losing three in a row is hard to deal with. Now, this is an all-time low for me. I'm trying to figure out how to deal with this. It's not easy."

The Bulls outscored the Lakers 23-5 after two free throws by Johnson with 5:11 remaining gave Los Angeles a 98-93 lead.

Johnson had 31 points and 12 assists, but it wasn't nearly enough. It's their longest losing streak since they lost five in a row in March of 1979.

Johnson joined the team the following fall, and has led them to five championships in his nine seasons with the team.

The Lakers lost four straight to Philadelphia in the 1983 NBA finals and to Houston in the 1986 Western Conference finals, but had never lost more than three straight during the regular season with Johnson around until now.

"A lot of teams lose four in a row," Lakers coach Pat Riley said. "But it's the first time it's happened in my coaching career. It feels bad. It feels like every other coach who's lost four in a row.

"We're in a period where we are struggling, and we'll have to deal with it."

Riley became the Lakers' coach on Nov. 19, 1981. His teams have a 429-158 regular-season record and an 87-38 post-season mark and have won four league championships.

The recent losses to New Jersey, Boston, Washington and Chicago — all on the road — have dropped the Lakers to 16-8, but they still lead the Pacific Division by two games over Portland.

And despite what's happened in the last week, the Lakers are 9-8 on the road and one of only four NBA teams who have won more than they've lost away from home.

All things considered, things aren't so bad for the two-time defending NBA champions. They've played 17 of their first 24 games on the road, and still have won twice as many as they've lost.

The losing streak figures to come to an abrupt end Friday night when the Lakers, 7-0 at home, entertain the Sacramento Kings, who were 5-16 overall and 1-10 on the road before playing at San Antonio Wednesday night.

"We need a blowout, not a one-point win or something," Lakers swingman Michael Cooper said. "If it's Sacramento we're playing, then they're in trouble. I don't care if it was Boston or anybody else, we're going home to prove ourselves.

"We're not defending anybody, we're not rebounding the basketball like we should. We need to be more aggressive for 48 minutes. When we did that, we were able to climb back into the game."

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, soon to retire, played only 10 minutes against the Bulls and scored just four points and one rebound. Abdul-Jabbar, 41, is the oldest player in NBA history and the league's all-time leading scorer.

Riley said he planned to use Abdul-Jabbar for the game's final four minutes, but that the Bulls' trapping defense made him go with a smaller, quicker lineup.

"Pat has to make those decisions and do what's best for the team," Abdul-Jabbar said. "I have no criticism of what he did. I'll do whatever's best for the team."

WT officials await word from NCAA

CANYON, Texas (AP) — The National Collegiate Athletic Association was expected to announce today the outcome of an investigation into alleged rules violations in the men's basketball program at West Texas State University.

Official word on the outcome of the investigation was expected to be announced at the NCAA's headquarters at Mission, Kan.

West Texas officials scheduled a news conference at 2 p.m. to discuss the NCAA announcement.

There were 18 allegations that the school's basketball program violated NCAA rules by illegally recruiting players and providing players with free airplane travel, free use of telephone credit cards and cash payments.

The alleged offenses occurred from April 1984 to October 1986, when WTSU competed in Division I's Missouri Valley Conference.

Former WTSU head basketball coach Gary Moss and two of his assistants were at the center of the allegation.

Moss is now in his second season as head coach at Sam Houston State University.

Sanders underplays his many successes

By BILL CENTER
Copley News Service

STILLWATER, Okla. — The numbers are so big they're almost meaningless ... 2,628 yards rushing ... 3,250 all-purpose yards ... 39 touchdowns ... 24 NCAA records.

But Barry Sanders is not numbers. He's a human being. "Like you or anyone else," he says.

He also says being the best college football player in the land and winning the Heisman Trophy are not the most important things in his life.

And when he says things like that, instinct says don't believe him. No one is that humble, right?

Wrong.

"Barry is a pretty special person," Oklahoma State offensive tackle Mike Wolfe was saying the other day while discussing the first Heisman Trophy winner to play in the Sea World Holiday Bowl, which takes place Dec. 30 in San Diego.

"Great football player. He's solid. He's fast. He moves through defenses like a Stealth bomber ... I mean, sometimes it's like they don't see him.

"But I respect him more as a person and a Christian than I do as a football player. Barry Sanders is real."

"A lot of people think Barry doesn't have a lot to say," said Oklahoma State quarterback Mike Gundy. "He does ... he's a pretty deep and sincere person.

"He just doesn't say it."

It used to be that actions spoke louder than words. If that is the case, Sanders' actions on the football field screamed this season.

He became the first running back in NCAA history to rush for more than 300 yards in four games in a season — or a career. No one else had done it more than once. His 2,628 yards rushing obliterated Marcus Allen's 7-year-old NCAA record by 286 yards. Only 20 teams in the nation rushed for more yards than Sanders.

And Sanders returned kicks and caught passes worth almost another 60 yards a game. His total per-game production of 295.45 yards shattered the oldest mark still on the NCAA books — the 246.3 yards per game Supreme Court Justice Byron "Whizzer" White averaged for Colorado back in 1937.

But that's just skimming the surface. We haven't mentioned the scoring records or what might have been had Oklahoma State head coach Pat Jones turned Sanders loose more often early in the season.

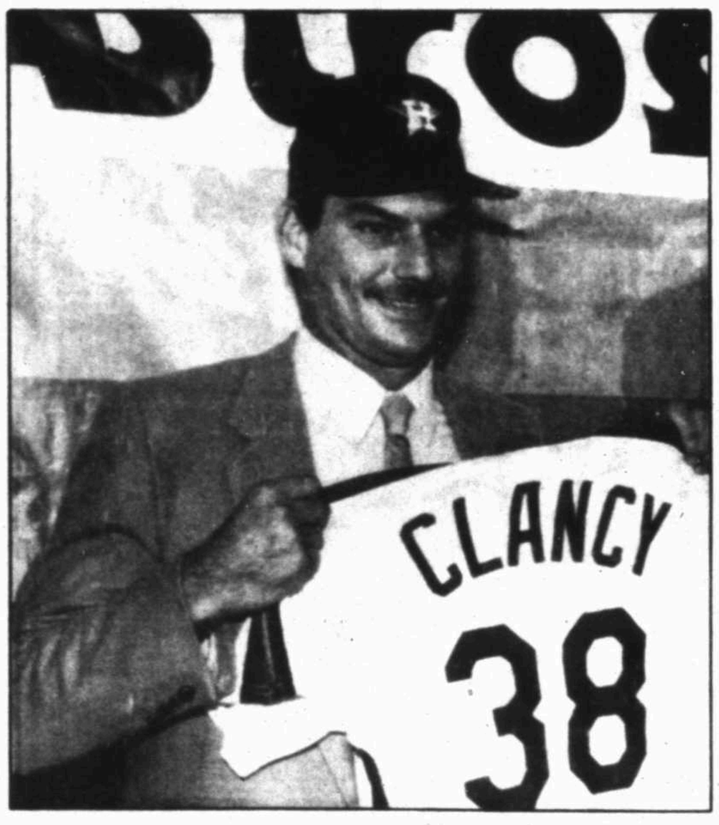

Oh, and we haven't mentioned that Barry Sanders would rather not talk about any of this.

Not out of spite. Not out of meanness — rather out of some good ol' well-learned values.

Letters to Sanders from President Reagan and governors of two states have gone unopened. But calls to his parents back in Wichita, Kan., are quickly returned.

"In the middle of all this," said his Oklahoma State athletic counselor, Ron Brown, "Barry is still trying to be a 20-year-old college student.

Fourteen to look for clubs next April

Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Buddy Bell, Ken Griffey and Bob Horner start the new year looking for new teams.

Bell, Griffey and Horner were among 14 players who became free agents Wednesday when their clubs failed to offer them contracts for the 1989 season.

Under baseball's rules, clubs must tender contracts by Dec. 20 or the players become free agents. Teams often use the process to cut players' salaries. They may not cut the salary of a roster player by more than 20 percent.

Also becoming non-tender free agents were catcher Bob Brenly of San Francisco; pitchers Steve Ontiveros and Matt Young of Oakland, Rod Scurry of Seattle and Frank Williams of Cincinnati; infielder Tom Lawless of St. Louis and outfielders John Christensen of Minnesota and Danny Heep of Los Angeles.

Bell, 37, was traded to Houston from Cincinnati in midseason after rookie Chris Sabo took away his job. Bell, a 17-year veteran, batted .241 in 1988 with seven homers and 40 runs batted in and made $790,000. Bell has 2,499 lifetime hits and a .280 batting average.

Griffey, 38, batted .255 in 1988 for Atlanta and Cincinnati with four homers and 23 RBI. Griffey, a career .298 hitter, made $500,000 under a contract he signed with Atlanta. Brenly, 33, hit .189 with five homers and 22 RBI for San Francisco and made $600,000.

Meanwhile Wednesday, seven "regular" free agents agreed to contracts for next season.

Pitcher Frank DiPino, who had been with the Chicago Cubs for 2½ seasons, agreed to a one-year contract with the St. Louis Cardinals for $452,500, a cut from his $485,000 salary last season.

DiPino, who has a career record of 20-35 in seven seasons, is expected to fill the swingman role held by Larry McWilliams last season, Cardinals general manager Dal Maxvill said. McWilliams was not offered a contract for next season.

"We felt that we needed another left-hander to complement Ken Dayley in the bullpen, and DiPino adds versatility to our bullpen," Maxvill said. "He's capable of pitching in both middle or short relief, and he could also start if needed."

Horner, 31, was a bust for the Cardinals in his return to the major leagues after a season in Japan.

So long '88, don't let the door hit ya

Patterson

I have been to the malls. I have bought the presents. I have finished the Christmas shopping. My brain is fried, and what is left of it will now try to recap for you what it considers to be some of the most memorable sports occurrences of the past year:

JANUARY

A member of the Texas Aggie 12th Man kickoff team steals Tim Brown's beloved hanky during the Cotton Bowl. Brown, Notre Dame's Heisman winner last year, responds by decking the Ag and retrieving the absconded holy cloth.

Jimmy "The Greek" Snyder is fired from CBS after giving his version of American history to a Washington TV Reporter. (Must be a rare form of hoof-in-mouth disease that attacks only people with quote marks in their names, i.e., "The Boz" and Attila "The Hun.")

FEBRUARY

Mike Tyson proposes to actress Robin Givens.

Olympic skiier Alberto Tomba asks figure skater Katarina Witt for a date in front of millions of TV viewers.

MARCH

Reacting to the work habits of Pam Postema, a female umpire employed in major league spring training games, Houston pitcher Bob Knepper strikes a blow for male chauvinists throughout the world. Knepper said a women's place is in the home, not behind home plate. To be more precise: "In God's society, woman was created in a role of submission. And sweetheart, will ya pass me the green beans."

APRIL

The NCAA sent a letter to Texas A&M officials notifying the Aggies that they would soon be under investigation. Over the next eight months, College Station resembles a three-ring circus with Jackie Sherrill doing a poor impression of Gunther Gabel-Williams.

MAY

Cincinnati manager Pete Rose is suspended for 30 days for bumping umpire Dave Pallone.

Yankee manager Billy Martin is involved in an altercation at a topless bar in Arlington, Tex. Martin is banned from topless bars for 30 days.

JUNE

June was a biggie. In chronological order:

Billy Martin is suspended for throwing dirt;

Tony Dorsett is traded to Denver;

Bill Fitch is fired as Houston Rockets' coach;

Bob Weiss is fired as San Antonio Spurs' coach;

Larry Brown is hired as Spurs' coach;

Bob Knepper opens his mouth again, referring to the National Organization for Women as "lesbians and blow-hards."

Billy Martin is fired.

JULY

Jimmy "The Greek" apologizes for his version of American history. In a rather vague apology, "The Greek" says "I was wrong for saying it."

Grief-stricken Syracuse plays despite tragedy

Associated Press

Suddenly, basketball meant little to No. 3 Syracuse and its Carrier Dome crowd.

"I was driving to the game and I had been in finals all day when I heard a news flash," guard Matt Roe said. "It didn't really hit me, but then I remembered there were SU students abroad."

At least 36 Syracuse students were killed Wednesday when a Pam Am jet bound for New York crashed in Scotland. A few hours later, the Orangemen beat Western Michigan 94-71.

"When you see that on the news, that's what you think about," Syracuse coach Jim Boeheim said. "It does put basketball and everything else in perspective."

A minister led the crowd of 25,000 in prayer before the game began. That was followed by a moment of silence.

The Syracuse fans, usually very vocal, were subdued throughout the evening. So were the players.

"It makes you stop and think about how lucky we are to be here," Roe said.

Sherman Douglas scored 27 points and Stephen Thompson 22 for Syracuse, 11-0.

The Orangemen ran off an early 18-5 burst and went on to lead 40-26 at halftime.

"Our basketball team did an outstanding job in the first half controlling the tempo," Western Michigan coach Vernon Payne said. "We wanted to control it and we did. We wanted to control the lane and we did. We wanted to stop the slams and the breaks and we did."

No. 1 Duke 94, Wake Forest 88

DURHAM, N.C. — Danny Ferry scored 22 of his 33 points in the second half Wednesday night, lifting No. 1 Duke past pesky Wake Forest in the opening Atlantic Coast Conference game of the season.

The Blue Devils raised their record to 7-0 while Wake Forest fell to 4-2.

Ferry, coming off an ACC record 58-point performance last week against Miami, Fla., continued his torrid pace, hitting seven of 11 shots in the second half.

Duke led 50-47 at halftime but couldn't pull away from the Demon Deacons during a half in which 29 fouls were called.

The game was tied six times in the first nine minutes of the second half before Ferry's two free throws with 10:21 remaining gave Duke the lead for good.

Less than four minutes later, Ferry completed a four-point play after being fouled by Robert Siler on a 3-point basket for a 77-71 cushion.

But Wake Forest narrowed the lead, pulling within 83-80 with 4:19 left on a baseline jumper by Sam Ivy.

But the Blue Devils went on a 6-0 run over a three-minute span late to seal the victory. During the spurt, Phil Henderson made a 17-foot jumper, Robert Brickey scored a dunk and Ferry had a running eight-foot jumper.

Alaa Abdelnaby added 13 points for Duke, while Greg Koubek had 12. Ferry, a senior forward, also added nine rebounds and nine assists.

Ivy led Wake Forest with 18 points, while freshman Chris King had 17. David Carlyle and Robert Siler added 14 points each.

No. 2 Michigan 121, Youngstown St. 72

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Glen Rice scored 30 points and Loy Vaught 26 as No. 2 Michigan rolled over Youngstown State for the unbeaten Wolverines' 11th victory.

Youngstown State, 0-8, has lost 21 consecutive games since last Jan. 23. Rice scored 21 points in the first half as Michigan took a 56-38 lead. He had a career-high 36 points Tuesday night in a 50-point victory over Northern Michigan.

Rice made of eight of 10 shots and all four free throws in the first half. The Wolverines shot 61.5 percent in the period and substituted freely in final 7½ minutes.

Michigan, averaging 100.5 points per game, has scored at least 100 points in six of its last seven games. The Wolverines had a season-high 125 against Northern Michigan, one of three Division II schools on a schedule that also included Eastern, Western and Central Michigan, Tampa, Grambling and South Dakota State.

Kevin Haddock scored 27 for the Penguins, who start three sophomores and two freshmen.

No. 10 Missouri 114, Southern U. 96

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Byron Irvin scored 30 points and No. 10 Missouri pulled away from Southern University.

Missouri led 83-76 with 8:24 left before going on a 14-3 burst. Irvin made four foul shots in the final minute.

The Tigers, 10-3, were ahead 60-49 at halftime. Johnny Steptoe scored 34 points for Southern, 4-4.

The teams traded leads for the first seven minutes before Missouri gradually moved in front.

No. 13 UNLV 88, Rhode Island 69

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — Stacey Augmon scored 21 points and No. 13 Nevada-Las Vegas beat Rhode Island in the opening game of the 13th annual Rebel Round-Up.

Central Michigan played Texas A&M in the second game.

Greg Anthony added 19 for the Runnin' Rebels and David Butler had 14.

Kenny Green, the Rams' sixth man, led all scorers with 22 points. Mergin Sina had 17 and Eric Leslie 14 for Rhode Island.

UNLV improved to 4-2 while Rhode Island fell to 1-4. The Rams are off to a shaky start after last year's 28-7 mark that included a trip to the "Sweet Sixteen" of the NCAA Tournament.

The Rebels jumped to a 7-0 lead in the opening minutes, then stretched the margin to 15-2, holding Rhode Island to two free throws in the first 6½ minutes of play.

