Heart Attack Fatal To W. J. Bryan Sunday

WM. J. BRYAN

Dairyman Killed Near Incinerator By J. W. Marshall

Fred Swayze Shot in Quarrel Over Cattle That Swam Across River Into Cotton Field.

Fred Swayze, age 32, owner of the Swayze dairy located five miles east of Wichita Falls, was shot and instantly killed about 6 o'clock Sunday morning by J. L. Marshall, foreman of the city incinerator.

Officers were called to the scene several hours later and found the body on the banks of the Wichita river, one-half mile from the incinerator. Marshall was sitting near the body smoking and waiting, he said, until someone came to get the body. He made no effort to resist arrest and came to the city hall where he later made a statement to County Attorney Wayne Sommerville. A rifle was found near the body where it had been leaned against the river bank. The one empty shell in the magaznie had hung.

Meager Details.

Only meager details of the actual shooting could be obtained from Marshall, though he talked freely enough about the trouble that had led up to the k'l'g.

"I warned him to keep his cows out of my field," he told officers. The quarrel between the two is said to be of long standing, and while the men had h d some words at previous times, Marshall admitted that no mention of personal violence had been made prior to yesterday.

The Swayze dairy is located just east of the Wichita river on the J. S. Ford land. Marshall, in addition to being foreman of the city incinerator, has leased several acres of land across the river from the Ford farm. This land has been planted in cotton which Marshall stated had been badly damaged at previous times by cattle from the Swayze dairy swimming across the river to his land.

Saturday some of the cattle wandered across into Marshall's land and were penned up, to be held, he saidk for damages incurred last week when other cattle had torn up some of the cotton. In order to prevent Swayze froom freeing the cows until he had settled for the alleged damages, Marshall stated that he had waited near the corral with a rifle.

Shot One Time.

Early yesterday morning the owner of the cattle had come across the river in search of them. Marshall did not say whether any words had passed between them before he fired the single shot. Swayze fell near the top of the bank, dy'g instantly, it is thought from the shot in his abdomen.

Police believe there was one other eye witness to the shooting but have been unable to find anyone who admits having seen the affair. Marshall denies that he reported the killing to the police, though he admitted that he expected officers to come before long. Officers were called by a phone call that came in about 8 o'clock yesterday from some one who reported "a man had been killed out close to the incenerator.

In his statement Marshall said that he had intended holding the cattle until Swayze paid him for the loss to his crops, incurred b ythe animals.He denied however that he had meant to kili the owner. He gave no direct cause for the shooting.

Charges of murder were filed against him and bond was set at $5,000, returnable at the next session of the grand jury ,which will probably not be until sometime in September, according to Sheriff Smith. Bond was perfected in a short time and Marshall returned to his home at 1904 Kemp boulevard. Names appearing on the bonds were George Dobson, city street superintendent; I. H. Steed, butcher; and J. O. Bradshaw.

Inquest Held.

Justice of the peace O. L. Gibbs went to the scene a short time after the alarm was turned in and held an inquest over the body. His verdict was death from gunshot wounds.

Swayze has operated the Swayze dairy for several years and is well known in Wichita Falls. He is survived b ya widow and three children, all of them under 10 years of age. The body is being held at the Merkle undertaking parlors until this afternoon when funeral serivces will be held at 3 o'clock fro mthe Lake Creek church located 12 miles east o fthe city. Interment will be made in the Lake Creek cemetery.

Marshall has been in charge of the city burning plant for the past three years. He is well known. He has a wife and four children, two of whom are married and two of whom live at the family residence

THE WEATHER

"I wish mama had been a boy instead of a girl so she'd understand how nice mud is to wade in."

By Douglas Malloch.

System.

I drove down to the steamer dock to ship away a little freight.
I am a rather peaceful man, perhaps I really ought to state,
I met about a dozen trucks, their drivers
large and hairy men,
And some of them were going in and some coming out again.
And all the drivers spoke to me, and this is partly what they said:
"Move on!" "Stay there!" "Git out of this!" "Back up a little!" "Go ahead!"

An officer in uniform, a sailor in a suit of blue,
Came out and joined our little throng and also told me what to do.
The man ahead began to back, the man behind began to toot;
We all were on a single road and all were bound a different route.
"Who told you to come over here?" "Who said that you could drive a car?"
"Now back 'er up!" "No go ahead!"
"Step on the gas!" "Stay where you are!"

And then a stranger came along, and saw the mess, and took a hand.
He beckoned one to come ahead, and told another where to stand:
And pretty soon the traffic moved, one lane to left and one to right;
The shouting and the tumult ceased, and all the talk about a fight.
Though that was many years ago, it all comes back to me, because I asked the crowd the fellow's name.
They said his name was Charlie Dawes

WICHITANS SEE GREAT LOSS IN BRYAN'S DEATH

Demise of Commoner Is Blow to City Late Yesterday.

A CHRISTIAN, ALL SAY

Judge Kay Thinks He Is Far Above His Fellowmen.

The passing of William Jennings Bryan was mourned without exception by those Wichita Falls ministers reached late last night by the Record News, when word of the Commoner's death had come over the wires.

The news of his passing came as a shock and the universal sentiments regarding the statesman expressed by the eluogies paid.

A christian they all called him, Rev. Miller thought he was a potent leader in the religious field. Rev. Walter Johnson thought he lived ahead of his time, but deserving none the less of praise. Judge Kay likened him to the mythical Ulysses whose bow none but he could bend. Rev. S. A. Barnes expressed the belief that none could ever take his place.

Here is what four of the leading pastors in Wichita Falls said in full:

The passing of William Jennings Bryan removes from the national political life one of its most unique and powerful leaders. Although never achieving the greatest gifts, politically, from his party, yet he it was whose influence brought to other great democrats political positions which he, himself, never occupied. He will be remembered not only by his high place in the realm of politics, but also as a potent leader in spiritual and religious matters. He was a statesman, a churchman, and a great christian gentleman.

Rev. Leslie Miller, pastor Grace Methodist Episcopal church.

Our regard of William Jennings Bryan as one of the greatest men this nation has produced. He lived in advance of his time and some of his political friends. Many of his political doctrines have been adopted, while others have been admitted visionary and impractical from the viewpoint of statesmanship. The greatest thing that can be said of this man is that he was a christian of the highest type. His christian belief was paramont and no public statement of his ever contradicted his christian character.

Rev. Walter J. Johnson, First M. E. Church South.

Cannonaded by the brahmans in the universities, hounded by the large section of the press, mutilated by the cartoonists, denounced by selfish politicians, his great heart failed at last. His voice was a crusade for law, righteousness, and religion. Our "Great Ulysses" has gone on his long wandering and there is none left who can bend his mighty bow.

Judge John C. Kay.

In the passing of William Jennings Bryan America [illegible] has lost her greatest christian statesman. For more than 25 years he has been constantly before the American people as no other man. He has been the champion of richteousness and fought in the open. Often defeated but never conquered. He was an outstanding orator of his generation, the embodyment of sincerity; the friend of the common people. During all of his public life, amidst the stress and storm, no man or men have been able to bring a single charge of dishonesty or insincerity against him. His passing was a fitting climax to his wonderful life, peaceful and serene. No man can take his place.

Rev. S. A. Barnes, Floral Heights M. E. Church.

South Vernon Pool May Have Extension

W. A Smith and Mark Kleeden, well known oil operators of this city, have what, from all appearances, is a three-fourth mile extension to the South Vernon field. This able tool test located in the southwest of the southeast of section 67, block 14, H& TCRRCO surrey, R. L. Castleberry land, topped the gas sand around the 1200 foot level, and water and slush shot 15 or 20 feet over the crown bluff.

The boiler fire was quickly put out and a pressure pump installed to subdue the gas pressure in order to underream and lower the casing to the sand, after which the well will be drilled in

The presence of gas at this depth is identical wit hthe other producing area, and much attention is centered around this test, and when completed as a producer will mean much development in this new area.

RIFF SITUATION BETTER.

ELARIASH, Spanish Morocco, July 26.—(AP)—Advices reaching here report improvement in the situation along the French front. French forces at Ain Matuf, where the Riffians recently suffered a severe defeat, report no new developments.

A French mobile group in the Ain Aicha sector has intensely bombarded the towns formerly used as a refuge by the rebels.

Darrow Regrets Passing of Man Whom Twice He Supported for U. S. President

ELKMONT, Tenn., July 26.—(AP)—"I am pained to hear of the death of Honarable William Jennings Bryan," Clarence Darrow, Chicago attorney and cross-examiner of the commoner in the recent trial of John T. Scopes at Dayton, Tenn., last Monady, declared this evening when informed of the demise of the notable American by the Knoxville Journal.

"I have known Mr. Bryan since 1896 and supported him twice for the presidency. He was a man of strong convictions and always espoused his cause with ability and courage," Mr. Darrow continued "I differed with him on many questions but always respected his sincerity and devotion. I am very sorry for his family and his friends who loved him."

Dr. J. R. Neal the senior counsel in the defense of Scopes, also expressed sorrow at the death of Mr. Bryan.

"As a citizen of Rhea county, I heartily welcomed Mr. Bryan to Dayton," he said. "I am grieved and shocked that his unexpected death had to come at the end of his stay in my county. My sympathies are extended Mrs. Bryan and members of hi sfamily."

DAWES TELLS OF SINCERITY OF W. J. BRYAN

Vice-President Had Been His Personal Friend for 38 Years.

DENVER, Colo., July 26.—(AP)—Vice President Dawes, on being informed of the death of William Jennings Bryan ,issued the following statement to The Associated Press:

"I have been a friend of Mr. Bryan for 38 years since we started as young lawyers in Lincoln, Neb. Throughout all these years of work and strenuous public service there shows resplendent, a high personal character.

"In all he did, Mr. Bryan was in earnest and in all he tried to do good.

"Those who knew him best respected most his motives and his sincerity. He never did unworthy or mean things. He may have been mistaken at times as we all are but he was trying always to do the right as he saw it.

"Of his great influence on the public thought of his day, his public services and his trancendent ability as an orator, I will leave to others to speak but I want simply as an old friend and neighbor for many years to pay my tribute of respect to a good and a great man, whose life has been one of high purpose and helpfulness and whose death brings a sense of personal ss."

Coal Problem to Be Threshed Out Today

LONDON, July 26.—(AP).—The interval pending the conference of miners and mine owners called for Wednesday is being utilized by both sides in marshaling moral support from the outside of their respective contentions. The termination of the present working agreement between miners and owners expires on July 31, and a strike has been called for that day unless a settlement can be reached on the question of a new settlement.

The whole trade union sympathizes with the miners' cause so far as concerns resistance to a further reduction of wages or as relates to wage conditions but differing views prevail as to how far that sympathy can be translated into active support.

Planes to Be Well Guarded on Flight

HONOLULU, July 26.—(AP).—The vast extent of the preparations for guarding the safety of the three great seaplanes to participate in the navy's proposed non-stop hop from the Pacific coast to Hawaii late in August or early in September was revealed further today with the issuance of instructions regarding material. The orders came from Captain Stanford E. Moses, commander of the flight project.

The eleven surface ships assigned to guard duty will be strung out at 200-mile intervals. The path will be 2,100 miles if the start is made from San Francisco and 2,275 miles if the planes take off from San Diego. It will be the longest over-water flight ever attempted.

AUTO-BRIDGE CRASH FATAL.

One Man Killed Near Crockett and Four Others Injured.

CROCKETT, July 26.—One person was killed and two seriously injured early today when a automobile struck a railway bridge on the highway in West Crockett. Neal Petty, 19, died soon after the accident. Ted Oliver, 16, was so badly injured that amputation of his leg was necessary. Jim Porter, 15, was also seriously injured. John Hollinsworth and Louis Hollinsworth escaped with minor injuries.

TO ATTEND A. & M. COURSES.

Galveston Clubs Paying Dickenson Students Way.

GALVESTON, July 26—Twenty-five boys and girls of Galveston county leave Dickenson at 6:20 o'clock tomorrow morning for College Station where they will attend the farmers' short course July 27 to August 1, and take part in the various state contests that will be held there. Galveston clubs are paying the expenses of 17 of the contestants

W. J. Bryan

AN EDITORIAL.

IN many respects the passing of William Jennings Bryan takes from the stage of life the most remarkable man of the age. Into the life everlasting he carries a soul which pon earth was hand in hand with conscience, guided to the goal eternal by honest conviction.

WITH the passing of Bryan there passes the character of a fighter, one who knew no quarter in the conflict of principle once conscience commanded. His enemies feared him for his unflinching assault in the political arena. History will record the fierceness, the unrelentlessness of his crusades even though it cannot record his victories. Indeed, each political defeat appeared to bring the great Commoner forth an even greater menace to the foes who knew he would face them in coming battles.

TO say he was eccentric to the mode of average thought in a measure describes the statesman. From the time his "Cross of Gold and Crown of Thorns" at the democratic national convention in 1896, it was ordained politically that in all democratic counseling W. J. B. must be a factor for major considertion. Some there are who will say that even as early as this year he had found an issue for he national campaign of 1928 —fundamentalism.

Be he modernist or fundamentalist, one who pauses in this hour of death to ponder the leader who has gone, cannot but feel something of the faith eternal which was Bryan's.

IRRESPECTIVE of admission to the contrary, even agnosticism must yearn for the peace with which he departed—a peace made by faith.

Will on Petticoat To Go into Court; Fortune at Stake

LOS ANGELES, July 26.—(AP)—The Los Angeles Y. W. C. A. entered into a fight today to break a will written on a petticoat.

The petticoat will was signed by George W. Hazeltine, wealthy eccentric, the day before he died in a hospital here last March. It bequeathed $10,000 each to the proprietor of the hospital and the nurse who attended him and left the remainder of his $500,000 estate to his grandniece, Loraine Moody Richardson.

In their suit filed in superior court today, the Y. W. C. A. and the Congregational Church Extension society, allege Hazeltine was unduly influenced when he made the petticoat will. They ask the court to set it aside and recognize a previous will in which Hazeltine bequeathed the bulk of the estate to his attorneys and $11,000 to the plaintiff organization.

