Nicaraguan rebels list 'economic targets'

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — A Nicaraguan rebel leader says his group has informed Sandinista officials it will strike at "strategic economic targets," such as oil refineries, if the Sandinista military starts using high-performance Soviet helicopters against the insurgents.

Adolfo Calero, head of the Honduran-based Nicaraguan Democratic Force, said in a telephone interview Monday from Miami that the prospective change in tactics was brought about by the introduction of at least six Mi24 Soviet helicopters into Nicaragua over the past two weeks.

Even though the insurgent group, known by the Spanish acronym FDN, has not received U.S. funds since last May, it still retains the capability for economic sabotage, Calero said.

If the Mi24s are used against the insurgents, Calero said, the rebels will retaliate by sabotaging oil refineries, sugar mills, the sugar crop, coffee processing plants and other economic and other objectives that have been "heretofore avoided."

But, he said, the capacity of the Mi24s is such that "the Sandinistas could polish us off between now and February," the month in which the U.S. Congress has said it will reconsider resuming aid to the rebels.

■ Mobilization plans resumed — Page 2A

A U.S. official, who asked not to be identified, also said the introduction of the Mi24s could represent a turning point in the three-year armed conflict in Nicaragua.

"They (the Sandinistas) are really going to blow the rebels out of there," the official said.

U.S. officials were unavailable for comment on Calero's remarks. Nonetheless, when leftist rebels in El Salvador began targeting that country's economic infrastructure three years ago, then-Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. criticized the tactic as "sheer terrorism."

Calero, a one-time Sandinista supporter, said the Mi24 is capable of "saturation attacks" against large areas and "can obliterate entire villages."

The Mi24 is described as an ideal counter-insurgency weapon with a nose machine gun and four wing pods capable of carrying 32 rockets each. The U.S. official said no helicopter in the world flies faster than the Mi24, whose maximum speed is 199 miles per hour.

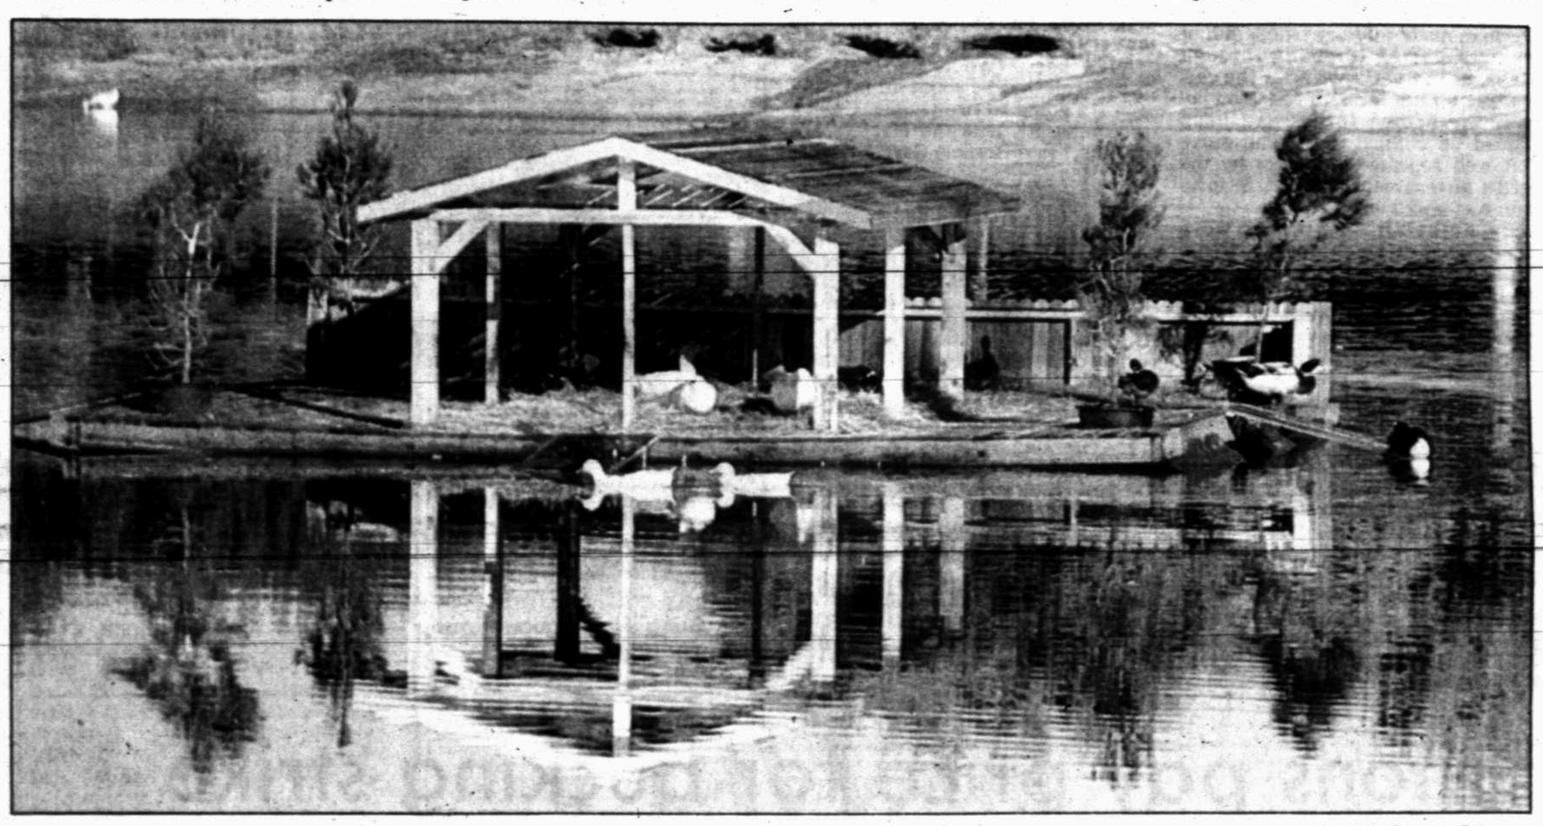

Calero said U.S. concern over indications that the Soviets may have sent MiG-21s to Nicaragua has largely obscured the significance of the the Mi24s. From the rebels' viewpoint, six Mi24s are "much worse than 20 MiGs," Calero said.

The United States has opposed the introduction of advanced combat aircraft, such as MiGs, into Nicaragua because this could pose a potential threat to nations friendly to the United States and to the Panama Canal, officials have said.

Last week, U.S. intelligence experts had been concerned that a Soviet cargo ship that docked at the Nicaraguan port of Corinto may have been carrying MiG-21s. But now officials minimize that possibility.

Calero said four Mi24s were delivered to the port of El Bluff by a Bulgarian vessel in late October and that two more were sent to Corinto last week. A Nicaraguan official, speaking privately, said one Mi24 was aboard the Soviet vessel.

Congress cut off aid to Calero's group in May, contending that the assistance was impeding a political settlement in Nicaragua and was causing unnecessary bloodshed, among other reasons.

Have oil prices stopped falling?

By STEVEN P. ROSENFELD
AP Business Writer

NEW ORLEANS — When the subject of oil prices comes up in the petroleum industry these days, the only debate is on whether they have stopped falling.

On Monday, Shell Oil Co. and Atlantic Richfield Co. joined the price-cutting that has spread to the nation's largest oil compamies, reducing from $30 to $29 the price they are willing to pay for a barrel of top-grade domestic oil. Some smaller companies are paying as little as $28.50 a barrel for the benchmark domestic blend, West Texas Intermediate crude.

Executives attending the American Petroleum Institute's annual convention here were not mentioning the possibility of a price increase soon, either at home or abroad.

On the other hand, "No one expects a great fall in prices," said John McKinley, chairman of Texaco Inc.

If prices level off now, downward pressure will resume early next year at the end of the heating season and before summer travel picks up, said McKinley.

"If I were a betting man, I'd say prices will stay stable" for the next four or five months, said Clifton Garvin, chairman of Exxon Corp., the world's largest oil company.

But Garvin added that prices could resume falling if there is a mild winter or if the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries fails to stick by its resolve to defend official prices by cutting production.

Chevron Corp. chairmanGeorge Keller said he expects oil prices to fall in relation to inflation for the next two to three years and not to rise faster than inflation until the early 1990s.

Expectations of rising oil prices in the 1990s are based on the assumption that no new major fields will be developed outside the Middle East, that no technological breakthroughs will produce a competitively priced substitute for oil and that oil reserves will become depleted outside of OPEC.

Sniper once tried suicide at same Oregon stadium

By SALLY CARPENTER HALE
Associated Press Writer

EUGENE, Ore. — A sniper who shot one man to death and wounded another before killing himself had tried to take his own life once before by slashing his wrists in the same college stadium where the shooting spree unfolded, police said.

Friends and acquaintances of Michael E. Feher said he was prey to fads, wanted to be a rock star and was overwhelmed by personal problems, but they said he gave no indication his frustration would be vented in deadly violence.

Feher, 19, donned combat fatigues, blackened his face and entered the University of Oregon's Autzen Stadium on Monday carrying two rifles, police said. He wounded a wrestler who confronted him, killed a former Olympic sprinter and turned a rifle on himself, police said.

Last summer, Feher slashed his wrists at Autzen Stadium but survived the suicide attempt, police Lt. Rick Nelson told the Eugene Register-Guard.

Jim Stewart, president of the Delta Tau Delta fraternity house where Feher lived for the past year, said Feher had "problems with studies, problems with women, problems that you and I could deal with."

Feher, who took two ROTC classes, drifted from fad to fad with the latest being military magazines, said Stewart. He said Feher also played the guitar and "he wanted to be a successful rock star."

Just hours before Monday's rampage, police investigating a burglary at a sporting goods store found a case marked "M. Feher," for custom-made ear plugs like the ones shooters use.

Police tried to trace the name on the case, but linked it to Feher only after the former University of Oregon psychology student went on his shooting spree. Since Feher had no criminal record, a computer check was fruitless, said police Sgt. Eric Mellgren.

"Naturally, we know what happened now," said Mellgren.

Police said Feher shot to death Chris S. Brathwaite, 35, a sprinter who received degrees from the school in 1976 and 1977 and competed in the Olympic Games in 1976 and 1980 for his native Trinidad, on a jogging path outside the stadium.

Rick O'Shea, 22, a senior and member of the university wrestling team, said he was wounded while standing between a goalpost and a tunnel leading to a weight room inside the stadium. O'Shea was hospitalized in good condition following surgery for wounds to the shoulder and buttocks.

The sniper barged into the weight room around 8:30 a.m. carrying two high-powered rifles, demanded to use the telephone, threatened to "blow away" the group of 10 athletes working out, then turned and went out to the stadium, said O'Shea.

O'Shea said he went out minutes later, "because somebody had to check it out," and was shot by the sniper, who by then had taken up position on a ramp among the stadium seats.

After O'Shea ran back to the weight room, where the athletes barricaded themselves inside, the sniper began firing volleys, and apparently moved to the top of the 40,000-seat stadium to shoot over its side at Brathwaite. Brathwaite's body was not found until around 11:30 a.m.

The firing continued, with officers, some with blackened faces and wearing fatigues, pinned down at spots around the stadium, said Mellgren. The officers fired no shots before Feher was found dead with two semi-automatic .223-caliber rifles at his side shortly before noon, said Mellgren. Police said they believed he shot himself around 9 a.m.

Ed Barclay, manager of Anderson's Sporting Goods, from which a Ruger Mini-14 and an AR-15 were stolen around 4 a.m. Monday, said Feher was a regular customer.

"He was a real nice, young kid, real friendly. Didn't strike me as anything but the normal kind of guy who would buy sporting goods," said Barclay.

Wounded wrestler says he's 'lucky' he survived attack

By KENT WALZ
Associated Press Writer

EUGENE, Ore. — University of Oregon wrestler Rick O'Shea thought the man wearing military fatigues and carrying rifles was joking when he barged into the weight room at Autzen Stadium and said he wanted to use the telephone.

O'Shea said he and nine others in the room started taking the man more seriously when he ordered them to move to the room's upper level "or else I'll blow you away right here."

The man turned and went out to the stadium, beginning a shooting spree that ended with former Olympic sprinter Chris S. Brathwaite shot to death, O'Shea, 22, wounded, and the gunman — identified by police as Michael E. Feher, 19 — dead of a self-inflicted gunshot wound to the head.

"The gun was real freaky," said wrestler Bill Beutler, one of those working out in the weight room. "It had a little laser beam on the end and the little light was jumping from person to person. He told everybody to get back. It was just business.

"He had a straight, cold face," Beutler said. "The guy said, 'If I pull this trigger, it will tear you apart.' He looked like a shark or something. There was no emotion showing at all on his face."

O'Shea, speaking after surgery Monday for gunshot wounds to the buttocks and shoulder, said he followed Feher outside after several minutes because "somebody had to check it out."

"We weren't going to take the chance," he said. "If we walked out in a group he might have blown us all away."

O'Shea said he didn't see anyone at first, then heard Feher yell from a ramp near the west grandstand.

"He said, 'Get back inside or I'll shoot,'" O'Shea said. "Before I had a chance to do anything, he shot."

O'Shea ran back inside. Another wrestler yelled to bar the door.

"Me and four others piled weights against the door," O'Shea said. "We went upstairs and built a little barricade and got some weights to use as weapons."

Before the shooting began, the gunman "didn't seem agitated. He did want to use the phone," said O'Shea. "There might have been somebody who could have helped him. It seemed like he knew what he was going to do."

O'Shea and the other athletes spent about two hours barricaded in the weight room, but were in contact with police by telephone much of the time.

A former Pac-10 wrestling champion, O'Shea, hospitalized in good condition at Sacred Heart General Hospital here, said he should be back on the mats soon.

"I guess you could say I was lucky," he said.

Biblical 'cheerleader' doesn't take his rejections personally

Associated Press

DALLAS — Rollen Stewart, who tries to get his Biblical slogans flashed across network television during National Football League games, understands it's not him who is being rejected — it's his message.

Stewart, who several times has worn a rainbow-colored Afro wig to attract the camera's attention, displays religious banners at sporting events as part of his traveling media ministry.

But to the people who run Texas Stadium, home of the Dallas Cowboys, religion has no place in football stadiums.

Rabies found in Hereford steer raised in Ridge Heights area

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

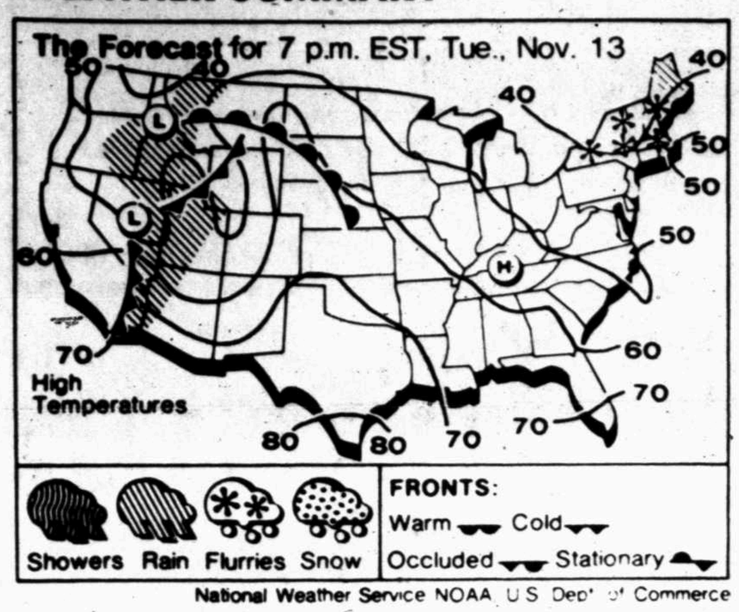

Rabies have been detected in a 2-year-old Hereford steer belonging to Randy Black of the Ridge Heights Addition just south of Midland, Dr. Karen Hicks, a Midland veterinarian, said today.

And a neighbor of the Black family, the Black children and possibly up to 10 people who had handled the rabid calf may undergo anti-rabies vaccinations.

"The physicians will have to determine who gets the shots," Hicks said.

Shuttle crew suggests rescue plan

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Shuttle managers today agreed with a recommendation by Discovery's spacewalkers that they attempt a new, untried recovery plan when they go after a second stranded satellite on Wednesday.

Under the plan, astronaut Dale Gardner is to jet over to the Westar 6 satellite, capturing it with a pole-like device, and then guide it over to astronaut Joe Allen, who will be mounted on a "cherry picker" work station on the end of the shuttle's 50-foot robot arm.

With Allen grasping the 21-foot-tall satellite firmly by an antenna and a crossbar, Gardner is to attach a docking collar on the base of the craft and the two astronauts are to manually berth it in the cargo bay for return to Earth.

This was one of three options shuttle officials considered after Allen and Gardner encountered trouble with the Palapa satellite on Monday when a bracket wouldn't fit on the satellite. That forced them to manhandle it into the bay after Allen had captured it.

The other two options were a repeat of Monday's backup procedures and a normal recovery, based on a design assumption that Westar would not have the same bracket problem Palapa had.

Asked their opinions of the options this morning, Allen and Gardner both heartily endorsed the "cherry picker" approach.

"Our collective opinion, and I vote the strongest on this one, is that it would be very easy for me, standing in the work station, to hold onto the omni-antenna while Dale works on the satellite," Allen said.

Mission Control, confident there would not be a bracket difficulty, seemed to favor the normal approach, because the astronauts have practiced it extensively. But after listening to the astronauts' arguments, they decided to let Allen and Gardner do it their way.

Commander Rick Hauck argued, "We've learned an awful lot in the last 24 hours about what our capabilities are in the contigency world," referring to manual manipulation of Palapa on Monday.

"It was not a piece of cake," Gardner said of the Monday effort. "We did it and we could do it again, but that's not the way to start out." He said it would be easier with Allen mounted firmly in the work station.

Meanwhile, Discovery stalked the second prize to join Palapa in the cargo bay for the trip back to Earth on Friday.

Hauck and pilot David Walker today fired the ship's main engines to drop into an orbit about 10 miles below that of Westar. In the lower orbit, the astronauts take slightly less time to circle the globe and gradually gain on their target, which was about 500 miles ahead at the time.

As on Monday, Hauck will maneuver to within 35 feet of Westar early Wednesday for the six-hour space walk.

Allen captured Palapa by flying out to the craft on a jetpack. He poked a 4-foot pole-like device called a stinger into the spent engine nozzle and threw a switch that snapped open toggle bolts and secured the stinger to the satellite.

He then moved the payload close enough to the shuttle so Anna Fisher could grasp a grapple fixture on the stinger with the robot arm.

Normally, Gardner would have attached a second grapple fixture to the bottom of the satellite, so that the arm could berth it properly on a pallet in the bay. But he was unable to do so because a black frame structure on the satellite, part of an antenna system, was blocking his installation of a bracket.

Officials of Hughes Aircraft, which built both Palapa and Westar, said the bracket was not designed properly. They said satellite owners have different antenna requirements and it is possible Westar would not have the same problem. Design records were being checked.

Insurance companies are paying the National Aeronautics and Space Administration $5.5 million for retrieving the two satellites. They hope to refurbish and resell them to recoup some of the $180 million in claims they paid when the payloads were sent into useless orbits by faulty booster rockets after being released from the shuttle Challenger last February.

No rainfall recorded for Midland area

From Staff and Wire Reports

Although skies were cloudy this morning the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport recorded no rainfall leaving the total preciptation this year to date at 13.31 inches.

Conditions tonight are expected to be fair and cool with lows in the upper 40s warming to highs in the mid-70s Wednesday. Skies will become partly cloudy in the afternoon. Southerly winds tonight at five to 15 mph will shift to the southwest at 10 to 20 mph and gusty Wednesday.

The record high set in 1938 was 13 degrees above Monday's high of 71. The record low of 15 set in 1976 was 28 degrees below the 43 degree temperature recorded this morning.

STATE

Weak high pressure lingered over Texas early today, creating clear skies over most of the state.

An exception was the lower Rio Grande Valley, where some cloudiness was reported.

Winds were generally light and variable, although south winds of 5 to 10 mph developed over West Texas and the Panhandle.

Overnight temperatures were mostly in the 40s and 50s, ranging from 39 at Lufkin to 65 at McAllen.

The National Weather Service said conditions should be mostly sunny and mild.

NATION

Two storms, one off the Pacific Coast the other off the Atlantic Coast, scattered snow inland today.

A storm off the central Pacific Coast unleashed high winds and heavy rain on northern and central California. A winter storm warning was posted for the Sierra Nevada range of California and the Lake Tahoe basin of Nevada, where one to two feet of snow was forecast for elevations above 7,000 feet.

A flash flood watch was issued for some areas north of the San Francisco Bay area and a high-wind warning was issued for parts of central California and southern Nevada, where gusts up to 65 mph were reported. Gusts above 50 mph were reported at the San Francisco airport.

Gale warnings were posted for the northern and central coast of California, Oregon's southern coast and the coast of Washington.

A storm off the Atlantic Coast sent snow into the upper Ohio Valley and lower Great Lakes. Up to five inches of snow was reported in southern Erie and Crawford counties of northeastern Pennsylvania.

Nicaragua assumes its military alert

By CARL MANNING
Associated Press Writer

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — Civilians reopened trenches, soldiers patrolled the streets and tanks guarded key factories and communications centers in response to the Sandinista government's declaration of a nationwide military alert.

Soviet-made T-55 tanks and East German-made military trucks full of soldiers started rumbling through Managua's streets soon after the government radio announced Monday that the armed forces had been placed on combat alert. The move followed repeated warnings by the leftist government that a U.S. invasion was imminent.

By nightfall, the forces were deployed at major approaches to the capital and around strategic points such as the airport, an industrial sector and Nicaragua's only oil refinery. Reporters said they saw similar preparations under way in other cities.

Thousands of soldiers armed with Soviet AK-47 submachine guns and armed militias, called up from the reserves, patrolled Managua throughout the night. Some slept in trenches dug two years ago when the Sandinistas first claimed the United States planned to invade Nicaragua.

U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz, asked about Nicaragua's allegations of a planned invasion, said Monday that such fears "are a self-inflicted wound on the part of Nicaragua." He said the charges were "based on nothing, and I don't know why they are doing this."

Shultz, who was in Brazil for a meeting of the Organization of American States, referred to the Reagan administration's contention that the Soviets are sending increasing amounts of arms to Nicaragua and said the United States planned "to work in every way to cast this aggressive and subversive influence out of our hemisphere."

"It's been five or more times they've alerted us about an invasion and it's going to tire people. Unless, of course, it's true the Marines are coming," said Horacio Garcia Rocha, 38.

Marlene Gutierrez, 45, another resident of the capital, added: "The bad thing about all this is that factories and crops are neglected because of the military alerts and we don't know what we're going to have to eat come July of next year."

The Sandinistas stepped up their warnings about a U.S. invasion shortly after the controversial Nov. 4 election, Nicaragua's first in a decade. The major opposition coalition boycotted the election, claiming it lacked guarantees to campaign freely.

Final figures made public by the Supreme Electoral Council late Monday said Sandinista presidential candidate Daniel Ortega, coordinator of the ruling three-man junta, and running mate Sergio Ramirez polled 735,967 votes, or 66.97 percent of the total cast.

Britons pay price for bucking strike

By LARRY THORSON
Associated Press Writer

DARFIELD, England — Ray Hunt goes to his job in a coal mine these days in a 22-vehicle police convoy. His wife and daughter left their home in the Yorkshire hills because a brick was hurled through their window after he defied fellow miners on a eight-month-old strike.

"Bloody scabs!" screamed the strikers as police vans, their windows covered with steel mesh, took Hunt past the gauntlet of pickets.

Ray Hunt and Mel Hunt aren't related by birth, but they are brothers of sorts now for deciding to be the first two men to return to work at Darfield Main Colliery since its 650 miners put down their tools along with most of Britain's 178,000 coal miners.

The strike has had nearly total support in Yorkshire mining villages like Darfield, in northern England, where miners walked off the jobs to protest a plan by Britain national coal board to close 20 money-losing mines nationwide.

But even in Yorkshire, the solidarity has cracked a bit. The two Hunts believe only fear keeps thousands of other disgusted miners from abandoning the strike.

Mel Hunt, 36, a 19-year veteran of the mine, vowed he won't be deterred even though he was punched in the nose Saturday when he tried to attend a union meeting.

"It's not money I've gone back for, it's my principles and beliefs," he said, launching a scathing attack on the leadership of the National Union of Mineworkers, particularly its president, Arthur Scargill, a fellow Yorkshireman.

"Scargill will bring nothing but poverty to people and ruination to our industry, and he'll split our union," he said over a long afternoon of ale-drinking on Sunday with Ray Hunt and Tony Ellis, the man who organized their return to work.

Ellis, 41, is vice president of the National Working Miners' Committee. Its aim, heavily backed by management of the state-owned coal industry, is to encourage more men to return to work and collapse the strike.

"There's no more loyal nor finer men than Yorkshire miners," Ellis said. "But they're afraid now. I've been on TV five times telling the men to go down to the pit entrance in the morning and talk to the other men on strike, and they'll find that the men all want to go back."

Ellis encouraged the Hunts to shake off the trauma of defying the strike. He promised police protection, pay for all of last week even though they went to work only on Friday, a transfer to another mine if, after the strike's end, it becomes too difficult to work with men who upheld the walkout, and "probably a promotion."

The union denounces such tactics as bribery, but it is under heavy pressure because of a barrage of management publicity telling strikers they must return to work by Nov. 19 to qualify for $829 in a combination of wages, Christmas bonus payments and allowances.

The number of miners who reported for work in Yorkshire jumped over the weekend, from 272 on Friday to 614 Monday, according to management.

RABIES

Some had handled the steer's feed bucket and had come in contact with the animal's saliva, she said. If saliva from a rabid animal were to invade a person's body via an open wound, then that person could get the disease, which attacks the nervous system. The disease ordinarily would not be contracted by ingestion, she said.

A person who has come in contact with rabies, specifically with a rabid animal's saliva by a bite, should be vaccinated against the virus "as soon as possible" but no later than seven to 10 days from time of exposure to rabies.

Hicks said the vaccine, injected into the arm, is "expensive but not painful."

"People usually do not recognize the symptoms of rabies in steers or horses," she said.

She said skunks had been sighted in the Ridge Heights area the previous week and for months prior to that.

The veterinarian said she performed euthanasia on the Black steer Friday, sent the steer's head to the Texas Department of Public Health, which on Monday reported the results were positive.

Black's wife, Pam, this morning said the steer, which the family was raising to butcher and eat, "wasn't acting right" on Thursday, and the veterinarian was summoned.

Mrs. Black said she and others are consulting with physicians, the veterinarian and with the Texas Department of Health to determine if the shots are to be administered.

She said two other calves and a horse are in their pasture, but "so far" none has showed signs of rabies. She said others in the housing addition just off the Rankin Highway had caught and destroyed up to 36 skunks in recent months. And the veterinarian said apparently no tests were performed on the skunks to determine if they were rabid.

Mrs. Black said her children, ages 7, 5 and 16 months, weren't upset over the death of the steer. They weren't attached to the animal since the calf was going to be butchered and eaten.

Rabies in an animal could be "dumb rabies," which would cause the steer to be passive, or "vicious rabies," Hicks said. Symptoms of the latter would be bellowing and charging or attacking by the animal.

The veterinarian said the Black steer drooled, and the steer's rear legs went lame.

Hicks said rabies in a steer are "not common but all animal are susceptible to the disease.

"A rabid animal isn't particular about whom it bites," she said. Hicks noted that skunks, which are a "terrific problem out there," are nocturnal and that a skunk wandering around in daytime likely is rabid. A rabid skunk may bite the nose of a curious calf, horse or other animal.

Hicks said that eating the meat of a rabid animal, such as a calf, is not dangerous but is illegal in the United States but not in some countries.

SIGNS

On Aug. 25, stadium officials refused to allow Stewart to hang his banner at the Cowboys' nationally televised preseason game against Houston. They said the sign had nothing to do with the event at hand and had no business being displayed.

The sign read, "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whoever believes in Him should not perish but have everlasting life."

Stewart told the Dallas Times Herald he didn't take the first rejection too seriously since he had displayed his signs last year.

But when the sign was again banned at the New Orleans game Oct. 21, Cowboys management informed Stewart that they had allowed him to hang the signs last year in deference to the occasion, since 1983 was the Year of the Bible.

Stewart, who originally is from the Seattle area but says he sold his 74 acres of land there and now doesn't have a permanent residence, plans to be back in Dallas, banner in hand, for a Thanksgiving Day game.

"I was so successful," said Stewart, who is about 40. "But I understand it. It's not me they're rejecting, it's the message."

Even if he loses his stadium forum, he'll continue his cause, he said.

"That's why we live here — for the freedom for every man to stand on a soapbox and preach," Stewart said.

Since Dallas' action, similar bans have been imposed this year by stadiums in Anaheim, San Francisco, Cleveland, Buffalo, New York and Denver. RFK Stadium in Washington banned the signs but later changed that policy after protests.

"I think it was more or less that we felt we had no right to ban them," stadium spokeswoman Betty Underwood said.

Moroccan can distinguish between right, wrong, psychiatrist claims

DALLAS (AP) — A Moroccan national accused of gunning down six patrons at a nightclub knows the difference between right and wrong and is not insane as the defense contends, a psychiatrist has testified.

Abdelkrim Belachheb has a "severe sociopathic personality" and was aware of his actions the night of June 29 at Ianni's Restaurant and Club, Dr. James Grigson testified Monday.

Belachheb, 39, has pleaded innocent by reason of insanity to six counts of murder and one of attempted murder in connection with the shooting spree at the restaurant. If convicted, he faces life in prison.

If found innocent by reason of insanity, State District Judge Gerry Meier will determine how long he stays in a mental institution. The prosecution continues its rebuttal today.

Grigson, also referred to as Dr. Death for his frequent testimony at insanity trials, testified Belachheb "has no significant degree of brain damage" as the defense has claimed.

Grigson's testimony came as Belachheb's murder trial entered its third week.

The prosecution is attempting to refute last week's testimony by defense witnesses who characterized Belachheb as "crazy" and a "paranoid-schizophrenic" who suffered from organic brain damage and didn't know the difference between right or wrong.

Three other witnesses called by Assistant District Attorney Norman Kinne refuted defense contentions that Belachheb was insane at the time of the shootings and didn't know what he was doing.

Mohammed Benali testified Belachheb went to his house immediately after the shootings between 12:30 and 12:45 a.m. After wrestling the gun away from the defendant, Benali said Belachheb screamed "Kill me. Kill me. I came to kill you."

Later, after the defendant calmed down, Belachheb said, "'I have just killed a bunch of people ...He told me he had a conversation with a young lady and she told him they didn't allow monkeys in the club," Benali said.

James McClain, a local investor who had hired Belachheb as a limousine driver, said the morning after the shootings Belachheb called him from jail and admitted the killings.

"He said, 'Jim, have you heard? I'm in trouble. I need an attorney.'"

McClain testified he offered to help until he later learned one of his friends had a been one of the victims.

"A sociopath is not a mental illness or sickness. It describes an individual who doesn't have a conscience," Grigson told the eight-woman, four-man jury. "He is interested only in self-gratification and pleasure...and manipulating others. He has a complete disregard for human lives except his own."

Lawyer asks for release of woman jailed in September for contempt

AUSTIN (AP) — A Houston woman jailed for refusing to testify against her son should be released because she purged herself of contempt of court charges by testifying before a grand jury, her attorney has argued.

In motions filed Monday with the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, lawyer Randy Schaffer argued that Odette Port purged herself of contempt by answering most questions asked her by the Harris County grand jury last week.

Mrs. Port has been jailed since Sept. 12 after refusing to testify against David Port, 17, who is charged with murder in the June 7 shooting death of postal carrier Debora Sue Schatz.

Mrs. Port "answered all questions which were proper and relevant to this determination," her lawyer said.

David Port is free on $20,000 bond. Miss Schatz, 23, disappeared while delivering mail in the Ports' fashionable west Houston neighborhood.

Mrs. Port and her husband, Bernard, were ordered jailed by State District Judge I.D. McMaster on Sept. 12 for refusing to testify against their son.

Bernard Port was freed from Harris County Jail on Friday after appearing before a county grand jury for several hours.

Although Mrs. Port also testified before the grand jury, McMaster refused to release her. He gave no reason for his decision to keep her in jail.

In the motions filed Monday, Schaffer said Mrs. Port failed to answer six questions put to her before the grand jury because they weren't relevant to the on-going investigation.

In his motion, Shaffer said the grand jury was seeking to determine whether the murder charge against David Port should be upgraded to capital murder.

It could be upgraded if it were shown that the slaying occurred during the commission or attempted commission of a rape, robbery or kidnapping, officials said.

However, Schaffer argued, "It is obvious that the state's primary purpose (in the grand jury proceeding) was to discover evidence to assist in the trial preparation of the already indicted murder case."

Non-English speaking students flooding into Houston schools

HOUSTON (AP) — Non-English speaking students — some of whom never attended school in their homelands — are surging into Houston schools, and the trend will probably continue next year, school officials say.

