Conciliatory Kyprianou says Sadat 'state' justified

By ALEX EFTY

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — President Spyros Kyprianou said today he understood the "justifiable psychological state" which led the president of Egypt to sever diplomatic relations with Cyprus after the Larnaca airport shootout between Cypriot forces and Egyptian commandos.

Kyprianou said in a statement he wished to "overlook the insulting and abusive language" used against him by President Anwar Sadat because it wasn't proper for heads of state to exchange insults and abuse.

Sadat made an emotional speech to Egyptian troops Wednesday after funeral services for 15 commandos killed in the attempt to rescue 11 Arab hostages and capture two gunmen aboard a commandeered DC-8 at the airport. He called Kyprianou a "dwarf" and said he was withdrawing recognition of Kyprianou as president of Cyprus.

The Egyptian Foreign Ministry summoned the Cypriot ambassador Wednesday and told him to close his embassy in Cairo and the consulate in Alexandria and leave along with his staff and other representatives of the Nicosia government.

"I appreciate and absolutely respect President Sadat's strong feelings," Kyprianou said. "His present justifiable psychological state provides, I believe, an explanation for the Egyptian president's decision.

"I wish to reassure Mr. Sadat that I shall make every effort for the restoration of relations between our two governments, and the warming up of the brotherly feelings that always linked our two peoples. I appeal to him to respond to my constructive intentions, to the mutual benefit of our two countries."

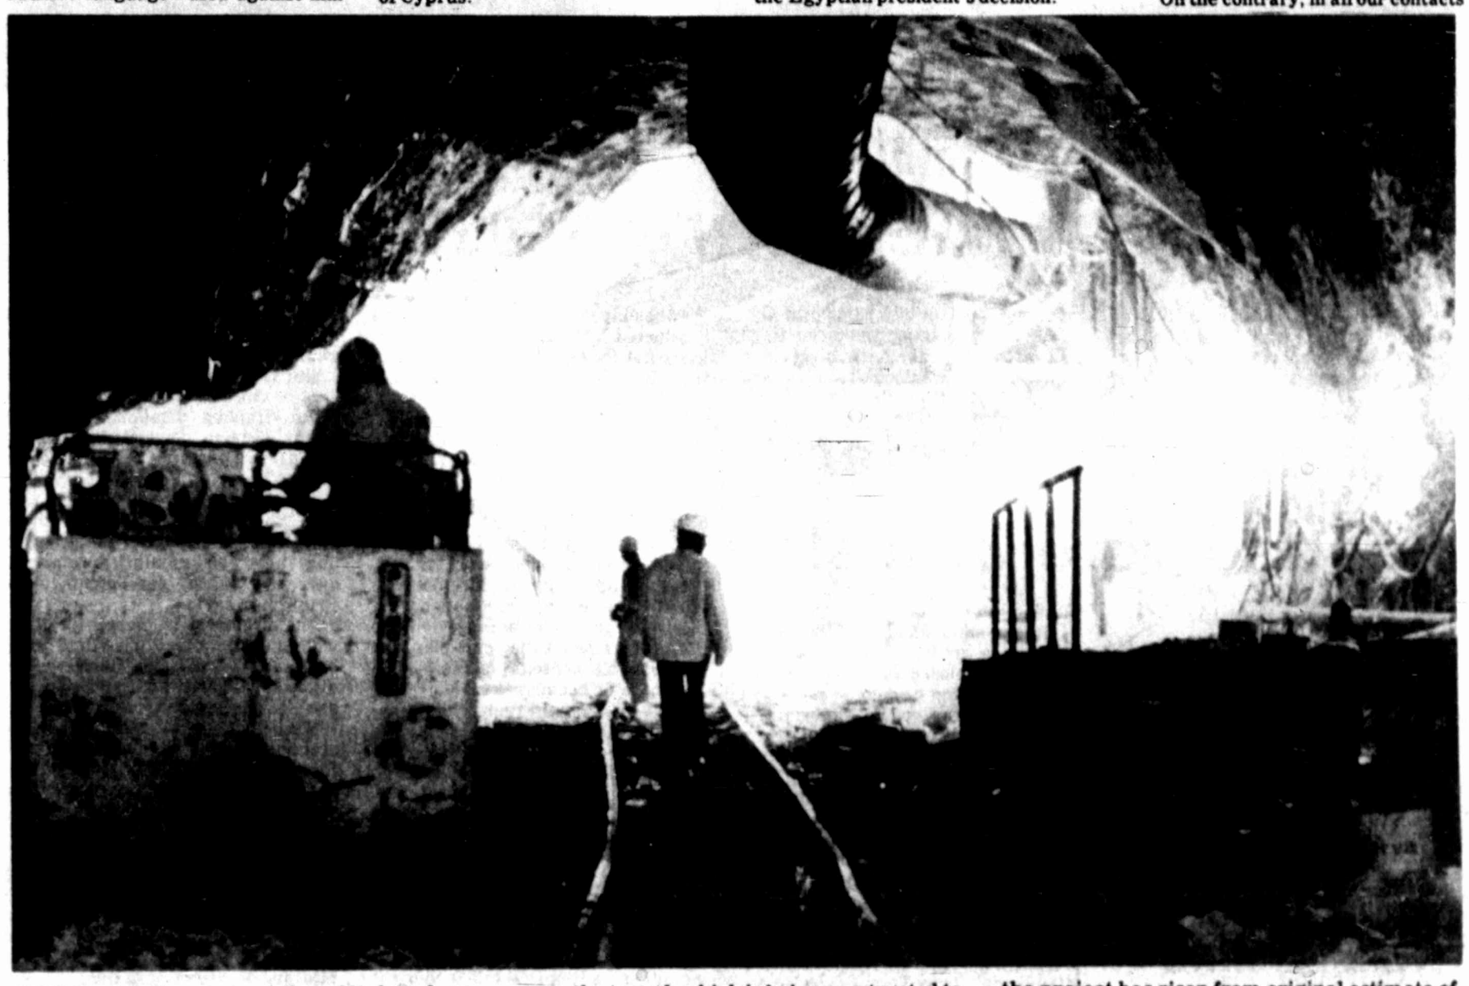

Kyprianou repeated his contention that Cyprus did not consent to the Egyptian action at Larnaca.

"On the contrary, in all our contacts we made it abundantly clear to the Egyptian representatives that we banned any action by the armed (Egyptian) group which had arrived at Larnaca without our consent.

"Unfortunately, the action was taken despite the promises given to the contrary, and the government had to intervene, with the well-known results."

Sadat's statement that he was withdrawing recognition of Kyprianou gave rise to speculation here that Egypt might recognize the self-proclaimed Turkish Cypriot federated state set up in the northern part of the island, under Turkish occupation since 1974.

The Turkish Cypriots, who have failed to gain any international recognition, contend Kyprianou should be recognized only as the Greek Cypriot leader and not president of the whole island.

B-1 bomber laid to rest in House vote

By PAUL HOUSTON
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Under heavy administration lobbying, the House reversed itself Wednesday and drove the final nail in the coffin of the B-1 bomber program.

By a vote of 234 to 182, the House agreed with a Senate decision to cancel $462 million appropriated in 1976 to build B-1 copies five and six. In December, the House had voted to reject the Senate position, 191 to 166.

The House action means that B-1 production will halt after completion of the fourth plane, now under construction at Rockwell International in Los Angeles.

Rockwell, the B-1's prime contractor, will have to lay off 750 employees "in the very near future" and an additional 2,250 by the end of the year, said C.E. Blalock, vice president and general manager of the Los Angeles division.

An additional 2,000 employees will face layoffs in 1979 "unless we get new business, which we are pursuing very hard," Blalock said. About 1,500 employees in Los Angeles are unaffected by the B-1 termination.

The House action, a long-sought victory for President Carter, also means that a $7.8 billion supplemental appropriations bill, to which the B-1 issue had been attached as a rider, will be signed soon.

Administraion lobbyists claimed that they picked up many B-1 votes by noting that the stalled money bill contained $4.5 billion for sewage plant construction, $1.5 billion for drought relief, $200 million to help the needy pay fuel bills this winter, $130.3 million for Indochina refugee aid, $18 million to retain Amtrak passenger routes, and $80 million for the Clinch River, Tenn., nuclear breeder reactor power plant.

Although Carter wants the controversial Clinch River project killed, aides said he was willing to sign the money bill and try to kill Clinch River later just to get rid of the B-1.

Congress seemingly ended the B-1 program last year when it voted to go along with Carter's request to remove $1.4 billion from the fiscal 1978 defense appropriations bill to build B-1 copies seven through 11.

But one more action was necessary to scrap the program: cancel $462 million previously appropriated for planes five and six.

B-1 supporters argued that the planes should be built to keep the Rockwell production team together in the event that the cruise missile — proposed as a substitute for the B-1 — did not work or had severe limitations placed on it in strategic arms talks.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., in an unusually low-keyed speech just before the vote, acknowledged that the B-1 model was "a beautiful piece of equipment."

"But the truth of the matter is it can be shot out of the skies ... and we all know the weapon of the future is the

Canal pacts muster needed vote in first test

By JOHN H. AVERILL
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Senate supporters of the Panama Canal treaties won their first test of strength Wednesday by a vote of 67 to 30.

The vote was on a procedural issue not central to the treaties themselves and thus not necessarily a true measure of Senate sentiment. Nevertheless, treaty supporters were jubilant because they mustered the magic number of 67 — the exact two-thirds majority required for Senate approval of a treaty if all 100 senators are present and voting.

Treaty opponents played down the significance of the vote. But it appeared to suggest that the Senate's two days of closed-door debate on narcotics trafficking in Panama had not dramatically turned senators against the two treaties.

Wednesday's vote was on a motion by Sen. James B. Allen, D-Ala., a treaty opponent, to reverse the order by which the Senate would consider the pacts. He argued that the Senate should vote first on the treaty that would turn control of the canal over to Panama by the year 2000 instead of the treaty that would guarantee the canal's neutrality after 2000.

To do otherwise, Allen said, "would be putting the cart before the horse."

But Senate leaders, who arranged to have the neutrality treaty voted on first, contended that the cart and the horse were in their proper places.

Both Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd (D-W.Va.) and Minority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr. (R-Tenn.) said they could not vote for either treaty unless they first were able to add amendments to the neutrality treaty to protect U.S. interests.

This was a reference to amendments sponsored by Byrd, Baker and 76 other senators that would give the United States the right to defend the canal and to give U.S. warships the right to priority canal passage during a crisis after the year 2000.

"I could not vote for these treaties if I were not first assured that the neutrality treaty was improved," Baker told the Senate.

In similar vein, Byrd said:

"There are many senators, and I am one of them, who would not vote for the Panama Canal treaty until we have settled the amendments ...So the cart is not before the horse. The horse is before the cart and I maintain that is where the horse ought to be."

Although Allen did not say so, his objective was clear. That was to delay adoption of the Byrd-Baker amendments, which many senators say are a vital necessity if they are to support either treaty, in hopes that the treaties could be defeated or amended to the point that Panama would not accept them.

The vote on the Allen motion came after the Senate concluded 14 hours of closed-door debate on what has come to be called the Panamanian drug connection. Both sides agreed the drug debate probably did not change any treaty votes.

Byrd called the various charges of Coal efforts hit bedrock

By DAVID ESPO

WASHINGTON (AP) — Efforts to negotiate an end to the 80-day-old coal strike appear once again on the verge of collapse with the coal industry rejecting the United Mine Workers' "bottom-line" contract proposal as unfit for a nationwide agreement.

The Bituminous Coal Operators Association said early today it remained ready to resume talks with the union, but declared that in view of the UMW's bargaining position, more negotiations "hardly seemed fruitful."

The main industry bargaining group issued its statement several hours before Labor Secretary Ray Marshall and White House officials were scheduled to meet in an early-morning session "to determine a future course of action."

The administraton has been laying the groundwork for "definitive" action to end the walkout before it causes serious economic damage.

Wednesday night, administration officials said privately the outlook for the talks was not promising.

As efforts to negotiate a settlement continued, the effects of the strike mounted. New electricity cutbacks were implemented in Indiana, and Tennessee Gov. Ray Blanton warned that 135,000 people would be out of work soon if voluntary conservation measures do not work.

In Indiana, National Guardsmen carried unloaded M-16 rifles and ammunition as they took up stations at key highway intersections to ensure the movement of coal convoys.

Misdemeanor charges were filed in Hocking County, Ohio, against two men in connection with vandalism at the Tuffant Mining Co. strip mine near Logan. An estimated 200 miners gathered near the non-union mine Monday night to shut it down. Two small trailers were set afire and the mine office trailer exploded.

Marshall announced earlier Wednesday he was making one last stab at helping to negotiate a settlement before the Carter administration stepped in to end the dispute.

"If this doesn't work, there are no happy solutions," he declared.

Several hours later, the labor secretary said in an ambiguous statement that top BCOA bargainers "declined to respond" to the union's contract offer, almost identical to a tentative agreement between the UMW and the Pittsburg & Midway Coal Mining Co.

Industry also "declined my invitation to participate in face-to-face negotiations with the UMW," he said.

The UMW bargaining council voted during the day to make the terms of the agreement with Pittsburg & Midway the pattern for an industrywide settlement, saying it would accept only minor changes. One union source said the 25-13 vote meant the terms of the pact were the bargaining council's "bottom-line" for settling the strike.

But the industry said: "...A settlement with one small surface mining company in the Midwest could not establish a pattern...which ignores the declining productivity and wildcat strike problems of the Eastern producers."

Dance for '55-plus' draws perky partners

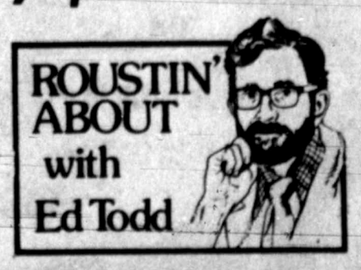

"Hi," said the strapping and perky woman, who had come to the party to dance. "I'm Ruth Rives. I'm from Odessa, and I'm having lots of fun."

So, it was fitting that on the next number, which just happened to be Bob Wills' "San Antonio Rose," she found herself swinging with the partner of her liking at the crowd-pleasing 55-Plus Dance Club weekly dance.

Piano player-trumpeter Pete Jensen and his Texas Brass and Strings Band wrapped up the jazzy Wills tune.

And Mrs. Rives and her one-dance partner exchanged mutual "thanks" for the fling. She "lost" herself in the winding-down dancers and presumably sought out her life's partner, hubby John, who can "cut a rug" just about as well as anybody who dances for fun, fellowship and exercise.

And fun, fellowship and exercise seems to be the motto of this swinging club, which puts the cork on booze.

That tends to make for more peaceable dancing and socializing. Ask most any 55-Club'er.

Drinking beer, wine or the "hard stuff" at a 55-Plus dance is taboo. Flirting's all right, though, since a bit of innocent flattery rarely embarrasses man or woman. It's often uplifting.

At this Tuesday night dance, 98 regular 55-Plus'ers and 19 guests showed up for a barbecued beef and

Hostage's ordeal ends with gun in his hands

By TOM GILLEM

SPRINGFIELD, Ohio (AP) — No one was more surprised than the police when hostage Robert Herrmann seized an opportunity to grab his abductor's gun and end a 30-hour ordeal with a bank robbery suspect.

"We had no idea he was going to do that," Lt. Roger Evans said in describing how Herrmann went for the .38-caliber pistol Wednesday night while Evans and an FBI agent sat in the back seat of the hostage car negotiating with the gunman, who was in the front seat.

"We had made our plans that if we got the opportunity I was to go for the weapon and the agent was going to go for the suspect," Evans said.

The abductor was identified as Byron R. Ball, 40, wanted for bank robberies in New Jersey and Ohio.

Evans said Ball had put the weapon down on the seat to light a cigarette when Herrmann made his move.

"The hostage took the gun and gave it to me and the agent grabbed him (Ball) and that was about the extent of it."

Ball was "surprised and shocked, too," Evans said. "He had been relaxed and I'm pretty sure he was fatigued because he had been up numerous hours. I don't think he had been asleep since this whole thing began."

Evans said Ball told him that "he couldn't give up because of his past life." Ball offered no resistance after his gun was taken.

Herrmann, a 38-year-old postal worker from West Manchester, told reporters he was treated "okay" by his abductor. "My greatest concern was last night with the boys," he said, referring to the first 17½ hours of the ordeal when his sons — Rob, 10, and Mike, 7 — also were held by Ball. They were released by Ball on Wednesday in exchange for another car provided by the FBI.

The capture ended an ordeal that began Tuesday when Ball commandeered Herrmann's car in Richmond, Ind., after a bank robbery.

Complaint investigation completed

The FBI has investigated a complaint by an 18-year-old Midland man that he was beaten by Midland police.

The investigation was routine, an FBI agent said Wednesday. "We investigate any complaint of undue force used by law enforcement personnel."

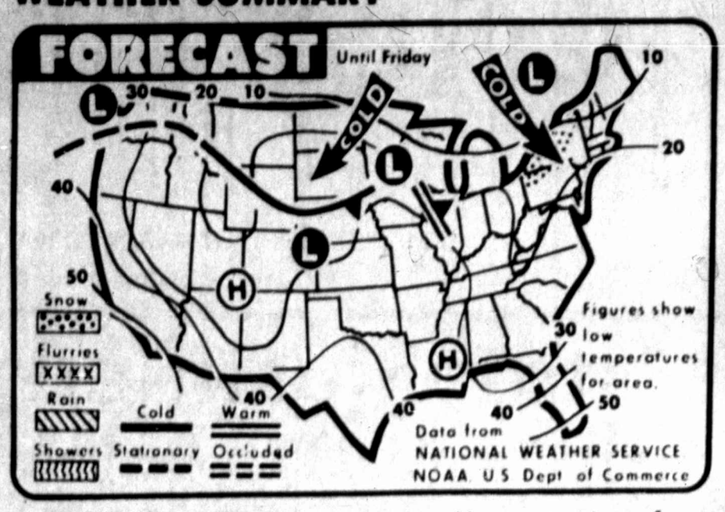

Results of the probe have been forwarded to the Justice Department in Washington, where some determination should be made within 30 days, the agent said.

Police Chief Wayne Gideon said there is no truth to the allegations made by Shannon Day, who was arrested Jan. 20 and subsequently charged with burglary in the alleged break-in of coin-operated vending machines at a laundromat.

A six-year probated prison sentence given Day in a previous burglary conviction was revoked Wednesday in Serving as panelists Wednesday at a Medicare workshop sponsored by Senior Services of Midland are, from left, Edna Taylor, supervisor of Medicare training for Blue Cross-Blue Shield of Texas; Sarah Reeves, Medicare training instructor for Blue Cross-Blue Shield; Al Fox, director of Medicare Beneficiary Relations for the Health Care Financing Administration, and Stella Brightman, staff assistant in the Medicare Bureau of that agency.

Help with Medicare forms offered

Medicare was designed to help senior citizens with their medical costs, but paperwork sometimes keeps the intended recipient from getting his doctor bills paid promptly.

Helping people get the forms filled out properly was the subject of a workshop in Midland Tuesday and Wednesday. The workshop was conducted by Stella Brightman, staff assistant for the Medicare Bureau of the Health Care Financing Administration.

Thw workshop was the first of a series planned for the five-state region which includes Texas.

Although the patient never is responsible for paperwork for hospital benefits, Ms. Brightman said, he sometimes must do his own form in order to collect on doctor bills.

Ms. Brightman said doctors can handle the entire transaction, but many don't — either because doing so limits the amount they can charge to "reasonable benefits" as defined by Medicare or because they don't want to have to fill out the required form.

Ms. Brightman said the doctor can be selective, and handle some visits and medical procedures through Medicare and not others.

But, so long as the doctor is registered with Medicare and has a "provider" number, the patient can be reimbursed for 80 percent of the "reasonable cost," she said

All that's necessary is filling out the top portion of the Medicare form and including an itemized bill, either the original bill or a photocopy, she said.

The purpose of the workshop in Midland, according to Ms. Brightman, was to train volunteers to help recipients fill out their forms and to answer questions about the services available from Medicare.

She said Medicare is available not only to those 65 and older, but also to those drawing disability payments under Social Security and those requiring kidney dialysis or transplant.

In order to have his doctor bills paid, the eligible person must have enrolled in that part of the program and pay the monthly premiums, currently $7.70 per month, Ms. Brightman said.

The premium is higher for those who enroll after the time they originally are eligible. Enrollment is allowed between Jan. 1 and March 31 each year, she said.

Ms. Brightman said Medicare claims in Texas are handled through Blue Cross-Blue Shield, which handles between 500,000 and 600,000 such claims monthly.

"As a whole, the claims process works well," she said, but errors in the way forms are filled out can delay payment in individual cases.

The volunteers trained at the workshop will be located at various locations in Midland, including Midland Memorial Hospital.

The workshop was sponsored by Senior Services of Midland, and was set up with the help of Midland Memorial Hospital.

drug trafficking by Panamanian officials, including Gen. Omar Torrijos' brother, "peripheral issues" and said he hoped the debate had put the allegations "to rest."

"These allegations, innuendoes nd insinuations have been, at best, remote issues peripheral to the essential question — are these treaties in the best interests of the United States," Byrd said.

On the other hand, Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., a treaty opponent who requested the closed-door session on the drug smuggling question, said he felt the debate was "useful, informative and entirely worthwhile."

"The subject of illegal activities by Panamanian leaders," Dole said, "was certainly relevant to the Panama Canal treaty issue, as it goes to the very heart of the question about their integrity, credibility and reliability with respect to treaty commitments."

During Tuesday's debate, senior members of the Senate Intelligence Committee reported that Panamanian leader Omar Torrijos was aware of allegations of drug dealing by his brother Moises and other Panamanian leaders and failed to stop it. The committee said there was no hard evidence that Torrijos himself was involved in drug trafficking.

"There is no evidence that would stand up in any United States court of law linking Gen. Torrijos to any illegal narcotics operation of any kind," Byrd told the Senate after the closed-door session.

When the vote was announced on rejection of the Allen motion, Byrd said with a grin, "I'm very pleased."

Weather stays typically mild

February seems to have settled into the typical West Texas winter — clear skies and mild afternoons.

The pattern is expected to continue at least through Friday with fair skies. Tonight's low should be in the mid-30s and Friday's high in the mid-70s, the weatherman said. Winds are expected to be light and variable tonight.

Wednesday's high was 68 degrees, and this morning's low was 29 degrees, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal.

Clear skies and cold temperatures were reported this morning throughout the area.

Skies remained clear across the Lone Star State early today, but temperatures remained well above the record-breaking levels of early Wednesday.

The only weather activity in the state during the pre-dawn hours was the slow movement of a weak cool front nearing the Texas coast. There was no precipitation with the front and no precipitation in the forecasts.

Forecasts called for mild afternoons and cool nights with no precipitation expected statewide.

cruise missile," O'Neill said.

White House lobbyist James Free said that most of the administration's congressional liaison people were thrown into action against the B-1 since the money bill touched many areas.

"Can you believe I got Jimmy Quillen and John Duncan (two conservative Republicans from Tennessee) to vote with us?" said Free, former clerk of the Tennessee House, tugging at a reporter's lapels.

Effective arguments, he said, were that further B-1 production would be a massive waste of taxpayer's money, that considerable research money still was going into the B-1, that the Senate was not going to back down and "there were plenty of other items in the bill to hang their hats on."

a hearing before District Judge Perry D. Pickett.

The FBI's probe of Day's police brutality complaint was made at the request of his mother, Day's lawyer said.

Day, in a public statement, said that on the morning of his arrest police officers began following him when he left a laundromat at Garfield and Florida streets where he had gone to buy a soft drink from a vending machine. The laundromat was closed.

Day said he was stopped by police and that one officer struck him with a flashlight.

Day said he was allowed to leave, and a few minutes later noticed another police car following his vehicle.

Day fled and a high-speed chase resulted, he said. When his car ran out of gasoline he fled through a field, where he was apprehended, he said. It was then, he alleged, that he was beaten.

Day was treated at Midland Memorial Hospital for a laceration on his head and injured ribs. Doctors' reports indicate they were told by police that Day suffered the injuries when he jumped from his moving car and was struck by the opened door.

Day was booked into City Jail and subsequently was admitted to Midland Memorial. Doctors' records of that three-day hospitalization have not been made available to reporters.

"I deny that he in any way had his civil rights violated," Gideon said Wednesday.

Day presently is free on $5,000 appeal bond.

covered-dish supper and for some dancing to Jensen's Western Swing music at the Veterans of Foreign Wars' Tall City (Post 7208) hall. Manager of the place is the accommodating Jack Leonard.

Jensen and his lively musicians were playing waltzes, fox trots, schottisches and heel-and-toes. The versatile Jensen, who comes from Big Spring, routinely plays the piano and the trumpet at the same time. The piano gets the attention of his left hand, and the brass instrument lays claim to his right. He sings, too, when he's not blowing the horn.

In addition to Wills' tunes, Jensen's group plays the likes of "Westphalia Waltz," "Mockingbird Song," "Salty Dog Rag," "Basin Street Blues," "Blue Spanish Eyes," "Tennessee Waltz," "Waltz Across Texas" and "I'm Looking for Tomorrows But Finding Yesterdays."

His repertoire also takes in "Cotton-Eyed Joe," "Jambalaya," "Good-Hearted Woman," "Remember Me," "Beer Barrel Polka," maybe "Milk Cow Blues" and you-name-'em swing tunes loaded with country and western spirit.

The band only shows up about once a month, generally on the third Tuesday. When the band's out of pocket, 55-Plus'ers will fill the VFW juke box with quarters and play those tunes Jensen otherwise might be reeling off.

Noma Talley certainly cottons to Jensen's playing.

"I don't think you can beat them," he said of the group. "Best band (around) for western music."

Then Talley, realizing the significance of the night, excused himself and headed for his wife, Anna, and for the dance floor.

"Today's my wife's birthday," he said. "So, if you'll excuse me . . . ."

Perhaps one of the club's strongest and most vocal supporters is affable spinster Clara Jesse, who fondly calls herself the club's "official greeter." That's what many of the men folks call her, she said.

"This is kind of a special night to me," Miss Jesse said. "I started this dance club two years ago, and I'm the only one who has 100 percent attendance . . . for two years."

Later, she owned up to having some cohorts, such as Lucille Dunn and Pauline Green, who helped get the club started. Ethel Wicks was a big help, too.

Miss Jesse is a retired beautician and is a licensed masseuse. "But I don't practice (massages), except on my relatives."

