A bit cooler, no rain in sight for panhandle

A cool front was to sweep through the Texas Panhandle overnight brining cooler weather today dropping daytime temperatures out of the 80s and into the low-to-mid 70s range.

If Saturday's temperature reached 81 a new daily record high was broken.

According to Pampa's weatherman, Darrell Sehorn, the record high for the month was set on Nov. 8, 1980, at 87 degrees.

For most of the month, Sehorn said, Pampa has been just under the record highs. Normal temperatures this time of year would be about 65 degrees, he says.

"We've been well above normal," Sehorn said.

Pampa has recorded only one freeze, that was for a few hours on the morning of Nov. 2.

"However, there just really hasn't been an overall kill yet," Sehorn said. "There are some flowers still growing out there."

While Pampa has enjoyed balmy, warm weather for much of the month, it has also been dry, a fact not lost on farmers, ranchers or Pampa residents having to water their yards. The problem is it could stay dry.

An Iowa State University professor is predicting that the nation's mid-section is in the beginnings of another drought that could last until next summer.

Texas A&M professors predict that next spring's wheat crop could suffer as a result of dry weather this winter and ranchers could be forced to cut their herds.

As is the case to a lesser degree in the panhandle, Kansas veterinarians are reporting an increase in dust induced pneumonia in feedyards across northwest Kansas and into Nebraska.

Turnout low at TAAS meet for Hispanic parents

By NANCY YOUNG
Managing Editor

Parents may Call Tim Powers or other personnel at 669-4900 for more information on helpful programs.

While only nine Hispanic parents attended a last week's meeting at Pampa Middle School, PMS Principal Tim Powers feels it is a beginning towards helping local Hispanic students improve their TAAS scores.

The meeting was held to communicate to the parents how to raise the students' scores on the TAAS. This was the first meeting held between school officials and the parents about the TAAS scores.

Eunice Moreno, school district liaison for the local Hispanic community, and Pampa ISD board member Joe Martinez were at the meeting to assist in explaining the importance of the TAAS scores.

Dr. Dawson Orr, superintendent, and Ray Thornton, assistant middle school principal, also attended.

School personnel provided information regarding how the parents can help the their children be successful students. Among the suggestions were to communicate with the students on a daily basis, encourage the students to learn, and to support the school in the academic areas.

Parents were also encouraged to provide a quiet place for the students to study at home.

Parents were also encouraged the talk to the school and not allow the language to be a barrier. Several school personnel are Spanish-speaking.

School personnel told parents to have their children to study, study, study, said Powers. He also said he would like to see the students encouraged to enroll in pre-AP classes which would prepare them for Advanced Placement classes.

Information was provided to the parents about the importance of the TAAS scores and how parents can help master the objectives.

Powers said the school system will be working with the Hispanic parents to assist the students attain high goals in the academic field. He said it is important for the students and the parents to begin these goals in middle school before they reach high school.

Any parent wanting additional information on the programs being offered the Hispanic students, or any students, is encouraged to call Powers or other school personnel at 669-4900.

'ER's' Julianna Margulies rejects $27 million contract offer for two more years

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Quick, get the oxygen: "ER" star Julianna Margulies has rejected an approximately $27 million deal that would have kept her on the medical drama for two more years.

In February, the actress announced her intention to leave the NBC series and her role as nurse Carol Hathaway after this season and return to New York.

Executive producer John Wells and Warner Bros. were unsuccessful in trying to change her mind despite the hefty contract offer, which included movie work, Daily Variety reported.

A source close to the actress, speaking Friday on condition of anonymity, confirmed she rejected the contract.

Wells told Variety he credited Ms. Margulies with contributing to the success of the top-rated program and said he hoped they would work together in the future.

Ms. Margulies is not the only "ER" defector. George Clooney, who played Hathaway's lover, Dr. Doug Ross, left last season. Gloria Reuben made her last appearance as HIV-positive physician's assistant Jeanie Boulet on this week's episode.

Ms. Reuben will be performing as a backup singer and dancer on Tina Turner's upcoming world tour.

Original cast members Anthony Edwards, Eriq La Salle and Noah Wyle are sticking with the series.

New labels would alert consumers to dangerous trans fat artery cloggers

WASHINGTON (AP) — No one actually thought doughnuts and cookies were health foods. But it will be harder to hide from just how unhealthy they are under new nutrition labels that would list a little-known artery-clogger called trans fat.

The Food and Drug Administration on Friday proposed the change, the first since the government required labels on food products in 1994.

Experts believe that trans fatty acids, the stuff that makes french fries, crackers and lots of other foods taste so good, may be even worse for the heart than saturated fat. But consumers have had no way to know how much of it is in their foods.

"It's not going to be able to slip under the radar screen any more," said FDA Commissioner Jane Henney.

The plan would take effect after a 90-day comment period.

WEATHER

Nebraska cattlemen said three to four times the normal number of young cattle in their state are being treated for pneumonia. It's been very dusty this year for them with no measurable precipitation since August.

Minnesota has reported a growing problem with grass fires due to dry conditions and high winds.

South Dakota has postponed deer season a month because of dry conditions and a fear that hunters' campfires could burn out of control, a fear shared by the Texas Forestry Service in the Lone State.

Weather officials admitted that drought conditions have returned to the state for the third time in four years. They said that this month could go down as the warmest November in history.

The six to 10 day outlook calls for continued warmer than normal temperatures from the Texas Panhandle on up into the central portion of the country with little or no precipitation.

"I think it will be a little cooler overall next week," Sehorn said, "but it will probably only take us back a little closer to normal."

Georgia family puts Hitler's silver on auction block

ATLANTA (AP) — Silver pieces believed to have been owned by Adolf Hitler — including lobster forks, ice cream spoons and a cigarette box — are being auctioned on the Internet by a Georgia family. One Jewish group is hoping no one buys them.

Jay Kaiman, southeast director for the Anti-Defamation League, said his Atlanta office has received calls from people upset over the auction.

"We think it would be perverse if an individual bought a fork or a setting and invited people over so they can show them their Hitler plates or cigarette box," he said. "We're concerned that they are mass merchandising Hitler in a pop culture way."

Atlanta-based Great Gatsby's is conducting the auction, which was set to begin Friday night and continue until Thursday.

The auction house's manager, Maxine Hyland, said there have been "very few complaints" about the Hitler items, which were among hundreds of items available in Gatsby's first on-line auction.

Other items include four original works by Pablo Picasso, a Rolls Royce owned by Bee Gees member Barry Gibbs and the original 16-mm master print of the Beatles movie "Let It Be."

Ms. Hyland would not identify the Georgia family selling the Hitler merchandise. She said the owner's father was a U.S. soldier who took the pieces, which bear Hitler's initials and the German seal, from Nazi headquarters at the close of World War II.

"These things come up all the time," said Greg Martin, head of the arms and armor department of the San Francisco-based auction house Butterfield & Butterfield. "These are historical artifacts. Whether or not you agree with the political philosophy behind the object is irrelevant."

Butterfield & Butterfield has sold several Hitler and Nazi pieces over the years and is putting the German dictator's personal phone book on the auction block Tuesday.

Kaiman said he would have no problem with the silver being housed in a museum or academic archive, but he doesn't believe the pieces belong in the hands of just anyone.

"We clearly understand that there's a subculture attracted to Nazi memorabilia. Some people who have a fascination with Nazi memorabilia also have a fascination with Nazi ideology," he said.

Gatsby's is breaking up the 125 silver pieces into 52 lots. One lot consists solely of a cigarette box and has an estimated price of $4,000 to $6,000.

NTSB: Engines shut down during jet's rapid descent

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Federal authorities are releasing more details about the final moments of EgyptAir Flight 990, describing a steep, 40-second plunge that included a mysterious warning signal in the cockpit just before both engines shut down.

The descent, which was followed by an altitude gain before the Boeing 767's crash into the Atlantic Ocean, left investigators no closer Friday to announcing the cause of the disaster.

While the warning suggested a "major problem" on board the doomed flight, the National Transportation Safety Board said there were several potential reasons for the signal.

"We cannot at this time explain the circumstances that were occurring on Flight 990 that resulted in the flight profile I just described," NTSB Chairman James Hall said.

In fact, Hall said the information from the flight recorder raises many questions about what brought down the flight on Oct. 31, killing all 217 aboard.

Local artist to perform in Galveston

GALVESTON — Loralee Cooley of Pampa, storyteller with Texas Commission on the Arts Touring Artist Roster, will participate in a storytelling concert today at Grand 1894 Opera House in Galveston.

Using the theme "Storyspinning" which is the name of her company of one (herself), Cooley will select stories, folk songs and poems from a variety of sources, color-keyed to various colors of yarn, representing the idea of "yarn-spinning."

The Grand 1894 Opera House, a Galveston landmark, is celebrating its 25th anniversary of renovation with a special series called "Centennial Sundays," so-named for the length of time the Opera House has been in operation. The series features four storytellers during the season which opened in October with Andy Wilkinson of Lubbock. Wilkinson appeared in Pampa in March 1997 with a special musical program "Tribute to the Texas Plains," co-sponsored by Pampa Fine Arts Association and White Deer Land Museum Foundation.

> ... Cooley will select stories, folk songs and poems from a variety of sources, color-keyed to various colors of yarn, representing the idea of "yarn-spinning."

Cooley's appearance is the second in the four-part Centennial Sunday series. The series is funded in part by the Texas Commission on the Arts, an official state agency. All four storytellers are listed with TCA Touring Artist Roster. The remaining artists and dates for the series are: Tim Tingle, a Choctaw Native American with a lively sense of humor, Sunday, March 12; and Toni Simmons, a Black American storyteller who performed with Cooley at Corn Island Storytelling Festival at Louisville, Ky., in 1994. Simmons will perform Sunday, April 12.

Area TCA commissioners include Doris Alexander of Amarillo and Dr. Malouf Abraham of Canadian.

One issue sticks in my mind

Kate B. Dickson

Associate publisher/editor

This topic is a little old but when the news broke I had already written my column for last week. But the issue has stayed on my mind.

When a reporter asked George W. Bush those "Jeopardy" questions recently I think it was unfair. In case you missed it, Bush was asked to name the leaders of four current world hot spots. He got one right.

And while I will vote for the Democratic nominee for president, I do agree with Bush when he said a candidate's "vision" of foreign policy is more important at this point than to know such details.

Odds are few candidates or current office holders would be able to name them. But hopefully their policy wonk advisers could.

For those of us who enjoy professional football, concern is heightening about the number of concussions players, especially quarterbacks, are suffering. Troy Aikman now has his sixth one in 11 years. For Steve Young I don't know what the count but it seems as though everyone around him wants him to quit playing. Young, however, apparently remains in denial about it all. And then there is Chris Miller. He stopped playing for four years because of concussions but is back this year. He couldn't stay away.

I am sure there are more who have had head injuries but I don't know the particulars. I also have no clue as to the solution. With defensive players getting bigger, stronger and faster as time goes by this trend may well escalate.

... Will these guys end up like some of the brain-damaged boxers?