Las Vegas expanded its lead to 24-8 midway through the first half on baskets by Augmon, Anthony, Moses Scurry and Anderson Hunt.

The Rams closed the gap to 34-24 on a run that included four slam dunks by Green.

The Rebels led 50-32 at halftime, and expanded it to 74-45 with nine minutes remaining.

Rhode Island outscored the Rebels 21-7 during a six-minute span late in the game with the Las Vegas starters on the bench.

Las Vegas outrebounded the Rams 45-33, with George Ackles getting nine for the Rebels.

No. 14 Louisville 76, E. Kentucky 40

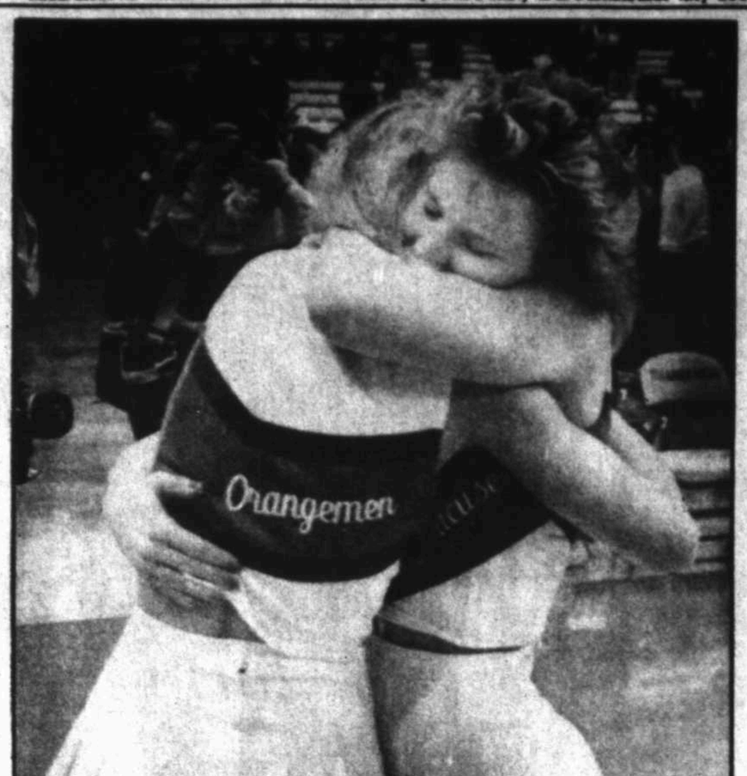

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Pervis Ellison made all eight of his shots in scoring 17 points as No. 14 Louisville overcame a sluggish start to beat Eastern Kentucky.

Louisville led 23-17 with four minutes left in the first half before scoring six straight en route to a 33-22 advantage at intermission.

The Cardinals then went on a 24-5 scoring run that gave them a 68-36 lead with 3:47 remaining in the game. James Brewer keyed the outburst with seven points and Tony Kimbro added five.

Louisville improved to 6-2 with its sixth straight victory, while Eastern Kentucky dropped to 1-7.

Louisville scored the game's first 11 points, and Eastern Kentucky could come no closer than six points the rest of the way.

Kansas nips Tech

SWC Hoops

Associated Press

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Mike Maddox hit a driving baseline jumper with 20 seconds remaining to lift No. 20 Kansas to an 81-80 victory over stubborn Texas Tech.

The Jayhawks, 8-1, rolled to a 51-33 halftime lead before the Red Raiders, 2-6, rallied behind the outside shooting of Todd Duncan and Jerry Mason and an intense man-to-man defense.

Duncan scored 17 of his 23 points in the second half, including four 3-point buckets, and Mason scored 12 of his 24 points, including a pair of 3-pointers, as the Raiders turned a 54-38 deficit with 16:37 remaining into a 76-75 lead on a Mason layup with 3:32 to play.

Milt Newton, who led Kansas with 27 points, converted two free throws as Kansas went in front 77-76, but Duncan answered with two free throws for a 78-77 Tech lead with 2:32 left.

Newton put the Jayhawks back in front 20 seconds later with two more free throws. Sean Gay then sank an 8-foot bank shot to put the Raiders on top 80-79 with 1:47 to play.

The teams exchanged possessions before Maddox drove the right baseline for his game-winning bucket.

On Tech's ensuing possession, Gay lost the ball out of bounds, but the Raiders regained possession with one second remaining. Wes Lowe couldn't handle Duncan's inbounds pass, and the Raiders never got off a shot.

Mark Randall finished with 19 points and Kevin Pritchard added 14 for KU. Gay added 16 points for Tech.

Arkansas 97, Texas Southern 79

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Keith Wilson made 7 points during a 17-2 run and Arkansas went on to a victory over Texas Southern.

The Razorbacks, 4-1, held the Tigers to one field goal during the first 11 minutes and opened a 20-4 lead. Texas Southern, 2-6, never got closer than 12, and that was the margin when Wilson took control.

Wilson, Arkansas' only senior, stuffed one after a block by Oliver Miller. That made it 39-25 with 18:03 left in the second half. Charles Parker hit from the field for the Tigers, but Wilson nailed a 3-pointer. A steal by Wilson led to an easy basket by Mario Credit and then Wilson hit a jumper for 46-27.

UTEP downs Miss. Valley

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Behind 13 points and 10 rebounds from Antonio Davis, Texas-El Paso held off a second-half rally and defeated Mississippi Valley 69-56 Wednesday night.

The win improved the Miners' record to 8-1 while the visitors fell to 4-4.

Senior guard Tim Hardaway led the Miners with 14 points.

Tim Pollard led Mississippi Valley State with 17 points. Roderic Coleman added 12.

UTEP led 34-20 at the half, but the Devils closed to within eight points with 15:34 to play before the Miners went on a scoring spree to pull away.

The Miners had a 15-point advantage at the free throw line despite making less than half of the efforts. UTEP converted 21 of 45 free throws, while Mississippi Valley went to the line only eight times, making six.

A bowl full of holiday predictions

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Football Writer

Not everything the postman delivers these days is loaded with Christmas cheer.

Take the letter your Practically Peerless Prognosticator recently received from Jimmie Lee Jenkins of Omaha, Neb. The PPP has chosen to respond to Mr. Jenkins with some constructive criticism, as opposed to the usually destructive predictions.

"I belong to a sporting club," it began. "We have read your prediction colum (sic) for many years. Many of the fellows play foot ball (sic) parleys (sic). You have cause (sic) many of us to loose (sic) thousand (sic) of dollars. Your preditions (sic) are so bad and wrong until you throw us off every week."

Response: If all those tout services are so great, how come they have to sell their predictions to the public? Why don't they bet their own picks and make a fortune?

Same thing here. Few folks ever get rich in the sports writing business, including those who pick football games.

"Our paper have (sic) the odd (sic) in the paper every tues (sic), Wed (sic), Thur (sic), fri (sic) and sat (sic). You aren't no Jimmie the Greek."

Response: That's the nicest thing anyone's said in quite a while.

"Your preditions (sic) come out in the Omaha World-Herald on Thursdays. Some time you will pick the winning team. Your pick by the point spread is a disasterous (sic), ridiculous, awful and so wrong until you ought to hide your face in shame."

Response: You mean it's not whether you win or lose but how you play the point-spread game?

"You have the nerve to put your pitcure (sic) in the paper."

Response: The World-Herald is the one with the nerve. Hard to believe such a good-looking dude's not in the flicks, ain't it?,

"How do you feel getting paid for what you are doing? I believe if your paper check (sic) your preditions (sic) ever (sic) week, they will fire you. I take it you are doing more than just making foot ball (sic) predition (sic) to earn your salary, if this was the only way you are making your money, you would starve to death."

Response: If you've seen the picture in the paper, you know we haven't missed many meals lately.

"Your upset specials stinks (sic). Penn State whipping Notra (sic) Dame and Oklahoma beating Nebraska as usually (sic)."

Response: Isn't the latter usually the lock of the year?

"I would like for you to answere (sic) my accusation in the Omaha World-Herald. You are a disgrace to foot ball (sic) lovers."

Response: Here are the PPP's bowl preditions (sic). Hopefully, they won't lead to perdition (sic). By the way, the regular-season record was 423-171-11—.712, but only 200-216-4—.481 against the spread.

Dec. 23

Independence Bowl, Texas-El Paso (favored by 1) vs. Southern Mississippi: For the fourth year in a row, one of the Shreveport teams is losing its head coach (UTEP's Bob Stull to Missouri). If this is the Independence Bowl's swan song, it's going out in a blaze of glory with two teams that have a combined record of 19-4 ... Southern Miss 31-24.

Dec. 24

Sun Bowl, No. 20 Alabama (by 14) vs. Army: Bama is America's bowlingest team with 41 postseason trips, eight more than runner-up Texas. Army is a relative newcomer to bowl games but the Cadets are 2-0 and will have a huge cheering section from nearby Fort Bliss ... Alabama 35-14.

Dec. 25

Aloha Bowl, No. 14 Houston (by 4) vs. No. 18 Washington State: Houston has just been slapped with NCAA probabtion and, Coach Jack Pardee says, "This is our bowl game for the next three years." The Cougars are 7-4-1 in bowl games ... Houston 42-35.

Dec. 28

Liberty Bowl, Indiana (by 3) vs. South Carolina: Two teams with a combined 1-10 bowl record, of which 0-7 belongs to South Carolina ... Indiana 28-21.

Dec. 29

All American Bowl, Florida (by 5½) vs. Illinois: The Gators are a Southeastern Conference team and Birmingham's Legion Field is an SEC stadium ... Florida 27-17.

Freedom Bowl, Colorado (by 4½) vs. Brigham Young: A running team against a passing team. See how they run ... Colorado 31-27.

Dec. 30

Holiday Bowl, No. 12 Oklahoma State (by 3½) vs. No. 15 Wyoming: These world travelers — Oklahoma State played its final regular-season game in Tokyo, Wyoming in Honolulu — are two of the three highest-scoring teams in the country. See Barry run ... Oklahoma State 45-38.

Dec. 31

Peach Bowl, Iowa vs. North Carolina State (even): Iowa coach Hayden Fry certainly doesn't need a tie for Christmas. He got three of them during the regular season ... North Carolina State 28-24.

Jan. 1

Gator Bowl, No. 19 Georgia vs. Michigan State (even): Vince Dooley, stepping down after 25 years as Georgia's coach, is no stranger to this stadium. He was the Gator Bowl MVP when Auburn beat Baylor 33-13 in 1954 and his Bulldogs play Florida here every year. The Spartans have a six-game winning streak after an 0-4-1 start ... Michigan State 24-17.

Jan. 2

Hall of Fame Bowl, No. 17 Syracuse (by 3) vs. LSU: The Tigers shared the SEC crown with Auburn and beat the co-champs 7-6 but nonleague losses to Ohio State and Miami cost them a Sugar Bowl bid ... LSU 24-17.

Florida Citrus Bowl, No. 10 Oklahoma vs. No. 13 Clemson (even): Like Houston, this is the Sooners' last bowl trip until 1991 courtesy of the NCAA and you can bet they'll live it up in Orlando ... Clemson 20-17.

Cotton Bowl, No. 9 UCLA (by 5½) vs. No. 8 Arkansas: UCLA can do something no school has ever done — win a seventh consecutive bowl game. In addition, quarterback Troy Aikman can go house-hunting if the Dallas Cowboys make him the first pick in the NFL draft. Upset Special of the Bowls ... Arkansas 27-24.

Rose Bowl, No. 5 Southern California (by 7) vs. No. 11 Michigan: The Wolverines are 8-0-1 since losing to Notre Dame by two points and Miami by one. USC is out to avenge last year's loss to Michigan State, which made the Big Ten 3-16 in its last 19 trips to Pasadena. Back to normalcy ... Southern Cal 27-17.

Sugar Bowl, No. 4 Florida State (by 6) vs. No. 7 Auburn: Auburn led the nation in three defensive categories but FSU's offense may be more than Tracy Rocker & Co. can handle ... Florida State 28-24.

Orange Bowl, No. 2 Miami (by 7) vs. No. 6 Nebraska: As Big Eight champ, Nebraska's the "home" team on Miami's home field, where the Hurricanes have won 24 straight games ... Miami 27-21.

Fiesta Bowl, No. 1 Notre Dame (by 4½) vs. No. 3 West Virginia: Miami coach Jimmy Johnson thinks he has the best team in the country but this game will decide the national champion. And there's no way we're gonna pick against the Fighting Irish with the AP's board of voters including an Ireland (Doug), Kelly (Mike), O'Toole (Tommy) and Christ (Ron) ... Notre Dame 30-24.

BOSTON — Ron Harper scored 26 points, Larry Nance 25 and Brad Daughtery 22 Wednesday night as the Cleveland Cavaliers ended a 24-game Boston Garden losing streak with a 115-114 victory over the Celtics.

The Cavaliers, who hadn't won a regular season game in the Garden since Oct. 13, 1977, outscored Boston 41-38 in a first-period shootout en route to their fourth straight victory.

Danny Ainge then led a Boston comeback which just feel short. Ainge hit a 3-point shot with two seconds left, but Cleveland had no trouble running out the clock.

Ainge led all scorers with 29 points. Kevin McHale had 25 and Robert Parish 22 for Boston.

Jazz 98, Bullets 82

LANDOVER, Md. — Karl Malone scored 34 points and Thurl Bailey had 27 as the Utah Jazz snapped a four-game losing streak and continued their domination over the Bullets in Washington.

John Stockton had 16 assists for the Jazz, who have beaten the Bullets in their last five trips to the Capital Centre. The Bullets' last victory over the Jazz on their home floor was Nov. 19, 1983.

Washington, held to its fewest points of the season, was led by Ledell Eackles, who scored 15. Jeff Malone and Bernard King each had 12 for the Bullets.

Bucks 112, Hornets 100

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Jack Sikma's 3-point jumper capped a 13-4 Milwaukee run at the start of the fourth period and the Bucks went on to defeat the Charlotte Hornets. Sikma finished with 25 points, while Terry Cummings led Milwaukee with 32.

Kelly Tripucka had 30 points for Charlotte.

Charlotte rallied to take an 82-81 lead, but the Bucks erased the deficit at the end of the third quarter before beginning the fourth period with its 13-4 run.

Nets 122, Mavericks 120, OT

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Lester Conner and Buck Williams teamed on a 7-2 spurt late in overtime after Chris Morris made a 3-point shot to force the extra period and the New Jersey Nets defeated Dallas, ending the Mavericks' four-game winning streak.

The win also put an end to Dallas' club record-tying five-game road winning streak and gave New Jersey a 3-0 mark in overtime games this season.

Williams and Roy Hinson each had 24 points for New Jersey, while Morris had 18 and Mike McGee 16.

Mark Aguirre led Dallas with 26 points, and Derek Harper, Rolando Blackman and Roy Tarpley all had 23.

Sonics 109, Heat 101

MIAMI — Reserve forward Xavier McDaniel scored 23 points and grabbed 13 rebounds as Seattle's bench accounted for 65 points in a victory over the Miami Heat.

Dale Ellis and Sedale Threatt each added 18 points for the SuperSonics.

Miami, 1-21, was led by rookies Grant Long, who scored a season-high 23 points, and Kevin Edwards, who added 16.

Miami led by eight points in the first quarter, but the Sonics took control with a 22-6 spurt spanning the final 39 seconds of the first half and the first 6:05 of the third period.

Spurs 125, Kings 107

SAN ANTONIO — Greg Anderson led eight Spurs in double figures as San Antonio snapped an eight-game losing streak by defeating Sacramento 125-107.

Kosar likes his chances against Oilers Saturday

By CHUCK MELVIN

BEREA, Ohio (AP) — Bernie Kosar, still listed as questionable for Saturday's AFC wild card game, says his chances of playing may be enhanced because he's not a scrambling quarterback.

"The fact that basically I'm a pocket passer may help me," said Kosar, who worked out with his Cleveland Browns' teammates Wednesday for the first time since he sprained his left knee Dec. 12. "It's not feeling bad moving in a straight line. It's the lateral movement, the inside ligament, that's a problem."

Kosar sprained the knee in the fourth quarter of a Monday night loss in Miami, when he was hit by Dolphins linebacker John Offerdahl.

Don Strock replaced Kosar for Sunday's 28-23 victory over the Houston Oilers, which clinched a playoff berth and the home field advantage for Cleveland in Saturday's wild card game against the Oilers.

Kosar, wearing a brace on the injured knee, took about a half-dozen snaps in the Browns' seven-on-seven workout Wednesday and also participated in drills with the Browns' receivers and running backs. Strock, however, got the majority of practice time with the first team, and Kosar did not participate in the 11-on-11 drills.