"I think it's good for the elderly to dance," she said. "I feel that they need the fellowship and exercise."

From what goes on the dance floor, it's obvious that the "guys and dolls" enjoy the socializing, however it's justified.

Dancing partners and some singles, such as Miss Jesse, come from all over to dance at Midland, said regular dancer Margaret Rhea.

They come from Andrews, Stanton, Lamesa, Odessa, Big Spring, Rankin and so on, said Mrs. Rhea, who is the club's secretary-treasurer. Ivan Hoover is the club's president, and Reed Johnson is vice president.

"I'm retired," said Mrs. Rhea, whose husband, John, is her dancing partner. "I'm not hurting, but I'm not wealthy," she allowed. "I'm just a lady of leisure."

Right now, the club has about 170 members, and many of them get together most every Tuesday night for dancing and light snacks, soft drinks and coffee. That covered-dish supper the other night was an exceptional treat for the 55-Plus'ers.

Like most clubs, the dues are nominal, 50 cents a month, and the membership represents a typical cross-section of working, retired and leisurely folks.

"We have a millionaire. We have ditch diggers," Mrs. Rhea said. "We have a mixed group."

Award goes against use of Laetrile

The Los Angeles Times

ATLANTA — In a verdict that pleased neither side, a federal jury Wednesday awarded an Alabama cancer victim's family $15,000 in their $6 million malpractice suit against U.S. Rep. Larry P. McDonald, D-Ga., who is also a urologist, for having treated the patient with Laetrile.

The three-week trial was believed to be the first legal challenge to a doctor's prescription of Laetrile, the controversial cancer drug extracted from apricot kernels.

Laetrile, which is not legal in Georgia, has been legalized in 14 other states, but has been termed "worthless" as a cancer treatment by the organized medical community.

The jury awarded the family $15,000 for medical expenses, but it chose not to award punitive damages.

Reached on Capitol Hill in Washington, McDonald said he had no comment and would appeal the verdict. His attorney, Hunter Allen, had told reporters here that the verdict constituted a finding of "negligence" by the congressman in a narrow legal sense, but he added: "If you're going to lose, it certainly beats the $6 million."

"Justice was not done!" fumed Ruth Scott, the plaintiff and widow of John L. Scott, a retired Birmingham, Ala., postal worker who died of cancer in 1974. She and her daughter were hastily driven away by car from reporters outside Atlanta's U.S. District Courthouse.

The plaintiffs' attorney, L. Burke Lewis, who had argued that Scott's life was "shortened" when McDonald used Laetrile instead of other treatments, said that Scott's family may appeal.

Defense attorney Allen said he was "pleased" that the jury of three men and three women did not find McDonald liable for three other claims in the four-count complaint by Scott's widow and two children.

A co-defendant, Doctors Memorial Hospital of Atlanta, was cleared of all liability by the jurors, who had deliberated for five hours starting Tuesday afternoon, with an overnight recess, before returning the unanimous verdict.

What effect will the verdict have on the estimated 40,000 users of Laetrile nationwide?

None at all, Allen said. "I think the Laetrile issue is obviously such an emotional issue that what this jury did or did not do," he said, "is not going to influence one iota any patient who's convinced that Laetrile is the way to go."

But a spokesman for the American Medical Association said he believed the verdict would have some national significance.

"It might well have an inhibiting effect on some physicians," Richard Krause, an AMA lawyer, said in a telephone interview from the organization's Chicago headquarters. "It also could have an effect on users of Laetrile. They could associate with a family which now has sued a physician and has been successful in at least claiming some damages."

Laetrile has been strongly opposed by both the U.S. Food and Drug Administration and the American Cancer Society.

Interstate commerce of the drug has been outlawed by the federal government. But 14 states have passed laws permitting doctors to prescribe it for patients. They are: Alaska, Arizona, Delaware, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Louisiana, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Oklahoma, Oregon, Texas and Washington.

Beyond the medical arguments, the trial also had political overtones. McDonald, a practicing urologist in Marietta, Ga., until 1974 when he was first elected to Congress, is a member of the ultra-conservative John Birch Society, a leading advocate of laetrile as cancer therapy. Scott, the patient, was also a Birch Society member.

During the trial, McDonald was censured by the Democratic committee of Northwest Georgia's 7th District, which he represents, "for his outrageous and unconstructive conduct...and, most of all, for the dishonorable and despicable act of calling himself a Democrat." McDonald countered that the committee's action was "illegal," but he said that it may help his re-election campaign this year.

The malpractice trial was sometimes bizarre and theatrical.

The plaintiffs' attorneys dared McDonald to eat 50 or 100 apricot kernels — from which Laetrile is derived—they had brought into the courtroom. McDonald refused, agreeing to take injections of Laetrile, instead, to show that it is harmless, but that offer was never pursued.

U.S. District Judge Richard C. Freeman presided at the trial.

Letter costly

DETROIT (AP) — A private suburban collector paid $3,400 for a peek into the love life of author Ernest Hemingway.

Hemingway specified in his will that his private letters were not to be published, but a 1944 love letter from the author of "The Old Man and The Sea" went on the auction block for the benefit of the Detroit Public Library during a rare book auction sponsored by friends of the library.

The author's four-page letter was handwritten by flashlight on the night of July 31, 1944, to his future wife, Mary, while he was a war correspondent for Collier's in northern France.

A tremendous victory

The United States Supreme Court made the news in a big way Tuesday, with a decision which could have tremendous impact in helping to ease the nation's energy shortage.

The justices refused to hear an appeal by Suffolk County, N.Y., officials and a group called Concerned Citizens of Montauk to delay oil and natural gas exploration and production by six companies in the Atlantic Ocean off New York, New Jersey and Delaware.

The action thus cleared the way for long-overdue offshore drilling for oil and natural gas in the three-state region.

This represents a tremendous victory for the nation as a whole. It is unfortunate that the matter has been delayed this long. It is hoped that drilling will begin as promptly as possible, realizing, of course, that it isn't an overnight, inexpensive proposition in any sense. This is why the undue delay has been so costly. It requires a lot of time to explore for, discover and develop an oil field, particularly offshore.

A massive portion of the Outer Continental Shelf known as the Baltimore Canyon is involved in the controversy. The Interior Department, in 1976, sold oil and natural gas leases in the area.

And last November, the government issued permits to six firms to drill exploratory wells within the 867,750-acre area. It is said that some of the wells would be within 60 miles of New York City.

Reviewing the situation, it was as early as 1975 that Suffolk County and the Montauk group, along with other local governments and environmental organizations launched their opposition to the plan.

One would think that as cold as it has been in that part of the country the last several winters that residents long since would have demanded that a search be made for oil and gas reserves both onshore and offshore in the immediate area. But there again, the environmental extremists outshouted and outmaneuvered the cold, silent majority, thus causing the ridiculous, expensive delay, while using Texas' natural gas at prices cheaper than Texans pay for it.

Even before the 1976 sales, opponents of the drilling program won a short-lived victory when U.S. District Judge Jack Weinstein of New York ruled that a 2,000-page environmental impact statement prepared by the Interior Department was inadequate.

The ruling, however, was reversed by the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and the lease sale was held on Aug. 17, 1976. But even before the sale could be held, a last-minute effort was made to have it postponed. The plea was rejected by Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall.

The 93 tracts leased to the highest bidders brought in $1.1 billion, plus rentals until the discovery of oil and gas, and then royalties of up to one-third the value of any oil or gas extracted. Not a bad deal for the government, but it could be an even better and more appreciated deal for people of that area and beyond.

But the opponents would not give up, and neither would Judge Weinstein. He again ruled for the opponents in another way-out charge against the government, and again the 2nd Circuit Court reversed his ruling.

The opponents still were not through. In appealing to the Supreme Court they claimed that the appeals court decision "clears the way for profound and irrevocable alteration of the Mid-Atlantic seascape and landscape despite the admittedly major risk of oil pollution to the Atlantic fishing grounds and the risk of oil fouling the ocean beaches and parks .... in America's most densely populated coastal area." Hogwash!

They should have visited drilling and production operations off the Gulf Coast before making such charges.

ART BUCHWALD

Art Buchwald

WASHINGTON — The other night after we watched the evening news my wife said, "Would you explain to me what's going on in the Horn of Africa?" It was a very reasonable question and it showed she trusted me.

"The Marxist junta of Ethiopia," I said, "is fighting the Marxist junta in Somalia over the Ogaden desert which Somali rebels have invaded."

"I thought we were friends of Ethiopia," my wife said.

"We were before Haile Selassie was overthrown. For a long while we were against the Somalis because they had allowed the Soviets to use their ports in the Indian Ocean. But then the Somalis kicked the Russians out, and we made a promise to arm them in their fight with Ethiopia. When the Soviets were booted out of Somalia they decided to help the Ethiopians kick the Somalis out of the Ogaden desert."

"How did they do it?" she wanted to know.

"By bringing in the Cubans to fight with the Ethiopians against the Somalis. They also gave the Ethiopians a billion dollars in arms. In that way the Soviets hope to shift the balance of power in East Africa."

Her eyes started to glaze.

"Western allies in the area, particularly Iran and Saudi Arabia, are worried that if Ethiopia becomes strong, it will not only drive the Somalis out of the desert but will invade Somalia itself. But the United States has been assured by the Soviets that they won't permit this to happen. At the same time, we don't want to give Somalia arms because we're afraid it will escalate the war."

My wife started dozing off and I had to poke her gently in the ribs.

"What really complicates the situation is that Israel is also helping Ethiopia, even if it means they have to be on the side of the Soviets."

"What has Israel got against Somalia?"

"They don't have anything against Somalia except that it affects their shipping into the Red Sea which they're afraid could become an 'Arab lake' since Somalia is being supported by the majority of Moslem countries, except for South Yemen."

"What are the Cubans doing in Ethiopia?"

"They're the Hessians of the Horn of Africa. The Soviets don't want to do the fighting because that might get us involved on the Somalian side. So they let the Cubans do it instead. Since the Cuban pilots are tied up flying MIG fighter planes in Africa, the Soviet pilots are flying MIG fighters in Cuba."

She was starting to close her eyes again. "Let's go to bed," she said.

"Wait," I said. "You have to get the whole picture. Not only are the Ethiopians fighting the Somalis, but they are also fighting the Eritreans, who want their independence from Addis Ababa. You see Eritrea was an Italian colony until Ethiopia took it over after World War II.

"The Arabs are supporting Eritrea which is predominantly Moslem. Kenya, on the other hand, is supporting Ethiopia even though they hate the pro-Moscow regime that is now in power."

"Could we talk about this in the morning?" she wanted to know.

"It's not that simple," I told her. "The Soviets are not investing in Africa because of the climate. They hope to get airfields in Ethiopia for their Backfire bomber, which would be a threat to Western oil lifelines."

"What can we do about it?" my wife asked.

"Sit tight until Andy Young settles the problems of Rhodesia."

"Can I go to bed now?"

"Yes," I said. "I'll sit up and watch the eleven o'clock news and wake you up in case there is any change in the situation."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Carter changes felt in Pentagon

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON—It has been a tragedy of our times that the Pentagon has actively aided and abetted the rise of military dictatorships in the Western hemisphere. There have been U. S. whisperings into the ears of Latin American generals who have suddenly seized power.

An influential clique of generals and colonels in the Pentagon could also be counted on to circle the wagons protectively around any Latin American dictator whose U. S. benefits were challenged.

But now President Carter is breaking down the "old soldier" relationships that have existed so long between our military brass and the Latin American despots. "There's a new wind blowing," said a top State Department official. A White House source agreed. "The trend is clear," he said.

During the backstage budget planning, the Pentagon cooperated in setting human rights guidelines for military aid recipients. A source said all arms, weapons and training programs where evaluated on human rights terms.

There was some resistance from those who have built their military careers upon promoting arms sales to other nations. But a participant in the inter-agency budget sessions told us: "The Pentagon has come around to accepting that we can have a policy that serves both our defense commitments and the President's human rights concerns."

The change in attitude is an historic development. For years, the Defense Department has maintained military advisers in most Latin American countries. They have developed close personal ties with the top military brass who have taken over these countries.

In 1963, only four small Latin American nations—El Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua and Paraguay—were ruled by military dictators. Then Brazil fell to a junta in 1964. Panama and Peru went military in 1968. The armed forces took over Bolivia in 1969, Ecuador in 1972, Chile and Uraguay in 1973, Argentina in 1976.

And behind most of the military dictatorships could be found former classmates in the Pentagon. The military rulers usually came out of training schools in the United States or the School of the Americas established by the Pentagon in the Panama Canal Zone.

As evidence of the new attitude toward Latin America's tin-pot tyrants, we have been watching the Pentagon's dealings with the harsh regime that rules Uruguay. Last June, a top U. S. military man, Maj. Gen. Richard E. Cavazos, bluntly informed his Uruguayan counterpart that further aid was jeopardized unless his government rectified human rights abuses.

There was a significant sequel in December involving Gen. Dennis P. McAuliffe, son of the late World War II hero, Gen. Anthony McAuliffe, who at Bastogne rejected a German surrender demand with the terse reply of "Nuts." As head of the U. S. Southern Command, the son is now the senior U. S. military officer dealing with Latin America.

On a special mission to Uruguay, he delivered a message straight from the shoulder that the Pentagon is behind President Carter on human rights. In a toast at a luncheon hosted by Uruguay's defense minister and other junta officials, McAuliffe said that U. S. military men had a legal and moral obligation to support human rights.

The desire for liberty is universal and irrepressible, he said. The degree to which the Uruguayan government supports this cause would have direct bearing on future relations, he declared.

As McAuliffe concluded a toast wishing progress and prosperity for the two nations, the senior host officials rose and stalked out, visibly bristling. Later than evening, the top military officers in the Uruguayan army boycotted a U.S. embassy reception for McAuliffe. Government-controlled newspapers hotly denounced what they called his "interference" in Uruguay's internal affairs.

Under Richard Nixon's foreign policy, dictatorships flourished throughout Latin America. He was interested in their commitment against communism. It didn't seem to matter to him that governments like Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Paraguay and Uruguay are governed by terror and torture. But President Carter is changing the old attitudes.

SALARY CAPER: With great fanfare, a claque of congressmen banged on the doors of the Supreme Court recently in an attempt to roll back last year's $12,500 congressional payhike.

When the court refused to listen, most of the 20 congressmen returned their raise to the government or donated it to some worthy cause. But a few congressmen, after receiving favorable media coverage for their part in the payhike protest, quietly pocketed the extra money.

Among them is Rep. William Cohn, R-Me., who is now seeking a Senate seat. Explained a spokesman: "Cohen figures he's worth as much as the rest of those guys. a congressman from Maine should be paid the same as everybody else."

Other congressmen who supported the effort to roll back the pay raise but quietly kept the money are Reps. Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., Romano Mazzoli, D-Ky., and Clarence Miller, R-Ohio. Mazzoli said he had favored the pay increase all along but had joined the protest because he felt salary hikes should require a vote.

Reps. Nick Joe Rahall, D-W. Va., and James Cleveland, R-N. H., also accepted the pay raise but said they will give some of the money to charity. They refused to say how much they are giving or which charities will receive the money.

NICK THIMMESCH

Columnist presents 'human rights in perspective'

WASHINGTON — We have lived with the promise and perils of President Carter's "Human Rights" program in foreign policy for one year now. The quick conclusions are: The Republic is durable enough to survive it; Mr. Carter is pragmatic enough to have tempered his Calvinistic impulse to preach to, or punish, nations he deems not up to standard.

Well-intentioned international crusades of the sort the President launched are risky indeed. For the United States to step off its deserved promontory, (in terms of providing a good measure of freedom and justice to its people) into a pulpit in order to preach to everybody else, is to create sticky relationships and diminish our reputation.

In the real world, as Freedom House carefully charts every year, only 35 percent of the nations enjoy our good measure of freedom. The others live in authoritarian regimes experiencing few or only a fair number of civil rights and liberties, or in totalitarian countries ranging from Hungary and Poland to the blood-soaked regimes of Kampuchea (Cambodia) or Uganda.

The U.S. gets into trouble when Administration zealots fail to see that a power-balance is needed to keep the world's bad actors in line, and that it would be just plain dumb to beat down one of our friends — in the name of human rights — and thus allow one of the world's monsters to replace it with a regime totally repressive, and allowing no change ever.

For our security and for the world's well-being, we must remember that the greatest threats to freedom are the Soviet Union, Red China, other Communist states, and the terrorists and guerrilla forces they spawn and supply.

But the Administration and the Congress, spurred by Carter, have chastised and punished nations which are in danger of capitulating to totalitarian nations and forces.

South Korea's government limits its citizens' freedoms, but the most vigorous native dissenters to the Park regime would join with him to fight North Korea's brutal Communist armies if they invade it. South Korea, in its worst moments, is infinitely preferable to North Korea's slavery.

Communist China has been lionized by all manner of lame-brained visitors taken on carefully conducted tours. The reality of Communist China is that it is a severely repressive state which kills and punishes people in classic totalitarian fashion. Its opposite, Taiwan, is not yet a model of democracy, but it stands in wholesome relief to the Peking regime and is getting better every day.

Chile is far from a full-blown democracy, but it is leagues better than Cuba. Chile still holds a handful of political prisoners, but there are many thousands of political prisoners languishing in Cuban jails. The Cubans have no means to eject Castro. Chile can change, and is.

Consider the citizenry in the "liberated" states of Asia and Africa. They now have far less freedom than they enjoyed under Western colonial rule. Who can make out a case for the loss of liberty and the plentitude of terror in Uganda, Angola, Mozambique, Ethiopia, or the Congo Republic?

Why are those one-time admirers of the revolutionaries in Cambodia, Laos and Vietnam — the Bella Abzugs, Jane Fondas and Ramsey Clarks — so quiet now? Those nations kill and imprison their people in quantum numbers compared to the shakey regimes which preceded them. At least there were free elections and a free press in South Vietnam.

And while the State Department castigates Israel, the Philippines, South Africa, Chile, Brazil, El Salvador and Nicaragua — to name some — for human rights violations, they should announce, loud and clear, that regrettably, there are circumstances which cause nations to treat subversives and terrorists roughly.

It is startling for some blind or chauvinistic fans of Israel, which has no peer in parliamentary democracy, to hear that Arabs are beaten up, tortured, and questionably detained in that beleaguered nation. But Israel is only human. When terrorists blow up schools and kill innocent people, those suspected of these crimes are not going to be treated like Oxford scholars.

The same holds for the aforementioned other nations, though none affords the amount of freedom Israel does. But all must contend with murderous attacks by terrorists and guerrillas.

However repressive Somoza's Nicaragua, his villages are often victims of murdering Sandinstas. Do his federal police retaliate? Yes.

There are signs that Mr. Carter has backed off considerably from the righteous prose he delivered at Notre Dame University last May. One hopes that was only a naive speech. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, in unintentional contradiction, had already warned against a "self-righteous and strident" U.S. posture, and talked sensibly about the "limits of our power and wisdom."

We can also hope that politicians like Sen. Frank Church of Idaho (he had ambitions to be on the 1976 Democratic national ticket) and Minnesota's Congressman Donald Fraser (desperate to get the late Sen. Humphrey's seat), restrain their urges on the human rights question. Their uneven, sometimes demagogic approach, only hurts nations which aren't perfect but at least have a chance, and helps the monsters.

Ernest W. Lefevre, at Georgetown University, writing on "The Trivialization of Human Rights," points out that aggressive war and tyranny are the chief enemies of freedom and justice, and that these latter qualities are the fruit of long, natural growth, sustained by religious values, courage, restraint, and respect for law. It cannot be exported like Coca-Cola.

Seattle's favorable publicity called 'magazine jinx'

SEATTLE (AP) — What does it take to become the darling of the magazine world? How do you make the cover of Time, Atlantic and others — without even trying?

That's what residents of Washington state are trying to understand.

Some Washingtonians have not appreciated story after story about "God's country," as Atlantic called the region in 1976. They don't like it when a magazine like Town and Country says Seattle is "the All-American city everyone dreams about and almost nobody finds."

A blitz of favorable publicity is bound to bring unwanted newcomers, they say. Newly inaugurated Mayor Charles Royer has worried publicly about a magazine-cover jinx.

Though national publications began ballyhooing the Northwest in 1975, 1977 was the big publicity year.

For instance, New West magazine declared Seattle the best big city in the West during 1977. Time's cover story said Seattle "has none of the hassles and almost all of the amenities of many bigger American cities ... Seattle is a city that works ... and works very well."

Time added that fringe benefits of Puget Sound residents include "a picture window view of a passing submarine, a rising mountain, a rippling lake or inlet."

Family Circle decided in October that Seattle "is the No. 1 city in the nation for living a good life."

Not all the news has been good. The Wall Street Journal observed Washington has the nation's most regressive tax system, and Town and Country called Seattle "squeaky clean," but noted it has the nation's scond highest suicide and alcoholism rates.

It's too soon to tell if all the attention is attracting immigrants, says Kazuo Watanabe, director of the state Department of Commerce and Economic Development. Royer notes Seattle actually lost 3,500 residents last year.

But the state's population swelled by 70,000 to 3.7 million last year, and employment increased by 84,000 jobs between September 1976 and September 1977.

Its southern neighbor, Oregon, which traditionally runs a tongue-in-cheek campaign urging people to visit and spend money but not to stay, counted a population increase of 55,000.

Washington ranks 28th in population density, which means its vast acres of farmland, mountains, desert and forest provide more elbow space per person than most states. But two-thirds of its people crowd into the Puget Sound basin, an urban sprawl that includes the cities of Seattle, Everett, Tacoma, Olympia, Bellevue and Bremerton.

Man blamed for short-eared owl's rapid decline

By DAVID HAWLEY

WORTHINGTON, Minn. (AP) — Flying mousetraps completed their migratory flights across the Upper Midwest in January after stopping in rural areas for quick winter snacks.

Among the larger winged predators is the short-eared owl, a long-winged bird of deceptive size. As in-the-field mousers go, it's a champion.

The prairie hunter is one of the most widely-distributed land birds anywhere, with a range that includes the entire Northern Hemisphere of the United States, Russia and Europe, south to Italy and the Mediterranean, the Western Pacific and Southeast Asia.

Despite that range, few bird-watchers see the short-eared owl because its numbers are on the decline, says Bog Janssen, a part-time ornithologist and author of books on Minnesota birds.

The tawny-colored short-ear, like most owls, looks much larger because of a prodigious number of feathers. While the average short-eared owl weighs little more than one pound, its puffy feathers and 4-foot wingspan make it look much larger.

"That's one of the reasons so many get shot," said Bud Tordoff, director of the Bell Museum of Natural History at the University of Minnesota.

Another reason for the owl's vulnerability to death by shooting is its methodical method of hunting. Its moth-like, airy flight brings the owl down low over fields and meadows, searching for field mice and other small rodents.

As a prairie hunter, the short-eared owl is accustomed to flying in the open and has little fear of man, Tordoff said.

That, combined with its deceptive size, makes it an easy target for farmers who worry about stolen chickens or other barnyard fowl.

"That's a mistake, because the short-ear hasn't the strength to lift much more than a mouse," said Tordoff. "A chicken would be too formidable an opponent."

Death by shooting is one of the secondary worries for conservationists, who say most predatory birds are falling victim to habitat destruction.

As marshes are drained and plains areas plowed for the planting of crops, the nesting and hunting grounds for owls are growing steadily smaller.

Texas Cannon Ball's junkets now depend solely upon Amtrak

By KEN HERMAN

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — James Stillman's used car sleeps 12, has a full-sized dining room and has never burned a gallon of gas.

Stillman, 74, bought the luxury car in 1976 for a measly $65,000. He heard about it through a magazine advertisement.

"I wasn't looking for any railroad car. But my brother saw an ad for it in Trains magazine. He said, 'You're always going up to New York with your cats and dogs and children. You can take them all in that,' " the retired physician recalled.

So he headed for Chicago, looked over the vintage railroad car and "in a weak moment of my brain called my broker to see if I had $65,000 in cash."

The private car is now the entire rolling stock of Stillman's Texas Cannon Ball Railroad. For $1.50 per mile Amtrak will haul Stillman's car on any of their routes—usually.

"I thought it would be great. I could go hither and thither but I found out it's not that easy with all those damn regulations and specifications," he said.

But despite the paperwork — he must file his travel plans two months in advance — the Cannon Ball has rolled on about a dozen trips.

The vintage car was built in 1922 for the president of the Wabash Railroad. It's fitted with two bedrooms, several bathrooms, a dining car and a sitting room.

The $1.50 per mile Amtrak fee is only part of the rising prices that make private rail travel expensive.

It costs $50 per night in a railroad yard, usually in a decaying part of town. Each time the Cannon Ball is switched to another train it costs Stillman $160. And because of the lack of passenger train service in the Rio Grande Valley, the car must be hauled by freight train to Houston or San Antonio for trips.

The 90-ton car sits on a siding in Port Brownsville when not in use.

The longest sojourn to date carried the Stillmans from Houston to Chicago to Toronto to Montreal to New York to Washington D. C. to New Orleans and back to Texas.

"Most rail travel in the East goes through the most boring country but in the West it's beautiful," he said.

The train took its name from a railroad run on Stillman's youth in New York. The Long Island Cannon Ball once carried a 6-year-old James Stillman from Brooklyn to Montauk Point on Long Island.

Rail travel offers a leisurely pace Stillman said cannot be found in the friendly skies.

The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — The Carter administration formally abandoned Wednesday its blanket condemnation of an internal settlement in Rhodesia between the white minority and moderate black nationalists with whom Ian Smith's government has been negotiating.

In a statement issued by the State Department, last week's announcement in Salisbury that agreement is near — dismissed by Washington at the time as a recipe for civil war — was hailed as "a significant step." Similar praise was issued over the weekend by the British Foreign Office, which was under political pressure from Conservatives for its rejection of a Rhodesian settlement from which Soviet-supported guerrilla groups would be excluded.

But the U.S. statement, while following the British lead in opening the door to recognition of a deal between Smith and the moderates, was far from an outright endorsement of the still-incomplete and ambiguous negotiations in Salisbury.

Carefully drafted over the past few days after a high-level White House meeting Friday on southern Africa policy, the statement clearly was designed to have it both ways:

—Encourage Smith and the moderates by praising the unexpected progress they have been making.

— At the same time reassert the administration's faith in its own previous policy of holding out for a role for the Patriotic Front guerrilla forces.