Probably.

And while on the subject of sports, the end of the NASCAR season draws close. Only two more races left. I'll miss it but the races will return in February with the running of the Daytona 500.

Truthfully, I enjoy the hype and stories surrounding the drivers and teams more than I like watching the cars go round and round for 400, 500 or, as in the case of one race, 600 miles.

As I have mentioned, when I was in North Carolina for five years I lived less than 35 miles from the Charlotte (now Lowe's) Motor Speedway. Through some friends I developed the fever for the sport and keep up with the goings on pretty well.

I happen to be a Jeff Gordon fan. All you Earnhardt people will boo and hiss that, but, hey, that's just how it is. Speaking of Earnhardt, the Budweiser people would do Little E a favor by giving the young man a few grammar lessons. (See, saw; come, came; run, ran, etc.) He just slays the King's English. Little E has a bright future and improving his speaking ability would be a plus — as it is for any of us.

It will be interesting to see how Gordon fares next season when he must recruit new Rainbow Warriors now that five of his pit crew is leaving at the end of the season as a group to join the 88 team of Dale Jarrett at Robert Yate's Racing. It will also be Gordon's first full year without Ray Evernham, his crew chief for 47 Winston Cup race wins.

Oh, well, as the joke song I heard said — it was a take off of "Over the Rainbow" — Gordon still has Brooke!

America must never turn its back on military

Getting and keeping top quality men and women has always been one of the most important priorities for our Armed Forces.

In recent years, it's also become one of our greatest challenges. As our reliance on technology has increased, the need to recruit and retain highly educated and highly trained folks has increased as well.

As our reliance on technology has increased, the need to recruit and retain highly educated and highly trained folks has increased as well.

Finding good people is a problem throughout our military. This year alone, the Army will miss its recruiting objectives by at least 8,000 soldiers, the Navy will be undermanned by nearly 8,000 sailors, and the Air Force will fall 2,500 recruits and 1,400 active-duty pilots short of the goal it set for itself. It is critical that we do all we can to reverse this trend and improve the quality of life for our troops.

Congress took a step in this direction this fall by passing a defense bill that will reverse years of decreasing defense spending. Among other things, this bill will boost basic military pay by 4.8 percent, improve health and retirement benefits and increase incentives for service men and women to reenlist. In short, this bill will give the different service branches more money to get and keep the best and the brightest.

The key is to make it more attractive for men and women to serve our country — something which is difficult to achieve when you consider that some military families actually qualify for food stamps. That is a tragedy which must come to an end.

For a country to value its freedom, it can never turn its back on those who keep it secure — which is why investing more in the people who serve in our Armed Forces is not only needed, but also the right thing to do.

Stupidity, sickness or ignorance?

Walter Williams

Syndicated columnist

During my undergraduate years, I majored in sociology — that's until I saw the light. But I took a few psychology classes. Thus, I am just as qualified as any Ph.D. psychologist to psychoanalyze the American people. This expertise will be applied to the new millennium issue.

Americans can't wait for this New Year's Eve; after all the stroke of midnight starts the first day of the third millennium. People are booking hotels and cruises, and making airplane reservations just to be at their favorite place when the new millennium dawns. Champagne sales, along with champagne prices, are skyrocketing. Cities are spending billions of dollars to celebrate. Even the White House has a website with a clock counting down the remaining hours, minutes and seconds to the start of the 21st century at 12:01 a.m. 2000.

The only problem is the new millennium does not begin 12:01 a.m. 2000. The stroke of 12 only signals the last year of the millennium that we've been living in for the past 999 years. The new millennium starts 12:01 a.m. 2001. The U.S. Naval Observatory has a site that you might consult (http://aa.usno.navy.mil/aa/faq) which reads: "Years of the Gregorian calendar, which is currently in use today, are counted from A.D. 1. Thus, the first century comprised the years A.D. 1 through A.D. 100. The second century began with A.D. 101 and continued through A.D. 200. By extrapolation, we find that the 20th century comprises the years A.D. 1901-2000. Therefore, the 21st century will begin with 1 January 2001 and continue through 31 December 2100."

Before my psychoanalysis, let's do some millennium math. The U.S. Naval Observatory's explanation may be too challenging for public-school graduates. Pretend I owe you $3,000. I'm paying you one dollar at a time. When I've paid you zero dollars, has any part of my debt been discharged? I recommend a "no" answer. After I've paid you one dollar, how many more must be paid to take care of the first $1,000? You'd like $999 more. When does payment begin on the next $1,000? It's when I've plunked down $1,001.

Here's our crucial millennium-related question: When I get to $1,999, am I finished paying you the second thousand dollars? No, I don't finish the second thousand dollars until I've given you one more dollar, making it $2,000. When does the third thousand dollars (millennium) in payment begin? It starts with the next dollar, or fraction thereof, namely $2001. The same reasoning applies to the third millennium; 2001 marks its beginning.

I explained all this in an earlier column and received quite a few angry letters of denial. People have gotten peeved at my suggestion that celebrations of the new millennium this New Year's Eve will be exercises in tomfoolery. I know of no political leader, news media person or academic who has come forward to alert the American people of their pending folly.

Now the psychoanalysis. Americans feel as though the new millennium starts next year. Feelings and emotions, rather than facts and standards, have become the criteria for assessing things in modern America. The popularity of our daytime television sleaze shows amply demonstrates that. In government schools, there's "inventive" spelling, how one feels words are spelled. Politicians feel our pain. So naturally it follows that the millennium starts when we feel it starts.

Abundant evidence also demonstrates that government schools, along with the news media, are immunizing Americans to facts and standards. I know that teachers and news media people read this column. They are now supplied with millennium facts. Will teachers tell their students, and news media people tell their viewers, that the nation is about to commit unforgivable stupidity on New Year's Eve? Wait and watch.

The Yankees have reawakened one fan

Charley Reese

Syndicated columnist

I saw one of the most touching moments in sports as the Yankees won the fourth and final game of the World Series.

The World Series, which is the epitome of sports drama, is always packed with emotion, but this year's Yankee team was especially emotional, and with good reason.

Joe Torre, the manager, missed the first two months of the season because of prostate cancer. Three of the players' fathers were ill. Scott Brosius' dad died in September. A few weeks later, Luis Sojo's father died, and finally, on the morning of the fourth game, Paul O'Neill got word that his father had died.

O'Neill had been very dose to his dad, who was a minor-league player, O'Neill's first coach and his lifelong mentor. O'Neill spent every moment with his father except for when he was either playing or traveling. Yet despite all his grief, he came to play in that last game.

When the final out was made and all the players gathered in the infield, hugging and shouting, all the emotion poured out of O'Neill, and he collapsed against the shoulder of a teammate. Within a second, his teammates surrounded him, shielding O'Neill's grief from the intrusive news cameras that circled the players. This spontaneous and protective move by the Yankees tells you why these Yankees are such a great team. It's as if they had adopted the motto of Alexandre Dumas' Musketeers one for all and all for one. They acted like a band of brothers.

It's unusual in professional sports when you can't get an athlete to talk about himself, but time and time again, these Yankees in their interviews shifted the talk away from themselves to their teammates.

"Being able to be Scott Brosius' teammate means more to me than being in the same sentence with Babe Ruth," Chad Curtis told a reporter who had informed him that he had, with his two home runs in one game, duplicated a feat by Ruth.

It was Curtis, too, who snubbed an interview with NBC's Jim Gray, who had enraged the country with an insulting and entirely inappropriate confrontation with Pete Rose at an earlier ceremony honoring the players of the century.

And there was that team thing again. "It's not a personal thing with me and Jim Gray," Curtis told a print reporter. "It's a thing the team decided. If my team decides that, then it's my decision, too."

These Yankees have no obvious superstars, but time and again this player or that would step up and do what was needed to win. They were there for each other, on the field or off the field, in triumph or in grief.

When you add supreme competence and professionalism to that kind of emotional bond, then you've got yourself one first-class team, a class act all the way.

It was refreshing to watch these young men of character, whose behavior and words are in such contrast to the demagoguery of politicians or the bitter polemics of ideologues. It was sort of a reminder that America — the real America — is still all right.

Baseball is just a game, and one reason I like it is because so many major-league players recognize that it is just a game. A lot of National Basketball Association players seem to forget that and believe their own agent's hype about themselves. If there's anything I despise, it's an excuse-making, whining multimillionaire or some dope with a giant ego and a small IQ.

Now I can look forward to spring, when these noble Yankees take the field in the 21st century. They have reawakened in me something I thought had died a long time ago. They have made me a fan.

Archaeologists reconsider Red River Indian War lore

By CHRIS NEWTON
Associated Press Writer

THE VALLEYS OF CAPROCK CANYONS, Texas (AP) — Capt. Wyllys Lyman watched blood trickle between his fingers as he choked on dusty air. Gathering ammunition and courage, he loaded his pistol and peered around the circled wagons.

Arrows whizzed past his head, confirming his fear: Lyman and his men were surrounded by Comanches. Were the Indians too smart to waste ammunition on men already dead?

The Comanches understood how easily the merciless Texas plains could conquer the soldiers. If trapped, Lyman's men would surely die in terrain so tough that one soldier described it as "not only ... a bad place to die, it wasn't even a good place to be buried."

Horse flies and thorn bushes tore at Lyman's resolve. After a few days, he and his men resorted to drinking the water out of tomato cans. When all seemed lost, the soldiers charged their enemies — and lived.

But not because they defeated the Indians. The Comanches had disappeared without a trace.

Over the last several months, archaeologist Patricia Mercado Allinger and her team have pieced together that scenario — and more battles in the last war to drive Indians from the Texas Panhandle than any researchers in the last 50 years.

"You have to play detective," Allinger says, sweeping her metal detector from side to side. "You can use the artifacts and their location to determine the framework of a particular battle."

Allinger, who works for the Texas Historical Commission, reconstructed Lyman's experience by meshing others' writings accounts and her findings: the recovered remains of wagons, bloody arrowheads, tomato cans and bullet casings. A soldier who heard about the battle from Lyman documented the soldiers' suffering in the heat.

About two years ago, Allinger began collecting artifacts and documenting the Red River Indian War against the Comanches, Cheyenne and Arapahos. The war began in 1874 after an Indian raid on a U.S. trading post left three men dead. It lasted about a year.

Because the state cannot afford a full staff of professionals, Allinger assembled a team that included a small-town museum curator, a couple of archaeology students looking for adventure and field experience, and a historian who had never before wielded a metal detector.

Five days a week, they jump over ditches and dodge cactus in the Caprock Canyons. Moments after one of them chops off a rattlesnake's head with a shovel, another locates a treasure trove of artifacts — buttons, arrowheads, gun cartridges. Cheers erupt as the team grabs flags, shovels and a map to mark a site of combat.

Every site bolsters Allinger's belief that historians mistakenly accepted soldiers' accounts that the Indians were the aggressors and that the United States merely wanted to push the Indians onto Oklahoma reservation territory.