"We're really not that optimistic right now (about playing Saturday)," said Kosar, who was examined after practice by team physician John Bergfeld.

Kosar said his practice time today would depend on how much the knee swelled overnight. He said he worked out longer than he had thought would be possible Wednesday.

"You get out there and the adrenalin starts flowing," Kosar said.

Coach Marty Schottenheimer said the Browns intend to activate Mike Pagel for Saturday's game regardless of Kosar's status. Pagel, a backup quarterback, spent the final 10 games of the season on injured reserve because of a separated shoulder.

Kosar said the sprain is a problem particularly when he twists to make handoffs.

"If we can get Marty to say we'll throw on every play, it'll help," he quipped. "The arm and the timing are in good shape. The main thing is, the knee is improving. It's getting better, just not at the speed I would like."

Two other injured Cleveland starters, fullback Kevin Mack and cornerback Hanford Dixon, also practiced Wednesday. Mack, with knee and calf injuries, is listed as questionable. Dixon, with a sore thigh, is listed as probable. Both missed Sunday's game.

Others listed as probable are linebacker Mike Johnson (ankle), safety Brian Washington (elbow and neck) and running back Herman Fontenot (shoulders and knee).

Defensive end Marlon Jones is listed as doubtful with back spasms. He has been hospitalized at the Cleveland Clinic since Monday.

Portland stars lead west voting

NEW YORK (AP) — Three members of the Portland Trail Blazers — forwards Jerome Kersey and Steve Johnson, and guard Clyde Drexler — are among the leaders in early fan voting to determine the Western Conference starting team for the 1989 NBA All-Star Game.

Joining them are Los Angeles Lakers guard Magic Johnson, the leading vote-getter in the West with 129,770, and Houston center Akeem Olajuwon, with 89,902 votes.

Among the forwards, Kersey and Steve Johnson are running 1-2, with 75,977 and 71,665 votes, respectively. At guard, Drexler is second with 79,457 votes.

NFL parity makes it possible for all teams to be equally dull

By PETER ALFANO
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — It is probably fantasy to expect New York Giants fans to have completely emerged from the depression brought about Sunday when their team's loss to the dastardly New York Jets cost the Giants the bragging rights to East Rutherford, N.J., and eventually, a playoff berth.

But if they could be objective for a moment, those fans might consider that for one of the few times this season, at least, there was passion on the playing field and in the stands, a feeling that there was something worth rooting for in the otherwise humdrum world of the National Football League.

Does Pete Rozelle — who is often credited with inventing football — realize that baseball's winter meetings were more exciting than his weekly punt, pass and kick contests? It made you pine for the uncertainties of the strike season, rosters filled with school teachers, construction workers, auto dealers, dreamers and semi-pros. It may not have been of the highest caliber, but football played by the strikebreakers was unpredictable and more exciting.

Pro football has been victimized by sweet parity. Rozelle's grand design to make the NFL more competitive by manipulating the schedule is flawed in that it has resulted in widespread mediocrity. Some Giants fans are probably still trying to determine why their team did not make the playoffs when five others with identical 10-6 records are celebrating.

The Seattle Seahawks were not even that good, making the playoffs with a 9-7 record because they won the Western Division of the American Conference. It is getting closer to the time when a team will win its division with a losing record.

Given all the teams with comparable records this season, perhaps the NFL should revive the Playoff Bowl, played from 1961 through 1970, when the teams that lost the Eastern and Western conference championships were treated to a consolation game in Miami.

This year, the field for a Playoff Bowl tournament would include the Giants (10-6), Saints (10-6), Colts (9-7), Patriots (9-7), Jets (8-7-1) and Broncos (8-8). The winner might even be favored were it to challenge the eventual Super Bowl champion.

Apparently, the NFL does not understand that interest in any sport peaks when a super team or superstar captures the imagination of fans, especially casual fans who are not Sunday-afternoon couch potatoes.

The Packers under Vince Lombardi might be the NFL's most legendary team. In Pittsburgh, Terry Bradshaw, Mean Joe Greene, Franco Harris, Lynn Swann and Jack Lambert, among other Steelers, became heroes everywhere when the team won four Super Bowl titles.

Where are their successors? There is no one with Joe Namath's panache striding to the line of scrimmage. There are plenty of outstanding runners but really, no one as electrifying as O.J. Simpson. Where is Dick Butkus, growling across the line of scrimmage?

There is a mystique surrounding great teams and players that is missing. No player is synonymous with pro football as Larry Bird and Magic Johnson are with basketball, Mario Lemieux and Wayne Gretzky are with hockey.

Lawrence Taylor should be that type of player, but as dominant as he can be, he received more attention for his problems with substance abuse and for a newspaper story that said he wanted to be traded.

The Dolphins, on the other hand, may have been only 6-10 but are one of the few entertaining teams because Dan Marino has authentic star quality. The NFL needs more like him and Brian Bosworth, although the Seahawks linebacker appears more manufactured than real.

Who can be excited about the playoffs when, for example, the Bears won 12 games this season — as many as any team — and they don't have a quarterback. The Bills, also 12-4, lost three of their final four games.

The Bengals, who almost fired Coach Sam Wyche after finishing 4-11 last season, were another 12-4 team, a rather remarkable overnight turnabout made possible by parity.

In the past, the NFL was more innovative, making adjustments in the rules to keep the game fast paced, exciting. Now, games drone on, teams playing like mirror images. Only the uniforms are different. As often as not, games are decided by the place-kickers with funny names. Who said soccer wasn't catching on in this country?

BARRY——

"I think it's real. In football, he's more team-oriented. His personal life revolves around academics and his inner self."

You can't find Barry Sanders in a disco. Teammates say they can't recall seeing him at a party or a movie house.

But you can find him Thursday at the weekly meetings of the Oklahoma State branch of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes. And he is routinely spotted in the library.

"As a junior, Barry doesn't have to come to our study-hall labs," said Brown. "But he's in there a lot. The library might be the only place he can go and find solitude."

Only a month ago, a lot of people laughed when Sanders said he "wanted an education more than he wanted the Heisman Trophy." His teammates didn't. They even understood when Sanders tried to bow out of a satellite-TV Heisman Trophy ceremony on the dawn of Oklahoma State's final regular-season game in Tokyo.

"I'm going crazy because he won the Heisman Trophy," said all-Big Eight offensive guard Chris Stanley. "It's the greatest thing that ever happened to me. If I won the Heisman, I'd be celebrating.

"And Barry doesn't change. This isn't an act. It's Barry. And everyone on this team respects him for it.

"Barry Sanders is the kind of person everyone wishes they could be."

And that has nothing to do with football.

For more than a week, there have been rumors floating around that Sanders might skip his senior season at Oklahoma State and try for the big bucks in the National Football League.

Those rumors didn't start with Sanders. But when asked about them two weeks ago, he hedged his answer — not because he was thinking about the NFL, but because he wasn't thinking about it. "I didn't know what to say, so I didn't say anything."

And it was misread.

But it is a valid question to wonder how someone could race through the last three months the way Sanders has and be so unaffected by all the yards, touchdowns, publicity and, finally, the Heisman Trophy.

"I don't like being different," said Sanders last week. "I don't enjoy being on a pedestal at all.

"I dream the American dream of happiness, a loving wife, a nice family and two cars in the garage.

"I want to be happy, and I don't correlate happiness to football. Yes, I'd like to play in the NFL. But I won't peg my future happiness on football ... That's a terrible way to wind up being so disappointed.

"I don't have to be successful in football to be successful. I will be successful if I keep my faith in God and have inner peace and respect ... That's what life is all about.

"I don't see myself as being a star."

Never has. Possibly never will.

He spent his first two years in high school cheering his brother Byron from the stands. He spent his third blocking for Byron, who this season was a 1,000-yard rusher for Northwestern.

Instead of following his brother at tailback, he started his senior season as a wingback, even though he was the best runner on the North Wichita High team. "I was happy where I was, and I'm not one to argue or rock the boat."

When it came time to pick a college, the choices were rather simple. Most big schools were turned off by Sanders' size (now 5-foot-8 and 195 pounds). Not even Wichita State or the two Kansas universities offered him a scholarship. Oklahoma State did.

He spent his first two years backing up Heisman Trophy-candidate tailback Thurman Thomas and returning kicks.

When the 1988 season dawned, Sanders was not even regarded as the top weapon in the Cowboys' deep arsenal. Quarterback Mike Gundy and All-America wide receiver Hart Lee Dykes were.

But the yards kept coming in bunches from the time Sanders opened his second straight season with a 100-yard kickoff return.

He immediately moved to the top of the NCAA rushing charts. When he rushed for 189 and 215 yards in losing causes against Nebraska and Oklahoma, respectively, the world took notice.

Oklahoma State didn't launch a Heisman campaign until the race was almost over — which is really the beauty of it all.

Sanders silently won the award. His deeds did speak louder than words.

To this day, the national media find Sanders as hard to catch as opposing defenders do.

"To understand Barry," said Brown, "you have to look at how he came in to Oklahoma State. He had goals of what he wanted from a college career, not as a celebrated athlete."

JEANE DIXON'S your horoscope

© 1988, Los Angeles Times Syndicate

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1988

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You will have greater visibility and a better opportunity to increase your prestige and income. Your loyalty to someone will be handsomely rewarded. New career projects are very attractive. An emotional roller-coaster slows down. A close relationship becomes more firmly rooted. Travel abroad is personally fulfilling — and could help stimulate new sources of income.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: dancer Jose Greco, actor Harry Guardino, photographer Yousuf Karsh, actress Ruth Roman, West German leader Helmut Schmidt, pitcher Tim Leary, Mormon prophet Joseph Smith.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A good day for dealing with domestic matters. Make time for a family conference to air your differences. Major financial decisions are best postponed. Tend to odd jobs.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Use more tact when handling difficult situations. Try reasoning with a loved one. Romance, courtship and child-related activities are emphasized. Enjoy modest entertainment tonight. Save money for a special splurge.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A wonderful day for Christmas parties, home entertainment and dining out. Enjoy yourself without being indiscreet. Family will be unusually supportive. Keep conversation light.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Serious work will be impossible if everyone at the office is in a holiday mood. Dress in bright colors. Do not be upset if someone acts foolish; you do not have to follow suit.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Early morning brings some concern about a friend. Try not to worry too much. Family affairs are lively and happy. Enjoy a small trim-a-tree party tonight. A romance heats up.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): The family scene — demanding mates and temperamental relatives — could ruffle your feathers. Be agreeable even if you're inclined to argue. Romance is a top priority. Speak from the heart.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Resist any urge to balance your budget by gambling. You need to spend some time re-evaluating your position. A social gathering that includes people from a distance could help bring in new business.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Get errands out of the way early today and concentrate on routine but essential projects. Good news arrives in the mail — perhaps an unexpected check. Romance puts the icing on the cake!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Resist an urge to overspend. It really is the thought that counts. Today is great for travel, scholastic affairs and distant negotiations. A platonic relationship intensifies. Your confidence grows.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Feelings run too high for comfort today. Be careful not to harp on anything. Seek shortcuts to prevent exhaustion. Take a conservative approach to last-minute gift-buying. Avoid going overboard.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Guard your money and valuables closely. Resist an impulse to engage in last-minute Chirstmas shopping you cannot afford. Enlist cooperation of family in preparing for tomorrow. Cook special treats.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You become aware of a deeper level to an intimate relationship. Long-term financial gains are linked to joint investments. A partnership should be part of your future. Romance soars to new heights.

Opening lead: Two of ♡

Beware of tipping your hand to declarer. On this deal from a national team championship, a West player who had represented the U.S. in international competition could not restrain himself—and suffered the consequences.

North was perhaps a trifle aggressive in the auction. In view of the partial misfit, a preference to two spades at his second turn might have been preferable, and certainly a pass of three spades would not have invoked anyone's ire. However, there was nothing wrong with the final contract—only the 5-0 trump split made it hazardous. Since West had no real expectation of beating four spades more than one trick, why he would double for a measly extra 100 points is beyond us.

Declarer won the heart opening lead in dummy. Had he had no help from the defenders, he would more than likely have taken a spade finesse at this point. Warned by the double that trumps were not lying well, declarer cashed the table's remaining high heart, then led the king of diamonds.

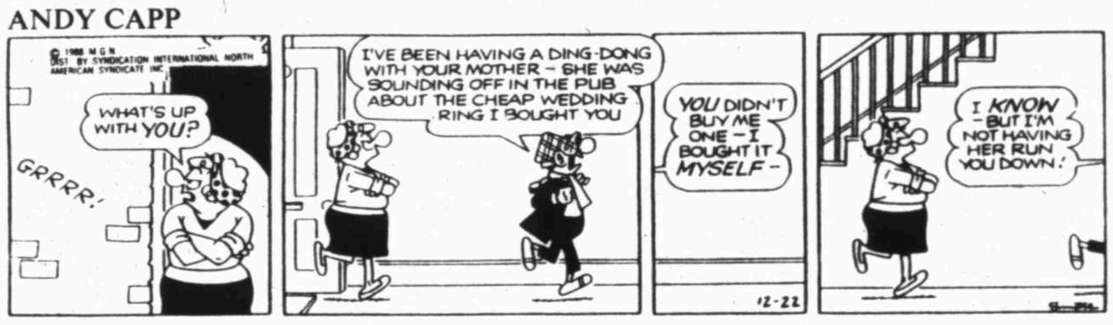

West took his minor-suit aces and continued with a club, which declarer ruffed. After cashing the diamond queen, he played off the king and jack of hearts. East's failure to ruff confirmed declarer's card-reading.

Both declarer and West were now down to nothing but five trumps each. A low spade toward the jack sealed West's fate. If he rose with the queen, declarer would be left with four winning trumps between his hand and dummy. But playing the seven proved no better. Dummy's jack won, and a trump, ducked to West, forced him to win and return a trump into declarer's A-K-10 tenace. So declarer lost only one trump trick and the minor-suit aces.

Los Angeles mayor will play himself in episode of 'Hunter'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Mayor Tom Bradley will try his hand at acting next month, playing himself in the 100th episode of NBC's crime drama "Hunter."

Bradley was invited to appear after expressing an interest in the series starring Fred Dryer and Stephanie Kramer, said producer George Geiger.

Bradley spokesman Bill Chandler said the mayor has made cameo appearances in the past on shows, including "Matlock."

A special three-part script entitled "City Under Siege" features a female criminal Hunter extradited a decade earlier to Los Angeles and launching a crime spree.

Her violent crimes lead to vigilantism, which Hunter tries to counter with a task force.

Filming takes place in January and the scheduled air dates are Feb. 4, 11 and 18.

CLEARWATER, Fla. (AP) — Sen. Bob Graham donned an apron and joined volunteers feeding the hungry and homeless at a soup kitchen then helped distribute food baskets to the needy in the Tampa Bay area.

Graham, D-Fla., spent an hour Wednesday in a serving line at St. Vincent de Paul's soup kitchen, where 160 poor and homeless sat down to a hot meal of soup, turkey, potatoes and vegetables.

"In Washington, we deal with issues in very big numbers and broad programs," said Graham. "Here you deal one-on-one with human beings who are hungry, sick, emotionally disturbed. I want to learn as much as I can from the people affected."

For the senator it was a workday, an idea he adopted in 1974 while running for the state senate in Florida to occasionally spend a day doing what ordinary people do. The volunteer job was his 222nd workday.

Bob Thue, executive director of the kitchen, said Graham's visit "was a beautiful Christmas gift to those people. He put on an apron and went to work. And he talked to them about their problems.

"To treat them like human beings doesn't sound like much, but it's a lot for some," said Thue.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country singer Lee Greenwood's mother's penchant for stitchery kits is going to benefit a youth emergency shelter and a senior citizens' group.

Greenwood

Greenwood has donated 500 kits, worth $10,000, to the Oasis Center, which provides emergency shelter and other services for young people.

The Oasis Center, in turn, gave the kits to Senior Citizens Inc., a nonprofit organization that runs a day care center and provides other services for the elderly.

The senior citizens are selling the kits for an average price of $10 and will split the proceeds with the center, said Mary Flanagan, director of community relations at Oasis.

Greenwood had been given the kits by his mother, who had accumulated too many of them, said Kelly Morris, the singer's daughter.

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Developer Donald Trump marked the restart of construction on his newly purchased Taj Mahal casino project by inviting guests into a chilly arena and snipping a gilded ribbon.

Although some construction workers are already at work in the massive structure, more than 1,000 more will be added by February and another 1,000 in the spring, Trump said. The casino is expected to open in early 1990, becoming Trump's third gaming hall in Atlantic City.