About 32,000 students in the district can't read or write in English well enough to handle normal classroom assignments, according to district figures.

HISD Superintendent Billy Reagan said the problem threatens to become worse when state-ordered pre-kindergarten classes begin next year, adding between 7,000 and 10,000 new students into the district, 70 percent of whom will be deficient in English.

At least 3,000 of the 187,000 students who now attend schools in the district are in the country illegally and another 2,000 are refugees from El Salvador, according to district figures.

The district reports it has seen a surge in the number of students from Vietnam, Cambodia and other Asian nations.

"Three years ago, who ever heard of a kid coming into the school system from El Salvador or Nicaragua?," asked Gayle Fallon, president of the Houston Federation of Teachers.

Ms. Fallon said the district has come "a long way" in meeting needs of a new student population, but school officials still need more bilingual instructors.

"It's a horrible situation for teachers to have kids in class you can't communicate with — because you know you are not reaching that child as well as you should and there's not a damn thing you can do about it," Ms. Fallon said.

Judges rule blue law unconstitutional; Big department stores fight to keep it

HOUSTON (AP) — The Texas blue law has come under fire in recent weeks by judges who declare it unconsitutional and businesses who are defying it.

But merchants' groups are fighting to keep the law on the books, and appellate courts have traditionally backed them up.

The 23-year-old law regulates the sale of 42 types of merchandise on consecutive Saturdays and Sundays. But critics of the law argue it is vague and difficult to enforce.

On Monday, State District Judge Geraldine Tennant in Houston declared the law unconstitutional — the third judge to do so in recent weeks — and she lifted an injunction forbidding the Academy sporting goods chain to open on Saturdays and Sundays.

Earlier this month, State District Judge Dee Brown Walker in Dallas ruled the law unconstitutional in a case involving several chain stores, but the Texas Supreme Court reversed his decision. And on Oct. 9, State District Judge Thomas Phillips made a similar ruling in Houston and lifted an injunction against Houston's Handy Dan chain.

Many merchants opposed to the blue law argue it doesn't make sense.

"When you start looking at the list, you realize how ludicrous it all is," said Linda Ward, an official of Furrow Building Materials of Austin. "A customer gets furious when you have to tell them they can't buy a metal trash can on Sunday, but they can buy a plastic one."

"It's a bad law, and I think they should change it," said Austin storeowner Buddy Slack. "A place should be able to sell everything. A person should be able to walk into a store on Sunday and buy a fishhook."

Slack said his biggest sales are during the weekend. "If we had to close down on Sunday, it'd really hurt us," he said.

Violation of the blue law is a misdemeanor. The maximum criminal penalty is a $100 fine for the first offense and a $500 fine and up to six months in jail for a second offense.

In the past two years, the Travis County attorney's office has sent 10 to 15 letters warning retailers that the county had reason to believe they were violating the law, said Jan Breland, assistant county attorney.

But Breland said her office, which is responsible for enforcing the Sunday-closing law, never has prosecuted a blue law case.

SMU develops alcohol policy

DALLAS (AP) — A new interim policy at Southern Methodist University that monitors alcohol consumption at fraternity and sorority parties is too specific and probably will only last a couple of months, says a student who helped draft the policy.

"A fraternity can't spit without getting into trouble," said senior Ted Brabham, a member of the 15-member committee of students, faculty and administrators who developed the interim policy.

Under the new rules, fraternity and sorority members planning on-campus parties must hire campus police, a licensed bartender and appoint four juniors or seniors who will not drink to monitor the event.

"I will urge the frats to have parties off-campus if they feel they can't abide by the rules. I don't think this will last two months," Brabham said.

Walter A. Snickenberger, SMU vice president for student affairs, banned alcohol from sorority and fraternity events Sept. 10 after two weekends of raucous partying, when students drinking alcohol hurled bottles and verbally insulted campus police.

However, students continue to be allowed to have alcohol in their dormitory, sorority or fraternity rooms.

Greg Thompson, president of Beta Theta Pi fraternity and vice president of the Interfraternity Council, said the policy is "a good system that can work."

"It's better than a moratorium," Thompson told The Dallas Morning News.

Born-again Christian lawmaker has 'mellowed'

By JANET STAIHAR
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — In at least one respect, Capitol Hill is mueh like Times Square in New York. Stand on the corner long enough and you might see forgotten friends, former bosses, and colleagues you haven't seen for decades.

So it is with the incoming class in the House of Representatives. There are at least three among the 44 or so freshmen who have passed this part of the world before and will now be back to legislate.

"I am a born-again Christian," promises Helen Delich Bentley, 60, the new Maryland congresswoman whose language was once so salty that it was rumored she taught longshoremen the finer points of dockside rhetoric.

Of course, that was when she was maritime editor for the Baltimore Sun newspaper for 29 years, says her campaign manager, Al Dennis. But after that she cut a swath as chairman of the Federal Maritime Commission during the Nixon and Ford administrations.

"She's mellowed to a degree, but she's still a tough, gutsy fighter," says Dennis. "The woman literally survives on three hours of sleep, and she was up with the roosters, rain or shine, to stand on street corners to win this race. She's a dynamo."

Mrs. Bentley had to be a survivor for, after all, she was a woman covering the Baltimore waterfront when many editors thought that female reporters were best off writing fashion and society news.

"When she was assigned to the docks, I suppose the editors thought they were throwing her to the dogs," reminisced Dennis, himself an ex-Sun newspaperman.

But she learned to be tough early on. Her father, a copper miner in Nevada, died when she was 8, and her mother took in boarders and did wash to keep the family together. Her first job paid 10 cents an hour at a novelty store.

"Because she had a humble beginning, she can relate to blue-collar workers," said Dennis."But she can also be a diplomat. She's not going to Congress to tear things up."

While a reporter, Mrs. Bentley covered shipping issues on Capitol Hill and produced a local television show on Maryland industry. As Maritime chairman she was no stranger here, spending countless hours gunning for legislation she didn't like and boosting bills she did.

"In the 1960s, they called it charisma," says the campaign press secretary to Rep.-elect Kenneth J. Gray of Illinois. "He's got a magnetic personality. Attention just seems to focus on him."

Those who knew Ken Gray when he served in the House for 20 years would not argue with that characterization of him.

Gray dressed flamboyantly, owned a lavish houseboat, and, as chairman of the subcommittee on public buildings and grounds, was instrumental in the remodeling of Washington's historic Union Station for the Bicentennial Celebration — a multimillion-dollar project that architectural critics say was a flop.

Years later, the building's interior was redone to make it more useable.

Asked what committee he wants to be on, Gray says he would like Public Works and Transportation again — the parent committee of the panel he chaired 10 years ago. Gray at 59 now wears businesslike three-piece suits and has shed the white shoes of yesteryear.

Onetime television talk show host, Rep.-elect Robert K. Dornan, R-Calif., comes back to serve an Orange County district after relinquishing his seat in 1982 to make an unsuccessful bid for the Senate.

Dornan, known as "B-1 Bob" for his support of defense programs, reportedly spent nearly $1 million to win the election.

Space drama

There goes another "unknown."

The perpetrators were the crew members of Space Shuttle Discovery who on Monday did what had never been done before by rescuing an errant satellite spinning out of control. They did it with some spacely theatrics that are novel today because the shuttle astronauts' earthbound audience haven't seen them before. In the future, though, the techniques employed by the Discovery astronauts may become commonplace.

In capturing the Palapa B2 satellite, astronaut Joe Allen and his crewmates performed a number of amazing moves. Spacewalking Allen captured the satellite by hand and with the help of a jet-powered backpack, manuevered it within range of grappling controls operated from within the Discovery by Anna Fisher. She attached one connector but was unable to attach a second.

That didn't stop Allen, though. He pushed the device by hand into the Discovery's cargo bay where it was secured for a return to Earth.

Capture of the satellite is just one of a long list of "firsts" executed by astronauts in the nation's shuttle program. What it signals is a new era for the space program in which previously launched satellites and other devices can be retrieved, repaired and returned to space for a longer, more useful tour of duty.

That translates into an improvement in the space program's cost-benefit ratio, but it also opens new doors for space pioneers since many more new and exciting areas of space exploration and development now appear within reach.

On Wednesday the shuttle astronauts will attempt to retrieve a second satellite spinning out of control. If they're successful, it will mark an achievement that sets a new standard for the NASA space program. But setting standards is nothing new for NASA officials. They've been doing it since the day 23 years ago when Alan B. Shepard Jr. made his historic space flight.

In the two decades since, success has become a way of life for NASA.

No Sakharov Plaza

The cruel Soviet treatment of Nobel Laureate Andrei Sakharov and his wife, Elena Bonner Sakharov, has horrified the Western world. But protests by Western leaders and scientists have fallen on deaf ears.

The distinguished scientist has embarrassed the Kremlin by his public dissent and criticism of Soviet human rights violations.

Now Congress is considering a proposal that is sure to annoy the Kremlin. It wants to rename the block on which the Soviet Embassy is located in Washington, D.C. It would be called "Sakharov Plaza."

This would be a constant reminder to personnel at the embassy that the United States supports freedom for the Sakharovs. Whether it would help obtain their freedom is a debatable point. It could have the opposite effect by hardening Soviet policy.

A more effective and less antagonizing approach would be to restrict all scientific exchanges with the Russians until the Sakharovs are allowed to emigrate.

Another View:

Using deadly force

May a state authorize police to shoot a fleeing anti-trust law violator? The question sounds silly. But when a Supreme Court justice posed it hypothetically the other day, a lawyer representing one of the 24 states which grant police "shoot to kill" authority in apprehending any suspected felon answered "yes."

The Supreme Court should overturn those laws, adopting the standard in effect elsewhere, including California, where police are authorized to use deadly force only if necessary to stop someone suspected of committing a violent felony or who appears armed and dangerous.

The facts in the case before the Supreme Court are Exhibit 1 in the argument for abolishing the broad shoot to kill rule. A Nashville, Tenn., policeman shot and killed Edward Garner, a 15-year-old who was running away after having broken into a house and stolen a wallet containing $10. Patrolman E.R. Nymon testified that he shot Garner in the head, knowing that he was unarmed, because he could never catch the teenager in a footrace.

If police cannot shoot fleeing suspects willy-nilly, some culprits will probably get away. But the lives saved by this rule make that price well worth paying. Shoot to kill turns the presumption of innocence on its head, with the police officer acting as judge, jury and executioner, that's why it violates the constitutional due-process rights of suspects. It's also bad police practice. There's no evidence that a high frequency of killing felons in flight lowers crime rates, but police shootings do heighten tensions between law enforcement and the communities they serve. That's why the Police Foundation, a Washington, D.C., research group, and 33 police chiefs and sheriffs have filed a friend-of-the-court brief urging a narrow deadly force standard.

Despite the law-and-order ideology of the current court, the shoot to kill rule may be overturned. Thirteen years ago, one justice whose vote will be pivotal got it exactly right: "A shoot to kill order might conceivably be tolerated to prevent the escape of a convicted killer, but surely not for a car thief, a pickpocket or a shoplifter." You can say that again, Warren Burger.

Help urged for Polish refugees

WASHINGTON — The brutal murder of "the Solidarity priest," Father Jerzy Popieluszko, by Polish government agents has intensified the pressure on President Reagan to relax the rules on political asylum for Polish refugees.

The document that would accomplish this — a draft of a secret National Security Decision Directive — has been stalled at high levels of the White House since August. It would certify the oppressive nature of the Polish military regime, making it easier for Poles to be granted political asylum here.

Jack Anderson

The National Security Council, which prepared the directive, has been urging Reagan to sign it. Former national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski has been lobbying quietly for it. Polish-American groups had hoped that their political clout in key states would lead the president's advisers to recommend his signature before Election Day; now they're afraid their best chance is gone.

Who opposes lowering the bars for Poles seeking political asylum? The Immigration and Naturalization Service and the Justice Department are chief opponents, apparently for fear that easing the requirements for Poles would open the floodgates to people from other countries — like the Salvadorans — who could also claim political persecution.

That's why the murder of Popieluszko took on such significance. It lent credence to those who have been insisting that the Polish military regime does, in fact, persecute and violently retaliate against Solidarity sympathizers. The crucial criterion for refugees seeking political asylum here is that they would be in actual physical danger if they returned to their homelands.

The murder of the priest makes a mockery of the INS letter that has been sent to many Polish refugees whose pleas for political asylum have been rejected. Though conceding that "present conditions in your homeland may be unstable," the INS letter concludes coldly, "you have failed to establish that upon your return you personally would be persecuted on account of your race, religion, nationality or political opinion."

The murder adds weight to a State Department background paper seen by my associate Lucette Lagnado, which states: "Although not nearly as ruthless as the Soviet system of labor camps and psychiatric prisons, the Polish system of police repression does use deprivation of employment, demotions, deprivation of housing and other forms of economic pressure to enforce discipline on political nonconformists."

The briefing paper continues: "Whether such treatment constitutes persecution is a difficult question to answer. In one case, for instance, a family was reportedly denied its fair share of food-ration coupons on the orders of the police and, as a result of malnutrition, one of the children became chronically ill. ... Other people have been sent to work in the coal mines or inducted into the military service in order to frighten them into conforming with the regime's dictates. ... Poland ... is still a police state in which people often do suffer persecution for their political beliefs."

Besides the NSC directive, say my sources, the president is considering other options — including a formal letter to the Justice Department that would wipe out many of the administrative hurdles now faced by Polish refugees.

At the very least, administration sources say, either option would encourage fairness and consistency in the official INS handling of applicants.

STRICTLY PERSONAL: Many readers want to know more about the Moral Majority's influence within the Reagan White House. Actually, the fundamentalist group's leaders complain that they don't have nearly enough. A spokesman said that "pragmatists" around the president "are always saying, 'What do you want now? Haven't we done enough for you?'"

He cited specifically the opposition of White House chief of staff James Baker to an appearance by President Reagan before a group of Baptists.

— Is the Moral Majority determined to fight against the "right to die" in coming months? They are indeed. But their opposition to euthanasia evidently doesn't extend to elderly liberals on the Supreme Court. Asked about possible Reagan appointments to the high court, a Moral Majority spokesman griped: "It probably won't be that many. The liberals will just hang on even if they have to bring in oxygen masks. It's enough to make you want to pull the plug."

Shultz seeking control of policy

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State George Shultz, quiet man of the Cabinet, has started his move to control foreign policy in the second Reagan administration by offering U.S. help for developing new Soviet oil and gas reserves — drawing fire from President Reagan's ideological soulmates.

The Kremlin badly needs high-tech oil-and-gas-exploration equipment. Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, backed by Shultz, will send a high-level official to Moscow in mid-January to discuss new commercial arrangements with the communists. That would include easing current restrictions on at least part of the oil and gas equipment the Russians need.

Rowland Evans

That fits into Shultz's overall diplomatic game plan to upgrade U.S.-Soviet relations, culminating in an arms control agreement. Shultz believes he now has Reagan's tacit backing to run the whole foreign policy show himself, and he may win this first round. But not without a battle.

Robert Novak

When news of the Shultz-Baldrige oil-and-gas initiative leaked last week, the president's hard-line Pentagon and Capitol Hill allies were speechless. They could not believe Ronald Reagan would ease trade with the Russians while alleged Soviet complicity in the attempted assassination of the pope remained an open question. They counterattacked with a clandestine move to seize control of the bureaucratic machinery and paperwork that must precede a final decision by the National Security Council (NSC).

This is designed to place the issue in the hands of the Pentagon-based Technology Transfer Panel of the NSC instead of the Treasury-headed International Economic Policy Panel, friendly to Shultz's views. Recommendations from either of these panels, or possibly both, will be the raw material for the NSC and presidential decisions.

The issue of blocking oil-gas technology from easier purchase by the Soviet Union is viewed by hard-liners as vital to the U.S.-Soviet balance. Norway's immense undersea gas reserves are still untapped, and may never be if gas is extracted from the equally vast Barents Sea Soviet reserves. That would put Moscow in position to satisfy Western Europe's gas needs far into the future in return for the hard currency Moscow badly needs.

Shultz's determination has not been moved by provocative behavior in the Kremlin — not even Moscow's blatant threat last week to end all Soviet energy exports to England in reprisal for Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's refusal to yield to Britain's striking coal miners. This intervention into British internal affairs sounded a clear warning of what lies ahead if all Europe were dependent on Soviet gas to keep their homes warm and their factories running.

Nor was the secretary of state influenced by those spurious Soviet charges of CIA complicity in the murder of Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi. That accusation was surely calculated to weaken revelations that the KGB plotted the murder of the pope, using Bulgarian state security.

Indifference to outrageous Soviet behavior demonstrates Shultz's conviction in his own no-linkage doctrine. He expressed it in these terms last month in his seminal address in Los Angeles: "We should not sacrifice long-term interests in order to express immediate outrage."

"Long-term interests" are billions of dollars' worth of American sales to the Soviet Union in high-tech equipment needed to develop the underwater Barents Sea gas fields. Shultz, himself an economist and former head of an international corporation, values these revenues for American capitalists in exactly the way they are valued by two other businessmen in the Cabinet, Baldrige and Treasury Secretary Donald Regan.

The president's ideological partners don't agree. That includes the Pentagon team, headed by Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger. Two key senators — Jake Garn, the powerful Banking Committee chairman, and the just re-elected Sen. Jesse Helms, putative new chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee — will fight Shultz, backed by middle-level Reaganites placed in the bureaucracies in 1981.

Robert McFarlane, the president's national security assistant, lacks power to resolve these disputes. But he has contrived the idea of "czars" over arms control and the overall U.S.-Soviet relationship. These top-level presidential insiders would knock heads and end the arguments that have split the Cabinet and bureaucracy for four years.

That is not what George Shultz wants. Understandably, he is seeking all authority in his own hands and, as of now, is winning with the president. But there are many other disagreements about the U.S.-Soviet relationship, including arms control, yet to be fought. High-tech oil and gas equipment is only the first test of the secretary's new assertiveness.

Standards improving

Twelve years ago when I moved to Midland I was told by many members of the community what an outstanding school system we had. Ten years ago, when my first son entered school, I quickly realized this wasn't so! With two boys in the MISD and being a concerned and involved parent I have been, and will continue to be, active in support of a realistic grading system, gifted education, adequate L.D. facilities and teachers, and a meaningful teacher evaluation process, among other things.

I was elated when our board of trustees finally took steps to put some teeth in our grading system and upgraded the standards whereby a child's letter grade was actually reflective of his/her knowledge and ability. However, this action has not been well received by the community. There is a coterie demanding that this new policy be rescinded; untrue statements are being set forth as facts; I haven't witnessed any organized support for the new policy.

Are we parents so preoccupied with our children receiving "good" grades that we are willing to overlook the meaning of their letter grade? Is it so important to "us" that our child receive an A — denoting excellence — that we will overlook the fact that perhaps this A was earned with a 90% average, an average which means our child DID NOT or COULD NOT learn, understand, or retain a full ten percent of what was taught?

Carry this thought to the extreme and imagine, for a minute, the case of a society of "90 percenters" who truly believe themselves "excellent." The 90% civil engineer plans a bridge (ONLY 10% wrong), the 90% designer designs that bridge (ONLY 10% wrong), the 90% stress engineer works out tolerances (ONLY 10% wrong), etc., right down to the 90% welder whose welding is ONLY 10% lacking. Would you want to be in the first car to drive across that bridge?

As parents and community leaders we also have to accept responsibility for "why" we support the old, artificial grading system and the ultimate damage that could accue to our children. Do our own egos require that we brag about our students' good grades and our city-wide academic level? How do we explain to our "4 point" graduate — the 90 percenter — the this level of achievement will earn him only a "B—" in a good, academic college? Or, even worse, explain to our "C" student why he was unable to pass a college entrance exam?

Critics of the new grading system have stated that changing our grading standards will make us inconsistent with the rest of the state. The fact is that two-thirds of the school districts in the state of Texas have 93% as the minimum requirement for a letter grade of A. Our "old" system is the one that is really out of sync!

Please, those of you who support my position, let our board members know you approve of higher standards in our school system. Let them know you support them in their action to achieve this.

Accountant may be needed

I read in Thursday's paper a statement by Janet Massey, Midland County Democratic Party chairman, to the effect that Democrats need to be educated. Her feeling seemed to be aimed at those Democrats who voted Republican on Nov. 6th. She said, "They didn't understand that Vice President Bush paid a lot less income tax than their county chairman, who is a widow."

For the record, according to the Oct. 15 issue of U.S. News, Page 18, George Bush paid $18,305 income tax on his form 1040. Since then IRS has dis-allowed a home sale roll over — a normal tax deduction for most Americans — so he paid an additional $144,128. The article shows that his adjusted gross income in 1983 was $142,117, for a net loss of $2,011.

If Mrs. Massey did indeed pay more taxes last year than Vice President Bush, she either makes an awful lot of money or she needs a "better educated" accountant!

Quadriplegic waiting for 'opportunity to die'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Elizabeth Bouvia, the quadriplegic who quietly left a hospital seven months ago after a futile battle for the right to starve to death, is in failing health waiting for "a better opportunity to die," her attorney said.

"She still wants to carry out her original wish and take a powder," said Richard Scott, an American Civil Liberties Union lawyer who represented the 27-year-old cerebral palsy victim in her fight against Riverside County authorities.

Ms. Bouvia, who had vowed to leave her "useless body," is living in Southern California and taking regular nourishment, Scott said. He would not disclose the location.

"She's waiting for a better opportunity and is eating in a place where she's receiving loving care," Scott said. He emphasized, however, that the people who were caring for her would not aid in her death wish.

Scott would not explain what a "better opportunity" might be, but said Ms. Bouvia "realizes that the starvation route is probably futile anywhere."

Ms. Bouvia, who also suffers from arthritis, admitted herself to Riverside General Hospital in September 1983, and later asked that the staff give her painkillers and hygienic care but no food while she wasted away.

She had dropped to below 87 pounds when officials began to force feed her through a naso-gastric tube last Christmas Day after receiving a court order, the hospital said.

Her departure on April 7, 217 days after her arrival, came as something of a relief to the hospital, burdened by publicity and court battles.

"The purpose of this hospital is to take good care of patients. Taking care of her was quite a strain with all the legal problems and so on," Dr. Habeeb Bacchus, acting chief of the medical staff, said shortly after Ms. Bouvia left.

The publicity also prompted a protest from the Disability Rights Coordinating Council, which said it is "criminal and dangerous for a society to assist oppressed persons to die before such persons have been ensured the right to a full and dignified life."

Riverside County authorities have served notice that an investigation would follow Ms. Bouvia's death. Her estranged husband, Richard Bouvia, 36, who says he's not trying to find her, says he'll also prosecute anyone who aids her suicide.

ACLU spokeswoman Carol Sobel says that Ms. Bouvia is living at a private nursing facility, but there was "no timetable" for her death.

But Scott said that Ms. Bouvia, who was wheelchair-bound when she was hospitalized and had only limited use of one arm, is "quite a bit more disabled now. She can't sit in a wheelchair now. She's lying flat."

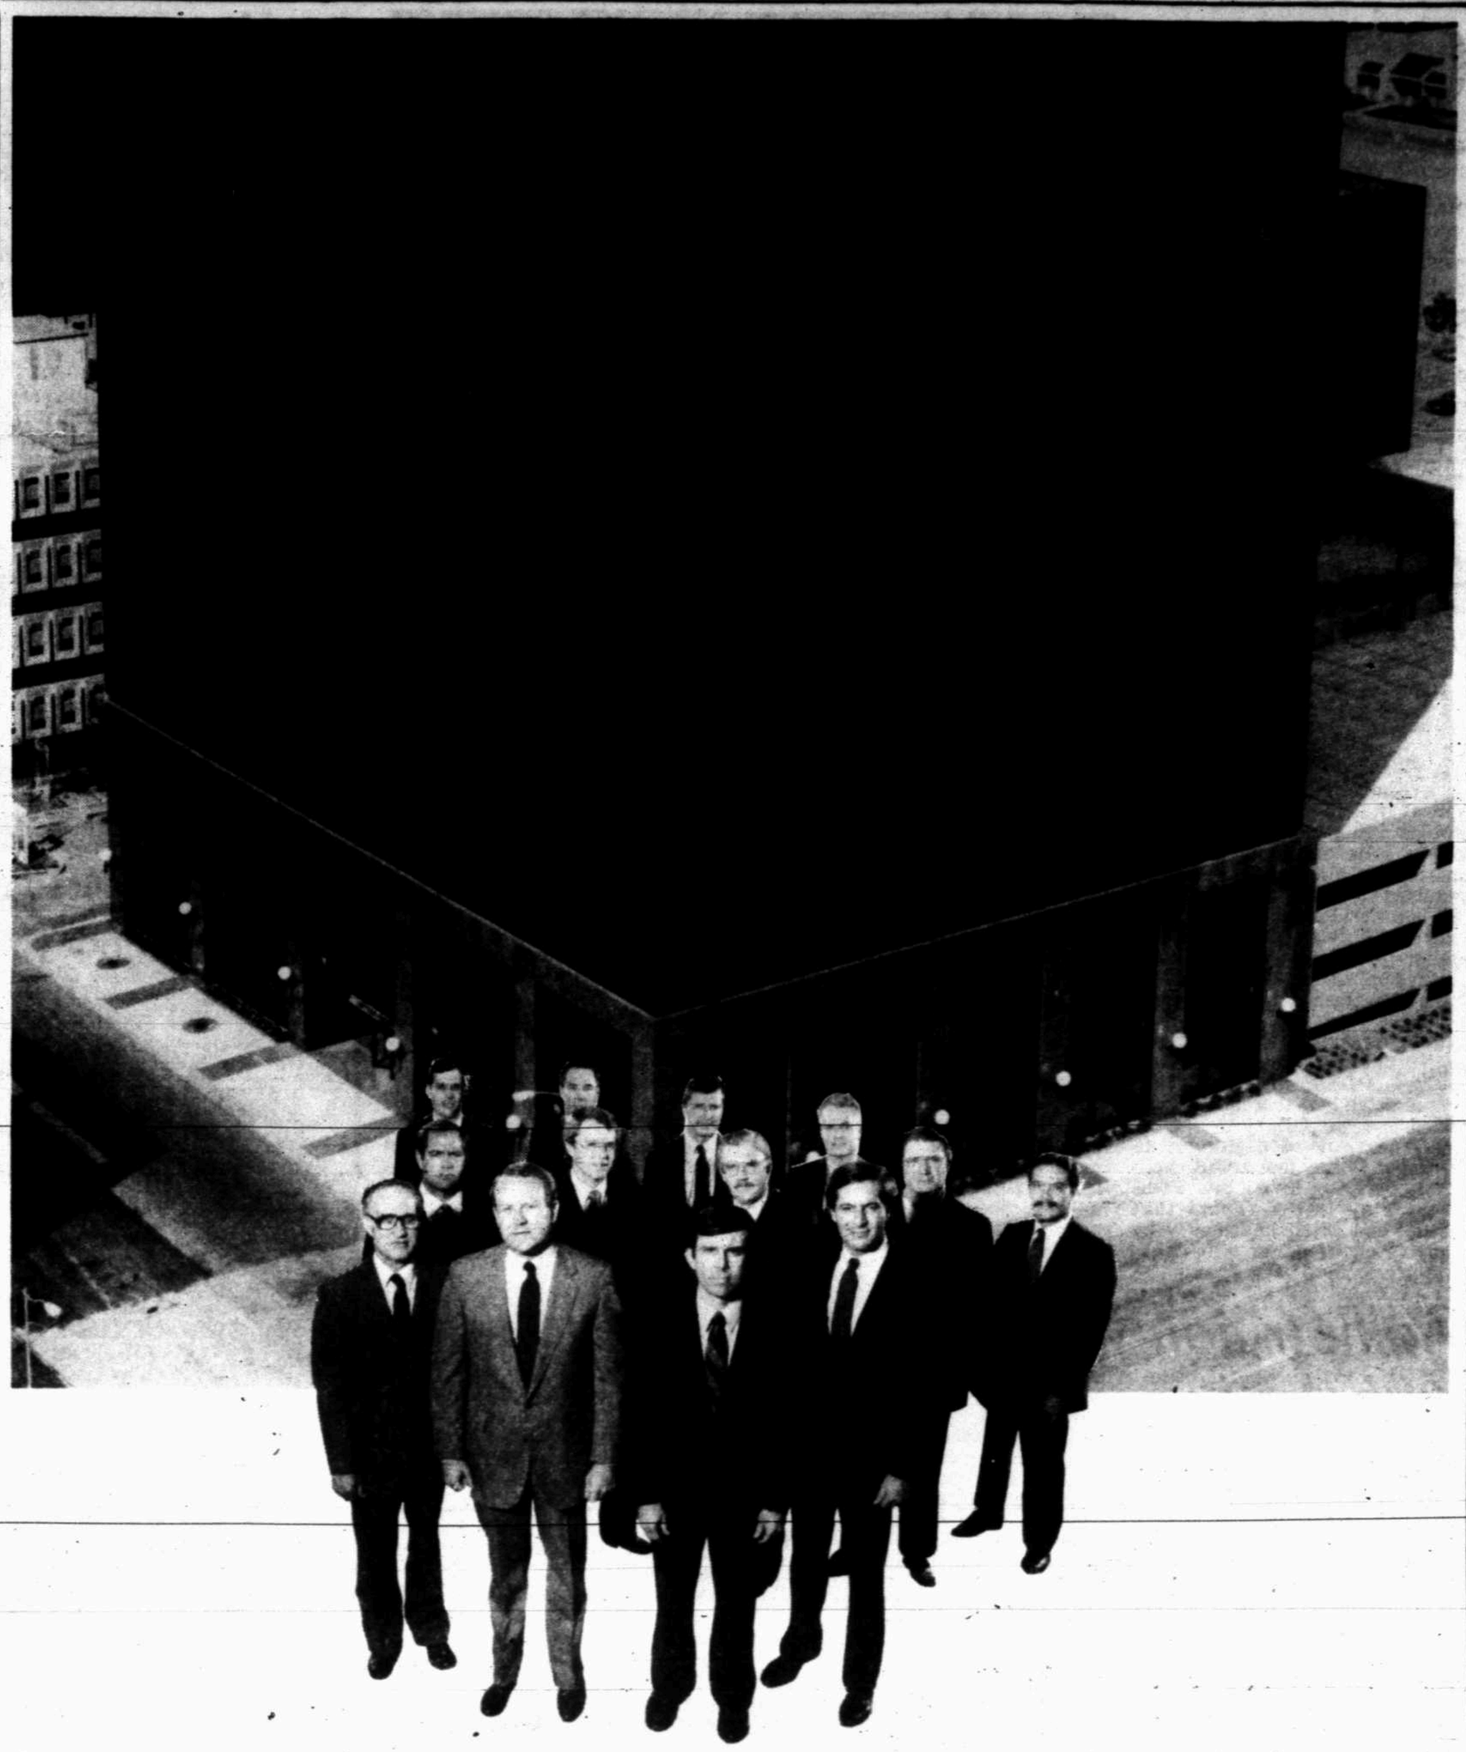

State law precludes aiding and abetting a suicide — a stance Riverside hospital officials used when Ms. Bouvia checked in there while seeking court permission to starve herself. On Dec. 17, she began fasting.

A Riverside County Superior Court judge refused her death wish — a decision that was upheld on subsequent appeal — and Ms. Bouvia moved out of the hospital.

She entered another hospital in Tijuana, Mexico, and said in a published interview she had begun eating for the first time in seven months while deciding not to die. She later denied she had renounced her death wish.

On April 29 she moved into the home of Fred and Della Izzo in Hemet in Riverside County and continued eating. She has not resurfaced publicly since she left there several weeks later.

Her plight caused syndicated political columnist Jack Anderson to offer to help raise money to pay for spinal surgery, which some doctors thought would help her. Anderson said Scott refused to relay the offer to Ms. Bouvia. Scott, who is also a doctor, says she does not want surgery.

Abilene firefighters work to extinguish the burning wreckage of a pre-World War II De Havilland Chipmunk training aircraft after it crashed on the perimeter of Elmdale Airport, in northeast Abilene shortly before 3 p.m. Monday.
Sixty-one-year-old Jake E. Miller of Albany and his 19-year-old student, Kimberly Pardue of Breckenridge, were killed instantly.

Authorities investigating crash of vintage plane which killed two

ABILENE (AP) — Authorities were investigating the crash of a World War II vintage plane that burst into flames while attempting a spin, killing the wing leader of the West Texas branch of the Confederate Air Force and a passenger, officials said.

The two victims were identified at Jake Miller, 60, a flight instructor from Albany, and Kimberly Pardue, 19, of Breckenridge, said Abilene police Lt. Ron Harris.

He said the two were flying in a 1940 British-made aircraft when the accident occurred about 3 p.m. Monday at Elmdale Airport, a private airstrip located on the outskirts of Abilene.

Harris said Miss Pardue was sitting in the front seat and Miller in the back seat of the aircraft, a World War II British De Havilland Chipmunk.