With guesswork about the site of the Lyman ambush, Allinger suspects that the Indians knew they were outmatched: sophisticated weaponry vs. rudimentary guns and bows and arrows. They battled the soldiers only long enough to allow their families to escape the Panhandle.

"We find the fact behind the theory. When those facts don't match the theory, it's time for a new theory," Allinger says.

After the Indian raid, military units gathered from Kansas, Oklahoma, New Mexico and Texas in February 1874. Almost two dozen battles, including Lyman's, took place in the canyons in the following months.

Allinger's work has revealed that much of the combat involved running battles, with one of the forces in constant retreat.

"The Indians knew the canyons like the backs of their hands, while the soldiers had only the vaguest idea of where they were," Allinger says. "The Indians retreated into rough areas in many of the battles."

But the soldiers apparently had high-powered weapons: the Perrot Rifle, which historians call the "grenade launcher of the late 1800s" — and at least two Gatling guns, history's first rapid-fire, bunker-style weapon.

"We've found things we just never expected," says Rolla Shaller, assistant curator of archaeology at the Panhandle-Plains Historical Museum in Canyon. "It's kind of silly to think that the Indians could have seen the Gatling gun and still felt like they had a chance to win."

The Indians did have firearms, Allinger says, but limited ammunition. "Could you imagine, fighting against soldiers with a Gatling gun when all you have is a bow with arrows?"

Allinger also found evidence of huge camps of Indian women and children — documented by toys, sewing materials, cooking utensils. They apparently moved in groups a few miles from skirmishes led by Col. Nelson Miles.

The Indians surrendered in June 1875, ending the war.

"If it was a victory for Miles, it was a hollow victory," Allinger says. "The entire number of women and children escaped northward. Miles and his troops never did catch up to them."

Thomas Hester, a professor of archaeology at the University of Texas, says Allinger's challenges to conventional wisdom have drawn attention.

"As an archaeologist, you dream about the chance to uncover unknown facts that change or reshape the way an event is looked upon," Hester says. "Allinger is definitely doing that."

That doesn't surprise Susan Kurranah, one of the last living relatives of Comanche Chief Quanah Parker.

"Among the Indians, the story has always been told in a way that showed there wasn't any intention of fighting a war," she says. "If this means that the history books are going to finally get it right, then I'm happy."

Elderly woman who struck and killed baby in stroller acquitted

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A 71-year-old woman who drove her car into a stroller and killed a baby boy hours after she failed a driving test has been acquitted of all charges.

Albertinah Mkhize was found innocent of misdemeanor vehicular manslaughter and two counts of reckless driving.

Ms. Mkhize, who hit 10-month-old Yusuf Khouja in June, testified that the front brakes on her 1975 Chevrolet Nova had failed before she hit the boy's stroller in an intersection.

Prosecutors claimed the brakes worked m.

The boy's father, Mohammed, called Monday's verdict "really, really unbelievable."

Ms. Mkhize was driving on a temporary license that had expired about a week before the accident. She failed her exam that day because she went straight when the instructor told her to turn.

Police said the driving examiner did not specifically tell Ms. Mkhize she couldn't drive home. She drove home, parked, and then went to move her car to a different spot when the accident happened.

Family mourns son's suicide over squirrel hunting accident

MANKATO, Minn. (AP) — John Leif recalls regaining consciousness in the woods after his 16-year-old son accidentally shot him in the head while they were hunting squirrels.

"Chris was lying beside me, he was so limp," said Leif, 50. "I grabbed him and hugged him and sobbed and cried. I laid my head down on his chest. I wanted to die."

Investigators said Chris shot himself in the head in grief Oct. 30, believing he had killed his father. Chris' funeral was held Friday.

"I'm sure he thought I was dead," his father said. "It tears my heart apart, the mental anguish he must have ... gone through."

The father and son had gone to the family's property about 100 miles southeast of Minneapolis to put the finishing touches on a new deer stand in preparation for the opening of the deer hunting season. They decided to hunt squirrels.

"The last thing I remember is seeing a big gray squirrel up ahead," Leif said. "I ran across and said, 'Chris, there's one! Come on!' And the more I think about it now, he was probably aiming at it, getting ready to shoot, and I ran right in front of him. ... We were side by side. It was just so quick."

After Leif regained consciousness, he tied a jacket around a tree as a landmark and began walking for help. He was disoriented but managed to get into his truck and drive to a neighbor's home.

For several days, it appeared Chris had a chance to survive. He died Monday at a hospital in LaCrosse, Wis.

Panhandle Professional Writers workshop to address long and short of stories

AMARILLO — Jan Grape, award-winning short story-writer, will be the featured speaker at the Panhandle Professional Writers regular meeting Saturday, Nov. 20. Registration begins at 9 a.m. in the Amarillo Senior Citizen's Association Center at 1217 S. Tyler.

Grape will conduct two workshops: "The Long and the Short of It" and "To Market! To Market!" The first workshop begins at 9:30 a.m. and covers all the aspects of writing short stories, Grape said.

"Most people mistakenly believe short stories are merely a shortened version of a novel," she said. "That's not true. In some ways, you have to write more precise."

In her afternoon session, "To Market! To Market!" Grape will discuss how to publish short stories.

"A lot of times, after you've finished a piece that you're really proud of, you feel like, "What do I do with it now?' We're going to discuss how to do that." Grape said, "We'll also cover the importance of not only continuing to write, but sending your work, no matter how many rejections letters you've received. In the beginning, it's also important to volunteer to write, so you can build up your credentials."

Grape is the 1998 Anthony Award Winner for Best Short Story for A Front Row Seat.

Texas-Israel Exchange Board funds projects

AUSTIN — Agriculture Commissioner Susan Combs recently announced grant research projects — ranging from producing commercial medicinal plants from the desert to using a beetle to control salt cedar — have been approved for funding the the Texas -Israel Exchange Fund Board.

"During my visit to Israel in June, I saw firsthand how similar much of our Texas landscape and climate is to Israel. We resemble each other in many ways," Combs said. "We can capitalize on these similarities through the Texas-Israel Exchange Research and Development Program, which was established to support agricultural research as well as enhance trade and business relations between Texas and Israel."

The grant program is a cornerstone of the Texas-Israel Exchange Research and Development Program, which was established to support agricultural research as well as enhance trade and business relations between Texas and Israel.

The grant program is a cornerstone of the Texas-Israel Exchange Research and Development Program. The board approved of $250,000 in grants recommended by a five-member review team made up of researchers and producers who examined and scored the projects.

Combs said she is interested in expanding the TIE program to include sending agricultural teams to Israel to allow Texas farmers and ranchers to directly see some of the advances the Israelis are making in desert agricultural production. Combs said the TIE board also will explore new avenues of funding for future research through universities, the private sector and the Israeli government.

In addition to receiving funding from the TIE board, most of the grants also received separate funding from research institutions and universities in Israel where collaborative work will be ongoing.

AUTO RACING

HOMESTEAD, Fla. (AP) — Frustration has been David Green's nearly constant companion since he moved from the Busch Series to Winston Cup in 1997.

But Green, who was the 1994 Busch Series champion and loaded with potential, is ready to rise out of the ashes of a career in limbo.

Since taking over the driver's seat for Tyler Jet Motorsports in September, Green has begun to show strong signs of shaking out of his three-year doldrums.

A week ago in Phoenix, the 41-year-old driver had a career-best 12th-place finish. On Friday, he led first-round qualifying for the inaugural Pennzoil 400 at Homestead-Miami Speedway, taking his first Winston Cup pole.

FOOTBALL

MEMPHIS — Top-ranked Wheeler rolled over Memphis in Friday night action.

Brooks Brown ran for four touchdowns and Caleb Finsterwald ran for two more as the Mustangs crushed Memphis 39-6 on the Cyclones' field.

Brown, who rushed for 73 yards on 12 carries, scored the game's first touchdown on a 28 yard run. In the second half, he scored on runs of 4, 1 and 10 yards, as the Mustangs rolled through the Memphis defense for 314 rushing yards.

Finsterwald, who ran for 122 yards on 10 carries, scored two touchdowns in the second quarter. The first covered three yards; the second 20 to help Wheeler take a 19-0 lead into the half.

Memphis scored its only touchdown in the final period on a 5-yard run by Josh Harrison.

Wheeler, ranked No. 1 in Class 1A, moves to 10-0 overall and 5-0 in district. Memphis ends its season 6-4 overall and 2-3 in league play.

BASKETBALL

NEW YORK (AP) — Mike Montgomery didn't have any trouble summing up the two days Stanford just spent in New York City.

"It was very, very pleasing to get two wins in a tournament of this caliber," the Cardinal coach said Friday night after his 13th-ranked team beat Iowa 72-58 in the championship game of the Coaches vs. Cancer Classic. "That was pretty good actually."

Stanford opened the tournament with an 80-79 victory over No. 10 Duke and closed it with a statement win of sorts considering senior forward Mark Madsen, the only returning starter from last season, missed the title game after pulling a hamstring Thursday.

"We had some questions. How would we respond, without Mark in there just because of the emotional leadership he gives us," Montgomery said. "But we didn't question our ability without Mark."

There was no reason to.

Freshman Casey Jacobsen scored 17 points, 12 on 3-pointers. The Collins twins, 6-foot-11 Jason and 6-10 Jarron, combined for 35 points and 22 rebounds in the championship game.

Iowa's frontline had done a good job in the Hawkeyes' stunning 70-68 upset of top-ranked and defending national champion Connecticut in the opening round. It didn't have much of a chance against the Collinses.

Jason Collins finished with 18 points and 12 rebounds, and Jarron Collins had 17 points and 10 rebounds as the Cardinal outrebounded Iowa 45-33.

"Jarron and Jason were too much for them to handle," Montgomery said.

Frenship ends Pampa's year in bi-district round

PAMPA — Pampa had that never-say-die mentality in Friday night's bi-district game with Frenship.

Frenship won 24-19, but the Harvesters fought the visiting Tigers every step of the way.

Pampa struck paydirt on its first possession when quarterback Kaleb Snelgrooes scored on a 1-yard plunge with 8:56 gone in the opening quarter. The touchdown was set up when Snelgrooes connected on a 49-yard pass to tight end Justin Barnes that put Pampa on the Frenship 6.

With some big stops made defensively by Orlando Madrid, Nathan Arnn, Jason Burklow and Tim Ferris, the Harvesters were able to hold Frenship scoreless the first quarter.

However, the Tiger offense came alive and scored 17 points to take a 17-9 lead into halftime.

Pampa had managed a 2-point safety in the second quarter when the Frenship punter downed a bad snap in the end zone.

Pampa nibbled away at Frenship's lead and cut the margin to 17-12 on a 37-yard field goal by Barnes with 6:30 remaining in the third quarter.

Pampa defenders did another shutout job, holding Frenship scoreless in the third quarter.

Both teams traded touchdowns in the fourth quarter. Frenship extended its lead to 24-12 as quarterback Trace Vineyard connected with Chad Mandrell on a 30-yard scoring pass with 9:23 to go. With time running out, the Harvesters drove for their final TD of the season. Snelgrooes hit Randy Tice with a short pass up the middle with 1:34 left and Tice fought his way into the end zone from 18 yards out.