Work on the 1,250-room structure was delayed for a year while Trump and entertainer Merv Griffin worked out details of the sale of Resorts International Inc. In the deal, Trump took control of the Taj Mahal and left most of the rest of Resorts' holdings to Griffin.

"We're working very hard to straighten out what Resorts couldn't do," Trump said Wednesday.

Resorts broke ground in 1983 on the Boardwalk project near Resorts' hotel.

Trump, meanwhile also said he's decided not to sell the largest undeveloped plot of land in New York City's Manhattan borough after all. He said he'll move ahead with plans to build the world's tallest building on the 76-acre riverfront site.

Cosby

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) — Entertainer Bill Cosby and producers of his top-rated "The Cosby Show" are being sued by a father-and-son scriptwriting team who accuse them of plagiarism.

In their federal lawsuit filed here, Henry and Daniel Shea of Berkley contend that a script they submitted to the TV show in June 1986 was rejected, but then used in fragments over seven shows broadcast between September 1986 and November 1987.

"We have a line-by-line comparison of the submitted script and the dialogue from the finished shows," said Joseph Moch, the Sheas' attorney. "The overlapping areas are too similar, and occur too frequently, to be coincidence.

The suit asks for unspecified damages of at least $25,000.

"The reaction we have gotten so far is, in essence, 'That's how this business goes.' Well, that's not how the business goes around here," he said.

Representatives for the show in New York declined to comment Wednesday.

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — Merryle Stanley Rukeyser, a pioneer of financial journalism who wrote columns for Hearst Newspapers and International News Service for more than 30 years, died Wednesday at age 91.

Rukeyser died at White Plains Hospital.

Rukeyser also lectured and wrote nine books on financial subjects. His sons, Louis and William, became prominent economics journalists, and M.S. "Bud" Rukeyser Jr. became a major television executive.

The Chicago-born Rukeyser was raised in New York City and began his newspaper career at 17, while attending Columbia University. He worked summers as a reporter for the Rockaway News and as assistant sports editor for the New York Morning Telegraph.

He joined the New York Tribune in 1917, after his graduation, and in 1920, at age 23, became the newspaper's financial editor.

He moved to a similar post at the New York Evening Journal from 1923 to 1926 and the following year began writing his financial columns for Hearst and INS, an assignment that lasted until 1957.

He also returned to Columbia as a teacher in the School of Journalism from 1918 to 1935 and as a student, earning a master's degree in economics in 1925.

Specialists predict higher oil prices

By THOMAS C. HAYES
New York Times News Service

DALLAS — A combination of smaller global inventories and tighter supplies will lead to higher oil prices, industry specialists said Wednesday.

On Tuesday there were unconfirmed reports that Saudi Arabia reportedly planned to pare oil shipments to Japan sharply after Jan. 1.

This was seen as evidence that it wants the quota agreement reached last month by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to succeed, these specialists said.

Global inventories of crude oil appear to have fallen to half the total of recent estimates, or about 125 million barrels, some analysts noted.

"You can see prices strengthening as the market begins to understand that OPEC will restrict production and that there is not a significant inventory overhang," said Theodore R. Eck, chief economist of Amoco Inc.

"It seems pretty clear that the Saudis and others mean to abide by their quotas."

The February-delivery contract gained another 7 cents cents to $16.37, by midmorning. In moderate trading Wednesday on the New York Mercantile Exchange the contract added 15 cents, after gaining 33 cents Tuesday.

The January contract, which expired Tuesday, had risen $1.42 on the final day of trading. Analysts attributed much of the gain to a buying frenzy caused by buyers who rushed into the market to cover January contracts they had sold short.

Nauman Barakat, vice president for energy investments at Prudential-Bache Securities Inc., said Wednesday that he believed overall strength of crude oil prices since OPEC's agreement in Vienna on Nov. 28 should continue for several weeks, in part because winter weather spurs demand.

William L. Randol, international oil analyst at the First Boston Corp., said OPEC has "a reasonable chance" of maintaining prices for Saudi Light crude at an average of $15 a barrel next year.

That would convert to $17 for West Texas Intermediate crude, which is generally priced about $2 above Saudi crude. The West Texas grade had traded under $13 a barrel in the futures market as recently as October.

Drexel pleads guilty in securities fraud case

NEW YORK (AP) — After asserting innocence for more than two years, Wall Street powerhouse Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. agreed to plead guilty to six felonies and pay a record $650 million fine to settle the biggest securities fraud case in history.

The plea bargain agreement is the most stunning break yet in a criminal probe of the nation's fifth-largest investment firm, which bankrolled some of the biggest corporate takeovers of the decade through its pioneering use of high-yield "junk bond" securities.

The agreement, announced Wednesday by U.S. Attorney Rudolph W. Giuliani, does not protect Michael Milken, Drexel's senior high-yield bond executive and a key target of the criminal probe.

The investigation already has cost Drexel nearly $2 billion in lost business and legal expenses, sapped morale of its 10,000 employees and seriously undermined what many consider Wall Street's most aggressive and able financier.

Sources familiar with Drexel's decision who spoke on condition on anonymity said its board of directors agonized Wednesday afternoon before approving the settlement, which would brand Drexel as a felon but spare it a potentially ruinous, drawn-out trial.

The settlement would mark a complete turnaround in Drexel's claims of innocence.

By admitting guilt in the settlement, Drexel exposes itself to numerous lawsuits by investors who claim they were victimized by the firm's admittedly illegal acts.

Drexel spokesman Steven Anreder declined to comment on how the board voted or its specific reasons, but said directors had "concluded that this settlement is in the best interest of our firm and our employees."

Many Drexel clients greet settlement with relief

By ALISON LEIGH COWAN
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Though it has agreed to pay a stiff price for its settlement of securities law violations, Drexel Burnham Lambert made some of its clients happy Wednesday and left others with a tough decision about continuing the relationship.

Those that applauded the settlement were among a group that has not been shy about their fierce loyalty to the firm. They greeted Wednesday's news with relief, although several of them withheld comment until they had a chance to learn more details about the settlement.

Though the amount of the settlement — $650 million — drew gasps, those clients willing to comment generally felt the sum was worth it if it helped the firm put its troubles behind it.

"If there's been some resolution to this thing, I'm tickled," said Irwin L. Jacobs, the corporate raider and chairman of Minstar Inc.

Minstar, a maker of pleasure boats, hired Drexel earlier this year to take the company private and more recently to help it sell a sports products division.

"It's nice to see life go on," he said.

Those interviewed were especially relieved that the hard-to-replace Michael Milken, the Los Angeles innovator who created the high-yield bond market where Drexel made its name, apparently did not have to resign as a condition of the settlement.

"If Mr. Milken had to resign to arrive at a settlement it would have driven the firm to pieces," said John D. Kuhns, another corporate raider who until recently was president of Catalyst Energy Development Corp.

"I know Peter Ackerman very well," said Kuhns, of Milken's next-in-line. "Peter is a terrific guy. However I don't think, he'd fault me if I said he's not Mike Milken."

Jacobs agreed that the firm's level of service would have been sharply impaired without Milken.

"My personal opinion based on how I see Drexel is yes, it would impair it," he said. " I don't think there's anybody that can deny that fact."

Drexel had previously disclosed that the continuing investigation into its affairs had cost it an estimated $1.5 billion in lost revenues and $175 million in expenses. That is a lot of money, but Drexel, one of Wall Street's most profitable firms, has so far been able to weather the costs and has essentially clung on to its market share.

Clients expressed some fears, however, that now that Drexel has agreed to plead guilty to six criminal offenses, the costs will mount.

State attorneys general can enforce what is known as bad-boy statutes that restrict businesses convicted of a felony from dealing in securities.

Home prices rising, chamber told

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

One out of every 10 homes sold in Midland last month was brand new, more than triple the rate of new home sales in November 1987, according to the Midland Board of Realtors.

Thirteen new homes, at an average cost of more than $169,600, were sold in November, compared to four new residences with an average value of $144,400 a year ago.

The total number of sales was off for the month, but a higher average price meant more than $1.1 million additional revenue to the city's Realtors during the month. A total of 130 homes, valued at almost $11.3 million were sold last month.

The higher average price is a good sign for the real estate market — and in turn — for the city, retiring Board of Realtors president Darrell McDonald told the Midland Chamber of Commerce board of directors during their monthly meeting Wednesday.

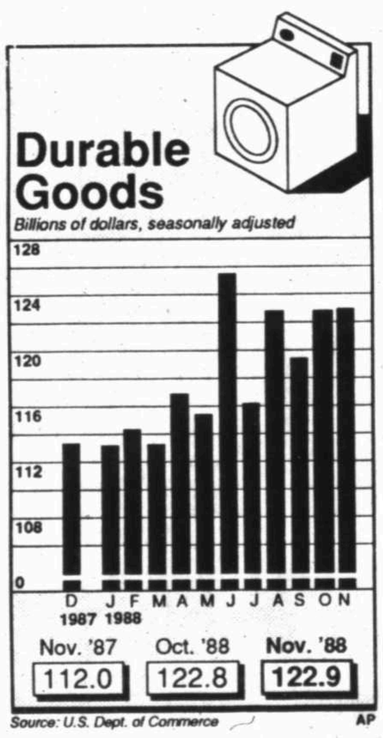

Combined with a higher average value of the new and existing homes in inventory, "this indicates that the high number of foreclosures and first-time buyers' homes are finally being worked out of the market," McDonald said.

Fewer, but more expensive, homes are listed as active by the Realtors' Multiple Listing Service this November. This year, 1,133 new and existing homes, average price $87,504, are listed; last year 1,263 with an average price tag of $79,967 were on the market.

In other chamber business in an abbreviated preholiday meeting, the directors were apprised that a special board meeting will convene at 3:30 p.m. on Jan. 3.

At the special meeting, officials of National Community Development Service will report the results of a fund-raising feasibility survey commissioned by the chamber in October.

The report is expected to include NCDS' "go/no go" recommendation, an achievable target amount, timetable, plan and other details if a fund drive is recommended.

'Big ticket' orders surge 1.8 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Orders for "big ticket" durable goods, excluding the volatile defense category, shot up 1.8 percent in November, the best showing since August, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said that total durable goods orders edged up only 0.1 percent to $122.89 billion last month, but the overall figure was held back by a sharp 17.6 percent drop in military orders.

Retailers seeing final Christmas rush

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — If holiday season sales increase as expected, merchants may have the calendar to thank for it.

Experts are cautiously holding to their predictions of an industry sales increase of 5 to 7 percent over last year — when similar gains were called mediocre — but only because this year the Thanksgiving-to-Christmas period is two days longer and Christmas Eve falls on the weekend.

Edward F. Johnson of the New York brokerage firm Johnson Redbook Service said his national survey of big retailers shows sales were up 2.2 percent the first two weeks of December from a year ago, but he expected that figure to increase as Christmas drew nigh.

Inflation is eating up much of the sales increase, and widespread price-cutting is hurting profit margins on what is left, analysts said.

"Retailers have panicked and begun to act as if Christmas was over a week ago already," said George Rosenbaum, president of the market research firm Leo J. Shapiro and Associates in Chicago.

Company representatives are declaring that the final rush is on

"They are all big days this week, very heavy," said Bill Dombrowski, a spokesman for Carter Hawley Hale Stores Inc. of Los Angeles, which owns department stores.

"It's a good Christmas, and probably one of the best ones we've had in the last few years."

Marvin Aronowitz, president of a Houston-based sporting goods firm, said, "The late shopping surge seems to be materializing as we expected."

But observers say the browsers seem to have been notably choosy this year.

"We're seeing a lot of people in the malls but not a lot of shopping bags," said Theresa Dale of Retail Merchandising Service Automation Inc. in Riverside, Calif., which keeps tabs on the 5,000 specialty retailers which buy its advice.

"It's going to be an OK season. It's not going to be a fabulous season. It's not going to be a terrible season."

Monroe Greenstein, a securities analyst at Bear Stearns & Co. in New York, said the season is "panning out OK. This is the week that's going to tell if it's a good one or a bad one."

Nintendo electronic games are such a runaway success that they've become scarce, and men's wear sales are relatively strong, consultants and securities analysts said.

They said their surveys show women's apparel sales — weak for almost two years — are finally starting to pick up.

Beyond that, though, you are liable to get nearly as many answers about what merchandise is moving as the number of experts you ask:

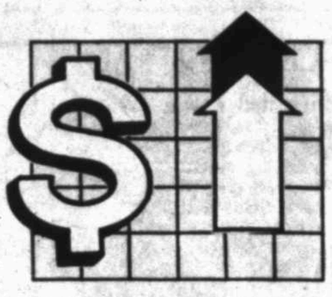

- Accessories are "moving above average and they're showing strong sales and that's nationwide," said Dale of the Retail Merchandising firm. That's because thrifty shoppers think they can get more outfits for the buck out of jewelry, ties, handbags and the like than they can from buying clothes, she said.

MARKETS

Lethargic dollar holds steady

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was holding steady in thin, lethargic trading in Europe late this morning, with dealers in lightly staffed trading rooms expecting little significant change in the currency through the session.

Gold prices were mostly higher.

"The market is absolutely dead this morning," said one foreign exchange trader a major U.S. bank in Milan.

She added that there also were very few commercial orders, further reducing activity.

In Tokyo, the dollar rose 0.40 yen to a closing 124.62 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at 124.73 yen.

In London, the British pound fell to $1.8040, compared with $1.8065 Wednesday.

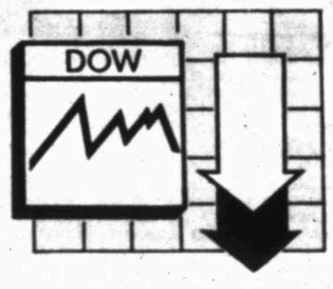

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $414.30 a troy ounce, down from $415.75 bid late Wednesday. But at midmorning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a higher recommended price of $415.60.

In Zurich, the bid price was $415.40, up from $414.60 bid late Monday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose $1.51 to close at a bid $417.45.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $6.12 a troy ounce, up from Wednesday's $6.14.

Rally sputters for second session

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market declined slightly in slackened trading Wednesday as Wall Street's yearend rally sputtered for a second straight session.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, down 6.61 on Tuesday, slipped another 1.43 points to 2,164.64.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 6 to 5 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 659 up, 798 down and 556 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 147.25 million shares, down from 161.09 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 175.08 million shares.

Activity in the market is expected to dwindle further Thursday and Friday as more and more participants get an early start on the long Christmas weekend.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market increased $0.28 billion, 0.01 percent, in value.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks dipped .01 to 155.73.

Standard & Poor's industrial index rose .03 to 320.54, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was down .09 at 277.38.

The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market fell .45 to 375.60. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index closed at 299.71, up .04.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Singer chief indicted on 12 fraud counts

Bilzerian

NEW YORK (AP) — The government has indicted Paul A. Bilzerian, a well-known takeover speculator accused of lying to the government and illegally hiding stock in connection with four multimillion-dollar transactions in 1985 and 1986.

The St. Petersburg, Fla.-based Bilzerian, who became head of the defense contractor Singer Co. last February after a $1.06 billion takeover fight, was indicted Wednesday on 12 counts of fraud.

Bilzerian immediately denied wrongdoing and blamed the indictment on what he called overzealous prosecutors seizing on the growing concern about corporate takeovers.

IRS unveils little-changed new tax forms

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service has unveiled its new tax forms with the news that, unlike last year, the forms feature few changes.

IRS officials said Wednesday that 101 million Americans should begin receiving their forms by next week.

IRS officials said taxpayers will be able to use their 1987 tax returns as a guide to filing out the new forms.

Kravis pitches RJR 'junku bondos' in Japan

NEW YORK (AP) — Takeover guru Henry Kravis is asking the Japanese for help in financing his firm's record $24.53 billion buyout of RJR Nabisco Inc., and is making a sales pitch for the "junku bondos" to be issued as part of the deal.

Kravis, principal of Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co., and representatives from Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. met for about two hours Wednesday with 240 investment bankers and institutional investors in Tokyo.

In a separate development, a congressional panel revealed it has launched a broad investigation into the Nabisco buyout, and the adequacy of securities laws in handling such deals.

Smith could profit $2 million a month

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Pillsbury Co. Chairman Philip L. Smith, who arrived at the food and restaurant giant less than four months ago, could depart nearly $8 million richer under the pending takeover by Grand Metropolitan PLC.

The British conglomerate is expected to take control of Pillsbury early next year and release Smith.

Smith's tenure was dominated by Pillsbury's unsuccessful battle against Grand Met's hostile takeover attempt, which ended Sunday with Pillsbury accepting a negotiated offer of $5.7 billion, or $66 a share.