The Federal Aviation Administration and the National Transportation Safety Board are investigating the cause of the crash, said Harris.

Glenn Lawrence and his son Tye Lawrence, who were mending a fence near the airport, said the plane was flying at a low altitude and attempting a roll when it went into a nosedive, crashed and burst into flames.

"At first, I thought he was just trying to do a spiral or something, then it looked like he just lost it," said the younger Lawrence. "I just saw the plane kind of start tumbling and then went into a nosedive and hit the ground."

He said the airplane began burning after it hit the ground.

The Confederate Air Force, a flying group, owned a plane that crashed on Oct. 13 in the Laguna Madre.

Prison board member defends right to hear inmate's complaints

AUSTIN (AP) — A state prison board member says if he had it to do over again, he would follow the same path in asking prison officials to give a lie detector test to an inmate who alleged he had been pressured to "make a case" against state Sen. Carl Parker.

Parker, 50, was indicted in September on charges of promoting prostitution, wholesale promotion of obscence materials and aggravated perjury.

The Port Arthur Democrat has pleaded innocent, and Houston lawyer Tom McDade, the board member, predicted Parker would be "vindicated."

McDade responded Monday to newspaper stories that board chairman Robert Gunn, Wichita Falls, was looking into a report that McDade had acted improperly by supplying questions for a lie detector test for inmate David Johnson.

Gunn was quoted as saying, "I consider it improper that board members deal directly with prisoners."

McDade, reading a prepared statement to the board, said the statement that board members are not supposed to meet with inmates is "absolutely ridiculous."

Gunn told the board Monday he would have no further comment.

McDade said he had met with Johnson, 29, who was Parker's client, after Parker told him Johnson wanted to talk to him.

McDade said Johnson, who was in the Jefferson County Jail, told him county law enforcement officials had offered to get him released from prison if he "would make a case on Parker." However, McDade said that according to Johnson, if he failed to do so, he could plan on spending his full prison term with no hope of parole.

Attempts to reach Jefferson County District Attorney Jim McGrath were unsuccessful, but an assistant, Paul McWilliams, has denied that McGrath threatened Johnson. McWilliams said Johnson's probation on marijauna charges was revoked in October 1983, and he was sentenced to 10 years in prison.

McDade said he "found Johnson's story hard to believe," but called then-acting prison director Dan "Red" McCaskle after Johnson demanded "to be allowed to take a polygraph test to prove the truthfulness of his claims."

The test, McDade said, "consisted simply of the questions" contained in a prior sworn affidavit. "Inmate Johnson's answers to the questions were 'truthful,'" he said.

Several months later, after receiving more reports of complaints by Johnson, McDade said he reported to the U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of Texas.

Malnutrition wipes out TB innoculations

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Mass innoculations against tuberculosis apparently failed in India in 1968 because the vaccine is ineffective in people who have poor diets, a researcher said.

Tests performed by Texas A&M University researchers showed that malnutrition wipes out the BCG vaccine's ability to protect against tuberculosis, said Dr. David McMurray, an immunologist.

McMurray said tuberculosis kills about 5 million people a year and infects another 20 million. About 30,000 cases are reported in the United States each year, 10 percent of which are reported in Texas.

In the tests at Texas A&M, undernourished guinea pigs were exposed to tubercle bacteria, McMurray said in an article released by Texas A&M on Monday. He said he found malnourished animals received no more protection from the BCG vaccine than unvaccinated animals.

"In three separate experiments, we recently confirmed that in test animals, malnutrition abolished almost completely any protection offered by BCG vaccine against tuberculosis," McMurray said. "Even at the lowest levels of exposure, there was no protection at all," McMurray said.

Studies performed by McMurry and Dr. Mirta Carlomagno showed a high-protein, high-zinc diet can restore the protection offered by the vaccine after about two weeks.

But, McMurray warned "it's not very practical to put everyone on a nutritious diet just before you innoculate them."

"So we will now try to study what happens immunologically at the cellular level in hopes that we may uncover some techniques to boost BCG vaccine protection among the malnourished, especially in developing nations where tuberculosis is a major problem," he said.

Boy Scouts take calls from worried parents

IRVING (AP) — The national headquarters of the Boy Scouts of America has been deluged with telephone calls from worried parents across the country who fear their sons were exposed to the toxic chemical dioxin.

"We've gotten hundreds of calls," said Audrey Clough, assistant director of communications for the Scouts. "We're telling them what the Army has told us, that there doesn't seem to be any cause for alarm."

The calls follow reports that about 32,000 Scouts had been exposed to the chemical during a 1981 jamboree at an Army base in Virginia.

Scout officials and Army personnel said they are still trying to determine the extent of possible exposure to the tainted soil around a storage shed at Fort A.P. Hill in northern Virginia.

So far, studies by the Army indicate the contamination was confined to an area of 100-by-100 feet around the small shed, where the herbicide Silvex was stored until 1978.

No scouts were camped closer than 150 feet to the shed area, and many more were more than a mile away, Ms. Clough said.

However, she conceded, "We don't know where everyone was every minute," and Scouts roamed their campsites freely during the jamboree.

Army spokesman Lt. Col. Miguel Monteverde told The Dallas Morning News the shed was fenced off during the jamboree.

"Based on what we know right now, the worst contamination occurred directly underneath the building," he said. "Clearly there were no Boy Scouts crawling below the shed."

Some adult Scout officials were housed nearer to the storage shed, Monteverde said, but they slept on cots on wooden elevated platforms.

"If there was any contamination, it was probably on the soles of peoples' shoes as they walked around," he said.

"This is not something that we want to pretend didn't happen. But based on our information, there is no need for anyone to go to a physician for any kind of examination."

Dioxin is a highly toxic chemical byproduct found in several herbicides no longer manufactured in the United States. It is the principal contaminant in Agent Orange, the herbicide to which thousand of American service personnel were exposed during the Vietnam War.

Midland racer disputes story

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

A story in Monday's Dallas Morning News said that a spinout by Midland's Bobby Hillin Jr. may have been the cause of a spinout and crash by Terry Schoonover, which resulted in Schoonover's death in NASCAR's Atlanta Journal 500 race Sunday.

Hillin told the Reporter-Telegram Monday that he never touched Schoonover's car, and was in fact, behind Schoonover when the tragic wreck occured, claiming the life of the 32-year-old rookie driver.

"I don't know where the Dallas paper got its information, but it is totally wrong and I don't want the people of Midland thinking I was the cause of such a tragedy when it's not true," said Hillin.

Bill Gazaway, vice president of competition for NASCAR, pointed out that the Schoonover wreck was a single-car incident. He reported that Schoonover's Chevrolet Monte Carlo SS, "hit the outside wall coming out of the second turn on the 129th lap, slid across the track and slammed into the infield baking."

Hillin said, "Actually, I was coming out of Turn 2 behind Dick Brooks when the accident happened. I saw smoke about 200 yards ahead of us. Brooks and I both hit the brakes hard and one of my wheels locked up and while I was trying to avoid hitting Brooks, I spunout into the wall. Brooks made it through and never hit Schoonover either.

"Schoonover's accident put me out of the race. I didn't cause the accident," said Hillin. "I guess you could say I was in the aftermath of the wreck by Schoonover. It was quite apparent to me that something went wrong with Schoonover's car the way it dove into the wall."

The account run in the Dallas Morning News said, "The wreck occurred on the 129th lap when Bobby Hillin Jr.'s Chevrolet hit the backstretch wall and began spinning. Schoonover's car, which was behind Hillin's, hit the outside wall, careened across the backstretch and crashed into the inside of the retaining barrier in the third turn."

Hillin said, "I can see where the account may have come from because I've seen some of the TV coverage of the Schoonover wreck and some of the tape shows my car and Schoonover's down by the inside wall. But it was when Schoonover dived into the outer wall when his death surely came and I never touched his car even on the inside of the track. My car went down to the inside after hitting the outside wall too.

"When it all happened, I was really racing with Brooks. I was going to pass him when I saw the smoke from Schoonover's car out of Turn 2. I had passed Schoonover maybe five times during the race so Brooks and I weren't racing against him."

Schoonover was making his second Grand National start after his Oct. 21 debut at Rockingham, N.C., where he started 39th and finished 21st in the American 500. His death was the first driver fatality at a NASCAR Grand National event since Tiny Lund was killed in the 1975 Talladega 500.

Schoonover died of massive head and internal injuries at Grady Memorial Hospital in Atlanta. It was the first driver fatality in the 25-year history of the Atlanta International Raceway.

"It took 10 minutes for rescue crews to cut him out of the car," said Gazaway.

Hillin was credited for finishing 33rd in the race after qualifying 11th, his highest qualifying spot of the year on the NASCAR circuit.

Hillin is just two years removed from high school. He attended Midland High where he played football and also raced some NASCAR events while still in high school. He is considered as one of the fine young talents on the circuit.

"It looks right now like I may race the entire circuit next year. We have hired the engine man that A.J. Foyt had and he has us running very well. We had some chassis problems in the Atlanta event or we would have been running better.

"It just hurt me to see a story that I might have caused the accident by Schoonover. Several Midland people saw the story in the Dallas paper and called my dad about it. The story just isn't true."

Huskers back atop AP poll

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

The Nebraska Cornhuskers, who were No. 1 for three weeks earlier in the season, have regained the top spot in The Associated Press college football poll, while Washington slipped to eighth after four weeks at the top and Virginia cracked the Top Twenty for the first time in 32 years.

With seven members of last week's Top Twenty losing over the weekend there was considerable shuffling in this week's poll, with South Carolina and Brigham Young — the only remaining unbeaten teams — moving up to challenge Nebraska, Miami and Georgia dropping to the Second Ten and Iowa and West Virginia falling out of the Top Twenty.

The new poll raised the possibility of a 1-2 matchup between Nebraska and South Carolina in the Orange Bowl. However, Nebraska still must play Oklahoma — the Cornhuskers need only a tie Saturday to represent the Big Eight in Miami — while South Carolina has to play Navy and Clemson, both on the road.

While previously unbeaten Washington was losing to Southern California 16-7 — the victory vaulted the Trojans from 14th to seventh — Nebraska trounced Kansas 41-7 and climbed from second place to No. 1 with 37 of 59 first-place votes and 1,148 of a possible 1,-180 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters. The Cornhuskers are 9-1, having lost to Syracuse on Sept. 29.

South Carolina, 9-0, downed No. 11 Florida State 38-26 — the Gamecocks led 38-7 at one point en route to becoming the first team to win nine games in the school's 91-year football history — and shot from fifth to second with 11 first-place votes and 1,-104 points.

Texas' 29-15 loss to Houston dropped the Longhorns from third place to 10th and BYU, 10-0 after a 34-3 triumph over San Diego State, went from fourth to third. The Cougars received the other 11 first-place ballots and 1,096 points.

Oklahoma State defeated Missouri 31-13 and jumped from seventh to fourth with 949 points while Florida trimmed No. 8 Georgia 27-0 and shot from 10th to fifth with 892 points while the Bulldogs slipped to 15th.

Miami, sixth last week, blew a 31-0 halftime lead and lost to Maryland 42-40, the biggest comeback in major-college history. That dropped the Hurricanes from sixth to 14th while Oklahoma jumped from ninth to sixth with 870 points after whipping Colorado 42-17.

Southern Cal is seventh with 805 points, followed by Washington with 754. LSU rose from 12th to ninth with 693 points following a 16-14 victory over Alabama. Texas rounds out the Top Ten with 643 points.

The Second Ten consists of Ohio State, Texas Christian, Boston College, Miami, Georgia, Southern Methodist, Florida State, Auburn, Virginia and Clemson.

Last week, it was Florida State, LSU, Ohio State, Southern Cal, TCU, Boston College, SMU, Iowa, West Virginia and Auburn.

Iowa dropped out by losing to Michigan State 17-16, while West Virginia was beaten by Rutgers 23-19. Meanwhile, Virginia raised its record to 7-1-1 by routing North Carolina State 45-0 — the Cavaliers are unbeaten since losing their opener to Clemson 55-0 — and Clemson, which was No. 2 early in the season but hadn't been in the Top Twenty for six weeks, ran its winning streak to five games by defeating Virginia Tech 17-10.

Virginia's last appearance in the AP rankings was in 1952 when the Cavaliers were ninth in the next-to-last poll of the season. Since then, they have had winning records only in 1968 and 1979.

Shooting stuns Oregon campus

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) — The sniper-shooting death of world-class sprinter Chris Brathwaite at the University of Oregon has left his friends and fellow athletes stunned.

Brathwaite, 35, a two-time Olympian, was shot and killed Monday as he jogged along a trail near Autzen Stadium shortly after 8 a.m. PST.

A sniper armed with two high-powered rifles and dressed like he was "ready to go to war," opened fire at the stadium, witnesses told police.

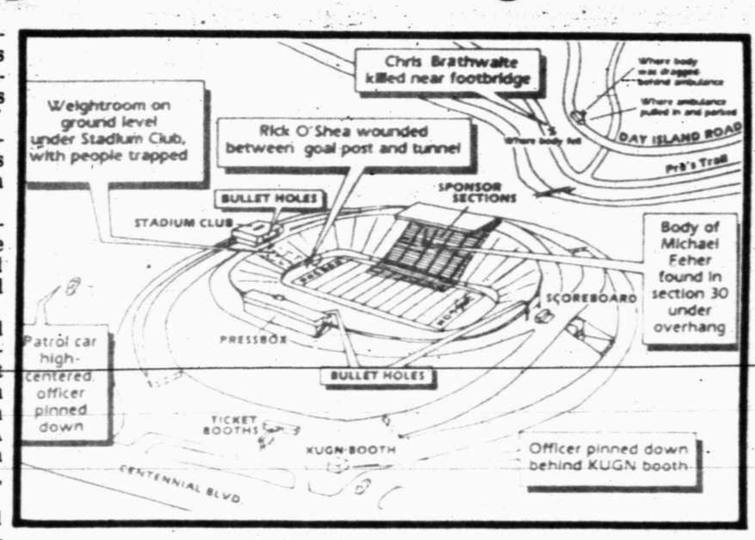

The sniper, identified as Michael E. Feher, 19, of Everett, Wash., a former University of Oregon student who was living on campus, then apparently shot himself to death shortly after 9 a.m., police said. A student wrestler standing outside a weight room also was wounded, although his injuries were minor.

Police Sgt. Eric Mellgren said Feher's body was found under a section of seats at the stadium.

Brathwaite "was known around the world as the grand old man of sprinting," said John McArdle, active with Brathwaite in track club events. "Chris was probably the most-traveled international athlete in Eugene."

Even though Brathwaite was "an incredibly private person," his death was having much the same impact on the community as that of Steve Prefontaine, McArdle said. Prefontaine, who set American and international records as a distance runner at the university, died in an auto accident in 1975.

"That same feeling, that shock factor, is floating through the athletic community," McArdle said. "All the people who are real athletes know Chris or know of him."

"What a shame, Chris was really a good man," said Bill Dellinger, Brathwaite's coach at the university. "It just comes as a real shocker. You'd see him out here rain or shine, and you don't find too many sprinters still out there at 35."

Brathwaite apparently was on a routine morning training jog when he was shot. No other joggers were on that section of the popular trail, which is used by hundreds of runners every day.

Apparently, no one but the sniper even saw Brathwaite go down. His body was not discovered until nearly three hours after the shots rang out. Marshall Wattles, a university professor, jogged into the area about 11 a.m. and noticed the body.

The shooting site is only a few hundred yards from Skipworth Juvenile Detention Center, where Brathwaite was a senior member of the staff. He had worked there as a combination jailer and social worker for nearly eight years and was scheduled to report to work at 3 p.m. Monday.

Paul Lenarduzzi, Skipworth administrator, described Brathwaite as "an exceedingly good worker, well thought of by the staff. He got along well with children. He was a man who could be fair and firm."

A "mini-Olympics" Brathwaite organized last summer was very popular with Skipworth's residents, Lenarduzzi said.

Seahawks hand Raiders third straight loss, 17-14

SEATTLE (AP) — When the Los Angeles Raiders' renowned prime time magic fails them, they better start worrying.

After their 17-14 setback Monday night against the opportunistic Seattle Seahawks, they have to be wondering if they're even going to make the National Football League playoffs this season — much less repeat as Super Bowl champions.

"We're 7-4," Raiders' Coach Tom Flores said. "Our backs are up against the wall with that kind of record."

The loss was just the third by the Raiders who have won 21 games and tied one in 25 nationally televised Monday night appearances.

It might not be the Raiders' year, quarterback Marc Wilson in reviewing the six-turnover disaster.

"I think we're snake bit a little bit," Wilson said after Seattle intercepted him three times in the fourth quarter following three earlier Raider fumbles. "We keep doing things that are self-destructive."

Ken Easley had two interceptions and John Harris got the other.

"We made too many mental malfunctions," said four-time Pro Bowl cornerback Lester Hayes, who was burned for two third-period touchdown passes. "We've been getting away with them for the eight seasons I've been with this team. Now, it's catching up with us."

The Seahawks won the kind of game the Raiders have always seemed to be able to pull out of the bag — especially on Monday nights. Seattle took advantage of its chances and posted its fifth straight victory to stand 9-2, a game behind Denver in the AFC West.

The Raiders suffered their third consecutive defeat for the first time since 1981.

"The Seahawks did a super job," said Raider defensive end Howie Long. "Chuck Knox is a super coach. It was an emotionally draining experience."

"These fans are the greatest in the world," Knox remarked about the incredibly loud Kingdome Seahawks' record crowd of 64,001, most of whom who were clad in white 'Raider Busters' T-shirts.

"The noise was a factor," Wilson admitted.

With Los Angeles leading 7-0 on Marcus Allen's 1-yard touchdown run in second period, Seattle quarterbackDave Krieg exploited Hayes in a 17-point third-quarter blitz.

After Norm Johnson kicked a 27-yard field goal that followed a Shelton Robinson recovery of Allen's fumble on the Raider 12, Krieg capped a pair of 63-yard drives with scoring passes of 8 yards to Byron Walker and 20 yards to rookie Daryl Turner.

"Lester is a bump-and-run type of defensive back," Turner said of Hayes. "Once you get by him, he puts his hand on you and pushes you out of bounds. If you can knock his hand away, he's in trouble."

The Raiders got back into the game when Allen scored on another 1-yard run 1:22 into the fourth quarter after Vann McElroy intercepted Krieg at the Seattle 27.

Then Seahawk tackle Joe Nash made the big defensive play of the game when he blocked a 45-yard game-tying field goal attempt by Chris Bahr with 4:26 remaining.

Nash, a 6-foot-3, 225-pound free agent from Boston College, broke through the middle to deflect Bahr's kick.

"I was lucky," Nash said.

Perhaps the Raiders were unlucky.

The block came after Krieg fumbled while scrambling and the Raiders' Bill Pickel recovered on the Seattle 25 with 5:54 left.

But the Raiders got one last chance — on their own 21 — with 1:02 left following a Seattle punt. But their last-gasp drive ended when Easley intercepted Wilson on the Seattle 23 on the game's last play.

One man's tongue-in-cheek is another man's foot-in-mouth

As if any state bi-district football playoff game needs any outside hype, Plainview Daily Herald sports editor John Walker is doing his best to keep things interesting.

In a column he wrote Sunday, Nov. 4, he tried to make a case that Lee isn't taking Plainview's Bulldogs seriously in the upcoming bi-district showdown.

His column stated, "To keep up with what the boys down in District 4-5A are saying, you'd think Midland Lee would be going up against a flag football team in the playoffs and not Plainview's Angry Red Bulldogs!"

He quoted Lee quarterback Dirk Bergoon as saying after Lee's loss to Permian, "it (the loss) doesn't matter anyway, because we'll play them again around December 7 after we win (our playoff games.)" And under some twisted kind of thinking, that's supposed to mean that Lee is looking past Plainview.

Walker also took one of my columns to help make his point by lifting out a fictitious quote from Lee head football coach Jack Tayrien.

Walker's column read, "Even Tayrien has gotten into the act...In last Tuesday's Midland Reporter-Telegram, assistant sports editor Terry Williamson quotes the Lee boss...'we aren't worried about Plainview...'"

Any Midlander who read that column of mine could surely see that everything that was attributed to Tayrien was from the lone mind of this corner. I'm sure that was one column that was not misunderstood because I received no mail about the flighty little column that tried to show that Lee hadn't clinched a playoff berth and didn't need to be thinking about Plainview since there was a key game to consider against Odessa High.

"I can't believe that he (Walker) would lift that comment right out of context," said Tayrien. "Of course, I didn't say any of those things in that column, but if he (Walker) had just used the whole sentence, it would have ruined his story. The rest of the quote said that it's Bronchos we need to think about and not Plainview.

"I've talked with Dirk (Bergoon) and he doesn't remember saying anything like what came out in Plainview."

Walker claims that the quote came out of the Reporter-Telegram. It may have, but I can't find it. Whether Bergoon said it or not makes little difference. Why shouldn't Lee look forward to meeting Permian again in the playoffs like last year? Certainly that should be a goal. That has little to do with the fact that Plainview is the first step in an overall goal of playing for a state championship. Surely, Plainview is playing for the same goal, so does that mean Plainview is looking past Lee? Of course not.

The column by Walker also caught Plainview coach Greg Sherwood by surprise.

"Quite frankly, the column embarrassed me a bit," said Sherwood. "I wish people who write those kind of things would have to get out here and play the game.

"I told John that I didn't think the column was right. I know Jack wouldn't say anything like that. And being logical, I can see why Lee would want to meet with Permian again. That should be something they are shooting for. Shoot, I saw the Permian-Lee game film and Lee dominated them for the better part of a half."

There is little need to hype this contest. Both teams know what is at stake and both will be at Jones Stadium Friday night with one thing in mind - to win. One will be a loser and that's part of playoff life in Texas.

By the way, Sherwood is one of the most respected coaches in the state. He has coached for 26 years and is the president-elect of the Texas High School Coaches Association.

Youngest NBA team finds struggle to keep pace

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

The Indiana Pacers are the youngest team in pro basketball.

How young are they?

They are so young that all the years of experience added together on their opening-night roster added to 12, three fewer years of National Basketball Association experience than the Los Angeles Lakers' Kareem Abdul-Jabbar.

The Pacers, whose 26-56 record last season was the worst in the league, opened the 1984-85 campaign with an average of a fraction over one year of experience per player. The oldest player on the team is guard Jerry Sichting, a grizzled veteran of four NBA years. He will reach the grand old age of 28 this month.

"It's been quite a turnaround since I was a rookie," said Sichting. "No one on the team when I got here is still here."

On most teams, Sichting would be in the middle of the experience ladder. With the Pacers, he's the captain and is called upon by his teammates for advice and counsel.

"My role on the court is to be a point guard, who has to be in control anyway, so it's no problem being the elder statesman," said the 6-foot-1 Sichting, who can be a deadly shooter when open but is hindered by his lack of size. "But in a lot of ways this feels like a college team.

"It's hard to believe that 11 rookies have made this team the last two years. It's hard to get better when you have that many young players coming in. But I think we'll be better than last season."

The Pacers have lost six of their first seven games, but four of the defeats have been by one or two points.

This year's rookie crop included Olympian Vern Fleming of Georgia, NCAA scoring leader Devin Durrant of Brigham Young, Tony Brown of Arkansas, Stuart Gray and Ralph Jackson of UCLA, and Terence Stansbury of Temple.

Fleming and Stansbury were first-round draft choices, although Stansbury was selected by Dallas and later traded to the Pacers. Gray and Durrant were second-rounders, while Jackson, who was released Friday, was taken in the fifth round.

Surprisingly, the only rookie who has started every game is Brown, a 6-6 forward who was drafted in the sixth round by New Jersey in 1982 and spent one year with the Ohio Mixers of the Continental Basketball Association. He didn't play last season, returning to Arkansas to work on his undergraduate business degree.

He was one of 30 free agents invited to a "Walter Mitty" camp and he impressed the coaches enough to make the Pacers' Summer League team. He averaged 14.4 points per game in the summer league and has played some good games in the young NBA season.

In a three-game stretch last week, Brown hit 28 of 41 field goal attempts and scored 68 points.

"I told everyone in training camp I didn't care where they were drafted, they had a chance to make the team if they showed ability and hustle," said first-year Coach George Irvine, 36, who fits the theme of youth on the team. "We wanted to go with the players who would work hard, play with enthusiasm and have the potential to improve.

"But it wasn't by design that we would be this young. It's just the guys who played the hardest were the youngest. I have nothing against experience. It helps to have maturity and these players will get better with maturity."

The nucleus of the team is its front line. Forward Clark Kellogg, who missed the first five games with a knee injury, pushed Terry Cummings for NBA Rookie of the Year honors in 1982-1983 and three-year veteran forward Herb Williams has showed promise of improving.

Second-year center Steve Stipanovich justified his No. 2 draft status last season, although he had none of the impact of Ralph Sampson of the Houston Rockets.

But Irvine said the strength of the team is its attitude.

"We play hard every night, although we don't always play well," he said.

"They're like a bunch of college kids who don't know the word quit," said New Jersey center Mike Gminski.

Spartans OK new complex

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — The Michigan State University Board of Trustees unanimously voted Monday night to build a $38 million sports complex that includes a $30 million basketball arena.

The program would place MSU's recreational, intramural and intercollegiate athletic programs "among the best in the nation," university President Cecil Mackey said in a statement.

It was approved by the eight-member board despite protests from student leaders over tentative proposals to finance it largely from student fee increases.

A university fiscal expert said financing the program could add $2 or $2.50 per credit hour to students' financial load.

The program includes:

—A 15,500-seat basketball arena which would also be used for concerts, commencements and other activities. The arena, to be located near aging Jenison Field House, the current home of Spartan cagers, is tentatively slated to be completed for the 1987-88 season.

—A $3.8 million indoor football practice field, to be attached to the new Duffy Daugherty football building near Spartan Stadium.

—A $1.2 million six-court indoor tennis facility, to be located on the south edge of campus.

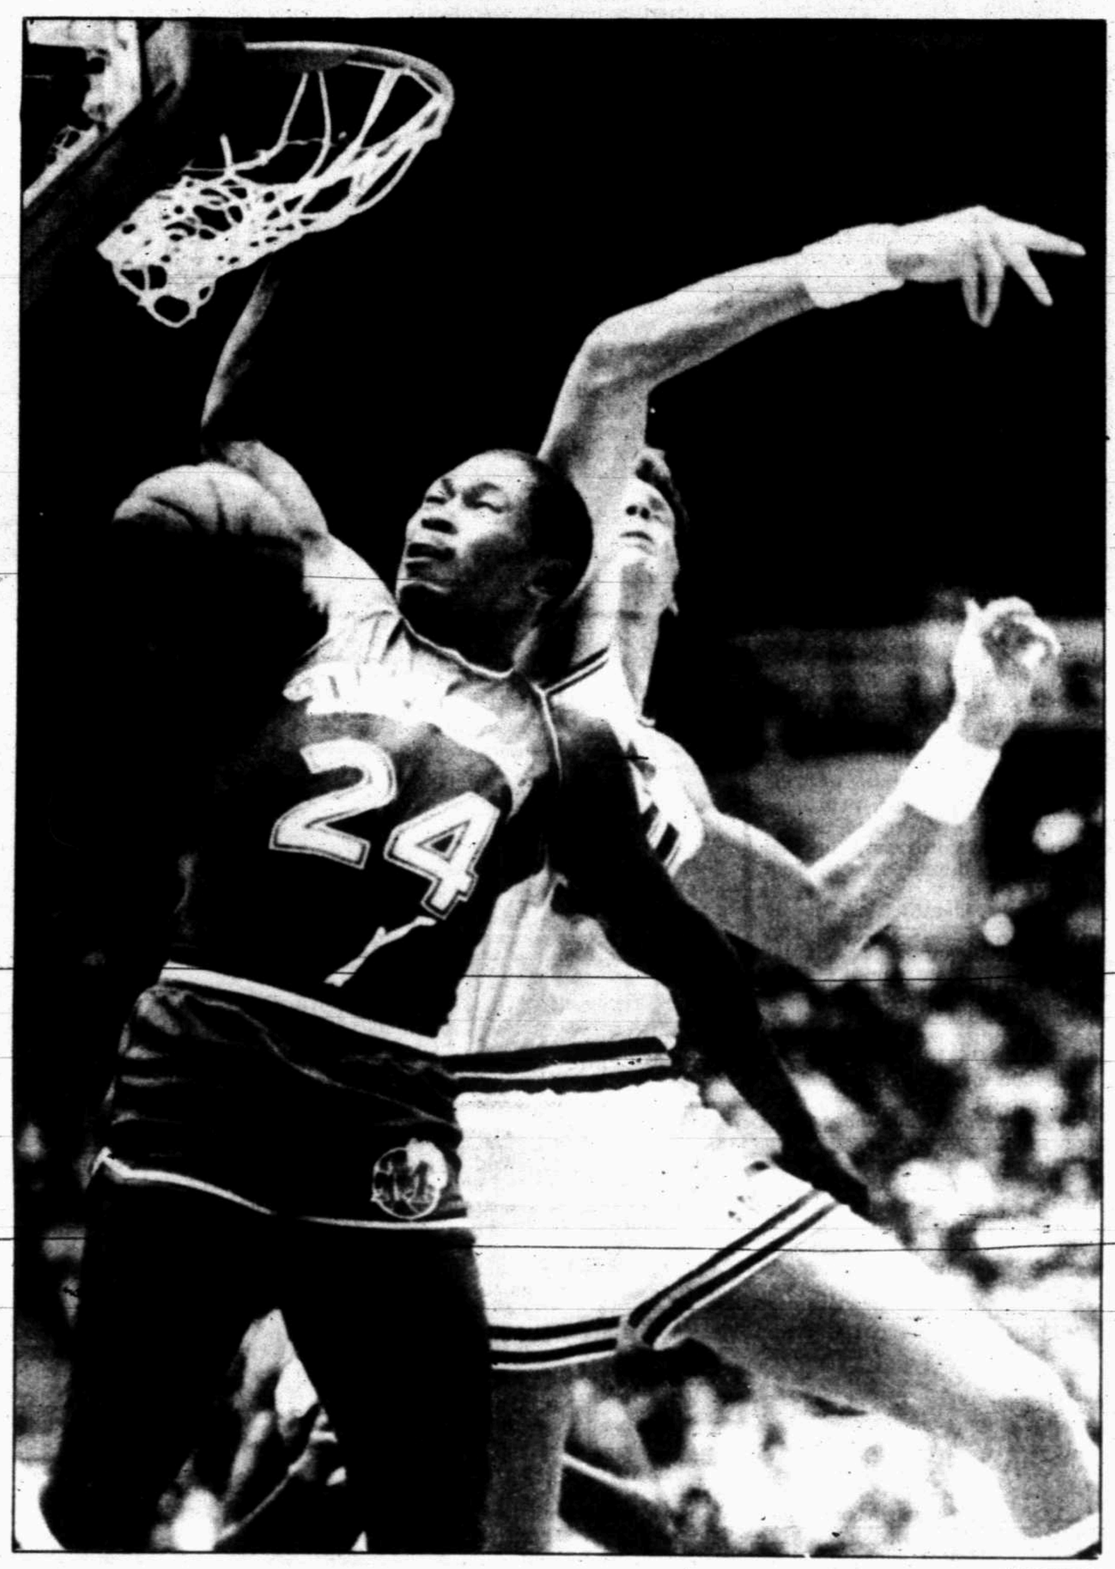

—About $3 million in renovation for Jenison, built in 1939. However, Mackey said some of the money may be used instead for a new intramural building on the east side of campus, closer to several large dormitories.

The plan tentatively calls for $3.3 million to come from athletic program revenues, $1 million from a golf club trust fund and more than $33 million from a pledge against student fees. But both architectural design and development of financing plans still need approval.

Critics have complained that Jenison is badly outdated and has handicapped MSU basketball recruiting efforts. It has a capacity of only 10,004, and is one of the oldest field houses in the nation.

The project was enthusiastically embraced by the trustees, who first voiced preliminary support for it Oct. 5.

"This is a very important thing to the university," said Trustee Peter Fletcher of Ypsilanti. He called it "consistent with the long-range goals and the things we want to achieve for this university."

Celtics rally by Pacers, 132-115

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Boston Coach K.C. Jones thought the offense looked familiar. But he wasn't used to seeing it performed by players in gold uniforms.

The Indiana Pacers took a page out of the Celtic playbook in the first half Monday night, but the Celtics snatched it back after intermission and rolled to a 132-115 National Basketball Association victory.

"We forgot to look around on defense and all of a sudden, Indiana was killing us with the fast break, making the outside shot and grabbing the offensive rebounds," Jones said in assessing Indiana's 40-28 second-quarter spurt.

"They were flying and beating us at our game. They were teaching us about the fast break," Jones added.

Larry Bird, who led all scorers with 29, sparked Boston to a 16-point lead in the second quarter. But rookie Vern Fleming came off the bench to fire an Indiana spurt that tied the game three times in the third quarter.

That's when Robert Parish and Dennis Johnson went to work, igniting a spurt that gave the defending world champs their sixth victory in seven starts.