Pampa attempted an onsides kick, but Frenship was able to cover the ball on its own 43.

The Tigers ran out the clock to move into the area round of the playoffs against El Paso Riverside.

Pampa did have the edge in total yardage 304-245 as Snelgrooes threw for 246 yards and a touchdown. Russell Robben caught 4 passes for 48 yards and Johnny Cortez had 3 grabs for 80.

Thomas Long had 72 yards on 13 attempts to lead Pampa rushers.

Pampa closed the season with a 5-6 record while Frenship moves on with a 7-4 mark.

Older and wiser Sacramento Kings too much for Jazz

By The Associated Press

The Sacramento Kings are a year older and wiser than last season. The Utah Jazz are just plain older.

Chris Webber scored 20 points Friday night to lead Sacramento to a 105-92 victory over Utah in a rematch of last season's first-round playoff meeting.

The Kings downplayed the significance of the victory, yet the message was clear: the younger, quicker Kings looked improved against the aging Jazz.

"It just happened to be Utah that we played tonight," guard Jon Barry said. "We learned a lot last year playing those guys. They are a team that always executes so well. I thought we executed pretty well tonight."

That execution was evident in the fourth quarter when Sacramento pulled away for good with a 15-4 run, extending its lead to 95-78 with 4:51 remaining.

"It's been like this, other teams are gunning for us, we have to prepare for them," Utah's Jeff Hornacek said. "Right now we are not at that level."

In other games, it was Houston 97, the Los Angeles Lakers 81; Milwaukee 107, Phoenix 92; Boston 80, New York 74; Charlotte 96, New Jersey 92; Miami 104, Washington 95; Philadelphia 92, Chicago 86; Portland 93, Denver 78; and Golden State 103, Vancouver 93.

At Sacramento, Jason Williams scored 18 points, Nick Anderson had 12 and Vlade Divac added 10 as six Kings scored in double figures.

The Jazz, who ousted Sacramento 3-2 in last season's playoffs, couldn't keep up this time. The Kings went on a 15-3 run in the third quarter to take control of the game and put it away by the midway point in the fourth.

"It was just a terrific win," Kings coach Rick Adelman said. "The thing I liked is we did so many different things well."

Karl Malone had 20 points and seven rebounds for the Jazz.

Rockets 97, Lakers 81

At Los Angeles, Steve Francis scored 22 points and Hakeem Olajuwon had 12 points and 11 rebounds as visiting Houston took advantage of Shaquille O'Neal's suspension to win its first game.

O'Neal and Rockets forward Charles Barkley each missed the game after receiving one-game suspensions for their fight in Wednesday night's game in Houston.

In the rematch, Carlos Rogers added 16 points for the Rockets, whose five losses to open the season was their worst start since 1992.

Bucks 107, Suns 92

Glenn Robinson had 27 points and 12 rebounds, while Sam Cassell and Ray Allen combined for 39 points and 19 assists as host Milwaukee used a 26-4 third-quarter run to beat Phoenix.

Celtics 80, Knicks 74

At Boston, Antoine Walker scored 22 points as the Celtics, helped by an injury to New York's Marcus Camby, held off a late rally.

Camby, watching from the bench with tendinitis in his left knee after leaving the game midway through the first quarter, saw his teammates cut a 13-point halftime deficit to 77-74 with 1:59 remaining. But that's as close as New York would get.

Hornets 96, Nets 92

Eddie Jones hit all 12 of his free throws and scored 24 points as Charlotte improved to 4-0 at home.

The Hornets didn't make a field goal in the last four-plus minutes but hit 10 of 12 foul shots in the final 2:35, including four by Jones.

Stephon Marbury scored 31 points to lead New Jersey.

Heat 104, Wizards 95

Alonzo Mourning scored nine of his 25 points down the stretch as visiting Miami pulled away for its fourth straight victory.

Miami blew a 23-point, first-quarter lead, then put the game away with a 15-4 fourth-quarter run.

Tracy Murray scored 15 for the Wizards, who have lost five straight after winning their season opener.

76ers 92, Bulls 86

At Philadelphia, Allen Iverson scored 35 points and led a 16-0 surge in the second half that the 76ers past winless Chicago.

At 0-5, the Bulls are off to their worst start since they lost their first nine games in 1967-68.

Hersey Hawkins, who played for the 76ers from 1989-1993, had 30 points for Chicago.

Trail Blazers 93, Nuggets 78

Rasheed Wallace had 19 points and 11 rebounds as visiting Portland withstood a second-half charge from Denver.

Scottie Pippen added 10 points, eight assists and six rebounds for the Blazers, who continued to display their impressive depth. Detlef Schrempf had 15 points and Steve Smith finished with 14.

Antonio McDyess led Denver with 17.

Pak cruising in final tournament of the year

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Good food, good fun, good golf. No wonder Se Ri Pak is having the time of her life on the Strip.

While the rest of the players in the LPGA Tour Championship tried to position themselves for the weekend at the Desert Inn Golf Club, Pak nearly made that a moot point Friday with another numbing display of short irons that gave her a five-stroke lead.

Despite a bogey on the 18th when she missed the fairway and was blocked by a tree, the South Korean star wound up with another 6-under-par 66 and, not surprisingly, was all smiles at the end of the day.

"I think this week is the best," said Pak, at 12-under 132 halfway through the final event of the season. "I am much more comfortable, which is fun. Fun outside the golf course and eat dinner, good food around here. Play good, enjoy, and happy. Everything is pretty good."

Everything looks pretty dismal for everybody else.

"She will be hard to beat," England's Laura Davies said after matching Pak's 66 to finish at 137. "She knows what she's doing."

Along with going after her fourth victory of the year, Pak could remove any remaining suspense in the race for player of the year. Juli Inkster has to win and hope that Australia's Karrie Webb finishes third or worse. Both were at 138, along with Canadian Lorie Kane and Nancy Scranton.

"Slim," Inkster said of her chances of winning the award. "But I thought it was slim coming in here. I never give up, so I'm just going to keep firing at the pins. But I'm going to need a good, low round to get back into this thing."

Even that might not help.

Pak swears Desert Inn is not a pitch-and-putt course, that a score of 68 or 69 is no small task. So how to explain 13 birdies over the first 36 holes?

"That's perfect," she said. "Two days left. I hope go through same like this."

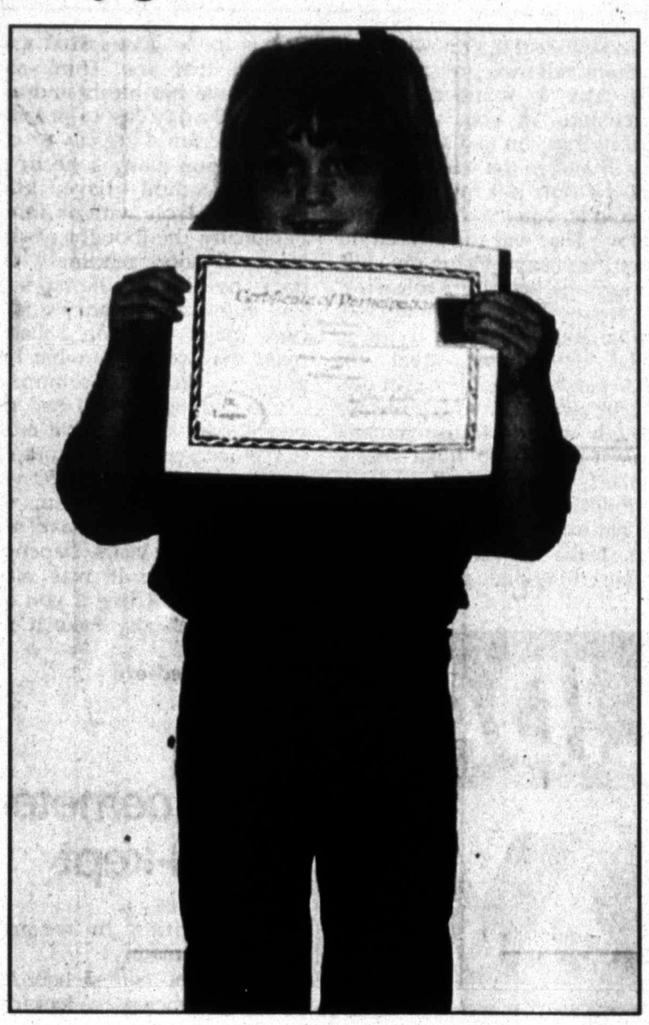

Even more amazing is that Pak just put some new irons in her bag the first day of the tournament for the top 30 on the LPGA money list. She switched to Callaway Hawkeye irons because she says they felt "comfortable."

Her distance control was crucial Friday, a day on which others had trouble trying to discern whether the greens would be hard and release the ball, or soft and spin it back. Pak's longest putt of the day was a 15-foot birdie on the No. 7, and she nearly holed a pitching wedge on No. 13 that left her a tap-in birdie.

"It's working out," she said, breaking into a laugh when she realized her understatement.

Pak will be paired Saturday with Davies, who might be the best suited to track her down. Davies is the defending champion at Desert Inn.

Canadian slips past Quanah

AMARILLO — A disastrous mistake in the kicking game by Quanah in the last precious seconds of the first half turned the momentum of the game and helped Canadian escape with a 20-14 Class 2A bi-district triumph before 1,500 on Friday at Dick Bivins Stadium.

This is the second year running that the Wildcats have claimed victory over the Indians in the bi-district playoffs. They will meet Tuscola Jim Ned in an area-round match-up next week.

The Wildcats took the game's opening kickoff and drove 86 yards in five plays for a quick score.

On first down, Hall threw a 50-yard halfback pass to Nathan Reyes, giving Canadian a first down at Quanah's 36. On third-and-14, George Peyton raced 37 yards around right end to the Indians 3 and he scored on the next play for a 6-0 lead with 9:37 left in the opening quarter.

Quanah took a 7-6 lead when it drove 97 yards in 17 plays following a Canadian punt. The drive, capped by a 7-yard pass from Barker to Jason Hill, took 8:14 off the clock.

With 17 seconds remaining in the game before halftime, Quanah was in punt formation from its 13. A low snap from center was scooped up by Nick Barker, but his knee touched down at the 1-yard line.

Canadian's Eric Hall scored on the next play and then ran for the two-point conversion to take a 14-7 lead into the half.

After a scoreless third quarter, Canadian went in front 20-7 following a five-play, 51-yard drive after a Quanah punt.

Peyton's 40-yard run on first down gave the Wildcats terrific position at the Indians 15. Four running plays later, quarterback Derek Maupin scored from 2 yards out with 5:19 to play.

Barker completed passes of 22 and 28 yards on Quanah's next possession as the Indians reached Canadian's 18. The drive stalled with 1:42 remaining to play, following four straight incompletions.

One a third-down play, Hill fumbled following a 10-yard loss, and Quanah's Dusty Finley scooped up the loose ball and ran 8 yards for a TD with 18 seconds remaining to make it closer to the end.