Budget deficit running ahead of FY '88

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government ran up a $29.0 billion budget deficit in November, 7.4 percent bigger than the red ink recorded a year earlier.

The Treasury Department said Wednesday that revenue of $64.4 billion last month was $7.4 billion higher than a year earlier, but spending rose an even heftier $9.4 billion to $93.4 billion.

But for the first two months of the 1989 fiscal year, which began Oct. 1, the budget gap was 2.4 percent lower than the same period in fiscal 1988.

FCC makes 'explicit broadcast' ban 24-hour

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Communications Commission, bowing to the will of Congress, has extended to 24 hours a day its ban on sexually explicit broadcasts, though one commissioner said she had "serious doubts" about the constitutionality of the new rule.

Radio and television broadcasters and free-speech advocates have said they will challenge Wednesday's change, which was ordered by Congress as part of an appropriations package earlier this year.

The new rule is to take effect 30 days after it is published in the Federal Register.

High-tech holiday cards are big in Japan

TOKYO (AP) — They stand up, they sing, they flicker on and off.

Ingenuity and high technology have led to some unusual Christmas cards, which retailers say are a big hit with Japanese holiday shoppers this year.

Take, for example, the card that unfolds into an upright Christmas tree, complete with blinking red lights and a two-tune repertoire of "Rudolph the Red-nosed Reindeer" and "Santa Claus Is Coming to Town."

ACTIVITY HIGHLIGHTS

Terry yields 62 barrel discovery

From .Staff Reports

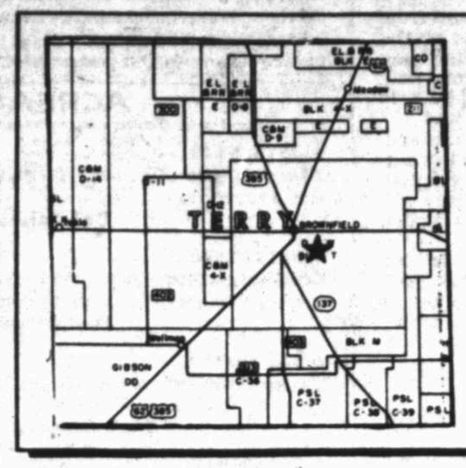

A Strawn discovery has been completed in Terry County, approximately a mile west and slightly north of the Brownfield Southeast field.

STERLING PRODUCTION CO., Houston, potentialed the No. 1-88 Telford to flow 62 barrels of 45 gravity crude and 82 barrels of water on a 28/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 40 psi. The well flowed from perforations 10,620 to 10,630 ft., which had been acidized with 500 gallons of acid. Gas-oil ratio is 3,225:1.

Permitted as a 12,100 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 11,999 ft. and plugged back to 11,415 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 11,861 ft.

The well topped the Spraberry at 7,610 ft., Strawn at 10,577 and Mississippian at 11,225 ft. on ground elevation of 3,299 ft. Pay was topped at 10,620 ft.

Location is 2,173 ft. from north and 467 ft. from east lines of Section 88, Block T, D&WRR survey, one mile southeast of Brownfield.

★Terry discovery

Sterling Production Co. has completed a 62 barrel discovery in Terry County, west and slightly north of the Brownfield Southeast field.

Production added to Loving County field

New production has been added to the Myrtle "B" (Cherry Canyon) field of Loving County.

TAG OPERATING CO. INC. tested the No. 3 Leland "B" to flow 88 barrels of 39.2 gravity crude, 630 Mcfd and 613 barrels of water on a 16/64 inch choke from perforations 6,349 to 6,462 ft. Flowing tubing pressure was 1,100 psi and the producing interval wa acidized with 1,500 gallons of HCL acid and fractured with 44,520 gallons of gel, 99,500 lbs. 20/40 sand and 28,060 lbs. 12/20 sand. Gas-oil ratio is 7,159:1.

Drilled to 6,714 ft., the well was plugged back to 6,675 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 6,707 ft.

The well topped the Bell Canyon at 4,779 ft. and Cherry Canyon at 6,105 ft. on ground elevation of 3,024 ft. Pay was topped at 6,338 ft.

Location is 680 ft. from north and 658 ft. from west lines of Section 4, Block 53, T-2, T&P survey, 13 miles north of Mentone.

OIL AND GAS DIGEST

Three oil firms renew agreement with Chad

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The Exxon Corp. said Tuesday that it, the Shell Oil Co. and the Chevron Corp. have signed an agreement with Chad to continue exploring for oil in the central African nation.

The companies, with the government, will also build a small refinery near the capital city of N'Djamena if enough oil is found, Exxon said.

Under the agreement, the companies will begin seismic surveys and will drill additional wells early next year in the Lake Chad region and in southern Chad.

Esso Exploration and Production Chad Inc., an Exxon affiliate, holds 37.5 percent of the venture and acts as operator. A Shell unit, Societe Shell Tchadienne de Recherche et d'Exploitation owns 37.5 percent, and the Chevron Oil Co. of Chad owns 25 percent.

American International shipping oil to refinery

NEW YORK (SWN) — American International Petroleum Corp. has announce that its wholly owned subsidiary, American International Refinery Inc., has concluded a final agreement with Metallgesellschaft Corp. (MG) to supply its 30,000 barrels per day refinery in Lake Charles, La., with up to 12.6 million barrels of crude oil for one year at market conditions on deferred payment basis.

MG is a wholly owned subsidiary of Metallgesellschaft AG, a major German public company with 1987 sales in excess of $7 billion.

The agreement provides MG with an option to purchase, under certain conditions, up to 6.75 percent of the company.

Oxy, partners sign gas contracts with Pakistan

LOS ANGELES (SWN) — Occidental Petroleum Corp. has reported that a joint venture in which it has a 30 percent interest has signed contracts with the government of Pakistan and Sui Transmission Co. for the development and sale of natural gas produced by the joint venture in Pakistan.

Partners in the joint venture are Union Texas Pakistan, operator also with 30 percent interest and Oil and Gas Development Corp., a Pakistani government-owned company, with a 40 percent interest.

With the signing of the gas contracts, the group said that gas production is expected to begin during the first quarter of 1989 at an initial rate of approximately 40 million gross cubic feet of gas daily.

The Pakistani government has constructed a 68-mile-long gas transmission line with an estimated capacity of up to 100 million cubic feet of gas daily from the Badin fields to the city of Hyderabad, where the new gas line connects into the existing Trans-Pakistan gas system.

Under its concession agreement with the Pakistani government, the group explores for and develops oil and gas on 2.2 million acres in the Badin area of southeastern Pakistan. Since 1981, the joint venture has discovered 22 fields in the Badin area.

Dresser reports strong earnings improvement

DALLAS (SWN) — Dresser Industries, Inc. has reported that net earnings for the fiscal year ended October 31, 1988 were $156.8 million or $2.27 per share, up from $48.9 million or $0.65 per share in fiscal 1987.

For the fourth fiscal quarter ended October 31, 1988, net earnings were $46.3 million or $0.69 per share, up from $38.4 million or $0.51 per share in the same period of 1987.

Sales and service revenues were $3.94 billion for fiscal 1988, up 26 percent from $3.12 billion in 1987, and $973 million for the fourth quarter, an increase of 12 percent from the prior-year period. Both gains primarily reflected sales of The M.W. Kellogg Company purchased in January 1988.

Union Texas reports Pakistani oil discovery

HOUSTON (SWN) — Union Texas Petroleum Holdings, Inc. has announced an oil discovery in the Badin area of southeastern Pakistan by its subsidiary, Union Texas Pakistan, Inc. Union Texas Pakistan, with a 30 percent interest, serves as operator of a joint venture group which includes Occidental Petroleum Corporation, also with a 30 percent interest, and Oil and Gas Development Corporation, a Pakistani government-owned company, with a 40 percent interest.

Located about 95 miles east of Karachi, the North Akri No. 1 well was tested at a daily rate of 2,635 barrels of oil with gravity of 48 degree API on a 24/64-inch choke with 541 pounds-per-square-inch flowing tubing pressure from a zone in the lower Goru formation between 5,520 feet and 5,540 feet.

RETAIL

■ "Cash is a more popular gift than it used to be," said John Gary, spokesman for the National Retail Merchants Association in New York. The green stuff lets people take advantage of post-Christmas sale events, he explained.

■ Video equipment sales seem strong, at least at the discount outlets, said Edward Weller, an analyst with Montgomery Securities, a San Francisco brokerage and investment banking firm. Deliveries of projection televisions to dealers the week after Thanksgiving were up 56 percent from last year, said Cynthia Saraniti of the Electronics Industry Association. Camcorder deliveries were up 30 percent and even VCRs — already in most U.S. homes — were up 18 percent.

■ "It's a hot year for sweaters," especially ones bearing patterns, and for leather items, said Greenstein of Bear Stearns.

Weller concurred. He said Levi Dockers slacks, men's suits and expensive tops and bottoms were selling well.

Tenneco completes $7.3 billion divestiture of Tenneco Oil

HOUSTON (AP) — Tenneco Inc. completed the planned $7.3 billion divestiture of its Tenneco Oil Co. holdings by closing a deal to sell its Chalmette, La., refinery to Mobil Corp.

The $590 million refinery sale, announced Wednesday, includes $30 million in working capital.

"When we announced the sale in October, we had expected to close all the parts of the total package by the end of the year, and we have accomplished that goal," said Tenneco spokeswoman M.A. Shute. "The overall sale has gone well and according to expectations."

The divestiture was designed to pay for the Houston-based company's repurchase of 20.9 million shares of its stock and reduce the company's outstanding debt, which totaled about $8.5 billion when Tenneco announced the sale.

Net proceeds from all the sales after taxes and expenses are expected to total $6.4 billion, Tenneco said.

Tenneco, a diversified corporation with major interests in natural gas pipelines, farm and construction equipment, automotive parts and chemicals, was the nation's 10th largest oil company when it announced the results of bidding two months ago.

The success of that sale at a time the industry is suffering depressed oil prices surprised many analysts, who had predicted the holdings would fetch between $5 billion and $7 billion.

Analysts said the ability to package the oil company holdings apparently helped boost the price for Tenneco.

Other companies that have bought chunks of Tenneco Oil included Chevron Corp., which purchased Tenneco's Gulf of Mexico oil and natural gas reserves, production facilities and lease interests for nearly $2.6 billion.

Texas oilman T. Boone Pickens' Mesa Limited Partnership bought the mid-continent division oil and gas subsidiary for $715 million cash.

Shell Petroleum Co. Ltd., part of the Royal Dutch-Shell Group, bought Tenneco's Colombian operations for $500 million, and British Gas PLC spent $194.5 million on a variety of Tenneco's international oil and gas interests.

In a separate move, Tenneco has put its 1,900-mile Louisiana Intrastate Gas Corp. pipeline and related facilities up for sale. Ms. Shute said Wednesday that sale is pending.

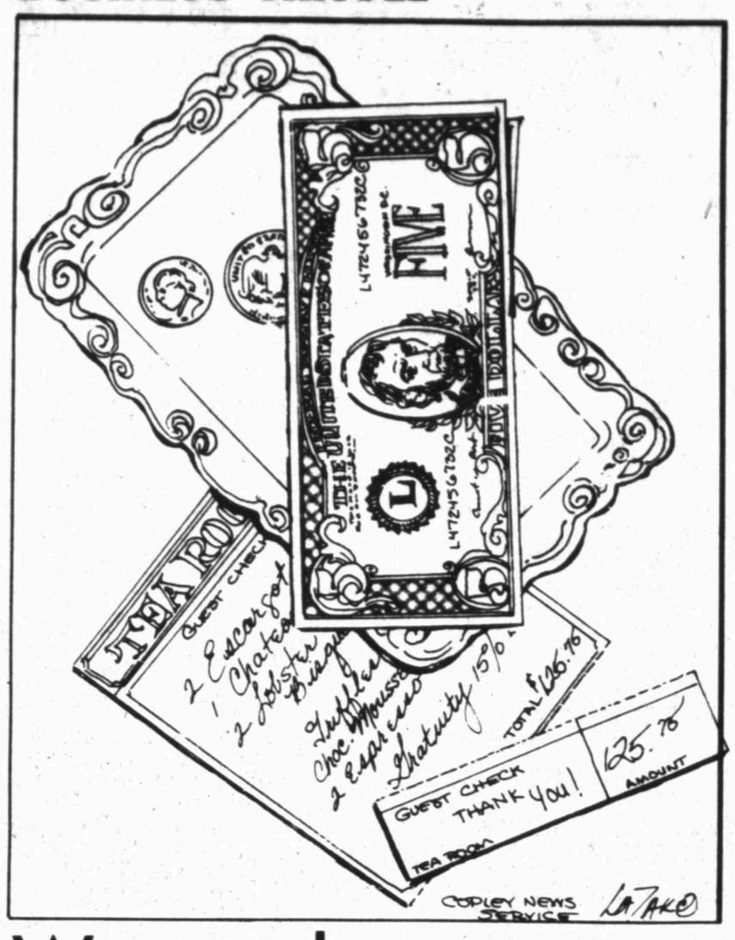

KenCope Energy, New London Oil plan merger

SAN ANTONIO (SWN) — The board of directors of KenCope Energy Cos. has unanimously approved an agreement with New London Oil PLC, an English corporation which currently owns approximately 43 percent of the outstanding shares of KenCope common stock, whereby New London Oil, Inc., a Colorado corporation which is a wholly owned subsidiary of New London, will be merged into a wholly owned subsidiary of KenCope.

BUSINESS TRAVEL

Women have own guide for tipping

By CHRIS BARNETT
Copley News Service

When do you cross the outstretched palm with cash and with how much?

This is a question more traveling businesswomen are asking, especially in a foreign country where they don't speak the local language and now when companies are tightening on expenses.

Many businesswomen have their own answers for coping with the confusion. Martha Montag Brown, director of community affairs for Levi Strauss, travels the world in her job and is "often the only woman in business class" on the airplane. But if she's visiting a country or a city for the first time, she will bone up on a Fodor guidebook and "do my homework on local customs, especially tipping."

She also will consult with Levi colleagues who are based in the city she's visiting to determine what is customary. "I don't want to waste my company's money," says Brown.

In Tokyo, for instance, she gave the taxi driver a 10 percent tip, hopped out and he chased her down and gave her the money back. "I found out you don't tip cabdrivers, hotel porters or waiters in Japan."

Brown says many European restaurants include a service charge in the price of a meal, and often an extra gratuity is expected. Generally, she doesn't pony up the extra cash.

"If I do err, it's on the generous side because my husband worked his way through college and law school at a restaurant. Still, it's Levi's money and I don't want to throw it around."

For that reason, she doesn't tip maitre d's or wine stewards, no matter how helpful or haughty they are. However, doormen and bellmen who help with luggage and don't just hold a door get $1 a bag from Brown. In Hong Kong, where big business hotels have valets assigned to a room around the clock, she will tip several dollars per day at the end of her stay, earmarking the cash only for the person who fulfilled her requests — not for everyone who worked a shift.

Lisa Engler, retail director for the 15 Esprit stores and the 90 other "Esprit stores within department stores," has flexible rules on tipping depending on the level of service she receives. She insists there are no cast-in-concrete tipping guidelines and that many traveling businesswomen "do not know what's appropriate."

New York City is especially intimidating, but Engler simplifies the math by doubling the 8.5 percent sales tax charge levied by restaurants if the service is "acceptable." Outside of the Big Apple, she tips 15 percent for a good meal, 20 percent if it's dazzling and memorable. "You can buy a little plastic card at any stationary store that computes the tip at either 15 percent of 20 percent," she notes.

Doormen and bellmen, regardless of locale, get 75 cents or $1 from Engler per piece of luggage actually handled depending on their smile, promptness and overall attitude. If room service brings her a hair dryer or an iron or performs a special service, she gladly gives $1. On a club sandwich to the room after a long day, she makes sure the tip is not factored into the bill and thus avoids double tipping. At the end of a several-day stay in a hotel, Engler will leave the room maid "a dollar a day" but is quick to point out that it is her personal preference and not professional etiquette.

Engler, surprisingly, does not tip a hotel concierge for services performed. "I feel it is part of their job," she says. Nor does she tip a limo driver if someone sends the car to fetch or drop her off. However, if she ever hires a vehicle and driver, she figures 15 percent, same as a taxi driver, is appropriate.

Otherwise, she tips $1 for a shoeshine, 10 percent for a haircut, $2 for a manicure, $5 for a massage, $1 per bag to the driver of any courtesy van transport and she will not let a restaurant waiter get away with keeping the change, assuming it is a tip.

Still, according to the American Express Pocket Travel Guides, a handy source on information on world capitals, "rules on tipping change each time you cross a border."