Parish, who made eight of 10 shots from the field, scored 11 of his 18 points in the third quarter as Boston took control.

"We talked about creating the situations to get the ball inside to Parish at halftime," said Jones. "He had only three shots in that first half and that's not our offense."

Parish had seven of his points as Boston, which never trailed, scored 13 unanswered points to take control.

"The key in the second half was we kept them off the boards and stopped them from getting two or three shots and we start getting inside on offense," said Parish. "That opened it up outside."

"Once the Pacers got down, they started gambling," said Johnson, who contributed 24 points. "I would like to think it was our experience and their youth. They started doubling up and we just hit the open man."

Bird, who had 23 of his points in the first half, led Boston with nine rebounds and five assists.

"I thought they were more aggressive. They came out and banged people around," said Indiana Coach George Irvine, whose club lost for the seventh time in eight starts this season. "They set the tempo of the game and it took us a while to respond."

Herb Williams' 20 points led seven Indiana scorers in double figures, and Fleming added 17.

Hot Jazz gives Mavs the blues

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — It's still going to take 1½-2 weeks for Adrian Dantley to feel really right, the Jazz forward said after scoring 32 points in 29 minutes as Utah leveled Dallas 123-97 in National Basketball Association play.

"You know when your stuff isn't right," said Dantley. "You've got to get your timing. One time, I made a move and my leg gave out."

Monday night's game was Dantley's first as a starter this season. He returned to the team Thursday after staying out six weeks in a contract dispute, and he played in games Friday and Saturday.

Dantley and the other starters sat on the bench during the fourth period and watched the reserves blow the game open.

The Jazz, outscoring the Mavericks 42-32 in the quarter, were led by a combination of John Drew, Jeff Wilkins, Billy Paultz, Bobby Hansen and rookie John Stockton.

"We were cheering for them just like they cheer for us," said center Mark Eaton.

The loss left Dallas with a record of 5-5 in the Midwest Division, while Utah improved its mark to 5-4 in the same division.

"The whole game was over in five minutes," said Dallas Coach Dick Motta. "Our people didn't look very enthused out there tonight. We looked lethargic. There was nothing happening on defense against Dantley.

"We didn't even go to the hoop well enough to draw free throws. We were only at the line 13 times tonight."

Jazz Coach Frank Layden said, "The score was not an indication of our rivalry with Dallas. I think it will be the Jazz and the Mavericks right up on top in the Midwest Division."

Darrell Griffith and Drew wound up with 14 points for the Jazz. Thurl Bailey and Wilkins finished with 12 each.

The Dallas scoring was led by rookie Sam Pekins, who finished with 19 points.

Dale Ellis and Rolando Blackman added 14 each.

Dantley scored 12 points in the first quarter to pace Utah to a 31-21 advantage. The Jazz scored seven points in the first five minutes off fast breaks resulting from three shots blocked by Eaton.

"That just kind of got us standing and shooting from outside," Motta said.

"At least they have to start thinking about me a little bit," Eaton said.

Utah improved its advantage to 54-35 at halftime and Dantley added another 12 in the third period, but the Mavericks managed to trim their deficit to 16 points, 81-65, going into the final period.

With all of the starters resting, the Utah reserves went on a tear, and after just five minutes were 28 points up, 101-73. All Dallas could do was take desperation shots the rest of the way.

Holiday Bowl scrambles for teams

By WAYNE LOCKWOOD
Copley News Service

At this point, John Reid is certain of one thing: Nothing is certain.

Mamas, don't raise your boys to run bowl games.

As executive director of the Holiday Bowl, Reid is accustomed to unsettled Novembers, when America's post-season collegiate football attractions elbow one another in an attempt to harvest the best of the season's crop.

Uncertainty goes with the territory. It is no job for those who crave immediate, clear-cut answers. But even among executives hardened to the craft, this has proven to be an unusually confusing autumn.

As last weekend approached, matters appeared to be sorting themselves out at last.

"There are essentially six teams competing for five spots in the major bowls," Reid said. "We hope to be able to pick off the odd team."

Then Maryland beat Miami, Michigan State beat Iowa, Houston beat Texas, USC beat Washington, and it was back to the drawing board.

"It's confusing," Reid said of the revised situation. "What happened last weekend muddied the waters a lot."

Just how murky the picture has become may be judged in the number of games Holiday Bowl scouts will be attending this weekend. Normally, the attraction would have reduced its options to one or two teams by this point.

But the Holiday Bowl will be represented at six games Saturday: Nebraska-Oklahoma, Ohio State-Michigan, Washington-Washington State, Arkansas-Texas A&M, Oklahoma State-Iowa State and Tennessee-Mississippi.

Will an opponent for Brigham Young University, which has an automatic berth as Western Athletic Conference champion, come out of that bunch? Who knows. Tune in next week.

In years past, confused or not, bowl games would be scrambling to issue invitations on the third Saturday of November. But the signing date has been set back a week this year, a move that will give bowls a clearer idea of what they are up to.

Some circumstances are already established, of course. The Big Ten champion will play the Pac-10 champion in the Rose Bowl. The Big Eight champion will play in the Orange Bowl.

"Right now, you hear it will be Nebraska-South Carolina in the Orange Bowl for the national championship," said Reid.

That makes sense. Once-beaten Nebraska and unbeaten South Carolina are ranked one-two in this week's Associated Press poll.

However, Nebraska still must get past Oklahoma and South Carolina faces fierce intra-state rival Clemson. What happens if one, or both, lose?

"Who knows?" said Reid.

The Holiday Bowl executive believes that Boston College is headed to the Sugar Bowl, although the Eagles already have lost twice and still must face Miami. "They're such a television attraction (with Heisman Trophy candidate Doug Flutie), it doesn't matter," Reid said.

The rest of the puzzle remains unassembled.

The Holiday Bowl owns an unusual bargaining chip this year in unbeaten BYU. The Cougars are ranked third nationally this week and could reluctantly be voted No. 1 should Nebraska and South Carolina lose.

If that happens, the road to the national championship might lead to San Diego. A once-beaten, highly ranked team could move up to No. 1 by beating the team in that spot. However, it would earn only $470,000 for its trouble, as opposed to, say, the $1 million per team available in the Fiesta Bowl.

"Every indication is that money is still the prime consideration," Reid said.

So he continues to pore over each Saturday's results like a man with a parlay card.

It hurt last week when Michigan State beat Iowa, because it probably knocked Iowa out of the Rose Bowl picture. Had the Hawkeyes gone to Pasadena, Ohio State might have been a Holiday Bowl candidate. Iowa, no matter what, is not, due to the school's exam schedule.

It hurt when USC beat Washington to earn a Rose Bowl bid. The Trojans, with two losses, might have come to the Holiday Bowl. The Huskies, with one, are more likely to opt for the Fiesta.

Originally, it appeared damaging when Maryland beat Miami, because it probably knocked the Hurricanes out of a major bowl spot, their ownership of which might have freed another highly ranked team for Holiday Bowl duty. "But it also might put Miami in our picture," noted Reid.

Houston beating Texas assisted the Holiday Bowl two ways — enabling BYU to move past the Longhorns in the polls and endangering Texas's Cotton Bowl spot and thus thrusting the Horns into the open market.

Most closely watched of this week's games will be Nebraska-Oklahoma and Ohio State-Michigan.

"If Oklahoma loses, they might come into our picture (with two losses)," said Reid.

"If Michigan beats Ohio State, both teams become (Holiday Bowl) possibilities. If Ohio State wins, neither team is."

That's because the Buckeyes would be headed to the Rose Bowl and Michigan would have too many losses (five) to be a viable post-season team.

The Holiday Bowl is more attractive to Big Ten schools than others because of a quirky conference rule. Any Big Ten team playing in a bowl in which the payoff is less than $750,000 is permitted to keep the entire sum. Any reward above that level must be shared with the other nine conference members.

It will be at least another week before we know how these permutations and combinations sort themselves out.

"Usually, by now you kind of have a feeling about where things are going," said Reid. "But this has been an unusual year.

"I do feel, though, that our chances of getting a top 15 team (to oppose BYU) are good, I really do. I can't predict how that will work out. It's kind of a seat-of-the-pants feeling. But I think it will."

Seat-of-the-pants or kick-in-the-pants. In these confusing days, those seem to be the options if you're a bowl director.

Rockets defense tops NBA

By The Associated Press

The Houston Rockets, with their skyscraper duo of 7-4 Ralph Sampson and 7-0 Akeem Olajuwon, lead the National Basketball Association in defense through the first two weeks of the season.

The Rockets, the NBA's only unbeaten team, allowed only 95.6 points per contest in running up a perfect 7-0 record going into tonight's game with the Cleveland Cavaliers.

Dallas has the league's fifth-best defense, yielding 105.1 points per game. San Antonio is 15th at 114.6 points a contest.

Offensively, the San Antonio Spurs are fifth (117.9 ppg), the Rockets 15th (109.3), and the Dallas Mavericks 20th (102.7) out of the NBA's 23 clubs.

San Antonio has three players and Dallas two among the individual leaders through Sunday's games. Houston is not represented among the top 20 in scoring or the top 10 in rebounding, assists or field goal percentage.

The Spurs' Artis Gilmore is the NBA's second-leading rebounder with 13.8 per game, runnerup to Moses Malone of Philadelphia, who has 15.3 caroms per game. Dallas' Jay Vincent is ninth with 10.6 per game.

Gilmore is the leader in field goal accuracy with 65.2 percent. San Antonio's Johnny Moore is third in assists with 9.3 a game. Isiah Thomas of Detroit leads the league with 11.6 assists per contest.

The Spurs' George Gervin is 12th and the Mavericks' Mark Aguirre 13th in scoring. Gervin was averaging 24.6 points and Aguirre 24.3. Vincent was 18th in scoring with 21.7 points per contest. The NBA's scoring leader through Sunday was Denver's Alex English, who was hitting at 32.1 points a game.

Oilers face week with winning perspective

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Oilers Coach Hugh Campbell says the Oilers have made strides this season similar to the game against the Kansas City Chiefs — it just hadn't showed on the scoreboard.

Campbell, with the same understated manner he maintained when his team lost its first 10 games, tried to put Sunday's 17-16 victory into proper perspective Monday.

"Obviously, it was very important because it was a win, but from an academic standpoint, it wasn't any more significant than some of the other steps we've taken," Campbell said.

The Oilers ended their National Football League record of road losses at 23 in a row but Campbell doesn't want his players to think they've turned the corner.

Larry Moriarty became the first Oiler running back other than Earl Campbell to gain 100 yards in a game since 1980 with 117 yards on 29 carries.

Canadiens skate past Canucks

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — The Montreal Canadiens found out last season how important it is to win on the road in the National Hockey League. The club is determined to do just that this season.

The Canadiens won only 16 of 40 regular-season road games last year, but rebounded to win four of five road contests in the playoffs.

"It's important to be able to win on the road. We proved that in the playoffs last spring," Montreal center Bobby Smith said Monday night after the Canadiens' 5-3 victory at Vancouver over the Canucks.

Mark Hunter scored what proved to be the deciding goal in the second period, when he deflected rookie Mike McPhee's shot past Vancouver goalie Frank Caprice at 12:42 of the second period.

Vancouver trimmed the deficit to 4-3 when Stan Smyl, who had assisted on two earlier goals, scored his sixth goal of the season at 17:07 of the second. Held to 15 shots in the first two periods, the Canucks fired 12 at Montreal goalie Steve Penney in the third stanza but came away empty.

Montreal got its final goal with eight seconds to play when Mats Naslund slid the puck into an empty Vancouver net.

"It was a good, solid win, really pleasing considering how hard the Canucks played," said Smith. "We're not a team that scores a lot of goals, so any time we get four or five we've got a good chance to win."

Pierre Mondou, Mario Tremblay and Smith also had goals for Montreal, which moved one point ahead of Boston in the Adams Division standings.

Vancouver, which has won only two of its 16 games this season, slipped further into the cellar in the Smythe Division, seven points back of Los Angeles.

Islanders face psychology test

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP) — What's wrong with the New York Islanders?

The team which dominated the National Hockey League from 1980-83, winning four straight Stanley Cups before being dethroned by Edmonton last spring, is playing mediocre hockey. They have the next-to-worst defensive record in the league. Their goaltending has been spotty, their checking atrocious and their consistency non-existent.

Yet this is a club which won championships because of its defense, its goaltending and its consistency. Other than the fast start by Mike Bossy, Brent Sutter and John Tonelli — currently the NHL's highest-scoring line — the Isles have more to worry about than to brag about.

"It's been a weird season so far," said Islanders Coach Al Arbour, who may be wondering why he didn't opt for retirement after considering it during the summer. "So many things have happened to us this season. We've had all the injuries. ... We've had all these shootouts. ... We get two guys hurt in practices two days in a row.

"We've got to be tough enough to withstand it and I think we'll be a tougher, better team down the line."

They'd better be if they hope to return to the top. True, the Islanders are without injured star center Bryan Trottier and conservative defenseman Ken Morrow, who won't be back until February after corrective knee surgery. But Bossy, who is off to the fastest start in his superb seven-plus seasons with the team, wo't use that as an excuse.

"We can't have a defeatist attitude," Bossy said. "We've always been a team that relies heavily on the guys who are dressed. We've made up for the other guys who can't play. You have to play with what you have.

"At the beginning of the season we were lousy. Now we're inconsistent. I think the next level will be great hockey — hockey the way we're capable of playing. But it's been frustrating trying to get back to that level."

The most obvious problem is the defense, which is yielding too many good shots by the opposition. Morrow certainly is missed and youngsters Gord Dineen and Gerald Diduck have struggled. But veterans Tomas Jonsson, Stefan Persson and Dave Langevin haven't been particularly effective. Only Denis Potvin and third-year defenseman Paul Boutilier have approached top form.

The forwards have been caught in too many shootouts because they seem to be concentrating more on attacking than checking. And only the Bossy-Sutter-Tonelli line is producing with any regularity.

"This is not a team built to win games 7-6 or 8-5," says Tonelli. "We're at our best in tight-checking, low-scoring games."

There hasn't been one of those all season.

Finally, the three-man goaltending rotation seems to have hurt the performances of all three netminders. Billy Smith, the backbone of the four Stanley Cup victories, sat out the first nine games while management closely watched Rollie Melanson and Kelly Hrudey. Neither stood out and Smith has looked rusty in his limited action.

General Manager Bill Torrey was hoping one of the young goalies would play his way into the lineup so that the other could easily be traded. Now, it would appear Torrey's strategy has backfired. Neither Hrudey nor Melanson has as much market value as he did prior to the season.

"I see we're working hard and we go out and play outstanding hockey in periods," says Potvin, the team captain. "It's strange what's happening and that's why it's worrisome. We can't find exactly what it is that's wrong, what to concentrate on improving."

They might start by considering everything.

Coetzee injury won't delay fight

From Wire Reports

BOXING — The oft-injured right hand of Gerrie Coetzee is hurting again, but it won't keep the World Boxing Association champion from his title fight Dec. 1 against American Greg Page.

Coetzee sprained his right thumb during a sparring session Monday. Dr. Clive Noble, the medical officer for the South African Boxing Board of Control, examined the hand Monday and said it was a "common boxing injury."

Noble told Coetzee to stop sparring for a week but to continue other training.

There was "a bit of swelling, but there is no reason for him to postpone the fight," Noble said. "It's more mental than anything else. He's had so much hand trouble before that this is fairly minor."

Coetzee said his "thumb is sore and stiff."

Noble said another specialist, Dr. Andre Boonzaier, also examined Coetzee Monday and agreed there was no need to delay the bout, set for Sun City. Boonzaier has operated on the hand several times since 1975, putting in steel pins to repair broken bones.

FOOTBALL — Jim Johnson, former assistant head coach at Notre Dame, has accepted a job as defensive coordinator for the Jacksonville Bulls, the United States Football League team has announced.

Johnson, who was also defensive coordinator with the now-defunct Oklahoma Outlaws, spent seven seasons at Notre Dame before being named assistant head coach there in 1983. He was also defensive coordinator at Indiana and Drake and head coach at Missouri Southern Junior College.

"Jim has professional experience," Bulls Coach Lindy Infante said Monday. "He is familiar with the league, and he comes from an excellent coaching background."

A Portland television station said the owner of the Breakers of the United States Football League has decided to move the team to Portland.

KOIN-TV reported that the decision would be announced by Breakers owner Joe Canizaro at a news conference here Tuesday afternoon.

HOCKEY — Wayne Gretzky of the Edmonton Oilers, who has had a monopoly on National Hockey League Player of the Week selections in recent years, received the honor for the first time this season, the league announced.

Gretzky captured the award after figuring in 14 of the Oilers' 19 goals for the week ending Nov. 11. Gretzky had five goals and added nine assists as he opened up an 11-point bulge over Mike Bossy of the New York Islanders in the individual scoring race, which he is attempting to win for the fifth straight season...

TENNIS — Libor Pimek advanced to the second round of the $800,000 European Champions' Championship of Tennis with a 6-4, 6-1 victory over Meno Oosting in Antwerp, Belgium.

Earlier, organizers said Aaron Krickstein bowed out of the ECC event due to an ankle injury he suffered in the final of the Geneva Grand Prix in September.

Mark Dickson and unseeded Todd Nelson scored first-round victories in the $75,000 City of Treviso Tennis Tournament.

Dickson got by Marco Ostoja 7-5, 5-7, 6-3, and Nelson defeated Luca Bottazzi 6-1, 4-6, 6-3.

In other first-round matches, Pavel Novasek beat Gabriel Urpi, and Jaro Navratil turned back Joao Soares 7-5, 7-5...

GOLF — Patty Sheehan, who captured four tournaments and finished among the top 10 in 15 of the 21 tourney events she entered, won the 1984 Seagram Sports Award as the Women Golfer of the Year.

Sheehan finished the year with $255,185, second to Betsy King's $266,771, and topped the computer rankings with 84.63 points to King's 83.39...

BASKETBALL — A young Wyoming basketball team had to overcome its first-game jitters before it could overtake the Peoples' Republic of China in exhibition college basketball.

"In the first half our guys were tighter than a hat band," Wyoming Coach Jim Brandenburg said Monday night after the Cowboys defeated China 85-68. "We did better defensively and rebounding in the second half."

Brandenburg said first-game jitters hurt inexperienced Wyoming, which only has two seniors on its roster, in the first half.

The Cowboys were led by freshman forward Fennis Dembo who scored 26 points and pulled down 10 rebounds. Center Eric Leckner also grabbed 10 rebounds for Wyoming.

Senior guard Rodney Gowens added 23 points and three assists for Wyoming...

SMU, UH, Hogs have shot at hoop crown

DALLAS (AP) — Once again an NCAA basketball championship round contender could come out of the Southwest Conference in 1984-85.

And this time it might not be the University of Houston.

Houston has lost in the championship game the last two seasons and the Cougars could muscle their way to the Final Two again.

However, Southern Methodist and Arkansas have the stamp of potential powerhouses in what could be one of the wildest SWC chases on record.

Both SMU and Arkansas return centers from the gold medal U.S. Olympic team.

SMU's 7-foot Jon Koncak, in fact, held his own with Georgetown's Pat Ewing before the Mustangs lost 38-37 to the Hoyas in the Far West regionals. Koncak outscored Ewing 13-10 and both had seven rebounds.

Arkansas' 6-11 Joe Kleine, a rugged rebounder with a good shooting touch, leads a swift, well-drilled Eddie Sutton coached team.

Houston must replace Akeem "The Dream" Olajuwon, who moved across town to join the Rockets of the National Basketball Association for megabucks, and Boston Celtic first-round pick Michael Young.

"I'm concerned about rebounding, the lack of a good defensive center, and the lack of a proven outside shooter," said Coach Guy Lewis. "I've always tried to have good rebounding, but I don't see a strong rebounder on this team."

Rickie Winslow, the leading rebound returner for the Cougars, will have to pickup the slack. He was one of the most outstanding freshman in the nation.

The Cougars also have a slick guard in Alvin Franklin and a floor leader in Reid Gettys.

"My philosophy has been Phi Slama Jama for 20 years and we haven't changed overnight," said Lewis. "But if you can't rebound you'd better shoot pretty darn good. We're going to need good shot selection."

Texas Tech, Texas A&M, Texas Christian, Texas, Rice and Baylor all have enough talent to be spoilers.

Baylor Coach Jim Haller is particularly proud of freshman guard Eric Johnson, the younger brother of Detroit Piston star, Vinnie.

"He looks just like Vinnie and just might be a better player," said Haller of the Brooklyn, N.Y., product.

SMU has a rugged intersectional schedule which could help down the line. Kentucky, Louisville, Oklahoma, North Carolina State, and North Carolina will test the Mustangs outside the SWC.

"It's been a long time since an SMU basketball team has taken on as difficult a schedule as the one we face this year," said Mustang Coach Dave Bliss. "We feel this is the next step we must take in returning basketball excitement to the Hilltop (the Mustang campus) and continue our pursuit of national prominence."

Sutton said the Razorbacks could struggle early.

"This will be the youngest team we've had at Arkansas in years," he said. "Joe Kleine and Charles Balentine give us an experienced nucleus. But we have eight players who have never played a minute of basketball for us."

Arkansas lost two of the best guards in the country in Alvin Robertson, a first round pick of the NBA San Antonio Spurs, and Ricky Norton.

"SMU probably should rank as the favorite," Sutton said. "He has his entire team back."

Holmes shows age in boxing twilight zone

An AP Sports Analysis
By ED SCHUYLER JR.
AP Sports Writer

Larry Holmes is the premier heavyweight fighter in the world, a position he has earned. But he also is in a boxing Twilight Zone.

Holmes is 35. That's young for a hotel owner, which he is. It's old for a fighter.

And he looked old last Friday night when he needed 12 rounds to stop 31-year-old James "Bonecrusher" Smith, who did not turn pro until he was 28.

The fight at Las Vegas, Nev., was stopped because Smith was badly cut above the left eye, not because he was being overwhelmed by Holmes, although the International Boxing Federation champion was far ahead on all three official cards.

Holmes was cut over the left eye by a butt and twice was hurt by right hands to the head by Smith, who has power but who doesn't seem to know how to set up his right with a left jab.

Holmes, who has a 46-0 record in a pro career dating back to 1973, plans to keep fighting. And the reason is not the goal of beating the late Rocky Marciano's 49-0 record. Marciano is the only heavyweight champion to retire unbeaten.

"I don't care what anybody says, money is what matters in this business," said Holmes, a millionaire who lives at Easton, Pa.

Holmes once said that life in the fast lane in Easton is very fast.

But is money a reason to fight for 35-year-old man, who is financially healthy and who talks about not getting hurt in the ring?

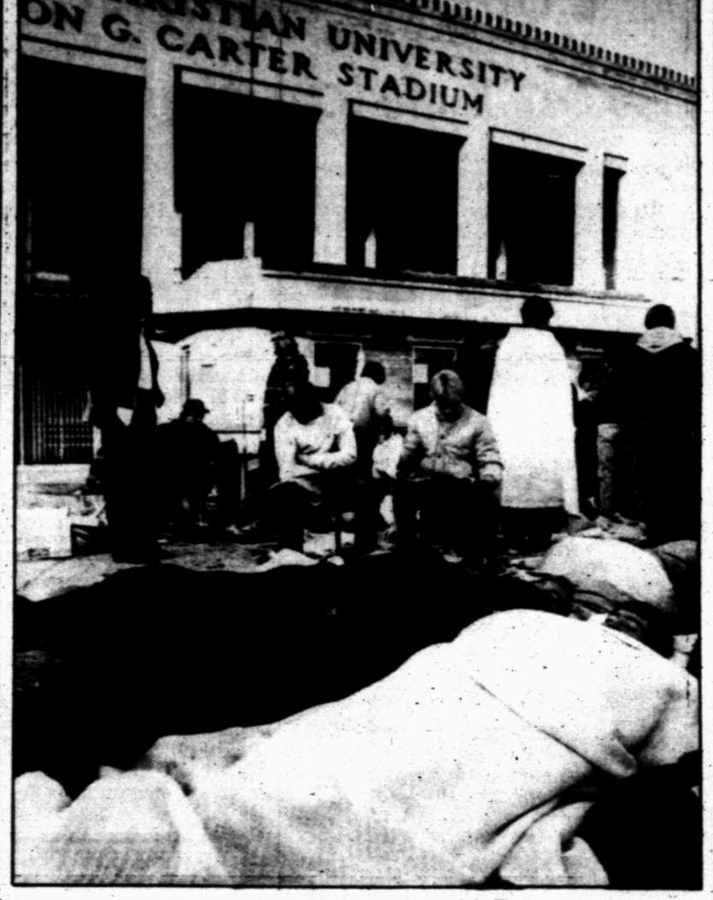

Holmes fought Smith with an injury not completely healed. He revealed after the fight that he chipped a bone in his right thumb in July but that he decided to go through with the scheduled 15-round fight for which he got $1 million..

"I can't bend it; I can't support it," said Holmes, who threw enough right hands so that there was no indication the hand was not 100 percent.

Several hundred TCU students lay in front of Amon G. Carter Stadium Monday awaiting a chance to buy tickets for the Texas football game Saturday in Fort Worth that should decide the Southwest Conference entry into the Cotton Bowl.

TCU students brave elements for tickets

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Some 1,000 Texas Christian students camped out in 39-degree cold Sunday night to buy tickets to the Southwest Conference showdown with Texas on Saturday.

The students, chanting "Hey, Hey, Ho, Ho, TCU in the Cotton Bowl," had to wait until 1 p.m. Monday before the ticket windows opened.

TCU officials expect a sellout of 47,000 fans in Amon Carter Stadium for the 2:50 p.m. kickoff. The game will also be televised by ABC-TV.

Coaches rate Frogs as favorite

DALLAS (AP) — Three of the five Southwest Conference coaches whose teams have played both Texas and TCU are predicting that the Horned Frogs will win in Saturday's "Showdown in Cowtown," according to a newspaper's poll.

The winner will advance to the Cotton Bowl as the SWC host team.

"There might have been a day when you could roll a helmet with a Longhorn onto the field, and all the guys in purple would be looking over their shoulder, but you can't say that this season," Texas Tech coach Jerry Moore told The Dallas Morning News.

"I think this game is going to be a lot more interesting than anyone ever imagined," added Moore, who said he thinks TCU will win because of its defense.

Arkansas coach Ken Hatfield and Houston coach Bill Yeoman were slightly partial to TCU, while Rice coach Watson Brown said he'd have to go with Texas. SMU coach Bobby Collins abstained.

Baylor coach Grant Teaff, who still must face Texas, also abstained, as did Texas A&M coach Jackie Sherrill, who has dates remaining with both title contenders.

Oddsmakers favor Texas by 1½ points in the game, which is scheduled for a 2:50 p.m. kickoff Saturday in Amon Carter Stadium in Fort Worth, with a regional television audience also looking on.

Texas, 6-1-1, fell from third to 10th in the Associated Press rankings after being upset by Houston 29-15 last week. TCU, 8-1, rose to No. 12 after coming from behind to beat Texas Tech 27-16.

Tech, which led Texas most of the game before losing 13-10, said he favors TCU because he thinks the Horned Frogs will be able to deny the Longhorns the ball.

"For TCU to win, they need to do exactly the same as they've been doing the last few weeks — keep the ball," Moore said. "We were able to control the ball fairly well against Texas, so TCU should be able to do that. The TCU defense is no push-over, and if they can deny Texas the ball and stop its rushing game, they should be in good shape."

Yeoman, whose Cougars lost to TCU 21-14 two weeks ago, called it "a dead heat."

"If it was at Texas, I'd give it to the Longhorns. That crowd yelling against you can mean a lot. But at TCU, I'd say the Horned Frogs have an edge. They can't make turnovers, and they have to shut down Texas' running game," Yeoman said.

Hatfield's Razorbacks were victimized by TCU's fourth-quarter rally and lost 32-31. In the Texas game, the Porkers were behind 24-18 but on the verge of scoring when the game ended.

"TCU made a believer out of me," Hatfield said. "Any time you can come into Fayetteville, get behind and still come back to win, that shows a lot of character. I don't think Texas' experience will be a key. I don't think TCU will fold under pressure."

Brown said it's been several weeks since he saw either team, "so I just really don't know. But it's been a mighty long time since Texas has lost two straight Southwest Conference games." Rice lost to both TCU and Texas.

TCU coach Jim Wacker discounted the feeling that his team might succumb to nerves.

"Frankly, I'm a lot more relaxed this week than I have been all season," Wacker said. "Getting to the point where you have a chance to play for all the marbles is the hard part. There was a lot more pressure trying to reach this game intact."

TCU is 5-1 and Texas 4-1 in SWC play. All other league teams have lost two or more games.

Sports pulse gets unlisted number

The latest from the list factory....

Five reasons the Soviet Union might eventually give for backing out of the 1988 Olympics in Seoul, even though it has indicated its willingness to compete:

1. The food.
2. The water.
3. The Soviet ambassador who promised that his country would participate had his fingers crossed.
4. Seoul is too near Los Angeles.
5. Seoul is too near Detroit.

Two football players you wouldn't want to take to dinner:

1. Grambling defensive tackle James Polk, 6-11 and 314 pounds.
2. Woodson High School (Washington, D.C.) tackle Raymond (World) Smith, 6-7 and 435. And he is only a junior.

Three reasons why the American League should keep the designated hitter:

1. Dave Kingman.
2. Reggie Jackson.
3. 704. That's how many more home runs the American League hit than the National Quiche League last season — 1,980 to 1,276.

Four reasons to send your 2-year-old to sports camp:

1. In a Las Vegas 10-kilometer run, the winning man and woman each received $500,000.
2. In the New York City Marathon, the winners each got $25,000 plus a $23,000 Mercedes.
3. The Tigers each got $51,000 and change for winning the World Series; the Padres each got $42,000.
4. The USFL.

Four lists that just don't seem to have the importance or impact they once had:

1. Richard Nixon's White House enemies list.
2. FBI's Ten Most Wanted list.
3. Billboard's Top 40.
4. Anyone's college football Top 10.

Three courses of action open to Pete Rozelle that would be wiser than continuing his current legal battles against the Raiders and Al Davis:

1. Deposit paycheck into a paper shredder.
2. Encourage the city of Oakland to make alimony claims against the Raiders in the breakup of the common-law marriage between the team and the city.
3. Offer to flip Davis double-or-nothing for the $49 million the NFL owes the team.

Three events that not even Jeane Dixon could have predicted:

1. Joe Namath gets married.
2. Dr. J a principal in basketball fistfight.
3. Baseball commissioner to poll fans for their opinion on the designated-hitter rule.

Three one-word descriptions for the reaction of the NFL owners if Al Davis had accepted an offer to become president of the USFL:

1. Terror.
2. Fear.
3. Loathing.

Three reasons not to send your 2-year-old to sports camp (and three injuries to read about if you're having trouble sticking to your diet):

1. Kellen Winslow's knee. The doctor who operated said Winslow's right knee looked like "spaghetti ... the ligaments had almost an explosion-like appearance."
2. Quarterback Bernie Kosar's ankle. He played on it even though it was swollen to "the size of a grapefruit."
3. Any losing boxer's face, routinely described as resembling raw hamburger.

Four guys you just know were never destined to become dentists or foreign diplomats:

1. Bonecrusher Smith.
2. Hacksaw Reynolds.
3. Mean Joe Greene.
4. John McEnroe.

Four good reasons we should put up with John McEnroe's tantrums:

1. Without them, he might be an ordinary player. Every time McEnroe throws a tantrum, he winds up winning the match.
2. They separate the men from the boys. At the Stockholm Open earlier this month, Swede Anders Jarryd said after losing to McEnroe, "It is very difficult to play against someone who behaves like McEnroe. To be honest, I got a little scared and finally lost my concentration."
3. The fans like 'em.
4. Would we want a guy walking the streets with all that hostility and anger bottled up inside him?

Three statements worth analyzing in your spare time:

1. San Francisco's Dwight Clark, after the flu-riddled 49ers clobbered the Rams: "The rest that we got from being sick really helped us."
2. Pat Riley, upon signing his new contract to coach the Lakers: "It's not very close to what I wanted, but it's very good."
3. Dale Berra, comparing himself to his dad, Yogi: "Our similarities are different."

Augustana tries Div. III defense

KINGS MILLS, Ohio (AP) — Augustana, defending champion in the NCAA's small-college Division III, and 1983 runner-up Union College lead an eight-school field vying for the Division III title this year, the National Collegiate Athletic Association announced Monday.

Augustana, 9-0, of Rock Island, Ill., plays Dayton of Ohio, 10-0, this Saturday at Dayton in one of four first-round games in the Division III playoffs. Union, of Schenectady, N.Y., which is coming off a 10-3 loss to Hamilton College that dropped its record to 8-1, plays host to Plymouth State of New Hampshire, 10-0, Saturday.

The other two games match Washington & Jefferson of Pennsylvania, 8-1, at Randolph-Macon of Virginia, 9-1, and Occidental, 10-0, of California, at Central of Iowa, 9-0.