SHRIMP MEN IN PETITION

Galveston Bay Should Be Closed to Let Them Grow, Claim.

GALVESTON, July 26.—Galveston shrimp fishermen have petitioned T. E. Hubby, game, fish and oyster commissioner, to close Galveston bay, both east and west, for 15 days or longer if conditions warrant, in order that shrimp in the bay may have a chance to attain marketable size.

A telegram, signed by local fishermen, was dispatched to Mr. Hubby and a petition, with 70 signatures, was turned over to the local office of the game, fish and oyster commission.

TO DEPORT VIA GALVESTON.

One Hundred Aliens to Come From West to Go Out.

GALVESTON, July 26.—Between 50 and 100 aliens will be brought into Galveston Tuesday by the Kline party from the west coast for deportation to foreign countries through this port. The majority will be deported on the French line steamer De LaSalle, departing fr o Galveston about August 9 for Havre and other French ports.

COMMONER IN PLAN TO TAKE PLEA TO NATION

Bryan Was at Home in Dayton as Leader of Fundamentalists.

DAYTON, Tenn., July 26.—In conversatin with the Associated Press, representatives here last Friday night, William Jennings Bryan expressed surprise that the southern press had not taken cognizance of the criticisms by representatives of the eastern press at the Scopes trial at Dayton, of the people of Tennessee, because of passage of the anti-evolution act. Mr. Bryan said that while much ado was being made about the Tennessee law, nothing had been said concerning the act provided by congress, the teaching of evolution theories in the District of Columbia. He declared that while the Tennessee law was specific in that it prohibited teaching that mankind originated from lower animals, the District of Columbia law prohibited the teaching of anything that would reflect on the Bible.

Going to the People.

Mr. Bryan expressed pleasure that the Scopes trial had suddenly collapsed before he was permitted to make his prepared speech, declaring that now he could present it to the people of the country just as he wanted it without interruptions from opposing counsel and without having to make extemporaneous replies to preceding speeches. He appeared concerned over the coming battle between fundamentalism and modernism, and seemed eager for the fray.

Mr. Bryan came here and made arrangements to publish his speech and had expected to deliver it at Chattanooga, Knoxville, Nashville and Hartsville, the latter place being the home of Senator Butler, author of the state anti-evolution law.

aturday he spoke at Winchester, carrying out a promise made to Attorney General A. T. Stewart during the trial that at its close he would deliver an address to the attorney general's fellow townsmen.

At Home in Dayton.

"As the leader of the fundamentalists," Mr. Bryan was made to feel very much at home in Dayton and Rhea county. His entrance and departure from the court room was marked by a succession of handshakes. Rhea county politically has been found frequently in the republican column and many of opposite political faith were among the most ardent admirers of the former democratic candidate for president and cabinet officer.

"Will you let a lifelong republican shake your hand, Mr. Bryan?" was a question heard more than once in the court room.

Among his last discussions with Dayton folk concerned the suggestion that a college devoted to fundamentalist doctrine be established there.

During the Scopes trial in Dayton, the heat was most oppressive, and the court room crowded to the doors. Mr. Bryan was of necessity seated inside the rail at the counsel table where there was very little air.

Heart Attack a Surprise.

While he carried a palm leaf fan there was little air circulation of breeze through the room and he seemed to feel the heat exceedingly.

However, as far as known, he made no complaints and there was nothing to indicate that the torridity was in any way undermining his health.

It is not known here if Mr. Bryan had previously suffered any heart affections.

Shortly before he died today, he remarked that he had never felt better in his life and was ready to go before the country to wage his battle against modernism.

ANDREWS STARTS OVER.

Plans for New Machine to Fight Booze Are Balked.

WASHINGTON, July 26.—(AP)—Defeated in his plan to set a reorganized machine at work August first to enforce prohibition Assistant Secretary Andrews the treasury's prohibition field marshal, took a fresh start today in developing a program with which he hopes he can dry up the country's wet spots.

September first has now been fixed tentatively as the date on which the revamped enforcement campaign can be set in motion, and it will start with a division of the country into districts along different lines than were at first contemplated

End Comes as He is Asleep at Room in Dayton

Commoner Had Expressed Himself as "Feeling Fine" When He Retired for a Rest About 1:30 o'Clock.

DAYTON, Tenn., July 26.—(AP)—William Jennings Bryan was discovered dead in bed here this afternoon by a servant. He had retired to his room in the early afternoon for a nap and was found dead at 4:30 o'clock. Heart disease was given as the cause of his death.

Drs. W. F. Thomason and A. G. Broyles, on examination, said Mr. Bryan had been dead probably 15 minutes. Mrs. Bryan, the chauffeur and her companion were in the house when he died.

Mrs. Bryan on Porch

Mrs. Bryan was sitting on the porch when her husband passed away. Efforts are being made to locate his son, W. J. Bryan, Jr., who is in California, and also a daughter who resides in California.

Mrs. Bryan was preparing to leave Dayton the next day or so for Idaho where she expected to spend the summer with her son.

She expressed the desire that her husband be buried in Arlington cmetery and feels it may be arranged in that he held the title of colonel. She also said she had heard her husband express a desire to be buried there. No arrangements will be made, however, until W. J. Bryan, Jr., is located and communicated with.

The town was shocked by the tragedy and five minutes after the doctors' examinations revealed that Mr. Bryan was dead, the streets near the home were thronged with people. Mrs. Bryan is said to be entirely composed and is bearing up wonderfully well under the terrible blow.

In Best of Spirits

He was in the best of spirits and expressed himself as "feeling fine" when he retired shortly after 1:30 o'clock. He had attended services at the Southern Methodist Episcopal church before lunch and had partaken of a hearty meal before retiring to his room.

He was taken to Dayton Sunday morning by A. W. Lessley, owner of the Ross hotel, and they reached there about 9:30 o'clock. Mr. Bryan stayed at home during the morning and made arrangements for th speech he was to have delivered at the court house in Dayton tomorrow night. Another engagement of importance was on at the Hotel Aqua tomorrow evening at 6:30 when he would meet with the progressive Dayton club and lay plans for the Bryan college movement for which plans were to be definitely launched at the dinner tomorrow night.

Following the sudden collapse of the Scopes' evolution trial at Dayton, in which he was the leading counsel for the prosecution, Mr. Bryan turned his attention to preparing for the printing of his speech which he was not allowed to make at the trial.

Had Prepared Speech

He came to Chattanooga Friday and spent the entire day going over the speech with a printing firm and left there Saturday morning for Jaspee and Winchester, where he made his address. While there Mr. Bryan stated to the Associated Press representative that the speech would be ready for distribution to the press by tomorrow and would be released by next Sunday. He appeared to be in the best of health and stated that he was ready to carry on his campaign in behalf of fundamentalism to the people of the country.

He had made engagements to speak in Chattanooga, Knoxville, Nashville and Hartsville, Tenn., on evolution.

Mr. Bryan was to leave Dayton Tuesday for Knoxville, where he would deliver two speeches, then go to Nashville for a similar engagement before going to Florida. He expected to join Mrs. Bryan again in the fall.

William Jennings Bryan regarded the contest of issues growing from the Scopes trial as the greatest fight of a career. He told an Associated Press representative at Dayton last week that he expected to make many addresses, for which he would not permit admission to be charged, stressing the issues as he construed them after the first court test of the Tennessee statute prohibiting the teaching of evolution theories.

Prepared to Fight

From the opening of the trial he was especially in earnest, insisting throughout that a battle was being waged against revealed religion and Christianity. Last Wednesday he showed the Associated Press a sheaf of telegrams from individuals in many sections of the United States applauding his position in the Scopes case. Then it was that he declared he expected to speak "soon and often" for Christianity.

Mr. Bryan had prepared what was to have been the closing argument before the jury at Dayton. It was no secret that he preparation of this address had been a matter of weeks. Some of his friends thought that he expected to make it one of the greatest efforts of his career, suggesting that it would perhaps be his last extended oratorical effort. When arguments were waived and the case sent to the jury without final speech-making, Mr. Bryan said that he would nevertheless deliver his prepared address later and the first succeeding days in Dayton after the trial were spent in revising his many script.

There were no indications of illness in the great commoner's condition during the trial. On his arrival at Dayton a few days in advance of the opening of the opening of the case his apparent physical fitness was generally remarked. He spoke only once in court, but delivered several addresses in Rhea county. His public appearance included a speech at a banquet in his honor by the Dayton Progressive club, an informal address to his fellow prosection lawyers and their guests at Morgan Springs, two religious addresses in Dayton and one at Pikeville.

To Open Crusade

The commoner had returned to Dayton this afternoon after completing arrangements for the publication of the address he had prepared to deliver in closing the trial of John T. Scopes, who recently was convicted of violating Tennessee's anti-evolution law.

Publication of this speech at an early date was to mark the opening of the crusade in behalf of fundamentalism, Mr. Bryan planned to carry before the entire country.

Despite the fact that Mr. Bryan had spoken yesterday at Jasper and Winchester, Tenn., and had traveled over 200 miles, he appeared in the best of health and unfatigued. He attended services at the Southern Methodist Episcopal church and led the congregation in a prayer which

The Life of W. J. Bryan a Panorama of National Sensations

IN all the history of American politics there are few names which carry that brilliant lustre of spectacular effort which has become a part of the memory of William Jennings Bryan. His life for almost thirty years was a panorama of national sensations, piled one upon the other. At thirty-six he became almost overnight not only the leader of his party but the idol of millions. Three times he carried the party standard as its choice for the highest office of the land; in another presidential year—1912—he reaped much of the credit for placing Woodrow Wilson in the White House; and in almost every other national democratic convention in a generation he was in the very center of every storm that came.

Becomes Secretary of State.

As a recognition, many said, of his long leadership, President Wilson made him secretary of state—a post from which he resigned two years later under the most sensational of circumstances because he felt the nation was verging toward participation in the European war. World peace always had been his passion in earlier years, just as in his later days he made the espousal of religion his all-absorbing concern, and turned his talents to an attack on evolution.

Throughout all his active years, his followers clung to his standard in blind devotion for the man and his ideals, while his enemies reviled and hated him, calling him ignorant and misguided in both his economics and his religion. His great power of eloquence, which first brought him to a place of national prominence, remained unimpaired for many years; but toward the last his old-time brilliance on the platform and the stump began to dim perceptibly.

Although he found time for many venturesome excursions into other fields, politics was his forte, and the story of his life is almost a histry f the natjnal political campaign that began when the democratic campaign of "96" stampeded out of a deadlock by his "cross of gold" speech, made him its candidate for president.

Bryan went to that convention as editor of the Omaha World-Herald and former member of the house, but entirely unknown to any considerable portion of the rank and file of his party. It was a few hours later that he set the convention wild with his speech for free silver and that night a group of delegates hired a band and went to serenade at the old South Street hotel where he was staying. He rose from his bed, slipped on a pair of trousers over his nightshirt and in bare feet received his visitors with a warm handclasp and a smile that soon enough was to become famous the world over.

Campaign Against McKinley

His first campaign against McKinley was epochal for its fiery earnestness and not until the votes had been counted did he believe it was possible that he could be beaten. In 1900, with McKinley again his opponent, he adopted "imperialism" for his paramount issue and for a second time stumped the country in a vain effort to reach the goal of his ambition.

After this second failure, many of the leaders within his party turned away and the nomination four years later of Alton B. Parker was a bitter disappointment to him. In that convention he made a spectacular fight against the forces that he declared were handing over the party to Wall street, delivering a speech which was regarded almost universally as the swan song of his career. Yet in another four years the pendulum had swung back again and he was nominated as the opponent of William Howard Taft.

The part he took in the Baltimore convention of 1912 was part of the spectacular strain that ran through his whole career. Rising on the convention floor at a time when his long-time friend, Champ Clark, was within reach of the nomination, he denounced the Clark forces for accepting the support of Tammany, and declared Wall street was trying once again to fasten its talons on the democratic party. The reaction to Wilson, who had been running well behind, was instantaneous and Bryan was one of the first to be named to the Wilson cabinet. The breach between Bryan and Clark was never bridged.

Ridiculed for His Policies.

As secretary of state, he came under attack many times; was ridiculed by many both at home and abroad for his policies, but always loyally supported by his many friends; and finally made his exit from the cabinet rather than sign a note to Germany, prepared by Mr. Wilson himself on the submarine outrages.

It was after a long talk between the president and the secretary that the resignation was announced. Summoned to the White House on a bright June morning, Mr. Bryan entered the president's private office unruffled, apparently believing that by throwing his powers of persuasion onto the scale he could convince his chief that the note should not be sent. After they had talked alone for an hour, Mr. Wilson pressed a button on his desk and a negro usher enterd to find the president calm and silent and the secretary nervous and voluble.

"Mr. Bryan wants a drink of water," said Mr. Wilson.

When it was brought, Mr. Bryan's hand was so unsteady that he upset a part of it as he raised it to his lips. He demonstrated later in many ways that he had been cut to the quick by his failure to avert what he believed was a warlike gesture by his country, and his parting from the man he had helped to lift up into a greater leadership than he himself had been able to attain.

On Stump for Davis in 1924

He did not oppose Mr. Wilson's renomination in 1916, but the party candidates of 1920 and 1924 were chosen over his opposition. He went on a vacation trip during most of the campaign of James Cox, but he took the stump for John W. Davis in 1924.

Virtually dominant in the democratic party for nearly 16 years, William J. Bryan was three times nominated and defeated for the presidency. Then, like Elijah of Old, he cast his mantel upon the Elisha of Princeton and exerted a potent influence in bringing about Woodrow Wilson's first nomination for the office to which he himself had vainly aspired.

Known in his youth as "The Silver Tongued Boy Orator of the Platte," it was Mr. Bryan's eloquence in his famous "Cross of Gold" speech at the democratic national convention in Chicago in 1896 that made him the choice of his party. He polled more than 6,500,000 votes in his first campaign.

His career has been likened to that of Henry Clay, who also was three times nominated for the presidency and as many times defeated. Clay, too, became secretary of state. Friends of Bryan insisted that, like Clay, he was too conscientious, consistent and scrupulous for a politician and that the famous whig's declaration, "I would rather be right than be president" well described the man from Nebraska.