The Indians attempted an onside kick but Canadian covered it near midfield and ran out the clock two plays later.

Peyton led the Wildcats to 134 yards rushing on 19 carries. Maupin completed five of eight passes for 57 yards.

Canadian held Quanah running back Marcus Jalomo in check. After gaining some 1,460 yards during the regular season, he was held to 49 yards on 15 carries. Barker completed eight of 21 passes for 114 yards and added 21 yards rushing on 13 attempts.

The Indians ended their season with a record of 9-2, while the Wildcats continue on with a record of 10-1.

Hunting retriever club schedules seminar

PAMPA — The North American Hunting Retriever Association (NAHRA) wants to establish a local club in the Pampa area.

A seminar will be conducted by Dr. Joseph McCann on Saturday, Nov. 20, starting at 8:30 a.m. at Clarendon Junior College, located on highway 287 in Clarendon.

The seminar will be held in the main building in classroom 102. Dr. McCann is the NAHRA's regional director as well as a long-time professional trainer.

Everyone is welcome, whether or not you currently own a retriever breed of dog. The seminar is free of charge and will provide valuable information on how to raise and train a retriever. A question and answer session will be conducted in the morning. The seminar will then move outdoors and Dr. McCann will conduct a field demonstration for the dogs.

"This demonstration will amaze you, especially if you have never seen dogs of this caliber work in the field," said Jim Bonnell of Pampa who is trying to organize a local club.

The North American Hunter Retriever Association was created in 1983 to preserve the hunting instincts of retriever breed of dogs. NAHRA publishes a weekly publication with up-to-date information on training and testing retrievers.

Bonnell said the hunter needs a structure in which he or she can train their dogs and to share valuable information. The hunter also needs a system of formal tests so that the dog's working accomplishments can be demonstrated and recorded, Bonnell said.

"We must always remember that hunters go afield to hunt, and a trained dog is a valuable tool," Bonnell added.

Those interested in forming a local NAHRA club can contact Bonnell at 806-665-4360, Ed Poole at 806-633-4364 or Danny McWhorter at 806-358-2528.

Split could change Judson dynasty

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — If you follow high school football in Texas, you're probably familiar with the Judson Rockets.

Five state championships since 1983. Years of playoff appearances. Future college football standouts emerging from a huge pool of high school students. This is the Judson dynasty.

On Saturday, all that could begin to change if Judson School District voters approve a $181 million bond package that, among other things, would pay for construction of two new high schools, reducing the student population at Judson High School in Converse.

Emotions run high on both sides of the issue.

Caught in the political squabble is the Judson football program, which draws its players from a 56-square-mile district covering all or part of Converse, Live Oak, Universal City and Selma northeast of San Antonio.

"It really becomes a little bit offensive to me," Judson football coach D.W. Rutledge said of the bond issue debate. "They've used (football) as a political pawn."

Rutledge opposes breaking up the 4,300-student high school, saying he likes the diversity and competition of the big school — one of the five largest in the state — as well as its high-quality extracurricular and academic programs.

Bond package proponents say they want smaller schools with more individual attention for students.

"It's pretty public knowledge that size is the issue," school board member Johnny Harris said. "There's a segment of the community that feels like college-sized high schools are the thing and that's what they want to see. The community at large has indicated to us over the last three years that they want smaller high schools."

Board secretary Pete Navarrette said smaller schools will help more children excel academically.

"At the big school, only the above-average kid excels. The average kid just falls through the cracks," he said.

By 2003, without a breakup, Judson High School is projected to have 5,600 students.

The bond package would provide for two more high schools, a new alternative school, three more elementary schools, conversion of part of the current high school into a middle school, and renovation of a number of schools involving all grade levels.

Opponents of the bond package deny they are simply avid sports fans reluctant to let go of a Class 5A powerhouse.

They question whether racial inequities in the district would be heightened by two new high schools, noting that larger concentrations of minorities live in the southern part of the district.

Opponents further argue that paying off the bonds would be too expensive for taxpayers in the mostly working-class school district.

"Simply stated, this bond issue is too much," said Joe Johnson, president of Citizens for a United Judson ISD.

"This is not about football," he added, emphatically.

Johnson said he favors a smaller bond package that would provide some new schools in lower grades. He said there's plenty of room for growth at the existing single high school.

Judson's students are spread over two campuses — the "gray" campus for ninth and 10th grades and the "red" campus for 11th and 12th.

Terri Nakamura, a school district parent, said he backs the bond proposal.

"These kids need to be in a smaller school where teachers ... know their name," she said.

Ms. Nakamura rejects the race argument raised by bond opponents.

"That is so ridiculous," she said. "My kids are Japanese."

Her 15-year-old son, Chris, said reducing the size of Judson High School would help keep classes smaller and make it easier to move around campus and get through the cafeteria lunch line.

But he said he wonders whether a Judson breakup will happen. "A lot of people don't want to see the football team broken up," he said.

Otis Grigsby Sr., a parent who opposes the breakup, said he doesn't want minorities to be slighted with lesser campuses or larger student-teacher ratios, which he said he fears would happen if Judson High School were divided.

"It's not sports. It's the representation of minorities," said Grigsby, who is black.

Duval, Couples off to quick start

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Fred Couples is right at home in the Shark Shootout's relaxed atmosphere.

Couples, who teamed with Raymond Floyd to shoot a record 15-under 57 in the alternate shot format nine years ago, combined with David Duval for an 11-under 61 on Friday.

"It was a pretty easy 11-under par," Couples said. "I didn't feel that great with the putter. David just made all the putts. We didn't do anything crazy. We just played well together."

Couples and Duval took a five-stroke lead over the teams of Andrew Magee and Jay Haas, Scott McCarron and Scott Hoch, and John Cook and Peter Jacobsen.

"It's easy when both players play well," said Duval, a four-time winner this year who finished second on the PGA Tour's money list with $3,641,906.

Brad Faxon and Jeff Sluman opened with a 67 on the Sherwood Country Club course. Defending champions Greg Norman and Steve Elkington fired a 69 and that left them in sixth place, eight shots out of the lead in the 12-team event.

Norman is the host of the Shark Shootout, which is making its final appearance at Sherwood. The tournament will move to Florida next year after an 11-year run in Thousand Oaks.

Hoch and McCarron birdied four of the first seven holes on the back nine to stay within striking distance of the lead.

"We're just giving them (Duval and Couples) a false sense of security," Hoch joked. "The next two days will really play to our strengths."

Letters to the editor

Working at jail is an experience

To the editor,

I am writing this letter for a few reasons. Number one is I enjoyed working as a corrections officer for Sheriff Don Copeland and the former Sheriff Randy Stubblefield. It has been a learning experience to say the least. I would like to take this time also to tell everyone that I came in contact with on a daily basis that they will be dearly missed. Gray County Jail was like a second home to me for five years and the people I worked with like family.

I would like to put my two-cents worth in now that Gray County no longer employs me regarding the past few weeks of whining that has been done by a few inmates. For starters, if you don't like jail STAY OUT! The majority of the complainers have had numerous opportunities afforded to them to stay out but choose not to take advantage of them. So stop complaining!

Unlike inmates in surrounding counties, who are served sandwiches or frozen dinners three times a day, Gray Co. furnishes their inmates three home-cooked meals daily. For example, the day that Inmate Hutchison's letter to the editor appeared in the Sunday paper this is what was served:

—Breakfast: scrambled eggs, one piece of sausage, two pieces of toast, breakfast potatoes, milk and coffee;

—Lunch: hamburgers, French fries, lettuce, tomato, onions, pickles, mustard, diced peaches and Grape Kool-Aid;

—Supper: barbecue chicken, baked potato, salad with Thousand Island dressing, baked beans, butter, dinner rolls and ice tea.

I wonder how many people eat this well daily? I also wonder how many of the inmates eat like this on the outside? From the way they look when they return back to jail, I hardly think so. If the food is so bad, explain to me why the jail staff and other county employees pay their $1.50 for a tray including the sheriff himself!

Medical wise, here is an example. While housing an inmate for a parole violation, we were forced to provide glasses because of his eyesight. After being released, this individual never bothered to follow up with his eye care. Upon being re-arrested, this individual suddenly felt that he now needed eye care to which this inmate did receive. Where do you draw the line?

Also, I was always amazed at the lack of knowledge the citizens of Gray Co. have on just how many inmates we house daily. People seem to think that we only have five or six inmates. Hello? No, we house on any given day anywhere from 45-60 inmates. Think about that for a minute! Two, and on a good day three, jailers per 45-60 inmates. Inmate Hutchison was right to say that we had to sometimes tell them we didn't have time. Time? Time to run to their property so they can switch out their socks, run down and see if their newspapers are there, call their probation officers, etc. I wonder, Inmate Hutchison, if you recall the Sunday that you had a loved one very ill and in the hospital that I took the time put my job on the line and let you make a call to this person? That was in between the times I was supervising my shift, arraigning, booking, releasing, overseeing the feeding and medicating not to mention trying to be fair to each individual who had a personal problem that day. All the while having to wade through water because inmates think it is cute to flush sheets, blankets, books and fruit down the toilet.

What really gets me is that as of Sept. 1 the state says that any inmate sitting out a misdemeanor fine is to be given $100 a day towards that fine. Think about that. Three hot meals and a cot plus $100 a day. Just to sit around and look for a reason to complain. I saw many a hectic day that I would have gladly switched places with an inmate. Personally, the thought of sleeping until noon, reading a good book, no phones ringing, someone doing my laundry and the only major decision I had to make that week was what I was going to order on commissary doesn't sound all that bad right now. Now, consider that correction officers put in 8-12 hour days and only make around $50 a day.

I guess what really sums it all up are two quotes I have heard inmates say for years. Depending on the inmate it was either, "Don't do the crime if you can't do the time!" or "Fake it until you make it!"

Local cemetery is well-kept

To the editor,

I am writing in regard to Fairview Cemetery!

Has anyone noticed how wonderful the cemetery has looked this whole summer? The improvement is noticeable when just driving by on Duncan Street. The lawn is always mowed, no tall weeds anywhere. It is very manicured looking.

The grass is also pretty and green, which has been no easy feat. The irrigation pipes (not a sprinkler system) have to be moved by hand to different locations. The green grass has even made the artificial flowers look fresh and bright. The trees have been pruned and all the dead branches removed.

The headstones and vases are all straight and in their proper place — not whopper-jawed like they have been at times in the past.

If you have not noticed, please do so and give Lance DeFever and his employees a big round of applause for his care and skill plus hard work. Also for his knowledge of knowing the meaning of the word perpetual care! This is the first time in 20 years Fairview has looked so pretty!

Good work, Lance.

Law officers need support

To the editor,

During October 1999, Texas lost four law enforcement officers to senseless, violent deaths. Why? Because they did their job; they answered the call.

According to an FBI report in a front page story in the "San Antonio Express-News," (Oct. 17, 1999) the most dangerous job in law enforcement is that of a rural deputy sheriff. They are required to enforce all laws — federal, state, county and city — not just local ordinances. Do you know that many of these rural deputies (and police officers in small communities) earn less than $22,000 per year? Because they earn so little, most of them must moonlight on their days off just to provide basic needs for their families.