That policy had been embodied in a joint U.S.-British plan calling for dismantlement of the Smith government, free and fair elections in which the Patriotic Front could take part, and eventual absorption of the guerrillas into the armed forces of the Independent Zimbabwe, as the new black-majority state would be called.

As a practical matter, that joint plan has been dead for months. Its provisions for a peaceful transition to an impartially supervised elected government has been rejected by the Patriotic Front, and its call for guerrilla participation has been rejected by Smith.

The plan has in theory been endorsed, however, by the key "front-line" African states from whose territory the guerrillas have been operating and receiving Soviet weapons: Zambia, Mozambique, Tanzania and Botswana.

Their support for a peaceful settlement is still regarded by the U.S. administration as crucial if a civil war — with its potential for broadening Soviet and Cuban participation and possible South African intervention — is to be avoided.

Accordingly, Wednesday's statement carefully kept the Anglo-American plan alive, even while recognizing that the talks in Salisbury have a serious chance of succeeding if only the outside guerrilla forces encouraged by the front line states let that happen.

"In consultation with all the parties concerned," the statement said, "The British and American governments developed a plan ... We believe that this plan offers an opportunity for the people of Zimbabwe to choose their own leadership fairly and openly. It sets a standard against which any settlement proposal should be measured.

"To the extent that last week's Salisbury announcement offers a possibility of an early end to the white minority domination of the political process, it is a significant step," the statement continued.

But it went on to point out that basic details of an agreement are still unknown and that it is too early to decide whether the "standards" are met.

"We are sticking to the principles of our proposal," one official explained. "We do not feel we can condemn any particular effort to solve the problem — such as Smith's. But the more answers we get about the internal settlement, the more confused we are. We don't even know if they have something in writing."

Top administration policymakers met at the White House last Friday at a Policy Review Committee session to discuss the likelihood of an internal settlement in Rhodesia. Among those present were Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance, President Carter's National Security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski, Assistant Secretary of State Richard M. Moose and Andrew Young, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations.

The day before the session, Young, a key figure in framing Africa policy, had publicly dismissed the Salisbury announcement as a recipe for a "black-on-black civil war." Likewise, State Department spokesman Kenneth Brown, had relied on past policy guidance to reject what little was known of the Salisbury negotiations as failing to meet requirements.

Lions hear program on public education

Public education, with emphasis on the Midland public school system, was the program subject at the Wednesday noon meeting of the Midland Downtown Lions Club in the Midland Hilton.

Lion Payton Cook, director of pupil and community services for Midland public schools, spoke briefly concerning goals and achievements of public education at various levels. He cited the various advancements made in teaching procedures and techniques in the Midland system. He said the Midland system will spend approximately $23 million, or about $1,500 per child, a year in the education of Midland's youths.

He introduced Carolyn Fitzgerald, communications coordinator of the Midland public school system, who presented an interesting, educational slide program showing some of the many and vaired programs being used throughout the school system.

She said the overall program is designed to assure quality education for all youths enrolled in the public schools.

The club program, arranged by Dr. Douglas Brown, was presented in line with the upcoming observance of Public Schools Week, beginning March 6.

An induction ceremony for 17 new club members was conducted by Lester Van Pelt Jr., a past president of the club.

Attorney says Manpower probe may have 'statewide implications'

AUSTIN, Texas (AP)—One of four U.S. attorneys in Texas says alleged misuse of federal Manpower funds may involve officials and job-training programs statewide.

"There may be statewide implications," said U.S. Attorney John Hannah of Tyler following a briefing Wednesday by investigators at the federal courthouse here.

All four U.S. attorneys in Texas, or their representatives, were among about 30 persons briefed by the FBI at a closed-door session.

"We were briefed on the CETA matter," said U.S. Attorney Tony Canales of Houston — one of the more loquacious participants in the afternoon briefing. Canales would say no more.

CETA is the federal Comprehensive Employment Training Act, which funnels tens of millions of dollars into Texas each year to provide training and public service jobs for unemployed persons.

The FBI has made it known it is looking into alleged irregularities involving CETA funds in Austin, the lower Rio Grande Valley, El Paso and the Laredo area. There also have been reports of an investigation centered in Tyler.

"I don't plan any immediate contact with a grand jury," said U.S. Attorney Jamie Boyd of San Antonio, whose district includes territory where several investigations are being conducted.

Joseph O'Connell, the FBI's special agent-in-charge at San Antonio, led the briefing, Hannah said.

Two representatives of the U.S. Department of Labor, which administers the CETA program, also were present.

In December, FBI men seized records of the Workers Assistance Program, operated by the United Labor Legislative Committee, lobbying arm of the Texas AFL-CIO.

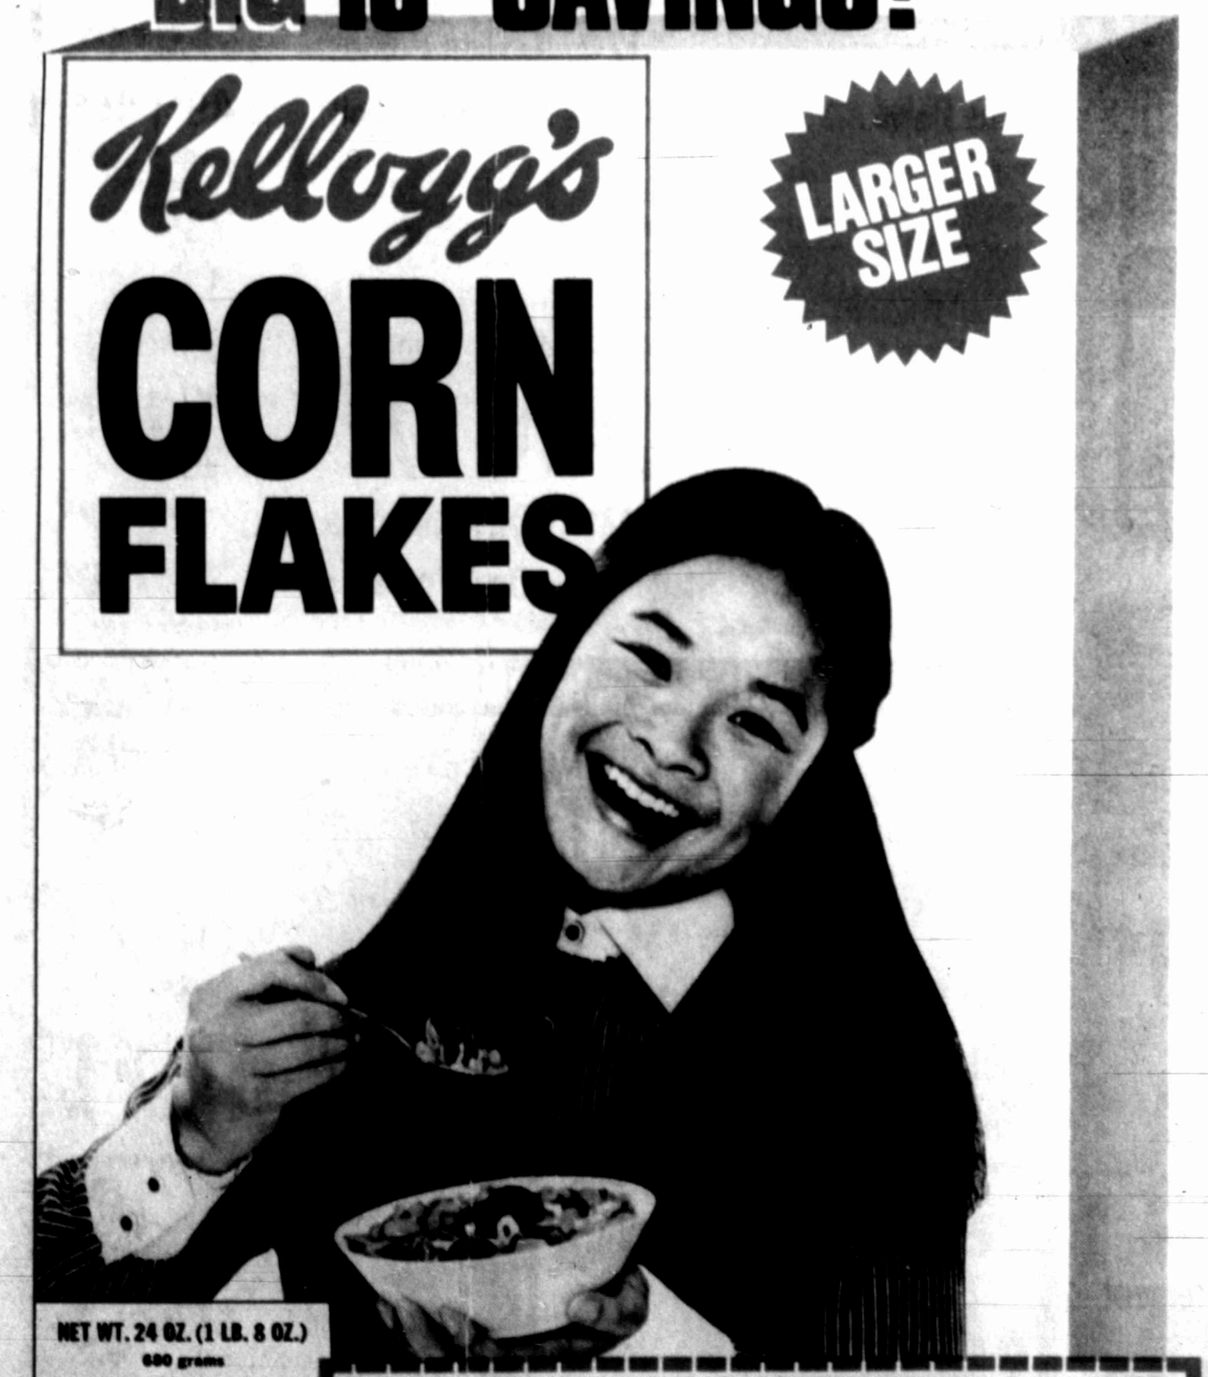

State indictments have been returned against leaders of a job training program operated by the Harlingen local of the plumbers and pipefitters union.

Heads of both programs have been politically active on behalf of Gov. Dolph Briscoe, who approved their CETA grants. Boyd, a Democrat, said political implications of the probe were not discussed.

Minicomputers to bring new breed of automobiles

DETROIT (AP) — It will tell you how many miles you can go before you run out of gas. It can tell you what time you'll finally weave your way through rush hour traffic to your front door. And it can tell you why the steering wheel keeps pulling left.

The automobile minicomputer is coming — a complicated, mobile version of the pocket calculator.

Push a button and a digital read-out can give your gas mileage or find a radio station. Push another button and a minicomputer can tell the engine what to do.

In a relatively short time — 1981 is seen as the model year when electronics become fullblown on automobiles — minicomputers could control dozens of functions, including transmissions, valves and instrument panels. They could alert drivers to an overheated engine, brake line wear or low tire pressure. Radar could apply the brakes.

"By 1985, we might have quite a brain in the automobile," says Earl W. Meyer, Chrysler's chief engineer for engine electronics. "This is going to be a whole lot bigger than the automatic transmission," says E.R. Karrer, Ford's engineering vice president.

All this stems from the government's mandate for better fuel economy and cleaner emissions, which has forced the automobile industry into its biggest technological advance since the 1950s.

The motorist will get better gas mileage and consume less fuel while driving a simpler, safer car that's more easily maintained. Emissions will be cleaner, and theoretically, so will the air.

It will also be a bonanza for the electronics industry, which by some estimates will snare $1 billion worth of auto business by 1981. Much of the cost will be passed along to the consumer.

Most engineers don't talk about that, but some industry analysts say that by 1981, the computers could add $400 to the cost of a car, and Ford says that by 1990, electronics will be 10 percent of the cost of an automobile. But engineers say electronics is the only way to meet government demands.

Critics say automakers were tardy in embracing electronics.

"That's an unfair indictment," says John T. Auman, a senior engineer at General Motors Corp. He said the electronics industry had to struggle to adapt to the automobile, noting that pocket calculators don't have to work at below-zero temperatures on bumpy roads at 60 mph.

The principal device involved in the revolution is the microprocessor, the principle of which is used in calculators, watches, telephones, cash registers and other everyday items.

It contains a computer chip the size of a finger tip that can be programmed for almost anything and knows logic and arithmetic. Its comparable predecessors would have filled the trunk and back seat of a car.

Under the hood, engineers concentrate on spark plugs and carburetors to meet demands for fuel economy and clean emissions — demands engineers say are conflicting without the precision of electronics.

Here's a partial list of what's going on:

—An electronic "feedback" carburetor is being tried on 30,000 1978 Ford Pintos and Bobcats in California. It monitors levels of oxygen in combustion exhaust gases and continually adjusts the fuel-air mixture to the proper ratio for efficient fuel burning and fewer pollutants. Engineers say the carburetor as it's known today eventually will be defunct.

—Chrysler is refining its "lean burn" system, begun on 1976 models, in which a computer regulates the firing of spark plugs. Chrysler has put lean burn on all V-8 models and the new four-cylinder Omni and Horizon.

—GM put its first microprocessor on the 1977 Oldsmobile Toronado. It reads engine temperature, altitude and other operating conditions and adjusts spark timing accordingly.

—Ford's 1978 Lincoln Versaille has a computer that regulates both spark timing and the rate at which exhaust gases are recirculated to cut down nitrogen oxide emissions.

There are also more visible effects.

For those bothered by squeaking grinding wiper blades, Ford offers the intermittent-action windshield wiper, which is told by a computer to pause every so often.

And Cadillac is testing the "tripmaster," which tells how many miles of fuel you have left, how far it is to your destination, and what time you'll get there.

The tripmaster and a similar experimental unit by Chrysler is an instantaneous read-out of your gas mileage.

As you step down hard on the accelerator, the digital m.p.g. figures plummet before your eyes. When you ease up, the m.p.g. rises sharply. It's graphic evidence that, as the ads say, "actual mileage may vary according to driving habits ..."

Despite the cost, some see long-term savings. Electronic controls are simpler, more compact and more precise than mechanical devices. That means less hardware and greater reliability, engineers say.

Drivers fired

DALLAS (AP) — Almost 50 school bus drivers, after refusing for the second straight day to make their runs, were fired Tuesday by the Dallas Independent School District.

The drivers were protesting working conditions and pay, including the failure of the school system to pay them for five days that weather forced unscheduled closings.

The drivers, after refusing to make their rounds Monday, showed up for work Tuesday morning. When asked to man their buses, they responded by asking whether their demands, including an increase of at least 75 cents an hour in their $3.25 hourly pay, had been taken under consideration.

Some blackbirds now strawberry blonds

By JERRY GRAY

MILAN, Tenn. (AP) — Blondes have been known to turn more than a few heads and wildlife biologist Steve White is hoping the same principle will apply to his "blondbirds."

White, 25, a graduate student at Ohio State University, has released about 200 strawberry blond blackbirds among the billions of blackbirds — the term referring collectively to grackles, cowbirds, red wing blackbirds and starlings — which roost annually around the Milan Army Ammunition Plant.

White, who is spending his third winter in Milan studying the blackbird roost, said the blondbirds will give him a more accurate idea of the range of the blackbirds.

"They'll be very visible," White said. "We are hoping people will see them and tell us where they see them. It's a way of keeping an army of people working for you."

He released the first 200 birds in mid-December and hopes to release about 100 a week until spring.

While the blondbirds are sure to catch the eye of the most inexperienced birdwatcher, their black-feathered companions don't seem to be frightened of their bright plumage, White said.

"We haven't noticed any difference in bird-to-bird aggression; the blondbirds are feeding with the rest of the flock," he said.

White said albinos occur naturally among blackbirds, so the blondbirds aren't that unusual.

The first step in a blackbird's transformation comes with its capture in a decoy trap. Then it is smeared with a paste-like commercial bleach and placed in an incubator for 20 minutes to dry. It is then released, destined to remain blond until it molts.

Wildlife biologists have, for years, dyed color patches on birds to follow their migratory or foraging habits, White said.

"In that I have color-marked blackbirds, the idea is not new," he said. "In that I have bleached a black-colored bird white, that's a little bit new. In other words, I'm turning the whole bird, from the head down, blond.

"We can put radio transmitters on birds, follow them out during the day and bring them back to the roost in the evening, no problem," he said. "But we don't know whether the added weight of the transmitter might cause a bird to shorten the distance it flies from the roost to feed."

White is conducting his study under a grant from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. He usually arrives in November, about the same time that the Milan roost begins to fill, and stays until March, when the birds break camp and head in all directions.

He said his study would eventually aid in solving farmers' problems with the blackbirds, but the immediate goal was purely academic.

"We are interested in basic biology of a winter roost. There are just a lot of basic questions," he said. "For example, do the birds segregate? Do the different species feed in different places? Just what makes the roost tick?"

Car insurance may cost more

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Nobody knows for sure, but Texans might be paying more for their car insurance because it covers not only out-of-pocket losses but punitive damages as well.

The insurance industry asked the State Insurance Board Tuesday to eliminate coverage for punitive damages awarded by juries to punish serious negligence.

Board chairman Hugh Yantis suggested such an act by the board should be accompanied by some reduction in auto liability premiums.

The board said it wanted two or three weeks to read the numerous court cases cited by insurance industry spokesman David Irons before making its decision.

Irons represented the Texas Automobile Insurance Service Office.

Yantis said the insurance companies were asking the board to act "in a vacuum" since they had not proposed a rate cut to go with their request.

A 1972 court decision, upheld by the Texas Supreme Court, said the standard automobile liability policy covers not only out-of-pocket losses of accident victims but punitive damages as well.

Irons said Texas was unique in setting a state policy, by board action, that punitive damages are covered by car insurance policies.

"Punitive damages should not be insured against. . . It (the act that is punished) has got to be a willful and wanton misconduct," he said.

At any rate, negligent drivers — not insurance companies — are the ones whom juries seek to punish with punitive damages, he said.

Yantis wondered out loud why Irons had not presented any insurance rate consequences of the proposed order.

Housing destroyed

TEXARKANA, Ark. (AP) — An early evening fire Tuesday destroyed a two-story frame apartment house in Texarkana.

For a time the fire threatened to engulf the entire block, officials said.

Fire units from Arkansas and Texas departments fought the blaze for nearly 1½ hours.

Richard Olive, a resident of the apartment house, said the fire apparently started in the rear of the structure. A strong, northerly wind spread flames to the rest of the house, and firefighters struggled to keep the blaze away from a business next door.

Officials said the flames spread to the roof of the business, but the fire was brought under control before any damage was done there.

A structure to the east of the burning house, the St. Michael convent, was threatened briefly by fire, authorities said. The convent houses the Sisters of Charity of the Incarnate Word.

STAN'S GRANDMOTHER'S MINESTRONE

Remember the heavenly aroma of homemade soup simmering on top of the stove? Perhaps a touch more difficult than opening up a can, but well worth the time. And the fresh, country-grown vegetables at Piggly Wiggly are just as tasty and wholesome as my Grandma used to pluck right out of her own vegetable garden...which was the secret of her matchless minestrone. Go on, try it. All you need to make a meal of it is a crusty loaf of bread.

8 to 12 servings
2 cups cooked, dried white or pea beans (or 1-16 oz. can) small piece of salt pork
2 t basil
1 T chopped parsley
3 T olive oil
1 onion, chopped
1 garlic clove, crushed
3 tomatoes, peeled, seeded, chopped
2 potatoes, peeled and diced
4 zucchini, chopped
2 stalks celery, chopped
2 carrots, chopped
handful of fresh stringbeans or ½ pkg. frozen stringbeans
½ head cabbage, thinly sliced
1 10-oz. pkg. frozen peas
5 T raw rice
salt and pepper to taste
2 T butter
1½cup grated parmesan cheese

In a large kettle, saute onion, garlic, celery, parsley, basil and salt pork in olive oil until the onion is soft. Add 10 cups salted water and add all the vegetables. Cook the soup over low heat, uncovered, for about an hour and a half. Twenty minutes before the soup is ready add rice and continue cooking until rice is tender. Add butter and ½ cup of parmesan. Add salt and pepper to taste. Serve with bowl of grated Parmesan.

Odessa bond service to pay settlement sum

ODESSA — Ike's Bonding Service has agreed to pay $28,500, in $500-a-week installments, as settlement for $70,000 in bond forfeiture cases pending in Ector County Court, according to County Attorney Mike Atkins.

The $70,000 was from 50 1976 and 1977 cases, Atkins said.

The settlement Monday came less than a week after Ike's paid forfeiture judgments totalling $10,000.

The bonding service, Odessa's largest, has $87,500 in pending forfeiture cases in Midland County District Court and $4,000 in Midland County Court. Both District Attorney Vern Martin and County Attorney Leslie Acker, who filed those cases, said they would be handled on the regular civil docket for the two courts.

Park enroute to Washington

SEOUL — South Korean businessman Tong-sun Park left here Thursday for Washington to testify on the lobbying that South Korea is said to have conducted illegally on Capitol Hill.

He is scheduled to appear before the U.S. House ethics committee in hearings starting Tuesday and later is to testify to the Senate ethics committee.

Park underwent interrogation in Seoul last month by American investigators.

While in Washington, where he once lived and lavishly entertained, Park also is expected to be a witness in the federal court trial of former Rep. Richard Hanna, who is charged with taking from $100,000 from Park.

Park also will be obliged to make himself available for other trials if other members or former members of Congress are indicted as a result of Park's congressional testimony. He is assured of immunity from prosecution or arrest in return for his testimony.

Park left Washington and went to London in November, 1976, when the scandal broke. He came to Seoul last August while a diplomatic dispute developed. The South Korean government was accused of involvement in influence-peddling.

At first the Seoul government refused to hand over Park to Washington but gave in under persistent pressure. Park insists his activities were aimed at promoting his own business, and that the South Korean government had nothing to do with it.

Brown receives cancer therapy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gen. George S. Brown, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, has prostate cancer, the Pentagon announced today.

Defense Department spokesman Thomas B. Ross told a briefing that tests following surgery Tuesday "revealed some cancerous tissue of the prostate gland."

Ross said doctors do not yet know whether cancer has spread beyond the prostate gland, which was not removed.

Brown is undergoing radiation treatment as well as what was described as "further evaluation" and will be hospitalized for two to three weeks.

The 59-year-old four-star general entered Malcolm Grow Medical Center at nearby Andrews Air Force Base, Md., Monday for prostate surgery, which was accomplished on Tuesday.

Brown is due to retire in late June after completing four years as the nation's highestranking military officer.

Ross left open the possibility of a change in Brown's retirement plans following completion of further medical studies of his condition.

Gen. David Jones, Air Force chief of staff, will serve as acting JCS chairman.

Big Spring aircraft stolen

The plane belonged to Charles and Bob Wash of Howard County. It was the second airplane theft here in six months, the sheriff's office said. The other plane was recovered later in Mississippi.

WTCC opposes pending legislation on Alaska

ABILENE — The West Texas Chamber of Commerce in a position paper released today stated opposition to pending legislation that would result in closing more than 128 million acres of Alaskan lands to any future development of natural resources.

Joe A. Kloesel of Midland, chairman of the WTCC National Affairs Committee, said "the WTCC is opposed to H.B. 39 and H.B. 1652, as amended, or any other legislation that would place such great quantities of land under national park, wildlife refuge or wild and scenic river designation.

"The proposals currently under consideration would increase the total of federal lands designated for such purposes by an unjustifiable amount and halt any practical development of resource potentials in those areas. Action on the massive scale now proposed is not in the national interest."

Bob Corkins of Alpine, chairman of the WTCC Tourist and Travel Development Committee, said that "the WTCC is certainly not opposed to the creation of National Parks. In fact, the WTCC has evidenced its support of such endeavors by taking the lead in actions that resulted in the creation of the only national parks in the state of Texas — Guadalupe and Big Bend. The WTCC does, however, recognize that the amount of land set aside for such use should be based on reason, taking into consideration the fact that a proper balance should be maintained between usable land and protected land."

The WTCC supports the philosophy that the country's natural resources should be managed in a way that will allow their utmost utilization in an economical and efficient manner. Kloesel said "our nation cannot afford to have this much land exempted from production. We must do what is necessary to guarantee that our natural resources will continue to be available to satisfy the needs of our nation and its people. Workable multi-purpose use provisions are a necessity."

Odessa police holding couple in connection with theft

ODESSA — An El Paso couple is being held by Odessa police in connection with the theft of about $150 from a 7-11 Store at 1912 N. Big Spring St. Tuesday.

According to a spokesman for the Midland Police Department, the 26-year-old woman and her 32-year-old husband will be transferred to Midland once Odessa charges against them have been cleared.

A clerk in the store at the time of the robbery told police a man and a woman entered the store about 8 p.m. The woman kept the clerk distracted, while the man went around the counter, opened the unlocked floor safe and removed the money, police were told.

The clerk gave police a description of the vehicle the couple left in, and Odessa police said they stopped a car meeting that description about a mile east of the city on Interstate Highway 20 about 9 p.m.

The money bags from the store were recovered, according to Odessa police.

Marriage thrives 'long-distance'

Dr. Robert Tapp, professor at the University of Xinnesota, has meeting with his wife, Dr. June Tapp, provost of Revelle College, Univeristy of California, San Diego. They see each other once every three weeks during the school year.

By JAN JENNINGS
Copley News Service

On one weekend during her junior year in college she was tapped for Phi Beta Kappa, Mortar Board, selected as one of the 50 top young women in the nation by Mademoiselle magazine and got married.

By today's standards for Dr. June Louin Tapp, that was probably a slow weekend.

Tapp, 48, is in her second year as provost of Revelle College, University of California, San Diego, and between her duties there and writing papers and serving in professional societies, she commutes more than 2,000 miles to her home in Minnesota.

Her husband, Dr. Robert Tapp, is chairman of the Humanities Department at the University of Minnesota, where she also served as faculty member prior to accepting the post in San Diego.

"It may sound awkward," said Tapp, a vivacious woman with energy to burn and constantly in a whirl of activity.

"But it works for us. It was a family decision for me to come here. We manage to see each other every three weeks during the school year. And we talk to each other every night on the telephone.

"Sure, that gets expensive. I feel like we support all the telephone systems. But we live on the 'nickel theory,' always have. We feel that if we make $1.50 and have to spend $1.45 of it to be able to explore our interests, to grow in our professions, to enjoy a variety of experiences and interrelationships with people, and still have a nickel left, it makes it all worthwhile."