The winners go to semifinal games on Nov. 24 to decide the competitors for the championship game, the Amos Alonzo Stagg Bowl on Dec. 8 at the College Football Hall of Fame in Kings Mills.

The eight-team field features three previous Division III champions — Augustana, which defeated Union 21-17 last year; Dayton, a 63-0 winner over Ithaca in 1980; and Central, which beat Ithaca 10-8 in 1974. The Division III championship began in 1973 when Wittenberg of Ohio defeated Juniata of Pennsylvania 41-0.

The eight finalists are based on the final poll taken by the NCAA's Division III football committee. Seven of the eight were the top seven schools in the final poll. The exception is Washington & Jefferson, which finished 11th in the 15-school poll.

Schools that finished ahead of Washington & Jefferson in the poll were No. 8 Hope of Michigan, 9-0, No. 9 Case Reserve of Cleveland, 9-0, and No. 10 Hamline of Minnesota, 9-0-1.

Tucker DiEdwardo, the NCAA's assistant director of championships, said Washington & Jefferson made the field because the competing schools favored selecting two teams from each of the four geographic regions rather than simply the schools that finished highest in the poll.

"I would remind you this is just a poll. It's, I would consider, educated guessing by people who are pretty knowlegeable about college football," DiEdwardo told a news conference at the College Football Hall of Fame Monday.

Union College Coach Al Bagnoli, who attended the news conference, said the invitation to the Divison III championships lifted his spirits after the loss to Hamilton.

"I was feeling real low. Then I got a call and I felt 10-feet tall," Bagnoli said. "I have mixed feelings about coming back to the Midwest. This is probably the scene of my greatest accomplishment in coaching and my most crushing defeat."

He referred to Union's 1983 loss to Augustana, the school that produced quarterback Ken Anderson of the Cincinnati Bengals. Union had led throughout the game until Augustana quarterback Jay Penney completed his second touchdown toss of the game to Norm Singbush with 3:09 left.

Union, which graduates 16 seniors from the team this year, is led by senior quarterback Daniel Stewart, who has 54 career touchdown passes. The Dutchmen average 35-40 passes per game, Bagnoli said.

Giacomin waits for call of NHL ...

NEW YORK (AP) — He was a marvelous goaltender, a beloved figure on the New York sports scene for more than a decade.

Eddie Giacomin, gaunt-faced and gray haired, provided New York Rangers' fans with more than heart-stopping saves. He was the team's soul as the Rangers ascended from a laughingstock in the mid-1960s to perennial Stanley Cup contenders.

And largely for that, the 17,250 Madison Square Garden faithful appreciated him like no other Rangers' player — wildly chanting "Eddie, Ed-die!" after his splits or dives saved a possible score.

He is long gone now, first having moved to another team, then retiring in 1978. Hardly anyone who saw him play will forget him. But hockey apparently has.

Burned by broken promises for coaching jobs and neglect from the hockey community, Giacomin feels like an outcast from the sport in which he starred.

"I'm bitter to the point that I simply don't understand why I'm not in the game," he said in a telephone interview from Eddie Giacomin's Sports den, the bar and grill he operates in suburban Detroit. "Things have not worked out, and I'm dumbfounded."

Giacomin, now 45, lives in Bloomfield Hills, Mich., about 25 miles north of the city where he finished his playing career.

"The only reason I stayed in the Detroit area is because of my family," he said. "I made a promise to my sons they'd finish high school here — and they're both in college now. Now my wife has gone back to college and I'm thinking about it, too.

"You give everything you've got to the sport, you give up your education to become a hockey player and it's now very, very hard to get work without an education."

He added that he was recently rejected for two college coaching jobs.

At his bar, Giacomin said, he is "just one of the people, and my own boss. I can dictate my hours, which is good because otherwise I couldn't take the coaching job at Brother Rice High School. And if I didn't take the job, the program would have folded."

Four years ago, Giacomin became a hockey coach at Brother Rice at the request of his oldest son. He said he enjoys working with youngsters, but is frustrated that high school hockey in Michigan is a low priority in athletic programs.

"You see talented kids like Pat Lafontaine go to Canada to play junior hockey because the competition is better. I think that's wrong," he said. "We don't gear kids who play hockey towards the chance of getting a college scholarship.

"I've been attending meetings, trying to convince officials and parents that hockey here can reach the level of the Boston area and Minnesota. But it's fighting a stone wall. I find myself wasting my time.

"I was a hero in my son's eyes for keeping the program alive, which is important. But this will probably be my last year."

Still, Giacomin can't get the game out of his system. He bought season tickets to the Red Wings' games, he said, and "would like to help the team, like to see them succeed."

But his offer to the Red Wings' management to help the club's young goalies, to do some scouting, went unheeded.

"Am I a threat to teams like the Red Wings?" he asked. "Maybe the coach thinks I want his job. But I look at a Tom Landry, who surrounds himself with qualified people who can help — not always looking over his shoulder. I'm certainly not out to knife anybody."

In 1978, Giacomin was promised the Rangers' coaching job by President Bill Jennings, only to be overridden by Madison Square Garden boss Sonny Werblin, who picked Fred Shero instead.

"That really hurt," Giacomin said. "I was obviously excited about the challenge of coaching."

But the challenge of rebuilding his former team, which failed miserably after he was traded in 1975, never developed. And Giacomin's fans missed the chance to have their hero back home again.

The fans adored Giacomin — perhaps never more than on the night of Nov. 2, 1975.

Less than 48 hours after he was waived, one of several veterans swept away in a frantic housecleaning by then General Manager Emile Francis, Giacomin was back in Madison Square Garden in the bright red uniform of the Red Wings.

In what former Rangers' publicist John Halligan called, "The most intense tribute," the sight of Giacomin during the pregame skating period triggered screams of "Ed-die, Ed-die!" that rocked the Garden.

It never let up. During the playing of the national anthem — hardly audible over the thunderous chants — all eyes were focused on Giacomin, standing uneasily in front of the Detroit goal. Tears were rolling down his face.

Cheering Giacomin wildly throughout the game, Rangers' fans rejoiced when he beat their team 6-4.

Three years later, he retired. In an era of frequent goalie burnout, Giacomin's competitive fires sparkled for 13 National Hockey League seasons. He posted 55 career shutouts and a 2.82 goals-against average.

Today, Giacomin said, he watches hockey and wonders, "How many people are being turned off by these wide-open, free-wheeling games, where body checks and good, tough hockey seem non-existent?"

He wonders how an entire team in good conscience "allows a player like Darryl Sittler to get a horrible, cheap-shot from Jim Korn of Toronto and not come to his rescue?"

And he wonders if he'll ever get a chance in hockey.

The one thing Giacomin doesn't wonder about is what happens when he returns to New York for a charity affair.

SHOOTING

A native of Port-of-Spain, Trinidad, Brathwaite had lived in Eugene since coming to the to join the university track team in 1975. He graduated in 1976 with a bachelor's degree in sociology and earned a master's degree in corrections in 1977.

"The guy was obviously unique — a sprinter at age 35 and in Eugene, Oregon," said former Olympian Mike Manley, another track club member. "He was a real private person, quiet, unassuming. He wasn't a flashy person, he wasn't someone who made a lot of noise, but he was just highly respected by all of us."

Representing Trinidad, Brathwaite was the only Eugene resident to compete in the 1980 Olympics in Moscow — which were boycotted by the United States. He advanced to the semifinals in the 100 meters, missing a spot in the finals by one place.

In 1978, he was a member of the silver medal 4-by-100 meter relay team at the British Commonwealth Games.

Brathwaite's body was taken to Sacred Heart General Hospital, where an autopsy was pending. No funeral arrangements had been announced Monday night.

He is survived by his wife Sharon and 5-year-old son Shawn.

SEAHAWKS

Easley now has a league-leading seven interceptions, including six in his last three games.

The turnovers boosted Seattle's NFL-leading takeaway total to 50; 29 interceptions and 21 fumble recoveries.Allen's first touchdown snapped a string of 10 scoreless quarters by the Seahawk defense.

Wilson, who suffered a badly bruised thumb on his throwing hand in a loss to Chicago last week, appeared to have trouble throwing deep. He completed 16 of 34 passes for 169 yards.

"It's sore," Wilson said of his thumb, "but I don't want to offer that as an excuse."

Krieg was 11 of 25 for 156 yards and two touchdowns. He was intercepted once.

Krieg was sacked six times for losses totaling 34 yards while Wilson was sacked four times for 22 yards.

Krieg showed he has started to take on the personality of his coach, the always-cautious, cliche-talking Knox. "It was an emotional win," he said, "but we're not going to get overconfident. We have to get ready for Cincinnati now."

Economists doubt Reaganomics will last four years

By JAMES STERNGOLD
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — The nation's vigorous economy may have played a major role in President Reagan's overwhelming re-election, but most analysts doubt that the economic performance Americans endorsed last Tuesday is the one they will get in the coming four years.

"A mild recession is shaping up," said A. Gary Shilling, who runs an economic consulting firm bearing his name. "In fact, we may already be in it. The election doesn't change that. But people vote the past rather than the future."

Shilling forecasts a steep decline in inflation-adjusted economic growth next year, to 0.6 percent, from this year's expected 6.8 percent and a jump in the unemployment rate, to 8.5 percent, from the 1984 projected average of 7.7 percent.

"We aren't going to have the explosion of economic growth we've had in the last two years," said Robert F. Wescott, director of short-term forecasting at Wharton Econometrics. He added that "1983 and 1984 were stellar years, some of the best in the postwar period. There's almost no way we can put together four more years like the past two. It's just not in the cards."

His forecast is for a slowdown to 3.6 percent expansion next year and a lethargic 1.6 percent in 1986.

Although the forecasters are almost uniform in their view that difficult days are ahead, they continue to see at least this bright patch: Prospects for a renewed surge in inflation are dim. Most of them estimate that consumer prices will rise less than 6 percent annually during Reagan's second term.

The persistently low inflation, economists said, was probably the most significant economic event during his first term. It was also an event that few economists foresaw. Nor did they anticipate, in general, that the recovery would prove so robust.

"The real surprise to me and probably a lot of others has been how great the anti-inflationary fallout has been," said Allen Sinai, chief economist at Shearson Lehman-American Express. "That does make me more optimistic for longer-term growth."

Sinai divides the credit. "I give Reagan credit for the super-growth, and I give the U.S. central bank credit for the super-low inflation," he said.

Nonetheless, concern remains that short-term problems will develop because of the huge federal budget deficit. The election results, leaving Congress still divided, give little hope of a quick resolution of the deficit problem, the economists said.

Still up for grabs is how the deficit should be narrowed — through tax increases or spending cuts — or what programs ought to be reduced. The failure of the election to resolve that impasse means that few economic forecasts have been altered by the voting outcome.

Some analysts, though, interpret the president's resounding election victory as a solid vote against tax increases. Nonetheless, they do not find this any more cheering.

"When they voted for Reagan, people voted for no tax increases," said Michael K. Evans, president of Evans Economics in Washington. "Around 1985 or '86 we'll see a substantial rise in interest rates again, which will bring the economy back into recession." He foresees that happening in 1987, with the economy screeching to a halt amid growth of just 0.2 percent. That would push unemployment up sharply, to 9.2 percent, he said.

"My expectations have not changed because of the election," said Alice M. Rivlin, a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution and former director of the Congressional Budget Office. "The best that will happen is that we'll have slower growth and higher interest rates. But the big risk if nothing is done about the deficit is that the dollar starts to fall because foreigners move their assets and interest rates move sharply higher." This could squelch economic activity for several years, she said.

"People have already seen about all the improvement they're going to get in the economy," said Lawrence Chimerine, chairman and chief economist of Chase Econometrics, an economic consulting company. "My view now is that with Congress still split it's going to take quite a while before the deficit issue gets addressed. And the longer it takes, the worse the economy gets."

He added that "1985 is the danger point — that's when the deficits become counterproductive and you risk even slower growth." Chimerine forecasts slowly declining economic expansion, to 3.2 percent in 1985 and 2.5 percent in 1986. Chase Econometrics also predicts that inflation will remain at 4.3 percent next year, with no change in the unemployment rate, either.

Citicorp Information Services also foresees a lukewarm economy, compared with this year's pace. The unit forecasts 2.4 percent expansion next year and 1 percent growth in 1986, picking up to only 2.2 percent by 1987. Inflation will rise to 5.8 percent next year, from 4.4 percent in 1984, and will increase to 7 percent in 1986, the company predicts. This is the highest estimate for inflation among those surveyed. The unemployment rate will rise slightly to 8.1 percent by 1986, according to Citicorp.

Two Wall Street brokerage houses, Merrill Lynch & Co. and Shearson Lehman-American Express, offer similar forecasts. They see the economy growing less than 3 percent by 1986, with moderate inflation slowly advancing toward 1987, when it is expected to reach 5 percent. Both expect unemployment to remain almost unchanged at about 7 percent.

Alta Energy income up by 433 percent

Staff Reports

Alta Energy Corp., Midland, has reported substantial increases in proven reserves, revenue, net income and successful completions for fiscal 1984.

According to, Alta Energy Corporation president R. F. Bailey, the firm had a record net income for fiscal 1984 of $144,600, a 433 percent increase over 1983. Total revenue for 1984 was $2,214,900, a 55 percent increase over 1983. Alta's proved reserves increased 30 percent over 1983 to 855,158 barrels of oil and gas equivalent.

Bailey also reports the completion of a private placement of approximately $2,000,000 of corporate securities and the drilling of 16 wells 14 oil wells, one gas well and one dry hole) during fiscal 1984. "These highlights are all the result of a continued high level of activity throughout the Company. We drilled fewer wells in 1984 than in 1983, but we only had one dry hole." According to Bailey, several factors contributed to these positive achievements, accomplished during one of the most depressed periods the industry has experienced in 20 years: the successful drilling activity; continued efforts to purchase producing properties; Alta's lower finding cost ($6.86 per barrel, or just over one-half the industry average as published in a recent study by an international accounting firm); and, a decrease in net expenses reflecting some economies of scale as activities expand. The Company's primary drilling focus continues to be on low-risk prospects with heavier emphasis on drilling oil, rather than gas wells and concentrated mostly in the Permian Basin area of West Texas and the Piceance Basin of western Colorado. "However," Bailey said, "we have initiated a major effort in the Uinta Basin of eastern Utah, another low-risk drilling area with, we believe, excellent reserve potential."

A continued unusually low cost in finding oil has been one of the factors accounting for the increase in revenues for the firm. While a four-year industry average for finding a barrel of oil has been calculated at $11.83. Alta Energy has an average cost of $6.86 for each barrel of oil found.

"This lower cost," said Bailey, "is the result of a conservative drilling philosophy and reliance on outside partners to partially fund the cost of initial wells on our drilling prospects."

Operating on the assumption of stable oil and gas prices into 1986, at which time the firm predicts an escalation of prices, Alta plans a continued, aggressive program of drilling for reserves and the purchase of reserves to sustain longterm growth for the energy company.

"We see our firm and the industry coming out of a downturn and entering a cycle of expansion," said Bailey.

Lear begins offering of variable rate notes

DALLAS (SWN) — Lear Petroleum Corp. announced Thursday it has commenced its public offering of $180 million principal amount of senior subordinated exchangeable variable rate notes.

Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. is the sole underwriter of the offering.

The senior subordinated exchangeable variable rate notes will bear interest at the rate of 14-1/2 percent per annum from Nov. 15 through Feb. 14, 1985; and at a rate per annum for each quarterly period thereafter equal to the greater of (1) the three month treasury rate as defined, plus 375 basis points of (2) the London Interbank Offered Rate, as defined, plus 250 basis points; provided however, that in no event shall the rate be greater than LIBOR plus 375 basis points.

The variable rate notes will be exchanged on Nov. 15, 1989 for senior subordinated fixed rate notes, unless earlier so exchanged at the option of the company on any interest payment date.

The fixed rate notes will mature five years from the exchange date and will bear interest at a rate per annum equal to 129 percent of the five year treasury rate as defined.

Dollar broadly lower, gold hits $350

LONDON (AP) — Uncertainty over interest rates and tension between the United States and Nicaragua helped push the dollar broadly lower on European exchange markets early today.

Gold bullion hit $350 an ounce, its highest level in Europe since the end of August.

Dealers in Frankfurt, West Germany, said the dollar was retreating in brisk trading. They attributed the decline to position adjustments, renewed expectations of lower U.S. interest rates and uncertainty over U.S. policy toward Nicaragua.

Selected midmorning dollar rates in Europe compared with levels of late Monday:

–2.9275 West German marks, down from 2.9580.

–2.40975 Swiss francs, down from 2.4253.

–8.9900 French francs, down from 9.0775.

–3.29975 Dutch guilders, down from 3.3325.

–1,823.25 Italian lire, down from 1,838.50.

–1.31415 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3175.

The value of the British pound rose to $1.2755 from $1.2678.

The dollar closed in Tokyo at 240.65 yen, down from 241.25 yen. Later in London, the dollar was quoted at 240.00 yen.

Gold bullion, meanwhile, opened stronger in Europe and edged up steadily throughout the morning session in response to the weaker dollar.

London's five biggest bullion houses fixed a recommended mid-morning gold price of $350 a troy ounce, up from Monday's late bid of $346.50.

In Zurich, the metal was quoted at a bid of $350.10, up from $346.20.

Earlier in Hong Kong, gold gained $3.77 to close at a bid of $350.19.

Gold was quoted in New York late Monday at $347.

Tuesday marks anniversary of worst coal mine disaster

CHERRY, Ill. (AP) — Only a pink pile of slag marks the spot near this north-central Illinois community where 259 men and boys were killed 75 years ago today in one of the nation's worst coal mine disasters.

One survivor of the fire in the St. Paul Coal Co. mine still lives, and the mine, once the town's single source of employment, closed for good in 1927, sending most of Cherry's 2,000 residents elsewhere.

Perhaps the most lasting memorial to the victims were the mine safety measures enacted by the Illinois Legislature after the horrors of Nov. 13, 1909.

That morning, about 480 men and boys went to work in what the company's consulting engineer called "the safest mine in the world." Workers considered it a good place to work because it was well equipped, the coal was easily mined and the work went on year-round.

It also was one of the first mines in Illinois to have electric lights. But on this day, the electrical system was out of order, and the mine was illuminated with kerosene torches hung from the walls.

Around noon, a wooden car loaded with hay for the underground mule stable was accidently left under a burning torch. Soon, the car was aflame.

The fire ignited overhead timber supports and burned into the coal vein, and the smoldering coal released toxic gas into the tunnels.

"After my father and I got to the second level ... the fire blocked us off; it singed the hair on the side of my face and head," survivor Peter Donna recalled shortly before his death in 1977 at age 84.

"We circled around the burning section and made our way to the main lift. The smoke almost overtook us. ... When we finally reached the lift, there was no trouble getting on it and up the shaft," he recalled.

Bundy and other men made several trips on the lift down into the mine to haul up dozens of burned and choking miners.

But on the seventh trip, the lift and the men on it caught fire.

Hopes for the recovery of the others still below quickly faded, and, eight hours after the fire broke out, company officials ordered the shafts sealed to smother the flames.

Miraculously, 21 miners managed to survive by crawling into a deep recess of the mine. Before they were rescued a week later, hunger drove them delirous, and they ate the blackened wicks of the lamps, their belts and the tongues of their shoes.

The fire burned until spring, and bodies were pulled out for a year. The company eventually provided an $1,800 settlement to every family whose breadwinner was killed.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Same tax rules apply to mutual funds, securities

By BILL DOYLE

Q. We have made a seris of purchases of shares in a mutual fund and have reinvested our dividends and capital gains distributions. When we redeem our shares, on our income tax return should the most recent purchases be reported as short-term capital gains or losses and those made more than a year ago as long-term?

A. Yes. The tax rules on mutual fund shares are the same as those for all securities. The difference between the price you paid for fund shares — either by paying money or reinvesting — and the price at which you redeem is a capital gain or a capital loss.

The capital gain or loss on shares owned more than a year is long-term. The capital gain or loss on shares owned less than a year is short-term.

The 1984 federal tax law, of course, changes the long-term holding period of six months for securities acquired after June 22, 1984.

• • •

Q. I paid $1,000 for shares of what was supposed to be a "growth" mutual fund about a year ago and was charged a commission of $485. This fund has shown no "growth" and my investment is still worth less than $1,000.

If it ever goes up high enough, am I allowed to sell? If so, what will my selling cost be?

A. You own the fund shares. You can unload them. You don't "sell" mutual fund shares. You "redeem" them by turning them back to the fund.

When you redeem, you'll get the redemption price. All mutual funds except those with redemption fees redeem at asset value per share — the dollars and cents value behind each share at the time of redemption.

The one bright spot in your unfortunate investment experience is that no mutual fund that charges the heavy commission you paid when you bought also levies a redemption fee.

• • •

Q. We have been purchasing shares of an "income" mutual fund that holds bonds and pays high dividends — 12.78 percent lately. The commission charges on our purchases seem to be only 4 percent and there will be no redemption fee if we cash in our shares.

Would you say this investment is as safe as a money market fund? If interest rates drop, what will happen to the value of our mutual fund shares?

A. An income mutual fund holding long-term bonds is riskier than a money market mutual fund. A money market mutual fund holds short-term debt securities and keeps the value of its shares constant — typically at $1 a share. That makes a money market mutual fund virtually risk free.

If interest rates drop, the market values of the long-term bonds your mutual fund holds will rise. That will increase the value of your fund's shares.

On the other hand, if interest rates rise, just the opposite will happen. That's the risk involved.

Alcohol may cut heart attack risk

Dear Dr. Solomon: With all the predictions of doom and gloom from doctors about the food we eat and the air we breathe, I was ecstatic to learn that alcohol can keep a person from getting a heart attack. After giving up smoking and lot of other things, this was very welcome news. In fact, I'm afraid it's too good to be true, and I am writing to you for confirmation. — Arnold, Portland, Ore.

Solomon

Dear Arnold: What you describe is generally true, but I would suggest that you restrain your enthusiasm while I point out some qualifications. Moderate consumption of alcohol — no more than two ounces per day — does seem to reduce the risk of heart attack by increasing the levels of high-density lipoprotein cholesterol (the good cholesterol). However, individuals who consume more than two ounces per day may lose all of alcohol's benefits.

In addition, the risk of susceptible people becoming addicted to alcohol must be considered.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Sometimes I find that when I see a bright light it makes me sneeze. My husband laughs at me and says it is all my imagination. He says he's heard of hay fever but he's never heard of light fever. Is this all in my imagination? — Mrs. J.Y., Birmingham, Ala.

Dear Mrs. Y.: The fact that a person — whoever he or she may be — has never heard of something does not mean that it does not exist. There is a phenomenon known as photic sneeze reflex, which means the tendency to sneeze when an individual is exposed to a bright light.

Dear Dr. Solomon: What happens if a person goes into adulthood with scoliosis? Does the condition then remain the same? — Lisa, Asheville, N.C.

Dear Lisa: Many adults with scoliosis continue to have some progression of their condition throughout their adult lives, but others do not progress at all.

According to Dr. Hugo A. Keim, adequate treatment of scoliosis during adolescence can do a great deal to avoid significant problems in later life.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Would you explain what an enzyme is. I've heard about it and read about it but I've never had an explanation of what it is. — Gus, Atlanta.

Dear Gus: An enzyme is a protein that speeds up certain chemical processes. In the intestine, for example, enzymes break down many foods into simpler substances so that they are able to be absorbed.

Midland well has too much chromium, TDWR office says

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A well on the Industrial Loop in Midland is contaminated with high levels of chromium, according to preliminary tests done by the Texas Department of Water Resources District Office in Odessa.

Samples will be taken from other wells near the one tested last week to see if the chromium has spread, said TDWR District Supervisor Bill Lockey.

TDWR Geologist Joan Middleton said Monday that tests done in an Odessa laboratory showed the well at the closed business on the Industrial Loop had 1.3 milliliters of chromium per liter of water. The minimum EPA standard for safe drinking is 0.05 milliliters of chromium per liter.

Lockey said the company has been closed, so it is unlikely anyone has been drinking the contaminated water. Apparently, the FDIC has taken over the business, B&W Welding and Construction Inc., located at the end of one extension of the Industrial Loop (south of the railroad tracks on the south side of U.S. 80).

The official sample was sent to the state laboratory for testing, said Ms. Middleton. While waiting on these results, further tests will be done — using this well as a centerpoint — to determine the extent of the contamination, she said.

Attempts will be made to trace the contamination back to its origin. This may be complicated because of the migration of groundwater and the possibility contamination has been occurring for years, said Lockey.

Jed Barker of the Water Hygiene Division of the Midland office of the Texas Department of Health said high concentrations of chromium could cause skin irritation if used for bathing or liver damage if drunk. Lockey said chromium-contaminated water takes on a green tint.

"If it's there at those levels, we'd certainly recommend they not drink it," said Barker. Contamination of local groundwater would not affect the city's drinking water supply, most of which comes from a storage facililty north of Midland, he said.

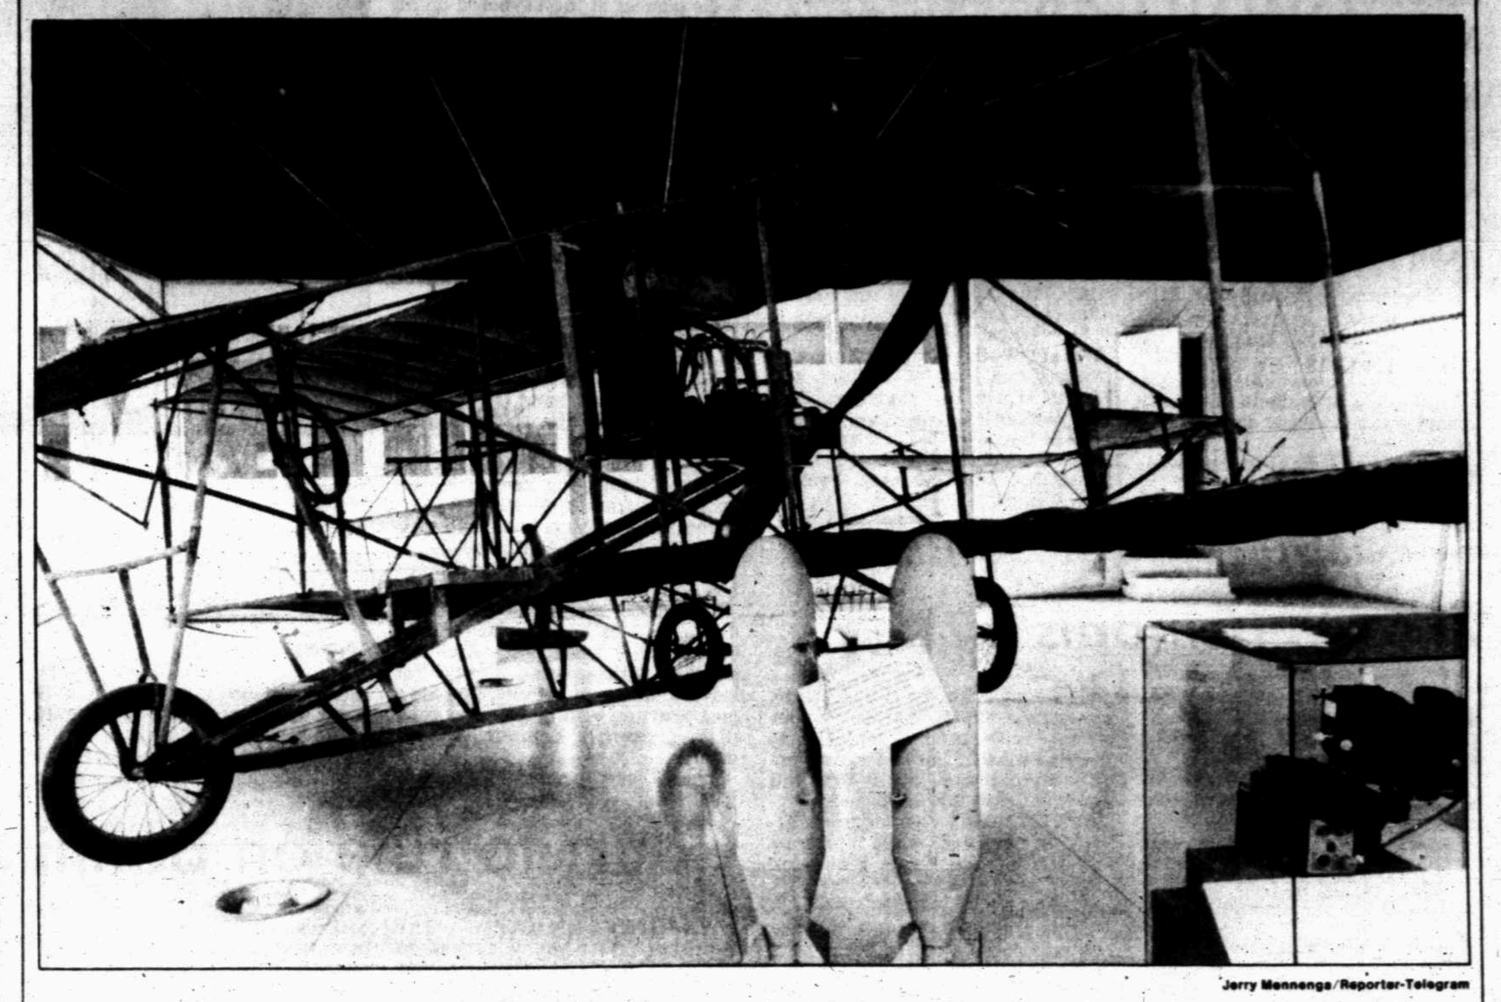

The TDH can take no action without the official TDWR report, explained Barker. Until this report is provided, he suggested businesses and residences in this area used bottled or city water.

Lockey said that if the source of the well's contamination cannot be found, his office may apply for its qualification for Superfund status. Two Odessa sites recently qualified for clean-up under the EPA's Superfund.

Plating operations or businesses using a cooling system use chromium (a corrosion inhibitor), said Lockey, noting many are switching to other less hazardous rust inhibitors.

Chromium will percolate through soil to a certain level it cannot penetrate, then move laterally until it reaches a hole (such as the well). One way it could escape would be through a leak in a septic tank system, he said.

The district office took samples from the well after the TDH passed on a tip they had received from an anonymous source, said Lockey.

Local plane flew into aviation history

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

In the main lobby of the Midland Regional Airport is a glass wall which looks out on a water fountain which doesn't work. A dozen or more people can usually be found staring out that wall, killing time while they wait for their flight.

Occasionally, noticing the door marked "Pliska Museum," some of those people wander out into the courtyard. And there, beyond the broken water fountain, in a little glass-enclosed room behind the restaurant, they find themselves face to face with a piece of aviation history: the Pliska Airplane.

The story begins back in 1910, only seven years after the Wright brothers' first powered flight at Kitty Hawk, N.C. William Randolph Hearst had offered a prize of $50,000 to the first pilot to fly a plane from coast to coast. The rules: it had to be done in 30 days or less, and within a year of his making the offer.

On November 19, 1911, Robert G. Fowler landed his biplane in Midland. Fowler had left Los Angeles the previous month, and was following the Texas and Pacific Railroad tracks across Texas in pursuit of fame, glory and Hearst's $50,000. He achieved none of these, arriving in Jacksonville, Fla., too late to qualify for the prize money, but his brief stop in Midland inspired two local men with the possibilities of heavier-than-air travel.

John Valentine Pliska was a blacksmith. Gray Coggin was a chauffeur and auto mechanic. Together they built and flew an airplane.

In 1912, in West Texas, that wasn't a common occurrence.

"This revolutionary and complicated craft was literally built with their bare hands and only with the simplest machinery with which to work, in a blacksmith shop in the heart of pioneer ranch country," wrote Pliska's daughter Mary Beth in "A Blacksmith's Aeroplane."

The plane was made from wood, piano wire and shellacked canvas, and its 50-horsepower engine was ordered from Ohio. It never flew more than a mile at a time, and was a notable flop at the Odessa Fourth of July celebration that year, when it only got a few feet off the ground and a crowd of angry cowboys demanded their money back. But it flew.

Deciding they needed a more powerful engine, Pliska and Coggin sent the one they had back to Ohio and dismantled the plane, storing it in the rafters of Pliska's blacksmith shop at Baird and Texas. And there it remained for 50 years.

"George Abell was riding by the Pliska shop one day (in 1962) and they were getting ready to throw it out," says Lester Van Pelt Jr., secretary-treasurer of the Abell-Hanger Foundation. "He thought it was worth saving."

The foundation restored the plane, bought an engine for it, built the little room out at the airport and presented it to the city, along with a few other aviation-related items to round out the museum, Van Pelt says.

But airport expansion has obscured the little museum, leaving it hidden in the shadow of the terminal extension. Airport officials are proud of the Pliska plane, and hope the next round of expansion will enable them to move it into the lobby where everybody can see it.

"It's a well-hidden secret," says Victor White, the director of aviation. "We'd love to have it in the lobby," if the city council can find the money to do it.