Born Salem, Ill., March 19, 1860.

The former secretary of state was born in Salem, Ill., March 19, 1860. His father was Silas Lillard Bryan, a native of Culpepper county, Virginia, a lawyer and judge. The son, after graduating from Illinois college in 1881 and Union College of Law, Chicago, in 1883, entered the law office of Lyman Trumbull, former U. S. senator. Subsequently he removed to Jacksonville, Ill., where he practiced law until 1887, when he settled in Lincoln, Nebr.

During the presidential campaign of 1888 young Bryan's speeches in behalf of the democratic ticket attracted attention and in 1890 he accepted a nomination for congress in the first Nebraska district, a republican stronghold, because "no one else would have it," he said, since it was believed no democrat could win. He was elected and served from 1891 until 1895. He was made a member of the important ways and means committee in his first term.

Two speeches in this period gave Mr. Bryan nationwide prominence, one against the policy of protection, deliverd on March 16, 1892, and the other against the repeal f the silver purchase clause of the Sherman act, on August 16, 1893. In the latter he advocated "the free and unlimited coinage of silver irrespective of international agreement at a ratio of 16 to 1," a policy with which his name was afterward most prominently associated until he entered the cabinet of President Wilson.

First Nominated, July 10, 1896.

The first nomination of Mr. Bryan for the presidency at the democratic national convention in Chicago on July 10, 1896, has since been characterized as one of the "miracles" of American politics. The nominee, after serving in congress, had run for the United States senate and been defeated by Senator John Thurston of Nebraska. Abandoning the law, Mr. Bryan became editor of the Omaha World-Herald and championed the cause of bimetallism as vigorously with the pen as he had upon the forum. He had been beaten for a third term in congress on the issue of "sound money" and when the time came for the national convention this question was rending both big political parties. There were free silver republicans as well as democrats, but the nominee of the former, Henry M. Teller of Colorado, threw his support to Bran when the Nebraskan won the nomination at Chicago.

The "Cross of Gold" speech by Bryan, which has been quoted oftener perhaps than any other of his words, and which made him a rival of William McKinley for the presidency, came at the close of a debate on the floor of the convention in advocacy of a free silver plank. Men nationally prominent in the party had preceded him and opposed the plank unless it should provide for bimetallism by international agreement. The situation was tense when the Nebraskan, then only 36 years old, one year more than the constitutional requirement for a president, arose to speak. Everybdy was tired, everybody seemed ready to compromise. Not so the delegate from Nebraska. There was fire in his eye when he began to speak.

The Stampeded Convention.

"I would presumptuous indeed, to present myself against the distinguished gentlemen to whom you have listened," he said, "if this were a mere measuring of ability, but this is not a contest between persons. The humblest citizen in all the land, when clad in the armor of a righteous cause, is stronger than all the hosts of error. I come to speak to you in defense of a cause as holy as the cause of liberty—the cause of humanity."

Then, charging the evils of the day—the idle mills, the social unrest and low wages—to the scarcity of money and the "idle holders of idle capital in Wall Street," he continued:

"The individual is but an atom—he is born, he gets, he does; but principles are eternal; and this has been a contest over a principle. Having behind us the producing masses of this nation and the world, supported by the commercial interests, the laboring interests and the toilers everywhere, we will answer those who demand a single gold standard by saying: 'You shall not press down upon the brow of labor this crown of thorns. You shall not crucify mankind upon this cross of gold.'"

The convention was stampeded for Bryan, who was nominated over eight other candidates on the fifth ballot, following a speech by a Georgia delegate in which the eloquent young orator was referred to as "a Soul come to lead the Israelites to battle." Subsequently Bryan received the nominations of the people's and the national silver parties.

Breaks All Speaking Records

The nominee broke all speaking records in his first campaign, traveling more than 18,000 miles and making about 600 speeches in 27 states. He polled 6,502,925 votes to McKinley's 7,104,779 and received in the electoral college 176 votes to his opponent's 271. Although defeated, Mr. Bryan remained the leader of his party and after the Spanish-American war in 1898, in which he commanded the Third Nebraska Infantry as its colonel, he opposed the permanent retention of the Philippine Islands by the U. S.

In 1900, when again nominated for the presidency, he made "anti-imperialism" the paramount issue, but refused to omit an explicit party declaration in favor of free coinage of silver in the party platform. This time he was defeated with a popular vote of 6,358,133, as against 7,207,023 for his opponent. He received 155 electoral votes to McKinley's 292.

Mr. Bryan returned to Lincoln and started the publication of a weekly political journal called the "Commoner." Four years later, 1904, although not actively a candidate for the nomination, which eventually went to Judge Alton B. Parker, he vigorously opposed democracy's "conservative" attitude.

The interim between this period and the next presidential election of 1908 was occupied by Mr. Bryan, now known by many of his followers as "The Peerless Leader" in several enterprizes that kept him in the public eye. Notable among these was his trip around the world on which he started September 21, 1905. Accompanied by his wife, son and a daughter, Mr. Bryan first went to Japan and China, where he was hospitably entertained and made numerous addresses, one of which entitled "The White Man's Burden," was commended by the Japanese-American society. The Bryans were presented to the emperor of Japan and were everywhere accorded the honor of foremost Americans. Later the party went to the Philippines, where Mr. Bryan's views on Filipino independence were welcomed. During this visit the savage Moros of Mindanao Island credited the Nebraskan a "datto" or chief of one of their tribes.

His Greatest Achievement.

Leaving the Philippines, the party went to India, the Holy Land, Turkey, Austria Hungary, Germany, Russia, Italy, Norway, Sweden and other European countries finally arriving in London on July 3, 1906. Meanwhile Mr. Bryan had "interviewed "King Edward VII, the emperor of Russia and other potentates and Count Leo Tolstoi and had made numerous speeches, all of which were reported in the American press and which inspired a desire on the part of the democrats athome to give him a great reception, which was done upon his return to America the following September.

About this time Mr. Bryan came out for world disarmament, an ideal which is said to have prompted his drafting in 1913, when he became secretary of state, of the particular form of peace treaty between the United States and foreign nations "by which all disputes were to be submitted to an impartial investigating commission for a year before hostilities could begin."

This has been regarded as Mr. Bryan's greatest achievement for 30 foreign nations, representing three-fourths of the population of the earth, became signatories to the document. Abaut a year later the world war broke out in all its fury.

In 1908 Mr. Bryan was again named as the democratic standard bearer. The campaign was waged on the principal issue of opposition to "trusts," and for a third time the democratic nominee sufefred defeat, polling 6,409,104 votes to Taft's 7,678,908 and receiving 162 electoral votes to his opponent's 321.

"A Good Looser" in Defeat

Notwithstanding Mr. Bryan's reverses, in poliitics, it is said, he was "a good looser." Of Presbyterian forbears, optimistic and of a religious nature, his setbacks failed to make him lose faith in his future. He refused to become discouraged. For the next four years, or until the campaign of 1912, which resulted in the election of President Wilson, Mr. Bryan continued to edit his newspaper and to attend the councils of his party.

In his first campaign his home in Lincoln, was a mecca for prominent democrats, where Mrs. Bryan, a scholarly woman, formerly Miss Mary E. Baird of Perry, Illinois, who had greatly aided her husband in his political career, was a charming hostess. The Bryans had three children, one son and two daughters.

Always in demand as a lecturer especially at chautauquas, Mr. Bryan's income was augmented by his writings for newspapers and magazines and his authorship of several books. The latter included "The First Battle" (1897), "Under Oother Flags," (1904), "The Old World and Its Ways," (1907), "Heart-toHeart Appeals," (1917). In addition to his Nebraska home, Mr. Bryan, after his final defeat for the presidency, established residences in Asherville, N. C. and Miami, Florida.

A few months before the time for the 1912 democratic national convention Mr. Bryan publicly announced he would not be a candidate, declaring he was "ready to enter upon a campaign in behalf of a true democracy with even more vigor than that with which I have fought at any time on my own behalf."

The Routing of Tammany

Woodrow Wilson at this time was governor of New Jersey, and had attracted the attention of the Nebraskan, it was said, by reason of his "progressive" legislation. The fight on the floor of the Baltimore convention, led by Bryan against the Tammany men in the New York delegation, is a matter of history. Despite the fact that Champ Clark, speaker for the house of representatives, led on 27 ballots for the nomination and had a clear majority of nine, which ordinarily would have made him the party's candidate, the Nebraskan's eloquence and persistence against "domination of the party by Wall street resulted in failure of the Missourian to get the necessary two-thirds of the convention and in the designation of Wilson.

Mr. Bryan and Mr. Wilson held many ideal in common. When Mr. Wilson was elected president, he appointed Mr. Bryan secretary of state.

The two years Mr. Bryan occupied a place at the head of Mr. Wilson's cabinet were "years of perplexity and stress." The Mexican imbroglio, the Japanese anti-alien land controversy in California, and the correspondence with Germany and Austria-Hungary antecedent to America's entrance into the world war, were problems that gave the Nebraska statesman many sleepless nights.

During his term of office, because of an insult to the United States flag and the refusal of "dictator" Huerta of Mexico to fire a salute as an apology American troops were dispatched to Vera Cruz, which was captured April 21, 1914. Subsequently the soldiers and warships were withdrawn, Huerta was deposed and a constitutionalist government under Venustiano Carranza, who was favored by the administration, was set up in its stead.

At the height of the anti-alien land controversy in California, Mr. Bryan journeyed to the Pacific coast, where he held several confrences with the governor and delivered speeches before the state legislature.

Relations with Japan during this period were reported as somewhat strained. The upshot of the matter was that a new measure, known as the Webb bill was drafted and passed. It modified the restrictions against the Japanese, but evoked a protest from Tokyo.

His Split With Press. Wilson

Mr. Bryan's resignation from the cabinet, which occurred on June 9, 1915, came as a thunderclap out of a clear sky. It was known there had been disagreements between the president and his chief cabinet officer, but that the breach had gone beyond healing was not realized by the public mind. Germany's aggressions and her ruthless U-boat policy were daily drawing the United States into the vertex of war. Mr. Bryan seemed pledged to peace. The time came when President Wilson's notes to Germany had to take a final tone and, with the sinking of another American ship and an ultimatum from the United States, Mr. Bryan, who had previously declared "there is nothing final between friendships," sent his letter of resignation to the president. Mr. Wilson, deploring his action as a "personal loss" in reply, accepted his secretary's withdrawal from the cabinet, stating that they both sought the same end, but by different methods.

The zeal of Mr. Bryan to bring about world peace led him in the excess of his enthusiasm, it was said, to public speech and acts that brought upon him a great deal of hostile criticism. Before the United States entered the war the Nebraskan had pledged himself to accompany an expedition financed by Henry Ford, the Michigan manufacturer, to Europe for the purpose "of getting the boys out of the trenches." Mr. Bryan later changed his plans and did not go. Subsequently he was accused of unintentionally aiding the propaganda of the central powers by his speeches and writings. Early in the war he declared it was "fomented" by profit-seekers. In an address in San Francisco he said that "for the United States to go to war with Germany would be like challenging a madhouse."

He Introduced Grape Juice.

Sometime before this he was represented as being opposed to permitting the United States to make any loans to the belligerents. When the United States picked up the gage of battle thrown down by Germany, however, Mr. Bryan promptly declared " she must be defeated at all costs" and offered his services to President Wilson as a private.

While secretary of state Mr. Bryan was often absent from Washington as a lecturer and this subjected him to no little amount of raillery in the press. In a public statement, he said the $12,000 salary he received as a cabinet officer was insufficient to meet the ordinary household demands upon his purse and he felt obligated to supplement his income in other ways. One of his most popular lectures was "The Prince of Peace."

When he entered the cabinet, Mr. Bryan astonished Washington by announcing that grape juice would be substituted for alcoholic beverages whenever the secretary of state and Mrs. Bryan entertained the members of the diplomatic corps. Indeed, Mr. Bryan in his long advocacy of teetotalism was credited by many with having done more than any other American outside of the prohibition party to force the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment to the constitution, making the United States a "dry" nation. From March, 1913, he was president of the National Dry Federation.

Mr. Bryan's leadership of the democratic party definitely was broken at the national convention at San Francisco in 1920, when he was defeated in his efforts to have a dry plank included in the platform. Throughout the campaign he remained silent and afterward said it was the first time in 40 years that he had made no speeches for a democratic presidential candidate. The reason for his action, he said, was that he did not agree with James M. Cox, the party's candidate, who was defeated by Warren G. Harding, and that he did not want to debate with the candidate for his own party.

After his defeat on the convention floor relative to the proposed dry plank, Mr. Bryan said: "My heart is in the grave with our cause. I must pause until it comes back to me."

The Demo Deadlock in New York, 1924

Soon after the election of President Harding, Mr. Bryan suggested that President Wilson resign because the people had voted against the League of Nations, one of the dominant issues of the campaign, and in favor of an association of nations as proposed by Mr. Harding. The former secretary of state proposed that President Wilson immediately turn over the office to Vice President Marshall with the understanding that the latter appoint Mr. Harding as secretary of state at the beginning of the new congress and then resign so that Mr. Harding immediately could become president and put into effect his association of nations.

Having become a permanent legal resident of Miami, Florida, Mr. Bryan was elected from that state as a delegates to the democratic national convention at New York in 1924. He took a prominent part in the proceedings, but his influence was greatly curtailed as compared with that which he exerted at previous national conventions of the party. His advocacy of the nomination of William G. McAdoo had no effect in breaking the deadlock which continued for nearly two weeks between Mr. McAdoo and Governor Alfred E. Smith of New York, the contest eventually being ended when the delegates switched to John W. Davis, who was nominated.

Mr. Bryan was a member of the resolutions committee and at one of the sessions when the ku klux klan issue was being discussed he dropped to his knees and urged the other members of the committee to join with him in prayer that they might be guided in the right light. The former secretary took part in the campaign, but was not as active as he had been in some previous ones. His brother, Charles W. Bryan, then governor of Nebraska, was the democratic nominee for vice president.