> "The lifestyle we have chosen for ourselves—in order to make it work and be a positive experience—requires organization, a taste for a variety of experiences and the willingness for intellectual and emotional risk-taking."
> Dr. Robert Tapp

Commuting long distances is nothing new to the Tapps. They have lived, done research and worked in India, Switzerland, Yugoslavia and Denmark. They have authored papers in their fields — hers being psychology and the law and his comparative religion.

During all this professional activity, they have raised two daughters who have experienced the commuting life.

Mara, 21, recently received her master's degree from the University of Chicago. She has a bachelor's degree from the University of Wisconsin.

Kami, 18, is in her third year at the University of Minnesota. In keeping with the Tapp hurry, they both entered college at age 16, graduates of the University of Chicago Law School.

The Tapps' philosophy on raising their daughters has been one they describe as "parenting."

"It is not mothering or fathering," said Tapp, "but parenting. Doing things together when we are together and making the most of our time. We feel that a person needs multiple sources of love.

"The lifestyle we have chosen for ourselves — in order to make it work and be a positive experience — requires organization, a taste for a variety of experiences and the willingness for intellectual and emotional risk-taking."

The Tapps' sample of commuting to accomplish their pursuits began when she had received her master's degree from the University of Southern California and he received a job offer in Canton, N.Y. She followed him there, but when an offer for a Ph.D. program in her field came from Syracuse University, she accepted and began commuting the 125 miles from Canton to Syracuse.

"I was a faculty wife Thursday evening to Monday, a graduate student Tuesday to Thursday and at the same time I was pregnant with our first daughter," she said.

Their next bout with commuting was when she served as a fellow for a year in law and psychology at the Harvard University Law School. He continued on the faculty of the University of Chicago. They visited each other at both places and for a time each one took charge of one daughter.

"They encourage me," she said of her daughters. "We each have to do what we can. And I encourage our daughters. I'm doing this for them, too. For our growth as a family. For me as an individual. Women should be able to advance and to be as accessible to the areas of advancement as men. I guess I'm a beacon for the bunch. It can be done and marriage and family life can survive and even in some cases be stimulated with more to share."

DEAR ABBY

Legal system deals out injustice to women

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Here are the facts: A hysterical woman called the police to tell them that she had just been raped by her husband.

She was told that it wasn't possible for a man to rape his own wife.

She then explained he had held a knife to her stomach and forced her to have sex with him. (I'm omitting a few details which are too horrible to put in a letter.)

The police then told her that, according to law, it was a "domestic matter" involving a man and his wife—not a case of rape.

The woman then said that they had never been married, they were just living together, so actually he wasn't her husband!

She was then told, "Common law marriage is recognized in this state, so as far as the law is concerned he IS your husband."

End of conversation.

My question: What kind of justice is this? THE WOMAN

DEAR WOMAN: Apparently, this kind of "justice" is still "in." And for an excellent book that deals critically with our legal system, I highly recommend "Injustice For All," by Anne Strick. It's published by Putnam and is well worth reading.

DEAR ABBY: I met a gal in a bar. (I'll call her Kit.) She was real pretty, only 19, and she sure had a rough life and a lot of bum breaks. She even confessed she had hustled for a while, but she said that was in the past and now she had a respectable job as a waitress. Well, I started liking her a lot even though she seemed to have a lot of crummy friends.

One day Kit called me at work and told me she had been beaten up and robbed. She asked me to come to her place and bring her some money to pay her bills.

When I saw her, she sure was a mess. She said a guy she had never seen before used a passkey to get into her flat. He beat her up and took all her savings, which was about $300.

I took Kit to the hospital emergency room, and they fixed her up. (She told them she fell down some stairs!) I wanted to report it to the police, but Kit wouldn't let me. I gave her $200 to pay her bills.

Now I am wondering why she didn't want to report the robbery to the police. What do you think?—PUZZLED

DEAR PUZZLED: Maybe she didn't want to report the robbery because there wasn't any robbery.

DEAR ABBY: I have a slight problem. The company I work for has instructed me to answer the telephone as follows: "Thank you for calling the Blankety Blank Company; may I help you?"

It seems to me that the "thank you for calling the Blankety Blank Company" should be at the end of the conversation. If I am wrong, please tell me. I keep getting cut off in the middle of my greeting because most people think they have a wrong number.—WORKING GIRL

DEAR GIRL: I think you're right. Tell your bosses that your callers are confused by the "reverse English," that the first thing a customer wants to know when he calls is if he has the right number. If you want to thank him for calling the blankety blank company, do it when you say goodbye.

Feminist voices ideas of change

By LUCRETIA STEIGER
Copely news Service

Karen DeCrow, former national president of the National Organization for Women (1974-1977), has this recurring fantasy about putting on a Superwoman costume and zapping a baseball bat to a little girl.

"I was at an airport at Christmastime and a man got off a plane carrying a bat and a little plastic bag of cosmetics," she said. "A little boy and girl, about 4 and 5, ran up and he gave the bat to the boy and the cosmetics to the girl. I kept wondering if they were staging this for my benefit. The little girl said she wanted the bat, but her parents said 'no, little girls don't play with bats.'

"So that's still going on, and I have the fantasy of dressing up like Superwoman and sending a bat to the little girl, but I don't know her name."

DeCrow, 40, an attorney, said she has had her "consciousness raised over such things for the 11 years" she has been active in NOW. She describes a gender-free society as one where "it wouldn't make any difference what gender a person was."

"Today, in hospital nurseries, there are little signs over the kids" heads; 'I am a boy' or 'I am a girl.'

That, she said, very much determines what will happen to them in their lives . "That's what the feminist movement is all about; getting into education, politics, legislation and lawsuits to make it possible for that baby boy and girl in the hospital to have an equal opportunity in life.

"For thousands of years, the relationships have been treated like two separate races. Feminists have to educate, to point up what's going on.

"At some schools in this country, for instance, boys and girls can't eat together. Then at 20 they marry this adversary and are expected to live happily ever after."

To end the gender-based society, she believes parents, educators, publishers and television producers, among others, should be pressured to do things differently.

"Parents should try not to treat boys and girls differently. The child with good coordination should be encouraged to enter athletics and the child with an interest in science should be encouraged to enter science.

"I think feminists should apply incredible pressure to the print media to change, to not be sexist. We should visit publishers, threaten to boycott the paper, work on advertisers to remove their advertising.

"There's much to be mad about on television, but it is getting better. And I think that in the electronic field, we're making good strides because we've been challenging licenses."

Her work as a feminist, she said, has added dimension to her life and "made it very exciting. I love my life," she added, "and there's still so much to do. That story about the little girl and the bat; that shows how far we are from our goals."

Good accessories 'finish' apartment decor

By CAROLE EICHEN
Copley News Service

There is a tendency to devote too much attention and budget to drapes, furniture and upholstered furnishings instead of acquiring items that add real beauty to your living environment.

Apartment residents, in particular, should pay attention to good accessories and art work for the walls which add richness and can be easily transported when you move.

Things that create beauty are the lamps, accessories and little extras. A well-planned room which takes this into consideration has an intangible element of beauty and functional order which sets it apart from the norm.

A planter, interesting piece of sculpture or good lamps can do wonders for what otherwise would have been a plain, common room. Before thinking about "refinishing" an apartment, concentrate on making sure it really was "finished" in the first place.

Let the old draperies hang for another year. Spend the money instead to revitalize the apartment with fine art works which also can be a sound financial investment.

Accessorizing allows you to give vent to your own expression of individuality. In apartments where the landlord frowns on any major redecorating, accessories make all the difference. If you have good art, it doesn't matter if the walls or furnishings are plain.

The problem is that most people don't invest in quality items. Instead they fall prey to emotional buying, thinking they can't afford the finer things. In reality, if they added up all the money spent on numerous cheaper items, they could have purchased a good oil or fine sculpture.

Fine art and quality items do not have to be expensive or have to be judged by the price tag. Not too many people can afford an nal Picasso, but most can pay for an original Batik by a local craftsman or a good print well framed.

First you have to be able to recognize quality. A visit to an art gallery or museum to study the classic lines and styles is a good place to start. In addition, it helps you discover what you really like.

If nothing else, you'll learn how to judge a painting or piece of art. Then you'll be able to look for what you want at auctions, antique stores and fine accessory shops.

Having good art work says a lot about you.

Prince gets state allowance

LONDON (AP) — Prince Andrew celebrated his 18th birthday without a party and Buckingham Palace declined to say what presents he received. But one "gift" was a state allowance of about $39,000 annually.

Planning eases spring cleaning

NEW YORK (AP) — Prepare in advance for the annual housecleaning and auto spruceup rituals, suggests an official of the Independent Insurance Agents of America.

Planning will make these tasks easier, safer and more quickly accomplished, says George Frazier, president of the group of independent businessmen who counsel on auto and homeowners' insurance.

Do a complete survey of your home from attic to basement, he suggests. It is important that you remove any accumulations of newspapers and old magazines, old paint rags, oily cloths and the like, which are highly combustible.

Clean and organize work and storage areas. Put winter equipment out of the way and make room for summertime equipment. Install hooks or pegboard for hanging frequently used tools. Things will be easier to find and you will eliminate possible accident hazards as well.

HOROSCOPE

By CARROLL RIGHTER

(Fri., Feb. 24)

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Get down to business and finish projects you have prolonged for too long. Don't let a troubled co-worker hamper you.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) Don't even think about recreation until your work is done. Think of a new way to please loved one. Show more gumption, too.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) You can easily improve the situation at home provided you use reason. Security is most important now. Strive for more goodwill in the outside world, also. Handle business affairs wisely.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) Get your own affairs settled before you think of helping friends and relatives. You have to be extra careful in motion of any kind. Take no chances where health is concerned.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) Take care you do not commit yourself financially beyond your ability to handle it. Use common sense about money and don't rely so much on your intuition, which may be faulty now.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) You have to get rid of that prejudice you have if you are to make real progress in your career. Be true to loyal friends.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Whatever personal worries you have can be solved by sensible thinking and help from right persons. Get others to appreciate you more. Don't be a doormat.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Know who your real friends are and those who are only time and money wasters and weed them out. Get into the social whirl that interests you. Don't forget to pay pressing bills.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Any civic problems can be worked out to your benefit if you are clever in handling them now. You have work to do that you don't particularly like, but get it done just the same.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Get stumbling blocks out of the way of your progress where some new plan is concerned. Show that you are thinking constructively, wisely. Do something to improve health appreciably.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) Find a more modern system through which to handle responsibilities more intelligently. Be more aware of the needs and desires of a loved one.

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Showing more kindness and thought for partners will bring more accord and benefits as well. See what develops and then act at the right time.

Sherion Blue marries

STANTON—Sherion Ilene Blue of Midland and Stephen Lynn Webb of Stanton were married in a single ring ceremony in the First Baptist Church here with Rev. E. H. Carson officiating.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Blue of 402 W. Hamby St. in Midland, and Mr. and Mrs. John B. Webb Jr. of Stanton.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a formal gown fashioned with an A-line silhouette of silk sheer and peau d'ange lace. The fitted empire bodice was covered with lace and had a sweetheart neckline. The slim slender were edged in lace. The A-line skirt gathered in the back to form a chapel train. Lace bordered the circular hemline flounce.

She wore a three-tiered veil of French illusion held by a matching lace Camelot cap.

She carried a bouquet of white carnations and red roses.

Attendants to the bride were Deborah Shoemake, the bride's sister of San Antonio; Teresa Blue, the bride's sister of Midland, and Janet Blue, the bride's sister of Midland.

The bridegroom's attendants were Gene Louder of Stanton and Gary Henson and Bill Pinkston, both of Stanton.

Ushers were Ronnie Mims and Jay Madison, both of Stanton.

Music was furnished by Cynthia Carter, pianist, and Donny Williams, soloist.

A reception was held in the church Fellowship Hall.

Mrs. Stephen Lynn Webb

AT WIT'S END

Mideast peace comes easier than deciding on dishwasher

BY ERMA BOMBECK

We have a scene at our house every evening that makes Sadat and Begin sound like buddies at camp.

It's called whose turn is it to do the dishes, and if I do say so myself it has turned into a classic maneuver in diplomacy.

DETENTE: All during dinner, nothing is mentioned about dishes. The conversation is pleasant, but never once touches upon the issue.

TESTING THE POLITICAL WINDS: "Well, I got a lot of homework. The rest of you can sit here and talk if you want."

CONFRONTATION: "You leave this table and we'll break your face. We have to decide who's stuck with this mess."

PREMATURE WITHDRAWAL: "It's not my turn. I didn't eat anything so I'm out."

NEGOTIATIONS OPEN: "Wait a minute, we ought to be able to figure this out. I did them Tuesday because we had spaghetti. I always get stuck doing them when we have spaghetti because Mom never liked me."

"Get off our cases, you haven't done them in three weeks because of ball practice. I don't even think you're on the team. I think you just suit up and sit in the shower room to get out of doing dishes."

"That's a pretty rotten thing to say for someone who lets the dog help him clear. You think we haven't seen you?"

"At least I don't leave the broiler in the oven, the pans soaking in the sink, and put a bowl in the refrigerator with a peach pit in it."

BREAKDOWN IN TALKS: Food on plates begin to petrify.

ASSESSING ALTERNATIVES: "Look, we can sit here all night or we can just start at the beginning again and go according to age. (This spoken by the youngest.) I'm calling Chuck. He'll remember." (Backup croops.)

WITHDRAWAL: "Hey, I've got homework. When all of you decide whose turn it is, call me and I'll come back and debate it some more . . . BUT . . .

RECIPROCITY: "If you decide it's my turn, someone is going to get punched out."

Peace in the Middle East is a probable certainty (I only say that to hear Edwin Newman give a primal scream) — but peace in the kitchen . . . NEVER!

You can cut back on salt without turning into a chemical sleuth. Just resist the urge to grab for the salt shaker.

Most diets provide too much salt

By DARLA WELLES
Copley News Service

For most people, reaching for the saltshaker at meal times is pretty much a reflex action.

It's habit. And probably a bad habit, according to medical researchers and nutrition experts.

It isn't that salt in itself is bad. In fact, the human body needs salt.

Harvard University nutrition expert Dr. Jean Mayer explains it this way:

"Many people forget that salt is more than a seasoning. Sodium and chloride, which make up common table salt, are essential nutrients. ...The two, along with body water and other minerals, especially potassium, are essential in maintaining the body's internal equilibrium...."

But too much salt is another matter entirely.

The standard American diet already provides 10 to 25 times as much salt as the body needs.

And probably just about everyone could do well to cut back on the amount of salt they eat.

When you start cooking, remember that there are a lot of ways to add flavor to foods without using salt.

Substituting wine for all or part of the water in a recipe adds considerable spark. Don't use cooking sherries. They're salted. Use a dry table wine or an inexpensive white vermouth.

Green vegetables steamed with a little butter or margarine and a sprinkling of sweet basil have an unusually fresh flavor.

Fried potatoes are nice seasoned with a sprinkling of onion powder and a little pepper.

When cooking Oriental-style foods, the soy sauce in the recipes will provide all the salty taste you'll need. And don't go overboard adding extra sauce at the table.

Season roast chicken with fresh lime juice and tarragon, and broil fish with a bit of lemon and dill.

Don't be afraid to experiment with herbs and spices. As you learn to expect a less salty taste, you'll find yourself appreciating the subtlety of other seasonings more.

For the most part, special recipes and special products are unnecessary, Just don't add the teaspoon of salt to the stew or sauce and adjust the other seasonings accordingly. The salt in the canned tomatoes or tomato sauce will be enough to season the whole pot.

As an alternative to commercially prepared salad dressings, try making your own. This dressing will be lighter than its commercial counterpart.

FRENCH DRESSING

Two-thirds cup salad oil
One-fourth cup tarragon-flavored wine vinegar
One-half tsp. sugar
1 tsp. paprika
One-half tsp. dry mustard
1 tbsp. grated onion
1 tsp. Worcestershire sauce
1 tsp. basil
1 clove garlic cut in half

Combine all ingredients in a jar and shake well. Remove the garlic before serving. Makes about a cup. It will keep for several weeks, but the garlic should be removed after a day or so.

If you just can't stand the sight or taste of a naked baked potato or egg or ground beef patty or whatever, here's an herb seasoning mix that will add flavor but not sodium. Try this basic blend and then adjust the seasonings to fit your own taste and needs.

SALTLESS SEASONING

One-half tsp. thyme
One-half tsp. marjoram
One-half tsp. garlic powder
One-half tsp. curry powder
One-half tsp. celery seed
3 tsps. Hungarian paprika
One-fourth tsp. onion powder
One-fourth tsp. dill weed

Crush all ingredients to a smooth consistency, blending well. To keep the mixture from losing flavor, store it in a tightly sealed container and make only in small amounts.

Seafood doesn't always have to be fried in batter and served with French fries. A little garlic, some parsley and dill can make a simple but elegant entree of plain fish fillets, scallops or shrimp.

Sour cream adds touch to cake

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

SOUR CREAM ORANGE CAKE

It has a light texture.
2 cups sifted cake flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
½ teaspoon baking soda
¼ teaspoon salt
½ cup butter
1 cup sugar
Grated rind of 1 orange
2 large eggs
1 cup commercial sour cream
½ cup finely chopped walnuts
Topping, see below

Stir together the flour, baking powder, baking soda and salt. Cream butter, sugar and orange rind; one at a time, beat in eggs until blended. Stir in flour in 3 additions, alternately with sour cream, just until smooth each time. Fold in nuts. Turn into a 9-inch square cake pan that has been lined with wax paper and the paper greased. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until a cake tester inserted in center comes out clean — 35 minutes. Place cake in pan on a wire rack and at once pour the topping over it. Let stand until cold, then loosen edges and turn out on a rack; turn right side up.

Topping: stir together ¼ cup confectioners' sugar and the juice of 1 orange (¼ cup).

New documents implicate Flood

By BROOKS JACKSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Newly released documents show Rep. Daniel Flood, D-Pa., took an interest in State Department contracts granted to a foundation head who allegedly paid Flood $59,000 for his influence.

It was also disclosed Wednesday that the FBI is examining the contracts in what appears to be a widening investigation into allegations of influence-peddling and obstruction of justice by Flood, a senior House Democrat.

The latest investigation involves $16.6 million in contracts granted by the Agency for International Development, without competitive bidding, to Airlie Foundation and an arm of George Washington University, both groups headed by a Dr. Murdock Head.

Former Flood aide Stephen B. Elko has told federal prosecutors that between 1971 and 1974 Head paid $59,000 to Flood, $18,000 to Elko and $10,000 to former Rep. Otto Passman, D-La. Flood, Passman and Head have denied the accusation.

Elko turned state's evidence after being sentenced to three years in prison for taking payoffs. He is considered a key witness in several investigations, including a probe of Flood and Rep. Joshua Eilberg, D-Pa.

News accounts dating back to 1975 had stated that Passman, then head of the House subcommittee handling AID's budget, pressured the agency to keep money flowing to Head's organizations. Wednesday a new document surfaced showing Flood also took an interest in Head's contracts.

The letter, released by AID under the Freedom of Information Act, was dated June 25, 1973, from then-AID Administrator John A. Hannah to Passman.

"In recent conversations you indicated that Congressman Flood had inquired of you as to the status of the Airlie Foundation projects," it said. "You can assure Congressman Flood that all of these projects will be funded through to their conclusion."

Flood has declined to respond to Elko's allegations, except to issue a blanket denial.

Passman, who has retired, said he is too sick to answer questions about the matter except to deny taking money from Head.

James Sharp, an attorney for Head, said Wednesday that Head never gave anything of value to Passman or Flood. He said neither the FBI nor the Justice Department has contacted Head about the matter.

According to former AID officials and to the newly released documents, Passman made repeated calls to AID officials on behalf of Head's projects in the early 1970s.

One AID official, Jarold A. Kieffer, resigned in 1975, complaining of improper influence by Passman. He said he was asked for his resignation when he refused to drop his objections to granting Head a new $5 million contract.

Kieffer's bosses at the time say his resignation was unrelated to Head's projects.

Head's work for AID involved birth control — producing films and training materials, conducting seminars for Latin American leaders and publishing a multilingual magazine. Their quality has drawn mixed reviews, including high praise for some of the films.

However, the General Accounting Office said in 1976 that Head's organization showed "repeated apparent non-compliance" with terms of its agreement.

More recently, AID officials allowed a Head contract to lapse on grounds that the work was not needed.

AID is negotiating with Head over nearly $400,000 in what the agency said were possible excess charges for films and seminars.

Kieffer, head of AID's population control projects, described pressure by Passman to fund a $5 million project Head was pushing in late 1974, even though other population projects were being reduced by Passman's subcommittee. A $2 million version of the project was approved more than a year after his resignation.

Kieffer's immediate superior, AID Assistant Administrator John A. Murphy, wrote to him on Nov. 21, 1974, saying: "My conclusion is that, with some restructuring and additional budgetary justification, the proposal merits funding commencing in FY 1975." Fiscal year 1975 was then nearly six months old.

Kieffer says he took Murphy's memo as an order to grant the new contract. He protested on Nov. 25 about what he called improper congressional influence.

Kieffer said Murphy had told him earlier of "congressional intervention."

"As you have related to me, a powerful congressman has directly and secretly demanded that you arrange for AID to make a large grant from this year's scarce funds to finance the...proposal," the memo said.

"Moreover, as you related it to me, the congressman couched his demands in coercive terms that relate directly to his...role in arranging possible increases or decreases in AID and population program funding actions by the House Appropriations Committee.

"You indicated that the point of his offer was that he could work out appropriation increases for the population program...Some things are just wrong, and his coercion and demands in this case are wrong," Kieffer said.

Ruling places Midland youth in suitable facility

A juvenile accused of stabbing a Lee High School student on the Lee campus Dec. 7 has been adjudicated a delinquent child and ordered "placed in a suitable facility outside Midland," County Attorney Leslie Acker said Wednesday.

The ruling was issued by county Juvenile Judge Barbara Culver on Monday, Acker said.

The juvenile also a Lee student, was accused in the stabbing of James Posey after an argument on the school grounds.

After that disturbance, several fights which Midland Police Chief Wayne Gideon said were "of a racial nature" broke out on the campus.

Under state law, hearings concerning juveniles are closed and their names cannot be made public.

Acker said he was not authorized to say to which facility the juvenile had been sent.

Increase in VA spending likely

WACO — Veterans Administration spending will increase slightly in Texas this year, Jack Coker, director of the regional office in Waco, said today.

The 1978 budget totals $1,283,260,000. During 1977, the Veterans Administration spent $1,256,571,000 in Texas.

According to officials in Washington, the fiscal 1979 budget recently sent to Congress calls for a slight decrease in spending to $1,269,641,000 in Texas.

Denial of military, economic aid to Nicaragua initiates dispute

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — One day, not long before his assassination in 1956, Nicaraguan President Anastasio Somozo startled an office visitor by taking a cattle prod from a desk drawer and casually applying it to the presidential elbow.

He winced briefly, then deadpanned: "Not too bad. Not too bad."

In those days, Somoza's secret police routinely used cattle prods against Nicaraguan dissidents, and the incident reflected Somoza's cavalier attitude toward such practices.

In the Cold War morality of the time, he knew, abuses of human rights were far less important to the United States, his chief benefactor, than preservation of anti-communist rule.

On the latter score, Somoza won high marks from Washington — and more than $300 million in U.S. aid flowed to Nicaragua in the years after World War II.

But now, more than 40 years of cozy relations between the United States and the Somoza dynasty are at an end.

Alone of all the countries in the world, Nicaragua has been dropped from the list of U.S. military aid recipients in next year's budget, except for a token amount for military training, because of human rights violations. Economic aid also has been slashed.

The decision to penalize Nicaragua, now ruled by the elder Somoza's son, Anastasio Jr., has touched off an intense policy dispute within the administration.

There is a sense of embarrassment among many influential Carter administration officials about all the years in which the United States helped buttress a succession of Somoza regimes.

But some State Department career professionals are incensed. They note that Somoza, eager to preserve his close ties with Washington, moved quickly last year to ease political repression, mindful of President Carter's emphasis on human rights.

A State Department report on the human rights situation in 105 foreign countries, issued earlier this month, says reports of deaths and disappearances "markedly diminished" in Nicaragua.

"The issue is not human rights," one official said bitterly. "The objective is the ouster of the Somoza regime."

One informant acknowledged that Somoza privately expressed bitterness about the Carter administration's hostile attitude.

But officials in the department's human rights office emphatically deny any attempt to oust Somoza, saying this would be contrary to government policy.

They also point out that Nicaragua continues to be eligible for military aid allocated earlier and that the administration has not ruled out the possibility of providing credits to Nicaragua with funds earmarked for the current fiscal year.

They also contend the cutoff for 1979 is not due entirely to anti-Somoza sentiment, but partly to new budgetary procedures which put less emphasis on non-strategic countries like Nicaragua.

"When we got down to Nicaragua on the priority list, there was no money left," one official said.

How to implement an effective, even-handed human rights policy has generated bitterness between the department's career professionals and the administation's human rights recruits, captained by Assistant Secretary Patricia Derian.

The human rights officials say that if career professionals have their way, American foreign policy would have no human rights component at all.

"The career people don't want to have anything to do with any proposal if it's controversial or will offend a particular country," one aide said. "It's a 'don't-rock-the-boat' attitude."

South may avoid disaster if he makes the right play without appearing to think about it. He must convince East that there is only one club in the South hand.

South cannot gain by dropping the jack of clubs if East is a thinking player. The jack would be a singleton only if West had started with 10-0-6, but then West would have led the ten rather than the six. (Dropping the jack may work if East is a confirmed non-thinker.)

ALSO NO HELP

Playing the nine of clubs first is likewise no help. This cannont be a singleton because West would have held J-10-6 and would have led the jack.

South has a chance if he plays the ten of clubs. This may be a singleton from East's point of view since if West held J-9-6 of clubs he would lead the six.

South's best bet is not a play at all, but a bid. Instead of jumping to six spades he should bid three clubs. If South can discourage a club opening lead he has a plank to float on; playing the ten of clubs at the first trick is clutching at straws.

DAILY QUESTION

Partner deals and bids one spade. You hold: S J63 H K94 D KQJ C Q842. What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid two clubs or two diamonds. The hand is one point too light for a jump to 2 NT but too good for a raise to two spades. You would jump to 2 NT if you were a passed hand.

Race issue festering in Britain

By BERNARD D. NOSSITER
The Washington Post

LONDON — Margaret Thatcher, the Conservative Party leader who has electrified British politics by introducing race as an issue, is having some second thoughts.