"We'd like the public to see it more," adds Jay Stucki, an operations supervisor who has done some research on the Pliska plane. "It's truly a unique piece of history."

Odessa Council may form cable TV board

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The City Council appears to be leaning toward formation of a cable TV advisory board patterned after groups formed in Fort Worth and Austin to monitor local franchises.

About one year after viewer unrest surfaced over poor service on Thanksgiving, the majority of the council voiced its approval of such a group during Monday's work session.

The final make-up of the group and its powers over Community Cablevision of Odessa have not been agreed on, but at least three of five councilmembers backed the concept.

City Manager John Harrison told the council that the board can be used for "enhancing those opportunities for local groups to use the cable to promote activities that are going on within the city."

Without local input, the local franchise can basically rely on its own judgment and surveys in deciding on programming. While some groups offer programming suggestions, others monitor service or provide input from installation of the systems, said Harrison.

"Hopefully, it would give the citizens a certain group" for input, said Councilwoman Melissa Hirsch, noting that there currently is no organization to handle viewer complaints or suggestions.

Councilman Nicky Sheets suggested the group could participate in negotiating new contracts. The city has criticized the vagueness of the current agreement for not providing them with measurable performance indicators.

"It would free up a little of our time," said Councilman Sherman Cox, so councilmembers' time could be spent "other than just working on cablevision problems all the time."

Thomas Perkins supported the group, but asked that members be chosen from precincts, rather than special interest groups in the community. Harrison suggested that representatives from the school district or other groups might be included to provide programming input.

Only Mayor Pro Tem Vern Foreman spoke out against the group, questioning what its purpose would be. "Just to have one...," said Foreman, "I'm opposed to it as I have been in the past to other groups that have been formed."

A citizen board should not decide programming, said Foreman. "That's strictly economics," he said, suggesting that the city staff investigate the success of groups formed in other cities across the state.

Harrison said different cities have decided on various sizes and responsibilities for their groups.

In Fort Worth, the group was formed when the franchise came to town and worked with the franchise from the beginning. Austin's group was formed after the franchise came to the city, but has gained concessions from the cable company, including at least two renegotiations of the contract, said Harrison.

Most of the council supported the formation of the advisory board despite the report of a citizen task force insisting their was no need for such a group. The task force, formed by Mayor John Minor with no input from other councilmembers, included Mike Brommer, general manager of the local franchise.

Ms. Hirsch charged during a September meeting in which the council refused to accept the task force's findings that the franchise wrote the report, which was mostly favorable toward Community Cablevision.

Woman pleads guilty to embezzlement

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The 24-year-old former branch manager of Heart O' Texas Savings & Loan Association in Stanton and a 21-year-old ex-teller for Security National Bank of Midland pleaded guilty in Midland federal court on Monday to embezzlement.

Vickie Sue Madison, who is accused of embezzling more than a quarter of a million dollars from the Stanton institution, could be sentenced up to 10 years in prison and fined $10,000 when U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton imposes sentence on her on Dec. 3.

The judge may order the woman to make restitution.

Ms. Madison pleaded guilty to two counts of the six-count indictment, which says she took the money between Nov. 1982 and June 1984 from various accounts in the association.

"The FBI, through the U.S. Attorney, offered Ms. Madison the opportunity to own up to this crime," noted Assistant U.S. Attorney Mike McDonald.

The government is to dismiss four counts of the six-count indictment at the time of sentencing. Otherwise, Ms. Madison could be assessed up to 30 years in prison were she to plead guilty to all six counts. The maximum penalty for each offense is a five-year prison term and a $5,000 fine.

Ms. Madison seemed calm throughout the proceedings.

"Did anybody make you do it?" Bunton asked her of the embezzlement.

"No, sir," she replied.

"No one put a gun up to your head and made you do it?"

"No, sir."

Ms. Madison was represented by Midland lawyer Rusty Wall.

William Scott Wilder, charged with embezzling $1,424.81 from Security National Bank last June, pleaded guilty to one count of a three-count indictment. He could be sentenced up to five years in prison and fined $5,000.

Wilder's attorney, John Smith of Odessa, noted that Wilder stole the funds by selling money orders to customers, "but he would pocket the money."

"Did you know this was wrong?" Bunton asked Wilder.

"Yes, sir."

"Did someone hold a gun to your head and make you take the money?"

"No, sir."

The judge is to sentence Wilder at noon on Dec. 3.

"I, in all probability, will order restitution in this case," Bunton said.

In other cases before the judge:

— Lucio Alcantar-Pena, 34, of Mexico, was sentenced to an 18-month prison term to run concurrently with a 179-day jail sentence imposed by U.S. Magistrate Darrell F. Smith. He was charged with violating probation for illegal re-entry into the United States. Alcantar-Pena was convicted in Bunton's court last June of illegal re-entry into the United States, was placed on probation and deported. He was caught back in the United States in October.

— Tiburcio Fernandez-Hernandez, 48, of Mexico, was sentenced to four years in prison for transportation of illegal aliens from Mexico to the United States. Prior to sentencing, Bunton had asked Fernandez-Hernandez what sentence he thought the judge should impose.

"Whatever you wish," he replied. "You're the boss."

— Douglas Ray Weeks, 31, a convicted felon, pleaded guilty to purchasing a .45-caliber revolver from Charlie's Pawn Shop in Odessa last June. Weeks was convicted in Odessa in 1976 of theft by check and was sentenced to 10 years in prison. Federal law forbids a felon from possessing a firearm.

Weeks told the judge he purchased the firearm on July 13 for a woman friend but said it was "too much for her to handle." Three days later, he sold it to an insurance agent for $115. The agent collects firearms, he said.

— Claus Dieter Woehl, 25, of Odessa, pleaded guilty to stealing 25 sticks of dynamite and 28 blasting caps from Pradon Construction Co. in Odessa and then trading 22 of the sticks of dynamite and 25 caps for "speed." Woehl told the judge that he had obtained the stimulant in an effort to get off of his heroin habit.

The judge asked Woehl if he had any drug problem.

"I've been up in jail for so long," he said, "I ain't got the urge for no more."

Woehl admitted his guilt.

"I stole the dynamite and stored it and so on and so forth."

Woehl, who could be assessed up to 10 years in prison and fined $10,000, is to be sentenced on Dec. 3.

TDA will work with farmers on proposed pesticide rules

AUSTIN (AP) — Criticism from some farm groups not withstanding, the Texas Department of Agriculture wants to work with farmers in writing safety regulations for pesticide use, Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower says.

"We're listening, we're making substantive changes and we're going to come out with the soundest pesticide safety program in the country," Hightower said Monday.

His comments came as several farm groups blasted the proposed regulations.

S.M. True, a Plainview farmer and president of the Texas Farm Bureau, said the proposals will add to farmers' costs but do nothing that isn't already governed by state and federal law.

"They will cause food prices to be higher and quality to be lower and hurt farmers, ranchers and consumers. These regulations are anti-farmer, anti-agriculture and anti-consumer," True said.

The rules "are excessive, unfair and no real need has been show why the changes are necessary," added Clemon Montgomery of the Texas Agricultural Cooperative Council.

Among other things, the rules would establish minimum times before workers could re-enter a field which has been sprayed. For 13 chemicals, that would be 24 hours. For three chemicals, the time limit would be seven days.

The rules also call for notification of neighbors who ask for it before pesticides are used on land contiguous to theirs, and notification of persons with health problems or economic interests within a mile of a field if they have asked for it.

Device speaks for boy who can't

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — The 3-year-old smiles shyly and is told to "tell the lady your name."

He glances at the keyboard on his lap and presses a square — out booms a deep, robot-like voice that says, "Hello, my name is Marcos Coronado."

What startles the visitor is the baritone that speaks for the little boy who can't say the words for himself.

Marcos is one of the handicapped children at Ada Wilson Hospital of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation Inc. who uses an electronic scanning device to help him communicate with the world.

Actually, Marcos is lucky because he can point, says Sandy Young, a speech pathologist.

Cerebral palsy affected one side of his body, his left hand is fisted but he can still use the fingers on his right hand.

"If you can point, then there are so many things you can do — like operate a scanning device or type on a computer which has been programmed to your needs," she said.

There are several kinds of communication devices used at Ada Wilson — a circular scanner with about a dozen choices on it; a larger keyboard with a voice synthesizer and another with rows of words. For older students and adults, there is a memo writer with large keys, a display screen, a memory and a printer.

Marcos, like the majority of Ada Wilson patients, is an outpatient. He lives in Rockport and makes the trip to the hospital several times a week for speech and other therapies. The speech therapist has been working with him since he was 18 months old and Marcos now has several ways of communicating.

AP Laserphoto

Speech pathologist Sandy Young, left, works with Marcos Coronado on an electronic communication device. Unable to speak, Marcos, 3, is one of the handicapped children at Ada Wilson Hospital of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation in Corpus Christi who uses the electronic scanning device (a baritone synthesized voice) to communicate.

He has been taught some sign language, though it is difficult with use of only one hand. In addition to signing, he can use a picture book to express his needs when he is at home.

During his sessions with Ms. Young he uses a communicator which has been especially programmed for him.

By pushing certain squares he can ask for a cookie, cracker or toys. He can also express moods like "Stop, please leave me alone."

During speech therapy session, the device is used to prompt Marcos into speaking. After the synthesized voice says that Marcos wants to play with a car, Ms. Young asks him to say "car."

When a satisfactory "ka" is managed, the diligent pupil is rewarded with a bite of cookie.

He responds with a quite recognizable "more."

Frequently his tongue is brushed with a toweled finger.

"What we're trying to do is stimulate the muscles of his tongue," she said. "Normally when we speak, our tongue is moving constantly, but Marcos' doesn't."

She stressed the importance of starting to work with speech-deprived children at an early age.

"Imagine the frustration of a child like Marcos, who is very bright, at being unable to communicate."

Too often, people interpret "cerebral palsy" to mean mental retardation and talk in front of CP children as though they weren't able to understand, she said.

Texas teen-ager solicits foreign pen pals by sea

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — When Mark Carroll, 16, reaches out and touches someone, he doesn't do it with the telephone.

Instead, he uses a form of communication that a shipwrecked sailor might use.

Carroll, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joel Carroll, sidesteps traditional mail delivery and instead opts to solicit pen pals by sea. His medium: a piece of notebook paper. Its mode of transportation: a Seagrams 7 liquor bottle picked from refuse on the cruise ship Rotterdam.

Last week, Carroll received a letter from a 50-year-old dockworker from San Miguel, part of the Azores Islands owned by Portugal off the coast of north Africa.

"Hello my unknown friend," Antonio Arruda wrote. "I received your message in the bottle. I got it Oct. 14 at about 8 p.m. I am and I live here in S. Miguel. How big is God and wonderful how this happened."

Carroll tossed the bottle overboard in April 1983 while his family was cruising the Virgin Islands on the Rotterdam.

"This makes it all worth it," Carroll said. "And Portugal...that beats getting a note out of Dallas."

It was not the first floating messge Carroll had launched. He's tossed about 150 bottled messages in waterways, mostly in the Wichita River behind his home. Arruda's reply, however, was his first.

Court to rule on banning homes for retarded

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today agreed to decide whether communities almost automatically may ban group homes for retarded people from residential neighborhoods.

The justices said they will use a zoning dispute from Cleburne, Texas, to decide how closely the nation's courts must scrutinize any law that treats the mentally retarded differently than other people.

The court's eventual decision, expected by July, could carry enormous importance for the rights of the mentally retarded far beyond housing opportunities.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals — in a decision affecting Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi — last March 5 struck down as unconstitutional a Cleburne ordinance that required special permits for such group homes.

The ordinance in Cleburne, a city of about 16,000 residents located just southwest of Dallas, had allowed apartment houses, hospitals, public schools, nursing homes and other facilities to locate in certain residential neighborhoods without special permits.

But those permits were required for "hospitals for the insane or feeble-minded."

Man taken into custody after threatening employees

From Staff Reports

A 23-year-old man was in custody this morning on charges of making terroristic threats in two separate incidents Monday.

He was arrested after he appeared at 5:15 p.m. in the parking lot of Geo-Search Corp., 601 N. Marienfeld, threatening several employees. The man had an RG 22, a .22-caliber snub-nosed pistol, in his possession at the time, according to reports.

The man, who gave police a Lubbock and a Lamesa address, is suspected of phoning an employee at the company at about 5 p.m., threatening to burn down the building, according to statements from the employee.

The man also is a suspect in the Thursday fire of a Geo-Search employee's car. The fire is being investigated by the Midland Fire Marshal as arson.

The 1983 two-door Nissan, belonging to employee Paul Jean Quart, was found blazing at midnight Thursday in the company's parking lot, police said.

In other police reports filed Monday, Joyce O'Bannon reported the theft of a gold woven bracelet, valued at $780. The bracelet was taken between 3 p.m. and 6 p.m. Nov. 6 from a purse in a locked locker at 800 N. Big Spring.

Daniel D. Lyssy, 3109 W. Louisiana, reported his residence was burglarized between noon and 5:15 p.m. Monday. Entry was gained by unlocking a rear door, according to reports.

Taken were a $50 fillet fishing knife, a $45 6-inch hunting knife, a $75 .22-caliber pistol and a metal box containing old coins valued at $400. Total loss was placed at $570.

Lana Lyde reported the theft of two $200 watches on separate days from her purse in the back room of the Hair Salon, 2215 N. Midland Drive, No. 2D. According to reports, one watch was taken Nov. 5, while another was noticed missing Thursday.

Vince Carrasco, 314 E. Spruce, reported $314 worth of items were taken from his 1980 Thunderbird while it was parked at his residence between 9:30 p.m. Sunday and 7 a.m. Monday. Taken were a $189 mini-cassette tape recorder, a $110 four-channel scanner and $15 in change.

Gayle Koeninger, 4405 Dengar, reported the burglary of his 1982 Chevrolet Impala which was parked in his driveway between 6 p.m. Sunday and 8 a.m. Monday. Taken were a $200 briefcase and a $7 calculator.

In complaints filed with the county sheriff's office, a $200 microwave oven and $5 worth of change were reported stolen from Tommy Service General Contractors, 1117 E. Interstate 20, about a mile west of FM 1788. According to deputies, a door was believed to have been left open and a filing cabinet was pried open.

Dan Fender reported $400 worth of tools were stolen in a burglary of his warehouse on Bryan Road, south of I-20. Three saws were taken, according to deputies.

Two Midlanders hospitalized after pickup rolls over

From Staff Reports

Two Midland men were undergoing treatment this morning at Midland Memorial Hospital after they were injured in a one-vehicle rollover on Interstate 20 about 3.6 miles west of Midland.

John Rigsby, 23, was in critical condition, according to a hospital spokeswoman. John Ovsak, 29, was to be admitted although his condition had not been determined. Addresses of the two men were not immediately available.

Department of Public Safety reports state Ovsak was driving a 1973 International pickup north on County Road 1270 when, he said, his brakes went out and he was unable to stop at the south service road of I-20.

His pickup went through the intersection, hit a guardrail and the dividing cable and became airborne, reports said. It then flipped over on its top and slid across the interstate before hitting the median and flipping upright.

Ovsak and Rigsby were thrown through the front windshield.

DPS Trooper John Madden investigated.

A 30-year-old Midland woman was listed in satisfactory condition after she fell out of a pickup truck at the intersection of Midkiff and Illinois Monday morning.

Janet Wojtek and 5-year-old Darrel Wojtek, both of 804 Howard, fell out the passenger side door when a pickup, driven by Laura Lee Huff, 31, of 202 Howard, made a right turn onto Midkiff from Illinois at about 9:30 a.m.

The child was not admitted to MMH.

A 32-year-old Midland police officer assaulted early Nov. 6, was discharged from MMH Monday.

Wren Calhoun was injured after responding on a disturbance call at the intersection of Loop 250 and Garfield at about 2 a.m. The officer suffered internal bruises.

The 10-year-old sister of an 8-year-old girl killed Oct. 31 when a church van overturned has been moved up to satisfactory condition at MMH.

Yolanda Pope, 1807 E. Magnolia, was hospitalized with a fractured thigh.

Three other children injured in the accident have been released. Lejune Smith, 11, of 1508 N. Edwards, was released Saturday and Adrian Wright, 14, of 1609 Butternut, and Evelyn Weatherspoon, 6, of 1917 E. Nash, were released earlier.

The van was carrying 24 people to a church service in Big Spring when it overturned on Fairgrounds Road.

A 23-year-old assault victim was released from the hospital Monday.

Delphia Turner, of 300 S. Stonewall, was hospitalized Oct. 27 after being beaten around the head and body and suffering severe burns to the buttocks and thighs when forced to sit on a hot gas heater.

Police arrested her 32-year-old boyfriend, David Williams, in the incident.

Short caused apartment fire

Eleven firemen responded Monday morning to a fire at the Windtree Apartments, 3600 N. Loop 250. According to reports, Apartment 1-28 was occupied by Carl Martin.

The fire, caused by an electrical short, was confined inside the kitchen wall. The apartment sustained heavy damage but no injuries were reported.

A clothes dryer vent caused a fire at about 7 a.m. today in a utility room in the Gene Abernathy residence, 3511 W. Ohio. Reports indicate the fire began in the room and spread to the garage. Both appeared to have sustained heavy damage although no estimates were immediately available.

One hundred gallons of water were used to extinguish each fire.

Legislator wants people's opinions on state lottery

AUSTIN (AP) — A state lawmaker, saying Texans should be able to tell the Legislature what they think about a state-run lottery, has introduced a bill that would stage a non-binding election on the question.

The measure was one of several filed Monday in advance of the 1985 session.

Other bills introduced would base selection of national political convention delegates on primary election results and would require farmers to provide unemployment compensation for farmworkers.

The lottery election plan was offered by Rep. Ron Wilson, D-Houston, who said it wouldn't create a lottery but would allow Texans to tell lawmakers whether they favor one.

"It's highly unlikely that the Legislature would adopt a constitutional amendment providing for the creation of a state lottery without a clear mandate from the people of this state. By voting for my bill, the Legislature will give the people of Texas an opportunity to express their will," Wilson said.

Numerous other states operate lotteries, with proceeds financing state government, education and programs for the elderly. Establishing one in Texas would require an amendment to the state Constitution.

Wilson, who supports lotteries, said previous bills to create a state-run game "have died an untimely death," but that opinion polls indicate Texans like lotteries.

"There's a real big push not to allow any kind of gambling, or anything perceived as gambling, in the state. However, most people in the state favor a state lottery," he said.

'Monte Carlo' benefit brings Las Vegas to Midland

By LINDA ANDERSON

Outside the Atrium at ClayDesta National Bank the gold of the rising Harvest moon mingled with the silver beam of the spotlight welcoming guests. Inside, Las Vegas mingled with Midland at the seventh Monte Carlo Night, to benefit Midland County Chapter of the March of Dimes.

Guests attired in black ties mingled with those in business suits and "Roaring Twenties" costumes for the Saturday event, which was themed "Return to the Twenties." The crowd of about 1,000 people enjoyed Las Vegas-style casino gambling, a silent auction during the early evening and a live auction which began about 10:30 p.m.

The silent auction featured such items as Cabbage Patch dolls and other toys, clothing, travel packages and a Golden Retriever puppy complete with its own custom-built doghouse. Bids in the live auction were for mink jackets, a fishing trip to New Mexico, a father-and-son football clinic with former University of Texas Longhorn football stars, a red Mustang convertible and a 1984 Cavalier sedan, and a personal golf tournament for up to 40 players at Mission Country Club.

"Most auction items are donated," said Debra Mayes, executive director of the March of Dimes in Midland. "Some we pay wholesale for, but most are donated."

She said the fund-raiser "gets bigger every year. It takes a hard six months, but is really a year-round thing to plan."

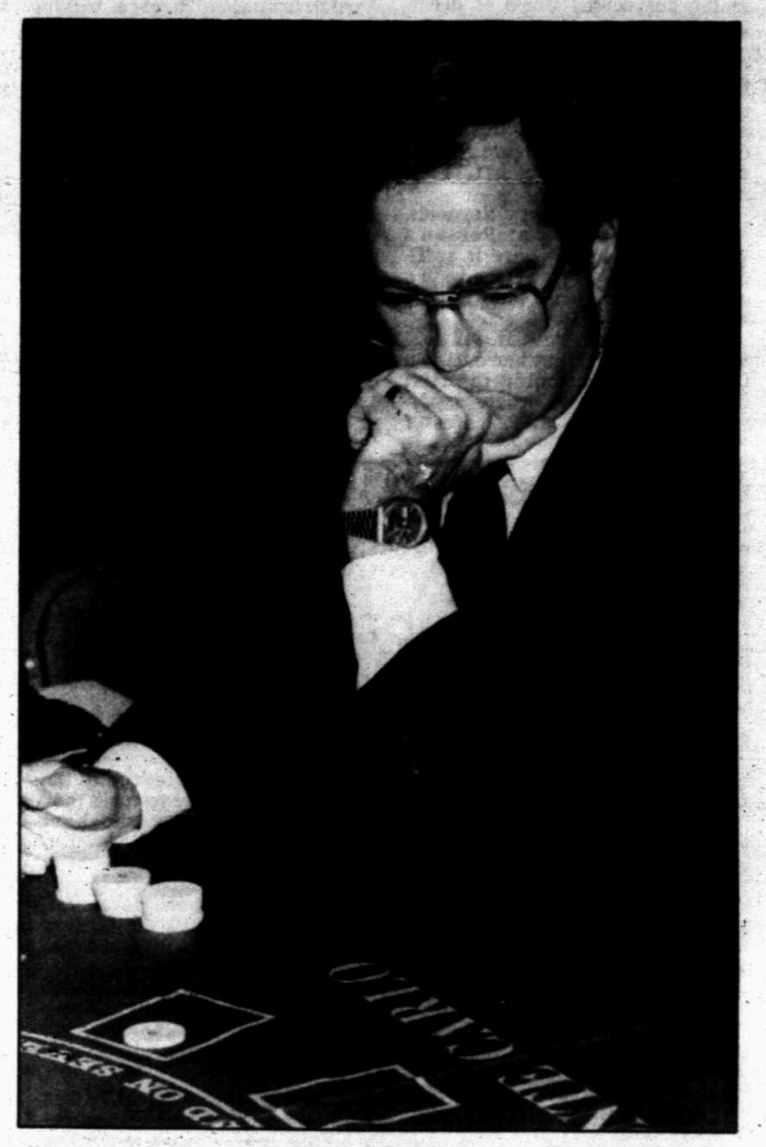

Because gambling was featured at the fund-raising event, Ms. Mayes said it was necessary to "adhere to very strict laws. It is a private party, guests can't exchange chips for cash, it must be for prizes or not at all. And it is for charity."

She said the chapter hoped to raise $150,000 for March of Dimes through this year's Monte Carlo Night. The charitable organization works to help prevent birth defects.

Suzanne Clark and Merrill Reynolds were co-chairmen for the event. Ms. Clark said about five Las Vegas dealers came to Midland to provide training for volunteers who were dealers at the party.

Joseph Skeen of Skeen's Auction Exchange of Midland conducted the live auction and the Plaza Club catered the event. The use of the Atrium was courtesy Mr. and Mrs. Clayton W. Williams Jr.

Officers of Midland County Chapter of March of Dimes are Martha Bernatis, chairman; Michael LeMond, vice chairman; Steve Harper, treasurer; and Sandra Woerndle, secretary.

Some spring collections feature skirts with 'standing room only'

By MARYLOU LUTHER
Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

PARIS — As the Duchess of Windsor said to Mainbocher when he suggested making her skirt wider at the hips: "Leave it. I will not sit in this skirt; I will only stand."

By all accounts, the duchess could afford to have skirts for standing and skirts for sitting. The rest of the female population will have to be careful next spring because 80 percent of the new skirts shown here this week are made for standing.

They're so tight and unforgiving they make walking difficult, even for the slimmest-hipped model. Sitting in them might well become an invitation to be arrested for indecent exposure.

Fortunately, help is on the way.

Valentino, who won the hearts of everyone at the shows by building a boardwalk over the mud and a canopy to shield his guests from the rain, also earned heartfelt thanks for proving that a narrow linen skirt can be seductive without being pornographic. His knee-length sheath skirts are cut so ingeniously they neither cup in back nor crease in front.

Karl Lagerfeld eases the skirt strain by raising hemlines at Chanel, where, for the first time in history, the entire knee — cap and all — is most naked for all to see.

HUBERT DE GIVENCHY eliminates the problem by creating the most perfectly cut shorts of the season — ladylike shorts suitable for city shopping.

Emanuel Ungaro does not really solve the skimpy skirt problem, but he avoids the attendant wrinkles of too-tightness by swathing the hip lines of his tight dresses with bands of pre-wrinkled, shirred silk.

Azzedine Alaia provides for movement in his skin-tight creations by making them in knits, curving the seams to the shape of the body and then unzipping the arc-like seams at the curve of the hips to show a flash of skin.

Yves Saint Laurent avoids the tight fight completely by offering full-skirted shirt dresses not unlike those '50s numbers so popular during his first years at Christian Dior.

Perhaps because she's a woman faced with solving the problem for herself, Jacqueline de Ribes has the best idea — dresses with their own panel attachments called the "returned-skirt effect." The dress itself is reed slim — just like de Ribes — but the elongated hemline folds up to the waist or even to the shoulders in back. When the model walks, the back of the gown floats free of the body like a stylish sail. When she's at rest, the back panel drapes over her body, covering any points of stress.

THE SKIRT is the one ingredient of next spring's fashion that separates the real masters of couture from the young ready-to-wear designers whose manufacturing standards are often not on a par with their design talent.

Valentino, whose let-me-show-you-how-it's-done collection set new standards in chic, celebrates the skirt by lavishing it with beads. One version in white lace with shiny silver bead embroidery is worn with a white sweater that's double-buttoned from neck to hem in rhinestones. Another not-quite-so-opulent style for day is in eyelet-embroidered beige suede worn with a matching beige sweater.

In a season of great shirts, the Rome-based designer, who always shows his ready-to-wear in Paris, offers the newest shirt in town. It's almost as simple as a camp shirt, but it has elbow-length cuffed sleeves, a V-neck and the initials VG (for Valentino Garavani, of course) monogrammed on the left breast pocket. Other simple ideas made special at the hands of Valentino include sweat shirts made of delicate silk prints banded in ribbed knit and simple white silk crepe tank dresses dripping with faux diamonds at the neck and armholes.

Lagerfeld's Chanel updates for spring offer not just the first knee-baring skirts but the first white cotton blouses, the first shawls and the first Chanel man in gray flannel pants without a fly front, worn with a typical navy knit Chanel jacket and maroon V-neck sweater. To make sure the audience saw it as a spoof of single-sex dressing, Lagerfeld had the male model give his jacket to a female model. It looked a lot better on her than on him. In addition to some big-shouldered suits with dropped shoulder seams, the big news at Chanel is in long pleated skirts in bright silks such as red and cobalt blue with equally bright sweaters.

IN A SEASON of sarongs — many of them unfortunate — Givenchy shows his mastery of the subject by tying them over sleek, elegant swimsuits or wrapping them to the back in bright floral prints for evening. His crisp poplin full skirts also look refreshing after all the cup-the-fanny numbers in other collections. Givenchy is in the pink for spring — geranium pink, cotton-candy pink, not-quite-shocking pink and sweet-pea pink. One outstanding outfit combines an orange gabardine waist-length jacket with classic pink trousers worn with white patent leather high heels. His always-elegant evening clothes star a short white cotton bolero beaded with purple butterflies and worn with white matte jersey pajamas.

De Ribes, whose sense of refinement is unequaled by any of her male design colleagues, expresses it for spring in a simple long white silk crepe evening gown with wrapped, blazer-like bodice that fastens with rhinestone buckles at the side of the hips. The narrow skirt is a lesson in lean — a wrap invention that maintains its slender look yet allows the wearer to walk or dance without inhibiting movement.

Saint Laurent eases into spring with wool double knits — comfortable wool double knits that appear as chemise dresses, pants, smocks, suits and jump suits. Comfort is also the key in his button-front shirt dresses with full, calf-length skirts, and his commodious smock coats.

Book teaches men 'color me handsome'

Hearst News Service

It's 8 a.m., and John is on his way to close a business deal. He is wearing his dress-for-success gray pinstriped suit, white shirt and burgundy tie.

But, oh no, he has unknowingly committed a fashion error that will make him look older, less confident and less handsome. You see, John is an Autumn, and "Autumns look distinctly awful in most grays," according to Carole Jackson in her newly-released book "Color for Men."

Jackson is the author whose "Color Me Beautiful" guide for women has sold more than 3 million copies and helped spawn a multimillion-dollar enterprise, with color consultants spreading the word worldwide. Now, with evangelical zeal, Jackson has applied her system to the male of the species. Preaching salvation by the color gospel, she once again groups converts according to their seasons: Winter, Summer, Spring and Autumn.

Basically, Winters appear spiffiest in vivid colors, dark colors or very light, icy shades — say, a navy suit with a pure white shirt and red tie. Summers come across best in pastels and muted dark colors. Springs are complemented by warm, golden colors in light to medium shades. Autumns, like John, would do well to stick to rich, deep earth colors such as brown and russet or muted gold-based shades.

While all four groups contain most of the same colors, it is the intensity that differs. Herein lies the problem. Unless you tote around the book or a batch of swatches as references, how would you recall the subtle differences in shades? Even trained eyes have difficulty making such distinctions. Imagine buying a teal blue shirt and finding that it has too much green for your season.

Jackson says her system is scientifically based.

"Your genes have determined the color of your skin, your hair and your eyes," she writes. "Only certain colors complement your natural coloring. When you wear the right colors, you come alive. Dressed in colors that work against what nature has given you, you fade away."

Fashion designers create more than clothing

NEW YORK (AP) — At one time, fashion designers dealt mostly in fabrics. Now they're turning out Bill Blass chocolates, Ralph Lauren furniture, Laura Ashley soaps and Pierre Cardin watches.

A fashion designer may know little about cooking chocolate or making watches, but that doesn't matter in the burgeoning world of licensing.

Top Seventh Avenue designers, who are presenting their spring collections this week, are scrambling to sell their names to the manufacturers of just about everything. And customers are paying more for the privilege of showing off those names.

"It's status," said Terry Reynolds, dean of marketing at Parson's School of Design. "There is sufficient snob appeal so a person is, in a sense, sporting a price tag when he wears a designer label."

Licensing is not new. It was 1924 when Coco Chanel put her name on Chanel No. 5, becoming the first fashion designer to create a perfume. Six decades later, scores of scents carry designer names.

The recent designer mania probably took hold with Pierre Cardin, who has licensed 540 manufacturers in 93 countries to make products with the Cardin label.

The first Cardin men's suits, produced under license, were introduced in 1967. Now there are Pierre Cardin sunglasses, luggage, bathing suits, umbrellas, tuxedos, pillows, cologne, slippers, walking sticks and more.

The latest, a line of table linens by Milliken mills called Pierre Cardin Pour La Table, was introduced this month.

Clothes designers use their noses to give approval to perfumes that will carry their name. Some get involved in the packaging and promoting. The same holds true for chocolates, stationery and bed linens.

"Ralph Lauren is certainly not a sheet designer, a household designer. He started in the tie business," Ms. Reynolds said. "Suddenly J.P. Stevens felt his name and his look, which is very classic, could be promoted successfully." Lauren oversees 15 licensees, including luggage, cosmetics, home furnishings, leather accessories, shoes and hosiery, and gives approval before his name goes on any of it. If the quality ever slips, the designer has the right to cancel the contract.

But a big designer "has just so much time in which to design whatever carries his label. All the designs cannot originate from his design table," Ms. Reynolds said. As a result, they hire apprentices, like Michelangelo did.

Because of licensing, Ms. Reynolds says, Americans are becoming more like Europeans; more aware of designers.

"There has always been a Bill Blass, but how many people knew him until he started putting his back-to-back B's on everything — including chocolate?" she said.

And there are no signs the fashion licensing boom is tapering off.

The entertainment industry is fertile ground for all kinds of licensing arrangements such as television's "Dynasty," which has 23 licensees so far. Rival "Dallas" is not far behind with plans for a "Southfork" collection, named for the Ewing family ranch.

Coca-Cola recently signed a licensing agreement with Murjani International Inc. to produce a line of jeans and denim apparel with the Coke label.

Halston has created his Halston III line for J.C. Penney's.

Four-time Coty award winner Perry Ellis has signed a licensing agreement with Levi Strauss & Co., the largest apparel company in the nation, to produce a line of sportswear under the Perry Ellis America label.

It was Ellis' 14th licensing pact, joining his line of furs, legwear, scarves and other accessories.

Ms. Reynolds said a survey done 25 years ago showed that the most widely recognized labels in America were Sanforized and the Good Housekeeping Seal of Approval.

"Bill Blass was unheard of," she said. "It's marketing, all marketing."

Adoptive parent hurt by child's search

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: You have said on numerous occasions that you are in full agreement that adoptees should be able to meet their birth parents, but only if it's mutually agreeable.

You make no mention of the feelings or wishes of the adoptive parents! Nor does anyone else in this selfish, curiosity-satisfying trend toward such reunions.