Easing up on his political activities with the 1920 national campaign, Mr. Bryan took a greater interest in the affairs of the Presbyterian church and devoted more of his time to lecturing. In 1923, he was defeated for moderator of the general assembly of the Presbyterian church after an exciting contest. He was elected vice-moderator at the general assembly of 1924.

An avowed opponent of the Darwin theory of evolution, Mr. Bryan made many addresses on the subject and his participation in the Scopes trial climaxed his attack thereon.

citizens of Dayton tonight described as one of the most beautiful ever delivered in the church.

Among his last discussions with Dayton folks was one which concerned the suggestion that a college devoted to fundamentalist doctrine be established there. Approached with the information that sentiment in Dayton favors "Bryan fir its name, should the college be established," his comment was, "We'll see; there's time enough to discuss the name later."

Many Greeted Him

Following the church services today the commoner was greeted by many members of the congregation. He then returned to his temporary home here, where he ate a large dinner, remarking that his travels of yesterday and the early morning had given him a hearty appetite.

Shortly after 3 o'clock Mr. Bryan retired to his room to rest and Mrs. Bryan went to the back porch to attend to some correspondence. She was only 15 feet away from his bed.

"About 4:30 o'clock I felt that Mr. Bryan had been asleep long enough, so I sent Mr. McCartney (the chauffeur) to wake him," Mrs. Bryan told friends.

McCartney entered the room and shook Mr. Bryan.

"He was always a heavy sleeper and was hard to wake," he said, adding that when he shook the body a second time he noticed Mr. Bryan was not breathing.

Drs. Thomason and Broyles were summoned immediately and A. B. Andrews was also called by Mr. McCartney. After an examination, the physicians stated Mr. Bryan evidently had been dead between 30 and 40 minutes and that death had been caused by apoplexy.

"During all the excitment, Mrs. Bryan was the calmest person in the house," Mr. Andrews said. "She took complete charge of affairs and showed more nerve than I have ever seen in a woman and she is an invalid, too."

Seeveral times Mrs. Bryan said the commoner expressed a desire to be buried in Arlington cemetery.

Prefers Arlington

"You know he was a colonel in the Spanish-American war and since it was his wish to rest in Arlington, we probably will place him there," she continued.

"But no definite decision will be reached until we hear from William Jennings Bryan, Jr."

"I am glad my husband died without suffering, and in peace," she said.

The report of Mr. Bryan's death spread rapidly throughout this little town, but people refused to believe at first. Many rushed to the Bryan home. Among these was George W. Rappleyea, who first brought charges against Scopes in order that the Tennessee anti-evolution law might be tested. Mr. Rappleyea expressed sympathy and offered his services in any way.

Mrs. Bryan remained in her roller chair, receiving only a few of the callers. Sue K. Hicks, one of the attorneys associated with Mr. Bryan in the prosecution of Scopes was one of these. He remained with her a short while and on leaving the house remarked on the courage that Mrs. Bryan exhibited.

"Nothing definite has been decided yet," he said, "but I expect the body will leave here Tuesday for Arlington."

A. W. Lessley, who accompanied Mr. Bryan to Dayton today, said that the commoner was feeling exceedingly fine Sunday morning and when he was offered a car ride from the hotel to a restaurant for breakfast he expressed a preference to walk. He had arisen early and was in the lobby at 6:30. Here he was joined by Mr. Lessley, Vernon Keith and Miss Bettie Harms. The party before starting for Dayton went and had breakfast, where Mr. Bryan ate heartily.

"See It Through"

On the trip to Dayton Mr. Bryan talked on various topics of the day and spoke of the appeal to be made to the supreme court by the Scopes defense lawyers. At this time he expressed his intention of staying in the case and said he expected to "see it through."

According to Mr. Lessley, Mr. Bryan showed no signs of illness nor did he seem to feel ill in any way. He told Mr. Lessley, however, that he had diabetes. En route to Dayton several pictures of him were taken, for which he posed in a wide corn field. He said he expected to go to Knoxville and Nashville after which he would come to Chattanooga for a visit to Hon. J. B. Frazier at his home in Glenwood.

Mrs. Bryan accompanied her husband to Winchester Saturday, but returned to Dayton by automobile, while Mr. Bryan followed on the train. Mrs. Bryan did not stop in Chattanooga, but proceeded on to Dayton.

Battling Siki Found Stabbed in "Hell's Kitchen" Section

NEW YORK, July 26.—(AP)—Battling Siki, the Sengelese pugilist who came into prominence three years ago by knocking out Georges Carpentier was taken to a hospital today in a serious condition from a stab wound in his neck.

Siki was found by a detective early this morning lying on the side walk at Ninth Avenue and 41st street, a section known locally as "hell's kitchen." He was unconscious from loss of blood and up to a late hour the police had been unable to obtain his story.

Joseph Hanahan, 25, arrested nearby, was held in $10,000 bail on a charge of felonious assault. He denied knowledge of the stabbing, explaining he had come to thte place to investigate a report that a man had been wounded.

C. C. Graves Dies At Petrolia Sunday

PETROLIA, July 26.—C. C. Graves, prominent citizen of this city, died at his farm three miles north west of town today. Mr. Groves had lived in Petrolia for the past 20 years, and was 68 when he died. He is survived by five sons and two daughters. Funeral services were held at the Methodist church.

WACO PASTOR RESIGNS.

WACO, July 26.—In order to respond to a call to Williamsburk, Ky., Rev. R. G. Bowers, pastor of the Columbus Avenue Baptist church here, submitted his resignation this morning to a meeting of his congregation, asking that they give it immediate consideration.

PROFESSIONAL ETHICS

Bill Jones is an attorney, so he dassant advertise.
To say that he is winnin' all the cases that he tries.
If he put in the paper any reg'lar kind of ad
That gives the names and pictures of the clients he has had
His brothers in the business wiuld daclare he'd got too raw—
An' do their best to bar him from the practice of the law.

So Bill packed up his Blackstone and his federal reports
And left his little business in the village justice courts,
And traveled down to Dayton, where he helped out for a while
As a fifth assistant counsel in the evolution trial.
It was mentioned in the papers that he wouldn't take a fee
But a lawyer doesn't need to when the advertisin's free.

Bill Jones is all for ethics, he would never make a move
That the lights of his profession wouldn't heartily approve.
But tem Dayton correspondents seen him settin' round the place
And sent out that he was actin' as a lawyer in the case,
An 'though rates for board and lodgin' at the trial was pretty steep
Still, he got a reputation, and he got it pretty cheap!

COUNTING WITHOUT TEXAS.

We have become so accustomed to hearing of an impending exhaustion of our oil resources that one more gloomy prophecy does not matter. The information that our oil production reached its peak in 1923 and that we are now entering upon a period of gradual decline, will have very little effect even when it is given out in a special survey by the Metallurgical society of America. This latest product of investigation, however, deserves some attention because of the way in which its conclusions are reached. It is assumed that in order to maintain a peak production it is necessary to have extensive and very rich pools of oil. It is then noticed that we have only two such pools at present, the Long Beach in California and the Smackover in Arkansas. From which it is too hastily concluded that unless we can discover others of their kind we must reconcile ourselves to a constantly lessening production of oil.

In this faulty summing up, Texas is not even taken into account. The reason is plain; Texas has no such pools as the Smackover or the Long Beach But there is no other state in the union so rich in oil deposits, nor so fortunate in maintaining a high rate of production. Texas certainly deserves consideration, even if it has not the requirements arbitrarily laid down by the survey committee of the Metallurgical society. While Canifornia and Arkansas have held the lead of late in oil production, Texas has come very close behind them. They are bound in time to exhaust their special resources while the widely scattered deposits of Texas will continue to be productive.

New fields are continually being "proved" in this state and new regions being brought to a high degree of production The oil stone stretches across the state from northeast to southwest, with many widening and narrowing belts and with many disconnected and far flung fields to the southwest. In the veritable network of hidden treasure, additional rich stores are constantly being brought to light. "Finds" are reported almost every day. But the bringing in of new wells and the proving of new fields are not so significant, for these are ordinary occurrences. Rather the important developments are the expansion of the entire state's production and the position acquired by counties which formerly were practically barren and unnoticed.

In the three months of March, April and May Texas increased its production by nearly two million barrels. March was a banner month, establishing the record of 12,000,000 barrels. April was considerably better, with an output of amost a half a million barrels more, or 12,416,272. May reached the peak with 13,797,280. The leading production counties of Texas all seem to share in the general increase. But Reagan county's abundant output is the most striking in view of the fact that only recently has production there attained any volume. Now Reagan county stands third among the producing counties of the state, with 1,397,404 barrels. Perhaps this county is the most promising of all. Its brief history of unexpected discovery and rapid develpoment serves to indicate what Texas can do for oil production when its extensive deposits have been uncovered and its unguessed stores of oil brought to the surface.

A BREATHING SPELL

The Painleve ministry in France has won a breathing spell at considerable political cost to itself and without much respite. As a result of the premier's threat to resign, the budget has finally been gotten through, after having been before parliament for nearly a year. With an authorized budget of 33,000,000,000 francs, France has but 18,000,000 francs on the right side of the ledger. Many heavy additional expenses loom up in the immediate prospect which seem calculated to produce an actual deficit. In an economic sense the Painleve ministry does not appear to have much leeway. Politically, it will enjoy a brief rest until parliament reassembales in the fall, a period which will be filled, however, with pressing care and anxious speculations.

On the ministerial calendar are a number of matters demanding immediate attention. The floatation of a gold coupon refunding loan is a necessary part of the financial program. It may or may not prove difficult, but will consume time and occasion considerable worry. The evacuation of the Ruhr remains to be carried out, and will be a taxing routine affair. In the nature of problems still to be solved are the settlement of France's debt to the United States and the conclusion of the proposed peace pact with Germany. The former is likely to require protracted consideration, while the latter is apt to encounter insuperable obstacles. Neither, however, present so great a difficulty for France as the Moroccan war. France earnestly desires a speedy knows not how to bring hostilities to an end. If termination of that profitless conflict. But she she assumes the offensive and vigorously carries it out, it may cost her more money without yielding any very tangible results. If she permits the war to drag on interminably, it may prove a still greater drain upon her treasury.

When parliament reassembles the Painleve ministry will have to face the fact, with increasing embarrassment, that it has ignored its obligation to resign when the majority which put it in power failed to give it further support. The ministry has had to shift its political balance, depending upon two minorities taken from the opposing right and left wings of parliament. It has to look forward to support from an ill-assorted majority with the almost certain prospect of further change which may precipitate a positive crisis with unknown possibilities. The best guess is that the shift to the right will continue until the Painleve ministry finds itself opposed by a liberal majority. Its position is certainly not an enviable one. No other government would care to take its chances or depend upon its slender hopes

Uncommon Sense

By JOHN BLAKE.

Dark Corners.

Enlightenment proceeds slowly.

There are still myriad dark corners in the world.

Turn up a stone beside the path through the wood, and swarms of little creatures who have never seen the sunlight will hurry away from the glare.

It has been the mission of the Christian religion to spread light throughout the world.

Yet there are still some dark corners in it where but little light has come.

One of them is a mountain community where a school teacher is on trial because he told the boys in his charge that the world was once a white hot mass, which gradually cooled until it could support life, and that presently creatures appeared upon its surface, and developed through the slow process of evolution into many other forms of creatures.

It seems almost incomprehensible that any community whose streets are lighted by electricity, whose people can talk by telephone to other people thousands of miles away and can listen by radio to concerts given across the continent, and where vehicles driven by gasoline can move, if need be, one hundred miles an hour, would sanction such a trial as this

The teacher in question is a Christian. He believes in Christianity.

He has never taught, and probably does not believe, that man is descended from a monkey.

Neither Darwin nor Huxley ever taught anything of the kind.

But because he believes that the language which fixed the period of creation at six dys was figurative, and depends on the evidence of the earth itself, and the deductions of thoughtful and intellectual men that it is already many million years old, he is regarded as an enemy of the people.

Mr. Taft, chief justice of the United States court is a good Christian. But he believes in the doctrine of evolution, as do millions of his fellow countrymen.

He certainly cannot be charged while professing this belief to be attacking the fatih of his fathers.

Every man of real eminence in the world today is probably inclined to the belief that the world has been created as Darwin believed it was created, by the slow processes which we today can see in operation about us everywhere.

Any pigeon breeder knows what can be done by selection and breeding. There is no dog that doesn't show descent from other and very different sorts of dogs.

The fact that man came down from a being more resembling an ape than he himself resembles one is no more wonderful than that the features of the Mongolian are to be found in islands of the Pacific.

Yet here is a dark corner where light seemingly will not penetrate. However after this trial, and the wide publicity it has been given perhaps it will be less light-proof than it was before.

Perhaps the people uneducated now will begin to take an interest in education, and their sudden plunge into the limelight will prove their ultimate salvation from utter gloom of intellect.

THE COTTON REPORT.

The government's estimate of a 14,339,000 bale cotton crop, contained in the June 26 condition report, would be fairly staggering but for the fact that the report itself warns against taking its figures at their face value. The farmers who are struggling against drouth and hoping that they will raise a good but not too abundant crop, must find comfort in the assertion of the department of agriculture that the out-turn of the crop may be larger or smaller than the forecast of production as further developments during the growing season may prove more or less favorable. This rather vague statement is helped out by statistics covering the last ten years which show that the June predicition has generally been above final ginnings.

The weight of probability is certainly on the side of a smaller yield than presently calculated. It is in the nature of things for estimates to be reduced as the growing season draws to a close. The drouth too, will be a factor tending to diminish the yield. Without the drouth, the extra planting no doubt would prove ruinous. The two together may serve to balance each other. The farmers' wishes go along with the most reasonable view of the situation. After their experience with low prices, they do not desire the problem of marketing the third largest cotton crop in our history. Just now their chief concern is growing the cotton in the ground. But their permanent anxiety is to market the product at a fair price. The government report might seem an encouragement to the grower, but it will not seem so to the seller.