Despite polls showing that her call to end immigration has sharply boosted Conservative stock, she is beginning to discover that the tricky issue cuts two ways.

Thatcher is learning that she runs the risk of arousing hitherto politically dormant black and brown voters, turning them into a militant bloc supporting the Labor Party. She is also dismaying the liberal wing of her own party and has been openly rebuked by Edward Heath, the former prime minister.

Now she faces a testing time of careful calculation. She must weigh her potential losses against the clear inroads she is making in Labor's strength by appealing to workers' fear for their jobs and the distaste of some who live alongside nonwhite people.

The first, crude poll results after Thatcher issued her call turned up striking gains. In the National Opinion Poll, Thatcher turned a 44-46 deficit competing with Labor into a stunning 50-39 advantage. Gallup was almost as good, with Tories going from a 43.5-43.5 dead heat to a 48-39 edge.

The Daily Mail, one of the more strident Tory papers, crowed in a page one headline, "Maggie's Got It Right."

The only doubt was that Labor still maintained an advantage as the party voters thought it was best equipped to deal with the key economic issues. The recent announcement that inflation has finally fallen below 10 percent should help the government too.It was The Daily Telegraph, a more sober Tory paper, that warned Thatcher in a headline: "Next Election May Turn On Colored Vote." The paper discovered that immigrants hold the balance of power in 59 of the 635 parliamentary districts, including 9 marginal Labor seats that Thatcher hungers for.

Indeed, the National Opinion Poll that so cheered the Daily Mail carried much the same warning. It showed that West Indians now prefered Labor by a crushing 92.5 percent margin and the Asians by 86.8.

Up to now, the immigrants have not mustered their strength. Their turnout at elections is low and they have no political organizations of weight. There is not even a British equivalent of the Urban League let alone an NAACP.

The parties have generally neglected immigrants too, despite the fact that they number about 1.8 million or more than 3 percent of the population. The Tories have in the past tried to recruit Asian shopkeepers but those days are now over.

Earlier this week, Heath, who was ousted as Conservative leader by Thatcher, declared flatly and coldly that her issue had raised "an unnecessory national row." He came as close as he could to saying that Thatcher had stirred an empty pot.

She then began pulling back. Talking to the Young Conservatives, she dropped her previous demand to limit immigrant dependents allowed to enter teh country to wives and young children. She reaffirmed the pledge to admit ultimately all the Asians with British passports who are being driven from Kenya.

Navy will decommission pioneer nuclear submarine

GROTON, Conn. (AP) — Its name came from science fiction. But over the 25 years it's been in service the Nautilus, the world's first nuclear submarine, accumulated a series of record accomplishments.

Now the Navy has announced that the Nautilus will be decommissioned beginning in July 1979. The Navy has not decided what the ship's future will be.

Its years of service more than fulfill a promise made by Adm. Hyman G. Rickover, who vowed the ship would last 20 years. Rickover was instrumental in development of the Nautilus, which performed well enough over the years to convince the world of the necessity of nuclear-powered ships.

The ship was built by the Electric Boat Division of General Dynamics at its submarine shipyard in Groton. The Navy's nearby submarine base was its home port.

The Nautilus is named after the fictional submarine in Jules Verne's "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea." But unlike Captain Nemo's craft, which was electric, the real Nautilus is powered by a nuclear reactor, which heats water to steam to drive a turbine.

When the ship was launched Jan. 21, 1954, by Mamie Eisenhower, the world watched with awe and apprehension, remembering the destruction that nuclear bombs had wrought on Japan nine years earlier. Fear of the submarine's nuclear propulsion system made some countries nervous when the ship visited their waters.

Fear was later replaced by acceptance as the Nautilus proved its safety and reliability in mission after mission. Since it was launched, 113 molecular submarines have been put out to sea under the U.S. flag.

Its first official voyage in May 1955 set records for speed and length of time submerged on a 1,381-mile cruise to Puerto Rico.

The high point for the Nautilus came in the summer of 1958 when it glided under the polar icecap en route from Hawaii to England, the first voyage under the North Pole.

The 1,830-mile trip not only demonstrated the ship's endurance, but also showed the Soviet Union how close nuclear submarines could come to its shores. The Nautilus predated the first Soviet nuclear submarine by five years.

But as technology progressed, the Nautilus showed signs of age. It became more expensive to operate and maintain. Its last major overhaul, completed in 1974, kept it away from duty for two years and cost $48 million, four times what was expected.

Today's nuclear submarines are larger, quieter and more efficient than the Nautilus. Modern nuclear submarines can cruise 400,000 miles without refueling while the Nautilus requires refueling after 82,000 miles.

Nominee faces questioning on Textron payment

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Senate Banking Committee Wednesday decided to recall President Carter's nominee to head the Federal Reserve Board to ask him further about a questionable overseas payment his farm made in 1973.

The senators want to ask G. William Miller about a $2.9 million fee the Bell Helicopter division of Textron Corp. paid to an Iranian company controlled by the head of the Iranian air force. Bell sold 489 helicopters worth $500 million to Iran in 1973.

Miller is chairman of the Providence-based conglomerate and was president of the company, with responsibility for Bell, when the payment was made to Air Taxi Co. of Iran in June, 1973.

The Securities and Exchange Commission also is investigating the payment, a process that may take four to six months.

Although the banking committee's investigation of the payment has delayed Miller's confirmation by at least a month, Senate sources say he will be confirmed easily by the Senate Banking Committee and the Senate as a whole.

Nonetheless, it is the toughest sledding a nominee to head the nation's central bank has ever had. It reflects the new-found vigilance in the Senate in the aftermath of Bert Lance's resignation as director of the Office of Management and Budget in a cloud of controversy over his banking practices while head of two Georgia banks.

A lengthy investigaton by Senate Banking Committee staff failed to turn up any evidence that Miller knew the company was making a payment to a firm secretly controlled by the late Mohammed Khatami, who was commander-in-chief of the Iranian air force when the half-billion-dollar helicopter deal was signed.

The Iranian company, Air Taxi, had been Bell Helicopter's sales representative in Iran. Miller told the Senate Banking Committee at confirmation hearings last month that the payment was made to cancel a sales representative agreement with Air Taxi, in part to compensate for work it had done for Bell in the past and in part to avoid having to pay future commissions to Air Taxi.

Although the helicopter market in Iran had been minusucule until the eraly 1970s, Textron's helicopter division has made several billion dollars of sales since then in Iran.

Miller said neither he nor Textron knew that Khatami, who died in a hang glider accident in 1975, secretly controlled Air Taxi — which had been Bell's sales representative in Iran from 1959 until 1963 and from 1968 until 1973 — when the agreement for military sales was canceled. The helicopter sales were made under the U.S. government's foreign military sales program.

At issue is whether the payment to Air Taxi was in effect a bribe to Khatami, who was close to the shah of Iran and who, according to the staff investigation, recommended Bell helicopters to the shah twice.

Bell officials told committee investigators under oath that they did not know Khatami was one of three individuals who controlled Air Taxi through nominees, although one said he might have herad that Khatami still was affiliated with Air Taxi.

Khatami was one of three owners of Air Taxi until 1965, when the company ostensibly was reorganized because of conflict-of-interest rules issued by the shah.

James F. Atkins, president of Bell Helicopter-Textron, told Senate investigators he "probably" made the decision to pay $2.9 million on his own authority, although he kept Miller informed. As president of Textron, Miller at the time was de facto head of the aerospace group.

Next week, the Senate Banking Committee will question several Bell and Textron officials and is trying to get Air Taxi officials to come to Washington to testify. Miller is expected to testify again Tuesday.

After Wednesday's hearing, at which the staff report was summarized, chairman William Proxmire, D-Wis., said he expected Miller would be approved easily, although Proxmire was inclined to vote against him because of his lack of experience in monetary and fiscal matters.

"I may be a minority of one on the committee. I may be a minority of one in the Senate," Proxmire said. He noted he was the only senator to vote against Lance.

College's dance-a-thon scheduled this weekend

Couples dancing to the "beat of the band" at the second annual Midland College dance-a-thon this weekend may help strengthen the heartbeats of millions of persons.

The dance-a-thon, which will benefit the American Heart Association, is scheduled to begin at 7 p.m. Friday and end at 8 p.m. the following Sunday in the college student center.

About 15 couples so far have signed up for the 49-hour dance marathon. Couples still may register by visiting the Student Activities Office From 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays or by calling 684-7851, extension 118 or 187 no later than 7 p.m. Friday.

After registering, couples must secure pledges from persons willing to sponsor them based on the number of hours they dance. Persons interested in sponsoring couples may get in touch with the Student Activities Office.

The couples will dance for two hours and then break for 15 minutes. Every eight hours the dancers will have a one-hour rest period.

The top two couples who dance the longest and raise the largest amount of money for the heart association will be awarded expense-paid trips to San Antonio.

Randy Johnson, chairman of the event, said couples may just dance for part of the time if they want to. "We hope the public will come out during this dance-a-thon and provide encouragement for the contestants. Of course, we would appreciate their contributions and their pledges," he said.

"I have a new figure... and look better, feel better, than in 14 years."

Agnes Hall has acquired a wonderful sense of accomplishment—as well as a beautifully proportioned figure—during a Pat Walker's program that has brought her all the way from a size 16 down to size 10!

Furthermore, she adds, a visit to the salon for a reducing treatment on Pat Walker's exclusive passive-exercise unit really peps her up and gives her more energy.

"It just makes my day," she exclaims.

The best part, though, is the weight loss—a total of 36 pounds. She also has lost 45-3/4 inches. Small wonder she says that she both looks better and feels better than she has in 14 years and that Pat Walker's has been well worth the time and money. (To see how Agnes Hall looked at 171 pounds—before she started reducing at Pat Walker's—note the photo of her in a formal-length dress.)

You can achieve your perfect figure, too

No matter how much or how little you need to lose—or how many times you've been discouraged by failure to lose weight and keep it off on other reducing plans—you can reach your weight goal at Pat Walker's.

Top cardiovascular center gives indigents free care

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Despite skyrocketing costs, a group of medical professionals in South Jersey's Pine Barrens maintains its policy of offering expensive health treatment absolutely free.

In the 55 years the Deborah Heart and Lung Center has maintained its wooded, 40-acre medical retreat in Browns Mills, no indigent patient has ever been turned away, hospital officials say.

Ranking among the top cardiovascular centers in the world, the hospital, a one-time tuberculosis sanitarium, quietly gives away an average of three $25,000 heart operations a day.

"It's not easy. We work very hard," says the center's vice president for development, Clara Franks. "But we manage to keep our heads above water."

Just how the hospital has managed to be successful is an improbable example of charity begetting charity, year after year.

In 1977, the center provided 997 cardiac operations free of charge and offered out-patient care to more than 9,000 persons, said hospital spokesman Hugh Harper.

Mrs. Franks says such traditional fundraisers as "card parties, car raffles and dinner dances" arranged by 40,000 members in 300 supporting chapters in five states have posted the hospital's current $12.8 million operating budget.

The 130-bed hospital maintains surgical, pulmonary and cardiac departments with a combined staff of 450. Among them are 15 cardiologists and seven surgeons who give fulltime attention to the heart and lung problems of the center's patients.

One of the near-thousand heart operations performed last year by the center was on Shakila Razak, a 10-year-old Pakistani girl whose bout with rheumatic fever damaged her heart and withered her body to 40 pounds.

A malfunctioning heart valve destroyed the girl's appetite and her condition steadily worsened until she underwent delicate open-heart surgery.

The estimated $30,000 cost of the operation would have been more than the girl's father, a Karachi soap merchant, could afford.

Founded in 1922 as a sanitarium for tuberculosis patients victimized by working conditions in the sweat shops of New York, the center shifted its emphasis to heart and lung disease when TB was controlled in the late 1950s.

Home improvement ledger can prevent IRS headaches

By VIVIAN BROWN
AP Newsfeatures

What happens when you've thrown away the house bills that could prove to the Internal Revenue Service that you've invested large sums of cash in the house you want to sell at a profit? You cannot really appease the IRS without them if you are trying to close the gap between the selling price of your old house and the buying price of a new one.

One widow was caught in this dilemma when she decided to sell her home at a handsome profit.

She knew her husband had not saved receipted bills and usually disposed of old checks. She had never known otherwise.

Her lawyer made a good suggestion. Sit down and think back to everything you've done to the house since you bought it — the big items that would add up. After that, think about minor expenses at hardware stores — door locks and the like. Then see whether the proprietors of the establishments would look up old records and supply duplicate bills.

She was amazed at how far she could go with this system of recollection and backtracking how many big bills they had paid.

New pipes in the old house had cost more than $1,500; the replacement of a septic tank had been in excess of $800; wall paneling in a recreation room added up to $1,700. Three years before, a new baseboard heating system had been installed for $3,100 extending to include a small bedroom addition which cost $5,000.

With little trouble and a good memory, she ticked off about $20,000.

All of the tradespeople were still in business and their records available, so she would have little difficulty in getting duplicate bills.

As for the small items, she planned to list purchases that might be remembered with prices and then ask the store to authenticate them. She could remember certain things — tar paper for the roof that had been restored; several bundles of new shingles that were required, plus nails. It all added up.

Many times, homeowners may require the assistance of lawyers in sorting out expenditures. But the lawyers cannot assume the entire burden. The owner must assemble bills and receipts that will be needed by the Internal Revenue. Lawyers can provide guidelines in suggesting other costs connected with the purchase of the house and so on — all of which may be counted as a house cost. But it is up to the client to have records handy.

Records are often discarded because people do not like to clutter their homes with them. They save them long enough to satisfy an income tax inquiry and then throw them away, even the check — or they misplace them. This is especially true of some young homeowners who simply do not know it is necessary to retain the bills.

Bills can be saved without too much confusion in a drawer, a shopping bag, a filing cabinet or a bin.

If you own a house, it is essential that you maintain good books and records. The best thing you can purchase after buying a house is a good household ledger in which to enter your expenditures as the years go by.

Anchorman's 'homily' begins evening Mass for college students

By WILLIAM ENDICOTT
The Los Angeles Times

SEATTLE — On most nights there is not much to commend network television news in terms of spiritual uplift, unless one takes solace in fires, floods, famines and pestilence.

Figuratively, if not literally, that is the stuff of which television news is made.

But a young Jesuit priest at Seattle University has found that even in the CBS Evening News there can be redeeming social value.

Every Tuesday night, Father Don Foran conducts an unusual Mass in the combination living room-office of his dormitory apartment. The Mass is based on the 30-minute "homily" delivered by anchorman Walter Cronkite.

Foran, 34, calls it his "That's The Way It Is Mass," taking his theme from Cronkite's familiar closing line, and his intent is to encourage students to see a relationship between the day's news and the Gospel.

The evening normally begins with the news at 6 o'clock and ends an hour later with communion, prayer and the reading of the Gospel message which the tall, moustached priest attempts to relate to the news the students just have watched.

"Ironically," he said in an interview, "it's easier sometimes to get students to go to Mass than to get them to watch the news on a regular basis. You'll always see some drifting in after the news is over.

"It's difficult for people to assimilate the news. It's so complex and they have the feeling of having so little control over it. They don't know what to do about it. But they feel some continuity with religious traditions.

"The news is an experience in fragmentation for them."

Last week, 18 students crowded into Foran's room to get the word from Cronkite about, among other things, the sale of jet fighters to Israel, Egypt and Saudi Arabia, efforts by President Carter to resolve the 70-day-old coal strike and the cloud seeding in Los Angeles just before last week's devastating rainstorm.

Once in a while, Foran, dressed casually in a plaid sports shirt and tan slacks, leaned over and tapped the top of the aging1 black-and-white TV set, which always seemed to improve the picture.

Afterwards, someone offered a prayer. "For times that we may not have understood the context of the news in our lives, we pray to the Lord." It seemed appropriate.

What, after all, did the sale of jet fighters have to do with a Roman Catholic Mass?

"Each of these disembodied facts," Foran said later of the various news items, "is part of a context and that context is human life in which certain people are hurt and certain people are enriched.

"I want our students to begin to grasp stories in terms of what they mean to people. As long as people remain statistics, power is going to operate in such a way as to cause human damage.

"Ultimately, I want them to be self-motivated persons, able to choose life. Thoreau said that for every one striking at the roots, there are 10,000 hacking at the branches. I want them striking at the roots."

He likes to quote a fellow priest-educator, University of Notre Dame President Theodore Hesburgh, who said recently: "I don't want any student to graduate without being confronted with the reality of world hunger, the reality of global injustice, the need for him to make moral decisions as public servant, politician, engineer, lawyer, doctor, teacher or priest."

Magazine deals in violence, caters to adventurers

By JOHN BARBOUR

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — The red-rimmed cover suggests Time magazine, but the resemblance ends there.

The headlines set the tone.

"Exclusive! War In Angola: Mercs In Action." "A Plot To Destroy JFK And Invade Cuba." "Exclusive! George W. Bacon III: The Only American KIA In Angola!" "War In Rhodesia: An Interview With General B. P. Walls, Commander Rhodesian Army."

Beyond the red-rimmed door is a nether world of violence, adventure and machismo.

A close-up picture depicts what is said to be a black Rhodesian assassinated by "communist-sponsored terrorists," much of his head blown away. It illustrates a story on "American Mercenaries In Africa."

There is another installment of a pictorial panel on "Urban Street Survival — How To Defend Yourself Against Those Whose Hearts Are Not Pure!"

And there is a pictorial display of bizarre weapons — "Deadly Designs From The Super Spy Black Bag Of Dirty Tricks."

The magazine is "Soldier Of Fortune — The Journal Of Professional Adventurers." Its editor and publisher, retired U.S. Army Lt. Col. Robert K. Brown, age 45, sits behind his cluttered desk in front of an array of Rhodesian army recruiting posters (Terrorism Stops Here) and other memorabilia including a plaque that says, "You have never lived till you have almost died, and for those who fight for it, life has a flavor the protected will never know."

A 12-gauge shotgun is propped against the wall behind Brown's desk. There had been a break-in, he explains, and five electric typewriters were stolen. Then the other day a woman was stabbed in the parking lot, and Brown and two other men ran the culprit down.

Since Brown writes and publishes for adventurers, selfstyled or otherwise, it seemed appropriate to ask his ideal of a real man's man.

He picked the only American known to have been killed in Angola, George Bacon: "He was very well educated. He was an ecologist, an idealist. He believed in opposing tyranny. He believed in opposing tyranny with a gun. He was somebody willing to go out of his way for an ideal, willing to take whatever force was necessary, willing to take whatever risk was necessary."

Not that all the people who appear between the pages of his magazine are that remarkable.

The classified ads provide part of their profile:

"International Operator, former Army officer, bondable, seeking assignment as Courier, Organizational Specialist ... Situation investigations, Mercenary Operations."

"Ex-Marine seeks employment as mercenary, full time or job contract. Prefer South or Central America but all others considered."

Not all are so voluble. One reads simply, "Have Gun Will Travel. Contract or fee basis."

Brown says he knows of no instance where foreign agents or powers sought to recruit Americans through the columns of his magazine. He has no idea how many Americans now serve abroad, he says, but has heard estimates of 300 to 600 in Rhodesia.

The people who advertise products, rather than services, in Brown's magazine are part of the adventurers profile. You can buy tailor-made knives, flak jackets, bugging devices, anti-bugging devices, T-shirts that say "Death From Above," booklets on how to pick locks or blow safes, hand guns, submachine guns, sniper rifles, hunting guns, dart guns, bayonets, knives from various armies, war souvenirs, booklets on how to make money with guns.

Brown says there is no common denominator to the adventurer who reads "Soldiers Of Fortune."

Of the some 5,000 he's had personal contact with, he thinks there were only two or three who would fight for anybody's money.

"The vast majority has a strong ideological motivation, and that's certainly true of the large majority of the Americans in Rhodesia because they're not making that kind of bread. There are anti-Communists, a lot of veterans who feel we were betrayed in Vienam, who believe, as I do, that what we tried to do there was correct, although the manner in which we went about it was not."

More than half of his readers are either Vietnam veterans or on active duty today. His highest percentage of sales are in or near military bases.

Before Vietnam, Brown tried to join up with Castro until, he says, he recognized the communist thrust of the regime.

He always felt there was room for an adventure magazine like the old "True" and "Argosy," and with $10,000 he launched what he calls SOF in 1975.

He now prints up to 130,000 copies for 12,000 regular subscribers, newsstand sales of some 52,000 at $2 an issue and the rest for special dealers like gun stores.

Unlike many editors, Brown is far from sedentary. He's as much at home on the firing range as in the office. He goes on reporting trips to Africa. He organizes paramedical expeditions to disaster areas in South America.

His former wife died in a motorcycle accident, and his teenaged daughter lives with him and works on SOF. Brown spends quiet weekends in the mountains, in rented condomimiums, swims and jogs to keep his 5-foot-10 frame in shape.

He knows clearly what he wants his magazine to be.

"We make no apologies for our support of the warrior image," he says. "We are promilitary, pro-law enforcement, pro-gun ownership, anti-terrorist and anti-Communist.

Hobby becomes business

SEATTLE (AP) — "I guess you could say that for want of a part the business was formed," says Bob McCoy, who began making and selling model railroad equipment almost by accident 20 years ago.

"When the kids were young I bought them some toy trains. Well, when they quit working I couldn't get any parts to fix them because the companies no longer made them. So, I made the parts myself," McCoy says.

"Then friends started asking me to make parts for their kids' trains. It just snowballed."

McCoy and his family turn out 10,000 locomotives and cars a year. Engines sell for $135 to $235 each and cars $9 to $35 each. All parts, with the exception of light bulbs, are made from scratch.

McCoy's models are based mostly on the Lionel and Ives trains made in the early part of the century. He says he is booked up with special orders for the next two years.

Margaret McCoy declined to say how much profit the company is making. "We're not getting rich," she says. "But we make a good living for our families."

Aside from family, the firm has two employees. McCoy handles the tooling, Mrs. McCoy does the welding, a daughter winds the motor wires and a son takes care of the assembly and painting.

McCoy markets the trains through collector clubs' publications and word-of-mouth. The firm sells most of its models on the East Coast.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

High heels bad for feet, spine

Dear Dr. Solomon: My daughter bought a pair of sandals with skyscraper heels. She says it's what everyone is wearing, but how do you feel about them from a medical point of view?—Sandra S.

Dear Sandra: I tell my patients that high heels are really bad, not only for the feet but for the balance of the entire body. Dr. Authur W. Trott of Boston, president of the American Orthopedic Foot Society, says they destabilize the whole foot and women may have to pay for this with sprains and fractures.

Some further points he makes: The weight of the body is shifted to the metatarsal area, and this may cause a painful condition that is very hard to correct, even with surgery. The squeezing action on the forefoot can cause bunions and corns. And the spine's normal curve in the lower back is exaggerated, leading to back problems and a compensating forward hunch of the shoulders.

The proper shoe, Dr. Trott says, conforms to the foot, does not compress it, and has a sole that is light and flexible. My advice would be to wear high heels only for special occasions.

Dear Dr. Solomon: We have a young nephew we are very fond of who is diabetic. He does a certain amount of drinking with his school friends (he is 17). We don't want to butt in, but this seems dangerous. What do you think?—Mary R.

Dear Mary: First of all, the less 17-year-olds drink, the better—diabetic or non-diabetic. As to the special problems of diabetics, it is true that lean patients are frequently allowed moderate amounts of alcohol. One should remember, though, that alcohol is high in calories and that, although the effect on the blood sugar is not marked, it can cause weight gains that ought to be avoided.

An important point stressed by the American Diabetes Assn. is that alcohol can dull mental sharpness and make it more difficult for the diabetic to notice hypoglycemia, or low blood sugar. Undetected hypoglycemia can take a diabetic to the emergency room of a hospital for intravenous glucose or glucagon.

Why not speak to your nephew about this—especially if you both very close to him? Perhaps if you simply suggest that he check his doctor about the drinking it would avoid any appearance of seeming to butt in, as you put it. In any case, butting in is often not a bad idea.

(If you have a medical problem, see your doctor. If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

King seeks governor's post, and so does King

By STACY JOLNA
Special to The Washington Post

BOSTON — Here in Massachusetts — where it's often difficult just trying to tell the Democrats from the Republicans — this year's gubernatorial race has produced the most serious political identity crisis in the land.

Edward King is running for governor.

So is Edward King.

That is to say, conservative Democrat Edward J. King, the former director of the Massachusetts Port Authority and former head of the New England Council of Businesses, and conservative Republican Edward F. King, the former director of the Massachusetts Citizens for Limited Taxation, are both running for governor.

"I'm the real Ed King," the six-foot Democrat and former pro football player tells his campaign audiences. "The other one is an imposter."

"The other Ed King has had the name 15 years longer than me so I really can't ask him to change it," the considerably shorter and more outgoing 37-year-old Republican told reporters when he announced his candidacy early last month. "But I would appoint him lieutenant governor, so that if anything happened to me we wouldn't have to change the stationery."

The two candidates' mutual dilemma has set off an exasperating string of mixed encounters, often leaving the harried voters wondering which bandwagon they were supposed to jump on.

When Edward J. King announced his candidacy in October, his Republican counterpart's aunt saw the event on television and rebuked Edward F. King for putting on weight.

One voter at a campaign stop agreed to support the Democratic King, but insisted on inspecting his busines card, "Just to make sure this is the one I support."

Edward J. and Edward F., both making their first bids at elective office, have been plagued with each other's mail, telephone calls — and bills.

Shortly after Edward F. King's campaign kickoff at Boston's Park Plaza Hotel, Edward J. King, who maintains campaign headquarters in the same building, received a nearly $1,000 tab.

"We're friendly," said Edward J., who refused to pay. "But not that friendly."

Campaign contributions keep finding their way into the wrong King's mailbox, and there have been several instances of new campaign workers for one Ed King winding up stuffing envelopes for "the other one."

The Republican King's campaign manager, Donald Feder, tells of a potential campaign worker for the Democratic King, who, when told she had the wrong office, replied, "Well, I'm a registered Republican, so I might as well work for you instead."

In another case, Republican King campaign worker Jack O'Grady mistakenly called Edward J.'s office asking to speak to the candidate, Edward F. O'Grady told the bewildered Edward J. King he was going to drive to Fall River the next day for a campaign breakfast and set up some interviews for him. Plans were nearly finalized when they realized they were the victims of a case of mistaken identity.