The American Express guide to London, for instance, advises tips of just 10 percent to 15 percent at hotels and restaurants if a service charge is not incorporated into the check. Same percentage should go to London cabbies. In Paris, when the bill says "service compris," the tip is included. When it says "service non compris," an 8 percent to 12 percent tip is advised. That's about half the standard U.S. gratuity.

A few French francs is a good tip for cloakroom attendants, tour guides, doormen, hairdressers and cinema ushers. Do not just lay an American dollar on an attendant and think you have made their day. Often it costs them a healthy fee to convert it to French currency.

Italian hotels and restaurants usually automatically add 15 percent to the cost of any meal, but waiters "expect a little more." Three percent to 5 percent of the bill is OK but only if the service merits it. Do not feel pressured to pay a ransom for indifferent or careless service.

The American Express pocket guide to Rome suggests 10 percent of the fare is fair for Italian cabdrivers. Leave a "few coins on the counter" when buying a drink at a cocktail bar. And even though you pay first at a coffee bar, give a few coins to the person filling your order.

In Greece, leave 10 percent of a meal bill in better restaurants and hotels; the staff will divide the loot and you'll be remembered. Some 5 percent to 10 percent must be left on the table in cheaper restaurants and taverns for the assistant waiter and not on the plate.

Now we're in Germany, and if the restaurant bill says "bedienung," that means a service charge has been added, so just round up to the nearest Deutschemark. Otherwise, add 10 percent to 15 percent but never 20 percent of the bill.

Otherwise, tipping is not customary in Australia, no service charge is added and the only people who should be tipped are waiters and then only 10 percent. Finally, if Lisa Engler of Esprit or Martha Brown find themselves heading to China, they don't have to worry about tipping.

It is considered an offense, and monies should not be offered under any circumstance.

Everybody helps at L.L. Bean

New York Times News Service

Executives at L.L. Bean Inc. are working cash registers and stocking shelves at the company's warehouse sale in Freeport, Me., causing longtime employees to remember the days when everybody pitched in, even L.L. Bean himself.

Before the mail order company became a multimillion-dollar business, it was not unusual for a shoemaker to stop work to wait on a customer in the retail store.

Bean, who died in 1967 at the age of 94, often waited on customers, who sought him out for advice on hunting and fishing gear.

Today the company employs 5,000 people and has 22 locations for general offices, distribution, manufacturing, phone orders and training.

Leon Gorman, the company president and the grandson of L.L. Bean, worked at the warehouse sale on Nov. 25, the day it started, and quickly found that he would have to overcome his desire for tidy shelves.

More than a thousand people went to the sale that day.

Five investment groups interested in Houston thrift

By GREG STEINMETZ
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Five separate investment groups interested in buying the troubled thrift are negotiating with University Savings Association, according to company officials.

The enterprise lost $202 million in the third quarter, and the loss plunges the Houston savings and loan's capital as measured by regulators to a negative $46 million, University Chairman Richard Collier said.

"We are cooperating with the Federal Home Loan Bank Board to effect a recapitalization," Collier said. "We are in discussions with five investment groups with an interest in University."

University is one of the largest thrifts in Texas, with 88 branches stretching from San Antonio to Dallas to Houston. It recently attracted national attention for an advertising campaign featuring former Texas Gov. John Connally.

The thrift's record loss stems from writedowns in its real estate portfolio, Collier said. Because of declining Texas real estate values, University marked down its holdings by $170 million in the quarter, he said.

The loss for the three months ended Sept. 30 is the first large loss suffered by University since a recapitalization in May 1987. University lost $1.2 million in the quarter ended June 30.

According to sources close to University, a state regulator has been installed inside the thrift to report back to Austin on the thrift's activities.

Collier said a sale of University is not imminent.

University's problems came abruptly. Only last year, regulators were so comfortable with University's soundness that they allowed the savings and loan to run troubled thrifts under its controversial management consignment program.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Dissatisfied investors can send broker complaints to SEC office

By BILL DOYLE

Doyle

Q. It has been more than four months since I asked my broker to transfer my individual retirement account, which is invested in a mutual fund, from his firm to that mutual fund. I want to deal directly with the fund when I start making IRA withdrawals.

The account has not been transferred. I have written the broker and visited his office, only to be told "these things take time."

The broker is with one of the biggest brokerage firms. They have me over a barrel. I became 70½ on December 8 and will have to begin my IRA withdrawals by April 1.

What can I do?

A. Take your gripe to the Office of Consumer Affairs, Securities and Exchange Commission, 450 Fifth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20549.

You'll be one of many folks filing similar complaints. The SEC has been deluged with laments about unconscionable delays by brokerage firms in the transfer of IRAs.

Things got so bad about four years ago, as newspaper stories told of horrendous delays, the New York Stock Exchange was shamed into announcing plans for streamlining the paperwork involved in IRA transfers by its member brokerage firms.

Despite all the delay, hassle and grief you have suffered, no great harm has been done. You could start your IRA withdrawals while that brokerage has custodianship of your account.

Q. I am a young investor who unwisely followed a broker's advice and placed $8,000 — most of my savings — in an over-the-counter stock. I paid $7.75 a share. It fell to 25 cents in September 1987 and has not moved since.

I had and still have a written agreement that my stock would be sold if it fell below a certain level. That was never executed by the negligent brokerage firm.

Securities lawyers have discouraged me from filing for arbitration because the firm with which I did business became financially insolvent and is now part of a larger brokerage house.

Is there any hope for my investment?

A. It's impossible to predict if the market value of the stock you own will ever recover. It's a low-priced item and has always been considered highly speculative.

The arrangement you thought you had with the brokerage was similar to a "stop order" — with your stock to be sold once its market price dipped to a predetermined level.

Stop orders can be set up for automatic execution with stocks trading on a stock exchange. That's because, in exchange trading, all stop orders in each stock are handled by the "specialist" — the exchange member assigned to make a market in that stock on the exchange's trading floor.

But that's not so in the over-the-counter market, where there is no trading floor and all business is done by wire. Each O-T-C stock can have a number of market makers in different offices around the country.

While you didn't have an official stop order, you do have that written agreement calling for similar action. The brokerage firm did not keep its end of the bargain.

In your shoes, I would file for arbitration through the National Association of Securities Dealers, which regulates the O-T-C market. Based on the information in your letter, there's a good chance you would recover some or all of your loss from the broker who handled your account or from his bosses.

PRICES

At the OPEC meeting, Saudia Arabia agreed to cut its daily production to 4.5 million barrels, from 6.5 million, as part of a pact among the 13 members to reduce output in an effort to raise prices.

Unconfirmed reports Tuesday said that Saudi Arabia's biggest customer in Japan, the Mitsubishi International Corp., had received indications that the Saudis planned to ship 40 percent less to the company in January.

While the reports were not confirmed by Saudi officials, many analysts said the action was expected. Over all, the Saudis supplied 17 percent of Japan's total consumption in 1987.

The surprising strength of the economies of Western Europe, the Far East and the United States has pushed oil consumption in the final months of 1988 higher than most forecasts, or as much as 4 percent greater than last year's total.

No figures are available for worldwide crude inventories. But in the United States alone, the total has fallen by 20 million barrels from a year ago, to 340 million barrels through Dec. 16, according to the American Petroleum Institute.

Within OPEC, the pressure has risen among key members to sustain prices at current levels or higher. The governments of Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates and Kuwait have planned budgets for 1989 that include significant deficits.

But that pressure might force a rapid unraveling of the latest OPEC pact if any evidence of cheating develops by the end of January, cautioned David T. Mizrahi, editor of the Mideast Report.

"They have urgent needs to sell more oil but they would like to abide by the new quota system and wait and see," Mizrahi said.

DREXEL

Attorneys for Milken, who has asserted he's done nothing wrong, "are continuing to prepare to defend him against any charges that might be brought," according to a statement from his public relations agent, Robinson, Lake, Lerer & Montgomery.

Gary Lynch, the Securities and Exchange Commission enforcement director, did not return telephone calls for comment about the agreement between Drexel and Giuliani.

The agreement is the high-water mark in a federal crackdown on securities fraud that resulted in the arrest two years ago of Ivan Boesky, the now-imprisoned inside trader who turned state's evidence and was a key source of information in the case against Drexel.

The $650 million fine — more than four times as large as the SEC's annual budget — easily surpasses the previous record of $100 million against Boesky in November 1986.

The settlement also marks a major victory for Giuliani, who had been pressuring Drexel for weeks to settle the case or face a much broader and potentially crippling racketeering and fraud indictment.

"There are contingencies," Giuliani said at a hastily called news conference. "Everybody is proceeding in good faith, I hope."

Giuliani said the felonies cover mail, wire and securities fraud violations but would not be more specific.

Asked why he chose to press for a settlement instead of proceed with an indictment, Giuliani said "when a corporation is involved, the best result you can get after any trial is a financial result. ... There's no point of prolonging this, getting involved in criminal litigation to get a result that would not be any better than this."

ORDERS

Excluding the defense decline, total orders would have risen by 1.8 percent following a 0.2 percent increase in October. It was the best showing since a 5.2 percent surge in non-defense orders in August.

Analysts were likely to view the latest report as a sign that the economy's momentum is showing no signs of slowing as 1988 ends.

Throughout this year, almost half of total economic growth has been powered by a boom in U.S. export sales as American manufacturers benefited from a weaker dollar which made their goods more competitive on overseas markets.

For November, the government said that much of the strength in durable goods, items expected to last at least three years, came from an 8.1 percent rise in demand for electrical machinery, which climbed to $20.5 billion. Much of this increase reflected rising demand for defense communication equipment.

Human Brain Research

A recent study reports that the brain deteriorates in two areas in people with Alzheimer's Disease and depression.

These two areas of the brain produce chemicals that are believed to be important in keeping people free from depression.

Critics urge regulation of 'smokeless' cigarettes

By WARREN E. LEARY
New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — If a tobacco-filled object is the same size, shape and weight as a cigarette; if it is sold at cigarette counters in packs of 20; if its package contains the familiar surgeon general's health warnings, and if it is lighted on one end and smoke is drawn through a filter on the other, then is it a cigarette?

The answer could determine the fate of the so-called smokeless cigarette, which the tobacco industry hopes will arrest or slow the decline in cigarette consumption in this country.

Faced with declining sales in the United States, the cigarette companies are gambling hundreds of millions of dollars on producing a more socially acceptable tobacco product.

Anti-smoking advocates, however, contend that the cigarette — called smokeless by nearly everybody but the tobacco companies — should be considered a "nicotine-delivery system" and regulated by the Food and Drug Administration.

Surgeon General C. Everett Koop has called the product "a drug in a cigarette-shaped dispenser."

It is not only anti-smoking advocates who have attacked the new product.

Many smokers who have tried the cigarettes, which are being test-marketed by the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. under the brandname Premier, complain that they have an unpleasant smell, lack a true tobacco flavor, can get too hot to hold, and are awkward to dispose of since they do not burn down to butts.

Earlier this month, R.J. Reynolds announced that it also plans to begin test-marketing a more conventional low-smoke cigarette, the Vantage Excel 100, which may answer some of the objections of the critics of the Premier.

In the meantime, it has filed documents with the FDA arguing that regulating the Premier would stifle efforts to advance cigarette technology, which would be unfair to Americans who smoke.

Tobacco products have been regulated by the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms of the Treasury Department, the Federal Trade Commission and the laws enacted by Congress, such as the one requiring health warnings.

If opponents of the tobacco industry can get Premiers regulated by the FDA, then Reynolds would have to prove that they are safe and effective. Otherwise they would be banned.

The Premier, which is available in St. Louis, Phoenix and Tucson, Ariz., uses a piece of smoldering carbon to heat tobacco and flavoring agents to create a steamy, tobacco-tasting "smoke" containing lower-than-normal levels of nicotine and other byproducts.

The charcoal in the tip is connected to a small aluminum capsule containing beads covered with a tobacco extract and flavoring agents. The capsule itself is surrounded by shredded tobacco.

When the heat source is lighted, it warms the metal capsule, which vaporizes the flavors on the beads and heats the surrounding tobacco to release more taste.

The resulting "smoke" passes through two cooling filters, including one made of tobacco products.

The Premier produces little smoke from its tip, virtually eliminating the "sidestream" smoke that irritates non-smokers, and it does not burn down and produce ash. In addition, the smoker exhales less smoke and what is produced dissipates more quickly than normal smoke.

Store owners in the cities where Premiers are being test-marketed have reported sluggish sales. With nothing left but the bare essentials, some smokers have complained, most of the fun of smoking is gone.

The American Medical Association, the American Cancer Society and the American Lung Association say that what is left is less a cigarette than a device for delivering an addictive drug, nicotine.

"The FDA already regulates alternative forms of nicotine delivery, such as nicotine gum," said Dr. James H. Sammons of the AMA. So why not "smokeless" cigarettes? he asked.

Reynolds contends that such a ruling would kill the new product and set back industry attempts to produce a "cleaner" cigarette.

To avoid the possibility of FDA regulation, Reynolds has carefully avoided claiming that Premiers are safer than ordinary cigarettes.

For Reynold's recently announced alternative, the Excel, FDA regulation would not likely be an issue.

The Excel is like a regular low-tar cigarette, except that it is made from a special tobacco blend and highly porous paper so that it releases less smoke from the burning tip.

Industry financial analysts, who estimate that Reynolds has spent hundreds of millions of dollars on research and marketing for the Premier, say other companies have similar products in the wings and are awaiting the outcome of the FDA decision and the test-marketing in Arizona and Missouri.

Maura Payne, a Reynolds spokeswoman, concedes that Premiers take some getting used to and suggested that users smoke a carton of the cigarettes, or at least try them for several days, before making up their minds.

R.J. Reynolds' Experimental Cigarette

Differences from typical cigarettes:

- Since the tobacco does not burn, no ash is produced.
- After the first few puffs, very little "sidestream" smoke comes from the lit end.
- The cigarette goes out by itself when left alone, cutting fire risk.
- Smoke exhaled by the smoker differs from traditional smoke, with as much nicotine and carbon monoxide but less of most other components, and it dissipates faster.

Study links depression of Alzheimer's patients to brain deterioration

CHICAGO (AP) — Millions of Americans who suffer from depression may benefit from new research linking the mood disorder in Alzheimer's patients to deterioration in certain areas of the brain, a doctor says.

Researchers said that depression in Alzheimer's sufferers may be caused by deterioration in parts of the brain that produce chemicals believed to keep people upbeat.

One of the researchers, Dr. George S. Zubenko, director of geriatric health services at Western Psychiatric Institute and Clinic in Pittsburgh, suggested that the findings could help research into depression in general.

"Our study makes a suggestion of where in the brain investigators or researchers may look for more subtle changes that are probably associated with typical forms of depression in younger patients who aren't demented," he said.

Theories about depression center on the belief it is caused by low activity of chemical messengers in the brain called neurotransmitters. They permit nerve cells to communicate with each other and are believed to be key in maintaining normal levels of optimism, energy, appetite, sound sleep and interest in pleasurable activities.

About 30 percent of Alzheimer's patients suffer symptoms of depression, but contrary to popular belief, depression is not a "normal" accompaniment to Alzheimer's, said Dr. Jacob H. Fox, director of the Rush Alzheimer's Disease Center in Chicago.

Still, hundreds of thousands of the estimated 2.5 million people with Alzheimer's must cope with the burden of being depressed in addition to their progressive loss of memory, judgment and mobility.

To explore what might be causing their depression, the Pennsylvania researchers performed autopsies on the brains of 37 patients with dementia, or loss of mental function. Most were Alzheimer's victims, including 14 who also were diagnosed with major depression.

For comparison, the researchers studied brain tissue from seven non-demented elderly patients.

The depressed subjects showed significantly more evidence of deterioration in two areas of the brain stem than the non-depressed subjects, the researchers found.

These parts of the brain produce two neurotransmitters believed to be important in keeping people free of depression. One of the neurotransmitters is norepinephrine, which is involved in mood and sleep cycles, and the other dopamine, which is involved in physical movement and in thinking and mood.

The researchers concluded that abnormalities in the neurotransmitter system may give rise to the depression in demented patients.

Alzheimer's accounts for about 60 percent of U.S. cases of dementia, multiple small strokes account for another 10 percent, a combination of the two another 10 percent and the remaining 20 percent have a "hodgepodge" of causes, Fox said.

Sore throat can signal major illness

Associated Press

Never take a sore throat lightly. Its cause could be anything from an allergy to a life-threatening illness.

A sore throat can signal the common cold, according to an article in the recent issue of Redbook, or a disease with dire complications if not treated quickly.