A substantial reduction in estimates would place this year's cotton production in the neighborhood of last year's. The present forecast exceeds final calculations for 1924 only about 700,000 bales. Such an excess represents but a small fraction of the whole estimated crop and might well be taken off without violating the probabilities of the case. A mere approximation of the figures for the two years would decidedly improve the outlook. The farmers secured fairly satisfactorily returns for last year's crop. They could as successfully handle the same size crop this year. Besides, there are some compensations now that were not operative then. There is a disposition on the part of cotton manufacturers to maintain a normal carry over. They are increasing their stocks above their current needs to insure continuous operation. At the same time, consumer demand and mill production are rowing. Under these circumstances, a considerably increased yield may be absorbed without demoralizing the cotton market.

SARGENT AS A SENATOR.

Attorney General John Garibaldi Sargent of Vermont may be a candidate for the senate in opposition to Senator Porter H. Dale. Senator Dale was elected two years ago to fill a vacancy. According to New England correspondents Senator Dale has never been over popular with the Vermont republican organization and has voted against the president on two major issues. President Coolidge is a Vermont republicans for a senator or a congressman from monter and it is considered criminal by Vermont New England to refuse to support the policies of the administration. President Coolidge knows how to hand out the honey. He knows how to ladel out the wormwood. If Sargent makes the race Dale will be sent to the shades of private life.

WHAT TODAY MEANS TO YOU

By MARY BLAKE

Leo—July 27.

Today's planetary aspects are quite adverse until after midday, when they assume a more favorable character, and, in the evening, become excellent, with very stimulating vibrations. Notwithstanding the unpropitious atmosphere that prevails during the morning, you will experience a strong urge to accomplish things, and to take decisions of a more or less momentous nature This desire should be curbed, and all action, especially if of an aggressive kind, postponed until later on in the day. Impulses must be restrained and impatience checked. Once this uncertain period is passed, you can give free rein to your plans, provided, always, they do not savor of risk or hazard.

A boy born today will during infancy be vigorous, lusty and strong, whereas a girl promises to be weak and ailing, the lasting efforts of which can only be overcome by more than watchful care and good nutrition. In disposition and character the boy will, although painstaking and conscientious, show signs of great will power, and of dominating force. This tendency must be checked in some degree, if, as he grows older, a bullying disposition is to be avoided. The girl, however, will be more than ordinarily subject to external influences and outside environment. She, although charming and attractive, will have less strength of character than a desire to please others—regardless of consequences.

If today is your birthday you are very fortunate, inasmuch as your versatility, sprightliness and loveableness of character have made for you numberless friends, who are remarkably loyal to you. Accomplishment has, so far, presented, in your case, very few difficulties, as once you determined to do something, your power of concentration, combined with your earnest effort, invariably enables you to make the grade. You are, fortunately, able to brush aside disappointment and overcome difficulties that would swamp another less courageous.

You love desperately and loyally, and if you only receive in return half-hearted affection, this will more than anything else, slay your efforts and spell failure when with love fully reciprocated success would be assured.

Successful people born on this date are:

IRRIGATION

The Public Rights on the Irrigation District Land at Lake Kemp.

You will often hear the statement made when the fence at Lake Kemp is being discussed that Mr. Waggoner can not shut the people out entirely as the district owns a tract of land at the dam which is open to the public.

Let us see what the contract between Mr. Waggoner and the irrigation district has to say about this land. We quote paragraph 2 of section 3, which reads substantially as follows:

"After the completion of said dam the use of forty acres—to be selected by the party of the second part (the irrigation district) as nearly in a square as possible, shall continue, and the right to use the same is hereby granted so long as said storage dam shall be maintained, the purpose of said use being only for the employes of the said party of the second part who are caretakers at said dam, and protection of machinery and equipment necessary to the care and maintenance of said dam, AND FOR NO OTHER PURPOSE, and the right to use said forty acres shall continue so long as said dam is maintained."

The tract of land is not owned by the irrigation district and never was. They have some very limited rights on it. They can use it only for the ploes who are caretakers. Not every employes who are caretakers. Not any chinery and equipment necessary for the operation of the dam can be stored on it. The contract says it can be used for no other purpose.

It is certainly plain enough that this land cannot be used as a park of public resort. It cannot be used as a site to erect a hotel on, or as a headquarters for hunting and fishing parties. It can be used for no other purposes than those mentioned. You have no right to this land.

HOW IT STARTED

"INTOXICATED"

Supporters of Mr. Volstead will find joy in the story of this word, for it means "poisoned!" So questionable and so obvious upon investigation is this significance that it is astonishing that it has been permitted by prohibitionists to remain for so long concealed from the general public!

"Intoxicate" comes, quite frankly, from the Latin "intoxicaire," which means of the prefix "in plus toxicum", mesing arrow poison. "Toxicum" was the preparation in which the Latins dipped the arrows which they wanted to have poisoned tips.

Hence a man who is intoxicated is 'dipped in poison," as the old Latins saw it! Perhaps, after reading 'his, lovers of the convivial glass will prefer for their conversation the plain and inelegant English work "drunk" —which cannot tell a story.

Letters From The People

REPLIES ON FINES

Editor Record News:

I wish to reply to Mr. J. W. Crouch's letter, July 23, 1925, in regard to Kemp Lake game warden filing women and children after notifying them to help themselves.

Now Mr. Crouch, the facts in this matter are as follows:

I notified the people through the Record News of Wichita Falls, that the gates of Kemp Lake would be closed on Sunday, July 12, and that all who wanted carp fish on that day could get them, but I did not notify anyone that they could get any fish out of Kemp Lake on any other day except complying with the law.

And further, I wish to inform you that there were not sixteen women and children fined on Friday, July 10, as you state, but there were only seven people fined and each of them were men, and they lived from Fort Worth to Oklahoma City, and Knox county, Texas.

You see Mr. Crouch if you had of been a little more careful and observed the law you would not have been fined—but Friday is not Sunday.

The state law makes a violation of the law to catch fish from any of these waters, except by an ordinary hook and line or trot line. And unless you are notified by newspaper or other means that you may take fish by other means you are violating the law.

For your benefit I wish to state that on Sunday, July 12, 1925 a number of people did get carp fish out of Kemp Lake and were not fined, but were assisted in catching them.

Last Friday was the first time anyone has been fined for grabbing fish at Kemp Lake.

J. T. CRAWFORD,
Caretaker at Kemp Lake

She stood there, more aloof from him, more utterly remote than ever before. It struck him at that moment that if she had repulsed him angrily, if she had been furiously indignant, he would not have felt as hurt and humiliated as he was now. But her perfect poise, her unruffled calm, her slightly amused air, and her rapier-like sarcasm made him feel that she had treated him like a small boy. She had made him ridiculous, he smarted under her subtle sarcasms, she had stripped him of all dignity, out of drama she had created a situation that was sheer farce, and he was helpless to take even her dismissal of him gracefully.

CHAPTER XLIII
The Return

AFTER Ronald had taken his leave Enid sat for a long time in the gathering twilight of the living room. There was a smile hovering about her lips and a far-away look in her eyes.

It seemed to her that a certain tension that had gripped her for a long time had relaxed. It was certain purpose, as though she had paid off an old score in a perfectly justifiable manner. She was at peace with herself because she had at last regained her pride.

When Ronald had [illegible] deliberately encouraged him. Not that she had ever let down any barrier where he was concerned; it had not been necessary to do that. But she had been deliberately charming and she had seen very plainly that he was fascinated. She had hoped that he would reach a point in his infatuation for her when he would declare himself, and so on her return from the city, she had avoided being alone with him knowing full well that this would only serve to torment him the more. Everything had worked out according to her plans. Today Ronald told her that he loved her and she had laughed at him. She had treated him like a small boy caught stealing jam. She had ridiculed him, knowing that a man will forgive anything but that, and she was well aware that it would be a long time before Ronald could forget the things she and said to him.

That he would eventually return to Coralie, she had no doubt. Enid had nothing against Coralie; she liked her, she even pitied her. Coralie had nothing to do with the paying off of the old score, and that was now settled.

Norah came into the room and, with barely a glance at Enid, wheeled out the tea-wagon. She returned a moment or two later and snapped on the lights.

Enid was still crouching in a corner of the couch when the bell rang. She did not stir until she heard Norah speak, and then she sat up straight and listened with all her ears.

"Glory be to God, and it is yourself, Mr. Lucien!"

There was a low reply followed by a short silence, and then without the slightest preliminary, Lucien strode into the room. Enid did not move and for a long moment they stared at each other. Enid saw Lucien's face with its contours sharpened, his mouth more firmly set, his hair slightly grayer. Lucien saw Enid lovelier than ever, more fragilely ethereal, more utterly desirable. Looking at her, he could hardly realize that she had borne him a child; she seemed n omore than a little girl herself.

Enid spoke first and her voice was a little breathless.

"Well, Lucien."

She was wondering why he had come here. It struck her, as she looked at him, that he seemed changed. He was more purposeful; he did not look like a man who could be easily managed, and, strangest of all, he did not seem the least bit impressed with her. Perhaps he was no longer in love with her.

"Well Enid," he returned evenly, "I've come home."

Again she stared at him, her eyes widening. For once she was taken back and some of her self-possession slipped from her in her surprise at his words.

"What do you mean by that?" she asked after a mouent.

"Just what I said," Lucien returned quickly. "I've come home. That oughtn't to be so very hard to understand."

"You mean you're going to stay here."

"Just that."

"Then, of course, I shall leave. After all, this is your place—I had forgotten that. It is only fair that you should occupy it, and I will have no trouble finding quarters elsewhere."

CHAPPTER XLIV.
Greek Meets Greek.

ENID'S remark about leaving the apartment seemed to make little impression upon Lucien for a moment, then he said very quietly:

"I don't believe I'd do that. Isn't the baby too young to be left?"

Enid stared at him, the hot color flooding her face.

"You don5t think I would leave the baby, do you?" she flamed suddenly; "that is really too funny."

Lucien shrugged his shoulders.

"If you go, Enid, you will have to go alone. The baby stays here."

All of Enid's composure that had been hers during her scene with Ronald was gone by now. Two bright spots of color stood out on her cheeks, her violet eyes were almost black, their pupils seemed enormous and she realized suddenly that she was trembling.

"The baby is mine," she said passionately, "all mine, do you hear me? You must be mad to come here as you have to say such things to me, to even suggest that you have anything to do with my baby."

"I think you have forgotten Enid, that I happen to be the baby's father. She belongs to me as much as she does to you. I haven't suggested separating you from the child or anything like that; you were the one who said you would leave."

"Yes, and I will leave, and I'll take Zell with me."

Lucien shook his head.

"That's impossible. You have had your own way thus far, Enid, and I have given you free rein in everything. Even when I learned that you had let me go without telling me the truth about yourself, I did not interfere. It shocked me to think that you could be so utterly callous, so unfeminmely cruel, but I did nothing about it. Now certain things have happened to make me change my mind. I have come home to stay, and wherever I am there the baby will be. I don't think there is anything you can do about it."

She stood before him like a wild young creature at bay. Her slim hands were clenching and unclenching, her breast was rising and falling from the stress of her emotion. He had never seen her so abandoned, he had not known that she possessed so much feeling. Always she had guarded herself against him; she had hidden behind her bright hard smile. He had never seen her roused save through her hatred of him, and yet it was good to know that she could feel, that she wasn't entirely callous.

Lucien was not so nonchalant as he seemed, but something told him that this attitude was the best he could adopt toward Enid. She had never had any one oppose her will; she had never been mentally beaten into subjection. The time had come when he must assert himself, when he must seem to be cruel even though he did not wish to be. She must be conquered to be reached; she must be tamed if she were to be softened, he, was sure of that.

And so he stood there, very calmly meeting her angry fury with an inscrutable expression on his face and a stern set to his jaw. Even at that moment she felt insensibly that he was like a rock and that nothing she could do would move him from his purpose.

"You're unspeakable," she said hotly. "I thought you had more pride than to force yourself in where you're not wanted. I was happy with you out of my life. I was free."

"Too free," Lucien said dryly.

"Oh!" she gasped. 'Oh, how——" she paused, and he finished for her.

How you hate me! Why don't you say it?"

"Yes, I do hate you; I loathe you unspeakably," she drew a long breath and then, without any warning, burst into tears and fled out of the room. Left alone, Lucien dropped into a chair. The lines around his mouth softened, his whole face relaxed and as he leaned back a thoughtful expression crept into his eyes.

How lovely she had been in her fury against him, and once she was conquered how she could love.

CHAPTER XLV
Readjustments.

In the days that followed Enid adjusted itself to the situation as best she could. That night after her outburst, she had turned the matter over and over in her mind trying to look at it from every possible angle, but she had been unable to solve the problem.

Of course she might divorce Lucien, but that meant a long, legal fight and she had absolutely no evidence that would give her reason for doing this. Besides, while she made her fight she would be separated from Zell. She hadn't any reason to suspect that in the case of a divorce she would be given the custody of the child either, so it seemed that her hands were tied. She would have to accept the situation at least until she could think of something to do, and in the meantime she had to endure the presence of Lucien in the house.

But if she had had any idea that he would force himself upon her she was mistaken. He seemed hardly aware of her. Even when he looked at her, it was with such an impersonal expression that she could not fail to notice his indifference and the fact that he seemed so disinterested where she was concerned was galling to her pride.

It was as if he had transferred all of the tempestuous love that he had once felt for her to the baby.

The minute he returned from the office at night he would go directly to his old room that had been converted into a nursery. A new nurse had supplanted Miss Edison, who had gone back to the sanatorium, and she and Norah often talked about Lucien's devotion to the echild.

"He's not a bit like most fathers," the nurse woul remark admiringly, "he never holds the baby as if he's scared to death of her. And the way she takes to him. Whenever he leans over her, she chuckles right back at him in the cutest way."

"He do be mad about her," Norah agreed. Norah was very happy, these days. Her beloved master had come back to his home, and in Norah's simple understanding of life, things were bound to come right in the end. To be sure she was troubled whenever Lucian and Enid were alone together.

They were so icily polite to each other, and there were never any caresses. She blamed Enid for this, she felt that Enid treated Mr. Lucie terribly. But as a matter of fact, Enid was merely following Lucien's cue at this stage of the game. She felt that he had grown to hate her, that he tolerated her presence merely because of Zell and yet she felt helpless to do anything about it.