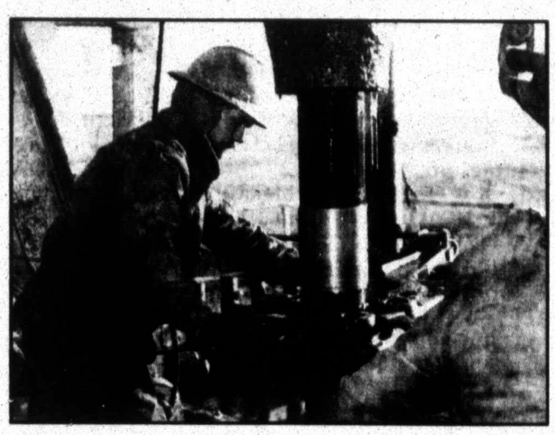

It's time we Texans step up and answer the call. Because Texas is one of the fastest growing states, and we want our state to be safe, it's up to us to see that all law enforcement officers are paid a respectable salary. It's up to you and me to write our state representatives and state senators to demand that Texas either provide a base salary for full-time law enforcement officers or a stipend to bring up those wages that are below the poverty line.

As parents of a law enforcement officer in rural Texas, my husband and I realize that there will always be danger in that job, but we would like to improve the quality of their lives. We need your help. We need people from all 254 counties in Texas to pass around petitions and get signatures from their fellow citizens to present to our state legislature when it meets again in January 2001.

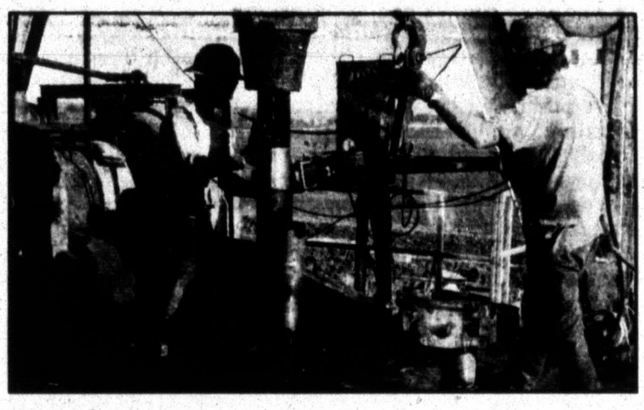

If you would like to join a real Texas "posse," send a legal-sized, self-addressed, stamped envelope, and I will send you the appropriate petition, information about how to obtain signatures, and directions for delivery of your petition. Send your request to me: Betty Harper Murphy, P.O. Box 102, Ft. Stockton, TX 79735, or e-mail your request to bharpermurphy@hotmail.com.

Turning Right

Text and photos by David Bowser

"We've got 17 rigs out today," said H. Wayne Hughes, executive director of the Panhandle Producers and Royalty Owners Association.

If the drilling industry could find more people to hire, the number would be higher, but the whipsaw effect of the volatile oil patch has left the industry hurting for roughnecks.

"About February, 1998, we began to crash," Hughes said. "By this time last year we had eight or nine rigs out running. In 1998, we went form 28 rigs operating in March to 1114 rigs operating in December."

By December, 1998, the industry saw the lowest prices for crude oil adjusted for inflation since the founding of the industry. The industry has been around the Texas Panhandle for about 77 years.

"It was $7.50 a barrel," Hughes said.

It was $11 a barrel in June, 1999, before it started picking up again. Even as late a October, it was $13 a barrel.

"We began losing crews dramatically in December," Hughes said.

There are six drilling companies that do business in the Texas Panhandle, Service Drilling, Hudson Drilling, H-40 Drilling company, Unit Drilling, Spradling Drilling and Cheyenne Drilling.

The biggest of those are Service Drilling, a company based in Tulsa, Okla., with panhandle headquarters in Borger, and Hudson Drilling, a Pampa company.

"They have the most rigs out," Hughes said. "Service has 10 rigs available. Hudson has a similar number."

This contrasts to 1997, when the panhandle rig count was at the highest point in 23 years with 34 rigs running.

The impact of the low oil prices translated into loss of jobs.

"What happened in December, January and February when they had to lay off crews was the crews found work literally overnight because we were otherwise at full employment in the Texas Panhandle," Hughes said. "There was a desperate need for people who were used to working hard, which these guys are. There are now working at places like K-Mart, Lowe's and Wal-Mart, where while they are not making the money they were as roughnecks, they are making some money and are taking home relatively good paychecks, consistent paychecks."

A regular paycheck is something that can be elusive in the oil patch.

"We can guarantee that they can get a paycheck in our industry today and maybe next week, but who knows after that," Hughes said.

Perhaps the most frustrating thing about the situation, Hughes said, is that the U.S. has little to say about the price of oil. Those prices are set by OPEC and can change at a whim.

"The bitter reality is that OPEC meets again in March to set quotas again," Hughes said. "What they will do is any body's guess."

The OPEC oil ministers say they will hold at current production levels.

"If they are telling the truth, then we will continue to be viable," Hughes said. "We'll continue to be able to employ the crews we have now. We can have twice as many crews in the field as we have now if we could get them. They're not interested in coming to work for us, and I don't blame them."

Hughes said this has the effect of putting a kind of lid on the capability of the drilling segment of the service industry to do the work that producers need done.

"In 1997 when we were in relatively prosperous times, it was not unusual to hear of drilling companies talk about contracting to do a drilling job for a producer a year out," Hughes said. "We can do that right now. There are people begging for crews, but we can't do it because rigs are stacked. We can't find workers."

Hughes said he gets two or three phone calls a week from producers wanting to know if he knows anything about crews. He said he doesn't.

Nor does the problem stop with the oil industry.

"A critical effect of that downturn a year ago was that crews could not find work in places like Pampa," Hughes said. "They left the country. They went elsewhere. They're not working at Wal-Mart in Pampa. They may be working at Wal-Mart in Wichita Falls or Dallas or Denver."

That tended to have a pretty dramatic effect on public schools. Wink schools almost didn't open this year. Brownfield authorities reported they were losing 10 students a week.

"Pampa was not immune to that out flight," Hughes said. "It hit places like Canadian. Perryton was kind of immune from it because Perryton is primarily a gas producing area."

Make holiday time a safe time by following a few simple, general kitchen safety tips

Joan Gray
Extension Agent

With lots of cooking and entertaining at holiday time, it's easy to get caught up in the excitement and to overlook some basic safety precautions. Even cooks with decades of experience are susceptible to kitchen mishaps. Here are some general kitchen safety tips.

A safe kitchen begins with a clean, clutter-free environment. If things are put away in their proper place, there is less chance of accidents. Cuts and burns are just two of the possible injuries. Others include slips, sprains, falls, strains, bruises, electric shock and poisoning.

Fire and hot utensils are the most obvious dangers. The basic rule for stove safety is never leave cooking unattended. Turn pot handles so they do not hang over the front of the stove where they can be bumped or pulled down by a curious child. When lifting a pot lid, tilt it so it directs the steam away from face and hands. Use dry potholders to remove hot dishes from the oven or stove.

Oil and grease present special hazards. Water and hot oil do not mix; instead, they create dangerous splatters. Food should be free of water and ice when it's lowered gently into hot oil. Grease that is smoking is too hot. Smoke indicates that the grease can easily ignite. If a grease fire starts, never try to put it out with water. Extinguish it by turning off the burner and sliding a lid over the pan or using a dry-chemical fire extinguisher.

When cooking, wear short or roll-up sleeves rather than loose, flowing garments. If clothing does catch fire, drop to the floor and roll back and forth to smother the flame. If the burns are severe, call for medical help. If minor, rinse with cool water for at least five minutes. Never treat a burn with grease, butter or ointment. These substances will trap the heat and make the injury worse.

Knives are another kitchen hazard. Knives should be kept sharp as a dull knife requires extra pressure which increases the possibility that the blade, hand or cutting board will slip. Use knives only for cutting and not for tasks like chopping ice or prying open a container. Never soak a dirty knife in the sink – feeling around for a knife in soapy water is courting an accident. Wash, dry and put knives away immediately after use. When not in use, knives should be stored in a special slotted rack or wood block or in a separate drawer with blades pointing to the rear.

Even the general kitchen environment can be hazardous. A cabinet door left open can result in a bumped head. Worn flooring or food spills left on the floor increase the chance of slipping. Frayed extension and appliance cords increase the chance of shock or fire. Poor lighting means poor visibility which increases the possibility of accident. Check all these things carefully.

Test smoke detectors regularly. Many people find it easier to remember to do this at the same time they change their clocks. Keep a first aid kit handy. A fire extinguisher that is capable of putting out both grease and electrical fires should be an essential piece of equipment in every kitchen. Store it where it is easily and quickly accessible.

Childproof the kitchen. Children are curious all year long, but at holiday time they are more excited than usual, and the adults around them are more distracted than usual. If there are small children underfoot, it's particularly important to child-proof the kitchen.

Keep things inaccessible. This means to use door locks on cabinets containing medicines, cleaning supplies, lighter fluid and pesticides. Tightly close garbage to keep children out and install gates at entrances to kitchens with steps. Stove shields which detach easily for cooking, prevent children's access to burner and oven controls. These control knobs can also be removed when not in use. Install childproof plugs in unused electrical outlets and cover the garbage disposal switch with a dome-type outlet plate. Most important of all: Never leave a child unattended in the kitchen.

Just a few precautions will help make you holidays festive and fun.

Bakeline experts share top 10 baking questions, answers

ARDEN HILLS, Minn. — Over the last decade, the expert home economists at the Land O'Lakes Holiday Bakeline have been dishing out great advice and recipe suggestions to hundreds of thousands of holiday bakers. With all the information available about butter, it's hard to distinguish fact from fiction. to help clear up the confusion, the butter experts at Land O'Lakes Holiday Bakeline would like to share some helpful hints and facts about butter.

• Salted and unsalted butter are interchangeable in your baking recipes. The amount of salt in salted butter is so small it won't affect your cookies, cakes, pies, etc.

• Butter absorbs odors easily. To prevent the transfer of odors to butter, wrap it in an airtight food bag and place in a separate compartment in the refrigerator.

• Store butter in your refrigerator and use by the code date printed on the package. If you are not going to use the butter within that time, you may freeze butter in an airtight container up to six months.

• Butter is known for its rich, creamy taste. Melting butter releases and enhances the unique butter flavor.

• Butter melts between 82-96 degrees F. When melting butter, make sure to watch it closely to ensure that it doesn't burn, even at low temperatures.

• To soften butter quickly, cut it into chunks and leave it a room temperature or place the stick between two sheets of wax paper and hit it with a rolling pin.

• Butter and margarine are both 80 percent fat, but butter's source of fat is pure cream. Margarine is made from oil.

• One of the key principles of eating right is to make sure your diet contains a wide variety of foods. Incorporate moderation into your diet to include the foods you love including butter.