A sore, red, inflamed throat, with difficulty in swallowing and accompanied by a cough, could be a cold symptom. Sore throat is present in 85 percent of colds. You can try home remedies such as rest, fluids, aspirin or acetaminophen lozenges, salt water gargle, vaporizer or humidifier. If symptoms worsen or last more than one week, consult a doctor.

There are various sore throat illnesses in which you should consult a doctor immediately. Following are the symptoms, the type of disease they indicate and possible complications that make it important to see your doctor right away.

■ A mild to severe sore throat with pus, redness, blisters, body aches and headaches, chills and fever and difficulty swallowing could be strep throat, which has a sudden onset and lasts 10-12 days. Possible complications include rheumatic fever which can lead to permanent heart damage and kidney disease.

■ Red, inflamed, often pus-covered tonsils, resembling two overripe strawberries, can mean tonsillitis. The sudden onset disease lasts 10-12 days and can lead to peritonsillar abscess. A throat culture is needed for diagnosis.

■ Drooling, difficulty in breathing or opening mouth because of abscess that pushes tonsils into the throat, swollen lymph glands and pain radiating into the ear indicate peritonsillar abscess or quincy. It occurs one week after tonsillitis, lasts 10 days and can cause death due to a blocked airway.

■ Throat pain and white, cottage cheese-like patches on the throat that bleed when touched means oral thrush, a gradual onset disease that lasts 10-12 days and can lead to an infection of the larynx. Immediate consultation with a doctor is particularly important for kidney patients, diabetics and people who are resistant to antibiotics.

■ Sore throat, enlarged tonsils and glands, headache, pronounced fatigue, bad breath and possibly enlarged liver and spleen indicate mononucleosis, a gradual onset disease common in young adults that lasts six weeks. It can lead to jaundice.

■ Harsh, barking cough, difficulty in breathing, hoarseness, sore inflamed throat and fever mean croup, a sudden onset disease most common in infants and toddlers that lasts three to five days.

■ High fever, difficulty swallowing and breathing and a muffled or raspy voice signal epiglottitis, a very sudden onset disease more common in children that lasts three or four days. The disease can involve dangerous swelling and airway obstruction, and can cause death because of a blocked airway.

Sore throat diseases that can be treated at home include:

Allergies, chracterized by sore, red throat, sneezing, stuffy or runny nose and pain in the sinuses, can be treated at home unless prolonged, severe or causing breathing problems.

Sinusitis, with symptoms similar to allergies, need only be seen by a doctor if symptoms worsen or last more than one week.

Schizophrenia 'costly' for ex-athlete

Research leading to understanding of disease

By MALCOLM RITTER

NEW YORK (AP) — Lionel Aldridge, a 6-foot-4, 225-pound former Green Bay Packer, was afraid to go home. He believed his wife was a witch.

Once part of NBC's television sportscasting team, Aldridge was driven from job to job in city after city by imaginary voices. He now sorts mail on the 3:30 p.m. to midnight shift in Milwaukee.

Schizophrenia cost him a career, a marriage and "just about every person I had in my life at that time."

"I figure," he said recently, "it cost me everything."

Such are the stakes in schizophrenia.

That's why research advances — such as the recent evidence that a single gene may cause some cases — and are more than just nifty bits of science. They are another step in understanding a devastating disease that strikes perhaps one in every 100 people at some point in their lives.

Schizophrenia usually begins with an apparent personality change that may include social withdrawal, difficulty in communicating and lethargy. Later, in its more active phase, it can make victims see hallucinations and hear voices.

They may feel controlled by invisible agents or believe their thoughts are being broadcast to others. They may adopt new identities.

Nobody knows what causes the disease, a key question in finding better treatments. Aldridge said the gene discovery is "just the tip of the iceberg" toward finding a cause.

Scientists have long suspected an inherited influence, and the new study provided biological evidence for a gene in a few families. But that gene has been shown not to be a factor in other families, supporting the longstanding suspicion of multiple factors, perhaps environmental and genetic.

The voices and hallucinations are gone now for Aldridge, 47, thanks to daily medication that keeps his illness at bay. "I'm enjoying relatively good health now," he said, but "nothing is guaranteed" for the future.

For the Louisiana native, the schizophrenia battle began after his athletic career. He played defensive end for the Packers and was part of the most famous defensive line in National Football League history when the team won three straight NFL championships and the first two Super Bowls.

He was traded to the San Diego Chargers in 1971 and retired from pro ball after two seasons, taking up radio and TV sportscasting in Milwaukee. NBC used him as an analyst for several seasons, including its 1977 Super Bowl coverage.

But the first signs of trouble had already appeared in early 1974. He had trouble concentrating. He couldn't get his work done on time, and as a result his broadcasts often ran shorter than planned.

"I became very suspicious of people, especially the people I worked with. The workplace became very difficult, a very unhappy place."

Aldridge sought psychotherapy. But later that year, he began to have bouts of psychosis, with imaginary voices and hallucinations.

"It was like suddenly discovering another world...one that had been here all along, one that was totally foreign and frightening."

While his behavior on the air appeared normal, his life at other times was bizarre. He feared that his wife was a witch. He ran barefoot through the snow in search of his therapist.

Soon, he was hospitalized. "I knew I needed help," he said. But the medication he received for a couple years "zombied me out so bad I couldn't work." He had to work, so he gave up the medication.

He continued to fight the voices that told him to quit his job and leave town, and that nobody liked him. He battled the delusions that the station was underground, that he had to hide from others and watch out for himself.

"That was the existence I chose because I wouldn't take the medication, because I figured I could take care of myself."

"It (being schizophrenic) was like suddenly discovering another world...one that had been here all along, one that was totally foreign and frightening."
— Lionel Aldridge, ex-Green Bay Packer

In 1981 he took a leave of absence from his job. "I simply could not do it any more," he said. His wife had already filed for divorce.

He left Milwaukee and traveled the country for as long as his money held out, then he sold the car and continued by bus and train. Within a few months of leaving town, he was living on the streets.

But he found some respectable jobs: sports director at a Louisiana radio station, prison counselor, football coach at a high school and a college.

"I could keep myself straight during the interview," he recalled, and when the employers found out who he was, they were happy to hire him.

But "the voices...wouldn't let me stay anyplace for any length of time," he said. One by one, he left his jobs or was let go.

In 1984 he found himself back in a Milwaukee hospital, thanks to friends alarmed by his behavior. The doctors talked about medicine again, and Aldridge figured he would give it a try. "I had nothing to stay straight for on the outside," so being "zombied out" would not be a problem, he reasoned.

So it went for about three months. But then his doctor cut the dose until Aldridge was taking just enough medication to keep the voices and hallucinations away while avoiding the side effect.

In late 1984 he left the hospit. for a nursing home, then went on to his own apartment. He started work at the post office in 1985, and apart from a brief interruption, he has been there since. Now Aldridge speaks publicly about schizophrenia, hoping to encourage research. He was recently honored for his efforts by the National Mental Health Association.

Looking back at what schizophrenia cost him, he said, "I'm trying to find out what good it brought.

"It brought me the ability to travel around the country and talk to people about it. It made me stronger in some ways...

"It made me comfortable in situations where I was uncomfortable before. I can't think of any situation where I can be intimidated, because the worst has already happened. How much more can you lose than everything?"

Doctor says diabetic youths can play sports

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla. (AP) — With proper precautions, children and adolescents with Type-I diabetes can take part in athletics, according to a University of Oklahoma pediatrician and researcher.

"Participation in sports can enhance self-image, provide a sense of accomplishment and lead to social interactions that are necessary for healthy emotional development," says Dr. Piers Blackett of the university's Health Sciences Center.

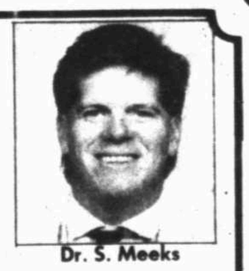

Ideally, Blackett says, a diabetic child should wait for sports activity until he is able to administer his own insulin injections, usually around age 9, and strenuous exercise should be scheduled following a meal and a dose of insulin.

"There are always risks, but I believe the advantages of exercise or participating in sports far outweigh any potential complications," Blackett says.

Well-known diabetic athletes include baseball's Ty Cobb and Jim "Catfish" Hunter.

HELP FOR ACNE SCARS

When dead cells and oil become blocked within a hair follicle, the stage is set for acne. If bacteria begin to grow in the accumulated material in the skin's second layer, the follicle wall may break. A pimple forms as inflammation strikes the surrounding skin. If the network of fibrous collagen becomes damaged by this outbreak, a loss of dermal skin may result. This leads to a characteristic depression known as an acne scar. Fortunately, many acne scars can be treated by the plastic surgeon. One such treatment calls for non-surgical callagen injections to build up areas of damaged collagen. Another, called dermabrasion, calls for sanding down the scarred area. Yet another called punch grafting, involves the removal of scar tissue and replacement with healthy tissue from a donor site. Skin type and scar contour determine the method used.

Having acne can be an overwhelming experience. If this results in acne scarring, which may happen even with the best medical care, one may become embarrassed about their appearance. Consult a cosmetic or plastic surgeon about the techniques described to help make your acne scars a memory. PERMIAN PLASTIC SURGICAL CENTER, located at 848 Central, Odessa, provides personalized medical care in the field of plastic and cosmetic surgery. Chemical peel, collagen therapy, dermabrasion, and scar revisions are performed. Office hours: M-F 8-5. Tel. 335-8711 or 563-3110.

HINT:
P.S. Punch grafting is often used in cases of deep, "ice-pick" scars.

Bush likely to name Sullivan as secretary of HHS today

WASHINGTON (AP) — President-elect Bush has chosen Atlanta educator Louis Sullivan as his secretary of health and human services, pushing aside a controversy over Sullivan's abortion views, and will name him to the Cabinet barring any last-minute hitch, sources said today.

The sources, who commented only on condition they not be named, also said Bush was ready to announce his selection of Chicago transit official Samuel Skinner for transportation secretary.

Formal announcement was expected in mid-afternoon pending the outcome of a high-level staff meeting, said the sources,

Bush had hoped to name Sullivan and Skinner earlier in the week. However, Sullivan, who would be the first black in Bush's prospective Cabinet, encountered stiff resistance from anti-abortion activists over his views on abortion.

Three conservative lawmakers active in the anti-abortion movement met with Sullivan Wednesday. They said he assured them he supports banning most abortions and holds positions similar to Bush's on the highly charged issue.

Sullivan, a 55-year-old physician, is president of the Morehouse School of Medicine in Atlanta.

Skinner, 50, meanwhile, was summoned to Washington today, his fourth trip to the nation's capital in less than two weeks. Sources say Bush offered him the job of transportation secretary earlier, but the president-elect held off making the selection official because he wanted the Sullivan matter settled before taking questions at another appointment announcement.

Skinner, an attorney who heads the Regional Transportation Authority of Northeastern Illinois, was active in Bush's presidential campaigns in 1980 and 1988.

After filling the HHS and transportation slots, Bush would have named 10 people to his Cabinet and would have four positions to fill: secretaries of interior, energy, labor and veterans affairs.

Today, Bush was also to have a private meeting with Eric Arturo Delvalle, the ousted president of Panama whom the United States regards as that country's legitimate leader.

Bush will spend the Christmas weekend in Washington before leaving Monday on a four-day hunting and fishing trip in Texas and Alabama.

A formal announcement on Skinner had been set for Tuesday, but it was delayed when controversy broke out over Sullivan's views on abortion as recorded over the weekend in an article in The Atlanta Journal and Constitution.

In the newspaper interview, Sullivan, the president of Morehouse School of Medicine, was asked about a woman's right to have an abortion. "There should be that right," he said.

But Sullivan told Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, and Reps. Vin Weber, R-Minn., and Christopher Smith, R-N.J., that he was against abortion except in the cases of rape, incest or to save the life of the mother, the lawmakers said.

Also attending the three-hour meeting Wednesday was Robert Teeter, co-director of the Bush transition.

Not only did Sullivan voice opposition to abortion, he also said he supports a constitutional amendment to overturn the Roe vs. Wade decision, the 1973 Supreme Court case that prohibited states from banning abortion in the first trimester of pregnancy, the lawmakers said.

"I had not heard that before," said Smith, co-chairman of the congressional Pro Life Caucus. During the campaign, Bush also supported an amendment to ban abortions except in certain circumstances.

Hatch said Sullivan would make a "fine secretary" at HHS. "I believe he was misunderstood concerning his views on abortion," he said.

Despite Sullivan's comments on abortion, Smith said he was not "fully convinced" about the prospective nominee's views, particularly whether Sullivan would oppose using federal funds to pay for research on fetal tissue.

NATION IN BRIEF

Reagan supporting ousted Panamanian

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan was making a concerted effort today to show support for Panama's ousted President Eric Arturo Delvalle, whom the United States continues to regard as Panama's legitimate authority.

Reagan planned to meet with Delvalle in what administration officials said was an attempt to give Panama's embattled opposition a morale boost after months of disappointments.

Delvalle, who was deposed by forces loyal to Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega last February and has lived in hiding in Panama ever since, met Wednesday afternoon with Secretary of State George P. Shultz shortly after his arrival from Panama aboard a U.S. military jet. Neither man spoke to reporters after the meeting.

Earlier, State Department spokeswoman Phyllis Oakley appeared to rule out U.S. military force to depose Noriega, saying that "Panama's political crisis can be resolved only by Panamanians."

Meanwhile, The Washington Post reported in today's editions that, during a meeting in Panama City last week with Adm. William J. Crowe Jr., chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Delvalle threatened to give up his struggle against Noriega unless the United States came up with a specific plan to remove him.

The Post said that according to notes of the secret meeting provided by a source, Delvalle said he saw no reason to continue making personal "sacrifices" without a specific plan of action to remove Noriega. The Post said the Dec. 11 meeting also was attended by U.S. Ambassador to Panama Arthur Davis and the commander of the U.S. military's Southern Command, Gen. Fred F. Woerner.

Men hold family hostage

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Three robbers held a bank executive and his family hostage overnight, then stole nearly $250,000 from the bank's vaults before fleeing, authorities said.

Police were not notified for 90 minutes until the robbers had fled and BankAtlantic Chief Executive Officer Alan Levan found his wife and 7-year-old daughter locked in the trunk of their Mercedes-Benz, police spokesman Ott Cefkin said Wednesday.

"It seems to be very well planned, and obviously it worked very well," Cefkin said. "They were probably halfway to Mexico by then."

Three men posing as a flower delivery team gained access to Levan's Coral Gables home Tuesday evening while Levan, 40, and his wife, Susan, 38, were out.

Tax evasion nets 30 years

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A woman who, with her husband, hid $1 million worth of valuables in three states after the couple was charged with tax evasion has been sentenced to 30 years in prison and fined $960,000.

U.S. District Judge Dean Whipple, imposing what was believed to be the stiffest sentence ever in a U.S. tax case, rejected the results of a psychiatric examination that concluded Trula Walker could be manipulated by male figures in her life. The exam had been done at Mrs. Walker's request.

Mrs. Walker, 47, also was ordered Wednesday to make restitution to the employees of Campbell 66, a family trucking company that prosecutors said the Walkers milked into bankruptcy by skimming profits to avoid taxes. Her father, Frank Campbell, founded the company that once operated in 13 states.

A U.S. District Court jury in August found Mrs. Walker guilty of five counts of tax evasion and one count of conspiracy.

Distributors recall toys

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three distributors are voluntarily recalling several small toys because of the potential choking and other hazards they pose to young children, the Consumer Product Safety Commission said Wednesday.

The recalled toys are a safety pin rattle sold by Fiber-Craft Materials Corp. of Niles, Ill.; plastic racing cars, planes and cycles from Acme Premium Supply Corp. of St. Louis, and wind-up puppies, planes, trains, helicopters, turtles, frogs and "Klacker Balls" from Lil Mort Sales of Chicago.

Anticipation turns to grief as crash reported

NEW YORK (AP) — A mother eager to welcome her child home for the holidays wailed "my baby, my baby" upon learning the worst at Kennedy Airport, where Flight 103's fate was reduced to a flickering message on a gray screen: See Agent.

Over and over, happy anticipation changed to shock and grief Wednesday night, as relatives of those aboard the Pan Am jet learned it had crashed en route from London to New York. Authorities believed there were no survivors among the 258 aboard.

"Many of these people were coming home just for the holidays, for Christmas," said Carla Abell, the volunteer disaster nursing chairwoman for greater New York, who helped counsel about 25 families at an airport lounge.

"Some of the families are going through the terrible part of, 'Oh, I shouldn't have insisted that they come home,' or, 'Oh, why did I ever allow them to go over," Ms. Abell said.

As she spoke, just hours after the flight was to have landed Wednesday, a sobbing woman passed by only to find herself facing dozens of bright lights and cameras.