Of course, she made a pretense to the world, and both her own and Lucien's friends heard of his return with various feelings and emotions on the subject.

Coralie had the sentimental belief that the baby had accomplished a reconciliation. Ronald, his wounded pride and haterd of himself making him impossible to live with, believed that Enid had done this thing deliberately in order to hurt him as much as she could. Alicia Conway did not believe that there had been a reconsiliation. It was Enid's father Mr. Austin, who hit upon the truth of the situation. He remembered his advice to Lucien and believed that his son-in-law had acted upon it. Whether it would accomplish anything where Enid was concerned remained to be seen.

One thing that surprised Lucien during these days was the fact that Enid was seeing nothing of Ronald. He hrad expected of course that she would act independently of him and go on with her life as she had been living it. The fact that he had believed her and Ronald to be in love with each other had been largely [illegible] sponsible for the step he had taken.

FEW MODERN FIGHTS END IN THE FIRST ROUND.

With miracles flashing everywhere across the sport horizon—holes in one on the links, startling individual batting and pitching feats, Tilden's consecutive games record in tennis, the brilliant double triumphs of Douglas Lowe in international collegiate meets—one wonders at the silence from the prize-ring. To match the "hole-in-one' 'etc., where are the quick knockouts which used to be sprung every once in a while in the old days? The gladiators seem to have lost the knack of dispatching a foe with the first sweep of the gnuckles.

A while back Floyd Glotzenbach, ex-chauffeur-husband of Mme. Matzenhauer, tried his hand at fisticuffing. The prima donna's hero of muscle didn't make good, but he did contribute one of the old time lightning knockouts in one bout. Floyd claims to have dropped his man in something like four seconds. The dope books were immediately combed to determine whether Glotzenbach had broken any record in the matter of administering leather lethal potion.

They found that only one had bettered his feat. Battling Nelson who holds the quick knock-out record was credited with dumping one Billey Rossler in two seconds. This abbreviated brawl took place at Harvey, Ill., April 5, 1902. The whole thing, it was claimed, was over in 12 seconds. Perhaps it's possible to achieve a knockout in the fleeting space of two seconds, but the writer certainly doubts it.

The boxers, it is explained, stood near the center of the ring, and ignored the customary handshake. This accounted for the Bat's ability to compass the downfall of Rossler as quickly as he did.

Glotzenbach, however, did manage to tie the record of one of the best old time knockouts. This chap was Dal Hawkins of the dynamite left hook, famous, amongst other things, for his desperate encounters with the great Joe Gans. Hawkins had a most disconcerting knack of twisting his left wrist for a knockout punch, without drawing the member back to gain force.

McGovern Scored Two 1-Round Ko's

Hawkins once put away tough Martin Flaherty in four seconds. Malachy Hogan, it is interesting to note, refereed both the quick knockouts of Nelson and Hawkins. He testified, afterward, that Nelson's was the quicker of the two. Hawkins and Flaherty fought in one of the prelims to the championship battle between Corbett and Fitzsimmons at Carson City in '97.

The quickest bantamweight title scrap on record was between "Terrible Terry" McGovern and Pedlar Palmer, the English title-holder. Terry finished Palmer in exactly two and a half minutes.

Long after his prime, Terry scored another sensational one-round knockout. The victim on this occasion was Harlem Tommy Murphy. Tommy survived just one minute and 32 seconds, after once having McGovern in a bad way. The speediest finish of any lightweight championship bout, we can recall, was between Joe Gans and Frank Erne, one of the cleverest of lightweight kings. Gans won the crown with a corking right hook in the remarkable time of one minute and 45 seconds.

Jack Dempsey's knockout of Fred Fulton was the quickest finish of modern times amongst boxers of "class." Dempsey landed his "bone crusher" 18 seconds after the big fellow had cleared for action.

George .rpentier, always primed for a rapid knockout, was one of the quickest finishers in the ring when he once had his man "going." Georges once dropped Joe Beckett, England's horizontal champion, in 70 seconds. Later he stopped Ted Lewis after a little more than a minute of fighting.

Still, it's strange that Bat Nelson, the first time he was in a hurry, should chalk up the quick knockout record. Under present day conditions the Battler could not have accomplished the stunt even in twice the time. Boxers, nowadays are not permitted to stand in the center of the ring awaiting the gong to summon the bombarding. Under present rules it takes a few seconds to emerge from the corners where they are empowered to stand after taking instructions from the referee.

A Different Example of Quick Headwork.

The resourceful mind, the brain that can devise a solution in the most pressing and embarrassing moments, is always a most enviable possession. Athletes and politicians are not the only ones who can use it, either. Once in a while a banmaster is obliged to do some greased thinking. Here's a funny one to prove it:

Down in Melbourne, Australia, the band is extremely courteous to the bike riders, for bike racing is very popular in kangarooland. Usually when there are competitors from other lands ,the musicians oblige with the national air of the rider as he appears on the track for the racing. Recently there was quite a league of nations entered in one of the Melbourne meets.

Faucheux, the French rider received the Marseillaise.

A Belgium, Vedrine, was greeted with the Belgian national hymn.

Bailey of England was given "Rule Britania."

No particular headwork demanded in these instances. But if you'd been bandmaster, what would have been played when Bill Hedspath, a colored rider, appeared? On the spur of the moment that would have been a mean assignment, yes? It was for the Australian band leader.

But he was equal to the occasion. Raising his baton he called for: "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow."

And that was what Bill Hedspath got.

OSBORN PULLS INITIAL GAME FROM COALS

Golvin's Home Run Unties Knot and Wins Tilt

SUDS STOWS SECOND

Turge and Bubber Each Slam for Circuit In Opener

By BLONDY CROSS.

For awhile Sunday it seemed the scheduled double header between the Spudders and Shreveport was not going to be played, for Sid Smith's Louisiana outfit was late in arriving. Now the Sports probably wish they had not shown up at all, because the domestics grabbed both contests, winning the first 5 to 4 and the second 3 to 1.

Carl Williams, the veteran, had been laboring hard through seven stanzas in a creditable manner, but Shreveport had managed to overtake and tie a Spudder lead at 4-4. There was one out and the bases loaded in the eighth frame when Skipper Tanner sent Bob Osborn to the mound. Benton was at bat.

Now Lefty Thompson had been hurling a great brand of ball and seemed getting better as the tilt wore along. The situation looked mighty bad, for if Shreveport scored the game would be sewed up by the visitors, so it appeared for there was little liklihood of the Spudders being able to count more than one run, if any, the remainder of the way. That is, it seemed so. A clean base blow meant the tabulation of two, possibly three, Shreveport runners.

Bob Mows 'Em Down.

But Long Bob Osborn, a pitcher who had been out of the game for more than a week because of illness, bore down on Benton. His first pitch was a ball. His second a strike. The next never got to the plate, but it didn't matter, for Benton had biffed it directly back to the box. Osborn scooped up the pill and chunked it to Jonnard at the pan for a force out of the athlete bearing in from third, and the Spudder catcher then bulleted the agate to Golvin on first before Benton had made the grade, completing a double killing and pulling the game from the coals.

Golvin refrigerated the contest in the Spudder half of the eighth by poling one over the right field fence. The bases were empty. Three men faced Osborn in the ninth.

Suds Sutherland pitched and batted his way to a victory over Howard McCall in the aftermath. Suds punched a single to left in the second and that sent two runners across. That was enough to win.

Pete Socks Her Over.

Neither aggregation menaced in the opening round of the first game, but the Spudders checked in for a pair so suddenly at the start of the second that it took Spud fandom a full minute to realize just what had happened. Fitzgerald led away with a paste between first and second. Then Turgeon stepped up and hoisted the spheroid deep into the mesquite thatched jungle territory outside the port barrier. Golvin struck out. Dorman singled, but Jonnard slammed into a double play, Ostergard to McGaffigan to Kirke.

Shreveport scored a run in the fourth, but so did Wichita Falls, bringing the county to 3-1 Spudders. The Sport tally came as a result of a bullet-like clothesline poke to starboard by Kirke for two cushions, an infield out, and single to right by Schick. Rowland bobbed into a double murder, Distel to Turgeon to Golvin. With two gone in the Spud half of the round, Turgeon injected a hair-raising two-bagger to left center. Golvin picked out a clod of dirt in front of McGaffigan and then busted the apple square into the obstruction. The ball took a high leap over Mac's head, going for a single, and sending Turgeon in.

Bubber Homers.

Benton singled and Ostergard doubled after there were two down in the Shreveport fifth, but Turgeon wafted up and pulled in a vicious aerial poke by Ostergard to retire the side without a run. Jonnard led off in the Wichita Falls portion of the canto with an altitudinous blast to the left pasture home run zone. Thompson was harassed by two more pungent swats viz, a double by Distel and a single by Bodie, but outs were so interspersed that no further damage was done.

Shreveport slipped up within shooting range of the Spudders in the sixth, scoring two runs. Kirke opened with his second two-cushioner, a drive that shook up the mid-center parapet. McCarty drew a first base coupon. Schick then singled between first and second, putting Kirke over and sending McCarty to second. With Rowland at bat, Williams uncorked a jungle heave at first. McCarty tabulated and Schick was cut away at third by Golvin who retrieved the ball and lined to Dorman. Rowland then singled to center. McGaffigan slapped a one-baser to right and Rowland was thrown out at third on a perfect chunk to Dorman by Bodie. Thompson fouled out to Jonnard.

The Spudders failed to get around in the last half of the sixth, so the Smithian crew knotted her up in the seventh, scoring another double by Bonowitz and a single by Kirke, his third straight punch to virgin fields.

Suds Does It.

You know the rest.

Ostergard socked one over the right field fence in the first frame of the second game. The runways were unpopulated.

Suds held the Sports off in the second and then singled in two runs himself. With one out, Golvin walked. Dorman fouled to Kirke. Query followed with a two-sack sock against the top tier of the right field fence. Golvin drew up at third. McCall got two-nothing on Sutherland and then Suds rode the next pitch on a line over third for a single. Both runners tabulated standing up.

The great Mr. Ping Bodie took matters into his own hands long enough in the third to send our proud Spudders one run further out front. The famous speed merchant pushed the pelota to left and dashed to second base almost before the ball hit the ground. Fitzgerald flied out to right, and Ping went to third after the catch. Nobody even stood a chance to head him off. Then Turgeon rocketed out to Bonowitz in center, and the fleet one scored.

McCall slipped through the rest of the route with no casualty, and the enemy couldn't get close to Sutherland.

The same teams hook up this afternoon at 4 o'clock. It's Laides' day and the last of the home stay.

MONROES GET ON SECURITIES FOR 16-6 WIN

Rawls Hits Six Out of Six; Hefner Poles Five In Seven

Behind the great stick work of Riley Rawls and Charley Hefner, the pitching of Henry Hatton and the catching of Pig Iron Murrell the Travelers pounded the offerings of Jimmy parker and "Oklahoma Lee" Courtney for a 16 to 6 win. Rawls smashed out six hits in six times up. Hefner poled out five in seven. Hatton whiffed 12 of the Bankers in the nine innings. In the absence of Red Hicks, Murrell went behind the bat, and was a great factor in winning the ball game. Murrell poked out two hits and one of these came in the first inning, a home run with the bases loaded.

Parker was jerked in the first inning of the game when he poked one of his fast ones into Ikard's ribs, filling the bases, this coming after the three runs had already been chased over. Murrell greeted Courtney with a smash to left field for a home run, scoring Taylor, Hancock and Ikard ahead of him.

The Bankers came back for two in their half of the first inning. A triple by Stanfield, a single by Courtney and an error in left field that sent Courtney over the rubber.

The Travelers scored two more in the second. A single by Lesley and Riley Rawls' second hit, a home run to deep center, scored the two. It was then that Courtney flashed his best pitching. He fanned Taylor, Faincney and Hancock in the second, and Ikard and Murrell for the first two men in the third.

The Bankers counted two more in the second. A hit batsman, a walk the two. Flatt's triple with two on and Gabe Harris' three-bagger scored was the cause of the final pair for the Bankers.

A single, a double, two walks and three singles shoved over four more in the fourth for the Travelers. Charley Hefner's home run to deep center with Murrell and Hatton on the bases scored the final three for the Travelers.

The Passing Hour

THE CONSISTENT MAN

He never swings an ax to cut his cordwood—
He never washes the dishes for his wife—
He never pushes a lawnmower through the stubble
Nor to his office walks in all his life;
White collar man, he dreads the thought of labor—
A hoe and shovel rob him of his smiles—
But he totes and swings a ton or more of war clubs
And walks around a golf course ninety miles!

Perfect in Turin forbids football game fearing team supporters will commit murder. The Italian brother acquires American intercollegiate spirit.

Football is the perfect sport. It requires the spectators to slay each other instead of the referee.

Big Money and Big Fights

Practically all of the troubles of various boxing commissions in inducing champions to fight gentlemen whom the commission regard as able or entitled to meet said title holders center in the poundage division embracing the 135 class and farther north. From the junior lightweights on down there is always plenty of activity and excepting John Kilbane's long tenure of the feather throne, crowns change with great frequency. The personal disagreements and the lighter boys are not often on anybody's disqualification list.

The trouble seems to be that the lighter divisions do not pay heavily in dividends and to keep the pot boiling the boys must fight—and engage incidentally in bouts attractive to the public. But lightheavies and heavies play to important money. The big thing there is to keep possession by hook, crook or adroit dodging and match making of the title that assures the public interest. Hence the difficulty in persuading the Dempseys to meet the Wills and other formidable contenders, or any champion to meet anybody that he is satisfied has a chance. Between the actual risks of his title he wants to take on as many pot boilers as he can, and when he does actually stand a chance to lose, he wants so much money assured him that even a loss would be atoned for.

Dempsey is at least honest. He has always contended that he would never retire undefeated because he could not afford to give up so large a sum of money as his last fight would represent.

The bantams and the feathers scrap
Like windmills on a breezy fall—
But the public pays its coin to see
A pair of giants clinch and stall

Wesleyan faculty finds the automobile is a sin. A gent who has been paying repair bills would identify it as a crime.