• Calorie for calorie, and fat gram for fat gram, butter and margarine are equal — 100 calories and 11 grams of fat per tablespoon. Light butter can be used as a low-fat alternative for topping vegetables or as a table spread. It is not recommended for baking.

• Do not use spread products that contain less than 70 percent fat in baking. They contain too much water and will not perform well.

• It takes 21 pounds or 10 quarts of whole milk to make one pound of butter.

Last year, the Bakeline received a record 65,000 phone calls. The busiest call days have been consistent in the last decade — Thanksgiving Day, the week before Thanksgiving, Christmas Eve and the week before Christmas.

Land O'Lakes has been helping families bake delicious treats since 1921. This year, the company celebrates the 10th anniversary of the Bakeline. The toll-free hotline is open from 8 a.m.-6 p.m. (CST) from Nov. 1-Dec. 24 seven days a week. Expert home economists are available to answer questions. Consumers also may visit the website at www.landolakes.com to e-mail questions to the baking experts. All callers will receive a free leaflet filled with easy holiday recipes.

LETTERS

Together our "posse" can round up the signatures needed to get our legislature's attention.

Soon we will celebrate Thanksgiving. Let us also give thanks for all those who willingly serve us as law enforcement officers. Let us remember our fallen heroes in those ranks and let that memory move us into action to improve the quality of life for their fellow officers, those who are still answering the call.

Adequate medical care not always easy to find

To the editor,

I have put off writing this letter for weeks, but it now must be said. I have to get some input from the many others that are in the same sad state that I find myself and my family in.

Today, I must go over to the Borger Medical Clinic and get my medical chart, so that I can take it with me on my search for the medical attention that I can not get in this town. Not only my doctor Burgess has left the clinic, but, now two more doctors are leaving without any due cause that the people of this town can see. We are not offered any explanation or reason for this mass exodus and we are extremely offended by the attitude taken by those in charge.

Just WHO is in charge of this? Nobody at the hospital is taking calls, and nobody is answering any calls about this situation? When I tried to go back to the doctor that I had seen, before Burgess came, he refused me. He has red-flagged the charts of the ones who left him to go to the Borger Clinic and told me that he will not take any of us back. Furthermore, he will not release my out of state charts, which now belong to him. I had spent thousands of dollars on many tests that had to be taken and the results are all in these charts.

That is my dilemma, and I am sure that all of the doctors that are leaving are also putting all of their patients in the same predicament that my family is in. What do we need to do? Picket the hospital board? Hire a large bus to take all of us out-of-town for medical treatment? Does anybody out there have any answers? Why are we paying taxes on our hospital if we are not going to use it? Why are there so many people employed at this hospital except nursing? We are not happy with the doctors that are available, nor their specialties (if any).

We all can't and are not going to just sit back and just take it — we want some answers — another D.O. in this town is not going to get it. This arthritis in my spine and neck is driving me crazy and I want treatment. No surgery can do it (even if we did have a surgeon). Every doctor in Borger is afraid to give us any pain medication to help to relieve some of the pain. Please don't tell me to go to the Pain Clinic, that doesn't work. I have been there three times with no relief.

Well, I am glad to get some of this off of my chest, maybe some these chest pains will ease up. Damn shame we can't have a heart specialist, and rheumatologist, and a pulmonary doctor. It seems to me that these are the main complaints in the Texas Panhandle. Isn't it hard enough to live here without having to go without a doctor?

Does anyone know hot to contact the American Medical Association or who?

The Market Forecaster

By George Kleinman

Wheat (Bull/Bear)

Outlook: This market is caught between well-advertised bearish supply fundamentals and cheap prices. Traders are reluctant to step up to the plate and bid the market back up since the supply statistics appear plentiful. On top of this, there is the potential for big Australian and Argentinean crops. On the other hand, prices are historically cheap, basically scraping 20 year lows. When prices are cheap, not only is the incremental downside limited, but demand picks up. In fact, export demand is running comfortably above a year ago. When a solid demand base develops, any unexpected news from a supply perspective (weather problems for example) makes the path of least resistance higher. As I mentioned before, there have been yield problems in Canada and the Dakotas and a resultant protein shortage. It is interesting to note that last month, while the Chicago wheat fell 20 cents, Minneapolis (the high protein milling wheat) lost zero. Longer term, this market feels as if it is getting close to a major bottom, but could drift sideways in the near term.

Strategy: Hedgers: I suggest a program involving the sale of all cash wheat and the simultaneous purchase of at the money call options for March. In this way, you can maintain ownership of cheap wheat, but free up cash to pay bills. Your downside risk is limited (something storage cannot do) yet you maintain full upside potential. Use the current at the money calls to establish positions. At press time, the March 270s were trading at about 13 cents.

Traders: Traders who took our previous recommendation are spread long December Chicago wheat and short December corn (at under 60 cents premium to the wheat). It has been drifting lower, but I want to maintain our risk point of 50 cents difference (on a closing basis) and expect the spread to eventually widen to 85 cents for a profit potential of over $1,000 per spread.

Corn (Bull/Bear)

Outlook: The fundamentals, at least on paper, still appear bearish. The corn ending stocks is a large number, 1.8 billion bushels and the highest in 12 years. Nevertheless, the market has been dull and lifeless. It can't seem to move much in either direction and may be forming a longer term base. The next important dynamic was the USDA Crop Report (not available at press time). Some private analysts are looking for a larger final crop than the September report (which already calls for a very large 9.4 billion bushel crop). However, the harvest is basically over, and many years corn does bottom this time of year. Any unexpected news will most likely be bullish as the funds are short a massive amount of corn at the Board of Trade, over 300 million bushels, and they will need to buy back or roll ahead in the coming weeks.

The information and recommendations presented herein are believed to be reliable; however, changing market variables can change price outlooks. Neither Pampa News nor George Kleinman assume liability for their use. Use this section as a guide only. Futures and options trading can involve risk of loss. Past performance is not indicative of future performance. Follow the recommendations if they make sense to you and for your operation.

USDA projects further prices dip

WASHINGTON (AP) — Big harvests of grain and soybeans in the United States and overseas are continuing to push down commodity prices as stockpiles of the crops grow, the government said today.

The average price that farmers will get for soybeans this year is expected to range from $4.60 to $5.10 a bushel, down 15 cents from last month's projection, according to the Agriculture Department. Wheat and corn prices are expected to run about 5 cents lower than the October forecast.

This year's corn and soybean crops are the third biggest on record despite the drought that hurt farmers in the East and parts of the Midwest.

USDA raised its forecast of the corn harvest by 1 percent from last month to 9.54 billion bushels. Soybean production was forecast at 2.67 billion bushels, down 1 percent from last month.

Farmers will go into next spring with 2.02 billion bushels of corn stockpiled, up from the 1.8 billion they started with this spring and 1.3 billion bushels in 1998.

Stockpiles of wheat also are growing even though U.S. farmers cut back on their acreage this year because of the low prices they were getting. USDA projected a surplus of 1 billion bushels for the 1999-2000 crop year, up from 946 million bushels for 1998-1999 and 722 million bushels for 1997-1998.

"These are very large numbers," commodity analyst Bill Biedermann said of the projected corn and wheat surpluses.

Imprisonment: Punishment versus rehabilitation ...

To the editor,

Since the beginning of recorded history, people have been burdened with the task of deciding what to do with those who violate the laws of society. Many forms of punishment have been used; the gallows, the whip, the stocks, and the guillotine, just to name a few. Confinement was primarily used only as a means of restraining the prisoner until a suitable punishment was decided. Finally around 1790, in Philadelphia, Pa., the Quakers devised an alternative form of punishment. Their idea was to place the prisoner in a solitary cell with a Bible as a companion, where they might do penance for their crimes. Hence the word, penitentiary. Future times have modified that institution and brought forth a new kind of goal; redemption, or in modern parlance, rehabilitation.

The United States prison systems are growing at their fastest rate in history. Today more than 1.1 million Americans are incarcerated behind prison and jail walls, and 1,650 more are added to the prison rolls each week according to Howard Goodman's "Penitentiary's Have Become Modern Poor Houses, Today's Quakers Say." After years of attempting rehabilitation. It has become clear that rehabilitation in the prison setting does not work. Since rehabilitation of the convict is the common goal, prisons should be used only as an institution of punishment and protection of society from offenders who are deemed beyond the realm of rehabilitation. Rehabilitation should be done outside the prison environment through some type of alternative sentencing.

"Get tough on crime" attitudes in the past few years have resulted in more offenders being prosecuted and incarcerated than ever before. In the past two decades, all 50 state legislatures have enacted sentencing laws, sentencing guideline statues, or both. The results of these new laws have been overcrowded prisons which do not prevent crime effectively and make rehabilitation almost impossible, all at a cost that is staggering.

If the billions of dollars invested each year in prisons were instead invested in education, the economic needs of the poor, and programs of alternative sentencing, crime would be drastically reduced over time. Putting so much money into the building of prisons is in itself counter productive. History has shown us that if prisons are built, they will be filled.

Imprisonment is also often socially damaging to the convicted criminal. Many crimes have been, and continue to be committed in prison, including rape and murder. These factors along with the open availability of drugs within the prison system make the opportunity for rehabilitation practically nonexistent. A first time minor offender who might benefit from rehabilitation is adversely placed in the same environment with violent child molesters, rapist and murders. In such circumstances, it is impossible to safeguard the nonviolent from the violent. The idea that institutionalized criminals will see the error of their ways or change their character solely from a few conversations with a prison counselor is unrealistic. Therefore, if rehabilitation is the objective, and the past has shown that prisons give little or no rehabilitation, then the court should find another medium for rehabilitation.

Serious crimes should be dealt with harshly, and for that purpose we should isolate and punish. It should be impressed upon the criminal mind that certain crimes will not be tolerated. People who commit heinous crimes need to be prepared to face long-term punishment, not because of any hope of rehabilitation, but because they deserve punishment.

The other purpose of prison should be straightforward. Despite whatever the offender may do when released, they will not harm society while confined. Sentencing should be structured so that repeat offenders know, before they commit a crime, that repeat offenses will result in longer sentences. Imprisonment by it's very nature eliminates the possibility of rehabilitation, so for a corrective system to do otherwise, the entire notion of incarceration would have to be altered. This is an expense the citizens of this country are not willing to undertake lightly, but it is clear that the alternative is not working.

In D.J. Stubben's book, "#555 Death Row," convicted murderer Charles F. Rumbaugh stated about prisons, "I learned how to be better at robberies. In auto mechanics I learned to make counterfeit money." A prison setting that houses together every type of offender deprives men and women of normal sexual relations for a period of years, restricts normal contact with relatives and friends, and deprives the offender of meaningful work. All of these factors add to the steady increase of the repeat offender population in prison. Incarceration contributes to the break up of the family, leaving released offenders no free world support to aid them in their return to society. Also the prison environment increases the chance of nonviolent inmates becoming more violent because of their association with the violent offenders.

To deprive an individual of his physical freedom is the most severe interference with liberty that a state can impose. But there are less constrictive ways that can be used to control crime.