"We both broke up laughing," Edward J. recalls, "And I asked him to send my regards to Edward F."

The two candidates say they could have done without some of the mistaken calls.

Edward J. relates the tale of an irate Republican who called him shortly after the Republican state party chairman, Gordon Nelson, had taken a controversial position on the party's platform.

"She just started screaming into the phone, 'Now look Ed, Gordon has just gone too far this time,' " the Democrat said. "That was one call I was more than happy to give to my opponent — even if I agreed with her."

And there is the case of the young Democratic campaign worker sent to pick up some campaign literature so that Edward J.'s son could drive it to his father's home. The worker, however, wound up at the wrong King's campaign headquarters.

"Well, I knew he had the wrong headquarters, because none of my kids are old enough to drive," the Republican King said. "But I couldn't resist. We piled him up with literature, but when he took a look at the picture it finally hit him that 'Gee, something's wrong here.' "

The press in Massachusetts hasn't helped clear up the case of political double vision.

When Edward F. King announced recently that he was withdrawing his invitation to New Hampshire Gov. Meldrim Thomson Jr. to appear at a fund-raiser as his guest of honor, the aquiline features of Edward J. King stared out from the television tube as the story was related. An alert television news anchorman noted afterward, "Well, it wasn't the first time and it wond't be the last."

Energy dilemma costly

GREENSBURG, La. (AP) — The police jurors of St. Helena Parish face a dilemma: drive holes in the concrete walls of the parish's old jail-courthouse or watch electric bills go through the roof.

The state fire marshal says the building, opened in the 1930s, must be properly ventilated for gas space heaters used to heat the offices and jail.

But because of the foot-thick concrete walls, $200 would have to be spent for each of the 22 holes necessary to accommodate six-inch exhaust pipes for the heaters.

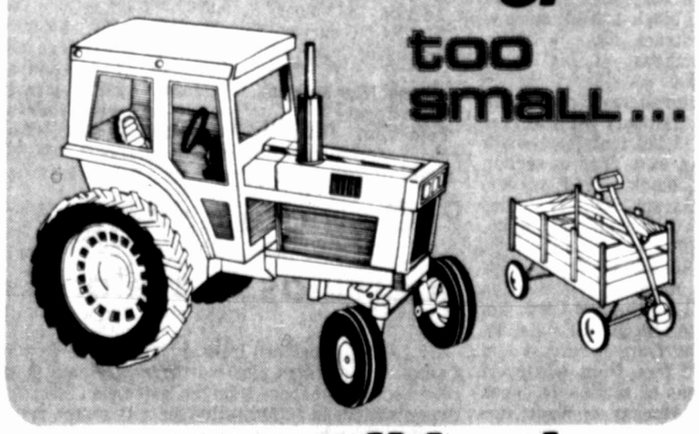

The police jurors, which are equivalent to county council members, say the alternative is to buy electric space heaters.

1 3-oz. package lemon flavored gelatin
1 cup boiling water
1 8-ounce or 3 3-ounce packages cream cheese
½ cup sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 tall can MILNOT, (13 ozs.) whipped
3 cups graham cracker crumbs (or less if desired)
½ cup butter or margarine, melted

NO-BAKE CHEESE CAKE

Dissolve gelatin in boiling water. Chill until slightly thickened. Cream together cheese, sugar and vanilla; add gelatin and blend well. Fold in stiffly whipped MILNOT. (This can be done with electric mixer.) Mix graham cracker crumbs and melted butter together; pack ⅔ of mixture on bottom and sides of 9 x 13 x 2 inch pan (or larger). Add filling and sprinkle with remaining crumbs. Chill several hours (or overnight). Cut in squares and serve plain or garnished with fruit. 12-16 servings.

Our way is cheese cake made with Milnot. It's wonderfully rich and feather light. Milnot whips light and fluffy right from the can. Because pure vegetable oil replaces butterfat in Milnot, it's rich to start with. Other canned milk products just aren't like Milnot, which you'll discover when you taste your cheese cake made our way. Or rolls, casseroles, sauces, candy and desserts . . . all made our way.

PLO said supplying guerrillas in Ireland

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — The Roman Catholic guerrillas in Northern Ireland have received new weapons from the Palestine Liberation Organization, an authoritative security source says.

Among the weapons are half a dozen American M60 machine guns and explosives, the source told The Associated Press.

The source declined to be identified or give many details. But it is known that the Irish Republican Army's Provisional wing has received at least one shipment of arms from the PLO in recent months.

Five tons of PLO hardware — mortars, rocket launchers, automatic weapons and explosives — were intercepted in Belgium last November. The arms were hidden in electrical transformers en route from Cyprus to the Irish Republic.

"The IRA have plenty of weapons," the security source reported, "although we've captured a lot of their arms including American Armalite rifles."

The Provisionals, fighting a guerrilla war to end British rule of Northern Ireland and unite the Protestant-dominated province with the Catholic-dominated republic to the south, are known to have had links with the Palestinians since 1970. Palestinians have trained Irish guerrillas in Lebanon and Libya, intelligence sources say.

Security chiefs believe the Provisionals plan to step up the campaign they launched before Christmas against the members of the predominantly Protestant police force and Ulster Defense Regiment, the province's 8,000member national guard.

The guerrillas feel this would provoke Protestants extremists into revenge attacks on the Catholic population, the Catholics would turn to the IRA for protection, and the increase in bloodshed would result in new pressure from the British public on the British government to pull out of Northern Ireland.

Supreme Court ruling should pad state fund

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — A Senate leader says the Legislature should have an extra $12 million to $15 million to appropriate this session because of Tuesday's favorable State Supreme Court ruling on the new natural gas conservation tax.

But Senate President Pro Tem Gene Howard, D-Tulsa, chief author of the tax law, said the decision on spending the money is up to "the Senate, the House and the governor."

Gov. David Boren has not taken a public position on whether he favors adding the extra money to budget proposals.

Howard also said the tax will give the state an additional $12 million windfall for appropriation next session.

Most of the additional money probably this session is expected to be appropriated for common schools and higher education.

Howard said if a proposal to close a loophole in diesel fuel tax collections is closed this session, that would give the Transportation Department an extra $8 million to $10 million and would mean none of the gas tax money would need to be allocated for highway construction.

Even if the ruling is appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court, Howard said it probably would be at least two years before the high court made a ruling. "Even if we lost the appeal, we still could spend the money while the appeal was pending," he said.

Eight of the nine justices concurred in the opinion Tuesday upholding the bill's constitutionality. Justice Robert Simms concurred in part and dissented in part.

The tax was enacted last year, but the Legislature has refrained from spending any of the additional revenue because of the appeal to the Supreme Court.

Howard designed the tax to equalize the tax burden between in-state and out-of-state purchasers of natural gas.

Charge denied

HOUSTON (AP)—Superior Oil Co. has denied a charge it hired experts away from the Mobil Corp. to gain trade secrets.

Superior filed in state district court Tuesday its answer to a suit filed earlier by Mobil.

The Mobil suit names as defendants Superior, its president, H. B. Keck, its senior vice president, J. E. Reid, and eight former Mobil employees who joined Superior within the last two years.

The suit alleges Superior began about August 1976 inducing Mobil technical experts to leave Mobil and join Superior and utilize trade secrets and data belonging to Mobil.

The court was asked to assess damages and to enjoin Superior from hiring any additional Mobil employees.

In its answer, Superior made a complete denial of the Mobil charges and demanded a prompt jury trial.

Superior also demanded that Rawleigh Warner Jr., Mobil chairman, personally appear before the jury to offer proof of Mobil's allegations.

It seems that red tape unravels without end

By JACK KEEVER

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The three commissioners who regulate Texas' multibillion dollar oil and gas industry used to send an occasional letter to Washington. Now, when they're not up North, a Telex keeps them in close contact.

The railroad commissioners believe the need for daily messages is yet another sign of increasing efforts in Congress to control the industry in Texas.

ENERGY
OIL & GAS

"I didn't become a member of the railroad commission to peacefully preside over the pillage and plunder of the natural resources of this state by the federal government," fumes commission chairman Mack Wallace.

His voice is one of a growing chorus in Texas against the federal bureaucracy.

"Texas Oil For Texans, Secession Now," proclaims a bumper sticker favored by House Speaker Billy Clayton.

Publisher Michael Levy of Texas Monthly noted this month that when the magazine published a "tongue-in-cheek" article suggesting that Texas secede from the Union "a number of folks . . . thought it was a great idea." The article, he said, was read into the Congressional Record.

The strong ties that bind — sometimes until they hurt — are financial.

A recent state agency study showed that more than 52 federal agencies administer some 975 separate aid programs. Total state expenditures last year were $6.6 billion, and $1.85 billion, or 25.1 percent, came from the federal government.

"They're on you all the time, from the cradle to the grave," says former Gov. John Connally, whose complaints about federal "intervention" go back a decade. "Every single thing puts you under the domination of the federal government."

It seems that the red tape unravels without end.

For example, Wallace said he has been told that a proposal to pipe Alaskan crude oil through idle natural gas lines into West Texas "will take 700 permits from different agencies and states."

Temple, Texas, inventor Arnold Burke tried to submit an engine to the government as a solution to the energy crisis but was informed by the Economic Research and Development Administration that it would take nine months to evaluate the paperwork.

Many Texas officials would side with Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, who described a proposal of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) to install toilets and drinking fountains in farm fields as an "insanity."

"I tend to agree with the farmer who remarked to OSHA officials: 'If you actually carry through on your plan to have field sanitary facilities installed throughout the length and breadth of America, you are indeed full of the stuff which will accumulate in those devices.'"

"The feds" are the target of nearly every Texan in public office or on the campaign trail.

In a speech just before quitting the railroad commission at the end of 1977, Jim Langdon said of Texans, "If there's one thing they're telling me, it is they want the commission to head off federal intervention."

Attorney general candidate Price Daniel Jr. said, "There are frequently great contradictions in the regulations promulgated by various government bureaucracies. . . . the Coast Guard requires that doorway sills on ships be built high so that water won't slop inside when seas get rough, but OSHA requires that they be built low so that crew members won't trip over them and get hurt.

McDermott firm fined $1 million by court

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — J. Ray McDermott & Co., the world's largest builder of offshore oil rigs, has been fined $1 million for violating federal racketeering, fraud and campaign-finance laws.

The New Orleans-based company pleaded guilty Wednesday to the charges in a seven-count bill of information filed by U.S. Attorney Gerald Gallinghouse.

U.S. District Judge Morey Sear accepted the guilty plea and imposed fines and penalties totaling $1 million. Sear told the company to pay up by Monday.

Prosecutors charged that McDermott defrauded Tenneco Oil Co. of hundreds of thousands of dollars from 1971 to 1974 through a scheme made possible by $508,615 in bribes to Schacht V. McCollum, a Tenneco vice president.

McCollum, who lives in Texas and is no longer with Tenneco, has not been charged. However, U.S. Attorney Daniel Bent said the government investigation is continuing and that more charges may result.

"Part of the agreement under which McDermott was allowed to plead guilty was that McDermott would cooperate with the government investigation," Bent said.

McDermott also pleaded guilty to making illegal campaign contributions to Reps. David Treen and Henson Moore, both R-La., and to bringing in $12,000 in cash from abroad without reporting it to customs.

Treen and Moore said the contributions were made through individual McDermott employees. The congressmen said they returned the money when they learned it was corporate contributions.

McDermott admitted making illegal contributions totaling $1,200 to Treen in 1975 and $1,000 to Moore in 1974.

McDermott admitted bribing the Tenneco vice president to obtain savings on cost-plus contracts for work done by Tenneco for McDermott in the Gulf of Mexico area.

According to the charge, McCollum agreed to deliver the contracts if McDermott would secretly pay him kickbacks totaling 2½ percent of the jobs.

McDermott agreed to the deal and admitted paying the bribes to McCollum in five installments from 1971 to 1974.

Prosecutors said the contracts resulted in $897,999 in extra profits to McDermott. Judge Sear ordered McDermott to forfeit that money, and he imposed additional fines totaling $103,000

Stock market loses

NEW YORK (AP) — Reports of losses by Chrysler Corp. helped keep the stock market in ratreat today.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which had lost ground in each of the past nine sessions and closed Wednesday at a 34-month low, slipped another 3.99 to 745.06 by noontime today.

Declines outnumbered advances by a 4-3 margin among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

A major contributor to the Dow's decline was Chrysler Corp., which fell 1 to 11¼ in active trading.

The company reported a $49.7 million loss for the fourth quarter of last year, and said it expacted to show a pv707$-ikt current quarter as well.

Brokers also noted general concern over the 80-day-old coal strike and accumulating signals that the economy got off to a sluggish start in the new year.

In addition, it was evident that traders were disappointed over the market's showing Wednesday, when an early attempt at a rally attracted little support and the Dow finished with a fractional loss.

Noon readings today showed the NYSE's comosite index down .18 at 48.51 and the American Stock Exchange market value index off .17 at 122.78.

Volume on the Big Board came to 8.24 million shares in the first two hours, against 8.59 million in the comparable period Wednesday.

New law may curb private pension plans

By SPENCER RICH
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — A few years ago Diamond Reo Truck Co. and its four employee pensions funds went broke. But today 700 former workers are still collecting $115,000 a month in pension checks, some as large as $350.

The difference is that the checks come from the government.

The checks are sent out by a little-known new Labor Department agency, the Pension Bénefit Guaranty Corp.

PBGC amounts to a safety net spread by the government under the nation's private employee pension plans. And the Diamond Reo case is an example of how it is supposed to work. Indeed, thanks to PBGC, thousands of other employees of bankrupt private pension plans are collecting their monthly checks just as if nothing had gone wrong.

THAT IS THE GOOD side of PBGC. But there is also a not-so-good side.

PBGC, created by a 1974 law, is financed by insurance premiums assessed against employers who operate private pension plans. But these premiums are far too low to cover all the potential liabilities the agency might have to assume, particularly if some very large plan, such as the United Mine Workers', were to go broke.

In addition, PBGC is losing two crucial lawsuits that could cripple its powers. Also, many pension experts believe that some of the 1974 law's requirements are, through red tape and paperwork requirements and costs, retarding the growth of new employee pension plans.

Congress seems certain to take up these issues this year.

Possibly the most serious is the inadequacy of premium income to meet potential obligations.

Generally, employee pension systems are of two kinds: single employer, where one firm administers and funds plan of its own, and multi-employer, in which a number of employers in the same industry (coal, for example) pay into a single fund usually administered by big union or a union-management board. Of about 29 million workers subject to PBGC premiums, about 22 million are in single-employer plans and 7 million in multi-employer.

EXPERTS ESTIMATE that the total obligations of all private pension funds are about $350 billion today, while their assets are about $200 billion to $250 billion. This means that if the plans went broke today, liabilities might be as high as $150 billion.

No one expects all funds to go belly-up at once, but PBGC executive director Matt Lind recently reported to Congress that about 12 percent of the multi-employer funds, with unfunded liabilities of nearly $4 billion (chiefly in declining industries), are experiencing "extreme or significant financial hardship."

PBGC's resources and expected income are pitifully inadequate to pay for even this small portion. They are even inadequate to handle the United Mine Workers retirement fund, which has obligations of $20 million a month and virtually no current income or reserves, should it go broke because of the coal strike.

Under the 1974 law single-employer funds were assessed $1 per year per worker and a separate insurance fund was set up for them. Last year the assessment was raised to $2.60 to shore up the fund. PBGC was required to take over the liabilities of any insured single-employer fund if it failed.

FOR MULTI-EMPLOYER INSURANCE, a different system was devised.

When the law was passed, many administrators of these plans argued they didn't really need insurance because, if one employer folded, the fund simply continued to live off the others.

Therefore, Congress set a smaller insurance premium, 50 cents per worker per year, and gave PBGC discretion until Jan. 1, 1978, about assuming the liabilities of an insured multi-employer plan if it went broke. (It has done so on two occasions, with the millinery workers, and with milk drivers of New Jersey.)

The discretionary period has now been extended to July 1, 1979, but in the meantime experts believe it has become clear that multi-employer plans in declining industries are probably most in danger of failing.

What is even clearer is that, at 50 cents per worker per year, multi-employer insurance couldn't come close to assuming the liabilities of even one big fund.

As of last Sept. 30, the two insurance funds combined had $178 million in assets and $273 million in liabilities for about 15,000 current or future pensioners in failed plans which PBGC has taken over.

PBGC DOES HAVE, under the law, the right to sue for 30 percent of a company's net worth to pay for defaulted pension obligations if PBGC takes over the pension system. But this is a long, complicated procedure. Moreover, many companies — for example a service business with little property or machinery — have few assets.

PBGC is facing two major courtroom challenges that could cripple the whole system. It has lost the first round of maneuvering in both.

In one case, U.S. District Court in Los Angeles has ruled that most multi-employer plans aren't covered by the insurance system and PBGC has no right to collect premiums. If PBGC loses its appeal, insurance protection for multi-employer plans could be wiped out.

THE SECOND CHALLENGE involves the right of PBGC to sue for 30 percent of a company's net worth to make up defaults. The issue is whether all members of a controlled group of businesses are liable for the obligations of one of the group which defaults. For example, if a company has a subsidiary that defaults, can PBGC go after the parent for the money?

In this case, a special master has recommended to a U.S. district court in Massachusetts that the court deny PBGC's claim that all members of a controlled group are liable.

There has been a considerable slowdown in the formation of new employee pension plans — and a speedup in termination of old ones — since the 1974 law was passed. Some people blame this on the law, on the insurance costs and on the 30 percent seizure provisions.

"I THINK THE LAW is a factor in the slowup of plan growth," said PBGC Director Lind in a recent interview. But he added that no one is absolutely certain and that other factors may be involved, such as high unemployment in recent years and a hesitation about undertaking new plans until certain aspects of the law are clarified.

Experts say improved eligibility and tougher funding requirements mean higher costs for employers. For example, before the law was passed, it was estimated that less than one-third of the workers covered by employee retirement plans would ultimately obtain pensions.

Garfunkel meets first solo tour with fresh songs, ideas

By MARY CAMPBELL
AP Newsfeatures Writer

Art Garfunkel is making his first tour since the farewell performances of Simon and Garfunkel in 1970.

Since he's doing it, he's doing it in a big way — 50 dates, all across America, in February, March and April. And he'd like to tour again, next fall.

Garfunkel has a new album out, "Watermark," on Columbia, and a single, "Wonderful World," both climbing the bestselling charts.

This is only his third solo album. The first was "Angel Clare" in 1973 and the second, "Breakaway," in 1975.

"On that I really gave up a lot of producer control to Richard Perry," he says. "I was very much interested in taking direction.

"The sound and what we were going to was a certain kind of commercial sound, to listen to late Friday nights at home, very smooth.

"The new album is more personal. It is expressing myself on the nose. I chose songs I had a strong response to — for no other consideration than this is what I like. Usually I will find a common ground, what I like and what will make a good album from the point of view of other people's taste.

"That's part of the reason for this tour. This album is so much my baby, I'm anxious to tour in connection with it and help its popularity along."

Also, Garfunkel says, in the past when the question arose as to whether to tour or to work on a new album, he always "was drawn to the controlling of a studio situation over a live situation."

Now, he says, maybe he has made enough albums that he wants a change of pace.

Garfunkel describes himself as a cautious person, who doesn't quickly jump into new situations. And, when asked the why of something, he usually mentions more than one factor that went into the why.

When he was a boy, his parents realized that he had a good voice. But he didn't perform for family gatherings. He usually did his singing when he was off walking someplace by himself. Now he often drives a car across the country instead of flying. Not only does he enjoy the cities, towns and countryside of America, but he puts cassettes into his car's player and practices singing with them.

He told Gladys Knight, when he appeared on a TV show with her recently, that he'd been singing along with her cassettes, "trying to cop some tricks. I wanted some of her nuances and phrasing."

With "hundreds of repeat practice attempts," he says, he got them. "If I'm about to make an album I'll do a lot of singing for the month or two before."

Recently he had a strep throat and his doctor recommended that he see a vocal coach. He did, for one two-hour session. "It was somewhat of a revelation. I came at singing with no training whatever. This guy says almost all problems come from an insufficient amount of air." This has given Garfunkel some things to think about improving but won't change the way he sounds.

Another matter in which he has been cautious has been making films. He was in "Catch 22" and "Carnal Knowledge," the latter in 1971, and got good reviews.

"Then I turned them down for a few years, then offers stopped coming. I was offered good things but I never succeeded in visualizing the film from the script. The thing that makes you say, 'Go ahead,' is visualizing what you're getting into.

"Novice that I am, reading a script didn't do it for me. I've come to feel what it takes is a director to help you visualize the film and give you that confidence to go ahead."

Nick Roeg, who directed "The Man Who Fell to Earth," starring David Bowie, has an idea for a movie starring Garfunkel and Sissy Spacek. "It was all set and now seems to be on hold due to uncertain backing. I'm keen to do it.

"If 1978 were to go perfectly according to my master plan, this tour would be followed by recording another album. I have a real appetite for this tour; I've been working daily to get ready.

"Again in the fall, I'd tour and probably include Europe. If I can continue my scenario of this perfect year, I would make a film at the end of the tour. Then I'il check into a hospital and recover."

Some people have said that while Garfunkel has a beautiful voice, he sings songs that are too sweet. He doesn't think so. "It's a matter of taste. I choose songs I like. I like blues, songs that give you goose bumps, sensitive songs, examinations of things — feelings, relationships, human behavior, the natural world. I love melody. I love songs that are very well written, that are a plus instead of a minus."

When he has written songs himself, he says, they were about C-plus. "Some of us achieve a high level of skill writing songs and others don't.

The thoughtful airport

The Japanese government is committed to opening the new Tokyo International Airport—described by airline industry officials as "the world's most inconvenient airport"—on March 30, seven years behind schedule.

—The Guardian

Opposition to the new Tokyo International Airport, built on Hokkaido, sparked a long and bitter struggle. The airport surely will open, but that problems will remain also appears certain. In the hope of finding solutions to these problems, the Japanese government dispatched its aviation minister to Dallas-Fort Worth, the world's least inconvenient, most considerate airport.

"Why is this airport so popular? What is the secret of your success?" the minister asked a number of Metroplexians after noting controversy is indeed nonexistent at the world's most considerate airport. (A Metroplexian, it should be said, is either any person living between Sherman and Waco, Tyler and Cisco, or, a rare form of schizophrenia afflicting individuals living at altitudes over 10,000 feet.)

"What I like about the airport is the phones," a Fort Worth man said. "Everywhere else a phone call costs 10 cents, but here at D-FW, they're a quarter."

"But why do you like that?" said the minister.

"Simple. Ever notice how, when you go to use a pay phone, all you have is quarters? Never fails. You put the quarter in, and Ma Bell keeps the change. You're so mad you smash the phone with your fist. I've broken my hand twice that way. But here at D-FW, no problem."

"You don't think 25 cents for a phone call is too much?" the minister said.

"You been to an orthopedist in this country lately?" said the Fort Worther.

"What I like is the signs," said a Dallas man whose head was woefully tilted to one side. "They're all written perpendicularly rather than horizontally, like signs everywhere else. What you do is develop a crick like mine, and they're a snap to read. My doctor says it's permanent, too."

"The signs?"

"The crick."

"I like the parking lots," a Fort Worth woman told the Japanese minister. "I don't get much exercise at home, but here, no matter which lot you park in, it's five miles to the terminal. Now that's what I call thinking about everyone's needs. I'm a health nut, you see."

"What kind?" said the minister.

"Health," said the woman.

"Why don't you get much exercise at home?" the minister asked.

"Because I'm always out here," the Fort Worth woman said.

"I like the individuality," a Garland man said. "This airport is distinctly Texan. I mean, when you're here, you know you're not in Portland, or Atlanta, or KC."

"What's distinctive about this place?"

"The plastic, mainly. You won't find plastic like this anywhere else, because it's Texas plastic. There's absolutely no mistaking it. There's 20 tons of it here, too."

"The location is the big thing for me," a Mesquite man said. "Used to be I had to drive about 10 miles to Love Field. But D-FW is twice as far if it's a day. Twice as many lights, too. I've counted 'em, and it's exactly twice as many."

"That's good?"

"Sure is, when you realize they were thinking of putting this airport in Abilene, which is pretty near 200 miles from Mesquite. Now THAT I would have called inconvenient. Not to mention inconsiderate."

"I like the little train that goes between the terminals," a Dallas man said. "Just between us, sometimes I come out here just to ride it. Very thrilling."

"But I'm told it isn't dependable," the minister said.

"Is there another kind of train?" said the Dallas man.

"In Japan we have dependable trains, and they go 200 miles per hour," the minister said.

"I think that would be a little too fast for here," the Dallas man said.

"What do I like about D-FW?" and Arlington man said. "I'll tell you what I like. 400 flights. That's what I like."

"I don't understand," said the minister.

"Nothing to it," the Arlington man said. "There are 400 flights a day here. That's 400 chances to get far away from this airport fast. What more can a man ask of an airport?"

Genovese..."something to sip between puffs"

Out of debt, and she'll drink to that

NEW YORK (AP) — Stouthearted Genovese Camlin, who made it to her neighborhood bar during a blizzard when even the Postal Service couldn't get there, will celebrate her 94th birthday by watching her $10,000 barroom tab get torn up.

Miss Camlin has been visiting the No-Name bar in Greenwich Village every day for 10 years. Each day she has a bottle of Guinness stout and puts it on the tab.

"Guinness to her is like a vitamin pill," said saloonkeeper Danny Lettieri, who keeps the No-Name open seven days a week. "During the blizzard this month she made it even when the postman didn't."

Lettieri said that tearing up the bill is the least he could do.

"I need something to sip between puffs of the two cigarettes I smoke over there," Miss Camlin says of her daily trips from the Greenwich Village nursing home where she lives.

"She was 83 when she asked if she could run up the tab," said Lettieri. "And I figured...how long could it last?"

House Texans split on minor legislation

WASHINGTON — Here's how area House members were recorded on major roll call votes Feb. 9 thru Feb. 15. There were no Senate votes.

REDWOODS. Failed, 116 for and 274 against, to cut a proposed expansion of Redwoods National Park in California. The vote was on a motion to send the bill (HR 3813) back to committee, where, among other cuts, the expansion would be trimmed from 48,000 to 14,000 acres. After failure of the recommital motion, the House passed the bill and sent it to conference with the Senate. The bill adds 48,000 acres at an acquisition cost of $359 million, plus a 30,000-acre "buffer zone" that could be added later by the Secretary of Interior at additional cost.