As one who has been devastated by this situation, I have a word of caution to protect adoptive parents from that kind of heartbreak: If you can possibly do so, hide forever from your adopted child the fact that he or she is adopted. Sign me ... DEVASTATED

DEAR DEVASTATED: All adoptees who know they are adopted have a natural curiosity about their birth parents. ("Who do I look like? Do I have any half-brothers, sisters, grandparents?" etc.)

Although all adoptees may not have a burning desire to meet their birth parents, those who have should not be denied that right, providing their birth parents want to meet them.

I am sorry you were devastated, but I believe that it is the right of every adoptee to know that he or she was adopted.

There is much more than "selfish curiosity" involved: Please consider the importance of being aware of one's genetic background in cases of hereditary diseases.

DEAR ABBY: What should a lady do when a man whistles at her? Should she smile? Should she ignore him? Or should she tell him off? — SANDY

DEAR SANDY: It depends on how the lady feels about being whistled at. A smile could be interpreted as a positive response, and the whistler may follow her and try to get to know her better.

If she ignores him, her message to the whistler is clear: "I'm not interested."

DEAR ABBY: I am 72 years old and people keep asking me how come I look so young — what's my secret? So I tell them my secret.

Every summer I go up to the mountains for four months to gulp fresh air and drink pure water. This helps to flush out all the pollution I've swallowed for eight months in the dirty city.

I eat only healthy foods such as kidneys, heart, liver and tongue — all organs with blood. Blood is the perfect food. Ask Dracula.

Next, I got rid of all my relatives — close as well as distant. The greater the distance, the better. Relatives are like fish: After three days they stink. They can put more wrinkles in your face than your teenagers. Sign me ... LOOKING GOOD IN SCOTTSDALE, ARIZ.

Marriage partnership necessary convenience

By ERMA BOMBECK

Marriage is holding its own in this country and I think I know why.

People who travel through life alone have trouble functioning in an "Ark" society where everyone travels two by two. I'm not talking cupcakes that come two to a package or the seat at the counter when you want to eat out. I'm talking practical.

Let's say you're a single person and you own a car. When it runs, you have no problem. But what happens when the motor dies? You're paralyzed. You need a partner to jockey cars around. Most of my married life has been spent following my husband to the service department, dropping him off at work and making arrangements for his pickup in the evening. Playing musical cars is the only time together most couples have anymore. The odds of your car running for an entire month without some kind of service is a two-billion-to-one shot. It takes two.

Cooking spaghetti for one defies restraint. I have seen a single person add a handful of spaghetti to the boiling water, look at the pitiful strands swirling around and add another handful every time he passes the pot until it "looks right." By the time it's finished, he has enough spaghetti to feed the New York chapter of the Sons of Italy at a Columbus Day rally. With a mate, you could send spaghetti sandwiches in a lunch box for three weeks, but alone, you're stuck.

I think the worst thing about living alone would be to accept the responsibility for everything. There's no one else to blame for leaving the milk out, the porch light on, tearing up the paper, leaving toothpaste in the sink, screwing up the checking account or forgetting to fill the ice cube trays. You're it.

Single people have no conscience to tell them if they don't go to bed, they'll wake up in the morning looking like Dorian Gray. And when their alarm goes off, they can't take a chance of turning it off and going back to sleep.

I know a lot of people who live alone who wouldn't have it any other way. They say when the phone rings, it's for them. They can eat from the skillet, have onions after 6 p.m., play their music loud and never run out of hot water.

This may be true, but down the line when the natural color has gone from your roots and Geritol is a mouthwash, you will find that you cannot finish a single sentence without the help of a mate. You'll say, "I saw ... you know" and he'll say, "I know who you mean. How is she? Still living at ..." "You got it," you'll say, "same old address. I don't see why she doesn't move to Seattle to be with her sister ... What is her name?" "Phyllis, and I couldn't agree more," he'll say. "Is Phyllis still a ... you know." "Therapist," you'll say, "and don't give me any more news. I'm exhausted."

Prints, soft lines featured in several spring collections

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — Perry Ellis has spent a lot of time in California recently. In fact, right after the presentation of his spring collection in his Seventh Avenue showroom, he planned to hop on a plane to Los Angeles, where the birth of his child is imminent. "The mother is an old friend for 15 years," the designer said of the child's mother, Barbara Gallagher, a free-lance television writer. "No, we don't expect to be married."

But California holds more than a personal attraction for Ellis. It shows in the names he gave to pieces in his new collection — "Suited for Chasen's," "Paramount Polka Dots," "Malibu Linens" — and in the pale shades, particularly when adapted to the men's clothes. And it shows in the sultry sophistication of the clothes, a change for Ellis.

"He has taken a Hollywood silver-screen scenario and turned it into credible, modern clothes," said Geraldine Stutz, president of Henri Bendel.

Long, fingertip-length jackets are cut with a softness — far more West Coast than New York — that characterizes the blouses and pants worn with them. Katharine Hepburn might not have worn the short wrap skirt Ellis offers as an option in this look, but she would approve of the total effect.

Ellis has taken an equally independent turn on the print explosion of the season. While others have scattered flowers across fabric, Ellis uses one huge bloom, often a carnation or a rose, carefully spaced on silk. His patterned sweaters, inspired by playing cards, are of a tunic shape, while other sweaters are the leanest and longest in town, done in silk-knit with matching skirts. "I guess I've seen a lot of skinny bodies in California," he said after the Thursday show.

There was nothing too tight about the clothes Ralph Lauren showed in his spring collection the evening before in his showroom.

While the main shirt Ellis showed was in silk and softly draped from a shoulder yoke, Lauren's collection was built around a big white cotton shirt with a stand-up collar. In a season when the shirt is the linchpin of most collections from Europe to Seventh Avenue, Lauren is a master. He knows not only how to cut a shirt, but how to pair it with a short skirt, a sarong, shorts or pants, in a fabric mix that makes it look modern.

He showed the white shirt with pastel suede walking shorts, and then with a wonderful floral print chintz sarong skirt. He also offered the floral print in a jacket with white pants, and a floral print T-shirt with white pants in linen, tapered and kept in place with a strap under the foot.

A nifty ensemble for work when the weather gets warm would be Lauren's white shirt, pinstripe trousers and brown reptile belt tipped in silver, or the white shirt with a simple, short wrap black or white linen skirt. And for evening, that same cotton shirt looks great with white Charmeuse trousers and a silk tweed jacket.

Oscar de la Renta found something new to do with shirts, too. For his customers, he beaded them.

Those customers, who are also his friends — many of the same women who were at Bill Blass' show — were out in force at his show Wednesday at the Parsons School of Design. Nancy Kissinger, Marie-Helene de Rothschild, Princess Firyl and the Duchess of Feria were among those who applauded the slim suits, wrapped jersey dresses and evening clothes.

De la Renta made it respectable to go to dinner in a beaded shirt with pastel pants. Just to make sure everyone got the message, he showed nine of them, in different colors.

Adrienne Vittadini's shirts were cut in a big way, in florals or striped cotton, or white silk, often teamed with pants or wide-leg shorts.

She has apparently been doing her homework at the primitive exhibition at the Museum of Modern Art. Her bold sweater patterns build on this theme, a welcome alternative to the many florals around.

Men with 'less cash' wanting 'more dash' find help

Copley News Service

Most men are a little intimidated about shopping for clothes, says Leonard McGill, who has written a book to help them.

The book is "More Dash Than Cash" (Fawcett Columbine, $7.95) and is an expanded version of a column he wrote for a year for the men's fashion magazine, Gentleman's Quarterly. He also teaches a course by that title at an extension school in New York where he lives.

McGill, 28, said during a recent phone interview from New York that the problem with men and shopping is that "most guys just don't know where to start." He advises going to a good department store or men's speciality store and letting a knowledgeable salesman educate you about quality, fit and color for starters. Then, via his book, he offers "over a dozen different strategies for saving money on men's clothes."

These range from how to shop at discount stores, sales and thrift shops to mail order shopping and ordering suits and other items custom-made from a tailor in Hong Kong. There's also advice on cutting your own hair and making your own after-shave tonic. The secret, McGill says, is knowing what you're doing.

"My students at the class are just like everybody else; mostly average guys who are finding that they want to dress a little better these days because just about everybody is, but they don't know enough about it to feel comfortable. I try to help them overcome that by knowing some of the shopping strategies."

McGILL BEGAN writing about men's fashions six years ago after working as an intern at a menswear magazine after earning a degree in journalism from the University of Florida. He realized that "more and more men are interested in clothing and how to dress, but that not many writers were addressing the subject. It seemed a good speciality."

Here are some of his ideas on stretching your shopping dollars.

— Discount shopping: "You have to be wary about discount stores. You have to know your labels — or find out who the manufacturer is by using his RN or WPL number." The RN or WPL number on an inner tag in a garment identifies a manufacturer as required by the Federal Trade Commission which is not to be removed from the garment. There is a list of these in the book. Some typical numbers include: Geoffrey Beene, RN 33293; Bill Blass, RN 38344; Pierre Cardin, RN41858; Calvin Klein, RN54718; Yves Saint Laurent, RN 48545.

"Then you can get to know the salespeople at a discounter's. They're more flexible than the store owner, and they know the rhythms of the discount store; when things are coming in or what label it is. You can get to know what you can find regularly at discounters by shopping regularly there. Potluck discount shopping is better for the frequent shopper than for the fellow who shops only twice a year."

— Thrift stores: "Buying used clothing can cut the cost 90 percent in some cases but it takes a little more time and diligence. Right now suits from the 1940s are much in fashion and you can find those at vintage clothing stores. The editor of M magazine, Robert Bryan, always wears thrift shop clothes and he looks great."

McGILL ADVISES men to find out when their favorite thrift store receives consignments so they can look through early, to check for sales and to try things on, remembering that garments of good quality can be altered. Wool winter coats and military garb are generally good buys. And don't forget flea markets with their tables of thrifty used clothing, estate sales, rummage and garage sales and dry cleaners' sales of unclaimed clothing as other sources for vintage clothes.

— Mail order: "When you have learned a little more about what you like, then you can do well ordering by mail," McGill says. Pants, for example, are shipped the exact inseam length you order. First step is to order all the catalogues which feature garments you're interested in, then check through for special bargains, such as an extra T-shirt when you order a dozen T-shirts, or similar offers. The bottom line is that garments you order and then don't like can be returned. But if there are problems beyond that, McGill lists agencies such as the Direct Mail Marketing Association with addresses and phone numbers for the disgruntled consumer to contact.

— Hong Kong: "This is more exotic shopping, but the values are there," McGill says. There are three ways to shop via Hong Kong: by going there, by visiting a tailor from Hong Kong who makes periodic trips to this country, or by ordering through the mail. For the middle idea, he suggests writing to a tailoring firm in Hong Kong to ask for an itinerary of a traveling tailor, then meeting him in the closest city. To order by mail, he suggests writing to a firm in Hong Kong to request fabric samples and order forms, and telling the company what you're interested in, such as a dark business suit or a shirt. Either way, McGill believes in always going for quality when you order. Customs duties and postal charges for air or sea shipping will be charged to the buyer.

HE RECOMMENDS two Hong Kong tailors: Ying Tai Limited, Hotel Peninsula, 1A Mezzanine Floor, Kowloon, Hong Kong; or T.M. Tom, Hotel Peninsula, 8 Mezzanine Floor, Kowloon, Hong Kong. Both these firms send representatives here as well as filling orders by mail. Half a dozen other Hong Kong tailors are listed in the book.

Poor have little 'hold on mind of nation'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The head of America's Roman Catholic bishops says the group may be moving away from its 50 million-member flock by considering a major new policy statement that urges more help for the nation's poor.

"In the face of an increasing number of Americans in poverty, there is some troubling evidence in many public opinion polls of the last year of a declining hold of the poor on the mind of the nation," Bishop James W. Malone said Monday.

But he said those findings are not a reason to back off — merely another public opinion challenge for church leaders who have become used to them.

Shaping and reinforcing opinion has been at the heart of the bishops' newly aggressive public stance on such issues as nuclear weapons, the nation's economy, as well as their long-running battle against abortion, Malone told about 300 colleagues.

In his speech opening the annual meeting of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, Malone quickly defended church leaders' increasing efforts to influence public issues.

Some critics have said the bishops should stick to traditional religious matters, but Malone said to remain silent on controversial issues could actually be considered a "dereliction of pastoral duty."

The bishops have not lacked for attention, he said, but he acknowledged that the task of actually influencing policy was not simple.

"It is hardly ever possible to translate public opinion directly into a policy position," he said. Still, he added that opinion "does set an atmosphere...establishes some clear demands and it draws some clear lines, beyond which democratically elected leaders move only with great difficulty."

Ticking off issues the bishops have concentrated on in recent pastoral letters, he claimed no final victories.

Before last year's anti-nuclear "peace pastoral" was published, public opinion had already shifted to a view that the nuclear arms race was not only dangerous, but futile.

"But there has not been a translation of this consensus into policy," he said.

While Catholic leaders continue to press for abortion restrictions, Malone conceded the public opinion battle had not been won among the faithful. "We especially need to concentrate our efforts to assist our Catholic people in their efforts to form correct consciences."

On the economy, too, he said that "we may face a public opinion problem of how to keep the needs of the poor central in the public and policy vision, when the poor are a minority in our midst."

That would be one main goal of the 112-page "Pastoral Letter on Catholic Social Teaching and the U.S. Economy."

Wattenberg blames bad news on media

NEW YORK (AP) — Ben J. Wattenberg says he's read enough bad news.

Here's the portrait of America that leaps from his palette:

Life expectancy is increasing. The educational system is a marvel. The standard of living continues to rise. Crime rates appear to be dropping. American values — family, church, the work ethic — are steadfast.

"I believe we live in a nation that in most respects — excuse the expression — never had it so good," writes Wattenberg, in his new book, "The Good News is the Bad News is Wrong."

Why, then, is the national brow wrinkled with worry? Mostly because the media, particularly television, ignore good news, play up bad news and even manage to turn good news into bad news, Wattenberg says.

"It's not that they get the story wrong. It's that they get the wrong story," he said, at a recent press luncheon. "The media in this country — not conspiratorially, but systematically — are not reporting the remarkable story of real progress in this country."

Wattenberg, 51, a fellow of the conservative American Enterprise Institute and former speechwriter for Lyndon Johnson and Hubert Humphrey, spent 2½ years delving through census and other data in search of the "right" stories.

The result? Some bits of bad news (high crime by and against blacks, smaller cars that are less safe, a decreasing birth rate that may soon present problems), but multitudes of good-news statistics.

There were 69,000 women bus drivers in 1970, 177,000 in 1984. The number of air-conditioned houses jumped from 24 million to 48 million in the 1970s. Accidental deaths dropped from 56 per 100,000 population in 1970 to 47 in 1980. The elderly poor fell from 35.2 percent in 1959 to 4.1 percent in 1982.

And then there are "Super Numbers," numbers that seem to "jump out of the computers as if encased in neon and surrounded by exclamation points."

SUPER NUMBER: By 1982, 1,127,000 blacks were enrolled in college — an increase of 117 percent since 1970 and more than 900 percent since 1950.

SUPER NUMBER: From 1970 to 1984, America added 26 million new jobs, more than the total number of jobs in Italy in 1984.

SUPER NUMBER: From 1970 to 1982, life expectancy for 40-year-old Americans increased 2.6 years, to 77.2 years. "Since 1970, adult life expectancy went up faster than at any time in recent American history," he said.

Liberals ignore these numbers in favor of gloomy assessments; they would be better off boasting that liberal programs work, and need only be fine tuned, Wattenberg says. Conservatives ignore evidence that American values are strong, creating issues where none exist, he says.

But the "negative bias" of the media, said Wattenberg, is responsible for the prevailing view that America is besieged.

Take life expectancy. Wattenberg claims that a few stories noting that Americans are living longer, healthier lives have been outweighed by daily accounts of pollution, cancer risks and medical malpractice.

"I'm very interested in how long I'm going to live and I suggest many other people are, too," he said.

But he said many of those people only learned about their good fortune when it was reported that the Social Security system was imperiled; too many people were living too long and thus drawing benefits over a longer span.

'Classic crook's' fate shows problems of insane criminals

MIAMI (AP) — Renee Turolla, author of a 400-page report on Dade County's problems in dealing with insane criminals, wasn't surpised when she read that her classic crook had been shot to death during a drug dispute.

After two years of following James Edward Tucker through 18 arrests and 112 court appearances, Ms. Turolla says she had a feeling his troubled life would end in tragedy.

"I was shocked, but not surprised," said Ms. Turolla, who has chaired the Court Aid program for the Greater Miami Crime Commission. "I almost felt I knew him and I was waiting for something to happen."

Tucker, 29, was shot last week. The killer got away.

Ms. Turolla's nearly completed report, to be released in January, is entitled "Mentally Ill Criminals in Dade County: A Report on the Problem and How to Deal With It."

She used Tucker's case as the perfect example — of the problem, not of how it should be dealt with effectively.

A shotgun blast ended Tucker's 11-year odyssey through jails, courts, hospitals and community programs. According to the report, he had spent 918 days in jail and 1,033 days under treatment in state hospitals.

Former Israeli defense minister launches court attack on Time

NEW YORK (AP) — Former Israeli Defense Minister Ariel Sharon launches his court attack on Time magazine today, claiming he was libeled by a report saying he discussed vengeance with Lebanese Phalangists before hundreds of Palestinians were massacred in Beirut in 1982.

U.S. District Judge Abraham D. Sofaer and a jury of four men and two women were set to hear the $50 million lawsuit in Manhattan.

Sharon has called Time's report on the findings of an Israeli investigation into the September 1982 massacre "a blood libel." He said he sued "for the honor and pride of the Jewish people and the state of Israel."

Time has called the suit "an attempt by a foreign politician to justify his conduct of a war by his state and to enhance his political reputation." The weekly magazine, based in New York, also said Sharon "is supported in that effort by the government of his state."

Time has also argued that Sharon is "libel-proof" — that his reputation was so poor that he suffered no damage, and that he remains politically prominent. Sharon is now Minister of Industry and Commerce in Israel's coalition government.

The lawsuit centers on one paragraph in a Feb. 21, 1983, Time article about the findings of the Kahan Commission. The blue-ribbon panel criticized Sharon and other Israeli leaders for the massacre of Palestinians at refugee camps following the Israeli invasion of Lebanon two years ago.

At issue are the actions of Sharon and others in the days following the Sept. 14, 1982, assassination of Lebanon's president-elect, Bashir Gemayel.

Two-year-old girl dies after new liver fails

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A 2-year-old girl who became the second person to receive a transplanted heart and liver in one operation died when her new liver failed, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Kellie Cochran of Birmingham, Ala., died at Childrens' Hospital of Pittsburgh Monday after having received two hearts and a liver in transplant operations Friday and Sunday, said hospital spokeswoman Nancy Petrowski.

Stormie Jones, 7, of Cumby, Texas, who underwent the world's first simultaneous heart-liver transplant here on Feb. 14, is still alive.

Baptist convention meets

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Charles Pickering of Laurel, president of the Mississippi Baptist Convention, has called on Baptists to help "God's work" in influencing morality.

He issued the challenge Monday to about 1,500 delegates attending the 149th session of the state convention at First Baptist Church in Jackson.

Pickering, an attorney and a former state senator, said society has been degraded by pornography, homosexuality and divorce.

The convention is meeting amidst worries that disagreements between factions may disrupt the denomination's business.

Reward brings information

SEATTLE (AP) — Thirty volunteers will man telephones to field tips pouring in since police announced a $100,000 reward for information leading to the solution of the Green River serial slayings, authorities said.

Forty calls came in within hours of the reward's announcement Thursday, and the calls continued Friday, said Fae Brooks, a spokeswoman for the task force investigating the killings.

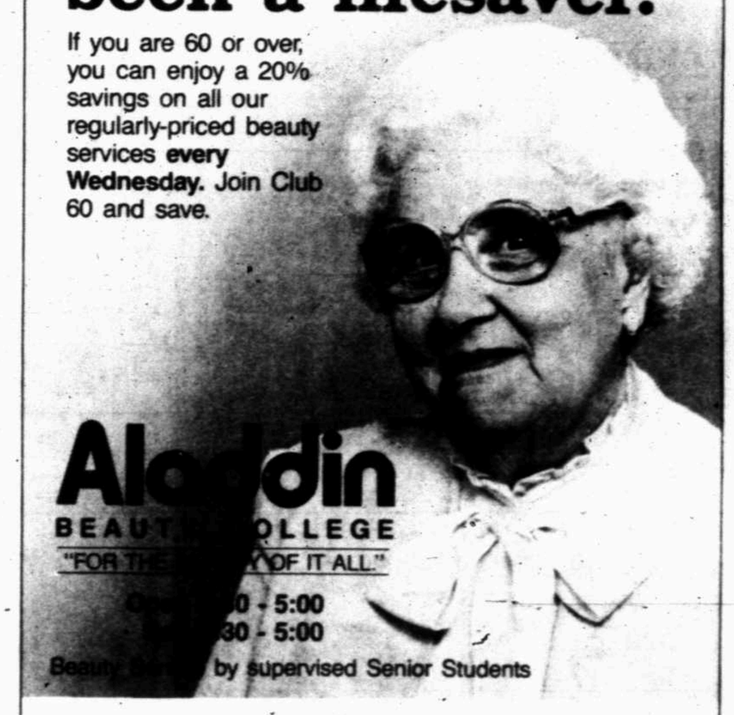

The Green River killer is said by police to have slain 27 young women, most of them linked to prostitution.

Women's drinking studied

Top model advised to take time off from work

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) — Carol Alt, considered one of the few female fashion models with both a million-dollar look and the ability to speak well on camera, says her agent recently told her to take time off because she was working too much.

"Everything is open to me," said the tall brunette, who has appeared on 250 magazine covers and is married to New York Rangers hockey player Ron Greschner. "Every day I throw away five or six invitations for parties and the most popular nightclubs."

According to TV Guide magazine, modeling experts estimate that only about 20 of 200 of the top female models can do television work. Ms. Alt was among those cited for both good looks and ability to speak on camera.

"I can't find anybody," Nancy Fields, casting director at the Ted Bates advertising agency, said of the gap between posing and talking. "If they didn't have to speak, it wouldn't be a problem."

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Rock star Prince, who is coming home to the Twin Cities for his first concerts since hitting the big time, has already jammed the phone circuits.

Thousands of Prince fans tried to call a number Monday to buy tickets to the Minneapolis native's performances Dec. 26-27 in St. Paul, creating Minneapolis' worst phone tie-up ever, said Northwestern Bell spokesman John Walker.

The snarl, which began shortly after 7 a.m. and continued through noon, could have been worse had federal offices and some businesses not been closed for Veterans Day, Walker said.

"It was a major inconvenience for a lot of customers," he said, comparing the phone congestion to a freeway packed with cars trying to get to a special event. "Everybody gets on there and there just isn't room for anybody to move."

• • •

SENECA FALLS, N.Y. (AP) — Former Democratic vice presidential candidate Geraldine Ferraro says she's "very honored" she was chosen to receive the second annual Elizabeth Cady Stanton Award, named for the 19th century suffragette.

The New York City congresswoman did not attend a celebration Sunday marking Mrs. Stanton's 169th birthday, but sent a letter thanking the Stanton Foundation for the award.

"I'm very honored that you have judged my activities equivalent" to those of Mrs. Stanton, she said in her letter.

The first award, presented in 1983, went to Melley Kleman of Waterloo, who was cited for her arrest that year while protesting the arrests of women during an anti-nuclear march.

NEW YORK (AP) — The Princess Grace Foundation, created by Prince Ranier of Monaco to honor his late wife, Princess Grace, has named the first group of talented young American dance and theater artists to receive grants in her memory.

The couple's children, Prince Albert and Princess Stephanie, attended a news conference Monday at which nine artists from New York to Los Angeles were named for scholarships, apprenticeships or fellowships.

The winners were selected by the foundation's arts advisory board, with the help of recommendations from schools and companies.The foundation intends to fund awards totaling more than $1 million in the next five years.

The announcement of the awards coincided with the 55th birthday of Princess Grace, who gave up a career as a movie star to marry Ranier. She died in a car crash in 1982.

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — Award-winning children's author Judy Blume says the recent banning of three of her books at local elementary schools is "scary."

Peoria School Superintendent Harry Whitaker defended the banning last week, saying books should be dropped if there is a conflict over their effect on "our democratic ideals or our moral values."

"It's scary when a superintendent says, 'Let's get rid of anything that's controversial,'" Ms. Blume said Monday. She has written 14 children's books and three novels for adults.

Two school committees ordered the books removed after parents complained about six of Ms. Blume's books, according to Associate Superintendent Dennis Gainey.

The banned books were "Then Again Maybe I Won't," "Deenie" and "Blubber."

Baby Fae back in oxygen tent

LOMA LINDA, Calif. (AP) — Baby Fae, her body trying to reject the baboon heart implanted in her 18 days ago, has been returned to an oxygen tent after 30 hours of breathing on her own, hospital officials say.

Doctors at Loma Linda University Medical Center on Monday upgraded the stated severity of the rejection episode, with spokeswoman Patti Gentry calling it "more moderate than mild."

Baby Fae remained in serious, stable condition, as she has since the week after the operation, said Ms. Gentry, adding that "She's coming out of the rejection."

The month-old baby, known to the public only as Baby Fae at her parent's request, received the heart Oct. 26 to replace her own lethally defective organ.

She has spent more of her life with the baboon's heart than with her own, and is the longest-living human recipient of a heart from another species.

"They put her back on oxygen as a result of the rejection," spokesman Dick Schaefer said Monday, adding that laboratory tests completed Saturday confirmed the rejection episode had begun Friday morning.

The five-pound baby was responding well to immunosuppressant drugs designed to thwart the body's expected efforts to reject foreign matter such as the baboon heart, said Ms. Gentry.

The rejection episode initially was characterized as mild.

"She was responding well, and they thought it was under control," said Schaefer. "Then it (the rejection episode) returned."

"There's no red flag that pops up and says, 'rejection,'" he said. "It's like a puzzle. When you have two or three pieces, you can't see it. But when you get enough to tell what the picture is going to be, you can go ahead and treat it."

The Regional Organ Procurement Agency at UCLA reported Monday that Loma Linda asked Nov. 1 to put Baby Fae on the agency's waiting list for a human heart, in case she needs a second transplant.

Critics say the Loma Linda transplant team should have sought a human heart before transplanting the baboon heart. The hospital did not do so.

Dr. Leonard Bailey, who headed the transplant team, contended human infant heart donors are so rare that he wanted to test baboon hearts for babies who otherwise would die because of fatal heart defects.

Stalin's daughter seen in Moscow

MOSCOW (AP) — Josef Stalin's daughter, who returned to the Soviet Union after 17 years in the West, was seen leaving a hotel today. She told Western reporters she had nothing to say to them.

"I have no comment," Svetlana Alliluyeva said when approached as she left the Sovietskaya Hotel.

Word that the 59-year-old Miss Alliluyeva was staying at the hotel leaked to Western correspondents this week. The hotel staff referred inquiries about her to the Soviet Foreign Ministry, but the ministry said it had nothing to do with Miss Alliluyeva.

Cable News Network filmed Miss Alliluyeva and her 13-year-old daughter, Olga, leaving the hotel and getting into a car on Monday, but the two did not speak to the CNN crew. The news crew tried to follow the mother and daughter, but their car was blocked by another automobile.

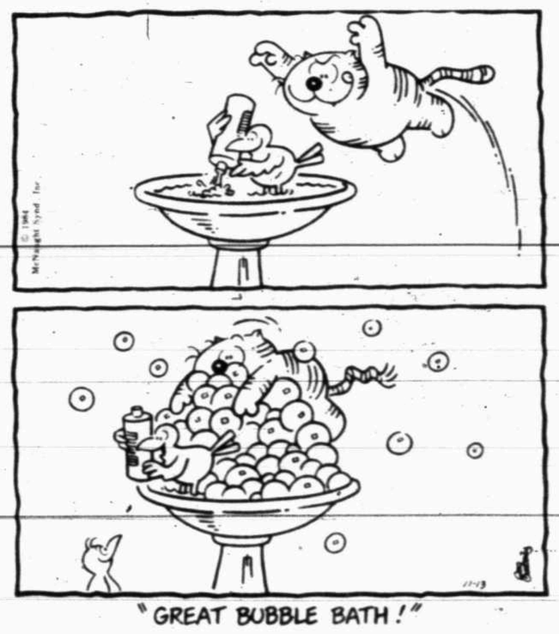

Today, Western correspondents staked out the Sovietskaya, which the Soviet government uses to house official guests.

Shortly after noon, Miss Alliluyeva emerged and said in English, "I have no comment," then hurried into a black Volga sedan that had license plates indicating it was a government vehicle.

Plainclothes policemen shielded Miss Alliluyeva from reporters.

Her American-born daughter, whose father is American architect William Peters, also was seen in the car.

Mr. T's album has message about drugs

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Tough-talking Mr. T warbles his way through a new album that features messages about drugs and getting an education.

The album, called "Mr. T's Commandments," from Columbia, is the latest in a line of merchandising from the star of NBC's "The A-Team." His biography, "Mr. T — Man With the Gold," was just published by St. Martin's Press.

Though he feels that the lyrics of some songs are "evil," he has no reservation about using songs to get his message across.

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — It may be just ground beef on a bun to you and me, but to Guyla Descy, the hamburger is his life's passion.

The Indiana University linguistics instructor has been studying the hamburger for some 20 years, sampling versions around the globe. And now he's sharing his experiences in a book, "Hamburger for America and the World."

"I traveled around the United States every year, visiting small cities, villages, hamburger parlors, and I made the observation that the real 'breeding' places of the hamburger are the small parlors, not big company outlets," said Decsy, 59.

He has tried the Dallas Burger in Varmland, Sweden. He's eaten the Waikiki Burger — not in Hawaii, but in Albuquerque, N.M. He's tasted the Brontosaurus Burger in Dinosaur, Colo.

The best, he says, was probably in California, where extra toppings were piled high. And the unquestionable worst was in Budapest, Hungary, where one restaurant segregated the sandwich to a serving area called "East Berlin."

But while the hamburger is something of an American institution, it was Decsy's native European city that originally provided inspiration for his two-decade odyssey in beef. He hails from Hamburg, Germany.

Opening lead: Five of ♠.

All too many people play bridge by rote. When you try to point out the error of their ways, they will cite one of the many bridge saws to justify their action. These maxims cover generalities — they are not designed to replace common sense.

South's jump rebid of two no trump shows 19-20 points, and is not forcing — partner can pass with a minimum response. Here, however, North judged that his reasonable five-card suit and honor combinations justified going on to game.

West made his normal lead of his fourth-best spade, and declarer inserted the ten from dummy. When East covered with the queen, the contract could no longer be defeated. Declarer won the ace, took the diamond finesse, then repeated it when East held up the king one round. The jack of spades proved to be an entry to the table and declarer had nine tricks.

This was not the time to play "third hand high" at the first trick. East should have realized the play of the queen could not possibly gain — declarer always had at least two tricks in the spade suit.

What was important, though, was to try to shut out dummy's long diamond suit. Obviously, there was no entry to the table other than the jack of spades. And that card can be neutralized if East simply plays a low spade to the first trick!

Declarer is helpless. His best shot is to come to hand with a heart to try the diamond finesse. Now East holds up the king of diamonds for one round, and declarer may end up down three tricks! Quite a swing for a "third hand low" play.

Steinle's Body Shop is commited to quality workmanship

Steinle's Body Shop specializes in fiberglass body work. No plastic parts will be substituted on these damaged cars, fiberglass parts will be ordered or custom made for each customer. Once the body work is completed a top quality lacquer job make the vehicles looking like new, once again.

Steinle's Body Shop specializes in quality body work for sports cars, as well as luxury cars and trucks. Experience and a strong commitment to superior workmanship is what makes Roger Steinle stand apart from the rest.

Roger has 12 years of experience in body work with 8 years being dedicated primarily to fine fiberglass work. In addition, Roger has spent 2 years rebuilding totalled Datsun 280 Zs and Mazda RX7s. His initial training was at one of the best trade schools in the nation. With this practical training and years of experience, Roger opened his own shop, Steinle's Body Shop, 1½ years ago.

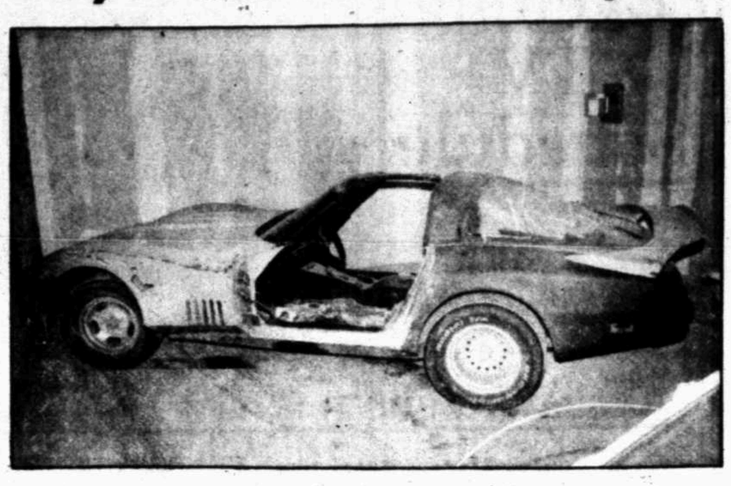

Steinle's Body Shop puts out first quality work, no short cuts are allowed. Maybe that's why the former Midland/Odessa Rolls-Royce dealer depended on Steinle's Body Shop for any necessary body work.