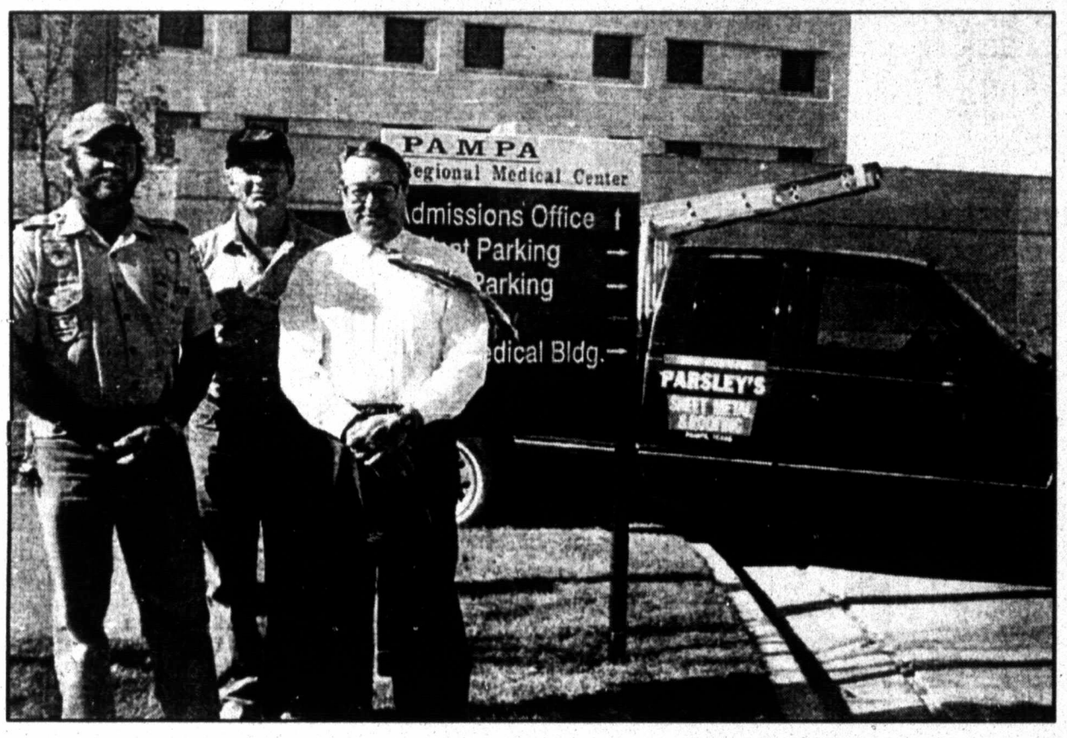

Alternative sentencing is always compared to incarceration. They are viewed, despite the amount of punishment, as giving the offender a break. But the object of the law is to reform criminals and to prevent crime not to punish maliciously or through spite or revenge. The legal system should devise a sentence that minimizes the chance of a given offender repeating a crime. After all, that is the object of rehabilitation. Frequently, alternative sentencing would be the answer.

An offender could possibly receive a probated sentence with community service, counseling and training. This type of sentencing would insure that a convicted person immediately become a productive member of society. But probation must be coupled with education, work and repayment through restitution. Only offenders who present little risk to the community and would most likely benefit from rehabilitation would be eligible for alternative sentencing.

Many cases would still require prison sentences and a sense of justice would require that the penalty be equal to the gravity of the crime. The possible goals of the corrective process have generally been identified as retribution, deterrence, protection of society, and rehabilitation. All four are within the scope o f alternative sentencing. And for the incorrigible criminal, offenders who are unable or unwilling to rehabilitate, prison would remain a viable option. The average offender needs to be given a chance to help rehabilitate themselves if the system is going to work. This can only be done an environment where they feel secure and optimistic about their future.

Newspaper website is blessing, say Texans in Russia

To the editor,

As natives of Pampa who reside in Moscow, Russia, we would like to take this opportunity to say "thank you" to the staff of the Pampa News for the job they are providing by having the paper posted on the Internet.

Living in Moscow, I call my parents (Slim and Sarah Newman) to see how they are and how things are going at home. With cost of phone calls from Russia to Texas, we limit our conversations to friends and family. While searching the Internet, we located the Pampa Daily News. That discovery made us feel like we were there, despite the fact we are sitting in an office in Moscow, Russia, nine hours ahead of Pampa time, a world away, we were home.

We have traveled to Germany, Holland, UAE (United Arab Emirates), Spain, London and Finland and can not say we have not enjoyed that, but somehow it doesn't compare to the feelings we have when our flight is coming in for landing in Amarillo and we are headed down the highway to Pampa. That is a feeling that can not compare to arriving in any other place in the world.

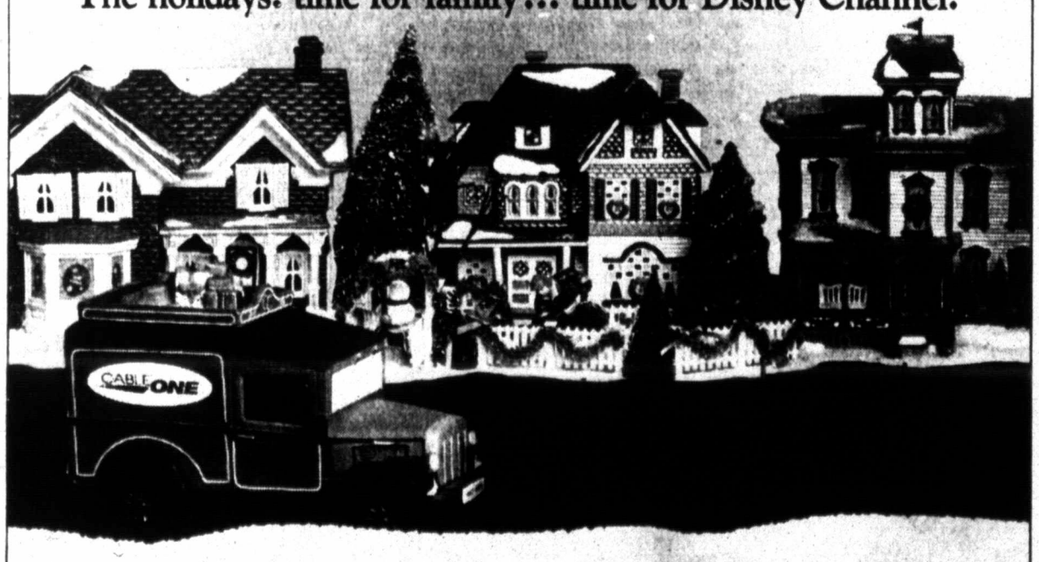

So again, "thank you" for allowing those of us who need a piece of home the opportunity to have that, even in Moscow, Russia.

Mother of Elvis Impersonator Checks Into Heartbreak Hotel

Abigail Van Buren

SYNDICATED COLUMNIST

DEAR ABBY: Will you please ask your readers to take a minute to think about how they treat people who are different or unique? These days we seem to care about how we treat people who are disabled or in a minority — however, some of us seem to forget that all people should be treated with kindness, dignity and respect, regardless of who they are or what they do.

My son is an Elvis impersonator. Now, I'm not talking about some clairvoyant who thinks he channels Elvis; I'm talking about a talented singer who works hard at his profession of re-creating the Elvis concert experience. He was even selected to be in a new film on impersonators called "Almost Elvis." But you would not believe the way some people treat him in public.

Although he doesn't walk around in a jumpsuit, he must look the part with black hair and sideburns. It amazes and upsets me how rude and insensitive people can be with their smart remarks. If they stopped to think for a minute about the Golden Rule, about choosing to build up rather than tear down those around them, then we might have a little more kindness in the world. Elvis was known for his kindness to strangers — and I think we could all take a lesson from him.

PROTECTIVE LITTLE MAMA, OLYMPIA, WASH.

DEAR PROTECTIVE LITTLE MAMA: Although the comments may not be all that a mother would wish for, they may go with the territory. There's an old show-business saying, "If you want a place in the sun, you had better be prepared to put up with a few blisters." Since your son is respected in his profession, I'm hoping he receives his share of compliments to make up for any hurt that may be caused by the clumsy attempts at humor.

It's interesting that Elvis Presley's talent was so unique he is still an unforgettable celebrity so many years after his death.

***

DEAR ABBY: Each year, usually in December, you print letters about choosing appropriate gifts for the elderly. You have advised us against purchasing unwanted items such as bath powder or earrings for Grammy and neckties or after-shave for Grandpa. You have reminded us to stay clear of useless things for their homes, like vases or knick-knacks.

I have learned from your column and for the last few years I simply ask my relatives what they can use. If Mom wants postage stamps and a grocery store gift certificate, and Dad wants a coupon for an oil change this year, that's exactly what I give them. They're pleased and so am I.

Here comes my problem: How do I get my elderly relatives to stop sending me useless gifts? I wouldn't dare hurt their feelings, but they never ask me what I want; they simply send things I have no use for.

How about writing a column to the elderly about gift buying? This really needs to be addressed and printed in the newspaper. (Then maybe I can cut it out and send them copies.) I appreciate your help.

STUMPED IN NEVADA

DEAR STUMPED: Your problem is universal. As the holiday season approaches, write or call your relatives and thank them for their past generosity, then tell them that from now on, a card expressing their loving feelings would be appreciated more than a gift.

Hughes acknowledges that there was some activity during the slump, but it was centered around natural gas prices, not oil.

"People did keep some crude oil wells on line because of the natural gas they produced," he said.

With the downturn in crude oil, it cost more to get a barrel of crude oil to the surface than it could be sold for.

"When it costs more to raise wheat than what you sell it for, what do you do?" Hughes said. "You stop raising wheat."

The same applies to the oil patch.

"The reason a lot of crude oil pump jacks continued to go up and down was the natural gas," he said.

There are about 10,000 pump jacks in the Texas Panhandle. Each one produces about two barrels a day.

"There's 20,000 barrels a day of a practically useless product that for 90 days it cost us more to produce than it made for us." Hughes said.

But today, that oil is worth slightly more than $21 a barrel. At that price, it's worth drilling and pumping.

"But very little of the drilling that's taking place right now is for crude oil because we can only anticipate another whipsaw like this," Hughes said. "Most of the drilling activity right now is either to improve the production of existing wells or to drill new gas wells."

There are some producers who are holding leases on land where under the terms of a contract they must drill before the end of the year.

"If it's into a given formation where there's crude oil, they've got no choice but to do it," Hughes said.

This time of year there is generally a big flurry of drilling.

"But drilling companies can't respond to the flurry this year," Hughes said. "It's called turning to the right. You've got to be turning to the right by Dec. 31 in order to get the tax break for the year. The tax law allows you to expense the all the costs of a well the year in which it began."

While there are reasons to be drilling now, both with the price of crude oil on the rise and the year end tax breaks, there is less being done because of the lack of seasoned employees.

Whether things will be better next year, or through the next century, will depend not on the industry, but on decisions make by cartel ministers half way around the world.