ROLL CALL REPORT

Members voting "nay" favored the 48,000-acre expansion of Redwoods National Park.

Reps. Samuel Hall (D-1), James Collins (R-3), Ray Roberts (D-4), Bill Archer (R-7), W. R. Poage (D-11), Omar Burleson (D-17) and Dale Milford (D-24) voted "yea."

Reps. Charles Wilson (D-2), Jim Mattox (D-5), Jack Brooks (D-9), Jake Pickle (D-10), Jack Hightower (D-13), Kika de la Garza (D-15), Richard White (D-16), Barbara Jordan (D-18), Henry Gonzalez (D-20) and Robert Krueger (D-21) voted "nay."

Reps. Olin Teague (D-6), Bob Eckhardt (D-6), James Wright (D-12), John Young (D-14), George Mahon (D-19), Bob Gammage (D-22) and Abraham Kazen (D-23) did not vote.

AQUACULTURE. Passed, 234 for and 130 against, a bill (HR 9370) to establish a national program to develop aquaculture, defined in debate as "the cultivation of aquatic plants and animals in marine brackish and fresh water." At a projected cost of $268.8 million over six years, a new agency in the Department of Commerce would stimulate the breeding of commercially-desirable fish within U.S. territorial waters. To that end, the department would make available to private industry such inducements as federal loan guarantees and insurance to attract development capital.

Members voting "yea" favored establishing a new federal program for aquaculture.

Mattox, Eckhardt, Wright, Hightower, Young, de la Garza, White, Jordan and Gonzalez voted "yea."

Hall, Collins, Roberts, Archer, Brooks, Pickle, Poage, Burleson, Mahon, Kazen and Milford voted "nay."

Wilson, Teague, Krueger and Gammage did not vote.

BLACK LUNG. Adopted, 264 for and 113 against, the conference report on HR 4544, the Black Lung Benefits Reform Act of 1977. The bill liberalizes the procedures under which coal miners receive disability payments for pneumoconiosis (black lung disease) and related occupational ailments. It was headed for the White House and President Carter's signature.

It's thrust is to make it easier for miners to obtain payment for future and existing impairment, at the same time costs are shifted from the U.S. Treasury to coal mine operators.

Members voting "yea" favored passage of the bill.

Wilson, Mattox, Eckhardt, Brooks, Wright, Hightower, Young, de la Garza, White, Jordan, Gonzalez and Kazen voted "yea."

Hall, Collins, Roberts, Archer, Pickle, Poage, Burleson, Mahon and Milford voted "nay."

Teague, Krueger and Gammage did not vote.

Carving termed therapy

INTERNATIONAL FALLS, Minn. (AP) — Tom Karsnia carves his way through the northern Minnesota winter.

"I get a lot of satisfaction from making things," says the part-time soapstone carver and furniture maker. "The long winters can be depressing and working with wood is one of the best kinds of therapy.

"For me, getting out in the shop actually makes winters too short now. There just isn't enough time during the winter months to do everything I'd like to do."

Karsnia, 42, would like to retire at 50 or 55 and work full time at his 12-year-old hobby. He works four hours a day at it now, after his job testing paper for Boise Cascade.

Everything in the Krasnia home is handmade except for the beds, a couch and chair — even the clothes hamper in the bedroom. He has built intricately carved tables, planters, hutches, deacon's benches, and fireplace stools, and has built fireplaces, sidewalks and garden terraces of rock.

In each piece of Rainy Lake soapstone he carves what he sees — usually a bird.

"I always liked art and I liked to do things with my hands. I started with wood first and then was introduced to soapstone. I found it nicer to work with.

"I can't think of a better setting than Rainy Lake for a person to pursue art," he says. "I feel that living up here in this country is like being in a big stadium, way up in the top seats and looking at the rat race of the rest of the world go by."

In the summer Karsnia escapes at the end of a fishing pole "and I'm immediately at peace with life." Besides the stringers of walleye that he brings home, his summer garden is the envy of everyone driving by on County Road 94.

He picks mushrooms and could easily be called a gourmet cook. The 10 gallons of wine he made this year include chokecherry, pincherry, rhubarb, gooseberry and wild grape.

The artist streak apparently runs in the family. His dad could draw and his grandfather was a craftsman. And most of Tom and Edna Karsnia's five children appear to be artistic.

"I want to be remembered when I die," said Karsnia. "I don't want to die and just be remembered as a man who was a good worker."

White House softball team preparing for spring; president will not play

By FRANK CORMIER

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House is fooling tens of thousands of tourists who troop through the famed Red Room each year.

To impress the visitors, decorators have lined up a couple of dozen authors in a glass-front bookcase. Those whose names are emblazoned in gold on red leather bindings include Adam Smith, Goethe, Edmund Burke, Locke, Berkeley, Hume and Dante.

There's only one jarring note to this impressive display calculated to induce visions of a hard-working president spending off hours devouring classical literature.

These are bindings, not books. The space behind them is empty.

There are patches of snow around Washington, but in some White House offices thoughts already are turning to spring and prospects for another busy season for one of the nation's most publicized softball teams.

"Please don't write anything about us," urged Mark S. Weiner, manager of the White House team. "After all the publicity last year, we got about a thousand requests for games from all around the country."

Weiner, a staff assistant to President Carter, deals with presidential appointments and scheduling — and with scheduling the team that carries the White House banner.

Looking forward to launching the new season in April, Weiner so far has set up a game here that month with employees of WDIF Radio, Marion, Ohio.

In 1977, visiting teams came from as far away as Indianapolis and Atlanta. Pressure of business bars the White House stalwarts from traveling.

"Most of us are just out for the exercise," Weiner reported. In the next breath, however, he let his competitive instincts surface, saying that in setting up the 1978 schedule "we especially want to play those that beat us last year."

In a season stretching from April through September, the White House team last year won 46 games and lost 24.

Although Carter is enthusiastic about softball as a form of exercise, he never has played with the White House group. One can only imagine the hubbub he'd cause were he to show up at one of the public park diamonds the team uses.

The president confines his playing — he's a pitcher — to games in his hometown of Plains, Ga., and at Camp David, Md., his Marine-guarded weekend retreat.

That Carter and brother Billy, another regular at games in Plains, are hotly competitive cannot be doubted. During one outing there last summer, the brothers, who always play for opposing teams, became so heated in arguing about a disputed putout that Billy hauled off and threw a glove at the president.

In Carter's absence, the best known regular on the White House team is press secretary Jody Powell, the shortstop. The pitcher is a woman, scheduling director Frances L. Voorde.

Midland Youth Center chatter

By Dinah Boyd, Kim Wood and Sheri Bailey

Did someone say only 63 more days of school? Yessiree, there's only one more quarter left. Today and Friday the students will be paralyzed in their seats while they work on their final exams. But after their exams on Friday, many students will hit the slopes at Ruidoso. Have fun and please come back in one piece.

CATOICO was a great success! The court was sensational and the band was terrific! Hope everyone made it to the dance and enjoyed the special occasion. The next big event put on by Student Council members will be magazine sales. They will start selling magazine subscriptions the first part of March, so don't subscribe yet. Please wait and buy yours from the Midland High Student Council members.

This week the Junior Rotarians are Penny Vachal and Paul Boruff. The Junior Lion is Mary Moberly. CONGRATULATIONS!!!

This weekend the swim team will travel to Lubbock to participate in the regionals competition. This is a big event for the swim team and the most difficult one because this meet will prove who is the best and who will qualify for state. GOOD LUCK AND ALL THE WAY TO STATE.

The tennis team took the district title again this year with its win over the Odessa Bronchos last Tuesday. The tennis squad has completed its dual matches victoriously and now will begin tournament play. KEEP UP THE GOOD WORK!

The boys golf team will travel to the border this weekend to play in the Del Rio Invitational. The golf team has really represented MHS well this year. WE ARE PROUD OF YOU AND GOOD LUCK.

The baseball team is looking forward to a good season. The boys played a few scrimmages and will play another one this Saturday at 1 p.m. against the Rebels on the Lee High diamond. GOOD LUCK.

REMEMBER THIS DATE: MARCH 15 at 8:30 p.m. Larry Gatlin will appear in concert in the Midland High Auditorium as a Midland-Lee Youth Centers benefit. Tickets are on sale at both Youth Centers and will be available at the door on performance evening: Reserved seats—$15 and general admission—$6.

Larry Gatlin has appeared as a guest on many shows and has been nominated many times for Best Male Vocalist of the Year. TONIGHT, he will be on the Awards Program. A couple of his hit songs are "Broken Lady" and "Love is Just a Game." Support of this concert will help defray much of the maintenance and operational expenses of the Youth Centers for 1978. KEEP THIS DATE IN MIND: MARCH 15.

Have a good 3-day holiday (Monday is a holiday) and that's life,

Dinah
Kim
Sheri

P.S. Rasco is very up tight about the CATOICO decorations and the clean-ups. This includes the Student Council, since it was its dance.

Stations to change

NEW YORK (AP) — Tomorrow's gas station will be selfservice, with big "pumpers," larger though fewer in number than those of today, and more appealing to the eye, believes William Olcott, chief editor, National Petroleum News.

Olcott sees hoses being positioned overhead and motorists reading gallons and prices on more sophisticated electronic readout displays.

Instead of cash, he expects that payment will be made through a type of credit card that also unlocks the pump to allow gasoline to flow.

Olcott also envisions more and more motorists doing their own tuneups and other work, using facilities rented at service stations.

Rebels, Pack open track season Friday

By TERRY WILLIAMSON

FORT STOCKTON—Spring may or may not be ready to raise its pretty head over the West Texas landscape, but at least, Fort Stockton thinks it's time, and has scheduled the Comanche Relays here for Friday and Saturday.

Fort Stockton usually gets an early jump on Spring, and the results often brings cold winds or snow mixed with track. At any rate, Midland High and Midland Lee thinclads will show their wares for the first time this season. Both hope that the weather of the past few days holds for the weekend.

BOTH LEE and Midland High would like to have strong showings this year since two major track meets are scheduled for the Tall City this year. The Tall City Relays will come to Midland March 17 and Lee will play host to the District 5-4A meet April 14. This weekend is where it all begins.

The two local units will meet a strong, but small field here this weekend with Odessa Permian, Del Rio, El Paso High, Abilene Cooper, San Angelo and Lubbock Monterey joining Midland and Lee.

The meet also features two other divisions with Lake View, Pecos, Seminole, Snyder, Monahans, Andrews and Fort Stockton in the AAA Division while Presidio, Buena Vista, McCamey, Jal, Van Horn, Marfa, Crane, Alpine, Alamo Catholic, Denver City, Stanton, Iraan, Kermit, Rankin, Wall, O'Donnell and Sanderson in the lower division.

MIDLAND HIGH returns six lettermen from last year with Bryon Booker, Jeff Adkins, Alvin Price, Chuck Stump, Pat Darden and Bobby Floyd while Lee has eight returnees in Jerry Moore, Jamie Berry, Doug Guthrie, Arthur Pertile, Wes Watley, Steve Hooper, Ricky Parsons and Jeff McCowan. There are also enough newcomers around to make things interesting.

Several of the above athletes did well in the district meet a year ago. Lee's McCowan won a regional berth in the shot put with a second place finish while Booker was third for the Bulldogs. Both should be better this year.

IN FACT, Lee Coach Sam Volpe thinks the shot put will be the Rebels' top strength. Volpe thinks McCowan, and juniors Herb Pearce and Rodney Taylor will all go over 50-feet this weekend.

"The shot put is the only event in which I would say that we are strong right now. I think we have some point potential elsewhere, and I think we can be competitive, but I don't know if that will be enough to win any meets or not," Volpe said.

Midland High Coach Ed Nixon's Bulldogs should be extra strong in the distance races again this year even without the services of Robert Wilson, who placed third in state in the mile run.

"CHUCK (STUMP) has been looking very good so far this year," Nixon said. "I think he may have a chance to be as good as Wilson. Jeff Adkins and Pat Darden give us some depth in the distant races and that should be our strength although Alvin Price has a chance to be very good in the dashes."

Stump placed third in the district 880 last year, just missing a regional berth which went to Lee's David Skinner, who has departed. Lee's Pertile finished fifth in that race, but has since suffered through a bad burn and was in bed for eight weeks earlier in the school year. He has yet to regain top form, but he could do it.

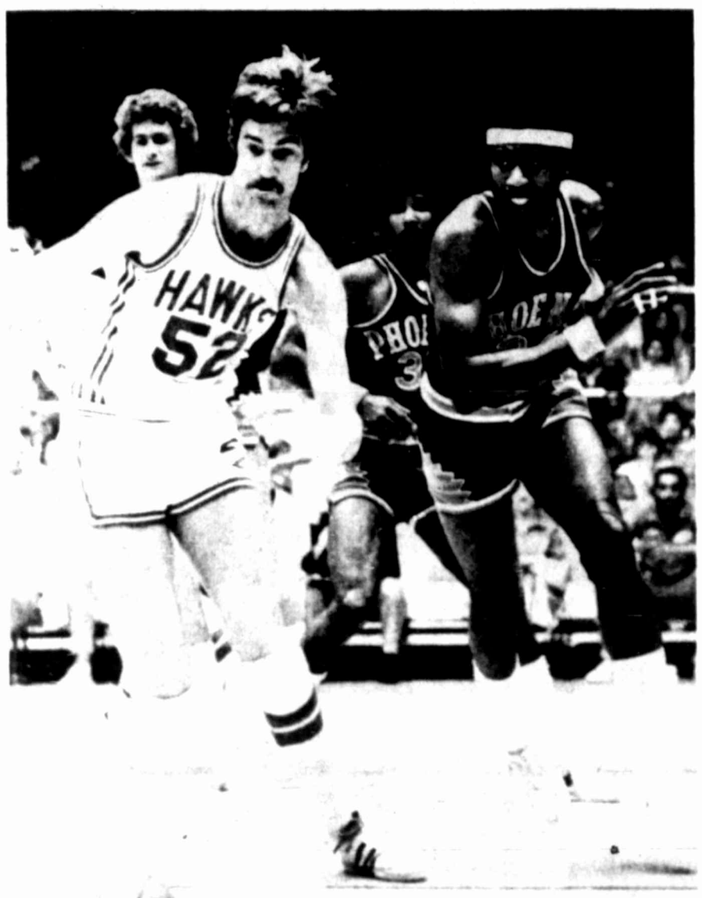

Midland's Adkins and Lee's Parsons finished fifth and sixth last year in the district mile. Lee's Hooper also won a couple of mile races last year, and all three should be better this time around.

MIDLAND'S PRICE was third in the district 100 and was disqualified for running out of his lane in the 220 after finishing third. Both were near regional berth misses, and this could be his year.

Lee's Berry was fourth last year in the district 440 with a 50.9 seconds and fourth in the Long jump with a leap in excess of 21-feet. Berry could turn out to be one of the real workhorses for the Rebels this year with relay duty on top of the other two events.

Volpe has also been impressed with sophomores Gary Butler and Phil Carlton. That could give the Rebels some relay punch if the two youngsters

Chapparals end season

HOBBS, N.M. — Midland College closes out its regular season tonight against New Mexico Junior College here tonight in a Western Junior College Conference basketball game.

The Chaps retain a slim hope for a berth in the Regiom V playoffs, but must win tonight to keep it alive.

The Chaps are 7-11 in conference play, but three teams already have eight wins and if two reach nine, MC is out of it.

Western Texas leads with a 12-5 record while Odessa College and New Mexico Military Institute are tied for second at 11-6 while Amarillo and Howard each are 8-8. Clarendon is the other team ahead of Midland with an 8-10 record.

Midland kept its hopes alive with a 77-73 overtime win over South Plains Monday.

New Mexico, in last place with a 5-12 record, lost to Midland, 86-83, the last time around, but has among its victories conquests of Odessa College and New Mexico Military Institute.

Tar Heels facing two tough ACC contests

By The Associated Press

The North Carolina Tar Heels seem to have a power shortage just when they need a spark.

Playing tonight against North Carolina State and then again Saturday against Duke, injuries have short-circuited the nation's eighth-ranked team in the most crucial part of their Atlantic Coast Conference schedule.

They have already lost starting center Rich Yonaker to injury and backup center Geff Crompton to ineligibility. Now forward Mike O'Koren is an "extremely doubtful" starter for the last two games of the regular season and Phil Ford is "50-50."

"This would be a very difficult game even if we had all our players healthy," says North Carolina Coach Dean Smith as he looks forward with apprehension to tonight's game with North Carolina State. "We had everyone for our first two games with State and both were close. Now we have to play at Raleigh, where we lost last year."

Ford, North Carolina's sparkplug all season, hurt his wrist in a game with Virginia last weekend. But it is the loss of people like Yonaker and O'Koren that will especially hurt the Tar Heels against the Wolfpack, points out Smith.

"State dominated the backboard against Clemson last Saturday night," Smith said. "We must outrebound State or at least stay even with them on the backboards."

THE BIGGEST game of the week — and one of the biggest of the entire season — for North Carolina, however, will be played in Chapel Hill on Saturday. No matter what the Tar Heels do tonight, they must beat the Blue Devils to win the ACC's regular-season.

Duke made that circumstance a reality by beating Clemson 78-62 Wednesday night.

Elsewhere, No. 7 DePaul whipped the Air Force Academy 54-41; No. 16 Detroit walloped St. Francis (Pa.) 121-89; 17th-ranked Syracuse edged Niagara 70-69 and No. 18 Georgetown nipped George Washington 78-77 in overtime.

Jim Spanarkel scored 22 points and Mike Gminski 21 to lead Duke past Clemson for the Blue Devils' 20th victory of the season. The Blue Devils took a 43-23 halftime lead.

In that crucial first half, Duke shot 65 percent from the field and forced their ACC colleagues into 14 turnovers.

"I'm just thankful we came out the way we did," said Duke Coach Bill Foster. "I'm glad we got our 20 wins. We had a power failure in the second half. Clemson did a nice job coming back."

Greg Coles keyed the Clemson rally in the second half with 12 points as the Tigers cut the whopping deficit to nine points at one time.

"Defensively, we had no power failure," said the Duke coach. "It was just that we were playing against an outstanding team and we can't keep them down long."

Noted Clemson's Bill Foster: "I was pleased with our performance in the second half. Duke played good defense. They deserved to win. We just made too many turnovers."

CENTER DAVE CORZINE scored 18 points and Joe Ponsetto 11 to power DePaul over Air Force. The victory was the 10th straight for the Blue Demons and their 23rd in 25 games this season.

Smith scores net victory

DENVER (AP) — "It's an evenly matched field. Nobody can overpower anybody," said Stan Smith after the third day of action in a $125,000 men's tennis tournament here.

Smith scored a 6-2, 6-4 victory over John Lloyd of Australia in second-round singles Wednesday night, but he and his partner Arthur Ashe lost in the first-round doubles competition to Bob Hewitt of Australia and Frew McMillan of South Africa 6-7, 6-4, 6-2.

"I did serve well tonight," Smith said after his victory over Lloyd. "I mixed them up more. I got a good percentage of my first serves in."

In another second-round singles match, Tom Leonard scored an upset victory over Mark Cox of England. Leonard utilized 20 service aces to down Cox 7-6, 7-5.

Leonard's four-service ace games at the end of the first set tied it at 6-all, and he then took the tiebreaker, capping it off with a service ace to win 7-3.

"I served well. I just hope there's no let down," said Leonard after the match.

In earlier action Wednesday, Nick Saviano, a 22-year-old lefthander defeated Swiss newcomer Heinz Gunthart 6-3, 3-6, 7-6, and Cliff Drysdale of South Africa took a 2-6, 6-2, 6-3 victory over Jan Norback of Sweden.

Lemons chosen Coach of Year

DALLAS (AP) — Abe Lemons, who brought the Texas Longhorns back from a 13-13 season to a Southwest Conference co-championship with prohibitive favorite Arkansas, has been named The Associated Press Southwest Conference Coach of the Year. Lemons, 56, had successful tenures at independents Oklahoma City and Pan American before he came to Texas last year.

His wit and humor delighted sports writers and his scathing tongue was the bane of league referees who have felt his wrath. But he has the utmost respect of his players and fellow coaches for being a clever strategist behind his clown's mask.

After Texas tied Arkansas for the co-championship and earned a bye into the SWC postseason tournament, Lemons quipped, "We're under the influence—temporarily—of a guardian angel. I just hope he doesn't fly away."

Texas posted a 14-2 conference record and a 22-4 overall mark.

Arkansas guard Ron Brewer was named Player of the Year in a poll of league coaches and Baylor's Vinnie Johnson, the leading scorer with an average of 22.7 points, was selected as Newcomer of the Year.

Brewer, a 6-foot-4 guard who averaged 17 points per game, led the first Southwest Conference team ever to be ranked No. 1 in The AP poll.

Brewer was a unanimous choice by the SWC coaches as Player of the Year.

Johnson, a 6-foot-1 junior college transfer who learned his basketball on the playgrounds of Brooklyn, narrowly missed a berth on the first team All-Conference apparently because of the Bears' second division showing.

Lemons had some competition for his honor as Gerald Myers of Texas Tech and Mike Schuler of Rice each received a vote.

Arkansas landed Brewer, Sidney Moncrief and Marvin Delph on the first team.

Texas had guard John Moore and inside muscle man Ron Baxter.

Texas Tech's Mike Russell was in a tie with Delph for the final spot.

Johnson led the second team which included high-scoring Jim Krivacs of Texas and three University of Houston stars Cecile Rose, Mike Schultz and rebounding whiz Charles Thompson.

Baxter was the only sophomore on the first two teams.

Herzog miffed over fine

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Kansas City Manager Whitey Herzog says a $5,000 fine apparently assessed against the California Angels by Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn is "very unfair."

The fine, which neither Kuhn nor the Angels would verify Wednesday, was slapped on the team for tampering with Herzog.

Herzog told The Associated Press Wednesday in a telephone interview from Florida that he often had talked with Angels owner Gene Autry when the Royals were in Anaheim. But he denied that Autry had ever offered him a job.

"I think the fine is very unfair and I don't think Gene Autry is guilty or anyone in the Angels organization is guilty," said Herzog, in Miami for a golf tournament. "As far as I'm concerned, they never tampered with me."

A spokesman for Commissoner Bowie Kuhn confirmed that a decision had been reached on the matter, but said any information would have to come from the Angels.

E. J. "Buzzie" Bavasi, executive vice president of the Angels, said the team would have no official comment until it received a reply to its protest of the decision. However, Autry declared: "I'm not guilty of a thing."

Joe Burke, Kansas City general manager, said he was aware of reports last year that Herzog might go to the Angels, but he said the Royals had not filed a complaint with the commissioner's office.

Tracy Ringolsby, baseball writer for the Long Beach Independent Press-Telegram, had speculated last Sept. 28 on the possibility of Herzog becoming manager of the California team, and The Associated Press quoted him.

Autry was quoted in Ringolsby's story as saying if Herzog was looking for a job, the Angels owner had one for him. Herzog called that statement harmless.

Reached in Long Beach Wednesday, Ringolsby said that his copy desk had cut out a paragraph which quoted Autry as saying, "I don't want to get involved in tampering, but I certainly would consider Whitey ...if he were available and came to us I would certainly listen."

Burke said he received a call from the commissioner's office after Ringolsby's story appeared, but he said he made it clear that the Royals were not concerned and had no interest in making a protest.

"I guess if I said I was interested in Tom Seaver if he was available, technically I could be accused of tampering," Herzog said. "I think maybe they're (commissioner's office) just being too cautious.

"He and I are good friends, but we never discussed the managerial job," said Herzog. "It seems that every time people see me and Autry talking, as soon as he says, 'Hi,' you see something in the paper."

Herzog, who has signed a one-year contract with Kansas City for 1978, has led the Royals to two American League West titles in 2½ seasons. He was a coach for the Angels for 1½ seasons before taking over the Royals helm July 24, 1975.

Lee girls in cage tuneup

Midland Lee's District 5-4A champion girls basketball team is still marking time for the March 3-4 Regional Playoff Tournament in Abilene, but the long wait was eased again Wednesday when the Rebels secured another exhibition game.

Lee will play District 11-B titlest Ira Friday at 3:30 p.m. in the Snyder Coliseum. The game will serve as a prelude to the AAA Regional Boys Tournament being held the same night.

Lee was beaten, 50-37, Monday by District 10-B winner Forsan, but that was a lot better than sitting around while gething stale. Basketball is a year round thought of the smaller schools, and the Class B competition is sometimes rougher than a AAAA slate where basketball is new.

Lee was faced with a 17-day layoff after winning the 5-4A title on Feb. 13. They have had only the Forsan outing since that time, and need some competition before the regionals, which will be played at Abilene Christian University.

Coach Shirley Stephenson has been putting her 13-player squad through extensive workouts and they welcome the practice game Friday in Snyder.

Working out for the regional tourney next week in Abilene are Patty Adams, Lorry Brown, Jan Carnes, Carla Goodley, Cindy Harrison, Liz Hellinghausen, Deborah Kittle, Schilla McCalister, Deborah Ledbetter, Melissa Oestmann, DeeDee Poole, Leisha Watkins and Gloria Young.

Josie Eldridge also assists Stephenson in the coaching duties for the 5-4A champions.

Navratilova takes net victory

DETROIT (AP) — Third-seeded Virginia Wade meets Renata Tomanova of Czechoslovakia today as second-round action begins in the sixday, $100,000 Women's Professional Tennis Tournament.

Top-seeded Martina Navratilova will meet Mima Jausovec of Yugosiavia. Both played their opening matches Tuesday.

Wade, of England, took an impressive 6-3, 6-2 victory in Wednesday's first-round match against Marita Redondo, coming to the net frequently, volleying and hitting the corners with almost every shot.

In other first-round action Wednesday night, second-seeded Evonne Goolagong of Australia downed England's Michele Tyler. Tyler put on a strong showing in the first set, losing 6-4, but Goolagong put on the pressure to take a 6-1 victory in the second set.

In second-round play, Goolagong will meet Mona Guerrant, who took a 0-6, 6-0, 6-1 victory over Francoise Durr of France in an afternoon match Wednesday.

In other singles matches, fifth-seeded Rosemary Casals earned the right to take on Greer Stevens of South Africa today by defeating Australia's Leslie Hunt 7-5, 6-3.

The day's biggest upset saw Caroline Stoll emerged the winner of her match with sixth-seeded Sue Barker after taking one set 5-3 when Barker became ill and retired. Barker's trainer said the English player recently recovered from a bout with the flu and appeared to be suffering a relapse.