If a damaged car body is made of fiberglass Roger will replace the damaged parts with fiberglass, not plastic. This is critical to the future value of the car. Though plastic may be cheaper and easier to work with, it heats differently than fiberglass does. Therefore, eventually the plastic piece in a fiberglass body will crack out.

Many Corvette owners have found that Steinle's is the best place to have their body work done because of this commitment to doing the job right. Moreover, Roger has access to just about any part a Corvette body may need. For older models Roger will actually custom make any fiberglass piece which can't be bought.

Roger points out that the paint job is also very important. The original paint job on many luxury cars and sports cars is lacquer (for example: Cadillacs and Corvettes). Lacquer offers a sharper look than enamel because it has absolutely no dust in it; whereas, no matter how well an enamel paint job is it will have some dust. For this reason, Roger is careful to match the original paint not only in color, but also in type of paint.

Roger goes another step and uses an infrared heater to actually bake the paint onto the car. All this may be a little more trouble, but it's worth it to make sure that the car looks like new.

Roger Steinle of Steinle's Body Shop is in the process of putting a turbo kit on this Corvette. To find out about having a turbo kit put on your Corvette, call Roger at 687-1955.

If you are interested in having high quality body work done call 687-1955. Or go by Steinle's Body Shop at 1308 S. Midkiff, Stuite 313. Quality is worth it!

Two House of Carpets Executives awarded certification by RFI

The Retail Floorcovering Institute (RFI) with offices in Chicago, Illinois and Washington, D. C., recently announced the awarding of Certified Floorcovering Specialist (CFS) status to two Midland men, both executives with House of Carpets.

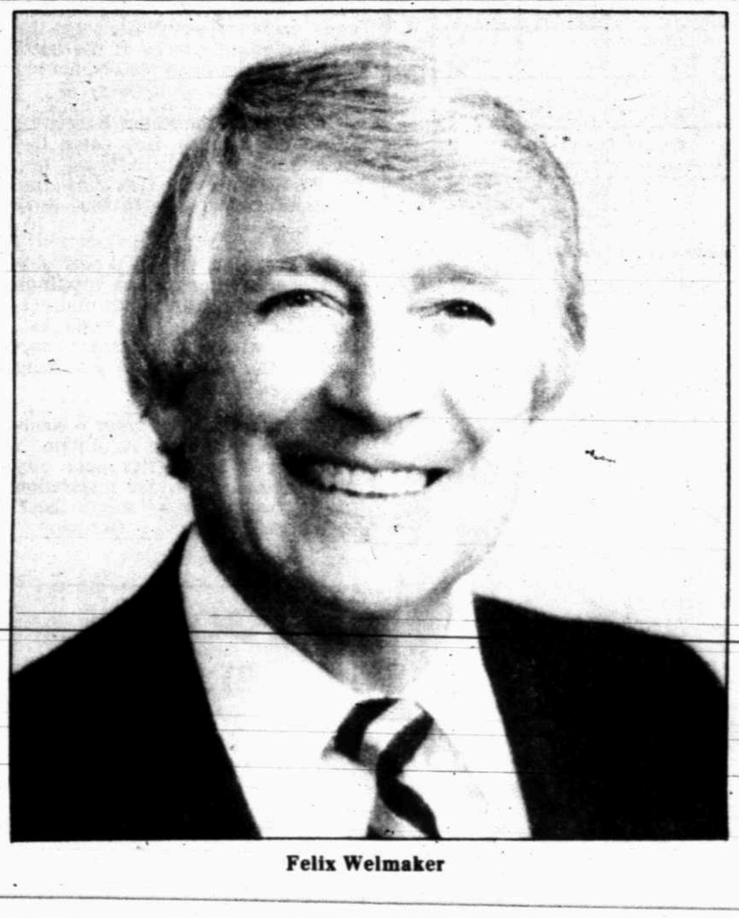

F. Scott Welmaker, Vice President, and Felix Welmaker, President are the first in West Texas to reach CFS stature and are the fifth and sixth successful CFS candidates in the state of Texas.

The RFI is the national organization for floorcovering dealers in the United States. Its purposes are to establish a strict code of ethics for the floorcovering dealer, provide training courses and guidance for dealers and their employees, and upgrade the quality of floorcovering representatives for the common good of the industry and the consumer.

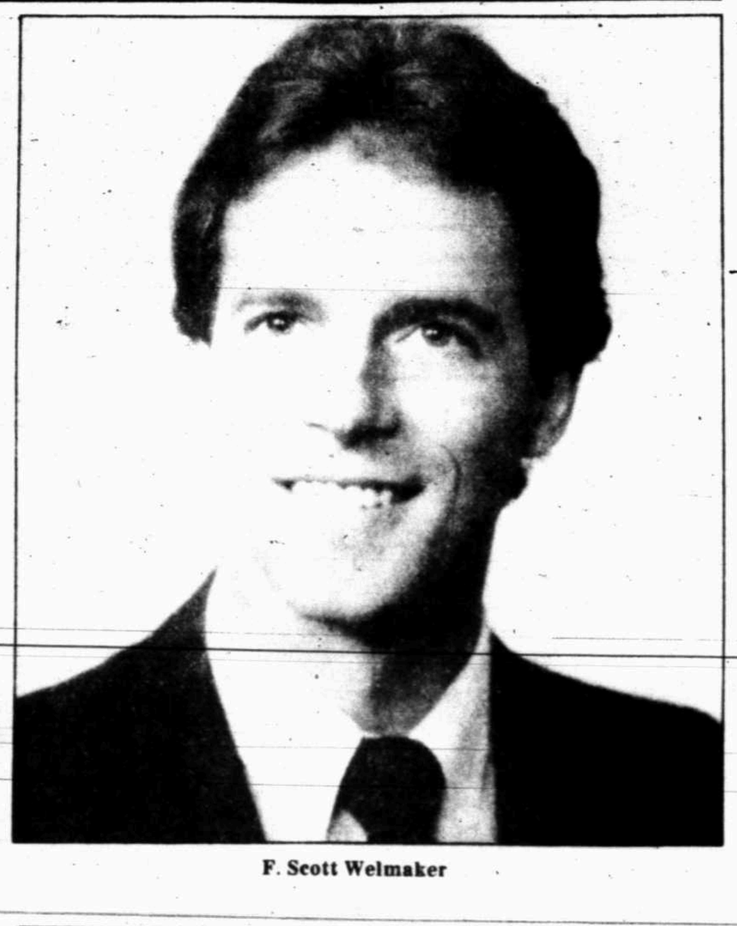

The RFI has approximately 2,000 member dealers in all 50 states, but only a tiny portion of these have acquired CFS status, witnessesd by the fact that there are presently only 6 in the entire state of Texas.

Candidates for CFS must complete professional training at an RFI Executive Institute at selected universities, must be well established in their business, have a good reputation in their communities and in their industry, and must abide by pledges of fairness, honesty and responsibility. Persons who reach CFS status must be re-examined and re-certified every three years.

The RFI was established in 1973 in Boulder, Colorado as a division of the well-known Nation Home Furnishings Association (NHFA) and became an independent entity in 1974. House of Carpets President Felix Welmaker was elected to the first Board of Directors of the NHFA (Floorcovering Division), later served as a national Director of RFI, and finished the Executive Institute training at the University of Oklahoma. Scott Welmaker recently completed his Executive Institute training at the University of Colorado in Boulder.

'Monument' rebuilt daily by Solidarity

By CHARLES J. GANS
Associated Press Writer

WARSAW, Poland — By day, Solidarity supporters pile stones in an improvised monument to a popular priest the government says was slain by secret police. Students and middle-aged women guard the spot, surrounded by candles, outside the preacher's church.

By night, a city garbage crew protected by ZOMO riot police removes the stones, but the next day, the priest's admirers are back to rebuild the mound.

"It is a symbol of the martyr's death of Father Jerzy Popieluszko and that we will not give up our faith," a 37-year-old Warsaw school teacher, carrying a large stone wrapped in a newspaper, said Monday. "We will keep building it until the authorities get tired of taking it down."

In bitter cold, several hundred people waited outside the gates of St. Stanislaw Kosta Church, to pay their respects at the grave of Popieluszko, whose sermons in support of Solidarity, the outlawed independent labor movement, packed the church.

Popieluszko was kidnapped on Oct. 19 in northern Poland and his body was fished out of an icy reservoir on the Vistula River. The government has arrested three secret police officers in the Interior Ministry and charged them with murder.

The priest's slaying complicated the sensitive relationship between the Communist authorities and Poland's Roman Catholic Church.

Most Poles are Catholic and many link the church to a sense of patriotism and unity in a nation that has been conquered and divided throughout the centuries.

"We treat this church as a kind of sanctuary of independent Poland," said an electrician from Krakow as he patrolled the church grounds with other volunteers.

He said the volunteers, fearing a police raid, decided last week to remove Solidarity banners hanging outside St. Stanislaw's and display them on church grounds along with scores of placards from union groups in schools and factories throughout Poland.

One banner behind the priest's grave came from Warsaw high school students and read: "Solidarity lives because you gave your life for it."

Thousands of flowers, in a 160-square-foot-design, cover the grave. Hundreds of candles burn nearby.

Floral wreaths surround the wooden frame on which the priest's coffin rested during his funeral that was attended by more than 250,000 people on Nov. 3.

Some of Poland's leading intellectuals, including film director Andrzej Wajda, are among thousands who have signed a petition appealing to the Polish episcopate to allow St. Stanislaw's to remain open round-the-clock so prayers can be offered for Popieluszko's beatification, a step in the formal process of declaring a saint.

"Father Jerzy was a martyr for the faith and homeland...and is absolutely worthy of being beatified and perhaps proclaimed a saint," said Seweryn Jaworski, a Warsaw Solidarity leader.

"Pilgrimages are coming here all the time," he said. "Father Jerzy is now a patron of contemporary Poland, and especially of all the people who were faithful to Solidarity's ideals and still are."

Solidarity was outlawed after the regime declared martial law in December 1981. The military crackdown on Solidarity-linked unrest was formally lifted last year.

Poland's Catholic primate, Cardinal Jozef Glemp, had asked Solidarity activists not to use the church's rectory as an information center in the days after Popieluszko's abduction.

But so far church authorities have not formally intervened to have the Solidarity symbols removed.

The Rev. Henryk Brunka, an aide at the episcopate spokesman's office, said Monday that the decision belonged to the church's provost and parishioners.

Poland's Communist authorities had long pressured the episcopate to restrain Popieluszko and other outspoken pro-Solidarity priests, claiming their activities were detrimental to improved state-church relations.

Last week, the Communist Party's ruling Politburo expressed concern that some priests are using churches for "instigatory agitation."

Government spokesman Jerzy Urban, writing under a pseudonym in the official Communist Party daily Trybuna Ludu last Wednesday, said "the hatred which is preached" from the pulpit of St. Stanislaw's is "revolting."

Such criticism has not deterred the several dozen priests who have been filling Popieluszko's place at St. Stanislaw's.

At a Sunday evening Mass attended by more than 5,000 people, the Rev. Feliks Folejewski denounced the Communist doctrine of atheism as "inhuman."

Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi poses in the New Delhi office he recently occupied following the death of his mother.

Rajiv endorses mother's policies

By MICHAEL GOLDSMITH
Associated Press Writer

NEW DELHI, India — Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi inherited the chairmanship of the non-aligned movement from his assassinated mother, Indira Gandhi, and his first policy speech warmly endorsed her Soviet-leaning brand of neutrality.

Gandhi's two-year term as chairman of the 101-nation non-aligned bloc will give the 40-year-old former airline pilot an influential voice in Asia, in the United Nations and its agencies, and throughout the Third World.

For this reason, the Kremlin must have noted with some satisfaction the special nod it received from Gandhi on Monday in his first radio and television address since becoming prime minister after his mother's assassination Oct. 31.

"We highly value the wide-ranging and time-tested relationship with the Soviet Union, based upon mutual cooperation, friendship and vital support when most needed," Gandhi said.

THE PARALLEL reference to Indian-American relations was, by contrast, cool: "With the United States of America, we have a multi-faceted relationship," Gandhi said. "We attach importance to our economic, technological and cultural cooperation with them."

It was the first policy speech he ever delivered without his mother's guidance, and foreign embassies were busy today trying to extract possible hints that could have been concealed in the wording.

One Western diplomat, who spoke only on condition he not be identified, said the unrestrained praise for the Soviet Union, followed by the "rather offhand and cryptic reference" to India's "multi-faceted" relationship with the United States, was a deliberate signal to both the superpowers that India's non-alignment would continue to lean toward the Soviet Union.

DIPLOMATS SAID they were not sure whether "multi-faceted" was intended to mean merely "many-sided," or was a subtle reference to the ups and downs of India's relations with the United States over the past two decades.

New Delhi complains frequently about Washington's arms supplies to Pakistan, and Gandhi was clearly raising this issue when he said India's security was threatened by the "sophisticated arms (that) have been inducted on a large scale into our neighborhood."

Under Mrs. Gandhi's leadership and in spite of her professed non-alignment, the Soviet Union became by far India's largest supplier of arms, shipping a sophisticated arsenal worth nearly $20 billion to the nation's 1.2-million-stron'hd forces, the fifth largest in the world.

Such defense expenditure was beyond India's means, but the Kremlin aided the continuing flow of Mig-23, Mig-25 and Mig-27 fighter bombers, T-72 and T-80 tanks, surface-to-air missiles and heavy artillery with outright gifts, grants, low-interest credits and barter deals. Indian purchases of French Mirage bombers and Anglo-French Jaguar interceptors were insignificant by comparison.

THIS VIRTUAL domination of India's arms supplies gave the Soviet Union a backstage influence over Indian foreign policy that Mrs. Gandhi could not ignore. She followed the Soviet line in refusing explicitly to condemn both the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan and the Vietnamese military intervention in Cambodia, though she had repeatedly denounced the American intervention in Vietnam.

Rajiv Gandhi appears to be planning to follow in her footsteps, though his speech included vaguely worded friendly gestures to Pakistan and China, two long-time adversaries.

Mrs. Gandhi always justified her largely Soviet-supplied arsenals by pointing to the alleged aggressive designs of the two countries, which are both involved in old territorial disputes with India. Pakistan has fought three wars with India since the end of British colonial rule in 1947.

Rajiv Gandhi, who met twice with Pakistan's President Mohammed Zia Ul-Haq at his mother's funeral, said he offered him the development of close relations "in a spirit of peace, friendship and cooperation" and in accordance with the principles of peaceful coexistence and non-interference.

The new prime minister said India's relations with China also are improving, and he pledged that his government would continue to "seek a satisfactory solution" to the border dispute that brought the two countries into a war 22 years ago.

GANDHI BECAME his mother's troubleshooter and heir apparent after his younger and more charismatic brother Sanjay died in a plane crash in 1980. But unlike his outspoken brother, Rajiv mainly sought to reflect her known views.

Western delegates at last year's Delhi summit meeting of the non-aligned movement, where Mrs. Gandhi was chairman, said she sought to shift the emphasis away from the extreme pro-Soviet stance of her predecessor, Cuba's Fidel Castro.

First political test expected in elections December 24, 27

Associated Press

NEW DELHI, India — Parliamentary elections will be held Dec. 24 and 27, officials announced today, setting the stage for Rajiv Gandhi's first nationwide political test since he succeeded his assassinated mother, Indira Gandhi, as prime minister.

The Election Commission said voting would take place on two days because authorities did not have adequate police and paramilitary forces to ensure peaceful balloting at all polling places on a single day.

The commission said there would no voting in two states, Punjab and Assam, where there has been widespread unrest in recent months. The decision means the two states would be unrepresented in the new Parliament.

No parliamentary elections were held in Assam, in northeast India, in 1980 when Indira Gandhi returned to power. She was assassination Oct. 31 and succeeded by her son.

The five-year term of the present government expires Jan. 19, and leaders of the governing Congress Party had urged Rajiv Gandhi to call the election on schedule, rather than postponing it through emergency measures, to capitalize on a nationwide sympathy following his mother's death.

Chief Election Commissioner R.K. Trivedi said candidates for the 542 parliamentary seats would be required to file nominations between Nov. 20 and Nov. 27.

Israel agrees to compromise plan

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Israel has agreed in principle to a compromise formula put forward by mediators for resumption of the suspended troop withdrawal talks between Israel and Lebanon, sources said today.

A two-track diplomatic effort was launched by U.S. and U.N. envoys after Lebanon broke off the talks Saturday to protest the arrest of four Shiite Moslem leaders by Israeli forces in south Lebanon.

Sources who spoke on condition they not be identified said that under the formula Lebanon's government would issue a statement saying it sought resumption of the talks and was satisfied with progress towards release of the arrested men.

In return, Israel would free at least two of the detainees, members of the Shiite militia Amal, and promise to free the others later, said the sources.

The sources said the talks could resume Wednesday if Lebanon agreed to the idea. They indicated that much depended on whether the proposal was satisfactory to Nabih Berri, Amal's top leader in Beirut. The arrested men included Amal's regional commander for south Lebanon, Mahmoud Fakih.

In Beirut, an Amal source said Richard Murphy, U.S. assistant secretary of state for Near East affairs, had carried the offer from Israel to Lebanese officials. The source said he was not certain Lebanon's government had agreed to the plan.

Asked about an Israeli radio report that the talks would resume Wednesday, an Israel official who spoke on condition he not be identified said: "It is the realm of the possible, but nothing is final yet."

Lebanon halted the talks after the first session last week when Israel arrested the Shiites in connection with attacks on Israeli troops in Lebanon. Today, the Israeli command announced the death of Sgt. Mordechai Derri, 20, who had been wounded in an ambush Sunday in south Lebanon and became the 602nd Israeli killed since the invasion of Lebanon in June 1982.

The withdrawal talks opened last Thursday in Naqoura, three miles north of the Israeli border under United Nations auspices. They were to have resumed on Monday.

Israel radio said that it was expected that the detained Shiites would be released before or during the talks. The radio said they would probably be sent to Beirut.

Fearful Christians seek closure of U.S. annex

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Fearful residents of Beirut's Christian suburb of Aukar have appealed for closure of the U.S. Embassy annex, where 14 people were killed in a suicide terrorist attack last September, a leftist newspaper reported today.

As-Safir, which publishes in mostly Moslem west Beirut, said it received a copy of a letter addressed to U.S. Ambassador Reginald Bartholomew from Aukar residents that said: "Continued threats to the embassy have panicked the Aukar population."

U.S. Embassay spokesman John Stewart said: "We have received no such petition."

Two Americans and many Lebanese were among those killed Sept. 20 when a suicide terrorist detonated a van loaded with explosives at the front gate of the annex, located in a suburb of Christian east Beirut.

In another development, Beirut newspapers published a threat today by a fundamentalist Lebanese Moslem leader to blow up skyscrapers in the United States and frighten President Reagan.

The warning was made by Sheik Said Shaaban, head of the Sunni Moslem "Tawheed Islami" (Islamic Unification) movment that fields the dominant militia in Tripoli, Lebanon's second largest city 50 miles north of Beirut.

"Now that the criminal Reagan has been re-elected, America will intensify its operations to destroy the Moslems," Shaaban was quoted as saying in a lecture at the American University of Beirut on Monday.

"But we shall move the battle to the United States itself and show it how skyscrapers come tumbling down," Shaaban was quoted as saying. "We have plenty of Moslems in America who need just a signal from us. Reagan will then be unable to sleep at his home."

British react to end of pound note, half-penny

LONDON (AP) — Some Parliament members cheered, others jeered at the official word that the Bank of England will stop printing one-pound notes, leaving the unpopular pound coin in its place. The 704-year-old half-penny also will meet its demise.

Chancellor of the Exchequer Nigel Lawson announced Monday that the government will stop issuing one-pound notes at the end of year and will cease to regard it as legal currency at the end of 1985.

In his semi-annual economic speech to the House of Commons, the Conservative government's financial chief also said the half-penny coin would cease to be legal tender on Dec. 31 of this year. The coin, known affectionately as the "ha'penny" and worth three-fifths of one U.S. cent, has been in circulation in England since 1280. The government stopped issuing them on March 19.

Lawson said that scrapping the one-pound note, currently worth $1.27, will save the government $3.8 million in 1985.

"The one-pound coin has 50 times the life of the note, yet costs less than twice as much to produce," he said, raising cheers and jeers from members of Parliament.

The small, heavy one-pound coins were introduced in 1983 but are not popular with consumers. The one-pound note, commonly known as a "quid," has been around for 70 years. The Bank of England estimates a pound note usually stays in circulation for only 10 months before wearing out.

Afghan children getting 10-year Soviet schooling

Associated Press

NEW DELHI, India — Soviet authorities in Afghanistan are shipping thousands of primary-school Afghan children to the Soviet Union for at least 10 years of indoctrination into Communism and the Soviet way of life, Western diplomatic sources said today.

About 870 Afghan children aged 7 to 9 left for Soviet Central Asia on Nov. 5 in the first such flight after they were seen off from Kabul airport by weeping parents and the wife of President Babrak Karmal, the informants said.

The sources, who briefed reporters on condition they not be identified, said the Karmal regime described the operation as a "magnificent friendly gesture by the Soviet Union toward the Afghan people."

The Soviet and Afghan authorities have announced that many similar groups are to leave for the Soviet Union in the near future, all of them for an initial schooling period of 10 years, the sources said.

The reports could not be independently verified.

Diplomatic sources also said they had received reports that Soviet troops and their Afghan allies summarily executed 450 anti-Marxist guerrillas after they had surrendered and handed over their arms following a battle in the mountains of northwestern Afghanistan.

The sources said the massacre occurred early in October after government forces overran a mountaintop guerrilla base near Hezara Jot. Several Western embassies in Kabul were said to have learned separately of the massacre from usually reliable Afghan informants, but the reports could not be independently verified.

The rebels resisted a siege until their ammunition ran out, then surrendered, the reports said. As soon as they were disarmed, the reports added, the local Soviet commander ordered 450 guerrillas executed on the spot.

The pro-Soviet Karmal regime has been in power since the Soviet military incursion at the end of 1979 and is presently backed by an estimated 105,000 Soviet troops.

The diplomatic sources said it was not known whether the parents whose children were being flown to the Soviet Union participated in the program voluntarily or were coerced or bribed to do so by the Karmal regime.

One Western diplomat described the operation as "an attempt to employ heroic new methods to indoctrinate Afghan children at a very early age," after earlier efforts to enlist ideological enthusiasm among Afghan teen-agers had proved a failure. Large numbers of Afghan children have been sent to the Soviet Union before, he said, but never at such an early age or for such long periods.

Shultz says U.S. committed to aiding Central American

By BRYNA BRENNAN
Associated Press Writer

BRASILIA, Brazil — The United States is obligated to help friendly Central American nations resist any aggression that might result from a buildup of Soviet arms in Nicaragua, Secretary of State George P. Shultz said.

"We have to help our friends put themselves in a capacity to resist the aggression that comes from those arms," Shultz said Monday. He said the United States was doing so with economic aid and "a security shield against the aggression that has been launched by Nicaragua against its neighbors."

Shultz spoke at a news conference after the opening session of the Organization of American States general assembly.

Referring to the Reagan administration's contention that the Soviets are sending increasing amounts of arms to Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government, Shultz said the United States planned "to work in every way to cast this aggressive and subversive influence out of our hemisphere."

He said Nicaragua's claims of a planned U.S. invasion are "based on nothing, and I don't know why they are doing this."

In his speech to the 31-nation OAS, Shultz assailed advocates of violence on both the left and right.

"The apostles of the violent left preach that armed revolution is necessary to change society for the better," he said. "The apostles of the violent right answer that repression is necessary to preserve civilization."

He said the United States "will not be driven off a democratic course by terrorism, whether at home or abroad."

Before the opening session, Shultz met with the foreign ministers of El Salvador, Costa Rica, Honduras and Guatemala. Edgardo Paz Barnica of Honduras said they discussed the Contadora group's peace proposal for Central America.

Shultz also met with Mexican Foreign Minister Bernardo Sepulveda and Colombian Foreign Minister Augusto Ramirez to discuss the Contadora proposal. The Mexican and Colombian officials said they have begun trying to reconcile Central American countries and fashion a final text containing the basic principles of a peace agreement.

Paz Barnica told reporters that Honduras was concerned about an arms buildup in neighboring Nicaragua and that it represented "a serious threat to Central American nations."

Shultz, in his speech, pledged continued U.S. support for a "workable" Central American peace initiative. He said "promises will not reduce an already dangerous military imbalance that is contantly fed from outside the hemisphere."

Shultz also touched on the Latin American debt crisis and the problem of controlling drug traffic. He said drug abuse "is spreading cancer-like throught the hemisphere."

U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz addresses the opening OAS session in Brasilia, Brazil.

He said a solution to the debt problem would "require both appropriate domestic policies in the debtor countries and continued infusions of capital."

Latin American nations have a combined foreign debt of about $350 billion. A group of 11 debtor nations have taken the lead in seeking better renegotiation terms and a meeting with the creditor countries.

OAU talks settle down after walkouts

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP) — The Organization of African Unity settled down to regular business today after an unprecedented walkout by Morocco over the seating of guerrillas fighting for Moroccan-controlled Western Sahara.

Zaire, in support of Morocco, said it was suspending its participation in the pan-African body, but there seemed little likelihood today that the walkout would spread.

Moroccan representative Reda Guedira was applauded Monday when he read a message from King Hassan II to the opening session of the OAU's 20th summit meeting expressing regret about the withdrawal.

Zaire's delegate also drew applause when he said Zaire would suspend its participation because of the seating of the Saharan Arab Democratic Republic, whose guerrillas are known as the Polisario Front, as the OAU's 51st member.

Morocco's withdrawal was the first in the history of the organization, founded in 1963 during the early days of black Africa's struggle for independence from European colonial powers.

Guedira, an adviser to Hassan, read the king's message, which said:

"Here, and this I deplore, comes the hour for us to depart. For Morocco, it is imperative for us not to become an accomplice to an irreversible force of illegality. ... All things being what they are, and while we wait for wiser days, we shall bid you farewell. But we are Africans in Morocco and Africans we shall stay. All we Moroccans shall be at the service of Africa."

The newly elected OAU chairman, President Julius Nyerere of Tanzania, made no comment on the withdrawal.

Guedira told the delegates, "We can only wish you farewell with your new partner."

He noted earlier that the International Court of Justice in The Hague had ruled that Morocco had a legitimate claim to Western Sahara.

Morocco contends that the former Spanish Sahara, a phosphate-rich desert area with 80,000 people in the northwestern corner of Africa, is its territory. Western Sahara was split up and ceded in 1975 to the former French possessions of Mauritania and Morocco by Spain, the former colonial ruler.

Mauritania pulled out of the southern part four years later. Morocco moved in with troops to merge the south with its own northern half.

Later, Polisario guerrillas fighting from Algerian bases intensified their war against Moroccan forces. Recently, the desert conflict has appeared stalemated.

Some moderate African states had complained that Morocco failed to hold a promised independence referendum in Western Sahara.

There was no vote as such on the Saharan Arab Democratic Republic's participation. Technically, Polisario could have attended last year's summit but was persuaded to stay away for sake of unity.

The guerrilla organization was made a member in 1982 through a decision by former OAU Secretary-General Edem Kodjo at an OAU foreign ministers' meeting. Morocco and others said the move was illegal, but the OAU never repudiated it. Monday's developments were triggered by the Saharan Arab Democratic Republic's decision to attend the conference.

A commentator for Ethiopia's state-owned television said 26 presidents, one vice president, four prime ministers and 18 foreign ministers attended the opening. Also attending was U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar, who has been visiting areas of Africa stricken by drought and famine.

WORLD IN BRIEF

African food shortages worsening

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — In the latest official report on the famine that threatens millions of Africans, experts said today that food shortages in 27 countries are worsening despite extensive shipments of international aid.

The Rome-based United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization, in a report on what it calls the world's "hungriest continent," said five countries are afflicted by&severe famine — Chad, Ethiopia, Mali, Mauritania and Mozambique.

Four countries — Burundi, Kenya, Morocco and Rwanda — have been added to the list of nations facing "emergencies because of drought and other calamities" since the previous FAO report was compiled in May.

One bright note in the 154-page report, an assessment of data up to mid-September, was that one country — the tiny mountain kingdom of Swaziland — will no longer need "exceptional food aid" during the 1984-85 season.

Also, normal harvests were expected to return to five countries previously stricken by shortages — Benin, Ghana, Guinea Bissau, Central African Republic and Togo.

Nations make Olympic commitment

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The major results of the Assembly of National Olympic Committees held here appear to be a commitment to take part in the 1988 summer games in South Korea and improvements in economic supports for the member nations.

More than 150 countries sent representatives to last week's meeting, which promoted unity in the Olympic movement and asked the International Olympic Committee for taking a greater share of decision-making, above all concerning the selection of sites for future games.

The so-called "Declaration of Mexico City" was considered the major achievement of the week. It is a document in which all the national committees attending, including the Soviet Union, committed themselves to attending the 1988 summer games in Seoul, South Korea.

The assembly, headed by Mario Vazquez Rana of Mexico, analyzed during the week the future of the Olympic movement, expressing an "absolute adhesion" to the Olympic charter and the International Olympic Committee.

The committee, headed by Juan Antonio Samaranch of Spain, also met here last week.

Soviet flights for Japanese scramble

TOKYO (AP) — A day after a Soviet bomber violated Japanese airspace, seven Soviet bombers today flew south in international airspace between South Korea and Japan, prompting 32 Japanese jetfighters to scramble, a Defense Agency spokesman said.

Spokesman Masafuji Sato said five Tu-16s and two Tu-95s flew south over the Tsushima Strait but did not violate Japanese airspace.

Two of the Soviet bombers continued southward, apparently to Vietnam, while the other five turned back north and headed for their base, Sato said.

Iraq expected to seek new relations

WASHINGTON (AP) — Iraq's deputy prime minister is expected to restore formal diplomatic relations with the United States when he visits Washington next week, says an administration official.

The precise timing of the move by Iraq is to be announced by the White House, the official said late Monday, speaking on condition he not be identified. Such action would end a 17-year break in formal relations.

Deputy Prime Minister Tariq Aziz, who also is Iraq's foreign minister, arrives in Washington over the weekend and is scheduled to hold several days of talks with U.S. officials starting Monday.

Mexican troops lead marijuana raid

CHIHUAHUA CITY, Mexico (AP) — Federal police backed by army troops seized and burned 7,000 tons of marijuana in what is believed to be the biggest marijuana bust in Mexico ever, police sources said Monday.

About 200 armed soldiers took part in the operation that started Sunday and continued until early Monday in a series of farms and ranches about 188 miles north of this Chihuahua state capital, said the Federal judiciary police sources, who spoke on condition they not be identified by name.

The sources said 10 persons were arrested, but their identities were not immediately made public.

Japanese leader may vist Reagan

TOKYO (AP) — Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone hopes to meet President Reagan in the United States in early January to discuss trade issues and U.S.-Soviet disarmament talks, Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe said today.

Abe, speaking to reporters after a Cabinet meeting, said Japan will contact the United States to work out a schedule for the meeting on the U.S. west coast.

Nakasone, who like Reagan recently won a second term in office, last week said he wanted to meet Reagan before the U.S. inauguration Jan. 20

Japan's trade surplus with the United States is expected to be more than $30 billion this year, and the Japanese are concerned that the United States will seek to protect its markets against Japanese products.

The United States wants cutbacks on Japan's steel exports to the United States, and is considering whether to request a fifth year of voluntary restraints on Japanese automobile shipments.

Gibraltar not Common Market stake

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Foreign Minister Fernando Moran says Spain's entry into the Common Market will not mean yielding its claim to Gibraltar, the British outpost on Spain's Mediterranean coast.

Moran told reporters Monday that Spain's claim to Gibraltar "is a national cause, shared by all Spaniards."

Moran, who had returned from a meeting at Common Market headquarters in Brussels, expressed hope that Spain would enter the trading bloc on Jan. 1, 1986 but said membership would not "be paid for with renunciation of Gibraltar."

He said he will meet his British counterpart in Brussels on Nov. 26 to discuss problems between the populations of Gibraltar and the Spanish mainland.

To Lease or Not To Lease
Reasons To Lease:
1. Leasing is convenient – you only pay for what you use and not for the full price of the car.
2. There is no used car to dispose of at lease end.
3. Leasing frees your cash and you can use your available bank line of credit for other purposes.
4. Lessee – leasing for business purposes will have the benefit of simplified tax records.