Ten years back, if it were not for occasionally drawing a suspension from Ban Johnson, you never knew the managers were around in the American league. Now if it were not for occasionally suspending a manager you would not know Ban Johnson is in the American league.

Stay in There, Bill!

With the player-writer rule as written into the American Lawn Tennis association's ideas of an amateur these days most sports critics agree. Most of them for years have regarded the alleged player-author in any sport as the original sin of the athletic field of journalism and nearly one hundred per cent agree that the sense of ethics and sportsmanship if not of amateurism is violated when a participant sets out to write as a critic the play or tournament in which he takes part. And that is that.

Large Bill Tilden in his final losing war with the association carried a few cheers from the field of screeders. But when the tennis world or a vocal section thereof rises to declare that Tilden, barred by the present rule from writing tournaments in which he plays, is violating the spirit of the rule by giving interviews, here at least is an objection.

The constitution is supposed to guarantee life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, whatever that may be. Most American citizens are not visibly happy unless talking, preferably of themselves. To clamp down upon Large Bill the muzzle of silence under a farstraining of the amateur rule will bring quite a few defenders to the tennis champion's aid from ranks where the petulant and temperamental tall party has not hitherto had many friends.

Quite possibly Mr. Tilden has confined his conversations to the representatives of the news syndicate for which in freer moments he writes under contract. But even so, the king at whom the cat looked was privileged to talk only to the cat if he so elected. Mr Tilden's views on his chosen game are doubtless interesting, but it is nevertheless the privilege of Mr. Tilden to express them only to whomsoever he chooses.

Cyril Tolley has renounced golf for two years to attempt to become a tennis champion. The odds are 99 to 1 that in mid-September Cyril will be bawling "Fore!"

They break their clubs across their knee—
They damn the game and swear off it—
Then buy more clubs because you see,
They can not quit—they can not quit!

Kibbie Rejoins.

A special from Brownsville the other day reported that Horace Kibbie, the Longhorn captain in 1925, had rejoined the Braves, after quitting the club last month when an effort was made to farm him out to the Eastern league, while his contract had provided that he should remain all year with the club.

Appreciating the feeling of Kibbie in the matter that the Braves were not living up to their agreement with him, the ex-collegian wa syet falling into an error common to the college star. Provided the financial terms of his contract were observed, he would be really helping his own cause by playing out half the season in a class A league where he could acquire the polish in the professional game the collegian, even under so fine a trainer as Billy Disch, naturally lacks. The player like Frisch who can step off college diamonds to star in the pro ranks is one in a million. The college and professional games are too radically different.

Attorney General Passes On Road and Bridge Issue.

AUSTIN, July 26.—Attorney General Dan Moody Saturday approved $92,295.77 road and bridge bonds of Young county.

WASHINGTON 7-4; NEW YORK 4-3.

NEWYORK, July 26.—(AP) — The Washington Senators in their last appearance of the season here, defeated the Yankees today in both games of a double header, 7 to 4, and 4 to 3, the second game going 11 innings. McNeely's single scored Peckinpaugh with the winning run in the last game. Third Baseman Dugan of New York was carried off the field in the tenth inning when his injured knee came out of place. Coveleskie extended his winning streak to 13 straight in the first game, although he was relieved for a pinch hitter in the ninth inning. The first defeat for the Yankees marked the fourteenth time this season that they have failed to extend a two game winning streak. Score:

FIVE CLUBS BUNCHED IN TEXAS RACE

Spudders Still Pack Potent Menace for League Leaders

DALLAS, July 26.—The close of the third week since the Texas league club owners ordered a new deal found five clubs scrapping at close quarters for the uppermost position, although the Panthers appear again to have caught an ace in the hole.

Saturday night but three and a half games separated the leading Panthers from the suddenly ambitious Steers who held their favorite notch at the head of the second division. Houston was but a game to the rear of the hard pressed Panthers while Wichita Falls and San Antonio were packed in sardine fashion between the Buffs and Steers.

Sudden loss of the big lead they enjoyed prior to the split seems in nowise to have disconcerted the Panthers. They are continuing to win with the same clocklike regularity and have not lost a series notwithstanding the fact their pitching staff is not functioning as smoothly as it was early in the summer. They went through last week with five victories and two defeats and dislodged the Buffs from the top of the pedestal.

Steers Step Out.

Dallas alone had a better record for the week than the Panthers. The Steers, after a hesitant start, following the split, had a veritable streak, which had reached eight straight wins when it was checked by the Buffs Saturday. The Steers are getting some consistently good pitching for the first time this season and this supplemented by snappy fielding and timely batting is enabling them to show some of the class predicted of them when the second half got under way.

San Antonio and Houston both lost ground during the week. Each won three while losing four to their North Texas rivals. However, both these teams are strongly favored by the schedule which gives them home games against Fort Worth, Dallas and Wichita Falls during the next few days. he results of one day's play may boost either into first place overnight.

With Howard Fitzgerald back in the lineup, Wichita Falls experienced a profitable week, winning four of seven games. They annexed series from Waco and Beaumont, but dropped one to San Antonio. They staged an extraordinary feat Wednesday when they rallied in the ninth inning, overcame a six-run lead and nosed out the Cubs, 10 to 9. Any team capable of doing this will have to be reckoned with when the championship issue is finally settled.

Sports Look Alive.

Shreveport also had a good week, winning four and losing three. Two of the Gassers' victories were turned in by Malone, one of the best beavers in the loop. GGrady Adkins, a newcomer, made an impressive debut Saturday, shutting out the Exporters with five hits.

Waco and Beaumont apparently were little benefitted by the split and are continuing to grovel at the heels of the more favored contenders. They won but three games between them during the week. The Cubs appear good on paper, but there seems a lack of co-ordination between their pitching and hitting departments. When their pitchers deliver, the batters fail to do so, and vice versa. A fourteen-inning victory over the Panthers was the Cubs' most outstanding feat of the week. Beaumont, victim of many a hard luck encounter, seems unable to vacate the cellar and probably will remain there for the rest of the season unless some other team makes a sharp nose dive. The Exporters are apparently at a stage where they don't care whether they win or lose, and a team in this condition generally loses.

It was a perfect week so far as the weather was concerned, not a postponed game being recorded.

Tilden Defeats 'Little Bill' in Straight Sets

CHICAGO, July 26—(AP).—William T. Tilden's place at the head of the tennis world is still unchallenged, after the national champion today won the Illinois state singles from his greatest rival, William M. Johnston, of San Francisco in straight sets, 6-4, 6-3, 9-7.

Playing the best tennis of his career, the lanky Quaker City star gave a gallery of 7,500 a sample of the tennis that keeps the Davis cup in the United States, holding Little Bill in check throughout, with sharp drives to the backhand that gave Johnston little chance to use his devasting forehand drive.

In the finals of the women's singles two Berkley, Calif., girls fought it out for the title, Miss Charlotte Hosmer defeating Miss Helen Jacobs, the sensational 16-year-old champion of America, in three sets, 6-4, 1-6, 7-5. A. L. "Sandy" Wiener of Philadelphia won the junior singles over Berkley Bell of Austin, Texas, 10-12, 6-4, 6-4, 6-3.

WEEKLY COTTON.

NEW ORLEANS, July 26.—(AP)—The predominating feature in the cotton market the past week was the government report issued Thursday morning, giving the condition of the crop on July 16, as 70.4 of normal and the indicated yield as 13,588,000 bales of 500 pounds.

These totals were so widely at variance with the expectation of traders and so much lower than the average of the private bureaus that had issued reports in advance of the government that they created a profound sensation and for a time no little skepticism.

The effect was immediate and drastic. October contracts sold at 23.00 jumped to 24.00 immediately after trading was resumed, then to 24.50 and finally to 24.[illegible] a gain in a few minutes of 15 points or a little more than seven dollars a bale.

While there was a recession of about 40 points from the highest reached before the termination of trading on Thursday, due to profit-taking, the market advanced to a new high level at 24.64 on Friday and advanced again on Saturday to 24.80, closing at practically the highest level reached since the publication of the report.

The continuation of the drouth in the west has served to confirm the government figures and unless copious rains soon fall in Texas and Oklahoma, and other portions of the belt, prices are likely to advance further. Good rains in the near future would probably cause a sharp reaction from recent levels.

U. S. Women To Repel British Netters Named

Five Ranking Players Of Country to Meet England's Best.

NEW YORK, July 26.—(AP)—America's five ranking women tennis players will compose the team which will wear the stars and stripes against the invading English team in the women's international tennis matches for the W[illegible]htman cup at Forest Hills, August 14 and 15. They are Miss Helen Wills of Berkeley, Calif.; Miss Mary K. Browne of Los Angeles; Mrs. [illegible] of New York; Miss Elanor Goss of New York and Miss Marion Jessup of Wilmington, Del., with the problem of the team out of the way the selection committee is confronted wit hthe task of ranking the players of the [illegible] of their 1925 performances.

Under the women's international team trophy agreement between the United States and England, seven matches are to constitute the program, five singles and two doubles matches. The number one and two players on each team will meet the corresponding players on the opposing team in singles and the number three players on each team will meet in one singles match. Two doubles combinations from each team will meet in the doubles.

BEAUMONT 12-1; SAN ANTONIO 4-0.

BEAUMONT, July 26.—Beaumont walloped the San Antonio Bears twice here Sunday, taking both ends of a doubleheader 12 to 4 and 1 to 0. The first go was a one-sided slugfest, with the Exporters getting 16 hits, four of them being credited to Bernie Deviveros, shortstop. The second was a mound duel between "Skinny" O'Neal of the Exporters and Mike Kelly of the Bears, each team being held to five hits. O'Neal struck out Wirts and two pinch hitters, Booe and Warwick, in succession in the last inning. Score:

PITTSBURGH 6; CHICAGO 4.

CHICAGO, July 26.—(AP)—Pittsburgh gained a full game over New York today when they defeated Chicago 6 to 4, while the Giants were shut out by Brooklyn.

Vic Aldridge, former Cub pitcher, let his former mates down with seven scattered hits, but two of these blows were homers and accounted for all the local's runs. Adams uncorked the first four bagger by driving the first pitched ball into the bleachers. Freigau drove out a homer with two men on in the fifth. Aside from these two blows, the Pirates twirler was almost invincible. The Pirates bunched hits off Kaufmann, Carey and Traynor, leading the attack with four hits each. Wright smashed out a home run with a man on base in the fourth. Score:

FORT WORTH 5-3; DALLAS 4-1.

DALLAS, July 26.—The Dallas Steers went down to defat before a crowd of 13,135 persons here today, the Fort Worth Panthers taking both games of a double-header. The first was a long drawn out affair which lasted more than three hours. The Panthers checked the SSteers ninth inning rally winning 5 to 4.

The second game lasted only five innings, darkness overtaking the contest. The Panthers won 3 to 1 due largely to the fine stick work of Sears, North, a former Steer, held his ex-team mates to only on blow in the second game.

WICHITA FALLS GETS DISTRICT PRESS MEETING

Change Is Made From Mineral Wells to This City At Special Session

The annual convention of the Northwest Texas Press association, scheduled to be held August 21 and 22 at Mineral Wells, was transferred to Wichita Falls, for the same dates. This action was taken at a meeting of officers of the organization here yesterday morning.

The convention will bring approximately a hundred press representatives from over North Texas to Wichita Falls for the two-day meeting. The meetings will be given over to discussions of problems the average rural paper editor meets with in the course of his day's work. Advertising, editorial work, and circulation will all come in for their share of discussion by the delegates.

Though the transfer to Wichita Falls was not made until yesterday morning, a complete program for the two-day sessions has already been arranged. The meetings will be presided over by Will A. Smith of San Saba, president of the association. The following is the program as announced Saturday:

Friday Session.

Called to order, 10 a. m. by Will C. Edwards, president.
Invocation—Rev. S. A. Barnes, Wichita Falls.
Address of welcome—Mayor R. E. Shepherd, Wichita Falls.
Response—E. L. Covey, vice-president Northwest Texas Press association.

Mr. May has many friends in this city who will be pleased to learn of his promotion.

NEWSIES GUESTS OF LAKE.

Record News Sales Force Have Swimming Party Saturday.

In spite of the hot weather the newsboys and street sales department of The Record News journeyed to Lake Wichita Saturday afternoon where they were the guests of the lake management at a swimming party. All the newsies went in and enjoyed the water for several hours. They were chaperoned by Messrs. Belle and McDaniel of the circulation department, who also took a dip.

Coming out of the water they were shown to a hot dog stand and again the lake management stood treats. Given all they could eat the force returned to the city, longing for next Saturday when they will again take their weekly plunge at the lake.

Man Who Advertised for Another Daughter, Finds Girl Suitable To Him, But Her Mother "Don't Know"

Eleven-Year-Old Child Actress Willing to Be the Child Of Millionaire Who Wants a Daughter

NEW YORK, July 24.—(AP)—Margaretta Curry, 11-year-old child actress, appeals to Edward W. Browning, wealthy realtor, who has advertised for a pretty, refined girl that he can adopt in order to have a playmate for Dorothy Sunshine, another adopted daughter.

Margaretta was selected from the thousands of girls willing to be sisters to Dorothy Sunshine, who has 100 dolls, 15 dresses and her own Rolls-Royce. Mr. Browning likes Margaretta and Margaretta was convinced she would like to be the daughter of Mr. Browning.

With the adoption papers ready to sign yesterday, the mother began to realize what losing Margaretta would mean. Ready to cry, she fled from Browning's office where negotiations were in progress, leaving Margaretta sitting on the floor playing with a string of pearls, the gift of Mr. Browning. A little later a woman friend of the mother came to Mr. Browning to say the adoption could not proceed until Margaretta's mother had more time to think things over.

Meanwhile, Mr. Browning is reading letters from the thousands that have poured into his office in the hope of finding another foster daughter, should Margaretta's mother decide she cannot do without her.

BROOKHART IS STILL GAINING IN VOTE CHECK

Recount Gives Him Lead Of About 200 Votes In First Week

WASHINGTON, July 26.—(AP).—Senator Brookhart gained approximately 200 votes during the first week, ending today of the recount of uncontested ballots cast in the senatorial election in Iowa last fall. This gives him an apparent lead over Daniel F. Steck, the democratic contestant, of more than 1,500.