Fourth-seeded Wendy Turnbull of Australia defeated Czechoslovakia's Marsikova 4-6, 6-1, 6-3. Turnbull faces King — who did not earn a seed in the tournament — today.

Australia's Kerry Reid, seeded eighth, defeated Janet Newberry 6-4, 6-0. Reed meets South African Brigitte Cuypers today.

Another Australian, Dianne Fromholtz, defeated Yvonne Vermaak of South Africa 6-3, 6-1, and will take on Renee Richards of the U.S. today.

In doubles, Wade and Durr defeated Leslie Hunt and Regina Marsikova, losing the first set 5-7 but coming back with 6-2, 6-4 victories. The last match of the night saw Billy Jean King and Navratilova downStephanie Tolleson and Sharon Walsh 6-2, 6-2.

In Wednesday's other doubles match, Romania's Virginia Ruzici and Jausovec defeated Nicole Lorenzetti of suburban Bloomfield Hills and Hana Strachonova of Czechoslovakia 2-6, 6-1, 7-6.

Doubles action today will see Wade and Durr against Casals and Marsikova, while Navratilova and King take on Vermaak and Cuypers.

Islander rookie ties NHL record

By The Associated Press

A record that has stood since 1971-72 is on the verge of falling.

When New York Islanders right wing Mike Bossy sent a short backhander past Atlanta goalie Dan Bouchard at 3:09 of the third period Wednesday night, he tied the record of goals by a rookie that Buffalo Sabres left wing Rick Martin had set six seasons ago.

"It feels great," said Bossy, who now has 44 goals in the 52 games of his National Hockey League career. "But I wish we could have gotten a win out of it."

The Islanders did not get a victory because Guy Chouinard scored with 6:09 remaining to salvage a 3-3 tie for Atlanta. Though the outcome extended New York's unbeaten string to seven games, it took some of the lustre off the rookie's shining achievement.

"The Flames are playing much better against us than they were at the first of the year," observed Bossy, noting the Islanders have collected two victories and three ties against the Flames in their five meetings this season. "(Tom) Lysiak and (Eric) Vail are doing much better, too."

The two-goal output marked the 10th multiple-goal game for Bossy this season for the Islanders, who have lost just one of their last 11 games.

"I think we can go all the way in the playoffs," he says, "and if you ask the other guys on the team, they'll say the same thing."

In the other NHL games Wednesday night, Pittsburgh and St. Louis tied 2-2, Chicago beat the New York Rangers 3-2, Boston beat Vancouver 6-4, Minnesota beat Los Angeles 4-1 and Toronto beat Cleveland 5-3.

Penguins 2, Blues 2

Bernie Federko's goal with 2:04 left in the game lifted St. Louis into a tie with Pittsburgh. The Penguins, unbeaten in their last seven games and making a strong bid for a wild-card playoff berth, had taken the lead on a shorthanded goal by Pete Mahovlich at 2:14 of the third period and one by Brian Spencer 3:43 later.

Black Hawks 3, Rangers 2

Ivan Boldirev set a third-period goals by Dale Tallon, Grant Mulvey and Ted Bulley to lead Chicago past the hapless Rangers. The Black Hawks have lost just twice in their last 20 games.

Bruins 6, Canucks 4

Peter McNab scored twice, including the game-winner with 9:10 remaining, vaulting his Bruins into first place.

The triumph, Boston's seventh in their last nine road games, gave the Bruins a twopoint lead over the idle Buffalo Sabres.

North Stars 4, Kings 1

Per-Olov Brasar ignited a three-goal third-period Minnesota helping the North Stars beat Los Angeles. The Kings have won one of their last 10 games.

Maple Leafs 5, Barons 3

Darryl Sittler scored two goals, raising his season's total to 34 and helping Toronto past Cleveland.

Pan Am cagers cinderella team

EDINBURG, Texas (AP) — Pan American Head Basketball Coach Bill White is confident the glass slipper would fit. The only problem is the handsome prince hasn't come calling yet.

"Every year someone wants a cinderella team," he said. "Why not us? I just kinda think we are ready."

White's Broncs have galloped to an 18-4 mark this season. Save for nine points and a halfdozen cases of Russian flu, they would be undefeated.

The statistics are impressive. The best record among major independents in the southwest; the third highest scoring team in the nation—ot points per game—a 6-5 guard—Michael Edwards—throwing in 23.9 points per game, and a "small" center—Henry Taylor—who sweeps the boards for just under 14 rebounds per game.

Nevertheless, the Broncs are playing their annual game of who's got the invitation.

White thinks there is a shot at an NCAA bid, but he'll settle for an invitation to the National Invitation Tournament.

He knows there are a few things working against the bids—not the least of which is an outlaw brand on the school.

Pan Am served two years on probation and gathered national publicity in 1972 when two players were charged with rape. They were acquitted but the stigma remained.

Despite the problems the Edinburg school has built a strong basketball tradition.

Two years ago, with now Texas Coach Abe Lemons shooting one-liners at anyone in sight, the Broncs built a 20-5 mark behind national scoring champ Marshall Rogers. They stayed home at tournament time.

"It's hard to overlook someone who is 23-3 or 24-2, but they can do it," White said of the tournament invitation committees.

Skeptics point to Pan Am's schedule, saying it's weak. But White goes quickly to the schedule book to make his point.

"Let's just look at Marquette. They play about eight tough games. They play Wisconsin ...Wisconsin ain't won nothing since they invented the school," he said.

Mixed in with the Southeastern Oklahomas and the Baptists from Dallas and South Carolina, Pan Am plays a handful of tough games.

They blew a ten-point edge in dropping a four-point decision at Houston. They squandered another lead in losing by three to tough Idaho State. And last week's two-point loss at Nevada-Las Vegas still has White cursing anyone wearing referee's stripes.

The fourth loss, a 16-point defeat at the Air Force Academy, featured a flu-riddled Bronc squad.

Pan Am's running and gunning offense — "We guard them enough to get more points than they do" — has drawn a faithful following in the Rio Grande Valley—mostly among winter Texans.

The Elderly Midwesterners who load up the motor homes for a winter along the border have been mistaken for the oldest student body in the nation.

At halftime, when their lucky number program is announced, they launch two-handed set shots from the free throw line for hamburgers or a trip to Mexico.

One group apparently not impressed by the Bronc success is the Valley media, White said.

"When 100 farmers get together everybody's out there," the coach said.

Nationally, White thinks the Broncs suffer from the "Texas is a football state" stigma.

"It's a football state because the media made it a football state. Why is North Carolina a basketball state? God didn't sprinkle basketballs from heaven," the North Carolina native said.

But White remains optimistic. The Broncs may get the elusive tournament bid this year and a 10,000 seat arena is being planned for the future.

He sees potential in this little border outpost.

"They say we're not newsworthy. Tell me, what's the other show in town."

Dave Marr attracts plenty of attention

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Dave Marr commands more attention on the golf courses today than in 1964 when he tied for second in the Masters and in 1965 when he won the PGA.

Now 44, Marr is the man who describes the golf action for ABC television. He's on the screen as much as the golfers who appear from week to week.

"I think someone who has played the game has more feeling for a sport than someone who hasn't," says Marr, who now goes through a preparation different from the kind he was used to when playing the Professional Golfers' Association tour.

"Each person is different. Each golfer is different," he says. "You should know if a player is calm, confident or nervous. We study them over a period of time.

"I try to talk to the young fellows, or talk to a friend of theirs or someone who has played with them. I try to get an insight into the individual."

So Marr complements his announcing contemporary with his observations on how a golf course might be playing and those he gained from knowing and studying the golfers themselves. He played the tour, he won and he has been a club professional.

He terms his job different from the color-commentators in other sports because, "you don't know until Friday who you might see in the leading groups on Saturday and Sunday" when the golf events generally are televised.

"You see a youngster is playing well and I try to go see him. I watch him on the practice tee and I'll get a scouting report on him."

At the $200,000 Los Angeles Open, the final day became a dual between Jack Nicklaus and Dr. Gil Morgan, the latter a winner of only one tournament.

Marr and all watching knew Nicklaus well — Dave having finished in a tie for second with Jack at the 1964 Masters that Arnold Palmer won. Dr. Morgan, who won at Los Angeles, wasn't an unknown either, so Marr's problems weren't as great as if the tournament brought home a first-time champ.

"I like my role very much," the former PGA champ says. "I'm proud of what ABC has done and I'm glad I took the challenge back in 1970. When I talked to Roone Arledge (president of ABC news and sports) and he suggested it, I thought 'Gee, I'd like to try that'."

Marr hadn't studied public speaking or television while at Rice University and says now, "If I always spoke good English with the proper pronunciations, people might think it wasn't me."

Dave still plays golf regularly and represents some companies who like to have him on the course with customers and "I like to help the guys and I like to help at golf clinics."

Marr's largest winning purse was $25,000 but he doesn't think golf is moving too fast in the money department.

Oakland ace disappointed over career

MESA, Ariz. (AP) — Vida Blue says he looks forward to every season but he is slightly disappointed now over the turn of events in his career.

Blue, here for the opening of spring baseball training with the Oakland A's, is the man in the middle.

More than three weeks ago Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn voided A's owner Charlie Finley's sale of Blue to the Cincinnati Reds for $1.75 million and a minor league player. In June 1976, Kuhn rejected a similar Finley deal which would have sent Blue to the New York Yankees for $1.5 million.

"It's difficult to put in words just how I feel about this whole thing," said Blue. "My feelings are distorted.

"I look forward to every season," he said. "True, I could be in a different uniform any day, but I'll always play this game 100 percent ...that would be true in Cincinnati, in New York and in Oakland."

But Blue confesses a degree of disappointment in what has happened to his career.

"It's kind of a shame that at the peak of my career I'd get caught in the middle of the Charlie Finley-Bowie Kuhn feud," he said. "I hate that it had to happen to me. But I'm still not the kind of person who is going to hate somebody. The man above will take care of that anyway.

"A couple of years ago, I'd have gotten fighting mad about this whole thing. But I've grown up. They call it politics ...and it's all politics."

Blue said baseball has given him a lot since he was a boy in Mansfield, La.

"I'll agree with most of the sports writers, professional sports stay in the courts way, way too much," he said. "I'm an example of that. But I never dreamed that someday I'd be paid for playing something I loved as a young school boy in Louisiana.

"Baseball has given me a lot. I've seen the country among other things. I just can't forget that," said Blue.

"Realistically, I am a commodity," he said. "I've got my arm, my talents to sell.

"Besides, I've got a lot of friends in this game and when I take off my uniform they don't see me as Vida Blue, No. 14. To them, I'm just Vida Blue."

Evansville looking for basketball coach

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Western Kentucky assistant coach Lanny Van Eman believes he is the man to rebuild the University of Evansville's basketball program, which was wiped out by a December air disaster that killed the entire team.

Van Eman, head coach at Arkansas for four years until 1974, is among an undetermined number of men contacted by Evansville officials about the job, but he knows little beyond that. There are conflicting reports on the number still in contention. Estimates range from five to 12.

But, given his experience in coaching, recruiting, media relations and knowledge of the Midwest, Van Eman is convinced Evansville officials could do a lot worse than hire him.

"It's going to be difficult, and it could be impossible if the wrong person is selected," he said Wednesday in a telephone interview from Bowling Green.

"There are some people that could get them all wrong," he said. "I think I could be very suitable there and maybe not at a number of other places. To me, it's gonna take an individual who's pretty damn wellrounded."

The task of recruiting an entire team is not as monstrous as it might appear, Van Eman said, adding that it wasn't long ago that whole freshman teams were recruited each year.

Freshman eligibility changed all that and scholarship limits "redistributed the talent," Van Eman said. "At one time, a large school could sign a kid to a scholarship just to keep him from going somewhere else.

"The problem now is not in getting numbers, but getting quality athletes," he said. "I think the people at Evansville are realistic. They want to walk before they run and run before they try to win any races.

"I think the advantage here will come from someone with a broad (recruiting) base in the Midwest," he said. "If somebody has done their work within an area, he can develop friends and contacts in that area.

"If somebody has been a head coach within 300 or 350 miles of the school, he's got an advantage. You could be a hell of a head coach, but if your experience was in Georgia or Texas, it wouldn't do you much good here," he said.

Van Eman said Evansville officials had committed themselves to a quality basketball program when the school went from Division II to Division I in the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

"There's a world of difference," he said, adding the new status may open some recruiting doors that were closed before.

Portland rally dumps Bullets

By The Associated Press

The Washington Bullets had Portland's Bill Walton and Maurice Lucas in foul trouble and were up by 12 points.

So you can forgive Wasington Coach Dick Motta if he seems especially dejected by Portland's 105-97 National Basketball Association victory.

"Portland's bench was the difference," Motta moaned. "When Walton and Lucas got in foul trouble, they had someone else to call on. That's why they're on top."

It was Lloyd Neal and Tom Owens who came off the bench Wednesday night, combining for 27 points and leading the Blazers to their come-from-behind victory.

"Our reserves won this for us," Coach Jack Ramsay agreed. "Our regulars were sluggish and weren't getting the job done, but our bench came through again."

Neal scored 16 of his 19 points in the second half as Portland overcame a 70-58 deficit to win going away. Johnny Davis also came off the bench to score 14 points for the Trail Blazers.

"I was fresh because I only played seven minutes the night before," said Neal. "Even though we were down by 12 points when I came in, I knew we had enough time to catch them."

In other NBA games Wednesday, Atlanta downed Phoenix 107-95, New Orleans defeated Golden State 116-91, Seattle stopped New Jersey 94-83, Detroit held off Houston 119-108, Kansas City edged Los Angeles 127-122 in overtime and Indiana squeezed by Denver 99-96.

Neal led Portland's scoring while playing less than half the game. Elvin Hayes paced Washington with 26 points, 24 coming before he was forced to the bench with five fouls with 3:28 left in the third quarter.q

Kings 172, Lakers 122

Five points by Scott Wedman in overtime paced Kansas City to its victory over Los Angeles. The Lakers' Kareem Abdul-Jabbar had sent the game into the extra session when he hit two free throws with no time remaining on the clock.

Wedman finished with 19 points in a balanced Kings' attack that saw Ron Boone add 22 and Lucius Allen and Richard Washington 20 points each. Charlie Scott had 24 points for the Lakers.

Pacers 99, Nuggets 96

Ron Behagen scored 21 points, including 11 in the final quarter, as Indiana overcame a season-high 40-point performance by Denver's Dan Issel and edged the Nuggets. The victory ended the Pacers' 14-game losing streak on the road.

Issel had the ball stolen from him by Indiana's Ricky Sobers with 16 seconds remaining in the game and Denver trailing by just two points.

Jazz 116, Warriors 91

Center Rich Kelley scored 27 points and grabbed 21 rebounds as New Orleans snapped an eight-game losing streak. Leonard "Truck" Robinson added 25 points and 18 rebounds for the Jazz.

Golden State was led by center Robert Parish's 25 points.

Hawks 107, Suns 95

John Drew pumped in 34 points and held Phoenix rookie Walter Davis to 16 points, eight below his average, as Atlanta topped the Suns.

"Drew played better defense against Davis than he has all year," said Atlanta Coach Hubie Brown. "John also had another great offensive game."

The Hawks outscored Phoenix 29-18 in the third quarter and the game was never close after that. Paul Westphal led Phoenix with 37 points.

Pistons 119, Rockets 108

A fourth-period surge, led by Bob Lanier and Chris Ford, enabled Detroit to hold off Houston. Ford scored 12 points and Lanier 11 in the final period to help stave off a Rockets' rally.

Ford finished with 22 points and Lanier 21, while Calvin Murphy topped Houston with 28.

Sonics 94, Nets 83

Gus Williams scored 31 points and added 10 steals to lead Seattle past New Jersey. Williams scored 19 of his points in the second half, including 10 straight in the fourth quarter.

The Sonics were behind 44-38 late in the second period when they outscored the Nets 21-2 to take a 59-46 lead in the third period. John Williamson led New Jersey with 17 points.

Dave Winfield calm over trade rumors

SAN DIEGO (AP) -The rumor mills are bandying San Diego Padres right fielder Dave Winfield around like a kite in the wind, saying one day he'll be traded and the next that he'll be here forever.

In the meantime, Winfield goes about his business of getting ready to join the National League baseball club and Manager Alvin Dark for spring training beginning Saturday in Yuma, Ariz.

"I'm just preparing for the coming season and staying low key," he says. "I'll take it in stride either way."

On Monday, a San Diego radio station reported Winfield had been traded to the Cleveland Indians for infielder Buddy Bell, catcher Fred Kendall and a pitcher. What's more, the reported two-step deal then would have sent him from Cleveland to the New York Yankees in exchange for catcher Thurman Munson.

Padres' General Manager Bob Fontaine says it isn't so.

"I don't know how these things get started," Fontaine said Wednesday. "We've had conversations with Cleveland just like we have with most of the teams. But that's all they are ...conversations.

"I guarantee you the Indians haven't offered us any of those players mentioned," Fontaine continued. "Besides, we can't trade Winfield to Cleveland without his consent, because they aren't one of the eight teams on his list."

Winfield's close friend and agent, Al Frohman, says the Yankees aren't on Dave's list of teams he'd play for either. So scratch the rumors for now, anyway.

But don't think the Padres wouldn't trade Winfield in a minute if the right opportunity arose, because their failure to exchange him this winter for a badly needed right-handed pitcher and a desired third baseman has San Diego's 1978 starting lineup looking like a picture puzzle without most of the pieces.

"Sure, it complicates things," groaned Fontaine. "That's why we're hoping something else will happen."

The general manager of last year's fifth place National League West club isn't kidding himself, though.

Baseball physican resigning position

BOSTON (AP) — Dr. Thomas Tierney, the dean of American League baseball club physicians, has resigned after 25 years with the Boston Red Sox.

Tierney, 63, a urologist, had been scheduled to be joined by Dr. Arthur Pappas as co-team physician this year. Pappas is a limited partner in a group attempting to buy the club. Tierney has been gradually cutting down on his duties as a physician and surgeon.

Sports in brief

GENERAL

MADRID — Spanish middleweight boxer Rubio Melero died five days after he was knocked unconscious in a professional bout in Madrid.

Doctors said the 25-year-old fighter, in a coma since being knocked out by Spanish middleweight champion Francisco Rodriguez, died of heart failure.

BASEBALL

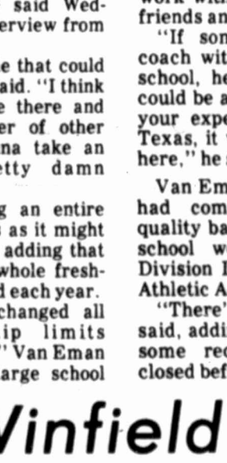

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The California Angels were hit with a $5,000 fine by Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn for tampering with Kansas City Manager Whitey Herzog.

Neither the Angels nor the commissioner's officer would verify reports of the fine.

Joe Burke, Kansas City general manager, said he was aware of reports last year that Herzog might go to the Angels, but he emphasized the Royals had filed no complaint with the commissioner's office.

Lee, MHS in dogfight in regional swimming

Coach David Whytlaw, Midland Lee swimming coach, expects a dogfight with Coach Jesse marsh's Midland High swimmer down to the last event in the regional swimming meet Friday and Saturday at Texas Tech University in Lubbock.

Swimming teams will be coming to Lubbock from Borger in the north, El Paso and Fort Stockton in the West and Abilene in the east, but it looms as a Tall City show.

Midland Lee has won the boys championship the last three years in a row. The Rebels' girls finished second three years in a row and tied Midland High for first last year.

BOB FRANZ is back to defend his regional championships in the 100 and 50 frees for Lee. Kurt Buthman is the defending 100-yard backstroke champion.

Sid Glenn of Midland High is defending champion in the 200 and 500 free events.

Also for Midland Brigette Coon was a two-time winner in the 100-yard breast strike, but will seek laurels in another event this year.

The top two qualify in each event qualify for the state meet at Austin March 18-19.

Whytlaw feels he has a cinch qualifier in the boys medley relay, unless the pool runs dry, in Cary Carnes, Mike Solari, Bob Franz and Buthman. "They'll go to state no matter what," says Whytlaw.

Whytlaw also predicts a state berth for the Midland High free relay quartet of Glenn, Steve Cochrane, Clay Spears and "whoever is the fourth man."

Competition begins with the girls diving at 9 a.m. Friday. Swimming prelims begin at 2 p.m. Friday. On Saturday, the boys one-meter diving will begin at 2 p.m. the finals start in all of the boys and girls events.

Baseball owners after Bowie Kuhn

NEW YORK (AP) — A bloc of baseball owners is working slowly behind the scenes to send Commissioner Bowie Kuhn back into the full-time practice of law.

An Associated Press survey indicates that nine of the 26 owners today would vote in a secret ballot to fire Kuhn, who has five years remaining on a seven-year term.

The private lobbying against Kuhn hasn't reached the roll call stage yet, but owner Brad Corbett of Texas is known to have approached several of his colleagues about dumping the commissioner.

Corbett had Kuhn's head in his hands three years ago in a meeting in Milwaukee when the commissioner's contract came up for renewal. The Rangers' owner was one of four American League executives aligned against Kuhn at the time, enough opposition to make him one-term Bowie.

BUT IN an 11th-hour gambit, Los Angeles owner Walter O'Malley came flying in from the West Coast to convince Corbett and New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner to change their votes.

The other nay-sayers in 1975 were American Leaguers Charlie Finley of Oakland and Jerrold Hoffberger of Baltimore. Ray Kroc of San Diego was adamant in his opposition, but was coaxed to change his National League vote at the last minute for the sake of unanimity.

Contacts with several ownership sources have provided a list of at least nine owners who are opposed to Kuhn today. They are Finley, Corbett, Hoffberger, Steinbrenner and Kroc — the same owners in opposition in 1975 — plus four more: Gene Autry of California, Bill Veeck of the Chicago White Sox, Ted Turner of Atlanta and Bob Howsam of Cincinnati.

There is disagreement over how many more negative votes would be needed to send the former NL attorney back to his law books.

SOME OWNERS say five more anti-Kuhn owners would produce a simple majority of 14 (out of 26 clubs), tipping the balance against the commissioner.

Coed volleyball season to open

The Church Coed Volleyball season begins in March for any church wishing to participate.

CCV rules require at least three female players on court for each game. Each church team will play twice a week at the activity buildings at First Baptist or St. Ann's. The season lasts one month and the cost is $10 for each church team.

There will be four divisions for junior high, high school and two adult leagues.

For more information contact Charles Elliott at the First Baptist Church, 682-1646.

Judy Rankin leads field

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP) — Defending champ Judy Rankin leads a field of 100 women's golfers into today's opening round of the 72-hole, $100,000 Ladies Professional Golf Association Bent Tree Classic.

Rankin won the Bent Tree last year with a seven-underpar 209 total for three rounds. This is the first year the tournament is a 72-hole event.

The field for Wednesday's Pro-Am was decked out in rain gear, parkas, sweaters, winter gloves, sock hats — not the traditional adornment for the Sunshine State.

Last week's Orange Blossom Classic in St. Petersburg was plagued by rain. This week, it's low temperatures and wind.

"It's going to be tougher here this week than it was in St. Pete," said Jane Blalock, winner of the Orange Blossom.

"The wind is going to be a great factor and it's probably going to take an experienced player to win this week," she said.

Temperatures have been dipping down to the freezing mark the past few days, and winds have been whipping along at 20-25 miles per hour.

Tower advances into playoffs

Commercial Bank Tower compiled an 8-1 record for a first place tie with the Parks Center YMCA in the Industrial Basketball League, but Tower will advance to the playoffs.

Tower defeated Parks Center in regular season play to earn the playoffs. Tower will meet Odessa in the regional playoff match Tuesday at 6 p.m. in the UTPB gym. Winner of that game will advance to the state finals in El paso, March 11.

Team members are William Blakemore, Melvin Jackson, James Campbell, Sam Taylor, Willie McCoy, Willard Floyd, Hersley Rodger and Terry Rogers.

Brownwood sets softball tourney

BROWNWOOD—The Brownwood Sports will host a three-day Slow Pitch Softball Tournament beginning March 10, and Midland area teams have been asked to enter.

The 42-team tournament is an ASA sanctioned meet, and the entry fee is $45 per team. To enter write Clark Hickock, 2204 Vine St., Brownwood, 76801, or call 915-646-6794.

New champion has lot to learn about big money

NEW YORK (AP) — The black gunfighter's hat was enough to draw stares when he walked through the lobby of midtown hotel. But there were also tentative glances of recognition for the new heavyweight champion of the world.

Leon Spinks was in the big town, a town where Muhammad Ali once said: "I can walk down the street and cause a traffic jam."

It as a week ago today that Leon Spinks awoke as the heavyweight champion of the world, conqueror of "The Greatest" and he says now "I haven't really gotten into it. I still got a lot of things to learn."

But the 24-year-old veteran of eight pro fights indicated that he has a winning attitude as he approaches a job that could be much, much tougher than beating Ali in the ring ...battling the endless comparisons that will be made between him and Ali, possibly the toughest act in the world to follow. It is an act that hasn't seen its last curtain yet.

Spinks' approach is much more subdued than his clothes: "Try to understand me and you'll like me."

He was loose Wednesday night during an interview for hich he wore all black plus two false teeth that plugged the now-famous gapped tooth grin that can spell mapice as well as f4iendship.

"The whole world seen it," Spinks said of his stunning victory. He had nothing more to say about it.

But of the responsibility that victory assigned to him, he said: "New things are happening now that I have to adjust to. I have to pay more attention to business."

Business, moneywise and attentionwise, is about to become brisk for the man from a St. Louis housing project who warned the world with a devastating march to the Olympic light heavyweight championship in 1976, then still caught it off guard by beating Ali.

He got $300,000 for becoming heavyweight champion. Peanuts. The real gold — the kind you bank, not wear — is still to come. Figures for an Ali rematch are being put at $5 million apiece.

When you don't know the used car you're buying, make sure you know your dealer.

Let's face it, buying a used car is a traumatic experience for most people.

Unlike a new car purchase, you don't have a factory warranty to fall back on in case there's a problem. That's why we say, when you don't know the used car you're buying, make sure you know your dealer.

Thousands of families have bought used cars at our place. We keep a great selection of models, and we hand-pick every car we offer for sale. In fact, we're as proud of our used cars as we are of our new ones.