"Look, my son is dead. What else do you want?" she screamed, her words hanging in silence long after she had left the spot.

She was anguished over the loss of her son, a Syracuse student who celebrated his birthday three days ago.

"It's so sad," said Ms. Abell. "He just turned 21 and was so excited to come home and share all of his great experience with his family and friends.

"And, you know, there was a big party planned for tonight at home with a big sandwich and a cake and all the presents and now who's going to be opening the presents," added Ms. Abell, whose eyes glistened with emotion.

Some of the friends and relatives of the passengers had to be treated for shock or high blood pressure as they learned of the crash, according to Red Cross spokeswoman Debra Ricciardi.

"It was a horrible surprise," she said. "Some were completely overcome. A couple just collapsed. Others went into shock. It's heartbreaking."

At Syracuse University, more than 25,000 people attending a basketball game paused for a minute of silence after it was learned that 38 students in the school's European study program had been on the jet. At the campus chapel, weeping students gathered in disbelief as they heard the news.

Rabbi Milton Elefant, chaplain of the Jewish students at Syracuse, arrived at Kennedy and said he spoke with the families of three victims from Syracuse.

"Some are just feeling that the end has come. One woman had to talk her heart out. Another couple felt they would meet their son again in another life and were strong. A third couple was somewhere in the middle," he recalled.

Neither Pan Am nor the university had released passenger names by early today, saying the list still had to be compiled and relatives notified.

However, some names were divulged by other sources.

James Fuller, 50, vice president in charge of Volkswagen United States Inc., and Lou Marengo, 33, the company's marketing director, had boarding passes for Flight 103 and apparently died in the crash, Volkswagen spokesman Tom McDonald said in Troy, Mich.

Also aboard were the U.N. commissioner for Namibia, Bernt Carlsson, 50, of Sweden; and John Mulroy, The Associated Press director of international communications, and his son, Sean, and daughter-in-law, Ingrid.

The Washington Post today quoted an unidentified State Department spokesman as saying six members of the department's Diplomatic Security Service, who were returning from Beirut, were aboard. State Department spokesman Ben Justesen said he could not confirm the report.

Also aboard were some U.S. servicemen, including First Lt. George W. Williams, 24, said his father, George Williams of Joppatowne, Md. The younger Williams, who was stationed near Frankfurt, got on the plane because a traffic jam caused him to miss an earlier one, the father said.

Grieving relatives at Kennedy were kept from reporters, who generally refrained from asking questions when they got near shaken family members.

"My baby, my baby," sobbed one woman who was supported by security officers as she was led to an elevator. She later collapsed, shaking and crying on the floor.

Pan Am spokesman Jeffrey Kriendler said the plane crashed in the Scottish village of Lockerbie, exploding into a huge fireball and setting fire to dozens of homes.

For a few relatives of the passengers, the first word that something was wrong came on the television screens listing arrivals, where beside Flight 103 was "See AGT."

At an airport tavern called the Concourse Clipper Club, about 20 people were watching a blaring television set as the evening news came on with an update on the disaster.

Jet's metal skin strewn through village streets

LOCKERBIE, Scotland (AP) — Hardly a place in this market town escaped the crash of Pan Am Flight 103.

The jumbo jet's metal skin and body lay scattered on streets and sidewalks, and houses bore smoldering testimony to the force of the explosion when the aircraft slammed in pieces into the village Wednesday night.

In the center of this town of 2,500 residents, a complete aircraft engine lay embedded in a street early today.

Windows in homes and shops were smashed and searchers crunched over the broken glass and crumpled bits of metal.

A row of white houses, only their gabled ends and walls still standing, smoldered in the early morning darkness.

Clouds of smoke rose from a huge crater gouged by a chunk of the crashing plane near the highway at one end of town. A large piece of fuselage smoldered in the four-lane road. Alongside it was a wrecked car, almost flattened, one of five hit by the plane.

Townspeople and rescue workers combed the area for bodies, and carried the victims into a makeshift mortuary in the town hall. Residents anxious for news about friends and relatives were allowed inside the sandstone building to check the lists of survivors from the most badly-affected streets.

Earlier, stunned villagers stood in small knots watching the police, firefighters, soldiers and ambulances go back and forth. Rescue workers flinched as a chimney suddenly crashed to the ground.

"It seems almost incongruous that in this quiet and peaceful place this awful thing has happened," said Donald Dewar, the opposition Labor Party's spokesman on Scottish affairs.

Survivors were being housed with friends in the tightly-knit community and the town hall noticeboard was serving as a bulletin board for the whereabouts of the evacuees.

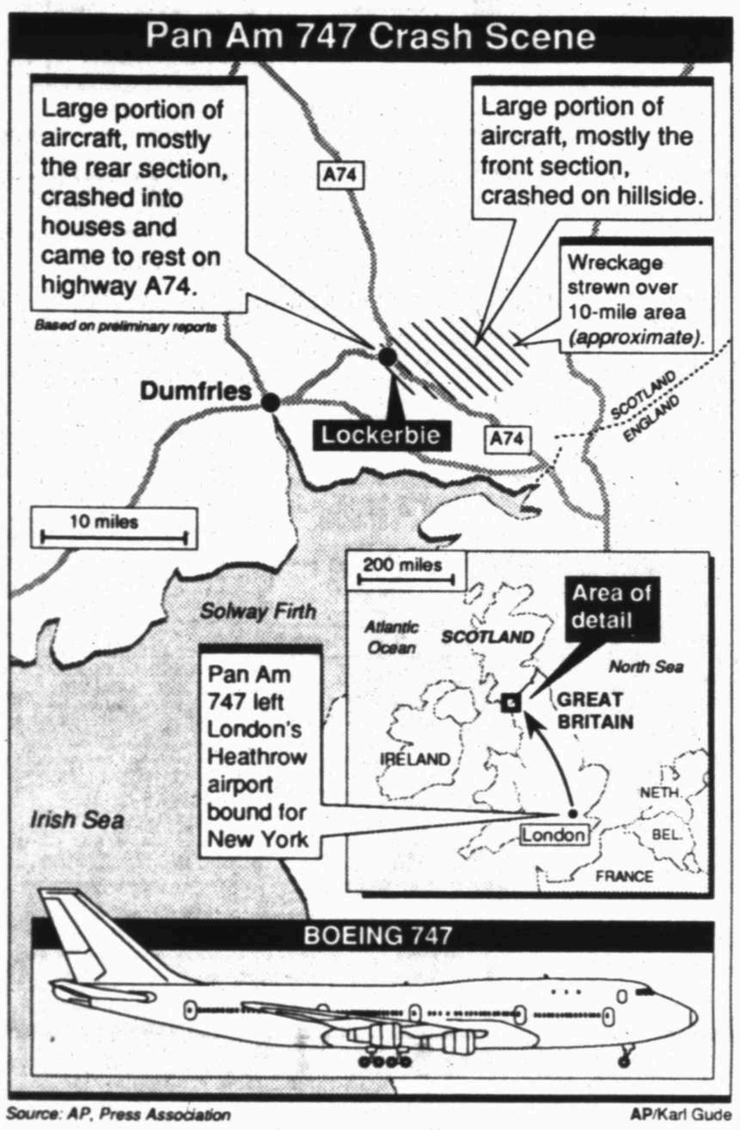

"The worst thing is the uncertainty," said a woman shopkeeper who would not give her name. "We know there were a lot of people on the plane but where are the local people?

"This a close community and we still just don't know who might be alive or dead."

Scott Maxwell and a neighbor had rushed to a garage devastated by the blast and helped injured people get clear of the scene. With telephones knocked out, he used the radio in his van to call emergency services, and then helped clear debris from the roads to enable emergency vehicles to get through.

Bungalows in Sherwood Crescent and Sherwood Park appeared to have caught the full force of the crash, and police said no one inside the struck houses had survived.

Broken roof tiles and pieces of metal, probably from the aircraft, lay everywhere and houses that were not hit were evacuated in case of gas leaks.

U.S. Embassy had warned of threat to American flights

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department warned U.S. embassies that a bomb threat had been made against Pan Am jetliners flying from Frankfurt to the United States 2½ weeks before the crash of a New York-bound flight originating in Germany, U.S. officials said today.

In addition, American sources said the Federal Aviation Administration told Pan American World Airways early this month that the airline might be the target of a terrorist bombing on a route from Frankfurt, West Germany.

Pan Am Flight 103 crashed Wednesday in Scotland, killing all 258 people aboard, and U.S. and British officials said the plane probably exploded before the crash. The flight originated in Frankfurt with a Boeing 727. Passengers were transferred to the 747 at London's Heathrow Airport.

In Washington today, a U.S. government source said the U.S. Embassy in Helsinki, Finland, received a telephone threat about two weeks ago from a person claiming to belong to the Abu Nidal group, a radical Palestinian faction.

The caller said a bomb would be placed aboard a Pan Am plane and that it would be carried by a woman, said the source, who spoke only on condition of not being named.

At the U.S. Embassy in Moscow, a Dec. 13 circular from William C. Kelly, the administrative counselor, had been posted on bulletin boards.

It read: "Post (the embassy) has been notified by the Federal Aviation Administration that on Dec. 5, 1988, an unidentified individual telephoned a U.S. diplomatic facility in Europe and stated that sometime within the next two weeks there would be a bombing attempt against a Pan American aircraft flying from Frankfurt to the United States."

It continued: "The FAA reports that the reliability of the information cannot be assessed at this point, but the appropriate police authorities have been notified and are pursuing the matter. Pan Am has also been notified."

Plane had history of cracks, corrosion

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The jumbo jet that crashed in Scotland had at least 24 mechanical problems during the past eight years, including cracks, severe corrosion and an on-board fire, a newspaper reported today.

The Los Angeles Times cited Federal Aviation Administration service records on the two dozen problems involving the jet, which crashed Wednesday with 258 people aboard.

According to a report filed March 25, a leading edge slat fell off the plane during takeoff from Karachi, Pakistan, the records said.

In October 1987, maintenance workers responding to a Boeing service bulletin suggesting inspections of the plane and all similar aircraft found severe corrosion at the rear bulkhead and on part of the fuselage, the reports said.

Reports filed in 1980 included one citing a crack and one saying the plane failed to turn when it was on autopilot. Other reports described an engine flame-out during flight and fuel odor in the cabin and cockpit.

Reports in 1981 and 1983 cited numerous cracks in the plane's floor beams and a floor beam web. A 1984 report detailed fractures in exhaust casing rails and trailing edge flaps that were locked in place.

Boeing Commercial Airplanes, which builds the 747 in Everett, Wash., has no comment on the reports, company spokesman Craig Martin said Wednesday night.

"Since there's absolutely no information that we're aware of for any cause of the accident, there's no reason to comment on the plane's history," Martin said.

Martin said he did not know enough about other planes' service records to comment on whether 24 mechanical difficulties during eight years were unusual in number or type.

Pan Am spokesman Jeff Kriendler said he could not comment because he did not have the plane's service history.

> "Since there's absolutely no information that we're aware of for any cause of the accident, there's no reason to comment on the plane's history."
>
> — Craig Martin, Boeing spokesman

In Washington, FAA spokeswoman JoAnn Sloane said there have been problems with minor cracks in 747s over the past few years, and the FAA put out a directive to have the planes inspected. But she said the inspections did not find much cracking.

"Those are certainly very reliable airplanes," she said, adding that the problems reported by the Times did not appear to be unusual given the length of time the plane had been in service.

Officials at Pratt & Whitney in East Hartford, Conn., said they doubted their engines, which powered the aircraft, were responsible for the crash. Company investigators were dispatched to the accident scene.

Pratt & Whitney spokesman Ed Cowles said the plane could have continued to fly even if three of the 747's four engines failed at once.

The 747-100, tail number N739PA, was delivered to Pan American World Airways in February 1970 and was the 15th 747 built, said David Jimenez, another Boeing spokesman.

The plane had flown an estimated 72,000 hours and about 16,500 cycles, with one cycle being a takeoff and landing, said Boeing's Jack Gamble.

Jimenez said 50,000 cycles is considered high for a commerical jetliner.

By comparison, the Aloha Airlines Boeing 737 that lost part of its fuselage during a flight over Hawaii last April had more than 89,000 cycles. That factor was investigated in determining whether metal fatigue was responsible.

Gamble said the plane that crashed Wednesday was taken out of service between April 11, 1987, and Sept. 27, 1987, for substantial modifications, and that any structural deficiencies observed earlier would have been corrected then.

Service difficulty reports filed in 1987 when the plane was out of service detailed corrosion and cracks, according to the FAA reports cited by the Times.

The largest, near the upper part of the fuselage bulkhead, measured 16.3 inches, the reports said. A 2.2-inch crack was found in a splice plate, a joint between metal parts. Moderate to severe corrosion also was found on splice plates, the reports said.

Other service difficulties cited while the plane was out of service included a sheared nose gear bolt, a missing pylon panel, two instances of smoke in the passenger cabin and fire spewing from an engine pylon, the reports said.

The modifications in Wichita, Kan., included converting the Boeing to make it capable of carrying cargo for the Civil Reserve Air Fleet, a program for providing the government with planes in a national emergency, said another Boeing spokesman, Paul Fang.

Over the years, Pan Am has bought 45 747s from Boeing, according to Boeing's Tom Cole. As of September 1988, Pan Am had 38 of the planes in its fleet, he said.

AP executive, family members among dead

NEW YORK (AP) — John Mulroy, director of international communications for The Associated Press, died along with five family members in the crash of a New York-bound Pan Am jetliner.

Mulroy

Local authorities said no survivors were found from among the 258 people aboard Flight 103 after the plane crashed Wednesday in the village of Lockerbie in southern Scotland.

Mulroy was traveling with five family members, including his 25-year-old son, Sean, and Sean's wife, Ingrid, who were residents of Sweden.

Mulroy's sister, Bridget Concannon, her husband, Thomas, and the couple's son, Sean, who lived in a London suburb, also were aboard.

Mulroy, 59, joined the AP in August 1984 after 25 years with Pan Am, where he had been director of communications. He was a native of County Mayo, Ireland, and maintained a second home in the land of his birth.

Mulroy joined the news cooperative as staff executive for international communications. He was appointed deputy director of communications in 1986 and director of international communications in 1988, based in New York. In that position, he was responsible for all AP technical operations outside the United States.

He was born April 1, 1929, and held an associate degree in electrical engineering from Birmingham University in England.

"John Mulroy had been with us only four years but his contributions were immense," said Louis D. Boccardi, AP president and general manager.

"He guided the streamlining of our international news and picture communications systems during a time of accelerated modernization. He did that with a wit and warmth that made him a treasured member of our team.

"To say that we will miss him does not begin to describe our sense of loss."

Survivors include Mulroy's wife, Josephine, of East Northport, on New York's Long Island, a daughter, Siobhan, 26, and a son, Brendan, 23.

Relatives await word

LONDON (AP) — Everard Whitehouse joined a small group of shaken relatives of passengers who boarded Pan Am Flight 103 at Heathrow Airport Wednesday night and voiced the frail hope his young cousin had missed the plane.

"People change their minds," he said.

Whitehouse had taken Julian Bennello, 25, of Boston, to the airport in the afternoon to catch the flight. He returned to the airport after hearing the news that it crashed in the village of Lockerbie in southern Scotland.

"He's a post-graduate at Cambridge University and is quite brilliant," said Whitehouse. "He delayed his flight by one day because he wanted to see a friend of his who was ill in Cambridge.

"I've come here because I couldn't get through on the phones. ... His brother rang me from the States and I told him I was going to the airport. I wanted to make sure he was on the plane as things changed at the last moment — people change their minds."

Police officers escorted one elderly couple who walked down the airport's corridor holding hands, tears in their eyes.

Two tearful women who would not reveal their names said, "We've been ringing all the time. We've been trying to phone New York and the London numbers and they are just engaged. We've come here because we think a friend of ours is on the plane."

U.N. officer killed

New York Times News Service

UNITED NATIONS — Bernt Carlsson, who was a passenger on the Pan Am flight that crashed over Scotland, had served as chief administrative officer of the United Nations Council for Namibia since July 1987.

He was on his way here for a ceremony Thursday, at which accords providing for Namibia's independence are to be signed by Angola, Cuba and South Africa.

The officer is, in theory, the United Nations' appointed governor for Namibia, the South African-ruled territory also known as South-West Africa.

But because United Nations authority over Namibia is not recognized by South Africa, he is in practice the chief United Nations officer in charge of development programs intended to prepare Namibia for independence.

Carlsson, 51, a Swedish diplomat, had been in London for a meeting with non-governmental groups, United Nations officials said.