The Iowa senator was given his seat on a certificate showing his election by a majority of 755. This was increased to 1,385, by 630 votes gained on an examination of the voting machines used in about 500 precincts throughout the state.

Steck made steady gains during the recount, today it being found that about 100 votes cast for him had not been counted.

Perkins-Timberlake Buyer Has Returned

R. D. Kennedy, manager of Perkins-Timberlake, returned Friday noon from the New York market where he has been familiarizing himself with styles and market conditions, and placing orders for August and September relivery. Mr. Kennedy was accompanied on this trip by F. W. Timberlake, of the firm, and managers from several of the departments, Mercer, Tittle, Bowman, and Aldrich.

Mr. Kennedy reports for the benefit of the buying public that he will be able to show merchandise at satisfactory prices. This is most true, he stated, in ladies ready-to-wear. The most of styles will be made up largely of coats and dresses, there being a small demand for ensemble suits which will be limited to a better quality and higher priced lines, and also ladies tailored suits, were points brought out by Mr. Kennedy.

A further statement voiced his approval with prices and merchandise, and lead Mr. Kennedy to assure that it was the hope of the firm to serve their customers more satisfactory way than ever before, due to the consideration of the many lines carried in the store.

Priddy to Take Tech Club to Lake Kemp

The Wichita Falls Technical club will be the guests of Walter M. Priddy next Wednesday afternoon and evening on a trip to Lake Kemp.

All members with their friends are invited to go on the party, that will leave the Priddy residence, corner Harrison and Eleventh street, promptly at 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon by automobile. There will be cars to carry those who do not have means of transportation. The party expects to arriv eat the lake by 4 o'clock and immediately afterwards take a motorboat trip over the lake.

At 7 o'clock that evening a big dinner will be served at the Point Breeze hotel, with Mr. Priddy as host. Afterwards there will be dancing, or a car trip back home.

Those members who bring guests are asked to notify the secretary Tuesday afternoon, not later than 4 o'clock, so that reservations can be made.

Volunteer Revival To Begin Wednesday

The Volunteers of America announce the beginning of their summer revival Wednesday evening on Seventh street near the Wichita Falls baseball park. Rev. and Mrs. J. A. Collier, evangelists of much repute, will be in charge of the services that will be held each evening under a big tent that has been erected.

The Collier band will furnish all music for the services, and special song and musical programs will be a feature. The singing will be under the direction of Mrs. Collier. In connection with the special song numbers many good musical solos are promised.

All services will begin promptly at 8 o'clock in the evening, according to Volunteer officials. The public is urged to attend.

SUICIDE IS IDENTIFIED.

NEW YORK, July 26.—(AP).—The man who shot and killed himself early Saturday in the dining room of the Hotel Plaza was identified after 15 hours of effort by the police as Hans Jensen, 29 years old, a Danish university student. The identification was made by Mrs. Margaret Wyley, a friend.

Mrs. Wyley declared she knew of no reason why Jensen should have killed himself, but declined to give any further information regarding the young man's residence or family.

Jensen entered the hotel's dining room shortly after midnight and ordered a hearty dinner. Before he had completed it he drew a revolver from his pocket and fired a bullet into his heart.

County School Board Meets Here Saturday

The county school trustees held their regular meeting Saturday in the court house with four members in attendance. They were: D. E. Hooks of Iowa Park, Tom Haynes of Electra, J. B. Cooper of Route 4, and N. B. Singletary, also of route 4. The fifth member from Electra was not present. County school Superintendent Buryl Bryant presided over the meeting.

L. H. Adair was named district school trustee of the Clara district. Several men were named for this position but Mr. Adair was appointed on the strength of a petition containing 108 names.

Authority was given the school superintendent to have a handbook published, to be distributed free of charge to teachers and principals over the district.

Chinese Execute First White Man

PARBIN, Manchuria, July 26.—(AP)—The first recorded case of an official execution of a white man by Chinese authorities occurred today when the notorious Russian bandit, Korniloff was put to death by strangulation. His execution was carried out in the most secret fashion. The prisoner was given only a few minutes notice, and was scarcely able to erticulate his last wishes. He pleaded desperately to be allowed to make his appeal to the authorities for mercy.

Korniloff when first arrested on a civil charge escaped from the court room with the aid of confederates, killing several persons in gaining his liberty. He was later recaptured, and sentenced to death November 30, 1923, being the first white man to receive the death penalty in a Chinese court. His appeal was denied on February 26, 1924.

ANTI-SALOON MAN STABBED.

Negro Kills League Head on Konxville Street.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., July 26.—(AP)—William R. Hamilton, 58, former president of the Tennessee anti-saloon league, was stabbed to death at 11 o'clock Saturday night by James Evans a negro. Mr. Hamilton met death after an altercation with the negro whom he had called to repair a puncture to his automobile. The stabbing occurred on a leading residential street of Knoxville.

RELIGION ISN'T A QUESTION OF LAW, SAYS KAY

Stop Whiskey Sale, People Buy Autos—Human Nature Same.

The Christian religion is a great freedom of sunshine and joy, and is not a slavery, declared Judge John C. Kay Sunday morning, speaking before 271 members of the Kay Bible class.

Human nature sticks along from age to age, never changing. Human nature is like a rubber tube: If you mash it in in one place it pushes out at another. Stop people from buying whiskey, and then they buy automobiles. There isn't much difference, averred the judge.

Back in the period of the first great council of the church at Jerusalem which in the Catholic history is called the council of Jerusalem, people, many of them, sought a mass of rules and regulations by which to govern themselves and to follow in the conduction of a new church. This was all unnecessary, were the words in effect in Judge Kay. And men like the Apostles James, Peter, Paul and Barnabas sat down and compiled letters to these people, detailing a few simple decrees, not binding them under any 8,000 or so statutes, or words to that effect, as is the case in Texas, the speaker pointed out.

Question of Grace.

Religion, declared Judge Kay, is not a question of law, and the sooner Wichita Falls folks realize this the better, was the thought expressed. Religion is a question of grace, he said. It is not a thing of ceremony, nor is it a matter of conformity to the laws laid down by men, but is a thing of the heart inside, and not outside. As Paul put it, said the judge: "I am not under the law. I am above the law. I am under grace." There is many a good man that the law has no bearing on. He keeps the law without thinking about it, because he is under grace.

The judge's sermon in detail follows:

My friends, in coming before this Sunday school class this kind of weather that we have been having, I feel a good deal like the Mohammedan priest in Asia felt about his congregation. He went to the temple and went before his large audience one morning and announced his subject, and he said: "Now, do you people know anything about this thing that I am going to talk about?" They said: "No, we don't know about it." He said: "Well, if you don't know about it, I couldn't discuss it intelligently with you." And he got out of the pulpit and went home. The next Sunday he was back again, but they had thought things over by that time. He announced his subject and said: "Do you people know anything about this subject that I am going to talk about?" They said: "Yes, yes! We know about it." He said: "Well, then, there is no use for me to tell you about it." So, he got out and went home again. The next Sunday, they had got together and sort of fixed it up so maybe they could get by. When he announced his subject, and said: "Do you know anything about that?" some of them answered "Yes" and some of them answered "No," so he said: "Well, that will be all right. Those that do know it can teach it to the others. Good morning!" So, they were back the fourth Sunday and had entered into a conspiracy, and when he said: "Do you know anything about this subject that I am going to talk to you about?" they never said a word. He said: "Well, I see there is nobody here, this morning, I might as well go home."

Evolution by Bible.

I heard a right good story about evolution recently. I think you will enjoy it. A girl who was a Christian admitted it and proved it by the Bible. Her beau said to her: "I know that I am descended from a monkey." She says: "Well, I think you are, too, because the Bible says: 'As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he'."

Now, the lesson this morning is about the first great council of the church at Jerusalem. In the Catholic history, it is called the council of Jerusalem. And, with us, it is the great meeting at Jerusalem of the leadership of the church. They were great men. The church, over at Antioch, which was the second city in the world after Rome, at that time, had a lot of fellows that wanted a lot of rules and regulations.

You know, it is funny how human nature just sticks along, from age to age, never changing. Human nature is like a rubber tube. If you mash it in one place, it pushes out at another. If you stop the people from buying whiskey, they go to buying automobiles. There is not much difference.

New Idea Was This.

But, these fellows over at Antioch had a new thing. A new religion. And, they wanted to make some rules so they could break them. That's the way we are about the law. Now, the Savior never laid down any church rules, any laws, or any regulations. He never summoned the police. He never sent for the sheriff. He never appealed to court. He never went to the court house. He never read civil law to the people His kingdom was the kingdom of the spirit and a kingdom of the heart. But, these fellows over at Antioch wanted to regulate the brethren, and it kicked up a row, like it always does, except here in Wichita Falls. Of course, we keep all the laws and regulations. So, it got so bad, they had to go to Jerusalem about it. And Paul, who had seen Christ, with Peter and James, who had walked along by His side through His whole ministry, with other apostles and elders, who knew Him well, with large groups of men who had heard His teachings from His own lips, and they said: "What are we going to do about this? These people want us to keep this, and that, and the other order and the other order and print of Jewish rules, and some new rules. What are we going to do about it? What sort of a situation have you got there? You have got a new church in a new country, a long way from Jerusalem, sending up to Jerusalem to the man who talked with Christ, Himself, to find out what laws they ought to keep; what rules they ought to keep, and, especially, what ceremonies they ought to keep.

GIRLS APLENTY AT STENOS' MEETING; ONLY ONE MAN

TACOMA, Wash, July 26.—(AP)—Girl stenographers, one hundred of them, completely surrounded the lone male delegate to the semi-annual convention of the International association of public stenographers here today. The one male delegate, E. E. Lesher of Bellingham, Wash., is however, holding for the year the office of president.

It was a great event in the church Now, with all these great men knowing the christian religion better than anybody has ever known it, because they talked, as I have said, with he Master. What did they tell these people? Did they tell them that "You have got to have eight thousand statutes," like we have got in Texas? Did they tell them that "you have got the rules about the baptism," like different churches have got? Did they tell them: "You have got to take the Holy Communion down on your knees, kneeling like the Methodists, standing up like some others, or sitting, like some others?" Did they tell them how they were to keep the Sunday law, and that they were not to march more than two miles on the Sabbath day? Did they tell them that they have got to lay anaanimal for their ins, or bring two doves in the temple? Did they tell them they had to have circumcision, or any of the thousand and one Jewish regulations?

Here is one of the greatest men the world ever knew, setting out to a new church the things that are necessary, and what did Peter say about this old law? Peter got up and made a speech. He said: "You are trying to put about our necks a yoke that our fathers were not able to bear."

Religion No Slavery.

Oh! If I could make it known in Wichita Falls; if I could make my friends to know, that the Christian religion is a great freedom of sunshine and joy, and that it is not a slavery, then I should be happy, and I should have accomplished something.

So, the apostle James, the most practical of all the apostles, got up and said that he thought they ought to send word and they agreed on on that. Men like Paul, Peter and Barnabas agreed on what kind of word to send down hundreds and hundreds of miles to Antioch, and tell them how to run a church. Now, what kind of a law did they put on them? I guess there are preachers that wouldn't preach on this text. There are churches that wouldn't discuss it, I know. What does he tell them,—to keep all these ceremonies?

Now, this is after James got done talking, and they wrote letters after this manner. Here's the way, they say, to run your church. Here's the way to live. This is enough for the present.

"The apostles, and elders, and brethren send greetings unto the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch and Syria and Cilicia: Forasmuch as we have heard, that certain men which went out from us have troubled you with words, subverting your souls, saying, Ye must be circumcised, and keep the law: to whom we have no such commandment. It seemed good unto us, being assembled with one accord, to send men unto you with our beloved Barnabas and Paul, men that have harzarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. We have sent, therefore, Judas and Silas, who shall also tell you the same things by mouth." For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things; that ye abstain from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication." And, he adds; "If ye do these, ye will do well."

Now, that is the biggest pronunciation that the church ever made of the law, and the biggest man that ever went in the church made it, and they sent it to the second greatest city in the world, and it wasn't any bush-arbor meeting, or anything up here on the head of Mud Creek, but it was some great man talking to a great city, and,—how simple.

Not Of Law.

Religion is not a question of law. I yield to no man in my respect of the laws of the country. I think you all know that. But, religion is not of the law, but, as Paul says in this very lesson, it is a question of grace. That's what he says. In other words, religion is not a thing of ceremony. It is not a thing of conforming to the law, but it a thing of the heart inside of you, and not outside. Now, if we can get that idea, I think we will have a greater respect for religion, and for the law, because Paul writes that "I am not under the law." "I am above the law," says Paul, that the law doesn't have any bearing on earth to him. He is above it. He keeps it without thinking about keeping it, because he is under grace.

God pity that man that will do anything that the law will let him do, because grace is above the law.

You know, religion, after all is said and done, is a belief in Christ. Not to merely belive, historically, that such a One ever lived, and died, and even arose again, but to believe that He saves you, and me, and all those that put their trust in Him. That's religion. Religion belongs to him, and unless He dwells in the human heart, I think there is no religion. I think I cannot go out here, by keeping the laws of the church, and by keeping the ceremony of the church, and by obeying the orders of the elders; I think that is not sufficient to say that you or I are religious, but He has got to come into your heart and into your mind, and burnish it and sweep it, and clean it out, and dwell there Himself, in order that men and women shall be religious.

Now, that is difficult to understand. I don't understand it all. There is much about the spirit that I can't grasp. There is much going on in Heaven and on earth in the Kingdom of the Spirit that I don't know about. It is above and beyond my finite human reach. It is above me. It is supernatural. It is beyond my reach.

I know not where his islands
Lift their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care.

OLD CHATEAU IS BURNED.

VICHY, France July 26.—(AP)—The chateau de Randan, originally dating from the 16th century but entirely rrebuilt in 1822, was destroyed by fire today. Several firemen were injured. The chateau was owned by the Duchess of Montpensier, widow of a younger brother of the Duke of Orleans pretender to the French throne.
